Midland County 1 rig shy of 30; Basin has 146 rigs

By Trevor Hawes
thawes@mrt.com

District 8 cracked into triple-digit rig-count territory and Midland County is one away from 30 rigs, according to weekly rotary rig count data released Friday by Houston-based oilfield services company Baker Hughes.

Midland, the nation's most-active county, added one rig for a total of 29. It hasn't been in the 30-rig range since the week ending March 4.

The last time the District 8 rig count was at 100 or above was the week ending March 18. It added six rigs this week for a total of 101.

The Permian Basin was up four rigs, putting the nation's most-active basin at 146.

In other areas with activity in the Permian, District 7B held steady at one rig; District 7C lost a rig, putting its total at 18; District 8A idled a rig, leaving seven; and New Mexico was unchanged at 19. The Texas total was 127, up four.

Ector, Garza and Sterling counties each saw renewed activity; Dawson saw its lone rig idled.

Six counties in the Permian had double-digit rig counts: Midland, Reeves (21), Loving (13), Lea, New Mexico (11), Howard (10) and Upton (10).

At this time last year, there were 233 rigs in the Permian.

Texas & New Mexico

Texas' rig count surged 13 to 191 this week. It has been 11 weeks since the Lone Star State has had 200 rigs or more.

The Eagle Ford and Barnett saw significant increases in activity. The Barnett, which is located in North Texas, added five rigs for a total of seven. The Eagle Ford, in South Texas, rose four to 34.

The Granite Wash and Haynesville were unchanged at seven and 17, respectively.

Texas didn't have any rigs listed as offshore or in inland waters.

New Mexico's rig count was unchanged at 20.

Researchers: Two giant sinkholes in West Texas expanding

By Tom Uhler
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

A couple of giant sinkholes in the West Texas oil patch are apparently expanding, and might eventually converge into one gigantic hole.

The sinkholes are about a mile apart and sit between Wink and Kermit off I-20 west of Midland-Odessa. They were caused by lots of oil and gas extraction, which peaked from the mid-1920s to the mid-1960s, according to researchers at Southern Methodist University.

Satellite radar images indicate that the giant sinkholes are expanding and that new ones are forming "at an alarming rate" as nearby subsidence occurs, they report in the scientific journal Remote Sensing. One is 361 feet across, about the size of a football field; the other is larger, 670 to 900 feet across.

"A collapse could be catastrophic," said geophysicist Jin-Woo Kim, who leads the SMU geophysical team reporting the findings.

In addition to Wink and Kermit (combined pop. about 7,000), there's lots of oil and gas production equipment and installations and hazardous liquid pipelines in the area, Kim said in the report. The fresh water injected underground in the extraction process "can dissolve the interbedded salt layers and accelerate the sinkhole collapse."

There's something not too dissimilar happening in Daisetta, east of Houston.

Officials have fenced off the area around the sinkholes between Wink and Kermit and they'll be monitored, but residents don't appear to be worried about them.

"They're a ways off from the highway; if nobody mentions it, then nobody is interested in it," Kermit City Manager Gloria Saenz told the New York Daily News.

A preacher of the Apocalypse from Indiana had a decidedly different take, exclaiming on YouTube: "Here's my concern. It's like hell is being enlarged, and that without measure."

Well, maybe not quite.

Midland unemployment remains stable at 4.3 percent

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

After at least a year of being roiled by the contracting oil and gas industry, Midland's labor market has stabilized as the year progresses.

Figures from the Texas Workforce Commission show May unemployment in the Midland metropolitan statistical area was 4.3 percent, unchanged from April and from March. A year ago, unemployment was 3.5 percent.

Odessa saw its rate slip to 6.1 percent from 6.2 percent in April.

"Midland didn't get hit as hard as Odessa," observed Willie Taylor, chief executive officer of the commission's Workforce Solutions Permian Basin.

Noting that not only has unemployment stabilized but wages have as well, "it appears we're holding our own," he said.

Staff in the offices in the 17 counties Taylor oversees are seeing a slowdown in the number of people coming in to file unemployment claims, he added.

James Earl Watson

James Earl Watson died June 14, 2016. He was born November 14, 1938 to Pope and Maggie Watson in Franklin, Texas. He was one of their 12 children, and attended Morgan High School. He later moved to Midland in 1960 with his loving wife of 57 years, Josie B. Watson.

Mr. Watson was a member of New Jerusalem Missionary Baptist Church for 56 years, where he served in the Men's Chorus, Brotherhood Ministry, as well as Wednesday Night Fellowship dinners. Mr. Watson worked for Berg Motor Company for more than 40 years. He enjoyed working on cars, fishing, and working outdoors in his yard.

Mr. Watson will be remembered by his wife, brother, sisters, a host of nephews, nieces, and extended family and friends.

Services will be held at 1:00 p.m. on Saturday, June 18, 2016 at New Jerusalem Missionary Baptist Church, 1801 N. Carver St. - Midland, TX 79705, with Pastor Michael Wheeler officiating, and under the direction of Jackie Warren Funeral Home, 702 S. Terrell - Midland, TX 79701.

W. D. "Tiny" Mason

Tiny was born on March 3, 1925 and died on June 16, 2016 after a brief illness.

Funeral services will be Monday, June 20, 2016 at 11:00 a.m. at Nalley-Pickle Welch Chapel in Midland. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Tiny was born in Holdenville, Oklahoma to Ernie and Alice Mason. He was raised in Wewoka, Oklahoma and attended Wewoka schools. He was an avid football player and loved other sports as well. He enjoyed working on cars with his dad and brothers. He enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in 1943 serving three years, including two years in the South Pacific in World War II. After returning home, he attended Oklahoma A&M (OSU) for four years.

During that time he met the love of his life Helen L. Dodd and they were married for 67 years at the time of his death. Tiny and Helen enjoyed life together. They loved to dance, especially the Jitterbug. They also enjoyed traveling, their favorite being Hawaii several times. He dearly loved his daughter, son-in-law, and three grandchildren. He immensely loved family trips with them.

At the age of 32, Tiny started playing golf. He was a man with very gifted hands and coordination for the game. He continued his passion for the game by playing several afternoons a week. His game improved so much he won several club championships in Midland and Andrews. In retirement, he continued to play at Greentree Country Club Tuesday to Friday with his gang of approximately 12 buddies. He played to the age of 86.

Tiny was a member of Golf Course Road Church of Christ where he loved singing all the hymns.

He was employed by Seco Production Company for 30 years. He wrapped up his production superintendent career managing wells for Kirkpatrick Oil Company headquartered in Oklahoma City. He retired at age 68.

He is survived by his loving wife, Helen Mason; daughter, Tina Swanner and her husband, Dan Swanner of Midland, Texas; granddaughter, Natalie Swanner of Los Angeles, California; grandson, Cole Swanner of Midland; one sister, Janice Carroll of Arlington, Texas; brother, John "Pete" Mason of Stillwater, Oklahoma; and by numerous nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by his grandson, Clark Swanner; sister, Juanita Gumm; brothers, Ernie Mason, Jr., Billy Mason, and Leonard Dennis.

Our family would like to thank cardiologist Dr. Michael Miller for his kind and loving care of Tiny for many years.

Memorial contributions can be made to KWO Ministries (Kenya Widow and Orphans), 3500 W. Golf Course Rd, Midland, TX 79703 or New Mexico Children's Home, 1356 NM-236, Portales, NM 88130.

Wilma Poe

Wilma Poe, 79, Midland, Texas, passed away peacefully at Midland Memorial Hospital on Tuesday, June 14, 2016.

She was born on October 24, 1936 in Mitchell County, Texas.

Wilma was a life-long telephone operator. She started her career in Mitchell County. As technology improved and telephone companies closed down and relocated to larger more advanced companies, Wilma transferred with them. The telephone company took her to Sweetwater, Abilene, Midland, and Odessa.

In the mid 90s, Wilma found herself enjoying the beginning of retirement. In her free time, she could be seen working on word puzzles or crocheting.

Wilma had a true heart of gold. She was a two-time breast cancer survivor at a time when such matters were rarely discussed.

She never thought about herself. Always made sure everyone around her was comfortable and had what they needed. Her family was her world and no sacrifice was too large to accommodate.

Wilma is survived by her sons, Johnny and Kelvin Poe of Midland; and by her brother, Roy Wayne of Colorado City Texas.

She was preceded in death by her husband, J.C., and daughter, Tina Nadine Poe, in 1963.

A graveside service for Wilma will be held on Saturday June 18, 2016 at 9:00 a.m. at Dorn Cemetery.

Online condolences may be made online at www.kikerseale.com.

All that glitters is gold: 'Stairway' could be worth millions

By Brian Melley
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The surviving members of Led Zeppelin were reunited Friday in a Los Angeles courtroom as bassist John Paul Jones testified in defense of his bandmates in a high-stakes copyright lawsuit that claims the band ripped off a riff used in "Stairway to Heaven."

Jones said he never heard the band Spirit play, never met them and didn't own any of their albums.

The estate for Spirit's late guitarist Randy Wolfe, also known as Randy California, claims Led Zeppelin lifted a passage from the instrumental "Taurus" and incorporated it in the well-known introduction to "Stairway."

If the estate is successful, it could be worth millions of dollars as the song continues to funnel a fortune to songwriters Jimmy Page and Robert Plant.

Led Zeppelin works that include "Stairway to Heaven" generated revenues of nearly $60 million over the past five years, economist Michael Einhorn testified.

Einhorn, who said he reviewed 50,000 pages of financial documents to reach that figure, conceded on cross-examination that some of the revenues came from a 2008 contract covering the band's catalog of 87 songs. Led Zeppelin lawyers contend the contract falls outside the statute of limitations and shouldn't be included in potential damages.

After Einhorn testified, the plaintiff rested its case. The defense opened with a musicologist, who cast doubt on whether the two songs are substantially similar.

While experts for the plaintiffs previously said there are many similarities between "Taurus" and the intro to the 1971 "Stairway," Lawrence Ferrara said the likeness was limited.

The main trait they shared, a notable descending minor chord progression, is a common building block in songs dating back 300 years and is found throughout pop music predating Wolfe's composition from 1967 or 1968.

"It's not something anyone can own," said Ferrara, a music professor at New York University.

Ferrara picked the songs apart note by note, playing the riffs on piano and comparing them to compositions such as "My Funny Valentine" and the Beatles' "Michelle."

Comparing differences in the arrangement of the same notes in both songs was like rearranging the letters in "treason" to spell "senator," Ferrara said, noting that the succession of letters makes a difference.

He said similar chord pairs other experts highlighted as important was like comparing pairings of the words "and the" in one short story to another.

"That I would not call a relevant similarity," Ferrara said.

With Page and Plant seated at the defense table for the fourth day of trial, their bandmate Jones made a brief supporting appearance.

Jones, who is no longer a defendant in the case, provided backup to Page's testimony that he had never met members of Spirit, despite opening for the band when Led Zeppelin made its U.S. debut in late 1968.

Page has said he knew some of Spirit's music and owned a couple of their albums, but he never heard "Taurus" until his son-in-law showed him comparisons to "Stairway" on the internet a few years ago.

He said he didn't even realize he owned Spirit's first album that contained "Taurus," until he looked through his collection after the comparisons surfaced.

Page acknowledged, however, that the band played a riff from the song "Fresh Garbage," also from that album, in a medley that was a concert staple when first starting out.

Jones, 70, wearing a black suit and black shirt, said he joined Led Zeppelin after his wife learned Page was starting a new group and suggested he call him. Page recruited Plant as singer and drummer John Bonham, who died in 1980.

The band, originally called The New Yardbirds, had a touring obligation for Page's previous band The Yardbirds, so they needed to come up with material quickly and often played cover songs.

Asked if all the songs were covers, including the medley with "Fresh Garbage," Jones said he believed some were Yardbirds tunes.

Jones said he played the "Fresh Garbage" passage without knowing what it was or who it was by. He said it was just something he heard that he thought was catchy.

Associated Press

DETROIT — An exhibition that's making a stop at the Detroit Institute of Arts and a few other U.S. museums looks at road trips and their role in American culture.

"The Open Road: Photography and the American Road Trip" is on view starting Friday in Detroit and runs through Sept. 11. It features more than 70 photographs, including ones from Robert Frank's 1950s book "The Americans," contemporary artists and others.

"Road trips are a tradition in America and can clearly reveal what is unique about this country's culture," Salvador Salort-Pons, the museum's director, said in a statement. "Photographers traveling through the United States have defined, critiqued and celebrated America, and many of the images in this exhibition are iconic in the history of photography."

Cars, buses, motels, campsites, diners, signs, gas stations and people along the way have fascinated traveling photographers. Road trips by Ed Ruscha, who also is featured in the exhibition, led to the creation of his 1963 book "Twentysix Gasoline Stations"

Others with photos on display include Justine Kurland, Garry Winogrand, Inga Morath and Alec Soth. The exhibition is organized by the nonprofit Aperture Foundation, curated by David Campany and Denise Wolff, and supported by the National Endowment for the Arts.

After Detroit it is scheduled to visit the Amarillo Museum of Art in Texas this fall and the Museum of Fine Arts on St. Petersburg, Florida, next year. It previously was displayed at the Crystal Bridges Museum of American Art in Bentonville, Arkansas.

The Dog Head wildfire burns as seen from the town of Tajique, near the Manzano Mountains on Wednesday in Tajique, N.M. BELOW: A fire fighting tanker drops retardant on the Dog Head Fire on Thursday in Albuquerque, N.M. Firefighters struggled Thursday to make progress against a fast-moving wildfire in central New Mexico as it consumed tinder dry forest, sent up a towering plume of smoke that could be seen for miles, and forced more residents from their homes.

Crews try to keep New Mexico blaze from communities

By Susan Montoya Bryan
Associated Press

ESTANCIA, N.M. — Firefighters on Friday battled hot temperatures and leaping flames to keep a New Mexico wildfire that destroyed two dozen homes from spreading north toward rural, mountain communities.

Three days after the fire erupted in the Manzano Mountains south of Albuquerque, crews made progress in holding lines amid lighter winds, said fire information officer Denise Ottaviano. The 26-square-mile fire remained "extremely active" as it shifted east in near triple-digit temperatures, she said.

Weather forecasters predicted rising temperatures into the weekend, with humidity levels bottoming out.

"We're seeing up to 100-foot flame lengths or more throughout the day," Ottaviano said. "We're fighting it as many ways as we can and as safely and quickly as possible."

Close to 700 personnel are assigned to the fire along with air tankers and helicopters. To protect more homes, aircraft dropped retardant and water on the fire's east perimeter Friday, after fire managers released a damage assessment saying 24 homes and multiple structures had been destroyed near the small community of Chilili.

Authorities expanded a mandatory evacuation zone to include more subdivisions to the north and east. They could not say how many homes were affected or how many were directly threatened.

The fire remained uncontained and its cause was under investigation.

"This is a serious fire. We want to make sure New Mexicans understand that," said Gov. Susana Martinez, who declared a state of emergency that clears the way for state resources to fight the fire. "Don't take any unnecessary risks, because you're also putting others at risk."

She urged residents to heed evacuation warnings.

Dozens of residents in Chilili and other surrounding villages left their homes Wednesday night after the fire made a 12,000-acre run.

Residents packed vehicles with clothes, photo albums and other belongings. Some loaded animals into livestock trailers as a wall of smoke loomed between them and the border of the Cibola National Forest.

South of the fire in Tajique, Carmen Bodine and her husband spent about three hours gathering goats and other pets before evacuating.

At first the goats did not want to respond, focused instead on smoke rolling down the hill behind their home. Bodine and her husband could see flames from a nearby hilltop.

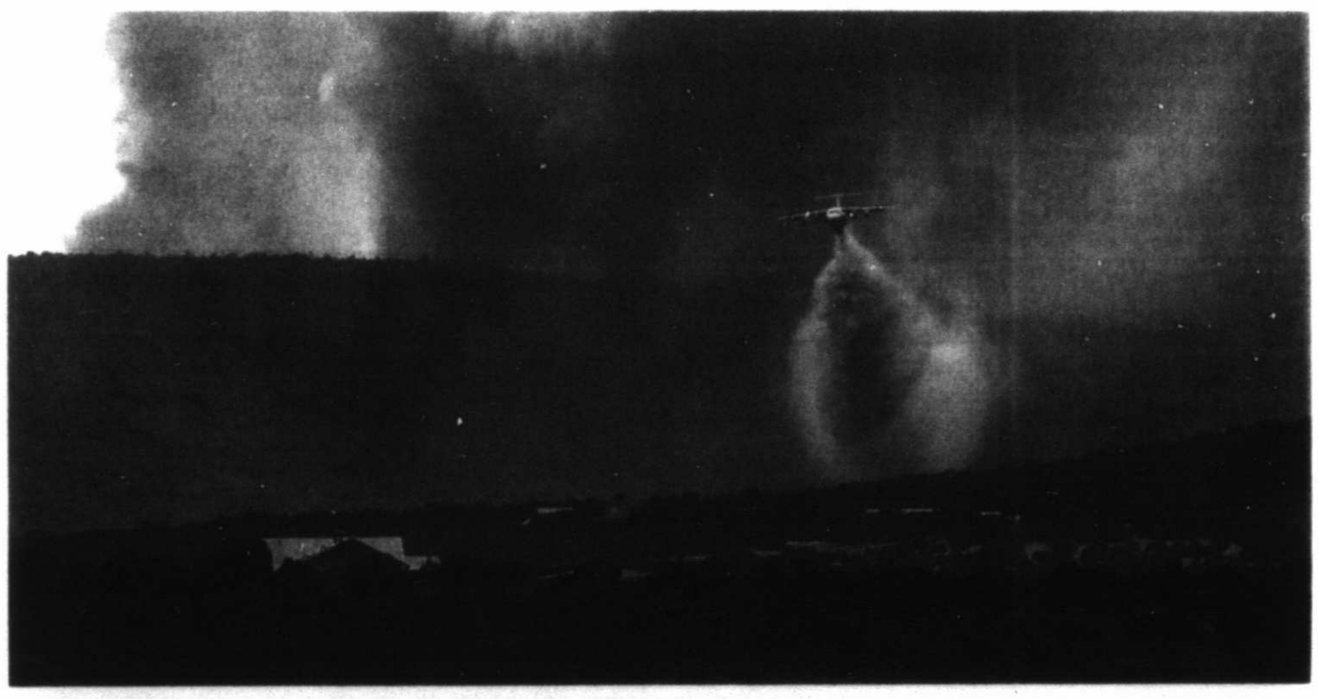
"It was tough. I couldn't get them in, I was absolutely not going to leave," she said Friday at a shelter in Estancia. "Nobody's going to separate me from my animals. You take me out dead with my animals but I'm not leaving my animals behind."

State Sen. Ted Barela, a former mayor of Estancia, spoke to one woman at the shelter whose eyes were filled with tears. She told him she didn't know where to turn.

Barela was among those working to put together a list of names and numbers so residents could be notified as authorities conducted damage assessments.

The Manzanos still show the scars of previous burns, but he said it's been at least a few years since the area has seen a major fire.

"We've been through this before," he said. "This is yet another devastation."



California inferno supports predictions for another bad year

GOLETA, Calif. — Stoked by winds, a wildfire burning west of Santa Barbara roared down mountain slopes toward the Pacific Ocean, shutting down California's major coastal highway and forcing a group of firefighters to seek shelter behind a fire engine as flames licked at them.

