It's time for statewide law on distracted driving

Lawmakers have a responsibility and an obligation to protect Texans lives

STATE REP. TOM CRADDICK
District 82
House member

It's been six years since I first started working on legislation to address traffic safety issues posed by Texans using their cell phones while driving.

Although almost 100 cities across the state have adopted ordinances — including Midland — and 46 states have adopted laws to address cell phone use while driving, Texas does not have a statewide law. It is shocking to me that Texas is one of four states without a distracted driving law.

This upcoming 85th legislative session of the Texas Legislature, I am determined to see a statewide law enacted in an effort to reduce damages, injuries and deaths due to distracted driving crashes. Other states with laws have seen a reduction in distracted driving crashes, while Texas has seen an increase.

I have filed this bill for the most fundamental purpose of protecting lives.

I am proud to propose this bill again during this upcoming 85th Texas Legislative Session. The bill will create a traffic violation for smartphone use while driving. With few exceptions, the law would not allow a driver to read, write or send electronic messages while driving.

Distracted driving is an epidemic in Texas, and we must pass a law to address this life-threatening habit and change this dangerous driver behavior.

Named for Alex Brown, this bill is truly representative of all Texas victims and families of victims whose lives have been forever changed because of a distracted driving crash.

Distracted driving crashes have struck too close to home. Unfortunately, it is becoming far too commonplace to personally know someone — a family member, a friend, a co-worker or fellow college student — who has been involved in a distracted driving crash.

No longer is it a random newspaper article recounting the harrowing details of a distracted driving crash of a young family where the parents died and the kids survived to be forever wheelchair bound. It is your co-worker in that article.

Iran pumps more oil as Saudi minister calls for OPEC output cuts

By Sam Wilkin
Bloomberg

"Oil production west of Karoun must reach one million barrels per day. This is a realistic goal, and we need investment and technology."

Iranian President Hassan Rouhani

Iran boosted oil output at three western fields faster than it expected as rival OPEC producer Saudi Arabia called for a collective output cut later this month to help rebalance the market.

Output at the fields west of the Karoun River, near Iran's border with Iraq, rose to about 250,000 barrels per day from 65,000 barrels in 2013, the Oil Ministry's news service Shana reported Sunday, citing President Hassan Rouhani at a ceremony to formally open the project. Iran had expected to reach that output target by the end of the year, Mohsen Ghamsari, director for international affairs at the National Iranian Oil Co., said in September.

Saudi Arabia's Energy Minister Khalid Al-Falih said OPEC must agree to implement a proposed cut in crude production for OPEC countries, Saudi Press Agency reported Sunday. OPEC members will meet on Nov. 30 to discuss a plan to limit the group's output to a range of 32.5 million to 33 million barrels a day, compared with 33.64 million in October. That target has become harder to reach as several members boosted output.

OPEC reported last week that Iran raised its monthly output by the most since international sanctions were lifted in January. The Islamic Republic negotiated an exemption from the necessary production cuts at a meeting in Algiers in September, to compensate for the production capacity it lost when international sanctions targeted its oil industry. Iran has almost recovered that capacity, and plans to further increase output with the help of foreign investment.

"Oil production west of Karoun must reach one million barrels per day," Rouhani said, referring to the North Azadegan, Yadavaran and Yaran fields. "This is a realistic goal, and we need investment and technology."

Iran has approved a new oil contract model to lure foreign investors, although the details have not been made public. France's Total SA reached an initial agreement to develop a natural gas field in Iran last week, becoming the first international oil company to sign a deal under the new energy contracts.

Painter: Legal pot causes more mental health issues

By Trevor Hawes
thawes@mrt.com

The election of Donald Trump as president wasn't the only big news coming out of Election Day. Four states legalized recreational use, and three now accept medical marijuana.

Now, more than half of the U.S. has legalized marijuana in some form, but Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter isn't swayed by the trend.

Painter talked with the Reporter-Telegram after Wednesday's Midland County Republican Women luncheon and said that marijuana legalization is only accelerating an already-severe problem: mental health issues brought on by narcotics abuse.

The sheriff said jails have become centers for drug rehabilitation but aren't necessarily equipped to handle the capacity nor offer the most beneficial treatment.

"The state of Texas is so far behind in mental hospitals right now," he said. "Hopefully, the Sheriff's Association of Texas is going to push the Legislature to do something about it. Right now, the jails are the largest mental hospitals that the state has. That needs to be turned around. We need treatment for these people, to keep them out of jail. The only way you can do that is increase the number of places to treat people."

As more states legalize marijuana, the problem will only get worse. "Marijuana creates a psychosis, and that psychosis manifests itself into something people cannot control," Painter said.

In his 32 years as Midland County sheriff and nearly 45 years in law enforcement, Painter said he has witnessed thousands of lives destroyed by drugs. "We went into a home garage one time (and found) a dead boy with a heroin needle stuck in his arm," he recalled. "People's minds have been destroyed. I can think of one kid when he was 12 years old smoking marijuana and sniffing paint. His brain is destroyed; he is a vegetable. He is living and breathing, but he cannot function like a human being."

Painter said the strength of THC in marijuana has increased through genetic alterations, and the increase in potency has only lined the pockets of drug dealers because more potent marijuana fetches a higher price. "It has created a more dangerous situation for people who use it."

Leon Russell waves Jan. 29, 2013, as he is introduced in Tulsa, Okla. Russell, who sang, wrote and produced some of rock 'n' roll's top records, has died.

Hit songwriter, Wrecking Crew member, musical bridge builder Leon Russell dies at 74

By Todd Martens
Los Angeles Times

Leon Russell, instantly recognizable for his long white hair and a rich, hearty voice that drifted between country and soul, died Saturday in Nashville, Tenn. He was 74.

Russell was lauded for swampy rockers such as "Delta Lady" and "Roll Away the Stone," and for heart-rending ballads such as the oft-recorded "A Song for You" and "Superstar," which became a No. 2 hit for the Carpenters in 1971.

The cause of death was not revealed. Russell had heart bypass surgery in July, according to The Associated Press.

His death was announced in a Facebook post attributed to his wife, Jan Bridges.

"We thank everyone for their thoughts and prayers during this very, very difficult time," read an emailed statement from Bridges. "My husband passed in his sleep in our Nashville home. He was recovering from heart surgery in July and looked forward to getting back on the road in January. We appreciate everyone's love and support."

Russell last performed July 10 in Nashville.

"For me, he's one of the greatest American treasures we've ever had in this country," Elton John said in 2010. That year the two toured and released the collaboration album "The Union," an elegant work that showcases each artist's prowess with the piano and Russell's flair for bridging pop and gospel.

"He's played on so many wonderful records, you won't believe what he's played on, you won't believe who he's played with," John said. "And for his own, he was the greatest bandleader of the late '60s and early '70s."

Russell was born Claude Russell Bridges on April 2, 1942, in Lawton, Oklahoma. His music studies began at age 4 with piano lessons, and he would also eventually take up the trumpet.

He became an accomplished rock musician despite a birth injury that resulted in his right side being partly paralyzed.

"I studied classical music for a long time, maybe 10 years, and I realized finally I was never going to have the hands to play that stuff," he told The Times in 1999. Given the limits on his range of motion, "It was too complicated. I invented ways to play in a classical style that was not the real deal."

When Russell was 14, he would lie about his age and started performing in Tulsa, Okla., nightclubs. His band, the Starlighters, was chosen to accompany Jerry Lee Lewis on tour for about two months.

Russell at 17 moved to Los Angeles in the late '50s and quickly established himself as a prolific session musician. He was a member of the studio aces known as the Wrecking Crew, and in 1964 he could be seen in the house band for ABC's "Shindig!"

Russell, often accompanied with his signature top hat, recorded with the likes of Phil Spector, the Beach Boys, Frank and Nancy Sinatra, Sam Cooke, the Fifth Dimension and Sonny & Cher. He played on many of Spector's top productions, including those from the Ronnettes, Crystals and the Righteous Brothers, and he became a key component of the producer's "Wall of Sound" technique.

In 1970, he orchestrated Joe Cocker's "Mad Dogs & Englishmen" tour, designed as a sort of rock 'n' roll revue. The 11-member band included three drummers and was aided by a 10-voice choir, and the tour became the subject of a concert film and a hit live album.

In 1971, he had a highly visible role in George Harrison's Concert for Bangladesh benefit. His medley of the Rolling Stones' "Jumping Jack Flash" and Leiber-Stoller-Pomus' "Young Blood" was one of the benefit's highlights.

In 1970 he released a self-titled solo debut on his own Shelter Records that reached No. 60 on the U.S. pop chart. Russell soon found even greater success in 1972 with the single "Tight Rope," which combined a funky, saloon-ready playfulness and a country twang and soared to No. 11.

His solo works subsequently dug into pop music's Americana roots, exploring country, blues, gospel and jazz. He even adopted the name Hank Wilson for his more overt country interpretations. In the early-'70s, he recorded "Watching the River Flow" with Bob Dylan.

Bolstered by a Southern sturdiness and a bit of rock 'n' roll stubble, Russell's piano-driven songs often took on church-like tones. His gospel influences came from listening to the radio at a young age:

"I was raised in the Methodist Church, which is a very Germanic, military kind of music they have there. I heard this other music on the radio: Pentecostal," he told The Times. "That was right up my street. If I'd been in that church, I'd probably been up there (on a pulpit) with Jimmy Swaggart and Jim Bakker."

He was equally comfortable with the Great American Songbook as he was working with the likes of Willie Nelson, and he can be heard on works as diverse as the Beach Boys' "California Girls," "River Deep — Mountain High" by Ike and Tina Turner, and Herb Alpert's "Whipped Cream & Other Delights" album.

"Mo Ostin (former Warner Bros. Records president) said I had catholic tastes," Russell said. "What that meant was I made it very hard on (radio) program directors. I was not a brand that they could always expect was going to be the same thing. I'm not as aware of categories in music as some people are. To me it's just music. I'm interested in all kinds of music."

Russell was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2011.

He is survived by his wife, five daughters and one son — Blue, Tina Rose, Sugaree, Honey, Coco and Teddy Jack. Sugaree, Tina Rose and Teddy Jack have all been in Russell's band.

Billie Wilhite Tom

Billie Wilhite Tom, 91, of Andrews, passed away on Friday, November 11, 2016 in Andrews.

Family and friends will gather to celebrate her life at 2:00 p.m. on Tuesday, November 15, 2016 at the Andrews Church of Christ, 201 NW 2nd Street, in Andrews, with Leslie Boone and John Snider officiating. Private interment will be held at the Andrews West Cemetery under the personal care of McNett Funeral Home.

The family will receive friends on Monday, November 14, 2016 from 6:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m. at the funeral home. Please celebrate her life by visiting www.mcnettfuneralhome.com

Billie was born on January 4, 1925 to Alton T. Wilhite and Bonnie Mae Buchan Wilhite. She was raised in Monahans and graduated from Monahans High School in 1942. Following high school, she attended Tarleton College, where she met George "Sonny" Ellison Tom, Jr. They married four years later on February 1, 1947 in Monahans. They were living in Fort Worth when their first son, George Ellison "Snuffy" Tom, III, was born in 1949.

They returned "home" to West Texas in 1950, and they became the third generation of the Tom family to ranch in Andrews County. They also had ranching interest in Gaines and Upton Counties in Texas and Eddy County in New Mexico. Their second son, William Edward "Bill" Tom was born in 1955. They were previous owners of Andrews Lumber Company and current owners of Kinney, Inc. in Andrews.

Billie held many memberships with various organizations in Andrews, including the Andrews Chamber of Commerce and the Andrews County Historical Committee, where she served on the Heritage Book Commission. Billie was instrumental in starting Friends of the Andrews County Library, where she also served as a board member.

Billie was a member of the Permian Regional Medical Center Auxiliary - "Pink Ladies," member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, member of a local bridge club for many years, and a past member of the Progressive Study Club. She was awarded Citizen of the Year in 1978 by the Andrews Chamber of Commerce. Billie took great pride in the family's ranching heritage and stewardship of the land. In her spare time, she loved to garden, read, and travel. She was a member of the Andrews Church of Christ.

She is survived by longtime close family friend, Edward Saldivar of Andrews; four grandchildren, Grant Tom of New Orleans, Louisiana, Leigh Hensley and husband, Tony, of Rapid City, South Dakota, Courtney Tom of Lewisburg, Tennessee, and Chris Tom and wife, Michaeli, of Andrews; and by six great-grandchildren.

Memorials may be directed to the Friends of the Andrews County Library, 109 NW 1st Street, Andrews, Texas 79714.

Grace Miller Isbell

Grace Miller Isbell, 98, went home to be with her Heavenly Father and love of her life, Bill, on November 7, 2016 in Midland, Texas.

Grace was born in Petrolia, Texas on August 6, 1918 to Colonel Leander and Fannie Elizabeth Miller. She graduated from Parks Senior High School in 1937 in Parks, Texas.

She married James "Bill" Ellis Isbell on June 5, 1942 in Starke, Florida. They were married for 57 years. She obtained her Cosmetology License in Texas and was a Beautician for Neiman Marcos in Dallas, Texas while Bill was away in World War II.

Grace was loved by everyone who knew her. She radiated love and kindness and her sweet soul shined all the time. She was always the best dressed lady wherever she went and enjoyed being spoiled by Bill. She loved to play SkipBo and put together jigsaw puzzles with her son and grandchildren. One of her favorite pastimes was playing Skipbo with her grandson Tanner. Things got quite competitive sometimes and it would turn into a match of who could outcheat the other - Grandma Grace almost always won that battle.

Grace was preceded in death by her parents; her husband, James "Bill" Ellis Isbell; her brothers, Horace and Kenneth Miller; and by her sisters, Jessie Stanford, Mae Henry, and Pauline Hart.

She is survived by her beloved son, James Isbell of Midland; grandchildren, Katie Coit-Isbell, Tanner Isbell and girlfriend Jordyn Rogers, and Kristen Isbell Patrick and husband Tyson Patrick; great-grandchildren, Landon James and Avery Kate, all of Midland; brothers, C.L. Miller of Moran and Harold Miller of Hamlin; numerous nieces and nephews; and by many beloved family and friends that have meant so much to her through the years.

She is also survived by her special friend and caregiver Erika Vazquez; words cannot express our heartfelt gratitude for your care and love for Grace.

The family would like to thank Manor Park and Hospice for the compassionate care and support of their wonderful staff. We would like to thank Dr. Shylesh Ganta for his continuous care and taking such great care of Grace.

A visitation for family and friends will be held at Ellis Funeral Home on Monday, November 14, 2016 from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.

A celebration of her life will be held at Christ Church with the Reverend Jonathan Hartzer officiating on Tuesday, November 15, 2016 at 11:00 a.m. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

In lieu of flowers, please consider a donation to Christ Church or Hospice of Midland.

Robert Vaughn, suave 'Man from UNCLE' star, dies at 83

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Robert Vaughn, the debonair, Oscar-nominated actor whose many film roles were eclipsed by his hugely popular turn in television's "The Man From U.N.C.L.E.," has died. He was 83.

Vaughn died Friday morning after a brief battle with acute leukemia, said his manager, Matthew Sullivan.

"The Man From U.N.C.L.E." was an immediate hit, particularly with young people, when it debuted on NBC in 1964. It was part of an avalanche of secret agent shows ("I Spy," "Mission: Impossible," "Secret Agent"), spoofs ("Get Smart"), books ("The Spy Who Came in From the Cold") and even songs ("Secret Agent Man") inspired by the James Bond films.

Vaughn

Vaughn's urbane superspy Napoleon Solo teamed with Scottish actor David McCallum's Illya Kuryakin, a soft-spoken, Russian-born agent. The pair, who had put aside Cold War differences for a greater good, worked together each week for the mysterious U.N.C.L.E. (United Network Command for Law and Enforcement) in combatting the international crime syndicate THRUSH.

"Girls age 9 to 12 liked David McCallum because he was so sweet," Vaughn said in a 2005 interview in England. "But the old ladies and the 13- to 16-year-olds liked me because I was so detached."

"The Man from U.N.C.L.E." also was a big hit abroad, particularly in McCallum's native Great Britain.

The show aired until early 1968, when sagging ratings brought it to an end. In his "The Man From U.N.C.L.E. Book," Jon Heitland blamed its demise on a shift from straight adventure to more comic plots in the show's third season that turned off many viewers, as well as time slot changes.

DPS State Police patrol the Rio Grande River and surrounding area with high tech helicopters based in Edinburg on May 3, 2012.

