Stanton High School Principal Bill Young looks over damage at the football stadium caused by high winds Saturday night. Local residents are recovering quickly from the devestation, according to Stanton officials.

Judge: Storm 'a real paint peeler'

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

STANTON — "A real paint peeler," that caused damage estimated as high as $3 million is the way Martin County Judge Bob Davenport Wednesday described the vicious storm that struck Stanton about 8:20 p.m. Saturday and "hung around" for the better part of three hours.

But, he added, 'Things are falling back in place real fast," although State Highway 176, about three miles south of town, is still under water.

The judge said late Wednesday that practically everyone had returned to their homes or was staying with friends. He praised Stanton's emergency response people, from the sheriff's office, police and fire departments and EMTs, saying, "They did a really fine job."

Asked if there were plans to seek federal or state disaster aid, Davenport said Stanton officials were scheduled to meet today to evaluate the situation and see what's needed.

The Stanton area received about six inches of rain Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights, with about 3.5 inches falling Saturday night, about 1.3 inches Sunday night and about 1.1 inches Monday night, he said. The catch basin south of the railroad tracks and east of State Highway 176 was still full of water late Wednesday afternoon, the judge said, noting that "we won't need any rain for awhile."

"What was so different about this storm," the Martin County judge said, "is that West Texas thunderstorms usually blow in and out in about 30 minutes, but this one just hung around." Power was out for about three hours at one time, Davenport said.

Stanton School District Superintendent Wayne Mitchell said half of the stands on the eastside of the stadium were blown down and the roof on every building was damaged. "Places are bare where we had fences," he said. "Lots of limbs were broken from trees and lots of trees were blown down," but no one was killed or injured and residential areas were spared because of the direction the high winds traveled.

Mitchell said hail caused damage to everything, breaking windows on the east side of buildings and denting metal-sided homes. Skylights in the high school buildings were smashed, letting considerable water into the building. He speculated the clean up and repair "would take quite awhile."

Mitchell said there had been no estimates of damage to school property as yet, but that adjusters had started surveying to determine a dollar figure.

"Apparently what we had in the northwest part of town must have been a twister, followed by high, straight winds," said Davenport. The high winds tore up wheelrow irrigation systems and heavily damaged some homes west of town. He said about six mobile homes from Roy Koonce's Stanton Mobile Home Sales were blown off the lot into the street. Koonce also lost a barn and had "a lot of farm equipment turned over," Davenport said. Stanton residents were lucky the storm didn't hit about a quarter of a mile farther east or it would have hit a residential area and a mobile home park.

The hail came from the northeast and reportedly ranged from golf ball to baseball size, he said.

Argentine ship attacks boat from Taiwan

PORT STANLEY, Falkland Islands (AP) — Argentina said today one of its warships raked a Taiwanese trawler with machine-gun fire after it was caught fishing in Argentine waters. One sailor died and three were injured, a fishing official reported.

The incident outside the 150-mile exclusion zone imposed by Britain around the Falkland Islands and was one of three reported encounters Wednesday involving Argentine forces and fishing boats from Taiwan.

Officials in Taiwan today denied the trawler was in Argentine waters and said Taiwan would demand compensation for the attack.

The Falklands, which Argentina claims, were the object of a 74-day war between Argentina and Britain in 1982. Britain, the victor, prevents Argentine ships or aircraft from coming within 150 miles of the archipelago. Ships from other nations are allowed to fish within the exclusion zone.

Lei Tsu-kang, who represents squid fishermen from Taiwan on the South Atlantic islands, said the squid trawler Chiann-Der 3 was set ablaze by the Argentine warship's gunfire, and that its 22-member crew took to lifeboats.

He said the Argentine vessel later reported in a radio message heard in Port Stanley that it had picked up the sailors, and that one of them was dead and three were injured, although not seriously.

The Argentine coast guard, in a communique issued early today in Buenos Aires, said its cutter Prefecto Derbes crippled the fishing vessel with machine-gun fire after it was caught inside Argentina's 200-mile limit.

The communique did not mention any crewmen being injured, but said one died "apparently of a heart attack," and that the fishing vessel's captain "later reported one of the other men missing, who could not be found despite a search."

The Argentine communique said the captain of the fishing vessel ignored repeated orders from the Prefecto Derbes to halt and be boarded.

"Warning shots from the 12.7mm machine gun were effected 200 meters (218 yards) in front of her bow, then at her structure," it said.

It said the fishing vessel halted, "exhibiting smoke and fire, presumably in the engine room," and its crew abandoned ship.

The Prefecto Derbes was heading with the crew from the fishing vessel to the Argentine port of Puerto Deseado, the communique said. Lei said the Chiann-Der 3 was left at sea ablaze.

At a news conference today in Taipei, Hu Chih-chih, director of the Fisheries Adminstration of the municipal government of Kaohsiung, said "we will hold Argentina responsibile for all damage and will demand compensation."

Tsai Ting-pang, chairman of the Taiwan Fishery Association of Kaohsiung, said the trawler was 228 nautical miles off the Argentine coast when it was attacked. "We did not violate any Argentine laws," he said.

Lei, a representative of the Taiwan Squid Fishery Development Board, said the Argentine captain gave the Chiann-Der 3's crew a 10-minute ultimatum to sail for Argentina or be fired upon.

Monitoring radio messages between the vessels, Lei said that after the shooting, the Prefecto Derbes warned another vessel from Taiwan not to approach the Chiann-Der 3 because refrigeration machinery on board could explode.

Lei said the crew of the trawler Yu-Lian-Far told him by radio telephone that firing from the Prefecto Derbes wrecked the mast and radio room of another vessel from Taiwan, the Chi-Fu 6.

The Argentine communique said the Chi-Fu 6 ignored an order to halt and be escorted to Argentina and instead tried to escape beyond its 200-mile territorial limit.

It said warning shots from the Prefecto Derbes' 12.7mm machine gun were fired across the bow of the Chi-Fu 6.

Mattox to file suit to oppose Texas as finalist for dump site

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Jim Mattox Wednesday said he is already preparing a lawsuit against the U.S. Department of Energy opposing a Deaf Smith County site as one of three finalists for a high-level nuclear waste dump.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said Wednesday's decision "could become the world's most costly peacetime nuclear catastrophe."

The energy department first announced its nomination of three sites as potential locations for the nation's first high-level nuclear waste repository in December 1984. Wednesday's action is a formal notification of that decision.

"DOE's announcement is not a surprise to us," Mattox said, "so it should come as no surprise to the federal government that we will see them at the courthouse as soon as possible."

Mattox's office had already filed a lawsuit against the DOE challenging the department's site selection process for the dump, which is scheduled to begin accepting waste in 1998. A federal court declined to hear the suit because the DOE had not yet made its recommendations formal.

"We went to court then, but the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals claimed we were 'premature' in filing the suit because DOE's nomination was not final," Mattox said. "We won't be premature any longer, and we're going to court as soon as possible, hopefully later this week."

Mattox

White

Gov. Mark White said he urged Mattox to file the suit, after hearing of the DOE decision Wednesday.

Several other state leaders have expressed opposition to the Deaf Smith County site because of fertile farmland in the area. Officials also fear the nuclear waste could damage the Ogallala Aquifer, a vast underground lake that supplies drinking water from Texas to the Dakotas.

White said the DOE site selection process, as laid out in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, "seems to have been crafted to preserve the sites favored by DOE."

The federal agency, White said, has "refused to acknowledge that the viability of agriculture in the Texas Panhandle rests on the availability of water from the aquifer."

White also sent a chilling warning to DOE officials.

"We have just seen a terrible tragedy in Russia," the governor said, referring to the recent Chernobyl reactor disaster. "The Soviet Union experienced a bitter mistake because it didn't make the right technological choice. This administration today made the same terrible choice, choosing to ignore both scientific evidence and common sense in making a site selection for high-level nuclear waste."

Hightower, noting that Deaf Smith is consistently one of the most productive agricultural counties in the state, said the potential damage from a leak in a repository would not be limited to the Panhandle.

"The Ogallala Aquifer stretches under eight states," he said, "and this insane decision therefore jeopardizes the farm economy of the entire Great Plains and sets the stage for what could become the world's most costly peacetime nuclear catastrophe."

Researchers will be eavesdropping in space

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The most ambitious and sophisticated effort ever is being planned to scan the heavens for signals from outer space, but one expert doubts humans will be smart enough to understand the messages even if they hear them.

The project, when finished, will search for alien signals through the end of the century, Jill Tarter of the University of California, Berkeley, said Wednesday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"These are the first inital steps of what will be a grand exploration of the microwave system, looking for evidence of an artificially generated signal. Our civilization, for the very first time, can contemplate undertaking, out of pure curiosity, a search that may not bear fruitful results for many generations," she said.

However, Robert Jastrow of Dartmouth College doubts earthlings will get any message, and calculates that other civilizations — if they exist — may have been evolving for 1 billion years longer than humans.

"If you ask what life would be like on those planets that are a billion years or more beyond us in their evolutionary development," he said, "for a clue to the answer, one could look at the fossil record on the Earth."

A billion years ago, the highest life form on this planet was a worm-like creature, he said. So humans stand in relation to the aliens as worms do to humans.

Test results expected after cyanide found in capsules bought in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Authorities today were awaiting results of lab tests on Anacin-3 capsules taken from 10 Walgreen drug stores after a 24-year-old University of Texas student died of cyanide poisoning.

Police said the cyanide was found in the body of Kenneth Wayne Faries, a senior chemistry major who died May 21.

The poison was traced to a bottle of Anacin-3 pain relief capsules purchased from a Walgreen store and found in the medicine cabinet of his home.

Police said they are treating the death as a homicide, but they didn't rule out suicide.

"Our investigators right now are going out and doing all the checks," police spokeswoman Kellye Norris said today.

"We're treating it as a homicide beause our medical examiner did rule it a homicide. But we haven't ruled anything out yet. We're not saying it's definitely a homicide," she said.

The Anacin-3 taken by Faries was from a bottle containing 500-milligram capsules from Lot 6B11, bearing the expiration date 10-88, police said.

Police advised anyone who has Anacin-3 from the same lot number not to take the capsules.

Dr. Robert Bayardo, Travis County medical examiner, said one capsule in the bottle showed evidence of tampering.

"It is my personal opinion that this is the only bottle that has been tampered with. But we have to prevent some other deaths, so we are warning the public about this product," Bayardo said.

Bayardo said he did not know how many capsules Faries had taken.

Bill Henna of the Texas Department of Health said health officials removed Anacin-3 capsules from the Austin Walgreen stores Wednesday night.

Tests were being performed on samples from each store, Henna said, adding that Food and Drug Administration scientists worked through the night. Results should be known today, he said.

According to police, Faries died May 21. His body was found by his roommate the next day.

The Midland, the only passenger ferry to cross Lake Michigan, docks in Kewaunee, Wis., after making the journey from Ludington, Mich. The ferry has been losing money and is facing competition.

Travelers lured by City of Midland

ABOARD THE MIDLAND (AP) — Lake Michigan may not be the Caribbean and the 1941-vintage City of Midland may not be the Love Boat, but they were good enough to lure 80,000 people last year.

The triple-tiered Midland is the last passenger-carrying survivor of a fleet once nine-strong, plying its way from Ludington, Mich., across Lake Michigan to the port of Kewaunee, Wis.

All year, the Midland carries rail cars. In spring and summer it carries people and their cars as well.

The ship is a boon for Wisconsin-bound travelers who just can't face the prospect of driving around the lake and through Chicago's traffic.

"They need a bar and entertainment and the food is really bad," says passenger Sherry Van Conant, 25, of Midland, Mich. "But it's better than driving all the way around the lake."

On the Saturday before Memorial Day, Bernie Kerwin, 54, of Utica, N.Y., was taking a friend to visit relatives in Manitowoc, Wis. He figured it would have taken him more than five hours extra to skirt Lake Michigan.

Although two-thirds of his business comes from hauling rail cars, Glen Bowden of the Michigan-Wisconsin Transportation Co., which operates the ferry, is counting on a good tourist season this year to help tow the struggling service out of the red.

A one-way ride on the ferry costs $50 for car and driver, plus $19 for each adult passenger. Passage for two adults, two children under 15 and a car costs $88.

Bowden says the Midland carried 80,000 people across the lake in 1985, but it costs $18,000 a week to operate the ferry and he's losing money, but he won't say how much.

"We're losing enough to be concerned about, but we're optimistic we can work it out," he said. "I've made it a personal commitment. The economy of Ludington has been built around this. It would be a very drastic blow if we were to ever be put out of business.

"A lot of people said every year that this was going to be our last year. We went into this with a long-range plan knowing that we would have a series of bad years. We're hoping this summer will be the springboard to recovery."

The 406-foot-long Midland occasionally will reach capacity of 508 people in summer, but usually averages around 300 per trip, Bowden said. It can carry 150 automobiles or 23 railroad cars.

It was commissioned in 1941 and still has its original steam engines, Bowden said. Forty-nine crew members work year round; 60 during summer.

The Midland may face competition next year. Investors, communities and the states of Michigan and Wisconsin have committed $7.1 million to a ferry service linking Muskegon to Milwaukee.

Nearly $6 million is to be spent on upgrading the old steamship Viking, with much of the money going toward passenger amenities.

"I guess there's a competitive factor. There's no way of knowing what the effect will be," Bowden said. "They're doing their thing and, of course, we're going to do ours."

Railroads ran ferries between Michigan and Wisconsin since the 1870s. At one time, nine ferries operated out of Ludington alone. But the system eventually became too costly, despite state subsidies.

The Chessie System, which used to run three boats out of Ludington, was the last railroad to bail out. Bowden, a Ludington hotel owner, bought what was left of the service and has been operating without state subsidy since 1983.

Shultz says allies can't tolerate demand

U.S., France, Britain to file protest over passport rule — 9D

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia (AP) — NATO foreign ministers assembled here are planning ways to counter what they regard as a serious East German breach of rules governing travel by diplomats in Berlin.

En route here Wednesday, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said the allies cannot tolerate an East German demand that foreign diplomats display passports at crossing points in the divided city.

A British official who spoke on condition he not be identified said Wednesday night he is hopeful the meeting here produces general agreement that the allies "have to take a tough line indeed" against the East German action.

Noting that the United States, Britain and France, along with the Soviet Union, have final authority over the city, the British diplomat said the East Germans "have no competence" to interfere in the city's affairs.

Shultz said the East German action appeared to be related to actions taken by the three Western powers to prevent Libyan diplomats from traveling to West Berlin from the eastern sector.

The allies tightened security at border points following the bombing of a West Berlin discotheque last month that killed two people and injured 200 others. One of the dead was an American serviceman.

Any tensions centering on Berlin are a source of concern to the allies because it is a high-stake area for both NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

The Berlin issue is believed to have dominated a private dinner Wednesday night involving Shultz and his counterparts from Britain, France and West Germany. By tradition, the foreign ministers of the four countries have dinner on the eve of NATO ministerial meetings.

The Berlin issue threatened to overshadow what was expected to be a routine two-day NATO review starting today of the the current state of East-West relations, with special emphasis on arms control.

Shultz was expected to sound out European reaction to President Reagan's decision to continue complying with SALT II limits while warning Moscow that he may disregard those restraints unless the Soviets take "constructive steps" toward adhering to the 1979 agreement.

Speaking to reporters Wednesday while flying here, Shultz reacted sharply to the East German action.

"We can't tolerate having a sector line converted into an international border," he said. "It is under discussion...and I hope it can be resolved on that basis. We intend to press our rights in that situation."

He said the United States has raised its concerns with the Soviet Union, suggesting that he believes the East German action was cleared with Moscow. East Germany is one of the Kremlin's most loyal allies.

"We will talk about our diplomatic strategy," Shultz said. "This is a good opportunity to share views and decide on a common plan."

On a separate issue, Shultz rejected suggestions by some conservative congressmen and others that the United States is backing away from its commitment to support Nicaraguan resistance fighters.

Just because members of Congress or editorial writers make such suggestions, he said, "that doesn't show that we (in the administration) are confused. Our position has been steadfast," he said.

The White House issued a statement last week restating U.S. policy toward Central America, he said.

"We communicate poorly with earthworms, which are not aware of our existence unless we step on them," he said. "I'm not sure how we'll be able to detect the presence of life, if it's there, and if we'll be able to communicate at all."

Ms. Tarter said the extraterrestrial search is in the third year of a five-year research and development program. Such searches have occurred, off and on, since Frank Drake of Cornell University conducted one 25 years ago.

"People try to use this 25 years of failure to detect a signal as some sort of statistical evidence that there are no signals to be detected from other intelligent civilations," she said. "It's completely fallacious. The amount of searching that's been done to date is trivially small, compared to the amount that we might have to do to cover the microwave spectrum."

The program, financed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, will eavesdrop on microwave radiation that reaches earth from space.

Machines and computers will listen for microwave patterns that nature never produces but that humans, with their crude technology, often do. The program will break the microwave spectrum into 10 million or 100 million channels and search them systematically.

"They will cover a volume of space that's 10 million times greater than everything that's been done over the past 25 years," Ms. Tarter said.

But even if microwaves are the right place to look for alien codes, no one can guarantee that the search will succeed, she said. "We hope that what we plan to do will be enough, but we realize that, in fact, there may be more to be done in the future."

Air Force: Jets intercept Soviet craft

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — Jet fighters from Langley Air Force Base this week intercepted two Soviet anti-submarine warfare aircraft about 230 miles off the Virginia coast, the Air Force said.

The Soviet warplanes intercepted Tuesday remained over international waters the entire time, the North American Aerospace Defense Command said Wednesday. It is not unusual for Soviet military planes to travel near the continental United States when going to Cuba or returning to the Soviet Union, NORAD said.

Air Force officials would not say in which direction the planes were traveling.

An intercept occurs when a plane flies close enough to a targeted aircraft to identify it. In this case, the intercept was made by two F-15s assigned to the Tactical Air Command's 48th Fighter Interceptor Squadron at Langley.

NORAD said the Soviet aircraft were detected by radar when they entered the air defense identification zone without authorization. The U.S. pilots identified the Soviet planes as TU-142 Bear anti-submarine warfare planes.

The closest the Soviet planes came to the mainland was about 230 miles.

The intercept marked the second time this year that Soviet military planes have been pinpointed by radar and tracked by U.S. air defense aircraft over international waters off the East Coast, NORAD said.

Police said an autopsy last week indicated cyanide poisoning. Investigators then removed the contents of the medicine chest in the victim's apartment and ordered toxicology tests on the body. The tests were returned Wednesday.

Faries was the third person to die this year from cyanide in cases related to over-the-counter drugs. The February death of a New York woman is still under investigation. The death of a Nashville, Tenn., man in the same month was ruled suicide.

The Austin victim's father, Wayne Faries, said in a telephone interview from his home in Garland that police "couldn't tell me anything about his death" until Bayardo phoned him Wednesday with the word that his son had taken cyanide in the Anacin-3.

The father said his son, who was buried in Dallas on Monday, had planned to go to medical school after completing studies at UT.

A spokesman for Walgreen corporate headquarters said the company asked all Austin Walgreen store managers to cordon off store aisles where Anacin-3 was displayed to prevent sale of the product and to preserve any evidence.

Walgreens also "sent out a computer message to its stores nationwide to pull the Anacin 3 capsules from the shelves and to quarantine the product until further notice," said Laurie Meyer, manager of corporate relations for Walgreens in Deerfield, Ill.

FDA commissioner Dr. Frank Young said the agency's decision to examine all Anacin capsules from Austin-area Walgreens stores was "an added precaution."

"We do not have any evidence at this time that the capsules are tainted with cyanide," Young said.

A chemist from the manufacturer of Anacin, American Home Products of New York, was to travel to Austin to assist in the investigation, said Jack Wood, director of government affairs for the firm.

"I think it's far-fetched to think it is tampering at the factory," he said.

Wood said samples of the Anacin-3 batch found in Faries' apartment were being analyzed for traces of cyanide at the company's New York lab. He said the company routinely retains samples from each batch of the pain killer manufactured in the event further analysis is required.

Wood said Anacin-3 is made at plants in Elkhart, Ind., and Hammonton, N.J.

Faries was employed by Presidio Theaters as a projectionist, according to Al Erwin, a spokesman for the theater chain. He said Faries was "a very popular and stable employee. Everybody who knew him thought highly of him. Because of that, we didn't think it was suicide or drug-related at all."

BOAT

The shots were ignored and the Argentine cutter gave up its chase when the Chi-Fu 6 reached the British exclusion zone, it said. Lei said it then pursued another boat, the Chian Yah, but also was unable to catch it.

The Prefecto Derbes then turned its attention to the slower Chiann-Der 3.

Lei said a British warship offered to help rescue the crew of the fishing vessel and asked permission to enter Argentine-claimed waters, but that the Prefecto Derbes did not acknowledge messages.

In London, the British Defense Ministry said two Royal Navy Sea King helicopters flew to the scene of the incident Wednesday night, but their offer of help for the three Taiwan crewmen reported injured was refused by the Argentines.

"It is now a matter for the Argentinian and Taiwanese governments," said a ministry spokesman who spoke on condition of anonymity. Argentina does not have diplomatic relations with Taiwan.

Argentina says fishing trawlers from Taiwan have violated the 200-mile limit it has declared. But Lei said the boats involved Wednesday were fishing outside Argentine waters and just five miles outside the British exclusion zone around the Falklands.

Canyon Sen. Bill Sarpalius, who introduced legislation last session that would have created a joint committee to develop state safety standards for a repository, said he will continue to fight DOE's efforts in the Panhandle.

"I'm still opposed to drilling a shaft through a major water supply and putting nuclear waste below some of the most fertile farm land in the nation," Sarpalius said.

Other states with potential sites for the waste repository are Washington and Nevada.

Correction

The Doonesbury comic strip published on April 16, 1986 included a reference to John Horton among those Reagan Administration officials who have, according to the strip, "left office admist charges of unethical behavior or criminal wrongdoing." The John Horton referred to in the Doonesbury strip resigned from his position with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

It has come to our attention that in 1984 another John Horton resigned his position as the CIA's National Intelligence Officer for Latin America. We are certainly unaware that the CIA John Horton has ever been charged with unethical behavior or criminal wrongdoing, and he has advised Universal Press Syndicate, which distributes Doonesbury, that his resignation from the CIA was due to professional differences with the Director of Central Intelligence. The reference in the Doonesbury strip published April 16, 1986 was to the John Horton who resigned from the EPA, and not the John Horton who resigned from the CIA.

Garry Trudeau, Universal Press Syndicate and this newspaper regret any confusion caused by the fact that there have been two Reagan administration officials named John Horton.

Most of Big Spring no longer high and dry

BIG SPRING (AP) — Four days after all of this West Texas city's water pumps pooped out and prompted a state of emergency, pipes were again gurgling with water today, officials say.

The city's four ailing pumps were repaired and went back on line early today, but it will take two to three days more before things are completely back to normal, city police spokesman Jack Cottongame said.

"There are a few people who are still without water — those on higher land — but we're trying to correct that," he said. "We're still asking people to conserve while the system fills back up."

Mayor Cotton Mize had declared a state of emergency Wednesday as workers attempted to restore water after mechanical troubles left more than half of the city of 30,000 dry.

Ironically, the weekend's torrential rains had left plenty of water behind — "We had the water all the time but we couldn't pump it," acting City Manager Hal Boyd said.

Residents, high school students in the midst of final exams and hospitals had to resort to bottled water or the city park well during the four-day drought, Boyd said.

Boyd said inmates at the Big Spring federal prison camp, a minimum security facility, helped to haul water to schools and the hospital Wednesday.

The mechanical problems left as much as 90 percent of the city either without water or with very low pressure Tuesday, said City Works Director Tom Decell.

The pump trouble started with a motor burnout, and when workers attempted to switch to another unit, a valve broke, sending water gushing over all the pumps, Boyd said.

All four pumps at the 35-year-old plant have failed at various times over the last three days, and two had been shipped to Odessa for major repair work, Decell said.

Susan Palmer, an employee at Dell's Cafe, said customers had appeared to be taking the water situation calmly.

"I don't know if I want to repeat what everybody's saying. Most people have just been laughing," she said before the pumps were repaired. "We don't have any other choice until they get it fixed. (People are saying) they could get a better drink of water out of a puddle in their backyard."

Statistics show no-pass discriminates, lawyer says

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas' no-pass, no-play rule is sidelining more blacks and Hispanics than white athletes, according to an attorney who says he made a computer analysis of the policy.

Attorney Anthony Sheppard's analysis, compiled from a court-ordered questionnaire, has not been admitted into evidence yet, said T. Gerald Treece, a special master appointed to compile the statistics.

But a spokesman for the state attorney general's office called the findings "meaningless" because they are not compared to any past data.

After the suit was challenged in a class-action suit, State District Judge Marsha Anthony ordered the state's school districts to supply a racial breakdown of students affected by the controversial rule.

The rule, upheld earlier this year as constitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court, now is being challenged by Sheppard's clients on the grounds it discriminates against minorities.

The rule prohibits students who fail a class from participating in extracurricular activities for six weeks. Sheppard is representing 11 Houston families who filed suit last year challenging the rule.

Sheppard's computer analysis of 511 reporting districts showed that for the second six-week period this school year, blacks had a failure rate of 35 percent. Hispanics compiled a 38 percent failure rate, while white students posted a 26 percent rate.

Dole: Houston to get transitway funds

Money 'will mean a lot more jobs'

HOUSTON (AP) — Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole says the city will get $26.5 million to help build a transitway that should help alleviate traffic congestion in north Houston and its suburbs.

"It will mean a lot more jobs," Mrs. Dole said Wednesday, adding she is aware of Houston's need for work during the oil-related recession.

But she did not know how many jobs the federal money would provide, nor when it would be awarded.

According to a statement released by Mrs. Dole, the one-way, 13.5-mile-long reversible transitway will be located in the center of U.S. 290. The transitway will be used for traffic going into town in the morning and for vehicles heading home in the evening.

Public buses will have first priority on the transitway, followed by vans and car pools, said Alan Kiepper, general manager of the Metropolitan Transit Authority in Houston.

Construction could start by early fall and be finished by 1988, he said.

The project, estimated to cost about $104 million, will be paid for through federal, state and local money, Kiepper said.

The federal government has already given $40.5 million for the project, according to Metro statistics. The Metro one-cent sales tax will provide $29.2 million and state money will provide $8 million, Kiepper said.

The money will also be used to expand and improve two park-and-ride lots for a total of 1,001 spaces per lot, according to Mrs. Dole's statement.

A planned Northwest Freeway Transit Center will include about 240 parking spaces and a covered passenger shelter, the statement said.

Mrs. Dole said she came to Houston to learn about its transportation facilities. She rode a bus and took a short trip on a boat at the Port of Houston.

"I wanted her to be aware of Houston's transportation because it is an important industry," said Rep. Jack Fields, R-Texas, who invited her to Houston.

Women claim ancestor among Alamo heroes

Mrs. Moore said they became convinced Curtis died at the Alamo after reading a book on Thomas Rusk, a soldier and a statesman during the Texas revolution.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — After years of research, two members of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas say they believe they have proof more than 188 men died at the battle of the Alamo.

In researching their common family tree, Helen Pettit of Odessa and Joyce Avery Moore of Canyon Lake said they found evidence that Washington Curtis fought in the 1836 battle.

The DRT, official caretaker of the Alamo, for decades has insisted 188 men died in the bloody battle.

But Wednesday, Mrs. Pettit and Mrs. Moore called a news conference at the downtown shrine to announce they had presented their documentation to the Alamo Committee of the DRT.

The committee must approve their findings and then turn them over to the state board of the DRT before the official Alamo death toll could be raised, said Alamo Curator Steve Beck.

"This (find) has a great deal of significance and is a manifestation of the Sesquicentennial year," he said, referring to Texas' 150th anniversary celebration.

Beck said Mrs. Pettit and Mrs. Moore's findings mark the first time anyone has produced evidence of a 189th man who died in the battle against the Mexican army.

"It's very possible there were other victims because there were no survivors," he said.

At the news conference, Beck read a statement from Edith Mae Johnson, chairman of the Alamo Committee.

"I have reviewed the evidence and it appears most convincing," Ms. Johnson said in the statement. "Having researched all the documents, I feel very confident about the authenticity."

Mrs. Pettit and Mrs. Moore said they are fourth cousins and Curtis was a distant uncle to them.

Mrs. Moore said she and Mrs. Pettit discovered Curtis through reading books, writing letters and visiting courthouses.

"We had this assumption that Washington Curtis could not have evaporated from earth," Mrs. Pettit said.

Records showed evidence of him up until the battle of the Alamo.

Mrs. Moore said they became convinced Curtis died at the Alamo after reading a book on Thomas Rusk, a soldier and a statesman during the Texas revolution.

The book relates that Rusk, while fighting in the battle of San Jacinto, encountered a man named James Curtis Sr., Washington Curtis' father.

The book quotes Curtis as saying he was fighting at San Jacinto because the Mexicans killed his son.

"There is always a possibility of contradiction. So we searched for a year and couldn't find anything," Mrs. Moore said.

If the DRT verifies that Washington Curtis died at the Alamo, Mrs. Moore said she hopes he is afforded all the same honors the other defenders have received.

