CAF museum lands $890,000 grant

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

■ Craddick meets with oil group/4A

The American Airpower Heritage Museum has been awarded $890,000 in funding from the Texas Legislature to expand its educational exhibits, programs and aircraft displays.

Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland was on hand for Thursday's announcement. "I am impressed with what they have done and just hope they can continue to grow," he said following a tour of museum exhibits in Confederate Air Force headquarters at Midland International Airport.

The museum has developed into "more of a hands-on type museum for people to go through rather than just looking at pictures," said Craddick, who noted that the Texas Legislature "thought it would be a plus to all of Texas to see the museum expand and grow educationally."

Similar to the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, the American Airpower Heritage Museum is a major tourist attraction in West Texas and, particularly in that regard, is eco-

Angry Clinton tries to soften base-list blow

■ President gives grudging approval to panel's plan, but delays for five years the closing of San Antonio's Kelly, California's McClellan.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Pounding his lectern, President Clinton denounced a base closing list Thursday for the damage it would do to California and Texas, but then approved the package with a promise to save jobs in those states. He delayed the outright closing of a big base in each state for five years.

With the White House scrambling to control the political fallout in two big electoral states, Clinton approved a list that closes 79 bases and realigns 26 others across the country. Unless Congress rejects the package — considered highly unlikely — it will become law by the end of summer.

In terms of numbers of jobs lost, the blow falls most heavily on California and Texas where two Air Force maintenance depots that Clinton originally wanted spared are to be closed down.

California, the biggest electoral prize in next year's presidential election, would lose McClellan Air Force Base in Sacramento. All told, almost half the jobs lost in this year's base closure round would come from California even though only 15 percent of the military is stationed there.

Texas would lose Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio. Of the 18,000 employees at the base, 61 percent are Hispanic. Clinton said that "could virtually wipe out the Hispanic middle class" in the city.

"It will have a devastating impact," he said.

Because of the impact on local communities, and not for political reasons, Clinton said, he was working on a plan to convert some of the jobs at the California and Texas bases over to the private

Marital mistake: Wife is no lady

■ Man who masqueraded as woman faces charges of bilking husband.

By Hilary Groutage

BOUNTIFUL, Utah — A missing-person report filed by a husband anxious about his wife uncovered the shocking truth: The "wife" was actually a man who is accused of taking the husband for up to $40,000 during their 3 1/2-year marriage.

Felix Urioste is in jail on $20,000 bail on fraud charges, and Bruce Jensen is confused, embarrassed and broke. Jensen told police he didn't know his wife was a man until officers convinced him.

"I feel pretty stupid," Jensen, 39, told the Standard-Examiner of Ogden.

The deception — reminiscent of the Broadway drama "M. Butterfly" — unraveled when Urioste, 34, was arrested in Las Vegas for using 33 credit cards that were fraudulently obtained in the names of Bruce and Leasa Jensen and others. At the time, Urioste was traveling as a bearded man.

Prosecutor Bill McGuire said Jensen was "just incredibly naive."

Bush defends Rangers, says he'll make changes if needed

By Chip Brown

AUSTIN— With allegations of sexual harassment and racial slurs dogging the Texas Rangers, Gov. George W. Bush on Thursday defended the elite law enforcement group.

The governor added, however, that if changes are needed, he will make them.

"I am not going to tolerate racism or sexism or discrimination, and I know that most Rangers feel that way," Bush said. "They want the agency to be viewed as a modern agency. If there needs to be change, there will be change."

The Associated Press reported Wednesday that two Rangers were suspended and placed on probation last year for allegedly making sexual and racial slurs against the first female black Ranger, Sgt. Christine Nix, of Waco.

Ortiz defense asks court to deny searches while judge vacations

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel

"We respectfully urge that this is a matter best left to the determination of the judge who will try this case, and that your honor decline to issue any search warrant in Judge Hyde's absence," according to the letter written by H.W. "Woody" Leverett to 318th District Court Judge Dean Rucker.

The letter to Rucker was filed Tuesday in the capital murder case of Ortiz. Ortiz, 41, is charged in the Feb. 10 sexual assault, kidnapping and slaying of 10-year-old Julianne Powell.

France calls for help to save 'safe zones'

N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — France called on the United States and Britain on Thursday to join it in military operations to save other U.N.-designated "safe zones" in Bosnia from the fate of Srebrenica, which Bosnian Serb forces overran practically without a fight on Wednesday.

A statement from President Jacques Chirac's office said that if France's partners were not ready to commit their forces to protecting the besieged enclaves, it would "draw all the consequences" and pull its 4,000 peacekeepers out of Bosnia.

France said it would make available troops from its additional 4,000-man contingent in the rapid reaction force that France, Britain, and other countries are establishing in Bosnia to avoid debacles like the one this week, when lightly armed peacekeepers were helpless against a Serbian advance. Those new forces, which will include some 10,000 soldiers with heavy weapons and helicopters, should be largely in place in Bosnia next week.

Speaking of Gen. Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb military commander who marched into Srebrenica with his troops and captured tens of thousands of Muslim civilians as well as more than 400 Dutch peacekeepers, Gen. Philippe Morillon, a member of the French General Staff, said on Thursday night: "We have to declare war on Mladic, or get out."

What Chirac appears to be proposing represents a fundamental change in the French position through three years of the Bosnian conflict: this is the closest any European country has come to suggesting that U.N. troops take on the Serbs directly on the ground if necessary, not just with NATO air strikes, to protect the Muslim enclaves.

In an interview, French Defense Minister Charles Millon said: "We expect the United States to join with France in guaranteeing security for the civilian populations in Bosnia who look to us to provide it. We do not expect American troops on the ground. What we want from them is air cover and air and helicopter transport."

Up to now, the United States has provided air support, through NATO, for imperiled peacekeepers and has said it would provide ground troops only to support an established peace or to support the extraction or withdrawal of peacekeepers. Meeting the French demand for active air and helicopter transport would involve deeper potential involvement in combat.

In response to the French proposals, Britain's foreign secretary, Malcolm Rifkind, issued this statement Thursday night: "I agree that if there is a practical and realistic way to help the enclaves in Bosnia, this needs to be seriously considered. We have asked the French government to give us their detailed ideas on how to take this forward."

Chirac's statement did not repeat his earlier call for troops to retake Srebrenica from its Bosnian Serb occupiers, a call rejected by Rifkind Wednesday as impractical.

Nor was it clear whether Chirac was proposing to keep all five of the other "safe areas" designated by the U.N. safe from attack. Besides Sarajevo, they are Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde, and Bihac; Zepa is already under Serb bombardment this week.

If Chirac is determined to get out of Bosnia in any case, making an offer he knows his allies would refuse would take him out on the moral high ground. But the new president has pushed a relatively aggressive policy on Bosnia since his election last May, and in an incident that month, he authorized French peacekeeping troops to actively fight the Serbs to retake lost ground.

The French initiative came after sharp attacks by Millon and Foreign Minister Herve de Charette on U.N. passivity in the face of the Bosnian Serb attack that overwhelmed 400 Dutch peacekeepers in Srebrenica.

"Ultimately, they are becoming accomplices to what we have always rejected," de Charette said, referring to the U.N. peacekeeping force in general. "In that case, it would be better to leave," he said.

A communique from Chirac's office on Thursday evening said that the fall of Srebrenica was a major defeat for the United Nations, the NATO alliance, and all democracies, one that opened the door for the fall of other "safe zones." "It is thus absolutely necessary to put a firm halt to the abandonment of the enclaves with firm and limited military action."

France, the communique said, had made contact with its principal allies, and Millon said these were the United States and Britain. Britain is also providing 4,000 to 5,000 new troops for the rapid reaction force in Bosnia. The United States has provided air support through the NATO alliance for U.N. operations and has pledged up to 25,000 troops to help the peacekeepers withdraw from Bosnia if they need help to do so.

Yeltsin works from hospital, Kremlin says

MOSCOW (AP) — An "optimistic" Boris Yeltsin was working from his hospital room, sticking to a no-salt diet and planning to resume his normal schedule next week, the Kremlin said Thursday.

The message of business-as-usual, despite the president's heart trouble, was underscored by the announcement that Yeltsin's No. 2, Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, was going ahead with a trip to Siberia on Thursday night.

Yeltsin spoke to Chernomyrdin by telephone Thursday evening and was briefed on the trip, peace talks in breakaway Chechnya and other topics, news agencies reported.

The 64-year-old president was rushed to the Central Clinical Hospital on Tuesday after suffering chest pains. Symptoms described by the Kremlin indicate he probably has a form of heart disease called unstable angina, in which narrowing of arteries diminishes the blood supply to the heart.

Aides say Yeltsin is expected to remain in the hospital until Monday. Parliament speaker Ivan Rybkin said Yeltsin plans to meet on Tuesday with leaders of the lower house of parliament, the Interfax news agency reported.

Presidential spokesman Sergei Medvedev said Yeltsin was signing documents and maintaining "regular links with his aides and top state officials." He said Yeltsin was in good condition and had a good appetite.

"Boris Nikolayevich feels optimistic and asked his aides not to change his work schedule for next week," he said.

LANDS: State awards $890,000 grant to museum

nomically viable, Craddick said.

"Texas benefits, too," he said. "We benefit from tourism. The Permian Basin benefits from tourism. Those are economic dollars for the state as well as this region."

The museum's educational funding was its second grant through Midland College, a state agency, and with the efforts of Craddick. In 1993, the Texas Legislature awarded the museum $500,000.

In effect, the museum's historical exhibits, library and other resources become an extension of Midland College's educational programs. And the maintenance of the CAF's historic aircraft, which the CAF strives to keep airworthy, becomes an extension of Midland College's Aviation Technology program at the airport.

Bob Rice, executive director of the American Airpower Heritage Group, which includes the CAF and the museum, said, "We are most grateful to the state of Texas in its confidence in the museum and (confidence) in the museum's endeavor to provide a historical perspective of World War II.

"The state funding will enable us to do many things that will enhance the museum's educational programs and projects," Rice said.

The museum opened in 1991 on the 50th anniversary of America's plunge into World War II.

By the end of that year, CAF headquarters and the museum's artifacts and archives had been transferred from Harlingen to Midland. The CAF originally was established in 1957 in the Rio Grande Valley by a group of farmers and crop-dusters to preserve those increasingly rare WWII aircraft.

The museum'sfifth major exhibit, "Fat Men & Little Boys: Warfare in a Nuclear Age," is scheduled for AirSho'95 on Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

Other major exhibits have focused on the unified home-front during World War II; the buildup of the nation's military-industrial complex; the roles of air transport, gliders and paratroopers in the war.

The museum's two auxiliary exhibits are "The Bush Mission," which delineates former President Bush's role as a WWII aviator, and "The Dynamics of Flights," an interactive exhibit designed to illustrate the principles of flight to children.

Educational programs the $890,000 will fund include:

- Multi-media Enhancements in transforming traditional exhibits into multi-sensory experiences;
- Footlocker Program in carrying the museum's educational outreach program on WWII history into the classroom;
- WWII Display Aircraft, which will offer museum visitors a more personal, hands-on experience with wartime fighters, trainers, bombers, liaison aircraft and transports;
- Airpower Library and Resource Center, to make available to the public the museum's collections of documents, photographs and other archival material;
- Film and Lecture Series on WWII history and air power for children and adults.

Craddick said the Legislature, in considering funding the museum, "looked at ways to educationally enhance the people in the Permian Basin and the West Texas area through Midland College for a joint educational-type project and to let the museum have the opportunity to expand exhibits.

"As the generations get older and new generations are born, if you don't have museums of this nature to show what happened in the past, ... those things are soon going to be soon forgotten," Craddick said. "We are proud of what they have done," he said of the museum and its staff, supporters and patrons.

Museum Director Tami O'Bannion, who originally proposed a $1 million state grant for 12 museum projects, earlier had said the museum is "going to be one of the most popular aviation museums around" in terms of content and presentation style.

"Our museum's purpose in life is to tell it the way it was," Ms. O'Bannion said. "You can have a certain degree of patriotism rolled into your storyline, but only to the point that it is objective and historically accurate."

Craddick rates session for PBPA

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, told members of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association Thursday that the recently ended session of the 74th Legislature was "interesting to me. It was the first real business session I can recall, and, really, business won."

The oil and gas industry, on the other hand, "had a poor session and I'm not really sure why."

He said that for energy producers the most positive thing to come out of the session was the extension of high-cost gas incentives.

Other bills passed by the Legislature include Environmental Audit Privilege; a bill allowing delayed royalty payments of amounts less than $100 until $100 or more is accrued; and creation of TERRA, the Texas Experimental Research and Recovery Activity Program.

The Railroad Commission pushed hard to create TERRA, which allows an operator who is about to plug a marginal well to turn it over to the commission for use in research projects and pay only 75 percent of the plugging costs, Craddick said. The well can be used for tests by another operator for a $50 fee or brought back into production if prices increase enough to make the well economical or if economical new pays are discovered.

"The Railroad Commission wanted to open this program where they can do research on these wells and create ways to improve recovery," Craddick said. "They feel they can do a lot of good in terms of research."

Major disappointments, in terms of oil and gas incentives, Craddick said, were the failure to pass incentives for 3-D seismic activity and horizontal drilling. He said the bill would have extended for three years severance-tax relief for inactive wells brought back into production after two years of inactivity.

The oil and gas business should benefit from general business-related legislation passed during the session, particularly in the area of tort reform, he said. New legislation to take effect Sept. 1 limits punitive damages, strengthens deceptive trade practice laws and eliminates "venue-shopping" by those seeking to file lawsuits.

Tort reform was one of four themes emphasized by Gov. George W. Bush during his gubernatorial campaign, Craddick said. The other three were welfare reform, education and juvenile justice.

"And when the Legislature tried to bring up other topics, Bush added a fifth platform — work on the first four," Craddick said.

Bush is preparing to name a blue ribbon committee to study his next project, tax reform, a project that Craddick said will be difficult.

"He wants to eliminate property taxes and the franchise tax, which would mean a $12 billion shift in the tax burden," Craddick said.

Eliminating these taxes would be good news for businesses like the oil and gas industry, he said. "But what's the alternative? Raise the sales tax? Expand the list of items taxed? Create a value-added tax?"

MISTAKE: Man masquerades as wife for 3 years

guy didn't have a normal marriage," he said. "The victim is just a really nice guy."

Authorities said Urioste was able to pull off the deception because he looked like a woman and because Jensen never saw him naked.

The couple got married when Urioste told Jensen he was pregnant with twins after a single sexual encounter in 1991, McGuire said. The prosecutor said Jensen married Urioste out of a sense of responsibility, and the marriage was basically celibate.

Several months after the marriage, Urioste told him the twins were stillborn and also falsely claimed he had cancer.

Jensen is seeking an annulment, citing irreconcilable differences.

"It ripped me up pretty good," he said. "It trashes you out to believe everything a person says and find out they lied to you on basically 100 percent of it."

In April, Jensen filed a missing-person report with Bountiful police when he couldn't locate Urioste, who had said he was going to New York for experimental cancer treatments. Bountiful police investigated and discovered that Urioste had already been arrested in Las Vegas on credit card fraud.

Prosecutors said Urioste ran up at least $40,000 in credit card bills.

"It looks like she charged up one to pay off another but always got a little more than she needed," McGuire said.

Urioste's sister, Jeannie, said her brother fled the marriage in April after he started questioning his longstanding intention to complete sex-change surgery.

Urioste had had his testicles but not his penis removed and was taking female hormones that gave him slight breasts, she said. He apparently stopped taking the hormones this spring; in his mug shot, he has a thick mustache.

"He was confused about his being, about his wanting to be a woman. He had found out that it was OK to be a man and to be gay," the sister said in a telephone interview from Santa Fe, N.M.

Jensen told police the couple first met at a Coke machine at the University of Utah Health Sciences Center while Urioste was masquerading as a female doctor.

Later, Urioste claimed that he was from Israel and that his wealthy parents had disowned him because he had married someone who was not Jewish and had joined the Mormon Church, police said.

The couple were married in the Mormon Church, and members of the congregation said Jensen was widely respected for caring for his supposedly cancer-stricken wife while working two jobs.

Jensen's Mormon bishop, Dick L. Smith, said the few members of the congregation who know about the case are heartsick for Jensen. "He's just a little country bumpkin from Wyoming that wouldn't hurt a flea," he said.

Jeannie Urioste said her brother ran away from home at 13, lived on the streets, attended college and planned to go to medical school.

"Felix has always been a woman to me," she said. "He's very educated, very intelligent. He would never hurt anyone intentionally."

She also said the marriage had meant a great deal to her brother.

"They were happy. They were meant for each other," she said. "Without a doubt he'd never been happier in his life."

Jensen couldn't immediately be reached for comment Thursday because he has moved out of Bountiful and is staying with relatives.

He told the newspaper that as soon as the case is over, he'll return to native Wyoming and "crawl in a hole for a few years and not let anyone within rifle range."

BUSH: Governor defends Rangers

rimand was released to the AP under the Texas Open Records Act one day after the all-male, three-member Public Safety Commission cleared the Rangers of any wrongdoing in a separate sexual harassment charge.

The commission, made up by Robert Holt of Midland, James Francis of Dallas and Ronald Krist of Houston, said it would continue to investigate whether any changes in policy are needed.

"As more information comes forward, the commission needs to look at this, look at all the allegations and information at their disposal," Bush said Thursday.

"I am convinced that the Public Safety Commission will do everything in its power to investigate all allegations of sexism and racism," the governor said.

Bush echoed comments made recently by former Gov. Ann Richards regarding the Rangers, which inducted women into the 103-member unit for the first time in its 170-year history beginning in 1993.

"I thought Gov. Richards put it best when she talked about the long tradition of the Rangers and that it takes a while any time a culture is asked to change," Bush said.

Bush said he didn't think the accusations had damaged the reputation of the Rangers.

ORTIZ: Defense asks search denial

district attorney intends to come to you sometime this week seeking a search warrant for the seizure of certain bodily evidence (blood, hair, saliva, etc.) from our client, Henry Lopez Ortiz ... the purpose of this letter is to request that you decline to issue such a warrant in Judge Hyde's absence.

"It is our position that time is not of the essence in obtaining this search warrant from your honor," Leverett wrote. "Mr. Ortiz has been in jail without bond since February of this year, and will, no doubt, still be in jail when Judge Hyde returns next Monday.

"The state will certainly not be prejudiced in any way by postponing this matter until Judge Hyde's return. Indeed, we believe that it is the state's intention to prejudice the defense by seeking this warrant in Judge Hyde's absence.

"We believe that this is a not-so-subtle attempt at forum shopping, the prosecution realizing that while Judge Hyde might be hesitant to grant such a warrant without a hearing, he might likewise be hesitant to question any warrant your honor has authorized," the letter states.

Midland County Assistant District Attorney Ralph Petty disputed defense claims and called the warrant a "procedural issue."

Petty said Leverett's comments about trying to sidestep Hyde are "absolutely not true."

He saidthe district attorney's staff is trying to avoid legal entanglements by getting another judge to sign the warrant ordering the samples to be given.

Petty said Hyde couldn't question the validity or legality of a warrant if he were the one to issue it.

"We want to clear him of any authorship," Petty said.

Leverett also mentioned in the letter the fact that he believes the bodily evidence was obtained without Ortiz's consent.

"As you may know, this evidence (blood, hair and saliva samples) was already taken from Mr. Ortiz on the day of his arrest, pursuant to what the state alleges was Mr. Ortiz's consent, freely and voluntarily given.

"The defense has filed a motion to suppress that evidence as illegally obtained, and Judge Hyde has set this matter for a hearing on July 20," the letter stated.

No ruling has been made on the search warrant or the letter, Petty said.

Rucker was out of the office Thursday and unavailable for comment.

BLOW: President gives grudging approval to list sector, where workers would continue to do Air Force work under contract.

"Where is the politics?" Clinton said at a Rose Garden appearance shortly before he approved the closure list. "This is about economics."

At a Pentagon briefing, Deputy Defense Secretary John White said Clinton has ordered the military to delay the outright closure of McClellan and Kelly for five years. Pentagon officials insisted that the delay would not reduce the government's anticipated savings.

During the five-year period, about 16,000 Defense Department employees at Kelly and 8,700 at McClellan would remain on the job. After that, the two bases would close. But the Pentagon estimates that 4,000 to 5,000 workers at McClellan and 10,000 to 11,000 at Kelly would still be doing Air Force-related work, most of them as employees of private contractors.

Despite the president's disclaimer, the administration was clearly seeking to avoid political fallout in California. White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta telephoned Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., reaching her in the Senate cloakroom, to inform her of the plan to save jobs at McClellan. California lawmakers, however, were not mollified.

"I view this decision with great disappointment," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif. "I was hopeful that the president might take the action to prevent this from happening."

Boxer said she has "grave doubts" about the plan to save jobs but said she would work to ensure "that that promise becomes a reality."

Clinton accused the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission, which compiled the list, of failing to take into account the cumulative economic impact on certain regions hit particularly hard by base closings this year and in the three previous rounds in 1988, 1991 and 1993.

"Now you tell me that my concern over (California's) economic situation, when there unemployment rate is 8.5 percent, they have borne over 50 percent of the burden of the job loss, is political," Clinton said in a finger-pointing, fist-pounding outburst.

"This is an outrage," he declared.

The complaint was intended, at least in part, to show California and Texas voters he was fighting for them, even as he moved toward accepting the list.

McClellan alone accounts for some 11,000 of the nearly 20,000 military and civilian jobs the state would lose under the base closure plan. That is almost half of the 43,742 jobs that would be lost nationwide under the base closure plan. In addition, California would lose 22,898 "indirect" jobs, including private contractors who work on or near bases and employees of fast-food restaurants, dry cleaners and other service providers that rely on business from nearby bases.

Rose Grady, 47, a mechanic who works on F-15 wing repairs at McClellan, shut her eyes and paused for a few seconds upon hearing the news.

"I am weak-kneed. I am frightened. This is devastating," Grady, a 15-year employee, said. "I'll be 50 years old by the time the base closes and starting all over again."

Said Tom Gutman, 34, a sheet metal worker on fighter planes: "I've got a mortgage, a kid, a wife and, as of today, I'm looking for a job."

Other California bases on the closure list include the Long Beach Naval Shipyard and Oakland Army Base.

Texas would lose 13,381 military and civilian jobs and 19,476 indirect jobs, according to the commission.