As the blaze grew to more than 6 square miles, authorities warned Friday that the region's notorious afternoon and evening "sundowner" gusts would recur through the next two days.

Weekend fire dangers already were expected to worsen with the arrival of an extreme heatwave across the Southwest.

In central New Mexico, a blaze that began Tuesday had destroyed more than two dozen homes and charred more than 26 square miles near the small community of Chilili.

It cast a thick haze over the Manzano Mountain range south of Albuquerque that reached as far north as Denver.

The California inferno appeared to support national wildfire authorities' predictions of another dangerous and difficult year for the state after years of drought. State firefighters and the U.S. Forest Service already have fought more than 1,800 wildfires since Jan. 1, the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection said.

While El Nino delivered rain and snow to Northern California this winter, the south was bypassed. What rain fell was just enough to sprout grasses that quickly died, adding to the danger of long-dead vegetation.

"It is ominous and we are concerned because the fuels out there are drought-stressed," Santa Barbara County Fire Chief Eric Peterson told a press conference.

About 270 homes and ranches were considered at risk in southern Santa Barbara County at the foot of the rugged Santa Ynez Mountains, an east-west trending range that parallels the south-facing coast.

County officials said the fire damaged one building and affected olive, lemon and avocado groves and grazing lands, but no details were released on specific damages.

More than 80 horses were evacuated to a fairground.

Lanny Stableford watched as a fleet of aircraft attacked flames in rugged Refugio Canyon near his ranch, where he keeps 40 head of longhorn cattle.

"I can leave but they won't let me back so I'm just kind of hanging out here," he said, noting he was not in danger. "Somebody has to take care of my cows."

Fires become especially dangerous when sundowners are formed by high pressure inland to the north and low pressure over the ocean to the south, causing gusty winds to sweep down the face of the mountains. A gust in the fire area around 1 a.m. Friday was clocked at 47 mph, the National Weather Service said.

"You can pretty much set your clock by it, about 5 o'clock in the evening the winds start to pick up," said Eric Boldt, a warning coordination meteorologist.

The Santa Barbara County Fire Department posted a picture of firefighters near El Capitan State Beach taking shelter behind a fire engine as flames and a hail of embers roared toward them.

U.S. 101, the state's main coastal highway, had to be shut down for hours for the second time since the fire erupted Wednesday.

"I was actually on scene last night and saw some of the fire tornados, and I tell you what, it's no joke. ... It was off the hook," said Highway Patrol Lt. Steve Larson. He expected more closures.

Sundowners force firefighters to fall back into defensive mode, said Robert Laeng, the federal incident commander.

"Our defensive strategy will continue to emphasize protection of life and property while we look for a place to turn the corner and push this back up into the mountains and get full containment," he said.

The New Mexico fire was expected to keep moving east and northeast while threatening Chilili, the Tajique area, and the Ponderosa Pine residential area, according to U.S. Forest Service officials.

New Mexico Gov. Susana Martinez took to the air in a National Guard helicopter on Thursday to survey the devastation.

"This is a serious fire," Martinez said later during a news conference at an Estancia school that holds the command center for the firefighters.

Extremely hot and dry weather was forecast to continue into the weekend, although gusty winds should ease, fire officials said.

In east-central Arizona, progress was made against a 12-square-mile blaze that broke out Wednesday south of Show Low.

"The winds weren't as bad, and the back-burns did exactly what we wanted them to do," Navajo County Sheriff KC Clark said at a Thursday afternoon news conference.

However, a small Navajo County community remained evacuated and thousands of other residents were told to be prepared in case they had to leave.

In Nevada, a 300-acre Reno brush fire that threatened dozens of homes was 75 percent contained and crews were mostly in mop-up mode Thursday evening.

Blazes also threatened homes in Utah, where a firefighter hurt his head in a fall.

Obama family tours Carlsbad Caverns

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press

CARLSBAD CAVERNS NATIONAL PARK, N.M. — Eyes wide open and head tilted upward, President Barack Obama appeared awed Friday as he toured an underground cave at a national park in New Mexico — part of a family vacation that's also designed to draw attention to America's natural wonders.

Obama, his wife, Michelle, and their daughters, Malia and Sasha, spent part of the afternoon at Carlsbad Caverns National Park, one of two national parks the First Family is scheduled to visit on a long Father's Day weekend away from Washington.

"How cool is this?" Obama exclaimed as a National Park Service employee led the family on a tour of the Big Room, an area nearly 800 feet deep into the limestone cavern that nature carved out of the Guadalupe Mountains.

The Obamas plan to spend Saturday and part of Sunday exploring Yosemite National Park in California.

Coming at the end of a difficult week, the trip gives Obama an opportunity to tout his record on open-space preservation and promote administration programs aimed at boosting foot traffic through the more than 400 sites in a national park system that turns 100 in August.

The trip was also providing the president with another chance to warn about climate change, one of his priority issues, and the need to protect places like Carlsbad Caverns and Yosemite from its effects so future generations can enjoy the parks' splendor.

Obama planned to deliver formal remarks Saturday at Yosemite.

Inside the New Mexico cavern, where three of the 119 caves are open to the public, Obama gazed at the stalactites, stalagmites and various other formations dotting the Big Room and said it was "spectacular." The caves were formed when sulfuric acid ate through the limestone.

A member of the National Park Service, second from left, leads Malia Obama, President Barack Obama, first lady Michelle Obama, and Sasha Obama, on a tour of Carlsbad Caverns in Carlsbad Caverns National Park, in Carlsbad, N.M., on Friday. The Obama family is traveling to Carlsbad Caverns National Park to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the creation of America's national park system.

Temperatures inside the Big Room hold at a cool 56 degrees, in sharp contrast to the 100-degree heat baking the arid landscape that surrounds the national park, and Obama wore a jacket to ward off the slight chill.

The administration makes an economic argument for supporting the park system: It sustains hundreds of thousands of jobs while visitors pump billions of dollars into surrounding economies.

An Interior Department report released Friday said more than 305 million people visited national parks last year, a new record. They spent $16.9 billion in nearby communities.

Obama has protected more than 265 million acres of public lands and waters from development, more than any other president, the White House said. Environmental and advocacy groups applaud what Obama has done so far, but have been urging him to exercise his authority under a 1906 law to put even more public spaces off limits before his term ends in January.

Some members of Congress accuse Obama of overreach every time he uses that authority to create a national monument without their input.

Congressional objections aside, Obama will use the postcard-perfect scenery at both of the parks he's visiting to highlight the natural beauty that administration officials assert could be lost or forever damaged by the effects of climate change.

Also hampering the park system is an estimated $12 billion in deferred maintenance.

Interior Secretary Sally Jewell, who oversees the National Park Service and discussed the president's trip with reporters Thursday, said the agency relies more heavily on donations every year to help meet its financial needs.

Yosemite, near Fresno, California, is among the 10 most popular parks, with about 4 million people visiting annually. It is known for its waterfalls, but also boasts ancient giant sequoia trees and a vast wilderness area.

For Obama, the parks trip caps a difficult week that opened with Sunday's shooting deaths of 49 people at an Orlando, Florida, nightclub. On Thursday, the president went to Orlando to mourn the deaths with the victims' loved ones.

Country's only all-women's air race to come through Midland

By Erin Stone

To learn more about the 40th annual Air Race Classic for female pilots and track the racers visit www.airraceclassic.org.

More than 100 female pilots will soar over Midland on Tuesday and Wednesday during the 40th annual Air Race Classic, an all-women cross-country airplane race that starts in Prescott, Arizona, and ends in Daytona Beach, Florida.

Fifty-five airplanes will execute high-speed flybys over a timing line upon their arrivals at Midland Airpark.

This year's course covers 2,716 miles, with stops at or near a college or university aviation program. The 130 racers have four days to complete the course, which will start in Prescott at 8 a.m. Tuesday and end in Daytona Beach at 5 p.m. Friday. Teams will race against their own best time and not against one another, according to an ARC press release. The team that beats its time by the highest margin will be the winner. Flying over unfamiliar territory and weather conditions are among the factors that play into a team's time.

This will be the second ARC race for Mary Latimer, 62, a veteran pilot, flight instructor, pilot examiner, aircraft mechanic and retired air traffic controller. It's the first for her race partner, Cindy Coleman, whom Latimer trained.

Latimer's 40-year pilot career began when her husband, Lawrence, took her on her first flight on their first date.

"I married him, and I married aviation," Latimer, of Vernon, said during a phone interview. "Back in the early '70s, there were very few women in aviation, and it was very rare for me to see a female pilot. When I started looking for a job, it was almost impossible. Nobody wanted to hire a woman pilot back then, and I'm only 5 feet tall, so I didn't even meet the height requirements for the airlines."

Latimer didn't give up. She raised her daughter in aviation. Both her daughter and granddaughter are professional flight instructors. But over the years, she noticed they faced issues similar to those that she had faced decades earlier.

"I had this little 'aha' moment when my granddaughter was 16 that she still faces the same nonsense that I did 40 years prior," Latimer said. "So I thought, 'Somebody oughta do something,' and when you say that, you need to go look in a mirror and find out who somebody is."

Taking inspiration from Women's Airforce Service Pilots (WASP) of the World War II era, she started GIFT (Girls in Flight Training) Academy Inc., a nonprofit with the goal of increasing the number of female pilots.

The air race is a significant event for female pilots and the aviation world as a whole. The Air Race Classic traces its roots to the 1929 Women's Air Derby, in which Amelia Earhart and 19 other female pilots raced from Santa Monica, California, to Cleveland, Ohio. Today, the classic is the epicenter of women's air racing, "the ultimate test of aeronautical ability and decision-making for female pilots of all ages and from all walks of life," as is stated in the release.

Latimer and Coleman's race number is 33, signifying the 33 percent of pilot certificates Latimer issued to female pilots through her program compared to a national average of 6 percent.

"Somewhere between about eight and 10 years of age, the little girls start buying into the clichés that these career paths are for boys and these are for girls," Latimer said. "But if I tell a 5-year-old girl, 'Hey, I'm a pilot, and when you grow up you can be a pilot, too, and they see that. Then, they're a little less likely to buy into somebody saying, 'Well you can't be a pilot because you're a girl.'"

Women ranging from high school and college students to veteran pilots in their 80s will compete in teams of two or three: pilot, co-pilot and optional teammate. This year's group consists of 55 teams, with 130 racers from 32 states.

"When you fly, to a certain extent, you're alone, which means you're responsible for your own decisions and your own actions," Latimer said. "There's nobody to lean on so to speak, so you develop that sense of, 'I need to do this.' But once you've accomplished it, you get the sense that you can do this. It's like watching a flower bloom. When you look at the people who have trained, you see this magnificent change in who they have become."

Canyon Lake man dies after being hit by truck

A 45-year-old Canyon Lake man died Thursday morning in a wreck on State Highway 349 in Martin County, 18 miles north of Midland.

Charles D. Myers was standing next to one of two Ford F-250 pickups that were parked on the eastbound shoulder of SH 349. A Freightliner Truck Tractor driven by a 44-year-old San Angelo man was traveling northbound on Highway 349 and crossed over onto the improved shoulder, hitting the back left of one of the pickups, according to a press release from the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The truck then hit Myers and the second pickup, according to the release. He died at the scene.

The truck driver, who was wearing his seat belt, suffered "non-incapacitating injuries," according to the release.

The crash is still under investigation, DPS Sgt. Justin Baker said Friday morning.

State health department notifies county of cases of plague

Midland County officials have told the Reporter-Telegram that there have been confirmed cases of the plague in rats on two ranches in the southeast part of the county.

County Judge Mike Bradford said officials with the state's Health Services Department said there is nothing that the county needed to do and that the state was managing the situation.

State health officials said this has been known to happen every few years and it will run its course, according to Bradford.

Both Bradford and Midland County Fire Marshal Dale Little told the Reporter-Telegram there is no reason at this point for the residents of Midland County to be concerned.

Parents of black girl, 12, with rope burn sue school

Associated Press

WACO — A lawsuit has been filed against a private school in Texas by the parents of a 12-year-old black girl who suffered severe rope burn around her neck during an overnight field trip.

The Dallas Morning News reported that the family is seeking $3 million in damages.

The lawsuit was filed Monday in Travis County against Live Oak Classical School in Waco and the owner of the ranch where the incident occurred.

Authorities are investigating how the girl was injured.

The family has said they believe it was a case of racially motivated bullying. The school has said the girl was accidentally hurt when students were playing with a rope swing attached to a tree.

UNEMPLOYMENT

From 1A

"It's been difficult for the last year, but it seems to be leveling off," he said.

"(Hiring) will continue to be slow for awhile as companies want to see oil prices stabilize," he predicted. At a recent meeting of his board, Taylor said board members were telling him they were seeing more activity and he heard Halliburton is seeking to hire 70 in the region.

"The June report will tell us how things are going to look this summer," he said.

Taylor said his staff was shocked by the number of students seeking summer jobs but were having difficulty because adults had taken the jobs.

Having just spoken with representatives of Midland College and Odessa College before speaking with the Reporter-Telegram, Taylor said he hopes to have funding for training opportunities for displaced workers in the next month or so.

Midland's civilian labor force held relatively steady in May at 90,197, down from 90,358 in April and from 91,531 last May.

Midland lost 100 jobs from April to May as 100-job gains each in the Education and Health Services and the Leisure and Hospitality sectors were partially offset by a 200-job loss in the Trade, Transportation and Utilities sector and a 100-job loss in the Mining, Logging and Construction sector.

For the 12 months from May 2015 to May 2016, Midland has lost 1,900 jobs, led by 1,700 jobs lost in the Mining, Logging and Construction sector and 700 jobs in the Trade, Transportation and Utilities sector. Government led job creation over the last year with 300 new jobs, followed by the Education and Health Services and the Leisure and Hospitality sectors with 200 jobs each.

Statewide, unemployment held at 4.4 percent a second month. The commission reports the state added 200 nonfarm jobs in May and has added 171,800 seasonally adjusted jobs over the last year, adding jobs in 13 of the last 14 months.

The lowest unemployment rate was in Amarillo at 2.8 percent while the highest was in McAllen-Edinburg-Mission at 7 percent.

Memorials are shown in front of Mother Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, S.C., on Thursday. Friday marked the one-year anniversary of the killing of nine black parishioners during bible study at the church

Mourners recall Charleston church victims at service

By Bruce Smith
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, S.C. — South Carolina's governor somberly held up programs from the funerals of the victims of the Charleston church shootings, saying Friday during a memorial service that the faith of those victims showed how to heal in the aftermath of still another mass shooting.

"As for me, I will forever know that there are angels on Earth," said Gov. Nikki Haley during a three-hour service that was alternately somber and then punctuated by joyous singing.

Friday was the anniversary of the shooting deaths of nine black parishioners during a Bible study at Emanuel AME Church. A white man, Dylann Roof, faces charges in both state and federal courts and prosecutors in each are seeking the death penalty.

Haley, who attended the funerals of all the victims, said she got to know the families of both those who were killed and the three survivors in the days and weeks following the shootings.

"There hasn't been a day since June 17, 2015, that I haven't thought about the 12," she said.

She recalled each victim, sometimes with gentle humor, as she showed the funeral programs she says she keeps as reminders.

The Rev. DePayne Middleton-Doctor "had the voice of an angel," she said.

Haley recalled state Sen. Clementa Pinckney, the Emanuel pastor who was slain as "a gentle giant" and a man "who never talked about what he was against. He always spoke about what he was for."

Haley said that in the wake of the shootings — after which many family members of the victims said they forgave Roof, the suspect charged in the deaths — the people of South Carolina "didn't have protests, they had vigils. They didn't have riots, they had hugs."

The College of Charleston's TD Arena, where the service was held, sits about 5,000 people and was about half full. The stage was lined with the pictures of the nine people killed. Above each were the words "Still Speaking from Eternity."

It's the same venue where President Barack Obama gave a rousing eulogy during the funeral for Pinckney that included a rendition of the hymn "Amazing Grace" for the packed audience at the TD Arena. The Obamas were accompanied by Vice President Joe Biden and his wife, Jill; nearly 6,000 people attended the funeral. Some 5,000 would-be mourners were turned away, apparently for lack of seating.

On Friday, a presidential aide read a message to the congregation from Obama and the first lady in which they said "as a nation we are deeply moved by your boundless love and your unshakeable resilience."

In the wake of the shootings, officials and businesses nationwide have taken steps to distance themselves from Confederate symbols and name. The suspect, Roof, had appeared in photos with the Confederate flag.

In Texas, the Austin school board voted to rename Robert E. Lee Elementary. The Houston school board voted to rename seven schools named for Confederate leaders. Ohio State Fair officials banned vendors from selling Confederate flag merchandise. In New Jersey, the nation's oldest and largest flag manufacturer decided a week after the shootings to stop making and selling the Confederate flag.

A massive fire following a pipeline explosion roars through a mostly residential neighborhood in San Bruno, Calif., on Sept. 9, 2010. One of the country's largest utility companies is set to face a jury in a criminal trial accusing it of misleading investigators in the wake of a deadly pipeline explosion in the San Francisco Bay Area. The September 2010 blast of a Pacific Gas & Electric Co. natural gas pipeline sent a giant plume of fire into the air in a neighborhood in San Bruno, killing eight people and destroying 38 homes. Opening arguments in the trial began Thursday. AP file photo

Prosecutor: Pacific Gas ignored regulations to cut costs

By Sudhin Thanawala
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Pacific Gas & Electric Co. ignored pipeline safety regulations to cut costs and tried to cover up its illegal practices by misleading federal officials investigating a deadly explosion of one of its natural gas pipelines in the San Francisco Bay Area, a prosecutor said Friday as a criminal trial against the utility giant got underway.

PG&E knew exactly what to do to comply with regulations but didn't do it, Assistant U.S. Attorney Hallie Hoffman said in her opening statement.

"Instead, it chose a cheaper method that did not ensure the safety of pipelines running through high-consequence areas," Hoffman said.

PG&E attorney Steven Bauer said the company's employees did what they could in the face of ambiguous regulations they struggled to understand.

"The evidence is going to show good, qualified people coming into work every day and doing the best they can under the circumstances they are in," he said.

A PG&E natural gas pipeline exploded in the city of San Bruno six years ago, sending a giant plume of fire into the air. The blast killed eight people and destroyed 38 homes. During the investigation that followed, prosecutors say the San Francisco-based utility misled federal officials about how it was identifying high-risk pipelines.

The standard the company used violated safety regulations and led to a failure to classify the San Bruno pipeline and other similar pipelines as high risk, prosecutors said in a 2014 indictment.

Hoffman said the company did not subject the pipelines to appropriate testing, choosing a cheaper method.

Bauer said the company's engineers did not think the pipelines posed a safety risk. The company also did not intend to mislead investigators, he said. It inadvertently sent them a draft policy about its standard for identifying high risk pipes, not one the company was actually following, he said.

PG&E has pleaded not guilty to one count of obstruction and multiple charges that it violated pipeline safety regulations by, for example, ignoring errors in its records about pipelines. It faces a $562 million fine if convicted.

Family members of blast victims along with San Bruno's mayor, fire chief and police chief were in the courtroom during Friday's opening statements.