She said she would like his name to appear in history books and to be added to the names listed on the Alamo Cenotaph sculpture in the plaza across the street from the shrine.

Justice resigns during hearings for impeachment

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Chief Justice Joseph A. Bevilacqua, citing the emotional and physical pressures of 6-month-old impeachment proceedings, has resigned from the state Supreme Court.

Bevilacqua

The resignation offered Wednesday, effective June 30, followed daily impeachment hearings before the House Judiciary Committee that have detailed Bevilacqua's alleged ties to reputed mobsters, alleged adulterous affairs and suspected misuse of court employees and a state contractor.

"Over the past two years, my family, friends and indeed myself have suffered greatly, both emotionally and physically," the 67-year-old Bevilacqua said in his resignation letter to Gov. Edward D. DiPrete.

"The current proceedings have caused a deterioration in my health to such a degree that I can no longer continue in my present capacity as chief justice," he continued.

"These proceedings have not only taxed myself, my family and my friends, but have also caused a substantial financial burden on the people of the state of Rhode Island."

Legislative officials estimated impeachment inquiry costs could top $300,000.

Bevilacqua, the Democratic House speaker from 1969-75 and Rhode Island's top judge since 1976, will be eligible for an annual pension of at least $63,000 for life.

Attempts to reach him were unsuccessful, despite repeated calls to his home and offices.

The Legislature immediately accepted the resignation. The letter was introduced in the House by Judiciary Committee Chairman Jeffrey J. Teitz, whose panel has spent the last six months considering the impeachment resolution.

Teitz, a Democrat, declined comment on whether he thought the chief justice would have been impeached. "But it is fair to say that the evidence that the committee has received raises very serious concerns. The resignation was an inevitable product of the investigation."

DiPrete hailed the resignation as "the closing page in this unhappy chapter in Rhode Island history." The Republican governor then hinted there might be an attempt to seek criminal charges against Bevilacqua.

"It is my understanding that all records pertaining to alleged criminal acts, if any, from these proceedings will be turned over to the attorney general for further review," DiPrete said.

The furor began in December 1984, when The Providence Journal detailed meetings between the judge and reputed mobsters.

Police surveillance showed the chief justice often meeting with Robert A. Barbato, a twice-convicted criminal whom Bevilacqua described as an old friend. At the time, Barbato was under indictment on a federal loan-sharking charge.

In April 1985, the newspaper revealed Bevilacqua was sighted several times at a motel with his secretary and another woman. The motel was owned by men linked to drug smuggling and gambling and Bevilacqua was not seen registering or paying for the rooms, the newspaper said.

The reports sparked an investigation by the state Commission on Judicial Tenure and Discipline, which censured Bevilacqua last June and placed him on a four-month, unpaid leave.

In 1976, the judicial ethics panel investigated Bevilacqua for presiding at the wedding of Joseph A. Badway, a convicted felon and former chauffeur to reputed mob boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca, who has since died. The commission warned Bevilacqua but did not censure him.

During the hearings, the last of which was Tuesday night, witnesses told the Judiciary Committee details of alleged adulterous trysts and meetings with mobsters.

They also recounted alleged gifts to the judge, including electrical work at his three Rhode Island properties and almost $26,000 in deferred interest payments on his horse farm.

Witnesses also said court employees worked at the farm, apparently during court hours, and in return received favored treatment from Bevilacqua.

The committee also was investigating whether the chief justice perjured himself during January testimony before the President's Commission on Organized Crime.

Federal aid to farmers may be record amount

WASHINGTON (AP) — Direct government payments to farmers will make up as much as 9 percent of gross farm income this year, double last year's level and possibly a record, the Agriculture Department says.

In fact, farmers in the hard-pressed Grain Belt will be even more dependent on federal help, with some relying on the government for as much as half their income this year.

Federal checks to farmers — primarily income subsidies, conservation and storage payments and money under the new dairy cow slaughter program — are forecast at a record $10 billion to $13 billion, department economists say.

Direct farm payments accounted for 4 percent to 5 percent of gross income to farmers last year. During the 1970s, the figure hovered at around 3 percent.

The last time the proportion approached this year's levels was in 1969, when the $3.8 billion in direct payments that year represented 7.1 percent of gross farm income, Gary Lucier, an analyst for the department's Economic Research Service, said Wednesday.

This year's high numbers are due largely to the new farm law, which is an effort to force U.S. commodity prices down through lower price supports to make them more competitive on export markets, while keeping farm incomes at current levels through subsidies.

Also adding to the importance of government payments are high rates of participation by farmers in commodity programs for the major subsidized crops: wheat, corn, cotton and rice.

"Wheat and feed grain farmers could derive about half of their gross cash income in 1986 from government programs" if price-support loans are added to the direct payments, the department is projecting in a new outlook report.

Net farm income for 1986 is now forecast at between $26 billion and $30 billion.

Seven states happy with DOE decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department lifted a cloud of uncertainty from seven Eastern and Midwestern states when it decided a second permanent nuclear waste storage depot is not needed now.

Energy Secretary John S. Herrington told a news conference Wednesday that 12 sites that had been selected in January for a second nuclear waste repository in Maine, New Hampshire, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia "are no longer under active consideration."

At the same time, the White House said Wednesday it had selected three Western states as candidates to host the first site for storing highly radioactive waste from nuclear reactors and weapons.

The White House said President Reagan has accepted the department's recommendations to proceed with detailed geologic investigation of a salt formation in Deaf Smith County, Texas; basalt on the Hanford nuclear reservation near Richland, Wash.; and volcanic tuff in Yucca Mountain near the Nevada nuclear weapons test site.

Sites in Mississippi and Utah were dropped from consideration, the White House said.

The Eastern sites for the second repository had threatened to become an issue in this fall's political campaigns, but Herrington said, "Politics is not in this decision" to drop the second nuclear dump.

"It is apparent that the volume (of waste) is growing more slowly than contemplated even a few years ago," Herrington said.

Just a month ago, Ben Rusche, director of the DOE's Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management, had defended the need for a second repository before the energy conservation and power subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

But he told reporters Wednesday there is ample time to start from scratch in selecting a second site in the mid-1990s if it should turn out one is needed, and to remove restrictions on the first site.

As part of a bargain to spread around the nuclear waste burden, Congress in 1982 authorized a first site limited to 70,000 metric tons of waste. Congress did not authorize a second site, but it gave the DOE deadlines for planning one.

At that time, the department had predicted it would need space for 140,000 metric tons in the year 2020. But Rusche said that estimate now has been revised downward to 110,000 metric tons in 2020.

Reaction to the White House and DOE decisions was mixed.

Brian McKay, attorney general of Nevada, said he was beginning lawsuits challenging the president's action. Rep. Larry Combest, R-Texas, said through a spokeswoman he "believes more than ever that serious problems and unanswered questions remain" pertaining to the Texas site.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said he was "delighted" that Georgia had been taken out of the picture, and his comment was echoed in the other Eastern states. But Utah Gov. Norm Bangerter warned that if another site is forced out, Utah could be in the running again.

Speeders could be costly for Arizona, Vermont

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department will cut highway aid to Arizona and Vermont for failing to reel in their speeding motorists, the first time the government would penalize states for not sufficiently enforcing the 55 mph speed limit.

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole told the governors of Arizona and Vermont on Wednesday that their states are not complying with regulations requiring that no more than half the motorists exceed the speed limit.

Under the law, the two states could lose up to 10 percent of their non-interstate highway assistance — about $1.9 million for Vermont and $5.1 million for Arizona.

The states would become the first to lose money because of speeding drivers. Maryland also is in danger of being found in non-compliance, but a final decision in that case has yet to be made.

The actions against Arizona and Vermont culminate long negotiations and formal proceedings before a department administrative law judge. The two states did not meet federal compliance requirements in 1984 and 1985, officials said.

Officials noted that both states have 20 days to present mitigating circumstances or evidence of hardship that could affect how much money actually is withheld.

An aide to Vermont Gov. Madeleine Kunin said in Montpelier that the state would appeal Mrs. Dole's decision.

Stephen Kimbell, Vermont's planning director, said the state will argue that the 55 mph compliance order is an unfair standard for a rural state.

Ugo Sartorelli, director of the governor's highway safety program in Vermont, said state police have been enforcing the speed limit.

"Our (speeding) tickets were up, and accidents were down," he said. "We felt we were doing a very good job."

In Arizona, Charles Miller, the state's transportation director, called the enforcement proceeding illogical, but acknowledged that the state likely will lose some money.

"Any time you defer a major highway construction improvement project you in turn affect safety," Miller said.

In an attempt to get states to enforce the nationwide speed limit, Congress gave the Transportation Department authority to withhold up to 10 percent of a state's non-interstate federal highway funds if it is found that more than 50 percent of a state's motorists fail to abide by the speed limit.

While highway police conducts its own monitoring, the federal government checks a state's compliance with the 55 mph speed limit through a series of measurements made by automatic monitoring devices placed along the highways.

The department said in the case of Arizona, 56.3 percent of the motorists that were monitored in fiscal 1984 were found to exceed the speed limit. In Vermont, 51.8 percent were found to be speeding during the same period.

Arizona had argued before the administrative law judge that the federal regulations should not apply to that state because of the state's high percentage of rural roads that are designed for higher speeds and the lack of urban roads that would reduce the statewide average.

Vermont has argued that its "technical non-compliance" does not reflect its enforcement efforts and that the state's rural composition puts Vermont at a disadvantage.

Shrimp price dropping

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The price of large shrimp has dropped 30 percent in the past two weeks as boats along Florida's Gulf Coast continue to haul in abundant supplies of the tasty crustaceans.

"The season started off with a bang and it looks like it's going to be one of the best seasons in four years," said Gerard Patti, owner of American Seafood Company. "Shrimp are just real plentiful right now."

Large shrimp were selling for $1.99 a pound Wednesday at Patti's company, down a dollar from just two weeks ago. His price for medium-sized shrimp has ranged this month from 69 to 99 cents a pound, but may stay at 69 cents a pound if the season remains productive, he said.

Last year at this time, he sold medium-sized shrimp for 89 to 99 cents a pound. Last Christmas, they were going for $2 a pound.

Train bought for $500

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — A $30 million electric train acquired by the Tennessee Valley Railroad Museum for $500 is one of the most expensive items of surplus property ever released by the federal government, officials say.

The bullet-shaped train is second only to a $31 million dry dock deal negotiated with Maine, Donald F. Layfield, general administrator of the General Services Administration, said during dedication ceremonies Tuesday.

The 156-foot Advanced Concept Train was built in 1975 as an experiment for the Urban Mass Transportation Adminstration, but funds and congressional support ran out and the GSA declared it surplus.

The museum, as a non-profit, educational organization, was allowed to buy the train for a token fee but had to raise about $15,000 to bring it here.

Reagan authorizes Ellis naturalization ceremony

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan signed a bill Wednesday clearing the way for two people from each U.S. state and territory to be naturalized in a special ceremony at the rededication of the Statue of Liberty.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger will preside at the ceremony, to be held either July 3 or July 4 on Ellis Island in New York.

The people to be naturalized will be selected by the governors of the states and territories and the mayor of the District of Columbia.

FBI agents going to Washington to show support for indicted agent

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dozens of FBI agents boarded a chartered bus early today for a nine-hour ride to Washington, D.C., to attend the arraignment of an agent charged with attempting to scuttle an investigation of Teamsters president Jackie Presser.

"This is a personal show of support for special agent Friedrick, for his 13 years of exemplary work," said agent Daniel Gordon, who served as spokesman for the group. "This is at the agents' own expense and their own time."

Robert S. Friedrick, 42, squad leader of the Cleveland FBI's organized crime squad since 1981, was indicted May 15 on five counts alleging he made false statements to the Justice Department last summer concerning Presser.

The same day, Presser, 59, was indicted on charges that he masterminded a "ghost payroll" embezzlement scheme at his Teamsters Local 507 in Cleveland.

Friedrick was to be arraigned this afternoon in U.S. District Court in Washington, while Presser and two other Local 507 officers are scheduled for arraignment in Cleveland on Friday.

Gordon repeatedly refused to comment on the charges against Friedrick.

"This in no way comments on any of the charges that Bob Friedrick faces," said Gordon. "This is strictly a personal support for the 13 years of service that he has put in in the FBI."

Gordon said he had been in the Cleveland office for 19 years, and had observed Friedrick's performance. "He's been an excellent agent, an excellent person," he said.

Cleveland FBI spokesman John Dunn said the agents' trip was a personal statement and was "in no way endorsed, supported or sanctioned" by the FBI.

Gordon said 43 agents were going by bus, although one left the bus shortly before it pulled away from the downtown federal building. The agents would not talk to reporters as they boarded the bus.

In all, Gordon said 60 agents from the FBI's Cleveland disivion were expected to be in Washington. Agents from other division offices in Youngstown, Canton, Akron and Toledo were traveling by car, he said.

Gordon said Friedrick was aware of the agents' effort.

Panel says Marcos should pay back government

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos should be asked to reimburse the U.S. government for the more than $206,000 in personal bills run up by his relatives and friends at U.S. military bases after they left Manila, a House committee says.

The bill includes $19,971 worth of long distance telephone calls and $2,552 for shoes. None of the shoes were purchased by Marcos' wife, Imelda, who reportedly owned 3,000 pairs, according to the report released Wednesday.

The study by the readiness subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee found that it cost the U.S. government $858,417 to make good on President Reagan's offer of "safe haven" for Marcos and his relatives.

That offer came as Marcos' 20-year rule fell apart last February after widespread charges of fraud in a presidential election in which he claimed victory. Marcos was replaced as president by Corazon Aquino.

Marcos, his wife and 88 relatives and friends left Manila on Feb. 25, flew to Anderson Air Base on Guam for a day, then flew to Hawaii, where they remained at Hickam Air Force Base for about a month. Marcos and his wife since have moved to a rented beachfront home.

The report recommended that the Reagan administration try to recover as much as money as possible from Marcos to pay for the bills the group ran up, particularly the $39,101 worth of goods charged during three visits to air base exchanges on Guam and Hawaii.

State Department and Pentagon officials did not return telephone calls seeking comment Wednesday.

The base exchanges are self-supporting and receive no taxpayer money for their operation. Pentagon officials have already reimbursed the exchanges for the bills by the Marcos party.

The bills at the base exchanges included $18,952 in clothes, $10,555 in health and beauty aids, $2,552 worth of shoes, $1,792 worth of luggage, $630 in cosmetics, $227 worth of cigarettes, $31 in film and a pair of earrings worth $4.

Included in the $858,417 needed to evacuate Marcos and his party from Manila was $407,604 to pay military security personnel, $183,539 for operating the planes involved, $60,375 for additional military costs at Hickam and the personal bills, the House panel found.

All personal expenses were not itemized in the report.

Rep. Dan Daniel, D-Va., supported Reagan's offer of help to Marcos because, Daniel said, "The offer of assistance was extended to avoid the very real possibility of a bloodbath if the Marcos party was not removed from the presidential palace."

But since the security personnel would have been paid anyway, the extra cost of moving Marcos was actually only about $450,000, the report said.

Marcos and his wife have told reporters they charged the items at the base exchanges because they had not expected to leave Manila and because they were not allowed to take any clothes or luggage.

They also have denied claims they stole billions of dollars from the Philippines.

Lebanon now land of rough, ready justice

EDITOR'S NOTE: Justice is rough and ready in Lebanon, where most courts ceased to function years ago. Instead, justice is meted out by militias, who have killed at least 27 men and women by firing squad or hanging since September. Officials say more are likely to die in quasi-judicial executions.

By ED BLANCHE

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Mahmoud Hable, an alleged Israeli collaborator, was strung up in Sidon's main square by hooded executioners from a Sunni Moslem militia while a crowd chanted "go to hell."

Bahij Kamand and another man were handcuffed to stakes, blindfolded in a mountain stockade and riddled with bullets by Druse militiamen before dawn. A militia tribunal had found them guilty of murdering three men from a rival faction in a personal vendetta.

Two men who stole power cables from Beirut airport, blacking out runway lights that meant planes could not land at night for weeks, were shot in the hands on the spot by Shiite Moslem Amal militiamen who caught them.

Justice in Lebanon, its judicial system wracked by 11 years of civil war, is rough and ready and enforced by the militias who control most of the ravaged country.

Militias have killed at least 27 men and women by firing squad or hanging since September. Officials say more are likely to die in quasi-judicial executions.

Radical Shiite Moslems of Hezbollah, or Party of God, claimed this month they "executed" 11 Lebanese, including two women, who were alleged Christian Phalangist agents working with U.S. and Israeli intelligence and responsible for a string of car bombings. All were hanged.

It gave no indication in a detailed 68-page report on the alleged spy ring of whether the 11 were given any kind of trial. If they were, it was held in secret.

INFORMED SOURCES believe none of the 11 went through any kind of legal process by the Iranian-backed Hezbollah which considers itself bound only by Islamic religious law.

Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, spiritual guide of Hezbollah, staunchly supported the mass hangings. "As a Moslem," the turbaned grey-bearded cleric said, "I support the notion that a killer should be penalized."

Fadlallah, who was the target of one of the car bombs in March 1984, added: "I did not interfere in this case because it concerns me personally. But the verdicts were just."

In Moslem west Beirut the only effective authority is the militias. Nabih Berri, leader of the powerful Shiite Amal movement, is Lebanon's justice minister.

AMID THE BLOODLETTING of the last 11 years, the killings passed almost unnoticed.

Officials conservatively estimate that since 1975, more than 100,000 people have been killed in Lebanon in civil war fighting, inter-militia battles and Israel's 1982 invasion. Unofficial records put the death toll as high as 152,000.

Lebanon has the death penalty. But the only judicial execution carried out in the last 14 years was in April 1983, when convicted murderer Ibrahim Tarraf was hanged in Beirut.

The government's writ has not run in the capital's Moslem sector where the militias drove out Christian units of the army in February 1984. It's the same story in the rest of the country, with the exception of the shrunken Christian heartland north of Beirut.

Most of Lebanon's courts ceased to function years ago, although many Lebanese still cling to the niceties of the law, like registering marriages and drawing up contracts for house sales, in an effort to keep some semblance of order amid the mayhem.

AP Laserphoto

Nabih Berri, leader of the powerful Shiite Amal movement, addresses a news conference.

THE MAJOR MILITIAS police their areas after a fashion and have set up their own tribunals or field courts to try those who violate their rules.

The bigger factions have their own prisons, sometimes former government facilities taken over by the gunmen or deserted office blocks. One is Beirut's unfinished 40-story Murr Tower which Amal uses as a detention and interrogation center.

These are filled with political enemies and suspected agents as well as common criminals or troublemakers.

Since 1975, militiamen have emptied Lebanon's government prisons twice over to free friends or relatives.

The Christian Lebanese Forces militia established the Office of the General Coordinator on Judicial Matters last year. It has 10 lawyers to "help everyone and guide civilians to the right way and does not interfere with the courts or their verdicts," says chairman Emile Rahmah.

"We want to create an atmosphere in which the courts can function," he says. "The Lebanese Forces' judiciary system resembles the army's military courts. This office only handles cases involving our militiamen. All other cases, without exception, are referred to the courts of law."

Rahmeh says his office has nothing to do with "those imprisoned by the Lebanese forces for other reasons," such as the hundreds of Moslems kidnapped by the Christian militia or held as suspected spies.

"If we hadn't set up our own system we'd have ended up with the same chaos that exists in (Moslem) west Beirut. We don't want that to happen to our people."

Little is known about the procedures of the militia tribunals except that there are no appeals.

Amnesty International, the London-based human rights organization, said in a recent report on Lebanon that militias, including the Lebanese Forces, hold prisoners "outside the normal legal process, without charge or trial."

CITING HUMAN RIGHTS violations, Amnesty voiced concern over the executions and reports that militia prisoners are "subjected to torture and ill-treatment."

It also condemned "the widespread practice of arbitrary arrest and detention without charge or trial, the disappearance of prisoners...and the subjection of detainees to prolonged periods of incommunicado detention."

Hezbollah and the more religiously moderate Amal use no-jury tribunals. These usually comprise four or five senior security officers who conduct interrogations and decide a suspect's guilt or innocence.

Only when it comes to sentencing does the tribunal consult senior Shiite religious figures who advise on sentences under the Sharia, or Islamic laws, Shiite sources say.

"If a man has killed someone, the family of the victim is usually consulted as well," one informed source notes. "If the family calls for an eye for an eye, then the death sentence is imposed."

Petty criminals are usually bundled into militia prisons like the notorious Murr Tower until someone decides to release them. Justice is sometimes summary, without any pretence of a hearing.

Now and then, militias hand over criminals to the Internal Security Forces who, in the absence of normal procedures, dump them in the military prison in east Beirut.

RAHMEH EXPRESSED bitterness that Habib Chartouni, found guilty by a militia court of the bomb assassination of President-elect Bashir Gemayel in September 1983, was not executed after he was handed over to legal authorities.

"We left the courts to carry out the execution, but three years have passed and nothing has been done," he says. "We're not happy with that."

This attempt at some form of judicial system has cemented the partition of Lebanon into Christian, Shiite and Druse ministates.

The militias run their own administrations in their territories. They levy taxes, operate public utilities, and control prices and essential supplies such as fuel and flour, even in the Christian heartland where President Amin Gemayel's battered authority is supposed to still mean something.

Amnesty International noted that the Druse Progressive Socialist Party has "carried out a number of 'judicial executions' since they established a civilian administration" in its Chouf mountain stronghold.

In recent months, several factions have publicly executed men they have found guilty on charges that included collaborating with the Israelis, murder, kidnapping and rape.

Chilean government attracting investors

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Despite political unrest and uncertainty, the military government of President Augusto Pinochet is attracting new foreign investment to underwrite national economic recovery.

U.S. companies control half the estimated $570 million in foreign investments made or pledged over the past 10 months.

Chilean officials say the debt crisis that curbed commercial lending in all of Latin America has forced Chile to search more actively for foreigners willing to bet on the survival of its free-market system.

The Chilean effort is a political issue in some Western capitals because of Pinochet's harsh crackdown on dissent and his reluctance to start a long-promised transition to civilian rule. It also is controversial at home because of the easy terms offered multinational companies.

In its drive for economic recovery, the government has to deal with a $19 billion foreign debt and an unemployment rate of 12 percent, a key factor in domestic unrest.

The investments and pledges received so far represent the biggest inflow of foreign capital since a crippling recession in 1982.

"Businessmen arrive in Chile expecting to see tanks in the streets," Economy Minister Juan Carlos Delano said in an interview. "They've been told Chile is a risk. But, curiously, at the moment of decision, they invest. We're approving projects every day."

The biggest new venture is a $302 million methanol plant of the U.S.-owned Allied Signal Corp. It has been under construction since April, with the goal of turning Chile into a major exporter of methanol, a non-leaded compound that raises the octane level of gasoline.

An additional $137 million has arrived since July, the Central Bank says, under a new plan that allows anyone to buy Chilean foreign debt notes at a 70 percent discount, exchange them for pesos and invest the money here.

Foreigners are using this money to expand forestry, fishing, mining and fruit exporting enterprises.

Aetna, the U.S. insurance agency, and Bankers Trust of New York have bought up about half Chile's lucrative private pension fund system.

In June, Finance Minister Hernan Buchi is scheduled to visit New York, Chicago, Denver and San Francisco to lobby U.S. businessmen with the promise of profits in other ventures, such as the government's up-for-sale telephone company. Similar campaigns are planned in Britain and West Germany.

Pinochet, an army general who seized power in 1973, is counting on foreign capital to help Chile achieve healthy annual growth rates of 4 to 6 percent for the rest of the 1980s.

Some political analysts say that kind of growth could improve Pinochet's chances of staying on as president after his current term ends in 1989. Pinochet gained in popularity after ousting the Marxist Salvador Allende from the presidency in 1973 and building an economy that was flourishing until the 1982 recession.

The economy grew 2.3 percent last year but has not fully recovered.

In a labor day speech May 1, the 70-year-old ruler denounced opposition leaders who, he said, "run all over the world in well-orchestrated campaigns to block investment that is so necessary to create more jobs and well being for all Chileans."

The government was stung in April when a state-owned company in Finland, Outokumpu, yielded to pressure by Finnish labor unions and suspended a $240 million mining project here. Chilean officials contended that anti-Pinochet statements by two Chilean student leaders visiting Finland influenced the decision.

The Reagan administration, ignoring critics in the U.S. Congress, has supported Chile by offering federal insurance to American investors here and approving a $55 million World Bank credit to the methanol project.

At the same time, U.S. Ambassador Harry G. Barnes Jr. has said publicly that some American investment here has been discouraged by uncertainty over the kind of governmemt that will emerge in 1989.

One reason for this, bankers say, is the memory of the 1971 expropriations of ITT and three U.S.-owned copper mines by Allende's elected coalition government and concern over Marxist influence in a future civilian administration.

After deposing Allende, the military regime decreed what is still the most liberal investment code in South America. It offers indefinite mining concessions, equal treatment of foreign and local investors, and the right to take unlimited profits out of Chile after three years.

Chilean officials now acknowledge that favorable treatment, by itself, has failed to attract the capital they expected. Since 1974, the Foreign Investment Committee has approved $7.6 billion in projects, but just $2.4 billion has actually been invested, its figures show.

"Chile was supposed to be another Switzerland, so it was thought that investment would flow in automatically," said Pedro Cabezon, the committee's new executive secretary, who heads an active search for capital.

In a major concession, the government amended its code in November to let foreign companies bank part of their export revenues in offshore accounts. Allied Signal's lawyers had insisted on the change.

Pinochet's critics say his abandonment of traditional state controls has relinquished too much of Chile's important financial and mining sectors to foreign interests.

The Christian Democratic Party, the main political opposiiton, favors time limits on mining concessions and a more active state role in regulating all investment.

"But we are not going to paralyze projects or change what's already negotiated," said the party's president, Gabriel Valdes. "We recognize that Chile has a vital need for investment."

To minimize risk, big investors such as Allied Signal and Britain's Northern Strip Mining Ltd. have obtained partial World Bank financing for recent ventures, in the belief that unfavorable action by a future government could be blocked by that international lending agency.

Executives of Exxon and Citibank, two of the biggest U.S. companies in Chile, say they are looking forward to a long stay.

Exxon is spending $65 million to double production at one of its two medium-sized copper mines in the Andes. Citibank is lining up $1.1 billion in financing for the world's richest new copper pit, held by Australia's BHP, Mitsubishi of Japan and Rio Tinto Zinc Corp. of London.

"Whatever government comes next is going to have its hands tied," said Geert J. Geisterfer, a Citibank vice president. "To pay its debt, Chile will have to keep export companies efficient, so it cannot afford to mess with those that are foreign owned."

Music played during televised Senate quorum calls

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's greatest deliberative body, which can also be the dullest place in town, may become a bit livelier in one of its dullest moments.

Livelier, that is, for the nationwide audience which, beginning Monday, will be able to see gavel-to-gavel Senate proceedings on television.

The dullest moment: One of the Senate's frequent quorum calls in which a clerk drones the names of absent senators until someone decides to speak and calls the whole thing off.

The Senate dealt with quorum calls when experimental television began on an in-house, closed-circuit basis at the beginning of May by turning off the microphones and cameras and silently displaying a graphic which read: "The Senate is Conducting a Quorum Call."

It still does that. But to relieve the boredom of quorum calls that can last for hours a new twist has been added: classical music.

Some quorum calls featured the works of Bach or Handel or Mozart.

And last week, a lengthy quorum call served as ample justification for the playing of the stirring — and loud — 1812 Overture by Tchaikovsky which concludes with crashing chords punctuated by cannon shot.

For those near a television set, it was probably the least boring quorum call in Senate history.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., got a "Dear Bob" letter last week from his wife.

"Maybe we ought to offer tea or ice cream or crumpets about this time of the day (in the Senate) and they could stay away from downtown. There is nothing down there (at the White House) that we have not seen before.

— Sen. Barry Goldwater

It was waiting for him, lying on his desk, as he entered the Senate chamber.

But it wasn't the product of a marital spat.

All 99 other senators also got a letter from the senator's wife who, in her professional life, is secretary of transportation.

The letter to Dole, which was in fact headed, "Dear Bob," concerned pending legislation on daylight-saving time.

It was signed in type, "Elizabeth Hanford Dole," and in ink, "Elizabeth."

"Oh, what does she want now," said Dole.

Then, glancing at it, he remarked, "I think it's a form letter."

Sometimes even a United States senator finds it hard to get answers from the federal government.

Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., was relating his efforts to question Attorney General Edwin Meese III about a Justice Department policy that was keeping child protection officials out of negotiations to settle a lawsuit against a training school for retarded children.

The advocates couldn't participate, Weicker had been told, unless they agreed in advance to go along with the outcome of the negotiations.

When he asked Meese about it at a hearing on Capitol Hill, Weicker said the attorney general told him he was unaware of the situation. And he explained that he was unaware of it because he had been busy flying around the country making speeches.

Weicker's response?

He tacked an amendment onto a spending bill which cuts $10,000 from Meese's $100,000 travel budget.

