Woman injured

Running of the Bulls

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — The first woman known to be injured in the traditional running of the bulls, a 21-year-old American, suffered a fractured skull today on the final day of the weeklong San Fermin festival, a hospital spokesman said.

The spokesman said Stephanie Kern was in serious condition and being treated at the emergency room of Navarre Hospital after she was knocked down by a bull during the morning's run at the festival made famous by author Ernest Hemingway.

Good timing

ABILENE (AP) — Newborn Jordan Danielle Hendrix has an innate sense of timing.

The 7-pound baby girl, who was born at 1:35 a.m. Friday at the Dyess Air Force Base hospital, saved her parents hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars in medical fees by being born 16 days early.

Sgt. Mark Hendrix, stationed at Scofield Barracks in Hawaii, and his wife, Judy, thought they would have to bear the costs for the birth of their third child, due July 29, because Hendrix was mustering out of the Army at midnight Friday.

Because the baby was born hours before Hendrix' departure, the government will pay.

Chung stung

Chung

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Connie Chung got a little miffed Saturday while being barraged with questions about the glitz factor of her newly redone interview show on CBS.

"You people are so insulting," she told a roomful of television critics at the Century Plaza hotel.

The reporters were grilling her about the news value of "Face to Face with Connie Chung," formerly "Saturday Night with Connie Chung," which moves with its new name to Mondays at 10 p.m. on July 23.

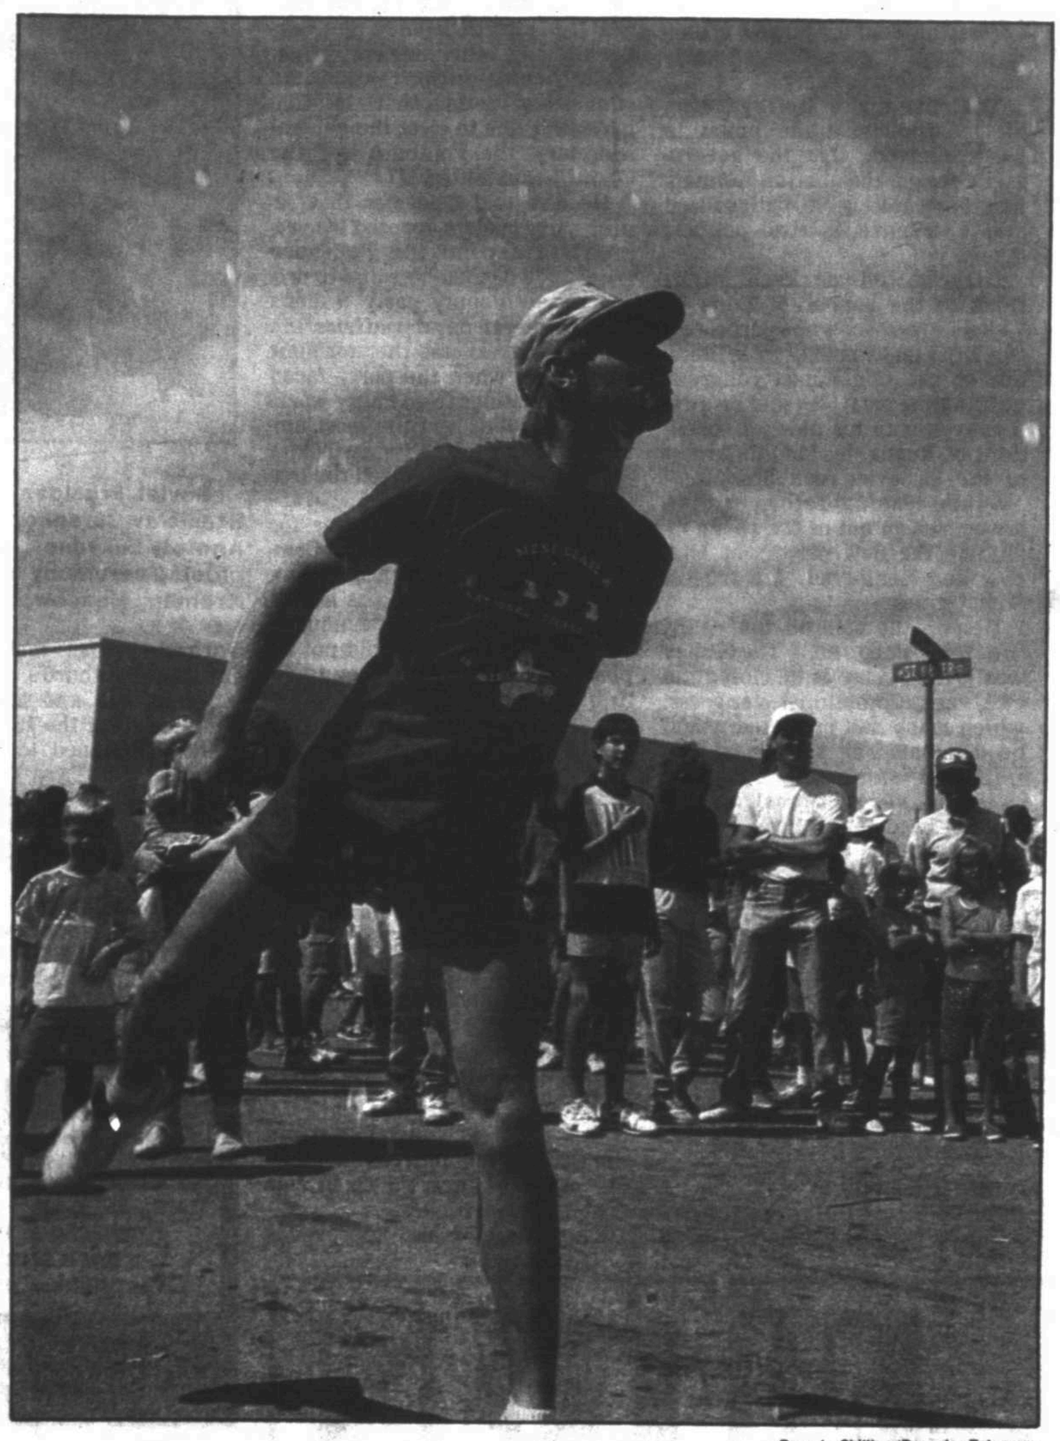

Chung, who also anchors the Sunday CBS evening news, insisted that celebrity interviews were not the driving force of her hourlong program, despite recent network promotions that accentuate her starside chats.

Spitter's stance

Tobacco juice spitter Derrick Sorley unleashes his effort during the messy contest at Saturday's Old Settlers' Reunion in Stanton. Sorley came up short in the expectoration department when Bimbo Allred was named the winner.

Old Settlers Day a success, even without the cow chips

By David Morris
Staff Writer

STANTON — No flying cow chips filled the air Saturday at the Martin County Old Settlers Day Reunion.

The annual cow-chip throwing contest, a favorite event at rodeos and county fairs nationwide, was dropped from the Old Settlers Day agenda. But it wasn't because Martin County residents have grown too delicate of cultural palate to stomach such spectacles.

The local cow-chip crop, it seems, was simply in no condition to be flung.

"It was because of the rain," explained reunion secretary-treasurer Jo Jon Cox. "They were too soggy. But thank goodness for the rain."

The sun shone bright in Stanton on Saturday, though, and past and present denizens of

GOP uses meeting to plan attack

■ Republican leaders choose their midyear meeting, held in Chicago, to put their party back where it does best — on the offensive.

By John King
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — Republican leaders trying to get the party back on sure footing after a stretch of rocky road are setting out on a trusted course — attack.

It has been a tumultuous year for the GOP, beginning with a divisive debate over abortion in January and then the news in March that party Chairman Lee Atwater had a brain tumor. He has been sidelined ever since.

More recently, Republicans have been on the defensive as Democrats try to blame them for the savings and loan crisis and GOP candidates try to cope with President Bush's abrupt abandonment of his "no new taxes" campaign pledge.

But at a three-day meeting in Chicago that ended Saturday, the Republican National Committee resolved to go back on the offensive.

"Controlling the agenda is the way to continue winning," said Mary Matalin, Atwater's top deputy at the RNC. "We somehow allowed ourselves to fall off of offense, but the message is clear now."

A chorus of GOP leaders used both public and private sessions during the GOP's midyear meeting to urge Republicans at both the state and national level to be more aggressive.

"The obituaries are premature," Ed Rollins, head of the party's House campaign arm, told the group in a speech laced with blistering attacks on Democrats.

From a lesser-known Republican, Mayor Sue Myrick of Charlotte, N.C., came a demand that Republicans at all levels stop trying to look and sound like Democrats.

"Far too many Republicans are not drifting but rather diving headlong into softened stands on such issues as abortion, flag burning and more taxes rather than more prudent spending," Myrick said at one session. "It is time to stand up, to be counted, to fight."

The new effort relies heavily on the core strategies of past GOP success: frame the debate on major issues and paint Democrats as the party that taxes as a first resort.

Bush pollster Bob Teeter told the gathering that if Republicans articulate their party's differences with Democrats then voters will "side with the party that taxes last and taxes least, not the party that taxes first and taxes most."

But Bush's reversal on taxes has many GOP officials wondering whether the president has ditched the Republican Party's defining issue just four months before the 1990 elections.

Top party leaders and strategists told GOP officials from across the country that Republicans cannot drop the tax issue, Bush's announcement notwithstanding. And they promised that Bush will protect the party's interests by fighting any attempts to raise income taxes.

Matalin believes the message took hold.

"We got done here what we had to do," she said in an interview. "This was the perfect forum for us to remind ourselves that we do best when he define the differences between Republicans and Democrats."

That such a lesson was necessary appears directly attributable to the absence of Atwater.

Enhanced 911 performing well

■ Despite some prank hangups and a continued need for rural residents to post their addresses, the enhanced 911 Midland Emergency Communication District is living up to expectations.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

The panicked 4-year-old Midland boy didn't know exactly what to say after he called 911 dispatchers.

The boy only knew that his mother was choking and that 911 was the number to dial in case of an emergency. Though the child was unable to give an address or describe his mother's problem, emergency personnel were able to respond.

"They went right to the residence and there was a happy ending," said Joyce Britcher, Midland Emergency Communication District director. "We would have lost a lot of valuable time trying to get an address from this child."

After the child dialed the new enhanced 911 system, the dispatcher's computer screen immediately displayed the residence's address and telephone number. Paramedics were able to find the home and help the mother, who was choking on a throat lozenge.

The April emergency call was one of 14,498 made since the new system went on line March 1, Ms. Britcher said Friday.

The switch to enhanced 911 implementation has been smooth, but communication officials now are urging rural residents to make sure their addresses are prominently displayed at their homes, Ms. Britcher said.

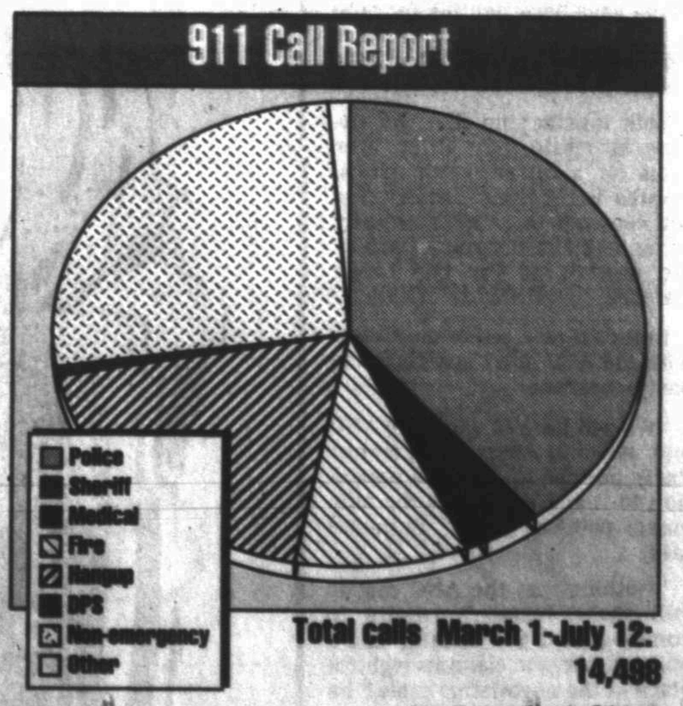

"The people have not posted their addresses as much as we would like," she said. "It makes it difficult for emergency personnel to find which house they're looking for.

"This hasn't created a problem as far as getting service to someone, but we're trying to prevent a problem."

Ms. Britcher estimated that as many as 6,000 rural homes have no numbers to mark the address. Emergency officials are asking the residents to post addresses in no less than 6-inch-high letters.

In conjunction with the request, Westlake Hardware Store, 1004 Andrews Highway, is selling house and business identification numbers at a re-

American tourists feel poor in Europe

Hearst News Service

PARIS — Americans visiting Europe this summer feel poor and wonder why, if the inflation rate in most of Western Europe is officially lower than at home, prices here are so much higher.

"How do Europeans pay these prices?" asks George Lautweiler, a Chicagoan on his first transatlantic trip in a decade."They can't all be millionaires."

His wife, Helen, making her first-ever visit, described her reaction to a three-week tour of Italy, France and Spain as one of "financial shock, not cultural shock."

A charge of $250 a day for a cramped room in a second-rate hotel in Italy, fast-food meals at $25 each in France and $30 for a deck-chair at a Spanish beach – a mere sampling of what they'd been forced to pay -- has left her "numb," she says.

The Lautweilers aren't backpackers, but solid middle-aged, middle-class Americans who, on their own turf, spend money generously in order to live well.

They're typical of American visitors who are stunned by prices they variously label as "wild," "out-of-sight" or just "breathtaking."

Americans abroad are now light years away from the epoch when the almighty dollar made them an object of near-veneration to Roman shopkeepers, Venetian hoteliers and Parisian waiters.

The prices paid by American visitors and the off-hand treatment they now often receive reflect a grim fact of life: In the last five years, the dollar has lost approximately half of its value against the German mark, the French franc and most other Western European currencies.

James Ross, a St.Louis aviation executive, travels here regularly for his work as well as for pleasure, even though he figures that he's being subjected to a "tremendous rip-off."

Ross claims that everything "I buy, eat and travel in over here" costs anywhere from 50 to 200 per cent more than he would pay for comparable goods and services at home.

He concedes that the dollar's depreciation against the main European currencies distorts the picture, but still he wonders about it.

"It's difficult to see why an American's money should be worth half as much as it was a few years ago," he insists. "The United States hasn't had a recession or a revolution. Each time there's a world political crisis, foreigners rush to buy dollars for safety's sake. So what's going on?"

Ross says that, even when the dollar's decline is taken into account, he calculates that Europeans — and tourists — are compelled to pay substantially more for most things than Americans do in their country.

Although the current annual U.S. inflation rate is put at 4.4 percent — officially double that of France and West Germany — Ross claims that, in his experience, most prices here regularly rise faster than do U.S. prices.

"I usually come to Paris four times a year for business reasons," he explains. "On every trip, the price of a cup of coffee in a sidewalk cafe seems to have gone up by 50 centimes (8 cents). That's 32 cents in a year, and it's an annual inflation rate of more than 15 per cent."

Judith Walsh, a Boston management consultant who spends half of her time in Europe advising clients, says Ross's casual method of gauging inflation may be more accurate than the more "abstract" procedures employed by government statisticians.

"A lot of European inflation gets hidden because it comes under the heading of government subsidies to keep such items as public transportation and medical costs officially lower than they really are," she says.

For 30 years after World War II, America had the highest-cost economy because U.S. workers were paid more than their European counterparts.

But that's far from the case nowadays, Walsh points out.

Communists dump hard-liners

Gorbachev braces for challenge organized by workers and radicals

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev has succeeded in reshaping the Communist Party in his own centrist image to brace for a challenge from workers and radicals who are quitting the party to organize an opposition.

The 28th congress of the Communist Party, billed in advance as a bastion of hard-liners, closed Friday after dumping most of the Old Guard. The delegates also accepted much of Gorbachev's plan to transfer decision-making from the party to the government — which he also heads.

But the government faces increasing discontent, especially among workers, as well as ethnic unrest that is shredding the country at the edges.

The struggle intensified Wednesday, when coal miners across the country staged a one-day protest strike and urged workers to leave the party.

The miners also are organizing an independent trade union to press demands that the government resign and that all Communist Party assets be nationalized and distributed to rival political groups.

Disgruntled workers might flock to the banner of Boris N. Yeltsin, who sent a shock through the Kremlin Thursday by walking out of the Communist congress, quitting the party. He said his first loyalty was to his new job, president of Russia, by far the largest of the 15 Soviet republics.

Other leading reformers followed Yeltsin out of the party, including the new mayors of Moscow and Leningrad, the biggest Soviet cities.

Despite the split in the party, the first since 1921, Gorbachev was jovial Friday as he closed the two-week Communist congress, which many had predicted would be dominated by hard-liners.

Instead, Gorbachev scored a sweeping victory, removing his leading hard-line critic, Yegor K. Ligachev, from the Politburo. He also won approval of a restructuring of top party bodies to transfer power to the government.

The danger for Gorbachev is that central authorities could lose touch with the people.

The people, in turn, are using Gorbachev's democratic reforms to win control of legislatures throughout the country and challenge central government and party bodies.

The atmosphere was tense in Moscow before the national party congress because it followed harsh criticism of Gorbachev's performance by traditionalists at a congress of party members in the Russian republic.

Ligachev led the attack, urging Gorbachev to relinquish the top party job if he retained the national presidency.

Ligachev complained that the party Politburo, the body that traditionally has ruled the Soviet Union, had been excluded from discussions of economic reform. Gorbachev had instead steered the program through the newly created Presidential Council.

The mood was so foreboding that Yeltsin and other reformers recommended postponing the national congress.

But the workers and reformers took the offensive. Nine minutes into the first session, miner Vladimir I. Bludov demanded that Gorbachev and other leaders resign.

Gorbachev brushed aside the suggestion, noting that the congress was due to elect the general secretary, the Politburo and the Central Committee.

He also told delegates that senior party leaders opposed his proposal to expand the Politburo from 12 to 30 members and to create a new deputy party leader's post to direct day-day-affairs.

The congress was the stormiest since 1921, when the party faced armed uprisings from angry workers and sailors, and the most momentous since 1956, when Nikita S. Khrushchev denounced the late dictator Josef V. Stalin.

The warmest applause was for Ligachev's warning that anti-Communist forces were gaining strength. But his tone was milder than at the Russian Communist Party congress, and he did not repeat his call for Gorbachev to relinquish the party leadership.

Other hard-liners tempered their rhetoric and, together with moderates, drew together under Gorbachev. Many said that although they objected to one man heading the party and the government simultaneously, he was the only person capable of holding the party together.

Gorbachev engineered his election as chairman of the committee drafting new party rules. Working behind the scenes, he revived his plans to restructure the party leadership.

The congress voted to expand the Central Committee from 249 to 412 members, most of them centrists like Gorbachev.

The delegates also approved a Gorbachev plan that drastically cut the Politburo's power, doubling its size and including the party heads of the 15 republics — a move designed to ease ethnic tension.

Moreover, he eliminated the Old Guard. Of the 24 Politburo members, only Gorbachev and his newly elected deputy Vladimir Ivashko remain from the former group. Only Gorbachev has been a member of the body more than eight months.

Magazine says U.S. knew of attack

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — The United States had warning prior to the 1986 bombing of a West Berlin discotheque that Libya planned a terrorist attack, a news magazine reported today.

Der Spiegel, West Germany's leading news magazine, said the U.S. government learned that Libya was planning an attack after at least one CIA agent infiltrated the group that prepared the bombing.

Zulu party opens doors to whites

ULUNDI, South Africa (AP) — The Zulu political organization Inkatha opened its doors to whites Saturday as it pressed its campaign to rival Nelson Mandela's group as a leader in the fight against white rule.

The announcement came at the party's congress in the capital of the KwaZulu homeland, Ulundi. Some whites joined the blacks at the event.

Mangosuthu Buthelezi, leader of both Inkatha and the Zulu homeland, announced that Inkatha would participate as a multiracial party in elections he hopes will take place before a new constitution is negotiated to end apartheid.

President F.W. de Klerk is negotiating to give the country's black majority a say in the political system.

Inkatha's chief rival is the African National Congress, whose leaders include Mandela. There are some whites in the ANC leadership, most notably Joe Slovo, the head of the South African Communist Party.

Supporters of the ANC and Inkatha have been fighting for power in KwaZulu and Natal province since 1985, leaving more than 4,000 people dead.

Both Inkatha and the ANC oppose apartheid but differ over plans for a future South Africa. Inkatha is relatively conservative and contends the ANC is unjustly trying to claim the role of principle negotiator for the black majority.

Buthelezi referred to the rivalry with the ANC in his speech to the party congress.

"We will just not allow the ANC and its South African Communist Party partner to crush all opposition to it and emerge as the only viable political party," Buthelezi said.

"Nothing that the ANC can do will shake Inkatha's resolve to come out as a new Inkatha and a political party to claim its rightful place at the negotiating table," he said.

Two killed, 10 injured in South African hotel bombings

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Explosions Saturday shook two hotels in the Johannesburg area, killing two people and injuring 10, police said. They were investigating whether the blasts were acts of terrorism.

One explosion late Saturday at a hotel in Roodeport, northwest of Johannesburg, killed one person and injured 10, police said.

They said witnesses reported seeing someone roll an object that looked like a hand grenade into the hotel bar just before the explosion. There were no further details available immediately.

Before dawn Saturday, a hotel frequented mostly by whites was bombed in Florida, another Johannesburg suburb. A black waiter was killed.

Commercial explosives, which have been associated with right-wing white extremists, were used in that bombing. Damage was minor.

No one claimed responsibility for either bombing, but police said they were investigating the attacks as terrorism acts.

Florida is a middle-class and working-class area. Most whites there tend to be relatively conservative.

At the time of that blast, there were about 130 patrons at the bar, all of them white, said Rod Rodrigues, one of the hotel owners.

In another development, police said there was an explosion Saturday morning at the suburban Johannesburg home of a right-wing white, Hans Binneman. No one was injured, police added.

The independent South African Press Association said Binneman was a member of the neo-Nazi Afrikaner Resistance Movement. It quoted police as saying he recently was detained for questioning about earlier bombings in Johannesburg.

Police say they suspect right-wing whites in the recent attacks, and nine have been detained for questioning. No one has been charged.

Syrian Leader visiting Egypt for discussions

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (AP) — Syrian President Hafez Assad arrived Saturday for his first visit in more than 13 years, making another step in his rapprochement with Egypt.

The three-day visit was Assad's fourth summit this year with President Hosni Mubarak. Their two countries resumed diplomatic ties in December.

Saturday's visit came amid indications of intensified efforts by Mubarak to patch up Syrian rifts with Iraq and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The two quarrels and Lebanon's 15-year-old civil war are the most burning issues in inter-Arab relations. Syrian troops, originally sent as Arab peacekeepers, now control most of Lebanon.

Mubarak and Assad embraced and kissed after the Syrian leader's plane landed at el-Nuzha Airport on the southern outskirts of Alexandria, Egypt's second largest city.

Assad and Mubarak conferred for three hours immediately after they drove from the airport to Ras el-Tin Palace, where the Syrian leader is staying.

Egyptian Information Minister Safwat el-Sherif told reporters that the two leaders discussed Arab problems and Egyptian-Syrian relations. He gave no details.

The two leaders held a second round of talks in the evening.

Then Mubarak hosted a state dinner for Assad and his delegation.

Clouds may prolong hope for rain

Staff Report

A chance of rain and cloudy weather are in the Permian Basin's forecast through Monday, said forecasters at the National Weather Service in Midland.

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies, with a high in the upper 80s, 10 to 20 mph southeast winds and a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms, NWS said.

Tonight is expected to be mostly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the mid 60s, forecasters said.

Monday's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies, with a high in the mid 80s and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, forecasters said.

The record high for July 14 of 107 was set in 1933. This date's record low of 60 was set in 1987.

STATE

Temperatures across the state were spring-like again on Saturday.

Record lows for the date were set in Del Rio and College Station. Most of the state's highs were in the 80s, with some 70s reported in the Panhandle and the mountains. Extremes ranged from a rain-cooled 71 degrees at Del Rio to 95 degrees at Alice and at Kingsville.

The central sections of Texas remained partly cloudy Saturday afternoon, while showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the mountains of West Texas and along the Rio Grande River. Widely scattered thunderstorms also moved into the extreme northeast corner of the state.

Southerly winds blew across the western third of the state at speeds of 5 to 10 mph. But the eastern one-third of Texas still had a northeasterly wind, also at 5 to 10 mph. The wind was light and variable over the central sections of the state.

According to the National Weather Service, skies on Sunday should be mostly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms statewide. Highs are predicted to be in the 80s, with some 90s in the South and the Far West.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms that generated at least one tornado were scattered over the eastern half of the nation Saturday, and locally heavy rain caused flooding in the Southwest.

Temperatures plunged to record lows from Michigan to Texas.

Many showers and thunderstorms had developed by early afternoon from New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, western Pennsylvania and western New York state southward across Georgia and Florida.

A tornado touched down around noon at Preston, Md., and a storm that might have been a tornado caused damage during the morning at New Port Richey, Fla., the National Weather Service said.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours up to 2 p.m. EDT included 1.76 inches at Tampa, Fla.; 1.06 inches at Knoxville, Tenn.; and 1.06 inches at Mansfield, Ohio.

Showers and thunderstorms also were scattered over central Alabama, southern Mississippi, southern Arkansas, northern Illinois, northeastern Iowa, western Lower Michigan and eastern Wisconsin.

Rain also was scattered from southern Nevada and western Arizona across New Mexico, southwestern Texas and Colorado into the Nebraska Panhandle.

Locally heavy rain during the early morning along the arid lower Colorado River valley caused street flooding at Bullhead City, Ariz., and near Needles, Calif., the weather service said, and left an inch or two of water standing on roads between Lake Havasu and Parker, Ariz.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

STANTON: Event celebrates heritage

People from as far away as Ohio and North Carolina milled about downtown Stanton, watching the Old Settlers Day parade and later, the games of skill.

These included an "old-clothes race," Jell-O eating contests for citizens as well as media representatives, an egg toss, a bubble gum-blowing tournament and a tobacco-spitting contest.

The parade itself featured about 55 vehicles, some bearing members of the handful of Stanton High School graduating classes which returned to Martin County for reunions this weekend.

"I think it was one of the best parades we've ever had," said parade co-chairman Morgan Cox, a farmer from Tarzan and Mrs. Cox's son. "We had a lot of out-of-town people that came ... to participate."

Mrs. Cox, born in Stanton in 1935, said the Old Settlers Day reunion has grown from humble origins into one of the most important annual events in Martin County.

The first settlers reunion in 1930 was actually a picnic to honor a local doctor, she said.

"They had so much fun that they thought they'd make it an annual affair," she said. "We feel like it's real important. It's our big thing that we work toward during the year. It is our reunion function, and everybody works on it. It takes everybody."

She said that the games downtown appealed to the younger crowd, while the real "old settlers" were to be found swapping stories over at the senior citizens' center. A barbecue and dance planned for Saturday evening would probably appeal to people of all ages, she said.

Old settlers, meanwhile, were esteemed parade participants. Members of the Stroud clan, for example, were the day's honorary "pioneer family."

Bonita Hart, 74, said she remembered coming to Stanton as a 10-year-old with her farmer father, John "Penny" Stroud, and other family members in 1926.

"We'd come from (near Fort Worth) where there was a lot of trees," said Mrs. Hart, who now lives in Pecos. "Out here, you could see far away. That's what I remember is the wide open spaces."

Mrs. Hart's sister, 72-year-old Madge Soule, said Stanton has changed somewhat since the Stroud family first began farming in the region. It used to be something of a boom town, she said.

"At one time it was a very thriving little city," she said. "Now it has deteriorated a little bit. We had three grocery stores and service stations and a variety store and Wilson's Dry Goods Store.

You could come to town with a nickel and go buy an ice cream cone that was two dips deep for a nickel. Of course we were very short of nickels."

She said she and the five other Stroud offspring who came to the reunion were thrilled to be named the honorary pioneer family. Mrs. Hart, meanwhile, said she thought it was important to remember the old days through activities such as Old Settlers Day.

"It lets the younger people know what they dealt with back in those days," she said. "The kids now ... don't even know where milk comes from."

Orthodox Christian leader urges unity

NEW YORK (AP) — The spiritual leader of 250 million Orthodox Christians said Saturday the third millennium of Christianity should be a time for healing the ruptures that marked church history in the last thousand years.

"Divisions and schisms cannot be justified in the life of the churches," Patriarch Dimitrios declared during a special service sponsored by the National Council of Churches at Columbia University.

Dimitrios, the first Orthodox patriarch to visit the United States, arrived here from Washington Friday on the second leg of a month-long tour.

Saturday evening, Gov. Mario Cuomo hosted a dinner honoring Dimitrios at the Windows on the World restaurant atop the World Trade Center.

At the morning service, Dimitrios was welcomed by the Very Rev. Leonid Kishkovsky, an Orthodox archpriest and current president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

Kishkovsky said the variety of religion in the United States "almost exceeds the imagination" and that many American Christians were "seeking an overarching and basic Christian identity and unity that ... may be found in the early Christian tradition."

Dimitrios responded that this century has seen the rise of an ecumenical spirit in the world's religious communities.

But the patriarch, whose own church came into being as a result of a great schism with Rome in 1054, said that "unhappily, the second Christian millennium became a period of successive divisions.

"The ardent wish of all of us is that the impending third millennium will be a time of healing from those wounds," he said, speaking in Greek through a translator.

"The return to the undivided church of the first thousand years is not so difficult so long as it is based on common historical and theological sources and is purged of historical prejudices."

Two hundred people attended the service at the Chapel of Interfaith Center, including Cardinal John J. O'Connor, Roman Catholic archbishop of New York, who welcomed Dimitrios as "a man who can bridge the gap between East and West."

Most of the Eastern church's 250 million adherents live in Eastern Europe, but there are 6 million in the United States, including 1 million in the New York area, according to the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese.

The 75-year-old religious leader was in Washington for a week to attend the 30th Greek Orthodox Biennial Clergy-Laity Congress. He also will visit Pennsylvania, San Francisco, Chicago, Buffalo and Boston.

One suspect arrested, second sought after high-speed chase

Staff Report

One person remained at large and another man was in custody Saturday following a high-speed chase through West Midland, police said.

The chase began at the intersection of Wall Street and Andrews Highway, when the driver of a white Dodge Daytona attempted to elude a police officer who tried to stop him for failing to wear a seatbelt, according to Sgt. David Garcia.

The chase, which began at about 6:30 p.m., lasted about ten minutes and involved as many as eight patrol cars, Garcia said.

It ended when the Daytona collided with a fence in an alley in the 900 block of Canyon Drive.

Both occupants attempted to flee the scene on foot. One was detained by a citizen until officers arrived, Garcia said.

The captured subject, described as a 17 year-old white male, was in jail awaiting arraignment Saturday night.

Police said the Daytona had been reported stolen from Brazoria County near Houston on July 12.

Garcia said police are still searching for the car's other occupant. He is described as a white male, approximately 18 years old.

Staff Report

BIG SPRING — A 19 year-old woman was shot to death early Saturday morning, local police said.

Oralia Ramos died at 1:16 a.m. in the emergency room at Scenic Mountain Medical Center, said Big Spring Police Sgt. John Leubner.

She suffered a single small caliber gunshot wound to the chest. Justice of the Peace China Long has ordered an autopsy in the case, Leubner said.

He said Ms. Ramos apparently was shot at a residence in the 1400 block of Stadium Avenue.

Police had a suspect in custody Saturday night and the investigation is ongoing.

Bill Boatwright is correcting one of the biggest remaining problem areas for enhanced 911 service in Midland County. He is installing an easily visible house number, which can help rescue workers find the source of an emergency call.

duced cost for a short time, she said.

Meanwhile, the enhanced 911 system itself has performed beyond expectations, Ms. Britcher said.

"It's just going wonderful," she said. "We've been able to help people we would not have been able to help under the old system."

After a call comes in to the 601 N. Loraine St. emergency communications center, a dispatcher there routes the caller to fire, police, medical or sheriff's office officials.

Lt. Jim Reynolds of the Midland Police Department said the system has performed admirably.

"It's going just fine," Reynolds said. "It has given the police greater efficiency when responding to calls."

Ms. Britcher said one dispatcher is on duty at all times except during holidays or foul weather, when as many as three dispatchers may be on hand. July Fourth dispatchers this year received 300 calls, a majority of those made to report grass fires, she said.

Of the 14,498 enhanced calls as of Thursday, there were 5,164 for the Midland Police Department, 420 for the Midland County Sheriff's Office, 1,424 for ambulance services and 1,236 to the Midland Fire Department, she said. In addition, there were 3,503 non-emergency calls, 2,516 hangups and 178 calls dealing with other matters, she said.

"We have kids playing pranks and stuff like that," Painter said. "We do get a lot of calls like that."

Reynolds said officers have had to talk with parents of youngsters who make phony 911 calls.

Those making prank calls may face Class A or B misdemeanor charges, which carry penalties of up to a $2,000 fine and a possible one-year jail sentence.

Although no one has been charged, Reynolds said police are considering tracking down and arresting the pranksters.

Ms. Britcher said Midland's enhanced 911 had a better start than any other system in the state, with about 99.9 percent of all the telephones countywide being connected to the more than 55,000 access lines.

Only about 30 lines remain unconnected, with almost all of those being telephones for radio towers, fax machines or pump jack stations, Ms. Britcher said. "We're still trying to contact them," she said.

GOP: Party gathering concludes

(From 1A)

Without him, a party renowned for speaking with one voice suddenly had many, and the message got muddied.

"It has been a little fuzzy and it certainly has been distorted by Democrats," Matalin said.

"We've hit a few bumps but we're ready to get back on track," said Haley Barbour, a leading GOP strategist and RNC member from Mississippi.

Mohawk restrained

Quebec provincial police restrain a Mohawk Indian resident Friday, during a blockade of the Mercier Bridge in Oka, Quebec. The Mohawks staged the bridge blockade in sympathy of other Mohawks in a land dispute in Oka. One Quebec police officer was killed in the dispute Wednesday.

Mohawks close roads, bridge in land dispute

The meeting came as Indians manned barricades at a reservation and a blockade across a suburban bridge.

Though the federal government announced no plans for intervention, Ciaccia said he entered the third day bearing "certain understandings" from Ottawa. He gave no details.

However, he added, "I want to make it clear that it is the Quebec government ... that is in charge of this situation. And we never asked or expected that the federal government would take charge of this situation."

Ciaccia would not say when he expects an end to the Oka confrontation. But the minister appealed for "calm, patience and understanding" from the public.

The confrontation has left one police officer dead after a shootout with Mohawks manning barricades in Oka, 20 miles west of Montreal. It is unclear if the officer was shot by Mohawks or fellow police.

The Mohawks from the Kanesatake Indian community set up barricades at Oka to stop the municipality from expanding a golf course onto what the Indians claim is ancestral territory.

On Friday, Mohawks from the Kahnawake reserve blockaded the Mercier Bridge in suburban Montreal in a show of solidarity with the Mohawks at Oka. The bridge runs through the Kahnawake reservation and activists threatened to destroy it if police move to dismantle the blockade.

One banner strung across a trailer near the Mercier bridge said "Stop Canadian Apartheid and Amerindian genocide."

The Canadian military confirmed Friday that 40 members of the 2nd Combat Engineers have been stationed in Cornwall, Ontario, near the Akwesasne Mohawk reserve. It straddles the borders of Quebec, Ontario and New York state.

The move is believed to have been made because of fears that Mohawk Indians from the Akwesasne reserve may try to occupy the international bridge linking Ontario and New York State.

Hearing a rumor that two Mohawk women were inside a supermarket buying groceries to take back to the reserve — with police permission — the crowd moved in.

The women escaped through a back door, but two young white men in army fatigues were mistaken for Mohawks and beaten by the crowd.

Both Mohawks and other local residents have complained that food is running out in the area, which has been sealed off by police.

Albanians hope their flight will encourage change

AP Laserphoto

Albanian refugees in a train, which brought them from Brindisi, Italy, to Basel, Switzerland, stretch out their arms as a Red Cross helper distributes clothes, Saturday. The train stopped at Basel railway station for about two hours before it started with the refugees for several West German cities.

AP Laserphoto

Military personnel check the passports and register Albanian refugees at the military facility where they have temporary shelter, near Brindisi, Italy, Saturday. Some 4,600 Albanians, who had taken refuge in the Western embassies in Tirana, were ferried out to Italy Friday. Most of them left by train for West Germany.

N.Y. Times News Service

BRINDISI, Italy — Albanian refugees who fled their homeland said on Saturday that they hoped their daring would encourage more of their compatriots to resist Albania's hard-line communist government.

But many acknowledged that their escape would probably make matters worse for those left behind, and some said they were fearful that their relatives would face reprisals.

"I think they are going to have a hard time," said a young woman who was among 4,500 people who boarded ships for Italy and France on Friday after having taken shelter in Western embassies in the Albanian capital, Tirana.

But the woman, who worked in a shoe factory, added that neither she nor her husband had a moment's regret about the decision to break for the West with their 3-year-old son. "The future of our child is what counts," she said in Italian. "We can't let him grow up there."

For more than 800 Albanians who stayed in Italy, this was a wobbly first day of freedom, spent behind a closed gate of a dilapidated army depot outside this Adriatic port.

Circumstances were said to be similar for the 3,100 others who had found a haven in the West German Embassy and who, after arriving, quickly boarded trains for reception centers in Germany.

The French Foreign Ministry said a ferry carrying about 550 Albanians would dock at Marseilles on Sunday. The ship was scheduled to dock on Saturday, but fell behind schedule when a pregnant woman became ill and had to be evacuated to Italy, Agence France-Presse said.

After their initial exhilaration over having escaped Eastern Europe's only remaining Stalinist government, the Albanians awoke on Saturday morning in their cheek-by-jowl rows of cots to the stark realities of a new life.

Concern about the safety of relatives in Albania was evident in their refusal to give out their names. There was little such hesitation on Friday. Their worries were intensified, some said, by stories of shootings and beatings of fellow dissidents who had tried in vain to scramble into embassies.

More of the new arrivals were sick on Saturday than the day before, and two dozen had to be taken to the hospital with an assortment of maladies and injuries.

It was certain that the refugees would have to stay at the camp longer than the several days originally planned, Giuseppe Mazzitello, the Brindisi prefect, said. Some are in worse physical condition than originally thought, so the Italian Red Cross announced that a new center for more than 300 people was being opened nearby to provide specialized medical treatment.

The Albanians were well-fed for the first time in a while, treated to a lunch of sliced veal and tortellini served on flat army trays. But they remained unwashed and unshaven because of water problems.

And as they gave details about themselves to military clerks in charge of registration, it became clear that the road ahead stretched long and winding.

Most of them are young, and they are a mixture of the well-educated and the barely literate. Nearly all said their ultimate goal was to continue on to the United States, Canada, or Australia.

But whether worker or intellectual, they also recognized that they were not well-equipped for now to make a quick leap into the modern world from their tiny, agrarian, repressive, and often obsessively inward-looking society.

They were ready to make the journey nonetheless, they said. One man, a mechanic, said he would live in Italy, but his ambition was to reach the United States. "It is not that I don't like Italians," he said. "But I want to get as far from Albania as possible."

Like others, he mostly lounged around the concrete yard of the depot on Saturday. Others collected shoes, socks, shirts, and underwear that soldiers distributed, while still others clustered around a large television screen, watching a western movie.

AP

Their main requests, Mazzitello said, were cigarettes, stamps for letters, and telephone payment cards so that they could try to call home. One young man managed to get through to a friend in Tirana, who reported that the city was quiet and the Western embassies there had closed for a cleanup.

It was not clear, diplomats said, what they would do if another wave of dissidents burst onto their countries' grounds in an escape attempt.

The man who called Tirana said his friend told him: "Older Albanians had a bad opinion of us for leaving, but young people have been yelling, 'Bravo! Bravo!' "

France shows off military in Bastille Day parades

PARIS (AP) — France showed off the nation's military strength in a Bastille Day parade Saturday, and President Francois Mitterrand pledged to keep the nation's nuclear force independent and strong.

Later in the day, flamboyant showman Jean-Michel Jarre lit up western Paris before more than 2 million people in a spectacular music and light show.

Earlier, 7,000 servicemen trooped down the Champs-Elysee to celebrate the start of the French Revolution.

In his remarks, Mitterrand told television journalists, "Defense is part of the imperial obligations of the nation."

"I absolutely don't want to reduce it," he said, "even more so because there hasn't been a real reduction in the nuclear potential of the United States or the Soviet Union."

Japanese fishermen released

N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — The Soviet Union has released 170 Japanese fishermen who were seized in May on charges of illegal fishing under a North Korean flag. But over Japan's protests the fishing crews are being sent to North Korea, Japan's Foreign Ministry said Saturday.

The action has drawn a sharp protest from the Japanese government, which seeks the direct return of the fishermen.

Officials fear that their repatriation to Japan may now be in jeopardy, because Tokyo and Pyongyang have no diplomatic relations.

Since 1983 the Japanese government has been trying to win release of two Japanese fishermen captured by the North Koreans in a separate incident.

Rebels kill 35 civilians in Sri Lanka

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Rebels stopped three buses and gunned down at least 35 Moslem passengers in eastern Sri Lanka, Defense Ministry officials said Saturday.

Also Saturday, a Tamil politician claimed Sri Lankan soldiers massacred nearly 1,000 Tamil civilians during the past month of fighting with the rebels.

At least 2,400 combatants and an undetermined number of civilians have died since ethnic Tamils, who are mainly Hindu, violated a cease-fire in June. They renewed their fighting against government troops, who are mostly Buddhist Sinhalese.

A top Sri Lankan army commander said Saturday that the military could not win the civil war against the Tamil separatists.

"A political solution is the only way out," said Major General G.H. de Silva, who commands the government forces in the eastern region of this island nation.

He said the rebels are starting hit-and-run operations, effectively using crude but powerful land mines and guerrilla strikes against the army.

"It is becoming difficult to control territory," said De Silva, interviewed with several of his officers in the town of Trincomalee.

"When you hit, he hides. When you move out, he comes back," he said, referring to the rebels.

Defense Ministry officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the rebels stopped three buses near the eastern town of Kalmunai on Friday and shot and killed at least 35 passengers.

All the victims were Moslems, they said. Moslem politicians put the number of dead at 150.

Moslems, who make up about 7 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people, are often caught in the middle of the 7-year-old war between Tamil rebels and the Sinhalese-dominated government.

According to residents of Kalmunai, Friday's killings were intended as a warning to Moslems not to help soldiers hunt for rebel hideouts.

In another development, a Tamil politician accused the army of intentionally killing at least 1,000 civilians in the latest bout of fighting, which started last month after the rebels repudiated the 13-month-long cease-fire.

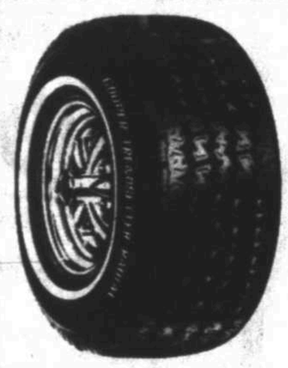

"Since the fighting began on June 11, we fear nearly 1,000 Tamil civilians, men, women and children have been deliberately massacred by the army in the east," said Kandian Premachandran.

"We concede civilians die when caught in the cross fire. But what is happening in the east is they are being deliberately massacred," he said.

There was no immediate government reaction to Premachandran's allegations.

On Thursday, Defense Secretary Gen. Cyril Ranatunge denied news reports that soldiers were killing Tamil civilians after clearing towns and villages of rebels.

N.Y. Times News Service

BONN, West Germany — There is no doubt in anyone's mind in London, Paris or Bonn that the Western leader who dominates the international agenda these days is not Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain or President George Bush of the United States, but Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany.

Part of the reason is that German economic and political strength is beginning to overshadow Europe the way Soviet military strength did for 45 years.

Now Soviet weakness has reduced the leverage the United States had during the years of Soviet menace.

The result is a net flow of political power and self-confidence to Kohl, an enormous man who is positively bursting with pride these days and flew off confidently to Moscow Saturday for another heart-to-heart talk with President Mikhail S. Gorbachev about German unification.

An extraordinary series of summit meetings — the European Community, then the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and finally the Group of Seven industrial democracies in Houston last week — has seen his partners, including the United States, content to let Kohl set the agenda, and to provide the backing he demanded for German reunification on his terms.

Now, with the Group of Seven acquiescing in West German plans to offer the Soviet Union hefty sums of real money (marks, not dollars) to ease the loss of Moscow's strategic position in East Germany, Kohl will be getting to know Gorbachev better in Moscow and Stavropol Sunday and Monday.

He is prepared to talk about everything from future German-Soviet trade to limits on the size of Germany's armed forces, in order to make its NATO membership more acceptable to Moscow.

Despite the heartfelt professions of good will and the camaraderie, there are bitter memories and not a little resentment about the new German strength, not only in the Soviet Union but in most of Western Europe.

In Germany as well, there is profound ambivalence about the new German role, and much criticism of Kohl for having gone too fast and too far.

German flags waved after West Germany won the World Cup in soccer last Sunday, but there was no national wave of triumphalism.

Instead, by the end of the week, many Germans were anguishing about why a British government minister who is one of Mrs. Thatcher's closest and oldest friends, Nicholas Ridley, had compared German domination of Europe today with Hitler's conquests earlier; the only comfort for the Germans lay in the fact that most British politicians felt obliged to apologize rather than agree with Ridley.

Germany may be powerful, but it is still insecure.

Nevertheless, Kohl has taken charge of unification and the associated issues with dizzying speed, in just six months.

For 45 years, the United States, Britain and France saw questions like the size of a postwar Germany's army, Allied occupation rights, and both their own and Germany's relationship with the Soviet Union as vital national interests, not to be left to the Germans to decide. Now a lot of that is changing.

One reason is that the United States decided, a year ago last May, that if there was to be a special American relationship with any European leader these days, the one who had the most clout was Kohl, not the increasingly insular and out of touch Mrs. Thatcher.

The issue then was a new system of short-range American nuclear missiles to replace the Lance rockets stationed in West Germany.

Mandela says settlement on rule urgently needed

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Nelson Mandela said Saturday that he and South African President F.W. de Klerk agree a settlement is urgently needed to end white minority rule in their nation.

The 71-year-old deputy president of the African National Congress made the comments at a news conference at the end of a three-day visit to Kenya.

"There is an understanding that the longer we delay with a settlement, the more damage will be done to the country," Mandela said.

Mandela, who arrived Wednesday accompanied by his wife, Winnie, spoke before leaving for Mozambique, the last stop on a six-week of tour of Africa, Europe and North America.

Thousands of people welcomed Mandela at the airport in Maputo, the Mozambican capital, where he was greeted by President Joaquim Chissano.

At his Nairobi news conference, Mandela said the ANC and government would resume negotiations immediately after his return. The ANC is the leading group fighting white rule.

"Both parties involved are keen on a settlement," Mandela said.

He said the ANC was prepared to deal with threats by white right-wing groups opposed to the abolition of the apartheid policy of racial discrimination.

"But it is not for us here to discuss what we propose doing about that threat," Mandela said. "But naturally it is a matter that involves priority in our thinking, in our strategy."

Mandela described "as genuine, but unfounded" the fear by some white South Africans that they would be dominated by blacks when majority rule came to the country.

"Our policy makes it clear that we will not tolerate any form of racialism no matter who practices it," Mandela said.

Six prominent Kenyans have been detained without charge in the crackdown, and at least 28 people were killed in four days of riots that began after police used gunfire and tear gas to break up a pro-democracy rally.

Armed riot troops patrolled the city Saturday, apparently bracing for a possible repeat of last week's violence.

Mandela also refused comment on an open letter from the wives of seven prominent Kenyan supporters of multiparty politics who either have been detained, are in hiding or have fled the country to avoid arrest.

Jewish-Chinese girl marks bat mitzvah in China

AP Laserphoto

YiLing Chen-Josephson, center, of New York, reads from the torah at her bat mitzvah celebrated Saturday in Kaifeng, China. With the 13-year-old are Rabbi Emeritus Udah Nadich, left, and Cantor David Lefkowitz of New York's Park Avenue Synogogue. On the wall is a rubbing taken from a tablet found in an ancient Kaifeng synogogue.

KAIFENG, China (AP) — In this ancient center of Chinese Judaism, a Jewish-Chinese girl from New York City marked her passage into adulthood today with a traditional bat mitzvah ceremony.

"It is so unique for my heritages to be united in one place," said YiLing Chen-Josephson, 13, the daughter of a Jewish father and a Chinese mother.

Cantor David Lefkowitz incorporated a Chinese folk song into the ceremony, held in a hotel because Kaifeng's synogogue was destroyed in the 19th century.

Kaifeng, about 390 miles south of Beijing in Henan province, was once home to China's largest Jewish community.

About 40 friends and relatives attended the ceremony, including the U.S. ambassador to China, James Lilley, and John Kluge, chairman of Metromedia Co., who is listed by Forbes magazine as the richest man in America.

YiLing's father, Marvin Josephson, is chairman of Josephson International, parent company of International Creative Management, one of the world's largest literary and talent agencies.

He said he thought of holding his daughter's bat mitzvah in Kaifeng after reading about a boy whose parents took him to Krakow, Poland, for his bar mitzvah in memory of his grandparents who died in the Holocaust.

Jewish boys traditionally have bar mitzvahs at age 13 to mark reaching adulthood. In modern times, girls also have gone through the ceremony, called bat mitzvah.

Today's service originally was planned for last summer, but was postponed after the army's bloody attack on pro-democracy demonstrators in Beijing. Instead, YiLing had a bat mitzvah in New York last November.

But the family did not give up the idea of holding the ceremony in China, which YiLing's maternal grandparents left more than four decades ago. The grandparents returned for the first time for the ceremony.

YiLing said last week that coming to China "helped me to realize how special this is to have ... a combination of two sides of a family like this."

"Before, I just took it for granted that this is what I am," she said. "Now, it's beginning to take some meaning."

Kaifeng was China's capital from the 10th to the 13th centuries, at about the time Jewish traders began arriving by sea and across Central Asia via the Silk Road.

Thuggery getting easier in Haiti

N.Y. Times News Service

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — With the return from exile last week of two figures associated with political violence and torture, one pessimistic notion seemed to resound clearly through the thick atmosphere of Port-au-Prince.

For many, the return of Roger Lafontant, the former head of the Tontons Macoute, and Williams Regala, a top army officer under Jean-Claude Duvalier and successor dictatorships, showed how little ground has been gained in the four years since Duvalier was routed in a street revolution.

Now, after only four months in office, Haiti's fifth interim government since 1986 is listing badly, and infighting among civilian politicians is increasing.

Again the country is flirting with violence and chaos nurtured by groups — often tied to drug trafficking or other forms of illegality — that are loyal to former barons of the Duvalier system and bent on derailing democratic change.

Many criminal enterprises got started under Jean-Claude Duvalier, whose toleration for independent illegal activities was notoriously lax, as long as it didn't interfere with his family's own acquisitive habits; since his departure, the hold of these groups has only grown stronger in the absence of a stable central government.

After five years in which each government has seemed less in control than the last, many Haitians realize that popular movements and international sanctions have failed to curb the chilling determination of these groups to preserve their interests at all costs.

"With each crisis the situation has only gotten worse, with all of these groups, not just the Tontons Macoute, but the drug smugglers and the contraband traffickers, even traffickers in people, gaining ever more of a hold on the system," said Anthony P. Maingot, a Caribbean affairs expert at Florida International University in Miami.

"These are criminal enterprises that are threatened by change and they are not going to allow real elections."

Maingot and others have said meaningful elections in Haiti are possible, but only if the democratic sector could somehow unite long enough to sweep the civil service clean of corrupt Duvalierists and reform or eliminate the armed forces — which now are in near-chaos themselves.

But Haiti's opposition forces are anything but unified.

They range from veterans of the dictatorship who now profess democracy to excitable nationalists, including members of the Haitian clergy, who call for a revolution.

They give the impression of an assortment of often impressive but headstrong individuals, each pulling mightily in his own direction.

"What these people don't seem to realize is that if they really unify themselves, they could defeat what is left of the army and the Tontons Macoute and break the back of the kleptomaniac state," said Larman C. Wilson, a specialist in Caribbean affairs at American University in Washington.

"They are unwilling to set aside differences before an election and fight it out later. They fight things out beforehand and end up being torn apart."

Others say Haiti must invite a multinational force to temporarily take over governance and insure security during elections.

But few politicians are likely to publicly support such a step.

Distrust of Washington, which was involved to varying degrees in all of the frustrated efforts to advance democracy here, is high, and Haitians have a historic suspicion of foreign intervention.

One angry Haitian businessman, who spoke on the condition he not be identified, declared, "We have the impression the United States is against us; the government, the press, the C.I.A., all are working together to keep Haiti cordoned off, to make the world as unsympathetic as possible to us, even to prevent any sense of solidarity with black Americans from developing."

Sudan denies forcing refugees home

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — The government Saturday said it was helping about 190,000 refugees return to the south, where they had fled famine and civil war.

However, it denied a U.S. newspaper report that the refugees were being forced to return to their villages in southwestern Bahr el-Ghazal province.

In its report Friday, the New York Times quoted village chiefs and U.N. relief workers who said the government was making the refugees go home and further straining food supplies in the region.

The article quoted a report by the U.N. Children's Fund, which said the refugees were taken by train and truck for part of the route. It said they then had to walk as many as four days to their villages.

Brig. Gen. Pio Yukwan Deng, a member of the ruling military council, dismissed the Times report as "sheer, unfounded allegations."

During the 7-year-old civil war in the south, about 2 million refugees have fled the fighting and famine, settling in shantytowns around the capital, Khartoum.

Hundreds of thousands of refugees have fled to other Sudanese cities as well as to neighboring Ethiopia and Uganda.

Peter Orat, the minister for relief and displaced persons, denied that any southerners were being coerced into leaving the capital.

"Our declared policy is to help the displaced return to the south, not by force but by their own free will," Orat said.

He said those who wished to remain in the north would not be allowed to stay in their shantytowns but would be moved to nearby "production areas to help boost production." He did not elaborate, but apparently was referring to agricultural areas.

The refugees live in about 27 shantytowns around the capital and in the nearby central region. About 10,000 inhabitants of one camp in a suburban industrial area near Khartoum have already been moved to another suburb because the camp's water was polluted.

Mohamed el-Hassan Awad el-Karim, the commissioner for displaced people, said that about 190,000 refugees had asked to return to their homes in Bahr el-Ghazal.

"We are currently contacting concerned bodies, local and international, to help us in transporting them," el-Karim said. He said it was not possible for the government to transport all the refugees.

"We are providing food for three months in addition to tents, blankets, drugs and agricultural tools to anyone wishing to return home."

The arrival of large numbers of war refugees in Khartoum and other Sudanese cities has created tensions with local residents who resent having to share their already meager food resources and job opportunities.

There are also tribal and religious differences.