Officials: 150 US border agents being sent to South Texas

Associated Press

EDINBURG — About 150 Border Patrol agents will be deployed to South Texas from Arizona, California and elsewhere to help process a spike in immigrants who have been apprehended after illegally entering the U.S., federal officials announced Saturday.

Agents from Tucson, Arizona, and San Diego will be temporarily reassigned to the Rio Grande Valley, and agents working another portion of the Texas border will join them, U.S. Customs and Border Protection said in a statement.

The additional agents will assist with screening and processing immigrants taken into custody along the border, many of whom are unaccompanied children and families.

Hundreds of thousands of people have sought asylum along the U.S.-Mexico border in the last two years, and the majority are Central American families who often turn themselves in as opposed to mostly Mexican men trying to evade capture, according to a federal report obtained last month by The Associated Press.

Since 2014, the Rio Grande Valley has led the nation as the region with the most apprehensions of immigrants entering the U.S. illegally. Asylum seekers, many of them fleeing drug-fueled violence south of the border, peaked in 2014 at 170,000, nearly triple the 63,000 who arrived the previous year. Before 2012, there were fewer than 30,000 a year.

Leaders in the South Texas city of McAllen said earlier this month that they're struggling to provide services and noted that October was the busiest month since 2014 for a church support center, with more than 5,600 immigrants offered assistance. The city and local groups have spent nearly $1 million over two years to provide showers, tents and other needs, Mayor Jim Darling told The Monitor newspaper.

U.S. Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said in a statement Thursday there are about 41,000 people being held in U.S. immigration detention facilities. The number normally fluctuates between 31,000 and 34,000, he said.

"Our borders cannot be open to illegal migration," Johnson said. "We must, therefore, enforce the immigration laws consistent with our priorities. Those priorities are public safety and border security. Specifically, we prioritize the deportation of undocumented immigrants who are convicted of serious crimes and those apprehended at the border attempting to enter the country illegally."

Houston homeless blame Super Bowl for ouster from underpass

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Fences have gone up and dozens of homeless people living under a Houston freeway overpass have been ordered out, and some speculate that the city is trying to make the area more presentable as it prepares to host the Super Bowl early next year.

Rhonda Parkton told the Houston Chronicle she and others who frequent an area under highway U.S. 59 in midtown Houston between downtown and NRG Stadium believe the Feb. 5 NFL championship is the reason police officers showed up early last week and warned them it was time to collect their stuff and move on.

"That's what everyone's saying," the 29-year-old said.

Marc Eichenbaum, who focuses on homeless initiatives in the mayor's office, said the area was an active site for users and dealers of synthetic marijuana, and many of those cleared from the area didn't live there.

Transportation Department spokesman Danny Perez told the newspaper "local law enforcement" asked the agency to look into the issue because people had been crossing a nearby freeway exit ramp used by drivers.

"The best means of keeping folks from crossing the ramp was to fence off the area under the freeway," Perez said.

Eichenbaum said the way the area was cleared was "obviously not the way that the mayor would want to handle it, because we believe in doing a holistic approach, and not just moving problems around."

The city routinely visited the area to provide substance abuse, housing and other assistance, he said, blaming the quick steps last week on a "breakdown in communication."

Houston began a concerted effort to house the homeless more than five years ago, according to Marilyn Brown, president and CEO of Houston's Coalition for the Homeless. More than 8,500 homeless were counted in Harris County in 2011. The most recent count, in January, found about 3,600.

The upcoming Super Bowl is not a factor, she said.

"It has never been anything other than maybe the Super Bowl is a bit of a milestone for us," Brown said.

Panhandle cattle ranchers dealing with depressed beef prices

Ranchers in the Texas Panhandle cattle country say they're dealing with depressed beef prices caused by the end of a prolonged drought.

Smith Cattle Co. General Manager Levi Berry told the Amarillo Globe-News his feedlot cows were bringing $170 per 100 pounds two years ago, but those prices now have plunged to about $103. That's a loss that could approach $1,000 per animal, he said.

"We've never seen it this bad," Berry said. "It's the biggest price move in the history of our business, and it happened in a fairly short time frame. That's the thing that's been painful."

The drought from 2011 to 2014 in the Panhandle, the hub of the Texas cattle industry, left a shortage of quality corn, pushing up feed prices and then cattle prices. Amarillo National Bank Executive Vice President Pat Ware said.

Policy-makers urge reforms for indigent Texas defendants

Policy-makers are pushing for reforms that would allow indigent defendants with low-level offenses to get out of jail without posting large amounts of bail.

The Texas Judicial Council says about a quarter of the 41,000 inmates awaiting trial in Texas pose little threat to the public. But the council says those people are incarcerated because they can't afford to post bail or in some cases have been unfairly identified as flight risks.

The Austin American-Statesman reports that a study by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards found that the percentage of inmates waiting for trial 25 years ago was 32 percent. Now it's 75 percent.

Deaths of 3 young children, mother seen as murder-suicide

West Texas authorities are describing the shooting deaths of a woman and her three young children as a murder-suicide.

The Potter County sheriff's office said Friday that 34-year-old Michelle Stone and her children, ages 4 to 8, all were found dead of gunshot wounds in a recreational vehicle on land where the family was building a home in Amarillo.

In categorizing the deaths as a murder-suicide, authorities did not specify that Stone was the shooter. No suspects are being sought.

The bodies were discovered Thursday when authorities responded to an emergency call and found the RV on fire.

VAUGHN

From 2A

Vaughn and McCallum reunited in 1983 for a TV movie, "The Return of the Man From U.N.C.L.E." in which the super spies were lured out of retirement to save the world once more.

McCallum has found stardom anew in his 14th season playing Dr. Donald "Ducky" Mallard on the hit CBS drama "NCIS".

He said he was "utterly devastated" after learning of Vaughn's death.

"Robert and I worked together for many years and losing him is like losing a part of me," McCallum said in a written statement.

In recent years, Vaughn had starred for eight seasons on the British crime-caper series "Hustle," playing Albert Stroller, the lone Yank in a band of London-based con artists. "Hustle" also aired in the U.S.

"I imagined that Napoleon Solo had retired from U.N.C.L.E., whatever U.N.C.L.E. was," Vaughn recalled in 2006. "What could he do now to use his talents and to supplement his government pension? I imagined Stroller as Napoleon Solo, The Later Years."

Before "U.N.C.L.E." Vaughn made his mark in movies, earning an Oscar nomination in 1959 for his supporting role in "The Young Philadelphians," in which he played a wounded war veteran accused of murder.

The following year, he turned in a memorable performance as a gunfighter who had lost his nerve in "The Magnificent Seven."

Making that movie, Vaughn recalled in 2005, had presented the cast with a vexing problem: no script.

"We had to improvise everything," he said. "I had to go to the costume department myself and choose the black vest and the black hat."

A liberal Democrat, Vaughn became passionately opposed to the Vietnam War while he was making "U.N.C.L.E." and delivered anti-war speeches at colleges and other venues around the country. He also debated the war with conservative William F. Buckley on the latter's TV talk show, "Firing Line."

Vaughn became a friend of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and campaigned for him during his 1968 run for the presidency. When Kennedy was assassinated that year, Vaughn was so upset that he moved to England for five years.

Returning to the U.S., the actor decided to resume his education. He had already earned a bachelor's degree in theater arts from California State University, Los Angeles, in 1956, and a master's degree from the University of Southern California in 1960.

He returned to USC, where he earned a Ph.D. His doctoral dissertation was an overview of the House Un-American Activities Commission's effect on American theater. It resulted in a well-received book "Only Victims: A Study of Show Business Blacklisting."

Vaughn was drawn to politics in several of the TV roles he chose. He portrayed Harry S. Truman in "The Man from Independence," Woodrow Wilson in "Backstairs at the White House" and a presidential aide in the 12-hour "Washington: Behind Closed Doors," for which he won an Emmy.

He also toured in a one-man play "F.D.R." about Franklin D. Roosevelt's battles with polio.

Vaughn remained active in movies in later years, usually in character roles. Among his films: "The Venetian Affair," "The Bridge at Remagen," "Julius Caesar" (the 1970 British version starring Charlton Heston), "The Towering Inferno," "S.O.B.," "Superman III" and "Delta Force."

Robert Francis Vaughn was born into a theatrical family Nov. 22, 1932, in New York City. His father was a radio actor, his mother performed on Broadway and his grandparents acted in theater.

His parents divorced when he was only 6 months old, however, and he was sent to live with his grandparents in Minneapolis, where he said his childhood was miserable. "I cried all the time and I was always getting beat up."

After his grandparents died, Vaughn moved to Los Angeles. Spotted in a college play, he was signed to a contract with Burt Lancaster's company but was soon drafted into the Army. After his discharge in 1957, he made his first movie, "No Time to Be Young."

Long among Hollywood's most eligible bachelors, Vaughn married actress Linda Staab in 1974.

"The breaks all fell my way," said Vaughn in 2006.

But was he really as cool as he appeared to his adoring audience?

"Not according to my wife," Vaughn chuckled. "She's married to the guy who doesn't take the garbage out on Tuesday evenings, the guy she battles with to get me out of my jumpsuit and running shoes. She doesn't allow me in public unless I wear a tie and a coat."

Vaughn is survived by his wife, Linda Staab Vaughn, their son Cassidy and daughter Caitlin.

TODAY IN MIDLAND

Today in Midland

On Nov. 14, 1967, arguments were made before the U.S. Supreme Court challenging the districting scheme for the Commissioners Court of Midland County. The petitioner, Mayor Hank Avery, argued the disparity in population distribution among the four districts violated the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The case Avery vs. Midland County was decided on April 1, 1968.

How sick are you?

Midland Memorial Hospital has partnered with Medical Center Hospital in Odessa for the telephone nurse triage program "68-NURSE" to bring the service to the entire Permian Basin.

The program is designed to help people determine whether their health situation warrants a trip to the emergency room. Midland residents can call the line by dialing 686-8773.

The program is free and available 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Local nurses are available to help you determine the best place to receive care for your situation. 68-NURSE can help you save time and money by directing you to the most appropriate healthcare option, whether it's a neighborhood clinic, urgent care center, emergency room or just at home.

Today in history

Today is Monday, Nov. 14, the 319th day of 2016. There are 47 days left in the year.

Today's highlight:

On Nov. 14, 1851, Herman Melville's novel "Moby-Dick; Or, The Whale" was published in the United States, almost a month after being released in Britain.

On this date:

In 1969, Apollo 12 blasted off for the moon.

In 1970, a chartered Southern Airways DC-9 crashed while trying to land in West Virginia, killing all 75 people on board, including the Marshall University football team and its coaching staff.

Five years ago: Former Penn State football assistant coach Jerry Sandusky, in a telephone interview with NBC News' "Rock Center," denied allegations he'd sexually abused eight boys and said any activities in a campus shower with a boy were just horseplay.

Australian prime minister did not tell Trump of refugee deal

A group of asylum seekers hold up their identity Aug. 2, 2013, after landing in Manus Island, Papua New Guinea. The Australian prime minister today confirmed that he did not tell President-elect Donald Trump that the United States had agreed to resettle an unspecified number of refugees languishing at Australia's expense in Pacific island camps.

CANBERRA, Australia — The Australian prime minister today confirmed that he did not tell President-elect Donald Trump that the United States had agreed to resettle an unspecified number of refugees languishing at Australia's expense in Pacific island camps.

In announcing the deal on Sunday, Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull would not say whether he had discussed it with Trump during their telephone conversation on Thursday.

"We deal with one administration at a time and you don't discuss confidential matters with one administration with a future administration," Turnbull told Nine Network television.

Turnbull could not say whether the refugees would be resettled before the Trump administration takes over on Jan. 20. The numbers and timing would be decided by the United States.

The Obama administration had agreed to resettle refugees among almost 1,300 asylum seekers held at Australia's expense on the island nations of Nauru and Papua New Guinea. Another 370 who came to Australia for medical treatment and then refused to return to the islands would also be eligible.

Trump has called for a moratorium or tight restrictions on Muslim immigration. Most of the asylum seekers are Muslims from the Middle East, Africa and Asia.

Turnbull said negotiations on the deal began with a conversation he had with President Barack Obama in January.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry confirmed that the United States had "agreed to consider referrals" from the United Nations refugee agency on Australia's refugees.

"We are going to work to protect vulnerable refugees around the world, and we'll share that responsibility with our friends in the regions that are most affected by this challenge," Kerry told reporters in New Zealand.

Australia refuses to resettle any refugee who has arrived by boat since the date the tough policy was announced on July 19, 2013.

Australia pays Nauru and Papua New Guinea to house boat arrivals and has been searching for countries that will resettle them.

Few refugees have accepted offers to resettle in Papua New Guinea and Cambodia because most hope that Australia will eventually take them in.

Any refugee who refuses to go to the U.S. would be given a 20-year visa to stay on Nauru, a tiny impoverished atoll with a population of 10,000 people, Immigration Minister Peter Dutton said.

The Refugee Council of Australia, an advocacy group, welcomed the deal as a vital first step in ending the indefinite detention of asylum seekers on the islands. The London-based rights group Amnesty International accused Australia of taking "an extreme step in shirking responsibility."

U.S. Department of Homeland Security officials are expected in Australia this week to begin assessing refugees.

Turnbull said the most vulnerable refugees would be given priority.

"Our priority is the resettlement of woman, children and families," Turnbull said. "This will be an orderly process. It will take time. It will not be rushed."

Refugees who arrive in the future would not be sent to the United States, he said.

"We anticipate that people smugglers will seek to use this agreement as a marketing opportunity to tempt vulnerable people onto these perilous sea journeys," Turnbull said. "We have put in place the largest and most capable maritime surveillance and response fleet Australia has ever deployed."

Australian Border Force Commissioner Roman Quaedvlieg said ships had been positioned to turn boats back to Indonesia if asylum seekers attempt to reach Australia in the hope of being sent to the U.S.

No people smuggling operation has successfully delivered asylum seekers to Australia by boat since July 2014.

Turnbull announced at Obama's Leaders' Summit on Refugees in September that Australia would participate in the U.S.-led program to resettle Central American refugees from a camp in Costa Rica. Australia would also increase its refugee intake by 5,000 to 18,750 a year.

Turnbull said at the time that the agreement to resettle Hondurans and Salvadorans was "not linked to any other resettlement discussions" involving Australia's refugees getting to the U.S.

Refugee Action Coalition spokesman Ian Rintoul said some refugees on Nauru were "hopeful" of resettlement in the United States, but were frustrated by the lack of details. There seemed no short-term hope for asylum seekers on Papua New Guinea's Manus Island, a male-only camp holding 873 men.

Bikers help Bruce Springsteen, stranded on the side of the road

FREEHOLD, N.J. — Coming across Bruce Springsteen on a broken down motorcycle on the side of the road could probably be a lyric from one of his songs, but it really happened for a group of guys from New Jersey.

A group from the Freehold American Legion was riding after a Veterans Day event Friday when Dan Barkalow says he saw a stranded motorcyclist up ahead near Allaire State Park in Wall Township.

"Bikers gotta stick together," Barkalow said. "I stopped to see if he needed help, and it was Bruce."

Barkalow says they tried to help get his bike running, but when they couldn't, Springsteen — wearing a brown riding jacket and a red handkerchief — hopped on the back of Ryan Bailey's bike and they headed to a local bar.

"We sat there and shot the breeze for a half hour, 45 minutes till his ride showed up," Barkalow said. "Nice guy, real down to earth. Just talked about motorcycles and his old Freehold days."

Springsteen was raised in Freehold and still lives in New Jersey. The American Legion post says Springsteen is eligible to join since his father was a veteran.

"It was nice to help out," Bailey said. "One Freehold person helping out another."

The sheriff, however, doesn't discount the possible benefits that come from marijuana. "There are some things they can derive from THC, which is the active ingredient in marijuana, and they're being successful in the state of Texas in treating people with severe epilepsy." The difference to Painter is that medical science is administering the treatment by pill or injection.

He takes issue with recreational smoking. "There is nothing good that comes from recreational marijuana. It's another means to be in possession and use a drug that has no medicinal value whatsoever when smoked," he said, adding that the American Medical Association shares this stance and that marijuana when smoked is carcinogenic.

Painter has made clear in the past that even if Texas legalizes the recreational use of marijuana, anyone caught with the drug in Midland County will be arrested because having it is still in violation of federal law. Legal or not, the fight against marijuana use is continuous, but Painter senses hope in the next four years.

