Ice storm coats Texas with troubles

Associated Press

A major ice storm that blanketed North Texas, stranding travelers and causing at least two deaths was expected to continue throughout much of the day today.

Freezing precipitation was widespread over North Texas and East Texas early today and forecasters indicated that the storm would likely end from the west, perhaps in the form of snow, sometime today.

The icy streets and bitter cold temperatures helped fill up hotels and shelters for the homeless Wednesday night and made travel treacherous in most of the northern part of Texas.

About 130 flights were canceled at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Wednesday and officials said the problem could be worse today if the bad weather continues.

Airport officials said the runways had been sanded and remained open, but travel had been greatly reduced. Southwest Airlines also reported delays and cancellations at Dallas' Love Field Wednesday.

As flights were canceled at the airport, hotels filled up around the city with commuters and travelers unable to get home.

"I bought a razor and a brush — that's all I've got," said C.D. Lively, 54, of Garland, whose company elected to put him and five co-workers up in a downtown Dallas hotel.

Hundreds of businesses closed and schools let classes out early, while churches and other organizations canceled Wednesday night activities.

Dallas Independent School District decided to cancel all of today's classes.

And the bitter cold drove the homeless to shelters throughout the northern part of the state.

Father Jerry Hill of the Austin Street Shelter in Dallas said Wednesday he expected about 400 people to share the floor of the empty warehouse facility. The shelter has room for 300, but Hill said they would find room and blankets for all.

At least two deaths have been blamed on the storm and traffic accidents were common around the state.

A Texas Highway Department employee died early Wednesday as he was sanding a street in Wichita Falls. Authorities identified the man as 29-year-old Ronnie Feltman of Iowa Park, Texas, and said he died when a truck's sand-spreader box fell on him.

Meanwhile, Barbara Ison, 25, died of injuries sustained in a four-vehicle accident on Interstate 40 near Shamrock on Tuesday.

A driver involved in a six-car wreck on an Interstate 20 overpass near Tye, Texas, ended up in the hospital after he jumped off the overpass to avoid being hit by an oncoming tractor-trailer, rescuers said. Chris Cox, 26, of Merkel was in stable condition Wednesday night, a Hendrick Medical Center spokeswoman said.

Elsewhere in Texas, travelers waited out the icy blast in truck stops. Juanece Freeman, a cashier at the Jolly Truck Stop outside Wichita Falls, said the restaurant was full of stranded truck drivers.

"There's a lot conversation, a lot of coffee and a lot of staring out the window at the snow," she said.

In the Panhandle, officials in Amarillo said snow that fell after the city was covered with a sheet of ice improved driving conditions. Police spokesman Ralph Fletcher said the freezing rain resulted in about 65 traffic accidents in a 24-hour period, about six times the normal amount.

"We're happy to see the snow. It's made driving a little bit better," he said.

DPS spokesman David Wells reported a seven-vehicle accident Wednesday on Interstate 20 west of Longview, and a multi-car collision in Smith County near Tyler. No one was killed but some injuries were reported.

The frigid weather, however, warmed the hearts of city cabbies. Dortha Curry, chief supervisor of Yellow Cab of Dallas Inc., said fares were up more than 50 percent.

Glazed roads blamed for Basin death, injuries

By JULIE HILLRICHS

An overnight storm that glazed West Texas streets and highways with a thin, transparent coat of ice was being blamed for dozens of accidents — including one Wednesday evening that killed a Monahans woman and sent her three children to the hospital.

In addition, five Midland motorists were injured in a four-car accident about 9 a.m. today.

The Texas Department of Public Safety reported the 27-year-old Monahans woman was killed and her three children were injured Wednesday when she lost control of her car and overturned on ice-covered U.S. Interstate 20 about 4 miles west of Big Spring.

Sandra Sims Wade was pronounced dead at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday at Big Spring's Scenic Mountain Medical Center by Howard County Justice of the Peace China Long. The body was taken to Myers-Smith Funeral Home.

Ms. Wade's eight-year-old daughter, Melissa Ann Wade of Monahans, was listed in stable condition this morning suffering from injuries she sustained in the accident. Also injured were nine-year-old Brandon Dale Wade and Melinda Gayle Wade, 8, both of Monahans. They were treated and released.

A DPS spokesman said neither the driver nor any of the passengers in the car were wearing seatbelts when the accident occurred.

Midland police reported a total of 31 accidents between 7 p.m. Wednesday and 9 a.m. today. Four minor accidents involved police patrol cars but no one was injured in those mishaps, reports said.

Much of South battling snow

From Staff and Wire Reports

A powerful storm piled up snow and glazed roads with ice across the South today, stranding hundreds of travelers and closing schools and offices, while a cold wave kept much of the nation in its Arctic grip.

Since Saturday, the weather was blamed for 27 deaths, including 15 by exposure. Thousands of homeless people flocked to already crowded shelters, prompting authorities to open armories and state buildings.

Wednesday's storm headed east today after dumping about a foot of snow from Utah and southern Colorado across Oklahoma and southern Kansas to parts of Arkansas, and closing schools as far east as the Carolinas.

Arizona, New Mexico, Missouri, and northern Mississippi got lesser accumulations. Heavy ice and snow accumulations coated highways in northern Texas and Louisiana.

The storm spread snow across the South, closing schools, roads and businesses in Alabama and Georgia. First lady Nancy Reagan canceled a scheduled trip to Nashville, Tenn., where more than 5 inches of snow fell.

Much of the East was under winter storm advisories through Friday.

"We're not recommending travel unless it's life or death or God's will or something like that," said state Highway Patrol spokesman Lee Lamirand in Oklahoma City, where a record 11.9 inches of snow closed Will Rogers World Airport overnight. The airport reopened one runway this morning.

UNW secretary spent weekend in elevator

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — A University of New Mexico secretary says being trapped in an elevator at the school for 41 hours was a nightmare, "but in between moments of panic and feeling total abandonment, I did think it was kind of funny."

Terry Halpin, who works at UNM's journalism department, entered the elevator in the journalism building at 2:30 p.m. Saturday. She was freed at 7:30 a.m. Monday.

"I felt like I was being bricked alive," Halpin said Tuesday. "I cried a little. I ruined my mascara. I cried out, 'Why did that happen to me?' Then I decided, like Nancy Reagan, it was my turn."

The incident occurred while the university was closed for the holidays.

David Holtby, editor of the UNM Press, discovered Halpin Monday morning and called campus security.

"He heard the alarm and I was pounding on the door," she said.

Halpin, who is in her 50s, was without water, bathroom facilities and heat while she was trapped. She ate only throat lozenges she had in her purse.

Halpin, a UNM employee for 17 years, said she decided to return some equipment, including flood lamps and photos, to the building and decided to take the elevator even though she knew it was unreliable.

Wadley Avenue likely will get only nuisance drain

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

With the City Council facing costs of $2 to $3 million to ease flooding on Wadley Avenue, the body likely will down size the road project to involve only a nuisance drain, City Manager Fred Poe said Wednesday.

"We don't think dollars spent for flood water is worthwhile," Poe said.

Studies conducted by two Midland engineering firms estimate that taking just some water off the major north Midland avenue to run into millions of dollars, Poe said.

"The feeling is that even taking a portion off is going to cost $2 million to $3 million and it's not worth that," Poe said.

The studies predict the cost of easing flooding on Wadley Avenue to range from $1 million to $16 million. The council probably will opt for the least expensive alternative — placing a nuisance drain underneath the middle of the avenue from I to Garfield streets, Poe said.

The $1 million nuisance drain would prevent damage to asphalt by siphoning off water that pools in the middle of the avenue from sprinklers.

The public will have an opportunity to review the Wadley Avenue drainage studies at a meeting beginning 7:30 p.m. Monday night.

The city's plans for construction also will be explained at the meeting held at the Midland Community Theater, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., said a Street Commission member Richard Mendenhall.

The meeting is a follow-up to a gathering held last April by the Street Commission for Wadley Avenue business owners who were concerned that road construction then scheduled to start last fall would hamper their Christmas sales, Mendenhall said.

In addition, several residents requested that the city conduct studies on alleviating flooding on Wadley before any construction started, Mendenhall said.

The postponed construction on Wadley could start as early as May if the council reaches a consensus on what should be done, Poe said.

The 14 members of the Street Commission are expected today to review the two drainage studies conducted by Midland engineering firms — Parkhill Smith & Cooper and West Texas Consultants — and formulate their recommendation before the Monday public meeting, Poe said.

Soviet officials seek 1988 withdrawal from Afghanistan

MOSCOW (AP) — Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze said the Soviet Union hopes to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan this year in a plan that could be worked out at U.N.-sponsored talks in Geneva in February.

Soviet officials have been saying for months that the estimated 115,000 Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan could be withdrawn within a year.

But U.S. analysts said they believed Shevardnadze's comments Wednesday were the clearest signal yet that Moscow intends to meet its public pledge to be out of Afghanistan over a period of 12 months.

Shevardnadze's comments came in Afghanistan, where he held two days of talks. His remarks were carried by the Afghan news agency Bakhtar and distributed in Moscow by the Soviet news agency Tass.

Shevardnadze returned to Moscow on Wednesday from Kabul, the Afghan capital, where he met twice with Afghan leader Najib.

The foreign minister was quoted as saying again that the United States and other Western countries must stop supplying arms to the Islamic rebels fighting Afghanistan's Marxist, pro-Soviet government.

He indicated the United States had agreed to do so as part of a Soviet withdrawal package and that the deal could be wrapped up next month in Geneva.

"The U.S. side agrees to stop its assistance to armed groups staging combat operations in Afghanistan," Shevardnadze was quoted by Tass as saying.

However, a U.S. diplomat in Moscow, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said no specific U.S.-Soviet agreement had been reached yet.

Man executed in Texas after confusing three-hour delay

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A 27-year-old high-school dropout who murdered a woman in a burglary that netted a dollar was put to death by injection early Thursday in an execution delayed three hours by confused state officials.

Robert Streetman was pronounced dead at 3:26 a.m., said Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Charles Brown.

Streetman, who on several occasions said he wanted to be executed, repeated that stand Wednesday after death-penalty opponents filed appeals to save him.

At 1:45 a.m., the U.S. Supreme Court split 4-4. That would have been enough to clear the way for the execution, but prison officials mistakenly believed that an urgent appeal for reconsideration had been filed with the high court, said J. Kirk Brown, the TDC's general counsel.

"We were willing to take as much time as possible," he said. When officials became certain there were no avenues for appeals left, the state attorney general's office gave permission to carry out the execution, he said.

On Wednesday, U.S. District Judge Howell Cobb denied a stay of execution. Hours later, a federal appeals court in New Orleans refused to grant a stay, and the matter went to the U.S. Supreme Court.

After the court rejected the appeal, Streetman was taken to the death chamber and placed on the gurney, said TDC deputy director Andy Collins. "We immediately moved him back into the holding cell," he said.

Streetman was the first person put to death in the United States since an execution in Georgia on Sept. 21, and the first in Texas since Sept. 10.

He was convicted of the 1982 slaying of 44-year-old Christine Baker, who was shot in the head while she knitted and watched television at her home in Kountze, her dog at her side.

Streetman, described by prosecutors as a cold-blooded killer who murdered to boost his ego, was among four men who planned to rob the house in the belief that a large amount of money was kept there.

Trial testimony showed the only item taken was Mrs. Baker's purse, containing $1. A month after her death, her husband found an envelope containing $84,000 in cash and checks she had hidden.

Mrs. Baker's husband, Nyle, said in an interview this week that the killing was "a stupid thing."

U.S. senator ends West Bank tour as tear gas fired

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Soldiers fired tear gas to break up violent demonstrations in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip today, forcing a U.S. senator to cut short a visit to a refugee camp.

From the gate of the Kalandia refugee camp near this West Bank city, Sen. John Chafee saw soldiers firing tear gas to disperse rock-throwing protesters, a U.S. diplomat said. Chafee, R-R.I., decided not to enter because of the violence, according to the diplomat.

Palestinian leaders called on Arabs to boycott Israeli cigarettes as part of a civil disobedience campaign.

In Gaza City, a military review board finished hearing testimony on appeals by four Palestinian activists who demanded that deportation orders against them be rescinded, Palestinian lawyers said. The board was expected to rule next week.

Israel ordered the deportations of nine Palestinians in a crackdown on rioting in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The Palestinians said the deportations violated international law. A hearing for five West Bank deportees was postponed until next week.

The army said today it placed about 15 Palestinians in administrative detention, an emergency measure allowing authorities to hold prisoners for up to six months without trial. A spokesman said most had been arrested in recent rioting.

Since the rioting began Dec. 8, 24 Arabs have been killed by army gunfire and nearly 2,000 have been detained. Of those, about 900 have been released and the rest are standing trial.

In a main thoroughfare of Arab east Jerusalem, about 80 high school students threw stones and raised the red, black, green and red Palestinian Liberation Organization flag, according to Arab reports and Israel radio. Display of the banner is illegal in Israel and the occupied territories.

Police arrested Elias Zananiri, managing editor of the Palestine Press Service, when he took pictures of the protests, said Ibrahim Karaeen, co-owner of the Arab-run agency.

Police told Zananiri not to take pictures and demanded that he surrender his camera, said Karaeen. When he refused, he was beaten with a club and arrested, he said. Zananiri and eight others were released after several hours.

Clashes between Israeli soldiers and Palestinian protesters were reported in half a dozen cities and refugee camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel occupied after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Merchants closed their shops in Ramallah, east Jerusalem and parts of the West Bank city of Jericho, a tourist center that has been unaffected by the recent arrests.

In the Gaza Strip refugee camp of Jabaliya, stone-throwing demonstrators erected barricades of burning tires. In one incident, a car carrying Maj. Gen. Yitzhak Mordechai, the military commander of Gaza, was struck by stones, said a Palestinian reporter who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At the entrance to Kalandia, protesters hurled stones at soldiers who responded with tear gas, said David Goode, a spokesman for the U.S. Consulate in east Jerusalem.

Chafee, who had planned to visit Kalandia as part of a tour of the area, saw the demonstration, said Goode.

"He waited until things seemed to calm down, and wanted to go in, but the demonstration flared up again, and he decided to leave," Goode said. He said the senator was never in danger.

Chafee, who went on to Jordan after the incident, could not be reached immediately for comment. The U.S. consulate said he was on a fact-finding mission.

Hanna Siniora, a moderate Palestinian leader and editor of the Al-Fajr newspaper, urged residents of the occupied territories to join in a boycott of Israeli cigarettes.

Siniora said the boycott would be expanded later this month to soft drinks and taxes.

"Gandhi started by boycotting salts. We are starting by boycotting Israeli cigarettes," Siniora said in a reference to Mohandas K. Gandhi who toppled Britiain's colonial rule over India with a non-violent campaign of civil disobedience.

EXECUTE

"That goofball who did the shooting shouldn't have got the death sentence," Baker said. "He was crazy. There was something wrong with him. He should have got the death sentence from me. Of course, I'm biased.

"I think one day I'd like to do him meanness. But if I say that, I don't think I would. I don't think it would help no matter what happens," he said. "To me, as a human being, he doesn't even exist."

Of the three others involved in the robbery, one received probation, another was granted immunity and the third is serving a 45-year prison term.

Until last week, Streetman had insisted he be executed as scheduled. He changed his mind, however, and the Capital Punishment Clinic at the University of Texas Law School took his case.

Attorney Robert McGlasson said Streetman was entitled to a full hearing to determine his mental competence.

Streetman, who came within 30 hours of execution two years ago, worked as an oil-derrick hand. Records show he started using drugs when he was 8 and had been in and out of trouble with the law since.

R.F. "Bo" Horka, the Hardin County district attorney who prosecuted him, called Streetman a danger to society.

"He's a serial-type killer because he does it for the thrill of it," Horka said. "He does it for his ego. This guy progresses. He kills one today, two tomorrow. It wasn't hard to see that.

"I was there when he made his confession, and I couldn't believe how cold he was. He described how he just knelt down and calmly blew her brains out. It was like describing how he went hunting and shot a deer."

According to one of the accomplices the night of the Baker slaying, Streetman said, "I'm going to do something I've always wanted to do — kill another human being."

Streetman was one of 265 convicted killers on death row in Texas. Six were executed last year.

Midland County paramedics tend to motorists involved in a four-vehicle accident this morning in the 2300 block of West Front Street. Icy road conditions were blamed for the accident that injured five people.

COLD

Five people were being treated this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital for injuries they received in a four-car accident in the 2300 block of West Front Street, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Forty-eight-year-old Dolly Calhoun, address unavailable, was listed in fair condition after undergoing treatment for facial lacerations and a fractured right wrist. Also injured in the accident were Joyce Moore, 50, Vicky Riley, 29, Rudolpho Zubria, age unknown, and Eugenio Hernandez, 58. The addresses and conditions of those injured were unknown at presstime.

According to police, the accident occurred when Zubria — westbound in a 1969 Ford — lost control of his car, slid into the eastbound lane and collided with the other motorists.

Police spokesman Cpl. Jim White said the fender-benders were scattered all over Midland.

"I believe people are not realizing how hazardous it is out there," White said. "Unfortunately, drivers are underestimating just how dangerous the thin ice can be."

Sheriff's dispatchers reported "five or six accidents" have occurred on county roads since midnight.

The DPS reported a total of 10 weather-accidents in the last 12-hours. Troopers were at the scene of a one-vehicle rollover at 9 a.m. today on Texas Highway 158. No information was available on the accidents at 10:30 a.m. this morning.

No one was injured when a car traveling east on Front Street lost control this morning and collided with the left side of a school bus carrying 83 students, Midland Independent School District Kenneth Ray said.

Ray said the district's school buses made their scheduled routes, but some were running as much as 30 minutes late.

Midland International Airport spokeswoman Marcy Blauvelt said maintenance crews were out all night keeping the runways clear of ice accumulation. She observed that because of the airport's de-icing operations, breaking action on the pavement was good through the night and into the morning.

"Most of the airline flights were operating on schedule this morning. However, some of the flights from the Dallas-Fort Worth area did not arrive last night due to weather in Dallas," Ms. Blauvelt said. "Therefore, some of our departures out of Midland this morning are canceled. We urge passengers to call their airline if they are departing Midland today."

Forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said icy conditions were expected to continue throughout most of the day. Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low near 20 degrees, with light and easterly winds.

On Friday, skies will be partly cloudy and the high will be in the lower 40s. Winds are expected to be from the south at 5 to 10 mph.

Thursday's high of 40 was 35 degrees cooler than the record of 75, set on that date in 1935. Today's low of 23 was 12 degrees warmer than the record of 11, set on this date in 1970.

WEATHER

State Transportation Director Neal McCaleb declared a storm emergency Wednesday and hired private contractors to help keep the roads open in what he called the "third 20-year storm" in a month.

"If the wind comes up, we're in a world of hurt," said Paul Gray, a Kansas Department of Transportation superintendent. "We can keep the snow plowed if we don't get wind. We can plow snow, but we can't plow visibility."

On Wednesday, subzero high temperatures lingered across Minnesota, Wisconsin, northeast Iowa and Indiana, and single-digit highs prevailed in Illinois and central New England, but light winds prevented deadly wind chills.

The snowstorm shut down the newly convened Oklahoma Legislature until next week, and state agencies began sending home non-essential employees at 2 p.m. Wednesday.

"To my knowledge, there's not a shovel available in the state," said David Shumake of Horn Seed Co. in Oklahoma City. "We have sold steel shovels, plastic, aluminum...anything that can move any volume of snow is gone."

In Texas, more than 7 inches fell over northwestern areas. The snow in Dallas forced officials to cancel classes.

Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport and Dallas' Love Field remained open but thousands of passengers waited for flights that either were canceled or delayed by de-icing and gate assignment changes.

Record lows were recorded in at least 11 cities Wednesday, including Chicago's minus 14, 10 below zero in South Bend, Ind., and 2 below zero in Youngstown, Ohio. National Weather Service forecasters said it would stay chilly for at least a few more days.

Chicago's O'Hare International had a minus 7 degree reading at 1 a.m. today, but on Wednesday the temperature rose above zero during the daylight hours for the first time since 3 p.m. Monday, the weather service said.

Record power demands knocked out service to than 14,000 Baltimore Gas & Electric Co. customers Tuesday and Wednesday, said utility spokesman John Metzger. Scattered outages were also reported Wednesday in Delaware.

Delmarva Power & Light Co., which serves the Eastern Shore, broke its peak winter demand record for the second straight day Wednesday, when ouput hit 1854 megawatts at 8 a.m.

In Baltimore, a Mass Transit Administration bus followed a Salvation Army mobile meal truck through the city Wednesday night, offering a free ride to city-run shelters for people sleeping outdoors.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton closed most state offices today because of heavy snow. Fifteen inches of snow fell on western Arkansas, with a foot reported in Little Rock.

Rhode Island Gov. Edward D. DiPrete ordered shelters opened in Providence, Pawtucket, Cranston and Newport because of reports that the 250 beds at the state's existing shelters were full.

North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin opened 101 armories in 74 counties as emergency shelters. More than a foot of snow fell on parts of the state and winds were recorded at 40 to 50 mph.

New York City, with overnight wind chills of minus 20, sheltered 8,478 men and 1,298 women Wednesday, one more than the season's high on Sunday. Its no-heat hotlines logged more 4,000 calls, twice the average for a January day, officials said.