The southerners are mostly Christians or animists of African origin. The northerners are predominantly Moslem of Arab descent.

Car bomb kills civilian in Medellin

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A car bomb exploded late Saturday in front of police headquarters in the cocaine-trafficking center of Medellin, killing one civilian and wounding 14, police said.

Meanwhile, police reported seizing more than two tons of cocaine, packaged and ready to be sent to the United States. They said it was hidden in an underground storage locker on a farm in northern Colombia.

In the northwestern city of Medellin, the car bomb with more than 80 pounds of dynamite exploded near the police headquarters downtown, causing damage to nearby shops and a school, said the city's police chief, Col. Jorge Ferrero.

In a live radio interview, Ferrero said a bystander died at a local hospital after being wounded in the bombing. Three of those wounded were in critical condition at the hospital, he said.

He said there were no police casualties.

Police were searching for a suspect who activated the bomb and fled, he said.

The bombing was the fifth this year in Medellin. On Friday, police deactivated a car bomb packed with about 450 pounds of dynamite in the city.

Since Friday, police reported seizing more than 3,000 pounds of dynamite that the Medellin drug cartel was reportedly planning to use for car bombings.

Authorities blame the Medellin cocaine cartel for car bombings and other terrorist attacks that have killed hundreds of people in the last eleven months.

After summits, there's still plenty of work

By Tom Raum
Associated Press Writer

An AP News Analysis

WASHINGTON — While the London and Houston summits are behind him, there are plenty of loose ends that President Bush will have to confront in the next few months.

Major differences remain among the allies on trade, the environment and on economic aid to the Soviet Union.

Face-saving compromises reached by summit partners to achieve common ground on several issues only guarantee that the divisions will resurface at a later time.

At first glance, Bush appears to have gotten most of what he wanted from the NATO summits in London and the summit of industrialized democracies in Houston last week.

"That's what Bush is good at," said Stephen Hess, a scholar at the Brookings Institution who specializes in the presidency. "He's brought to international relations the same skills that he's brought to domestic politics: when you have no money, split the difference."

He added: "It's a way to put off decisions without leaving anyone too unhappy."

But the compromises either glossed over the lingering differences or bought participants more time.

For instance, the allied leaders in Houston were able to put off the issue of a joint stance on direct economic aid to the Soviet Union — favored by West Germany but opposed by the United States — with a statement that talked about individual aid. It also commissioned a study of the Soviet economy by the International Monetary Fund.

A six-month time frame was put on the IMF study. When that report is complete, it is likely that the divisions among Western allies will resurface.

Bush also made little real headway on the hotly debated subject of agricultural subsidies.

Initially, the administration had pressed for an agreement eliminating all such subsidies by the year 2000. European allies balked at that notion.

From the Houston summit came a "compromise" in which the United States basically abandoned its insistence that all agricultural subsidies be dropped by 2000; and European allies agreed in principle that the subsidies should be cut.

However, that just threw the debate back to negotiations under way in Geneva under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Those talks, to produce a new set of liberalized international trading rules, have been going on for three years — and are bogged down on the agricultural subsidy issue.

Bush has said repeatedly that he hopes the trade talks can be completed — and an agreement on agricultural subsidies reached — by the end of this year.

But if the year ends and the talks remain deadlocked, Bush will be forced to address the issue anew.

On the environment, Bush persuaded allies to retreat from insisting on a timetable on combatting global warming. However, his administration remained at odds with Western allies on the subject — and with basically the same differences coming out of the summit as going in.

At the London NATO summit, allies invited Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to address a meeting of the alliance, probably in December. And although the precise forum wasn't specified, U.S. officials said it was unlikely that Gorbachev would address a NATO meeting without Bush in attendance.

Furthermore, both Bush and Gorbachev have pledged to try to complete work on treaties by the end of this year — one to reduce conventional forces in Europe and the other cut long-range nuclear missiles.

A third Bush-Gorbachev summit seems likely, possibly in Moscow, to sign a nuclear pact once negotiations on it are complete.

And completion of talks on reducing conventional forces in Europe will produce a 35-nation summit among European nations of both Eastern and Western blocs.

In the meantime, Bush is turning his attention to domestic issues and fund-raising excursions to help Republican gubernatorial and Senate candidates.

"He'll switch over to non-stop politicking," said White House spokeswoman Alixe Glen.

Neil Bush doesn't like limelight

By Carl Hilliard

AP Laserphoto

Entertainers Pat Boone, left, and Charlton Heston, center, stand with Neil Bush at the 1988 Republican National Convention in New Orleans. As a delegate from Colorado, Neil delivered his state's delegates for his father. The president's son now is under fire for his role in making questionable loans as a director of a Colorado savings and loan.

DENVER (AP) — To hear Neil Bush tell it, he's "just a Denver guy trying to make a living and raise a family," and he's bewildered and angry at the attention he's receiving.

Neil Bush, 35, slim, tanned, blond father of three children, epitomizes the young, enterprising businessmen who came to Colorado in the early 1980s to get rich in the oil business.

"We lived month to month, begged for money from time to time, and our business was relatively dormant," Bush recalls. But he relishes that time in his life.

Like his father, Bush speaks in deliberate, run-on sentences, tipping his head during delivery, jabbing his finger occasionally, laughing an engaging, hiccuppy sort of laugh, displaying near-perfect teeth.

He is comfortable enough in front of a television camera to be a political commentator, which he was, briefly, two years ago at KMGH in Denver.

Lately, however, Bush hasn't been in the spotlight voluntarily.

Bush faces a public disciplinary hearing before federal regulators in September on his role as a director of the bankrupt Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan. Some Democrats are pushing for a special prosecutor to examine the case.

He has been accused of conflict of interest and failure to disclose ties to men who received loans from Silverado, but has said he has done nothing wrong. His father has defended his "honor and integrity" but has promised to stay out of the investigation.

The subject makes Neil Bush angry. While some maintain he played a major role in pushing through suspicious loans while a director of Silverado, he is enraged that Democrats are now making political hay out of his predicament.

"Neil Bush is it for the Democrats. I'm the highest-profile guy they have to shoot at out there," he said in an interview last week.

"As a director of Silverado I acted prudently, I acted responsibly. I acted and took my responsibilities seriously, and I acted with diligence in overseeing the activities of Silverado." He also expresses anger at what he calls "government mismanagement" in the way troubled savings institutions are being sold off.

Neil Bush played his most prominent role on the hot, steamy night of Aug. 17, 1988, at the Republican National Convention in New Orleans, when he delivered all of Colorado's delegates to help seal his father's nomination for president.

It was a heady moment for the third of George and Barbara Bush's four sons, and it led to suggestions Neil Bush might have the stuff from which U.S. House or Senate candidates are made. The possibility had him shrugging and smiling.

His job then, he told reporters, was to help his father's campaign. "I'd hate to be the only son to have lost his home state for his dad."

Dyslexic as a child, Bush practiced reading exercises until he was able to overcome his problem, his brother George recalled. He eventually earned undergraduate and master's degrees in business from Tulane University.

Until a few months ago, Neil and Sharon Bush and their three children lived in a tan brick, two-story home in a friendly, established neighborhood in central Denver.

The family moved to a new house, a $550,000 structure on Denver's wealthier, newer, southeast side. "It offers privacy, something that I now thrive on," Bush says.

Tax goof makes couples temporary millionaires

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Samuel and Virginia Rice of Fort Wayne just about lost it when they received their state income tax refund. More than 100 miles away in Indianapolis, Jimmie and Linda Adams were feeling the same way.

The two couples weren't feeling the run-of-the-mill taxpayer blues. Instead, they were downright delirious with excitment.

The Rices had expected an $82 tax refund from the state. When a check arrived in the mail Thursday, it was made out for $8,202,416.48.

"I looked at that thing, and I started reading all those numbers. ... My heart just about jumped out of my chest," Rice said.

The Adamses felt the same way when their check for $8,202,182.71 arrived. They had been expecting $300.

"I had to count the commas to figure how much it was for. Then I screamed and yelled — eight million dollars!" said Mrs. Adams, 35, a preschool teacher.

The Adams family made out a wish list on how such a sum could be spent, and Rice, too, couldn't help fantasizing.

"I've wanted to get out of the city for a long time," said Rice, 53. "I'd maybe buy some good ground in the country and build something."

But such thoughts were dashed when a nervous tax department employee knocked on the door, asking Rice if the state could please have its check back.

Judge orders woman away from King site

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A woman who has camped for two years in front of the motel where Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated to protest turning it into a museum is under court order to move her tent.

But deputies probably won't try to force her to move until Monday, an official said today.

Chancery Court Judge George Lewis told Jacqueline Smith on Friday she was trespassing and said he would send sheriff's deputies to move her today if she failed to leave voluntarily.

Ms. Smith vowed to stay, saying the Lorraine Motel should be used as housing for the homeless.

Despite the judge's statement, Shelby County deputies were not expected to enforce Lewis' order until Monday, said Wes Newman, a dispatcher for the sheriff's department.

"The information we have is the order has not been signed. It will be signed Monday morning and probably will be executed that same day," Newman said.

He added that sheriff's department employees who serve civil court orders generally do not work on weekends and no one had been called in for special assigment.

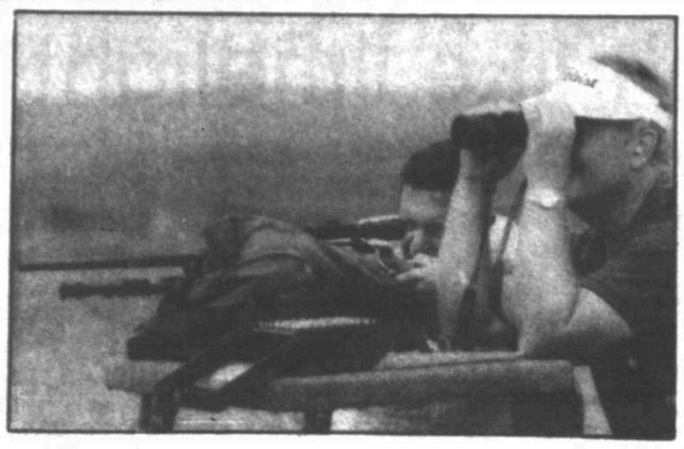

The Lorraine is to become the centerpiece of a $9 million museum called the National Civil Rights Center, scheduled to open July 4, 1991.

Ms. Smith, 39, a former employee and resident of the motel, was evicted from the Lorraine by sheriff's deputies after it was shut down to make way for the museum.

Prairie dog shooting contest results mixed

NUCLA, Colo. (AP) — The first Top Dog World Championship Prairie Dog Shoot competition got under way Saturday with more than 100 shooters, despite the efforts of about two dozen animal rights activists.

Two protesters were issued citations for trespassing, authorities said.

When plans for the shooting contest became known three months ago, outraged animal rights activists successfully lobbied Gov. Roy Romer and U.S. Rep. Ben Nighthorse Campbell to come out against it. But local citizens rallied round the organizers, and all but three of 318 people who attended a town meeting on the subject voted in favor of the contest.

One of the people at the meeting suggested a "yuppie shoot" might be in order, and after the vote, Mayor John Vanderpool invited Romer and Campbell to "buzz off."

More than $7,000 in prizes was at stake for hunters in the two-day competition, billed as a way of reducing the population of the foot-tall, grayish brown rodents, relatives of the squirrel.

By the end of the hunt's first day, organizers said 1,162 prairie dogs had been killed, way over the maximum 500 predicted. Hunt organizer Roger Culver attributed the high rate to availability of dogs, good weather and marksmen's skill, but added that no shooter had hit the 50 dogs allowed.

Prairie dogs have multiplied geometrically in recent years because of the drought, landowner Paul Carkhuff said.

"There used to be oats in that field that'd reach three feet," he said. "Nobody can grow anything on land that the prairie dogs have gotten to like this."

Six-inch-tall mounds around prairie dog burrows, spaced only a few feet apart, harming plants and creating a hazard for livestock.

Animal rights activists, however, believe shooting the animals at all, much less for sport, is immoral.

"It's a contest of cruelty," said Shari Janger of Denver, a member of the Rocky Mountain Humane Society and Prairie Dog Rescue. "We just want them to stop this. They think it's their world down here. It isn't. It's the state of Colorado."

About 25 protesters appeared at the 6 a.m. pancake breakfast at the Moose Lodge, waving signs and shouting slogans. There were no confrontations or incidents, other than a lot of yelling between the protesters and local residents who turned out to watch the demonstration.

Police worked to keep hotheads on both sides apart, said Montrose County Sheriff Tom Gilmore.

Many of the locals said they enjoyed the news media activity as much as the demonstrations, and took as many photographs of reporters and television crews as they did of the protesters.

"We've just never had anything like this kind of attention before," said Linda Norton, a local merchant and president of the area's Chamber of Commerce, who estimated the combined population of Nucla and nearby Naturita in southwestern Colorado at 1,500.

Nucla merchants also were pleased. The only two motels in the region were booked solid for the first time in several years, restaurants and bars were full and souvenior hawkers reported brisk sales.

East German flees communism, seeks new life as Wyoming cowboy

By Julia Prodis

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — After spending two years in an East German prison for trying to break through the Iron Curtain to freedom, Steffaen Petry is determined to live the free-spirited life of a cowboy on Wyoming's open range.

"From the time I was very little, I wanted to be a cowboy. From a little boy I knew about John Wayne," the 22-year-old said through an interprreter during a break in work at the Wyoming Hereford Ranch.

For the past few days, Petry has been pulling weeds and planting trees at the ranch just east of Cheyenne. He has yet to brand a calf, drive cattle or shoot a rattlesnake, but says: "I'm so happy."

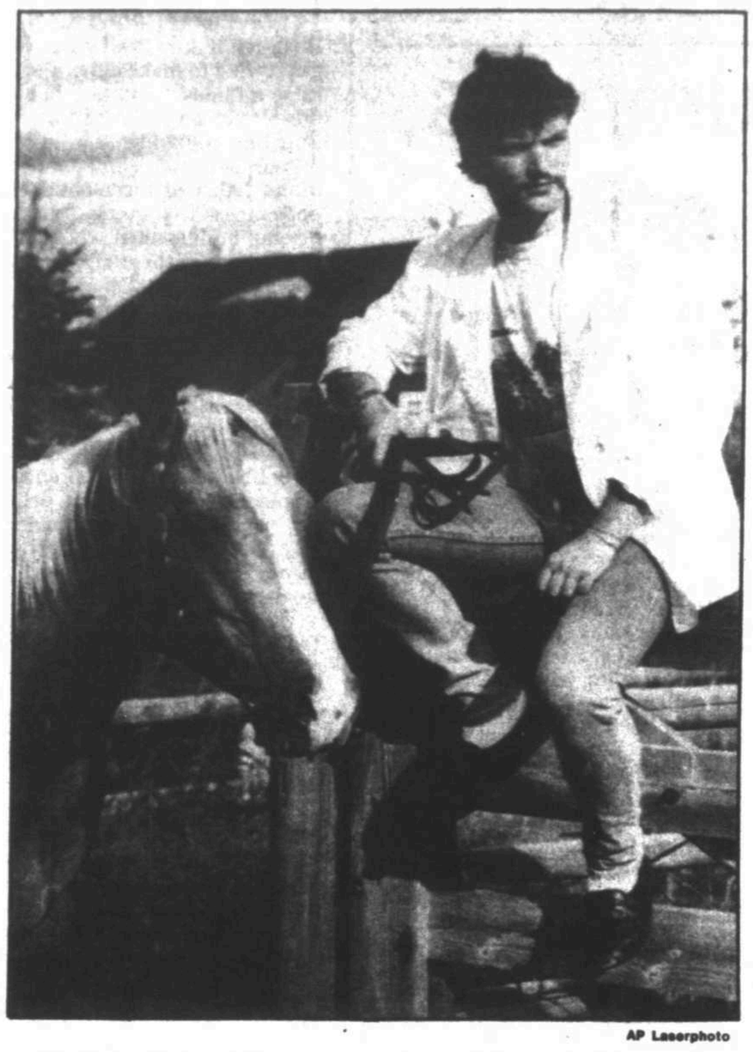

He saddled a horse for the first time Wednesday and rode across the green plains of southeastern Wyoming.

"I know that America is a free land and from Cheyenne where I am, I can see land, open spaces and houses — not only large apartment buildings," he said, sitting on a golden mare in a field of tall grass. "It's so crowded in Germany. It's so open here."

Petry decided to head to the Cowboy State in late June — little more than six months after he was released from prison — when he read a West German newspaper article saying there was a shortage of cowboys in Wyoming. Foreign workers are being allowed to take cowhand jobs in parts of the West where there is a shortage of qualified American cowboys.

Fantasizing about the freedom and expanse of the Wild West he had seen on television and read about in books, he sold his meager belongings, purchased an airplane ticket and arrived at the Cheyenne airport on a tourist visa.

AP Laserphoto

Steffaen Petry, 22, once imprisoned for trying to escape from East Germany, has found freedom as a Cheyenne, Wyo., cowboy.

He approached an airport maintenance worker who had a friend who spoke German. He finally was hooked up with the Sloan Hale family, who speak German and own the sprawling Wyoming Hereford Ranch.

For now Petry is staying with the Hales, who serve as his interpreters, until he can find a rancher with an opening for a cowboy who will sponsor him in hopes he can replace his tourist visa with a work permit.

He wants to spend the rest of his life in America, but worries that his stay could be short-lived.

"For me, right now I am free. But I won't know true freedom or what freedom really is until I know I can stay here," he said.

Despite his desire to be a cowboy, he wore a white cotton blazer over a souvenir "Colorado" T-shirt, jeans, white socks and black loafers.

"Not until I am a real cowboy, after I work for a year as a cowboy, will I wear a cowboy hat," he said. "Then I will be a real cowboy."

Petry, a mechanic and son of a dock worker, felt like thousands of other young East Germans before the Berlin Wall tumbled down last fall — isolated and yearning for freedom.

"I had no freedom. I could not purchase anything. I could not go anywhere," he said. "There was absolutely no freedom of opinion. I couldn't even say I would like a Coca-Cola. If I were to say that bad things are bad and they didn't think they were bad, they could put you in jail."

On May 12, 1988, Petry and a friend decided to leave.

"It was very late at night. I tried to escape through a forest and through a fence. I cut the fence and then I came to 'No Man's Land' and the West German border was right there. The border was right next to us," he said.

"At that time four people came and arrested us. We were taken to a holding place for 14 days until they decided what to do with us. I was in prison for (almost) two years."

But now, he is confident that no matter what happens, his life will be better.

"I told my parents if I did not write, please don't have any worry. Everything will be fine."

Pig diggers brave mud, cold for ancient bones

TASWELL, Ind. (AP) — About 30,000 years ago, an extinct cousin of the pig was taking shelter in a cool cave when it slipped at the mouth of a 20-foot pit and slid in.

Indiana State Museum workers and volunteers this week followed the pig and its mates into two muck-filled cavern rooms that are yielding a trove of evidence of prehistoric life in southern Indiana.

Week-long "pig digs" over the last four years at Mengenity Peccary Cave have unearthed bones of more than 100 examples of the now-extinct pig, called the flat-headed peccary. It's the largest early peccary find in North America.

Sunday is the last day of the annual expedition into the cave to root bones out of the sloppy cave floor. Mud has to be carefully troweled from numbered, 20-inch squares, then washed over a screen to separate out fragments of bone.

The remains of other animals also have been found in the primordial slime of the cave.

"It's probably the best single time line for Ice Age life in Indiana," said Ron Richards, the museum's curator of paleobiology.

"It gives us sort of a history of life in southern Indiana over the last 30,000 years," he said. "Every 10 centimeters we dig in one cave room takes us back into time as much as 900 years."

Richards didn't relish his week in the cave, however.

"For the most part, it's cold and damp," he said. Even when the temperature outside nears 100 degrees, the temperature inside seldom climbs above the upper 50s.

They work by the light of kerosene lamps. A half-dozen people can crowd into the largest room. A smaller one holds two or three.

"Everything you have on is permeated with moisture. We're standing in a couple of inches of water with steam pouring off our bodies," Richards said.

The diggers have found the jaw of a dire wolf, now extinct, and a piece of shell from an ancient tortoise. They've also found evidence of arctic shrews, plains pocket gophers, and rodents called yellow-cheeked vole.

"That shows that it was once a fair amount cooler here," he said. "And it shows that at different times there would have been grasslands in Indiana, and prairie."

It will take the museum about a year to identify, preserve and catalog what was found during the week in the cave. Some of them will be displayed at the Indianapolis museum in February.

Bear enthusiasts 'grin and eat it'

STEWARTSTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — A Baptist church founded in the mountain wilderness 215 years ago will celebrate its anniversary Sunday with a "bear feast" to honor the animal that helped keep its founders alive.

"It wasn't easy for the settlers to bring cows, sheep and other domestic animals across the Alleghenies Mountains," said the Rev. Joseph Gluck, pastor emeritus and historian of the Forks-of-Cheat Baptist Church.

"That's why the black bear became one of the great sources of meat for the people who founded our church," Gluck said. "It was a staple. We eat some every year as a sort of memorial. Besides, it's a lot of fun."

The church, located on a hilltop overlooking the Cheat and Monongahela rivers, has been serving bear meat at its annual picnic off and on since the late 1700s, and each year over the last three decades, Gluck said.

The picnics mark the anniversary of the church's founding on Nov. 5, 1775. The celebration is held in July because "we like to celebrate while the weather is nice," said Gluck, 75.

"Bear-eating is not a Johnny-come-lately thing at the Forks," said the Rev. Chuck Yoke, the church's pastor. "The church founders used native bear meat to stay alive in the winter."

Visitors and others eating bear for the first time are eligible to become members of the World Bear Eaters' Association, said Gluck, who has the title of "Bear Master" at the church.

"I say some magic special Indian words, tap them on the head three times with the magic tooth taken from a West Virginia black bear and give them a certificate so they can prove to people they've actually eaten bear," Gluck said.

"Mostly, they just grin and eat it," said Gluck.

The association's membership is approaching 1,500 members, with representatives from at least 24 states and several foreign countries, said Gluck.

Hunters from the eastern counties of West Virginia provide the hind quarters cooked for the feast. Gluck said meat from 2-year-old bears is best, because "Yearlings are too scrawny and meat from older bears is tough."

Lena Nicholson, 90, has been cooking bear meat for the feast for decades, and she said it's a day-long task. She cuts the bear quarters into roasts, trims the meat and then boils it in water three times.

"That bear meat is awful strong and greasy," said Nicholson. "You have to cook it that much to get down to the good meat."

The meat is then put into a long pan "with celery, apple and onion all over it" and put into the oven for several hours, Nicholson said.

"I have to open all the windows and the door, the smell gets pretty strong, said Nicholson. "When it comes out, it has a little bit of a beef taste, kind of like a cross between beef and pork.

Matriarch Rose Kennedy turning 100

By Dana Kennedy
Associated Press Writer

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. — When Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy's family gathers at her three-gabled ocean-front house to celebrate her 100th birthday, the country's most enduring matriarch will likely remain upstairs, watching from a bedroom window.

Because she is frail and sits in a wheelchair, Mrs. Kennedy will stay inside the white clapboard house facing Nantucket Sound where she has summered for 59 years and now makes her permanent home.

Almost all her five surviving children, 28 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren plan to attend this Sunday's celebration; a smaller group will visit with Mrs. Kennedy on July 22, her actual birthdate.

After a century of extraordinary triumphs and tragedies, her greatest legacy has been the sense of family love and loyalty that extends to the fourth generation of Kennedys. Three great-granddaughters are named Rose.

"Even though she's on in years, she has a enormously powerful impact on the children's lives," said U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, 58. "She is as much if not more of a presence that she was when she was more active. She still has an indescribable force and time has not diminished it."

Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, matriarch of the Kennedy family, appears for her birthday celebration in 1982, left. She'll be 100 on July 22, and the family will gather at her three-gabled beachfront house in Hyannis Port, Mass., today to mark the occasion. In the 1938 photo, right, seated from left are her children, Eunice, Jean, Edward on the lap of his father Joseph, Patricia and Kathleen. Standing are, from left, Rosemary, Robert, John, Rose and Joseph Jr.

MANY OF the Kennedy grandchildren said their grandmother's influence remains as strong as it was when they were young. They still visit her regularly and say she is able to recognize them and keep up with their lives.

"I don't think anybody is like her," said granddaughter (and goddaughter) Maria Shriver, 34, correspondent for NBC News. "I think they broke the mold. I don't think she has diminished at all. I look at her in even more awe now."

Most of Rose Kennedy's children and grandchildren are involved in public service, a calling they say began with their grandmother.

"It came directly from the attitude that she had that the country had been good to us and that we owed a reciprocal debt in return," said Bobby Kennedy Jr., 36, an environmental lawyer in White Plains, N.Y.

Mrs. Kennedy, who suffered a stroke in April 1984, still has her hair set once a week and a pianist comes by the Hyannis Port house frequently to play her favorite Irish songs. At least one family member visits her every weekend.

"She still has more black than gray hair and she's proud of the fact that she never has anything done to it," her son said last week. "The piano player was in last night. We all sat around singing. She loves the piano. She has spunk. She has bad days but she has a lot of good days, too."

ROSE ELIZABETH Fitzgerald Kennedy has spent her entire life surrounded by politics. The daughter of a mayor, she was also the mother of a president and two U.S. senators and is the grandmother of a congressman and a neophyte state representative. But her very public life belied a private side that is still very dear to her grandchildren.

"She could have had that stern aura but she wasn't really that imposing for a little kid," said Christopher Lawford, 35, a lawyer-turned-actor who lives in Pacific Palisades, Calif.

"There was this side of her, the daughter of the greatest mayor of Boston, who entertained in the Court of St. James, but there was someone else who always smiled and had this laugh that was so sort of comforting.'

Mrs. Kennedy was born in Boston on July 22, 1890, the oldest of six children of John Francis (Honey Fitz) Fitzgerald and Mary Josephine Hannon.

Her father worked his way up from ward politics to the state Senate and to the U.S. House of Representatives. He eventually was elected mayor of Boston.

AFTER GRADUATING from Dorchester High School, Rose spent a post-graduate year at the Convent of the Sacred Heart in Boston. She wanted to attend Wellesley College but was instead sent to a convent boarding school in Holland for the daughters of affluent families.

In October 1914 she married Joseph Patrick Kennedy in a union of two politically powerful families — not unlike last month's marriage of her granddaughter Kerry Kennedy, 30, and Andrew Cuomo, son of New York Gov. Mario Cuomo.

At the time of their marriage, Joe Kennedy, son of Patrick Joseph Kennedy, was the youngest bank president in America.

While amassing his fortune, he became a film executive and eventually set his sights on politics. He headed the Securities and Exchange Commission, and in 1938 was named Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

His wife devoted her life to raising the couple's nine children, instilling in them a strong sense of family, religion, discipline — and ambition.

"She had that strong sense of family values — and she was a competitive person as well," said Eunice Kennedy Shriver, 69, executive vice president of the Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation. "I think it's important to understand she had many dimensions. ... Sometimes you just hear the stiff, brittle image. She was great fun as well."

WHEN HER SON John entered politics in 1946, Mrs. Kennedy became an indefatigable campaigner. She and her daughters organized teas in homes across Massachusetts. When John Kennedy beat Henry Cabot Lodge in a 1952 race for the Senate, Lodge said, "It was those damn tea parties that beat me."

But Rose Kennedy and her husband were able to savor the fruits of their labors only briefly. Every Kennedy success seemed to be matched by a tragedy.

Rose's eldest son, Joe Jr., was killed while flying a secret Navy mission in 1944 and her daughter Kathleen died in a plane crash in France.

Two years after John F. Kennedy became the nation's first Catholic president, Joe Kennedy suffered a crippling stroke. A year later, John Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas. In 1968, Robert Kennedy was shot to death in Los Angeles while he campaigned for the presidency. In 1984, her grandson, David Kennedy, was found dead of a drug overdose in a Palm Beach hotel room.

Still, her Roman Catholic faith has endured. For years, she was a familiar figure at daily Mass at St. Xavier's church in Hyannis.

For many in her family, it is hard to believe that someday she will no longer be there.

Her grandson, Michael Kennedy, 32, president of Citizens Energy Corp. in Boston, spent an afternoon in his office recently talking enthusiastically about his grandmother and the family's plans for the birthday celebration.

He grew uncharacteristically silent when asked how the family will handle her inevitable death. He stared down at the floor for several minutes.

"I don't know how to answer that," he said slowly. "I don't even want to think about it."

Rose remembered in children's, grandchildren's own words

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (AP) — The celebration of Rose Kennedy's 100th birthday in Hyannis Port is expected to be be the largest Kennedy family gathering in 30 years, since John F. Kennedy was elected president. On the eve of her birthday, these are some of her family's fondest memories:

Edward M. Kennedy, 58, U.S. Senator: "I was the last one. She was able to spend more time with me. I remember when they came back from London in the middle of the spring and they weren't sure what to do with me. So we went down to the Cape, just Mother and I, and she tutored me herself. ... She's the product of another era. I still tease her about it. Last night she was talking about going to Palm Beach and she was saying, 'Isn't it time to start packing the trunks for Florida, Teddy?' I mean, no one says trunks anymore."

Bobby Shriver, 36, venture capitalist and Special Olympics producer, New York: "I remember once I was out walking with my grandmother. I was 19. She asked me about my girlfriend I had at the time, if I'd kissed her. I said, yeah, I've kissed her a few times. Then she said my grandfather was the only man she ever kissed. To me, that totally defined her. Like, I kissed one man and he was a hell of a man."

Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, 39, Maryland Student Service Alliance: "She loved desserts. When I used to visit she made sure she had four desserts. She'd have pudding and angel food cake and these nice white buttery cookies. She'd say to me, 'Do you think four desserts is too much?' "

Timothy Shriver, 30, administrator for at-risk youth, New Haven, Conn. public schools: "If you asked all the grandchildren if they had a special relationship with her, they'd all secretly think they were her favorite. It was just a quality she had, making you think you were the special one. I had a grammar teacher in D.C. in 10th grade who was really good. I was 16. She was 86. She fired off a letter to this guy congratulating him on my grammar."

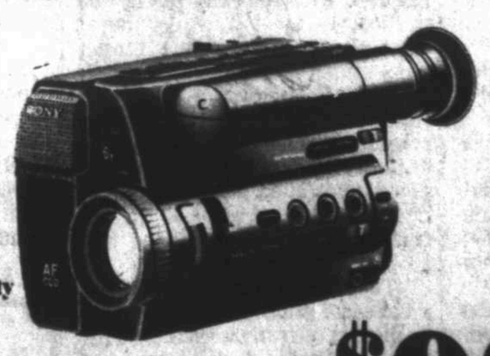

Michael Kennedy, 32, president, Citizens Energy Corp., Boston: "We used to play a math game. She'd string numbers together and we'd multiply them. The older children could keep up better but she'd focus on one individual and you'd know you were on the hot seat so you better get it right.'

Chris Lawford, 35, actor, Los Angeles: "I remember the walks. She loved to walk. Back then, it was like the last thing you wanted to do was take a walk with your grandmother, but when I got back, I felt good. It was cathartic. I either learned something, a story about my mother, or I learned something about me."

Maria Shriver, 34, correspondent, NBC News, Los Angeles: "She always ran a very tight ship, like clockwork. She always made sure you were happy with your food. When you were in a group she always sought out your attention, you never got the impression she was too busy. And she always had a regular routine. You always knew at 4:45, there'd be a walk."

Much changed after crash of Flight 232

AP Laserphoto

Survivors still face crash-related struggles

July 19, 1989, 30 minutes before crash, radio call from Sioux City, Iowa, Air Traffic Control to United Airlines pilot: "United 232 ... say souls on board and fuel remaining. ..."

By Tad Bartimus and Sharon Cohen
Associated Press Writers

Capt. Alfred C. Haynes, his doomed jetliner wallowing all over the Iowa sky, responded to an air traffic controller in the time-honored jargon of his aviation fraternity. There were 296 "souls on board," including his own.

At 3:59 CDT on a sweltering Wednesday afternoon last July 19, they all rode a 168-ton flying brick down into a cornfield at 200 miles an hour. In the flame and dust unleashed when the DC-10 cartwheeled out of control, 112 of the souls on board United Airlines Flight 232 were lost.

But 184 survived. And as they prepare to return to Sioux City for a memorial service Thursday, they struggle with unanswerable questions about life and death, guilt, nightmares, physical injuries that may never heal, strained relationships with people they love, and memories that deny them a single good night's sleep.

They shake at some of life's simplest events, afraid that a highway bridge might fall on them, frightened by the sound and smoky smell of a child's cap gun, convinced that a washing machine has an electrical short that will cause a fire.

Mary Kahl couldn't feel comfortable at work for six months. Paul Olivier, like many other survivors, won't fly on a DC-10. William Robertson drew up a list of accomplishments and things he wants to do in life. Jerry Schemmel quit his job — too many reminders. Rod Vetter fears driving into downtown Chicago. What if a car jumps a guardrail into his lane?

"My life is never going to be the same," says Upton Rehnberg, 53.

They question why they lived, when so many others died. They meet in groups to grieve, they call each other at 3 a.m. to sob, they savor a unique joy with the coming of new mornings, the sight of sunsets. Their very survival is a shared miracle.

"On the plane as we were going down it didn't matter how rich or how poor you were, what color you were or what your religion was, where you came from or where you were going," says Garry Priest, 24, of Denver. "We all drew strength from each other, we were all in it together. ... As the plane crashed, everybody was special."

The DC-10 was headed to Chicago from Denver when it attempted an emergency landing at the Sioux Gateway Airport. The jet flipped once and burst into flames. Forty-five minutes before impact, the crew had lost all steering control when the tail engine shattered, spewing out titanium fan blades and chunks of metal that severed hydraulic lines.

Many victims were trapped in the charred fuselage. Some, dazed and burned, walked or crawled to safety. Others were found in 4-foot-high corn, still buckled in seat belts.

Dozens of survivors will gather Thursday to pay tribute to Haynes' crew and to the rescuers and townsfolk who opened their hearts and their homes to them.

Though each has a unique memory of that terrible day that bonded them for life, they're all amazed they are alive, and wonder why.

• • •

Rod Vetter, a 40-year-old former Navy flyer who logged more than 300,000 miles with United before the crash, now hesitates before commiting to a business trip. Even everyday trips downtown can be a strain.

"I have a fear of things falling and things happening that are out of my control," he says.

"I never had the fear driving on the interstate of a bridge collapsing when I was driving underneath it. I have a fear driving into downtown Chicago ... (wondering) what if a car jumps the guardrail and goes into my lane? Just weird things like that."

Vetter still thinks of that day frequently.

"There's a lot of things that key in the thought of the crash, whether it's black smoke, loud noise, screeching brakes, the smell of burning plastic," says Vetter, who owns an import-export electronics company in the Chicago suburb of Arlington Heights.

Kate Wolfe Bressieux hired a handyman to fix her front steps, inspect her washing machine and dryer for electrical shorts, and repair anything else around her house he thought might be a safety problem. By her own description she "freaked out" after a fire in her basement last Christmas.

A 36-year-old organizational development consultant, Ms. Wolfe Bressieux is unemployed and recently separated from her husband.

Days before any trip, she has nightmares that her car will turn over and burst in flames.

"My life has been in total disarray since the crash. I'm having real difficulty in putting things back together. I'm a very extroverted person so I'm amazed I've become so isolated and withdrawn.

"When you are sitting next to someone and five minutes later they are dead and you aren't, you wonder why you aren't. Having come that close to my own vulnerability, I don't want to be that vulnerable again."

Mary Kahl doesn't remember the final moments before the crash. But the tragedy turned her life upside down.

"It took me at least six months before I was able to get back to my normal frame of thinking. I found it very difficult handling my job," says Mrs. Kahl, a teacher, who with her husband, James, and son, Jimmy, 15, all survived. They live in North Huntingdon, Pa.

Her son refuses to talk about the crash.

"I still think we have some problems looming here," she says. She, too, has had trouble discussing it.

"It's hard to go back and think about what happened to all those people. We are the lucky ones. We don't have the physical scars to deal with. There are a lot of people out there with a lot more pain than what we're suffering."

"Every time I hear about a plane crashing or a plane in trouble landing, even trains bother me ... it just seems like a feeling of terror that comes over you," she says.

Jerry Schemmel has stayed in touch with the family of 1-year-old Sabrina Michaelson, the girl he ran back inside the burning plane to save.

Sabrina, of West Chester, Ohio, had been thrown through the air and separated from her mother, father and two brothers. Her cries caught Schemmel's ear as he fled.

"I was tested a little bit, so that has made me feel better. If I'd heard the crying and not gone back into the plane I would have had terrible guilt feelings. But you'd be surprised how many people would have done what I did," says Schemmel, 30, of Denver.

In the past year, Lori Michaelson, 36, has turned from survivor to crusader — lobbying for mandatory infant seats on planes.

"I'm trying just to go on. ... Instead of going overboard and spoiling your kids, you try not to overcompensate in your life. ...

"You try to consciously focus on each day and realize how out of control your life is ... how rapidly things can change. You think you're creating your own destiny in your life and you're not," the mother of three says.

Major disasters rehash all the hurt, she says. And even normal child's play can cause problems.

"The oddest things come out," she says. A child brought over a cap gun once and her son, Andrew, "got really upset. He didn't want him to use it. It smelled like a burning airplane."

And 23-month-old Sabrina?

"She's learned to talk ... and started walking. She has been running ever since."

While many things have changed — including modification of DC-10s and an effort to require use of infant seats — the "heroes" remain reluctant to accept praise.

By Roger Munns
Associated Press Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa — There have been big changes — DC-10s have been modified. There have been small developments — infant seats soon may be mandated for the airlines' littlest passengers.

Much has happened in the year since United Flight 232 came to a fiery, cartwheeling end in Sioux City, killing 112, but one thing is unchanged: Heroes still are unwilling to take credit for valiant acts that saved 184 lives.

Capt. Al C. Haynes, who with his crew and the help of another United pilot on board struggled for nearly 45 minutes to control the balky jumbo jet, is refusing requests for interviews. Haynes, who has returned to flying, gets notes from passengers on almost every flight now.

"He takes it in good stride. He doesn't want to be seen as a hero. It was a team effort," said United spokesman Rob Doughty.

Three of four members of the cockpit crew, including Haynes, are back in the air, as are seven of the eight surviving flight attendants.

Firefighters, emergency medical technicians, doctors, nurses and the townspeople of Sioux City, lauded for their response to the crash, its victims and survivors, say enough has been said.

"There are no heroes," said Shirley Brown, Sioux City's assistant city manager. "The people genuinely believe that they just did their jobs that day. They did them well, they were coordinated and they had rehearsed, but they simply did what they had practiced.

Accolades keep coming. More than 100 communities have requested copies of Sioux City's disaster preparedness plan, Ms. Brown said.

"For us, it was our job," said Terry Schmidt, training officer for the Sioux City Fire Department. "But the community, it wasn't their job. It was just the right thing to do. We're kind of proud of that."

A reunion of passengers, crew and rescuers is scheduled for Thursday, the anniversary of the crash; a memorial has been commissioned for those who died.

Meanwhile, the National Transportation Safety Board has proposed something of a living memorial — it has recommended infant safety seats be required on airliners.

The Association of Flight Attendants has said one of the victims, 23-month-old Evan Tsau, of Albuquerque, N.M., might have lived if the crash had not wrenched him away from his mother, who survived.

There are countless other reminders of the disaster, from the nightmares of the survivors to the balance sheets of United's insurance carrier, which has paid an average of about $45,000 in damage settlements to more than 40 passengers or to estates of passengers who died.

Dozens of other passengers have sued, saying they want a jury to determine damages, and others are seeking punitive damages against the airline, the airplane manufacturer and engine manufacturer. No trials are scheduled.

The National Transportation Safety Board has not issued its official report on the crash, but NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz said the titanium fan disk in the rear engine separated, throwing engine parts like shrapnel through the tail assembly and severing all three independent hydraulic systems.

Since the crash, the Federal Aviation Administration has ordered a new kind of engine inspection in hopes of detecting flaws in the titanium disk.

The inspection has not revealed any more flaws, although six disks made from the same titanium billet have been removed from service.

All of the General Electric-built engines were given on-wing inspections. Before the end of this year, all engines must be removed and disks placed in a water bath for separate ultrasonic inspections.

"Of the 287 (domestic) jets, there are 31 disks that have yet to be inspected in what we call the immersion tests," said Bob Guyotte of the FAA's regional office in Burlington, Mass. None has failed to pass, he said.

But the NTSB isn't so sure. On June 18, it urged the FAA to order yet another test in which electrical current is used to detect cracks. United Air Lines already is using the method every time it inspects disks on its fleet.

By July 20, 1991 — two years and a day after the crash — domestic carriers must install devices to prevent a catastrophic loss of hydraulic fluid in the No. 3 hydraulic system, the FAA has ruled.

Should the valve kick in, pilots would lose control of the rudder and the elevators, but pilots still would be able to operate all wing controls and to control the angle at which the plane enters the air stream.

"It was tested in a simulator and then actually installed in an aircraft and flight-tested. It was found to work very well," said McDonnell Douglas spokeswoman Elaine Bendel.

Without those controls, Flight 232 couldn't be steered to a runway and was flying at least 60 mph faster than a normal approach. Haynes accelerated his remaining wing engines to guide the crippled plane to Sioux City.

The company has sent 84 repair kits to 14 customers worldwide so far, Ms. Bendel said. A total of 428 DC-10s still are active worldwide. United has 55 DC-10s and has installed the devices — at an estimated cost of $37,800 per plane — in about half of them.

Still, the debate continues on the safety of the DC-10. John Galipault, president of Aviation Safety Institute of Worthington, Ohio, said, "It's probably got the worst safety record of all the wide-bodies."

Using figures compiled by the Aviation Information Services Limited of London, Galipault said 17 DC-10s have been lost over the years, twice the rate for Boeing 747s and Lockheed L-1011s. Comparisons on fatalities per million flight hours also are not favorable for the DC-10, he said, with 74 for that airplane, 66 for the Lockheed plane and 61 for Boeing's.

Ms. Bendel blamed hangar fires, terrorist attacks and other causes for the 17 lost airplanes, saying they had nothing to do with the design of the plane. Galipault "has a personal vendetta against the DC-10, for whatever reason," she said.

In the 45 days after the crash, only 400 of some 1.8 million United passengers asked to steer away from DC-10s. But McDonnell Douglas no longer makes the plane; the last one was delivered a week after the crash, and the company is concentrating its efforts on a replacement, the MD-11.

Scaffolding may hasten freeway opening

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Workers erected metal scaffolding Saturday to shore up a subway tunnel that partially caved in during a 1,500-degree fire and was threatening the collapse of a stretch of downtown freeway.

The 1½-mile stretch of the Hollywood Freeway was closed for a second day because of fears it would collapse under the vibrations of cars and trucks.

The subway line is part of a 150-mile rail grid planned for Los Angeles. Mayor Tom Bradley on Saturday inaugurated the first stretch of the system, a 22-mile electric commuter train line beteeen downtown Los Angeles and Long Beach.

The tunnel blaze broke out shortly before 2 a.m. Friday and portions still smoldered Saturday afternoon.

The cause remained unknown, but deputy Fire Chief Ray Rojo said there were no indications of arson. Six workers in a nearby tunnel smelled smoke when the fire broke out and escaped unharmed. Damage was put at $5 million.

About 250 feet of the tunnel runs under the freeway, which is part of U.S. Highway 101. The portion under the freeway is surrounded by an 8-foot-thick band of chemically treated concrete or grout; the failed portion was not. Officials said that made all the difference: the cave-in stopped just 10 feet from the freeway.

"The chemical grout prevented a cave-in," said Dave Roper, deputy district operations director with the California Department of Transportation. "The one area that wasn't chemically grouted collapsed. That tells us something."

Traffic chaos reigned on Friday, and authorities hoped to have the freeway open for the Monday commute. About 250,000 vehicles use the route daily.

The contractor did not use grout on the section that collapsed because it was topped by vacant land, Roper said. In the collapsed portions, the blaze ate away wood supports and about 16 feet of earth and metal framing tumbled down.

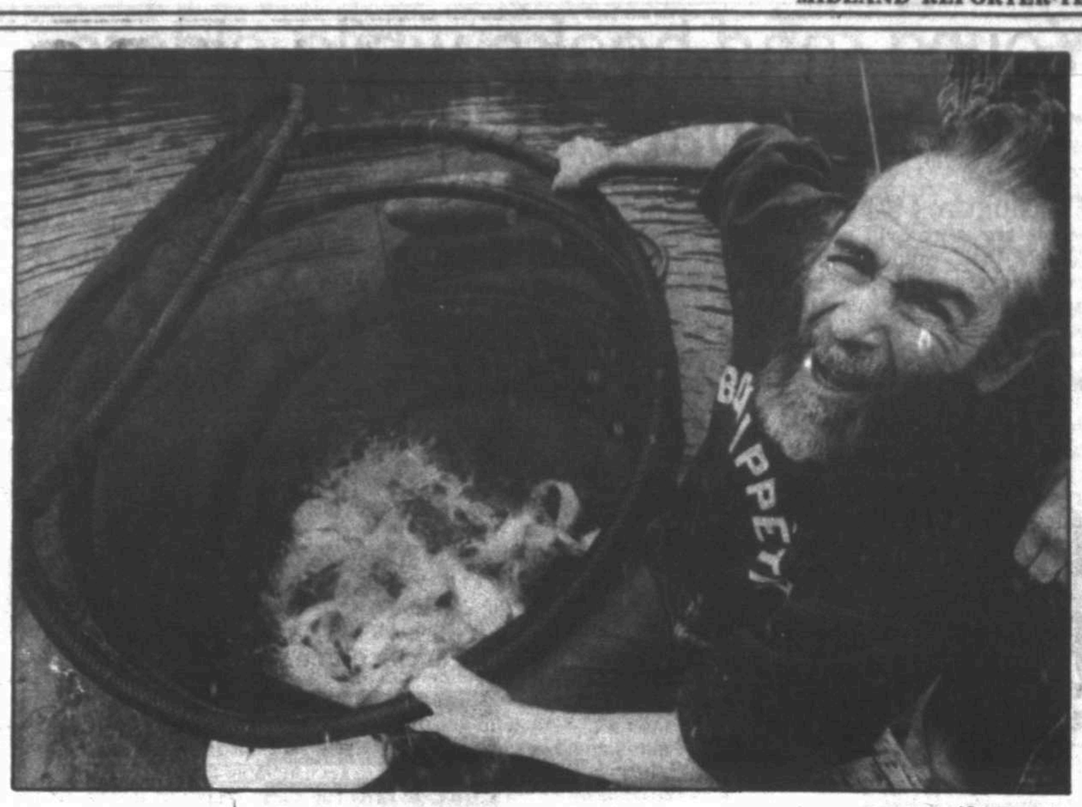

Timbers that were part of the tunnel support system continued to smolder Saturday as firefighters let embers burn themselves out. The tunnel's metal ribs stayed intact but some twisted from the intense heat of the blaze, which hit 1,500 degrees.

Despite the fire, the $1.3 billion, 4-mile Metro Rail system, which is 18 months behind schedule, will open as planned in September 1993, said Al Perdon, assistant general manager for Southern California Rapid Transit District.

The damaged tunnel is only a spur, not the main tube that will transport passengers in trains, official said. Even if the damaged tunnel isn't fixed in time, a parallel tunnel can be used temporarily in its place, Perdon said.

Fish farmer Joshua Brickenstein displays some of his crop, Tilapia — also know as St. Peter's Fish — in a pond on his Appalachian Mountains farm in Metz, W. Va. He is among a growing number of landlocked farmers turning to fish as an alternative to traditional corps like corn, wheat and hay.

Have you been fishing for a new cash crop?

EDITOR'S NOTE: The nation's growing appetite for fish has produced thriving catfish farms in the Deep South and trout farms in the Northwest. Now cashing in on the trend are farmers in Appalachia who are growing bass and salmon insted of corn and wheat.

By Matt Harvey
Associated Press Writer

METZ, W.Va. — Joshua Brickenstein's home looks like the other rugged wooden dwellings in these tree-covered hills of Appalachia, deep in coal country.

But inside he has signs, books and even a stain-glassed window that proclaim fish, not coal or cattle, is king here.

Brickenstein is a farmer, a fish farmer. His cash crops are striped bass, coho salmon and tilapia. He is one of a growing number of landlocked farmers turning to fish as an alternative to such traditional crops as corn, wheat and hay.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture says the market for farm-produced fish is growing.

"The 1990s should be an important decade for growth," the U.S.D.A. said recently. "World population gains and limits on wild catch from the oceans should increase the demand for aquaculture products."

The government says increased fish consumption in the United States will be met through more imports and more farmers like Brickenstein.

David Harvey, a U.S.D.A. agricultural economist in Washington, D.C., specializing in aquaculture, said about one in every 10 fish eaten by Americans now comes from fish farms.

Aquaculture thrives in states such as Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas, where the Mississippi River and its delta provides excellent conditions for catfish farming.

It also is successful in Western states such as Idaho and Montana, where natural conditions make it profitable to raise trout.

Joseph A. Marshall, associate biology professor at West Virginia University, said the practice is most popular in China, where one out of every four fish eaten comes from a farm. Asians first began growing their own fish about 4,000 years ago.

Marshall said fish farming is growing because ocean fishermen are finding catches harder to come by.

Fish are cheaper to feed than livestock, he says. It takes up to 9 pounds of feed for each pound of beef produced, compared with up to 1 pound of feed for each pound of fish produced, he says.

In addition, he says many consumers are reluctant to buy fresh-caught fish for fear of pollution contamination.

"You don't know what you're getting when you eat ocean-caught fish," he says. "You have no idea what the mercury levels are in many cases. There are no checks for many fish caught out of the country."

Local restaurants also prefer a good nearby source of fresh fish, he says.

"When stores label fish 'fresh,' that only means it hasn't been frozen," Marshall says. "Big stores have week-old fish and they call it fresh. You can taste the difference."

Brickenstein's 98-acre farm, about 80 miles southwest of Pittsburgh, includes two 2,000-gallon indoor tanks, which look like above-ground swimming pools and sound like giant aquariums.

The tanks are used to keep young fish alive when winter weather sours. Later, maturing fish are transferred to outdoor farm ponds, where they are submerged in 4-by-4-foot cages that ensure their food stays in one place.

Brickenstein, 62, took up fish farming six years ago after retiring as a self-employed plastics manufacturer in Tel Aviv, Israel, and Pittsburgh. He also grows raspberries on his farm, which he admits is more a hobby supplemented by money he accumulated as a businessman.

Western governors hold annual meeting in Fargo

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — American governors meet with their Canadian counterparts this week to strengthen their ties during this period of uncertainty in Canada.

Governors from 12 western states, along with the governor of American Samoa, begin their three-day conference on Sunday.

The highlight will be a meeting Monday of Premiers Gary Filmon of Manitoba and Grant Devine of Saskatchewan. Representatives from Alberta also will attend.

Premier Bill Vander Zalm of British Columbia was invited but said he was too busy to attend.

North Dakota Gov. George Sinner, this year's Western Governors' Associaiton chairman, said the western United States has much in common with western Canada, and together they can make the West strong.

"We need them, and they need us. We need each other," Sinner said.

The failure of the Meech Lake accord to win legislative approval last month has left Canadians in confusion and political limbo, Sinner said. The accord, a package of constitutional amendments, would have conferred a special constitutional status on Quebec. Canadians are concerned that its failure might spur a Quebec push for independence.

"We do a lot of work (with Canadians) already. We have border commissions to resolve problems. We have the free trade agreement, which God knows has its imperfections. Hopefully, we can build on that."

— North Dakota Gov. George Sinner, Western Governor's Association chairman

"There were lots of forces at work to tie the western states to the western provinces, but all those forces have been sharpened now with the uncertainty that prevails in Canada," Sinner said.

South Dakota Gov. George Mickelson, who will succeed Sinner as WGA chairman next year, said he hoped discussion of such cross-border issues as trade, tourism, the environment and energy would lead to stronger ties between the countries.

"We do a lot of work (with Canadians) already," Sinner said. "We have border commissions to resolve problems. We have the free trade agreement, which God knows has its imperfections. Hopefully, we can build on that."

The WGA has proposed an office in Canada. A report to be presented at this week's conference recommends locating the office in Ottawa, the Canadian capital.

Sinner, who favors locating the office in western Canada, said he was uncertain whether the governors would decide on the location this week.

One conference session will feature a discussion involving the governors and five authors and thinkers on the western region. The authors have prepared a book of essays for the group called "Beyond the Mythic West."

The governors also will discuss new policy directions in water and drought management, waste disposal, state and regional efforts to develop international trade and relations with Indians.

Central Oregon fire spreads rapidly

Associated Press

An Oregon forest fire that had been contained leaped fire lines and had burned 2,000 acres as of Saturday, and hot, dry weather created a danger that the blaze could continue to spread.

Firefighters in southern California conquered a 7,000-acre brush fire started by a teen-ager's model rocket, and authorities warned that the boy's parents might get the bill.

In Washington state, U.S. Forest Service spokesman Ron Dehart said most of the 55 small lightning fires in remote areas of the Mount Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest had either been put out or were under attack. They totaled less than 60 acres.

The Oregon fire, named Delicious, had been contained at 600 acres Friday but late afternoon wind carried embers across a fire line and the flames spread quickly, said Doug Decker of the Oregon Department of Forestry.

There were 400 people on the fire lines Saturday, he said.

Decker said no homes were in immediate danger from the fire about six miles south of Sisters, but firefighters were keeping their eyes on a ranch toward which the blaze was moving.

The fire was touched off Tuesday night by lightning. After smouldering for two days, it grew rapidly Thursday, moving through brush and pine forests on private land northwest of Tumalo Reservoir.

Lightning storms last week started a total of 300 fires around Oregon, said Jim Fisher of the Oregon Department of Forestry.

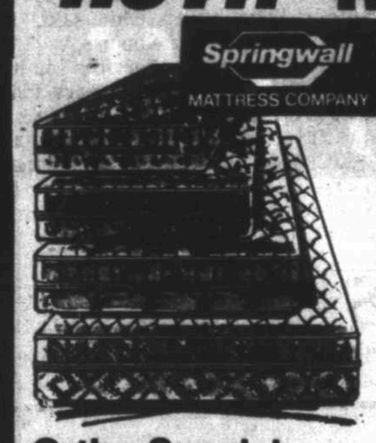

In southern California's Orange County, some 700 firefighters took advantage of high humidity and calm wind to surround the 7,000-acre fire Friday. About 150 firefighters remained Saturday to douse hot spots, said fire department spokeswoman Maria Sobol.

A 15-year-old boy was arrested for investigation of unlawful use of a model rocket. It is illegal for a minor to use such rockets without supervision, officials said.

The cost of battling the blaze that began Thursday in Chino Hills State Park, 40 miles southeast of Los Angeles, could exceed $500,000, and the 15-year-old's parents may get the bill, said Orange County fire Capt. Dan Young.

"The law does allow us to go for cost recovery," Young said. "People have to recognize they can be accountable for these actions."

