Reagan says he'll curb U.S. deficits

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, pledging to curb the record $200 billion budget deficits he faces, says he may be willing to trim defense spending, but remains cool to closing the red-ink gap with higher taxes.

"A tax is the wrong thing to do when you're trying to come out of a recession," Reagan said, commenting on his plans for a fiscal 1984 budget blueprint he will send Congress on Jan. 31.

But the president would not firmly rule out tax increases, defense cuts or any other options for reining in the "unacceptably large" deficits his administration is expecting through 1988.

"I will look at everything," he said at a televised news conference Wednesday night. He added that he has yet to make any final decisions on the budget.

The president said he even will look for savings in his record military spending program, an area that his advisers and congressional allies say must be trimmed to reduce the deficits.

"If it (defense spending) can be cut, it will be cut. But ... not if it means reducing our ability below the level at which we can declare ourselves safe," he said.

Meanwhile, The Washington Post reported in today's editions that the Pentagon is studying ways to cut its budget for next year by $8 billion to $11 billion. The cut would be from $285 billion in total funds that Reagan now wants the Pentagon to be able to commit — but not necessarily spend — during fiscal 1984. Congress approved a $239 billion 1983 budget for the Pentagon.

Although Reagan said repeatedly at his news conference that it would be a mistake to raise taxes when the nation is coming out of a recession, he left unclear whether he could support tax increases in fiscal 1984 or beyond. The budget year does not begin until next October.

"Clearly we're facing very big deficits unless we take action, and we will take action because the deficits are unacceptably large in the out years," Reagan said. "The federal budget must not become a roadblock on the path to long-term economic recovery.

Reagan's top economic advisers and a number of leading congressional Republicans have been urging him to consent to tax increases and defense cuts to bring down deficits that are now expected to balloon from more than $185 billion this fiscal year to nearly $300 billion by 1988.

So far, Reagan has only given approval to domestic spending cuts totaling about $30 billion for fiscal 1984. If approved by Congress, the cuts still would leave a $200 billion deficit next year.

Reagan's advisers, who fear that enormous deficits will prevent a sustained economic recovery, claim the red ink can't be reduced adequately through domestic program cuts alone.

Reagan contended Wednesday night that the economy already is pulling out of its long recession — an assertion he has made several times last year as well.

He conceded, however, that improvements in unemployment would be slow in coming.

"I don't think the economy is deteriorating further," he said. "All the indicators are there to indicate that the economy is getting better, not getting worse."

He acknowledged that unemployment, now at a 42-year high of 10.8 percent, "is the most grievous problem and the one that's always the last to get well."

"There may be some fluctuations in the tenths of percentage points in the present (jobless) rate," he said, suggesting that the peak in unemployment may not yet have been reached.

"But I believe that we're on the road to the kind of recovery we've been talking about," he said.

President Reagan's first news conference of the new year rekindled some old political and philosophical differences between the chairmen of Midland County's Democratic and Republican parties.

In interviews this morning, Democratic chairman Darrell Smith and Republican chairman Bill Shaner, predictably, split on their views of several issues covered in the president's speech.

Reagan said recent economic indicators hint that the nation is beginning to emerge from its prolonged recession, a view shared by Shaner.

"This particular recession has just about been as long as any we've ever had," said Shaner, who added that the pattern etched by past economic slumps indicates "it's time for things to start turning around."

Vigorous defense spending, which some Reagan critics blame for a mounting federal deficit, may actually help ease the country out of recession by providing jobs and other economic stimulants, according to Shaner.

Smith, noting his disappointment in Reagan and the U.S. Justice Department for appealing a declaration that the Windfall Profits Tax is unconstitutional, said:

"When people can begin drilling for petroleum products without worrying that the monument share will go to the Federal government, then our economy will urn around.

Smith said continued military spending without attempts to streamline present operations may be harmful to the economy and push deficits upward.

"There has got to be some fat in military spending. Anybody who's been in the military knows that," said Smith, adding that "I question his (Reagan's) inflexibility on defense spending."

Reagan indicated a slight softening on his previous hard stand against reductions in defense spending, saying his administration "will look at everything." But the president suggested that further cuts in social-welfare entitlement programs are even more likely.

Shaner said some defense spending cuts will likely be necessary, but added that most of the "screaming" about cuts in social programs is coming from administrators who depend on entitlement programs for their livelihood.

Much of the responsibility for bringing spending into line with federal revenues falls to Congress, Shaner said.

"Congress must run its business like any household in America," he said.

Shaner said he is skeptical of sena-

Story could end Sharp's cooperation

From Staff and Wire Reports

ODESSA — A story in Wednesday's Lubbock Avalanche-Journal may have killed chances of solving several West Texas murder cases, according to Odessa police.

A detective who met secretly with convicted killer Michael Eugene Sharp in hopes of being led to numerous graves in West Texas says authorities now might never learn how many people the man may have killed.

Sharp, convicted recently in Lubbock of killing an 8-year-old girl, already has taken authorities to the shallow grave of a pregnant 18-year-old Odessa woman missing since May 1982, said Odessa Police Det. Sgt. Jerry Smith.

Smith said Wednesday he had befriended Sharp after his arrest last year.

Smith said Sharp beckoned to him in the courtroom and said, "Come here," signaling the beginning of a series of jail and prison meetings in Lubbock and Huntsville.

The 28-year-old oilfield worker gave information through a system of nods of the head, Smith said. "I did all the talking. He neither confirmed nor denied anything. He would just nod yes or no, if he wanted to."

But Sharp's help may be over because of a story in the Avalanche-Journal where Smith detailed Sharp's help in finding the bodies, the detective said.

Smith said his comments were not intended for publication and that other news media who were aware of the possible link between Sharp and other murders decided to sit on the story so as to not hamper his investigation.

"I entered into an agreement with him that we wouldn't reveal his name until we were finished," Smith said. "There was no plea bargain. It was all just to get the bodies back to the families."

Another Odessa detective said today, "It's my feeling he won't tell us a damn thing now."

Wayne Ponter, news editor with the Avalanche-Journal, said, "I really don't know if they (the remarks) were off the record. The reporter did not indicate if they were off the record."

Smith said Sharp admitted to only one murder other than the one for which he was sentenced to life in prison. He is suspected of numerous others, and has talked with officers about other unresolved killings, the detective said.

"We may never know," Smith said. "There might have been others. I just can't speculate. Maybe there were no more."

Smith said Wednesday that Sharp no longer will talk to him.

"He wanted to keep his family from suffering embarrassment," Smith said. "He said, 'If it wasn't for my family, I wouldn't care what you do to me.'"

Smith said he intended Wednesday to bring Sharp back from Texas Department of Corrections facilities in Huntsville in hopes of "clearing up another offense."

But the trip to Huntsville was canceled, Smith said.

"It's over with," he said. "He won't talk to me."

Smith originally had questioned Sharp about the disappearance of Blanca Isela Arreola Guerrero shortly after Sharp's arrest in June, but he denied any knowledge of the woman.

However, in late November, the detective said, Sharp led officers to the grave of Ms. Guerrero, who had last been seen getting into a blue pickup

CCA, like other firms, uses newest technology

A technician from CCA inspects the call-monitor system his company installed at The Midland Hilton. The system, which allows hotel patrons to make long-distance and local calls without operator assistance, adds calls to computerized room charges at checkout.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is part five of six articles that explain the effects of telephone deregulation and the breakup of AT&T's Bell System of local telephone companies — scheduled for Jan. 1, 1984. Today's article spotlights CCA, a local "interconnect" business phone dealer.

Bell System Breakup

Fifth in a Series

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

The office of the future is available now. Because of competition, telephones for business use have advanced technology that was supposed to take years longer to develop. But it's here now.

These systems can carry all manner of voice, data and video messages to become the virtual lifeline that keeps a company working.

A landmark court decision (Litton v. Bell) allows companies called "interconnects" to install sophisticated, FCC-approved business phone systems, connected to Bell telephone lines. No special adapters are needed.

The "Phone Company" is kept out of the operation unless there is line trouble during installation or service — and the interconnect takes over service of the system.

A LOT OF MIDLAND area companies market, install and service these systems: Business Telephone Systems Inc., Executone of the Permian Basin, Solid Systems Telecom., Centel Business Systems, Custom Telephone Systems, and others.

Communications Corporation of America (CCA), of Midland, is one such vendor. The company isn't flashy and does not advertise.

The branch office's profits have grown 30 percent or more in recent years, and each part of the Dallas-based parent company stands alone as a profit center.

CCA is careful to place its offices in cities where they have successful bids, then drum up more business while servicing the initial clients.

COMPANIES MAY STILL buy into AT&T's "The Knowledge Business" from American Bell, a new subsidiary of Ma Bell. Southwestern Bell, though, has restrictions at this time which may cause it to run out of popular business consoles and extension phones — and under the FCC ruling they can't reorder.

Acting regional manager Ron McReynolds said the CCA serves 350 business customers, a high volume of clients that McReynolds says is more than other interconnects have. CCA has a multimillion dollar inventory of telephone equipment simply so it can service existing clients and their changing needs.

The electronics — highly advanced — are made by six manufacturers, and CCA is authorized to service these brands.

"Interconnect" companies like CCA work with local Bell exchanges, connecting a business phone system much the same way a home is wired — with many more telephone lines and a myriad of extensions, intercom stations and sometimes data wire connections.

The interconnects promote their equipment, phone line quality, and their technical people, as being better than Bell.

CCA MIGHT BID to install a system as small as two lines and four or five phone instruments.

A larger system could include a multitude of phone lines and 5,000 phones — that's the wiring involved at Kansas City's Hallmark Cards company.

In the past, McReynolds said, CCA had to compete mainly with Southwestern Bell — whose rates were determined, and then

First National sells building

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The First National Bank of Midland has sold its main office building, a 24-story tower at 303 W. Wall St., the adjacent 11-story parking garage and its motor bank property at 400 N. Colorado St.

The bank will lease back the properties and continue to occupy and manage them.

The announcement was made by Charles D. Fraser, president and chief executive officer of the bank, which is Texas' largest independent bank.

The sale was made to Eagle Properties Ltd., a group of local investors. Principal partners are Midland businessmen Tom Brown and M.W. "Buddy" Braaum, whose names appear on the deed of trust involved in the transaction which is filed in the Midland County Clerk's office.

Fraser said the bank received a total consideration of $75 million from the sale, which was effective Dec. 31, 1982. Terms of the leasing arrangement were not disclosed.

Through the conversion of these non-earning assets, First National has strengthened its capital posture and positioned itself to better serve its customers, the bank announcement said.

It is not unusual for a banking institution to sell its property and enter a leaseback arrangement, according to Guy R. McCrary, vice president-mar-

Bronze statue of young Bette Davis found on Massachusetts estate

Bette Davis

BEVERLY, Mass. (AP) — A six-month search for a bronze statue of the young Bette Davis has ended with the discovery of the nude in a park-like estate.

The actress "has identified it as being the one," said Robert Edwards, an architect who developed the private North Shore arboretum beginning 55 years ago on a tract of family land.

"Gretchen McNeese, an editor at Playboy Magazine, sent a picture to her, and Bette Davis wrote back a note saying, 'This is the only possibility.' So that identifies it," he said Wednesday.

Edwards said that the 5-foot statue sculpted by Anne Coleman Ladd is part of a fountain showing four figures dancing around a circle.

It has been displayed at the estate for more than 40 years.

The search for the bronze began in June after Playboy published an interview in which Miss Davis disclosed that she was embarrassed to pose unclothed for the woman sculptor.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Opera tenor Luciano Pavarotti joked his way into Oklahoma with praise for its ladies and a ribbing for the women in his own life.

Pavarotti, arriving here Wednesday for a benefit concert Friday night, told fans and reporters who greeted him at the airport that he was most impressed with the beautiful women he saw.

The 37-year-old singer also said he developed his own powerful voice because he had to speak loudly during a life surrounded by women — first his mother and aunts and later his wife and three daughters.

Pavarotti, who played an opera singer in the 1982 movie "Yes, Giorgio," said: "I am an opera singer. I will always be an opera singer. I'm trying to give back what the world of opera has given me.... I want to use everything God has given me like a gift."

His recital Friday will raise money for the St. Anthony Hospital Cardiovascular Institute.

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Former cowboy movie star Dale Evans has been released from a hospital where she had cataract surgery.

Miss Evans, 70, who is married to her cinema sidekick, Roy Rogers, was admitted Monday to Western Medical Center and had the operation Tuesday, said her secretary, Francie Williams. She was released Wednesday.

Rogers, also 70, had been out of town on business and planned to return to Southern California on Wednesday to meet his wife, said his secretary.

Rogers and Miss Evans made 35 films together and co-starred in a television series that ran 12½ years.

NEW YORK (AP) — Roxanne Pulitzer has hired flamboyant "palimony" lawyer Marvin Mitchelson to appeal a divorce trial verdict that gave custody of her twin sons to her ex-husband, publishing heir Peter Pulitzer.

A spokesman for Mitchelson, Sy Presten, said Wednesday the lawyer will work with Mrs. Pulitzer's Palm Beach attorney, Joseph Farish, on the appeal to Florida's District Court of Appeals.

After an 18-day trial spiced with testimony of cocaine abuse, extramarital affairs, incest, lesbianism and menage-a-trois sex, Circuit Judge Carl Harper awarded custody of the 5-year-old boys to Pulitzer on Dec. 28, but gave Mrs. Pulitzer visiting rights.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "CHiPs" co-star Thomas Reilly has pleaded innocent to three misdemeanor charges stemming from his arrest last month while driving near downtown Los Angeles.

Attorney David Leland King, appearing Wednesday on Reilly's behalf before Municipal Court Commissioner John Goddard, entered innocent pleas to charges of driving under the influence of a drug, driving without a valid California driver's license and possession of a controlled substance.

Misdemeanor defendants are not required to appear at court proceedings in California.

Goddard set a Feb. 9 trial date for the 23-year-old actor, who plays California Highway Patrol Officer Bobby "Hot Dog" Nelson on the popular NBC TV series.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Chevy Chase and his wife, Jayni, are the parents of a newborn daughter, Cydney Cathalene.

The 7-pound, 7-ounce baby was born at 8:35 a.m. Tuesday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, Heidi Schaffer of PMK Public Relations said.

Chase and his wife met during the 1981 filming of "Under the Rainbow," where she was a production assistant. They were married early last year and this is their first child.

Chase, 39, who rose to stardom on the "Saturday Night Live" television series, has starred in the movies "Foul Play" and "Seems Like Old Times." He just completed "National Lampoon's Vacation" and is working on a new film, "The Deal of the Century."

Bolivian fossil find may be oldest yet

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — The history of land mammals in South America has been pushed back to 75 million years ago with discovery of a set of fossils in southwest Bolivia, scientists say.

They are the oldest fossils of land mammals yet found in South America, a U.S.-French scientific team announced Wednesday.

The fossils, believed to be between 70 million and 75 million years old, were discovered on a hillside in a remote, mountainous region this past fall, said the National Geographic Society, which funded the expedition.

The seven fossils represent three species of mammals that were all marsupials, animals that carry their developing young in a pouch. The yet-unnamed species were identified as marsupials by their dental characteristics.

The fossils include a nearly complete upper and lower jaw with teeth from an animal the size of a rat, a partial lower jaw without teeth from a creature the size of a mouse, and a partial upper molar from an animal the size of a cat.

"The bones and teeth were lying either totally exposed, where you would just pick them up and they were nice and clean, or they were covered with just a very little bit of sand," said Larry G. Marshall of the University of Arizona, the lone American on the team.

Until now, the oldest confirmed fossil record of mammalian development in South America consisted of specimen 60 million years old found in Brazil and Argentina. Considerably older fossils have been discovered in North America.

A few tiny fossil fragments found earlier in Peru are believed to be mammalian examples 65 million to 70 million years old, but they are too small for scientists to know for sure, the Geographic noted.

Marshall said the species diversity of all these finds indicates that mammals in South America have a long evolutionary history going back even further.

The new discoveries firmly push this history back into the late Cretaceous epoch, which ended about 65 million years ago.

The fact that none of the mammals represented in the new find were placental — more advanced creatures whose unborn young develop in the womb — supports theories that these types of animals did not arrive in South America until the very end of the Cretaceous period, Marshall said.

The other members of the team are Mireille Gayet, Bernard Sige and Christian de Muizon of the French National Center for Scientific Research, and Alain Lavenu of the Office of Scientific and Technical Research Overseas.

The fossils and the sediments in which they were found have been taken to France for further study.

Kelly Owen, 3, of San Antonio, her skin yellow from a deadly liver disease, needs a liver donor to avoid death, her doctors say. Mayor Henry Cisneros, left, and her father, Frank Owen, issued an urgent appeal for anyone knowing of a donor with blood group A-negative between the ages of 2 and 4 to call collect the Transplant Organ Procurement Foundation at the University of Pittsburgh, area code 412-donors7.

3-year-old San Antonio girl top candidate for liver transplant

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A fund-raising effort has been launched for the family of a 3-year-old girl who has been given only six weeks to live unless a donor liver is found.

Another child must die before tiny Kelly Owen, listed as the top candidate for an experimental liver transplant in Pittsburgh, can be saved, said her doctors, who are trying to locate an accident victim whose survivors could donate the organ.

Doctors at the Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh have agreed to perform the transplant if a donor of blood group A-negative, between the ages of two and four years old, can be found, family members said.

Mayor Henry Cisneros, in joining the appeal for a donor, has announced a fund-raising effort through the Groos National Bank to help Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Owen of San Antonio fund the $150,000 operation.

"I have two daughters myself and I can imagine the pressure of this race against time," Cisneros said. "The Owens could be any one of 100,000 San Antonians who have children; but he's got a daughter he is helpless to help, and his fight to save his child merits the help of all the people of San Antonio."

"Anyone that might know of a possible donor should call collect area code 412-DONORS7. This is the telephone number of the Transplant Organ Producrement Foundation at the University of Pittsburgh...All donors have to be processed through this department," a statement from the family said.

Murderer says he admitted to crime because police threatened him

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A man convicted of killing a convenience store clerk and a customer has testified he gave police a written statement about the crime only because they yanked his hair and hit him.

James David Autry, convicted in the April 20, 1980, slayings, said Wednesday he made the statement the morning of his arrest after one detective said, "He ought to take me out and kill me right now. I was nothing but scum."

Autry said interrogators had pulled his hair, hit him in the side of the head with a folded telephone book and pulled him roughly from his chair on Aug. 21, 1980.

He was testifying Wednesday during a federal court hearing on his contention that his death sentence was imposed illegally.

The written statement was not allowed in court, but defense attorney Charles Carver contends it tainted an oral statement Autry made later that day.

John Anderson, an officer in the Port Arthur police booking room, testified he overheard Autry describing the killings to his mother in a phone conversation at 1 p.m. on Aug. 21, 1980.

Autry was convicted in September 1980 of killing store clerk Shirley Drouet and customer Joseph Broussard.

Parker stayed Autry's execution, which had been scheduled Dec. 17, saying he wanted to be sure his appeal could be properly reviewed.

U.S. District Judge Robert Parker said Wednesday he would consider overnight whether to require testimony from a man who was with Autry during the killings.

John A. Sandifer refused to testify Wednesday, saying he might open himself to prosecution on capital murder charges if he gave details of the slayings.

Sandifer pleaded guilty to an unrelated burglary and is serving a a seven-year sentence. His attorney, Ronald Piessala, said Sandifer never was granted immunity from prosecution on capital murder charges and could still be reindicted and tried.

But Piessala read a statement his client gave to police after Autry's arrest in which Sandifer said the pair took a six-pack of beer to the store's counter and were told the price was $2.70.

"James pulled a gun from somewhere and said, 'Here's your $2.70,'" Sandifer said in the statement.

Carver contends Autry's defense was deprived of Sandifer's testimony because the state threatened to try him for capital murder, and that the state has failed to prove the killings were committed in the course of a robbery.

Sandifer refused to testify at the 1980 trial, also citing his 5th Amendment right.

Autopsy reveals decapitated woman was strangled

GARLAND, Texas (AP) — An autopsy has revealed that a 23-year-old woman, whose severed head was found in a creek, was strangled before she was decapitated, authorities said.

The Dallas County medical examiner's office ruled Wednesday that Charlene Warren died of manual strangulation. Her headless corpse was found in the bedroom of the couple's apartment in this Dallas suburb Tuesday, police said.

The victim's 23-year-old husband, Kelvin Warren, remained jailed today for investigation of murder. Municipal Judge Richard Johnson set his bond at $100,000.

Warren was arrested after police found his wife's head in a shallow creek where his car crashed Tuesday.

The man was hysterical when police and paramedics freed him from the crumpled car, investigators said.

"He was screaming, 'I've got to die, I've got to die,'" officer Buddy Dillard said.

Warren was arrested at Parkland Memorial Hospital, where he was being treated for minor injuries from the 10:45 a.m. crash.

Garland police spokesman John Hamilton said investigators believed the slaying was "a domestic type of thing."

Witnesses told police Warren was driving at speeds of more than 90 mph when he clipped the bumper of another car and lost control of his vehicle.

Garland police detective Pat Martinkus said investigators believe the severed head was in the front seat of the car and it fell out when the car crashed or was towed from the creek.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, Friday is expected to be partly cloudy with temperatures reaching in low to mid-60s and northerly to northwesterly winds 5-10.

It should be fair and cold tonight with the low in the mid-20s and light and variable winds.

Wednesday's high of 55 was cooler than the record high of 78 set in 1948, but the overnight low of 29 was warmer than the record low of 13 set in 1970.

taxed, by state utilities officials.

"In the last two years, the Permian Basin market has seen five or six telephone interconnect companies bidding on small jobs and big jobs alike," McReynolds said. He noted that even stiffer competition is ahead.

McReynolds said CCA "...specializes strictly in business communications: We also solve communications problems for our customers. Our sales force presents applications for the electronics. The phones by themselves are no help if they aren't fully used."

NORTHERN TELECOM — supplier of office systems for the Bell Canada division — is one telephone system CCA installs at area businesses.

It is one of the most advanced in the industry, and with its electronic switching it can handle video and data transmissions within a company's phone system.

"Interconnect companies offer the latest communications equipment," McReynolds stated. "Because of the fierce competition in our segment of telecommunications, we have offered the most advanced equipment on the market, just as soon as it became available to us."

Satellite on 'return trip'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nuclear-powered Soviet spy satellite will likely blaze back to Earth within weeks, and the Pentagon says it could spread destruction and radioactivity if its broken pieces fall in a populated area. It is too early to say where it will hit.

Cosmos 1402 is tumbling out of control in an orbit that covers mostly oceans but also goes over most of North America, most of the Soviet Union, the entire African continent, all of South America, and much of China, the Defense Department said.

On Jan. 24, 1978, another Soviet nuclear-powered spy satellite came back into the earth's atmosphere over northern Canada. Most of Cosmos 954 burned up in the atmosphere, but some intense radiation was discovered near the eastern shore of Great Slave Lake.

After the 1978 crash, President Carter proposed banning nuclear-powered satellites. The United States has none.

"We do not know where it will land, nor do we know precisely when to expect re-entry," said a Pentagon statement.

First National was founded in 1890 and originally occupied a building at the southwest corner of Wall Street and Main Street, west of the present U.S. Post Office. In 1959 it moved to its present site at 303 W. Wall St.

Through the years, several additions and renovations have been made to the bank building, including the addition of 16 floors beginning in the late 1970s. In 1981 the 24th floor and new west wing were completed.

In April 1981, Fraser announced plans for the bank to erect a 40-story office/bank tower and adjoining parking garage on a 14-acre site south of the present bank. A four-story Midland County Library is to be included in the site. No specific construction schedule or completion date has yet been announced for the project, known as Eagle Plaza.

Dole expected to easily become first female to head department

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elizabeth Dole, President Reagan's choice as his new transportation secretary, is expected to breeze through Senate confirmation and become the administration's first woman to head a Cabinet department.

Reagan announced Wednesday night he will nominate Mrs. Dole, a presidential assistant, to replace Drew Lewis, who leaves the administration next month to head a major cable television company.

"Welcome to the Cabinet," the president said as Mrs. Dole accompanied him at a nationally televised news conference. She later issued a statement saying she was "deeply honored" and will accept the assignment "with enthusiasm."

Mrs. Dole will become the first woman transportation secretary. She will head the government's sixth largest department with 75,000 employees. Its agencies range from the Federal Aviation Administration to the U.S. Coast Guard.

Formed in 1965, the department dispenses highway and mass transit money, regulates air transport and federal aid to airports as well as overseeing maritime issues. During the past two years the department has spearheaded the administration's drive to get users of various transportation systems to pay a greater share of operation.

In succeeding Lewis, Mrs. Dole takes over from the most visible transportation secretary since the department was formed in 1965. Lewis also was considered among the most capable members of the Reagan Cabinet.

Mrs. Dole, 46, a lawyer, former member of the Federal Trade Commission and wife of Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., is the highest ranking woman at the White House as the president's assistant for public liaison.

Elizabeth Dole

The liaison job has been characterized as particularly difficult since much of Mrs. Dole's assignment has involved dealing with interest groups — such as minorities, women's groups and organized labor — openly critical of administration policies.

Faith Ryan Whittlesey, a long-time Reagan political activist and now the ambassador to Switzerland, will replace Mrs. Dole at the White House, Reagan said.

Although a team player, Mrs. Dole's views have at times differed from those of most other members of the Reagan inner circle. In the past she has endorsed tougher regulation of business and has supported the Equal Rights Amendment, although she also has said she agrees with Reagan's view that "there's more than one way to reach equal rights for women."

At the White House, Mrs. Dole, whose nickname is "Liddy," has been known to lobby quietly for the hiring of more women in an administration that has been criticized for not placing enough of them in high-ranking positions.

When confirmed by the Senate, Mrs. Dole will join UN Ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick as the only other woman with Cabinet rank. She is the seventh woman named to a Cabinet position in history.

Mrs. Dole is a veteran of Washington government and political circles. For nearly six years she was a member of the FTC, resigning in 1979 to help her husband in his unsuccessful presidential campaign.

Though she has no background in the transportation field, Mrs. Dole is considered to have a keen legal mind and good administrative skills. She was a Phi Beta Kappa at Duke University and is a graduate of Harvard Law School.

She and her husband, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, are one of the most powerful husband-and-wife teams in Washington.

But her two years at the White House have been marked by little fanfare. Some of her supporters have reportedly complained that she has been largely muzzled by a male-dominated cadre of presidential assistants.

"This ain't so bad," she once was quoted as saying to guests at a dinner in her honor, "First chance I've had to open my mouth in 13 months."

Nominee has no transportation experience

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elizabeth Hanford Dole, who is in line to become the next transportation secretary, has no background in transportation but is considered to have a keen legal mind and skills as an administrator.

President Reagan, who announced Wednesday night he is nominating her to replace Drew Lewis, praised her as "performing magnificantly" as a presidential assistant in the White House.

Mrs. Dole, however, has taken stands not common among Reagan's inner circle, including support for the Equal Rights Amendment and tougher regulations on business.

At the same time, she has stayed close to the center of power and on the ERA has made clear she also undersands the president's view that "there's more than one way to reach equal rights for women."

Mrs. Dole, 46, wife of Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., is a veteran of Washington politics. For nearly six years she was a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

In her job at the White House, she has been responsible for dealing with a variety of special interest groups including women, minorities and organized labor. Many of those groups are openly hostile to Reagan administration policies.

At the same time, she has lobbied quietly for the hiring of additional women in an administration which has been criticized for not placing enough of them in high-ranking positions.

Mrs. Dole, whose nickname is Liddy, and her husband, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, are one of the most powerful husband-and-wife teams in Washington.

But at the White House she has worked quietly, prompting some of her supporters to complain occasionally that she was muzzled by a male-dominated cadre of presidential assistants.

At times, in a half joking manner, she seemed to agree. "This ain't so bad," she once was quoted as saying to guests at a dinner in her honor, "First chance I've had to open my mouth in 13 months."

A graduate of Duke University, where she was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and once was selected May queen, Mrs. Dole holds a degree from Harvard Law School.

On the FTC, she once described her role as opportunity to defend the interests of the elderly, the young, the disadvantaged and the handicapped.

In one of her last speeches before resigning the FTC in 1979 to join her husband's presidential campaign, she warned the building industry it faced "hard hitting regulations" if it did not cut the number of defects in housing.

Sen. Dole and Mrs. Dole have no children although the senator has a grown daughter from a first marriage that ended in divorce.

Asked once by an interviewer whether their marriage has encountered any of the classic problems faced by couples where each has a successful career, Mrs. Dole replied:

"Having two carriers has enriched our marriage ... Bob is very supportive of my career. He pitches in and helps without my having to ask him, and he's certainly been known to have dinner ready when I get home late."

truck near an Odessa supermarket.

Sharp was sentenced to life in prison for the murder of Christie Michelle Elms, whose body was found in a shallow grave with her 31-year-old mother, Brenda Kay Broadway. He will stand trial later for Ms. Broadway's slaying.

Ms. Broadway, Christie Elms and another daughter, 15-year-old Selena Kay Elms, were kidnapped from a Kermit carwash shortly after midnight June 11. They were driven into the desert, where Selena escaped, police said.

Smith said he was able to convince Sharp to cooperate in the Guerrero investigation by appealing to the man's religious beliefs.

"He had told me he was a born-again Christian," Smith said. "I said if he was a Christian, how could he let her lay out there without her family ever knowing what happened to her?"