"I just want to send a message," the senator from Connecticut said.

• • •

On a recent spring afternoon the Senate floor was occupied by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., who complained that the Senate could not move ahead to a vote on a pending measure because too many senators were engaged in conferences "downtown" at the White House.

"Somehow it seems that when it comes time to vote around this place, there are more darned things going on downtown than up here," Goldwater grumbled.

"Maybe we ought to offer tea or ice cream or crumpets about this time of the day and they could stay away from downtown. There is nothing down there that we have not seen before.

"There is a lot of work going on up here, and our members should be here."

The amendment Goldwater wanted a vote on — and on which the Senate eventually acted — concerned changes in the military retirement system.

The senator, who ran for president in 1964, is 77 and will retire from Congress at the end of the year. And the thought of retirement reminded him of the virtues of age.

Said Goldwater: "I think the older a person gets the better he gets."

Then, after a pause for reflection, he added: "With some exceptions. And I may be one of them."

Rep. Lynn Martin, a blunt-speaking Illinois Republican, complained to the House Budget Committee that its fiscal 1987 spending plan failed to eliminate a single program.

She blamed the problem not only on the fact that the committee is controlled by Democrats, but also on the fact that it is controlled by men.

"Maybe girls learn to say no easier than boys," she said.

Have fancy dinner, see the fights

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Knuckle sandwiches are not on the menu, but when the bell rings in the ballroom of the posh Hotel Sofitel, diners turn to their after-dinner coffee and watch the fights.

"It's rather a bizarre setup. People think of dinner boxing as eating and having a mouthpiece fall on their table," hotel manager Michael Hill said.

After a candlelight dinner of seafood cocktails, rare prime rib and chocolate mousse, the lights go up and Golden Gloves boxers entertain diners with uppercuts and right jabs.

Dinner boxing gives pugilists a chance to fight in front of a crowd and make money for their club. The winner of each three-round fight gets a red satin jacket, and the Golden Gloves takes home $10 from every ticket sold.

For the spectators, it's more of a social affair than a sporting event.

Dinner boxing is well removed from a cheap night at a neighborhood gym. Tickets are $25 each, and $35 for a ringside seat.

"There's big money down here tonight," said Tim Morrison, program director for a Toledo radio station.

Dinner boxing has become something of a Yuppie craze. Young, urban professionals — mostly men — make up the crowds at dinner boxing cards from Minneapolis to Miami.

"Most of the people there are probably 10 years older than Yuppie status, although they still act like Yuppies," Hill said.

"I'd like to say we're trying to further the sport and support the Golden Gloves," Hill said, but added that dinner boxing began here this past winter as a cure for cabin fever. The Sofitel held three nights of boxing this year, and plans more next fall and winter, he said. Each night draws about 350 spectators, including some family members of participants.

"One-two, Ricky. Stick 'em. One-two uppercut. Throw that left on 'em, Ricky," screamed Rosaline Hackney, who cheered her husband on at a recent dinner boxing match.

Shirley and Dennis Kujawa of nearby Rossford watched the action in the ring with Doug and Carmelita Crocker.

"Mr. Crocker does our income taxes. Our way of paying him is to (take the couple) out to a restaurant or a fun event," Mrs. Kujawa said.

"I thought it would be kind of brutal, but they're really well-trained athletes," Kujawa said.

"Guys are just eating this stuff up," Morrison said. "It's an avenue for gentlemen, versus taking somebody out to the dinner theater and listening to 'Mame' or 'Hello, Dolly' for three hours, to sit here and get some blood on their shirts."

He exaggerates. There's little bloodletting. The most serious injury is a bloody nose, said Curly Braddock, president of the Toledo Golden Gloves Association.

Boxers are required to wear headgear, and the doctor at ringside will stop any fight that gets out of hand, said Braddock, a former boxer.

"Nobody gets hurt. Nobody's out to see the kids get hurt. It's nothing like the pros — there's no comparison," Braddock said.

Public scrutiny

Americans look at the recent Soviet nuclear disaster and ask: "How could they build nuclear power plants without crucial safety features?"

True, our open society lends itself to more public scrutiny of safety factors in about every aspect of daily life than does the rigidly structured communist system. But perhaps Americans should ask the same question of our own government.

In the United States, only six nuelear plants have no containment structures to prevent radiation from spewing into the atmosphere. And five of those — one in Washington state and four in South Carolina — are operated by the federal government.

Federal officials were busy in the weeks immediately following the Chernobyl incident assuring the public that the federal plants, while similar in some respects to Chernobyl in the Soviet Union, are far less dangerous.

Because the federal plants produce plutonium for atomic weapons, we've been assured, they're under less stress than a commercial power-producing reactor.

Sure, the federal reactors don't have containment vessels. But they do have a backup system, said the experts. They let the vapors escape, and some carbon filters supposedly clean up the isotopes on their way out. Graphite in the Chernobyl plant went up in flames. But graphite in the Hanford plant in Washington state would never burn, according to one official.

Just who is doing public relations for these guys? Tass? If everything's fine at the lightly girded federal reactors, then why does the federal government insist on heavy concrete containment structures for utility-owned nuclear power plants?

The only commercial power operation that has escaped that requirement is a trouble-plagued gas-cooled reactor in Colorado.

It's time for our own government to learn a lesson from Chernobyl. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission should take a careful look at all six of the less-protected plants. It shouldn't hesitate to order containment structures, or any other safety feature, that would help avert a disaster.

African wildlife to suffer third loan

WASHINGTON — At the World Bank, nothing succeeds like failure. After two earlier disasters resulting from unwise development loans to Botswana, World Bank officials have decided to throw $17 million more at the problem. The bank's low-interest loan funds are mostly underwritten by U.S. taxpayers.

Jack Anderson

World Bank brass insist that their multi-million-dollar loans to Third World countries are now being made only after careful consideration of environmental issues. Critics vehemently disagree. Bruce Rich, a staff attorney at the Environmental Defense Fund, told our associate Donald Goldberg that "little has changed" in the three years since he and other critics began raising environmental concerns with bank officials.

The recently approved $17 million loan to Botswana for a project called Livestock III is a case in point. It threatens to destroy the country's once-abundant wildlife, already suffering from a five-year drought in the Nevada-size southern African nation.

Next to diamonds, most of the desert country's income is from the export of beef to Europe. But overgrazing of the limited grasslands by beef cattle — encouraged by World Bank loans — has devastated much of Botswana's rangeland.

Documentary film maker Rick Lomba has recorded gruesome scenes of migratory antelope and wildebeest starving and dying of thirst while cattle consume the dwindling grass and water supplies. Workers are shown driving the desperate wildlife away from the water holes, while thousands of wildebeest carcasses pile up nearby.

Lomba and others fear that Livestock III will intensify the cattle's destruction of the environment.

It's not that the World Bank's own experts didn't point out the dire results of Livestock I and II. A 1982 report, commissioned by the bank and written by two of its consultants, said the earlier projects had caused "such negative social effects as widening the income gap between rich and poor, permanently concentrating the country's land resources in the hands of a tiny percentage of its occupants, and depressing the already limited subsistence capabilities of its poorer citizens."

A further concern is that Livestock III will exacerbate the environmental problems by financing more rangeland fences, which keep wildlife from their traditional migratory routes and force them into a losing confrontation with the cattle. World Bank officials claim no more fences will be built, though the bank's own staff appraisal states that at least 130 fencing "packages" are planned.

With all these drawbacks, why did the U.S. Treasury representative at the World Bank vote for the loan? Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., asked that question, and was assured by Treasury Secretary James Baker that "the concerns had been sufficiently addressed."

But a State Department cable from the embassy in Botswana makes clear that the department and the Treasury ignored the advice of U.S. experts on the scene who had expressed a variety of concerns about the project.

Footnote: A World Bank spokesman said most of Botswana's wildlife problems were caused by the long drought, not solely the development loans.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Why did it take the Reagan administration so long to complain about Syria's role in anti-American terrorism, though it has been no secret to U.S. intelligence agencies? The best answer we get is that the administration credits Syrian dictator Hafez Assad with arranging or at least aiding the release of Americans from captivity in the Middle East, and apparently hopes Assad will offer his good offices to spring the remaining Americans being held hostage in Syrian-controlled Lebanese territory. But Assad's apparent role in recent terrorist attacks in Europe was too blatant to pass without protest.

ART BUCHWALD

Late bloomer in search of higher education

This scene, or something like it, is being played all over the country right now.

"Hi, Dad. The reason I came home is that I just had a great idea."

"What's that, son?"

"I want to go to college this fall. I'll make a wonderful student."

Art Buchwald

"But you're 35 years old. Why didn't you go to school when I begged you to 17 years ago?"

"I was trying to find myself."

"All those years?"

"It took me longer than I thought it would. Aw c'mon, Dad. What can it cost you — a lousy five grand a year."

"Colleges don't cost five grand a year anymore. They cost 15 grand. While you were out searching hither and yon for yourself the admissions people were multiplying everybody's tuition by three."

"I always suspected you didn't want me to have an education."

"It's nothing personal, son, but after you left to work as a bartender, I decided to invest the money we had set aside in something more meaningful, like my retirement. The truth is both your mother and I had decided you were on your way when you became night grillman at the Burger King."

"Boy, that is something — that is really something. I never thought you'd take my education money and squander it on your old age."

"I know it's selfish, but how could we know after all these years that you would have the urge to learn? The offer I made to you when you were 18 years old was not open-ended."

"Look, if I go now I'll graduate when I'm 39 years old."

"You'll be the oldest student to matriculate."

"No, I won't. I know a lot of guys who will be older. You remember Henry Landwirth, the guy who played in the band I managed after I gave up Burger King? He's only a sophomore and he is 45."

"Did he find himself?"

"He says he was never lost. He claims he just needed a break after high school before he started college."

"Why is he going to school now?"

"He decided that without a college diploma you are nobody. With a sheepskin he feels he can charge twice as much to play gigs on New Year's Eve."

"What do you want to study?"

"I don't know, Dad. I figure I'll go to college and something will turn me on."

"You're telling me you want to go back to school and you don't know what you want to be?"

"I'm not one to go to college just to get a good job. It must be a more meaningful experience to cherish forever."

"Good point. But you'd be so far ahead of the game if, at age 35, you knew what you wanted to do."

"If you won't give me the money I'll work my way through college."

"What a wonderful idea. It will give you moral fiber."

"But if I have to work I'll be cheated out of what everyone says should be the happiest days of my life."

"If you could just give me some hint about your goals I might reconsider your request."

"Give me a break, Dad. Just because I found myself doesn't mean I have any idea of what I want to do."

Former Reb support

I stand in correction. As a strong supporter of the public school system in Midland, I have for years argued with my friends and neighbors as to the quality of our elected school board. Now, I must admit I was wrong. This group of people has voted to alter my neighborhood, and not one of them even lives there. I will now join the opposition — that block of concerned Midlanders who will be working to elect a different school board (one who thinks of everyone).

Several years ago, I purchased my home. That home is now paid for. One of the considerations in choosing the location in which I would raise my children was, of course, the school districts. I can thank God that the boundary change does not apply to my two children. Like myself, my son is a Lee graduate, and my daughter will be there in the fall. I'm glad, as I do not have to lie about my address or look for a new home. I will, however, proudly remain a Rebel and support my friends and neighbors with younger children who take action to have those children attend the high school of their choice.

I think the school board should offer to buy and live in the homes of those parents who are unhappy. Let them wear the other shoe for awhile.

For weeks now, I have been hearing how disadvantaged Midland High has been. How can this be true when they have had Doc Dodson all these years? Could we now have that advantage at Lee?

MHS, LHS both great

This is in response to Faye Thurman's letter to the editor, Sunday, May 18. When I read a letter like she wrote, it makes me wonder if some parents never teach their children to accept changes in their lifetime, if it be school changes or more serious changes. I was here when the new school was built, it was called Robert E. Lee High School. Boundaries were set up for the two schools, and (as Thurman might say) Midland was torn apart, friends that had gone to school together for years were separated. All the smart ones did not go to Lee, the schools were divided equally. The students all adjusted to the change, and everything worked out just great. My five children graduated from Midland High. We think they got an excellent education, of course it depends on the student and their parents. Our children went to college, one son is a chemist; another is a bookkeeper, an accountant; another is with Southwestern Bell. Our daughter was secretary of the year here in Midland in 1979. One son is handicapped, but he had the honor of graduating from Midland High School. We have two fine schools here in Midland, and we should be proud of both schools, and work to keep both schools great. If we had never changed, we would still be living in caves and have square wheels. I believe my children received the best education in Midland High, the same as they would have received in any school. It still depends on if the student wants to learn. Midland High has honor students as well as Lee. I wonder, if her husband were transferred, would she go with him, or stay and send her children to Lee?

A last note: I was here when we had only two junior high schools, San Jacinto and dear old Cowden Junior High. The students that were attending San Jacinto would hold their nose when they passed Cowden Junior High, but before some of them were out of junior high boundary lines were changed and they had to go to Cowden instead San Jacinto. They found there were real nice kids and teachers in Cowden, and do you know they adjusted to this change, and every thing turned out just great.

I believe both schools have great bands, and I believe Midland High has an excellent baseball team, and a great coach. Lee had an excellent football team, so now we are even, so "What's the Beef?" We voted for the trustees, so support them. I also have a grandson that will graduate from Midland High. He is studying to be a lawyer. He must have had some good teachers or a willingness to learn.

No question of support

This is in response to Faye Thurman's letter in May 18 edition.

Lady, you are way off base. Your opinion of why the school board's decision was made is ironic. Only Lee Rebels would think it was a plot against them.

As I sat reading your letter, my first response was laughter, followed by rage. Who do you think you are? We don't want or need any of your spirit, pride or loyalty. As a matter of fact, we probably have a little left over if you need any. Of course, the colors will be purple and gold.

Have you had your head in the sand so long that you don't know that MHS has honor students and yes, surprise, surprise, our football, basketball, baseball, band, choir and track programs aren't anything to laugh at either.

You insinuated MHS needed the support. Look again! They have all the support they need from their students, parents, and teachers.

And lady, let me tell you something else! Every time you compete with the Bulldogs at any level we give you a challenge.

As for the statement Jack Stephenson made on television, attitudes like you displayed in your letter have made him tired of what MHS has taken. I'm sure I'm not alone in saying we're all tired of attitudes like yours. Just because our kids do not go to Lee does not mean they're not any good. Anyone who would publicly run down students because they don't go to a certain school certainly has a problem.

The students at MHS have the same desire to do their best in everything they set out to do, and they are doing a great job of representing Midland High School.

'Meet Editor' worthwhile

On the 15th of this month the editors of this newspaper held a question and answer forum for the public at Fannin Elementary School. To hold such a meeting to get input from the people of Midland is a terrific idea. However, very few of the good citizens took advantage of a great opportunity to tell the people of the newspaper what kind of paper we want.

Although there were only a few of us there, we had a very lively and candid discussion, to their credit the members of the staff who were there answered our questions honestly and no question was too trival.

So, good people of Midland, it is always easy to complain about what is wrong with your paper. Now you can complain or compliement the people who run the paper and can change things. When they announce the next "Town Meeting" for your paper, plan to attend. They will even give you a cup of coffee or a Coke.

A call to reduce taxes

In these days of severe economic depression I would hope the various taxing bodies of Midland would elect to reduce their proposed budgets. A recent Notice of Appraisal I received from Midland Central Appraisal District depicts an increase of 11.86518 percent for the estimated tax rate for 1986 compared to 1985's actual rate. I assume this was calculated to insure a revenue neutral basis for 1986. It is certainly my hope that the final tax rate is not set at this increased level.

It would seem that all taxing bodies should tighten their belts and reduce spending as all residents of Midland have been forced to do. We all realize these are critical economic times and if programs must suffer, so be it. It has been pointed out many times by proponents of bond issues that a few dollars per year is not much of an increase. Conversely, a few dollars per year tax decrease by each of the five taxing bodies would be welcomed relief for the hard-hit citizens of Midland.

Please help out the wearly taxpayer for a change. After all, it will only reduce your budget a small amount.

Midland talent abundant

We Midlanders are so lucky! Within our midst we have talented singers, actors, artists, directors, producers and the like and we all take them for granted.

Since moving to Midland I have attended some of the Midland-Odessa Symphony concerts, some of the plays offered at Midland Community Theater and seen some of the artists works displayed at Midland College and at various spots in Midland. I have enjoyed all of it.

Last Saturday night I had the pleasure of attending a performance of "Grease" the Yucca. It was delightful! Watching these talented people whose only pay for their talent and effort, and above all their time, is the enjoyment they receive from performing, is a real treat! They all are working together, actors and crew! And having fun!!

Even though times are hard in Midland right now, we all need to treat ourselves once in awhile. The concerts are free for the most part. The artists displays are free. There is a charge for the plays but that is to cover the costs of costumes, sets and all the other necessities that go in to making the play what it is. It is worth it!

Treat yourselves! Get out to see "Grease," go to the concerts, see the various art displays and other offerings around Midland. There really is a lot to do if you look for it.

Thanks Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, Midland Community Theater, Act IX, and Midland College. The pleasure is ours!!

Education is crux of anti-drug campaign

EDITOR'S NOTE: Nancy Reagan has been all over the place in her campaign against teen-age drug abuse. "She owns the issue now," her former press secretary says. And while critics of the administration say it's not doing enough in the war on drugs, they concede that the first lady has done much to raise public awareness.

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seated among 17 other first ladies in the glittering East Room of the White House, Nancy Reagan bit her lip and brushed away a tear as she listened to a teen-age girl tell of her struggle with drugs.

"Dear God, don't let me wake up," the young girl, her voice cracking, said she prayed during one overdose incident.

That session, the first such gathering of first ladies at the White House, was one of the most widely publicized events of Mrs. Reagan's five-year campaign against teen-age drug abuse. Since launching that campaign, she has traveled nearly 95,000 miles, discussed the problem with Pope John Paul II and Princess Diana, and visited dozens of schools, treatment programs and the United Nations.

She says her effort has helped generate anti-drug groups around the country and increased public awareness. Supporters say her attention has helped them raise money, change young people's attitudes and focus community attention on the drug plague.

Statistics, which show that a recent four-year decline in drug use among high school students has leveled off, are inconclusive, however.

One critic of her husband's administration credits Mrs. Reagan with doing an admirable job. But she is fighting a losing battle, he says.

REP. GLENN English, D-Okla., chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee which held 32 hearings to examine the war against illegal drugs, says, "I only wish her husband's administration did as well as she does."

Although Mrs. Reagan agrees government does have a role in the interdiction of drugs, she said, "I don't think that government can supply the things that are needed most. They can't supply love or attention or involvement or any of those things that are needed."

The crux of her campaign, she said, is to educate people to the dangers and help children and adults "become knowledgeable and involved and aware."

"They are very anxious to talk about it — very — which I didn't realize," she said. "They want to know that somebody is listening and somebody is paying attention."

By White House count, Mrs. Reagan has visited seven high schools, nine elementary schools and three universities, has delivered 38 speeches and given 104 interviews about her work. In addition to two first ladies' conferences, she has appeared in 17 radio and television tapings, including a cameo appearance on the prime time comedy "Diff'rent Strokes."

At her school appearances, Mrs. Reagan is poised and low-key. She usually chats with the students, or gives a short, upbeat speech decrying the use of drugs and warning parents and children alike that the nation could lose "a whole generation" to drugs.

"Peer pressure is for the birds," she told fourth and fifth graders at a Valentine-bedecked Island Park Elementary School in Seattle during a visit in February 1984.

SHE TOLD students at Longfellow Elementary School in Oakland, Calif., "You have to realize you'll always have problems in life. You've got to accept that. You'll have to be able to handle them without a crutch."

Richard Owens, the principal of Harshman Junior High School in Indianapolis, says Mrs. Reagan's visit to his school in September 1984 caused a "major turnaround" on the part of the students.

"I think it was a miracle that she came at all — it really helped to bring attention to the problem, help the kids deal with it," he says.

Owens says that after her visit, the school developed an anti-drug program, and, with the help of the local Kiwanis Club, parents and teachers began working with students.

Kiwanis International and other community service organizations, such as the Optimists and Lions Clubs, do much of the advance work for Mrs. Reagan's anti-drug events. The first lady acts as the draw to gain publicity for the local effort.

Kiwanis, for example, has helped put Mrs. Reagan and her anti-drug message on billboards, radio, television, and in newspapers and magazines across the country. "We keep suggesting things, and Mrs. Reagan's staff keeps approving them," says David Blackmer, public relations director for the 315,000-member service organization.

"She's opened doors that never would have been opened," says Blackmer. He estimates that the organization's public service campaign, in partnership with Mrs. Reagan, has garnered $10 million to $12 million in donated advertising space and air time.

SOME ON Capitol Hill who, while praising Mrs. Reagan's efforts, castigate her husband's administration for what they call gimmickry in the war against drugs.

English says the administration lacks a general plan of attack on drug abuse and a coordinated strategy of interdiction, enforcement and education "is desperately needed." He says testimony before his committee indicated that the administration planned to spend only $52.5 million of the $75 million that Congress appropriated this year for the U.S. Customs air fleet assigned to intercept drug shipments entering the country.

Rep. Charles B. Rangel, chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, has urged the infusion of $750 million in federal funds for state and local law enforcement efforts, drug abuse treatment and prevention.

"I don't really think that there have been as many cutbacks as they like to say," Mrs. Reagan said. She also argues that federal money is not the answer, citing Alcoholics Anonymous as an example of a program that has succeeded without government funds.

Mrs. Reagan said the efforts to stop the flow of drugs should continue but the only long-term solution is eradicating the desire for drugs.

A survey of 16,000 high school seniors by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research showed that overall drug use among the students failed to decline in 1985 for the first time in five years.

The overall figures show 61 percent of the high school class of 1985 reported trying an illicit drug at some time with 40 percent admitting use of a drug other than marijuana. Those numbers are almost identical to those for 1984 but are one-fourth to one-third lower than in the peak years in the late 1970s.

HOWEVER, 17.3 percent of the 1985 seniors reported using cocaine, up 1.2 percent from a year earlier.

Lloyd Johnston, one of three social psychologists who directs the annual survey, said it's hard to pinpoint the reasons for the decline or for the recent leveling off.

Mrs. Reagan's efforts, Johnston said, have helped draw attention to the problem "and that's important." He also cited other factors in the leveling off: greater health-consciousness among young people, growing knowledge about the harm drugs do, and a dwindling of the fad appeal of the Vietnam War era.

Ken Barun, a former drug addict, is Mrs. Reagan's $60,000-a-year director of projects and helps organize her schedule. Her travel is taxpayer-paid, from White House funds appropriated by Congress. In foreign travel, the funds are handled by the State Department, Barun said. The first lady receives no salary or allowance, aides point out.

Dozens of volunteers help Mrs. Reagan keep track of her voluminous mail: Barun says some 65 percent of Mrs. Reagan's mail is related to her anti-drug work, amounting to 35,396 such letters in 1985.

Sheila Tate, Mrs. Reagan's former press secretary who helped her launch the anti-drug campaign, said that on the first lady's first visit to a drug treatment center in 1981, she fidgeted in the large armchair provided for her because it was too "throne-like" for a petite woman and hindered her from "rapping" with the teen-agers around her.

After that, the staff made sure Mrs. Reagan was seated among the youngsters she was visiting, Mrs. Tate said.

MRS. REAGAN says she first became aware of the drug menace in the 1960s while raising her children, but she insists she had no special reason for adopting the anti-drug cause other than the problems experienced by friends.

Mrs. Reagan visibly stiffens when asked if her anti-drug work changed her image of Americans. "I just hate that word, 'image,'" she says, "but, yes, people think differently about her now. They know that I am not the kind of person that was described to them in the beginning."

In any case, her standing in public opinion surveys has risen markedly. The White House cites polls that placed her among the ten most admired women since 1981, rising to No. 1 on the list in 1985.

And, "she owns that issue now," says Mrs. Tate: "If you asked anyone in America today what Nancy Reagan does, they'd say she was involved in fighting drugs. It's what she'll be remembered for."

For concrete results, Mrs. Reagan points to numerous parents' groups and anti-drug clubs for children that have sprouted in recent years. One, the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth, lists 8,000 parents' groups on its roles.

Without Mrs. Reagan, the six-year-old organization might still be working out of a donated schoolroom or petitioning congressmen for space to hold meetings on Capitol Hill, says Joyce Nalepka, the federation's president.

HER GROUP got a big lift, she says, when Mrs. Reagan, chatting with the Sultan of Brunei, was asked for the name of her favorite charity and she mentioned the federation. The sultan promptly sent a $500,000 check.

Reagan begins to share podium with wife Nancy

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has gone out of his way in recent weeks to share the glare of the presidential spotlight with his wife Nancy.

The Great Communicator has even stepped aside to share the speaker's podium with the woman once mocked for "The Gaze," Mrs. Reagan's habit of staring mute and transfixed as her husband delivered a speech.

In several recent White House appearances, radio addresses and speeches, the president has repeatedly pointed out Mrs. Reagan's activities to the public.

Although her short speeches in Reagan's presence and his comments are not extraordinary in themselves, they point up how much more assertive and confident Mrs. Reagan has become in her position as first lady. And now that reports of her White House decorating, china purchases and designer clothes have faded, she appears more willing to allow her husband to direct public attention her way.

Just last week the first lady took over the microphone — after being introduced by her husband — during a White House ceremony dedicating the week to the battle against drug abuse.

And two weeks ago, Reagan gave her the chance to make a short speech before he delivered his formal remarks upon returning from the seven-nation economic summit in Tokyo.

Presidential aides had ushered thousands of supporters onto the South Lawn to produce a boisterous welcome-home event. In the past, the once speech-shy Mrs. Reagan would have only stood by her husband's side, applauding, smiling and waving to the crowd.

"It's a first," said Elaine Crispen, Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, of the dual speeches. "I've never known it to happen before."

Mrs. Crispen, a long-time personal aide to the first lady, said the couple "make a good team...He (Reagan) is giving her some space."

The first lady's emergence on the presidential speaking platform has not been marked by rabble-rousing rhetoric. Her remarks had the same rather bland, non-controversial, and upbeat tone of her solo speeches made to promote her anti-drug abuse cause.

During the South Lawn ceremony, the first lady spoke of her visit to a school in Japan and the mural the students had painted for a local Washington, D.C., school. In the second event with her husband, Mrs. Reagan repeated her oft-made request that children join the anti-drug crusade and her pride in those who have taken part in the effort.

For his part, Reagan explained Mrs. Reagan's appearance because "she's made me such a proud husband in these last few years." And after the Far East trip, Reagan boasted that his wife had become his "Special Ambassador of Goodwill."

The comment was somewhat ironic because Mrs. Reagan had vehemently rejected being described in that manner during her visit to Mexico City last year following a devastating earthquake. "That's a political question," she told reporters at the time, refusing to connect her effort to any official capacity. "It wasn't that kind of trip."

"She is hesitant to accept such a title," said Mrs. Crispen. "She has a special issue and she just wants to do a good job at that."

Many of Reagan's comments about his wife in recent weeks have been made in connection with her trip to Thailand and Malaysia prior to the economic summit in Tokyo. The president mentioned his wife's plans in two radio addresses before the trip, and lauded her efforts during each stop he made as he traveled across the Pacific in preparation for the meeting.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan has been giving his wife more attention because he "is deeply impressed by what she does and likes to do his part to promote that effort."

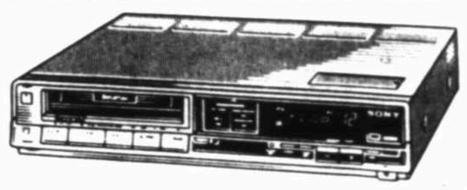

One senior White House official said, "She is, more and more, speaking out — getting up and speaking, playing more and more of a lead role in these things. She's much more sure of herself."

The official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified by name, said Mrs. Reagan's chief of staff had requested at one point that a presidential speechwriter be detailed to help with her speeches. Although a full-time writer was not made available, it was allowed on a speech-by-speech basis, he said.

Taking note of Mrs. Reagan's recent foreign travels, the official said "there is more interest" is seeing that the first lady becomes even more active.

"I think it is on her part, too," the official said.

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Midland-Odessa area stands a good chance of more thunderstorms tonight and Friday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. There is a 60 percent chance for storms tonight and a 50 percent chance for Friday.

The NWS is calling for partly cloudy skies on Friday with a high in the upper 70s and winds out of the southeast at 10-20 mph. Tonight, under cloudy skies, the low should be in the middle 60s with southeasterly winds at five to 15 mph.

Wednesday's high of 79 was 23 degrees below the record high set for the date in 1974. This morning's low of 63 was 13 degrees above the record low set in 1952.

STATE

Clear skies prevailed over North Texas this morning, while the northern half of West Texas had mostly cloudy skies with light rain reported over the High Plains.

The rest of the state was partly cloudy, according to the National Weather Service.

In the forecast for North Texas, skies should be fair to partly cloudy through Friday with scattered thunderstorms. Highs should be in the 80s and lows in the 60s.

West Texas should be partly cloudy with scattered thunderstorms through Friday. Lows tonight should be in the 50s and 60s, while Friday's highs should range from the 70s in the north to the low 90s in the valleys of the southwest.

