Cultist claims leader said to kill him

Residents want 'witch' burned, farmer says

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — If Sara Maria Aldrete is everything she is alleged to be by police on both sides of the border, residents here say they hope her punishment befits the savage crimes performed by her drug-running cult.

"The people here want her to be burned in the plaza," said Jose Luis Martinez, 37, a farmer.

Ms. Aldrete was arrested and the drug cult's "godfather," Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, was machine-gunned to death by one of his followers upon his command Saturday in Mexico City. The end came as police surrounded a luxurious apartment where the remnants of the violent cult was hiding.

Ms. Aldrete, brought out into public for questioning by reporters, said Sunday she had nothing to do with the killings and learned about them on television.

Mexican officials say some of the men in custody in the case have reported that she played a major role in the cult's activities. Suspects in Mexican custody have said the sacrifices were intended to bring magical protection to the drug business.

Across the river in Brownsville, Sheriff Alex Perez said, "Whatever she gets (in punishment), it won't be enough."

Of Constanzo, the sheriff added, "I think that he should have maybe died a little slower death, because that guy, he was a very dangerous man."

Subordinate says Constanzo 'went crazy'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Surrounded by police, the leader of a drug-smuggling cult accused of the ritual mutilation-slayings of 15 people along the U.S. border ordered a subordinate to kill him or suffer in the afterlife.

"He said to kill him because if I didn't it was going to go very badly for me in hell," Alvaro de Leon Valdez, 22, told a news conference Sunday.

De Leon killed cult leader Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo and the ringleader's right-hand man with a machine gun as police closed in on the Mexico City apartment where the gang was hiding, the Attorney General's office said.

"He went crazy, crazy", de Leon Valdez said.

De Leon Valdez, along with four other people including 24-year-old Sara Maria Aldrete Villarreal, described by authorities as the "witch" of the cult, were arrested after Saturday's shootout.

The Attorney General's office presented the five to reporters on Sunday. They stood behind a table covered with cult items found in the apartment, including two swords, black candles, a skull apparently made of white wax and a blindfolded doll holding another doll.

Company agrees to sell Parker & Parsley

From Staff and Wire Reports

Southmark Corp. today announced that it has reached an agreement to sell Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., a Midland-based wholly owned oil and gas operation, for consideration including $49.6 million in cash to Parker & Parsley Development Partners L.P.

"We closed on the negotiations late Saturday night," said Scott Sheffield, president of the firm and one of the nine members of senior management who will acquire the company.

The sale of Parker & Parlsey to management means the company will remain headquartered in Midland and operate under present managment and policies, as previously reported by company officials.

Arthur G. Weiss, chairman and president, who has served as CEO of the real estate-based financial services company since mid-January, said the transaction was another significant step in the firm's continuing program to raise cash through the sale of certain and diverse assets to improve Southmark's liquidity.

Southmark recently disposed of another major asset when it completed the sale of its interest in Servico, Inc., a hotel management company for $44 million, including $37.5 million in cash.

Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P. will pay Southmark $49.6 million in cash, $5 million face amount of subordinated non-interest bearing term notes and certain other consideration. Consummation of the sale is subject to various conditions and to certain regulatory approvals, but a Southmark spokesman said that the sale is expected to be completed later this month.

Southmark will retain its other oil and gas operations, consisting primarily of its 94 percent interest in MGF Oil Corporation.

Prior to the acquisition of Parker & Parsley Petroleum, a limited partnership owned by current management of Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. and by JM Petroleum Corporation, an affiliate of Wesray Capital Corp., will assume control of the general partnership interest of Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P.

However, the sale is likely to be shadowed by litigation. Two former Southmark executives have filed suit against Southmark, accusing the company of breaching an option agreement to sell Parker & Parsley Petroleum Company to them.

Gene E. Phillips, former chairman of Southmark, and William S. Friedman, former vice chairman, were granted an option to acquire the company when they resigned from the firm in January, however the option expired on April 24, according to a Southmark spokesman.