Four deaths were attributed to exposure in Illinois, three in Texas, two in Michigan and one each in Missouri, West Virginia, Indiana, Ohio, New Jersey and Washington, D.C. Two traffic deaths each were attributed to the weather in Oklahoma and Louisiana, and one each in Arkansas, Texas, Connecticut, Utah, Ohio and Michigan.

One man was suffocated in Colorado by a propane heater, and a Texas Highway Department employee died when a truck's sand-spreader box fell on him.

"It has a history of being unreliable," she said. "If I had thought, I would have put the stuff in, punched the button, let it go and taken the stairs because I almost never take the elevator. But I decided to get in, fool that I was."

She heard a clatter as soon as she pushed the button and immediately knew she was in trouble.

Halpin said she managed to quell her initial panic when she realized there was air coming into the elevator.

"There was a telephone receptacle, but no telephone. There is a marvelous alarm — which sounds an alarm straight out of hell — and I rang it incessantly, but it rings only in the building," she said.

"The light, thank God, was on the whole time."

The cold temperature was almost unbearable, Halpin said, and she covered herself with photos and buried her head in her ski jacket to keep warm.

The Afghan guerrillas have bases in Pakistan, which fills in for them at the Geneva peace talks. In the indirect negotiations, the major issue on which the two sides disagree is how long it will take the Soviets to withdraw.

Shevardnadze said conditions exist for a settlement and that all the remaining questions leading to a Soviet withdrawal can be settled at the new round of talks scheduled in February.

"We would like the year 1988 to be the last year of the stay of Soviet soldiers in your country," Shevardnadze told Bakhtar. He said he had agreed with President Najib that "necessary conditions can be guaranteed shortly."

Tass said that during their talks, Najib offered some new ideas on how to end the fighting. The report did not elaborate.

Moscow is looking for a way to pull its forces out of Afghanistan without leaving Najib's government defenseless against the fierce Islamic insurgency. Soviet forces moved into neighboring Afghanistan on Dec. 27, 1979, to replace one pro-Soviet government with another and have remained to fight the rebels.

State Department officials in Washington said Wednesday that U.N. negotiator Diego Cordovez probably would travel to Islamabad and Kabul this month to set up the February meeting in Geneva.

One official said the Shevardnadze comments led U.S. analysts to conclude that "the Soviets are putting the best face on it for their Afghan allies."

The officials spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Shevardnadze indicated Wednesday that the Soviets intend to stay until Western countries stop arming the guerrillas.

"We shall leave Afghanistan with a clear conscience and awareness of duty fulfilled when outside interference is stopped. We have complete understanding with the Afghan leadership to this effect," he said.

The minister said America and Soviet Union would serve as guarantors of such an agreement in the talks between Afghanistan and Pakistan, and the U.S. obligation included ending the flow of arms to the rebels. Soviet soldiers then could start withdrawing in 60 days, he said.

City rejoices water return, other areas brace

Associated Press

West Virginia residents hoarded water in bathtubs and garbage cans and Ohio officials filled outdoor swimming pools as a million-gallon oil slick pushed down the Ohio River today, threatening water supplies for hundreds of thousands.

Pittsburgh-area residents, however, rejoiced as water gushed from spigots Wednesday for the first time in three days, although a makeshift connection failed this morning and 23,000 customers of the Robinson Township Municipal Authority were again without water.

"At least I got my dishes done" while the water was on, said Nancy Smarsh of Coraopolis.

Robinson water officials said the connection sprung a leak, which could be repaired immediately.

Utility officials lifted glasses of water in toasts as water pumps roared back to life following Saturday night's fuel spill.

"It is great. It's absolutely great," Pat Pierce, 42, of Robinson Township, said Wednesday night as the tap water went back on, temporarily as it turned out.

More than anything, Ms. Pierce and her three daughters were looking forward to "nice warm baths."

"I'm the first one," said Ms. Pierce. "They come after me."

Farther west, however, about 8,000 customers of Midland's municipal water system near the Ohio border still were conserving water.

They avoided running out at 10 p.m. Wednesday, as earlier feared, and town emergency management director Vincent D'Itri said this morning that "if the trend continues, we could probably make it through the day." Emergency water tanks were in place as a precaution.

Diesel fuel from the Ashland Oil Co. tank that collapsed Saturday along the Monongahela River near West Elizabeth, Pa., reached Steubenville, Ohio, 94 miles downstream, Wednesday. The slick was expected to reach Mingo Junction, then Wheeling, W.Va., 114 miles downstream from the Ashland plant, sometime today.

Dry spiggots did not seem an imminent threat in Ohio River communities today, however, thanks to reserve and alternate supplies, conservation and enhanced purification.

In Steubenville, municipal swimming pools were filled despite near-zero temperatures, and some school restrooms were closed.

Crews in Wheeling rushed to finish a second pipeline spanning the Ohio River, and five tanker trucks were ready to keep hospitals open in case the water system is forced to close.

"I think we're as prepared as we possibly can be," said City Manager Mike Nau. "We might be criticized for doing too much if we don't have to shut the system down. But we've planned for the worst case scenario."

Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste said more than 1 million people could be affected if the slick reaches Cincinnati as expected by Jan. 24. He declared a state of emergency for Ohio River communities preparing to close water intake pipes or step up purification processes.

"This is the kind of situation that teaches you the lesson that when it comes to environmental protection there is no room for negligence, no room for carelessness, not even room for accident because the consequences are too great," said Lt. Gov. Paul Leonard.

The trouble was spreading downstream along with a surface slick estimated by the Ohio River Sanitation Commission to be 17 miles long, down from 28 miles Tuesday. Spokeswoman Jeanne Ison said the slick, which is breaking up, is accompanied by submerged, emulsified oil at least 16 feet deep.

Toronto, Ohio, a town of about 7,000 north of Steubenville, was forced to close its intake Wednesday, said Richard Shank, director of Ohio's Environmental Protection Agency. But nearby East Liverpool was able to turn its pumps back on and joined Steubenville in treating water with chemicals to make it clean enough to drink.

"I hate to be really optimistic...but personally I think things are going to be OK," said East Liverpool Mayor James Scafide.

Near Pittsburgh, water began flowing to low-lying neighborhoods Wednesday night after a connection with neighboring Moon Township was completed. Residents cheered the return of water, which also brought hope to 1,000 workers laid off because of shortages and other problems stemming from the oil slick.

Conditions were expected to be almost normal by the weekend for residents of Robinson Township, the only municipality where water was entirely cut for some residents.

Because of clearing pollution on the Monongahela River upstream of Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania Water Co. resumed treating water at a plant closed by the spill. West Penn never had to cut off water entirely to anyone as a result of conservation by its 750,000 customers, but residents were forced to cope with lowered water pressure and conservation measures.

"Joy, real joy," West Penn President Gerald C. Smith said after he pushed a button that brought huge pumps to life Wednesday afternoon. Utility officials toasted with glasses of purified water, but warned that since the system was still not operating at capacity, residents still should conserve.

Not everyone was quick to forgive. Four people affected by the water shortage filed suit against Ashland Oil on Wednesday in Allegheny County Common Pleas Court in Pittsburgh. They asked that the court certify it as a class action.

Reagan's budget plan may not go deep enough

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the administration firms up a record $1.1 trillion spending plan for fiscal 1989, it may have to reach beyond a budget pact with Congress "for more savings," President Reagan's budget director says.

But House Budget Chairman William H. Gray III, D-Pa., says any major departure from the Nov. 20 deficit-reduction agreement between Congress and the White House could touch off a new confrontation with Capitol Hill.

"The spirit of the budget summit called for reductions in defense and domestic spending and new revenues," Gray said. He said any additional "savings" proposed by the White House should "be along the same ratios."

Federal department heads got their first glimpse on Wednesday of Reagan's new budget proposal as drafted by the Office of Management and Budget and approved by the president.

The next step is for the officials either to accept the OMB spending levels for their agencies or appeal to the White House. Even with the deficit cutting, the Reagan administration's 1989 budget proposal will represent an increase in spending from the $1.05 trillion of this year.

The final budget plan will go to Congress in mid-February.

White House Budget Director James C. Miller III said Wednesday that he isn't certain a reduction of the annual federal deficit to the $136 billion required for 1989 by the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law can be achieved solely by the levels outlined in the Reagan-Congress agreement.

"If we cannot hit the $136 billion-...we'll have to go outside the agreement for more savings," Miller said. "But we would achieve those additional savings consistent with the spirit of the new agreement."

Miller added, however, that there was still a good chance that the deficit target could be reached without going beyond the spending limits outlined in the agreement.

That pact calls for a $46 billion deficit reduction in fiscal 1989, which begins Oct. 1. Of that total, $14 billion would come from new taxes and $3.5 billion from the sale of federal assets.

Gray, in an interview, said he had learned the administration was considering proposing additional reductions in Medicare spending of as much as $1.2 billion and in farm programs of up to $100 million beyond the agreement, claiming the original tabulations didn't provide enough savings.

Senior administration officials "sat in at the time the items were written," Gray said. "They approved the levels of funding for Medicare and agriculture in December. The president signed it, didn't he? Why, now, in January, are we hearing that Congress didn't quite do what they expected?"

Planetary exploration hurt by shuttle delays

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's ambitious program of planetary exploration, already years behind schedule and hundreds of millions over budget, may be hurt again by the continuing problems in getting the shuttle back into space.

One project in particular, the Magellan probe to map Venus, facs a critical timeline. Under the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's flight schedule, which envisioned the first post-Challenger launch on June 2 this year, the Magellan spacecraft would have been sent on its way from the cargo bay of the fifth shuttle, on April 27, 1989.

All of NASA's planetary probes are built to be launched from the shuttle.

"You only get a launch opportunity to Venus every 18 months," Samuel Keller, the second-in-command of NASA science programs, said in an interview Wednesday. At other times, Earth and its nearest neighbor are in the wrong position for targeting.

Every day these expensive science spacecraft spend on the ground costs huge sums that bring little return. And since the Challenger blew up two years ago, scientists with years of work tied up in the probes have seen their careers languish.

Just keeping Magellan, the $1 billion Hubble Space Telescope and the Jupiter probe Galileo in storage has cost well over $100 million. The space telescope, for example, costs $6 million to $8 million a month while it's grounded.

Depending on when the next shuttle is launched — possibly as long as three months beyond the June 2 date — NASA may be forced to jigger priorities for shuttle payloads. Those priorities were arrived at through painful evaluation of the limited space opportunities in the wake of the Challenger accident that killed seven astronauts.

Planetary exploration was hardest hit by the halt in manned flight and near-halt in launching unmanned rockets. The last U.S. planetary mission, the Pioneer probe, was launched to Venus in 1978.

The Soviet Union, in the meantime, was a major player in sending probes last year to meet Halley's comet and it has scheduled unmanned missions to Mars beginning this year.

On the first shuttle flight — named STS-26 because it is 26th in the shuttle series — Discovery will carry a giant Tracking and Data Relay Satellite that is critical to NASA operations. A single TDRS now in space is barely functioning and its first replacement was destroyed along with the Challenger in the explosion on Jan. 28, 1986. Without question, the TDRS retains the highest priority for shuttle flight.

The cargo bays for the next two missions are assigned to the Air Force exclusively. STS-27, originally planned for September, is to carry two military communications satellites. STS-28, with a December date, has an advanced reconnaissance satellite for its cargo.

Under long-standing rules, restated by President Reagan after the Challenger disaster, national security payloads have first call on space shuttle flights. But NASA officials are thinking of asking the Air Force to relinquish one or both of its slots should that become necessary.

On STS-29, originally scheduled for February 1989, NASA had planned to put up a second TDRS in order to extend coverage worldwide.

WHERE'S THE ENTRY?

Both vulnerable. South deals.

	NORTH ♠ A 5 ♡ Q 8 2 ◇ 8 7 6 5 3 ♣ Q 10 5
WEST ♠ K 10 9 7 6 2 ♡ J 5 ◇ Q J 9 ♣ 8 3		EAST ♠ J 4 ♡ K 10 7 6 4 3 ◇ 4 ♣ A 7 6 2
	SOUTH ♠ Q 8 3 ♡ A 9 ◇ A K 10 2 ♣ K J 9 4

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

Choosing the right line, more often than not, is a matter of simple logic. Looking at all four hands, there's little problem here. But let's see how you go about planning the play.

The auction is straightforward enough. North's five-card suit and intermediates just make his hand good enough to issue an invitation, and the quality of South's 17 points make acceptance more or less automatic.

West leads the ten of spades, you play low from dummy, East contributes the jack and you win the queen. Obviously, if diamonds are 2-2 you have no problem, so you cash the ace-king of diamonds only to find that, as expected, the suit breaks 3-1. What do you do now?

You can't answer that question until you discover who holds the long diamond. From the lead, you presume that West has the long spades, so you want to eliminate his entry right away. (If he holds both the long diamond and ace of clubs, you are not making this contract.)

If it's East who has shown out on the diamonds, you have to hope that he has the ace of clubs and only two spades, so you concede a diamond trick to West. On the actual lie of the cards, you will now have time to set up the clubs for your contract.

If West didn't follow to the second diamond, you must now switch from diamonds and force out the ace of clubs. After winning the presumed spade continuation, you concede a diamond to East and hope he is out of spades. Since he started with a doubleton, you are home.

Jim Bakker denies he and Tammy seek $1.3 million from PTL ministry

Jim and Tammy Bakker

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Former PTL leader Jim Bakker denies he and his wife are seeking $1.3 million from the PTL ministry for a home they once occupied and says the ministry is conducting a "hate campaign" against them.

The State newspaper in Columbia, S.C., reported the Bakkers filed a claim in August in U.S. Bankruptcy Court seeking $1.3 million from the television ministry for the lakeside parsonage they lived in while heading PTL.

David W. Clark, the latest person to head the PTL, apparently just learned of the claim and similar claims filed by other former PTL officials. He said he is "amazed at their gall."

Clark said the PTL intends to respond with legal action by "doing whatever we can to recover assets" belonging to the ministry.

"It sounds like somebody is trying to stir up some more propaganda to hurt Tammy and I again," Bakker said in a telephone interview Wednesday from his home in this desert resort town. "We gave up that house months ago. There's almost like a hate campaign coming out of PTL."

Ryan Hovis, Bakker's attorney in Rock Hill, S.C., acknowledged the claim was filed, but said it was a legal move so the Bakkers could be involved in PTL's bankruptcy hearings.

"It's not that we want the $1.3 million. If we got it, we'd give it back. We filed it to have a standing in bankruptcy court," Hovis said.

In the claim, the Bakkers cited PTL board action in April 1986 to transfer several parsonages to PTL top staff over a period of years. After Bakker resigned following disclosure of a tryst with a church secretary, he was asked to vacate the parsonage in Tega Cay, S.C., near PTL headquarters at Fort Mill.

Meanwhile, Clark said he plans to investigate whether the Bakkers and their top aides had facelifts, "tummy tucks" and other cosmetic surgery at PTL expense. If so, Clark said, PTL might sue to recover those medical bills, along with millions of dollars in excessive compensation the Internal Revenue Service says the Bakkers and their aides received between 1984 and 1987.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Danielle Steel, known for such steamy best sellers as "Passion's Promise," "Wanderlust" and "Kaleidoscope," says her first "desk" was a jostling washing machine and she once finished a novel atop the toilet.

A week before Miss Steel, 39, and third husband, businessman John Traina, were married, the author found herself between movers and a book deadline.

"So I had the typewriter on the toilet and I was sitting on the floor trying to finish the book. And that's exactly where I did it. In my bathroom," Miss Steel said recently.

Traina said his wife began to write on top of a bouncing washing machine, putting in midnight work hours while the couple's nine children slept. Since then, she has vaulted to the best-seller lists, writing 23 books in 15 years and publishing 85 million copies worldwide.

"When it's 1:30 or 2 in the morning and I feel like reading something, I don't want to read Thomas Mann," she said. "After you reach the age of 12, you have enough pressure and stress that you just want something you can flow with."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Duke and Duchess of York, better known as Prince Andrew and the former Sarah Ferguson, will rock, shop and sup in their stop here next month.

Andrew, who playfully spray-painted reporters here during a 1984 visit, and his wife are scheduled to visit from Feb. 26 through March 6 as part of UK-LA, a festival celebrating British culture sponsored by city arts organizations, the British Consulate announced Wednesday.

The two will tour displays of British food at a supermarket and visit the University of California at Los Angeles. After a peek at a fashion show at the Los Angeles Music Center, the royal couple will swing into the downtown disco, the Stock Exchange.

A tour on the U.S. aircraft carrier Nimitz also is slated for Andrew, who serves in the British Navy.

The couple will be guests of honor at a UK-LA gala dinner given by Lodwrick Cook of ARCO and Dr. Armand Hammer, chairman and chief executive officer of Occidental Petroleum.

BOSTON (AP) — Tissue from the brain and adrenal gland of a spontaneously aborted human fetus was grafted onto the brains of two sufferers of Parkinson's disease, and they showed marked improvement afterward, scientists report today.

The Sept. 12 surgery in Mexico marked the first time that brain tissue from one human was implanted into the brain of another, said Dr. Ignacio Madrazo of the La Raza Medical Center in Mexico City, who directed the procedure.

In several earlier operations, Madrazo and doctors in the United States and elsewhere implanted patients' own adrenal gland tissue into the patient's brains to stimulate production of dopamine, a substance whose deficiency is believed responsible for Parkinson's.

The fetal tissue was used as an alternative to such "autografting" because of the risk of performing two major operations simultanously on patients 60 years old and older, the doctors wrote in a letter in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Scientists believe fetal tissue may be more effective because it grows faster than adult tissue, is more adaptable and is less prone to rejection.

The patients were a 50-year-old man in whom Parkinson's had evolved over nine years, and a 35-year-old woman who had Parkinson's for five years.

The man received fetal brain cells. The woman received tissue from the fetus' adrenal gland. Both improved without complications arising eight weeks after the surgery, the doctors reported.

The transplanted tissue came from the fetus of a woman who aborted after 13 weeks of pregnancy and consented to the use of the cadaver's organs, the physicians wrote.

Approval also was obtained from the ethics and research committees of the hospital and written consent obtained from the patients and their relatives, the doctors said.

Medical ethicists said the procedure breaks new ground and is likely to stir controversy.

"What has been hastening upon us is finally here," Mary Mahowald, co-director of the Center for Biomedical Ethics at Case Western Reserve University, told The New York Times.

"We've talked a lot about this in various conferences, but now we're definitely going to have to deal with it."

Soviet's reforms face tough reality

Because Christmas is officially banned in the Soviet Union, New Year's is the country's big winter holiday. The occasion was particularly important this year, for it formally ushered in Mikhail Gorbachev's ambitious economic reforms.

The prognosis for success, nonetheless, is not good.

On Jan. 1, 60 percent of the Soviet Union 's 48,000 major industrial enterprises switched, in Gorbachev's words, from "an overly centralized command system of management to a democratic system based mainly on economic methods." Translation: The major industries will now operate on a profit-and-loss basis.

Under the new State Enterprise Law, which received grudging approval last summer from the Communist Party Central Committee, industry managers now have the authority to reinvest profits or use them to give bonuses to their workers. The flip side is that enterprises which fail to make a profit will not be bailed out by Moscow.

Previously, bureaucrats in Gosplan, the central planning agency, determined how profits were to be used. Gosplan also shifted revenues from successful factories to prop up failing enterprises. During the last 20 years, the number of failing or marginal businesses has risen dramatically, dwarfing the list of profitable enterprises. This is a major reason for the stagnation that has paralyzed the Soviet economy.

Gorbachev's reform is not without enormous risks. It is one thing to give individual factory managers power over profits and permit them to purchase goods and services free of government direction. It is something else to expect that they will handle their new responsibilities effectively.

Except for a brief flurry of free enterprise during the 1920s, hands-on experience with a market system is unknown in the Soviet Union. That short-lived fling with free enterprise known as Lenin's New Economic Policy saved the fledgling Soviet state from ruin. Now, in an effort to implement Gorbachev's "new thinking," managers, bureaucrats, and even some government ministers are being put through crash courses in market-oriented management.

Most, if not all, industrial managers pay lip service to the Gorbachev reforms, as does a broad segment of the Communist Party. The speed of the changes is what frightens them.

Resistance to change in the U.S.S.R. is fierce, and the entrenched patterns of doing things will not be uprooted easily. Even Gorbachev's top economic adviser, Abel Aganbegyan, predicts that the country's faltering industrial output will be depressed still further by the reforms in the short run.

A case in point is Moscow's recent crackdown on shoddy manufactured goods. Government quality-control inspectors have been rejecting as much as 30 percent of output at nearly 1,500 factories. The resulting cut in bonuses triggered at least three outbursts by workers protesting that they are being penalized for management's failures.

Workers are skeptical of being penalized for management's failures. Key members of the party elite, fearful of losing their power and privileges, have made no secret of their dismay over the direction of Gorbachev's plans. Rewarding good workers and managers, and punishing the inefficient, is not exactly in tune with Marxist dogma.

Writing in the journal Novy Mir, economist Nikolai Shmelev observed that "at the most 'patriotic' estimate, only 17 percent to 18 percent of the products of our manufacturing industry would meet world standards." Before he changes that dismal statistic, Gorbachev must first undo six decades of economic illiteracy.