Sharp relented, Smith said, and drew a map for officers indicating Ms. Guerrero's body was in a remote section of Andrews County, near the Ector County line.

Sharp's map prompted a massive digging operation near a stock tank, "but the ground was all packed down or under water," Smith said.

When digging efforts were unsuccessful, Smith made two trips to Lubbock in the same day to talk with Sharp, the second time bringing him back to the digging site.

Water was pumped from the site and the grave was discovered on Nov. 30., he said.

tors and representatives who complain about large deficits after voting themselves a pay increase recently. "I see hypocrisy up and down the line," he said.

The best Congress can probably hope to do is cut into the rate of deficit increases, according to Shaner. "If they don't do it, then it's our job to replace them with someone who will. That's the power of the ballot box," he said.

Smith said Reagan was evasive on several points, including Social Security reform and plans for reducing the deficit.

"This president exudes the feeling now that he doesn't know what he's going to do in some pretty crucial areas," Smith said. "I felt like he was evading some answers to questions."

Reagan expressed his reluctance to offer guidance to the panel he selected to study possible alterations to the Social Security system. The president said his comments prior to recommendations by the committee would only return Social Security to its traditional status as a political "football."

"I don't think we can get Social Security out of the political arena," Smith said. "At some point, I'd expect him to have his own input."

Shaner agreed with the president's "hands-off" policy toward the commission. "He's got a commission. The commission is supposed to do its job. He didn't form a commission so he could tell them what to do," Shaner said.

U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler said the president indicated he is likely to continue avoiding "quick-fixes," like tax increases or jobs programs, to stimulate the economy.

Loeffler said Reagan is "looking at all functions of government, including defense, to spend only what is necessary."

Midland Mayor G. Thane Akins said he agrees with Reagan on most points, and added that some reductions in defense spending may be necessary. "If it takes that, we're going to have to bite that bullet," he said.

Akins added that further across-the-board spending cuts will likely be necessary to hack into the deficit.

"I have an overall feeling that we're just kind of playing at this game of our national economy," said Akins. "Just my general feeling is we haven't done near enough cutting of the federal budget."

Officials trying to identify cyanide-tainted capsule

HILLSBORO, Ore. (AP) — The cyanide poisoning of a woman who died after taking Anacin-3, in the first death from a tainted drug since the Tylenol killings, was probably an "isolated tragedy," says the state medical examiner.

An autopsy and toxicology examination revealed cyanide and bits of an unidentified capsule in the stomach of 31-year-old Patricia F. Bennett, a college security guard, Medical Examiner William Brady announced Wednesday in Portland.

Mrs. Bennett died at about 4 a.m. Tuesday in the intensive care unit of Tuality Community Hospital about 5½ hours after she was driven to the hospital by her husband Norman, 45, a self-employed carpenter.

Family members reported Mrs. Bennett took Anacin-3 a couple of hours before she became ill, said Washington County Sheriff's Capt. Harold Kleve said Wednesday.

Tests were planned today to learn whether capsule fragments found in the victim's stomach were from Anacin-3 or another medication, Brady said. Trace amounts of cyanide were found in the air of an Anacin-3 bottle taken from her home, he said, and tests of the remaining capsules and other drugs in the home also were to be conducted today.

Brady did not release the lot number for the Anacin-3 bottle, and said he was not advising a recall of the pain reliever.

"We don't want to create an inappropriate attitude of public concern," Brady said. "I think this is most likely — and my office is treating it as — a single isolated tragedy at this time."

Seven people in the Chicago area died last year between Sept. 29 and Oct. 1 after taking Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules laced with cyanide. The deaths set off a nationwide wave of product tampering incidents, but Mrs. Bennett's death was the first confirmed fatal poisoning.

The maker of Anacin-3, American Whitehall, was sending Dr. Barry Nash of its staff to assist in the Hillsboro investigation, Brady said.

"We're working as fast and furious as we can to isolate the source" of the contamination, said Scott Upham, Washington County district attorney.

Kleve and Brady said Mrs. Bennett showed no sign of mouth or throat burns, indicating that the cyanide was taken in capsule form. Brady said she probably swallowed one or two capsules.

"We're certain the capsules contained cyanide," Brady said. "This lady ingested cyanide-filled capsules."

Upham advised people to check all over-the-counter medications for tampering, "the same precautions they have been advised to utilize since the Tylenol matter."

"We're investigating it as a homicide because we want a thorough investigation," said Deputy John Armstrong.

Brady said the district attorney was investigating three possibilities — that it was a suicide, that someone set out to murder her, or that she was the victim of a random killing.

Mrs. Bennett had been a campus security officer at Portland Community College's Sylvania Campus since August 1981. Besides her husband, her household consisted of her mother, Golden Mitchell, and a 14-year-old daughter by a previous marriage.

Meanwhile, in San Jose, Calif., a judge on Wednesday refused bail to a man accused of trying to murder his wife with cyanide after making it appear the poison was placed in a capsule of Maximum Strength Anacin-3.

Richard Bowen, 29, pleaded innocent to poisoning his wife Susan, 30. Mrs. Bowen, who nearly died from swallowing cyanide Nov. 26, said in a statement she supported her husband's request for bail.

Bowen pleads innocent to poisoning

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A woman who nearly died from cyanide poisoning begged unsuccessfully for her "good husband" to be freed on bail as he pleaded innocent to trying to murder her.

Susan Bowen, who suffered a stroke and brain stem damage in the poisoning Nov. 26, smiled shyly at her husband Richard across a crowded courtroom Wednesday, then stood and nodded to indicate she didn't suspect him of poisoning her.

Bowen, arrested Dec. 30, pleaded innocent to charges of attempted murder and poisoning of medicine.

Municipal Judge Stephen V. Manley refused bail for the 29-year-old man and set a preliminary hearing Jan. 18. But Bowen's lawyer, Melvin Belli, said he would appeal the no-bail ruling.

"I'm shocked, utterly and completely shocked, and I'm heading right up to the appellate court," Belli said.

After Mrs. Bowen, 30, went into convulsions and almost died, her husband told authorities he suspected she had taken tainted Maximum Strength Anacin-3 capsules. When cyanide was discovered in the capsules, the medicine was pulled from scores of store shelves around San Jose and San Francisco.

But after an investigation and Bowen's arrest, police said Mrs. Bowen may have been poisoned by cyanide placed in a different medicine, with Anacin-3 capsules contaminated so they would appear to be the cause.

Mrs. Bowen, whose speech is slurred from the poisoning, exchanged smiles with her husband before rising to plead for his release through a written statement. She nodded weakly when the judge asked if her statement were true.

District attorney's office unable to prosecute officers in man's death

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — After a 2½-year investigation, the district attorney's office here announced Monday it lacks sufficient evidence to prosecute two Los Angeles police officers involved in one of the most controversial chokehold deaths in the Los Angeles Police Department's history.

Larry Morris, 28, died the night of June 17, 1980, after a struggle with two officers who had pursued him into the bathroom of his apartment while investigating gunshotlike sounds that turned out to be firecrackers.

The 60-page report by the district attorney's Special Investigation division head, Gilbert Garcetti, and Deputy District Attorney Wilbert Owens Jr., states that Morris broke no law, and that Officers Joseph J. Pau and Arthur R. Wagner did not have reasonable cause to break into Morris' apartment.

They did so after seeing him bolt upstairs to his apartment while they were questioning a group of his neighbors about the shots. The officers struggled in the apartment with Morris' cousin, David Morris, who suffered gashes from a police baton over his eye and nose. Then they forced their way into the bathroom and struggled with Larry Morris, a 6-foot-2, 290-pound hotel employee, who dwarfed them in size, and who was found to have been legally drunk at the time of his death. Larry Morris vomited and then died suddenly and did not respond to officer attempts at cardio-pulmonary resuscitation.

A search of Morris' apartment turned up some marijuana but no firearms or ammunition.

In running into his apartment, Morris sought "arguably to avoid any problems," and in fighting the officers, he "only sought to defend himself," the report states.

Still, the report continues: "Though most probably unbeknown to Larry (Morris), he had no right to resist arrest unless the officers' use of force to effectuate the arrest can be proved to be excessive." The report goes on to state that the evidence, in what it calls "this very disturbing case, falls short of proving beyond a reasonable doubt" that the officers used excessive force while trying to subdue and arrest Morris.

"If the district attorney's office declines prosecution in the Larry Morris case, it is evident to me they will never, ever prosecute a Los Angeles police officer for homicide," said Leon Gilbert, an attorney who is pressing a $5 million civil suit against the city and LAPD on behalf of Morris' widow, Patricia, and his two small children. "He had no (criminal) record at all, had never been picked up in his life, was minding his own business, was a steady worker, and was killed going to the bathroom in his own bathroom."

The attorney for the two officers hailed the decision but went on to say: "(It) should have been made well over a year ago. They knew everything after 30 days."

The Los Angeles Police Commission, which has since banned use of the chokehold in all but life-threatening situations, unanimously ruled in June 1981 that the officers violated police department policies on the use of force and on police tactics.

Wagner and Pau, who are still on the job, invoked the Fifth Amendment during the inquest, and have refused to talk to the district attorney's office, or to FBI and U.S. Justice Department officials investigating Morris's death for possible civil rights violations.

Although several witnesses were in the apartment during the fight and testified they saw Morris being beaten and choked with batons, Owens said no witnesses saw the confrontation in the bathroom.

Democrats flex muscle in new Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats — strengthened by the last election — have already flexed their muscle in the new 98th Congress by winning rule changes and removing an outspoken "Boll Weevil" from a key committee post.

The House opened the new session by adopting Democratic-backed rule changes that Republicans claim will muzzle them.

A few hours later, the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee overwhelmingly denied Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas a return seat on the Budget Committee.

The rule changes and the action against Gramm could signal tough times ahead for President Reagan's policies in the new Congress.

House Democrats added 26 to their ranks in the November elections. The Senate remains in control of Republicans, though the body has become increasingly hostile to administration proposals.

The leadership committee voted 26-4 to oust Gramm from the committee responsible for drafting the annual blueprint of the government's financial operations.

"I think the leadership has decided to single me out, basically because they believe it will foster their control of conservatives in the party," said Gramm, who was back in Texas today reviewing his options before deciding whether to bolt the Democratic Party and become a Republican.

Gramm, the only member to be disciplined from the conservative Democratic group known as the Boll Weevils, voted against the proposed changes in House rules. Fellow conservative Larry McDonald of Georgia joined him in bucking the party-line vote.

The Boll Weevils joined with Republicans in the last Congress to give Reagan the margin of victory for his economic program.

Another of the group, Rep. G.V. Montgomery, D-Miss., chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, retained his chairmanship on a slim 16-11 vote.

Rep. Charlie Wilson, D-Texas, a member of the leadership committee, said Gramm was just being used as an example because of the way he became a visible symbol of rebellion against the Democratic alternatives to Reagan's policies.

The rules changes include revisions to discourage members of either party from using spending bills to implement legislation.

Cigarette prices go up

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Cigarette prices went up 29 percent.

Jose Maria Basagotti, a spokesman for the Mexican Industrialists Confederation, said the price increase was a result of negotiations between the country's cigarette producers and the Commerce Ministry.

During 1982, the price of cigarettes increased three times.

Mexico produces 40 brands of cigarettes. The new prices range from seven pesos (4.7 U.S. cents) for the cheapest pack to 55 pesos (37.7 U.S. cents) for Benson & Hedges, the most expensive brand.

Sen. Cranston has near perfect 'liberal quotient' rating from ADA

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Sen. Alan Cranston, who has attempted to lay claim to the liberal constituency left leaderless by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's withdrawal from the 1984 presidential race, had a more liberal voting record than Kennedy last year, according to the Americans for Democratic Action.

Cranston, D-Calif., scored a near perfect 95 percent on the ADA's "liberal quotient" rating, tied with Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., as the most liberal of the five Democratic senators considered likely or possible presidential candidates..

The two Western senators, both of whom have formed exloratory campaign committees for the presidential race, were 20 points higher on the ADA rating scale than Kennedy, D-Mass., long considered a leader of the Democratic liberals.

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., who has expressed more interest in a possible presidential run since Kennedy dropped out, also scored higher on the ADA rating than Kennedy, getting an 85 percent score.

THE OTHER TWO probable presidential candidates among the senators fell below Kennedy's 75 percent rating.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, was given a 70 rating, just above the Democratic average of 68, while Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., received a score of 55 to qualify as the most conservative of the possible Democratic presidential contenders.

Although the Senate's average score went up 5 points over the 1981 ratings to 45 percent in 1982, ADA national director Leon Shull said the Senate's overall performance last year was "nothing less than abysmal."

"The Senate last year played more roles than Lon Chaney, almost all of them villains," Shull said in a statement accompanying the ADA's annual rating. "It played Scrooge with the social budget, Jim Crow on busing, Robin Hood in reverse on tax giveaways to the rich, Santa Claus to the Pentagon and the Ugly American on intervention in Central America.

"In addition, the Senate deserves a special Academy Award for ham acting for its passage of the balanced budget amendment," he said

The ADA rating showed three Democrats with perfect scores: Sens. Bill Bradley, N.J.; Christopher Dodd, Conn., and Howard Metzenbaum, Ohio.

THREE REPUBLICANS voted wrong on all of the ADA's test votes, receiving zero ratings. They were Sens. John East and Jesse Helms of North Carolina, and Mack Mattingly, Ga. Republicans as a whole received an average score of 25 percent, up 8 points from 1981's score of 17.

The ADA said the improvement by the Senate as a whole and the GOP senators "was due to a slight move away from the president by Republican senators," which was most noticeable among the Eastern GOP senators.

Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., who has retired, remained near the bottom of the ADA scorecard with a 15 percent in his final year.

The ADA rating was based on what it considered 20 key issues testing liberal/conservative leanings, including the budget, the MX missile, job-creating legislation, authorization for development of chemical weapons, civil rights and civil liberties, nuclear weapons controls and non-intervention overseas.

Cranston voted "wrong" on only one issue according to the ADA rating, voting for the bill that provided a huge increase in the historic 160-acre limitation for Western farms receiving subsidized water under the 1902 Reclamation Act. The upward revision of the 160-acre limit has long been supported by California agribusiness but opposed by liberal groups who argue that it favors large corporate farms over smaller family farms.

HART VOTED AGAINST the ADA position only by voting against the provision in last year's tax increase bill that allowed withholding of 10 percent of interest and dividend income, a provision that supposedly affects mainly upper income earners.

Glenn, the former astronaut who is rated second to former Vice President Walter Mondale in the Democratic presidential standings, voted against the liberal position on 5 issues. He favored a bill to protect the identity of U.S. intelligence agents; opposed the interest and dividend withholding; opposed two cuts in defense spending and supported money for chemical weapons.

Hollings, one of the lower-rated active candidates, voted against the ADA position six times and missed three votes, which hurt his score. He voted for a restriction on Justice Department support of busing for integration suits, opposed the interest and dividend withholding, supported the balanced budget amendent and the higher acreage limit on reclamation water use, and opposed a reduction in defense spending to augment social spending. He missed the votes on secret agent protection, chemical weapons and the override of President Reagan's veto of a supplemental spending bill.

Vandal who slashed phone lines may have been part of safecracking

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — An unknown vandal who slashed 30,000 telephone lines with a chain saw may have been part of a safecracking gang that stole narcotics from a drug company, police say.

The two crimes occurred within minutes of each other early New Year's Day. "We believe they're related," said Maj. Stanley Glanz, chief detective for the Tulsa Police Department.

Whoever broke into the Southwestern Bell Telephone substation and sawed through three cables also tripped scores of burglar alarms, Glanz said. Patrolmen scattered throughout the city checking for breakins on the chance that the vandalism was covering a burglary.

Police didn't check the Bergen Brunswig Drug Co. Warehouse, Glanz said, but an employee, Billy Lewallen, drove there and was captured by armed burglars who had broken into the building and were cutting their way into a safe with a torch.

The safe contained Class A drugs, the most dangerous and addictive kind such as opium and morphine.

Lewallen was forced at gunpoint to open the safe. The men fled with the drugs after leaving him blindfolded and in handcuffs, Glanz said.

He estimated the drugs' street value at more than $500,000.

Mutineer's descendant honored

LONDON (AP) — Thomas Coleman Christian, a radio operator on isolated Pitcairn Island, says he's "delighted" to have been included on the queen's New Year's Honors List 194 years after his famed ancestor led the mutiny aboard the HMS Bounty.

Christian was awarded the Medal of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth II for his radio work and others services on the South Pacific island of Pitcairn.

He is the sole radio operator for the 44 people who now live on the British colony where his great-great-great-grandfather Fletcher Christian led some of the mutineers after their high seas revolt against Capt. William Bligh in 1789.

"We are all utterly surprised and delighted by the award. We have given our thanks to God," Christian said in a New Year radio message, reported by the Mail On Sunday, a London weekly.

"The award shows that Britain has not quite forgotten us," Christian added, referring to fears among his fellow islanders that they may have to abandon Pitcairn because few ships call there these days.

Christian's ancestor lies in an unmarked grave somewhere on Pitcairn.

Czech capital indifferent to Soviet bloc summit

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Residents of this venerable European city, who have weathered the onslaught of Soviet tanks and years of strict government control, appeared unconcerned about the Soviet bloc summit conference this week.

Official press reports that the Warsaw Pact meeting had produced a "new great peace proposal" for averting nuclear war also failed to attract much attention, and residents appeared more interested in scouring the stores for rare items and bargains.

East Europeans had been told in advance that a summit was going to take place, and the Czech capital was suggested as the venue. But Prague residents didn't know about the meeting until the leaders began arriving.

"Where? Here? No!" was the almost simultaneous reaction of a young man and woman walking along the cobblestone streets when asked about the meeting.

An East German tourist, told that her country's leader Erich Honecker was here for the conference, said, "So that's why there are so many police around."

Leaders of the Warsaw Pact alliance gathered Tuesday and Wednesday at the ninth century Hradcany Castle, a hilltop stronghold commanding a view of Prague. Afterward, Soviet Communist Party chief Yuri V. Andropov said: "We have jointly determined a policy for the future."

A summit declaration, based on renunciation of military force between the Warsaw Pact and NATO, was expected to be made public today.

But few people interviewed on the streets through an intepreter said they were concerned about the summit.

"We don't read the paper," said a man who would identify himself only as Richard, when asked if he knew of the political developments. "It is always the same."

"I mostly read the sports pages," said Rudolf Kadlec, a 34-year-old electrical worker. But he added that he is worried about the economic situation in Czechoslovakia, one of the most prosperous nations in the East bloc.

In Romania, Poland and other nations of the Warsaw Pact, shoppers must stand in lines for soap, food and other items.

"Very slowly, gaps in supplies are beginning to appear," he said when interviewed at the old town square, an historic landmark in a city that was among the most splendid centers of Europe as the Bohemian capital in the 14th century.

He said most people are still getting plenty of basic food but families earning less than the $275 average monthly income are having a tough time finding enough meat, a major part of the traditional diet.

The cost of about two pounds of choice sirloin beef is as much as $11.50, while cheaper cuts are about $6 for the same amount. Expensive cuts are plentiful but the cheaper ones are hard to come by.

Shoppers searched the shops for post-Christmas buys on skis and other items, like Cuban oranges, the only variety available. Supplies are good and the taste sweet, though consumers complained that they are rather pulpy.

A rare supply of bananas recently appeared in shops, but were quickly bought up. None have been seen since.

"I think things are getting worse here. But I think Reagan is a Hollywood cowboy," said a 24-year-old woman who refused to give her name.

"I have a 3-year-old daughter and I don't want her to go to war, so I'm worried," she said when asked about political relations with the West.

In private conversations, Czechs and other East Europeans often express their frustration at government controls on travel, social life, religious practice and political activity. Czechoslovakia has been subjected to tight Soviet domination since the summer of 1968, when Soviet forces invaded to put down a liberalizing trend by the socialist government.

Warsaw Pact wants mutual agreement

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The Soviet-led Warsaw Pact nations have proposed a mutual agreement with NATO to renounce the use of military force and outlaw or limit a wide array of weapons, from neutron bombs to lethal chemicals.

The new peace proposal was announced after Wednesday's final session of a two-day Warsaw Pact summit here, the first such meeting held under the leadership of the new head of the Soviet Communist Party, Yuri V. Andropov.

Details of the proposal were released today in a communique from the official Czechoslovak news agency CTK that was translated into English by The Associated Press.

The East Bloc proposal comes amid a concerted Soviet propaganda effort seeking to enlist U.S. and Western European peace groups in its campaign to block NATO's planned deployment of U.S.-made cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe. The missiles are intended to counter Soviet missiles aimed at the European NATO allies.

"Member states of the Warsaw Pact turn to the member states of the North Atlantic (Treaty Organization) pact with a proposal to conclude an agreement to renounce the use of military force and to preserve peaceful relations," the communique said.

During a Washington news conference Wednesday evening, President Reagan said the Warsaw Pact proposal for a mutual renunciation of force deserves consideration by the NATO allies.

But he added, cautiously, that the proposal was new and said, "This is something that would require consultation with all of our allies in NATO."

The Warsaw Pact communique said East Bloc leaders "expect that since the Soviet Union has accepted a unilateral commitment not to use nuclear weapons first, all nuclear powers which have not done so so far will take similar steps."

This mention of the first-strike option was likely to raise problems, since the numerically inferior NATO forces, led by the United States, have balked at giving up any option in the face of a Warsaw Pact attack.

The Warsaw Pact document went on to call for talks on reducing or eliminating nuclear weapons testing, chemical weapons, neutron weapons and foreign military bases.

Here are some of the other proposals:

"To conclude as soon as possible negotiation of an international agreement on the prohibition of radiological (neutron) weapons...

"The working out, in as short a time as possible, agreement on total and general prohibition of nuclear weapons tests...

"To speed up the working out of international agreements on the prohibition and liquidation of chemical weapons...

"To proceed to the working out of agreement on the prohibition of neutron weapons...

"To start immediately negotiations on the prohibition of basing of any types of weapons in outer space..."

The leaders of the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Romania, East Germany, Poland, Bulgaria and Hungary expressed concern about what they called deadlocked talks on limiting strategic nuclear arms and medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

"The best solution would be to remove totally from Europe nuclear weapons, both those of tactical and medium range," the document said.

"...If it is not possible at present to achieve such a true 'zero solution' it would be useful to take the path of radical lowering of nuclear capabilities of medium-range in Europe on the basis of equality and equal security."

The Kremlin earlier rejected the President Reagan's so-called "zero option" plan to rid Europe of all intermediate range nuclear-tipped missiles. Instead, Moscow proposed cutting back its own European-based missiles to equal those held by Britain and France. The United States, Britain and France rejected that offer.

The Warsaw Pact document said the members had no intentions to expand their sphere of influence and called on NATO to stay out of the Persian Gulf.

Thirty-six killed in one 24-hour period in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — At least 36 people, most of them civilians, were killed in a 24-hour period this week and reports from witnesses and judicial authorities indicate nearly all were victims of rightist death squads.

Military sources said Wednesday that six of the victims were killed by members of the leftist guerrilla bands waging a three-year-old civil war to topple the U.S.-backed rightist government.

The death toll was one of the highest in the war for a 24-hour period. It came about three weeks before President Reagan must certify to Congress that the Salvadoran government has made progress in eliminating human rights abuses, a requirement for additional military and economic aid.

In October, U.S. Ambassador Deane R. Hinton warned the Salvadoran government that continued death squad activity could jeopardize the assistance.

The list of victims was compiled from reports filed by judicial authorities who examined bodies found between between Tuesday morning and Wednesday morning, and from interviews with witnesses and military sources. The informants all requested anonymity to avoid possible reprisals.

A spokesman for the El Salvador Human Rights Commission estimates 42,000 people have been killed since the civil war started in 1979. The independent watchdog agency, which the government accuses of being sympathetic to the left, says 90 percent were civilians killed by death squads.

Police defuse bomb in Haitian ministry

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Police defused a "high-powered bomb" found in the Ministry of Finance building today, five days after a bomb blast near the presidential palace killed four people, reliable sources reported.

The government declined comment on the reported bombing attempt.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said an anonymous telephone caller told ministry officials this morning that the bomb had been placed in the building directly across from the National Palace of President-for-life Jean-Claude Duvalier.

Employees at the ministry also had become suspicious of a box left in the lobby and called Finance Minister Frantz Merceron, who in turn called police, the sources said.

Snowblind in D.C.

It was all politics earlier this week when the Democratic leadership in the House voted to strip Rep. Phil Gramm of College Station of his membership on the Budget Committee. That move was revealing in a couple of ways.

Despite Majority Leader Jim Wright's contention to the contrary, the committee decision on Gramm's political conduct last session in regard to economic legislation can be construed only as punishment or failing to adhere to an archaic fiscal philosophy. The congressman didn't knuckle under to the economic fairy tale peddled last session by Wright and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, and even went so far as to fight long and hard for legislative measures he believed to be in the country's best interests, as we did and do.

It's true Gramm, elected as a conservative Democrat, likely will be more comfortable with the philosophy of the Republican Party. He said Wednesday he'll resign his House seat to seek re-election as a Republican. And the GOP leadership has said Gramm may be able to remain on the Budget Committee after switching parties.

That's all well and good. Certainly the committee needs even more thoughtful conservatives like Phil Gramm and our own district's Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt, just nominated to a seat on the committee by the House Republican leadership. Gramm, Loeffler and Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock are representative of the kind of leadership the people of Texas — and, we believe, the rest of the nation — are asking for.

It was exactly that topic which was discussed by Hance in a recent letter from Washington. He quoted Horace W. Busby of Washington who, in a perspective paper analyzing results of the Nov. 2, 1982, election, noted 39 members of the Conservative Democratic Forum (CDF) were re-elected with an average of 83 percent of the vote. In races in which CDF members were contested, they won with an average of 74.7 percent of the vote.

Hance added to Busby's analysis, saying, "I think the voters of Texas, and across the South and Southwest, have sent a consistent message to the national Democratic Party: It's time to move toward the political center. The days of liberal control over the party are indeed numbered."

That's clear thinking on Congressman Hance's part. But the House Democratic leadership's decision on Congressman Gramm illustrates too many liberal Democrats in leadership positions now want to adhere to outdated concepts rather than accepting economic reality and working for the good of the nation.

Spy locked in the cold

Edwin P. Wilson, the ex-CIA agent who ran guns for Libyan Gen. Moammar Khadafy, has been convicted of gun smuggling, fined $200,000 and sentenced to 15 years in prison.

That might sound like a stiff sentence for a man caught smuggling four pistols and an M-16 rifle to Libyan agents in Europe. But taking into account that the rifle was used to assassinate the son of a Libyan dissident, and the M-16s were samples of a $20 million gun contract, for which Wilson was to receive an $8 million commission, the sentence is just.

Wilson exploited his former connection with the CIA to sell arms to terrorist enemies of this country. He claims to have been working for the CIA. That is highly doubtful, even in the world of espionage, where spy and counterspy blur in shadowy intrigue. But whatever Wilson's role, his sentence has put all renegade agents on notice that association with the CIA is not protection from the law. The CIA's crucial role is jeopardized by any abuse, or even appearance of abuse, by members and former members. Hopefully, its integrity will be strengthened by Wilson's conviction.

America cannot tolerate the exploitation of its intelligence services for purposes of terrorism.

Lessons of Abscam

A special Senate committee looking into the government's conduct of the Abscam undercover operation has concluded that no one's civil liberties were violated by the tactics employed by the FBI. All the defendants convicted of accepting bribes, the report noted, "understood that the payment was a bribe." That seems unquestionably true, but the fact remains that, as the Senate panel says in a report nearly 1,000 pages long, the "use of the undercover technique creates serious risks to citizens' property, privacy and civil liberties, and may compromise law enforcement itself." In fact, it goes on, perhaps with some understatement, "the undercover technique may on occasion create crime where none would otherwise have existed."

In view of that, and in light of the careless and unsupervised manner in which FBI agents conducted Abscam, the committee is right to call for legislation that more carefully defines illegal entrapment, provides for acquittal of persons so entrapped, compensates innocent victims caught in the snare of such operations and imposes stringent ground rules for future undercover investigations. Congress would do well to follow that advice, and to go further. Specifically, it should require the FBI and other federal investigative agencies to obtain a judicial warrant before undertaking an Abscam-type operation that, without proper supervision, easily can become a fishing expedition against someone on an agency's "enemies" list.

Warrants already are required for searches and wiretaps, but the FBI maintains — and current law supports its contention — that undercover operations do not fall within the bounds of Fourth Amendment protections against unreasonable search and seizure. Moreover, the FBI claims that, as a result of the mistakes it made during Abscam and the complaints that followed, it has tightened central control over such operations and that judicial supervision thus is not required. That is a defensible point, but even if it could be taken at full face value, it is scarcely an argument against involving the courts in the type of police activity that, perhaps more than any other, invites abuse of civil liberties.

Even if in the narrowest legal sense no one's rights were violated during Abscam, the tactics used — the attempt to bribe at least one senator about whom there were no suspicions of corrupt action or intent, the reliance on dubious informants for targeting officials, and the employment of a middleman so blatantly dishonest that he at times was running the operation for his own profit — were so questionable as to demand that future operations be subject to independent supervision. In the Senate committee's own words, "the central task (for Congress) ... is to create a system (that) ... provides the public with the optimal balance between effective law enforcement and the preservation and nurturing of civil liberties. This the existing system fails to do ..."

