There was rain, but no baseball, on 4th

By ELLEN NIMMONS
Associated Press Writer

Rain dampened Independence Day festivities in the nation's capital and other major cities Saturday, and for the first time in the 20th century there was no major league baseball on the Fourth of July.

But there was no less joy in the hearts of 523 people from 61 countries who stood in Hart Plaza on Detroit's waterfront and took the oath of allegiance that made them American citizens.

"I don't get much in the world," Romanian immigrant John Sciopu said. But "this I got. This is freedom."

In the "We the People" hall at the National Museum of American History in Washington, 28 people from two dozen countries took the oath.

And across the nation, despite the rain in many areas, it was a day of parades and Sousa marches, fireworks and picnics, a day for politicians to talk of patriotism and for curious contests like tomahawk tossing and stone skipping.

In Washington, rain doused marchers in a parade along Constitution Avenue and prompted cancellation of some outdoor events, including an Air Force "Singing Sergeants" concert at the Jefferson Memorial and an American folk festival on the Mall.

But young people and families arrived at the Washington Monument grounds early for a Beach Boys concert. And in front of the White House, feminist protesters called for "a new, nonviolent but militant campaign for women's rights."

And the skies had cleared later when Pearl Bailey led a swaying crowd of a quarter-million people in repeated impromptu choruses of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." She sang during the National Symphony Orchestra's concert on the Capitol lawn.

President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, marked the day by celebrating her 58th birthday in Mount Vernon, Va., returning later for a picnic with White House employees.

And in Boston, there were an estimated 90,000 to 100,000 people along the Charles River at the start of the annual Boston Pops Fourth of July concert, a celebration that includes booming cannons and fireworks.

A handful of problems

It's too late for prayers. Don Furgeson's water balloon is just a split second away from busting and Chris Warmbrodt, right, knows it. But she has her hands full of the same problem. Just after the shot was taken, she was covered in water. Such was life at the Daughters of the American Revolution's 19th annual July 4th Sidewalk Parade. For more photos and details see Page 1B.

Attorney contends court-appointment system unethical pool system and its agreement with the county commissioners.

Midland County Bar Association's practice of allowing lawyers to exempt themselves from court appointments in criminal cases involving indigents has been attacked by a Midland attorney who senses that the practice is unethical and should be banned.

Lawyers who opt not to be placed on the courts' rotating lists of attorneys subject to court appointments pay $300 into a bar fund.

In the 1980-81 bar year, 137 of Midland's estimated 285 to 300 lawyers paid the price not to be bothered by the courts.

Generally, the pay for court appointments is far less than the "usual" attorney fees.

About 45 Midland attorneys, including William Monroe "Bill" Kerr, current bar president, elect to be called for court appointments. To Kerr, representing the poor — even for free — is a family tradition and in keeping with his professional code of ethics.

AND SEVEN LAWYERS, as of May 1981, had agreed to be "hired guns" for the 137 attorneys who paid their $300 exemption dues.

For that service, each of the seven bar-hired attorneys are paid about $45 for each hour spent on the case in and outside of court. The county pays about $20 of the $45, and the bar pays the rest under an agreement between the Midland County Commissioners and the bar.

But about 100 Midland attorneys somehow bypassed the courts' and the bar's list and are neither subject to court appointment or to paying the $300 annual fee. Many are landmen, oil operators and consultants and rarely see a courtroom or, let alone, cross over the bar separating the spectators' arena from the court. They are not listed on the bar's rolls.

But oil-and-gas attorney Edmund T. Anderson IV views the court-appointment system as inequitable, unfair and unethical.

"It is difficult to see how the indigent is assured of qualified, competent and responsible representation in Midland County," Anderson said in a letter of protest to the American Bar Association (ABA) in Chicago, Ill.

"An attorney must not handle a matter without adequate preparation under the circumstances, and an attorney should be motivated by professional pride."

Anderson asked for an inquiry into the "ethics" of the bar's hired-gun

THE ABA WAS NOT sympathetic with Anderson's cause. Earlier, neither was Midland County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose, who had appointed Anderson to "defend an indigent on a criminal charge." Essentially, Anderson said he was not competent to be a criminal trial lawyer and that such a practice was foreign to his career.

In his letter to the ABA, Anderson complained of the judge's appointment and said he "did not consider myself qualified to defend anyone in Texas for any charge." The attorney said that he does not practice law "except for nominal services" he has rendered for free for his friends, that he is in the oil business, but that he maintains his membership in the Texas State Bar "because it (law degree) took so long to get it and because I like to keep up with the changes in oil and gas law."

The ABA responded. According to ABA Ethics Director Robin Alexander-Smith, the bar essentially told Anderson "to get competent" if he is ordered to go to trial.

"He'll get no sympathy from us," Ms. Alexander-Smith told The Reporter-Telegram. "He's got a certain lawyerly duty in not making his clients suffer" if indeed he is not prepared to be a trial lawyer.

Professional canons within the law fraternity mandate that licensed lawyers be prepared to render competent representation in a court of law.

"IT IS HIS (the lawyers) responsibility to become knowledgeable enough to represent the client" even on court appointments, the ABA spokesman said. That stand has been taken by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"When you (as a lawyer) are required to serve in that (court-appointed) capacity, it is your duty to be prepared," Ms. Alexander-Smith said.

But on the issue of the Midland Bar-Midland County $300 exemption system, Ms. Alexander-Smith said that similar practices are common.

"The system works like that in most every jurisdiction." But the equality of the system would have to be taken to the courts and not to the ABA, which considers ethical matters.

For the past several years, the system has worked fairly well in Midland County. But the courts' haven't been overwhelmed by its efficiency: Only

Open meetings law a closed case

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

In a move last month that generated little publicity, Gov. Bill Clements vetoed a bill which would have added some teeth to the state's open meetings law.

The veto came June 18 and caught political observers off guard because the measure had been overwhelmingly approved by both the House and Senate. The Senate vote was 30 to zero, in fact.

Said one Austin insider: "It was a damn good bill. There was no opposition to it. We were surprised by the veto."

Owing to the fact passage came at the end of the legislative session, there wasn't time to override the veto. And due to the mechanics of the legislative process, a veto override cannot be taken up when legislators meet in special session July 13.

SO, IT WILL BE another two years before groups like Common Cause of Texas have an opportunity to plug loopholes they see in the historic open meetings act — an act that went into effect eight years ago and promised to end once and for all the practice of conducting public business behind closed doors.

But the promise didn't fully materialize, according to Common Cause. In a press release issued prior to the passage and subsequent veto of the bill, the consumer group said:

"Unless the Legislature acts promptly and favorably (on the bill), the citizens of Texas will again be left with an open meetings law which has proven ineffective to meet its goals of citizen access to government and government accountability to citizens."

"The Legislature has amended the Act several times, but many governmental bodies continue to flout the law by improperly closing their doors to the public and the press."

"THE ACT PROVIDES several carefully drawn exceptions to the general requirement that the people's business must be conducted in the open, but public officials who prefer to work in secret have also discovered ambiguities and flaws in the wording and enforcement provisions of the Open Meetings Act."

Key clauses in the bill vetoed by Clements called for reimbursing attorney fees in cases where individuals bring successful suits against governmental bodies that violate the law, and for permitting district court reversal of actions taken in violation of it.

As things now stand, the law implies that district judges can set aside illegal actions, but "the current wording is ambiguous and should be clarified," says Common Cause.

In practice, though, a spokeswoman for the state attorney general's office says it's usually not necessary for court action because governmental entities that violate the law normally reconvene and conduct their previously secret deliberations in public.

Midland College, for instance, has agreed to correct an inadvertent violation.

America's 205th birthday

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH
HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The arrival of the Fourth of July each year should — above all else — remind us what a lucky people we are.

We are so intimately acquainted with the term "freedom" and take it so much for granted we tend to forget what political treasures were bestowed on this nation on Independence Day in 1776.

Although frivolity and fireworks may occasionally obscure the serious meaning of what happened 205 years ago, this weekend should be a time to make manifest our appreciation for the vision and courage of ancestors who made it possible for all Americans in 1981 to live in a land of liberty.

One of those wise and courageous men was John Adams of Massachusetts. He was an author and signer of America's magna carta, the Declaration of Independence adopted by the

Editor's Report

Continental Congress in Philadelphia on July 4, 1776, and in 1796 he became the second president of the United States. He made a memorable comment about that first Fourth of July, noting that it was not only a solemn occasion but a day for the free people of this nation to sound off and make merry. I have always found the following Adams paragraph the proper prescription for celebrating the Fourth of July:

A marine biologist accompanied by District 48A State Representative Arnold Gonzales, foreground, took a short trip into the Gulf of Mexico recently to try and determine why 2,500 redfish have been discovered dead along a 140-mile stretch of South Texas coastline in the last three days. The redfish, which were the subject of recent state legislation concerning their declining numbers, have died for no apparent reason.

state Detectives' digging reverses suicide rulings

HOUSTON (AP) — When detective Johnny Bonds arrived at a fashionable home one July day in 1979, the bodies of John and Diana Wanstrath and their infant son lay in what appeared to be a classic murder-suicide setting.

There was no sign of a struggle, no evidence of robbery and a clean gunshot wound to the head of each victim.

Just one thing bothered the 14-year veteran detective — there was no gun. How could a person commit suicide and afterward get rid of the weapon?

Despite the official murder-suicide ruling by Harris County officials, Bonds embarked upon a 19-month investigation which ended in a tale of murder for hire — and in the process, another death that had been ruled a suicide in 1975 was found to be a murder.

The motive in both cases, prosecutors claim, was the greed of an adopted son who they say tried to wipe out the rest of his family so he could inherit their wealth.

On Monday, the son — investor Markham Duff-Smith, 34 — will stand trial in the 1975 death of his adoptive mother. He also is accused of arranging the killings of his sister, Diana Wanstrath, and her family.

Assistant District Attorney Ted Poe said the case probably would have remained closed if it had not been for Bonds. "The guy makes Kojak look like an amateur," Poe said.

The story began Oct. 17, 1975, when a caretaker found the body of wealthy socialite Trudy Duff-Smith Zabotlo, 60, in an upstairs bathroom of her home in Houston's exclusive River Oaks neighborhood.

A pair of bandyhoes was wound tightly around the woman's neck, and the death was ruled a suicide — authorities assumed she must have strangled herself. As in the Wanstrath case, there were no signs of a struggle or forced entry.

Mrs. Zabotlo left an estate of approximately $180,000, which was split between her natural-born daughter, Mrs. Wanstrath, and her adopted son, Duff-Smith.

Case closed — until four years later when the Wanstrath bodies were discovered and Bonds entered the case.

"The immediate appearance was of a double murder-suicide," Bonds said of the Wanstrath killings. "By the time we left, I was pretty sure it was murder, the main reason being there was no weapon."

But the Harris County medical examiner's office concluded that Diana Wanstrath, 36, shot her 35-year-old oceanographer husband and their 14-month-old son, then turned the gun on herself.

The medical examiner's report cited a history of suicide in Mrs. Wanstrath's family, notably her mother's "suicide" in 1975. prosecutors say, to being the triggerman in the Wanstrath slayings and told police he was hired by Waldhauser.

On Dec. 11, 1980, Waldhauser and Janecka were indicted in the Wanstrath deaths.

In mid-March, Waldhauser admitted his involvement in the Wanstrath and Zabotlo deaths and promised to testify against Duff-Smith. He received a 30-year prison sentence in the plea bargaining.

On March 13, Markham Duff-Smith was indicted in the Wanstrath killings.

On April 6, Janecka was convicted in the death of the Wanstrath baby and two days later was sentenced to death.

Woman's condition still critical after explosion

DALLAS (AP) — An elderly woman who was burned over 70 percent of her body when her daughter's house exploded remained hospitalized in critical condition Saturday.

Virginia Browne, 79, had gone to the house about 6 p.m. Friday to feed a cat while her daughter and son-in-law, Jan and Billy F. Bailey, were on vacation at Lake Palestine, neighbors said.

The gas explosion damaged the two adjacent houses in the Northeast Dallas neighborhood and scattered insulation over the neighborhood.

Mrs. Browne told fire officials she smelled a strange odor when she went into a bathroom in the house and was knocked on her back as she walked down a hallway.

Fire Capt. Don Howard said the house and all its contents, valued at $50,000, were destroyed. He said officials did not know what triggered the blast.

A preliminary investigation showed an interior gas leak was the cause of the blast, Howard said.

"That's about the most blown-up (house) I've ever seen," he said. Bill Hunsicker, an investigator for Lone Star Gas Co., arrived shortly after the explosion and checked other houses on the street for gas leaks. "It's traditional whenever there's an explosion," Hunsicker said. "We're not sure it's a leak."

Flood knocks out power in hospital

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — John Peter Smith Hospital began turning away patients Saturday after floodwaters shorted out two electric generators, leaving the building without lights or air conditioning.

Temperatures rose to 100 degrees in surgical patients' rooms and evacuations were possible if the intense heat began affecting patients adversely, said hospital public relations director Jane Woolf.

"We've responded to a power shortage before, but this is the first time we've had such immense heat in the patients' rooms," she said. "We have to watch them very, very closely to see how they are responding to the heat and determine the point at which we would start evacuating."

"The emergency generators just don't accommodate air conditioning," she added.

Although power was supplied to operating rooms and the trauma and intensive care units, the areas were closed because emergency power did not cover auxiliary services, such as X-ray machines and laboratories, Ms. Woolf said.

The trauma center, which treats an average of 350 patients a day and more during holidays, was rerouting all patients to other area hospitals.

She said firefighters had estimated it would take them at least until midnight to pump about 5 feet of water from a tunnel below the hospital where the electrical equipment was located.

"The water was shoulder-deep to a six-foot man last night," she said.

She said a dam that was built around an outpatient clinic under construction on one side of the building apparently failed to keep rain out of openings made in the south side of the hospital. The tunnel began to flood about 10 p.m. Friday, she said.

Fort Worth received up to 1.6 inches of rain Friday night and Saturday morning.

"The emergency power came right on ... but some areas of the hospital are not covered by emergency power," Ms. Woolf said.

Food service also was without power, and patients "are getting sort of a sack lunch," she said. "Until we have full power back on, we'll have to feed them cold cut plates and things like that. There is nothing for the employees to eat."

The hospital sent out an appeal for about 50 fans and flashlights, as well as food for doctors and nurses, most of whom had been at the hospital since Friday night. The hospital was calling in all other employees, Ms. Woolf said.

About 2 feet of water had been pumped out of the tunnel by Saturday afternoon, "but the firemen seem to think more is coming in from somewhere," Ms. Woolf said.

Guards sought, cells expanded after ruling

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — The Texas Department of Corrections is trying to recruit 500 correctional officers and plans to provide 60 square feet of living space per inmate as a result of a federal appeals court ruling.

The June 26 order from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals granted stays to certain aspects of a comprehensive ruling by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler.

Justice's December decision required sweeping changes in prison policies and practices.

The appeals court let stand Justice's order that the ratio of uniformed officers to prisoners be decreased from 1-12 to 1-10 by Nov. 1 and 1-6 by Nov. 1, 1982.

With an inmate population of 31,000, 500 guards must be added to the current 2,600-member security force by November.

"By Nov. 1, we are going to be in that area," TDC Director W.J. Estelle said, pointing out that the department's final budget from Gov. Bill Clements could provide funds for a 1-10 ratio. "Beyond that, I don't know."

The three-judge appeals court did stay a requirement that inmates be housed one to a cell by Nov. 1, 1983, pointing to a recent Supreme Court decision allowing double celling of inmates in Ohio.

But the state did not seek a stay to a ruling that a minimum of 40 square feet of living space per inmate be allowed.

"That amounts to eliminating triple celling and making sure there's a little bit of breathing room," said William Bennett Turner, a San Francisco attorney representing inmate David Ruiz.

NRC still says cancer risk low

DALLAS (AP) — Over the 40-year life of the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant, as many as 15 people living within a 50-mile radius risk dying of cancer from radiation and another 28 risk birth defects or other genetic disorders, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission says.

The figures were projected from information in a draft environmental impact statement for the plant, under construction near Glen Rose in Somervell County of north central Texas.

The projections represent deaths or disorders above those that normally would be expected for the area, NRC spokesmen said.

"The health impact to the general public due to routine operation of the station will be undetectable," the NRC concluded.

In the same statement, however, the NRC said radioactive emissions from the reactors may cause 37 cancer deaths and .71 genetic disorders for each year the plant is in operation.

Walter Pasciak, a radiological physicist with the NRC, said the figures are considered small because "20 percent of the adult population (nationwide) is expected to die of cancer."

About 6 percent of babies born in the United States suffer from genetic disorders, which include birth defects and any diseases related to genetic problems, he said.

Tragedy casts cloud over town

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

MEXIA, Texas (AP) — The timing could hardly have been worse. It was June 19, "Juneteenth," anniversary of the day Texas blacks learned of their freedom from slavery. Irony thus would compound tragedy.

Along the banks of Lake Mexia, hundreds of blacks celebrated with song and dance, food and drink. The revelry and rejoicing spilled into the night.

Before midnight, two sheriff's deputies and a probation officer arrested three young blacks for alleged drug violations. At least two were handcuffed.

The officers loaded the teenagers, into a 14-foot metal boat which contained neither lifejackets nor the capacity for six adults.

Some claim the handcuffs were removed. Others claim they were not.

Perhaps 35 feet off shore, the boat capsized. The officers survived. The three youngsters drowned.

The public outcry was predictable, although one arresting officer was black.

Despite the absence of hard evidence, many now contend the arrest of the teenagers was racially motivated and their deaths just barely short of murder.

The tragedy cast a racial cloud over a small Central Texas town and plunged the Limestone County Sheriff's Department into a virtual state of siege. Perception of what happened became perhaps as important as what actually happened.

Reporters, suspecting a major racial story, poured into the area from in and out of state.

At mid-week, a Houston legislator claimed the sheriff's office was "directly responsible" for the drownings and actively engaged in a mon-sterous coverup.

Whatever the eventual investigative outcome, it's a safe bet that Mexia and the sheriff's office will be permanently scarred by the tragedy. "It is," said one observer, "the classic no-win situation."

At 74, Alice Cotton Jesse is a widely respected and delightfully unassuming pillar of the Mexia community, a black woman of charm and compassion.

The Cottons descended from African slaves, and her late brother, Walter, wrote the only history of blacks in Limestone County.

A schoolteacher for nearly half a century, Miss Jesse, as she is called, has seen Mexia at its best and worst, including the transition to integration.

"I said then, in the 1960s, to give them a little time, that the kids would work it out better than the grown-ups," she recalled this week.

And, she added, the relationship between Mexia blacks and whites has been "remarkable."

And while 30 percent of the town's 7,000-plus population is black, racial incidents have been almost non-existent in recent years, she said.

For 72 of her 74 years, she recalled, she has spent Juneteenth on the banks of Lake Mexia, at what is now the privately owned Booker T. Washington Park.

But she remembered nothing so tragic as the events of last June 19.

"Some mistakes were made," she said, choosing her words carefully. "It was sad. There are mixed emotions. Some think one thing, some another."

"But in my heart I don't think they meant any harm to those boys. I think something happened that nobody thought could happen. With that many people out there, you need law enforcement.

"It was just an unfortunate affair."

The "facts" of the Lake Mexia episode are well known, largely misunderstood and certainly open to a variety of interpretation.

For starters, one might reasonably wonder why a 23-year-old deputy, a jailer and a probation officer were arresting people in the first place.

One could also question the wisdom of herding the suspects into a small boat, with a 600-pound capacity, for delivery to a sheriff's department command post across the lake.

Finally, and most importantly, how was it that the three officers survived and the three youths did not?

Two of the youngsters, Carl Baker, 19, and Stephen Booker, 19, reputedly were good swimmers. Anthony Freeman, 18, was not. Friends said he was "scared to death" of the water.

Baker and Freeman lived in Mexia. Booker, a former Mexia resident, lived in Dallas.

The "official" party that night included Kenny Elliott, 23, a white sheriff's deputy who refused to testify at a court of inquiry last week.

He invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, as did Kenneth Archie, a black reserve deputy and fulltime jailer.

The third man, David Drummond, an adult probation officer, provided the court the only eyewitness account of the arrest and subsequent drownings.

He said he accompanied the deputies into the park to purchase soft drinks and was merely an on-looker when Elliott arrested the youths on suspicion of marijuana possession.

Drummond said two of the youths were handcuffed together, but that the handcuffs were removed before or as soon as they got into the boat.

A number of people in and out of the courtroom insist the youngsters were handcuffed when they drowned, but autopsies indicated otherwise.

According to Drummond, and to statements Archie made that night, attempts were made to save the victims, and Freeman at least once was lifted atop the overturned boat, which was afloat.

He slipped off, they said. Officers Elliott and Drummond reached shore unassisted and Archie was rescued as he clung to the boat.

It was not until the following Sunday that the final body was recovered, and by then the office of Limestone County Sheriff Dennis Walker was under full-scale attack.

As someone pointed out, Walker, 41, looks like the Hollywood version of a Texas sheriff, but he's considerably brighter.

"I've seen him in some crisis situations, and he's always maintained perfect composure," said a state trooper who knows him well.

"He was a Houston cop, and a damn good one. He knows what he's doing, and he's super cool. And if he tells you something, you can believe it."

Until June 19, Walker had won a richly deserved reputation as a hard working, even-handed sheriff who, with limited men and money, had improved the office and its operations considerably.

"I'm not saying we're the best sheriff's department in the world, but we're a long ways from being the worst," Walker told a reporter late last week.

In his office in Groesbeck, county seat of Limestone county, Walker and his chief deputy, Bill Fletcher, reluctantly responded to the criticism stemming from June 19.

"We don't go over there (to the park) hunting for someone to arrest," Walker said. "We're there to police the crowd, to keep order, to preserve the peace."

"There's a lot of good people out there, and they're generally a quiet group. The problems over the years have been minimal."

"I can't recall ever making an arrest (at Juneteenth celebrations) and I've been on the grounds many times."

From talking with Walker, one thing is clear. Elliott did not go into the park with instructions to crack down on anyone breaking the law.

As a Groesbeck lawyer suggested, the Juneteenth celebration was in one respect similar to the state's most infamous bordello, the erstwhile Chicken Ranch at LaGrange.

"You know what's going on but as long as they stay in their own area, you tolerate it," he said. "Unfortunately, they didn't tolerate it this time."

Did the sheriff's young deputy act improperly by arresting the alleged lawbreakers?

"How do you instruct an officer not to do his sworn duty?" Walker replied.

Was Elliott perhaps overzealous? "I don't think that had anything to do with it," said the sheriff. "...I found no problem with the validity of the arrest."

Would he have made an arrest in the same situation?

"In my own mind I know, but I don't want to say anything that might hurt someone...I've never had to confront an open defiance of the law out there."

Walker said he has not yet talked at length with Elliott, who reportedly went into shock and was hospitalized after the drownings.

But the sheriff and others, including many blacks, insist there is no evidence that the officers acted with malice, or intended to hurt anyone.

"I want the truth, and that's all I want," said Walker.

A grand jury is expected to look into the case, probably in mid-July, and some expect more disclosures at that time.

Rains flood Dallas area

By The Associated Press

As much as an inch of rain an hour drenched the Dallas-Fort Worth area early Saturday, flooding a hospital basement and forcing police to close several freeways and streets.

The Dallas suburb of Garland recorded 5.3 inches of rain in the 24 hours ending Saturday morning, while 4.6 inches were reported in Fort Worth and 4.13 inches fell in Dallas.

No injuries or flooded homes were reported, although several motorists were rescued from streets where water was "car-door deep," a Dallas police dispatcher said.

Fort Worth's John Peter Smith Hospital began turning away patients after about 5 feet of water covered a tunnel below the building, knocking out two power generators.

The hospital was without air conditioning or lights and evacuations were possible if patients reacted adversely to 100-degree heat in their rooms, said public relations director Jane Woolf.

The hospital's trauma and intensive care units, as well as its operating rooms, were closed.

The Trinity River had risen from 12 feet to 26.9 feet by 8 a.m., and was expected to crest at 34 feet — four feet above flood stage — late Saturday.

White Rock Lake in northeast Dallas spilled from its banks and surrounding streets were closed for several hours Saturday morning, police said.

Parts of North Central Expressway and Stemmons Freeway, as well as several other streets, also were barricaded.

"The only way to get from the top of Dallas to downtown is on the (Dallas North) Tollway," said the dispatcher, who asked not to be identified. "Barricades are up all over town."

Slayings spark parade theme

ATLANTA (AP)—The slayings that have injected a somber note into countless Atlanta activities overshadowed another event Saturday—a horn-toting Fourth of July salute to the city's courage.

The theme of the Salute to America Parade, "Let's Keep Pulling Together, Atlanta," was reflected in floats, banners and songs urging pride in city and country.

Former President Carter and Charles W. Scott, a retired Army colonel and former hostage in Iran, were the parade's grand marshal and special guest.

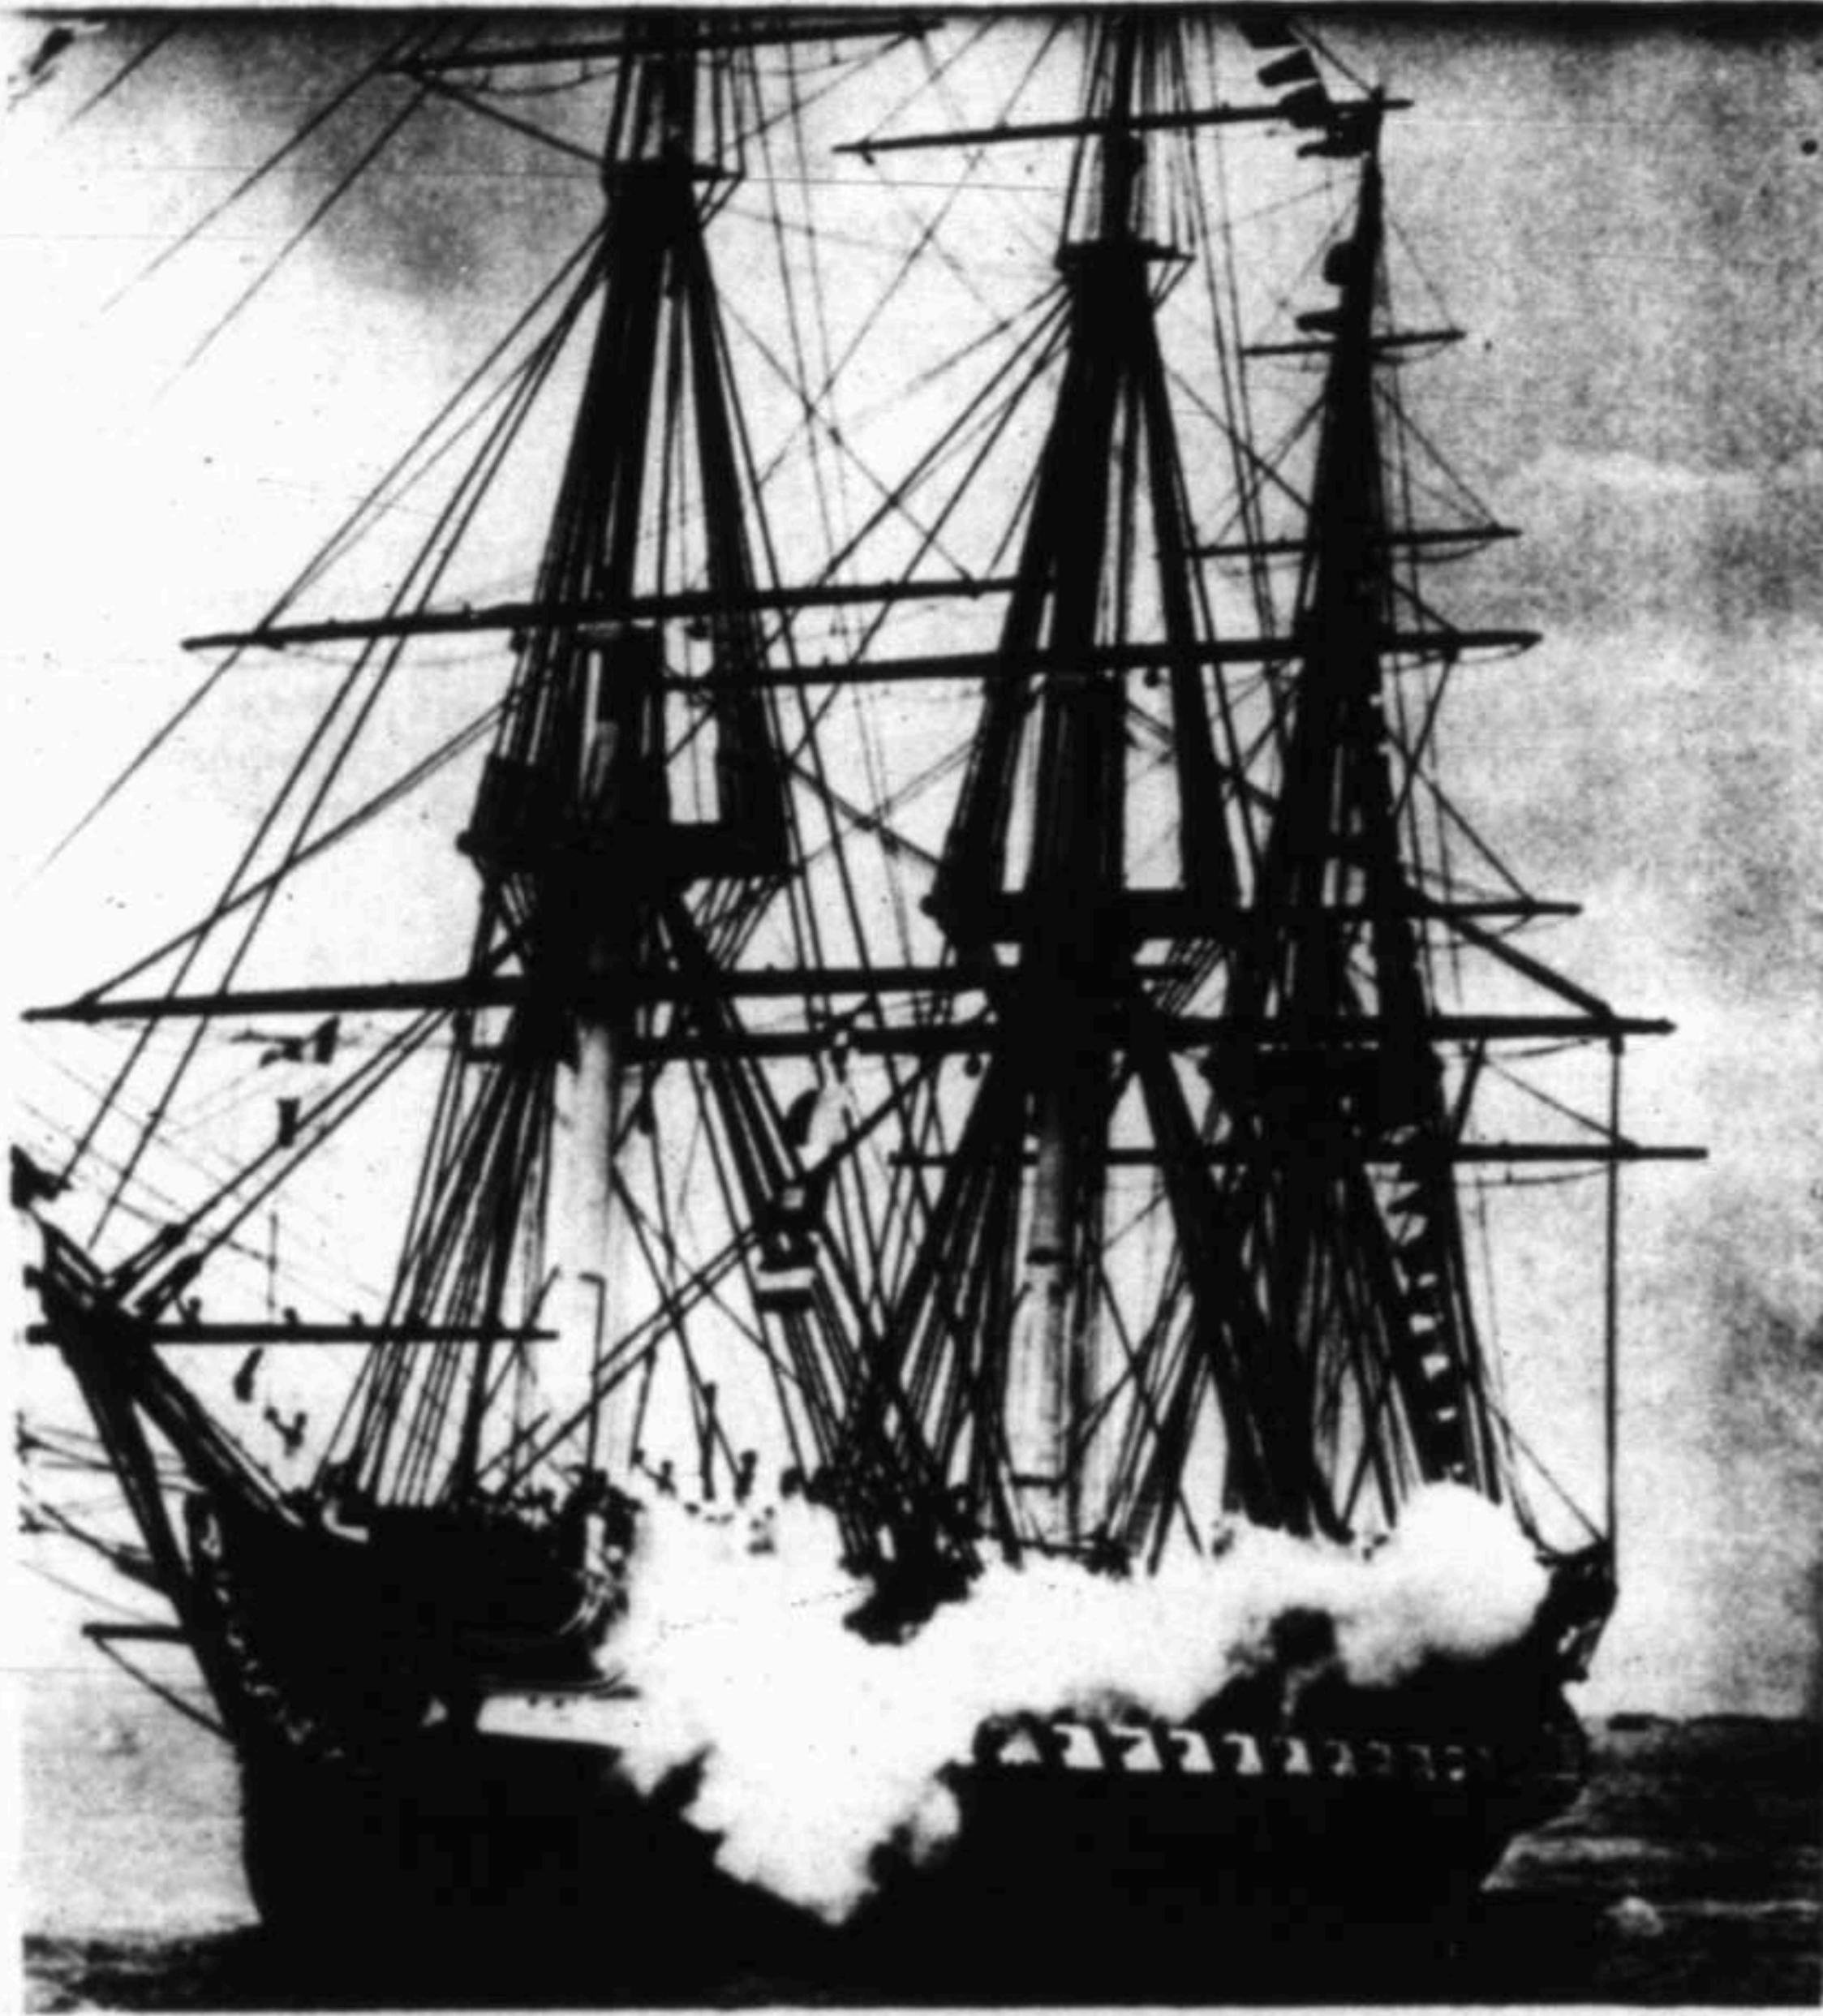

Asked about Atlanta's reaction to the killings, Scott said citizens "are unified—very much so." "I think it's been an indication of the maturity of the city's leadership. It is a horrible thing, but I think the leaders that people look up to have worked to keep things calm," the Stone Mountain resident said.

Atlanta's image-conscious business community has been distressed by publicity over the killings, and an ad campaign stressing the "pull together" theme recently was announced by the Chamber of Commerce and Coca-Cola Co.

The parade theme was "motivated more by the fact that we're losing tourism and business because of what's happened than it is by the deaths," said Patty Patton of WSB-TV. The local ABC affiliate sponsored the parade.

The parade was planned as "a celebration of Atlanta to demonstrate to ourselves, the nation and the world that our city and its people are doing just fine," said Lester Strong, WSB special projects manager.

A special police task force is investigating the slayings of 28 young blacks since July 1979. Wayne B. Williams, 23, has been charged with murder in the slaying of the most recent victim, but no other arrests have been made.

Holiday traffic kills 262

By The Associated Press

The nation's Fourth of July weekend traffic death toll topped 250 on Saturday, more than halfway through the three-day holiday period.

At 4 p.m. EDT, the number of people killed on the nation's highways stood at 262.

The National Safety Council estimated prior to the beginning of the Independence Day holiday that 450 to 550 people might be killed between 6 p.m. Thursday and midnight Sunday.

Council statisticians said 470 deaths could be expected during a similar non-holiday period at this time of the year.

Last year, 461 people died on the nation's roads during the three-day Fourth of July weekend.

The worst three-day Fourth of July weekend on record was in 1971, when 638 motorists were killed.

Adoption

fee raised

WASHINGTON (AP)—A decision to raise the fee for adopting wild horses and burros is expected to result in the slaughter of additional animals for which homes are not found, government officials say.

Charles Most, a spokesman for the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management, said Saturday he personally thinks a projection in one department memo that 6,000 additional animals will be killed next year is too high although annual slaughter figures could reach that level "over the long haul."

"It's just a projection, like economists try to project what the economy will do. I don't think we can verify it one way or another."

THE PROJECTION is based on the government rounding up 11,000 animals and only 5,000 of them being adopted. Most said he doubted the government could even corral 11,000 animals.

He acknowledged, however, that raising the adoption fee to $200 for a horse and $75 for a burro effective Oct. 1 is likely to cut down on the number of people who adopt the animals. Current fees range from nothing to $25 per animal.

On the other hand, said Most, the government plans more publicity on the adoption plan in hopes of finding more homes for the animals.

Report says U.S., P.L.O. have been negotiating

By DOYLE McMANUS
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Despite public pronouncements emphasizing that negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization are prohibited, the United States has been in secret contact with the PLO for at least seven years, holding discussions under four presidents from Richard Nixon to Ronald Reagan on subjects ranging from the safety of American diplomats to the chances for Middle East peace, the Los Angeles Times has learned.

The official policy of the United States is that it will not deal with the PLO as long as the guerrillas—"a gang of thugs," in President Reagan's words—refuse to recognize Israel's right to exist.

BUT THE TRUE PATTERN of U.S. intelligence operations and secret diplomacy has been quite the opposite. Beginning with clandestine talks initiated by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in 1974, according to well-placed sources in Washington and Beirut, the United States has been talking to the PLO more often than not. The Carter administration made two concerted attempts to bring the PLO into peace talks with Israel, carrying on extensive indirect negotiations with PLO chief Yasser Arafat. And, despite President Reagan's rhetorical condemnations of the Palestinian guerrillas, his administration has quietly continued low-level contacts with the PLO through both the Central Intelligence Agency and the U.S. Embassy in Beirut.

SOME OF THE TALKS have gone through a secret "back channel," an established line of communication between the CIA and the PLO intelligence organization, the "Jihaz al Rasd," or "Surveillance Department."

But there is a "front channel" too. The U.S. Embassy in Beirut has made direct contact with PLO officials several times for conversations on the security of the embassy, which is in a Palestinian-controlled area. According to some sources, those security talks have occasionally slipped into wide-ranging discussions of the situation in Lebanon. And the United States has negotiated indirectly with the PLO: President Carter carried on a long, secret round of talks through officials of several Arab countries to try to prod Arafat toward recognizing Israel, but failed.

Whether the United States talks with the PLO, and on what basis, are issues that go to the heart of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Most Palestinians—Arabs whose ancestors inhabited the land on which Israel stands—say they will accept no peace negotiations that do not include the PLO.

Many American diplomats in the Middle East maintain privately that no peace is possible without the participation of Arafat and his men. "It is not possible to get support for a settlement on the (Israeli-occupied) West Bank without the PLO," Harold Sanders, former assistant secretary of state, said recently, after he had left office.

Reagans celebrate Fourth with birthday picnic

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan celebrated the Fourth of July with a birthday barbeque for his wife, Nancy, at a Virginia plantation followed by a Gay Nineties picnic on the White House south lawn.

Mrs. Reagan, whose 58th birthday is Monday, was the guest of honor at the party for 78 persons hosted by longtime friends. The event was held under a white tent at Woodlawn Plantation in Mount Vernon, Va.

The party was thrown by two couples who have hosted Mrs. Reagan's birthday parties for the last 20 years: the Earle M. Jorgensens and the William A. Wilsons.

The guests, including Frank Sinatra, top members of the White House staff and other longtime friend of the Reagans, were dining on buffet that included fried chicken, chile, corn on the cob, and homemade strawberry ice cream.

Afterward, the president and his wife were flying by helicopter back to the White House to join an already-in-progress picnic with a Gay Nineties motif.

The president apparently was waiting until Monday to give his wife a birthday present, but the first lady reported through her press secretary Saturday that Reagan had ordered flowers delivered to her mother.

Each year the president makes it a practice to send flowers to Mrs. Reagan's mother to thank her for having her daughter, according to Sheila Patton Tate, the first lady's press secretary.