But these are not the only hard-hit regions. The Pacific island of Guam would lose 8 percent of its job force under the closure recommendations, by far the highest proportional job loss. Alabama would lose 6,372 military and civilian jobs.

Aristide supporters dominate disorganized Haitian elections

By Michael Norton
Associated Press

■ News analysis

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The people have spoken in Haiti, giving a sweeping victory to the followers of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. But in the process, the democratic process has been tarnished.

Few doubted that Aristide supporters, rallying after three years of bloody repression by the army that ousted him in 1991, would win handily in the June 25 elections for more than 2,000 local and legislative offices.

But the across-the-board domination — from parliament down to the mayors' races — leaves Haiti with no balancing opposition, riding the tide of a cult of personality: Aristide's. In addition, the mismanagement and disorganization of the elections has discredited the democratic process.

Disgruntled losers accuse Aristide of engineering a sweeping victory for his own coalition by loading the Provisional Electoral Council with supporters and using state-run media for his propaganda. Some parties claim the balloting, so confused that make-up elections are needed in some places for hundreds of thousands who were unable to vote, was plagued by fraud.

Most international observers, though chagrined by the mismanagement, reported few cases of organized fraud.

The international community has invested heavily in Aristide's return from exile last fall. Despite the organizational flaws, President Clinton has praised the elections as generally peaceful.

"The elections reflect the will of the Haitian people," said U.S. Embassy spokesman Stan Schrager. "Basically, even without the administrative problems, the results would not have been significantly different.

"The Haitian people have testified to their faith and confidence in President Aristide, and we accept those results," he said.

Aristide won Haiti's first democratic elections in a landslide in 1990 on a crest of popular support called "lavalas," Creole for flash flood.

The Lavalas Platform that swept June elections was a different entity — a new three-party coalition endorsed by Aristide. He turned his back on many who had fought with him for democracy and then risked their lives in Haiti, working for his restoration during three years of exile.

Aristide, who had blasted imperialism and capitalism his first time at the helm, displayed a more moderate stance the second time around after a U.S.-led multinational force returned him to power in October.

However, many of the new lawmakers he endorsed remain faithful to those leftist ideas. Whether they reflect the president's true colors remains to be seen.

A Lavalas parliament may throw a monkey-wrench into the international community's expectations. Few candidates have declared any clear-cut programs of action, but most are hostile to the privatization of state-run enterprises, a precondition of international aid.

Many care little about due process and constitutional forms and would like to see Aristide recover his three years lost while in exile.

His term expires in February, and under the constitution he can't succeed himself. But with a Lavalas parliamentary majority, he likely would dominate Haitian politics until he can run again in 2000.

Aristide has already made a move to eliminate his chief rival, Port-au-Prince Mayor Evans Paul, once one of Aristide's top lieutenants.

Paul, mentioned as a possible presidential successor, lost after Aristide failed to endorse him. Paul was a co-leader of the political front that nominated Aristide in 1990.

Vietnamese don't expect boom in U.S. investment

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Dramatic growth of American investment is unlikely in the wake of U.S. normalization of relations with Vietnam, a senior government official said Thursday.

U.S. investment will continue to increase steadily but slowly, said Nguyen Mai, vice chairman of Vietnam's State Committee for Cooperation and Investment.

"For the time being, we will not put too much hope in American investors," Mai said. "The pace will not be so fast."

Interest in U.S. products was high Thursday in central Hanoi, where Vietnamese peered under the hood and sat timidly at the wheel of a new Chrysler sedan as Vietnam's first showroom for American cars opened its doors.

"Modern and classy" is how one guest, Vu Thang Cong, described the maroon New Yorker model parked in the corner of the gleaming storefront in central Hanoi.

The Chrysler Corp. dealership opened just two days after President Clinton announced the establishment of diplomatic relations with Vietnam. American investment and trade with the once-hostile nation is expected to increase as a result.

Chrysler had been planning the opening for months. American rival Ford Motor Co. plans to open a showroom within 30 days in Ho Chi Minh City, said a Ford business manager, Brannon Holt, speaking by phone from the United States. Both companies are seeking approval to assemble cars in Vietnam.

As for price, Vietnam's 200 percent import tariff on new cars brings the sedan's cost to $95,000.

"Right now in Vietnam only some companies can buy cars," said Tran Tuyet Van, who works for an Austrian energy company. "Not many people can afford a car. They only buy motorbikes."

The average annual personal income in Vietnam is a minuscule $129.

U.S. investment has risen to $596 million since the United States ended its economic embargo against Vietnam in February 1994. Americans are now Vietnam's eighth-largest source of foreign investment.

They are attracted by Vietnam's rapid economic growth of 8.8 percent last year, and its market of 72 million people. Motorola, IBM, Mobil and Bank of America are among the 41 U.S. companies with investments here.

Vietnam's three biggest investors are Taiwan, Hong Kong and Japan.

The lack of economic agreements between the U.S. and Vietnamese governments, such as pacts for trade and aviation, impedes faster growth in U.S. investment, Mai said.

Some Americans keen to invest in industries making goods to export to the United States are holding back until Vietnam is approved as a most-favored nation trading partner, eligible for the lowest possible U.S. trade tariffs.

Vietnamese-Americans can act as a catalyst for further U.S. investment, Mai said. More than 1 million ethnic Vietnamese, many of whom fled their Communist-ruled homeland, live now in the United States. They are returning increasingly to do business here.

The government also is doing its best to fight official corruption, Mai added.

While not a big problem, he suggested that some corruption was inevitable in an economy that only began to open up to the non-Communist world in the late 1980s.

American dies after Pamplona running of the bulls

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — A young American on his first trip abroad joined the street frenzy of Pamplona's running of the bulls Thursday, only to fall onto the cobblestones and be fatally gored by a charging 1,100-pound bull.

Matthew P. Tassio, 22, of Glen Ellyn, Ill., died at Navarra Hospital shortly after he was lacerated in the midsection by the long horns of one of six fighting bulls in the run made famous by Ernest Hemingway's 1926 novel, "The Sun Also Rises."

He was the first to die at the San Fermin festival in 15 years.

Tassio, wearing sneakers, a T-shirt, shorts and a bandana around his neck, either stumbled or was knocked down by the crowd of runners early in the 825-yard dash from the corral to Pamplona's bullring, witnesses said.

When he tried to get up, the bull hooked him in the side. The bull's horn cut through the American's liver and into the main artery leading from his heart, hospital officials said.

Tassio had graduated this spring from the University of Illinois with a degree in electrical engineering and was to begin a job this fall at Motorola Inc.

He and a friend, James Quinn, had decided to add the running of the bulls to a post-graduation trip that took them to Italy, France and Egypt before Pamplona, said his father, Thomas Tassio.

"When the opportunity arose (to go to Pamplona), they worked it into their plans," Thomas Tassio said in Glen Ellyn.

The trip — his first abroad — capped four years of hard work in electrical engineering, friends and relatives said. Tassio intended to stay in Europe until his money ran out.

"He was really excited about it," said Jim Howard, 22, Tassio's roommate. "It was his big chance to see the rest of the world before his job started."

Quinn, reached by telephone, was too upset to comment.

Tassio was the 13th person fatally gored in the 71-year history of the frenetic run down cobblestone streets.

Injuries are frequent in the bull runs, which are held each morning of the eight-day San Fermin festival honoring Pamplona's patron saint. At least 30 people have been injured this year in the northeastern city, including five Americans.

More than 1,000 people jam the narrow, cordoned route and bump into each other. Veteran runners in traditional Basque white shirts and red sashes try to distract the beasts by swinging rolled-up newspapers.

The bulls that take part in each day's run are slain afterwards by the bullfighters.

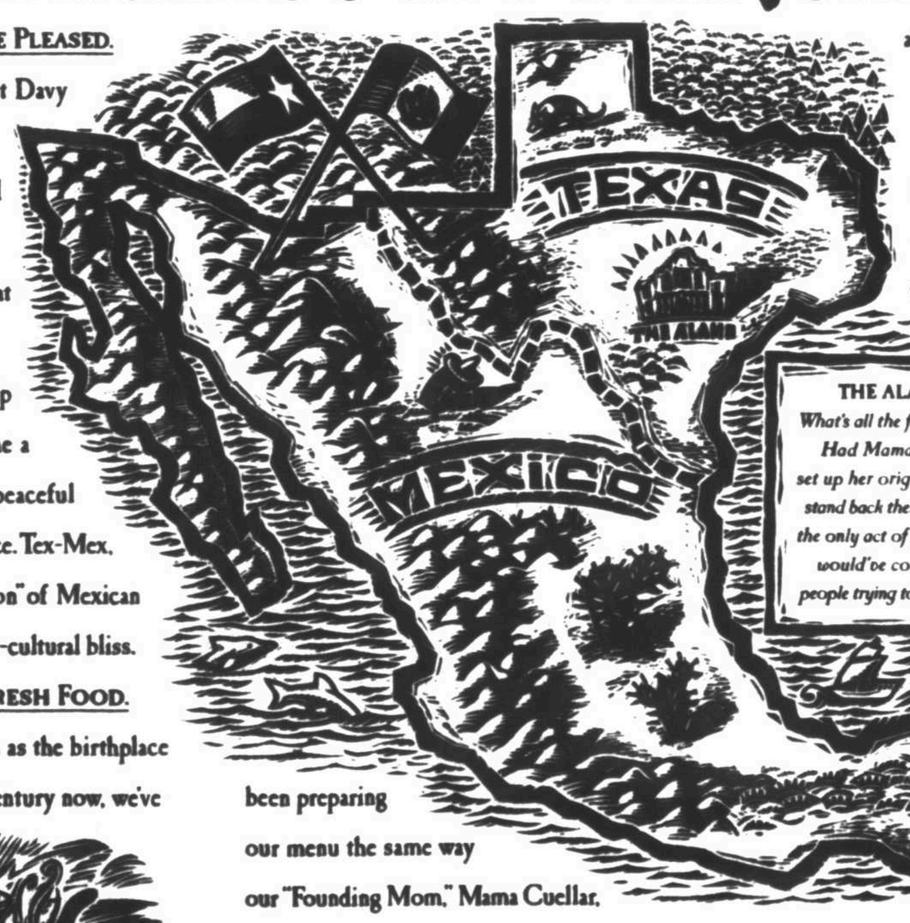
Forget the Alamo. As far as cuisine goes, Texas and Mexico are still joined at the hip.

DAVY CROCKETT WOULD NOT BE PLEASED.

That little border skirmish (that cost Davy Crockett his life) aside, the cuisine that has evolved from both sides of that 889 mile border strip has become a model of peaceful co-existence. Tex-Mex, as it is known, is basically a "Texification" of Mexican food. Or one big happy platter of cross-cultural bliss.

TACO: (Tah-co)
Beware of impostors. Ours come with your choice of fillings in a fresh, crisp shell. One crunch and you'll never drive-thru for a taco again.



THE ALAMO
What's all the fightin' for? Had Mama Cuellar set up her original tamale stand back there in 1836, the only act of aggression would've come from people trying to cut in line.

MUGARITA: (Mug-a-reet-uh)
Try one on the rocks or frozen. We serve them in an ice cold mug cuz it's cooler that way. And perhaps, coolest of all, they're just $1.99. Always.

OLD FAMILY RECIPES. REALLY FRESH FOOD.

At El Chico, we're proud to be known as the birthplace of Tex-Mex. In fact, for over a half century now, we've been preparing our menu the same way our "Founding Mom," Mama Cuellar, would have done it back in 1940. By hand, from scratch, using only the freshest ingredients on the face of the earth. All our sauces, rice, beans, and meats are prepared fresh all day long. And you'll find that approach in everything we serve, from our traditional items like the tacos, tamales, enchiladas, and chili rellenos to our exciting newer creations like enchilada pie or the mouth-watering fajitas.

Heck, even the chips we bring to every table are made from hand-cut tortillas.

WE PUT THE TEX-MEX IN TEX-MEX. Legend has it that it was one of the founders of El Chico, Mack Cuellar, who coined the term "Tex-Mex." And we're proud to say that since we opened in 1940 no one has embodied genuine Tex-Mex quite like El Chico. Well, that's enough history lesson for one day. It's time to eat.

FAJITAS: (Fah-hee-tahs)
The Tex-Mex centerpiece. Marinated beef or tender chicken strips served in a sizzling skillet with fresh onions and bell peppers. Is your mouth watering yet? It will be. Oh, it will be.

EL CHICO SINCE 1940
Where Tex-Mex Began.

In Midland, look for the big, shiny El Chico sign at 2101 West Wadley, corner of Garfield and Wadley. Phone: 683-4311. Or in Odessa at 2975 John Ben Sheppard Pkwy., across from UTPB. Phone: 550-9881. Come hungry.

Summer heat wave calls for shade, drinks

Wednesday's high temperature in Midland reached 97, which is hot by anyone's standards, but not nearly as hot as other parts of Texas, Kansas and Nebraska. In those areas the mercury climbed above 100 — again — as a heat wave that has gripped the middle portion of the country for several days persisted.

Even though Midlanders were scampering to water outside plants and animals, and turn the air-conditioner to a cooler temperature setting, people elsewhere in Texas and other states were suffering under extreme heat. In fact, the heat wave has already been blamed for at least two deaths and numerous cases of heat-related illnesses.

That's one aspect of living in this region of the country that many people don't give much thought to until the hot temperatures bake all the cool from the nighttime hours and send them looking for deep shade and a tall glass of something cool to drink. They're absolutely correct to do that. Extreme heat, like extreme cold, can be deadly and can affect a person's health before they realize what is occurring.

It really is better to be safe than sorry. The current heat wave — which likely will not be the last one Midlanders will have to endure this year — should be viewed as a warning signal. Temperatures will get hotter still this summer and as they do, people will suffer. But by being wise about how they approach hot weather — being certain to drink plenty of liquids, stay out of direct sunlight during the hottest parts of the day, using fans or air-conditioners and restricting physical exertion — they can get through periods of extreme temperatures without major problems.

Court's drug test decision fell off slippery slope

The decision to allow drug testing for certain professionals has traveled along a high road built with great intentions.

But with last week's Supreme Court ruling that allows schools to test prep athletes who are not even suspected drug users, the high road has reached a slippery slope.

In writing the majority opinion for the court, Justice Antonin Scalia cited that prep athletes are role models who should lead the way to a drug-free life for others to emulate.

The decision came from a school in Veronica, Ore., where teachers blamed drugs for the unruly behavior of the school's athletes. The school administration responded by testing all the football players regardless of whether they were suspected of abusing drugs. A seventh-grader, who refused to undergo urine analysis, was barred from the team. His parents sued in 1991.

We agree that drugs are a horrible curse on America's youth, but we believe this encroachment on personal freedom was unnecessary.

Instead of collecting urine samples from kids in shoulder pads, the school officials could truly elevate athletes to role-model status by simply kicking unruly students off the team.

Indeed, schools everywhere could make good conduct and good grades requirements for participation on any prep team.

And as they grow older, maybe they could bring some role-model class into the professional arena.

Today in History

Today is Friday, July 14, the 195th day of 1995. There are 170 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 14, 1789, during the French Revolution, citizens of Paris stormed the Bastille prison and released the seven prisoners inside.

On this date:

In 1798, Congress passed the Sedition Act, making it a federal crime to publish false, scandalous or malicious writing about the United States government.

In 1853, Commodore Matthew Perry relayed to Japanese officials a letter from former President Fillmore, requesting trade relations.

In 1881, outlaw William H. Bonney Jr., alias "Billy the Kid," was shot and killed by Sheriff Pat Garrett in Fort Sumner, N.M.

In 1921, Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were convicted in Dedham, Mass., in the killing of a shoe company paymaster and his guard. Sacco and Vanzetti were executed six years later.

In 1933, all German political parties, with the exception of the Nazi Party, were outlawed.

In 1958, the army of Iraq overthrew the monarchy.

In 1965, the American space probe Mariner 4 flew by Mars, sending back photographs of the planet.

In 1965, U.S. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson Jr., the Democratic presidential nominee in 1952 and 1956, died in London at age 65.

In 1966, eight student nurses were murdered by Richard Speck in a Chicago dormitory. Speck died in prison in 1991, a day short of his 50th birthday.

In 1972, the State Department criticized actress Jane Fonda for making antiwar radio broadcasts in Hanoi, calling them "distressing."

In 1976, Jimmy Carter won the Democratic presidential nomination by an overwhelming margin at the party's convention in New York.

Department goes ballistic over accounting

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense recently went nuclear over a General Accounting Office report that derided the DOD's efforts to eliminate weapons of mass destruction in the former Soviet Union before they fall into the hands of terrorists.

Anderson

In 1991, Congress passed legislation sponsored by Sens. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Richard Lugar, R-Ind., authorizing the DOD to establish a Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) program to help former Soviet states dismantle their nuclear and chemical weapons and safely store the lethal components.

But a recent report card suggests the program may not be living up to expectations. Perhaps even worse, the Pentagon and congressional investigators can't even agree on whether the problem is getting better or worse.

The Pentagon's nonproliferation program was given approximately $1.25 billion to reduce the Soviet nuclear threat in 1991. This year, DOD wants another $735 million from the taxpayers to keep the program going through fiscal year 1997. But the GAO argues that too much taxpayer money is devoted to a program with a "limited" impact. A report on the program issued last month enraged defense department officials, who felt that the findings were unfairly critical of the DOD and might prompt Congress to cut the program's funding.

According to the report, which was reviewed by our reporter Aaron Karp, "the program must overcome numerous challenges and problems to realize its long-term objectives." It recommends that Congress cut $34 million from the program for fiscal year 1996.

Apparently worried that the GAO might torpedo some of their precious funding, DOD officials quickly fired back. DOD assistant Harold P. Smith Jr. wrote that the GAO's bean counters are missing the "big picture" when they say that the CTR program has had only a "limited" effect. Smith also expressed concern that a draft of the GAO report "was leaked to the press" inappropriately, resulting in an "inaccurate picture" of the program being drawn.

GAO investigators pooh-pooh the Pentagon's defense. They claim that the United States and Russia haven't even reached agreement as to what technology should be used to build a chemical weapons destruction facility.

In some instances, the DOD simply made statements which weren't true. "DOD... stated that Russia is 'today' using U.S. supplied guillotine shears to cut up bombers," last month's report said. "These shears have not yet been used and are not expected to be used until July 1995."

A team of government scientists has been working secretly in a Los Alamos, N.M., lab to put the nuclear genie back in the bottle. The lab's director, Dr. Siegfried Hecker, cast his years-long crusade in apocalyptic terms when he granted us an exclusive interview: "As soon as one nuke gets away, you've lost the ability to even answer a terrorist threat again. Ever. In other words, if you know that there are 10, 20, 30 pounds of plutonium missing somewhere from the huge former Soviet materials stockpile, then you'll never know again whether a terrorist threat is serious. Because, once they have the material, there's no question bombs can be built."

FUDDLE FACTORY — A recent federal government regulation dealing with common candle wax reads as follows:

"Waste Disposal Method: Dissolve or mix the material with a combustible solvent and burn in a chemical incinerator equipped with an afterburner and scrubber. Observe all federal, state and local environmental regulations."

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) is the proud author of this regulation. It helps explain why the temperature is rising in Congress on the agency in charge of worker safety, which boasts an annual budget of $300 million. While OSHA can be overbearing in some respects, its inspectors visit each of the country's 6 million workplaces an average of just once every 10 years. OSHA fines slapped on businesses currently average about 50 cents per worker.

Measuring OSHA's real cost lies with a maze of regulations that are too theoretical — or do too little at too high a cost.

What OSHA really needs is a thorough inspection of its own operations — one that will see to it that the agency looks out for the average worker while adhering to common sense regulations.

Future is uncertain for Sen. Gramm in polls

Over and over again, one hears it: What-sanmatter with Phil Gramm? Why isn't he burning up the opinion polls instead of starting to look like a runner-up to Pat Buchanan, who at this juncture shouldn't be anywhere in the polls but is emerging as, no kidding, the alternative to Bob Dole?

Murchison

In all this, where's Phil? Not one voter I have queried in the past few weeks — and I have queried many, including avowed Gramm supporters — sees Gramm as the probable Republican presidential nominee. The other day, Dole surpassed him in fund-raising. This isn't encouraging for the candidate whose bankroll was supposed to rank among his biggest assets.

Gramm has had some publicized setbacks, to be sure. It didn't help when he seemed to rebuff the "religious right," some of whose national leaders asked him to speak out more strongly on social issues. (He moved quickly to make amends.) Nor was his standing elevated by all the snickering over the porno film his then-brother-in-law financed 20-odd years ago, partly with money from Phil.

More damaging is that Gramm's candidacy seems to suffer from the Dr. Fell Syndrome. As 17th century Oxford University student Thomas Brown had it:

I do not love thee, Dr. Fell,
The reason why I cannot tell;
But this I know, and know full well:
I do not love thee, Dr. Fell.

A lot of voters, one surmises, do not love Phil Gramm; they don't know why, they just don't love him. Maybe it's the Georgia drawl, or the Olympian ego, or the thick glasses, or all three. To the anti-Fell crowd, Gramm just doesn't seem, well, presidential. He's got the conservative philosophy, but Ronald Reagan had the philosophy and — no surprise, given his background — the charm. Should the desirability of charm in a national leader move us to accept as president a charming chameleon? As it happens, we've got one now. Nor do the American people seem overjoyed about this circumstance.

Yet, for better or worse, democratic leaders need to exude not just administrative and philosophical competence but also a certain likability — a knack for connecting with ordinary voters.

Gramm, the hands-down winner in two Texas senatorial elections, has something all right. Whether it's the stuff that will take him to the White House, we'll just have to see.

And we will. Because it's far too early in the race to be writing off any major candidate, least of all one with $13 million or so in his jeans. Why, there hasn't even been a presidential primary yet — and won't be for six months.

Among the cardinal sins committed by my learned profession, journalism, is that of taking snapshots — glimpses of the present — and blowing them up into visions of how-it's-gonna-be. If Gramm is up, according to our learned analysis, why, higher and higher he must ascend; if down, that just may be the ballgame for him.

In fact, as the primary season approaches, Gramm's campaign will certainly sharpen and intensify. It would be a very serious mistake on the part of the media, or Gramm's opponents (the two categories frequently overlap!), to suppose that he isn't deadly serious about wanting to be president. He is.

When Gramm, in 1976, was campaigning for U.S. Senate against Lloyd Bentsen, he was fond of saying that in the political battles ahead, "I mean to lead." No one suspected back then that a mere professor of economics was bold enough to see himself leading from the Oval Office, but so Gramm saw himself, even then.