Neighborhood fears killer

NEW YORK (AP) — Nowhere does the threat of the Zodiac gunman loom larger than in the working-class neighborhood where the latest in a long line of mad city criminals claimed his first three victims.

"I worry about my husband. When he leaves, I wonder, 'Will he come back alive again?' " said Bernice Leach, who lives on the street where the Zodiac gunman shot his second victim on March 29.

The shootings have sparked the city's largest manhunt since the search for "Son of Sam" serial killer David Berkowitz in the late 1970s. Despite the small number of victims, some New Yorkers are genuinely worried about the killer in their midst and the probability he will strike again.

No neighborhood has felt the gunman's presence more keenly than the adjoining areas of Woodhaven in the Queens borough and East New York in Brooklyn, where the gunman struck three times in a six-block stretch.

Late-night travelers who use the subway are being met by friends. Red-bereted Guardian Angels patrol the streets. People call police if they see a stranger fitting Zodiac's description.

Egg poacher jailed

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A man who received the state's stiffest sentence for stealing sea turtle eggs was back in jail Saturday, after dropping a knapsack containing 127 eggs, authorities said.

Alvin George Keel, 46, gave an alias when he was arrested Friday, something he has done in the past to keep police from linking him to turtle egg poaching cases, officials said.

But an officer involved in Keel's arrest last year recognized him after his latest arrest, spoiling the alias ruse.

Keel was held on $500 bail Saturday on charges of disturbing marine turtle eggs, resisting arrest without violence and obstructing officers, said police officer Craig Gunkel.

Gunkel said he expected the case to be turned over to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, because of harsher sentences possible under federal wildlife protection laws.

Bill of Rights issue?

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A woman protesting a ban on skimpy bathing suits was arrested Saturday when she stripped down to a copy of the Bill of Rights.

Tonianne Wyner, 43, was charged with disorderly conduct by Florida Park Service officers after she refused to get dressed and urged onlookers to disrobe, said Randy Lewis, a Department of Natural Resources spokesman.

Lewis said the parchment Bill of Rights barely covered Ms. Wyner's chest and abdomen.

Ms. Wyner had led about a dozen nudists' rights demonstrators at John D. McArthur State Park, who objected to a ban on thong-style swimsuits and also spoke out against First Amendment abridgements.

Free-speech debate recently has blossomed in Florida following the arrests on obscenity charges of members of the 2 Live Crew rap-music group over their lyrics, a crackdown on adult video rentals and revised swimsuit rules.

Woman battles debt

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Each year, 76-year-old Gudrun Hertsgaard does what she can to reduce the national debt.

This year, she wrote out a check for $300, leaving the balance at roughly $3,000,000,000,000, give or take a few dozen billion.

Hertsgaard sent her money to the U.S. Treasury through Citizens for a Debt-Free America, a network of people who chip away at the national debt a few dollars at a time.

Just the interest on the debt this year will approach $200 billion, about 15 percent of the federal budget. Friends tell Hertsgaard her annual gestures are futile, but she is undismayed.

"I tend to think small anyway," she said. "I look at the pennies. I try not to think of the millions and billions and trillions."

Nationwide, 2,345 people contributed more than $4.2 million in the past five years toward retiring the debt, including 29 Minnesotans who gave $26,301.

Jogger case 'weak'

NEW YORK (AP) — The case against three teen-agers charged with raping a jogger in Central Park has been greatly weakened by the government's failure to link the suspects through DNA samples, a defense lawyer said.

An FBI expert testified Friday that semen samples taken from the body and clothes of the victim, an investment banker, did not match up in DNA testing with samples provided by the three defendants.

The only sample that was linked to any of 15 people who submitted to the DNA testing came from the jogger's shorts and belonged to her boyfriend, said Special Agent Dwight Adams of the FBI's DNA Analysis Unit in Dallas.

The 15 who submitted sambles included the defendants, the boyfriend and potential witnesses at the trial in criminal court.

Mission board blamed

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A jury has decided the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board should pay $1.56 million to a former missionary's children who said they were abused by their father while living overseas.

One of the children had told the father's supervisor about the abuse while the family was living in Africa. The official confronted the missionary, who promised but failed to get counseling and tell his wife.

The Richmond-based board broke its promise to provide for the health, safety and welfare of the family by not telling the mother of the abuse, said John C. Lowe of Charlottesville, the children's attorney.

If the board had told her promptly, she could have obtained treatment for the children, and much of the abuse of the younger children would have been avoided, Lowe said.

Young read books while elders read newspapers, study shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Older people are more avid newspaper readers than young people, but the young are more apt to be reading books, according to a study released Sunday.

Those who get their news from newspapers appear to be better informed than those who rely on radio, but not necessarily better informed than television news watchers. And people with children are more likely to watch the Sunday morning news interview shows on television than people without.

These tidbits are from a new study by the Times Mirror Center for the People and the Press called "The American Media: Who Reads, Who Watches, Who Listens, Who Cares."

The study divides people into four groups based on the interest they show in the news.

Twelve percent are news sophisticates who form the regular audience of National Public Radio, public television's "MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour" and such magazines as the Atlantic, Harpers and the New Yorker.

Eight percent do not read a daily newspaper or watch or listen to the news regularly.

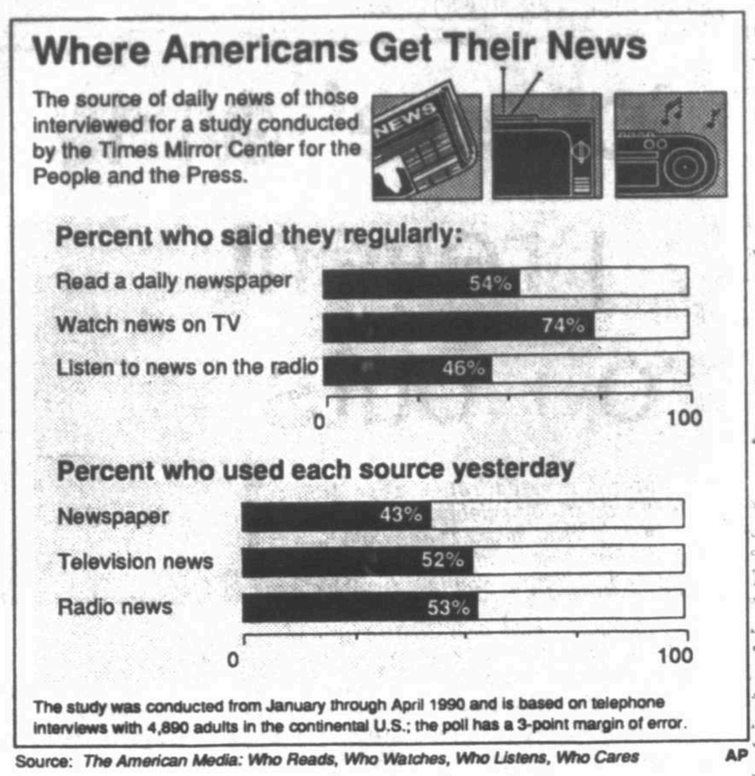

Another 39 percent don't quite make news sophisticate but nevertheless read a news magazine or a major metropolitan daily newspaper or watch Sunday morning interview shows or Cable News Network. They are called serious news consumers.

The remaining 41 percent, the largest group, are moderate consumers who regularly read a daily paper or watch or listen to the news.

Forty-one percent of the non-news users and 16 percent of the news sophisticates are in the 18-29 age bracket.

The analysis was based on 4,890 telephone interviews conducted in the first four months of this year. The margin of error was plus or minus 3 percentage points.

The survey shows that 24 percent in 18-29 bracket said they had read a daily newspaper the previous day. This rose to 61 percent for persons over 80. The percentage increased steadily with age, except for a slight slump among people in their 70s.

Source: The American Media: Who Reads, Who Watches, Who Listens, Who Cares AP

Forty-three percent of people under 30, one of every two people in their 30s and 40s and 44 percent of people 50 and over said they listened to news on the radio regularly.

For television, the percentages were 63 percent under 30, 71 percent in the 30s and 40s and 84 percent at age 50 and over.

Five percent of childless people said they watched the Sunday interview programs regularly. This rose to 11 percent for married couples with children and 12 percent for single parents.

Thirty-eight percent of people 18 to 29 said they were reading a novel or other book. This increased to 39 percent among people in their 30s and 41 percent for readers in their 40s.

After that it dropped off to 35 percent for the 50s and 70s, 31 percent for the 60s and 29 percent for people over 80.

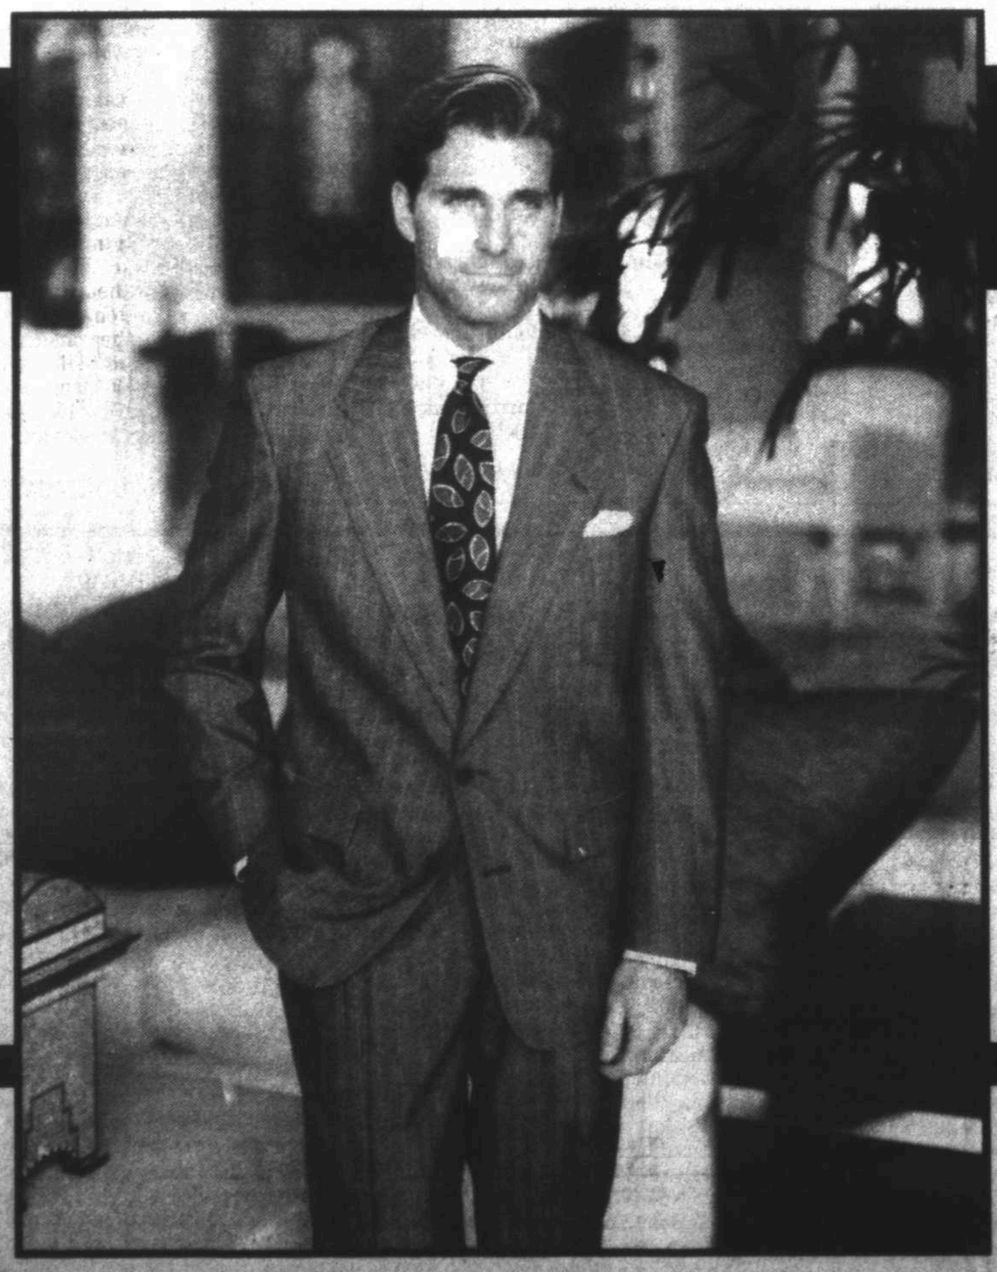

The habit of watching CNN regularly rose from 21 percent in the youngest age bracket to 28 percent for people in their 50s and 60s. It dropped to 22 percent for viewers over 70.

Among people who had spent one hour or more reading a daily newspaper on the previous day, 20 percent correctly identified Czechoslovakian President Vaclav Havel, compared with 16 percent for those who spent an hour or more watching television news and 11 percent for those who spent that much time listening to news on the radio.

In the same survey, 90 percent of the newspaper readers, 92 percent of the television watchers and 82 percent of the radio listeners knew where Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega took refuge.

Forty-seven percent of readers, 50 percent of watchers and 34 percent of listeners knew how the control of the Panama Canal will change.

'College' aims to prevent drop outs

A computer-generated robot shoots a pellet destined to clobber the head of a playful bear. The pellet can be destroyed — and the bear saved — if a dutiful youngster rapidly types in the appropriate letters to match those on the screen. "Letter D, Letter D," one youngster cries out to his partner. But too late, the pellet smacks Stickybear on the head and the computer squawks at the players. Undaunted, the boys set the game up again. This time they score some points and are rewarded by the sight of the bear wiggling joyfully to the tune of a merry computer jingle.

Although playing with computers sounds all fun and games, it is serious business for 41 8- and 9-year-olds enrolled in "DeZavala College" for a seven-week course. The language enrichment program is designed to prevent future drop outs.

It hardly seems possible that one could be a failure at such a young age, but studies suggest initial roadblocks may lead to lifelong academic frustration, according to Delores Medrano, DeZavala Elementary School principal.

Pupils enrolled in the program — those who have completed first grade — were targeted as at risk students by their teachers.

"Rather than having an extended vacation, these students are preparing to perform at their grade level," Ms. Medrano said. She said the progam was named DeZavala College to foster interest in "higher levels of learning and to promote the idea of going to college."

Children usually dread the idea of going to summer school, but the "collegians" said "it was fun" and "a whole lot better than being bored at home."

Ms. Medrano said the computer

Attendance at this year's third annual Mex-Tex Menudo Cookoff is expected to triple past crowds said Elvia Hernandez, executive vice president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce which sponsors the three-day event continues through today.

"It has been a fantastic success," said Charlene Wurtz, president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. "It is our biggest and best-attended event to date."

Added to the Tex-Mex cooking extravaganza, which expanded from a one-day affair the last two years, were a chili and fajita cookoff, the Pride of Texas Carnival, a parade, Hispanic beauty contest and jalapeno eating contest.

Cooks from throughout the Permian Basin participated in the fajita and chili cooking Saturday, and are expected for the Menudo cookoff today.

In the fajita cooking competition, Ed Kelly, who was also chief judge, was first place winner. Mobil's Pegasus Cooking Team headed by Lambert Borrejo of Midkiff was second and Art Sanchez of Midland was third.

In the chili competition — sanctioned by Chili Appreciation Society International — 10 places were awarded with 10th through fourth place each receiving one point toward quali-

Academy will teach people about police

■ Citizens Police Academy will inform Midlanders the what, why and how of the local police department.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Just how close to reality are T.J. Hooker, Sonny Crockett or Colombo to real-life police officers?

"TV is great for entertainment but it's just entertainment. It's based loosely on facts in most shows," Cpl. Jim White of the Midland Police Department said.

Midland police hope 30 people will have a better understanding of officers and their work than what they see on television after attending an upcoming Citizens Police Academy, sponsored by the department's Community Relations Division.

"The sole purpose is to educate the people we work for — the citizens ... to give them an idea of what we do," White said.

The program, which is free, is open to anyone at least 17 years old who lives and works in Midland, except convicted felons and people who have an active warrant out for their arrest.

The academy — Midland's third — will begin Aug. 21 for three hours every Tuesday night for 11 weeks and one Saturday.

Midland-based marshal retiring

Boggs says guarding witnesses, 'high-threat' trials made job interesting

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Deputy U.S. Marshal Gail Boggs recalls with pleasure the "interesting" details to which he has been assigned during his 20 years in the marshal's service.

"The interesting ones were where we were guarding protected government witnesses connected with the Mafia," Boggs said in an interview last week. "They were always interesting — you had to stay alert.

"And the high-threat trials. They were always interesting."

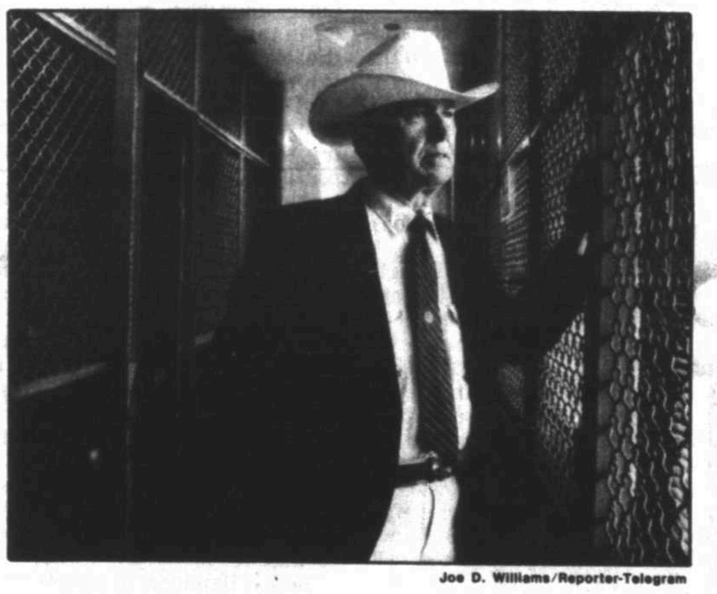

Recently returned from Tulsa, Okla., where he helped provide security at the trial of a Colombian drug kingpin, Boggs probably has performed his final out-of-town assignment for the U.S. Marshals.

Boggs, 62, retires at the end of the month and has been removed from the marshals' travel rotation.

But he said that's all right with him, since it probably will take the better part of July to clean out his desk and fill out his retirement paperwork.

"I guess I'm going to miss it," Boggs said as he shuffled through the mountain of files strewn about his office on the second floor of the Midland Federal Courthouse. "I'll miss coming to work and seeing the people that I've come in contact with every day for years. I'll miss the camraderie with the other agents and other officers."

Bill Jonas, U.S. Marshal for the Western District of Texas, said he will certainly miss Boggs.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Deputy U.S. Marshal Gail Boggs of Midland is looking ahead to retirement from the marshal's service after 20 years.

"I'll miss his experience and his organizational ability," Jonas said from San Antonio last week. "He has one of the best organized offices in the business. It's an unusual talent. Ever since I have known him he has done a terrific job."

That job entails providing security for federal court trials, serving federal warrants, tracking down bond jumpers, protecting federal witnesses and transporting and housing prisoners awaiting federal trial.

On a given day in U.S. Chief District Judge Lucius Bunton's Midland courtroom, Boggs can be seen escorting jurors in and out of the courtroom, calling witnesses and enforcing Bunton's "coat and tie" dress code.

"(Judge Bunton) is one of the finest judges I've ever worked with and we've got a rapport," Boggs said. "He's a very humorous and hard-working judge. He understands our operation. He's never too busy that he can't see you on some type of problem. ... I'm going to miss him."

Boggs first came to Midland in 1980, after serving with the marshal's service in Del Rio.

He said he joined the marshals in 1970, after a few years as a civilian security officer for the Air Force and the Federal Aviation Administration and 11 years as an Indiana state trooper.

"I had always wanted to be in law enforcement and prior to that I was a lineman for a power company," Boggs said. "They didn't have no cherry pickers back in them days. You climb them poles. And I said, 'There's got to be an easier way to make a living than this.' "

His prior experience in law enforcement, he said, prepared him for the marshal's service.

"Today they're leaning toward the young college graduate with no previous police experience," Boggs said. Although the marshals' academy in Glencoe, Ga., has a "good curriculum," Boggs said school is no substitute for experience.

"I feel like it took me five years ... to learn the overall operation of the marshal's service and to really do my job," he said. "You've got to know how to talk to people in terms that they can understand. There are occasions when the young fella comes on a little bit too strong.

"You have people who might be easily irritated and might want to take that badge off of you."

Boggs admits that the marshal's service can be dangerous, and serving arrest warrants is probably the most dangerous part of the job.

Vets gather to talk about Vietnam

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Vietnam War veterans gathered this weekend for a sort of "family reunion," even though some of them had never before met.

But they had much in common. Even so, their war experiences and perceptions varied as much as their personalities.

"When I walk up to a bunch of veterans, it's like I know everybody," said Harry Gilchrest, a 43-year-old ex-paratrooper who served in Vietnam in 1966.

The veterans, who mostly were teen-agers when they were shipped overseas to fight in a war that frustrated the nation, its soldiers and its people, today are in their late 30s and early 40s.

On the shore of Moss Creek Lake east of Big Spring, many of the veterans had donned jungle-camouflage garb and wore war ribbons, mementos both sentimental and caustic, and prisoner-of-war (POW) and missing-in-action (MIA) medals. Mostly, they just rapped.

They built a campfire, made coffee, pitched tents and flew flags — the United States' Old Glory, the South Vietnamese flags and the POW-MIA flag.

But the soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines didn't rendezvous to rehash the war.

"We have the same things in common," said Gilchrest, who counsels troubled veterans in the Waco area. "You had the same problems over there, and you got

Motorcycle riding gives sense of power, freedom

Marlon Brando rode one in a couple of his early films. So did Michael Parks. And if James Dean didn't, he should have. But I suppose it was the movie "Easy Rider" that really made motorcycle riding fashionable.

Ott

The vision of Peter Fonda and Dennis Hopper, with their long hair blowing in the wind, cruising cross-country on their massive choppers made a romantic impression on much of America's youth. The "rebel without a cause" syndrome was alive and well again.

Young men (and women, too) dreamed of spending several months on the road with only their bikes and a handful of worldly possessions. It was their way of searching for the truth.

America's youth can be very impressionable at times. Naive, too. But even for those of us who didn't own a motorcycle, the dream was still there. It was a passive dream, but one that always lurked in the shadows of our minds.

We longed for the freedom that is so closely associated with motorcycle riding, the carefree look that bikers always seem to have. We sometimes made cutting remarks about "those outlaws," but deep down we envied them.

That's why I finally succumbed to the temptation recently and accepted an invitation from a friend to share a brief ride on his bike. It was only for 30 minutes or so, but in that limited time I could sense exhiliration that people must feel as they guide their motorcycles across the highways of America.

My friend has a big bike, the kind on which you travel. A Kawasaki 900, I think he said. It must be impressive because when we made a brief pit stop at the gas station, several kids wandered over to ooh and aah at the machine.

A couple of them asked me questions about it but I just shrugged and looked the other way, too embarrassed to admit I didn't have the slightest idea what they were talking about.

Finally my friend paid for his purchase and we were ready to hit the road. He was dressed like most people you see on motorcycles ... faded jeans, boots, a pullover T-shirt and a light jacket. He had a helmet pulled securely over his head and sunglasses.

I, on the other hand, was nattily attired in dress slacks, penny loafers, a short-sleeve cotton shirt, tweed sports coat and a helmet featuring a photograph of a cotton field on its side. Marlon Brando, I wasn't.

Still, our journey began.

We headed south on the Rankin Highway. My friend was driving and I was on the back, where I offered foolish suggestions about where we should go. Rio de Janeiro kept coming to mind.

My friend wisely ignored me and I settled back to enjoy the ride. Just as I had been told, the two overriding emotions felt were power and freedom — power that you are in complete control of your world and freedom to snub your nose at the boring conventionalities that dictate today's society. The combination of the two emotions is like a drug coursing through your veins.

I looked out upon the vast ranchland, read road signs and watched the expressions on people's faces as they passed us in their cars, wondering if they were just a little bit jealous. I was lost in my thoughts and very happy. My mind briefly flashed back to a book I had been reading, one in which a 30-year-old writer from New York drops everything he's doing and starts out on a cross-country journey of America. He was an idealistic young man who wanted to see and experience everything ... right now. And for a few glorious minutes I did too.

Suddenly my friend glanced over his shoulder and shouted, "Have you ever done a hundred?"

"Nope," I yelled back.

"Want to?"

"Sure. Why not?"

And we did. Little by little, I watched as the needle on the speedometer worked its way toward the century mark. Sixty-five, 70, 75, 80 and finally to 85. We were passing cars as though they were standing still. The wind was blowing so hard in our faces that tears formed in our eyes. I felt good. Still, we went faster. Ninety, 95.

By now the white lines were a total blur and the road signs took on the peculiar appearance of a picket fence. But we were too close to stop now. We pushed it a little harder and within seconds we had made it. One hundred miles per hour. It was a beautiful sensation.

My friend glanced at me again, grinned a marvelously wicked grin and gave me the thumbs up. I nodded in agreement.

And with that we slowed it down to a respectable, and legal, speed. But the surge of energy was still there. The power. The freedom. I wanted to do it again. And again. And again.

I think this is what they call an addiction.

SCHOOL: Computers one part of program

programs have plenty of appeal to today's visual generation. "The children also have an opportunity to make a choice, and get an immediate response," she said.

The principal said ultimately, she would like to have computers with voice capacity. "Hearing words pronounced is critical to reading," Ms. Medrano said. "Of course the computers aren't affordable now. It's just something I envision for the future."

Ms. Medrano emphasized that computers are just one tool being utilized to "teach students more self discipline in how they approach learning." She said that aside from remedial reading, pupils are getting the bonus of learning word processing, typing and how to use a keyboard.

But even more important than computer instruction is the human element involved, Ms. Medrano said. "Diana Boykin, the teacher of the program, has very high expectations and creates a learning environment that makes it possible for every child to succeed."

Ms. Boykin said she is "anxious to monitor the success" of the pupils. "Some of these children will be in my second grade class next year."

Ms. Medrano said the progress of DeZavala College "graduates" will be monitored to study the benefits of the remedial program. "The benefits of the program may not be immediate but I have already seen some attitudes turn around. Some of the children who were quiet are now eagerly participating," she said.

The principal said children who attend the Midland Independent School District-funded program are from the DeZavala area and attend voluntarily. "I'm sure some children would rather be outdoors playing ball. We have to come up with strategies and rewards to keep them coming," Ms. Medrano said.

"I'd rather be here than outside or at home," said Julian Martinez, 8. "I never even saw Stickybear before I came here."

VETERANS: Gathering like family reunion

(From 1B)

the same problems when you came back. Sometimes I go out on suicide calls for veterans."

Gilchrest, who was relaxed just after dawn on Saturday when he was drinking his breakfast, said he simply enjoys going to gatherings for veterans.

"It's like a family reunion," he said. "I ain't never met none of these guys. I like to get around veterans and find out what their feelings are. It helps me to deal with people that I have to deal with in Waco."

In the war, Gilchrest said he "did what I thought was right. They told me there was a war going on. They sent me a draft notice. I didn't want to be drafted, so I enlisted. I volunteered for Vietnam. And I'd do it again if they asked me to" even though, he said, it was a "political war."

Buster Hill, a 40-year-old Midland ex-Marine who helped organize the veterans' "stand-down," as the get-together was called, said the reunion allows the veterans to "talk more freely with each other about things that we really need to talk about.

"These guys were there (in Vietnam). They know. They smelled it."

Hill said he went overseas "with pride. I wanted to go. I didn't know it was going to have the outcome that it did."

The United States, which got involved in the war in an advisory level in the late 1950s, militarily got engrossed in the escalating war in the 1960s and finally pulled out in 1973. Two years later, South Vietnam fell to North Vietnam.

"I'm glad I was one that got to go," Hill said. "And I just wish that the 58,100 (American war dead) had gotten to come back."

More than 58,000 American men and women died in the war, and 365,000 were wounded.

"It was political — capital gains for some people," Hill said of the war.

Terry Dearing, 43, was drafted in 1966 and served in the armored cavalry in Vietnam.

He joined in the reunion to rap. "You don't get too many chances to talk," he said.

And in the veterans' standdown, a term for rest and recreation, "Nobody gets off into the maudlin: 'Oh, we were hurt,'" Dearing said. "Everybody just talks about it and blows smoke and has a good time."

Dearing expressed his grief over the death of American warriors and over the MIAs and the POWs.

"I wish big time there was a lot of people that had come back," he said.

He reflected on the war: "You never forget it. When I went there, I was a kid — 19. When you're a kid, it's not even reality."

He was in a strange war in a foreign land. Then, "all of a sudden," he was ordered to "take that gun. Go kill that person over there."

But in that war, it often was difficult to tell friend from foe — the South Vietnamese from the Vietcong.

And then came the cryptic explanation: " 'Well, that person over there is a 'bad guy.' That (other) one is a 'good guy.' But they both looked the same."

Today, Dearing said he and the others showed up for the weekend outing "to talk about good times, not bad times, good times.

"We're back (from the war)," he said. "We all have to continue our lives."

"(You) try to forget about it," he said, "but you can't."

Midlander Gene Kearns, 40, of Midland was a coxswain in the "brown-water" Navy in Vietnam in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Kearns, who was to be joined by his family at lakeside, came to the outing for the camaraderie, which is "something that has been missing for 20-something years," he said. "And it's finally coming back around — feels good."

Kearns, who lost friends in the war, noted that a lot of veterans are suffering from "post-traumatic stress syndrome (PTSD)," which, in World War II, was called "shell shock."

"It's got a new name now. There's a lot of people who have (war-) connected disabilities."

Kearns said he has been trying to locate some of his war buddies for more than 20 years.

"And I haven't found them," he said. "A few of them are on The Wall (the Vietnam War Memorial), but most of them made it home."

What was an unpopular war recently has been popularized due to Hollywood film-making.

"Hollywood kind of made it popular," Kearns said of the war. "I just wish somebody would get in there and do a real story about it."

War movies may have elements of truth, but "the rest of it is just BS."

But exactly what was the war is "hard to describe," Kearns said, "because there are 3½ million stories to Vietnam, and everybody had a different experience," he said of the Americans who served in Vietnam.

"Everybody felt it differently. Everybody that was there still feels it today," Kearns said. "And it's something I don't think will ever go away."

Being around other Vietnam War veterans has helped Kearns and his family.

His children "see other people, and they don't think Dad is the only 'crazy' in the whole world.

"It has helped my girls to kind of understand. Bringing family to events like this helps. And it helps us by being around other veterans."

POLICE: Department wants to educate people we have in Midland," White said, adding that people who attend the academy will not just learn what and how police do things, but why as well.

Some of the topics to be covered include police training and recruiting, criminal investigations, narcotics, crimes against persons, and penal codes.

Patrol procedures will be taught in the classroom and in the field. Students will be able to ride with an on-duty officer to observe the patrolman at work.

Special services within the department will be discussed including demonstrations from the K-9 Unit and the Special Weapons and Tactics (SWAT) team.

A firearms safety course, with students shooting service-issued guns on the firing range, also will be included.

"Hopefully upon completion of this class (participants will have) a better knowledge of what is going on in the city and what makes up the Midland Police Department," White said.

"This isn't the standard PR rhetoric. We hope the people attending will get some meaningful and useful knowledge," White said.

Paul Adams, retired from the U.S. Air Force, who attended the first academy that began in January 1988, said his idea of police work changed after taking the course.

"You learn what the police put up with and how they handle it and (still) keep their police image up," Adams said. "They don't just ride around with their air conditioner on."

Adams said the academy also made him aware of "what's going on around me and around the town."

Jackie Hamilton, a member of the board of directors for Crime Stoppers and a past president of the Crime Prevention Commission, also attended the first academy.

"There were so many things that I learned ... someone off the street would learn a lot," she said.

All participants are given a questionaire at the beginning and end of the academy to determine how much they know about police department work and operations.

Students who complete the academy receive a certificate of completion, mementos of the class and get to attend a banquet.

"Those people who are approved and can't attend (because of limited enrollment) will be forwarded to the next class," White said.

BOGGS: Marshal retiring

(From 1B)

"The guy may not want to go. You never know that when you knock on that door."

Of course, the danger involved depends to some extent on the area of the country where the warrant is being served. Boggs said deputy marshals in New York City, Chicago and Los Angeles face danger daily.

"When those fellas go out on warrant details there, that's dangerous. They go into housing projects ... where they've got to watch their backs. I would 10 times rather serve a fugitive warrant in Midland than a fugitive warrant in New York City."

The Midland marshal's office is one of seven divisions in the Western District, which Jonas said covers 68 counties and 94,000 square miles. There are 50 deputies in the district, Jonas said, and some 2,700 nationwide.

He said the role of the marshals has expanded in the past 15 years. The marshals have begun to re-assume many of the law enforcement duties with which they were associated during their old west heyday.

Meanwhile, the "war on drugs" has found the marshals increasingly involved in the seizure and sale of property owned by drug traffickers, Jonas said.

"It is hard to segregate one function and say this is more important than another," Jonas said. "The important thing is, the marshal's service is the (organization) which makes the criminal justice system work."

And although Boggs is leaving the marshals, he does not plan to dissociate himself from the criminal justice system just yet.

Among the papers on his cluttered desk is a job application for a security position at a federal court in San Antonio. He said his government pension won't take him as far in his travel trailer as he'd like to go.

Meanwhile, he said he's done his best to "serve and protect," both innocent citizens and the federal defendants in his custody.

"I made every effort to help them with their problems, whether it was family problems at home or financial problems in the jail," he said. "As long as they were comfortable, it made my job easier. At Christmastime, I'd get cards from them and I guess they were happy.

Single-engine plane snaps off front landing gear

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

Investigators and onlookers examine damage to a single-engine plane which experienced a "hard landing" when Midland pilot Jim Webb was attempting to land at Midland Air Park Saturday afternoon. No one was injured in the incident.

Staff Report

No one was injured Saturday afternoon when a single-engine plane snapped off its front landing gear during a hard landing at Midland Air Park, officials said.

The plane's pilot, Jim Webb of Midland, said he brought the plane down too hard during a practice landing. No one else was on board when the incident occurred, Webb said.

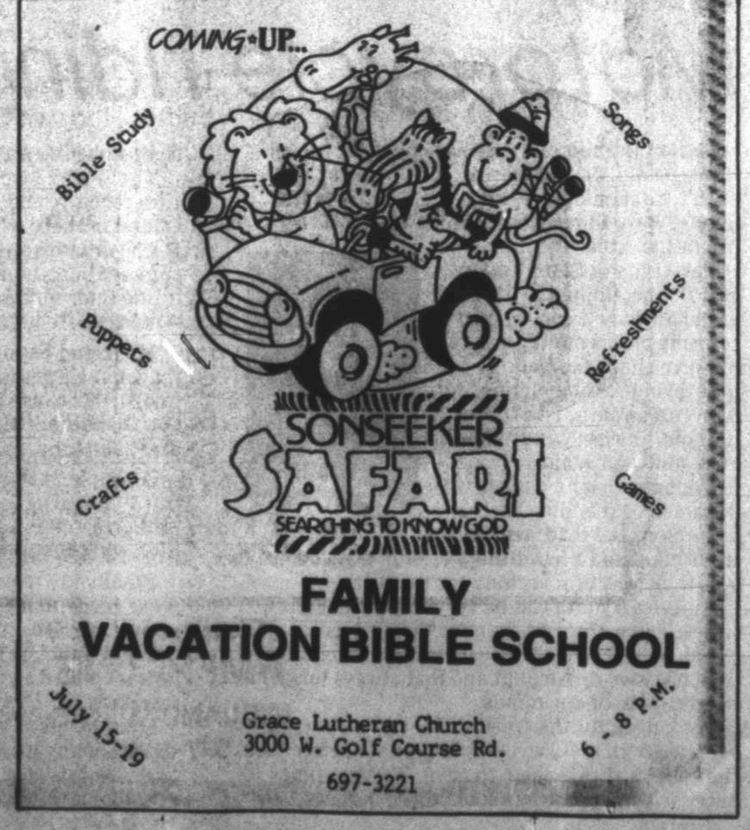

Carl Rodgers, Aircraft Fire Rescue Division Chief, said two pumper trucks and an Emergency Medical Service unit were dispatched to the airport after witnesses called 911.

Rodgers said Webb had radioed his intention to land his Cessna 182 Skylane prior to the mishap and was not experiencing mechanical difficulties with the plane.

The incident occurred around 3:15 p.m., Rodgers said.

He said a report on the incident would be filed with the Federal Aviation Administration and that no further investigation is expected.

Webb is a licensed pilot, he said.

Man kills his three children, commits suicide

CHURCH POINT, La. (AP) — A Houston man fatally shot his three children before turning the shotgun on himself Saturday afternoon.

The children, who died of single gunshot wounds to the upper body areas, were listed as Tamika Duplechin, 8, Ambra Kay Duplechin, 6, and Stephen Duplechin, 7, all of Houston.

Duplechin died at Church Point Hospital at approximately 8 p.m. Saturday of a single shotgun wound in the chest area.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Doctor honored by TMA group

Staff Report

Midland physician Durwood Nesbitt Clader was voted into honorary membership by the Texas Medical Association's House of Delegates at its annual meeting.

To become an honorary member of the body, a physician must have rendered outstanding service to organized medicine or made noteworthy contributions to scientific medicine. Clader was one of 12 physicians elected to honorary membership.

The TMA is a professional organization of more than 29,000 physician and medical student members. Based in Austin, it has 119 component county medical societies around the state. Clader is a member of the Midland County Medical Society.

The association represents 82 percent of the doctors of medicine licensed and residing in Texas, and its goal is to improve the health of Texans through the professional and personal development of its members.

Chamber breakfast set

The Midland Chamber of Commerce will host "Breakfast with the President" to introduce new Chief Executive Officer Janna R. King to the community.

Tuesday's breakfast at Centennial Plaza is sponsored by N.C. Sturgeon Inc. and Preferred Parking.

Ms. King, who was hired in May, is scheduled to begin work this month. She has served as president of the St. Cloud Area Economic Development Partnership since January 1987.

Her first priority in Midland is to "work with the chamber board of directors and Forward Midland to develop a strategic plan for the chamber's direction, so the staff and volunteers know specifically what we want to accomplish."

The "at the door" price for the breakfast, which is being served by Gili's Restaurant, is $7. The event will start at 6:45 a.m.

Midland airport off and flying

If you've noticed that activity is hopping at Midland International Airport, you're absolutely correct. New firms are locating at the airport, air service is increasing, and the outlook is very good for continued progress at the facility in coming months.

During the past few weeks, in fact:

■ A spokesman for Cutter Beechcraft Inc. announced that the national aircraft manufacturing and distributing company is negotiating with Rich-Air Co. to purchase the Tiger Charter facilities at the international airport.

■ The City of Midland received notification that the U.S. Department of Commerce has approved designating an area of land at the airport as a foreign trade zone.

■ Airport officials have indicated they will apply for about $6 million in Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) financing to extend one runway by 1,000 feet, while a $4 million FAA grant will be sought to finance construction of a runway from the airport to a planned aerospace park and cargo complex.

In addition, Midland International is experiencing increases in both passenger traffic and cargo loads over figures recorded a year ago.

Marcy Blauvelt, Midland International spokesperson, noted that the increases indicate that economic activity is picking up. "You can't pinpoint it to any one thing," she said, adding that such an increase indicates slow and steady growth although the activity is not back to the 1982 "boom" levels.

She said that for the month of May 1990, Midland Regional's three airlines — American Airlines, America West, and Southwest Airlines — tallied 99,596 passengers or a 3 percent increase over the total for May 1989.

In April 1990, the airport logged 109 U.S. tons of in-planed freight, which represents a 68 percent increase from April 1989. During the same timespan, 19 tons of air mail was in-planed — a 58.3 percent increase.

For the month of May, the airport also logged 8,617 takeoffs and landings, for an average of 278 takeoffs and landings per day. That was a 15.5 percent increase over May a year ago.

"We just think it's a good sign, said Ms. Blauvelt. "We have more up months now than down months."

The increases are particularly impressive when considered along with other Midland aviation activity. For example, Basin Aviation, which operates a fixed-based at Midland Air Park, recently also became a fixed-based operator at Big Spring Air Park, the only such operation there. Skywest Airport, south of Midland, currently is building a hangar and closing in other hangars to do some repair work on aircraft. All in all, the activities show that Midland is a city that values good aviation services and aviation facilities.

Of course, there are many Midlanders who deserve credit for the increased aviation activity here. A few who should be mentioned specifically include Stan Garrison and those on his chamber of commerce committee, who several years ago worked tirelessly to get the foreign trade zone designation that promises to be a boon for Midland International; and Joe Mabee, Ed Jones and Mayor Carroll Thomas, who were the primary negotiators in the Confederate Air Force move. There are others, no doubt, who have played a major part in the recent upsurge of activity and deserve recognition.

Chamber of commerce officials note that one of the prime indicators of a community's growth potential is its airport activity. The airport activity around Midland indicates this region has a great future!

Test will better prepare students

AUSTIN — We should thank the State Board of Education, which took the biggest fall of anyone in the recent school finance debate, for a brief moment of clarity this past week over the new academic skills test.

Brown

On the surface, it may seem the board has lowered state education standards, but the real effect of their unanimous vote was to better prepare our children for the future.

These academic skills exams always seem to come with acronyms attached. The new one is called the TAAS test, for Texas Assessment of Academic Skills. You probably are more familiar with the test going out of use — the TEAMS test, or Texas Assessment of Minimum Skills.

Both exams, to varying degrees, measure reading, writing and math skills, and both are given in odd-numbered grades starting in grade 3.

The problem was that after field testing the new TAAS test among 210,000 students in October, the Texas Education Agency determined more students would flunk it than the TEAMS test, which required a score of 70 percent to pass.

Education Commissioner William Kirby says the TAAS test is more difficult because it requires greater facility for complex thinking and problem-solving. The TEAMS test relied too heavily on what we used to call regurgitation when I was in school — the simple recall of facts.

State administration of the TEAMS test came under fire from parents, academics and lawmakers, who said teachers spent too much time "teaching the test."

This was understandable, since teachers and administrator had a lot riding on their students' scores. Results served as one basis for accreditation and were published in local newspapers.

The crime was that teachers had to use such a simple-minded exam in the first place. This must have led to some fairly simple-minded class periods and not a few insulted intelligences as teachers strived to make everyone look good.

The state board and TEA have correctly assessed the problem and acknowledged that if teaching a test is inevitable, we at least should make the test something worth teaching.

Evidence of Third Reich covered up

BERLIN — The fall of the Berlin Wall has more fully exposed an ugly wart on the landscape — the remains of the bunker where Adolf Hitler made his last stand.

Anderson

It is a grassy mound which, until last November, was in the no-man's land between the two walls that make up the Berlin Wall. For years, no one but border guards and attack dogs were allowed near it.

Now it sits exposed, and Berlin officials are exercised about what to do with it. Is it a historical landmark for tourists to gawk at, or is it an embarrassing reminder of an era that the Germans would just as soon forget?

So far, both Germanys have done a good job covering up the traces of the Third Reich. Berlin officials who asked not to be named told us that the physical evidence of the Holocaust has been the subject of intense secret debates. The disposition of historical landmarks is politically sensitive now more than ever because of the reunification of Germany. Many Europeans and Jews everywhere fear a resurgence of the nationalism, the arrogance and the anti-Semitism that once prompted a united Germany to do the unthinkable.

If Berlin officials had their druthers, they told us, they would demolish any reminder of that era. But they fear being accused of trying to rewrite the past, or forget it.

"That is why," one key aide to West Berlin Mayor Walter Mompers told us, "it's better that a unified Germany is integrated within the international community of Europe in 1992." He suggested, confidentially, that unless Germany is made to assume a pan-European role, it might begin to flex its muscle in some ugly way in years to come.

The aide personally agreed with the philosophy that those who remember history are not doomed to repeat it. But, he added, it is ticklish to speak of reminders in Berlin now, especially when Berlin is competing with Bonn to be the capital of the unified Germany, and Berlin doesn't want to be saddled with all the "bad history."

Other Germans we met, particularly young people, said they would like to see more memorials to those who suffered at the hands of the Nazis. They don't want to revel in guilt, but they do want to prevent a repeat.

One of the few memorials to the Nazi era is the remains of an old synagogue near Charlottenburg that was firebombed during Hitler's "Kristallnacht" purge in 1938. It is being restored as a museum.

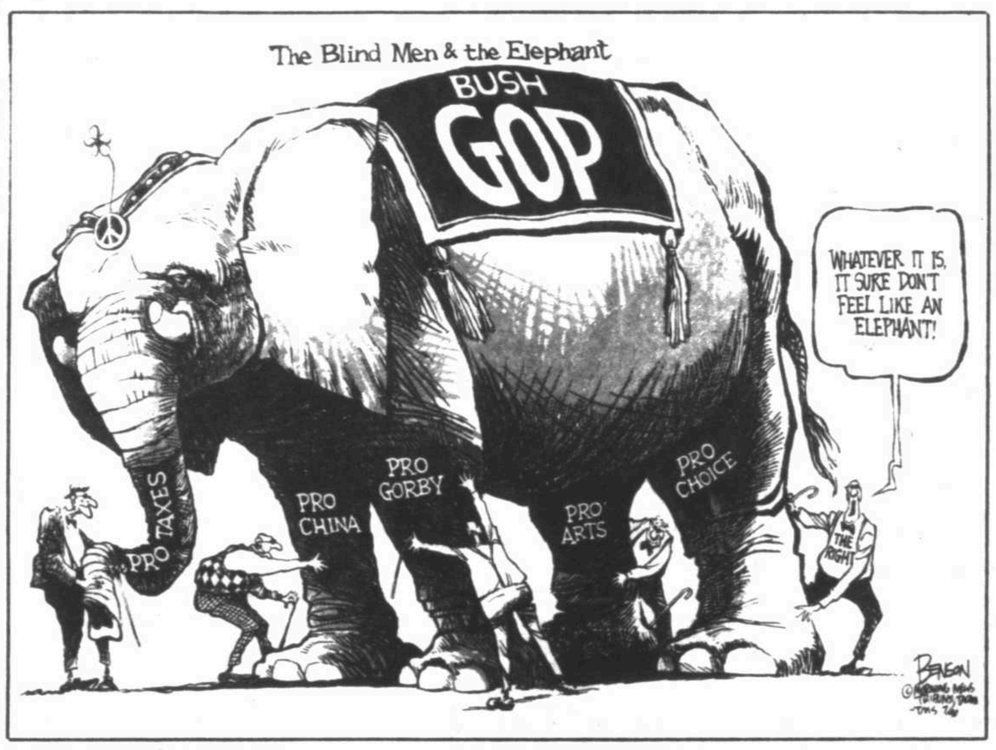

Another memorial is the Wannsee Villa where the chief of the Gestapo and 14 other German officials met on Jan. 20, 1942, and planned the "final solution" — the extermination of Jews.

Berlin has two places that pass for memorials to the victims of the Nazis. The first is the Plotzensee Memorial, dedicated to all victims of Hitler. But it specifically emphasizes not 6 million Jews but 2,500 members of the German resistance who opposed Hitler and were executed.

The other memorial is a haphazard affair at the corner of Prince Albrecht and Wilhelm streets near the old Berlin Wall. It was once the site of the Gestapo and SS headquarters. It was dynamited into two large mounds of rubble in 1949.

Most other physical reminders of the Holocaust were destroyed by Allied bombs or by occupying governments that preferred to bury the past. In 1987, the British razed the old Spandau prison, which had held the seven Nazi criminals convicted, but not executed, at Nuremburg.

It's extremely hard to grow old gracefully

At last it seems possible to get younger. Growth-hormone injections have done the trick for a test group of men aged 61 to 81, according to last week's science news. Practically all of them perked up noticeably, regaining scientifically measurable amounts of the mustard commonly associated with younger men.

Baker

The press, always ill-equipped to cope with good news, made very little fuss over the announcement. There were the inevitable references to "the fountain of youth" and the usual reminders that it would take a lot of data before anybody could be sure the injections don't have bad side effects.

Their cost was also heavily emphasized. Something around $20,000 per year was the figure I saw most often. Why this should seem an exorbitant price for rolling back old age was never explained.

Sure, aspirin is a lot cheaper, but it can't stop you from growing hair in your ears either, can it? I know New Yorkers who pay more than $20,000 a year to live in apartments hardly bigger than dog houses.

I heard an absurd commentary to the effect that well-adjusted people would surely rather "grow old gracefully" than take the chemical route back to vigor.

I have seen people grow old and have done a little of it myself. It is an extremely hard thing to do "gracefully."

Never mind June Allyson's insouciance in those TV commercials about splendid new diapers American ingenuity has created for senior citizens; it must be extremely hard to be incontinent "gracefully." (Incidentally, it must also be very hard to be patronized by twerps, twits and politicians as "senior citizens.")

It takes very young people with their profound ignorance of the experience to believe in the pleasures of "growing old gracefully," just as it takes very young people to write the best stories about dying beautifully (see Ernest Hemingway's early books).

Let us not, however, overlook the obvious fact that the press people conveying the growth-hormone news must have been appalled by it.

They have hopes that nature will do its worst, thus enabling them someday to replace the old people at the top — columnists, boss editors, TV anchors.

It must have distressed them to learn that growth hormones can now keep these old birds going on and on. No wonder the stories so far have emphasized the possibly deadly side effects and the price, which these young poorly paid news people think is outrageous.

Outrageous? Does anybody in the network news departments really think Tom Brokaw, Peter Jennings or Dan Rather is going to turn down eternal youth because it costs $20,000 a year? They probably pay their barbers more.

Of course I don't want to speak for Tom, Peter and Dan, but if any youngsters around a certain Times Square printing plant are composing letters urging me to discover the delights of growing old gracefully, you are hereby urged to forget it, kids.

My own naturally selfish disposition to start getting younger every day foretells, I fear, a possibly nasty new political problem. If a fine, decent, loving person refuses to "grow old gracefully" so the next generation can have its day, what of the mean-spirited and selfish multitudes now holding power in America?

I can foresee them clamoring so desperately for age-reversal shots that they drive the price beyond the reach of the next generation. Even worse, beyond my reach.

I can foresee an era when these swinish men have driven the price to $200,000 a year. By that time, having taken the shots for years, I will probably be desperate enough to pay any price, though it means sticking up all-night convenience stores.

In the long run I suppose the Germans and Japanese would probably be the only people rich enough to afford to get younger. Of course, come to think of it, it's been like that for several years now.

GEORGE WILL

Delors not as potent as he'd like to be

WASHINGTON — A passerby, curious about an unusually long line of limousines snaking down the street in front of one of Washington's poshest hotels, paused to ask a chauffeur the identity of the visiting dignitary who required all these chariots of power. The chauffeur replied, "le president de l'Europe."

Will

A grand title. Now, name the president of Europe.

The potentate who is pleased to be called that is Jacques Delors. He is, fortunately, not yet nearly as potent as his title implies and as he plans to be. As president of the European Community's executive commission, he is the leading bureaucrat in Brussels, the capital of bureaucracy and pretender to the inflated title of capital of Europe.

This "president" of a continent of democracies is an appointed official. His title reflects the fact that in politics, vanity often is inversely proportional to legitimacy.

There is afoot an attempt to supplant politics by edicts. This anti-democratic impulse may be the last refuge of, or merely the latest manifestation of, socialism's durable dream of replacing the governance of people by the administration of things. Administration, that is, by a mandarin class claiming special understanding of social rationality. That rationality promises tidiness to supersede the unpredictability of unguided choices made by free people and free markets.

Delors is now in his second four-year term as president. His career can be considered an example of failing upward. He was one of the principal architects of President Mitterrand's spectacularly unsuccessful fling with socialism in 1981-82. Reality, against which bureaucracies are erected, soon enforced on Mitterrand one of the most abrupt U-turns in the politics of postwar Europe.

Just as Eastern Europe is peeling away layer upon layer of statism, Western Europe is marching into more of it. It is marching beneath a banner emblazoned with the words: "the European ideal." That ideal is more ardently worshipped than carefully defined. It is usually expressed, with almost perfect vacuity, as "unity." Or, with perfect vacuity, as "1992," the year in which the "single European market" supposedly will materialize as a precursor of political unity.

Given Europe's 20th-century record of misplaced enthusiasms, it is depressing that there is so little skepticism about all this. Almost all of Europe's critical faculties seem to have been obliterated by the intoxicating triumphalism occasioned by events in the eastern portion of Europe. But the triumph there, properly understood, was over an intense form of something Delors represents in mild but not benign form.

Delors represents the dilution of national sovereignty for the convenience of a clerisy that congratulates itself for a cosmopolitanism that transcends "narrow" national preferences. Delors represents the sacrifice of important dimensions of self-government, to be sacrificed on the altar of abstractions defined outside the normal processes of democratic debate.

However, not all of Europe's skepticism is in abeyance. Two years ago, British Prime Minister Thatcher sounded a tocsin. Speaking in Bruges, Belgium, at the College of Europe, she took up the gauntlet thrown down by Delors when he said that by the mid-1990s "80 percent of our (Europe's) economic legislation, and perhaps even our fiscal and social legislation as well, will be of Community origin."

In her riposte, Thatcher connected free markets with national sovereignty.

"We have not," she said, "successfully rolled back the frontiers of the state in Britain only to see them reimposed on a European level, with a European super-state exercising a new dominance from Brussels."

JIM CULLEN

Everything looks normal even though thrift failed

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — This week, on my way to deposit my paycheck at the friendly neighborhood savings and loan, I noticed a typewritten notice affixed modestly to the bottom of the front door.

Cullen

Stooping low, I read that the Resolution Trust Corp. had taken over the operation of my S&L on behalf of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

I joined the growing fraternity of Texans whose financial institutions had gone into federal receivership in the continuing shakeout of the Texas savings and loan industry.

I wondered whether I should throw good money after bad at this failed thrift, which had run aground on the shoals of bad real estate loans, or whether I should convert my paycheck to hard cash and deposit the excess in my mattress.

But there were no G-persons carting off S&L executives in chains. Everything looked normal.

In fact, a week after the feds took over, the old executives were still on the job, under the eye of an RTC manager. But the tellers weren't scanning the want ads, a hopeful sign that business might proceed as usual.

As long as the FDIC was willing to make good on my deposits, which were well under the $100,000 maximum, I was willing to go along with the gag, despite the nagging doubts that the full faith and credit of the federal government is what it used to be.

Many Texas savings and loans expanded after the deregulation of the early years of the Reagan administration. A levelling-off in oil prices failed to stop the interest in land speculation, particularly in Dallas, Austin and Houston, when everybody who was anybody was buying an S&L and lending money to land developers.

But when the boom went bust, ambitious developers who took out loans in the "anything goes" days were unable to make their payments. The casualties began to mount in 1988, and since then the government has been eating thrifts, taking over 450 nationwide with assets of $200 billion, nearly one-fourth of them in Texas.

In Texas, state-chartered S&Ls such as "mine" had more leeway in investing in real estate and commercial ventures than federally chartered institutions until Congress enacted the Financial Institutions Regulatory Reform and Enforcement Act in August 1989, which reined in some of the state-chartered activities.

