Middle-income tax relief gets consideration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Republican-controlled Senate Finance Committee is ready to talk compromise with House Democrats on extra tax relief for low- and middle-income Americans, saying that "would not do violence" to President Reagan's tax plan.

"Between now and next week I hope to have some dialogue with the House Ways and Means Committee," Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Wednesday. The House panel was resuming work today on its own version of the tax cut.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill seemed cool today to talk of compromise, however.

"We talked about compromise once before. It fell flat," O'Neill said said after a ceremony in the White House Rose Garden. Congressional Republicans have to clear "everything through the White House," which makes it difficult to compromise, he said.

"The issue is equity and fairness and we're not going to be stampeded by the president," O'Neill said.

Meanwhile, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told reporters at a breakfast meeting today that administration officials feel "at this point our bill is still do-able in the House."

But he also said the administration is willing to at least listen to compromise proposals in an effort to avoid an all-out, time-consuming floor fight in the House.

Dole's committee already has approved a tax-cut plan mirroring Reagan's recommendation for an across-the-board 25 percent cut in personal tax rates over 33 months starting Oct. 1.

Democrats, saying a three-year tax cut would worsen inflation, are pressing a two-year plan with more relief for people making less than $50,000 a year. In addition, their proposal for reducing business taxes is considerably different from the one advanced by Dole's committee.

"We could sit down and work out our differences on the business tax cuts in two hours," Dole said in an interview on CBS Radio. On individual tax reductions, he said, "I think they (Democrats) could give up the third year; we could give up the skewing."

O'Neill made clear once again Wednesday that the "skewing" issue — targeting more relief to those with incomes under $50,000 a year — is the major question.

"The whole issue is the $50,000 question," O'Neill told reporters. "If you earn less than $50,000, you benefit by the Democratic bill. If you earn more than $50,000, you would want Reagan's bill."

The Reagan administration has opposed tilting a tax cut to low-and middle-income Americans, contending that wealthier people are more likely to invest the savings in ways that would benefit the economy. But Dole said the Democratic plan "would not do violence to the tax bill."

The congressional Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that 34.7 percent of the individual tax cuts in Reagan's bill would go to those with incomes above $50,000 a year, compared with 20.6 percent in the Democratic proposal.

Democrats say those with incomes under $50,000 must be given a larger share than Reagan recommends because they are hit hardest by inflation and rising Social Security taxes.

On Wednesday, O'Neill repeated his promise that the House will complete action on the tax bill by Aug. 1.

Today, speaking within about 50 feet of the Oval Office, the Democratic leader insisted he had not promised that Congress would deliver a tax bill to Reagan by Aug. 1, but that the House would deliver such a measure to the Senate before the end of this month.

"We'll have the tax bill through the House by the end of the month, by the end of July," O'Neill said. Asked if it were possible to deliver the bill to Reagan by Labor Day, he replied, "I can't say that thoroughly."

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., disputed O'Neill's assertion that no agreement had been made to finish a tax bill by early August.

"Everybody thought that's what we'd done," he said.

O'Neill, Baker and other congressional leaders had attended a ceremony at which Reagan announced that Charles H. Bowsher had been chosen to be comptroller general of the United States.

Keeping cool in Chicago

Neighborhood youths find fun and relief from the summer heat from an open fire hydrant on Chicago's near north side Wednesday, as temperatures climbed into the 90s. Two youngsters found the water so inviting (foreground) they decided to try swimmimng in the street, where the water from the hydrant began to form a pool.

Abortion foes win vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate subcommittee voted 3-2 today to approve legislation defining life as beginning at conception, taking the first congressional step toward overturning the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

In a major victory for opponents of legalized abortion, the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on separation of powers approved a bill giving unborn fetuses full rights under the Constitution. The bill also would prohibit lower federal courts from considering challenges to the anti-abortion legislation.

Critics say such legislation, if approved by Congress, would make a woman who has an abortion subject to prosecution for murder.

But Sen. John East, R-N.C., the subcommittee chairman, said the bill was merely an attempt to send the abortion question back to the states for their consideration.

As approved by the subcommittee in a partisan vote, the so-called human life bill will be delayed on its way to the full Senate Judiciary Committee until a subcommittee on the Constitution can consider an alternative constitutional amendment banning abortions.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who heads the Constitution subcommittee and is a member of the East subcommittee, denied that his vote for the human life bill was obtained in exchange for an agreement diverting the bill to his subcommittee.

Besides East and Hatch, the other Republican voting for the bill was Sen. Jeremiah Denton of Alabama. Democrats Max Baucus of Montana and Howell Heflin of Alabama voted no.

East said the bill was designed to resolve a "riddle" that the Supreme Court declined to resolve, "namely, when does life begin."

Heflin said congressional approval of such legislation would be futile because the Supreme Court inevitably would strike it down and refuse to reverse its 8-year-old Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortions.

In the eight years since the Supreme Court affirmed a woman's right to an abortion during the first three months of pregnancy, there have been several successful attempts in Congress to limit federal spending for abortion. But no previous legislation to prohibit abortions has survived any congressional committee.

East says the bill, which is supported by President Reagan, would not in itself prevent a woman from ending a pregnancy. But critics say if life is defined as beginning at conception, abortion automatically could be defined as a felony.

Such organizations as the National Organization for Women and the National Abortion Rights League say some kinds of birth control could be outlawed.

'Letters' begin on Thursdays

One of The Reporter-Telegram's most popular features, "Letters to the Editor," which traditionally has been published on the Opinion Page on Sunday, is being expanded to include Thursdays.

Today, letters appear on the Editorial Page, 4A, and will be published on that page each Thursday as long as warranted by number of letters received. "Letters" will continue to be published as a regular Sunday feature.

Letters are welcome on any subject but the right is reserved to edit for length and libelous material. All must be signed, with address and phone number included for verification purposes, and names will be published. In only rare cases are names of writers withheld and then only if the reason is felt justifiable by the editors.

Reagan says let judge speak for herself

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is telling angry conservatives to let Sandra D. O'Connor speak for herself on abortion and other issues before declaring her unsuitable for the Supreme Court. Her turn may come at Senate hearings later this month.

But even as Reagan tried to douse a political brushfire sparked by the nomination, White House and congressional leaders predicted the 51-year-old Arizona appeals judge will be confirmed as the first woman justice with no problems.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., a ranking conservative and chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said Wednesday that he hopes to begin hearings by late July. A confirmation vote then could come in September, after Congress' midsummer vacation and before the Supreme Court's fall term begins in October.

"I would say the Senate will confirm her unless something comes up that we don't know about," Thurmond said.

Nevertheless, Reagan was trying to calm a storm brewing on the religious and political right over Mrs. O'Connor's views on abortions and women's rights.

White House officials, however, insist she opposes abortion.

Spokesman David Gergen said Wednesday that the president hopes that "those who have expressed concern about Judge O'Connor's views will keep an open mind until they have a chance to hear her express her views and a chance to fully examine her record."

Reagan tried to convey that message after the nomination was announced Tuesday, when he met at the White House with Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and telephoned the Rev. Jerry Falwell, the fundamentalist leader of the Moral Majority.

Helms, however, said he and "at least five or six other" senators remained "skeptical."

And a Moral Majority spokesman said Falwell did not commit himself to Reagan's request to "reconsider" his criticism of the nomination, which Falwell said all Christians should be concerned about.

After another meeting with Reagan today, Helms told reporters at the White House he had promised the preident he would not comment on the nomination until he had studied Mrs. O'Connor's record more thoroughly. "I think in fairness to her I ought to wait until I talk to her" at a meeting next week, Helms said.

Other conservative leaders said the nomination of Mrs. O'Connor to succeed retired Justice Potter Stewart could cost Reagan their backing.

Conservatives were hardly united against the nomination, however.

Man given five-year sentence for incest

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The 46-year-old father of a troubled Midland teen-age mother who was twice pregnant by her father has been sentenced to five years in prison for incest.

His daughter, Tamala Jane "Tammy" White, now 18, was sentenced to 12 years in the state penitentiary for "injury to child" last Jan. 8 in the south central Midland duplex where the daughter had been living with her father, Arvel Lee White, a house painter who had a history of habitual alcoholic drinking and, according to statements from the daughter's psychiatric examinations, of seducing his two daughters after getting them "drugged" on marijuana and pills and having incestuous relations with them.

The daughter, a school drop-out who had expressed resentments against her father for his frequent drunken binges, initially had been charged with and indicted for attempted murder after the Jan. 8 injury to her 9-month-old daughter, Misty Dawn White, but was re-indicted for murder after the child died on Jan. 23 in Midland Memorial Hospital.

In a plea-bargaining agreement between the District Attorney Vern Martin and defense attorney Tom Parker, Miss White pleaded guilty in late April to injury to the child with "intentional conduct" and was meted out a 12-year punishment by 238th State District Court Judge Vann Culp. The maximum penalty for injury to a child is a 20-year sentence.

Arvel Lee White, who pleaded guilty this week before the same judge to incest with his daughter last Nov. 1, was meted a five-year prison term in plea bargaining between the district attorney and White's defense attorney, Jim Eubank. The maximum punishment for the offense is a 10-year prison term.

Both defense attorneys were court-appointed due to the indigent status of both defendants.

The daughter is again pregnant, apparently by her father, according to a report by University of Texas psychiatrist Dr. B.W. Henry, who interviewed Tammy White and subjected her to various psychological testing.

Dr. Henry said Tammy expressed anger toward her father for "being out drinking" and frustration "in not getting the child to eat" when, on Jan. 8, she twice flung the baby girl across a bed and onto a couch.

"My dad's all the cause of this," Tammy White told the psychiatrist, "because he raped me, and I'm pregnant with his child now. Misty was his child, too."

Tammy White, who said that she had dreamed that her father had hit the baby, said that she had "blackouts when it happened, when I hit her (on Jan. 8). Something told me afterward that I hit her. I don't know what it was; I guess it was the Lord or the devil that told me I had hit her. They told he I had hit her and thrown her against the couch."

She also said that her father had "drugged me and my sister when we were little — gave us pot (marijuana) and raped my sister when she was little. He should be in jail, too, because he caused all of this."

"I didn't think I was a sane person," she said, "especially after he (her father) fed us, and we'd go to sleep and he gave me pot and raped me." Tammy White said she suspected her father of putting marijuana in their food.

She said that her father had sexual relations with her when she "was stoned" when she was 13, 14 and 16.

More recently, Tammy White said she had "voluntarily" submitted to having sexual intercourse with him because he had refused to give her money unless she submitted to the act.

Tammy White dropped out of school while in the ninth grade and had taken stimulants to get her "high," as she was bored with school.

Dr. Henry said Tammy White had taken a multiple drug overdose at age 14 in February 1979 and was hospitalized.

Permian Airways out, but Sun Air may be in AUSTIN — While one commuter line was officially canceled, another received an interim approval Wednesday by the Texas Aeronautics Commission to provide service to Midland Regional Airport.

Permian Airways, based in Midland, had been warned in June by the TAC it would lose its operating permit if no objections had been filed by Monday.

"No objections were received as of 5 p.m. Monday, the deadline for filing objections," said Tom Butler, hearing examiner for the TAC. "The airline's certificate has been canceled."

Meanwhile, Sun Air has the go-ahead to provide commuter service to 17 cities, including Midland.

Initial service will begin Sept. 1 and will be between Amarillo, Midland-Odessa, San Antonio, Houston and Dallas-Fort Worth. Future service will include Abilene, Austin, Beaumont, Brownsville, Lubbock, El Paso, Harlingen, Laredo, Corpus Christi, McAllen, San Angelo and Wichita Falls.

Butler recommended the application be approved, and the interim certificate became effective today. At the TAC's next regular meeting in October, the commission may affirm, amend or revoke the interim order.

Sun-Air is leasing or renting five DC9-15F aircraft from Air Florida and a sixth aircraft from Municipal Leasing Corp. at a cost of $3.3 million each, according to the commission's reports.

The airline shows assets totaling $625,000 with $275,000 more expected from investors and $12 million to come from sale of stock, according to Butler.

Permian Airways hasn't been in service since September 1980 when it suspended all flights pending what officials called a temporary reorganization of the company's financial structure. The airline never took off again, even though Permian filed Dec. 4 to the TAC for a six-month extension of its operating certificate, saying it hoped to resume service.

Even though the aircraft have been sold, a spokesman for Permian said the airline would remain "a viable Texas corporation."

The 34-foot two masted schooner Vernon Langille, strikes the Carlton Bridge which spans the Kennebec River near Bath, Maine, with her masts and begins to capsize Wednesday. The sailboat was attempting to pass under the open portion of the bridge and became caught in the wind or current and was unable to make the opening. The crew of eight was rescued by Coast guard vessels.

Schooner hits bridge; Men rescued

BATH, Maine (AP) — The Coast Guard is investigating an accident that occurred when the masts of a 36-foot schooner crewed mainly by sailing students struck a highway bridge over the Kennebec River and capsized.

The skipper and seven teen-age crew members were quickly rescued Wednesday morning by small boats, and none was injured.

The swamped schooner, the Vernon Langille, was towed first to the Bath Iron Works shipyard and then back to the Maine Maritime Museum's apprentice shop, where it was built three years ago.

Museum official Steven P. McAllister identified the skipper as Frank Simon, 37, and said the crew members, all between 16 and 18 years old, were sailing and boatbuilding students at the museum.

The Coast Guard's Marine SAFETY Office in Portland is investigating the accident, but officials would not speculate on the cause of the accident at the Carlton Bridge, which carries U.S. Route 1 traffic across the river.

McAllister said the vessel went off course when the wind suddenly died, and the schooner was then pushed by the powerful, tidal current toward the bridge. Its masts hit the bridge about 50 yards from the opening.

The hull of the boat was undamaged, but its masts need repair work, he said.

New drug prevents herpes infections

BOSTON (AP) — A new drug given its first human test may be effective against a variety of illnesses caused by the herpes viruses, including genital herpes, cold sores, chicken pox, shingles and mononucleosis, its manufacturer says.

In the initial experiment with the medicine, called acyclovir, doctors at Johns Hopkins Medical School completely eliminated cold sores and genital herpes infections in bone marrow transplant patients. Because their natural immunity has been suppressed, these people are often plagued by troublesome, sometimes fatal herpes infections.

The drug's manufacturer, Burroughs Wellcome Co., is testing the drug for use by otherwise healthy people suffering from hard-to-treat diseases caused by three separate herpes viruses. Among these is genital herpes, a venereal disease that is fatal to newborn babies if passed on to them by their mothers during birth.

The national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta estimates that genital herpes afflicts between 5 million and 20 million Americans and that between 200,000 and 500,000 people catch it each year.

The Johns Hopkins study, directed by Dr. Rein Saral, was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

In the study, doctors gave the drug intravenously to 10 people who were about to undergo bone marrow transplants, while 10 others received inactive substitutes called placebos.

Blood tests showed that all 20 faced a high risk of developing infections caused by the herpes simplex virus. Ordinarily, more than 70 percent of these transplant patients break out with the disease.

"Historically, the people who got it either had severe lesions in the oral or genital area, with a mortality of perhaps 5 percent from the herpes simplex infection," Saral said in an interview. "We felt that it was clearly a major cause of discomfort, and in some patients, it was a potentially life-threatening disease."

After the operations, none of those who took acyclovir developed sores. Meanwhile, seven people in the placebo group got herpes infections.

"It appears to be extremely effective in preventing the growth of herpes virus in this patient population," Saral said.

One form of the herpes simplex virus causes cold sores, while a second results in genital sores. Both may remain dormant for long periods, only to flare up without warning.

At Burroughs Wellcome, spokeswoman Jan Tanner said more studies are under way to test the drug's value against genital herpes, cold sores, chicken pox and shingles. Studies will begin soon on mononucleosis.

In the genital herpes tests, she said, "so far the results have looked fairly promising, but it's too soon to tell."

She said the company hopes to win approval from the Food and Drug Administration to market the drug late this year for people who face severe complications from herpes viruses, but more general use may not be possible for two or three more years.

Before the drug could be taken by pregnant women, studies would have to be conducted to make sure the medicine does not harm the fetus.

Results so far show that besides the herpes simplex virus, acyclovir appears to be useful against herpes zoster, which causes shingles and chicken pox, and Epstein-Barr virus, which causes infectious mononucleosis.

The drug does not cure these diseases; it prevents or stops outbreaks. The virus remains dormant within the body despite the medicine.

Crane's romance not budding as fast as hoped

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal wildlife officials are hoping their matchmaking efforts with a pair of whooping cranes will result in a visit from the stork.

But the romance at the Grays Lake federal wildlife refuge in Idaho is not blossoming as fast as scientists had hoped.

In a status report on its attempt to build a new flock of the endangered birds, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said Wednesday that the transplanted female must have a mate for the Gray Lakes flock's annual migration to New Mexico if she is to survive in the wild.

The female, raised at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center near Washington, was taken to Grays Lake by commercial airliner April 25 because there were thought to be no females near breeding age there.

But, as Scott Derrickson of Patuxent explained, being the only available girl in town is no guarantee of finding a mate.

"Whopping cranes mate for life, and they're very selective," he said. "The disappearance during the last migration of two lone males and the failure of another to stake out a breeding territory left just one possible mate for the female."

So far the female and male have begun to do the swirling dance characteristic of their species. But scientists still are waiting to hear the unique mating duet that gives the cranes their name.

The duet — one note sounded by the male, followed by two staccato notes by the female — would signal that the birds had decided to share a lifetime nest.

Then the male would be available to guide the female to the flock's wintering grounds at the Bosque del Apache wildlife refuge in New Mexico, 870 miles away. Without such guidance, the female would have to be returned to Patuxent to survive, Derrickson said.

"We might have heard their 'unison call' by now if the male hadn't gotten sidetracked from the courtship," Derrickson explained. "Suddenly, for an unaccountable reason, he began to try to expand his territory in two directions at once."

Derrickson added, however, that the male keeps returning to the female's roost and the scientists are still hoping the pair will mate.

The nation's whooping crane population has grown from about 15 in 1941 to around 100. All of them are in the Grays Lake flock, at Patuxent or are part of a wild flock that migrates annually between Wood Buffalo Park in Canada and Matagorda, Texas.

The wildlife service's report was released as the Defenders of Wildlife accused Interior Secretary James Watt of planning to turn the federal reserve at Matagorda over to Texas.

Interior Department spokesman Doug Baldwin said the wildlife group misunderstood. Watt, as a kind of bureaucratic courtesy, had merely told Texas Gov. Bill Clements he would consider Texas' request to take over Matagorda, Baldwi said.

Odessa couple captured, charged in kidnapping

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An Odessa couple who are charged in Midland's federal court with the May 13 armed robbery of the Odessa Savings Association have been captured in Nashville, Tenn., in the wake of a kidnapping and while they apparently were planning another robbery.

Captured Wednesday and reportedly being charged with kidnapping in Nashville are Robert Max Macklem and his wife, Marcianne Stone Macklem, both 30, according to Ronald A. Hoverson, special agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's El Paso Office.

The Macklems were charged by a complaint filed by the FBI in federal court in Midland last May for the armed robbery of the downtown Odessa Savings Assocation. Macklem is alleged to have brandished a double-barrel shotgun in the robbery and made off with $3,900.

Macklem also is charged in Odessa with the attempted robbery of the Beer Loft in west Odessa earlier in May. Shotgun blasts were fired in that attempt, according to the FBI. He is also charged with robbing Zeb's Drive-Inn Grocery Market in Odessa. The couple also face state aggravated robbery charges in Odessa for the savings association holdup. Maximum punishment for the state offense is 99 years or life in prison.

In the Nashville incident, the Macklems are alleged to have kidnapped a woman in her car, tied her up and left her by a road. They then allegedly took her car and drove around the Tennessee capital in an apparent search for a bank or something else to rob, according to the FBI.

The kidnapped woman was able to free herself and contacted police, who eventually spotted the Macklems in the stolen car, and a chase and a car crash resulted. Macklem was shot in the leg by a police officer, after Macklem had stepped from the wrecked car with the double-barrel shotgun.

If convicted on the federal charges, the Macklems could each receive a maximum of 25 years in prison and a fine of up to $25,000.

AFT organizing nurses, professors

DENVER (AP) — College professors and nurses are becoming increasingly active in organized labor and are discarding the philosophy that unions are "beneath them," the president of the American Federation of Teachers says.

With 580,000 members, the AFT is the nation's second-largest teachers union, but it is increasing its strength by including more college professors and nurses than any other labor union, AFT President Albert Shanker said Wednesday at the union's 65th annual convention.

The nurses' division of the AFT, the Federation of Nurses and Health Professionals, has 30,000 members. The Communication Workers of America, the United Auto Workers and the United Steelworkers, among others, also are making efforts to organize health-care workers.

An estimated 80,000 college and university professors belong to the AFT, compared with the 55,000-member American Association of University Professors, the second-largest professors' labor organization.

"Professors' parents are people who worked all their lives in a sweatshop to send their children to college," said Shanker. "Joining a union indicated to them that they had not climbed out of the middle class."

Unlike its rival 1.7-million-member National Education Association, the AFT calls itself a union and is affiliated with the AFL-CIO. That national affiliation has attracted nurses and professors, Shanker said.

One of the AFT's strongest education affiliates is the United Professors of California, which is working to win designation as the official bargaining representative for some 20,000 professors.

United Professors President Stewart Long said professors are the last group of workers in the state to demand collective bargaining. Meanwhile, cuts in state funds for colleges and two fiscally conservative governors have cost professors raises for two years, he said.

"There is an inherent individualism and elitism among people who get their Ph.D., but all that is changing now," said Long.

Claire Dernbach, Denver president of the Nurses Federation and a member of the group's national steering committee, said health care workers are the largest group of unorganized workers in the nation, partly because of the same sense of "professionalism" that professors have.

"Nurses have long felt that unions had no place in hospitals, but they're changing their minds now," said Ms. Dernbach. "Because of the long hours, patient load, low salaries and poor benefits, nurses are asking for contracts that will protect them."