South Texas should be mostly cloudy through with scattered thunderstorms. Overnight lows should be in the 60s and 70s, and highs should reach into the 80s and 90s.

NATION

A Southeastern frontal system was losing its punch today but a nearly stationary low pressure system over Kansas continued to scatter showers and thundershowers into the Plains and middle Mississippi Valley.

Showers and thundershowers also ranged across eastern sections of Colorado and New Mexico and western portions of the Ohio Valley.

A few showers and thunderstorms were scattered over the Southeast by the weakening front.

Fair weather prevailed from the Northeast across the northern Great Lakes and central and northern Rockies through the West Coast.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms scattered from the Southeast across the lower Gulf Coast, eastern Texas, Oklahoma, eastern Colorado, New Mexico and the central Plains through the middle Mississippi Valley; and showers scattered across New England.

Dollar gains

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rose against all major currencies except the Canadian dollar in thin trading early today. Gold bullion was little changed.

A trader for a major U.S. bank in London said the dollar benefited from reported dollar purchases by the U.S. Federal Reserve. He said the Fed was believed to have intervened in the market on behalf of the Bank of Japan.

Profit-taking, however, helped to push the dollar down from levels reached in the Far East, the trader said. He said the closure of West German markets for a public holiday today contributed to a low volume of trading elsewhere in Europe.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Wednesday:

—2.29 West German marks, up from 2.2735

—1.896 Swiss francs, up from 1.8795

—7.2965 French francs, up from 7.2325

—2.575 Dutch guilders, up from 2.5575

—1,570 Italian lire, up from 1,557.50

—1.37625 Canadian dollars, down from 1.37945

The British pound fell to $1.4985 from $1.501.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 169.70 Japanese yen, up from 168.90 yen. Later, in London, the dollar was quoted at 169.78 yen.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $342.75 a troy ounce, up from $342.60 late Wednesday.

In Zurich, gold was bid at $342.40, down from $343.50.

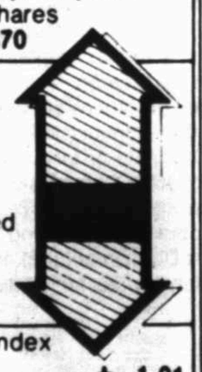

Earlier, in Hong Kong, the metal closed at a bid of $342.49, up from $341.78.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $5.11 an ounce, down 2 cents.

Figures show downward economic spiral slowing

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Monthly economic indicators released by the Midland Chamber of Commerce indicate that the downward spiral of the area economy has begun to slow down. The figures for April remained virtually unchanged from the March statistics and depict the continuing slump the area has seen in the first quarter of 1986.

New valuations, both in the residential and commercial sectors, remained weak, with total new valuations down almost 55 percent from a year ago.

The financial community showed signs of stabilizing, with area bank deposits falling by less than 2 percent. Area thrift institutiona posted a gain of 16.5 percent from a year ago, continuing a strong growth pattern for local S&Ls.

Local unemployment climbed, with the unemployment rate at 9 percent in April. That compares with a rate of 4.9 percent in April, 1985.

New utility connections all posted gains, further dispelling rumors of a mass exodus out of the city.

In other Chamber business, the board of directors adopted a resolution declaring their appreciation to the news media in the area for the "intensive reporting of critical issues and the unprecedented support for the citizens of the area." The resolution, a joint declaration by both Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce, was formally presented at a news conference today.

The committee promoting commercial air service for Midland reported that a delegation of Midlanders will travel to Atlanta later this week to talk with officials of Delta Airlines about the possibility of bringing additional air service to Midland Regional Airport.

The air service committee also reported that Southwest Airlines officials have indicated that a new schedule, beginning on June 2, will take up the void in the number of flights to Houston and Austin suspended when TranStar Airlines (formerly Muse Air) left the Midland market.

Winston Barclay reported to the board on a recent Washington trip by a group of Midlanders to promote the SuperCollider project. The meeting was an effort to obtain a status report on the project and to enlist Congressional support for the project from the Texas Congressional delegation. An overview of the project was given by Dr. Peter McIntyre, physics professor at Texas A&M University. Said Barclay: "The Midland delegation feels that the project will not make the federal budget this year, especially in light of the problems the space program is having."

"But, we feel the project will be built — maybe next year, maybe five years in the future. People in this area have put a viable site proposal forward, and we are in the running for the project when it is time to select a site," Barclay added.

Hank Henry, reporting on the Bid Center, announced that the Center has landed its first contract, with the possibility of closing another at the end of this week.

Construction underway on new store

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

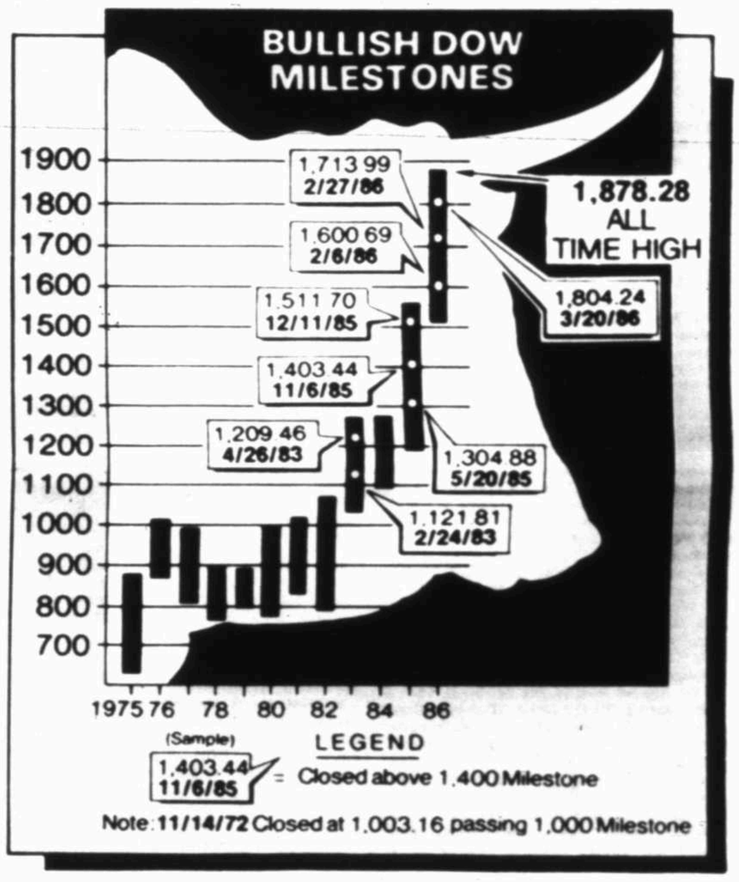

With the issuing of a $1.85 million building permit for a new commercial structure, construction has begun on the 107,000 square foot Sams Wholesale Club, located next to the proposed Deauville Mall at Loop 250 and Highway 191.

Western Builders, Amarillo, is the contractor for the project, and Mike Robertson, project engineer, said he is looking for completion by the first of November, with the store opening by Thanksgiving. The store is part of the Deauville development, but will not be part of the Deauville Mall.

Robertson noted that the company is also building another Wholesale Club in Plano, building two distributions in Palestine, TX and Searcy, Ark., and doing $5.5 million worth of site and concrete work on a 1 million square foot distribution center in Plainview.

Sam's Wholesale Club is a subsidiary of Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., and will employ approximately 115 full and part-time employees when it opens. The franchise offers top quality name-brand merchandise, on a cash and carry basis, to members only. Members include owners and operators of small businesses and selected employment groups, such as city, county or state employees and school employees. Small businesses pay a $25 annual membership fee, while employment groups pay a five percent surcharge above the posted wholesale price, according to Stacey Duncan, coordinator for corporate and public affairs for Wal-Mart. The concept depends on high volume to compensate for narrow profit margins, resulting in lower prices for members.

Merchandise includes such names as IBM, Papermate, Zenith, Panasonic, Calvin Klein, General Foods and Purina. The first Sam's Wholesale Club opened in Midwest, Okla., in 1983; there are currently 23 clubs located in nine states.

Dow sets record high

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices surged Wednesday, breaking record highs that had stood for several weeks as Wall Street's bull market continued its recent revival.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 25.25 to 1,878.28, easily surpassing the previous closing peak of 1,855.90 it reached on April 21. In the last four sessions the average has gained 103.11 points.

Indexes of the New York and American stock exchanges and the over-the-counter market also hit new highs, and trading picked up from its recent sluggish pace.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to 159.59 million shares, up from 121.16 million Tuesday and the heaviest total in more than a month.

Analysts say the revival of the bull market in recent days has been spurred by a spreading belief that interest rates still have room to decline.

Stocks got a further boost from word of share repurchases by two companies that are components of the Dow Jones industrial average.

International Business Machines said late Tuesday it would buy back up to 10 million shares, on the belief that the stock was attractive at recent price levels. On Wednesday Philip Morris reported plans to buy back up to 2 million of its shares.

IBM stock gained 4⅜ to 151⅜, and led the active list on turnover of more than 3.7 million shares. Philip Morris rose 1 to 68½.

Celanese picked up 7¼ to 222 on word that directors had authorized the company to buy back as many as 600,000 shares.

Former ambassador new ARCO executive

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — John Gavin, who steps down Saturday as U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, was elected a vice president of Atlantic Richfield Co. Tuesday and will head the oil company's Federal and International Relations unit.

Gavin will also join a group that is attempting to purchase the Spanish International Communications Corp., which runs the SIN television station.

The 54-year-old diplomat and former actor, who officially leaves his government post May 31, will join Arco June 2 to head the newly formed unit, company chairman Lodwrick Cook said.

Gaving will be responsible for Arco's Federal Government Relations office in Washington, which represents the oil company's interests before governmental agencies and bodies.

Gavin will be based in Arco's Los Angeles headquarters. In his new position, Gavin also will advise Arco's top management in international opportunities and risks, Cook said.

"Jack is uniquely experienced to help raise the level of communications about our expanding international activities within our operating companies," Cook said.

Separately, A. Jerrold Perenchio and William Thompson of Boston Ventures Limited Partnership, announced today in New York that Gavin has joined them in their efforts to purchase Spanish International Communications.

Gavin will serve as shareholder and director of the purchasing company.

Gavin was previously with another group that was trying to purchase the company.

From 1961 to 1973, Gavin served as a special adviser to the secretary general of the Organization of American States. He became ambassador to Mexico in May 1981.

His appointment by President Reagan set off a heated controversy in Mexico, sparked by Gavin's strong support of Reagan's Central American and anti-communist policies.

Gavin's surprise resignation in April was applauded by Mexican newspapers and politicians who branded the handsome diplomat an "abominable" envoy.

Before his government service, Gavin was a movie and television actor. He appeared in at least 11 motion pictures, including "Psycho" and "Thoroughly Modern Millie."

Economic index shows solid gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main forecasting gauge of future economic activity shot up 1.5 percent in April — the best growth in nearly three years and the third solid gain in a row.

The Commerce Department said today the rise in its Index of Leading Indicators followed a revised March gain of 0.9 percent, almost double the originally reported 0.5 percent. The index had risen 0.8 percent in February.

The April gain was the largest increase since June 1983, when it hit 1.9 percent, and equalled the 1.5 percent of October 1983.

With the latest advance, the eleventh straight, the leading index now stands at 179.2 percent of its 1967 base.

The strong growth over the last several months has given analysts hope the economy will rebound substantially in the second half of the year following two years of sluggish growth.

Independent oilmen need image makeover

A little closer to Ward Cleaver than J.R. Ewing is a more accurate picture of the independent oil operator in America. According to a survey by the Energy Consumers and Producers Association (ECPA) in Seminole, Okla., more than half the operators responding have total production of less than 300 barrels of oil (or gas equivalent) per day.

"The average oilman is just like any small businessman and at today's oil and gas prices, he grosses no more off his wells than the average motel owner in any small town in the U.S.," ECPA president Bud Stewart says.

Two-thirds of the ECPA's respondents operate fewer than 100 wells and have fewer than 10 employees, both in the field and in the office — hardly the stuff of a TV petro-empire, a la Ewing or Carrington.

The object of the survey, in addition to trying to change many of the stereotypical images of independent oilmen, is to point out the dependence of independents on outside investment capital: more than 72 percent of ECPA members use financing from outside the industry. The group is amassing facts to use in an expected Senate floor fight over tax reform.

The Senate Finance Committee tax plan retains some incentives for outside investors. But the ECPA expects some senators to attempt wiping those provisions out of the final bill and they're getting ready for the fight.

A trillion cubic foot drain on the natural gas bubble during 1986 is predicted by the American Gas Association. The AGA's "Natural Gas Production Capability — 1986 to 1990" report estimates that production capability will fall by 600 Bcf while demand rises by 400 Bcf.

But, that will still leave 2.6 Tcf excess available supply going into 1987. The report goes on to say that the bubble should shrink to less than 1 Tcf by 1988, which will provide a clear signal for resumption of more active gas exploration programs.

However, the AGA's bubble estimates do not include domestic reserves not yet hooked into pipeline systems, nor the significant volume of Canadian gas which is currently shut-in. These additional supplies hold the potential to cushion the blow if demand grows (or production capacity falls) faster than the AGA predicts.

On the other hand, those supplies could further delay the gas market's supply-demand balance which the group expects by late this decade.

The furor being raised by local business and industrial policyholders over wildly escalating insurance premiums is finally attracting statewide attention.

The Texas Association of Business (TAB) has established business insurance reform as a high priority item on its 1987 legislative agenda. TAB has proposed a large number of restructuring moves including limiting and revising guidelines for punitive and non-quantifiable (such as loss of affection, guidance and support) damage claims; punishing lawyers filing frivolous suits; and, dismantling the flat percentage rate contingency fee system.

The business lobby is also seeking to improve the workers' compensation claim process by revising procedures and clarifying definitions and relationships in workers' comp issues.

TAB says higher business insurance costs are passed through to consumers and that employees are threatened by higher overhead costs, meaning that all citizens should be aware and get behind the reform effort.

Trucking rates in Texas are coming down, a move which could save shippers and consumers $23 million this year.

The Railroad Commission has ordered intrastate trucking firms to lower their rates to reflect lower fuel costs. "When fuel costs were increasing rapidly, the commission permitted trucking firms to recover the increased costs through their rates," explains commission chairman Jim Nugent.

Now, "it's only fair to the public that rates be reduced just as fast when fuel costs decline," he reasons.

Savings vary according to the tariff structure, but in some cases could be as much as 5.85 percent. The RRC staff has called for general rate hearings this summer to review fuel and other costs being passed on by trucking firms in their rates.

This request and the related proceeding have been designated as Docket No. 6761 by the Public Utility Commission, with hearings scheduled to begin June 18, 1986.

Currently more than 39,000 Texans subscribe to REACH OUT Texas service. REACH OUT Texas customers pay a one-time $6 charge to establish the service, and a monthly charge of $14 which entitles them to one hour of AT&T's intrastate/interlata "Direct Dialed" (1+) calling during the weekend and night rate periods. Customers also receive an additional 15 percent discount on the same type of AT&T long distance calls placed during the evening rate period. In addition, an hourly rate of $12, or $.20 per minute applies for weekend and night rate calls beyond the initial hour of calling provided under the REACH OUT Texas basic rate.

AT&T estimates current annual revenues generated by the REACH OUT Texas service to be over $14 million.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in these proceedings should notify the Commission as soon as possible. A request to intervene, participate or for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information also may be obtained by calling the Public Utility Commission Consumer Affairs Division at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0227 or (512) 458-0221 teletypewriter for the deaf.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Repurchased stock can't be voted at stockholder meeting

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A company in which I own stock has bought back a large number of its shares through a stock repurchase program over the last year. Can the company call a stockholder meeting for a vote on an issue, which might or might not be in the best interest of stockholders, and vote those repurchased shares for or against that issue?

A. The short answer is "no."

Most companies hold stockholder meetings anually and can call meetings more often. But repurchased stock cannot be voted at stockholder meetings.

Only stock that is "issued and outstanding" — owned by stockholders — is entitled to vote at those meetings. Also, only issued and outstanding shares receive dividends.

Doyle

Shares that have been repurchased by a company become "treasury stock" — neither entitled to vote nor to collect dividends.

Each share of issued and outstanding stock represents a share of ownership in the company. Treasury shares own nothing. Nor do "authorized but unissued" shares — shares authorized by the company's charter but never issued.

When a company buys back some of its stock, each share that remains issued and outstanding represents larger ownership. So, your company's repurchase program has resulted in you owning a a bigger piece of that company.

The reason usually given for a repurchase program is that the stock's price in the marketplace is lower than what company management considers the stock's underlying value. That reasoning, of course, is always open to argument. However, when companies are flush with cash, they often institute repurchase programs.

Q. The top brass of a company in which I am a stockholder is taking over by buying out all other stockholders. I consider this an involuntary conversion. It is my understanding that, if I put the full amount of money I receive for my shares into a "like kind" of investment within 60 days, I won't have to pay any tax. True?

A. False! Sorry about that. Your understanding is way off base. Your profit on the sale of your stock will be subject to tax as a capital gain. Involuntary conversion means the loss of property from destruction, theft, seizure, requisition or condemnation — or the sale or exchange of property under threat of any of those conditions.

Without knowing the details of this particular buy-out, it certainly could not be accomplished without the affirmative vote of a majority of the company's stock. In the imperfect world of corporate democracy, that makes it voluntary.

Technically, you don't have to sell your shares at the price agreed to by the majority of stockholders. You could sue for an appraisal — a time-consuming and expensive procedure. In practice, it's almost always better to take the buy-out price.

In a case such as this, when the top company's management people become owners of virtually all the stock, the company is reorganized and small shareholders who refused to sell are left in limbo. They have absolutely no voice in corporate affairs and receive no dividends.

Q. A stock I have owned for more than six months has appreciated quite a bit in value. If I sell, my profit will be eligible for long-term capital gains tax treatment.

I understand that, by making a gift of this stock to my church or recognized charitable organization, I will be able to take a deduction on my income tax return equal to the value of the shares — and I won't have to pay tax on the gain.

If this is true, how does it work? Does it also apply to stock held for the short-term capital gains tax period?

A. It's true, in most cases. The exceptions are when you make stock gifts to "nonoperating foundations" or when your total charitable gifts are tremendously large — generally 30 percent or more of your adjusted gross income. It's doubtful you have to worry about those technicalities.

You simply take a charitable deduction for the market value of the stock on the date of the gift and attach Form 8283 "Noncash Charitable Contributions" to your federal income tax return.

The rules are quite different for appreciated stock you have owned for six months or less. In that case, your deduction is limited to the stock's value on the date of the gift — minus the amount that would be a short-term capital gain. As a result, you don't pay tax on the profit, but you don't get as large a charitable deduction.

Why the teamsters don't clean house

By HARRY BERNSTEIN
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Why has the vast, honest majority of the 1.6 million members of the Teamsters Union never booted out any of the presidents who have given the union, and the members themselves, an undeserved reputation of being a huge army of mobsters?

Three of the four past presidents have been convicted of crimes and imprisoned; the fourth died before investigations of him were completed. One of the four, Jimmy Hoffa, mysteriously disappeared in 1975, presumably a victim of the underworld.

Incumbent President Jackie Presser was indicted two weeks ago on charges of embezzlement and racketeering. His now-imprisoned predecessor, Roy Williams, admitted under oath that he had close ties to the underworld and accused Presser of having similar links to organized crime. More than 100 other lower-ranking union officers — mostly in the East — have been convicted of a host of crimes, including murder.

Despite this array of evidence that criminals have infested the union for nearly three decades, the members have not been stirred to rebellion.

THERE IS a widespread but mistaken belief that the union's top officers retain their power by actual violence or a widespread threat of violence against dissidents. There have been a few ugly incidents, but far from enough to keep more than a million and a half members in line. Others wrongly believe that almost all of the members are themselves corrupt or at least see nothing wrong with mob control of the top level of their union.

But the reality is that the average teamster and most of the union's officers are typical, honest Americans. Even the White House Commission on Organized Crime, which recently issued a harsh attack on the union's leadership, estimated that fewer than 5 percent of the union's 700 locals are influenced by criminals. While that is a far higher percentage than is found in almost any other union, it still shows that crime far from permeates the entire union.

The truth is that corrupt top leaders maintain their power by using a wide variety of benign, nonviolent tactics to minimize the effect of dissidents. Similar tactics are used by many political machines, other unions and corporations. It is rare indeed that corporate executives invite dissidents to join their boards of directors or put them in key managerial positions.

THE POWER—RETAINING tactics used by top Teamster officers probably can be compared most closely to those of the late Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley, who for more than two decades tightly controlled his city's ruling political machine and retained his role as a national Democratic Party kingmaker.

There was a relentless federal investigation of corruption in the Daley machine, of stolen and bought ballots, stuffed ballot boxes, of city contracts going to Daley's friends and family members. While Daley himself was never charged with criminal acts, many of his close friends and associates were prosecuted and some convicted of crimes.

Like Daley, top Teamster officers retain loyal, decent supporters by using a patronage system through which they make appointments to well-paying jobs. They also help loyalists build their local unions as Daley helped the precinct captains, or "ward heelers," strengthen their wards. Beneficiaries of the top union leaders' patronage system are often appointed department heads, regional officers or international organizers. Few have ever been accused of any crime or links to mobsters.

There are other methods that top Teamster officers use to maintain their positions. Like Daley, they use their influence to help elect, or defeat, local and regional officers. Like the late mayor, they can help rank-and-filers get jobs for their friends or family. And top union officials can give, or withhold, substantial financial help to striking locals.

ALSO, DALEY helped his supporters with their minor troubles, ranging from traffic tickets to broken street lights. Similarly, the union's high officers can help, or hinder, rank-and-filers with their relatively minor problems, such as processing grievances against their employers.

Another analogy is that Teamster contracts are generally good financially for members, just as many Chicagoans were helped financially by the major building boom that the city began to enjoy under Daley. The physical and economic revitalization of downtown Chicago helped Daley withstand often devastating criticism.

Likewise, the union's contracts have created the "fat wallet syndrome," which means that members making reasonably good wages are usually reluctant to respond to calls for rebellion. The dissident Teamsters for Democratic Union still has only about 8,000 members after a decade of fighting the union's highest officers and demanding changes in election procedures.

Rebellious rank-and-filers could oust the top officers if they elected equally rebellious local union officers. Local officers are elected by secret ballot and make up the vast majority of delegates to the national conventions, where they then elect the top officers. But there has been only a handful of TDU victories in local voting.

Complicating attempts to stir a revolt is the fact that top Teamster officials have powerful friends in high places.

AT THE VERY pinnacle of the endorsements won by Teamster presidents are those given by presidents of the United States, including Ronald Reagan, who has often invited Presser to the White House.

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a close friend of Reagan, told Teamster convention delegates last week that while Reagan has helped "turn America around, I know he couldn't have done it without your help and support.

"We are off and running, and after just five months, we have over 200 businesses signed up. We have outgrown our present facilities and have had to move to larger offices and add to our staff," Henry reported.

The Chamber is also gearing up for the Governor's Select Committee on Higher Education hearing on June 13, in Austin, which could have a significant effect on the future of U.T.P.B. The Chamber encourages civic, business, education and community leaders to attend the hearing as a show of community support for the institution. Board member Thomas Wageman stressed the importance of a good turnout for the hearing: "Community support will show how important U.T.P.B. is to West Texas. If we care about the future of this area, we'll work to keep the university here. A strong presentation by our representatives at the hearing could put the issue of dispensing with the university to bed forever."

President Joan Baskin added that when the Texas Legislature meets again, "cutting state spending is going to be a major item, and higher education will get its share of the spotlight."

FDIC okays sale of failed Texas Bank

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — The Federal Deposit Insurance Company's Board of Directors on Wednesday approved the $250,000 purchase of a recently failed Edinburg bank by National Bancshares Corp. of San Antonio, an FDIC spokeswoman said.

The former First Bank and Trust Co. of Edinburg will reopen Thursday as The NBC Bank-Edinburg and protect all the failed bank's depositors and assets, Julie Amberson of the FDIC said. The purchase will reduce the government agency's takeover cost by about $77.4 million, she said.

On Friday, Texas Bank Commissioner James Sexton closed First Bank and Trust of Edinburg, with assets totaling $134.1 million. The FDIC initially was named as receiver.

The newly formed bank will assume about $118.8 million of the 11,700 deposit accounts and $86.2 million in loans and assets, Ms. Amberson said.

Sexton said Wednesday he was "pleased that the transaction would be arranged in order to maintain banking services for the area and to avoid any loss to uninsured depositors."

He blamed the bank's failure on liberal lending practices, a depressed border economy and excessive expenditures related to investments in fixed assets.

Fitch lists 'musts' for Rockets

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD

BOSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets Coach Bill Fitch says his team needs to do three things differently and one the same if it is to beat the Boston Celtics in Game 2 of the championship series.

"We have to take better care of the ball, play better team defense, get our running game going and maintain what we established in Game 1," Fitch said Wednesday, the eve of the second game of the best-of-seven NBA series. "I would be happy to see Larry Bird get 21 points and the man who's guarding him, Rodney McCray get 20."

The Celtics will be going for their 40th consecutive home victory. They are 47-1, including the regular season and playoffs, in 1985-86, with the only loss coming to Portland on Dec. 6.

Three things that did not go right for the Rockets in their 112-100 loss in the series opener were the foul situation and the play of starters Ralph Sampson and Lewis Lloyd.

Sampson and Akeem Olajuwon, the Rockets' Twin Towers, both got in foul trouble and Sampson scored two points on 1-for-13 shooting and Lloyd scored four.

"Ralph and Lewis didn't play their game," Olajuwon, who scored 33 points, said. "I'm not a one-man team. We need them to do better and we need to hold our ground, rebound and cut down on turnovers.

"But in every playoff series we've adjusted after losing and I think we can again."

OLAJUWON SAID the foul trouble would not have occurred if the officials had called the first game evenly.

"If the officials call it equal on both sides, I don't mind whether they call it close or let us play physical," Olajuwon said. "But they were calling fouls on me that they were letting slide on the Celtics."

Olajuwon said a foul could have been called every time he touched the ball in the first half.

"I can play physical or not, but the officials can't let the Celtics be physical and make me play with finesse," the Rockets' leading scorer said.

Fitch said he talks to the team about staying out of foul trouble, and he has drills designed to teach players to ignore head and ball fakes.

"At times in the first game, we looked like popcorn poppers jumping up and down," Fitch said.

For the second year, the championship series is being played with a 2-3-2 homecourt format instead of the previous 2-2-1-1-1.

The Celtics have complained the last two years that the format puts undue pressure on them to win the first two games at home to be certain that they will at least return to Boston Garden for Game 6.

FITCH SYMPATHIZED with the complaint, to a point.

"In any format, the visiting team needs a split of the first two games," he said. "The difference under the new format is that the home team has to understand that if it splits the first two games, you may not come home again."

"Houston still wants a split," Celtics forward Kevin McHale said. "That's the same goal they had for Game 1. We have to win two to keep the homecourt advantage."

McHale said the Celtics should be able to stay out of foul trouble easier than the Rockets.

"We have three big guys (McHale, Robert Parish and Bill Walton) who can rotate when one of us gets in foul trouble," McHale said. "We've also been playing longer and have learned when not to foul."

Midland Angel right fielder Glen Walker gathers up a single in first game action Wednesday night at Angel Stadium.

MC in sight of leaders in NJCAA

From Staff Reports

TYLER — In second-day action of the NJCAA men's national tennis tournament here, the Midland College Chaparrals managed to stay within sight of the leaders by advancing five of their singles players and two doubles teams. They'll be playing in the quarterfinals today, a crucial time for the Chaps. The tourney ends Saturday.

In Wednesday's play, MC coach Joe Williams saw another of his fears become reality as his No. 2 doubles team lost in the second round after a first-round bye.

"It really was a tough loss, just like yesterday's No. 6 singles, when we had the seeded position, a bye, and then lost two points when we couldn't win our opening match," he said.

The team of Richard Turner and Emil Bijleveld, seeded seventh, lost a three-setter to Gillis and Racine of Abraham Baldwin of South Carolina 6-3, 4-6, 6-4 after being up 3-1 in the first set.

"What made this such a tough loss was that Gillis was a substitute teamed with Racine just before the tourney started and they'd never played together before," Williams said.

But the Chaps managed to remain within striking distance of the leaders with straight set victories in all their other matches.

Jefferson State of Alabama broke out of the six-team deadlock after the first day to take a one-point lead over Anderson of South Carolina. Jefferson has 27 points and Anderson 26. North Greenville of South Carolina is tied with Florida Junior College for third with 25 points.

McLennan of Texas, runner-up in Region V to Midland, has 24 points; Miami-Dade South of Florida has 23.