Another View:

No action on ethics

Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., and his colleagues on the House Ethics Committee disagree with Rep. Austin Murphy's contention that he is being made a sacrificial lamb.

In a rare example of facing up to the "character issue" in Congress, the panel reprimanded the Pennsylvania Democrat who was accused of diverting federal resources to his former law firm, keeping a "ghost" employee on his payroll and letting another House member vote for him. It was the first official reprimand of a member since 1984.

"We are not scapegoating anybody," says Fazio. "We've had heat before and we will take heat again."

The proof of the pudding Fazio and his friends are whipping up may be whether they act on a recommendation by the committee staff that Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., be expelled. He was convicted of using his influence to help a New York-area ship repair firm and accepting free Florida vacations in return. The committee will consider the recommendation after the Christmas recess.

However, despite the show of toughness against Murphy, the committee seems strangely reluctant to take up a Republican demand to investigate House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, and his connections to Texas business interests, especially the state's sick savings and loan industry. Wright denies any wrongdoing, but Republicans have a strong case in demanding appointment of special prosecutors to investigate the speaker and other Democrats.

GOP members complain that there is too much whitewashing in highly fragrant cases. They cite the lack of punishment for Reps. Fernand St. Germain, D-R.I., and Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, even though the committee decided in 1987 that St. Germain misrepresented his financial holdings and Oakar paid $45,000 to someone who moved to New York and no longer is qualified to work on her staff.

Ethics Committee members contend that their panel must remain a pillar of bipartisanship. But unless they take more decisive action against these and other cases involving Democratic members, the public will conclude that they are more interested in protecting fellow members than safeguarding the integrity of the House of Representatives.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Jan. 7, the seventh day of 1988. There are 359 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 7, 1789, the first U.S. presidential election was held. Americans voted for electors who, a month later, would choose George Washington to be the nation's first president.

On this date:

In 1536, Catherine of Aragon, the first wife of England's King Henry VIII, died.

In 1610, the astronomer Galileo sighted four of Jupiter's moons.

In 1782, the first commercial bank in the United States, the Bank of North America, opened in Philadelphia.

In 1800, the 13th President of the United States, Millard Fillmore, was born in Summerhill, N.Y.

In 1927, commercial transatlantic telephone service was inaugurated between New York and London.

In 1980, the Soviet Union vetoed a U.N. Security Council resolution protesting the massive Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Navy sailing increasingly hostile seas

SAN DIEGO — A day after docking, the aircraft carrier Ranger seems enveloped in a roar of calm, such is the contrast with the violent ballet of operations at sea. With three-quarters of the crew of 4,500 ashore after five and one-half months away, the quiet conduces to thinking about the darkening future of U.S. defense.

George F. Will

The Navy will be increasingly important but increasingly vulnerable to the cold fiscal climate that is one of the few certainties about the 1990s.

The first sailors to step on the dock were the 83 fathers whose children were born while the Ranger was on station near the Persian Gulf. Viewed from dockside, a carrier looms large. And when two are lined up, as the Ranger and Constellation are just now, the sight is impressive. But it is less so when you consider how much of the nation's weight must be leveraged by only 15 carriers.

Of course carriers have limitations on their abilities to project power. In some situations, a significant portion of their aircraft are needed to protect the fleet. Furthermore, carriers would be vulnerable in a war with the Soviet Union. But since 1945, U.S. forces have been involved only in lesser-threat environments. An increasingly important virtue of carriers is their freedom from the sort of dependence on foreign governments that comes with overseas bases.

Often the best way to deliver munitions from the air is from planes using ground bases. But carriers can move around, look menacing and linger. Besides, we do not have bases everywhere we might need them, and we soon may have fewer, even if the decline of the dollar does not cause Congress to trim overseas-based forces.

Because the future of the Philippines is clouded, so is the future of Subic Bay, the Navy facility serving ships operating all the way to the Persian Gulf. The domestic politics of Greece and Spain pose a threat to bases. Congress panders to Greek-Americans by being rude to Turkey, thereby jeopardizing other facilities. And the worse things get, the worse they get: As more bases become vulnerable, some host countries raise the rents (in the form of extorted U.S. aid).

Movement toward a world with fewer, and then still fewer, nuclear weapons — movement spurred by Reagan's reckless rhetoric stigmatizing nuclear weapons — makes conventional forces increasingly important. But they are expensive, and defense budgets are becoming increasingly vulnerable.

In his memoir, David Stockman wrote about using the deficit ("I made fiscal necessity the mother of political invention") to force "the politicians to turn against their own handiwork — the bloated budget of the American welfare state." Oh? In Reagan's eighth year, the welfare state is virtually unscathed. The target has become Reagan's handiwork, the defense budget.

The Reagan buildup is over. It lasted five years and was well worth the price. But in the subsequent two years, defense spending was almost flat. In the eighth year, defense spending will decline.

No Reagan accomplishment is more important than the enhancement of the military in terms of morale as well as materiel. And the Navy has been the biggest winner among the services. However, naval officers, like most military officers, stress that high morale is a function of feeling necessary — of being used, as the Ranger has been in conjunction with the re-flagging operation.

Budget constraints produce a cheese-paring mentality and nickel-and-dime economizing that inflicts a death-of-a-thousand-cuts on morale. For example: Navy aviators can make more money and spend much more time at home by flying in the friendly skies of commercial aviation. And operating out of America's airports is much more relaxing than being hurled off a patch of steel in a pitching ocean.

Today, 210 years later, the eighth Ranger is part of a fleet that is increasingly important to the government's responsibilities, but is increasingly vulnerable because of the government's fiscal irresponsibility.

Super Tuesday last chance for Texas Tories

AUSTIN, Texas — Dallas financier and heavyweight political fund-raiser Jess Hay next week will join other substantial citizens in endorsing Sen. Albert Gore Jr. in perhaps the last gasp of the Tory establishment that once controlled Texas Democratic politics.

While Gore admittedly is not their first choice for president, he is the closest Democrat to their model of a centrist able to carry Texas and the South. But in his new role, he confronts liberal party activists who have dominated recent state Democratic primaries for every office except governor.

Whatever happens to Gore's long-shot presidential bid, his campaign here in the March 8 Super Tuesday primary is central to this politically-critical state's future. He looks like the last windbreak against cyclonic party realignment, joining Texas to polarized national parities — liberal Democratic and conservative Republican.

That is a peculiar mission for 39-year-old Al Gore, who only last summer seemed an archetypal Southern liberal. His sole significant Texas booster was ex-railroad commissioner Buddy Temple, a key 1984 backer of Walter F. Mondale and member of Impact '88 (Democratic money men who wanted Mario Cuomo and settled for Gore).

Two developments broadened Gore's base. First was the fall of Gary Hart, supported in Texas by a potent liberal-Tory coalition. Second was Gore's emergence as the Voice of the South once Sam Nunn and Chuck Robb declined, changing his emphasis from environmental protector to defense hawk. Finally, when Rep. Richard Gephardt virtually abandoned Texas to concentrate on the Iowa caucuses, his prospects here vanished.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The upshot was Gore's endorsement by party stalwarts such as Democratic State Chairman Robert Slagle and ex-state chairman Calvin Guest. That did not impress State Attorney General Jim Mattox, far ahead in the early going for the 1990 nomination for governor.

Combative and populistic, Mattox represents the new left-leaning face of Texas Democrats and contends Gore's backers can't nominate anybody here. "They march to a different drummer (than mainstream Democrats here), and nobody's following them," he told us. Liberal activists who dominate the Texas primary have no interest in Gore.

One Gore backer who does generate Mattox's respect is Jess Hay, and that's because of the color green. Hay guarantees an impressive war chest. His first choice was Sen. Nunn, his second choice was Sen. Bill Bradley and he is really not sure whether Gore can be nominated. But Hay considers him the only willing candidate who can be elected.

He is not alone. Former Democratic national chairman Robert Strauss, while unlikely to endorse any time soon, has been talking up Gore around the nation and with fellow Texans such as Hay. Powerful State House Speaker Gib Lewis joins Gore this week.

All this confronts the labor/minority group/trial lawyers/teachers coalition that has revolutionized Democratic politics throughout the South. With no slight interest shown in Hart's rebirth, the coalition is choosing between Sen. Paul Simon and Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Mattox is particularly attracted to Simon, once his seatmate on the House Budget Committee in Washington. He hints that he and his fellow populist, State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, might endorse together — maybe for Simon. Influential State Sen. Ray Farabee, once Hart's main Texan, now backs Simon. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby is staying neutral after the embarrassment of supporting Hart, but friends say he likes Simon.

Yet Simon may already have started downhill. State Treasurer Ann Richards, heroine of the liberals, wonders about Simon. After hearing him describe Harry Truman as his political role model, she was stunned to hear that Simon as a young weekly newspaper editor in Illinois endorsed Thomas E. Dewey for president in 1948. She speculates how he can square crusading for federal spending programs with backing Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction. He blundered a week ago by turning nuclear hawkish in an Austin speech.

That leaves Dukakis, who as an ethnic liberal from the Northeast would seem poorly suited to Texas. In fact, the primary here is both liberal and ethnic. He is favored by the Jewish community and is way ahead for the big Hispanic vote. Dukakis vs. Gore could be the shootout to determine what this state's Democratic Party will look like.

Hay believes Sen. John Glenn would have defeated Mondale in Texas four years ago if he had survived long enough to get here, and therefore is thankful Gore has finessed Iowa and New Hampshire to be ready for Super Tuesday. With the black vote wrapped up by Jesse Jackson, Tory Democrats have a last chance to win most white voters and, therefore, the primary. If they can't, their long battle against a two-party realignment here may be over.

If you have to smoke on plane, step outside!

The smokers and the nonsmokers had their greatest battle on a shuttle from Washington to New York last week. The smokers claimed the nonsmokers started it when a puffer lit up a Virginia Slim and an anti-smoker activist threw a pail of water at her.

Art Buchwald

The anti-smoker said she only threw the water because she thought the passenger was on fire. To show support for one of their own, all the smokers lit up and started blowing black tar at the nonsmokers, many of whom were senior citizens flying at half price.

Several nonsmokers put sick bags over their faces and attacked the smoking section, assaulting the smokers with weighted briefcases and duty-free shopping bags.

The smokers rose as a group and set the sick bags on fire with their cigarette lighters. The stewardesses put the fires out and, to restore order, gave an extra demonstration of how to evacuate the airplane using the life jackets located under everybody's seat.

To stop any further rioting the captain put on the "no smoking" sign. This angered a man who was not only a smoker but an executive of a large tobacco company.

"I know my Constitution. I have as much right to smoke as these tawdry people have not to," he said to a stewardess who was selling coffee, tea or milk from a cart in the aisle.

"Smoking is bad for my health," the stewardess said.

"Medical tests show it doesn't hurt anyone's health," the executive told her.

"But it stinks up my clothes."

"Sit down," a nonsmoking man said to the executive.

"You're blocking my view of Philadelphia."

A lady in the smoking section started to hyperventilate. "I can't breathe," she cried. "I have to have a cigarette."

A smoker who looked like a Marlboro Man strolled down the aisle, lit up, leaned over and encouraged her to puff.

"It says no smoking on the sign," a passenger yelled angrily.

"This is an emergency," the Marlboro Man said. "Without a cigarette this lady could die."

"Stewardess, I want to speak to the captain," the nonsmoker said.

The captain came out of his cabin carrying a Uzi submachine gun.

"What are you doing with that gun?" the nonsmoking passenger asked.

"We carry them now to break up arguments between smokers and nonsmokers on the shuttle. We used to have rubber bullets and water cannon, but they didn't have enough force to pacify people on the flights. Now what's the problem?"

"That man is permitting this lady to smoke and she's blowing it into the nonsmoking section. Throw them the hell off the plane."

"I can't do that. We have rules we must abide by." The pilot went over to the woman, who was lying on the floor. "Are you all right?"

"A couple more puffs will do it," she said.

"Why don't you go outside on the wing of the plane?" the pilot suggested.

"Is that permitted?" the woman asked.

"Everything is permitted since deregulation."

NATION IN BRIEF

Acid rain widespread

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acid rain has been detected in Japan, China, the Soviet Union and South America, indicating that what once was considered a regional problem has become a global threat to the environment, a scientist reports.

D.W. Schindler, in a Science magazine article published this week, says recent studies show that more areas are sensitive to the effects of acid rain than previously believed.

"Widespread acid rain has been known in northern Europe and eastern North America for some time," but recent research has detected it in far more areas, Schindler says.

Even in North America, where acid rain has been a concern for some time, the full extent of the phenomenon is only now becoming apparent, he said.

AIDS guide copies ordered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Another 1 million copies of Education Secretary William J. Bennett's AIDS education guide are on order due to the high volume of requests from educators worried about the deadly virus.

The initial supply of 850,000 copies of "AIDS and the Education of Our Children" has been depleted, and Bennett's department has a backlog of requests for another 434,000 copies.

Bennett began offering parents and teachers his free guide three months ago.

It still has a long way to go to catch up with "The Surgeon General's Report on AIDS." Public Health Service spokesman Jim Brown said 12 million copies of Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's report have been distributed since late 1986.

Bennett has bickered with Koop over what children should be taught about AIDS. Bennett has warned that condoms "can reduce, but by no means eliminate, the risk of contracting AIDS."

Police wait out sleeper

RADCLIFF, Ky. (AP) — Police officers responding to a reported domestic dispute had a long, cold wait that turned out to be a sleeper.

Police went to the house Tuesday after a woman reported trouble with her husband, supposedly armed with a .45-caliber revolver. Officers telephoned the man, who agreed to meet them outside, but when they got there he didn't show.

Police tried calling him again but got no answer. They put the special-response team on alert and probed the house with spotlights.

Then, 1½ hours later, when they approached the house and looked through a window, they found the supposed gunman unarmed and sleeping in his living room.

Police spokesman Steve Bailey said officers later learned the woman never saw the revolver.

"You prepare for the worst," he said of the police response.

Reagan's answers on Iran-Contra varied

An Analysis

By TERENCE HUNT

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Iran-Contra foreign policy debacle has slipped below the horizon after more than a year of controversy, but there are some intriguing mysteries still churning beneath the surface.

The most compelling question is this: Why did he do it?

Why did President Reagan sell weapons to Iran, a country on the State Department's terrorist list, and break the U.S. pledge of neutrality in the Iran-Iraq war?

Why did Reagan send Americans to Iran to deal with the lieutenants of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, a man he says is "as big a satan as he thinks I am"?

Why did the president mislead the world, trying to get allies to take part in an arms embargo against Iran while the United States was secretly sending missiles to Tehran?

Of course, these questions have been answered before — and then answered again in different ways.

In trying to explain the origins of the Iran-Contra affair, there are two distinctly different Reagans.

One is the Reagan who sits behind his desk in the Oval Office reading a carefully prepared speech on the Iran-Contra affair. The other is the Reagan who speaks off the cuff, saying things that surely make his speechwriters wince.

Initially, Reagan argued vehemently that he was not trading arms for hostages by selling arms to Iran. "The United States has not swapped boatloads or planeloads of American weapons for the return of American hostages. And we will not," Reagan said in a televised address 14 months ago.

But under the weight of evidence, Reagan changed his explanation. On Feb. 26, 1987, the presidential Tower commission that investigated the affair delivered its report.

"Whatever the intent, almost from the beginning the initiative became in fact a series of arms-for-hostages deals," the panel said.

Reluctantly, Reagan seemed to accept that finding. In a speech from the Oval Office on March 4, 1987, the president recalled that he had said he did not trade arms for hostages. However, he added, "My heart and my best intentions still tell me that is true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not."

Later that month, he told schoolchildren in Columbia, Mo., "It sort of settled down to just trading arms for hostages, and that's a little like paying ransom to a kidnapper."

Reagan made another speech from the Oval Office last Aug. 12 following the congressional hearings into the Iran arms sales and the diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

The president said his original initiative "got all tangled up in the sale of arms, and the sale of arms got tangled up with the hostages."

Arms deal haunts Bush, other candidates argue among selves

Associated Press

Vice President George Bush faced a drumbeat of Iran-Contra questions on his first campaign trip of the new year, and Democrat Gary Hart said today he would love to face Bush and let voters decide "whether my personal and human mistake is on the same scale as the mistakes of the last seven years" of the Reagan administration.

Hart, who returned to the race last month after dropping out in May amid news stories of a relationship with Miami model Donna Rice, said today his personal life "is not what is on the mind of the people of this country."

"What they want to know is when and where are we going to commit our troops and are their sons going to lose their lives in the Persian Gulf. How are we going to shelter the homeless and feed the hungry?"

Hart, campaigning in Manchester, N.H., made his comments in an interview on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

One day earlier, his Democratic rivals had increasingly been turning their fire on one another.

Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt derided Illinois Sen. Paul Simon's budget plan as "laughable," and Jesse Jackson criticized Simon, Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. for "abandoning the needy."

Gore, who was campaigning again today in the South, defended his decision to bypass Iowa and stake his hopes on a good performance in the March 8 Super Tuesday primaries and caucuses.

Bush, in Iowa, told reporters he expects more questions from Iran-Contra investigators, but said neither he nor President Reagan is the target of any probe.

"I will answer any question put to me by the special prosecutor," he said Wednesday. "It has been made clear to me I am not a target of any investigation, nor is the president."

Bush said he has not yet been contacted by special prosecutor Lawrence E. Walsh or any of his aides, "but I will be."

Earlier, in Goffstown, N.H., Bush refused to say whether he had been contacted by Walsh, telling reporters: "We don't discuss what happens at a grand jury."

The Washington Post reported today it had obtained classified notes from Bush's Dec. 18, 1986, interview with the Tower commission, a panel appointed by Reagan to investigate the Iran-Contra affair.

Notes of the Bush interview say he "did have a general knowledge of arms sales to Iran as a result of attendance at various briefings on the hostages and...with the president," the newspaper said.

Simple tips help cope with cold

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK — When a cold snap hits, forget fashion and wear a cap. Forget bravery and go warm up when chilled flesh starts to hurt.

"This is one time when it's not good to be macho," says Robert Pozos, director of the hypothermia laboratory at the University of Minnesota at Duluth.

Those precautions and others can help in coping with winter cold, experts say.

The two main enemies are frostbite, which is freezing of skin, and hypothermia, a potentially dangerous lowering of inner body temperature.

Pain is "your first good sign" of frostbite danger, Pozos said Wednesday. Symptoms of hypothermia can include drowsiness, memory lapses, speech impediment, incoherence, frequent stumbling and exhaustion.

One general cold-weather precaution is to dress warmly. Outdoor clothing should include several layers of loose-fitting, lightweight but warm clothing, and the outer garment should be tightly woven, water-repellant and hooded, says the National Weather Service.

Other tips depend on age:

— Infants and children.

Outdoors, parents should make sure children keep scarves, mittens, hats and boots on, Pozos said. If an active child suddenly begins to look tired, bring him indoors, Pozos said.

Like adults, children also should drink plenty of fluids, he said.

The weather service recommends that infants wear a cap indoors as well as outside, that their outdoor exposure be limited, and that they be kept warm and dry at all times. Wetness significantly increases heat loss.

— Adults.

Alcohol will not keep people warm outdoors, it will only keep them from realizing they are getting too cold, Pozos said.

When traveling, "make sure that people know where you're going to go, what routes you're going to take, and how long you will be gone," Pozos said.

In case of breakdown, an auto should contain a parka, wool socks, mittens, blankets, a thermos with hot coffee or chocolate, nonperishable food such as chocolate bars, a flashlight with fresh batteries, a shovel, booster cables, flares and bags of sand, experts say.

Many of America's professors redefining college literature studies

By JOSEPH BERGER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Many college professors around the country are rethinking the very notion of what is literature.

There are those who continue to uphold a traditional standard of literary quality, arguing that students should essentially read works whose merit has been established over the years. But there is a rising group that contends the idea of an enduring pantheon of writers and their works is an elitist one largely defined by white men who are Northeastern academics and critics.

Choosing between Virginia Woolf and Pearl Buck, they hold, involves political and cultural distinctions more than esthetic ones.

"It's no different from choosing between a hoagy and a pizza," said Houston Baker, professor of literature at the University of Pennsylvania. "I am one whose career is dedicated to the day when we have a disappearance of those standards."

While mediocre writers are not being widely included in the usual English courses, the content of many courses would surprise some of those who studied literature only two decades ago. It was then that blacks and women, both professors and students, began appealing for more diversity in the literary canon.

The radical re-examination that spread afterward has now begun to question the very idea of literary quality and has made for the teaching of writers principally for historical and sociological importance, for what they have to say rather than how well they say it, sometimes for their popularity rather than their widely accepted artistic merit.

Once-honored standards like grace of style, vigor of prose and originality of expression have been downgraded or questioned while the importance of historical and social impact and rhetorical strength has grown.

Courses are proliferating on popular romance, detective stories, Gothic fiction and westerns. Authors not widely taught a quarter of a century ago — Zora Neale Hurston, a Harlem Renaissance novelist; Sarah Orne Jewett and Mary Wilkins Freeman, 19th-century writers of rural New England life; Frederick Douglass, the abolitionist, and Charles Chesnutt, a short story writer — are edging out more established writers.