Southmark Corporation, headquartered in Dallas, is a real estate-based financial services company.

Israeli rabbis want to resurrect temple on Jerusalem site

JERUSALEM (AP) — Hoping to rebuild the ancient Jewish Temple where Islamic shrines now stand, a group of Israeli rabbis is compiling computerized lists of potential priests, weaving seamless linen robes and reproducing a gem-studded breastplate described in the book of Exodus.

The plan would place the Temple altar on what some ultra-religious Jews believe is its historical site. The spot is where the gold-topped Dome of the Rock now stands, a Jerusalem landmark and one of the holiest sites of Islam.

The seemingly irreconcilable claim by Arabs and Jews to the area, known to Jews as the Temple Mount and to Arabs as Haram Al Sharif or "Noble Enclosure," is one of the most emotional issues of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Any attempt by Israel to reclaim it would be certain to stir tensions throughout the Moslem world. The government does not support the rabbis' plan to rebuild the Temple.

"All Jewish history as far as we're concerned is one big parenthesis until the Temple is returned," said Rabbi Nahman Kahane of the Temple Institute.

"It isn't like Moslems who have to make the pilgrimage to Mecca only once in a lifetime. In Judaism, three times a year a person is mandated by the Torah to go to the Temple. Life without the Temple is not really living," said Kahane, who immigrated from New York City.

The Temple Institute's 50 rabbis and artisans have made Temple vessels and produced a computerized blueprint of the shrine in preparation for rebuilding it on the site where it stood until A.D. 70 when the Romans destroyed it.

More than $200,000 has been collected to finance the project, most of it from American Jews, according to institute director Rabbi Yisrael Ariel.

In the centuries since the Temple's destruction, the 35-acre rectangular platform has become a sacred Islamic site, marking the spot where the Prophet Mohammed is said to have ascended to heaven.

It encompasses the Dome of the Rock and Al Aqsa mosques — considered Islam's holiest places of worship after Mecca and Medina.

Tensions mounted last month when Israel began barring Moslems from worshiping at Al Aqsa after Arab rioters threw stones that landed on Jews praying at the adjacent Western Wall.

Rep. Jim Wright

Wright reportedly urged retaliation against Canada in energy dispute

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep. Jim Wright, at a time when he owned stock in a company with Canadian energy interests, urged Cabinet members to consider retaliating against the country if it placed new restrictions on energy exploration by U.S. companies, a newspaper reported.

Wright wrote a letter to Cabinet members in May 1981, when he served as House majority leader. He also threatened congressional action against Canadian oil companies operating in the United States, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

The paper also reported in today's editions that Wright had made at least $20,000 by renting his Fort Worth duplex while he and his wife used rent-free accommodations provided by his business partner and friend, George Mallick, a Fort Worth developer.

Congressional financial disclosure records show Wright earned between $5,000 and $15,000 a year in rental income from the Fort Worth duplex for more than four years after the Wrights moved into housing provided by Mallick.

Because congressional disclosure documents require members to report income only in broad ranges, it is impossible to determine from documents how much Wright earned by renting the duplex during his arrangement with Mallick, the newspaper said.

At the time Wright allegedly threatened Congressional action against the Canadian oil companies, Wright's business partnership, Mallightco, owned 250 shares of stock in American Quasar Petroleum, a now-defunct Fort Worth company. American Quasar was heavily involved in Canadian oil and gas activities through its subsidiary, Quasar Petroleum Ltd.

Cavazos misses Texas, but having 'grand experience'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — After 200 days as secretary of education, Lauro F. Cavazos misses Texas.

Cavazos

"I haven't found a really good barbecue place, but of course I'm very, very fussy," he said. "The best chili I've had is what I've made myself."

The former president of Texas Tech University in Lubbock talked about his new job as his driver zigzagged through traffic from the U.S. Capitol to the White House last Thursday.

It was a typically busy day for Cavazos, 61, the son of a King Ranch cattle foreman. He had testified on literacy programs at a Senate hearing and had lunched at the Capitol with a GOP task force on Hispanic affairs. Now President Bush was waiting to start a Cabinet meeting.