But it was too late for many S&Ls that already had seen the value of real estate in their loan portfolios disintegrate. The state Savings and Loan Department this past month supervised 95 S&Ls with $22 billion in assets, of which 45 institutions with $11 billion in assets were solvent.

Federal S&Ls did not have much better of a record, with 44 solvent federal charters with $45 billion in assets as of Dec. 31, while 48 were insolvent with $14 billion in assets.

If the federal Office of Thrift Supervision finds an S&L is insolvent, the FDIC assumes claims against the institution and puts it under the RTC, whose regional office in Dallas since August 1989 has taken over 119 Texas thrifts. It has resolved 45 of them, either by finding a buyer or by liquidating the assets.

The cost of the S&L cleanup has been estimated at more than $150 billion nationwide. The final total is anybody's guess as S&Ls continue to fail around the country.

Meanwhile, federal prosecutors are seeking reinforcements to wade through the paper trails of bad loans as they try to find evidence of fraud.

Carmen Sullivan, regional director of the RTC, recently said evidence of fraud has been found in 80 percent of the cases under RTC supervision in Texas and Oklahoma. Nationally, L. William Seidman, FDIC chairman, recently said insider dealing and fraudulent borrowing ocurred in 60 percent of failed institutions.

On the other end of the cleanup, the commissioner of Texas S&Ls said there is still a place for old-fashioned thrifts. In fact, they are the ones that weathered the storm.

Most of the problems were in large metropolitan areas, said James Pledger, who became Texas S&L commissioner in May 1988, after the damage had been done.

"If you look at the group of survivor institutions, you'll see that a large portion of them were from smaller towns and institutions that pretty well stuck to what they do best, and that was home finance," he said.

There are still some advantages in dealing with the smaller and less-bureaucratic state agency, which employs 30, Pledger said, but the free-wheeling days are gone.

In the meantime, he said, consumers have been well-protected by the deposit insurance guarantees. "Most folks didn't notice the difference" when the RTC took over, he said.

That is, unless they saw the notice on the door.

Gorbachev victory, summits hope for peace

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

SAN SIMEON — We have experienced another series of historically great events that encourage hope for stable peace and prosperity among civilized nations on the horizon of the 21st century.

Hearst

Of inestimable importance was the overwhelming victory of Mikhail Gorbachev in overcoming the vehement attacks against him from almost all sides during the 28th congress of the Soviet Communist Party. Despite slashing criticism of his leadership by conservative hard-liners, militarists and radicals, he won re-election as party leader and president of the Soviet Union by almost 3-to-1.

His strong victory relieved western concern about the dire consequences his downfall could have caused not only in the Soviet Union but for the planned new order of peace and economic progress in Europe. It will hasten Western European economic aid to him and was particularly pleasing to me because I risked predicting in my column last Sunday he would win.

Another amazing development was the NATO summit decision in London to transform that ready-for-all-out-war alliance into a sharply reduced defensive vehicle for political and security cooperation with the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries.

Most astonishing of all was the decision to have the Soviet Union and other members of the Warsaw Pact virtually join NATO. President Bush and the other NATO leaders invited Gorbachev to visit NATO headquarters in Brussels and address its members. President Gorbachev quickly accepted the invitation. Eastern European leaders were also invited to visit NATO, and the Soviet and other members of the Warsaw Pact were invited to assign regular envoys to NATO headquarters.

NATO governments also committed themselves to sign a nonaggression declaration with the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact nations. That NATO summit was a landmark of the mind-boggling changes Gorbachev's reforms have swiftly brought in Europe.

At the economic summit meeting in Houston, it was agreed that each of the seven major industrialized nations, including Japan, could give whatever economic aid it wished to the Soviet Union. West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl proposed a joint $15 billion direct Soviet aid package, but Bush and some of the others refused to go along.

The president offered "technical assistance" to help the Soviets learn how to develop a capitalistic free market enterprise system. However, he set three conditions for direct U.S. economic aid. First, the Soviet Union must become capable of operating a free market economy. Second, Soviet military spending must be further reduced and the still offensive posture of its military strategy must be replaced by a defensive one. Last, but by no means least, the Soviets must stop subsidizing with billions of dollars annually Cuba's military forces and the maintenance of Soviet air and naval forces in Cuba, which threaten the United States.

While Bush failed to secure support from the Europeans for his proposal to sharply reduce and eventually abolish agricultural subsidies, the Houston meeting was one of the most important economic summits ever held. That was particularly gratifying to me because my close associate, Joe Kingsbury Smith, and I were credited with persuading French President Giscard d'Estaing to launch the economic summit idea in 1975.

Now I want to share with you excerpts from a letter I received in response to my Independence Day column. I do so because the letter epitomizes the patriotic spirit of the working people of America who have been the most faithful readers of the Hearst newspapers since my Pop, at age 24, became publisher of the San Francisco Examiner in 1887.

Written by Kay Mayer of 4216 92nd Ave., S.E., Mercer Island, Wash. 98040, the letter reads, in part:

"Dear Mr. Hearst:

"What is this country going to do when you depart? You have been my salvation when so many issues have arisen.

"Your latest — 'We will celebrate this coming Wednesday the 214th anniversary of our Declaration of Independence.' Where is our U.S. Supreme Court? Flag burning is an insult for all that have died and were injured for it.

"Your father and my father were great Americans. I know you had a prominent father and I enjoy your columns on his birthday when you pay tribute to him. He was for this great country and that is why his son, thank God, informs us on important issues. My father, Patrick Henry Crosby, was also great to me. He was left with 10 children...(and) his sons served in World War II. He believed in this country like your father and taught us to preserve it and that is why I want to express my opinion in regard to our flag.

"Mr. Hearst, my brother served with General Patton and out of 100 men (he was one of) only three (who) returned. My brother, Jack P. Crosby, the rest of his life had to work nights because he wasn't able to change his stockings for a month (during his service) because he was on a serious mission and the heavy boots he was wearing caused a rash (that lasted) until he died...He never complained or ran his country down. He came down with Alzheimer's, his wife died, and I was in charge of him for seven and a half years. He was kicked out of three nursing homes...He was always such a kind and gentle brother. I was paying $2,500 a month to a nursing home and would have gladly given it to the government.

"Now when these, what should I call them, can have the Supreme Court protect them under the First Amendment of the Constitution, it's time we the people stand up and be counted.

"Jack's flag that I received from his country at his death flies high at my brother Frank's home with honors.

"Your column is so informative. I appreciate your thoughts and your love for this great country. Thank you."

Taxpayers should not pay for indigent

I am against any new taxes whatsoever, because the more money politicians get, the more they spend. Tax, tax, spend, spend is their motto. Frugal spending is the only answer. Throwing money at problems has not worked, though it's been tried for over 32 years.

The proposed new library is also not necessary. The new taxes involved are not in the best interest of the taxpayers of this county.

The indigent on welfare having child after child should not expect us to pay their hospital bills. Life wasn't intended to be easy. Hard work is the answer, as well as birth control that works. I resent paying for the irresponsibility of others. It's not a cake-walk out here in the heat, working and paying high taxes for irresponsible people.

When I was in school I never got a free breakfast or lunch and I didn't need it. I graduated doing longhand math without a calculator and I believe students then were far superior to today's and at far less cost per pupil.

If the politicians, firemen, policemen and teachers don't like their salaries they can quit and enter the real world and make a living the old-fashioned way: they can earn it. Both assistant city managers should be fired and all top people of the city should reduce their salaries by 10 percent.

I am very tight with money because I only work part time as a handyman for $5 an hour. My wife and I live pretty well on $12,000 per year net, but we can't continue to do so with taxes constantly going up.

Let's make everyone responsible for their own actions and not the hard-working taxpayer. There are at least 10 city parks that are not necessary and this is a burden also. It seems the minority and indigent are winning, along with the politicians, while the working people lose. I don't have much money, but will spend it all to fight any and all proposed taxes and God will persevere.

Dimension Cable fee hike opposed

I am unaccustomed to writing letters expressing my views or disagreements with happenings occurring in Midland, but with recent happenings, I feel that it is time to speak out — speak out to the City Council and to Doug Smith, general manager of Times Mirror Cable in Midland.

I have basic cable TV at my residence with three hookups. Each year the cost has risen and each year the service has been no better than the previous year. The last bill received showed a $5 per month increase — for what?

I immediately called Dimension Cable and was advised that our Midland City Council, without asking the citizens of Midland, gave permission for the cable company to add another seven or eight stations — those being country western, rock and roll and old-time movies as best as I can determine.

I didn't want it, I don't want it, but am told that if I have basic cable, I'm going to get it and I am going to pay for it whether I like it or not. Two of my sets don't go up that high so the TV company very graciously is giving me one little black box for one of the TVs so that I may watch these stations that I have no intention of watching but for which I shall pay $5 a month.

If I want something special, I am willing to pay for it and will not even ask the city council for permission. I do not think it is right for the city council to tell me how I am going to spend my hard-earned money. I would rather give the $5 per month to the city than the TV cable company.

Which brings up another subject — the ½ percent sales tax that the city council and Midland Hospital District are squabbling about who gets to spend it and where it is going. Incidentally, if the tax increase passes, I shall be paying an additional ½ percent tax on the $5 increase with the TV company.

I go on public record to advise that I shall do everything within my power to keep the ½ percent increase from passing. I am thankful that the city council has to ask the voters for permission.

Alcohol is nation's real drug problem

You have to wonder sometimes why people don't cut through all the hype about the drug war. You have to wonder why they shun common sense.

There is a drug problem — there's no question about that — but it's stretching it to say that crack is the main problem. We keep hearing talk about the threat of cocaine, crack and marijuana. But as you look and listen around town, something just doesn't add up. It appears that cocaine is not the drug of choice; neither is crack or marijuana. The real problem is alcohol.

Research backs up this observation. 64 percent of high school seniors had drunk alcohol in the last month. Fifty-five percent of adults had had one or more drinks in the last month. When teenagers drink, they typically drink more. One-third said they had consumed five or more drinks in a row in the past two weeks.

Teenagers drink because it is socially acceptable, and their parents often look the other way, feeling relief that the teens are shunning illegal drugs. No clear-headed person advocates prohibition, but you have to remember what alcohol spawns: abuse, violence, rebellious actions, injury and death. More than half of all fatal car crashes involve alcohol.

All of the goals and plans for the future of our youth can be wiped out in one senseless moment of drunken violence, a violence our legislature has yet to recognize as murder.

We must take a stand. Teach our youth to refuse alcohol. Parents, above all do not serve or encourage your youth to drink. Teach them to refuse to ride with an intoxicated driver. Write your congressman and senator to initiate deterrent legislation against killer drivers. Talk to your prosecutors about stiffer sentencing, no plea bargaining.

Do something positive, if not for yourself, then for someone who loves you. Keep our future alive.

Gramm major player in nation's capital

I saw a political ad for Sen. Phil Gramm that featured Presidents Ronald Reagan and George Bush extolling the virtues of our senator regarding job creation, economic growth, budget reduction and overall congressional leadership. Undoubtedly, Texas has a great representative in Phil Gramm.

When two U.S. presidents appear on television to give praise to the senator for almost all that is good in Washington, it must be that our senator is a major player in the nation's capital.

Sen. Gramm comes to Texas often and he knows our thoughts and desires. Then he goes to Washington and he votes like a Texan should. I agree with President Reagan and President Bush; Phil Gramm is a national leader with common sense and uncommon courage.

We received a delightful letter last week from former MC student-athlete Marcela Vargas, who played varsity tennis for the Chaparrals in the 1989 spring and fall semesters. She left to attend medical school in her native Columbia. The initial class of more than 800 aspirants was really pre-med, with about 160 of those 800 interviewed and 60 accepted to medical school. Marcela was one of those 60 named to begin her studies last week. Her father is a medical doctor in general practice, but Marcela is planning an obstetrics-gynecology specialty.

"OK, kids, now for your backstroke lesson..." was very close to reality last week for a number of youngsters on campus for a sports camp. The only problem was they had signed up for coach Reggie Franklin's basketball camp.

But two broken connections had allowed a sheet of water to cover all the Chaparral Center floor, where the campers were to be practicing.

Fortunately, the leaks were discovered Friday when the campus normally is closed. A few hours later, the connections were repaired and the flooring dried. It also was extremely fortunate that the new wooden flooring was still stored, since the youngsters were to be playing on the old permanent rubberized surface. About the only damage was to carpeting in some of the dressing rooms and tile flooring in the Chaparral Booster Room.

Dr. Jim Jones and Heidi Goebel, foreign language instructor and lab assistant respectively, competed in and completed the tough Cactus and Crude 150 bicycle rally July 7-8. The 150-mile trek took the scenic (and hilly) route through Borden County, Post, and ended at White River Lake south of Crosbyton. This is the second year these two have made this event and this year's temperatures were about 10 degrees cooler than in 1989.

Jones also said the wind was more helpful this time. The event is sponsored by the local chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Foundation.

Education secretary's adviser plans to help immigrant attend SMU

DALLAS (AP) — A former high school principal says he plans to make sure the talents of a 19-year-old Mexican immigrant who can't afford college don't go to waste.

Javier Enriquez recently graduated fifth in his class at Sunset High School and won honors for his artwork. But his plans to attend college to pursue and architecture degree have been put on hold by a quota system enforced by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Enriquez said he can't afford to attend college in the United States if he has to pay non-resident tuition. And a federal immigration policy that limits the number of Mexicans who can move to the United States each year means nearly a decade may pass before Enriquez gets resident status.

Resident status would make him eligible for resident tuition, federal financial aid and college scholarships.

"I feel cheated, like my life is at a standstill," said Enriquez, who would be the first of his family to attend college. "I was hoping I would get (my residency card) before I graduated. Now all I do is wait and worry."

Former Sunset principal Richard Marquez said he plans to ask Southern Methodist University in Dallas to waive tuition or work out a payment plan for Enriquez.

"Universities always talk about their shortage in Hispanic and black student enrollment," said Marquez, who left Sunset in January to become an adviser to the U.S. Secretary of Education. "Here's their chance to help an exceptional kid get his foot in the door."

Enriquez came to Dallas in 1984 and settled with some family members who had immigrated to Oak Cliff years before. His father and older brother — already legal residents — have been trying to help him get his card since 1986.

But the INS has yet to act on his 4-year-old application for permanent residency.

"There's a 10-year waiting list" for Mexicans seeking residency, said Don Nielson, a spokesman for the INS Dallas office. "Unfortunately, many immigrants find themselves in the same situation."

Teachers attend seminar

Diane Flaten and Ann Murphey, San Jacinto Junior High School science teachers, participated in a week-long seminar as part of the 1990 Growth Initiatives for Teachers (GIFT) fellows. The seminar was in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Washington, D.C.

Only 100 teachers nationwide received the $6,000 GIFT grant. These funds represent $2,500 for professional development and $3,500 for school enrichment.

Last spring Ms. Murphey was awarded a Christa McAuliffe scholarship. Fewer than 100 teachers nationwide and only three teachers in Texas received the award established in honor of the teacher killed in the Challenger explosion.

Medical school starts

The first medical school in America was established at Perkasie, Pa., on May 3, 1765.

Teacher at institute

Janet Reed was one of 32 geography teachers who attended the first of two summer Geographic Education Institutes at Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos. The institute was funded by the National Geographic Society, the Texas Alliance for Geographic Education and the Texas Education Agency.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

KEY HOUSE VOTES

HOUSE REFUSES LIMITS ON WORKERS WITH COMMUNICABLE DISEASES. The House July 12 rejected, 180-224, an amendment to the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) that would have permitted employers to transfer workers with contagious diseases out of food-handling jobs, even if the disease could not be transmitted through food.

The vote came during consideration of the House-Senate conference report on the ADA bill. The so-called civil rights bill for the disabled easily passed the House the same day.

The amendment's language originally was part of the House's ADA bill, but was stripped from the final bill during House-Senate negotiations aimed at producing a compromise ADA bill.

Supporters of the amendment agreed that it was offered out of people's fear of contagious disease, particularly Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), not the reality of its transmission. But, they argued that a perceived threat can be reality to the public.

Opponents claimed that the amendment's language was totally unacceptable because it would permit discrimination based on the fear, not the reality, of contagious diseases — exactly what the ADA bill is intended to prohibit.

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

Not Voting: Smith (R).

HOUSE REBUKES ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM FUNDING CUT ATTEMPT. The House July 11 squelched, 165-257, a second attempt by Republicans to cut the funding level for the Commerce Department Technology Programs reauthorization bill's centerpiece, the Advanced Technology Program.

If passed, the funding cut amendment would have sent the bill back to the House Science, Space and Technology Committee and forced the committee to lower the ATP's 1992 funding level from $250 million to $150 million. ATP provides seed money to research consortiums aimed at commercializing high-tech advances — high-definition television, superconductivity, etc.

Shortly after defeating the amendment, the House overwhelmingly passed the measure, which would provide $290 million in 1991 — with $100 million for ATP — and $468 million in 1992.

Supporters of the amendment agreed that funding ATP was necessary, but felt that a cut in the bill's ATP funding may appease the Bush administration, which requested no money for the program in 1990 and only $10 million in 1991.

"This bill has a lot of policies that make sense," said Robert S. Walker, R-Penn. "If this is one of the minor things we can correct in order to get this policy signed, then I think we ought to be for it."

Opponents were adamant that there should be no cut in the program's funding and claimed that the $250 million being authorized in 1992 was already too small. "If...the president would like to-...say to the American people that we are not only behind in these basic technologies but we have decided not to join the fight, let the president make that statement," said Robert G. Torricelli, D-N.J.

KEY SENATE VOTE

SENATE REJECTS BAN ON AIDS-INFECTED FOOD HANDLERS. The Senate July 11 voted 39-61 to reject an amendment to the Americans with Disabilities Act that would have allowed employers to refuse to assign a worker with AIDS-related human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) to a food handling job.

The amendment also would have required the secretary of Health and Human Services to publish a list of infectious and communicable diseases, including HIV, that may be transmitted through the food supply.

The failed provision was voted on during consideration of the House-Senate compromise version of the Americans with Disabilities Act, which passed the Senate on July 13.

Supporters of the amendment claimed that based on public perception of communicable and infectious diseases like AIDS, restaurant owners should be entitled to reassign an infected worker. They also noted that the amendment called for the employer to make reasonable efforts to reassign such workers to other jobs.

"The issue here is whether the Senate is going to vote to deny restaurant operators and the patrons of those restaurants the right to be sure that all communicable diseases, such as HIV, such as AIDS, are not transmitted," said the amendment's sponsor Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Opponents argued that it was irresponsible of the Senate to act on an amendment like this that was based on people's fear and perjudice "instead of responsible public health considerations."

"I come from a state where men feared witches and hanged women. That was in the 1690's. This is the 1990's and I hope the Senate is mature enough ... to reject the appeals to witchcraft we have just heard," said Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in response to arguments for the amendment.

Voting to deny food handling jobs to HIV-infected workers: Gramm (R).

Voting against: Bentsen (D).

Midland County tax officials recognized

Staff Report

The Midland Central Appraisal District was one of 26 county appraisal districts recognized recently statewide for exceptional service.

The State Property Tax Board has presented the offices with certificates for outstanding appraisal performance during the 1989 tax year. The offices met standards of excellence, board officials said.

Other counties recognized were Aransas, Bee, Bell, Brazos, Coryell, Ellis, Gonzales, Houston, Kendall, Kerr, Lampases, McLennan, Medina, Milam, Mills, Montgomery, Reeves, Smith, Upshur, Uvalde, Van Zandt, Victoria, Webb, Wilbarger and Wilson.

Jim Robinson, the state board's executive director, said, "The quality of work done by these districts in 1989 directly reflects the commitment of their chief appraisers, staff members and directors."

Ron Stegall, chief appraiser for the Midland County offices, said he is honored by the award.

"I'm real pleased with it," Stegall said. "It means that I have a good staff."

Texas law requires tax appraisals to be equal, uniform and at market value The Property Tax Code sets appraisal criteria which, if met by a county appraisal district for two consecutive years, exempts that district from a performance audit.

The state board used the following criteria to award certificates of recognition:

- an overall median appraisal ratio between 0.9 and 1.1;
- an overall coefficient of dispersion below 0.15; and
- a difference of less than 0.2 between the highest and lowest median ratios among all property categories.

The 26 appraisal districts recognized appraised the typical property at between 90 percent and 110 percent of its market value and that their appraisals showed a high degree of uniformity, both in total and within specific property categories.

Sierra Blanca sheriff thinks WWII bombing might help town

By Suzanne Gamboa

SIERRA BLANCA (AP) — When U.S. troops dropped 10 bombs here by accident on July 13, 1944, it was the biggest thing that had ever happened in this small West Texas town.

Some think it still is.

Take Hudspeth County Sheriff Dick Love, who keeps an old clipping about the bombing in the top drawer of his desk and dreams the historical footnote could still bring bigger things to Sierra Blanca.

"I think there should be a monument up there and maybe it'll draw some people. I think it might help the town," Love said. "We could have signs that say: 'The only town in the continental United States bombed during World War II.' "

So far, Love hasn't been able to bring the Chamber of Commerce around to his way of thinking.

Seventeen practice bombs were dropped on Saluda County, S.C., in 1944.

Sierra Blanca was struck by 10 practice bombs, dropped at night by an Army Air Corps crew from Biggs Field in El Paso, 86 miles to the northwest.

The bombers mistook the town lights for a practice range, said Kent Vosper, the leader of the bombing crew and now a North Dakota state senator. He later flew bombing raids in Europe and was a prisoner of war in Nuremberg, Germany.

"It was a big mistake," Vosper said in a recent phone interview. He recalls at least three B-24 bombers were flying that night.

"We really don't know for sure which one did it," he said. "But we're kind of suspicious it was us."

Five bombs hit the railroad tracks. One dropped in the driveway of a filling station on the town's main drag. Folks in town still remember the instant attraction of the gaping hole.

"I went to school that morning and there was the bomb. It had exploded a few feet from the gas tanks," recalled James Peace, now a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

There were no large explosions because the bombs were packed with sand. But they did contain a small charge so they could be spotted when they landed.

No one was hurt, although old accounts say many residents were shaken from their beds by the explosions.

> "We could have signs that say: 'The only town in the continental United States bombed during World War II.' "
>
> — Hudspeth County Sheriff Dick Love

Alma Love, the sheriff's sister-in-law, recalls a railroad crew digging bombs out of the tracks within 100 feet of the home where she lived with her mother and two sons.

"I thought that couldn't be real because no one would waste a bomb on Sierra Blanca," she said. "Everybody was excited about it. Everybody had their own opinion about it. You know how it is in Sierra Blanca."

It isn't like it used to be.

Sierra Blanca was founded in 1881 when the Southern Pacific and Texas Pacific railroads were linked at the site. It remained a busy thoroughfare until the 1950s.

But then the railroad fell into disuse and the new Interstate 10 took a detour to the south. Tourists no longer came through town on U.S. Highway 80.

Sierra Blanca still has as many people as it did in the 1940s, with a population a little over 700. But today the main drag is in disrepair, lined with boarded-up buildings and just a few open businesses.

Tragedy drew international attention to the town in 1987, when 18 illegal aliens died there in a box car that had been locked and left in the desert.

But otherwise the town has drawn little notice.

It has tried to get tourists to return.

A pair of billboards on the interstate scream "Sierra Blanca: The World's Greatest Climate." A loosely organized business association tried without much success to raise money for more signs boasting the town's historical attractions.

Boosters hope to reopen the boarded-up Palace Hotel and believe tourists would come to see the adobe courthouse and the old wood-frame train depot, which not sits atop the spot where one of the bombs blew a crater 3 feet deep.

Sheriff Love is proud of it, bombs and all.

Dr. Clifford Booker, a friend and physician traveling with her, said Wednesday that Ms. Fitzgerald had nearly recovered from her condition but would cancel the rest of her European tour.

Ms. Fitzgerald was billed as the headline act at this year's North Sea Jazz Festival, which started Wednesday with a special concert in her honor. The tour also included appearances at music festivals in Montreux, Switzerland, and Antibes, France.

In "Mo' Better Blues," which opens Aug. 3, Williams plays a young singer drawn to a moody jazz trumpeter, played by Washington.

But Washington, who won an Oscar this year for "Glory," was moody on the set and more than once reminded Williams that she was a newcomer, she said.

"In rehearsals with him, I'd say, 'Well, I think this about my character.' And Denzel would say, 'Well, I think you should just shut up, because you don't know what you're talking about,'" she said.

Until her big break, Williams, 24, said she supported herself by keeping books for a restaurant in New York, a job she quit just two weeks ago.

Bernstein was in Japan to conduct the London Symphony Orchestra and to teach at a two-week festival for young musicians from 23 countries bordering the Pacific.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Foreclosure proceedings against county music star Tammy Wynette were dropped after the singer made a substantial payment on the $1.5 million estate, an attorney said.

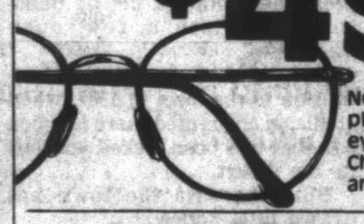

Wynette

The proceedings began this month after Ms. Wynette was late in making her mortgage payment, said her attorney, Ralph Gordon. A local bank had already approved a loan to allow her to pay off the mortgage for the eight-acre estate, he said.

Robert Doyle, an attorney for the estate's previous owners, Mo and Naomi Lytle, said the proceedings were dropped Friday after Ms. Wynette paid an undisclosed amount.

Ms. Wynette had been hospitalized last week with bronchitis but was resting at home Saturday. The singer went to the emergency room of Breech Medical Center in Lebanon, Mo., and later transferred to a hospital in Nashville, said a spokesman for her record label, Epic Records.

State Board lowers passing scores for TAAS tests

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education voted 14-0 Saturday to lower the scores students have to get to pass a much harder new statewide test.

The board, however, decided to leave lower passing scores in place for only one year.

The staff had recommended a phase-in period of possibly two years, depending on how well students do on the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills, or TAAS, which will be given in October.

TAAS, which replaces the easier Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills, or TEAMS, will be given to students in grades 3, 5, 7, 9 and 11. High school students must pass it to graduate. The TEAMS passing score is 70 percent.

During the 1990-91 school year, third- and fifth-graders will have to score 65 to pass, while students in grades 7, 9 and 11 will need to score 60.

Originally, no passing score was recommended for 1991-92, because the Texas Education Agency wanted to see how students scored this school year. That would allow the board to raise the passing score the second year or leave it the same. The third year, 1992-93, 70 would be passing.

The amendment adopted Saturday, which also could be changed by the board, makes 70 a passing score in 1991-92.

"We suggested the phase-in because of uncertainty" over whether students have been prepared for the "much harder" test, said State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby.

The old and new tests measure math, reading and writing skills.

But the new test "is moving much further in the area of problem-solving higher-order thinking skills," Kirby said. "And we do not believe at this point in time that every child has necessarily been adequately prepared in those skills."

On a trial run last October, more than half the 210,000 students who took the test failed in some categories, he said.

Board member Will Davis, Austin, failed on a 7-7 vote to set 65 as passing for all grades this school year with 70 passing in 1991-92. The board then adopted his motion, 11-3, to raise the passing score to 70 next school year.

Kirby questioned whether the board might be "in jeopardy of violating" students' rights by denying them graduation because they have not been prepared for the new test.

"We're not sure the schools have taught these areas, that's the problem we have," Kirby said.

Davis said, "What I think the test needs to tell us is, what is happening in the classroom from the curriculum we are imparting.

"The test should measure that curriculum. It seems to me that we've gotten the thing upside down. We don't worry about the curriculum — we get all tight about the test."

Kirby said, in fact, statewide tests determine the curriculum, because teachers know they must prepare students for certain tests.

"What we're trying to do is to move the curriculum further down the road into certain kinds of higher-order skills, and whether we think that testing ought to drive the curriculum or not is immaterial, because it really does," Kirby said.

A&M officials fear fraud article will tarnish research reputation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The dream of some Texas A&M scientists to unlock the secrets of cold fusion turned into a nightmare for the university.

Fackler

Faculty members and administrators fear a science journal's allegation of misconduct in the cold fusion lab will spook sources that provide the school with millions of dollars a year in grants.

A&M officials and the chief benefactor of cold fusion research at the university believe the allegation will be proven false. But they say it could still damage the school's reputation as a leading scientific and agricultural research center.

"I certainly am concerned about the image of the institution, and we all are," said John Fackler, dean of science at the 40,000-student university at College Station.

THE JUNE 15 issue of Science, the widely read journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, suggested results of a Texas A&M experiment were deliberately contaminated to produce a cold fusion effect.

The Science article also questioned Texas A&M's ability to ferret out misconduct. Some experts warn that a perception A&M has difficulty identifying fraud may be a bigger problem than the specific fraud accusation.

Because cold fusion research has gained a high profile, a researcher's misstep can affect an entire institution "particularly if there's been an insinuation ... that they somehow were condoning or looking the other way when there was misconduct going on," said Eric Glickenstein, a Washington attorney who has defended several scientists charged with misconduct.

"The rumors get into the network and it's incredibly difficult to get them out, even if there's no basis in truth," he said.

A&M has not enacted its three-step formal process for investigating fraud allegations.

"I DON'T think we've been struggling with when or when not to investigate this," Fackler said. "When we have evidence that would lead us to suggest a formal investigation, we'll do that.

"We've been investigating the whole process informally, continuously."

The cold fusion researchers work in an environment where they have to prove results to their peer group, he said.

"We could go to a police state and make sure everybody does every experiment in the eye of somebody else. But we don't want to do that in an academic institution," Fackler said.

"We're hopeful the funding agencies will recognize that we don't control the research going on at Texas A&M in the sense of scrutinizing everybody's work for its validity," he said.

The university has told its faculty not to speak to the media about the cold fusion flap.

BUT FACKLER, who is handling all related questions, said faculty members are worried the fraud allegations will jeopardize research grants. Funding already is hard to get. For instance, the National Science Foundation, which administers government science grants, funds about one of every three proposals it receives.

"When money is scarce, as is quite true these days, you often have a lot of proposals that seem close and seem fundable on the merits. What often breaks the ties are those intangibles, those subjective matters," Glickenstein said.

Texas A&M researchers received $71.4 million from the government in 1988, the latest year for which figures are available.

The company that gave $250,000 to Texas A&M for cold fusion work is standing behind the researchers.

Cold fusion is too young and its results too varied to make conclusions about the validity of individual experiments, said David Worledge, program manager in the nuclear power division of Electric Power Research Institute, or EPRI, in Palo Alto, Calif.

"RESEARCH QUITE often gives wrong results, particularly in that new area," Worledge said.

"There are so many mysterious aspects of the behavior of this stuff that have been observed in many labs, not just at Texas A&M," he said. "The technical community is in the process of trying to unravel it."

Texas A&M researchers, like hundreds around the world, joined the cold fusion race in the spring of 1989 after a University of Utah team announced it was possible to produce cheap, clean energy in ordinary lab equipment. The merger of hydrogen atoms into helium previously had occurred only under expensive extremes of heat and pressure.

But the promise of the room-temperature nuclear effect has since dwindled. Scientists have a difficult time reproducing each other's work and theorists haven't been able to explain what's going on.

The Science article suggests tritium was placed in several Texas A&M experiments and then cited as evidence that fusion had occurred.

But Fackler and Worledge said that if tritium was added deliberately in water, as Science suggested, it would have remained a long time. The tritium in A&M's findings disappeared over a few days.

EDMUND STORMS, a cold fusion researcher at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, said he failed in tries to contaminate experiments in the manner suggested by the article.

The behavior of tritium in A&M's experiment was not consistent with what would be expected if tritiated water was added, Storms told Science in a letter obtained by The Associated Press.

Some scientists say the atmosphere for potential misconduct in all university research was compounded when schools 10 years ago were given the ability to patent research and grant exclusive license for its commercial development.

A few university laboratories have integrated all their research with companies. Even the Japanese are taking advantage of U.S. basic research: Sony Corp. has endowed a professorship at the University of Illinois.

"They assess everything they do and every potential outcome for possible commercial use," said Leonard Minsky, director of the National Coalition for Universities in the Public Interest. "That means it's the profit motive that's the bottom line."

"Universities see in a football team a chance to make a few million dollars a year. And look at the kind of cheating that goes on there at the big universities. Why should research grants be any different?" said Robert Hazen, a Carnegie Institution chemist who wrote a book on the scientific frenzy that followed the discovery of high temperature superconductors.

SCIENTISTS HAVE historically tried to promote their research and will continue to until they get secure, long-term funding, he said.

"You can see in that response to obtaining funding the danger to the scientific process as it now stands," Hazen said. "We somehow have to justify ourselves, the bottom line, what we are doing for people."

Fackler said limited research funds and the promise of patent royalties have inhibited the usual free flow of scientific exchange.

"I think we've seen in this cold fusion business ... evidence of less than open discussion of results partly because of a patent," he said.

Not even the nation's most prominent scientists are immune. The National Institutes of Health is investigating whether Robert Gallo, its leading AIDS researcher, withheld credit, and therefore patent money, from a colleague.

Child released unharmed

Members of the Police SWAT Team in El Paso take 15-month-old Trey Mohrman from his father, Ed Mohrman, after the father held his son inside the house and threatened to kill himself and the child over a domestic dispute with his wife, who was not at home during the incident. The child was released unharmed, the father was arrested.

Texas Education Agency lowers accreditation of Huffman district

HOUSTON (AP) — A state agency lowered the accreditation status of the Huffman Independent School District after a review of the northeast Harris County district earlier this year found 15 deficiencies.

"They are not meeting ... all the mandates," Joey Lozano, a spokesman for the Texas Education Agency, said Friday. "They are having some kind of problems meeting what is required under law for them to offer in their education program."

The decision by the TEA lowers the four-school district's status from "accredited" to "accredited, advised," which is one step above "academically unaccredited," Lozano said. The status was lowered after a visit by a TEA accreditation team last February, he said.

The 2,000-student district has three years to return to accredited status; if the district's status is not raised in that time, the district will lose its accreditation.

Lozano said the TEA team's visit was routine; each public school district in the state is visited by an accreditation team every six years.

A report of more than 100 pages was issued by the TEA July 3 and describes 15 corrective actions the district must take to regain its higher status.

Included in the corrective actions is a description of behavior considered appropriate for board members and district staff, Lozano said.

The report also calls for more library books and better computer technology. For example, the district's high school, Hargrave High School, is required to have 10 library books per student, but has 7.5 books per student, principal Bob Crager said.

The TEA is sending a technical assistance team to meet with Huffman board members and officials, to discuss the report and to set deadlines for following the TEA's recommendations.

Richard Shafer, school board president, said the TEA's decision was not unexpected.

"The result (of the accreditation visit) is basically a side effect of the problems we've had in the past year. That was mainly the reason we got lowered," Shafer said.

The district's superintendent, Douglass Shands resigned in February rather than face a termination hearing linked to charges of perjury and tampering with government records. Shands, 49, had spent 18 years with the district.

Shands had been suspended with pay from his $54,000-a-year job since his arrest at his office in late August. A county grand jury indicted him for perjury and tampering with government records in connection with a $350,000 energy conservation contract with Honeywell Inc.

The indictments allege he made the contract appear to be a lease, rather than a purchase, by backdating it two years. He also is accused of lying to a Harris County grand jury about the contract.

Honeywell's office manager in Houston also was indicted for allegedly signing the altered contract. State law requires bids on any school purchase over $5,000. None was taken on the Honeywell contract.

Indictment in desert deaths stirs painful memories

EL PASO (AP) — The indictment of a jailed rapist in the serial killings of six young women and teen-agers has stirred painful memories in this city haunted by the Desert Deaths case.

David Leonard Wood, 33, of El Paso, was indicted Friday by a grand jury on serial murder charges. If convicted, he would face the death penalty or life in prison.

The decayed remains of the victims, between 14 to 23, were found in the desert in northeast El Paso between Sept. 4, 1987 and March 14, 1988.

Each of the victims had been missing at least two months before the body was discovered. All were buried in shallow graves within a half-mile of each other. Three people are still missing.

The deaths terrorized the city. The police department set up a special task force and encouraged youths not to hang out after dark. They told joggers not to run alone and warned runaways and prostitutes about the killings.

With each discovery of another body, tempers flared.

'As far as David Wood is concerned, I think he should die the same way he murdered those girls.'

— Annette Williams, Mother of Ivy Suzanna Williams

Some of the victims were runaways or prostitutes, and police were criticized for not responding more quickly to reports of their disappearances.

"I'm sure if we felt earlier on that we were involved with a serial killing, police would have handled it differently," said District Attorney Steve Simmons.

The victims were Desiree Wheatley, 16; Karen Baker, 20; Dawn Smith, 14; Angelica Frausto, 17; and Ivy Susanna Williams, 23; all of El Paso. Maria Rosa Casio, 24, was from Addison.

Wood, who is serving a 50-year term for a 1987 rape, had been mentioned before as a suspect. He has denied he killed anyone and even filed a $20.5 million lawsuit last year against Police Chief John Scagno, claiming police schemed to implicate him because they could not solve the case.

The indictment says Miss Williams was stabbed several times with a sharp instrument and the others were killed "by some means, instrument or weapon, unknown to the grand jury." The medical examiner was unable to determine how most of the girls were killed because their bodies were so badly decomposed.

"As far as David Wood is concerned, I think he should die the same way he murdered those girls," said Annette Williams, of Florissant, Colo., the mother of Ivy Susanna Williams, the sixth victim.

Wood has a long criminal record.

He was paroled to El Paso in 1987 after serving seven years of two concurrent 20-year sentences for raping a 12-year-old girl and for another rape. When he was arrested on those charges, he had only been out of prison a year.

He had been sentenced to five years in 1977 after pleading guilty to charges of indecency with a child.

Ms. Williams said she was jolted from her sleep the night Ivy was killed.

"She screamed, she screamed for me. That was the most horrible scream I've heard in my life. I felt that Ivy was dead," Ms. Williams said, sobbing as she recalled that night.

Marcia Wheatley had pressed police to find her daughter's killer since the night Desiree did not return home from a visit at a friend's home.

"I'm elated," she said after the indictment was announced.

STATE IN BRIEF

Richards asked to change stand

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A group of San Antonio pastors called on Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards to withdraw her public support for repeal of the Texas statute outlawing homosexual activity.

Asked about the law last week, Ms. Richards said she doesn't believe the government should be interfering in Texan's private lives "on any issue you can name."

Twenty-three clergymen from many denominations and churches signed a petition which criticizes Ms. Richards for accepting campaign contributions from groups that promote homosexual rights.

"What we do not want is a public stand by a politician to have (the sodomy law) repealed," Perez told the San Antonio Express-News.

"We think repeal of the Texas sodomy law is a bad public policy position for Ann Richards to take, and a position that deeply disturbs us as ministers of the gospel," Perez said.

Deaf Texans concerned

AUSTIN (AP) — Deaf Texans on Saturday complained to the State Board of Education that the education of the deaf in public schools has not progressed as it should.

After a brief outdoor rally, representatives of a group of about 30 deaf people told the board they are concerned that hiring practices by school districts discriminate against the deaf.

They said deaf children have no role models because districts are not recruiting deaf teachers, counselors, supervisors, coordinators or educators.

Also, they said, the Services for the Deaf division of the Texas Education Agency is not sensitive to deaf people's concerns and needs.

State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby told the board the TEA staff "will put together a presentation on the system of deaf education in Texas — where are we, how we set up, and how does the system work."

The report will include education of the blind, Kirby said.

Teen asks prison term

HOUSTON (AP) — A teen-ager with no criminal record turned down a sure shot at probation and opted to go to prison for killing a motorist during a drinking spree.

Prosecutor Chuck Noll said 19-year-old Parish James Benoit's legal maneuver was made to sidestep probationary requirements he otherwise would have faced.

Benoit on Friday withdrew his request for probation and was sentenced to four years in prison by state District Judge George Godwin.

"I see this more and more. It's getting ridiculous," Noll said. "It's a sad commentary on our criminal justice system when a young first offender chooses the penitentiary over a stringent probation."

The judge probably would have ordered Benoit, a dental lab technician, to spend 120 days in Harris County Jail and then released him on probation. Now, because of prison overcrowding and mass releases of convicts, Benoit will spend the same time in jail and have no post-parole supervision.

Benoit pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter in the Sept. 25, 1989, death of Glenn Turk, 24.

Policeman cleared

HOUSTON (AP) — For the third time, a Harris County grand jury has declined to indict a white former police officer in the controversial killing of a black security guard.

The panel opted Friday to no-bill former officer Scott Tschirhart, whose Nov. 15 shooting of Byron Gillum — including four shots in the back — touched off widespread public outcry.

"I'm sure it was not a unanimous vote," said prosecutor Don Smyth, who worked with the grand jury. "But you can say Friday the 13th was Tschirhart's lucky day."

Paris celebrates

PARIS, Texas (AP) — They weren't in France, so these Parisians celebrated Bastille Day Texas-style.

Festivities included the dedication of a 41-foot wooden replica of the Eiffel Tower — to go along with the oil derricks that dot the area — and the sixth annual Tour de Paris bicycle rally.

Love's Lookout popular recreation area

JACKSONVILLE (AP) — Just outside the city limits on U.S. Highway 69, an overlook commands a view described as the most beautiful in East Texas.

Love's Lookout is on a ridge at an elevation of about 700 feet. On a clear day the vista stretches as far as 35 miles eastward across green forests and rolling hills.

Troup's water tower sits on the horizon. The lights of Troup, New Summerfield, and even Longview twinkle in the distance on a clear night. The area has been a popular recreation spot since the 1840s.

W.T. Pinkard of Jacksonville is the grandson of John Wesley Love, who once owned the land crested by the lookout that bears his name.

Pinkard fondly remembers riding up the hill in his granddad's 1914 Cadillac. Grandfather and grandson would sit quietly a few minutes taking in the tranquil view, then drive on. Pinkard still insists a few minutes viewing the scene is equivalent to that much time in prayer.

Love preserved the lookout during his lifetime. "Granddad wouldn't permit anybody to change the look of it," Pinkard said.

A nurseryman, Love had bought a 600-acre tract that included the lookout at the turn of the century. He grew peaches on the land. In peak seasons, Love, known as the "Peach King," shipped more than 100 railroad carloads of fruit from the orchards.

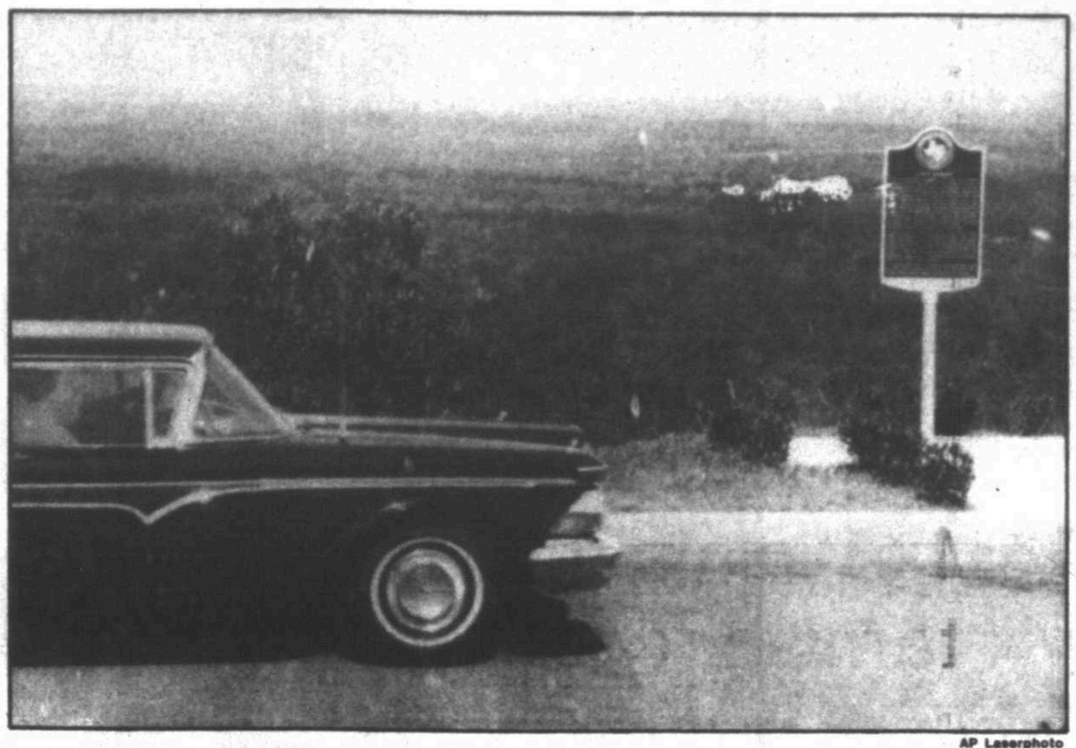

A few years after Love's death in 1925, his widow, Texanna Love, donated more than 20 acres including the lookout site to the state in memory of her husband.

An attractive state roadside park stands there, and Jacksonville Mayor Gene Brumbelow, who says his interest was piqued by Pinkard, sees great potential for civic and recreational development of the area.

Brumbelow visualizes residents pitching in to revitalize the spot as a major attraction at the city's northern door.

The state recently rated the roadside park as the top highway rest area in Texas, said Billy L. Black, Tyler district public affairs officer for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Teen admits setting Gilley's fire

PASADENA (AP) — A 16-year-old boy, despondent over a family problem, reportedly set the fire that gutted legendary Gilley's Club, officials said.

The Pasadena teen, accompanied by a friend, surrendered to arson investigators Friday afternoon and signed a statement detailing the July 5 blaze at the abandoned honky-tonk, authorities said.

Pasadena Fire Marshal Bill Yearout said the youth, whose name was withheld because he is a juvenile, indicated he started the fire "to release anger" over domestic woes.

Yearout said he is confident the boy is not lying about the blaze.

"He told us right where he set it and it's consistent with what we found. Only the person with that knowledge could have done it.

"There was a lot of finger pointing at what others suspected — or hoped," he said.

Angels fall 11-2 to Caps

■ Shreveport may have lost the brawl, but won an 11-2 decision over Midland Saturday.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Shreveport batters pounded four Midland pitchers for 11 runs and 16 hits Saturday night, spoiling the home debut of recently-promoted Angel pitcher Don Vidmar.

Vidmar, 0-1, lasted just two innings as the Captains struck for six hits and five runs in the first two innings en route to an 11-2 Shreveport win.

With the loss, the Angels drop to 9-12 in the second half. Midland had won its past four Saturday games before the shortfall to Shreveport.

The Angels were held to single runs in the third and fifth as Shreveport reliever Frank Potestio denied Angel batters for much of his 5⅔ innings. Potestio, who came on in relief of ejected starter Tom Hostetler, held the Angels to just two hits until a seventh-inning, three-hit outburst.

Hostetler and Mark Davis provided the post-July 4th fireworks as the two combined to begin a benches-clearing brawl.

The incident begin in the second inning when Davis stepped to the plate for his first at bat of the game. Hostetler popped Davis in the square of the back with an 88 mph fastball which prompted Davis to take off on a mission to the mound. Upon arrival, Davis popped back, landing a right and tackling Hostetler to the ground, quite likely before Hostetler knew what — or who — had hit him.

Needless to say the benches cleared immediately and several small but inconsequential skirmishes broke out.

The jawing didn't end there, though. At the end of the inning — a three-up, three-downer for Midland — Shreveport manager Bill Evers headed for his place

Locals keep eye on titles

■ Midlander Emily Hayes threw a no-hitter, highlighting the Saturday action at two fastpitch softball tournaments being played locally.

Staff Report

Local teams are still hoping to land titles in two huge softball tournaments here this weekend as Day Two was completed Saturday in the United Girls Softball competition in Ulmer Park and the ASA Division II under 16 and under 18 tournaments at the Bill Williams Softball Complex in Hogan Park.

Midland's Emily Hayes highlighted the ASA Under 18 tourney with three complete-game shutouts, including a no-hitter, to lead her Basin Stars into today's play undefeated. Hayes has three of the tournament's six shutouts.

ASA Tournaments

Hayes, an eighth-grader at Goddard, allowed only three hits and struck out 37 batters in her three games to lead the Basin Stars to today's 10:30 a.m. showdown with the Groves Hammers to determine who advances to the championship game at 1 p.m.

The morning loser would have to win an elimination game at noon in an effort to stay in the tournament.

The Hammers nipped the Midland Blue Diamonds 8-7 to gain a chance at the Stars. The Diamonds had defeated Don Ringler's of Temple 6-1 earlier Saturday.

Pitching against batters three and four years older than herself throughout the tournament, Hayes shut down Belton Summer Fun on one hit in a 14-0 romp late Friday, striking out 12.

Hayes threw her gem in her first game Saturday against the Vidor Outlaws, striking out 17 and walking seven in the Basin Stars' 6-0 win. She struck out nine straight, and was in trouble only in the sixth inning when she walked the bases loaded.

She followed up the no-hitter with a two-hitter against the Wichita Falls Class later Saturday, leading the Stars to an 8-0 win.

The Stars, featuring six Midlanders, have outscored tourney foes 28-0 this weekend.

In the 16 and Under division, Wichita Falls Boss and Groves Tuff Enuff are the only undefeated teams remaining going into a 9 a.m. game today between the two teams. Other teams remaining in the tourney include the China Spring Rising Stars and the Corsicana Raiders, who play in an elimination game at 10:30 a.m. today.

UGSA Tournaments

At Ulmer Park, Midland has produced mixed results in the AAA competition, except in Division III where both Midland teams are undefeated through Saturday and meet today at 11 a.m. for what surely would mean a near berth in Tuesday's finals.

Midland Pink got a single from Cindi Starritt in overtime to beat Abilene North Red 12-11 to go 2-0 in the tournament while Midland Mojo (White) won a 9-4 decision over Abilene South to also go to 2-0. However, White has both Pink and North Red to play today.

No other Midland teams were unbeaten, but Midland's Division IV team was to play its first game late Saturday night.

MC coach declines job

■ Chaparral tennis coach Joe Williams opts to stay in Midland — for now.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland College tennis coach Joe Williams has decided not to further pursue an opening for the head coaching vacancy at San Diego Mesa Junior College, saying late last week that the school's "lack of competitiveness turned me away."

Williams was one of three finalists for the head coaching job, which would have also come with an assistant professorship, an increase in salary and a cutback in the heavier workload he has coaching both men and women at MC.

Williams said openings still exist at Division I schools Trinity, Southern Methodist, Florida State, Duke and Southern Illinois at Edwardsville, but assured that he will return to MC for the 1990-91

Ugly Arkansas looks for marital bliss

The University of Arkansas must be loving every minute of every day lately. The ugly girl is acting like she is being courted for the first time.

Williamson

The Southeastern Conference seems oh-so-close to asking for her hand in marriage and Arkansas isn't saying no. The courtship is in full bloom, so to speak.

You see, Arkansas, being the only Southwest Conference team out of the state of Texas, has always felt a little like an outsider. The SWC has always been considered a "Texas" conference. Now someone has noticed, leaving the outcast Hogs in a mood acceptable to wooing.

Oh, don't get me wrong, Arkansas has rarely been a basement darling in any SWC sport. In fact, it was the "Texas" schools that probably set up this date with the SEC and Arkansas. Arkansas was one of only three SWC institutions (Rice and Baylor the other two) which didn't suffer the indignity of some kind of NCAA punishment over the past few years.

The SWC dug itself a rotten hole, and has yet to climb out of its own mess.

It doesn't take an investigator to see that the SWC has lost the luster of its once proud prestige. Arkansas thinks a marriage with the SEC is the remedy. In other words, jump a sinking ship while there is still a life raft available.

Now George Billingsley, current president of the Benton County Razorback Club, the state's largest, is trying to muster support for UA's departure from the SWC.

He wants to generate funding for a 10,000-seat expansion of Razorback Stadium, 11,000 more seats in Barnhill Arena and improvements at George Cole Field for a regional airport. In other words, it's time to get a new dress for the ugly girl while the new suitor is still looking.

Frank Broyles, UA athletic director, has said that his mail and calls are about 90 percent for leaving the SWC. If his figures are correct, there isn't any widespread opposition against a new marriage.

Broyles insists a move from the SWC is far from a "done deal," and played the real role of a member in a recent SWC get-together Thursday in Dallas. But you have to think Arkansas is going to take the SEC ring.

That will leave the next step to the University of Texas and Texas A&M, the SWC's two other teams with wedding appeal. Will they, too, jump ship? They just might if forced into a shotgun wedding.

The SWC would then be effectively gutted while Texas Tech, Rice, Baylor, Houston, SMU and TCU look for a place to land. If one of those happen to be your team, you better hope there are some solid contingency plans in the works.

It's felt here that Arkansas is going to start a domino falling game, and the SWC, as we know it today, is history. It's sad for those of us who have loved this conference, but you better brace for the change. One domino is about to fall.

When it does, you better have a tuxedo for the new marriages. What else can you do with a shotgun at your back?

Catcher Nicole Pullen of Midland blocks home plate as an Abilene player crosses the dish in Saturday play at the United Girls Softball Association national tournament at Ulmer Park.

Locals keep eye on titles

■ Midlander Emily Hayes threw a no-hitter, highlighting the Saturday action at two fastpitch softball tournaments being played locally.

Staff Report

Local teams are still hoping to land titles in two huge softball tournaments here this weekend as Day Two was completed Saturday in the United Girls Softball competition in Ulmer Park and the ASA Division II under 16 and under 18 tournaments at the Bill Williams Softball Complex in Hogan Park.

Midland's Emily Hayes highlighted the ASA Under 18 tourney with three complete-game shutouts, including a no-hitter, to lead her Basin Stars into today's play undefeated. Hayes has three of the tournament's six shutouts.

ASA Tournaments

Hayes, an eighth-grader at Goddard, allowed only three hits and struck out 37 batters in her three games to lead the Basin Stars to today's 10:30 a.m. showdown with the Groves Hammers to determine who advances to the championship game at 1 p.m.

The morning loser would have to win an elimination game at noon in an effort to stay in the tournament.

The Hammers nipped the Midland Blue Diamonds 8-7 to gain a chance at the Stars. The Diamonds had defeated Don Ringler's of Temple 6-1 earlier Saturday.

Pitching against batters three and four years older than herself throughout the tournament, Hayes shut down Belton Summer Fun on one hit in a 14-0 romp late Friday, striking out 12.

Hayes threw her gem in her first game Saturday against the Vidor Outlaws, striking out 17 and walking seven in the Basin Stars' 6-0 win. She struck out nine straight, and was in trouble only in the sixth inning when she walked the bases loaded.

She followed up the no-hitter with a two-hitter against the Wichita Falls Class later Saturday, leading the Stars to an 8-0 win.

The Stars, featuring six Midlanders, have outscored tourney foes 28-0 this weekend.

In the 16 and Under division, Wichita Falls Boss and Groves Tuff Enuff are the only undefeated teams remaining going into a 9 a.m. game today between the two teams. Other teams remaining in the tourney include the China Spring Rising Stars and the Corsicana Raiders, who play in an elimination game at 10:30 a.m. today.