The canon, a word derived from the biblical canon of accepted texts, has always been in flux, determined largely by an informal process. For early periods like the Renaissance or Elizabethan eras, with a relatively fixed range of works to choose from, the canon tends to remain fairly stable. For more recent periods of literature, the canon changes gradually, with some writers like Thomas Wolfe and Sinclair Lewis falling from grace and others like Willa Cather and Edith Wharton gaining in stature.

admiral — (noun) An "admiral" is a high-ranking naval officer and the commander of a fleet (a large organization of warships). "Admiral" is derived from the ancient Latin word "admirabilus," meaning "admirable or exceptionable" and the earlier Arabic word "amir," meaning "commander." Orginally "admiral" referred to anyone who was a leader but the word today is generally restricted to naval ranking.

Second justice resigns from Supreme Court

AUSTIN (AP) — Just two days after former Chief Justice John Hill's replacement was sworn in on the Texas Supreme Court, another high court justice quit his job.

Justice Robert M. Campbell resigned Wednesday, saying he wants to campaign against changing the state's system of electing judges to an appointive one. Hill had resigned to campaign for an appointive plan.

Campbell's resignation was accepted by Gov. Bill Clements, who aides said would immediately begin looking for a successor.

"I feel that I, as senior justice on the court, must speak out," Campbell said in a statement distributed after he met with Clements.

"An unmasking of this proposal for appointment of our judges by an elite group instead of by election reveals it to be a mere scheme to give big-business interests the power to control our courts," Campbell said.

He said the proposals for appointing appellate court judges "constitutes a hypocritical deception."

Clements, who earlier appointed Thomas R. Phillips to become the first Republican chief justice, said his search for Campbell's replacement would be thorough.

"The Texas Supreme Court is at a crossroads. It is vitally important that our justices interpret Texas law based on fairness, judicial balance and reason. I am committed to finding an individual who meets that criteria," Clements said.

Justice Robert Campbell

Campbell, 52, was most recently elected in 1986. His term didn't expire until the end of 1992.

Hill had no comment about Campbell's decision.

Campbell in September had announced his candidacy for chief justice, but said two months later that he didn't want to interrupt his court workload with an election campaign.

While saying he believes strongly in the elected judge system, Campbell didn't feel that his seat on the Supreme Court allowed him to speak out.

"To do so without violating my obligation to refrain from using the Supreme Court as a political platform requires my resignation," Campbell said.

Campbell, from Waco, was sharply critical of Hill's actions during the swearing-in ceremony Monday for the new chief justice. During that ceremony, Hill advocated changing to an appointive system.

"I have forced myself to neglect this obligation (to speak out) because I have felt a deeper obligation to refrain from being a party to the dragging of our Supreme Court down into the muck and mire of politics," Campbell said.

After Clements appoints a justice to serve this year, voters in November will elect someone to complete Campbell's term, said George Bayoud, Clements' chief of staff.

Campbell's resignation came as the latest shock to a Supreme Court that has been at the center of a storm of negative publicity in the past year. Last June, two justices were publicly rebuked by the State Commission on Judicial Conduct.

Democratic lawmakers unhappy about Campbell's decision to quit

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Democrats, stung for a third time, are unhappy with Supreme Court Justice Robert M. Campbell's decision to quit his seat on the high court.

Campbell, a Democrat, announced his move Wednesday, shortly after Republican Gov. Bill Clements accepted the immediate resignation.

The means Clements will have to appoint an interim replacement to serve until Texas voters in November pick a justice to complete Campbell's term, which ends at the close of 1992.

"I think many Democrats will feel abandoned and betrayed who had worked hard for Justice Campbell," said Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party.

Campbell said he quit to work against former Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill's campaign to scrap the elective system of picking judges and replace it with an appointive system.

Hill, also a Democrat, quit the Supreme Court to take an active role in the emerging fight over judicial selection. Earlier last year, Democrat Mack Wallace quit the Railroad Commission and Clements picked Republican Kent Hance for the job.

The State Democratic Executive Committee in September passed a resolution urging Democratic officeholders to keep their jobs.

"It should not be too much to expect of those who seek the votes of Democrats that they wait to let the people of Texas choose their successors," the resolution said.

"I'm disappointed at Judge Campbell for doing this," Bob Slagle, Texas Democratic Party chairman, said Wednesday. "I appreciate his concern for maintaining the elective system, because the appointive system takes the politics away from the people and puts it in the smoke-filled rooms of big contributors and powerful insiders.

"But I do believe he could have more effectively served the cause of maintaining the people's right to elect their judges by remaining on the court," he said.

Martin agreed with Slagle's assessment.

"It doesn't make a lot of sense," he said of Campbell's decision to quit.

"We always regret any Democrat resigning and giving a governor like Bill Clements the right and opportunity to appoint a replacement based on the advice of powerful insiders without consultation from the people," Slagle said.

George Strake of Houston, chairman of the Republican Party of Texas, said Clements has a headstart on picking a replacement because of the recent search for a new chief justice.

"It's all pluses and no minuses for us," Strake said.

Clements appointed Tom Phillips, a Houston Republican, as Hill's replacement as chief justice. Phillips was sworn in Monday.

TDC inmate's sentence extended for lying at heroin possession trial

From Staff Reports

A 34-year-old Midland woman was sentenced to 10 years in state prison Wednesday for lying at the trial of a man who received a life sentence for heroin possession.

Esmeralda Arrequin, who is currently serving a nine-year sentence at the Texas Department of Corrections for a probation violation, was sentenced to the term for aggravated perjury, according to court records.

According to prosecutors, she testified at the Dec. 8, 1987, trial in Midland of Isabel Polanco Lozano Jr., and lied when she told jurors that several packets of heroin and syringes belonged to her, and not the defendant.

Lozano was convicted and received a life sentence.

After the trial, an offense report was filed by Midland County Sheriffs' Investigator Fred Stubbs. Attached to the report was a copy of a voluntary statement Ms. Arrequin had given to investigators last July.

In the statement signed by Ms. Arrequin, she told Stubbs then that the packets, or heroin "papers," belonged to Lozano.

The 10-year sentence will run concurrent with the prison term for which she remains in the TDC, according to court records.

Ms. Arrequin, a native of Snyder whose last recorded address is at a Midland motel, was indicted June 17, 1987, for burglary of a habitation. She pleaded guilty to the charge and received a five-year probated sentence. While at the Midland Rehabilitation Center, she violated terms of her probation and was sentenced to the nine-year term, according to court records.

Man convicted of attempted capital murder

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A state district court jury was scheduled to decide the punishment today of a 31-year-old Midland man convicted late Wednesday of attempted capital murder.

After two days of testimony before 142nd State District Judge Pat Baskin, Dennis William Lovejoy was convicted of trying to shoot Officer Bobby Welborn, 36, on July 11, 1987, at the Scirocco's nightclub, 3904 W. Wall Ave.

The jury deliberated more than three hours before the verdict was returned.

Welborn was in uniform and was working as a security guard for the club when there was a report of a man with a gun in the bar, according to police reports.

Lovejoy, who according to testimony was armed by a 9mm pistol, then struggled with Welborn, a shot was fired, and Lovejoy was shot once in the hand.

Welborn was not injured in the incident, according to testimony.

In closing arguments Wednesday, defense attorney Edward Shelby told the five-man, seven-woman jury that the officer shared responsibility for the incident.

"In the heat of what was going on," Shelby said, "Officer Welborn actually contributed to the discharge of the weapon."

Shelby also told jurors that earlier testimony showed both men were "excited" when the confrontation took place, but Welborn escaped the alleged attack "without a scratch on him."

"Give me something, anything, that tells me that Dennis Lovejoy tried to hurt this individual," Shelby said. "The question is who initiated contact, who grabbed who and why...There was absolutely no attempt at capital murder."

As Welborn looked on, prosecutor Randall Fluke countered Shelby's argument by reminding jurors that the incident "illustrates the dangers police officers face on and off-duty."

A damning piece of evidence was testimony that Lovejoy tried to grab Welborn's gun, Fluke said.

"He tried to do it (shoot him) with his own gun, then he tried to get control over the officer's gun," the prosecutor said. "How far are we going to go to let people try and kill policemen?"

Odessan sentenced to 10 years on drug charge

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A former bail bondsman was sentenced to 10 years in prison after being found guilty Wednesday of the delivery of cocaine. Truman Lee "Ike" Isaacs will remain free on $25,000 bond pending appeal of his conviction.

A 358th District Court jury of eight women and four men deliberated about 35 minutes to find Isaacs guilty as charged.

Following the verdict, Judge Bill McCoy held the jury until Isaacs and his attorneys, Michael Lamson of Houston and Jerry Lopez of Odessa, reconsidered their decision to allow the judge to set punishment. Once it was affirmed that Issacs wanted McCoy to set sentence, the judge dismissed jurors and allowed attorneys to present punishment arguments.

After Isaacs' attorneys requested probation, McCoy sentenced the former bail bondsman to a 10 year prison term and denied probation. Isaacs faced a possible maximum prison sentence of 20 years.

District Attorney Eric Augesen early today said that, while he is pleased with the conviction of Isaacs, he's disappointed the judge did not hand him a longer sentence. The state had asked McCoy to sentence Isaacs to a minimum of 16 years in prison.

Isaacs still faces another charge of delivery of cocaine growing out of a drug buy by a police informant April 2 and one charge of possession of cocaine that grew out of a search of his North Washington Street home the same date.

According to Assistant District Attorney Roger Jones, the delivery of cocaine charge on which Isaacs was convicted grew out of an April 1, 1987 drug buy by a police informant, Lisa Hendrix.

Rodeos, football games spectacular, fast-paced events

ODESSA — Sometimes out in the West, the sport of the Old West — rodeoing — seems to get sidelined and overshadowed by something called football.

Todd

Two opposing teams of 22 fellows each are painted in battle colors. Hordes of riled-up fans get all excited over an oval pigskin ball pumped full of air. The players, both lean and fast and hefty and sure, get decked out like armored gladiators or painted armadillos. They become obsessed with the positioning of the ball. For the moment, the ball is all. They kick it, throw it, toss it, slam it, fall on it and cling to it as if it were their passage to another day's life. Occasionally, they throw it away — into the bleachers packed with yelling and sometimes crazed fans.

Football seems stuck in high gear at overdrive speed. Football fans are as glued to football and its heroes and foibles as the fat lady is stuck to her compulsion to reach for another chocolate.

Rodeo cowboys and their fans seem to like football. But they love a rodeo. Both are vibrant sports.

Once each year, Odessa plays hosts to the World's Championship Indoor Rodeo, which is playing this week in the Ector County Coliseum in conjunction with the Sand Hills Hereford and Quarter Horse Show.

This rodeo is a spectacular, fast-paced event that's not interrupted by commercials — some Madison Avenue types trying to sell you status on one hand and taking your money with the other while you're watching the boob tube.

Now, there's nothing wrong with money. Fact in, those all-American rodeo cowboys out there in the chutes and in the rodeo arena are trying to hang on a bucking and pitching horse, striving to stay atop a mad-dog bull, trying to bull-dog an escaping steer, or rope a calf not just for the sport of it. There's good money in rodeoing. That's one reason why cowboys rodeo and reporters write. Money. And something called purpose.

Those circuit-riding cowboys in the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association delve into bareback-bronc riding, saddle-bronc riding, tie-down calf roping, team roping, steer wrestling, and bull riding. The girls go after barrel racing.

The clowns put on their show during the bull-riding event and, if the bull is not putting on an exciting vaudeville act, the clowns taunt him and get him even more agitated just to thrill the fans after the cowboy and bull have parted company.

Between events, rodeo show people put on their colorful speciality acts. There's the black-faced clown Leon Coffee and his trained mule, Leon Adams and his team of six rhythm-on-the-hoof horses, and Vickie Adams and her graceful painted horse, One Little Indian.

Throughout the 2½-hour show, announcer Hadley Barrett kept the rodeo and its in-between acts vibrant in words.

"Now, there's a snappy little bucking horse," Barrett said during a eight-second saddle-bronc riding event. The cowboy got booted. "Tough break."

The bronc-riding cowboys from the Southwest, Midwest, Northwest, West and Canada straddle wild horses with such descriptive names as Egg Beater, Itchy Britches, Honky Tonk, Good News, Jamboree, Red Feather, Angel Sings, Stetson, Buckskin Joe and Alberta Kid.

"These guys get pumped up — I'll guarantee you," Barrett said of those "top athletes" in the game of rodeo. And those athletes have respect for the animals — from their mounts — their saddle horses — to the broncs, bulls, steers and calves they are thrown against in the dirt-packed arena. "No one has more of that (respect for the rodeo stock) than they (cowboys) do."

"You never know what an animal may or may not do," said Barrett.

Among those in the spectators' stand were a smattering of young and old rodeoers — some who have spent hard years in the arena and some who have hard and hopeful years to come.

A rodeo buff, such as Midland's Frank Rasure, was far more content to watch the rodeo events than to get down into the chutes and try his hand at bull riding.

"I did most of mine just shooting it," Rasure said. He wasn't kidding.

Amarillo received a four-inch blanket of snow Tuesday night and early Wednesday with temperatures in the low teens. With a chill factor of eight degrees below zero on Wednesday, Amarillo and the Panhandle received more than four inches of snow.

Dallas council will be eating gourmet

DALLAS (AP) — City Council members here have changed their meeting-day cuisine from cold cuts to gourmet meals.

The move from bologna sandwiches to designer vegetables comes at a time when the council is already facing an outcry over a new ordinance that requires household garbage be bundled up in disposable bags. The law is supposed to save about $670,000 per year in labor and equipment, but has caused some residents to talk about a Boston-style garbage party at City Hall.

Two days after the law took effect, the council departed from its usual lunchtime fare of cold cuts, chicken fried steak or meatloaf.

Instead, two chefs served the council grilled baby spring chicken, topped with herbed pear sauce and served on a bed of sauteed vegetables and a green salad with basil vinegarette dressing. For dessert there was chocolate decadence cake served in a pool of strawberry sauce.

The new menu is free, courtesy of Dallas restaurant owners. So far, 12 stylish restaurants have volunteered to serve the council and City Plan Commission. It is expected that the free meals will save about $4,600.

"It's a matter of our trying to do our part," said Ray Hemmig, a representative of the Dallas Restaurant Association.

Although most council members welcomed the new meals, Councilman Al Lipscomb was unimpressed and had a box lunch

Midlander to discuss time spent in China

From Staff Reports

Midlander Dorothy Horsely will address the monthly meeting of the Midland Archaeological Society Thursday, 7:30 p.m. at the Blakemore Planetarium, located behind the Museum of the Southwest.

Ms. Horsely will talk about her experiences as part of a group of 100 Americans who spent six weeks in Huhehot, Inner Mongolia (now part of China) this summer.

The Americans worked with English teachers from this region of China to help improve their listening and conversational English skills.

Ms. Horsely's trip was sponsored by the English Language Institute-China Organization.

The public is invited to attend.

Christian group to perform

The Reach Out Singers, a music mission of outreach for Christ International, will perform a concert of contemporary and traditional Christian music at 7:30 p.m. today at Grace Lutheran Church, 3000 W. Golf Course Road.

The concert will feature the voices of 13 young men and women who are on an international tour. The Reach Out Singers have visited 22 countries and 45 states. Each musician is chosen by national audition.

A free will offering will be taken.

Museum to be open tonight

Because of the popularity of the exhibition of doll houses and miniatures in "A World Made Small," the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., will be open from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. today.

This display includes over 80 doll houses and room boxes furnished with miniatures and includes award winning architecturally designed doll houses from an international architect's competition.

The exhibition closes 5 p.m. Sunday.

Regular hours at the museum are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged to view exhibits at the museum.

FBI probes death of black man who was allegedly beaten in jail

HEMPHILL (AP) — As an angry black community laid plans for a protest rally, FBI officials say they are probing the death of a black man who was allegedly beaten unconscious by lawmen on Christmas Day.

Houston FBI spokesman Johnnie Joyce said Wednesday that federal officials have nearly completed an investigation prompted by Loyal Garner Jr.'s death two days after the incident in the Sabine County Jail.

He said he could not comment on specifics of the investigation, only that it concerned possible civil rights violations.

Joyce said a report will be submitted soon to the U.S. Department of Justice, which will decide whether the case should be presented to a federal grand jury, needs more investigation or warrants no further action.

Meanwhile, church leaders have planned a Saturday morning rally to draw attention to racial problems in this East Texas town of 1,300 and show support for the relatives of Garner, the Louisiana man who died Dec. 27.

"We're not going up there to create a riot," the Rev. Earnest Charles of Houston said Wednesday. "We're going to help make a situation better, rather than make it worse."

Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner and Sabine County Sheriff's Deputies Bo Hyden and Bill Horton were indicted in the case Monday. They turned themselves in to Sheriff Blan Greer on charges of civil rights violations in connection with Garner's death.

The indictment against the three officers, issued by a Sabine County grand jury, charges them with violating the civil rights of a prisoner, a first-degree felony that carries the same penalty as homicide — five years to life in prison, District Attorney Bill A. Martin said.

Garner, a 35-year-old truck driver from Florien, La., was arrested Christmas Day along with two friends by Hemphill police and a Sabine County deputy sheriff, attorneys said.

The two friends, Johnnie and Alton Maxie, said they had crossed the state line into Texas along with Garner, a father of six, to run an errand when they were arrested for a traffic violation and taken to the Sabine County Jail.

The two said Garner was pulled from his cell and beaten unconscious after he asked to use a telephone to call his wife, and was returned to the cell covered in blood.

Garner was taken to a Hemphill hospital on Dec. 26, and later was transferred to a Tyler hospital where he died the next day.

DRUG

Ms. Hendrix testified Tuesday she agreed to make the illegal drug buy from Isaacs in exchange for the dropping of several charges pending against her in Ector and Midland counties, Monahans and Lamesa.

The young woman admitted she has been addicted to illegal drugs and supported her habit that ran as high was $200 a day through various illegal activities, including stealing and writing hot checks.

In deliberations Wednesday, which began about 3:30 p.m., jurors apparently were not swayed by the testimony of witnesses who, according to defense attorney Lamson, raised "reasonable doubt" about the validity of the charge against Isaacs.

William Lee "Snake" Cobb, a defense witness who admitted to having served prison time on four felony convictions, testified that on one occasion he had seen Odessa Detective Harold Thomas give Ms. Hendrix a tinfoil packet outside of his room at the Sunset Motel on East 2nd Street.

Cobb stated Ms. Hendrix came into his room after receiving the packet from Thomas and asked him if he had "a rig" and he told her he did.

Lamson asked Cobb to tell jurors what a rig was and Cobb said it was a syringe and that he and Ms. Hendrix shared the contents of the tinfoil packet, which he stated was cocaine.

Cobb also testified he was once in Ms. Hendrix's room at the motel when a man came in saying he was looking for the police informant who provided information on Isaacs, that he was going to kill whoever it was.

Cobb said he later learned Thomas had been hiding in the apartment while the man was there.

In an effort to discredit Cobb, Jones asked him how long he had known Isaacs and if he knew a lot of other people who were Isaacs' friends. Cobb replied he had known the former bondsman several years and was acquainted with a number of people who knew him.

Thomas was recalled to the witness stand and admitted he had been present in Ms. Hendrix's motel room during the instance related by Cobb. However, he said Ms. Hendrix had contacted him and said a former boyfriend had called and threatened her.

Thomas said he had notified patrol units and apprised them of the situation when they arrived at the motel. It was decided, he said, that he would wait inside the room and hid when Cobb and another man showed up because Ms. Hendrix had not been identified as a police informant at that time and he didn't want to place her in jeopardy.

Jurors also apparently gave little credence to testimony that Thomas and Ms. Hendrix had had a sexual encounter after the April 1 illegal drug buy.

Female impersonator sentenced to 10 years

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A plea bargain arrangement has landed a female impersonator in the Texas Department of Corrections for 10 years.

Hilton Williams, 27, of Picayune, Miss., was sentenced Tuesday by State District Judge Erwin Ernst on a felony theft charge.

Authorities claimed Williams moved through six states in two months posing as soul singer Shirley Murdoch. He was arrested in Washington, D.C., after he allegedly gave a $650 bogus check to the Grand Hyatt Hotel.

Prosecutors said Williams was accused of writing bad checks in Ms. Murdoch's name.

CAMPBELL

The Supreme Court received criticism nationally for refusing to hear the appeal of Texaco Inc. in its $11 billion legal battle with Pennzoil Co.

The court also has been the subject of a recent segment on the CBS-TV "60 Minutes" program, which examined the role campaign contributions play in the election of Texas Supreme Court justices.

And this week, the controversy about such contributions was the subject of a Time magazine article entitled, "Is Texas Justice for Sale?"

Campbell's resignation came after Democratic Party officials had urged Democratic officeholders not to resign in mid-term, which gives the Republican governor the opportunity to appoint successors.

Since he took office a year ago, Clements has appointed the new chief justice, Phillips, and Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance. Both replacements are Republicans.

"I don't understand why he (Campbell) would be more effective working for an elected judiciary when he is off the court," said Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party. "It doesn't make a lot of sense."

But Republicans said the resignations give them instant access to state government power.

"We've got now three statewide elected officials at little cost, and that's a heck of a way to do it," said John Weaver, executive director of the Texas GOP.