Mrs. Tate also said Mrs. Reagan had telephoned former first lady Bess Truman on Saturday to say she was glad she was recovering so well from her recent hospital stay for a broken hip and heart and kidney complications.

On the south lawn, about 2,000 White House staff members and their families were invited for games, a box lunch picnic, barbershop quartet entertainment and fireworks. A day-long downpour cleared as the picnic began.

In keeping with the Gay Nineties theme, suggested attire for men was white pants and blue blazers and high-necked dresses for women. However, Mrs. Reagan planned to wear a two-piece white outfit by Adolfo and she said the president would not dress in Gay Nineties attire.

Mrs. Tate said the cost of the picnic was "virtually nothing" since many American corporations had donated food, wine, picnic baskets, lawn games, paper products, balloons, straw hats, beer mugs and assorted other party accessories.

Artist Peter Max, who began a tradition in 1976 by painting a statue of liberty, was at the picnic, painting "Six Ladies of Liberty." He also judged a children's art contest.

John Sciopu, 67, waves a flag Saturday just before he and 523 other persons took the Naturalization Oath in Detroit's Hart Plaza. Sciopu is a native of Romania and first came to the United States in 1914.

Power tower toppling was sabotage

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A Utah Power & Light Co. tower carrying a 345,000-volt power line was chopped down by "saboteurs" Saturday, a company spokesman said, but there were no power outages.

Grant Pendleton, the spokesman, said the three-pole, 90-foot-high wooden structure was toppled by someone wielding a saw or ax. He said the company was considering the incident "an act of sabotage" and the FBI was investigating.

Actor dies of heart attack

RAMONA, Calif. (AP) — Actor Ross Martin, master of disguise as a frontier secret agent on the television series "The Wild Wild West," has died of a heart seizure while playing tennis. He was 61.

Martin had suffered a heart attack in 1969 but appeared in good health when he showed up to play tennis Friday, said tennis pro Keith Boone.

The gutsy crew of blind, deaf and crippled climbers who made history Friday with a successful ascent of 14,410-foot Mount Rainier posed for a summit photo. The climb was organized to dispel stereotypes about the limitations of handicapped people.

Handicapped climbers return to base

By JOHN MARLOW
Associated Press Writer

PARADISE, Wash. (AP) — A jubilant group of handicapped climbers returned from their conquest of 14,410-foot Mount Rainier on Saturday, applauded and cheered by well-wishers who lined the final snowy reaches of the trail.

The climbers reached Paradise Lodge at about 1 p.m. PDT, ending a trek that began Wednesday and climaxed two days later with nine handicapped people reaching the mountain's frozen summit.

But before they got back, the climbers faced a moment of terror on their descent when chunks of ice thundered down the mountain near a spot where 11 climbers lost their lives last month.

"We all reached our limits," said Richard Rose, 36, of Vancouver, Wash., an epileptic who triumphantly hollered, "There's one for the epileptics!" when he reached the summit. Jim Whittaker, expedition leader and the first American atop Mount Everest, said, "This mountain is a hard mountain ... We were lucky on two accounts. We had good weather and we had a hell of a team."

Justin McDewitt, 29, of Rosemont, Pa., who is blind, said, "It was an exhilarating experience... There were times when I just about gave up."

He added, "The outcome of this climb will be felt by disabled people all over the world to meet new challenges."

The nine handicapped climbers who reached the summit included five blind people, two who are deaf, an epileptic and a man with an artificial leg.

Originally, 11 handicapped climbers, seven guides and expedition officials and two reporters set out on the climb, but two climbers did not join the assault on the peak.

Congress ready to heed Reagan's call

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Like a drug addict ready to go cold turkey, Congress is poised to heed President Reagan's call to end its spending habit with an abrupt, painful package of cuts in more than 250 programs ranging from school lunches to pensions.

The president used his inaugural address Jan. 20 to begin pushing for Congress to slash spending across the breadth of government to spur the economy.

"It is time to check and reverse the growth of government which shows signs of having grown beyond the consent of the governed," Reagan said.

JUST OVER five months later, the Republican-controlled Senate has passed a package of $38.5 billion in 1982 cuts and the Democratic-controlled House, after bitter parliamentary wrangling, has voted for a package estimated at between $35.6 billion and $38.2 billion.

What has emerged is tentative congressional endorsement of reductions roughly parallel to the $34.6 billion recommended by Reagan in February and March.

Some of the changes have been under discussion for years. The surprise is that so many have been acted upon so rapidly.

THE MOVES affect every facet of government, trimming or killing scores of politically popular aid programs that Congress has been creating since President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal.

"I think the president has done a masterful job in trying to move us, nudge us and shove us in a direction that we should go," Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., said on the House floor, "but the truth is that we are about to respond to the needs of the people of this country, crying to give us new directions, and it is going to hurt."

"WE ARE at the point now where we somehow have got to get the narcotic needle out of the arm. You know that is painful. We know that we are going to have to struggle with it, and yet we know that it has got to be done."

Reflecting the feelings of many House members, Edwards said the real purpose of the exercise was "to somehow pick this country up and shake it a little and reverse the direction in which we have been going."

The outcome in the Senate had been anticipated given its GOP majority ready to carry out the president's wishes.

New York's Route 207 officially now to be called Freedom Road

NEWBURGH, N.Y. (AP) — New York's Route 207 is now, officially, Freedom Road.

More than 100 officials and residents gathered in New Windsor Friday to dedicate a marker commemorating the route taken in January by the American hostages returning from Iran.

The hostages were traveling from Newburgh's Stewart Airport to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

Fireworks seized in California raid

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Enough fireworks to blow up several houses were seized in a raid on a Sunset District home, police said.

A 22-year-old man was arrested and two tons of firecrackers were seized, police said. They said David Seto, who was cited on a misdemeanor charge of unlawful possession of fireworks for sale, was released pending appearance in court.

Judge awards man $1.8 million

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — A 43-year-old man has been awarded $1.8 million in damages after both his legs were crushed in a 1976 beating by four workers at a nuclear plant construction site near Monroe.

Oakland County Circuit Judge Hilda R. Gage ordered the four to pay $750,000 plus $1 million in exemplary damages to Alfred L. Sowles.

Sowles, a work supervisor at the site of Detroit Edison Co.'s Enrico Fermi nuclear generating plant, spent 11 months recuperating from the attack.

No problems reported at reactor

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — No problems were reported Saturday, the first full day nuclear fuel was loaded into Unit 2 of the Sequoyah Nuclear Plant, officials said.

"Everything is on schedule," Tennessee Valley Authority spokesman Steve Goldman said. "There are no significant problems."

CREATIVE FINANCING—THE BLANKET MORTGAGE

When mortgage money is tight, lending institutions are more selective in the loans they make. Here a blanket mortgage may be the answer.

Under the terms of a blanket loan, the lender is generally required to release individual properties from the loan as the mortgage is reduced by specific amounts. Thus, when the purchaser sells his first home, the blanket mortgage will be reduced accordingly.

Blanket mortgages can be very beneficial to a buyer who wishes to purchase a new home but has not yet sold his current home. He may be able to obtain a blanket mortgage that covers both the new and old home. He can then rent his current home to help meet the high payments the blanket loan will require.

If you have any questions on this subject or any other aspect of real estate, feel free to phone or drop in at DON HARVEY Realtors, 702 Andrews Hwy., Phone 683-5333. We're here to help! Come in for your free copy of "Home or Living" magazine.

Americans eat buffalo burgers

By Associated Press

The Fourth of July: A day for buffalo burgers, camel rides and that rarity in China—a Big Mac. That was the fare for thousands of Americans living abroad who attended Independence Day celebrations in foreign capitals.

The tradition of hot dogs and hamburgers between softball games and fireworks was served up at the celebrations, most of them arranged by U.S. diplomatic missions.

Some places, however, had to improvise.

In New Delhi, where cows are considered sacred by India's Hindus, some 300 Americans congregated at the U.S. Embassy's softball field to munch on buffalo burgers. For the kids, in lieu of a pony, there was an elephant to provide rides.

Camels provided the entertainment in Islamabad, Pakistan, where 300 Americans celebrated the Fourth of July on the grounds of the gutted U.S. Embassy, which was destroyed during anti-American riots in November 1979.

"The camel rides are an Islamabad tradition," said James P. Thurber, the embassy's public affairs officer.

Despite intermittent monsoon downpours, the fireworks went off on schedule. But, Thurber said, "The thunder drowned out some of the fireworks."

The weather cooperated for Americans in the southern Chinese province of Guangdong, but finding American food was something else.

A McDonald's restaurant in Hong Kong came to the rescue. It sent food to Canton's Donfang Hotel along with representatives to demonstrate the proper way to cook a Big Mac. Back in Hong Kong, 750 Americans downed 1,000 giant sized hotdogs and 2,000 hamburgers.

"It's great to be among Americans," Bill Jones, a middle-aged businessman from Durham, N.C., said at a Fourth of July picnic under palm and cypress trees in Rome. Between 2,000 and 3,000 Americans ate hot dogs and hamburgers instead of spaghetti for the day, and drank American brands of beer that they can't ordinarily find in Italy. Many played softball and tossed Frisbees, or just basked under a hot sun on the grounds of an American high school on the northern outskirts of the city.

The American Club of Rome and United Services Organization set up the picnic and arranged for U.S. comics to be on sale.

An "authentic Texas barbecue" of hickory smoked beef and a home-made sauce highlighted the festivities at Paris' "The Studio" nightclub. Music was provided by a country band called The Transcontinental Cowboys.

Another restaurant, Mother Earth's, held an outdoor picnic near the Pompidou Center with barbecued ribs and watermelons.

For the more high-brow, there was an American festival Friday and Saturday nights in western Paris featuring music by George Gershwin and jazz concerts.

All was not fun and games, however.

In Denmark, several hundred young Danes, described by main speaker Pat Boone as "children who need spanking," interrupted the annual Rebild Festival Saturday with the Fourth of July celebration's largest anti-American demonstration in years.

Mediators return to Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Arab mediators credited with easing tensions in the besieged city of Zahle returned to Lebanon on Saturday for further efforts to end fighting between Christian militias and Syrian troops.

As the mediators met for the third time in less than a month, Syria threatened to impose a "military solution" on Lebanon's right-wing Christian Phalange party, whose militias have battled Syrian troops in Zahle and Beirut since April 1.

The Tishrin newspaper in Damascus, Syria, official voice of President Hafez Assad's pro-Soviet regime, said Saturday the Arab mediators' meeting is "the last chance" for the Phalange to cut its ties with Israel.

"The military solution against the Phalangists is a decision which will be implemented according to the interests of Lebanon, Syria and the Arab nation," Tishrin said in a front page editorial. "Each time an attempt is made to achieve entente (unity) in Lebanon, the Phalangists torpedo it."

Syria has 22,000 troops in Lebanon under an Arab League mandate to police the 1975-76 civil war armistice between the rightist Christians and leftist Moslems and their Palestinian allies.

Phalangist leaders have acknowledged receiving arms from Israel to counter what they say is a Syrian military occupation army supporting Palestinian guerrillas operating in Lebanon. But they deny having a political alliance with the Jewish state.

Canada to send gifts

OTTAWA (AP) — A

roomful of antique Canadian furniture, including a four-poster bed, will be Canada's major wedding gift to Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer.

The gift was supposed to be a secret until closer to the July 29 wedding date but word leaked out this week from Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's office.

Colonel Georges Bernier, director of state ceremony who helped choose the gift, was not pleased that the secret was out before the prime minister's office could make the announcement as planned July 16.

"I'm terribly annoyed," he said.

'Subversives' arrested

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — State police discovered the Libyan Embassy here hired a number of Sudanese and Chadian nationals to carry out "subversive activities" in Sudan, the daily Al-Sahafa reported Saturday.

Arrests were made before the unspecified plots could be executed, the paper said. It gave few details, but said the Libyan Embassy was "planning subversive activities in the country and had recruited a number of Sudanese and Chadian nationals to carry out those plots in return for high payment."

The Libyan Embassy here was closed and all Libyan diplomats expelled June 25 after a bomb explosion at the Chadian Embassy killed two people and injured two others.

Sudanese authorities accused Libya of being behind the blast.

Irish hunger strikers may compromise

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)—Irish nationalist guerrillas on hunger strike in Maze prison said Saturday they are willing to compromise with the British government in an effort to avoid further starvation deaths, their supporters said.

British officials immediately responded by allowing a Roman Catholic delegation to visit the eight current hunger strikers, a government spokesman said.

The delegation declined to make any comment after leaving the Maze, where the members talked to some of the hunger strikers and other prisoners for four hours.

The eight hunger strikers, one near death, are fasting for special privileges that amount to political prisoner status for jailed Irish nationalist guerrillas.

"Comrades of ours have died and eight of our other comrades presently face death on hunger strike," the prisoners said in a statement. "Our people on the outside have died, and more may die. That is why we seek immediate talks. It is a reasonable request."

The lengthy statement was issued through the Maze H-Block Committee, named after the prison's shape and acting as official spokesman for the hundreds of jailed nationalists.

In it, the guerrillas conceded the British government's principal argument that they should not receive preferential treatment. They asked Saturday that the treatment they demand be afforded to all prisoners.

The five demands include exemption from prison work, the right to wear civilian clothes and to associate freely among themselves, a 50 percent remission of their sentences and more mail and visits.

Four masked abductors kidnap card-playing Italian businessman

TURIN, Italy (AP)—Four masked gunmen pistol-whipped a 61-year-old businessman and kidnapped him from the cafe where he was playing cards, police said Saturday.

Authorities said the abductors of Lorenzo Crosetto were probably common criminals despite reports from a jailed Red Brigades terrorist that the urban guerrilla group had once considered kidnapping him.

Crosetto, who owns a local construction company in this northern Italian city, was arrested last December and held for several days in connection with a huge oil tax scandal. He was kidnapped Friday.

Portugal to raise minimum wage

LISBON, Portugal (AP)—Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemão has announced plans to raise the minimum wage, now equivalent to $141 a month, and to increase government pensions.

Addressing the nation for 20 minutes on national television and radio Friday night, the center-right Social Democrat leader also said Portugal would continue to press for entry into the Common Market and called for closer contacts with the Arab world and Portugal's former colonies in Africa.

Gunmen ambush Thai police van

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Heavily armed gunmen ambushed a police van, killing five people and wounding seven others before fleeing with a cache of police weapons, the daily Bangkok World reported Saturday.

The newspaper said the police team was en route to crack down on log poaching in Phetchabun province, 250 miles north of here, when they were attacked Friday. Four of the five people slain were police, the paper said, adding that a similar attack left three police dead four months ago.

The terrorists fled with the police weapons, including an M-79 grenade launcher, three M-16 machine guns, three rifles, pistols and hand grenades, the newspaper reported.

Peking factory worker sentenced

PEKING (AP)—A Peking chemical factory worker has been sentenced to six months detention for putting up wall posters slandering a woman neighbor, the Peking Daily reported Saturday.

The paper said the woman took the wall posters to a local court last December, where the case was heard in closed session.

Rome police arrest suspected terrorists

ROME (AP) — Anti-terrorist police said Saturday they have confirmed that urban guerrilla groups despite ideological differences, share information, trade arms and give first-aid to one another's wounded.

Police said 45 suspected left-wing terrorists have been apprehended in the past two months and caches of submachine guns, rifles, pistols and ammunition were found in raids. They said the investigations related to the arrests confirmed earlier suspicions about a network of intelligence and cooperation between the various groups.

The arrests came in connection with a string of attacks in Rome and other Italian cities, including the hit-and-run deaths of a lawyer and two magistrates over the past two years, anti-terrorist police said.

Police said those arrested belong to the left-wing terrorist groups Front Line, Fighting Communist Units, Revolutionary Communist Movement and several smaller groups.

Tass rejects Afghan proposal

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The state-run Soviet press on Saturday rejected a European Common Market proposal aimed at getting Soviet troops out of Afghanistan.

The rejection came on the eve of a visit by British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, who is scheduled to discuss the plan with Soviet leaders.

The official Soviet news agency Tass denounced proposed negotiations because they would exclude the Soviet-backed Afghan regime.

It said Western leaders, in backing the Common Market plan, "want to resolve Afghanistan's domestic affairs without its legitimate representatives, behind the back of the Afghan people."

"SOME POLITICIANS in the West continue to assert that it is possible to hold negotiations on settling the situation which has developed around Afghanistan on the basis of the so-called 'EEC initiative,' although it is absolutely clear that this initiative cannot serve as a basis for talks and no one is going to hold such talks with them," Tass said in a dispatch from Vienna.

Even before the Tass commentary, British and other Western diplomats held out little hope that Carrington would be able to sway Kremlin leaders to accept the European proposal, endorsed by Common Market leaders last Tuesday in Luxembourg.

Asked if Soviet leaders had indicated they would be responsive to the proposal, a top British diplomat here said, "Frankly, no."

THE INITIATIVE, he said, demonstrates continued Western concern over Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan and offers Moscow a way out. The Soviet Union moved troops into its southern neighbor in December 1979, prompting the Carter administration to embargo grain shipments to the Soviets and call for a boycott of the summer Olympic games in Moscow.

"The Soviets have said they are seeking a political solution to the international situation around Afghanistan, including their own military involvement, and the Common Market proposal presents them with the opportunity for such a solution," said the diplomat, who asked not to be named.

The EEC plan calls for a two-stage international conference. The first would try to negotiate a withdrawal of the estimated 85,000 to 100,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan as well as guarantees of Western non-interference in the country. Afterward, the participants would work toward an internationally acceptable government for Afghanistan.

PARTICIPANTS WOULD be the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council — China, France, Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union — as well as Pakistan, India, Iran and representatives of the Afghan people.

Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko was slated to greet Carrington late Sunday night when the Briton arrives in Moscow, and to conduct talks and host a lunch for him Monday. Carrington is scheduled to leave Monday night.

The Tass commentary said "Western politicians seeking to resolve the Afghan question in this way must be reminded that all attempts to talk with Afghanistan in the language of force or to interfere in its domestic affairs are senseless."

"THE ONLY TRUE path for a settlement of the situation around Afghanistan is contained in the political program advanced by the DRA (Democratic Republic of Afghanistan) government on May 14, 1980," it said. That proposal calls upon Afghanistan's neighbors, Iran and Pakistan, to recognize and negotiate with the Soviet-backed Afghan regime, and stipulates guarantees for an end to alleged U.S. and Chinese interference before withdrawal of Soviet troops from the central Asian nation.

New leaders emerge in Hanoi

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam government broadcasts reported Saturday that Truong Chinh, disgraced in the 1950s for his bloody attempts at land reform, was elected chairman of Vietnam's new Council of State as part of a government restructuring. The official Voice of Vietnam, monitored in Bangkok, also reported other members of the old guard of Vietnam's communist government were given new posts under a new constitution patterned after its Soviet allies.

The radio announced that Premier Pham Van Dong would head a Council of Ministers and that acting President Nguyen Huu Tho was elected chairman of the National Assembly.

The broadcast also said that Chinh had been elected as chairman of a five-member National Defense Council.

The constitution mandating the changes was adopted Dec. 18, 1980.

Chinh, 73, has long been regarded as the second most powerful figure in Vietnam, after Communist Party chief Le Duan, as well as the chief ideologist. Like most of Vietnam's veteran leaders he helped in the founding of the Indochinese Communist Party in 1930 and played a major role in wars against the Japanese, the French and the Americans.

In the mid-1950s, however, he suffered a period of disgrace following "agrarian reforms," which saw the execution of thousands of landlords and rich peasants in an initial attempt to set up collective agriculture in North Vietnam.

The constitution says the 13-member Council of State is the "highest continuously functioning body of the National Assembly and the collective presidency of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam." It is given a broad range of specific powers and is placed above the Council of Ministers which handles the daily functions of government.

The announcement did not list the full members of the new Council of State, but gave the names of eight vice chairmen answerable to Dong, who has served as premier since 1954. There had been some speculation that Dong would step down because of illness.

Tank sale splits Austrian government

By HARRY TRIMBORN
The Los Angeles Times

VIENNA, Austria — Government approval of the sale of 57 tank destroyers to Argentina has split the ruling Socialist Party and triggered widespread public debate over whether this small neutral nation should even be involved in the weapons trade.

The government of Chancellor Bruno Kreisky supports such sales on grounds that they will lower weapons procurement costs for the Austrian armed forces through the economies of volume manufacturing while providing employment in the country's long-established $60-million-a-year arms industry.

Critics contend that there are more morally acceptable ways to provide employment and some even question the need for Austria to maintain armed forces.

They note that Austria lies wedged between the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact nations and those of the West's North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

"What could tiny Austria's small (37,000-man) armed force do if the two superpower alliances decide to go to war?" Josef Cap, leader of the Socialist Party's youth wing, asked rhetorically. "All we really need is a border police and gendarmerie."

White House denies report

By ELLEN HUME
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — White House and Department of State officials Saturday strongly denied a report that the Reagan administration is considering returning the U.S. Naval base at Guantanamo to Cuban control, in return for Cuba's taking back more than 1,200 Cuban exiles being detained in the United States.

"It's not an option," said Department of State spokesman Joseph Reap, calling the report in Saturday's Washington Star "totally inaccurate." He said the Department of State is "denying vehemently" the Star's report.

White House spokesman Sue Mathis also called the Star story "absolutely false," and said there was no plan to return the 31-square-mile base on the eastern end of Cuba to the control of the Cuban government.

Mathis did not completely rule out, however, the possibility that some of the Cuban refugees currently detained at Ft. Chafee, Ark., and at Atlanta, Ga. might be sent to Guantanamo, where they would remain under U.S. guard.

Many of the incarcerated refugees, among an estimated 125,000 Cubans who came to the United States by boat last year, remain in federal custody because of mental or physical problems or criminal backgrounds. Cuba's President Fidel Castro has been unwilling to take them back, and pending court suits may force the United States to release them into American society at large unless they are deported.

Although they came here illegally, U.S. officials said that the Cubans are under a special dispensation. Mathis said that some action on the special Cuban exile problem may be taken soon, possibly as early as next week.

Middle America pauses to pledge allegiance to the flag on July 4th.

For the red, white & blue

Hats aloft, two youths stand still just long enough for Mom to capture the moment for a lifetime.

"Everyone who wants chewing gum, come and get into the wagon." The bribe didn't work. Any other time it might have, but Saturday at the Museum of the Southwest, there was just too much activity, too many interesting things to see and explore for two pre-schoolers to be swayed by a mere piece of gum.

It took force. Both had to be picked up and put back into the wagon. After all, it was almost time. The parade was due to start in less than a minute.

Once the wagon was in motion, both settled into the swing of becoming a part of the 18th annual July 4th Sidewalk Parade, sponsored by the Col. Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. This year, for the first time, it was held on the museum grounds.

Immediately following the block-long parade, which concluded in the museum driveway, Mrs. Clarence Kerth of the DAR welcomed the parade-goers to the 205th birthday of the United States of America. Two scouts from Boy Scout Troop No. 162 raised the flag. Following the pledge of allegiance, the Midland Community-College Band, packed sardine fashion onto the museum's front porch, played the national anthem, with Martha Lewis leading the singing.

Following "Daisy, Daisy," "Grand Old Flag," "Yankee Doodle Dandy," and "Happy Birthday," the long awaited moment arrived. It was time to find out the winners.

First place in the pre-school category went to Tom Warmbrodt; second to Glenn and Diane Welling; third to Alissa and Garrett Sutton; and honorable mentions to Jason Fernandes, James Nagbabi and Ryan Roberts.

In grades one through three, first place went to David Boles; second to Joe Warmbrodt; third to Cynthia Nichols; and honorable mentions to Max Weimmer and Heather Logan.

In grades four through six, first place went to Jamie Dodson and Ben Fay; second to Jennifer, Jason and Jana Curl; third to Stephanie, Stacey and Curtis Parson; honorable mention to Chrissy Wimmer.

A special Ms. Ellaneous prize was awarded to Joan Hellen, museum director.

Other prizes awarded Saturday went to winners of the sidewalk art contest sponsored by the museum. Winners in the pre-school category were Angela Koegler and Trish Gleason; grades one through three, Bobbie Dow and Jeff Sublet; and grades four through six, Anna Laura Berberan and Kristin Wilson.

Following the presentation of awards, members of the Midland Kiwanis Club kept the children occupied playing games. Perhaps the one most enjoyed by all there was the last game. It was a water balloon volley — back and forth — children to adults. It was difficult to tell which was which, or who won. But no one cared: All were just having fun.

The New Deal is dead, and the Age of the New Beginning has dawned.

It's a new political era in Washington, says Tom Loeffler of the 21st Congressional District, and the new age is just beginning to poke its head above the horizon.

Loeffler could become Midland's congressman if the shift proposed by the State Legislature is approved in an upcoming special session. That redistricting plan involves taking Midland out of the 19th District, which is represented by Democrat Kent Hance of Lubbock, and allowing the lines of the 21st to sprawl around the Tall City.

In anticipation of that plan passing, Loeffler visited Midland and its leaders last week to get a handle on the city. In an interview with The Reporter-Telegram, Loeffler reflected on the new breed of congressmen and the mood changes of the country and how those "threads" are weaving a new fabric of legislation.

ONLY INTO HIS second term as a congressman, Loeffler first made the trek to Washington along with other new Texas faces, including those of Democrats Hance and Phil Gramm. Already Loeffler holds a key controlling position in the House — that of Deputy Republican Whip. And his place on the powerful Appropriations Committee adds more steam to the "threading" machine.

Conceding that his crystal ball is "hazy" and not up to guaranteeing his forecasts, Loeffler "sees" the era of the New Deal fading fast.

"We're looking into a new era of political history. The New Beginning is alive and growing; the New Deal is out."

The weavers of both economic programs were similar men, in Loeffler's view. The difference lies in their political philosophy: Franklin Delano Roosevelt was a Democrat who brought forth the New Deal. Ronald Reagan is a Republican who is putting out the steam to see his economic program pass Congress.

"President Roosevelt was an excellent communicator," compares Loeffler. "Reagan is an excellent communicator. Roosevelt was an excellent communicator to Congress, and so is Reagan. Roosevelt's economic programs had to support the Republicans and Democrats, and so do Reagan's."

"Each president came into their first administration when the economy was in chaos, and each came forward with a broad and far-reaching program."

The threads of the fabric in Reagan's economic program have caught the attention of Congress, with the resulting clash focusing on its weave. For the rest of this session, Loeffler sees the main thrust of Congress on "restoring economic recovery and defense capabilities."

"You cannot expect change overnight," he cautions. "The president said it will come in inches and feet, not miles. The (flailing) economic situation didn't come about within two or three days. It's been building for decades."

The first sign of recovery should come in 1984 with a balanced budget, according to Loeffler. And next will come tax relief.

"AS WE BEGIN to stem deficit spending and have a balanced budget, we can anticipate the beginning of relief from excessive inflation and high unemployment," he says.

In fact, the indicators are beginning to reflect a change with inflation dropping, he notes. However, for unemployment to come down appreciably, the economy must become strong "to provide a real and lasting job for every American who wants to work."

Loeffler's role as a voice for the president's program is not new to him. In Gerald Ford's administration, the Texan worked as a liaison with the Southern Coalition — the group of congressmen that is today obtaining notoriety as the swing vote on Reagan's programs.

"Back then, we needed a bi-partisan coalition to sustain vetoes" to keep spending by Congress down to a minimum. "Now, we're in a position to be part of positive policy making."

He likens the progress of Reagan's economic package to the three major horse races. To date, the package has streaked by the finish line in first place at the Kentucky Derby and Preakness. It now is preparing for the Belmont Stakes — the third jewel in the Triple Crown.

The newer congressmen — and especially the Democrats — haven't proven difficult in enticing them to step over the fence to support the president's program, says Loeffler. "They more adequately reflect the mandate of the American people voiced last November. And those who have been in Congress for a long period of time are shifting. They've come to find that the New Deal didn't solve the problems and are making necessary switches. The key votes on the budget and reconciliation budget show that Congress has changed its thrust."

THE MOST DIFFICULT congressman to convince, however, has been Speaker of the House Tip

New era on the horizon

"We're looking into a new era of political history. The New Beginning is alive and growing; the New Deal is out."

— Rep. Tom Loeffler

O'Neill, a Democrat from Massachusetts. Loeffler attributes O'Neill's stubbornness to the New Deal, a philosophical cloth the longtime congressman hates to shed.

"Tip O'Neill has been a New Dealer from the beginning," explains Loeffler. "While he recognizes the mandate of the people last November, he won't give up his support for the New Deal. He says the program submitted by the president doesn't take care of the less fortunate people."

But that's not so, counters Loeffler. Reagan's program "will make more money available, will reduce waste, fraud and disincentive."

Reagan's program also will dramatically increase defense spending and that is an area that has Loeffler's full support. He failed to watch a recent CBS News five-part series on the military, but says that he had been briefed in the past 2½ years on the inadequacies of the military reflected in those broadcasts.

"I'm aware of the shortage of personnel and quality of life in the military, of the need for enhanced strategic arms and lack of spare parts," he says. "That's why it's essential we move ahead in an efficient manner. Defense spending is scheduled to be increased by 7 percent in real terms over the next five years."

Once the budget and tax cut package is on the president's desk, the House still has other matters to consider.

Although it's the Senate that approves appointments, Loeffler sees the vacancy on the Supreme Court created by the recent retirement of one of the justices easily could be filled by a woman for the first time in history.

"To have a woman on the Supreme Court would be fine with me," he says with a slight smile. "If we don't get a woman in this instance, I would suspect the next vacancy would be assured of a woman."

"But I do want to see that we have a justice on the Supreme Court bench who is a strict constructionist of the Constitution...that the Supreme Court does not legislate or implement laws."

Looking closer to home territory, Loeffler says he and Hance are still pushing for elimination of the Windfall Profits Tax on oil producers or a 1,000 barrel exemption for royalty owners. A senator, he says, has introduced a legislation to allow an exemption for newly discovered oil.

"That gives me concern," he says. "The 1,000 barrel exemption would be across the board. This other is only for new oil."

TEXAS AND OTHER states in the Sunbelt area have been attracting people from other parts of the country like flies to honey. While that spurt in population has its good points, Loeffler also foresees another major problem cropping up in the future: water.

"The problem with an influx of people into the Southwest and West is going to be water," he forecasts. "We have our energy crisis that we are beginning to stem and we are trying to bring around alternate sources of energy."

"But one thing we won't have is an alternate source for water. It's a problem throughout the West and the 21st District."

That district of Loeffler's stretches from North San Antonio and barely misses including Midland as its northern boundary. But it goes westward to Fort Stockton, encompassing a land mass larger than Pennsylvania.

The wide variety of needs reflected in the 21st District gives Loeffler flexibility as a congressman. "You're not limited to a rural position or urban; you must represent both the rural and metropolitan position." And as a result of the wide range of experience, "your legislative success over the years will be much greater."

That "success," though, isn't enough to make him consider running for a higher-ranking position, such as the Senate, anytime soon. But he does have plans to stay on in the House.

With a slight laugh, he answers, "I love ranching, but I also love the kind of work I'm doing now. I hope to stay in Congress as long as the people re-elect me...and my wife allows it."

THANKS TO ELK PRESTIQUE® SHINGLES, RE-ROOFING DOESN'T HAVE TO BE A RIP OFF

Until recently, if you had an old wood shingle roof and you wanted to change, you literally had to "rip-off" the wood shingles first. If you didn't, you'd wind up with a lumpy, bumpy roof that wasn't very attractive.

Now there's Elk Prestique laminated fiberglass shingles. Because Prestique has a thicker dimension than ordinary shingles, and a random overlay pattern like wood shingles, you can have it installed right on top of your old wood shingles and save the expense of the "rip-off".

And, in case you thought you still had to replace wood with wood, you should know that a recent state law changed all that. Now you don't have to replace one fire hazard with another fire hazard!

With Elk Prestique, you can replace wood with the look of wood, and get a Class "A" rating for fire resistance from the U.L.

too. Elk Prestique also has the only 30 year limited warranty in the industry, and that says a lot about how we make them!

You can get a free, no obligation, estimate on re-roofing your home with Elk Prestique just by calling this toll-free number:

ODESSA — Registration for The University of Texas at the Permian Basin's second summer term is scheduled at the Office of Admissions July 13.

UTPB Director of Admissions Robert Warmann said registration procedures have been changed for the summer term.

"Many of our second summer term students registered during the first summer session registration early this summer," Warmann said. "However, those students who are not currently registered in summer courses may register at the admissions office window Monday, July 13."

Registration hours are 9 a.m. to noon and 2 to 7 p.m. Students who have already chosen first summer term courses may add second summer term courses to their current summer elections.

In addition, office hours will be extended July 14-17 to accommodate those students who register late. "The registrar's staff will be on hand to handle registration changes of course elections from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on July 17," Warmann noted.

The hike took five days to complete, and all but one of the 512 Marines finished with the battalion.

Marine Pvt. Julian N. Ortiz Jr., son of Gloria N. Ortiz of Odessa, has completed recruit training at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego.

During the 11-week training cycle, he learned the basics of battlefield survival. He was introduced to the typical daily routine that he will experience during his enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

He participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills, including first aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

Marine Cpl. Randy J. Reeves, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond D. Reeves of Andrews, and whose wife, Elsie, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfonso Jimenez also of Andrews, recently participated in desert training at the Marine Corps Air/Ground Combat Center, Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif.

He is a member of the 2nd Battalion, 11th Marines, based at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

The training included live-firing of the battalion's 105 and 155mm howitzers during day and night operations, and relocating their artillery pieces while maintaining a combat ready status enroute to new locations.

Traffic argument ends in death

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — One man was shot to death and another wounded Saturday in an argument on a beach crowded by thousands of Fourth of July holiday funseekers at this South Texas island resort.

Authorities said a 30-year-old Brownsville man fired into a small group of beachgoers at Andy Bowie State park. The man had yelled obscenities at the group as he drove by in his truck, then became stuck in beach sand. He left the pickup truck and fired into the group, investigators said.

Young victim of street violence buried

TORRINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Gerard Coury's burial was peaceful and quiet, like most of his life but unlike his horrifying death.

Coury, who died last week at age 26 after he was chased by some "street people" to a New York subway station in Times Square, was buried Friday in a flower-laden casket in a Torrington cemetery.

About 40 relatives and friends attended the morning ceremonies at St. Maron's Church and St. Francis Cemetery.

Coury, a former high school honor student and athlete, was chased into the subway station around dawn on June 27 and died after touching an electrified rail as a jeering crowd looked on, authorities reported.

Hospital files application

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Malone-Hogan Hospital Inc. of Big Spring has applied to the Texas Health Facilities Commission to acquire a hemodialysis machine for treatment of in-patients experiencing acute renal failure.

The THFC also has received an application from Odessa Women's and Children's Hospital to acquire cardiac monitoring equipment to permit monitoring of four patient beds from the nurses station.

Persons wishing to protest the applications may do so by filing as formal parties to the applications.

If protests are received, public hearings will be held on the applications. If no protests are received, the applications may be referred to THFC voting sessions without hearings.

Tax board to hold seminar

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Property Tax Board will hold a seminar in Midland July 17 to help local taxing authorities comply with state laws requiring "truth in taxation."

The Midland seminar is one of a series of 13 one-day seminars the board will conduct across the state to discuss requirements of the truth-in-taxation statute.

The seminars also will provide local tax officials with an overview of the laws and proposed constitutional amendments affecting property taxation which were enacted by the 67th Legislature during the recent session.

The Midland seminar will be held in the Allison Fine Arts Building Auditorium at Midland College.

Male gypsy moths still love him

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — E. Alan Cameron just can't seem to get away from his work.

Several years after his last known contact with a synthetic chemical that sexually attracts gypsy moths, Cameron himself has become the object of desire of some males of the species.

They woo him at his office window. They flutter about him at garden parties. They cling to his pants at family picnics.

"It's embarrassing, but it's rather amusing," the Penn State University entomologist said. "It's not like I walk down the street with clouds and clouds of them swarming around me. But they do show some obvious interest."

Apparently his body has become "contaminated" with disparlure, the sex attractant given off by female gypsy moths, Cameron said.

Cameron worked with disparlure in the early 1970s on a Department of Agriculture research project aimed at gypsy moth control. According to Cameron, the disparlure tests failed to control the next year's moth population.

"Over the years, all of us that have worked with disparlure have laughed about ourselves being so sexy and attractive," he said.

If the attention persists, Cameron plans to run tests to see if his body has been contaminated with the colorless, odorless, non-toxic disparlure. But if the tests prove positive, Cameron says he doesn't know what he'll have to do to purge himself of the attractant.

Odessa woman drowns in Oklahoma

LOCO, Okla. (AP) — An Odessa woman drowned Saturday afternoon while swimming in Conoco Lake in Stephens County.

The Oklahoma Highway Patrol identified the victim as Murielene McCain.

The victim's body was recovered by a member of the Duncan Diving Club at 7:40 p.m., nearly four hours after the woman went under.

DEATHS

Paul Hannon

Paul Hannon, 78, of No. 38 Delta Airline Mobile Home Park, died Saturday in a Midland nursing home.

Services will be at 9:30 a.m. Monday in St. Ann's Catholic Church with the Rev. Cliff Blackburn, pastor, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Newnie W. Ellis funeral home.

Rosary will be said at 7:30 p.m. today in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel.

Hannon was born Feb. 1, 1903, in Bradford, Pa., and spent his early life in Pennsylvania where his family members were pioneer oil people.

He was married to Mary J. Barry in 1927 in Bradford. Working for Quaker State Oil Co., he was transferred to Royalty in 1951. He and his family moved to Midland in 1952 where he worked with Superior Oil Co. in the production department. Hannon retired in February 1965.

Hannon was a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Survivors include his wife; three sons, Charles E. Hannon of Midland, Thomas Hannon of Punta Gorda, Fla., and Bill Hannon of Atlanta; two daughters, Christine Cowan of Tulsa and Mary Jo Hellman of Littleton, Colo.; two brothers, Walter Hannon of Albuquerque, N.M., and Owen Hannon of Bradford; a sister, Ruth Podlas of Bradford; 11 grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

Annie I. Gunning

Annie Irene Gunning, 87, of 2800 N. Midland Drive, died early Saturday in a Midland hospital.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, pastor of West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Gunning was born July 21, 1893, in Texas. She came to Midland in 1977 from El Paso. She was retired from Hix-Hayward Clothing Manufacturing in 1967 after 35 years of service. She was the wife of the late Edward B. Gunning.

Survivors include a son, Edward Gunning of Cisco; two daughters, Margaret Laurell of Midland and Elizabeth Hines of Dallas; seven grandchildren and 14 great-grandchildren.

Tournament set

BIG SPRING — The Fourth Annual National "Texas-Style" Partnership Domino Tournament, which may draw up to 100 partners, in Big Spring's Dorothy Garrett Coliseum will be held July 23-25.

Entries are being taken by the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce. Players will be competing for trophies and prize money. The team entry fee is $100.

Teams will play an estimated 20 hours to reach the semi-finals.

In "Texas-Style Dominoes," players draw seven dominoes and use only the first double played as a spinner. Only the spinner can be abutted on all four sides.

The national tournament was conceived in 1978 by George McAllister while he was writing his book, "Dominoes/Texas Style," which was co-authored by his domino partner, Lloyd McLeod.

Meeting set

ANDREWS — The Andrews Independent School District will hold a special meeting at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday

Trustees at OC to meet

ODESSA — Odessa College trustees will meet at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Community Room of the Student Union Building to consider adopting a proposed $10.8 million operating budget for 1981-82.

The budget would not call for a tax rate increase.

The board received the tentative budget in mid-June.

Following Tuesday's meeting, the board will meet at least two more times before final budget adoption, which is expected in August.

In other matters Tuesday, the trustees are to hear reports from the property committee concerning bids on equipment for a campus telephone system and recommendations concerning renewal of the contract with ARA, the college food service.

Registration at OC set

ODESSA — Registration for the second summer term at Odessa College will be Wednesday.

Students may sign up between 8:30 and 11:30 a.m., 1 to 4 p.m. or 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. in the Registrar's Office on the second floor of the Student Union Building.

More than 70 classes in 26 subject areas will be offered. In addition to the regular classes, open-entry programs in cosmetology, diesel mechanics, machine technology and welding also are available.

Classes for the second summer session begin Thursday and continue through Aug. 13.

RR club will meet

The Permian Basin Model Railroad Association will hold its monthly meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m. at Texas Electric Service Co.'s Crew Room 301, 301 S. Dixie St., in Odessa.

The club will discuss a permanent meeting room.

For more information, contact Jim Murphy at 1-337-6504.

Bus crash kills many

COAHUILA, Mexico (AP) — At least 20 people died and 46 were injured when the bus they were riding collided with a pickup truck on a highway in this northeastern state, rescue workers said Saturday.

They said the cause of the accident could not be determined immediately but Carlos Vielma Martinez, a Red Cross worker, quoted one of the passengers injured in the crash as saying the bus driver had been speeding to make up for time lost earlier because of a flat tire.

in the Andrews ISD Board Room to consider a three-item agenda.

Trustees are to review bids for the school system's bank depository, to consider textbook adoptions for supplementary reading materials and to approve the resignations of Nelda Carter, health occupations coordinator at Andrews Senior High School, and William Creekmore, instructor in building trades at the senior high school.

Reunion planned

STANTON — The annual Martin County Old Settlers' Reunion this Saturday will include a celebration of "100 Years with the Iron Horse."

The community was established by German Catholic settlers, including Carmelite priests and monks, in 1881 with the coming of the Texas & Pacific Railroad to West Texas and first bore the name Grelton.

The settlers changed the town's name to Marienfeld for Field of Mary, but, with the influx of Protestants and the exodus of the first settlers due to a severe drought and blizzard in the 1880s, the name in 1890 was changed to Stanton in honor of President Abraham Lincoln's Secretary of War, Edwin M. Stanton.

Old Settlers activities will begin with a 10 a.m. parade and will conclude with a barbecue feed, signing and games, and memorial services.

Registration set

BIG SPRING — Registration for the second summer session at Howard College will be held from 9 a.m. to noon, from 1 to 4 p.m. and from 6 to 8 p.m. Monday in the HC Library, according to Jan Dunagan, registrar.

Classes begin Tuesday and end Aug. 7.