UGSA Tournaments

At Ulmer Park, Midland has produced mixed results in the AAA competition, except in Division III where both Midland teams are undefeated through Saturday and meet today at 11 a.m. for what surely would mean a near berth in Tuesday's finals.

Midland Pink got a single from Cindi Starritt in overtime to beat Abilene North Red 12-11 to go 2-0 in the tournament while Midland Mojo (White) won a 9-4 decision over Abilene South to also go to 2-0. However, White has both Pink and North Red to play today.

No other Midland teams were unbeaten, but Midland's Division IV team was to play its first game late Saturday night.

Angels fall 11-2 to Caps

■ Shreveport may have lost the brawl, but won an 11-2 decision over Midland Saturday.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Shreveport batters pounded four Midland pitchers for 11 runs and 16 hits Saturday night, spoiling the home debut of recently-promoted Angel pitcher Don Vidmar.

Vidmar, 0-1, lasted just two innings as the Captains struck for six hits and five runs in the first two innings en route to an 11-2 Shreveport win.

With the loss, the Angels drop to 9-12 in the second half. Midland had won its past four Saturday games before the shortfall to Shreveport.

The Angels were held to single runs in the third and fifth as Shreveport reliever Frank Potestio denied Angel batters for much of his 5⅔ innings. Potestio, who came on in relief of ejected starter Tom Hostetler, held the Angels to just two hits until a seventh-inning, three-hit outburst.

Hostetler and Mark Davis provided the post-July 4th fireworks as the two combined to begin a benches-clearing brawl.

The incident begin in the second inning when Davis stepped to the plate for his first at bat of the game. Hostetler popped Davis in the square of the back with an 88 mph fastball which prompted Davis to take off on a mission to the mound. Upon arrival, Davis popped back, landing a right and tackling Hostetler to the ground, quite likely before Hostetler knew what — or who — had hit him.

Needless to say the benches cleared immediately and several small but inconsequential skirmishes broke out.

The jawing didn't end there, though. At the end of the inning — a three-up, three-downer for Midland — Shreveport manager Bill Evers headed for his place

MC coach declines job

■ Chaparral tennis coach Joe Williams opts to stay in Midland — for now.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland College tennis coach Joe Williams has decided not to further pursue an opening for the head coaching vacancy at San Diego Mesa Junior College, saying late last week that the school's "lack of competitiveness turned me away."

Williams was one of three finalists for the head coaching job, which would have also come with an assistant professorship, an increase in salary and a cutback in the heavier workload he has coaching both men and women at MC.

Williams said openings still exist at Division I schools Trinity, Southern Methodist, Florida State, Duke and Southern Illinois at Edwardsville, but assured that he will return to MC for the 1990-91

Ugly Arkansas looks for marital bliss

The University of Arkansas must be loving every minute of every day lately. The ugly girl is acting like she is being courted for the first time.

Williamson

The Southeastern Conference seems oh-so-close to asking for her hand in marriage and Arkansas isn't saying no. The courtship is in full bloom, so to speak.

You see, Arkansas, being the only Southwest Conference team out of the state of Texas, has always felt a little like an outsider. The SWC has always been considered a "Texas" conference. Now someone has noticed, leaving the outcast Hogs in a mood acceptable to wooing.

Oh, don't get me wrong, Arkansas has rarely been a basement darling in any SWC sport. In fact, it was the "Texas" schools that probably set up this date with the SEC and Arkansas. Arkansas was one of only three SWC institutions (Rice and Baylor the other two) which didn't suffer the indignity of some kind of NCAA punishment over the past few years.

The SWC dug itself a rotten hole, and has yet to climb out of its own mess.

It doesn't take an investigator to see that the SWC has lost the luster of its once proud prestige. Arkansas thinks a marriage with the SEC is the remedy. In other words, jump a sinking ship while there is still a life raft available.

Now George Billingsley, current president of the Benton County Razorback Club, the state's largest, is trying to muster support for UA's departure from the SWC.

He wants to generate funding for a 10,000-seat expansion of Razorback Stadium, 11,000 more seats in Barnhill Arena and improvements at George Cole Field for a regional airport. In other words, it's time to get a new dress for the ugly girl while the new suitor is still looking.

Frank Broyles, UA athletic director, has said that his mail and calls are about 90 percent for leaving the SWC. If his figures are correct, there isn't any widespread opposition against a new marriage.

Broyles insists a move from the SWC is far from a "done deal," and played the real role of a member in a recent SWC get-together Thursday in Dallas. But you have to think Arkansas is going to take the SEC ring.

Sheehan claims 36-hole record, six-stroke lead

Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. — Patty Sheehan shattered the U.S. Women's Open record for 36 holes on Saturday when she completed a two-day round of 4-under-par 68 to take a six-shot lead in the rain-plagued event.

The leading money winner on the LPGA Tour this year faces a 36-hole test on Sunday when the U.S. Golf Association will attempt to finish this championship by playing the final two rounds in one day.

"I'm very happy with my position," Sheehan said after posting her 10-under-par 134 score for two trips around the 6,298-yard Riverside Course at the Atlanta Athletic Club.

USGA officials said it was believed to be the first time a player ever got to 10-under in the Women's Open. She broke the 36-hole scoring record of 138 set last year by Betsy King.

It took Sheehan two days to complete the second round. She played three holes on Friday before darkness suspended play on a long day that had three rain delays totaling 6 hours, 11 minutes.

There also were two rain delays in the opening round on Thursday. Plans to finish the second round and also play the third on Saturday didn't develop because of overnight rain that kept players off the course until 1 p.m. EDT.

"Third-six holes to go and being six up doesn't mean I have a big cushion," Sheehan said. "I don't have a big cushion at all."

She held the lead over Jane Geddes, the 1986 Open champion who needed 12 hours and endured two rain delays before completing a 74 on Friday that left her at 140.

"Jane will be very aggressive," Sheehan said.

Sheehan rolled in a 12-foot birdie putt on the first hole late Friday. She had to play the last 13 holes on Saturday, scoring one other birdie on the front when she sank an 18-foot putt on No. 8.

She caught the left rough and then a bunker for her only bogey of the day on the 10th hole and had three more birdies down the stretch — from 15 feet on No. 11, 20 feet on No. 14 and 30 feet on No. 15.

There were 102 players in the field of 156 that had to finish their second round on Saturday, including 18 who played the full 18 holes.

"I'm glad Friday's over," Sheehan said.

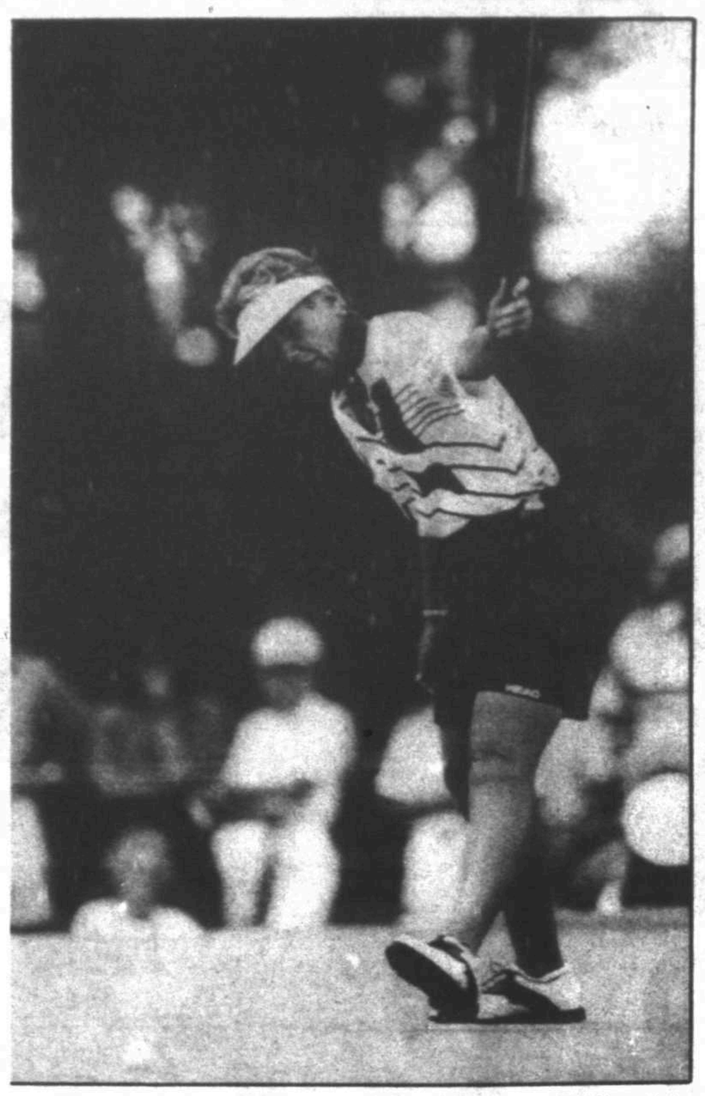

She said she'll be facing a 36-hole one-day test for the first time since her amateur days.

"I'll just plug along and do the best that I can," she said.

Sheehan has never won the Open, but has finished second twice. She already has won three tournaments this year and finished second in three others in earning $412,974. She can approach the $500,000 mark by winning this $85,000 first prize.

Walker, playing in the same threesome with Sheehan and Nancy Lopez, started the day only one shot behind Sheehan. She had six bogeys in 15 holes and fell well back in the pack at 144 after a 75.

Lopez, a Hall of Famer who has never won the Open, had a fat 76 for 144.

Beth Daniel and Rosie Jones, both of whom finished on Friday, headed a group deadlocked at 142. Daniel had her second consecutive 71 on Friday and Jones used a record-tying 31 on the back nine to post a 70. Janet Anderson, the 1982 Open winner, was also in the group at 142 after a 70.

King, the defending champion, had a 71 on Friday for 143, matching the halfway score of three-time Open champion Hollis Stacy, who completed a 72 on Friday.

Jerilyn Britz had a 74 Saturday for 143.

Verplank hangs on to PGA Boston lead

Associated Press

SUTTON, Mass. — Scott Verplank is enjoying playing "catch me" instead of catch up, in the Bank of Boston Classic.

"At least I don't have to pass anyone tomorrow," Verplank said Saturday after he retained a one-stroke lead with a second consecutive bogey-free round.

"You never know what's going to happen, but I like being in the lead," Verplank said after a 3-under par 68 for a 54-hole score of 203, 10 strokes under regulation, at Pleasant Valley Country Club.

"This isn't the best I've ever played, but I feel pretty comfortable," the former U.S. Amateur and NCAA champion from Oklahoma State said. "I haven't done anything spectacular, but I haven't had any major screwups. And I've always played well in front."

In a bid for his first tour victory since the 1988 Buick Open, Verplank had a one-stroke lead over Brian Tennyson, who finished a bogey-free third round with birdies on the last two holes.

"I just played well and gave myself a lot of chances," Tennyson said after a 65, three strokes off the course record, for his 204.

Although winless since joining the tour in 1987, Tennyson said "I feel like I'm ready."

"I'm comfortable in contention these days, I've got the experience," he said. "I feel like it can happen anytime."

Smith, the first-round leader with a 65, had a 69 on Saturday. Randolph, the 1987 Pleasant Valley champion, and Wood each shot 66 and Rose had a 68.

Eleven others, including 1983 Pleasant Valley champion Mark Lye and newly crowned Massachusetts Open champion Fran Quinn, were at 207.

Larry Rinker, who started one stroke behind Verplank, faltered on Saturday. He was within two strokes when he closed bogey-double bogey-bogey for a 73 and 209.

Forty-nine of the 73 players broke par on Saturday and nine others equalled par. The assault on par put 24 players within five strokes of the lead.

Mark Calcavecchia, the 1988 tournament winner who is preparing to defend his British Open title next week in Scotland, had a 71 for 212, nine off Verplank's lead. Two-time U.S. Open champ Curtis Strange had 69 for 209 and defending champ Brian McCallister was at 214 after a 71.

Verplank began the third round with a birdie-2 on the 183-yard first hole, then went to 9-under with a birdie at No. 5. He had eight pars and an 11th-hole birdie on the back side.

Marlboro Grand Prix has distinctive Andretti look

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The Marlboro Grand Prix wouldn't be the same without an Andretti on the front row, and this year it's going to be twice as good.

On Saturday, Michael held onto the pole position for the Indy car race, and was joined on the outside row by the race's permanent up-front fixture, Mario Andretti, a front-row starter in each of the seven years of this event.

"Dad was going one way yesterday and I was going the other," said Michael, who turned in a top qualifying speed of 114.652 Saturday. "It seems I was going the right way and he followed."

There's no doubt about that.

Not only did Michael Andretti improve on the speed (114.401) that gave him the provisional qualifying pole Friday, but Mario Andretti made enough adjustments to jump from the third qualifying spot Friday to No. 2, just ahead of Team Penske — which grabbed starting spots 3-5 with Emerson Fittipaldi, Rick Mears and Danny Sullivan, respectively.

"I think to some degree teams are ending up with one-car setups," said Mario Andretti, who qualified at 114.088, about nine-tenths of a mile per hour faster than the day before. "If a team has one car that is going fast then the others are going to follow that setup."

The 1-2 Andretti start marks the ninth time in 103 races that they will start on the front row and the second time that it's happened here. The other time was in 1986, and again Michael had the pole and Mario was on the outside. Danny Sullivan won the race.

Of the nine Andretti front-row starts, only twice has one of them gone on to win. Mario Andretti won the 1986 Pocono 500 and Michael Andretti won the 1987 Michigan 500. Both times Michael Andretti had the pole.

Michael Andretti, who has won two of the last three CART races, has not fared well at the Meadowlands. His best finish was fourth in 1985.

Mario Andretti won the first race here in 1984 and finished second in 1987 and '88. He has led at some point in each race here.

Fittipaldi, who had won the last two pole positions here since the track was redesigned to a six-turn modified oval, improved his speed (113.871) by 1.8 mph Saturday.

Washout makes senior tourney wide open

Associated Press

MASON, Ohio — The deluge that washed out play Saturday and reduced the Kroger Senior Classic to 36 holes also left it wide open.

At least a dozen players have a shot at the $90,000 winner's check, co-leader Lee Trevino said Saturday. Dave Hill, the other leader, was even more generous in his estimate.

"You've got to go all the way to the 2-unders — at least a dozen guys," Trevino said. "It would be difficult to come from even par."

Beyond Trevino and Hill, who are tied at 6-under-par 65, there are 21 other players who were at least two under par after Friday's round.

"Anybody within six shots can win," Hill said.

That would put 42 players within range.

"Lee has definitely got to be your favorite, because he's been playing so well," Hill said.

The $600,000 tournament has been under a cloud all week. The first round of the pro-am event over the 6,628-yard, par-71 Grizzly Course at the Jack Nicklaus Sports Center had to be suspended at midday Wednesday.

Thursday's round was canceled when the course couldn't absorb 4½ inches of rain, which left fairways so soggy that players were allowed to move their ball from casual water on Friday.

Then, another inch of rain fell overnight, forcing cancellation of Saturday's round and creating some interesting possibilities.

One stroke behind the leaders were Joe Jimenez, a 64-year-old lifetime club pro; Walt Zembriski, a retired ironworker, and John Paul Cain, a stockbroker from Houston.

Among the five players at 67 is Jim Dent, who must be considered a threat because "he hits the ball 40 yards farther than any of us, and this course is going to play very long," Trevino said.

Also in the group at 4-under are Rives McBee, Homero Blancas, Charles Coody and George Archer, who won last week's Northville Long Island Classic.

Eight players are at 69, nine at 70 and 10, including Arnold Palmer, are at even-par 71.

Tournament officials expected Sunday's round to be played, even if the start had to be delayed until midday.

Several players, including Trevino, have reservations on Sunday evening flights to Scotland for next week's British Open.

"I take first things first. If I don't make that flight, there's got to be another one Monday," Trevino said.

The Senior PGA Tour never has faced the possibility of an 18-hole tournament.

Capriati on brink of first tournament title

Associated Press

CONWAY, N.H. — Fourteen-year-old Jennifer Capriati slammed her way to the brink of her first tournament victory Saturday, defeating Susan Sloane 6-2, 6-2 to reach the finals of the Mount Cranmore International Women's Tennis Championship.

Capriati, fresh from record-setting performances in two Grand Slam events in Europe, set the tone of the semifinal in the sixth game of the 25-minute first set.

The Tampa, Fla., native, up 3-2, overcame a 0-40 deficit and survived four game points to break Sloane's serve. She won the next four games, breaking serve twice.

"When it's close like that, when she gets the lead, then she really starts going," the fifth-seeded Sloane, 19, said.

Sloane, losing to Capriati for the fourth time in as many tries, said her top-seeded opponent plays big points well and takes chances to come from behind.

"It's just something, one of those little things I have," Capriati said. "I don't really work at it."

Capriati makes her third appearance in a final when she meets third-seed Ros Fairbank on Sunday. Fairbank scored a minor upset with a 7-6 (12-10), 6-2 victory over second-seeded Laura Gildemeister.

Up 4-2 in the second set, Capriati brought a 0-40 deficit to deuce and Sloane lost two game points before holding serve with a crosscourt winner.

Capriati held serve to make it 5-2 and won when Sloane hit into the net on double match point.

Capriati, the youngest semifinalist in the French Open and the youngest woman to win a match at Wimbledon, had a harder time Friday in beating Stacey Martin 6-4, 7-5. Capriati had gotten two byes into the quarterfinal.

Capriati had 11 double faults in the quarterfinal and only one Saturday.

"First rounds are always kind of shaky for me and as the tournament goes on I get better," she said.

Bosox put Evans on disabled list

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox put designated hitter Dwight Evans on the 15-day disabled list Saturday and promoted infielder Tim Naehring from Pawtucket of the International League.

Evans, who has played all season with back pain, now has an inflammed left hamstring that kept him out of Saturday's day-night doubleheader against the Kansas City Royals.

Dr. Arthur Pappas, the team physician, said the back pain has increased and the hamstring injury prevents Evans from extending his leg while hitting. The 18-year veteran is batting .235 with 10 homers and 44 RBIs in 81 games.

Naehring, 23, is expected to be given a shot at Boston's shortstop job after joining the Red Sox for Sunday's series finale against the Royals. Going into his Class AAA game Saturday night at Rochester, he was batting .266 with 15 homers and 47 RBIs in 81 games.

Naehring, Boston's eighth round pick in the June 1988 draft, went to spring training with Boston as a non-roster player.

Spain's Eduardo Chozas (right) and Italian Roberto Conti ride side-by-side as Greg LeMond of the U.S. (center) gives pursuit in the Tour de France Saturday.

LeMond starts to make move

Tour de France

Associated Press

AUTRANS, France — Greg LeMond said before this year's Tour de France that he was in better shape than last year, when he came back from an accidental shooting and injuries to win dramatically.

Midway through the Tour this year, he said it was the easiest one he has participated it.

Then why wasn't he winning?

"There are still 10 days to go," LeMond said.

After a day off on Friday, LeMond cut almost five minutes off the lead of Claudio Chiappucci of Italy, moving from fourth to third behind Chiappuci and Eric Breukink of the Netherlands.

On the final day off last year, LeMond was in first place after the second time trial. He was going to lose the lead again. But he captured the victory with dramatic last day time trial over Laurent Fignon.

"Last year was a totally different race from this year," LeMond said. "There are now two guys at the head who had a 10-minute head start at the beginning of the race, Pensec and Chiappucci. If they didn't have the 10-minute head start, I would be in second place, about 30 seconds behind Breukink."

Before Saturday, he was fourth, 7 minutes 27 seconds behind Chiappucci and almost six minutes behind Pensec. But both Chiappucci and Pensec, LeMond's "Z" teammate, faultered in 86-degree heat Saturday. After finishing the 13th of 21 stages in a group of five at the lead, LeMond was only 2:34 behind Chiappucci with Breukink second, 2:02 behind.

Pensec faded to fourth overall, 4:11 behind.

"I am not worried," LeMond said.

On the first day, Chiappucci, Pensec, Steve Bauer of Canada and Frans Maassen escaped for a 10-minute gap that held up through the first stage. Since Pensec was a member of LeMond's team, there was no reason for him to respond.

"It is the fault of the other teams. Pedro Delgado's team, Breukink's team," LeMond said. "If they were serious about winning, they should have controlled the race on the first day. It just worked out that way."

Bauer used it as a springboard to hold the lead for the first nine days before he faded in the mountains.

LeMond has been steady though it all. He was even kept under wraps as a defensive move on Wednesday in the steep 12th stage over three peaks.

"I got away and rode up l'Alpe d'Huez the easiest I have gone up there," LeMond said. "Only one thing I regret is that I could have had more time on Delgado because he did most of the work. And more time on Breukink and Chiappucci."

Delgado, the 1988 winner, is currently in fifth, 4:39 off the lead.

"If I had been more aggresssive," LeMond added, "Breukink wouldn't have been this close and Chiappucci would have been several minutes behind."

But LeMond could not attack and take the lead to distance himself from his teammate. LeMond stayed behind and Pensec caught up.

However, when Pensec lost the lead Thursday, it freed LeMond from team obligations and will now make the Z team work for him.

"We are going to race a bit differently from now one," LeMond said.

After his difficulties rounding into shape following a winter of publicity demands and a spring virus, it would seem a fourth place would have been over achieving.

After all he was almost three hours behind in the Tour of Italy and had a string of "Did Not Finish" labels next to his early season results.

But that was before the Tour de France.

ANGELS: Home record 20-26

From 1C

along the third base line when he and Angel manager Eddie Rodriguez got into a lengthy, nose-to-nose heated discussion as the umpires carefully monitored the exchange.

Meantime, Shreveport players were giving the first base umpire their amplified opinions of the umps' decision to extract Hostetler from the game.

Rodriguez would only comment after the game that "those things happen in baseball," and refused to speculate on whether the pitch which hit Davis was retaliation from Friday's game.

Davis homered in the second inning Friday and was hit by a pitch in the seventh. Later in the seventh, Davis stole third with the Angels up 10-3, apparently salt in an already hurting Shreveport wound.

"I can't comment on that," Rodriguez said of the retaliation factor. "Nobody can prove it was intentional ... the pitcher was at fault."

The Angels scored their first run in the second when Mark Howie doubled home Reed Peters after Peters had reached on an error.

The final Midland run came when Luis Aguayo doubled and came home on a Jeff Barns' single.

Shreveport's top three batters — Andres Santana, Ted Wood and Dave Patterson — each had two RBIs and combined to score four of the 11 Captain runs.

Captains Juan Guerrero and Tom Ealy each had three hits in four trips to the plate.

The Angels fall to 20-26 at home this season and have a 4-37 record when trailing after seven innings.

ANGEL NOTES: A telling stat, even though the Captains did not score against Midland in the ninth Saturday night: Midland has been outscored 81-29 in the last season through all its games this year ... Angel starters have worked at least six innings in six of the last 10 games ... Angel relievers had an ERA of 2.08 in the eight games prior to Saturday's ... Reed Peters has hit safely in nine of the last 11 games ... Sunday's contest between Midland and Shreveport begins at 6 p.m. at Angels Stadium ... The Famous Chicken returns for his second and final appearance of the season Wednesday, July 18.

COACH: Few tennis vets return

Despite winning the national women's title this spring, all has not been well in the summer for the MC tennis program, which has been faced with several unhappy players who have departed, and eroding conditions at the MC tennis center.

In May, five of the six starters at the men's national tournament in Tyler were sent back to Midland early after Williams became upset with what he considered a lack of effort.

Concerning the less-than-perfect condition of the MC tennis center, Williams has been told by school officials that discussions are under way concerning improvements at the courts.

Williams said he is still trying to piece together next year's schedule which he said is always one of his most difficult tasks. The isolation of Midland and a lack of enough junior college competition in the region makes for several long drives during the season. Williams did confirm, however, that the Chaps will play a match with the University of Mississippi during the 1990-91 season.

Several players who were freshmen last year have decided not to return for a second year at MC. Janneke Garos will be the only returning starter on the women's team, and Jerrod White and Richard Patte, two of MC's lower seeds, are the only two returning from the men's team.

James Homan, No. 6 in men's singles, and Missy O'Neill, the No. 6 women's player, both opted to complete their junior college careers at Palm Beach (Calif.) Community College.

Maria Vago, a freshman who played No. 2 doubles with Alison Bradford, has also decided against a return to Midland. Vago's family is moving to New York state where she has decided to attend school.

Bradford received a scholarship after her freshman year at MC to attend the University of Utah, located in her home state.

Men's No. 1 player Bernt Gade signed with Southwest Texas state, and No. 4 Jesper Witt has said he will not return.

It is still uncertain whether No. 3 singles player Amine Kadiri will be back for his sophomore year, although odds appear against the Moroccan's return, Williams said.

Williams said several of the players, including Witt and Gade, did not like the change of lifestyle after moving to Midland. Witt and Gade are both from Holland. Their dissatisfaction with West Texas apparently prompted their looking to other schools.

Garos will be the only returner with experience at MC, but she will be joined by Holland's Ann Marie Smalt who was red-shirted last year but did attend MC as a student.

Williams has signed Miriam Berthe of Senegal, Africa, and is recruiting England's Caroline Reynolds for the women's team. Adriana Asada, of Colombia also looks like a strong hopeful for the women's side.

For the men, Williams has also received written commitments from Toby Curtis, a 6-6 lefthander from England and David Draper, a 6-3 lefthander who is a member of the British National Team. Also having given written commitments are 6-2 lefty Robin van Beveran of Holland. And the top-ranked Ethiopian player, Berhe Sereckebrahn, has given a verbal commitment.

American in title game

Staff Report

Midland American got all three runs it needed in the first inning and held on for a 3-2 win over Lamesa to advance to today's Big League District 3 championship game against El Paso at 10 a.m. on Simon Field.

Lamesa scored single runs in the sixth and seventh innings, but Midland hurler Brian Rounding secured the win. Shane Myrick took the loss for Lamesa, despite throwing a two-hitter.

Senior League: Midland National gave itself a chance at a rematch with Midland American on the strength of an 11-7 win over Lamesa in loser's bracket action Saturday. National and American will face off in the championship game at 2 p.m. today at Simon Field. If National wins, the teams will play again at 8 p.m.

Junior League: Lamesa stayed alive in the 13-year-old tourney with a 5-1 win over Midland American in losers bracket action Saturday.

Lamesa pitcher Alvin Cantu struck out 14, though Midland American outhit his teammates 4-2. Johno Summers had one of Midland's four hits with a triple.

Chad Bayley took the loss, though Lamesa was only able to scratch out single runs in the first, fourth and seventh to go with two in the fifth.

Lamesa will face the Midland National-El Paso winner in the championship game at 2 p.m. today. If Lamesa wins, a second game will be played at 7:30 p.m.

No results of the Midland National-El Paso game were available at press time.

Little League: In the Little League all-star tournament in Big Spring, Big Spring International defeated Lamesa 9-1 in the only game scheduled Saturday.

The BSI win eliminated Lamesa and sets up a losers bracket final against Midland North Central at 7:30 p.m. Monday. The winner of that game will play Midland Mid Cities for the tournament title.

Lamesa scored its run in the first inning and held the lead until the bottom of the fourth, when Manual Cervantes hit a grand slam home run. Cervantes also hit a two-run homer in the fourth, while Brandon McGuire and Jose Pesina smacked solo shots.

Cervantes has now hit home runs in four straight games, while McGuire has circuit clouts in three consecutive outings. McGuire also picked up the win on the pitchers mound, where he went the distance by striking out 14, walking three and allowing but two hits.

Joyner-Kersee finds gold in second place

USOF

MINNEAPOLIS — Finishing second at the U.S. Olympic Festival was as good as gold for Jackie Joyner-Kersee.

Joyner-Kersee ran the second leg on a 400-meter relay team that finished second Saturday to the foursome that will represent the United States at the upcoming Goodwill Games. Joyner-Kersee's team won the gold medal, however, because the winning team was running only as an exhibition.

Joyner-Kersee, the world record holder in the heptathlon, also cleared 6 feet, 2 inches in a high jump exhibition. That would have won the competition, but instead the winner instead was Latrese Johnson oif Riverside, Calif., who cleared 6 feet.

The 6-2 by Kersee was her best jump since clearing 6-4 at the 1988 Olympic Trials heptathlon. She made all four of her jumps, clearing 5-8, 5-10 and 6-0 before making her final jump.

"We just wanted to clear 6-2," Joyner-Kersee said. "The good thing about today was I was able to execute the things I've worked on in practice. To clear it on my first attempt was really good."

American record-holder Hollis Conway will compete in the men's high jump on Sunday. It will be his first competition since cutting short his schedule in Europe because of the death of his father July 1.

In diving, Wendy Lucero did well on her "make it or break it" dives and easily won her third straight Olympic Festival 3-meter springboard title.

But in Saturday's finals, she received scores in the 6- and 6½-point range on both the back 2½-somersault from the tuck position and reverse 2½ tuck to win the gold.

"If you're ahead after those dives," Lucero said, "you're pretty much going to take it."

Lucero scored 500.34 points. Wilson, the 1990 U.S. and NCAA champion and the festival's top preliminary qualifier, was never a factor after the seventh round and finished fourth with 467.55 points.

The surprising silver medalist with 475.44 points was Julie Farrell of Holt, Mich., the 12th and final qualifiers in prelims. Cokey Smith of Ann Arbor, Mich., won the bronze with 471.18.

It was the best-ever finish for either diver.

"I'm amazed," Farrell said. "I dove absolutely terribly on Thursday and was surprised I even made the top 12."

Meanwhile, records continued to fall in weightlifting.

Melanie Getz of Brentwood, Mo., competing in the 56 kilogram class, set an American record of 73.5 kg on her fourth snatch attempt. She set a festival record of 70 kg on her first snatch try, then missed her next two before trying for the American record of 73.0 kg set May 4 by Lynn Stoessel of Marietta, Ga.

Women's weightlifting has been in the festival only two years.

Robin Byrd of Newman, Ga., competing in the 52-kilogram class, set the U.S. and festival records in the snatch (72.5), clean and jerk (85) and combined total lift (157.5) on Friday night.

Also Friday, Chris LeRoux of Largo, Fla., competing in the men's 52-kilogram class, set a U.S. junior record in the snatch by lifting 85 kilograms. The 13-year-old set another U.S. junior record in the clean and jerk (112), and finished with the U.S. men's record of 115.5 kg on his final attempt.

LeRoux also broke the festival total record of 177.5 kg by lifting 200 kg.

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Thirty years after quarterbacking his last down for Penn State, Galen Hall is returning to his alma mater to restart his football coaching career as a graduate assistant.

Out of coaching since being forced to resign as Florida's head coach last Oct. 8 amid a scandal over NCAA rules violations, Hall rejoins the coach who recruited him as a player in 1958, Nittany Lions coach Joe Paterno.

Thon again terrorizes Houston

Associated Press

Dickie Thon had a homer among three hits, again tormenting his former teammates, and the Philadelphia Phillies set a club record with nine runs in the fourth inning while beating the Houston Astros 12-8 Saturday night.

NL

In the last three games against Houston, Thon has six hits in 13 at-bats with three home runs, five RBIs and five runs scored.

The Phillies, who finished with 17 hits — including three each by Von Hayes, Steve Lake and Len Dykstra — broke a 79-year-old record for most runs ever in the fourth inning. The previous record was eight, on May 11th, 1911 against Pittsburgh.

Cardinals 2, Giants 1

Willie McGee and Terry Pendleton had RBI hits in the eighth inning as the St. Louis Cardinals cooled off San Francisco, snapping a five-game losing streak against the Giants.

San Francisco pitcher Trevor Wilson (6-1) had a no-hitter through 6 2-3 innings before Tom Pagnozzi singled. Wilson pitched a one-hitter earlier this season against San Diego, losing a perfect game after eight innings.

The Giants had won five straight overall and eight of 11 in July.

Wilson struck out Todd Zeile to start the eighth Saturday night, but walked Craig Wilson, who gave way to pinch-runner Rex Hudler. He reached third when second baseman Robbie Thompson erred on a grounder by Ozzie Smith, who was out trying for second.

Pirates 8, Padres 4

R.J. Reynolds' two-run single broke an eighth-inning tie and Barry Bonds homered as the surging Pittsburgh Pirates continued to dominate San Diego by beating the Padres.

Pittsburgh has won 10 of 11 games against the Padres, including all five at Three Rivers Stadium, after losing nine of 12 to them last season.

The Pirates, 20 games over .500 for the first time since their World Series championship season of 1979, have won 10 of 12 overall. The Padres have lost 13 of 15 and are 0-3 under new Manager Greg Riddoch.

Dodgers 7, Cubs 0

Kal Daniels hit two three-run homers for a career-high six RBIs and Mike Morgan pitched a three-hitter to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers past Chicago Cubs.

Daniels hit a three-run homer in the first and another in the eighth, both off Greg Maddux (4-9).

Morgan (8-7) struck out two and walked two in his fourth shutout and fifth complete game this season. It was the third consecutive victory for the Dodgers and the sixth straight loss for the Cubs.

Maddux, who hasn't won in 13 starts since May 5, gave up seven hits and all seven runs in eight innings.

Mets 6, Reds 3

David Cone struck out 10, becoming the first Met pitcher in two years to reach double figures in three straight games, as New York beat the Cincinnati Reds.

By winning, the Mets remained two games behind the Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League East. The Pirates defeated the San Diego Padres 8-4 earlier Saturday.

Todd Hundley singled to start a two-run rally in the third inning and added an RBI single in a two-run fifth.

Cone (6-4) allowed five hits and walked three in 7 2-3 innings. John Franco got the final four outs for his 18th save, but allowed two runs on three straight doubles in the ninth.

The last New York pitcher to reach double figures in strikeouts in three straight games was Sid Fernandez, in 1988.

Braves 3, Expos 2
Expos 6, Braves 2

Oil Can Boyd pitched seven shutout innings and Mike Fitzgerald drove in three runs as the Montreal Expos beat the Atlanta Braves 6-2 for a split of their doubleheader.

Tommy Gregg's three-run, eight-inning homer gave Atlanta a 3-2 victory in the first game.

Boyd (5-3) gave up three hits, struck out one and walked three.

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan pulled within two games of his 300th victory as Texas beat the Detroit Tigers 5-3 for the Rangers seventh consecutive victory Saturday night.

AL

Ryan (9-4) allowed three runs on four hits in 5 2-3 innings in his first start in Tiger Stadium since 1978 before his lower back tightened up.

He left the game leading 5-2 after walking the bases full. With a 3-0 count on Mark Salas in the sixth, he signaled for for the Texas trainer. After a brief chat, Ryan walked off the field.

The victory came just one day before the 17th anniversary of one of Ryan's most famous wins — his second career no-hitter — a 6-0 win over the Tigers on July 15, 1973, at Detroit. Ryan has not won at Tiger Stadium since a 4-3 decision over Jim Slaton on July 23, 1978.

Royals 2, Red Sox 1
Red Sox 8, Royals 7

Ellis Burks' pinch-hit three-run homer in the eighth gave the Boston Red Sox an 8-7 victory and a split of a day-night doubleheader against the Kansas City Royals.

Athletics 3, Brewers 1

Bob Welch won his major league-leading 14th game and Jose Canseco hit his 24th home run to lead the Oakland Athletics past the Milwaukee Brewers.

Welch (14-3), who lost his last start to the Brewers in Milwaukee, threw 90 pitches in the first four innings and walked four batters. But he worked out of four jams and got stronger as the game went on.

White Sox 8, Yankees 7

Ron Karkovice homered with one out in the 10th inning as the Chicago White Sox beat the New York Yankees after blowing a seven-run lead.

It was the Yankees' fourth straight defeat and ninth loss in 11 games against Chicago this season. The White Sox have won 10 consecutive road games.

Orioles 3, Twins 2

Phil Bradley singled home Mike Devereaux in the 11th inning as Baltimore beat the Minnesota Twins, the Orioles fifth victory in six games.

Devereaux led off with an infield hit. Billy Ripken sent Devereaux to second with a soft single to center, and Steve Finley followed with a bunt that Terry Leach (2-3) mishandled for an error.

Indians 3, Mariners 0

Bud Black and Doug Jones combined on a five-hit shutout, Cleveland's second this year against Seattle, as the Indians won their third straight.

Black (8-4), who extended his scoreless streak to 23⅔ innings, gave up four hits over 7⅔ before Jones came in for his 25th save.

NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON THE ENVIRONMENT AND

NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FUNDS JULY 15, 1990

City Of Midland
300 N. Loraine
P.O. Box 300
Midland, Texas 79702

TO: All interested Agencies, Groups and Persons

On or about August 3, 1990, the City of Midland (CITY), Midland County, Texas will request the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to release Federal funds under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-383) for the following project:

Parking lot for Martin Luther King Park (Location: southeast of East Magnolia Avenue and Parkway Draw) (CDBG Cost: $31,996).

FUNDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT

It has been determined that actions for which a request for the release of funds is being requested will not constitute actions significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and accordingly the CITY has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (P.L. 91-190). The reason for such decision not to prepare a Statement is based upon the fact that all environmental concerns could either be minimized or mitigated.

Environmental Review Records (ERR) of the project have been made by the CITY. They document the environmental review of the project and set forth the reasons why such a statement is not required. The ERR is on file at the Planning Division Office, City Hall, Room 220, 300 N. Loraine, and is available for public examination and copying upon request between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

No further environmental review of the project is proposed to be conducted prior to the request for release of Federal funds.

DECISION TO PERFORM PROJECT IN FLOOD PLAIN

The public is advised that the proposed project is to be undertaken within a 100 year Flood Plain. This announcement satisfies Step Seven (7) of an eight step decision making process. A determination to proceed with the project can be made based on the following:

1. The project is within a developed area of Midland.
2. The park would remain relatively inaccessible without the proposed parking lot.
3. There are no other practical alternative sites. The only alternative action would be 'no action'.
4. No impact on the floodplain is expected because of the project.

PUBLIC COMMENTS ON FINDING

All interested agencies, groups and persons disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration to the CITY to the address as set for the above. Written comments should be received at the address specified on or before July 30, 1990. All comments received will be considered and the CITY will not request the release of funds or take administrative action on the project prior to the date specified in the preceding sentence.

RELEASE OF FUNDS

The CITY will undertake the project described above with Community Development Block Grant funds under Title I from its fiscal 1989 program under grant numbered B-89-MC-48-0023 from the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. The legal effect of the certification is that upon its approval the CITY may use the Block Grant funds and HUD will have satisfied its responsibilities under the National Environmental Policy Act. HUD will accept an objection to its approval only on one of the following bases: (a) that the certifications were not in fact executed by the certifying officer or other officer of CITY approval by HUD; or (b) that the environmental review record for this project indicates omission of a required decision, finding, or step applicable to the project in the environmental review process. Objections must be prepared and submitted in accordance with the required procedure (24CFR Part 58) and should be addressed to HUD, P.O. Box 2905, Fort Worth, Texas 76116-2905.

Objections to the release of funds on bases other than those stated above will not be considered by HUD. No obligations received after August 20, 1990, will be considered by HUD.

A New PERSPECTIVE

A wide open floor plan which creates a light, airy atmosphere is one of the most often requested attributes in a new home. When a Realtor finds one packed with architectural detailing, the result is very satisfying.

A winding staircase between the formal living and dining rooms provides a different angle in which to view the downstairs areas in this week's featured home. This contemporary townhome is located in Saddle Club North. It includes three or four living areas, four bedrooms and four baths.

One wall in the foyer is lined with a blue fabric. The glass front door is centered on the opposite wall. Two windows are situated on each side of the door and view the landscaped walkway that leads to the entrance.

White cabinets, a navy and white wallpaper and a brick flooring are a few of the amenities in the functional kitchen and breakfast room, above. This home features four spacious bedrooms that each open onto a bath. The child's bedroom, left, is decorated in shades of pink and two windows frame the front yard.

NEW: 4,700 sq. ft. home offers wide open spaces

(From 1D)

The formal living room is located to the left of the front entrance. The fireplace serves as the focal point along the far wall and tall windows frame the front yard. An angled ceiling with recessed lighting and mirrors along two walls add to the elegance of this area.

A wet bar is hidden behind the formal living area. It features mirrored walls and glass shelves. An entertainment cabinet is built-in next to the bar.

An extra-wide corridor connects the formal living room with the formal dining area and may possibly be one of the most appealing aspects in this home. The right wall is mirrored, reflecting this unique space, and a sitting area can be placed against this wall. The ceiling spans into the second story and skylights add to the openness of this area.

The formal dining room is hidden behind the staircase and is highlighted by two sets of atrium doors that lead and frame the intimate back yard. A crystal chandelier descends from the ceiling.

Two doorways at each end of the mirrored wall open into either the kitchen or the breakfast room. White cabinets and countertops, a brick flooring and lots of storage cabinets are the amenities of this area. The appliances include a Litton microwave and self-cleaning oven, a Kenmore dishwasher and a General Electric trash compactor and cooktop. An opening above the sink views the corridor between the formal living areas.

A bar that can accommodate two stools separates the kitchen and the breakfast area. A white wallpaper with navy accents adorns the walls and a window frames the courtyard.

The laundry room is located next to the breakfast area. It includes a built-in ironing board, a desk and a spacious closet. A door in this area leads to the rear-entry, two-car garage. The garage has cedar lined walls and an automatic door opener.

A hallway that separates the formal living room and the staircase leads to two sequestered bedrooms. One room has pink walls and two tall windows, one of which overlooks the front yard. The second bedroom is also decorated in shades of pink and views the back yard. Both of these bedrooms have a private dressing area with a marble vanity. These baths share a bathing area which includes both a built-in shower and a bathtub.

A lovely guest bath is located in a hall to the right of the front entry. A soft peach fabric adorns the walls. The bath has a Corian marble vanity and white cabinets.

The sequestered master bedroom is situated at the end of this hall. A large window on the back wall frames a private patio. An adjacent wall is lined with a gorgeous fabric in shades of blue, peach and white. Due to the spaciousness of this area, a sitting area can be situated in front of the windows and can extend along the connecting wall.

The design of the master bath — with walls of mirrors, recessed lighting and a window — creates a wonderful retreat for parents. A marble jacuzzi tub is placed against the left wall and is an ideal place to relax at the end of a busy day. Two customized walk-in closets, as well as one wall in the bath that is designed with drawers and cabinets. These storage spaces will help keep everything, from clothing to hair dryers, organized. A two-sink Corian marble vanity is placed on the north wall and is separated by a knee-space. The bath also features a built-in shower.

Upstairs, an informal living area, gameroom and a private bedroom are situated. The staircase leads to a loft area that overlooks the formal dining room and the corridor next to the kitchen. Two cabinets are inset along one wall and have shelves above to display family photographs.

The gameroom is located to the right and has lots of windows that overlook the immaculate common area in front of this townhome. This area is also brightened by a skylight and has a closet for storage.

A hallway next to the informal sitting room steps down into a private bedroom. This room is very secluded and has a door that opens onto a deck. Windows on both sides of the door allow for lots of sunshine. This room also has two walk-in closets.

This fourth bedroom also has a private bath with a shower. A maroon fabric and an angled ceiling add to the appeal of this area. The bath also includes a huge walk-in closet.

A sprinkler system, humidifier, fire alarm system, an ample amount of storage space, ceiling fans and an intercom system are additional details that homeowners will enjoy.

Langston, Realtors is offering this townhome, which contains over 4,700 square feet for $345,000.

Buying home requires careful planning

Many people are overwhelmed at the thought of beginning to search for a new home, according to Dene Kelly, president of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors.

"Families looking into the housing market need to carefully consider their likes and dislikes as well as think ahead to future family needs. One of the best ways for families to guage housing needs is to ask themselves just how happy they are in their current area, said Ms. Kelly, whose company is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, the nation's oldest and largest referral network of independent real estate brokers, headquartered in Chicago.

The RELO network provides a wide range of relocation services to assist transferees and their families sell a house in one community and purchase a new home in the new community. It will be celebrating its 30th anniversary this year.

Ms. Kelly adds that the question of living in an urban or rural setting is a primary consideration of families in their home search. "While some families prefer the cultural opportunities of urban living, other families prefer the quiet open spaces provided by a rural setting. Prospective homebuyers need to be realistic about the types and quality of services available to them in each type of setting," Ms. Kelly emphasized. She added, "Of course, proximity to work may be a major factor in the home search process."

Ms. Kelly recommends that prospective homeowners do some research of their own in advance of any planned move.

"Families need to look into transportation, the quality of school systems and convenience to shopping areas," she noted.

"Careful review of your likes and dislikes will put you in a position to save time looking for a home by presenting the real estate specialaist with specific information and particular characteristics you desire in a home," Ms. Kelly said. "If a client comes in with the answers to these types of questions, it will give us a good idea of what homes to begin showing."

Dene Kelly

Ms. Kelly also notes that families should keep in mind their plans for the next several years. "Many families with children entering their college years often find themselves with too much room. In other instances, elderly parents or other relatives are now moving in with their children in an effort to decrease expenses and improve lifestyles in their later yeaars. Both of these examples need to be considered and carefully planned for in advance."

By carefullt assessing every aspect of their lifestyle, potential homeowners are more likely to select a home which will satisfy the needs and desires of all family members, concluded Ms. Kelly.

Unforseen problems can occur when selling a home without assistance of a Realtor

Q. Can I save money by selling my home myself?

A. Selling your own home may seem more economical, but many times unforseen problems can create unnecessary heartache. First, qualifying the buyer is a task many people are not prepared to handle. An experienced Realtor can assure that those who look at your home are serious buyers. This greatly reduces the risk of a sale falling through due to the buyers inability to provide financing.

Checking the lookers' background, giving directions to the home and providing informative tours are all Realtor services that you will not have to endure. Another problem encountered by those selling their own home is setting a realistic price. An underpriced home costs you money, and an overpriced one costs you time, headaches, frustrations and lost opportunities. A Realtor can provide valuable market knowledge to work with you to set the most practical price.

Along those same lines, a Realtor can provide vital information on financing. Unless you are experienced and current in your knowledge of financing, you may not be able to achieve the highest possible return.

And, after you hammer that "for sale by owner" sign in your front yard, the real works begins. Word of mouth and drive bys are not the ways to get the word out about your home. A Realtor gives your property quick exposure to qualified buyers through Multiple Listing Services. Information on your home will go out to all cooperating brokerages.

Realtors offer special marketing programs such as ad writing, open houses and attractive yard signs to help get the word out about your property. And knowing a move is around the corner for you as well, you have other things to worry about. Put a Realtor in your corner.

Misunderstood appraisals can lead to difficulties

College Station, Texas–Real estate appraisals have come under increased scrutiny as regulators, mortgage investors and insures seek the causes behind the recent flood of problem Texas loans.

"Appraisals are simply professional opinions that aid real estate decisions," said Jack C. Harris. "Their specific purpose must be clearly understood and the information used must be accurate for them to be helpful at all. In addition, appraisals can be misleading if the reader does not understand the concepts used in them. "Harris and Terry V. Gissom, associate research economists with the Real Estate Center at Texas A&M University, are co-authors of a report about appraisals.

The publication, Understanding Appraisal Reports, is intended for those who have little background in appraisals and real estate economics but who need to use and evaluate appraisal information. It describes in simple terms the different types of appraisals, the information provided in each part of an appraisal and evaluation considerations. In addition, it describes other real estate studies-such as market analyses and feasibility studies–that might be more helpful in some cases than an appraisal.

"Virtually everyone involved in real estate transactions will require an appraisal report at some point," Harris said, "but we found that not everyone has a clear grasp of the appraisal's function or of the cases in which another study besides an appraisal might be appropriate."

Appraisals generally are used to determine a market value estimate, required whenever real estate is bought or sold. Market value is a legally sanctioned value definition and basically is the price a property would bring in a competitive market with a typically motivated, well-informed buyer and seller, reasonable time on the market and standard financing.

Appraisal reports can be oral, or in a letter, form or narrative. The same review process and reasoning should be used regardless of the report format. Quality reports contain a description of the real estate in question, and explanation of any assumptions or limiting factors, all pertinent facts, a summary of the work done, the dates of the valuation and the report, a statement that the appraiser has no personal interest in the appraisal and a statement of interest appraised.

Copies of Understanding Appraisal Reports are available from Department NR, Real Estate Center, Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas 77843-2115. The report is $1.50 in Texas and $3 out of state. Request publication 642.

Bar graph explains June transactions

Choosing the right Realtor to assist you with the marketing of your home can mean a lot more than just getting a sale in a timely manner. It can also mean incurring the least disruption for your family. Obtaining the best price and terms for your home and facing fewer problems through the sale and closing, as well as having expert assistance always available whenever it's needed.

In short, the present and future happiness for you and your family may be effected by how well the sale of your present home is concluded and by how secure a position that places you in for the purchase of your new home.

"At Don Harvey, Realtors, we understand this. Our track record shows that we've also been very successful in helping our customers and clients to achieve the best results in their objectives. This bar graph results for June of 1990 shows the successful closings for Don Harvey, Realtors, as well as our next nine closest competitors," explained Don Harvey, owner.

Call or come by 702 Andrews Highway and let Don Harvey, Realtors show you how their successful track record can translate into the results you wish to achieve for your next sale or purchase of a home.

Stained glass care important

AP Newsfeatures

Many homes built in the late 1800s had stained-glass windows in doors, transoms and stair landings.

Repairing them is difficult, but Traditional Home magazine says the windows are sturdier than they appear and inexpensive to replace.

H. Webber Wilson is a Frederick, Md., antiques dealer who collects and repairs American decorative glass. He offers the following advice to homeowners who are concerned about the condition of their stained-glass windows.

First, says Wilson, realize that leaded-glass windows are much more stable than they may appear. A bowed window is not necessarily ready to fall apart, and slight cracks in individual pieces of leaded glass don't usually threaten the integrity of the window.

Second, he says: "I think people should appreciate windows but learn to live with them." Few craftspeople are qualified to repair leaded-glass windows, and the color and texture of old glass can be difficult to match. Modern repairs to old glass, therefore, are likely to be costly and are not always an aesthetic improvement.

"My recommendation to people with windows they think might need to be repaired is to do the minimum," says Wilson. If the glass rattles in its leading, Wilson recommends applying ordinary glazing putty between the glass and the lead rather than releading the window — an expensive job.

If there are concerns about future window damage or energy loss around loose leading, install clear-glass windows on the outside and-or inside of the stained glass.

If the solder joints between the pieces of stained glass are cracked, however, the window should be either replaced or professionally repaired. Wilson says replacing a window is frequently the more economical option. Decorative glass is plentiful and relatively unappreciated, as period embellishments go.

Langston Realtors talks about...

Langston

The July 4th holiday created a little slower market week before last, but the phones had already started re-ringing by Sunday and out-of-town buyers arrived Monday. We are anticipating extensive activity over the next three to four weeks with move-ins by major oil, medical, and normal summer transfers — a great economic boost for our community!

The city's imminent arrival of 60-plus Chevron families and the recently completed Conoco influx will be augmented before year's end by other major move-ins according to one national referral marketing organization. In anticipation, the firm is planning a seminar later in the month to "certify" home sale specialists to handle the groups.

I know other brokers join me in believing that Midland's Realtors are among the most professional, best trained and experienced in the state: they know the community, their business and the market better than anyone. However, as true professionals, they are always receptive to further training, new ideas, additional contracts, so the seminar should be filled with the city's top agents, ours among them. And we all look forward to verification of the additional major moves.

Again, if you have been thinking of selling, let me encourage you to take advantage of this summer's market. Call today and let us visit with you about your home, the market in your neighborhood, how quickly your property should sell an in what price range, how to show your home to its best advantage, marketing strategies — all those things that our Realtor know best!

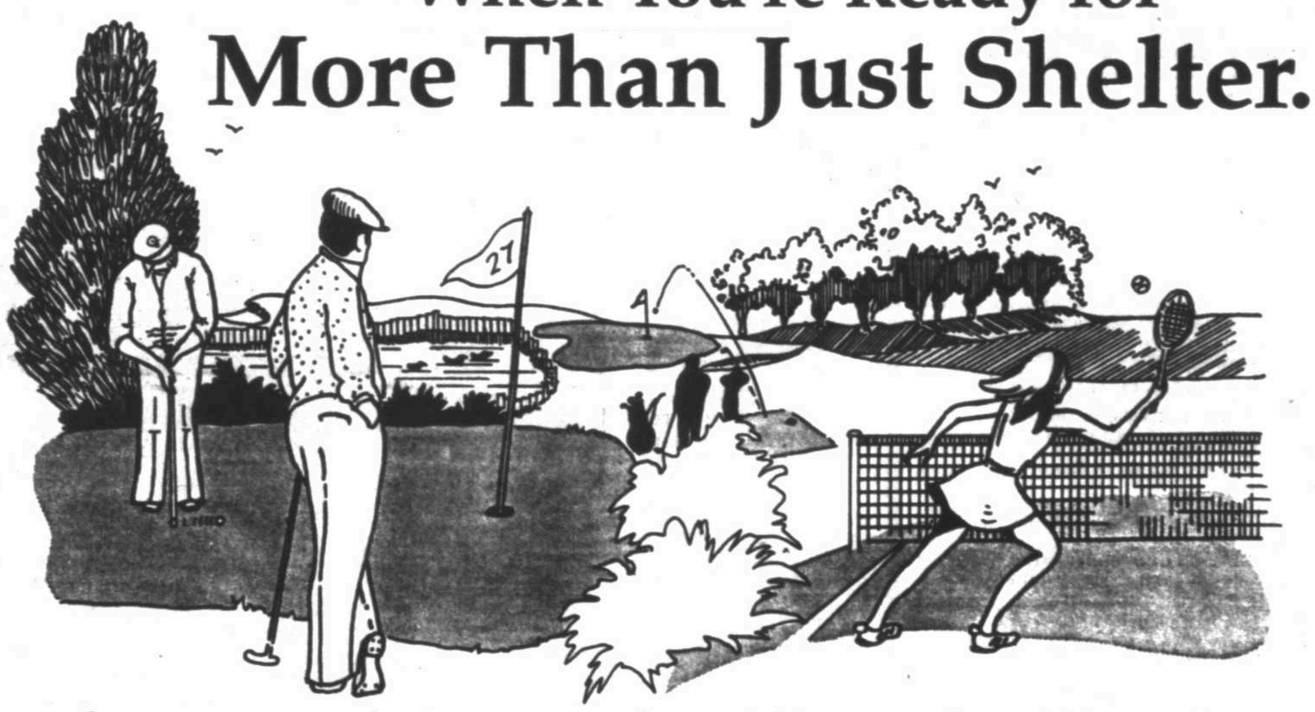

Our 32 page book on Midland continues to be a "best seller" (even though its free!) It is full of information for every new arrival or potential new residents! Arts, symphony, museum, sports, schools and everything you want to know is covered. Please call our Relocation Director, Richard Langston, if you have a friend or business associate moving our way and he will be glad to put one in the mail for them. We will also be delighted to share as many copies as needed with employers who are interviewing or who would like to have them on hand to pass on to transferees.