Bauer cautioned jurors not to let the 2010 explosion "overwhelm" their evaluation of the case, saying the trial was not about determining compensation for the blast victims or determining future pipeline regulations.

Investigators have blamed the September 2010 blast in part on poor PG&E record-keeping that was based on incomplete and inaccurate pipeline information. California regulators fined the company $1.6 billion for the blast last year.

Week in Oil: Where did $50 oil go?

By Trevor Hawes
thawes@mrt.com

It was a rough week for oil.

Since hitting a year-high of $51.23 on June 8, the price of West Texas Intermediate futures has fallen $3.25 (6.34 percent). Friday's close snapped a six-day skid, finishing the week at $47.98, up $1.77 (3.83 percent).

WTI was down $1.09 (2.22 percent) on the week. Despite the recent fall, however, futures are up $11.22 (30.52 percent) for the year.

After 116 trading days, WTI futures finished in the $40 range 47 times and the $50 range just three times. The price has been down more than it's been up, seeing gains 54 times and losses 62 times.

The year-low is $26.21.

The Plains All American posted price for WTI was $44.50 a barrel on Friday, up $2 (4.71 percent) on the day but down $1 (2.2 percent) for the week. West Texas Sour was also up $2 on Friday, putting it back into $40 territory after briefly dipping below Thursday. Sour was priced at $40.90 and was down $1 (2.39 percent) for the week.

Before Thursday, sour had fetched $40 or more for 16 consecutive weeks. It's been in that range only 17 times. WTI posted has been above $40 for 28 straight weeks and has been priced in that range 38 times.

The lowest prices for 2016 have been $22.75 for WTI posted and $19.55 for sour.

On the year, WTI posted is up $11.25 (33.83 percent), while sour is up $8.90 (27.81 percent).

In other futures trading Friday, August contracts were up $1.82 to $48.56; September rose $1.84 to $49.09; and October increased $1.85 to $49.53. The nearest contract in the $50 range was December, which was $50.30.

Rig count

From 1A

A year ago this week, there were 363 rigs in Texas and 43 in New Mexico.

United States

The nationwide oil rig count jumped nine this week to 337, while the number of rigs searching for natural gas increased one to 86. In total, the U.S. had 424 rigs, up 10.

By location, there were 398 rigs on land, up 10; five in inland waters, unchanged; and 21 offshore, unchanged. All offshore rigs were in the Gulf of Mexico, which grew by one, offsetting the lone offshore rig in Alaska that went offline this week.

By drilling trajectory, there were 326 horizontal rigs, up three; 53 vertical rigs, up seven; and 45 directional rigs, unchanged.

The U.S. had 857 rigs at this time last year.

Most-active

Basins in the U.S. with the greatest amount of activity were the Permian, the Eagle Ford, the Cana Woodford (27), the Marcellus (24) and the Williston (24).

The most-active states were Texas, Oklahoma (58), Louisiana (46), North Dakota (24) and New Mexico.

Canada & North America

Canada added four rigs this week for a total of 69. Oil rigs fell one to 28; natural gas rigs rose four to 40; and one rig listed as miscellaneous went online. Canada had 136 rigs at this time last year.

The total number of rigs in the North America region rose 14 to 493. A year ago this week, there were 993 rigs in North America.

Kerry's Arctic climate change adventure hits Greenland

By Matthew Lee
Associated Press

ABOARD THE HDMS THETIS, Greenland — Sailing through fields of large icebergs aboard a Danish naval vessel, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry brought his tour of the Arctic to Greenland on Friday, visiting the Northern Hemisphere's largest glacier to bring attention to the dangers of climate change.

Hazarding a brief June snow and hail flurry in Disko Bay off Greenland's third largest city of Ilulissat, population 4,500, about 220 miles north of the Arctic Circle, Kerry was meeting with scientists researching the dramatic erosion of the Sermeq Kujalleq Glacier that is contributing to global sea rise. The icecap has receded 12.4 miles since 2001, with a large increase since 2002.

A number of factors, including increasing air temperatures, the rise of black carbon emissions that discolor the ice and make it absorb more heat, and the introduction of warm sub-surface water from the Gulf Stream which erodes the ice sheet from below, have all contributed to the retreat of the glacier, which is the most active outside Antarctica in terms of iceberg production.

"There is profound change throughout the Arctic region," said Kerry, clad in a green thermal parka and aviator sunglasses as Her Danish Majesty's Ship Thetis cruised around the bay. "There are combined forces having this impact, but we also know that human beings, by the choices we are making to provide our power, our energy, are having a profound negative impact. There is a gigantic transformation taking place."

The study of the Sermeq Kujalleq Glacier is considered critical to understanding the effects of climate change and notably as a laboratory for ice loss in the Antarctic, which is far less accessible but has the potential to be 100 times greater than in the Arctic, according to David Holland, an American scientist from New York University, who briefed Kerry and Danish Foreign Minister Kristian Jensen.

"Things are changing and we are perhaps the last generation than can do something about it," said Jensen, whose country handles Greenland's defense and foreign affairs under a home-rule agreement.

Holland from NYU and Soren Rysgaard of Greenland's Institute of Natural Resources estimated that the glacier could retreat by about 62 miles over the next 100 years it continues at its current rate. That would result in a significant rise in the sea levels but would be modest compared to the impact of similar ice loss in the Antarctic, Holland said.

The United States currently holds the chairmanship of the Arctic Council — the bloc of eight countries that administer territory at the Earth's northernmost latitudes — and as America's top diplomat, Kerry has made the health of oceans and combating climate change a priority. He will host an international conference on oceans in September, the third such event he has organized.

On Thursday, Kerry was in Norway's extreme north, visiting a polar research station in Ny-Alesund, the world's northernmost civilian settlement and viewing the Blomstrand Glacier, which has also receded significantly in the past 25 years to 30 years, with summer temperatures now 8 degrees and 11 degrees higher than they were.

Kerry was a champion of the landmark global climate change accord reached in Paris last year that seeks to limit the Earth's rise in temperature to 2 degrees centigrade, but he has consistently warned that more must be done, particularly in terms of reducing fossil fuel use and moving to clean renewable energy sources.

"The Paris accord "is not even enough," Kerry said. "There is no mistaking that we are contributing to climate change, we human beings."

Sanders says he'll work for Trump's defeat

Associated Press

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Pressing his "political revolution" to turn its attention to defeating Donald Trump, Democratic presidential candidate Bernie Sanders said he will work with Hillary Clinton to transform the Democratic Party itself and "create the America that we know we can become."

Sanders spoke Thursday night in a livestream address to political supporters two days after the final primary election of the nomination race. The major task they now face is to "make certain" the presumptive Republican nominee loses in November, he said, adding that he plans to begin his role in that process "in a very short period of time."

"But defeating Donald Trump cannot be our only goal," Sanders said, pointing to his 1,900 delegates at next month's Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia. "We must continue our grassroots efforts to create the America that we know we can become."

On Friday, Sanders campaign manager Jeff Weaver said a "tremendous burden" is falling on Clinton to demonstrate that she has heard the voices of the young people who powered Sanders' effort. Weaver said the Sanders team is in contact with the Clinton campaign daily as the two sides work to resolve differences.

Yet, when asked on MSNBC whether Sanders is still running for president, Weaver said repeatedly, "Yes he is."

Although Clinton has secured enough pledged delegates and superdelegates to become the presumptive nominee, Sanders did not concede the race or refer to Clinton as the likely nominee, instead offering a lengthy list of policy proposals he hopes to see approved by the party.

The two rivals met Tuesday night at a Washington hotel to discuss policy goals and plans. Sanders said that while it is "no secret" that he and Clinton have "strong disagreements on some very important issues," it was "also true that our views are quite close on others."

Lawsuits may offer fodder for Trump, Clinton attack ads

By Elliot Spagat
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — The presidential campaigns of Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump are both trying to prevent the release of videos that are critical to legal cases involving the candidates.

Trump's lawyers are intensifying efforts to stop the release of video of the presumptive Republican presidential nominee testifying under oath in a fraud lawsuit about the now-defunct Trump University. They told a federal judge in San Diego on Wednesday that the video could be used by the media and Trump's opponents during the campaign.

Lawyers for a top Clinton aide used similar arguments to persuade another judge to keep video depositions sealed in a lawsuit about the likely Democratic nominee's use of a private email server while she was America's top diplomat.

While the arguments are similar, judges may treat them differently.

In the Clinton case, a federal judge in the District of Columbia ruled last month that transcripts of all depositions be made public but that audio and video be sealed.

In Trump's case in San Diego, U.S. District Judge Gonzalo Curiel — a target of Trump's intense, enduring scorn — hasn't decided how much to release and whether it should include audio and video.

Late Wednesday, Trump lawyer Daniel Petrocelli expanded on why the videos should stay private, saying they could fuel a "media frenzy." His seven-page filing raises no objection to releasing transcripts.

"Owing to the danger . . . that a video may create in eliciting bias on the part of its viewer, the Court has a duty to prevent their disclosure because they can taint the jury pool. Undoubtedly, these videos also will be used by the media and others in connection with the presidential campaign," he wrote.

The outcome may shape attack ads on issues that have dogged both candidates. John Geer, a political science professor at Vanderbilt University who studies attack ads in presidential campaigns, said video is "great stuff" to tarnish opponents.

"It helps to make the case by having not only the words but the person actually saying them," Geer said. "It's not just the message, it's the messenger. ... Sometimes the transcripts will be sterile. You can't detect sarcasm. The body language makes a difference."

Partial transcripts have been released of Trump testifying at an all-day deposition Dec. 10 at his New York office and for three hours on Jan. 21 at a Las Vegas law office. Several news organizations are seeking full disclosure of those sessions — including video — and Curiel is expected to rule at a hearing June 30 or soon after.

Lawyers representing Trump University's former customers in two class-action suits in San Diego argue they should be permitted to release video excerpts because they present "a more complete picture" than the transcripts.

Trump's tone, facial expressions, gestures and body language show "complete and utter unfamiliarity" with Trump University's instructors and instruction, despite the business mogul's previous statements that he was extensively involved, the attorneys wrote in a filing last week. They said Trump also made "many spontaneous and ad hominem remarks that are not reflected in the paper transcript of his depositions."

Clinton's campaign needled Trump on Thursday with a news release titled "What's Donald Trying to Hide?" Yet a top Clinton aide took the same position in the lawsuit over Clinton's emails.

U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan sided with lawyers for Clinton aide Cheryl Mills, who objected to releasing video but not the transcript. Her lawyers argued that "snippets or soundbites of the deposition may be publicized in a way that exploits Ms. Mills' image and voice in an unfair and misleading manner."

Mills, who was Clinton's chief of staff at the State Department, said during her five-hour deposition last month that she discussed Clinton's private server with a technical aide who helped set up and run the system, according to a transcript released by Judicial Watch, the conservative advocacy group that sued for access to records. Mills is among a half-dozen current and former officials whom Judicial Watch plans to question.

In portions of Trump's testimony that have been released, he acknowledged that he plays on people's fantasies.

"Sure, you want to — life, you want to — you want to play to something that's positive and beautiful. And you can use the word 'fantasy' if you want. Or I could use the word 'fantasy,' but, sure, you want to play to something that's beautiful and good and successful," he said.

Trump couldn't recall names of his employees, undermining his advertising pitch that he "hand-picked" them. When confronted with a statement by Trump University's former president that Trump never picked instructors, he said: "This is the longest deposition I've ever done in terms of no break. So I need breaks because I have to make some calls."

Newly found blood vials allow for funeral of 9/11 fire chief

By Frank Eltman
Associated Press

ST. JAMES, N.Y. — Thousands of firefighters in their dress blues stood at attention and saluted Friday as a flag-draped casket passed carrying two tiny vials of blood, the only known remains of a comrade who died in the Sept. 11 attacks.

For 15 years, the family of Battalion Chief Lawrence Stack was unable to put him to rest with a Roman Catholic funeral Mass because no trace of his body was ever found in the rubble of the World Trade Center. But the way was finally cleared when they recently discovered the blood, which the 58-year-old Stack had donated as part of a bone marrow drive for a child with cancer before the attacks.

"He gives blood for a young cancer kid — that's just Larry," said Rich Brandt, a chief with the Long Beach, California, Fire Department, who began his career as a member of the Fire Department of New York and learned under Stack when Stack was a captain in a Manhattan fire house. Brandt showed off a bracelet with Stack's name on it that he said he has worn since 2001.

"He was kind of a dad to me," Brandt said.

Stack's own two sons — both New York City firefighters — stood watch on the back of a ceremonial firetruck bearing the flag-draped casket with the vials of blood as it passed by firefighters and dignitaries standing at attention. The New York City Emerald Society Pipe Band led the procession, playing "Amazing Grace" as the casket was led into Saints Philip and James Roman Catholic Church, in St. James on eastern Long Island.

Lt. Michael Stack said during the funeral service that his father, who was a safety expert with the department, had been working in his office preparing a report on the deaths of three firefighters killed exactly 15 years ago Friday — June 17, 2001. When he learned that planes had flown into the World Trade Center, Stack raced to the scene and began helping people flee the burning towers. He was last seen assisting a man who had injured his leg when the south tower collapsed with him on the ground below.

Brandt said his friend could always be counted on to help others.

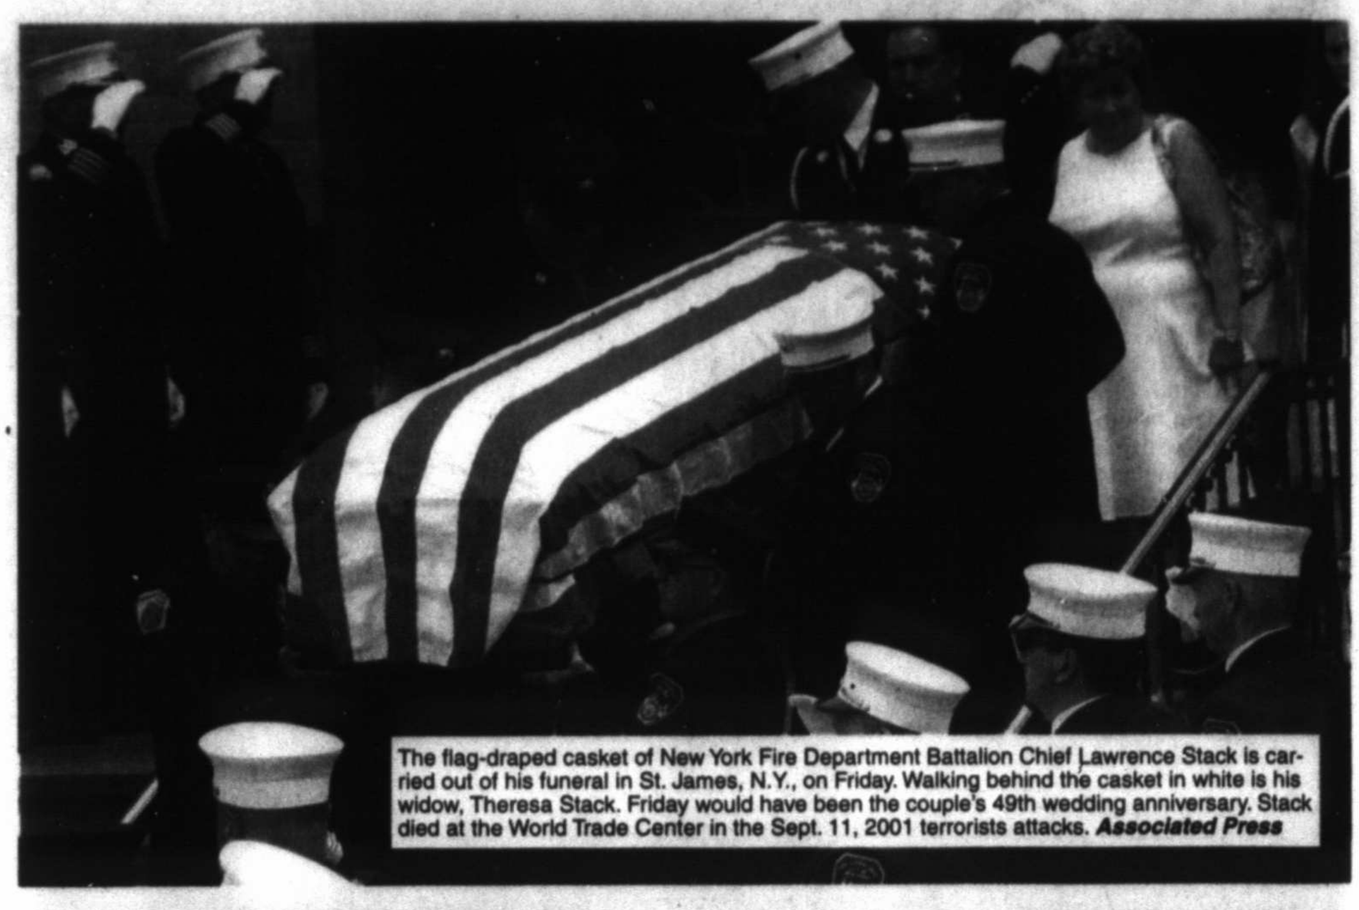
"Not only did he help people that day, but his entire career and his entire life was about helping people," Brandt said.

Theresa Stack, marking what would have been her 49th wedding anniversary Friday to the fallen firefighter, told reporters last week that she had never given up hope that his remains would be found. About a year ago, her family reached out to the New York Blood Bank after recalling both had donated blood weeks before 9/11. When vials of his blood were located, plans were made for a funeral.

Theresa Stack, who was presented with her husband's helmet as she left the church, said the family wanted to hold a public funeral "so people don't forget" 9/11.

Ray Pfeiffer, a retired firefighter with cancer, attended the funeral in a wheelchair.

"Larry was killed by a terrorist," he said. "Whether it was done 15 years ago or whether it was done yesterday, he deserves a line-of-duty funeral and he's going to get that respect. Larry was a good man."



The flag-draped casket of New York Fire Department Battalion Chief Lawrence Stack is carried out of his funeral in St. James, N.Y., on Friday. Walking behind the casket in white is his widow, Theresa Stack. Friday would have been the couple's 49th wedding anniversary. Stack died at the World Trade Center in the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorists attacks. Associated Press

Taylor's Boswell to take over Lee boys basketball

By Will Korn
wkorn@mrt.com

Former Taylor High School boys head basketball coach Justin Boswell has been officially hired as the new head coach of the Lee boys basketball team, the Reporter-Telegram learned on Friday. He will replace the outgoing Chris Packer.

Packer

Boswell confirmed to the Reporter-Telegram that he has officially accepted the job offer from Midland ISD and is awaiting approval from the board of trustees. Boswell said he is anticipating arriving in Midland for the approval early next week.

Packer is set to take an assistant job at Benjamin Davis High School in Houston. He confirmed that he has been officially hired but is awaiting approval from Aldine ISD. Packer said the move was a personal decision and, pending approval, is tentatively scheduled to begin work with the Falcons in August.

Midland ISD Executive Director of Athletics Randy Rowe was not immediately available for comment on Friday.

Boswell, 38, had spent the previous nine seasons as Taylor's head coach, where he compiled a record of 170-114 with the Class 4A Ducks. Boswell guided Taylor to the playoffs in six of his nine years with the program. In the last three seasons combined, he coached his team to a 74-22 mark.