Odessa store hit

ODESSA — An Odessa convenience store was robbed early this morning, according to police.

At 2:20 a.m. today, an employee of the 7-Eleven store at 1001 N. Golder said she was robbed at gunpoint by a thief who escaped on foot with an undetermined amount of money.

Police describe the suspect as being a black male in his 20s, 6 feet 2 inches, 150-155 pounds with a short afro. He was wearing blue jeans, a blue knit shirt, blue tennis shoes and a brown baseball cap.

The Reporter-Telegram Wednesday mistakenly reported that 21-year-old Kathy Havner of Odessa had been arrested over the weekend in El Paso on bail bond violations. Instead of Ms. Havner, Mildred Sue Pittenger, 25, of Odessa, was arrested.

Ms. Pittenger and another Odessa woman were arrested on misdemeanor drug charges after border officials said marijuana was found in the purse of one of the women as they attempted to re-enter the country from Juarez Sunday.

They had been released on bond in Midland last week on charges they aided in last month's jailbreak by four federal prisoners from the city lockup.

Big Spring woman dies in car mishap

BIG SPRING — Ethel Case, 37, of Big Spring was killed in a one-vehicle rollover here at 6:22 p.m. Wednesday.

Ms. Case was the sole occupant of a vehicle eastbound on State Highway 176 which struck the median and went out of control before overturning, police officials said.

The accident occurred 200 yards north of the intersection of State 176 and Interstate 20, according to Big Spring Police Department, which investigated the accident.

Texas, Florida seeking California quarantine

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Agricultural officials in Texas and Florida are calling for a nationwide quarantine on unfumigated California produce after Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. decided not to use aerial pesticide spraying to combat a fruit fly infestation.

Brown called out the National Guard to help fight the pests and said he would resist any attempt by Florida and Texas, California's two largest produce-growing competitors, to ban shipments from California.

"There's no justification in my opinion...to impose a quarantine on the state of California, and I will fight it as far through the courts as necessary," Brown said Wednesday.

The farm officials urged the ban for fear that California ruit shippedto their states could be carrying the Mediterranean fruit fly that has infested Santa Clara County.

Meanwhile, the state Senate voted Wednesday 28-0 for a bill to require spraying and sent it to the Assembly. Brown could veto the bill.

Rural legislators say that spraying now would beat back the fly and dispel the need for far more extensive spraying later.

"With the hot summer weather, there simply is not enough time to control this extremely fast-breeding insect," said John Thurman, a state assemblyman from Modesto. "It takes only one undetected fertile female medfly...to totally disrupt our entire No. 1 industry."

Brown called out 1,000 National Guard troops to join homeowners today in stripping fruit trees in an 80-square mile area north and west of San Jose in northern California to fight the fruit flies.

Brown said chemicals, when sprayed from the air, are more difficult to control than when applied from the ground, adding they could cause cancer, birth defects and death among the elderly in the area's half-million population.

Brown ordered the California Highway Patrol to search for fruit in cars leaving a 620-square-mile quarantine area, and ordered residents of the 80-square-mile infestation area to strip their trees or face misdemeanor charges. Several hundred workers were called in to spray the chemical malathion from the ground.

But Brown said Wednesday that "the sense of well-being and the security of 500,000 residents of Santa Clara County" would be jeopardized by spraying.

It was after a similar effort of fruit-stripping, ground-spraying and releases of sterile flies in the fall and winter that the pest came back this year.

That effort cost $22 million and state experts had predicted success as late as last month, just before the 100 larvae were found.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown said he and his counterpart from Florida, Doyle Conner, asked the U.S. Agriculture Department for a quarantine that would, he conceded, raise the nation's grocery bill.

"This is a national problem, and I do not believe many of the people understand how serious this problem is," said Brown. "We're dealing with an insect that can devastate the agriculture of this nation."

Texas' effort to impose a unilateral quarantine on California produce was rejected several months ago by federal courts.

Agriculture officials in Arizona and Oregon said they had no plans to ask for a quarantine.

Trying to stop the medfly

California State Agriculture Department quarantine officer David Hoffman places a new sign at the San Jose airport Wednesday, warning travelers that baggage will be inspected for fruit that might carry the crop-threatening Mediterranean fruit fly. It is the first day the airport has been manned for all flights from the area. The tiny Medfly threatens to destroy $4.7 billion worth of produce in Santa Clara, San Mateo and Alameda counties.

A logical approach

The Reagan administration's recently announced plan to expand its proposed Mexican guest worker quota from 50,000 annually to 350,000 demonstrates an increasing awareness of immigration realities in Washington.

The first concrete proposal by an administration in nearly two decades takes into account the view of Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo with whom Mr. Reagan met June 8-9. The two presidents reportedly agreed that a large-scale seasonal immigration of workers would meet the needs of both countries.

Even so, some knowledgeable authorities on this issue believe that 350,000 a year is less than half the number that would have to be admitted to meet the demand for labor north of the border. And the demand for workers in this country is the magnet that draws illegal immigration.

Inasmuch as the Mexican workers will continue to come here as long as they are needed by the economy, the logical way to control illegal immigration is to legalize and regulate it. This the Reagan administration proposes to do by issuing temporary visas and requiring the worker to return to Mexico upon expiration of his work permit.

Combined with adequate enforcement, the guest worker program offers the best chance to control immigration.

Nonetheless, guest workers traditionally have been opposed by organized labor, which fears their competition for jobs, and by many other Americans who are concerned about the economic and cultural impact of so large an influx. As irrational as this opposition is, in view of the present flood of illegal immigration, it will pose a formidable hurdle for the president's program in Congress.

There appears to be no chance of controlling immigrants without a guest worker program. History has shown that they will come — legally or illegally — as long as the U.S. labor market offers them jobs.

Bad turn of events

The parliamentary majorities chalked up by French Socialists in the recent elections for the National Assembly were supposed to save President Francois Mitterrand from having to admit Communists to his government.

So why did Mr. Mitterrand become the first leader of a major Western nation in 34 years to appoint members of a Communist Party to his cabinet?

Mitterrand loyalists explain it as nothing more than a political fence-mending gesture intended to reward Communist voters who supported Socialist candidates, and to help ensure a cooperative attitude on the part of France's powerful, and Communist-dominated, labor unions.

They also note that the four cabinet posts given to Communists — transport, health, professional training, and administrative reform — are "non-sensitive" and won't affect the Mitterrand government's foreign and defense policies.

It's possible to accept these explanations at face value, and still worry that Mr. Mitterrand has handed the French Communist Party a degree of influence that he, and France's friends, will live to regret.

The French Communist Party, traditionally loyal to Moscow, wasn't much affected by the supposed independence of the Eurocommunism movement during the middle 1970s. The party's general secretary, Georges Marchais, is a hard-line Marxist who has steadfastly declined to condemn the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The party's sterile ideology and its peonage to Moscow was one reason French voters rejected it by historic margins in May's balloting for president and in the just-concluded parliamentary voting. The 16 percent of the vote that went for the Communists in both the presidential and parliamentary elections was the party's worst showing in 40 years.

President Mitterrand's Socialists could have ruled alone, untainted by even a token alliance with the Communists.

Instead, the new French president has officially accepted Marchais' patently insincere pledge of independence from the Soviet line and, in the process, given the Communists an ideological respectability they don't deserve.

It sets a bad precedent for the French and for the Reagan administration, which now must deal with this ticklish problem in the most delicate manner possible.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Guard film suffering from cost overruns

WASHINGTON — Big-time Hollywood producers aren't the only ones who go over the budget on a picture, to the dismay of their backers.

Jack Anderson

The National Guard, a neophyte in the moviemaking game, has already run 66 percent over its initial budget on a 26-and-a-half-minute film titled, "Goodbye, Dear, I'll Be Back in a Year."

The movie is a period piece, an exercise in nostalgia. Its title was the jaunty slogan of draftees in 1940, whose promised 12-month stretch of military service was dramatically extended by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor the following year.

The movie, according to one disgusted source, was the inspiration of "a bunch of old officers" who thought of it as a fitting 40th anniversary tribute to their World War II service. Consequently, in addition to some old documentary footage, the movie includes interviews with former National Guardsmen recounting just what they were doing when they were called to the colors long ago.

The National Guard hired an advertising agency to put the movie together for $155,000. But the first version of "Goodbye, Dear" laid an egg with the brass-hat critics. Scenes were shot over and other changes made. Result: The Guard now says the film will cost $257,000. Outside sources suggest this is an understatement.

Ventures like "Goodbye, Dear" might seem to be what President Reagan had in mind in his "flicks and flacks" directive last April, which called for review of public relations spending by federal agencies and suggested a moratorium on new p.r. projects. Yet the old soldiers' movie isn't the Guard's only questionable publicity effort.

For the past couple of years, the Guard's commanders have worked — and spent money — on a program they call "Guard Aware." One of its purposes was to develop a "comprehensive public affairs program, including a supporting manual" to train local Guard units in the most effective ways to get publicity. The cost of the program so far is about $263,000.

There are two or three things wrong with this: In the first place, sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado, the various state adjutants general are reportedly not enthusiastic about the program.

In the second place, the "Guard Aware" program is somewhat redundant. The Defense Department already has an information school whose sole purpose is to train military public affairs officers. It has an excellent supply of materials available to offer uniformed flacks the necessary guidance.

And thirdly, the National Guard has been limited by Congress to a $50,000 yearly p.r. budget.

The Guard gets around this spending limit by claiming that "Guard Aware" and "Goodbye, Dear" are not simply press agentry, but recruiting aids. It's not clear just how the garrulous reminiscences of what it was like when Pop went to war will encourage volunteers to join the Guard.

Meanwhile, though, the presses and the cameras roll.

MOO-VING RIGHT ALONG: The dairy industry lost its fight for an April 1 price-support increase, but its lobbyists have been doing their usual behind-the-scenes work to protect its members at the consumers' expense.

The dairy interests want either a tariff or an import quota on casein. That's the powdery white protein supplement used in a variety of convenience foods, like frozen pizzas, ready-to-bake pastry, non-dairy coffee creamers, margarine and refrigerated dips. Casein, in short, is a cheap and nutritious competitor to dairy products.

Agriculture Secretary John Block and Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., have asked President Reagan to initiate an investigation of casein imports. To support their case, dairy lobbyists have been citing selected parts of an Agriculture Department study on the subject.

But they're not mentioning other parts, like this statement: "A 50 percent tariff (on casein) would increase the cost of consumer products annually by $47.5 million to $55.1 million."

Or this: "A 50 percent quota would (lead to) a total increase in the cost of consumer products of $115 million." In fact, some experts say the increase could be as high as $300 million.

WATCH ON WASTE: Over the last three years, the Department of Energy spent more than $567,000 on a "weatherization" program in central Illinois. The idea was laudable: Install insulation and storm windows on the homes of the poor and elderly to cut their energy bills and save oil. But when investigators for the DOE inspector general audited the program recently, they found chaos. On many homes, work had been started but never completed. Storm windows were found stacked in garages. Many supposedly "weatherized" residents complained about the poor quality of the work. There's a happy ending, though: Spurred by the audit, DOE officials saw to it that the work was finally done — and done right.

— Millions of dollars could be saved in federal social programs without hurting the recipients if government agencies would clean up their wasteful administrative procedures. For example, 31 states insist on sending out unemployment insurance checks every week instead of on a biweekly basis. And some states that do send out the checks every other week mail the twin checks in separate envelopes. Auditors have estimated that if these wasteful practices were stopped, the savings in postage, supplies and clerical time would amount to some $16 million a year.

GEORGE F. WILL

Alda typifies what went wrong with equal rights movement

WASHINGTON — Alan Alda, a better surgeon than constitutionalist, is the star of "MASH" and co-chairperson of the final forlorn drive to get ERA ratified before the deadline next June. His appearance on ABC's "Nightline" illustrated why ERA is dying and similar causes are ailing. Political "progressives" have come to rely on hortatory rhetoric rather than argument.

George F. Will

Asked about the amendment ("Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged...on account of sex"), Alda said it "is a legal document" but "you don't have to analyze it like a lawyer. You just have to get the message. You have to hear those simple words." It would pass if people "were informed about it accurately." His idea of accuracy is to say ERA is "essential to our survival as a democracy."

That may be considered penetrating analysis on the "MASH" set, but surely it embarrasses serious women. However, all ERA supporters capable of embarrassment may have died of embarrassment in 1979. If women had then been treated equally, ERA would have died. All amendments submitted to the states during the last 50 years have had seven-year ratification deadlines.

But because ERA was "women's business," Congress revised the rules. The women were losing the game at the end of nine innings, so the men chivalrously added a couple of innings. They thereby defeated the constitutional intent that 38 state decisions be expressed contemporaneously.

The first 10 amendments to the Constitution were ratified in 27 months. The average for the rest has been 19 months. The most recent amendment (lowering the voting age) took less than four months. No state has ratified ERA for four years. Four states have voted to rescind their ratifications.

Alda thinks ERA would pass if people would just think about it. But ERA's troubles began when thinking began. Hawaii ratified it the day Congress voted it. Twenty states ratified in the first three months, most without hearings. This too was chivalry; it was also cavalier, in several senses.

ERA would either be a constitutional redundancy, adding nothing to the "equal protection" and other guarantees afforded all "persons," or it would be a license for judicial legislation.

Some supporters seem to think it would be a nullity, but that it would "raise consciousnesses." Surely it is improper to clutter the Constitution with such devices.

Other supporters use the inexpressibly silly slogan that ERA would "put women into the Constitution." But a judiciary that has used the "equal protection" clause to put women sportswriters into baseball locker rooms has not been bashful about finding women "in the Constitution."

Most supporters advocate ERA as a scythe for mowing down laws they do not like but cannot repeal democratically. ERA might be construed to mean that all sex distinctions are unconstitutional, which is absurd. Or it might mean that only important and rational ones are valid, and that judges should determine importance and rationality. Thus courts would make sensitive social decisions that legislatures should make.

Were ERA in the Constitution, would the Court hold that women must be included in a draft? Would it hold that they must be drafted "equally" — that 50 percent (or slightly more than 51 percent, the female percentage of the population) of draftees must be women? That would be absurd social policy, but who knows? The framers of the "due process" and "equal protection" clauses would reel if they saw the uses to which judges have put their words.

When political movements become anemic, they abandon legislation for litigation, using courts as shortcuts around democratic processes. Conservative opponents of the New Deal did that. Today, liberals do that regarding abortion, capital punishment, race, environment, women's issues and other matters.

In a potent footnote in a 1936 ruling, the Supreme Court ratified judicial activism on behalf of "discreet and insular minorities." The theory was that the Court should cure the failures of democracy to protect minorities that were disenfranchised or too small to be protected by the franchise. But women are a class singularly ineligible for such solicitousness.

In seeking to refute the charge that ERA supporters are impatient with democracy, Eleanor Smeal confirms it. Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, says it would take "200 years" to repeal all the laws she wants repealed. Hyperbole aside, her point is that the democratic process would take too long.

She says "it is a disgrace" that "a woman like myself" must "beg" for the changes she wants in the law. But the suspicion lingers that what some women resent is not begging — which is unnecessary — but the necessity in a democracy of arguing and persuading.

The minimum rate in a modern hotel will soon be more than $100 a night — plus the 14 people you have to tip between the taxi and the front desk.

To The Editor:

One of the very best reasons for reading your fine newspaper is Charley Reese's column. I don't agree with him 100% of the time, but he never fails to provide rich food for thought. Thank God, we still live in a country where differing opinions can be printed and discussed freely.

Charley's June 29 column, "The Poor," was widely read and distributed throughout my office and among my friends. We heartily applauded his view point. Many of us were born into poverty, and we climbed our way up by dint of perseverence and hard WORK. We asked for no hand-outs. In my personal experience, it was a matter of deep shame to my family to think of having to appeal to welfare programs. We actually were "on relief" briefly in the late 1930's and we walked in acute embarrassment to the Relief Office, standing red-faced in line to receive our weekly ration of food. Bread lines were no fun. How we celebrated when my father recovered from serious illness and was able to find a job. The pay was meager, but it was a job, and we were overjoyed.

Who knows? Perhaps the lean beginnings of the Depression Generation created a group of energetic people instilled with guts and initiative to better themselves and their world. It's no crime to be poor, but it is a crime against humanity to make a career of being poor.

I think Charley Reese called the shots accurately in his comments on today's "poverty industry." There are many of us who say, Hooray for Charley Reese! May his tribe increase. And, please, keep his column coming.

More Charley

To The Editor:

This letter is in response to one published on July 5th from Lois Carpenter.

I certainly hope that you continue to publish the Charley Reese column. For too many years now the national media has been dominated by columnists, editorial writers and anchor men of the bleeding heart liberal persuation. Balance is needed and Charley Reese helps provide that balance.

Some parts of the Carpenter letter were, incidentally, completely inaccurate. Reese did not say that poor people should not be educated. What he did say was that they should have to pay for higher education and not be able to go to college without paying merely because they are poor. I also do not believe that Reese either said or implied that all persons in a state of poverty are lazy, dishonest and irresponsible.

While it is true that Reese said that The Poor should not be allowed to vote, he is not unique in expressing that sentiment. Other writers and historians have stated that both the Roman and Greek civilizations were brought down largely by a large welfare class that kept extracting more and more from their government while contributing nothing in return. We now have well organized welfare lobbies in this country that are trying to take us down that same road.

Reese makes a valuable contribution to your paper.

Shocking pictures

To The Editor:

Printing the pictures of accident victims shocks and alarms. It is especially hard for the friends and relatives.

At the time these picures are taken the victim has no way to protect his own rights. It is up to the news reporters to be sensitive and conscientious. There is a difference in good news coverage and trying to appeal to the sensational.

It is necessary for these stories to be covered, but the pictures do no service and are in very poor taste.

This is a news coverage policy that should be changed.

Texas agriculture commission says spraying only solution

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown says burning, burying, and spraying from the ground California fruit ravaged by the Mediterrean fruit fly won't halt the "Medfly" maggots' migration to the produce in the country's southern states.

Brown says aerial spraying is the only solution to stop the spread of the disease-riddled produce — and he says he told California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. so Tuesday in a 15-minute telephone conversation initiated by the Californian.

"Some of those fruit trees are as high as 30 or 40 feet and you just can't get to them with ground spraying," the Texas official said in a telephone interview from Austin.

"It's dangerous to let this insect get out of California and spread throughout the southern states. We've got it contained in California now and we're going to use all our means to keep it from spreading," he said.

Agriculture experts met in Los Gatos, Calif., Tuesday to decide whether a pesticide should be sprayed from the air over populated areas to stop the Mediterranean fruit fly from destroying more California farmland.

The panel of experts was to recommend to Jerry Brown whether the spraying should be permitted. If approved by him, the spraying could start as early as Monday.

"Governor Brown is under tremendous pressure not to use the aerial spraying," Reagan Brown said. "But the experts say the only way to do it is with aerial spraying and I'm confident that's what they'll recommend.

About six months ago, the Texas commissioner ordered a quarantine on all California fruit and produce shipped into the state. He said Tuesday he wouldn't hesitate to launch the preventative measure again.

"We're dealing with the food supply of this nation," Brown said, "and we can't afford to risk the fly getting into this state."

If the aerial spraying gets the nod from the California governor, droplets of a syrupy liquid laced with malathion — a mildly toxic pesticide — would be sprayed from helicopters over heavily infested areas during a three-month period.

Attorneys for Santa Clara County and the California cities of Palo Alto, Los Gatos and Sunnyvale filed suit Tuesday in Santa Clara County Superior Court, alleging that aerial spraying would be illegal under both state and federal constitutions.

The Medfly appeared in California a year ago and is viewed as a threat to the state's $1 billion-a-year fruit industry. The fly attacks a large variety of fruit, but primarily has been found in peaches, nectarines, apricots and figs.

Air pollution destroying U.S. crops

WASHINGTON (AP) — In what amounts to a "quiet theft of food," billions of dollars in U.S. crops are being destroyed each year by air pollution deemed safe for humans, agricultural researchers say.

"We've lost between $1 billion and $2 billion worth of crops" because of ozone pollution, says Walter Heck of North Carolina State University. "That's a serious problem."

If the pollution could be overcome, consumer prices might be kept down and farm income improved because of reduced losses and production costs.

The major cause of the crop damage is ozone, according to Howard Heggestad of the Agriculture Department's Plant Physiology Institute. But, he said, acid rain and airborne sulfur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide also are reducing crop yields across the nation.

Heggestad, Heck and other researchers were testifying today before subcommittees of the House Agriculture and Science and Technology committees about research on air pollution's impact on crops.

"Our current research efforts in this area are inadequate given the magnitude of the problem," said Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., chairman of the Agriculture subcommittee on research. He said the government must "focus more attention on this quiet theft of food and fiber."

Heggestad said there has been some work in identifying species of various crops like corn nd soybeas that are more resistent to the effects of air pollution. Tests of an experimental chemical spray that could protect plants from ozone damage also are under way, he said.

But, Heggestad added, much work remains.

Heck said ozone concentrations equivalent to the maximum allowed under the federal Clean Air Act cause $1 billion to $2 billion a year in crop losses. Ozone is a pollutant formed primarily when hydrocarbons from fuels react with the sun's rays.

Annual losses from other pollutants also are estimated to range in the billions.

Thomas Crocker of the University of Wyoming has placed losses due to acid rain at $1 billion a year nationwide. That's mainly in forests, where sulfuric acid releases aluminum from the soil that kills the fine roots of tree seedlings.

Another study says sulfur dioxide, at a level half of what is considered safe for people, can reduce wheat yields by 15 percent.

And Walter Page of West Virginia University has projected a 10 percent loss from sulfur dioxide and ozone on corn, soybeans and wheat in the fertile six-state region of the Ohio River Basin through the end of this century. That would amount to more than $7 billion in that region alone.

Although there has been some concern about air pollution damage to crops for the last three decades, Heggestad said the technology for assessing the damage remains inadequate. He called the various loss estimates too small or too large because of imprecise methods of measuring crop yields.