Students who need financial aid to attend the college may contact Cheri Sparks, dean of students.

Russell re-elected

SAN ANGELO — Hudson Russell, a San Angelo real-estate broker and community leader, has been re-elected president of the West Texas Boys Ranch board of directors.

Jay Crouch of Midland was re-elected to a three-year term on the board.

Officers serving with Russell on the board are Jim Carter, San Angelo lawyer, first vice president; Leon Goswick, Sweetwater rancher-banker, vice president; Jim Prather, Post, operator of the OS Ranch and Lubbock Commission Co., vice president; Lon Slaughter, San Angelo, secretary; Joe Emery, San Angelo, assistant secretary, and Harold "Brookie" Broome, San Angelo, treasurer.

Tenure completed

ANDREWS — James Roberts, editor-publisher of The Andrews County News, has completed his year's tenure as president of Texas Press Association.

At the recent TPA convention in Fort Worth, Roberts presented the Texas of the Year Award to M.Sgt. (ret.) Roy Benavidez, who recently was bestowed with the Congressional Medal of Honor, the nation's highest military honor, by President Ronald Reagan.

Benavides, of El Campo, was a member of the Green Beret Special Forces team in the Vietnam War.

Matthews gets scholarship

HOUSTON — Bobby Clint Matthews, a Martin County 4-H Club'er and a 1981 graduate of Stanton High School, has been awarded a $6,000 scholarship to Texas A&M University for his academic achievements and leadership ability by the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo.

He is son of Mr. and Mrs. Bobby G. Matthews. Matthews, who has been active in 4-H Club work for nine years, was selected as the Martin County Gold Star Boy, was recipient of the J.T. Rutherford Award, the Texas Sheep and Goat Award, and the Citizenship Award.

He has served as president and vice president of the Martin County 4-H Club and was a 4-H district council delegate. He has participated on the 4-H horse and livestock judging teams. His 4-H projects included method demonstration, swine, steer, capon and breeding sheep.

Matthews is a member of the National Honor Society, was a reporter for the Future Farmers of America Chapter and was president of the Future Teachers of America chapter. He is a member of Bellview Baptist Church in Midland.

The youth plans to major in agricultural economics at Texas A&M University.

Youngsters qualify

Five Midland County 4-H youngsters have qualified for the July 14-18 Texas State 4-H Horse Show in Waco.

The horsemen won the honor in the Texas Agricultural Extension Service's District 6 4-H Horse Show recently in Fort Stockton.

Qualifying were Richard Triplitt, who stood his horse, Miss Echo Elite, to Grand Champion Mare honors; Missy Larremore, who rode her mare, Norma Flit, to the first place champion Western pleasure; Cindy Triplitt, who won first place in the Western horsemanship class on her gelding, Heza Fancy Chick; Janice Zimmerman, who won the All-Around Horseman honors by placing her mare, Miss Tuff Bars, in four events, and Molly Schneider, who placed in barrel and poles on her gelding, Chota's Snp.

Others going to state are Shannon Bray and Teresa Hamilton.

2 million bales produced

LUBBOCK — More than two million bales of cotton were produced in the 25 High Plains counties represented by the Plains Cotton Growers Inc., according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service (TCLRS).

The count, 2,017,300, was 733,300 bales below the 2,750,600 bales produced in 1979 and almost 1.2 million bales below the all-time record of 3,215,400 grown on the Plains in 1977.

Planted acreage was 4,523,900, which was close to the 4,565,000 acres seeded in 1979. But after about 12.5 percent of the crop was lost to drought and other adverse weather, only 3,959,900 acres were harvested in 1980.

Yield per harvested acre came to 244.5 pound in 1980 and that became the lowest yield per harvested acre since the 199.9 pounds harvested in 1952 and well below the average of 356.3 pound per acre for the 10-year 1970-79 period. The highest average per-acre yield ever achieved on the High Plains was 513.2 pounds in 1965.

A bale of cotton averages 480 pounds.

Of the 25 counties in the High Plains, Hale County turned out 243,000 bales of Upland cotton to become the No. 1 cotton producer in 1980. Dawson County, which often leads in bales produced, turned out only 88,000 bales. Midland County produced a mere 11,000 bales, and Martin County, which also was hurt by the drought and untimely rains at harvest times, yielded only 34,400 bales.

Fungicide to be used

AUSTIN — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has approved the Texas Department of Agriculture's Special Local Need Labels for use of a fungicide on live oak trees in the state, according to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

The fungicide, Arboret, has been previously tested for use in preventive and therapeutic treatment of live oaks to control Live Oak Decline (LOD).

"Test reports indicated good activity for the fungicide with adequate control of the disease," Brown said.

"LOD has killed many beautiful trees in some areas of the state over the past several years," he said. "Trees are valuable aesthetic assets (by) adding charm and beauty to any home or business. We feel use of this product will help owners of such trees stricken by the disease in yards, parks and recreational areas."

Pecan show planned

SEGUIN — The Texas Pecan Growers Association will host its 60th annual conference, trade-and-product show, the Texas State Pecan Show and Queen's Pageant July 12-15 in the Seguin-Guadalupe County Coliseum here.

The association is the world's largest pecan producers group.

Spider mites difficult to control in the garden

By CHARLES W. GREEN County Extension
Agent — Agriculture

During hot, dry weather gardeners should be on the lookout for spider mites. Spider mites, or red spiders, are probably the most difficult pests to control in the garden.

Although spider mites will attack almost any plant, among their preferred hosts are beans, tomatoes, peas, eggplants and corn. They will also attack many ornamental plants and flowers.

Actually, spider mites are not insects but are eight-legged relatives of ticks and spiders. Their small size, about 1/60 of an inch, makes them difficult to see without magnifying lens. They range in color from red, green and yellow to white and brown. Spider mites deposit their eggs on the underside of leaves. These hatch in about five days. There may be 10 to 15 or more generations per year.

Mites can cause considerable plant damage by sticking their needle-like mouthparts into leaf tissue and sucking out the juice while injecting a toxic substance into the leaf. Heavy infestations will cause leaves to appear blotched or spotted, turn pale or yellowish in color, curl up, turn brown and eventually drop off. A thin webbing may cover leaves and stems.

Begin a control program as soon as spider mites are detected and before plant damage is obvious. A light infestation of spider mites can be reduced and kept at low levels by spraying plants with a strong stream of cool water every few days.

If chemicals are used there is only one that is truly effective. This is Kelthane. Two to four applications may be needed at five-day intervals.

THIS WAS ONE on the infrequent years when late spring freezes did not reduce or eliminate the fruit crop. We sometimes get the question, "When is a peach ripe?"

Peaches go through three phases while on the tree. First the peaches rapidly increase in size immediately after shuck-split. Second, the pit hardens while the peach is increasing very little in size. Third, the final swell occurs with the peach increasing greatly in size. It is during the final swell stage that the peach develops its highest quality.

The longer the peach stays on the tree during the final swell, the larger it will become and the higher the sugar content will be. Many fruits (such as apples, bananas, tomatoes, pears and plums) can be harvested hard-ripe (green) and can ripen off the tree. Peaches must ripen on the tree. However, if a peach is left on the tree too long, it will become soft-ripe. The optimum peach is harvested firm-ripe.

Once a peach goes into the final swell, fruit size will increase rapidly. Picking peaches too early will reduce the potential yield. A peach can easily increase 1/4 to 1/2 inch by remaining on the tree only two days. Peaches which are thinned to six inches apart should reach at least two inches in diameter before picking.

Peaches remain very hard throughout pit hardening. They will remain hard to the final swell. It is only after the final swell is over that the flesh will begin to soften. The USDA has reported that a peach should be harvested when the firmness is recorded with a Magness-Taylor Pressure Tester as 10 to 14 pounds with a 5/16 inch plunger applied to the pared cheeks.

Firmness can be determined by squeezing with uniform pressure the peach in the palm of the hand. If the peach will "give," it is firm-ripe and ready to pick. If it is rock-hard it is not ready.

Figures said misused

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The head of an independent economic forecasting company says the Reagan administration incorrectly used the firm's figures to justify a proposal to cut $111 billion in Social Security benefits over five years, according to a published report.

Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of Social Security, in Senate testimony last month attributed a set of extremely pessimistic economic projections to Data Resources Inc., of Lexington, Mass., the St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported in its Sunday editions.

The newspaper said Myers later acknowledged that the agency had revised specific projections and had done its own extrapolations of data into future years, an action he defended. He said the administration will stand by its own version of the Data Resources projections.

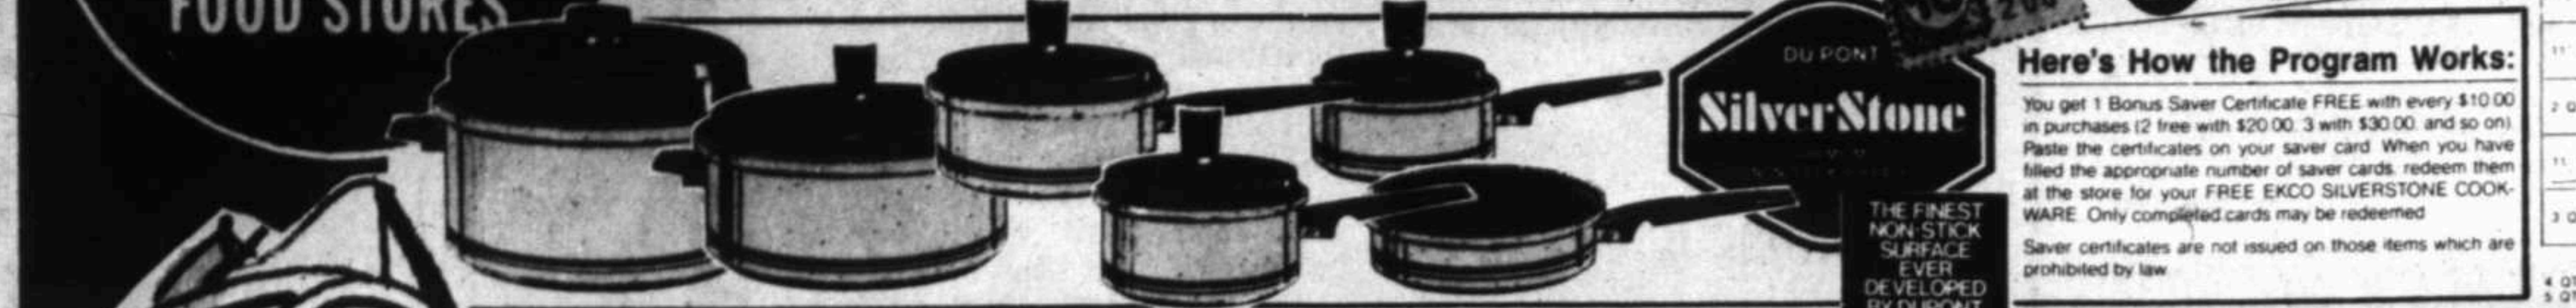

Myers conceded that agency officials changed the firm's January projections to paint a more somber picture of the Social Security system, the report said.
 Otto Eckstein, chairman of Data Resources and a former member of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, questioned the way administration officials used his company's statistics, according to the newspaper.

"To take an extremely pessimistic and also somewhat obsolete projection and then offer that as a best guess is really foolish," he said.
 Social Security officials in Washington could not be reached Saturday night to comment on the newspaper's report.

Official registration starts soon

Early registration for Midland College's second summer session closes Tuesday and official registration is set for Wednesday, according to registrar Dee Windsor.

As of Thursday, pre-registration count was 270 persons compared with 233 students at the same time last year. Final enrollment count for 1980's second summer session at Midland College was 555.

Persons wishing to sign up for one or more credit courses during the second summer session may pre-register in the Office of Student Services, Administration Building, between 7 a.m. and 8:30 p.m. Tuesday. Midland College will be closed Monday in observance of Independence Day.

Official registration for the second summer term is slated on Wednesday in the Physical Education Building. Students who have pre-registered received time permits that allocated them specific times to report for processing. Registration hours are from 2 to 4 p.m. and 6 to 8:30 p.m. Wednesday only.

"Persons wishing to take courses who haven't pre-registered should come to the P.E. Building between 6 and 8 p.m. and we will process them as quickly as possible," Windsor said.

Classes for the second summer term begin on Thursday, July 9, and conclude on Aug. 13.

Classes offered during the second summer term are primarily in the academic programs. Information about classes being offered may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 166.

Meeting scheduled

Midland County Commissioners will meet at 10 a.m. Monday in a special session in the County Courthouse to review a redistricting plan.

That preliminary redistricting report was prepared by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission and an advisory committee appointed by the commissioners court.

The commissioners also will go into an executive session to discuss personnel matters, possible land purchase and pending or prospective litigation, in addition to paying bills and hearing reports.

The next regular session will be July 13.

Commission meeting set

AUSTIN — The Texas Health Facilities Commission will meet at 10 a.m. Friday to consider an application by Big Spring State Hospital to construct a laundry addition and install more energy-efficient steam hot water generators and heat reclamation devices.

Scholarship is awarded

Sandra Lyn Kretzler, a graduate of Midland High School, has been named recipient of a Presidential Scholarship at McMurry College in Abilene for the coming year.

Ms. Kretzler is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Kretzler of 2602 Cimmaron Drive.

To be eligible for a Presidential Scholarship, a student must graduate in the top quarter of his or her class. A score of 21 or better on the ACT qualifies the recipient for additional Presidential Scholarship funds.

RUST ENGINEERING — LEADER FOR THE 80's

Rust Engineering, one of the nation's leading engineering/construction firms is headquartered in the "Magic City," Birmingham, Alabama. Located in the center of the South, Birmingham is an ideal location. As the nucleus of a metropolitan area with a population of approximately 800,000, Birmingham is 150 miles from Atlanta, 165 miles from Nashville, 250 miles from New Orleans. Birmingham has no traffic problems as drivers utilize three interstate systems, leading to and from the city. Birmingham offers a cost of living lower than the national average, low taxes, and a comfortable climate where the annual average high and low temperature is 74 and 53 respectively. Birmingham's most characteristic attribute is that combines the hospitality, friendliness, and convenience of a small town with the dynamism, growth, and excitement of a large city. The best of two worlds in terms of the arts, education, life style and residential areas, entertainment, sports, health facilities, and media... few American cities have as much to offer.

We presently seek qualified professionals who are aware of our past and desire to become a part of our future!

IF YOU WANT TO BE MORE THAN A MANAGER

QUIT!

That's Right, quit wasting your time in a dead end job where your biggest responsibility is unlocking the doors in the morning. If you are ready for more responsibility in a management position that will constantly challenge your ability to think and get things done, then you are ready to switch to Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Since WE'RE #1 in the industry, we can offer you the chance to earn between $11,000 and $13,000 in your first year, and that's at the entry level. Store managers can earn much more!

We also give you health insurance for you and your dependents that's 100% company paid, free life insurance, sick pay, vacations, a retirement program, profit sharing, and a number of other extras that make life just a little easier.

And on top of that, we have one of the most attainable and lucrative bonus programs in the industry.

But being #1 we're only interested in people that consider themselves #1. If you think you have the drive, ambition, determination and talent that it takes to be successful in the quick service restaurant industry, give us a call. There is no telling what can happen when two #1's get together.

New Yorker ends Borg's bid for 6th in row

Wimbledon champ in action

John McEnroe of New York City balances racquet on his hand, left, and tosses it in air during Wimbledon singles finals against Bjorn Borg Saturday. McEnroe's margin was 4-6, 7-6, 7-6, 6-4.

By GEOFFREY MILLER
WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — It was a star-spangled Fourth of July for the United States Saturday, and "bad boy" John McEnroe led the parade by beating the mighty Bjorn Borg for the Wimbledon singles title.

The 22-year-old American left-hander defeated the Swedish star 4-6, 7-6, 7-6, 6-4 in a nerve-tangling final that lasted almost 3½ hours.

All the sour incidents of the last two weeks — tantrums on court, arguments over line calls and fines imposed by the tournament committee — were forgotten as McEnroe ended Borg's five-year run as champion.

When he hit the last winning forehand volley, the 14,000 fans on the center court stood and cheered. Some of them had slept on the sidewalks outside the tennis club for the last six nights to stand and watch.

At a news conference afterward, the New Yorker was a quiet and dignified champion.

"I am glad to have beaten a guy who is one of the greatest players who ever lived," he said. "And I want to congratulate him, because he's a great champion."

The crowd thought so, too. When the Duchess of Kent presented the trophy and the runner-up medal, the crowd gave Borg an even bigger cheer than they had given McEnroe.

BORG, 25, won the title in 1976 and has held it longer than any other player this century.

One man — Englishman Willie Renshaw — won it six times running, from 1881 to 1886. But no overseas players competed in those days, and the defending champion had to play in only one challenge match at the end of

Fines could cost McEnroe $14,750

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — John McEnroe's Wimbledon tennis victory took on a bitter-sweet taste Saturday when the tournament committee recommended a $10,000 fine for his behavior in his semifinal match.

It was in that match, against Australia's Rod Frawley, that McEnroe objected to line calls 13 times, and on one occasion yelled out, "You are a disgrace to mankind."

The umpire, George Grime, penalized him a point and referee Fred Hoyle upheld the decision when he was summoned by McEnroe.

Previously, the fiery U.S.

Open champion, who ended Bjorn Borg's reign here Saturday 4-6, 7-6, 7-6, 6-4, had been fined $1,500 for calling an umpire in his opening match "an incompetent fool" and an additional $750 for accusing a Kenyan-born judge of being biased in a doubles match against the Indian Brothers, Vijay and Anand Amritraj.

The tournament committee asked that the latter fine be increased by another $2,500 by the Men's International Professional Tennis Council.

If all recommended fines are assessed, the total would be $14,750. McEnroe's first-place prize for winning the men's title was $43,000.

Borg won a record 41 matches at Wimbledon until McEnroe dethroned him. The old record was 31 matches by Rod Laver of Australia.

But McEnroe wasn't the only American invader to find victory here. For the first time since 1975, Americans won both the singles titles as Chris Evert Lloyd defeated Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia 6-2, 6-2 Friday to win the women's final for the third time. And McEnroe and Peter Fleming took the men's doubles title, defeating Stan Smith and Bob Lutz 6-4, 6-4.

Then, on Saturday, Pam Shriver, who was born July 4, 1962, teamed with Martina Navratilova to capture the women's doubles championship 6-3, 7-6 over Anne Smith and Kathy Jordan.

Even in the Wimbledon junior tournament, it was a grand old day for the U.S. Matt Anger of Pleasanton, Calif., beat Pat Cash of Australia 7-6, 7-5 for the boys' crown and Zina Garrison of Houston defeated Rene Uys of South Africa 6-4, 3-6, 6-0 to win the girls' title.

IN THE only setback on America's birthday, Frew McMillan of South Africa and Betty Stove of the Netherlands defeated defending champions Tracy and John Austin in the mixed doubles 4-6, 7-6, 6-3.

Because of a series of upsets in the earlier rounds, McEnroe reached the final without meeting one seeded player. Throughout the tournament he had been trying to get his service under control as well as his temper.

In the finals it all came right.

"I picked the right match to serve well," he said.

McEnroe served steadily throughout the match and got almost 60 percent of his first serves in.

Borg's rate was well below 50 percent in the first two sets, but he finished with an overall average of 52 percent.

Borg was the man with the reputation for winning the big points. But on this occasion it was McEnroe who won them.

Borg broke service at 3-2 in the first set. There were no more breaks until the end of the second set, which went to a tiebreaker.

The atmosphere was like a football game. The excited crowd roared at each point. They remembered the famous tiebreaker in the fourth set of last year's epic final, when McEnroe saved seven match points and won 18-16 before finally losing the match.

But this time McEnroe had the tiebreaker all his own way, winning it 7-1.

Borg led 4-1 in the third set after breaking the American left-hander in the fourth game. But McEnroe enjoyed two big slices of luck to break back in the seventh game.

Players nuts...strike stinks...

Midland fans' feelings mixed as strike wrecks 4th

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

The major league baseball strike reached a significant milestone this weekend when, for the first time in this century, America had no baseball on the Fourth of July.

How are area baseball fans that attend the Midland Cubs' games taking the strike? Who do they think is responsible for the current situation? With those questions in mind, the Reporter-Telegram went to the ballpark and asked the fans what their opinions were. Not surprising, most fans attending the Cubs' games had opinions as varied as fans throughout the rest of America.

John Smith, Midland, felt that the strike was just a way of life. Everyone is going on strike. He added, "We have carpenters going on strike here in town and the air controllers almost went out. So a strike is really not that usual."

SMITH ADDED, "The owners and players can't stay mad at each other forever. They will have to make up sometime."

Smith said that he couldn't really blame either side for the strike. The only thing he wanted was a quick end to the strike. Smith added, "I'm an avid fan. I would rather come out to the park and watch this (Cubs) than stay home and watch baseball on television."

Midlander Rob Hill was in the majority of fans who felt that the players were mostly to blame for the strike.

Hill stated, "The players are crazy. They are getting enough to play a kid's game. I signed a $300 bonus with the Kansas City A's in 1958 after my sophomore year at Texas Tech."

HILL ADDED that he thinks the owners have reached a point where they don't want to pay any higher wages. He felt that, perhaps, the owners had gone a little wild in the free agent market and are now wanting to control themselves a little better.

When asked about a possible fan boycott of the major leagues after the strike is settled, Hill said, "I say get it together and let's play ball."

Ron Hayes, Midland, felt very much like Hill. Hayes said, "The players make too much money. They are taken themselves too seriously. I don't think they offer an indispensable product. It isn't like the police or firemen going out on strike."

Hayes noted that the clubs send scouts out to look for talent, train the young players in the minor leagues and then, after a few short years, the player can declare himself a free agent. The team losing the players gets an amateur pick and must start the process all over again. Hayes noted, "This training and searching for talent costs a lot of money. Sure, they need to get a major league ball player in return for losing a major leaguer."

HAYES felt that a fan boycott would be hopeless. "Baseball is the national pastime. What would we do in the summer if we don't like any outdoors stuff. Baseball is great, that's why I come out to watch the Cubs whenever they are in town."

Jim Hughes, scout for Toronto Blue Jays, sees the owners' side more than the players. Hughes' argument runs along the same line as that of Hayes. Hughes stated, "It's tough to find ball players. After you find a talented kid, it takes four to five years for him to make it to the big leagues. The player can leave and the team gets nothing in return except an amateur pick. Then you must start the looking and training process all over again."

Midland's Laura Stribling was one voice that spoke out against the owners. She said, "The owners are causing the strike. They are cheating the fans out of a place to go because they are being so unreasonable."

NOT SO says Al Scribner of Midland. "It's more the players' fault. Both sides are going to the extreme in their demands. It (the strike) is terrible. Baseball is the No. 1 sport in the summer and both sides are screwing it up."

Scribner was the only fan to voice concern about the little man. Scribner noted, "It's the guy like the concessions stand operator, the ticket taker or ushers that get hurt more than the owners or players. We read about how the owners have insurance and the players have money in the bank or get good jobs because they are major league ball players, but we don't hear much (See, PLAYERS, 2D)

Dodgers nip Midland, 8-7

SAN ANTONIO—Steve Sax hit a one-out homer in the bottom of the ninth to give San Antonio's Dodgers an 8-7 victory over the Midland Cubs in the opener of a six-game Texas League series here.

It marked the sixth straight time San Antonio has beaten the Cubs at St. Mary's University field.

It was a battle of Dodger homers against Midland doubles and the long ball won out. San Antonio jumped in front when Greg Brock hit a three-run homer in the first and Dale Holman hit a three-run homer in the second. That finished starter Randy Clark.

Norm Churchill came on and gave up only two more runs. One was a Leo Hernandez homer in the fifth and eventually Sax' game-winner. Brock's homer was his fifth in the last eight games.

Rick Rodas held Midland hitless through the first six innings, but when the Cubs exploded it was with a bang. Javier Fierro, Mel Hall, Jack Upton and Fritz Connally opened the seventh with successive doubles, the last three scoring runs, and before the inning was over, Midland had scored six runs.

The Cubs still trailed going into the ninth, but Carmelo Martinez singled, Mike Pagel singled and Javier Fierro drove in the run off Tom Neidenfeur. That tied it, but Sax won it.

The win enabled San Antonio to squeeze ahead of the Cubs into first place in the Texas League West by percentage points.

Stephenson, Bradley share lead

DORION, Quebec (AP) — Jan Stephenson and defending champion Pat Bradley shot two-under-par 70s Saturday and remained tied for the lead after three rounds of the Ladies Professional Golf Association's $200,000 Peter Jackson Classic.

The two golfers have three-round scores of 205 over the 6,287-yard Summerlea Golf Club course, which was soaked by heavy rain as Stephenson of Australia and Bradley completed their 14th and 15th holes.

Janet Coles and Patty Hayes are tied for second, four strokes back. Coles, who shared the first-round lead, carded a 3-under-par 69, while Hayes posted a 71.

The best round of the day belonged to Nancy Lopez-Melton and Mardell Wilkins, who both recorded a 4-under-par 68. Melton, playing her best golf of the tournament, moved into a third-place tie with Jo Ann Washam. Both golfers are at 210, five strokes behind the leaders.

JoAnne Carner and Sandra Haynie share fourth place at 211.

Bradley expressed satisfaction with the tie, but Stephenson was somewhat downcast.

"I left 11 putts short of the hole for birdies, so I'm pretty frustrated," Stephenson said. "I went back to my old system of babying my putts for pars. I'm disappointed I wasn't more aggressive."

Bradley said poor preparation may have cost her a chance to take sole possession of the lead.

"I got here early to do a 12 o'clock interview," she said. "From there, I went to the practice green, but when I finished I still had 45 minutes before tee-off time."

"I misgauged by getting ready too soon," Bradley added.

Stephenson, seeking her first tournament victory in 15 months, trailed Bradley by one stroke until the ninth hole, a 380-yard, par-4 she birdied.

The Australian took a one-stroke lead at the 365 yard, No. 10, which she parred and Bradley bogeyed. Stephenson maintained her edge until the 16th, where she two-putted from about three feet.

The erratic putt cost Stephenson a par and she had to settle for her only bogey of the round.

On the 13th hole, Stephenson missed her only green of the day, landing in a bunker to the right. She blasted short out of the trap, but salvaged a par with a 10-foot putt.

Bradley, who collected three birdies and bogeyed only one hole, lost a bid for a birdie on the 16th hole when her eight-foot downhill putt caught the edge of the cup and rolled inches beyond the hole.

Neither of the leaders seemed to be affected by the downpour that dampened the greens.

Lopez-Melton, inconsistent for most of the tournament, finally began to put her game together over the final nine holes.

Hefner, Haskins lead by one at Ranchland

Carl Hefner and Paul Haskins took a slim one stroke lead at the end of 18 holes in the 36-hole Two-Man High-Low Partnership Tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club Saturday after coming for a 58.

One stroke back are Don Thompson and Ray Velvin as play heads into Sunday's final 18 holes. Tied in third were Frank Alvarado and Jerry Roan with Bob Hellinghausen and Robert Belcher.

No tears, tantrums in Wimbledon press tent post mortems

By WINSOR DOBBIN

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — "That was a victory for America, John McEnroe and Independence Day," said the new Wimbledon singles champion.

John McEnroe, the controversial 22-year-old left-hander from New York City triumphed over adversity Saturday to defeat Bjorn Borg 4-6, 7-6, 7-6, 6-4 and end the Swede's five-year run as the All-England champion. Throughout the Wimbledon fortnight, McEnroe's on-court antics made him the center of controversy. But he put all his problems aside to concentrate on toppling Borg.

"I've had a tough time, a really tough time," McEnroe said. "I'm proud to be Wimbledon champion. I won, and that's all there is to it."

McEnroe said he had consciously kept his fiery temper in check.

"It was respect for him (Borg) and the occasion," he said. "You have to give everything to beat him. You can't cope with other problems. I didn't even say 'come on' to myself. I wanted to conserve all my energy."

McEnroe felt his serve was the key factor in the result that ended the 25-year-old Borg's record 41-match Wimbledon winning streak.

"That was easily the best I've served in the tournament," he said. "I sure picked the right match to serve well."

Borg agreed with the new champion.

"On the important points, when he needed to win, he had his first serve in," said the Swede. "That was certainly the difference in the tie-breaks. He missed maybe one first serve in two tie-breaks and that gave him confidence."

BORG FELT that his failure to capitalize on four set points in the third set turned the contest McEnroe's way.

"If I'd won any of the set points, it would have been two sets to one. It would have been different then," he said.

But Borg said he was not downhearted because of the loss.

"There is no way you can continue to win all the time," he said. "I think 41 wins is a pretty good record, and I will be back. I'll keep coming back as long as I enjoy it."

McEnroe, beaten by Borg in an epic five-set final last year, clearly relished every moment of his first Wimbledon singles triumph.

"I wanted to prove I could win Wimbledon, and I beat one of the greatest players ever," he said. "I'm proud to be champion, but it is hard to explain exactly how I feel. I'm glad I was the one to stop the Borg streak."

THE TWO disagreed on the quality of the tennis played Saturday as compared to that played in last year's thriller.

"I think the first couple of sets were better," said McEnroe, "although it didn't have quite the same intensity at the end."

Borg said: "I think the quality was higher last year. It was more exciting. But this was still a very fine match."

The new champion, who also holds the U.S. Open crown, felt he gained control midway through the second set.

"I thought he controlled the first set and half of the second," McEnroe revealed. "I was determined to show he was not the only one who could come back."

"WHEN I got ahead, I was tougher than I was last year. I wanted to close the door. I guess he let me in last year. I wanted to take advantage of my chances."

"I knew I had to be mentally tough, and I didn't get discouraged like I did last year."

McEnroe refused to carry on his feud with the tournament officials. Asked about his emotions, he said: "I don't think I need to answer that."

Pressed by another questioner, he admitted a sense of relief. He also admitted he was desperately nervous at match point.

"My knees were shaking, I could hardly move," he said.

(From R-T wire services)

Craig Virgin bolted ahead of 25,000 runners at the 4½ mile mark and went on to win his third straight 10,000-meter Peachtree Road Race in record time in a record 28 minutes, 3 seconds, bettering his 28:30.5 in 1979. Allison Roe, New Zealand, was the first woman to finish, running a 32:28 to break the women's record by more than 10 seconds. Ann Audain followed in 33:18 and Sue King was third in 33:38.

The top finishers behind Virgin, Dixon and Adrian Leek were Bruck Bickford in 28:27; Marcus Nenow, 28:32; Benji Durden, 28:36; Robert Perkins, 28:39; Domingo Tibaduiza 28:42; Chris Spedding, 28:43; and Kyle Heffner, 28:44.

Severiano Ballesteros of Spain shot a 3-under-par 68 Saturday and took a 3-stroke over Manuel Pinero lead after the third round of the Scandinavian Enterprise Open golf at Linköping, Sweden.

Olympic gold medalist Steve Ovett won the 1,500-meter race in 3 minutes, 46.7 seconds, as Britain took a 5-point lead over the Soviet Union in the European Cup semifinals at Helsinki.

Julia and Charlotte Geer, two sisters from Vermont, won the first-ever race for women at the 142-year-old Henley Royal Regatta. The Geers won over Holland's Sharon Ceha and Nikola Hellemans by 3 1/2 lengths.

Rolando Blackman pumped in 24 points and Ed Neely canned 17 to lead Kansas State past the Japan national squad 87-68 Saturday in the opening game of the four-nation Kirin World Basketball 81 Tournament at Nobeoka, Japan.

Hackbart's suit contended that Clark broke Hackbart's neck with a block after Hackbart had covered the Bengals fullback on a pass pattern. Denver's Billy Thompson intercepted the pass intended for Clark. Hackbart said that after trying to throw a block on Clark, he knelt with one knee on the ground and watched Thompson return the interception. Clark "walked up behind me and planted both his feet, got himself set and just cracked me with his forearm." Hackbart's career as a professional player was ended by the injury.

Players get too much

(From 1D) about the little guys. And they are the ones getting hurt the most."

If there was a fan boycott, Scribner would be one of the few Midland fans who would support that action. Scribner said, "I would boycott. Once this is settled, the teams will charge more. They will just take it out on the fans."

Big Spring baseball fan Ken Applegate felt that the players get paid too much but that both sides were at fault. Applegate stated that the strike was brought on by the owners because of their unwillingness to negotiate with the players. He added, "Whatever happens, the strike has caused a lot of damage to the game."

APPLEGATE also felt that the possibility of a fan boycott was just talk. He said "Fans have always supported baseball. There have been strikes before and the fans always came back."

Mike O'Rourke, news director of an Odessa radio station, summed up the feelings of most areas fans by saying,

"It (the strike) stinks."

O'Rourke feels that the owners are being spiteful in their refusal to reach a compromise. He added that the players have paid their dues by working up to the big leagues through the minor leagues. But he added, "The players don't look good striking when they are getting paid so much money."

O'Rourke does feel that once the strike is settled, baseball will have "decades of peace." He added, "I'm not saying that there won't be disagreements, but I don't think anything as monumental as the free agent issue."

MOST FANS felt that the salaries being paid to players like Dave Winfield, Don Sutton, Pete Rose and other stars were justified. What upset the majority of fans, were the high salaries going to players like Bill Stien of Texas and Claudell Washington of Atlanta, who one fan called "fringe players at best."

In general, fans in Midland would like to see the strike ended as quickly as possible so fans could get back to supporting the American pastime.

Minor league attendance on upswing

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Minor league baseball interest is on the upswing, but club officials say not all the credit should go to the 1981 major league baseball strike.

A survey of American Association executives indicated that interest in the Triple A league was blooming even before the strike began June 12.

Two teams, Indianapolis and Springfield, report they have benefited to a small degree from fans who might otherwise have put their money into big league tills.

THE ENTERTAINMENT and Sports Programming Network (ESPN) has televised Triple A baseball games in the American Association, International League and Pacific Coast League.

Many minor league operations are running ahead of last year's attendance figures.

Omaha general manager Bill Gorman said income from increased gates was up about $10,000 over a year ago. But he said that wasn't a great deal compared to inflated operational costs.

Gorman said he saw little business generated by the major league strike. Big nights with attendance of 8,384 fans and 13,659 fans resulted from special promotions.

Six American Association executives said they had no indication that fans, who have boosted attendance to an average of 2,588, were those who might have attended major league games.

"Our last home stand was up maybe 15 percent over what it might have been," Indianapolis general manager Max Schumacher said.

OWNER A. Ray Smith of the Springfield Redbirds said: "We're only 94 miles from Busch Stadium (home of the parent St. Louis Cardinals). The Cardinals have a good following from Litchfield, 50 miles from our park, and we have had some of those fans attend our games."

Joe Ryan, American Association president, said he expected the gate to exceed the 1,540,621 total of last year — the best attendance since 1956.

"I believe baseball interest in the minors is on the increase, just as it was in the big leagues the last couple of years," he said.

Wichita general manager Dick King said the baseball strike has been bad for baseball in general, creating a negative attitude. Still, he said the Aeros, who lost about $60,000 last year, don't expect to lose money this season.

AT DENVER, the gate is lagging behind last year's nation-leading total of 565,214. The average through 35 home games was 5,570, compared to 9,420 last year.

General manager Jim Burris said the team's won-lost record is partially to blame, and Iowa general manager Bob Martin said his team has been on the road for 13 games during the strike so he can't gauge the effect.

Oklahoma City general manager Patty Cox Hampton said the 89ers have stressed promotions, but storm warnings have foiled many efforts.

Postponements have put a crimp on enthusiasm for an all-time high gate at Evansville, said general manager Chuck Murphy.

"Even before the strike, people were more excited about American Association baseball than ever before," he said.

Tornado cans soccer coach

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Tornado coach Mike Renshaw has been relieved of his duties. General Manager Kent Kramer announced late Saturday.

Assistant Coach Peter Short took over immediately as interim head coach of the North American Soccer League team for the remainder of the current season, Kramer said.

The Tornado is in the midst of a North American Soccer League record 17-game losing streak, and in last place in the NASL Central Division with a 2-18 mark. The team hosted the Edmonton Drillers Saturday only a few hours after Renshaw was relieved.

Little Lord McEnroe lacks refined sense of history

Los Angeles Times

John McEnroe could beat me in tennis, 6-0, 6-0, 6-0. For all I know, he can spell better. But I'll tell you one thing he's got no chance in -- History. Like a lot of his generation, he has no concept of what it's taken to bring him to this place at this time.

Like the royal Weanling who wakes up to find himself King, he thinks he's got it all coming to him. Good manners are for peasants. It's a common enough attitude on the part of athletes. When God made the world, he said, "Let there be million-dollar contracts for kids with crosscourt forehands." And, then He rested.

I think the thing most galling about guys like McEnroe is, they think they're doing us a favor. These kids look on tennis the way Kaiser Wilhelm looked on his army. It was put on this earth to serve them.

You all know the facts in the case: Little Lord McEnroe slammed a ball at a lineswoman after cursing her publicly. Little Lord McEnroe snapped a wooden racquet in half, called Wimbledon officialdom "the pits of the world," called an umpire "you incompetent fool," and called the head referee "an imbecile." And that was in a match he was winning easily.

THE BRITISH press reacted predictably. They dusted off their "Super Brat" headlines, and even Red Smith took the young man out behind the woodshed in print. Wimbledon reeled.

But, the distressing thing is, the apologists began to come out of the woodwork, too. OH, not in bold type, not in so many words, as they say. There's a great big spotlight there for the first guy who comes right out and says, "Hurrah for young Master McEnroe!" But you have to wait till the audience calms down. The buzzwords are there, all the same. You know how it goes. McEnroe is good to his mother. McEnroe gave to the Red Cross. McEnroe hasn't robbed any banks. The ball really was out.

All very well, but, hell, Hitler loved dogs, too. No, I'm not calling McEnroe a Hitler, but neither do I accept the apologia creeping into the stories about his behavior. It rather reminds me of the old story, "But, my dear, he killed four nurses!" "I know, daddy, but he voted for Landon!" "Oh, in that case, boys will be boys, eh?"

You scan the wire copy out of Wimbledon and you see McEnroe referred to as "an idealistic, impatient young man" and you're grateful for small favors. I mean, thank God he's idealistic! Think what he would do if he were cynical!

THEY REFER to him, not unkindly, as a "young man who wears faded denim jackets in the midst of high society," as if that were a virtue. It is suggested that young Master McEnroe was entitled to his anti-social behavior because England is a monarchy. Like, how dare they. England is referred to as "a land where they still love to bend their knee to Royalty." The implication is, McEnroe is kind of like a prisoner in the Queen's prison in Ireland, smearing the walls. We are told McEnroe "wants to show his contempt for those who look down their noses -- who sit in their elevated chairs and render their stuffy decisions like proclamations."

Well, how do you give a decision from an "elevated" chair? UP your nose?

Which brings me to history. When I think of Wimbledon, I think of the three Englishmen who put a tennis court on the old croquet pitch out on Worple Road in 1878. They took their idea to a magazine editor who designed a tournament which should henceforth be played there -- at least when war didn't come around to cock things up.

They might have been stuffy, but they let women -- and Americans -- in. All you needed was a racquet. An Irishman won it in 1890, to give you an idea.

WHEN I think of Wimbledon, I think of the sudden spurts of rain which drench center court periodically and a bunch of elderly gentlemen who come out looking down their noses at the tarpaulin they are hauling across the greensward to protect it. I think of white-haired agronomists who have been there for 50 years manuring the pitch between games. I think of those poor benighted monarchists pulling enormous brooms and hand-mowing the precious grass (never a power mower, it leaves ridges) so that the bounce will always be true for their young lordships and ladyships, the players.

A lot of people have spent a lot of years building, promoting, mowing, hand-crafting, weeding this hallowed pitch where there is no weed anywhere on the center court. Everything, you see, must be blade perfect for our young artists from Queens, Long Island. I mean, would you ask Caruso to sing into bad acoustics?

ALL THIS has been done over the years long before young Master McEnroe was even a gleam in his grandfather's eye. Some of the people who have kept Wimbledon alive through two wars, depressions, crises, blitzes, Tory or Labor governments, political strife, are rewarded by being called "incompetent fools" by young tennis players who wear headache bands -- and, of course, blue denim.

But, what if the calls WERE bad, you say?

I can't imagine anything more beside the point. Do you think Tilden never got a bad call? Budge? Didn't you ever get called out on a bad third strike in your life? Do you think McEnroe was never the beneficiary of a bad call?

No, the young man owes Wimbledon more than it owes him. At least he owes it a display of good manners. He owes it a glance at its history. He's lucky it's there. Otherwise he might have to use his forehead stroke to drive postholes for a ranch in Amarillo. With nobody to yell at when he missed.

LIME ROCK, Conn. (AP) — Greg Pickett of Alamo, Calif., in his first visit to the Lime Rock Park road racing circuit, won Saturday's CRC Trans-Am Championship race.

Pickett put his Corvette ahead of polesitter Brian Redman at the green flag and led the 66-lap, 100.98-mile race, averaging 90.039 mph.

Two share 1st at Green Tree

After two rounds of golf at Green Tree Country Club, Jim Lyons-Dale Dale Spencer and Steve Whiteside-Bill Rigney share the top spot after Saturday's hi-low partnership round with a two-day total 185.

Lyons and Spencer carded a 70 Saturday to go with their opening round 55 to move into the tie. Whiteside and Rigney came from way behind to grab a share of the lead heading into today's best ball competition.

Nipping at the heels of the leaders is the team of Ernie Swait and Bill Matthews with a 186 total. In third, Steve Brown and Steve Daniel are just two shots behind the leaders at 187.

Rogers fires 66 to lead Western

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Bill Rogers fired six birdies and carded a 6-under-par 66 Saturday, calling it one of his best rounds in seven years as a pro, to take a two-shot lead after three rounds of the Western Open golf tournament.

"If the weather (rain) didn't get Butler National, I did," he said.

"You could throw the ball right at the pins today. I did. And I'm going to be aggressive again tomorrow," said Rogers, who lost the 1978 Western in a playoff to Andy Bean.

Rogers, the Heritage winner and U.S. Open runnerup this year, stood at 208, 8-under-par on this suburban Chicago course, regarded as one of the PGA Tour's severest tests. He was two shots ahead of Ed Fiori, who shot 69 for 210.