In a relaxed interview, Cavazos said he and his wife, Peggy, miss their five sons and five daughters — ages 23 to 33 — who are scattered across Texas and several other states. And they miss their friends. "We don't even have our cat, Kitty," he said.

But, despite occasional bouts of homesickness, Cavazos declared, "This is a grand experience."

Cavazos' schedule has allowed scant time for fun, but after meeting with the president, he slipped away for a private indulgence — a tour of the gems collection at the Smithsonian Museum of Natural History. Cavazos is a gem cutter who relaxes by creating jewelry from stones in his own large minerals collection.

He ended the work day 12 hours after it started, at his rented condominium in northwest Washington.

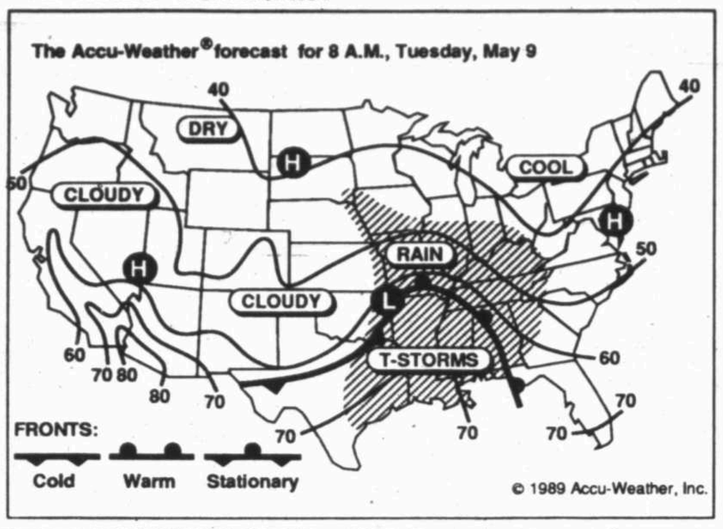

On the previous day, Cavazos had released the Department of Education's sixth annual state-by-state "report card" showing that high schools have stagnated at a mediocre level. He started that day at 6:30 a.m. at a network television studio and at 7:30 p.m. he was in another studio for a televised discussion. His message: "We all should be frightened by this report."

Since former President Reagan named him as the first Hispanic to hold a Cabinet post, and Bush reappointed him, Cavazos has rebuilt bridges to parts of the education community that had been burned by his predecessor, William J. Bennett. Bennett's highly-visible "attack dog" approach contrasts sharply with that of the conciliatory, soft-voiced Texan.

STATE

Low level clouds covered parts of the coastal bend early Monday morning, while patches of fog were over the middle coastal plain and southwest part of North Central Texas.

South to southeast winds breezed across the greater part of the state except along the New Mexico-Texas border and far west where southwest winds were common. wind speeds were in the 5 to 20 mile an hour range.

Thunderstorms were expected to move into West Texas and part of North Texas, the Hill Country and southeast Texas Monday afternoon and evening.

There's a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms Tuesday in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Highs should be in the upper 80s.

Thunderstorms also were expected in South Texas Sunday with temperatures from the 90s to near 100 in the Rio Grande Valley.

Parts of West Texas should turn cooler in the north Tuesday, with highs of 75 in the Panhandle and 102 in the far west.

NATION

A record snow continued to fall on upstate New York early today, while rain showers fell across the middle part of the nation and frost and freeze advisories extended from Michigan to South Carolina.

In western New York, more than 11 inches of snow had fallen by early today in Rochester, and more than 8 inches had blanketed Buffalo, setting snowfall records in both cities for May. The snow was mixing with rain early this morning, leaving only an inch of snow on the ground in both cities by 3 a.m. EDT.

Frost and freeze advisories were in effect today over lower Michigan, Indiana, western Ohio, eastern Kentucky, West Virginia, southwest Virginia and inland areas of the Carolinas.