Wilson's CIA 'connection' just pretense

WASHINGTON — A mysterious episode in the murky career of convicted gun-runner Edwin Wilson was what the staff director of the House Intelligence Committee chose to call "The Stansfield Turner Affair."

The label is unfair. The former CIA director committed no impropriety; indeed, he didn't even know he was being linked to Wilson, who was a fugitive ex-CIA agent at the time. Here's what happened:

Jack Anderson

In early 1978, Adm. Turner was having a house built in suburban Washington. As head of the CIA, he required a security system for his new home.

"The builder gave me the choice of several security systems," Turner told my associate Dale Van Atta. He said he chose Honeywell because an old friend was a top executive of the company.

Unbeknownst to Turner, a onetime associate of Wilson's also worked at Honeywell, as sales manager for its protective services division. One day this man got a call from Wilson. He later told the Intelligence Committee he "was instructed by Ed to have someone from Honeywell contact Stansfield Turner" about an alarm system for the CIA chief's home.

The sales manager assumed Wilson was acting at Turner's behest. Like many people, he thought Wilson was still working for the CIA — an impression Wilson cultivates to this day.

So the former associate asked Gar Woodward, a retired colonel who still works at Honeywell, "to contact someone at Turner's office, one his liaison people, and arrange to look at the house ... and see what it needs." Woodward, like Turner, knew nothing of the Wilson connection.

Wilson's associate told the House committee behind closed doors that Turner got at least a 50 percent discount on the security system, and that it was also "paid for out of petty cash from CIA funds." Both Woodward and Turner say they were unaware of any discount; both vehemently deny the CIA paid for the job.

In fact, Turner produced the building contract for his home, which shows an estimate of $1,800 for a security system as part of the construction cost. Turner recalled that when the actual cost turned out to be $1,950, he paid the additional $150 through an adjustment in the closing costs. The CIA's only involvement was to see that the system was connected to CIA headquarters in Langley, Va.

What remains a mystery is how Wilson knew Turner was looking for a home-security system. The most likely conclusion is that someone in the CIA's "old boy network" found out about it from the CIA's office of security, and mentioned it to Wilson.

It would be typical of Wilson to use this information to nurture the idea that he was still a CIA man. He made his fortune through good connections, and seized every opportunity to "legitimize" himself by real or perceived intimacy with the great and the near-great. Acting as a go-between on Turner's home-alarm system would fit the pattern.

One thing is clear: Turner had no idea Wilson had any involvement with Honeywell. The two were "like oil and water," according to a knowledgable source. Indeed, Turner's major housecleaning at the CIA began when he fired two agents who were moonlighting for Wilson.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: Organizers of a professional union at the Environmental Protection Agency have been getting a hard time from management.

When the Committee of Concerned EPA Professionals requested a room for its organization meeting, the organizers were told that "EPA could not allow such a meeting to be held anywhere in EPA" — even during lunch hour.

They were also told not to set up tables for signature collection at the West Tower entrance because "the administrator comes through here."

According to one organizer, the purpose of the union is to provide "a forum and a degree of protection and strength" for EPA professionals who may challenge the scientific justification for EPA policies.

UNDER THE DOME: In the north end of the Capitol basement, there are two shuttle trains — one going to the Russell Senate Office Building, the other to the Dirksen Senate Office Building. But the even odds were too much for Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., one recent day; he absentmindedly got on the Russell shuttle instead of the Dirksen. As the train pulled away from the platform, Heflin leaped to his feet and yelled, "I'm going on the wrong train!" The operator obligingly backed up and let the senator off. Through it all, Heflin was puffing away on his ever-present cigar — even after he got off the (right) train and into the elevator, where smoking is prohibited.

— A paralyzed, diabetic 77-year-old woman spent the holidays in a public-housing unit instead of out on the street, thanks to the staff of Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, D-N.Y. The woman and her wheelchair were about to be evicted when the Astoria Community Senior Citizens Center called Ferraro's office for help. The congresswoman's staff leaned on the Housing and Urban Development Department and the New York City Housing Authority, and they expedited the necessary paperwork to get the woman in public housing.

Raoul Wallenberg question unanswered

WASHINGTON — The gauze of lies that the Soviet regime wraps around reality has never been thick enough to muffle this question: Where is Raoul Wallenberg?

Now it is asked again, in the wake of the most recent in a long series of tormenting reports. A Russian immigrant in Israel says that when he was hospitalized in 1972 on the way to prison, he met a man who "looked Jewish, so I asked who he was. He answered in accented Russian that he was Swedish and was there because he helped the Jews. He said his name was Raoul Wallenberg." That occurred a quarter of a century after 1947, the year the Kremlin says Wallenberg died.

George F. Will

Last May, when tardily releasing documents about the Wallenberg case, a Swedish official said, "We are working on the supposition that he is still alive." (Sweden's lethargy concerning the case — lethargy born of cowardice — hardly constitutes "working.") If alive, he is 70. It is 38 years since he disappeared from Hungary into the Soviet Union.

On Jan. 17, 1945, he was seized by Soviet forces that were "liberating" Hungary from their former allies, the Nazis. Three weeks later he was in the emblematic institution of the Soviet regime, Moscow's Lubyanka prison.

At 32, representing neutral Sweden, Wallenberg was in Budapest at America's request, working with breathtaking bravery and saving scores of thousands of Jews from Adolf Eichmann's final chapter of the "final solution," the destruction of Hungarian Jews. He bought buildings and draped them with Swedish flags as diplomatically protected territory. He dressed "Aryan-looking" Jewish men in S.S. uniforms to protect Jewish havens. He distributed fake passports, and used sheer audacity to intimidate Nazi soldiers into opening the doors of cattle cars. Thanks to him, the 120,000 Jews in Budapest were the most substantial Jewish community surviving in Europe when the war ended.

One certainty is that Andrei Gromyko lied in the 1957 memorandum asserting that Wallenberg's "sojourn in the Soviet Union" — Gromyko's words — ended with a heart attack in prison in 1947. This memorandum came after 12 years of Kremlin denials that Wallenberg had ever been in Soviet hands. Gromyko cited the evidence of two Soviet functionaries, both conveniently dead, and said the body had been cremated — a transparent fabrication, given Soviet practices.

There has been a steady trickle of reports about Wallenberg, first from returning German prisoners of war, then from released political prisoners and Jewish emigrants. The reports give dates and places — prisons, cell numbers — that trace a tantalizing trail across the years and through the gulags.

For example, in 1961 a Soviet professor of medicine told a visiting Swedish physician that he had recently examined Wallenberg in a "mental hospital." In 1977 a Muscovite just released from the gulag called his daughter in Israel and mentioned meeting in a Moscow prison a Swede "who had served 30 years." Two years later the Muscovite was back in prison because, his wife said, he wrote a letter about Wallenberg. Sources in Eastern Europe report that in 1981 Wallenberg was moved to a prison hospital near Leningrad.

Why was he arrested in the first place? The Soviet machinery of brutality operates so automatically it leaves little room for, and certainly does not require, much mind. But Soviet repressors certainly did not want brave witnesses to the breaking of Eastern Europe. Why was he kept? Perhaps, in part, to show contempt for Western disapproval. Why did Soviet troops using horses and ropes drag away the statue erected to him in Budapest in 1948? Because the Kremlin disapproved of what he did.

It is prudent that we insistently ask what happened when Wallenberg ended his dance of death with the Third Reich and fell into the hands of its moral twin. When the Soviet Union gets away with such acts — acts that are as contemptuous as they are contemptible — it gets the idea that it can unleash "yellow rain" and can shoot the pope with little to fear from the West's fitful disapproval.

Besides, if this case is not America's business, what is? On Oct. 5, 1981, Wallenberg became only the second person (Winston Churchill was the first) to be made an honorary American citizen.

Signing the bill conferring this honor, President Reagan said "we're going to do everything in our power" to locate Wallenberg. But we have not done that. So before Reagan agrees to meet with Yuri Andropov, he should receive an answer, beyond the routine mendacities, to this question: Where is Raoul Wallenberg?

'New Jersey' brings back battlewagons

President Reagan recommissioned the battleship "New Jersey" last week, and there wasn't a happier man in Washington than a 91-year-old retired admiral I know.

Art Buchwald

"Didn't I tell you the battleship would come back, son?" he said at the Army-Navy Club.

"You told me every day," I replied.

The admiral was slapping his thighs and chortling. "Well, this is going to give them carrier fellows something to think about. They said we were finished, and they almost put us out of business. But you need a president like Ronald Reagan to know a dreadnought when he sees one. The flyboys and submariners can talk all they want about a 'modern Navy,' but it's the old values of a battlewagon that this country still longs for."

"I hope it will close the 'window of vulnerability' with the Russians. It cost us $365 million just to get it out of mothballs," I said.

"It's a bargain, son. You couldn't build a Navy tugboat for that now. By golly, when they demothball the 'Iowa' next, we'll have the two greatest fighting ships in the world. When you put your feet on the deck of a battlewagon, you know you're standing on a ship."

"You know more about it than I do, but it seems to me a battleship is outdated, compared to missiles and bombers and nuclear submarines."

"That's because you've never sailed on one. A battleship has something no carrier or submarine can provide — and that's firepower. You can sit 26 miles out at sea and lob in 16-inch shells on Soviet gun emplacements all day long, and the Russians can't do a damn thing about it. Take my word for it, the 'New Jersey' is just the kind of ship to make the Commies yell 'Uncle.'"

"What worries me about a battleship is that it takes so many officers and sailors to crew one. The Navy is short of personnel now, and if you have to put 1,500 men on one ship, you're taking an awful lot of trained personnel away from other ships," I said.

"That's the kind of bilge the flyboys have been handing out for years. The reason they don't like battleships is that you can't sink one."

"I thought they sank an awful lot of them in World War II."

"Right, and we learned from that experience. Now we know where to put our heavy armor and how to protect our fuel tanks. It would take a nuclear torpedo to sink a ship like the 'New Jersey' in the next war."

"So?"

"They're not going to fire nuclear weapons at a battleship because the 'New Jersey' has nuclear weapons on board that can fire back."

"Are you trying to tell me they demothballed the 'New Jersey' as another deterrent?"

"You're darned tootin'. That, and the fact that when we sail a battlewagon into a Third World power's harbor, they know we mean business. There's nothing that beats showing the flag on a battleship to scare the hell out of a small hostile country."

The admiral bought drinks for everyone at the bar. "Son, this is a great day for the Navy. When Reagan recommissioned the 'New Jersey,' he not only sent a message to the Soviets, he also sent one to the naval Air Force that their days were numbered. I never thought I'd live to see the day that Pentagon chiefs would come to their senses."

"I'm happy for you, skipper," I said. "You battleship advocates have been fighting a losing war with Navy planners for years and now you have finally been vindicated."

"The reason is we never lost faith. We knew that as long as there was one battlewagon in mothballs, we had a chance of making a comeback. I think the president said it best when he called the 'New Jersey' one of the most important cost-efficient additions to the U.S. fleet. And he's been in enough war movies to know what he's talking about."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Jan. 6, the sixth day of 1983. There are 359 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 6, 1838, Samuel Morse publicly demonstrated his telegraph for the first time in Morristown, N.J.

On this date:

In 1412, French heroine Joan of Arc was born.

In 1540, England's King Henry VIII married his fourth wife, Anne of Cleves.

In 1912, New Mexico became the 47th state.

In 1941, President Franklin Roosevelt defined the American goal of "four freedoms" as freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear.

Reagan taps loyal Republican for liaison job

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has tapped a diligent and loyal Republican for the demanding job of White House public liaison. Faith Ryan Whittlesey, ambassador to Switzerland since 1981, says she is eager to come home and pitch in.

"I'm totally devoted to the success of this administration," she said Wednesday by telephone from her residence in Berne. In her new post, she said she expected to be a "lightning rod" for groups critical to the president.

Mrs. Whittlesey replaces Elizabeth Dole, whom Reagan nominated for Transportation Secretary.

The liaison job has been characterized as particularly difficult since much of Mrs. Dole's assignment involved dealing with interest groups — such as minorities, women's groups and organized labor — hostile to administration policies.

Mrs. Whittlesey hinted that unlike Mrs. Dole she won't differ much with any of the Reagan administration's internal or public policies.

"I expect to have good communication with the president," is the way Mrs. Whittlesey put it.

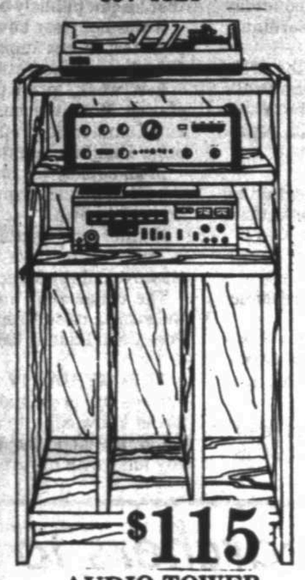

Her diplomatic appointment in 1981 and the new assignment announced Wednesday night are largely the result of loyalty to the GOP and early support of Reagan's presidential bid in 1980.

Until her diplomatic appointment, Mrs. Whittlesey was a prominent figure in eastern Pennsylvania politics. She was a member of the state House of Representatives from 1973 to 1975 and the conservative Delaware County Council from 1976 to 1981.

She has worked as a Philadelphia attorney throughout most of her political career.

Shuttle's hydrogen leak forces delay in liftoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A puzzling hydrogen leak in the space shuttle Challenger's rear compartment has forced officials to delay the craft's maiden voyage until at least next month.

The launch of the spaceplane will take place no earlier than Feb. 1 and "may be much later in the month," Kennedy Space Center spokesman Hugh Harris announced Wednesday.

The announcement was made following a three-hour conference call among National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials in Washington, Houston and the space center here, said Harris.

"The launch could slip well into February if the shuttle's engines have to be throttled in another test firing," Harris quoted shuttle program director Gen. James Abrahamson as saying.

Engineers and technicians at launch pad 39A were to continue to search for the leak today after spending Wednesday in a painstaking search of the shuttle's main propulsion system, including the three main engines and fuel lines.

The rate of hydrogen gas leaking into the craft's rear compartment is between 125 and 150 standard cubic inches a minute — twice the acceptable limit, said Tom Moser, deputy manager of the shuttle orbiter project office.

The leak of gaseous hydrogen was discovered accumulating in Challenger's 18-foot rear compartment, in front of the three main engines, after a test fire of the engines on Dec. 18.

A NASA management team should decide Friday whether to conduct a second 20-second test firing, Harris said.

An accumulation of hydrogen could cause a flash fire during liftoff when it reacts with oxygen. Both hydrogen and oxygen, in their super-cold liquid state, are used to fuel the shuttle's three main engines.

One possible clue to the source of the mysterious leak is a smaller leak discovered in the nozzle of the No. 3 engine. "It's being repaired, but the problem is we don't know what would have caused that hydrogen to get into the aft (rear) compartment," Harris said.

Challenger's five-day mission was first scheduled to begin Jan. 20, but problems getting the spacecraft out of its hangar pushed the date back to Jan. 24 and then to Jan. 27.

Despite the delay, Harris said the computerized countdown with the mission's four astronauts still is scheduled for Monday.

Government about to order recall of 1980 X-Body cars

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government, convinced that repairs 18 months ago to thousands of General Motors cars failed to correct brake defects, is about to order a recall of 220,000 of the 1980 automobiles, according to government sources.

The investigation by the Transportation Department is focusing on all 1980 model X-Body cars with manual transmissions, including the Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega, and Buick Skylark.

The mid-sized, front-wheel drive cars were introduced with great fanfare in April 1979. But in August 1981, General Motors recalled 47,000 of them because of complaints that the rear brakes were locking prematurely, causing the cars to go into a dangerous spin.

Investigators of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration have concluded that the GM recall in 1981 focused on the wrong problem and was not broad enough, said the sources, who asked not to be identified.

"We haven't made an initial finding of (a) defect. (But) we're poised ready to," said one source. Another said a recall is expected "very soon. It could be by the end of the month."

The federal highway safety agency said only that the investigation is continuing.

"The case is still open. We are still pressing the case and if the 1981 fix had solved all the problems we would have been able to close this case much sooner," said Raymond A. Peck, the agency's administrator.

Pope picks cardinal living in U.S.S.R.

MOSCOW (AP) — Pope John Paul II, locked in a bitter war of words with the Kremlin, has chosen the first Roman Catholic cardinal living in the Soviet Union, along with three other princes of the church from the Eastern bloc.

The pontiff, accused by the Kremlin last week of "subversion," stopped short of publicly naming a cardinal from the most heavily Catholic Soviet republic, Lithuania, and chose instead a prelate from the small and passive community of Latvia.

"This guy was definitely not named without the Soviets knowing about it in advance," said a Western diplomat, who declined to be identified. "If it testifies to anything, it is that the Vatican ost-politik is going along apace despite the war of words. Here you have two organizations which are great believers in quiet diplomacy."

Monsignor Julijan Vaivods, the apostolic administrator in Riga, Latvia, was among 18 prelates from 15 countries named by the pontiff Wednesday to receive the red hat of cardinal and serve in the College of Cardinals, which eventually would choose John Paul's successor.

Also chosen by the pontiff were the Most Rev. Jozef Glemp, the archbishop of Warsaw and primate of the Roman Catholic Church in John Paul's native Poland; the Most Rev. Franjo Kuharic, archbishop of Zagreb, Yugoslavia and the Most Rev. Joachim Meisner, archbishop of Berlin, representing the Eastern and Western halves of the divided city.

LITTLE IS KNOWN about the new Latvian cardinal. But the fact that he was allowed to attend the 1978 funeral of Pope John Paul I at the Vatican appears to signify that he was in official favor, at least at that time.

Nor was it known whether Vaivods would be allowed to travel to the Vatican for the cardinals' installation, scheduled for Feb. 2.

The choice of Vaivods baffled some Western sources who follow religious issues in this officially athiest Communist state.

"The interesting question is why not a Lithuanian cardinal," said a Western diplomat who asked not to be identified by name or embassy. "After Lutheranism, Catholicism is the most important church in Latvia, but Latvia as a Roman Catholic center pales in comparison to Lithuania."

There was speculation that the pontiff dared not name a cardinal living in the Lithuanian republic because of possible repercussions against the clergy and the faithful there.

About 60 percent of the 2 million Lithuanians are believed to be practicing Roman Catholics and the church there has firm roots at the officially sanctioned level, as well as a flourishing underground that has come under repeated attack from the Kremlin. Latvia, with an estimated 265,000 Catholics, is believed to be much less active.

Another suggestion was that the pope had earlier secretly named the Most Rev. Julijonas Steponavicius, the exiled archbishop of Vilnuis, capital of Lithuania, as a cardinal "in pectore," or "in the heart," and was thus free to choose a Latvian. Steponavicius has been sent into internal exile and is believed living in a small town near the Latvian border.

SEVERAL PAST POPES have named Soviet cardinals, but all have chosen prelates living in exile.

"The naming of Vaivods is a signficant development in that he is the first, that he can publicly operate as a cardinal," the diplomat said.

It was not clear how the elevation of Vaivods, or the other three East Bloc prelates, might impact on the war of words being waged between the Kremlin and the Vatican.

Last week, in an unusual personal attack on the head of the Catholic church, Moscow accused the pope of using the cover of religion to engage in anti-Communist propaganda and to carry out subversion in Poland and other East Bloc countries.

In an equally unusual reprisal, the Vatican issued a statement saying that the Kremlin criticism "is in contrast to the real facts and situations which are well known."

Neither side mentioned the so-called "Bulgarian connection" although it is believed to have kindled the recent escalation of tensions between Moscow and the Vatican.

The connection theory, unearthed by Italian investigators, alleges that Bulgaria, a close Kremlin ally, had a hand in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul in 1981.

THEORY HAS IT that the would-be papal assassin was aided by Bulgarian agents, presumably operating under Soviet control or at least with Soviet knowledge, in an effort to silence papal support for the independent Solidarity labor movement in Poland. Moscow and Bulgaria have denied any links with the attempt on the pontiff's life.

Reagan won't comment on investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan refuses to say whether he believes the Soviet Union and Bulgaria were behind the assassination attempt on the pope but believes there would be a worldwide effect if the alleged links were proven.

Reagan, at his news conference Wednesday, declined to say what he would do if the Soviet KGB and Bulgarian intelligence services were shown to have been behind the 1981 attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II.

Vatican asks Jewish researchers to investigate banker

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Vatican wants a Jewish research center to provide evidence backing its charge that a leading German banker recently appointed to a papal advisory board had links to the Nazi Party.

The request for documentation from the Simon Weisenthal Center came in a telephone conversation Wednesday between the center's founder, Rabbi Marvin Hier, and Monsignor Jorge Mejia, secretary of the Vatican's Secretariat of Relations with Jews, said center spokeswoman Lydia C. Triantopoulos.

The center's charges involve Herman J. Abs, appointed last month to a permanent panel of banking experts to advise the Institute for Religious Works, the Vatican bank. Italian authorities are investigating the bank following the collapse of the Banco Ambrosiano.

The center condemned Vatican officials last week for ignoring its demands that Abs, former chairman of West Germany's Deutsche Bank, be removed from the advisory post.

Abs, 81, now honorary president of Deutsche Bank, was a director of the Deutsche Bank of Berlin in 1938, a position he quit after World War II. In 1957, he was chairman of the board of the Deutsche Bank in Frankfurt. He retired in 1967 and since then has been honorary president.

Ms. Triantopoulos said the center has mailed the Vatican a copy of a 360-page, 1946 U.S. Military Government report that documents Abs' part in the German war effort.

Hier has acknowledged there is no evidence Abs was a Nazi Party member.

However, he alleges that Abs "was one of the most important financial figures in the Third Reich." He said a U.S. Treasury report described Abs as "a banker and industrialist whose rise within the Nazi economy was phenomenal.'"

Judge halts mortgage foreclosures in Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A judge says a crisis among jobless homeowners convinced him to halt mortgage foreclosures on owner-occupied houses two days after the local sheriff saved 42 homes from the auction block.

"I've had suggestions that several people have even committed suicide because of their economic problems," Common Pleas Judge Nicholas Papadakos said Wednesday as he announced the moratorium.

"Defaults are increasing. It's a serious problem. The situation now is becoming so critical that I felt I had to do something," Papadakos said.

The order will give hard-pressed homeowners time to negotiate repayment terms with lenders, he said.

The order applies to "debtor-occupied" homes, not to "businesses or rental properties or the property of deadbeats," Papadakos said.

Mortgage payments are delinquent on 22,000 properties in the four-county Pittsburgh area and lenders are foreclosing on about 3,200 of them, according to estimates by Action Housing Inc., a private, non-profit agency.

"I'm glad to see the system show some mercy," said Ed Wills, an Action Housing researcher studying mortgage foreclosures for the Mon Valley Unemployed Committee, which had begun protests at the monthly sheriff's auctions of repossessed homes.

"But it has a negative aspect in that it cuts off cash flow to the lending institutions, which are not in such great shape themselves," Wills said.

Papadakos, administrator of the Allegheny County Court's civil division, acted without a formal petition, and a local mortgage lawyer said he thought the action might be illegal.

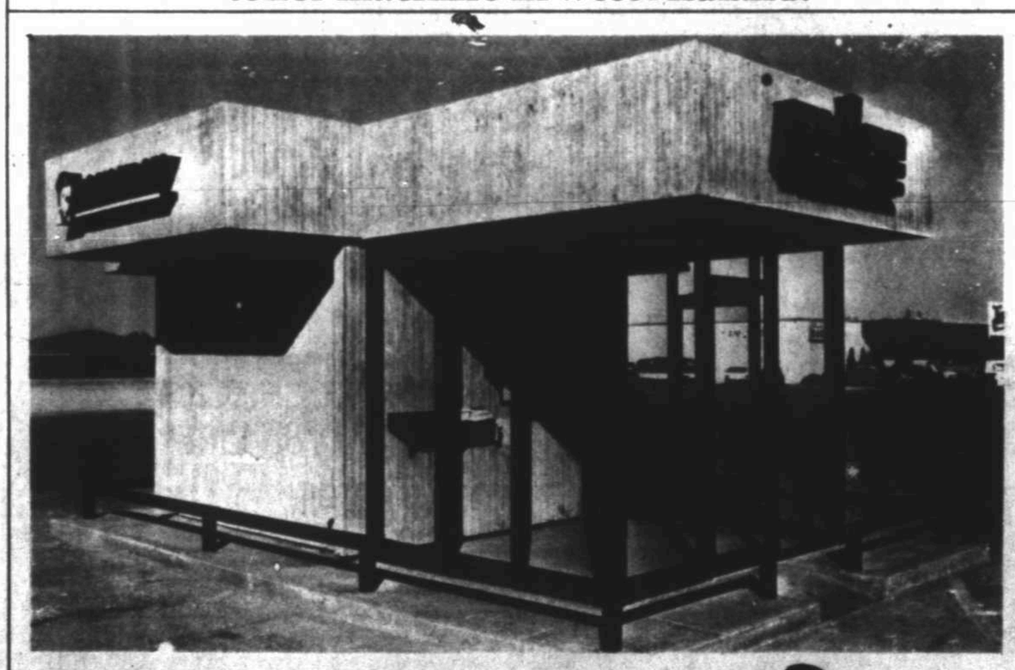

"I don't think he can do it," said lawyer Bernard Markovitz. "I've never heard of a case where the judge took the first action."

Bad loans jeopardize the savings of small investors, he said. "We don't want to sell these properties, but we can't let them sit in limbo," he said.

The issue of mortgage foreclosures prompted a noisy demonstration, Tuesday in Springfield, Colo., where a group of farmers trying to halt a farm foreclosure sale was broken up with tear gas.

Chaps to drill for O.I.L.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Classes don't begin for another week, but the Midland College Chaparrals returned to campus Tuesday to begin workouts for the resumption of the basketball season.

Coach Jerry Stone hadn't seen his Chaps in more than two weeks and he was especially happy to see so many familiar faces returning after mid-terms. Last year, MC played the final three months of the season with only eight players, which makes their feat of winning the National Junior College Athletic Association championship all the more astonishing.

WESTERN JUNIOR College Conference competition doesn't resume until Monday, but MC will get its feet wet in the O.I.L. Classic at Big Spring's Dorothy Garrett Coliseum Friday and Saturday.

Midland will tip off against Tyler Junior College in the first game at 7 p.m. Friday. Host Howard College faces Western Texas College in the 9 p.m. game. The winners meet at 9 p.m. Saturday while the losers play at 7 p.m.

Two years ago, the same formula applied and MC and Howard advanced to the finals. Midland, ranked No. 1 in the land at the time, naturally, won, but a week later Howard came to the Chap Center and upset Midland.

MC and HC will be favored to advance to the finals and, yes, they meet again next Thursday at the Langford Chaparral Center. And who can blame Stone if he has a feeling of deja vue. This year MC is ranked No. 3 nationally and Howard is No. 12.

THE BIG Spring tournament has a new sponsor this year. After years of association with the American Business Club, the O.I.L Drilling Company has taken over sponsorship of the tournament.

Midland College, which hasn't lost in WJCC play since an overtime loss to Amarillo College Dec. 11, 1980, is 4-0 in conference play this season and all alone atop the standings. The Chaps are 14-1 for the season.

Stone pointed out that not only does MC have everyone back from the pre-Christmas break, "But we even got a player back that we didn't have available in the fall."

Sophomore Rodney McChriston, who underwent knee surgery in September, is eligible for action this semester.

"Last year, we were able to sneak up on some teams who just couldn't take us seriously," Stone said. "We didn't have much size and almost no depth. But we've found out this year that everyone is going to be ready for us...in fact, they'll be sky-high."

"The depth will help us down the stretch when everyone starts getting a little tired. We ended up strong at the Christmas break and just need to keep that momentum going for the rest of the season."...

CHAPSTYQUES — Stone was in the Dallas area over the New Year's weekend scouting high school tournaments....Athletic Director Delnor Poss also was in Big D, seeking "that one good golfer we need to complete our squad."....The athletic dorms under construction on campus are not that far away from completion. They could be ready for occupancy by mid-February...The Chaps resume WJCC play Monday by traveling to Amarillo to play the team that handed Howard its lone defeat this year and the last team to beat Midland...

Lee girls face stern cage test

Midland High hopes to keep 4-5A lead against Steers

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

A year ago the Midland Lee and San Angelo girl's basketball teams shared the District 4-5A basketball title. This year both teams find themselves lapping at the heels of the upstart Midland High Bulldogs.

Lee and San Angelo square off at 8 p.m. today at Chaparral Center in an effort to keep the heat on Midland High, who travels to face upset minded Big Spring tonight. The loser between the Rebs and Bobcats tonight, however, will find themselves in a catchup role early in the district race and both are picked to make strong playoff runs this year. It's a role that neither team wanted this early in the race.

MHS HAS taken temporary control of the 4-5A race by gunning to a perfect 3-0 start, mainly with a victory over Lee last Thursday. No other team has escaped a loss at this point, and although the Bulldogs own a mere one-game lead over Lee, San Angelo, Big Spring and Odessa Permian, MHS is at the top looking down on the rest.

Lee can ill-afford to lose another big contest this early in the race. San Angelo, however, is in the same boat after losing to upstart Big Spring Monday. Keeping pace seems to be the name of the game in the girl's race so far.