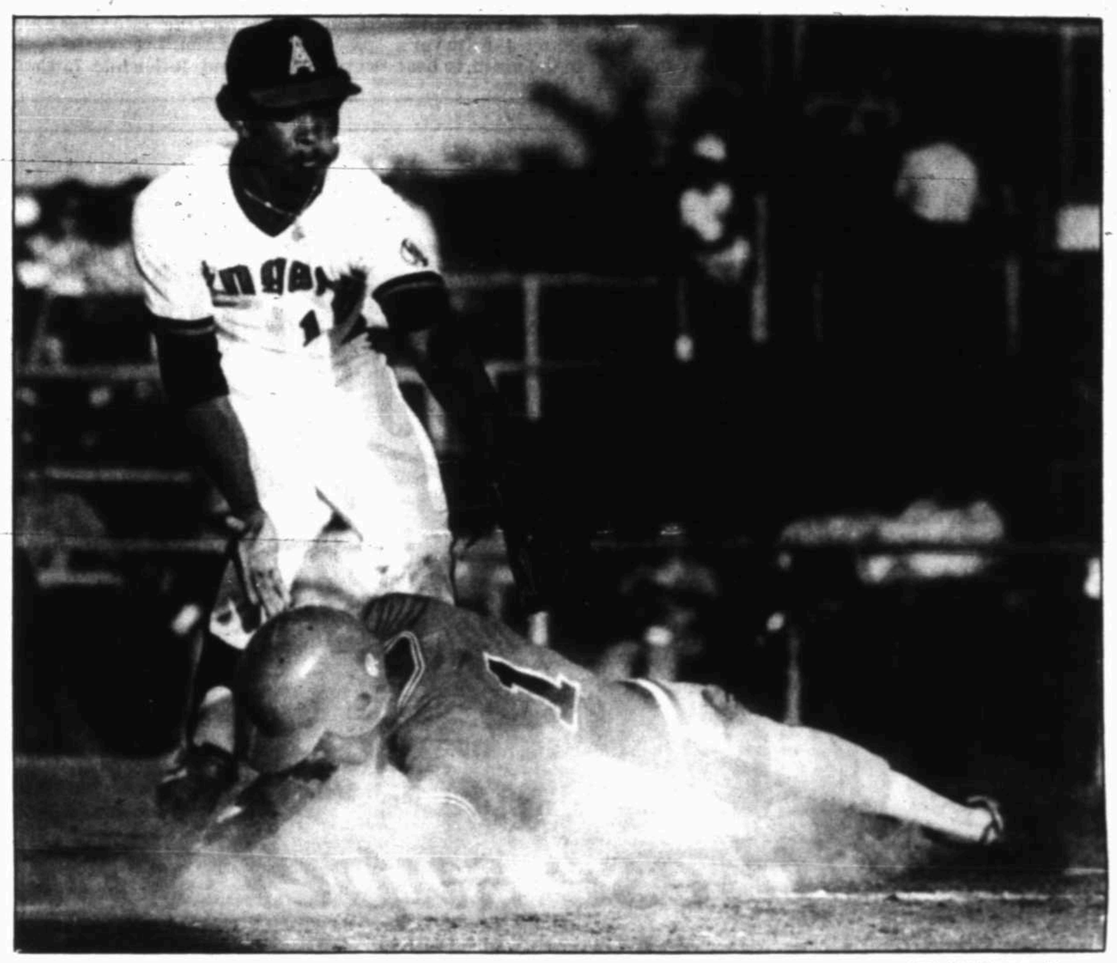

Midland College currently is tied for seventh with Tyler at 21. Another Texas school, Wharton, is ninth with 20.

"We go head-to-head with Anderson today in the top three singles matches and that is going to determine whether we can win or not," Williams said. "Jefferson State and Anderson both surprised a lot of people with their strength. Jefferson still has all its players alive, but we still can take it all if we get great performances the next three days."

MC's No. 1 player, Jean Roussel, breezed to a 6-0, 6-3 win Wednesday over Paul Monicusko of DuPage.

No. 2 Eric Lingg took a 6-0, 6-1 decision from Tracy Jorgensen of Snow College. No. 3 Emil Bijleveld defeated Andy Jansen of Charles County 6-1, 6-2.

No. 4 Jos Warmoes was a 6-0, 6-1 winner over Scott Zent of Vincennes. No. 5 Herve' Rousseau easily knocked off Gren Van Hoven of Grand Rapids 6-1, 6-1.

Pitcher Vinicio Cedeno is late with a tag as Arkansas' Lance Johnson scores on a wild pitch in the first game of a doubleheader at Angels Stadium Wednesday.

Twin losses stymie catch up efforts

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Despite 6-1, 2-0 losses to Arkansas in Thursday's doubleheader at Angels Stadium, Midland leads the series with the Travelers, three games to two, but in the Texas League West pennant race, that still isn't good enough. The Angels lost some more ground to first place El Paso.

Still, one came away wondering how Midland pitching can look so good after giving up 49 runs in the first three games of the Tulsa series.

One mistake cost Sherman Corbett, 2-4, the second game when Dave Clements hit a two-out homer in the sixth to break up a scoreless duel. In the opener, Doug Banning, making his first start in over a month, gave up hits to three of the first four batters and then only three more the rest of the way before retiring after 6 ⅓ innings in the 6-1 opening game loss.

The teams wind up the series tonight with the suspended game beginning at 6 p.m. and the nine-inning night cap following. Arkansas holds a 3-0 lead in the first inning of the suspended game, which will be seven innings.

ALAN MORLOCK, a 10-game winner for Arkansas last year, held Midland to three hits in winning his first game in four decisions and pitching the fourth shutout in the last six games at Angel Stadium. Three of those shutouts were Midland wins.

Corbett, meanwhile, struck out nine and walked only one. Last time the lefthander from Schertz, Texas, faced Arkansas in Little Rock he was on the short end of a 3-1 game.

Midland has seven complete games this year and Corbett has authored three of them, yet has had a tough time cracking the win column.

Corbett hit Mike Robinson with a pitch into the dirt to open the sixth, the kind of mistake you don't want to make in a 0-0 game. Lance Johnson bunted the runner to second and Corbett fanned Mark Dougherty and seemed on the verge of escaping intact. That's when Clements lifted his majestic fly over the left field fence.

Midland had its opportunity in the home sixth when John Hotchkiss, 2-for-2, doubled to lead off. Mark McLemore walked, but Morlock got Raul Tovar looking at a third strike and James Randall reaching for an outside pitch and then Billie Merrifield popped to center.

Tall Town 10K braces for records

From Staff Reports

A record number of runners are expected to toe the starting line Saturday for the sixth annual Tall Town 10,000, the oldest road race in Midland.

Around 300-400 entrants are expected for the race which begins at 8:30 a.m. for the open division at the Colonnade Shopping Center on Loop 250. There will also be a two mile run beginning at 8:30, and a children's one mile run that will kick off the festivities at 8 a.m.

For the first time in the area, the Tall Town course is certified accurate by The Athletic Congress' Road Runners Technical Committee so the runners can be assured of a true time.

Though pre-race favorites like Ralph Edwards and Run for the Arts 5K winner Joel Summearll should complete the course in just over 30 minutes, everyone, including weekend joggers, is invited to come on out and participate, according to race director Frank Morgan.

"The majority of the runners are just average weekend joggers," Morgan said. "Nobody should feel intimidated about running in this race. We encourage everybody to come out and join us in either of the races."

The Tall Town 10,000 is sponsored by the Permian Basin Road Runners Club and United Pipe and Supply as a benefit for the Palmer Drug Abuse Program. A prize drawing will also be held after the race and all entrants are eligible to win.

Prizes include two round trip tickets to Dallas, VCRs goft certificates and other items from the merchants in Colonnade Shopping Center.

Registration is permitted on race day, but t-shirts will be awarded to the first 250 participants. For more information, contact Frank Morgan of the Road Runners at 699-1131, or 683-1690.

Larry Bird voted MVP for 3rd time

BOSTON (AP) — Larry Bird made history, a confident prediction and a possible enemy as he clung to his monopoly on the NBA's Most Valuable Player award by winning it for the third straight year.

The Boston Celtics' forward became only the third player — centers Bill Russell and Wilt Chamberlain the others — to achieve a streak that long and said he could extend it next season.

"I'm proud to be in the same group with Bill Russell because he's a Celtic," an alternately respectful and irreverent Bird said after receiving the award Wednesday. "Wilt Chamberlain talks a little bit too much for me."

He repeated his plans to play just four more seasons.

'Sponsorism' hits Tall City

For a time, it was feared the latest fad might show up in Midland next fall.

Nowadays everything bears the name of the sponsor. It has been firmly entrenched in golf for some time with such as the Isuzu-Andy Williams San Diego Open, the Honda Classic, the Houston Coca-Cola, Mony, Kemper, Manufacturers Hanover, Panasonic, Bank of Boston.....

There are a few holdouts, but perhaps one of these days we'll be seeing the Southern Comfort Masters, the Molson Canadian Open.

Auto racing is another sponsor-title stronghold and before long the Indy 500 may surrender to the trend.

There's already a Sunkist Fiesta Bowl. What's next? Perhaps a Minute Maid Orange Bowl, Ben Franklin Liberty Bowl, Tom McAnn Gator Bowl, Hanes Cotton Bowl , the FTD Rose Bowl. How about a Stokley Peach Bowl? The possibilities are endless.

There's no mystery as to why. The sponsors pay the bills and provide the purse, making paid admissions just so much gravy.

You can imagine the apprehension, then, when the MRT photographer assigned to shoot a soccer picture of some junior high players last week brought back the report that "they seemed more interested in making sure the insurance company's name was readable."

THIS IS the blatant commercialism the Olympics have been battling without too much success for years, the prominent inescapable display of trade names on equipement from shoes to headbands. A photo with the company's name displayed on a participant carries more impact than a paid add.

It didn't take long to catch on and take advantage.

And now, there seemed to be evidence that it was encroaching in the school athletic programs. If the junior high level now....?

Next fall, did that mean we would see Midland High and Midland Lee taking the football field with the names of the high bidding sponsors as targets cameras couldn't miss?

ALARMED, THE possibility was checked out with Midland Schools Athletic Director Gil Bartosh.

"The junior high soccer programs are not sponsored in any way by the schools. They did ask for permission to form teams from groups such as the Hispanic Club. But the school system is not in any way connected. It's strictly a club program."

Bartosh noted soccer in the schools is somewhere down the road, but not yet.

"It was the same last fall. We let them have Memorial Stadium for one day. They held their games, but the Midland Schools system was not involved in any way."

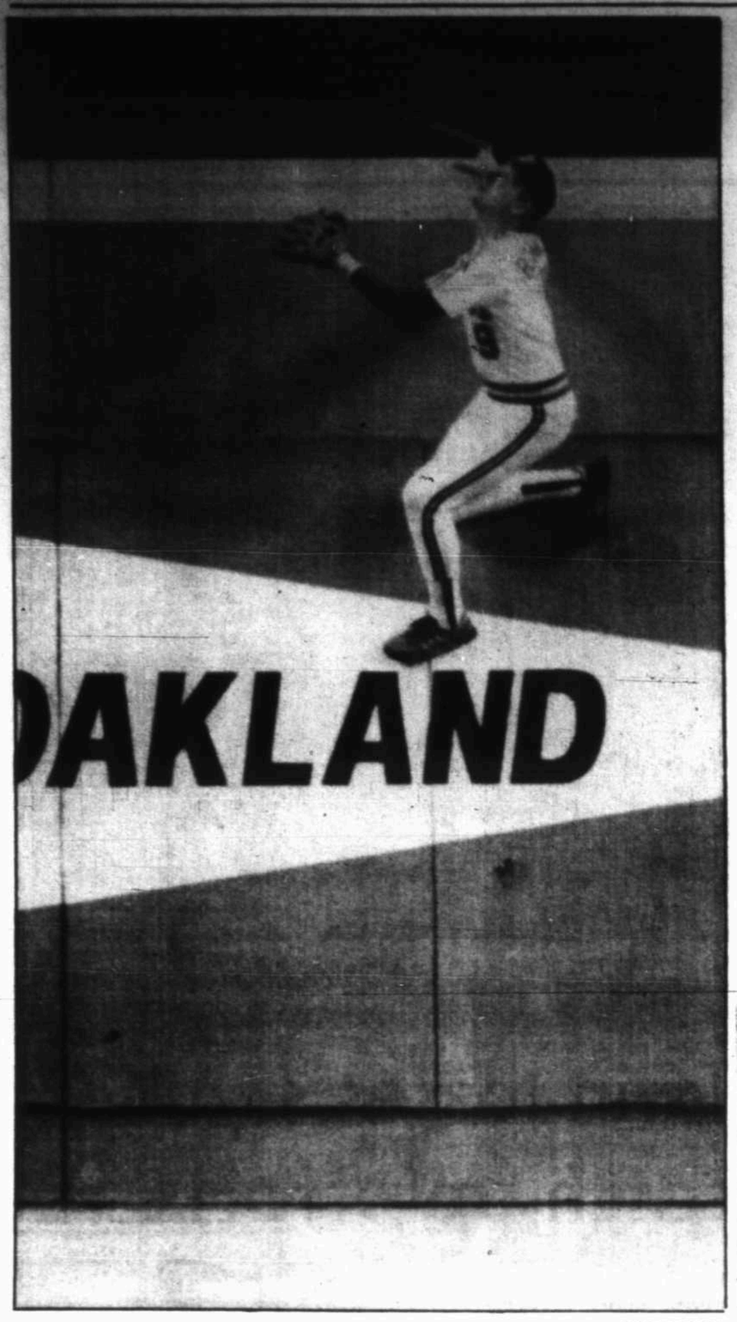

"They were pretty sneaky. The No Pass, No Play rule was used, but since it was not a school sanctioned event, there was no need. Lee had two players, their studs, declared ineligible."

If you play poker with these guys, you'd better count the aces and keep a hand on your wallet.

Later, Soccer Sideline Piranhas....

'K record means little for Cowley

AP Laserphoto

Up, up and away is Seattle's Barry Bonnell as he climbs the outfield wall trying to catch up with a home run ball by New York's Mike Easler. He didn't and the Yanks won, 6-5.

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Chicago left-hander Joe Cowley says he'd be much happier if he could swap his entry into the major-league record book for another winning notch in the score book.

The White Sox's Cowley set an American League record — and a modern day major league record — by striking out the first seven batters he faced Wednesday night.

But the scorebook shows that he didn't make it through the fifth inning and suffered his second loss of the season as the Texas Rangers won 6-3 behind the combined pitching of starter Edwin Correa, 3-3, and reliever Mitch Williams.

"The record doesn't mean anything," Cowley scowled after the game. "I would rather give it up for the win."

The old American League record for strikeouts at the start of a game was six, shared by three pitchers. Bert Blyleven of Minnesota was the last to do it in the AL, against California in 1970.

All seven batters in the streak went down swinging.

Ironically, it was Buechele, whose strikeout gave Cowley the record, who started the White Sox hurler toward his downfall by leading off the fifth with his eighth home run of the season.

The Texas win, and a loss by California, opened a two game lead in the West for the Rangers.

AL Roundup

Red Sox 13, Indians 7

The Red Sox won their fourth straight and 10th of 11 with a romp over Cleveland only the second AL East team Boston has faced so far this season.

Jim Rice drove in five runs with three hits, and Don Baylor had four RBI, three on a home run, as the Red Sox used two five-run innings to beat the Indians. Mel Hall had two home runs for Cleveland, and Joe Carter and Brook Jacoby added one apiece. Hall and Carter hit consecutive homers for Cleveland in the eighth inning.

Yankees 6, Mariners 5

New York pounded four homers, including two by Don Mattingly, to beat Seattle and win for the sixth time in seven games. Rickey Henderson and Mike Easler also homered for the Yankees in the first inning.

Ken Phelps hit two home runs for the Mariners, who have lost four of their last five.

Whitson worked 3 ⅓ innings in relief of starter Bob Tewksbury to earn his fourth victory, while Dave Righetti got his 11th save

Orioles 9, A's 5

Baltimore scored four runs in the final two innings on a tie-breaking sacrifice fly by Eddie Murray in the eighth and pinch-hitter Jim Dwyer's three-run homer in the ninth, to beat Oakland. The Orioles have won six of their last seven, while Murray has 12 RBI in four games against the A's this season.

Carney Lansford had given Oakland a 5-3 lead with a two-run single in the sixth. The Orioles came back on Lee Lacy's solo homer and Cal Ripken's RBI double in the seventh.

Larry Sheets also homered for Baltimore, and Dave Kingman hit one for the A's. Kingman has nine.

Royals 4, Brewers 3

Hal McRae's bases-loaded single with one out in the bottom of the ninth inning boosted Kansas City over Milwaukee. The Brewers had tied the score 3-3 with a run in the eighth on Paul Householder's RBI single.

Kansas City scored all three of its earlier runs in the fourth inning off Brewers' right-hander Tim Leary. The inning included a double by Rudy Law, who ran all the way to third only to retreat to second when he found teammate Willie Wilson also at third base. Law was able to retreat because neither shortstop Ernest Riles nor second baseman Jim Gantner was covering at second.

Blue Jays 14, Twins 8

George Bell hit a leadoff homer and Lloyd Moseby had a three-run triple as Toronto broke a 6-6 tie with its biggest inning of the year, an eight-run eighth that lifted the Blue Jays over the Twins. Minnesota had won the first two of the three-game series.

Tigers 4, Angels 1

Dan Petry surrendered a first-inning run, then blanked the Angels on three hits until giving way to rookie Eric King in the ninth inning as the two combined on a six-hitter for Detroit. Petry, 4-4, who has won all his games on the road, gave up five hits.

Lee's Little inks with McMurry

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Midland Lee offensive tackle Mike Little committed recently to McMurry College to play football for the Indians next year.

Little, 6-0, 190 pounds, was a two-year starter for the Rebels, helping them advance into the state Class 5A playoffs each season. Lee posted records of 12-2 and 10-3 while Little was on the varsity.

Little is also expected to do some placekicking for McMurry, a member of the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association. Also signing with the Indians recently was Mike Chance of Kermit.

Chance, 6-3, 235 pounds, played two seasons for the Yellowjackets who were 12-1 in Class 3A in 1985.

Kerfeld undaunted by bullpen's success

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Unlike some people, right-hander Charlie Kerfeld says he has no trouble understanding the early success enjoyed by the Houston Astros' bullpen.

"We've got a good bunch of guys. Everybody knows each other's job," Kerfeld said after gaining credit for Houston's 26th victory Wednesday. "Nobody feels any jealousy. Some of us have never been on a winning team. It's a new experience."

Although the 22-year-old Kerfeld was the Astros' pitcher of record in a 4-3 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals in 11 innings, he had lots of help.

Left-hander Frank DiPino stepped into the breach when tiring Houston starter Mike Madden walked Vince Coleman to start St. Louis' seventh. Larry Andersen, a Philadelphia Phillies castoff, took over after the Astros' second of three errors. He stayed until Kerfeld, 5-1, took over in the 10th and whittled his earned-run average to 1.44 with three strikeouts in two hitless innings.

Craig Reynolds eventually rewarded Houston's relievers by tripling home Glenn Davis to pin the defeat on Todd Worrell, 3-3, of the Cards.

Andersen, in addition to one-hit relief over 2 2-3 innings, chipped in the game's biggest defensive play in St. Louis' seventh.

Coleman, after walking, moved to second on Jose Oquendo's sacrifice and stopped at third when first baseman Davis dropped third baseman Phil Garner's throw on Willie McGee's grounder. Andersen was summoned to face Jack Clark, who popped to second baseman Jim Pankovits in short right. Andersen, when Pankovits' throw home got past catcher Mark Bailey, backed up the play and threw out Coleman at home plate.

NL Roundup

Mets 4, Dodgers 2

Most pitchers with Dwight Gooden's statistics would be getting praise for their performance. But lately, all Gooden was hearing was criticism.

The 21-year-old New York Mets' right-hander, who had two losses and a no decision in his last three starts, silenced some of the comments Wednesday night, limiting the Los Angeles Dodgers to five hits and striking out 10 en route to a 4-2 complete-game victory.

The Mets gave Gooden a 4-1 cushion by scoring three runs in the sixth, two on Kevin Mitchell's second home run of the season.

Jerry Reuss, 2-4, allowed two runs on four hits, before giving way to Ed Vande Berg after Mookie Wilson led off the sixth with a double.

Steve Sax ended the scoring in the eighth with his fourth home run of the season. Mariano Duncan homered for the other Los Angeles run.

Mets' Manager Dave Johnson said the nine innings of work was a perfect cure to whatever might have been ailing Gooden.

"After what he's been through in the last three games, I wanted exactly what happened to happen," said Johnson. "Dwight worked extremely well early in the game, and while he wasn't as good over the final five innings, he didn't get clobbered.

Cubs 5, Reds 0

Davey Lopes drove in two runs and Jody Davis hit a homer to complement the four-hit pitching of Rick Sutcliffe as Chicago shut out visiting Cincinnati. Sutcliffe, 3-6, got his third complete game and 13th career shutout. He walked two and struck out five.

Cincinnati starter Bill Gullickson, 4-4, gave up all the Chicago runs in the first three innings.

Padres 10, Expos 1

Terry Kennedy's three-run homer highlighted an 11-hit attack as San Diego bombed host Montreal.

Steve Garvey and Carmelo Martinez each added three hits. Garvey had three singles and drove in two runs while Martinez added three singles with one RBI.

LaMarr Hoyt, 2-1, allowed 10 hits, struck out four and walked four in falling one out short of registering his first complete game of the season.

Phillies 4, Giants 0

Shane Rawley limited visiting San Francisco to four hits, the first a one-out single to Bob Melvin in the fifth, and Glenn Wilson had a two-run single in a four-run first inning to lead Philadelphia.

Rawley, 6-4, struck out six and walked two in his fourth complete game of the season.

Pirates 4, Braves 3

Johnny Ray raced home with the winning run on Craig McMurtry's wild pitch in the sixth inning and Johnny Ray homered as Pittsburgh ended a six-game losing streak by beating visiting Atlanta.

Larry McWilliams, 1-3, allowed five hits in seven innings before he got relief help from Jose DeLeon.

TCU may get some relief

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texas Christian University officials can ask for an adjustment in NCAA penalties levied against the school if the football program loses a large number of players.

A clause in the judgment against the school states an adjustment may be applied for "in the event the university experiences excessive attrition for reasons clearly beyond its control."

The clause means that if a large number of players leave for acceptable reasons, such as voluntary transfers or career-ending injuries, the scholarship reductions could be modified, officials said.

"It gives us the option of going back to the (infractions) committee and seeking relief," Frank Windegger, TCU athletic director, said Tuesday. "Of course, it depends on their interpretation of what is not our fault and what is, but at least we have the option of talking to them about it."

The Horned Frogs were placed on three years probation and lost 35 scholarships over two years.

The national attrition average for schools is about two players per year, according to the College Football Association.

Jackson sweeps pair from Golden Gators

Associated Press

Jackson came from behind in the first game and exploded for six runs in one inning during the second to sweep a double-header from Beaumont 4-3, 7-3 in Texas League baseball action.

Mike Santiago pitched two innings of scoreless relief Wednesday night for his sixth victory without a loss, and Reggie Doby registered the second game's win despite surrendering solo homers to Beaumont's Shane Mack and Brent Gjesdal.

In other Texas League action Wednesday night, Tulsa downed El Paso 9-8, San Antonio edged Shreveport 4-3 and Arkansas swept its double-header against Midland 6-1, 2-0.

Keith Miller's double drove home two Jackson runs in the seventh to tie the first game, and Randy Milligan walked to drive home the winning run.

Rusty Ford, 0-2, took the loss for the Golden Gators, while Beaumont's Mike Costello, 4-3, lost in the second game when the Mets scored six runs in the fifth inning.

Jackson has now won seven games in a row.

In El Paso, Tulsa gained a little respect with one crack of the bat.

Texas League

After losing the first three games of the series, the Drillers appeared to be on the trail to a fourth loss as the Diablos led 5-1.

But Tulsa rallied for five runs in the seventh inning and took the lead for good on a three-run homer by Driller catcher Mike Stanley. The Drillers eventually took a three-run lead in the eighth inning on Greg Bailey's two-run homer.

Tulsa's rally ruined a fine pitching performance by Diablo starter Dan Scarpetta, who allowed just two earned runs in six innings. Scarpetta, who did not get a decision, had won in his previous five starts.

Kirk Killingsworth (2-1), Tulsa's second relief pitcher, earned the victory.

San Antonio scored three of its four runs against Shreveport in the fourth inning as Chris Gwynn, Gary Newsom and Mike Ramsey each had run-scoring singles.

William Brennan, 3-3, registered the win, while John Burkett, 1-2, suffered the loss.

Rain delayed Indy tickets an easy buy

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A six-day rain postponement of the Indianapolis 500 could result in 100,000 fewer fans, officials say, and fans seeking tickets are finding plenty of sellers.

The race, scheduled last Sunday, was delayed first to Monday and then pushed back to Saturday because of persistent rain and a desire to broadcast the event live on national television.

"There seem to be a lot of tickets floating around right now," said Joel Cohen, of Tickets Up Front. "We've been in business since 1978 and I haven't seen anything quite like this."

"The sellers outnumber the buyers at this time," said Cohen, whose company handles transactions for a variety of events.

"We are taking orders on a try-and-get basis," he said. "If a person calls we will go out and get tickets for that person."

Owners of the privately held Indianapolis Motor Speedway do not divulge the number of tickets sold to the race, though the commonly accepted estimate by police and others who have attempted to count the crowd is 400,000.

Police are estimating that about 75 percent — 300,000 — of the fans will return on Saturday.

ANGELS

BANNING'S RETURN from the disabled list in the first game had to be encouraging. With a little support and a few breaks in the field, he easily could have won.

The way things started out, it looked like a short night for Banning. Three of the first four hitters, Lance Johnson, Tim Jones, Tom Amante and Eddie Tanner got base hits to account for two runs before a double play bailed Banning out of trouble.

Banning gave only three hits the rest of the way, but one of them came after two walks when Tom Amante hit a two-run single. It had all the earmarks of a big handle bounder, but took a high bounce over third baseman Billie Merrifield's head and skipped down the line.

Midland's only run off left-hander Paul Cherry, 2-3, came in the fifth when Mike Madril and John Hotchkiss singled and Tovar's two-out rap up the middle spoiled the shutout which nobody would have believed, anyway.

Arkansas added two insurance runs in the seventh on a three-base bunt single-error by Johnson, which finished Banning, and a walk, two wild pitches and single by Dave Kable off Vincinio Cedeno.

Cherry needed seventh inning help from Mike Shade for the final out after a walk to Hotchkiss and double by Tovar.

HALO HULAS — Cherry was 10-4 at St. Petersburg, Florida State League, with seven complete games and four shutouts last year....In the opener Randall got the heave-ho at the end of the sixth when he resumed a debate on the third strike call. Arkansas came up with two unusual double plays in the second game. McLemore fanning and Hotchkiss, running, doubled at second in the first inning ...In the fifth, Brian Brady, who opened with a single, was also doubled off first when Jose Rodriquez caught up with Doug Davis long drive to right....If Clements at third hadn't made a diving stop to the line in the third inning of the opener, Hotchkiss would have had a 3-for-3 night....

Unknowns eye giants in Omaha

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — There are no secrets about Loyola Marymount's sudden success in college baseball, says Dave Snow, second-year coach of the Los Angeles school.

"When I came in here I didn't have a five-year plan or a three-year plan. We set immediate goals," the former Cal State-Fullerton assistant coach said. "We tried to establish a positive attitude — a winning attitude — and not use every excuse available."

Snow didn't need many excuses as his 1986 team rose to a No. 1 national ranking at one point during the season. The Lions also earned the school's first trip to the College World Series, which begins Friday in Omaha.

Loyola takes a 49-13 record into Friday's 4:10 p.m. CDT opening game against LSU, 54-12. Arizona, 45-18, meets Maine, 41-21, in Friday's second game at 7:10 p.m.

In Saturday's opening round, defending champion Miami, 47-15, meets Oklahoma State, 54-13, at 4:10 p.m. Indiana State, 48-19, faces Florida State, 57-11, at 7:10 p.m.

"IT'S AN outstanding field of teams," Snow said. "We don't have the national reputation a lot of those teams do, or the tradition a lot of them do. But I wouldn't count this group out. This team has a lot of heart. We play more on heart than we do on talent."

Snow said his team has won most of its games this season in come-from-behind fashion.

"We've been a good back-to-the-wall team all year long," he said. "We don't have a lot of depth. We've had to make the right decisions with our pitching all year long. The heart of our club has been our offense."

Leading the assault for the Lions is Billy Bean with a .364 batting average. Jim Holleran hits .360, Steve Polk .354 and Chris Donnels .344. Donnels also has a team-leading 20 homers. Loyola carries a .325 team batting average.

Loyola has not faced any of the teams in the double-elimination College World Series.

"We had Arizona on our schedule but we didn't get to play the game," Snow said.

"On one hand it's kind of an advantage to be an unknown," he said. "On the other hand, I'd like to know more about the teams we're going to be playing, too."

BASKETBALL

PORTLAND, Ore. — Mike Schuler, an assistant coach for the Milwaukee Bucks, was named head coach of the Portland Trail Blazers of the NBA today, replacing Jack Ramsay.

"No team in the NBA will be better prepared than our team. And no team in the NBA will play harder than our team," Schuler said at a press conference.