In an effort to improve damage assessments, the Environmental Protection Agency, in cooperation with the Agriculture and Energy departments and universities around the country, set up a National Crop Loss Assessment Network last year. The first report of its findings is due late next month.

"We're just on the threshold of losses and most farmers associate them with other problems," Heck said. "There's no reason for them to understand that it's air pollution."

Midwives move 'underground' after court fight

LINCOLN, Vt. (AP) — Midwife Carol Warnock smoothes her daughter's hair and gazes out at the mountains beyond her remote farmhouse. Three weeks after her acquittal on a charge of practicing medicine without a license, she is pensive.

"I don't really feel bitter," she said, "but I feel like I always have to look over my shoulder."

Dr. Alan Ayer drums a pencil on his desk. After serving as the prosecution's star witness against Ms. Warnock, the obstetrician is angry.

"What they're doing is folk medicine," he said. "The lives of mothers and their babies are being endangered, and I'll continue to work to prevent that."

Ayer and Ms. Warnock were the central figures in a court case that brought supporters of Vermont's growing home birth movement out of the hills and raised questions about the need to regulate the practice of midwifery.

Charges were brought against Ms. Warnock by the state attorney in response to a complaint filed by Ayer. He was the physician on duty at the hospital when Ms. Warnock arrived with a woman who was bleeding heavily after giving birth.

The midwife told Ayer at the time that she had administered two drugs to try to staunch the bleeding. Ms. Warnock was found innocent on a defense of having reacted properly in an emergency.

Lay midwives are not formally recognized by the state, but until Ms. Warnock was cited, midwives had maintained an uneasy truce with the medical establishment. Now, however, some midwives are reluctant to speak with outsiders about their practice and will deal only with clients referred by close friends.

"I guess you could say we've gone underground," said one midwife, once a frequent public speaker on home birth, who refused to grant an interview or permit her name to be used.

The midwives say their ancient practice of home birth has been twisted by opponents who portray midwives as ignorant and superstitious.

"During the trial, the prosecutor wanted to know if I carry incense in my bag," said Ms. Warnock.

Both midwives and physicians say they would like to see midwives formally licensed. But midwives want a regulatory board made up of midwives; doctors want doctors to oversee the licensing process.

Another area of disagreement concerns the ability of lay midwives to cope with emergencies and difficult births. Ms. Warnock, who said she has attended about 130 births, insisted that if trouble arises, she calls for help.

"It's very hard for a woman who has planned for nine months to have the baby at home to go to the hospital," she said. "There are always tears. But I don't hesitate to make the decision."

But Ayer claims that midwives feel that they "lose face" when they must call on doctors for help. "Rather than do that, they try to handle it alone," he said. "People just don't know what they're in for when they choose to rely on a midwife," he added.

Yet it is an option chosen by more and more Vermonters.

"The number of home births is definitely increasing," said Dr. David Jillson of the state health department. "There are a lot of people in this state who want to live in a low-technology environment, and want to give birth in that kind of environment."

In 1950, Jillson said, 600 babies were born at home in Vermont, a state whose ruggedness, harsh climate and rural poverty then made medical care inaccessible to many. In 1969, 20 home births were registered. But in 1980, the figure had risen to 155.

"It's not a matter of people not being able to get to a doctor or afford medical care — this is a deliberate choice by well-educated, well-off people," said Jillson.

The health department has just begun a two-year study of home birth. Jillson said he could not even hazard a guess on the number of home birth complications in Vermont until the study is near completion.

Hospitals are also offering childbirth options to try to attract couples who reject the traditional hospital setting.

At Medical Center Hospital in Burlington, the state's largest hospital, nursing coordinator Kathleen Geran said doctors have reduced drug use for women in labor and are offering more choices of childbirth preparation, freer access to the nursery and sibling visitation.

"The focus is on a family center," she said. "It's not a matter of getting the mother in here and isolating her.

Another option is the certified nurse-midwife, who works under a doctor's supervision but performs routine deliveries unassisted.

"I think a lot of people don't realize they have an option besides home birth if they want to work with a midwife," said Mary Hatten, a graduate of Yale University's midwife-certification program.

"What I've been struck by is how few births are completely normal. So often something comes up, and you need to have the resources a hospital can offer."

Redistricting plan due ruling Friday

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A state district judge who will rule on the House redistricting plan passed by the 1981 Legislature says he could decide parts of the plan are constitutional, but other parts are not.

"I would imagine the state, if they sense the bill's in jeopardy, might say, 'Well, only parts of it are unconstitutional,' " State District Judge Harley Clark told reporters.

Clark said he would rule by 1 p.m. Friday on the lawsuit challenging the House plan. However, his statement was made before a slow-moving afternoon session in the courtroom.

The boundary lines drawn by the recent Legislature are being contested by three Mexican-American lawmakers and other plaintiffs. They claim the Texas Constitution says counties must be kept intact in legislative districts except where necessary to balance population.

The plan being challenged here bill divides 34 counties, including Dallas, Bexar, Houston, El Paso and Tarrant.

George Korbel, a lawyer for Texas Rural Legal Aid, said Wednesday there are "11 or 12 easy changes" that would lessen the number of divided counties.

Assistant Attorney General Rick Gray attempted to show that Korbel's proposal would give rural areas a greater voice in Austin than major metropolitan areas. Korbel acknowledged that his plan did result in overpopulation of urban districts, slightly diluting their representation in the House.

Gray said one result of this would be underrepresentation of minorities, particularly blacks, who are concentrated in the big cities.

Korbel disagreed, saying:

"No, absolutely not. ... It depends on how the districts are drawn within the urban areas," Korbel said.

Columnist wrote about the other Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bill Gold had a secret. It was published in the Washington Post every day for 34 years, but it remained a secret to the rest of the country.

What Gold knew so well is that Washington is not just a capital city where presidents preside- legislators legislate, diplomats maneuver, courts rule and regulators regulate.

Washington is also a place where people wonder why the L-4 bus isn't air conditioned and who to call to get a dead tree removed. Where people care more about the price war between Giant and Safeway than the war between Iran and Iraq. Where David Hartman is better known than David Stockman.

In Washington, some people picket to keep the Yankees out of El Salvador and some picket to keep an Exxon station out of their neighborhood.

That's the Washington Gold wrote about every day since Jan. 13, 1947, in a column in a corner of the comic pages.

His column was called "The District Line" — Washingtonians' term for the border between the District of Columbia and the Maryland suburbs.

At the end of June, Gold and the column retired.

To say so long, 950 District Liners (what he always called his readers) stopped by the Post lobby to sign a scroll.

In a farewell editorial, the Post said Gold helped thousands to become "naturalized, permanent residents of this community."

Post publisher Donald Graham says, "There's a certain connection that a very few journalists can make with a big community of readers and long ago, somewhere back in those 34 years, those readers came to believe that Bill was shooting straight with them."

The column has been replaced by "Bob Levey's Washington." Levey's first effort saluted Gold's 34 years.

Gold's first column carried a plea for a new stadium and a report about a motorman on a crowded Washington streetcar who called out: "Come on, folks. Move to the rear. Take the back seats, just like you do in church."

In a newspaper that helped bring down a president, whose editorials are studied in Saudi Arabia, there isn't much room for local chit-chat.

In "The District Line" there was room to wonder why dogs always like to look out the windows of moving cars, to crusade for camp safety and against panhandlers and the use of "hopefully" at the beginning of sentences.

Indeed, he made room for endless crusades. He wanted to bring back the Senators baseball team. He scolded radio stations for disclosing the location of radar speed traps. He wanted cafeterias to quit displaying the desserts first, before the patron had decided upon his main course. He wanted signs erected at new building sites so passers-by could know what was going up.

Gold ran a "give-aways" section. Readers offering to give away an old piano or "darling, playful puppies" were expected to send along a dollar to benefit Children's Hospital.

Gold persuaded thousands to quit sending Christmas cards to co-workers and to send the savings to Children's. Al Lawson, a hospital official, says "The District Line" raised between $1.6 million and $1.7 million.

Gold lobbied to get small news in the newspaper, too. This was a typical exchange between columnist and editor, as related by Gold in an interview.

"Al, there was a bad tie-up on the Beltway this afternoon; 10,000 people were late for supper. They'll want to know what happened."

And the next morning's Post would find room for a story explaining the delay on I-495.

Gold, a night person, awoke and ate breakfast with wife Bernice. (In column, always, "the married woman I live with.")

At 6 p.m., he went to the office to return phone calls, read the mail and find out what would be in the next day's paper.

Between 9 and 10, he wrote the column. Then rewrote it and tinkered and tightened and polished. And showed the piece to colleagues and to ask them to take a whack at it.

"The best of us write some pretty crude things once in a while," he says. "This column was all the Post asked me to do. The least I could do is write it in fairly good English."

He often left as the dayside people were arriving, to go home, eat the day's other meal and go to bed when Washingtonians were sending their kids to school and reading "The District Line" at their breakfast table.

The married woman he lived with didn't let him read the column at the table. He'd get too excited if he didn't like it.

Violent crimes up 60 percent

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Crime is such a "growing fear across America" that parents are giving their children "mugger money" and older people are afraid to visit city parks, says FBI Director William Webster.

Violent crimes are up 60 percent in the last decade — 13 percent last year alone — and a majority of Americans now have guns in their homes although many don't know how to use them properly, Webster told the Eighth Circuit Judicial Conference Wednesday.

"We hear of mothers giving their children 'mugger money' to carry with them and give to muggers so they will not be beaten up," he told judges and lawyers from seven Midwestern states. "Elderly people are staying home. They're afraid to go to parks or walk the streets."

The Reagan administration is dedicated to reversing the growing trend of violent crimes, he said, adding that another target is white collar crime, which accounts for 15 percent of the cost of consumer goods.

Access to bank records could be a boon in the fight against white collar crime but legislation dictates that the FBI must have permission of the owner before looking at the records, he said.

"I hate to see us squeezed out of information we need to fight white collar crime," Webster said. Courts have ruled bank records are not protected by the Constitution, yet legislation dictates that "we must now ask the person we're wanting to investigate if we can see his bank records," he added.

The ongoing war against organized crime is making headway, Webster said, with 597 convictions in that area last year. The same year brought the conviction of major crime figures in Los Angeles, New York City, Kansas City, New Orleans, Detroit, Chicago and Miami.

The Newspaper BIBLE

HAVE YOU RECEIVED THE HOLY SPIRIT?

While Apollos was in Corinth, Paul traveled through Turkey and arrived in Ephesus, where he found several disciples.

"Did you receive the Holy Spirit when you believed?" he asked them. "No," they replied, "we don't know what you mean. What is the Holy Spirit?"

"Then what beliefs did you acknowledge at your baptism?" he asked. And they replied, "What John the Baptist taught."

Then Paul pointed out to them that John's baptism was to demonstrate a desire to turn from sin to God and that those receiving his baptism must then go on to believe in Jesus, the one John said would come later.

As soon as they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then, when Paul laid his hands upon their heads, the Holy Spirit came on them, and they spoke in other languages and prophesied. The men involved were about 12 in number.

Then Paul went to the synagogue and preached boldly each Sabbath day for three months, telling what he believed and why, and persuading many to believe in Jesus. But some rejected his message and publicly spoke against Christ, so he left, refusing to preach to them again. Pulling out the believers, he began a separate meeting at the lecture hall of Tyrannus and preached there daily. This went on for the next two years, so that everyone in the Turkish province of Asia -- both Jews and Greeks heard the Lord's message.

Government spurns offer to cut Social Security

DALLAS (AP) — Retiree Victor Lyon was willing to make a sacrifice to keep the Social Security system afloat, telling the government to just keep the latest increase for pensioners.

But the bureaucracy turned him down.

In June, Lyon, 79, began receiving $109.20 extra each month in an 11.2 percent cost-of-living increase in Social Security benefits. Now, he says, he and his wife make $13,069 a year in Social Security, plus about $3,000 from sales of welding alloys through his home in Presbyterian Village, a housing complex for the elderly.

Lyon began his campaign Feb. 1, in anticipation of the June increase, with a letter to the Dallas office of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Resources.

"It is my feeling that there undoubtedly are millions of people who would be willing to make some sacrifice to help," Lyon wrote. "My proposal is to give them the opportunity to volunteer foregoing all future increases with the option of changing this if future circumstances dictate."

Martha McSteen, regional commissioner of the DHHR Dallas office, called Lyon to say it would be impossible to subtract the extra $109.20 from his check.

In fact, a spokeswoman for the chairman of the House Social Security subcommittee said Tuesday it would cost the government more money to make the deduction than to let Lyon keep the increase.

"It would take a whole new computer system," said the spokeswoman for U.S. Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin.

Mrs. McSteen added, however, that Lyon could make donations to any of three DHHR trust funds that are used to help finance Social Security programs.

But Lyon said contributing to the trust funds would defeat his purpose of giving all Social Security recipients the option of turning down increased benefits.

"Shucks, I could send contributions but that wouldn't be effective," he said.

Power restored at hospital

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — John Peter Smith Hospital officials say that normal operations are not expected to resume at the hospital until next Monday at the earliest.

Officials said Wednesday that power was restored to most of the hospital, but the air conditioning was still out.

Electricity was functioning in all but a few areas of the hospital, but "more than 100 air conditioning components had to be sent to Dallas to be repaired," said spokeswoman Sally Blaydes.

Administration tells Europe that it must accept missile deployment

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says Western Europe must accept the decision to deploy U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles on its soil or undermine the credibility of the NATO alliance.

Any reversal of a decision already made unanimously by NATO members would give the Soviet Union what amounts to veto power over the alliance's decision-making process, according to a senior State Department official.

SUCH A STEP also would undermine the U.S. bargaining position in forthcoming negotiations with the Soviets on reducing the numbers of nuclear missiles aimed at West European countries, said the official, who spoke with reporters under ground rules stipulating that he not be identified.

The official acknowledged that pressure is increasing on European leaders from "a vociferous minority" favoring pacifism and neutralism to abandon the two-track alliance approach of deploying the U.S. missiles while negotiating with the Soviets for mutual missile reductions.

THE APPROACH was spelled out in an unanimous decision in December 1979 and reaffirmed this May as a NATO response to the Soviet missile deployment.

"If the alliance now cannot proceed with that decision we will have told the Soviet Union that they have a veto over our decisions," the official said.

"And most important of all we will have shown each other that when it comes to really tough decisions, we can' make them," he said.

"AND THEREFORE my answer is that for good or evil, willy nilly, we are in a situation where that deployment and those negotiations — two tracks — simply must proceed. And all of us have got to stand up on a tiptop political issue and proceed with it," the official said.

"If it should fail — and I do not by the way happen to think its going to — we would all have to go back and take a very hard look at what that means," he said.

Any bending to political pressures in Europe by begining to consider alternatives to the deployment "would simply be telling those who would prefer not to proceed that in fact if they fought hard enough we won't proceed," he said.

A sea-based alternative missile system simply cannot serve as an effective alternative bargaining chip against the Soviet missiles, the official insisted.

Houston skunk rabid

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County health officials say a skunk that scaled a six-foot wood fence and attacked two large dogs before it was shot had rabies.

Spokesman Teddi Pamphilis said the skunk — the fourth discovered this year to have contracted the dreaded disease — was killed July 3 at a southwest Houston home after it attacked the two pets.

One of the dogs was vaccinated and will be quarantined at least two weeks, Ms. Pamphilis said. But the other dog, only four months old, was not vaccinated and may have to be destroyed, she said.

FCC says court must decide on RKO case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission is serving notice that the courts must decide whether its decision to strip RKO General Inc. of TV stations in New York, Los Angeles and Boston was proper.

Stephen A. Sharp, the FCC's general counsel, informed RKO attorneys late Wednesday that the agency would not ask the U.S. Court of Appeals to return the case to the commission for further consideration.

Even though RKO appealed the FCC ruling in 1980, the company asked the FCC in May to try to regain jurisdiction to allow the presentation of additional arguments.

The request came at a time the agency was coming under Republican control. But any hopes that a newly reconstituted commission might be more amenable to such a request were dashed by Sharp.

"I've discussed the matter with the commissioners, and have determined not to ask the court to relinquish its jurisdiction over the subject cases," he wrote.

The company had said legal briefs filed with the court spotlighted several alleged procedural and legal errors by the commission.

The FCC ruled in June 1980, that RKO and its parent, the General Tire & Rubber Co., were "unfit" from a character standpoint to continue operating the TV stations. The decision was based on findings that RKO stations had engaged in improper advertising and reciprocal trade campaigns and that top General Tire officials had been involved in an overseas bribery scandal.

The finding of unfitness stunned the broadcast industry because it meant RKO would have to surrender the three stations — worth an estimated $400 million — and because it also jeopardized the company's continued ownership of 13 other radio and TV stations.

RKO promptly appealed the case to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

While it is unusual for a regulatory agency to seek return of a case after it has made its ruling and an appeal has been filed, it is not without precedent. In RKO's case, the industry had been eagerly following the matter because the composition of the agency has changed so much since the FCC's narrow 4-3 vote against RKO last year.

Two Democrats who helped form that bare majority — former chairman Charles D. Ferris and Tyrone Brown — left the FCC after the election of Ronald Reagan as president. Fowler was sworn in as chairman two months ago and Republican Mimi Weyforth Dawson was sworn in just this week.

Increased crop exports could jeopardize pastures, forests

WASHINGTON (AP) — American farmers could meet the increased export demand the Reagan administration hopes to generate for their products, but it would be at the expense of other commodities — land and water, officials say.

"Our present supply of cropland is fully used," says Pierre Crosson, an economist with Resources for the Future, a privately-financed research group. "The additional demand could be accommodated only by converting land now in pasture, forest and range."

Such conversion, involving millions of acres to meet even the most conservative projections for export growth, would mean less meat, milk and wood production, added Neil Sampson of the National Association of Conservation Districts.

"So while the additional production of crops is possible, it is at a loss in our ability to produce other valuable commodities," Sampson said.

Testifying Wednesday before the House Agriculture subcommittee on foreign agriculture, Crosson also said that bringing fragile lands into crop production would drive up land prices and increase erosion, lowering productivity and damaging water quality.

"In a nutshell," said Jack Doyle of the Environmental Policy Center, "a resource base pushed to its limit to accommodate exports markets could very well facilitate an increasing rate of farm failures and resulting farm consolidations, creating in the end an agricultural system relying on capital, technology, large corporations and government assistance."

While not suggesting a halt to export expansion efforts, the witnesses said the government must seriously consider the ramifications before deciding to vigorously promote them.

As part of the administration's drive toward a market-oriented farm policy, Agriculture Secretary John Block has urged and won congressinal support for increased development of foreign markets to give American farmers new outlets for their crops and a way of increasing their income.

But Berton Henningston of the National Farmers Organization told the subcommittee that as exports soared over the last 30 years, American farm income has plummeted.

Court clears way for Black Panther suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court is reinstating the Black Panther Party's 1976 civil suit charging that the federal government used wiretaps, mail openings and burglaries in a conspiracy to destroy the organization.

The U.S. Court of Appeals ruled Wednesday that a lower court failed to give proper consideration to claims by the Panthers and their founder, Huey P. Newton, that answering certain questions would have violated their constitutional rights.

The lower court had dismissed the damage suits after Panther officials refused to respond to the questions.

The three-member appellate panel ordered U.S. District Judge John Lewis Smith Jr. to balance the First Amendment and Fifth Amendment claims of the Panthers against the government's need for information.

The government wanted, among other things, the names of party members not publicly known and information about Newton's tax dealings and several shooting incidents.

The Panthers filed the civil suit in 1976 after learning of the FBI's COINTELPRO program, which the party claimed was an orchestrated effort to destroy it and other black nationalist organizations.

The party and Newton each sought $100 million in damages. Party member Elaine Brown also asked for $100 million but did not participate in the appeal.

Circuit Judges J. Skelly Wright and Ruth Bader Ginsburg ordered Smith to consider the Panthers' constitutional claims more thoroughly, but the third judge on the panel, George MacKinnon, rejected the majority's "half-hearted approval of the Panthers' refusal to supply certain critical information."

MacKinnon agreed that the Panthers deserved another chance to answer the questions, but he rejected the constitutional claims, saying the Panthers should be ordered to answer the government's queries without delay.

Justice Department spokesman Robert Stevenson said it was too early to decide whether the government would appeal the ruling further.

Newton refused to answer questions about his activities and tax dealings by citing his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. He said the questions referred to matters pending in civil and criminal investigations against him.

"The (lower) court never considered whether there was a serious threat to Newton's Fifth Amendment rights," Judge Wright said in his majority opinion. "The record as it now stands strongly suggests that Newton properly invoked the privilege against self-incrimination."

In suggesting the "balancing approach," the court said the claim of privilege should be upheld "unless the defendant can show that his need for the information in question is substantial."

The party cited its First Amendment rights in refusing to disclose members unknown to the public, contending such persons would be harassed and their rights of expression and association infringed.

The party claimed, for instance, that FBI agents continued to record names and license numbers of people who visited Ms. Brown. The government claimed that if such activities took place in the past, they since have stopped.

Bounty replica for sale at $4.5 million

NEW YORK (AP) — A film production company here is trying to unload a rather large prop: a full-scale replica of the H.M.S. Bounty, the scene of the 1789 mutiny against Capt. William Bligh.

The asking price is $4.5 million.

Fred Sidewater, vice president of the Dino de Laurentiis Corp., said in an interview Wednesday that he has had a few calls from "people wh want it in a few year Dor some sot of exhibition,—' but nV nirm offers.

i The 133-foo⅝ square-rigger was built for a remake of "Mutiny on the Bounty," which never was filmed. It is fitted with two diesel engines and 10,500 square feet of flaxen sails. It can accommodate 30 people — eough for a sizable mutiny.

The Bounty now is bobbing in the waters off New Zealand.

