Andropov, Bush talk after funeral

MOSCOW (AP) — New Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov met with Vice President George Bush after the Brezhnev funeral today and pledged that his country is ready to work for better relations with the United States on the basis of "full equality," Tass reported.

Bush, talking to reporters after the meeting, spoke of the "difficult problems that confront us."

But the American vice president said the "challenges, while enormous, are far from insurmountable" and described his meeting with Andropov as "frank, cordial (and) substantive." Bush spoke with journalists at the airport before departing from Moscow.

Neither the report by Tass, the Soviet news agency, nor Bush disclosed what topics were discussed.

Tass said U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko also sat in on the Kremlin meeting, which took place just hours after the late President Leonid I. Brezhnev was buried in Red Square.

Bush, leading the U.S. delegation to the funeral, earlier issued a statement calling for a reduction in "today's massive expenditures for arms."

Immediately after the funeral, Bush went to a Kremlin reception, where he shook hands and chatted briefly with Andropov, who was chosen to succeed Brezhnev as Communist Party general secretary, the Soviet Union's most powerful position. Their formal closed meeting came afterward.

Tass said the American vice president expressed condolences to Andropov on Brezhnev's death and the Soviets expressed gratitude "for the respect which was shown by the American administration."

The two sides also had a "brief exchange of opinion on key questions of Soviet-American relations," the report said, but it did not detail what topics were discussed.

"Andropov stressed during the meeting that the Soviet Union, continually carrying out the policy of peace, is prepared to build relations with the United States on the basis of full equality, non-interference, mutual respect for the interests of the peoples of both nations and the improvement of the international situation," the report said.

Tass did not say how long the meeting lasted.

In a eulogy for Brezhnev, Andropov had reaffirmed his predecessor's tough stance toward the United States, saying the Soviets were ready for "honest, equal and mutually beneficial cooperation" with any nation, but vowing to deal "a crushing rebuff to any attempt at aggression."

Shultz said before the funeral he was carrying no special message from President Reagan to the Kremlin leadership.

"I don't think the message is complicated," he told reporters. "We are realists, we will stay that way. We are strong. We will stay that way. We're constructive and we are ready to solve problems and will continue to be ready to do so, ready to respond."

The secretary of state said Reagan would welcome a summit with General Secretary Andropov but "only if it can be a constructive one and have an outcome."

Bush's statement said it is the Reagan administration's "fervent hope that today's massive expenditures for arms can be reduced and that the world standard of living, especially for the impoverished, can be greatly improved."

Shultz had declined to speculate on what foreign policy Andropov might follow, saying a toughly worded address by the new Soviet leader Friday did not mark a shift in previous Kremlin policies.

"The steady, relentless buildup of Soviet military capacity has, in effect, forced the United States after quite a period of not pushing its defense establishment forward powerfully, to look to our defenses and our strength," Shultz said.

On Friday, Andropov had said, "We know well the imperialists will never meet one's pleas for peace. It can only be defended by relying on the invincible might of the Soviet armed forces."

Shultz was with Bush at the reception in the Kremlin's Georgiyevsky Hall, beginning about 30 minutes after the hour-long funeral ceremony.

Walesa says he'll maintain solidarity

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, freed from government detention after 11 months, vowed today to remain faithful to the spirit of the outlawed union Solidarity.

He had not "signed anything, declared anything or joined anything" during his detention, Walesa said at a news conference the day after he returned to his family. He apparently referred to "loyalty oaths" extracted from some unionists as a condition for freedom.

Explaining the mysterious one-day delay in his return home after being released Sunday, he said he was taken to a meeting with the Polish general prosecutor for a review of martial law.

He returned home Sunday night to the Gdansk apartment where his family and 500 well-wishers gave him a tumultuous welcome.

"We have to reach agreement, but not on our knees," Walesa told the crowd when their shouts drew him to his window Sunday night. "I will be faithful and there is no force that can divide us. I want everything to go the way we established it," Walesa said. "I will not abandon the road and the ideals which we set forth in August."

At the news conference today in his apartment, Walesa was asked about hundreds of his Solidarity colleagues still interned.

"I weep over their fate and I will do everything to get them out by peaceful means," he said.

Parliament banned Solidarity Oct. 8. The union had been suspended and thousands of activists interned when martial law was decreed Dec. 13 to crush 16 months of Solidarity-inspired strikes and challenges to communist authority.

Hundreds of detainees have been released but many remain in custody.

Walesa stressed he wanted to help solve problems peacefully, "under existing realities," but did not say specifically what sort of problems he meant.

Walesa, who led the independent union from its creation in August 1980, said "I was, I am and I will be faithful to the spirit of August...and I shall not depart from the letter of that agreement."

"As you know I never wanted to destroy or knock anything out. I am for peaceful solutions."

He begged time and again for time to think things over.

"I must think about the situation," he said, "because I don't know the existing situation now. Give me at least one month, and as I know all of you I will inform you soon when we have a chance to meet."

Walesa expressed surprise that he

Shuttle crew disappointed; It 'just wasn't our day for suits'

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Mission Control cancelled a long-awaited joint space walk by two shuttle astronauts after serious problems developed this morning with NASA's new-generation, $2 million space suits.

It was the first test of the suits, which have had a history of development troubles that more than doubled their cost.

NASA officials were considering the possibility of extending the shuttle mission for one extra day, to Wednesday, if the suits can be fixed later today. This would allow a Tuesday space walk, but the scenario was "not too likely," an official said. At the time, the suits were still out of whack.

One suit, worn by Joseph Allen, had a bad oxygen fan, and its balkiness — a "motorboating" sound — was clearly audible to Mission Control. The trouble with the second suit, donned by William Lenoir, could only be seen on a gauge. Officials said a regulator indicated low pressure.

After Allen's fan broke down, officials wanted Lenoir to test his suit in a space "standstill" by moving out into Columbia's airlock, the ship's doorstep to space. That also had to be scrubbed.

"This isn't our day for suits," said Allen, who had rehearsed the two-man space walk for month-after-month in water-tank simulations.

"Good try but no cigar," said Robert Stewart, the ground communicator. "You know how Monday mornings are." The scrub came an hour before the 6:50 a.m. CST space walk was to have begun.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration's fifth shuttle flight was scheduled to end Tuesday with the space walk its only disappointment. With no more major tasks before the crew, commander Vance Brand said, "We're looking forward to returning tomorrow."

Glynn Lunney, manager of shuttle operations for NASA, said the chance to extend the mission until Wednesday was remote, but not out of the question.

"The flight controls are 100 percent" for landing, descent director Tommy Holway said. The five-day mission is to conclude with a landing at 6:33 a.m. PST at Edwards Air Force Base in the California desert.

The astronauts kept a stiff upper lip. Within an hour after the scrub, commander Vance Brand and pilot Robert Overmyer joined Allen for a televised demonstration of weightlessness in the Columbia cabin. Overmyer shaved, Allen spun a gyroscope into zero gravity and said, "I'm too young to shave, but I'm not too young to play with toys."

He's a babyfaced 45 years old.

"I wish we had more time to prepare for this TV, but of course we had the unfortunate problems with the equipment," said Brand.

Allen and Lenoir were to have been NASA's 28th and 29th spacewalkers, but the first to test the shuttle suits.

The suits were developed by Hamilton Standard Division of United Technologies under a $46.9 million contract covering 43 suits and 13 life support systems. Problems, including an oxygen fire in an unmanned suit and a pressure leak because of failed stitching, contributed to cost overruns that pushed the actual price to more than $107 million.

The problems began shortly after Allen and Lenoir moved into the shuttle airlock to prepare for America's first space walk in nine years, a 3½-hour stroll in the shuttle's open 60-foot-cargo bay.

Allen's fan worked for a few minutes, then slowed, then stopped.

"It sounds like a motorboat, we can hear it motorboating," Lenoir told Mission Control in Houston at one point. The fan is located in a life support backpack attached to the bulky suit; its function is to maintain a flow of oxygen through the suit while the spacemen are outside.

Lee High vocational program just what the doctor ordered

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Not so many years ago, 20 Midland teen-agers were leaving doctors' offices with tear-filled eyes and suckers in hand. Today these Lee High School students, garbed in professional uniforms, are learning about health care in the city's medical offices and institutions.

Through the high school's vocational education program, these students "can find out early what they don't want to do," said Linda Leps, a registered nurse who teaches the health occupational class at Lee.

Leaving their academic surroundings each afternoon, the teen-agers become young professional trainees in the medical world.

This is the first health occupation class offered to West Texas high school students, according to Mrs. Leps.

The students, ranging from 16 to 18, work about 15 hours a week for minimum wage. They are employed by Midland doctors, veterinarians, hospitals, pharmacies and nursing homes.

"I paved the way for them, but they found their own jobs," Mrs. Leps said. "I visit all 20 of them at least once every six weeks to make sure they are progressing. A doctor or the hospital are supposed to rotate them, so they get a taste of everything involved in that particular occupation."

Mrs. Leps said most of the professionals she talked to were receptive to the idea and the "physicians thought it was a good idea."

She explained that some of the students didn't have any idea what was available to them in the health care field.

"There are so many jobs in the health field, but most of these students only thought (about being a) doctor or nurse," Mrs. Leps said.

One student, Elizabeth Aguirre, 17, did not know what respiratory therapists were. But after her exposure to the profession through this program, Ms. Aguirre is employed at Parkview Hospital as a respiratory therapist trainee, and has taken extra classes on her own.

"Parkview is talking about a scholarship to help her with the education that will be needed," Mrs. Leps said. "She'll be a good little therapist."

However, it is not easy to get into this program.

"They're not in flunky classes," Mrs. Leps said. "They take classes in chemistry, psychology and English. The doctors like to have well-rounded students. They must be working by the second week of school, but before they are accepted in the program they are interviewed and screened. And they can be washed out if they fail their academic subjects."

Mrs. Leps said attendance and grades are very important to this program.

A student who had repeated absences — 28 in one semester — approached Mrs. Leps about the program. Mrs. Leps was hesitant, but told the girl if she did not miss any school and kept her

Recessionary times food for turkey dealer's thoughts

DETROIT (AP) — While the recession may dim the holiday season for some people, lower profits by companies are making a good business even better for Detroit food broker Marshall Lowenstein. He expects Midwest companies to gobble up 250,000 turkeys, 50,000 hams and other edibles from his 85-year-old, family-owned Lowenstein Poultry & Game Co. to give to employees during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday season. "Office parties are down, liquor is down, a lot of other perks are down," Lowenstein said. "More employers are looking for less expensive ways to take care of employees." Lowenstein has orders for more than 10,000 turkeys from Whirlpool Corp. plants in Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky. Other birds will end up on the tables of employees of Wolverine World Wide, the Rockford-based manufacturer of Hush Puppy shoes, and United Parcel Service workers in Michigan and Ohio. Then, there are orders for hospitals, car dealers and department stores. Some longtime customers, hard hit by layoffs, are ordering fewer gifts this year but new buyers more than compensate for the decline, Lowenstein said, adding that his sales have risen 20 percent for turkeys alone. "We're seeing a lot of people switch from, say, a higher-priced ham to a lower-priced turkey," he said this weekend. The American Turkey Federation estimates that U.S. turkey consumption has risen 35 percent since 1970, to 10.7 pounds per person last year. Lowenstein expects a 5 percent to 10 percent increase in profits this year from 1981, when he sold $3.5 million of his Marshall Farms Chef's Pride turkeys. "A bottle of whiskey, the kids never see it. It's certainly impersonal if the boss gives you a piece of paper and says, 'Go buy yourself a gift,'" he says. "In an era when employees might get nothing, they're happy to get a gift the whole family can enjoy."

grades up she would be accepted. "The girl has not missed a day since school began and she will probably make a good licensed vocational nurse," Mrs. Leps said, adding that the girl is maintaining a C-B average. "I asked her why she missed so much school before, and she told me she was bored," Mrs. Leps added. "I've seen kids who have gone through vocational programs who are now running businesses. Former students are coming back to their instructors and thanking them. The instructors have motivated these kids. I can see where some students would have not ever gone on." Mrs. Leps said the students employed in physicians' offices are not only learning the paper work, but also how to take vital signs and assist with the patients. "After the physicians see that these kids will keep patient information confidential, they will give the kids an overall experience, but they want to be sure that the kids will practice discretion and professional ethics," she said. One Midland dentist who has employed a student wants to take her into surgery with him, and currently she accompanies him to the hospital to interpret for Spanish-speaking patients. The health occupation program is open to any Midland student who qualifies, Mrs. Leps said. She added that federal funds have enabled the vocational department to purchase $15,000 worth of equipment, such as hospital beds, microscopes and other teaching aids. The equipment should arrive in December.

Reagan, Kohl talk of unity

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, welcoming West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl for talks at the White House, said today the United States and West Germany must stand together against the "massive war machine" being developed by the Soviet Union. Kohl, responding to Reagan during a welcoming ceremony that featured a 19-gun salute, pledged that his country "is and will remain a loyal partner of the United States."

With Kohl at his side on the White House south lawn, Reagan said the military buildup being undertaken by the Soviet Union "is far in excess of any defense need." He assured Kohl that, "You are not alone. We are with you." Speaking through an interpreter, Kohl said West German opinion polls show there is wide-based, firm confidence in the Atlantic partnership. "To all Americans, therefore, I will say most emphatically: You can count on your German friends," Kohl said. In an earlier television interview, Kohl said his nation was not "joining the choir which is condemning the Americans."

West German officials said before Kohl's arrival Sunday that Reagan's decision to lift the sanctions on firms involved in building the Soviet gas pipeline foreshadows a friendly meeting between the two leaders. That issue, along with the implications of the leadership change in the Soviet Union, is expected to dominate Reagan's meeting and working luncheon with Kohl today.

In an interview Sunday with West German television, Kohl said he doubted that the death of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and the succession of Yuri Andropov as Communist Party leader will bring about any dramatic, short-term change in Soviet policies.

"The problems naturally remain after Brezhnev's death: the problems of Soviet over-armorment, the problems that we watch with concern every day in Poland, the war continuing in Afghanistan and the necessity to reach worldwide disarmament and detente," Kohl said.

He also said it is "quite obvious" that West Germany must be cautious about preserving its ties with the United States because of his country's dependence on American military power for its security.

On taking office last month, Kohl said he was determined to "lead the German-American relationship out of the twilight zone and confirm and stabilize the relationship." Asked today to elaborate on that remark, Kohl said his nation "is inseparably tied up with the NATO defense alliance and with the presence of American forces in Europe and in my country for the last 30 years."

But he added that NATO "is not primarily a military alliance, it is primarily a community of ideas, made up of nations and peoples with the same constitution based on freedom, based on the concept of civil rights, based on the concept of human rights... This is something which I would like to give more emphasis to in Germany."

Reagan's decision, earlier this year, to impose sanctions on U.S.-licensed West European companies involved in building the Siberian pipeline caused strains in Washington's relations with Bonn.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and his wife, Aliza, celebrate Begin's 68th birthday in Jerusalem in 1981. Begin cut short his 10-day visit to the United States upon learning of the death of his 62-year-old wife in Jerusalem Sunday. She was buried this morning at Jerusalem's Mount of Olives.

Israel grieves at deaths of Mrs. Begin, soldiers

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin's wife Aliza was buried at the biblical Mount of Olives today in a simple ceremony attended by her grieving husband, close friends and relatives.

The burial took place against a backdrop of national mourning for the 75 Israeli soldiers and security men killed last Thursday in the collapse of the Israeli military government building in Tyre, Lebanon — the worst single disaster in Israel's 34 years as a state.

Sirens wailed throughout the country to commemorate the victims of the blast that collapsed the building. Parliament scheduled a special memorial session. Cause of the explosion has not been determined, though Palestinian guerrillas and Lebanese groups opposed to Israel's June 6 invasion of Lebanon have claimed responsibility.

Leaning on a cane, Begin walked up the steep slope to the grave site reserved for fighters in Israel's pre-1948 underground war for independence. About 50 relatives and friends, including some Cabinet ministers and Chief Ashkenazi Rabbi Shlomo Goren, could be seen at a distance standing around the grave. The family asked reporters and news photographers to stay away.

The funeral cortege was seen off by dozens of Israeli mourners. From the Sanhedria funeral parlor to the cemetery overlooking the old walled city of Jerusalem, the funeral route was guarded by police and armed soldiers and a helicopter patrolled overhead. Roads were closed for the procession.

Mrs. Begin died of a heart attack early Sunday after a lengthy stay in a hospital for respiratory problems. She was 62.

The Prime Minister, who was in Los Angeles talking to an American Jewish group when she died, cut short a 10-day U.S. tour and canceled a meeting with President Reagan to rush home for the funeral of his wife of 43 years.

The Mount of Olives has been a Jewish cemetery for centuries. It was in Jordanian hands until 1967, when it was captured by Israel along with the rest of Jerusalem during the Six Day War. One plot is reserved for Begin.

The 69-year-old prime minister was known to be deeply attached to his wife, and his grief was compounded by his absence from her deathbed. Begin aides said the premier had been reluctant to leave the country, but was persuaded by Mrs. Begin to go ahead with his U.S. trip.

"I shouldn't have left her," Begin was quoted by an aide as saying when he was informed of his wife's death. As he boarded his Israeli air force jetliner for home, he wept openly, aides said.

Parents may be behind kids' deaths

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — A couple charged with child abuse in the death of their 3-month-old daughter are being investigated in the deaths of two of their other children who died in infancy, authorities say.

Marvin L. Allman, 30, and Sherry Ellen Allman, 24, appeared Sunday before Peace Justice Robert Wood on charges of injury to a child, a first-degree felony.

Preliminary autopsy reports indicate the couple's daughter, Sherry Lynn Allman, was beaten on the head, neck, ribs and both arms, said Detective Robert Cain.

The child died Wednesday morning of what originally was thought to be a sudden illness, police said. But Harrison County District Attorney Sam Baxter called her injuries "classic child abuse fractures."

According to Kansas City, Mo., authorities, the deaths of two other Allman children had been attributed to sudden infant death syndrome, or crib death, Baxter said.

Marvin Neal Allman, 4 months, died in 1976 with bruises on his head, neck, back and chest, according to the records, Baxter said.

Joseph Lee, 1 month, was dead on arrival at a Kansas City hospital in 1978, but no injuries were found on his body, the prosecutor said.

"I'm now in the process of getting in touch with the district attorney up there," Baxter said. "I expect that they'll be reopening those cases."

Investigators questioned the couple Sunday in the Harrison County Jail, where they are being held on $100,000 bonds, Baxter said.

The baby's death was preliminarily attributed to SIDS, Baxter said.

"Given the reported history of multiple SIDS deaths in the past, and the baby fitting the age group in which SIDS occurs, and not seeing any trauma on the child on external investigation, it looked like SIDS," Baxter said.

"After the autopsy, that all went out the window. We knew we didn't have SIDS the minute the child was X-rayed. When they did the actual autopsy and saw the broken bones... it just confirmed everything the X-ray showed."

Agreement on compromise important

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security commission won't discover a "magic formula" for rescuing the system unless President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill first agree on a compromise, a Republican lawmaker says.

The 15-member bipartisan panel, charged with finding solutions for the old age fund, recessed talks Saturday until Dec. 10 after failing to come up with specific solutions during a three-day meeting.

Chairman Alan Greenspan said he will be canvassing members in the weeks ahead on whether they favor tax hikes, benefit cuts, or other options to close the $150-to-$200 billion shortfall Social Security is facing through 1990.

Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., a member of the panel and chairman of the Senate Finance subcommittee on Social Security, said Sunday, "It would be a mistake for us to say, 'here's the magic formula,' unless we've got the agreement not only of the president (Reagan) and the speaker (Thomas P. O'Neill), but perhaps of some outside people as well."

Armstrong made his comments on NBC-TV "Meet the Press."

Other senators on the panel, including John Heinz, R-Pa., Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., made the same observation Saturday.

"The president only has one vote but it's a very big vote," said Heinz.

Dole said the one-month break gives the White House and congressional leaders a chance "to look at the outstanding work this commission has done... (and) to help us in our final days."

Dole said a compromise plan forged by the panel could "spare members of Congress all of pain and suffering."

Armstrong and Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, the chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security, who also appeared on television Sunday, both expressed optimism Congress will come to the system's rescue next year. But Armstrong said the payroll tax should not be increased, as some Democrats have suggested, because that might force 2 million to 4 million people out of work.

Officials pretty sure of identity

SULPHUR SPRINGS (AP) — Sheriff's officers were comparing dental records in an effort to positively identify a body believed to be that of a missing Dallas businessman.

The dead man tentatively has been identified as former Braniff International executive Edson Emerson Beckwith, according to Hopkins County Sheriff J.E. Tittle.

An autopsy showed that the man died of multiple stab wounds, authorities said.

Tittle said the death has been classified a homicide and an investigation is being conducted by the Texas Rangers and sheriff's officers.

"We are 90 percent sure that the body is Beckwith's and are going on with our investigation based on that assumption," a sheriff's official said.

The decomposed body was found by a ranch foreman near a creek in a heavily wooded area about four miles northwest of here, Tittle said.

The location was about four miles northeast of where Beckwith's abandoned car was found Oct. 14.

Beckwith's wristwatch and a wallet with his driver's license and several credit cards were found on the body, sheriff's officials said. The wallet contained no money.

The 51-year-old financial consultant was returning from a business meeting in Omaha, Texas, authorities said.

Beckwith's wife, Jane, said Saturday she had suspected foul play ever since her husband failed to arrive home for a birthday celebration.

"I'm sure it was robbery, because they found no money on him," she said. "I think they held him up, and he tried to fight them."

"He was probably fighting for his life," she added. "But he was always a fighter. He probably was just reacting to somebody holding him up."

Mrs. Beckwith said her husband was always punctual and had planned to take her to dinner and a movie for her 46th birthday.

Beckwith's 1979 Oldsmobile was found Oct. 15 along a rural road in Braesher, about 75 miles east of Dallas. The keys were in the ignition and Beckwith's suit coat was hanging on a hook in the back seat.

Walesa pledges solidarity

had been freed. He said that he thought he was about to be put under arrest and sent to prison when Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak visited him after Walesa had offered to meet the authorities last week.

Walesa wrote a letter to martial law chief Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski offering the meeting, which apparently triggered the decision to release him.

He confirmed he was released Saturday and was taken to the Warsaw suburb of Otwock where he spent the night before meeting with the prosecutor for a review of martial law decrees. He spent the first five months of his detention at Otwock after being arrested when martial law was imposed Dec. 13.

Looking relaxed, but still haggard after his months of solitary confinement in a remote government resort lodge in southeast Poland, Walesa said he had not met with leaders of the government or Roman Catholic Church on his way home.

But his future role in trade union activity was still unclear. When asked if he would support new trade unions set up in a law that banned Solidarity and all other unions Oct. 8, Walesa replied, "remember our Solidarity statutes talk about pluralism in trade unions and nobody can undermine the statutes of any trade union."

"You can join one trade union, you can join another and you are free to join and not to join," he said.

The news conference ended when Walesa's wife Danuta took him by the hand, put out his menthol cigarette and said, "come on, it's time to play with the children."

Solidarity was founded as the Soviet bloc's first independent labor federation during strikes at the huge Lenin Shipyards where Walesa was an electrician.

"In my future conduct, I will be courageous but also prudent and there is no discussion on it. We must win!" Walesa declared Sunday night.

In a weekend interview in Warsaw with the Guardian of London, Poland's military leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski was quoted as saying he will judge Walesa by the discipline he displays, by his public declarations especially to the Western press, and by his future activity.