While Lee and San Angelo seem to be in the feature matchup of the night, Midland High would like to maintain its outright district lead. But that could be a difficult test in itself since Big Spring owns a win over San Angelo and can vault into a district tie by beating the Bulldogs on the home floor. Evil lurks in the path of the Bulldogs tonight.

ODESSA PERMIAN joins San Angelo and Lee in hoping that the Steers can derail MHS tonight. All four teams own 2-1 district records and three of them can share first place with MHS if the Bulldogs stumble. The Lee-San Angelo loser, however, will still be in the catchup role and will be two games behind in the early 14-game race if MHS prevails against the Steers.

Permian, who lost to the Bulldogs Monday in a battle for sole possession for first place, would appear to be on the track to keeping pace in the race since the Panthers face 0-3 and 3-11 Abilene High. Permian is 8-10 on the year.

As far as season records go, Lee appears to be the favorite tonight. Not only do the Rebs own the home court advantage, but Lee owns a 13-5 season record while San Angelo has a 9-6 season record.

MHS will carry an 11-7 season mark to Big Spring where the Steers are 8-8 on the year.

IN THE only other district meeting tonight, Abilene Cooper (1-2 and 9-7) faces Odessa High (0-3 and 4-14). It is the only game on the slate that appears to have little bearing on the league race.

Midland High's Shelia Christian continues to lead the city girls in scoring this year with 256 points for a 14.2 points per game average. No other Bulldog is averaging in double figures. The high scoring Rebels, on the other hand, have three players averaging in double figures. Yshun King leads the way with 245 points for a 13.6 average while Felicia Farias, who has played in two fewer games, averages 14 points per game with 224 points. Stacy Harmon, coming off games of 14 and 16 points, has moved into double digits with a 10.1 scoring average. Farias has not scored her average in her last five outings since an injury and has lost the scoring lead to King.

Girl's District 4-5A Cage Standings

| Teams | Dist. W | Dist. L | Season W | Season L |

Mustangs demolish Raiders

Baylor's Bears set up showdown with No. 10 Hogs

DALLAS (AP) - Just how good are the Southern Methodist Mustangs? They'll find out Saturday night when they visit the awesome Houston Cougars.

Forward Larry Davis scored a season high 25 points and center Jon Koncak hauled down a career high 20 rebounds Wednesday night to pace SMU to a 94-77 victory over depth-thin Texas Tech in a Southwest Conference opener.

In another SWC league opener, Baylor bounced the Rice Owls 75-54 in Heart O' Texas Coliseum at Waco.

Unbeaten and 10th-ranked Arkansas downed Mercer 83-62 in a non-conference game at Pine Bluff, Ark.

IT WAS SMU's sixth consecutive victory and boosted the Ponies' record to 9-3, the best start since Dave Bliss has been the coach.

"We've won six straight and it's great," said Koncak. "Everyone is beginning to pull together as a team.

"We're looking forward to playing the Cougars Saturday. I guess we'll found out then how good we really are.".

Texas Tech, now 2-11, suited out only eight players because Coach Gerald Myers suspended three starters

"We didn't embarrass ourselves at all," Myers said. "We'll just have to hang in there."

The Red Raiders led 6-0 before SMU tied the game at 8-8 then went on a 14-point blitz before Tech could score again.

Freshman Carl Wright scored a career high 16 points. Koncak and Dave Piehler each scored 17 points.

The Red Raiders were led by freshman Ray Irvin, who scored 23 points and guard Bubba Jennings, who had 16.

"SMU is a good team," said Myers. "They are much improved. Butch Moore runs their offense very well and Koncak controls the rebounds. They'll be a team to be reckoned with."

Bliss said, "This was a big game for us. We've shown we can win and win on the road but this is the first time we've really shown that we can win in conference play.

"We were pleased with our rebounding."

Bliss said he had sympathy for what Myers is going through.

"I've been where Gerald is now," Bliss said. "Sometimes you have to make sacrifices fo he good of the whole team."

Two of the Red Raiders fouled out and Myers was just down to six players late in the game.

Guards Jay Shakir and James Stern led the way for Baylor, which took off to an early 24-point lead after the Owls couldn't find the basket.

Teddy Johnson paced Rice with 12 points and forwards Renaldo O'Neal and Mike Cunningham chipped 10 each.

BAYLOR COACH Jim Haller, whose team's 9-3 record represents its best start in recent years, said the Bears would have to play even better to beat Arkansas Saturday in Fayetteville.

"As well as we played the first 16 minutes, that won't be good enough to beat Arkanass," Haller said. "We'll have to play that way fo 40 minutes to win up there."

"They shot well and go on the offensive boards, especially early," Rice Coach Tommy Suitts said of the Bears. "Shakir and Stern were impressive for them and I felt Teddy had a good game for us."

Rice is now 6-5 for the season.

Arkansas, which won its 10th game of year without a loss, was paced by junior guard Alvin Robertson, who tied his career high with 23 points against Mercer.

Robertson made nine of 13 shots from the field, including six of eight in the first half, as Arkansas built a 46-28 halftime lead. During the first 20 minutes, the Razorbacks made 19 of 28 shots, including 13 layups or dunks.

Mercer dropped to 5-4.

Marcus Allen runs to rookie honors

NEW YORK (AP) — Marcus Allen, the National Football League's scoring leader in 1982 and linchpin of the the Los Angeles Raiders' resurgence, was unanimously named today The Associated Press Offensive Rookie of the Year.

Allen, Heisman Trophy winner from a running back factory called the University of Southern California, received all 84 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

His selection came after his roommate at Southern Cal, Cleveland Browns linebacker Chip Banks, won the Defensive Rookie award on Wednesday.

Allen finished the season third in the American Conference and fourth in the league in rushing with 697 yards on 160 carries and scored a league-leading 11 touchdowns on the ground.

He added 401 yards and three touchdowns as the Raiders' No. 2 receiver with 38 catches, four behind Todd Christensen. His 84 points on 14 touchdowns made him the first non-kicking rookie to win the NFL scoring title since Gale Sayers did it in 1965. He also was selected by his peers as the only rookie starter in the Pro Bowl game.

With Allen joining Kenny King in the backfield, the Raiders returned to the offense which had made them one of the most potent teams in the pro game — an offense predicated on the quarterback telling his backs and receivers: "Everybody go long."

The Raiders, Super Bowl champions two years ago but only 7-9 in 1981, rebounded to post an 8-1 record, the American Conference's best in this strike-shortened season.

Allen followed in the footsteps of Mike Garrett, O.J. Simpson and Charles White in winning the Heisman, emblematic of college football supremacy, while at Southern Cal. The school also turned out running backs Ricky Bell, Anthony Davis, Sam Cunningham, Clarence Davis, Jon Arnett and Frank Gifford.

As a senior, Allen rolled up 2,342 yards, an NCAA single-season record. But when he was drafted by the then-Oakland and soon-to-be-Los Angeles Raiders, club owner Al Davis was accused of making a blatant pitch to sell tickets in their new home, Memorial Coliseum.

New England had the No. 1 pick in the draft and used it to take defensive lineman Kenneth Sims from Texas. Eight other teams also passed on Allen — two of them going for other running backs, Minnesota taking Darrin Nelson, Atlanta selecting Gerald Riggs — before the Raiders' turn came.

"If we'd had the first pick in the draft, it would have been Marcus Allen," said Ron Wolf, Raiders director of personnel operations. "I don't think anybody would dispute that Kenneth Sims was the best player in the draft, but for our football team it would have been Marcus."

Gene Upshaw, the Raiders' guard retiring this year after 16 seasons, remembered: "When he first came in the locker room, he was just like any rookie, just like everybody else. He didn't try to set himself above anybody because he had been the No. 1 draft choice or the Heisman Trophy winner."

NFL playoffs will be for 'big play' fans

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

First the good news.

The National Football League and the networks say those of us who watch the first round of the playoffs on television won't miss any big plays.

Now the bad news.

For the first time in 13 years, we'll miss a lot of the small plays.

Since the present NFL playoff system was adopted in 1970, every playoff game has been televised nationally. Until now.

THE EIGHT games this weekend will be regional telecasts — four games Saturday, four Sunday with two each day at 11:30 a.m. CST and two at 3 p.m. Every area will get one game in each of the four time slots, meaning it also won't get one game in each time slot.

Meaning a lot of people could, by the luck of the draw, miss a game like last year's 41-38 San Diego-Miami contest.

All this stems from the 57-day players' strike, which prompted the league to adopt the 16-team playoff format. It also stems from basic league policy: Thou shalt not pit one network against the other during the playoffs.

So CBS, which has the NFC, gets two early games Saturday, two late games Sunday. NBC, which has the AFC, gets the late Saturday and early Sunday slots. The networks will decide what city gets what game.

The NFL says everyone will see replays of all the big plays in the other game. Networks will also switch from one game for several plays in another. Viewers from the game that ends first will get to watch the end of the second. And if a contest becomes one-sided, the networks will be allowed to switch to the other game.

BUT SUPPOSE there was one NBC game (AFC) and one CBS game (NFC) in each time slot? Instead of the network making the choice of game, the viewer would.

An example. On Sunday, there are two AFC games on NBC at 11:30 — the New York Jets at Cincinnati and San Diego at Pittsburgh. At 3, there are two NFC games on CBS: Tampa Bay at Dallas and Atlanta at Minnesota both at 3 p.m.

Suppose San Diego-Pittsburgh followed the Jets and Cincinnati on NBC and Atlanta-Minnesota followed Tampa Bay-Dallas on CBS. Viewers could make their own choice.

The networks prefer it the way it is.

Terry O'Neil, executive producer of the CBS' NFL telecasts, figures he'd lose a head-to-head with NBC. He's so unhappy with most of the NFC's playoff teams that he says: "If this were a regular season Sunday, I'd be hard pressed to think of any of these matchups as an attractive national doubleheader."

NBC also knows the risks. It was stuck New Year's night with Nebraska and LSU while Penn State and Georgia were playing for the national championship on ABC. ABC had a margin of almost 3-1 in the ratings.

For the first time this year, the New York Giants and the New York Jets played last Sunday in the same television time slot. So did the Los Angeles Rams and the Los Angeles Raiders.

The Giants and Raiders won. Easily.

The Giants, playing the Eagles in Philadelphia, had a rating of 18.4 with a 40 share of the audience in New York. The Jets, playing Kansas City, had a 9.5 rating and a 21 share.

IN LOS Angeles, the Raiders drew a 19.7 rating and a 47 share against the San Diego Chargers to 9.8 and 23 for the Rams against the San Francisco 49ers.

But there are qualifications.

The Jets were already in the playoffs, the Giants were scrambling for a playoff berth. In the first hour, the Giants had a slight ratings edge. By the last hour, with the Jets trailing by four touchdowns and the Giants in a tight game, the Giants had a 4-1 margin.

As for Los Angeles, fans there are notably intolerant of losers like the 2-7 Rams, and have been turned off by the disarray in the team's front office. The Raiders and Chargers are two of the top teams in the league.

Enough said.

Cowboys can't sell all playoff tickets

DALLAS (AP) — The running joke around the Dallas Cowboys' offices is that front-office personnel are going to start hitting the sidewalks with advertisement sandwich boards saying: "Game today."

Another punster suggested the Cowboys use crossing searchlights like some supermarkets do when they open for business.

Suddenly, one of the most successful franchises in the National Football League can't sell tickets for a playoff game.

The Cowboys have 19,500 tickets remaining for their National Conference playoff game Sunday against Tampa Bay, and unless an angel drops out of the sky overnight there will be a local blackout.

Some 40 percent of Dallas season ticket holders didn't even excercise their options for the Super Bowl.

Tex Schramm, club president, said it's hard for Dallas fans to get fired up about Tampa Bay.

"There would have been big lines if San Francisco was coming in," Schramm said. "And the strike has a lot to do with it."

Schramm said Cowboys' fans had a difficult time getting pumped up until Dallas got into the NFC championship games because the team had been in the playoffs so many times.

"You get into some complacent habits when something has been happening 16 times out of the last 17 years," Schramm said, referring to Dallas' playoff record.

Asked if he thought some organization would buy out the leftover tickets, Schramm said "That would take some angel."

The Cowboys were seven-point favorites over the Bucs in the 3 p.m. joust.

NCAA hits Wichita St. with probation

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA has levied another probation against its most penalized member, Wichita State University, this time for violations in the school's football program.

Wichita State, which now has been cited seven times by the NCAA since it began its enforcement program in 1952, was slapped Wednesday with a two-year probation.

The Shockers basketball program already is on a three-year probation, handed down less than a year ago for recruiting violations.

Under the terms of the football probation, the Shockers are restricted from appearing in bowl games and on television during the 1983 and 1984 seasons.

The Missouri Valley Conference school also will be allowed to award only 25 scholarships, instead of the normal 30, during each of the 1983-1984 and 1984-1985 school years.

Head football Coach Willie "Jeff" Jeffries and assistant coach Fayne Henson will be prohibited by the school from recruiting off-campus for a specific period of time, according to a report by The Wichita Eagle-Beacon. Jeffries has been head coach since 1978.

The university was charged with five violations of NCAA rules, three of which the NCAA said occurred on Aug. 12, 1982. The violations were committed by the head coach, an assistant coach and a graduate assistant, none of whom was identified in the NCAA report.

It had been widely reported that the school was under investigation for the recruitment of Dennis "Tex" Allen, a junior college prospect who did not enroll at Wichita State.

Allen had been quoted as saying he was met by an NCAA investigator shortly after he was driven to Wichita by a Shockers assistant coach.

The NCAA charged the two coaches and the graduate assistant with knowingly providing false and misleading information to the NCAA at an unspecified time. In addition, the head coach was accused of instructing a recruit and his mother to lie to the NCAA.

The head coach also was accused of giving a recruit cash in the office of an assistant. The money was to be used to pay the recruit's transportation costs home, the NCAA said.

The NCAA further charged that the assistant coach and the graduate assistant provided transportation for a recruit between his home and the university so the recruit could enroll in WSU and participate in preseason practice.

The assistant coach also purchased a meal for the recruit, the NCAA said.

The assistant coach and the graduate assistant contacted a recruit on August 12, 1982 at a time prohibited by the NCAA, the infractions committee reported.

The NCAA said the assistant coach and the graduate assistant lied when they told WSU President Clark Ahlberg in August 1982 that they had reported their knowledge of violations of NCAA rules to the infractions committee.

"Although there were not a large number of violations in this case, it was considered by the Committee on Infractions to be quite serious," said Charles Alan Wright, chairman of the NCAA Infractions Committee.

Army promised a winning season

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Jim Young, Army's fifth football coach in 11 years, is convinced he can put the program back on solid ground.

Young stopped short of saying he could work miracles and return Army to the post-World War II glory days — "The circumstances were a little different during the Second World War," he conceded — but he virtually promised to turn things around at a school where a 7-4 record in 1977 is the only winning season in 10 years.

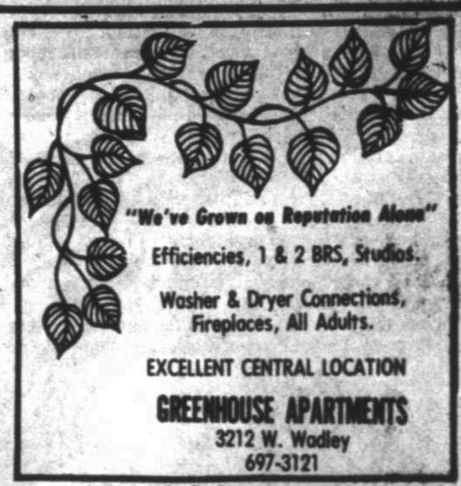

"This is the fourth situation I've come into which was a losing situation at the time I took the job," the 47-year-old Young said Wednesday.

His previous cures occurred at Shawnee High School in Lima, Ohio (28-10-2 from 1960-63), the University of Arizona (31-13 from 1973-76) and Purdue University (38-19-1 from 1977-81).

Young also served as an assistant under Bo Schembechler at Miami of Ohio and Michigan and was associate athletic director at Purdue last fall because he "wanted to see what it would be like to be out of coaching." He missed it.

Young, who "doesn't believe in rebuilding," said his "timetable is to have a winning season next year," meaning 1983. That promise will put plenty of pressure on Young, who said he was unaware of West Point's postgraduate five-year commitment to active military duty which has detoured numerous prospects elsewhere.

"It's important that football is kept in the proper perspective," said Young, who was named last week to succeed Ed Cavanaugh, whose contract was not renewed after a 4-7 record last fall, 10-21-2 overall. "I want to have a winning program within the framework of the academy.

Toney's shot saves 76ers

By The Associated Press

Philadelphia's Andrew Toney had a lot of options, all of them attractive.

With the score tied and time running out in overtime, he could pass to Moses Malone, he could pass to Julius Erving or he could shoot.

Toney, known for his icy composure and hot hand, sank a bank shot with five seconds remaining in overtime Wednesday night to give the 76ers a thrilling 122-120 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers in a matchup of last year's National Basketball Association finalists.

"The play was for Moses or me, but he (Toney) did the right thing by taking it himself," said Erving, who finished with 27 points. "He's a beautiful player to watch when he gets it going and takes over."

Toney, who had 28 points, including six in overtime, didn't have any second thoughts.

"There was never a doubt in my mind that I was going to make the shot," said Toney, whose basket with 27 seconds remaining in regulation sent the game into overtime at 112-112.

NBA Roundup

Los Angeles, which won the NBA title in six games last year, played without center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who was suffering from migraine headaches. The Lakers had their seven-game winning streak stopped in losing their 12th consecutive regular-season game in Philadelphia. The 76ers have now won the only two scheduled matchups this season with the Lakers.

"I spoke with Kareem at 5 o'clock on the telephone from his hotel here in Philadelphia," said Lakers Coach Pat Riley. "He said he was in the midst of a migraine headache and said he would try to get here to play at least the second half. But he never made it. He's had a couple of migraines already this season and did miss a game in Los Angeles."

Added Riley: "It came down to the end when everything was on the line. Toney was incredible at making points in the clutch. He's the best clutch player in the league."

Malone added 21 points in helping overshadow superb performances by Los Angeles' Jamaal Wilkes and Earvin "Magic" Johnson. Wilkes tied a career-high with 36 points while Johnson scored 23 points, grabbed 12 rebounds and had 20 assists.

Mavericks 136, Spurs 131

Rolando Blackman scored 38 points to lead Dallas in the Texas shootout. Blackman set a Maverick record by scoring 22 points in the first quarter. Mark Aguirre added 28 for Dallas.

Artis Gilmore had 26 for San Antonio while George Gervin returned to the Spurs' lineup after missing four games with a bruised heal and scored 20.

Clippers 122, Jazz 115

Rookie Terry Cummings scored six of his 27 points in overtime to lead San Diego. Utah's Danny Schayes hit a pair of foul shots with 22 seconds left in regulation to force the overtime.

Darrell Griffith scored 34 points and Jeff Wilkins had 32 for Utah, while Tom Chambers added 24 for the winners.

Pistons 130, Cavaliers 116

Vinnie Johnson scored 26 points and Terry Tyler had 24 as Detroit took the lead with seven minutes remaining in the first quarter and never trailed again. World Free had 27 points for Cleveland and Scott Wedman had 26.

Kings 138, Nuggets 118

Mike Woodson came off the bench to score 26 points and Larry Drew added 24 for Kansas City, which took a 22-9 lead and rolled to a 72-57 halftime margin. Alex English countered with 34 points for Denver and Kiki Vandeweghe had 32.

Pacers 108, SuperSonics 104

Rookie Clark Kellogg scored 15 consecutive points for Indiana in the final six minutes to beat Seattle. He finished with a game-high 31 points as Indiana helped itself by making 34 of 37 foul shots.

James Donaldson led Seattle with 22 points.

World B. free with Cavs

An AP Sports Analysis
By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

There are actually two soap operas named "As the World Turns." One is on television, and the other is a real-life story of World B. Free.

Despite a 20.8 career scoring average, including a norm of 26.4 the last four seasons, Free was traded three weeks ago to the fourth team in his seven-year National Basketball Association career. This time he landed in Cleveland, currently the league's version of the Sahara Desert, in exchange for Ron Brewer, whose career scoring credential of 14.1 is hardly comparable to Free's.

But what else can we expect from a guy from tiny Guilford College who called himself All-World while on the same team as Julius Erving and then made it all legal by going to court and changing his name from Lloyd Free to World B. Free?

"I felt like I got along with everybody at Golden State, including the coach," Free says. "I was very surprised with the trade, but I look at it as a personal challenge. So far the people in Cleveland have responded well to me and I want to put on a good show for them."

Free was reluctant to discuss why he was traded for a player of seemingly unequal value, but admitted that part of the reason was that he was in the final year of his contract.

"You'll notice that's the history of the Golden State franchise," he said. "Jamaal Wilkes, Robert Parish, Rick Barry and Bernard King all were gone in the final year of their contracts."

But also following Free is a reputation as a shoot-from-the-hip gunner that he acquired in his early pro years with the Philadelphia 76ers.

"I'd like to think that I have lived that down," Free says. "I get more rebounds and assists and play better defense than I used to. In the Philadelphia days, I was instructed to go out and score. If they had told me to play defense, I would have done it."

What hasn't changed over the years is the beauty of a World Free 20-footer, arching high over the defense and cleanly through the net. The shooting percentage also has held steady over the years, varying only from 44.6 to 48.1 in eight years, including this season, when he has hit 45 percent of his shots for a 22-point average, 12th in the NBA.

Cavaliers Coach Tom Nissalke says he's delighted to have Free.

"I think he'll make a tremendous difference on this team," Nissalke said. "I'd like him to play about 37 minutes a game. We play a set-up kind of offense and his best success (when he averaged 30.2 points per game in 1979-80) came when he was with San Diego, and they played a set-up offense."

Nissalke said he didn't know of any problems Free was having at Golden State, but for himself, "I've always liked World Free. He has a lot of guts and he provides leadership."

Ayala faces prison term

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Jailed boxer Tony Ayala Jr. may be returned to Texas early next week to show cause why his 10 years probation should not be revoked, a prosecutor says.

Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap has filed a motion to revoke the probation and send the 19-year-old junior middleweight to prison, based on Ayala's arrest in West Paterson, N.J., last Saturday.

Ayala, the top-ranked contender in his weight class, is jailed in lieu of $50,000 bond in New Jersey on charges of burglary, aggravated assault and sexual assault. He is accused of attacking a woman in his apartment complex.

At the time of his arrest, Ayala was on 10 years probation assessed on his plea of guilty in the December 1978 assault of an 18-year-old woman here.

Ayala allegedly beat the woman during a rape attempt in the restroom of a drive-in theater, rupturing her bladder. He was assessed probation after the Ayala family reached a reported $20,000 settlement with the woman's parents.

Michigan State ends 'meat grinder' tour by beating Iowa

By The Associated Press

There's no place like away-from-home for Michigan State, which just closed another successful road show on its "meat grinder" tour.

The Spartans visited No. 8 Iowa Wednesday night, and spoiled their hosts' debut in the new Carver-Hawkeye Sports Arena with a 61-59 upset victory.

Kevin Willis and Sam Vincent scored 18 points apiece for Michigan State in the Big Ten opener for both teams. Vincent hit a free throw in the final seconds and Iowa lost a chance to tie on a turnover with two seconds left.

TOP TWENTY

In other games involving Top Twenty teams, Auburn bounced fifth-ranked Alabama 91-80, third-ranked Kentucky got past Louisiana State 52-50, No. 9 Syracuse trimmed Providence 83-58, No. 10 Arkansas topped Mercer 83-62, 13th-ranked Louisville defeated Kentucky Wesleyan 79-58, No. 17 Georgetown stopped Monmouth 82-59, and No. 18 North Carolina beat Rutgers 86-69.

"We enjoy breaking in new arenas," said Michigan State Coach Jud Heathcote, whose Spartans dampened Boise State's debut at its new complex earlier this season.

"In all honesty, we caught Iowa on a cold night in their shooting and we are very fortunate to win," Heathcote said. "The Big Ten will be a meat grinder all year. We had been struggling and it's great to get a victory in the opener."

Iowa Coach Lute Olson said his Hawkeyes, 8-2, had all the comforts of home but just didn't win.

"No, I don't think the new arena had anything to do with it," Olson said. "We even moved the same rims from the old fieldhouse so there would be psychological effect from that."

The two coaches disagreed, however, on the effect of the Hawkeyes' new home.

"I'm very pleased with the new arena from the standpoint of fan involvement," Olson said. "The noise level was certainly equal to, if not louder, than the old fieldhouse."

Differed Heathcote: "It was like a neutral court for Iowa. The crowd was an influence for Iowa but seemingly less intimidating than in their other building."

Alabama, which moved up a notch to No. 5 this week, lost its second consecutive Southeastern Conference game. Charles Barkley scored 27 points, including 20 in the second half, as Auburn pulled away in the final seven minutes.

Ennis Whatley had 31 points for Alabama, 8-2, which lost its SEC opener to Florida on Monday night.

USFL completes draft with 600 players

NEW YORK (AP) — The brand new United States Football League completed its player draft with 600 players divided among 12 teams in 24 rounds of drafting.

In addition, more than 300 players were on territorial negotiating lists of the various teams.

One of those players, All-American wide receiver Anthony Carter of Michigan, said Wednesday after the draft that he would consider playing in the USFL, which begins its season in March.

"I'm glad to be able to have the opportunity to be drafted by a pro team," said Carter, who was selected by the Michigan Panthers. "I'm also glad to be drafted by a Michigan team.

"Right now, I don't know what I'm going to do."

The USFL got the jump on the National Football League, which is just now beginning its playoffs and won't hold its draft until April. USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons expressed satisfaction with the way the draft was conducted.

"I'm really happy with the way it went," said Simmons. "Now, we look forward to getting out there and getting some signatures on some contracts."

The final six rounds were held Wednesday, with most of the familiar names from college football already drafted. Among those selected on Tuesday were Pittsburgh quarterback Dan Marino, Southern Methodist running backs Eric Dickerson and Craig James and defensive lineman Billy Ray Smith of Arkansas. Territorial selections included QB John Elway of Stanford (Oakland Invaders), Penn State running back Curt Warner (Philadelphia Stars) and Nebraska center Dave Rimington (Boston Breakers).

Lamar Hunt has advice for USFL

'You better be prepared to stay with it'

BY WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Millionaire Lamar Hunt, who founded the rebel American Football League and helped orchestrate its merger with the National Football League, has this piece of advice for the budding, insurgent U. S. Football League:

"You better be prepared to stay with with it."

"It's hard to draw parallels with the old AFL and the new USFL," said the Texas oil heir, in New York on a tennis mission. "The situations are quite different, but some of the perils are the same.

"Their problems started Tuesday when they opened their draft. Now they must work on generating income and establishing their market. In the AFL, it was five years before we began to see daylight. It took some teams 10 years, well after we had merged with the NFL, to start seeing black ink."

HUNT IS a mild-mannered, soft-spoken sports entrepreneur from Dallas whose interests are widespread. He founded the worldwide, multi-million-dollar World Championship (WCT) tennis tour, which he has directed for 16 years, often at loggerheads with the tennis establishment.

He is sole owner of the Kansas City Chiefs in the NFL and is currently looking around for a new head coach. He owns a portion of the Chicago Bulls pro basketball team and recently merged his Dallas Tornado soccer team with the Tampa Bay Rowdies, retaining a 49 per cent interest.

Although heavily involved in football, his first interest appears centered on the vast WCT tour. He was in New York to announce a marriage with Mercedes Benz, the auto giant, in sponsorsip of his annual WCT Tournament of Champions at Forest Hills May 1-8.

With his enterprise and money, he was the chief architect in the formation of the old AFL, collecting a group of daring monied interests who went head-to-head against the powerful NFL in 1960. It was a sort of catch-as-catch-can operation at first, grabbing off rejects and retreads, but, by sticking$it out and ultimately gaining a network contract, the mavericks forced the NFL to submit to a merger in 1966.

Now Hunt is one of the NFL's most admired and honored directors, beginning his 23rd year as owner of the Chiefs and in 1972 elected to the pro Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio. Last year, he received the highest honor of the NFL Alumni Association — election to the order of the Leather Helmet.

None of it has been easy.

"I am not too familiar with the new league," Hunt said, "but, looking at it objectively, I would say their main problem will be that of conditioning people to summer football.

"In that respect, unlike the AFL, the are trying to do something unnatural. They have access to plenty of players and they have an exciting product as well as network TV exposure and proceeds.

"BUT ONE can't minimize people's habits. They aren't easy to change. In June people will be going on vacation and in July to the beach. In the spring and early summer, they will be getting interested in major league baseball as well as such summer sports as tennis and golf.

"You can't sell football on football alone. We are finding that out in the NFL as a result of the strike. Last week we (the Chiefs) played the Jets in Kansas City, our home field. The Jets are an exciting, attractive team. Only 11,000 turned out — the second smallest crowd in NFL history.

"If you assume people are going to come out just it's football, you are likely to be disappointed. They won't."

The USFL season will run from March into July.

Hunt said the USFL, as did the AFL, will find it hard to establish an identity.

"People get accustomed to names," he insisted. "New names are hard to sell. With us, it was the Raiders and the Titans (later Jets). With them, it will be hard to sell names such as the Invaders and the Blitz.

"I pick out those names from random. It's a lot different selling the Rams, Cowboys and the Giants than the Blitz and Titans."

McHale now president of Yanks

NEW YORK (AP) — Eugene J. McHale, who has been in the New York Yankees' front office since 1972, has been named president of the team.