Boswell, who is originally from Crane, said the application and hiring process materialized fairly quickly. He said he had heard from coaching colleagues around the state that there was a coaching vacancy at Lee and he quickly submitted an application to MISD.

He added that he's aware of the tradition and history with the Rebels' athletic program and is excited to take the reigns of the program. Lee will be Boswell's second head coaching job.

"I'm very familiar with Lee, it's one of the premier athletic programs in the state and it was very intriguing to me," said Boswell. "It's (going to be) great to see some familiar faces and people I've known since childhood. That brings familiarity and comfort.

"It's been 20 years since I've been there (West Texas) and I'm really excited for this opportunity. It's tough to leave (Taylor) but Lee was a great opportunity that I

RockHounds catcher Beau Taylor walks to the plate during the game against San Antonio on Friday at Security Bank Ballpark.

Converted infielder Taylor thriving behind the plate

By Christopher Hadorn
chadorn@mrt.com

Horror movies evoke a negative emotional reaction from their audiences.

Taylor had quite the emotional reaction when he first discovered in stunning fashion that he was being converted to catcher.

During his collegiate days at Central Florida, Taylor was a third baseman by trade until he walked up to his locker.

"On the first day of practice, I saw catcher's gear in my locker," Taylor said. "I said, 'ahh man.' To keep my scholarship, I had to catch. I had to grind through that and work hard with my catching coach in college. It's tough, but it's been a fun road."

Now a professional, Taylor has thrived behind the plate.

The Midland RockHounds catcher was selected to the Texas League South All-Star team this week for both his performance with the bat and on defense.

The 26-year-old entered Friday's games with a .282 batting average with a .394 on-base percentage in 142 at-bats with the 'Hounds.

As a catcher, Taylor has thrown out 34 percent of attempted base stealers, a highly respectable rate.

Although the Florida native has blossomed in his new position, it took him awhile to fully embrace the duties.

Taylor had to get accustomed to donning the added equipment of catching and constantly being in the squatting position.

"It was definitely rough," Taylor said. "I had to break in a lot of muscles that I never had to use before, which was like my groin, my hips. My hips were a little tight so I did so many stretches with our trainers in college, just trying to make them as loose as possible. That took a little bit. In the long run, it definitely helped out for me."

The 6-foot, 205-pound Taylor says the best days of catching is when he calls a good game, blocks all the balls in the dirt and doesn't get hit by a foul ball.

Sometimes Taylor nearly goes through the entire game without getting hit by a ball or bat before he gets his cage rattled in the ninth inning.

"Ninth inning with two outs, I haven't

James grateful to be back competing at Olympic Trials

By Christopher Hadorn
chadorn@mrt.com

There might not be a diver more grateful to compete in the 2016 U.S. Olympic Team Trials for Diving than Midland High graduate Anna James.

It's been a long, arduous road to Indianapolis for James.

The Purdue University diver hasn't been able to compete for two years because of several setbacks, which included complications from three knee surgeries, removal of her gallbladder and a bout with anorexia nervosa.

James

James and her partner Katrina Young, of Florida State, will compete today in the women's synchronized 10-meter platform at Indiana University Natatorium.

James didn't believe that diving at the Olympic Trials was going to be possible for her.

"I got back in the water in April, and I have just been doing some simple basic stuff then, and I didn't actually start doing the dives that I am competing in here until about five weeks ago," James said. "It was a really quick turnaround. I wasn't even expecting to be ready.

"I'm really happy to be where I am right now. Like I said, I wasn't expecting to be ready to compete, compete platform at least, until school started and things just kind of took off."

James said her knee problems date back to her Midland High days where she won the Class 5A girls state title in 2013.

She said she had a lateral release procedure to realign the knee cap in high school, and later had a torn meniscus repaired before enrolling at Purdue.

The most invasive surgery occurred after her redshirt freshman season.

"They had to do a full patella realignment surgery, which was much more intensive surgery," James said. "It was not arthroscopic; it was completely open, and they moved bone over. That one was a pretty long recovery compared to the first two."

If knee surgery wasn't enough, James also had to battle an eating disorder and undergo an operation to have her gallbladder removed.

"I started having pain probably around my junior year of high school, and it took us a long time to figure out what it was," James said of her gallbladder symptoms. "I had multiple scans, multiple doctor visits. Then they finally figured it out and they were like 'you're going to have it taken out at some point.'

"But I was planning on going to the World Championships that summer, so I was going to wait and do it afterwards. When I got to Purdue that summer, about

Briles withdraws court filing amid settlement reports

Associated Press

WACO — Fired Baylor coach Art Briles has withdrawn a demand for new lawyers in a federal civil rights lawsuit against him and the university amid reports he has settled a contract dispute with the school.

Briles

Briles' lawyers had told a federal court Thursday he wanted attorneys separate from Baylor and had no intention of settling the lawsuit filed by a woman who was raped by a Baylor football player. The filing suggested a bitter court fight was brewing between Baylor and the coach who claimed his May 26 firing was wrongful termination.

Briles withdrew the motion Friday as multiple media outlets cited anonymous sources in reporting Briles and Baylor had reached a settlement on his contract, which ran through 2023. According to USA Today's coaches' salary database, Briles made $4.2 million in 2015. Baylor, a private school, has not disclosed contract details.

A Baylor spokeswoman declined comment. Briles' attorneys did not respond to requests for comment.

Baylor fired Briles after an investigation found the school mishandled sex assault allegations for years, including some made against football players.

As part of their initial court motion, Briles' attorneys released a letter he sent Baylor lawyers accusing the school of using him as a scapegoat for the administration's failings to enforce federal rules against gender discrimination. Briles' attorney demanded the school give him all files related to the Title IX lawsuit that lists Briles and Baylor as co-defendants.

He also demanded all information Baylor provided to the Pepper Hamilton law firm that conducted the investigation that resulted in his firing.

Baylor publicly released a 13-page finding of fact that had accused football coaches and staff with interfering with investigations into sexual assault complaints against players, and even impeding potential criminal proceedings. But the report did not identify Briles or any coach by name and Briles remains the only coach to be fired. All of his former assistants, including his son, Kendal Briles, and son-in-law Jeff Lebby, remain on staff.

Briles has complained that he was not allowed to see the evidence used to fire him.

Dustin Johnson tied for lead at US Open

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

OAKMONT, Pa. — One year after Dustin Johnson let the U.S. Open slip away from him at Chambers Bay, he drove his way to the top of the leaderboard Friday at Oakmont.

Immaculate from tee-to-green, Johnson endured a marathon day of 36 holes with a game that makes him look tough to beat. He didn't make a bogey in his opening round of 3-under 67, and he dropped only one shot in his 69 that ended just as the siren sounded to stop play because of darkness.

Johnson was at 4-under 136, two shots ahead of anyone else who completed the second round in the rain-delayed U.S. Open.

More than just his long ball, one of Johnson's greatest assets is a short memory. He already has squandered chances in four majors, none more crushing than last year when he was a 12-foot eagle putt away from winning and three-putted to finish one behind Jordan Spieth.

Asked if he was motivated by Chambers Bay, Johnson deadpanned, "What happened last year?"

Andrew Landry had a much shorter day.

The 28-year-old qualifier only had to hit one shot Friday when he returned in the morning to make a 10-foot birdie putt for a 66 and the lead. It was the best opening round in 10 majors at Oakmont, beating a record shared by Ben Hogan and Tom Watson.

Landry also became the first player in 30 years to have the sole lead after his first U.S. Open round.

Three storm delays Thursday left a disjointed schedule and no clear picture of who's in control. The nine players who completed the opening round Thursday, including 19-year-old Scottie Scheffler and his 69, had the entire day off Friday.

Those who had to return to finish the first round initially were given tee times deep into the evening until the USGA decided it best that everyone from that half of the field — including Spieth at 2 over — start Saturday morning.

Johnson went 27 holes without a bogey in a U.S. Open held on its toughest course.

The streak finally ended when he found a deep bunker left of the first fairway, advanced only 40 yards and narrowly missed a 20-foot par putt. He missed plenty of other birdie chances along the way, not alarming because Oakmont's greens are difficult to putt.

Far more impressive was his accuracy.

Johnson missed only three fairways in the second round, and he has missed only five greens through two rounds. If the lead stands after the second round is over, it would match the lowest 36-hole score in a U.S. Open at Oakmont. And he still hasn't made a birdie on a par 5 in two rounds.

Sergio Garcia, who also knows his share of heartache in the majors, stayed with Johnson as best he could. He made a tough par on No. 4 by playing his third shot from the fifth fairway. And he finished his round with a 50-foot par save for a 70.

Garcia was at 2-under 138, along with Scott Piercy, who also went 68-70.

"I'm too old for this," the 36-year-old Spaniard said. "We know how difficult the U.S. Open is, and here at Oakmont even tougher."

On the leaderboard, they were one shot behind Lee Westwood, who closed with two birdies in the morning for a 67.

"It was good, one of the best starts I've ever had," Westwood said. "I felt confident out there and hit a lot of good shots. I was shaping it both ways, which you need to do in U.S. Opens to get at a lot of the flags."

Daniel Summerhays, who got into the field as an alternate, had a tournament-best 65 and joined Andy Sullivan (68) at 1-under 139. Jim Furyk, a runner-up at Oakmont in the 2007 U.S. Open, also was at 1 under and faced the ninth hole Saturday morning to finish his round.

Spieth, who finished off a round of only one birdie for a 72, returned to Oakmont in the afternoon to putt. Rory McIlroy, who matched his worst score in a U.S. Open with a 77, came back to work on his swing.

On the course, other stars were struggling.

Jason Day, the No. 1 player in the world, opened with a 76 and was at 5 over with three holes remaining. Phil Mickelson was in danger of missing the cut for the second straight time at Oakmont. He was at 7 over with two holes remaining.

For Johnson, it's time to put up his feet and contemplate another run at a major.

"He played awesome," Garcia said. "It's impressive. He drove the ball great, very far. I don't think he missed many fairways at all. Out of 36 holes here at Oakmont with only one bogey, it shows you have to play really, really well. He's going to be tough to beat, but I'll give it a shot."

JAMES

three weeks before I was supposed to leave for World Championships, the pain just got so bad and I went ahead and just had the surgery."

James sought treatment for anorexia during her first year at Purdue as well.

The MHS alum said the stress of going to college took a toll on her, affecting her eating habits.

The experience inspired James to change her major to psychology this past semester. Her long-term goals is to pursue a Master's degree and Ph.D. in clinical psychology. James wants to be a therapist that helps people with eating disorders.

After all the time missed away from the pool, James has a deep appreciation for diving again.

"It's been really disappointing more mentally," James said. "We're in a sport where it's obviously very hard, injuries are hard. But it really made me find my passion for the sport again. It's hard to take two years off for something you love. It just made me that much more excited to come back and really give it my all."

James said she still feels pain in her knee, but she has built up the strength in her leg and she has confidence in her physical capabilities going into the U.S. Olympic Trials.

While many of her diving foes will be on edge over a chance to advance to the Olympic games, James will be enjoying every second she gets on the 33-foot high platform today.

"My main thing for this meet is just to enjoy being back in this sport," James said. "No matter what happens, I'm just so thankful to be here.

"I've learned that being here is a privilege. I learned how passionate I am about the sport because when I was really struggling, a part of me didn't know if it was worth it."

BOSWELL

couldn't pass up."

Boswell added that he sees potential for quite a bit of growth in the Rebels' program in the coming seasons. Lee has won just six games in the last two years.

"I've seen the program has been very competitive in many games and came up just short," said Boswell. "It will be critical for me and my staff to develop relationships with the kids in the program. We want to win now and hopefully we can develop some of those winning habits. I refuse to believe there isn't talent at Lee High School."

Boswell said it is unclear at this time if any of his coaching staff from Taylor will join him at Lee.

Packer, who played at Lee from 1997-2000 and who accumulated an 18-60 record in three seasons coaching the Rebels, said he was appreciative of the chance to coach at his alma mater, but that he needed to make a change.

"It's my alma mater," Packer said. "I'm thankful to Dr. (MISD Superintendent Ryder) Warren for the opportunity. I definitely enjoyed it, especially during that first year (the 2013-14 season), but it was time (to go)."

BLUE JAYS 13
ORIOLES 3

BALTIMORE — Michael Saunders set career highs with three homers and eight RBIs, and the Toronto Blue Jays blew past the Baltimore Orioles 13-3 on Friday night for their fourth straight victory.

Saunders connected with two on against Mike Wright (3-4) in the first inning, added another three-run drive off Wright in the fourth and went deep against Ubaldo Jimenez with a man on in the sixth.

Batting in the eighth against T.J. McFarland and with the chance to tie the major league record of four homers in a game, Saunders bounced into a bases-loaded double play.

That did little to ruin Saunders' finest game in the big leagues. He raised his home run total for the season to 15, second-most in his career behind the 19 he hit for Seattle in 2012. In eight games against Baltimore this season, Saunders is 18 for 33 with five home runs and 12 RBIs.

Josh Donaldson and Justin Smoak also homered for the surging Blue Jays. They have won seven of eight to move within a game of first-place Baltimore in the AL East.

INDIANS 3
WHITE SOX 2

CLEVELAND — Carlos Santana hit a leadoff homer in the ninth inning to lift Cleveland past Chicago.

Santana drove an 0-2 pitch from Nate Jones (2-2) over the wall in center for his 14th homer, stopping Cleveland's three-game losing streak.

Jason Kipnis' RBI double in the eighth inning put the AL Central-leading Indians in front, but Avisail Garcia tied it for the White Sox with a one-out double in the ninth against closer Cody Allen (2-3).

MARINERS 8
RED SOX 4

BOSTON — Franklin Gutierrez homered in his first two at-bats and drove in a career-high six runs in Seattle's victory over Boston.

Robinson Cano added a pair of RBIs, including his 19th homer with a leadoff shot in the seventh, to help Seattle win its second straight following a four-game losing streak.

Hisashi Iwakuma (6-5) went seven innings, allowing four runs on nine hits. Steve Cishek came in to end a threat in the ninth and picked up his 16th save.

The Mariners roughed up former teammate Roenis Elias (0-1) early in his first start for Boston.

MARLINS 5
ROCKIES 1

MIAMI — Adam Conley and four relievers combined on a one-hitter, and Miami snapped Colorado's four-game winning streak.

Struggling Marlins slugger Giancarlo Stanton had a two-out, two-run single in the seventh for his first multiple-RBI game since May 6. He also had a single and a walk in four plate appearances, raising his average to .200. Christian Yelich put Miami ahead to stay with a two-run homer.

Ichiro Suzuki had a pinch-hit single for his 2,980th career hit.

Nick Wittgren (2-1) was the winner, and Jon Gray (4-3) took the loss.

DIAMONDBACKS 10
PHILLIES 2

PHILADELPHIA — Peter O'Brien and Yasmany Tomas each hit two of Arizona's team-record six home runs to lead the Diamondbacks past Philadelphia.

Paul Goldschmidt and Wellington Castillo also went deep for Arizona in the first game of a 10-game trip. Goldschmidt also singled and doubled while extending his hitting streak to 11 games.

O'Brien, who drove in four runs, has homered for all three of his hits this season. He was called up from Triple-A Reno on June 10 and is 3 for 20.

Every starter had a hit for the Diamondbacks, who finished with 16.

Robbie Ray (4-5) allowed two runs and seven hits in six innings with seven strikeouts and one walk. Adam Morgan (1-6) was the loser.

BRAVES 5
METS 1

NEW YORK — John Gant, the rookie righty with the weird windup, earned his first big league win by beating the team that traded him away last summer, pitching Atlanta past New York.

Gant (1-1) threw two-hit ball for 6 2/3 innings, helping the Braves post their first three-game winning streak since mid-April. They started the day tied with Minnesota for the worst record in baseball.

Gant gave up one run, struck out five and walked two in his second start in the majors. The Mets might have been thrown off by his mechanics — he lifts his left leg as if he's going to begin his motion, but puts it down, comes to a full stop and then goes into a normal delivery.

Atlanta's Freddie Freeman kept up his extra-base hit spree with an RBI double and also singled twice.

CHICAGO — Jake Arrieta pitched two-hit ball over six innings, Matt Szczur homered, Albert Almora Jr. had three hits and Chicago beat Pittsburgh.

Arrieta (11-1) struck out 11 and walked three to help the Cubs start the weekend series on a strong note after dropping two of three at Washington.

Arrieta won his second straight start since his streak of 20 regular-season winning decisions ended. The only hits he allowed were back-to-back singles by Jordy Mercer and Chris Stewart in the third.

Szczur hit a two-run homer in the first inning on Francisco Liriano's second pitch of the game.

Almora had an RBI double during a three-run sixth that broke it open and drove in another with a single in the seventh. He raised his average to .429 in nine games since he was called up from the minors.

The Pirates fell below .500 at 33-34 with their eighth loss in nine games. They were shut out for the first time in a regular-season game since they lost to St. Louis on Sept. 28. Liriano is 4-7.

Interleague

GIANTS 5
RAYS 1

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jeff Samardzija threw a four-hitter and San Francisco won its sixth consecutive game by beating Tampa Bay Pride Night before the biggest regular-season crowd at Tropicana Field in a decade.

The announced attendance of 40,135 was the first regular-season turnout over 40,000 at the Rays' ballpark since opening day in 2006 against Baltimore (40,199). Tampa Bay entered averaging 16,037 in home attendance this season, second-lowest in the majors.

The Rays dedicated this year's event to the victims of Sunday's mass shooting in Orlando.

Samardzija (8-4), who was 0-2 with a 7.36 ERA in his previous three starts, retired 22 of 23 before Brad Miller homered with two outs in the ninth.

Brandon Crawford and Gregor Blanco had two RBIs apiece and Brandon Belt homered for the NL West-leading Giants, a season-high 16 games over .500.

ROCKHOUNDS 1, MISSIONS 0, 7 INNINGS
At Security Bank Ballpark

TOP HITTERS: San Antonio left fielder Nick Torres went 2-for-4 with an RBI and a run scored in the early game. Torres' 75 hits rank second in the Texas League. ... J.P. Sportman and Danny Oh each had two hits for Midland in Game 1. ... In the late game, RockHounds right fielder Tyler Marincov provided the contest's only extra-base hit with a RBI double.

TOP PITCHERS: In the first affair, the RockHounds bullpen spoiled a potential win for starter Daniel Gossett, who held the Missions to only one run, three hits and no walks over five innings, while striking out five. ... Midland's Ben Bracewell, Kris Hall and Jake Sanchez combined on a two-hit shutout in Game 2 of the twin-bill. Holding a one-run lead, Sanchez recorded six consecutive outs in relief to secure the win. Bracewell spun four scoreless innings of one-hit ball, lowering his ERA to 1.89.

HIGHLIGHTS: In the first game, the RockHounds jumped ahead 2-1 in the third inning when Sportman ripped a two-run double to left field, scoring Franklin Barreto and Oh. Down to their final at-bat in Game 1, Missions first baseman Taylor Lindsey tied the game at 2-2 with a sacrifice fly to center field, plating Torres. San Antonio scored the go-ahead run in the top of the eighth when shortstop Jose Rondon cracked a first-pitch RBI single to center field, driving in Nelson Ward. ... In the second game, Midland scored the game's only and deciding run when Marincov launched a double to right-center field to bring home Viosergy Rosa.