So, now what's he going to do, slink away from the lists because his poll numbers are low? Gramm is too cagey and self-confident a campaigner for that. He may not make the White House, but he'll go down swinging. Meanwhile, the best thing we prophets and wizards of the mass media could do is confess that the primaries are still a long way off, that the unexpected can happen — and that, yes, hard as it may be for our fans to realize, we can't see into the future.

Consumers are losers in free-market system

Mark Skoursen is a well-known and eloquent advocate of the free market system. You will always find something worthwhile in his books.

Nevertheless, we have a friendly disagreement. He has taken issue with my contention that a free market economic system involves win-lose transactions. He contends it is a win-win system.

Reese

Among other arguments, he cites the hypothetical example of a man who sells an apple for a dollar. The seller gets what he wants — the dollar — and the buyer gets what he wants — the apple — so both are happy and it is a win-win situation.

What's wrong with the example is that he is switching units of measurement in the middle of a logical stream. He starts on the seller side with an apple valued in dollars and cents, but when he gets to the buyer side, he switches to psychic satisfaction, to prove equality or win-win. That's a logical no-no.

Let's keep the measurement in dollars and cents on both sides and see what happens. As any free market exponent will tell you, the producer and seller of the apple will sell it for more than it costs. Let's say the apple costs 50 cents and he sells it for $1. At the end of the transaction, the seller has no apple but $1. The buyer, on the other hand, has a 50-cent apple but is out $1 — a 50 cent loss.

Let's multiply both sides by a 1,000, which will change the outcome only in equal quantities. At the end of a thousand transactions, what are the economic conditions of the two parties?

The producer and seller of apples has $1,000 cash, a $500 gain (he had $500 worth of apples at the start but sold them for $1,000).

The buyer and consumer of apples, however, is broke. He has no apples (he ate them), and he has no money (he spent it all on the apples). He gained the nutritional benefit of $500 worth of apples, but they cost him $1,000. When you have no assets and no capital (money) you are impoverished.

Lest you think this is some silly academic exercise, this very process is going on all around us. One sure road to impoverishment is to consume your capital.

Joe Lunchbucket, a good family man without vices, works hard his whole life, but every paycheck (his capital) is consumed by the expenses of living and rearing a family. At the end, when the paychecks stop, what will be his condition? Poverty. He will have no assets (they were consumed) and no capital.

Let's expand the apple game. Let's say Mr. A, the producer of apples, sells his 50-cent apple to Mr. B for $1. Not to be outdone, Mr. B sells his $1 apple to Mr. C for $1.50. Mr. A made a profit of 50 cents and Mr. B made a profit of 50 cents for $1 of cumulative profits. But who supplied that $1? Mr. C, the consumer, who got a 50-cent apple but had to pay $1.50 for it.

This, too, is a reflection of the much more complex transactions we do every day. Like Mr. C, when we buy gasoline, we pay for the gasoline, the taxes and the profits of the dealer, the wholesaler, the transporter, the refiner and the original owner of the oil. Of course, in complex transactions our share is proportional. Nevertheless, all their gains of necessity are at the expense of the ultimate consumers.

The free market economic system is preferable to socialism, communism or fascism, but not on purely economic grounds. Free market economics allows political freedom; the others don't. Hogwash aside, if you are economically dependent on the state or the party, the state or the party will control the rest of your life.

But we should be realistic and not fall into the trap of utopianism. Free market economics is a game of winners and losers, and we should teach people that the only way to be a winner is to consume less than they earn and to invest the difference in ways that will earn new wealth.

Getting a job is not by itself enough. You can work hard and still lose. You can have "good credit" and still lose. In the free market game, producers and investors win; consumers lose.

Discovery launches communications satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Discovery rocketed into orbit Thursday on a flight delayed by woodpeckers, and promptly released a $330 million satellite to replace one destroyed in the Challenger disaster.

The crew freed the Tracking and Data Relay Satellite from its tilted table six hours into the flight. The shiny, gold-colored satellite drifted off as the shuttle slowly backed away.

"Discovery, excellent job. Happy faces," Mission Control told the crew.

An attached rocket motor fired and propelled the satellite from Discovery's 184-mile altitude toward a 22,300-mile-high orbit. There, it will join five other TDRS satellites and serve as a spare.

The TDRS network links ground controllers with Discovery as well as other orbiting craft such as the Hubble Space Telescope.

The shuttle flight was delayed five weeks by woodpeckers that drilled more than 200 holes in the insulating foam of Discovery's fuel tank in May.

Ohio Gov. George Voinovich wept and prayed as Discovery punched through two decks of clouds and sped out over the Atlantic Ocean. Four of the five crew members are from Ohio.

Voinovich said he couldn't help thinking of Judith Resnik, one of seven astronauts killed when Challenger exploded on Jan. 28, 1986.

"She was from Ohio, you know, and the TDRS they're carrying up will replace the one she was carrying up on Challenger," he said. "When you think of all the things that could go haywire, you don't take it for granted."

It took nine years to start the satellite-production line back up and build and test the craft.

The shuttle flight was delayed five weeks by woodpeckers that drilled more than 200 holes in the insulating foam of Discovery's fuel tank in May. NASA had to return the shuttle to the hangar for repairs.

It was the first time in 34 years of U.S. human spaceflight that animals delayed a launch, and NASA couldn't resist a little woodpecker humor.

On the astronauts' breakfast table, in their suit-up room and inside Mission Control were little stuffed Woody Woodpeckers. Once in orbit, Commander Terence "Tom" Henricks offered this assessment of the cockpit windows: "No debris — especially no feathers."

After Discovery was repaired, NASA used tape-recorded predator screeches, plastic owl decoys, streamers, human sentinels with horns and balloons with menacing eyes to keep the woodpeckers away.

"One encounter like that is enough," said shuttle manager Loren Shriver.

Atlantis returned last Friday from a flight to Russia's space station. That's only a six-day gap between missions, a NASA record.

Discovery's eight-day trip is also the first flight of a new, improved type of engine and the first voyage managed by a new Mission Control Center.

Only one of Discovery's three main engines is the new model, designed to be safer. Preliminary data showed it worked well during ascent, NASA said.

The new, sleek Mission Control Center is equipped with small yet powerful and easy-to-replace computers.

Discovery returns to Earth on July 21. Until then, the astronauts will tend to 10 pregnant rats and conduct a variety of experiments.

IT'S WHEN I GET IN HOT WATER

Once in awhile you'll run across one of those sayings that just "hit home". This one did. Maybe it was because I had been taking a closer look at this ole preacher's life and asking a few questions about faith applied to daily living. Read it the other day.."True Christians are like Tea...Their real strength is evident when they get into hot water!"

Hot water like showing your faith when death takes a best friend, or family member. Or simple things like when you smash your thumb hanging the picture. And what you said right after that. And, that day you cussed God's name just to show how worldly and crass you are. Hot water, like yelling at your kid because he's too loud. And, really, it all had to do with your trouble at work. And not the kid. And so on.

Christianity is "Christ now living in me" Galations 2:20. Every day. Not just at church and worship. But in my words and actions. Hot water shows my real strength!

House GOP vote to kill all funding of arts endowment

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Faced with a freshman-led mutiny, House Republican leaders agreed Thursday to cut off all federal funding to the National Endowment for the Arts within two years — a year earlier than they had planned and five years ahead of the Senate's schedule.

The House, mired in a daylong debate over an $11.96 billion Interior Department appropriations bill for 1996, did not reach a similar agreement to shorten the life of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

But wending through the House of Representatives and toward likely approval are two amendments that would set in law the 1997 deadline for both the arts and humanities agencies.

Another of the conservatives' favorite cultural targets, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, is also in line for a phaseout of government financing. An Appropriations subcommittee has approved a $240 million subsidy for 1996, a reduction from 1995 of $20 million, or 7.7 percent.

While the cutback is far smaller than had originally been threatened, the subcommittee has put the corporation too on the road toward an end of all federal financing. A proposal to that effect could come before the full House as early as next week.

The future of the endowments has become the focal point of the debate over the Interior Department's appropriations bill.

The bill would cut financing for the endowments by 40 percent over their current budgets — leaving arts and humanities each with $99.5 million for 1996, while heading them toward an end to all federal monies.

The bill would also immediately eliminate financing for President Clinton's national service program, known as Americorps, and for new land purchases. And it would terminate the agency that helps compile the endangered species list, the National Biological Service, and transfer its duties to the U.S. Geological Survey; begin the phase-out of the Bureau of Mines; and provide only nominal funding, $1, for a proposed new federal park in the Mojave National Preserve.

Current language in the bill extends a 14-year-old moratorium on any new offshore oil and gas drilling and exploration, but removes a ban on new mining patents.

The battle over the endowments opened with a curious skirmish.

Before debate can begin on a bill, lawmakers must first approve the rules or guidelines under which the debate will proceed. With 232 Republicans in the 435-seat House, Republican leaders had expected to push through the Interior bill over Democratic opposition, by adopting a rule that would have limited both debate and the opportunity for amendments to restore money for the endowments and other programs.

But that plan fell apart late Wednesday night when dozens of Republicans, most of them freshmen, joined Democrats to reject that rule, 238- 177.

Fellow passenger of Simpson's testifies to defendant's distraught demeanor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A distraught O.J. Simpson sighed, requested water and made phone calls seeking information about his ex-wife's death as he flew home from Chicago, a fellow passenger testified Thursday, helping the defense recover from a stinging setback.

Even in his distress, witness Mark Partridge said, Simpson was the consummate celebrity, obliging a fan with an autograph on a cocktail napkin.

"I thought, 'What a nice man this was to be doing this,' having heard what I'd heard about the tragedy that was affecting his life," Partridge testified.

Hours before Partridge took the stand, Judge Lance Ito rejected a key defense bid to present a theory that Nicole Brown Simpson was mistakenly murdered by drug hitmen out to kill her cocaine-abusing friend Faye Resnick because she owed them money.

The Colombian hitman theory was to have been elicited from Resnick's ex-boyfriend Christian Reichardt, but the defense late Thursday dropped plans to call him as a witness.

'I thought the way he was behaving was very sincere.'

— Mark Partridge, fellow passenger of Simpson's

Partridge wrote an eight-page diary about the flight and gave it to attorneys for both sides, but not before copyrighting the document, he acknowledged.

Although Partridge, a trademark and patent lawyer, said Simpson confided in him and he was able to hear part of Simpson's many phone calls during the four-hour flight, the witness wasn't allowed to tell jurors what Simpson said because it was ruled hearsay.

When the men arrived in Los Angeles and Simpson headed for the door, Partridge said, "he turned back and what I could see him say was, 'Thank you.' "

Simpson, seated at the counsel table, wiped tears from his eyes. Three of his attorneys patted him on the back. Several jurors stole glances in his direction. Partridge also seemed to choke up.

Both Partridge and Hertz Corp. executive Raymond Kilduff, who took Simpson to the airport in Chicago, described him as distraught and said they noticed a bleeding injury on the middle finger of his left hand. Simpson's lawyers say he cut his hand in his hotel room.

"He was obviously distraught," Kilduff said. "His hands were in his face like something was obviously wrong."

In the car, Kilduff said, he noticed a bloody bandage on Simpson's finger. Partridge said he saw it during the flight and later Simpson wrapped it in a paper towel.

Prosecutors repeatedly asked witnesses if they knew Simpson was an actor and suggested he was putting on an act when he seemed so distraught.

Defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr. asked Partridge: "Did he appear to you to be acting?"

"I thought the way he was behaving was very sincere," Partridge replied.

The crucial testimony about Simpson's demeanor helped the defense recover from a series of rulings at the start of the day.

The most significant setback involved the theory that drug hitmen had intended to murder Ms. Resnick rather than Simpson's ex-wife and her friend Ronald Goldman.

Prosecutors attacked the claim as ridiculous.

"Who was her dealer? Who did she owe money to? Is this person someone the defense can identify?" prosecutor Cheri Lewis asked. "It's all speculation. All it does is confuse and mislead the jury."

Ito agreed the scenario was too vague, ruling that Reichardt could not be asked questions about Resnick's cocaine abuse while rooming with Ms. Simpson and her admission to a drug rehabilitation program a few days before the murders.

In a book written after the murders, Resnick described her cocaine problem, but she has scoffed at the defense suggestion that she couldn't pay for her drugs, saying she had plenty of money. Cochran said she was being supported by Reichardt, who wouldn't give her money for cocaine.

After the court recessed for the day, Cochran said Reichardt wouldn't be called.

It was the second major setback for the defense in two days. On Wednesday, a defense witness's credibility was undermined, and prosecutors used him to show that a white vehicle similar to Simpson's Bronco was seen speeding away from the murder scene.

"I think it's a major hit for the defense," Loyola University Professor Stan Goldman said of Thursday's ruling. "It may spell the end of the ability to present any evidence on this drug theory, the Colombian drug cartel. ... It was the weakest part of the defense case, but it was their only alternative theory as to who might have done it."

Ito also rejected proposed testimony by a Chicago travel agent who, the defense says, was told by Simpson, "I cut myself and I'm bleeding," while speaking with her on his hotel telephone to make arrangements to return to Los Angeles.

High temperatures continue, cause train derailment, deaths

Associated Press

A heat wave that scorched the Plains on Thursday for the sixth straight day derailed a freight train with rail-warping temperatures of 112 degrees and felled cattle, leaving them rotting — even bursting — in their pens.

At least seven heat-related deaths were reported as the heat moved eastward. It was expected to stay the weekend over the eastern half of the nation.

"I keep a water jug real close," said Larry Miller, a farmer in Thompsonville, Ill., who spent the day on a tractor spraying his soybean crop. "And for me, I perspire a lot, so I have to keep something to wipe my eyes. It's hot, but you just endure it. The things that we're doing today have got to be done today."

Parts of Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Illinois neared 100 degrees.

By early afternoon, the mercury had climbed above 100 at La Crosse, Wis., after an overnight low of 81; the old record of 78 had stood since 1932. The heat and humidity made it feel like 129 around noon in Appleton, Wis.

Mansfield, Ohio, had reached 90 degrees, tying the record set in 1974. Milwaukee hit 96 before noon.

With the steamy front moving east, the Washington Monument was closed Thursday for the first time ever, because the air conditioning system failed and temperatures reached over 100 inside.

And with the mercury soaring into the 90s in New York City, firefighters found that the new gear that protects them from burns can be stifling.

"Five minutes in that suit in a fire situation is just draining," said Michael Long, a 14-year department veteran. "Imagine wearing a snowsuit in the house all day."

Near Nebraska City, Neb., 15 cars of a 98-car freight train derailed Wednesday. No one was hurt. Union Pacific spokesman John Bromley said the rail "kinks" or buckles when it gets too hot.

Thousands of cattle have died of the heat in Iowa.

Patriotic program

The Midland Masonic Lodge No. 623 is sponsoring a patriotic program Saturday that will include a narrative review of the various flags that have flown over the United States, as well as a tribute to the men who fought with the Heroes of '76 National Sojourners. The Lubbock Chapter No. 517 of Heroes will be dressed in colonial costumes. The program begins at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Masonic Temple, 1600 W. Wall St. The public is invited and service personnel are encouraged to wear their medals, whether in uniform or civilian clothing. A reception will follow the ceremonies in the main dining hall of the temple.

Lucky twosome

AUSTIN — Since 1949, Myrtle Newby and Gladys J. Cook have shared just about everything, including their family. Now the sisters-in-law have something else in common: a $17 million Lotto Texas jackpot. On Thursday, the Cleburne women cleaned their prize from Saturday's drawing: a check for $858,648.28 that, of course, will be split right down the middle. The remaining installments of $853,000 will be paid every July 15 for the next 19 years. Both women played a part in winning the prize. On the morning of the drawing, Mrs. Newby didn't want to leave her air-conditioned car, so Mrs. Cook walked into the Cleburne Tiger Mart to buy $5 worth of Quick Pick tickets for each of them. After watching the drawing, each women thought they had matched three numbers for a $3 prize. But when Mrs. Cook looked at Mrs. Newby's winning ticket, she counted all six winning numbers.

Root of all weevil

AUSTIN — Call it the root of all weevil. Texas Attorney General Dan Morales announced Thursday that Texas is suing Louisiana in the U.S. Supreme Court over policies Louisiana has put in place to control a weevil outbreak plaguing sweet potatoes. The lawsuit filed by Morales said Louisiana had instituted a program that "imposes unnecessary and expensive procedures that out-of-state suppliers of sweet potatoes must follow in order to sell and ship the potatoes to purchasers in Louisiana." About 85 percent of Texas' sweet potato crop is sent to Louisiana for processing, and the two states compete in the production of sweet potatoes, Morales said.

Downtown revitalization committee hopes to gain new ideas

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Members of the Downtown Revitalization Steering Committee met with a Dallas consulting group Wednesday to work toward determining ways to boost the downtown economy.

"We're basically trying to get a focus — get a handle on which way to go," said Mayor Bobby Burns, chairman of the committee.

The committee members are educating themselves on the problems of the downtown region, while the Dallas consultants will provide expertise on a multitude of disciplines such as economics, city planning and engineering, Burns explained.

'We're basically trying to get a focus — get a handle on which way to go.'
— Mayor Bobby Burns, committee chairman

One of the ways being explored to infuse economic lifeinto the area is to move offices into some of the more underused downtown buildings.

So far, the only funds being spent on the project are privately raised funds, Burns said. But state and federal funds could become available once the committee determines long-range plans for downtown.

No concrete decisions likely will be made for some months. "We're still in the beginning stages," Burns said. "Generally, we're just trying to identify ... what our goals ought to be — to determine who the stake-holders are," he said.

Committee co-chairman Mike Canon agreed that this meeting — which was attended by about 30 people — is a preliminary means of educating those who will one day be making decisions on how best to revitalize the downtown area.

"This is a process for developing long-term plans for downtown," Canon said. "This is the very first step in about a nine-month process."

City officials and the Midland Chamber of Commerce have teamed up for the revitalization project.

Possible gang related crime strikes, angers city resident

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A Midland man's problems with vandalism and burglary may be tied to the city's growing problem with gangs, according to a police official.

Since March, Joe Hawley said two firearms have been taken from his home in southwest Midland and a concession trailer at his residence has been vandalized.

The words "East Side Gang" and profanities were spray painted on the side of the trailer, Hawley said.

He believes the crimes were committed by a gang of teen-agers he said regularly roams his neighborhood.

One police official agrees with him.

"We have an up-and-coming gang problem here in Midland and it's a probability, with the graffiti on the trailer and where the residence is located, this guy might be having problems with a gang," said the officer.

The officer said the sharp increase in burglaries and vandalism this summer is probably the direct result of gang activity coming into its own in the city.

"These gangs have certain initiations, like stealing a car or vandalizing prop-

Texas Tech president brings alumni up to date

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Red Raiders of the Permian Basin were greeted by Texas Tech University President Robert Lawless, who came to Midland to keep members of the President's Council and other alumni abreast of the goings on at Tech.

Lawless spoke to Tech alumni at a Thursday luncheon at the Petroleum Club.

Lawless makes two visits to the Permian Basin each year. He tours the Texas Tech Health Science Center in Odessa and meets with President's Council members in Midland.

The President's Council is made up of former Tech students across the state who are a favored funding source for the institution, Lawless said.

Lawless and his colleagues regularly meet with members of the President's Council "any time we go to a city with a number of those members," he said.

"That support manifests itself in programs like the National Merit scholarships, faculty awards for excellence in teaching and research, publishing the research magazine and our honor speakers series," he said.

The meetings give Lawless a chance to "show them what their money has accomplished," he said.

Also during Thursday's luncheon, Lawless outlined plans for an upcoming construction project in Odessa. An ambulatory care facility — outpatient clinic — will be built for an overall cost of $8 million, he said.

The university will provide about $2 million and grants will be received for part of the construction costs. Between $3.5 million and $4 million will be needed to be raised locally, he said.

With the number of Tech graduates in and around Odessa, Lawless does not anticipate a problem garnering this kind of community support.

For the recent creation of a Tech pharmacy school in Amarillo, the state asked for $12.5 million from the community. "I thought it was a dead deal," Lawless said. "But they really came through beyond all expectations."

Lawless

Also of local importance is a new program in Midland. Working with Rep. Tom Craddick, Tech will establish obstetrical and gynecological residencies, as well as family medical residencies in Midland, Lawless said.

This will provide a way for Tech medical residents to go through surgical rotations in Midland, he said.

Agency shares vision of one-stop job shopping

By Myra Lee Salcedo

Texas State Occupational Information Coordinating Committee member speaks to representatives of community colleges, social services and job training programs.

Social and job retraining services are being streamlined with computer technology into a one-stop-shopping concept.

"We have a vision that someone can walk through a door and be greeted by a warm and friendly face who can help them go through the complete process of assessment and eligibility," said Rich Froeschle of the Austin-based Texas State Occupational Information Coordinating Committee (TSOICC).

Froeschle spoke to representatives of area community colleges, social services and job training programs at the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission building Thursday.

With access to various agencies throughout the region, a one-stop-shopping center could offer the client "an informed choice about a career, not a random experience," Froeschle said.

Mark Taylor, president of the Midland Introspective Network for Employment Committee — which is an outgrowth of the United Way — said the one-stop concept would eliminate the need to go to various local agencies for services.

"It would be a resource center for laid-off workers in the labor market," said Allison Garvin of Quality Workforce. She said services offered could run the gamut from getting help with resume writing, to getting job retraining, to simply making copies of resumes.

"One-stop-shopping would prevent people from having to run all over creation to get back into the work force," she said.

The TSOICC is in the process of becoming a virtual clearinghouse

Former Vaughan drummer to bring new sounds to Midland

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

'I'm sorry that the world and myself, too, lost a great talent with Stevie. His tragic death was a real hard thing to take.'
— Chris 'Whipper' Layton, drummer for Austin-based band Storyville

He cut a branch from a tree and used it to beat on the arm of a chair. Soon, that wasn't enough.

"I cut two sets of branches and actually started beating on the floor," said drummer Chris "Whipper" Layton, who was formerly with Stevie Ray Vaughan and Arc Angels.

It wasn't his form of practice that convinced his mother to buy him a drum set when he was about 11 years old.

"What inspired her was my constant nagging, if you can call that inspiration," said Layton, who is to perform here Saturday with the Austin-based band Storyville.