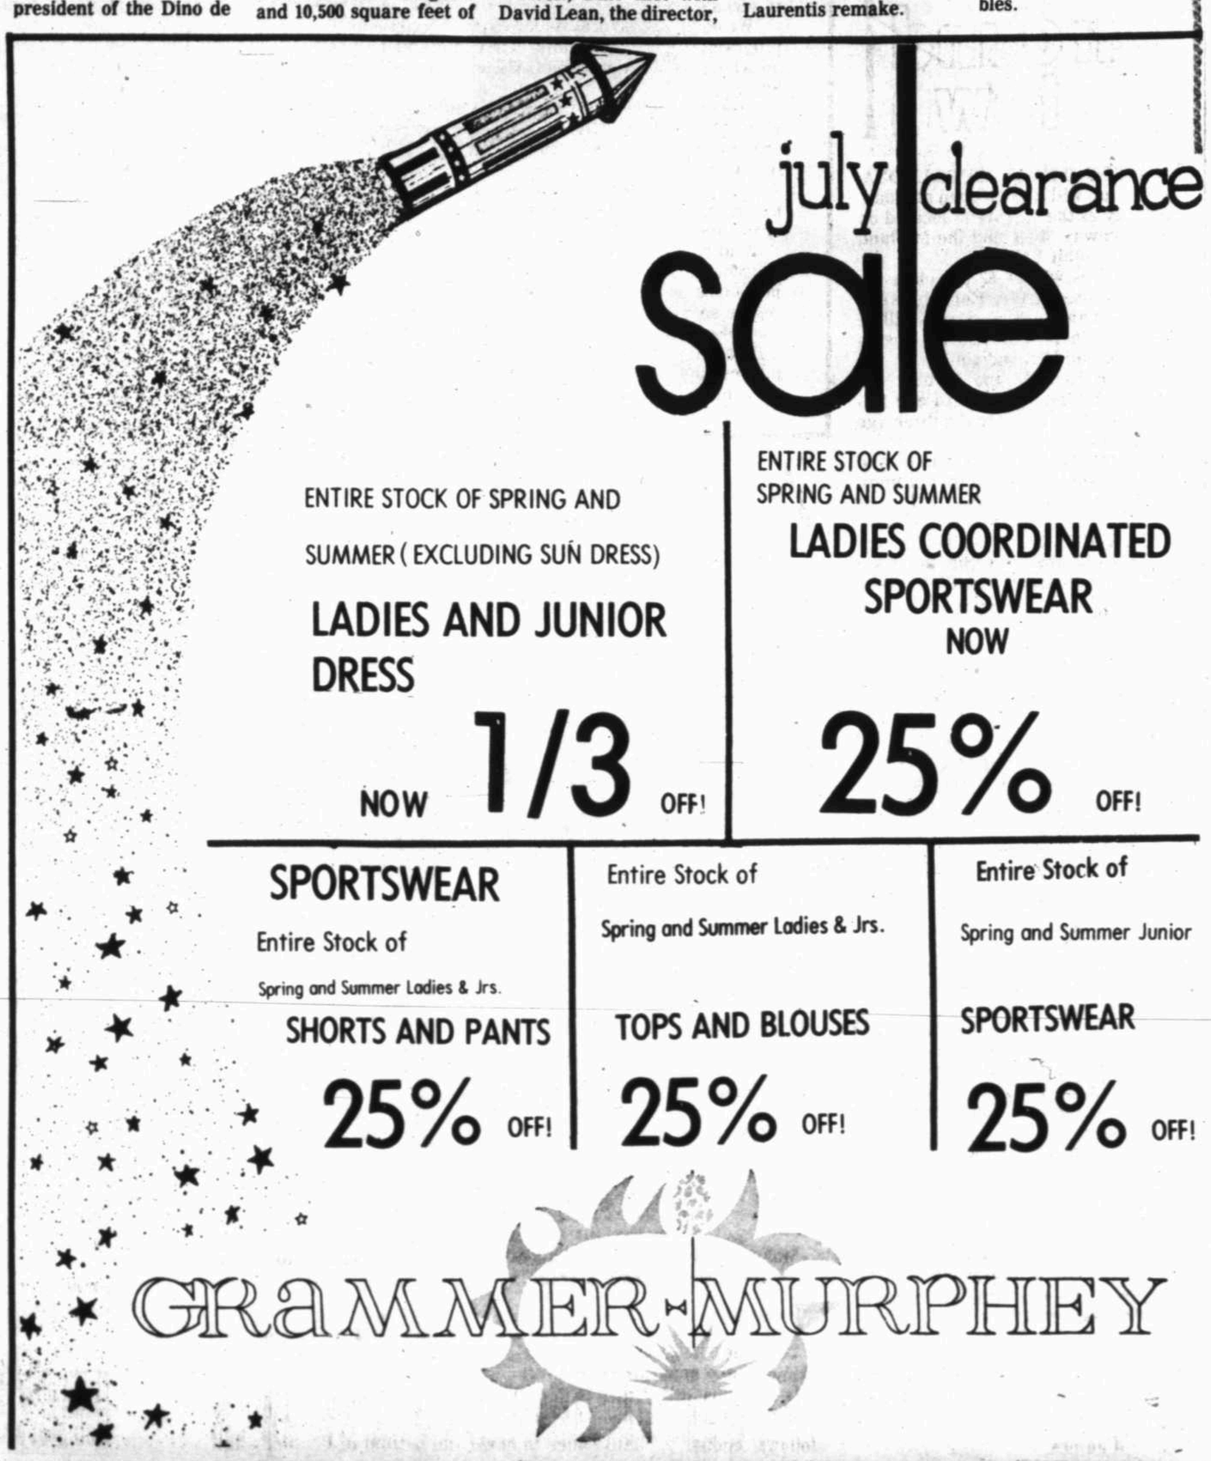
Sidewater was vague about what went wrong with the film project, but apparently it had to do with money:

"Well, Dino met with David Lean, the director, and they got a script and then ran into problems and then Lean tried for a while to do it himself, and by the time it turned out the project was a little too costly, the ship was already built."

He did not rule out the possibility that Capt. Bligh and crew may show up eventually on the screen in a de Laurentis remake.

"If the sale doesn't go well, we may make the picture," he said, and added another possibility: "If they want it for the bicentennial celebration in two years in Australia, we could sell it to them and make the movie in the meantime."

So far, there have been some encouraging nibbles.



DEA chief says diplomacy must be used to curb drug smuggling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Departing Drug Enforcement Administrator Peter B. Bensinger said today that U.S. diplomatic initiatives at the highest levels are required to halt the smuggling of marijuana, heroin, cocaine and quaaludes into this country.

"Secretary of State (Alexander M.) Haig is busy, but I'd feel more comfortable if he'd visit Colombia, Jamaica, the Bahamas, Thailand, Burma, Pakistan, Peru and Bolivia — the major sources of the United States' illegal drug problem," Bensinger said in his last major speech as chief of the agency he has headed since 1975.

Bensinger's remarks were prepared for delivery to the 8th Circuit Judicial Conference in Kansas City. His text was released here.

Attorney General William French Smith decided last month to accept Bensinger's resignation as head of the Justice Department agency. Department sources said Reagan administration officials were upset with Bensinger for not being a "team player."

There had been published speculation that Bensinger, who is Republican, might be interested in becoming an ambassador.

In his speech, Bensinger, who leaves office July 10, outlined his personal "blueprint for action" to solve the U.S. drug problem and reviewed suggestions he has made over the years. But he led off his proposals with an extensive discussion of what the State Department ought to do.

Bensinger said the majority of marijuana and virtually all the heroin, cocaine and quaaludes in the United States comes from abroad.

"Yet the State Department, which directs and funds international narcotics matters, has had a budget for that purpose of about $35 million a year, and it has remained static during the last four years," he said.

He said the United States should encourage foreign countries to eradicate their narcotics crops by copying Mexico's program for opium and heroin destruction. He criticized the State Department's Agency for International Development for "not adequately utilizing available funds for agricultural development, rural development and crop substitution to supplant illicit narcotic cash crops."

Bensinger also said the United States needed to negotiate treaties with the major areas for trading in narcotics-generated cash, such as the Bahamas and the Cayman Islands.

"Solutions to these problems are going to require the active attention and participation at the highest levels of our government, from the White House to the secretary of state to other Cabinet-level agencies," Bensinger said.

Bensinger also called for a series of other changes, including stiffer bail for narcotics traffickers, more federal funds for drug enforcement at every level of government and greater cooperation between the federal and local agencies involved in the problem.

He made no mention of a proposal under study by Smith to combine the DEA with the FBI. After he leaves office, Bensinger will participate in a study committee selected by Smith to determine whether that merger should take place.

Smith replaced Bensinger with an acting director from the top echelon of the FBI, Francis "Bud" Mullen Jr.

The attorney general has said that whether or not there is a merger, he wants to use more FBI resources in tracking the complicated cash transactions used by sophisticated drug rings.

Bensinger said drug enforce.ent in the United States had suffered from a lack of attention. "We have yet to focus increased resources against drug abuse. We in law enforcement, whether at the federal, state or local level, are defensive, underbudgeted and under-staffed, outspent by the enemy, given low priority by policymakers; our agents and police officers are frustrated, misunderstood, maligned, browbeaten and berated," he said.

U. S. eases human rights policy toward South American regimes

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a reversal of Carter administration policy, the State Department will support international development bank loans for four South American regimes often accused of human rights violations, U.S. officials say.

The decision affects U.S. votes on almost $520 million in loan applications from Argentina, Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay. All are run by military-dominated governments.

The Carter administration generally opposed loans to these countries because of alleged human rights violations, but the State Department says it now believes that each is improving its protection of human rights.

The administration decision was disclosed to Congress on July 1 in a letter from Assistant Treasury Secretary Dennis Thomas to Rep. Jerry Patterson, D-Calif., chairman of a House Banking subcommittee.

Thomas said U.S. representatives to the international banks were instructed to vote in favor of loan applications from the four countries. The votes, he said, did not violate legislation requiring a negative U.S. vote or an abstention on loan requests from countries guilty of systematic repression.

But Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said Wednesday night that the administration decision is in "clear violation of the law."

Harkin, an outspoken human rights advocate, said 10,000 to 15,000 Argentines have disappeared for political reasons over the past six years.

Citing a recent Amnesty International report, Harkin said the situation in Chile has deteriorated markedly. In Paraguay, he said, there has been widespread abuse of the Indian population, including allegations of genocide.

Harkin said he lacked sufficient information to make a judgment on the situation in Uruguay.

Although acknowledging that human rights problems remain in all four countries, a State Department spokesman said Wednesday, "If we are to have a policy that encourages further progress, we have to recognize the improvements that have occurred.

"More will be gained for human rights by recognizing improvements than by continuing public condemnation implicit in negative votes or abstentions on multilateral development loans," said the spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

On Argentina, the spokesman conceded that many thousands of people disappeared between 1976 and 1978, but he said there has been a "vast improvement"in the overall situation. He said there have been no confirmed disappearances since last August.

In Chile, the official said, there have been no disappearances since 1977 and almost all political prisoners had been released by early 1978. No specific information was available on the situations in Uruguay and Paraguay.

The administration decision affects U.S. votes on two Inter-American Development Bank loans for Chile totaling $161 million; two World Bank loans and one International Finance Corporation loan to Argentina totaling $310 million; a $40 million World ank loan to Uruguay and a $7.8 million International Finance Corporation loan to Paraguay.

The loan applications reportedly were either approved this week or will be voted upon later this month.

Officials said the Carter administration voted no or abstained on 122 loans from 16 countries because of human rights violations.

Generally, the recipient countries were able to muster enough support from other countries to ensure approval of the loan despite the lack of American support.

Prime rate 20.5 percent at major U.S. banks

NEW YORK (AP) — Many economists have been forecasting lower interest rates for several weeks, but so far rates have been moving in the other direction.

The prime lending rate charged by banks has climbed to 20.5 percent, just one percentage point below the peak reached last December. Most major banks adopted the higher rate Wednesday, raising their charge from 20 percent to the level set last week by a couple of banks.

With the economy sluggish, inflation apparently receding and the money supply stable, many economists thought significant declines in rates were likely.

Thomas Thomson, the chief economist of Crocker Bank in San Francisco, which joined in the increase, said he was disappointed by the development and laid it at the doorstep of the Federal Reserve Board, which has kept monetary policy tight.

That determination has been seen in the interest rate on federal funds, money loaned overnight between banks. That rate is subject to intervention by the Fed, and has been hovering near 20 percent.

"People have finally decided they're tired of waiting for the fed funds to break" and have adjusted to the higher rates, Thomson said. "People's patience has just sort of worn out."

Interest rates also rose sharply in bond market trading Wednesday, but then dropped after the Fed injected reserves into the market.

Health Awareness Saturday

Good response has been made to the Vial of Life campaign launched by the Altrusa Club of Midland, according to Beverly Dyer, chairman of the community service program.

"We have had several senior citizens sign up for the program already," she said. First Midlander to sign up who is not a member of Altrusa was Mrs. Pearl Smith.

A Health Awareness Day will be Saturday at Dellwood Mall, where Altrusa Club and various health organizations will have booths set up to distribute information.

Emphasis of the day will be on the Vial of Life program, co-sponsored by the Crime Prevention Unit of the Midland Police Department.

"Vial of Life" is a nation-wide service that enables householders to store life-saving medical information in a three-inch plastic vial so that it is accessible to rescue squads and to police and fire departments in case of emergency.

Placed inside the vial is a data sheet containing date information recorded, age and name of person, doctor's name and phone number, hospital preferred, known diseases, any allergies, if person is on water pills and medications, emergency phone number, insurance information and blood type. Any distinguishing physical characteristics are also noted in case two females or two males are found together to prevent any mix-up in treatment.

After the information is placed inside the vials, (which look like containers which pills might come in) the vials are attached underneath the top right shelf of the refrigerator inthe home. The refrigerator is used since most every home has one, it is in a standard, easy-to-find location and is the most fire-proof item in a home. Decals alert emergency personnel to look for the containers and vital medical information which otherwise might not be available in time.

This program is not only for senior citizens and the chronically ill or those who live alone, but can be used for all households. In an emergency, a rescue squad member or a police officer could quickly locate the vial and save valuable minutes and, perhaps, lives.

Persons who would like to participate in this program can call the 24 hour answering servie at 684-8296, or drop by Dellwood Mall Saturday.

Good July buys

WASHINGTON — Chicken together with fresh fruit salad will make ideal inexpensive meals this summer, the Agriculture Department said this week.

In a Food Marketing Alert sent to food buyers at hospitals and other institutions, the department advised that broilers are a good buy this month.

Several fruits will be inexpensive in July because of potential record crops. Fresh peaches, nectarines, plums, limes, oranges and lemons should be plentiful in July, the department's Agricultural Marketing Service said.

The output of freestone peaches in California is expected to hit a record. Production of South Carolina peaches also will set a record, the department predicted. The quality of peaches is good, but peaches are smaller than average, department experts said.

"Plum production in California is also heading for a record this year," the department said.

The nectarine crop should surpass last year's record. Growers have had problems in fruit size development, but there should be plenty for food shoppers, the department said.

Lime shipments are behind, but should catch up. A record crop is expected in Florida, the major lime-producing state.

Shoppers also should find plentiful supplies of eggs, turkey, milk and dairy products. Canned peaches, pears and fruit cocktail will be in plentiful supply. The department also predicted that raisins, dried prunes, rice, dry beans and dry peas will be in plentiul supply.

By contrast, fresh Bartlett pears will be in light supply, although more shipments are expected in late July.

A different cheese lasagne recipe

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

There are a good many lasagne recipes in this world, but as a rule they call for a meat sauce or a tomato sauce with meatballs to be layered with lasagne noodles and the usual variety of cheeses. In her "Italian Regional Cooking," Ada Boni, noted for her classic Italian culinary contributions, gives five lasagne recipes from different sections of Italy — all containing meat.

Americans have made innovations. Of late, vegetarian recipes for lasagne have sprung up. And previously to these, in his book "The World of Cheese," Evan Jones gives a recipe for lasagne calling for shrimp and crab instead of meat.

Don't ask me how I got the following idea. Maybe from the plainest sort of pizza. But recently I longed to make a change: to create a new version of lasagne, one featuring the noodles, a light French tomato sauce and the usual cheeses. It would be a main dish that, with a green salad and some crusty garlic bread, plus fresh fruit and espresso, would make a warm-weather supper friends would welcome.

According to my tasters and to one of my assistants who used the recipe in her own household, it was extremely successful. My recipe, then, for your consideration.

SUMMERTIME CHEESE LASAGNE

French Tomato Sauce, recipe follows
8-ounce package lasagne
1 pound (about) ricotta cheese
¾ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese, not packed down
8 ounces whole-milk mozzarella cheese, cut in 8 slices

Make the French Tomato Sauce. It may be refrigerated for a few days or frozen for longer storage.

Cook the lasagne according to package directions and drain in a colander and separate strips.

In a 2-quart baking dish (8 by 8 by 2 inches) layer the ingredients as follows: enough Tomato Sauce to cover the bottom of the dish; half the lasagne strips, overlapping sides and folding ends over to fit pan; about 1 cup ricotta; ¼ cup Parmesan; 4 slices Mozzarella. Repeat layers, but this time end with the remaining Sauce; sprinkle with the remaining ¼ cup Parmesan. Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 375-degree oven until hot through — 20 to 30 minutes. Let stand at room temperature for at least 10 minutes before serving hot. Or serve at room temperature. Makes 6 servings.

FRENCH TOMATO SAUCE

1-3rd cup olive oil (generous)
2 medium onions, minced (about 1 cup)
35-ounce can Italian peeled plum tomatoes (packed in tomato juice and basil), undrained
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon freshly ground pepper
1 teaspoon sugar
1 large clove garlic, minced
1 teaspoon dried crushed thyme

In a 5-quart heavy saucepot, in the hot oil, gently cook the onion, stirring often, until soft but not brown — about 10 minutes. Add the tomatoes, salt, pepper, sugar, garlic and thyme. Simmer, uncovered, stirring often, until the consistency of chili sauce — about 1¼ hours. Puree in an electric blender or a food processor. Taste and adjust seasoning as desired. Makes about 2 1-3rd cups. Use as directed in the Summertime Cheese Lasagne recipe.

Note: We adapted this French Tomato Sauce recipe from one created by Lydie Pinoy Marshall; who conducts the French cooking school, A La Bonne Cocotte, in New York City.

An emergency main dish from the pantry shelf.
8.5-ounce can creamstyle golden corn
3/4 cup small pitted ripe olives, halved
¾ cup grated cheddar cheese
14½-ounce can tamales with chili gravy, undrained
(5 tamales)

In a shallow 3-cup baking dish stir together the corn, olives and ¼ cup of the cheese. Remove wrappers from tamales; cut each in thirds; fold into corn mixture. Sprinkle with remaining cheese. Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 350-degree oven until bubbling hot — about 30 minutes. Good served with brown rice. Makes 2 large or 3 small servings.

Picnics range from tidbits to banquets

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

According to one authority, a picnic is any outdoor meal to which each participant contributes a dish.

Above all, it is a spread eaten if possible in picturesque surroundings with informality the theme, and pleasure the goal.

And that's about all these alfresco meals have in common. They range from a couple of sandwiches to a full-course banquet.

It may be a beach outing featuring finger foods like cold broiled chicken, French rolls and other delicacies that can be gripped firmly in the hand to prevent their falling in the sand.

Or it can be a roadside spread to break up the monotony of a long auto trip. Such tailgate meals can feature appetizers like deviled eggs and lead up to a spicy meatloaf or country pate that can be eaten with the fingers or sliced on split rolls.

If you don't feel like preparing your own food, there are shops in most cities that will make up a gourmet hamper with delicacies like game pie, Camembert cheese and potted shrimp. Each hamper is usually accompanied by a bottle of chilled champagne or table wine.

The most elaborate picnic I ever enjoyed was hosted by a well known restaurant owner who invited me to the opening of a summer theater in New England.

On the lawn outside the playhouse we feasted before curtain time on chilled curried zucchini soup, scallops marinated in lime juice, a roast beef and potato salad in Rhine wine.

POTATO SALAD

1 pound lean sliced cold roast beef, cut into strips
2 tablespoons onion, minced
2 tablespoons green olives, chopped
2 potatoes, boiled, peeled and sliced
2 medium tomatoes, quartered
2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
1 teaspoon tarragon
1 cup Rhine wine
1 cup olive oil
2 tablespoons white wine vinegar salt and pepper to taste
lettuce

Put beef in a salad bowl with onion, olives, potatoes, tomatoes and egg slices. Combine tarragon, wine, oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Mix dressing and pour over salad. Chill two hours, mound on lettuce and serve. Serves 4. Good with a hearty Burgundy.

DEAR ABBY

Semi-nude model fears an exposure

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have a rather embarrassing problem. I am a 20-year-old college junior at a large university. For a while I dated what seemed to be a nice guy I'll call Bill. He attends the same "U," and is an art major.

Bill took some photographs of me on the beach in my two-piece bikini bathing suit last summer. After that I sort of broke off with him and started seeing another fellow.

I recently learned through friends that Bill is painting a nude portrait of me, using as a model the picture he took of me in the bathing suit! Of course, he's using his imagination, but I don't like the idea. He's planning to use this portrait of me in an art exhibit. I do have a great body, but I don't want half the world seeing me naked, in addition to which I don't want people to think that I actually posed for that.

What should I do? — NO NUDE MODEL

DEAR NO NUDE: Since it's your "great body" Bill wants to immortalize on canvas, ask him to please use somebody else's face. If he refuses, tell him to leave the suit on, or you will see a lawyer about bringing another kind of "suit" into the picture.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 20-year-old girl, living alone. I date a guy who is 20 and lives with his parents. He called and said some relatives had come in unexpectedly from out of town and wanted to stay all night, but they were short of room at his house. He told his mother he would sleep at a friend's house. Well, the "friend" happened to be me.

When he asked me if he could sleep here, I said, "Sure," thinking I'd put him up on the sofa. When it became apparent that he thought he was going to share my bed, I said, "Nothing doing."

He said I was "undersexed," and I threw him out of the house. He hasn't called me since.

Do you think I'm undersexed? — MYRA

DEAR MYRA: No, I think he was over-optimistic.