With midway leader Greg Powers faltering, the 29-year-old Texan took over the sole lead on the 13th hole, well after CBS-TV had ended its coverage. He never let up against the 7,097-yard Butler National Golf Club course.

His round was only one shot shy of the course record of 65 posted by David Graham and John Lister in 1975.

Tied for third, three shots in arrears, were Don Pooley, Jim Simons, Jim Colbert and Powers. They were at 211 after the round that was delayed three hours because of rain.

Colbert fashioned a 70, Colbert 71, Pooley 73 and Powers 75, catching consecutive double bogeys and surrendering the lead with a front side of 42.

Powers, a 35-year-old non-winner, saw his two-shot edge after 36 holes evaporate early. He bogeyed two of the first five holes and then hit approach shots into Salt Creek for his double bogeys at six and seven.

Jack Nicklaus, the sport's all-time money champion and winner of 68 titles, including this event twice, was well off the pace. Nicklaus used a different putter in the third round for five birdies, a 70 and a total of 217.

Nicklaus still believed he had a shot at overhauling Rogers.

"But it means I have to shoot a low round tomorrow, maybe 65 or 66," he said.

Lee Trevino and Tom Watson were even in worse shape.

Trevino ballooned to a 77 and stood at 221. Watson, with a triple bogey among his first five holes, slipped to a 75-223.

the same problem we've had all along, and that is the pool proposal," he said. "Until it's resolved, the strike will continue." The players' proposal would form a pool of talent from which compensation could be chosen.

Asked what happened Saturday, Moffett said: "They (Grebeys and owners) made some moves in the area of direct compensation, which is something the players didn't want to talk about."

Moffett also said that hearings scheduled to begin here Monday before a National Labor Relations Board administrative law judge on an unfair labor practice complaint against the owners would not necessarily preclude negotiations.

"If the parties want badly enough to get together, we will," he said.

KENNY REDIN'S Fin & Feather

Fishermen always like to learn of new lakes opening. That's usually when the fishing is best, however the fish aren't quite as large. But needless to say when a lake or reservoir is new, anglers by the thousands take to the water.

In past Fin and Feather columns, we've highlighted two new lakes that opened March 1 in the Texas Hill Country. Since that time, I've been to both these lakes and have obtained information that you might be interested in. Both lakes are producing some nice catches of fish (bass, catfish, crappie and white bass).

New lakes, Georgetown and Granger, opened March 1 and offer extensive public facilities for camping, boating and fishing.

THE TEXAS Parks and Wildlife Department said bag and size limits

25 miles per hour. From the buoy line to the upper end of the reservoir, the speed limit is eight miles per hour.

ON GEORGETOWN Lake, all except Walnut Spring, Sawyer and Cedar Hollow Parks have developed camping facilities and boat ramps. These three have only primitive camping and no boat ramps. Designated swimming areas are at Friendship and Wilson H. Fox Parks.

Georgetown has been stocked with smallmouth bass, channel catfish and white-striped bass hybrids.

Granger Lake offers boat ramps at all four parks, and camping facilities at Wilson H. Fox, Friendship and Willis Creek Parks. The lake has been stocked with channel catfish and Florida largemouth bass.

Bass seem to be the most aggressive species in the lakes at present, but we did muster up several eatable-size channel catfish while fishing the lakes. We caught our bass on white spinnerbaits and topwater buzzin baits.

To go along with this story and plan your trips in advance, we've come up with something from the TPWD that might save you a lot of time, effort and money in planning your next extended fishing trip.

THE HIGH cost of leaving home can often make urban anglers feel trapped on the freeway treadmill. Now-a-days, the metropolitan resident is apt to look for and utilize fishing opportunities much closer to home than in the good old days where gasoline was cheap.

Two TPWD publications entitled "Fishing Close To Home," should help. One details the northern half of Texas; the other is for the southern half. Each publication lists several lakes — giving sizes, location, stocking record and other pertinent information necessary for planning a successful outing. Both are available by writing the TPWD at 4200 Smith School Road, Austin, 78744.

for game fish will be the same as for most lakes in the department's regulatory authority. Biologists note, however, that the new reservoirs have been impounded only for a little more than a year and may not offer outstanding fishing until fish populations have had time to expand. But, since this report, I've traveled to the lake and have taken some good strings of fish. Nothing too large, but nice-eating size.

Granger Lake is located off State Highway 95 just south of Granger and about 16 miles east of Georgetown. Lake Georgetown (formerly called North Fork Lake) is located just west of Georgetown off FM 2338.

Boaters on Lake Georgetown should note that the Corps has established boat speed limits for the narrow reservoir. From the dam to a buoy line at Russell Park, the maximum speed is

Yarborough captures first in Firecracker

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Cale Yarborough, waiting until he felt the time was right, charged past Harry Gant just two turns from the end to win his fourth Firecracker 400 Grand National stock car race Saturday at Daytona International Speedway.

Yarborough stopped trying to duel with Gant 22 laps from the end of the 400-mile race, concentrating instead on staying close behind the leader until the last time around the 2.5-mile, high-banked oval.

"In this day and age, you've got to use your head or somebody is going to beat you," Yarborough said. "You have to use your head and have patience."

"It's hard to do that over 30 laps, but if I'd have passed Harry, he could have done the same to me."

The 41-year-old driver from Timmonsville, S.C., followed his strategy to perfection.

He dropped low on the backstretch on lap 160, pulling even even, then passed Gant as they sped through the third turn.

Helpful hints to angler

ROD N. REELE

Didja know that....

The average number of hours fished per muskie taken is around 200?

Most fishermen retrieve lures too rapidly to attract really big fish, which tend to be lazy?...For small fish, let the lure lie for an abnormally long time before moving it. For a big one, a sudden movement can bring an impulsive strike...

After a day's fishing, do you check the terminal end of your line for weakness and cut off a few feet if wear shows or check your reel's drag because it occasionally will lock tight after sitting unused?...

That many big fish are lost in the final moments of battle because the angler tries to net the fish before it is tired?...

The reason dawn and dusk are favored fishing times is that small fish feel safer moving about in minimal light?...Didja know all this? Of course not, if you didn't see July Sports Afield...

GOOD CROWDS showed up last week at Lake J.B. Thomas land fishing was conducted in competition with boaters and skiers. At Lake Spence, the big striped bass madethe news, but had competition from trophy channel cat catches and a sprinkling of white bass and blue catfish.

At Spence's Paint Creek Marina, Odessa's Lonnie Muse took nine strippers to 60 pounds; Lubbock's Bob Dawson hauled in a 16 pounder; Abilene's T.E. Ricelman, landed a 10-10 while Mike and Eddie McCartney, Abilene, displayed 27 channel and three blues, Odessa's Jay McNew had a two-pound channel, three blacks to five and three whites to 1 1/2. At Wildcat Fish a Rama, Big Spring's John Pitts took 35 channels to two and 23 white bass to 1 1/2. W.J. Mashburn of Abilene had a 12 pound striper. Skinny's Hillside reported Don Tuck and Dennis Goff, Odessa, with a catch of channels totaling 75 pounds and a 7 1/2 pound and 10 pound blue cat...

At Thomas, Ira's Ralph Lindsey landed a six-pound walleye on minnows and a 2 1/2 pound crappie. Ed

Shive, Big Spring, took a six-pound black on a purple plastic worm.

In general crappie fishing at Thomas was good in 10-15 feet of water and channel cat were good to excellent in all depths on all kinds of bait. Yellow cats seemed to favor live bait on trot line and black bass were fair on artificial bait. White bass and walleye were enjoying their holiday fiesta.

THE TEXAS Trophy Hunters first annual Hunters Jamboree is scheduled for Sept. 5-6 at Fort Bend County Fairgrounds near Rosenberg. Week's events will include muzzle loading exhibition shoot and competition, archery exhibition, whitetail deer competition, armadillo race, greased pig contest, game bird cooking and a western dance...

Huskies win at Henley

HENLEY-ON-THAMES, England (AP) — The University of Washington rowing crew was defeated by the British national crew Saturday in the Grand Challenge Cup — the premier event of the Henley Royal Regatta.

The British crew, under the name of Leander and Tyrian, defeated the 1977 Grand Challenge Cup winners by 2 1/2 lengths and advanced to Sunday's final against the Oxford and Thames Tradesman.

Oxford and Thames, conquerors of Yale University in the quarterfinals Friday, defeated the University of London in the other semifinal. Washington almost immediately found itself a canvas down against the British crew, but by the half-mile mark the difference was 1 1/4 lengths. After three-quarters of the 1,450-meter course was completed down the river Thames, the gap had widened to 1 1/2 lengths.

"It was not until then that I started to worry and thought we might not catch them," said Washington stroke Maurice Felix. "We are stronger over the second half of the course but they kept rowing away."

Said Dick Erickson, Washington coach: "We caught no crabs, made no mistakes, and were still rowing good and strong at the mile. But we are still in a state of shock at having lost."

Hogan softball concludes today

For baseball fans that are suffering withdrawal symptoms may find a way of filling the void by dropping by Hogan Park today and watching the annual Fourth of July Men's Slow-Pitch Tournament that is underway.

Play started Friday and ran through midnight Saturday. Action is scheduled to get underway about 8 a.m. this morning and continued on through the early afternoon until a champion is determined in the double elimination event.

Of course, you don't have to be a baseball fan to enjoy one of the fastest growing sports in Midland.

Sounders beat Dips

WASHINGTON (AP) — Roger Davies' goal in overtime Saturday gave the Seattle Sounders a 3-2 North American Soccer League victory over the Washington Diplomats.

Davies' goal, his sixth of the season, came in the 101st minute of play following a corner kick by Steve Buttle.

Washington netminder Jim Brown was screened on the play by two Washington defenders as Davies connected from five yards in front of the net.

The score capped a second-half Sounder rally which saw the visitors come from a 2-0 halftime deficit.

McEnroe boycotts dinner

LONDON (AP) — John McEnroe, the new Wimbledon men's singles champion, boycotted the annual champions' dinner at the Savoy Hotel Saturday night.

Dubbed the bad boy of Wimbledon because of his temperamental outbursts on court, the 22-year-old American gave no reason for not attending.

But only an hour after he toppled Sweden's Bjorn Borg to win the title, the Wimbledon tournament committee recommended to the Men's Professional Tennis Council that McEnroe should be fined $9,400 for his behavior during his semifinal match with Australian Rod Fawley last Thursday.

Football time for Midlanders

The Mrs. has never been impressed with the trivia fad, "It's not all that difficult," she bellittles.

So we asked her to name the Kraut line. "Wasn't it Siegfried?" she replied so quickly that we were left speechless.

Midland's Tom Brahoney is preparing to take off for summer camp with the NFL St. Louis Cardinals. "But after last year, I'm not making any predictions," says the former University of Oklahoma All-American, who now is starting center for the Cardinals. "We need offensive linemen." One thing Brahoney does know after attending minicamp recently, the Cardinals have a super linebacking prospect in E.J. Junior, the rookie draft pick from Alabama. "His 40-yard sprint time is as good as Otis Anderson's, and Junior weighs 244 pounds."

WHILE Midlanders Junior Miller (Atlanta Falcons) and Keith Bishop (Denver Broncos) will be reporting to camp soon as NFL sophomores, James Zachery has been working out with the CFL Montreal Alouettes for more than a month for the season which begins this weekend. The ex-Midland High all-stater and Texas

Aggie, reported to camp early, hoping to make the transition to defensive end or tackle.

Starting his second season in the CFL, Zachery has a new teammate, Vince Ferragamo, late of the Los Angeles Rams, and both soon will be highly visible on ESPN when the all sports network begins carrying the CFL games on a regular basis.

RANDY VELARDE, District 5-A's MVP last season, will enroll at Lubbock Christian College this fall on a baseball scholarship. LCC has an excellent program and this spring hosted the NAIA College Series. And, yes, Randy is the son of Lee, the artist whose delicate touch with tiff grass makes Midland's Cubs Stadium the envy of all natural grass fields. Randy comes by his baseball talents naturally. Lee was a top hitter back when semipro ball was still big in West Texas.

Midland Cubs Manager George Enright, describing his major league career, "I got to the majors long enough to have a cup of coffee, but not long enough to put cream and sugar in it."

Yes, the Doc Edwards who managed Rochester in that famed "longest" game against Pawtucket is the same Doc who managed the Midland Cubs in 1975. The 33-inning marathon that started in April and ended in June was a test of stamina, even if you only played the first eight hours and seven minutes back on April 19.

BOBBY ADAMS, the Chicago Cubs roving infield coach, knows what they went through from experience. "Back when I was with the Cincinnati Reds, we played a two-night doubleheader with the old Phillies' Whiz Kids. The first game went 17 innings and the second game 18."

Kraut line? When Michael O'Rourke tossed that one at us in the Cubs Stadium press box, we spent three weeks trying to remember who went with Woody Dumart on the famed Boston Bruin front line before we came up with Milt Schmidt and Bobby Bauer.

Doc all business when on mound

By JAY JORDEN

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP)—George "Doc" Medich is all business, both when pitching for the Texas Rangers and while studying to be a doctor.

Since joining the Rangers in 1977, Medich has divided his time between baseball in the summer and postgraduate medical study in the winter.

"When baseball ends, I don't go home and take a vacation," said Medich, who, last season, led the Rangers with 14 wins, and on three occasions has rendered medical aid in the ballpark.

So when the major league baseball strike was called June 12 — just when the Rangers were playing their best ball ever — Medich was left a frustrated man.

"There's not anything else right now," he said recently. "I'm living on what I put in the bank."

DURING A practice session at the University of Texas at Arlington stadium, Medich fended off some practice balls from son Mickey, 4, and talked of the hospitals he has worked in since the strike.

He made several rounds at Fort Worth Children's Hospital and John Peter Smith Hospital, also in Fort Worth, after resident students there invited him to participate.

But Medich adds, "I have no official capacity over there. I did it as an ad lib thing."

At Children's Hospital, Medich said he accompanied residents on rounds involving general orthopedics, fractures and joint replacement and helped examine 12 patients.

Medich, who attended medical school and was licensed to practice in Pennsylvania, said he cannot work for pay in Texas unless he passes a three-day licensing examination.

But he said, "I'm not prepared to do that right now."

Medich said that if the strike continues into September, he may begin his medical studies earlier than usual. He normally works at St. Francis Hospital in Pittsburgh three months of the year, and will begin a five-year residency in orthopedics in 1983.

"I may — it just depends," he said. "Someone may call me and tell me that they need some help."

IN 1975, when he was with the Yankees, Medich performed mouth-to-mouth resuscitation on a coach.

In Baltimore in 1978, he ran into the stands during a game and performed cardio-pulmonary resuscitation on a heart attack victim who later recovered.

Baker sets pin record

DENVER (AP) — Tom Baker of Buffalo, N.Y., set a national tour record by scoring 1,613 points in six games, including a 300 perfect game, in first-round play Saturday at the $95,000 Denver Open on the Professional Bowlers Association tour.

Lucks Gay takes Downs Consolation

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Lucks Gay Chic pounded out an easy 1-1-length win in Saturday's $86,994 Rainbow Derby Consolation at Ruidoso Downs.

Lucks Gay Chic surprised his foes with a quick-getaway in the 440-yard dash and never looked back. He fattened up his lead with each stride.

The winner stopped the clock in a seasonal record time of 21.84 seconds and collected $18,393. Richard Bickel was in the driver's seat.

Baby Hold On rallied out of third place to bag the runnerup purse of $12,875. Willie Lovell was up.

Layover Charlie, a 38-1 outsider, ended up a nose behind Baby Hold On and collected $9,809 for third.

Power or not, grunting is out

By FRED GOODALL

MIAMI (AP) — The pros say it gives them extra power. The kids do it because the superstars do.

Jimmy Connors says he can't help it. One tennis official describes it as fashionable, "the biggest thing going."

But the Florida Tennis Association doesn't like it and two months ago banned grunting — the sport's sound of the 1980s — in this state with these words:

"The point penalties apply for a player who makes intentional, disconcerting and unnecessary noises such as grunting while points are being played in a match."

MARVIN PFAENDER, FTA president, said the measure, the first of its kind in the nation, is an interpretation of the interference rule established by the International Tennis Federation years ago.

"Interference has always been there in the rules of tennis, I guess going back to year one," said Pfaender. "So we haven't changed anything, we've just become the first to spell out grunting as noise that doesn't belong on the tennis court."

The anti-grunting mood has also gone international. Wimbledon officials instructed umpires there to discourage excessive grunting during this year's tournament.

"I laughed when I heard that Wimbledon had tried to put a stop to grunting," Connors said. "I am grunting well this year, but I cannot help it. In the first match, the umpire did ask me to hold down the grunting, but I told him there was nothing I could do about it and he could only default me."

"Others like (Brian) Gottfried, (John) McEnroe and Chris Evert Lloyd, men and women alike, grunt. I don't have a medical opinion on it, but perhaps I have a big gas pouch."

Pfaender is the first to admit that grunting can't be eliminated all together.

SO OFFICIALS have instructed umpires that deliberate grunting — aimed at rattling or deceiving an opponent or which distract players on adjoining courts — is what the FTA wants to stop.

"The problem is real here, but the key word is intentional," Pfaender said. "Everybody grunts when you strain. That's not intentional."

The FTA president explained that officials are concerned with the direction grunting is carrying the state's amateur players. He said instructors are teaching students that grunting can make their game more effective and that youngsters feel that the louder you grunt, the better.

"Before the rule they were literally having grunting contests out there to see who could grunt the loudest. It sounded like a whole court full of seals. It was terrible," said Pfaender. "That was in practice and when they started matches then they really started having contests. With all that grunting going on, you couldn't even hear the ball bounce."

Burger emerges as court's most influential member

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, long criticized by detractors for a perceived lack of leadership, has emerged as perhaps the Supreme Court's most influential member.

In the just-completed 1980-81 court term, it was Burger who most often spoke for the court on controversial issues — abortion, cameras in the courtroom, religious freedom, national security and more.

And Burger's judicial philosophy that federal courts should play only a limited role in the fate of the nation appeared more than ever to attract the votes of his less politically conservative brethren.

Burger, inching even closer to the court's ideological center, made greater use than in recent years of his privilege when voting in the majority to decide who writes the majority opinion.

Selecting himself, Burger thus steered the court's decisions saying states may require doctors to notify parents when certain young girls seek abortions and states are free to allow television, radio and photographic coverage of criminal trials over a defendant's objection.

Burger also spoke for the court in ruling that a worker who quits a job because of religious beliefs is entitled to unemployment benefits and that the State Department, even without explicit approval by Congress, may revoke the passport of anyone found to be a threat to national security.

At the court's center — and generally in control because their votes are needed to form majority coalitions — are Justices Byron R. White, Lewis F. Powell and Harry A. Blackmun.

They were joined by "centrist" Justice Potter Stewart, who retired from the court July 3, after 23 years of service.

In the court's 123 signed decisions this term, White joined the majority 110 times, Powell 109 and Blackmun 107.

The two most prolific dissenters were the court's two consistent liberals, Justices William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall.

Brennan dissented from 37 of those 123 decisions; Marshall from 40.

Justice John Paul Stevens — still something of a judicial "wildcard" — was the court's most prolific writer. He was author of 46 majority, concurring or dissenting opinions.

But Stevens, perhaps the least result-oriented jurist on the nation's highest court, appeared not to play as key a role as attributed to him in recent years.

He wrote for the majority in only one decision that could be called major, in which the court said police with a search warrant for a home can detain everyone on the premises until the search ends.

The 1980-81 term, like those of the recent past, showed that no one social philosophy is steering today's court.

Political ideology still is supplanted by deference to Congress and the states. Social direction still is eclipsed by a willingness to let difficult issues bubble and crystallize in lower courts.

But because it is the court of last resort, the Supreme Court still must rule on issues that fundamentally affect American life.

Justice William H. Rehnquist, the court's most conservative member, was its spokesman in the term's most vivid example — when the nation's male-only military draft tradition was upheld.

Fire out of control in swamp

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A fire blazing out of control in central Florida's Crane Swamp jumped a 30-foot-wide fire break Saturday, after burning more than 13,000 acres, authorities said.

Division of Forestry spokesman Larry Amison said 10 additional firefighters were called in to help battle the blaze.

Amison said firefighters were trying to make a stand at a canal two miles south of Florida 44, where heavy smoke already was obscuring visibility.

"There's so much smoke, we can't tell the exact amount of acreage that has been burned," Amison said. "Florida forest fires usually lie down at night. But this one is doing its worst at night."

Amison said about 100 division firefighters from outside Volusia County had already been called in to fight the blaze, while others remained on stand-by.

State firefighters were being assisted by several volunteer fire departments and a number of timber-company workers, Amison said.

"The volunteers saved a number of structures, such as hunter cabins," Amison said.

Meanwhile, two other fires that have claimed a total 5,000 acres continued to burn in north Volusia County, which is on the Atlantic Coast.

Amison said those fires were contained except in areas of deep swamp, where firefighters could not get their equipment in to work.

Computers to be used in class

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The National Education Association is launching a broad program to train teachers to use computers in their classrooms.

The nation's largest teachers' union, which is holding its 119th annual meeting in Minneapolis, has signed an agreement with the Control Data Corp. and the National Foundation for the Improvement of Education to produce two teacher-oriented computer programs, NEA spokesmen said Saturday.

"Misunderstanding is widespread — in some circles — about the role of the teacher and the role of the computer in the process of educating youngsters," said Sharon P. Robinson, director of the NEA's Instruction and Professional Development division.

"Teachers need to be involved in the planning of instruction that affects their 20th-century students," Ms. Robinson said. "They should have adequate staff development before new hardware hits the classroom."

Programs will be developed to train teachers in computer use and to retrain teachers who desire a career change or lose their jobs because of budget cuts.

After the NEA surveys its 1.7 million members to determine what the teachers need and want, NEA officials said, Control Data will design the programs.

Some teachers are afraid that the introduction of computers will mean staff cuts and an increase in class size, the NEA said.

Investigation into subway collision gets under way

NEW YORK (AP) — Investigators tried Saturday to determine if human error or equipment failure or both caused two subway trains to collide, killing a train motorman and injuring 135 people.

John Simpson, Transit Authority president, said Friday's accident apparently occurred after the motorman allowed his train to go through a 63-year-old signal light that had failed. The train slammed into the back of the train ahead of it, crushing the motorman.

Officials were collecting information for a board of inquiry that would investigate the accident, the worst in decades in the city's subways.

Many of the more than 1,000 passengers on the two trains suffered cuts and bruises when they were thrown to the floors of the cars amidst glass from shattered windows. Officials put the number injured at 135. Only one remained hospitalized Saturday, however.

Several people suffered broken bones and lacerations, but there were no critical injuries.

Mayor Edward Koch called the accident "a sad event for the city" and "another reminder of how far we have to go to have a fully reliable, safe subway service in New York, and how urgent the need is to rebuild the system."

The accident occurred on the first day of the system's new 75-cent fare.

Simpson, who was at the scene near the Utica Avenue station in Brooklyn, blamed the afternoon accident on both "human error" and aging equipment.

He said the signal light, which failed five minutes before the collision, had been flickering off and on for several hours. It was part of a signal system installed in 1918.

Simpson said it also appeared the motorman, 35-year-old Jesse Cole, had not followed standard operating procedure: halt the train and radio for instructions before proceeding past the signal.

When Cole's Manhattan-bound train crashed into the rear of the other train, the front of his train became a mass of twisted metal and he was trapped in his cab. It was four hours after the collision before rescue workers could remove his body.

In addition to the passengers on the two northbound trains, some 500 people in a southbound train had to be evacuated through emergency exits after the power was shut off. Service on the line south of Atlantic Avenue was halted until around 5 a.m. Saturday.

The accident was the worst in the city's rapid transit system in decades.

Inmates escape prison

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Authorities were searching Saturday for two inmates who remained free after a daring escape from maximum security Trenton State Prison.

Six prisoners, wielding homemade knives, commandeered a milk truck, which they used to vault over a 25-foot high wall Friday morning, said state Corrections Department spokesman James Stabile.

Authorities have captured four, including one who was shot in the back.

Still at large were Andrew J. Clark, 35, of Newark, serving 45 years for two aggravated sexual assaults and one robbery, and Robert Davis, 26, serving 25 years for an attempted bank robbery, Stabile said.

The injured inmate, Michael Jones, 28, and Marvin Russell, 29, of Newark were captured immediately, Stabile said.

Jones was listed in satisfactory condition in the intensive care unit of St. Francis Medical Center, authorities said.

Russell, who was serving a life term plus 30 years for murder, robbery and possession of a weapon, was captured outside the prison walls shortly after the escape, Stabile said.

A third inmate, Mark K. Jones, 28, of Newark, who was serving a life term for two murders, was captured at about 9:20 p.m. by Trenton police two blocks from the prison, Stabile said.

Jones was captured in an abandoned garage after he was seen leaving a bar by two police officers, according to a city police officer who asked not to be identified.

The officer said Jones was carrying a 10-inch, homemade knife when he was apprehended.

Infant still critical

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Stephanie McElrath, the premature baby from Florida sent here last week when doctors couldn't find room for her at local hospitals, remained in critical condition Saturday but has recovered from her breathing problem, a spokesman said.

The infant's condition deteriorated Friday night when carbon dioxide began to build up in her blood, but doctors raised her oxygen level and her condition improved, said Alex Vaughn, a spokesman for Talmadge Memorial Hospital.

The infant — born three months premature at 1 pound, 11 ounces — may continue to have respiratory problems because her lungs are not completely developed, Vaughn said Saturday.

"This is the reason she is still in critical condition," Vaughn said. "She still has a lot of developing to do in her lungs."

Vaughn said doctors had been gradually decreasing the elevated levels of oxygen the child was getting but had to increase it again when she developed respiratory problems.

The infant was flown to Augusta June 27 after doctors in the North Miami Beach hospital where she was born couldn't find a hospital in the state with the equipment and space to treat her.

Midland pioneer still loves Texas cowboys, cattle country

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

He isn't alone in his interest. Most people, especially those who haven't had to make their living in the field, find it fascinating. Without question, this way of life has a certain mystique surrounding its personalities and their lives.

Cowboys. In legend, they are perhaps more alive today than when they were riding on cattle drives, fighting Indians, range wars and nature's elements, and going to town for an evening's relaxation when there was one closely.

In actuality, the cowboy's life was one of survival — times were brutal and hardship was a daily word.

J. Evetts Haley, who arrived with his family in Midland in 1906 aboard the T&P Railroad, graduated from high school here in 1920. He wanted to work as a cowhand, but his parents insisted he go to college.

After graduating from West Texas State College at Canyon, Haley was hired by the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society, also at Canyon. It was a dream come true.

"My earliest love was for the Texas range, the Texas cattle country," Haley said in a recent interview at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave. The library is celebrating its fifth anniversary and Haley's 80th birthday Sunday with an open house at 2 p.m.

The society "put me on as a field secretary. I had $75 a month, a Model T and a bedroll. I was being paid to have fun," Haley explained.

J. Evetts Haley takes time to talk about his favorite subject — cowboys — before the fifth anniversary of the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave. The library was founded by Haley and contains more than 12,000 items dealing with cowboys and the range history of Texas and the Southwestern states. The library's staff is holding an open house Sunday at 2 p.m. in honor of the anniversary and Haley's 80th birthday.

Out of those 700 personal interviews with "oldtimers" grew the nucleus of today's library.

"I'M A REGULAR pack rat by nature and in 50 years I accumulated a lot of material," Haley said.

Feeling the need to make some provision for his vast collection which he wanted to give away in memory of his first wife, Nita Stewart, Haley set up a trust.

Then he was faced with the question of where to put the collection. "The Cowboy Hall of Fame wanted it," he said. Haley was one of the first two Texas members of the board of the Cowboy Hall of Fame. He was appointed by Gov. Allan Shivers, but had to resign because he couldn't give the organization enough time.

"I woke up in the middle of the night one night in Canyon and thought, 'Why don't I bring them (his collection) back to Midland? It's my home town.'"

"Years ago, my family gave Haley Park to the city of Midland. I found I could buy some land adjacent to it," said Haley.

whose family's original homestead was where the Wilcox Building stands today.

"I bought the land and the Mabey Foundation built the building," Haley added.

THE LIBRARY'S collection includes, in its more than 12,000 items, printed and manuscript materials on western exploration, frontier military history, early railroads, the development of ranching and farming, mining, petroleum, frontier forts, camels in Texas, politics, frontier social history, extensive material on regional and local Texas histories, as well as comprehensive works on all of the Southwestern states and the northern Great Plains area.

Of special note is the abundant selection of material dealing specifically with large Texas and Southwestern ranches, especially the 3 million acre XIT Ranch, the Capitol Reservation Lands Grant which Texas traded for its Capitol building.

The library also contains the photographic collection of Erwin E. Smith, more than 600 original negatives comprising a pictorial history of Texas range and cowboy life.

Through the years, besides being a cowboy (one who works on a ranch) and cowman (cattle owner), Haley has become known as a historian and writer. His nearly 700 interviews with frontier cowmen, trail drivers, Indian fighters, Texas rangers, farming settlers, outlaws and other early Southwestern characters are included in the library, as well as copies of his 23 books, such as "A Texan Looks at Lyndon" and "A History of Charles Goodnight."

MANY ARTIFACTS he and others have collected through the years have found a permanent home at the library.

"Cowboys, cattle and the history of the range have always been my favorite subject," Haley said. The era has "lots of fascinating characters. Most characters were highly individualistic, there were not any just cut to the patte rn."

Haley feels part of the cowboy mystique comes from "the action on the range — the element of danger which enhances the appeal and adds excitement."

Television and movie portrayals "have some truth, but a lot of overdoing. It's been overdone in television, just as it has in the field of writing. The real McCoy itself doesn't need any dressing up."

The lifestyle reflected a "challenge. It tested the stamina, courage and ingenuity of cowboys."

In the final analysis, Haley said, "I've been both, cowboy and cowman later on in life. Cowboys follow that life because they like it. As one oldtimer said, 'There's just something about it.'"

Daughter unveils Picasso collection

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The $38 million private collection of one of Pablo Picasso's daughters is on public display for the first time, allowing a close look at the famed Spanish artist's most intimate works.

The "Intimate Picasso" exhibition opened Saturday at Geneva's Musee de l'Athenee and will remain on display until Sept. 6. The collection comprises 89 canvases, drawings, watercolors and bronzes, as well as assorted mementos. Most were kept in bank vaults even before Picasso died in 1973 at the age of 92.

The paintings belong to Maya Ruiz Picasso, baptized Maria Concepcion. She is the daughter of Picasso and Marie Therese Walter, who was 17 when the artist first met her at a Paris department store in 1927.

Muppet mystique better than ever in new film

By Associated Press

THE GREAT MUPPET CAPER is Miss Piggy's finest hour. Anyone not yet entranced by the Muppet mystique will be snared by this movie—a tribute to film history and the special star quality of Miss Piggy, Kermit the Frog, Fozzie Bear and a colorful menagerie of friends. They're sure to win all but the hardest hearts. Who, after all, could resist the charms of La Piggy in a pearly swimsuit doing a water ballet tribute to Esther Williams? Only a true curmudgeon would be unmoved when Miss Piggy is jailed for a crime she didn't commit and faces Kermit from behind prison bars, a classic movie heroine lamenting life in "the slammer." Kermit does his own star turn in a Fred Astaire tuxedo as part of an elaborate dance number right out of the Busby Berkeley musicals of the 1930s. And, lest we forget, there are people in this movie, too. Charles Grodin, in one of the great deadpan performances of any year, falls madly in love with Miss Piggy after his sister, elegant Diana Rigg, hires the pig as her secretary. Grodin's serene performance to Miss Piggy is the movie's romantic high point. From the moment the first credits roll, "The Great Muppet Caper" is a delight—a tribute to the imaginative genius of Jim Henson and his team of Muppet manipulators. A warning: If you let the kids go to this movie without you, you'll be missing a G-rated treat for every adult who was ever a child. By LINDA DEUTSCH.

Black leaders fear Reagan's economic policies

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Despite President Reagan's personal reassurances, many black leaders say they mistrust the Republican administration and fear budget cutting will cost their movement 15 years of hard-won gains.

"Cradle-to-grave discrimination still is the rule for black Americans," said Coretta Scott King, widow of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who attended the 72nd NAACP Annual Convention here last week.

"In spite of the progress we have made, America basically is a dual society with discrimination largely based on race," Mrs. King said.

In his opening day speech at the convention, Reagan said his program of budget cuts "will move us toward black economic freedom because it is aimed at lifting the entire country."

Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel Pierce Jr., the only black in the Cabinet, added his assurance that the president is "a good and decent man."

MOST OF THE BLACK leaders here said they did not disbelieve Reagan's motives, but feared he underestimated the impact proposed budget cuts would have on the disadvantaged, especially poor blacks.

"President Reagan wittingly or unwittingly is leading a cynical assault on the public sector and social justice," said Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Throughout the five-day convention, the prevailing themes appeared to be that the administration's budget cuts threaten blacks and that the civil rights movement needs new vitality.

Mrs. King urged representatives of the 400,000-member NAACP to undertake "massive and militant" non-violent action, including a voter registration drive "on a scale this country has never seen."

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE President Vernon Jordan exhorted the NAACP Youth Branch to forge an interracial civil rights movement.

On economic issues, speaker after speaker rejected Reagan's position that blacks and other minorities will benefit from his anti-inflation efforts because "a rising tide lifts all boats."

"You have to be in the water in the first place," said Detroit Mayor Coleman Young. "They won't let us in the water."

Delegates also criticized Reagan's position on the 1965 Voting Rights Act — considered by the NAACP to be the most crucial immediate issue facing minority Americans.

At issue is not the entire Voting Rights Act, which is on the books permanently, but two key sections that expire next summer.

The NAACP wants Section 2, which prohibits laws that discriminate against minority voters, amended so it could be invoked if intent to discriminate cannot be proved but discriminatory effect can.

THE ORGANIZATION also is seeking an extension to 1992 of the current Section 5. This section provides that states with a history of interfering with voting rights must clear elections changes with the Justice Department or the U.S. District Court in Washington.

Reagan has endorsed extending Section 5 to cover the entire country, in addition to all or parts of 22 states. Hooks and others argue that this would dilute the effectiveness of the provision and could lead to a successful court challenge on constitutional grounds.

Lebanese have hope for peace

By J. MICHAEL KENNEDY
The Los Angeles Times

BEITEDDIN, Lebanon — The car rumbled and jerked its way through the morning Beirut traffic, past the serra wheel at time edge of the city, past the bedouin hovels where sheep lolled on the bare red earth.

This was the road to Beiteddin — south down the Mediterranean coast, then inland. Beiteddin, a tiny hamlet of 800, was the place where Arab leaders were to meet later in the day for yet another conference seeking peace in this country numbed by six years of fighting.

They would meet at the summer palace of Lebanese President Elias Sarkis for this third round of talks on how to stop the shelling and the shooting that has gone on since before the 1976 civil war.

Lebanese leaders said they saw a chance for peace this time. In previous weeks, they had pointed to the participation of Saudi Arabia, a country which normally avoided participation in such matters. They pointed to the end of the three-month siege of Zahlah as another good sign. The Christian Phalangists, major players in this fight where there are many players, had agreed to leave Zahlah last Tuesday after intense negotiations led by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

Past Damour, the road veered east, into the mountains, where banana and citrus trees grew in the lower valleys. The hills were a lush green and, as the car began the sharp ascent toward Beiteddin, the countryside threw off the smell of garbage and sewage and the traffic thinned to almost nothing.

This was an area almost untouched by the years of fighting. No longer were there crumbling buildings, but tidy villages that had been there for hundreds of years. And as the road twisted, following the ridges of the plummeting hills, the presidential palace came into view, a stone fortress with elegant archways built more than 150 years ago.

The palace is now used as a summer presidential residence and it was the spot chosen for the first and third in a series of meetings called the Follow-up Committee to discuss the fate of Lebanon.

On Saturday morning, Beiteddin was a peaceful place, although it was only 18 miles from the troubles of Beirut.

Apple and olive trees grew in the terraced hill-sides. Lebanese soldiers sat on the tree shaded rock walls, talking or cleaning their guns. Some strolled through the compound arm-in-arm, a familiar sign of friendship in Lebanon.

Up in the village itself, the main square was adorned with a poster of President Sarkis and streamers of Lebanese flags were strung all the way down to the palace entrance.

"It is our way of saying we are glad for the talks," said one man on the square.

Now there was only waiting for the representatives of Lebanon, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the Arab League to arrive.

Little was known about the exact plan to be discussed, although a Beirut newspaper had said that the Arab body would consider a four-stage solution that would be carried out over the next year.

The right-wing Phalangist radio station, "Voice of Lebanon," said the plan provides for the deployment of Lebanese army units in southern, eastern and northern Lebanon, obligatory military service, the formation of a national unity government and the collection of heavy weapons from the various military factions.

Senators call for crackdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two senators renewed their call Saturday for a crackdown on government contractors who are awarded millions of dollars in government business despite evidence of fraud and other wrongdoing.

Sens. Bill Cohen, R-Maine, and Carl Levin, D-Mich., said there is "a general failure by the government to effectively protect the disbursement of federal tax dollars by doing business with only honest, responsible public contractors."

The two senators released a report by a Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee based on an investigation that culminated in public hearings in March.

They said the government has failed to strictly enforce procedures for suspending or disqualifying companies suspected of wrongdoing from bidding on public contracts.

The report said that companies that have cheated the government may win new contracts because information about the firms' wrongdoing is not always circulated to all federal agencies.

And some agencies do not honor the recommendation of other agencies to bar a contractor from getting government business, the report added.

The study cited the case of one company which was suspended from doing business with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in 1979. NASA said the company lied about contract costs and the qualifications of three employees working on the Space Shuttle.

Levin and Cohen noted the company subsequently was awarded three defense contracts worth $12 million.

The Air Force testified that it lacked "sufficient legal support" to suspend the company and said it would not disqualify the company unless it was indicted by a federal grand jury.

The Pentagon also testified last March against requiring the sanctions of one federal agency against a contractor to be upheld by all other agencies. It said it would put too many strings on the awarding of defense contracts.

Children still missing after flood

NEW VIRGINIA, Iowa (AP) — Authorities were searching Saturday for two children who were swept off a rural Iowa road by raging floodwaters after a summer storm dumped up to 10 inches of rain on southern Iowa.

A spokesman for the Iowa Highway Patrol said two boys, aged 3 and 5, were lost early Saturday when the car they were riding in was swept off the road three miles south of New Virginia.

Two women who were in the car were rescued after swimming to safety, witnesses said.

Authorities, who did not release any names, said the search was continuing with a 25-member sheriff's posse on horseback assisting other officers in boats.

Eldon Barnard, who lives a mile from the scene, said one of the women came to his home. "She was really hysterical. You couldn't understand anything," he said. "I think she said she had him (one of the children) and tried to hang on to him."

"She said, 'My baby's going to drown,'" Barnard said.

Barnard said about three feet of water was running across the gravel road. "In 36 years, I've never seen the water that high," he said.

"She said, 'We just didn't think it was all that deep. We just drove into it and it swept us off,'" he added.

He said the other woman in the car was found about three hours later.

The flooding came as a storm dumped 6 to 10 inches of rain in portions of southern Iowa.

501 EAST ILLINOIS

The advent of manufactured housing has created rows upon rows of mobile homes in parks and subdivisions.

Suburbs on wheels

Hundreds of Midlanders and incoming residents in the past couple of years have snubbed high apartment and housing rentals and have taken flight to mobile home and trailer parks — where living becomes cheap and pre-assembled.

This migration from increasing financial constraints has undeniably changed the image of the typical mobile home dweller. Practically overnight, the transient traveler who parked his trailer along the highway for a three-day stopover has disappeared from city and county mobile home parks.

Now, mobile home park residents have formed permanent neighborhoods — some of which are characterized by meticulously pruned lawns, tile roofs, wide porches, shuttered windows and carports.

The turnover, in light of Midland's rapid growth, is so infrequent that almost every area manager is turning down dozens of telephone inquiries a week because mobile home parks are at full-capacity.

In the last ten years, manufactured home living in Midland County has seen a dramatic increase of more than 950 percent.

Affordability is the primary reason for this expansion. A single wide mobile home usually sells for about $19,000 and a double wide (two units attached together) is usually priced about $29,000. With lenient financing, a buyer is initially required to put down 10 percent and may pay back the rest at 1½ percent a month for a period of 15 years.

"I prefer a mobile home to conventional housing," said a city employee who has lived in mobile homes off and on for 30 years. "I wouldn't trade it for some of the apartments they're building. When you get through renting an apartment, you don't have anything but a box of receipts. As far as I'm concerned, a mobile home has everything that a house has, the same advantages if not more. It's easier to move, you don't have to pack. You can just tape the doors closed."

Richard Johnson, an employee at a local sports store who has lived in mobile homes for six years, agrees. "This is definitely a good alternative to renting. I'll never live in an apartment again, because I know what some people are paying for rent."

Johnson, who pays $135 a month for a $13,000 14x60 mobile home he bought used in 1976, said he surveyed parks for several days before finding an area that was suitable.

"Sure, you can drive through here and see some real wrecks," he said. "Mobile homes have had bad reputations in the past. You hear strange rumors. You hear people say, 'I don't want to be near a mobile home — they attract tornadoes.'"

Although Johnson said an owner of a manufactured house is restricted in furniture arrangement and the number of times a mobile home can be moved, economics is the major factor that overrides more conventional living.

While the value of a manufactured home has depreciated quickly in the past, increased demand for the product and federal laws regulating safety requirements have recently brought about higher resale values.

"I definitely couldn't afford to put down $5,000 for a house or whatever it takes," Johnson said. "I've got everything I want here. This thing has been in 60 mph winds and aside from a little roof rattling, you don't notice it."

Statistics compiled by the Texas Manufactured Housing Association indicate that more than one million residents are living in mobile or modular homes, making Texas the leading state in total production and sales.

Mobile homes are designed for temporary foundations whereas modular homes are built at a manufacturing plant and installed in two or three sections at the site and placed upon permanent foundations.

It is in Odessa that the mobile home industry has gained a strong foothold, according to the association. More than 65 percent of the new housing market is dominated by manufactured homes.