Record-low temperatures were broken or tied Sunday in more than 30 cities, with temperatures fluctuating widely in some areas. Temperatures at Manhattan, Kan., climbed from a low of 30 degrees on Sunday morning to an unusually warm high of 88 degrees in the afternoon.

Today's forecast called for showers extending across New England, New York and northern Pennsylvania; scattered showers and thunderstorms across the eastern Plains and much of the Mississippi Valley, with possible severe thunderstorms over the eastern part of Kansas and Oklahoma and most of Missouri and Arkansas; and mostly sunny skies elsewhere.

Shuttle streaking toward California

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Atlantis streaked toward a landing in the California desert today after the astronauts stayed up past bedtime replacing a computer that quit during the mission's last full day in space.

The problem posed no threat to the four-day flight — the shuttle has four computers, a backup and a spare — but ground controllers decided to take no chances and had the crew cut short their experiments and install a new one.

"We just don't have the confidence to run with it for entry," said flight director Ron Dittemore.

After the repair job, the five astronauts began stowing their gear for the fiery dash through the Earth's atmosphere and 3:43 p.m. landing at Edwards Air Force Base in the the Mojave Desert. The forecast called for favorable weather.

The computer problem was the only glitch reported on the mission, during which the shuttle sent the $550 million Magellan probe on a 15-month, 800 million-mile voyage to Venus to map its surface with super-sharp radar.

The astronauts' wake-up call this morning consisted of a barking dog and the Beatles' song "A Hard Day's Night," a reference to the repair work the night before.

"Good morning. It's time to come home," Mission Control communicator Ken Cameron told the crew.

A relatively small crowd of 100,000 was expected at the landing site because it is on a weekday, NASA spokeswoman Nancy Lovato said. An estimated 460,000 people watched Discovery's landing March 18, a Saturday.

Flight director Bill Reeves said this morning that the forecast at Edwards was for winds between 9.2 mph and 15.4 mph, meaning Atlantis probably would land on a dry lake bed to test its crosswind handling.

He said if winds dropped below 9.2 mph, the shuttle would probably land on a concrete runway. If the landing takes place on the lake bed, commander David Walker will test the nose-wheel steering by driving off the center line and back at 161 mph.

"It's been a nice, clean flight — a good vehicle and good crew," Reeves said. "We're looking forward to a good landing."

The other crew members are pilot Ronald Grabe and mission specialists Norman Thagard, Mark Lee and Mary Cleave.

Sunday's failure occurred in one of four computers that actually fly the shuttle most of the time. The shuttle could land with only one computer.

Walker, who reported the problem, got the computer working again, but ground engineers determined there was a hardware problem and ordered up the spare. The crew took 4½ hours to install the computer and went to sleep an hour late, getting about seven hours of rest.

"We send our congratulations. Good work," said Mission Control communicator Tammy Jernigan. "We wanted to point out that this is the first time that such a changeout has ever taken place on orbit."

The crew abandoned plans to melt and then crystallize a metal sample in a furnace and to photograph lightning and polluted areas on Earth.

Before the problem, Walker noted, "You couldn't ask for a better flying machine."

The Magellan mission — the first U.S. interplanetary mission in 11 years — will send back images that scientists said should tell them not only about the history of Venus but also about the evolution of its sister planet, Earth.

Venus, shrouded in sulfuric acid clouds and a carbon dioxide atmosphere, has a runaway greenhouse effect, with surface temperatures of 900 degrees.

Many scientists fear Earth may experience similar overheating. "We need to know the mechanisms whereby these things occur," Thagard said.

The restrictions prompted accusations that Israel had reneged on a pledge to maintain freedom of worship at Moslem holy sites. Adherence to the policy had been a source of pride since Israel seized the Old City and its shrines from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war.

"This is an ugly action and a serious matter not acceptable by religion or by law," said Sheikh Mohammed Al Jamal, deputy director of the Moslem trust that controls Islamic properties. "Moslems have the right to express themselves politically within the mosque."