Honors are piling up for young woman with long-range plans

By JOY STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Being named one of Glamour magazine's 1981 Top Ten College Women is the most recent honor for Kiron Skinner, who at age 19 has amassed an impressive list of achievements.

At 15 she held a congressional internship with Rep. Paul McCloskey, R-Calif., and at 17 she interned for Sen. S. I. Hayakawa, R-Calif. A June graduate of Spelman College in Atlanta with a major in political science, she entered Harvard this summer to pursue a Ph.D. in the same field.

Ms. Skinner, a Danforth-Compton Fellow and a Truman Scholar, is the youngest member of the Board of Trustees of Gertrude Wilks Academy, a private school for black children in East Palo Alto, Calif.

She worked on the Spelman school newspaper, co-chaired the Foreign Student Task Force of the International Student Liaison Committee for the city of Atlanta and in her junior year won an International Communications Agency Scholarship to the Dominican Republic, where she studied Spanish and American foreign policy.

"I come from a family that has always been civic minded," she said in an interview in New York, where she and the other winners were honored for their scholarship, leadership and involvement in campus and community activities by Glamour, which features the 10 in its August issue.

"My parents were active in the civil rights movement of the '60s, not for what they could get for themselves but for what they could give to others. I saw that, and that triggered an interest in public service and later an interest in government."

At Sacramento City College, the junior college she attended and where she was named "Outstanding Female Student of the Year," she was valedictorian of her class and won a number of awards in persuasive speaking and debate.

"I got actively involved in politics when I was 14 and in the 10th grade. I was disillusioned with the public schools in California, which weren't encouraging black students to excel," explained Ms. Skinner, who grew up in Sacramento.

Her interest in trying to see them get a better break led her to a meeting with McCloskey and to the two-month internship in Washington, D.C.

"All the others were older and in college, and they were a little apprehensive about giving me responsibility, so at first I was just opening mail," she remembers. "I talked to McCloskey and said 'I'm interested in learning about your office,' and after that I started having regular intern assignments."

She did research on bills, talked to people on both sides, outlined pro and con arguments and gave recommendations. Two years later, she worked as an intern in Hayakawa's district office in California, having "called the field office and told them about myself" to get the job.

Ms. Skinner recalled with a smile that in 1976 when her father was running for a California state assembly seat on the Democratic ticket she campaigned for him while she was working on McCloskey's campaign. Her father, now dean of academic affairs at San Bernardino Valley College, did not win, but she says she enjoyed the experience.

"It wasn't a problem at all," she said of working for a Democrat and a Republican at the same time. "It was good for me in that I got to look at the issues from both sides. I'm non-partisan, really."

Ms. Skinner hopes to have her doctorate in four years, go back to Spelman to teach political science for two years and then pursue a White House fellowship, eventually working in some capacity on U.S. foreign policy in the Caribbean or Latin America. "I'm interested in that part of the world from an academic and from a public service perspective," she says.

"It's good to have a plan, some idea of where you're going, whether it works out that way or not," says Ms. Skinner, "and I hope marrying and having children fits in. It's important to me.

"My ultimate goal," she adds casually, "is to be Secretary of State."

Kiron Skinner, whose unusual first name was coined to rhyme with that of her father — Byron — says being black and a woman should work to her advantage.

"My mother always taught me to look at it not as a big disadvantage, but to realize who I am and what I'm about and go on from there," she explains.

"I'm not the type of person to say 'I'm female and I'm black and I have two strikes against me and therefore I won't even try.' I say 'I'm black, female and I'm qualified — and I'm going to try to do what I want to.'"

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Bleach out sponges

DEAR HELOISE:

Kitchen sponges get grungy looking so quickly and, try as I might, I couldn't get them to appear clean enough to suit me.

Today, I thought of trying liquid laundry bleach and took a chance with an old sponge. Soaked it in a plastic container in about one-fourth cup bleach and one quart of water, leaving it in the solution for about an hour.

What a surprise! It looked almost as good as new!

I gathered up all my other sponges and cleaned them too. Up until now when the sponges looked grimy, I would throw them away. What a waste! — Lillian Sturm

\+ + +

Sure was! Aren't you proud of yourself? I am! — Hugs, Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: Make it easier to turn screws into hard wood by first rubbing the threaded portion across a bar of soap..

This also makes removing the screws less of a hassle later. — Howard Kelly

NON-STICK VEGGIE BINS

Dear Heloise: Many times refrigerator vegetable and meat bins become difficult to slide in and out.

To remedy this, I removed the bins, cleaned well and sprayed the lips of the bins, as well as the runners attached to the refrigerator, with non-stick vegetable spray.

Now, they glide in and out as smoothly as can be. — Mrs. P. Corwin

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: Some of your readers might be annoyed at the price labels grocery and department stores place on items which are so difficult to remove and, in some cases, are designed to break up into little pieces when you take them off.

This is necessary to guard against the person who tries to switch price labels from one article to another.

It's unfortunate that these things happen and that stores have to take such steps, but they do happen and this is one of the easier ways to guard against it. — Clerk

\+ + +

This I understand, but do the labels have to be put smackdab on the inside bottom of a bowl or close to the rim of a pitcher or glass?

Why can't the labels be put in a less conspicuous place — the underside of the bowl or glass for instance? At least the glue residue would be less visible!

However, if you're having a problem with glue residue on a dish, etc. we have had good results removing it with fingernail polish remover or pre-wash spray, or by rubbing in dry cornmeal or dry powdered cleanser with a soft cloth. Sometimes to the above ingredients, you have to add tons and tons of elbow grease and lots and lots of patience and perserverance. — Heloise

SPONGE PIN HOLDER

Dear Heloise: I put a gorgeous decorative band of wool around the neck of my sewing machine head but, alas, after using it several days, I realized the pins, etc., would be scratching my machine as they poked through the band.

Since my husband had just bought me the machine, I didn't want it scratched. I had a bucketful of those handy little sponges, so I cut one to fit behind the strip of wool.

Now, I can stick in pins, needles, my seam ripper etc., and they won't go through the cloth and scratch my beautiful new machine. — Jo Anne DeAngio

GARBAGE BAGS

Dear Heloise: Grocery bags make great liners for kitchen trash cans...

To prevent your bag from tearing while folding the top edge, simply fold the edge in rather than out.

\+ + +

Have a something-for-nothing idea — like using grocery bags to line trash cans? Send it to Heloise care of this newspaper. She can't answer your letter personally but she'll use the best freebie suggestions in her column.

Sentenced to summer school

By ERMA BOMBECK

Our son is the victim of parental brutality.

Loosely translated, that means he's going to summer school.

You'd think he was serving time for something he didn't do.

"I go to school for nine long months," he said. "Every morning, I get out of bed, get dressed, grab 80 pounds of books and drag through four long dreary classes with nothing in between but three free periods and lunch. If it weren't for history class, I wouldn't get any sleep at all. Then as soon as I check out, I have to play tennis for another two hours. I paid my dues to education last winter. This summer do I get to sleep in and relax a little bit? No! You've got me going right back into the front line of academia with another class. What is it with you? Did you promise the board of education your first-born child if they'd pass you in driver's ed or something?"

"You're overreacting," I said. "Somehow I don't see a course in Party Guitar as the front line of academia."

"That's all you know. YOU try to reach an E-flat when your hands are sweaty."

"Did you know there's a group of students in San Francisco who are protesting because they don't have more classes?"

"Are those the same people you're always going to send my Fiesta Broccoli to because they're starving?"

"Don't get cute. I'm saying that somewhere there are people who want to learn more. They're all immigrants and when the school board cut out their last period in the day, they demanded they reinstate the class. A student from Nicaragua said, 'We're not here to make trouble. We're here to learn.'"

"Maybe if I was in another country," he said, "I'd want to learn too."

I hate to admit it, but maybe the kid has stumbled onto something that might be a solution to educational apathy in this country. As long as we're busing anyway, why not bus them to other countries where education isn't regarded as a sentence, but a luxury?

It's painful, but allow me to be the first to volunteer for export one child who gets up at the crack of noon, watches three game shows, two soaps, eats down to the frost in the refrigerator, then ambles over to the school where he stretches his searching mind and his sweaty hands for an E-flat.

Recipes for pigs feet and other offal stuff

By MERLE ELLIS

There seems to be a growing interest in some cuts of meat that many of us haven't thought much about in years — if ever! In the past week I have received four calls from readers in the San Francisco area asking about cuts that I didn't think anybody even wanted to talk about these days, let alone eat.

One woman called to ask: "Where can I get veal fries?" It took a few phone calls, but we found them. The next day, her husband called back to ask how to cook them.

Another woman called to say: "I just bought a pig's head — it was only 59 cents a pound and I want to make head cheese like my mother used to make. Do you have a recipe?"

The next day I walked into the Corner Market and my ex-boss, David Wagner, said: "I've got a column for you, Merle. Why don't you write about lambs' heads? Some guy just ordered six of them. It's the first time I've sold a lamb's head in 20 years. They cost only $1.59 each! What do you do with 'em?"

Before the week was out another woman called to say: "Pig's feet were on sale at the market this week for only 59 cents a pound. I couldn't pass up the price! What do I do with three pounds of pig's feet?"

In each case, I have been able to help — at least a little — thanks largely to a marvelous little book titled "Innards and Other Variety Meats," by Jana Allen and Margaret Gin, published by 101 Productions in San Francisco.

It's not a new book. It was published in 1974, but it is still available and I highly recommend it to anyone who has an interest in any of that "offal" stuff. Things like hearts, tongues, heads, tails and feet, many of which are the only cheap cuts of meat remaining, can be delicious if you know what to do with them.

I will confess to a certain lack of interest — based, I'm sure, on ignorance — in roasted lamb's head, even if they are only $1.59 each. But when it comes to pig's feet, that's another story. There are all manner of marvelous meals to be made from pig's feet, and at 59 cents a pound we can afford to experiment. As a matter of fact, at that price we can't really afford not to.

No matter how you prepare pig's feet — from the Italian "Zampino," a pig's foot boned and stuffed with a sausage forcemeat, to the all-American pickled pig's feet — the first step usually is the same: parboil.

Select the largest pig's feet you can find. The larger ones usually have more of the meaty pork hock left on. Unless you want to stuff the feet for Zampino, have the butcher split them for you. You can do this yourself after they are cooked, but it is a big saving in time and trouble if you have him do it on the electric saw.

Wrap each foot, either whole or two split halves, in a couple of layers of cheesecloth and tie securely. This prevents the feet from falling apart in the long slow parboiling process. Put the feet in a large pot with enough water to cover. Add a stalk or two of celery, an onion stuck with a couple of cloves, a carrot, 6 or 8 peppercorns, a bay leaf or two, and, if you like, 6 or 8 allspice berries. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer for three hours. Let the pig's feet cool in their own cooking liquid until cool enough to handle. Remove cheesecloth and procede.

BROILED PIG'S FEET ST. MENEHOULD

Prepare split pig's feet as described above. When cool enough to handle, remove cheesecloth and pick all of the bones from each foot. Brush each boneless foot liberally with mustard and coat with bread crumbs. Broil or grill until nicely browned on all sides and serve with more mustard, dill pickles and a cold beer.

PIG'S FEET AND SAUERKRAUT

6 pig's feet, split
2 quarts sauerkraut, rinsed, drained
6 or 8 small potatoes, peeled, sliced
1 onion, sliced
1 tart apple, peeled, sliced
1 tablespoon caraway seeds
Dry white wine

Parboil pig's feet as described. Place two of the feet in the bottom of a heavy casserole. Put a layer of sauerkraut on top, followed by a layer of potatoes. Repeat with alternate layers of pig's feet, sauerkraut and potatoes, finishing off with a layer of apples and onions. Top with a sprinkling of caraway seeds. Add wine to cover and bake at 325 degrees, until the potatoes are tender, 30 to 45 minutes. Serves 6 to 8 — cheaply!

A new-twist party entree, Reuben Meat Loaf, varies a classic theme and is preceded by an almost-instant appetizer served hot or cold. They make a perfect combination to serve at dinner parties for 8 to 10 persons.

Meat loaf goes stylish for party menus

These days, a good recipe for meat loaf will turn up on the party circuit as predictably as witty conversation.

Meat loaf that's festive and fancy enough to grace a silver platter is an economical way to serve eight to ten people in style. Savvy shoppers, more and more, seem to be looking for great ground beef stretchers. And now, as in grandmother's day, the popular choice is meat loaf.

These new meat loaf recipes make two pounds of ground beef (or less) into scrumptious entrees that are appropriate for entertaining. They promise and deliver the exciting taste of international cooking. flavor and moistness are consistent because canned condensed soup is an ingredient and a base for sauce.

For a great variation on a classic theme, Reuben Meat Loaf combines condensed tomato bisque soup with one pound of ground beef and a can of corned beef. The loaf is layered with such Reubenesque ingredients as sauerkraut, Swiss cheese and caraway seed before being rolled up (as with a jelly roll) and baked for 30 minutes. The remaining tomato soup is spiked with horesradish to be spooned over the loaf before it is topped with slices of Swiss cheese and baked for an additional 15 minutes.

A sophisticated entree for a dinner-for-ten occasion may be made from two pounds of ground beef transformed into Marvelous Meat Loaf. The ground beef is mixed with condensed cream of mushroom soup, dry dread crumbs, an egg, shredded carrot, chopped onion and seasonings that include thyme. The loaf is baked to savory goodness for on hour and 15 minutes and served with a sauce prepared from the remaining mushroom soup diluted with drippings and water.

To set the stage for either of these meat loaf entrees, an appetizer such as Any Season Sipper is perfect served hot or cold. It is mde almost instantly by combining a can of condensed beef broth with a can of vegetable juice. Perch a slice of lemon on the rim of each glass for a tantalizing touch.

These are out-of-the-ordinary meat loaves that make it possible to entertain with style, but without extravagance.

Italian government closes exchanges

MILAN, Italy (AP) — The government Wednesday halted all stock trading in Italy for the rest of the week after a selling wave that has seen prices tumble more than 40 percent in the last five weeks.

The Treasury Ministry intervened on the third day of new trading rules that were designed to revive the market.

Exchange authorities had reinstituted monthly trading accounts at the beginning of the week after a two-week hiatus, but added new margin rules to discourage speculation.

Regulations imposed June 17 that limited trading exclusively to immediate cash transactions were revoked. Those rules were aimed at halting a wave of sales that had sent prices down about 25 percent in just over a week.

Share prices by the beginning of this week were about 45 percent below their peak levels in May.

After rules were lifted, share prices skidded 7 percent Monday on the Milan market, Italy's largest, with about 35 issues, or a fifth of total listed issues, temporarily removed from trading for excessive declines.

In a disastrous session Tuesday, a total absence of demand forced authorities to interrupt activity in the vain hope that large institutional investors — state banks in particular — would intervene.

FBI investigating woman thought to be terrorist

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A 32-year-old woman who is believed to be a former Communist party leader who fled from El Salvador was in the Nueces County Jail today, the Corpus Christi Caller reported today.

The newspaper said Ana Gueverra Flores was arrested June 25 with 12 other Salvadorans at a Border Patrol checkpoint near Cotulla in far South Texas.

The woman is thought to be "Commander Norma Guevarra," a a member of the Democratic National Union (UDN), a Communist Party front organization in El Salvador, the newspaper reported.

The woman was being investigated because she allegedly belonged to a terrorist group trying to topple the government in El Salvador, according to an FBI agent who asked not to be identified.

The FBI agent declined to give any details about the investigation, but a Border Patrol officer in Laredo who also asked to remain anonymous said the woman allegedly crossed the border to "do a number" on Salvadorans living in America. He would not explain the meaning of the phrase.

Border Patrol investigator Jim Knight said Ms. Guevarra was arrested when Border Patrol officials stopped a freight train at a siding near Cotulla.

The investigator said she and the other illegal aliens apparently crossed the Rio Grande by boat near Laredo, then were led by smugglers to the Missouri-Pacific train in Laredo.

She gave her name as "Ana Guevarra Flores," authorities said.

After pleading guilty to illegal entry, she was sentenced to 90 days in jail by U.S. Magistrate Tom Goodwin. She was transferred to the Nueces County jail due to a shortage of facilities for women prisoners in Laredo, officials said.

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Grand Dragon of the Texas Ku Klux Klan says white people never get "justice under the law," but attorneys for Louis Beam say they plan to appeal his conviction anyway.

Beam was convicted Wednesday of holding paramilitary war games without a permit last February at the Lyndon B. Johnson National Grasslands in North Texas. U.S. District Judge David Belew fined Beam $250, put him on a year's probation, and gave him a six-month suspended prison sentence.

"I got the justice I expected to get," Beam said after the sentence. "I don't expect white people to receive justice under the law."

The maximum penalty for the misdemeanor charge is a $500 fine and a six-month prison term.

Defense attorneys said the paramilitary maneuvers were intended to train Klansmen to prepare for an invasion of the United States by Soviet or other communist armed forces.

Beam contends the U.S. Constitution guarantees his right to assemble and bear arms and "is the only permit I need or will ever seek."

Harry Walsh III, one of Beam's two attorneys, said if a request for a new trial is rejected he will appeal the conviction.

Beam was indicted for holding a demonstration on federal property without the proper permit following Klan paramilitary maneuvers. His lawyers said the permit regulations were vague.

Defense Attorney W.R. Malone tried to have the case against Beam dismissed Tuesday because he said prosecutors had not proved Beam willfully broke the law or conducted "guerrilla warfare-type maneuvers" on the grasslands.

Malone also argued that Beam was prosecuted solely because of his public anti-government statements.

Belew had said the key issue in the non-jury case "is what knowledge is available to the public about what they can and can't do."

Nimitz sailor taken off critical list

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The condition of a sailor burned in the fiery crash aboard the USS Nimitz on May 26 has been upgraded from critical to serious at Brooke Army Medical Center.

Seaman Apprentice Stephen Pass, 21, of Calhoun, Ga., has "improved considerably," physicians at the Brooke burn ward reported reported Wednesday.

Pass was placed on the serious list along with Airman George W. Butz, 23, of Hockessin, Del., who was removed from the critical list at mid-June.

Still listed in critical condition at the hospital located at Fort Sam Houston were Petty Officer Second Class Richard H. Hokanson, 21, of Hauppage, N.Y., and Airman Recruit Richard M. Simpson, 22, of Gray, Me.

The crash and resultant fire killed 14 men and injured 48 others aboard the aircraft carrier.

Teachers present award

DENVER (AP) — Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., speaking to the national convention of the American Federation of Teachers, said Congress is nothing more than "Ronald Reagan's rowing team."

Members of Congress backed the president's budget plan without carefully reviewing the proposal or considering what effect it would have on the nation, said Mrs. Schroeder in a speech Tuesday.

"All Reagan needs to do to get a congressman on his side is promise him sugar subsidies, tobacco subsidies or even just a pair of Presidential cuff links," said Mrs. Schroeder. "And in return, the members of Congress have sold out children, women, minorities and the elderly."

About 3,000 delegates from across the nation opened their weeklong convention on Monday. The 580,000-member union is second in size to the 1.7 million-member National Education Association.

Mrs. Schroeder commended the AFT for calling itself a union, unlike the NEA, which also represents teachers in collective bargaining but is not aligned with any organized labor groups. "You're willing to stand up and not play games, and I commend you for being honest," she said.

In Washington, "where compassion has gone out of style" the AFT is one of the few groups that has refused to accept the Reagan admininstration budget plan, Mrs. Schroeder said.

Soviet dissident Vladimir Bukovsky, given the AFT human rights award, urged teachers to take up the struggle for human rights in Afghanistan. And civil rights activist Bayard Ruskin also received a human rights award and asked teachers to take up the battle for human rights around the world.

Bukovsky said the 1980 Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has been overshadowed by economic worries. People once sympathetic to the plight of the Afghans now are up in arms "about their dollars, marks and yen," he said.

"The United States' only reponse to the invasion has been a disorganized boycott of the Moscow Olympics last year," he said. "Where are all the young people who stormed Washington to protest the war in Vietnam and why won't they march now against the oppression in Afghanitan?"

Bukovsky was given the human rights award for speaking out on behalf of oppressed people inside the Soviet Union. He spent 11 years in labor camps in the Soviet Union before being allowed to emigrate to the West.

Reports welcome

ATLANTA (AP) — Former United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young says recent news reports about secret contacts between the United States and the Palestine Liberation Organization may help his campaign for mayor of Atlanta.

Young, who resigned as U.N. ambassador in 1979 after disclosures that he had met secretly with the PLO observer at the U.N., said Tuesday the news reports lessen the problems his resignation might have created for his current campaign.

"I was glad the story came up because it gives me a context in which to discuss it when it's not an attack on me," he said. "It helps that it came out now, rather than coming up as campaign charges."

The Los Angeles Times reported last weekend that the U.S. government has maintained secret contacts with the PLO since the administration of former President Richard Nixon.

Perjury trial opens

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The trial of Jennifer King, an attorney for boxing promoter Harold Smith, began with her defense protraying Ms. King as "an ambitious" woman whose inexperience led her into a mire of legal woes.

Ms. King is facing federal charges of giving false testimony before a grand jury investigating an alleged $21 million dollar bank embezzlement. The four-count federal grand jury indictment accuses her of lying and counseling another witness to lie before the grand jury.

In opening remarks Tuesday, Ms. King's attorney, Allen Sigel, argued that his client had been victimized by one of Smith's employees at Muhammed Ali Professional Sports Inc. who wants to avoid prosecution in the alleged embezzlement.

But the prosecutor, U.S. Attorney Richard Drooyan, charged that the tall, blond lawyer and former TV weathercaster deliberately lied to a grand jury and counseled Terisa Key — personal secretary and bookkeeper for Smith — to lie in order to save her own skin.

Drooyan told the U.S. District Court jury he would play a tape-recorded conversation in which "you will hear Jennifer King tell Terisa Key to lie, to forget about some matters, to say she couldn't remember about various other matters."

Both Ms. King and Mrs. Key appeared before a federal grand jury investigating allegations that Smith - whose real name is Ross Fields but who is using the name Smith - embezzled $21.3 million from Wells Fargo Bank.