"I think we're going to see a push from the Trump presidency to reduce or stop the use of marijuana in the United States one way or another," he said. "It is still a violation of federal law. There should be a strong push led by the federal government, led by the president to stop the use of marijuana because it has no medicinal value (when smoked) whatsoever. All it is doing is lining somebody's pocket with money."

No longer is it an obscure Facebook re-share post memorializing a much-loved teacher from an unknown high school who died in a distracted driving crash. It is your sisters' story on that post.

No longer is it a passer-by flyer for a 5K run in honor of the death of an unknown neighborhood kid struck down by a distracted driver. It is your son who ran across the street chasing a ball.

The victim is now someone we personally know.

All Texans are feeling the pain of damage, injury or loss of life and are calling for action by the Texas Legislature to enact legislation that will prevent these irresponsible crashes, unnecessary tragedies, preventable injuries, and needless deaths.

Lawmakers have a responsibility and an obligation to protect Texans lives.

We must put safety regulations in place that will prevent our TxDOT contractors from being struck while working to improve our roadways. We must pass a law that will protect our blind pedestrians from being run over by a distracted driver cutting the curb too close. We must enact legislation that will protect our precious children from the distracted drivers on the roadways.

Only with a law will we help to change driver behavior and keep their eyes focused on the task of driving.

This session, I am more committed than ever to give our Texas drivers safer roads; I am determined to be a voice for the distracted driving victims and families of victims; and I am extremely motivated to enact legislation that will prevent any loss of life.

Together with the help of my fellow lawmakers, Chairman Byron Cook, Chairman Charlie Geren, Vice-Chairman Eddie Lucio, and Rep. Gene Wu, this is the year we enact a statewide law on distracted driving.

This is the session that the Texas Legislature finally understands the victims' and the families' pain.

Former Speaker of the House, Tom Craddick from Midland, serves as Texas State Representative for House District 82. Craddick is the author of the Alex Brown Memorial Act relating to the creation of an offense for use of a handheld wireless communication device for text-based communication while operating a motor vehicle.

The USS Zumwalt travels down the Kennebec River on Dec. 7, 2015, in Phippsburg, Maine. The GPS-guided, rocket-powered ammunition developed for the new 155mm Advanced Gun System currently costs nearly as much as a cruise missile, making them too expensive for the Navy to buy in large quantities for the stealthy destroyer, according to officials.

At $800K a pop, new Navy destroyer's ammo is in question

By David Sharp
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Maine — The new guns on the Navy's biggest and most advanced destroyer are going to be firing blanks if the Navy can't find cost-effective projectiles.

The GPS-guided, rocket-powered projectiles developed for the new 155mm Advanced Gun System currently cost about $800,000 apiece, nearly as much as a cruise missile, making them too expensive for the Navy to buy in large quantities for the stealthy USS Zumwalt, according to officials.

The projectiles were supposed to be less expensive than missiles, providing a cost-effective way to pummel targets from 70 miles away, clearing a path for amphibious landings.

But the current price compares with $1 million for a cruise missile, which has a range of 1,000 miles. And the price is expected to grow, officials said.

For now, there are no plans to buy projectiles beyond the initial purchase of 90, according to the Navy's draft 2018 budget. The Zumwalt is supposed to be stocked with 600.

It's stunning news for a program plagued by growing costs.

"Congress is going to want to know how the Navy could get so far down the road without realizing that the price tag on these projectiles is so high," said Loren Thompson, defense analyst at the Lexington Institute in Arlington, Virginia.

The Navy is evaluating alternatives for ammunition for the Zumwalt and two other ships in the class that are under construction at Bath Iron Works in Maine. Those options include both conventional and hypervelocity projectiles, said Navy Capt. Thurraya Kent.

Bethesda, Maryland-based Lockheed Martin, which developed the 155mm projectiles, blamed the low production rate of ships — only three are being built, compared with the 32 originally envisioned — for driving up costs of the guided munitions. The defense contractor is working with the Navy with options, a spokeswoman said.

The Navy has been struggling to reduce costs because of budget limits, but those constraints could be eased when Republican President-elect Donald Trump takes office. He has vowed to boost defense spending and to increase the size of the U.S. fleet.

The 610-foot Zumwalt, the first ship in the class, was commissioned into service last month and is currently en route to its home port in San Diego.

The destroyer features electric propulsion, an angular shape to minimize radar signature, an unconventional wave-piercing hull, and a deckhouse that hides radar and other sensors. The 155mm Advanced Gun System was designed by BAE Armament Systems.

The ships weigh in at nearly 15,000 tons, about 50 percent heavier than current destroyers. But the crew size is half of the 300 personnel of other destroyers, thanks to automation.

Will Trump bring out ghosts of Nixon, Hoover?

■ Remains to be seen what course the president-elect will take

DANA MILBANK
Washington Post Writers Group

As a Donald Trump victory became clear Tuesday night, the ghost of Herbert Hoover paid a visit to Trump's election night party in New York.

In the Fox News coverage playing on screens in the ballroom, Megyn Kelly turned to Karl Rove. "It didn't happen under Reagan or the Bushes. When was the last time a Republican president had a Republican Congress?"

"1928," Rove answered.

"Incredible," Kelly said.

Yes, quite: Republicans actually had unified control for four years under George W. Bush, and for two years under Dwight Eisenhower, as Rove amended when I followed up with him.

But the 1928 comparison is instructive. It's the last time a Republican president enjoyed anything like the majority Trump will have, particularly in the House.

And how did that work out for them?

Hoover took over in a time of general prosperity but stagnant wages and vast income inequality. Populists in Congress proposed dramatic increases in tariffs to help the struggling agricultural sector, the equivalent of today's beleaguered blue-collar workers.

The proposal divided Republicans in Congress and Hoover before they produced the 1930 Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, setting off retaliation, freezing international trade, contributing to the Great Depression and accelerating a ruinous cycle of nationalism around the world.

Hoover's ghost should haunt the GOP right now. A populist, protectionist president has come to power at a time of long-depressed wages and vast inequality. He threatens to implement a 45 percent tariff against China and 35 percent against Mexico, and he's about to collide with free-traders and pro-business interests in his own party.

If they jettison Trump's agenda and proceed with business as usual, they risk inflaming Trump's already furious followers. If they do what Trump has promised, there will be chaos as they pursue what amounts to a mission impossible: enacting a huge tax cut, making enormous spending increases on infrastructure and the military and cutting the debt in half — all without touching Social Security and Medicare.

With unified control, Republicans now own every issue — health care, the economy, national security — and Democrats, who narrowly won the popular vote and are supported by exit polls showing tepid support for many of Trump's policy priorities, have little incentive to cooperate.

Some early signs show Trump won't hesitate to disappoint supporters.

Drain the swamp? Trump has packed his transition team with a who's who of the K Street lobbying trade, according to Politico. Among those in charge of staffing the new administration are people who have lobbied for or represented Altria, Visa, Anthem, Coca-Cola, General Electric, HSBC, Pfizer, PhRMA, United Airlines, Southern Company, Dow Chemical, Rosemont Copper Company, Boeing, Duke Energy and Nucor.

My colleague Catherine Ho reports that Trump's win "is likely to be a boon to the lobbying business," as businesses try to counteract the uncertainty with more lobbyists.

The Trump-proposed ban on Muslims entering the country? As the Post's Jose A. DelReal reported, the Trump campaign removed that policy's webpage Thursday, then restored it after the reporter's inquiries.

That wall on the Mexican border? "Going to take a while," Trump lieutenant Rudy Giuliani said Thursday, suggesting "he can do it by executive order by just reprogramming money within the immigration service."

"Reprogramming" money away from ... deportation? Truly building the wall would cost many billions of dollars and require approval from Congress.

The "lock her up" crowd may also be disappointed. Chris Christie said "politics are over now."

On that same question, however, Giuliani said prosecuting Clinton would be "a presidential decision" — an extraordinary departure from the American tradition of removing the president from prosecutorial decisions, particularly since President Nixon tried to block the Justice Department's Watergate probe in 1973.

The Trump transition sounded another Nixonian note when Trump surrogate Omarosa Manigault told a conservative website that Trump is keeping an enemies list.

The conflicting signals suggest Trump himself hasn't settled on his course. His gracious victory speech was about reaching out to the opposition, but Breitbart News, whose once and future leader ran the campaign, has been whipping up racial fears ("Shock Video Shows White Man Viciously Beaten in Chicago After Election").

On Thursday night, the president-elect tweeted that "professional protesters, incited by the media, are protesting. Very unfair!" Friday morning he reconsidered: "Love the fact that the small groups of protesters last night have passion for our great country. We will all come together and be proud!"

Trump's internal tension is understandable. He can leave supporters disillusioned, or he can keep his promises — and send us all back to 1928.

OPINION EXTRA

It's time to save the world, Mr. Trump

The planet's wealthiest and most powerful countries face a slow-moving but potentially devastating political and economic crisis. It now falls to Donald Trump to find a way to combat it.

Over the past few years, voters in much of the developed world have rebelled against the establishment. In the U.S., millions of voters supported an avowed socialist in the Democratic primary. And this week, Americans elected a new president who has essentially no support from mainstream politicians or media.

Across countries, these dissatisfied voters vary wildly in terms of their preferences for (or opposition to) societal change. What they have in common is anger at the existing economic order.

The well-off often treat this anger as something of a mystery. Actually, it can be traced directly to what Christine Lagarde, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, has termed a global low-growth trap. Over the last nine years, economic growth has been slow throughout the world, and particularly in developed nations. The U.S. is a prime example: Output is about 12 percent to 15 percent lower than was expected nine years ago.

The primary culprit, in my view and in Lagarde's, is a shortage of consumer demand for goods and services, which has left businesses with little motivation to invest, hire or innovate. As a result, there aren't enough jobs to go around, and the people who are working aren't very productive.

The demand shortage creates some perverse incentives for economic policy makers. To stimulate the economy, they want to convince consumers that prices are heading upward, so that buying something today will be more attractive than waiting. In such an environment, policies that increase the cost of doing business — such as raising minimum wages or increasing the regulatory burden — can reap larger-than-usual benefits.

More alarmingly, the cost reductions associated with globalization appear much less desirable in a low-demand world. Restrictions on trade, immigration and all kinds of international economic interactions become more attractive. The unwinding of economic linkages, in turn, can increase the incentives for transnational armed conflict — a danger that came to such disastrous fruition in the 1930s.

Guiding the world out of this quagmire will require determined leadership, which the U.S. is uniquely well placed to provide. It is by far the world's largest economy, with a government that still has plenty of capacity to borrow — as the low interest rates on its debt indicate. It could employ its vast resources in many ways.

For example, the president-elect has spoken of his desire to undertake a complete overhaul of American infrastructure and to cut taxes. Such a program, combined with appropriate support from the Federal Reserve, would both generate much-needed jobs for Americans and be a great first step toward leading the world out of its low-growth trap. I look forward to seeing this plan implemented in his first hundred days in office, and I hope that he is able to persuade other nations to join the U.S. in this vital effort.

Race wasn't primary factor

■ The 2016 election was not all about race; elections are more complicated than that

RUBEN NAVARRETTE
Washington Post Writers Group

As a Mexican-American columnist, there is one criticism that I hear quite often. Some readers say that, for me, "it's always about race."

Not always. Not this time.

I've been inundated with letters and comments from Latinos who insist that the election of Donald Trump is all about race and racism.

They're being way too simplistic. There are dozens of things that got Trump elected — from a sluggish economy and fear about the Islamic State, to the corruption of the Clintons and a desire to blow up the system — that have nothing to do with race.

Of course, it would be dishonest to totally brush aside the suggestion that racism, fear and hatred factored heavily into the Trump vote. Given everything that occurred in the last 17 months, and the hateful behavior we've seen from pro-Trump "sore winners" in just the last few days, I have no doubt that race was an ingredient in the stew.

I just don't believe that race was the primary ingredient. I say this despite the fact that a lot of fellow Latinos — including friends and family, and other people whose opinions I respect — vehemently disagree with me. They also tell me that I'm naive for letting white people off the hook for what some commentators are calling a "whitelash."

After all, they say, look at the numbers. A newspaper headline blares: "White Voters in Broad Bloc Shaped Upset." Exit polls show that four of the decisive states were in the Rust Belt — Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania. Each of them is overwhelmingly white and they all went for Trump. In the Southwest, Nevada and Colorado were also important. They're largely Latino, and Clinton won both.

With African-American turnout way down, and Latinos and white voters both voting in droves, this election degenerated quickly into a battle of white vs. brown. And white won.

My cousin described the weird and scary nightmare that woke him up in the wee hours after election night as "the one where Whitey gets his revenge."

My wife assures me that there are "a lot of white people out there who have been raised to believe that anyone who doesn't look like them or speak their language doesn't belong in this country" and that they used this election to reclaim power.

A good friend who has spent his life working in politics and public policy insists that white Americans "reclaimed ownership of a nation that we thought we were part of."

My old college roommate says that America "broke [his] heart" and that, while he has always believed that "we must elect decent leaders who reject hate," it didn't happen this time.

I have Latino Facebook friends who will tell you with a straight face that Trump is "little Hitler" and that the nation's 54 million Latinos are headed to concentration camps.

Which, I have to say, will be darn inconvenient for the 48 percent of Cuban-Americans who shamed themselves by voting for Trump.

Even so, I'm not immune to paranoia. The day after the election, I found myself scrutinizing all the white people in the restaurant where I had breakfast, wondering which of them voted for Trump. They must have Latino friends and neighbors, maybe even in-laws. Do they care that many of us consider a vote for Trump as the equivalent of a punch in the gut? Guess not.

What happened to the idea — advanced by both liberals and conservatives when it is convenient — that we're one country, united? E pluribus unum and all that? Trump may be good for late-night comedy, but he's harmful to national comity.

Be that as it may, it doesn't do much for the "it's all about race" argument that overall, according to exit polls, as many as 29 percent of Latinos voted for Trump. That's 2 points higher than the 27 percent of Latinos who, four years ago, voted for Mitt Romney. I predicted 20 percent, and I was way off.

Are these folks "racist" against their own kind? Are they self-hating ethnics? Should we begin putting voting booths in psychiatrists' offices?

I don't think we're there yet. This election was complicated. Human nature, even more so.

Those Latinos who voted for Trump weren't necessarily evil. Just very wrong. Ditto for the millions of white Americans who made the same mistake.

Trump names Priebus, Bannon to senior White House roles

By Jonathan Lemire and Laurie Kellman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President-elect Donald Trump made his first two key personnel appointments on Sunday, one an overture to Republican circles by naming GOP chief Reince Priebus as his White House chief of staff, the other a shot across the bow of the Washington establishment by tabbing Breitbart news executive Stephan Bannon as chief strategist and senior counselor.

Priebus

Bannon

The two men had made up the president-elect's chief of staff shortlist, and while Priebus received that job, Bannon's post also is expected to wield significant clout. The media executive with ties to the alt-right and white nationalist movement was given top billing in the press release announcing their appointments.

Trump's hires were, at first glance, contradictory, though they fit a pattern of the celebrity businessman creating a veritable Rorschach test that allowed his supporters to see what they wanted. Priebus, who lashed the RNC to Trump this summer despite some intraparty objections, is a GOP operative with deep expertise of the Washington establishment that Trump has vowed to shake up. He has close ties to House Speaker Paul Ryan, a fellow Wisconsinite.

"I am very grateful to the president-elect for this opportunity to serve him and this nation as we work to create an economy that works for everyone, secure our borders, repeal and replace Obamacare and destroy radical Islamic terrorism," Priebus said in the statement announcing his appointment.

Bannon, meanwhile, helped transform the Breitbart news site into the leading mouthpiece of the party's anti-establishment wing, which helped fuel the businessman's political rise. Ryan has been one of his most frequent targets.

"Steve and Reince are highly qualified leaders who worked well together on our campaign and led us to a historic victory," Trump said. "Now I will have them both with me in the White House as we work to make America great again."

Neither Priebus nor Bannon bring policy experience to their new White House roles. Chiefs of staff in particular play a significant role in policy making, serving as a liaison to Cabinet agencies and deciding what information makes it to the president's desk. They're often one of the last people in the room with the president as major decisions are made.

Trump's adult children, who serve as influential advisers to the president-elect, are said to have been concerned about having a controversial figure in the chief of staff role and backed Priebus for the job.

In announcing the appointments, Trump said Priebus and Bannon would work as "equal partners" — effectively creating two power centers in the West Wing. The arrangement is risky and could leave ambiguity over who makes final decisions.

Trump has long encouraged rivalries, both in business and in his presidential campaign. He cycled through three campaign managers during his White House run, creating a web of competing alliances among staffers.