Veterans' celebration full of hope, joy

By PHIL MCCOMBS and NEIL HENRY
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The great vaults of the Washington Cathedral rang with hymns and words of hope in a prayerful and joyous conclusion Sunday to the week-long National Salute to Vietnam Veterans. The Rev. Theodore H. Evans Jr., in a memorial service, exhorted veterans and all Americans to remember the agony of the war in order "to be whole again...that by remembering we may become a living memorial."

"A lot of healing, I think, went on" in the last week, said Jan C. Scruggs, the former combat infantryman who led the effort to build the new national memorial to Vietnam veterans that was dedicated Saturday. "We were hoping that people would react very positively and patriotically to the veterans, and (they did). We achieved a kind of collective psychological state: just a real positive and joyous time."

Indeed, if there was a theme for the week, it was that extraordinary outpouring of emotion: an allegiance between men who had walked the jungles of Asia together and who, last week, walked the streets of Washington in their faded fatigues and boonie hats. Rarely in this city have so many men been seen to break down in tears in public, to embrace one another as they remembered a shared past.

IN ONE SCENE — similar to scenes repeated a hundred times near the polished, black granite walls of the memorial on Saturday — a young veteran wearing a buckskin coat recognized a full Army colonel dressed in uniform.

"I was in your company," said the young man. "What did you do?" said the colonel. "Medic," said the young man. "I was a medic." Then he choked back his tears, and the colonel put a fatherly arm around his shoulder, patting him on the back.

It was not a week of generals, admirals, politicians or defense analysts, but one of ordinary American men and women who once went to fight a war. Scruggs, an enlisted man severely wounded in combat, conceived the memorial and salute. Others who had little rank in the war, along with some former officers, came in groups and singly from around the country, some of them hitchhiking from as far away as Oregon.

As they marched state-by-state down Constitution Avenue in an old-fashioned, patriotic parade before the memorial dedication Saturday, dressed in their faded and irregular uniforms or street clothes, flags snapping in the chill November winds, bands blaring, led by the legless in wheelchairs, they called to mind George Washington's crew of ragtag volunteers 200 years ago.

QUINT JOHNSON, a former Green Beret, now an accident investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board, put it this way: "We left from small towns all over the country and went and fought. We found out what it was like...and eventually we came back, at least most of us did."

"Then we stuffed the medals and uniforms in some closet or another like we were ashamed and didn't want to be associated with it."

"Well," Johnson went on, "now we're out of that closet. We're brothers, after all. This is our catharsis. This is our moment."

"I have known few times in the history of this cathedral so fraught with emotion and human concern," Canon Charles A. Perry told the 2,200 worshippers who filled the church Sunday, referring to the candlelight vigil at the cathedral that continued for much of the week in which the names were read aloud of all 57,939 dead and missing American soldiers in Vietnam.

Now those names — each and every one — are etched in granite on the new memorial. It stands on Washington's Mall occupying some of the nation's most hallowed ground between the shrines to Abraham Lincoln and George Washington.

LAST WEEK'S SALUTE, which at its peak on Saturday brought an estimated 205,000 veterans, their families and other citizens to Washington, was strongly marked — as was the war — by cross-racial understanding and emotion. In the parade down Constitution Avenue, among the throngs of observers at the memorial, and in reunions at smoke-filled hotel lobbies, blacks, whites, Latinos, Asian Americans and American Indians joined together to march, sing, and embrace.

Al (Doc) Allison, a black former Green Beret medic, ecstatic upon seeing a white man at the Sheraton he had mended years ago in the jungles of Vietnam, slapped him five and shouted, "Damn, it's good to see you, man."

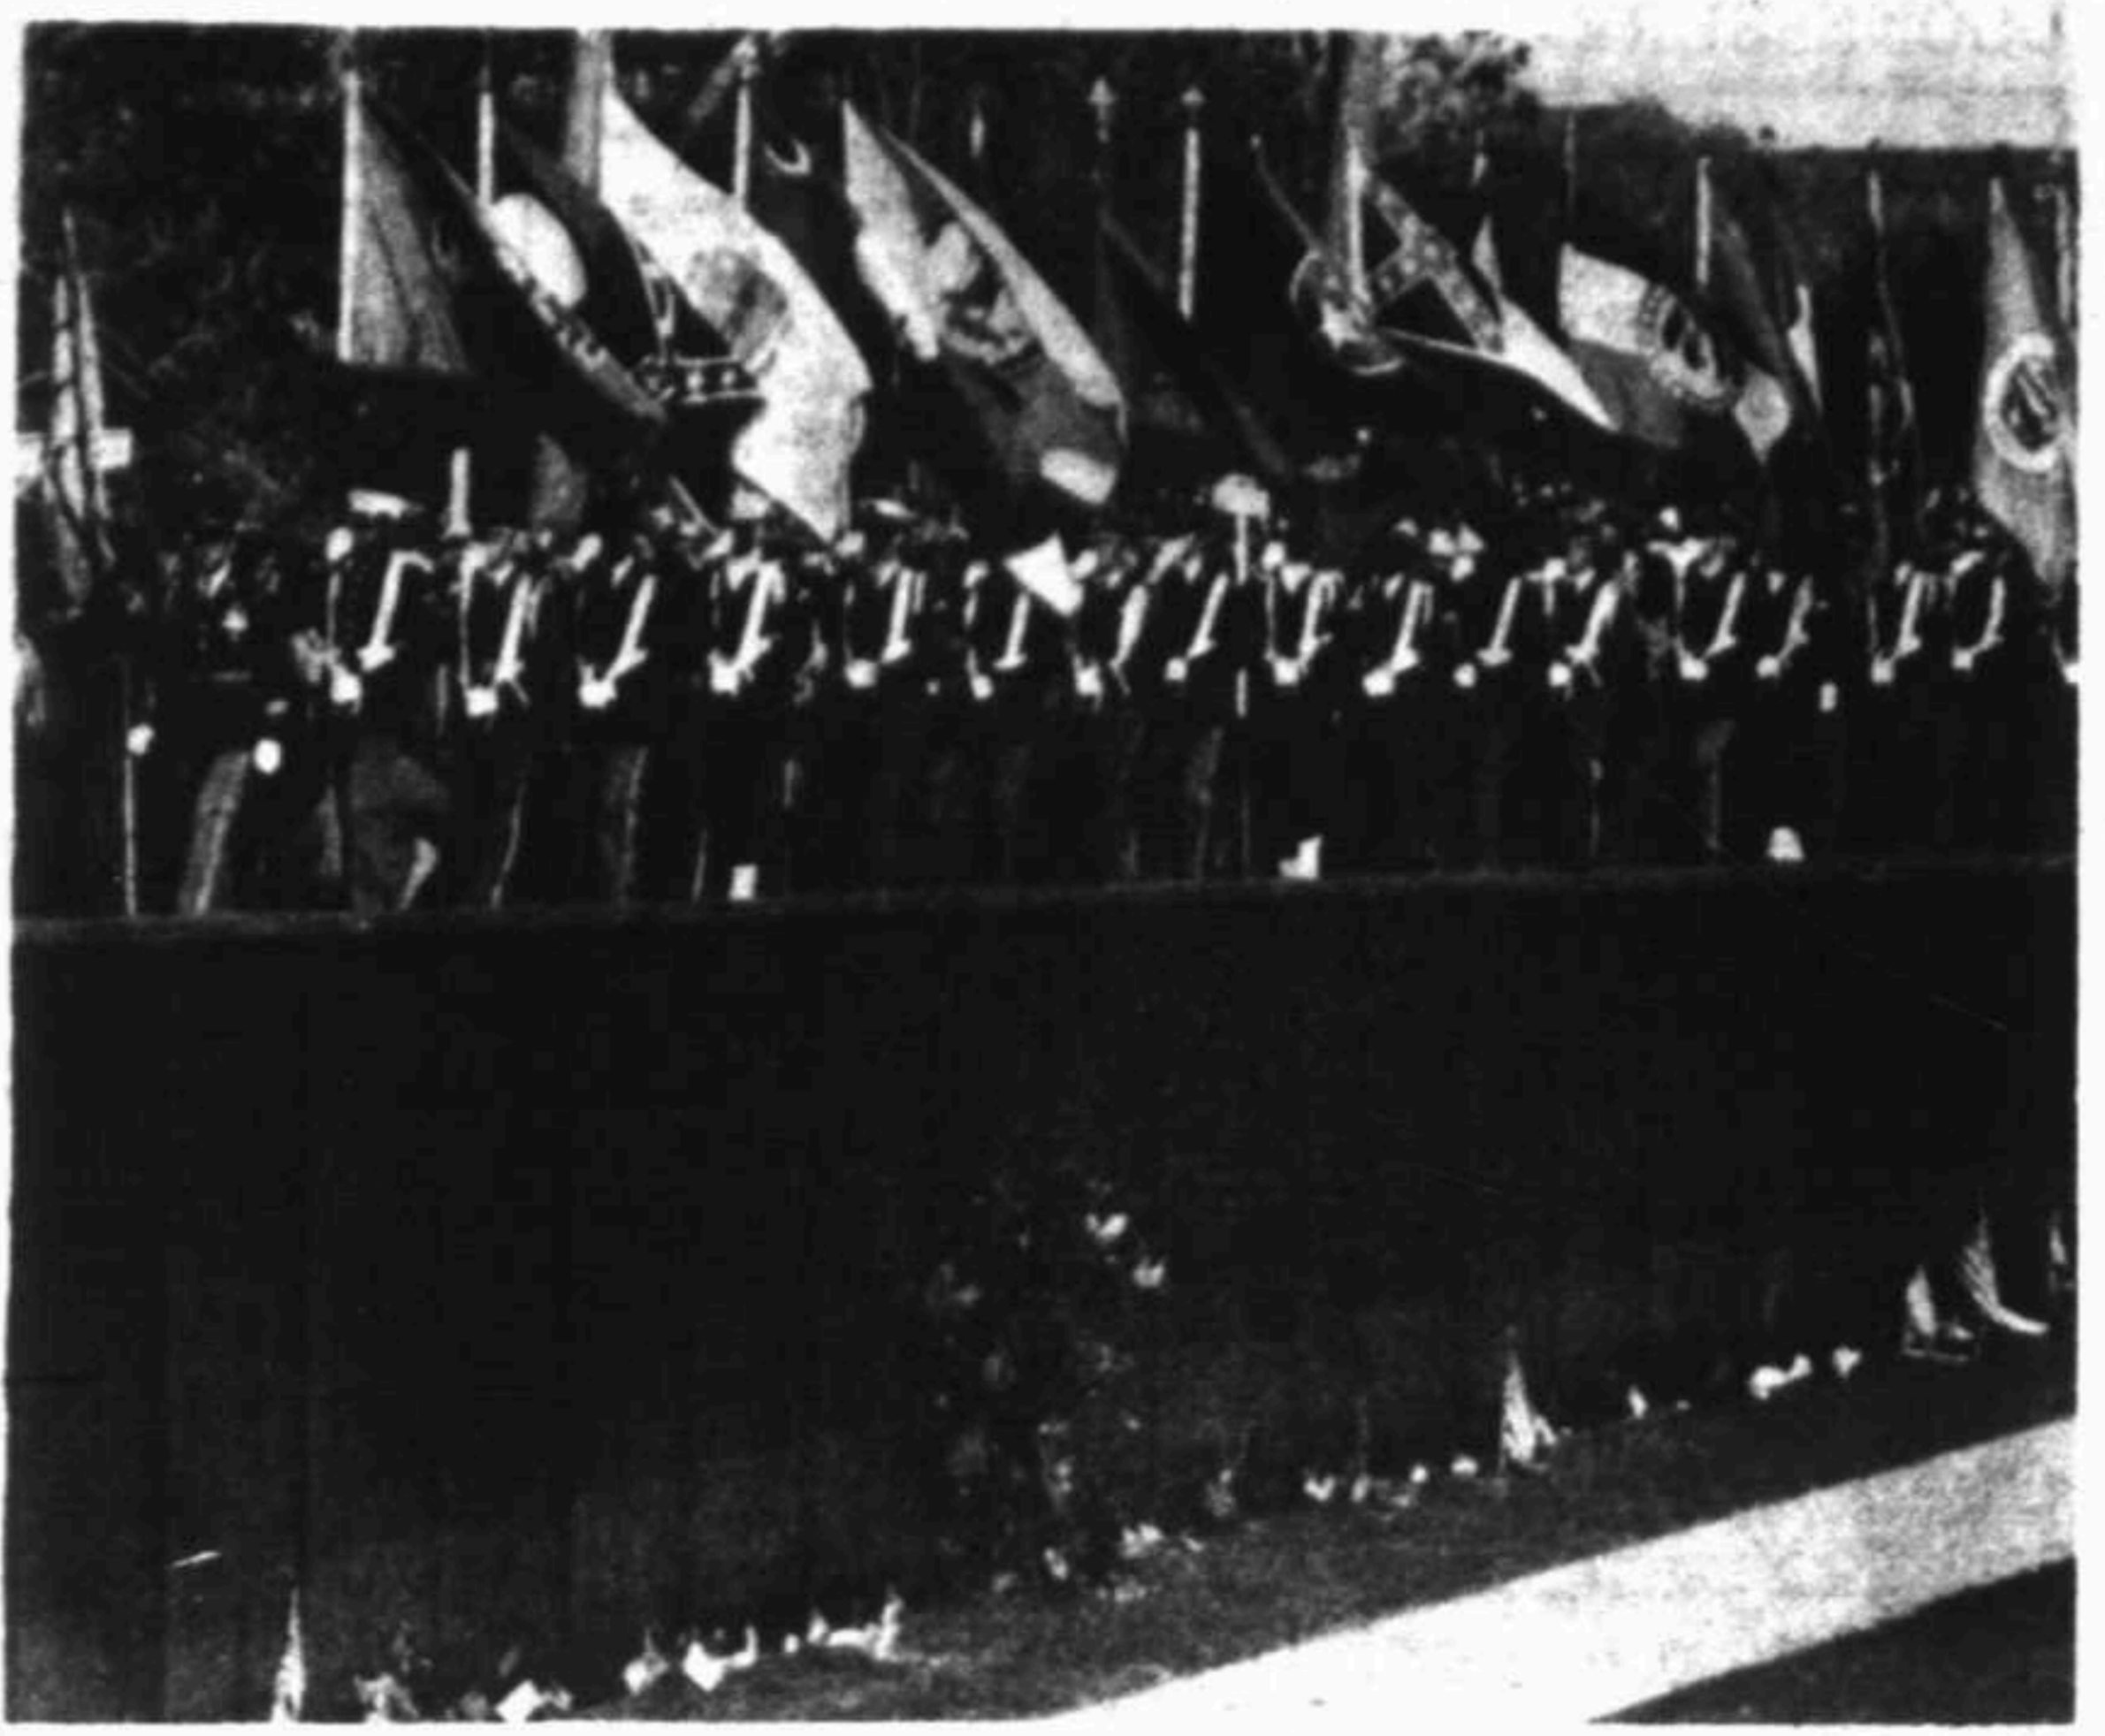

Bill Menard, a Sioux Indian from South Dakota who was an Army infantryman in the war, joined a small circle of whites and blacks wearing Army fatigues at the memorial and immediately there were enthusiastic hand slaps all around. "Welcome home, brother," they said.

On the Mall, a black man in full combat uniform, with a tree branch stuck in his helmet to complete the camouflage effect, was greeted with hearty slaps on the back and soul handshakes by a group of whites.

OFTEN LAST WEEK, it seemed as if many of the men had been frozen in time. Friday night, at the Vietnam veterans' dance at the Capital Hilton, many veterans, long-haired and bearded, showed up in faded fatigues, looking almost as if they had not taken them off since the war.

Wolfman Jack, the well-known, gravel-voiced disc jockey of the 1950s and 1960s, was there along with a handful of Congressional Medal of Honor winners — one of whom had a metal hook where his left arm had been. The disc jockey and the award winners grabbed the mike between songs and shouted to the vets that they were heroes, that this was their week at last, and they responded with shouts and cheers. At one point the crowd joined hands to sing "God Bless America."

With the memorial and week of salutes, the organizers set out to honor America's Vietnam veterans and begin a process of reconciliation and healing after this century's most divisive war. To a large extent, they felt Sunday, they succeeded.

Thousands applaud veterans of America's most divisive war

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Some drove hundreds of miles and others came from the nearby suburbs. They cheered and applauded and waved tiny American flags. But mostly what thousands of people attending Saturday's parade and the dedication of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial came to do was offer thanks to the veterans of America's most unpopular war.

"We owe 'em a great deal," Eddie Martinez, a 27-year-old employee of the Agency for International Development, said as he watched the parade. "They had this coming to them for a long time. This is our way of saying thank you."

Thousands of others felt the way Martinez did. They clapped and shouted the names of the states as the contingents of veterans — the small groups such as those from Montana and Kansas and the large ones from such states as New York and Maryland — marched down Constitution Avenue.

It mattered not how many of the Vietnam GIs were representing each state. They all were applauded with equal gusto. From Alabama's group in the lead of the parade, accompanied by retired Gen. William C. Westmoreland, commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, to Wyoming's contingent bringing up the rear 2½ hours later.

The older veterans from other wars gone by, their ribbons covering their American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars caps, saluted again and again.

The marchers, several thousand strong, often gave back the applause and shouted their thanks in return. One Pennsylvania veteran clasped his hands above his head and shouted to "Welcome home!"

Vietnam veteran raises issues no parade can address

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Parading Vietnam veteran George Robinson carried a sign on Constitution Avenue Saturday which declared that, for him, the war is still not over.

The weekend's events — a triumphant three-hour parade and the dedication of a Vietnam Veterans Memorial — went splendidly for participating veterans, serving as a long-needed catharsis.

But Robinson's sign raised some questions no parade can answer. At an Agent Orange forum last week, Glenn Sinclair, 35, of Cleveland said each of his five children was born with a birth defect.

When he went to a VA hospital for an exam, he said, it took all his self-control to keep from strangling the clerk who met him with bureaucratic sarcasm: "Oh, another one of you."

"I pay taxes and I fought for this country, and I've been treated like dirt," Sinclair said.

Ex-GIs gave him a standing ovation. Veterans noticed that the memorial was built at the instigation of veterans — not of the country — and that government participation was minimal.

VA Administrator Robert Nimmo made no public appearances, explaining through an aide that since he has announced that he is resigning, he thought it was best to keep a low profile.

Everett Alvarez Jr., deputy VA director and a prisoner in North Vietnam for 8½ years, was the only administration official in Saturday's memorial dedication.

Veterans commented that President Reagan found time to go to the Soviet embassy to pay respects to Leonid Brezhnev but not to participate in the dedication. Reagan flew to Chicago Saturday for a memorial service to his father-in-law, who died Aug. 19.

Robert Muller, a war-wounded paraplegic and executive director of the Vietnam Veterans of America, says he saw Reagan in the White House Thursday and begged him to attend.

"This is too significant for us as Vietnam veterans — too symbolic for America — for you not to be there," he says he told the president.

An Analysis

can answer:

- WHY wasn't war declared?
- WHY were the privileged exempt?
- WHY should the few sacrifice for the many?
- WHY only men to the slaughter?
- WHAT has been learned?
- TO WHOM are Americans indebted?

Other veterans have other concerns, less global than Robinson's, but still urgent.

They feel they are still paying for having served. Vietnam service is a job handicap, according to Larry Brinker, a Labor Department official. He said men who fought have higher unemployment than those who stayed home.

"They have to bear the brunt of the disapproval of that conflict," he said. "The biggest problem these veterans have had is the stigma of Vietnam."

Agent Orange, a chemical defoliant, is another vexing worry.

The Veterans Administration says it has no proof that those exposed to Agent Orange have a greater risk of contracting cancer or of fathering children with birth defects.

Three years after Congress told the VA to find the answers to those questions, the research project hasn't started.

AI sends letter to OAS

LONDON (AP) —

Amnesty International today urged Organization of American States member-countries to "stop flouting international standards" that ban torture, government-ordered killings and other violations of human rights.

Amnesty International, the London-based group that campaigns for the release of political prisoners around the world, said it made the request in an open letter to the heads of the 28 delegations participating in the OAS's general assembly opening today in Washington D.C.

The letter said torture has been systematically applied against dissidents in Uruguay and Chile. It said El Salvador and Guatemala have carried out large numbers of arbitrary executions, and that Argentina and Chile have failed to account for people who had disappeared after being arrested by people identifying themselves as security agents.

The inter-American group's general assembly session is to discuss, among other issues, a draft resolution defining torture as an international crime, the letter said.

Amnesty praised the charter and principles of the OAS, but said that "the failure of governments to respect the standards of the Organization, its conventions and recommendations, is a challenge to the authority of the OAS which the general assembly cannot ignore."

"Peaceful opposition has, in some countries, been branded the equivalent of 'terrorism.'"

NEW YORK (AP) — Ten years after being burned by napalm in a moment of horror from the Vietnam war that was captured in a prize-winning photo, a young Vietnamese woman says her only wish is to never see such conflict again.

"After going through the war, now that I have grown up and can think for myself, my only wish is that there will be no more war, never again!" Phan Thim Kim Phuc, 20, said in an interview.

In Brezhnev eulogy, Andropov reaffirms tough stance toward U.S.

MOSCOW (AP) — Vice President George Bush, leading the U.S. delegation to Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's funeral, issued a statement today calling for a reduction in "today's massive expenditures for arms."

Later, after the Red Square burial, Bush shook hands and chatted briefly with new Soviet Communist Party chief Yuri V. Andropov at a Kremlin reception.

Bush afterward refused to go into details about the conversation, which lasted less than a minute.

"I don't think we can talk about it right now," he told reporters. "We were simply really just paying our respects."

"The steady, relentless buildup of Soviet military capacity has, in effect, forced the United States after quite a period of not pushing its defense establishment forward powerfully, to look to our defenses and our strength," Shultz said.

On Friday, Andropov had said, "We know well the imperialists will never meet one's pleas for peace. It can only be defended by relying on the invincible might of the Soviet armed forces."

Shultz was with Bush at the reception in the Kremlin's Georgiyevsky Hall, beginning about 30 minutes after the hour-long funeral ceremony.

Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, who preceded Bush through a receiving line, talked for about three minutes with Andropov, gesturing emphatically during the conversation. It was not known what topics were covered in the conversation between the two, but China and the Soviet Union recently opened new discussions on repairing their old rift.

In a eulogy for Brezhnev, Andropov had reaffirmed his predecessor's tough stance toward the United States, saying the Soviets were ready for "honest, equal and mutually beneficial cooperation" with any nation, but vowing to deal "a crushing rebuff to any attempt at aggression."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, accompanying Bush, said before the funeral that he and the vice president would like to meet with Soviet leaders but no sessions had been scheduled. Shultz said he was carrying no special message from President Reagan to the Kremlin leadership.

"I don't think the message is complicated," he told reporters. "We are realists, we will stay that way. We are strong. We will stay that way. We're constructive and we are ready to solve problems and will continue to be ready to do so, ready to respond."

Andropov also spoke with Cuban President Fidel Castro, Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat and other foreign dignitaries. Most simply shook hands with Andropov, who was flanked on his right by Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov, Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and Vasily Kuznetsov, the first deputy vice president.

At one end of the hall stood a portrait of Brezhnev, draped in red and black. Many of the foreign leaders paused at the portrait before leaving the room.

Earlier today, Bush met with Japanese Premier Zenko Suzuki and with Pakistani President Zia ul-Haq, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said.

Bush's statement said it is the Reagan administration's "fervent hope that today's massive expenditures for arms can be reduced and that the world standard of living, especially for the impoverished, can be greatly improved."

Shultz had declined to speculate on what foreign policy Andropov might follow, saying a toughly worded address by the new Soviet leader Friday did not mark a shift in previous Kremlin policies.