Schuler, an assistant at Milwaukee for three seasons, is the sixth head coach of the Blazers in the 16-year history of the franchise.

The Blazers were 40-42 during the past regular NBA season, which included string of 12 consecutive losses — one short of the team record. Portland lost to Denver in the first round of the playoffs.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Organizers of a new women's professional basketball league based in the Charlotte area introduced some of their prospective players Wednesday, and most of them spoke enthusiastically about a chance to continue their careers.

The National Women's Basketball Association plans to start in November with eight teams playing 48 games each, most of them in the Southeast and all owned by the league. Not all the teams have playing sites, and no players are yet under contract.

Acting commissioner Wayne Fulcher said the league had "one purpose only, to give the young women of America a chance to participate on the pro level."

Although other efforts to operate U.S. women's leagues have failed, NWBA organizers hope to survive by limiting expenses and paying player salaries between $10,000 and $18,000.

Other teams will be in Richmond, Va.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Monroe, La.; Austin, Texas, and California.

The league will draft college seniors June 4, and will hold tryouts June 20-22 at Charlotte; Los Angeles; Hartford, Conn., and Tulsa, Okla.

BOXING

NEW YORK — Livingston Bramble, the World Boxing Association lightweight champion, has pulled out of a scheduled 15-round title fight because of tendinitis in his right elbow, Top Rank Boxing said Wednesday.

Bramble, 25-1-1 with 15 knockouts, was scheduled to fight Terrance Alli June 15 at Trump Casino in Atlantic City, N.J., but had to postpone the bout when he injured his right arm.

HOCKEY

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Al Arbour, saying "It is better for everyone concerned that I step aside," Wednesday announced his retirement as coach of the New York Islanders, a team he guided to four consecutive Stanley Cup championships.

The 52-year-old Arbour had coached the Islanders since the 1973-74 NHL season, one year after the club came into existence.

Open resumes with upset

By LARRY SIDDONS

PARIS (AP) — Mary Joe Fernandez, a 15-year-old from Miami ranked 50th in the world, upset 14th-seeded Andrea Temesvari of Hungary 5-7, 6-2, 6-3 in a rain-interrupted second-round match today in the French Open tennis championships.

Fernandez, who played her first tournament as a pro only last February, gained the victory on her fifth match point, as thunder was rolling around Roland Garros stadium and the red clay was speckled with raindrops.

The match earlier had been halted by rain for about 25 minutes.

The winning point came when Temesvari, ranked 19th in the world, sent a forehand return long.

The crowd at center court erupted in applause.

The match, which had been suspended because of darkness Tuesday, completed the second round of women's singles and brought an abrupt change of form.

Wednesday, all 18 seeded players who saw action advanced, and all but two of the women's seeds — No. 12 Catarina Lindqvist and No. 13 Carling Bassett — did so in straight sets.

The No. 1 seeds, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and Martina Navratilova of the United States, won in straight sets, and did it quickly.

Chris Evert Lloyd and Steffi Graf, Nos. 2 and 3 in the women's draw, also had straight-set victories and acknowledged they were not pushed.

BESIDES BASSETT struggling to win and Lindqvist rallying after losing the first set, the biggest stir of the day came when France's fourth-seeded Yannick Noah lost one set, and that in a tiebreaker.

Today, the rest of the men's draw, led by No. 2 Mats Wilander of Sweden and No. 3 Boris Becker of West Germany, was to finish the second round, and the women were to start the third.

Wilander, the defending men's champion, was to play Aaron Krickstein of he United States, while Becker faced Yugoslavia's Bruno Oresar.

Fifth-seeded Stefan Edberg met fellow Swede Mikael Pernfors and eighth-seeded Henri Leconte of France faced Amos Mansdorf of Israel.

France's Yannick Noah tumbles, but advances in French Open play Wednesday.

Third-round women's matches were to include Lloyd against American Anne Smith, Graf against Marcella Mesker of the Netherlands and No. 5 Hana Mandlikova against Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia.

The lone American seed left in the men's draw, Johan Kriek, advanced with a 6-1, 6-3, 5-7, 6-3 victory over Milan Srejber of Czechoslovakia.

"I am exceptionally satisfied to get up to this point," Kriek said. "Everything after this is a bonus."

LENDL, SLOWLY coming to form after lingering tendinitis in his knee, routed Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland, 6-3, 6-3, 6-3, in 1 hour, 45 minutes.

"I won quite easily, I think," Lendl said. "Now it's round three. All I really wanted to do today is win."

Navratilova needed just 47 minutes to dispatch the Soviet Union's Larissa Savchenko 6-2, 6-2.

"When I have an easy draw, I practice more," Navratilova said. In her two matches thus far, she has spent a total of 1:41 on Roland Garros' red clay courts.

Graf, a 34-minute winner in the first round, took a bit longer — 53 minutes — to beat America's Gretchen Rush 6-1, 6-1.

"I didn't concentrate well," Graf said. "She played well and ran well."

Lloyd beat France's Nathalie Herreman 6-2, 6-1, and wasn't looking for alibis.

"I haven't had any pressure matches yet," she said when asked about her chances of successfully defending her championship? "I think I'm playing pretty well. I haven't made any lapses like I sometimes do in easy matches."

Fourth-seeded Claudia Kohde Kilsch of West Germany, beat Rafaella Reggi of Italy 6-1, 7-6, and No. 5 Mandlikova defeated Virginie Paquet of France 6-0, 6-1.

BASSETT, WHO says she is using tennis to help cope with her father's recent death, had a tough time against another French player, Pascale Etchemendy, before winning 3-6, 6-4, 7-5. Bassett said lack of preparation hurt her.

Hershiser's $788,000 raise the stuff of legends

Orel Hershiser IV may look like something that just walked off the cover of The Saturday Evening Post, Norman Rockwell's idea of what a major league pitcher should look like. "He's all Adam's apple," a scout once reported to his front office about him, "but his curve can go around buildings."

You'd know just looking at him his name wouldn't be "Joe" or "Butch" or "Chuck." "Ichabod," maybe. Or, of course, "Orel."

But Orel the Fourth has already become a historic figure in our era. He's done something probably nobody in our culture ever did before – not Commodore Vanderbilt, J. Pierpont Morgan, J. Paul Getty, Diamond Jim Brady, any Rockefeller, the House of Rothschild, the Sun King of France.

Orel got a $788,000 raise in pay in one year. He went from $212,000 a year to a million.

Now, you have to figure that is a world-record raise in income, that no one ever did that before. Thomas Edison had to invent the light bulb, the phonograph and the moving picture before he got up in that bracket. Fulton's steamboat probably didn't inspire that quantum leap in his prospects.

THIS WAS hardly a cost-of-living index increase. They weren't helping Orel keep up with inflation. People used to have to build railroads or corner the market in wheat to put up those kinds of numbers in one year in their bank accounts.

It was so unprecedented that the non-sports community even had to take notice.

The newspaper humorist, Russell Baker, who admitted, not to say, boasted, in print that he hadn't followed the Dodgers since they left Brooklyn, was moved to break his taboo and comment on the extraordinary increase.

Baker was not complaining. He thought Hershiser was setting a nice precedent. Paving the way for the rest of us, so to speak.

"When a worker does a good job he deserves a nice raise, and $788,000 seems just about right to me," Baker wrote.

He felt the Hershiser raise should be a model for all others and that, when an employer would agree to a raise and say, "Suppose we say $10 a week?" Baker could counter, "Suppose we say $15,153.84 and ½ a week?"

OREL HERSHISER won 19 games and only lost 3 in 1985. He had an earned-run average of 2.03, he had 5 shutouts, 157 strikeouts and only walked 68 in 239 innings. He got $212,000. That comes to $11,158 a victory. As piece work goes, not bad.

The Dodgers knew he was entitled to a raise. Mop-up pitchers get 200 grand today. They thought $600,000 was a nice round figure — $33,158 a victory, if he duplicated 1985.

Hershiser thought $1 million was nicer and rounder. "I don't know if anybody is worth a million a year," he admitted as he sat in a dugout at Dodger Stadium the other night. "But I wanted to be paid what my peers are paid."

Arbitration, which he describes as "a kind of harsh process," ensued. "One man, the arbitrator, has to decide in a short period an issue involving hundreds of thousands of dollars," Orel explains.

"In a day?!" wondered an interviewer. "How about in three hours?" countered Hershiser. "One hour for your side, one hour for their side and one hour for rebuttals."

THE ARBITRATOR can rule only for the ball club or the ball player. No compromise. The arbitrator ruled for Hershiser. Orel may not be America's Pitcher. But he got America's Raise.

The figures were dazzling. So much so that they made not only the sports pages but the front pages.

Years ago in this country, when it was in the grip of a Depression, it was the custom in the papers to print the ultimate in escape literature — the annual salary list of the top wage-earners in this country.

Usually, Louis B. Mayer of MGM and Alfred P. Sloan of GM would head that list. Their salaries ran around $752,000, and they used to be read by people who were wondering where they could find 5 cents to buy a loaf of bread.

TODAY, A pitcher gets a raise bigger than their salary.

Hershiser is aware of the anomaly. "But when I got that raise, there were only 13 players getting a million. Now, there are 52. I was only the second pitcher to get it, now there's 13."

It's still an astonishing turn of events for a pitcher the Dodgers didn't know what to do with only three years ago. They didn't know whether to make a starter out of Orel, or a reliever — or a truck driver.

The trouble was not that his pitches didn't look tough enough. It was that he didn't.

A relief pitcher in particular has to look ferocious, like something off a post office wall — or the crew of a pirate ship. He has to have this blue beard or bristling mustache, a permanent scowl and, preferably, a scar running down his cheek. Hershiser looked like something off the crew of the Good Ship Lollipop.

HE HAD everything but braces on his teeth. If he was any paler, he wouldn't be able to see himself in the mirror.

But his curveball cracked like a bullwhip over a mule team. His sinker disappeared. He may have looked like a librarian, as his pitching coach, Ron Perranoski, used to complain, but he threw the ball like a guy assaulting a machine-gun nest.

He got out of the bullpen when the Dodgers sent him down to the Dominican Republic, where Manny Mota started him every game — and he came up with an 8-2 record and an ERA of 1.60.

HE STILL wasn't scaring anybody. He won 19 games against guys who couldn't wait to get to the plate.

All that may be changing. Making a million dollars and getting a $788,000 raise may have done for Orel Hershiser everything that growing a beard, getting a scar, or wearing an earring or a parrot on his shoulder or knife in his teeth may have done — gotten him the respect his pitches deserve.

He's no longer a baby-faced kid with a hard sinker. He's at one with the great robber barons of our financial history. It's one thing to come to bat against this pale skinny kid who looks like a rural schoolteacher.

It's another thing to come up against a guy who made more money faster than any stock manipulator or cartel operator who ever lived. You not only expect to get struck out by a guy who got a $788,000 raise, it's kind of an honor.

It's like getting your train robbed by Jesse James or your bank by Willie Sutton.

That's not some nerd who can't get a dollar-an-hour raise out there. That's a guy who should have a statue in every union hall in the country, a guy who got more money for one arm than John L. Lewis used to get for a whole union.

Scouts pant at rich Lone Star prep crop

DALLAS (AP) — Once again, the eyes of professional baseball scouts are upon young, promising prospects from Texas.

And on June 2, when the amateur draft begins, several of the state's ripest could be taken in the first round.

"The scouts have told me this is the best crop to come out of Texas in the draft era," said Allan Simpson, editor of "Baseball America."

"Four, maybe even five, should go in the first round. There have never been more than three in any one year. There seems to be even more talent than usual; 15 or 20 Texas high school players may be drafted in the first five rounds."

In the 21 years of the draft, 33 Texans have been drafted in the first round.

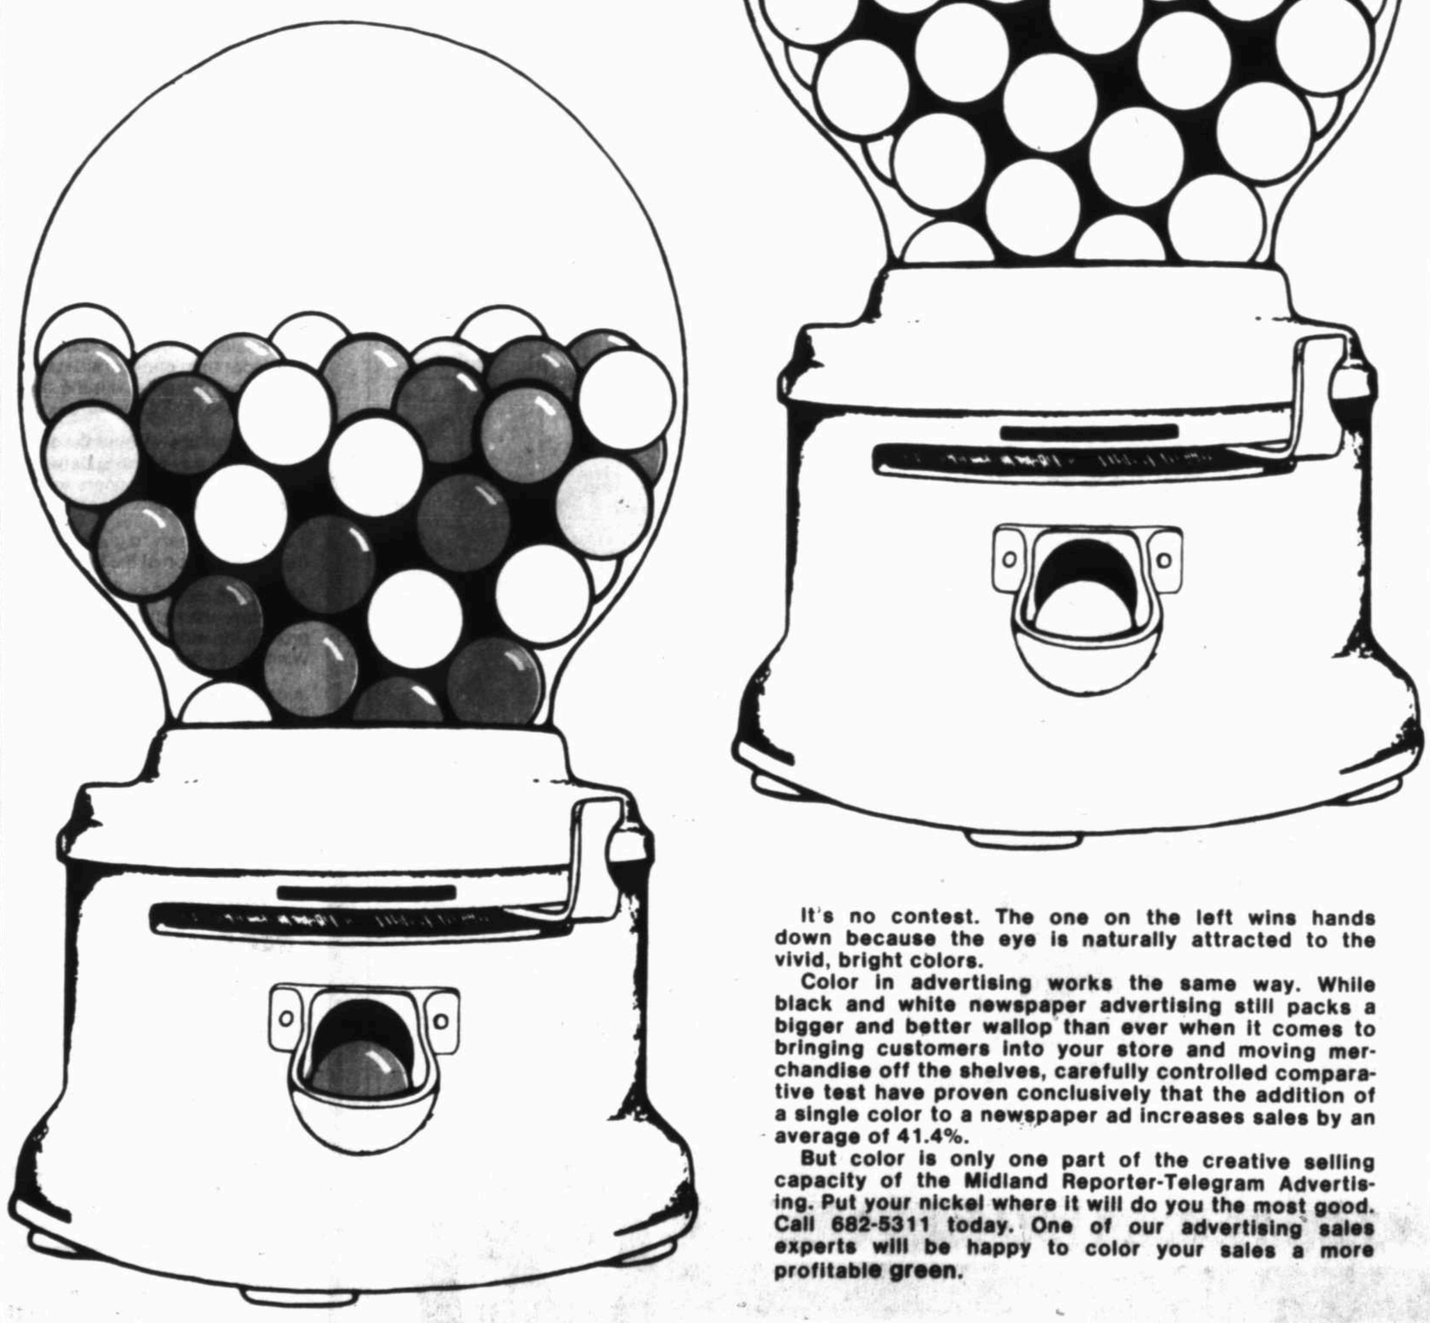

Scouts attribute the traditionally strong state talent to population, climate and coaching.

"I used to work in New England, and you would have to drive for miles before you see a good prospect," said Stan Saleski, a New York Yankees scout. "Here you can drive for an hour and find four good prospects."

Bill Scudder, the Prairiland High School baseball coach, has been entertaining scouts from everywhere — with their eyes on gifted pitcher Scott Scudder.

Thomas Jefferson pitcher Mike Moscrey, who is 14-0 with 150 strikeouts, heads a list of Dallas area prospects. Plano East catcher Steve Piskor and Dallas Jesuit pitcher Mike Grimes are also expected to be drafted.

Which one would you put your nickel in?

It's no contest. The one on the left wins hands down because the eye is naturally attracted to the vivid, bright colors.

Color in advertising works the same way. Archer, Smith air differences in debate

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

A debate Wednesday between Van Archer and Lamar Smith brought out a few differences between the two conservative GOP candidates for the 21st Congressional District.

Archer and Smith, who will face each other in a June 7 runoff, disagreed on issues ranging from support for tax exempt Individual Retirement Accounts to a temporary oil import tax. The Republican winner of the June 7 race will face Democrat Pete Snelson, a former state senator who lives in Midland, in the November general election.

Smith said he is against a current plan to eliminate tax deductible IRAs for employees with private company pension plans. IRAs encourage savings and are important to the health of the economy, Smith said. However, Archer said he supports the plan as reducing and simplifying taxes.

"My ultimate goal is a flat tax," Archer said.

Archer and Smith disagree on controlling illegal immigration and drug trafficking along the state's 2,000-mile border with Mexico. Smith advocated increasing border patrol agents, prohibiting blanket amnesty, stopping state and federal aid to illegal aliens and cooperating with Mexico to change their laws.

However, Archer said the Mexican government is the cause of the illegal alien and drug trafficking problem. Archer advocates a backup military patrol to supplement the border patrol's forces.

"We have got to get control of our border and we have to have military backup patrols. Physically having these people in that area will put a stop to it," Archer said.

However, Smith countered that most of the military in Texas is not trained to patrol the border and using them as patrols would leave large vacancies on bases.

Smith supports a temporary oil import fee because the industry is not operating under a free market system, he said. Domestic producers compete against nationalized industries and pay taxes other nation's oil companies do not have to pay, Smith said.

"There is not a free market today in the world of energy," Smith said.

Archer said OPEC will soon cut back on production of oil and its price will rise again.

Opposing an oil import fee, Archer said, "Putting on a tariff has been a disaster every time protectionism has been tried."

Both candidates said they would be cautious about trade to countries whose ideologies were different from democracy.

"I wouldn't ever trade with the Soviet Union. That's an evil empire. I would never trade something they could use against us," Archer said.

However, Smith said, "We should do business with other countries if it will help our country."

Archer and Smith said they were opposed to using federal aid for abortions. Both candidates also said they were against gun control laws.

In his closing statement, Archer said a conservative needs to be elected to the House of Representatives because "conservatives are always outnumbered in the House of Representatives."

The debate at Ranchland Hills Country Club was sponsored by the Midland County Republican Men's Club.

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Van Archer, left, and Lamar Smith, both of San Antonio, debated issues Wednesday at the Ranchland Hills County Club. The two are vying for the GOP nomination to the 21st Congressional District.

Mysterious marker sits in subdivision

By CINDY HORSWELL

HOUSTON (AP) — "She died the death of the righteous and is forever blessed" — David G. Burnett.

These words were elegantly penned in a Bible in 1858 by the first president of the Republic of Texas — on the day his wife, Hannah, died.

David G. Burnet also noted that he buried his wife next to the graves of two of their children on their farm overlooking Burnet Bay.

Today, a large state marker denoting her grave is curiously lodged between two houses in a Baytown subdivision. Few people can boast of having such a conversation piece in their sideyard, although nearby homeowners are thankful few tourists make pilgrimages to this little-known Texas shrine.

How the gray granite marker came to be placed on that obscure, unlikely spot is a town mystery, says Jean Shipherd of the Bay Area Heritage Society.

In fact, as Texas celebrates the 150th anniversary of its independence, some history buffs question whether the marker indicates the authentic gravesite.

"I first learned it existed when we created the Baytown Historical Museum in 1977. It always seemed like a dumb spot for a marker to me," said Ms. Shepherd. "After research, it looks like someone put it in the wrong spot. I don't think that is her grave."

The large Centennial marker decorated with a bronze Lone Star encircled by two leafy branches — the Seal of Texas — bears the simple inscription:

"HANNAH Este Burnet, born Morrison, N.J., December 8, 1800, died in 1858; wife of David G. Burnet, president ad interim of Texas, March 16 to Oct. 26, 1836."

Boughs of flowering crape myrtle and a planter containing white lilies and aspidistra shroud the marker from the street 100 feet away — hiding it from view.

Ex-bank president draws 24-year term

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton sentenced his friend and former Odessa community-service leader Max Malone to 24 years in prison for bank fraud in 1981 when Malone was president of Permian Bank & Trust in Odessa.

Malone, 53, was convicted by a federal jury on May 7 of 13 counts of embezzlement, misapplication of funds and making false entries, but Bunton subsequently dismissed one of the counts. Malone could have been sentenced up to 53 years in prison on the 12 counts had the judge imposed the maximum sentence on each count and had each run consecutively.

In addition to the prison term, Bunton ordered Malone to pay $317,410.71 in restitution.

"The jury obviously believed that you violated the law," Bunton told Malone. Nevertheless, Bunton said that "perhaps" Malone thought that his "intentions were good" in making the illegal banking transactions.

The four-man, eight-woman jury deliberated about three hours before it returned the guilty verdicts against Malone.

"I'm familiar with your background in community service (in Odessa)," Bunton told Malone, "and it was a privilege for me to work with you" in community-service projects. The judge said it was "difficult" to sentence "a friend of mine."

IN ADDITION to setting Malone's prison terms and restitution, Bunton ordered Malone to serve a five-year probation following the serving of penitentiary time, which could be as short as 3½ years. The judge ordered the U.S. Parole Commission to evaluate Malone and to determine just how much actual time he would serve in prison.

The judge had denied the defense's motion for a new trial and acquittal.

Prior to the sentencing noon Wednesday, Malone said that he was "well represented" by his defense counsel, Odessa attorneys Kevin Bartley and Gary Riley.

"The court was fair," Malone said. "I was not very pleased with the outcome of the trial," which he said was conducted very "professionally."

Riley had asked the judge for the "most lenient sentencing" for his client.

The judge ordered Malone to report to the deputy U.S. marshal on June 16 to begin serving his sentence unless he planned to appeal the jury's verdicts. Co-defense counsel Bartley, said the verdicts would be appealed, and if they are upheld by the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, La., Malone would begin serving the sentence in about a year. In the meantime, he is a car salesman in Lubbock.

In sentencing Malone, Bunton ordered that the U.S. Parole Commission evaluate Malone and to determine just how long he would be confined.

"IF THEY WANT to let him out tomorrow, he'll get out then," Bartley said. However, a U.S. probation officer said Malone likely would serve at least between 42 and 50 months prison.

"This is certainly not a light sentence," Bartley said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Blankinship, who prosecuted Malone, termed the 24-year sentence as a "good sentence."

"The jury's verdicts and the court's sentences should send messages to other bank-fraud violators in the Permian Basin," Blankinship said.

Since 1985, three former Midland-Odessa bank presidents have been indicted for bank fraud, and two of the ex-presidents were convicted in federal court in Midland. In addition, a former Odessa engineer-manufacturer was convicted for bank fraud.

Eddie Thomas, 43, former president of MetroBank at Midland Regional Airport, is serving a 20-year sentence for embezzlement and misapplication of bank funds. The bank failed in 1983. In addition, Bunton ordered Thomas to pay $550,000 in restitution.

EARLIER IN MAY, Bunton sentenced 43-year-old Roger Clark to 10 years in prison and ordered him to pay $378,317.65 in restitution. A federal jury convicted Clark, an engineer who operated Clark Manufacturing of Tulsa Inc. and Clark Engineering of Odessa Inc., of mail fraud, wire fraud, wire-transfer fraud and making false statements to gain bank loans after his businesses began to falter in late 1981, as the oil boom started to slow down. Clark manufactured trailers and truck riggings for the oil-field industry.

Bill Tapp, 42, former president of Bank of the West in Odessa, is to be tried in mid-June by a federal jury in Midland on 13 counts of bank fraud.

Federal Bureau of Investigation special agents in Midland investigated the cases, Blankinship noted. Scott French investigated the Clark case. Scott Crabtree investigated the Malone case. James H. "Chip" Burrus and Crabtree investigated the Thomas case, and Burrus investigated the Tapp case, he said.

Economic woes hurting Big Brothers-Big Sisters

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

During Midland's current economic downturn, everyone is affected, especially volunteer groups. And, one of these groups is Midland's Big Brothers-Big Sisters of America.

According to Linda Macias, the organization's director, the program will lose people because its main source of volunteers come from Midland's professional oil people — the people most directly affected by the oil slump.

"We might be able to make more matches between children and volunteers, but more kids will be put on the waiting list. The kids and the need will always be here whether the volunteers are or not," she said.

Currently there are 90 youths waiting for adult volunteers and 40 more youngsters being processed. There are 120 active volunteers.

Formed in 1903, the program was called Big Brothers of America and originally was only for boys. Not long afterward, however, a Big Sisters program was started for girls. Both organizations stress a strong one-on-one relationship between a youth who has only one parent and an adult.

In 1975 the two groups merged to form Big Brothers, Big Sisters of America. The Midland chapter was also formed in 1975 as part of Family Services. In 1981 the chapter became independent. Eligible youth in the Midland area are those who live with a single parent/guardian and are ages 6 to 16 years.

Ms. Macias said not only will the organization lose volunteers, but it could lose funding, as well.

"Forty percent of our funding comes from the United Way, but the rest comes from individuals and corporations. We will probably have to make some budget cuts because of (the) economy," she added.

Ms. Macias said the group has already looked at the budget and tried to cut corners by purchasing cheaper office supplies rather than cutting back on programs.

One of the strongest aspects of the program, according to Ms. Macias, is the strict process would-be-volunteers must go through.

The first step is orientation, where potential volunteers learn more about the program and determine if it is for them. They then fill out the application. Later, the organization requests a nationwide police check on the person.

Following the police check is a personal interview. "We ask them personal questions about their life, why they want to be a volunteer, etc.," she said.

There is then the home visit. The last step is the caseworker's evaluation of the applicant.

"We can reject the person and we have before. We want to make sure the child is safe and the pair are compatible," Ms. Macias said.

The process usually takes three weeks to a month. The volunteer has the chance to choose what type of child he feels comfortable with.

"But," she stressed, "it is the case worker's decision to see if the two are compatible."

After the applicant passes through the orientation, the organization asks the volunteer to commit himself for a year.

Ms. Macias said if the volunteer is doing something that seems trivial "like cutting the grass or doing the laundry," he should invite the youth to help.

"These children are looking for companionship and friendship, not just to go out to the movies," she added.

She said many people continue to volunteer longer than a year if they can. "One of our on-going relationships is in its sixth year."

Buying on credit brings on feelings of dread

Buying on credit is a dread. And I've, for the most part, managed to avoid much of that which I most dread. It frightens me more than death but not more so than taxes. Death I can accept, though I certainly am not eager to give up living this life. Taxes I can't control, though I am reluctant, but certainly not unwilling, to pay. I mention that specifically for the benefit of the Internal Revenue Service and for my own welfare and freedom from bondage.

