Water Quality meeting set for Wednesday in Bronte

There will be an TMDL (Total Maximum Daily Load for Dissolved Solids) Implementation Plan Evaluation meeting at the Housing Authority Community Room in Bronte Wednesday, June 26, 2013, at 10 am. The public is encouraged to attend.

The goals for the meeting include: continue citizen understanding of TMDL process and how area residents can participate; and build a representative and inclusive Coordination Committee. This plan is for Stream Segment 1426 of the Colorado River below E. V. Spence Reservoir. The following information was taken from the TCEQ (Texas Commission on Environmental Quality) web site.

In 2000, water quality testing found elevated levels of chloride, sulfate, and total dissolved solids (TDS) in the Colorado River below E.V. Spence Reservoir. High concentrations of chloride can cause a bad taste in drinking water, harm plumbing, and increase the risk of hypertension in humans. High concentrations of sulfate can cause drinking water to smell or taste bad. Large amounts of dissolved solids can be toxic to species that live in fresh water.

In response to these conditions, the TCEQ developed a total maximum daily load (TMDL) to restore water quality in the river. A TMDL determines the amount (or load) of a pollutant that a body of water can receive and still support its designated uses. This allowable load was then allocated among categories of sources within the watershed. Stakeholders developed a plan to implement TMDLs (I-Plan) with measures that reduce pollution.

A variety of man-made and natural sources can be responsible for elevated levels of chloride, sulfate, and TDS. For example, a common man-made source of dissolved solids is brine, a by-product of oil production. Salt cedar, a natural source of TDS, is an invasive, non-native plant species whose high rate of water consumption creates imbalances in the soil, causing higher concentrations of unwanted substances.

Learn more about water quality standards, monitoring, and TMDLs by reading Preserving and Improving Water Quality, available on TCEQ's website at <www.tceq.texas.gov/goto/tmdl/>.

Project Watershed

The Colorado River Below E.V. Spence Reservoir, Segment 1426, is a 66-mile freshwater stream located within the larger Colorado River Basin. Segment 1426 receives the majority of its flow from E.V. Spence Reservoir. It begins at Robert Lee Dam and flows south-easterly through Coke and Runnels Counties, ending 2.3 miles below its confluence with Mustang Creek in Runnels County.

The Edwards-Trinity aquifer is the principal source of groundwater in the watershed. The Edwards-Trinity is composed of sandstone and carbonate-rock aquifers and encompasses an area of 818 square miles.

Most of the land is well adapted to cultivation. The land use and economy are chiefly agricultural, with land devoted to both crop and animal production.

Oil and gas production and exploration are the dominant industrial activities in the watershed. Mineral resources include brick-making clay in addition to oil and gas deposits.

Project Development

The TCEQ signed a contract with EA Engineering, Science, and Technology to study the segment and develop TMDLs. EA Engineering collected additional data under a range of stream flow conditions, including wet weather, and accounted for direct discharges from point sources (such as wastewater treatment plants) and runoff from nonpoint sources (such as agricultural operations, land-clearing activities, abandoned oil and gas wells, and carbonate dissolution).

In June 2004, the Bureau of Economic Geology (BEG) surveyed electromagnetic conductivity in and around the creek. Their survey supported the groundwater component of models used to develop the TMDLs.

Based on analysis of these studies and other information gathered during investigation of water quality in the creek, the stakeholders and TCEQ developed TMDLs and an I-Plan for the watershed. The TCEQ adopted the TMDLs in February 2007, and approved the stakeholders' I-Plan on October 10, 2007.

Status

The Railroad Commission has eliminated many potential sources of salinity by plugging orphaned or abandoned unplugged wells. The RRC also completed a feasibility study for placing a recovery well between older oil fields and the receiving streams.

The Texas State Soil and Water Conservation Board removed salt cedar in the watershed using both chemical and biological methods.

Prior to the current drought, the levels of salinity were dropping in the segment. However, the drought has lowered water levels significantly in E.V. Spence Reservoir, leading to re-concentration of chloride and TDS in the reservoir and the Colorado River below it.