The three stood silently for a minute before the open, flower-adorned casket. Bush left the hall with his party but unexpectedly returned to talk with the 74-year-old widow, Viktoria Brezhnev, through an interpreter for about two minutes.

Brezhnev interred in sacred place

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Leonid Ilyich Brezhnev has joined an elite gallery of Communist heroes interred in Red Square, the Soviet Union's most sacred place.

"In days of sorrow and loss, Red Square is the center of national mourning," Radio Moscow said in a broadcast on the eve of the funeral of the Brezhnev.

The vast, cobblestoned square along the east wall of the Kremlin is the site of a massive military parade every Nov. 7 marking the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution and annual May Day rallies.

It is 430 feet long and 140 feet wide, bordered on one side by the ornate Gum Department store facade and divided by St. Basil's Cathedral, with its fantastic onion-shaped domes in brilliant colors.

Vladimir I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state, lies in a red granite tomb on the west side of the square. More than 80 million people have visited the subterranean vault since his embalmed body was put on display in 1924.

Cemetery about three miles from the Kremlin.

The ashes of more than 100 other Soviet dignitaries, including the world's first cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin and writer Maxim Gorky, were interred in the Kremlin wall, which soars about 39 feet over Red Square.

There are also a few foreigners buried there. A white marble plaque marks the grave of American Communist writer John Reed, whose book "Ten Days That Shook The World" chronicled the Bolshevik rise to power and was the subject of the recent U.S. film "Reds."

Red Square dates back to the late 15th century, when Grand Prince Ivan III cleared wooden houses and churches from the area outside the original Kremlin walls to make a vast open-air market.

Pokrovsky Church, better known as St. Basil's, was added by Czar Ivan IV (Ivan the Terrible) about 1560 to commemorate his victory over the Kazan Tatars.

Red Square has figured prominently in the country's tumultuous history.

A raised, circular stone structure was erected near the cathedral in 1630 to serve as a site for public executions. It became known as "forehead place" because victims bent down to place their head on a log for the axeman.

Red Square was the center of a series of uprisings in the 17th century, and Napoleon visited the area when he captured Moscow in 1812.

Red troops fought the White Guards there during the 1917 revolution. During World War II, Soviet army troops paraded in the square before heading out to the front lines on the edge of Moscow to stop Nazi invaders.

Brezhnev joins nine other Soviet luminaries buried in graves marked by their busts along a patch of grass behind the tomb. Mikhail S. Suslov, who was the Kremlin's chief ideologist under Brezhnev, was the last to be accorded the honor, when he died in January.

Josef Stalin initially was entombed with Lenin in the mausoleum when he died in 1953, but his remains were removed to the row of graves nearer the Kremlin wall in 1961 after his policies were denounced by Nikita Khrushchev.

Khrushchev, who was ousted by Brezhnev in 1964, wasn't accorded a Red Square burial when he died in 1971. Instead he was interred at Moscow's Novodevichy

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠6 ♥A1085 ♦AKQ72 ♣AQ5
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Since this hand has all the earmarks of a possible slam, it is your duty to advise partner of this. The surest way to get your message across is with a jump shift, and the only one that presents itself is a jump to three clubs. Don't worry about partner raising clubs; you can return to hearts at the same level. If partner bids three no trump over three clubs, a simple four hearts will be adequate to complete the description of your hand.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ105 ♥A4 ♦954 ♣J876
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
2 ♥ Pass ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Because of partner's reverse, you are again in slam territory. The principle is the same as in the above—you flash the signal to partner by jumping. Here, the obvious jump is to four clubs. Since you have bypassed three no trump, you must be expressing slam interest.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ1062 ♥A98 ♦73 ♣854
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?

A.—Don't let that fifth spade talk you into doing something rash. You have a relatively balanced hand worth 9 points in support of spades—no more. That qualifies your hand for a sound raise to two spades. Anything else would be foolhardy.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A1076 ♥5 ♦J952 ♣AQ95
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♥ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
3 ♦ Pass ?

What do you bid now?
A.—Your hand revalues to about an opening bid, and an opening bid facing a hand that has opened and jumped is in the slam zone. So it is simply a matter of orderly investigation. Start off with a cue-bid of four clubs. That will convey your intentions. Thereafter, all further moves are up to your partner; you have done your bit.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ762 ♥85 ♦7 ♣K8752
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♥ Dble 1 ♦ ?
What action do you take?
A.—It looks as if East is taking advantage of the vulnerability to engage in a bit of psychic bidding. If he has spades, where are all the hearts? Partner surely isn't doubling with shortage in spades and heart length. The way to expose him is to start off with a double, then jump in spades yourself.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A84 ♥K5 ♦Q5 ♣KQ10652
The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
1 ♦ 2 ♣ Pass 3 ♦ Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—Your hand is worth a shot at game, but we do not suggest that you bid three no trump. It is a sound principle that, when contracting for a close game, the stronger defensive hand should be on lead—you could gain a trick or tempo from that if partner had as little as J x in spades. So we would cue-bid three spades to give partner the chance to convert to three no trump.

The world is waiting

In the wake of the death late last week of Soviet Communist Party head Leonid I. Brezhnev and the appointment of his successor, Yuri V. Andropov, the many nations of the world are waiting for any indication of what the change in leadership of the superpower will mean for the future.

A number of Kremlinologists indicate that it's doubtful the change in leadership will bring about any vast deviations in the course the Soviet Union has followed the past 18 years under Brezhnev's direction. That goes without saying. Andropov merely moves up a notch in the Soviet hierarchy while the communist machine remains essentially unaltered. In the Soviet Union's form of dictatorship, strict government control gives the Communist Party boss vast power, but the structuring of the Politburo — the power structure of the Kremlin — limits his ability to swiftly and significantly bring about philosophical alterations.

During the next few weeks and months, the world will learn more about this man who has taken the place of Leonid Brezhnev — how much power he will wield, how much support he will have within the Soviet Union, how he will approach the vast problems facing that nation and how he will work with the other nations of the world on the vital issues of trade, weapons limitation and medical research.

The Soviet Union currently is suffering serious economic problems caused in no small part by the vast military build-up during Brezhnev's tenure. It also faces a number of challenges throughout its sphere of power — worker strikes in Poland, a war in Afghanistan to prop up a puppet regime and restlessness in other satellite states.

But in addition to the challenges facing Andropov as new head of the Soviet Communist Party, there also is opportunity to guide that nation along a new direction that could feasibly lead to improved relations in the world community and a better life for those living in the Kremlin's shadow.

It is, of course, too early to determine whether Andropov is in fact the "closet liberal" he is rumored to be. Relations between the Soviet Union and the United States will remain tense at least until a clear understanding is formed about how he will approach foreign relations.

But it's unwise to expect much of a change for the better or the worse quickly. The Soviet Union's power structure remains in place and the Soviet Communist Party's goals are unchanged. Just the man at the top is different.

Drunk driver problem

Half of the 52,000 motor vehicle deaths in the nation each year are alcohol related and most states are cracking down on drunken drivers.

Informational campaigns don't seem to change the statistics. Many arrested on drunk driving charges fail to reform. They pay their fines, serve their sentences and then they are drunk and behind the wheel again, making the highways a death trap.

The American Automobile Association believes, however, if alcohol and traffic safety education is started early enough, it will be much more effective in reducing these unacceptable traffic statistics.

The association is introducing a new alcohol educational program for elementary school pupils. It is called "Starting Early" and teaches youngsters how alcohol influences the body and mind. The program was field-tested in 290 elementary schools.

More than 5,000 pupils from kindergarten to the 6th grade participated in seven separate programs, one for each grade level. It's too early by several years to tell what results will come from "Starting Early," but it's a progressive attempt to find a solution to a national problem and to reduce highway deaths.

Another View:

Putting people to work

Less than two years after Congress sent the CETA public service job program to its grave, both the Republican Senate and the Democratic House are concocting plans for a new job-creation program. The details differ, but the rationale is the same: there are millions of people unemployed and dependent on public benefits; there is much useful public work to be done; why not put the people together with the work?

The same line of reasoning has undergirded the many job programs that Congress has enacted in the past. The granddaddy of them all was, of course, the Depression-era WPA, which at its peak employed more than a third of all the unemployed and consumed 2 percent of the 1935 GNP. By the time the Depression ended, WPA's reputation had become tarnished — partly by abuse of the program and partly by a general distaste for any reminder of the nation's hard times. But the program left a legacy of thousands of roads, bridges, stadiums, sewer and water systems, public buildings — even LaGuardia Airport.

Since interest in direct job creation revived in the 1960s, no job program has approached either the relative size or success of WPA. Why? Too much is expected of them, for one thing; job programs are supposed to reduce general unemployment, provide useful public services, bail out fiscally strapped states and localities, train the chronically unemployed and reduce welfare and unemployment benefit costs. But they are usually poorly thought out.

The most popular type with Congress is the public-works variation now being considered. Its deficiencies were well documented during the various experiments with it in the 1970s. Because construction materials and equipment are very expensive and federally required wage scales high, such an enterprise creates relatively few jobs for the money. Because construction projects are slow to start, most of the money is spent after recovery comes. Because it's a wonderful form of congressional pork barrel, much of the money goes where it is needed least.

When these deficiencies become apparent, money tends to be redirected to "softer" kinds of public jobs where wages and overhead are lower. When these still turn out to employ many people who could have found jobs elsewhere, eligibility is tightened, training is stressed and wages are strictly limited. This is what happened to CETA in 1978. The limits worked — in its last years, CETA employed only low-income people, and its average cost per job was very low — but the program then lost its pork-barrel constituency, and it fell out of favor.

So here we go again. The White House, of course, may block any congressional job effort. What is most worrisome is that the very features that may tempt it to change its mind about a particular proposal — appeal to powerful business, union and regional interests — are precisely those that should not be part of a serious attempt to help regions and people adjust to structural changes in the economy.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

CIA report predicted invasion of Lebanon

WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency began secretly supporting the Christian militias in Lebanon last year to keep them from falling completely under Israeli influence. The evidence is contained in a startling top-secret memo dated March 6, 1981.

This document correctly forewarned fully 15 months in advance that Israel would invade Lebanon, that the Palestinians would be routed, that the Christian Phalangists would emerge as the dominant Lebanese faction and, therefore, that the United States would "forfeit all influence in Lebanon unless "military and financial assistance" was funneled to the Phalangists.

Up to that time, it had been U.S. policy to bolster the Lebanese government. But the government was held together by a delicate political and religious balance, which had "disintegrated," the memo declared.

"Since the establishment of a PLO state within a state in the 1970-73 period and the subsequently massive inflow of arms to both Christian and Moslem communities," reported the memo, "the government of Lebanon has been unable to exercise its authority throughout the country."

The CIA not only saw "no prospect of improvement," but anticipated that the Israelis would lose patience with the Palestinians and come crashing across the Lebanese border to deal with them. "Further Israeli incursions, if not imminent, are nevertheless inevitable," the memo predicted. "The question is not so much whether or when such incursions will occur but the scope and purpose of such incursions, and their potential for igniting a wider and more dangerous confrontation."

A large-scale invasion, warned the memo, "might seek to link with the Israeli-supplied Christian militias to the north, redrawing the political map of Lebanon."

The CIA decided, therefore, to lean the Phalangist militias from the Israelis. "It is concluded," stated the top-secret memo, "that the agency should provide military and financial assistance, as requested, to the Phalangist militias."

"Should these militias remain solely dependent on Israeli support," the memo argued, "the U.S. will forfeit all influence in a post-incursion environment, with the likely resulting suppression of the Moslem communities and expulsion of the Palestinians."

The CIA strategy has been so successful that Lebanon may now wind up as a U.S. protectorate. There has also been a corresponding breakdown in the historic cooperation between the United States and Israel.

KICKING CRIPPLES: When a shortage of space developed at the Agriculture Department's parking lot in downtown Washington last summer, none of the agency's 130 bigshots lost his spot. But 11 handicapped employees did.

One of those who got kicked out on the street was Warren Tilghman, a 44-year-old special-projects officer. He has severe back problems — two discs removed and a third ruptured. In May, his condition was aggravated when he slipped and fell in an Agriculture building; since then he has been able to work only half-days.

Tilghman appealed the ruling that deprived him of the reserved-parking privilege he has had since he joined the department in 1979. In July, a Veterans Administration doctor certified that Tilghman is a "40 percent service-connected disabled veteran," and recommended that he be allowed to keep his parking place.

An Agriculture spokesman told my reporter Allan Lengel that a department doctor had reviewed all the handicapped cases and concluded that Tilghman and 10 other employees no longer deserved special treatment. The spokesman declined further comment on grounds that Tilghman's appeal is pending.

Meanwhile, Tilghman has to get to work at 5:30 a.m. — half an hour before his shift starts — in hopes of finding a place to park on the street near his office.

UNDER THE DOME: Library of Congress guards search the parcels and briefcases of departing patrons to make sure they aren't stealing anything. Capitol policemen conduct a similar search of people entering House and Senate office buildings to make sure they're not smuggling in weapons. Fair enough.

But until recently, this led to an absurd situation for anyone walking through the underground tunnel from the library's James Madison annex to the Cannon House Office Building across the street. They were subjected to search at both ends of the tunnel, even though it seemed unlikely a weapon could be fashioned out of anything found en route from one guard-post to the next. The cost of manning both stations was $140,000, and the House Legislative Branch Appropriations Committee finally ordered the security forces to get their acts together. There is now only one search.

— Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., dutifully stumped his state for Gov. Jerry Brown's ill-starred senatorial campaign. But Cranston wasn't exactly heartbroken when Brown lost. The senator has presidential ambitions, and, as an insider explained: "If Brown puts one foot in the Capitol, he becomes the senator from California running for president."

INSIDE REPORT:

New Kremlin boss a 'dangerous' antagonist

WASHINGTON — Top military and foreign policy advisers warned President Reagan Thursday that Yuri Andropov as Communist Party boss in the Kremlin "must be regarded as a 'dangerous' antagonist, far more hard-line and intractable than the late Leonid Brezhnev."

Not even the Central Intelligence Agency knew for sure whether former KGB boss Andropov would inherit the mantle of the world's most powerful dictator. But his key role as manager of the funeral ceremonies gave him an immediate edge over Konstantin Chernenko or any other rival.

Reagan was described as "fully cognizant" of heightened East-West strains to be expected if Andropov gets the nod. The president was told Chernenko is in the "reformer" mold, much preferred in the West. High officials also advised Reagan the release of Polish Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was probably ordered by Andropov to defuse the Polish crisis and give Moscow more running room in Western Europe.

LAXALT'S SURPRISE
Ed Rollins, President Reagan's ailing

chief political aide, was set to become chairman of the Republican National Committee until Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada, the party's new "general chairman," abruptly changed signals.

When the president met with Republican National Committee members over lunch at the White House Nov. 6, it was assumed that Rollins would be Laxalt's deputy, running day-to-day affairs at party headquarters under the new setup. It was then that Laxalt surprised everybody by suggesting his old political comrade, Nevada State Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf, for the job. Veteran national committeeman Clarke Reed of Mississippi expressed his delight, and the deed was done.

Had Rollins gone to the national committee, the political office at the White House probably would have closed up, its duties taken over by presidential aide Rich Williamson. Instead, Rollins likely will return to the job as soon as he recovers from a mild stroke.

NO CALL TO LEW

Although conservative Republicans have been congratulating Lewis Lehrman for coming so close in his losing campaign for governor of New York, there is only silence from the White House.

At this writing, Lehrman has received no call of congratulations from either President Reagan or his men. The reason: Lehrman's public statements during the campaign criticizing Reagan's "stay the course" slogan.

The absence of White House kudos probably dooms efforts to secure a top economic post in the administration for Lehrman. Such a move has been pushed by some White House aides, but is sharply opposed at the Treasury and Office of Management and Budget.

SALVADORAN POLITICKING

A scheduled meeting by Under Secretary of Defense Fred Ikle during his recent visit to El Salvador with Roberto D'Aubuisson, the conservative leader who is president of the National Assembly, was canceled at the insistence of U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton.

That reflected the widening rift between Hinton and D'Aubuisson, whose right-wing party was the winner in Salvadoran elections earlier this year. The ambassador's increasingly tough criticism of the Salvadoran regime has displeased the White House.

In demanding that the D'Aubuisson meeting be canceled, Hinton told Ikle that a Pentagon official should not meet with Salvadoran civilians. But Hinton did not object to Ikle's meeting with Salvadoran president Alvaro Magana.

REAGAN'S ANGRY MARINES

White House aides were surprised when President Reagan carefully wrapped a large piece of the Marine Corps' birthday cake in a napkin, tucked it under his arm without a taste and took it with him from the Rose Garden, scene of the Nov. 10 birthday celebration, into the Oval Office.

Later in the day at a Cabinet council meeting, the president was asked what in the world he had done with the succulent Marine Corps cake. Well, he said, he wasn't allowed to eat dessert any longer but he was going to break the rule this one time and eat the cake at dinner that night.

"If they try to stop me," the president said, "they'll have a lot of angry Marines on their back."

CHARLEY REESE

Nation needs fighting men for survival

It was October 10, 1918. The place, a shallow depression in the Argonne Forest. Acting Captain Samuel Woodfill lay on his stomach, bullets from a Spandau machine gun ripping through his pack.

The Kentucky woodchopper took the picture of his wife from a breast pocket and wrote:

"October 10, 1918. In case of accident or death it is my last and fondest desire that the finder shall please do me a last and everlasting favor to please forward this picture to my Darling Wife, and tell her that I have fallen on the Field of Honor, and departed to a better land which knows no sorrow and feels no pain. I will repair (sic) a place and be waiting at the Golden Gate (sic) of Heaven for my Darling Blossom. The address Mrs. Samuel Woodfill, 167 Alexandria Pike, Fort Thomas, Ky."

Charley Reese

The keeper of the gates of Heaven sent a fog, however, to blind the gunners that morning and Sam Woodfill lived to fight another day. Two days later he was back and this time facing three guns.

The Spandau was crewed by five men — gunner, helper, belt-feeder and two grenadiers. To fire the gun, the soldier had to sight down the barrel, gripping the spade grips with both hands. His forehead was exposed.

At 200 yards, Woodfill couldn't see the forehead of the gunner hidden in the brush, but he estimated the number of inches above the muzzle flash where a head ought to be. With his Springfield, he killed all five as each in turn manned the Spandau. Woodfill then killed a single sniper in church and then five more men manning another Spandau. When a sixth jumped up with a bayonet, Woodfill shot him with his Colt .45. A seventh, pretending to be dead, jumped him and was also shot with the Colt. Then Woodfill finished a fourth gun position and by this time was in a muddy ravine.

Crawling on his belly for 30 yards, Woodfill killed another five men crew and jumped into the German trench. He shot a lieutenant and turned to find another man rushing him with a bayonet. The pistol had jammed from the mud, so Woodfill grabbed a pick and poled the man like an ox and then turned just in time to split the wounded officer's head before the German could fire his pistol.

All the while he had been doing this, Woodfill's lungs were so tainted with mustard gas that he shortly developed pneumonia and had to be hospitalized.

Most people — too many — have never heard of Sam Woodfill, but it is for men like him that we mark Veterans Day. Thank God they are always around when the country needs them. These are strong men who are out of fashion in our feminine age. They are the kind of men who can calmly stare death in the eye and go about their duty and when they have done it, come home without complaining or asking for pity.

They do not kill the enemy in a frenzy or fear or hatred, but calmly, knowing it is the business of war. They have compassion but no pity, either for themselves or for others. They know pity is a vice, not a virtue.

A nation can survive without oil or coal, but not without men like Sam Woodfill. We still have them, but we sure as heck don't give them much respect. The wimps and traitors among us are afraid of them so they go to great lengths to convince children that true heroes really don't exist or that heroes are people who have the "courage" to run away from their country's wars.

Always, though, the bottom line in human affairs is force. We won our independence by force and we've kept it by force and if we are to continue being free, we will have to use force again. When that time comes, the intellectuals and the windbags and the weepies will be useless baggage. When that time comes, we'll pray for the likes of Samuel Woodfill.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Nov. 15, the 319th day of 1982. There are 46 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Nov. 15, 1492, Christopher Columbus noted in his journal the use of tobacco among natives of the New World. It was history's first recorded use of tobacco.

On this date: In 1577, Sir Francis Drake of England began an around-the-world voyage.

In 1920, the League of Nations Assembly held its first meeting in Geneva.

In 1971, in its first official statement in the United Nations General Assembly, mainland China demanded that superpowers be given a less-influential role in the world body.

Ten years ago: Cuba and the United States expressed a desire to negotiate an agreement to curb the hijacking of airliners.

Since first spacewalk in 1965 'EVAs' commonplace

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — In 1965, when Alexei Leonov stepped away from his spacecraft, he was the first to challenge the void. "You didn't experience fear," he said. "Only a sense of the finite expanse and depth of the universe."

Fifty-eight space walks ago, he was the first human satellite of Earth, popping from the airlock of his ship into what he described later as "a flow of blindingly bright sunlight like an arc of electric welding."

It was March 18, 1965, another space first for the Soviet Union. For 10 minutes and 3,000 miles, Leonov floated about, arms outstretched, tethered to the world of men only by a slender 15-foot lifeline.