Just the other day, I was a witness to a credit purchase. And the sight and sound of the transaction rekindled old fears of credit buying. I recalled the old chattel mortgages and the bondage, the enslavement, I felt when I signed by name and pledged to pay, in a timely manner, or forever to be held in disgrace and ridicule by whomever would care to bother disgracing and ridiculing me. It seems like a lot of trouble.

Compounding that, the credit manager brings up the subject of death and taxes. He tags on the sales tax and asks if you want life (or it is "death") insurance or fire and theft insurance during the term of the payments. The company justly wants its money, regardless. And then I wonder if the quality of the merchandise I'm buying is as good as I initially perceived or as well put together as the floor model.

The thing that really irks me about buying on credit is not the sales person who subtly or obviously tries to persuade me to divulge my credit-card numbers or to pledge payments via a note. And it's not so much the "burden" of paying off the note or bill and knowing that the company store has a binding hold on me. More than anything, what really zaps me is myself. For instance, I'd have this craving for a new something or other and impulsively would buy it or them, such as magazines I don't read and gadgets I don't need. And after I bought it or them, I'd forget I had whatever it was, and when I did remember, when I got the reminder via a payment notice, I wondered why. I particularly like gadgets — form and texture and things which have no practical value. But I'm getting away from that. Now, if I pay cash, I sidestep the prolonged agony of being reminded of my foolish purchases. Right now, I can hardly think of any, which are becoming fewer each day and year as I, I pray, become decreasing less prodigal and increasingly wonder what material things I simply must have.

Well, I bought a car because I needed one. My prized "antique," Old Scout, had taken leave of the road. And the motorcycle almost scared me to death, and I got weary of pedaling the bicycle here and there — from work to the grocery store and practicing my balancing act while hanging on to one or two double-bagged sacks of groceries. So, I decided to spend some money. I'm no miser, but like my granddad, D. Todd, I hesitate to spend when nothing will do. But like my other granddad, Asa Williams, when I spend, I spend — sometimes more than I have.

I bought a television set, because I didn't have one. And I purchased a most practical reading lamp because I wanted it. It has served well.

And I really don't regret the purchases. Not now. They are practical and, barring overindulgence, have served me well.

So, what I'm saying, I suppose, is simply this: Don't buy if you have unresolved doubts. And if you do commit, go "whole hog," bury any regrets and live today with or without credit.

Conservative group's growth could cause GOP shake-up

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Increasing strength in the Texas Grassroots Coalition may cause a Republican Party "shake-up," party chairman George Strake said.

The shake-up could occur because coalition supporters may have elected a majority of delegates to the Republican Party convention in June, said Strake, who is trying to be re-elected to the post.

But, he added, the real strength of the religious-oriented group won't be known for certain until the list of delegates is released in mid-June.

While some Republicans are saying as many as 65 percent of the delegates to the state convention are members or backers of the coalition, Strake disagrees.

"I think that is too high," he said.

The Grassroots Coalition, organized by Adrian Van Zelfden in Austin, and its supporters gained sizable representation in all county organizations in the state except San Antonio, Austin, Dallas, El Paso and Midland, Strake said Wednesday.

The group was particularly strong in Nueces, Aransas, San Patricio, Calhoun and Jim Wells counties, he said.

Strake said the group's growing strength is a sign that the Republican Party is growing in Texas.

"I view that from a position that you have to grow in some direction. That is the reason we had the biggest turnout for the Republican primary in the history of the state," he said.

The Republican primary drew 543,000 voters in May, Strake said.

One of the brightest spots at Big Brothers-Big Sisters is the "Wednesday's Child Program." It is a two minute television segment on Channel 2 at 10 p.m. The station's sports director, Skip Baldwin, has been doing the spot for four years. He talks about a youth who needs a Big Brother or Big Sister.

"This our highest recruitment tool," Ms. Macias stated. "It is a safe bet that 85 percent of our volunteers contact us because of this."

Another successful idea, she said, is the Couples Program. Married couples share their time with a youth.

"Many kids have a very negative view on marriage. With this program they can see that a brighter side does exist," Ms. Macias said.

Unfortunately, she said, there are not many couples involved. "We need more married couples and more minority volunteers," she stated.

If and when some of the volunteers leave the area it will be hard on the youth, Ms. Macias said.

"Midland is very mobile and some volunteers will leave," she explained, "But, if the volunteer sits down with the child and explains to him what is happening, the child will feel much better."

"Just because the volunteer is leaving does not mean the friendship has to end," she continued. "Some times the child will go visit the volunteer."

Of the program, she stressed the need for more volunteers.

"Most of the kids will stay in Midland, the volunteers are the ones that are moving," Ms. Macias stated.

"These children come from all types of socio-economic backgrounds and need a good adult role model. We want the children safe and happy."

MARKER

The marker and homes in the wooded Lakewood subdivision are situated on a bluff overlooking Burnet Bay. On the opposite shore sits the San Jacinto Monument, commemorating the battle where Texas won its independence.

The house on one side of Hannah's marker is owned by a pathologist and his wife, while the house on the other side is abandoned after being partially destroyed by an arson fire last Thanksgiving.

A Baytown policeman rediscovered the marker this spring, when he was called to the burned house to chase away children who had been scrawling graffiti in the drained swimming pool and using it for skateboarding.

"The marker seemed so inappropriate there next to that burned out hull," the officer said. "It looked forgotten, discarded. It was especially upsetting because it's the Sesquicentennial."

"Most people don't know the marker is here," said Anna Haley, the pathologist's wife who has lived beside it for 21 years. Very rarely do sightseers tramp through her yard to view it, she said.

"ONCE I remember being scared when I pulled into my drive and saw a group of people standing around. I thought maybe some kids had been swimming in the bay and drowned," she recalled. "But it was only some students making a rubbing of the seal for a school report!"

Since the state does not maintain the site, she became the self-appointed keeper. She has nurtured the plants growing there and has kept the grass neatly trimmed: "I planted some bluebonnets there once, but they never bloomed due to the lack of sun."

As president of the Lakewood Garden Club, Mrs. Haley is considering making beautification of the spot a club project. However, she still wants to keep it a peaceful setting, a respite, away from trampling feet.

"We're contemplating cutting down some of the crape myrtle trees to make it more noticeable from the street. Or moving it a little closer to the street. Then we might do some landscaping," she said.

Instead, Ms. Shepherd and others think the marker ought to be moved a few miles farther west about two miles from the ferry in Lynchburg. There, amidst the playground equipment in a 10-acre Harris County park, lies a historical marker commemorating Burnet's home on his farm called "Oakland."

It was placed there by the San Jacinto Chapter of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas when the David G. Burnet Park was created in 1958.

RESEARCHERS into the marker's positioning in the Lakewood subdivision have been confounded. Little or no documentation exists today for Centennial markers authorized in 1936, said Cindee Langdon of the research and records department of the Texas Historical Commission in Austin.

"We now require and keep documentation for all state markers," she said. "But we didn't 50 years ago."

She said that a few of the 1,100 Centennial markers have been found in inaccessible areas — a cow pasture in Galveston and a farmer's field in Fredericksburg — but she said she knows of no others in the middle of a housing subdivision.

The marker is briefly mentioned in the "Kemp Papers" kept at the Barker Texas History Center in Austim, written by L.W. Kemp and published in 1938 by the Centennial Commission.

It indicates that the Sydney Sherman Chapter of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas helped obtain the marker for the unmarked gravesite and also gained the authority to have Mrs. Burnet's body dug up and reburied next to her husband at Lakeview Cemetery in Galveston.

The state authorized $119 for the project, but Kemp made a note in 1946 that: "The grave couldn't be found and the contract was canceled."

No member of the Sydney Sherman Chapter in Galveston — the oldest chapter in the state — remembers the episode.

CONTROVERSY also has surrounded David Burnet's burial. Daughters of the Republic of Texas members say Burnet was a pauper when his wife died and he came to live with his longtime friend and patriot, Sydney Sherman in Galveston. Burnet died at 82 and was buried there. The authoritative Handbook of Texas, however, contends his body was later moved to a state cemetery in Austin. The state cemetery has no record of Burnet being buried there.

Two Sydney Sherman Chapter members, now dead, were quoted in Mary Clark's Burnet biography written in 1969 that they would like "nothing better than to unite Burnet and his family in one final resting place." They also told of successfully fighting the state "body snatchers" who attempted to move Burnet's body to Austin.

The two members, Alice and Mildred Cherry, went with the author to search for Hannah Burnet's grave but found only the home site.

"It is a mystery what happened to the granite tombstone of Hannah Burnet," Clark wrote, noting a La Grange man had written about visiting the Burnet homesite in the Centennial year and finding three graves. One belonged to Mrs. Burnet, another to her child and a third to the wife of one of Mrs. Burnet's relatives.

Harris County deed records show Nathaniel Lynch, who once operated a ferry near Baytown, deeded 279 acres to Burnet and his wife in 1843 on Burnet Bay.

HOWEVER, according to a map of the Nathaniel Lynch abstract at the Baytown Historical Museum, the tract was not situated in Lakewood. It overlooks a different sector of Burnet Bay in the vicinity of of the county park, Ms. Shepherd said.

Lakewood is part of the league of land (48,000 acres) Lynch once owned in the Baytown area, but Ms. Shepherd cannot find any records of Burnet ever owning property within the confines of the current subdivision.

Appeals court orders second look at Odessa murder case

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday ordered a lower court to take a second look at the case of an Abilene man convicted of a 1980 Odessa murder.

In December 1982, the Eighth District Court of Appeals in El Paso denied Rex Bradley Shanks' request for a rehearing. In a 5-3 decision Wednesday, the high court ordered the El Paso court to reconsider the matter in light of more recent decisions.

A Midland jury convicted Shanks of the July 28, 1980, murder of James David McPeters of Odessa and sentenced him to 99 years in prison. Trial court evidence indicates Shanks "engaged in a conspiracy" with McPeters' wife, Patricia, to murder him "in order to obtain the proceeds of several life insurance policies."

In Shanks' motion for a rehearing before the El Paso court, he argued that 242nd District Judge Pat M. Baskin of Midland erred in his instructions to the jury because he "failed to properly place the burden of proof on the state, rather than (Shanks), to disprove the element of sudden passion beyond a reasonable doubt." The El Paso court denied that motion.

The state Penal Code defines "sudden passion" as a murderer's state of mind caused by the victim that "would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment or terror in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection." The term is used to distinguish between murder and voluntary manslaughter.

Since the El Paso court's action, the Court of Criminal Appeals has issued decisions in two cases that hold that instructions to juries in murder trials that do not include such language concerning burden of proof are "fundamentally defective." The high court has also since laid down what is known as the "Almanza doctrine," which holds in part that when a defendant's attorney objects to a judge's charge to the jury, an appeals court may overruled the verdict only if the faulty instructions harmed the defendant's case.

In light of those three decisions, the high court Wednesday asked the El Paso Court of Appeals to reconsider Shanks' alleged error concerning the judge's charge to the jury. The El Paso court, however, will not re-examine other portions of Shanks' appeal, including allegations of impropriety involving the Midland court's investigation of a suspected offer of a bribe to one of the jurors in the original trial.

Courts set oral arguments for two separate TECAT suits

AUSTIN (AP) — Two appeals courts scheduled oral arguments next month on separate lawsuits challenging the constitutionality of the teacher competency test.

The 3rd Court of Appeals on Wednesday scheduled oral arguments for June 11 on the suit filed by the Texas State Teachers Association. The association appealed after State District Judge Harley Clark of Austin upheld the test in March.

The Texas Examination for Current Administrators and Teachers, or TECAT, was administered to 202,084 educators on March 10, and 195,505 — 96.7 percent — passed.

On June 18, the Texas Supreme Court will hear a direct appeal from Starr County in which a state district judge granted a temporary injunction with regard to some 330 members of Project Principle, Inc.

Assistant Attorney General Leslie McCollom said yet another case challenging the TECAT is scheduled to be heard June 25 in the 5th Court of Appeals at Dallas.

In requesting oral arguments, the state of Texas said it wanted to resolve all of the TECAT issues before the makeup exam June 28.

El Paso man's heart given to San Antonioan

EL PASO (AP) — The heart of an 18-year-old El Paso man who committed suicide has been transplanted into a 39-year-old San Antonio man, officials say.

Officials at Vista Hills Medical Center, where the donor's organs were removed Wednesday, said they would not release his identity at the family's request.

El Paso police Lt. Richard Perez said the man shot himself at home Tuesday night with a .22-caliber rifle after leaving a suicide note. The man was on life support until his parents gave permission to remove the organs.

Vista Hills spokesman Pete Roning said teams of doctors came from around the country Wednesday afternoon and successfully removed three organs from the El Paso man.

Soviet woman learns brother allowed to emigrate

AUSTIN (AP) — For more than six months since she left Moscow and settled in Austin, Lydia Staskevich had faith that no harm would come to the family she left behind.

Even so, she did not believe the telephone call from Moscow would come this soon with news this good.

Staskevich learned Tuesday that her brother, who she said has been harassed by the KGB and attacked in the Soviet press because of his Christian beliefs, will be allowed to leave the Soviet Union today.

Ms. Staskevich said her brother, Pavel Timonin, 38, and his wife, Lyuba Gorelkina, telephoned Tuesday with the news they will fly from Moscow to Vienna today and then on to Rome to await a visa to enter the United States.

Timonin's mother, Ms. Staskevich, her husband and their three children were permitted to leave the Soviet Union last September, more than five years after applying to emigrate. They arrived in Austin in November.

Their Pentecostal sect is outlawed in the Soviet Union because its members refuse to register their churches with the government.

Timonin's brief call came the same day the State Department announced that the Soviet Union had agreed to allow 117 of its citizens to emigrate and join relatives in the United States.

The Soviets, however, supplied only 36 of the 117 names. They said each name represented one member of 36 families.

A State Department official in Washington said Wednesday that Timonin and Gorelkina were not on the list. Embassy officials in Moscow, however, told Western correspondents that Timonin and his wife were being allowed to leave.

"This case may be entirely separate from the 36 they told us they'd let go," a former Moscow Embassy official now based in Washington told the Austin American-Statesman. "It's possible that it just happened to pop up at the same time."

Whatever the process, Ms. Staskevich was ecstatic.

"As a Christian I was absolutely confident that the Lord would intervene," she said. "I didn't expect some other result. I didn't expect anything (bad) to happen. I didn't imagine how I could live without him."

She said she's not sure where her brother and sister-in-law will settle in the United States.

Much of the fascination of duplicate bridge centers around the ability to collect 200 from the opponents when all your side can make is a partscore worth slightly less than that. Or, for that matter, to pick up 500 when all you have is a not vulnerable game worth only 400 or so. Dan Morse of Houston combined with John Sutherlin of San Francisco in an exciting defense on this hand from the Open Pairs event at the recent North American Championships in Portland, Ore.

Since East-West were using negative doubles, i.e., low-level doubles in most cases were for takeout and not penalties, Morse passed at his first turn with the West cards in the hope that his partner would reopen with a double. Sutherlin, East, did not want to do that with his minimum opening bid and heart void, so he simply rebid his six-card suit. As a result, Morse got a crack at three hearts. Now all the defenders had to do was find seven tricks to compensate for the game they were giving up.

West took three rounds of diamonds, then shifted to the ten of spades, covered by the king and won with the ace. Back came a low club to declarer's ace. Declarer led a trump to the ten, ruffed a spade, cashed the king of clubs and then led another trump, won in dummy when West again played low.

Declarer led another spade and trumped with the king. If West overruffed or discarded his diamond, declarer would have to score two of the last four tricks. Morse found an elegant solution to this dilemma—he underruffed! That was the last trick declarer could take. Whether he exited with a trump or his club, the defenders had the last three tricks. Try it.

"Back to the Future" won a Saturn award Wednesday as Best Science Fiction film. It also won Best Special Effects and the movie's 24-year-old star, Michael J. Fox, was named best actor.

"Fright Night" was chosen Best Horror Film and also took best writing honors. Roddy McDowall, the film's co-star, was named best supporting actor.

"Ladyhawke," the story of the tranformation of a woman into a bird, was chosen the Best Fantasy Film. Additionally, the best costume award went to Nana Cecchi who appeared in the movie.

Coral Browne, wife of actor Vincent Price, was named best actress for her role in "Dreamchild."

Her 75-year-old husband, who has appeared in more than 100 movies, including chillers like "House of Wax" (1953), "The Fly" (1958) and "The Tingler" (1959), won a Life Career Award.

Woody Allen was given The President's Award for his whimsical "Purple Rose of Cairo."

IPSWICH, England (AP) — Princess Diana popped a myth about her taste in rock music, disclosing that Simon Le Bon and Duran Duran aren't her favorites after all.

Top of the pops, she said Wednesday, are the middle-of-the-road rock group Dire Straits.

The 24-year-old princess disclosed her preference to radio disc jockey Allan Lee at the Suffolk Show in Ipswich in eastern England.

"She told me she didn't know where people got the idea that Duran Duran were her favorite pop group. She said she quite liked them but preferred Dire Straits," he said.

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A security guard kept watch on the 17-room mansion of singer Dick Dale after the self-styled "king of the surf guitar" was evicted for allegedly defaulting on an $890,000 loan.

The locks were changed Tuesday on the $3.5 million mansion built by razor tycoon King Gillette, said Dale's attorney James Webster.

Guard Mike Basham of Elite Patrol said Wednesday his company had been hired by Orange Coast Thrift and Loan to protect the property around the clock.

Dale, 49, best known for such surfing hits as "Let's Go Trippin'" and "The Scavenger," with the Deltones in the early 1960s, had sued Orange Coast Thrift of Los Alamitos in February, contending it prematurely found him in default on the loan. The thrift called the loan due last June.

The guitarist, born Richard Monsour, had suffered serious burns in a kitchen accident at the mansion in 1984. In 1983, he was acquitted of child molestation charges involving a 13-year-old neighbor girl.

LONDON (AP) — Isaiah Jackson has become the first American and the first black to be appointed conductor of Britain's Royal Ballet Company at Covent Garden.

Jackson, 41, of Richmond, Va., will make his first appearance as the company's conductor June 6, and is expected to spend about a year with the ensemble.

He conducted the ballet's orchestra last June, winning praise from the London Times, which said he "made his presence felt from the first bars of the music."

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC won another weekly ratings competition and is headed for its biggest sweeps margin in modern times, while CBS finished third for both the week and the May sweeps.

Does this foreshadow a summer slide by CBS into third place?

"I think the May sweeps is a clear indication that we'll do well this summer and a strong indication that CBS might be third this summer," said Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for resarch projects.

Nonsense, said David Poltrack, CBS' vice president for research. "It's not in any way, shape or form an indicator of any time other than the May sweeps. CBS should be No. 2 in the summer, given our regular series strength. I wouldn't expect a narrowing of the gap between CBS and ABC."

Poltrack noted that ABC will edge CBS in the May sweeps only on the strength of its high-rated, 12-hour "North & South" miniseries. CBS had no miniseries in May, while NBC had a pair of two-parters.

With the May sweeps over today, the summer rerun season officially begins. Blockbuster, first-run TV films, such as last week's "Perry Mason: The Case of the Notorious Nun," will be mere memories until September.

Nielsen figures released Wednesday showed that NBC's "Perry Mason" movie easily won the battle of the whodunits over a repeat of CBS' "Murder, She Wrote." Mason's latest solution ranked third for the week, behind NBC's top-rated comedy tandem of "The Cosby Show" and "Family Ties."

With seven of the Top 10 shows, NBC won the week of May 19-25 by averaging a 15.5 rating to ABC's 12.2 and CBS' 11.5. The only weeks in 1985-86 with a wider margin of victory were ABC's win during the World Series and NBC's win the week of the Super Bowl. (A rating measures the percentage of the nation's 85.9 million homes with television.)

The mixture of successful TV movies and series, particularly comedies, also paced NBC to its fifth consecutive sweeps victory. With the May sweeps over but not officially tallied until late today, NBC has an insurmountable edge of 15.6 to ABC's 13.3 and CBS' 13.2.

For the 1985-86 season, NBC ranked first, with CBS second and ABC a distant third.

Last week, a repeat of "The Cosby Show" finished with a 28.4 rating. "Family Ties" had a 26.4 and "Perry Mason" had a 23.3. Next came the much-hyped conclusion of ABC's "Dynasty," which had a 21.9 rating — a tenth of a point over its season average.

In fifth place was the second part of NBC's miniseries, "On Wings of Eagles," followed by NBC's "Cheers," NBC's "Night Court," ABC's "Hotel" finale, NBC's "The Golden Girls," and CBS' "Falcon Crest" cliffhanger, in which an earthquake hit the vineyards. The "Falcon Crest" finale had a 17.9 rating, down from its 18.1 season average.

Nation's lowest-paid teacher leaving one-room school

McLEOD, N.D. (AP) — Janice Herbranson fought back tears last week and said goodbye to her three pupils and their parents in the one-room schoolhouse where her $6,300 salary brought her the title of the nation's lowest-paid teacher.

The 30-year-old school is closing. Two of her three pupils graduate to seventh grade and a larger school.

Mrs. Herbranson plans to move to Alaska, leaving behind the school where she taught for 20 years and the saloon she ran to supplement her income.

"When I walked to school this morning, I said a little prayer and said, 'Why do I need to feel this way?' It's a beautiful day," she said.

Mrs. Herbranson, 51, was identified as the nation's lowest-paid teacher in a 1983 survey by the National Education Association. She has gotten a $500 raise since then.

People in this tiny ranching community of 45 or 50 people about 60 miles southwest of Fargo say they couldn't afford to pay her more but can't bear to see her leave.

"I wish she wouldn't have to," sai Kari Gruba, 11, one of Mrs. Herbranson's pupils.

"Probably most teachers are more crabbier. She's much nicer and you get more attention," said another pupil, Tammy Sveum, 11.

Kari's 9-year-old brother, Kris, would be the only pupil left after summer vacation.

"I know she could have gone elsewhere and gotten far more the financial gain that other teachers get," said Tammy's father, Ron. "I loved the grade school here. I wouldn't trade it for anything."

The white, clapboard schoolhouse sits at the end of a dirt road next to a pasture and across a baseball park from the town's two churches.

Mrs. Herbranson rang the schoolhouse bell every morning at 9. She cooked her pupils breakfast and lunch every day.

She also taught them piano. Onher last day, they performed for their parents and the reporters and television cameramen who had come to record it.

A framed letter from President Reagan hangs on the classroom wall, near the faded painting of Abraham Lincoln.

Mrs. Herbranson did not get rich teaching in McLeod, but she got fame. It bothered her some, as she squeezed in interviews while helping her pupils color book covers for stories they had written.

"It keeps you from getting sad, when there's so much commotion."

Mrs. Herbranson has known sadness.

Her husband died in an airplane crash in 1971 and her a died in a fire three years later. Three sons live in town.

She later became an alcoholic, sought treatment and then became co-owner of the Sand Dune Saloon next to her house. She closes up at 10:30 or 11 every night so she can get enough sleep before school.

She is staying in town this summer and planning to take classes at a university next year. She hopes to start teaching in a one-room schoolhouse in Alaska in the fall of 1987.

Meantime, McLeod's schoolhouse can stay closed for two years before hearings must be held on disolving the school district, said Sheryl Dagman, Ramsey County school superintendent.

Mrs. Herbranson was asked to stay and teach the one pupil but she declined. Kris would be lonely by himself, she said.

But in the unlikely event the school reopens with more pupils?

"Would I come back? I can't answer that question," she said. "I can't dwell on that. Knowing me I would."

Navajo Indian language lends itself to poetry

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — Drawing on a tradition of storytelling and the richness of their tongue, Navajos are beginning to write poetry in the their own language, a 32-year-old Navajo poet says.

"There's a real strong sense of identity, a real strong sense of being Navajo in it," said Luci Tapahonso, a professor of American Studies at the University of New Mexico, who talked with Northern Arizona University students recently about her work.

"That's good," she said, "because until recently, many teachers told young Navajo people not to speak Navajo in class. If they wrote poetry, it was in English. But now they can write both in Navajo and in English."

Ms. Tapahonso says her poetry, some of which deals with contemporary issues "like racism in some of the border towns like Gallup and Farmington (N.M.)," receives attention "even when it is spoken in Navajo in places like Soho (London), in New York City and in West Hollywood.

"People there can recognize the rhythm in it. They know there's poetry there even if they can't understand it," she said.

Ms. Tapahonso says that young Navajos writing in their own language have trouble finding a forum for their work, although contacts among them are increasing.

"We have such a lot to say," she said. "We have a lot of stories, songs and prayers. Even with our sheep, you talk to them because they provide for you and are members of the family.

"Our language is very rich. That lends itself to imagination, to poetry.

"When your car is not working right, you say, in Navajo, 'My car is upset with me. I've done something wrong. My car is mad at me.'

"In English, you talk about putting 'gas' in your car. We don't have a word like that in Navajo, so we talk about feeding it 'mutton stew.'

"The car battery — that's the 'heart' of the car. If the battery goes dead, we say, 'The heart is dead.' The engine to us is the 'head' or 'brain' of the car. A lot of contemporary terms like these, we give in human terms."

Ms. Tapahonso, who is also co-host of a Navajo-language talk show in Albuquerque, N.M., said that she had began writing poetry as a child. She was raised on a sheep and goat farm, she said, amid family storytelling.

"My parents had such a brutal time in school," she said, "that they taught me what to do when I got there. To spare me the pain they suffered from the teachers because they only spoke Navajo, they taught me how to say my Social Security number in English, how to give my (tribal) census number.

"But even then, even though I knew basic English structure and could say, 'My name is Luci Tapahonso,' when I went to school, my entire English vocabulary really consisted of the words 'yes' and 'what.'

"Those words were all I could say to someone who wasn't Navajo for a long, long time."

Before long, however, Ms. Tapahonso said, she was writing poetry in English. Later she started writing some of her poetry in Navajo.

Two calves escape from slaughterhouse

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A 300-pound calf that escaped from a slaughterhouse became the uninvited guest of honor at a weekend cookout here and led its hosts on a wild chase through the city's south side.

Jimmy Gearhart of Columbus said he was playing croquet on the lawn of his south side home after a family cookout Monday when his brother-in-law Dana Evans said, " There goes a cow.' And I said, 'What?' He said, 'There goes a cow,' and I looked and sure enough, there was a cow.' "

The calf was one of two that went on the lam from Ohio Valley Beef and Veal in Columbus, a night watchman said. The other calf was also captured, he said.

Gearhart said he and Evans climbed onto the hood of a car, and, with someone else driving, chased the cantering calf a few blocks, where they managed to get close enough to attempt a capture.

He said he went for the calf's head and Evans got tails and held onto the animal until some neighborhood children arrived with a length of rope. The two men tied a noose and slipped it over the fugitive's head.

Luckily, Gearhart said, a truck driver from the slaughterhouse who had been searching for the black calf arrived and took custody.

Fish to be eaten raw should be prepared properly

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Are there worms in raw fish? A veterinarian I talked to at a cocktail party where sushi was served said he wouldn't feed raw fish to a dog.

A. Diseases associated with the ingestion of raw fish are on the rise in the U.S. as sushi, sashimi, ceviche, green herring, to name a few, become more popular. But this does not mean that if you eat raw fish you will get sick.

Glenna Ryan, an extension associate with the Division of Nutritional Sciences at Cornell University, advises that fish used for sashimi should be of premium quality and properly handled.

"I do not recommend the home preparation of raw fish," Ryan says. "Restaurants serving raw fish are usually aware of the possible hazards and take the necessary precautions. However, there are no guarantees."

One disease in question is anisakiasis, which is a parasitic roundworm infection. Effects can be mild or serious, it is difficult to diagnose and cannot be treated with medication. Referring to a Consumer Nutrition Alert newsletter published by Environmental Nutrition, Inc., the disease may often be misdiagnosed as appendicitis, peptic ulcer or even stomach cancer. It may be a week after ingestion before symptoms appear.

"Fish most often affected," states the newsletter, "are mackerel, herring, squid, sardines, bonito, salmon and other saltwater fish. The fresher the fish, the less likelihood of contracting anisakiasis because the larva move from the fish's stomach only after it is dead. Therefore, one preventive measure is to gut the fish as soon as they are caught."

Thorough freezing of the fish will kill the larva, with at least one to three days in a frozen state being required, depending on the size of the fish. Cooking, of course, kills everything, but cold smoking, salting and marinating are not always effective.

Q. How does one know if a ham is "fully cooked," "partially cooked" or "not cooked"? Occasionally they're marked, but usually they're not. Then I cook them to death. Shirley Wigglesworth, Mays Landing, N.J.

A. Ham is meat from the hind leg of a hog. Fresh ham is plain meat to which nothing has been done. It must be thoroughly cooked.

Hams labeled "cured" or "cured and smoked" must also be cooked unless the label indicates otherwise. Those hams you can eat without cooking first must be labeled "fully cooked." All canned hams are fully cooked. Read the label for instructions. It should say "fully cooked" or "precooked."

When labels don't indicate whether the hams need to be cooked or not, U.S. Department of Agriculture meat inspectors suggest that you assume such hams must be cooked before eating.