This is largely due to liberal zoning allowances which permit mobile homes in mixed residential areas, according to Odessa city planners. Here, it is not unusual to find streets lined with manufactured housing, apartments and duplexes.

On the other hand, Midlanders are restricted to mobile home and single family housing subdivisions (where the resident is required to own the plot of land he occupies) and parks.

Because mobile home parks in the city of Midland total less than one-third of those in Odessa city limits, the housing shortage is as drastically felt in this area as elsewhere. Most park managers who are flooded daily by searching families or individuals have found it too confusing to maintain waiting lists.

"I'm telling you, I feel sorry for all these people who want to buy mobile homes and have no place to put them," said one manager. "I'm getting phone calls constantly. Anyone who is running a mobile home park will tell you the situation is bad."

In almost four years, the population of Midland has increased by more than 7,000. Between 1976 and 1980, the average annual growth of single family housing construction was only 570 — a healthy growth but not enough to accommodate an economy in the midst of an energy boom or the influx of 152 families a month.

"Yes, there's a problem with mobile home housing just as there's a problem with conventional housing," said Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development for the city of Midland.

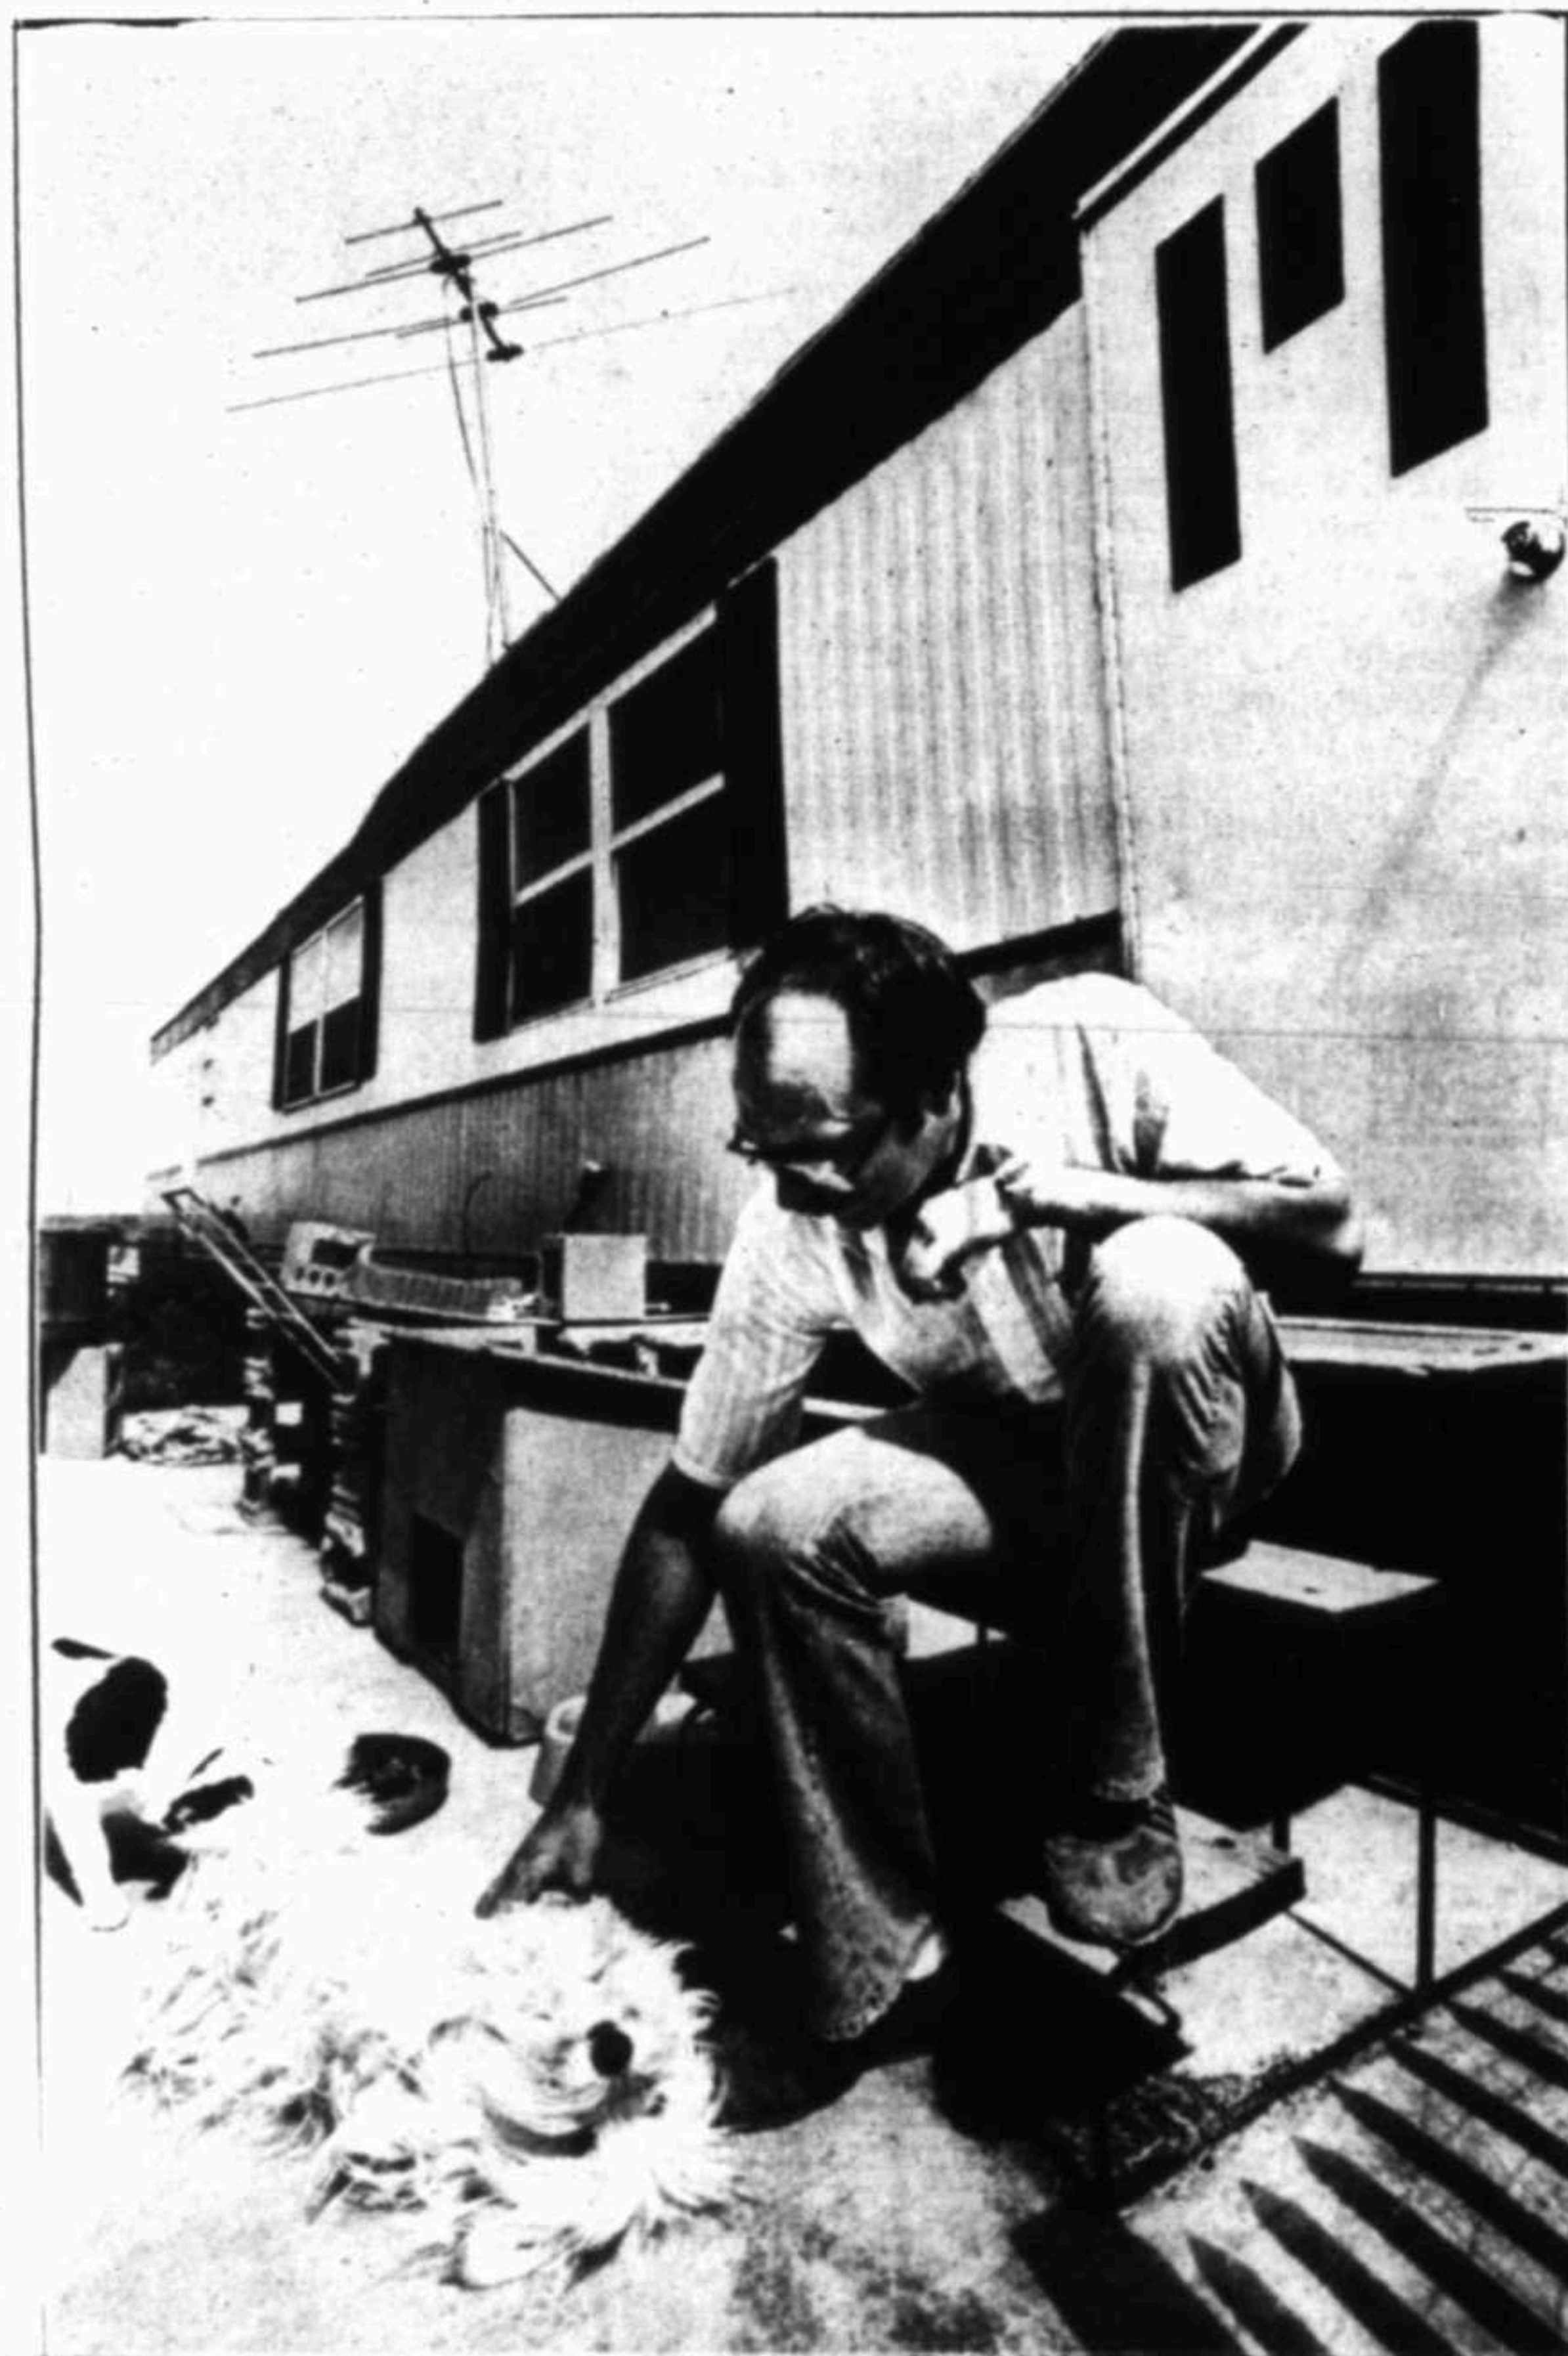

Although Hennessy said at least nine mobile home subdivisions — primarily located in the south part of town — are undeveloped, potential occupants could be discouraged from the cost of land here or the lack of sewage, water and electricity services.

"There's been no lack of receptiveness on the city's part, however," he said. "We're looking at mobile home parks as residential developments, something on the same order as apartment complexes."

Still, as it stands now, local mobile home and trailer park managers claim that manufactured housing — designed specifically for mobility — has decreasing chances for placement outside the dealer's doors.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

An easy way to squeeze a lemon

DEAR HELOISE:

By nesting the prongs of two forks together and holding them in place by the handles in one hand, you can easily squeeze a lemon.

Just turn the lemon half around the prongs as you would do with a normal lemon squeezer. — Patricia Stock time, help children learn how to happily accept responsibility than to teach them while they are young.

The world will be a much happier place for them as adults. And one added plus: I know they will also save time and energy as parents themselves, by teaching their children to do the same.

What greater legacy could I give them to pass on? — Janice Izatt

You can then use a compressor or hand pump instead of having to do all the hard blowing.

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: Gather your children around you and teach them how to enjoy work. My three children and I can clean the house four times as fast as I can by myself, and they are all elementary school age.

DEAR ABBY

Good Samaritan finds nothing but ingratitude

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have read your articles for years and you finally hit a topic that makes me see red. A man reported that he had found a wallet containing $140.

Twice I have found wallets, and once a checkbook (containing cash) in otherwise empty shopping carts. I personally delivered them to the owners. All three people counted their money and never even said "thanks." One even asked me why I hadn't turned in the wallet to the store!

As a hobby, I look for coins and jewelry with a metal locator and have found several class rings, some of which were very valuable. I read the lost-and-found ads in the newspaper and return whatever I find. Abby, would you believe, I have yet to receive a reward? — JOHN IN CLARENDON, ILL.

DEAR JOHN: "Virtue," it is said, "is its own reward." Your experience is surprising. Read on for another surprising letter on the same subject:

DEAR ABBY: I am a 12-year-old boy who found a woman's wallet in plain sight in the parking lot next to a supermarket. It had $127 in it and the owner's name and address. I got back on my bike and rode right over to the lady's house, which was about a mile away. She was just getting out of her car when I got there. I told her that I found her wallet, and she gave me a big hug. After I handed it to her, she looked through it, then she pulled out a $20 bill and gave it to me. I thanked her politely and went home.

That evening I told my parents about it, and my father said, "I don't think you should have accepted $20 for doing what you should have done. A person shouldn't be rewarded for being honest."

After thinking about it, I realized that my father was right, so the next day I biked over to the lady's house and gave her back the $20. She didn't want to take it, but I told her she had to — that my father pointed out something to me that I had never realized before. She got tears in her eyes, then she crossed herself and said, "This is one for Ripley."

Abby, who is Ripley? — DENNIS IN RICHMOND, VA.

DEAR DENNIS: Robert Ripley wrote a famous column titled "Believe It or Not." Bless you. And thanks for a terrific column piece.

DEAR ABBY: Mr. X and I have been going together for two years. Although we don't have a wedding date set, it is understood that we will be married sometime in the future, which means we are "engaged," right? Here is the problem:

When Mr. X receives an invitation from friends or family, for a party or wedding, it's always for "Mr. X and guest." This indicates that they don't care who he brings. In other words, they don't care whether I attend or not.

When I get invitations from my friends or family, my fiancée's name is always included along with mine, indicating that they want him.

When I complained to Mr. X, he said I was being immature to let it bother me and it was no big deal. Abby, to me it is a very big deal. Don't you agree that the "and guest" type of invitation my fiancée receives is an insult to me? And how should this be remedied? — JUST THE GUEST

DEAR GUEST: The "and guest" invitation indicates that your fiancée's friends and family may not be aware that he is officially engaged to you. And the obvious remedy is for him to set them straight. If he doesn't, perhaps you are not as "engaged" as you think you are.

DEAR ABBY: I agree with WEAK IN ILLINOIS. There is a great need for an organization such as Adulterers Anonymous. There are more people suffering from compulsive lust than you could ever imagine. It has destroyed many marriages, including my own.

Compulsive sex is like any other compulsive behavior. The only difference is, the alcoholic gets visibly drunk, the compulsive eater becomes fat and the compulsive gambler loses his money. But there is no visible evidence of compulsive sexual behavior except that he/she cannot continue becoming sexually involved with partner after partner without getting caught eventually. Then there is nothing but heartache. — VICTIM IN DULUTH

Close-up of the Chateau of Chavaniac, located in the Auvergne about 20 miles northwest of Le Puy. This is LaFayette's birthplace. It now houses a museum devoted to LaFayette and Franco-American cooperation in World War I.

A visit to a French castle

EDITOR'S NOTE: This time, well-traveled Midlander Carolyn Fitz-Gerald takes a trip to Southern France.

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

Consider a castle in the south of France, a middle aged woman and a whole French village intent upon entertaining her.

While it sounds like a dream, the castle, birthplace of General Lafayette, hero of the U.S. Revolution, really exists and every person in the small village of Chavaniac-Lafayette is dedicated to strengthening goodwill between Frenchmen and Americans.

Back by Rotary Clubs International, the 14th century castle is the site of such gracious hospitality that you tend to forget immediately the sidewalk cafe waiter you shortchanged you in Paris and the taxi driver who let you stumble through your few words of French rather than ease your way with his fluent English.

Invited for an afternoon tour of the castle, our group was met by the mayor and one of the town councilmen who took an immediate liking to us and asked us to "spend a few days" with them. Those few days meant nine course meals prepared by the best cooks in the village and served by the prettiest village girls, settling into the master suite once enjoyed by Lafayette's parents and a tour of the countryside in and around the Auvergne region that included quiet valleys, breathtaking cliffs, rushing waterfalls and convents and monasteries such as Lavandieu which could attract even the most jaded tourist to the joys of the contemplative life.

Built in the 14th century and restored after a fire in the 17th century, the castle is complete with large banquet rooms, stone fireplaces big enough to stand in, wide shuttered windows and imposing turrets.

Thoughts of damaging the period furniture urged me to set my suitcase on the floor rather than risk opening a drawer, but I did spend one quiet hour at Madame Lafayette's fragile writing desk and since there was no other place to sleep, I made myself enjoy the sumptuous feather bed with the silk sheets and satin coverlet.

Lying there above the formal rose garden lit with moonlight, I summoned up thoughts of Marie Antoinette's royal treatment before she was beheaded, but I rose early, strolled around a very friendly village, even to the last dog, and returned to scents of coffee and French pastries from the kitchen; no guillotine in sight.

Breakfast was continental style but lunch consisted of soup and only two entrees so that you could subsist until a supper which began with thrush pate, wound through four hours of extraordinary local wine (served with a carafe of water), good conversation, candlelight, 16 piece place settings and an assortment of entrees, vegetables and salads. One evening ended with the unexpected touch of Shirley Temple as Heidi on black and white TV, a real treat for the villagers, and in that company, fun for us as well. Other evenings were brought to a close in the music room to the strains of Saint-Saens and Brahms which I was definitely ready for after a long day of sightseeing.

A side trip to Le Puy, lace making capital of the world, nestled in a little valley below the Chappel de Puy and blessed by a town monument of the Virgin Mary made from melted cannon, was followed by a tour of rugged country down to the river Allier.

Along the river were a number of new vacation lodges, just opened to the public. The entire area, one of the most beautiful in France, long overlooked and regarded as backward, is now beginning to thrive after a boost from the president of the French Railroads and a number of businessmen whose birthplaces, like Lafayette's, lie in the Auvergne area.

It was hard to say goodbye to the castle, but I departed bearing a card that pronounced me a fellow of the Lafayette Memorial and left me wishing that I was one of the American teachers of French who are entertained there each summer.

On to Avignon and the Palace of the Popes where I was often asked to use my imagination as so many of the paintings and other treasures had been looted since Pope John XXII transferred the pontifical court there temporarily in 1309.

Not a national monument, the palace is owned by the city of Avignon, which is only fair since one of the seven popes who resided there once bought the city.

A quiet city dedicated to culture and festivals. Avignon welcomes travelers with musical and theatrical performances in July and August.

As we arrived at the Avignon train station to board the Mistral, the new TGV, rapidly becoming known as the "bullet train," stood on the next track after a trial run from Paris. The TGV now offers express service at speeds up to 200 miles per hour from Paris to Lyon and, hopefully, will soon break ground speed records for public transportation as far as Nice.

We were able to get a look at the cars and even though they held the usual plush seats, bars and well-appointed dining, the something extra was in the attitude of the TGV personnel who let you know that this was the train of the future, the Concorde of the rails, completely electric, computer run and never late.

A restful ride back to Paris and then dinner at the Auberge Des Deux Signes overlooking Notre Dame Cathedral; added another occasion where the food was superb and the serving a talented performance.

The bus ride back to the Hotel Marignan off the Champs Elysees through throngs of people circulating after midnight certainly let us know that we were in the entertainment capital of the world where even the street lights are works of art. But the most prevalent art form in Paris, I decided, was the Paris woman. Try as you will, you can't quite match the best dressed American woman with the inherent style displayed by most French women on Paris streets. Even when they are casually attired for strolling with the baby carriage in the Tuileries or buying a loaf of bread at the nearest bakery, they look like heroines in a Fellini movie.

Big birds

GRANT, Fla. (AP) — The scene was enough to set Joel Ruth's heart thumping — a bright red, 3-foot-tall bird.

Ruth, a veteran bird-watcher, knew such exotic-looking creatures simply weren't found in Brevard County. But there they were, on Grant Island in the Indian River.

"About six red birds were standing on a big nest of sticks just staring at me," Ruth said.

The Sunday sighting sent Ruth frantically searching through his reference books to find out if indeed he had spotted a rare bird out of its natural habitat.

Honor attendants were

Felix Acree of Denver, Colo. and Chris J. Earle of San Marcos.

Tanji McDougle of San Antonio was bridesmaid. Bridesmaids were Debbie Hinshaw of Houston and Carolyn Terry, sister of the bridegroom, and Barbara Grafa, sister-in-law of the bridegroom, both of Midland. Serving as flower girls were Courtney Grafa and Tiffany Grafa, nieces of the bridegroom of Midland. Chad Shaddy, nephew of the bridegroom of Midland, was candlelighter. Seating the guests were Robin Todd and Brent Huckabay, both of Midland, and Sid Shepperd and Carlton Shepperd, brothers of the bride of Houston.

Groomsmen were Trey Grafa, brother of the bridegroom, and Bryan Pope, both of Midland, Jimmy Hinshaw of Houston and Brent Hicks of San Angelo.

After a wedding trip to the Cayman Islands, the couple will live in San Antonio.

The bride is employed as a physical therapist in San Antonio. Grafa is presently attending medical school at the Methodist Hospital in San Antonio.

Diet facts & fallacies

These nutritional tips brought to you by DIET CENTER

Once again, it's time to bring out the bicycles, tennis rackets, water skis, and jogging shoes. Summer has finally arrived (all the more reason to get your B vitamins)! If you plan to step up your exercise in the months to come, thiamine B-1 is especially important.

Acting as a coenzyme in converting sugar into a usable energy source, thiamine also helps the body rid itself of two waste products of exercise—pyruvic acid (by breaking it down into carbon dioxide and water) and lactic acid (by helping to reconvert it into glycogen).

Thiamine, because it is not stored in the body in any great quantity, must be supplied daily.

While excessive amounts of sugar cause a thiamine depletion, so will smoking and drinking alcohol. Foods with high levels of thiamine include brewer's yeast, wheat germ, blackstrap molasses and bran.

It is because thiamine is a component of the germ and bran of wheat, the husk of rice, and that portion of all grains, which is commercially milled away to give the grain a lighter color and finer texture, that Diet Center recommends you use whole-grain products. Not only do they contain more bulk and fiber, but also more vitamins, including thiamine.

It's possible to dress coolly for summer

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

"Dressing comfortably is important, whether for the occasion, individual taste, current fashion or the climate," according to Becky Saunders, extension clothing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Mrs. Saunders' office is based in Amarillo. She took a tour of Texas recently, visiting with media representatives, county extension agents and other consumer specialists.

"You can still stay cool while looking good," added Mrs. Saunders. This will depend on three factors: fiber and fabric selection, garment styles and care characteristics.

She also said that labeling requirements may, in the future, be changed to include the insulation value of a garment or set of garments. "That is because energy is so important now in every way," she said.

A new term, clo, has recently been introduced to measure the insulation value. "A clo unit is a measure of the insulation value," said Mrs. Saunders.

The insulation value of an ensemble is not the same as the sum of the clo values for each piece," said the specialist. "When fabrics are worn over each other, they are compressed and the insulation value is then around 80 percent of the sum of the two," she added.

She explained this by an example: A man's lightweight, long sleeve shirt has an insulative value of 0.22 clo. His light, long sleeve sweater is worth 0.20 clo. If he wears both, the insulation value is 0.34 clo rather than 0.42 clo.

Indoor summer temperatures of 78-80 F. call for clothing with insulation values of 0.45 or less, especially when humidity is high. At 80-82 F. air movement is needed, such as a fan, or the clo value required to maintain thermal comfort drops to about 0.15 clo.

Of course, many other factors affect thermal comfort. Some of these are a person's general health, normal activity levels, age, weight, and even attitudes toward heat and cold.

The humidity, rate of air movement, and the surrounding furnishings, wall coverings and floor covering also affect thermal comfort.

"Of the many things that affect comfort, however, clothing is one of the easiest to vary without increasing your energy consumption," said Mrs. Saunders.

She also discussed other factors affecting a person's comfort in hot weather.

"Dark colors and black absorb color, so they heat up faster," she said.

"The head is also important in the hot sun," she said. "It must stay cool. Hats are important. The pioneer men and women had a good idea when they wore cowboy hats, sombreros, bonnets, and floppy hats, or carried parasols and umbrellas."

"If you're going to be out for a long period of time, it's best to wear a hat," she advised.

She went on to say that summer hats should have a brim, be unlined and have an open weave. "Cowboys use logic when they wear felt hats in winter and straw in summer."

Getting wet—when wearing a swimsuit, for example—can make one hotter, continued Mrs. Saunders. "When water gets between fibers, it magnifies and reflects the sun. The body will be cooled at first because the water is cool, but the sun will reflect off of the fabric and eventually one gets hotter," she said.

"One should wear coverings to protect from the sun and keep the skin cool—much like the Middle Easterners do," said Mrs. Saunders. "It's better to wear a light, long sleeved blouse than a halter."

Colors are also a consideration for hot weather dressing. "Blues, greens and pastels are psychologically cooler," she said. "Traditionally, fashion has followed this trend."

In choosing fibers, cottons are good, especially no-iron cottons. Polyester with special finishes is an excellent choice.

Layers can affect one's comfort, too, she said. "Layers trap the air and insulate. But if you want to stay comfortable in an air-conditioned office and again when you step outside, it's best to wear a light jacket or light sweater which can be removed outside."

"Shawls are a lot more popular than they used to be," she said. "They should be unlined and light enough for summer wear."

She advised that dirty clothes can also be hotter than laundered garments "because dirt clogs the pores of the fabric and it isn't allowed to breathe," explained Mrs. Saunders.

"An oilfield worker would do better to choose a clean pair of pants and shirt to stay cooler even though he knows it will get dirty in his work," she said.

Her one wish is that the conflict between men and women's summer fashions could be resolved. "Men who are required to wear the business suits want the office temperature to be as cold as possible, while women wearing the summer fashions of sundresses, sleeveless outfits and lightweight fabrics stay uncomfortable." She added that women are usually the loser in this battle because the man is usually the boss.

Readers ask questions about gardening

BY TOM STEVENSON
The Washington Post

Q: Many homeowners top their trees. I am horrified to see how butchered some of them look. Is it considered a good practice?

A: If a tree has a poor root system that can supply only a limited amount of moisture and nutrients, topping and thinning out may help it survive. Many cities have some of their trees topped for this reason. Because of their location, the roots cannot grow as they should. Some homeowners have their trees topped because they think it reduces danger of damage by limbs falling during heavy storms. It is generally believed much of the topping is unnecessary and harmful.

Q: Four or five years ago you wrote a column about a pink climbing rose that was so fragrant. Can you give me its name?

A: America, 1976 All America Rose Selection, provides many delightfully fragrant, salmon-pink flowers; Blossom-time blooms all summer long, producing cameo-pink flowers with good fragrance; Climbing Charlotte Armstrong is a heavy bloomer, with large, deep pink flowers with good fragrance; Climbing First Prize, with deep pink, moderately fragrant flowers, blooms freely in the spring, and Dr. J.H. Nicolas, rose-pink flowers with good fragrance, blooms all season long.

Q: Galls have formed on one of my dogwoods. What causes them, and how can I get rid of them?

A: They are caused by the clubgall midge, an insect. These flies lay their eggs on new growth in early spring; the tiny maggots cause the galls to form. The best control is to prune out the galls and destroy them during the summer.

Q: I have two apple trees that attract many bees. How can I keep them sprayed without harming the bees?

A: Apple trees should not be sprayed with an insecticide while they are in bloom. When the flowers are gone, the bees no longer visit them and spraying can be done without harm to them.

Q: My old rose bushes are having some yellow leaves. The yellow leaves do not have black spots, and the bushes look healthy and bloom nicely. What do you think could be wrong?

A: Spider mites could be responsible; they are particularly bad during hot, dry weather. Use a magnifying glass and take a look at the undersides of the leaves. Or, hold a sheet of white paper under the leaves and thump the branch hard. If mites are present they should fall off the leaves. Spraying the plants regularly with water from the garden hose should provide fair control.

Q: My azaleas are definitely sick; can you tell me what is wrong with them?

A: The specimen leaves you sent show serious injury from lace bugs. They are tiny insects with light, filmy wings that suck juice from the underside of the leaves. Usually they attack only plants growing in full sun. Spraying with malathion should provide control. Directions on the label for mix and application should be followed closely.

Q: If I put moth balls around the shrubs in front of the house, will it keep dogs and cats away from them?

A: Moth balls have questionable value as a repellent for dogs and cats. The moth balls are poisonous and should not be put any place where children may get at them.

Q: Is it safe to use 2-4-D to kill the weeds in my vegetable garden?

A: Only a trace of that herbicide is needed to damage tomatoes, melons, sweet potatoes and beans. It can be carried by air currents and cause injury a block away from the sprayed area.

Q: Does it pay to buy lady beetles for the vegetable garden so we won't have to spray?

A: Winter-collected lady beetles when released in the spring are likely to disperse quickly and widely, particularly when temperatures stay above 65 degrees.

Tips for kids alone

By ERMA BOMBECK

Open letter to child of parents who work outside the home.

Dear ———:

Just because your mother and father are not with you this summer to nag you to death, take away privileges and threaten you with violence, you are probably thinking they do not love you. This is simply not true. They worry about you all the time during the day when they are gone because you are in an unfamiliar world with decisions you may be making for the first time by yourself. Being a child at home alone in the summer is a high-risk profession. This is not meant to frighten you, but these are just some of the dangers that may threaten you.

Freezer burns: These are white patches of frost that appear on the skin due to standing in front of an open refrigerator all day while you check the contents to make sure it contains the same food as when you checked it 15 minutes earlier.

Drowning by over-sudsing: A child fed intravenously by television soaps for nine hours will eventually fall into a coma. In the final stages, you will not hear the phone ring, feel water from the garden hose around your feet, or realize you are still in your pajamas from the first of June.

The Cain and Abel syndrome: Becomes more of a reality as the summer goes on. A sibling who started out the summer being "okay" now gets on your nerves every time he looks at you. You want to plug up the openings in his face. Sometimes he looks at you when he isn't even in the house.

Strangers in the house: Never open your door to strangers. It's chancy. They know too much and usually talk. That's why it's smart to talk through the door, especially to well-meaning neighbors who want to know why the dog is yipping and why someone just threw a pan in the front yard with burnt popcorn in it.

Creative playmates: Beware of friends with ideas of what to do. They will get you a SWAT team of babysitters faster than you can say, "We can build the raft, float it down the Ohio river and be home before your Mom gets here."

But mostly, look out for mothers... especially the one you have called 13 times in one hour to tell her there's nothing to do and when she comes home finds the milk is still out, there's a crack in the sliding door and her pantyhose are flying from the TV antenna.

She can hurt you.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Presidential press corps out standing in Rancho del Cielo fields

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — When President Reagan goes to his mountaintop ranch to relax, teams of network television cameramen jump into four-wheel drive vehicles and race into the hills to a neighboring peak overlooking his "Rancho del Cielo" near Santa Barbara, Calif.

From the vantage point two miles away they train long lenses on Reagan's 688-acre spread in a day-long stakeout for a glimpse of the president.

The temperature was hovering around 100 degrees up there one day during Reagan's trip last weekend — 10 to 15 degrees hotter than along the seashore at the base of the mountain. The TV crews took up coolers and erected tents to protect themselves from the sun.

The payoffs have been slim. Fog sometimes obscures any shot of the ranch. When it's sunny, heat waves make the picture shimmer. The most to hope for is a picture of Reagan's helicopter arriving or departing, kicking up a dust storm.

Though people can be seen walking around the ranch and riding horses, it's impossible to identify them.

Reagan has told aides that someday he'd like to play a trick on the cameramen for invading his privacy.

His plan: while riding his horse, he'll suddenly stop, clutch his hands to his chest as if shot and topple from his horse ... then long moments later, get up, dust himself off and ride on.

WHEN PRESIDENTS TRAVEL, they live on a schedule planned minute-by-minute. A page from the program of the just-concluded six-day trip began this way for last Monday:

—8:50 a.m. The president and Mrs. Reagan depart (hotel) suite enroute garage entrance via elevator.

—8:55 a.m. The president and Mrs. Reagan depart hotel, garage entrance, enroute Beverly Hills High School. (White House aides borrowed the school's baseball field as a landing spot for the president's helicopter.)

—9 a.m. The president and Mrs. Reagan arrive Beverly Hills High School and board Marine One.

However, everything came to a stop when Reagan's motorcade pulled up to the helicopter. For several long minutes the president remained in his limousine, with Secret Service agents stationed around the car.

Had someone spotted a suspicious person nearby? Had Reagan received an urgent telephone call on the mobile phone?

No.

The president had to wait 10 minutes because Michael K. Deaver, one of his three top aides, and Deaver's wife had missed the motorcade. By the time they rushed up in a station wagon, Reagan and his wife were on the helicopter. At the chopper door, the Deavers were greeted by the president and his wife, both of them pointing at their watches and jokingly scolding the late-comers.

STOPPING OFF BRIEFLY in Denver to address the national convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Reagan got a cool reception when he tried to sell his program of budget cuts to the black audience.

But after his speech there was a gift waiting backstage from Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the civil rights group, and Margaret Bush Wilson, its chairman.

The present: a jar of black and brown jelly beans. "I must tell you," Hooks said, "there is one white jelly bean in there." Reagan laughed.

BACK IN SANTA BARBARA, the White House press corps stays in a beachfront hotel while the president is at the ranch.

Although the weather was warm and sunny, reporters were grumbling about high prices. A modest room in the rear of the hotel — with no view of the ocean, no air-conditioning and no balcony — costs $144.16 a night, tax included.

That was a special press rate. For an average tourist the same room would have cost $99, according to a hotel clerk.

Bob Manning, head of the White House transportation office, said reporters were charged a premium because the hotel had to hold rooms open for the reporters' two-day stay during a busy period in which rooms usually are rented a week at a time. A hotel clerk said the rate also included a pro-rated share of the cost of a business room that was turned into a press room.

The hotel shall remain nameless here because it already is promoting its White House connection.

Its restaurant menus proclaim it has been "officially designated western headquarters for the White House and press corps ..."

"When President Reagan is at the ranch," the menu informs diners, "famous personalities, reporters and newscasters from the world of radio, television and the press are seen throughout the complex enjoying our beachfront location and amenities."

Postscript: White House spokesman Larry Speakes says the hotel hasn't been designated anything, and commercial enterprises aren't supposed to use the White House name in promotions.

CONSUMER TIPS

Flood damaged cars may soon appear

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

The Better Business Bureau of Austin has warned our office that flood damaged automobiles may soon appear in the Permian Basin area. The automobiles were flood damaged following severe rains in the Austin and Central Texas area in late May. At least four new car dealers suffered flood damage to over 300 new Volkswagens, Ford, Plymouth, Chrysler and Toyota model automobiles.

As usually happens in such incidences, the automobiles were sold to insurance companies by the automobile dealers to be resold to salvage dealers for parts and scrap. However, a potential problem exists for unwary consumers if the salvage dealers clean the automobiles and sell them to a used car dealer for resale to the public.

Often, such water damaged cars are irreparable; yet they may be made to appear sound through several standard tricks. Such cars are frequently offered as "fantastic" bargains, either as new or used automobiles. Although submerged automobiles can be spruced up to look and run satisfactorily for a while, problems may develop after about six months, including corroded wiring leading to electrical problems, rust on the body, mildewed carpet and seats, and transmission and/or engine problems. Use the following suggestions to identify flood-damaged automobiles.

1. Check trunk around tail lights for mud.
2. Look inside door panels for straw or mud.
3. Look for silt line on radiator.
4. Run fingers under dash for sand or sludge.

5. Check under carpet in car and trunk for silt and debris.
 6. Look for milky finish on interior vinyl.
 7. Test all electrical components, such as turn signals and windshield wipers.
 8. Inspect dashboard gauges and dials for evidence of water.
 9. Check for corrosion and rusting underneath the car's hood, bumpers and body.
 10. Examine the interior of the automobile, including the trunk. Remove the rear seat and check for musty odors and water-marks on stuffing and upholstery.
 11. Be watchful for white smoke being emitted from the exhaust pipe. This may be an indication that the engine has recently been cleaned out, an unusual practice ordinarily employed only when something is serious or wrong.
 12. Most of all, do business with a responsible dealer. He will not attempt to sell a flood-damaged automobile without describing its actual condition.
 13. Beware of a much lower price ($500-$600) on a new car than the going market price.
 14. Check the title — if it's a "duplicate original" it may be the car was salvaged or from a dealer in a flooded area, and a duplicate title was applied for to obscure that information.
 15. Check the vehicle's I.D. number with the manufacturer to determine if the auto is still under warranty — or if the warranty has been canceled because the car was flood damaged.
- This Better Business Bureau has obtained a list of ID numbers from the automobiles that were flood damaged in Austin. Individuals who suspect an automobile they are considering purchasing to be flood damaged may check the vehicle ID number by calling 563-1880 to determine if the automobile was salvaged from the floods in Austin.

No turning back for ousted editor

By DAN TEDRICK
Associated Press Writer

CHULA VISTA, Calif. (AP) — Jesus Blancornelas publishes the news of Tijuana, Mexico, five days a week. Someday, he hopes, he will be able to go home to it.

It has been 15 months since Blancornelas fled to the United States after his ouster as the editor of ABC, one of the biggest newspapers in Baja California.

He says it was a case of government repression. His co-editors accuse him of mismanagement and say he was ousted in an internal power struggle.

"I will win, and I will return to Mexico," pledges the bearded, bespectacled editor who calls himself a thorn in the government's side.

IN THE MEANTIME, he renews his visa every six months, puts out his newspaper and sleeps in a box in a barren apartment within sight of the Mexican city where his wife and three sons live.

Five reporters and a photographer who once worked for him at ABC telephone Blancornelas with the news of Tijuana and deliver material that he pastes up and publishes in a San Diego print shop.

Blancornelas calls the new newspaper Zeta, Spanish for the last letter of the alphabet. "We have gone from the start of the alphabet to the end," he explains. "The end has no continuation, only permanence."

Jose Robles, co-owner of ABC, said Wednesday that Blancornelas is not a victim of repression, although he added that he has not decided yet to press his charges of mismanagement. He also says he and Francisco Ramirez own 60 percent of the stock, compared with Blancornelas's 30 percent, and thus are legally entitled to run the newspaper.

"BLANCORNELAS says the governor is the boss here, but that's not true," said Robles. "We are his partners, and his problem is with us."

Zeta, sold only on the streets of Tijuana, has gone from 5,000 copies to 15,000 copies, five days a week, its editor says. The paper's young workers earn $50 to $65 a week.

Its 44-year-old editor has had a running battle with the government. He founded ABC in 1977 after being forced out of his job as editor of Ultimas Noticias, the oldest newspaper in Tijuana.

ABC's testy editorials created animosity at once with the new governor, Roberto de la Madrid. Its stories alleged, among other things, that government officials were driving stolen U.S. cars.

In a speech to Mexican farmers, de la Madrid was quoted as saying of Blancornelas: "You use insecticide to get rid of pests in your fields. Perhaps it is time to use insecticide on this pest of journalism."

ONE MORNING IN November 1979, members of the Confederation of Workers of Mexico, including five ABC employees, carried Blancornelas, his staff and their desks out of the newspaper office.

The co-owners of the newspaper accused him of mismanagement, charging that ABC was found to be short nearly $70,000. Blancornelas contends that he took the money to defend his employees against the union that threw them all into the street.

The public prosecutor Tijuana declined to bring the charges to trial. But Blancornelas, who says he fled to avoid arrest, believes the charges would be pressed if he went home.

Blancornelas also accused de la Madrid of ordering the takeover, a charge the governor denies. And he accused the other owners of being represented by de la Madrid's attorney, a charge that Robles denies.

The editor has filed 10 civil suits in a fight to regain control of ABC. A Tijuana judge ordered his reinstatement as president, a decision that was overturned by a three-judge federal court in Hermosillo. That decision is under further appeal.