Priebus is a traditional choice, one meant as an olive branch to the Republicans who control both houses of Congress as Trump looks to pass his legislative agenda.

Ryan tweeted, "I'm very proud and excited for my friend @Reince. Congrats!" Ryan made no mention of Bannon in that tweet, but earlier told CNN that he didn't know Bannon but "I trust Donald's judgment."

Pence's transition job could signal key role in White House

NEW YORK — President-elect Donald Trump's decision to empower his running mate Mike Pence to steer the presidential transition gives the soon-to-be vice president a powerful hand in shaping the incoming government and could foreshadow that he will play an outsized role in the White House.

Pence's ascension is in line with a recent trend toward influential vice presidents and appears similar to the last vice president who was handed the keys to a presidential transition: Dick Cheney.

As the nation was embroiled in the recount after the 2000 election, George W. Bush informally entrusted Cheney to begin building the government even before the outcome was settled in favor of the Republican ticket. Some of the work was done sitting around Cheney's kitchen table in McLean, Virginia, remembered Ari Fleischer, who became Bush's first press secretary.

"This is a big test for Pence," Fleischer told The Associated Press. "If it goes well, it will portend a bigger job for him in the White House."

Cheney clearly passed that test and became one of the most powerful vice presidents in recent memory, particularly during Bush's first term. Cheney not only ran Bush's vice presidential search team — eventually picking himself — he stocked the administration with veteran Republicans, many of whom he hed known for years.

"The vice president was so influential he barely spoke in meetings because he knew he would see the president alone and could convey his thoughts privately," said Fleischer. "Only the truly powerful can be that silent. And when he did talk, it was pretty impactful."

It is far too soon to say if Pence will have a similar voice in Trump's White House, but naming him the chairman of the transition team broadcasts to others in Washington that he will be a key player.

"If you're given an important role in the transition, it sends a signal to other people that you matter," said Joel K. Goldstein, a law professor at St. Louis University who is widely considered one of the nation's leading experts on the sometimes obscure history of the vice presidency. "Other political actors want to deal with you due to your perceived access and influence to the president."

It also gives the vice president a chance to put his own stamp on the administration. While Trump ran as a political outsider and was not shy in burning bridges to establishment Washington, Pence is a popular GOP figure who may opt to select longtime allies for key roles.

"Those who get new jobs may feel beholden to the vice president and feel responsive to him," said Goldstein. "It's a way of guaranteeing a degree of loyalty."

Unlike Bush and Cheney, who were friends for years, or Bill Clinton and Al Gore, who were both of the same generation of moderate Southern Democrats, Trump and Pence did not have much of a relationship before the celebrity businessman selected the Indiana governor to be his running mate. Trump then waffled, having second thoughts about the choice and asking aides if he could replace him.

But those close to Trump say he and Pence, a dyed-in-the-wool social conservative who also served in Congress, have forged a friendship and there is little doubt that the selection of the Indiana governor — as opposed to embattled New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie — sent a reassuring signal to some mainstream Republicans who previously been ill at ease about the incendiary nominee. Pence's closing argument was that it was time "for Republicans to come home" and Trump won a higher percentage of Republican votes than his opponent Hillary Clinton did from Democrats, according to exit polls.

There has also been speculation that Trump would view the presidency as a CEO role and delegate some of the decision-making elsewhere. Aides to Ohio Gov. John Kasich said that Trump's eldest son had suggested over the summer that the future vice-president would do much of the heavy lifting on both foreign and domestic policy while Trump would be in charge of "Making America Great Again," a claim the Trump camp later denied.

It seems likely that Pence will play a key role. For decades, vice-presidents were mere window dressing, given largely ceremonial tasks and left out of key decisions. That changed in 1976 when Jimmy Carter elevated Walter Mondale's role — Mondale also ran the transition — and vice-presidents since have large staffs, are often placed in charge of key administrative priorities and frequently become the administration's liaison to Capitol Hill.

President Barack Obama tasked Vice President Joe Biden with several administration priorities, including its recent anti-cancer "moonshot," and considers his running mate one of his closest friends.

"Trump has learned to trust Pence and Pence has years of experience in Congress," said Larry Sabato, head of the University of Virginia's Center for Politics. "I think it's dawning on Trump that he's now got enormous responsibilities and needs the help of every experienced, competent person he can find."

Once in office, Trump can quickly alter Supreme Court agenda

By Mark Sherman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Even before Donald Trump chooses a Supreme Court nominee, the new president can take steps to make several contentious court cases go away.

Legal challenges involving immigration, climate change, cost-free contraceptive care and transgender rights all could be affected, without any help from Congress.

The cases turn on Obama administration policies that rely on the president's pen, regulations or decisions made by federal agencies. And what one administration can do, the next can undo.

It is not uncommon for the court's docket to change when one party replaces the other in the White House. That change in direction is magnified by the high-court seat Trump will get to fill after Senate Republicans refused to consider President Barack Obama's nomination of Judge Merrick Garland.

"We were hoping we'd be looking forward to a progressive majority on the Supreme Court. After the election results, there is a new reality," said Elizabeth Wydra, president of the liberal Constitutional Accountability Center.

The Supreme Court already is set to consider a case involving a transgender teen who was born female, but identifies as a male and wants to use the boys' bathroom at his Virginia high school. When the federal appeals court in Richmond ruled in student Gavin Grimm's favor this year, it relied on a determination by the U.S. Education Department that federal law prohibiting sex discrimination in education also applies to gender identity.

The new administration could withdraw the department's guidance, which could cause the justices to return the case to the lower courts to reach their own decision about whether the law requires schools to allow students to use bathrooms and locker rooms based on their gender identity.

"It is possible, maybe even likely, that if the first question went away, then the court would send case back to the 4th circuit" in Richmond, said Steven Shapiro, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union, which represents Grimm.

Trump already has pledged to undo Obama's plan to shield millions of people living in the country illegally from deportation and to make them eligible for work permits. The Supreme Court, down to eight members after Justice Antonin Scalia's death in February, split 4 to 4 in June over the plan. The tie vote effectively killed the plan for Obama's presidency because lower federal courts had previously blocked it.

But the issue remains a live one in the legal system, and supporters of the Obama plan had hoped that a new Clinton administration would press forward.

Now, though, all Trump has to do is rescind the Obama team's actions, which would leave the courts with nothing to decide.

A similar fate may be in store for the current administration's efforts to get cost-free birth control to women who are covered by health plans from religiously-affiliated educational and charitable organizations. The justices issued an unusual order in the spring that directed lower courts across the country to seek a compromise to end the legal dispute. The groups already can opt out of paying for contraception, but they say that option leaves them complicit in providing government-approved contraceptives to women covered by their plans.

The new administration could be more willing to meet the groups' demands, which would end the controversy.

Women's contraceptives are among a range of preventive services that the Obama health overhaul requires employers to cover in their health plans. All of that now is at risk, since Trump has called for repeal of the health care law.

Obama's Clean Power Plan, calling for cuts in carbon emissions from coal-burning power plants, also could be rolled back once Trump is in office.

The federal appeals court in Washington, D.C., is considering a challenge by two-dozen mostly Republican-led states that say Obama overstepped his authority. The Trump team could seek to undo the rules put in place by the Environmental Protection Agency and it could seek a delay in the litigation while doing so, said Sean Donahue, a lawyer for the Environmental Defense Fund. Trump's EPA would have to propose its own rules, which allow for public comment and legal challenges from those who object, Donahue said.

Environmental groups effectively fought rules that they said eased pollution limits during George W. Bush's presidency.

As some issues pushed by Obama recede in importance, others that have been important to conservatives may get renewed interest at the court. Among those are efforts to impose new restrictions on public-sector labor unions and to strike down more campaign-finance limits, including the ban on unlimited contributions to political parties.

Trump win resets culture war, debate on abortion, LGBT rights

By David Crary and Rachel Zoll
Associated Press

NEW YORK — For the combatants in America's long-running culture wars, the triumph of Donald Trump and congressional Republicans was stunning — sparking elation on one side, deep dismay on the other.

Advocates of LGBT rights and abortion rights now fear setbacks instead of further gains. But the outcome emboldened the anti-abortion movement and breathed new life into the religious right's campaign for broad exemptions from same-sex marriage and other laws.

Kelly Shackelford, head of First Liberty Institute, a legal group that specializes in religious freedom cases, said that, for his cause, the environment will transform from "brutal" under the Obama administration to friendly given GOP control of both Congress and the White House. His clients include two Christian bakers in Oregon who were fined for refusing to bake a cake for a same-sex wedding.

"Many of us who fight for religious freedom have felt in the last four or even eight years there was a lot of overreaching that was wrong," said Shackelford, who was among hundreds of religious conservatives who met with Trump last June. "To have someone who is president-elect, who says I'm going to put an end to this ... we're going to go back to a country built on religious freedom. That makes us very hopeful."

Among the election's repercussions will be a renewed campaign, in state legislatures and in Congress, to pass tough anti-abortion legislation. Religious conservatives will press for far-reaching conscience protections and a repeal of regulations they said violated their religious liberty. And the push to let transgender students use the bathroom of their choice at school, strongly backed by President Barack Obama, may wither in the face of GOP resistance.

"There's no question a lot of transgender students and their parents woke up Wednesday morning really scared," said Sarah McBride, a 26-year-old transgender activist who is national press secretary for the LGBT-rights group the Human Rights Campaign. "I'm feeling the way a lot of folks are feeling — worried that the heart of this country isn't big enough to love us, too."

McBride in July became the first openly transgender person to address a national political convention when she spoke to the Democrats' gathering in Philadelphia.

Comparable worries surfaced among abortion-rights supporters.

"My colleagues across the country are deeply disheartened," said Dr. Willie Parker, an Alabama-based physician who provides abortions in three Southern states. He predicts intensified efforts to lay the groundwork for a challenge of Roe v. Wade, the 1973 Supreme Court decision establishing a nationwide right to abortion.

"We're disappointed, but not defeated," said Parker. "Like the civil rights movement, we're in it for the long haul."

Anti-abortion leaders initially were wary of Trump, who in the past had supported abortion rights. They rallied behind him — and launched a massive door-knocking campaign in several battleground states — after he pledged to support several of their key goals. These include defunding of Planned Parenthood, a ban on most late-term abortions, and the appointment of Supreme Court justices who might weaken or reverse Roe v. Wade.

Marjorie Dannensfelser, leader of the anti-abortion Susan B. Anthony List, hailed the GOP sweep as "an historic moment for the pro-life movement," putting its goals within reach.

Yet, some wariness remained.

"We are well aware that promises are not deeds," said Troy Newman, the president of Operation Rescue. "We will work to hold the new administration's feet to the fire throughout Trump's presidency, to ensure that promises are kept."

Planned Parenthood, whose services include birth control, sex education and abortions, has been a longtime target of Republican politicians, and is now bracing for intensified challenges.

"There are almost no words to capture the threat that this election result poses," said the organization's president, Cecile Richards. "We will not give up, we will not back down."

On social media, many women were broaching the option of acquiring long-lasting intrauterine devices as their form of birth control, on the possibility that birth-control pills would no longer be available free if Obama's health care act is repealed.

The GOP triumph was a heavy blow to the Human Rights Campaign and other gay-rights organizations which had worked vigorously on behalf of Hillary Clinton. They embraced her campaign as unprecedented in the breadth of its outreach to gays, lesbians, bisexuals and transgender people.

"It hurts," said Rachel Tiven, CEO of the LGBT-rights group Lambda Legal. "Our beautiful, slowly improving, two-steps-forward-one-step-back country took a giant step backward."

LGBT activists are now wondering if same-sex marriage — legalized nationwide by a 2015 Supreme Court ruling — is in jeopardy given the prospect of Trump appointing conservative justices who might reconsider that decision.

Activists also are worried by news that Ken Blackwell, a former Cincinnati mayor, was being tapped to handle domestic issues for Trump's transition team. Blackwell is a senior fellow with the Family Research Council, a staunch foe of same-sex marriage and other LGBT-rights causes.

On same-sex marriage and other issues, the Obama years brought one defeat after another for religious conservatives, who saw the president and his supporters on an inexorable march to curtail the rights of people of faith.

Liberals considered these fears overblown and said the First Amendment already offered significant protection for religious groups. But conservative Christians were deeply anxious about their future. Their only major victory came when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled two years ago in favor of Hobby Lobby, the Christian-owned arts and crafts chains with faith objections to the birth control coverage requirement in the Affordable Care Act.

Now, advocates see a transformed landscape.

TRUMP

The Bannon pick, however, is anything but safe.

Under Bannon's tenure, Breitbart pushed a nationalist agenda and became one of the leading outlets of the so-called alt-right — a movement often associated with white supremacist ideas that oppose multiculturalism and defend "Western values."

John Weaver, a Republican strategist who worked for Ohio Gov. John Kasich's presidential campaign, tweeted, "The racist, fascist extreme right is represented footsteps from the Oval Office. Be very vigilant, America."

Bannon, who became campaign CEO in August, pushed Trump to adopt more populist rhetoric and paint rival Hillary Clinton as part of a global conspiracy made up of the political, financial and media elite, bankers bent on oppressing the country's working people — a message that carried Trump to the White House but to some, carried anti-Semitic undertones.

An ex-wife of Bannon said he expressed fear of Jews when the two battled over sending their daughters to private school nearly a decade ago, according to court papers reviewed this summer by The Associated Press. In a sworn court declaration following their divorce, Mary Louise Piccard said her ex-husband had objected to sending their twin daughters to an elite Los Angeles academy because he "didn't want the girls going to school with Jews."

A spokeswoman for Bannon denied he made those statements.

The appointments came after a day in which Trump's tough-talking plan to rein in illegal immigration showed signs Sunday of cracking, with the president-elect seemingly backing off his vow to build a solid wall along the southern U.S. border and Ryan rejecting any "deportation force" targeting people in the country illegally.

Though Trump told CBS' "60 Minutes" in an interview airing Sunday night that his border wall might look more like a fence in spots, one thing didn't change from his primary: the combative billionaire took to Twitter to settle some scores.

During a four-hour spree, Trump savaged The New York Times for being "dishonest" and "highly inaccurate" and gloated about the GOP stalwarts lining up to congratulate him, bragging that staunch critics and GOP rivals Kasich, Mitt Romney and Jeb Bush had sent attaboys.

Trump also told "60 Minutes" he would eschew the $400,000 annual salary for the president, taking only $1 a year.

DAVID AND CAROL EVANS

DOG RESCUERS

Community involvement: David has been involved in the oil and gas industry for more than 35 years and has coached soccer and Little League Baseball for 31 years. He has been a member of SWOTT (Southwest Oilman's Tennis Tournament), which supports and donates to local youth tennis, and served as president for three years.

Carol has been a band director for 25 years in both the Ector and Midland county school districts. She is an active member of TMEA (Texas Music Educators Association) and TBA (Texas Band Directors Association). Carol has also served as chairman of the board for H3 (Horses, Hearts and Hands), a nonprofit organization providing equine-assisted therapy for individuals with special needs and for local veterans.

What led you to your mission of rescuing boxers and volunteering with local animal rescue organizations? We both had dogs growing up; David specifically had boxers. Being known in our community for our boxers and for our love of dogs, we were often called upon when there was a need to help out a boxer, whether it be a lost or found dog, one injured or abandoned, or one in the local shelter. With the highs and lows of our economy, the need for help with these dogs (and cats) in our community has grown significantly, and the local rescue organizations are overwhelmed in their efforts to help these animals. By volunteering, we can make a difference in these animals' lives and speak up for them so that none of them have to be euthanized.

What talents and skills do you share with the community through your volunteer roles? Educating the community on good pet care, such as the importance of shots, spays/neuters, yearly checkups and microchipping, and helping to provide these if an owner is in need of help; educating them on the need for proper shelter and providing it if they need help; educating and helping people who may be wanting or needing to give up their pet and providing assistance or guidance.

What unexpected lesson have you learned through your volunteer experiences? That every dog has a purpose in life. Most are to be our best friend, our companion. But some are here for very special reasons, such as an abandoned deaf boxer that now is a therapy dog for the Midland Rape Crisis and Children's Advocacy Center.

How long has Midland been your home, and why have you stayed? We have been here for 29 years. Midland is a nice, close-knit community with good common core values and a great way of life. There are opportunities available to everyone, and we feel that people genuinely live here by the Golden Rule.