LAWMAKERS

While Democrats complained, Republicans celebrated.

"It's a great way to start the new year," said John Weaver, executive director of the Republican Party of Texas.

Added Strake: "When I recover from the shock, I'll make an intelligent comment. And if I'm shocked, poor Slagle must have ulcers."

Chinese cuisine 'to go' is better

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

You've seen the commercials — they're all alike. They start off with some poor wife-/mother who just can't seem to think of anything worth having for her hungry family's supper. (Never mind that in real homes, kids are too snacked out to even care what's for supper, as long as it's not liver.)

Anyway, some boxed mix — complete with all ingredients (except meat) necessary to make a terrific feast in one pan — comes to the puzzled cook's rescue, and she winds up with a marvelous meal that all the family members rave about — including hard-to-please hubby, who of course is strictly a meat-and-potatoes man.

And everyone lives happily ever after. Fade out.

Evidently everyone, even manufacturers, are buying the above-mentioned scene, because in recent years, many different companies have introduced many different one-skillet, all-you-add-is-meat meals. One of the newest is Suzi Wan line of Oriental-food-in-a-skillet.

At our house, we not only like Oriental cuisine, we also are extremely fond of easy meals, so naturally we tried a box of Suzi Wan dinner recipes, checking it out for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

Although the one-pan meals are available in several styles and flavors, the one we tried was Pepper Beef Oriental ("Long Grain Rice, Teriyaki Sauce, & Oriental Style Seasonings"). All you had to do was add beef.

The price for a 10.5-ounce, four-serving package of pepper beef was $1.99, which means each serving cost about 50 cents. Not bad for a family of four. Of course, you can't forget to add the cost of the beef, which will make the meal more expensive, but still not outrageous. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may differ.)

Label advertising claims the product "Cooks in 10 Minutes." The back of the box gets more specific: "... a unique way to use beef, chicken, or shrimp in an authentic Oriental style. Natural long grain rice is combined with selected herbs and spices, and complemented with a savory sauce to make your everyday meal more exciting. ... naturally light."

In the taste test — well, let's just say some of us were disappointed. The small children, who like Chinese food, ate a few bites and said they were "full." The teenager, who actually did have seconds, confessed that the pepper beef wasn't all that wonderful. And I, who did taste the dish immediately after adding the "contents of the sauce packet," have to admit the dish improves considerably after being simmered. But it still was not what I expected — it tasted just like a packaged mix instead of a take-out meal.

It was quick, it was easy, but it just didn't taste right. I suppose to be fair I really should try the other flavors — but I probably won't. Chinese cuisine "to go" is quicker and easier, and tastes much better.

Organizing finances helpful

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

If you're paying year-end bills and wondering where your money went in 1987, it may be the perfect time to improve your financial record keeping for 1988. The best record keeping system is the one that works for you. Typically this will be a simple system that allows you to easily retrieve information needed.

An effective record-keeping system should provide a means of organizing and filing receipts, cancelled checks, income statements and other financial papers, and a method for summarizing information about income and expenses.

Any one of several basic record-keeping strategies will be helpful:

- Receipt method. Keep, file and sort receipts according to categories of expense, such as food, utilities or entertainment.
- Envelope method. Place the money you have allocated weekly or monthly for each category into an envelope. As you spend the money, write what you spent it for on the envelope.
- Checkbook method. Code each entry in your checkbook according to the cagegory of income or expense.
- Ledger system. Keep detailed daily entries in a ledger. You can buy a recordbook in almost any size at a store, or make your own forms in a spiral notebook.
- Computer system. Computer software is available that allows each income or expense item to be entered after a system of categories is established.

When you use a credit card, be sure to record the individual purchases in the appropriate categories. Recording a single credit card payment for a variety of purchases gives you very little information about how your money is being spent.

None of these methods of keeping track of income and expenses will do much good unless you summarize the transactions on a weekly or monthly basis. However, once you have the summaries they will be invaluable for preparing your taxes at year's end and getting a good grasp on your family finances.

There's no secret to organizing family finances. It's mostly a matter of having the time and discipline to make a record-keeping system work.

BETTER BUSINESS

Investors in precious metals warned

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

The sale of bank financed precious metals is a growing phenomenon that has slipped through the regulatory cracks. This can pose some real risks to investors warns the North American Securities Administrators Association and the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

These outwardly appealing programs allow investors to buy gold, silver or platinum with only a down payment and a bank loan secured by the metal, which is held by the banks. While this off-exchange commodity sales plan lets individuals own the metal with only 20 percent to 30 percent down, the dealers who sell the metal may not disclose a host of hidden costs and charges that can render making a profit difficult, even in times of rising prices.

NASAA's president says, "We are concerned that the metals dealers in these programs are not, or claim not to be, subject to any federal or state regulation; some are outright boiler room artists who tell customers anything to make a sale."

People considering investing in these programs should find out all the facts before buying precious metals such programs. Potential investors should ask that commissions, loan rates and any other charges be explained in writing. They also should know whom they are dealing with.

Alert is a booklet that explains how these sometimes complicated programs work and what potential problems investors face. Among these are the possibility of banks not actually buying and holding the gold and silver, and the lack of redress for investors who are conned by dealers. Alert also tells how to avoid making a bad investment in precious metals.

You may request a copy of Alert by calling 563-1880. Ask for Alert on precious metal sales.

DEAR ABBY

Focus on divorced parents is blurred in wedding photo

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You were wrong, wrong, wrong to tell that woman who is about to marry a divorced man to "grin and bear it" when her fiance takes her to his daughter's wedding, and is asked to stand next to his ex-wife so his daughter can have a picture of her parents together. Abby, they are not together anymore, and the daughter had better live in the present and forget the past.

The man I married was married before. He has two daughters in their teens, and when they marry, I do not intend to stand by and let my husband take a picture with his "ex" and children to preserve the illusion of a "family." They are no longer a family. As the wife of the father of the bride, I should be in the picture — not the ex. — BURNED UP IN NEW CASTLE, PA.

DEAR BURNED: Please simmer down and read on:

DEAR ABBY: A letter in your column struck a nerve with me. I was 12 when my parents' marriage ended in a bitter divorce. When I married at 19, my mother had remarried and my father was soon to wed. My wedding went smoothly. I did not seat my divorced parents together. Neither did I expect them to dance together. All I asked them to do was to stand together for one picture with me and my new husband. I didn't do it to "preserve the illusion" of Mom and Dad together. It was my gift to me as a grown woman standing next to her parents.

DEAR ABBY: After years of searching for "Mr. Right," I have finally found him. We are very much in love and absolutely sure of our feelings for each other.

There is, however, one major obstacle standing in the way of our marriage. He wants children, and I do not. We each have sound reasons for our opinions and we respect each other's views.

Have you or your readers any suggestions? We are in desperate need of some creative thinking, and are quite open-minded. — STUMPED IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR STUMPED: There can be no compromise. Either you must agree to have a family to please him, or he must agree to forgo having children to please you. Either way, you are bound to resent each other. Keep looking. Your "Mr. Right" is wrong for you.

DEAR ABBY: Why do people brag? I have a friend who really overdoes it. She brags about how well her married children are doing, how beautiful their homes are, what fabulous trips they take, and the expensive gifts they give her on all occasions. Of course, her grandchildren are smarter than anybody else's. One of them (she says) has the IQ of a genius.

By the way, before her husband left her for another woman, she bragged about what a great marriage they had.

How can I get her to knock it off? Her constant bragging gets on my nerves. — CAN'T STAND BRAGGERS

DEAR CAN'T: Some people brag to impress or convince others. Your friend was probably bragging to cover her unhappiness. Braggers are a pathetic lot. You can't get people to do — or not do — anything. But you can absent yourself from their company.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. 'Interesting' diet offer proved unreliable

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst News Service

The ad in the national magazine looked interesting.

"We will pay you $1,000 to lose weight," the headline blazed. In smaller print it continued: "If you will help us test our new all natural, safe and effective diet program." And, in even smaller print: "payment made by guaranteed U.S. Government Treasury Bond."

According to the information in the ad, the offer was made by a company calling itself the "Board of Medical Advisors," with a post office box address in Henderson, Nev. The diet it was asking consumers to test was called "The Ultimate Solution Diet Program." It promised to help overweight persons lose weight and inches in record time — and give them $1,000 to boot.

Too good to be true? Probably.

Investigation shows that the Board of Medical Advisors also uses the name Amerdream Corp. In addition to Henderson, it has addresses in Las Vegas, Ogden, Utah and Miami, Fla. It also has a Hawaii address.

According to the Better Business Bureau of South Florida, the Utah address is the fulfillment center, N.I.C.E. corp. The president of Amerdream is Frank J. Sarcone. The BBB says he has previously been associated with the Clinical Testing Center and the Forever Thin Weight Loss Clinic, both engaged in the mail-order sale of diet products. He was also a principal in Millburn Book Corp., which sold mail-order books promoting weight loss.

The director of research for Amerdream's Ultimate Solution Diet Program is Dr. Robert E. Willner. He was program medical director for Clinical Testing Center and the developer of the Pleasure Tablet Plan, a diet program sold by Baker-Buxton Inc., a company which conducted business in Maywood, N.J., under the name Slim for Life. The BBB says Baker-Buxton entered into a 1986 consent agreement with the U.S. Postal Service.

The BBB says the Ultimate Solution Diet Program consists of diet pills, tablets and wafers; puddings, soups and shakes in powder form; a nutritional manual; a motivational cassette tape and a copy of Willner's book, "The Pleasure Principle Diet."

A 30-day supply of the diet product costs $129.95. But if you wish to receive the $1,000 bond, you must order a 60-day supply for $229.90. The U.S. Treasury Bond, according to Amerdream's president has a current market value of between $110 and $130 and matures between 22 and 27 years.

The BBB says complaints on record with Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Miami, Florida Better Business Bureaus have alleged non-receipt of merchandise, non-receipt of the bond offered and delays in receiving refunds when requested.

The bottom line, of course, is — do such diets work?

Probably not, says the BBB.

No ingested product has been proven to cause permanent loss of excess weight without restriction of food intake or without exercise, it says. Some diet aids can even contribute to other health problems.

Agency brings out babies from Nicaragua, Honduras

WHITE SETTLEMENT (AP) — Gary Bennett says an adoption agency he has set up to bring Nicaraguan and Honduran babies to the United States is not built on politics.

"You have two choices," he said. "You leave them and they die. You bring them out and they live. Everybody says it's political. Babies aren't political."

Bennett has spent three years shuttling between this Fort Worth suburb and Honduras, ferrying food to the Nicaraguan rebels and sometimes burying babies who didn't survive the squalid jungle conditions.

Bennett, who gave up his Porsche and two Corvettes to take food and medicine to the rebels and to build a runway in Honduras with Lt. Col. Oliver North's help, said Tuesday that the adoption agency also will care for ailing children in Honduras.

"This isn't a baby business. It's a baby-saving business," said Bennett, whose adoption agency — La Mosquita Coast Child Find, named for the eastern region of Nicaragua and Honduras where the mortality rate reaches 65 percent — was licensed two weeks ago by the Texas Department of Human Services.

Bennett decided to help the rebels in November 1984, after learning that Nicaraguan bullets downed a U.S. helicopter. The former U.S. Navy Seabee officer gave up his work as an air-conditioning contractor to take food, clothing and medicine to the Contras, teach them how to clean their weapons and with North's help, built a runway for planes carrying supplies.

Caseworker tells of abuse

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The family of an 8-month-old baby played sadistic games with her until she died, a social services caseworker says.

Ray Macias Sr. is in jail on murder charges in connection with the Dec. 29 death of Sarah Macias, his niece.

Texas Department of Human Services worker Rhonda Smith testified Wednesday she was told of the abuse by three of the baby's cousins, who said they participated in it.

Ms. Smith told State District Judge Tom Rickhoff that the baby was bitten, pinched, hit with a tennis shoe and subjected to various "games" that included taping her mouth shut and spinning her on the floor so hard that she suffered friction burns. The child had a skull fracture that went from one side of her head over the top to the other side, she said.

Sarah had lived with her uncle, his wife, Guadalupe, and five cousins for about two months after DHS workers attempted to take her from her parents, Albert and Janie Macias, department records indicate.

Doctors say a blow to the head finally killed the tiny girl, although the medical examiner's autopsy isn't finished.

Inmate stabs three officers

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A convicted killer considered the meanest man on death row remains segregated after stabbing three officers who tried to search his cell for weapons, officials say.

Guards at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis I Unit were tipped that James Demouchette was hiding weapons and were trying to search his cell when the incident occurred Wednesday morning, TDC spokesman David Nunnelee said.

"He refused to come out of his cell so they could search it," Nunnelee said. "They went in and he produced a weapon made of fence wire." They also found another similar weapon, he said.

Correctional officer Charles Agee, 26, suffered three puncture wounds to his right thigh and one to a knuckle, while officer Scott Stoughton, 24, was stabbed on the left forearm, Nunnelee said. Both were treated and released from Huntsville Memorial Hospital. Sgt. Roger Barkin, 26, received only a scratch, Nunnelee said.

Demouchette, 32, a San Antonio native who moved to Houston as a teen-ager, was sentenced to death for the 1976 robbery-slaying of two Houston pizza parlor workers. His execution was stayed twice.

Demouchette, a heroin addict nicknamed "Doom," is considered one of the meanest of the 265 death row inmates because of his violent history, prison spokesman Charles Brown said.

Murray-O'Hair files suit

AUSTIN (AP) — Atheist Robin Murray-O'Hair, who was jailed Dec. 15 for refusing to take the "so help me God" oath required for jury duty, has filed a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of that oath and to determine what state law is on taking an oath or affirmation.

Ms. Murray-O'Hair, granddaughter of Atheist leader Madalyn Murray O'Hair, also asked that all judges appointed to hear her case be disqualified because they have taken an oath which contained a prayer or supplication to God.

"I, as an atheist, can't possibly receive a fair hearing from a judge who has professed belief in a diety and sought metaphysical assistance to discharge his legal duties," Ms. Murray-O'Hair said in a statement.

She was summoned for jury duty Dec. 15, but says she refused to take the oath that proceeds questioning of prospective jurors. She said she also refused to take an affirmation, with or without a prayer or supplication, because that, too, was a religious response.

Officials to discuss jails

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements and officials from Midland and 23 other Texas counties meet today to continue looking for ways to relieve overcrowding at county jails packed with prisoners awaiting transfer to state prison.

The Texas Department of Corrections, which is under federal court orders against overcrowding, has been accepting a limited number of new inmates in recent months. That means county jails, particularly in urban areas, have to hold convicted felons until TDC space becomes available.

"I think we have a common problem and exactly how we solve that problem I'm not sure at this point. I don't think they are either," Clements said of the county officials. "It's not just a state problem. It's not just a county problem, and it's not just a federal problem. We're all in the soup together," Clements said.

Yanks jump at chance to sign Clark

NEW YORK (AP) — Start spreading the news: Jack Clark is coming to New York and the Yankees are back in the multimillion-dollar free-agent market.

The Yankees, who built World Series teams by signing Reggie Jackson, Dave Winfield, Goose Goosage and other prominent players, made baseball's biggest off-season move Wednesday. They signed Clark to a two-year contract worth $3 million plus another $1 million in incentives.

"We've had a tradition since Catfish Hunter of bringing in top free agents," Yankees General Manager Lou Piniella said. "Jack is truly one of the superstars of the game. We know he can hit. This is a signing of the magnitude of a Reggie Jackson."

The Yankees still need pitching and might have benefited more by spending their millions on the likes of Jack Morris, Mike Witt or Charlie Leibrandt. But the chance to get Clark from the St. Louis Cardinals proved too tempting for Yankees owner George Steinbrenner.

So when negotiations broke down with the Cardinals during the weekend and Clark's agent, Tom Reich, called Steinbrenner on Monday. By then, the move was imminent, especially because Steinbrenner was upset that the Yankees had been unable to trade for power hitters Dave Parker and Kirk Gibson during the winter meetings.

"George knows how to do a deal," Reich said.

"This is one of the quickest negotiations I've ever been involved in, or will be involved in, as general manager," Piniella said. "I spoke with Jack Clark's agent Monday, we spoke yesterday and signed today."

Clark, 32, is one of baseball's most feared hitters. He had 35 home runs and 106 RBI last season. But he has been injury prone and has spent time on the disabled list the last four seasons.

Clark did not start after Sept. 9 because of an injured right ankle. He pinch hit once in the National League playoffs and was dropped from the Cardinals' World Series roster.

"I've got a clean bill of health, even from the Cardinals' doctors," Clark said. "They were trying to

Cougars felled by New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Gabe Corchiani scored a career-high 25 points and Ledell Eackles came off the bench to add 18 as New Orleans extended its home winning streak to 20 by beating Houston 71-64 Wednesday night.

Corchiani hit 7 of 10 three-pointers to snap the old school record of five he shared with Eackles, who played only 28 minutes and was the only other New Orleans player in double figures.

Rolando Ferreira had 17 points and 11 rebounds for Houston, followed by Richard Hollis with 16 points and Horace Chaney with 14.

New Orleans is now 7-5 and Houston 5-4.

New Orleans had 16 first-half turnovers, but rallied from an early five-point deficit to lead 28-27 at halftime.

Both teams shot 45 percent but New Orleans outrebounded Houston 37-29.

TCU's John Lewis (12) and Baylor's Robert McLemore (22) are having a hard time keeping an eye on the ball Wednesday in the first coaching meeting between the Iba cousins in Fort Worth.

Gene's Bears too much for Moe's Horned Frogs

FORT WORTH (AP) — In the first game pitting the Iba coaching cousins, Darryl Middleton scored 26 points to lead Baylor over Texas Christian 75-61 in both teams' SWC season opener Wednesday night.

The win upped Baylor's record to 10-4 on the season, while Texas Christian fell to 6-6.

The Bears, coached by Gene Iba, were ahead only 27-25 at the half thanks to a pair of Middleton free throws with 27 seconds left. But in the final 20 minutes, Michael Hobbs churned in 18 points and Robert McLemore 10.

Moe Iba's Horned Frogs committed seven turnovers in less than six minutes early in the second half. Opportunistic Baylor converted those Frog miscues into 12 points as the Bears lead quickly ballooned to 41-31.

Texas Christian was led by junior college transfers John Lewis and Tim Chase with 18 points apiece. Lewis also limited Baylor backcourt standout Michael Williams to just six points.

The Bears shot 76 percent in the second half.

TCU's Moe Iba said Middleton's 26 points didn't do as much damage as Hobbs and McLemore's second-half bombing.

"We expected Darryl to get his points because we don't have anybody big enough to stop him," he said. "But then in the second half they started isolating the ball on us, one-on-one, therefore spreading the scoring around."

It was the first coaching meeting ever between the Iba coach cousins, Gene of Baylor and Moe of TCU, but the cousins downplayed the reunion and the family rivalry.

"That's something we will think about and talk about afterward," Gene Iba said.

"To be quite honest about it, I didn't even think about it all day, and I'll bet Gene would say the same thing," said Moe Iba. "But I did spend much of the day trying to figure out how to stop Darryl Middleton, and we still didn't do a very good job of it."

Although Baylor's Iba figured the dominance of Middleton as the difference in the contest, he also credited Hobbs with his "best half of the year."

Tech opens SWC with win

Tors' Mason leads attack with 30

LUBBOCK (AP) — Sophomore guard Jerry Mason scored a career-high 30 points, including six 3-point shots, to lead Texas Tech to a 74-66 win over Rice Wednesday night in the Southwest Conference opener for both teams.

Rice had stayed within four points of the Red Raiders during the final seven minutes of play, but a missed 3-point attempt by Ronald Robertson with 12 seconds left and David Willie's two missed free throws with 10 seconds to play kept the score at 70-66.

Mason, who played high school ball at Lamesa, then sank two free throws to put the game out of reach.

The Red Raiders improved to 6-5 overall and 1-0 in the SWC. The Owls dropped to 3-8 and 0-1.

Mason, whose previous career high was 18 points, scored 17 first-half points to bring the Raiders back from at eight-point deficit with 10:28 left in the first half for a 43-30 halftime lead.

Rice had failed to score a field goal for more than five minutes, during which Tech battled back to take a lead that they did not surrender in the second period.

Former Lamesa great Jerry Mason pulls down a rebound.

Willie led the Owls with 27 points, followed by Robertson with 17.

Todd Duncan scored 15 for Tech, while Sean Gay added 14 before fouling out with 3:57 remaining.

"The intensity level was very good for both teams tonight," said Tech Coach Gerald Myers. "I had seen in scouting Rice that they play hard and never give up. Both teams played hard tonight."

Myers said his team's defense had improved over past outings, as the Raiders' pressure helped hold the Owls to 42 percent shooting in the second half.

Both teams scored big from the 3-point range, each hitting 10 shots from the 19-foot, 9-inch line. Willie scored 21 points from the perimeter, while Mason had 18.

"They (Tech) shot really well and we knew they would," said Rice first-year coach Scott Thompson. "We knew we had to stay in a zone because early on we went man-for-man and they hit nine of 12 shots. They hit the shots they had to."

Razorbacks rout Longhorns

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Redshirt freshman Larry Marks came off the bench and scored 19 points and grabbed eight rebounds to lead Arkansas over Texas 91-62 in the Razorbacks' SWC opener Wednesday night.