NOTES: The two teams played a doubleheader to make up a May 15 rainout in San Antonio. ... RockHounds pitcher Sam Bragg left in the sixth inning of Game 1 after catching a hard line drive off the bat of Nelson Ward. ... Sportman started at second base in the night cap, his first action at the keystone since playing three games at second for high Single-A Stockton in 2015. ... Rosa has now reached base safely in nine consecutive games. ... Corpus Christi clinched the South Division first half championship with a 2-0 win at Frisco on Thursday.

TODAY'S PROBABLES: San Antonio - RHP T.J. Weir (1-2, 5.40 ERA); Midland - RHP Raul Alcantara (5-4, 4.16)

Hamels pitches Rangers to 1-0 win over Cardinals

By Joe Harris
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Rougned Odor homered and Cole Hamels pitched 7 2/3 innings as the Texas Rangers beat the St. Louis Cardinals 1-0 on Friday night.

Hamels (7-1) allowed three hits while striking out six and walking three. He lowered his road ERA to 1.64 this season and turned in his fourth consecutive quality start.

Hamels scattered five baserunners and allowed only one to reach second.

Odor homered on the first pitch he saw in the fifth, hitting it 433 feet to straightaway center. It was Odor's third homer in as many games and the 19th for the Rangers in their last eight games.

Sam Dyson picked up his 12th save.

The Rangers have won four straight, improving to an AL-best 43-25. Texas improved to 4-0 all-time at Busch Stadium in the regular season and is a win away from winning a franchise-record eighth consecutive series.

Michael Wacha (2-7) lost a career-high seventh straight decision, despite allowing one run over 7 2/3 innings. He is the first Cardinals starter to lose seven straight decisions since Kip Wells in 2007.

It was the second straight quality start for Wacha, who gave up two runs in seven innings on Friday at Pittsburgh.

Matt Carpenter was the lone Cardinal to have success against Hamels, reaching all four times on two hits and two walks.

After reaching a season-high seven games over .500 on Sunday, the Cardinals have lost three straight and fell to 15-19 at home.

WELCOME BACK

The Cardinals recalled 2B Kolten Wong and optioned OF Jeremy Hazelbaker to Triple-A Memphis. Wong hit .429 with four homers and 11 RBI in seven games at Memphis and he also played center field in three of those games.

TRAINER'S ROOM

Rangers: RHP Tom Wilhelmsen cleared waivers and declined an outright assignment to Triple-A Round Rock, becoming a free agent. ... RHP Nick Martinez will start Saturday instead of Yu Darvish (shoulder).

Cardinals: RHP Seth Maness (elbow) threw a scoreless inning at Triple-A Memphis on Thursday, his second in as many days.

TAYLOR

been hit then a ball just stings you in the thigh or your shoulder," Taylor said. "A couple weeks ago, I got hit in the cup and it didn't feel the best. It is the 'tools of ignorance.'"

With catcher Carson Blair on the 7-day disabled list, Taylor has been the recipient of added playing time and RockHounds manager Ryan Christenson has taken advantage of it by making Taylor a presence in the middle of Midland's lineup.

"Beau has always been good behind the plate," Christenson said. "I like the way he controls the game as far as calling the game."

"I'm happy that he's having a great year," Christenson added. "He needed it."

Gauchos, Arizona 'fly flag' for West in College World Series

By Eric Olson
Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — UC Santa Barbara and Arizona were best in the West. Thing is, the perception throughout college baseball is that the level of play was down in that part of the country this year.

The Gauchos and Wildcats are in position to change some minds now.

Both play their College World Series Bracket 1 openers Saturday, with Santa Barbara (42-18-1) facing Oklahoma State (41-20) in the afternoon and Arizona (44-21) meeting No. 3 national seed Miami (50-12) at night.

"Fly the flag for the West? Yeah, I would say there's a bit of that feeling, considering two teams from the West made it to the World Series when there wasn't a (regional) host in the West. That's a very difficult and challenging thing to do," Santa Barbara coach Andrew Checketts said Friday.

The Gauchos are 5-0 in the NCAA Tournament after freshman Sam Cohen hit a pinch walk-off grand slam to complete a super-regional sweep at No. 2 Louisville last Sunday and send them to Omaha for the first time. The Wildcats have won six of seven, with Cesar Salazar's two-out, bases-loaded single in the bottom of the 11th inning giving them a walk-off win at Mississippi State last Saturday. The Wildcats are here for the first time since winning the 2012 national title.

Arizona's Luke Soroko, left, talks to Kyle Lewis (28) during practice at TD Ameritrade Park in Omaha, Neb., on Friday. Arizona will play Miami today in the NCAA College World Series.

Sunday's Bracket 2 openers pit No. 5 Texas Tech (46-18) against TCU (47-16) and No. 1 Florida (52-14) against first-time CWS participant Coastal Carolina (49-16). The winners in double-elimination bracket play advance to the best-of-three finals beginning June 27.

As the Atlantic Coast Conference and Southeastern Conference dominated this season, Arizona tied for third in the Pac-12 behind a Utah team that had an overall losing record and Santa Barbara finished third in a Big West ranked eighth in conference RPI.

Eleven teams from the West made the NCAA Tournament, but for the first time since 1994 no team west of Lubbock, Texas, hosted a regional. Also, no western team was higher than No. 21 in the RPI after the regular season.

"Hearing that the West is down and this and that, it's like if you're in the trenches of competing the way this team had to every weekend to have success, I don't look at it that way," first-year Arizona coach Jay Johnson said. "I know how good a coach Coach Checketts is. I know the quality in the Big West. I've coached in the Mountain West and West Coast Conference and now in the Pac-12. It's great baseball out there."

Things to know as the 70th CWS begins:

STARTING PITCHERS: Santa Barbara's Shane Bieber (12-3, 2.84 ERA) will be matched against Oklahoma State's Thomas Hatch (8-2, 2.04), and Miami will go with Michael Mediavilla (11-1, 3.11). Arizona's Johnson said he would wait until Saturday to name his starter. On Sunday, Texas Tech's Steven Gingery (4-2, 3.25) will go against TCU's Jared Janczak (7-3, 2.40) and Florida's Logan Shore (12-0, 2.24) will be matched against Coastal Carolina's Andrew Beckwith (12-1, 2.12).

FEELING PRESSURE? Florida entered the season as the favorite to win the national championship, was No. 1 in the polls for most of the season and was made top seed for the tournament. Coach Kevin O'Sullivan said the SEC schedule, particularly late road series, helped prepare his team for the final leg of its quest to win the program's first national title. "I don't know if there's any more pressure now than there was from the beginning," he said. "Our players have handled it as good as they could have. They're excited about having the draft behind them. Since last Friday, the second day of the draft, I noticed a big sigh of relief and everyone was excited to move forward." Eight Gators were drafted.

POKE PITCHING: Oklahoma State has a 1.00 ERA in five national tournament games with 44 strikeouts against 16 walks. Hatch and fellow starters Tyler Buffett and Jensen Elliott have allowed three earned runs over 34 innings.

MIAMI DEFENSE: Hurricanes coach Jim Morris said this is his best defensive team in his 22 years at Miami. Their .983 fielding percentage is tied for best in the nation.

MLB Alumni: Mickey Brantley, Kirt Manwaring.

Short Hops: Chanticleers have won 38 of its last 46 games after an 11-8 start. ... Ran away with Big South regular-season title by seven games. ... Leads nation with 94 home runs. ... Set school record by hitting seven HRs in its final regular-season game against Campbell and has hit four in a game seven times. ... Remillard's 19 HRs are most among CWS players. ... Chanticleers can play small ball as well, having laid down 70 sacrifice bunts and having the runner who advanced score 50 times (72 percent). ... Highest-scoring team in the CWS, at 7.5 runs a game.

Quotable: "When I got hired, I made the distinction of telling them that one day this program was going to Omaha, and back then they thought I was smoking something, at least the looks I got when I first started. As great as this club is, all the ones before that have an equal piece of this. They set the stage for these guys and the reason why most of them are here." — Gilmore.

FLORIDA (52-14)

Coach: Kevin O'Sullivan (396-187, 9 years at Florida and overall).

Road to Omaha: Gainesville Regional: beat Bethune-Cookman 9-3, beat UConn 6-5, beat Georgia Tech 10-1. Gainesville Super Regional: lost to Florida State 3-0, beat Florida State 5-0, beat Florida State 7-0.

2016 record vs. CWS teams: 2-1.

Last CWS appearance: 2015.

All-time record in CWS: 14-19 in 9 appearances.

Meet the Gators: C Mike Rivera (.253, 9 HR, 47 RBIs), 1B Peter Alonso (.373, 13, 58), 2B Deacon Liput (.272, 3, 36), 3B Jonathan India (.303, 4, 40), SS Dalton Guthrie (.309, 1, 22), LF Ryan Larson (.163, 0, 7), CF Buddy Reed (.261, 4, 32), RF Nelson Maldonado (.262, 6, 30), DH JJ Schwarz (.295, 7, 60). MLB Alumni: David Eckstein, Mark Ellis, Rob Murphy, Matt LaPorta, Steve Lombardozzi, Mike Perez, Al Rosen, Mike Stanley, Robby Thompson, Brad Wilkerson.

Short Hops: Gators pitchers come to Omaha having thrown 22 consecutive shutout innings. ... Fifth CWS appearance in O'Sullivan's nine seasons. ... Alonso is 13 for 25 in the national tournament with four homers, four doubles, 10 runs scored and 11 RBIs. ... Opponents are batting .173, best mark among the eight CWS pitching staffs. ... Seven players drafted in first four rounds.

Quotable: "We're the No. 1 team in the country for a reason. If you look at our record, we're 52-14, so that pretty much speaks for itself." — Reed.

For Steph and LeBron, an ultimate game to decide title

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — It's the two-time reigning MVP who is trying to finish off a record setting season with a second straight title, against a two-time champion who is tantalizingly close to finally ending Cleveland's 52-year title drought. Steph vs. LeBron.

Curry

James

NBA Finals

FINALS
(Best-of-7; x-if necessary)
Golden State 3, Cleveland 3
Thursday, June 2: Golden State 104, Cleveland 89
Sunday, June 5: Golden State 110, Cleveland 77
Wednesday, June 8: Cleveland 120, Golden State 90
Friday, June 10: Golden State 108, Cleveland 97
Monday: Cleveland 112, Golden State 97
Thursday: Cleveland 115, Golden State 101
x-Sunday, June 19: Cleveland at Golden State, 7 p.m.

Warriors vs. Cavaliers.

Game 7 awaits on Sunday night to decide these NBA Finals, decide the legacy of the season that has been put together by Stephen Curry and Golden State, and maybe even decide a big chunk of LeBron James' legacy of his second time around in Cleveland as well.

"I'll take it," James said.

"Forty-eight minutes left," Curry said.

This series is still going because James had his second consecutive 41-point game in Cleveland's 115-101 victory Thursday night with the Cavaliers facing elimination again. He's the fifth player in NBA Finals history to post back-to-back games of 40 or more, a club whose only other members are Jerry West, Shaquille O'Neal, Rick Barry and Michael Jordan.

He has answered the call when his team has needed him most. He even let Curry know how he felt with a little trash-talking after blocking a layup late in Game 6.

"At the end of the day my whole mindset is how I can put myself in position to help these guys be successful and I could be successful as well," James said. "I don't really get caught up in what everybody else talks about."

And now it's on Curry to answer. He had 30 points in Game 6, but got into foul trouble again — the Warriors said some of the calls were flat wrong, and that will surely earn coach Steve Kerr a fine before Game 7 after he offered a very clear, impassioned plea that Curry wasn't getting the sort of whistle that an MVP merits.

Curry got ejected after fouling out, throwing his mouthpiece and hitting a fan. He was trying to throw it at the scorer's table and missed, which strangely fit a night where the Warriors shot only 40 percent.

It won't be 1-on-1 Sunday night. But if the former MVP — who still very well may be the best player in the world — outduels the current MVP, the Larry O'Brien Trophy may be taking up occupancy in Cleveland for the first time.

"He's had two great games to keep his team alive," Curry said. "You know, that's what he's supposed to do. I'm out there trying to do the same for my team. We don't go 1-on-1 at each other a lot, but it's a pretty competitive feeling out there with the situation of playing in The Finals and playing for something special."

It has been a series laden with epic swings in momentum, laden with blowouts and drama.

Every game has been decided by double digits in this series that is heading back to Oakland, California, for the ultimate showdown. There have been injuries on both sides; the Cavaliers lost Kevin Love for a game and a half earlier in the series with a concussion, the Warriors are without Andrew Bogut because of a left knee injury and saw Andre Iguodala try to fight through a very balky back in Game 6.

Still, the Warriors — who have lost two straight for the second time all season, and this matches their longest slide of this season — are somehow upbeat.

"We'll rally the troops," Kerr said. "We'll get everybody ready for Game 7. As I said, a home game to win the NBA title, it's as good as it gets. So we're excited to be flying home and get our fans behind us and we'll be ready to roll."

Pressure will squarely be on the Warriors.

They won a record 73 games in the regular season, losing only nine times. They've already lost eight games in these playoffs, and a ninth defeat would certainly take a ton of the shine off having the best record in NBA history.

"We expected to win the NBA championship coming into the season," Warriors guard Klay Thompson said. "It's either win the whole thing or bust for us. I mean, it's no fun getting second place. So it would be a great season, but at the same time to us, the players, we're so competitive, we'd feel like we failed."

To say there will be no pressure on the Cavaliers, though, would be incorrect.

Sure, road teams are 3-15 all-time in Game 7s in the NBA Finals. History says Cleveland loses this game for that reason and plenty of others — The Drive, The Fumble, The Decision among them.

Outside shot: LeBron lifts Cavs, Cleveland to cusp of title

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — LeBron James' family, closest friends and some hangers-on who wanted a glimpse waited for him in the arena's hallways like they have since he was an unequalled Ohio high school star, the best player on any court.

They greeted him early Friday after Game 6 of the NBA Finals, when James dropped 41 points on Golden State for the second straight game and dominated Stephen Curry, staring down the MVP and taunting him after a dismissive block.

As Hall of Fame point guard Isiah Thomas and Oscar-winning actor Jamie Foxx looked on, James kissed his mom, Gloria, and hopped into his Mercedes-Benz luxury van for the ride to Akron.

"One more game left," he said moments earlier.

One more win from the greatest comeback in Finals history and one more win from a championship.

Playing at a level few have touched, James has pushed Cleveland to the brink of its first professional sports championship since 1964.

Down 3-1 in the series, the Cavaliers reverted to a strategy that has served James well: Give him the ball. Get out of the way.

Hesitant in Games 1 and 2, he's been in attack mode, posting up Curry for layups and short turnarounds when the Warriors inexplicably switch on screens and leave the 6-foot-3 point guard at the mercy of a 250-pound wrecking ball crammed inside a No. 23 jersey.

And when Golden State sags defensively to help stop his drives, James is finding the open man or pulling up and making his outside jumper, considered the weakest aspect of his otherwise resplendent game.

The shots are falling. The Warriors are fading.

On Thursday night, James was as good as ever, making three 3-pointers and adding 11 assists, eight rebounds, four steals and three blocks. He scored 18 straight points bridging the third and fourth quarters, and scored or assisted on 27 in a row and 35 of 36 while saddling his teammates and 20,000 fans on those broad shoulders and carrying them to the cusp of a title.

Kerr, Curry each fined $25,000 for Game 6 incidents

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Steve Kerr and Stephen Curry let their frustrations with Game 6 of the NBA Finals be known, and it came at a price.

Each was fined $25,000 by the NBA on Friday for separate incidents. Kerr, the league's coach of the year, was fined for publicly criticizing officiating after the game, which Cleveland won 115-101 to force a deciding Game 7 in the title series.

Curry was fined for throwing his mouthpiece into the stands after fouling out of the game with 4:22 left.

Kerr took issue with three of the six fouls that were called on Curry in the game, even calling referee Jason Phillips out by name for the one that ended the night for the two-time reigning NBA MVP.

"Three of the six fouls were incredibly inappropriate calls for anybody, much less the MVP of the league," Kerr said in his postgame news conference, surely knowing that the league would be sending a bill for those remarks.