What else would you like our readers to know about you? We have a daughter, Abby, a recent Midland High graduate, who is a highly decorated all-state trumpet player. She is a freshman at Baylor University, where she already has been recognized for her musical ability. She plays a solo with the Baylor Golden Wave Band, which will be performing at the Thanksgiving game between Baylor and Texas Tech at AT&T Stadium in Arlington.

"DAVID AND CAROL HAVE A PASSION FOR HELPING THOSE IN NEED"

David and Carol have a passion for helping those in need. Sometimes, they are four-legged, and other times, they are two-legged.

They live by the words of Edward Everett Hale, who said: "I am only one, but I am one. I cannot do everything, but I can do something. And because I cannot do everything, I will not refuse to do the something that I can do."

They have rescued boxers in the Midland/Odessa area since 2012. In all, they estimate that more than 300 dogs, mainly boxers, have been rescued. The majority of these dogs come from the Midland and Odessa animal shelters. Others are found abandoned as strays in horrible shape. The couple's rescues are taken to local veterinarians until they are healthy and ready for adopted. Carol has driven more than 4,000 miles transporting the rescued boxers.

David and Carol pay for more than 80 percent of the cost for the veterinarian, to provide basic care, to foster and to transport the dogs they rescue. They work with Midland Animal Shelter Adoptables, Boxer Blessings, West Texas Diamonds in the Ruff and other local rescue organizations.

One boxer rescue involved a deaf white boxer that was left abandoned in a backyard last December during a bad snow and ice storm. A concerned neighbor contacted Carol Evans and MASA. The sweet dog was rescued, vetted and fostered by David and Carol. They named him Goliath because of his size. After several months at the Evans household, he was adopted to be trained as a therapy dog for the children of the Midland Rape Crisis and Children's Advocacy Center.

While boxer rescue is the primary area where David and Carol serve Midland, they are also involved with the West Texas Food Bank and support benevolent ministries through Holy Trinity Episcopal Church. Carol has also served as chairman of the board for H3, Horses Hearts and Hands, a nonprofit organization providing equine-assisted therapy for individuals with special needs and veterans.

David and Carol often help those in need by providing holiday dinners, Christmas gifts, clothes and money. With Carol's background as a music director, the couple also regularly locates instruments to be donated to students who have a desire to pursue music.

"MIDLAND IS A BETTER PLACE TO LIVE BECAUSE OF PEOPLE LIKE DAVID AND CAROL"

Carol and David Evans have been friends of mine since 2007, at the time I was reintroduced to Carol as a Musikgarten teacher at The Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. Carol and I met much earlier in life when she moved to Midland and played clarinet in the Midland-Odessa Symphony. She was one of the instrumentalists I hired regularly to play special concerts at St. Luke's United Methodist Church. That relationship was in such a completely different arena; neither of us even remembered it until we were looking through old concert programs.

Since 2007, however, Carol and David have been active in programing for the youth of Holy Trinity Episcopal. Carol plays regularly for our children's choirs in rehearsal and worship. She is also a member of the Holy Trinity Handbell choir and Adult Choristers. She and her daughter, Abby, played regularly in our services throughout the years Abby was a student at Midland High School.

Carol and David are always gracious, opening their home, particularly in the summer when they host picnics and swimming parties. These parties are always so much fun because of Carol's love for boxers. There are always four to six dogs around the pool area playing with the youth and making good use of the pool as their water dish. Carol's and David's great love of these animals has saved the lives of many boxers. She has traveled all over the state of Texas and New Mexico to pick up abused dogs and bring them to her home to be saved from abuse, starvation and neglect. After nursing them back to health, they go to great length to find the right home for each animal. Sometimes this has meant taking back the adopted dog if the situation isn't right.

Midland is a better place to live because of people like David and Carol who give back to the community in so many ways.

Fox, CNN, MSNBC can agree Trump is gift that keeps giving

By Anousha Sakoui and Gerry Smith
Bloomberg

For America's cable news networks, a polarized nation means a chance for more ratings gold.

Fox News, CNN and MSNBC enjoyed a surge in viewership with Donald Trump's presidential campaign, and his narrow victory is still provoking passions across the political spectrum. The question now is who will benefit the most from interest in Trump's transition to office.

Will it be first-place Fox, home to Trump fans like Sean Hannity and interrogators like Megyn Kelly? CNN, which almost closed the ratings gap with Fox among younger audiences during the campaign? Or MSNBC, whose liberal bent could prove a draw for anti-Trump viewers?

"They're uncorking the champagne at the cable news networks right now," Mark Feldstein, a broadcast journalism professor at the University of Maryland, said in an interview. "People are going to be a lot more interested in watching the news with a Trump presidency than a Hillary Clinton presidency, which would have been much more predictable."

The networks certainly won't be setting audience records as they did in the run-up to the election, when the three were regularly averaging 7 million viewers combined each night. But the normal post-election drop could be smaller than in past cycles, as Trump in the White House provides fodder for more-riveting-than-normal cable news.

"There will be a lot of political news going on to keep ratings elevated," said Andrew Donchin, chief investment officer at Dentsu Aegis Network, which buys ads on channels including Fox News for companies including GM and Pfizer.

Fox

As the most-watched news network, Fox News has the biggest opportunity in covering President Trump — and the most to lose. Parent company 21st Century Fox Inc. counts on the channel for about a quarter of its profit, according to SNL Kagan, and the network has plenty of challenges to face. Fox News is confronting a much more competitive No. 2 in CNN, while still recovering from Chief Executive Officer Roger Ailes's departure this year following sexual harassment allegations. Two big tasks include wooing stars like Kelly and Bill O'Reilly for contract extensions, and capturing more young viewers.

The network needs to "reset" itself over the next few years to maintain relevance "because their audience is so old," said Brian Wieser, senior research analyst at Pivotal Research Group LLC. The median age of Fox News prime-time viewers was 65 so far this quarter, compared with CNN's 56 and MSNBC's 63, according to Nielsen data pointed out by Fox News.

While ratings may slip as interest in the election wanes, "we expect to remain No. 1 regardless of who is in the White House," 21st Century Fox co-Chairman Lachlan Murdoch said Thursday at the company's annual meeting.

Fox News, which caters to a right-leaning audience, will also have to calibrate itself now that Republicans run the White House and both houses of Congress. A Clinton presidency might have provided an easier target for Fox News' conservative commentators, but the network showed a knack this year for playing both ally and nuisance to Trump.

Kelly's star power rose when she confronted Trump and his surrogates, such as Newt Gingrich, during the campaign. A Trump administration could be another big "Megyn Kelly moment," said Tony Maciulis, head of news video at Yahoo! Inc. and a former TV producer.

And Fox News could still maintain its anti-establishment voice even with commentators that support him, in part because Trump has rejected Republican party orthodoxy with his views on trade and immigration. Hannity, a Fox News host who has sparred publicly with his colleagues over his support for Trump, took to his radio show Wednesday to discuss "unfinished business," saying "my anger at the Republican Party has never been greater."

"Fox is better-positioned than you might think," Maciulis said. What happened on election night "was a post-partisan turnout," he said. "This was not about Democrats versus Republicans."

Hannity's contract with the network runs through 2020, but Kelly's ends in the coming months. Rupert Murdoch, who assumed the day-to-day running of the news network, has said turning away from popular commentators would be "business suicide."

CNN

In past election years, Fox News has done better than CNN in retaining viewers through the presidential transition period. In the 2008 election — the last major battle between the networks — Fox News' ratings among viewers 25 to 54 years old fell 38 percent from November to December, according to Nielsen data. CNN's dropped 55 percent.

CNN is also the network whose audience isn't so commonly associated with an ideological viewpoint. That could help or hurt depending on whether audiences seek reinforcement of their views or a more balanced accounting of what unfolds over the next few months.

"There's no doubt that we are not going to have the same ratings next year that we have this year," CNN President Jeff Zucker said at a conference in August. "We're not. We fully acknowledge that. We're upfront about that."

To gird for the ratings decline, CNN has created about a dozen original series, like "Parts Unknown" with celebrity chief Anthony Bourdain, and has invested $20 million to expand its online operation, with plans to hire 200 more staffers to focus on web video, international coverage and mobile viewing.

MSNBC

Comcast Corp.'s MSNBC has been making changes of its own, focusing its daytime programming more on original reporting and less on opinion shows. The network drew its largest total day audience ever in the third quarter of 2016, averaging 682,000 viewers.

"Our rapidly growing numbers are proof that our viewers have an appetite to see how this story plays out," said MSNBC spokesman Errol Cockfield.

MSNBC and Fox may benefit more than CNN from viewer interest in the Trump presidency because they are "so identified with political parties and particular ideologies," said Feldstein, the University of Maryland professor.

It may be tempting for the network popular with left-leaning audiences to shift back to an emphasis on opinion, a way to appeal to liberals looking for a place to vent their frustrations, he said.

"Look at how well Keith Olbermann did for MSNBC against George W. Bush and the war," Feldstein said. "If I was in charge of programming at MSNBC that's what I'd be doing."

Jarobi White and Q-Tip of musical guest A Tribe Called Quest pose with host Dave Chappelle, center, on the television show, "Saturday Night Live," in New York. "Saturday Night Live" called on host Chappelle's wit for a thoughtful coda to a divisive presidential campaign. Chappelle offered an African-American take on President-elect Donald Trump's victory over Hillary Clinton, saying he hadn't seen white people so mad since the O.J. Simpson verdict.

Dave Chappelle on 'SNL' shows how much America could have used him this election cycle

Elahe Izadi
Washington Post

Dave Chappelle has still got the juice, and boy, America sure missed him over the past two years.

Chappelle has been one of comedy's most elusive figures ever since he walked away from millions of dollars and his wildly popular Comedy Central series in 2005. During two seasons of "Chappelle's Show," the stand-up made a name for himself as a comedic genius unafraid to cull humor from the most tragic aspects of racism in America (see: Clayton Bigsby, his black, blind, white-supremacist character).

The comic returned to television to host "Saturday Night Live" just days after America elected Donald Trump as its next president, the conclusion to one of the most contentious election cycles in recent memory and one now met with anti-Trump protests and reports of biased-based attacks.

Chappelle has been out of the sketch-comedy game for awhile, and in an episode that felt nostalgic and cathartic to disappointed Americans, he mostly performed with an easygoing manner with a few outlandish characters thrown in between. No matter; America wanted to hear from Chappelle. The episode brought season-high ratings in preliminary overnight numbers, and early reports indicate it may match or surpass ratings from a controversial 2015 episode when Trump hosted.

Trump's victory last week took most media by surprise, and it's a safe bet that "SNL's" writers were no different.

Just last month, Hillary Clinton, played by Kate McKinnon, confidently said "I think I'm going to be president" with a smirk. The studio audience laughed — with her, not at her. This weekend, McKinnon re-upped her Clinton role for an entirely serious, teary-eyed cold open.

The election results may have thrown off a lesser stand-up; most comics who host "SNL" test out their monologue jokes for weeks. But Chappelle came armed with Trump-winning material just days later, showing his mastery of the art.

"You know, I didn't know that Donald Trump was going to win the election. I did suspect it," Chappelle began his monologue. "It seemed like Hillary was doing well in the polls and yet — I know the whites. You guys aren't as full of surprises as you used to be."

Chappelle also lampooned Trump's first meeting with Obama, two days before.

"Oh God. Got to tell you," Chappelle-as-Trump said, "this job looks like it's going to be a lot harder than I thought."

Chappelle-as-Obama replied: "Really? It's not that hard. I mean, at least you get to be white while you're doing it."

In another election-themed sketch, Chappelle provided his trademark dry insight on race. As a group of white liberals watched the election returns and their optimism turned to despair, one remarked: "Oh my God. I think America is racist."

"Oh my God," Chappelle's character said, with fake shock. "You know, I remember my great-great grandfather told me something like that. But you know he was like a slave or something, I don't know."

Chappelle also offered a treat for his longtime fans, bringing back well-known "Chappelle's Show" characters in a prerecorded short spoofing a recent scene from "The Walking Dead" that killed off a beloved character.

The popularity of those "Chappelle's Show" bits have, in the past, derailed his stand-up performances. For years, Chappelle has dealt with hecklers at shows and in day-to-day life, who shout lines from his most iconic characters. On Saturday, the comedian didn't shy away from those roles, but did metaphorically end them.

It wasn't all jokes from Chappelle, though. He wrapped up his monologue by recounting a recent visit to the White House for a BET-sponsored party "everybody in there was black — except for Bradley Cooper, for some reason").

Chappelle described seeing pictures of past presidents, how black Americans were not welcomed in the White House for so long, and how on that particular evening, he looked around in a room full of black people "and saw all those black faces" and how "happy everybody was. These people who had been historically disenfranchised."

"In that spirit, I'm wishing Donald Trump luck. And I'm going to give him a chance," Chappelle said. "And we, the historically disenfranchised, demand that he give us one, too."

The "SNL" broadcast likewise felt unapologetically black. A Tribe Called Quest made a triumphant, bittersweet return with tracks off their newly released farewell album while paying tribute to member Phife Dawg, who died earlier this year. Consequence and Busta Rhymes also joined.

"All you black folks, you must go," Tribe rapped during a particularly political song. "All you Mexicans, you must go / And all you poor folks, you must go / Muslims and gays / Boy, we hate your ways / So all you bad folks, you must go."

As the credits rolled at the end of the episode, Chappelle said, "I gotta tell you, making a comeback is scary as hell."

"I wouldn't even call it a comeback," he continued. "But whatever it is, it's so much better than not coming at all."

How Donald Trump will dismantle Barack Obama's internet legacy

By Brian Fung
Washington Post

President-elect Donald Trump could eviscerate some of the most significant tech policies of the 21st century, all but erasing President Barack Obama's internet agenda and undoing years of effort by lawmakers, tech companies and consumer advocates to limit the power of large, established corporations, analysts say.

In particular danger are key initiatives of the Obama years, including net neutrality and a pivotal series of internet privacy regulations that came along with it.

"Net neutrality has a big target on its back," said Robert Kaminski, a telecom analyst at Capital Alpha Partners.

During the campaign, Trump vowed to "eliminate our most intrusive regulations" and "reform the entire regulatory code." He has singled out net neutrality as a "top down power grab," predicting it would allow the government to censor websites.

Congressional Republicans have taken aim at net neutrality, as well, setting the stage for a concerted effort by Trump and his House and Senate allies to undermine the policy. And because the government's consumer privacy policies draw their power from net neutrality, they are likely to fall also if conservatives successfully gut the rules.

The forecast comes as a deep blow to Silicon Valley and the tech industry, many of whose executives had openly backed Hillary Clinton in the race for the White House.

"I am surprised and disappointed," said Steve Case, the co-founder of AOL — even as other leaders, such as Box chief executive Aaron Levie, said they hoped Trump had been lying about his proposed policies. Levie has been an outspoken critic of Trump, saying his economic agenda risks undermining innovation in technology and transportation.

It's unlikely Trump was misleading the public, according to policy and business analysts. The new administration, they say, will instead delete from history the Federal Communications Commission's unprecedented regulations for Internet providers. An agency spokesperson declined to comment.

At first, Trump's FCC may simply decide not to enforce the rules. But soon they would take formal steps to strike the rules from the books, said an FCC official who spoke on condition of anonymity in order to speak more freely.

"They could potentially blow everything up fairly quickly," said the official, who added that any vote to overturn net neutrality could be met with a lawsuit filed by supporters of the rules.

Under the current net neutrality rules, which were upheld by a court in a separate legal proceeding this year, it is illegal for Internet providers such as Comcast and AT&T to put up barriers to the websites consumers want to reach. Providers cannot block or slow videos, for instance, in order to favor email traffic. And they cannot demand special payments from website operators just so that the sites' content can reach internet users.

The FCC's newly passed privacy rules, meanwhile, force internet providers to give consumers a say in how their most sensitive personal data is used and shared. As providers increasingly realize their business depends on more than simply selling internet access, many have moved to collect and analyze their customers' app usage,

Dave Chappelle, 'SNL' give thoughtful coda to election

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — "Saturday Night Live" called on host Dave Chappelle's wit and Kate McKinnon's performance of "Hallelujah" for a thoughtful coda to a divisive presidential campaign.

Chappelle, claiming to be rusty after a decade largely out of the TV spotlight, proved ready and eager to offer his take on Donald Trump's victory over Hillary Clinton, including the protests that followed.

"I haven't seen white people this mad since the O.J. (Simpson) verdict," the comedian said drolly, suggesting he would take a knee like football player Colin Kaepernick and let whites figure out the election.