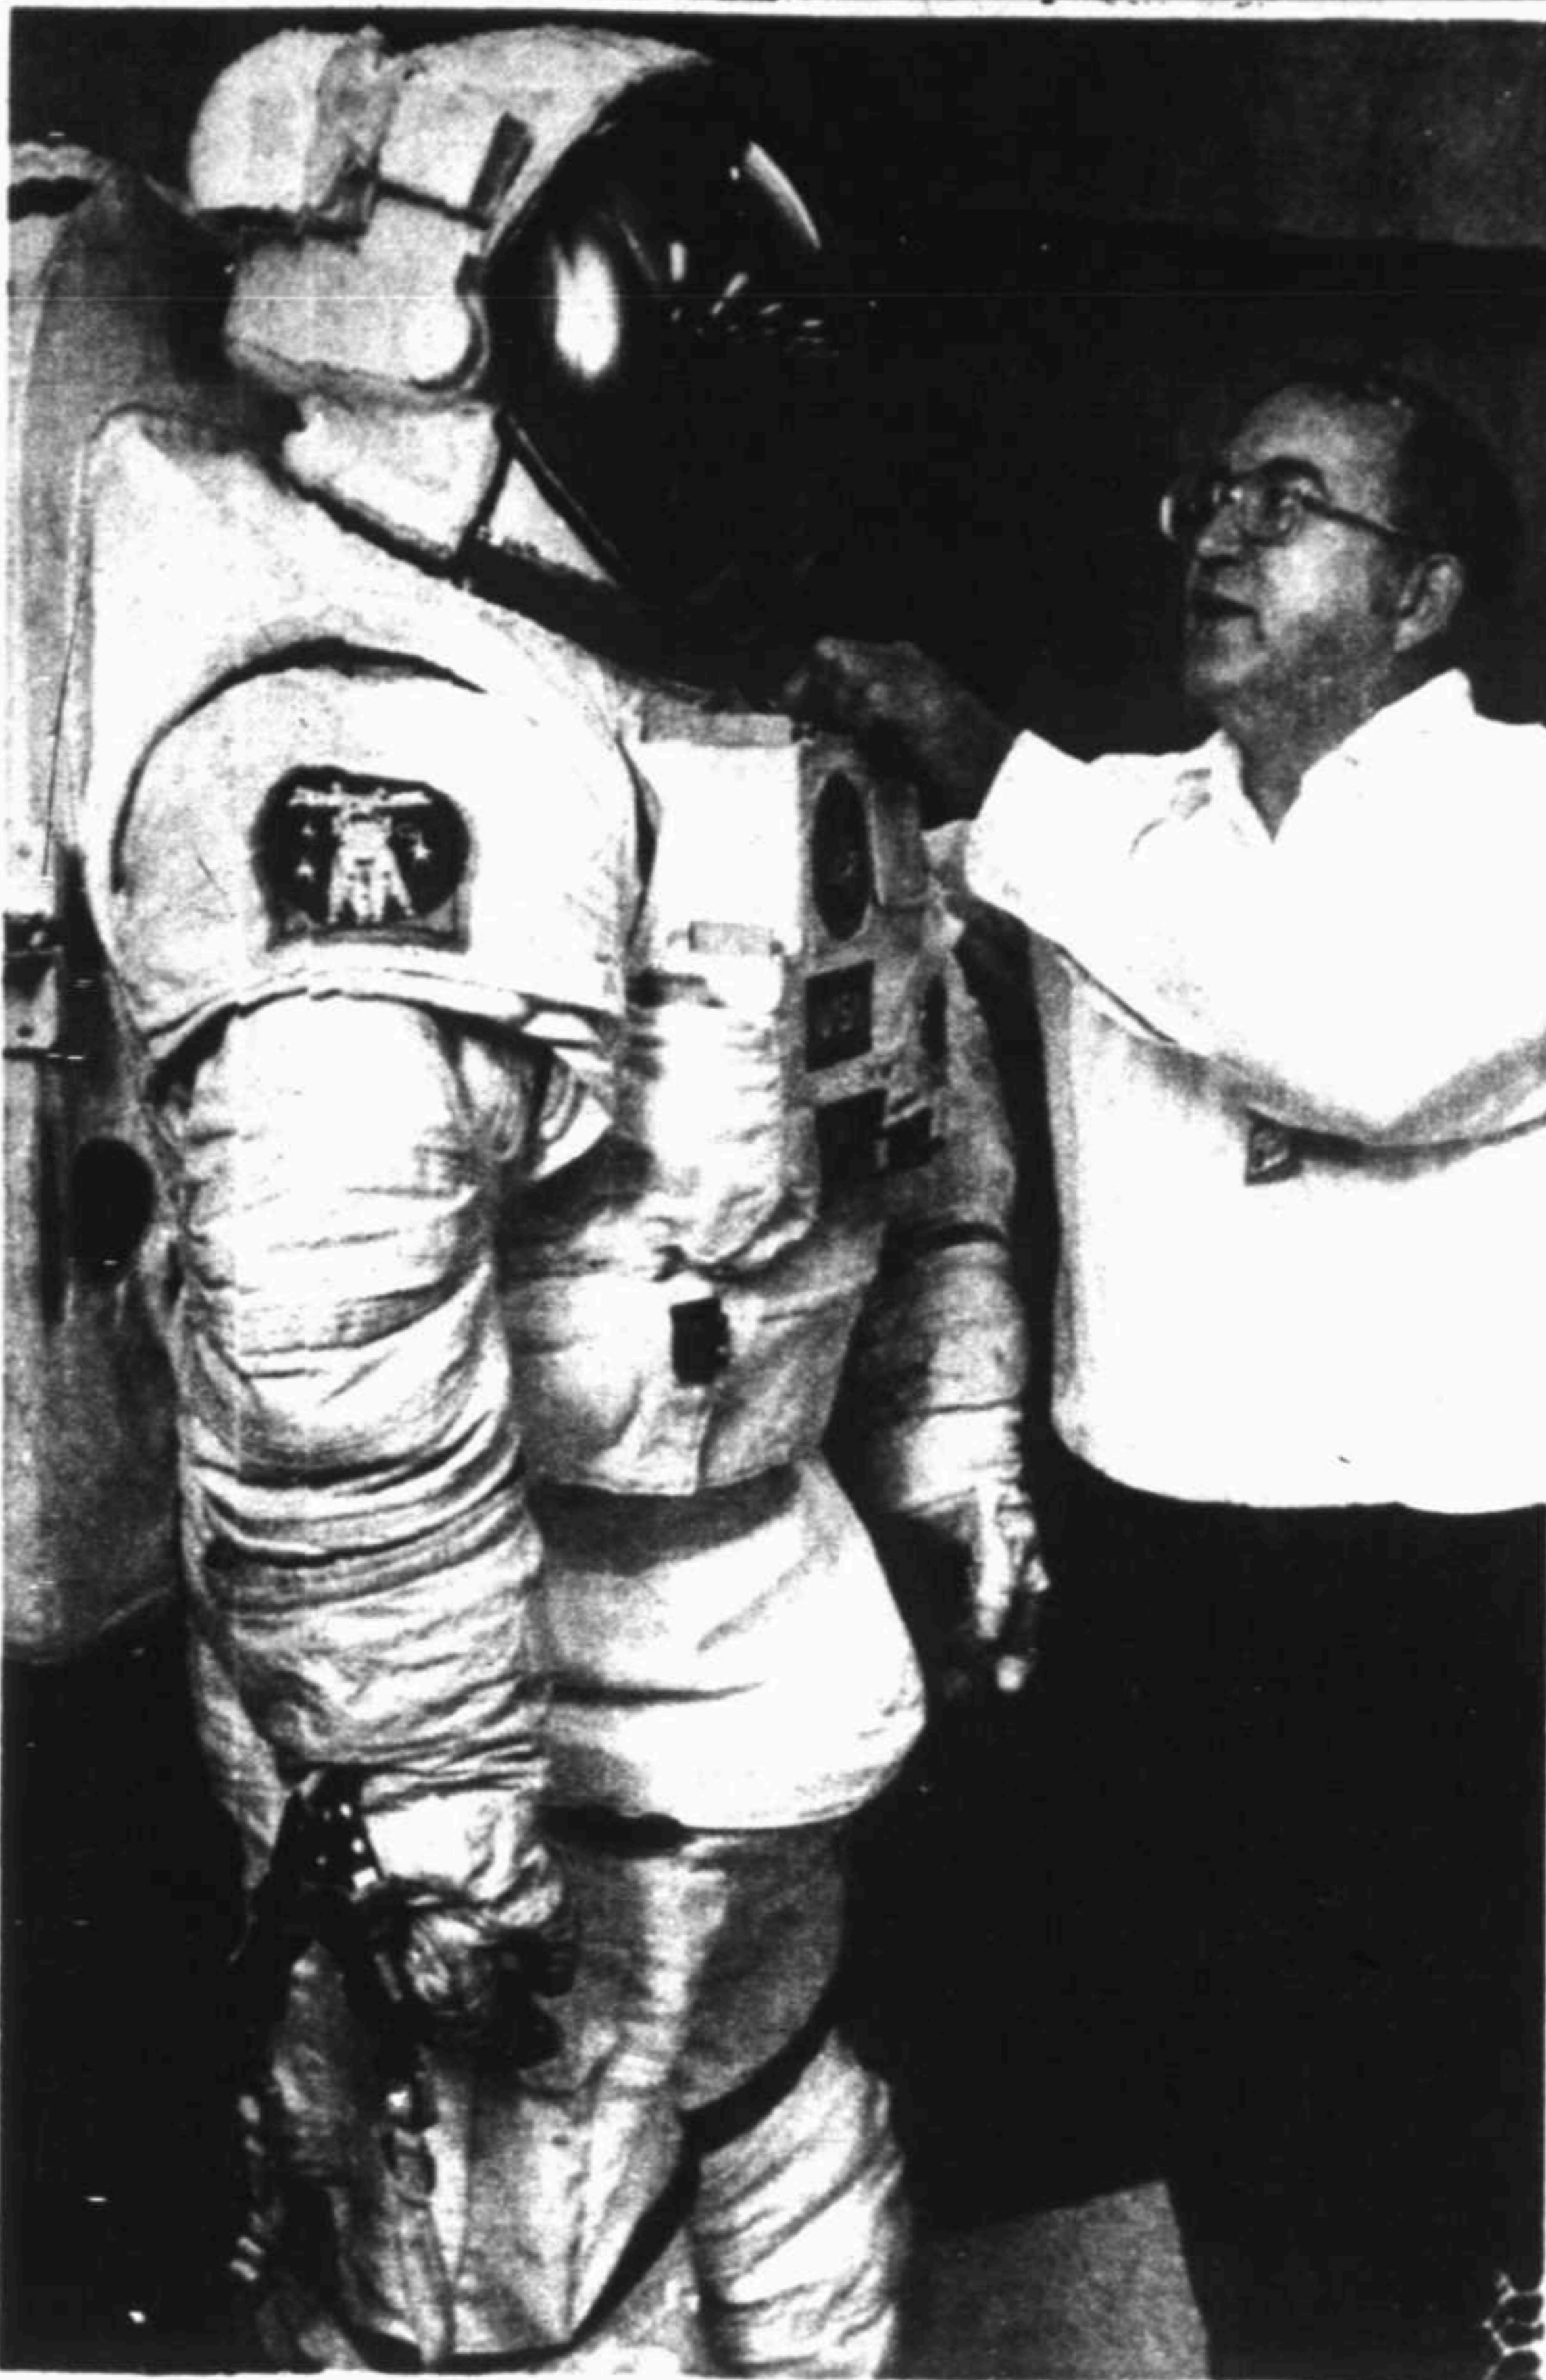

America had not planned a space walk until late in 1965, but, stung by Leonov's feat, NASA accelerated the effort, and in June that year Edward H. White II slipped outside his Gemini 4 capsule for 21 minutes. He was more than 100 miles up, at the end of a 25-foot line.

"This is fun," he said, as Mission Control urged him back inside when he stayed out past the scheduled 12 minutes. He termed the end of the excursion "the saddest moment of my life."

Space walks are taken for a variety of reasons: equipment tests, spacecraft repairs, photography and operation of scientific instruments — and curiosity. After the Leonov-White breakthroughs, space walks became commonplace, especially for American astronauts. They call them EVAs, for extra-vehicular activity.

After a one-day postponement, William Lenoir and Joe Allen were to step into Columbia's open cargo bay this morning, to become the 37th and 38th individuals to stroll in space. But a malfunction in the astronauts' spac suit has canceled the walk.

Twenty-nine of the spacewalkers have been Americans; only 9 were Soviets. Several of the Americans have been outside their craft more than once, raising the total number of American EVAs to 58. That includes 28 moonwalks by 12 astronauts.

Jim McBarron, right, space suit engineer at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, checks the suit which is identical to the one astronaut Joe Allen has aboard the space shuttle Columbia. The cooling fan in Allen's suit failed, canceling the scheduled space walk.

Third shuttle in America's fleet still being assembled

PALMDALE, Calif. (AP) — For visitors who can't recognize a space shuttle in the making, a sign inside Building 294 states: "OV-103 Discovery" with an arrow pointing to scattered piles of parts.

This is Discovery, the third space shuttle for America's fleet. NASA manifests say the ship will handle Flight 12 in March 1984.

The veteran Columbia, now in its fifth flight, also will be joined by Challenger which was outfitted with the last of its three engines several days ago at Cape Canaveral.

By early December, Challenger should be on its launch pad for final tests before its Jan. 20 debut.

It will be a year before the great motorized doors of the Rockwell International hangar here slide open for delivery of "Orbital Vehicle 103" — Discovery — to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

For now, Building 294 is crowded with spacecraft parts and rolling tool boxes. Discovery sits amid the clutter in giant pieces with light green aluminum skin. On the wall is a message: "A spaceship has landed on Earth. It came from Rockwell."

NASA shuttles are assembled from parts supplied by contractors around the country. The ships are put together on the edge of this desert town 40 miles north of Los Angeles and scarcely 20 miles from Columbia's landing strip at Edwards Air Force Base.

The scene in Building 294: The vertical tail section, three stories high, rests on its side in a nest of scaffolding. Wing sections that will pivot sit on sturdy dollies. The skin that will cover the crew compartment is at one side on a trailer, its windows and openings covered with transparent plastic.

In a stockroom, row upon row of gray plastic boxes, each holding the individually numbered heat shield tiles that must be glued one by one to the ship's belly. Some black, saucer-sized tiles are already in place, with identifying stickers dangling like price tags from their edges.

The stockroom also has 3-foot-square slabs of thermal blanket that are replacing tiles where heat is less intense.

The biggest piece of Discovery is a 100-foot chunk of its body — the nose blunt and open, its high, flat sides dwarfing the technicians who crawl through holes in the fuselage or scramble along gangplanks and ladders to work in the cargo bay.

The ship, already sporting most of its stubby wings, is raised off the floor and surrounded by scaffolds and platforms.

Oil behaves peculiarly at zero G, reports Allen

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A thick vegetable oil heated in space formed a bubble with a "memory," arranged itself into ridges and showed "really most peculiar behavior," astronaut Joe Allen reported from the space shuttle Sunday.

The oil was part of an experiment designed by Scott Thomas, 18, of Utah State University. He hoped that it would provide basic data on the convection patterns that occur when a heated fluid is weightless.

And that's exactly what happened, said Thomas.

"Really unexpected things happened," said the student after watching television views of Allen performing the experiment. "It tells me that convection is very much different in zero G (weightlessness)."

The experiment consisted of six pans, or heating cells, in a package. Each had a clear lid with a hole. Under the pans in the experiment package are heating elements powered by batteries.

Allen injected a heavy vegetable oil into the pans using a group of syringes that had been loaded on the ground with a precise amount of oil.

As the oil heated, it could be seen forming ridges that stayed in place.

"This is a very unusual convection pattern compared to what we've seen on the ground," said Allen. "This is really most peculiar behavior."

At one point, he said, a blister, or bubble formed and stayed.

"The blister has a memory," said the astronaut. "It stays there for a long, long time."

A television camera taped views of the convection currents formed in the liquid. The patterns will be studied later on the ground.

Thomas, who designed the experiment while a student at Richland High School in Johnstown, Pa., said an understanding of how convection currents work in weightlessness may be essential for developing space manufacturing processes.

Such convection currents would exist in any heated fluid, including liquid metal. A number of companies are now studying space manufacturing techniques in hopes of developing products that can only be made in the weightlessness of space. And experiments, such as Thomas' convection study, will be important in developing space factories, he said.

Thomas is a physics major at Utah State. He is attending the college on a scholarship that will permit him to develop another space experiment later. It would be flown, said Thomas, as a Get Away Special, or a small, self-contained package that is placed aboard shuttle flights when space is available.

Kinetic mismatch responsible for motion sickness, doctor says

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — In the two decades of manned space flight, stunning advances have been made in all areas except one: motion sickness.

In fact, as spacecraft have gotten larger, more and more astronauts have experienced the symptoms — malaise, nausea and vomiting — and no one is sure why it happens or how to prevent it. On the early Mercury and Gemini flights, the astronauts reported no symptoms of motion sickness. In the Apollo program, about one-third of the astronauts got sick in space. In Skylab about 40 percent did, and on the space shuttle, fully 50 percent have, including Bob Overmyer and Bill Lenoir, two of the four astronauts currently in space.

In all, some 110 people have flown in space, including 53 Americans, and about 40 percent of them have experienced some form of motion sickness.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has studied the problem for years and continues to but has yet to reach a conclusion. It is one more of those problems on which it is easier to ask the question than to find an answer.

"We don't really understand how the body works," said Dr. Arnold Nicogossian, the space agency's chief of operational medicine, in an interview Saturday.

He said that although the symptoms were the same in all forms of motion sickness, the causes were different. At sea, it is caused by the waves, in cars, it results from stop and go motion, and in airplanes, it is brought on by air pockets.

In any case, the condition rarely lasts more than a few days before the body adapts. "Your mechanisms get reset to the new environment, and you develop appropriate responses to that environment," Nicogossian said. "We have not seen so far a person who does not adapt to the weightless environment. Everybody adapts within four days. On average, it's about two days."

Flow of technology must be halted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department apparently has failed to prevent the flow of American military technology to the Soviet Union, a Senate subcommittee says.

In a 67-page report released Sunday, the permanent subcommittee on investigations recommended that the United States strengthen its intelligence and enforcement efforts to halt a "massive, well planned and well managed" Soviet effort to acquire U.S. technology.

The subcommittee stopped short, however, of adopting a staff recommendation that the department be stripped of its enforcement powers under the Export Administration Act.

"The evidence is strong that virtually all the technology they obtain from the West is applied to the Soviet military industry," the panel said.

The minority staff of the subcommittee, after a year-long investigation, recommended at the hearings that the Customs Service be given full responsibility for enforcement of export controls.

The Commerce Department now has the primary responsibility, through its Compliance Division, with the Customs Service assigned a secondary role.

Refugees unite to help each other

MIAMI (AP) — The newest Cuban refugees have banded together in an informal self-help network, sharing food, apartments, money and tips for survival in their adopted country.

Sculptor Marcos Soneira, musician Armando Santoyo and ceramist Lili Garcia, for example, share working space, food and money.

Soneira and Ms. Garcia work all day at an arts and crafts center while Santoyo, a jazz band player, practices at the center and plays with several orchestras on weekends.

"Whoever makes money buys the food for the week," Soneira said.

Nearly four-fifths of the 125,000 Cubans who arrived in the 1980 "Freedom Flotilla" from the port of Mariel have remained in Miami.

A negative image, bleak economic times and a less generous federal government made their assimilation tougher in many ways than for the first wave of Cubans who arrived after Fidel Castro's rise to power in 1959.

The new Cuban immigrants say they have been forced to band together, since many were cut off from federal aid in June. They repair each other's cars, lend each other money and alert one another to remaining social services.

Several thousand of the Mariel refugees arrived directly from Cuban jails, and the crimes of "Marielitos" have been frequently reported, adding to the problems of those seeking jobs and housing.

Juan Clark, a Miami-Dade Community College sociology professor who has interviewed dozens of the new refugees for a study on their adaptation to American life, said the new arrivals depend on each other more than any other Hispanic group in south Florida.

They feel discriminated against by many, especially long-time Cuban exiles who arrived more than 20 years ago. Some established Cubans — who tended to be better-educated and from Cuba's middle and upper classes — are embarrassed by the new arrivals, who some believe were sent here by Castro to taint the image of successful Cuban exiles.

Refugee Juan Benemelis, a former Cuban diplomat in Africa, said some longtime Cuban exiles wouldn't hire him after learning he arrived in the Mariel boatlift.

"Everything closed up around us when we arrived," said Benemelis, who lives in a rented home in Miami Beach. "Rents went up, used cars doubled in price, and the moment we identified ourselves as Mariel refugees, employers would deny us work."

Angola may release three Americans

REBEL-HELD SOUTHERN ANGOLA (AP) — Pro-Western guerrilla leader Jonas Savimbi handed over two Soviet airmen to the Red Cross today, clearing the way for the release of three Americans held by Angola's Marxist government.

"We agreed to release the two Russians because the American administration of President Reagan has asked us insistently since last November," Savimbi told an Associated Press reporter in the thatched-roof hut that serves as a headquarters for his National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) somewhere in the southern Angola bush.

"They contacted me directly because they wanted to get their citizens out of Angolan jails."

Gary Acker, 28, of Sacramento, Calif., and Argentine-born Gustavo Grillo, 36, of Jersey City, N.J., were arrested for having fought in Angola as mercenaries during the former Portuguese colony's 1976 civil war.

The third American is believed to be pilot Geoffrey Tyler, 32, of Lakeland, Fla., whose light plane made a forced landing in the Angolan bush in 1981.

Savimbi handed over the two Soviets to Dr. Piet Smit, president of the South African Red Cross, under a banner saying, "Let's stop the Soviet mad dream," a reference to the spread of East-bloc influence in mineral-rich southern Africa.

Both Soviet airmen wore long hair and beards and appeared to be in good condition. Both said they suffered back injuries when shot down by Savimbi's guerrillas in 1980 and later contracted malaria and a form of sleeping sickness during their captivity.

Savimbi, whose forces control a significant part of southeastern Angola, said the Marxist Angolan government has agreed to free three imprisoned Americans in exchange for the Soviets' release.

Once that is accomplished, he said, the white minority government of South Africa will free about 90 Angolan regular soldiers and Soviet Sgt. Maj. Nikolai F. Petretsov, who was captured by the South Africans during a September, 1981, firefight in southern Angola.

Angola says Savimbi is backed by South Africa, but the Pretoria government denies aiding him militarily. Many arms Savimbi has amassed in the past two years were left behind by South African forces after raids into Angola.

The Soviet Union and its allies provide major support to the Marxist Angolan government, including the presence of an estimated 12,000 to 15,000 Cuban troops. The Soviets also supply weapons to guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization, which from camps in southern Angola wages a bush war against South Africa's administration of Namibia.

Red Cross officials allowed an AP reporter to accompany them into the rebel-held area at his request and meet the freed Soviet airmen.

One of them, pilot Nikolai Molaev, 40, of Moscow, said he "came here to help improve the transport system. We were offered a contract to work for one year or two years. We were flying cargo around in boxes, and passengers. We never saw what was in the boxes."

Married and the father of two children, Molaev spoke in Russian, which was translated into English by a Red Cross interpreter.

"We could wash. We had clothes. We were well-treated," he said of his captivity. "I want to go home and improve my health and go to work."

Flight engineer Ivan Cherniatsky, 48, of Kiev, said Savimbi's guerrillas told him Thursday that he was to be freed. His captors also informed him of the death of former Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, Cherniatsky said.

Nearly 60 million will vote in Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Brazilians began voting today in the freest elections Latin America's biggest country has had since the armed forces took power 18 years ago.

Nearly 60 million people were expected to cast ballots in the election for state governors, federal congressmen, state legislators and municipal officials.

Tens of thousands of soldiers, state troopers and policemen guarded polling stations across the huge nation to prevent violence after a heated two-month campaign that resulted in numerous shootings, knifings and beatings.

President Joao Figueiredo voted early in Brasilia, the capital, for officials in Rio, his permanent residence. Voters were waiting in long lines when polling stations opened up at 8 a.m. (6 a.m. EST) in schools, government offices and athletic clubs.

"It's taking voters longer to mark their ballots than we expected," said Mario Simas, president of Rio's 22nd Electoral Section near famous Copacabana Beach. "But that's probably because there are many candidates."

Figueiredo, a retired army general who has promised a return to civilian rule, said in a television interview Sunday night that he hoped voters would pick officials who would "help democracy."

Figueiredo called the elections "a great moment." He said he was confident Brazilians would reject "demagogues and adventurers."

Four opposition parties were challenging the military regime's Democratic Social Party, including socialists and other leftists granted amnesty by Figueiredo in 1979 and allowed to return to politics.

The latest incident of pre-election violence occurred Saturday in the central state of Goias, where Dericles Carneiro Siqueira was shot to death while posting campaign posters for his cousin, a gubernatorial candidate.

Liquor sales were banned throughout Brazil from 6 p.m. local time Sunday until 6 a.m. Tuesday. In the state of Rio de Janeiro alone, 31,000 troopers were assigned to election-patrol duty.

Figueiredo's term doesn't expire until 1985; the officials elected now will form the Electoral College that will pick the nation's next president.

The Rio newspaper Jornal do Brasil called today "a key date in the definitive restructuring of Brazil as a democratic state."

Pre-election polls showed the Democratic Socialists leading in a slight majority of Brazil's 23 states but losing in strategic spots such as Rio and Sao Paulo.

Military leaders back Figueiredo's election program but have cautioned against "disorder."

Figueiredo, who said Sunday that many of the current opposition candidates "combated me," has guaranteed all winners will be sworn in, regardless of their political leanings.

Prominent candidates include Leonel Brizola, a leftist political leader who returned from exile under the presidential amnesty and was front-runner in the race for governor of Rio de Janeiro state.