Fronted by vocalist Malford Milligan, the band includes Layton, bassist Tommy Shannon and guitarists David Grissom and David Holt»

Recently named Best New Band at the AustinMusic Awards, Storyville will rev up the audience for Texas rocker Joe Ely. Gates at Centennial Plaza open for the street dance at 6 p.m. Saturday. Music begins at 8 p.m.

Advance tickets are $12.50 at Midland Sound and Endless Horizons, in Odessa. Admission at the gate is $15. Reserved tables of 10 are available by calling 570-6307.

When Layton looked back over his life, he was uncertain what suddenly fueled his interest in the drums.

"I started beating around on things and got interested in the idea of playing drums and wanted a drum set," Layton said. "I just all of a sudden was doing it."

Perhaps he came by the desire naturally. His father, Red Layton, was a musician. "My father played drums in an Army Air Force band in Europe way before I was born," Layton said.

He grew up listening to the radio. Then, when he was around 18, Layton was in his "first real band that actually played and made money.

"I feel very fortunate. I'm sorry that the world and myself, too, lost a great talent with Stevie. His tragic death was a real hard thing to take. Otherwise, I think my life's been real good." He said his career has had "lots of high points. I played so long with Stevie — an overall high point was being

Archeologists believe find is from 1686 La Salle shipwreck

PORT LAVACA (AP) — Archeologists from the Texas Historical Commission believe a cannon pulled Thursday from Matagorda Bay is more than 300 years old and from the wreck of a ship belonging to the French explorer La Salle.

The retrieval of the bronze cannon, crusty with mud and shellfish and stones after spending more than three centuries on the sea floor, capped a search that began by state archeologists in 1978.

Authorities who pulled the cannon from about 12 feet of water offshore where the bay becomes the Gulf of Mexico carefully washed away some of the debris with a water hose, exposing the shiny bronze exterior, featuring a king's crest and two dolphins that decorate its top.

"We never expected a find of this magnitude," said Brett Phaneuf, 26, a Texas A&M University graduate student and an assistant state archaeologist who was among the divers to pull up the cannon.

"It's exceptionally exciting. It's a very rare find. There were only about 1,100 of these made before 1750."

The cannon is about 6 feet long and weighs some 1,500 pounds and is believed to be part of La Salle's personal ship, l'Belle, which sank after it was blown adrift during a storm in 1686. The ship was a gift of King Louis XIV of France.

"This is tremendously exciting," Barto Arnold, state marine archeologist with the Texas Historical Commission, said. "It's a once-in-a-lifetime thing for a archeologist to locate a site of this historical importance, this cultural importance. It's every archeologist's dream to find a highly decorated bronze gun like this. It's just a tremendous thrill."

Dave Ball drips water on a cannon believed to be more than 300 years old and from the wreck of a ship that belonged to the French explorer La Salle.

The gun, lifted by a crane from a barge to a trailer draped with a Texas flag, was being taken to a museum in Corpus Christi, about 80 miles away, for restoration. It will become part of an exhibit.

The wreck is believed the second oldest discovered in Texas waters, preceded only by a 1554 wreck discovered off Padre Island.

Thursday's discovery is one of more than 2,000 shipwrecks off the Texas coast, including hundreds in Matagorda Bay, which was a center of commerce in the late 1800s.

Under state law, the Texas Historical Commission and the Texas Antiquities Committee have jurisdiction over recovery and preservation of Texas antiquities.

Rene-Robert Cavelier Sieur de La Salle became renowned as the first European to track the Mississippi River to the Gulf of Mexico. With his expedition in 1682, he claimed all the land drained by the river and its tributaries for France and called it Louisiana after King Louis XIV.

Before that, he had traveled through North America in Canada and as far west as present-day Ohio. He subsequently explored the Great Lakes region and established the first European settlement in Illinois on the Illinois River near what is now Peoria.

In 1684, he sailed from France with four ships and more than 300 colonists to establish a colony at the mouth of the Mississippi.

He missed the river by mistake and in 1685 set up a colony near Matagorda Bay about 80 miles east of what now is Corpus Christi.

Disease ravaged the settlement and the colonists were threatened by Indians.

By 1687, La Salle marched inland in hopes of finding the Mississippi River and he was murdered in Texas by some of his own men.

A pink granite statue commemorating La Salle's Texas expedition stands today near Indianola, a 19th century port that was devastated by hurricanes in 1875 and again in 1886. The community never was rebuilt.

Questions arise over NRA's role in Republican hearings on Waco

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans organizing hearings on the 1993 government raid on the Branch Davidians near Waco found themselves answering questions Thursday over the gun lobby's role in the probe.

A few days before the hearings were to begin, the focus turned to the revelation that the National Rifle Association paid for consultants hired by the Republicans to examine weapons seized from the religious sect's compound after it burned to the ground April 19, 1993.

"It's now very clear that the National Rifle Association is paying for and writing the script of these hearings," said White House spokesman Mike McCurry.

"It's about time that the Congress started asking itself some very serious questions about who is ... paying for these hearings on Waco," McCurry said. "It is absolutely outrageous that the Republican majority in the House of Representatives is subcontracting legitimate congressional investigative work to the National Rifle Association."

Retorted Tanya Metaksa, the NRA's chief lobbyist, "What's astonishing is ... an administration that's refusing access to such evidence."

"The notion that the NRA is paying for a congressional hearing and running it is absurd," Metaksa said in a telephone interview. "We're conducting our own independent investigation."

Four agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and six Branch Davidians were killed in an ATF-initiated raid against the Waco compound on Feb. 28, 1993.

An additional 81 Davidians, including leader David Koresh, died seven weeks later as fire consumed the compound after the FBI tried to force out the occupants with tear gas. The government maintains the fire was set by those inside.

The Clinton administration, which has expressed concern about the conduct of the hearings scheduled to start next Wednesday, faced a deadline this morning from the Republicans to turn over additional documents related to the Waco episode or be served with a subpoena.

"We have reached an agreement with them on the documents that they have sought from us and we are almost finished complying with that document request," Deputy Attorney General Jamie Gorelick told reporters. She said the Justice Department "surely will meet the deadline imposed by the committee for the production of those documents."

On Capitol Hill, Rep. Bill Zeliff, R-N.H., was pounded by reporters' questions on the NRA's role.

Zeliff, one of the two subcommittee chairmen heading the House investigation, insisted he did not know the NRA was involved when his staff hired the consultants this spring.

for labor and occupational information. It also will help organizations to come up with universal definitions for what constitutes disabled or economically disadvantaged, as well as giving organizations tools to evaluate the effectiveness of their programs.

"We want to see regions do it their way and see which practices are best," Froeschle said. "Then we will share tools, models and approaches."

The one-stop concept would include computer programs that contain data and job banks. "About 10 percent of job openings in the state show up at the Texas Employment Commission," Froeschle said. He said other agencies would have access to that information under the TSOICC plan.

One program would help colleges to track and evaluate the success of students in the job market to help administrators ensure that curriculum is applicable to workforce skills.

Taylor said the Private Industry Council operates under one-stop guidelines.

erty," he said. "And they are shooting at each other's cars and marking over other gangs' graffiti."

"Last Thursday, the concession trailer got torn up," Hawley said. "The menus were torn down and the fire extinguisher had been set off inside, ruining it."

He believes some of the same teens may have forced their way into his residence and taken a pistol while his 15-year-old daughter was at home.

"There were some guys that knew my daughter and several others, six guys in all," Hawley said. "My daughter knows not to let anyone in the house when my wife and I aren't there, and she told them that. But they came in anyway."

The pistol was later recovered, but no one was arrested in that instance or in the concession trailer vandalism.

Hawley said a rifle was taken from the residence during Spring Break in March by a 13-year-old, who later confessed to his father and was taken into custody. The rifle, which had been damaged, was returned to Hawley. The juvenile was given one year's probation and must pay $100 in restitution to Hawley.

"The bad thing is a lot of people aren't reporting what is going on," the officer said.

Simply reporting the crime, however, is not going to stop the problem, Hawley said.

"The laws protect these gang members," he said. "They get slaps on the wrists and sent home. And the law doesn't allow the officers to do anything. We won't solve the problem until the laws are changed to protect us, the victims."

"And it became very successful with a lot of records, critically acclaimed Grammy nominations, and Grammy winning records that sold well and allowed us to travel the world, and play our music for a lot of people."

He's optimistic about the future of Storyville.

"We've got a real good band. We play good music. It's original, with the exception of a couple of different cover songs we've done by other people. ... The music comes from a wide range of influences ..."

Stardom is not a central focus in Layton's definition of success. "Success means being able to live the kind of life you would like to and reap the benefits of that life, whatever they might be.

"The fact that I've been able to make a living, and put food on the table for my family, and clothes on their backs, and to be able to keep making a living doing music, which is what I love the most, I feel like that's a real success.

"Somehow it's better to love what you do and not make money, than it is to hate what you do and not make money."

TECH: Lawless meets with alumni

(From 1B)

"That will benefit us, but will also benefit Midland," he said.

Finally, Lawless told alumni about the recent round of Barry Goldwater Scholarships for math and sciences, in which Texas Tech students lead the state.

There were 1,300 nominations nationwide for the prestigious scholarships; only 285 were awarded, he said.

Texas Tech received four of these scholarships, and no university in the country received more than four, Lawless said. "No other school in Texas had more than two," he said.

Only six schools received four of the scholarships — mostly institutions such as Duke and Princeton universities. "That's really prestigious and notable," he said. "That really put us in with some great company."

Teachers voice concerns on student-performance bonus for principals

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Some principals are uneasy with a plan to pay them state bonuses for student performance, Texas Education Commissioner Mike Moses said Thursday after a teacher sharply questioned the idea.

"I've not talked with any principals who asked for that" provision in the new state education law, Moses told the Texas Classroom Teachers Association Leadership Conference.

"I think that principals are going to have a difficult time saying, 'Let's get our test scores up so I can make more money,'" Moses said. "I really think there are some principals who probably feel a little uncomfortable about that."

He said he had read about one principal who was looking at the possibility of dividing any such bonus — which could be up to $5,000 — among campus teachers.

Moses' comments during a question-and-answer session came after a teacher told him she'd just spent her first school year dealing with the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills, the statewide reading, writing and mathematics test.

"I think I can speak for a lot of people in this room that I was extremely disappointed that the legislators are going to give my principal a bonus for my hard work," the teacher said, drawing applause from her colleagues.

Jeri Stone, executive director and general counsel of the teachers' group, said the bonus plan seems odd to many teachers.

"It strikes some people as a strange reward, given that it's the teachers who are getting the bulk of the pressure to perform and get the test scores up. Frequently that pressure comes from the principals," Ms. Stone said.

"Where it's been heavily publicized, we've been getting a fair number of calls," she said of the plan.

Moses said the idea behind the provision was to call attention to the importance of a principal's role on campus. Lawmakers supporting the measure say little has been done in the past to recognize and reward principals.

Teachers want "a good strong principal who's going to keep discipline in the school and let me teach," Moses said.

Moses said when he was a superintendent in Lubbock, his school district had a bonus plan that gave everyone on a campus — from teachers to librarians to principals to counselors — $500 if the school hit its goal for improvement.

"Would I like to see that in this state? You bet I would," he said. "That's not something that's going to happen overnight. It's something to work for."

Moses also told the teachers that public schools face competition in educating children. He cited home schools, private schools and an unsuccessful push in the last legislative session to allow students to use public funds to pay private school tuition.

He said public schools have the best in educators but "if we don't understand that we are in competition for the right to educate, then I think we will be left behind."

Appeals court grants stay of execution for woman convicted in 1980 murder

GATESVILLE (AP) — A preliminary stay of execution was issued Thursday for Pam Perillo, who has been on death row longer than any other woman in Texas.

The stay was issued by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans on Ms. Perillo's two-point appeal, which charges her attorney had a conflict of interest while representing her at trial.

The stay halts all preparations for the execution until the court examines the case more closely. The panel then could halt the execution.

"We're all pleased," said Gerard A. Desrochers, Perillo's attorney in Houston.

The Texas attorney general's office reserved comment on the matter and how it would proceed until after officials there had seen a copy of the order. The attorney general could appeal the stay.

Ms. Perillo, 39, was scheduled to die Sept. 12 for the 1980 strangulation murder of Bob Skeens, a mechanic from Houma, La.

Skeens had been visiting a friend, Robert Banks, when the two men picked up Perillo and her two hitchhiking companions near the Astrodome.

The men took Ms. Perillo, James Michael Briddle and Briddle's ex-wife Linda Briddle Fletcher to Banks' home and offered to let the trio spend the night.

Skeens and Banks left the house to buy coffee and doughnuts. While they were gone, the three hitchhikers armed themselves with guns they found in the house and hatched a scheme to rob the two hosts.

When Skeens and Banks returned, Briddle and Ms. Perillo wrapped a rope around both men's necks and each pulled on one end until both men died.

Briddle was sentenced to die for Banks' death. Ms. Fletcher, who testified against Ms. Perillo at trial and claimed she was loading stolen items into the car at the time of the murders, was convicted of robbery. She was given five years' probation.

Ms. Perillo contends her trial attorney had a conflict of interest because the attorney also represented Ms. Fletcher. Ms. Fletcher testified against Ms. Perillo at trial. Also, Ms. Perillo's appeal contends that she was denied a hearing on the conflict of interest matter.

Ms. Perillo has been on the women's death row unit since 1980. Her execution would be the first in Texas since Chipita Rodriquez was hanged in 1863 for the murder of a horse trader.

Since the death penalty resumed in Texas in 1982, 97 men have been put to death.

Scientists find new marker for risk of sudden cardiac death

DALLAS (AP) — Physicians may better guide the long-term care of people with repaired heart defects now that London researchers have found a new marker for risk of sudden cardiac death, a new report says.

Although the childhood heart defect called tetralogy of Fallot is easily correctable, people with the congenital malady that causes a low oxygen level in the blood still face the risk of a later-life heart ailment.

"We now have a readily measurable, sensitive and specific predictor for patients at risk for life-threatening ventricular arrhythmias (or irregular heartbeats) late after repair of tetralogy of Fallot," researchers say in the report published in the July 15 issue of the American Heart Association journal Circulation.

Variations in waveforms on the electrocardiogram, which provides a graphic record of electrical impulses of the heart, are a marker for people who had the defect repaired, then died suddenly due to irregular heartbeats an average of 16 years later, researchers said.

Dr. Michael Gatzoulis of the Royal Brompton Hospital-National Heart and Lung Institute in London and his associates studied 41 people who had tetralogy of Fallot.

Irregular heartbeats can cause problems after the defect is repaired, causing sudden death later in life in as many as 6 percent of people, the London research team said. But physicians have been without a reliable method to identify those at highest risk who could benefit from antiarrythmia therapy or more surgery.

Dr. Richard Lange, an associate professor of internal medicine at The University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, said such a relatively easy test is valuable in identifying at-risk patients for whom treatments can be developed.

However, more research is needed, he said.

"It's a small number of patients in their study that have these ventricular arrhythmias, so these studies need to be confirmed with studies involving large numbers of patients and from other (medical) centers," Lange said.

Galveston officer who was shot, left for dead quietly returns to patrol

By Chris Williams
The Galveston County Daily News

GALVESTON — Last Aug. 2, very few people thought Charlie Millo would ever work as a police officer again.

Millo

A 21-year-old Galveston man had shot him repeatedly with a shotgun at close range.

"Honest to God, I thought he was dead," said Police Chief Dale Rogers, Millo's former partner and one of the first officers on the scene.

"When I saw the blood running out of his head and into the gutter, then down the gutter, I thought, 'There is no way he will ever be able to come back as a police officer,'" Rogers said.

Millo, a 23-year veteran of the Galveston Police Department, quietly returned to patrol duty at the end of June.

"He has overcome every hurdle a weaker person could not have overcome," Rogers said.

The brutality of the shooting and the handling of the court case of the gunman caught the public's attention. Thousands of people turned out for a fund-raising barbecue and auction for Millo in late August. Hundreds joined him in protesting what they described as a lenient sentence for the gunman.

Millo downplays the attention his story has gotten. "I am not the first policeman to get shot and I will not be the last," he said.

Millo said he was surprised by the public support after the shooting.

"I didn't know there were so many people who cared," he said. The community support helped, he added.

"The mental is a big part (of recovery)," Millo said. "The physical I can do myself. But without the mental, you would not get back at all."

He and police officers from throughout the county marched on the County Courthouse in last August to protest the sentence handed down by state District Judge Roy Engelke after a jury convicted Andre Fletcher of attempted capital murder. Engelke defended the 25-year prison term as well within accepted guidelines.

District Attorney Mike Guarino sought a life sentence. Instead, Fletcher will be eligible for parole in 12-1/2 years. "I didn't get justice," Millo said, "But a lot of people don't get justice."

Millo, a former Marine, has undergone therapy during the past year to repair a badly damaged eye and leg and to erase many of the facial scars left by the shotgun blast. The wounds still hurt, Millo's vision is not perfect and he still carries some scars.

"I will never be the same, but it is not something that is going to hold me back," he said.

The shooting took a toll on his fiancee and his 15-year-old son. "It was a bigger strain on my family than it was on me."

However, Millo finds some humor in the fact that there are still some pieces of bone and shotgun pellets inside his skull.

"It comes in handy at times," he said. "When I forget somebody's name or how to do something, I just say, 'You know, I took a pretty good blow to the head.' "

The city and state paid his medical bills.

Millo said he returned to duty on June 26 without any greater fear of being shot than he had before Aug. 2, 1994.

"The fear, believe it or not, does not bother me," he said. "I fear being caught in a sticky situation where violence could erupt any minute, but that is the same for any officer."

He said he did remember the first time he went back to work as a security guard at Gaido's restaurant, where he was shot. "It was a strange sensation," he said, standing across the street from where Rogers and other officers found him face down.

"It was a little bit of deja vu and a little bit of accomplishment," he said. "I made it back."

Patriotic Program

MIDLAND MASONIC LODGE No. 623
1600 West Wall St. - Midland, Texas
SAT. JULY 15TH-7:30 P.M.

The Masters, Wardens and Secretaries Association of the 81st Masonic District invite you, your family and your friends to attend our first annual patriotic celebration.

Our program will be presented by the Heroes of 76 Lubbock Chapter No. 517, National Sojourners, Inc. The Heroes of '76 will be dressed in their colonial costumes and present a historical review of the flags to freedom for the United States.

The patriotic ceremonies giving a narrative review of the various flags flown in securing our national freedom and independence is one that will be appreciated by all ages - from the school age to our age!

An informal reception will be held in the main dining hall of the Masonic Temple following the patriotic ceremonies.

Please invite your friends and family members who served our country in any branch of the Armed Forces during any period.

We encourage the Service Men and Women to wear their medals, whether in uniform or civilian clothing.

This is our opportunity to show our appreciation to those men and women who have served, and who are currently serving our nation to keep our freedom and the American spirit alive.

We look forward to sharing this special patriotic evening with you.

FAMILY MATTERS

To spank or not to spank is parents' question

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I should have written to you before we went to visit my parents, but I didn't, so I'm writing you after the cows are out of the barn. My oldest son is 7 years old and is very active. I'm used to him and all of his energy, but my parents aren't. So when we are around them he gets on their nerves. Usually what happens is that after about two days my father starts mumbling about that boy needing a good spanking. By the next day my mother usually starts telling me that I need to punish him.

May

To make matters worse, his 5-year-old sister is perfect. She is more like me and can play calmly and entertain herself. My son requires constant supervision, and even then is likely to get himself into trouble. I've already had him tested for ADD and the doctor said that he was borderline ADD, so we decided to not use medication. I think that was a good decision because my parents don't believe in it anyway and none of us want him on drugs.

After spending a week of Hell at my parents' house, this time they've just about convinced me that he does need a good spanking. This time especially he lied about things he did and that really got my parents upset. I've been divorced from their father for almost two years and he says that (our son) never acts like that around him. He says he's willing to support me in whatever I decide to do. So I don't know what I should do. I've always been against spanking because I don't think it's right to hit a child, but now I'm not so sure.

Am I doing more harm than good by letting him keep acting like he does? Right now he says he doesn't ever want to go back to visit my parents, and their attitude says they don't ever want to see him either. I know all of this will pass, but I'm still left with the problem for the next time we're together. What do you think about spanking children? OVERRUN

DEAR OVERRUN: In general, spanking is not considered to be a desirable form of discipline. The basic idea is that children must be taught that "words work" because there will come a time when they will be too big to spank. Another supportive teaching is that they must learn to use words, not force, to solve problems.

Spanking is touted by some to be an acceptable form of discipline when "properly" used. The idea being that the parent is to only administer corporal punishment when he or she is not angry. As a practical matter, how many people do you know who have hit their children without anger? One research study found that children who are spanked are more likely to be more aggressive toward their peers. It suggests that the children may be imitating the parents' anger more than their spanking behavior.

I believe that there are other ways than spanking to teach children appropriate behaviors. I am also the first to admit that some children are much more difficult to discipline than others. Parents of these children must be very consistent in the rules enforced and in the consequences associated with those rules.

The most common discipline method is the time-out chair. The approach is simple and direct: A child is placed in a specific chair — the time-out chair — as a consequence of certain behaviors. The child stays in the chair for one minute per each year of age. I have found that it works best to use a timer that "dings" to mark the end of the consequence. After the time has expired, the parent asks the child why the child was placed in time-out. If the child does not know or is unclear, the parent explains the behavior that resulted in this consequence. You might find Drs. Dinkmeyer and McKay's book, "STEP: The Parent's Handbook," to be helpful in developing a parenting style that will work for you and your son. We want visits with grandparents to be pleasant and special for everyone.

THE FOLLOWING TIPS ON LISTENING TO YOUR CHILD ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Reflective listening lets your child know you have heard the feeling and meaning behind the words.
- Like a mirror, you reflect what you see or hear her saying.
- Establish eye contact and let your body position tell the child that you are listening.
- Stop other tasks and give the child your whole attention.
- Hear and define the feeling
- After listening with full attention, ask yourself, "What is he feeling?" Then think of the word that describes the feeling.
- State the feeling in the form of a full sentence; for example, "You feel sorry because Mickey got hurt."

DEAR ABBY

Dad goes 'by the book' to gain good relations with daughters

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of two daughters, ages 2 and 4, and the wife of a man whose main interests are television, hunting and fishing. He loves his children, but spends very little time developing his relationship with the girls.

Van Buren

A wonderful thing happened a few months ago that I want to share. I am a firm believer that a child's education is not the sole responsibility of the school.