There were one-liners — he grabbed the maid in his Trump hotel room because the "boss said it was OK" — but Chappelle also got serious, talking about the Black Lives Matter movement and other issues beyond the election.

"I don't even think it's the most important thing we're dealing with," Chappelle said, noting "all these shootings in the last year, worst mass shootings in the history of the United States."

Giving a shoutout to President Barack Obama for a job well done and saying he'd be missed, Chappelle told of attending a recent BET-sponsored White House party attended mostly by African-American guests.

He recalled how rare it was in past centuries for blacks to be allowed to visit the White House, adding that he relished seeing "how happy everybody was, these people that had been historically disenfranchised."

"It made me feel hopeful, and it made me feel proud to be an American, and it made me very happy about the prospects of our country," Chappelle said.

"So, in that spirit, I'm wishing Donald Trump luck, and I'm going to give him a chance," he said.

"And we, the historically disenfranchised, demand that he give us one, too."

After a string of openings featuring cast member McKinnon as Clinton sparring with Alec Baldwin's Trump, McKinnon owned the stage solo last night.

Costumed as the Democratic candidate and seated at a piano, McKinnon performed "Hallelujah" by Leonard Cohen, who died last week. It proved a resonant Clinton swan song.

"I did my best, it wasn't much, I couldn't feel, so I tried to touch.

"I've told the truth, I didn't come to fool you," McKinnon sang. "And even though it all went wrong, I'll stand before the lord of song, with nothing on my tongue but hallelujah."

At the song's end, McKinnon turned to the camera with her own — or faux Clinton's? — message of hope.

"I'm not giving up and neither should you," she said.

Moviegoers rush to 'Doctor Strange,' 'Arrival' post-election

By Jake Coyle
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Moviegoers drained by the drama of the presidential election sought refuge at the movies over the weekend, where ticket sales were robust for just about everything.

Marvel's "Doctor Strange" led the North American box office for the second week with $43 million, according to studio estimates Sunday. That was an especially strong hold for the Benedict Cumberbatch-led superhero blockbuster, which is now nearing $500 million globally. "Trolls," the musical animated release from 20th Century Fox with Anna Kendrick and Justin Timberlake, also held well in its second week with $35.1 million, bringing its cumulative domestic total to $94 million.

Denis Villeneuve's science-fiction thriller "Arrival," starring Amy Adams, scored the weekend's top debut with a better-than-expected $24 million for Paramount Pictures. Opening in fourth was Universal Pictures' "Almost Christmas," the first holiday-themed release to hit theaters. The family gathering comedy, starring Danny Glover and Gabrielle Union, debuted with $15.6 million.

The weekend box office was up about 47 percent from last year, according to comScore. The Friday holiday of Veteran's Day also helped stoke business. Paul Dergarabedian, senior media analyst for comScore, said the wide variety of releases gave moviegoers plenty of choice for escapism over the postelection weekend.

"In the first weekend after the election, I think it's clear that people find being able to go to the movie theater is the perfect antidote to the election coverage," said Dergarabedian. "There's almost nowhere else that you can unplug the way you can when you go to the movie theater."

The good showing for "Arrival," which cost $47 million to produce, was a welcome relief for Paramount. The studio has endured a string of disappointments — including "Ben-Hur" and "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles: Out of the Shadows" — with a relatively thin slate of releases.

Paramount paid $20 million for the film's domestic distribution rights. The film, in which a linguist is tasked by the government to communicate with newly arrived aliens, has drawn good reviews from critics.

Ang Lee's Iraq War hero drama "Billy Lynn's Long Halftime Walk" also made its much awaited debuted, albeit on just two screens. The Sony Pictures release, which opens nationwide next week, grossed $120,300 from two theaters (one in New York, on in Los Angeles). The two locations are the only places in North America the film is screening in Lee's innovative 120 frames-per-second version (five times the normal rate), in addition to being in 3-D and at 4k resolution.

Playing in more traditional formats, it got off to a good start in China, where "Billy Lynn" opened with $11.7 million.

This image provided by Google shows a demonstration of the company's new product called Jamboard. Google has designed the giant touch-screen canvas for companies trying to make it easier for their employees to brainstorm as they work on team projects and other assignments. Google is releasing the device to a small group of companies Oct. 25 before making it widely available in early 2017.

Tech battle brews over whiteboards that cost thousands

By Steven Overly
Washington Post

The latest product to be unveiled by tech giant Google was not a new smartphone or wearable device or search feature designed to be used by millions of everyday consumers. Rather, it was a $6,000 whiteboard designed to be used in your office conference room.

The release of Jamboard puts the Silicon Valley behemoth into the niche but increasingly competitive market of interactive whiteboards, the high-tech equivalent of those dry-erase boards that employees use to scrawl out diagrams, lead presentations or brainstorm new ideas.

Microsoft and Google have both gotten into the interactive whiteboard market this year, creating new competition for the largest and most entrenched player, Smart Technologies, a Canadian firm recently acquired by Foxconn.

"The last piece of equipment in the office and classroom that hasn't made it into the modern age is the whiteboard," said Smart Technologies Chief Technology Officer Warren Barkley. "We, along with Microsoft and Google, see this as an opportunity to move that static, physically isolated content into the wider world."

Though commonplace today, the standard whiteboard is an innovation itself. Popularized in the late 1980s and 1990s, the whiteboard has, in many instances, replaced the dusty blackboard that always left hands, clothes and floors coated in a thin layer of chalk residue.

The digital whiteboard is a more modern invention and it continues to evolve.

Smart Technologies takes credit for creating the first interactive whiteboard in 1991. Barkley said those devices were primarily large display devices that used projectors and had maybe one or two touch points. Today, interactive whiteboards come with high-tech LED touch screens whose ease of use more closely resembles a tablet computer.

That evolution has come with fits and starts, he said, and new arrivals could advance it further.

Google's Jamboard is a 55-inch, touch screen monitor that connects to the cloud and taps into Google's G Suite of productivity apps, including Google Drive, Docs and Calendar. Equipped with machine learning technology, the board is marketed as a tool for companies to make information gathering and brainstorming more seamless.

As senior product manager T.J. Varghese said succinctly in a recent blog post, "At Google, we've set out to redefine meetings."

Varghese wrote in an email that the company will first offer Jamboard to the roughly 2 million customers who subscribe to its workplace software, and it will review how those businesses put the board to use before selling it to other corporate customers.

It's unclear whether Jamboard will have a meaningful impact on Google's income. It strikes a different tone from the company's other products, which are generally lower cost and marketed to the masses, because the electronic whiteboard is distinctly aimed at a business crowd with a hefty IT budget.

Google also faces stiff competition in the workplace technology market, said Vanessa Thompson, a research analyst at IDC, a market research firm specializing in technology.

In March, Microsoft began shipping its own interactive whiteboard, called Surface Hub. Much as Jamboard integrates with Google's other products, Surface Hub integrates with Microsoft's established slate of workplace software, including Skype and Microsoft Office. The 55-inch Surface Hub sells for $8,999, and the 84-inch version goes for $21,999.

"At the very highest level, I would say almost every company today is going through some form of digital transformation," said Julia Atalla, senior director of Microsoft's Windows and Devices group. "Medium- to large-size businesses, they're looking at ways they can innovate faster."

Interactive whiteboard purveyors say their products meet that need. Collaboration has become harder in office environments where some employees work remotely or travel often, and information is increasingly stored in digital formats and shared through email. Having a digital interface that all workers in a meeting can connect with to share information, video conference and otherwise engage makes those gatherings more productive, they say.

But I.T. trends could also make the large capital investment needed to purchase the boards harder to justify, Thompson of IDC said.

"There are some macro trends impacting the way we work, like decentralization in large organizations, small team-oriented work, personal productivity tools augmenting tools provided by organizations," Thompson said. "These behavioral themes mean that workers are just as likely to use personal tools to share and collaborate as they are a space in the office."

Highlight of Google's Daydream VR is ... its controller

By Anick Jesdanun
Associated Press

■ REVIEW

NEW YORK — The best thing about Google's new virtual-reality headset isn't the headset at all.

In fact, Daydream View would pale compared with Samsung's Gear VR headset were it not for Daydream's controller, a handheld device that responds to gestures and other motion.

With Gear VR, I have to move my head to point a cursor at something, then reach for a button on the headset. With Daydream, I can just aim and click the controller in my hand. Sensors in the device tell the headset what I'm trying to do, whether it's swinging a tennis racket or casting a fishing rod. The headset's display responds accordingly.

The headset and controller are sold together for $79, starting Thursday. No rush in getting one, though, as the virtual experiences built for Daydream are still limited. And for now, it works only with Google's Pixel phone.

THE MANY FLAVORS OF VIRTUAL REALITY

While sophisticated systems like Facebook's Oculus Rift and HTC's Vive let you walk around in the virtual world, Daydream View is a sit-down experience in which you use the controller to move yourself around. (You could walk around with the Daydream on if you wanted to, but you won't go anywhere in virtual space — and you might run into the wall.)

But the Rift and the Vive each costs more than $1,500, once you include powerful personal computers they require. Suddenly, $79 sounds like a bargain. Daydream stays cheap by using the display and processing power of your phone, which you insert into the headset at eye level.

Gear VR, at $100, takes a similar approach, but it works only with Samsung phones. While Daydream works only with Pixel for now, several other Android makers plan to make compatible phones. Sorry, iPhone users.

Those without compatible phones still have Google Cardboard, a $15 contraption you hold up to your face. Using Daydream View, by contrast, is more like wearing goggles. While Gear VR has a better fit, with focusing and a second strap over your head to keep the headset from sliding too low, Daydream is much more comfortable to wear and use than Cardboard.

ALL ABOUT THAT CONTROLLER

Those who've played Nintendo's Wii system will find the Daydream controller familiar. It's about the size and shape of a chocolate bar, and it has motion sensors to track movement.

Although I'm not a big gamer, I enjoyed shooting water out of a hose to put out fires. You simply hold a button to spray and move the controller around to douse flames. You can even tilt the controller to control the angle of the hose. Another app lets you explore the universe by using the controller as a laser pointer to bring up more information.

The controller makes it easier to navigate menus without making yourself dizzy; just move it around to point at things. And while getting the full 360-degree experience of VR often requires spinning around (a swivel chair helps), some apps in Daydream let you grab the scene with your controller and drag it around you, just as you would with a PC mouse.

It's also handy to have volume controls and a home button in your hand rather than on your head.

NAUSEA FREE?

VR can be nauseating, and Daydream is no different. I found that it's less about the headset, and more about the VR video.

The best videos use stationary cameras and let you move your head (or controller) around to explore. The nauseating ones tend to treat VR cameras like regular movie cameras , with a lot of panning in response to a subject's movements. The viewer, not the subject, should be the one doing the moving.

And while I enjoyed watching a woman's skydive in VR on YouTube, scenes of her preparing to jump felt jarring because the camera was on her shaky arm. I had to remove my headset.

WHAT'S THERE TO DO?

You can view 360-degree YouTube videos and any 360-degree photos you store on Google Photos. You can visit other destinations such as the Galapagos Islands in a 360-degree version of Google's Street View. A few games, museum artworks and The Wall Street Journal's app were also available to try out prior to Thursday's launch.

A handful more are coming Thursday. Even more are promised by the end of the year, including apps for Netflix and Hulu — though all that does is offer video on a giant screen in a virtual living room.

There's much more available for Cardboard. Unfortunately, app developers will need to make some tweaks first to make them compatible with Daydream. They'll need to do even more to take advantage of the motion control.

Daydream has promise, but until more apps arrive, its potential is still a dream.

Logano wins Phoenix, Kyle Busch gets second

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

AVONDALE, Ariz. — After more than three hours of racing, NASCAR's championship field was decided over two frenzied overtime restarts.

Matt Kenseth probably should have won Sunday to earn an automatic berth into next week's title-deciding race. But the first attempt at a two-lap sprint to the finish went haywire and Kenseth collided with Alex Bowman.

Just like that, Joey Logano was the new leader and defending NASCAR champion Kyle Busch was second. The two started the day tied in the standings, and any 1-2 finish would put them both in the final four at Homestead-Miami Speedway.

Logano won the race — the second time in this Chase he used a victory in an elimination race to advance — and will race for his first Sprint Cup title next Sunday. He'll be trying to give Roger Penske a season sweep during its 50th anniversary season. Simon Pagenaud won the IndyCar title in September.

"I've never felt this good about a win before," Logano said. "There was so much on the line and everyone brings their A-game when it comes to winning championships and this team did it.

"I feel like I just won the Daytona 500 again."

Busch finished second and earned a chance to defend last year's title. He'll meet Joe Gibbs Racing teammate Carl Edwards and Jimmie Johnson, who is seeking a record-tying seventh championship, in Homestead.

JGR, which was trying to get all four of its Toyotas into the final, wound up with only two and Busch wasn't feeling celebratory. He believed his contact with Bowman triggered the accident that wrecked Kenseth's season.

"It's really unfortunate and devastating to have the race come down like that," Busch said.

Dallas Cowboys running back Ezekiel Elliott (21) celebrates after scoring a touchdown during the second half of a game against the Pittsburgh Steelers in Pittsburgh on Sunday. The Cowboys won 35-30.

Elliott scores, Cowboys top Steelers 35-30

By Will Graves
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Dak Prescott and Ezekiel Elliott have little interest in the big picture. Yes, the rookies understand the Dallas Cowboys are on a historic roll. Just don't expect them to start thinking about what it all means.

"I really don't think about what's normal and what's abnormal," Prescott said. Maybe because what's happening in Dallas might be the new normal.

Elliott ran for 114 yards and two touchdowns — both in the final two minutes — and turned a screen pass into an 83-yard score as the Cowboys pulled off a thrilling 35-30 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers on Sunday night for their eighth straight win.

Twice late in the fourth quarter Dallas (8-1) had the ball in Pittsburgh territory with a chance to run out the clock and attempt a game-winning field goal. Twice Elliott found himself running free into the end zone, the last a 32-yard sprint up the middle with 9 seconds left.

"It parted like the Red Sea," Elliott said after pushing his season rushing total to an NFL-best 1,005 yards. "All I had to do was run."

Prescott overcame an early fumble to pass for 319 yards and two scores and felt his jaw drop while watching Elliott score the third and final touchdown of a wild final 115 seconds.

"I was just shaking my head like 'Wow,'" Prescott said. "We were just trying to get us in position to get in good field goal range and Zeke said otherwise."

When safety Byron Jones pushed Pittsburgh wide receiver Antonio Brown out of bounds at the Dallas 20 on the final play, the Cowboys had perhaps their most impressive victory of an increasingly surprising season. Prescott also took another step toward stopping any discussion about the team's starting quarterback.

Veteran Tony Romo practiced during the week and is nearly fully recovered from a broken bone in his back, but he spent his Sunday afternoon the same way he spent every other one this season: in street clothes watching Prescott do his thing.

Owner and general manager Jerry Jones declined to name Prescott the permanent starter in the giddy aftermath, though there appears to be no plans — and really no reason — to make a switch even though Jones anticipates Romo being the backup next week against Baltimore.

"I think the longer (Prescott) plays like this, the more we have a chance to have another win," Jones said. "Everybody here wants to do one thing and that's win. There's nobody that would introduce any other issue or any other consideration than doing what it takes to win the game."

Asked if he's been around a team where two rookies have done so much so quickly, and the 74-year-old gleefully shook his head.

"Not two that are so in sync to where they're feeding off each other and the team feeding off them," Jones said. "I haven't seen that."

Texans beat Jaguars 24-21 for 1st road victory of season

By Mark Long
Associated Press

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — The Houston Texans actually had a nice road trip. No surprise it came in Jacksonville, where the Jaguars are winless this season.

Brock Osweiler threw two touchdown passes, Kareem Jackson returned an interception 42 yards for a score and the Texans beat the Jaguars 24-21 on Sunday for their first road win in 2016.

The Texans (6-3) scored on offense and defense and set up another score with special teams, a complete team effort that kept them perfect (3-0) against the AFC South. They won their fifth in a row against Jacksonville.

This one came despite Osweiler throwing for 99 yards.

"We have to play the game the way we see it playing out," Texans coach Bill O'Brien said. "We don't worry about stats. I think everyone needs to understand that in the National Football League it's all about winning. It's about winning. Whatever it takes to win that is what we try to do. Sometimes it doesn't work out, but six times this year it has worked out and three times it hasn't. Hopefully, we can be on the positive side of the ledger."

The Jaguars (2-7) lost their fourth straight and fell to 0-4 at home. Coach Gus Bradley's team rallied late, with Blake Bortles hitting Allen Robinson for a touchdown and again for a 2-point conversion to make it a three-point game.