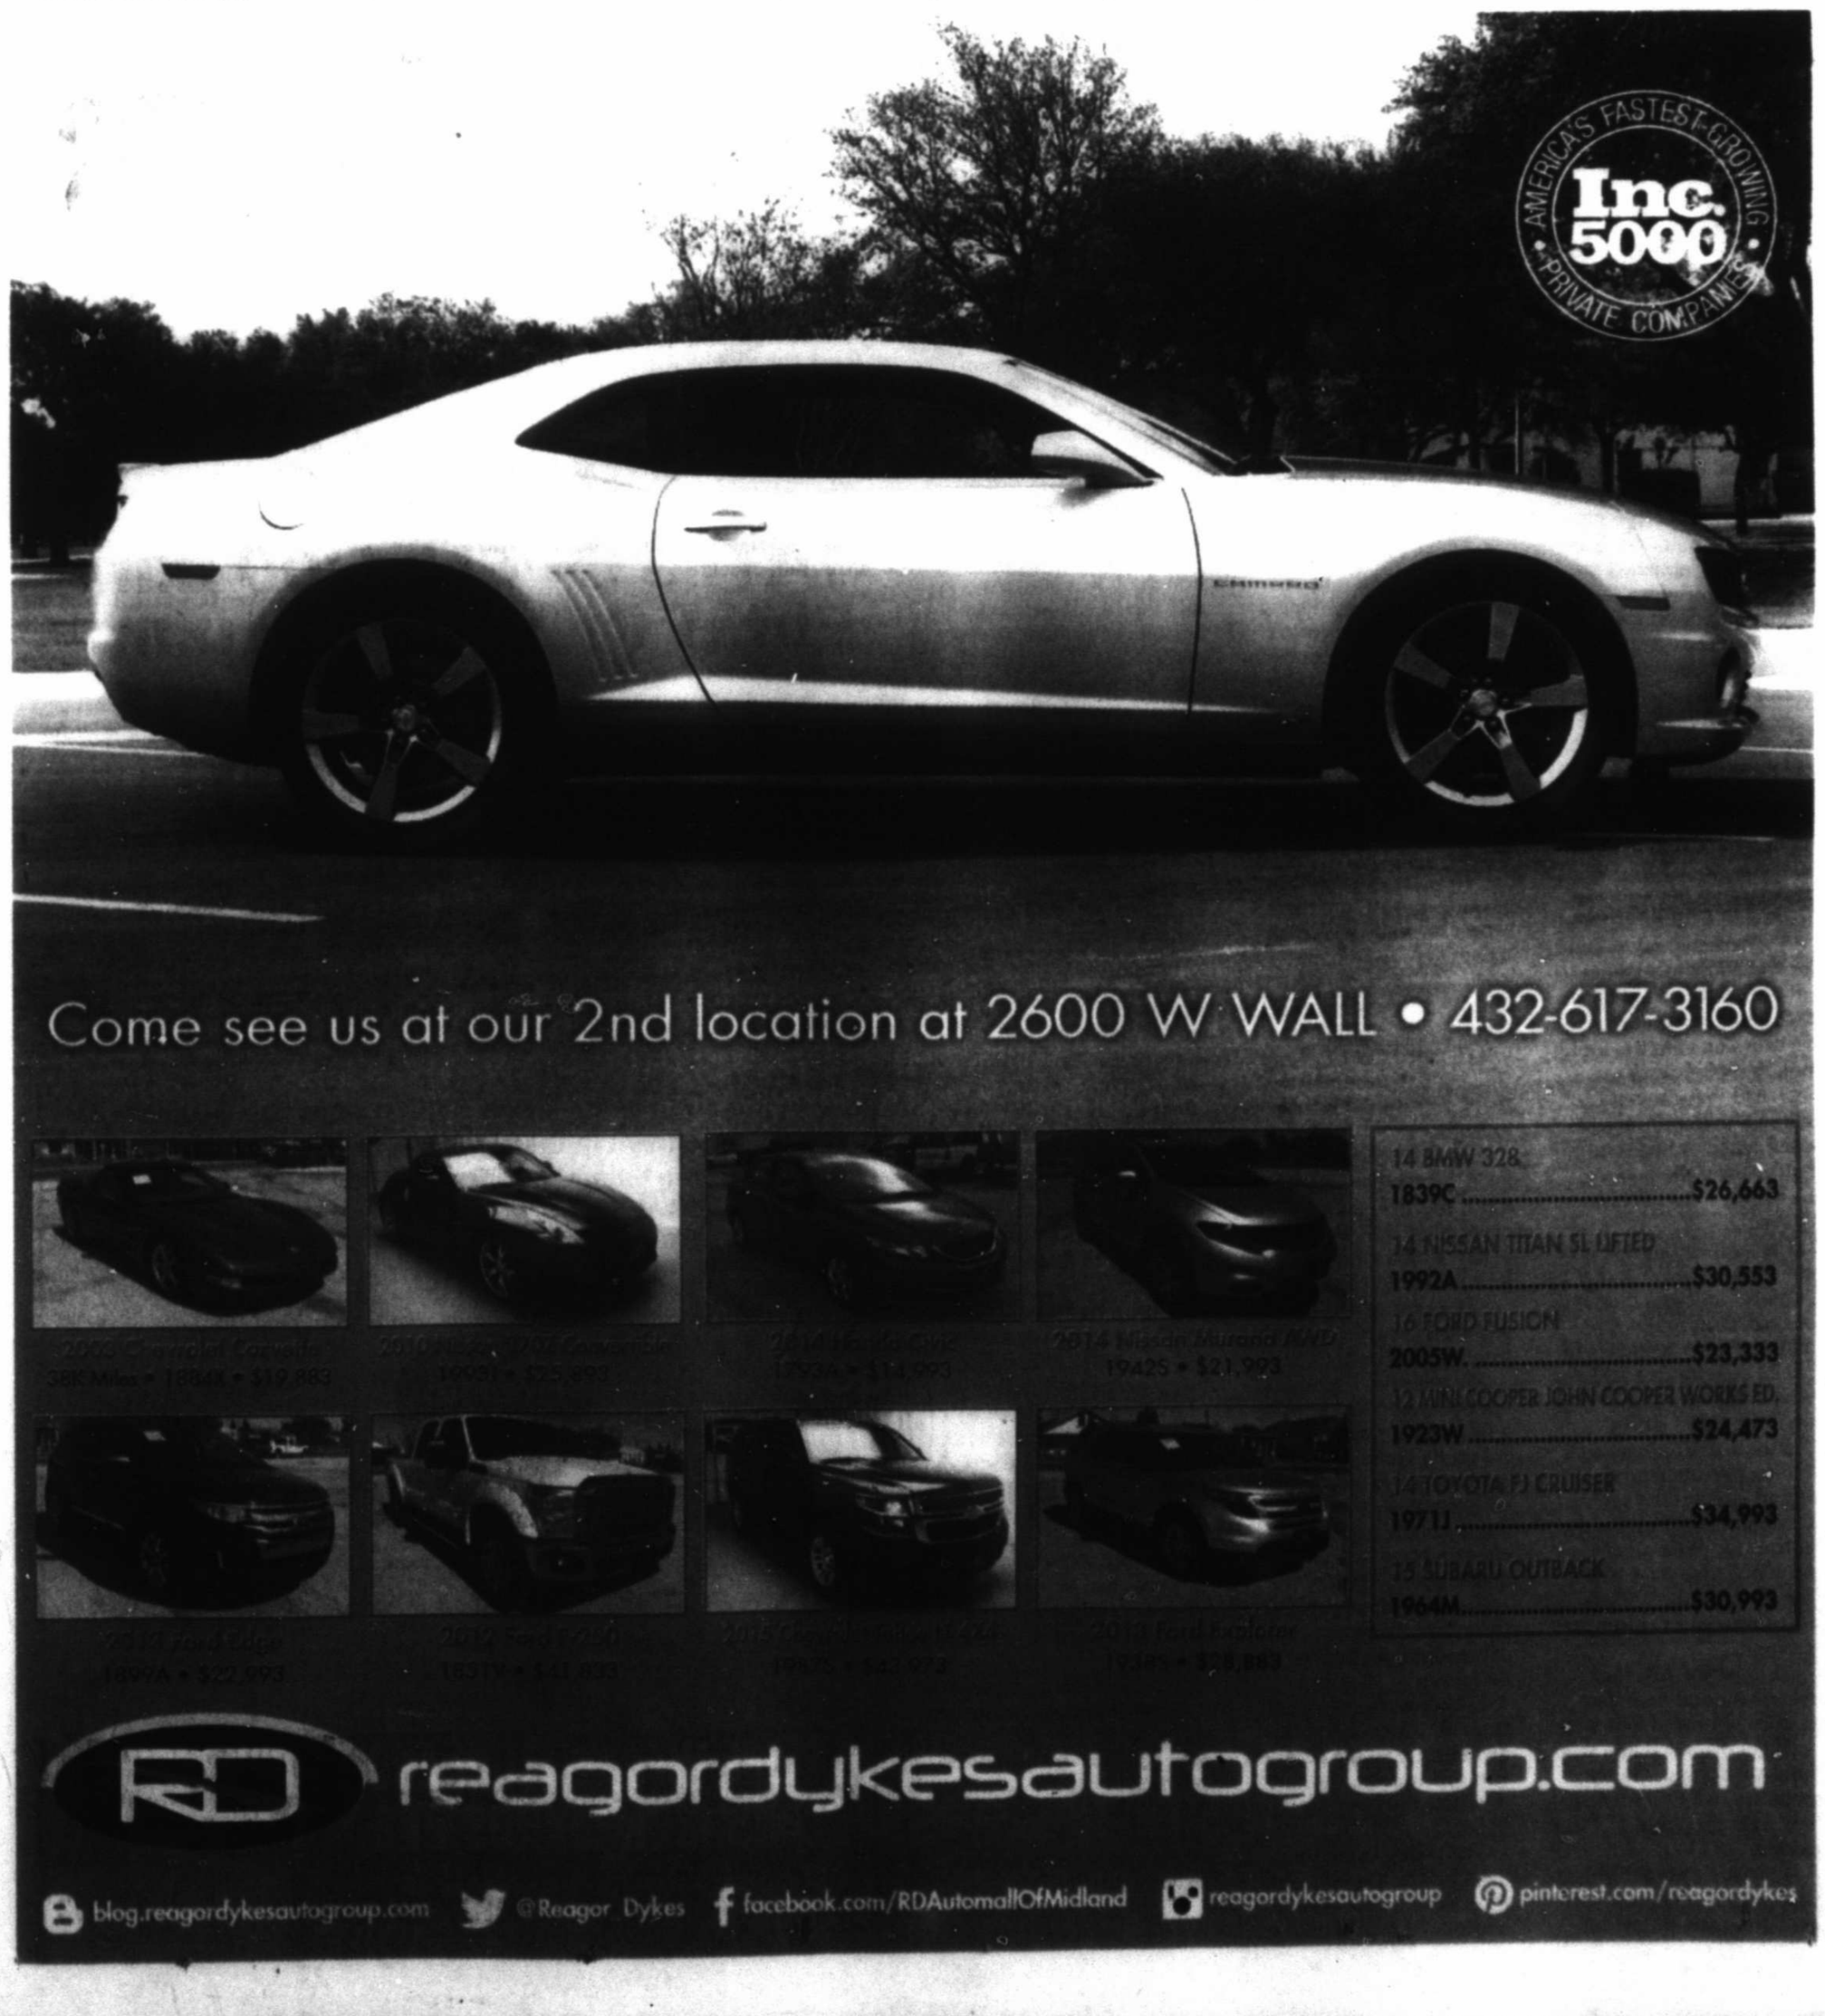
Curry didn't like many of the calls either, and let some words — and his mouthpiece — fly after fouling out. Phillips also tacked on a technical and ejected Curry, who apologized almost immediately to the fan he hit inadvertently with the mouthpiece.

"I'm happy he threw his mouthpiece," Kerr said postgame . "He should be upset. Look, it's the finals and everybody's competing out there. There are fouls on every play. It's a physical game. ... If they're going to let Cleveland grab and hold these guys constantly on their cuts and then you're going to call these ticky-tack fouls on the MVP of the league to foul him out, I don't agree with that."

Game 7 is Sunday on the Warriors' home floor in Oakland, California. Neither decision by the NBA was a surprise; the league precedent for throwing a mouthpiece is a fine in most cases, and the Warriors weren't worried about the MVP being suspended for the last game of the season.

It was Curry's first ejection, and his time fouling out since Dec. 13, 2013.

"It got the best of me," Curry said, "but I'll be all right for next game."



Gauchos, Arizona 'fly flag' for West in College World Series

By Eric Olson
Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — UC Santa Barbara and Arizona were best in the West. Thing is, the perception throughout college baseball is that the level of play was down in that part of the country this year.

The Gauchos and Wildcats are in position to change some minds now.

Both play their College World Series Bracket 1 openers Saturday, with Santa Barbara (42-18-1) facing Oklahoma State (41-20) in the afternoon and Arizona (44-21) meeting No. 3 national seed Miami (50-12) at night.

"Fly the flag for the West? Yeah, I would say there's a bit of that feeling, considering two teams from the West made it to the World Series when there wasn't a (regional) host in the West. That's a very difficult and challenging thing to do," Santa Barbara coach Andrew Checketts said Friday.

The Gauchos are 5-0 in the NCAA Tournament after freshman Sam Cohen hit a pinch walk-off grand slam to complete a super-regional sweep at No. 2 Louisville last Sunday and send them to Omaha for the first time. The Wildcats have won six of seven, with Cesar Salazar's two-out, bases-loaded single in the bottom of the 11th inning giving them a walk-off win at Mississippi State last Saturday. The Wildcats are here for the first time since winning the 2012 national title.

Sunday's Bracket 2 openers pit No. 5 Texas Tech (46-18) against TCU (47-16) and No. 1 Florida (52-14) against first-time CWS participant Coastal Carolina (49-16). The winners in double-elimination bracket play advance to the best-of-three finals beginning June 27.

As the Atlantic Coast Conference and Southeastern Conference dominated this season, Arizona tied for third in the Pac-12 behind a Utah team that had an overall losing record and Santa Barbara finished third in a Big West ranked eighth in conference RPI.

Eleven teams from the West made the NCAA Tournament, but for the first time since 1994 no team west of Lubbock, Texas, hosted a regional. Also, no western team was higher than No. 21 in the RPI after the regular season.

"Hearing that the West is down and this and that, it's like if you're in the trenches of competing the way this team had to every weekend to have success, I don't look at it that way," first-year Arizona coach Jay Johnson said. "I know how good a coach Coach Checketts is. I know the quality in the Big West. I've coached in the Mountain West and West Coast Conference and now in the Pac-12. It's great baseball out there."

Things to know as the 70th CWS begins:

STARTING PITCHERS: Santa Barbara's Shane Bieber (12-3, 2.84 ERA) will be matched against Oklahoma State's Thomas Hatch (8-2, 2.04), and Miami will go with Michael Mediavilla (11-1, 3.11). Arizona's Johnson said he would wait until Saturday to name his starter. On Sunday, Texas Tech's Steven Gingery (4-2, 3.25) will go against TCU's Jared Janczak (7-3, 2.40) and Florida's Logan Shore (12-0, 2.24) will be matched against Coastal Carolina's Andrew Beckwith (12-1, 2.12).

FEELING PRESSURE? Florida entered the season as the favorite to win the national championship, was No. 1 in the polls for most of the season and was made top seed for the tournament. Coach Kevin O'Sullivan said the SEC schedule, particularly late road series, helped prepare his team for the final leg of its quest to win the program's first national title. "I don't know if there's any more pressure now than there was from the beginning," he said. "Our players have handled it as good as they could have. They're excited about having the draft behind them. Since last Friday, the second day of the draft, I noticed a big sigh of relief and everyone was excited to move forward." Eight Gators were drafted.

POKE PITCHING: Oklahoma State has a 1.00 ERA in five national tournament games with 44 strikeouts against 16 walks. Hatch and fellow starters Tyler Buffett and Jensen Elliott have allowed three earned runs over 34 innings.

MIAMI DEFENSE: Hurricanes coach Jim Morris said this is his best defensive team in his 22 years at Miami. Their .983 fielding percentage is tied for best in the nation.

MLB Alumni: Mickey Brantley, Kirt Manwaring.

Short Hops: Chanticleers have won 38 of its last 46 games after an 11-8 start. ... Ran away with Big South regular-season title by seven games. ... Leads nation with 94 home runs. ... Set school record by hitting seven HRs in its final regular-season game against Campbell and has hit four in a game seven times. ... Remillard's 19 HRs are most among CWS players. ... Chanticleers can play small ball as well, having laid down 70 sacrifice bunts and having the runner who advanced score 50 times (72 percent). ... Highest-scoring team in the CWS, at 7.5 runs a game.

Quotable: "When I got hired, I made the distinction of telling them that one day this program was going to Omaha, and back then they thought I was smoking something, at least the looks I got when I first started. As great as this club is, all the ones before that have an equal piece of this. They set the stage for these guys and the reason why most of them are here." — Gilmore.

FLORIDA (52-14)

Coach: Kevin O'Sullivan (396-187, 9 years at Florida and overall).

Road to Omaha: Gainesville Regional: beat Bethune-Cookman 9-3, beat UConn 6-5, beat Georgia Tech 10-1. Gainesville Super Regional: lost to Florida State 3-0, beat Florida State 5-0, beat Florida State 7-0.

2016 record vs. CWS teams: 2-1.

Last CWS appearance: 2015.

All-time record in CWS: 14-19 in 9 appearances.

Meet the Gators: C Mike Rivera (.253, 9 HR, 47 RBIs), 1B Peter Alonso (.373, 13, 58), 2B Deacon Liput (.272, 3, 36), 3B Jonathan India (.303, 4, 40), SS Dalton Guthrie (.309, 1, 22), LF Ryan Larson (.163, 0, 7), CF Buddy Reed (.261, 4, 32), RF Nelson Maldonado (.282, 6, 30), DH JJ Schwarz (.295, 7, 60). For Steph and LeBron, an ultimate game to decide title

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — It's the two-time reigning MVP who is trying to finish off a record setting season with a second straight title, against a two-time champion who is tantalizingly close to finally ending Cleveland's 52-year title drought. Steph vs. LeBron.

Curry

James

Warriors vs. Cavaliers.

Game 7 awaits on Sunday night to decide these NBA Finals, decide the legacy of the season that has been put together by Stephen Curry and Golden State, and maybe even decide a big chunk of LeBron James' legacy of his second time around in Cleveland as well.

"I'll take it," James said.

"Forty-eight minutes left," Curry said.

This series is still going because James had his second consecutive 41-point game in Cleveland's 115-101 victory Thursday night with the Cavaliers facing elimination again. He's the fifth player in NBA Finals history to post back-to-back games of 40 or more, a club whose only other members are Jerry West, Shaquille O'Neal, Rick Barry and Michael Jordan.

He has answered the call when his team has needed him most. He even let Curry know how he felt with a little trash-talking after blocking a layup late in Game 6.

"At the end of the day my whole mindset is how I can put myself in position to help these guys be successful and I could be successful as well," James said. "I don't really get caught up in what everybody else talks about."

x-Sunday, June 19: Cleveland at Golden State, 7 p.m.

And now it's on Curry to answer. He had 30 points in Game 6, but got into foul trouble again — the Warriors said some of the calls were flat wrong, and that will surely earn coach Steve Kerr a fine before Game 7 after he offered a very clear, impassioned plea that Curry wasn't getting the sort of whistle that an MVP merits.

Curry got ejected after fouling out, throwing his mouthpiece and hitting a fan. He was trying to throw it at the scorer's table and missed, which strangely fit a night where the Warriors shot only 40 percent.

It won't be 1-on-1 Sunday night. But if the former MVP — who still very well may be the best player in the world — outduels the current MVP, the Larry O'Brien Trophy may be taking up occupancy in Cleveland for the first time.

"He's had two great games to keep his team alive," Curry said. "You know, that's what he's supposed to do. I'm out there trying to do the same for my team. We don't go 1-on-1 at each other a lot, but it's a pretty competitive feeling out there with the situation of playing in The Finals and playing for something special."

It has been a series laden with epic swings in momentum, laden with blowouts and drama.

Every game has been decided by double digits in this series that is heading back to Oakland, California, for the ultimate showdown. There have been injuries on both sides; the Cavaliers lost Kevin Love for a game and a half earlier in the series with a concussion, the Warriors are without Andrew Bogut because of a left knee injury and saw Andre Iguodala try to fight through a very balky back in Game 6.

Still, the Warriors — who have lost two straight for the second time all season, and this matches their longest slide of this season — are somehow upbeat.

"We'll rally the troops," Kerr said. "We'll get everybody ready for Game 7. As I said, a home game to win the NBA title, it's as good as it gets. So we're excited to be flying home and get our fans behind us and we'll be ready to roll."

Pressure will squarely be on the Warriors.

They won a record 73 games in the regular season, losing only nine times. They've already lost eight games in these playoffs, and a ninth defeat would certainly take a ton of the shine off having the best record in NBA history.

"We expected to win the NBA championship coming into the season," Warriors guard Klay Thompson said. "It's either win the whole thing or bust for us. I mean, it's no fun getting second place. So it would be a great season, but at the same time to us, the players, we're so competitive, we'd feel like we failed."

To say there will be no pressure on the Cavaliers, though, would be incorrect.

Sure, road teams are 3-15 all-time in Game 7s in the NBA Finals. History says Cleveland loses this game for that reason and plenty of others — The Drive, The Fumble, The Decision among them.

Outside shot: LeBron lifts Cavs, Cleveland to cusp of title

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — LeBron James' family, closest friends and some hangers-on who wanted a glimpse waited for him in the arena's hallways like they have since he was an unequalled Ohio high school star, the best player on any court.

They greeted him early Friday after Game 6 of the NBA Finals, when James dropped 41 points on Golden State for the second straight game and dominated Stephen Curry, staring down the MVP and taunting him after a dismissive block.

As Hall of Fame point guard Isiah Thomas and Oscar-winning actor Jamie Foxx looked on, James kissed his mom, Gloria, and hopped into his Mercedes-Benz luxury van for the ride to Akron.

"One more game left," he said moments earlier.

One more win from the greatest comeback in Finals history and one more win from a championship.

Playing at a level few have touched, James has pushed Cleveland to the brink of its first professional sports championship since 1964.

Down 3-1 in the series, the Cavaliers reverted to a strategy that has served James well: Give him the ball. Get out of the way.