Arkansas, now 10-2, went out to a 19-2 lead, holding Texas without a point or rebound for the first 5:48. Texas is 7-7 overall and 1-1 in the SWC.

Tim Scott had 18 for Arkansas and Allie Freeman and Ron Huery added 11 each.

Sophomore Mario Credit started Arkansas' scoring with a layup and later hit a free throw to put Arkansas up 3-0. After a short jumper by Scott, Allie Freeman hit two straight 17-footers to make it 9-0.

A 15-foot jumper by Russell Green at 14:12 was Texas' first score.

Texas made a 13-5 run in the first half to make the score 28-21. SWC scoring leader Travis Mays hit two 3-pointers in that stretch but Texas never got closer. Arkansas scored eight of the first half's final 10 points, with five coming from Marks.

Arkansas stretched its lead in the second half to as many as 31 three times, once on a Cannon Whitby 3-pointer, another time on a steal and layup by Whitby and again on a slam dunk by Marks.

Green led Texas with 16 points as the Longhorns fell to 7-7 overall and 1-1 in the SWC. Mays added 15 for Texas.

It was Arkansas' most lopsided victory over Texas since 1945 when the Razorbacks won 74-38.

A crowd of 6,062 braved more than 7 inches of snow to see Arkansas win its conference opener for the first time under third-year Coach Nolan Richardson.

"The big heroes tonight were the fans," said Richardson. "I told my wife as we were driving here we'd be lucky to have 1,000 fans. That shows what I know about fan support.

Thompson leads Aggies past SMU

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Donald Thompson scored 18 points and grabbed eight rebounds as the Texas A&M Aggies scored a 58-53 victory over Southern Methodist in both teams' SWC opener Wednesday night.

The Aggies upped their season record to 9-6, while SMU fell to 11-3.

Darryl McDonald added 15 points, while Keron Graves got 12 and Doug Dennis 10 for the Aggies, who avenged an 89-66 loss at the hands of the Mustangsa week ago in the Rainbow Classic in Hawaii.

Eric Longino led SMU with 16 points, while Kato Armstrong added 13 and Carlton McKinney 11.

A&M jumped to an early lead, but the Ponies fought back to take a 26-24 advantage at halftime. The Aggies went ahead to stay at 37-36 early in the second half although SMU came within one point four times, the last at 54-53.

Dennis made two free throws with 1:56 remaining to give A&M a 56-53 lead, and no more points were scored until McDonald canned a pair of free throws with four seconds remaining.

Texas A&M coach Shelby Metcalf credited a rejuvenated defense, a patient offense and the Aggie bench for the win.

"They didn't get as many transition baskets as they did in Hawaii and they didn't get many second shots, either," he said. "We showed a lot of patience on offense, and we had some people come off the bench and do the job.

"This was the first time we've had the kind of intensity we need for 40 minutes," Metcalf said. "Now we realize we can do it. This was definitely a big win for us."

The Mustangs didn't play smart basketball, SMU coach Dave Bliss said.

"We allowed the Aggies to do some thing we shouldn't have allowed them to do," he said.

"We've played 13 good games this year and one bad one," he added. "We've got a long way to go as a basketball team, and this ought to take away any ideas of us being a favorite in this conference race."

The game's start was delayed 15 minutes because two of three assigned officials, Woody Mayfield and Mike Kouri, were stranded by the major winter storm that hit Texas Wednesday.

Randy Malazzo of Bryan, who calls high school and junior college games, stepped in help Jimmy Gilbert call the game.

Chaps come up short in Mesa Shoot-Out final

From Staff Reports

MESA, Az. — The third time wasn't the charm as Midland College lost in the finals of the Brown Chevrolet Rotary Shoot-Out here last night 91-83 to Malcolm X College of Chicago.

The Chaps were going for their third consecutive Mesa title, but ran into a quick little team which made few mistakes.

Unlike Tuesday night, the Chaps dug themselves a hole early and never quite found a way to climb out. The Hawks led 14-5 with less than five minutes gone and stretched that to 32-18 before Midland got going. When Hawk John Nance was ejected with 6:54 for hitting Charles "Smokey" McCovery, Midland made a run which cut the lead to three, 43-40. At halftime, MC was down 49-44.

Midland got its first lead, 52-51, with 17:26 left when Calvin Smith connected on a short jumper and got its biggest lead soon after at 60-56. But the Chaps last advantage was 64-63 with 11:25 remaining.

The Chaps stayed within a point or two until the last 8:30, with Stewart Barnett hitting on some driving layups. Then the Hawks used four consecutive Chaparral turnovers to pull away by 12 points, 81-69, with 4:50 left.

Herman "Skeeter" Henry got a basket, but the Chaps missed two lay-ups after steals and then fouled. The Hawks buried their free throws, hitting 10 of 13 in the last two minutes.

The Chaps were down by six with 1:01 left when McCovery made two free throws, but baskets by Billy Ray Smith and Henry weren't enough to offset the lead.

Midland had five players in double figures, led by Billy Ray Smith's 18 points, most of them in the first half. But the Chaps made 21 turnovers and the Hawks just seven, and that was much of the difference in the game. Midland hit a nifty 54.4 percent from the field and held the Hawks to 42.9.

With the loss, Midland is 13-4 returning to conference action in Big Spring next Thursday. The next home date is Jan. 18 against Western Texas.

Johnson County, Kansas, defeated Mesa 69-61 in overtime for the consolation title, Fashion Institute of New York beat Southern Alberta Institute of Technology 67-56 for seventh place, and Cypress College, California, edged Meramec, Missouri, 55-49, for third.

Named to the All-Tournament team from Midland were Barnett and McCovery. The MVP was Melvin Conway of Malcolm X.

TED BATTLES

The best New Year's plan already ruined

The Bowls?

You would have to ask. I was just recovering from the disappointment and focusing on the NFL playoffs, the rest of the Chaparrals season and, most of all, shaking this cold.

Battles

The Mrs. scheduled the trip three months in advance. By noon New Year's Day, I'd be home, sitting in front of the TV, set for a daylong football binge. Who, needs New Year's Eve? What a wife.

Then it happened. Two weeks before departure it was discovered that instead of an hour layover, the connecting flight now took off five minutes before we arrived, or something like that. The Mrs. told the airline they couldn't do that. "We made plans, now this, a four-hour late afternoon layover. Don't you have rules any more?"

Somehow I don't think her protests were sincere. A wait in an airport lobby saved her from waiting hand and foot all day on the unstirring blob in front of the tube.

SO MY bowl day consisted of the last minute of the Auburn-Syracuse game and the last half of Michigan State's Rose Bowl win over USC in the airport bar...plus the first half of Oklahoma-Miami game on a Walkman in the lobby. You can sit just so long making believe the leftover drink of the previous table occupant is yours before feeling uncomfortable. Even a cheapskate has guilt feelings...eventually.

So, all I know is what I read in the papers and for the Southwest Conference victories by Texas over Pitt in the Bluebonnet Bowl and Texas A&M's resounding success against Notre Dame put a pinch of color back in the cheeks of a league that had been bad-mouthed by the press, abused on the field by unruly ruffians, during the regular season, and raiding recruiters between seasons.

Pitt and Notre Dame both enjoyed enviable prominence in the polls during the season and were propelled by Heisman candidate Craig Heywood and Heisman winner Tim Brown. Many probably figured that the Panthers and Irish would win while stifling a yawn in the process.

Leave it to the Cotton Bowl. It wasn't Tommy Lewis coming off the bench to tackle Dicky Moegle, but Tim Brown's rescue of his favorite towel gave the game a distinctive touch.

THE BIG 10 came out of the holidays smelling like a rose, if you'll excuse the expression. Michigan State finally won one for the Big 10 in Pasadena and Michigan even won in the Hall of Fame Bowl against Alabama the next day.

The only thing is the way USC got to the big saucer in the Arroyo Seco.

Picture this, if you will. When UCLA and USC met in the Coliseum back in November the host berth in the Rose Bowl was at stake. You can imagine the incentive that must have been for the Bruins. If they beat the Trojans, they could play another game on the field where they play all their home games.

If they lost, horrors. The dreaded alternative was the Aloha Bowl and, what, two weeks? a month? in Hawaii.

Of course, the nature of the series is such that even the prospect of playing yet another game in the Rose Bowl would not negate an all out effort by the Bruins. Still, there are always those who suspect the worst.

The Big Eight, with the No. 1, No. 2 regular season complex, was blanked by independents Miami and Florida State, which perhaps hints that the Big Eight schedule is not the way to prepare for top grade opposition in post-season play. Nothing improves a team like a little competition and a scare or two.

The rest of the world saw it all in living room comfort. The closest I came to a bowl was coming off the plane and seeing all those crimson-clad folks with the long faces waiting for their flight back to Lincoln, Omaha, Oxford and South Platte.

Happy New Year? Ba-humbug.

Molitor re-signs with Brewers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Paul Molitor's willingness to drop a demand for a three-year deal cleared the way for agreement on a $3.2 million contract between the 11-year veteran and the Milwaukee Brewers.

"I can't blame them for wanting to do that (have a two-year deal) since I've only averaged 120-some games the last five years," Molitor said Wednesday after agreeing to a two-year contract that also includes incentive clauses.

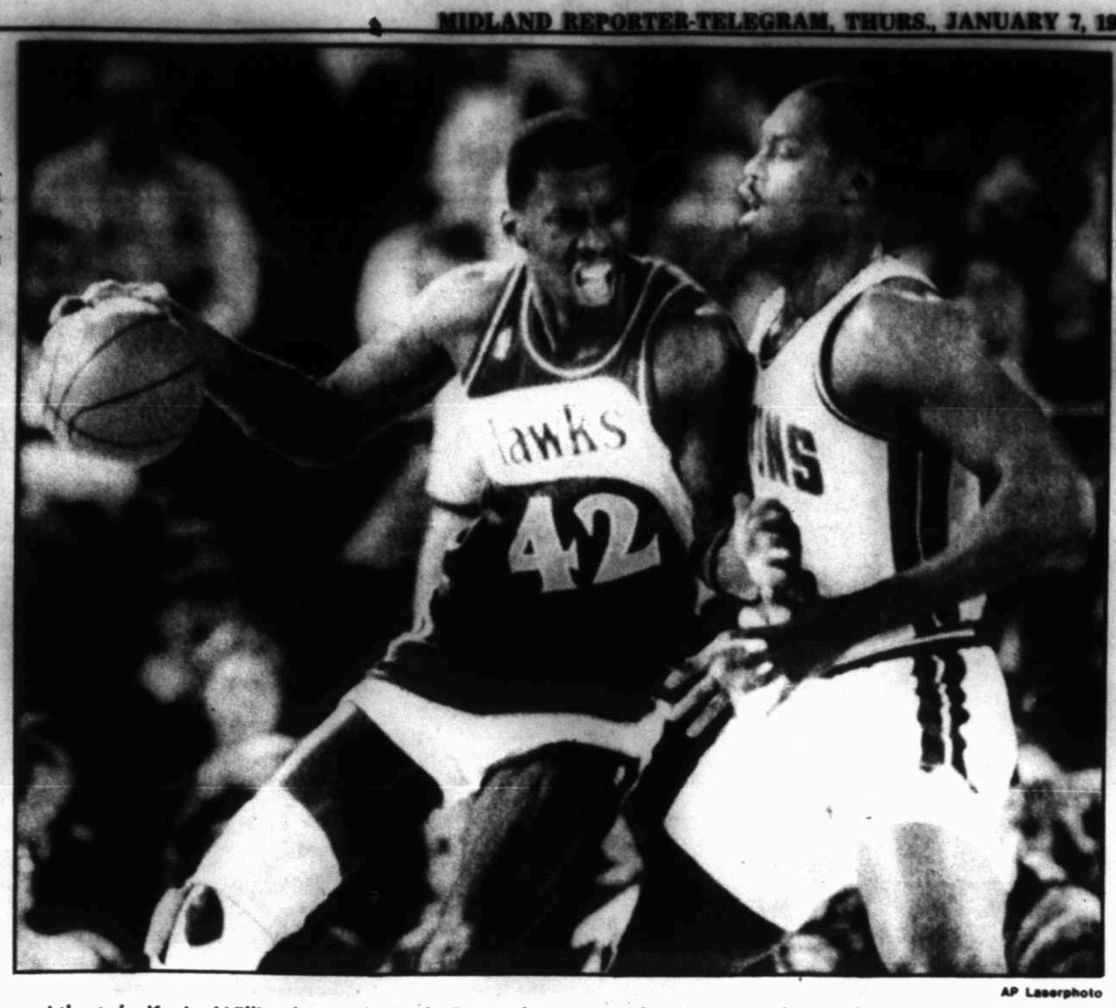

"It's a very fair contract," said Molitor, who filed for free agency after batting .353, leading the American League with 41 doubles and 114 runs scored and putting together a 39-game hitting streak.

Had Molitor, who had refused salary arbitration, not signed with the Brewers by Friday, he would have been barred from further talks with the club until May 1.

Brewers General Manager Harry Dalton said he entered the negotiations optimistic that Molitor would be signed, "but there is always the possibility" that he could go to another team.

Molitor said he didn't contact any other team, nor did any get in touch with him, probably because he had said that he wanted to remain in Milwaukee, where he began his career.

Molitor has a career batting average of .297 with 95 home runs, 465 runs batted in, 790 runs scored and 276 stolen bases in 1,128 games. He set club records last season with the .353 batting average and 45 stolen bases.

Showtiming Lakers streak to rout Mavs

Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The NBA's stars of "Showtime" are on their longest winning spree since 1978.

But the Los Angeles Lakers, who ran their victory string to 12 straight with a 103-89 win over Dallas Wednesday night, say the streak isn't due to razzle-dazzle basketball.

"Our defense is responsible for this streak," said Laker guard Byron Scott, who had 28 points as Los Angeles rallied from an 82-74 deficit in the final six minutes against the Mavericks.

"I thought it was fortunate we weren't 20 down," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "(James) Worthy started it with a couple of blocked shots and everyone contributed defensively in the second half."

Once their defense helped them get rolling, the defending NBA champion Lakers reeled off a 29-7 string in the closing moments to win going away.

"Dallas is a good team. In the first period, we ran extremely well, but they got back into the game and we got no opportunities," Riley said.

"We are not at the level of the Lakers yet," Dallas Coach John MacLeod said. "At the end of the game they forced poor shots, quick shots and bad shots. We lost our poise and stopped executing and completely broke down defensively."

The Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had 21 points, broke an 85-85 tie with a slam-dunk at the 3:32 mark.

"The Mavericks are one of the big teams in the Western Conference and I'm sure we'll see them in the playoffs, so I guess this was an important win," Abdul-Jabbar said.

Aguirre scored 29 points for Dallas. Roy Tarpley and Sam Perkins added 14 each.

Nuggets 98, Nets 93

Alex English's 35 points pushed him over the 20,000 point mark in his career and led Denver over New Jersey.

The Nets built a 58-39 lead late in the second period and was still ahead 60-47 at the half. But Denver rallied behind the defense of T.R. Dunn and 11 points by English to take a 79-77 lead.

Then Jay Vincent went to work, scoring 11 of his 21 points in the final 12 minutes to wrap up the Nuggets' victory.

SuperSonics 110, Rockets 95

Tom Chambers scored a career-high 46 points and pulled down eight rebounds as Seattle defeated Houston, snapping the Rockets' four-game winning streak. Xavier McDaniel added 22 points and 12 rebounds for the Sonics, who won for the 11th straight time on their home court.

NBA Roundup

Pistons 90, Hawks 87

Isiah Thomas scored six of his 18 points in the final 4:32 as Detroit snapped Atlanta's six-game winning streak. The victory avenged Detroit's 81-71 loss to the Hawks a night earlier in Atlanta and moved the Pistons to within 1½ games of the first-place Hawks in the Central Division.

Thomas hit a jumper with 1:07 left to give Detroit an 88-86 lead. After Atlanta's John Battle made one of two free throws with 48 seconds left, Detroit's Joe Dumars sank two free throws with six seconds left to cap the scoring.

76ers 116, Jazz 93

Cliff Robinson's 25 points and Charles Barkley's 23 paced Philadelphia as the 76ers handed Utah its third straight defeat. Robinson scored 21 of his points in the second half and triggered a 14-0 Philadelphia run late in the fourth quarter to end a Utah threat.

Robinson also held Utah's top scorer, Karl Malone, to 12 points, less than half his 25.2 average. John Stockton led the Jazz with 14 points.

Cavaliers 116, Clippers 100

Brad Daugherty scored 29 points as Cleveland handed the Los Angeles Clippers their eighth consecutive defeat. The victory was Cleveland's third straight and evened the Cavs' record at 15-15.

The Cavaliers scored the last eight points of the first half to lead 53-46, then built the lead to 88-71 after three quarters behind 12 points by Daugherty and seven by John Williams. Cleveland coasted to its seventh triumph in 10 games as the team led by at least 12 points throughout the fourth quarter.

Celtics 117, Knicks 108

Larry Bird scored 32 of his 41 points in the first half and Boston survived a late New York surge.

Boston led 107-95 with 3:54 left. Then Johnny Newman, who scored 24 points, hit a field goal and a 3-point basket and Gerald Wilkins dunked the ball after a steal, cutting the lead to 107-102 with 2:07 remaining. But the Knicks were forced to foul and came no closer as Boston scored eight of its last 10 points on free throws.

Hoyas, Panthers fighting for position

Associated Press

The Big East race always is a fight to the finish. And No. 2 Pittsburgh and No. 14 Georgetown got started with the fists early.

Both benches emptied Wednesday night during Georgetown's 62-57 victory in the conference opener for each team.

Mark Tillmon, Georgetown's leading scorer, was ejected midway through the first half after scuffling with Nate Bailey and Jerome Lane.

The game later turned into a battle of Charles Smiths. Charles Smith of the Georgetown scored 13 of his 20 points in the second half; Charles Smith of the Panthers, the more heralded of the two players, finished with 12 points after missing the final 13:44 of the first half with three fouls.

The Hoyas improved to 10-1. Pitt is 9-1.

Kentucky 93, Mississippi St. 52

Winston Bennett led No. 1 Kentucky's balanced scoring with 17 points.

The Wildcats ran to a 14-2 lead and shot 70 percent from the field in building a 55-17 halftime margin. Kentucky is 10-0 overall and 3-0 in the Southeastern Conference.

College Roundup

North Carolina 76, Fordham 67

Scott Williams scored the first five points in overtime and J.R. Reid finished with 23 as No. 4 North Carolina got past Fordham.

The host Tar Heels, 10-1, played without starting guards Jeff Lebo and Ranzino Smith, both slightly injured in practice. Fordham, 5-6, forced the overtime at 65 on Greg Pedro's two foul shots in the final seconds but was overmatched in the extra period.

Temple 84, Pennsylvania 50

Mike Vreeswyk scored 20 points and Mark Macon 19 as No. 6 Temple raced to a 24-0 lead and trounced its Philadelphia city rival.

The Owls, 9-0 and off to their best start since the 1978-79 team won its first 11 games, were ahead 31-2 and coasted to a 52-30 halftime bulge.

Duke 107, Miami, Fla., 69

Danny Ferry scored 23 points and for host No. 9 Duke.

The Blue Devils, 8-1, led 30-22 at halftime and scored the first 10 points of the second half. They forced 26 turnovers and made just 15.

Michigan 92, Northwestern 69

Gary Grant had 31 points and moved into third place on No. 11 Michigan's all-time scoring list as the Wolverines won at Northwestern.

Loy Vaught added 18 points for Michigan, which won its 11th straight game and is 12-1. It was the Big Ten opener for both schools.

Iowa 84, Indiana 70

B.J. Armstrong scored 27 points and Kent Hill 16, sparking a second-half rally that led No. 16 Iowa over visiting No. 12 Indiana in a Big Ten opener.

The Hawkeyes trailed by as many as 16 points in the first half and Indiana still led 33-26 at halftime. But Armstrong scored 17 points in the second half and Hill got all of his points in the final 20 minutes.

Auburn 72, Florida 67

Chris Morris scored 26 points and led depleted Auburn over visiting No. 15 Florida in the Southeastern Conference.

Kansas 90, American 69

Marvin Branch scored 20 points and Danny Manning 18 as No. 18 Kansas won its 53rd straight game at Allen Fieldhouse, the longest home-winning streak in the nation.

They called him Pistol

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The first thing you noticed were the eyes, sad eyes, moist eyes, unfulfilled eyes. BilKeane has made a career of painting sad-eyed clowns, waifs who have seen too much, but Pete Maravich was not merely a Keane painting, he was a man trying to go straight.

He would describe his career in terms of the championship ring he never won, but behind that was the respect he never gained, the friends that came and went, the wild times he tried to forget.

When it was over, Pete Maravich tried to live by disciplines as demanding as the inspired anarchy he once practiced on the court. He became a vegetarian, then a Christian, and his family was everything to him. The eyes stayed sad, but the commitment was there. He was not a preacher but he was a practitioner.

He said he was not hooked on basketball, but he surfaced in 1984 to play in his first old-timers' game at the age of 36. He didn't need this, he said. He had his camps but they were mostly to teach nutrition and religion and the fun of playing ball.