But the Texans converted a third-and-5 play with 2 minutes to play and were able to run out the clock. The loss dropped Bradley's record to 14-43 in four seasons and prompted even Jacksonville's most

MHS passes first test vs. El Dorado

CHRIS HADORN
chadorn@mrt.com

Offensive fireworks were anticipated when Midland High and El Paso El Dorado clashed in Thursday's Class 6A Division I bi-district playoff at Socorro ISD Student Activities Complex.

The game lived up to its billing as the Aztecs and Bulldogs combined on 17 touchdowns, 125 points and 1,171 yards of total offense.

When the dust settled, Midland High left the Mountain time zone with a 73-52 victory over El Dorado, its first playoff win since the 2010 area round when it beat the same Aztecs, 31-7.

According to District 2-6A historian Barry Sykes, the game stands out in the record book as 125 points is the most combined points by two teams in a contest that Midland High has been involved in, breaking the mark of 118 points during the Bulldogs' 63-55 win over Lubbock Coronado in 2013.

With 73 points, Midland High (9-2) also scored its highest point total since it steamrolled Monahans, 95-0 in a 1928 affair.

The Bulldogs' greatest offensive spectacle in 88 years couldn't have happened at a more opportune time as they faced an Aztecs squad that made moving the ball look so easy.

El Dorado quarterback Cedarious Barfield was a handful to stop, amassing 268 yards on the ground, 251 yards through the air with precision passes and totaling six TDs.

In the end, the Bulldogs were able to prevail as they won the turnover battle 2-0, got a game-changing stop when El Dorado attempted a fake punt on its own 8-yard line and generated enough pressure on Barfield with their front four to hold him to a 54.9 completion percentage.

I thought the Bulldogs' defensive line of Stetson Abney, Collin McCullough and Dillon Springer stood out given the tough circumstances and the MHS defensive backs played admirably against an explosive El Dorado receiving corps, which included Utah commit Tyquez Hampton.

The Midland High offense stepped up to the challenge as quarterback Jackson Anuszkiewicz played almost as well as one could ask, completing 15 of 25 passes for 306 yards, six touchdown passes and no interceptions.

Juleion Bowers shined brightest amongst the Bulldogs' four-headed monster receiving corps, making four catches for 94 yards and scoring three total TDs.

But I thought the difference was MHS being able to run the ball effectively with 185 second-half rushing yards. It seemed when the Bulldogs got their rushing attack churning, it shortened the game by draining the clock in a game where El Dorado had the offense to make up a deficit in a hurry.

"You just have to be able to run the football," Bulldogs head coach Craig Yenzer said Thursday. "Again, that starts with the offensive line. I thought they really physical (Thursday). I thought they played really hard. Again, I thought that was part of the reason why we broke their will."

Looking ahead to the area round, Midland High faces another stiff challenge with Arlington Bowie (9-2), as the two squads will face off 2 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 19 at Shotwell Stadium in Abilene.

The Volunteers have some quality wins on their resume, which include victories over Arlington Martin and Grand Prairie.

Bowie limited their foes to only 250 points in 11 games, so the Bulldogs offense will face one of their most formidable tests.

For the second straight week, MHS defense will face a Division I-bound receiver as the Volunteers have Braydon Johnson, a three-star wide receiver committed to Oklahoma State according to rivals.com.

It has the makings of being another hotly contested affair, but probably not quite the barnburner we saw Thursday in El Paso.

Granlund scores in OT, Canucks rally to beat Stars 5-4

Associated Press

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — In their first game back after a tough six-game road trip, the Vancouver Canucks looked like a team hoping to wipe away some bad memories.

Troy Stecher tied it with 1:40 left in the third period and Markus Granlund scored in overtime, helping Vancouver rally to beat the Dallas Stars 5-4 on Sunday.

Dallas held leads of 3-1 and 4-3, but Vancouver got goals from Louis Eriksson, Brandon Sutter, Bo Horvat and Stecher to force overtime. The Canucks were coming off a 1-5 trip and have two wins in their last 12 games.

"It was a tough (road trip) for us, but it's good to be back home and this was a good win for us," Granlund said. "Everybody in this room is sticking together and playing for each other."

Granlund scored 1:27 into overtime by finding a loose puck off a faceoff and snapping it past goalie Kari Lehtonen.

That came after Stecher slapped a puck through Lehtonen's legs, sending the arena into a frenzy. It was the first NHL goal for the 22-year-old rookie defenseman.

> "It was a good feeling. But getting that win on home ice is a lot better feeling. I'm sure you guys can see it throughout the room — the vibes are up and we feel pretty good.
> Troy Stecher, Vancouver Canucks player

"It was a good feeling," Stecher said. "But getting that win on home ice is a lot better feeling. I'm sure you guys can see it throughout the room — the vibes are up and we feel pretty good."

Ryan Miller made 17 saves for Vancouver.

Patrick Eaves scored twice and Lauri Korpikoski and Antoine Roussel also scored for the Stars, who wrapped up a five-game road trip 2-1-2.

"We were right there," Stars coach Lindy Ruff said. "We made a little mistake on (Stecher's goal), just on coverage going out to the point. If we played that better, that puck definitely doesn't go in."

Lehtonen stopped 25 shots for Dallas, which had won 10 straight against the Canucks.

"Dallas had our number lately," Vancouver coach Willie Desjardins said. "I don't know if it was a must-win, but it certainly was a big win for us, and we needed to score some goals. It was good we battled in the third. I thought we showed great resiliency to stay with it."

Eaves, Horvat and Korpikoski scored during a one-minute span early in the first period. Eaves knocked in a rebound past Miller at 5:43, but Horvat tied it at 6:05 with a wrist shot off Lehtonen's shoulder. Korpikoski put Dallas back ahead on a 2-on-1 with Radek Faksa 20 seconds later.

Eaves made it 3-1 with 4:56 left in the second. Tyler Seguin got his second of three assists with a cross-ice pass to Eaves, who one-timed a shot by Miller.

Eriksson scored 3:26 into the third when a Stars turnover allowed Granlund to get the puck to him in the slot. The struggling forward put it through Lehtonen's legs for his second goal of the season.

Sutter tied it on the power play by finding the net from the slot with Lehtonen screened at 6:06 into the third.

A defensive gaffe put Dallas back ahead. The puck deflected off Nikita Tryamkin's skate and hit Miller's pad before popping out right to Roussel's stick for a tap in with 8:11 remaining.

The Canucks appeared to tie it when Burrows shoveled in a loose puck in the crease, but Dallas successfully challenged for goaltender interference to overturn the goal.

NOTES: Stetcher was playing in his seventh game. The Richmond native had two assists and 16 shots prior to Sunday. ... Former Canuck Dan Hamhuis got a standing ovation during a video tribute.

NFL ROUNDUP

FROM WIRE REPORTS

Associated Press

Seattle Seahawks wide receiver Doug Baldwin (89) catches a pass for his third touchdown of the game during the second half of a game against the New England Patriots on Sunday in Foxborough, Mass.

BRONCOS 25
SAINTS 23

NEW ORLEANS — Denver's Justin Simmons used a perfectly timed leap over the offensive line to block an extra-point kick that would have given New Orleans a late lead, Will Parks ran it back 84 yards for a defensive 2-point conversion, and the Broncos pulled out a wild 25-23 victory over the Saints on Sunday.

The decisive play came while the Superdome crowd was still celebrating Brandin Cooks' twisting, 32-yard touchdown catch between two defenders. That put New Orleans (4-5) in position to take the lead with 1:28 left. Simmons' block of Wil Lutz's kick was scooped up by Parks, who nearly stepped out of bounds as he raced down the left sideline.

This was the first such play to provide the winning points in an NFL game. The rule was instituted last year.

The Broncos then recovered an onside kick and ran out the clock.

Safety Darian Stewart intercepted Drew Brees twice and recovered a fumble for the Broncos (7-3), while Trevor Siemian overcame two interceptions by passing for touchdowns to Jordan Taylor and Demaryius Thomas.

DOLPHINS 31
CHARGERS 24

SAN DIEGO — Kiko Alonso intercepted Philip Rivers' pass and returned it 60 yards for a touchdown with 1:01 left to give Miami a fourth straight win. The Dolphins (5-4) intercepted Rivers four times, all in the fourth quarter.

Alonso jumped in front of Tyrell Williams and outraced everybody into the end zone for the winning score.

Two plays into the ensuing drive, Rivers was intercepted again, by Tony Lippett, his second of the game.

Rivers threw three touchdown passes to move past John Elway for eighth place on the career list with 301. Rivers' 51-yard touchdown pass to Williams with 4:04 left gave the Chargers (4-6) a 24-21 lead.

Miami came right back to get a 27-yard field goal from Andrew Franks to tie it. That was set up by Ryan Tannehill's 56-yard pass to DeVante Parker and a roughing-the-passer call that put the ball on the San Diego 10.

CARDINALS 23
49ERS 20

GLENDALE, Ariz. — Chandler Catanzaro kicked a 34-yard field goal as time expired. Catanzaro missed twice on winning field goal tries earlier in the season, most memorably a 24-yarder in overtime of a 6-6 tie against Seattle.

But this attempt was right down the middle as Arizona (4-4-1) narrowly averted a devastating loss.

The 49ers (1-8) lost their eighth in a row despite a strong game by Colin Kaepernick, who tied it 20-20 on a 4-yard run with 1:55 to play.

That was enough time for Carson Palmer to gain redemption after three second-half turnovers, the last an interception by Gerald Hodges that led to the tying touchdown. Palmer completed 4 of 7 passes for 64 yards, including a leaping 26-yard grab by Michael Floyd, as the Cardinals drove from their 15 to the San Francisco 16 to set up the winning kick.

CHIEFS 20
PANTHERS 17

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Marcus Peters stripped Kelvin Benjamin with 20 seconds left, Cairo Santos kicked a 37-yard field goal as time expired, and the Chiefs overcame a 17-point deficit.

The game was tied when Benjamin caught a pass from Cam Newton, and Peters ripped the ball from his arms. Santos' fourth field goal of the day split the uprights, lifting the Chiefs (7-2) to their fifth straight victory and 17th win in their last 19 games.

Eric Berry also returned an interception 42 yards for a touchdown as Kansas City's defense came up with big plays when needed. The Chiefs failed to score an offensive touchdown.

Newton threw for 261 yards and a touchdown and ran for 54 yards and a score for the Panthers (3-6).

EAGLES 24
FALCONS 15

PHILADELPHIA — Ryan Mathews ran for 108 yards and two touchdowns, while a tenacious defense held down the league's highest-scoring offense.

Carson Wentz threw for 231 yards and led the Eagles (5-4) to a comeback victory for the first time this season. Caleb Sturgis made three field goals, including a clutch kick from 48 yards to seal the win.

Matt Ryan threw a 76-yard touchdown pass to Taylor Gabriel in the fourth quarter to give Atlanta (6-4) a 15-13 lead, but Philadelphia answered.

Mathews ran in from the 5 and also converted the 2-point conversion for a 21-15 lead. On Atlanta's ensuing possession, Julio Jones dropped a pass on third-and-12 and the Falcons punted. Jones couldn't make a difficult catch on fourth-and-5 on Atlanta's next drive.

REDSKINS 26
VIKINGS 20

LANDOVER, Md. — Kirk Cousins threw for two touchdowns, Preston Smith had two sacks and a game-altering interception in Washington's first victory in almost a month.

Washington (5-3-1) got all of its second-half points off the foot of Dustin Hopkins, who hit four field goals, including a 50-yarder. The Redskins shut out Minnesota (5-4) in the second half, and Smith sacked Sam Bradford in the final seconds to hand the Vikings their fourth consecutive loss.

Cousins was 22 of 33 for 262 yards with touchdown passes to Vernon Davis and Jamison Crowder. Robert Kelley ran for 97 yards, helping Washington bounce back from a rough 6-minute stretch.

Bradford was 31 of 39 for 307 yards, two touchdowns and the interception that Smith tipped and caught with 5:44 left. Stefon Diggs had 13 catches for 164 yards.

TITANS 47
PACKERS 25

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Marcus Mariota threw for 295 yards and four touchdowns in the rout. Five Titans scored a touchdown in the first half as Tennessee put together its best scoring performance this season with 35 points.

With the win, the Titans (5-5) also matched their five victories over the past two seasons combined.

DeMarco Murray set the tone on the opening play from scrimmage, running 75 yards for a touchdown. He finished with 123 yards and also threw a TD pass, becoming the first non-quarterback to do that for this franchise in the same game since Earl Campbell on Sept. 7, 1980, for the then-Houston Oilers.

Brian Orakpo had two of Tennessee's five sacks, and the Titans also forced three turnovers.

The Packers (4-5) started a three-game road swing by losing their third straight.

BUCCANEERS 36
BEARS 10

TAMPA, Fla. — Jameis Winston threw for 312 yards and two touchdowns against mistake-prone Chicago.

Winston threw for TDs of 10 yards to Cameron Brate and 43 yards to Freddie Martino, the latter set up by a bizarre highlight-reel play. The No. 1 pick in last year's draft scrambled 23 yards backward into his end zone before avoiding a safety and launching a 39-yard completion to Mike Evans at the Chicago 38.

Martino, a former practice squad player with two career receptions, scored his first NFL touchdown after a delay-of-game penalty pushed the Bucs (4-5) back to the 43.

RAMS 9
JETS 6

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Alec Ogletree intercepted Bryce Petty with just under two minutes left to clinch this snoozer. Petty made his first NFL start in place of an injured Ryan Fitzpatrick, but couldn't get much going against the Rams' defense.

After getting the ball with 2:55 remaining and down by three, Petty tried to lead the Jets (3-7) downfield. But Petty's pass to Quincy Enunwa was picked off by Ogletree and Enunwa tried to wrestle it away from the linebacker to no avail.

Greg Zuerlein kicked three field goals, including a go-ahead 34-yarder with 6:52 left, helping the Rams (4-5) snap a four-game losing streak and avoid their first five-game skid since Weeks 9-13 last season.

COWBOYS

From 1C

gave the Cowboys a 23-18 lead. Rather than do his typical touchdown celebration — making an X with his forearms while barking at the crowd — Bryant pointed at the sky instead in tribute to his father, MacArthur Hatton.

Hatton passed away Saturday, according to Jones. And although Bryant quietly ducked out of the locker room without speaking to reporters, his teammates figure Bryant's play on the field did all the talking necessary.

"I think the game gives him peace," Prescott said. "I told him, 'Your father is watching. He's got the best seat in the house.' I told him to honor him today, and Dez went out and did exactly that and had a great night."

AT A LOSS: Even another remarkable day by Ben Roethlisberger couldn't prevent the Steelers (4-5) from a fourth straight loss. Roethlisberger passed for 408 yards and three touchdowns, the final one a 15-yard strike to Brown with 42 seconds to go that put the Steelers up by a point. Roethlisberger faked a spike to stop the clock and instead found Brown on a play similar to one by Hall of Famer Dan Marino for Miami against the New York Jets in 1994.

Marino's heady play won the game. Roethlisberger's may have come a little too quickly.

"I guess we left them too much time," said Roethlisberger, who moved past Hall of Famers Johnny Unitas and Warren Moon and into 10th on the career passing touchdown list with 292.

Brown finished with 14 receptions for 154 yards, and Le'Veon Bell added 134 total yards and scored two touchdowns.

From 1C

loyal supporters to question why owner Shad Khan hasn't made a change.

"You can't do anything besides put your head down and continue to work," Bortles said.

Houston had been downright dismal on the road this season, scoring just one touchdown in lopsided losses at New England, Minnesota and Denver. The Texans found Jacksonville to be much more hospitable, especially on the opening drive.

On the fifth play of the game, Jackson stepped in front of Allen Hurns, tipped the ball up, bobbled it, secured it and sauntered down the sideline before juking Bortles and high-stepping into the end zone. Punt returner Tyler Ervin helped make it 21-10 in the third quarter, weaving his way for 57 yards and setting the Texans up at the 7-yard line. Osweiler hooked up with Stephen Anderson on the next play.

Nick Novak, who missed two field goals earlier, connected on a 51-yarder with 8:32 remaining that gave Houston some breathing room. The Texans kept that drive alive by converting a third-and-16 play from the 19. Akeem Hunt, called up from the practice squad Saturday, ran around the left end for 17 yards.

FLUKY FUMBLE: The Jaguars added to their lowlight reel in the second quarter when Bortles did the most Bortles thing ever.