Lidocaine use probed

By PHILIP WELD JR.
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — In the mid-1960s, when lidocaine was first used to regulate heart rhythm, a few documented deaths were reported in medical literature due to improper use.

Now lidocaine is used worldwide to prevent sudden death in heart attack patients.

But if improperly used, the drug still poses dangers, and lidocaine is now being investigated as a possible cause in the deaths of 27 people at two hospitals here.

Dr. Milford G. Wyman, cardiologist and expert on the use of the drug, says that "if given correctly according to important guidelines, it is the safest anti-arrhythmic drug we have."

Arrhythmia is irregular beating of the heart, a common condition following heart attacks.

He said that in the early days of the drug's use "there was an occasional case where a patient got too much lidocaine and got cardiac arrest if the drug were improperly given."

Wyman, clinical professor of medicine at the USC School of Medicine, said older patients — the hospital patients ranged from 52 to 95 in age — are more susceptible to adverse reactions.

Lidocaine, a drug related to Novocain, was first used as a local anesthetic in minor surgery, often to replace Novocain, which can cause allergic reactions.

Used intravenously on heart patients, it affects the central nervous system.

Fathers, handicapped children share special frustrations, joys

By KATHY MCCARTHY
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — Giggles fill the room and glue covers the table as 3-year-old Daniel Jones and his father, Dave, craft paste and paper into heart-shaped greetings for the ladies in their lives.

Bob Erion and his son, Robbie, age 23 months, pilot wind-up whales and toy turtles through the shallows of a plastic pool.

What's so special about kids and their fathers playing together on a Saturday morning?

All these youngsters are handicapped. Some have Down's syndrome, with its varying degrees of mental retardation. Several are blind. One is blind and deaf.

The Father-Infant-Toddler Program is a pilot effort to draw fathers together for special sessions with their handicapped babies and exchange information with other men like themselves.

TWICE A MONTH, dads and youngsters from all over western Washington state head for the University of Washington's Experimental Education Unit.

Don Meyer and Greg Schell, who work at the EEU, built the program by trial, error and asking fathers what they'd like to do next. Meyer handles the infants class — children up to 18 months — while Schell handles the toddlers class — 18 to 36 months. Each class draws seven to 10 father-child pairs for a two-hour session featuring games, songs, snacks and a guest speaker.

"The original idea behind this was that dads of handicapped kids are distinctly different — they have a child that is different and I think they view themselves differently after that, too," said Schell, 32, the father of a 3-year-old girl with Down's syndrome.

"The thing was to bring them together and break the isolation of that difference, to make them feel part of the mainstream of life."

"I think it's made me a lot closer to Danny," said Jones, 36, who has been coming to the sessions since his son was 6 months old. Jones, a sixth grade teacher, and his wife have another child, 4-year-old Carly.

"IT PROVIDES AN opportunity to share with other dads our feelings, joys, frustrations ... and it helps us develop a sense of pride in the development of our children, even with their limited abilities," Jones said.

"It's a unique, special time — and it's kind of nice not having the mothers along."

To Pat Giorgetti, 28, "It's kind of like our own exclusive club."

"You can appreciate other children's accomplishments — it's an emotional lift for the fathers," said Giorgetti, father of 2-year-old Toni. "The class also makes you more aware of your child's needs and gives you a chance to talk and relate to other fathers."

A typical session starts with "share time" or, as Meyer puts it, "what's hot and new in each child's development."

Fathers also learned to read clues to their babies' behavior — clues that tell them when their children are upset, when they're happy, when they've had enough to eat.

Next comes music and activity time.

"Teaching the kids to do somersaults was fun," said Schell. "We had one boy who knew how to do it and we figured, 'Well, everybody else can learn.'"

"We get out there and do greeting songs, or we might get up and have the fathers dance with their kids to a waltz, or Beatles' tunes or Zorba the Greek," said Meyer.

"THIS GIVES THEM permission to act really silly and just have fun with their kid. Not being a father myself, I'm usually demonstrating these things with a rag doll. They (the dads) take a look at me and figure they can't look any more stupid than I do."

Meyer and Schell also toss out "zinger" to stimulate discussion.

A typical zinger: "A recent study polling grade school youngsters found that if forced to choose, the majority would give up their fathers rather than their TV sets. What do you think?"

Guest speakers might discuss such things as finding a dentist who will work with a developmentally disabled child or how to set up wills and trusts that will take care of the child in the future.

The program is funded through September on a research grant of less than $5,000, provided by the Washington Association for Retarded Citizens.

Rebecca DuBose, director of the project, says the U.S. Department of Education has approved the university's request for a grant to operate the program as a national demonstration project. Release of the grant, and its amount, is now up to Congress, she said.

"Traditionally it has been the moms who have been involved with the baby," said Meyer. "But there's another very important character in there and that's the dads. If the grant comes through, we could expand our program to other family members — such as siblings of handicapped children and even grandparents."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Many child problems ignored by parents

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know it sounds ridiculous, but my wife and I are having a disagreement over our 6-year-old son. I think the problem is that she did not have any brothers and therefore doesn't know how a boy is supposed to act. She becomes concerned about behavior on his part which I realize is just normal because I can recall acting the same way when I was a boy. Wouldn't you agree there's a difference between abnormal behavior and the normal behavior of an active child? Some words of reassurance would be helpful. — Mr. T.J.J.

Dear Mr. J.: As you phrase the question, it's hard to disagree — normal behavior and abnormal behavior are not the same. The difference of opinion between yourself and your wife, however, appears to revolve around which type of behavior your son is displaying. While it is decidedly unhelpful to see a problem where none exists, it is equally harmful to ignore a problem that does exist. And parents may often be as guilty of one as of the other.

Dr. Frank B. Miller, a psychiatrist at the Duke University Medical Center, notes that many parents often tend to ignore obvious symptoms of a child's emotional disturbance because they can't bring themselves to accept the fact that he or she may be in need of help. If a child does need treatment, however — and whether this applies to your son is not evident from your letter — the earlier it is obtained, the better. As is true in the field of medicine generally, the earlier a problem is diagnosed and the patient treated, the more likely the possibility of a successful outcome.

The kinds of symptoms that may suggest a need for therapy can only be discussed in generalities, and I would caution parents not to jump to conclusions. However, there may be cause for concern when a child displays too much activity, aggression, demanding behavior, anxiety, anger or sadness. The key words here are "too much." Emotional illness in children also may be manifested in various developmental areas, such as speech, motor skills and the ability to concentrate, pay attention, and think.

Dr. Miller suggests that parents should be alert to developmental milestones. For example, children would be walking well by two or two and one-half years of age; by three or four years of age, a child should be able to tolerate being separated from his or her parents; between four and six years of age, the child should be able to start sharing; and by five or six years of age, a child should be able to sit attentively in class. Another possible symptom of emotional disturbance is severe nightmares, especially those that seem to continue to affect the child for several minutes after he or she awakens.

As I mentioned earlier, it can be just as harmful for parents to become concerned about a problem that does not exist, as to ignore a problem that does exist and that would be amenable to treatment. If you and your wife are still in disagreement over the issue, why not discuss the matter with your pediatrician. If there is a minor problem, he may feel competent to handle it himself; if he feels he does not have the necessary skills to tackle it, he may suggest a referral to a psychiatrist; and if there is no problem, both you and your wife will be able to relax a little more without an unnecessary bone of contention causing friction between you.

If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Navy tightens grip on beards

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Top Navy officers and enlisted men, be warned. Uncle Sam wants your beards.

The new policy will be announced by the Pentagon next week, effective July 10, as part of the Navy's pride and professionalism program, the San Diego Union reported Thursday.

The latest orders from Adm. Thomas Hayward, chief of naval operations:

"Commanding officers and executive officers of ships and bases are prohibited from wearing beards. So are master and senior chief petty officers and other chief petty officers in positions of authority and visibility."

"The admiral's instructions are broad enough that commanding officers could interpret them to also require junior officers in their commands to shave off their beards.

"The no-beard order affects men going through officer preparation courses, the Naval Academy, officer candidate schools and aviation officer candidate schools."

The police of allowing Navy men to grow beards was instituted by Adm. Elmo Zumwalt in the 1960s.

Zumwalt also eliminated liberty cards, but now all non-rated sailors will have to use them to leave their ship or base, the newspaper said.

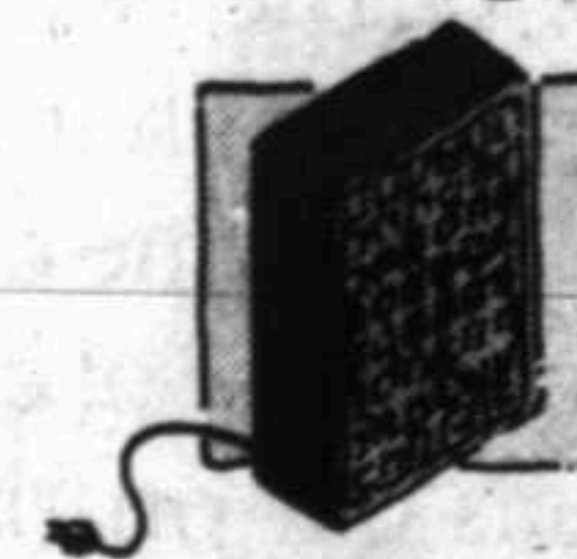

The new orders also reportedly bring back the privilege of first-class petty officers and chiefs to advance to the head of food lines, except in exchanges or commissaries.

Use a fan to help hold down electric bills.

In many homes, air conditioning uses more electricity than all other appliances combined. And with electricity costing a lot more this summer, it pays to do everything you can to use less electricity. Try living a little warmer. Set your thermostat at 78° or 80° or even higher, and use a fan to circulate the air. You may be slightly uncomfortable at first, but most people adjust very quickly to living warmer. If you use a fan and dress in cool clothing, you may not even notice a difference.

Quarantine laws aren't flighty

Bird smugglers' cargo often diseased

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Roaming the open-air food market in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, are street vendors who deal in brightly colored exotic birds — a temptation to the border town tourist, but a bane for officials trying to keep disease out of the United States.

Officials say they do all they can to catch birds being smuggled across the international bridges over the Rio Grande, but they believe more birds are brought in than are caught.

Federal law requires imported exotic birds to undergo a quarantine period to ensure that they do not have Newcastle's disease, which can spread rapidly through poultry flocks. Birds in the parrot family also can carry psittacosis, or parrot fever, which can be transmitted to humans.

Despite the dangers, the temptation is too great for some bird lovers and people are caught every month trying to smuggle birds into the country. U.S. Customs officials confiscated 11 exotic birds in June from people trying to sneak them into El Paso.

The birds are readily available in most border cities.

A recent stroll through the downtown food market in Juarez found three vendors with their stacks of cages filled with parrots, parakeets, canaries and finches. Two of the vendors who were partners had about 20 birds at their spot on the busy sidewalk. Another had about 15.

The vendors are quick to show their wares to visiting gringos, but are suspicious when too many questions are asked.

One vendor told two reporters he had never sold birds to Americans. But later, his partner said, "We just sell them. We don't know what happens to them."

Tiring of the questions, the vendors simply picked up their stack of cages and walked away. Minutes later, they had returned to their favorite spot on the sidewalk.

Another vendor showed reporters posing as potential buyers how to smuggle the birds through the checkpoints on the bridges.

He tore small airholes in a paper sack, stuffed a green parrot inside and rolled the sack into a small bundle.

"He will make no noise for four or five hours," the vendor said, holding the bundle up for inspection. "You put it under the seat, he's even quieter."

Unfortunately for customs officials, the smuggling system often works, according to D. Edson Backey, port veterinarian in El Paso.

"We got 11 this month, which is a fairly good number for one month," Backey said. "But there's probably twice as many getting through without us catching them."

John A. Vigil, assistant officer in charge of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service here, said because they must keep traffic flowing on the bridges between El Paso and Juarez, inspectors can't search every car.

He said the inspectors watch for signs that indicate bird smuggling and search those cars more thoroughly.

"They usually give some type of indication," Vigil said. "They'll hold their purse right up to them or they won't get out of the car. You have to know people. You develop that knack."

"We ask them if they have any birds and 99 percent of the time, they'll say no," he said. "That's when we send them to the secondary inspection point for a closer search."

Vigil said most of the time the birds are found in the usual hiding places — the glove compartment, under a seat, under a passenger's clothing.

"The key one is in a purse," he said. "Probably 75 percent of the time, that's where they are."

Sometimes, the hideouts for the birds are more exotic.

On display at the customs office is a large wooden model of a Spanish ship that is the source of one of the inspectors' favorite stories.

Vigil said an inspector recently arrived from California was telling two recruits that items such as the ship have secret compartments for smuggling. He lifted the model's deck and, to his surprise, found two parrots.

"It's a game of them trying to beat us and us trying to catch them," Vigil said.

But it's a high-stakes game, according to Backey and literature distributed by the Department of Agriculture.

"The ones that are smuggled in — if they're sick — could bring a lot of disease over with them," Backey said.

Backey runs the quarantine station where birds being brought into the country legally are held for 45-60 days while they are tested for Newcastle's disease.

"It costs $80 to run them through the quarantine station, the veterinarian said. "Some people must just feel it's not worth the investment and try to smuggle them in."

Chief Customs inspector Andrew Townsend said most birds smuggled into the country are brought in by tourists who either don't know or don't care about the dangers of disease.

"It's more or less a personal-type venture rather than commercial," he said.

Tourists wanting a new pet can have a Yellow Head parrot for about $40 in Juarez. Parakeets, canaries and other birds cost much less.

Prices for Yellow Heads on the other side of the border are about $500, said Syble Hutson, owner of Fin and Feather of El Paso. She said prices on Green Amazon parrots — less than $60 in Juarez — begin at $200 in El Paso.

Mrs. Hutson said she has heard of bird dealers buying smuggled birds, but she said she gets her birds from wholesalers.

"Occasionally, people will call and try to sell us a bird," she said. "I tell them, 'No way. I don't want any birds in here that haven't been through quarantine.' One sick bird could cost us $15,000 worth of birds."

The Agriculture Department says South American birds that were not quarantined caused an epidemic of Newcastle's disease in Southern California poultry flocks in 1971. About 12 million birds were killed before the epidemic was halted at a cost of $56 million, the department said.

After a leisurely lunch on a quiet summer afternoon, a nap is often a temptation. Finding no shade a few places to recline, this Lubbock lounge chose the shade and comfort of a picnic table in a local park.

POSITIVE THINKING

There is a way to happier living

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Gautama Buddha said: "The mind is everything; what you think you become." This is a great truth that every person needs to learn. If a person could start from childhood to build sound spiritual thought patterns he would be invulnerable to adversity and have a supply of unshakeable strength throughout his life. But most of us have not built into our minds such a healthy thought world.

One night I was flying to the West Coast and a man sat with me for much of the flight, who was not only quite out of strength but sick of body, mind and soul as well. He described in detail his physical symptoms — obesity, high blood pressure, shortness of breath, nervous stomach, liver acting up, pains in joints. Unwittingly he displayed an acutely "diseased" mind as well. As he poured out his sick thoughts they were a miserable compound of resentment, hate, jealousy, pessimism and lust. He was living a life of low-grade morality, to state it mildly. After regaling me for a couple of hours and a thousand miles of distance with increasingly morbid thoughts, he suddenly asked: "What in the h— do you think is wrong with me?"

"Your reference to hell," I replied thoughtfully, "may be more significant than you realize. It could just be that you are in the shape you're in because you are in a state of hell. In other words, your trouble is bad thoughts, very bad thoughts. And remember, please, that bad thoughts like yours can make a person sick, really sick, by externalizing themselves in physical symptoms."

"Bad thoughts — you think that's my trouble, eh?" mused my seatmate. "Who wouldn't have them with all the knocks I've had."

"But let's skip the past," I interrupted, "and do something constructive now. Here is one suggestion, and don't think it won't help, for it will. Start tomorrow to read the first four books of the New Testament — Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. Underscore every sentence that impresses you as a healthy thought. Continue every day, not missing a single day, reading and underscoring. And commit to memory some of the best passages you underscore — so you can repeat the passages easily without the Book. Say them over and over, savoring their melody and meaning; and at the same time visualize these thoughts as sinking deeply into your mind to cancel out the old rotten, bad thoughts which have been poisoning your consciousness and undermining your health."

"For example, take Matthew 6:22: 'The eye is the lamp of the body. So, if your eye is sound, your whole body will be full of light; but if your eye is not sound, your whole body will be full of darkness.' This means that the way you see things, the attitude you take, the slant of your thinking determines whether your whole being shall be full of darkness and gloom, or light and joy. It's how you think and see or look upon life that makes the difference."

And so we shook hands at the airport, and he vanished out of sight, and memory, too. Months later in Chicago a man walked up to me: "Do you remember me?" he asked.

"You look familiar, but I must confess I can't place you."

"I'm not surprised," he replied, "though I spent a night with you once. But then I was broken down, overfat, washed up."

"Well, that description certainly doesn't fit you now," I said, looking admiringly at the trim, clean-cut, healthy-looking man in front of me. Then I remembered — "I know!" I exclaimed. "You're the man with the bad thoughts."

"Was, you mean, but no more," he said with a grin. "I really went to work on that Bible plan of yours, I now have a lot of Scripture passages packed down in my consciousness. My mind is solidly full of them. And they healed my mind too — there is absolutely no doubt of that. I feel better all over. In fact, I'm disgustingly healthy; and have a strength and vigor I haven't had in years. And I've had some tough times this past year — things happened that would have floored me completely. Now, with the Lord's guidance and help, I have found the way to a happier life."

The Ranching Industry... just another great part of Midland ...a great city!

Long before there were tall buildings, long before oil was discovered, Midland was settled by a breed of proud, tough, independent cattlemen. Today, the descendants of those early-day Midlanders may be found operating modern ranches, using modern technology along side of the sweat and hard work. Ranching in west Texas has changed greatly since the early days in Midland. But, some things will always stay the same, like the special sense of confidence and pride that every cowboy feels out on the range. It's that special independent spirit that has, and continues to make Midland great, and...at the First National Bank of Midland, we're working to keep that independent spirit alive!

RINGING THE BELL

Snitching trait passed down since slavery days

With BOB TIEUEL

WHEN BLACKS AMBUSH OTHER BLACKS — In our many years in the ministerial world and toying with a few journalistic endeavors, we have often heard it said by way of the grapevine that blacks are their own worst enemies. There are some who say that the white slave masters instilled this trait in their subjects by offering petty rewards for "snitching and telling off" on other blacks. And the trait has been passed on to other generations.

A modern-day example is that of the case of Mel Bradley, the highest black in the present White House, who was the recent victim of a Washington Post reporter who is black. Tony Brown, who is a nationally syndicated commercial television columnist, describes the situation:

"I was critical of the way Dorothy Gilliam described Bradley's role in restoring Title III funds in the national budget, which are the second largest source of funding for black colleges."

"Coiled in pretended innocence, Ms. Black turned the knife slowly: 'Along with a small group of other reporters, I met recently with Bradley to try to measure his influence. Bradley (wrote Ms. Gilliam) seemed unable or unwilling to tell us anything he has done that has made much of a difference. If Bradley is helping to make policy, it is hard to see where,' the black reporter concluded."

"Could it be," Brown asked, "that she has lost a grip on both her role as a black and as a journalist?" He then asks:

"What has this well-off middle-class employee of one of the nation's most powerful white newspapers done to earn her lofty status as a black-leader ideologue? She has structured a situation that makes her a part of the black cause, but with no obligation to further it — just to destroy those that want to."

REMEMBERING: Many years ago, back in the 30s, we heard Lena Horne introduce "Stormy Weather" while a student in Tennessee State College in Nashville as we sat in a small colored cafe, eating a big ten-cent hamburger and drinking a pint of milk for a nickel. Indeed, it was "stormy weather" for many of the kids trying to make it in school during the dark, desperate days of the 30s. In fact it is easier to buy a dollar hamburger these days than it was to get a ten-cent one then, young bellringers.

The papers said the other day that Ms. Horne was 64 in June. We have a sneaking feeling that she has to be older and this correspondent is three years older than she is if that report is true, but what's in age anyway as long as you look well and can still do your thing.

Lena has had her problems, with her father dying in 1971, son Teddy died at age 28 of kidney disease and her second husband, music director Lennie Hayton, was victim of an aneurysm. Yet the other day, she sat in a Broadway theater before a sellout crowd and talked about her long career which actually began when she was 3 years old.

"Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music," about which critics simply ran out of superlatives to describe Miss Horne's return to Broadway — "A grandmother of five up there on stage singing her heart out." She won a special Tony award for her performance, to add to her long list of achievements. And in spite of "Stormy Weather" in her eventful life, she seems to be able to ride the waves calmly and with assurance that she has a task to do in spite of the years God has allowed her to live.

RECENT GREAT QUOTES: "People have always said I was clairvoyant. Sometimes I stop people in the street. If it comes, I should say it. In a way, everyone has it. It depends on how strongly you love, how much you care about others." — Pearl Bailey.

"Portraying Jesus Christ as white or black is an affront to the Christian religion," Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie says. He is head of the Protestant Church of England and the worldwide Anglican Communion, which includes the U.S. Episcopal Church.

Attorney wants inmate moved off death row before new trial

BAY MINETTE, Ala. (AP) — Johnny Harris, a black Death Row inmate whose case was cited by the Soviet Union as an example of American injustice, has been granted a new trial on murder charges.

"I knew all along that if we fought it long enough and in the appropriate way the truth would come out and we would get a new trial," Harris, 34, said Thursday through his attorney.

"I feel good," Harris said. "I feel relieved."

Clint Brown, a defense co-counsel, said Harris "should be automatically removed from Death Row since he's no longer under the death sentence."

Harris was convicted in 1975 of murder in the stabbing death of a guard during a 1974 prison uprising in Attmore. He was serving five life sentences on charges that he raped a white woman and robbed her and three other people in Jefferson County in 1970.

He was sentenced to death under an 1862 state law that provides an automatic death sentence for anyone convicted of first-degree murder while serving a life sentence. No execution date had been set.

On Monday, retired Jefferson County Judge Leigh M. Clark granted Harris a new trial because the prosecution did not disclose another inmate's statement that Harris did not kill the guard.

Harris served in the case because a Baldwin County judge withdrew.

Jesse David Jett, a white inmate, alleged in a statement "positively that he knew as a matter of fact that Johnny Harris did not stab or cut officer Luell Barrow," according to court records.

State attorney John Yung said Jett's story was "not worth of belief" because of inconsistencies in his previous statements.

Jett also alleged in his statement that former prison warden Marion Harding was involved in the slaying of an inmate during the prison uprising. Harding, one of the state's key witnesses against Harris, denied any involvement in the inmate's death.

Despite the prosecution's view of Jett's statement, the judge said Harris was entitled to have been informed at the time of his trial of that "impeaching evidence."

No retrial date has been set. Brown said efforts would begin immediately to try to get Harris off Death Row at Holman Prison.

However, state prison spokesman Ron Tate said, "When we get the official word, then a decision will be made" about Harris' status. "We'll need it in writing."

Whether the state can appeal Clark's ruling was not immediately clear. A spokeswoman for Attorney General Charles Graddick said Graddick had heard about the ruling but had not seen it.

Harris was described in the Soviet Union three years ago as a human rights fighter being cruelly persecuted. Pravda, the Soviet Communist Party newspaper, quoted a letter signed by 359 Russian students saying Harris' death sentence amounted to "a new political murder."

Former Attorney General Bill Baxley, who prosecuted Harris in 1975, was out of his office until Monday. Reacting earlier to the Soviet criticism, Baxley said, "That is ridiculous. I doubt if he ever heard the word civil rights before he got to prison. ... He is a dangerous man."

Barrow was taken hostage along with another prison officer by inmates who seized control of a maximum security cellblock at the old Attmore state prison farm.

Before the uprising ended, Barrow was stabbed repeatedly, with one knife thrust cutting his heart in half. Harris claimed he was forced by armed inmates to take part in the uprising. He said he never stabbed Barrow.

Harris' conviction on the rape and robbery charges is being appealed in federal court on grounds he had inadequate counsel and that his statements were coerced.

Israel's President Navon must now decide who will form government

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — It's now up to one man — President Yitzhak Navon, a non-political figure in Israel, who probably will ask Prime Minister Menachem Begin to form a new government despite his having lost the popular vote to Labor Party leader Shimon Peres.

Israeli politics being what they are, Navon must decide which man — Begin or Peres — has a better chance of forming a coalition, that is, of winning 61 seats or one more than half of the 120 members of the Knesset or Israeli parliament.

Navon then allows that man and his party 21 days to form a new government. Why would the Israeli president call in Begin rather than Peres? Because the final vote, although giving Begin only 48 Knesset seats compared to 49 for Peres, also gave Israel's two religious parties either 12 or 13 seats.

Both the National Religious Party and the similarly conservative Agudat Yisrael Party already have pledged their loyalty to Begin — meaning that if they hold onto their 13 seats Begin would have the far better chance of assembling a coalition of 48 plus 13 or the required 61 seats.

Even if he falls short because the religious parties win only 12 seats, it is likely Begin can pick up a seat or two from one of the several splinter parties that won only one seat each but together captured about 16 seats in the Israeli parliament.

Under Israeli law, Navon will decide whether Begin or Peres has the better chance of forming a government and then give him that opportunity — not once but twice. If, for example, Begin fails to put together a coalition, he would get a second chance to do so. Begin also will remain as prime minister until a new head of government is chosen.

Navon would give him another period of 21 days to form a government. Only if Begin failed a second time would the Israeli president give Labor party leader Shimon Peres a similar opportunity. Israeli embassy officials here, most of whom were appointed by Begin, seemed pleased by the outcome.

"Given the divisions between Peres and (former Prime Minister Yitzhak) Rabin, it's better to have a strong leader who will be able to compromise than a weak leader who would be unable to do so," Israeli spokesman Avi Pazner said. He discounted the last-minute makeup session between Peres and Rabin.

"It's like Carter and Kennedy when they supported each other," Pazner said. It lasted just as long as it had to — for the final days of the campaign — and then returned to what everybody had known all along.

Although Labor party colleagues, Peres and Rabin are bitter enemies who frequently have attacked one another in print. They decided with less than a week to go before the election that they would support each other. In fact, Peres promised to make Rabin his defense minister. But it was too late.

Nonetheless, Israeli officials here saw one new silver lining in the election outcome. "We are now evolving toward a real two party system — two big parties that have won approximately 100 out of the 120 seats in the Parliament," Pazner said.

That is a first. In past Israeli elections, the more liberal Labor Party has always won between 30 and 50 seats; Begin's more conservative Likud party about 30 or 35 seats and the remaining majority have been divided among a dozen splinter parties.

At one time, many people thought that just such a splinter party — a new group headed by former Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan — would win enough seats in the Knesset to throw the election to either Peres or Begin. They thought the one-time war hero might emerge the real power broker.

But that clearly didn't happen either. Like Ted Kennedy, Dayan seemed most popular on the day that he declared he would run. At that time, polls showed he would win 10 seats in the Knesset. How many did he win yesterday?

Just one.

"He's finished," an Israeli embassy source said. "Maybe it's exaggerating it to make the comparison with Kennedy but for Dayan this is a clear signal from the electorate. His political career is over."

As for the 68-year-old Begin, his may just be beginning. "In two or three weeks Begin will come up with religious party support and by September we'll see a resumption of the autonomy talks with Egypt. Despite Labor's optimism today, the verdict is in. Begin will rule."

Supreme Court term will be remembered for male-only draft

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court's just-completed 1980-81 term likely will be remembered most for a decision upholding the nation's male-only military draft.

The ruling was one of several dealing with the roles of men and women in American life.

But other such familiar themes as abortion, parental rights, court access, free speech and religious freedom all played a part in the nine-month term.

As in recent years, no dominant social philosophy was in evidence.

Rather, judicial restraint prevailed. Today's court remains most comfortable "fine-tuning" existing legal doctrines and deferring to the federal government's two other branches and the states when possible.

Liberals and conservatives found decisions to love and decisions to loathe.

THE SEXES

— The Military Selective Service Act, which provides for male-only draft registration and conscription, does not foster unconstitutional sex discrimination against men. The women's rights movement, saying the ruling perpetuates an antiquated view of women in society, called the ruling its most serious legal setback of the last decade.

— Statutory rape laws aimed at punishing only males who have sex with underage females are constitutional. Feminists panned that ruling as well.

— Military retirement pay is not subject to state divorce laws that require ex-spouses to share all assets.

— Women in jobs held primarily by women can sue on charges that their salaries are being discriminatorily held down. For the first time, the court said women can file and win wage-bias lawsuits without proving that they perform the same jobs as men who get paid more.

— So-called "head and master" laws that allow husbands, but not wives, to have exclusive control over jointly owned property are invalid.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

— The Ten Commandments cannot be posted in public schools.

— A worker who quits a job because of religious beliefs is entitled to collect unemployment compensation.

— States may restrict religious groups such as the Hare Krishnas from soliciting donations and distributing literature from certain public areas.

GOVERNMENT REGULATION

— Federal regulators do not have to show that industry costs are justified by the resulting health benefits when imposing standards for worker exposure to toxic materials, such as cotton dust.

— When setting water-pollution limits, the Environmental Protection Agency does not have to consider the economic capability of individual businesses within an industry to meet those limits.

— Federal inspectors do not need search warrants to enter and check mines, including stone quarries.

— The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission can demand an employer's records and then give those records to employees who are alleging on-the-job bias.

ABORTION

— States may require doctors to notify the parents of "immature" or dependent teen-aged girls when those girls seek abortions.

— States also may outlaw abortions not performed in a hospital after the first three months of pregnancy.

FREE SPEECH, EXPRESSION, PRESS

— States are free to allow television, radio and photographic coverage of criminal trials over a defendant's objection.

— Individual radio listeners have no right to demand governmental review of the abandonment of their favorite programs.

— Candidates for federal office have a "right of access" to buy advertising time on television and radio during a political campaign. And it's up to the federal government, not the broadcasters, to determine when that campaign has begun.

— Cities may ban billboards carrying "commercial" advertising but apparently may not ban those billboards bearing political or other "non-commercial" messages.

— "Nude" dancing is a form of constitutionally protected expression. It cannot be banned by broadly worded zoning laws.

— A federal law banning the placement of unstamped material in private home mailboxes does not unduly interfere with free-speech rights.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

— Police need a search warrant, not just an arrest warrant, before entering a home to arrest a non-resident.

— Police with a valid search warrant for a home can detain everyone on the premises until that search is completed.

— Once a criminal suspect has invoked his right to have a lawyer's help before answering any questions from police, no further questions can be asked unless the suspect initiates the renewed conversation with police.

— Police officers most often need a search warrant before they can search containers in the car's trunk. But officers who stop a car and make an arrest do not need a warrant when those same containers are in the car's passenger compartment.

— Police may make investigatory stops based on "circumstantial evidence." They do not have to meet the more stringent standard of having "probable cause" to suspect criminal activity.

— A much-used federal law aimed at keeping racketeers out of legitimate business also can be used to prosecute wholly criminal activities.

— The government must strip former Nazi death camp guard Fedor Fedorenko of his U.S. citizenship because he lied to immigration officials when entering this country in 1949.

PARENTS AND CHILDREN

— Parents do not have an automatic constitutional right to a free lawyer when the state tries to take away their children.

— A state may punish more severely parents who leave the state when abandoning their children.

— Men defending against paternity suits have a right to a free blood test.

COURT ACCESS

— In upholding a Minnesota law banning plastic milk containers, the justices said state courts cannot substitute their judgment for that of legislatures on matters of fact.

— Persons victimized by illegal water pollution cannot sue the polluters for money damages.

— Federal courts are authorized to hear labor disputes once legally required arbitration has fallen through.

— A Federal Trade Commission investigation cannot be challenged in federal court until the administrative proceedings are concluded.

THE ENVIRONMENT

— Stringent federal regulations on strip mining of coal are constitutional.

— Illinois and Michigan cannot sue Milwaukee and other Wisconsin entities in federal court for polluting Lake Michigan.

OFFICIAL IMMUNITY

— A judge's immunity from being sued for his or her decisions, even corrupt ones, does not shield co-conspirators.

— No "punitive" damages can be collected against local governments whose officials violate a person's civil rights.

— The justices also ruled that former President Nixon and two of his closest assistants must pay for illegally spying on a national security aide and his family. But the case, resolved by a 4-4 vote, did not definitively decide whether presidents and their top aides are absolutely immune from such lawsuits.

CIVIL RIGHTS

— The closing of a Memphis, Tenn., city street to through traffic, which had the effect of isolating a predominantly black neighborhood from a predominantly white one, was not a form of racial discrimination.

— An individual can sue the government for civil rights violations caused merely by an official's negligence.

STATES' RIGHTS

— In upholding Montana's 30 percent severance tax on coal mined within its borders, the court gave states a legal right to cash in to the fullest on their natural resources.

— But the justices struck down Louisiana's "first use" tax on natural gas passing through the state because it was imposed only on out-of-state consumers.

— States cannot ban 65-foot double-trailer trucks from their highways.

DEATH PENALTY

— A criminal defendant facing a possible death penalty must be warned of his right to remain silent prior to psychiatric testing if the test results are used after conviction to help choose between life and death.

Program cuts will do some damage

By JOANNE OMANG
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's cuts in programs to conserve energy will do some damage to the agencies that have been trying, with much success, to shave the nation's largest energy bill: the federal government's.

Reagan's budget-cutters all but zeroed out several conservation promotion agencies and programs of the Carter administration, arguing that high energy prices alone have already led to unprecedented energy savings nationwide.

But those savings haven't been very dramatic within the government, where total oil-equivalent energy use was 294 million barrels last year and cost taxpayers $8.9 billion. That is only 6.4 percent less than the 1975 level of 314.2 million barrels of oil, well below the 14 percent savings that private industry has achieved since then, according to the National Association of Manufacturers.

It is also below the rate that oil imports have fallen off in the same period and well behind schedule toward former president Carter's 10-year goal for cooling of federal fires. He called for a 20 percent cut in energy use in existing federal buildings from the 1975 level, a 30 percent drop in use of oil-based fuels and a 45 percent reduction in energy use in new buildings. Only the General Services Administration's 8,000 buildings are even close: down 9.4 percent.

But the GSA, which owns and operates most federal office buildings, consumes only 5 percent of the total energy used in federal buildings, and only 2.5 percent of total energy consumption. The lion's share of federal energy expenses — more than 81 percent — belong to the Defense Department, with the largest chunk of money going for jet fuel.

Every time the price of a gallon of oil rises by a penny, the federal energy bill goes up $80 million, according to the Energy Department's Federal Energy Management Program. And despite that 6 percent cut in consumption since 1975, that energy bill has doubled since then.

"We figure we're roughly halfway through and halfway there," said Jack Holton, GSA's energy conservation division coordinator, of the drive to meet the Carter goal.

GSA's efforts have saved taxpayers $70 million, he said. But Holton's office has had its staff cut from 16 people to 12, with the four going to outlying areas. The budget remains intact at $1.5 million. "It will make life a little more difficult, yes," Holton said.

He will cut back some "employee awareness" programs that got everyone to turn off lights and dial down the thermostat, and will curtail answering questions from outside GSA, he said. Instead, GSA will concentrate on insulating, caulking and otherwise rehabilitating its buildings, "things that seem to be more important for the program," Holton said.

Jack Vitullo, project manager for the Federal Energy Management Program, calls progress toward conservation "not dramatic, but significant." His office keeps track of everything from Defense Department jet and tank fuel to the heating bill in a Wyoming post office, and its budget has been cut from $1 million under Carter to $530 million.

"It's not as bad as it sounds, but it could be better," Vitullo said. He also plans to cut planning sessions, technical guidance programs and seminars, and to defer issuing guidelines and regular reports.

"We would hope we've moved people by now in such a way that they're self-generating," he said, "but we'd just be giving them a little additional emphasis."

Vitullo noted that the easiest energy savings took place right after the first oil import embargo in 1973, when gross waste was curtailed.

Proposed solar sites to beam power to Earth may cost too much, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed system of solar satellites that would beam power back to Earth would be so large and costly that it may not be feasible, according to a National Academy of Sciences study released Thursday.

The report by the academy's National Research Council said a cautiously favorable Department of Energy study last year seriously underestimated the costs of the proposal.

The previous estimated price tag of $1.3 trillion is "two and a half times too low, even in the most optimistic view," said the research council study.

Because of costs and technical problems that must be overcome with the satellite system, the new study recommended against spending any research and development money on it in the next decade.

It recommended that instead, federal agencies monitor relevant technical developments during that time and report to Congress periodically on useful advances that might apply.

The Department of Energy and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration so far have spent about $19.5 million researching the concept. Proponents are asking for increased appropriations in light of the 1980 study by the department.

The department report estimated the cost of electricity from the satellite system at $4,000 per kilowatt of installed capacity, compared with current costs of about $1,000 per kilowatt. It said this would be comparable with the price of energy from coal or nuclear sources after the turn of the century, when the satellites would be operational.

However, the research council said an "optimistic" estimate of electricity costs from the satellite system was about $10,000 per kilowatt of installed capacity.

The satellite system would involve building in orbit 60 satellites half the size of Manhattan Island and corresponding receiving grids on earth each measuring six miles by nine miles. Beams of microwave radiation would transmit solar energy captured by the satellites to Earth.

The study called this "in concept, simple and attractive; but in actual scope, without parallel in human experience in the design, construction and operation of systems."

Construction of the satellites alone, it said, would require reusable spaceships with 13 times the cargo capacity of the present space shuttle. One of these ships carrying 400 tons of cargo would have to take off each day for 30 years just to supply building materials, it continued.

The research council group, which included experts from universities, government and industry, found no insurmountable technical problems with the concept. But it said satellites compared poorly with other prospective energy sources, such as breeder reactors and advanced coal burning.

The solar satellite concept is the brainchild of Dr. Peter Glaser, a vice president at Arthur D. Little Inc., a Cambridge, Mass., consulting firm. Glaser said he had not seen the new study and would not comment on it until he had.

Fred Osborn, president of the Sun-sat Energy Council, a group of corporations and individuals lobbying for Glaser's idea, said he felt it was too soon to count out the satellite concept on cost grounds.

"I don't see how you can possibly estimate costs with an engineering project when the technology is changing so rapidly," Osborn said.

C.R. Moncrief

D and D will meet Thursday

The monthly meeting of the Desk and Derrick Club will be held Thursday at 6:30 p.m. in the Petroleum Club.

The guest speaker, C.R. Moncrief, will speak on the subject of "Oil and Gas — What Happens after Production."

Moncrief is group leader of the Plans Group of the Orloff Corporation of Midland. He is responsible for the conceptual design of processing facilities for the oil, gas and petrochemical industries.

He was born in Dallas and has been a resident of Midland since 1936. He graduated from Midland High School and is a graduate of the University of Austin with a B.S. degree in civil engineering. He served in the U.S. Army for two years.

Moncrief's first job was with Chevron, with whom he worked for two years in Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains. He then went to work for the Exxon Company for 10 years in the West Texas and South Texas areas.

He is a registered professional engineer in Texas, California, Michigan and Florida. He is also a registered public surveyor in Texas.

He is the author of two papers entitled "Energy Recovery from Pressure Drops in Gas Plants" and "Gas Plants Design Can Save Energy." He is past chairman of the local chapters of ASME and past president and director of the Permian Basin Chapter of the TSP.

PBG Center course slated

Judy Golasinski, executive director of the Permian Basin Graduate Center, announces the course "Solids Control in Drilling Fluids" Tuesday through Friday, at the center. George S. Ormsby, Stonewall Associates, Inc. will instruct.

This unique comprehensive course is designed for engineers, tool-pushers, superintendents, managers, mud engineers, well-site geologists, servicemen, consultants and others directly involved in drilling operations or the design of surface mud systems and arrangements of components. A minimum of six-months drilling-related experience is recommended.

Registration fee is $415. For registration or further information call the Graduate center at 563-2311.

Fund director says World economy still faces problems, inflation slowing

By HOBART ROWEN
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Although the world economy still faces "severe" problems, "there are early signs that inflationary pressures are abating, albeit slowly," according to Jacques de Larosiere, managing director of the International Monetary Fund.

In an cautiously upbeat assessment that mentioned other "encouraging signs" that rich and poor countries alike could meet their major internal and external economic goals, de Larosiere abandoned the characterization of "grim" that he had applied to the world economy as recently as May 26, in a speech in Paris, following the IMF Interim Committee meeting in Gabon.

IMF sources did not want to put a label on the de Larosiere speech. "I don't know whether it is more optimistic or less pessimistic," said one official. Just prior to the Gabon meeting, U.S. Treasury officials said that they were taking a more optimistic view than outlined by de Larosiere, who had used the word "grim" in an assessment the previous week, which predicted a long stretch of high inflation and slow growth.

In a speech Friday in Geneva to the United Nations Economic and Social Council, de Larosiere still warned that there is "no room for complacency," adding that the process of adjustment to recent pressures caused by inflation, recession, and high oil prices "will be slow and entail sacrifices." He stressed, as well, the need for the IMF to expand its financial resources to meet a loan demand which is running two to three times that of previous years. And he warned that protectionist sentiment and pressures remain in the industrial world.

Nonetheless, the overall thrust of de Larosiere's remarks was that most of these pressures — notably in the energy sector — are easing. He noted that despite an "unfavorable global environment, the growth of gross domestic product and total export, in real terms in the non-oil developing countries as a group has been surprisingly resilient."

He even offered the hope that economic growth in the industrial world, estimated at a paltry 1 percent for 1981, would resume "in due course," providing the impetus for expansion in the less developed countries which even now are "maintaining reasonably satisfactory growth rates."

De Larosiere reported that inflation, as measured by consumer prices in industrial countries, had dropped from 13.5 percent in the first half of 1980 to 10 percent in the following two 6-month periods, with further moderation expected through 1982. He attributed the decline to completion of the adjustment to oil price increases and to the effect of restrictive financial policies, including a slow-down in money-growth rates. Still, he said, inflation is likely to remain "unacceptably high."

Other encouraging signs he cited: Efforts aimed at energy conservation and efficient use of energy resources "are beginning to bear fruit," a reference to the current oil glut which is depressing prices.