Former President Janio Quadros and labor leader Luis Ignacio Lula da Silva are both running for governor of Sao Paulo on opposition tickets. Roberto Campos, Brazil's ex-ambassador to the United States and Britain, is a government-party hopeful for the Senate from Mato Grosso state.

Voting is mandatory for all literate Brazilians over 18.

Battles reported in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — New machine gun and mortar battles between rightist Christian and leftist Druse Moslem militiamen were reported today in Lebanon's Israeli-occupied central mountains. More than 50 people have been killed there in four weeks of sectarian fighting.

Meanwhile, President Amin Gemayel met today with King Fahd of Saudi Arabia in Riyadh, the official Saudi press agency reported. Diplomatic sources in the Saudi capital said Gemayel asked the king for economic aid to rebuild Lebanon's war-ravaged economy.

In Israel, air raid sirens wailed throughout the country bringing traffic to a stop and Israelis to their feet in a one-minute tribute to the 89 people killed in the collapse of an Israeli military building in Tyre, southern Lebanon.

The Voice of Lebanon radio station of the rightist Christian Phalange party said Christian and Druse gunmen exchanged fire overnight in the town of Aley, 12 miles southeast of Beirut, and the villages of Kfar Him and Benawati in the Chouf province south of Aley.

Police said a car bomb exploded late Sunday in the Druse-populated village of Aramoun, nine miles south of Beirut, killing one pedestrian and wounding four others.

Nuclear weapons spreading

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. military analysts say 31 countries, many of them involved with longstanding disputes with their neighbors, will be capable of producing nuclear weapons by the year 2000, the New York Times reported today.

The analysts, citing a recent U.S. intelligence survey, told the Times that the United States would be forced to consider the possibility of nuclear war with nations other than the Soviet Union.

"A continued effort should be made to reduce the spread of nuclear weapons capability, particularly nations hostile, or potentially hostile, to United States' interests," said the report Defense Guidance, a classified five-year plan of strategic direction for the armed forces.

The analysts said any nuclear confrontation with a foe other than the Soviet Union would be limited with small tactical nuclear weapons used, the report said.

"Priorities should be directed toward achieving survivability, endurance, and communications, command, control, and intelligence capabilities of our tactical nuclear forces," it read.

Advocates of a nuclear freeze have been critical of the United States and the Soviet Union for the spread of nuclear arms technology.

The report named as potential nuclear producers within 20 years: Israel, Egypt, Saudi Arabia; Iraq, Iran, Pakistan, South Africa, South Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, West Germany, Sweden, Italy, Spain, Canada and Australia.

Silence was deafening

You could have heard a pin drop

Staff Photo

The ball was bouncing right for SMU Saturday, as is graphically illustrated on this 14-yard TD run by Eric Dickerson. As Tech defender closes in, pitch out that had hit Dickerson's shoulder bounces back into his hands as he crosses 10-yard line.

If you've ever been to the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, you know what it was like. The acoustics are so good, they take the tourists to the back of the auditorium and then drop a pin on the stage. You can hear it, although it has always been suspected someone had been tipped off to drop a 2x4 behind the scenes.

Saturday at Jones Stadium, it was the same thing all over. Where seconds before there had been wild, unrestrained jubilation after Texas Tech tied SMU 27-27 with 17 seconds left, you could hear a pin drop when the Mustangs' Bobby Leach unleashed his 9.2 100-meter speed for a game winning 91-yard kickoff return. Or you could have, if it hadn't been for the racket created by a celebrating knot of white-jerseyed players in the north end zone.

EARLIER in the week, Midland High Coach Pat Culpepper turned us green, if you'll pardon the expression, with envy by revealing he was going to see the Penn State-Notre Dame game at South Bend. In retrospect, we realize we had more luck than the Irish in dutifully serving our "sentence" at Lubbock. It was a finish we'd hate to have missed.

When Ricky Gann, the hero a week before in a last second 16-14 win at TCU, booted that 28-yarder through the south uprights at Jones Stadium, it looked like he again had saved the day, supplying the Raiders with a nation-rocking 27-27 tie against the No 2 team in the land.

THEY SAY ties are like kissing your sister. This one was more like being caught unawares by Ellie-fant, our amiable St. Bernard, in one of her suddenly amorous moods.

West Texas partisanship wanted Tech to win while sectional pride also wanted SMU to remain unbeaten and in the race for the national championship and prestige it could bring the Southwest Conference.

The tie, as exciting as it was for the fans, really wasn't very satisfactory, even if we wouldn't have missed it for Notre Dame-Penn State, or Otterbein-Heidelberg.

In hurrying behind the end zone from the runway to the SMU dressing room to the Tech runway for the dash to the dressing room after the game, several Dallas-Fort Worth area writers were passed. From the grim expressions, one could already read their Sunday accounts. It was hoped they could disguise some of the venom by then. For SMU partisans, it was a grim moment. Down the drain was a 90 record, perhaps a Heisman Trophy, not to mention the most coveted prize of all, a chance at No. 1, and for SMU to make it, there could be no hint of a blemish.

AS TECH kicked off, we were so close to what happened, if we'd been as full of Tech as Tommy Lewis had been "full of Alabama" when he came off the Cotton Bowl bench to tackle Rice's TD bound Dicky Moegle in 1954, we could have intercepted Blane Smith's lateral or tackled Bobby Leach before he ever began his flight into SMU folklore.

Saturday's finish was exciting enough without any embellishments, but the Throw Back kickoff return elevated it into 'Play-of-the-Year' contention.

Smith, after grappling with and almost being pinned by the hostile sphere, finally won out in the nick of time and lateraled back to Leach, fastest player on the SMU team, on the nine. Actually Smith's inability to pick up the ball turned out to be the factor that made the play so unexpectedly successful, sucking the Tech defenders to the receiver and leaving a dash-lane down the sidelines.

It's something SMU works on each Thursday, but most of the players thought it was for kicks. Some even considered it a frivolous waste of time.

COACH BOBBY Collins, however, was well aware there might "come a time." He had used it a half dozen times before at Southern Mississippi, but never with the electrifying results achieved Saturday, or, for that matter, in a more desperate situation or one with more at stake.

"It's a play that requires a player with speed and a guy who can throw the ball. In the past, I've done it with a quarterback."

Collins said Tech had just kicked a field goal and tied the score. "Over there (Tech's bench), it was just like after our touchdown at the game's end. I couldn't get anybody's attention. I didn't want that 15-yard penalty and I wanted a squib kickoff so the clock would start as soon as they touched the ball. The time was ripe."

Collins decided to use the Throw Back when Tech lined up for the field goal. "I figured if we could get a good run back, we might be able to run a couple of plays and be in position to try a field goal."

In reflecting on past uses of the Throw Back, Collins said it had been used once to open a game. Once "at Virginia Tech we used it just before half. We used it to get good position against Bowling Green once."

It hasn't always brought the desired results. "We used it against Tulane a couple of years ago after they had scored in the last minute, but then we missed the field goal attempt. Ole Miss intercepted it on us."

"It's a once-a-season play. It won't be good any more this year." After the publicity it has received, Collins may never be able to use it again. "But it will make everybody play somebody wide for the rest of the season," he said.

Eric Dickerson wasn't on the field for the play, but he was grateful the others worked on it once a week. "Proper preparation prevents poor performance." Amen.

And then there were 2...

By Associated Press
The list of unbeaten-tied major college football teams has dwindled to two — Georgia and Southern Methodist University.
That's what SMU's initials could easily stand for following Saturday's unbelievable, inconceivable, incredible, fantastic, amazing, preposterous, impausible 34-27 triumph over Texas Tech.
Bobby Leach, who caught the "immaculate reception" tie-breaking 75-yard fourth-quarter touchdown pass that bounced off the shoulder of a Texas defensive back last month, also was on the receiving end of the latest miracle. He raced 91 yards for the winning touchdown with only four seconds left after an across-the-field lateral from Blane Smith, who had bobbed a bouncing squib kickoff.
The second-ranked Mustangs had worked on the lateral part of the play all season. The bobble, however, was unrehearsed.
The triumph enabled SMU to keep pace with top-rated Georgia, which turned back Auburn 19-14 on Herschel Walker's second touchdown, a 3-yard run with 8:42 remaining. That gave the Bulldogs their third consecutive Southeastern Conference championship and a berth in the Sugar Bowl. Their opponent probably will be fifth-ranked Penn State, which scored a touchdown, safety and field goal in the final period to defeat No. 13 Notre Dame 24-14.
However, third-ranked Arizona State was not as fortunate as Georgia and SMU. The previously unbeaten and untied Sun Devils committed four turnovers — two fumbles, two interceptions — and bowed to No. 7 Washington 17-13. The setback probably cost them an (See GEORGIA'S, 3B)

Boxer Kim shows no response to stimuli

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — South Korean fighter Duk Koo Kim, showing no sign of brain function or response to any stimuli, remained alive only with the help of life support machinery while the doctor who operated on him said it would be several days before he makes a decision on shutting the machinery off.
"We want to see if we can do anything else," Dr. Lonnie Hammargren said Sunday, though adding there was "no sign of any responsiveness" and little hope Kim could survive.
"What functions remain, we don't know," he added. Kim, knocked unconscious by World Boxing Association lightweight champion Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini in the 14th round of their title fight Saturday with a vicious right hand to the left side of the face, suffered a torn blood vessel and has a blood clot on one entire side of his head, according to Hammargren.
Mancini, who attended mass in a local hotel Sunday, said he was praying for the 23-year-old fighter.
"I pray for him and I ask the people of America and my family to pray for him" he said. "I also pray for his family."
Mancini, his voice cracking at times, said he was numbed by Kim's condition.

"I'm very saddened, very sorry it had to happen," he said. "It hurts bad to know you're a part of it."
Mancini, his family, and about 100 followers crowded into a room at the Tropicana Hotel to celebrate mass with the Rev. Tim O'Neil, a priest who traveled with Mancini from Youngstown, Ohio for the fight.
"Being a Christian I rely on my faith in God that all things happen for a reason," he said. "I just have to rely on my faith to get through this."
Mancini, wearing sunglasses to hide a bruised and swollen left eye, said his future in boxing was uncertain, adding that he was "going to have to sit down and seriously think about it."
The 21-year-old champion emphasized he was not thinking about retiring, but was thinking about not fighting again in the near future.
Kim, the WBA's top-ranked contender who received $20,000 for the nationally televised bout at Caesars Palace, took a beating throughout the scheduled 15-round fight, but did not go down until Mancini caught him early in the 14th round.
Kim struggled to his feet, but then fell unconscious to the canvas. He never regained consciousness as he was carried away on a stretcher and taken by ambulance to Desert Springs Hospital.

Boxing promoter Bob Arum, who staged the title fight, called for the temporary suspension of professional boxing while a blue-chip panel of medical experts studies the risks involved.
Arum said previous ring deaths occurred because the fighters were mismatched or the referee didn't stop the fight in time. This time, he added, the referee could do little.
"There was no opportunity to stop this fight," he said. "It was a one-punch knockout."
Virginia withdraws from WBA
RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Virginia has withdrawn its membership from the World Boxing Association, saying the WBA has "degenerated into an inefficient and undemocratic organization."
"Its rating system is a joke within the boxing community. Its rules and regulations are being manipulated by so-called super promoters," the Virginia Athletic Commission said in an announcement dated Friday but not released until Monday.

Once, when there was pro football

The Washington Post and Los Angeles Times
Once upon a time in a far country, there was a kingdom known, for want of a better designation, as the NFL and it was a happy place of milk and honey and God loved it and it was a place where men played little boys' games and they made people feel good just to watch and they were adored by the populace.

At first, they played just for the fun of it. It was a nice respite from the week at the roundhouse or the lathe, but it soon attracted the attention of a lot of bored rich people who got sick of polo on Long Island and wanted in on these fun and games. It was much more fun spending Sundays in a box high above the playing field with chilled champagne and Caspian caviar than it was to sit gossiping around a pool over gin-and-tonics and the same old boring crowd. Owning a football team was a lot more exciting than owning a railroad and better public relations.

Then, the villain, the serpent crept into this Garden of Eden — TELEVISION. It was an art form which could bring the sum of human experience into the living room visually at any hour of the day or night. War, disaster, comedy, tragedy, human suffering or human joy could be re-created at the flick of a switch. But it had the power also to jade, to cloy. Children became adults too soon watching it, adults became bored cynics, the world became a flashing screen. It burned up talent. Jokes which would last a touring vaudeville troupe for years became old hat overnight when the Nielsen reached 27 or more.

SO, THE medium hysterically embraced NFL football. It was almost the last bit of spontaneity on the air. Prior to TV, NFL football had been a cult taste, acquired only by the sports intelligentsia in certain key locations. Television threw it open to everyone.
This happy hunting-ground was presided over by an amiable, shrewd P.R. type with a perpetual tan and a smile to match, and he got cheerfully into bed with television which courted him and the NFL with that most aphrodisiac of approaches — truckloads of money. The head man or commissioner recommended only that the 27 members of this happy group split the money equally. Soon, there was $2.1 billion of this, or $14 million apiece annually.

THE PLAYERS, who had been cheerfully breaking their ankles or wrecking their knees or spraining their necks for years for a relative pittance, grew restless. First, they turned their case over to that familiar fungus that grows on the shady side of talent — the agents.

The agents were very good at getting increased revenue for the highly visible artists of this game but no good at all with the chorus line. I mean, who wants 10 percent of no percent? Agents have high overhead. All those condos and yachts and the dues at the La Jolla Racquet Club.
Into this vacuum stepped a pale, ascetic-looking labor organizer who wanted to represent the guys on the bottom of the pileup. Unlike the commissioner, he always looked worried and not out in the sun enough. He probably didn't even own a sun lamp. He fancied himself a cross between Samuel Gompers and Eugene V. Debs, and he told the NFL players, "We got to get a big percent of that money floating around."

"But we already do," the quarterbacks protested. "I know YOU do. But who's going to block for you?" he asked them.

SO, THEY all walked out. And the owners said, "Well, that's it! We're never going to give you the lion's share of the gross to distribute as you wish." And the labor organizer said, "They're bluffing! We'll stay out till they quit bluffing!" And the owners said, "They're bluffing!" And the weeks went by. And the commissioner got tanner and the labor organizer paler. And the quarterback said, "Hey, look! Some genius computed you get a four-year average in this league. If you subtract one-quarter of that, how do you make it up? And, if you get $700,000 a year, like that running back, that's a lot to lose, aye?" And one of the organizers' henchmen said, "Look, Mister, if you break a leg you get even less than that!" And a quarterback screamed, "He threatened me!" But the labor organizer said, "Tut, tut! He was smiling when he said it."

ALL OF A sudden, the Magic Kingdom was padlocked. And a place kicker complained, "Hey, the owners can go back to polo on Long Island or Cap D'Antibes!" And the labor organizer scoffed: "They're bluffing, they're not going to leave all that money lying there!" And some of the owners said, "Hey, my franchise is carried on the books at $36 million! But, without players, all I got is two telephones and the bad will!" And a negotiator said, "Don't worry, they're bluffing."

And so, that happy land is blighted. No people cheer, no banners fly, no hot dogs are sold, and even the reassuring voice of Howard Cosell is no longer heard. And the fear is, someday, nothing will be left but a slab: "Here lies the once-magical kingdom of the NFL — bluffed to death."

SMU sells out SWC tilt with Arkansas

FOOTBALL—CBS will televise Saturday Michigan-Ole Miss at 11:30 a.m. Saturday, although it will have no bearing on the Rose Bowl for the first time since 1971.

For the first time since 1949, SMU has sold out a home game in advance with all 65,101 Texas Stadium seats for Saturday's Arkansas game gone.

Backup quarterback Kevin Starkey's five-yard run early in the fourth quarter and running back Alvin (Skip) Walker's 14-yard romp with 4:21 left gave Ottawa, 6-11, a 30-20 upset win over Hamilton, 8-7, in the CFL East semifinals.

Coach Ray Alborn, with Rice on the brink of its first all-time losing season in 71 years, said after a 10th straight loss Saturday, "They can't run me off, I'm not quitting."

BOXING—Aaron Pryor's physician called charges that Pryor used stimulants in his fight with Alexis Arguello as "ridiculous."

Darryl Robinson of Houston, the 1981 U.S. welterweight champion, was upset by Lofti Ayed as Sweden defeated a team of U.S. Olympic hopefuls, 6-4, at Oster-sund Sweden...

HOCKEY—Potsdam State's Kathy Lawler became the all-time leading scorer with five goals and an assist Sunday in a 10-0 win over Vermont, snapping the 351 points by Phil Latrelle, Middlebury, Vt., College, from 1967-81...

BASEBALL—Cass Michaels, who played 12 years in the majors with the Chicago White Sox, Washington Senators and later for St. Louis, Philadelphia and Atlanta, died in Detroit at 65.

GOLF—Ben Crenshaw shot a 66-278 to win the Benson-Hedges tournament here by one stroke over Great Britain's Tony Jacklin...

QUICKIES—Washington Bullets forward Spencer Haywood will ask to be traded or retire "if an understanding can't be worked out" between himself and Coach Gene Shue.

outright Pacific-10 crown, a shot at the national championship and a berth in the Rose Bowl against No. 14 Michigan, which became the Big Ten's representative in Pasadena by trouncing Purdue 52-21.

Only two of the berths in the major bowls were "officially" filled — Georgia and Michigan — but rest assured the usual deals have been made and the announcements will be made next Saturday, the day the NCAA says it's okay to make public what everyone already knows.

SMU can clinch the Southwest Conference crown and a Cotton Bowl spot next weekend with a win or tie against No. 10 Arkansas, which stayed alive by swamping Texas A&M 35-0.

The Big Eight's team in the Orange Bowl will not be decided until Nov. 26 when No. 15 Oklahoma visits fourth-ranked Nebraska.

However, sixth-ranked LSU probably lost a shot at the Orange Bowl when the Tigers were upset by Mis-issippi State 27-24. Ninth-ranked Florida State, a 49-14 winner over Louisville, is a possibility for the Orange Bowl, along with No. 11 Clemson, which won the 1981 national championship by defeating Nebraska in Miami.

Georgia's Walker, who gained 177 yards on 31 rushes, including a 47-yard scoring gallop in the second period, smashed over midway through the final period to erase a 14-13 Auburn lead on Lionel James' 87-yard run five minutes earlier.

"This is the best football team we have played this year," said Georgia Coach Vince Dooley, an Auburn grad. "I thought it took a championship effort on our part to win. We came back each time they scored, and that's championship effort."

Alabamans upset with Tide losses

By DAVE GOLDBERG AP Sports Writer

To understand why Bear Bryant and Alabamans are so upset about losing three games, these facts should be considered:

— Saturday's 38-29 loss to Southern Mississippi coupled with last week's 20-10 defeat by LSU, marked the first time since 1969 that Alabama had lost two regular season games in a row.

— It was the first loss for the Crimson Tide in 58 games at one of its two home fields, Bryant-Denny Stadium in Tuscaloosa, named for Guess Who. They've lost there only one other time since the stadium opened in 1958 — 10-6 to Florida on Oct. 12, 1963. That's 1963.

— Alabama's record is now 7-3, a success most places, failure in Tuscaloosa. The Tide lost three regular season games in 1976, five in 1970, four in 1969 and four in 1958, Bryant's first year there. In the other 21 seasons Bryant has coached at Alabama, he's lost two games or less. Usually less.

Poor Bear, whose 322 wins are the most ever by a coach and whose record at Alabama is 231-45-9 a percentage of .836. "We're not a good team," he said after the game. "We're not the team I hoped to have."

What he hoped to have was a national championship team. Penn State appeared to be the only pre-bowl threat on the schedule, and Alabama never loses to Penn State. They didn't this year either, beating the Nittany Lions 41-21 on Oct. 9 at Legion Field in Birmingham.

But the next week, Alabama was upset by Tennessee, 38-35. Then they beat Cincinnati and Mississippi State in less than overpowering fashion. Last week, they lost to LSU.

After that loss, Bryant sounded like a man ready to throw in the towel — "I'm going to alert the president (of the university) and anybody who wants to know ... that we need to make some changes, need to start at the top."

By midweek, he was suggesting that he wanted to coach until he's 80 or so and this week he simply sounded like most of the mere mortals in his profession who lose at least twice as often.

"I expect if they played us again, they'd beat us again," he said of Southern Mississippi after Saturday's game. "This was no fluke, they just went out and outscored us."

By Sunday, the Bear was back growling at himself.

"This game wasn't lost yesterday," he said on his weekly television show. "It was lost in my recruiting. We recruited some we shouldn't have recruited and some we should have recruited got away."

That, actually, may be one of his problems. Bryant turns 70 next Sept. 11 and depending how the Alabama state law on state employee retirement is interpreted, next year or the year after will be his last. It has become the style among other recruiters to lure players away from Alabama by noting Bryant's imminent retirement to prospects.

New York business loans rise

NEW YORK (AP) — Commercial and industrial loans at major New York City banks rose $155 million in the week ended Nov. 3.

That compared with a decline of $386 million the previous week and a gain of $768 million in the comparable week last year, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said Friday. The figures do not include bankers acceptances and commercial paper.

The Federal Reserve Board did not issue its regular weekly report on the nation's money supply because of the Veteran's Day holiday. That report is scheduled for release today.

Indicators for the week ended Wednesday, as reported by the New York Fed, included:

- The average rate paid by major banks on large 90-day certificates of deposit fell to 8.96 percent from 9.03 percent the previous week.
- Federal funds, the interest rate on short-term loans of uncommitted reserve funds among banks, averaged 9.45 percent, up from 9.43 percent the previous week.
- The three-month Treasury bill rate averaged 7.90 percent, compared with 7.85 percent a week earlier.

More unsold goods on shelf

WASHINGTON (AP) — The stock of unsold goods held by U.S. companies inched 0.1 percent higher in September as total business sales declined 0.3 percent. It was the fourth straight month in a pattern of rising inventories and falling sales.

The poor sales record shown in the Commerce Department report Friday, the last major economic indicator the department compiles for September, added to many earlier signs that the economy was still mired in its 15th month of recession during that month.

However, the newly reported sales decline wasn't nearly as bad as the 1.5 percent drop recorded for August. And the small increase in the value of inventories was slightly under the 0.2 percent increase for August.

Increasing inventory levels can be a sign of recovery near the end of a recession, since company executives will begin to rebuild their stocks as soon as they become convinced that better economic times will help them sell the goods.

But there is little apparent good news for the overall economy when inventories rise at the expense of falling sales.

Ford recalling light trucks

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. is recalling nearly 80,000 1982 and 1983 model E and F-series light trucks for repair of defects involving the rear axle and hood.

Ford is notifying the owners of 79,362 of the trucks that a lock wedge in the rear axle could shift, allowing the axle bearing-adjustment nut to loosen, Robert H. Transou, Ford parts and service engineering manager, said Friday.

The loose nut could allow the left-side axle shaft to move outward, which could result in loss of rear-wheel braking or, in the extreme, separation of the left rear wheel assembly, Transou said in a statement.

Ford said it has had no reports of accidents or injuries related to the defect.

The recall represents about 14 percent of the E and F-series light truck production for the 1982 model year and "a very small percentage of the 1983s because we caught them fairly early," said Ford spokesman Mike Davis.

Small business less optimistic

NEW YORK (AP) — Presidents of small companies surveyed by a business magazine said they were growing less optimistic about the outlook for their businesses. They were almost evenly split on whether the economy would improve next year.

D&B Reports Magazine, a publication of Dun & Bradstreet Corp., said today its survey of 800 companies indicated that the percentage of executives expressing an optimistic outlook for their company dropped to 63 from 83 a year ago.

On the outlook for 1983, about 44 percent said they expected the economy to improve while about 45 percent said they expected business conditions to remain the same. Eleven percent said they expected the economy to weaken further next year.