I took my girls to the library (their first visit), and we brought home an armful of books on animals. They started asking questions about the books. The next thing I knew, the girls were sitting in my husband's lap, and he was reading to them.

Much to my surprise, this has resulted in not only less television, but a much improved relationship between the girls and their dad. Now he reads to them every night! (He has even taken them to the library.)

A further benefit is that it has renewed my husband's interest in reading as well.

Abby, keep reminding your readers how important reading is. Some television is educational, but selective reading can be far more beneficial. — A REWARDED READER, FRESNO, CALIF.

DEAR READER: May I quote myself? "If I could give young people one piece of advice, it would be, read, read, read! In reading, you will open up new worlds, real and imagined. Read for information, read for pleasure. Our libraries are filled with knowledge and joy, and it's all there — free for the taking. The person who DOES NOT read is no better off than the person who CANNOT read." — VAN BUREN (1960)

DEAR ABBY: I have often read letters in your column from bereaved parents and other relatives regarding the insensitive and oftentimes cruel remarks made by others. May I add one?

My only daughter died of breast cancer. She was 36. A month later, when I went to my doctor for a routine checkup, I mentioned that my daughter had died last month, and I was still grieving for her.

My doctor said (and I quote him verbatim), "I know exactly how you feel; I had to have one of my little dogs put to sleep last month."

Needless to say, I changed doctors. — APPALLED IN SEATTLE

DEAR APPALLED: Your doctor — like many others —regards his pets as his children. Although he was very insensitive, he meant no harm. Forgive him.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, you advised readers not to put gifts in a box from a fancy store.

Years ago, I received a box of Godiva chocolates. I hid the box until I could enjoy them quietly by myself; I settled in with pillows and a book. When I opened the box, it contained a pair of socks.

I still feel the disappointment. — PAM REITHMAIER, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: I am an African American female. I choose to wear my hair in rows of tiny braids. Abby, it seems as if every time I go out, someone (usually not of African American heritage) asks me questions about my hairstyle — such as, "Do you braid it every day?"

I explain that I can leave my hair in braids for six months. Then they ask me, "Can you wash your hair?"

Abby, I am sick and tired of answering that ignorant question! It amazes me that anyone would think that I wouldn't wash my hair for six months! YES, I wash and blow-dry my hair often.

Perhaps after a few people read this, they will think before asking if one can wash her hair while wearing braids. -- B.C. IN WORCESTER, MASS.

DEAR B.C.: People can be unbelievably naive when it comes to other cultures and other races, but try to be patient as you explain that a braided hairstyle can be shampooed without being destroyed.

Please regard these questions as cultural exchanges, not as criticisms of your personal hygiene.

DEAR ABBY: With microwave ovens so popular today, you would do your readers a great service by answering the following questions.

I notice people opening the oven door without stopping the cooking process. Is this OK, or is it dangerous?

My husband thinks we should not only wait until the cycle is complete, but also wait until the beeping stops before opening the oven door. Is he correct?

Also, is it true that it's dangerous to stand in front of a microwave oven during its operation? — CHRIS K. IN CINCINNATI

DEAR CHRIS K.: I telephoned the General Electric Answering Center on the toll-free line (800-626-2000). The answer to all your questions is "No."

Convention brings singles together

By Lynn Steinberg
N.Y. Times News Service

SEATTLE — They'll be looking for love in all the right places. For a change.

Singles secretly longing to pair up, but too embarrassed to say so, will have a thoroughly modern forum for finding their soul mate.

American Singles, a nonprofit organization in San Rafael, Calif., is teaming up with Great Expectations, the granddaddy of dating services, to stage their first-ever convention for singles bold enough to admit they want to wed.

The event is the brainchild of Rich Gosse, the 46-year-old founder of American Singles, a guy who will tell you he has been happily single all his adult life.

But singledom is not for everyone, and Gosse is a man who knows his market, who senses and capitalizes on his fellow singles' deep and natural yearning for companionship.

FOR MORE than a decade, he has produced assorted galas for the unattached in cities across the country. There have been conventions for single professionals, Christian singles and "romantic eligibles." There have been singles cruises, flirting contests, and a 1993 Singles Expo in Palo Alto, Calif., that drew some 2,000 people. So a convention for marrying wannabes seemed like a logical extension.

"People don't like to admit they want to be married," Gosse said. "They don't want to seem desperate, so they pretend they want to hear the speaker or go to the party. But the real reason people go to these things is to find a mate."

Gosse expects a crowd of several hundred at the Seattle convention tonight. To ensure a good turnout, Gosse is offering an added incentive: a free honeymoon to the first man and woman to announce their engagement.

The marriage contest has some ground rules, though. The betrothed must have been strangers when they met at the convention, and they must actually go through with the wedding.

While the term "convention" may seem like a misnomer for an evening's entertainment, Gosse said the event actually has three separate components — social hour, lecture and dance party. Singles can attend any or all for $20.

THE CONVENTION'S keynote speaker is Al Crowell, a therapist and former Catholic priest who left the church, married, divorced and is now living with a woman he met at a sexuality workshop. She was the instructor.

Crowell's speech will focus on ways to meet new people, sort through potential partners and handle rejection without falling to pieces. It will be drawn largely from his recently published book, "I'd Rather Be Married: Finding Your Future Spouse."

The book is a step-by-step guide for meeting prospective mates and making relationships work. It assumes some singles lack the most rudimentary social skills while others have the gumption to peruse obituaries and contact survivors in their search for a suitable partner.

At 52, Crowell looks like the middle-aged surfer he is — smooth and handsome, not at all the kind of guy who has trouble getting dates.

So he was astonished to see that some people were so paralyzed by their fear of rejection they couldn't bring themselves to break the ice and reach out to meet people they found attractive. That's why his book offers sample opening lines, basics like: "Hi, my name's (blank). I see you here often and always wish I could think of something to say to meet you. You have a great smile."

Or: "I'm terrible at meeting strangers, but I see you here often and have wanted to say hi."

FOR THOSE confident enough to go with the moment, Crowell suggests remarking on a common experience, a striking but not too personal feature, or an unusual situation.

"For instance, standing in line in the supermarket, you may notice the person ahead of you has an inordinate amount of radishes in her cart," he writes. "You could ask what she intends to do with all those radishes."

Once you have the person's attention, you must engage them. Crowell said he often worked his experience as a priest into conversations. He thought women would be intrigued by his background, and they were.

"Look in the mirror," he advises. "What is it that stands out about you? What makes you interesting? What common interests and sympathies could someone share with you? Are you passionate about something and love to meet people who share that passion?

"If your answer to all of these questions is nothing," he writes, "then go get a life for yourself and come back to this project later."

Often the hardest part of any first encounter is what Crowell calls "the closing" — getting a phone number or making plans with a new acquaintance before parting company.

For this, Crowell also offers the verbally challenged some sample lines, ones that worked for him.

"I've really enjoyed this conversation. Could we continue it sometime?"

Or "I feel a nice connection with you. Would you like to get together again sometime soon?"

"You don't have to be original in each situation," he said. "Use the same closing line most of the time."

SORTING THROUGH prospective mates is the next stage in the process, and the part Crowell himself found most difficult. "I had a lot of wonderful starts that ended three or four months later," he said.

So learn from his mistakes. "Finish shopping before you purchase something," he said.

Volunteering adds spice to life

By Lana Cunningham

"Get in here," the man almost growled as he opened the door, and then began laughing. A few steps inside the door, the next greeter was a brightly hued toy parrot that repeated each word.

Sumter Reed let out a hearty laugh again. If only his white beard were longer, the stomach a l-o-t larger and his body attired in a red-and-white suit, he could pass easily for Jolly Old St. Nick.

But it's summer and Reed, clothed in white Bermuda shorts and a white T-shirt, literally was wearing his philosophy of life across his chest. In black letters it stated: "Lines Add Character." and below that was: "Age is Just an Attitude."

For Reed, age brings no limits to what he can do. At 79, he volunteers two hours, three days a week, at the Midland County Courthouse to answer questions from the public. On Thursdays, he volunteers another two hours at the Midland Senior Center as a resource counselor. He walks three miles twice a week, plays golf another two days and goes to church on Sunday. And when he's not busy, Reed is a practical jokester.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Sumter Reed, information volunteer at Midland County Courthouse, assists Patty Chambers with a question.

LEANING BACK in his rocking chair with his feet propped up on the couch, he first chuckles at the image of "old" people living out their lives in rocking chairs. After listing all of his involvements, he said, "that gives me Wednesday and Saturday off."

A school administrator for 40 years, Reed has been busy since moving to Midland four years ago from Gladewater to spend some time with children and grandchildren. But Reed had been involved in volunteer work at Gladewater and Graham, working with the local chapters of AARP (American Association of Retired Persons), the Rotary and the Kilgore Museum, and as a Sunday School teacher. Numerous trophies reflect his skill at tennis and golf. He couldn't just sit still in Midland.

Reed continued his work with the AARP/IRS income tax program, which he has been associated with for 12 years. Pulling out two four-inch-thick notebooks, he showed what he has to study to keep up with all the laws. "I'm an instructor. I go to Dallas in the fall for a week to learn all the new stuff, and then come back here and conduct a school for counselors from several counties. In February, March and April, I work one day a week helping seniors fill out tax returns at the Senior Center."

AND WHEN it's not tax season, he still works two hours a week helping seniors resolve problems with Medicaid/Medicare, supplementary insurance, wills, living wills and income taxes. Reed pulled out another briefcase to illustrate his work there.

"Volunteering ain't easy," he chuckled.

Even at the County Courthouse, he keeps a list of where all the offices are located and what trials are going on in which courtroom.

The County Courthouse was added to his volunteer jobs when he was encouraged to join Community and Senior Services' RSVP (Retired Senior Volunteer Program). Reed went to the orientation and then listened to the list of volunteer jobs. His ear stopped on the Courthouse assignment. "I'm a fine volunteer," he said laughing, "but I'm very selfish. If I don't enjoy it, I'm not going to do it."

From his niche on the first floor, Reed gets a microscopic view of life in Midland. And he tries to add a little spice to it.

"People ask me where the marriage license office is, and I banter with them on the way out and tell them to have a good marriage. I tell jurors coming in for a trial to have a good time on the jury, and they will stick their tongue out at me."

COUNTY JUDGE Jeff Norwood has observed that Reed "is a very pleasant individual who is a wonderful addition to the courthouse family. When people come to the Courthouse, they often don't know which court or which clerk's office to go to. Sumter is very helpful with giving directions and making visits to the Courthouse a little easier for folks. He has a great sense of humor and he's a super person."

He also keeps the courthouse employees wondering what he's up to next. Reed pulled out a business card that he had written on the back: "Objects in mirror are much stupider than they appear." He had placed it in the women's restroom used by employees in Rosenelle Cherry's office. "Oh yes," he laughed, "they got me back."

"My mission in life," Reed said in a calmer moment, "is to try and bring a little sunshine and a little fun into everyone I come into contact with. I feel very sorry for the people who just sit at home. Everyone has a reason for what they're doing. Perhaps they have not adjusted to the circumstances of old age.

"If you are dull and boring, then retirement, naturally will be dull and boring," he reasoned.

REED HAS had to adjust to circumstances in his life. His wife of 56 years, JoNelle, died about a year ago. "I miss JoNelle very badly. I don't grieve for her so much, but I do miss her." He then pulled out a poem they had enjoyed in which it tells the remaining spouse to "enjoy life to the fullest."

"And that's what I'm going to do until I join JoNelle," Reed said, his eyes lighting up again at the thought of getting into some mischief.

Pulling out a red T-shirt with gold letters, he said, "This is really my philosophy in life."

It states: "Age and treachery will always overcome youth and skill."

With Sumter Reed, that is so true.

Low blood pressure can cause problems too

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

Now that hypertension (high blood pressure) — that disabling disease deemed by doctors as disastrous for the aging — has become manageable, let us turn our attention to hypotension (low blood pressure).

Page

This condition constitutes a prime cause for falling, with its dreaded consequences.

It also can create dizziness, fainting, heat intolerance, impotence and fatiguability.

The body's ability to maintain homeostasis (the instant adjustment to maintain all body functions on an even keel, despite changes in position, activity and environment) is a wondrous, complicated mechanism.

As regards blood pressure, this is done by "baroceptors," a sensory nerve ending in walls of blood vessels that then constricts or relaxes on demands emanating from the brain and central nervous system.

In 30 percent of normal older persons, stiffness of the vessels impairs this function, with resultant lack of blood to vital brain centers, causing slowing of the cerebral regulatory mechanism.

Add to this all those persons with pathologic problems such as hypertension, heart disease, diabetes, hyperlipemia and low blood volume from dehydration and summer heat, and you have a real problem.

It is easy to see how prolonged bed rest and sudden changes in position, such as abruptly sitting up, can set the stage for faintness and falls.

Another unexpected factor lies in the fact that after eating, one's digestive tract steals considerable blood from both the brain and the heart, resulting in a diminished coronary oxygenation and defective cerebral regulation of blood pressure.

The commonest pathological cause of symptomatic hypotension is medication, such as anti-hypertensives, sedatives, tranquilizers and mood affecting drugs.

Organic pathological causes are many and include central nervous system disorders such as Shy-Drager Syndrome, Parkinsons disease and multiple cerebral infarcts (small strokes).

Diabetes, alcohol and nutritional disease can play a role, but sometimes no actual cause can be identified.

The goal of treatment is removal of symptoms rather than complete correction of the hypotension.

Adequate fluid intake (eight glasses), particularly in summer, and evaluation of all medications assume prime importance.

One must learn to arise slowly from bed and also flex the lower extremities, perhaps along with elastic stockings and elevation of the head of the bed.

A high salt intake may cause a modest weight gain but frequently proves helpful.

If all else fails, then your family physician can prescribe an agent termed fludrocortisone that definitely helps.

We want you to know

That slow is "the way to go"
And to drink eight glasses of H20.

Exercise is topic at recent World Forum

QUEBEC (AP) — Exercise and physical activity decrease the risk of colon cancer, may reduce women's chances of developing breast cancer and may cut by 50 percent men's risk of dying from cardiovascular disease.

These were among subjects discussed recently here at the 101-nation World Forum on Physical Activity and Sport supported by Mars, Inc. Other topics included:

- Regular physical activity is a better predictor of success in weight management than any other behavioral change, even diet.
- Optimum nutrition to meet energy needs for an active life should include 55 percent to 60 percent in carbohydrate-rich foods, with protein providing 12 percent to 15 percent.

CITYLINE — The Talk of the Town

Agency wants to regulate teen smoking as 'pediatric disease,' officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration wants to regulate teen smoking as a "pediatric disease" and is discussing ways to do it with the White House, officials said Thursday. Talk of imminent action set off a furor in Congress.

President Clinton called "premature" the reports that the FDA had decided to designate nicotine an addictive drug subject to stringent controls. He did say he was awaiting formal agency recommendations on new steps to fight youth smoking.

"My concern is ... the impact of cigarette smoking, particularly on our young people and the fact that cigarette smoking seems to be going up among our young people," Clinton said. "I think we ought to do more about that than is being done."

But no one would say how close the administration was to a decision.

Reaction from tobacco-state members of Congress was quick and fierce, especially to a report in The New York Times that the FDA had made a decision to declare nicotine addictive.

"The FDA has lost its mind," said House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga. "If you want an example of big government interfering, it would be the FDA picking a brand new fight when we haven't won the far more serious fights about crack and cocaine and heroin."

The FDA plays no role in illegal drugs such as cocaine. On smoking, commissioner David Kessler said Thursday the agency has decided its focus "is to find ways to discourage children from starting (smoking) in the first place."

"Smoking begins as a pediatric disease," Kessler said. "Each day 3,000 children become regular smokers and almost 1,000 of them will eventually die."

Kessler confirmed that his agency and White House officials are discussing new ways to regulate tobacco products, with the emphasis on preventing children from taking up smoking.

Plans under FDA consideration include everything from a ban on cigarette vending machines and stiffer package warnings to such advertising restrictions as barring cartoon characters such as "Joe Camel."

A call for FDA to phase out the amount of nicotine allowed in cigarettes — the strictest move the agency could make — is no longer under immediate consideration, sources said. A bill pending in Congress that also would do that is not expected to be approved.

The agency began considering regulating nicotine as an addictive drug last year, but silenced its probe with the Republican takeover of Congress in November. Recently, however, tobacco companies and supportive members of Congress began intensely lobbying against any FDA regulation, as it became clear the probe was far from dead.

"Kessler and the FDA are out of control," said Richard Burr, R-N.C., adding that he would ask Clinton to "rein in Mr. Kessler or ask him to resign."

"That's an exaggerated response to good work addressing the health and science implications of tobacco use," responded White House spokesman Mike McCurry. "That's the responsibility of the head of FDA."

Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., pledged that Congress would "knock down" any FDA attempt at tobacco regulation. Curtailing certain youth-targeted ads and banning vending machines "are all agreeable objectives that can be done through several mechanisms other than" FDA, Rose said.

Even anti-smokers were troubled, questioning whether the early word of the deliberations was merely a White House attempt to gauge Congress' reaction — and whether the FDA was really ready to take significant action to curb tobacco use.

"This appears to be becoming big-league political theater," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., who is preparing legislation to give states the funds to enforce laws banning tobacco sales to minors. "Much more needs to be done than what has dribbled out today."

"Now the administration must decide the political question: Is it going to protect the health of children or the profits of the nation's most powerful special interest, the tobacco companies," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., who last year gave regulators tobacco industry memos that called nicotine an addictive drug.

Separately, the Journal of the American Medical Association said Thursday that internal Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. documents showed that the company schemed for decades to conceal evidence that nicotine is addictive and that smoking causes cancer.

The FDA is gathering evidence that nicotine, a chemical present in all tobacco, acts like a drug by causing addiction, and that the industry carefully controls nicotine levels, from blending different tobacco species to boosting nicotine's punch with such chemicals as ammonia.

The industry denies that it manipulates nicotine, maintaining that different brands of cigarettes provide different amounts of nicotine as a natural result of recipes that dictate taste and tar content. It also denies that nicotine is addictive.

The industry said Thursday it would fight any FDA tobacco regulations. "Tobacco product regulation does not belong, under the law, within FDA," said Tobacco Institute spokeswoman Brennan Dawson.

Studies show 90 percent of the nation's 50 million smokers started before age 18. The government blames smoking for 400,000 deaths a year.

Workers strike at two main Detroit newspapers after negotiations fail

DETROIT (AP) — About 2,500 workers at the Detroit Free Press and The Detroit News walked off the job Thursday after contract negotiations broke down.

Detroit Newspapers, the company that oversees business operations at the city's two main daily newspapers, vowed to continue publishing.

As the 8 p.m. strike deadline passed, workers filed out of both the Free Press and the News buildings, which are about a block apart on the same street.

"I put five years in with this paper, often times putting my life on the line," said News photographer Joe DeVera said. "And to see these adults can't agree on a contract, it's amazing."

"I think the union realizes and so does the Free Press and News that nobody wins in a situation like this," said Free Press Publisher Neal Shine. "It's a lose-lose situation."

As the strike began, hundreds of people marched in front of the News building for about 20 minutes carrying pickets. A smaller group of pickets remained and another group marched in front of the Free Press building later Thursday.

A man with a bullhorn stood on a platform in front of the building. On the side of the platform was a sign reading, "Dignity, Respect, Justice, Solidarity."

Two people were arrested after they were seen breaking windows on a van trying to enter the News' garage, Detroit Police Cmdr. Herman Curry said.

"We don't want any violence and we've advised our members not to engage in any violence," Frank Bortsch, a Teamsters negotiator and spokesman for the unions, said.

Negotiations broke off late Wednesday with no new talks scheduled.

Both sides met in Mayor Dennis Archer's office for more than three hours Thursday afternoon, but no agreement was reached and Archer said there appeared to be five or six key issues keeping the sides apart.

Contracts with the six different unions representing the workers expired April 30 and were extended day-by-day during talks until management terminated that arrangement July 2.

Tim Kelleher, chief management negotiator, said the unions offered to extend the strike deadline if the company reinstated the old contracts during talks. The company rejected that offer.

The striking workers include journalists, mailers, Teamsters, pressmen, photoengravers and printers.

Detroit Newspapers has overseen non-newsroom operations at the News, owned by Gannett Co. Inc., and the Free Press, owned by Knight-Ridder Inc., since 1989.

The papers maintain separate editorial departments under their joint operating agreement, although they publish combined weekend editions.

Detroit Newspapers had said it would publish both newspapers in the event of a strike. Union leaders responded by saying they would pressure subscribers and advertisers to boycott the papers.

Don Kummer, spokesman for Local 22 of The Newspaper Guild, said union members would shadow employees hired by Detroit Newspapers to try to prevent publication during a strike. Local 22 represents 585 newsroom and maintenance employees.

PUEBLO, Colo. — The Pueblo Bighorns of the Texas-Louisiana Professional Baseball League will suspend operations Friday because of declining attendance, the team announced Thursday.

The league also announced the closing of its Laredo, Texas, franchise.

League officials cited severely lagging attendance for ending operations at the beginning of the league's second half of play.

The University of Southern Colorado renovated its field as part of the agreement to bring the team to the Pueblo area.

PV A&M fires coach

HOUSTON — Prairie View A&M University, known nationally for having the worst football losing streak in the NCAA Division I-AA, fired its coach and athletic director Thursday.

Prairie View A&M President Charles Hines notified coach Ron Beard and athletic director Barbara Jacket by letter to vacate their posts by Monday. He made the announcement of his decision the same day in Chicago before a meeting of alumni there.

The two received the notice just hours before they met with reporters to introduce this year's football team. They are to continue their teaching duties.

"The one thing that upsets me more than anything has to be the timing," Beard said from his home in Houston.

The timing comes eight months after Prairie View lost its 46th straight game, leaving the Division I-AA team 0-11 for the season.

Fernandez to Phils

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Phillies signed veteran left-hander Sid Fernandez on Thursday to step into their starting rotation.

Team spokesman Larry Shenk said Fernandez will join the Phillies in Montreal on Saturday. He will replace injured lefty David West. Shenk said Fernandez, 32, might start Sunday in Montreal.

Fernandez, who cleared waivers, had been expected to sign with either the Phillies or the Cincinnati Reds. Phils manager Jim Fregosi said Fernandez was ready to pitch — and hit.

"Sid said he wants to come back to the National League," he told the Delaware County Daily Times. "He likes to swing the bat."