Q. When I was through shelling some cooked shrimp that I had bought in a fish market, I noticed that my fingers were tinged with an orange color. This had never happened to me before. Could there have been some sort of dye on the shrimp to make them more appealing? Wouldn't that be illegal?

A. It is highly unlikely the shrimp were dyed to enhance their color. Since shrimp have barely any color when fresh, you would have noticed a strange tint when you bought them. The pigments in the shell of cooked shrimp do not come out of the shell to any extent and certainly wouldn't stain your fingers when you peel the cooked shrimp.

"A better probability is that the color is from the eggs or ovary of the shrimp," says Robert Price, a seafood specialist with the University of California, Davis. Shrimp researchers at the Bodega Marine Laboratory in California agree.

"The eggs are attached to the underside of the tail," explains Dr. Price, "and the ovary is located partially inside the tail. Both turn pink to orange after cooking, and both contain high concentrations of oil which could rub off on your fingers while you were peeling the shrimp."

Q. I used to buy Dannon Yogurt because it came in cardboard cups, but they've changed to plastic and I wonder why.

A. Four years ago I asked the Dannon Company why they contained their yogurt in cardboard, and Dorothy Young said, "Dannon's containers, unlike plastic ones, are completely biodegradable. Dannon has always been concerned with the preservation of the environment. Plastic containers are not biodegradable."

So now I asked the Dannon Company why their yogurt is contained in plastic, and Laurie Abramson, director of consumer relations, tells us that plastic protects the quality and freshness of the yogurt more effectively, and the plastic cups have a bright, contemporary look "which so many people find pleasing to the eye."

Dannon's previously stated concern with the environment appears to have been relinquished in favor of the bright, contemporary look — not to mention the fact that plastic containers are considerably cheaper to produce than paper.

Tasters enjoy 'evening with pops'

By LINDA ANDERSON

The old slogan "There's always room for Jell-O" doesn't mean exactly the same thing as it did 25 years ago when it was new. Then, Jell-O just meant fruit-flavored gelatin.

Now, however, in addition to the regular gelatin, Jell-O may mean pudding, cheese cake, frozen whipped gelatin on a stick, frozen fruit juice or frozen pudding pops.

Even the Jell-O's subdivisions are sub-divided. Fruit-flavored gelatin comes in a rainbow of flavors, whipped gelatin on a stick has almost as many flavors as ordinary unfrozen gelatin and pudding pops are available not only in chocolate and vanilla, but in chocolate chips, swirls and chocolate covered.

In doing a Jell-O taste-test, the adult, teen and children testers had to decide exactly which Jell-O product to test, and then what flavor of that particular product — not an easy decision when all the Jell-Os look good.

We chose to check out chocolate-covered Jell-O Pudding Pops — not because of anything we had read or heard, but because they looked good. (I'm sorry, Bill Cosby, I think you are a terrific comedian, but I'd rather see you in your television series than in TV commercials.)

Jell-O chocolate covered pudding pops — the box we bought, anyway — come in two flavors — chocolate-covered chocolate and chocolate-covered vanilla pudding. Label advertising claims the product has "all the goodness of real Jell-O pudding frozen on a stick," a "unique taste combination only Jell-O Pudding Pops could give you. Rich, creamy Jell-O pudding on the inside and a new hard milk chocolatey shell on the outside that crunches when you bite into it" and "only 130 calories per bar."

Label nutrition information lists each bar as containing 4 percent of the protein and riboflavin, 6 percent of the calcium and 2 percent of the magnesium suggested in the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance. Other nutrients are found in different percentages in different flavored bars.

Price for a 21-ounce box of 12 pudding bars was $2.89, which means each bar costs about 22 cents each. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

The tasting part of the test was a big success. All four of the kids loved the bars, though, they liked the chocolate-covered chocolate better than the vanilla bars. Nevertheless, the product disappeared at near-record speed from our family freezer. In fact, they went so fast that one of the small children thought the box only contained four bars — one for each kid — because she didn't realize how fast her big sisters had polished off their share.

I even got to taste one, and they are good — even if they are too expensive. I have been requested to buy them again. I probably will.

Buying in bulk boon to budget

By MARIAN FARR

Foods sold in bulk may be less expensive and less safe than packaged products.

A recent study by the U.S. Department of Agriculture shows packaged food can cost six to seven times as much as the same food in bulk.

There are some items, however, that are more expensive in bulk than a generic brand or specially-priced national brand.

Consumers on a tight food budget should consider quickly browsing through the bulk foods section before shopping, writing down the prices of needed items and then comparing them with unit prices of packaged items.

Price-conscious consumers aren't the only ones buying bulk foods. Some singles and small families like being able to buy only what they know they can use.

Other shoppers buy small amounts of bulk products as a sample to avoid buying a large amount of something they may not like.

Many consumers also find the self-service feature of bulk foods appealing and like the fact that they can see what they are buying.

Bulk foods can also have some negatives too. Since bulk foods lack the protection provided by commercial packaging, they can become contaminated.

Contamination can come from the store management failing to establish sanitary practices and carefully supervise bulk food operations.

Consumers may also contribute to the problem by not using dispensing utensils correctly or allowing their children to touch, handle or play with bulk foods in the supermarket.

Shoppers should also realize that some products, such as dried fruit, may not lend themselves to lengthy storage in the plastic bags provided at the supermarket. Having to buy a supply of special containers for food storage may defeat the cost advantage of the bulk foods.

Bulk foods are also at a disadvantage when it comes to consumer information, since they usually do not carry open dating or nutrition labeling while many packaged products do.

It's probably to the consumer's advantage to shop at stores where bulk food arrangements are clean and well-maintained, where ingredient labeling is provided on the bulk food bins and where packaged foods are unit-priced for easier comparison shopping.

Auctions source of bargains

Copley News Service

Your palms sweat, your heart pounds, until you hear the auctioneer shout those magic words, "Going, going, gone" and that coveted piece is yours.

Nabbing a steal at a country auction can be enormously satisfying, yet many people shy away from auctions because they don't understand how they work. But by learning a little bit about the auction process, you can overcome your fears, reap bargains and have fun in the process, says Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Start by reading the auction page in your Sunday paper and circling sales that interest you. If you've been frequenting antique stores, you'll have some idea of market prices. Also, many inexpensive price references, like "Kovel's Price Guide," will help you judge values.

Take along a pen and pad, and a folding chair (at many auctions, seats aren't provided). It's a good idea to leave your checkbook behind and carry just a small amount of cash. Otherwise, you may get caught up in the excitement and pay too much for something or buy an item you don't want.

When choosing an auction, make sure you can attend the auction preview; it may be held a day or even an hour before the auction starts. This is your only opportunity to go over the merchandise, so examine each piece closely.

Auctions that feature fine-quality antiques sometimes print an inexpensive catalog. Buy a catalog and record the prices. You then create your own guide for future sales.

The bidding process can be frightening, but with a little experience you can get a handle on it. Auctioneers require potential bidders to register and obtain a bidding number before the sale starts. Once you've registered, a tally of all your purchases will be recorded against your number. To register you'll need identification — a driver's license is generally acceptable. Some auctions allow you to reserve a seat when you register, but most have a first-come, first-served policy.

Because the actual bidding can be fast and furious, attend a couple of auctions as an observer first to get a feel for the method and pace. Auctioneers always try to get a high opening bid, so you shouldn't open on the first suggestion. Never bid on an item you have not examined. Items are generally sold "as is."

Don't worry about bidding against experienced dealers. Dealers need to make a profit on items purchased at auction, so they won't pay full market value.

Many of you have probably received a call inviting you to buy a booster membership decal from the Texas State Troopers Association. Before you decide to help law enforcement by buying a decal, you need to know more about the organization.

The organization is relatively new. It was chartered on Jan. 18, 1984. It is recognized by the IRS as a 501 (c) (5) labor organization. This means any money given to the organization cannot be deducted as a charitable donation.

According to information supplied by the organization, its main purpose is twofold:

1) to lobby in behalf of Texas State Troopers with the state legislature; and,

2) to provide legal assistance whenever actions taken by a trooper while on duty result in lawsuits and troopers receive unfair treatment from administrators.

A promotion company is handling the sale of decals for a percentage of the gross revenue. The money received by the Texas State Troopers Association from the sale of the decals will be used for general expenses.

OUR SINCERE THANKS FROM:
The 1986 Graduating Seniors and the 1986 Graduation Party Committee

DEAR ABBY

Thank-yous required for most gifts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Last Christmas a man I thoroughly despise left a gaily wrapped gift of lingerie in my vehicle without my knowledge. I did not thank him because I knew to phone him would encourage him. During the holiday season, you stated in your column that a thank-you for a gift was not necessary because a gift is presented with no strings attached. I agreed with you wholeheartedly.

Recently, you stated: "There is no excuse for failure to acknowledge a gift, however useless."

You are useless, and I'd thank you to keep your mouth shut while your brain is inoperative. — JOYCE MAYFIELD, BELLE PLAINE, KAN.

P.S. You may use my name. It really is Joyce Mayfield.

DEAR MS. MAYFIELD: I do not recall ever having stated that a thank-you for a gift is not necessary. I have always stressed the importance of acknowledging gifts — and promptly, assuming, of course, that the gift was given in good faith. (Most gifts are.)

Had I been asked if a lady should acknowledge a "gaily wrapped gift of lingerie left in her vehicle by a man she thoroughly despises," my usual advice would not have applied.

DEAR ABBY: Help us, please. My husband and I own a business and employ 12 people. One of our employees — I'll call him Peter — lives with a woman I'll call Patricia. They're not married — they just live together. Patricia has a daughter (I'll call Sue) who is being married this summer. I hardly know Patricia as I have seen her only a few times, and I have never met Sue.

My husband and I, and every one of our employees, have received an invitation to Sue's wedding. Today Patricia called and invited me to a bridal shower she is having for Sue. Then she asked me to call all the women who work for us as well as the wives and girlfriends of our male employees and invite them to the shower, too. I was shocked, but didn't know what to say at the time.

Abby, I would feel very uncomfortable inviting these people to a shower for someone I don't even know. Also, if a person is invited to a shower and doesn't go, does she have to send a gift?

And correct me if I am wrong, but aren't showers supposed to be given by friends — not relatives of the bride?

How should I handle this? — IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR IN: You are correct. Showers should be given by friends — not relatives. Simply tell Patricia that you would not feel comfortable inviting others to the shower she is giving for her daughter. Also, an invitation that has been declined does not require a gift. Gifts are always optional.

DEAR ABBY: Why is loud better? My husband and I are often invited places where music is played either by a live band or a disc jockey. Invariably the music is so loud that conversation is impossible unless we shout at each other! We find ourselves having to repeat everything we say in order to communicate.

Whatever happened to soft background music, or occasionally no music at all? — E.Z. IN TARZANA, CALIF.

DEAR E.Z.: I don't know what happened to soft background music, but I wish it would be brought back. We are raising a generation of young people who are destined to suffer a serious hearing loss — the fallout from turning up the volume at decibels that actually damage the eardrum.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Author offers techniques for selling own home

Hearst News Service

Although the lowest mortgage rates in years are tempting many home buyers into the market, making it a "sellers" market, real estate experts know that packaging is as important as substance when it comes to getting top dollar.

Bruce A. Percelay, co-author of "Packaging Your Home for Profit," says sellers can apply powerful Madison Avenue marketing techniques directly to selling their homes.

Percelay, whose Cambridge, Mass.-based marketing consulting company caters to large-scale real estate developers, says he read 32 books on how to sell a house before he tackled his own. For the past seven years, he says, his system has helped sellers in Massachusetts outperform the market.

In great detail, Percelay outlines how to use certain colors, sounds and even smells to enhance your house and details inexpensive cosmetic improvements that make a house or condominium seem most valuable.

In addition, his five-step system also teaches sellers how to scout out the competition by comparing your home with others on the market, how to determine whether your house would best appeal to first-time buyers or those trading up or down, how to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of your home, how to eliminate "territorial anxiety" that could put off prospective buyers and how to effectively package your product.

"The most common mistake people make is trying to impose their taste on buyers," Percelay says. "They think what they would like, the buyer would like." On the contrary, a highly personalized decor with other than neutral colors or wallpaper can actually make it more difficult for prospective buyers to visualize your house as theirs.

"Decorate with a neutral palette," he advises. However, that doesn't mean total redecorating before putting your home on the market. But if your entryway is wallpapered in a very personal way, "it is worth the trouble to strip and paint the wall a neutral color. If your home, however, is decorated in an intensely personal taste — bold floral wallpaper, dark or bright colors, it may be a good idea to let an outside impartial group come in. If your decor makes them uncomfortable, some repainting may be in order."

You'll also want to go over your house with a fine-tooth comb for any signs of wear and tear or areas where inexpensive improvements might make your house more appealing. Does your front door need a new brass knocker? Has your mailbox rusted? Would a new light fixture in the foyer brighten a dark area? Has the dining room paint faded? Would a fence block an unpleasant view?

"People don't realize the impact of small details, but buyers think, 'If they can't pay attention to small details, what about major systems?' If the doorbell doesn't work, what does that say about the heating system, the plumbing? If the basement looks clean, people will feel good about it."

Color can be an inexpensive and effective packaging tool. The right colors can suggest newness or implied Old World charm where it is appropriate. Light colors make areas seem more expansive, and light-reflecting colors add brightness to a room. Dark colors make spaces close, but can correct cosmetic flaws in walls and ceilings.

Strong personal color statements can cause territorial anxiety and make it more difficult for the buyer to visualize the your home as his. Stick with "safe" neutral colors like whites, beiges and soft pastels.

Consider repainting. It's easy to become desensitized to dull or faded paint. When repainting, choose premium-quality paint — the difference in results will far exceed the difference in cost.

A bright sunny room can appear larger and affect a buyer's perceptions. Schedule tours on sunny days, if possible. If not, make sure the lights are on. Make sure all windows are clean and that all bulbs are working and are of high enough wattage. The quality and look of lighting fixtures are important.

Unpleasant sounds and smells can create anxiety.

Inexpensive improvements can help sell house

Hearst News Service

Here are but a few of the dozens of do-it-yourself improvements (for under $100) that Bruce A. Percelay and Peter Arnold include in "Packaging Your Home for Profit:"

■ Exterior: Repaint the doorway. Install door molding. Put potted plants by the front door. Paint the lamppost or mailbox.

■ Entrance area: Add chair-rail or cornice molding. Install a new central lighting fixture. Add raised-panel molding to a plain entry door. Mirror a wall or wall section.

■ Living room: Shampoo the carpet and put out fresh-cut flowers. Install brass, procelain or cut-glass doorknobs. Repaint the room. Install chair-rail molding.

The scent of cleanliness is another positive smell and lemon is one of the most universally accepted smells of "freshness."

Political violence claims almost 2,000

WORLD

By BRYNA BRENNAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An American human rights organization said today that political slayings and disappearances claimed almost 2,000 people in El Salvador last year, a relatively low number compared to some previous years.

The New York-based Americas Watch said the U.S.-trained armed forces or rightist death squads were responsible for 1,740 of the killings or disappearances, and blamed leftist guerrillas for the rest.

Americas Watch organization made the findings in a reported titled "Settling Into Routine: Human Rights Abuses in Duarte's Second Year." The report was issued days before President Jose Napoleon Duarte, a Christian Democrat, completes his second year in office on Sunday.

Americas Watch has issued reports critical of human rights abuses in countries ranging from right-wing Paraguay to Nicaragua, which is governed by the leftist Sandinistas.

Of El Salvador in 1985, it said, "by comparison to what went (on) before, the numbers of deaths are no longer so sensationally large." In 1981, at the height of the civil war, 13,000 people were killed out of a population of 5 million in this Massachusetts-sized nation, the report said.

An estimated 60,000 people, the majority of them civilians, have been killed since the war began in 1979, according to the Roman Catholic Church and several independent human rights organizations.

Americas Watch said it obtained its 1985 figures from human rights organizations.

Except in the case of victims of the leftist guerrillas, the organization did not provide specific figures of the number of people missing as opposed to the number of people known to be dead.

The report blamed rightist death squads for killing 136 people in 1985, the lowest number in the last seven years, adding, "This remains an appalling rate (for) such killings by any standards...except (that) it has become customary (in)...El Salvador."

The report said the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front guerrillas assassinated 97 people last year compared to 66 in 1984. It said another 31 civilians were killed by mines believed planted by the rebels and 45 were kidnapped and still missing.

It left the blame for the large majority of the killings and disappearances, the remaining 1,604, with the Salvadoran military. Because the report only became public early today, there was no immediate response from the government.

Quoting a group of civilian men captured and mistreated by the army, the report said: "They were placed in a hole and tear-gassed. They ran out of the hole, amid the laughter of the soldiers. Eleven of them were placed in a little house, with no roof, questioned, and blindfolded, with their hands above their necks and index fingers together for several hours."

In what it called "an encouraging development," the report said the armed forces in March 1986 captured seven wounded guerrillas and turned them over to the Red Cross.

But it also said the military promoted two officers whose names were on a list of rightist death-squad members that Vice President George Bush had provided the government in 1983.

The report criticized the Reagan administration for continuing to provide financial aid to Duarte's government. The United States provided Duarte's government with $500 million in military and economic aid last year.

"The Department of State has a vested interest in promoting the perception that human rights in El Salvador have not only improved drastically but are no longer a problem," the report said.

"Congressional pressure on the government of El Salvador for human rights improvements has clashed with the Reagan administration's interest in a military victory over the guerrillas," the report said.

Chernobyl death toll rises to 21, doctor says

MOSCOW (AP) — The Chernobyl nuclear accident has claimed 21 lives, including those of 11 people who died despite receiving bone marrow transplants, a Soviet doctor said in a statement released today in West Germany.

Dr. Yevgeny Chazov, Soviet co-president of the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, issued the statement as the group, winner of the the 1985 Nobel Peace Prize, opened four days of meetings in Cologne.

The figures provided by Chazov raised the official death toll in the April 26 accident by two from the previous figure of 19.

Chazov said two people were killed immediately in the fire and explosion at the atomic power station 80 miles north of Kiev and that 19 others died later in hospitals. He said 299 people had "suffered radiation injuries and burns.

Of the dead, Chazov said in a written statement given to reporters, "11 had received bone marrow transplants," a technique employed to try to treat radiation victims. Large doses of radiation destroy bone marrow, which can be fatal.

Chazov, who was summarizing a Soviet report on the accident to the physicians' anti-war group, said the casualty toll was "as of the date of our departure from Moscow."

He did not specify when he left the Soviet capital, but an official from the international doctors group who spoke on condition he not be identified said Chazov arrived at Bonn-Cologne airport on Wednesday night. The official could not confirm that Chazov had come directly from Moscow.

The Soviet doctor's statement said 30 of those injured were in serious condition, and that 89 had been released from hospitals. He said a total of 19 people had received bone marrow transplants, but that the procedure — intended to replace bone marrow destroyed by radiation — had not proven very effective.

An American bone marrow specialist, Dr. Robert P. Gale, is in Moscow to help treat the victims of the nuclear disaster.

On Wednesday, the official Soviet news agency Novosti indicated 1,000 people were injured in the Chernobyl accident, including residents evacuated from an 18-mile radius of the facility.

However, a telex sent today to The Associated Press in Moscow said the figure of 1,000 "refers to people examined and not to cases of radiation sickness."

Valery Neyev of the agency's North American Department said the telex was intended to serve as a formal correction to the Novosti report telexed to the AP and other Western news agencies on Wednesday night.

Novosti's English-language report Wednesday said a special team was created to screen the injured.

The original report said: "Four hours after the disaster, a special medical team was ready to fly from Moscow to the nuclear power station. Within 24 hours, they selected the hundred most serious cases out of a thousand. The third and last batch of patients now treated in Moscow are from among the evacuees."

Novosti editor Anna Nikolayeva, author of the report distributed Wednesday, told the AP by telephone that her original account had been poorly translated.

She said the Russian-language version, which was not made available to the AP, specified the 1,000 referred to people examined.

The AP had telephoned numbers for four different officials at the Novosti agency on Wednesday night seeking clarification of Ms. Nikolayeva's dispatch before reporting that it indicated there were 1,000 people injured in the Chernobyl disaster.

The only person reached at the agency was a woman who did not identify herself, but said she could not comment on the report.

Ms. Nikolayeva also said Dr. Angelina Guskova, chief radiologist at Moscow's Hospital No. 6, had specified that none of the patients hospitalized were residents of the evacuated zone around the plant. All the patients worked at the power station site, Ms. Nikolayeva said.

Today's telex stated that Ms. Guskova had said those hospitalized "were the employees, who were on the station's territory when the accident occurred. But since they did not show any signs of injury at first, they were evacuated with their families.

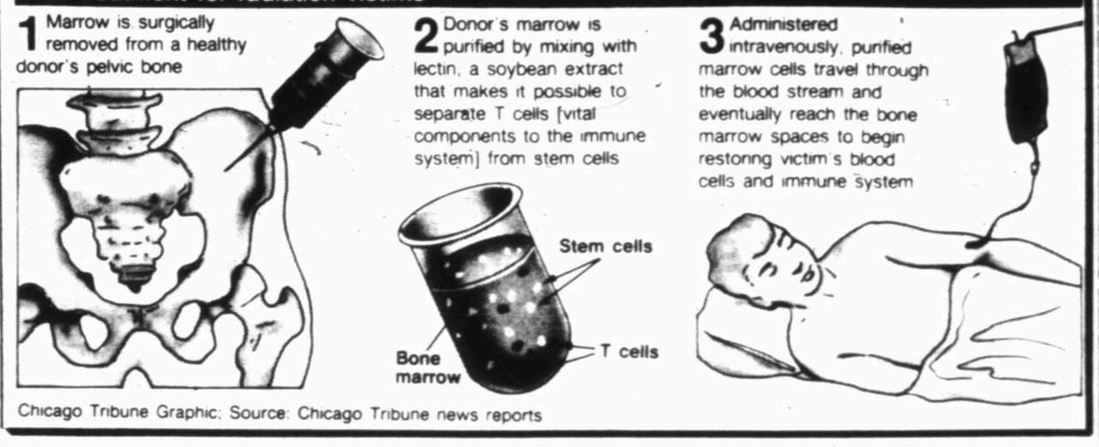

"As soon as they showed the first sign of sickness they were selected by local doctors on the evacuated territory and brought to Moscow," the telex said.

Moscow radio said two weeks ago that doctors examined all 92,000 evacuees, who did not begin leaving until 36 hours after the accident, and found none with illnesses related to radiation.

Earlier this week, Yevgeny Velikhov, a prominent physicist and one of those directing decontamination work at the Chernobyl plant told a news conference that 19 people had died from the disaster.

West Bank Arabs find work scarce in 'slave market'

By DAN IZENBERG

JERUSALEM, Israel (AP) — Hundreds of men line up before dawn near the dividing line between the Arab and Jewish sectors of Jerusalem looking for day work from Israeli employees. Many nowadays aren't finding it.

The decline of jobs on what has become known as the "slave market" is indicative of a growing employment and underemployment problem in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, seized by Israel in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

A Bank of Israel study cautions that greater trouble could lie ahead as the Arab population grows and more and more Arab university graduates enter the job market.

The bank study blames the rise in joblessness partly on Israel's own slumping economy and on the fall in world petroleum prices, which is forcing many West Bank and Gaza Palestinians back home from jobs in the oil-producing states of the Persian Gulf.

"These are hard times," said Ahmed Mahmoud, an unskilled laborer standing on the "slave market" line one recent morning. "I didn't make a penny this week. There's been no work all year."

"I stand here until four or five in the afternoon and then go home empty-handed," said Musa Tarawe, 39, adding that a few months ago laborers could earn the equivalent of $20 to $25 a day, a sizable sum in the area. "Now whenever someone comes by offering work, everybody pounces on him."

Wages for such unskilled workers have fallen to about 13.5 shekels, or $9 a day, the minimum wage in Israel.

About 90,000 Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza Strip work in Israel and 150,000 others are employed in the occupied territories, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics.

The Bank of Israel study, published in March, said 5.3 percent of the Palestinian labor force in the West Bank was out of work during the first nine months of 1985. Between 1967 and 1982, the rate never exceeded 2 percent.

Israel's unemployment rate at 7.2 percent is higher, but the bank's figures for Palestinian joblessness do not reflect growing underemployment — those who work only a few days a week, farm marginal land or work at menial jobs for which they are overqualified.

Dan Zaccai, author of the study for the state-owned bank which is similar to the U.S. Federal Reserve Board, wrote that since 1980 the West Bank economy slipped into stagnation, following a boom in Israel that boosted Palestinian wages and brought in new technology.

Zaccai said the cause of the stagnation lies in the West Bank's economic dependency on Israel, Jordan and the Arab oil states, all of which are suffering an economic slump.

"With the slowdown in the (Arab) economies, the rapid economic development in Judea, Samaria (the West Bank) and Gaza was halted...because no independent or diversified economic infrastructure was created in these areas," Zaccai's report states.

It adds that 20,000 West Bank Arabs worked abroad during the peak of the oil boom in the 1970s but that number has fallen to 7,000. In addition, Western economic experts say, Arab aid to Palestinians has declined, although it is uncertain by how much, after peaking at $450 million a year during the oil boom.

As opportunities decrease, seven universities and colleges in the West Bank turn out more than 3,000 graduates each year.

U.S., France, Britain to file protest over passport rule

BERLIN (AP) — A West German radio station reported today that the United States, France and Britain plan to file a formal protest with the Soviet Union over a new East German regulation requiring diplomats to show passports when entering or leaving East Berlin.

Hessischer Rundfunk, a public broadcasting station in Frankfurt, said the three countries would make the protest in Berlin later today, but did not cite its sources.

A spokesman for the U.S. diplomatic mission in West Berlin, who spoke on condition he not be further identified, could not confirm the report, but said U.S. Ambassador to Bonn Richard Burt was meeting today with Vyacheslav I. Kochemasav, the Soviet ambassador to East Germany.

He said Burt planned to make a statement afterward.

NATO foreign ministers meeting in Halifax, Nova Scotia, also plan to discuss the issue today.

Under a rotating agreement with the British and French, the United States this month is handling Berlin affairs with the Soviets.

The dispute is over a rule instituted Monday requiring East Berlin-based diplomats to show their passports rather than identification cards when crossing between East Berlin and West Berlin.

East German officials have said the policy was aimed at thwarting terrorism, but Western diplomats have speculated it was designed to gain recognition of the Berlin Wall as an international border. The West considers the wall a demarcation line, but not a border.

The ambassadors of 10 NATO nations met at West Germany's mission in East Berlin Wednesday to discuss the policy, and sources said U.S., British and French diplomats based in East Berlin planned to defy passport controls if they are imposed by East German authorities.

Idea that humans innately violent 'myth,' scientists say

BY RICHARD LORANT

SEVILLE, Spain (AP) — The notion that human beings have an innate aggressive streak that makes war inevitable is a myth, an international commission of scientists maintains.

Experts in 20 different academic fields issued their finding in a Statement on Violence, which resulted from studies indicating that young people who believe in instinctive human aggression are less likely to work for peace.

The statement held that it was "scientifically incorrect to say that we have inherited a tendency to make war from animals; that war or violence is genetically programmed into human nature; that natural selection has favored aggressive behavior in human beings; that we have a 'violent brain' and that war is instinctive."

"Just as 'wars begin in the minds of men,' peace also begins in our minds," it added.

"The same species that invented war is capable of inventing peace. The responsibility lies with each of us."

The statement was issued at the end of a recent Colloquium on Brain and Aggression sponsored here by the UNESCO Committee of Spain.

"There is no scientific evidence to support the view that, other things being equal, humans will behave aggressively," said Rowell Huesman, a professor of psychology at the University of Illinois and a conference participant.

"We teach our children to be violent and we can change that."

Whatever war's causes, and theorists agree that there are many, the scientists held that the potentially fatal problem of human violence will not be solved overnight.

The tendency to liken human behavior to that of animals and to view nations as magnified individuals adds to the belief in war as a sad inevitability, said animal behaviorist J. Paul Scott of Bowling Green State University in Ohio.

Speaking about tension between the United States and Libya, Scott added that it was too easy to put the conflict solely on terms of two leaders or even two nations.

Today, the Audi 5000S becomes even easier to handle. $298 a month*.

The Audi 5000S sedan's ability to negotiate roadways crisply and efficiently is certainly one reason to admire it. That you can negotiate a lease of just $298 a month on this fine European luxury sedan is all the more reason to acquire it.

Performance aside, this 1986 Audi 5000S sedan comes with many standard features that increase comfort without altering the lease price. Electronic climate control, cruise control, power windows and door locks, AM/FM stereo cassette, and automatic transmission make this limited time offer a tempting invitation to unlimited driving pleasure.

A closer look will prove what words cannot. Come in for a test drive and complete lease details. Program ends May 31, 1986. And drive away in an Audi 5000S sedan at a lease price that is, well, easy to handle.

*This offer is available only from a participating Audi Leasing dealer through May 31, 1986 as a 60-month, closed-end lease. No purchase option. No down payment is required. First month $298 payment and $300 security deposit are required in advance. Monthly payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price and special lease terms exteded by VCI Leasing. Total lease payments $17,880.00 plus 10¢ per mile over 75,000. Registration, local fees, tax, options additional.