He would show up for subsequent old-timers' gatherings, lean, almost scrawny, the result of lengthy fasts and limited diets. His eyes looked haunted above the ancient mariner mustache, but he could still look one way and flick a soft lead pass the other way.

PLAYING FOR fun at the Church of the Nazarene in Pasadena, Calif., Pete Maravich fell dead of a heart attack Tuesday at the age of 40. His mother, Helen, had been an apparent suicide in 1974 and his father, Press, who was also his college coach, had died last April, a month before Pete was inducted into the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, Mass.

The basketball was with him nearly all of those 40 years. He even carried the ball to the movies, sitting on the aisle so he could bounce the ball at intermission.

IN HIS waking hours, Pistol Pete was fearless. None of the coaches at his three high schools could control him, and his college coach didn't try. Press, a rugged old bomber pilot and pro basketball player from the coal-mine country of western Pennsylvania, moved over to LSU and more or less told his son to sign the grant-in-aid to LSU. As a coach, Press Maravich told the other players to let the boy with the long hair and the floppy socks do whatever he felt like.

Pistol Pete led the nation in scoring for three straight seasons, and he later led the National Basketball Association in scoring, too. He was expected to save the Atlanta franchise, and then the New Orleans franchise, but he could not even stabilize himself.

Maravich admitted he had been out of control during much of his professional career. He knew other players resented him because he was allowed to do things on the court that they were not allowed to try. Gifted black players were urged, compelled, to play within a system but Maravich was the great white hope of two southern franchises.

THE COMBINATION of freedom and responsibility made him old before his time. He once suffered from Bell's Palsy, a disturbance of the facial nerves. He moved from Atlanta to New Orleans to Utah to Boston. He was willing to subordinate himself to the Boston Celtics' way of doing things, but they cut him in training camp of 1980. He was 33.

"I was always sick when I played," he said four years later. "I'd have a drink and stay up late. One year in camp I had something wrong with me, and my roommate, I don't even remember his name, said, 'You have to change the way you eat.' I didn't know what he was talking about. I figured you could eat anything. He had 50 bottles of vitamins on his dresser. He didn't make the team — but he'll probably live to be 100."

Maravich had quietly given up eating red meat in 1976-77 when he led the league in scoring. Later he gave up chicken and fish and dairy products, too.

Then he got religion, although he shied away from the subject of his conversion, unless pressed. For the first time in his life, Pistol Pete was subdued, cautious. He had set too many bonfires in his life. Now he was trying to be one small, steady candle for his wife, Jackie, and their two sons, Jaeson and Joshua.

In recent years, he ran his basketball camps without regard to profit, saying he had salted away some money from his playing days. He made the campers dribble and pass the ball behind their backs. He once said these moves were "fundamentals." In his final years, there was still room for a gaudy pass in the fundamental vision of Pistol Pete.

CLARK

beat me down about the injury, but I'm going to be healthy."

Clark said his decision to leave St. Louis was based primarily on the Cardinals' attitude toward keeping him. Clark rejected salary arbitration and the Cardinals had until midnight Friday to re-sign him or lose that right until May 1. Other free agents who rejected salary arbitration from their teams and are still facing that deadline are Gary Gaetti, Charlie Leibrandt, Dave Smith, Bill Gullickson, Atlee Hammaker, John Candelaria, Danny Darwin and Larry Andersen.

Reich hedged when asked whether Clark's signing would loosen the free-agent market, which has been in a freeze since the winter of 1985.

"I'm not saying this is a breakthrough," Reich said. "But it is part of an evolving change. Markets tend to correct themselves."

Reich said no other teams made firm offers for Clark, although the Los Angeles Dodgers had expressed mild interest.

Clark was paid $1.3 million last season in the final year of a four-year contract. He will get $1.5 million per year with incentives worth $500,000 each season. The bonus money is hinged on the number of games he plays.

Clark would receive an additional $100,000 if he played 110 games. He would get another $100,000 each for reaching levels of 120, 130, 140 and 145 games.

By joining the Yankees, Clark got $250,000 from the Cardinals because of a clause in his previous contract that called for a quarter-million dollars if St. Louis did not re-sign him.

On Tuesday night, the Cardinals offered a similar $3 million, two-year contract after learning of the Yankees' interest.

"If they (the Cardinals) had made the same offer earlier, it would have been done," Clark said. "But it was too late."

St. Louis General Manager Dal Maxvill, at a press conference after Clark's signing was announced, said the Cardinals' last offer was a two-year contract at $1.6 million per season with an additional $100,000 for appearing in 120, 130 and 140 games. There was also a signing bonus of $250,000 plus standard award bonuses which could be earned.

"If Clark would have preferred, we offered an alternative contract which would have yielded Jack a two-year guaranteed contract of $1.75 million for each season, without regard to number of appearances, plus a $250,000 signing bonus and standard award bonuses," Maxvill said.

But Clark said the Cardinals had plenty of time to work out a new deal and failed to do so.

Clark led the NL with a .597 slugging percentage, a .459 on-base percentage and 136 walks. He batted .286 in 131 games.

"I'm coming over here to do some hitting," Clark said. "I'm really excited to be around guys like a Mattingly, a Rickey Henderson, a Winfield."

In 13 NL seasons, Clark hit .276 with 229 homers and 811 RBI. The Cardinals hit only 94 home runs last season and Clark was their only power source.

Dollar rises without Fed action

NEW YORK (AP) — After a stunning three-day surge, the dollar slipped lower against most other major currencies today as caution returned to foreign exchange markets.

The dollar was up sharply against the Japanese yen in Tokyo, rising to 128.95 yen from 127.13 yen late Wednesday, although it closed below its high for the day.

The same factors cited in the dollar's climb Wednesday in Europe and New York were cited in today's Tokyo activity — coordinated central-bank intervention and reports of a secret agreement among Japan, the United States and West Germany to maintain the dollar at between 125 and 140 yen.

But the dollar fell in Europe, trading at 1.6435 West German marks, down from 1.6500, and also declining against other currencies. Dealers in Europe and Tokyo said investors were becoming wary in advance of next week's scheduled release of U.S. trade figures for November, and experts warned a new assault on the dollar could come if the trade numbers are worse than expected.

On Wednesday, the report of a pact among the United States, Japan and West Germany dominated trading.

The lack of official comment on the report suggested to many traders that it was credible, and they scoured the market for dollars in a hectic buying spree. Skeptics were compelled to do likewise when the dollar's value jumped.

"Traders are a little scared, so they're not inclined to press the dollar lower, especially when the central banks have shown their strong intention to intervene," said Gary Dorsch, senior money market analyst at LNS Financial Group Inc. in Chicago.

Others said the currency market's behavior Wednesday reflected the heavy dollar-buying by the Federal Reserve and its counterparts in Japan and Western Europe earlier in the week.

"You had the central banks coming in Monday and Tuesday, and that really provided direction to the market," said James Hohorst, managing director of foreign exchange at Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. in New York. "If the dollar fell, they just pushed it back up, they were in the driver's seat."

In late New York trading Wednesday, the dollar gained nearly 1.5 West German pfennigs to equal about 1.64 marks, and gained 1.45 yen to equal about 129 yen. On New Year's Eve, the dollar was worth 1.57 marks and 121.10 yen.

Despite the dollar's rebound, strategists said the currency faces an enormous test Jan. 15 when the Commerce Department releases November trade deficit figures. The monthly announcement has become a fixation with the markets because it is considered a major reflection of U.S. economic strength.

When the department said last month that the October deficit had swelled to a monthly record of $17.63 billion, traders sold dollars relentlessly in the belief that the Reagan administration would let the currency fall in order to make American goods cheaper and more competitive.

"If the November number is acceptable, then it's possible the dollar can maintain current levels," said Robert Hatcher, vice president on the corporate foreign exchange desk at Barclay's Bank PLC in New York. "If it's worse, that means the central banks will have to get their boxing gloves on."

Wednesday's rise in the dollar again helped the stock market, though not as much as in the previous two sessions. The Dow Jones industrial average, up 92.67 points Monday and Tuesday, added 6.30 points to close at 2,037.80. Broader indices also rose slightly, but the volume of trading was relatively light.

Imported goods' prices soar as dollar tumbles

NEW YORK (AP) — American consumers aren't feeling the full brunt of the dollar's nearly three-year decline despite big price rises for items such as cutlery, cameras and china.

Imported coffee, fruits and vegetables are cheaper now than when the dollar peaked in early 1985. It costs $18.95 for a bottle of Moet & Chandon champagne on New York's fashionable Upper East Side, but that's only $1 more than in the fall of 1986.

A cheaper dollar makes imports more expensive, but fears of a round of serious import-price inflation have eased in recent days along with the dollar's rebound from its depressed level of the final days of 1987.

The only drawback to the modest import price increases is that it means the falling dollar is not helping U.S. manufacturers combat the flood of imports as much as expected.

AIR TRAVEL

Local carriers pass with flying colors

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Airlines and Southwest Airlines are the leaders in on-time performance after three months of government scrutiny, while Northwest and Delta are at the bottom of the latest rankings.

The Transportation Department's consumer scorecard for November, which was released Wednesday, showed American and Southwest as the only airlines landing more than 80 percent of their flights within 15 minutes of schedule. The two carriers were first and second in September and October as well.

Overall, the 14 airlines checked by the department reported that 76 percent of their flights arrived on time during November, about the same as in September but somewhat lower than October's 80.6 percent.

In the three months the ratings have been compiled, Northwest has been among the tardiest carriers. The airline, which also has ranked among the carriers with the most passenger complaints, was next to last in September, moved to 11th in October and dipped back to second from the bottom in November.

Delta Air Lines consistently ranks among the carriers with the fewest complaints against it by passengers (fifth best among 19 airlines during 1987), but its on-time record took a nose dive to the bottom in November, trailing the other 13 airlines.

Delta flights arrived on time 70.1 percent of the time during November. The airline has ranked among the half-dozen tardiest airlines in each of the three months and in November also had the highest percentage of chronically late flights that arrived late at least 80 percent of the time.

USAir and Pacific Southwest Airlines, which earlier this year was purchased by USAir but operates independently, also have fared poorly in the on-time competition. USAir was last in September, PSA was last in October and neither has moved higher than 10th.

Piedmont Airlines was among the top five carriers in both September and October but dropped to 12th in November. Its on-time performance fell from better than 80 percent to 73.2 percent.

Continental Airlines dropped from third behind American and Southwest with a better than 81 percent on-time record during the first two months to 9th in November with 74.5 percent of its flights arriving promptly.

Meanwhile, the number of chronically late flights declined from 150 flights in September to 71 in November.

Nevertheless, 13 flights during November were still late nine out of 10 times and one flight — Delta 943 from Cincinnati to Jackson, Miss. — arrived late each of the 28 times it flew.

One out of every four flights arrived late at the 27 airports for which airport-by-airport statistics were reported.

Department of Transporation records for December show an increase in consumer complaints for the first time in four months. The large number of holiday travellers, like these at Dallas-Fort Worth International, may have boosted the totals.

Officials: Texas won on strength of proposal

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin could become an international hub of electronic wizardry now that Sematech has announced it will become the city's second national semiconductor consortium, officials say.

Sematech and the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. will complement each other, University of Texas Chancellor Hans Mark told a news conference Wednesday.

Texas, which lured MCC in 1982, beat out 11 other states to win Sematech after a months-long competition that ended Wednesday.

"MCC worries about computer architecture and software, whereas Sematech worries about the hardware," Mark said. "With these two organizations, we have in this town the potential to become the center of electronic manufacturing and electronic technology in the world."

The Sematech consortium was conceived to develop and test advanced manufacturing processes, materials and equipment for the U.S. semiconductor industry. It also is supposed to help the United States regain its edge in competing with the Japanese.

As the basis of transistors and other electronic components, semiconductors are the heart of computers, electronic consumer products and contemporary military weapons systems.

"Frankly, I think most of the things they (MCC and Sematech) will do together we don't even envison yet," former MCC head Bobby Inman said. "You'll find that they'll be out at the leading edge of what's happening in this country."

Charles Sporck, Sematech board chairman and president of National Semiconductor Corp., noted that a number of companies are members both Sematech and MCC.

"The time is past when the United States can afford to run multiple duplications of its efforts in the area of (research and development)," he said. "We clearly are going to logically work together to avoid that duplication."

Texas won Sematech because it had a solid proposal supported strongly by state officials, Sporck and other Sematech officials said.

"We ended up choosing Texas for a whole bunch of balanced reasons," Sporck said. "One very major one was the level of enthusiasm and support that we found across the whole broad spectrum of entities in Texas."

Sporck was joined at a news conference by Gov. Bill Clements, U.S. Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin, and officials of the Austin Chamber of Commerce and UT.

"This is a home run, believe me," Clements said. "This is a great day for Texas and for Sematech."

Although Sporck called Texas "the best of the best," he said the other 11 finalist states also offered strong proposals and will be awarded $50,000 planning grants to submit proposals for university "centers of excellence" for semiconductor research.

Other finalists were Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oregon and Wisconsin.

Heating oil report dampens futures

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices have edged lower, led by a report that the nation's heating oil supplies have grown more than expected.

Contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate, settled at $17.82 per barrel at the New York Mercantile Exchange Wednesday. That was down 3 cents from Tuesday's close.

February contracts for wholesale heating oil, which had jumped 3.6 cents Monday and Tuesday, fell 0.11 cent to 53.48 cents a gallon, while contracts for February delivery of wholesale unleaded gasoline rose by 0.27 cent to 46.14 cents a gallon.

Late Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute released statistics showing that stockpiles of distillates — which include heating oil and diesel fuel — had grown by a significant 5.5 million barrels last week over the previous week.

Light trucks hit record sales in '87; Cars off

DETROIT (AP) — Domestic and foreign automakers sold an estimated 14.9 million cars and light trucks in the United States in 1987, down 7.1 percent from the previous year's record of 16 million automakers reported.

Light truck sales reached a record 4.7 million, or 1.9 percent more than in 1986, when sales reached 4.57 million. Automakers said Wednesday they sold an estimated 10.2 million cars, down 10.7 percent from 11.4 million in 1986.

Brokers decry reporting discipline history

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Securities and Exchange Commission has been urged to rid the securities industry of "bad apples" by requiring brokers to disclose their disciplinary record to potential customers.

Edward Brodsky, an attorney representing disgruntled investors, told commissioners Wednesday that before customers entrust their life savings to a broker, they ought to be told if the broker ever acted improperly.

Executives of Wall Street firms denounced the proposal, saying a requirement to disclose even a minor disciplinary action would amount to a de facto lifetime suspension from the securities business.

Pickens to bankroll Singer takeover bid

NEW YORK (AP) — The partnership led by oilman T. Boone Pickens has agreed to help provide financing for investor Paul Bilzerian's $1.06 billion takeover of Singer Co., a group led by Bilzerian announced.

The agreement by Pickens' Mesa Holding Limited Partnership to provide up to $150 million in junior subordinated financing for the $50-a-share buyout offer completes commitments for the financing needed to complete the deal, the Bilzerian group said Wednesday.

Reagan signs farm credit bill despite faults

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has signed the Farm Credit System rescue bill with misgivings, saying some provisions foster a tendency to put federal props under the agricultural economy.

While finding fault with some aspects of legislation to bail out as much as $4 billion in federally guaranteed bonds for the debt-ridden credit system, Reagan said Wednesday that the measure "ensures that the farm credit system will continue as a principal source of private credit to America's farmers."

DEC, Wang drop out of Air Force bidding

BOSTON (AP) — Digital Equipment Corp. and Wang Laboratories Inc. have decided to drop out of the bidding race for a lucrative Air Force computer contract, claiming the $4.5 billion deal unfairly favors American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The two Massachusetts companies announced their decision Wednesday.

The successful bidder, to be named by September, will provide more than 20,000 mid-size computers with printers, software and maintenance to the Air Force, Army and other defense entities throughout the world.

Loffland files reoganization plan

From Staff Reports

TULSA — Loffland Brothers Co. has filed a plan of reorganization with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, Loffland officials announced.

Under the terms of the plan, all claims other than those of financial institutions and Loffland's parent company, Kendavis Holding Co., are to be paid in full upon consummation of the plan. Financial institutions are to be paid $3.115 million in cash and are to receive 18 percent of Loffland's stock upon consummation. KHC, which now owns 99.7 percent of Loffland, will make a capital contribution of debt owed it by Loffland and will retain 99.7 percent of the new equity. Minority shareholders will continue to own shares, but those will be diluted by the 18 percent provided the financial institutions.

In addition, Loffland's two subsidiaries now in Chapter 11, Loffland Brothers Eastern Hemisphere, Inc. and Loffland Brothers (Singapore) Pte, Ltd., are covered by the filing.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Market-based bond rates shift every six months

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I purchased some Series EE, U.S. Savings Bonds, in October 1986, when the interest rate on such bonds was 7.5 percent. I paid $50 for each bond, which has "$100" printed on it. I suspect that is what I will get when the bonds mature. I plan to hold them only five years. Will I reap $100 per bond in five years?

Doyle

A. Not unless interest rates in the marketplace skyrocket. Like all EE bonds issued from November 1982 through October 1986, yours accumulate interest at a 7.5 percent guaranteed annual rate. But interest can accrue at a higher "market-based" rate, which changes every six months.

At their guaranteed rates, EE bonds slightly more than double in value during their initial maturity periods. EEs issued from November 1982 through October 1986 have 10-year maturities. An EE purchased for $50 during that time span will be worth at least $104.44 when it reaches maturity a decade later.

After five years, each of your particular bonds will be worth at least $72.28.

EEs issued since November 1986 have a 6 percent guaranteed annual rate and mature in 12 years. EEs issued before November 1982 have guaranteed rates ranging from 8.77 percent to 9 percent and mature in either eight, nine or 11 years — depending on their exact issue date.

The market-based rate, which is 7.17 percent from Nov. 1, 1987, through April 30, 1988, won't help you during this period, because your bonds have a 7.5 percent guaranteed interest accumulation rate.

But it will increase the value of those EE bonds and some E bonds that have 6 percent guaranteed rates. E bonds that entered extended maturity periods after October 1986 had their guaranteed rate cut to 6 percent.

Q. A member of my family recently sold all her stocks and purchased EE savings bonds. I suspect she has locked her money away for an unnecessarily long time. How long must she wait before being able to cash in those bonds?

A. Six months. EE bonds can be redeemed a half year after their issue dates.

But it is foolish to buy EEs and cash them in six months later. The rate at which guaranteed interest accrues on newly issued EE bonds starts low and gradually builds up. On the EEs now being sold, the guaranteed rate is only 4.16 percent for the first six months. That rate does not reach 6 percent until the bonds are held for five years.

And the market-based rate, which can exceed the guaranteed rate, does not apply until five years after the bonds were issued.

Summed up, EE bonds should be purchased only if you plan to keep them for at least five years.

Q. You explained that Series E bonds issued before May 1952 reached final maturity and stopped accruing interest 40 years after their issue dates. You added that other E bonds are scheduled to reach final maturity anywhere from 39 years, eight months, to 25 years after issuance.

We own E bonds issued from 1954 through 1972. When will they reach final maturity?

A. That depends on each bond's issue date. For issue dates from May 1952 through January 1957, final maturity is 39 years, eight months; from February 1957 through May 1969, it's 38 years, 11 months; from June 1969 through November 1965, it's 37 years, nine months; from December 1965 through May 1969, it's 27 years; for June 1969 through November 1973 it's 25 years, 10 months; from December 1973 through June 1980, it's 25 years.

Confusing? You bet it is. The U.S. Treasury department should get off its duff and bring some common sense to the Savings Bond program by granting extended maturities, so that all E bonds would reach final maturity after exactly 40 years.

GAS is still our middle name.

We are pleased to announce that Perry Gas Companies, Inc. has changed its name to Parker Gas Companies, Inc.

For seven years, we've been part of the Parker Drilling family and yet not many people were aware of it. For over 50 years, Parker has been a world leader in the energy industry. We felt it was time people knew we were part of this strong and respected international company.

But our business is still gas - gas gathering, treating, processing, transporting, marketing and measuring. So while we're pleased to be called Parker, we don't want people to forget that the Permian Basin is still home and that Gas is still our middle name.

IMPORTS

Even though the Japanese yen rose 70 percent against the dollar in the two years from October 1985 to October 1987, the price of a typical car from Toyota Motor Corp. climbed only 24 percent.

Toyota's basic four-door Corolla sedan rose 24.5 percent during the period to a suggested list price of $8,896 from $7,148. The 1988 model, though, has a fancier interior, longer wheelbase, better suspension and more efficient engine. How does Toyota do it?

"Japan's nothing but a big factory. Raw materials come in at one end and finished products come out at the other, and raw materials prices have gone down," said James Olson, spokesman for Toyota Motor Sales USA Inc. in Torrance, Calif.

Toyota also cut overhead costs, froze hiring and, Olson said, took "a huge hit in profits" to maintain its U.S. sales. Toyota's U.S. market share actually rose by the end of 1987 to 6 percent from 5.6 percent a year earlier, he said.

French winemakers have tried to hold the line on their prices in order to hang onto their share of the U.S. market.

Even the modest French price increases have given an edge to winemakers in the United States as well as emerging winemaking countries such as Australia and Chile, whose currencies have fallen or steadied against the dollar.

Coffee prices are down 21 percent since early 1985, partly because of better crops and partly because the dollar has risen against currencies of the Latin American nations that produce the beans.