Jewish militants have disputed Israeli measures that, in an effort to prevent sectarian conflict, bar them from praying freely on the Temple Mount.

"The Moslems built the mosques against the feelings of the Jews and this must be changed," said Gershon Salomon of the Temple Mount Faithful, a group dedicated to regaining Israel control of the site.

Asked what he would do about the mosques, he replies, "I honor Moslem feelings about Mecca, so we shall help them to take the two mosques to Mecca and rebuild them there."

Kahane rejects such ideas as "crazy."

"There is no amount of money that would induce the Moslems to move those mosques. But nothing could compel us to give up the Temple either," said Kahane, brother of Rabbi Meir Kahane, the founder of the anti-Arab Kach Party.

"It is up to God to decide," said the grey-bearded Kahane, who says he is confident the Temple will be restored in his lifetime.

To speed the process, Kahane has computerized a list of about 1,000 Israeli descendents of the biblical high priests, called "kohanim" in Hebrew, and recorded their addresses and professions.

"This way, when the Messiah comes, I can say, 'Here, Mr. Messiah, here's your data base,'" said Kahane, whose own name appears on the list.

To show what his dream might look like, Kahane's cramped office contains a photomontage of Jerusalem with a replica of the Second Temple superimposed on the Temple Mount. The Dome of the Rock and Al Aqsa have been eliminated.

On display at the institute's museum are reproductions of 30 of the 93 items required for daily Temple worship, including the copper wash basin used by priests to wash their hands and feet, their seamless linen garments and the high priest's golden crown.

Currently under construction are a six-foot high menorah ornately worked in silver and the high priest's breastplate set with 12 gemstones representing the tribes of Israel.

The items are described in Exodus, the chapter in Old Testament that chronicles the religious history of the Jews' flight from Egypt.

CULT

Authorities have said they believe Constanzo, 26, and Ms. Aldrete directed human sacrifices, mutilations and the boiling of brains and other organs in rituals to bring occult protection to their ring, which dealt mostly in marijuna.

The bodies of the victims, including a University of Texas student, were found buried on a ranch in Matamoros near the U.S. border beginning April 11.

Ms. Aldrete, who referred to Constanzo as "el Padrino," or Godfather, said she had nothing to do with the slayings and learned about them in television reports.

"I couldn't believe it. It was amazing," said the former honor student at Texas Southmost College in Brownsville, Texas.

The search for Mark Kilroy of Santa Fe, Texas, who disappeared while on spring break in Matamoros, across the border from Brownsville, led to discovery of the bodies at the Santa Elena Ranch.

Asked who killed Kilroy, Ms. Aldrete said: "Adolfo."

De Leon Valdez said he was present when the young American was killed with a machete chop to the head. Kilroy's spinal column was removed for a necklace, he said.

"I feel sorry because when he disappeared I was trying to help the (Kilroy) family," Ms. Aldrete said in response to reporters' questions. She did not elaborate.

Ms. Aldrete said that shortly before Constanzo was killed he was shouting that he and close associate Martin Quintana Rodriguez should be "killed since everything was finished for them."

"He was telling him 'do it, do it. If you don't do it, you're going to pay with circumstances in hell.'"

Their bodies were found slumped together inside a tiny closet of the apartment.

Ms. Aldrete told authorities Constanzo had invited her to join "Christian Santeria" and asked her to use voodoo to help people with problems, Abraham Polo Uscanga, deputy city attorney general, said.

She said Constanzo initiated her into the cult in 1988.

Santeria is a blend of Catholicism and old African beliefs that includes animal sacrifices and is an offshoot of voodoo.

The murders were carried out in a "little temple," a small building on the ranch, and body parts were put in a cauldron, De Leon Valdez said.

Bodies exhumed on the ranch had brains, hearts, sexual organs and other parts removed.

De Leon Valdez said Constanzo told them the people were killed "so that it would go better for us on the road, in the future."

WITCH

The savagery with which the cult went about its drug-running business stunned this border city's populace once the macabre, ritual-tinged activities became known.