We are delighted to announce a new associate, Winston Fontenot, a six year Midland resident. Winston and his wife Robin moved here from Lafayette, where Winston owned the law firm of J. Winston Fontenot PLC as well as a computer company. His original visit to Midland was to have been a six week business trip and we are most fortunate that they like Midland so much they elected to stay. Winston promises to be a terrific addition to Langston Realtors.

Another new arrival last week was John Scott Collins, son of our associate Sarah Crowe Collins and her husband John Collins. Scott made his appearance weighing a hefty 9 lbs. 9 oz. All are well!

Where There's A Will There's A Way

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

Where there's a will, there's a way, is a popular cliche. However, when will is referring to the legal document which disposes of a person's properties at the time of their death, this old adage takes on a much clearer meaning: where there's a will, there's a way for these possessions to be distributed as the owner had wished.

Although most people don't like to talk about wills or even think about making a will, it is an important document. Many lawyers tell horror stories about the heartache, hassle and financial strains family members must go through when a loved one dies without a will.

It is estimated that seven out of 10 Americans die without a will, according to an article by Roul Tunley in the July issue of Reader's Digest. One reason people give for not having a will is they don't believe they have enough money to justify estate planning. However, it is just as important for those with few possession to have a will as it is for those with large estates. While those with large sums of money often have no problems paying for legal fees, court fees and filing fees, family members left to take care of a loved one's estate who had little, often face difficulty paying for these necessary services and their inheritance can be tied up in probate for a long time.

ACCORDING TO Midland attorney John Roosa, there is another reason why people don't take the time or effort to have a will drawn. "They don't write a will because writing a will is acknowledging their mortality, that they will die. I've talked to a lot of people, psychiatrists even, and they agree that this is one of the main reasons.

"Every single person is going to die, and taking the initiative to write a will can save your loved ones a lot of filling fees, court costs and legal fees as well as time while the assets are tied up in probate," Roosa said. "One thing I hate to see is a poor widow left to deal with her husband's estate right after his death just because they didn't have a will. All her assets are tied up probate.

"The main reason for having a will is that if you don't, the state has one written for you," Roosa said. And although the state's formula for distribution of your possessions may be very close to your wishes, it also may not be the way you wish, Roosa said. "The Laws of Intestacy were written back in the time of that television show 'Father Knows Best,' and they have not been updated. Today, not everybody thinks that father knows best anymore."

When a person dies intestate — without a will — the solely-owned possessions of that person usually descend, according to state law, to the individual's spouse and relatives. If the deceased does not have a valid will and does not have a spouse or other relatives, the individual's property may be transferred to the state in which the person lived.

IN ADDITION TO not having your possessions divided among relatives as you wish, not having a will opens all your personal affairs to, basically, the public, Roosa said. There must be an inventory of the estate and often appraisals are done and bank accounts are reviewed. Each of these activities requires surviving loved ones to pay the financial obligations to lawyers and appraisers, as well as court fees and filing fees.

"I keep preaching that divorce is not always the solution to a marriage that isn't working and that people should have wills to avoid all those expensive probate costs, but people still get divorced and die without wills. ...That's why so many lawyers are able to drive around in big cars," Roosa said. Not having a will "leaves relations to deal with all the legal litigation," Roosa said. "It's unfair. The estate can't be settled quickly. The expense of not having a will is horrible."

Roosa added that divorces, adoptions and stepchildren complicate the closing of any estate and can become very sticky, particularly if there is not a valid will written.

You can write your own will, but in doing so, you take many risks. Most experts warn against this method. If there is any part of a will that is not in the proper legal order, it will be considered invalid.

A do-it-yourself will must be handwritten entirely in the person's own handwriting and wording must be precise, Roosa said. An example given in the Reader's Digest article said that one man specified that "if my wife becomes completely disabled, I will give everything to my children. With that one statement, he would have disinherited his wife had she become disabled, instead of providing for her, as he intended. And her children would have faced legal hurdles and tax consequences, complicating their ability to care for her adequately."

"It's like treating yourself for an illness, you don't get well. Only with a will, it's too late to do anything about it," Roosa said. "You'll be dead and your loved ones will have to deal with your mistakes."

MOST WILLS ARE prepared by a lawyer, who can make sure that the formal legal requirements for wills are satisfied. The lawyer's role is to advise the client and to prepare the necessary documents so that this objective is accomplished with the least delay and at the lowest possible tax cost and expense of administration, thus reducing the heirs' tax liability.

A relatively simple will can cost from $75 to $200 for a lawyer to prepare. Roosa said an average cost is between $100 to $150 for a simple will.

A will usually names an executor who has the duty of seeing that the provisions of the will are carried out. If no executor is named, the court that has jurisdiction over states may appoint an administrator, whose duties are the same as those of an executor.

Changes in the state and federal tax codes have eliminated once-hefty "death taxes" (estate or inheritance taxes) for most Americans, according to Reader's Digest. Under the new laws, you can leave behind $600,000 completely free from federal tax (lifetime exemption equivalent). That was raised from the original $60,000. This means that if your estate is less than $600,000, the entire amount amount can pass to your heirs free of federal taxes.

For persons who have considerable property, it is wise to have an estate plan. The U.S. government and the state government of the deceased may collect an estate tax if a person owns more than a certain amount of land. A properly drawn estate plan may save many thousands of dollars that otherwise would have to be paid in estate taxes.

A CODICIL IS an addition made after the will has been prepared that changes the will in some way. People may alter or destroy their wills at any time. Such alteration is legal,

The groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner at Ridglea Country Club in Fort Worth, while the bride's parents, Betty and Jimmy Kelly of Arlington, hosted the wedding reception in the church's Fellowship Hall.

Completing the festivities was a buffet supper given after the reception for the family and out-of-town guests by the groom's aunt and uncle, Doris and Lawrence Klempnauer, at their Fort Worth home.

MAXINE (MRS. BOB) HANNIFIN and Colleen (Mrs. Vince) Scury attended a leadership conference in Dallas recently for American Association of University Women members.

WILL: Document must be valid by law

provided that the will maker is of sound mind and the alteration was not caused by undue influence from parties interested in the change. The codicil must be made according to the formalities required by state law, just as the will must be.

In Texas, a will must be witnessed by two people and a notary. Texas also has a self-proving affidavit which is attached to the will that the witnesses sign stating that they did in fact sign to having witnessed the will, according to Roosa. "This means the witnesses don't have to be there to prove the will is valid," Roosa said. "This is a real advantage because often times witnesses have moved or even died before the reading of the will."

Roosa also recommends that people draw up a living will, in which a person can state such affairs as their wishes for no life support measures and if they wish to be an organ donor.

Living trusts also are popular and often accompany a will. A living trust can help shield your family from the delays and expense of probate.

With a living trust, you can name the trust as the owner of your possessions, yet you still control your affairs. There are no management fees. You are free to buy and sell anything just as you always have, and you can keep the trust's income. The trust is revocable at any time.

ADVANTAGES OF A trust are that the beneficiary receives the estate's assets quickly and trusts are difficult to overturn, according to Reader's Digest, whereas a will is a public document and can be disputed and held up in court for years. If one of the assets being contested is a business, everything may be frozen until the estate is closed.

A disadvantage of a trust is the cost and detail involved. You must make decisions regarding all your assets and go through a lengthy process of changing titles from personal ownership to trusteeship. The legal cost of setting up a trust is considerably more than a will, averaging $700 to about $1,800, according to Reader's Digest. But in the long run, living trust will save money for your heirs by avoiding probate or reducing the size of the estate going through probate, the article said.

In addition to a living trust, there are other legal ways to bypass some taxes.

By giving away your wealth before you die, you can avoid taxes on those items. However, the exemption limit is $600,000 and if you exceed that amount, you will be taxed heavily.

Benefits from insurance policies go directly to the beneficiary without passing through probate, but only if a beneficiary is named. If the proceeds pass to your estate, it will be probated.

Jointly-owned property, such as a home owned by a husband and wife, does not pass through a will but goes directly to the surviving co-owner. However, there are some complications. If for any reason one party of the jointly-owned property incurs debts and creditors make claims against the debtors half of the property, the other owner must either cover the debt or sell the property to cover the debt.

Wills and living trusts can get very complicated, depending on individual circumstances, so it is important that they be done correctly. Once the process of drawing the will is done, you may find it actually creates a peace knowing you have prevented your family from many future headaches.

Getting a will is simple process

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

A will is the perfect way to ensure that your possessions will be divided as you wish them to be. It also is the legal document that will keeps your family from having to endure probate headaches and expenses.

Midland attorney John Roosa recommends having a will drawn once you reach age 21, when you get married or when you have a child.

"Getting a will written is real simple," Roosa said. "You must be mentally sound, and you must know what you have as far as property, cars, insurance plans. You must know the objects of your bounty; another words, you must know who are those of your affection that you wish to leave your things to. And last, you must know the distribution of that bounty; who gets what."

Reader's Digest offers these suggestions for getting started on a will:

- List of all your assets, including insurance and property that are in joint names.
- If you have children, select a guardian for them (usually a family member) and someone to administer your assets, naming alternates in case your first choices later decline or die.

You also should consider that some people who are good at handling children may not be good at handling money. In these cases, a bank may be appointed as a financial guardian, but banks are never personal guardians.

- Don't delay. Call a lawyer to set up both a will and trust. It will save your family headaches.

Wills, inheritances bring out strong emotions

By Lawrence M. Kutner
N.Y. Times News Service

Inheritances and wills bring out strong emotions in families. They raise several uncomfortable issues: death, money and how survivors are perceived by the important people in their lives. It is an area rife with symbolism and ambiguity.

If a parent's will specifies that one son receive less than another, does it mean the parent loved one child less, had more faith in his abilities or was simply acknowledging and anticipating differences in the children's needs?

Should a will treat stepchildren differently than it does biological children? What, if anything, can one do to prevent squabbles over an estate?

Although television and popular literature portray fights over wills as primarily a problem of rich families, lawyers say that is not the case.

"I've seen siblings fighting over very small amounts of money," said Loren H. Plotkin, a partner in the law firm of Levine, Thall & Plotkin in Manhattan. "To them it represents, on a psychological level, some kind of vindication."

In many cases family squabbles over an estate, especially fights between siblings, are predictable.

"If the children have been jealous or fighting with each other for years, you can expect them to fight over the will," said Dr. Michael Cunningham, a social psychologist and an associate professor of psychology at the University of Louisville who studies the emotional aspects of financial decision-making.

"If they've seen each other as equals and have been cooperative in the past, you can expect few problems," he said.

The likelihood of family fights is especially high among adult siblings who are still concerned about how much their parents loved them, Cunningham and other researchers said.

For such adults, the structure of a will allows them to measure their relative worth in the eyes of their parent.

One possible way to prevent battles over an estate is to hold a family meeting at which everyone shares feelings about inheritances.

Many adults find making a will upsetting. It brings to the forefront not only issues of their own mortality, but also their concerns about the relative needs and merits of those they love.

These issues are particularly complex and laden with emotions among families that include biological children, stepchildren and adopted children; where there is a large age gap between the oldest and youngest child, or where there is a disabled child.

"There's no way to be fair," said Dr. Kenneth O. Doyle, a psychologist with the department of family social science at the University of Minnesota.

"The process of making a will is a reflection of the entire family relationship," said Doyle, who is also a financial planner and counselor. "If the relationship is a harmonious one where trust exists, there probably won't be problems."

Plotkin said he was working with growing numbers of couples who have children from previous marriages and are starting another family.

"These parents have to make their older children understand that the younger children often have a greater need," he said, referring to younger children's expenses like future college tuition.

Even when siblings are close in age and healthy, problems are more likely to arise if they are of different sexes, said Dr. Martin Sherer Smith, an associate professor of psychology at Brock University in St. Catharines, Ontario, who has studied inheritance patterns.

"We found that wealthy parents tended to leave more money to sons than to daughters," Smith said. "Less wealthy parents did the opposite." He said he was not sure why there were disparities based on gender.

"Parents should realize that they're not just leaving a financial legacy, but an emotional one as well," Plotkin said. "Your will is your last word to your family. You can't apologize afterward. You can't take it back."

Bringing up delicate subject difficult

N.Y. Times News Service

There are several things that parents and children can do to help avoid family problems over wills.

Begin general discussions about death while children are young, so that they will be less likely to avoid the topic of wills and inheritances when they are older.

Children, including teen-agers and adults, who quickly change the subject if you start talking about wills and inheritances are letting you know that they find the thought of your death emotionally overwhelming.

If this happens, acknowledge their distress and ask what you can do to make the discussion more comfortable for them.

Talking about these issues and making your logic explicit means that your wishes and bequests are less likely to be misinterpreted or become the cause for a family squabble.

When making out your will look for nonfinancial ways of acknowledging your feelings for your children, especially if you are not distributing your assets equally.

If parents are reluctant to talk about inheritances and wills, children should initiate the discussions.

In such cases, encourage your parents to sign the wills or, if they haven't drafted them, to discuss the topic with a trusted lawyers who isn't a family member.

Wills are important for young, poor too

By Rob Hiaasen
N.Y. Times News Service

Wills are not just for the old or rich. And they don't have to be a morbid subject, because death, like taxes and Dick Clark, is a certainty.

"It makes good business sense to have a will," said Michael Easley, a lawyer in West Palm Beach, Fla.

Having a will drawn is relatively cheap — about $150 for a simple one. Some lawyers do them just to get the clients interested in throwing more lucrative work their way.

You can always write your will. Some office stores sell will packages for $7 and less. Just make sure you have two witnesses and you closely follow directions.

"It's dangerous because of the precise way a will has to be executed," Easley warned. "If you do it wrong, it's void."

The important personal question here is whether you need a piece of paper telling other people who should get your Kenwood stereo and collection of Charlie Parker or 2 Live Crew records after you die.

"Yuppies need wills, too," West Palm Beach lawyer Paul Nicoletti said.

If you want to dedicate your belongings to others, a will is the way. The state could give your toys to Goodwill or to the cousin you loathed if there's no will.

"People can yell and stand at the highest hilltop saying he promised me that before he died," but the state won't honor personal pleas without a will, Easley said. "End of story."

Of course, not everyone needs a will. In Florida, for example, a will probably isn't necessary for single adults living with their parents. Their property will go to their parents if they die. The state probate court, which validates wills, distributes property to the closest blood relatives.

"When you have your first child, that's the first time a bell should go off about a will," Nicoletti said.

Who gets custody of the child if both parents die? If there's only one parent and he or she dies? A will designates a guardian who the state will honor in most cases. (In some states, officials will run a criminal investigation on the proposed guardian before awarding custody.)

Without a will, the state again chooses a relative and this could be the last person you would want caring for your son or daughter.

It gets worse.

"It's also possible that the baby is put up for adoption," Nicoletti said. And survivors have sued over custody of a child or possessions. "It happens in hundreds of cases, most of which end up in law books as textbook examples."

A mutually reciprocal will — the husband gives it all to the wife or vice versa — is common and cheap. The parents name guardians and their personal representatives. Representatives are responsible for carrying out the will's instructions.

Setting up trust funds and other estate planning requires a more complicated will and can cost much more in legal fees.

In Florida, you can change your will 15 times a week without using a lawyer or needing a witness. This involves only personal property — not money. All you have to do is sign a piece of paper saying Mommy Dearest doesn't get the BMW, attach the amendment to your will, and it's law.

United Nations cleans up its act

Copley News Service

Thomas R. Pickering, U.S. permanent representative to the United Nations, was recently interviewed by members of The San Diego Union editorial board.

Question: Senior people in the Reagan administration said, in so many words, that the United Nations wasted a lot of money, its General Assembly was biased against the United States, and overall it was failing to fulfill many of the purposes for which it was established after World War II, including peacekeeping. Does the Bush administration have a different view?

Answer: I would say both the Reagan administration, in its closing days, and the Bush administration have had a somewhat more positive view. In terms of wasting money, President Reagan decided just before he left office that the reforms the United Nations had made were sufficient for him to include a budget item for fiscal 1990 to restore U.S. funding.

Q: To what extent?

A: In effect, to pay our full (annual) amount, but also to begin repaying the arrearages. President Bush kept that arrearages item in his '91 budget because he didn't receive from Congress the arrearage money he hoped we would get last year.

Q: What about the issue of General Assembly bias?

A: We still have problems in the General Assembly. We have had them all along. But the number of issues where we have them has narrowed. Traditionally, we have had problems on disarmament and the Middle East, and that continues. But this year we put in a resolution to try to declare a moratorium on drift-net fishing, and after a long battle with the Japanese we achieved a full consensus in the General Assembly that there should be such a moratorium.

Another thing, for the first time in 45 years, all the members of the General Assembly agreed on an extensive declaration on what to do about apartheid in South Africa — a negotiated solution; in effect, universal sufferage; no more sanctions, but to build on the existing sanctions to push the process forward.

Q: Have changes in the Soviet bloc had anything to do with this?

A: I think we have had an interesting evolution of the Soviet attitude. We have done a number of things together over the last year, from Namibia in the Security Council to a resolution that we jointly co-sponsored, which, in effect, put the quietus on a Soviet resolution that had been pending for three years, which we deeply opposed. The new resolution committed the Soviets — and, indeed, everybody else, because the full General Assembly joined us on it — in the area of peace and security to deal with problems in the framework and the context of the U.N. Charter.

Q: Was the United Nation's facilitator role in the Iran-Iraq war in Afghanistan and in Cambodia a reflection of developments just being ripe for both sides, or has something else changed that would give the United Nations opportunity to be more relevant than it has been in the past?

A: I think we need to take credit where credit is due. For 40 years we battled the Soviets in the United Nations about what to do. They are gradually coming around to our point of view that together we can work through the United Nations to achieve the kind of movement we would like to have, particularly in this question of regional peace. When the time came to settle on Afghanistan we both agreed to put a U.N. force there to observe the Soviet withdrawal. In Afghanistan, in Iran-Iraq, now in Central America, hopefully in Cambodia in the future, the United Nations has played an increasing role in helping to shut down regional wars and being a peacemaker and a peacekeeper.

Q: Soviet troops have withdrawn from Afghanistan but there still isn't peace. What are the prospects of a U.N. role there?

A: The United Nations has a unique capacity in Afghanistan because the secretary general has a special representative who is very frequently in Pakistan and in Afghanistan, and is the only fellow we know who now has contacts with and can speak with every group, every faction, every government that has an interest in an Afghan settlement. That unique perspective and his ability to move around has given him and others an opportunity to help put together a solution. Secretary Baker in February presented some ideas to the Soviets. Unfortunately, they don't seem to have been widely accepted. We believe President (Mohammed) Najibullah will have to go, and that the Afghan people will have to find some way to choose their own government in the future. I think there is potential for progress in that direction.

Q: What about the Middle East?

A: The Middle East is a particularly difficult area, and I think it is important to realize that every negotiated agreement there has included provision for U.N. peacekeeping. The problem with the United Nations in the Middle East has been that there has been a voting bloc among the non-aligned where, in effect, the Arabs vote with the Africans on apartheid and the Africans vote with the Arabs on the Arab-Israeli dispute.

So U.N. resolutions have always been partial to and slanted toward the Arab view of the settlement, rather than a more impartial, more balanced perspective on what to do about peace. That has tended also to be the view in the Security Council, so the United Nations' credibility with Israel and the United States has been less than we think desirable, and we have shied away from introducing the United Nations as a peacemaking player in the Middle East.

Concerns over ecology grow

By Matt Miller
Copley News Service

SYDNEY, Australia — Early this year, Egon Berger got an earful of Australia's environmental problems.

Hours after swimming off Sydney's popular Bondi beach, Berger couldn't keep his balance. The airline caterer was rushed to the hospital. Doctors say he suffered from a middle-ear infection, most likely caused by raw sewage in the surf.

"I got the message all right," he says, back on the beach but not in the water.

For years, Australians remained complacent about ecology. Parliament enacted few laws. Federal legislators readily bowed to business, state and local pressures, refusing, for example, to enact federal pollution standards.

Not anymore.

A growing number of Australians are concerned about environmental issues ranging from excessive logging to atmospheric warming — the so-called "greenhouse effect." And many are banding together to pressure the government to do something about it.

AUSTRALIA'S ENVIRONMENTAL lobby has grown with a speed and effectiveness possibly unmatched anywhere else in the world, says Stephen McAllister, an American who just finished a stint as executive director of Greenpeace Australia.

Many political analysts credit the so-called "Greenies" for giving Prime Minister Bob Hawke's Labor Party the winning margin in the March elections. In the Australian electoral system, voters rank their first and second choices, as do the parties themselves. While environmentalists backed the much smaller Democrat Party most heavily, they ranked Labor much higher than the opposition Liberal Party. More importantly, the Democrat Party gave its nod to Labor on the basis of Labor's stand on the environment.

"Politicians of all persuasions got the message on public concern about the environment on election day," wrote columnist Laurie Oakes in The Bulletin magazine.

The biggest question now is whether the Hawke government will translate that concern into action, especially as the country's economy moves perilously close to recession.

DEVELOPMENT AND environmental advocates are squaring off against each other both inside and outside of the government. And there is no consensus on who will emerge the winner.

The environmentalists say they aren't about to let up. The movement "isn't showing any sign of relenting," says David Vincent, of Friends of the Earth. But he adds: "There's a long, long way to go."

Most coastal-dwelling Australians consider surf and sand as birthrights. The urban beaches are packed, even on weekdays.

"Going to the beach is a national pastime as much as baseball is in the (United) States," McAllister says.

Imagine the dismay when increasing amounts of raw sewage began floating into some of Sydney's most popular beaches.

The problem is so bad that a radio station airs a daily report on which beaches are safe. The days following a rain storm are especially tricky, when the water has been churned up.

"The smell, the taste of the water can be pretty foul," says Geoff Reinhard, a town planner who has been surfing off Bondi during his lunch break. "I don't go out anymore after a storm."

There's no law to stop the sludge from spreading. Australia doesn't have clean-water legislation. In Sydney, there's no primary treatment for sewage, let alone secondary treatment. Untreated garbage is pumped directly into the ocean.

POLITICIANS BLAME a lack of legislation on the historic tug-of-war between state and federal governments. The Australian system is much less centrist than the U.S. one. Federal legislation can easily be defeated under the guise of states' rights.

In turn, some of the country's state and municipal governments plead poverty. Other state and local officials in this resource-rich and thinly populated land have actively resisted attempts to moderate development of natural resources.

The Hawke government claims it will finally break through the legalistic logjam, and that state governments have agreed to give up territorial claims on environmental protection.

"The federal government is committed ... to developing national standards for air, water and noise pollution," says Tony Fleming, a consultant to the government's Environment Ministry in the country's capital of Canberra.

Adds Simon Balderstone, a Canberra-based environmentalist who helped devise the Labor Party's strategy on ecology: "People are going to expect government to jump on companies that abuse resources."

It won't come immediately, however. Fleming says the government will need at least a year before it can develop an environmental protection agency. It will be years before Sydney's sewage problems are solved, although the state of New South Wales has promised action.

Not that government is the only laggard.

Just as the Australian public was late to come to grips with the environment, the country's businesses both ignored and resisted the environmental movement much longer than did many of their American and European counterparts.

CNS Graphic

BALDERSTONE SAYS THAT few businesses are positioned to take advantage of the tremendous public demand to recycle waste, and that most waste that could be recycled is just being dumped.

"Big business has been caught out very badly," he says.

There's also some fear that environmental concerns may prove more faddish than lasting. Mainstream culture has certainly latched onto the movement.

"Are you a Greenie or just a trendy?" asks Dolly, a popular magazine aimed at teen-agers.

"Everyone and his dog has jumped on the environmental bandwagon," says a Sydney marketing executive who believes the movement "has come too far, too fast for its own good."

Part of the concern about the staying power of the environmental lobby lies with the personalities in the Hawke government. Graham Richardson, who held the environment portfolio in the last administration, is one of Hawke's most powerful and politically astute deputies.

Help wedding bells ring true

By Suzanne Schlosberg
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — So you are engaged, and everything is rosy.

You have booked the wedding band, made hotel reservations for your honeymoon and paid the security deposit on your new apartment.

But have you considered what you will do when your bed sheets tear?

Are you going to sew them up or buy new ones? And what about the dishes? Are you going to wash them every night after dinner or relax and finish them in the morning?

"These are real issues," said Sylvia Weishaus, co-founder and clinical director of "Making Marriage Work," a pre-marital course offered by the University of Judaism. "A lot of people expect that their spouse will be just like them, and they're not."

Alarmed by the spiraling divorce rate, the University of Judaism and the Catholic Church began offering pre-marital classes in the late 1970s. Today they've expanded their programs, adding special courses for couples entering a second marriage with children and for couples of different religions.

Although both programs touch on religious issues, they are open to couples of any religion and focus more on issues such as communication, personality differences, sex and finances.

"I don't think there's evidence that (the courses) mitigate the alarming divorce rate, but even if they didn't change the divorce rate at all, they still provide more insight and understanding and awareness," said Carlfred Broderick, executive director of USC's Marriage and Family Therapy Training Program.

THE UNIVERSITY of Judaism is doing an intensive study on the effects of the courses on divorce rates.

Courses at the university are $300 and run once a week for 10 weeks. Six of the sessions are taught by a credentialed psychologist or counselor, three are taught by a rabbi and one is run by a family law attorney and financial planner.

"It's to strengthen your relationship, to help you know what your limits and expectations are," she said.

Some couples break off their engagements during the course. But, Weishaus said, "Better a broken engagement than a broken marriage."

A big benefit of the program, Weishaus said, is that the couples meet people who are at the same stage of life.

"These are the first friends they've made together," she said.

Shelagh and Gary Bellack of West Los Angeles took the course for inter-faith couples two years ago. Gary is Jewish, and Shelagh was raised as a Catholic.

"They did some very innovative things to help crystallize some of the issues ... like what you're going to do when the grandfather gives your kid a Christmas gift, and you don't celebrate Christmas," Gary said. "It forces you to get out from under the covers into a full discussion."

SAID SHELAGH: "The class taught us how to fight. You learn how to listen to the other person when you're having an argument."

Some couples come in thinking they don't need the course. "But," she said, "everyone needs it, because everyone can learn something about themselves."

Catholic church leaders agree so strongly that most dioceses, including Los Angeles, mandate pre-marital courses for engaged couples.

"From what people tell us, it seems to have meant a lot," said the Rev. Charles Fortier, associate director of the Office of Family Life for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles.

The archdiocese has expanded the programs in the last two years, Fortier said. There are now courses for couples entering their second marriage, for those living together before marriage and for those who only speak Spanish.

"The models we use are quite different nowadays," he said.

The courses, which last from one day to six weeks, are presented by two married couples and a priest. They cost from $20 to $125.

"About 50 percent come from divorced families, and they want their marriages to survive," Blanton said.

BOTH BLANTON and Weishaus said attitudes among couples have changed over the years. For instance, they said, more men say they are willing to share the housework. But, Weishaus said, "When it comes down to executing, they're not as interested."

Weishaus said even couples who have been living together for a long time can benefit from the course.

"When you're living together, you still tend to be on your best behavior," she said.

The Bellacks, who lived together before they married, said they'd recommend the course even for couples who know each other very well.

"You're never hurt by learning more about the person you're going to marry," Gary said.

But, Shelagh noted, you can never be totally prepared.

"It's a good preview of what kind of problems might come up and how you might deal with them. But you just can't predict exactly what's going to happen."

Learning capitalism

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Teaching capitalism to the communists is an important task, says Dr. Juan Rada, director of the International Institute for Management Development (IMD) here.

Rada contends only the West can show Eastern European managers how to compete and survive in a free market. He says some U.S. business schools are training these managers, as is his organization which has helped establish a management training center in Kiev, USSR.

Rada says he believes effective management training is the key to avoiding chaos in Eastern Europe.

Not every wedding gift is appreciated

The survey, by MasterCard International, said few couples discarded their unwanted gifts but instead exchanged nearly half for other merchandise or money. The rest ended up in the attic or in a closet.

Battered woman did what she had to do

By DONNA CASSATA

POTOMAC, Md. (AP) — Charlotte Fedders ushers a guest from the cluttered kitchen of her suburban Washington home to the sunny living room filled with photographs of her children.

A cat snuggling on the couch is quickly shooed away and Mrs. Fedders begins to describe in even tones the physical and mental abuse inflicted by her husband, the former top chief of enforcement at the Securities and Exchange Commission.

She speaks about the violence during her 18-year marriage, the legal battles with her ex-husband John Fedders, the resiliency of her five sons and her own inner strength. She pauses to deal with a question from son Peter, who has padded downstairs in bare feet to ask, "Do elephants have tails?"

Five years ago, a messy kitchen, cat hairs in the living room and a sudden display of precociousness would have been verboten. In her book, "Shattered Dreams," Charlotte Fedders described her husband's weekly white-glove inspections, in which he ran his fingers along tops of doors and windows, and how he liked to see the vacuum marks in the carpet all going the same way.

As the result of her experience, Charlotte Fedders has become one of the nation's best-known victims of spouse abuse. She speaks out on the issue around the country and in return receiving thousands of letters filled with words of encouragement and personal tales of domestic violence.

"I have folders of letters that I can't respond to," she says. "They pour their hearts out to me. There's enormous support.

"They say I've done just what I had to do. I had no other choice."

AT ONE TIME, the Fedders family gave the appearance of an ideal existence — wealthy suburban home, exclusive country club membership, private schools, powerful Washington job.

But a dirty secret festered inside the six-bedroom, beige brick house in Potomac, Md.: John Fedders beat his wife.

"We had been talking for a while. All I remember is that this conversation seemed to be going well. That we were really conversing, sharing ideas. We were not fighting, we were not being sarcastic or nasty. I swear we were just talking," Charlotte Fedders wrote in her book, referring to the first time her husband struck her in 1968.

"But I think it was the first time I disagreed with him and was sticking to my guns. I was arguing my point calmly, but I was holding to it. ... It was one good sock to the left side of my ear. Then I heard this ringing sound. I found out later that he had broken my eardrum."

In court testimony during the February 1985 divorce trial, Charlotte Fedders described seven violent incidents that occurred during her marriage, including the time her husband struck her while she was four months pregnant with their first child.

"He loomed over me and hit me in the abdomen, three, maybe five times, hard. I bent over, trying to protect my tummy. They were powerful blows. It felt like taking a heavy fall. ... I tried to push him away, which only seemd to make him madder. He yelled that he didn't care if he killed me or the baby," she wrote in her book.

AMONG THOSE present in the courtroom during the divorce proceedings was a reporter for The Wall Street Journal, whose article of Feb. 25 on John Fedders' problems touched off a furor that forced Fedders to resign his SEC post late the next day.

In his resignation letter to then SEC Chairman John Shad, Fedders said, "On seven occasions during more than 18 years of marriage, marital disputes between us resulted in violence for which I feel and have expressed great remorse."

"These isolated events do not, however, justify the extreme characterizations made in the press," he said.

Fedders did not respond to several telephone calls seeking his comments on his former wife's charges.

The ideal family was no more, but the legal battles continued. After John Fedders testified, he pleaded with the court to give him time to work out a reconciliation with his wife. Montgomery County Circuit Court Judge James S. McAuliffe suggested that the couple go out to dinner and try to talk things out.

"That was a devastating moment," Charlotte Fedders said in a recent interview, recalling the 5-year-old incident. "He thought it was the right thing for the kids-slash-me. John had promised never to do it again. The judge showed a total lack of understanding of domestic violence."

In 1987, a Circuit Court domestics relations official, John S. McInerney, reduced John Fedders' alimony payments from $750 a month to $500. McInerney also awarded Fedders a 25 percent share of the proceeds from his wife's book, saying she shared the blame for his violent outbursts because she withheld emotional support during his depression.

"He obviously ruled very poorly. ... He doesn't know what's going on," she said.

JUDGE MCAULIFFE in February of this year reversed McInerney's action, ruling that Fedders could not share in the profits from his wife's book, but his decision was based on the belief that no exact monetary value can be placed on a book. McAuliffe said it cannot be considered a marital asset.

The judge also reduced John Fedders' alimony payments to $400 a month. Fedders had asked the court to end the payments, saying the publicity had hurt his earning capacity by damaging his once successful legal career.

"This particular judge made the final ruling and I did as well as I could do," Charlotte Fedders said. "He didn't understand that John was manipulating the system, manipulating lives.

"There isn't a soul who doesn't think John Fedders couldn't be doing well — in a small way John won. The judge bought John's truth."

'Inner human computer' may hold key to people's emotions

By Robert P. Studer
Copley News Service

Ever since the Greeks and the Egyptians, man has considered certain proportions and arrangements in music, art and geometry to be more aesthetically attractive than others. But no one has been able to explain exactly why.

But now research at the University of California at Irvine may provide an answer. And, at the same time, it may offer an answer to why music can "bring a tear to the eye, a smile to the lips and why a vision of beauty as simple as a perfect rose can take the breath away."

Vladimir Lefebvre, a cognitive scientist at UC Irvine, says research he began in 1977 on his theory of ethical cognition may hold the answer.

Now that original theory, including newly discovered links to music and visual perception, has been evaluated by 13 authorities in a new study, "The Structure of Human Reflexion," edited by Harvey Wheeler, a research professor at the University of Southern California.

"In looking for an explanation of ethical cognition," Lefebvre points out, "we developed a model of human reflexion (the ability to perceive one's own inner world) that also may explain why certain proportions are pleasing to the eye and ear."

Lefebvre's original theory held that the choices a person makes about what is perceived as good or bad are controlled by an inner human computer which also controls such feelings as self-worth and guilt — factors that help to determine ethical behavior.

Now, he says, he has extended his theory, using algebraic models to show how the inner computer also controls what is perceived as an aesthetically pleasing or displeasing proportion.

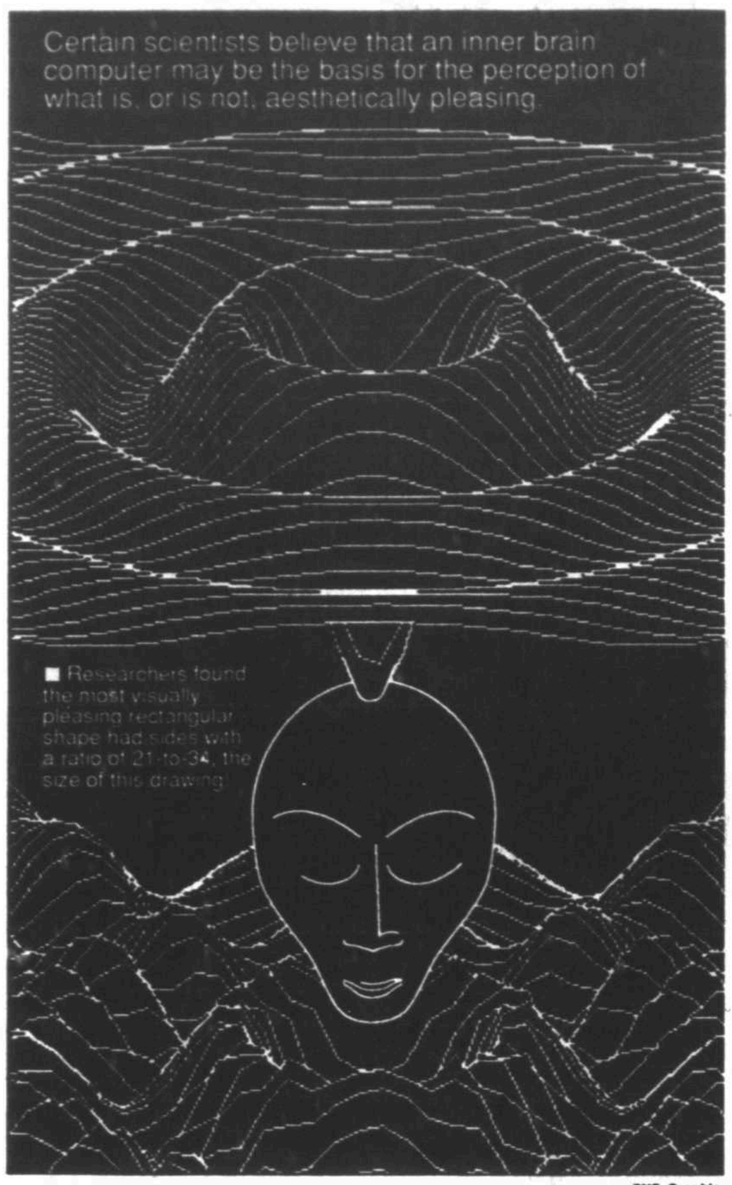

"In early psychological research in which subjects were given 10 rectangles with various proportions of sides and asked to indicate the most and least attractive, the most preferable consistently was the one with a proportion of sides equal to 21/34, or 0.618," Lefebvre said.

He added that these experiments for the first time provided scientific support for the century-old notion of a "golden section," which has been used for thousands of years in drawing and architecture, and is believed to correspond to a special human criterion for beauty.

Thus, Lefebvre postulates, "we can assume that, similar to the way in which the inner computer unconsciously controls our perceptions of what is considered aesthically good and bad, it also determines our perceptions of aesthetic beauty, including the composition and perception of music and the emotions it envokes.

"By creating an algebraic model to describe how a composer generates musical intervals, we can show that a composition is not only a physical agent that generates audio sensations, but also a physical code of ideal ratios corresponding to the composer's inner feelings."

He added: "It appears that the illusion that a certain sensation of sounds generates an aesthetic emotional effect — good or bad — results from two processes occurring at the same time — feelings related to ideal ratios according to the inner computers of both composer and listener, and the actual audio sensation of the music."

Helen Gurley Brown, Cosmopolitan are icons of glamor for 25 years

By Sylvia Rubin
N.Y. Times News Service

Ever since the first pair of perfect breasts appeared on the cover of Cosmopolitan, editor Helen Gurley Brown has been defending her magazine.

Those silly blurbs: "Those Lusty, Legendary Lifeguards," "How to Be Totally Gorgeous," "Men Who Fake Orgasm — Why You Can't Tell."

The same three stories month after month: "How to Boost Your Sexual Confidence," "Diet Doctors Tell Their Secrets," "10 Ways to Find a Man."

No matter how thick the issue, the whole thing just whooshes through the synapses. Brown has not wavered from this philosophy in 25 years.

She sits straight-backed on the edge of the sofa, all 97 pounds of her, a jumble of gold bangle bracelets hanging from her bony arms. She tippy-toes around the room, setting the black fringe of her harlequin mini-dress in motion.

There isn't a curve on her, but she acts as though she were Kathleen Turner, perfectly at ease with her body, a sex kitten at 68.

You would think one of the most powerful women in publishing would come across as, well, powerful. But she leaves that to somebody else.

Underneath the femininity and the fringe is still a "mouseburger," her own term for the uneducated Arkansas girl who had "terrible acne" and didn't find her niche until she was past 40.

The story of how Helen Gurley Brown became synonymous with Cosmopolitan magazine is remarkable in its simplicity: She worked hard. She trusted her gut. She didn't waste money.

Even today, 25 years later, she is often the last one to leave the office, sometimes staying until midnight.

SHE STILL READS every manuscript, examines every photograph. If something doesn't feel right, it does not go into her magazine.

"I am not hopelessly, ridiculously modest," she says. "I know what I'm good at. I am a good editor." Then, coyly, she says, "... I think."

"A million times a year, I defend my covers," Brown says.

"I like skin. I like pretty. I like the ultraglamorous look.

"No, most women will never look like that, but a lot of women can look a lot better than they do if they had their nose fixed, their hair fixed, wore the right makeup and lost 20 pounds.

When Brown has a fit, it is usually about money.

"I don't know if I'm really cheap. I think the jury is still out on that one. I know that I hate to waste money."

She says without any embarrassment that after leaving the Beverly Hills Hotel she took along her unused portion of soap.

"I had already opened the package. I mean, they would have just tossed it out. So I brought it with me."

Every day, Brown rides the bus to work, thighs still tingling from her morning workout.

She pays 55 cents, senior-citizen fare. "The bus drops me off across the street from the office. I can't see wasting $4.50 on a cab."

She was a Depression child whose father, a schoolteacher and state legislator, was killed in an elevator accident when Helen was 10, also leaving behind an unskilled wife and Helen's sister, a polio victim paralyzed from the waist down.

When Helen was 15, she went to work as a secretary, muddling her way through 17 jobs in 15 years.

A CLASSIC LATE bloomer, Brown didn't mature until she became a secretary at Foote, Cone & Belding, the big ad agency in Los Angeles. That led to her first copywriting job and her introduction to David Brown, vice president of production at Twentieth Century-Fox.

She was 37 when they married. Three years later, she saw her first professional triumph with the publication of "Sex and the Single Girl."

But it didn't come together for her until 1965, when the Hearst Corporation, in a last-ditch effort to save its faltering general-interest magazine called Cosmopolitan, hired a 43-year-old with no publishing experience to be the new editor.

She gradually made her mark on the magazine until nobody can imagine one without the other.

Under Brown's direction, Cosmo was reborn swaddled in sequins — she was the first to put cleavage on the cover of a women's magazine.

The copy was cheery to the point of absurdity.

"I wasn't allowed to write critical movie reviews," Liz Smith once said of the time she was the magazine's movie reviewer. (The reviews are still positive, grouped under the heading of "Must-See" films.)

Cosmo has close to three million subscribers — more than any other magazine edited for young women, with two million more readers buying copies on the newsstand.

HER HUSBAND, David Brown, a Hollywood producer who co-produced the films "Jaws," "The Sting" and "Cocoon," never interrupts his wife on Saturdays and Sundays when she is working upstairs in her office.

"We've never talked about it, but the secret contract is, I can be a workaholic at home and he won't interfere," she says.

"The tradeoff is that he is taken care of. I may not eat with him, but I cook three meals a day for my husband on the weekends.

AND NOW

After restoration work by the National Park Service and the Friends of Fort Davis volunteer support group, this is how officers' row at Fort Davis, top photo, looks today. History wasn't written by Hollywood. History was made by real people who were looking for something else — something in life besides what they already had, something more.

Some wanted land of their own, others sought a place to hide from the law, and still others just wanted a view of the other side of the hill. Whatever the reason, western expansion of this country was accomplished by day-to-day people who needed, wanted or were forced into a change.

But the settling of the West — for whatever reason — wouldn't have been possible without the help and protection of the soldiers who manned frontier forts.

"There's a whole string of frontier forts ... that allowed civilization to come out west," said Barbara Bigard of Midland, president of the board of directors of Friends of Fort Davis National Historic Site. "It could have taken a longer time if the soldiers hadn't been here. It's important to keep their place in history for the kids — (give them) a chance to see how it really was."

Fort Davis, located in the Davis Mountains of West Texas about 175 miles southwest of Midland, was first established in 1854, Ms. Bigard said. The original fort "was built quickly," she said. "The buildings were thatch huts, almost. After the fort was abandoned, the Apaches went in and burned what was left."

For that reason, most of the restoration that has been done has been on the Fort Davis that was constructed after the Civil War (1861-1865). "In the first Fort Davis, the barracks and officers' quarters had smaller foundations. It was occupied for a while by Confederate troops. When they abandoned it was when the Apaches came in and burned it.

"When they (the soldiers) went back, they moved it (the fort) back out of the box canyon. They had fuel and water and forage necessary for the livestock," said Ms. Bigard. Because of the temporary nature of the first fort's buildings and the fires set by the Apaches after the fort was deserted, "they pretty much started from scratch with the second fort."

When the second Fort Davis was built, it was manned by the famous "Buffalo Soldiers" — black troops that joined the Army after the Civil War freed the slaves. According to an article in the February 1989 issue of Texas Highways, "The Civil War ended in April 1865, and on July 28, 1866, Congress voted to add to the Army four regiments of all-black infantry (they were reorganized in 1869 into the 24th and 25th infantry regiments), and two all-black cavalry regiments, the 9th and 10th. The government enlisted blacks into the Regular Army for economic reasons — to solve a personnel

Festival facts

Raising funds for the continued restoration of Fort Davis National Historic Site is never easy, but it can be a lot of fun, according to Barbara Bigard, president of the board of directors of the Friends of Fort Davis.

This year the seventh annual Festival will be Sept. 1 at Fort Davis. "A lot of money comes from the all-day event," she said.

The Festival includes a silent auction each year, and "we need items," Ms. Bigard said. "It doesn't have to be related to the fort. We have loosely classified them (donations) as 'antiques and collectibles.' We can arrange pick-up. Donations are tax-deductible because we are a non-profit group."

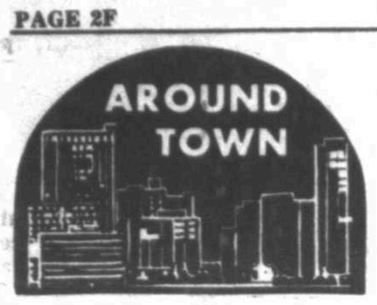

A highlight of the Festival is the annual baseball game between "soldiers" from Fort Davis and San Angelo's Fort Concho. The game is played with 1880 rules, said Ms. Bigard. "We play ball twice a year — in June at Concho (Fiesta del Concho) and at Festival at Davis. The Fort Davis team has 1880 uniforms that we got a year ago. The Concho guys play in cavalry and infantry uniforms. ... We've won two (games) in a row and they will be out for blood."

This year's Festival also will include cavalry demonstrations, and weapons firing and demonstration by the infantry, presented by volunteers who act the parts of 1880s soldiers.

Other events include:

- Children's games from the 1880s, such as bobbing for apples, three-legged races, and hoop and stick races, Ms. Bigard said. "We try to encourage the parents to play with them (the children). They all get ribbons, so everybody wins."
- Western art show and sale. "The artists usually get together and do a 'quick-draw' contest," where they try to draw a sketch faster that anyone else, said Ms. Bigard.
- Crafts people who specialize in crafts of the 1880s, including broommakers, wooden toy makers and "maybe a blacksmith," will participate, she said.
- An 1880s fashion show or a one-act melodrama is a tradition at Festival.

FORT DAVIS: History comes alive at landmark

problem and to employ jobless exslaves — and, some historians have written, to perform military duties that white soldiers did not want, and to remove blacks from Eastern population centers."

But the black troops proved themselves to be fierce fighters and exceptional soldiers. So superior was their reputation as Indian fighters, that the Indians themselves "began calling the black troopers 'Buffalo Soldiers' as a badge of honor," the article went on. "Presumably, the soldiers' curly hair reminded the Indians of their sacred buffalo, an animal they admired for its strength and stamina. The men of the 10th took the name as a compliment, and later included a buffalo on their regimental crest."

THE BUFFALO Soldiers also proved themselves to be loyal and determined to serve with honor. The magazine article continued: "...desertion among the Buffalo Soldiers was generally not a problem. More than 20 percent of the U.S. Army deserted in 1867, compared with 4.2 percent of the black soldiers. Ten years later, the 10th Cavalry had 18 desertions and the 9th Cavalry had only six. By comparison, the celebrated all-white 4th Cavalry had 184 and the 7th Cavalry experienced 172.

"The Buffalo Soldiers were also on sick leave less often than white soldiers, they suffered fewer cases of drunkenness, and had a lower incidence of suicide. General James Parker wrote that white officers said the Buffalo Soldiers 'were superior to white soldiers in discipline, fidelity, neatness, sobriety, and equal in bravery.'"

Life on the frontier was never easy, and the life of the Buffalo Soldier was harder than most. Often their food was inferior to that of the white troopers, their living arrangements more primitive, their equipment was old and ammunition scarce, and even their horses "were oftentimes rejects from white units," the article said.

Though they were regarded as fierce Indian fighters, most of the time their lives were more routine. The article continued, "for the most part the Buffalo Soldiers, like their white counterparts, spent their time building and improving forts, tending to the horses, drilling, escorting stages and surveyors, and scouting the frontier. According to Colonel Grierson's report for 1879, the 10th Cavalry logged 34,420 miles, opened 300 miles of roads, and 200 miles of telegraph lines."

But within a few decades, the soldiers' work was finished. The military abandoned Fort Davis again — this time for good — in 1891.

THROUGH THE decades that followed, Fort Davis, along with Fort Concho in San Angelo, was saved from complete destruction because the buildings were used as dwelling places after the military departed.

"Concho and Davis were fortunate, because they were built with stone and adobe," said Ms. Bigard of the Friends of Fort Davis. "In the '30s and in the '50s there were people who lived in the buildings, and did maintenance that helped us preserve them."

Today Fort Davis' ruins and restoration are governed by the National Park Service, which took over administration of the site in 1961, Ms. Bigard said. "They did a survey to find out which buildings needed immediate attention to stop deterioration."

The Friends of Fort Davis was organized in 1982 as a support group to help the National Park Service in restoration and maintenance of the historic site. Since then, the Friends have been donating their time and efforts, and having fund-raisers, to continue the fort's restoration.

The biggest project the Friends have undertaken so far was the restoration of the enlisted men's barracks, which was just the shell of the original structure before the Friends' efforts restored it and furnished it as it was in the 1880s.

Other projects the Friends would like to undertake include completing the restoration of the fort's hospital and its two-story single officers' quarters.

"The hospital is a long-range project that a lot of people want to see us take on," Ms. Bigard said. "I would love to see us do the two-story single officers quarters — this has just been stabilized. There are no plans for this restoration (project) now. It's possible for the long range."

In fact, she added, "money is so tight for the budget, we have to look at everything as long-range right now."

BUT THE Friends are never idle where Fort Davis is concerned — even though the average visitor might not notice the work they have accomplished. "The things we've done the last year-and-a-half have not been big show items like the barracks," said Ms. Bigard. The Friends paid for some shipping and repair work on the three-inch ordinance rifle, planted grass in some of the front yards on officers' row, and continued the search for furnishings to be used in the buildings.

"The staff has a list of things that are finishing touches to the barracks and commander's quarters," said Ms. Bigard. "Any project that the Friends group does has to be approved by the National Park Service. We are just marking time until we can get approval to go on with another major project."

Some of the Friends also serve as Living History volunteers who "keep the houses and buildings and barracks open and do interpretation for visitors who come through in the summer," she said. Some of these volunteers play the parts of soldiers on horseback, officers and their wives, or anyone else who might have lived at Fort Davis in the 1880s.

"The volunteers are good about staying in character. They are very realistic," Ms. Bigard said. "The volunteers answer all the kids' questions. That's part of the reason for the volunteers — the kids. It's so nice to give them a view of history that's not Hollywood."

Fort Davis, the Friends and the staff receive a lot of support from residents of the town of Fort Davis that grew up around the fort, and from the nearby towns of Marfa and Alpine, Ms. Bigard said. But people from all over the area have a part of this piece of West Texas history. "We've got about 40 of our 300 members (the Friends organization) from Midland," she said.

DESCENDANTS OF the soldiers who served at Fort Davis have played a part in the fort's preservation too, she said. "A lot of the descendants are still military. Our membership roster has a lot of retired military. We have descendants of people who actually served at the fort — they have been very generous in donating items. A lot (of items) on display were actually at the fort in the 1880s."

And visitors from all over the country have walked the grounds of Fort Davis. "People can visit the fort and make it whatever they want — military history, the history of the area," said Ms. Bigard.

"The fort for me has always been a special place. We live in a stressful world. When I walk across that bridge, I leave 1990 behind in the parking lot. There's a peacefulness and sense of history — it's the place I go to restore my soul and soothe my spirit.

"The spirit of the soldiers is very strong, if you're into that sort of thing."

Others have felt the specialness of Fort Davis, Ms. Bigard said. "Alex Haley (author of "Roots") came to the dedication of the barracks in '88. He made the comment that it was an exciting event, and he knew the spirit of all the soldiers was there and they were finally receiving the recognition they deserve."

Ms. Bigard agreed with Haley's observation. "It's been a sin of omission," she said. "Those black soldiers here on this frontier opened up this area. ... They've gone too long without the recognition they deserve."

Fort Davis National Historic Site is located in the town of Fort Davis, about 40 miles south of Interstate 10. Visiting hours are 8 a.m.-6 p.m. daily between Memorial Day and Labor Day, and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. the rest of the year. Fort Davis National Historic Site is closed Dec. 25 and Jan. 1. Admission is $1 per person or $3 per car; persons 62 years old or older and children up to age 16 are admitted free. For more information call (915) 426-3224 or write to Box 1456, Fort Davis 79734.

FESTIVAL: Annual event celebrated in September

(From 1F)

■ Barbecue lunch, another Festival tradition, costs $5 for adults and $3 for children younger than 12. "Children under 5 are free," Ms. Bigard said. "During the barbecue we have music by the Corngrinders."

■ A raffle that is traditionally conducted with old-fashioned items. The raffle is "one of our best money-making parts of Festival," said Ms. Bigard. This year items to be raffled off are a quilt, from the Davis Mountain Quilters, that has been made from an antique quilt top and an added border to make the quilt queen-sized; and a replica Creedmoor Target Rifle (caliber 75.70) with a 30-inch barrel, blue finish and hooded front site. This kind of rifle "was used a buffalo rifle," Ms. Bigard said. "This type of rifle, an officer would have had — it's not the military issue enlisted men would have had."

Besides being fun, Festival is a worthy cause. "Last year we netted $5,500" for Fort Davis, said Ms. Bigard. "We have a faithful group that comes, and we pick up new people each year. They come from everywhere. We're just amazed. We have as many as 1,000 to 2,000 (people attend) on a good day."

Alaska wildfires haven't dampened tourism

By Amy Weber
N.Y. Times News Service

Lightning strikes and dry conditions sparked more than 200 wildfires in Alaska in recent weeks. But upbeat tourism and fire officials say the situation has cooled.

Rainfall last week helped flush out much of the smoke that was fogging up Alaska's interior, and "everything is open and operating as before," said Wendy Wolf, deputy director of the Alaska Division of Tourism.

Since July 1, nearly 678,500 acres of forest land scattered across the state have burned, from the Kenai Peninsula in the south to near Prudhoe Bay in the far north, according to Pat Flowers of the Alaska Interagency Fire Information Center.

No lives or homes have been lost, and rain has helped to "settle down" the wildfires, which have been concentrated mostly in Alaska's vast, unpopulated acreage. The major cities of Fairbanks and Anchorage were never threatened by the fires, said Flowers, although one 3,000-acre fire, since controlled, came within 20 miles of Fairbanks.

Fires have struck "just a small fraction" of Alaska's about 368 million acres, he said.

The Alaska Highway, one of two highways entering the state, was closed for "hours or minutes at a time" in the first and second week of July when fire threatened the town of Tok, population 1,200. Tok, about 100 miles from the Canadian border, is a first and frequent stop for tourists entering the state. Some 44,300 acres around the town burned.

The scenic Top of the World Highway, which stretches for 170 miles from Canada to Tetlin Junction, Alaska, was never closed, although signs of the fire are visible in blackened acreage on either side of a portion of the road near Tok, said fire-information officer Terry Virgin.

"The fires are remotely located," said Denali park ranger Sandy Kogl, and have not affected any of the park services, such as wildlife viewing or park tours.

Thousands of acres of land were burning in five of Alaska's wildlife refuges. None was interfering with tourism activities, said Bruce Batten of the National Fish and Wildlife Service.

Fort Davis vineyard blamed for neighbors' illnesses

By Suzanne Gamboa

FORT DAVIS (AP) — Elisa Aguilar's relatives like to brag of the strength and vitality she showed raising nine children. But today her strength is gone.