McHale, named to the post Wednesday, has been an administrative vice president with the club for the last five years. McHale, 44, succeeds Lou Saban, who last month was named head football coach at the University of Central Florida.

Because of increased use of the Rio Grande by river runners, the National Park Service has designated a special phone number for river trip information in the Big Bend National Park and on the Rio Grande Wild and Scenic River.

River users may call 915 477 2393 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. to obtain current river information. A new clearing house will also be maintained at this number for anticipated river use on the Lower Canyons section.

During certain times of the year, large numbers of people float this section, decreasing the feeling of solitude these canyons usually offer. River runners are encouraged to call the clearinghouse located at Persimmon Gap Ranger Station to find out the dates other groups intend to begin the Lower Canyoj trips.

River users are reminded to obtain a ermit before floating the Rio Grande in the Big Bend Park or the Rio Grande Wild and Scenic River. Day-use fishermen using the Rio Grande are exempt from this requirement. Permits are free and may be obtained at any park center or ranger station.

DAN SNOW of Mexi-Cana Bass Tours reports he has justed returned from the grand opening of the Island of Novillo Lodge located in Sonora, Mexico. Eighteen Americans were in the group and Martin Reynolds, Jr., of Humble, Texas, caught the largest bass, slightly over eight pounds. However, David Jones and Bob Freeman of Springfield, Mo., had the largst single day catch with 130 bass.

"During our stay, the fish hit almost any type of bait," said Snow. "The lodge is a very comfortable facility and located on the lake's edge, providing an incredible view."

The boats are 16-foot bass boats by Ranger and the motors are 40 horsepower Evinrudes.

Few Americans have ever heard of the lake, says Snow, because it is so difficult to reach. Charter trips depart every Sunday and Thursday from El Paso. For three nights/three days the cost is $405 per person and $540 for 4/4 with a charter fee average of slightly over $200 roundtrip per person from El Paso. # MC cagers move ahead of NY's Fashion Institute

TED BATTLES

BATTLE SCENE

Midland College basketball fans sighed in relief when the Chaparrals finished 1982 ranked third in the land. It would have been embarrassing to spend the holiday break behind Fashion Institute of New York, where the Chaps were after losing a game to Trinidad, Colo.

In case you are interested, Laredo, Texas, was the No. 1 ranked junior college team, according to the last poll...

Incidentally, the Oil Classic at Big Spring Friday and Saturday, MC's Welcome Back to school tuneup, will include Howard College, Western Texas and Tyler. MC is ranked third and host Howard 12th nationally...

After what Chaminade did to Virginia, who cares about the AP basketball poll. The one that counts is the NAIA poll. After all, Chaminade was ranked only fourth in the NAIA while the Cavaliers, at the time, were top-ranked in the AP NCAA rankings. For all those thousands of fans who have been beseiging this desk for more information about the NAIA, the latest we've been able to find out is that St. Mary's, Texas, is the No. 1 team...

COMPARING Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker of Georgia with Heisman bridesmaid Eric Dickerson of SMU, Pitt Coach Foge Fazio says, "Dickerson has great speed and balance. Every game he has broken a long run. No. 32 (Craig James) softens you up so that by the fourth period, when the defense is tired, Dickerson is still fresh and fast. Eric is a slashing runner. Give him a crack and he's gone. From what I've seen of Walker, he slides and glides and no one ever really gets a good hit on him."

He'll take either one, thank you....

SMU'S BOBBY Collins, still being second guessed for not going for the touchdown instead of the tying field goal against Arkansas, says if he had it to do over again, he'd still do the same thing, even though the decision may have cost him a No. 1 national ranking.

"Before the season, we set our goals and priorities. A lot of people were talking national championship, but realistically our goal was to win the Southwest Conference championship and play in the Cotton Bowl. Going into the Arkansas game we had played 10 games, won 10 games and still had not accomplished either goal."

Motel business in Dallas was off for the Cotton Bowl. One reason, SMU was in fact the "home" team. Another was that Penn State's win over Pitt killed some of the Pitt enthusiasm of Pitt fans and few followed the Panthers to Big D.

The argument that Penn State was picked No. 1 over SMU on the basis of a tougher schedule isn't valid when one recalls that Washington, with a schedule that made SMU's look formidable, ranked No. 1 until frightened by Texas Tech and beaten by Stanford.

In fact, if you'll check back through the years, you'll find one of the key ingredients for producing a national champion is a schedule that is liberally sprinkled with soft spots, whether by design or fate...

MANY FANS couldn't understand how a bowl such as the Independence in Shreveport could invite the likes of oft-whipped Kansas State and Wisconsin to its party and ignore 10-1 Tulsa and 10-1 New Mexico.

Shreveport writer Jim McClain says, "It's really very simple. Tulsa-New Mexico would have brought 6,000 at most to Shreveport. Kansas State and Wisconsin brought 17,000."...

For those who wondered about the winner of the recreated Tulsa-New Mexico Justice Bowl game at Fort Worth, it was done by a Tulsa station...

Does SMU have right to be nation's No. 1?

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Some final thoughts on the bowl games:

Much has been made — mostly by Penn State, with an assist from the NCAA — of the fact that Penn State's schedule was the toughest in the nation this season, and certainly tougher than Southern Methodist's.

SMU's nonleague opponents were Tulane (4-7), Texas-El Paso (2-10) and North Texas State (2-9), and the Southwest Conference as a whole was not its usual imposing self. Except for SMU, Texas and Arkansas, not another SWC team finished over .500.

Penn State, on the other hand, played six bowl teams during the regular season — Maryland, Nebraska, Alabama, West Virginia, Boston College and Pitt — while Notre Dame and North Carolina State had winning records. Only Temple, Rutgers and Syracuse were under .500, although Penn State's 42-21 loss to Alabama was the worst setback ever suffered by a national championship team.

SMU'S ARGUMENTS that it did everything it had to do — the Mustangs finished 11-0-1 and the only unbeaten major college team, while Penn State was 11-1 — hold plenty of weight. The Penn State-SMU argument is one that will go on for some time and the only way to settle it is on the field.

That's not about to happen, so the best person to ask to compare the two teams is Pitt Coach Foge Fazio, whose Panthers dropped a 19-10 decision to Penn State in their regular-season windup, then lost 7-3 to SMU in the Cotton Bowl.

Fazio's vote goes to ... Penn State:

"I think SMU is a fine football team. They have a lot of skilled athletes, a great defense and they're very deserving of an undefeated season. However, I said after our Penn State game and also after watching them against Georgia that I think Penn State has the No. 1 team in the nation.

"They're probably a little more physical than SMU. Offensively, they have a very sound running game to go along with their passing, and their kicking game is outstanding. Penn State is deserving of its No. 1 ranking, and SMU is close behind. Other than that, I can't tell, except I think they should play.

"I think (Penn State's Curt) Warner and (SMU's Eric) Dickerson are great running backs. Warner probably has more moves, while Dickerson is more of a slashing type runner. Warner can also catch the ball coming out of the backfield.

"Penn State's offensive line and wide receivers are probably better and their quarterbacks are pretty comparable for what they do. (SMU's Lance) McIlhenny runs well and runs the option very well. But Penn State is not a one-dimensional team because of (Todd) Blackledge, and I'd have to give him an overwhelming advantage.

"Defensively, SMU's secondary is the best we've played, no doubt about it. But Penn State's linebackers and defensive ends are much better, although the defensive lines are pretty close. Overall, the defenses are pretty equal, but Penn State may be a little bit more physical.

"The kicking game is in Penn State's favor."

Now, make your own decision.

THE BIG Eight's contract to send its champion to the Orange Bowl has two more years to run. After that? Don't be surprised to see the Fiesta Bowl make a strong pitch.

"We'd be very interested in a tie-up with a major conference," says Bruce Skinner, executive director of the Fiesta Bowl. "We made a very strong pitch to tie up with the East Coast Conference (Penn State, Pitt, etc.), and if that conference had come together we'd have taken the champion.

Playoffs don't cure NFL's fan erosion

By The Associated Press

Tickets for Green Bay Packers home games have in the past been the object of custody fights in divorce actions and in the probating of wills. But the once coveted pasteboards are readily available for this weekend's game, illustrating a trend in this strike-shortened National Football League season.

There will be a few standing-room-only signs, but tickets only for the first-round games of the expanded 16-team NFL playoffs Saturday and Sunday reflect the fan erosion that has been apparent since the end of the 57-day NFL players' strike.

In Green Bay Wednesday there were more than 18,000 tickets still available for Saturday's game with the St. Louis Cardinals at the 56,130-seat Lambeau Field.

ALTHOUGH THERE was "a steady stream" of customers at the Packers ticket office, team ticket manager Mark Wagner said, "We're going to have to stay steady the rest of the week and sell a lot of seats Saturday" in order to have a sellout. "Normally, we don't have any tickets to sell on game day, unless the visiting team sends back some of their allotment."

If the Packers don't sell out the stadium, it will be the first time since 1959, the late Vince Lombardi's first year as as coach.

At Irving, Texas, the Dallas Cowboys had sold out 46 straight games until the first weekend after the strike. The chances of a sellout for Sunday's game with Tampa Bay appeared slim Wednesday, with about 10,000 tickets remaining.

"I looked out at the ticket office today expecting to see long lines and all I saw was trees," Cowboys General Manager Tex Schramm said Tuesday. On Wednesday, a spokesman in the Dallas ticket office said business remained slow.

Cincinnati, which opens the playoffs at home against the New York Jets Sunday, completed a sellout of 59,274-seat Riverfront Stadium about noon on Wednesday, while it appeared the Pittsburgh Steelers, who play San Diego Sunday, and Miami, which takes on New England Saturday, will sell out by game time.

THE STEELERS, whose fan support has remained strong all year, have 52,000 season ticket holders and 54,000 seats in Three Rivers Stadium. At Miami, the Dolphins still had about 20,000 seasons left Wednesday, but a ticket office spokesman said they were extremely busy.

The Washington Redskins, whose Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Stadium is sold out to 55,045 season ticket holders during the regular season, gave those fans until 5 p.m. EST Wednesday to claim tickets for Saturday's game with Detroit.

The Los Angeles Raiders, who had 10,000 no-shows a game in their first season playing in the 72,888-seat Los Angeles Coliseum, were uncertain what kind of crowd to expect for Saturday's game with Cleveland.

Al LoCasale, executive assistant to Raiders' boss Al Davis, said 76 percent of the team's 37,300 season ticket holders took up their option for playoff tickets by Tuesday's deadline.

A survey by The Associated Press of no-shows and unsold tickets in the seven weeks of post-strike football showed that NFL stadiums were, on the average, just over 76 percent full for the 98 games played.

The NFL counted no-shows — people who bought tickets but didn't use them — at 11.6 percent this year, compared to 6.7 in 1981. No shows for the post-strike period were 12.5 percent, according to AP's figures.

The NFL put average per-game attendance for the full season at 53,000, with no-shows not included. Last season, average paid attendance was 60,745, an all-time record, with no-shows included in the tally.

JIM HEFFERNAN, the NFL's director of public relations, said, "There's no question the strike was the major factor in the dropoff. All we can hope for is that all the fans come back. We certainly hope they will."

Figures varied considerably from team to team.

Clubs with poor records — notably Baltimore and Kansas City — were hit hardest in poststrike games.

Teams like Cleveland and Buffalo, which depend heavily on selling tickets at the gate rather than on season tickets, were hurt. Games played in colder weather cities, where no-shows always increase when weather worsens, were noticeably effected.

But even traditionally strong teams — Dallas and Chicago for example — have had problems since the strike ended.

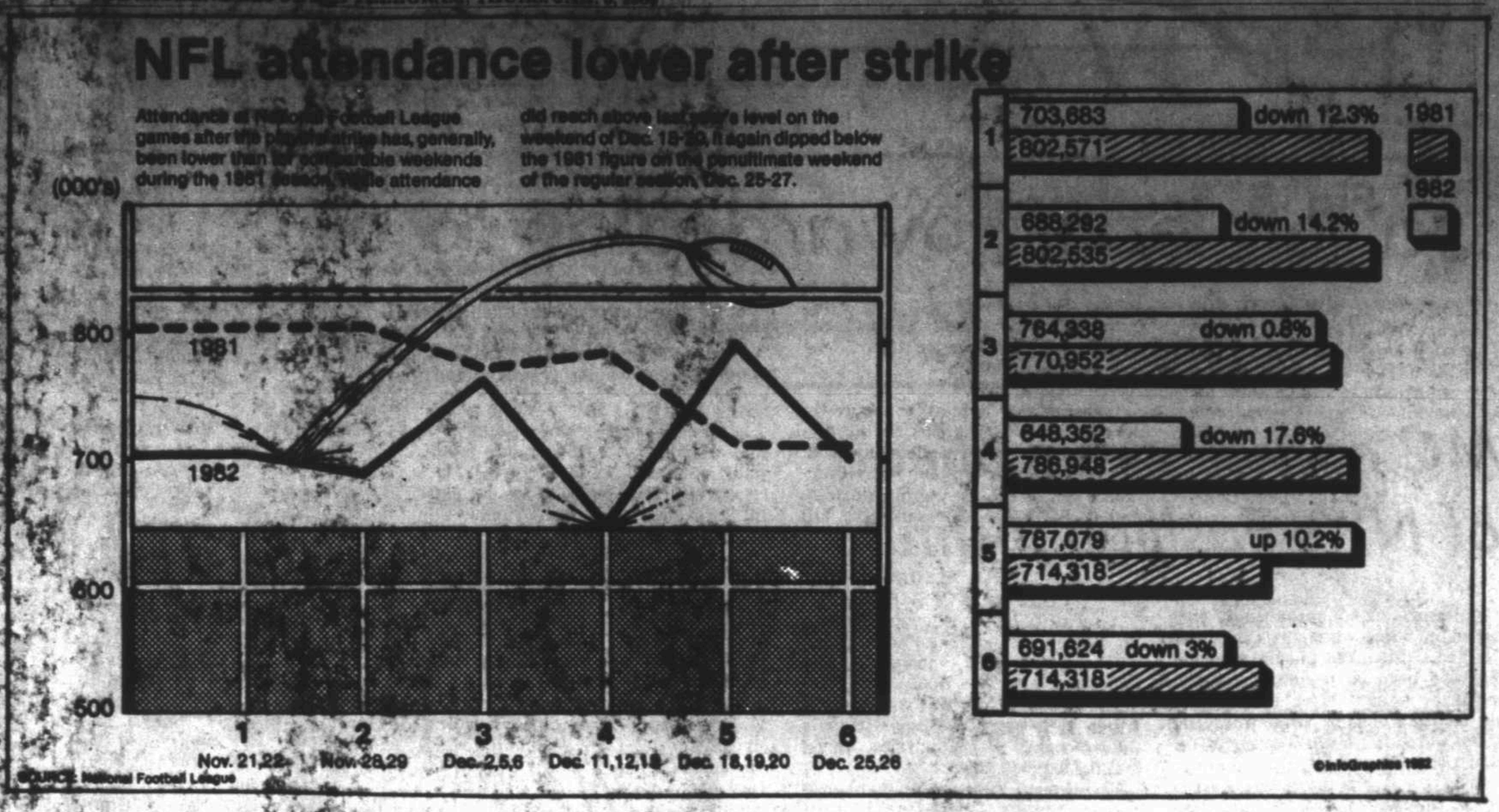

The Cowboys had only one sellout in four post-strike games, and the Bears, who deliberately hold back 10,000 seats from season ticket sales to be sold on game days, had trouble getting rid of them.

Houston lost all seven games after the strike, failed to make the playoffs, and had 26,000 no-shows in their season finale against traditional division rival Cincinnati. They couldn't even blame part of it on the weather, since the Oilers play indoors.

Ladd Herzeg, the Oilers' general manager, said, "I'd like to say we are concerned, but what I really want to do is thank the Oiler fans for their support this season. Under the circumstances — I thought it was remarkable we had the support we did."

Eddie LeBaron, general manager of the Atlanta Falcons, who had 60,000 no-shows in their four post-strike games, sounded a similar note.

"I think a lot of people became disinterested, but hopefully time will heal the problems that caused the disinterest."

Sukova, Potter post impressive net wins with upsets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Helena Sukova and Barbara Potter may not be household names on the women's professional tennis tour, but they're on their way.

The two posted impressive victories Wednesday to move into the quarterfinals of the $150,000 Virginia Slims tournament.

The fourth-seeded Potter beat Ann Kiyomura 6-1, 6-2, and Sukova upset seventh-seeded Anne Smith 6-1, 6-3.

Sukova, a 17-year-old player from Prague, Czechoslovakia, has risen to No.25 in the world rankings in just two years on the women's tour.

"She's huge (6-foot-1) and can get to a lot of shots," said Smith, who is still looking for her first victory against the teen-ager after two meetings.

"She has the potential to be a great player," Smith concluded.

The loss was a bitter disappointment for Smith, who advanced to the finals here last year. Ironically, it was Smith who was the underdog in 1982, an unseeded player who knocked off three seeded stars to reach the championship round.

"I'm not going to enjoy my stay here as much this year, that's for sure," Smith noted.

Potter, currently ranked No.8 in the world, is one of a half-dozen women who jockey for position just below Martina Navratilova, Chris Everet Lloyd and Andrea Jaeger — the tennis elite.

"Chris and Martina consistently play at a high level all the time. The other girls, myself included, can on a particular day but not all the time," Potter said. "One of my goals this year is play solid tennis at a very high level every day."

Three other women advanced to the quarterfinals. Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova, the No.3 seed, beat Great Britain's Jo Durie 6-1, 6-3; No.6 Sylvia Hanika of West Germany turned back Canada's Carling Bassett, 6-3, 7-5 and Mary Lou Piatek defeated Andrea Leand 4-6, 6-1, 6-3.

The tournament, the first of the year on the women's indoor circuit ends Monday night with the winner taking home $28,000.

Life at the top isn't easy in NHL

By The Associated Press

Life at the top has begun to have its pitfalls for the Chicago Black Hawks.

For most of the first half of the National Hockey League season, the Hawks have been the best team in the game. They sort of sneaked up on the rest of the league after several mediocre seasons in recent years.

But some of the NHL's better clubs are catching up to the Hawks. One of those contenders, the Boston Bruins, downed Chicago 4-1 Wednesday night. It was the Hawks' fourth loss in the last six games and the victory lifted Boston within four points of the front-running Hawks in the overall standings.

"We've allowed 93 shots in the last two games and that's a lot of shots," said Black Hawks Coach Orval Tessier after watching Rick Middleton beat goalie Tony Esposito three times Wednesday. "Last night, Murray Bannerman kept us in the game with 48 saves (in a 4-2 victory at St. Louis) and tonight Tony Esposito kept us in the game."

NHL Roundup

Esposito stopped 44 of 48 Boston shots but he could do nothing with Middleton, who connected only 18 seconds into the game, then scored twice in the final five minutes, giving him 17 goals this season.

"I wouldn't say we're in the top of our game," said Middleton. "We lost the other night in Winnipeg, but the big thing is we get up for the good clubs."

And everyone is getting up for Chicago nowadays.

"We've been playing very well, but I'm disappointed," said Esposito, at 39 the oldest player in the NHL. "We've got to keep plugging. We've lost a couple of heartbreakers but we've got to be realistic. There are four or five excellent hockey teams in the league and we're one of them."

Oilers 8, Jets 3, at A.

Wayne Gretzky overcame a sore elbow to register two goals and three assists, pacing the Oilers, who have scored at least four goals in every game since Dec. 9. Red-hot Mark Messier and Pat Hughes each had two goals apiece as well.

"Lately, I've been struggling a bit," said Gretzky, who had four goals and five assists in the last seven games, which is like struggling for him. "Tonight, we all played well. Hopefully, I'm back on track because the team has been playing well of late.

"My elbow still bothers me once in a while, but tonight it felt a little stronger. In the game in Edmonton (on New Year's Night), I had no feeling in my hand at all."

He also had no points that night for only the second time this season.

Devils 4, Maple Leafs 4

Rick Vaive scored his second goal of the game and 23rd of the season at 8:48 of the third period to produce the tie for Toronto, which has not won on the road in 30 games over two seasons. The Leafs are 0-24-6 away from home since winning in Chicago on Jan. 31, 1982. Dan Daoust added three assists for Toronto, while Jeff Larmer had a pair of New Jersey goals.

"When we get our first win on the road we're going to win several more. This should have been the one," Vaive said.

Tony McKegney scored twice and Gil Perreault once to help the Sabres build a 3-1 margin. But third-period goals by Don Maloney and Robbie Ftorek — the second of the night — lifted New York to the deadlock.

"I didn't know Ed scored it until I got to the bench and they announced it," said Ftorek, whose pass from the left point went into the Buffalo net off Sabre defenseman Larry Playfair. "It wasn't pretty but it was a good one."

Blues 3, North Stars 3

Brian Sutter was another two-goal scorer Wednesday whose second tally tied a game. Sutter's 26th goal of the season came just 1:10 after Minnesota rookie Dan Mandich had lifted the Stars ahead 3-2. Minnesota has tied five of its last 10 games.

Capitals 5, Red Wings 2

Bobby Carpenter's power-play goal in the second period broke a 1-1 tie and Carpenter later set up Mike Gartner's goal. Detroit has lost three in a row and has one victory in its last seven games. Washington moved a point ahead of the idle Islanders in the Patrick Division, five points behind first-place Philadelphia.

"At the beginning of the season, some people might have thought it wasn't working out," said Caps center Dennis Maruk. "I think we were 2-6 or something. But once we started playing together, we got confidence. We're working as a team. If one guy has a bad night, somebody picks him up."

Reagan leans toward plan to boost Ex-Im bank's authority

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, convinced his administration must help the American business community compete on a more equal footing with government-subsidized foreign companies, is leaning toward a plan to increase the Export-Import Bank's lending authority by $2.7 billion in fiscal 1983.

However, another proposal still being debated hotly among top Commerce, Treasury and White House officials, would boost the bank's loan guarantee authority even higher, from its current $4.4 billion fiscal 1983 level to $9 billion.

Administration sources say Reagan is likely to devote a part of his State of the Union message later this month to America's worsening international trade problems.

Officials said Reagan is likely to call on Congress to approve new tax incentives for U.S. companies that export goods and services and announce his intention to renew the Export Administration Act and the Ex-Im Bank, both of which are due to expire this year.

The president also may seek congressional approval for an extension of authority to impose economic sanctions abroad. He used that authority when he sought unsuccessfully to block the Soviet pipeline to Europe after Soviet intervention in Poland.

Treasury officials are reportedly opposed to tax incentives for exports because of the revenue loss involved. But they have been sought by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldridge and U. S. Trade Representative Bill Brock.

EXPORT TRADING CONFERENCES SET

A series of conferences to explain the 1982 Export Trading Company Act will be held in 26 cities in January and February.

The law changes the rules under which U.S. companies, particularly those of small and medium size, can get into the export market.

The district offices of the Commerce Department's International Trade Administration will hold the day-long conferences January 13 in New York, January 17 in Seattle, January 18 in Portland, January 19 in San Francisco, January 20 in Los Angeles, February 8 in Boston and Febuary 9 in Rochester, N.Y, as well as elsewhere.

The act encourages U.S.companies to combine forces to market their products overseas by protecting them against antitrust prosecution and allowing bank participation. It covers exports of services, as well as goods.

EX-IM BANK PROPOSED

New York State officials are mulling a proposal to establish a new state bank that would underwrite exports from small and medium-sized New York companies. The new bank would help fill the gap left by the current phasing-out of the federal Ex-Im Bank's discount loan program.

ENTHUSIASM WANING

A Heller Small Business Institute survey of business leaders indicates a slippage in confidence in President Reagan's leadership.

Only 25 percent of those surveyed said their faith in Reagan has grown since his inauguration, compared with 41 percent who held that position last December. And the proportion of those who reported that their confidence in him has lessened nearly doubled, from 18 percent in 1981 to 30 percent.

The poll revealed, however, that although only about four executives in 10 feel well-served by Washington officials or believe the administration's policies are supportive of small business, nearly two-thirds still think the country should "stay the course" with the president's economic policies.

The poll also disclosed that 54 percent of those responding disapproved of the proposed increases in military spending and some 76 percent approved of the reduction in domestic spending and tax cuts.

The poll of more than 1,000 executives found that the same number (55 percent) of executives who expected the president's tax program to help them in December 1981 now say that it did help. Of the remainder, 39 percent say the program is of no help and 4 percent say that it has actually hurt their business.

Other results found 61 percent pleased with the relaxation of government regulations, 20 percent expressing anxiety over environmental standards becoming too lax and 53 percent favoring the enterprise zone concept as valuable in urban revitalization.

EXPORT COUNCIL

The President's Export Council (PEC), citing the significant effect the undervalued Japanese yen has on U.S. industrial exports, will ask the administration to examine the dollar-yen relationship and its effect on U.S. competitiveness in exports.

Composed of public and private sector members, the council is also calling for government insurance to protect companies in the event they are forced to cancel signed contracts following the imposition of foreign economic sanctions. Several major American companies suffered heavy financial losses when they were forced to cancel contracts with the Soviet Union to supply equipment for the Siberian pipeline.

FRAUD ON THE INCREASE

Business and investment frauds against the elderly are increasing and are costing the victims at least $5 billion a year, the House Committee on Aging has charged.

In a report calling for more vigorous policing efforts by states, the panel proposes a federal mail fraud law that would give the Postal Service "the tools it needs to go after those who use the mails to bilk the vulnerable elderly".

UP TO A TRILLION

Federal, state and local government revenues and expenditures exceeded the trillion dollar mark for the first time in fiscal 1980-81, according to the Commerce Department's Census Bureau. During the year, revenues increased to $1.08 trillion while expenditures grew $1.1 trillion. At the same time all govermental debt grew $118 billion, to $1.4 trillion. State and local government debt alone increased $28.3 billion to $363.9 billion.

STILL BEING DEBATED

The Postal Service could save between $125 and $150 million a year by 1990 if it replaced about 7,000 limited mail service post offices with outside contractors, according to the General Accounting Office. The lengthy and complex post office replacement process, however, discourages the service from turning to independent operators.

AROUND AND ABOUT

The Energy Department now has available monthly data on the consumption, disposition, production, storage, import and export of natural gas...The Energy Department also proposes to end for most of the nation's petroleum producers and resellers record-keeping requirements which stemmed from the oil pricing enforcement program...An estimated 232.6 million people — six million more than were counted in the April 1980 census — are living in the U.S. as 1983 begins...Amtrak reports that, despite the continued recession, it concluded fiscal 1982 with a $51 million increase in corporate revenues...The General Services Administration expects to save $2 million over the next 10 months by awarding an electric typewriter procuremet contract to the International Business Machines Corp.

Consumers soon to face higher gasoline prices, more trucks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers will soon pay more for gas and bigger trucks will have unrestricted access to the nation's highways with President Reagan's signing of legislation raising the gasoline tax by a nickel a gallon.

The legislation, which Reagan planned to sign today, is expected to raise more than $5 billion a year, with 4 cents of each nickel used to repair and rebuild the country's deteriorating network of highways and bridges. The fifth penny will go to mass transit programs. The tax begins in April.

Although Reagan said in September it would take a "palace coup" to gain his support for an increase in the gasoline tax, he was persuaded by outgoing Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis to back the measure.

Reagan told news media Wednesday night the building program financed by the new tax would create jobs for 300,000 to 350,000 workers.

However, his chief economic advisor Martin Feldstein told him in a memo last month that the program might actually result in increased unemployment. Feldstein explained the money taken out of consumers' pockets by the new tax would cost jobs in other areas while it would be many months before people actually go to work on the roads, bridges, and transit systems that will benefit from the legislation.

In the lame-duck congressional session last month, Reagan fought hard for the measure as a knot of conservative senators staged a bitter parliamentary war to prevent its adoption on grounds that it would increase unemployment.

The present 4-cent gasoline tax was imposed in 1959 and has financed more than two decades of highway construction. It paid for the bulk of the interstate system which is now 94 percent complete, but deteriorating under the weight of heavy trucks and commuter traffic.

The compromise measure that won final Senate passage in the closing minutes of the 97th Congress, the day before Christmas Eve, also extends unemployment benefits to a maximum of 55 weeks in those states where joblessness is highest. Present benefit limits are extended by two to four weeks in other states.

Beginning one year from now, the law repeals the federal excise tax on automobile tires and others weighing under 40 pounds while establishing a graduated scale for heavier tires that will rise to $10.50 for a 100-pound truck tire.

The trucking industry won permission to run bigger and heavier trucks on main highways, although use and excise taxes on the new behemoths will be sharply higher than previous maximums.

Some independent truckers have threatened to stop driving if Reagan signs the bill, which they say could plunge them into bankruptcy because of the heavier taxes.

Mike Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association, said if there is a shutdown, it would not come until the new Congress begins its legislative work next month. The truckers hope to convince legislators to ease the tax provisions of the bill, he said.

Richard Adler, a spokesman for American Trucking Associations Inc., representing large commercial truckers, said a shutdown would not have their blessing.

Under the trucking portion of the bill, trucks weighing up to 80,000 pounds will be permitted to operate in Missouri, Arkansas and Illinois, which had imposed lower limits, and double-trailer rigs will be gain entry to 14 states, mostly in the Northeast, where they had been prohibited.

Another industry objective, a 102-inch width standard, was signed into law earlier as part of an appropriations bill. That will require 46 states to change their standards.