Sugar, likewise, is up a scant 7 percent, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics data for the period from March 1985 to September 1987.

Consumer import prices overall rose 21 percent during the 2½-year period, the agency said. Import price increases for the months since September will not be available until the end of January.

Studies finally confirming metabolism, weight link

Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Scientists had long suspected but had been unable to prove that the potential for getting fat is linked to the body's metabolic rate — how fast calories are burned to produce energy.

Now, however, federally funded studies of one of the country's chronically overweight populations, the Pima Indians of southern Arizona, are confirming that fat people are likely to have a "slow" metabolism. Lean people are likely to have faster metabolism.

The same studies also found that how much a person "fidgets" — stays active while at rest — is linked to his metabolic rate and therefore his weight. Fidgeting probably is inherited.

"These results among the Pimas can be applied to the general population," said Clifton Bogardus, chief of clinical diabetic research at the National Institutes of Health facility in Phoenix.

The key to proving the link between metabolism and weight was the use of a specially designed, high-technology device known as a respiratory chamber, in which a person's metabolic activity can be measured over 24 hours.

Using that chamber to monitor several hundred Pimas, NIH scientists found that the risk of gaining extra weight is about 70 percent for those with low metabolic rates, compared to 10 percent to 30 percent for those with normal or high metabolic rates.

Metabolic rate is defined as how fast a body processes food, burns calories and creates and uses energy, Bogardus said.

"A low metabolic rate over a 24-hour period is a significant predictor of obesity," he said. "But it is not the only factor.

"No matter who you are or what your metabolic rate, the fact is if you eat too much you will get fat," said Bogardus. "Your metabolic rate is part of the problem (of being overweight), but it is not the only reason people get fat."

People with low metabolic rates "simply have to eat less" than those with higher rates, "or they have to find a way to increase their energy expenditure," he explained. "How much people need to eat varies greatly from individual to individual."

Although it would seem that a person with a slow metabolism would have lower energy demands and thus less of an appetite, the opposite may be true, said Bogardus.

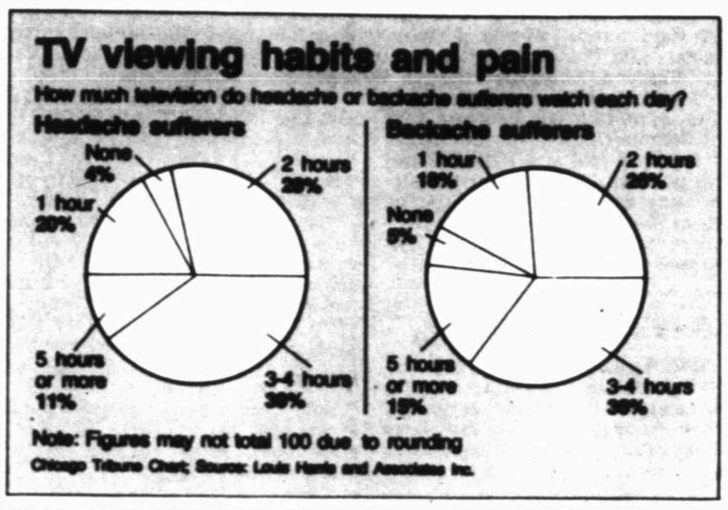

It is Bogardus' use of the Swiss-designed respiratory chamber to monitor patients for 24 hours that is giving his results more validity than other studies, said Jil Feldhausen, nutrition and weight studies researcher at the University of Arizona.

While in the small sealed chamber for a 24-hour period, patients in Bogardus' study were monitored for the amount of oxygen they inhaled and the amount of carbon dioxide they produced. When that was calculated against the amount of food they ate and the amount of movement they made, the result was the patient's energy expenditure — a figure that indicates the body's actual metabolic rate.

"The problem in studies like this has always been how to determine energy expenditure, and that has usually been somewhat inexact," said Feldhausen. "There is a recent study that shows that obese women actually burn more calories per day than lean women, but that study used less reliable methods to calculate that. A study that measures the metabolic rate over 24 hours should offer much more reliable results."

Because activity levels were also measured in the respiratory chamber, Bogardus was able to document the fact that people varied widely in how much they moved — "fidgeted."

Fidgeting levels marked individual families — "supporting the idea that obesity is an inherited problem," said Bogardus.

'Bad habits' are major cause of cancer

Hearst News Service

Each year almost a million new cases of cancer are diagnosed in the United States and close to half a million die of the disease, but many of the factors that increase the risk of cancer are simply bad habits.

Researchers believe that as many as 70 percent of all cancers are the result of improper diet, tobacco use and heavy alcohol consumption, according to an article in the current issue of Redbook, excerpted from the book "Health Risks" by Dr. Elliot J. Howard with Susan A. Roth.

Cigarette smoking causes four out of five cases of lung cancer. Probably 30 percent of all cancer deaths are due to tobacco use.

A high-fat, low-fiber diet is a major cause of breast and colon cancer.

Heavy alcohol consumption, particularly when combined with cigarette smoking, plays a major role in gastrointestinal cancer and cancer of the esophagus and pancreas.

Overexposure to the sun causes most skin tumors.

Cancer is not really a single disease with a single cause; different forms of cancer are caused by many different stimuli that make cells grow abnormally. Many researchers believe all of us at some time have changes in our cells that makes them potentially cancerous.

The immune system normally reacts immediately to wipe out these precancerous cells.

"The real danger of cancer may begin when your anticancer mechanism is rendered impotent and precancerous cells are not routinely wiped out," Howard and Roth wrote, and they added:

"Fortunately, most factors that increase cancer risk are simply bad habits — habits you can eliminate from your lifestyle."

Fat is a major dietary risk. The majority of cancers seem to show up in populations where 40 percent or more of the calories in the diet came from fat — as in the typical American diet.

A diet high in fat, especially from beef, pork or lamb, and low in fiber causes an increased concentration of bile acids and carcinogens in the colon. Cancer of the colon is virtually unknown in primitive cultures where diets are low in fat and high in fiber. Fiber inhibits the effects of potential carcinogens.

A high fat diet also increases the chance of breast and uterine cancer in women and prostate cancer in men.

Certain food additives also increase the risk of cancer. Nitrate and nitrite compounds used as preservatives in meat products can change into carcinogenic compounds. Cyclamate and saccharine are suspects in bladder and other cancers.

Heavy alcohol consumption can play a major role in cancers of the esophagus, pancreas and gastrointestinal tract and is especially dangerous when combined with cigarette smoking because together they cause the formation of ethyl nitrate, a powerful carcinogen.

Alcohol also may compound the negative effect of a high-fat diet.

Excess weight and lack of exercise also increase cancer risk. A 10-year study of 17,000 men conducted by Dr. Ralph Paffenberger at California's Stanford University Medical Center found that men who were physically active had a lower death rate from cancer as well as from heart disease and all other physiological causes.

There also are good dietary habits you can develop to help protect yourself against cancer. Foods rich in beta-carotene, the plant form of vitamin A, help guard against cancer of the lungs, bladder, intestines and larynx. Vitamin C boosts the immune system. Cruciferous vegetables such as broccoli, cabbage and cauliflower help reduce the risk of colon cancer.

"Start gradually to change your eating, exercise and lifestyle practices," Howard and Roth wrote. "Once you begin, your new healthy habits will stay with you for the rest of your life."

Cure for low-back pain may be in offing

Hearst News Service

Low-back pain may be as common as sore feet, but if scientists at the University of Florida agree with Arthur Jones, a cure is in the offing.

Jones is the inventor of Nautilus, the weight-training system that made him millions even before he sold it to Dallas interests. Now he's at it again with Medex, a company devoted to medical research.

Jones has invented a chair designed to isolate, test and exercise a group of lower-back muscles, the erector spinae. The muscles attach to both sides of the sacrum and branch to connect at various bony projections along the spine, as well as to the back of the ribs. They are positioned to control the spine; they contract when you lean back and relax when you bend forward.

According to Jones and Florida researchers, however, the upright stance that separates man from ape rarely seems to give these muscles a workout. The buttocks and hamstrings do most of the work.

Jones calls the worst of it "a chronic state of disuse atrophy." When a muscle is so sorely out of shape, it has little snap and tends to injure easily. Move too quickly or lift a weight incorrectly, and sproing! Out goes the back.

By telephone from his 200-acre estate at Ocala, Fla., Jones said a "bad back" has been blamed on a variety of things, including a slipped or protruding disc.

"The last thing I want here is to suggest that there is no such thing as a slipped disc," Jones said. "Disc injuries do occur, but we're not talking about that. We're also not talking about arthritis or any other degenerative disease or paraplegia or trauma to the back."

Jones said he was aided in his research by the development of a new diagnostic technology called magnetic resonance imaging, which can look at soft tissue, as X-rays and sound cannot.

"With MRI, we now estimate that 30 to 40 percent of the population have protruding discs of some sort but are totally asymptomatic regarding low-back pain, so we now realize that if protruding discs are so common, there must be something else going on."

What else?

"Strained muscles," he said. "But why? Nobody knew until we got this new machine going. Until now, there has been no method of isolating and measuring lumbar strength."

Jones' new chair does so by immobilizing the pelvis in a way that isolates the lower back muscles.

"Unless you can immobilize and anchor the pelvis completely," Jones said, "the buttocks, hamstrings and hip muscles do the work, and they do so much that the lumbar muscles atrophy."

Mike Pollock, a professor of exercise physiology at the University of Florida, agrees. Pollock is director of the Center for Exercise Sciences at the Gainesville, Fla., school and leads the team of scientists and doctors probing the chair's potential.

"Arthur seems to be on the right track," Pollock said. "The pelvis is the key. As long as you let it swing and do the work, the buttocks and the hamstrings take over. The chair prevents that. And when you exercise, you can get gains that are specific to that lumbar muscle group."

Jones said seriously atrophied muscles have demonstrated gains of more than 7,000 percent, but increases of 200 to 700 percent are common even in highly trained individuals. He also said few natural movements seem able to focus on the erector spinae group, although water-skiing does.

Although one of Jones' Nautilus inventions was designed to exercise the lower back, Jones said it does not.

"Neither do the copies," he said. "It was one of my mistakes."

Jones' new machine is no gizmo. It weighs 1 ton, probably will cost $50,000 and requires a skilled technician to operate.

"So I don't expect everyone to run out and buy one," he said.

He believes, however, that the machine will aid both industry and insurance companies. It can test for potential back problems, ferret out malingerers and aid in the rehabilitation of injured workers so they can return more quickly to the job.

"Why not a stress test for the back?" he asks. "If you have unsuspected back problems, we'll find out, and if you're faking it, we'll prove that, too."

Jones is so sure of the benefits that he describes the device as "a printing press for money for doctors and physical therapists." Scientists may recoil from such hyperbole, but the Gainesville team is sticking to its notebooks over the chair Jones built.

Although Pollock said preliminary work is under review by the American College of Sports Medicine, he agreed to discuss the project in general terms.

"We took people who have worked out for years, even on the Nautilus low-back machine, and with Arthur's chair we were able to improve them with little more than a single workout every two weeks," Pollock said. "So something's going on here."

Pollock said gains of 500 percent and more are not uncommon.

"My stablemate next door, one of the guys on the research team, is still on the upswing with a once-a-week schedule since June," Pollock said.

Vaccine offers protection against meningitis

NEW YORK (AP) — Lingering problems with existing vaccines intended to protect children against a form of meningitis could be solved now that government has approved a more powerful vaccine, researchers say.

Connaught Laboratories of Swiftwater, Pa., said recently that the Food and Drug Administration had approved its so-called conjugate vaccine for prevention of infection with a bacterium called Haemophilus influenzae type B.

The conjugate vaccines utilize a protein to increase effectiveness.

"The evidence is that it is superior to currently available vaccines," said Dr. Stanley Plotkin, professor of pediatrics at the University of Pennsylvania and chairman of the infectious diseases committee of the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The bacterium causes an estimated 10,000 cases of meningitis a year. Half of those cases result in serious injury, and about 500 are fatal, doctors said.

Connaught officials said the vaccine could be especially effective in children under age 2, whose immune systems haven't fully developed yet.

"The most susceptible population is that below 2 years of age, and here it's a significant step," said FDA Commissioner Frank Young.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and the American Academy of Pediatrics — with the exception of the Minnesota chapter — recommend that children be vaccinated at age 2, even though the disease is common in younger infants.

The new vaccine has been approved for use in children as young as 18 months.

Several vaccines against haemophilus meningitis are already on the market, but the effectiveness of the vaccines has been questioned in some regions. Last month two doctors' groups joined with the Minnesota state health department to recommend against the use of the vaccines in Minnesota.

Michael Osterholm, an epidemiologist with the Minnesota health department, said that problems with existing vaccines "likely can be dealt with by the conjugate vaccine, but the question is whether it will be the Connaught conjugate."

At least two other pharmaceutical companies, Praxis Biologics of Beverly Hills, Calif., and Merck Sharp & Dohme of West Point, Pa., are developing conjugate vaccines against Haemophilus influenza type B.

"Given the fact that we're not yet certain why the previously licensed vaccine was a problem, I don't think we're in a position to know yet whether the conjugate vaccine will have any benefit," Osterholm said in a telephone interview.

In October, research presented at the Interscience Conference on Antimicrobial Agents and Chemotherapy in New York showed that the vaccine was effective in some parts of the country and not very effective elsewhere, including Minnesota. Researchers had no explanation for the finding.

The previously licensed vaccines, made by Connaught, Praxis and Lederle Laboratories of Pearl River, N.Y., consist of a treated form of the outer capsule of the Haemophilus bacterium, said Susan Brown, head of biological sciences at Connaught.

This polysaccharide, as it's called, is insufficient to trigger a protective immune response in some patients, especially infants younger than age 2 with their immature immune systems, Brown said.

The conjugate vaccines link the polysaccharide to a protein that stimulates a stronger immune response — directed against both the protein and the bacterial capsule. Once such a response has been generated, the bacteria can theoretically be destroyed when they enter the body, before they have the chance to cause illness.

Osterholm said that the problem with failure of the existing vaccine in Minnesota is continuing.

Low-impact aerobic exercises pack same punch without jolting body

Associated Press

Low-impact aerobic exercise can produce as much conditioning of the body and cardiovascular system as high-impact aerobics without the risk of joint injuries and painful sprains, say sports medicine specialists at the New York University Medical Center.

"High-impact aerobic exercisers may not realize how significant a strain their classes place on the feet, legs and knees," said Dr. Joseph F. Fetto, associate professor of orthopedics at the center. "They should consider switching to low-impact aerobics."

An upcoming article in the center's Health Letter states that each jump or bounce places 4 to 6 times the body's weight on the legs; thus, a 150-pound person who takes 1,000 steps in a typical high-impact dance session is creating 70 tons of stress. In low-impact aerobics, since both feet are never off the ground at the same time, there is less danger of injury.

"The knee joint takes the full brunt of the stress if the muscles are not properly conditioned to absorb some of the impact or if they are fatigued," said Fetto. Pain may develop within the muscles and tendons as they try to resist, or pain and swelling will develop within the joints as they react to excessive loading. "If the condition is allowed to progress, prearthritic and then arthritic conditions can develop," said Fetto.

"Not everyone is prone to injury from high-impact aerobic dancing," said Dr. Ramesh Gidumal, instructor of orthopedics at the center.

Three more candidates killed in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Three more candidates were slain in soaring pre-election violence in the Philippines, and assailants hurled a grenade into the home of a fourth candidate, killing one of his relatives.

In another development, six communist rebels and six soldiers were killed in the northern Philippines after guerrillas stormed a town. Fourteen soldiers were wounded, including two critically, the military said.

The election-related violence brought to at least 62 the number of people who have been killed during the campaign, including 29 candidates, the government-run Philippine News Agency reported.

Six candidates have been wounded and 10 others kidnapped since campaigning began last month for the Jan. 18 regional elections, when voters will choose provincial governors, mayors and other local officials.

Police said an explosion early today ripped through the home of Benjamin Arcayena, opposition candidate for town council in the Manila suburb of Makati.

Arcayena was not home at the time of the blast, but a relative, Elvira Alison, 40, was killed as she slept. Another relative, Bernardo Latre, said the blast was apparently caused by a grenade hurled through the window.

Communist rebels with the New People's Army kidnapped and killed Tomas Pada and Teobusio Odias, pro-government candidates for vice mayor and councilor, respectively, in Matalum town as they campaigned Tuesday, according to a military report reaching the capital today.

Rosario Guerrero, the governing coalition's mayoral candidate in the same town in Southern Leyte province, about 400 miles southeast of Manila, was taken hostage but later was released unhurt, the report said.

Police said Ceferino Lumanlan, an independent candidate for mayor of Porac, was shot and killed Wednesday night while delivering a campaign speech in Pampanga province, 50 miles northwest of Manila.

His vice-mayoral running mate was wounded in the attack.

Police Lt. Amado Espino Jr. said Lumanlan was apparently slain by a lone gunman.

Lumanlan was a former mayor of Porac but was removed from office in March 1986, when President Corazon Aquino fired officials who served under the administration of ousted President Ferdinand Marcos.

Salvadoran rebels deny killing rights activist

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Anti-government guerrillas denied responsibility for last October's slaying of a human rights activist and said President Jose Napoleon Duarte was blaming them to conceal his own guilt.

The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front called Duarte's accusation a "crude maneuver" and denied in a communique issued Wednesday that a suspect arrested in the slaying was a member of the front.

Duarte said Tuesday that 19-year-old Jorge Alberto Miranda Arevalo was arrested in the slaying and that he and three others still being sought belonged to one of five guerrilla groups that form the front.

The leftist rebels have fought for more than eight years to overthrow the U.S.-backed government.

Hebert Ernesto Anaya, 32, a lawyer and president of the independent Salvadoran Human Rights Commission, was killed Oct. 26 by men firing handguns.

The front and the Human Rights Commission accused the Duarte government of killing Anaya as part of stepped-up repression.

In a communique read over their clandestine Radio Venceremos, the rebels denied that Miranda Arevalo was one of their members. They called Duarte's announcement a government ploy before the visit this week of the international verification commission on a Central American peace plan.

"Napoleon Duarte intends to cover up his responsibility in the assassination...with a crude maneuver, presenting a supposed suspect in the crime who he says is a member of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front," the communique said.

Miguel Angel Montenegro, a director of the Human Rights Commission who said he was tortured when he was arrested in the past, accused Duarte of having ordered Anaya's death. He said Duarte now sought to prove to the verification panel the armed forces and the government were not responsible for the slaying.

The Human Rights Commission was founded in 1977 and has accused the government of violating human rights in its war against the guerrillas. About 65,000 people have died.

Domitila Arevalo Ascencio, Miranda Arevalo's mother, denied her son was involved in the shooting and said the government offered her money to cooperate. "It is all one more lie by the government," Mrs. Arevalo Ascencio, with tears in her eyes, told a news conference.

"My son is innocent and they offered me 12,000 colons ($2,400) so that I would collaborate and told me that with that money I could pay a lawyer for my son, but I refused because it is all a lie," she added.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Haiti's election panel wants anti-Duvalier law changed

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The Electoral Council says it will heed the constitution in screening candidates for upcoming national elections, but that a provision barring Duvalier supporters from running should be changed.

Wednesday, Jean Gilbert, president of the council, called the constitutional provision a "violent poison." His council was established by the government to replace an independent council with broad popular support.

"It is something I regret personally, but it is not for me to annul it," Gilbert said. "Maybe the newly elected government can find a way of taking it out of the constitution."

Gilbert, however, promised that the Electoral Council would apply the provision "in its totality" in deciding on the eligibility of the 22 candidates who have applied to run for president in the Jan. 17 election.

Nine people among the 22 were disqualified from November elections by the independent Electoral Council because of their links to Francois Duvalier and his son Jean-Claude, who ruled the country for nearly three decades.

Haiti's Constitution, approved by more than 99 percent of voters March 29, bars all those who helped keep the Duvaliers in power from running for public office for 10 years.

Hamadi's ex-wife testifies

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (AP) — The former wife of an alleged Lebanese terrorist on trial for kidnapping two West Germans in Beirut testified that she saw no evidence he was a Moslem militant during their seven-year marriage.

"I would have noticed if he had political interests," 43-year-old Maria Hamadi said Wednesday of her former husband, Abbas Hamadi.

"I think if that was so, he wouldn't have gone with our daughter into the Catholic Church" for the child to be baptized, said Mrs. Hamadi, a native of West Germany. Her testimony came during the second day of Abbas Hamadi's trial. After she and others testified, the trial was adjourned until next week.

Korea may grant amnesty

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The government may grant amnesty to thousands of political prisoners when President-elect Roh Tae-woo is inaugurated next month, sources in the governing party said.

Also today, riot police hauled away 50 cattle ranchers who shouted slogans and waved placards outside the governing party headquarters to protest U.S. demands that South Korea import American beef.

And, Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., said there appeared to be irregularities in the Dec. 16 presidential election, but it was not clear that they were extensive enough to have affected the outcome of the race.

"There do appear to be serious and substantial indications of widespread irregularities," said Solarz, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs. "The real question is whether the number of illegal or improper votes had the effect of changing the results of the election."

Roh, candidate of the governing Democratic Justice Party, defeated rival opposition leaders Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae-jung.