Captains' 19 hits undo Angels

■ George Arias increases his league-leading RBI total to 80, but Midland drops its second game to Shreveport.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The severe power outage the Midland Angels were expected to experience with the rude removal by the California Angels of Texas League home run leader Todd Greene and stolen base leader Jovino Carvajal didn't take place at Christensen Stadium Thursday night. But that was only half the story in the first game of the post Greene-Carvajal era.

The Angels pounded out 12 hits and scored 10 runs without Greene and Carvajal in the first game of the season where both were out of the lineup. However, Shreveport blasted out an amazing 19 hits and 11 runs for a second consecutive victory over Midland, 11-10.

Midland's George Arias moved to within one homer of catching the departed Greene for the TL homer lead with his 25th, a two-run shot in the eighth inning to bring the Angels to within one run at 11-10.

Leon Glenn and Pedro Guerrero then followed with singles to put the winning run on base with no outs. However, Captain reliever Marino Castillo righted his ship and got the next three batters. With two outs Jose Monzon flew out to deep center field where the fleet Calvin Murray, the brother of Texas A&M football star Kevin Murray, made a high grab to save the win.

Shreveport got four hits from Desi Wilson, who is now eight for 15 in the current series. The Caps also got three hits each from Bill Mueller, Marcus Jensen and Tim Florez in an unrelenting attack on four Midland hurlers.

Arias drove in three runs for the game to raise his league leading RBI total to 80 for the season. Basilio Ortiz drove in two runs, one coming on a solo homer in

Non-winner grinds to U.S. Open lead

■ Golfer shoots 66 after nine years without a win on the LPGA tour.

By John Mossman
AP Sports Writer

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Steadfastly taking the low road, Jill Briles-Hinton scrambled her way to the first-round lead Thursday in the U.S. Women's Open.

Briles-Hinton, a non-winner in nine seasons on the LPGA tour, kept her approach shots below the hole en route to a 4-under-par 66.

It was the lowest score ever recorded by a woman on the venerable Broadmoor East course. Previously, Nancy Lopez and Chris Johnson had shot 5-under 68s when the course played to a par-73.

Play was suspended for 1 hour, 17 minutes late in the day because of lightning, with 36 players still on the course. None appeared likely to overtake the leader, and several will have to finish their rounds Friday.

Briles-Hinton missed seven greens but saved par on six of those holes. She birdied five of her last 11 holes to take a one-stroke lead over a quartet of golfers that included 1981 Open champion Pat Bradley and emerging star Annika Sorenstam.

Briles-Hinton, three times a runner-up during her LPGA career, said leaving her iron shots below the hole — even if off the green — was sometimes preferable to hitting greens because of the prevailing severe slope away from adjacent Cheyenne Mountain.

"The greens are so fast," she said. "If you're on the wrong side of the hole, it's very scary. I tried to stay low and below the hole so I could always putt uphill, and it worked.

"If I missed the green on the right side, I didn't worry about it because I knew I would be chipping into the mountain. You could hit a perfect shot and four-putt. I missed quite a few greens, but that was a lot better than putting those downhill 40-footers."

■ Golf Roundup

Joining Bradley and Sorenstam at 67 were a pair of unknowns, Tania Abitbol of Spain and Jean Bartholomew of Garden City, N.Y.

Grouped at 68 were Val Skinner, Kris Tschetter, Julie Larsen and Tammie Green, who overcame the distraction of having a deer dash in front of her as she prepared to hit her tee shot on the 12th hole.

Grace Park, the youngest entrant in the Open at age 16, joined Helen Alfredsson and three-time Open titlist Hollis Stacy among those at 69. Defending champion Patty Sheehan and Meg Mallon, the 1991 Open winner, shot 70.

Leading money-winner Laura Davies, Lopez, Juli Inkster, Amy Alcott and Betsy King were at 2-over 72. Michelle McGann, the tour's No.

Gordon vows to avoid repeat miscue

■ Winston Cup driver seeks third straight win at site of last month's embarrassing loss.

By Dick Brinster
AP Sports Writer

LONG POND, Pa. — Despite his astonishing success this year on the Winston Cup circuit, Jeff Gordon is ready to deal with failure should it strike again at Pocono International Raceway.

Seeking his third straight victory, Gordon returns to the scene of an embarrassing defeat vowing not to let it happen again. While he's making no prediction that he will win, he is promising there's one way he won't lose.

"I can guarantee you that I'm not going to miss a shift," he said amid laughter when asked about his chances in Sunday's Miller Genuine Draft 500. "I do feel like it's a race we lost, one we could have had."

He was talking about the UAW-GM Teamwork 500, a race he dominated last month but lost when a faulty gear-shifting maneuver on a restart in the closing laps broke the engine in his Chevrolet Monte Carlo.

"When I slammed and gassed, it wasn't just exactly right and it jumped back on me," Gordon said. "I took it up to about 8,000 rpms in second gear.

Rangers take Clemens deep

■ Four home runs stake Texas to a lead Boston can't quite make up.

The Associated Press

BOSTON — Texas built an eight-run lead on four homers off Roger Clemens, two by Ivan Rodriguez, then held off the Boston Red Sox 9-8 Thursday night in a matchup of division leaders.

Boston cut the lead to 8-7 with six runs in the fifth and one in the sixth, but Rodriguez singled and scored on Mike Pagliarulo's double in the seventh to make it 9-7.

■ AL Roundup

Juan Gonzalez and Pagliarulo also homered off Clemens (2-2), who allowed four homers for the first time in 335 games during his 12-year career. He has struggled after starting the season on the disabled list and has given up at least four runs in each of his last four starts.

Bob Tewksbury, tied for the AL lead with four complete games, allowed one hit through four innings before fading in the fifth. Dennis Cook (1-0) got the final out of the inning by striking out Troy O'Leary.

Lee's Jordan makes sports writers second team all-state

BRYAN (AP) — Former Midland Lee second baseman Kevin Jordan has been named Class 5A second team all-state by the Texas Sports Writers Association. Jordan hit .337 for the Rebels with 29 RBIs. He helped Lee advance to a Region I semifinal game and a 19-10 record last season in his senior year.

■ TSWA All-State/3C

Jordan made the first team last year.

Grand Prairie pitcher Kerry Wood, whom the Chicago Cubs made the No. 4 pick in the amateur draft, was named player of the year.

Wood, who was 10-0 with an 0.78 ERA and 106 strikeouts, is joined on the squad by teammate Jeff Dover, an outfielder who hit .438 with 32 RBIs.

State champion Sugar Land Elkins was represented by pitcher Ivan Heredia (12-0, 0.42 ERA) and shortstop Steven Truitt (.417 average, 12 home runs, 42 RBIs).

Elkins coach Rick Carpenter was voted Coach of the Year for leading the Knights to a 32-2 record and their first state title.

State semifinalist Corpus Christi Moody placed pitcher Joe Luis Lopez (14-1, 0.80 ERA), second baseman Aaron Gonzalez (.482, 23 RBIs) and third baseman Ricky Hernandez (.481) on the first team.

Rounding out the first-team selections were Lubbock Coronado catcher Brian Fox, Pasadena Dobie first baseman John Scheschuk, Alief Elsik outfielder Will Ford and outfielder Will Blackbird of Austin Westlake.

Former Howard College coach to repay scholarship money

■ Officials say Jeff Kidder misused money to help pay player.

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — A former Howard College basketball coach has been asked to repay the $303 in scholarship money he used to pay for a summer school course for a student trying to become academically eligible at Texas Tech.

Jeff Kidder, who coached at the Big Spring junior college during the 1991-92 and 1992-93 seasons, misused Howard's money to help player Nate Jackson in the summer of 1991, according to a report by Howard officials.

The report said Kidder was trying to help "a coaching friend with his program." Kidder was a student manager for the University of Kentucky basketball program when Texas Tech head basketball coach James Dickey was an assistant coach there.

The document, made public by the college Wednesday, cites Kidder's "inappropriate use" of scholarship money to pay for the work of a student-athlete "who would never play basketball at Howard College."

Kidder, currently an assistant coach at Nevada, could not immediately be reached for comment.

Unearned runs pace Giants over Houston

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco Giants scored three unearned runs in the ninth inning Thursday to tie the game, then beat the Houston Astros 6-5 in the 12th on an RBI single by Barry Bonds.

Pinch-hitter J.R. Phillips led off the 12th with a single off James Doherty (4-2) and was sacrificed to second by Darren Lewis. Robby Thompson was hit by a pitch and Bonds followed with a single between first and second. Phillips easily beat Derek Bell's throw to the plate.

Chris Hook (4-0) pitched two innings, striking out three, for the win.

It was the first time in 29 games this season the Astros lost when leading after eight innings.

The Giants tied the game in the ninth with just one hit. A dropped fly ball and a wild pitch contributed to the San Francisco rally off closer Todd Jones.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 6

PITTSBURGH — Orlando Merced, running on the pitch, scored the go-ahead run from first base on Don Slaught's eighth-inning single as Pittsburgh beat St. Louis Cardinals.

The Pirates failed to hold 4-0 and 6-4 leads, but still withstood Ray Lankford's four RBIs to match a season-high four-game winning streak. They have won six of eight.

Steve Pegues hit a two-run homer to start a four-run second inning and Merced, hitting nearly .500 in July, added a solo shot an inning later off Cardinals starter Tom Urbani.

Reds 11, Cubs 5

CHICAGO — Barry Larkin homered, tripled, drove in three runs and scored three times as Cincinnati opened the second half of their season with a victory over Chicago.

Jose Rijo (5-4) allowed five hits in five innings and also capped a five-run first inning with a two-run single as the Reds stormed right out of the All-Star break and increased their NL Central lead to six games over Houston.

Phillies 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Curt Schilling fanned 10 Thursday night and Philadelphia held off a late Expos charge for a victory, snapping a four-game losing streak.

Schilling (6-5), walked one and allowed four singles in seven innings, including an RBI single to Mike Lansing in the second inning. That made the score 3-1, and he then retired the next 15 batters.

Mets 4, Rockies 2

NEW YORK — Bobby Jones and John Franco combined on a four-hitter as New York held off Colorado to snap the Rockies' five-game winning streak.

Jones (5-6), loser of his last four decisions, pitched 7 1-3 innings and allowed both runs and all four hits. Franco, in registering his 10th save of the season, pitched hitless ball the rest of the way.

Kevin Ritz (7-4), who pitched five innings, was the loser. The right-hander gave up three runs on seven hits.

Marlins 4, Dodgers 0

LOS ANGELES — Chris Hammond pitched a three-hitter and Greg Colbrunn hit a three-run homer as the Florida Marlins handed the Los Angeles Dodgers their 10th shutout loss this season.

Braves 4, Padres 1

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Greg Maddux pitched a five-hitter for his seventh straight win and Fred McGriff drove in all four runs with a single and home run as the Atlanta Braves defeated the San Diego Padres.

The Braves, who lost 2-1 Wednesday afternoon at Pittsburgh, are 10-1 in July.

AL: Rodriquez hits 7th and 8th homers

(From 1C)

13th homer of the year. He has homered in seven of his last 13 games.

In the second, Rodriguez and Pagliarulo hit solo homers on consecutive pitches, and Will Clark made it 5-0 with an RBI groundout.

Clemens settled down, striking out four batters in the next two innings. But in the fifth, he allowed walks to Rusty Greer and Mickey Tettleton and Rodriguez' eighth homer before being relieved.

Boston rallied in the bottom of the inning when Chris Donnels' double and Mike Macfarlane's single put runners at first and third. With two outs, Willie McGee singled in one run and John Valentin walked, loading the bases. Mo Vaughn just missed a grand slam as his bases-clearing double hit about a foot below the top of the left-center field wall.

Jose Canseco then blasted his sixth homer far over the left-field screen off Tewksbury, who entered the game leading the AL with an average of one homer per 45 2-3 innings.

Yankees 7, Twins 2

NEW YORK — Bernie Williams drove in three runs and Jack McDowell won for the sixth time in his last seven decisions night as New York defeated Minnesota.

McDowell (7-5), the ace of the staff ever since Jimmy Key was sidelined by a season-ending shoulder injury, allowed four hits — one of them a homer by Chuck Knoblauch on the first pitch of the game — in seven-plus innings.

Angels 8, Tigers 5, 10 innings

DETROIT — Tim Salmon's three-run homer in the top of the 10th inning gave California a victory over Detroit, keeping the Angels in a first-place tie atop the AL West.

The Angels came back from a 5-1 deficit with two runs in the sixth, one in the seventh and one in the eighth. Salmon had four RBIs and Jim Edmonds had three, including a two-run homer off the light tower above the right-field roof.

Royals 9, Orioles 8

BALTIMORE (AP) — Wally Joyner's RBI double capped a two-run rally in the ninth inning as Kansas City, who earlier blew a six-run lead, beat Baltimore.

Gary Gaetti led off the ninth with his 18th homer, tying the game 8-8 and giving Doug Jones (0-3) his first blown save since May 16.

Brewers 8, White Sox 7, 10 innings

MILWAUKEE — Darryl Hamilton's run-scoring double with two outs in the bottom of the 10th inning gave the Milwaukee Brewers a victory over the Chicago White Sox on a record hot night at County Stadium.

Blue Jays 4, Mariners 1

SEATTLE — The Toronto Blue Jays scored three unearned runs in the eighth inning Thursday night for a 4-1 victory over the Seattle Mariners, who turned the first triple play of the season in the ninth.

AL withdraws ejection edict

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The American League on Thursday withdrew its edict of automatic ejection for any pitcher who hits a batter in the Chicago White Sox-Milwaukee Brewers series.

That kept Brewers left-hander Sid Roberson in the game — albeit briefly — after he plunked Chicago shortstop Craig Grebeck in the second inning. Grebeck, who was struck in his right knee, jogged to first base without incident.

Roberson, whose wild pitch behind Robin Ventura's back allowed a run to score in the first inning, was lifted two outs later following Frank Thomas' two-run homer that gave the White Sox a 6-1 lead.

The decision to return judgment to the umpires delighted Milwaukee manager Phil Garner and Chicago manager Terry Bevington, both of whom denounced the league's decree on Wednesday.

"They took away the automatic ejection if the guy's hit no matter what the circumstances, which is the right thing," Garner said. "I'm perfectly fine and I think Terry's fine to defer to the umpires' judgment."

Bevington said the ruling restored his faith in the game's fairness.

No pain, plenty of gain in Atlanta pitcher's season

ATLANTA (AP) — For the first time in years, Atlanta's John Smoltz is pitching without pain. The evidence is in his words and his statistics.

Buoyed by successful elbow surgery during the offseason, Smoltz believes the best is yet to come.

"I've never felt better. I wish I'd had the surgery two years ago," he said. "I never knew my arm could feel like this — knock on wood."

After struggling to a 6-10 record and 4.14 ERA in 21 starts last season, Smoltz admitted that his right elbow, which had bothered him off and on for two years, was constantly hurting.

He underwent arthroscopic surgery Sept. 8 to remove a large bone spur and some chips from the back of the elbow.

He began throwing lightly in December and didn't miss a beat when the Braves opened their strike-delayed spring training camp early in April.

He is now 7-5 with a 2.78 ERA after losing 2-1 to Pittsburgh on Wednesday.

"No problems. None at all," Smoltz said. "Now that I've had the surgery, my career is ahead of me."

"Coming off elbow surgery, some pitchers are a little hesitant," said pitching coach Leo Mazzone. "There was no fear in John. He was ready early. We started him in the fifth game — he could have gone opening day. He's pitching as well as he ever has."

Maybe better, Smoltz said, or at least more consistently.

"The key question is — did you give your team a chance to win? To me, did I give up three runs or less? That's the measuring stick. I've done that every start but one, so that's satisfying," he said.

After 14 starts, Smoltz is among the National League leaders in wins, ERA and strikeouts.

He believed his statistics and performance made him deserving of an All-Star spot, but he was not chosen.

"It's not something to get upset about," Smoltz said. "I've gone three times. Other than (teammate Greg) Maddux, I feel I've been as consistent as any pitcher in the league. I could easily have 10 wins."

Entering this season, Smoltz had a career record of 78-75 and 3.59 ERA. His two best seasons were 1992, when he was 15-12 with a 2.85 ERA, and 1993, when he was 15-11 with an ERA of 3.62.

"John's way ahead of where we figured he'd be at the (All-Star) break," Mazzone said. "He's got a good shot at putting up the best numbers of his career — wins, ERA, strikeouts."

ANGELS: Manager Wotus ejected

the first.

It looked like Midland was headed for some rough offensive going when the game started since the Captains sent Steve Bourgeois to the mound. He came in with an 8-3 record and a 2.38 ERA, but he was touched for eight runs (six earned) in 4 1/3 innings as the Angels didn't have trouble scoring runs. They just couldn't keep Caps off the base paths.

It was a strange game from the beginning. Shreveport manager Ron Wotus was ejected from the game in the first inning along with Jose Alguacil, a bench player who wasn't even in the game.

Also, Shreveport batted out of order in the fifth inning when Doug Mirabelli took his turn before Tim Florez. Florez then hit after Mirabelli. The Midland coaching staff made no protest and it didn't matter since Mirabelli hit into a double play and Florez grounded to second to end the inning. But what would have happened if Mirabelli had homered with a runner on base? That would have turned into a major mistake for the Angels, who didn't seem to notice the illegal switch in the lineup.

Shreveport now leads the series by a 2-1 margin with two games to play before Jackson comes to town Sunday.

With the loss, Midland fell out of first place in the second half TL West race, 1/2-game behind surging Wichita, who defeated Tulsa 8-3 Thursday night.

Midland will sent Ryan Hancock (8-4, 4.38) against Shreveport's Jamie Brewington (7-3, 3.11) at 7 p.m. today.

This series could be a preview of the Texas League Championship series. Shreveport won the first half of the East Division while Midland won the first half of the West. Both have already assured themselves of being in the playoffs by virtue of the first half titles. And the way things went Thursday, it could be one wild championship fling if it ever came about.

Western took the game on the ten-run rule and went 4-0 in the tournament. It will play the winner of District VII in the Sectional Tournament Thursday in Abilene at 7 p.m.

The team took its next game 6-5 over El Paso Frank Manning with Pearson getting the win. Wednesday the Junior Division champs beat Odessa Floyd Gwin 12-3 with Danny George getting the win and Tim Keller hitting three singles.

Midland Western in championship

Midland Western beat Odessa Sherwood 8-2 Thursday night to advance to the Little League District III Senior Division tournament championship game.

The championship game will be tonight at 8 at Simon Field. Western will take on either El Paso Frank Manning or Odessa Sherwood who meet in an elimination game at 6 p.m.

Midlanders earn net berths

Five Midlanders have been selected to represent the Texas Tennis Association at the USTA boys and girls 12 Zone Team Championships in Oklahoma City on July 22-28.

Lilien Vo, Becky Valdez, Marcos Valdez, Ginny Wilkinson and Haley McClung are the Midland netters selected.

The event will bring players together from Texas, Missouri Valley, Northwestern and Intermountain tennis associations. The five local players were among the top 30 in a field of 700 12-year-old players in the Texas section.

Twelve girls and 12 boys will advance from this tournament to the USTA boys and Girls 12 Challenge Cup in Boca Raton, Fla., Aug. 14-20.

Locals hit aces

Midlander George Smith recently had a hole-in-one at the River Hill course in Kerrville while playing with friends. He used a 7-iron to ace the 140-yard No. 2 hole.

Smith was playing with Betty Ewan and Don Ewan. Ironically, Betty had a hole-in-one on the same hole just a year ago — but she used her driver.

At Hogan Park, Mary Ellis hit a hole-in-one Monday using a 3-wood on the 145-yard No. 9 hole. The shot was witnessed by Cleva Brown, Gene Conner and Ginny Glenn.

Watzl, Purser named all-state

Midland Greenwood first baseman Andy Watzl and third baseman Rusty Purser were both named to the Texas High School Coaches Association Class 3A All-State first team.

Watzl was a four-year letterman for Greenwood, and helped lead the Rangers to a 19-11-1 record and a playoff run which landed them in the Region I championship game.The award comes just three days after Watzl was named to the sports writer's all-state team.

He hit .505 during his final season with the Rangers with 10 doubles, three triples and two home runs while driving in 30 runs. He also fashioned an 8-4 record on the mound with one save.

Purser, also a senior, was also a District 8-3A all-district selection at third base.

New Jersey owner John McCullen announces Thursday the Devils agreement to stay in Meadowlands Arena for one more year.

New Jersey to stay put

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Devils will be staying right where they are for at least one year.

However, the Stanley Cup champions need to secure a $25 million loan by mid-September or the tentative agreement to keep them in New Jersey for the next 12 years could fall apart after one year, sources told The Associated Press.

After months of heated negotiations and threats of a move to Nashville, Tenn., the Devils and their landlord announced on Thursday the team will play in Meadowlands Arena next season and have the framework of a deal to keep them there through 2007.

"The Devils are staying," NHL commissioner Gary Bettman, a major player late in the talks, said during a news conference.

Nashville Mayor Phil Bredesen said he was disappointed the Devils decided to stay in New Jersey, but that the city's offer stands for any NHL or NBA team. He said his office has been getting calls from interested franchises.

"We want an NHL or NBA team in Nashville and I think when our arena opens next year, we'll have a team," the mayor said.

OPEN: Briles-Hinton's 32 includes three birdie putts

(From 1C)

2 money-winner this year, shot 73, as did Dottie Mochrie and Beth Daniel.

Briles-Hinton needed only 26 putts, saving par with putts of 12 and 15 feet on the first two holes. She took her lone bogey at No. 3 after driving into trees. She hit a 9-iron to two feet at No. 8 to start her birdie binge, then reached the 468-yard par-5 ninth in two and two-putted for another birdie.

Her 32 on the back nine included birdie putts of 15, 15 and 21 feet, and she also got up and down three times.

"I was extremely lucky today, but it wasn't an out-of-the-blue round," Briles-Hinton said. "I've been playing pretty consistent, and I've worked hard on my short game since going to a clinic last November."

Briles-Hinton of Fort Myers, Fla., had to qualify for this year's Open and was making her first Open appearance since 1988.

"I'll probably sleep on it, think about it and get nervous (for the second round)," she said.

Senior Players

DEARBORN, Mich. — Jerry McGee, Bob Charles and Bob Zimmerman shot 4-under-par 68s in the Senior Players Championship on Thursday, a day that saw almost half of the 78-man field shoot par or better in the opening round.

Dave Stockton, who has won this event two of the last three years, predicted low scoring at the year's final senior major and he was one of seven players one stroke off the lead.

Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Robin Freeman, who worked as a club pro for five years because he wasn't ready for the PGA Tour, shot a 6-under-par 65to take a share of the first-round lead in the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Dudley Hart and Richard Zokol also turned in 65s on the River Course of Kingsmill Golf Club, one shot better than Kirk Triplett, Jim Carter and former UCLA teammates Scott McCarron and Duffy Waldorf. Scott Hoch was one of three golfers at 67 and there was a group of 14 who had 68s on the 6,797-yard layout.

Sciandri sets fast pace, takes 11th stage

■ Tour de France

SAINT-ETIENNE, France (AP) — The Tour de France competitors were in a hurry to get away from the mountains Thursday as Maximilian Sciandri set a fast pace in winning the 11th stage and Miguel Indurain retained the overall lead.

Sciandri, of Britain, was timed in 4 hours, 43 minutes, 15 seconds, for the 124-mile stage from Bourg d'Oisans to St. Etienne. It was his first stage victory in this Tour.

Sciandri was part of a small group that built up a nine-minute advantage by going off on a breakaway at more than 32 mph. The usual average is about 25 mph.

Although by the end of the stage the speed had slowed, the riders were still more than a half-hour ahead of schedule.

Colombian Hernan Buenahora finished second after riding almost 93 miles alongside Sciandri. Germany's Rolf Aldag was third, nearly three minutes ahead of fourth-place Andrea Tafi of Italy and the Netherlands' Erik Breukink.

With the majority of the main contenders finishing in the pack almost six minutes behind, there were no changes in the top 15.

HC: Officials take up case after story

(From 1C)

Howard officials said the report would serve as the school's comment.

Howard officials took up the case following a story by the Houston Chronicle that said Jackson, a 6-foot-9 forward, took a correspondence Spanish course at Howard even though the school typically doesn't offer such classes.

The credit enabled Jackson, who said he never was required to pay tuition or fees at Howard, to become eligible at Tech for the 1991-92 season, Dickey's first as head coach of the Red Raiders.

NCAA rules prohibit coaches and other school representatives from helping recruits obtain special academic arrangements not generally available to others.

The NCAA also bars coaches and school representatives from paying for, or arranging to pay for, recruits' pre-college educational expenses.

An internal review by Tech concluded that its coaches didn't break any NCAA rules.

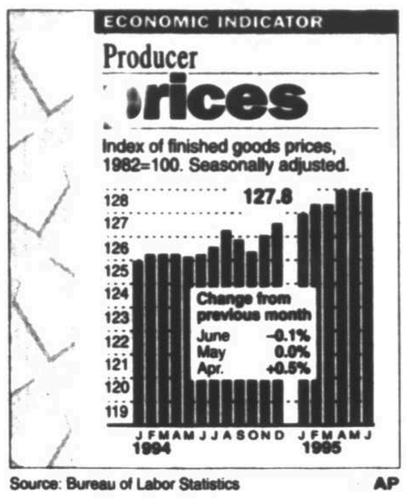
Cheaper energy, fruit lead price drop



Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics AP

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Wholesale prices declined in June for the first time in eight months, helped by a big drop in energy prices and the largest fall in fruit prices in 15 years.

The benign inflation news Thursday was seen as welcome confirmation for the Federal Reserve that its switch last week from fighting inflation to fighting recession did not mean it was abandoning the price battle prematurely.

Analysts predicted the 0.1 percent decline in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index in June and expected good news Friday on retail prices would give the Fed room to cut interest rates further to ward off a recession.

"The Fed can feel justified about their decision to ease policy last week. Inflation remains subdued," said Bruce Steinberg, an economist at Merrill Lynch in New York.

The small decline in the PPI, which measures inflationary pressures before they reach the consumer, followed no change at all in May and a steep 0.5 percent rise in April. It marked the first time wholesale prices had fallen since a 0.4 percent decline last October.

Paul Getman, an economist at Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa., said he believed the various economic reports show the country should be able to avoid a recession with inflation in check for the rest of the year.

"The drop in the PPI for June reflects the slowing in the economy that the Fed has engineered over the past 18 months. Consumer and producer prices should be modest for the rest of the year because the economy slowed more than had been expected," he said.

Through the first six months of this year, wholesale prices have been rising at an annual rate of 2.1 percent, only slightly worse than last year's 1.7 percent increase.

With financial market fears of inflation receding in recent weeks, long-term rates have been falling, giving a lift to the housing market.

The national average for 30-year mortgages dipped to 7.41 percent this week, the lowest level in 16 months.

The June price drop was led by a 1 percent fall in energy prices after a smaller 0.2 percent drop in May. Gasoline prices retreated 3.1 percent, the best showing since a 4.7 percent plunge last October, and heating-oil prices were down 5.8 percent.

Food prices dropped 0.3 percent last month, the fourth straight monthly decline. Fruit prices fell 13.5 percent, the biggest fall since October 1980.

Prices retreat

Natural gas futures prices slumped Thursday in anticipation of waning demand for abundant supplies after this week's heat wave subsides.

Forecasts for normal to below-normal temperatures in heavily populated U.S. regions in coming weeks could lead to less consumption of natural gas for electricity to run air conditioners, analysts said.

Crude oil futures also fell as disenchanted traders abandoned their view that the market had bottomed out.

Wholesale natural gas for August delivery dropped 4.9 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange to $1.487 per 1,000 cubic feet. The sell-off returned prices to levels of a week ago, before sizzling temperatures in the nation's midsection triggered a rally.

Traders also reacted to an industry report that showed natural gas going into storage at a higher rate than they expected. The American Gas Association reported on Wednesday, after trading ended, that 115 billion cubic feet of gas went into storage last week.

In other energy trading, West Texas Intermediate for August delivery fell 24 cents to $17.25 a barrel. Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $15.50.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The German central bank's refusal to lower interest rates sent the dollar into a tailspin Thursday, although it nearly recovered in late trading against the Japanese yen.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 87.40 yen, down from 87.43 late Wednesday. The dollar also was changing hands at 1.3891 German marks, down from 1.4030.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday: 1.1592 Swiss francs, down from 1.1680; 4.8440 French francs, down from 4.8795; 1,616 Italian lire, down from 1,620, and 1.3625 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3558.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5998, up from $1.5915.

Stocks inch up

NEW YORK — Blue-chip stocks crept to record gains on Thursday despite widespread profit-taking. Computer-related stocks continued to show strength, pushing some broad indexes to record highs as well.

The Dow Jones industrial average ended up 0.19 at 4,727.48, barely topping its record high close of 4,727.29 made just the day before.

Declining issues edged out advancers on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume came to 397.48 million shares, compared with 412.22 million on Wednesday. On the Nasdaq Stock Market, volume set a record again at 530.104 million shares.

The strength in computer issues allowed most broad-market indexes to top record highs posted on Wednesday.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 0.11 to 561.00. The Nasdaq composite index rose 5.52 to 994.15. The American Stock Exchange's market value index rose 1.73 to 515.93.

But the NYSE's composite index fell 0.14 to 299.79.

Southwest to fly Midlanders to 3 Fla. cities

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Midland air travelers will soon be able to fly to Florida via Southwest Airlines. Southwest said Thursday that it would begin air service to three cities in Florida in the first quarter of 1996.

Southwest Chairman Herb Kelleher said he was making good on a promise to customers to initiate air service to the Florida and was making the announcement early enough for customers to take advantage of it.

Daily flight service will begin with 26 total daily flights from Tampa and Ft. Lauderdale, followed by 19 flights from Orlando in the second quarter of 1996. Fares and frequencies will be announced in early fall.

Kelleher said the new service was possible because of the delivery of 10 new aircraft from Boeing. He said he expected the Florida business to grow in a similar fashion to other new city start-up which offered Southwest's low fares and frequent flights. He also noted that he expected the new service to improve boardings in other markets served by Southwest, such as Midland-Odessa. He called the move a natural extension of its present route system.

Said Carroll Thomas, manager of business development for Midland International Airport: "Southwest has a history of stimulating markets when they enter them, and since Southwest carries over 70 percent of our boardings, we would expect it to have a positive effect on boardings in Midland."

Presently American Airlines and Continental are the only two carriers serving the Florida market from Midland.

Thomas said Florida was already a popular destination for Midlander with its beaches, Disneyworld and Miami as a jumping off place for South American travel and Caribbean cruises. He said

Orlando is currently Midland's 25th most popular destination, Miami 32nd and Tampa 44th. Thomas said Southwest's entry into the market is expected to bring them up in popularity.

A spokesman for Southwest said it did not have the full particulars yet, but Midland travelers probably would go to Tampa, through Houston an, New Orleans. He said he did not know either if customers would have to change planes.

The new Florida service will connect with Baltimore-Washington, New Orleans, Nashville, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Louisville and Birmingham.

Dallas-based Southwest now serves 45 cities in 22 states.

Software firm moves into home banking

By Edward Iwata
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — In the largest home-banking deal yet, Intuit Inc. will announce Friday an alliance with 20 top commercial banks and other financial institutions, The Examiner has learned.

The banks and financial companies — including some of the nation's largest: Citibank, Wells Fargo, First Interstate, American Express, Sanwa and others — will offer to consumers Intuit's Quicken software, the most popular personal-finance program on the market.

The vast deal should vault Menlo Park, Calif.-based Intuit past Microsoft Corp. into a dominant lead in the fast-growing market of on-line banking by personal computers.

In May, Microsoft abandoned its plans to buy Intuit for $2.1 billion after legal opposition from the U.S. Justice Department. The government alleged that the acquisition would create a monopoly for Microsoft, the world's largest personal-computer software maker.

"Clearly, this really benefits Intuit," said Betty Lyter, an industry analyst for Montgomery Securities in San Francisco. "They got tremendous visibility from the (failed) Microsoft transaction, and now they have a strong relationship with many leading banks."

In the frenzy to enter home banking, Microsoft recently announced similar, smaller deals with Bank of Boston, Chemical Bank and other financial institutions. Microsoft will offer its "Money for Windows 95" software to customers via banks.

San Francisco-based BankAmerica, California's largest bank and the nation's second largest financial institution, is not participating in the deal.

BankAmerica and NationsBank announced in July a $35 million agreement with MECA Software, which has a small share of the personal-finance market.

That deal now looks like "a premature decision," Lyter said.

In the Intuit deal, sometime this fall individual customers and small business owners will be able to use an updated version of Quicken software, giving them on-line access to their bank accounts.

Using personal computers and modems, they'll be able to download financial data from the bank into their personal-finance software for organizing their financial records.

Bank customers will be able to use Quicken on all major operating systems, including Windows 3.1, Windows 95 and Macintosh.

The software also will give consumers greater flexibility on Quicken's Financial Planner software.

It was not known how much the new home-banking service will cost customers.

Analyst Lyter said that banks will pay Intuit a monthly fee per customer.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

IRS treats intrafamily loans as standard agreements

By Bill Doyle

Q: We plan to lend money to our daughter to help her buy a house and do not wish to run afoul of the Internal Revenue Code rules on the interest rate to be charged. The loan will be for at least $100,000 at a 30-year fixed rate.

Doyle

IRS Publication 550 refers to the applicable federal rates (AFRs) published in the monthly Internal Revenue Bulletin as the interest required to be charged.

The local IRS office did not have a current copy of that bulletin and located an old copy — but could not explain the figures. Calls to the IRS toll-free phone number and our bank's mortgage department provided no help.

Do you have any guidance on finding the current AFRs and determining the proper AFR to charge?

A: A spokesman for the IRS public information office in Washington points out that the Internal Revenue Bulletin is a weekly — not monthly — publication. He says the AFRs, which can change monthly, are printed in the bulletin the week before or immediately after the start of each month.

I suggest you march back to your local IRS office and insist that the civil servants there find the most recent bulletin.

For a term loan such as you are considering, the AFR is the one in effect the day the loan is made. You will be required to charge your daughter the long-term AFR, which applies to loans for more than nine years. Besides that, there is a short-term AFR for loans of three years or less and a midterm AFR for loans of more than three and up to nine years.

If you don't charge at least the AFR and the IRS gets wind of the deal, you will have problems on two tax fronts:

- It would be assumed you gave your daughter an amount equal to the "forgone" interest on the loan. And that might subject you to the complicated federal gift tax.
- You would have to pay income tax on "imputed" interest equal to the AFR — money you never received. There would be a glow of silver lining in that dark cloud: Because it would be a home mortgage, your daughter would be able to take an interest deduction on her tax return.

All this might come as a surprise to many families in which large no-interest or below-market-rate loans have been a way of life for generations and, no doubt, will continue to flourish in the future.

Nonetheless, members of such families should be aware of the problems they will face if the revenooers catch them making overly generous loan arrangements.

Q: Are there any exceptions to those harsh rules about tax on imputed interest loans?

A: No interest is imputed on a "gift loan" of up to $10,000 to a family member or friend if the money is not used to buy or carry an income-producing asset. And no interest is imputed on gift loans totaling $100,000 to one person when the borrower's annual net investment income is not more than $1,000.

The main purpose of the rules is to collect tax when businesses make generous loans to top brass, such as huge loans to chief executives. However, certain low-interest loans given to employees to purchase new homes in connection with moves to new job locations are exempt from the imputed-interest requirements.

Q: I have been saving money for my son, so he will be able to make a down payment on a home. As of now, I have the money in a separate bank account, in my name "in trust for" him.

Any suggestions?

A: Assuming you fully intend to give the money to him, do so now in gifts not exceeding $10,000 a year — $20,000, if you and your spouse make the gifts jointly. That way, you'll avoid gift tax red tape.

Q: We have a country home, where we spend our weekends. My husband says we can't take an income tax deduction for real estate taxes on that home, since we take them for the home in which we reside all year.

Is this so, or have we been losing out all these years?

A: You're entitled to itemized deductions for all real estate taxes you pay — on both properties. File federal income tax Forms 1040X for three years to recoup some of the tax you should not have paid.

Opening lead: Ten of ◇ "Remarkable hand," observed the kibitzer. "If the finesse is right, there's no need to take it." This was the deal that caused such a strange comment.

Note South's conservative response to North's takeout double. Since the double was in the balancing position, it could be made on as few as 10-11 points. When North confirmed a full-strength double by raising to two spades, South wasted no time in bidding game.

West led the ten of diamonds, won in the closed hand with the king. Declarer tabled the queen of spades and, when West followed low, shot up with the ace from dummy to fell the king. A suspicious East inched further back from the table.

The rest was routine. Even though the ace of hearts was wrong, declarer lost only two hearts and a club. Was picking off the singleton king a case of divine inspiration or excellent eyesight?

Actually, declarer simply exhibited good technique. The only key cards were the king of spades and ace of hearts. Since West did not respond to partner's opening bid, the defender could hold one of those cards, but not both.

If that card was the king of spades, the ace of hearts was with the opening bidder, and declarer's play would have led to the loss of a trick in each suit except diamonds. If West held the ace of hearts, the only shot for the contract was to find East with a singleton king of spades.

'Another World' actress Linda Dano ends 25-year eating-disorder battle

NEW YORK — Linda Dano ended 25 years of eating disorders after a downward spiral triggered by her father's battle with Alzheimer's disease.

Linda Dano resolved to break the pattern of eating disorders.

Dano, who plays Felicia Gallant on "Another World," told Soap Opera Digest in the Aug. 1 issue that she ballooned to 170 pounds in 1992.

As her father grew more ill, she engaged in "drive-by binges."

By 1994, "I'd leave the 'Another World' studio and pull into McDonald's on my way home. Then I would make dinner for my mother, my husband and myself," the Emmy winner said.

In July of that year, she "had a long talk with myself. ... I was on a self-destructive road of guilt over my father's illness and I was abusing myself."

Dano, 52, said she resolved last summer to break the pattern. She hooked up with a doctor who is teaching her control.

"After all of those years on the diet seesaw, I'm a little afraid," she said, "but this time I think it is going to be OK."

NEW YORK — Alicia Silverstone, the seductive young star of the movie "The Crush" and three Aerosmith videos, is turned off by sex in the media.

"When I see some superstar actress and some superstar actor doing a love scene, it makes me want to close my eyes," the 18-year-old said in an interview in Sunday's Parade magazine.

"I don't know a lot about sex, because I'm a little girl," Silverstone said. "But what I do know is that when I was younger and I thought about what I wanted when I grew up, it was going to be romantic and beautiful. And private. And it's none of those things anymore. Sex in the media disgusts me at this point."

Silverstone played a sex kitten in the Aerosmith videos and a psychopathic youngster who stalks her mother's boarder in "The Crush."

PASADENA, Calif. — Lacey Chabert, the 12-year-old co-star of Fox's "Party of Five," knows how to cope with loneliness on the set: She gets her dog on the phone for a chat.

Lacey plays the talented, brash Claudia Salinger in the drama about a family of five children struggling to stay together after the death of their parents.

Her character, a gifted violinist, is separated from her peers because of her talent and maturity. Lacey's own skill has put her in the spotlight with young fans.

"It's scary to hear them say, 'I look up to you, you're my idol,'" Lacey said Wednesday during a meeting of TV critics.

An FBI spokesman wouldn't comment Wednesday, but attorneys in the case confirmed the investigation.

Mike Klein, who is in an ownership battle with Eazy-E's widow, has heard allegations that master tapes were being taken from the company and unauthorized records were being cut, said Klein's lawyer, Larry Feldman.

"We are cooperating with the FBI and we will give them every bit of information that we know," Feldman said.

Jamie Broder, an attorney for the widow, Tomica Woods-Wright, and her co-trustee of the estate, Ronald Sweeney, said her clients were cooperating.

Eazy-E, whose real name was Eric Wright, died of AIDS on March 26 at age 31.

Sinatra is selling off stuff from the Palm Springs, Calif., house he and his wife, Barbara, recently sold. Paintings, Faberge collectibles and a 1976 Jaguar will also be offered at the auction.

Emtman just wants full year

■ Oft-injured Colt defensive lineman tired of medical talk.

ANDERSON, Ind. (AP) — All Steve Emtman wants is a full season of football.

The No. 1 pick in the 1992 NFL draft is weary of talking about the injuries and surgeries that plagued him during his first three years with the Indianapolis Colts.

"I'm ready to go," said Emtman, who reported to training camp Wednesday physically ready for practice for the first time since his rookie season. "I want to play."

Emtman has made several trips to the operating room, starting with reconstructive surgery on his left knee after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament as a rookie.

Five games into the 1993 season, he tore the anterior cruciate ligament, the medial collateral ligament and a tendon in his right knee.

After going through sometimes "torturous" rehabilitation following reconstructive surgery of the right knee, Emtman played for the first time in nearly a year last October. But, after four games, it was back to surgery for a herniated disc in his neck.

"I don't want to talk too much, I just want to go out and let my actions speak for themselves," said Emtman, who is expected to contend with first-round draft pick Ellis Johnson for time at defensive end. "It's time to play. I've got the confidence back in my body."

What makes his injury problems more bizarre is the fact that the 6-foot-4 Emtman never missed a game because of injury while starting two years on Cheney High School's basketball team or three years on its football team in his home state of Washington.

He also was available for every game during three seasons at the University of Washington, where he helped lead the Huskies to a share of the national championship and a 12-0 record as a junior while winning the Lombardi Award and Outland Trophy.

"I don't think there's any player I've been associated with in football who has worked harder to prepare himself physically and mentally to play," coach Ted Marchibroda said.

"He could walk away from football today financially secure. But he loves the game."

GORDON: Driver's spirit not broken was in there, and it wasn't. It just bent all the valves and broke springs and everything else."

What it didn't break was the spirit of a 23-year-old driver taking the Winston Cup circuit by storm this year. He is seeking a victory that would extend his series-best total to six this season and add to his lead in the driver standings.

"I'm back with the same attitude I had coming in the first time," he said. "I guess that (shifting) is something I'll take a little more time with the next time."

But as Gordon attempts to win his eighth pole in 17 events this year, he is mindful of the changing conditions at the 2 1/2-mile track nestled high in the mountains of eastern Pennsylvania. It is generally warmer for the July race than in June.

"I've been here and run right up front all day long the first race," he said. "The next time we took the same car with the same setup, and I couldn't do it.

"In June, I didn't think the car was going to run that good. Still, we've got a different car this time."

After his victory last Sunday in the Slick 50 300 at New Hampshire International Speedway, Gordon has 2,373 points in the chase for the season's $1.3 million Winston Cup title. Sterling Marlin is 35 points behind and 52 ahead of seven-time series champion Dale Earnhardt.

Gordon's stiffest competition Sunday should come from his Hendrick Motorsports teammates Terry Labonte and Ken Schrader; the Chevrolets of Earnhardt, Marlin and Bobby Labonte, and the Ford Thunderbirds of Rusty Wallace, Geoff Bodine and Roush Racing teammates Mark Martin and Ted Musgrave.

Schrader won the pole in June with a speed of 163.375 mph. Terry Labonte was the beneficiary of Gordon's missed shift.

Bodine is the defending champion and a three-time winner at the troublesome triangular layout. Wallace won the June race last year, and his qualifying lap of 164.568 for that event is the track record.

Qualifying for positions 1-20 is scheduled for Friday, with positions 21-38 to be filled Saturday. Provisionals could swell the field to as many as 43 cars.

Time trials also will be held Friday for the NASCAR Sportsman division event later that afternoon and for Saturday's ARCA race.

WR Sanders signs with Dolphins

The Associated Press

MIAMI — Wide receiver Ricky Sanders, the nine-year pro who played for Atlanta last season, signed a two-year deal with the Miami Dolphins Thursday.

Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

■ NFL Notes

"I think we have an opportunity to make it to the Super Bowl and win the Super Bowl," Sanders said. "That's why I'm here."

Sanders joins Randal Hill and former Washington teammate Gary Clark as free agent wide outs signed by the Dolphins since last season. Irving Fryar and O.J. McDuffie remain Miami's top receivers.

Sanders should bolster the receiving corps because Scott Miller is out for the season with a left knee injury.

Bengals change for RB

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Bengals have changed their playbook to fit Ki-Jana Carter. They're counting on the productive running back to lead the team's long-awaited turnaround.

First, they have to sign him.

Carter, the top pick in this year's draft, is unsigned with only three days left before the Bengals open training camp. The Bengals created a stir in April by trading up to get Carter — the second time in two years that they got the top pick overall.

Last year, it took the Bengals only 11 days to sign defensive lineman Dan Wilkinson. General manager Mike Brown made a major concession and agreed to two voidable years in Wilkinson's six-year, $14.4 million contract.