Hesitant in Games 1 and 2, he's been in attack mode, posting up Curry for layups and short turnarounds when the Warriors inexplicably switch on screens and leave the 6-foot-3 point guard at the mercy of a 250-pound wrecking ball crammed inside a No. 23 jersey.

And when Golden State sags defensively to help stop his drives, James is finding the open man or pulling up and making his outside jumper, considered the weakest aspect of his otherwise resplendent game.

The shots are falling. The Warriors are fading.

On Thursday night, James was as good as ever, making three 3-pointers and adding 11 assists, eight rebounds, four steals and three blocks. He scored 18 straight points bridging the third and fourth quarters, and scored or assisted on 27 in a row and 35 of 36 while saddling his teammates and 20,000 fans on those broad shoulders and carrying them to the cusp of a title.

Kerr, Curry each fined $25,000 for Game 6 incidents

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Steve Kerr and Stephen Curry let their frustrations with Game 6 of the NBA Finals be known, and it came at a price.

Each was fined $25,000 by the NBA on Friday for separate incidents. Kerr, the league's coach of the year, was fined for publicly criticizing officiating after the game, which Cleveland won 115-101 to force a deciding Game 7 in the title series.

Curry was fined for throwing his mouthpiece into the stands after fouling out of the game with 4:22 left.

Kerr took issue with three of the six fouls that were called on Curry in the game, even calling referee Jason Phillips out by name for the one that ended the night for the two-time reigning NBA MVP.

"Three of the six fouls were incredibly inappropriate calls for anybody, much less the MVP of the league," Kerr said in his postgame news conference, surely knowing that the league would be sending a bill for those remarks.

Curry didn't like many of the calls either, and let some words — and his mouthpiece — fly after fouling out. Phillips also tacked on a technical and ejected Curry, who apologized almost immediately to the fan he hit inadvertently with the mouthpiece.

"I'm happy he threw his mouthpiece," Kerr said postgame . "He should be upset. Look, it's the finals and everybody's competing out there. There are fouls on every play. It's a physical game. ... If they're going to let Cleveland grab and hold these guys constantly on their cuts and then you're going to call these ticky-tack fouls on the MVP of the league to foul him out, I don't agree with that."

Game 7 is Sunday on the Warriors' home floor in Oakland, California. Neither decision by the NBA was a surprise; the league precedent for throwing a mouthpiece is a fine in most cases, and the Warriors weren't worried about the MVP being suspended for the last game of the season.

It was Curry's first ejection, and his time fouling out since Dec. 13, 2013.

"It got the best of me," Curry said, "but I'll be all right for next game."

United States coach Jurgen Klinsmann, center, embraces Matt Besler (5) at the end of a Copa America Centenario quarterfinal soccer match against Ecuador on Thursday at CenturyLink Field in Seattle.

US will have roster depth tested in Copa America semis

By Tim Booth
Associated Press

SEATTLE — When Jurgen Klinsmann started experimenting with his roster following the 2014 World Cup, the U.S. coach did it with the hope of building more depth for the next four-year cycle.

The quality of his reserves is about to get tested in a big way after the United States advanced to the semifinals of the Copa America for just the second time. The U.S. will be missing three suspended starters: midfielders Jermaine Jones and Alejandro Bedoya, and forward Bobby Wood.

"Our program is maturing. Our players are maturing. They are learning with every game that we can play in this type of environment," Klinsmann said after Thursday's 2-1 quarterfinal win over Ecuador. "This is what we hoped for after breaking through in Brazil after getting out of the group of death. Hopefully we can find a couple of youngsters coming and keep the older ones on board and keep them going, push them. ... We've brought a few youngsters along the way the last few years and they've made a huge step forward tonight."

The U.S. will play the winner of Saturday night's quarterfinal between top-ranked Argentina and Venezuela, with the semifinal set for Tuesday in Houston.

Jones was sent off with a red card early in the second half against Ecuador, and forward Bobby Wood and winger Alejandro Bedoya both picked up their second yellow cards of the tournament. The U.S. Soccer Federation has appealed Jones' red and Wood's second yellow.

"It's tough," Bedoya said. "But we knew going into this game that some of us were on yellow cards. We all spoke before and if we miss the semis, who cares? The most important thing was getting to the semis and we did that."

Klinsmann made two changes before the quarterfinal against Ecuador due to DeAndre Yedlin's red card, inserting Matt Besler at left back and moving Fabian Johnson to right back.

But that little shift Klinsmann made for the quarterfinals was simple compared to significant moves he'll need to make for the semifinal, especially if it ends up being against Argentina and five-time FIFA Player of the Year Lionel Messi.

"The coaching staff, they always do an amazing job of scouting our opponents and utilizing the players that we have," said Gyasi Zardes, who scored against Ecuador to give the U.S. a 2-0 lead.

Kyle Beckerman is the likely candidate to step in for Jones. Beckerman has 56 career appearances for the national team and while not as creative on the offensive end as Jones, has more of a defensive mentality that could be critical if Argentina is the opponent. Another possible option is Darlington Nagbe. If Klinsmann decides he needs a bit more offense from the position, the 25-year-old could step into a role he assumes for his club in Portland and keep Beckerman a defensive option off the bench later in the match.

Graham Zusi would seem the likely replacement for Bedoya, but how the U.S. aligns its offensive attack to replace Wood may depend whether Zardes is pushed further up field. If Zardes stays in the midfield, Klinsmann could turn to Chris Wondolowski to pair with Clint Dempsey up front. Or he could start Zardes higher up and insert 17-year-old Christian Pulisic.

The 23-year-old Wood was exceptional against Ecuador at making runs in behind the defense and holding possession in the attacking end.

Women's soccer: US looks for gold and brings the drama

By Anne M. Peterson
Associated Press

With a labor dispute simmering at home, the U.S. women's national soccer team travels to Rio de Janeiro as the favorite to win its fourth straight Olympic gold medal.

The Rio Games approach as a U.S. federal agency looks at a wage discrimination complaint filed by a group of national team players who claim they make less money than their male counterparts. The team's union also is looking for a new contract with U.S. Soccer.

Intrigue is nothing new for the top-ranked Americans.

Unlike the men's tournament, which requires teams to field under-23 squads, women's Olympic soccer brings together the best players in the world.

Seeking to clinch its fifth gold medal since women's soccer became an Olympic sport in 1996, the U.S. makes its debut against New Zealand on Aug. 3 — two days before the opening ceremony in Rio. That'll be followed by games against powerhouse France and Colombia in Group G.

Second-ranked Germany, fifth-ranked Australia, sixth-ranked Sweden and host Brazil loom as potential quarterfinal opponents.

The tournament will be played in seven venues across Brazil, including the jungle city of Manaus, in the Amazon rainforest, where the U.S. faces Colombia on Aug. 9.

Last year, U.S. players led a protest against the artificial turf used in the World Cup in Canada before winning their third tittle in the tournament. Now, probably the main concern before Rio is the status of reigning FIFA Player of the Year Carli Lloyd's injured right knee.

Lloyd, who wowed fans with three goals in 16 minutes in the 5-2 win over Japan in July's World Cup final, sprained her MCL in an April game with her club team, the Houston Dash.

Lloyd also scored the deciding goals in the gold medal matches in both the 2008 and 2012 Olympic Games.

ANOTHER KEY INJURY: While Lloyd likely will play in Brazil, the status of midfielder Megan Rapinoe is far less certain. The winger tore her right ACL during a training session in Hawaii before a scheduled World Cup victory tour match last year (the match was ultimately canceled because of poor artificial turf conditions). The injury required her third ACL surgery, and there has been no timeline for her return.

On her blog, the 30-year-old Rapinoe wrote on June 9: "My Olympic dream is still alive! This blonde ain't gone!"

MARTA'S MOMENT: Marta is one of the biggest stars in women's soccer. The 30-year old Brazilian striker was voted FIFA Player of the Year for five consecutive years from 2006 to 2010. Yet despite her success she is not a household name in her country, where the focus will be on Neymar and the men's squad to win Brazil's first Olympic gold.

Marta and the rest of the Brazil women's team will face less pressure to win their first gold than their male counterparts, and the squad should benefit from friendly home crowds.

The woman that Pele himself dubbed "Pele in skirt" showed she is ready for Olympic duty, scoring both goals in a 2-0 victory over Canada in Toronto in June.

Russian track and field athletes banned from Rio Games

By Nesha Starcevic and Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

VIENNA — Russia's track and field athletes will be banned from competing for their country at the Rio de Janeiro Olympics after a landmark decision Friday that punished the sports powerhouse for a systematic doping system that operated "from the top down" and tainted the entire team.

In an unprecedented ruling loaded with geopolitical ramifications, the IAAF upheld its ban on Russia's track and field federation, saying the country had made some progress in cleaning up but failed to meet the requirements for reinstatement and would be barred from sending its athletes to the Rio Games that begin in 50 days.

"Russian athletes could not credibly return to international competition without undermining the confidence of their competitors and the public," IAAF President Sebastian Coe said.

President Vladimir Putin condemned the decision as "unfair," telling a meeting of leaders of major international news agencies in St. Petersburg that athletes who compete without doping "shouldn't suffer."

Russia does not accept "collective punishment" for all athletes, he said, comparing the ban for the entire team to a prison sentence that "an entire family" could get if one of its relatives has committed a crime.

"I hope we will find some solution here, but it does not mean that we will get offended and stop battling doping. On the contrary, we will intensify our fight on doping," Putin added.

Russia's Sports Ministry also said Rio Games will be "diminished" by the absence of its athletes, and the Russian track federation said it was considering an appeal to the Court of Arbitration for Sport — the sports world's highest court.

The IAAF, track's world governing body, left open a "tiny crack" that would allow any individual Russian athletes who have been untainted by doping and have been subjected to effective testing outside Russia to apply to compete in the games.

However, the IAAF said those athletes would be few and would be eligible to compete only as "individuals" — and not under the Russian flag.

"The crack in the door is quite narrow and there won't be many who manage to get through that crack in the door," said Rune Andersen, the Norwegian anti-doping expert who headed the IAAF task force that determined that Russia's reforms were not enough.

The IAAF said it was necessary to ban the entire track and field team because there was no way to verify which athletes could be considered clean.

"The system in Russia has been tainted by doping from the top level down," Andersen said. "We cannot trust that what people might call clean athletes are really clean. If you have one or two or five with negative tests, it does not mean the athletes are clean. History has shown that is not the case."

Coe dismissed suggestions there were any political motivations behind the decision.

"There were members from all four corners of the world, and the decision was unanimous," he said. "Politics did not play a part today."

The ruling came four days before a sports summit called by the IOC to address "the difficult decision between collective responsibility and individual justice."

The IOC said it had "taken note" of the IAAF ruling and that its executive board will meet by teleconference Saturday to "discuss the appropriate next steps."

There has been speculation the IOC could overrule the IAAF or impose a compromise that would allow "clean" Russian athletes to compete. However, Coe made clear that the IAAF runs the sport and determines which athletes are eligible, not the IOC.

"I don't have a message for the IOC," said Coe, who will attend Tuesday's meeting in Lausanne, Switzerland. "Eligibility is a matter for the IAAF."

The suspension of the Russian federation, known as RusAF, was imposed in November following a report by a World Anti-Doping Agency commission that alleged state-sponsored cheating, corruption and cover-ups. On Wednesday, WADA issued a new report citing continuing obstruction and violations of drug-testing in Russia.

"The deep-seated culture of tolerance, or worse, for doping that led RusAF being suspended in the first appears not to have changed materially to date," the IAAF said.

Coe said the unanimous decision by the 25 members of the IAAF council to maintain the ban sends "a very clear signal to athletes and the public about our intention to reform our sport."

The decision was hailed by many sports officials and athletes' groups outside Russia who have been pushing the IAAF to take a hard line to restore some credibility to the much-maligned global anti-doping system.

"It gives a measure of hope to clean athletes that there are consequences not only for athletes who dope, but for countries which do not engage seriously in the fight against doping," U.S. Olympic Committee CEO Scott Blackmun said. "That is a much-needed message."

Added U.S. Anti-Doping Agency chief executive Travis Tygart: "Obviously, banning Russian track and field from the Olympics is the right outcome. The world's clean athletes came together and demanded that their voices were heard."

In expressing its disappointment, the Russian Sports Ministry appealed to IOC members to "consider the impact that our athletes' exclusion will have on the dreams and the people of Russia."

"Clean athletes' dreams are being destroyed because of the reprehensible behavior of other athletes and officials," the ministry said. "They have sacrificed years of their lives striving to compete at the Olympics and now that sacrifice looks likely to be wasted."

It added that the Olympics "are supposed to be a source of unity, and we hope that they remain as a way of bringing people together."

The IAAF rejected a last-minute plea by Russian Sports Minister Vitaly Mutko, who claimed the country had cleaned up its anti-doping system and met all the requirements for readmission.

"We firmly believe that clean athletes should not be punished for the actions of others," he said in an open letter to Coe.

Two-time Olympic pole vault champion Yelena Isinbayeva was among the Russian athletes hoping to compete in Rio. She has threatened to go to court on human rights grounds if she is excluded from the games. Other cases could end up in CAS, the Swiss-based appeals court.

The IAAF did change its rules to make way for "any individual athletes who can clearly and convincingly show that they are not tainted" by doping and who have been outside Russia and subject to effective drug-testing systems.

Work continues on offices at the new Dallas Cowboys headquarters in Frisco on June 3. The development, named The Star, will be home to the Cowboys' offices, two outdoor practice fields and a 12,000-seat indoor stadium that will be shared with the Frisco Independent School District. It will include retail shopping and an upscale 16-story hotel with a convention center.

Stars and dollar signs: Cowboys set for move to new facility

By Schulyer Dixon
Associated Press

FRISCO — Charlotte Jones Anderson wants to save a few special details for her father to see when Dallas owner Jerry Jones moves into the team's new headquarters this summer.

None of those surprises will involve money, though.

The billionaire boss of the Cowboys knows full well how much he's spending to forge a unique relationship with Texas high school football, part of a sprawling complex centered around a 12,000-seat indoor stadium and eventually including a hotel, sports medicine facility, restaurants and maybe even something the Jones family hasn't thought of yet.

Once the idea took hold in Frisco, a sports-centric suburb 30 miles north of Dallas, Jones grew comfortable with the idea of spending more on The Star — world headquarters of America's Team — than he personally did on his $1.2 billion stadium in Arlington less than a decade ago.

"I will say there is not a dollar spent that he doesn't know about," said Jones Anderson, chief marketing and brand officer. "As the vision grew, so did the checkbook."

At the moment, Jones puts his bill around $800 million, just shy of his share of the showplace with the giant video board hanging over the home field of the Cowboys.

The new outdoor practice fields will be a right turn out of a football-shaped locker room adjacent to the stadium. But when quarterback Tony Romo and company come home from training camp in California in August, the Texas heat will likely mean several weeks of left turns to the indoor field — the same one that Frisco high schools will use on game nights in the district's third stadium.

"This just totally has blown me away in terms of what we can do, the visibility, the tying it in the football, then regular athletics," Jones said. "This area will be a template and an example far beyond Frisco, all over the country, of an example of Romo walking off on Thursday, Friday practicing and then high school quarterbacks coming in to play football, side by side, talking to each other about the game tonight. I can see that."

Jones acknowledged a case of "stadium fatigue" financially coming off the massive project in Arlington, about 35 miles to the southwest. But the Cowboys knew they were getting closer to replacing their aging Valley Ranch complex, which had its indoor field destroyed in a storm in 2009. The last practice at the 31-year-old facility in Irving was the final day of minicamp Thursday.

The deal with Frisco came together quickly three years ago, with the city's total capped at $90 million on the stadium and a parking garage. The school district agreed to contribute $30 million. The original plan didn't call for any money from the Cowboys up front, only for them to handle remaining costs and assume responsibility for developing most of the 90-acre site.

Ron Patterson, Frisco's assistant city manager, says the current cost of the city-owned stadium and garage is around $260 million. Jones estimates that the club ultimately will spend more than $1.5 billion on the site. There has been little known opposition in an area that has gained national attention over costs of high school stadiums.

"You could almost say that Jerry Jones has been writing the city of Frisco checks," Mayor Maher Maso said. "We have a well-educated community. And they understand the finances of what the Cowboys can bring to the community. I think that's been borne out in a multitude of ways, that this is a return to the city."

The five-story headquarters building is on the south side of the practice fields. Fans will be able to see the fields from the main entrance or offices on the top three floors. Team executives and other personnel will be on the first two floors. That includes Jones having an office view of the fields, something he didn't have at Valley Ranch.

The team sold out 800 memberships for a private club that will also have a view of the practice fields, and will be open as many as 18 hours a day with the idea of members eating, working and socializing there.

"You don't see that around the NFL cities around the country," Maso said. "They're fairly independent, fairly private for their practice and their corporate home. What the Jones family has done here is the exact opposite of that. They've opened it up and said to us, let's sit down and figure out some new things we can do."

The financial return for Jones figures to be similar to what he pioneered not long after buying the Cowboys when he fought for the right to break from the NFL's sponsorship deals in order for money to flow directly to the team.

"I think what you're really trying to see team owners do throughout sports is leverage their brands in a way to generate non-shared revenue," said David Carter, executive director of the University of Southern California's Sports Business Institute. "I think it's about building brand and about generating incremental revenue."

And Carter sees Texas high school football as a brand as well.

"Marry that with arguably one of the biggest sports brands in the world and do it in that kind of a complex, which will have so much offer all the visitors ... it's very consistent," Carter said.

The team's rehab facilities will include a pool with an underwater view for athletic trainers, and one of the state's largest hospital networks just announced plans for a facility on site that will specialize in sports medicine.

Jones Anderson said "A-plus" real estate in a high-growth area was one of the catalysts for the family's latest spending spree.

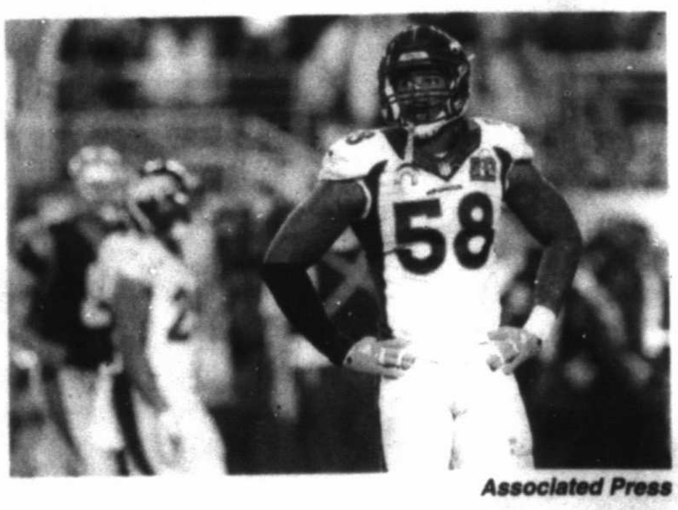
Rather than bleachers, the Cowboys wanted chair-back seats likes those at AT&T Stadium, and a video ribbon that is a staple in most pro arenas. The plaza leading to the main stadium entrance will have a shorter turf field where youth can play under bright lights and video boards.

"It's one of a kind and quite possibly irreplicable," Jones Anderson said. "It's actually not smart business to be in the high-rent district if you're running a football team, unless you can build a community around it. And that's what we've done."