Ms. King is alleged to have lied when she told the grand jury she had given investigators all documents relevant to the case. The prosecution claims she knew of the existence of a Muhammed Ali Professional Sports bookkeeping ledger that has never been found.

The indictment also alleges that on three occasions Ms. King tried to talk Mrs. Key into lying to the grand jury to back up Ms. King's testimony about the ledger and also to back up Smith's claim that he had a $12 million line of credit at Wells Fargo.

Drooyan claimed Ms. King repeatedly tried to get Mrs. Key to either deny or say she couldn't recall whether the ledger existed, suggesting several possible lines of testimony in an effort "to come up with something Terisa Key would feel comfortable with."

He portrayed Ms. King as a cynical woman who at one point told Mrs. Key, "I found out if you are honest, you lose."

But defense attorney Allan Sigel stressed to the jury that Ms. King passed the bar examination only three years ago and was simply inexperienced.

She "was really over her head, way over her head" in Smith's case, Sigel said.

He presented his client as an industrious and loyal attorney who stuck by Smith even after it became apparent that he would not be able to pay a large fee, and who is so highly regarded by her Century City law firm that she has been made a partner since her indictment.

Major decisions pressing in on Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has a lot of work to do in the next four weeks if he hopes to clear his desk before his summer vacation.

Reagan has cleared one hurdle — winning House approval of his efforts to reduce budget increases — by dint of his political persuasiveness. He cleared one Tuesday by naming Judge Sandra D. O'Connor of the Arizona Appeals Court to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court,

But pressing in on him are decisions on such diverse topics as the MX missile and a manned bomber, extension of the Voting Rights Act and the Clean Air Act, and a new immigration policy.

In addition, he is anxious for Congress to finish work on his tax-cut proposal before the beginning of August — and he will spend considerable time in the coming weeks lobbying for it. He also faces stiff opposition on his proposal to sell sophisticated radar planes to Saudi Arabia.

'None of the major issues on Reagan's agenda must be decided upon in the next few weeks, but he and his aides have made it clear that they are working toward decisions. Each issue is sticky, and it is possible that the president, in several cases, could make decisions that will anger some longtime supporters.

The MX missile is one. The weapon would be placed in shelters under the Western deserts and would be moved about on an underground railway from time to time to confuse an enemy aiming its own missiles toward the MX. But in Utah and Nevada, both home to longtime Reagan loyalists, there are objections to turning the states into primary targets for a nuclear attack.

Reagan is searching for a replacement for the aging B-52s that make up the nation's fleet of manned bombers. President Carter, early in his administration, decided the B-52s could continue to do the job and turned down a proposal to develop a new plane, the B-1. But Reagan has resurrected the question and is facing a decision on whether the B-1 would be the best choice.

Before the decision reaches Reagan, however, options will be put forward by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who is said still to be weighing possible recommendations.

A presidential decision on the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is unlikely before early autumn. Reagan gave Attorney General William French Smith an Oct. 1 deadline to report on the impact of the act, which expires next year and must be renewed by Congress to remain in effect.

Reagan has said several times that he feels the current law is unfair because it singles out certain areas of the country — mostly Southern states — for enforcement efforts.

Civil rights leaders pressing for the law's renewal have called it the most important piece of civil rights legislation.

Reagan also must make a decision about renewing the Clean Air Act — the major legislation guiding the nation's fight against air pollution. Reagan, who favors a reduction in regulations that can hamper business and industry, has not indicated how he will mesh the need to control pollution with his interest in reducing government regulation.

Decisions on an immigration policy have been delayed in recent weeks. Reagan met with his Cabinet a week ago, set to announce how the administration would deal with the flow of illegal aliens into the country and the millions already here. But several Cabinet members raised questions about specific points, forcing a delay in finishing work until next week at the earliest.

Homesteaders offered free land

ANTLER, N.D. (AP) — Harley "Bud" Kissner believes tiny towns like Antler "wither and die" without schools, and since you can't have schools without children, the 72-year-old bachelor is offering free land to modern-day homesteaders willing to settle here.

"I've had a lot of phone calls," said Kissner. "About 30 or so from Idaho, West Virginia, Minnesota, North Dakota."

Kissner offered to give away four lots of nine acres each near Antler Creek, but now he is being asked to provide more land from his 640-acre spread.

Land in the area, which is near the Canadian border, sells for about $450 to $500 an acre.

The community's 29-student elementary school closed this spring when the enrollment potential for the fall dropped to 23. The following year it would drop to 15, officials said. Students are to be bused to the towns of Sherwood, Mohall and Westhope, each about 20 miles away to the west, south and east.

"These little towns just wither and die" without schools, Kissner said.

He said he is interested in preserving the town of 150 because he has lived there all his life and has enjoyed it.

"I come from a very poor childhood, but my folks took in people and helped them out," Kissner said. "Here's my opportunity to help the community and maybe help the school."

He placed advertisements in three area newspapers that promised free land to people with school-age children willing to remain five years.

Kissner said loss of a rail line and the growth in the size of farms has contributed to the population drop over the years, which led in turn to the school's closing and his decision to help out.

"I suppose we need 20 kids; if we get more, so much the better," Kissner said. "I can't see that we should just sit down and do nothing and let our schools be closed."

He said a young Antler native named Rick Jorgensen is helping him, and Jorgensen has proposed that Kissner provide more land and reduce the number of acres involved in each lot to five.

"I'm still scratching my head on that," Kissner said.

Jorgensen said Kissner isn't just a sentimentalist.

"He is basically determined he will do whatever is necessary to make sure this town will exist after he's gone," Jorgensen said. "I've never run across another guy as generous and civic-minded as he is."

Don Conroy, former school board president, who resigned at the last meeting, said the decision to close the school was largely a matter of economics.

"We're in a relatively good financial position at this point, but there was just no future," he said.

"We could operate another year, but we looked at it over a two-or three-year period, and we felt with the school not now in bad financial shape it was a better point to terminate. Obviously, a lot of people disagreed."

Lack of power turns tourists off

NASSAU, Bahamas (AP) — Businesses have closed, hundreds of tourists have left town and many of those who remained sweltered without air conditioning as sporadic power outages continued in this island nation, officials said.

Emergency generators provided power for the island's hospitals, airport and major hotels Tuesday as Bahamas Electricity Corp. crews were trying to restore full power to New Providence and adjacent Paradise Island.

The government blamed the outages on malfunctioning generators that were poorly maintained during a three-week-long work slowdown by power plant laborers. Bahamas News Bureau spokesman Bill Kalis said outages could continue through the weekend, although utility officials indicated full power might be restored today.

The dispute was settled Saturday, with utility officials agreeing to restructure wage scales, Kalis said.

Maryanne Brown of Huntsville, Texas, said she and her husband were forced to bathe in the ocean because their downtown Nassau hotel couldn't pump water into their rooms.

"In the evening, we went for a swim because there was nothing to bathe in," Mrs. Brown said. "We couldn't flush our toilets, we couldn't wash our hands. We dampened our towels with bottled water to keep cool. I really don't know which is worse, being without water or being without electricity."

Mrs. Brown said they had planned to stay seven days, "but after this experience, I don't know whether we'll ever come back."

Along Bay Street, the main business and tourist artery on New Providence, bankers and other businessmen said the blackouts were costing them huge sums of money.

"We don't want to close, but I really don't know how much longer we will be able to stay open," said Hugh Sands, manager of the Bay Street office of Barclay Bank International.

Firm lacks just two permits for rocket flight

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Officials of a private company that hopes to go into the satellite business for profit say they are just two permits and three engine tests away from launching their first rocket.

Space Services Inc. of Houston still needs the approval of the Federal Aviation Administration and the Federal Communications Commission before it can go ahead with its first suborbital flight, attorney Art Dula said Tuesday.

Dula said the group has all the standard radio transmission permits from the FCC, but still lacks one for the rocket's safety system.

"That lets them destroy it (the rocket) if it goes off course," Dula said. He said he expected to have to "educate" FCC officials about the permit for the system, "just because no one has ever had to ask for one."

But Dula said he expects no problem getting FAA approval. "We may have to get some kind of waiver," he said, because under present law, unmanned rockets are not allowed in controlled air space.

"We will apply to the FAA formally," he said. "We haven't yet because you have to tell them exactly when you're going to launch."

Three engine tests will be conducted beginning July 20, Chafer said. He said there's about a 50-50 chance they will be successful.

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which runs the government's space program, have generally taken a wait-and-see attitude toward the businessmen's plans.

The first flight of the 53-foot rockets will be suborbital and is supposed to end in the Gulf of Mexico. It is chiefly intended to establish the company's credibility, company President David Hannah said.

Space Services announced its intention to make the launching of satellites a private enterprise in June.

At that time, officials estimated that they would evenutally charge about $2 million to put a satellite into a 100-mile-high orbit. Such an orbit appears stationary to observers on the ground.

"We did engine tests back in May and they were more successful than they had any right to be," Chafer said. "We're feeling very positive about it."

Space Services leased a new launch site on Matagorda Island in June after some landowners of a Matagorda Peninsula location filed suit, fearing they would be liable for any damage the rocket caused. The suit has been settled out of court, Dula said.

"We determined it was in our best interest to move to the part of the island that was owned by only one person," Dula said.

Pet monkey killed after judge rejects owner's pleas

MARRERRO, La. (AP) — Columbo, the monkey, is no more — despite his owner's pleas that the monkey was provoked when he bit a woman and her young son last week.

John Coleman of Metairie, Columbo's owner for three years, sat quietly Monday as state Judge Wallace I. LeBrun heard nearly three hours of testimony.

At the end, LeBrun lifted a temporary restraining order and veterinarians put the Capuchin monkey to sleep and beheaded him to test for rabies.

Outside the court, a visibly saddened Coleman said if there were any chance to save his pet, he would take it. But there was none.

"I really don't know," he said, his voice breaking, "All I know is my — all I know is my monkey's going to die."

He wept.

At the court hearing, Coleman's lawyer, Joseph Hecker, pleaded with the court to make the restraining order permanent.

"What's the purpose in killing this monkey?" he said. "The killing is not warranted."

Coleman argued that the monkey was not spiteful, although it was hyperactive and often less than friendly. "The monkey has bitten me several times in the past," he conceded.

The 3-year-old Capuchin monkey escaped from a backyard leash and bit a Metairie woman and her son after jumping into their passing car last Wednesday.

Neighbor Debbie Jackson testified that, before the attack, several youths taunted the little ape, racing at it with bicycles and screaming.

After the biting, Columbo climbed into a tree and only descended after a boy coaxed him down with sliced bananas, she said.

Jefferson Parish officials — who conceded that the last case of rabies was reported in their jurisdiction in 1954 — said a special "flourescent antibody test" on Columbo's brain tissue was needed to be sure the 3-year-old monkey didn't have rabies.

The state health department condemned the monkey last Friday, but the execution was stayed over the long Independence Day weekend.

Coleman presented a primate expert, Dr. Robert Wolfe, who said it wasn't necessary to kill Columbo to learn if he was infected.

Dead eagles become part of religious rites

By KEVIN McCULLEN
Associated Press Writer

POCATELLO, Idaho (AP) — Every living eagle is precious in the view of federal game protectors, but the birds' legacy of graceful flight does not end at death.

Game wardens from around the country gather the remains of bald and golden eagles that have been shot, electrocuted on power lines or died of natural causes and ship them in dry ice to a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service depot here, where they are distributed to American Indian tribes.

Federal law makes it illegal to possess eagles or their carcasses, but an exemption is provided for Indians who want the talons, feathers and other parts for religious purposes.

"If we did not make the feathers available to Indians, they'd find a way to get them, either legally or illegally. This certainly is the best and most appropriate use of them," said Martin Phillips, who is in charge of the game service's law enforcement in Utah, Colorado and part of Wyoming.

Phillips said the program has grown in popularity and demand since its inception in the early 1970s.

Jerry Bean, who manages the depot, said that "right now, we have many applications and no supply. It's the way things happen. Getting eagles is not like buying a package of nuts and bolts at the hardware store. We're never sure when we're going to get more birds."

Jim Kniffen of the depot said he received about 280 requests in 1977. Last year, he shipped 804 birds — most of them golden eagles — and so far this year has had 650 orders.

Nation's cold spot beginning to bake

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, Minn. (AP) — Air conditioners and bathing suits have been pressed into battle against an unexpected heatwave in this tiny town, where bitter cold temperatures have established a nationwide reputation and a cold spot in America's heart.

"But when it gets into the 90s, why quibble about a few degrees one way or the other?" quipped resident Ray Gorder, who said he has "hardly left home these days." He has air conditioning.

The resort town's 6,439 people are "used to cold up here, but heat like this is unusual," Dave Anderson said of his neighbors. "A lot of people are in the bars or someplace else in front of an air conditioner."

Gen Fischer said some don't like it too cold. Rainy Lake, just a few miles north of town, gets mixed reviews. "It's like ice," she said after momentarily sampling the lake. "Your leg aches from the cold." She estimated the water temperature at 50 degrees.

However, Harvey Fischer, 45, a lifelong resident, sought refuge at Rainy Lake beach, and said, "Monday's stifling heat was a new experience for me."

Meteorologist Tom Fairhurst of the National Weather Service office in International Falls said winds of 15 to 20 mph Tuesday mixed with colder air above to prevent the city from experiencing the second straight day of record heat. Afternoon temperatures bounced back and forth between 92 and 93, he said. "Today should be cooler," Fairhurst said, with highs only in the upper 80s.

Schwab, 26, said he and his wife, Ordell, and their baby Nicholas live in a mobile home where the heat is hard to tolerate.

"We take a lot of cold showers," he said. "And we visit a lot of friends who live in regular homes where it's not as hot."

Dale Branch of the National Weather Service in Minneapolis said International Falls is frequently the nation's coldest spot during the winter.

Two factors contribute to the town's cold weather, he said. First, the city is located directly in the path of Arctic air that sweeps down from the Yukon across the Canadian prairies to northern Minnesota. Second, the town has a deep, long-lasting snow cover.

"When they get snow on the ground, it stays there all winter," Branch said. The snow holds the cold and reflects the sunlight away, he said.

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

After last season at Texas A&M, being optimistic about this season is just short of a miracle. With a dismal pre-conference record, half his Aggie football team accused of drug abuse and an attitude problem that would be more suited for muggers than football players, Wilson struggled through one of the most trying season in his football coaching career.

Wilson, in the Tall City Wednesday as featured speaker at the Midland A&M's 'Coach's Night' at Green Tree Country Club, says he is feeling like a new man — ready to lead his Aggie team into the 1981 football campaign full of confidence.

Wilson believes for a football team to win its needs confidence, depth, talent and a favorable schedule. And Wilson feels that A&M has all four of these qualities this year.

One of the reasons for Wilson's renewed optimistism is the "attitude and leadership on the team that is so much better than last fall. We have much more experience this year with people like quarterback Gary Kubiak and linebacker Mike Little. They will give our team a lot of leadership."

Wilson is particulary high on Kubiak. With the loss of David Beal and Mike Mosley, Wilson felt that quarterback might be a trouble spot. But, after spring drills, Wilson says, "Quarterback will be a strong point. Kubiak had an exceptional spring training. What we need now is to develop some depth."

WILSON ADDED, "I don't think we have any glaring weaknesses. We have seven offensive starters returning and eight defensive starters back. We are a veteran team but still a young team. We don't have too many seniors but we have 31 juniors and 29 sophomores on the club." Wilson continued, "I'm not saying we'll win the SWC crown, but what I am saying is we'll have a very competitive and more experienced football team. Last year we had 44 of our 60 players at the freshman and sophomore levels."

Wilson added, "Our kicking game was a problem area last year. I think we have improved it during spring drills. I really feel good about the overall look of the club."

THE FORMER Texas Tech football star feels that the schedule will be in the Aggies' favor this year. In the two and a half years since Wilson has taken over for Emory Bellard in 1978, Texas A&M has faced a rugged slate year after year. In two full seasons, Wilson has compiled a 10-12 record.

This year, Wilson will have a better pre-season schedule. The Aggies will be playing the University of California, Boston College and Louisiana Tech in their first three games of the will and it should definitely help the Aggies. Wilson noted, "It's better than last season when we faced Penn State and Georgia in pre-conference games."

Wilson feels that the early games will help his young team build their confidence as they prepare for the rugged wars in the SWC. Wilson said, "Our Southwest Conference schedule is more favorable this season too. We play Texas, Houston, SMU and Arkansas at our place. That will be a big advantage for us. Last year we had to face those teams on the road."

Wilson added, "The SWC is a tough conference. Texas and Houston are talented. Baylor and Arkansas are excellent clubs and the problems at SMU won't keep them from putting a fine team on the field"

THERE HAS been some grumbling from alumni and other groups about the Aggies' poor performance over the last couple of years — they want to win. Wilson says, "They're ready to win, as are all Aggies across

Grebey meets with owners

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — It figured to be another long day for Ray Grebey, chief labor negotiator for major league baseball's club owners.

Grebey was due back on the witness stand in a National Labor Relations Board hearing on an unfair labor practice charge. Then, he was to meet in late afternoon, and probably into the night, with the 26 club owners who had gathered for a briefing on the negotiations, or lack of them, and the four days of hearings.

The NLRB, acting in behalf of the striking Major League Players Association, is seeking to force the clubs to open their financial records for examination by the union because of repeated statements by various baseball officials concerned about the sport's economics. Chief administrative law judge Melvin Welles is hearing the case.

Grebey spent the entire day testifying Wednesday, denying the accuracy or saying he was unable to recall a number of articles in which he was quoted about the failing financial conditions of some teams.

THE CROSS-examination by players association attorney George Cohen traced Grebey's early days as director of the Player Relations Committee, bargaining arm of the owners. Cohen asked about discussions Grebey had with various club officials as part of the negotiator's orientation and introduction to his job and subsequent interviews printed in a number of newspapers.

Each time, Grebey said he either could not recall or vouch for the accuracy of quotes attributed to him in newspapers such as the Boston Herald American, Los Angeles Times and Chicago Sun Times.

Grebey did say he had discussed baseball's escalating salary scales with a majority of the clubs after he was hired and said the conversations had "reflected resentment and concern."

He said many of his discussions centered on "keeping player salaries from escalating the way they had."

When attorney Cohen asked why, Grebey said, "That seems obvious. To control costs."

THE PLAYERS association has argued that management's proposal which would supply a major league player as compensation for a ranking free agent signing with another team is an attack on the bargaining power and mobility of the players. The issue is the only one in the strike, which is four weeks old today.

Grebey testified that when he moved from the General Electric Company to his baseball job, "I was hired as the chief negotiator. Finances were not a concern to me."

Earlier, under direct examination by management attorney Louis Hoynes, Grebey tried to dismiss quotes attributed to other baseball officials by testifying: "I am the spokesman for the Player Relations Committee, Inc. There are no other spokesmen."

He added that when he first met with club officials after taking his job, "No industry or club financial problems were brought to my attention."

In negotiations with the union, Grebey said management had never claimed any "inability or incapacity to pay," for any settlement reached in collective bargaining.

THAT STATEMENT in bargaining usually releases management from any obligation to open its books, but the players claim that because of the statements from other management sources predicting doom for the industry, refusal to produce those records constitutes an unfair labor practice of failure to bargain in good faith.

Grebey, who spent four hours and 45 minutes on the witness stand Wednesday, said the hearing was taking time from negotiations. He said of the last bargaining session Saturday, at which the players rejected a modified free-agent compensation proposal: "We asked them to stay and negotiate. But they would not. They have an offer which would affect no more than 12 players and we've said we're negotiable on that. We would have preferred to postpone this (NLRB) hearing to spend this time at the bargaining table, but the union refused."

Kris Monaghan wins Broadmoor

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — University of New Mexico student Kris Monaghan won the 39th annual Broadmoor Invitational Golf Tournament in extra holes after sinking a 27-foot putt, defeating Patti Rizzo of Miami Beach, Fla., 1-up on the 37th hole Wednesday.

Dodgers down Midland, 6-1

SAN ANTONIO—San Antonio's Dodgers bounced back from three straight defeats to cool off the Midland Cubs, 6-1, here Wednesday night behind the seven-hit pitching of Rusty McDonald and Orel Herschiser.

Gregg Brock's three-run homer in the sixth, his 16th of the season and sixth in the last 12 games, paced the Dodgers' attack. Brock had four rbi. Shortstop Ross Jones also hit a home run in the seventh, the blow that finally chased Midland starter Craig Lefferts.

However, the Cubs can do no worse than a split and can win the Texas League series by taking tonight's final game. That's a lot better than they did the last time they were here when then Dodgers swept five straight.

The loss did cost Midland first place in the West division race as Amarillo moved percentage points ahead.

McDonald, who pitched six-hit ball in going the first seven innings, gave up a run in the first when he walked David Pagel and Javier Fierro and Mel Hall followed with a single. But that was it.

Brock knocked in a run with a single in the second and then hit a three-run homer in the sixth to give the Dodgers a 4-1 lead. Mark Bradley, who had walked, and Leo Hernandez, who had beaten out a bunt, were on base when Brock connected.

Randy Clark, 5-7, will go for the Cubs, seeking an elusive sixth win that has escaped him his last three starts. Rich Rodas will go for the Dodgers.

Midland returns home Saturday to launch a 10-game series against Jackson and Arkansas as the Texas League East invades Cubs Stadium.

By MELVIN DURSLAG
Hearst Feature Service

When the World Hockey Association went to that great face-off in the sky a while back, expiring after seven inglorious years, it brought to an end the expansion adventure's last decade of major professional sports in North America.

Earlier, the American Basketball Association had entered into rest, preceded by the World Football League, which had the distinction of dying twice. Resurrected by new leaders after a catastrophic first season, it did a gainer again.

Now it is asked in the new decade whether those tempted to dip a toe into sports promotion have learned religion from their brothers perishing in the snows of expansion, or whether they, too, will try to slay the dragon.

Latest to give it thought is a group that would bill itself as the United States Football League, which, beginning in 1982 if financing becomes available, would play in 12 cities, most of them overlapping the NFL.