Some in this border city say they'll regularly look back over their shoulders for a while.

"It won't be as tranquil as before," Martin Cortez Alvarez, 25, said Sunday. "Never, or at least not for a while."

Cortez, who was getting his shoes shined at the main plaza, said people continue to keep closer watch on their children than they did before 15 bodies were found buried west of the city last month. Some of the victims were mutilated and ritually sacrificed, while others were killed as revenge for soured drug deals, officials have said.

Some Matamoros residents said they were more relaxed knowing of the death of Constanzo.

"We're tranquil that they're detained and won't escape," said a 24-year-old woman who asked not to be identified. "We were afraid that we might encounter them, and if not one of them, then someone associated with them."

But Carmen Palacios, 50, said she still worries about crime now.

"I'm afraid, and so are the other ladies who live around me," Ms. Palacios said.

Some said they wished Ms. Aldrete and others could face worse than the maximum 50 years possible under Mexican law.

"The people of Matamoros are afraid of her being alive in jail because she can still have contact with others and influence them," Martinez said.

Perez said people in Brownsville called him Sunday telling him they can sleep better with most of the cult members either dead or in custody.

"Just last night alone, there were two or three senior proms, and all the kids said, 'No, we're not going to Matamoros (to celebrate). We're going to stay here,'" Perez said. "They were afraid. There's a panic. I think they will start going to the businesses over there."

At Brownsville's St. Luke Catholic Church, the Rev. John Nicolau dedicated a Mass Sunday morning in observance of the cult members' capture.

Nicolau said the grisly occult murders had done more to stimulate interest in church among young people than any of his sermons ever had in the past.

Cavazos has won warm praise from congressional Democrats with his vow to fund education programs "at the highest possible level." Making good on his promise, he refused to accept the Reagan administration's planned squeeze on education and, according to a source who claims to know, pounded the table at the Office of Management and Budget until he got increases in a few programs.

Cavazos notes a difference between his 100 days in the Reagan administration and his 100 days under Bush. As one of his aides says: "For starters, Reagan came into office promising to abolish the Department of Education, while Bush has announced at every opportunity that he is the 'education president.'"

Cavazos has repeatedly talked about "the education deficit," noting that nearly a third of all high school students drop out before graduating. "We have three deficits — budget, trade and education," Cavazos has said. "And we can't solve the first two without immediately doing something about the third."

One of the best parts about his job, Cavazos said, is the opportunity it gives him to travel across the country with his wife of 34 years.

Mrs. Cavazos, who was born Peggy Murdock in Plainview, was an operating room nurse in Lubbock. He says she "reads a lot of things for me, talks about ideas, comes to all of my speeches, and brings a great, honest, clear perspective to issues. We've had a grand life together; I've treasured every moment."

He was graduated from Texas Tech in 1951 with a master's degree in cytology — the study of cells — and earned a doctorate in physiology from Iowa State in 1954.

Baker says he won't push for superpower summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — On his first Soviet trip, Secretary of State James A. Baker III will ask for cooperation in the Middle East, Central America and other trouble spots — and steer clear of preparations for a superpower summit meeting until the results are in.

Despite several steps by Mikhail S. Gorbachev to lower tensions, Baker starts out today on his first visit to Moscow skeptical that the Soviet leader's actions are in line with Gorbachev's "new thinking."

Baker has publicly questioned, for instance, whether reductions in troops and defense spending announced by Gorbachev have done much to offset Warsaw Pact edges in some military categories in Europe.

Two of Baker's closest aides, briefing reporters before his takeoff for Finland, said he would discuss a summit meeting with Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze only if they raised the subject.

"If there are reasons to have such a summit, then we would certainly be pleased to have one," said one aide, speaking on condition of anonymity.

But prospects for a meeting between President Bush and Gorbachev depend on progress in several areas, the U.S. officials said.

They said Baker wants Soviet cooperation in Central America and the Middle East, in combating terrorism and in slowing the proliferation of ballistic missiles. The officials left unclear how much had to be accomplished before Bush would consent to a superpower summit.