The survey also said support for President Reagan's economic policies had declined. Thirty-four percent of the executives gave Reagan a "good rating" compared with 66 percent a year ago.

The survey, conducted in September and October, questioned the presidents of 800 companies with annual sales between $250,000 and $10 million. Dun & Bradstreet is a private business information and commercial credit monitoring concern.

Home interest ceiling lowered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government today is lowering its interest-rate ceilings on many federally backed home loans to 12 percent, the lowest rate in more than two years.

The one-half percentage point reduction is the fifth lowering of the ceiling since August. It applies to single-family home loans insured or guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration.

Samuel R. Pierce Jr., secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, predicted that applications for federally backed loans, already rising sharply from earlier ceiling reductions, would increase further.

"This is continued proof that the housing industry is on the road to recovery, and a strengthened housing industry will help lead this nation to economic revival," Pierce said in a statement Friday.

Lenders' rates for conventional home loans have also been falling in the past few months, but they are still several points higher than the FHA and VA ceilings.

Feds OK plastic liquor bottles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Convinced there no longer is any cancer threat, a federal agency decided that liquor may be sold in plastic containers for the first time since 1973.

The decision was made Friday by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, which ordered plastic liquor bottles off the shelves a decade ago because they contained suspected carcinogens.

The older bottles were made of different material than those approved for current use. Tests showed that components of the original containers "migrated" into the liquor.

The Food and Drug Administration has said the newer containers do not have the migration problem, a conclusion disputed by an environmental group and glass blower manufacturers.

Material used in the newly approved liquor containers is the same as that used for soft drink containers.

While providing no timetable, some major distillers expressed interest in shifting some brands from glass to plastic bottles.

Braniff, machinists meet again

DALLAS (AP) — Bargainers for Braniff International and the machinists union met for a second day Sunday in an effort to work out a contract under the airline's operating agreement with Pacific Southwest Airlines.

"Things are looking optimistic right now, and we're hoping for a good contract to come out of these meetings soon," said L.T. Faircloth, grand league representative of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

Braniff officials could not be reached for comment. Telephone calls to Braniff offices went unanswered Sunday.

The union, representing about 1,800 workers, had criticized what it described as a "take-it-or-leave-it" Braniff proposal that included work-rule and wage concessions.

"But it seems they have changed their attitude and are willing to make room for a bargain now," Faircloth said after Saturday's meeting.

Employee seniority, wages and retirement were discussed at the meeting, Faircloth said, "but no specific negotiations have been made in writing yet."

Braniff must win approval of its four unions before launching the joint operating agreement with PSA. The plan calls for a new airline under the PSA flag using Braniff workers and airplanes.

Braniff filed for protection from its creditors after ceasing operations in May. The airline has posted a $1 billion debt.

Reaganomics alternatives undiscovered

WASHINGTON — The members of both parties who have been saying since the election that the country needs an alternative to Reaganomics have a problem: they cannot figure out what it should be.

For all the talk since Nov. 2 about the need to create more jobs, there is no consensus on what should be done, and most of what is under discussion would have little short-run effect on the economy.

The great deterrent is the deficit. Spend more to stimulate the economy as has been done in the past, and you drive up the deficit, already frighteningly large. Drive up the deficit and you may force up interest rates. Force up interest rates and you may choke off the recovery that is your goal.

Assorted Democrats have proposed new jobs and housing programs. But they have been careful to say they would pay for these by cutting back elsewhere in the budget, principally on defense, or by increasing taxes. They would thus be taking back with one hand what they were giving with the other. They would not increase government stimulus of the economy, just change the mix of government programs.

That is also the most that President Reagan apparently intends to do. He is said to have no intention of offering any new jobs program beyond possibly a highway and bridge repair plan that would be financed by a higher gasoline tax. That plan, his chief economic adviser, Martin Feldstein, said would have a "very small ... net" impact on total employment.

"We can't resolve the problems and really do what is right for the unemployed unless we make the economy sound, expand the economy and thus create the jobs that we must have," Reagan said at a press conference last week. Past efforts at government job creation cost $66 billion and "got us nothing but an increase in unemployment," he declared.

However, the administration is aiming to hold economic growth to no more than 4 percent a year once a recovery from the recession begins, Feldstein said. That would mean the unemployment rate, now 10.4 percent and rising, would fall by only about half a percentage point a year, he said.

At that rate, it would take seven to eight years to move unemployment down to 6.5 percent, a level many economists, including Feldstein, now regard as the lowest level consistent with an inflation rate that is not accelerating.

House Democratic leaders are drafting a jobs program they hope to pass during the lame-duck session that begins Nov. 29. But party sources on Capitol Hill acknowledge there is little hope of action that quickly without the president on their side, which he is not, except possibly for the road building and gasoline tax plan.

There is also considerable skepticism among members of both parties that an emergency, quick-fix jobs program would work as intended. "If we pass a bill in a three-week session, it's bound to be a bad bill," declared Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., a moderate.

"I cannot see a major jobs program coming out of the lame duck," said House Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones, D-Okla.

Even liberal Democrats acknowledge there are problems with jobs programs of the kind they supported in the past.

"If you look at the EDA (Economic Development Administration) approach, a lot of the results didn't hit until unemployment came down. A lot of it was simply not job-producing," said one House Budget Committee liberal.

Jones agreed. "The decade of the '70s really did teach us that a massive jobs program is pro-cyclical and that there is a lot of waste," he said.

Nor is there total acceptance that new public works projects are the answer. "Basically there's nothing wrong with public works, but we can't just launch a big stopgap program without knowing its relationship to overall fiscal policy," warned Rep. James M. Shannon, D-Mass., a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Shannon, like many members of the House and Senate, wants more of a pay-as-you-go approach, with cuts in planned defense spending increases and tax increases offsetting any new outlays for jobs programs.

A key Democratic aide added, "People aren't talking about inflation per se, but they're still talking a lot about deficits, which reflects concern over inflation ... By conventional Democratic standards, this (the forthcoming House leadership plan) is relatively modest. In the past, a tax cut has been the engine of Democratic stimulus plans, but now all the talk is about tax increases" because of the deficits.

Indeed, most of the Democratic proposals, like those offered last week after a request from the House leadership by Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, involve distinctly modest amounts of money with new spending more than offset by cuts in present programs or tax increases.

Reuss called for a $2 billion community renewal program under which people who had been out of work 15 of the previous 26 weeks would be employed on projects, such as road maintenance and public building repairs. He also proposed a youth conservation employment program, mortgage interest subsidies and slightly more money for regional development efforts, and sending a directive to the Federal Reserve that it seek to lower long-term interest rates, but only slightly.

Expert says S&L industry will turn corner in 1983

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The savings and loan industry, suffering its worst financial battering since the Depression, will likely turn the corner in 1983 and may earn money for the first time in three years, a federal regulator says.

As a result of falling interest rates, Richard Pratt, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, predicts the industry will have "a good chance sometime in 1983" of moving from "a loss position to a profit position."

Even so, "There will still be a lot of firms that don't make that transition in 1983," he said in an Associated Press interview in his board offices in Washington.

Pratt made his comments as the U.S. League of Savings Associations, the nation's largest S&L trade group, prepared to open its annual meeting here today.

The bank board estimates savings and loans will lose $4.8 billion to $5.1 billion this year, surpassing the record $4.6 billion of 1981. They lost $3.3 billion in the first half of this year.

The huge losses were caused, industry officials say, by the inflation and high interest rates of recent years. S&Ls have large portfolios of old home loans agreed on years ago when interest rates were much lower. Because of that, they have had to pay more for new money than they were taking in from the home loans.

While Pratt predicted a brighter outlook next year, he cautioned that it may take five to 10 years for the industry to recover fully from its troubles and adjust to the wide-ranging changes in its authority approved by Congress in landmark legislation this fall.

"The institutions were severely weakened by this economic circumstance and ... there is tremendous change, a metamorphosis, they must undergo," he said.

The new deregulation bill gives S&Ls powers to operate more like commercial banks. Until now, the institutions have been allowed to do little more than write mortgages because they were restricted by federal rules.

Pratt said those new powers repre-

Reuss also suggested holding annual defense spending increases to about 5 percent greater than inflation, which would save $1.6 billion from the level set in the 1983 congressional budget resolution. He would also cap the 1983 personal income tax cut of 10 percent so that no taxpayer got more than a $700 reduction.

Together, these proposals would add only $500 million to federal spending in 1983 and reduce it in later years. Including the tax increase would reduce the 1983 deficit by $500 million, and by roughly $9 billion in both 1984 and 1985, according to Congressional Budget Office estimates.

This package of changes would produce "many hundreds of thousands and perhaps a million jobs over the next year," Reuss maintained. "Remember, the interest rate changes are a very, very important part of this."

But congressional economists as well as those in the Reagan administration warned the net impact on jobs would be far smaller, perhaps negligible. "That kind of impact is just not plausible," said one Capitol Hill economist.

Asked about Reuss' prediction of the number of jobs his plan would create, adviser Feldstein observed: "That doesn't seem very likely."

The problem is that the jobs produced by spending on bridges or roads or public buildings or a youth conservation corps wages are matched by cuts in defense spending or tax increases. That reduces jobs in other areas, although there might be a net gain if a somewhat larger number of less well-paying jobs replace some of those held by more highly skilled workers in defense industries, one economist said.

A tax increase that is, in effect, fully spent by the government to pay wages and buy goods and services might also add marginally to employment. But the magnitudes involved in most of the proposals are so small relative to the size of the economy that their impact could be hard to find.

As Feldstein put it, "If you take a few billion out of food and clothing and put it into filling potholes, you will have better roads but you will have done a few billion dollars worth of damage (to employment) in food and clothing."

The same logic applies, he agreed, to the plan gaining favor in Congress and the administration to increase the federal fuel tax by 5 cents a gallon to fund a $5 billion-a-year program of road and bridge repairs and some mass transit spending. Employment would be shifted around and the nation would have better roads, but in terms of added jobs "you just don't get a lot out of it," he said.

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., ranking minority member of the Senate Budget Committee, who has been pushing a proposal to eliminate the 1983 personal income tax cut, reduce planned defense spending increases and freeze most domestic spending at current levels, said the jobs bill pushed by House Democrats before the recent election was "total eyewash. It did nothing."

The best jobs bill, Hollings said, would be to "get these deficits down so industry could reinvest once more ... That's the best jobs bill I can think of."

On the House side, Chairman Jones expressed similar thoughts. "I think there will have to be some sort of revenue bill next year. When you look at the options and the size of the deficit, you know you will not whittle it in half by cutting defense. You will not whittle it in half by cutting defense and entitlements. There is nothing left except to tackle the revenue side. It's either that or admit you are not going to get the deficit under control."

Jones said he does not expect congressional Democrats to be united in their approach either in the lame-duck session or next year. But unlike the last two years, he said, the Republicans won't be united, either. "Nineteen eighty-three may be one of the big crap shoots," he declared. "We don't know how the coalitions will line up. It will be a pivotal year."

Jones' Senate Budget counterpart, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., is also determined to reduce the size of future budget deficits. At the same time, committee sources said, Domenici is working on a large, long-term program on highways, bridges, dams, airports, mass transit facilities and water treatment plants.

The program could cost $50 billion over five years and could be financed by a gasoline tax increase and a fee on imported oil.

Senate Republican leaders have not agreed to back the plan, which probably will not be fully drafted before January, said Domenici. "A multiyear program (and) to go ahead and start it sooner than we would otherwise do is absolutely in order."

A number of members in the House said they are also interested in a longer-term program, not just something that might or might not improve the situation in the short run.

Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., said, "There's a lot of interest in a comprehensive approach aimed not just at jobs but at overall productivity." Such a program would include help for exporting industries, more research and development money and greater education funding.

Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., chairman of a House Democratic Caucus task force on long-term economic policy, has no objections to a quick shot of spending on so-called infrastructure projects — roads, bridges etc. — if they do not conflict with his longer-term goal of "investments dealing with reindustrialization and world trade, including aggressive pursuit of (lower non-tariff trade barriers) and targeting of U.S. investments overseas."

later on to join with others to better survive in the new climate.

"As operators deal with this much more competitive environment, many of them are going to decide that they would prefer to amalgamate with someone else to try to get a better market position, a little larger economic entity, and possibly more management strength," he said.

Reagan's 'plan of action' no breakthrough to Europeans

By BRADLEY GRAHAM
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post

BONN — President Reagan's announcement Saturday of a U.S.-European "plan of action" on East-West trade is being portrayed in Western Europe as no breakthrough, but rather a reinforcement of previous understandings within the alliance.

While allied officials welcomed the removal of American sanctions against the Soviet gas pipeline, British Foreign Minister Francis Pym said Sunday that European governments had made "no concessions" in return for what he said had been "a unilateral decision by the Americans." Strategic studies on various aspects of East-West trade that the allies have agreed to undertake would be done, Pym said, "without commitments" to impose new limits.

Other officials said privately that the alliance accord constituted a promise only to pursue more intensively a program of review and consultation on trade relations with the Soviet bloc that Western leaders already had outlined at summit meetings last June in Versailles and Bonn.

Disputes arose after those summits as to just how much restraint in Soviet-bloc business the allies had endorsed. The sharpest clash over interpretation occurred between Washington and Paris, and this conflict appeared still somewhat unresolved over the weekend in view of France's declaration that it was not a party to the new agreement.

At best, the latest accord seems to represent a reaffirmation by the Western Europeans that trade is at least an element worth considering in the overall East-West strategy mix, in the view of observers here. But it is still uncertain whether the North Atlantic Treaty Organization governments, plus Japan, can work out new restrictions on economic relations with the Soviet bloc.

"A conceptual framework already existed in NATO that will now be examined and will become more precise," explained a senior West German official involved in drafting the agreement. "We have essentially made more precise how, in the framework we already agreed to, more headway can perhaps be made."

At the same time this official and other European diplomats stressed that any new concrete limits in the three key economic areas slated for review — financial credits, technology transfer and energy — are bound to involve lengthy U.S.-European negotiations in specialized diplomatic forums.

"If we reach agreement at the end of the studies, that would be helpful," Pym told a British Broadcasting Corp. radio interviewer. He said misunderstandings about what had been achieved at the Versailles economic summit had led to the damaging extension of U.S. sanctions against the Soviet pipeline project. "We will try to assure that nothing like it happens again," he said.

Some of what is in the new agreement reflects intensified efforts already under way. In the area of technology transfer, for instance, alliance officials have been meeting for months on a U.S. request to add scores of industrially sensitive items to a list of strategic goods prohibited for sale to the Soviet bloc. The American aim is to restrict not only individual products, such as computers, but also basic technologies, such as microcircuits, that could have a military application in the Soviet Union. Officials involved in these secretive discussions say a study on expansion of the existing embargo list could take as long as a year.

In the area of financial credits, European officials pointed to recent new costs imposed on Soviet loans and indicated a reluctance to add more.

Following last summer's summit agreements, Western states increased the minimum interest rate on government-subsidized loans to Moscow by about 4 percent over last year, to 12.4 percent.

Under the new accord, Western governments have accepted procedures to share more extensively the details of their individual financial relations with the Soviets. Officials here say the procedures were agreed to in principle at Versailles.

But U.S. attempts to get the allies to insist on larger down payments, shorter payback periods and other new conditions for Soviet loans continue to be looked on hesitantly here. At the same time such options are seen by officials as more acceptable than hard limits on credit volumes.

European officials made clear they still do not back the notion that economic measures could or should be used to punish the Soviet Union. "It is important to understand what we are talking about," another high-ranking West German official said. "We are not talking about a trade war or about punishing others, but how to serve our own security interests."

IRS adds collection staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — The collection division of the Internal Revenue Service, whose only task is coaxing delinquent taxpayers to hand over their share, is hiring another 4,000 staffers to cope with a record amount of business.

When IRS closed its books on fiscal year 1982 at the end of September, two million individual and business taxpayers were delinquent to the tune of a record $24.6 billion. That compares with 1.4 million accounts and $20.5 billion owed a year earlier.

IRS sent first-time notices of delinquency to 17 million taxpayers in 1982, up from 15.6 million the year before. It closed 15.2 million accounts in 1982 and 12.3 million in 1981.

The amount of delinquent taxes is growing chiefly because "we have not had sufficient resources to collect taxes in recent years," said Larry G. Westfall, assistant IRS commissioner. He said the economic recession has made the problem worse because of a growing number of bankruptcies and businesses that are short of cash.

During the current fiscal year, IRS plans to hire 5,200 new people, including 4,000 in collections. Most of the 4,000 already have been hired, Westfall said.

The division hired or borrowed about 1,000 new personnel in 1982. As a result, Westfall said, collection of delinquent taxes climbed to $7 billion from $6.3 billion the previous year.

Westfall released the figures as he outlined several new provisions enacted by Congress to protect the rights of taxpayers. The changes affect those who, after repeated notices, still have not paid delinquent taxes and who become the subjects of tougher collection action by IRS.

Janus Fund president has few regrets about strategy

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When Wall Street began its historic rally in August, the Janus Fund had only about half its assets invested in stocks.

Thus, in the early days of the rally, the mutual fund's gains lagged behind some of its competitors that were in the market to the hilt.

That situation might have left many an investor gnashing his teeth in frustration. But Thomas Bailey, Janus' 44-year-old president, admits to few regrets about his strategy. To try to time every swing in the market perfectly is "an exercise in futility," he said in an interview last week.

Janus, a 13-year-old fund with about $75 million to $80 million in assets, invests with a "reactive rather than predictive" philosophy. As Bailey put it, "the key question is what is the primary trend."

He told the fund's holders in a report last June: "Our concept here is capital preservation. Lost money is simply more tangible to us than lost market opportunity, and for that reason we have consciously made ourselves somewhat of a money-market fund for the time being."

That kind of cautious approach was good enough to earn Janus a place on this year's Forbes magazine honor roll of top-performing funds, with an A rating for its investment performance in both good markets and bad. The fund's average annual total return over the past 12 years has been an impressive 18.4 percent.

The fund-based fund — named for the Roman god of "good beginnings" — is something less than a financial household name. Even with some strong recent growth, it is small by the standards of its industry.

In many ways, Bailey himself doesn't fit the very mold of the modern money manager. His wardrobe runs heavily to cowboy boots and jeans, and one of the investments he's fondest of talking about is a pair of lifetime lift passes at a Colorado ski resort. He bought them in the '60s for $1,500, a fraction of what they would cost today, and he likes to use them a lot.

In a business that puts a high premium on smooth-talking salesmanship, Bailey can also be remarkably candid about his mistakes as well as his successes. In his June report to shareholders, for example, he discussed at length a Janus-owned stock that had flopped.

The fund, he said, gave the stock "a one-way ticket out of the portfolio. So it sometimes goes."

"I'm not Houdini," he volunteered last week. In one of the market's sharpest drops in the late 1970s, he recalled, Janus was fully invested in stocks and took a beating. Distressed, Bailey sold some stocks just as the decline was bottoming out. "I just couldn't stand it," he said. "It was a big mistake."

But even with missteps like those, Janus can claim a pretty fair record of living up to Bailey's dictum: "Don't lose a lot of money in bad periods, and do pretty well in good times."

Having stated his reservations about forecasting, Bailey admits to the current belief that "we could have quite a positive environment for several years," with inflation and interest rates having fallen sharply. "People tend to underestimate the power of those trends," he said.

Accordingly, Janus has lately increased its stock holdings to 70 percent of its assets, he reported.

Are there, he was asked, any special rules or formulas he follows in picking stocks? "The one rule about this business," he replied, "is that there are no rules."

Southern California find biggest since Prudhoe

LOMPOC, Calif. (AP) — Authorities now seem certain that an oil discovery off the Southern California coast is the biggest find in more than a decade since Alaska's Prudhoe Bay field led to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System.

Initial estimates of the giant Point Arguello field, about 150 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles off the coast near Lompoc, placed the amount of recoverable crude oil it could produce at 100 to 500 million barrels.

But industry analysts and others now predict it may contain one billion recoverable barrels, or about 42 billion gallons.

The field near Vandenberg Air Force Base has drawn a cautious response from state coastal officials and environmentalists since it was announced Oct. 21 by Chevron USA Inc., and Phillips Petroleum Co., partners in the site.

"The rate of exploration is accelerating at a rapid clip," state Coastal Commission executive director Michael Fischer said at the time. "The question now is how much is too much?"

Point Arguello is only about 60 miles from Santa Barbara, where a disastrous oil spill in 1969 killed hundreds of birds and drew public wrath.

"It's a tremendous new discovery," Stephen Chamberlain of the American Petroleum Institute told the New York Times last week.

No one is predicting, however, that Point Arguello ultimately will be as large as Prudhoe Bay, discovered in 1968 and estimated to hold up to 10 billion barrels and estimated to hold up to 10 billion barrels Prudhoe Bay's oil is shipped south across Alaska through the Alaska pipeline and provides one million barrels daily to American oil production.

Less than a dozen fields in the United States are believed to currently contain 500 million or more barrels of recoverable oil. Two of those are in California's Kern County.

Donald L. Fernow, senior fuels analyst at the brokerage house of Thomas & McKinnon, said Point Arguello is "possibly a supergiant." He noted that "initially it was thought the Prudhoe Bay field had only a billion barrels."

An oil field believed to hold more than 100 million barrels is classified as a "giant," while a field with more than one billion barrels is called a "supergiant."

"I've always told the students, you must be honest with the camera. If you find you have taken a picture which is untrue, you must never let it be used. It's your responsibility. You must kill it."

— Russell Lee

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Four decades of photojournalism are represented in the current show hanging at the McCormick Gallery at the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The exhibit, which will close Nov. 24, is a must for Americans who lived through the Great Depression, as well as those who didn't.

It features the work of Russell Lee — artist, photographer and teacher.

In the early 1930s, Lee and his wife, Doris, lived in an artist colony at Woodstock, N.Y. He was painting then, but it wasn't long until his attention turned to photography.

Because Lee felt his paintings lacked depth, he got a camera to help him capture what he wanted to paint.

"Everything I did (in drawing) ended up about the same way — deadpan expressions. I thought that (photography) would help, but I got the camera and then got interested in photography and have been in it ever since," Lee stated in "Russell Lee Photographer" by F. Jack Hurley.

That was in 1935.

Several of the photographs on this page are from his individual jaunts into New York during the winter of 1935-36.

Others were done after Lee went to work as a photographer for the Resettlement Administration (better known as the Farm Security Administration). The director of the administration's photographic project was Roy Stryker.

His career as a government photographer came to a close in 1947 when he discovered he had an ulcer. His assignments for the U.S. government prior to that time had included the Middle East and China during World War II. Some of these photographs are also included in the exhibit.

The next door in his career was opened by his former boss, Stryker, who wanted Lee to get into industrial photography. And he did. Lee spent a great portion of the next two decades working for various companies. Some of these photographs are also in the current show which is from the International Museum of Photography at the George Eastman House.

Industrial photography was not his only interest during this time. In addition, he was also involved each fall from 1949-62 in a major photographic workshop sponsored by the University of Missouri.

During the years of 1965 and 1973, Lee made teaching the main focus in his life.

It was during these years that he taught on a regular basis at The University of Texas at Austin. He was forced to retire in 1973 because he had reached the mandatory retirement age. He was 70.

But he didn't quit teaching. Former students still came by for critiques of their works.

After viewing the show at the McCormick Gallery, it's easy to see why. Perhaps the most obvious characteristic of his work is his honest, straightforward approach to chronicling the decades captured by his camera.

Firefighters battle blazes in three mobile homes, house

The arrival of cooler weather in the Midland area this weekend brought the traditional rash of residence fires as Midland firefighters battled three blazes in mobile homes and one house fire.