Under heavy pressure and trying to ground the ball near tightly covered running back T.J. Yeldon, Bortles hit Yeldon in the foot. The ball bounced up and landed in linebacker Whitney Mercilus' hands for what initially was ruled an interception. It was later changed to a lateral and a fumble.

"I've never seen that happen," Bortles said. "From the time you start playing quarterback, they tell you if the screen is covered, throw it at his feet. I was trying to make the smart play and live to play another down and that happens. Unfortunate."

Rosberg content with 2nd as Hamilton forces title showdown

By Stephen Wade
Associated Press

SAO PAULO — Lewis Hamilton won Sunday's rain-delayed Brazil Grand Prix at Interlagos, and Mercedes teammate Nico Rosberg again settled for second. It's the third straight race that Rosberg has been the runner-up behind Hamilton.

Is Rosberg frustrated? Not likely.

If he finishes second again to Hamilton in the season finale Nov. 27 in Abu Dhabi — or even third —it will be enough to bring him his first drivers' title.

"I can live with second today," Rosberg said, ceding the stage again to the Englishman, whose victory was his first in Brazil after failing in nine other attempts. "I was hoping for the win, but second is OK."

The German, whose father Keke Rosberg won the title 34 years ago, still leads the overall season standings with 367 points to 355 for Hamilton.

Drivers get 25 points for a victory, 18 for second, 15 for third, and 12 for fourth. The awards go all the way to 1 point for 10th place.

Sunday's race was stopped twice by crashes in driving rain during the first 28 of 71 laps. All but a half-dozen of the early laps were run behind a safety car with drivers struggling to see through tire spray and struggling to avoid hydroplaning in standing water.

The second half was less eventful, but still was slowed by another crash and another spell under the safety car.

Hamilton, the three-time series champion, said it looked tougher than it actually was.

"This was one of the easier ones," he said of his victory.

Hamilton said he was in "the zone" for the entire race, despite the stops and starts.

"I was chilling up front," Hamilton said. "When it rains, it's usually a good day for me."

"I'm hunting," he added. "All I can do is what I'm doing now. Abu Dhabi is usually a good track for me."

The victory was the 52nd of Hamilton's career, pushing him to No. 2 ahead of Alain Prost with 51. Michael Schumacher leads with 91.

The race was run behind a safety car for the first seven laps with raining pounding down and drivers trying to navigate through spray and puddles.

It didn't take long for problems to arise as soon as the safety car pulled off.

On the 13th lap Marcus Ericsson of Sauber went into a spin and crashed, forcing the safety car to come out again.

The safety car stayed on until the 20th lap. But just seconds after it pulled off and racing resumed, Kimi Raikkonen of Ferrari lost control in a spin. This time the race was stopped under a red flag.

Ferrari driver Sebastian Vettel, talking on his radio, said conditions were too dangerous. He suggested the crashes could have been worse under the treacherous conditions.

"We need to stop the race," he said. "It doesn't work. How many people do you want to crash?"

Hamilton led through the first 20 laps, followed by Rosberg, Max Verstappen of Red Bull, which was the final finish.

Phoenix

From 1C

"That's so frustrating and aggravating, and I feel horrible."

Eliminated from the playoffs Sunday were Kevin Harvick, an eight-time winner at Phoenix who had raced in the last two finales, as well as his Stewart-Haas Racing teammate Kurt Busch. Gibbs drivers Kenseth and Denny Hamlin were also knocked out of the field.

"Disappointing would be the way to put it lightly," Kenseth said. "Finish that race five minutes before that, looked like we had a chance to go race for a championship. It was a big swing in 10 or 15 minutes."

Hamlin finished seventh after a bizarre decision not to pit with the rest of the field for track position. Although it gave him a brief lead, he was no match for drivers with fresh tires.

"I knew it was going to be an uphill climb," Hamlin said.

PIT ROAD PENALTIES: NASCAR picked Sunday to enforce a rule against passing the pace car when a driver dips onto pit road for a stop. Martin Truex Jr. and Jimmie Johnson were both penalized for the infraction, and the punishment was holding the car for a lap on pit road.

Johnson and crew chief Chad Knaus were incredulous.

"I don't understand that in the least little bit," Johnson said on his radio. "This is absolutely ridiculous, NASCAR. I have no clue what I did wrong."

Johnson said he'll ask for clarification this week.

"In 15 years, that has never been a concern, and I was always told that the last thing NASCAR wanted to do would be to penalize the leader," Johnson said. "I am still baffled, and I don't know if I will stop being baffled."

BOWMAN OUT FRONT: Alex Bowman badly wants a job for next year, and his continued strong pace as the replacement driver for Dale Earnhardt Jr. is giving him a solid case to present to prospective employers.

Bowman led just nine laps in his first 79 career Sprint Cup races. Six of those laps were earlier this year driving Earnhardt's Chevrolet. A pole-winning run for Sunday's race helped Bowman lead a race-high 194 laps and was attempting to win the race before the late accident. He faded to sixth, and felt bad about his incident with Kenseth.

"I hate it for Matt. I would have raced the hell out of him for the win, but definitely don't want to do that," Bowman said. "Hate that, and it ruined our day, too. So it's unfortunate."

UP NEXT: The season finale at Homestead, where the championship will be decided. Harvick won the race in 2014 to win his championship, and Kyle Busch won last year to claim the title.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

CAVALIERS 100 HORNETS 93

CLEVELAND — LeBron James played with a different supporting cast down the stretch, but the result looked familiar.

James, Cleveland's only starter on the floor in the fourth quarter, scored 11 of his 19 points in the final period and the Cavaliers rallied for a 100-93 victory over the Charlotte Hornets on Sunday.

Channing Frye scored a season-high 20 points and played the entire fourth quarter, along with James, Iman Shumpert, Richard Jefferson and Jordan McRae.

"Our second guys did a great job," James said. "It was good we were able to close the game out. We got stops, and we made shots."

Kyrie Irving scored 19 points and Kevin Love added 17, but coach Tyronn Lue stuck with the group that helped Cleveland take control of the game. J.R. Smith, who starts at shooting guard, was sidelined with a sore right ankle.

Kemba Walker scored 21 points for the Hornets, who have lost two straight after starting the season 6-1.

Charlotte led 72-71 after three quarters. Lue began the final period with James, Frye, Iman Shumpert, Richard Jefferson and Jordan McRae. Frye's 3-pointer off James' assist put the Cavaliers ahead 77-74.

James blocked a shot by Frank Kaminsky that led to Jefferson's basket and scored in the lane, putting Cleveland ahead 81-76. He also hit a 3-pointer and found Frye for another 3 that stretched the lead to 89-80 midway through the quarter.

WARRIORS 133 SUNS 120

OAKLAND, Calif. — Nobody will argue the Golden State Warriors have a lineup of reliable, superstar scorers. They nearly had a trio of 30-point performers.

Defenders, that's still to be determined.

"We're trying to win a championship, you don't do that simply by outscoring people," coach Steve Kerr said.

Klay Thompson hit a go-ahead 3-pointer with 4:31 left and another with 3:13 remaining to score a season-high 30 points, Stephen Curry also had 30 points with five 3s, and the balanced Warriors held off the Phoenix Suns 133-120 on Sunday night.

Kevin Durant added 29 points, nine rebounds and five assists as he Warriors avoided a second home loss at this early stage that would have matched their total of two defeats at Oracle Arena in each of the past two regular seasons.

TIMBERWOLVES 129 LAKERS 99

MINNEAPOLIS — Andrew Wiggins: 47.

All five Los Angeles Lakers starters: 47.

Wiggins hit 14 of 21 shots to blow past his previous career high of 36, leading the Minnesota Timberwolves to a 125-99 victory over the Lakers on Sunday night.

"I'm finding myself, finding things I'm good at and things I need to work on," said Wiggins, nine games into his third season in the league. "The game has kind of slowed down for me a little bit. I'm able to read defenses better now and see how the defense is set."

Wiggins hit 17 of 22 free throws and Nemanja Bjelica added a career-high 24 points and eight rebounds for the Timberwolves, who played without starting guard Zach LaVine and reserve forward Shabazz Muhammad. Both missed the game with sore right knees.

Lou Williams scored 13 of his 17 points in the fourth quarter for the Lakers, who got 47 points from their starters and 52 from their bench. Julius Randle had 14 points and six rebounds and Jordan Clarkson scored 14.

MAGIC 119 THUNDER 117

OKLAHOMA CITY — Serge Ibaka's baseline jumper with less than a second remaining gave the Orlando Magic a 119-117 win over Russell Westbrook and the Oklahoma City Thunder on Sunday night.

Ibaka, who was traded from the Thunder to the Magic in the offseason, scored a career-high 31 points and added nine rebounds and four blocks.

With the score tied in the final minute, Westbrook missed a pull-up jumper, and Orlando rebounded and called timeout with 11 seconds remaining to set up Ibaka's winner with 0.4 seconds left.

Westbrook finished with 41 points, 16 assists and 12 rebounds for his third triple-double of the season and 40th of his career. The Thunder had won 20 straight when Westbrook tallied a triple-double.

Woman, kids, aren't thankful to leave home for the holidays

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: My fiance, "Allen," and I have dated for almost three years and have been living together for three months. When we met, he had been divorced for more than two years. Allen has a 13-year-old son and a 19-year-old daughter. His kids learned about me after we had dated a year. His daughter, "Jen," attends college out of state. When she visits home, she stays only with her mom.

Last summer, Allen and I decided to buy a house together, found the perfect one and went to make an offer when Jen stepped in and said if we lived together before August, after she returned to school, she wouldn't have anything to do with him. He told me I couldn't live with him until August.

I was devastated, but I didn't have a choice. Now we have a house together, Jen said she wants to spend time on Thanksgiving here at the house without me or my kids. She cried to her dad, saying if he doesn't do this, he's excluding her and choosing my kids and me over her.

This will be my first holiday with my fiance, and I was really looking forward to it. We were having friends and family over. But now, because of her request, he wants me to leave for a few hours in the morning.

I'm torn. I feel like her behavior is extremely rude and he shouldn't give in to her, but she said she'll only see him under these conditions. Do I leave my house for a few hours on Thanksgiving or tell her she's welcome but the kids and I are staying in our own home? — DISRESPECTED OUT WEST

DEAR DISRESPECTED: It's time for you and Allen to have a serious discussion. Jen's demand is unreasonable. Have you set a wedding date yet? Does he plan to allow his daughter to control both of you once you are married?

You and your children should not have to vacate your home for her to visit with her father. Jen is an adult, and if she prefers to avoid the reality of your existence, it's her choice. Her father could visit with her elsewhere the day before or after Thanksgiving.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 17, and a friend of mine who lives out of state, "Jane," has just told me she has dissociative identity disorder (formerly known as multiple personality disorder). I don't know how I should behave around her now because large parts of our history have correlated to her various identities. Some have come onto me, but others seemed to hate me.

Do you know where I can find help for dealing with a person afflicted by this? She doesn't want to tell her psychiatrist, and so far, only I and another friend know about this. — WORRIED HOW TO BEHAVE

DEAR WORRIED: If your friend's psychiatrist doesn't know that she has dissociative identity disorder, I would hesitate to accept her self-diagnosis and so should you. The kindest thing you can do for her would be to urge her to fully disclose any symptoms she's been experiencing to her doctor, because if what you have written is accurate, she has not been doing that. Other than that, treat her as you always have, but do not allow her to abuse you.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, Nov. 14, 2016:

This year you often debate both sides of an issue. Others might find this ability to be a bit crazy, especially if they find themselves in a disagreement with you. Use your talents to find solutions that work for everyone. If you are single, you are likely to stumble into a somewhat volatile bond, unless you come to terms with how the other person thinks. Fall 2017 presents an excellent possibility for a long-term relationship. If you are attached, the two of you often debate the pros and cons of a situation. Perhaps more living and less dissection of the relationship would bring a lot of happiness to both of you. GEMINI loves to tease you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ Handle your finances carefully. Others might be making radical demands, or a situation could arise that needs an immediate decision. You will find a solution; however, you might need to wear kid gloves when presenting it. Tonight: Don't worry if plans need to be adjusted.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ Tension mounts. As a result, you might project that something is wrong, even if it isn't. Try to keep your body language in line with the message. Your relationship with a loved one might hit rocky ground if you aren't careful. Tonight: Negotiate plans with a loved one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★ You might feel less than great this morning. Try to lighten your schedule and get some extra R and R while you can. You are about to hit a very busy time. Others appear to be unusually demanding, and your popularity soars. Tonight: Suddenly, the attention is on you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Emphasize cooperation, friendship and the power of many. You will succeed well beyond your expectations if you put your mind to it. Know that anything is possible. Trust your instincts. Tonight: As you would like it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ You might want to rethink your stance on a key matter. Others let you know that this time they are not with you. Be more aware of their needs as well. If you are in a position of authority, you'll need to be diplomatic. Tonight: Plans easily could be tossed to the wayside.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Detach, take a deep breath and look at a volatile situation as if you are above it. Imagine what it would be like to walk in someone else's shoes. Once you do, you will be more grounded. At the same, or shortly thereafter, you will see the solution. Tonight: Torn between two choices.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Deal directly with an issue involving a partnership. You might not be on the same page at this time, but that could change in the next few days. Consider your options carefully before presenting them. You will find the correct path. Tonight: Reach out to someone at a distance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ Others seek you out, but don't take their attention for granted. Everyone, including you, could be more prone to a quick temper — perhaps even more than you are aware. Feelings and moods will change quickly. People's fuses are short! Tonight: The only answer is "yes."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ You might feel as if something is brewing that you can't quite put your finger on. You could question different possibilities, but nothing seems to hit you as being right. As a result, you are likely to be more on edge than usual. Tonight: Respond to the Full Moon's effects.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ Try to see how a certain idea will work, despite what you think is actually possible. When push comes to shove, others might need you to be more inventive and less conventional. A request or phone call could cause you to adjust plans. Tonight: Try to make it an early night.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ Getting started might take a bit of talent and cheering yourself on. You will succeed, but you still might feel as if you would rather be home. Don't allow someone else's confusion to affect your decision-making process. Remain independent. Tonight: Be spontaneous!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★ Don't hesitate to pick up the phone and get certain matters moving, even if you are still at home. Your tone and position carry a lot of weight. Still, you could be in a position where you have to sort out the pros and cons of a confusing situation. Tonight: Run errands first.

Bidding Quiz

Q 1 — Neither vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ Q J 10 ♡ Q 10 9 5 ◇ A 9 7 6 ♣ 7 5

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♠	2♣	?

What call would you make?

A — You could just raise spades, but a 4-4 heart fit will play better, if there is one. This hand is just barely strong enough to look for it. Make a negative double, then bid spades next if you don't find a heart fit.

Q 2 — North-South vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ 9 7 ♡ 6 5 4 3 ◇ A 9 2 ♣ K 9 7 6

Partner opens one no-trump, 15-17, and right-hand opponent passes. What call would you make?

A — A 4-4 heart fit will play nicely, if you have one, but this hand isn't strong enough to look for it. Pass.

Q 3 — East-West vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ A 10 9 7 ♡ Q 9 7 3 ◇ K Q J ♣ 6 4

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1◇	2♡	3◇	Pass

What call would you make?

A — This might not be your best spot, but there is nothing you can do about it with such a minimum. Pass.

Q 4 — Both vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ J 3 ♡ A Q 6 5 2 ◇ A J 8 4 2 ♣ K

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	1♠	Pass
2◇	Pass	3♡	Pass

What call would you make?

A — Partner's sequence is invitational. The singleton king might not be worth much, but it would be cowardly to pass with this hand, Bid four hearts.

SHOE BAR RANCH
25,572 Deeded Acres
Ector County, Texas

The Shoe Bar Ranch is located approx. 15 air miles southwest of Odessa, Texas at Penwell. This ranch has been under the same family ownership since the 1920's. This quality Permian Basin ranch is all native pasture and is in good condition. The ranch has been rested with no livestock for approximately two years. Livestock water is primarily provided by eight taps on the CRMWD water line, two windmills and one submersible. Structural improvements include a two bedroom/two bath brick home, a bunkhouse, a shop building, pipe shipping pens and two sets of working pens. Oil production is mostly concentrated in the southeast portion. The majority of the ranch is free of oil field activity, which could possibly present future opportunities for the collection of surface damage income. Trophy quality mule deer and an abundance of quail are found on the ranch. Seldom does a ranch of this size, mostly free of oil field activity, come up for sale in close proximity to Midland/Odessa. The Shoe Bar Ranch is reasonably priced at $350 per acre.