Although states legally can refuse to go along with the new, more lenient federal limits, they risk losing federal highway aid funds which are to be increased dramatically by the new fuel tax.

The commercial trucking industry originally fought the administration tax bill despite its concessions on size and weight. The industry opposed the major increase in the excise tax on new truck sales, and an almost-immediate tenfold hike in use fees for heavy trucks. But the use provision was trimmed and now provides for a $1,600 maximum in 1984 rising to $1,900 by 1988.

The current 10 percent excise tax on the wholesale price of new trucks will rise to 12 percent of the retail price, but will apply only to trucks weighing more than 33,000 pounds and trailers weighing more than 26,000.

Gasohol, which now is exempt from the 4 cent tax, will be exempt from the first 5 cents of the new 9 cent fuel tax.

Fuel adjustment charge battle extended

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The battle of fuel adjustment charges — one of the top issues of the 1982 gubernatorial campaign — has been extended until Feb. 2 by the Public Utility Commission.

Commissioners heard more than three hours of testimony Wednesday before saying they were not ready to decide on a proposal to ban electric companies from automatically passing fuel costs on to customers each month.

"I don't think the fuel adjustment clause is sacred," said Commissioner George Cowden. "We have come almost to believe it's sacred, like Scripture, and we ought not fool with it. That's wrong."

Witnesses from electric companies testified Wednesday that the automatic pass-through of fuel costs is essential.

"It is simply not possible for a utility to operate unless it can recover its fuel costs on a timely basis," said G.H. King of West Texas Utilities. "We could not survive."

The proposed rule would force electric companies to come to the PUC for quarterly reviews of fuel costs.

Gov.-elect Mark White has said the fuel adjustment clause unfairly raises electric bills. However, several witnesses and Commission Chairman Moak Rollins said Wednesday the proposed rule would not cut bills.

"It's extremely important the public realize the fuel clause is not the problem," King said. "It's the rising cost of fuel. Gas prices will continue to increase. We cannot expect to see any relief in electric utility prices until gas prices stablilize."

Rollins said the proposed rule was drafted as a result of the White campaign statements against the fuel adjustment clause.

Although Rollins said he does not think the new rule — or any revision of the fuel charges — would reduce bills, he said changes might be needed.

The major consumer complaint now is that the price of electricity is not set until the end of the month, after it is used.

"The customer objects to being told after they have used the product what the price was going to be," he said.

Two consumers complained about the fuel adjustment clause and electric bills in general.

"Rate increases have been too frequent and too high," said James Matz of Harlingen, representing the Association for Local Control of Utility Rates. "A lot of folks in the state of Texas don't believe the PUC has acted in consumers' interests."

Josephine McLean of Brownsville, who said the hearing looked like a meeting of a "good ol' boys club," said customers have received "shabby treatment" from utility companies.

"The fuel adjustment charge has been abused, and changes must be made," she said.

The Texas Municipal League also wants the fuel adjustment eliminated. Lawyer Don Butler, who has complained electric companies use the fuel adjustment to pass on other, non-fuel costs, said fuel costs should be considered during regular rate cases.

Butler said utility companies should be allowed to pass on fuel cost hikes only when those increases are caused by a regulatory agency, such as when the Texas Railroad Commission raises gas prices.

Butler agreed with other witnesses who said the biggest fuel cost problem occurs when electric companies buy fuel from "affiliates." Only Houston Lighting and Power and Texas Utilities have such affiliates.

Despite buying surge, automakers say 1982 sales were lowest since '61

By The Associated Press

Despite a surge of new-car buyers in December, the major U.S. automakers said sales last year dropped to the lowest level since 1961, although auto imports also slumped in 1982.

Domestic airlines, meanwhile, reported more passengers in 1982, but when they post financial results later this month, their combined losses are expected by some industry analysts to hit $1 billion.

Auto imports had a banner December, with sales topping the previous record for the month, set in 1980. But import sales for the full year also lagged behind 1981 levels and were the worst in four years.

"The year as a whole was not a disaster because the luxury car buyers were coming back into the market," said John Hammond, auto industry analyst at Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass. "But it was a very, very depressed year."

Lack of consumer confidence, an uncertain U.S. economy, high interest rates and high unemployment kept sales low throughout a year that had nearly non-stop sales campaigns to move vehicles out of showrooms, he said.

The five major U.S. automakers said they sold 161,823 cars in the Dec. 21-31 period compared with 126,662 in the year-ago 10-day period. The daily sales rate of 17,980 vehicles was the best for the period since 18,253 were sold each day at the end of December 1980.

For the full month, sales were up 25.3 percent. The daily selling rate of 17,233 was the best since the companies sold 18,132 cars each day in December 1980.

The full-year sales for the domestic auto manufacturers were 5,756,660, off 7.2 percent from 6,206,296 in 1981. It was the smallest total since 5,556,100 cars were sold in 1961.

Importers said their sales were up 11.8 percent in December. The daily selling rate of 7,086 set a record and was the highest since 6,777 imports were sold each day in December 1980.

For the year, import sales were down 2.5 percent. The daily selling rate of 7,220 was the worst since 6,373 were sold each day in 1978.

Meanwhile, the airline industry reported increased December and full-year traffic compared with a year ago, when the air controllers strike wreaked havoc, causing delays, flight eliminations and confusion at major airports.

United Airlines, the nation's largest airline, said December traffic was up 5.2 percent, with traffic for the year up 12 percent from 1981.

American Airlines, the third-biggest airline, said December traffic rose 16.6 percent. For the year, its traffic was up 11.2 percent.

Eastern Airlines, the fourth-largest carrier, said its December revenue passenger miles rose 8.9 percent. For the full year, its traffic was up 0.1 percent.

The airlines have been hurt by fare wars, the recession and intense competition on lucrative routes.

In other economic news Wednesday:

—President Reagan told a nationally televised news conference that he would curb "unacceptably large" budget deficits, but did not say if he would consent to higher taxes or defense cuts. "We will take action," Reagan said, but declined to provide details.

—The banking industry began offering Super NOW accounts, which provide checking accounts with an interest ceiling. Banking officials said they received many inquiries — but few new accounts were opened.

—The World Bank said it is reducing to 10.97 percent from 11.43 percent the interest rate it charges on new loans to developing countries. The rate is adjusted every six months. The bank, which has $32 billion in loans outstanding, is planning to make loans of $11.2 billion in the fiscal year that began last July 1.

—Chinese and U.S. negotiators in Peking seeking agreement on the amount of textiles China may export to the United States are still "miles apart," an informed Western diplomatic source said. A round of talks begins today.

Houston firm to plead guilty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Papers filed in federal court by the Justice Department say a Houston oil equipment company will plead guilty today to paying bribes to an official of Mexico's national oil company.

Gary D. Bateman, owner of Applied Process Products Overseas Inc., will enter the plea on behalf of the company, according to papers filed in U.S. District Court on Wednesday.

The department said Bateman will also plead guilty on his own behalf to five counts of violating U.S. currency laws.

The court papers said Bateman paid $342,0000 in bribes to Guillermo Cervera, administrative secretary to the chief of purchasing of Petroleos Mexicanos, known as PEMEX.

In return, Bateman's company received $5 million in contracts for compression equipment, according to the department.

The firm will plead guilty to a violation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, which prohibits officials of U.S. firms from bribing overseas officials to gain contracts for the U.S. companies.

Dollar's three-day decline slows

LONDON (AP) — The dollar's three-day decline slowed in early trading today, but dealers reported continuing unease over American economic prospects and falling U.S. interest rates. Gold prices edged higher.

European foreign exchange dealers said a widespread belief that the U.S. Federal Reserve will let interest rates slide in a bid to stimulate the American economy was eroding confidence in the dollar overseas.

However, the U.S. currency staged a modest comeback in Tokyo, closing at 229.65 yen. The dollar closed Wednesday at 228.90 yen, after hitting an 11-month low.

That rally sparked a muted recovery on European markets.

In London, it cost $1.6235 to buy a British pound, virtually unchanged from Wednesday's late rate of $1.62195.

Other morning rates compared to Wednesday's late levels:

6.6425 French francs, down from 6.6645.

2.34 German marks, down from 2.3505.

1.9517 Swiss francs, slightly down from 1.9597.

1,352.00 Italian lire, down from 1,354.75.

2.5910 Dutch guilders, slightly down from 2.5990.

1.2292 Canadian dollars, slightly up from 1.2287.

Gold, which traditionally rises as the dollar declines, opened in London at $458.50 an ounce, up $1.75 from Wednesday's close. The city's five major bullion brokers later "fixed" their recommended mid-morning gold price at $458 an ounce.

In Zurich, bullion opened at $459 an ounce, up $4.50 from Wednesday's close.

Gold closed earlier in Hong Kong at $455.73 an ounce, up $4.49 from Wednesday.

Silver gained 24 cents in London, opening at $11.34 an ounce.

TMJ syndrome often misdiagnosed because of diffuse symptoms

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — For three years, Barbara Houck believed she suffered from rheumatoid spondalitis, a form of arthritis.

Referred by a physician to an arthritis specialist, she drove to Oklahoma City every month for expensive arthritis treatments and endured medication that raised her white cell count drastically. As a result, she became vulnerable to other illnesses. Her pain remained chronic.

She thought she had to tolerate the medication's side effects, the expensive treatments, the monthly trips out of town.

She was wrong. So were her doctors. She did not have arthritis.

Mrs. Houck was suffering from the temporal mandibular joint (TMJ) syndrome, an affliction that often is misdiagnosed for two reasons: Symptoms may vary or be so diffuse that they are difficult to pinpoint, and many physicians, dentists and orthodontists are only now learning of its existence.

Mrs. Houck's experience was not unusual. Typically, she and the two physicians she consulted several years ago assumed her pain originated from a medical problem, rather than an orthodontic problem.

"I HAD BEEN having all kinds of awful headaches, with pain running on down through my neck and clear down my left arm. It even numbed my fingers," she recalls. "Sometimes the pain was so bad I felt as if I were having heart attacks. I couldn't stand any pressure on my left side, even having one of the kids lean up against me was too much." She became dizzy occasionally.

Her luck finally changed when her sister, a dental hygienist in Chickasha, suggested she might have TMJ. A visit to the dentist who employed her sister confirmed that notion "in less than ten minutes," she says.

The dentist, who since has moved his practice to Colorado, "made a splint (a sort of retainer) for me to wear at night, and I experienced almost instant relief."

Orthodontists say TMJ syndrome is very common among middle-aged women, although men and even children can have it.

Three factors usually trigger the syndrome.

1. Stress: Women, more often than men, clench their teeth and jaw muscles under stress, which may damage the joint over a period of time. Some damage is almost a certainty if the joint, located just in front of the ear, "clicks" when it moves.

2. SLEEP PATTERNS: Women are particularly likely to grind or clench their teeth during sleep, even though unaware of the habit. Mrs. Houck gnawed a hole in her splint only two weeks after assuring her dentist she never ground her teeth in her sleep.

3. Improper bite: If the teeth do not naturally meet for maximum contact between upper and lower teeth, the individual will shift the jaw to gain maximum contact. The strain on the jaw muscles and ligaments to maintain full contact over a long time can cause pain and eventually damage the capsule inside the joint. By the age of 40, bone loss may occur.

These three factors are almost always present when TMJ syndrome occurs, orthodontists say. On the other hand, "an individual who experiences little stress can tolerate a poor bite," Stillwater orthodontist Ed Polk says.

The bad news is that symptoms of TMJ syndrome may be vague and confusing because "many nerves travel very near this joint," Polk explains. Some patients first seek treatment from a physician for earraches or for neck or upper back muscle spasms.

THEY MAY EVEN visit a psychiatrist, says local orthodontist Tom Stewart, "thinking they are some kind of hypochondriac, due to the constant barrage of minor aches and pains they experience from the head to their shoulder blades."

The good news is that when TMJ syndrome is diagnosed quick relief from pain often is available. A splint, or night guard, which temporarily aligns the jaws properly, can be worn at night. Moving the teeth by wearing braces can permanently realign them for a proper bite. A third, more radical, procedure changes the entire surface of the teeth by recrowning them. (Mrs. Houck's dentist eventually recrowned her teeth.)

Saigon on fringe of communist orthodoxy

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam — Despite recent official press campaigns against "negative trends" in the economic and cultural sectors here, Ho Chi Minh City — once Saigon — remains a "different" city on the fringe of communist orthodoxy, both a challenge and a model for rival Hanoi.

A recent campaign by the Communist Party newspaper Nhan Dan urging tighter control over the economy and an end to the excesses of private enterprise, seems to have gone unnoticed here.

A popular ice cream parlor had to close down its terrace, but private cafes still thrive and some, by paying bribes, continue to play music, something usually only allowed in state-run cafes.

The "thieves' market" near the city center, still sells hi-fi equipment, Japanese watches and cameras. Several other markets selling kitchenware and books, which were at one time subject to restrictions, are at this time of the year open for business as usual, a sharp contrast with Hanoi's shortages.

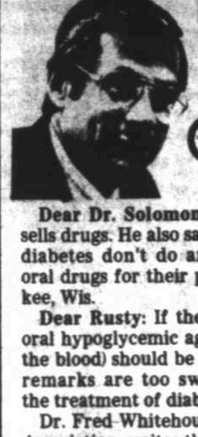

"Family parcels" sent from abroad still continue to supply the free market, although a top military official recently said they were aimed at "sabotaging" the country's economy.

"We only try to encourage people to have their relatives send money or medicines and other essentials rather than luxury goods," a city official said.

Ritual speeches and propaganda urge adherence to communist orthodoxy, but the implementation of official directives is more flexible and realistic here.

With its economic potential, the city has to some extent the status of the "goose that lays the golden eggs" and is treated accordingly. Even today, this dilemma is said to be a bone of contention between "hardliners" and "moderates" within the regime.

The local daily newspaper, Giai Phong, recently complained in several articles about the professional singers and music halls in the city. But for Christmas, all the big open-air halls were open.

Oral agents still used to treat diabetes

Dear Dr. Solomon: I met some guy at a party who told me he sells drugs. He also said that drugs taken orally for the treatment of diabetes don't do any good. Don't doctors still prescribe these oral drugs for their patients who have diabetes? — Rusty, Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear Rusty: If the person with whom you spoke had said that oral hypoglycemic agents (drugs that lower the level of glucose in the blood) should be used with care, I would tend to agree. But his remarks are too sweeping; oral agents are still being used in the treatment of diabetes.

Dr. Fred Whitehouse, a past president of the American Diabetes Association, writes that he uses oral hypoglycemics in patients over 50 years of age who are otherwise healthy. The first step is to try to control the diabetes by modifying the patient's diet. However, if that doesn't work, an oral agent may be prescribed. The effectiveness of these drugs will to a large extent depend on the patient's ability to control his or her intake of calories.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What in heaven's name is tic douloureux? A friend of mine went to a doctor because she was having pain and this is what he told he she had. What is it actually? — Betty, Albuquerque, N.M.

Dear Betty: Patients with tic douloureux suffer from severe facial pain that can be brought on by the simplest act, such as talking or chewing. Even a change in temperature can trigger an attack. The condition generally occurs in people over 50 years of age, and more often in women than in men.

As you can well imagine, the pain has an effect on patients' lives since they become conditioned to avoiding movements that can bring on an attack. Weight loss, for example, is a common by-product, as is difficulty in holding a job.

Dr. Abbott J. Krieger, of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey in Newark, says there is no identifiable cause of tic douloureux. The diagnosis is made when neurologic examination of the patient is found to be normal.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am 19 years old and still am troubled with acne. It had almost cleared up but then I started on the pill and the acne became worse. Is this my imagination, a coincidence, or is there a connection between the pill and acne? — Jan, Marion, Ill.

Dear Jan: It is possible for acne to develop or to become worse as a result of drug use. Oral contraceptives and corticosteriods are among the drugs that might cause such a reaction.

For Bessie, Hanover, N.H.: The association between cigarette smoking and lung cancer is much stronger than that between diet and cancer. There is clear evidence that cigarette smoking is the cause of about one-fourth of all the fatal cancers in the United States. The evidence linking diet to the development of cancer should not be ignored but is not conclusive.

Reagan vetoes legislation to aid Indian colleges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation that would have authorized federal aid for community colleges run by Indian tribes in seven western states has been vetoed by President Reagan.

The president said the administration was committed to providing educational opportunities for Indians but that he opposed a provision that would legally bind the government to provide tribal community college education.

"College-level Indian education has never been characterized in law or treaty as a trust responsibility of the federal government," Reagan said.

The veto does not kill the program since it already is authorized through Sept. 30.

McDaniel committed to make government better

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Myra McDaniel is 50, mother of two grown children and grandmother to a 14-month-old girl.

Those are probably the only typical aspects about Ms. McDaniel.

On Monday, she made Texas history. Gov.-elect Mark White announced she would become his legal counsel on Jan. 18. Selection of Ms. McDaniel means she will hold the highest rank in the Texas governor's office of any black in recent history, according to White's office.

Making history was not what Ms. McDaniel intended to do by accepting the post. And she even doubts that she has, saying that a careful survey of state agencies probably would show others in similar high positions.

What she hoped to do by taking the position was to contribute her share to make state government better, she says in an interview during her last two weeks in Midland. Although an Austin resident, she has been working as general counsel for the William B Wilson Companies here for a year, commuting from the state capital.

Atypical is probably the best word to describe Ms. McDaniel as she relates her educational and childhood background, tying in her husband and children with her career. There are also other words to describe her character, such as indefatigable, effervescent, hard-working, witty and, above all, charming. Adding to this picture is a woman who looks no older than 35 and who possesses that rare quality to make strangers feel comfortable immediately.

Ms. McDaniel grew up in Philadelphia in a house with two other siblings and a mother who believed girls should get married after high school and stay home to raise children.

"MY MOTHER is very shy and she had three aggressive, outgoing kids," Ms. McDaniel says with a laugh. Whatever Ms. McDaniel has done since high school has always surprised her mother. The position in Mark White's administration was no exception.

"She said, 'You haven't been with this job (Wilson Companies) very long. Will it hurt your career?" And when Ms. McDaniel accepted the job in Midland which meant a weekly commute, "she (her mother) gulped four or five times."

As a child, however, Ms. McDaniel followed in her mother's and aunt's footsteps by attending the Philadelphia High School for Girls, a public school that demanded a high I.Q. and passage of several tests before admittance. It was in those years Ms. McDaniel learned there wasn't anything a woman couldn't do.

In a strong academic atmosphere charged with the electricity of competitiveness, the young women did everything imaginable.

"There was no excuse for not doing anything there. We weren't told that girls weren't supposed to be able to do math or science. We held all the school offices and ran the newspaper. Better than 90 percent of the students there go on to college. Our teachers didn't take 'no' for an answer. They worked our rears off," recalls Ms. McDaniel.

When the feminist movement started with the "equal pay for equal work" slogan, it was old hat to Ms. McDaniel.

However, college was another matter. "Mother felt college probably was an error." But her mother put the disturbing issue to rest by thinking her daughter would "find a nice guy and get married. She believes the wife's place is in the home raising kids, unless you have to work to help support the family. Then she doesn't think that you're out taking a man's job away from him."

Despite her beliefs, Ms. McDaniel's mother is proud of her daughter's successes, "but with mixed emotions."

AFTER HIGH SCHOOL, Ms. McDaniel earned a bachelor of arts degree in English from the University of Pennsylvania and worked for the Veterans' Administration and as a management analyst for the U.S. government's Aviation Supply Office. She then held administrative positions at Baldwin Wallace College in Berea, Ohio, and at Indiana University.

Along the way, she did marry and it was to an engineer named Reuben McDaniel. She had two children, a daughter first and then a son. And her husband went back to school for a doctorate. It was during his teaching job in Florida in 1972 that Ms. McDaniel finally took a year off from work.

Both her university jobs "were neat," she says, but she realized those jobs encompassed only as much as that person wanted to give her. The move to Florida came at a "point where I could go back to school or work."

She pondered returning to management analysis, but that meant going back to school to learn the newest techniques. In fact, every idea she came up with meant going back to school. After several months, her children were tired of her being around the house all day. "They told me to go out and play with my friends," she says with an infectious laugh.

Law school stuck in her mind and she took the entrance exam, thinking if she didn't pass there were other fields to choose from. She passed. And her family moved to Austin where her husband is a management professor at The University of Texas.

"I thought I'd try one semester of law school and see if I liked it," she recalls. She did and graduated in 1975.

Her age has helped her in her success as a lawyer, she believes. "I had a lot of experience before I got there. I had managed people and reorganized whole divisions. I have more self-confidence. And I can be more objective about my mistakes."

Instead of letting mistakes freeze her, Ms. McDaniel uses them as learning tools. Younger people just out of law school, she says, have a tendency to be afraid to progress if they make a mistake.

And there are other advantages to being older, she says as she laughingly points out each one: "You don't have your life to work out; you already know who you are; and you've got your love life worked out."

Working for state government "isn't a job for career-oriented attorneys. You can get some good trial experience but the pay isn't that good."
—Myra McDaniel

BECOMING A FEW shades more serious, she adds, "You realize it takes a lot of time to succeed and that you'll have to commit yourself. This isn't an 8 to 5 job. People who get a lot more work done put a lot more time into it."

Mark White apparently noticed how she put her philosophy into practice. After law school, Ms. McDaniel started out in the taxation division of the attorney general's office, first working under John Hill. She worked her way up to division chief in 1979, serving under White. She then served as assistant general counsel for the Railroad Commission from May through December 1981 before accepting the job in Midland.

In the attorney general's taxation division, she handled numerous cases and is known for winning one against U.S. Steel that saved local governments

IRS volunteers to give tax assistance

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

For those people who suffer headaches from cheap New Year's champagne and the specter of April income tax preparation, the Internal Revenue Service has some good news along with some bad.

The bad news: Income tax packages should be arriving in the mail within about two weeks.

The good news: IRS employees and volunteers will be offering tax-preparation assistance, both by telephone and in person.

Glenn Cagle, Dallas IRS District director, said about 6 million Texas taxpayers should be finding income tax forms in their mailboxes soon.

Depending on which form they filed in 1982, taxpayers will receive a package with either Form 1040, or Form 1040A along with a new short form — the 1040EZ.

Designed for single people with no dependents and a taxable income less than $50,000, the single-page 1040EZ contains only 11 lines. Line six — the $1,000 personal exemption — comes already complete, making the 1040EZ a ten-question "pop quiz" for taxpayers eligible to use the form.

As in the past, Form 1040 is suited for those people who itemize deductions or claim tax credits on items like child care, energy, political contributions and investments.

Taxpayers who require a different form because their tax status changed since last year, or those who need additional forms, may use an order blank contained in the tax package to procure the proper form. Some post offices, banks and libraries also carry IRS forms and schedules.

Robert Ray, Midland's IRS director's representative, said the Midland office has in stock most of the forms required by individuals.

He said some of the more than 90 free IRS publications — including the popular "You and Your Income Tax" — are either on hand or will be arriving shortly.

Although each tax package contains instructions and tables for preparing the enclosed form, the booklets provide information on credits, deductions, exemptions, income and other specific tax questions.

Ray suggested that, for convenience sake, taxpayers needing forms or publications use the order blank, or call 1-800-424-1040, the IRS toll-free tax assistance number.

Because Midland's IRS office discontinued walk-in tax assistance this year, Ray also suggested that confused taxpayers call the "800" number with their questions.

Although walk-in help is no longer available, Ray said the IRS is developing alternate programs to aid people baffled by tax tables and instructions.

Some time in February, IRS-trained volunteers will begin offering help at three Volunteer Income Tax Assistance sites — two in Midland and one in Big Spring. Ray said VITA volunteers will be available from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. A starting date for the program has yet to be determined.

VITA workers will be located in Midland at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, 1708 N. Fort Worth St., at Senior Services of Midland, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave., and at Senior Citizens' Center, Industrial Park Building 487, in Big Spring.

Ray said plans recently were announced for a series of "community outreach" sessions tentatively scheduled for Midland Center. He said IRS employees and volunteers likely will provide tax help on three successive Saturdays.

"It's going to be a self-help deal, but we'll help them," said Ray. "We'll get the return prepared, that's the bottom line."

Finally, Ray noted that two informational films — one on short forms 1040A and 1040EZ and the other on Form 1040 and Schedules A&B — will be available in February for schools and civic groups interested in offering further taxpayer assistance.

IRS officials remind taxpayers that by using the pre-addressed envelope and the peel-off address label provided in the tax package, they can help speed processing of their return, reduce the chance of error and perhaps assure prompt delivery of a refund. If the label information is incorrect, corrections should be made directly on the label.

Suits stemming from plane crash to be heard locally

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Randy Sellars $6.5 million lawsuit against the pilot of a twin-engine aircraft which crashed Sept. 24 into the northside apartment complex where Sellars lived and against the state of Louisiana and the Louisiana Department of Corrections has been transferred from Midland's 238th State District court to federal court here at the motion of the defendants.

Louisiana claims that Texas state courts have no jurisdiction over it and that the "sovereign immunity" of Louisiana and the Louisiana Department of Corrections has not been waived.

"The state courts of Texas have no jurisdiction over...Louisiana and the Louisiana Department of Corrections" and "any cause of action against said defendants must be instituted in the state courts of Louisiana," the defendant's petition for removal to the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system has claimed.

Further, the Louisiana defendants maintain that the federal courts, likewise, "lack the jurisdiction" over the case, since Sheets was "in the performance of a governmental function...and is immune" from the suit. Such immunity is covered by Louisiana statutes and is guaranteed by the 11th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, the Louisiana defendants hold.

The 11th Amendment says that "The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state."

Attorney for the Louisiana defendants, Raybourne Thompson Jr. of the Vinson & Elkins law firm of Houston, is asking Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton to dismiss the suit.

Sellars, 20, was severely burned after the Sheets-piloted Louisiana aircraft, which was carrying two prisoners and an unauthorized guest passenger, crashed into the Warwick apartments after takeoff from Midland Air Park. Sheets, 56,

Prevalence of peptic ulcers high in Midland, doctor says

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While an insurance company study has reported a nationwide decline in the mortality rate from peptic ulcers, one Midland doctor said the prevalence of ulcers in Midland has not declined.

Metropolitan Life Foundation reported in December 1982 that "thanks to new drug therapy, mortality from peptic ulcers has declined about two-thirds in the U.S. since the early 1960s."

Although Dr. W.R. Hewell agrees with the insurance company report, he said there's still "a great number of (people with) peptic ulcers in this area."

An ulcer is any open sore with an inflamed base, resulting from the destruction of skin or mucous membrane with or without infection or pain.

Hewell explained that the peptic ulcer occurs between the stomach and the small bowel, while the gastic ulcer affects the the inner wall, or lining of the stomach.

The peptic ulcer, associated with stress, can affect all people; but the gastric ulcer, seen more in older persons, has been linked with stomach cancer.

According to Hewell, Class A personalities, or those people who are anxious, compulsive, ambitious and driven individuals, are more likely to develop a peptic ulcer. However, people who seem calm on the surface may also be a candidate for this type of an ulcer.

"We have more of these (Class A) people in Midland, perhaps because of the oil industry," he said, adding that he treats many Midlanders for peptic ulcers.

"We (doctors) don't know what actually causes the ulcer," Hewell said, "but we do know that when stress is relieved and aspirin, cigarettes, coffee and alcohol are stopped these people tend to get better."

Hewell explained when the mucous membrane in the stomach breaks down, the stomach cannot handle the hydrochloric acid, which people produce while they chew and swallow food. When the lining of the stomach loses its ability to resist this strong acid, or when so much acid is formed the stomach can't cope with it, the result may be an ulcer.

Signs of an ulcer can begin as a pain or burning sensation under the breastbone, which is often made worse by alcohol and relieved by food.

"Or some people will have no pain," Hewell said. "Some people will not have any symptoms, but will look down one day to discover black, tarry stools and realize they are bleeding."

Hewell said when the ulcer crater erodes into blood vessels, which causes bleeding, a person is more than likely in severe trouble and could possibly die if he is not treated.

Preventive measures include cutting back on smoking, drinking and an overall behavior modification.

"People with streess-related jobs should find some kind of exercise program to vent frustrations. Or if reading a novel or stamp collecting is relaxing, this would be good," Hewell said. "It depends on the person."

Hewell suggested checking with a physician when persistant pain, lasting for two weeks, is relieved by eating food or with antacids, and "obviously, if they're throwing up blood they should see a doctor immediately. But if it's just a mild case of indigestion from drinking or eating spicy food, you don't need to run to the doctor."

According to the National Health Survey of 1979, it is estimated that about 3.8 million persons in the nation suffer from peptic ulcers — an average of 18 persons per 1,000 population. Metropolitan statisticians said there were "5,545 deaths from peptic ulcers in 1978, compared to 12,228 deaths in 1962.

Hewell and Metropolitan attribute the mortality decline to new medications, especially cimetidine, packaged under the name Tagamet, an antihistamine which blocks hydrochloric acid output.

Metropolitan reported that before the introduction of cemetidine in August 1977, about one in four patients hospitalized for peptic ulcers had undergone surgery.

Metropolitan also stated that the prevalence of peptic ulcers among men is now lower than among women, a reversal of the trend in previous years.

Theories on this have ranged from women undertaking the stresses involved in juggling a career and family to more women smoking and drinking. However, not only hard-driven business people who eat spicy food and drink large amounts of coffee and alcohol develop ulcers. They are found in people in all walks of life.