"Sound demand-management and supply-oriented policies" adopted by the major nations, which should result in better economic growth. De Larosiere took the occasion, however, to issue a thinly-veiled warning that the United States may be pursuing too strict a monetary policy that "runs the risk of pushing up interest rates..."

International capital markets have shown they can effectively channel funds from the surplus countries to those needing to borrow. The recycling process, de Larosiere added, has been further facilitated by the substantial increase in funds loaned by the IMF and other international agencies. So far this year (through June 30), the IMF has made loan commitments of about $12 billion, exceeding $11.5 billion for all of 1980.

On the negative side, de Larosiere mentioned the slowdown in growth in the industrial world which has brought stagflation, and with it, protectionist pressures. He repeated his Paris forecast that industrial nations' unemployment would rise to 7.5 percent, or 25 million persons in 1982.

He also said that while the international deficits of the less developed countries would decline from 21 percent of their exports of goods in services to 18 percent in the period 1981-85, they would remain high in nominal (money) terms. Projected debt-service ratios for the poorest LDCs would remain historically high, unless concessional assistance can be increased, de Larosiere said.

Bargain gas tax will no longer be U.S. deal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — America has been spoiled with a "bargain" gasoline tax compared to most countries, but the good deal is probably ending soon, an oil analyst predicts.

Dan Lundberg wrote Friday in his weekly Lundberg Letter that the United States' premium gasoline tax is the fourth lowest out of 27 countries surveyed.

Motolists in Italy are taxed $1.86 on each gallon of fuel, and the English pay a tax of $1.50 per gallon, while Americans are charged an average tax of 15 cents a gallon, the letter said.

Only motorists in Ecuador, Costa Rica and Venezuela were paying less.

"U.S. gasoline is still a comparative bargain," Lundberg wrote. "Considering what people are paying for their fuel in other countries, the U.S. motorist really has little to complain about — even after the dramatic price increases early this year."

Presently, the average price of motor fuel in America is $1.45 a gallon, the letter stated. In France, gasoline averages $2.79 a gallon, and in Italy the average price is $3.06 per gallon.

Lundberg said the recent decline in gasoline consumption will probably result in fuel tax increases.

The tax has primarily been used to fund highway construction and maintenance projects, the oil analyst said, and historically, the rising demand for gasoline has resulted in an adequate amount of revenues to fund the projects.

The recent decline in fuel consumption, however, has meant highway programs are earning less money, and since the market will probably no longer expand, Lundberg said, taxes will most likely have to be continually increased to keep up with inflation.

According to Lundberg's figures Americans are now taxed at a rate of about 11 per cent of the sale price for each gallon of gasoline.

Other figures showed the French pay about 52 per cent in fuel taxes while Mexico charges more than any other country surveyed in the letter — almost 74 per cent — although gasoline there cost only $1.10 a gallon because the country produces all its own oil.

Coal use pollutes Bohemian forests

TEPLICE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Rising energy needs and expanded coal mining are forcing communist officials here to confront issues which have long been raging controversies in the West.

Expanded use of sulphur-rich soft coal has killed a large part of the northern Czechoslovak region's picturesque forests, and officials say it is time to tackle the problem.

"This is spoiling our environment, but we are taking steps to correct the problem," says Vladislav Sahovsky, chief of the local Chemical Workers Union.

In North Bohemia, the afflicted area, coal mining has increased dramatically since the skyrocketing of oil prices in 1974, and new coal-fired power plants have also been added to the area.

The region, which borders East Germany, now produces nearly 80 percent of Czechoslovakia's coal and more than one third of its electricity.

But the coal is dirty, with twice the sulphur content of coal mined in neighboring areas.

"It's a major problem," said an official at the 500-acre Doly Nas-trup open-pit mine, one of the biggest in the country.

"Neither German nor Polish coal has as high a sulphur content," he said.

The problem is not new. As early as 1978, press reports in North Bohemia said 41 percent of the area's forests were being affected by coal dust and fumes.

The trade union daily newspaper, Prace, demanded action before the area was turned into a "moonscape" and a government commission was set up to study the problem.

The issue is likely to remain acute. Czechoslovak energy needs are rising an estimated 3 percent a year, but the Soviet Union, which supplies more than 90 percent of the country's oil, has said it cannot increase its exports.

Czechoslovak officials say nuclear power will help keep expanded production of domestic energy from increasing environmental problems in North Bohemia.

The country's next five-year economic plan, they say, includes an air pollution control scheme aimed at existing problems.

The program provides for chemical sulphur filters to be installed at two coal-fired power plants in the next five years.

Computer tests skills

Would a company seeking to hire a computer operator test applicants' skills on an abacus? Would a Ferrari dealer ask a mechanic job-seeker to demonstrate his ability by repairing a bus?

Obviously not. But Janet H. Stevenson, an assistant professor at the University of Western Ontario, says that many companies hire secretaries based on their shorthand and typing abilities even though the firms don't employ those skills in their operations.

Stevenson, writing in the Personnel Journal, says a survey of 40 major Canadian companies revealed that 44 percent use Dictaphone or handwritten drafts, not shorthand. But 67 percent of those companies still base their hiring decisions on an applicant's skill in shorthand.

And 75 percent of the respondents give applicants a straight typing test in which they are required to copy a letter-perfect piece of correspondence.

Abilene firemen battle cloud of Muriatic acid

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — A tank of muriatic acid collapsed and spilled at a plant here, forming a potentially dangerous cloud of gas before fire-fighters dispersed it an hour later.

Fire Chief James Pogue said no injuries were reported after the tank fell at the Cen-Tex Acid and Frac Co. The acid solution, used in the oil well servicing industry, ran down a creek but firemen diluted it.

"Once the cloud disappeared, we were in pretty good shape," Pogue said.

There was no danger from fire or explosion, he said.

Cen-Tex manager Doyle Hildebrand said the tank "just fell. All of a sudden I heard a hell of a noise."

He estimated damage to the tank at $4,000 and $3,500 for lost acid.

OIL INDUSTRY NOTES

TULSA, OKLA. — James W. Cox, regional manager of Northern Natural Gas Company's Gas Acquisitions has announced the appointment of Bobby R. Edwards as senior gas contract representative for Gas Acquisitions of Amarillo.

Edwards joined Northern in 1958 at the processing plant in Hobbs, N.M. He later became a district well tester for Gas Supply in the Permian Basin. Since 1978 he has been a gas contract representative in Northern's Midland office. He is a member of various gas associations in the Southwest.

Edwards will be responsible for all gas acquisition activity in the Anadarko Basin for producer operating in the State of Texas with the exception of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Northern delivers natural gas to 71 utility customers in the Upper Midwest for distribution to a population of six million.

DALLAS — Appointment of Charles R. (Buddy) Carswell to the new created position of general manager, drilling and production in the recently combined production and exploration department was announced here today by American Petrofina Inc.

Carswell moves to Dallas from Corpus Christi, where he has served as district manager, Gulf Coast production, since June 1980.

He is a native of Tyler and received a B.S. in mechanical engineering from the University of Texas at Austin.

HOUSTON — Richard L. Hoffman has been promoted to the position of senior vice president, Pennzoil Products Co., a division of Pennzoil Co.

Hoffman will be in charge of hydrocarbon supply and transportation for the manufacturing department, and will be responsible for the sale of disposition of all crude oil and condensate produced by Pennzoil Exploration and Production Co., also a division of Pennzoil Co.

Hoffman was previously vice president and principal attorney for Pennzoil Products Co.

HOUSTON — Theodore W. Ehring has been elected vice president, domestic exploration, for Aminol USA Inc.

George E. Trimble, Aminol's chairman, president and chief executive officer, said Ehring, who previously was exploration manager, will be responsible for the overall direction of the company's domestic exploration efforts.

Aminol currently conducts domestic exploration activities in Louisiana, the Gulf of Mexico, West Texas, onshore and offshore California, the Rocky Mountain region and the Baltimore Canyon.

In 1980, the company drilled 101 exploratory wells and recorded 42 successes for a success ratio of 41.6 percent.

CHICAGO — Amoco Chemicals Corporation has announced the appointment of Lawrence H. Green as vice president-finance, Samsung Petrochemical Co. Ltd., of South Korea.

Samsung is a joint venture of Amoco Chemicals Corporation, the worldwide chemicals manufacturing and marketing subsidiary of Standard Oil Company (Indiana), and two partners — the Samsung Group of South Korea and Mitsui Petrochemical Industries, Ltd. of Japan.

Green, formerly staff director in Standard's supply department, will serve as chief financial officer for the 140,000-ton-per-year purified terephthalic acid (PTA) manufacturing operation in which Amoco Chemicals owns a 35 percent interest.

HOUSTON — Pennzoil Co. has announced that it plans to purchase up to one million shares of the company's outstanding common stock from time to time in open market transactions.

The repurchased shares will be available for use upon the exercise of outstanding employee stock options, upon the conversion of convertible securities and for other corporate purposes.

Dependent upon future conditions, the company may consider additional purchases from time to time.

DALLAS — Holly Corporation has elected Joe Womack as senior vice president of exploration and production.

Prior to joining Holly, Womack held various positions in engineering and production and exploration management. His previous associations include Sun Texas Company and Texas Pacific Oil Company, Inc. where he served as regional manager.

He received his B.S. degree in petroleum engineering at Texas Tech University. He has for several years been active in API on both the regional and national levels and in 1980 served as president of the Permian Basin Oil Show.

Holly Corporation, headquartered in Dallas and traded on the American Stock Exchange, is a petroleum refining, exploration and production company.

HOUSTON — United Texas Transmission Company plans to begin construction in August of a 66-mile, 30-inch diameter gas pipeline to enhance service to customers in southeast Texas, M.T. Belvin Jr., president of United Texas has announced.

United Texas is the interstate gas transmission subsidiary of United Energy Resources Inc.

The "Houston Loop" pipeline, which will cost an estimated $69.8 million, will connect on its western end with an existing United Texas line near Katy. From there the pipeline will proceed north of Houston and then southeast to connect with United Texas' 20-inch diameter line near Baytown.

NEW ORLEANS — A total of 212 tracts in the western Gulf of Mexico offshore Texas and Louisiana will be offered in an oil and gas lease sale (OCS No. A66) on July 21, 1981, the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management said today.

The tracts which total 1,077,913.725 acres, will be offered in a sealed bid auction beginning at 10 a.m. (CST) in the Louisiana Superdome, 1500 Poydras Street, Hyatt Ramp, Gate "C", Level 200, Rooms 4 and 5, New Orleans.

Tracts to be offered in the sale are located in waters ranging from 6-1,640 feet (2-500 meters) deep.

The bidding systems to be used in this sale are detailed in a June 19, 1981, Federal Register notice. Twenty-four tracts will require a cash bonus bid with a fixed net profit share of 50 percent; all remaining tracts to be offered will be on a cash bonus basis with a fixed royalty of 16 2/3 percent.

The U.S. Geological Survey has estimated the area could contain 38 million barrels of oil and 966 billion cubic feet of natural gas.

HOUSTON — Tomas E. O'Connor has been elected vice president, International Exploration, for Aminol USA, Inc.

George E. Trimble, Aminol's chairman, president and chief executive officer, said O'Connor, who previously was international exploration and new ventures manager, will be responsible for the company's foreign exploration efforts.

Aminol's primary foreign exploration efforts are in Argentina, where the company signed an agreement last year to explore for oil and gas on a 1.1-million acre tract in the Neuquen Basin, and in the Dutch North Sea, where the company holds minority interest in several exploration tracts.

AURORA, Colo. — Rio Blanco Oil Shale Company has ignited the second demonstration under ground modified in situ retort on Federal Prototype Oil Shale Tract C-1 in Rio Blanco County, Colo. recently.

The retort is about 60 square feet and 400 feet high. It is the last of the company's two planned underground retorts in a $140 million program to test the commercial feasibility of Rio Blanco's modified in situ technology.

The burn is expected to take about four months and produce a total of between 17,000 and 25,000 barrels of oil which will be used primarily for research purposes.

DALLAS — William J. Begnaude has accepted a position as a completion engineer in the Reserves Development Division of Sun Gas Company's Operations Group.

Begnaude has transferred to the Dallas headquarters from Sun Gas's Lafayette District, where he worked as a production engineer.

Sun Gas, a major operating unit of the Sun Company, is the nation's 10th largest supplier of natural gas and natural gas liquids, producing and marketing two percent of the gas energy consumed in the United States.

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio — National Supply Company, leading manufacturer of oilfield equipment, is making an 18,000-square-foot, $2-million expansion to its Singapore wellhead center to allow manufacturing of subsea and land wellheads.

The equipment is used to control high pressures and direct flow from oil and gas wells. The Singapore wellhead center is one of 17 such facilities operated by National Supply around the world for distribution, repair, service, assembly, and testing of wellhead equipment, and will become the third international manufacturing facility.

ODESSA — NDT Systems, Inc. of Odessa, manufacturer of non-destructive oilfield pipe inspection equipment, announced that it is presently expanding the facilities of its Houston operation.

NDT's existing location, southeast of Hobby Airport, will be expanded to more than 10,000 square feet when the addition of 8,400 square feet is completed in mid-August.

Occupying the southeast location is the firm's machine shop, electronic chassis component assembly area and the electronic and magnetic R&D facilities.

LOUISIA, Va. (AP) — A fire broke out today in an electrical transformer at a nuclear power plant, releasing no radiation but alarming nearby residents who feared the smoke was contaminated, authorities said.

August Wallmeyer, a spokesman for Virginia Electric & Power Co. said a site alert was declared at the North Anna plant, but the fire was extinguished after an hour and "there was never any danger."

He said state and local officials and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission were notified.

Vern Hodge of the NRC Operations Center in Washington said the site alert was lifted at 9 a.m.

Wallmeyer said the reactor shut down automatically, and no radiation was released.

No injuries were reported, and no evacuation was required, he said.

The transformer, which serves nuclear unit 2, was "way outside" the containment building, he said.

He said the transformer feeds into the plant's electricity distribution system.

He said the fire broke out at 7:22 a.m. and was out by 8:25.

Hodge said the fire also burned part of the wall of the turbine building.

"Essentially the problem is over," Hodge said, adding that the fire posed no danger to the reactor, which is in a separate building.

He said the reactor had tripped off at 5 a.m., "and they were restarting it when the fire started in the trans-

PORT WORTH — M. Scott Kraemer has been appointed vice president of Champlin Petroleum Company and manager of its Houston based regional headquarters for exploration and production. It was announced by William T. Smith, president of Champlin, the oil and gas subsidiary of Union Pacific Corp.

As vice president and manager of Champlin's Houston region, Kraemer succeeds Edward H. Chittick who is taking an extended medical leave, but will continue to serve Champlin as a consultant on exploration and production matters.

HOUSTON — Aminol USA Inc., a major natural gas producer and processor in Oklahoma, is launching an expanded petroleum exploration program in that state.

The program was recently initiated with the opening of new offices in Oklahoma City to serve as the headquarters for district exploration, land procurement and gas purchasing activities.

Jerry D. Branch, who has been named exploration manager in Oklahoma City, said he plans to add six explorationists to the staff there, including four geologists and two geophysicists.

HOUSTON — Cotton Petroleum Corporation has acquired 165,000 gross (124,000 net) acres of federal and state leases in the Uinta Basin of Utah and Colorado, John G. Nikkel, president of Cotton Petroleum has announced.

Cotton Petroleum is the Tulsa-based oil and gas exploration, development and production subsidiary of United Energy Resources Inc.

Interests in the leases were purchased from ANR Production Co. of Houston and an independent operator for an undisclosed sum. The leases are located in Carbon, Uintah, Duchesne and Wasatch counties of Utah and Rio Blanco County in Colorado.

AMARILLO — Texas Energies has announced the completion results of an exploratory well, the Jones 1-18, drilled in HOUSTON — Wainoco Oil Corporation announced the completion of an oil well in Lea County, N.M. The No. 3 Pennzoil State well flowed at a rate of 1,820 barrels of oil and 1.2 million cubic feet of gas per day through a 10/64 inch choke with a 980 pounds per square inch flowing tubing pressure. The well was completed in the Viola formation at 4,470 feet.

Texas Energies owns a 65 percent working interest in the 160 acre lease, in addition to surrounding acreage.

NORMAN — A commitment of $150,000 over five years had been made by Sun Co. of Dallas to the University of Oklahoma School of Petroleum and Geological Engineering to help in the retention of faculty member in key scientific positions.

The first $30,000 installment was presented to OU representatives June 23 when six Sun officials visited the campus.

HOUSTON — Cotton Petroleum Corporation has acquired 165,000 gross (124,000 net) acres of federal and state leases in the Uinta Basin of Utah and Colorado, John G. Nikkel, president of Cotton Petroleum has announced.

Cotton Petroleum is the Tulsa-based oil and gas exploration, development and production subsidiary of United Energy Resources Inc.

Interests in the leases were purchased from ANR Production Co. of Houston and an independent operator for an undisclosed sum. The leases are located in Carbon, Uintah, Duchesne and Wasatch counties of Utah and Rio Blanco County in Colorado.

AMARILLO — Texas Energies has announced the completion results of an exploratory well, the Jones 1-18, drilled in Pratt County, Kansas. The well flowed 160 barrels of oil and 820,000 cubic feet of gas per day through a 12/64 inch choke with a 980 pounds per square inch flowing tubing pressure. The well was completed in the Viola formation at 4,470 feet.

Texas Energies owns a 65 percent working interest in the 160 acre lease, in addition to surrounding acreage.

DENVER — Deca Energy Corp. of Denver has reported an operating profit for its first fiscal year along with significant gains in proved oil and gas reserves and leasehold acreage.

Net income for the period from inception April 17, 1980 to March 31, 1981 was $219,451 or $0.08 per share on revenues of $684,482.

THE WOODLANDS — Mitchell Energy and Development Corp. has embarked on a six-well drilling program on some North Texas leaseholdings that until a few months ago were virtually inaccessible.

DALLAS — Maynard Oil Company has announced the completion of a significant gas well in the Austin Chalk trend of Central Texas.

The A.E. Schiebler No. 1, located near the city of Gonzales in Gonzales County, was completed in the Austin Chalk formation with a calculated absolute open flow potential of 78,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

The well flowed 2,527,000 cubic feet of gas and 48 barrels of condensate per day on a 14/64 inch choke with 2,470 pounds per square inch flowing tubing pressure from open hole between 6,344 and 6,575 feet. Shut in tubing pressure was 2,560 pounds per square inch and shut in bottom hole pressure was 2,978 pounds per square inch.

GOLDEN, Colo. — M.T. Byrnes has been named Business Development Representative for Orloff Minerals Services Corp., J.A. Jelinek, vice president for Business Development, has announced.

In his new position, Byrnes will represent Orloff in the sales of engineering and construction services to mineral processing industries, energy development companies and industrial manufacturing firms throughout the Rocky Mountain area and western United States.

DENVER — Merit Energy Corp. of Denver has announced that production casing is being set at the first of three 5,200-foot Mississippiian formatinwells scheduled to be drilled in an effort to extend the Lakin Oil field on 5,120 acres of leases in southwest Kansas.

The first well, Merit's Lea No. 1-28, one-half mile north of the nearest Lakin production in section 28-25s-36w, Kerney County, encountered the objective zone 16 feet high structurally to the nearest producer and penetrated an apparent 16 feet of porosity.

A drillstem test of the zone recovered 310 feet of watery, oily mud and 620 feet of muddy oily water. The water is thought to be mud filtrate, the company said. A second well located approximately one mile north of the Lea 1-28 is expected to be spudded early next week.

Merit owns a 12.5 percent working interest before payout in the three wells, convertible to a 25 percent working interest after payout, and will own an 18.75 percent interest in the remaining 4,900 acres on the prospect. The leases are held by shallow gas production in the Hugoton field.

DENVER — Deca Energy Corp. of Denver has reported an operating profit for its first fiscal year along with significant gains in proved oil and gas reserves and leasehold acreage.

Net income for the period from inception April 17, 1980 to March 31, 1981 was $219,451 or $0.08 per share on revenues of $684,482.

CHICAGO — In the southeast corner of New Mexico Amoco Production Company is concentrating on an exploration and development program aimed at a natural gas bearing formation known as the Morrow sands.

Amoco has about a dozen rigs drilling in the area, according to a recent issue of SpA, a quarterly publication for shareholders and employees of Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

Amoco Production is the exploration and production subsidiary of Standard.

The Morrow natural gas play covers more than 3.3 million acres in Lea and Eddy Counties. The Morrow is a deep formation where natural gas is trapped in what explorationists interpret were ancient river channels and sandbars.

According to industry estimates, it may prove to contain reserves of up to 10 trillion cubic feet of gas and 100 million barrels of oil.

Amoco has an inventory of about 250,000 acres leased on the trend.

While drilling wildcats to evaluate existing leases, Amoco is also acquiring about 40,000 acres of new leases a year.

The company expects to drill about 250 wells there during the next three years. Amoco plans in 1981 to participate in 44 gross exploratory wells and 62 gross development wells.

HOUSTON — Texaco U.S.A. has constructed and put into operation two new gas processing plants near Sour Lake, Texas.

Texaco's Aquarius Gas Processing Plant, located 2 1/2 miles south of Sour Lake in Jefferson County, was placed on stream on June 10. The company's new Constitution Gas Processing Plant is located about eight miles northeast of Sour Lake in Hardin County and began operation in late April.

Each plant has the capacity to recover 500 barrels a day of a mixture of ethane, propane, butane and other natural gas liquids from an initial throughput of five million cubic feet a day of natural gas. The plants process natural gas from recently developed Texaco wells in the Sour Lake area.

CHICAGO — Robert L. Blanton has been named vice president of the Central & South American and Far East region of Amoco Production Company (International), headquartered in Houston, effective July 1.

The announcement was made by H.O. Boswell, president of the company.

Blanton, who is currently exploration vice president for the company in Chicago replaces Ian Macartney, who has elected to take early retirement on August 1 after more than 33 years with the company.

A graduate of the University of Oklahoma in geology, Blanton first joined the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) organization in 1951. Since that time, he has served in numerous Standard subsidiaries, including Amoco Production predecessor companies and Amoco Minerals, as well as Standard itself. He was named exploration vice president in 1976.

Blanton and his wife are both natives of Birmingham, Ala. They currently reside in the Chicago suburb of Wilmette but will be moving to the Houston area in the near future.

Plan to save tall forest calls for cutting timber

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — A jungle towering to 145 feet, its trees laced with vines and orchids, will soon be settled by peasant farmers.

Usually that would spell the end of a tropical forest. This time, however, the farmers will be part of a project to save the forest while using it to boost their income.

They'll cut the trees, but only in sections small enough to reseed themselves or be replanted and still maintain the wide diversity unique to tropical rainforests.

Details of the project are still being worked out, but the farmers will either be paid for their timber-cutting or sell the wood themselves. They'll also be able to work on roads and other improvements and probably have small plots for crops.

The experiment, planned to begin late this year with about 80 peasant families moving into the Sarapiquí forest north of here, is believed to be the first of its kind in the Americas.

"This is the first attempt anywhere, in places where there are tropical forests, to demonstrate that it is both ecologically and economically practical to manage a native tropical American forest," said Gary Hartshorn of the Tropical Science Center here.

"The classic attitude toward the forest throughout the tropics is that it's worthless — that you have to cut it down to improve the land," he said.

Tropical rainforests around the world are gradually being cleared for pasture, cropland or firewood or replaced by plantations of one species. Even in Costa Rica — considered progressive in conservation because of a national park system which covers 3.5 percent of its land — more than 40 percent of the dense forest cover disappeared between 1950 and 1977. At that rate, it will all be gone by the turn of the century.

One of the most unusual aspects of the project will be clear-cutting, or removing all the trees in an area, says Steve Knabel, local director of the U.S. Agency for International Development. AID and the Costa Rican government are financing the project.

Farmers will clear-cut in long, narrow strips, perhaps 2.5 acres a year in a 150-acre plot. The cuts will be narrow enough to be reseeded by the surrounding forest, Hartshorn said.

Other experimental techniques will include several methods of selective logging — cutting commercially valuable trees of a minimum size — and letting the forest reseed itself, or replanting desirable species.

Because tropical rainforests have so many different kinds of trees — about 75 on an average 2.5 acres in the Sarapiquí project area and even more in more tropical regions — they are difficult to develop commercially. Only about 20 of those 75 are exploited now, but part of the project will be to search for new uses, Hartshorn said.

Loss of the Sarapiquí forest, Hartshorn said, would threaten 20 to 30 kinds of trees and hundreds of other plants and animals, including a wild relative of the cacao plant used in making chocolate. Like the wild relatives of corn and other domestic plants, it may someday be needed to create new disease- and pest-resistant varieties.

Without the project, the farmers would probably clear the forest for pasture or to sell to larger landholders. Farmers in the area earn about 600 to 800 U.S. dollars a year, many of them as sharecroppers.

Peter Ashton, director of the Arnold Arboretum at Harvard, said the research done in Costa Rica would be most applicable in forests in South America, particularly along the foothills of the Andes in Ecuador, Colombia and Peru, which also have volcanic soils.

The five-year project is one part of a $21 million, five-part AID land management program which would eventually involve one-fifth of the country. AID is providing a $9.8 million, 20-year, low-interest loan.

Aid-credits package marks new stage in U.S.-Pakistani ties

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Deemed strategically important by the Reagan administration, Pakistan got a $3 billion boost recently in the form of U.S. economic aid and military loans.

The package represents a symbolic healing in ruptured bilateral ties. Aid was stopped in April, 1979, because of Pakistan's nuclear program.

Foreign Minister Agha Shahi has made clear, however, that Pakistan will not return to the relationship it had in the 1950s when, as a member of the now-defunct Central Treaty Organization (CENTO), it considered itself firmly in the U.S. security orbit.

The South Asian country wants access to American weaponry without U.S. bases on its soil or other conditions that would affect its friendship with the Persian Gulf states and call into question its newly acquired credentials as a non-aligned state, Shahi has said.

But the improvement in Pakistan's ties with the United States might come at the expense of those with India, its traditional enemy, at a time when the two neighbors were beginning a process of "normalization."

Although it still requires U.S. congressional approval, the $3 billion agreement already has placed in jeopardy the Indian-Pakistani fence-mending effort.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government in India said in a statement that the American deal could undermine normalization since it would introduce a "new level of weapon sophistication" into the South Asian region.

The only advanced weapon disclosed so far is the F-16 jet fighter-bomber which the Pakistanis intend to buy not with the credits but with funds from Saudi Arabia at an early date.

As Indian officials point out, U.S. arms in Pakistani hands have been used against Indian troops in the past. The two countries have waged war against each other three times since 1947.

Reagan administration officials answer Indian fears by saying that Pakistan urgently requires strengthened air-defense and anti-tank weaponry along its western border to meet the threat posed by the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan.

The Pakistanis also maintain they are following India's example in securing arms for their own defense. This is a reference to a multi-billion dollar arms deal India struck with the Soviet Union recently.

Before Pakistan ever sees any of the aid-credits package, congressional approval and changes in non-proliferation laws are needed. President Reagan has asked lawmakers to waive restrictions to countries like Pakistan when it is in the national interest.

Western diplomatic sources, requesting anonymity because of their positions here, have expressed a belief that Pakistani scientists at the Kahuta nuclear center near Islamabad might be within two years of an atomic test.

Pakistan's president, Gen. Mohammed Zia ul-Haq has denied that the program is for anything other than peaceful applications of atomic power.

What seems apparent is that the military regime's human-rights record is not likely to be affected one way or another.

While U.S. Undersecretary of State James L. Buckley negotiated the new package, Zia issued martial law regulation No. 51 which permits summary military trial and maximum sentences of five lashes and five years' imprisonment at hard labor for strike organizers at state-owned enterprises including the national airlines.

About 2,000 political prisoners, including the widow and daughter of executed Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, have been jailed since March in a crackdown against dissidents, according to Western diplomatic sources. All political activity has been banned and newspapers censored since 1979.

200th Yorktown anniversary celebrated

YORKTOWN, Va. (AP) — Bicentennial is coming back, with 4,000 costumed volunteers, mighty warships and Chesapeake Bay sailers, campfires and cannon fire, fife, drums, politicians and skyrockets.

The occasion is the 200th anniversary of the siege of Yorktown, the campaign that finally won American independence after more than six years of almost hopeless war.

President Reagan is scheduled to deliver the keynote speech, and newly-elected French President Francois Mitterrand says he may come. Britain is understandably reluctant about celebrating one of its more embarrassing defeats, but Prince Charles already has visited nearby Williamsburg.

Although July 4 is celebrated as Independence Day and the country's official bicentennial was celebrated in 1976, many historians and patriots from George Washington to the present think the victory at Yorktown on Oct. 19, 1781 was the real birthdate of American independence.

In his orders of the day for Sept. 30, 1781, the day Lord Cornwallis withdrew British forces to the inner fortifications at Yorktown and the siege began in earnest, Washington said the outcome "will decide American independence."

That was more than five years after the Declaration of Independence.

Unlike the official national Bicentennial of 1976, this one is being planned and carried out by private initiative and the states involved with a minimum of federal support. But it may do what the first one failed.

For four days in October this antique town which has been an active community for three and a half centuries will become a living festival, the closest thing to a bicentennial fair the country will see.

Mock soldiers in Revolutionary garb will march on the city and camp around it as Washington's Continentals and their French allies did 200 years ago.

Mighty warships will ride the swells of Chesapeake Bay and the York River just as a French fleet sealed the waterway and closed the trap on Cornwallis.

Some of the costumed troops will "march" all the way from Rhode Island as the French army, joined by Washington's outside New York, did in 1781. One contingent will commemorate the march from Williamsburg, the 18th century staging point, dragging baggage and horsedrawn baggage behind.

From Oct. 16 through the Oct. 19 finale the simulated army will camp in revolutionary era tents, cook revolutionary food in revolutionary pots

creating the largest 18th century style encampment in America.

A dream that will never come true

By RON S. HEINZEL
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

A recent ad in a financial publication masks the story of a dream that never came true.

It offered for sale a full-scale replica of the historic British sailing ship, the H.M.S. Bounty. Built in New Zealand from the original Bounty's plans, the 133-foot-long vessel has features never imagined by Capt. William Bligh — twin diesel engines, concealed radar, radio communications and comfortable accommodations for 30 persons. And under the Takekaha wood deck and the African Iroko wood planking lies a steel deck and hull.

But the intriguing story is who owns the ship and why it is being sold. A call to the number listed in the ad was greeted by: "Dino De Laurentiis Corp.," headquarters of the famous film producer.

Fred Sidewater, vice president of the firm, explained that in 1979, De Laurentiis planned to take "a new view" of the Mutiny on the Bounty story that was to be called either "The Lawbreakers" or "Saga of the Bounty." Construction of the unpublished film's biggest and most expensive prop — the ship — began in New Zealand.

By the time the ship was completed, De Laurentiis decided the film would be too costly, and quietly scrapped the project, deciding now to sell the prop.

Sidewater says the firm has received several inquiries about the $4.5 million ship.

Preventing tragedy

Housing, as most Midlanders know, is a big, unwieldy, seemingly unsolvable headache for the Tall City.

But it's a problem that demands resolution. It has the potential to stop the city's fabulous growth trend or at least severely affect it.

There is no doubt, in fact, that lack of acceptable, low-cost housing is one of the city's most serious — if not the most serious — problems.

Really, low-cost housing for the poor or the elderly is virtually non-existent. The housing either doesn't exist or the law of supply and demand boosts rents well above what would be considered acceptable for many with low incomes. But the problem goes beyond that.

There's that "other" housing problem, the one encountered by young singles or married couples whose moderate-level salaries either do not make it possible for them to save the necessary down payment for a home or who have money for the down payment, but current interest rates on home loans make monthly payments prohibitive. And there are those who can afford a home, but can't find one because construction is still far behind demand.

There is no question that the single-family housing bond programs operated here by the city and county have been good and have addressed a real need — homes for young families and those residents seeking to move up in the housing market. It was a real pleasure to hear that yet another bond proposal apparently will be offered to the city's residents in the not-too-distant future.

But it's essential that we recognize the fact that the housing needs of low-income residents, the elderly and the handicapped are not being fully met. And, let's face it, those low- to moderate-income workers are going to be among the ones who keep the wheels turning, as far as Midland's growth and increased oil activity is concerned.

Federal officials have told city officials during recent days that Midland's request for Community Development Block Grant funds is in jeopardy because the city is proposing no new construction for low-income residents. We are aware of the historical opposition to rent-subsidized housing in Midland by some city leaders and, to an extent, we can agree with that opposition. But the city has now reached the point at which city officials need to look long and hard at the consequences of not taking a chance on new construction in the area of subsidized housing as a means of meeting Midland's housing need.

The housing needs here are nearing critical levels. As the city's growth continues and as businesses and industries expand, and new ones locate here, the needs of our work force will compound. Eventually the housing market here will reverse the trend and work to the detriment of the city.

To allow that to happen would be a tragedy perhaps unequalled in this city's history.

Savers win incentives

The federal government is again demonstrating that often the best help it can give the consumer is to get out of the way.

The Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee, the agency designated by Congress to do away with controls on interest rates, has taken a significant step in that direction.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, as chairman of the committee, announced that beginning Aug. 1 depositors in banks and thrift institutions will be able to win returns comparable to Treasury Department issues on 30-month certificates.

And under a new deregulation schedule, all ceilings on interest rates will be eliminated by Aug. 1, 1985, a year earlier than originally planned.

Perhaps more significantly, the committee also will seek public and industry comment on a proposal to allow up to 10.5 percent interest on ordinary passbook accounts.

The only objections heard so far to the move toward decontrol have come, not surprisingly, from the regulated institutions. The action will "impose heavy, additional costs," said Ronald Barnard, president of the U.S. League of Savings Associations.

But the people gain. And in the long run, the nation, too, will benefit.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Americans' most basic freedom threatened

WASHINGTON — On this Independence Day weekend, most Americans are probably more worried about the threat of rain on their picnic than about a threat to their fundamental freedoms.

Yet our most basic freedom — the right to free expression of opinion under the First Amendment — is under increasing heavy assault these days. And the attack is being encouraged, indeed led, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

This probably would not have surprised the Founding Fathers. The violation of individual rights by King George III, his courts and his parliament was an important cause of the American Revolution, and the trampling of free speech and a free press was one reflection of this tyranny.

So when the leaders of the new nation, their revolution won, sat down to construct a new form of government, they realized that the people would not accept the Constitution unless it contained unmistakable guarantees that would protect the citizens from their government. And the first of these guarantees, the one that was basic to all the others, was the amendment that established freedom of expression.

In recent decisions, however, the Supreme Court has steadily chipped away at the First Amendment's protection. Instead of protecting the people from their government, the court has been protecting the government from its people.

It is an irony that would dismay the Founding Fathers, though it would hardly astonish them. They knew all too well the tendency of government to tyrannize its citizens; that's what they tried to prevent with the supposedly ironclad protections spelled out in the Bill of Rights.

One way the Supreme Court has been eroding the First Amendment is by slowly and systematically leaving the defense of basic individual rights to the tender mercies of state courts and legislatures, which are far more susceptible to pressure from the special interests and other local groups with political clout. No longer can the people count on their Uncle Sam to intervene when the neighborhood bully picks on them.

Nowhere is this trend more evident, or more disturbing, than in the continuing abridgment of freedom of the press. The average citizen often doesn't understand that a free press — even if it is sometimes an irresponsible bulwark against government oppression.

By narrowing the press's protection from ruinous libel suits, and leaving interpretation of the First Amendment up to local judges, the Supreme Court is endangering the existence of the one institution powerful enough to battle the politicians on anything close to an equal footing.

As the people of Nazi Germany, the Soviet Union and any number of other dictatorships have learned to their sorrow, without a free press they become defenseless against the onslaughts of those in power.

One effect of the Supreme Court's rulings against the press has been an epidemic of libel suits. In Oklahoma, for example, one major Tulsa paper estimates that since 1976 it has spent at least $100,000 on legal paperwork to defend itself against 12 libel suits that never even made it to trial.

"Libel litigation is a sport in Oklahoma," a representative of the state's beleaguered press association said.

Last year, a county court jury slapped the Daily Oklahoman, the state's largest-circulation newspaper, with a $1 million libel judgment. The successful plaintiff was George Miskovsky, a candidate for the U.S. Senate who drew less than 2 percent of the vote in the 1978 Democratic primary.

"It is the largest libel verdict ever attained by a candidate for office," the successful litigant boasted to my reporter Jeff Drumtra. And Mis-kovsky is apparently correct. Until the Burger Court began its hatchet job on the First Amendment, public officials and political candidates had been fair game for critical press coverage.

The interesting thing about Miskovsky's libel suit is that it arose from the newspaper's criticism of a campaign tactic that itself appeared to come perilously close to defamation. Two weeks before the primary, Miskovsky called a press conference to ask Gov. David Boren, the front-runner and eventual winner of both the primary and the Senate seat, four questions:

"Do you know what a homosexual or bisexual is? Are you a homosexual or bisexual? Have you ever been a homosexual or bisexual? Have you ever engaged in homosexual or bisexual activity?"

The Oklahoma press reacted with varying degrees of outrage. Miskovsky, a lawyer, offered no evidence about Boren's sexual proclivities, but said he had heard rumors and was merely asking questions. "I have never charged and still don't charge that Boren is homosexual," he said.

The Daily Oklahoman scolded Miskovsky for what it called his "gutter theatrics." Miskovsky sued.

When most of his case was thrown out by a judge in one county, Miskovsky took it to a different county. "I believed I had a better chance in Cleveland County," he explained. "People there aren't as mesmerized by the Daily Oklahoman."

It was a shrewd maneuver. Members of the jury said later they disliked both Miskovsky and the Daily Oklahoman, so they decided to punish them both by giving the plaintiff "only" $1 million of the $25 million he had sought.

Now, Miskovsky is suing the Daily Oklahoman for $50 million — for reprinting the libelous articles in its coverage of his first lawsuit.

Footnote: Two months ago, I wrote about the plight of the Lake Charles, La., American Press, which had been sued by a local official who had taken umbrage over a critical editorial. The state courts had awarded the plaintiff $175,000 in damages and fees. On June 15, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear the case, thus leaving in force a state appeals court ruling against the American Press.

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

TV producer Norman Lear has formed an organization to counter the messages of the Moral Majority. He calls his group People for the American Way, thereby managing to come up with an even more pompous name than Moral Majority.

A pox on both their houses. This isn't what Lear probably had in mind, but look who the sole survivor of "All in the Family" is — Archie Bunker, who theoretically is a funny Falwell with a New York accent.

With Archie, bigotry was put right in the spotlight so millions would see it as it is — something they could gleefully embrace in good conscience.

OUR CONGRESSMAN GOT HIS PICTURE IN THE PAPER AGAIN -

ART BUCHWALD

Feeling good simply isn't good enough!

Something happens to people when they visit friends or relatives in the hospital. I was forced to spend a few days in one not long ago for minor surgery, and had a chance to observe the weird behavior of people who came to comfort me.

As a patient, I discovered you are at a complete disadvantage. Dressed in hospital garb, and stuck in a bed, you're no longer on equal terms with your pals. Without their realizing it, the entire relationship has changed.

Art Buchwald

From being a friend on equal footing with the Parkers, I suddenly found myself being treated like the senile uncle when they appeared at the hospital room door.

"You look great," Yvonne Parker said. "Doesn't he look great, Bill?"

"You certainly do," Bill agreed. "I've never seen you looking better."

"I feel great. I'm sore, but I feel just great."

"You have good color in your face," Yvonne said.

"Thanks," I replied. "Won't you sit down?"

"We can't stay too long," Bill said nervously, as he sat down. Then he got up. "Would you like a drink of water?"

"I don't think so, right now. But if I do I can pour one from this pitcher next to my bed."

"Isn't that great, Yvonne? He can pour his own water."

"I think it's just wonderful. Can I help you with your pillow?"

"No thank you. I'm very comfortable."

"You look comfortable. I wouldn't even know you had been sick," Yvonne said.

"What does your doctor say?"

"He says I'm doing just fine. He doesn't think I'll have to stay the week."

"If he says so, he should know," Bill said.

"He wouldn't let you go home unless you were better," Yvonne said.

"That's what I thought," I said. "The reason he wants me to stay here is, if I go home, I'll overdo it. At the same time, he doesn't want me to stay in bed all day because I'll get stiff. He wants me to walk around."

Yvonne said, "We'll leave if you want to walk around."

"No. I don't want to walk around now. I'll walk around later."

"I can't believe how good you look," Bill commented. "Doesn't he look good, Yvonne?"

"I've never seen him look better."

"Well, what's going on in the outside world?" I asked.

"Don't think about the outside world. Your job is to get well," Bill said. "Isn't that right, Yvonne?"

"That's right. There's no sense thinking about other things until you're on the mend."

"Well," said Bill, "we don't want to tire you out."

"You're not tiring me out. I feel great."

"You don't think you're tired," Yvonne said, "because you feel so good. But you have to rest. Do you want me to put your bed down?"

"No, if I want to put my bed down, I can do it with this button right here."

"We don't want to interfere with your dinner," Bill said.

"It's only three o'clock. They don't serve dinner around here until five."

Yvonne said, "Then you probably want to wash up for it. Bill, we'd better be moving along."

Bill got up. "You look just great."

Yvonne agreed. "I wouldn't believe it if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes."

Bill said, "You're going to be okay, guy. Isn't he going to be all right, Yvonne?"

"Of course he's going to be all right. He'll be his own self in no time."

"You hear that, fellow? Yvonne says you're going to be your old self in no time. And when she says something like that, you'd better listen to her. She knows what she's talking about."

BIBLE VERSE

The thoughts of the righteous are just; but the counsels of the wicked are deceit. Prov. 12:5

Commissioner of education faces share of hot issues

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Commissioner of Education Raymon Bynum jokes that his situation is like that described in a story about a drunk found lying in a smoldering hotel-room bed with a cigarette.

Warned that he might be charged with being drunk and disorderly and with arson, the inebriated protested, "that's not fair — that bed was on fire when I got in it."

While Bynum isn't likely to find any time to be lying down on the job, he does face a few hot issues.

Bynum took over as commissioner June 1, succeeding Alton O. Bowen.