A fire late Sunday evening caused heavy damage to a mobile home belonging to Ronnie Wheeler of Midland. The fire was blazing on arrival and firemen used 300 gallons of water to bring it under control.

The fire caused heavy damage to the kitchen of the home, located at 1402 S. Pratt. There was smoke and heat damage throughout the home.

Fire reports indicated probable cause of the blaze was a burner on the stove which had been left on.

Another mobile home fire damaged the wiring, plumbing and insulation on the underside of a home belonging to Frank Deanmon, 2200 S. Lamesa Road, Sunday evening.

The fire began shortly before 4 p.m. and firemen extinguished it with 100 gallons of water just after 5 p.m. Fire reports indicated the home sustained smoke damage throughout in addition to the damage to the wiring, plumbing and insulation.

Probable cause of that blaze was an electrical short, reports indicated.

Fire also caused heavy damage to a mobile home belonging to Don Capehart Sunday morning.

The fire, which broke out in the residence at County Road 1130 North and County Road 60 East about 8:30 a.m., was brought under control by firemen using 200 gallons of water. Probable cause of that blaze was a faulty hot water heater, fire reports noted.

A vacant house at 4003 Cedar Spring was damaged by fire earlier Sunday. The fire began about 4:50 a.m. and was extinguished about 6:19 a.m. by firemen who used 500 gallons of water.

Fire reports indicated the blaze heavily damaged the structure's attic, hall and a bedroom. The house also sustained heavy smoke and heat damage throughout.

Cause of that fire currently is under investigation by the fire marshal's office.

Education week reception slated

In observance of American Education Week, a reception for Midland Independent School District teachers and administrators will be held Tuesday from 4:30 to 6 p.m. in the board room of the Teachers' Credit Union.

November 14-20 has been designated American Education Week to increase public understanding and appreciation of the schools, to encourage parents to visit the schools, to secure civic and community support, to improve the schools and to help students gain an appreciation of the objectives of the schools.

The theme this year is "A Strong Nation Needs Strong Schools."

AEW was initiated after World War I draft boards discovered that about 25 percent of the draftees were illiterate and about 29 percent were physically unfit. In 1917, the American Legion, the National Education Association and the U.S. Office of Education discussed launching an educational campaign to correct such deficiencies. As a result, a series of conferences began on a regular basis in 1919, leading to a plan for an annual nationwide observance of American Education Week and to the first AEW observance in 1921.

Early AEW programs featured daily topics based on fundamental concepts of educational purposes and objectives. From 1929 through 1968, representatives of the sponsoring organizations chose a general theme with supporting daily subtopics. Beginning in 1969, however, the co-sponsors chose a general theme of national concern for each year.

The public schools are an important and integral part of society. The concept of a free and equal education is an American tradition and this country's strength. The students of today are the leaders of tomorrow and all citizens have a responsibility to support the public schools.

Police investigate storage building theft

Midland police were investigating a number of theft and burglary reports this morning including the reported theft of more than $2,600 in personal items from a storage building.

Robert Armendarez, no address listed, told police the items, which included a 25-inch color television, two electric guitars, an organ, an eight-track stereo, other sound equipment and musical instruments, were taken from the storage building either Saturday or Sunday.

Carl Herford of 5101 N. A. Apt. 25, reported the theft of an amplifier, cassette deck, turntable and two speakers from his apartment. Total value of the items was $800.

Steven Lovelady of Midland reported the theft of a 19-inch black and white television, two mattresses and a box of assorted women's clothes from a truck parked at 3801 W. Wall Ave. Total value of the items was $350.

Authorities said Miss Elms told them that she, her mother and sister were abducted about 12:30 a.m. from a Kermit car wash and taken to a remote area of West Texas.

The girl escaped about 2:30 a.m. while her mother was being killed near a cattle-watering tank, authorities said.

Miss Elms suffered minor cuts and abrasions during her escape, but rereached help at an oil drilling site about 8 a.m. after running five miles nude and with her hands bound.

The nude bodies of her mother and sister were found in a shallow grave 16 miles southeast of Kermit. Both had been stabbed in the heart, authorities said.

The 44-year-old Harrelson, a convicted contract killer, is accused of killing Wood for a $250,000 fee from convicted narcotics smuggler Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra, 39.

The trial is entering its sixth week. Prosecutors rested their case Friday.

The groundwork for Harrelson's alibi witnesses was laid Friday by defense attorney Tom Sharpe Jr. when he called Dallas private investigator Kenneth Presley to the stand.

Man to get new trial because of juror misconduct

By VINCE GIORGI Staff Writer

An El Paso appeals court sided with a Midland defense attorney's claim that juror misconduct deprived his client of a fair trial and ordered a new trial for Jose Dolores Duran, a Midlander convicted of indecency with a child and sentenced to life imprisonment in 1981.

The Nov. 10 ruling, issued by the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Supreme Judicial District, was in response to Midland attorney Bill Smith's appeal of a ruling by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin, who denied a new-trial motion on July 17, 1981.

During a hearing on the motion, Smith said at least three jurors had tainted their guilty verdict by doing their own investigative work and allowing that information, not introduced as evidence during the trial, to weigh in their verdict.

Duran, then 26, was convicted of abducting a 7-year-old girl on Feb. 6, 1980, and committing indecency with her in his eastside Midland home. The abduction allegedly occurred at the intersection of Louisiana Avenue and

Fort Worth Street.

During defense arguments at the trial, Smith used large plats of the main streets and area in question in an attempt to illustrate that the alleged crime could not have been committed and gone completely unnoticed by witnesses. Smith, court-appointed defense attorney for the case, argued that the only routes from the alleged abduction site to Duran's home led through open, populated areas.

Besides the girl, no witnesses were presented by the prosecution. But the jury found Duran guilty and because of earlier convictions for robbery, aggravated assault and sexual abuse, he was sentenced to life in prison.

Following the trial, Smith hired Bill Barber, a private investigator, to query jurors on how they reached their decision.

Barber, in the course of his interviews, found that a few jurors had visited the scene on June 8, 1981, to personally verify the location of streets and other landmarks presented on defense's plats.

One juror later said the plats were inaccurate, and that another route to Duran's home led through a weedchoked alley. Smith insisted the plats were accurate, both during the trial and the hearing.

Another juror phoned the National Weather Service to determine the lighting and weather conditions at the time of the alleged abduction.

Armed with the findings, Smith requested a new-trial hearing, at which he argued that the jurors used information not admitted as trial evidence during their deliberations. Jurors are instructed during trial proceedings to consider only that information introduced inside the courtroom.

Smith called the jury foreman, the juror who phoned the National Weather Service, and one juror who visited the scene, to testify at the hearing. All contended the information derived from their own investigations had no bearing on their verdict.

Baskin ruled that the jurors had not been influenced by their sloth, and denied the motion for a new trial.

But the appeals court, in an opinion authored by Associate Justice Charles R. Schulte, reversed Baskin's decision.

In his opinion, Schulte wrote: "The 'investigative section' of the jury reported their independent findings to the remainder of the group during deliberations. They stated that the Defense's plats were incorrect, failing to show an obscure alley leading directly to the Appellant's apartment. In addition, weeds and other vegetation were present which could explain the absence of other witnesses. The weather bureau research disclosed an overcast day which, coupled with sun-down, provided reduced visibility at the time of the offense."

"The source of this evidence was clearly improper, and the character of the information clearly detrimental to the Appellant. The additional evidence impeached the Defense exhibits, discredited the defense counsel in the eyes of the jury, and bolstered, by explanation, the State's evidence."

Unless the State appeals the appellate court's ruling, Duran will be brought to Midland for another trial. According to Smith, Duran is now serving time in the Huntsville Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections.

Girl to testify in Sharp trial

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — A 14-year-old girl who fled nude from a death scene where her mother and younger sister were sexually assaulted and killed will be a key witness against an Odessa oilfield worker accused of the brutal slayings, prosecutors said.

Prosecutors say Michael Eugene Sharp, 28, will first be tried on a capital murder charge in the slaying of 8-year-old Christi Elms last June 11.

Sharp also is accused of the slaying of Brenda Broadway, 31, the child's mother and the abduction of Mrs. Broadway's other daughter, Selena Kay Elms, who escaped by fleeing naked over five miles of rugged rangeland.

The teen-ager's descriptions given to authorities while she was under hypnosis led to Sharp's arrest in Sweetwater five days later as he stepped from a bus bound for Louisiana.

Authorities said Miss Elms told them that she, her mother and sister were abducted about 12:30 a.m. from a Kermit car wash and taken to a remote area of West Texas.

The girl escaped about 2:30 a.m. while her mother was being killed near a cattle-watering tank, authorities said.

Harrelson may take stand in Wood trial

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The man accused of assassinating a federal judge is expected to take the stand this week, and defense attorneys hope to prove he was out of town on the day of the murder.

A parade of witnesses was called to testify today that accused triggerman Charles V. Harrelson was in Dallas on May 29, 1979, when U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was shot in the back outside his San Antonio townhouse.

The 44-year-old Harrelson, a convicted contract killer, is accused of killing Wood for a $250,000 fee from convicted narcotics smuggler Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra, 39.

The trial is entering its sixth week. Prosecutors rested their case Friday.

The groundwork for Harrelson's alibi witnesses was laid Friday by defense attorney Tom Sharpe Jr. when he called Dallas private investigator Kenneth Presley to the stand.

'Kensington' board game is latest invasion from Britain

By TIMOTHY HARPER
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — "Let's assume you're an idiot," the round-bellied Welshman bellows, as he accosts strangers in parks, on campuses and in stores.

He lays out a colorful board, does out 15 little markers to the stunned stranger, offers a 30-second explanation of rules and begins to play a game called Kensington.

Within a few minutes, the game is over, the stranger is ready to fork over $10 for the set and Brian Taylor is hollering at someone else: "Let's assume you're an idiot."

It is a tribute to the board game Taylor and his friend, Peter Forbes, invented, rather than to Taylor's sales-manship, that the curiously simple yet complex game is selling well.

In fact, Taylor's insistent but dubious sales technique might leave one wondering why Kensington — named after the London park where the duo devised it between welfare checks — is selling at all.

IT HAS SOLD over 1 million copies in Great Britain since it was introduced there a year ago, and retailers foresee a similar success in the United States.

"Sales are fantastic," says Maggie Caserta, the assistant buyer in the stationery department at Bloomingdale's, the trendy East Side Manhattan department store.

"We cannot keep it on the shelf," Ms. Caserta said, noting that about 200 games had been sold in the first two weeks Kensington was on the shelves. "It's a very hot item, and I think it's going to get hotter as we get closer to Christmas."

"I'VE BEEN playing a lot," says Nick Fiore, a 27-year-old television programming analyst who purchased the game after friends brought it along on a Maine vacation.

"It's really got all the positive aspects of chess and backgammon with none of the negative aspects," he said. "There's a lot of strategy, but without the luck of backgammon, for instance."

Thus far, the game is available in stores in New York and Boston, where it is produced by the Samuel Ward Co. in a colorful package that looks like a record album.

Taylor and Forbes might very well be the Laurel and Hardy of the board game world. The 24-year-old Forbes is a skinny, 6-foot-6 architectural school dropout who claims he has never shaved. His most noteworthy wheeler-into the world of commerce was selling apartment door peepholes to crime-

ward San Franciscans. At 46, Taylor is a short, round-bellied Welshman who bellows and bubbles nonstop. He also is a serious painter whose work hangs in several prestigious galleries around the world, including New York's Museum of Modern Art. He claims never to have owned a suit or a "real job."

Both Taylor and Forbes were on the dole when they spent much of six months on a Kensington Gardens park bench screaming at each other over a myriad of rules before discarding all but a half dozen to create the game.

THE SHAPE of the board, the key to the intrigue of Kensington, is seven intertwined hexagons — an ancient Persian carpet pattern the two friends happened upon in a dusty book at a Portobello Road flea market in London. It is one of the few board games not based on a grid.

By alternately playing their 15 pieces, two players vie for position until one captures all six points of a hexagon. A game should take only 15 or 20 minutes, according to the inventors.

"I tend to get bored with games, so we wanted to keep it short," said Taylor. "The board is so complex, with so many mathematical permutations that we could have very simple rules and still have a complex game. A 6-year-old can play it. A pygmy can play it. A man from Mars can play it."

When Taylor and Forbes first tried to sell the game, they sent free copies to a number of celebrities who played it and rewarded the inventors with notes of thanks.

"It has just the right mixture of simplicity and subtlety," actor Omar Sharif wrote.

Fantasy art helps youth face reality

By MICHAEL SMITH

Crippled with muscular dystrophy since he was 5, the Franklin County youth has referred to that motto often. Drawing the sinewy heroes of his own invention is more than a pastime for the sophomore at Waynesboro Senior High School.

"I was born to draw," Ritchie says, his lips moving in Clutch Cargo cartoon style. But his interest was heightened, he said, because of his confinement to a wheelchair.

Ritchie would like to have the powerful physiques of the characters he draws. What he can't do in reality, he can do in a fantasy world. If he could, he said, he'd like to be the Incredible Hulk and "find a villain to fight against me to test my strength."

Next to the Hulk, the young artist said he'd like to be Stuntmaster, a superhero he created. "He's like a stuntman and he works for a spy organization," Ritchie said.

Stuntmaster is but one of 40 superheroes Ritchie has concocted over the years. Some are villains and some are good. There are the Amazing Six: Metal Ape, Giganto, Solar Stretch, the Human Javelin, Freeze Phantom and Micro-man.

Villains include the sinister Mr. X, characterized by a coat of crossed bars on his ample torso. Mr. X frequently scraps with Stuntman, but Ritchie says, "Good usually triumphs over evil."

About the same time Ritchie learned he had the Duchenne variety of muscular dystrophy (MD), he picked up his first pencil. This form of MD usually strikes boys, is hereditary and attacks the muscles of the trunk and limbs. Life expectancy is less than 25 years.

Ritchie said his first drawings were crude stick figures of dogs. Later he rounded the heads and rendered other animals. It wasn't long before he stumbled onto comic books and superheroes and he was hooked.

Last year he sold wildlife drawings of a tiger, a snow leopard and an ocelot while recovering from spinal surgery in Elizabethtown Hospital. In addition, he has sold an occasional greeting card.

But his passion is superheroes and his goal is to illustrate for Marvel Comics. Ritchie spends as many as six hours a day on non-school days sketching and coloring his creations with pencils. He said, "I first did it because I had to have something to do."

His hand movements are restricted but his mother, Ellen, said "he's very patient" and may spend two hours on one drawing.

She hopes the exercise Ritchie gets from drawing will slow down the muscle degeneration in his arms.

Dancewear: Newest trend in fashion

By SALLY KORIS
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Exercise-oriented people probably won't be surprised to learn that dancewear — leotards, tights and leg warmers — is one of the fastest growing areas of the apparel business.

Danskin and Capezio no longer dominate the field selling black leotards and pink tights to dancers. Suddenly, dozens of companies are selling striped, prints and abstract designs to the most sedentary of people.

"The field is growing so fast that nobody really has a finger on it," says Susie Wyninger, (cq) vice president of R&R Sportsware Inc., a company making dancewear under the Dance Fever by Judith Lowe label. "When the tennis trend faded, physical fitness buffs started spending more time in dance and aerobics classes, fueling a boom."

E.I. duPont, the giant company supplying fabric to many dancewear manufacturers, estimates sales of dancewear will increase 25 percent to 30 percent this year at the retail level — a stunning figure especially since retail sales have been essentially flat for a year-and-a-half. The Delaware-based company has also calculated that there are now at least 124 leading manufacturers compared to 12 only three years ago.

"The boom comes more from people developing physical fitness as part of their lifestyle," says Joyce Knoller, a spokeswoman for the venerable 100-year-old Danskin. "Singles bars aren't the places to go after work in New York any longer — people are going to health clubs and putting on dancewear to take aerobics classes. They are just as concerned about looking good in those setups as they are when they go to a bar or a party."

And the same people who wear leotards and legwarmers and warm-ups suits to aerobics classes are wearing them around town. "It's become a way of dressing," says Wyninger of R&R Sportsware. "The same women who once built their recreational wardrobe around tennis clothes are now building their wardrobes around dancewear."

Danskin introduced the concept of "fashion" to dancewear in 1976 with a line of shiny, satin-looking antron nylon line leotards. The company, which is now owned by International Playtex, an Esmark subsidiary, also promoted wide use of dancewear with its advertising line: "Danskin. Not Just for dancing."

"There's always been a demand for fashionable dancewear, but it wasn't offered before," says Stevi Brooks, owner of a $6 million manufacturing firm bearing her name. Brooks was one of the earliest manufacturers to use of cotton blend fabrics in a variety of styles. There's been so much change, says Brooks, whose line consists of 150 fashion styles in 50 colors, that "what I thought were basics a few years ago are dated, what I thought was high fashion is now basic."

Dancewear is so popular that even streetwear manufacturers such as Evan Picone are beginning to manufacture it in an attempt to get a share in what some say is now a $500 million a year market. Says Kathy Dupont, a partner in Barely Legal, "Everybody's jumping on the bandwagon."

Any manufacturer has to guard his or her designs carefully, because they are prone to knock-offs. Brooks says she got orders for an outfit based on one she owned as a four-year-old and found it had been copied before she even shipped it to the stores. Says Brooks, "You just hope you ship your designs before your competition does."

Because competition is so intense, manufacturers and garment industry observers are predicting a shakeout in the year or so, with only 20 to 30 strong companies remaining. But whatever happens, the consumer with hundreds of choices will be the beneficiary.

Short hair long on fashionable look in 1980s

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Long locks, move over — short hair is cropping up everywhere. The new look is so fresh, free and fashionable that even Farrah Fawcett has parted with her famous mane in favor of a shorty cut.

Another recent convert to the short do is Christina Ferrare, the cover girl/actress wife of automaker and accused cocaine trafficker John DeLorean. Ferrare had her abundant brunette tresses trimmed in New York by Suga, the nimble hair stylist responsible for Dorothy Hamill's famous "wedgie" and Marie Osmond's bubbly top. He also tends the longer styles worn by the likes of Candice Bergen, Faye Dunaway, Karen Graham, Margaux Hemingway and Lauren Hutton.

Ferrare made her dramatic change of coif — which took place just four days before her husband's arraignment in Los Angeles — because "her life had changed so drastically in view of the traumatic experience she was going through with her husband," a source said. However, the timing and waiflike style of her new do may also suggest that she's trying to shed her glamorous, picture-perfect image for a more demure, down-to-earth appearance.

That is anything but the intent of other image-conscious women, whose motive for cutting their hair is to project a more exciting persona. Fawcett, whose flowing tresses were her trademark, now has her hair cut so that the front, crown and back are longer than the sides. According to Jose Eber of the Maurice Jose salon in Beverly Hills, Fawcett "felt her long hair was intimidating and passe." Eber also has created shorties for Linda Gray, Brenda Vaccaro and Ali McGraw.

For years, hair stylists have been trying to convince their clients that short is chic and sexy. But it wasn't until 1980 that the new wave in short hair took

DEAR ABBY

Herpes jokes also cause pain

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am an innocent victim of herpes II — the genital kind. It's an epidemic now, so my kind of misery has a lot of company, but that doesn't make me feel any better. What really infuriates me, Abby, is the way some comedians are now making herpes jokes! Can you believe it? Every time I hear a herpes joke I want to cry. Do people really think an incurable disease is funny? I am a 40-year-old divorced mother.

Please print this. It may help. — HURTING ENOUGH

DEAR HURTING: I'll print your letter, but I doubt if it will help. From time immemorial people have been making jokes about every conceivable human misery. For every tragedy there is a joke. There are jokes about death, rape, cancer, hunger, poverty and impotency. Without thinking, people repeat jokes about fat people, ugly people, the mentally disturbed, the blind, deaf and elderly.

It's perverse to say the least, but there must be just a tad of perversity in all of us.

The late Dorothy Parker wrote this witty little poem using as her theme a tragic and painful subject — suicide:

"Razors pain you;
"Rivers are damp;
"Acids stain you;
"And drugs cause cramp.
"Guns aren't lawful;
"Nooses give;
"Gas smells awful;
"You might as well live."

DEAR ABBY: On Monday, a good friend of mine called and invited me to her home for a small dinner party on Saturday. On Friday she phoned to say that because one of the guests was sick and couldn't make it. Then she said, "I hope you don't mind, but I don't feel like cooking a big meal just for you."

Should I feel hurt? Angry? Insulted? Resentful? — PUZZLED

DEAR PUZZLED: None of the above. Feel (a) tered that she considered you a close enough friend to have been perfectly candid with you.

DEAR ABBY: My 19-year-old daughter is in love with a 20-year-old fellow I'll call Mel. Both are in college, and neither wants to marry until they graduate. They had a lovely relationship until Mel's mother told him that if he had any contact with my daughter (calling or seeing her) before he graduates — which is two years from now — he cannot live at home or get one dime from his family. Mama feels if they are really in love, they can wait two years. In other words, she has absolutely forbidden any contact between them!

Mel has told my daughter that he loves her, but he can't afford to give up the comforts of a nice home or his parents' financial support until he graduates.

Meanwhile my daughter is bewildered and heartbroken. I advised her to forget the guy — he's already made his choice. If he really loves her, nothing could keep them apart, so she should go on with her life and not wait around for him.

Please advise this confused girl, Abby. — NO

Designers from Japan cause fashion flurries

By NINA HYDE
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

PARIS — On the toughest turf in town, the runways set up in the courtyards of the Louvre, the Japanese have proved their inventiveness in fashion design to be no less formidable than their talent for computers and cars.

Japanese designers have fired the opening shots in the battle for fashion preeminence (and dollars) next spring.

Rei Kawakubo, who calls her company "Comme des Garcons," and Yohji Yamamoto were among the Japanese designers here.

"It shows us a whole new wave of dressing," said Vogue magazine's Polly Mellen, as she raced back to congratulate Yamamoto after his show. "It is modern and free. It has given my eyes something new and has made this first day incredible. Yamamoto and Kawakubo are showing the way to a whole new way of beauty."

The fashions, made in intriguing Japanese textures and weaves, are always oversized to the point that one size fits all. Kawakubo takes six months to develop a design. Clean, angular shapes and neutral colors, particularly black and beige, dominate the Japanese look.

"They create an electric mix of neutrals and textural and tonal effects that are incredible," said Bernie Ozer, vice president of Associated Merchandising Corp., the world's largest buying office. He called Yamamoto "the Japanese Armani."

The Japanese are hardly new to the Paris fashion scene. Issey Miyake has been showing his innovative styles in Paris for almost 15 years, and Kenzo and Kansai Yamamoto (no relation to Yohji) have been among the heavy hitters here for several years now. And Hanae Mori, whose style is decidedly more Western than the others, has a successful couture house as well as boutique in Paris.

The Japanese also are important buyers here. Tokyo-based stores send as many as 30 buyers each to choose the designs of the French that sell well in Japan. In many instances, the Japanese stores purchase more French fashion than the American stores. And banked against the runway for the shows are an increasing number of Japanese photographers recording the styles for Japanese fashion magazines.

Many of the French are not wildly happy about the Japanese intrusion on their fashion turf. "We had a struggle to get the French to give us tickets to the Japanese (designer) show," said Benita Downing of Neiman-Marcus, who calls the Japanese designers "the group to watch."

Of course, there were dissenting views. Many in the fashion crowd were not enchanted with this new wave of design that undoubtedly develops from designers who are not locked into the Western traditions of dress and are willing to experiment with new cuts and shapes and textile technology.