McDaniel committed to making government better

Before explaining why she likes White, Ms. McDaniel says, "People have things that strike you as very interesting." White's redeeming act is that he computerized litigation. "It was fantastic," she says enthusiastically. "It was something that was long overdue. As a manager, I found it very easy to work with him. He backed me all the way in my decisions."

During the gubernatorial campaign, White was charged with having a high turnover of lawyers in the attorney general's office. That, explains Ms. McDaniel, is true of any attorney general. Working for the state government isn't a career choice for any attorney, nor is it profitable.

"IT'S NOT A JOB for career-oriented attorneys. You can get some good trial experience but the pay isn't that good. Some cases you try that you'll never get to try anywhere else," she says, recalling with bright eyes the tax cases that were appealed to the Supreme Court.

"In the private sector, if you sue it's usually settled of court," she says. Not so when someone sues the state. "Large corporations may sue that they're being taxed unfairly. They say, 'You're taxing for oranges but we're apples.'"

Summarizing experience in the AG's office, she adds, "If you can afford it, it's wonderful to work there a long time. People coming out of law school will go there to get experience in a specialty, like anti-trust or tax law." And then they're snapped up by law firms or other businesses.

The new job with White will mean Ms. McDaniel will have some input in policy decisions, interpreting present statutes and anything written or considered. "The first basic question is if it is constitutional, can you do it, what effect will it have and how to get it set up. Words get to be exceedingly important."

Jokingingly, she explains that one wording may mean a bill "includes Hector and his pup and we don't want to include them."

Her job may encompass the areas of coordinating litigation, checking tax use, making sure contracts are binding, advising on unemployment practices and advising on open records and open meetings.

When first approached by White in early December about the job, Ms. McDaniel says that although she knew it was an honor, "I considered it for awhile before I accepted it."

SHE POINTS OUT, however, the appointment didn't come as a result of her campaigning for White or contributing heavily to his election. "I voted for him," she says, "and I bought one ticket to a dinner for him." And that was the extent of her support.

Sitting in Midland the day after the election, Ms. McDaniel couldn't find many people to share her elated feelings about White's win. In a city known as a Republican oasis, she says of that day, "It was very grim around here the day after the election." She called up a fellow Democrat and the two celebrated at their own victory luncheon.

The job offer from White was a surprise for Ms. McDaniel, but her family "thought it was neat."

She finally accepted on the philosophy that "I have a commitment toward making government better. You do have some responsibilities as a citizen to do that."

Ms. McDaniel is entering the job without second-guessing how long she will be in it. "I have no idea if I'll stay the four years. You never know what will happen. In the middle of it the Senate may do away with me," she jokes.

A lawyer for only seven years, the rapid rise to the state post doesn't mean she's forgotten the family. She took a vacation at Christmas to watch her son play basketball at the University of North Carolina-Charlotte where he is majoring in math and economics and making the Chancellor's list. Her daughter is married, has one child and is attending UT to major in English.

Ms. McDaniel has never traveled too far away from the realities of home, even during these months of commuting. She occasionally plays Grandma. "I have my own box of Pampers and my own toy box," she laughs.

As varied as the first half century of her life has been, Ms. McDaniel isn't going to slow down any for the second half.

"I'm planning to live to be 120," she chuckles. "I have a lot to do."

was injured, as were the two prisoners. The "guest" passenger, Ken Hornsby, 41, of Baton Rouge, La., died of injuries suffered in the crash and subsequent explosion of the airplane.

While the Sellars suit is pending in federal court, another suit against Sheets, Louisiana and its Department of Corrections is pending in Midland's 238th State District Court.

Edwin Mark Stanford, a Midland driller who was living in the Warwick, claims the crash and fire destroyed his 1978 crew-cab pickup, household furnishings, appliances and other personal property. Stanford, who is represented by Midland attorney Rusty Wall, is seeking $33,000 in damages.

Representing Sellars in his suit are Midland attorneys Hal Brockett and J. Michael Cunningham and Lubbock attorney John F. "Buddy" Maner.

Both the Sellars and Stanford petitions allege gross negligence on part of the pilot, and the Sellars petition claims Sheets was "an incompetent pilot" who was not qualified to fly the "particular" plane, a Beechcraft Baron 58P, he was piloting on the afternoon of the crash.

The petitions alleged these acts of negligence against Sheets:

—Failed to use all of the runway available to him for takeoff.

—Failed to ascertain the atmospheric conditions at time of takeoff.

—Failed to maintain the airplane in a normal flight pattern after takeoff.

—Failed to use sufficient amount of runway for takeoff in view of apparent obstructions in his immediate flight path.

—Took off with the wind.

The two-story Warwick Apartment complex is just west of Midland Air Park.

Former President Carter aide to serve on White's staff

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sarah Weddington, a former aide to President Jimmy Carter, has been selected by Gov.-elect Mark White to direct the Office of State-Federal Relations in Washington.

Ms. Weddington, 37, served three terms in the Texas House as a representative from Austin. She resigned her seat in 1977 to become general counsel of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

She now lives in New York and commutes to Washington to serve as legal consultant to an investment banking firm.

In 1978, she joined President Jimmy Carter's staff as a special assistant on women's issues. One year later she was promoted to a post responsible for political liaison.

"I think the office can be of tremendous service to all state officials, the Legislature, state agencies and our Texas delegation," Ms. Weddington said of her new job, which is subject to confirmation by the Texas Senate.

White said Wednesday Ms. Weddington also would coordinate White's Feb. 5 trip to Washington to address the Democratic National Committee.

Ms. Weddington, an Abilene native, has taught at the University of New Mexico School of Law, Wheaton College in Norton, Mass., and Texas Women's University in Denton.

White on Wednesday also said Jim Nelson, a Houston native, would be deputy executive assistant in the new administration, which starts on Jan. 18. Nelson, 36, has been an assistant attorney general under White since 1979.

Accounting firm pamphlet explains regulations

To help hospital chief executive officers, physicians and trustees evaluate how the new Health Care Financing Administration proposed regulations will affect them, Price Waterhouse, an accounting firm, is offering an analysis of the rules.

The HCFA recently proposed regulations that would significantly limit Medicare payments for the services of hospital-based physicians.

According to Steve Huggins, a partner in the Midland office of Price Waterhouse, these regulations, which implement provisions of the 1982 tax act, "could reduce payments to hospitals and physicians by about $2 billion over the next three years."

In addition to describing HCFA proposals, the Price Waterhouse booklet provides practical examples illustrating the dollar effect of the reimbursement reductions.

The regulations establish compensation limits that would be used to determine the amount of Medicare reimbursement hospitals receive for physician services — these "reasonable compensation equivalents" are based on medical specialty and geographical area served. In addition, the HCFA proposal reduces by as much as 60 percent reimbursement for certain services provided by hospital doctors who bill patients directly, as well as limiting the types of services that can be billed on a fee basis.

"These changes are evidence of a shift from fee-based to cost-based reimbursement," Huggins said, adding that radiologists, pathologists, anesthesiologists and doctors treating patients in hospital outpatient clinics would be most affected by these measures, which are intended to eliminate what Medicare perceives as inequities between fees of hospital and private practice physicians.

Huggins noted that the regulations could jeopardize relationships between hospital management and staff.

"As hospital reimbursements decline, management may want to renegotiate physician contracts and reduce salaries," he said. "Similarly, as direct billing physician fees are cut back, doctors may expect hospital subsidies to make up for this loss of income."

Huggins stressed the importance of open communication and joint planning to prevent adversarial relationships between hospital management and doctors.

"Physicians and management should work together to analyze their alternatives as soon as possible," he said. "Some strategies that might be explored are leasing of hospital facilities and alternative billing arrangements."

Public reacts favorably to party switch, aides say

By WILLIAM GARLAND

WASHINGTON — When the last staff member on Wednesday turned out the lights in the congressional office of former Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, the office switched under the law to a sort of neutral zone.

No longer would the receptionist answer the phone with "Congressman Gramm's office." The answer now would be "6th District of Texas."

But even though the office itself will be under the direction of the clerk of the House rather than the congressman, the 10 Washinton staff members probably will not change between now and the special election within 20 to 90 days to fill the open congressional seat.

The staff will remain on the federal payroll under the supervision of the House clerk until that special election.

If there was any resentment that their boss had just resigned, no one on Gramm's staff showed it.

A few hours after Gramm had announced in Bryan that he would quit his post and run in a special election as a Republican, an aide in the Washington office said the staff was "supportive."

"I'm pretty impressed with the decision," said Gramm aide Steve Camp. "Time and time again, he (Gramm) has put principles ahead of other loyalties."

Camp said it would not bother him personally to be working for a Republican rather than a Democrat, if Gramm wins the special election.

He said he was "more interested in principles" than a party tag.

Gramm's office received calls all day Wednesday. One receptionist said all of the calls but one were positive, and that they came from all corners of the country, from points as distant as the states of Washington, Missouri and Massachusetts.

Many of the callers offered the opinion that more congressmen in Washington should be like Gramm, according to the receptionist who sat under pictures of Gramm with foreign leaders, as well as one of Gramm with Reagan at the White House.

Researchers studying sleep disorders

By Philip J. Hilts
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Sleep researchers, in the midst of a decade of rapidly advancing knowledge, are coming to some surprising conclusions about sleep — including the discoveries that insomniacs apparently do not suffer from lack of sleep and that one treatment for insomnia may be an unknown night-time killer.

With the aid of newly available recording instruments to track sleep and a few years of basic research with them, a wave of sudden application of the new knowledge has started with the creation of "sleep centers" around the country. Their number has jumped from a handful a few years ago to more than a hundred.

The prevalence of sleep disorders has not changed. One-third of the population complains of suffering from sleep problems. A third of the complainants say it is the most serious problem in their lives. More than 25 million prescriptions for sleeping pills are written every year, more than 30 million non-prescription sleeping aids are sold, and by one estimate a billion dollars is spent on the complaint annually in this country.

Three to 4 percent of the population takes sleeping pills on a regular basis — something researchers now believe may be unwarranted, since the pills may not help in some kinds of insomnia and may be only marginally helpful in others.

So while old remedies and old ideas about sleep remain constants among the public and some doctors, sleep researchers have begun to redefine the field.

FOR STARTERS, insomnia is apparently not a lack-of-sleep disorder. Several studies have shown that when insomniacs are taken as a group, and normal sleepers are taken as a group, insomniacs sleep almost as much as normals. The difference is 20 to 30 minutes a night, and many normal sleepers get less sleep than insomniacs. The sleep tracings on electroencephalograms (EEGs) and other instruments that measure the stages of normal and dream sleep show no consistent difference between insomniacs and normals.

William Dement of Stanford, a pioneer in sleep research, said that insomnia is now seen not as lack of sleep. "Insomnia is the perception of disturbed sleep ... even though the actual sleep disturbance we see (when the patient is monitored) is not very impressive."

Wallace Mendelson, chief of sleep research at the National Institute of Mental Health, said, "We get patients who come into our sleep lab, go to sleep for eight hours, are sound asleep in the morning so we have to go in and wake them up. Then they say, 'See, doc, I just can't get any sleep.' "

Still, he says that insomniacs do really suffer. It may be, as Mendelson surmises, that we have some way of detecting the quality of sleep in our bodies, some sense of the experience of sleep that is separate from the things traced by EEGs. A severe deficiency in our sense of the quality of sleep can bring the effects of insomnia — stress, anxiety and an excessive, or even dangerous, sleepiness the next day.

INSOMNIA, RESEARCHERS KNOW, is not one but a list of different disorders that affect sleep. A few have become almost completely curable in the past few years and several more can be treated with some success. Altogether, Dement said, about half the complaints can now be handled by doctors at sleep centers, a great advance over a few years ago.

One of the newly recognized disorders is called sleep apnea. It probably afflicts 2 million to 5 million in this country, or 5 to 10 percent of all those complaining of sleep trouble.

Apnea is the halt of breathing. A number of times every night, persons with this disorder stop breathing for as short as a few seconds or as long as two minutes. The episodes of sudden cessation of breathing may occur from a few times a night to as many as 600 times in a night — creating a serious oxygen deficit for the body and putting great strain on the heart and on blood circulation.

The sufferer is unaware that he has apnea, only that he wakes up a number of times during the night, and is unbearably sleepy the next day. Also unaware is his doctor, who may prescribe sleeping pills for his patient's "insomnia."

This, as it happens, could be dangerous. Sleeping pills slow the respiratory system, an added problem in a body that is already stopping its breathing.

FIVE OF THE NATION'S top sleep researchers said in interviews that they believe apnea, combined with a sleeping pill or some other respiratory depressant such as alcohol, could be an unrecognized killer.

Two of the researchers have submitted proposals to funding agencies for studies of the phenomenon. Since several million people may have apnea and a wide variety of drugs are respiratory depressants, Dement said, "one should regard this as a serious question. ... It is a possibility that this is killing. ... "

Richard Allen of Johns Hopkins University and the Baltimore City Hospital sleep center said apnea does not cause death directly, but is a trigger. "It creates such a drain on the heart, the whole cardiovascular system, that it collapses. We now assume that it is one of the major causes of sudden adult death at night," Allen said.

There are thousands who die each year from unexplained heart failure. Daniel Kripke of the University of California at San Diego estimates that the number of people killed by apnea combined with sleeping pills "is a couple thousand a year or more, though I can't prove it."

He points out that there is circumstantial evidence for the belief that apnea and sleeping pills make a fatal combination. For example, there is one group in the country that has a very high number of apneas (as many as 40 percent of the population over 65) as well as a high level of sleeping pill usage (30 percent of those in nursing homes are on sleeping pills). This group also has a high number of unexplained deaths during the night.

WHAT RESEARCHERS do know is that in several experiments, doctors have taken patients who experience only a few apneas a night, given them a sleeping pill, and seen a sudden, alarming increase in the apneas.

The first test of danger came when Mendelson had a series of patients come into his sleep laboratory at the National Institute of Mental Health. One of them, a 38-year-old Washington-area professional man, was diagnosed as having a marginal case of sleep apnea.

Asked to participate in an experiment, he went to the sleep clinic to stay overnight for several nights. First, he was given a placebo (dummy pill). Then on successive nights was given one of the country's leading sleeping pills.

On the placebo, the man stopped breathing from a few times to 18 times in a night.

On the sleeping pill, the first night he stopped breathing 22 times, and the second night he stopped breathing 100 times — more than a half hour without air.

The experiment was ended after that dangerous second night, Mendelson said. "At that point we obviously got scared and took him off the drug. ... We had created a real case of sleep apnea artificially.

"No physician should give tranquilizers or sleeping pills without considering apnea."

Perhaps just as importantly, recent sleep research is showing that apnea can be cured.

THERE ARE TWO CAUSES of the illness. One involves the windpipe collapsing or becoming restricted, and the other arises when the brain fails to continue sending "breathe" signals to the diaphragm. The obstructive apnea can be cured with surgery on the windpipe, and the other form can be treated successfully with a drug that stimulates respiration during the night.

In a survey of 3,100 people who went to sleep disorder centers with complaints of lack of sleep or excessive daytime sleepiness, the largest group, 25 percent, were found to be suffering from sleep apnea.

Thirteen percent suffered from narcolepsy, a neurological disorder in which people can suddenly and unexpectedly fall asleep during the day. The sleep comes so suddenly sometimes that the victims simply collapse like a boxer knocked to the canvas.

Eleven percent suffer from psychiatric disorders, such as severe depression, and their lack of sleep is simply a secondary symptom of the mental illness.

Six percent of the patients were found to have a sleep problem called myclonus, one of the "insomnias" that can be successfully treated. The symptom is a strong, involuntary kicking during the night. The kicking is so pronounced that it wakens the sleeper and produces the same sense of not sleeping well and next-day sleepiness as does apnea. An anti-convulsant drug can relieve the condition.

Another recently identified insomnia is called "delayed sleep phase syndrome," in which the patient cannot fall asleep until late into the night, although he will sleep a full eight hours once in bed. It affects some 10 percent of insomniacs and can be treated successfully by a technique that pushes the sleeper's cycle later and later until it has come all the way around the clock to normal sleeping hours.

WHILE CONSIDERABLE new knowledge has been gained in sleep research, said Ismet Karacan, director of the sleep center at Baylor Medical College, "I really hate to say this against my colleagues, but doctors don't know about apnea and these other things. Sometimes the patients even know more than they do."

"I am afraid it will be some time," he said, before word gets around.

Diet may be cause of, protection from some diseases

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Your mother was right. Eat your vegetables. They're good for you.

For decades, scientists and health professionals have suspected that one's diet somehow might affect his predisposition to cancer. Such studies combined to give impetus for the National Academy of Sciences' report in June recommending that Americans change their diets to include less fatty meat, butter and whole milk, and more fruits, vegetables and whole grains, in order to reduce their risk of developing cancer.

Many of the scientists behind the studies recently gathered here for the second annual Bristol-Myers Symposium on Nutrition Research with evidence to suggest several conclusions concerning diet and cancer:

* Studies of cancer and other degenerative diseases do not belong exclusively in the rarefied atmosphere of medical laboratories, but in the labs of nutritionists, biochemists, botanists and perhaps even on the couches of psychologists.

* Good nutrition can no longer be defined as the absence of deficiency diseases (scurvy, rickets, anemia and the like). Optimum health requires maintaining a proper balance of nutrients consistently.

* While none of the scientists is ready to proclaim a dietary cure for cancer, many of their reports reiterated that a diet heavy in fruits and vegetables — and therefore high in vitamins A, B-complex, C and fiber — is favorably linked with lower risk of degenerative diseases.

DR. DENIW BURKITT, the surgeon who made fiber famous after his work in Africa, lays the blame for many diseases, including cancer, at the doorstep of Western civilization. "You never get appendicitis until after you learn English," he said laconically in his keynote address to several hundred doctors, nutritionists and biochemists.

Hiatal hernia, heart disease, hypertension and cancers of the colon, breast, endometrium and prostate occur frequently in Western culture, he says, because its diet is heavy on fat and white flour, high in sugar and low in complex carbohydrates. Fiber, he says, is the "grave casualty" in the American diet; as a result, we spend a fortune on laxatives and face a host of health problems.

Dr. Michael Sporn, chief of the Chemoprevention Laboratory at the National Cancer Institute, took the traditional medical approach to vitamin A: megadoses of the vitamin (or a slightly altered form of the vitamin) have been shown to prevent cancer in animals. In the future, he says, megadoses may prove useful in preventing human disease — not only a variety of cancers, but rheumatoid arthritis, cardiovascular disease and psoriasis as well.

While Sporn is "very worried that there would be any promiscuous use" of these chemicals until safety tests are performed (many forms of vitamin are toxic in large doses), he says the potential of megadose treatment "should be given serious consideration."

BUT VITAMIN MEGADOSES are on the far end of the nutrition spectrum, and presently practical only in a medical sense. Dr. Paul Newberne's research on B vitamins brings nutrition back to the dinner table, hinting that even minor deficiencies may influence someone's predisposition to cancer.

Dr. Adrianne Rogers, Newberne's co-researcher at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, agreed. "With some deficiency you may not get the deficiency disease" but may get resulting damage to metabolism or the immune system, she said, and that could mean cancer. For instance, she said, a liver might be predisposed to cancer long before liver damage, due directly to vitamin deficiency, develops.

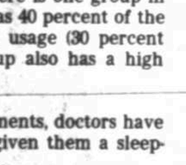

Many of the symposium reports were corroborated by Dr. Elizabeth Bright-See, a researcher at the Toronto Branch for Human Cancer Prevention, in her studies of certain population groups. While trying to discover if vitamin C and E consumption affected a woman's chance for cervical cancer, Bright-See found that diets high in foods containing vitamin C do indeed correlate with low risk of cervical cancer. However, she said, these diets are also high in forms of vitamin A, certain B vitamins and fiber.

IN ADDITION, SHE SAID, the diets were rich in phenols, substances prevalent in plants and perhaps relevant to lowered cancer risk. Phenols have traditionally been considered non-nutritive, the way fiber used to be, and very little is known about their relation to health. This situation, she says, further demonstrates the need for cross disciplines in cancer research, and in this case to include even plant scientists.

Then, she said, we may need the help of psychologists to teach us to change our eating habits.

AT WIT'S END

Music lessons

By ERMA BOMBECK

I visited my old home town a few weeks ago and ran into my children's piano teacher, having lunch in the same dining room.

I must say I was surprised. She looked wonderful. The nervous twitches around her mouth were gone. The eyes that used to spin counter-clockerwise in her head were steady now and held my gaze. And I realized she was smiling. I had never seen her smile before . . . even at recitals.

"Loretta," I said, "how long has it been?"

"Eleven years, two months, one week and three days," she said, taking a deep breath.

"And are you still placing those pudgy, little, sticky fingers on the keys? Goodness gracious, do you have any idea how many little people you had marching to the tune of your metronome?

"You still blame me, don't you?" she said.

"Don't be ridiculous," I said. "Do you honestly think I still go to pieces every time I hear, 'There's a Rose in the Bottom of My Teacup?' When the doctor explained to me it was just a child's way of working out parental hostility, I understood it."

"Mrs. Barnhardt blames me," she said.

"That was different," I said. "You had absolutely no right to assign 'Lady of Spain' to a beginning accordion student for a recital. I hear she still isn't right."

As I ate lunch, I occasionally cast a glance at Loretta, and a wave of affection came over me. What had she done that was so wrong? She took three children off my hands for an hour every week and introduced them to the "March of the Little Toy Soldiers" (to be played lively), "The Parade of the Turtles" (to be played softly) and "The Yodeler and His Echo" (to be played in a basement in Kansas City).

She awakened a talent — if not for making music, then for appreciating it.

She taught them what instruments can do and how you can play softly for effect or louder when you place your foot on the pedal.

She taught them if you practiced for three lousy hours on the same song and hit the same stupid note wrong every time you could turn your mother into a sniveling bowl of cookie batter.

Then I thought, life is so short, why not let bygones be bygones? As I left, I dropped by her table to tell her so, when she grabbed my hand and said, "I forgive you for your three little no-talent children."

Miyake: Japan's No. 1 fashion designer

By NINA HYDE
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

When nearly 2,000 guests arrived on the deck hanger of the battleship Intrepid for the Issey Miyake show recently, they found 40 members of the New York Choral Society seated on stage and wearing the Japanese designer's easy-fit, washable cotton clothes from his new "Plantation" collection.

Miyake's point was not only to open the show with a splendid "Gloriana" by Benjamin Britten, but also to show that absolutely anyone can wear these simple, neutral-colored clothes.

Earlier, Miyake had watched gleefully as the chorus — which included several teachers, a doctor, a salesman for the Pleasure Chest and an advertising executive — quickly found ways to feel just right in the one-size-fits-all clothes, by rolling up the sleeves or retying the rope belts. "I expect the people who own these clothes to discover when and how to wear them and not just wear them one way," Miyake said. "My design is no design."

"I feel like a member of the road company of 'Pajama Game,'" pediatrician Martn Finkelman said with a laugh, as he adjusted his tunic. "But you know, it feels good."

"Miyake restores my faith that there is something new under the sun in fashion," said Stella Blum, curator of customes at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, as she made her way backstage to congratulate the Japanese designer after his wildly successful show on the Intrepid, now a sea, air and space museum permanently docked on the Hudson River.

MIYAKE IS THE front-runner among several Japanese designers who may make Japan the force in fashion that it is in cars, computers and cameras. Not only are American stores beginning to seek out and feature Japanese fashion designers, but they are starting to emulate the simple, direct way the Japanese present their wares.

Now many Americans are discovering how good the Miyake clothes feel and look. The Japanese designer appears to be on the brink of widespread acceptance; a cult followng is developing in America similar to those in Europe and Japan.

Yet Issey Miyake is hardly a new name in the fashion business. This is the ninth year he has shown his clothes in Paris; his various collections and design studios generate more than $50 million in business, the bulk of it in Japan. And while his book "East Meets West," with an introduction by Diana Vreeland, is the quintessential fashion-photo cocktail-table book, his New York show was his first major effort to establish his name in the American market.

In a season when the leading designers in New York and Europe are regrouping fashions of seasons past and calling them new, Miyake's clothes have made a remarkable impact that many believe will change the way women dress. The Japanese "can't look back, because we don't have the tradition of Western dress," said Miyake recently. "For us it is a totally new look."

MIYAKE STARTS with basic concepts: the kimono and clothing of a single piece of cloth, like a second skin, that can wrap the body many ways. He builds his designs on cuts, shapes and colors that are distinctly Japanese, inspired by everything from farmers' clothes to Kabuki dancers and samaria armor.

His unusual fabrics may be based on traditional cottons, some made on the narrow kimono looms or others developed in the most technically advanced synthetics on modern machines. Grafted to his Japanese design is a European touch stemming from an understanding of westerners which he acquired while working in Paris.

Neiman Marcus buyer Benita Downing, who first saw the Miyake clothes when he brought them to her in a suitcase almost 20 years ago, calls him one of the "most serious and persistent" designers who has "never relented on how he feels women want to dress," even though it has never really caught on until now. Through Miyake, Downing first became aware of Japanese designers, "and now we are all convinced the Japanese are so smart."

The Met's Blum says she sees the future in Miyake. "He looked into his own traditions and translated them into something which is not yet here. I have a strong feeling that this is the way people really want to dress."

MIYAKE, 44, WAS BORN in Hiroshima, before the war. As a child, he used to see fashion magazines his sister brought home from her home-economics classes at the university. From the photos, he would sketch the clothes of Balenciaga, Jacques Fath and Madame Gres.

His father was a professional military man; his mother added to the family income as a teacher of the tea ceremony. "I didn't see her much in kimonos," said Miyake during an interview in Paris after his successful spring showing there. "It was unusual, but during the war she wore western styles, even trousers, sometimes from kimono fabrics." He prefers not to talk about the war, saying, "It's past history. Times have changed. I would rather look to the future than to the past."

In 1964 having finished his studies in graphic design at Tama Art, University in Tokyo, he studied haute couture in Paris at the Chambre Syndicale school. During the school term he showed his sketches to French designer Guy Laroche, who said, "Call me after graduation." Miyake called him on graduation day; the next day he started to help design a collection that was only a month away. The clothes he made were pure French couture, "true Laroche style," he recalled.

MIYAKE WAS IN PARIS during the upheaval of 1968, when students rebelled against establishment traditions, including dress. He remembers that events jolted his ideas about the way people dressed: He decided that rigid couture clothes were inappropriate. He quite Laroche, and visited New York where he became fascinated with the hippies. He returned to Paris to work for the couturier Givenchy, and for a short time after that, for Geoffrey Beene on Seventh Avenue.

But he had become almost obsessed with the idea of the democratization of clothing — clothes for everyone, not just for a few. He wanted to create designs that were more fundamental than fashionable, something like jeans but based on the Japanese tradition.

"The power of the Japanese designer is with the people on the street," said Miyake. "European culture is not for all the people on the street; historically, it is for kings or rich people. In Japan, there are no special people. The rich and special families have not much power in Japan. It is a merchant or businessman who has power in Japan."

Like the other Japanese designers who followed him to Paris, Miyake said he had to go to Europe "to learn the value of my work." But in 1970 he was ready to return to Tokyo to open his own studio.

THAT WAS JUST when more and more Japanese women were replacing the traditional kimono with Western-style clothes. Japanese stores were starting to promote European designers, and, increasingly, Japanese women, who were going to work in greater numbers, were beginning to appreciate the simplified styling of Calvin Klein and other American designers.

Correct appearance and "face" have always been important to Japanese, and that undoubtedly increased the interest in designer labels. At first, Yves Saint Laurent and Christian Dior were the most popular. Kenzo Takada, whose designs had an obvious Paris tilt, became the cult figure for Tokyo teens, and Kansai Yamamoto, who was more in the Kings Road tradition, had a large following. Miyake was more intellectual, more appealing to the sophisticated.

Now Miyake is No. 1 in Japan, with the following of a rock star. Recently he had to shave his mustache so he would be less recognizable to crowds and able to meet store customers without being mobbed. About 15,000 attended a public fashion show in Japan last summer, and his New York show on the Intrepid this fall was the hottest ticket in town for weeks.

The show was dramatically staged, with often as many as 20 of the top models at a clip coming over the raised platform and down the runway, which seemed the length of a football field. They danced, slipped in and out of the voluminous, dramatically cut clothes, rearranging the shapes so that a covering that was a coat one minute might be a wrap with the sleeves tied around the waist the next, and turning other clothes around and even upside down.

The models had a marvelous time constantly inventing new ways to wear the garments. And the audience never stopped cheering.

SAID SALMA WEISER, owner of the Chiarivari boutiques in New York, which feature the one-size-fits-all Miyake designs for men and women. "I think it is terrific when you can fit three women into the size and they all look wonderful."

Tricia Borwn, post-modern choreographer and a convert to the roominess of the Miyake clothes, added, "I finally found a good place to be."

The most important part of a Miyake collection is the fabric, and he will take as long as a year, if necessary, to get just the cloth he wants. He has made modern versions of traditional Japanese fabrics, including an ikat-weave kasuri, a farmer's check and shijira-ori weaving. Sometimes he'll change their scale or color, and occasionally add synthetic fibers. He was the first to use Ultrasuede, later popularized by Halston.

For his all-purpose, less-expensive line he calls "Plantation," Miyake developed cottons and wools that are machine washable and dryable; even the buttons are made extra saturday with double thickness, and the seams are double-stitched.