Only after Jerry Jones grew comfortable with another billion-dollar spree.

Miller makes it clear he'll sit out 2016 if no deal is done

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press



Associated Press

Denver Broncos' Von Miller (58) watches during the NFL Super Bowl 50 football game against the Carolina Panthers in Santa Clara, Calif., on Feb. 7.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — The Denver Broncos' summer break began with an ominous message from superstar Von Miller. The Super Bowl MVP suggested he'll sit out the 2016 season if general manager John Elway doesn't meet his contract demands over the next month.

One day after saying on Chelsea Handler's new Netflix show that there was no way he'd consider skipping the season, Miller posted a photo on Instragam and said: "I love my Teammates, Coaches, and My Fans" but there is "No Chance" I play the 2016 season under the Franchise tag."

If the sides can't agree on a long-term extension by July 15, Miller would have to play this season on the franchise tag of $14.129 million — or he could choose to sit out the season altogether.

If he played for the tender, the Broncos could use their exclusive franchise tag on him again next year, putting him in the same situation.

If he didn't suit up in 2016, they'd only be able to use a non-exclusive franchise tag on him in 2017. That would allow other teams to swoop in and offer him a megadeal that would be difficult for Denver to match.

That's a risky proposition, a superstar missing a season in his prime and watching his popularity and marketability take a hit. But playing on a one-year deal could also prove hazardous to Miller should he get hurt.

The offseason began with Miller declaring 12 hours after the Super Bowl in which he starred that his contract negotiations would be peaceful.

Acrimony set in last week, however, when the team leaked details of its offer that Miller's camp rejected.

The six-year, $114.5 million offer included $38.5 million in guarantees over the first two seasons, far below the going rate for elite players. The Broncos offered a third year at $19.5 million that would only kick in after the 2017 season.

Miller wants that third year fully guaranteed from the start. His price assuredly has risen in the last week, too, because a couple of days after the negotiations between Miller and the Broncos hit a standstill, Eagles defensive lineman Fletcher Cox signed a six-year extension that runs through 2022 and includes $63 million in guarantees.

That's the most ever for a non-quarterback. And he'll get $55 million of that within the first nine months because a big portion of the guaranteed money kicks in a month after the next Super Bowl.

This would seem to set both a new benchmark and blueprint for a megadeal with Miller, who was a one-man wrecking crew of Cam Newton in Denver's 24-10 win over the Carolina Panthers in the Super Bowl four months ago after clobbering Tom Brady in the AFC championship.

After collecting five sacks in the playoffs, Miller skipped the team's offseason program that wrapped up Thursday with a final weight lift and a team photo.

At that ring ceremony, Hall of Famer Shannon Sharpe took a serving tray and turned it into a collection plate, imploring everybody to pitch in and help GM John Elway sign Miller. The tongue-in-cheek gesture actually netted some greenbacks.

After the Broncos took a pause in talks with Miller's agent and pivoted to finishing a four-year, $32 million deal with linebacker Brandon Marshall, Miller took his first social media swipe at Elway.

He cropped his boss out of a photo teammate DeMarcus Ware originally posted on Instagram that featured Miller, Ware, coach Gary Kubiak, Peyton Manning and Elway.

Miller appeared to extend an olive branch to the front office on Wednesday when he made an appearance on Chelsea Handler's new show on Netflix and said he's still hoping for a long-term deal to get done: "The franchise tag, it's a one-year deal. I would like a little bit more stability. I want to be a Bronco forever. I just want the feeling to be the same from the Broncos."

Jets' 'Big Cat' Williams hungry for better second season

By Dennis Waszak Jr.
Associated Press

FLORHAM PARK, N.J. — Leonard Williams was unimpressed by his production last year, no matter how many people told him he had a good rookie season for the New York Jets.

The big defensive lineman showed flashes of what made him the No. 6 overall pick in the draft and the player many regarded as the best all-around talent available. Williams finished with a modest three sacks and a combined 63 tackles while starting 15 games.

Not bad. But not eye-popping, either. Well, the man nicknamed "Big Cat" is hungry for lots more.

"Being at USC and having the production numbers that I had every year, I kind of hold myself to those high standards every year that I play football," Williams said during minicamp. "I didn't get as many sacks as I wanted or as many (tackles for loss) as I wanted. A lot of people thought I had a good year, but, to me, I wanted more production out of myself."

He had 20 sacks in three seasons at Southern California and routinely disrupted offensive game plans with a knack for always being around the ball. That's the type of presence he wants to be in the NFL, although he has already shown he is up to the task after filling in for the suspended Sheldon Richardson for the first four games of last season.

"I mean, I definitely think it was good, as far as the transition from college to the NFL," Williams said. "Being a rookie and my first year, I've got to get into it, but this year, I feel a lot more comfortable now that I've got a year under my belt and I'm just ready to have a better year."

Williams won't hold himself to a set number he's looking for in any statistical category. He simply doesn't want to sell himself short.

"Oftentimes, you'll see people try to reach that exact number," he said, "but if you just want high numbers, you can go past that number a lot of times."

Defensive line coach Pepper Johnson rarely dishes out effusive praise about his players, but he came pretty close when discussing what he has seen from Williams this offseason.

Plenty to see in Stanton

Photos by James Durbin | Reporter-Telegram

Old Sorehead Trade Days happens the second weekend of April, June and October in Stanton. Vendors from all over Texas and the Southwest offer wares such as woodcrafts, clothing, candles, metal art, antiques, jewelry and collectibles. These pictures are from last weekend.

Rare blind catfish retrieved from South Texas cave pool

Two rare, blind catfish found last year in a South Texas underwater cave have been retrieved and moved to the San Antonio Zoo.

The University of Texas in Austin on Friday announced discovery of the eyeless catfish, called Mexican blindcats. The fish were collected last month from a limestone cave at the Amistad National Recreation Area near Del Rio.

Dean Hendrickson is curator of ichthyology at UT and a Mexican blindcats expert. He's documented his efforts since 1997 in locating the fish in Mexico. Hendrickson says he believes it's the first time a specimen has been found in the U.S.

Student pleads for parents to co-sign on loan

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: I have plans to go to law school in the next two years. I have already taken the entrance exam, and will receive recommendations from two of my college professors. The problem is, my parents are refusing to co-sign for my law school loan.

Abby, I'm not asking for money; I'm just asking for someone to co-sign the loan for me. I plan to pay off the debt myself. I don't want to ask an extended family member for help, because even if they agree, I'd feel horrible if it prevented them from helping their own children with something.

My parents don't have a good enough excuse to not co-sign for me, and it surprises me that it doesn't embarrass them that I may have to ask another family member for help. What should I do, Abby? — FUTURE LAW SCHOOL STUDENT

DEAR FUTURE LAW SCHOOL STUDENT: Your parents shouldn't have to meet your criteria for what is a "good enough" excuse for being reluctant to co-sign on a loan for you. It should be enough that they are uncomfortable with the prospect of doing it.

While your desire to pursue the field of law is admirable, have you researched what job opportunities are available to new law school graduates? Currently, according to the media, these jobs are not nearly as plentiful as they have been historically.

However, if you are determined to plunge ahead, I think you already know what you're going to have to do — and that includes seeing if you can find another source of funding for your law school education.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I have been together a year and a half. We knew each other for a while prior because we used to work together. Our relationship has been somewhat fun. The only issue that bothers me is that he can never seem to open up. He doesn't express his feelings toward me or even show much that he cares that we're together.

When I ask him about it, he says he's just not ready to open up and I should respect that. I do, because he has been through a lot in life. But it's hard to figure out where I stand with him. I'm always the one to make the first move — whether it's to show affection or express my love for him. It's lonely and confusing that he doesn't, and I often feel like I'm in a relationship with myself.

Should I give him more time to get comfortable enough to open up? Or am I wasting my time? — MIXED UP IN LOVE

DEAR MIXED UP: Not all men are comfortable expressing their emotions verbally. More important than what someone tells you, is how he treats you. You stated that he not only doesn't express his emotions, but also doesn't show that he cares you are a couple. A year and a half has been plenty of time for your boyfriend to respond with more than indifference.

Because you need more than he seems capable of giving, it's time to find someone who can give you the affection and affirmation you crave. In a relationship, BOTH parties must contribute if it is to survive.

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, June 18, 2016:

This year you naturally see the pros and cons of situations around you. You often wonder which would be the best way to go. You will have an innate conflict involving which voice you should listen to: the intellect one, the moral one or the emotional one. Sometimes you will find this conflict difficult to resolve. Try them all, and see what works. If you are single, the opposite sex finds you extremely desirable. You easily could stumble into several relationships. If you are attached, the two you often seesaw back and forth over different issues. Respect each other's opinions. SAGITTARIUS takes the information you give them and passes it on to others.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ You might be up for taking a day trip, but getting out the door could take talent, especially if others are involved. If you're planning on meeting someone, don't be surprised if confusion surrounds the time and place. Tonight: Break past your traditional way of thinking.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★ One-on-one relating keeps the day exciting, especially as there seems to be an underlying misunderstanding. Don't be difficult with a challenging partner. You might not be communicating as clearly as you think you are. Tonight: Decide to let go of stress.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ You can defer to others only if you feel you have similar interests, which is not the case right now. Instead, you might feel as if you are on a different page with nearly opposing ideas. Because of this assumption, misunderstandings are likely. Tonight: Don't push your luck.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★ You suddenly might realize that you have misunderstood where and when you were supposed to meet somebody. You also might have underestimated how much you have to do. Responsibilities call. Don't try to minimize what you must do. Tonight: Close to home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★★ Your natural charisma keeps your day together far more than it does for others, so be thankful. You will notice that, when speaking to someone, there could be a good deal of misrepresentation. Confirm what you hear. Tonight: Put on your dancing shoes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★ The tension of the planets seems to be pushing you in various directions. You might not realize how strong of a decision you have made. You seem to have personal concerns, uncomfortable feelings and a negative person to deal with. Tonight: Join a friend for dinner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Get on the phone and clear up a misunderstanding before it turns into a huge problem. If the other person hangs up on you or is unwilling to talk, this task will be impossible. Let him or her know that you care and are willing to work through this. Tonight: Talks are awkward.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★ You need to be careful with your funds. Count your change. Know where your wallet is and say "no" to taking risks. You are likely to experience a backfire is this area. It is better to err on the side of caution. A loved one acts in a confused manner. Tonight: Let it all hang out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ You serve as a great role model as you get past a misunderstanding and leave others feeling whole. At some point, you might want some time alone to consider your options with a personal matter. A discussion with a family member resolves little. Tonight: Relax at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ You will pick up on someone else's negativity, and could want to head for the hills. You might want to call a friend to go to the movies, or cancel plans to do something you have wanted to for a while. Honor your feelings; they are right-on. Tonight: Keep plans hush-hush.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ You have get-up-and-go. You'll bounce right past problems with ease. Understand what is happening around you. A friend might be confused and/or a source of a misunderstanding. Do not make a big deal out of this hassle; let it go. Tonight: Create a fun environment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Step up to the plate, and be willing to share what you feel. Reaching an agreement with others could be close to impossible. People have what they believe are better ideas. Know that the situation eventually will calm down and be less negative. Tonight: Follow the music.

Fancy to whimsical: Joan Rivers belongings up for auction

By Leanne Italie
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Joan Rivers was many things: brash and brassy comedian, queen of QVC, petite mistress of great big gowns.

Lesser known, perhaps, was her penchant for collecting — all things, from Faberge objets d'art to fine French furniture. Her East 62nd Street penthouse, a former ballroom, was filled with it and nearly two years after her death at 81, her daughter, Melissa Rivers, felt it time to clean house.

With the help of Christie's New York, she made her way through rooms and rooms of memories, deciding what she couldn't emotionally part with, what she would hold onto for archival purposes and what she would donate to charity so they could put on auctions of their own.

What was left is now the Private Collection of Joan Rivers, with more than 200 lots to be auctioned in a live sale at Christie's on June 22 and about 80 more offered online at Christies.com through June 23.

Melissa Rivers, in an interview Thursday, was not ready to use the word "cathartic." After all, she said, "It hasn't even been two years." Instead, she's in survivor mode, "taking care of business" in a way she knows her mother would appreciate.

"She never believed that everything should be kept in storage or a bank vault. She always said, 'Use your things, enjoy the things you have,' so I don't have the guilt of 'I need to keep these dishes because this was the set that she used every third Thanksgiving but it's not my favorite.'"

The auction house opened its doors to the media Friday for a preview. There, a couple of Joan's elegant sitting rooms were set up, her inlaid Yearwood desk and chair near a favorite painting by Edouard Vuillard, titled "Dans l'atelier." It dates to about 1915 and is valued at $120,000 to $180,000.

Faberge was a favored brand for the former Beatrice Grushman Molinsky, the daughter of Russian immigrants, furriers who served the court back in the old country. Staying tony in the United States was sometimes a struggle that Joan never forgot. It fueled her furious work ethic.

A dog bowl engraved with the name "Spike" owned by the late comedian Joan Rivers is on display at Christie's on Friday in New York. The Private Collection of Joan Rivers has more than 200 lots to be auctioned in a live sale at Christie's on June 22 and about 80 more offered online at Christies.com, starting Thursday through June 23.

But she believed in using the fine things she and her late husband, Edgar, amassed.

Joan died on Sept. 14, 2014. Many of her zingers were printed on walls for visitors to enjoy as they ogled items up for sale, including this one that speaks volumes about the things she collected:

"Marie Antoinette would have lived here if she had money."

Her approach was far from hands off when it came to sharing her world. Furniture and housewares, whether they were fancy or a tag sale find, were mixed and matched and enjoyed.

Hence antique Faberge picture frames held family photos, including one of Melissa in her University of Pennsylvania hoodie. Among the rarest and most valuable Faberge items up for auction is a small, gold-mounted, bowl-like study in green nephrite of a Lily of the Valley leaf with pearl and diamond details.

"The leaf is by far the rarest and really one of the most exciting Faberge objects that's been on the market in a very long time," said Helen Culver Smith, a Christie's specialist of Russian works of art. "What makes it rare is only two are known, and there's the craftsmanship."

It was made around 1900 in Russia and passed through many hands after it was sold off by the Soviet state. Joan bought it from a London-based Faberge dealer. Its value: $200,000 to $300,000, making it among the most expensive items to be auctioned.

Another item that Melissa remembers fondly is a diamond-and-platinum flower brooch her mother designed, with help from Harry Winston. Joan wore it often and added to it over the years, sitting on the floor with little bits of paper she had cut out to configure new stones. The auction house estimated its value at $30,000 to $50,000.

Melissa had less trouble giving up a silver Tiffany dog bowl engraved for the cantankerous Spike, the now-dead Yorkshire terrier a friend gave her mother as a puppy.

"I call him the empty nest syndrome dog," Melissa laughed. "Spike was given to my mother the same month I left for college. She carried him everywhere and never let him out of her sight and spoiled him ridiculously. It's easy to connect those dots in Psych 101."

Spike did her mother a world of good after the death of her husband in 1987. He comforted her in her darkest hour, she once said, and he appeared with her on "The Tonight Show" and the cover of People magazine.

Known for splashy gowns, there are a few up for sale, including some bedazzled looks from a favorite, Bob Mackie, along with an ochre gown with a custom cape from Oscar de la Renta. She wore it as a presenter at the 1990 Tony Awards.

Though her frame was tiny, Joan's fashion style was outsized. But her taste and keen eye kept her from being swallowed up by the clothes and chunky accessories she chose.

"The clothes didn't wear her. She wore the clothes. She had the style and the presence to pull these things off," Melissa said. "I do not have that ability whatsoever. If you put even a ruffle around my neck I'm just swimming and spitting out feathers."

Among the belongings Melissa kept were some attached to precious, private moments with her mom, including a toothbrush cup.

"I would always be leaning against the wall of her bathroom talking to her when she was getting ready," the daughter recalled. "I would look in the mirror so we could look at each other and the toothbrush cup was always in my sightline, and I never realized that. That to me represents so many of our most intimate moments."

In terms of art, she said close family friend Vincent Price was key in starting her parents on the path of collecting.

"I was very fortunate to have grown up in a home where art was part of our daily life," Melissa said.

But not in a pretentious way, she was quick to note.

"Nothing was off limits. Things were meant to be lived with and enjoyed and appreciated. That's the point of having these things," Melissa added. "So many people nowadays have so many things and there's so many billionaires out there now. It's all about collect, collect, collect."

1,200-foot amusement ride proposed for NY's Penn Station

By Karen Matthews
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Catching a train at New York's crowded Penn Station is no thrill. But a development team has proposed a novel plan to overhaul the station: Build a 1,200-foot thrill ride on top of it and pay for renovations by charging $35 a ticket.

"You're experiencing New York City in an unforgettable way. It's something you will not be able to do anywhere else in the world."

Alexandros Washburn, Brooklyn Capital Partners president

The plan submitted to state officials envisions a transparent tower called the Halo with 11 gondolas offering free-fall rides of varying speeds.

"You're experiencing New York City in an unforgettable way," said Alexandros Washburn, president of Brooklyn Capital Partners, the partnership behind the plan. "It's something you will not be able to do anywhere else in the world."

John Gerber, chairman of Brooklyn Capital Partners, said the ride is feasible from an engineering standpoint, but he acknowledged that government agencies and New Yorkers might not embrace the idea.

Other ideas floated for renovating the station have included more traditional concepts, like building office towers.

"It's a public process and there are a lot of stakeholders," Gerber said. "Anything that's new is going to be complicated."

Washburn and Gerber submitted their plan after Democratic Gov. Andrew Cuomo put out a request in January for proposals to renovate the rail hub he called "a blight on the greatest city in the world."

Plans to redo Penn Station, which handles more than 650,000 passengers daily on Amtrak and commuter rail lines, have been stalled for years.

Washburn and Gerber both previously served as president of the Penn Station Redevelopment Corp., a public-private body that oversaw an earlier upgrade.

"We have been there. We know that a new approach is needed," said Washburn, an architect who also has held the job of chief urban designer for New York City.

Washburn said that as "out of the box" as the thrill-ride plan might seem, "It's coming from people who have worked on building New York City for 20 years."

Washburn and Gerber say the Halo could be situated either on top of Madison Square Garden, the arena that crowns the underground Penn Station, or one block west atop the Farley Post Office building. They say it would generate $25 million to $38 million a year in ticket sales.

Washburn said he got the idea from the New York Wheel, the 630-foot Ferris wheel now under construction on Staten Island. "We figured, aha! Take that circle, make it horizontal and elevate it," he said.

Jonathan Gouveia, senior director of planning and infrastructure for the Municipal Art Society, an urban planning advocacy group, said he sees problems with the thrill ride.

Gouveia said placing the ride on top of Madison Square Garden and Penn Station would foreclose the option of moving the Garden off Penn Station, which his organization has pushed for. "We think both of those facilities are bad for each other," he said.

Gouveia also noted that midtown Manhattan is not zoned for amusement park rides.

A spokesman for Empire State Development, the agency that's reviewing Penn Station proposals, said it can't comment on the proposals until a development team has been chosen.

Washburn admitted that the tower-ride proposal was missing one requirement: a $15 million bond.

"They wanted a $15 million bond or line of credit in their hands," he said. "There was a disconnect because they also asked for innovation. We decided that it's worth submitting."