WHAT THE new league wouldn't do is play the same time of year. Its plan would be to operate a football season between March and August, competing with the NFL for talent, but actually bucking for the consumer dollar baseball, basketball and hockey.

Underwriters of the proposed league are looking for investors with a lot of money to lose for at least three years, but heartened by the relatively small amount required in the context of what buying into the NFL will cost by 1982.

By that time, expansion territories alone are expected to run $35 million, meaning God knows the value of established franchises.,

Whether the United States football League ever will become airborne is hard to guess, but many operators in pro sports today admit darkly that we haven't seen the last of expansion leagues -- that at least two compelling reasons can be advanced or their surfacing in the near future.

FIRST is the bait of television, regular and cable, which, in the dog fight for sports programming today, is promising figures more attendant to oil.

Sparky suddenly realizes he's a baseball fan, too

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — For a decade, Sparky Anderson has watched the game he loves as a manager. With major league players on strike, he says he's seeing the game from a different point of view.

"I never realized until the strike that I was a baseball fan," said Anderson, manager of the Detroit Tigers. "When I leave the park in Detroit, I'll always turn on a baseball game and listen to it during the 40-minute drive home.

"Up there, we can get the (Cincinnati) Reds, the (Chicago) White Sox, Cleveland, St. Louis and Toronto. Somebody's always on the West Coast."

Without a major league baseball game to attend because of the players' strike over free agent compensation, the former Cincinnati Reds manager said he's learning the game's importance to other baseball fans.

"Now I see where the fan really plans his day around the game," Anderson said. "To me, it kind of takes him through the week, takes him through his summer.

"HECK, MY father sits out on his porch every night and listens to the (Los Angeles) Dodgers or the (San Diego) Padres, partly to get our (the Tigers') score. He always listens. And what about the people in convalescent homes?

"When you're in your own little world and traveling, you don't think about the other people. There are so many people being touched by this, people who are out of work."

Drillers rally to win; Jackson blanks Caps

By Associated Press

The Tulsa Drillers exploded for eight runs in the third inning, but had to withstand a strong rally in the ninth inning Wednesday night to take an 11-10 Texas League baseball victory over the Arkansas Travelers.

In other Texas League action, Jackson shut out Shreveport, 4-0, Amarillo beat El Paso, 9-2, and San Antonio whipped Midland, 6-1.

Dave Kable's ninth homer of the year helped give Arkansas a 2-0 lead in the first inning, but Tulsa sent 13 men to the plate as they scored eight runs in the third inning.

The Drillers held an 11-7 lead in the ninth before Arkansas scored three runs to narrow the score to 11-10 with one out and and the tying run at third base. Fred Tisdale then struck out and Tom Nieto flied out to end the game.

Marvell Wynne had a home run as the Jackson Mets shut out the Shreveport Captains, 4-0.

In addition to Wynne's homer, Jackson got help from Bill Haslerig, who had a single, double and triple to drive in two runs.

The winning pitcher was Mike Lowry, 6-5. Alan Folkes, 9-4, was the loser.

Catcher Ron Tingley had five hits in five trips to the plate as the Amarillo Gold Sox beat the El Paso Diablos, 9-2.

Sugar Ray still Robinson to some

AN AP Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

A couple of years ago, a boxing writer wrote that Sugar Ray Leonard "should give the name back."

He was making a point that there was only one Sugar Ray — Robinson, the former welterweight and five-time middleweight champion whose illustrious career ran from the 1940s into the 1960s.

To many boxing fans, Leonard has earned the right to "Sugar Ray," but to a lot of people he is a celebrity they can't put a name to ... or at least the correct name.

"They still call me 'Mr. Robinson,'" Leonard says. Then he grins and adds: "They say, 'Damn, he looks good.'"

Because of television, Sugar Ray Leonard is much better known to the general public than Robinson was, but he seems to be so well known that his celebrity not only swallows up his oppoments, but overshadows his own considerable boxing ability.

Of course, Trainer isn't knocking the fact Leonard's renown transcends the ring. "If I had my choice, this is the way I like to have it," says the man who has helped Leonard parlay his showmanship, media hype and ability into about $23 million from boxing and substantial earnings and a solid base for the future outside the ring.

When you're not watching Sugar Ray and his small, spitting-image son flash their footwork, hand speed and winning smiles on a televised soft-drink commercial, you can see and hear Ray Charles Leonard as a boxing commentator on CBS and Home Box Office. And he has shown that he can handle the job well enough that he should be able to continue after he quits boxing.

LEONARD SOON will be handling sports on a newscast at the CBS affiliate in Washington and also will be working on shows such as "PM Magazine."

He is also prmoting a boxing line carrying his name for Franklin Sporting Goods, pushes a shoe, does other advertisments and has his money tied up in the kind of investments a man with money should be connected with.

Leonard is financially well-fixed, and he doesn't need boxing. He will get another $8 million when he fights Thomas Hearns Sept. 16 for the universal welterweight championship, but money is not the reason behind the fight, according to Trainer.

"If he were just into it to make a dollar, he'd be out of it," says the attorney.

There seems to be little doubt what the motivating factor is for Leonard, who was reluctant to turn pro after becoming an Olympic hero in 1976, who hinted strongly he might quit after losing to Roberto Duran.

Leonard has decided that he doesn't want to give the name back. He has decided that he wants to be remembered as a great fighter.

There is no question that Leonard believes he has what it takes to be a great one — a belief fire-hardened in his losing and winning fights with Duran and his victory over clever Wilfred Benitez.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

Several years back, tarpon anglers called Port Aransas, Texas, "The Tarpon Capitol of the World". That's not true any longer. The reason this Texas port city has seen a major decline in the silver king is unknown, but the tarpon fishing is just not what it once was. And that's a shame. It's not to say you can venture off to Port Aransas and not catch a tarpon, several large tarpon are taken each season, but not in the quanities as years gone by.

Even though we like to promote Texas outdoors more than anywhere, we've found out where the finest tarpon, plus snook fishing is in the world Costa Rica!

Exotic, hypnotic colors. Soft, splashing sounds. The eerie sound of the howler monkey. Tickling, aromatic scents. Let the subtle mystery of raw jungle beauty envelope you, the sweet scent of the rain forest fill your soul. Delicate orchids, palm trees swaying heavy with coconuts, wary jaguars and exquisite birds searching for food at the water's edge, will unfold before you. A soft breeze, brilliant sun and vibrant moon — and rains that recal Noah and his animals, two by two.

THE SPLASH of the tarpon as they enter the freshwater network of rivers, lagoons and waterways. Hook a silver tarpoon, and when he jumps it is Fourth of July, New Year's Eve and the Mardi Gras all wrapped up into a high-voltage package destined to electrify your senses. It is you and the silver king.

It is that precise moment, the moment for which all anglers patiently wait and seek. He leaps again and again, showering the area with a thousand drops of water, landing hard and tough on the water's surface. Jumps that seem to be sky high. And you're using tackle that some anglers use for their fresh water bass fishing trips in Texas.

Your guide manuevers the boat so that you'll have the advantage — but it is really you and the fish. It could be a short fight, 20 to 30 minutes, or a long epic. One to one. No other thought breaks this relationship.

Buiness problems seem insignificant. The constant state of a pressure-cooker lifestyle is completely erased from your mind. After all, there are more important things — at least at the moment you are battling that trophy tarpon. If all goes well, if you applied the right amount of tension on the line — not to much, if you lower the rod tip on all the tarpon's jumps, if the knots are tied right, the fish will be brought to the boat. He is too a valuable a natural resource to kill, so you instruct the guide to carefully remove the hooks, and capture this moment on film and release him. You feel double pround now. You have conquered one of the best.

THE GUIDE may take you to one of the hidden rivers for a chance at snook. Accurate casting is needed here. The darter plug is well aimed. Splash...hungry jaws. A speedy run. A gill-trashing leep. Watch out for that stump! There are some anglers who concentrate on snook all their lives, forsaking the wonderful adventure of other species, and now maybe you know why. It could be a snook in the 10 to 20 pound class. Or it could be one of those biggies up to 30 pounds. Or it could be — what is the world record for snook anyway.

Try another creek, and use very light tackle. This is going to be a low-pressure fishing afternoon for the machaca (a leaping gamester that runs four to eight pounds), the mojarra (which resembles a bluegill but grows much larger), or the guapote (which fights like a largemouth bass). All of this restful fishing, a soothing balm to tarpon fishing. A heron, perched quitely from a log, stares at the water in quest of a small fish. You wounder how the les fortunates are surviving on the cements of Dallas or Houston — just for an instant, mind you.

IT'S ANOTHER day. A rooster from the village awakened you — they seem to crow mch earlier here in Costa Rica than anywhere else. You gather you tackle, and walk 200 yards to the mouth of the river for a before breakfast surf casting session. You wonder what you are going to catch — a new world record snook or tarpon. You see silver flashes in the water, and you know this is the spot. The tarpon are rolling and you catch a glimpse of a good snook as he hustles after something in the breakers. As edge of dawn develops on the horizon, you may have had several hookups and possibly beached a tarpon. Bonus fishing before the day has started.

That's Costa Rica fishing. In the next Fin and Feather, we'll go into Costa Rica, the camp and what more to expect.

All England denies McEnroe membership

LONDON (AP) — Wimbledon champion John McEnroe will not be invited to become a member of the All-England Lawn Tennis Club because his on-court behavior "brought the game into disrepute," the Wimbledon Championship Committee announced today.

The honor is traditionally accorded to all Wimbledon champions, but the All-England Club decided Wednesday night to deny membership to McEnroe following a series of outbursts from the 22-year-old American during this year's tournament which finished Saturday.

The New Yorker further outraged the Wimbledon establishment by failing to attend ther champions" ball held at London's Savoy Hotel after McEnroe's four-set final victory over defending champion Bjorn Borg.

The committee statement said, "In the past it has normally been the custom to elect the winners of the singles championships as honorary members of the All-England Club for their services to the game of lawn tennis.

This year, however, the committee has decided not to elect Mr. John McEnroe a member at the present time in view of his behavior on court in certain matches which, in their opinion brought the game into disrepute."

The statement was issued by the club chairman, Air Chief Marshal Sir Brian Burnett.

The fiery American was fined $1,500 after calling an official "an incompetent fool" in his first round match against fellow American Tom Gullikson.

He was fined another $750 for accusing a turbaned linesman of racial bias in a doubles match between McEnroe and his partner Peter Fleming and the Indian brothers Vijay and Anand Amritraj.

A recommendation that a further penalty of $2,500 be levied by the Men's Professional Council accompanied the second fine and McEnroe was again in trouble during his semifinal match with Australian Rod Frawley.

McEnroe was penalized a point and given a public warning for his conduct after he complained to the umpire on 13 different occasions.

Texas."

As for the pressure of winning, Wilson says he puts more pressure on himself. He knows its time to win. And, he says, "If we don't do well this year I will be very disappointed. And I know the consequences if we don't."

Earlier this year, the NCAA announced it had some questions about the Aggies' program. But. Wilson feels that it is nothing to worry about. He noted, "It was just an inquiry — not an investigation. And we haven't heard any more about it so I don't think it will have any effect on our program."

In the recruiting wars, Wilson thinks the Aggies fared well, thank you. He added, "We had two great recruiting years in a row. This year, we recruited most of the players we wanted even though it probably wasn't as good as our first two. With a lot of returning starters we won't have to count on freshmen stepping in and starting."

Wilson was pleased to get the names of Ray Childress of Richardson, Gary Porter of Humboldt and Marvin Webster of Navasota to sign with the Aggies. Wilson called them "Difinite blue-chippers who will help us down the road."

On this date in baseball in 1969:

After retiring the first 25 Chicago Cubs' batters he faced, New York Mets ace Tom Seaver saw his dreams of a perfect game ended as Jimmy Qualls lined a ninth-inning single to left field. Seaver wound up with a one-hitter as the Mets topped the Cubs 4-0 before a crowd of 59,083 at Shea Stadium.

On this date in 1968:

The National League scored a 1-0 victory over the American League in the All-Star Game at the Houston Astrodome. Willie Mays scored the game's only run when his San Francisco teammate, Willie McCovey, grounded into a double-play in the first inning.

The winning National League team collected only five hits, while the Americans had just three. It was the first 1-0 game in All-Star history, as the two pitching staffs combined for 20 strikeouts.

On this date in 1946:

Ted Williams collected four hits, including homers off Kirby Higbe and blooper ball specialist Rip Sewell, in the American League's 12-0 All-Star Game rout of the National League at Boston's Fenway Park.

Other AL heroes were Charlie Keller, Vern Stephens and Joe Gordon, who had two RBI apiece. Bob Feller pitched two-hit ball over three innings to pick up the victory, while Detroit ace Hal Newhouser struck out four batters in three innings.

They were sent to the Minor leagues and are glad of it

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

It isn't often that someone is sent to the minor leagues and is glad about it.

But that's been the situation recently for several baseball announcers employed by major league teams. In the past few weeks, while major league players have been on strike, the broadcasters have journeyed to places like Columbus, Ohio, Richmond, Va., Indianapolis, Ind., and Pawtucket, R.I., to do what they do best: annnounce baseball games.

"People miss the majors but baseball fans like to watch and listen to baseball games," said Ernie Johnson, who has been working International League games involving the Richmond Braves. Johnson, a former major league pitcher, is the director of broadcasting for the Atlanta Braves. "We've gotten quite a bit of mail from all over thanking us for telecasting the Braves' games."

While the parent Braves are on strike, the Triple A Braves are being seen on WTBS, which originates in Atlanta but, through cable systems, can be seen throughout the United States. Johnson believes viewers are getting used to watching the minor league version of the national pastime.

"We don't have to go with continuous reminders any more that they are watching the International League," he said. "We try to be informative about the minor league teams in the Braves organization anyway and, even though the fans aren't as familiar with the Richmond team, they have seen some of the players there.

"THIS IS the first time I've done the minor leagues during the regular season. I have to talk more to coaches and the writers who follow the Braves or the team they're playing, to get background.

"During the strike, anything we can tell them about the league is important. A lot of people are looking for baseball. It's live in a season of reruns."

Bob Murphy, who hadn't broadcast a minor league game since 1953, has felt comfortable behind the mike at Tidewater, where the New York Mets' International League affiliate is located.

"You have to do your homework, get to the park early and talk to people to have yourself covered," said Murphy. "Out of 22 players on the Tides' roster, I'd had contact with seven or eight in spring training. So it's not like I'm in a land of total strangers.

"I don't feel like I'm out in the boonies somewhere. The Mets built the Tides' park in Norfolk and it has the same dimensions as Shea Stadium. The big difference has been that the teams have their own local radio broadcast crews, which take up the only two booths. So they set up a table outside in the crowd for us. And they rigged a plastic covering over our heads in case of rain."

THE TIDES' contests have been carried by just less than half of the stations on the Mets' radio network. And the ratings, Murphy said, "were amazing. I was told that management was shocked and that one game drew a higher rating than some Mets games."

The other New York team, the Yankees, has sent its announcers to cover the Columbus Clippers, also of the International League.

"It was a joint decision by Adler Communications, WABC, our flagship station, and the team," said broadcaster Frank Messer. "I am told the response in New York has been very good and, from personal contact with fans, they love it."

It's been 18 years since Messer did play-by-play of minor league ball. He worked in Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse, N.Y.; Miami and Jacksonville, Fla.; Havana, Cuba, and Little Rock, Ark.

"I've found that for some reason the games seem to move a lot quicker in Triple A," he said. "There's less fill time.

"And I've seen a lot of people who remembered me from those days in the minors. It's been an experience.

"During the first weekend we did the Clippers, we found that quite often we had to remind listeners of what they were tuned to. As the games have gone along, it hasn't been necessary."

MARTY BRENNAMAN, the voice of the Cincinnati Reds, has done games of the Indianapolis Indians of the American Association during the strike. The Indians are the Reds' top farm club.

"It hasn't been that many years since I did minor league ball," said Brennaman, who worked at Tidewater in 1973. "I knew what to expect. And I knew we'd get the cooperation of club officials and that there would be no problems with the availability of information.

"From our standpoint, there isn't a great necessity for background. Most of the players were in spring camp in Tampa and we broadcast all of our exhibition games. So the fans should be familiar with them."

Other teams whose announcers have been broadcasting minor league action during the strike include the Baltimore Orioles, Seattle Mariners, St. Louis Cardinals, Chicago Cubs, Cleveland Indians and Oakland A's.

Fans respond to radio tilts

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

It isn't real ... but it sure is popular.

In lieu of actual major league games during the baseball players' strike, Cincinnati fans have been getting radio broadcasts of mythical matchups between some of the greatest teams in history. And they're listening — lots of them.

"We've had an outstanding response," said Marty Brennaman, play-by-play announcer for the Reds. "For one of the games, we were second in the ratings for our time period.

"The reaction to doing minor league games has been good but it was much greater for the mythical games."

Brennaman and company have taken the fictional contests seriously, building a three-hour radio show out of the accounts of games between world champions such as the 1940 Reds and 1972 Oakland A's, and the 1976 Reds and 1927 New York Yankees.

"We do it all in the radio studio with sound effects, all of which were actually recorded at games," adds Brennaman, who teams with Joe Nuxhall as the Reds' radio announcers. "We have a play-by-play sheet in front of us but we have the option of creativity on the plays.

"If a guy flies out to center field, we can make it more dramatic by describing a fantastic catch. Or we can make plays at the bases very close.

"At first I was apprehensive but it's turned out to be more fun. I think I've enjoyed it more than doing the minor league games. It's different."

The games are played using APBA Baseball, one of many popular board games on the market. A series of five games is played, with the best game of the five then broadcast.

"In the first game we did, the 1972 A's beat the 1940 Reds 4-3 on Joe Rudi's single in the eighth inning," noted Brennaman. "The other game, the '76 Reds against the '27 Yankees, was a 7-6 win for the Reds in 10 innings. Johnny Bench hit a two-out homer in the ninth to tie it up."

Prior to the Reds-A's broadcast, Brennaman and Nuxhall conducted a pre-game show, interviewing Sparky Anderson, who managed the Reds to world championships in 1975 and '76. Nuxhall spoke with Waite Hoyt, who pitched for the 1927 Yankees and also served for many years as the play-by-play voice of the Reds.

"I wish there was no strike," concluded Brennaman, "but I think we've found an entertaining way to bring baseball to the fans. We'll keep trying to do that."

Elcor takes two wins

Scott Carroll and Chris Barker teamed up to three-hit Adobe in the 10-3 first game win as Alan Koonce tripled and Ricky Wright doubled for the winners.

Koonce then pitched a one hit shutout, fanning 12, in the 10-0 win, shortened to six innings by the 10-run rule.

Senior league action concludes next week with both teams finishing the season in Odessa. Elcor will play games Tuesday and Friday and Adobe Monday and Thursday.

Foss made Oakland promise

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A one-time commissioner of the American Football League and the former president of the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum have testified that the now-defunct AFL promised that the Raiders would remain in Oakland as long as the city supported them.

The testimony came Wednesday in U.S. District Court at the antitrust trial in which the Raiders and the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission are suing the National Football League over the league's refusal to allow the Raiders to move to Los Angeles.

Lawyers defending the NFL in the suit began presenting what they are calling "the Oakland story" by calling Robert T. Nahas, former president of the Oakland sports complex, and Joe Foss, former AFL commissioner.

Nahas testified that the $26.5 million stadium in Oakland would not have been built without the Raiders, and recalled that Foss visited Oakland repeatedly in the early 1960s urging local officials to build a stadium to house the team.

"His message was always the same, 'If you people support this club, if you will build a stadium, you will have a football team forever.'" Nahas testified.

Nahas, a land developer and director of Wells Fargo bank, testified that officials, the city and county and the Oakland Tribune newspaper became strong supporters of the Raiders.

For the first two years, the Raiders played across the bay in San Francisco.

Kickoff slated for 1982 season turns of $15 million per year per club.

The present sum is $5.8 million.

Then the prospect of pay-television can't help but excite investors who would roll the dice in a new football proposition.

The second factor which must be reckoned with in sports expansion is the combination of affluence and vanity. Millionaires abound in such outrageous quantity today that many dwell in obscurity.

What better way to rise from the ranks of the garden variety rich than to invest in a sports franchise?

But if expansion leagues feed the egoes of their sponsors, who also are gambling for riches, they aren't necessarily a benefaction to the consumer.

"When Macy's fights Gimbels," Ralph Wilson, owner of Buffalo, once explained, "the consumer usually benefits. But competition works in reverse in sports, meaning that when an NFL fights a WFL, or an NBA an ABA, the consumer is hurt. Player salaries escalate, and the cost is passed on to the public in the form of higher ticket prices."

WILSON ADMITS readily, however, that much of the money squandered in the last football war was the fault of NFL owners.

"We worried too much that the WFL would steal our players," he says, "and we panicked attempting to keep them. We paid the price for losing our courage, because the WFL went broke, anyway."

En route, though, it cost the NFL at least $50 million.

"If the WFL drove up the price of tickets," Wilson was asked, "why, amid no competition, have NFL seats continued to rise?"

"Because once the salary scale changed," he answered, "there was no turning back. And there's no turning back today."

Still, few are wiping moisture from their eyes for NFL clubs, whose profits never have been higher and whose prospects never have been brighter.

They are so bright, in fact, that competition for this monopoly is inevitable during the next few years, even if the proposed U.S. Football League fails to get off the ground.

Palimony plantiff wins legal point from judge

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Billie Jean King's one-time lesbian lover has won a legal point with a judge's ruling that she has sufficient grounds to sue the tennis star for lifetime support.

However, King and her husband Larry won the right to begin another lawsuit in an effort to evict Marilyn Barnett from a beach house they own.

Superior Court Judge Leon Savitch said Wednesday the "palimony" suit filed by Barnett, a former hairdresser, is legally entwined with the landmark case of Marvin vs. Marvin.

"The Marvin decision turns on contract law, and not consideration of the sexes of the partners," Savitch said.

Mason reimbursed twice

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The prosecution unveiled evidence Wednesday showing Tony Mason was reimbursed twice for an air flight, the only one in which he contested claims of a false trip.