Elisa Aguilar takes 17 pills and four injections a day. She has trouble walking and sleeps with an oxygen machine hooked to her nose.

Twenty-one people in this Davis Mountain town of about 900 are suing the vineyard's former owners and its managers over weedkillers that were sprayed on grapes.

"When they started spraying, she started to get sick," said Ms. Aguilar's son, Adan.

State officials say it's clear people are having health problems in Fort Davis, but say that doesn't necessarily mean Blue Mountain did anything wrong.

A former vineyard owner said the business is being made a scapegoat for pollution encroaching on the remote town, known for air so clean that it's home to the University of Texas McDonald Observatory.

Many retirees are drawn to the solitude and open spaces of Fort Davis, about 170 miles southeast of El Paso. Some doctors have advised their patients to move here for the fresh air.

'It is a difficult issue for us. We have found these people are so sensitive to pesticide that a pesticide application may have been done to the letter of the law, yet because of the volatility of the pesticide and the sensitivity of their bodies they are affected. This one is a puzzling one to us.'

— Max Woodfin
Agriculture Department

VINEYARD CRITICS say their suffering began in 1987, the year that four rows of the 40-acre vineyard were sprayed with Gramoxone, a herbicide similar to the highly toxic and restricted Paraquat. The Texas Department of Agriculture investigated the vineyard's spraying in 1988 and found no violations of state pesticide laws.

But in a May 15 letter, the Agriculture Department said it is convinced Fort Davis residents have legitimate health problems.

"It is a difficult issue for us," said Max Woodfin, Agriculture Department executive assistant. "We have found these people are so sensitive to pesticide that a pesticide application may have been done to the letter of the law, yet because of the volatility of the pesticide and the sensitivity of their bodies they are affected.

"This one is a puzzling one to us," Woodfin said.

A survey mailed a few weeks ago asks residents if they suffer any of 44 problems including depression, mental confusion, tooth and nerve loss, Bell's Palsy, arthritis, severe headaches or nose bleeds.

"The pesticide laws and regulations do not protect people. They gave them a clean bill of health in terms of laws and regulations, but that doesn't mean it's not hurting anybody," said Susan Pitman, director of The Chemical Connection. The Wimberly-based advocacy group for chemically sensitive people is conducting the survey.

The loudest complaints about the vineyard, one of five in the town, come from residents who consider themselves chemically sensitive, such as Kari Pratt. They say their bodies can detect agricultural chemicals that the Agriculture Department's equipment cannot.

MS. PRATT said a doctor told her to move to Fort Davis after she was exposed to a herbicide sprayed in a neighbor's yard. She said she had nearly recovered when the vineyard was sprayed with Gramoxone.

"I have lung problems now that I've never had in my life, and I have trouble breathing," said Ms. Pratt, 41.

Former resident Colleen Roberts said her allergy-prone husband seemed to recover his health when they moved to Mission after 16 years in Fort Davis.

Byford Roberts, who was a plaintiff in the suit until he moved, had been sick on days the vineyard was sprayed, Mrs. Roberts said.

"I don't know if that vineyard up there was the problem, but that environment up there is getting really toxic," Mrs. Roberts said. "Since he's been here in Mission, he's a brand new person ... Before he was a huffin' and a puffin' and couldn't breathe."

Former vineyard owner Lee Hereford said he believes people are sick in Fort Davis. But he doesn't think the vineyard is to blame.

"I think we got picked because we're the only commercial vineyard in the mountains," Hereford said. "I'm really sorry these people are sick, but I know it's not us doing it to them. Some of the chemicals we're using, I've used in our garden."

Hereford bought the vineyard in 1983. He said he was forced to sell it this year because the lawsuit drove away investors and used up his capital.

THE OTHER plaintiffs are Hereford's former general partner in the vineyard, Stephen William Lipscomb; vineyard consultant Tom Childs and managers Juanita and Ceasar Castaneda. The vineyard, whose attorney is in Conroe, recently won approval to move the suit there.

Hereford points out that Fort Davis is only about 70 miles from the Mexican border. Westerly winds bring some of the pollution that taints the border from unregulated burning on the Mexican side, he said.

"I think we have a group of people here who were sold a bill of goods," Hereford said. "They were told to go to Fort Davis to get well. That was going to be their nirvana. But they didn't get better and they had to get somebody. And we drew the black bean."

Hereford said he wonders if the sicknesses are exaggerations or stem from something else. Some days when the critics claimed to be sick, nothing was being sprayed at the vineyard, he said.

"Have they surveyed their neighbors? What are their neighbors spraying? Have they done any research about what sort of crop dusting is being done in the area? What about the highway department and the ranchers in the area?" Hereford asked.

The current vineyard owner, Nell Weisbach, said herbicides no longer are used there. "We use a little fungicide; that's all we do. It's done all over the country. We do nothing that's harmful," Ms. Weisbach said. She is not named in the suit.

BUT THE vineyard critics say fungicides, which kill fungus and parasitic plants, are just as toxic. They would like to see local grapes grown organically as they are at some California and New York vineyards.

"We're not just doing this for ourselves; we're doing it for the community," said Anita Bishop, who also believes she was poisoned by the pesticides. "People have been sent here for years and years and years because its so pristine and beautiful and clean. But it ain't that way anymore."

DEAR ABBY

Nosy teen must tidy up after ex-maid's messy love affair

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our maid (I'll call her Betty) quit a couple of months ago. She left in a hurry, and when I asked her what we should do about her mail, she said, "Just throw it away."

Van Buren

Last year, Betty disappeared for a few days, so I went through her dresser drawers trying to find some clue as to where she could have gone, or if she was planning on coming back. Anyway, I came across some letters from her boyfriend, "Ryan." He's in the Navy. Being nosy, I read Ryan's letters, and he really loves Betty.

Abby, Ryan keeps writing to Betty. I can't believe I did this, but I've been steaming open all the letters Ryan had written to Betty since she's been gone, and he is very upset because he hasn't heard from her. He doesn't know she doesn't work here anymore.

Should I write to Ryan and tell him that Betty quit her job with us and we have no idea where she is or whether she's coming back? She took most of her clothes with her, and what she left isn't worth very much.

I hate to let the poor guy go on writing, thinking that Betty is still here and ignoring his letters.

I sure need some advice. Please tell me what to do. — WINNETKA, ILL., TEEN-AGER

DEAR TEEN-AGER: It would be a kindness to return Ryan's letters with a brief note explaining that Betty quit working at your home a couple of months ago, and she left no forwarding address. And for your information, young lady, opening other people's mail is forbidden by law, so do not do it again!

DEAR ABBY: The letter you recently published from "Disgusted in Boston" about the pregnant commuter really rang a bell with me. A few years ago, when I was pregnant with what would turn out to be 17 pounds of twins, I rode a train from an affluent Long Island community to my office in New York City. The ride was almost one hour. It was summer, so my condition was obvious. Like "Boston," not one person (male or female) offered me a seat. While standing, the pressure and subsequent pain was extreme, but nobody noticed.

It was heartwarming, however, that when riding the New York subways and buses (where the riders were generally poorer and often foreign-born), I was almost always offered a seat.

This is not a chivalry problem; it's a lack of sensitivity and human decency. So, wake up, America, and treat others as you would want to be treated! — EYES OPEN ON LONG ISLAND

DEAR EYES OPEN: At one time, etiquette decreed that a gentleman should always offer his seat to a lady who is standing. Well, it's time for a change. When it comes to public transportation, in the interest of fairness and equal rights, the only reason an adult person should offer his or her seat to another is if the person standing is elderly, infirm, disabled or pregnant.

DEAR ABBY: I got a kick out of all those letters from people complaining about lousy haircuts.

One penny-pinching guy I know always tells his barber to give him a "close" haircut so it will last a while. Then he tells everybody that he "fell asleep" in the barber's chair. Sound familiar? — MARVIN IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR MARVIN: I think I know the guy; there's one in every town. And how about the fellow who walks into a barber shop and says to the barber, "I need a haircut — but don't make it any shorter."

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

AT WIT'S END

'Value of a dollar' is declining

By Erma Bombeck

Is anyone else suffering from zero overload? Every time I open the newspaper or turn on the television, it's a billion dollars here or a trillion there. I never understood all those zeros when Carl Sagan talked about them, but it didn't seem important then. Now that I have to pay a share of $500 billion to bail out the savings and loans, it's important. I've never owed on anything that had 11 zeros before.

Bombeck

I can't get a handle on that much money. If $500 billion was broken down into $5 bills, would they reach around the world? If you stacked them and sat on them, would you get a nosebleed from the altitude? How many sheets could Imelda Marcos buy with them? If they were nose tissues, how long would they last 50 people with colds?

The practice of zero dropping has gotten out of hand. No one even blinks anymore when talking about a national debt of $10.4 trillion, Adnan Khashoggi's apartment a steal at $33 million, or the California lottery being upped to $15.6 million to get people interested in it again. It's as if people have been numbed with Novocain. All those zeros mean nothing.

The other night a television reader reported that Ivan Boesky took a tax write-off on half of his $100 million settlement on insider trading. She gave it all the excitement of a kid swiping a tip at Denny's.

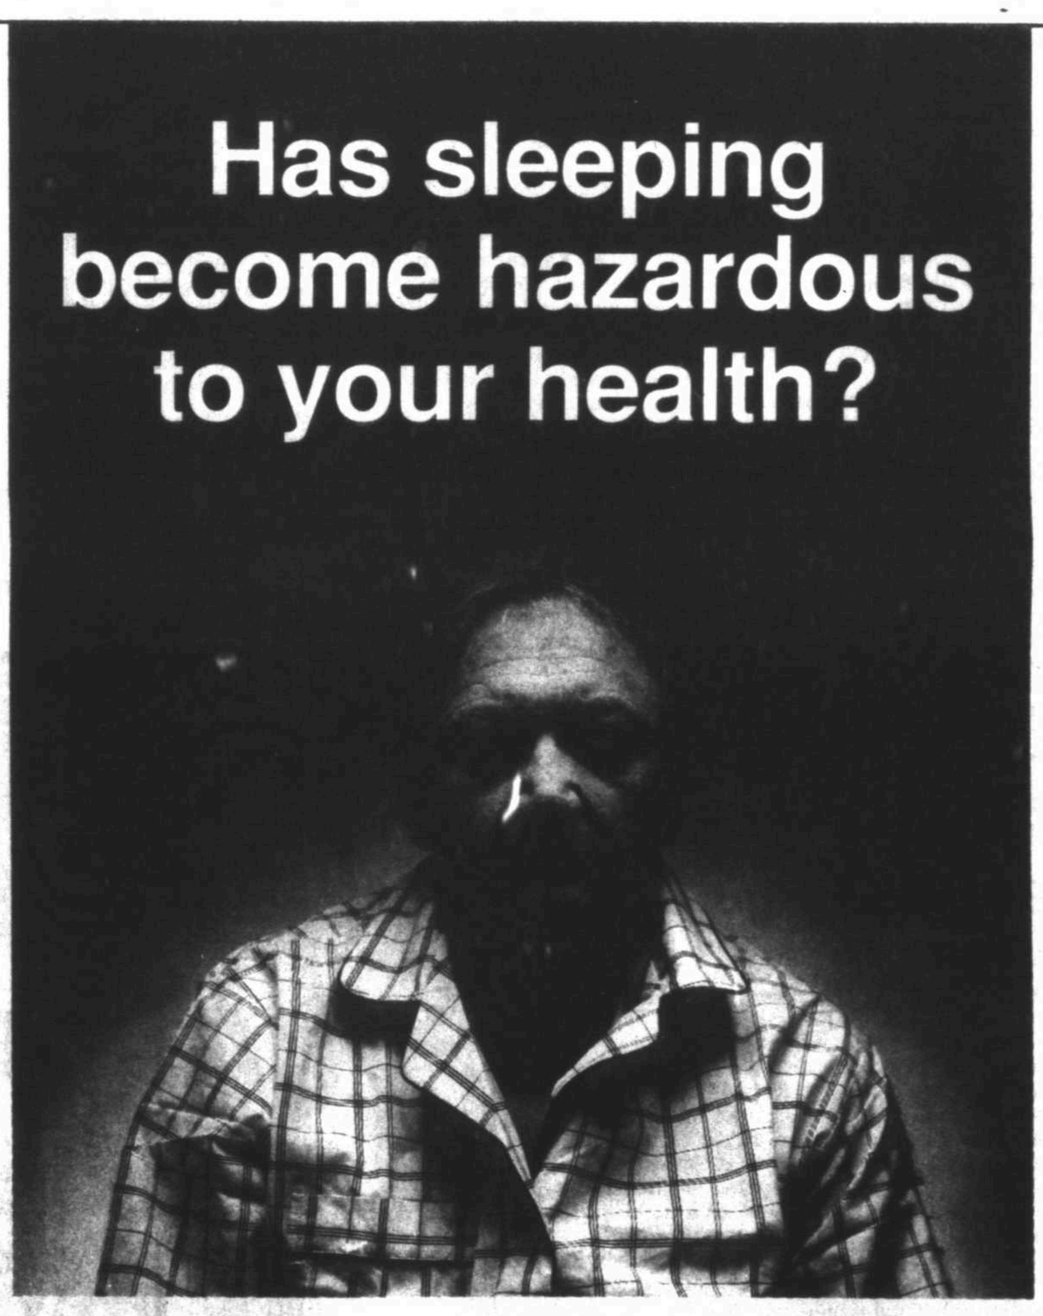

Maybe our apathy started when plastic replaced money. We don't see money anymore; therefore, we place no value on it. We have forgotten what it looks like, how long it takes to get it, and how hard we have to work for it.

On the news the other night there was talk about changing some of the denominations of money when someone observed, "Why don't we do away with the dollar bill? It's useless, and besides, it doesn't buy anything anymore."

I hate to think I will eventually fall into the state of numbness where I will no longer question what all those zeros mean. If we are to be assaulted with numbers, why can't they be related to something? When a person is convicted of ripping off the government in nine zeros, tell me how many organ or bone marrow transplants that will buy. If a scam is involved, tell me how much money that would mean to cancer and AIDS research. If they're going to throw all those zeros at us, tell us how many hungry children it would feed or how many homeless it would house. Maybe we could get a little rage going here.

Has sleeping become hazardous to your health?

A good night's sleep should leave you healthy and restful – energized and ready to face the day ahead.

But for some, sleeping may be hazardous. Because if you sleep fitfully, snore heavily, breathe irregularly or grow overly sleepy during the day, those symptoms may signal sleep apnea or a variety of other sleep disorders.

These problems are often easily treated, but ignoring them could be hazardous to your health. Left untreated, they can lead to depression, an enlarged heart, lack of energy and daytime sleepiness.

If these symptoms sound familiar to you, or describe someone you love, call the Sleep Disorders Laboratory at AMI Odessa Women's and Children's Hospital.

Our trained sleep specialist can tell you more about sleep disorders, what causes them and how they are treated. We can answer your questions, and send you a brochure with more information. If necessary, we'll make an appointment for you to visit a physician specially trained to treat them.

If sleeping has become hazardous to your health, or to the health of someone you love, call us today at (915) 334-8352.

Southern-style luxury found at Greenbrier Resort

By Laurie Werner
Copley News Service

Anyone who feels stressed-out, burned-out, or under siege by the often rude, chaotic doings of everyday life should check in for a weekend at the Greenbrier.

This grand, supremely gracious resort in White Sulphur Springs, W.Va., has been restoring bodies and souls for over 200 years, and in those years the staff has perfected its approach: ultimate, old-fashioned Southern hospitality with up-to-the-minute, almost decadent luxury. Faced with that, even the most frazzled have to give in.

The pampering starts as soon as you arrive. If you fly in to one of the area airports (prop planes come into the Greenbrier Valley Airport, 15 minutes away; jets come into Roanoke, Va., an hour and a half away), and ask to be collected, a long black Cadillac limo arrives. (Limos are the Greenbrier vehicle of choice; the resort keeps 10 on hand simply to ferry guests around the grounds.)

After a smooth ride through the verdant countryside, the limo pulls up to the long circular drive of the main entrance.

You disembark and go to check in, then wait on an overstuffed couch for a bellman to be assigned. When he is, he calls out your name with respectful formality. It's the only time being called Miss has ever sounded that good.

I WAS LESS pleased, however, when I was shown to my room. The sunny, floral wallpapered room was enormous, but it faced a white brick wall — a real downer when you know that there are 6,500 acres out there just waiting to be looked at and 650 other rooms and 69 cottages that must have some of that view.

So I called down to the front desk to change and while I did, remembered a line I had read in a guidebook about this hotel: "Don't accept the first room you're shown." It was the only false note of my Greenbrier stay; hopefully, it isn't a pattern.

It was swiftly corrected, though, when another bellman arrived to show me options.

Fortunately, that bellman was a canny veteran named Pepper Coy, who in his 14 years of service has gotten to know most of the place's secrets — including the best places to stay.

He led me to Paradise Row, a line of cottages that, dating from the early 1800s, are the resort's oldest — it started as a cottage community — and recently renovated, among the most palatial.

With a bedroom larger than my entire apartment, a drawing room with fireplace, plush carpet and Oriental decor, a back patio and a front porch overlooking a section of the grounds that resembles a village green, Paradise 3 earned its name with distinction.

FORTUNATELY, THIS cottage also was a good walk's distance to the main house, an advantage I discovered after sitting down to the first meal. Southerners aren't exactly stingy hosts and dinners here border on the epic.

Even the dining room borders on the epic. Designed by society decorator Dorothy Draper (who redid all the resort's interiors after World War II), it's a vast expanse of pink walls, intricate English crystal chandeliers, cascading drapes and old paintings of serious-looking early American aristocrats.

A perfect setting in which to eat six courses, including salmon tartare, lobster bisque, beef tenderloin and homemade amaretto ice cream with cherries.

After dinner, guests can watch relatively first-run movies in the theater, play pool, drink to the jazz band in the ornate, chandeliered Old White Club, or rip up the dance floor to rock in the downstairs lounge. (An addition to appeal to younger guests.)

Another option, though, is just to walk around the house; it's a marvel both of architecture and design.

Built in several stages, the first finished in 1913, it was intended to supplement the venerable but aging Old White, a hotel that served in the 19th century as the social playground of Southern belles and the summer home of Robert E. Lee.

When the wooden Old White was torn down in 1922 for violating fire laws, wings were added to the Georgian-style Greenbrier to expand it to its present 650-room capacity.

Huge, imposing, with tall columns and porticos, it now looks something like the White House — only bigger. Examining it, one understands why powerhouse guests — among then every president from Dwight Eisenhower to George Bush, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, Princess Grace, every captain of industry and member of New York society — would come here to stay.

INSIDE, ESPECIALLY in the 10 separate lobbies, the house is equally impressive. The forthright Draper touch is everywhere — in the bold combinations of stripes and chintz, in the multidimensional use of colors, adding perspective as you move room to room.

Early American antiques are mixed with Oriental pieces and, in the main lobby, everything set against a giant black-and-white checked floor.

It sounds hideous, it wouldn't be something to try in the small scale of a home. But here, in this massive palace, it works.

We walked the lobbies, admired the delicately lit pink ballroom, with its miniature of a horse-drawn carriage — several real ones cross the grounds — and decided to walk the village green back to Paradise.

On the pillow were the Greenbrier's homemade chocolates wrapped in a gold-embossed envelope proclaiming, 'It's Sleepy Time Down South." Even their chocolates, it seems, are charming.

The next morning we were ready for another mammoth meal. We got it, a six-course breakfast that included freshly baked biscuits and the famed Virginia smoked hams.

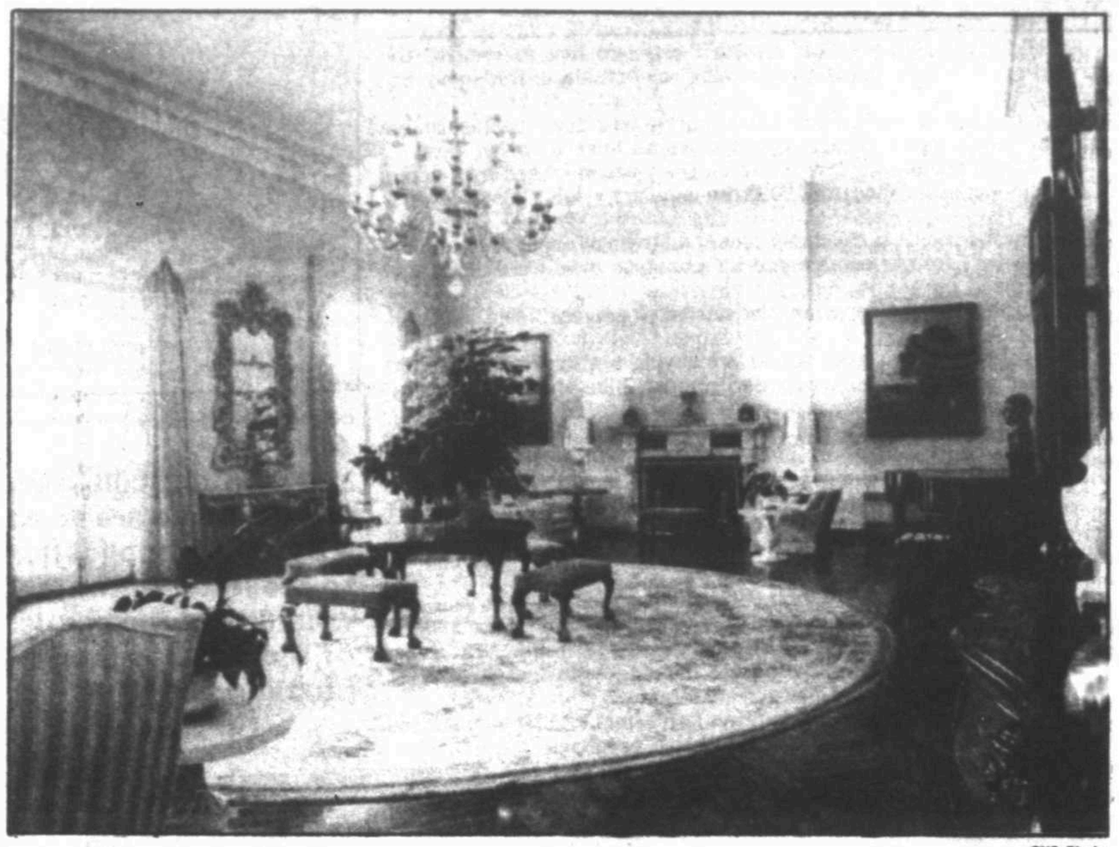

We also got a hint of the resort's renowned service: simply stated, our waiter's life seemed to depend upon our being pleased. He was so attentive and concerned that he had to be kidding so I looked over to see if I could detect a slight smirk. Only the most earnest look crossed his face.

AS I FOUND out over the course of a few days, this waiter was not an isolated case. As Greenbrier historian Robert Conte explains it, employees are chosen for their congenial personalities and then taught to serve with utter devotion. Many become so adept at it because they stay for years; some start dynasties, bringing the next generations in to work there as well.

The reasons for such profound loyalty: The hotel is the biggest and best industry in the area and employees are given free golf privileges on the resort's three acclaimed courses. As Conte explains, one employee has spent 20 years at the Greenbirer, diligently working on his game.

When you look at these courses, you can understand why. If golf courses can be art, these are: beautifully landscaped with rolling fairways and hills, a river providing a natural water hazard, the Allegheny Mountains in the background. Jack Nicklaus designed one of the courses and every top pro has been here at one time to play it.

I wasn't here for golf, however; I was here for the Greenbrier's original draw, the sulfur springs and their curative powers. Use of the springs officially dates back to 1778, when a Southern lady, Amanda Anderson, cured her rheumatism by bathing in this water. Stories about this miracle spread around the South and soon all the best families were coming to take the cure.

CNS Photo

This parlor lends elegance to the Southern charm of the Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

THE SPRINGS are now marked by a columned Spring House built in the early 1800s. There is a tap to drink the sulfury water — if you can get it past your nose. The more fainthearted go over to the new spa, and sit in it there.

I did, as the beginning of a 90-minute, aptly named program called perfect relaxation ($85) that combines a sulfur springs soak, time in the steamroom or sauna, Swiss shower (powerful, with many showerheads) and Scottish spray (even more powerful, slightly torturous single spray), massage and herbal wrap. (Treatments are available individually or in different combinations.) After it all, it takes uncommon energy to even get off the table.

After a couple of minutes, though, I forced myself to get up because I didn't want to miss tea: a formal tea service is held every afternoon in the main lobby, accompanied by a violinist and pianist. Everyone assembles to listen but no one eats too much.

The reason is dinner: in a couple of hours, everyone will be returning to the main dining room (or, for a surcharge, to the more sophisticated Tavern Room or seafood-oriented dining room in the golf club) to be grandly overfed. Even those on diets will have a hard time resisting. In a place of such elaborately defined manners, it seems impolite to turn anything down.

The Greenbrier, White Sulphur Springs, W.Va. 24986. Rooms: $145-$265 per person, MAP. From May 24-Sept. 3., families get a special rate: $290 for the parents, no charge for the kids, all breakfasts and dinners included.

Tiny computer filled with facts on interstate travel

By Jayne Clark
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Summertime is time to hit the road. And motorists who want to know just what lurks off the interstate before they veer down an exit might be interested in the Interstate Travelmate.

The new product is a calculator-sized computer whose database contains state-by-state information on restaurants, motels and services located off more than 13,700 exits on major highways and interstates throughout the United States.

Also included are the names and locations of 24-hour gas stations and restaurants, highway patrol offices, hospitals, tourist information centers and campgrounds.

The computer also lists local phone numbers for road conditions, weather and traveler assistance, along with toll-free numbers for lodgings and motor clubs.

The database contains more than 30,000 separate listings, said Diane Weil, marketing manager for the product, which is being distributed by Whistler, a Westford, Mass., company.

The travel computer does have limitations, however. While it will steer you toward places to eat and sleep, it will not tell you whether they are any good.

"That's the next generation," Weil said.

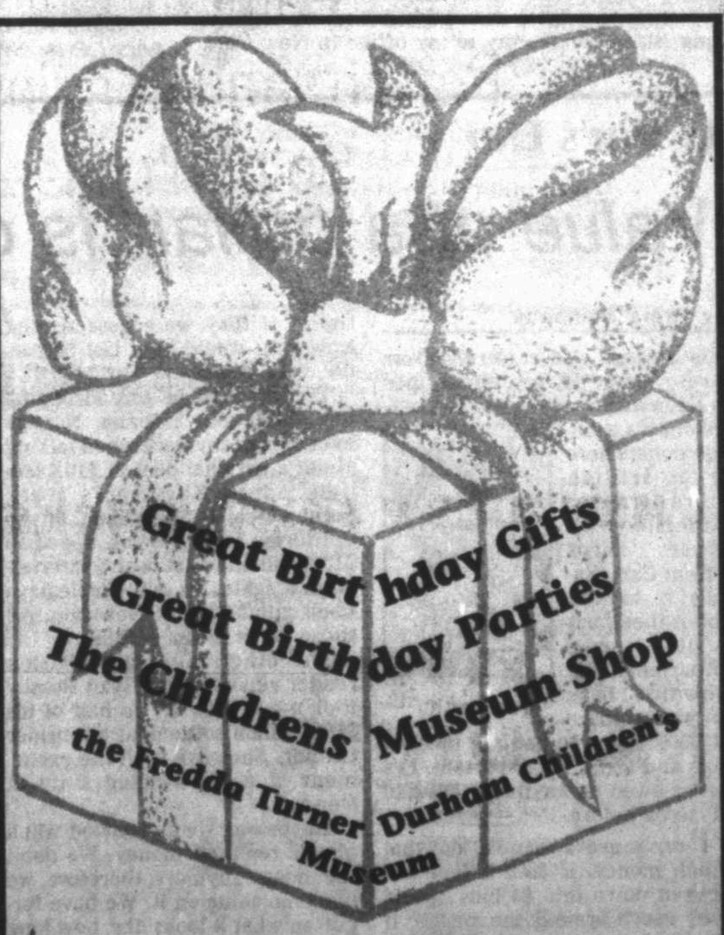

Information now in the database is about a year old. But owners can get the device updated annually for about $20 by sending it to Whistler for reprogramming.

Retail cost of the Interstate Travelmate is $99.95.

Despite reputation, airline food not always terrible

By Eric Weiner
N.Y. Times News Service

Kevin Greene hates jokes about airline food. And as director of catering services for Pan American World Airways at Kennedy International Airport, he's heard them all.

"It's unfortunate we get a bum rap," he said, proudly displaying a tray of lobster thermidor for first-class passengers on a flight to Paris. "We're spending a fortune to buy top quality."

Indeed, the nation's airlines are spending record amounts on good service in an effort to shed their image as the providers of the airborne equivalent of hospital cuisine.

They are hiring well-known chefs to help revamp menus, replacing plastic with silverware and ceramic crockery, and offering healthier fare.

The changes are mostly apparent in small ways, and primarily in business and first-class sections, for which airlines spend three or four times more for food than they do for coach.

American Airlines has begun baking fresh cookies on board and offering do-it-yourself ice cream sundaes in first class.

United Airlines is serving Japanese food on its flights to Tokyo; Pan Am offers borscht on its New York-to-Moscow route, and last month the airline introduced hot meals on some short domestic flights.

MANY AIRLINES have improved their wine selections, particularly on international flights.

But some food experts, not to mention passengers, are skeptical. To them, airline food — particularly what is served in coach class — still deserves its dismal reputation.

"There is a concerted effort being made to improve food, but it may not manifest itself on the tray," said George Haupt, president of the In-Flight Food Services Association, a trade group of airline caterers.

Haupt also maintains that the crowded conditions in coach class make it difficult for any dining experience to be pleasurable.

"In coach, you're elbow to elbow with someone, you have a seat back in your face and then you're handed a tray with your whole meal on it," he said.

Wolfgang Puck, owner of Spago restaurant in Los Angeles, phrased it more succinctly. "To me, an airplane is still a great place to diet."

The push for better food reflects a changing airline industry. With only eight American airlines controlling 90 percent of the domestic market, airlines compete less on fares and more on service.

The fare wars of the early 1980s, which frustrated airline executives and delighted consumers, have largely been replaced by battles over seat width, frequent-flier programs and, now, food.

In addition, as U.S. airlines add international routes, they find their food must compete with that of foreign airlines, whose cuisine has long enjoyed a better reputation.

CURIOUSLY, THE food for many foreign and domestic airlines is prepared by the same catering companies.

The difference, food experts say, lies in the attention that the staff gives the food.

"At the foreign airlines, there is an energy, a responsiveness on the part of the staff," said Michael Whiteman, a food consultant in New York. "They're not just plopping the food down."

The nation's 10 largest airlines spent $2 billion on food last year, an average of $5.05 per passenger — or 13.3 percent more than in 1988 and 21.7 percent more than in 1987, according to Airline Economics, a consulting concern in Washington.

Some of the increases are due to higher food prices, but industry analysts attribute the rise mainly to the airlines' effort to improve food quality.

In one of the most ambitious programs, Northwest Airlines plans to spend $100 million over the next five years to improve its food service.

The airline is phasing in full meals on 60 flights a day that had offered only snacks. More choices of entrees will be available in coach class, larger portions served in all classes and dozens of new recipes introduced.

For instance, the airline now offers fajitas and a three-pasta entree in coach.

"The pendulum has swung back again, and passengers expect restaurant-quality food," said Robert Gibbons, a spokesman for Northwest.

AIRLINE EXECUTIVES are quick to point out the obstacles they face in serving meals at 35,000 feet. With little room for preparation on board, airline food must be prepared hours — sometimes days — in advance, trucked to the plane, where it may sit for hours more, reheated and, finally, served in a cramped setting where the air is drier than in the Sahara.

WHAT'S MORE, airline chefs have to serve hundreds of passengers who may have nothing more in common than wanting to get from New York to Chicago. As a result, the carriers select foods with the widest appeal or, more precisely, that are least offensive.

"Nobody is on an airplane for a culinary adventure," said Mitch Gross, manager of food services for United Airlines at Kennedy Airport.

Despite the difficulties, there are examples of airlines that have broken out of the TV-dinner mold. Midwest Express, a medium-size carrier based in Milwaukee that is a subsidiary of Kimberly-Clark, has amassed something of a cult following for its fine cuisine.

The airline, which offers only coach service, serves its meals on china, with crystal glassware and stainless steel utensils.

Typical entrees include Maine lobster, braised grouse and fricassee of oyster. Even on short flights, it serves chilled lobster medallions rather than peanuts.

BUT EXECUTIVES at the nation's major airlines say that the smaller Midwest Express can more easily afford to offer fine cuisine.

"They're not providing the food on the scale that mega-carriers do," said Gibbons of Northwest.

Still, when the smaller carrier began serving fresh-baked cookies on its flights from Milwaukee, Northwest countered by offering Dove ice-cream bars on its flights.

Many airlines are hiring well-known chefs to help revamp menus. American has organized a conclave of 12 chefs, which meets annually to review the airline's food service.

"We're trying to figure out dishes that can be started on the ground and finished in the air," said Larry Forgione, who owns An American Place in New York and is one of the chefs retained by American.

He said he was most disturbed by the industry's use of cheap ingredients, particularly in coach class. "The smell of it alone is enough to make you crazy," he said.

As a result of the chefs' recommendations, American has begun cooking scrambled eggs for first and business class on international flights, and baking fresh cookies and breads for all of its first-class sections. Pan Am cooks chateaubriand completely on the plane for its first-class service to Europe.

Clark Wolf, a food consultant who travels 100 days out of the year, said: "It's great that they're baking cookies for first class, but the smell does travel to coach. People can become rabid."

Wolf, who said he brings his own food when traveling in coach, said airlines should stick to the basics. "They think that by smothering food with globs of sauce they can hide its inferiorities," he said.

The carriers respond that they use the heavier sauces to keep the food moist in the dry air of an airplane cabin. "It's not that we're trying to hide things," Ms. O'Neill said.

Smoking still allowed in cockpits

Copley News Service

Here's some news to get smokers fuming.

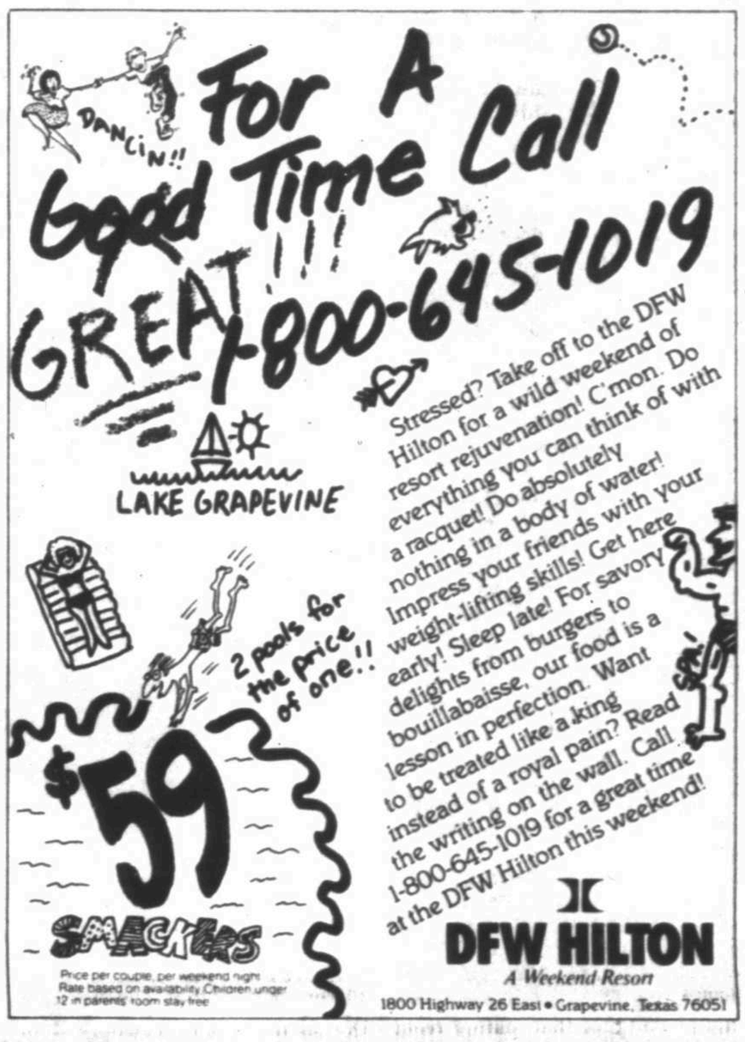

They're not allowed to light up on domestic flights, but there's still one smoking section left on all aircraft — the cockpit.

Pilots still can puff away on flights because government regulators are wary of withdrawal symptoms, making it a matter of safety and concern for the passenger.

Research shows that tobacco withdrawal slows down response time, often causing inaccurate decisions and increasing aggression.

SUNDAY BUSINESS DIGEST

Clean clip

A technician inspects a batch of Easy Hold clippers. The new clippers are designed to catch nail clippings. The oversized grips are contoured to be slip-proof and easy to hold, especially for the elderly.

Dinovcrs?

Here we go again. According to Higtech Digest, Videocassette recorders (VCRs) are on the verge of becoming obsolete as compact discs (CDs) move on that market. "Laser as we know it is going to soar," says Ron Panzica, vice president of a video outlet in Burnham, Illinois, "VHS is a dinosaur. Some are even predicting the death of VCRs."

The CDs are said to offer the same high quality video as found on CD audio recordings. CDs could also have an impact on the video rental business, because their lower cost would make more consumers willing to buy rather than rent, says the publication.

Free the tree?

While environmentalists are fighting to save the redwoods, Beverly Hills billionaire Marvin Davis is battling to protect "his" tree: the celebrated Lone Cypress on the 17-Mile Drive near Carmel.

Davis claims that his Pebble Beach Co., which owns the craggy point beneath the cypress, has "trademarked" the tree, giving it the same protection as McDonald's golden arches or the Pillsbury doughboy.

Although it has not gone to court yet, Pebble Beach Co. recently warned at least two photographers not to use pictures of the tree without its permission.

But the photographers, and some trademark experts, question whether it is possible to trademark a tree.

Davis' company owns the Pebble Beach golf course and resort and uses a drawing of the cypress on everything from its letterhead to its golf balls.

The tree is not on the resort itself but on the nearby 17-Mile Drive, which Davis also owns.

Prior to joining FERC, Ms. Hesse served as assistant secretary for management and administration at the U.S. Department of Energy.

Bankruptcy, debt relief's last option

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last story in a three part series covering debt relief. In this segment writer Sue Gutierrez will tell how debt burdened consumers can find relief through the Bankruptcy Code.

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

In the first and second part of this series Steve and Shelly, a heavily debt burdened couple, were able to seek help through credit counseling and slowly pay off their bills, but if they hadn't, bankruptcy may have been their only alternative.

Although bankruptcy means relief from harassing phone calls and angry creditors, counselors say it does not wipe your credit slate clean and give you a "fresh start" at least with respect to future credit. This decision will follow you for seven to ten years maybe even longer.

"Individuals can file bankruptcy under Chapter 13 which is available for people who have less than $100,000 in unsecured debts, such as credit card debt, or less than $300,000 in secured debts, like mortgages and automobile loans," says R. Mike Borland, an attorney with Borland & Borland Attorneys at Law.

He says Chapter 13 is for people who have a steady income and are capable of repaying their debts. It allows them to pay off all or part of their debt in installments over a period of time. Under Chapter 13, a bankruptcy petition is filed with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court along with a proposed payment plan.

The repayment period limit allowed by the court is generally three years, but not more than five. When both creditors and the court accept the plan the bankruptcy takes effect.

He says debtors will be required to give a specified amount of money to a trustee each month to pay the creditors. Under Chapter 13 you may keep all your property, both exempt and non-exempt, as long as payments are kept up under the plan.

Mike Borland notes that under Chapter 13 secured debt payments, such as mortgage payments can be stretched out over a 24 month period and prevents a lien against the home in order for the debtor to catch up. "The other benefit is that Chapter 13 is one of the very few places that you can force the Internal Revenue Service to take a payment. In Chapter 13 you have up to five years to pay them out and Chapter 11 you have six years."

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

ViLea and Mike Borland of Borland and Borland Attorneys at Law give guidance and assistance to debt burdened consumers who make the final step towards bankruptcy.

ViLea Borland, also an attorney with Borland & Borland says: "Chapter 13 halts interest if it is an unsecured claim."

After payments are completed, thedebts are discharged except alimony and support payments, certain kinds of taxes owed for less than three years and long term secured obligations.

"A lot of people just don't want to file Chapter 13, that's a tremendous obligation and it can take three-five years sitting under the scrutiny of a trustee having to make payments every month on old debts that they could just as readily discharge in a Chapter 7 case," Mike Borland says.

"A lot of people want to pay their debts, but they really can't, they just don't have the capability to make a monthly payment without totally strapping themselves then we recommend they take a Chapter 7 which is liquidation," he says.

Barbara Kurtz, assistant U.S. trustee says Chapter 7 is considered the "old fashioned" method of filing bankruptcy. "It is for people who say I just can't handle the debt anymore and I want relief." But she says it is the most drastic type of bankruptcy.

Under Chapter 7 a trustee will take possession of all property, except those that are exempt. The trustee will then liquidate the property and take the proceeds to pay creditors according to priority of the Bankruptcy Code. Mike Borland says, however, typically debtors can exempt all of their assets, but if assets are taken by the trustee, debtors can generally buy them back.

"We monitor both the debtors and the trustees to make sure it (the Bankruptcy Code) is not being abused," Kurtz says.

She says the court will then declare that you are no longer in debt except under special circumstances. Under Chapter 7, a repayment plan is not filed. The court will examine all records, before relieving all debt. However there are some debts that are non-dischargable such as taxes, student loans, provisions of divorce decrees and support payments, debts arising from drunk driving judgment and debts fraudulently incurred.

Is there just as much stigma attached to Chapter 13 as a Chapter 7 bankruptcy? Kurtz says no. "At the end of the 3-5 year term, his or her credit will be easier to establish because they showed good faith and now understand financial planning," she says.

Antiques find new popularity

■ Antiques are growing in popularity as young and old alike discover their uniqueness and quality and find they make good investments.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Local antiques dealers are finding that more and more younger Midlanders are developing a new appreciation for things that are old.

Yvonne Tighe, who founded Antiques Etc., said the store's customers range from young couples just starting out and looking for inexpensive furniture, to older customers looking for good investments.

She has observed that most of her customers are looking for pieces — whether it's furniture or china or silver — that are functional.

"I think the trend has been not toward the investment category — though a lot of people buy pieces as an investment — but they want to use these pieces in their everyday life."

More and more shoppers are turning to antiques as opposed to new furniture because of the antique's uniqueness, quality and price, Tighe said.

The store, home to 40 merchants, has just celebrated its first anniversary in its location in the former Knorr's Furniture location in Plaza Shopping Center. Plans are to open a store in Odessa for the Christmas season, and its yearly magazine, "Antiques Southwest" is due out in August. Tighe went on to predict that the store would near $1 million in gross sales this year.

She spends time antique-shopping in Europe, and in fact recently returned from a trip to Munich, West Germany. She noted that the stores there were remarkably similar to the stores in Midland in regards to merchandise. West Germans especially are fond of Western pieces, and Coca-Cola merchandise is popular in England, just like in Midland, she said.

"We (in Midland) are more influenced by Europe than the Northeast," she pointed out.

She has also observed that the growing popularity of antiques internationally has helped push prices up on both the wholesale and retail level, and has made some pieces difficult to find. Still, she said, prices in America are 30 to 50 percent less than they are overseas.

French buying Motel 6

■ The French will be "leaving on the light" when Accor buys Motel 6, and becomes largest budget chain.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Judging from its folksy radio ads and cut-rate conveniences, Motel 6, with headquarters in Dallas, might be the last place to expect to find the French.

Paris-based Accor SA said Thursday it had agreed to pay $1.3 billion in cash for Motel 6 LP in a deal that would make Accor the world's budget motel leader.

Analysts said the timing of the proposal was somewhat surprising, given the generally weak environment for both real estate and financing. But Accor said it already has arranged financing for the buyout.

Securities analyst William S. Fellows of Montgomery Securities in San Francisco noted that budget chains often benefit during economic downturns as travelers try to cut costs by choosing less expensive lodging.

"Motel 6 might lose some customers but you have other people trading down from mid-priced levels," he said.

Accor already owns more than 850 hotels and 3,000 restaurants in 60 countries, including the growing 120-hotel Formula 1 budget chain in Europe. Its target has been to own 2,000 budget hotels, and buying Motel 6 with 554 motels would be a big step toward that goal.

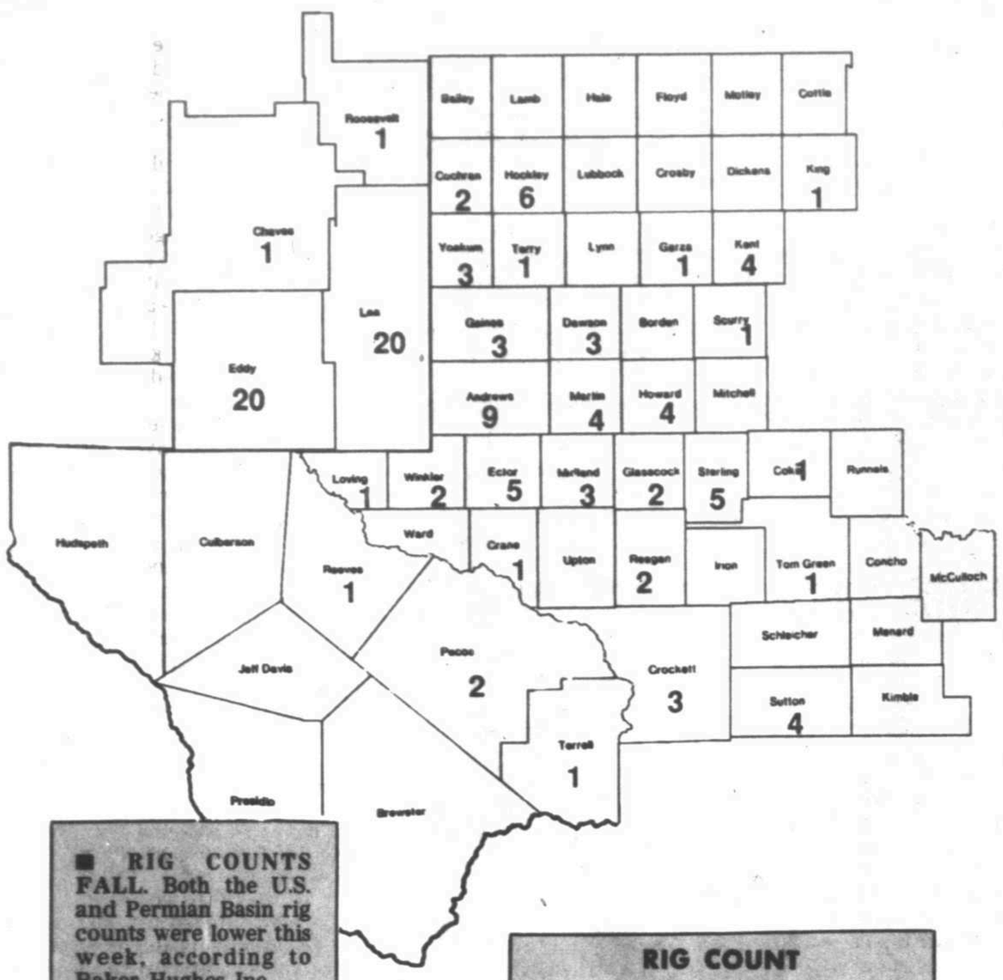

Motel 6 has carved out a profitable market niche for itself by emphasizing its low cost — rooms average about $27 a night — and no-frills ambience. Its radio ads end with the signature, "We'll leave the light on for you."

The company estimated it would have operating income of $220 million on revenue of $475 million this

The company reported that the U.S. total fell nine to 1,011 while the Permian Basin rig count fell a third week, dropping five to 118.

Among major oil-producing states, Texas gained six rigs, New Mexico's count increased by five and Colorado and Wyoming each gained three.

Landowners take on 'Big Oil

By Arnold Hamilton

COVINGTON, Okla. (AP) — As he rides along the bumpy, dusty road near his home, Ed Novy doesn't even try to conceal his dismay.

He repeatedly points out desolate patches of once fertile farmland, now covered with salt. He even leads a brief expedition into a creek bottom for a close look at the salt-filled waters.

"Even a damn rabbit couldn't stand on it (the land) without getting his feet burned," the wheat farmer said. "And the water down there is greasy — it's not fit to eat or drink."

Something is happening in the once-booming Garber oil field in north central Oklahoma, something that may have long term environmental, economic and political implications not only here but nationally.

According to some local residents, the land and the water have become increasingly toxic, saturated with brine from secondary oil recovery techniques employed by Atlantic Richfield Co.

Eight landowners even banded together to sue Arco for damages. But the case remains largely a mystery because those involved in negotiations have decided not to talk.

Nonetheless, at least one environmental law expert says the lawsuits could signal the beginning of a trend in an increasingly environmentally conscious United States.

"More people are suing more quickly over environmental damage and in general seem to be looking for deep pockets such as oil companies as their targets," said Barry Breen, editor of the Washington, D.C.-based Environmental Law Reporter.

"This could be the first ripple of a larger wave."

Eight separate lawsuits were filed nearly three years ago in U.S. District Court in Oklahoma City, but later consolidated into one case by the court.

The two sides recently entered intense negotiations to resolve the dispute, and attorneys say a settlement is imminent.

Once the pact is finalized, Arco officials said they would address the matter publicly. Until then, they said, they could only disclose that an agreement was in its final stages.

But while the two sides in the lawsuit may be nearing a legal common ground, there appears to remain a dispute within the Garber-Covington area about whether Arco should have been sued in the first place.

Some local residents have argued that Arco, and its predecessor, Sinclair, long were good corporate citizens, providing important jobs and royalty payments that helped bolster the rural, agriculture dominated economy.

They are convinced that the suits prompted Arco to announce recently that it was shutting down its operation in the Garber Field. And they worry that other oil companies will be unwilling to take Arco's place because of potential legal liability.

Others, like the outspoken wheat farmer Novy, said they opposed the lawsuits initially because they wanted Arco to stay and work alongside the farmers and ranchers to help clean up the damage.

DEBT: Court of last resort

(From 1G)

Mike Borland notes that many creditors will attempt to get debtors to reaffirm their debt. ViLea Borland says she advises against reaffirming a lot of debt. "If you reaffirm everything, you've got little value and you'll be right back where you started," she says.

ViLea Borland says she counsels people about changing the manner in which they have been doing business. "In the future if they have a child that needs a crown, they're not going to charge it on their Mastercard, they are going to have some money for emergencies and they are going to have to become a person who believes in delayed satisfaction," she says.

Bankruptcy will generally be expensive, ranging from $700-$20,000 to complete, but there is an alternative called Pro Se which can be picked up at the U.S. District Clerks office. Chapter 7 and 13 can be filed for around $120 while Chapter 12 will cost $200 and Chapter 11 $500.

"We don't encourage anyone except those with no assets to file Pro Se and if they do they should be overinclusive about their debts even if they aren't sure they owe it, " says Cindy Machacek, bankruptcy deputy clerk.

She says there were 558 bankruptcy cases filed in Midland in 1989. "We are running par to last year at this time. People are hurting in Midland, but the 500 cases we have here is small compared to several thousands that are filed in San Antonio and Austin."

ANTIQUES: Young people attracted to collectibles

hold its value, because much of it is made better than new jewelry.

But he cautions that the buyer interested in antiques and collectibles should know what he's doing.

"That's why you need to find a reputable dealer."

Like Potter, Bill Merrill, who owns Oldies But Goodies Antiques and More with his wife Laurie, has also noticed that customers turn to antiques because they feel they get quality for the money they spend.

Like Tighe, he has noticed that Coca-Cola memorabilia and ad signs are also big sellers. "The 50s era is popular right now, and cafe booths. People are making 50s kitchens," he observed. "It's the same with restaurants and bars."

He said that there's always been a market for antiques, but in the last few years, it's grown in popularity due to the growth of antique malls.

"You're looking at baby boomers who are reaching middle age. They've made good money and want to decorate their homes and offices in things they remember. And a lot of younger people are drawn to the uniqueness of an antique and its value as an investment," he said. "We see a lot of people buying them as investments. They feel it's as good as money in the bank."

While he is pleased with the prices he's getting at his store, which has been open six months, Merrill says antique prices depend on the area of the country. For instance, he said, pieces here sell for considerably less than they would on the West or East Coast.

And Ed Potter said local antique prices have been affected by the depressed oil economy. "If the oil prices aren't there, our prices aren't going to be there," he said.

"That's what's fun about antiques," Potter said. "Meeting people with different tastes."

ClayDesta Bancshares announces earnings

Staff Report

Higher quarterly earnings for ClayDesta Bancshares Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary ClayDesta National Bank were reported this week.

David M. Jones, president and chief executive officer, announced that ClayDesta's posted second quarter consolidated earnings were $315,791 or 10.4 cents per share. Earnings through June 30, 1990 were $521,948 or 17.3 cents per share.

ClayDesta National Bank's net income for the second quarter rose to $333,792, a 50.2 percent increase from first quarter income of $222,167. This brings net income for the year to $555,959 or 1.02 percent of average assets on an annualized basis.

Deposits, when compared to the same period a year ago, have increased $5.4 million or 5.7 percent. Loans, before allowance for losses, have increased $9.8 million or 18.2 percent.

Jones stated that "ClayDesta's growth in earnings and assets are due to a combination of factors, including the introduction of its high yield "Preferred Access" product family, and a continued strong performance by its mortgage division, ClayDesta Mortgage Bankers."

In addition to announcing quarterly earnings, Jones reported the opening of ClayDesta's newest Loan Production office in Abilene, operating under the ClayDesta Mortgage Bankers name.

FRENCH: Will buy Motel 6

The deal appears to signal another hefty return for the buyout specialists Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., which led a group that bought the Motel 6 chain for about $880 million in 1985 and kept a controlling interest after the company went public a year later.

Under the terms of the proposal, Accor said it had agreed to begin a tender offer of $22.50 per share in cash for the more than 55 million outstanding Motel 6 partnership units. Payments for preferred stock make up the balance.

An affiliate of Kohlberg Kravis owns more than 50 percent of Motel 6 and the companies said it has agreed to tender its holdings under the offer.

Paul Dubrule and Gerard Pelisson, co-chairmen of Accor, said the deal will help their company become the world's pre-eminent budget hotel company. They said Motel 6 Chief Executive Joseph W. McCarthy and his management team would stay on, and Motel 6 headquarters would remain in Dallas.

The founding partners of Kohlberg Kravis, Henry R. Kravis and George R. Roberts, said the deal made sense for both sides.

"It is appropriate at this time, five years after we began the process of transforming Motel 6 into a dynamic, modernized and aggressive economy lodging company, that it become part of a global lodging company with even greater resources and potential."

SCOTT BURNS

Opportunites found in 401K plans

By Scott Burns

Suppose a reliable person told you that he would give you a return of 30, 50, or even 100 percent on every dollar you invested?