His pattern and texture inspirations are also fundamentally Japanes. They might include a painting by a modern Japanese artist (created in cooperation with that artist) or a photograph of a wind pattern on sand, a Japanese spinning top or the traditional body tattoos, "irezumi." Interpreted by Miyake, the tattoo, for example, might include the face of Janis Joplin or Jimi Hendrix or Marilyn Monroe.

HIS CURRENT COLLECTION includes a fabric knitted with seashells that clink together when the wearer moves, hats made by craftsman who usualy do bamboo baskets and dresses of strong paper. And he made straw-like bathing-suit coverups not unlike the straw raincoats Japanese farmers wear. Everything inspires him. A hat in the summer collection is made from recycled egg cartons.

Fittingly, in 1978 Miyake won the coveted Mainichi Design Grand Prix award, the first time that award was given to a fashion designer. It is usually given to architects and environmental designers.

Now Miyake wants to have a show for students in Paris and New York, as he has done in Tokyo. He'd include other designers, and not only Japanese, "not to educate, but to connect people." He's aware that French designers are keenly watching the Japanese-designer invasion and their growing worldwide success. "Paris is an old and traditional place; it needs new blood," he said. "The joining of the Japanese with the French should make a new movement. I think it should be good for Paris."

'Lefse' is delicacy from Scandinavia

For many American families with Scandanavian ancestors, one delicacy is lefse. Made from recipes brought to this country by Scandinavian immigrants, the flat bread is served at meals and as a treat with coffee.

While potatoes give lefse its unique, delicate flavor, the paper-thin, round breads resemble flour tortillas in appearance and texture.

Adapting family recipes for lefse handed down through generations, many contemporary cooks now substitute mashed potato flakes for fresh potatoes. Since old lefse recipes required peeling, cooking and mashing several pounds of potatoes, the flakes are a quick and easy time saver.

A home economist who learned her mother's lefse making techniques as a teenager perfected a "definitive" lefse recipe made with mashed potato flakes. It mixes together quickly and requires no time-consuming chilling during preparation. To help beginners, her recipe for lefse includes detailed instructions for mixing the dough, rolling and baking.

While lefse makers who own authentic lefse grills can make individual breads more than a foot in diameter, the home economist suggests rolling the dough to eight to 10-inch circles. These smaller, easier-to-handle lefse can be baked on an electric frying pan or grill. She also found a pastry stocking and pastry cloth important to easily handle the soft dough.

Since lefse bake at a high temperature, they brown quickly, requiring careful attention. To cut preparation time, many lefse makers recruit a family member or friend to work as a team. As one person rolls out the dough, the second bakes the breads.

Lefse can be turned over on the grill with a pancake spatula, but an authentic lefse stick, a narrow turner that resembles a long paint stirrer, makes lifting and turning easy.

Most Scandinavian-Americans enjoy lefse spread with butter, sprinkled with sugar and folded or rolled up to eat. The choice of plain white sugar, brown sugar or a cinnamon-sugar mixture varies from family to family.

Versatile lefse can also be used with a variety of other sweet or savory fillings, such as sour cream, honey or slivers of sharp cheese. Kids would especially enjoy an item Norwegian street venders offer, lefse wrapped around a weiner.

Cooled lefse should be stored tightly covered in the refrigerator to keep them soft. If carefully wrapped, they also can be frozen for several weeks.

MASHED POTATO FLAKE LEFSE

3 cups mashed potato flakes
1 cup water
2 tblsp. butter or margarine
2 tsp. salt
1 cup milk
¾ to 1 cup all purpose or unbleached flour

Heat electric lefse griddle or electric skillet to highest temperature setting. DO NOT GREASE GRIDDLE OR SKILLET. Measure potato flakes into large bowl. In small saucepan, heat water, butter and salt to rolling boil. Remove from heat; add milk. Add liquid all at once to potato flakes, stirring until all flakes are moistened (mixture will be crumbly). Add flour, spoonfuls at a time, to potato mixture, working with hands until a soft dough forms and is of rolling consistency. (Avoid adding too much flour). Form dough into a roll 10 inches long and about 2 inches in diameter. Cover roll with plastic wrap while rolling out each lefse.

On well-floured, pastry cloth-covered surface, roll out ⅛-inch slice of dough until paper thin. For best results, use rolling pin covered with pastry stocking. Flour rolling pin and pastry cloth before rolling out each lefse.

Transfer to heated griddle using lefse stick or long spatula. Bake until brown spots appear on bottom surface, about 1 minute. Turn and bake other side, about 30 dto 45 seconds. Place baked lefse between cloth towels to prevent lefse from drying. Repeat with remaining slices. Cool completely. To serve, spread with butter; cut lefse into pie-shaped pieces and roll up. Makes 20 lefse.

Science finally gaining on moths, beetles, insects

WASHINGTON (AP) — The common clothes moth may soon have to look harder for a safe bite to eat, according to a report in a recent issue of the Journal of Agricultural and Food Chemistry. The same is true for the wool-eating carpet beetle, says the author, Dr. Gary O'Loughlin, a textile chemist in Australia.

O'Loughlin has developed several new insecticides that he says should be longer-lasting than the ones now used to treat woolen clothes, carpets and drapes.

The reason for this added protection, he says, is that the new agents become chemically bonded to the wool during the textile manufacturing process. So, unlike conventional insecticides, they are not easily removed from the wool by washing, dry cleaning, or exposure to light.

In laboratory tests, the new agents appear to be as effective as commercially used insecticides for controlling both the common clothes moth and the carpet beetle. O'Loughlin says that wool treated with these agents is poisonous to the insects but that it should not be harmful to children who might chew on treated clothing or blankets. He says more tests will be done to assure the safety of the new insecticides.

Making thick ginger marmalade

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: A few years ago I found a recipe you published for Ginger Marmalade. I have tried it successfully several times, but I would like the result to be thicker than it is. Perhaps you an tell me how I can make it so. — GINGER FAN.

DEAR GINGER FAN: Here's a recipe that produces a thick Ginger Marmalade. I hope you have good luck with it. — C. B.

GINGER MARMALADE
(Thick Varieyt)

1 pound (about) fresh gingerroot
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1¾-ounce package powdered fruit pectin
5 cups (2¼ pounds) sugar

With a swivel-blade peeler thinly pare gingerroot; slice about ⅛-inch thick. In a 5- to 8-quart saucepot generously cover ginger with cold water; bring to a boil; boil gently for 15 minutes; drain in a strainer. Return ginger to saucepot and generously cover with fresh cold water; boil until gingerroot is tender-crisp enough to be pierced with a fork — about 45 minutes; drain in a strainer. Return to saucepot and generously cover with fresh cold water; let stand 15 minutes; thoroughly drain in a strainer.

With an electric or hand-operated kitchen appliance chop ginger so it is the size of rice grains — do not puree; or use a sharp knife to chop finely. Turn 2¼ cups of the finely chopped ginger into the clean dry 6- to 8-quart saucepot; add 1 cup fresh cold water, the lemon juice and fruit pectin. Over high heat, stir until mixture comes to a full boil. Stirring constantly, immediately add all the sugar and bring to a full rolling boil; stirring constantly, boil hard for 1 minute.

Off heat, with a metal spoon, skim off foam. Quickly ladle into clean, hot, wide-mouth 8-ounce preserving jars, filing to within ¼-inch of top. With a clean cloth, wipe tops and threads of jars. Adjust covers (caps and screwbands) according to jar manufacturer's directions. Process in a boiling-water bath for 5 minutes. Cool on a wire rack. Store in a cool dry place. Makes six to seven 8-ounce jars.

DEAR ABBY

Calorie-conscious reader counts blessings

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Over the years you've had "prayers" in your column from children, parents, mother-in-laws, secretaries, etc., so I thought you might find this prayer also worth sharing with your readers. I don't know who wrote it. Maybe one of your readers will. — ELLIE IN ILLINOIS

DEAR ELLIE: It is:

CALORIE COUNTER'S PRAYER

The Lord is my shepherd I shall not want,
He maketh me lie down and do push-ups.
He giveth me Hollywood bread.
He restoreth my waistline.
He leadeth me past the refrigerator for mine own sake.
He maketh me to partake of the green beans instead of the potatoes.
He leadeth me past the pizzeria.
Yea, though I walk through the bakery,
I shall not falter, for thou art with me;
Thy Tab and Fresca, they comfort me.
Thou preparest a diet for me in the presence of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my lettuce with low-cal oil. My cup will not overflow.
Surely Ry Krisp and D-Zerta shall follow me all the days of my life,
And I will live with pains of hunger forever. AMEN

DEAR ABBY: Several of us are going in on a gift. There are six of us altogether — two married couples and two singles. The married couples think the cost of the gift should be divided four ways. The singles think it should be divided six ways. Which is the fairest way? — ONE OF THE SIX

DEAR ONE: Married couples are usually considered "one," so in my opinion, the cost should be divided four ways.

If this isn't agreeable to all concerned, perhaps the single ones should go together on a gift, and the married couples go together on another.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Letting It Grow," the lady who stopped shaving her legs and armpits because, as she put it, "If bearded men can be accepted by society, why should women have to be slaves to a razor?"

I happen to be a man who likes his ladies "natural" — something I became accustomed to while stationed in Germany.

Since it is not considered acceptable in today's society (in the U.S.), you can understand how difficult it is to find a lady who lets her hair grow where nature intended it to be.

Although I can't speak for other men, I have had ladies stop seeing me because I've asked them to stop shaving.

So, "Letting It Grow," stick to your principles because there are men out there who think hairy women are sexy. Here's looking for you! — HAIR HUNTER IN BUFFALO

AT WORK

How to get, keep bosses on schedule

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q. My supervisor calls me his conscience because I'm always there to remind him of his deadlines, his priorities and his workload. When something goes wrong, I get the fallout; consequently my workload is affected. How do I keep from having to remind him about everything?

A. Remember that your first job is to help him. You could think of a simpler system — making a daily log of what he must do. It would take you a few minutes each week to compile his schedule. You might design a form for both him and you, and maybe even offer it to the rest of the department. Being their conscience might turn into a regular role, one that begins with your expertise of scheduling, and ends up as a career in itself someday. That's how inventive people create jobs based on what they do well.

Q. How do I get my boss to help me know what our priorities really are? Everything can't be the most important project, as he insists.

A. Chart out what your current projects are, how much time you think each takes and what the projected result might be. Then have a meeting and ask your boss to rank the projects, the most critical being No. 1. Ask whether he agrees with your time and benefit projection. Hang the chart up in your office to prick both your memories.

A word of caution: Often in business one's schedule must be changed to accommodate a new client or clean up an emergency. So be aware of his pattern of wanting everything and your penchant for order, and smile. A little lightness goes a long way — along with a pointer to the agreed-to chart!

Q. I have a compulsion to be successful as the president of a new management training firm. I have always enjoyed assisting people and organizing to be more effective. But I can't seem to adapt these skills to my home. My husband hates my "affair" with the company and has asked me to quit. How can I cahnge his mind?

A. You might try the following with your husband: (1) Ask what he gets from his work besides money — challenge, cohorts, a sense of belonging. Tell him you would like the same. (2) Ask him why he appreciates you; you also tell him. (3) Ask what else he would like at work or at home. Ask how you can help. (4) Tell him your goals and ask for his emotional support. (5) Ask what he is afraid will happen if you're successful (less attention paid to him, more chances to meet someone else, your earning more money might change your relationship). Then, without compromising yourself, set up a plan. It might mean hiring a person, even a student, to shop or cook or clean if neither of you will have the time.

Don't sacrifice your own life. Marriage is a 50-50 partnership, not a feudal relationship. I hope you can persuade him to accept you. If not, you might consider a family therapist to help you.

Foreigners protest Japanese law requiring them to be fingerprinted

TOKYO (AP) — Civil disobedience is not a popular means of protest among Japanese, but a growing number of foreigners are using that means to protest being fingerprinted as required in the country's alien registration law.

Twenty-nine foreigners, 25 Koreans, three Americans and a West German, have refused to be fingerprinted for alien registration documents which all foreign residents are required by law to carry.

They argue that the law requiring aliens who live in Japan for more than a year to be fingerprinted is discriminatory and denigrating. Among Japanese citizens, they say, only criminals are fingerprinted.

The foreigners face a up to a year in prison and a fine of about $800 if convicted.

What began several years ago as isolated protests by a few individuals has recently developed into a tiny uprising, with 22 of the 29 protesters joining the fray in 1982.

The government has indicted 11 people, including a 15-year-old Korean girl. Two cases have gone to court so far, officials said.

"We cannot tolerate violation of the law," said a Justice Ministry official who asked not to be named. "Why must they break the law to demonstrate their views?"

The answer lies partly among Japan's Korean minority, who account for more than 650,000 of the country's 800,000 alien residents in a total population of about 118 million.

Many Korean residents are offspring of workers brought to Japan in a forced labor program during World War II. Until recently, alien residents were denied most social welfare benefits provided to Japanese citizens, and Koreans complain of continued discrimination in employment, education and marriage.

Strict immigration laws prevent aliens, even their children born in Japan, from becoming naturalized citizens without adopting a Japanese name.

"This means that you have to get rid of your ethnic identity," said Ronald Fujiyoshi, a 42-year-old Japanese-American missionary working with Korean residents in western Japan. "And that's a violation of human rights."

Fujiyoshi, who is on trial in Kobe for refusing to be fingerprinted, contends that the Alien Registration Law is used by authorities to "control the Korean community." Aliens are required to carry registration papers, actually small pocket-sized booklets, at all times, and Fujiyoshi said police often abuse stop-and-search powers in demanding to see them.

Protesters claim that fingerprints on the documents are used in criminal investigations, which violates their right of privacy and reinforces prejudices against the Korean minority.

Justice Ministry official Kazuhiro Kuroda denied this, saying there have been "no cases" of alien files used in criminal cases. Even if police did have access, the single left index fingerprint would not be very helpful for investigative purposes, he said.

But a municipal official testified in the trial of 26-year-old Korean office worker Kang Pak that police routinely check alien registration files at the ward office where he works.

Masakazu Kato, the Kawasaki city official in charge of registering Kang when he refused to be fingerprinted in 1981, said he testified in District Court in early December that police come to examine the files, which include fingerprint records, "several times a month."

Access is obtained by filling out a simple form, he said.

The Justice Ministry's Kuroda noted that other governments, including the United States and South Korea, also require permanent resident aliens to be fingerprinted. The rationale behind Japan's registration law, he said, was to control illegal immigration from the Korean peninsula.

"Just because America has a similar requirement doesn't make the Japanese law right," Fujiyoshi said. His trial resumes in late February.

Kuroda said legal action against other protesters is "under study." Meanwhile, the government has adopted a policy of refusing re-entry permits, the document that allows a foreigner to leave and return to Japan, to fingerprint protesters, he said.

Dear Charlie:

Well, Biarritz is over and I am back home. I did not do as well as I had hoped, but as someone said before me: "I shall return."

My partner, Paul Chemla has a complaint. He claims that, despite the fact that I co-author a bridge column, no one ever writes about him. Now we both know that that is a vile canard—as a matter of fact, I sent you one of our hands a few weeks ago. But Paul did produce one of the best defended hands of the tournament, in a match between his team and Poland.

After Paul opened the bidding with one club, the Poles reached an aggressive contract of three no trump. The only point of interest in the auction was South's one no trump response to his partner's takeout double. Since that showed reasonable values, North had no qualms about inviting game.

Paul led a heart. Declarer won in hand, led a diamond to the ace and a diamond back to the jack. Paul won the king and, quick as a flash, shifted to the jack of spades.

That card assured the contract's defeat, because it removed any possibility of an end play. Had declarer ducked, Paul would have abandoned spades and shifted to clubs, and declarer would have lost two tricks in each black suit and the king of diamonds.

But winning the king proved to be no better. Declarer had only eight tricks. As soon as the defenders gained the lead, they could take three spade tricks and the ace of clubs to go with the king of diamonds.

Remind me to send a clipping of this to Paul.

Best regards,
Omar

Man pens ode to old dentures

ELEANOR, W.Va. (AP) — When Raymond L. Ortega put the bite on people for their spare dentures, he didn't expect much response, much less an ode to mark the occasion.

Ortega, a dental laboratory technician instructor at the Putnam County Vocational Technical Center, put out a call for extra choppers last fall when he ran short of dentures for his students to practice with. He's been getting false teeth from all over the country ever since.

But Ortega says the strangest donation came from Florida — a set of dentures packaged with a poem titled, "Ode to False Teeth," which begins, "They've been a friend these many years, these old false teeth of mine... With never an ache or ever a pain, and always seemed to shine."

The end is a message to Ortega's students: "Take heed to this short story, do your best, and then, in time, you'll be turning out prized dentures, like these old false teeth of mine."

The ode continues, describing the many uses to which the teeth had been put: "One time they bit a bullet, when pain was drawing near; And once when I was in a brawl they bit off some guy's ear."

Duck dons plastic necklace

EASTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — Two men have been trying unsuccessfully for several months to catch a mallard duck entangled in a plastic six-pack holder.

"It isn't easy," said Bernhard Kober, who along with Jospeh Dolat, has been trying to rid the duck of his necklace. "We tried getting him with a fishing net attached to a long stick...but he knows what's going on."

For months the two men, who spend $600 a year to feed about 200 wild ducks, have been trying to catch the mallard, who continues to outwit the best efforts. Their backyards abut the Manhan River.

They first noticed the male mallard's trouble last summer. Neither is sure how it happened, but the duck waddles around their yards with the plastic rings around his neck.

So far, the mallard appears to be getting along nicely despite his plastic yoke.

"He stays right with the crowd, and he seems to be doing all right," Kober said.

Free calendars part of being Congressman

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the fringe benefits of being a member of Congress is getting free calendars to hand out to selected constituents, and it's a tradition that seems to be escaping all attempts at budget cutting.

Both House and Senate, in separate votes, have voted to end the practice. But, as the new year began, free calendars were again being distributed by members of the House and Senate.

The Senate Rules Committee voted Sept. 29 to stop using tax dollars to buy calendars for members to dispense.

Each senator usually gets 1,000 calendars. Showing a different Washington scene on each page, the calendars cost the Senate 58 cents each. They sell to the public in the Capitol's souvenir shop for $2.50.

The committee later reversed itself, after learning that the non-profit Capitol Historical Society had already spent more than $50,000 in contracting to have the calendars printed.

The rules committee said its ban would go into effect next year — maybe.

Each of the 435 House members get 1,500 of the calendars for distribution. Three years ago the House voted to stop the practice, by an overwhelming roll call vote, accompanied by speeches about government austerity beginning at home.

But the ban never took effect because the legislation got delayed in a dispute over side issues.

The subject has not been mentioned on the House floor since.

* * *

The new 98th Congress, which convened this week, might save some money if it printed an abbreviated calendar, one that reflected only the time it spends in Washington.

Although meeting briefly this week, both chambers will be in recess, the House calls them "district work periods," until Jan. 25, when President Reagan delivers his State of the Union address.

The Senate will take a two-week long break in February while the House will take two three-day breaks to celebrate Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays.

Both chambers plan a two-week Easter break, a two-week Fourth of July recess and a five-week August-Labor Day break, with adjournment for the year tentatively set for Oct. 28.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, got the most votes in a straw presidential poll conducted by an organization of congressional Democratic press aides.

Glenn got 22 votes of the 73 press assistants who participated in the survey asking them their first choice for the Democratic presidential nomination. Former Vice President Walter Mondale was second, with 17, and Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona was third with 10.

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado drew five votes, Sen. Alan Cranston of California, three, and former Sen. George McGovern, two.

Shortly before the 97th Congress adjourned before Christmas, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., surpassed the 8,000 mark for number of consecutive roll calls on the Senate floor.

That far eclipses the old record of 2,900 consecutive votes set by former Sen. Margaret Chase Smith of Maine.

China institutes job reform

From Wire Reports

PEKING — China has launched its first large-scale experiment in employment by merit in an apparent effort to prod an often sleepy and sloppy work force.

Instead of being assigned for life to a factory or shop with guaranteed wages, job candidates will now have to submit to entrance exams, serve a probationary period and sign a contract agreeing to certain requirements set by the boss.

The contract permits an employer to sack unruly or incompetent workers.

Now limited to new job entrants in Peking, the reform is considered far-reaching for a labor force molded by what is known as the "iron rice bowl" philosophy, the assurance of a paying job regardless of skill or initiative.

The late Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung believed it the duty of a communist state to provide everyone a job, and it still is nearly impossible to fire a bad worker.

But Mao's pragmatic successors, who publicly are committed to a quadrupling of China's economic output by the year 2000, argue that lazy and careless workers are strangling the nation's growth.

Fully one of every four state-run enterprises loses money annually due to labor inefficiency, overemployment and mismanagement, according to official estimates. The scientific socialists now running the economy have tried to fire up the labor force by experimenting with bonuses, piecework arrangements and employee profit-sharing schemes, all with limited success.

A new consensus now seems to have emerged with the conclusion that a total overhaul of the employment system, not mere tinkering, is necessary.

The Peking Daily, which unveiled the merit system approach, said the old method of guaranteed employment "has seriously limited labor and economic efficiency."

"Moreover, it encourages the iron rice bowl mentality in some people," said the authoritative commentary.

The new labor contract system is modeled after special export-processing zones in south China, where foreign investors demanded the power to test, regulate and fire local Chinese working in joint venture concerns.

Like other economic reforms, this one will be tested in a larger laboratory, in Peking, where 20,000 workers are expected to be affected this month, before it is considered for nationwide application.

The government labor department will continue to assign the jobless to prospective work places, but similarities with the old system apparently will end there.

Employers would no longer be forced to keep unqualified or unproductive workers just because they were assigned by the state.

An experimental forerunner in Peking, Capital Iron and Steel Co., may serve as an example. More than 8,000 malingering workers have been shifted to lowly jobs planting trees or baking bread since 1979.

The factory boasts annual profit increases of 20 percent every year since the experiment began.

The children will also meet "Mama Bear" who croons "Stand By Your Man" and a singing rocking turtle who goes by the name of Joe Bob Mooney and a duet of colorful birds who sing "Bugle Boy from Company B."

Show times are 11 a.m., 2,5,6 and 7 p.m. daily in the center court area of the mall.

Making of 'Nickleby' full of tension, drama

NEW YORK (AP)— It had drama, tension and honest-to-goodness conflict. The making of "Nicholas Nickleby" could have made a great television program.

Actually, it did. The program, which explored the preparations and motivations of the epic London and Broadway stage productions, was seen in Britain. It couldn't find a buyer in the United States.

Too bad. It would have been an informative, useful lead-in to the "Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby," the nine-hour TV presentation that will be broadcast on the syndicated Mobil Showcase Network on Jan. 10-13.

The Mobil Corp. was the main backer of the television production, although the Broadway play, which generated considerable interest in "Nickleby" in this country, was financed by the Shubert Organization.

The high drama behind the scenes included anxiety over whether the show would be ready for its opening, financial problems and casting bitterness that led to several members of the Royal Shakespeare Company leaving the repertory group.

Early in 1980, eight weeks into rehearsals for the stage production of "Nicholas Nickleby," the actors didn't know which parts they'd be playing. Hammering out ideas and script changes in improvisational workshops, the 40 members of the RSC swapped parts every day.

Then the actors listed their role preferences. Egos being what they are in the acting business, most asked for the leading parts. Ten felt they were right for Nicholas Nickleby, Charles Dickens' Dudley Doright star and the focal point for the play's frenzied action and strident morality.

Roger Rees got it, and he said he was surprised, thinking his age, 38, disqualified him for the part of the young man with the spirited idealism. "The Making of Nicholas Nickleby" captures the tense moments on the day the roles were announced.

No one made a sound. The winners were too professional to cheer and the losers were good enough actors to maintain their poker faces. When the cameras were turned off, it might have been more emotional. Six company members were angry enough to defect.

From the beginning, Dickens' 900-page "Nicholas Nickleby" was an unconventional choice for the prestigious RSC. Trevor Nunn, the company's artistic director, discovered that the Soviet Union routinely adapted Dicken's novels to the stage. He felt Dickens' own country could do better.

Nunn was determined to do Dickens, and financial woes for the RSC made his decision easy and logical — tight money at the British Arts Council meant the company could do only one production in 1980, rather than the usual five.

Dickens' novels are full of colorful characters, enough to parcel out to all the company's members. In fact, in "Nicholas Nickleby," 39 actors played 150 parts and went through 315 costumes. One actor played 17 parts. Only Rees had a solo role.

Economizing was the order of the day. David Edgar, who rewrote "Nickleby" for the stage, had to turn 900 pages of mood, action and dialogue into two nights at the theater, and, nine hours on TV.

The Young Americans on Broadway, a fully staged theatrical revue company of 40, will perform at Midland High School Auditorium Saturday at 8 p.m. as part of Midland Community Concert's subscription season. The group's revue, "On Broadway," reads like a history of the musical theater with hits from the 1930 George Gershwin show "Girl Crazy" to Rodgers and Hammerstein classics from "Oklahoma!" "The King and I," "West Side Story," "The Fantastiks" and "A Chorus Line."

No one laughs when Hamill plays piano

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — When Mark Hamill sits down to play the piano on stage no one laughs.

Hamill, who plays Wolfgang Mozart in the play "Amadeus," is required to play the piano. The music comes from a tape recorder inside the piano, but the technique comes from "Star Wars" producer Gary Kurtz.

When Kurtz heard that Hamill, better known as Luke Skywalker of the "Star Wars" movies, was going to play Mozart he gave him a present of piano lessons.

"Those lessons did help," said Hamill. "Without them I'd have been intimidated even to sit down at the keyboard. Now at least I can play 'Jingle Bells.'"

Commenting on his recent activities, he said, "After four months of doing absolutely nothing, I like being busy," he said. "And I like doing two such different things. With the 'Star Wars' movies, there's not time to internalize — they're played on the level of action-adventure.

Stephen King enjoys scaring people with books, films

NEW YORK (AP) — When writer Stephen King talks about horror, his eyes fill with glee. Horror is his business, and right now business is good.

King's latest accomplishment is the movie, "Creepshow," in which he makes his acting and screenwriting debut. It is a box office success.

In its first three weeks of release, it grossed over $20 million. Meanwhile, King's books continue to hit bestseller lists as soon as they are published.

During one recent week, he had a different book on three bestseller lists at the same time. "Different Seasons" was on the hardback list, "Cujo," on the paperback list and "Creepshow" in the trade paperback category.

A lot of people are paying a lot of money to be scared.

"People like my books because they legitimize their own anxiety," King says. "When you read horror, it's OK to feel scared.

"And with all this talk of poison pills, acid in eye drops and nuclear war, it's getting a lot easier to scare people," says the 34-year-old author.

"Sometimes I feel like the mass murderer of art," King says during lunch at a Manhattan restaurant that served just about everything but his favorite food, cheeseburgers.

"Everybody looks at what I do with a lot of trepidation," he says. "That's not to say I'm not a little bit cracked. Just doing this stuff makes you a little bit strange after a while."

Actually, King says writing about horror has a therapeutic effect for him as well as his audience.

"A lot of aggression and bad feelings can be floating around inside and not doing me any good at all," he said. "But then I pump it all out and it does a lot of people a lot of good."

With the release of "Creepshow," the first movie made from a King original screenplay, the author is determined to continue writing for film.

King describes "Creepshow" as a filmed comic book made up of five different stories resembling the style of such old comics as "Tales of the Crypt" and "The Vault of Horror."

"The kind of comics your mother probably threw away," says King.

King, who was born in Maine and who still does much of his writing there, currently is working on the third draft of a screenplay adaptation of "The Stand," his 800-page horror novel.

The book is a powerful and frightening look at what could happen if a highly virulent flu strain wipes out most of the United States.

"I'm determined to do it because a lot of studio people just looked at the book and passed on it, saying it's just too big," King says. "In my last rewrite, I had the script down to about 300 pages."

His latest novel, "Christine," will be released in May, and is King's 11th book in eight years. It is about a haunted car, a 1958 Plymouth. King describes it as a "Jaws on wheels."

"I like to write fast," King said. "I don't think there's anything wrong with that. Once, I wrote a novel in a weekend. Of course, it wasn't very good and never got published.

"When you start a book, you're on your own," he said. "You have to make people believe the situation, put them in it, make them like the characters or at least see a little of themselves even in the bad characters. That draws them more and more into the fantasy and the fantasy becomes more and more real.

"Then, their own imagination takes over," he continued, "and the scarey stuff happens when you have their imagination running faster than they're used to having it run."

Except for Christmas, the Fourth of July and his birthday, King writes every day. He says one question people always ask is if he ever runs out of ideas.

"Weeks go by when I don't have an idea," admitted the prolific author. "Anybody can get into a swamp. I got a book called 'The Cannibals.' It's sitting on a shelf right now.

"I can't seem to work it through. I'm gonna try, though, because I've got 500 pages written and that's a lot of hours — some with a hangover."

When you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Let's face it, buying a used car is a traumatic experience for most people.

Unlike a new car purchase, you don't have a factory warranty to fall back on in case there's a problem. That's why we say, when you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Thousands of families have bought used cars at our place. We keep a great selection of models, and we hand-pick every car we offer for sale. In fact, we're as proud of our used cars as we are of our new ones.

Here are some examples:

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% interest value interest will be charged at the rate of 13 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.38%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.38%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 128%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13.818%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payment.