Mason, the former University of Arizona football coach, spent most of his second day of cross examination looking at credit card receipts, bills and vouchers among some 75 new exhibits. He is accused of 15 felony counts of fraud, theft and conspiracy.

90-1 shot wins Sweetheart

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Willow Bust, the 90-1 shot, captured the Meadowlands $700,000 Sweetheart Pace Wednesday, setting the highest win payoff in the track's history and becoming the richest 2-year-old filly ever in harness racing.

Willow Bust, driven by Herve Filion, was declared the winner after track stewards sustained objections of interference against the first place horse, Sevilla Lobell, the favorite.

Opening lead: Three of ♡.

Here's a quick test of your analytical ability. Assume that you are declarer at three no trump after a heart lead. Would you rather play or defend?

There is little remarkable about the auction. North's raise was, perhaps, a trifle aggressive, but he did possess two top honors in his partner's suit.

Because of the fact that East does not have an entry, it seems that three no trump should make. Declarer has only four fast tricks, so he must go after clubs. Assume that West wins the first club (if he holds up, the contract cannot be defeated) and continues with a heart. Dummy wins, the remaining club honor is cashed and declarer leads a diamond. Now he cannot be stopped from scoring two spade tricks, three hearts, a diamond and four clubs for an overtrick.

But if you elected to declare, you are in for a shock. The contract can and should be defeated. Indeed, when this hand was played in a rubber bridge game in Paris some years ago, the late French internationalist, Georges Theron, found the winning defense at the table. At trick two he won the ace of clubs and shot back the queen of hearts!

This brilliant defensive play forced declarer to concede. He had been presented with an extra trick in the heart suit, but now there was no way to run his clubs. Declarer's last entry had been knocked out while the blocking club honor was still in dummy, and West held the ace of diamonds over declarer's king.

Note that the play to the first three tricks must go exactly as detailed above if the contract is to be defeated. If there is any variation to the defense, declarer will be able to get rid of that blocking club honor in dummy while he still has a heart entry to his hand, and the no trump game will sail home.

HOUSTON (AP) — The second known attempt to implant an embryo fertilized in a test tube into the a woman's womb has been made by doctors at the University of Texas Medical School.

Drs. Martin Quigley and Berel Held confirmed Wednesday their team has attempted the controversial procedure in a group of 10 women, but said no further details would be disclosed until at least one was three months pregnant.

The chances of a woman becoming pregnant by in vitro fertilization and embryo transfer are about 5 percent, according to data from doctors in England and Austrailia, they said.

So far, only nine children have been born as a result of the laboratory fertilization and embryo transfer, but reproduction scientists hve prediced that number will rise steadily as technical problems are resolved.

"I am excited about this process. We are actually beginning the clinic work and expect within five years for the average success rate ... to approach that of normal pregnancies," Quigley said.

The 10 couples accepted to the experimental program all are married, about 30 years old and live within a 350-mile radius of Houston, Quigley said. The women have blocked or no Fallopian tubes and no viable means of correcting the problem, he said.

Doctors at the Eastern Virginia Medical School and Norfolk General Hospital were the first to attempt the procedure in the United States.

Since the world's first test-tube baby was born July 25, 1978, in Oldham, England, much of the in vitro fertilization experiments have been done in Austrailia, Quigley said.

In the procedure, an egg is removed from the woman's ovary, placed in a laboratory dish, fertilized with the husband's sperm and then reimplanted.

"We're not creating or developing babies in the laboratory to hand to their parents nine months later," Quigley said. "We are replacing a woman's Fallopian tubes with a technique and laboratey procedure and giving otherwise infertile women a chance for normal pregnancies."

He estiamted that from 500,000 to 1 million women are not able to become pregnant naturally.

THANKS TO ELK PRESTIQUE® SHINGLES, RE-ROOFING DOESN'T HAVE TO BE A

RIPOFF

Until recently, if you had an old wood shingle roof and you wanted to change, you literally had to "rip-off" the wood shingles first. If you didn't, you'd wind up with a lumpy, bumpy roof that wasn't very attractive.

Now there's Elk Prestique laminated fiberglass shingles. Because Prestique has a thicker dimension than ordinary shingles, and a random overlay pattern like wood shingles, you can have it installed right on top of your old wood shingles and save the expense of the "rip-off".

And, in case you thought you still had to replace wood with wood, you should know that a recent state law changed all that. Now you don't have to replace one fire hazard with another fire hazard!

With Elk Prestique, you can replace wood with the look of wood, and get a Class "A" rating for fire resistance from the U.L., too. Elk Prestique also has the only 30 year limited warranty in the industry, and that says a lot about how we make them!

Supernatural powers manifested through spells and charms, generously spiced with an attraction that grows into love, form the nucleus of John Van Druten's "Bell, Book and Candle" which will play through Aug. 2 at the dinner theater, located east of Odessa on Highway 80.

The play, which formed the inspiration for television's "Bewitched," deals humorously with the subject of witchcraft. Those who have not seen the story presented as a play might remember the movie "Bell, Book and Candle," which starred James Stewart and Kim Novak.

The Country Squire's cast includes Russell Johnson, perhaps best known for his portrayal of the Professor in "Gilligan's Island," in the male lead; Alex Bond Winslow, as Gillian Halroyd, the female lead; Carolee Patterson as Aunt Queenie; Stephen Berrier as Gillian's brother, Nicky; and Larry Randolph as the writer, Sidney Redlitch. Randolph is also the play's director.

In addition, the cast includes Gillian's familiar Pyewacket. After all, as all humans know, no self respecting witch would be without a cat.

Although Russell and Ms. Winslow are not Stewart and Ms. Novak, they do an admirable job of portraying their respective roles. This is the first time for either to do the part and neither seems to have yet developed a firm rapport with others onstage. In spite of this, both present a believable character to the audience, most of the time.

Ms. Winslow seems to have a little greater grasp of her character than Russell; however, her belief in herself as Gillian breaks down and, instead of being the role, she's acting the part.

Her background includes leading roles in "The Diary of Adam and Eve," "Saint Joan," "The Thurber Carnival," "Spoon River Anthology" and "A Man For All Seasons." In 1976, she began post-graduate work at the Dallas Theatre Center, where her roles were, among others, Hope Langdon in "Something's Afoot" and Angelique in "The Imaginary Invalid."

Russell has been featured in eight television movies of the week for all three major commercial networks. His 20-plus movie performances include performances in "MacArthur," "Many Rivers to Cross," "A Distant Trumpet" and "Greatest Story Ever Told."

Ms. Patterson is quite good in her portrayal of Gillian's eccentric, even for a witch, aunt. She has not yet internalized some of her Aunt Queenie mannerisms, but that is a matter of practice. As is true of Russell and Ms. Winslow, Ms. Patterson has not played this role before.

Ms. Patterson, who has played Aurelia in "The Madwoman of Chaiott," is a lay reader in the state of Texas for the Episcopal church.

Berrier as Gillian's younger brother is perhaps the most consistently believable character of the four major roles. He is the young, aspiring and willful warlock, determined to have his way at all costs.

A native of Texas, Berrier attended Texas Tech University. He has extensive dinner theater experience throughout the Southwest and has played in "The Mousetrap," "See How They Run," "Play It Again Sam" and "Ten Little Indians."

However, the performances of all of the majors are overshadowed by Larry Randolph's portrayal of the writer, Sidney Redlitch, who thinks he knows all about witchcraft and in fact knows very little.

Randolph, a former drama professor at Purdue University and Texas Tech University, is the only member of the cast who has done the play before. He is absolutely marvelous. His timing is just right and he knows who he is onstage — Sidney the erratic, drinks-a-little-too-much, self-consumed writer. The audience loved him and responded to his part much more than to the others.

And, of course, an audience can make or break a performance, especially a comedy. Friday night's crowd at Country Squire was a quiet one, but each member seemed to enjoy the show.

The special effects, so vital in a play of this type, went according to plan. If there were any miscalculations, the players covered them up effectively.

The stage was appropriately set with furnishings and trappings that seemed just right for an attractive, young witch.

MGM reports increase in its net profits

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Film Co., while suffering losses in its television division, reported a 92 percent increase in its net profits overall for the quarter ending May 31.

Motion picture income more than compensated for the company's losses in the television area. The company, based in Culver City, announced Tuesday a $3.4 million third-quarter profit, which amounts to 10 cents per share on operating revenues of $45.2 million. Last year in the same period, net income was $1.8 million, or five cents per share on revenues of $39.2 million.

For the first nine months of the current fiscal year, MGM reported net income of $12.7 million, up 25 percent from $10.2 million last year.

In the film division, the third-quarter report did not include profits from the box office success, "Clash of the Titans," which was released after the third quarter ended and which officials said had the largest first-week box office gross of any movie in the company history.

Although the television division had an operating loss of $470,000 in the third quarter, compared to income of $2 million during the same period last year, the division's overall income over the nine-month period was up, to $1.7 million in the first nine months of this fiscal year, compared to $1.4 million last year.

Also on Tuesday, MGM said it would form a limited partnership with an unnamed company. MGM would give 50 percent of its equity in each movie, in exchange for about $100 million from the partner for film production costs.

MGM said it would release the names of the members of the new partnership after it wins approval of the plans from the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Cartoon characters at mall

All-time cartoon favorites will spring to life at Midland Park Mall Monday and Tuesday as Huckleberry Hound, Scobby Doo, Yogi Bear and Ranger Smith from Jellystone Park perform at 6, 7 and 8 p.m.

The professional Hanna Barbera group, based in Santa Clara, Calif., is returning to Midland after their appearance last September at Midland Park Mall's grand opening. This time they will perform a full-scale show.

"Yogi's Picnic" tells the story of Ranger Smith's softening heart when he, Yogi, and the other characters get together as friends for one big picnic. The picnic basket disappears and the ranger inadvertenty blames Yogi for its theft.

Governor's staff probed in computer operation

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Prosecutors have been asked to determine whether some aides to Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. broke the law by allgedly trying to sidetrack an investigation into possible misuse of a state-leased computer.

The Fair Political Practices Commission, citing altered and destroyed evidence and a lack of cooperation from Brown's staff, announced Wednesday that it was ending its seven-month investigation into charges that the computer was used to compile and maintain a political mailing list.

The commission didn't charge that the computer was misused. But it asked the district attorneys in Sacramento and Los Angeles to review allegations of criminal misconduct involving a half dozen or more of Brown's close aides

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Officials of Mexico's state oil monopoly today denied that it was reducing its output of crude oil by 700,000 barrels a day.

Julio Rodolfo Moctezuma Cid, director of Petroleos Mexicanos, the state-owned oil company, said at a news conference that Pemex's production would be increased or reduced as market conditions warranted. Asked if that meant Pemex was slowing production now, he answered: "No, no."

Cutbacks in purchases of Mexican crude by France, the United States and other buyers have cut about 410,000 barrels a day from Mexico's exports, which had been near 1.5 million barrels a day.

American oil compaines cited price increases for their reduced purchases, while the French said the crude oil had been consistently below the quality they had been promised.

Pemex cut its prices in June on its second grade oil from $32 to $28, touching off a political furor here. It has been trying to renegotiate contracts at $30 a barrel, but is losing customers, who find themselves in a buyers' market because of a world oil glut.

All nuclear power plant operators have complied with analysis request

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — All of the nuclear power plant operators who were asked by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to analyze their reactor vessels have done so, an NRC official says.

The NRC is worried that some older vessels, which have lost much of their toughness due to years of radiation exposure, may soon reach the point where they could develop serious cracks if the plants were accidentally overcooled and then repressurized.

Karl Kniel of the NRC's safety division in Washington said Wednesday the NRC had received all the reports it had requested in April from operators of pressurized water reactors. The operators also were asked to check the control systems at the plants.

The NRC plans to look at the reports and conduct analyses of its own to determine which plants may need work on their reactor vessels within the next few years.

The reactor vessel are large steel structures surrounding the nuclear fuel that generates heat and eventually produces electricity.

Nuclear engineers have been concerned about so-clled "pressurized thermal shock" for years, but the NRC recently stepped up its research. NRC commissioners were briefed on the problem by their staff June 11.

Thomas Murley, director of the NRC's safety division, said the chance of a major accident occuring within the next year is so small that no immediate corrective action is needed. But work may have to be done on some reactor vessels within a year or so, he added.

Possible solutions include permanently removing some of the nuclear fuel in the reactors to reduce the vessels' exposure to radiation. That procedure also would reduce the electricity the plant could produce, Murley said.

Another solution, Murley said, would be to "anneal" the vessels — heat them to very high temperatures to restore some of the original toughness. That would also be expensive because it would mean closing the plants down for several weeks, he said.

No problems with reactor, AP&L says

RUSSELLVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission has expressed concern about steel fuel containers at Arkansas' nuclear plant near Russellville and other power plants across the nation.

Federal officials are concerned that the steel fuel containers in some older nuclear reactors may be more vulnerable to cracks than anticipated. So 44 nuclear plant operators have been asked to test the toughness of their reactor vessels.

A spokesman for Arkansas Power & Light Co., which operates the nuclear plant, said studies requested by the NRC are part of a continuing inspection process.

"We are, along with the manufacturers of the reactor, doing some further analysis of the problem, reviewing figures and getting some new information," AP&L spokesman Charls Kelly said.

He said no problems were found while inspecting the reactor during a recent refueling.

"It is conceivable that this could develop into a problem thatgs going to have to be dealt with, but we don't anticipate any problems in the next few years and we're not sure that there ever would be one," he said.

Kelly said he understood the NRC's request for studies was based on unrealistic data from the nuclear plant at Three Mile Island in Pennsylvania.

A severe overcooling and repressurization accident involving a weak vessel in one of the pressurized-water reactors could cause the reactor vessel to crack like a hot glass jar thrust into cold water, NRC officials said in interviews this week.

Operators of the pressurized-water reactors also were directed to review cooling control systems, said Thomas Murley, director of the NRC's safety division. NRC researchers in Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Washington were assigned to study the problem.

No immediate corrective measures were ordered, although Murley said some steps likely will be taken within a year. However, a dissenting NRC safety engineer has urged that some older plants be shut down pending the study.

Murley told the commissioners that no nuclear plants were ordered shut down because the staff does not believe any of them are in bad enough shape now that the vessel would crack.

The phenomenon that has caused concern is known as pressurized thermal shock. It has long been a concern of nuclear scientists.

If a crack breached he 8-inch-thick steel wall of the vessel, allowing the cooling water to escape, it could cause the fuel to overheat. Murley said fuel rods then might melt through the vessel into the plant's concrete containment building, very likely causing a release of radioactive material into the atmosphere.

The request was issued after NRC officials discussed overcooling accidents in California and Florida and the discovery that steel in the Maine Yankee reactor at Wiscasset was aging more rapidly than anticipated.

O'Neill says Reagan has 'heart of gold' for rich, but 'Scrooge' to poor

BOSTON (AP) — President Reagan has a "heart of gold" in dealing with the wealthy, but he's a "Scrooge" to the poor, working families and the middle class, says House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

The Massachusetts Democrat renewed his verbal crossfire with the Republican president Tuesday, blasting the administration's recommended cuts in student loans, food stamps and Social Security.

He also used his speech before a receptive audience of unionists to jab Reagan for favoring high-income wage earners in his tax-cut plan.

"The president may be hard as nails when it comes to programs that help poor people," O'Neill said. "He may be a real tightwad when it comes to programs that help working families. He may be a real Ebenezer Scrooge when it comes to programs like student loans that offer opportunity to the young middle class.

"But when it comes to giving tax breaks to the wealthy of this country, the president has a heart of gold," he said.

O'Neill said Reagan's solution to the country's economic problems was to "give money to the rich."

"That's a great philosophy — for the people living in Beverly Hills," O'Neill said. "But it's not the philosophy that built this country...and will rebuild America in the 1980s."

O'Neill also accused Reagan of sabotaging social programs, including some that date back to the New Deal.

"Wherever there is a program that offers opportunity to people, wherever there is a program that offers a little security to hard working families of this country ... that's exactly where the president and his henchmen wield their knife," O'Neill said.

O'Neill addressed 2,800 delegates to the annual convention of the Communication Workers of America, which represents 625,000 workers.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Breast feeding not sure birth control

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is in her 60s and lives alone. She takes a number of different kinds of pills each day, including a diuretic and something else for high blood pressure. Although she appears to be functioning well, I'm afraid she may not be as reliable as a younger person would be in taking her medication in accordance with the schedule established by her doctor. Is this a factor to be considered, or am I worrying needlessly? — Cynthia

Dear Cynthia: I don't know enough about your mother to comment specifically, but most women in their 60s are alert, active people. I'm pretty sure you'll find as many on the tennis courts as in rocking chairs. You do your mother — and yourself — a disservice if you believe that the age of 60 signifies a decrease in an individual's faculties.

People in their 60s can be depended on to take medication to the same extent as younger persons. This intuitive feeling is reinforced by a study conducted by the Hypertension Detection and Follow-up Program, which showed that patients between 60 and 70 years of age were even more compliant in following antihypertensive regimes than were younger patients.

Unless there is some factor you haven't mentioned, I see no reason why your mother cannot be relied upon to follow her doctor's instructions.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I never liked the idea of taking drugs, but I was finally persuaded to do so about a year ago for treatment of high blood pressure. Now I learn that there's a product that can cause cancer. Isn't it ridiculous to risk cancer in order to cure high blood pressure? — Dave

Dear Dave: I can understand your concern, but I believe you are jumping to conclusions. Let's look at what the researchers have actually come up with.

Scientists from the National Cancer Institute (NCI) have found that the drug you refer to — reserpine — causes cancer in rats and mice. However, they say it is not possible to predict on the basis of the tests the frequency with which patients using the drug might develop cancer.

Why not discuss your concerns with your doctor? Both the NCI and the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute warn that patients should not discontinue the use of reserpine on their own. If a change in medication is advisable, your doctor has other antihypertensive drugs from which to choose. But don't stop your medication without medical supervision.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am now pregnant and plan to breast-feed my baby. It is true that I cannot become pregnant again as long as I continue to breast-feed? — Mrs. A.S.

Dear Mrs. S.: Breast-feeding is not a sure-fire method of birth control. If you do not want to become pregnant, you can use any method of birth control you want exept oral contraceptives. Women who are nursing their children should not be on the Pill.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Cooper votes for town's 51st resident

COOPER, Iowa (AP) — The turnout was high in Cooper as 45 of the 50 residents braved an aggressive press corps and sweltering heat to cast their vote for the town's 51st resident.

Would it be Johnny Carson? Or Princess Grace? Or Danny Thomas, maybe?

"It's all a bit silly," said Mrs. Dean Turner.

Cooper's search for a 51st resident started as part of the town's centennial but gained national exposure when residents went on NBC's "Tonight Show" to promote the event.

The residents jammed the three-story, brick Cooper Elementary School on Tuesday night and streamed single-file into a classroom past a horde of reporters to cast their ballots.

As they filed out, reporters cornered them in a sort of modified exit poll. Most were silent, but a couple admitted to voting for Johnny Carson. Applications from all candidates were displayed, but the Princess' application was on display along with the overseas envelope in which it was mailed. That played big in Cooper.

"I couldn't believe we'd actually heard from her until I went down to the post office and saw the envelope," said Sharon Conant.

It appeared that the Princess' application — and envelope — was a strong selling point.

The form letter from Mickey Mouse was viewed disdainfully by many, but the youngest voter — 2-year-old Kati Lawton — loyally wore her Mickey Mouse shirt and cast her vote that way.

Officials of Cooper, which is 50 miles northwest of Des Moines, immediately recessed to the top floor of the school to tabulate the ballots, behind closed doors guarded by two Iowa Highway Patrolmen. Results were placed in an 1886 fruit jar to be opened Saturday, and organizers vowed to keep the winner's identity secret.

The crowd of reporters was a bit much for some. Mrs. Turner said, "It's all getting out of hand."

Promoters of the event opened the voting by playing a song written for the centennial by Bob Cook called "The Cooper Two Block Parade." He informed broadcast reporters he had a sound track available if they wanted to use it as background music.

"All you have to do to get on television tonight is step out your front door," Conant said.

Asked what happened to the other five residents, Rich said, "I suppose they just didn't bother to come."

Iranian clergy executes leftists

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran has executed three more leftists, and Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has chosen a personal representative to keep an eye on the nation's military, Iranian authorities announced today.

Meanwhile, the clergy-led Islamic Republican Party, Iran's dominant political faction, has publicly supported Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai as its candidate for president in the July 24 election to replace deposed President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, the IRP newspaper Jomhuri Eslami said today.

THE NEWSPAPER said 10 other Islamic organizations allied with the clergy-dominated party endorsed Rajai's nomination, making the 48-year-old former high school mathematics teacher the frontrunner in the presidential race.

The Interior Ministry said 70 other candidates signed up to run in the election before registration books were closed Wednesday, the newspaper said. All 71 aspirants will have to be approved by the nation's 12-man Council of Guardians, which is empowered to veto any contender whose qualifications fail to meet the constitutional requirements of a candidate.

The official Pars news agency said the three men who were executed belonged to the Marxist-Islamic underground group Mujahedeen Khalq, which has led an urban guerrilla war by various leftist opposition parties against Iran's ruling fundamentalist Moslem clergy.

THE MEN WERE put to death in the northeastern city of Sari on the Caspian Sea, a Mujahadeen Khalq stronghold where dozens have been executed recently. In all Iran, more than 140 leftists have been executed since Bani-Sadr's ouster 19 days ago.

As government executioners were thinning leftist ranks, Khomeini's office announced the appointment of Col. Seyyed Mousa Namjuy as his personal adviser on Iran's Supreme Defense Council, Tehran radio and television reported. Namjuy was ordered to report at least once a week directly to Iran's 81-year-old revolutionary patriarch on the internal affairs of the armed forces.

There was no official explanation for the appointment but Mideast radio commentators interpreted the appointment as a move by Khomeini to cope with possible army discontent over political strife at a time when Iran is engaged in a protracted war with neighboring Iraq.