While some found the Japanese easy-fit clothes free and comfortable, others viewed them as baggy and stretched out. And while many admired the carefree, crushed fabrics, others saw them as crumpled and messy. What, on the one hand, was light and layered with patchwork geometric cuts and uneven hems seemed, on the other, close to the bag-lady look and punk than an agreeable new fashion.

"They are modern clothes for women today, like myself, who need to dress easily and quickly with uncomplicated style and not worry about being perfectly dressed," said Jean Rosenberg of Henri Bendel, who was wearing an outfit from Comme des Garcons. She described the Japanese styles as being as innovative and influential a change in fashion as French designer Sonia Rykiel's sweaters of 10 years ago.

Majorie Deane, chairman of Tobe Associates Inc., an internationally respected fashion consulting firm sees the influence as revolutionary as Courreges' space-age styles in the 1960s or Karl Lagerfeld's recent fitted silhouette. "It is audacious and is sure to be misunderstood, but it is the newest direction in fashion," said Deane, who has been tracking fashion changes for more than 30 years. "It is the wave of the future."

Unfortunately, the Japanese have borrowed some of the old ways of the European designers — starting to show late and exaggerating some of the looks for the sake of the runway. Kawakubo, who doesn't like makeup at all, sent her pale-faced models down the runway with red splotches over their eyes and mouths, making them look too much like battered women. And Yohji Yamamoto opted for a white geometric painted face similar to the look of Kabuki actors.

Still, immediately after the Japanese shows many of the store buyers raced to the boutique of Comme des Garcons to study and purchase the Japanese styles. Said Bernie Ozer as he watched the buyers reaction, "Isn't it nice that you can finally weight more than 10 pounds and look gorgeous?"

Educators calling for more comprehension in reading

LEXINGTON, Mass. (AP) — You can give school children new reading books, but you can't necessarily get them to think about what they read. That is the key message in a recent study by the American Educational Research Association and the International Reading Association.

There is no dearth of new reading books, the study reports. In fact, during the next year educators will be choosing new books for a quarter of all elementary and secondary students — or about 12 million children. That's the biggest order for revised or new reading books in the past 10 years.

Even so, the new study says schools are not teaching reading comprehension skills — the kind of analytical skills that allow children to become thinking adults.

"Schools are making steady progress in teaching the fundamentals of reading — phonics and identification — but scores continue to be poor in the middle and upper grades where more complex reading and thinking skills are required," says Richard C. Anderson, director of the Center for the Study of Reading at the University of Illinois.

Anderson says that research shows "children aren't taught how to understand sentences, paragraphs, stories and textbook chapters and they aren't shown how to integrate the many skills needed to understand what they read."

But, according to Anderson, the news isn't all bad. "Teachers, publishers and researchers are beginning to heed emerging research and develop methods for teaching basic comprehension, study and thinking skills."

One such publisher, Xerox Corp. subsidiary Ginn and Co., has just come out with a new reading series after five years of research. According to James Squire, president of the American Educational Research Association and Ginn's director of research, "What we have incorporated, and what other publishers are beginning to turn to, is a new emphasis on nurturing thinking and reasoning skills."

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Head bump, unconsciousness together could cause concern

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 10-year-old son came into the house crying the other day because he fell and bumped his head. He had a bruise and I washed it off and he went outside again and everything was all right. When my husband came home and I told him what had happened, he said I should have taken him to a doctor or to an emergency room because if you hurt your head it can be dangerous. What I'd like to know is what to do the next time it happens. — Mrs. L.G., York, Pa.

Dear Mrs. G.: From your description of what happened, a visit to a doctor or to an emergency room did not seem necessary. Although there are exceptions to every rule, there is usually no cause for concern when a child cries after bumping his head because it shows that he has not lost consciousness. The crucial time to have a child seen by a physician is when he's lost consciousness after a head injury, even if only for a few seconds. Otherwise, applying ice to the bump for five or 10 minutes to control the swelling is usually sufficient.

Obviously, any change in the pattern of a child's behavior is a cause for concern. If a usually active child becomes quiet and withdrawn, for example, or begins vomiting or complains of double vision, he should be seen by a physician.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Just from what I know of my children's friends, there seem to be an awful lot of children who have to take some kind of medication regularly, whether it's for asthma or diabetes or something else. I know the medicine is necessary, but I can't help but wonder what it does to the child psychologically. Do you have any information on this? — Mrs. K. O'M., San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Mrs. O'M.: A child's reaction to the need to take medication regularly depends in large measure on the individual child and how he or she is handled by the parents. If the parents view taking medicine as something to be ashamed of, the child may very well adopt the same point of view. Conversely, a more matter-of-fact approach by the parents will also be reflected in how the child perceives the situation.

One Canadian study that bears on this matter has come to my attention. Interviews with 15 hyperactive children who were receiving medication with their parents' approval, indicated that the children's self-esteem had increased since the start of treatment.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Sometimes when I have intercourse, I notice that I seem to bleed a little. Can you tell me what causes it and what I should do about it? — Richard, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Richard: Your question is somewhat vague, but I assume you are referring to blood in the semen, a condition called hemospemia. According to Dr. Charles W. Charny of the Albert Einstein Medical Center in Philadelphia, the cause of such bleeding is not clear, but the condition ordinarily heals without treatment.

Nevertheless, if there has been more than one such episode of bleeding, I suggest you check with your physician. Even though the condition is usually not serious, it would be advisable to have this confirmed.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why are doctors so concerned about cancer of the ovaries? It seems to me that it doesn't happen as often as a lot of other cancers that we don't hear very much about. — Faye, Bridgeport, Conn.

Dear Faye: You are correct in your assumption that the incidence of ovarian cancer is relatively low. Only slightly more than two percent of all women develop the disease. When it is detected, however, it is in an advanced stage in 80 percent of patients, at which time, of course, it is very serious.

For this reason, Dr. Philip DiSaia, chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of California, Irvine, College of Medicine, recommends that any woman over 40 years of age who is having pelvic surgery should have her ovaries removed. Although not all physicians are in agreement with Dr. DiSaia, he believes there is no reason not to remove the ovaries if the woman does not plan to become pregnant.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some guy who plays on my high school basketball team died of a heart attack during practice. He wasn't fat, he didn't smoke and he didn't have high blood pressure. From reading your column, I know that these are some of the things that can cause a heart attack. How do you figure this kid's death? — Randy, Philadelphia.

Dear Randy: It is possible that the person you refer to may have had a cardiac abnormality that no one was aware of before he suffered the attack. Even where such a condition exists, a person may have a normal electrocardiogram and therefore not be aware of the risk of sudden death. On the other hand, a person without heart disease may not have a normal-appearing heart.

Dr. Barry J. Maron of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute in Bethesda Maryland suggests that screening for students going out for their school athletic teams include physical examination, a medical history, electrocardiogram and echocardiogram.

For Mrs. V.R., Bloomington, Ill.: About 40 percent of children under three years of age continue to be enuretic; among 15-year-olds, the incidence is only three percent. Boys outnumber girls by about 3 to 2.

To M.T., Cincinnati: Over the past 10 years I have witnessed major advances in the diagnosis and treatment of pituitary tumors. Historically, the majority of patients were treated with radiation and the primary goal of surgical therapy was decompression, to take pressure off the brain. Recent progress has led to earlier recognition of pituitary disorders and to definite treatment of them. Because of these advances I now recognize that many pituitary tumors are very small. Operative approaches which were once hazardous are now safe and selective. Surgical removal of pituitary tumors may cure the over-secretion symptoms with preservation of normal pituitary function. I would find a good endocrinologist who can help you.

If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Attack not enough to take sunshine from woman's life

DENVER (AP) — Dorothy Bronson blew kisses and snapped her fingers as her music students sang their hearts out for the 81-year-old woman, who suffered a heart attack and stroke after being raped at her Nebraska home.

"She's shown her love to all of us — she's like a grandmother to us, so we want to show our love to her," said Shannon Strey, 17, one of 18 teen-agers in the Dorothy Bronson Singers who drove from the Nebraska panhandle for the tribute Sunday afternoon to their music teacher.

Mrs. Bronson is recovering from the September attack at her Mitchell, Neb., home at the Spalding Rehabilitation Center here. She glided into the center's cafeteria in her wheelchair, wearing a long white gown studded with gold, her hair done up in soft waves.

Friends and well-wishers in the audience were misty-eyed, and so were the singers, but Mrs. Bronson, who has taught music for half a century and has led the singers who bear her name for 15 years, kept cheering them on.

As the boys in tuxedos and girls in white chiffon sang and danced, Mrs. Bronson blew kisses with her "bum hand" — her left side is mostly paralyzed from the stroke — beamed with delight and soon began singing too.

Before long, she was their teacher again, calling out such directions as "Susie, sing."

She even snapped the fingers on her left hand, which she can move but cannot control, to the song "Grease."

Mrs. Bronson's heart and home were always open to friends and neighbors. So she thought nothing of it when she heard someone come in the door — she even called out a "hello" to her attacker.

The attack, which doctors believe set off the heart attack and stroke, sent a shock wave through the town of about 1,900 residents.

The rapist is still at large, but a newspaper has offered a $1,000 reward for information leading to an arrest, and more than $4,000 has been raised to help with medical bills.

The "Bronsons" belted out songs like "You Are My Sunshine" and "Everything's Coming Up Roses." Mrs. Bronson herself got a bouquet of pink roses.

The guest of honor, who in her youth sang on Broadway and with the Los Angeles Opera Company, bubbled with thanks. She presented the singers to the audience as "my children. I'm so proud of them, I'm just bursting out of my skin."

She chatted for some time, enunciating to counter a slight slurring of her speech from the stroke.

She thanked the group for making the road trip and promised that "Just because of you I'm going to work five times as hard."

Mrs. Bronson is undergoing physical, occupational and speech therapy. She is learning to use a walker and hopes that by her 82nd birthday in February she'll be able to walk without it.

Her biggest problem is the loss of control in the fingers on her left hand, because she is left-handed. She's learning to write with her right hand and is plunking out one-handed tunes on the piano.

Mrs. Bronson also plans a trip to Europe next summer with her singing group and wants to continue her job, "because I taught for 50 years and it is such a part of my life."

The Bronson Singers hope their mentor is back home by Dec. 5 for a fund-raising concert featuring singers past and present. The theme will be "You've Got a Friend."

Law catches up with 'Crisco Kid'

TIFTON, Ga. (AP) — A man accused of slinging chunks of lard at women from a car he drove in the nude has been convicted of public indecency and placed on probation.

Tommy St. John, 31, of Tifton was arrested last Monday after a car chase by officers investigating the latest escapade of the assailant dubbed the "Crisco Kid."

Sgt. Mitch Williams said St. John was charged a year ago but never brought to trial, officials said. He was convicted in state court last week of three counts of public indecency and was sentenced to two years on probation and ordered to seek psychiatric treatment.

The assailant drove naked through the Town and Country Mall parking lot throwing chunks of lard at women, Williams said.

Nancy Reagan's Camp David trips courtesy of public

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan has flown three times by helicopter at public expense to the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., White House records show.

The cost to taxpayers came to $3,100. The first trip occurred Jan. 29, 1981, just days after President Reagan's inauguration.

Rather than making the 90-minute car ride from the nation's capital, the first lady took a Marine helicopter round trip to inspect the presidential retreat for the first time. She was accompanied by her Los Angeles decorator, Ted Graber.

And last Sept. 10 and Oct. 29, Mrs. Reagan made one-way helicopter trips to meet her husband, who had flown a separate helicopter to Camp David following out-of-town trips.

A one-way helicopter trip to the presidential retreat in the Catoctin Mountains, about 60 miles from the nation's capital, takes 35 minutes and costs taxpayers $777.72.

That figure is based on an operating cost of $1,334 per hour for the VIP Marine helicopters.

Mrs. Reagan boarded the helicopters at the Pentagon, rather than the White House South Lawn. Only the president — or special guests on rare occasions — depart from the White House.

Richard Hauser, a lawyer in the White House counsel's office, said Mrs. Reagan does not have to reimburse the government for the cost of her helicopter travel unless her activities are "clearly personal or political."

He said he considered Mrs. Reagan's three trips to Camp David official and thus billed to the taxpayer.

"These aircraft are made available for the use of the president and I think it's within the president's discretion to use it in the fashion we have described (for his wife) without reimbursement unless it's something that's clearly personal or political," Hauser said.

Sheila Tate, the first lady's press secretary, acknowledged Mrs. Reagan did not engage in official business at Camp David on the three occasions she flew there alone.

But Mrs. Tate said, "I suppose everything they do is somewhat official."

Nashville's Opryland on search for next year's performers

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Opryland is going on the road in a coast-to-coast search for singers, dancers and other performers for next year's shows at the Nashville entertainment park.

The first auditions are scheduled Wednesday in Provo, Utah. From there, Opryland officials will go to San Francisco and then around the country, winding up back in Nashville in late December and January.

Two auditions have been scheduled in Texas — Arlington and Denton, both on Jan. 27. "Performers whom we hire are some of the best in the nation, and versatility is a key factor," said Bob Whittaker, Opryland entertainment director. "In many cases, we need singers who can dance and dancers who can sing. And we certainly are looking for both country and non-country performers."

The auditions will be for singers, dancers, dance captains, conductor-pianists, musicians, stage managers and technicians, Opryland officials say.

The auditions are not for Grand Ole Opry, the 57-year-old country music radio show presented at the park.

Park officials estimate 7,000 performers, musicians and technicians will audition in 31 cities for between 375 and 400 Opryland positions needed for spring, summer and fall performances in 1983.

people Nixon White House to see itself on film

ROLLING HILLS ESTATES, Calif. (AP) — A producer is working on a six-part television series culled from hours of home movies shot by former Nixon aide H.R. Haldeman at the White House.

Producer James Patrick Devaney says he hopes to complete the project, based on 20,000 feet of Super-8 film, sometime next year.

In addition to the Haldeman footage, the series will include interviews with other key figures of the time.

Titled "A View From the White House," the show is "not looking to redeem" Haldeman, "nor are we out to crucify him," said Devaney.

The show will include interviews with congressmen, journalists, foreign leaders and ex-White House aides such as John Ehrlichman, Charles Colson, Herb Klein and Bryce Harlow.

"I think one of the things emerging in the interviews is a consensus that Nixon is a very complex person... who in some cases has been misunderstood or not given a fair shake," said Devaney.

Devaney would not say how much Haldeman was paid for the film. Haldeman had refused to sell the footage to interested television networks because he did not want to lose control of the final production, said Devaney in an interview Sunday.

The networks generally do not buy documentaries made outside their own news divisions and Devaney said he is offering the show to individual stations in every marketing area nationally. He said he sold it in 23 foreign countries "with more to come."

Also included in the footage, Devaney said, is "the inside dope on film from the people themselves of what went on at Camp David when Haldeman and Ehrlichman were fired" for their Watergate-related activities. "It's really quite moving," he added.

"There's a lot of candid, fantastic stuff from the Nixon White House that's never been seen," he said.

DENVER (AP) — Blacks who don't have voter registration cards and membership in the NAACP "ought to be denied entrance to polite society," says Julian Bond, a black Georgia state legislator.

Bond, speaking to the Colorado Black Women's Caucus here Saturday, called President Reagan's economic programs "Tylenol economics" and called for blacks to swarm to the polls next election.

He said that blacks who aren't registered to vote and aren't members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "ought to be denied entrance to polite society... almost as if they were carriers of a social disease, like Uncle Tom herpes."

He said the Nov. 2 election showed a shift toward the Democrats, "and the Reagan revolution has been temporarily slowed."

The Reagan tax cuts, Bond said, lowered the taxes of a family earning $10,000 or less by $120 — or "not enough to buy a new set of tires" — while the taxes for a family earning more than $80,000 were lowered "enough to buy a Cadillac and the tires for it."

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Polly Holliday says she stepped into the television sitcom "Private Benjamin" because "a lot of people's jobs were at stake."

Miss Holliday, who starred in the television series "Flo," will portray "a gung-ho Army woman" in the TV series until actress Eileen Brennan, who was injured in a car accident, recovers.

"I hated to get a job at the expense of someone's misfortune," Miss Holliday, 44, said in an interview published in this week's "People" magazine. "But a lot of other people's jobs were at stake. I didn't want to see the show fold."

Miss Brennan is recovering at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital in Marina del Rey, where she has already had two operations. She suffered two broken legs and facial injuries.

An American nun, Sister Antonia Brenner, enters a cell at La Mesa Penitentiary in Tijuana, Mexico, where she is revered by the prisoners she helps, who call her "the White Angel." She calls herself a "prisoner of love." Sister Brenner lives in a cell at the prison — voluntarily — in order to minister to the prisoners. It is important to let the prisoners know, she says, that she is not just a church official who talks to them from across a desk.

'White Angel' prisoner of love

"The prisoners come in very frightened and, for many, my presence is a comfort...I could not do my work on a nine-to-five basis. This is not a job or work assignment for me; it is my calling. The prison is my convent."

— Sister Antonia Brenner

Text and Photos by the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

TIAJUANA, Mexico — Every morning at 7, in the women's section of Mexico's La Mesa Penitentiary, the prisoners line up for "La Lista." And every morning, during roll call, the last name the guard calls out is "Sister Antonia."

An American nun in a traditional, flowing blue habit stands stiffly in the line of women who have been convicted of drug smuggling, burglary and murder. When her name is called, she steps forward, nods to the guard, answers "Presente," and La Lista is concluded.

Sister Antonia Brenner calls herself a "prisoner of love"; the inmates call her "The White Angel." Sister Brenner lives in a cell at La Mesa Penitentiary — voluntarily — to minister to the prisoners.

It is important to let the prisoners know, Sister Brenner says, that she is not just a church official who talks to them from across a desk. Sister Brenner makes it a point to eat the food the inmates eat, to sleep where they sleep, to answer the call of the guard each morning, just as they do.

"The prisoners come in very frightened and, for many, my presence is a comfort..." Sister Brenner says.

"I could not do my work on a nine-to-five basis. This is not a job or work assignment for me; it is my calling. The prison is my convent."

AFTER LA LISTA, Sister Brenner, who has unlimited access to the prison, walks by the guards at the metal gate, enters the men's section, and walks about unescorted. A crowd immediately gathers and she is besieged with requests.

One man asks if she was able to obtain a typewriter for him; another inquires about mail. A prisoner with tattoos from his neck to his waist pulls up his T-shirt, shows her a rash on his stomach and asks if she can get him some medicine. Another pulls down his lower lip, and requests a special bridge.

She has time for each man and deals with their problems sensitively, frequently touching a cheek in sympathy or just listening. Her Spanish is halting at times, and the accent is not impeccable, but the men have little trouble understanding her.

Sister Brenner is an unofficial liaison between the inmates and the world outside the stone walls.

If a prisoner's mother is sick, Sister Brenner will visit. If a relative has died, Sister Brenner will go to the funeral. When prisoners need a lawyer, medicine or just a toothbrush, blanket or jacket, they go to Sister Brenner.

Her manner with the prison's 1,100 inmates (95 percent are male and there are 10 Americans) calls to mind the stereotypical Jewish mother. She deals with forbidding-looking men who have reputations for great violence in a manner not usually advised in penology textbooks — she grabs their cheeks and pinches affectionately; she hugs them; she holds their hands.

BUT SISTER BRENNER, who has never been threatened or attacked, does not always wander around the prison bestowing smiles. In order to accomplish her myriad tasks, she delegates authority, and if inmates have not followed her suggestions promptly, she shows little patience and great irritation.

Sister Brenner treats all inmates like wayward children who need special attention. She calls him hijo (son) or hija (daughter). They refer to her, among themselves, as the White Angel; but in her presence they call her Mama.

Sister Brenner's unusual background prepared her for the role of prison matriarch. She raised seven children before taking her vows and becoming a sister.

"I raised a large family, and my feelings just were extended to the new family..." says Sister Brenner, 55.

"Here I'm treated with all the love and respect the Mexican people have for their mothers. I've been through everything with them; they've cried on my shoulder, and told of their pain. They've given me beautiful things — poems, stories, songs...And like all sons, they give me much work to do."

Sister Brenner closes her eyes briefly and shakes her head when it is suggested that some may view her as naive. She draws a small dot on a white napkin.

"WHAT DO YOU SEE? You don't see the white of the napkin. All you see is the blue dot. With the men here, most only see that he's a murderer or a thief. They don't see the rest of them; I do. Yes, I see the bad in people, but I also see the good."

An 8-by-5-foot cell in Mexican prison is an unfathomable distance from Granada Hills and Laguna Beach, Calif., where Sister Brenner raised her children, and Beverly Hills, where she grew up. But, she says, her metamorphosis was a gradual gravitation to a way of life that she felt impelled to follow.

Her interest in prisons began 18 years ago when she and a priest visited La Mesa Penitentiary. Sister Brenner had been active in volunteer work with the Catholic Church most of her life, but this was the first time she had ministered to prisoners.

"Something happened to me when I saw men behind bars..." she recalls. "When I left, I thought a lot about the men. When it was cold, I wondered if the men were warm; when it was raining, if they had shelter. I wondered if they had medicine and how their families were doing...You know, when I returned to the prison to live, I felt as if I'd come home."

SISTER BRENNER BEGAN visiting La Mesa, studying Spanish and ministering to inmates in other Mexican prisons and jails. As the years passed, and her children required less of her time, she began thinking of her work as more than an avocation.

Her children were surprised at her decision, but they are proud of her, she said.

Sister Brenner and a priest she frequently worked with visited San Diego's Catholic bishop, Leo T. Maher, to discuss her work.

Sister Brenner and Maher agreed that if she could approach the inmates as a representative of the church, she could minister more effectively to their spiritual needs. Sister Brenner, who had contemplated the decision for years, decided to become a nun.

To avoid her having to enter a convent, they decided to make her an Auxiliary sister. Auxiliaries — a religious community established in Europe — live among the people they serve, not in convents, Maher said. They are under the supervision of a bishop, not a mother superior.

There are only a handful of Auxiliaries in the United States, and she is the only one in Southern California.

The inmates at La Mesa first meet Sister Brenner shortly before El Grito — the ritual where the new inmates walk past the guards and give their name, alias and crime.

LUIS MEDINA, WHO was convicted of drug smuggling, recalls sitting on a wooden bench and shivering shortly before he completed El Grito three years ago.

"I'd never been in jail before, and I was so depressed and ashamed," he says. "I'd heard others talking about this White Angel, but I didn't know what or who she was. But when I saw her that morning, I knew...It was so comforting to see her. She gave off a feeling of love."

"When I arrived I had no toothbrush, no blankets, nothing. She took care of me. She never says no. Sometimes in the morning I wait outside our prison church for her. She has made me feel closer to God."

Not all inmates are reassured, however, upon first seeing Sister Brenner.

Susanne Lemos, one of the 10 Americans at La Mesa, says some of the inmates view her as a "flake." But, she says, there is little disagreement that Sister Antonia can "take care of business."

"Make no mistake about this," Lemos says, "if you have an urgent problem, you go to her. She can get anything...anything done around here. Everybody in Mexico has a great respect for the church."

FROM THE MAIN YARD, La Mesa penitentiary resembles a poor, dusty Mexican village.

The yard is made of packed dirt, there are small foodstands throughout the grounds, and prisoners move about freely.

If you have money, you can live comparatively well in a Mexican prison. You can buy better-quality food, secure comfortable sleeping quarters and obtain many amenities. But if you are poor, life in prison is a struggle. The poor depend on Brenner.

Four years ago, she asked for permission to live at the prison.

American prison officials never would allow her to live on the premises, Sister Brenner says, or grant her free rein within the prison walls.

"We trust her and she never does anything to change our feelings of trust," says the prison director, Francisco Navarro. "Her work, we believe, helps reduce levels of violence we've had in the past. She is a peaceful presence here."