As of May 2013, the UCRA and TCEQ are assisting stakeholders in evaluating progress on improving the creek and whether the I-Plan should be adapted.

Public Participation

Stakeholder participation is crucial to developing workable TMDLs and I-Plans. It is also critical to implementing plans over several years.

Accordingly, the Upper Colorado River Authority (UCRA) is coordinating a review of the plan and involving the public in that effort. People who participated in developing the TMDL and I-Plan and people new to the process are encouraged to join a new stakeholder group being formed to evaluate progress on improving the quality of the creek.

This new group will include a coordination committee and work groups, who will be responsible for evaluating the I-Plan and revising it as needed. The coordination committee will be made up of representatives from a variety of different sectors—including industries, interest groups, universities, water districts, cities, and federal and regional government organizations.

The Upper Colorado River Authority (UCRA) is working with stakeholders to evaluate the I-Plan and revise it as appropriate.

For more information, contact the project manager Lauren Oertel at 512-239-3604 or Lauren.Oertel@tceq.texas.gov, or visit our website at: <www.tceq.texas.gov/waterquality/tmdl/nav/32-colorado/>

Foods that Cool

Eat to Fight the Heat

Record temperatures and humidity across the country has made getting cool the name of the game. While there is always air conditioning, the pool, or the good old-fashioned fan, there are other options to stay comfortable. What you eat and drink can make a big difference in regulating body temperature and make the difference from feeling hot and bothered to cool and comfortable.

On hot, humid days, muscles compete with the skin for blood circulation. When the outside temperature is hot, more blood flows near the skin to help disperse body heat and cool the body down, thus keeping your body's temperature from rising to dangerous levels. But that can mean less blood reaches muscles, which then causes lethargy. It is imperative to drink plenty of fluids and eat cooling foods to help hydrate your muscles and skin in order to maintain a safe internal body temperature.

Instead of focusing on cooling the air around you to cool your body, these foods will help to cool your body temperature from the inside out. Here are some foods that can help:

Water-rich Foods

On a hot, summer day, the first thing that most people reach for is an icy glass of cold water. Water is great at keeping the body cool and hydrated. Maximize your intake of foods that contain high levels of water to minimize the intense heating effects of the sun. Fresh and raw vegetables and fruits have high water content and should be incorporated into all of your meals and snacks. Watermelon, mango, cucumbers, celery, iceberg lettuce, and tomatoes are only a few to mention. This produce will hydrate the cells in your body and translate to a lower body temperature.

Astringent foods

The term astringency describes the drying and sometimes puckering sensation that is experienced after tasting many red wines. Foods like lentils, beans, bananas, and grapes also contain an astringent molecule called tannin that gives these foods their "dryness." When you consume astringent foods, the tissues of your body contract, or shrink, and increase the water absorption by the body. This absorption increases the water content in your cells, which, in turn, keeps your body temperature cooler.

Green, leafy vegetables

Greens are powerhouse vegetables packed with important vitamins and nutrients to keep your body healthy. They are also a great source of one particular mineral that helps to cool your body, calcium. Calcium works as a thermoregulator in your body which, as the term implies, helps to regulate your internal body temperature. Your body uses the calcium in these green leafy vegetables to help send signals between your body and your brain to help regulate your temperature efficiently.

Whole grains

Almost all whole grains contain high levels of magnesium, which has the ability to relax muscles and nerve cells as well as increase the consumption of calcium in the bloodstream, thus helping your body maintain a more constant body temperature. Besides 100% whole wheat, other whole grain sources include rye, spelt, and quinoa.

Spicy Seasonings

Can eating "hot" food keep you cool? This notion may seem like the complete opposite of what you should eat when you are already hot, but it is effective in making you feel cooler. If you look at food eaten in warmer climate countries, many of them have a good amount of spice and heat in their recipes. When consuming spicy ingredients, your body temperature increases, your pulse accelerates, and you tend to sweat more, which makes your feel cooler. The increase in body temperature can make you feel cooler by diminishing the difference between you and the surrounding air temperature.