Bynum isn't planning any major changes from the previous administration.

"I personally see my role as not the know-it-all who has answers...but as the catalyst.... My primary role is to push, and coerce, and bring about situations to allow solutions to be found," he says.

That pushing, Bynum indicates, is going to start primarily in four major areas.

First of those, he says, is the issue of teacher competency.

The 1981 Legislature, he notes, approved legislation dealing with teacher certification, as related both to ability specifically in teaching, and to basic qualifications in subject areas.

The Texas Education Agency will be working with several groups and agencies on that matter, with the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System; Commission on Standards in the Teaching Profession; State Board of Education and various colleges and universities due to assist.

"That's going to take a lot of my time," Bynum says.

Also on the agenda is work on the public school curriculum — another area dealt with by the 1981 legislative session.

The curriculum bill which was passed is "a basics bill," Bynum notes, but it requires that the Board of Education set out a number of essential elements.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

"We really start from square one on that one," Bynum says, noting that hearings will be scheduled to receive comments relating to the curriculum.

Another major area which Bynum and the Board of Education must deal with — and quickly — is the sticky issue of bilingual education.

That issue, too, was addressed by the Legislature this year, and is still involved in lawsuits.

Bynum and the TEA will take "emergency" rules on implementing the new bilingual proposal, which expands State support for bilingual programs through elementary school, the Board for adoption at a meeting this month.

Those rules, Bynum notes, have to be adopted as an emergency matter in order to get them in place by the start of this fall's school year.

Bilingual education, Bynum says, is likely to remain as a problem area for some time, due to lack of qualified personnel and a shortage of materials.

A fourth major area to be considered is finance — which, Bynum comments, involves a number of considerations.

Under SB 180, adopted this year, the Legislature has directed TEA to make a study by July 1, 1982, of education cost factors, with an eye towards possible revisions in State funding formulas.

Part of the reason for that, Bynum says, is the realization that the diverse nature of Texas' school districts makes it difficult to provide equal or equivalent funding from the state.

Formulas, he says "may need to be different for Houston than for other places...."

Also to be considered will be changes in Federal funding, which appears definitely on the decline — a decline which Bynum hopes will be accompanied by a decrease in federal regulations.

Bynum notes that school districts also will be keeping attentive eyes and ears on the month's special legislative session — when lawmakers are due to consider property tax revisions, since school districts are the largest tax-consuming entities in terms of ad valorem taxes.

Bynum also foresees continuing problems in the next several years over the availability of teachers, noting that Texas graduated only 9,800 students this year who were certified as teachers.

"We are getting a teacher shortage," Bynum says, adding that if it were not for the annual "in-migration" to Texas of 10,000 teachers from other states the problem would be far more acute.

The reason for the decline, he adds, "is not just pay," but includes other factors — such as the availability to women of other careers, and loss of prestige of teaching.

But, Bynum says, whatever the cause, that's another area where he'll be trying to take the heat off — even though he didn't start the fire.

'Hopeless, Mr. Habib? I wouldn't call the situation hopeless. In fact, I think we can expect a major breakthrough any time now'

KINGSBURY-SMITH

Meese has confident view of economic plans

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — With President Reagan's political triumph in Congress on his proposed budget cuts, there is now strong confidence in the White House that his economic recovery program will be enacted and will bring down the annual inflationary rate to around 8 percent by the end of next year.

There is also firm conviction among the president's top advisors that when the recovery program is fully implemented over the next three years, it will improve the economic lot of every American, including the elderly and the poor.

This was made clear by Edwin Meese, counselor to the president, in an exclusive interview with The Hearst Newspapers.

The president's personal wooing of conservative House Democrats, which led to what is generally acknowledged in Washington to be one of the most dramatic legislative victories a president has achieved since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt, has also, in Meese's opinion, laid to rest the canard that Ronald Reagan, though a "nice guy," lacks presidential leadership capabilities and is too old for the job.

While the president's telephone calls to the conservative Democrats and offers to aid them politically are credited with having helped persuade them to bolt the Democratic leadership, Meese believes a major reason for the president's success in the Congressional battle was the public support for his recovery program that was generated by his actions in focusing the attention of the country on inflation, excessive federal spending and too much government intervention in business and the lives of individuals.

The soft-spoken, affable lawyer, who has been called "assistant president" because of the powerful influence he wields as White House coordinator of domestic and foreign policy, said that if Congress enacts the recovery program before it recesses in August for the summer vacation, the chances of a decline in the annual inflationary rate to 8 percent by the end of 1982 are "very great."

Meese described the approval last week by a coalition of conservative House Democrats and Republicans of the president's package proposal to cut federal spending by $35 billion as "an important milestone in the progress toward completion of the economic recovery program."

"It was an absolutely critical action to have achieved for two reasons," he added. "One, unless we had been able to get control through this measure of the automatic or open-ended spending programs, there was really no hope in the long run of achieving the economic change that is necessary in terms of federal spending. It is that change that will ultimately lead to less deficits and a balanced budget, which, in turn, will be reflected in lowering the inflation rate."

"The other thing is that by getting control of federal spending, we have paved the way for the other parts of the economic recovery package, which include the tax program. The latter is designed both to offset the tax increases that Congress had previously voted for our citizens, and also to provide for the incentives for savings and investment in our industrial base."

"I think what was significant, besides the personal persuasive qualities of the president, was the fact that the public, especially in the districts of the congressmen who supported the bi-partisan program, were in favor of it," Meese said. "The mainstream of American political thinking is now along the lines of the programs espoused by the president. I think those Democratic congressmen recognize that and are therefore willing to participate in bi-partisan coalition politics."

The president's budget cutting proposal still awaits final drafting by a joint Senate-House conference committee, where some minor changes are likely to be made. The package is expected to be approved by both houses of Congress shortly after the July Fourth recess.

Asked whether he thought the country was witnessing a major political realignment that could make the Republican party the major party in America, Meese thought it was too early to tell.

"We have to wait probably until the congressional elections of '82, and maybe even the elections of '84 and '86 before we'll know that for sure. One thing is probably pretty definite, that many of the congressmen who voted for the bi-partisan package certainly assisted their own political fortunes by doing so."

When his attention was called to the contention of some critics that he, White House chief of staff James Baker and deputy chief of staff Michael Deaver (the big three), run the country, and not the president, Meese said anyone familiar with what goes on in the White House knows that is not true.

"The president is the only chief executive. He is the one who has the primary leadership role in the running of the government. The rest of us assist him in carrying out his responsibilities, but it is he, and he alone, who sets the policy, sets the objectives and provides the overall leadership."

Citing the president's leadership in dealing directly with individual members of Congress to secure bi-partisan support for his budget cutting package, Meese said: "No president in recent times has shown the skill he displayed in personal dealings with the members of Congress. More than that, he succeeded by his personal leadership in focusing the attention of the entire country, the Congress, the executive branch, the news media and the public on the economic recovery program. It's been a long time since we've seen any president able to do that."

As to the criticism that the president's budget cuts will hurt the elderly and the poor while his proposed tax cuts will help make the rich richer, Meese said the important thing to bear in mind is that the president's economic recovery program is "going to improve the economic situation of every American."

"It's not, as some have contended, designed for Americans in this income bracket or that income bracket," he added. "It really is going to help all Americans, including the poor and the needy. These are the people that are hurt most by inflation. They are hurt by a combination of inflation and taxes. Furthermore, we've reached a point where it's very questionable whether the federal government could have afforded continuation of many of these open-ended spending programs."

"The reduction in inflation, the increase in jobs and the reduction ultimately in interest rates that will be brought about by the president's recovery program are the kind of things that are going to help all Americans."

Whoopie. But, as everyone may know, starbursts, big bangs, and a rainbow of colors of aerial fireworks streaking up, arching and falling as ashes do not instill patriotism and renewed dedication to liberty and freedom.

It would be vain to think so. Neither do dream tales of a cherub of chap somehow falling down a narrow chimney instill Christendom with the merriment of fawning elves who are mesmerized by the Rotund Jolly One and appalled by Scrooge. The usual fare of Christmas cheer glosses over and subdues the glow of the earthly birth of the Son of God.

How Saint Nicholas, the Easter bunny and the hidden dyed eggs, reindeer and elves got mixed up with Christianity is, indeed, a marvel in incongruity. It's almost incredible.

Now, striking matches, lighting fuses and watching the bursts of fire and listening to the reverberations of explosions have far more to do with the Independent Day of 1776 than tinted eggs and cute rabbits and Fifth

No competition

To The Editor:

To my chagrin we note from the weekly TV Guide Magazine that HBO is again carrying the Wimbledon Tennis matches, but not in Midland because we are stuck with Spotlight.

We enjoyed watching that best of all tennis tournaments for a full week on HBO last year. Comparison between the two demonstrates that HBO is far superior in making much available besides running movies such as documentaries, musical and sport special events etc.

It is fair to conclude that the new Tall City Cable TV owner has substituted the Times-Mirror Corporation's Spotlight, a much cheaper product, if you will, and a bit of a rip-off to put it bluntly. The local office either refuses to answer our telephone calls or if they do you get the run-around.

How might we get some cable TV competition in Midland. We sure need it.

Halt handguns

To The Editor:

In regard to your June 21 edition featuring the muzzle of a revolver being aimed directly and unavoidably at our readers, I would like to register a complaint.

This represented an aggressive, vulgar, obscene, and abusive invasion of my person. I was not able to read the front page because that threatening picture dominated it. As an advocate for the care of young children I am sure that this picture was viewed with great alarm by those in whom we are trying to instill a sense of trust and security.

The thing that surprises me is that you would have run this picture at this time when there is a nation-wide media campaign, spurred by the NRA, in defense of handguns. The handgun is being praised for its harmless use in hunting wild game and for target practice. I certainly felt that I was being made the target, in this case, and I strongly protest.

Every week your pages report a horrifying number of people killed and robbed by handguns. There seems to be blatant inconsistencies between this message, of the picture, and that of the editorials following the shooting of the President and then the Pope.

I would urge you to exert your considerable influence to stop the killing and bring about a climate of peace and trust.

Dumpster deeds

To The Editor:

Please inform new families when they are moving into a new home just how to use the dumpster in the alley.

If the Water Department would please send a note to the newcomer how to use the dumpster when he turns on his water, maybe we could have our clean alleys again and cut down on so many mosquitoes, and possible diseases which some dogs are beginning to obtain!

A city high

To The Editor:

Midland is a city high.

Tumbleweeds; sand in your eye.

At noon the people are in a race to find an uncrowded fast-food place.

The city always on the run to make sure all the work is done. Sometimes I wish it would slow down.

Not a city; but just a town. Maybe its air up here, that tends to make us act so queer. Perhaps the low humidity dries up the people's sanity.

But now I've lived here for a while. The city sometimes makes me smile.

Although it lives a rapid pace, I think this is a special place.

Soul of the issue

To The Editor:

On the subject of abortion, there is a misconception that is prevalent in the world today. This misconception centers around who we really are. We, of ourselves, are SOUL and not the mind nor the physical body. For centuries, man has believed in life after death, but still continues to identify himself as being the physical body. Instead, we are that which survives death.

The above is a necessary background to the subject of abortion. Life does not begin until SOUL enters the body. Usually this does not transpire until after the fetus has left the mother's womb. From the moment of conception up to birth, the fetus is a biological entity only and not a human being.

Therefore, it is not murder, a crime, or a sin for a woman to have an abortion. It is simply the mother's choice, whether to have the child, or not. The only sin involved in all of this is the guilt and fear that man has inflicted on women. Forcing a woman to view abortion as wrong, and punishing her for noncompliance with his misconception.

The real shame...

To The Editor:

It is incredible that you continue to print the obscene columns of Charley Reese! Certainly his column of pure drivel about "The Poor" (June 29) was totally without redeeming social value and sank his writing to a new low.

After admitting that some people are poor through no fault of their own, he went on to lambaste The Poor as though all persons in a state of poverty are "lazy, dishonest and irresponsible." The vast majority of poor people do not fit that description. In fact, a large percentage of the poor are either children or the elderly. Furthermore, I think it is much more deplorable for a rich person to be "lazy, dishonest and irresponsible" than for one who is poor to be that way. At least the poor one, in that case, is already getting what he deserves.

This nut Reese then went on to insist that The Poor should not be educated and should not vote (How un-American can he get?) but they should be ashamed to be poor! AU CONTRAIRE! There is NO shame in being poor. The shame is wholly on Reese for his total lack of humankindness and the evidence through his authorship of this slaver that indeed by his complete absence of compassion he himself is a most totally deprived member of The Poor.

For the sake of common decency I implore you to drop the writings of this brainless creature from your newspaper.

MMH reflections

To The Editor:

In view of the many letters to you in the past from patients (and their families) concerning Midland Memorial Hospital, I would like to share my reflections on the CCU and PCCU sections.

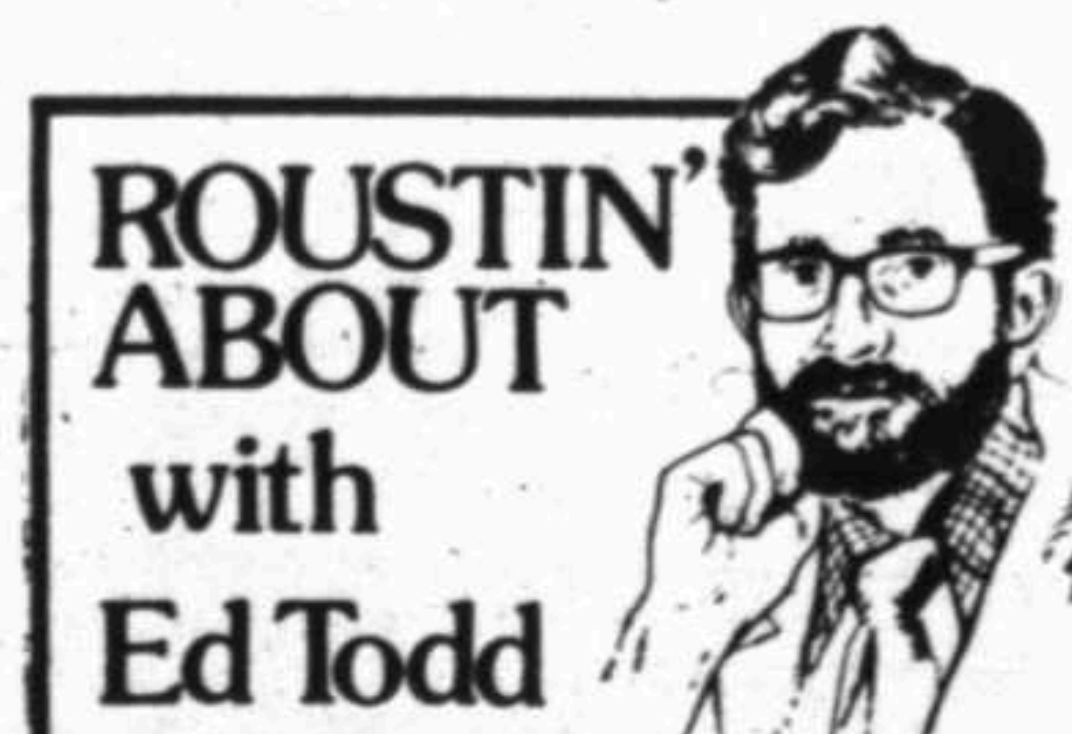

From the time I walked in the Emergency Room during a light heart attack on June 21st until I walked out on June 30th, I was amazed at the competency of the professionals, the quality and variety of the equipment, and the convenience of the facilities, within each section.

Over and above this, I was impressed by the warm personal concern of each person, professional and non-professional alike, for my comfort and recovery.

My deepest thanks to every person who has promoted and provided leadership over the years in bringing MMH to its present stature.

Patriotism isn't renewed by fireworks

By now, the Fourth of July is over again, and there's no big letdown.

There was no real big bang, anyway.

The Fourth came, and the Fourth went. And except for some isolated celebrating, the hurrahing was pale to nil. Little of it was heartfelt.

Sure, some kids, in the name of noise, shock, color bursts and excitement, shot off fireworks. Some big guys did, too, in the name of a Big Town color show, which folks — if they haven't forgotten — will compare with last year's. Avenue strutting and strolling have to do with the Resurrection or Santa Claus has to do with Christmas. Even the maligned turkey has its place at Thanksgiving.

But for what is thanks given?

For what are Christmas gifts opened?

For what are the colored eggs hidden?

For what are the fireworks fuses lit?

To err is more human than it is bestial. And, as a matter of course, man too soon forgets his heritage and the past which has shaped him and the country.

If man is too careless, "Liberty for all" will become "Liberty for the few."

And it will take far more than a thousand bandwagons and another Bicentennial-like propaganda campaign — just to remind the take-it-for-granted masses that this nation's aura as the Bulwark of Freedom didn't just appear by chance.

It was earned. But is it being forgotten?

Tomorrow's leaders get on the job training at Ortloff

Many of today's students understand that they will hold a job during much of their lives, and some Midland students are shouldering the responsibility for planning their careers through employment with The Ortloff Corporation.

Ortloff assists area students by providing on-the-job training opportunities in cooperation with the Vocational Office Education Cooperative Program administered through Midland and Lee High Schools.

Ortloff provides turnkey plant engineering and construction services for clients in the oil and gas processing, enhanced oil recovery, refining, petrochemicals and minerals recovery industries.

"Nearly all the VOE students employed with Ortloff through the years have been above average or outstanding," said M.F. Williamson, manager of human resources for Ortloff's Midland Division. "Their quality of work is usually higher when compared with many other office/clerical workers with compatible work experience but no formal VOE training."

Since the office staff is the backbone of Ortloff's organization, well-trained employees can reduce expenses, continued Williamson.

Ortloff has continually found that Midland high schools are a steady source of well-qualified workers for part-time work. According to Williamson, Ortloff likes to hire students who may eventually become full-time employees.

"Because Ortloff's technically oriented work environment provides meaningful experiences," added Williamson, "students develop self-confidence, independence and business-like traits, while having an opportunity to select the occupational area for which they are best suited."

Midland's VOE co-op students, all seniors at least 16 years old, are offered opportunities to work in many occupations with firms throughout the Permian Basin.

Ortloff's environment allows co-op student to perform job duties which promise suitable training in marketing and sales, accounting, engineering, purchasing, estimating, reproduction services and data processing.

Jane Tedford, personnel representative for Ortloff's Midland Division, attributes success with Midland VOE students to the fact that they are able to put into practice the skills and knowledge which they have gained through classroom study, and to the teacher-coordinators at both high schools.

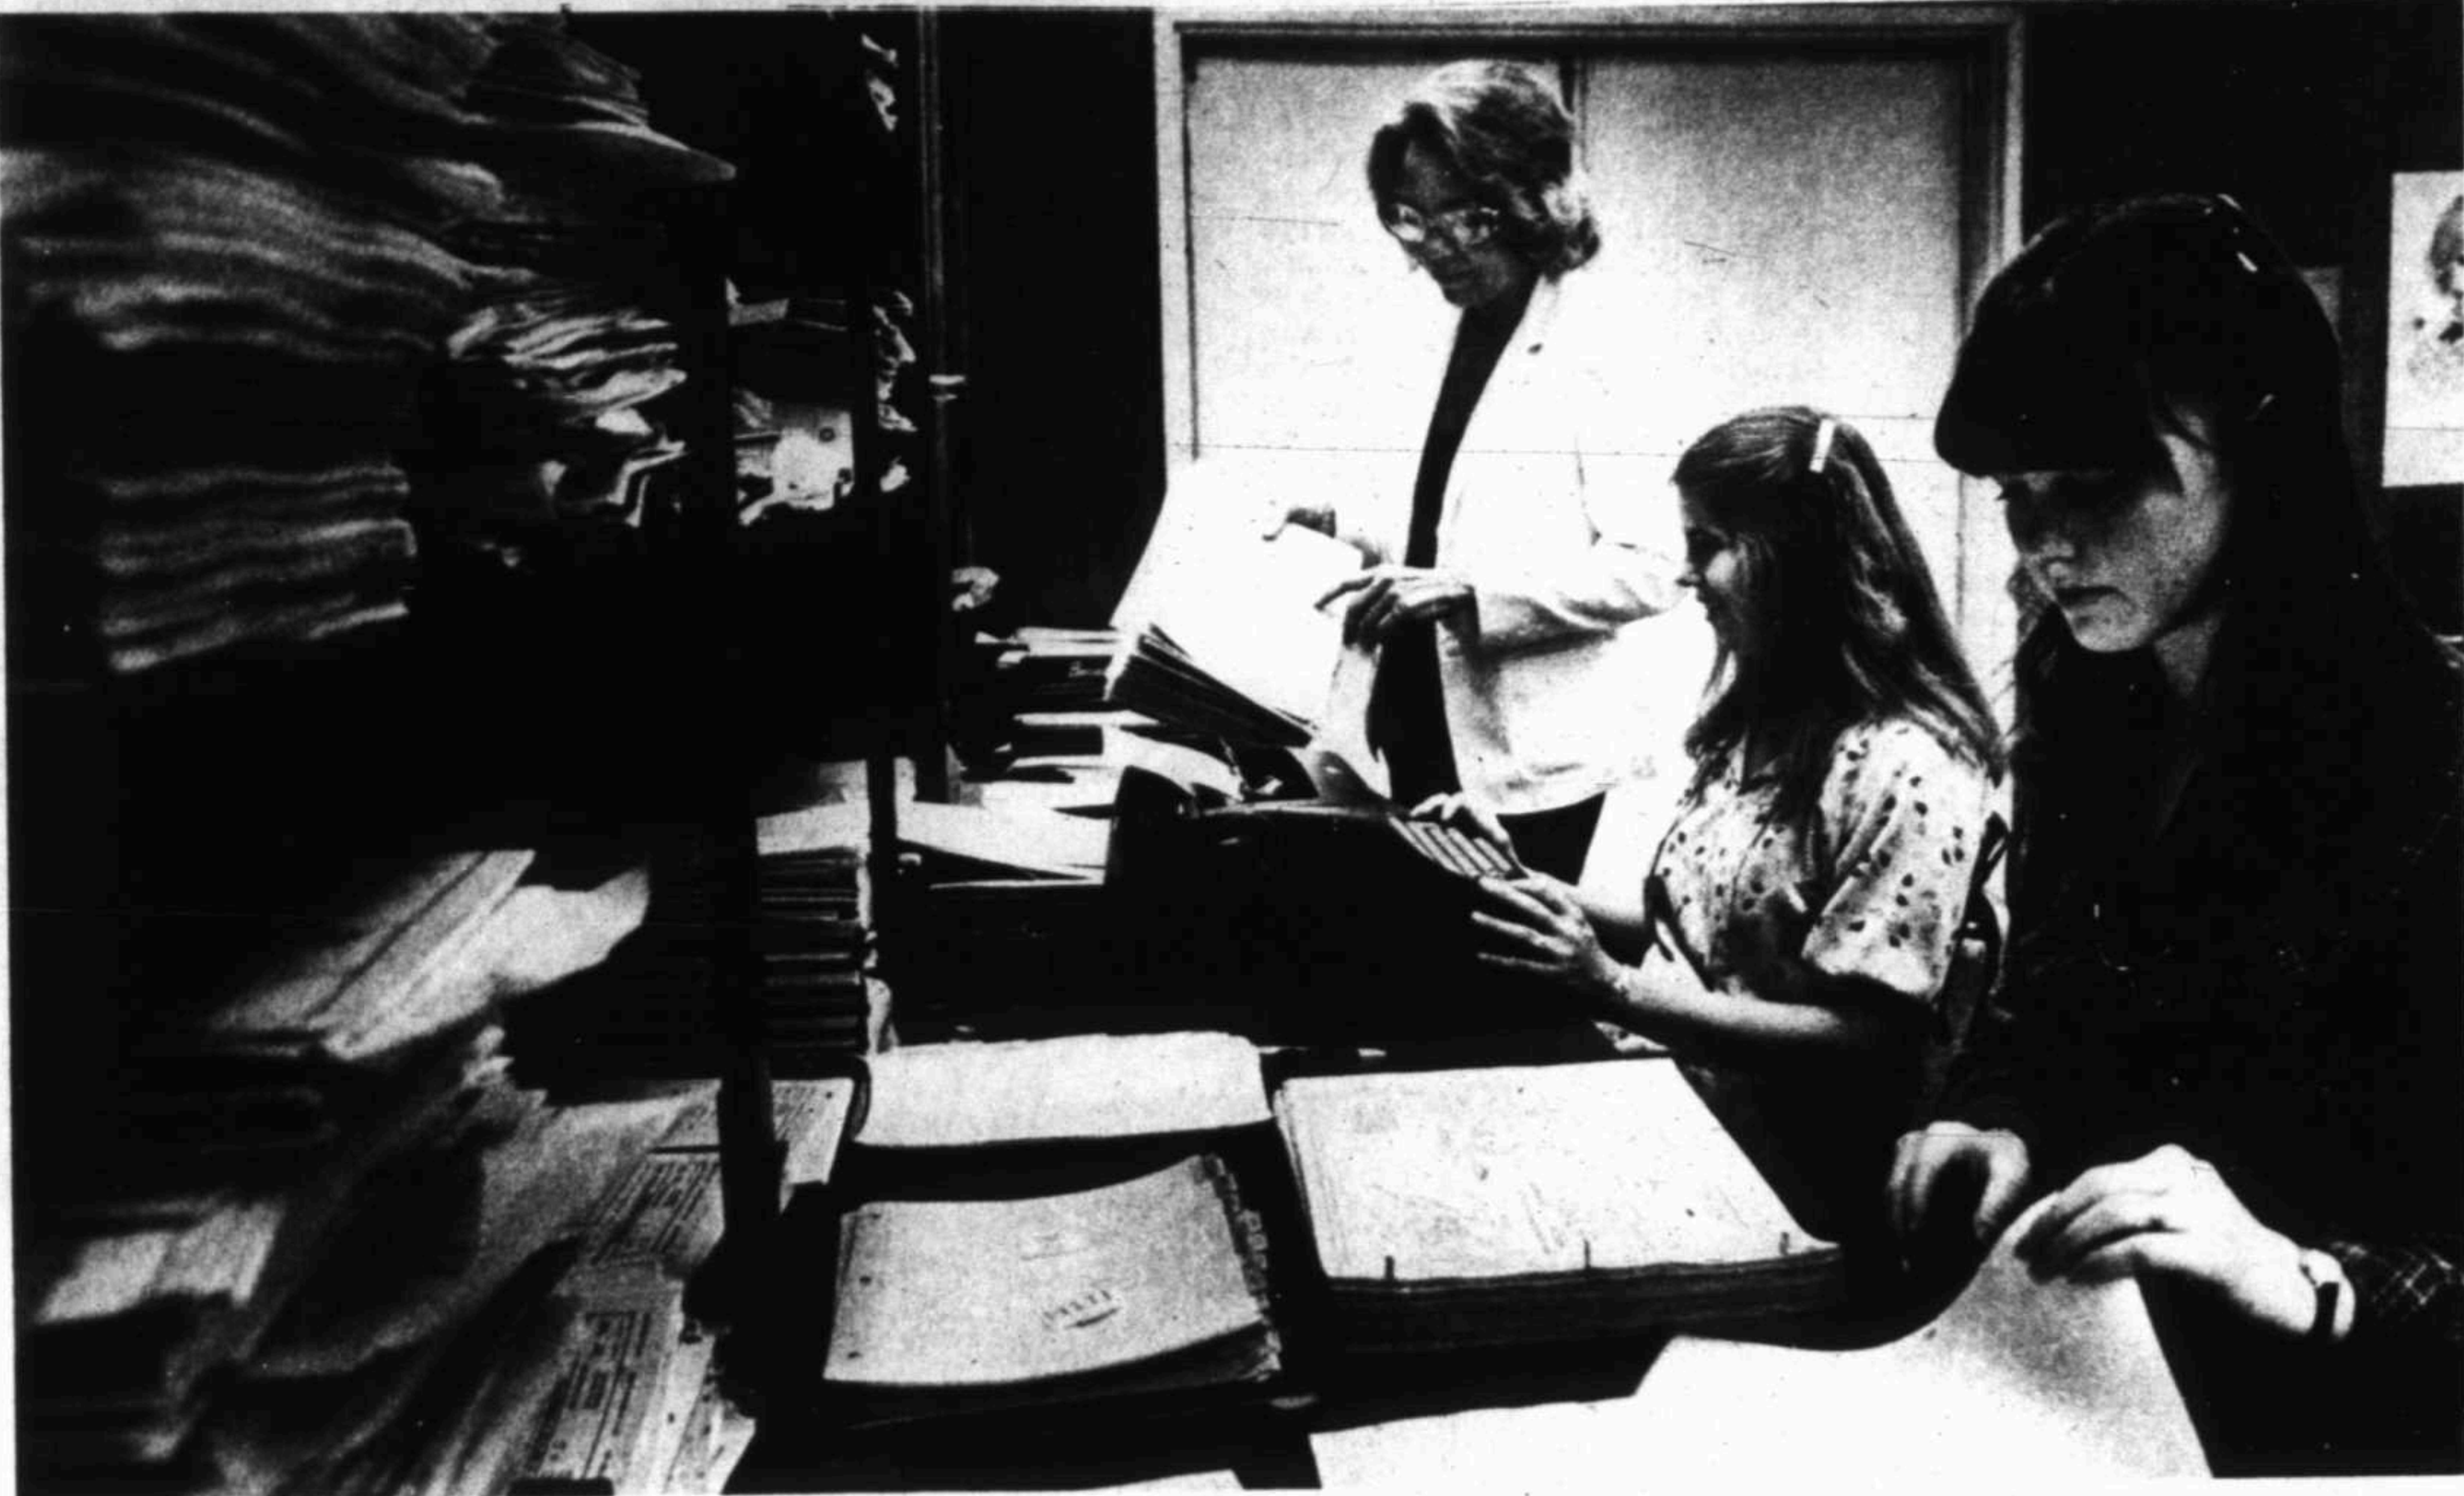

Students enrolling in the VOE program usually start during their junior year by participating in pre-employment laboratory training. In the laboratory program, students are provided technical instruction and simulated work experiences for two hours each day of the year to prepare them for employment in an office occupation.

In the cooperation education program, students work for at least three hours a day in a paid job under the supervision of an experienced office employee. VOE students also attend school part-time to complete graduation requirement and to take a related office education class.

An integral part of the VOE program is the Office Education Association, a youth organization which allows students to develop additional leadership skills.

"Once a student walks out the classroom door and starts to work, the rules change," noted Tedford. "It's not so much what you know, as what you can do that counts."

"A major trait we look for in VOE applicants is the ability to work effectively with others," Tedford said. "The challenge today is working successfully side by side with people who are not like you."

Williamson said that Ortloff's needs for business and office employees will continue to expand along with statewide demand for the same type of employees. The supply of office/clerical workers in Texas has more than doubled in the past ten years, while demand has increased three-fold.

Office workers form the largest occupational group in Texas, and by 1985 nearly one out of every five workers will be in this group. "The best time to set initial career goals is in high school," said Williamson, "when students can enroll in vocational education and begin skill training."

Barbara Krege and Charles Wale Jr. have joined The First National Bank of Midland's management staff, according to Charles Fraser, chairman of the board.

Barbara Krege joins First National as a Credit Administration Officer. She received a BBA degree from the University of Austin in 1968 and earned her master's degree in business administration from the University of New Mexico in 1977. Krege was formerly associated with Albuquerque National Bank in New Mexico. She was treasurer of the New Mexico Chapter of Robert Morris Associates, served as director and past president of the Albuquerque Association of Credit Management and was president of Commercial Credit Women.

Charles Wale Jr., a native of Baton Rouge, La., comes to First National as a petroleum engineer in the Energy Division. He previously was employed by Amintol U.S.A., Inc. Wale earned his bachelor's degree in petroleum engineering from Louisiana State University. He currently is a member of the Society of Petroleum Engineers and the Louisiana Board of Professional Engineers.

Robert A. Fleming has been promoted to manager of Loffland Brothers Company's equipment repair center in Odessa.

Fleming has been with Loffland since 1973, and has served as an engineering supervisor at the company's headquarters in Tulsa, Okla., since January 1981.

A graduate of Oklahoma State University, Fleming joined the company as an equipment engineer in Tulsa. In 1975, he was promoted and transferred to Middlesbrough, England, as project engineer responsible for the construction of three Loffland rigs now working in the North Sea.

He served in various capacities in Middlesbrough and Aberdeen, Scotland, until his promotion to division engineer for Loffland's operation in the United Kingdom in 1980. He held that post until his return to the Tulsa office earlier this year.

Loffland is a Kendavis Industries company.

Betty Taylor, well-known Midland Realtor, has been honored by her nomination for Texas Association of Realtors vice president for 1982. This year's vice president from the region is Fred C. Gage of Odessa.

A graduate of Texas Tech University, Taylor has been active in her church and the Midland Chamber of Commerce. She is completing her fourth term as TAR director and has served on several TAR committees. Having achieved the GRI, Graduate, Realtors' Institute, and the CRS, Certified Residential Specialist, designations, Taylor belongs to the Realtors National Marketing Institute, the Farm and Land Institute, and the Permian Basin Council ERA.

In Midland, she owns the Betty Taylor, Realtors ERA, agency. For the Midland Board of Realtors, Taylor has held all the elective offices. Presently, she serves as TREPAC board chairman. Having been board president in 1976, Taylor was honored as the 1977 Midland Realtor of the Year.

The TAR elections were held in San Antonio during the association's annual convention, June 22-26. The convention center was the headquarters for this event. The largest trade and service association in Texas, TAR boasts over 47,000 members.

Patrick Johnston of Midland, has been selected from more than 4,000 college-age employees nationwide to participate in the 1981 Chick-fil-A Blitz Team, a summer promotional program sponsored by the nation's fastest growing restaurant chain.

Nominated by store managers from the Chick-fil-A system, Johnston and 23 other outstanding college students will go on a six week tour of Chick-fil-A restaurants in 19 states.

Selected on the basis of leadership, personality, attitude and salesmanship, Johnston will work with other Blitz Team members to propose long-range goals for each store visited.

Johnston attended Midland College, majoring in accounting. Next year, he plans to attend the University of Texas in Odessa.

The newly appointed Blitz Team member was graduated from Midland High School in 1979. He has worked at the Midland Park Mall Chick-fil-A store since August 1980.

Three new Touch-Tone dialing aids for disabled customers have been introduced by Southwestern Bell. The aids are provided without charge on customer request.

"Two of the dialing aids are designed for people with motion impairments and the third is for the people with vision problems," said Clay Styles, residence services manager for the company.

A raised Touch-Tone grid is designed to aid customers who find it necessary to rest their hand on the surface while dialing the telephone. The grid covers the entire push-button area of the telephone and makes it easier for the customer to push one button at a time.

A hinged appliance will aid customers with extensive motion disabilities. The appliance fits over the push button area and allows only "0" to be dialed when the appliance is pushed down. When the appliance is not needed, it may be folded up, away from the dialing surface.

A Touch-Tone number overlay will aid customers with vision problems. The overlay fits directly on the Touch-Tone buttons and displays large white numbers on a black background. A rotary dial overlay has been available since 1978.

Styles said the new Touch-Tone dialing aids are available at any Southwestern Bell PhoneCenter Store. The aids also may be mailed, upon customer request, from any company Residence Service Center.

The 84 Lumber Company with home offices in Eighty Four, Pennsylvania, announced recently the appointment of Dan Morgan as Co-Manager of the local outlet in Midland Odessa.

Dan started with 84 in February of 1981 at the Amarillo outlet where he most recently has been an associate.

Dan, his wife Vicky and their three children Danny, Jeremy and Shane are now residing in the Odessa area.

The 84 Lumber Company presently has 340 stores coast to coast and plans call for an additional 50 stores to be opened during the remainder of 1981.

Flowers and candy have generally been regarded as staples in the gift-giving industry. A cheerful bouquet of flowers would brighten up a hospital room and candy satisfied a loved one's sweet-tooth. Now, a new idea has evolved for special gift giving -- balloons.

Balloons are the newest gift-giving rage sweeping the country. Usually delivered by a costumed messenger, services offered by balloon companies range from a simple balloon delivery to delivery of gifts of champagne with balloons, or delivering thousands of balloons for conventions and sporting events.

Midland now has its own balloon service. Balloons and Tunes began in June. A dozen brightly-colored, eleven and nine-inch, helium-filled balloons come complete with a gift card and are delivered by a special messenger. Special "effects" such as messages or songs also may be ordered. The balloons are delivered to offices, meetings, parties, anywhere in Midland.

"Balloons are a great way to say 'Get Well,' 'Happy Birthday or Anniversary' or just to say 'Have a Happy Day' in a unique way," says Bill Moore. "They bring a little cheer into people's lives and the special delivery is an extra fun attraction."

Moore produces the creativity behind the business and former Midland resident Carolyn Moore owns the company.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilford C. Phillips will be in Paris, France, the month of July attending Parsons School of Design course at the Musee des Arts Decoratifs.

This intensive course covers design, the decorative arts and architecture, with field trips to noted museums and estates. Participation by the curatorial staff of the Musee des Arts Decoratifs will enable students to have access to portions of institutions not open to the public.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips hope to serve as consultants to interior designers and provide increased expertise as to the investment possibilities of European art, antiques and accessories. Upon their return from France the Phillips will spend several weeks in Maine, before returning the early part of September.

DALLAS (AP) — General Portland Inc., one of the nation's largest cement manufacturers, is suing in federal court here to stop an unsolicited purchase offer from Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd.

The lawsuit filed Wednesday charges that Canada Cement's offer was a "gross subversion" of U.S. laws regulating stock transactions, and seeks to bar the company from acquiring any Portland stock.

Portland's board of directors on Tuesday rejected the offer and got a temporary order in state court barring the Montreal-based giant from buying Portland stock or using information Portland earlier supplied the company.

In the federal suit, Portland said Canada Cement approached the company last October and expressed interest in exploring "business combinations or transactions."

"The defendants (Canada) represented to General Portland that they had no intention of pursuing any hostile or unfriendly transaction with General Portland," the lawsuit stated.

Portland gave Canada "sensitive" information that was later used to formulate the takeover bid, the suit said.

Canada's bid uses information not available to Portland stockholders, so a purchase would be a "gross subversion" of laws requiring full disclosure, the suit alleges.

DALLAS (AP) — Mercantile Texas Corp., the state's fifth largest bank holding company, says it plans to add Farmers State Bank of Round Rock to its multibillion-dollar string of Texas banks.

The agreement-in-principle was reached Wednesday, said Mercantile Chairman Gene Bishop. The tentative agreement calls for issuance of 250,000 shares of Mercantile Texas common stock in exchange for 232,875 shares of Farmers State. Shareholders would get 1.0735 shares of Mercantile Texas stock for each share of Farmers State.

Deniger/Adair, Inc. signs lease on Paragon project

Deniger/Adair, Inc., developer of The Paragon office tower, today announced the signing of a lease with The First National Bank of Midland for approximately 90,000 square feet of space.

With the execution of this lease, the Paragon project now stands 90 percent leased. Other major tenants of The Paragon will include Shell Oil Company, Tenneco Oil Company, Sabine Production Company, William B. Wilson and Petroplex Savings and Loan Association.

The project will be completed in November 1981 and was designed by the Dallas architectural firm of The Oglesby Group, Inc. and is being built by Austin Commercial Inc. of Dallas. The project is financed by Wells Fargo Realty Advisors, Inc. and is owned by The Paragon Partners of Midland, Dallas and San Francisco.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

When companies merge it's best to cooperate

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Two companies in which I own stock were recently merged into larger companies. In one of the mergers, the larger company is paying cash for the smaller company's shares. In the other merger, the larger company is issuing shares of its stock in exchange for the smaller company's shares.

I opposed both mergers, by voting "no" on the proxy cards sent to me by the smaller companies. But the mergers were approved, anyway. Suppose I don't send my stock certificates to the larger companies. Can't I continue to be a stockholder in the smaller companies?

A. No, because those smaller companies ceased to exist as corporations when the mergers became effective. Although you voted "no," the owners of a majority of the stock in the smaller companies approved each merger. Corporate democracy is an imperfect thing but is still governed by majority rule.

If you don't like the terms of those mergers, you might be able to take legal action to get a court appraisal of the value of your stock — in hopes of getting higher prices from those two larger companies.

The rules on this vary, depending upon the state of incorporation of the companies involved. The procedures for obtaining a court appraisal are complicated and expensive.

So, unless you're willing to take on hassle and expense, the natural advice is to go along with the mergers. Send in your stock certificates. You'll get a check, as the result of one merger, and stock of the larger company, as the result of the other merger.

Q. As the result of a merger, I have received a check for stock I owned in a company that was merged into a larger company. The amount of the check is a great deal more than the price I paid for that stock. This gives me a large profit.

That profit will be taxable as a capital gain and will put me in a much higher income tax bracket. Isn't there any way I can reinvest this money and not have to pay tax on the profit — or, at least, postpone the tax until after I retire and am in a lower tax bracket?

A. Sorry, the answer has to be "no." In a situation such as this, the difference between the price you paid for that stock and the higher price you received as a result of the merger is taxable as a capital gain.

You are required to report it on the income tax return you file for the year in which you receive the money. There's no provision in the Internal Revenue Code for postponing the tax bite, by reinvestment or anything else.

Q. It seems to me that, when a person is, in effect, "forced" to sell his stock, as the result of a merger, he should be able to claim his "property was condemned" — just as if the state took his land for a highway. Don't you agree?

A. Whether I agree or not doesn't matter. The federal tax rules disagree.

When land is condemned by a government body or a public utility, the property owner can postpone paying tax on the profit by reinvesting the money from the sale in "similar property" within two years. Even this gets complicated and usually requires guidance from a good accountant or tax lawyer.

But that regulation does not apply to money received for stock, as the result of a merger.

Q. When a merger is accomplished through an exchange of stock, does a person who receives shares in the "surviving company" have to pay any tax on the stock of the merged company he surrendered in the merger?

A. Almost always, no. When companies are planning a merger, they normally get a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that the exchange of stock will be tax free.

Mr. Doyle welcomes written questions, but he will be able to provide answers only through the column.