Suppose he also said that every dollar you invested would be tax deferred and your income tax bill would be smaller?

And suppose he would make it easy for you to invest, with regular payments from your working income?

RIGHT.

Deals like that ARE being offered, everyday, by reliable employers, not individuals. And they are being declined or underutilized.

They're called 401(k) plans or "salary reduction plans." While only 56 percent of all corporations offered these plans as recently as 1984, 82 percent offered them in 1988. Called "defined contribution" plans because the employer promises to provide a definite annual contribution rather than a definite "defined benefit," pension consultants say that 401k plans are rapidly becoming the dominant retirement savings vehicle.

Unfortunately, only about 70 percent of all workers, on average, participate in the plans. And of those who participate, the majority — 65 to 70 percent — invest in the lowest risk, lowest return investments. The long term result is a smaller nest egg for workers... and a lower retirement income.

First let's look at the amount of money that goes to work for you. If you are in the 28 percent tax bracket, you must earn $139 to net $100 to save. This means you can save $139 a month in a tax deferred 401k as easily as you can save $100 a month without a plan... and the interest you earn will be tax deferred as well.

If your company supplements your contribution at 30 cents on the dollar, it will add $42 a month, bringing the total amount invested per month to $181.

If the supplement is 50 percent, it will add $60, bringing the total investment to $199 — DOUBLE your after tax savings.

If the supplement is 100 percent, it will add $139, increasing the total to $278 a month. (How much your investment is supplemented by your company depends on whether the 401k is in addition to a defined benefit pension plan or is an alternative to a defined benefit pension.) However you cut it, participating is a way of making a massive increase in your saving power.

Having established that, let's consider how much you might have by investing in common stocks rather than a savings instrument such as a money market fund, CD, or Guaranteed Insurance Contract. If you invest $100 a month after taxes for five years on your own it will accumulate to $6934 with no tax liabilities: if you get a tax deferred return of 8 percent and a 30 percent employer contribution, it will accumulate to $13,299 in deferred taxable income. While the tax liability sounds ominous, the money can be left in the account to produce an annual retirement income. Since both will earn at the same rate, the tax deferred program will produce TWICE as much income as the after-tax program.

Now let's compare that to investing in common stocks:

- $100/month after tax personal savings plan, $6,934
- 401k plan at 8 percent with 30 percent contribution, $13,299
- Worst five years for stocks in 401k, $8,106

Note that the very worst five year period for investing in common stocks produced a greater investment result than simple, after tax saving. To put some perspective on just how bad this period was, it was the years from 1928 to 1932, including what is usually called "The Great Crash" and the start of the Great Depression.

According to Ibbotson and Sinquefield, two Chicago researchers whose work on asset returns is widely used in the investment community, only six of the 53 five year periods between 1926 and 1987 showed investment losses and only 13 of the 53 were under 8 percent.

Their data also indicates that:

- You had a 75 percent chance of duplicating or bettering an 8 percent return.
- You had a 50 percent chance of enjoying an accumulation of $13,898 OR BETTER based on an average return of 9.68 percent.

Bottom line?

Investing in a 401k beats investing on your own under any circumstances. Furthermore, the employer's contribution works to underwrite the higher risk of investing in stocks.

In fact, these figures UNDERSTATE the odds that stocks will beat interest bearing investments.

Why?

Because while we are measuring against a typical CURRENT interest rate of 8 percent, the historic average on U.S. Treasury bills is only 3.5 percent. Using that interest rate, the private saver would have accumulated far less. The table below shows how stocks in a 401k plan would have compared based on historical data.

As you can see, whatever the time period, investing in stocks through a 401k plan is competitive with interest bearing savings... even if you have the miserable luck to select the worst investing period in 61 years. The long term stock investor will eventually meet and surpass the saver even if he or she has the bad luck to select the worst period for investment.

Does this mean that absolutely everyone who is eligible for a 401k plan should pile into stocks and scorn guaranteed dollar savings?

No. Older workers should seek reduced risk, lower volatility investments. But any worker who has 10, 15, or 20 years of saving ahead of him should (1) maximize participation in his companies 401(k) plan and (2) actively consider putting his 401k investment into common stocks.

Not even $5,000 brings business to Graham

By John A. Bolt

GRAHAM, Texas (AP) — You have to want to go to Graham.

The North Texas town is not a bad place: its people are friendly, its terrain interesting and its nearby lakes inviting.

But Graham sits along no interstate highway, not even a four-lane road. It's smack dab in the middle of a no-man's land bounded by Fort Worth 75 miles to the east, Abilene 86 miles to the west and Wichita Falls 60 miles to the north.

Even a $5,000 bounty for any tip that helps city officials draw new industry to Graham remains uncollected 17 months after it was offered. Mayor Ed Hinson dreamed up the reward to help rebuild the town of 7,510, which has seen its economy slide with the oil industry.

But that won't qualify for the bounty because fewer than 10 folks will work there.

The biggest business to come to Graham in five years is Trinity Emergency Vehicle, which plans to manufacture ambulances for sale in Texas and Oklahoma.

That won't qualify for the bounty, either. Trinity's expected to employ 10 to 12 people at first, and as many as 50 when at full speed, but it wasn't really recruited to come to Graham. It ended up here because the town was among a number suggested by TU Electric for Trinity's new shop.

Initially it seemed pretty safe the $5,000 would be claimed, given rules that were somewhat loose:

"If your recommended company successfully locates in Graham and provides at least 10 new jobs for at least six months, you will receive a $5,000 check for providing us with the contact person," the official offer said.

"I would say we had 35 to 40 inquiries, ideas," Hinson said. "We went through and made a file ... and we came away with eight or nine that we thought would lead to legitimate businesses."

Some of the ideas still may pan out, Hinson said. "One, I know it would go if I could sell enough people to invest in it," he said.

The offer is open "until Graham decides to close it," he said. "We'd love to pay 15 of 'em if we could."

Money for the bounty comes from the Graham Industrial Association, which found itself with $1 million after selling railroad track for scrap. The association got the track by purchasing 53 miles of abandoned Rock Island railroad line in an unsuccessful attempt to keep freight trains running to Graham.

Wall Street uncertain about oil stocks

By Diana B. Henriques
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The stock market just can't seem to make up its mind about oil.

Investors who foresee a steady increase in oil prices for the next five years have bid up the price of domestic oil companies by 30 percent since the beginning of 1989, as measured by the Standard & Poor's index.

They point to declining production in the United States and prospects for stronger demand in the newly unifying European market.

Besides, they argue, even the squabbling ministers in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries know that a gradual and well-mannered rise in the price of oil is the only way Middle Eastern states can attract the capital needed to expand their production enough to accommodate world demand.

Those of a more bearish disposition point to chronic OPEC disarray and environmental concerns that encourage conservation.

In a report earlier this year, Bernard Picchi, the chief oil analyst at Salomon Brothers, likened the petroleum bulls to "people tiptoeing through a graveyard at night."

If their arguments are "said loudly enough and often enough," said Picchi, "and if the walk is short enough, the fright dissolves."

Somebody will turn out to be right, of course, but stocks cannot be purchased retroactively.

In fact, a few shrewd professional investors are buying oil stocks right now — but they are being very picky, demanding either a rock-solid balance sheet or a red-hot growth rate to make up for the inherent uncertainty about oil prices.

Tenfold revenue growth in three years is incendiary by any standard, and that's the pace racked up by the Presidio Oil Co., once a sleepy but solid oil and gas producer with loyal shareholders but uninspiring prospects.

In 1986, change arrived in the person of George P. Giard Jr., who became chairman and chief executive.

Giard attracted new capital to the company and set forth on an acquisition campaign that continued into late 1989, when Presidio bought the Home Petroleum Corp. of Denver from Gulf Canada for $157 million.

The deal attracted considerably more attention in London, in part because Presidio is one of the few American independent oil companies listed on the London exchange.

In addition, Giard explained, the company's investors include several large British pension and trust funds.

Graham Bell, an analyst for Sheppards Research in London, called the acquisition "a home run" which expanded Presidio's proven reserves by 56 percent at an estimated cost of roughly $5.70 per barrel, based on the acquisition price.

The marriage made sense on other grounds, too. Home and Presidio have congruent Rocky Mountain operations, and Home's gas-gathering network fits nicely with Presidio's system.

By Bell's estimates, the Home purchase gives Presidio net assets of nearly $10.25 a share and could push its cash flow to $1.59 a share this year, and nearly $2 a share next year.

With Presidio's shares trading at $6.88, the cash-flow multiple is "exceptionally low" compared with other independent oil companies, said Bell in a recent report. Giard also envisions Presidio, with its Rocky Mountain reserves of natural gas, as being well positioned to benefit from either of two proposed pipeline projects that would carry Colorado natural gas to the growing Southern California market.

But its electric growth rate has taken a toll on Presidio's profits and its balance sheet.

As for net earnings, there aren't any — at least, not after the company has written off its acquisition expenses in its typical conservative fashion.

And at the end of March, the company had almost $149 million in bank debt outstanding, with an equal amount of note and bond obligations.

The company has been steadily paying down its debt with money raised through stock sales, and recently converted a preferred stock issue into common shares to ease its dividend obligations.

Wine consumption drops

By Jack Schreibman

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — New Hampshire bucked a national trend and was the only state to show a gain in wine consumption last year, according to a survey.

Americans last year drank 2.11 gallons of wine per capita, the lowest consumption of any major wine-producing nation and a 5.8 percent drop from 1988, according to figures released by the trade publication Wines & Vines.

By comparison, Americans over age 21 drank 33.7 gallons of beer, 2.16 gallons of distilled spirits, and about 35 gallons of coffee. Adult-only wine consumption was 3.03 gallons per capita.

It was the second straight year wine consumption declined; in 1988 consumption dropped 5 percent from 1987 figures, Wines & Vines.

Mississippi drank the least, a mere half-gallon per capita in 1989, and consumers in the District of Columbia the most at 5.55 gallons for every man, woman and child.

Reflecting a national trend against alcohol consumption, individual states posted figures showing as much as a 19.5 percent drop from 1988. That distinction went to Arizona, where a half-gallon less of wine was consumed last year than in 1988.

Domestic table wines, still wines not over 14 percent alcohol, fell 2.6 percent while production of domestic champagnes dropped 6.3 percent. Last year marked the fourth straight year of decline for foreign champagne sales in this country; they were down 7.8 percent to 12 million gallons.

In 1985, champagne imports to the United States hit a peak of 15.8 million gallons, almost all of it from Italy, France and Spain, which together produce more than half of the wine consumed in the world.

California wines accounted for 72.8 percent of all wine consumed in the United States, while the other 42 wine-producing states held 12.6 percent of the market. The rest of the market, 14.6 percent, were imports.

Wines & Vines blamed the market drop on the continuing loss of ground of generic or jug wines, nearly all of it produced in California's San Joaquin Valley, and a 16.7 percent dip in wine cooler sales.

It was the second double-digit loss in two years for the coolers, sales phenomenon of the early 1980s that literally rescued California wine for several years. In 1988 and 1989, cooler sales fell 33.3 million gallons, falling from 21 percent of wine market share to 17 percent last year.

U.S. wine exports were up again in 1989 as foreign sales increased to a miniscule 22.1 million gallons in 1989 from 16.9 gallons in 1988. The top two markets are Canada, 5.7 million gallons, and Japan, 5.5 million gallons.

Rose Ann Burrell,owner of Reunions Unlimited, holds a high school yearbook in her office in Carrollton. She says her company does more than party planning.

Firm organizes class reunions

CARROLLTON, Texas (AP) — Dreading your high school reunion this summer? Rose Ann Burrell prepares for more than 50 reunions every year.

Ms. Burrell started Reunions Unlimited in 1985, a company that specializes more in detective work that party planning.

"I don't make any money unless I find the people to attend the reunions, because I am paid nothing directly by the volunteer reunion committees," Ms. Burrell said.

An increasing number of reunions are organized by professional planners because alumni tend to be more geographically scattered these days and more of the graduates who typically plan reunion organizing — namely women — are employed, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Ms. Burrell's business began with a couple of reunions. Her business now does more than 50 a year and she employs four people full time and another dozen individuals part time.

"My research indicates there's a possibility of about 500 reunions a year occurring at all the Dallas and Tarrant County high schools," Ms. Burrell said.

Reunion planning has become a big business nationwide. In 1989, the 50 companies that belong to the 4-year-old National Association of Reunion Planners organized 6,000 reunions representing about $96 million in ticket sales.

This year, the association expects revenues to increase by 25 to 30 percent, said Betsy Flaherty, a spokeswoman for the association.

Ms. Flaherty said the average amount a reunion planner makes is $4 to $5 per ticket sold.

Ticket prices for classes celebrating their 10-year reunions, with three or four events spread over two or three days, average $35 to $45 per person, Ms. Burrell said.

American adds fee at five airports

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — American Airlines Inc. has decided that five U.S. airports are charging "exorbitant and intolerable" landing fees, so the airline is adding $1 to $4 to the cost of a ticket to pay the freight.

Other airlines said they would not follow the lead of the nation's largest carrier. American and analysts said they don't expect the surcharges to establish a norm within the industry.

"I don't see that as any particular trend," said Lee Howard, vice president of consulting firm Airline Economics Inc. in Washington. "It deals with a specific issue which has arisen and American Airlines has chosen to see that way as covering what they consider to be excessive expenses."

The increased charges amount to about $4 million a year, said Al Becker, spokesman for Fort Worth-based American, which last year earned $730.8 million.

Becker said the charges will take effect Sunday at New York's LaGuardia Airport, Newark International Airport, New Orleans International Airport, Palm Beach International Airport in West Palm Beach, Fla., and Southwest Florida Regional in Fort Myers, Fla.

The fees range from $4 per ticket in Newark to $1.50 in New Orleans and $1 for the other three airports. Analysts doubted the increases would affect American's business since ticket prices average about $200.

But Jackie Pate, a spokeswoman for rival Delta Air Lines Inc., said, "Sometimes a passenger wants the very lowest fare they can get, so a dollar might make a difference."

The fees will be applied only to local boardings at those airports, and not affect people passing through or coming home, the company said.

"It's very simple and straightforward," American's Becker said. "At those five airports we are covering what we believe to be excessive and unreasonable costs. It only makes good business sense to do that."

Texans taking to alligator farming

More Southeast Texas farmers entering the alligator industry

By Sougata Mukherjee

LABELLE, Texas (AP) — Sitting in class on a sultry afternoon in 1987, while the professor explained the dynamics of international economics, Jimmy Broussard suddenly started thinking about alligators, or more like how he missed the wetlands back on his ranch in LaBelle.

The 25-year-old finance major from the University of Texas convinced himself he needed to do something to quench his desire to get back to the Southeast Texas wetlands.

Three years later, LaBelle Hatchery grossed more than $250,000 in its first quarter of operations, and Broussard says he believes bigger and better things are yet to happen.

The hatchery, located on the outskirts of Beaumont, takes alligator eggs retrieved from Texas marshlands and incubates them to hatching. Then it sells the baby alligators to Texas alligator farmers, who in turn export the hides to Europe and Southeast Asia.

"It (artificial incubation) all started as experimental project work for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department in 1987," Broussard said. "Alligator farming is fast becoming an industry."

TPWD reports since the legalization of alligator farming, more than farmers have applied and received licenses, and a large number of applications are awaiting approval.

The industry in its first quarter has exported more than 2,500 hides worth millions of dollars. Broussard, being one of the only two licensed incubators in the state, may claim some responsibility for the success.

While in school, he sent several proposals suggesting legalizing alligator farming to TPWD and legislation was finally passed in 1989 after legislators concluded the industry would help increase property values of idle lands located in Texas marshes.

To convince officials of the potential success of the industry, Broussard's family donated more than 10,000 acres of land for the initial TPWD experiment.

"It was an instant success," Broussard said. "We hatched more than 90 percent of the eggs we picked." As an industry, the incubation success rate is about 90 percent, but the value of the eggs is constantly rising.

Amos Cooper, who monitors alligator farming for TPWD, said to protect the alligator population, the department has sold only 20 percent of the total alligator nests to farmers for incubation. "That protects the population and probably satisfies the animal-right activists," Cooper said.

The Texas program, in its infancy, has yet to catch the attention of activists but Cooper and other farmers believe it won't be long now. "They (animal rights activists) are beginning to track the regulations and protection rules," Cooper said.

'It (artificial incubation) all started as experimental project work for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department in 1987.'

— Jimmy Broussard, Texas alligator farmer

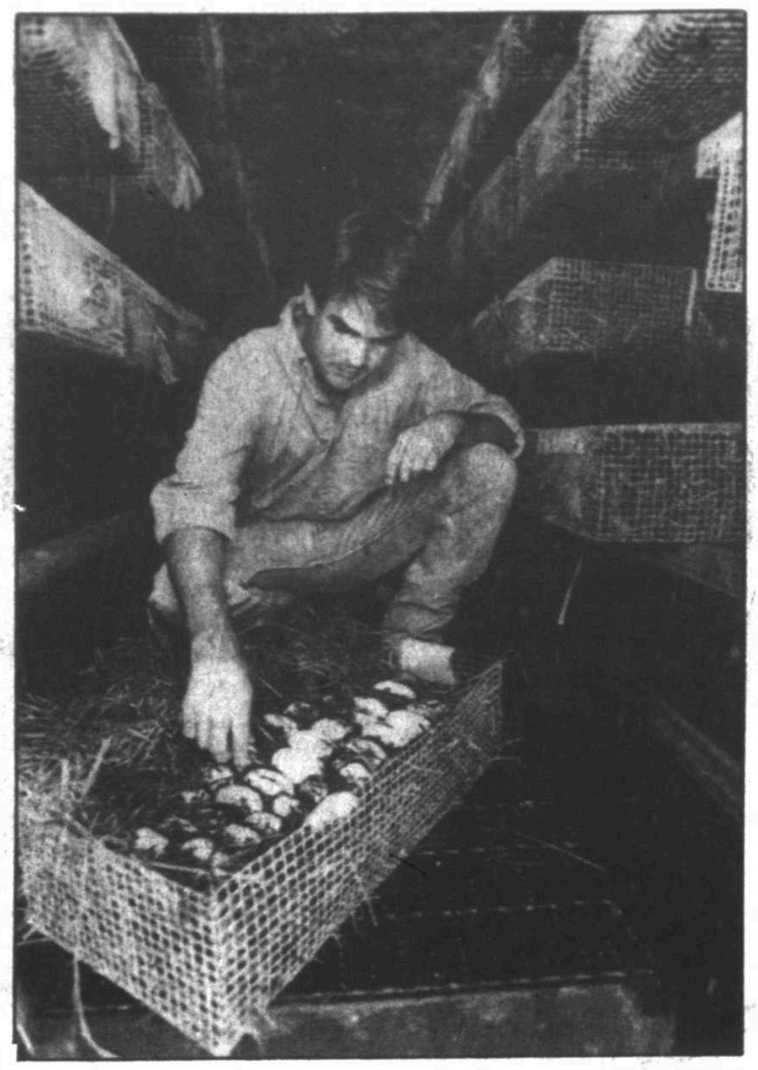

Meanwhile, alligator farming is in an explosive growth mode in Louisiana and Florida. Cooper said recent estimates suggest Louisiana will export more than 250,000 hides valued at more than $150 million. Florida figures are even higher.

Texas farming, however, will never grow to that magnitude because the state has far fewer acres of wetlands.

"Texas farmers are currently picking eggs from less than 100,000 acres of land," he said. "That leaves a lot of room to expand. We have just found the tip of the iceberg."

With the increase in the demand for alligator hides, Broussard's hatchery is looking to expand in Louisiana. "The market right now is extremely hot, and demand for hides in the Orient is at an all-time high," said the young entrepreneur who puts 12 hours daily spotting eggs from a helicopter and retrieving them in an air boat.

It's a seasonal industry, Broussard says, so farmers are always running against time. "But when the final egg is picked and put into the incubator, we probably will sit back and say it's been a good season."

More job hunters try video resumes

By Karen Ball

WASHINGTON (AP) — Morris Sultan knew the competition would be tough when he decided to look for a new job, so he tried something novel.

Instead of writing a resume, he made a video.

In a three-minute pitch sent out to a dozen prospective employers, Sultan detailed why he should be hired. One firm liked what they saw and brought Sultan in for an interview; he now oversees customs and merchandise orders for M&L Design, an accessory importing firm in New York.

"Communication is a big part of what I do, so I felt like I might have a better chance if they could get to know me. Usually, they just take your number and say, 'We'll call you.' The tape helped me get noticed," Sultan said.

The new-wave resumes are "a nice calling card to start out with" that can give candidates an edge on the competition, said Albert Dabah, who runs Video Portfolios where Sultan made his tape.

But critics call video resumes a gimmick that fosters discrimination and gives stressed-out job seekers more to fret over.

"The rare person, maybe in advertising or something, can come across as a dynamo. Most people look like a jerk on videotape," said Kathryn Troutman, who owns The Resume Place in Washington, D.C., which still specializes in traditional paper resumes.

Most people don't like the way they look in photographs, let alone on camera, she said.

"If someone tried to put me on a tape, I'd say, 'Hey, I'm trying to look for a job here, not get myself depressed.' There's already enough trauma involved with looking for a job. This is just an extra aggravation," she said.

Since the tapes give prospective employers a way to view job seekers' appearance, critics say they make age or race discrimination too easy and give employers a way to weed out people whose appearance they don't find appealing.

But William Brown, who owns an Annapolis, Md., firm where job seekers pay $149 for a package that includes a video resume, said they don't give employers any more of a chance to discriminate than personal interviews.

"We can't control discrimination. If a person comes in, there's nothing to prevent me from saying, 'Hey, she's a blonde. My ex-wife's a blonde and I'm not hiring a blonde,' " Brown said. He conceded the tapes save employers' time by allowing them to "laser through" candidates.

"If someone can't take 10 minutes for a haircut or time to tuck their shirt in, why would you want to waste your time on them?" said Brown, who founded Network Employment & Resume Inc. five years ago.

Serouya Morey, the owner of M&L Design, said Sultan's video resume was the first he'd ever seen.

"It struck me as a little innovative, and this job takes some creativity," Morey said. The tape gave him a chance to judge Sultan's personality and make decisions "you can't get from reading a resume," Morey said.

"The bottom line is he probably got the job because of it," Morey said.

At Brown's office, clients, already prepped on what to wear, sit in front of a picture of the Manhattan skyline. Brown, with his back to the camera, asks them questions that might come up in any job interview. Clients talk about their current job and what they're looking for in their next post.

Oh, horrors!

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Sarah Spector hopes audiences won't recognize her as the heroine in this summer's melodrama. She has a good chance. She's a brunette wearing a blonde wig.

The reason she hopes for anonymity dates back to her first year in law school in Austin.

"I played this idiot character, and they thought I was really that person," Ms. Spector said. She laughed. "It took me a long time to live down the role. This role's not much better."

For decades, area audiences have booed and hissed the villain, cheered the hero and anticipated what next horror the innocent heroine would fine herself in in Midland Community Theatre's annual Summer Mummers. This summer's offering, "Mayhem at the Movieola" or "I Have a Nasty Film All Over My Body" is no different.

So, what's a corporate litigations attorney doing playing the damsel in distress? Having the time of her life, that's what.

"Oh, it's fun. It's just great. It's the most fun I've ever had in a play because you get to interact with the audience."

History, as everyone knows, does repeat itself. Ms. Spector, who is with the law firm of Lynch, Chappell and Alsup, had only been in town three weeks when she saw the audition notice in the newspaper for Summer Mummers. She auditioned without knowing what she was auditioning for.

"I'd been involved in the community theater in Waco where I grew up, and I knew it was a real easy way to meet people. I saw the auditions. I didn't really know what it was to be perfectly honest. I knew Midland had a good community theater."

She was surprised when she received the leading female role, the part of Chastity Pureheart.

"I think it's hilarious. It's just another challenge. I've never had to fight with an audience before. Maybe I haven't seen the worst of it. They warned me when they were going to yell during rehearsals.

"Marc (hero Tex Trueblood) did real well, did better than me. The band was trying to mess us up. He went out of character, went down and yelled at the band, then got back on stage and in character." She paused briefly before adding, "He had a collapsed lung the night after our opening night."

Marc Graham, who also is new to Midland and Summer Mummers, had this to say from his room at Midland Memorial Hospital about his opening night, "It was pretty much everything that I had expected. I had spent about six hours on Thursday night going through and watching old videos of the shows and helping myself to develop the character a little bit more and sort of familiarizing myself with the audiences and their reactions to the show.

"The (Saturday) audience was a little tamer than they had been Friday night so I think that helped the initiation a little bit. The last show I had done was Shakespeare's 'Merchant of Venice.' I did that at Rice (University), so this was quite a bit different than that."

He laughed, then added, "But that evening was the most fun I believe I've ever had on stage."

As for his lung, Graham said, "I think it's just something that's been happening. I had a weak spot on the lung — 20 years of laughing, sneezing and coughing finally took its toll.

"It's not all that uncommon to just have a spontaneous collapse of the lung. They (doctors) kept questioning me — had I been doing anything strenuous, which I hadn't."

Graham has been involved in theater since his elementary school days and has acted in 11 shows in high school and college. A student at Rice University in Houston, he is working in Midland this summer for Mobile Oil.

"I'm studying mechanical engineering, and my goal eventually is to become an astronaut with NASA. I'm just trying to figure out the best way to get there right now."

When asked if he believes theater will help him with that goal, he replied, "Well, they look for a well-rounded individual."

He got on the track to Summer Mummers by searching for his apartment complex when he first arrived.

"I drove past Theatre Midland on Wadley, and I noticed the advertisement for 'Cabaret.' Seeing there was an active theater group, I called them a couple of days later to see if they had any sort of summer program. That's when they told me about 'Mummers,' and auditions were the following weekend."

All Summer Mummers roles are double cast. Ms. Spector and Graham's counterparts — Melissa Martin and Tim Rosborough — are seasoned players. They were on stage Mummers' opening night, giving the newcomers an opportunity to see the production before jumping in the second night of the show.

"I started out working the bar at Mummers, so when I got around to auditioning I felt like I knew what to expect. I had participated in it," says Ms. Martin, who first played the heroine last season. "It must have been something else for those two to walk out there."

Rosborough has the most years of experience of the four. This year marks his sixth season with Mummers. His MCT experience extends past Mummers and includes "Bells Are Ringing," "Tomran," "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," "Grease" and the second cast of "Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

"What I like about it the most is it being an older theater for one thing," Rosborough said.

His favorite show is Mummers.

"The love of my life is Mummers. It looks very campy, but it's real intense up there. In a regular show, you rehearse for six weeks, have a cue and you do your line and you hit your spot every night and everything runs the same basically every night.

Please see HEROINE / 2H

'Ro-tel and the Hot Tomatoes' headliner at Orbison festival

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

WINK — Ross Perot, a fan, has called them "outstanding entertainers...and "fine people." Governor Clements selected them as entertainment for the 1987 Inaugural Gala and calls them "outstanding." The Austin American Stateman describes them as "a no-holds barred fun attack."

They are Ro-tel and the Hot Tomatoes, one of the hottest bands in Texas, and one of the headline acts that will be performing Saturday, July 21 at the Second Annual Roy Orbison Music Festival in Wink.

The '60s show band, replete with a trio of beehived female singer-dancers, performs a lineup of '50s and '60s hits that sounds like a Wolfman Jack commercial for rock n roll classics.

Veteran musical comedy performers Jeanne Baxter, Linda Wetherby and Shannon Sedwick belt out hits by the Marvelettes, Shirelles, Shangrilas and Chiffons, female trios who dominated the music scene. A sampling of tunes include: "It's My Party," "Leader of the Pack," "He's So Fine," "Wah-Watusi" and "Locomotion."

Reaching down a decade, the band performs a variety of classics by Elvis Presley, Big Bopper, Cannonball Atterly, Ray Charles, Fats Domino and Joe Turner. Members of the band include Fletcher Clark, keyboards; Al Gilhausen, lead guitar; Michael Christian, drums; and Ed Vizard, saxophone.

"The group is a perfect fit for the Roy Orbison concert," says Midland music promoter Dennis Grubb, "because they epitomize the vitality of the '50s and '60s era in which Roy Orbison cut his professional teeth and had some of his biggest hits."

Ro-tel and the Hot Tomatoes, an Austin band, will be one of the headline acts performing at the Second Annual Roy Orbison Music Festival in Wink on July 21.

The Roy Orbison Memorial Concert gets under way at 5 p.m. at Wildcat Football Stadium in Wink and lasts until midnight.

A number of vendors serving food and soft drinks will be on hand for the affair, but no alcoholic beverages will permitted.

Grubb says concert goers should bring pillows, blankets, or stadium seats for the seven-hour musical extravaganza.

Other entertainers include: Kenny Morrill, a Roy Orbison impersonator; members of the Teen Kings, Roy Orbison's first recording band; Billy Dee and the Debonaires; the Stuart James Project, Showdown and the Bad Breaks Band.

Another added attraction to this year's daylong affair will be the Pretty Woman Beauty Pageant. The winner will named at the evening concert.

Admission to the concert is $8 for adults and $5 for children.

Investment banker wins playwriting contest

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Ken Girard knew exactly what he wanted to do with his life. He wanted to teach and to write. Instead, for 25 years, he found himself climbing the ladder of success in the investment-banking industry.

"It was deadly, but I was good at it," Girard said in a recent telephone interview from his home in Pasadena, Calif. He laughed. "I was pale. I was an Easterner — Washington, D.C. and New York City. I looked like I was having a perpetual heart attack."

Girard

The winner of the 1990 McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Contest for his work "Always the Bride," Girard, who began working part-time in investment houses when he was 17 and went on to work his way through college, refers to himself as a product of the 1950s.

"You are trained to be something. An investment banker gives you status and this is all part of the culture and the mind set that we had then."

Girard will be in Midland this coming weekend for a free Readers' Theater production of the winning play, which beat out 159 entries from across the United States. While he is here, Girard will conduct a Mystery Writing Seminar. Both events will be held Saturday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. To make reservations to the 8 p.m. Saturday production of "Always the Bride" call 682-4111. For more information on the workshop call 682-2544.

A turning point in his life came when he was in his early 40s and spent two years traveling the country and collecting testimony for three books — plan unit development, home owners association and condominiums — for the U.S. government.

The books were "the ultimate text for developers and financiers when they went into those ventures." Girard was considered to be "an expert" on those subjects.

> 'A lot of things that are on televison and in books are very offensive to women and are unnecessary. And, I won't partake in that; I won't write that kind of material.'
> — Ken Girard

In the late 1970s, when he was 42, he and his wife moved to California where he began "almost immediately" writing for radio. His first job was writing religious dramas for the Salvation Army which had a syndicated radio program. His first fiction book, "The Calling," dealt with a minister involved in a grand ministry which had some darker elements to it.

Also, Girard wrote mysteries, dramas and comedies for Sears Radio Theatre, NBC Mystery Theatre and Mutual Radio Theatre form 1978 through 1981. He created and produced the mystery series "Darkness" for National Public Radio in 1979 and was the sole writer for the 1982 Bob Hope Comedy Special which won the Writers Guild of America Award.

Girard's published fiction also includes "Weekend Vacation" and "Altered Egos." "A Failure to Thrive," a nonfiction book about children in Los Angeles, will be released by Marchmont Press in September.

In addition to writing, Girard is a teacher in the California juvenile justice system.

His most recent book is a mystery.

"The book that I've recently completed, 'Until Murder Us Do Part,' has taken many rewrites," Girard said, adding he believes it to be his best because he's spent the most time on it.

"The detailing in a mystery is like fine painting," said Girard, who has conducted workshops for the Writers Guild, the Dramatists Guild and Mystery Writers of America.

The discussion-style workshop he has planned for Midland will explore the creation of a mystery, character, plot, theme and, he said, "most importantly" language. In addition, he will cover what editors are currently looking for.

He is currently working on another play and is still rewriting Act 1. He was hesitant to say too much about "Always the Bride," except that it was family entertainment.

"The main character, Elaine, is multi-married, multi-divorced. Her son has a line where he says, 'Every time I give her away they send her back.'"

"The inspiration really was a combination of many things that had been worked over. It was written as an entertainment without bad language that you could bring the family to, you could enjoy yourself, and you could meet a lot of interesting, likeable and bizarre characters. It's a romantic comedy that's very positive.

"It's very positive toward women. A lot of things that are on televison and in books are very offensive to women and are unnecessary. And, I won't partake in that; I won't write that kind of material."

Girard is pleased to be working with a community theater.

"I think it's important for people to support community theater. It's an endangered species.

He is "very appreciative of the award" he has won in Midland. His decision to present a workshop was made because he wants to "repay Midland's kindness."

PEN announces Hemingway award

BOSTON (AP) — The 1990 Ernest Hemingway Foundation Award went to Mark Richard for his short story collection "The Ice at the Bottom of the World," his first published book of fiction.

The $7,500 award administered by the PEN association of writers was presented last weekend at the Fourth International Hemingway Conference. The conference is a biannual gathering that draws scholars and aficionados of the novelist.

Hemingway's widow, Mary, established the award in 1976 to honor her husband's memory and noteworthy work by young writers.

"It's one of the major literary awards in America and in particular for new writers — it means Mark Richard is someone to watch for," said Frank Rigg of the John F. Kennedy Library, where the conference was held.

Richard's stories have appeared in publications that include Harper's, Esquire, Antaeus and Grand Street. His work was also featured in the "Best American Short Stories" of 1989 and "New Stories from the South."

HEROINE: Actress enjoys her first Midland role

(From 1H)

"With Mummers, the audience is not just an audience, they're also a part of the play, and there's a closeness there. I think it's real important for the hero and the heroine and their sidekicks to have a rapport, to be able to interact with each audience, because that's what controls them.

"You have to be able to control that audience to an extent, and the concentration you have up there is different than with a regular show. You have to be able to listen to what the people say out there as well as be aware of where you are and what's going on on stage. You have to listen to them because it is their show, and you're up there for nothing but their entertainment. You're at their mercy, also."

What's different for Rosborough this season is he no longer lives in Midland. He went back to school and is majoring in speech communication, radio and television at Eastern Illinois University, Charleston, Ill. When he graduates, he plans on getting his masters.

"I was going to have to work this summer and make some money," Rosborough said. "I was talking to Ann Simple, the president of Summer Mummers, and she said, 'Why don't you come out and do the show and work out here this summer?' And I thought, 'Gee, what a great idea'."

Rosborough, who traces his love for theater back to grade school, is working for the Parks and Recreation department of the city of Midland.

Ms. Martin, who began acting in high school, has a degree in theater arts from Texas A&M University.

"I really didn't do a whole lot with it until we moved to Midland and Terry and I both just got involved in the community theater here," she said. Her husband, Terry Martin, is one of the villains in this year's show. In addition to acting in the show, the couple have handled publicity for the production.

"We have a real good audience from Midland. We hit Odessa a little harder to get more people interested in it," Ms. Martin said, pointing out the new elements of this season's production, including a new script, Harry Harrison making his debut as the writer and director of the movie segments of the show and a new cinematographer, Bruce Partain.

"We have a lot of new people acting in the show," she said. "It's kind of bringing a lot of new ideas in. We want to encourage that. We want to encourage people to come down and walk in off the street and help. That's real important to the continuation of Mummers."

The Mummers continues at 8 p.m. Thursdays through Saturdays until Sept. 1. Included in the evening's production is an olio — a series of short sketches and jokes. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111.

This year's story relies on a Hollywood plot, said Doug Heck, producer of the annual fund-raising event.

"It's like 'The Producers,' where two guys get together and rip off all the investors by putting together a movie, but never actually producing it or producing something that will never make money. That's the way this one pretty much starts out, although it ends up differently."

Obviously, dastardly happenings are stalking the Yucca Theatre stage as Mogul C. Stars and Smedley Slythe plot illegal deeds. Is there an attorney in the house? They're going to need one.

Opening lead: Four of ◇

When it becomes obvious that one line cannot work, look for another. There's no future in flogging a dead horse.

Although South held half the points in the deck, a jump shift with no clear contract in mind would have been foolhardy. The simple one-heart response meets with our wholehearted endorsement. North's hand was borderline for an invitational jump raise to three hearts—we would not fault anyone who chose to raise to only two hearts, though we tend to the slightly more aggressive course when we hold good trumps and solid working cards. In either event, the grand slam should be reached.

West led a diamond and declarer thought the slam was laydown—ruff two spades in dummy and claim. Fortunately, after winning the first trick in hand with the king, declarer led a low trump to dummy, and the picture changed radically when West discarded a diamond. The original line had to be scotched in favor of a crossruff.

When embarking on a crossruff, you must first cash your side-suit winners. However, as Bill Root notes in his excellent new book, How to Play a Bridge Hand, you must not attempt to cash more winners than you need. Here, declarer has one trump winner in the bank and can score six more with ruffs. Therefore, only six side-suit winners are needed to make the grand slam.

Declarer cashed the ace-king of spades, discarding a diamond, followed by the ace-king of clubs and ace of diamonds. Two spades and a diamond were ruffed in dummy and three clubs in hand—making seven hearts. Note that, had declarer tried to cash three diamonds, East would have ruffed to set a laydown contract.

Lee Meriwether, dressed as the character Lily from the Fox network series "The New Munsters," says she originally didn't give the show much chance for survival. The series, a revival of the 1960s comedy, is in its third season and in seen on more than 100 stations across the country.

Actress says 'Munsters' ' Lily 'everday mom'

By Jerry Buck

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Twice a week, clad in a filmy purple gown, wearing deathly white makeup and a heavy black wig, Lee Meriwether stands outside a sound stage and waves at the passing trams of the Universal Studios Tour.

This is not a common occurrence on the tour — few well-known actors deign to make an appearance. But Meriwether, star of the syndicated program "The Munsters Today," enjoys the attention.

"It started when I was standing outside the stage one day when a tram came by. ... The tour guide told them who I was. I waved at them and they got a kick out of it," she said.

"One day, a tram load of Japanese tourists came by and nearly tilted over as everyone rushed to the side to take pictures," said Meriwether. "I wish I'd had a camera to take a picture of that."

Meriwether is now at work on the third season of "The Munsters Today," a revival of the 1960s comedy series. The original was something of a copy itself, coming as it did on the heels of the popular show "The Addams Family. It was then, and still is, a spoof of domestic family sitcoms.

The children are Eddie, a teen-ager who seems to be on his way to turning into a werewolf, and Marilyn, a pretty young woman. In the original show, the rest of the Munsters thought Marilyn was abnormal, and pitied her.

Meriwether's Lily is a vampire. "Lily is basically your everyday mother in a sitcom," said Meriwether, who was Miss America in 1955. "She adores her children. She just looks different."

The actress revels in the show's monsterisms. When she found a Transylvania cookbook, she bought dozens and gave them to friends.

"The show has been brought up to date," Meriwether said. "The children have changed the most. Eddie no longer dresses in the Little Lord Fauntleroy clothes. He dresses as other teens do today. We no longer worry about Marilyn's looks. ... There was some talk that I would get a job."

"Eddie no longer dresses in the Little Lord Fauntleroy clothes. He dresses as other teens do today. We no longer worry about Marilyn's looks. ... There was some talk that I would get a job."

— Lee Meriwether

The series features John Schuck as Herman, Howard Morton as Grandpa, Jason Marsden as Eddie and Hillary Van Dyke as Marilyn. The original show, broadcast on CBS from 1964-66, starred Fred Gwynne as Herman, Yvonne DeCarlo as Lily, Al Lewis as Grandpa, Butch Patrick as Eddie and Beverly Owen and later Pat Priest as Marilyn.

Meriwether did not give "The Munsters Today" much chance for survival.

First, she said, "I thought it would be just a pilot. I never thought it would become a series. Then I didn't think it would go beyond the first year."

Meriwether is a television veteran; she had recurring roles on "Mission: Impossible," "Dr. Kildare," "The FBI" and "12 O'Clock High," as well as "The Time Tunnel," "The New Andy Griffith Show" and "Barnaby Jones."

In the last show, she played Betty Jones, the daughter-in-law of the eponymous character played by Buddy Ebsen. That show originally was an episode of "Cannon," but before they had completed the filming it became a spin-off and a new series. It ran for eight seasons on CBS.

After "Barnaby Jones" left the air in 1980, she did mostly stage work and spent five years as an aerialist with circuses in Switzerland, Sweden, Japan, Australia and South America. She worked as a substitute with the Flying Gaonas, and her daughter Lesley Aletter often worked with her.

"I wasn't a gymnast," said Meriwether. "I did the simple tricks, but Lesley could do the unusual tricks."

Cara voice of new 'Snow White'

By Bob Thomas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Later this month, movie audiences will be able to see one of the few G-rated films of the violence-prone summer season, featuring a fresh, spunkier Snow White.

Cara

The animated feature is called "Happily Ever After" (the Disney people objected to anything similar to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"). The fledgling 1st National Film Corp. is releasing the Filmation feature, with the voices of Phyllis Diller, Ed Asner, Dom DeLuise, Sally Kellerman, Carol Channing, Tracey Ullman, Malcolm McDowell and Zsa Zsa Gabor. The role of Snow White is voiced by Irene Cara.

"I don't think I've ever done a cartoon feature before," said Cara, 31, on a visit to town from her home in sedate Altadena. "But I think I did some kind of work for Hanna-Barbara when I was young."

She can be forgiven a lapse of memory. Cara has been working in all forms of show business since the age of 5. She's done it all: Broadway, radio, television, movies, recording, songwriting. Along the way she has won an Academy Award (for the song "What a Feeling" in "Flashdance"), two Grammys and a Golden Globe.

Her Snow White, she emphasized, will differ from the 1937 Disney version: "I don't see any point in doing a sequel otherwise. If you were going to do the same old story, why bother? It makes sense to have a new approach to Snow White in the '90s, especially. I think they've done a terrific job of updating it and yet keeping it in the classic fairy-tale look.

"This Snow White is not the passive heroine who has to be rescued. Actually, she's quite the heroine, and she does the rescuing. She rescues the Prince and battles the evil villain herself with the help of the 'Dwarfelles' instead of the Dwarfs. (The film) does show women as mature, aggressive and strong when things happen in their lives. I think that's very apropos for the '90s."

Such roles for women, she lamented, are rarely found in mainstream films. And when they appear, the movies often have been developed by their stars, such as Jessica Lange, Jane Fonda and Goldie Hawn. Cara has nurtured a project she hopes to start filming in October.

She began performing in her native New York.

"There was a stage mother," she said, "and there always is with child actors. Mom was great. She was really committed to me and always encouraged me about my own talent. I'm a mulatto person — my mother's white and my father's black. Many times as a child going out on auditions, I would hear her say, 'You're just as beautiful as all those blond little girls.'

"She would make me feel confident, and I would get the part. Mom was very sensitive in that area and very helpful to me. My father's a musician, and I have a slew of cousins who all play instruments and vary from jazz to Latin to classical.

"I started in the Spanish field at age 5. I worked as a regular on a television show similar to what Johnny Carson is in the American market. At 7 I made my debut off-Broadway. At 8 I made my debut on Broadway in a play called 'Maggie Flynn' with Shirley Jones and Jack Cassidy. I went on to do more theater and television and landed my first film role at 15."

Cara feels no regret about working throughout her childhood.

"Because we were a lower-middle-income family, I think if anything, I gained from the experience," she said. "Even though I was sheltered from a lot of it, my childhood was very much in a ghetto environment up in the Bronx where we were originally from. My career allowed me to experience other things in life. To go to school downtown with kids who were well off, to see more of the city than just being trapped up in the Bronx."

"Fame," in 1980, was a big turning point for the actress, who became a recording artist and movie name with her role as a struggling student at New York's High School for the Performing Arts. She also scored as Alex Haley's mother in "Roots: The Next Generation."

"It was a fabulous role for me because I played from 14 to 36," she recalled. "It was a lovely challenge, and I got to work with all those brilliant artists, black and white alike. It meant a lot to be part of such an important piece of work."

The "Flashdance" song, which she co-wrote with Giorgio Moroder and Keith Forsey, was another step forward. Friends suggested she could have played the lead role, but she says, "I'm glad I didn't get it, because it would have been too similar to 'Fame.' I thought Jennifer Beals did a lovely job, and I was glad to see another mulatto actress out there and working."

Dance troupe will perform

Scheduled for 7:45 p.m. on the lawn of the museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., the group will dance to the music of American composers.

"Great Scott" has been choreographed to the music of Scott Joplin and will include tap, ballet and theater dance forms. "Red and the Rainbow," with a Southwestern Indian theme, will be danced to music by James Rainer Jr. of Albuquerque, N.M., a contemporary Indian composer. Music will be played by the Red Clay Ramblers.

"Horsin' Around" will be performed to bluegrass tunes.

In addition to Cramer, the dancing group will include Andrea Comola, Judy Coleman, Elizabeth Miller, Louise Ramirez, Shannon Smyrl and Theresa Thetford.

The public is invited to bring picnic suppers, lawn chairs or blankets to add to their enjoyment of the free entertainment on the shaded grounds of the museum.

The museum's July 22 concert will be Leilani's Birds of Paradise performing Hawaiian and Polynesian dances.

By Hillel Italie

"What do people do with this?" he asked.

"This thing falls into somebody's lap and they do something with it. They take it over. They can hit somebody over the head with it. They can be utterly indifferent to it."

The author of "Goodbye, Columbus," "Portnoy's Complaint" and "The Counterlife" was seated at the Manhattan offices of his publisher, Simon and Schuster, his intense stare softened by glasses and a blue tweed jacket. Roth reflected on his friends in Eastern Europe — such Czech writers as Vaclav Havel, Milan Kundera and Ivan Klima.

THEY ENDURED censorship, imprisonment or exile for years and suddenly it all changed in the past few months. Now, Havel is the country's president, censorship has been lifted and 100,000 copies were made for the initial printing of Kilma's "Love and Garbage," his first Czech publication in 20 years.

"I thought they were doomed," observed Roth, who has been promoting Czech writers and making annual visits to Prague since the early 1970s. "Like anybody else, I thought Russia was this monolithic thing that's not going to change, that was only going to get to worse."

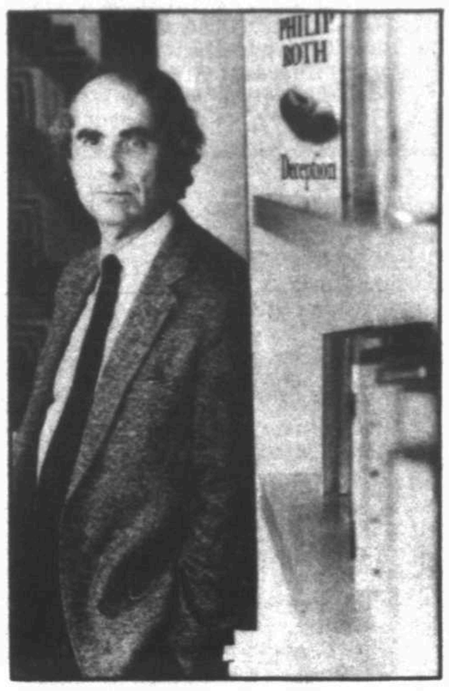

Roth once commented that the difference between writing in Czechoslovakia and the United States was that "There nothing goes and everything matters — here everything goes and nothing matters."

But his own history refutes that. He can never forget what happened in 1962, two years after "Goodbye, Columbus" won the National Book Award for Fiction, when the author was a panelist for a seminar at Yeshiva University on "The Crisis of Conscience in Minority Writers of Fiction."

IN HIS 1988 autobiography, "The Facts," Roth recalled being asked by the moderator if he would write the same stories if he were living in Nazi Germany. The author went on to describe the scene as he attempted to leave:

"I listened to the final verdict against me, as harsh a judgment as I ever hope to hear in this or any other world. I only began to shout, 'Clear away, step back — I'm getting out of here,' after somebody, shaking a fist in my face, began to holler, 'You were brought up on anti-Semitic literature!' 'Yes,' I hollered back, "and what is that?" — curious really to know what he meant. 'English literature!" he cried. 'English literature is anti-Semitic literature!' "

For Roth, every reader offers a different interpretation, counter-readings, you might call them, reactions to the writer's reactions. And the author can't resist some counter-writing, selectively leaking information with the skill of a senior White House official.

For instance, you can tell "Deception" is fiction because there's no table of contents in front, no bibliography in the back and no footnotes on the bottom.

But why does Roth, a famous Jewish author married to English actress Claire Bloom, write about a famous Jewish author married to an English actress? And why is this famous Jewish author having an affair and arguing with his wife about writing a book about it?

"You say to me, 'Well, did any of this happen?' And I say, 'Well, everything happened.' Now ask me the next question," Roth said. "Ask me what I did yesterday, I'll tell you what I did yesterday. I ate a tuna fish sandwich. I watched television. I watched a ballgame. That's what happened."

"DECEPTION," VIRTUALLY all dialogue, is a book about talking and listening, Roth says. The raving, cartoonish Jews of "Goodbye, Columbus" and "Portnoy's Complaint," the kind of characters that so enraged his audience at Yeshiva University, are gone. The wild humor offered from the psychiatrist's couch in "Portnoy's Complaint" has been softened into whispered insights offered in bed and by coffee tables.

Still, Roth takes a further step on the wrong side of the tracks. He's written several books about a Jewish author called Nathan Zuckerman, their lives linked so closely that Zuckerman ends up writing about Roth in the final pages of "The Facts."

But in "Deception," Roth drops that thin line of protection. Zuckerman is mentioned only in passing; the famous Jewish writer in this novel is called "Philip."

"It's like dropping dye into something," Roth said. "It touches something and it changes the coloration. What happens if I put my name into it? It wasn't going to make life pleasant for me.

"I did think about using Nathan, but mischief led me to put my own name into it. You see what happens. If someone were to pull a pistol, it changes everything. If you drop your own name, then you change the ante on adultery."

In "The Facts," Roth recalls of his early years, "I'd no intention as a writer of becoming 'controversial,' and, in the beginning, had no idea that my stories would prove repugnant to ordinary Jews."

HE DOESN'T feel that way anymore. Roth predicts that he'll eventually be brought to court for something he's written, and includes a mock trial in "Deception," in which the author is put on the stand by angry feminists.

Again, he speaks of the surprises of books, how they're written and how they're read. The Yeshiva conference was "the luckiest break I could have had," he wrote in "The Facts."

"I was branded."

For Roth, all books are eventually about talking and listening, conversations between readers and writers, dialogues always in danger of spinning out of control.

"Art has consequences, literature has consequences, sentences have consequences. We know from what's happened in Eastern Europe that it isn't just one little writer in America who discovered that sentences have consequences." "You learn something," Roth said of the Yeshiva conference. "In my case, it interested me. What is this? There's something going on here. What is the exchange between the writer and the reader, between the book and the writer?"

Stephen King expands scope of 'The Stand'

"The Stand," by Stephen King. Doubleday. 1,153 Pages. $24.95.

■ A Review

By William J. Castello
Associated Press

Mankind has finally succeeded in destroying itself. It did not die in the apocalyptic flash so often expected, but at the hands of a deadly man-made virus. There are survivors. This is their time to make a stand for good or evil. This is their story in the new, unabridged version of Stephen King's "The Stand."

King has added 500 pages and some 150,000 words to his 1978 version of the novel. This new version is a great improvement. In adding the material, King was able to begin the saga earlier, give more depth to each character and broaden the scope of the original sweeping epic.

The story follows the individual survivors of an accidentally released "super-flu" that effectively wiped out 98 percent of the population of the United States. All of these people face personal loss, life-threatening hazards and their own personal hells. Dreams lead the people wandering around in this post-plague world.

The good folks follow the visions of an old black woman beckoning them to her simple home amid the cornfields of Nebraska. The evil ones are lured by the powerful presence of a man who awaits them in the gaudy remains of Las Vegas. Along the road to their destinies, many of the characters band together for the journey.

The beauty of this story is in the crystal clear nature of the characters and settings. Each person has a history. Each represents a living being full of complex realities. From the desolate canyons of post-plague New York to the unchanging deserts of the Southwest, the settings are painfully described, filled with the worldly possessions and dead remains of civilization.

The realities of a hellish land, strewn with stalled cars occupied by millions of corpses in an endless and unmoving parade, are painted in detailed strokes. Each house, each store, tells a tale of life moments before death.

Authors compile dads' dumb expressions

NEW YORK (AP) — "When I say no, I mean no. Why? Because, that's why."

If you've ever heard these words from your father, you know that dads can be responsible for saying some pretty dumb things.

At least that's the contention of Bruce Lansky and K.L. Jones, who have compiled a book of fatherly sayings called "Dads Say the Dumbest Things!: A Collection of Fatherly Wit and Wisdom" (Meadowbrook Press, $5.95).

But, "Dads really aren't as dumb as they seem," explains Lansky in the book's introduction. It's just that "when dads are flustered, sometimes the only thing they can come up with is what their dads used to say. Even if what their dads used to say used to drive them crazy."

Some examples, from among the hundreds in the collection:

■ "I'm spanking you because I love you. This hurts me a lot more than it hurts you."

■ "If you fall out of that tree and break your leg, don't come running to me."

■ "Coffee will stunt your growth."

■ "We're not lost. I'm just not sure where we are."

■ "Can't you practice the drums quietly?"

Teens group will assist at children's museum

Teens, ages 13 through 18 are invited to join for a summer of fun assisting with activities at the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum.

Participation in leading group tours, docenting an exhibition, helping with class activities and birthday parties are a few of the projects MTV will be involved with.

The group is now planning a community kite competition to be held in August and would like other teens to join them.

Wendy Stewart is MTV chairman and advisors are: Museum staffers Cynthia Corley, educator; Lisa Bedford Davis, education assistant; and David LeMaster, master-in residence.

"Teens will benefit", Ms. Corley says, "by their introduction to Midland's volunteer spirit of community service as they work in the Museum's public and educational programs. Volunteer work is excellent to list on a college or job application," she added. "Also, career choices toward teaching, working with children, or museum work could be influenced by observance of the children and of the behind the scenes work at the museum," she continued.

Texas artist paints roads and highways

DALLAS (AP) — Dorothy Chabay-Dempsey paints highways, but don't expect to see her on the interstate putting down yellow stripes.

The Dallas area woman is an artist who creates large, colorful paintings of highways. She used to paint nudes and still lifes, but didn't find them particularly good, she said.

She got the idea for her unusual painting subjects after passing a half-dozen dramatic overpasses each day on her way to classes at the University of Texas at Arlington.

"If I hadn't moved to Texas, I never would have become interested in such things," said Ms. Chabay-Dempsey, who used to live in New Jersey, where she didn't drive.

"Out here, you can't get anywhere without a car. Learning to drive has been one of the liberating experiences of my life," she said.

After first painting parking garages, Ms. Chabay-Dempsey's works turned toward bridges and off ramps. One usually thinks of roadways in terms of blacks and greys, but her work often has broad planes of muted pinks, greens and blues.

"I'm fascinated by the negative spaces of bridges and roads, as well as the play of light and shadow on their surfaces and the tension of curve and curve and diagonal against perpendicular," she said. "You can paint the same bridge over and over and get entirely different geometries and surface effects depending on the time of day."