Chiefs sign Thompson

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Running back Leroy Thompson signed a two-year contract with the Kansas City Chiefs on Thursday.

Thompson, an unrestricted free agent, played for the New England Patriots last year, catching 65 passes for 465 yards and five touchdowns and rushing for 312 yards and two touchdowns.

Fall TV season unaffected by Dole attack

By Lynn Elber
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Oh, those devilish trick questions, like the hoary "How long have you been beating your wife?"

Or asking folks in the TV industry if the latest assault on Hollywood values, courtesy of presidential contender Bob Dole, will influence the fall season.

The networks flatly refuse comment; they're not wading into that quagmire, one executive helpfully explains.

But some producers are willing to respond. In television's annual ritual of reinventing itself, Dole's complaints about pop culture's sex-and-violence fixation will go unheeded, they say.

They also seek to reframe the query: Is there a problem, who's making the claim and what's being left out of the equation?

Conservative media watchdogs are as eager to broaden the debate: Are criticisms like Dole's or former Vice President Dan Quayle's cumulative in their effect, and is TV becoming more open to rightist influence?

First, from the West Coast, the voice of the Cultural Elite.

"One of the great myths is that there are these pigeon-like flutterings and everybody goes nuts," said Dick Wolf, who has series on NBC ("Law & Order") and Fox Broadcasting Co. ("New York Undercover").

The networks haven't issued a post-Dole call for producers to avoid the bawdy or bloody, say Wolf and others.

Neil Young's latest album features Pearl Jam as backup band.

Young makes a career out of unpredictability, change

By Neil Strauss
N.Y. Times News Service

WOODSIDE, Calif. — It was a sunny but chilly afternoon, and Neil Young was twisting up and down the hilly roads of this rural retreat an hour south of San Francisco in his pristine 1960 Lincoln Continental.

One hand on the wheel, the other near his aching back, he was on his way to his chiropractor's office in San Jose when suddenly the convertible screeched off the side of the road.

Young gave the wheel a mighty turn to the left, and within seconds he was on the road again, heading back in the direction he came from.

"There's no way I'm going to make it to San Jose and back here again, especially during rush hour," he said as he accelerated back up the pine-lined mountain road. "No matter how much you need to do something, sometimes you just have to change your mind. And it's O.K. to change your mind."

Young's career has always been one of surprise and unpredictability, mainly because of his frequent shifts of mood and mind. Every statement Young makes he may one day retract; every style of music he plays he may eventually disavow (only to return to it again in the future); every musician he plays with he could some day desert.

From his myriad reunions with Crosby, Stills and Nash to his constant breaking up and re-forming of his band Crazy Horse to his eagerly awaited new album (his 38th altogether) with Pearl Jam as his back-

■ David Letterman's "Late Show" seems to have stagnated, but Jay Leno's "Tonight Show" remains lame as ever in the suddenly boring late night wars.

By Frazier Moore
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Once he was red-hot. Now David Letterman is cold.

So saith Entertainment Weekly magazine, whose recent "Cool Issue" cold-heartedly banished Dave — along with fellow flare-outs Norman Mailer, Billy Crystal and Beavis and Butt-head — to the arctic of irrelevance.

However, a casual reading of that issue uncovers no mention at all of Jay Leno.

This spells success, if only by default, for "The Tonight Show." Considering its host's ill treatment by a jeering press and even his own NBC bosses since taking over for Johnny Carson three years ago, benign neglect reflects nothing less than "Big Mo" for the Leno camp.

Meanwhile, Letterman, plagued by his perennial front-runner status, has the unenviable task of holding on to that leadership role, while the press, sniffing what might be blood, gangs up against him. (These days Dave MUST be panicked, reports constantly remind us: In what is clearly a cry for help, HE'S SMOKING AGAIN!)

Granted, Letterman is a little like "Murder, She Wrote's" Jessica Fletcher: Wherever he goes, through no fault of his own, a dead network turns up. Once-moribund NBC was brought back to life only after Dave's grateful exit two years ago, whereas now it is CBS, high-flying when he got there, with one foot in the grave.

Any of CBS's recent setbacks, all beyond Dave's control, might have hurt "Late Show's" fortunes. The cumulative impact was predictable: Although still No. 1, Letterman slipped in the ratings last season.

At the same time, "Tonight," even blessed with what should have been a boost from NBC's increased prime-time viewership, has largely stayed put in the ratings. So much for "Big Mo."

To sum up: In the game of "Who's Hot, Who's Not?," sure, maybe Dave isn't, at the moment. Nor is never-was Jay.

That's not to say Leno doesn't preside over a decidedly different, even improved, show than a year ago. More

Hal Scardino, left, stars as Omri, a boy who sees a three-inch high Indian come to life in his cupboard.

'Cupboard' imaginative, enchanting

By Michael H. Price
N.Y. Times News Service

■ "The Indian in the Cupboard" is playing at the UA Cine 4.

Thanks to an enigmatic coming-attractions trailer and its British literary origins, "The Indian in the Cupboard" faces a tough sell to a hype-susceptible summertime audience.

But this gently enthralling movie can hold its own nicely. It is a more purely imaginative picture than "Judge Dredd" or "Batman Forever." It also finds director Frank Oz combining his flair for domestic farce (as in "House-sitter") with a gift for making fantasy seem real (see "The Dark Crystal").

Lynne Reid Banks' "Indian in the Cupboard" tales, though designed for children, have caught on so thoroughly with an all-ages audience as to account for sales approaching 5 million copies. Reid Banks' readers may be taken aback to catch screenwriter Melissa Mathison transplanting the tale from England to America, but the transition works well enough.

The principal charm lies in the casting: Hal Scardino, a comparative newcomer, plays Omri, a flighty kid who for his ninth birthday receives the doggonedest batch of gifts. Litefoot, a Native American ethnic-pride activist and entertainer, makes a formidable screen debut as one of those birthday presents — a toy Indian who magically comes to life.

The combination of that miniature Indian, an old wooden cupboard and an odd key is what brings about the transformation; the complications that result make for an enchanting movie. Omri learns the value of trust and discretion after he hides the miracle from those who might help him understand it but tells all to a pal (played by

Will Herndon's lack of exposure help him?

Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Ty Herndon's lucky break may be that he's so new to country audiences that they have yet to put his face with his music.

In May, the 33-year-old singer topped the charts with "What Mattered Most." A month later, he was arrested for indecent exposure and drug possession.

The impact of those charges on his career is hard to measure. His latest single, "I Want My Goodbye Back," is still climbing the charts, albeit slowly.

"The general public doesn't really know who this guy is," said Johnny Gray, program director at WKHX-WYAY in Atlanta.

"If it had been Garth Brooks, it would have been over for him because he's much more well-known. One of the reasons the format is doing so well these days is that it's music driven. There's more interest in songs than artists."

Said constable witnesses an exchange of the three Thomas Jeffersons as well as the unfolding of the services rendered. Moments later, Hugh and his temp are busted by the lawman. Lewd conduct they'll call it.

The next day the story breaks. Hugh fans around the world are shocked and dismayed beyond all imagination. But wait! The story has a happy ending ...

The prostitute, see, eventually winds up with $160,000, a fee a British tabloid was more than happy to fork over for her story; Hugh, meanwhile, winds up with his mug splattered on every talk show and entertainment magazine in America and hundreds, maybe even thousands, of people are now lining up to see a movie just because it stars a man who — GASP! — was arrested for paying for sex.

What a country.

Hugh's timing was absolutely impeccable. Not too far removed from the premiere of his new movie Wednesday, yet just enough time between the arrest and the premiere to take full advantage of as many appearances on the likes of "The Tonight Show" and even Larry King, the Commander in Chief of reputable talkers.

And all the while, Hugh told Jay Leno, there sits poor live-in girlfriend-supermodel Elizabeth Hurley; the innocent victim softly biting the fingernail of her index finger, saying she fully supports her Hugh through his tough ordeal.

I'm tellin' ya, this deal was done to absolute perfection by Hugh.

(Call me a cynic. But proud of it.)

One troubling thought: We, the American fanatic constantly looking for folks to admire, actually consider it interesting news when a film star pays for sex.

I think not.

Had this guy displayed a slight bit of dignity and opted to keep things mum, maybe he would've been more deserving of this misplaced adulation for which he's now the recipient. Better still — and here's a brilliant thought — why didn't you just go home to your girlfriend-supermodel, Hugh?!

Instead of being discreet and humbled, though, Hugh bops onto the "Tonight Show" to a standing ovation that lasts a full minute and meekishly admits, "I did a bad thing."

A hero in the making, this guy. Pause that video while I search for some tissue.

Actually, for a segment of the population, Hugh is a textbook example of a hero. Certainly he can teach others a few self-exploitation techniques. Perhaps one day he can even write a book (actually, that's inevitable at this point). It would of course have to be titled "How to Pay For Sex and Get The Most Out of It."

"In a way, I need to suffer for this," poor ol' Hugh told the ever-so delighted Leno.

TV: Medium often presents political diversity

(From 1D)

ed to emerge, is more of what they favored in the ratings this year — saucy comedies like "Friends" and socially aware dramas such as "Law & Order."

Little violence, but a good-sized dollop of comedic sexual banter and antics and a look at such difficult real-life issues as abortion, violence and racism.

What viewers don't like, what they won't watch, gets dumped in this advertiser-driven medium.

"There has been a sea change in the American audience toward violence. The bulk of the country is not embracing the same type of imagery when I was running 'Miami Vice' and it was a top 10 show," notes Wolf.

Attacks like Dole's, he maintains, are politically motivated and a prelude to censorship, despite disavowals.

"The thing that's frightening here — and I really do feel like I've got my finger in the dike because every time I bring the subject up they say I'm overreacting — is there is a swing psychology toward some form of censorship."

Wolf considers the proposed "V-chip," which would allow the electronic blocking of programs coded objectionable, as a step in that direction.

For his part, veteran TV producer Leonard Hill was struck by the timing of Dole's attack on Hollywood irresponsibility. It comes when Republican lawmakers are seeking to deregulate the broadcast TV industry "and to eliminate the very concept of public interest by the networks," he said.

Besides, Hill adds, why should television be told to preach to a national congregation?

"We are not a ministry and should not be presumed to be and should not be encouraged by government to function in such a fashion," Hill said.

Fine with him, responds L. Brent Bozell, head of the Media Research Center, a Virginia-based group that has its radar trained on the media's liberal leanings.

He wants TV to return to the days when there was "no politics, no agenda, no special messages — just good wholesome stuff. That's the kind of thing we want to promote."

What he and his group want to see are more shows like "Christy," "Touched by an Angel" and "Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman," respectful of religion, sexual responsibility and family.

They want none of the likes of "Roseanne," which Bozell calls pro-abortion and says stooped to a glib discussion of masturbation, and "My So-Called Life," with its teen-age sexuality.

"Gratuitous and teen-age hetero- and homosexual sex are portrayed with abandon on television now," Bozell said. "The trend somewhat reversed itself a couple of years ago, but it's back with a fury."

Despite that, he sees cause for hope. Politically, television is more willing to feature diverse viewpoints.

"Murphy Brown," once Quayle's target and tormentor, introduced a conservative character last year who provided a give-and-take balance, Bozell said.

"Chicago Hope" and "Picket Fences" featured credible characters rejecting abortion.

Even more encouraging to him: Network executives who once avoided groups like his are now listening to their concerns, as they've traditionally heard liberal advocates, Bozell said.

His center has established a Parents' Television Council in Los Angeles to further its lobbying efforts. Such pressure, and the accumulated oratory of Quayle, Dole, Bill Bennett and others, are the right's best hope of influencing Hollywood, he said.

"You have to do it through the politics of shame. Then and only then will the industry get the message."

CUPBOARD: Camaraderie strong point

(From 1D)

Rishi Bhat) whose overeagerness can only lead to trouble.

Resisting the temptation to bring just any old object to life, Oz and Mathison limit the fanciful transformations to some incidental toys — including a cowboy figurine. The brought-to-life version of this rip-snortin' character is played by David Keith, whose shared scenes with Litefoot supply a sobering illustration of the pitfalls of intolerance. The script goes a bit overboard in blaming Hollywood stereotypes for real-world antagonisms, but the film conveys a strong moral lesson without lapsing into a preachy tone.

The special effects are marvelous, but the clincher is the camaraderie that develops between the boy and the bantam tribesman. Litefoot, the latest in a long procession of rap artists who seem natural-born actors, is utterly convincing as the incredible shrunken man. Scardino makes Omri a wide-eyed innocent who must come to terms rapidly with an unexpected responsibility.

Because of the camera trickery required to make Litefoot appear 3 inches tall, he and Scardino cannot have worked directly with one another while enacting their shared scenes. But their performances mesh to near-perfection; along with the little-seen "A Little Princess," this new arrival looks like the best family-entertainment choice of the year.

TALK: 'Late Night' tricks, lists feel rote now than ever, "Tonight" became a clear alternative to "Late Show" as a repositioned Leno managed to escape his stigma as the stodgy, mainstream choice — and fob it off on Letterman.

Just contrast their respective homes. While Letterman originates from the cavernous, majestic Ed Sullivan Theater, Leno's cozy new studio promotes an intimate bistro feel. "Late Show" has the elegance of Broadway swells. But the retooled, rocking "Tonight" is the closest thing to a "party show" since Arsenio Hall signed off last summer.

Go figure. Leno, the famous workaholic who used to come across as manically overeager, even desperate to please, is now confident, even brash — a division manager off at a sales conference without the wife, holding forth in the hospitality room and about to knock back one drink too many.

Then over on CBS, the once wiry, wily Letterman, who championed an attitude of not giving a flip, now seems hectored and overwrought, while his show, a victim of its own wild success, has settled into an ironic, zany rut.

And yet, despite the now-rote feeling of bits like Stupid Pet Tricks and the Top 10 list, "Late Show" seldom fails to be leagues funnier than "Tonight."

From the Dancing Itos, a troupe of bearded Asian-American men in flowing robes, inspired by the judge in the O.J. Simpson case, to Phil Hartman recycling his President Clinton persona for a comic "press conference," to "The Commissary Price Is Right," where audience members guess the price of items in the NBC cafeteria, the humor is second-hand and third-rate.

Then a fatuous guest like Don Rickles or "Entertainment Tonight's" Mary Hart clinches it: Jay's show, earnest and obvious and dunderheaded, is the talk-show model Dave makes fun of every night.

But making fun of things, striking the right ironic chord night after night, is an exhausting business that needs constant replenishment. "Late Show" is overdue for a little. There's no reason to think it won't get it.

The challenge for "Tonight" is far less daunting. Under Leno, it remains so far from being hip and cool it could never go stale, its host never be damned by a magazine as "cold."

Just as it is, you could imagine "Tonight" running forever.

Pity.

PATTERSON: Grant's suffering consists of publicity, adulation

(From 1D)

Suffer shmuffer. Adoring throngs of fans holding signs that say "I would have paid you, Hugh"; a standing ovation and millions watching you with your perfect little pout and your phony remorse; a possible No. 1 box office ranking for your new movie; a tide of free publicity and instant popularity.

We pity you immensely, Hugh, ol' chap.

"As I say, I've done an abominable thing," Hugh laid it on thicker. "(Elizabeth has) been amazing about it ... She's been very supportive and we are going to try and work it out."

She's a real trooper, that Liz is. Burdened by having to spend her life as a girlfriend-supermodel, she must now continue to uphold that banner while at the same time cohabitating with an indiscreet, yet immensely popular — and, oh yeah — rich actor. Times are surely tough.

Interviewed outside the Tonight Show studios prior to Hugh's appearance Monday was Hugh-admirer Heidi Kinnebrew, who was holding the "I would have paid you, Hugh" sign. Heidi teaches preschoolers for a living.

"Of course, I'd never really do this," she snickered, alluding to the message on her sign. "I'm just having some fun. I hoped to be able to see him, and let him read this — that would just be unbelievable!"

Unbelievable indeed.

YOUNG: Career stretches to 1959

(From 1D)

up band, Young's next turn has never been easy to predict.

The only sure statement one can make about his next step is that it won't be anything like the preceding one. As Young likes to say with a devilish smile, "There are no rules."

"You'll notice that Neil didn't make a left turn; he made a 180-degree turn," Frank (Poncho) Sampedro, Crazy Horse's guitarist, said about Young's ride to the chiropractor's. "We have a saying, the few people who work around Neil, that he never turns corners; he ricochets around them."

It is precisely Young's tendency to be quick, impulsive and hard to pin down that has prevented him, on the eve of his 50th birthday, from being considered a dinosaur rocker.

His hard-rocking guitar has heavily influenced the grunge music of Seattle; his more torpid electric music has set the agenda of many alternative rock bands, and his acoustic ensembles and ballads continue to point to new directions for folk, country and pop songwriters across the country.

The genesis of "Mirror Ball" (Reprise), Young's new album with Pearl Jam, whose members are roughly 20 years his junior, is typical of the way he works.

"Nobody said we couldn't do it, and by the time everybody realized what we were up to, we were already done," Young said, driving back to the Mountain House, a restaurant near the ranch he owns.

Long known to shun the press, he was heading there to follow through on another uncharacteristic decision he had made: to complete his first and only round of interviews in three years.

Where Young's previous album, "Sleeps With Angels" (1994), began with the line, "Somewhere, somewhere I got to get somewhere," the gritty "Mirror Ball" begins with him turning and driving full-speed ahead "on the road to never." But perhaps the most telling phrase on the album is the line in "I'm the Ocean," in which Young whinnies in his nasal Canadian drawl, "People my age, they don't do the things I do."

Since 1989, two years after Young settled a lawsuit with his former record company, Geffen, for making what the label considered "unrepresentative" records that were neither "commercial" nor "characteristic of Neil Young," he has been on a winning streak. He has released at least one record every year, and each has been received with increasingly loud accolades.

Young doesn't take his renewed critical success for granted: he is realistic and easy-going, talking as if living on his ranch has made him immune to that dreaded word expectations.

"People are liking the records now, but I'll have more peaks and valleys," he said. "I'll put some other record out, and people will say it's a piece of garbage. It's inevitable. It just goes up and down, and the tops are not really that much better than the bottoms. So long as you're moving."

Young has an obsession with motion. He is an avid collector of toy trains, antique cars and boats, and he loves to travel by bus when he's touring. To move is to keep the stagnation away.

He said he still followed the principle he laid down in his 1979 song "Hey Hey, My My (Into the Black)": "It's better to burn out than to fade away." Kurt Cobain of Nirvana later used the words in his suicide note.

"The pessimistic outlook that bands have today and the angst, this is a part of what we created for our children," Young said, speaking of the counterculture of the 1960s. "They're reflecting it back at us, and now we have to live with it. And they have a right to be pessimistic. It's not as easy to grow up now as it was in the 60s. The world is a much more dangerous place. There are a lot less dreams being realized."

Young often seems like a grizzled hippie rising from the ashes of idealism to dispense wisdom. During the interview, he was wearing not just worn-out clothes he had had for years but worn-out clothes he had originally received free.

His T-shirt was a 10-year-old advertisement for Macintosh computers, and his sweat pants advertised a band, Fishbone, that his manager no longer represents. Jutting down from his long, graying locks were his ever-present giant sideburns, each shaped like the state of Idaho.

Young is a man who exists in a time frame all his own. As he told a television camera crew earlier that day, "Lately for me is about 15 or 20 years."

Young's musical career stretches back to 1959, when, at the age of 14, he joined his first band, the Jades, in Winnipeg, Manitoba. It wasn't until seven years later, in Los Angeles, that Young formed a band that would receive any sort of national attention.

HERNDON: Appearance helps singer's popularity

certainly have ended when word got out that a male undercover police officer alleged the singer sat on a log in front of him while only partially clad. The singer had amphetamines in his billfold, the officer said.

Herndon faces an initial appearance Aug. 7 on the indecent exposure charge. He has yet to be indicted by the grand jury on the drug possession. But if he goes to trial and is convicted, his promising career might turn out to be no more than a memory.

The indecent exposure charge is a misdemeanor, punishable by a maximum 180 days in jail and-or a $2,000 fine. But the drug possession charge carries a maximum sentence of two to 10 years and a fine of up to $10,000.

Herndon checked into a drug clinic, and has commented only in messages on his phone answering machine and a video. Epic Records and Image Management Group have offered vague statements of support, and not much else.

In the video, Herndon claimed that "things get blown out of proportion sometimes."

Cook of McVay Media in Hollywood, Calif. Cook consults with about 23 country music stations on their playlists.

"I think the story's over, as far as country music listeners are concerned," Cook said. "Hugh Grant gets the front page of the living section; Ty Herndon gets the inside page in USA Today."

Record company promoters have played up Herndon's good looks in marketing him as a romantic figure to women, who buy the majority of country music CDs.

Gray and Paul Johnson, program director at WSOC in Charlotte, N.C., both said they were playing Herndon's single, "I Want My Goodbye Back," which is No. 36 in the July 8 edition of Billboard magazine. It still has a bullet, meaning enough stations are playing it to keep upward momentum.

Music City News, a country music fan magazine, was preparing its first major article on Herndon when he was arrested. That's been shelved.

"The one thing that has stood out to me is I really haven't had much mail about this pro or con," said Lydia Dixon Hardin, MCN managing editor. "We've had, I think, one letter of support."

The situation at the 300 line dancing clubs across the country is similar, said Danny Murphy of Country Club Enterprizes, which promotes country records to clubs.

"In clubs, a lot of people like a song, or don't, and really don't know who the artist is," Murphy said.

Herndon has been working since he was a teen-ager to be a country star. He was an early member of Diamond Rio, and won the top prize for male vocalist on "Star Search" in 1983.

By 1989, he still didn't have a record deal and moved back to Texas. There, he matured as a performer in the Dallas club scene and was named Texas Entertainer of the year in 1993.

Epic Records took notice, signed him up and put out the album "What Mattered Most" earlier this year. The single went No. 1, and Herndon was posisoned entertainer fully ready to capitalize on the hit.

Interviewed before his arrest, the week that "What Mattered Most" went No. 1, Herndon was tired, but ebullient at how his career was taking off.

"I'll do everything I can while this is going on 'cause there's a certain amount of respect that it deserves when it gets to this level," he said.

He spoke of the bad times when he left Nashville, and why he kept going.

"It never stopped me from believing in the music and wanting to do it and the driving force in me, that burning thing right in your gut.

"You could have just been run over by a truck, that says you're never gonna do this. That would make you get up and then make a phone call, no matter how small the opportunity. ... It's almost like an addiction, really."