"The president's past position is that one should not meet just for the sake of meeting, but rather one should have particular topics that are ripe for heads of government to engage in," a Baker aide said.

In Central America, the administration wants the Soviets to sharply reduce military aid to Nicaragua. It amounted to $500 million last year.

Correction

In the Sunday article on UIL band competition, an omission was made. The Midland High School symphonic band, under the direction of Clyde Wilson, earned a first division in sight reading and performance in the varsity band category.

The listing of Lee High School's band selections were for the non-varsity band. The sweepstakes selection for the varsity band were Tieke's "The Conqueror," Arnold and Sudduth's "Symphony #2," and Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem."

WRIGHT

In 1983, Mallightco, Wright's controversial investment partnership with Mallick, sold its American Quasar holdings at a substantial loss.

When Wright, then the House's second-ranking Democrat, joined the fray in mid-1981 the United States-Canada energy dispute was a major foreign trade issue. But Wright did not indicate at the time his business partnership had holdings in a company with a keen interest in Canadian oil policies, according to the newspaper.

Wright, now House speaker, is charged with 69 violations of House ethics rules after an 11-month investigation that has focused on his financial relationships with people whose business interests may have been affected by government action.

Wright's spokesman Mark Johnson and his attorney William Oldaker did not return the Times Herald's phone calls. Calls placed by The Associated Press to Wright's offices in Fort Worth and Washington were unanswered Sunday.

Richard Lowe, president of American Quasar before the company folded in 1987, said he didn't know Wright owned stock in the company and never discussed Canadian energy policies with him. He also said he wasn't aware Wright became involved in the dispute.

Wright received several thousand dollars in campaign contributions from top officials in American Quasar and its subsidiaries, federal election records indicated. Lowe contributed $2,000 to one of Wright's political committees by 1980.

When Wright sent letters in 1981 to Interior Secretary James Watt, Secretary of State Al Haig and Energy Secretary James Edwards, his office said Wright's involvement was prompted by a Canadian company's bid to buy up to 20 percent of the stock of Houston-based Conoco Inc.

Canada had blocked an attempt by Houston Superior oil to buy a Canadian energy firm.

Panamanian opposition calls march to protest election

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Opposition leaders called for a massive march today to protest a presidential election they claim was stolen by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, whose soldiers reportedly seized vote tallies at gunpoint from precinct workers.

Sixteen hours after polls closed, the official tabulation board said it had not received a single vote to count. Witnesses said soldiers stole lists of precinct results nationwide, and shots were fired in at least two instances when opposition members objected. There were no reports of injuries.

Both opposition and government-backed parties claimed victory in Sunday's largely peaceful voting, a contest that was seen as a referendum on Noriega's de facto rule and U.S. involvement in Panamanian affairs.

Turnout was high and many people had to wait in line several hours to cast ballots for president, two vice presidents and the National Assembly.

There can be no recount. When polls closed, poll workers burned the ballots after official results were verified at each precinct and put on tally sheets, a political tradition aimed at ending recount demands.

The opposition claimed that Noriega's 15,000-member Defense Forces rigged the voting, with soldiers voting more than once and some ballots cast in the name of dead voters.

"Despite all the irregularities, the opposition has triumphed," opposition presidential candidate Guillermo Endara told a news conference Sunday night. He claimed to have won by a 2-to-1 margin over Noriega's hand-picked candidate, Carlos Duque.

Witnesses, speaking on condition of anonymity, said final tallies of precinct votes were seized by soldiers in Panama City, its suburb of San Migulito and the Atlantic port city of Colon.

At the Venezuela School in Panama City, witnesses said a government representatives offered to take the vote tallies to the central counting place. When the opposition objected, the lights went out and shooting began, and when the lights went back on the ballots were gone, they said.

Witnesses reported similar thefts elsewhere, but the extent of the fraud was uncertain.

In San Migulito, neighbors said soldiers entered the Orlando Winter gymnasium, a ballot collection point, at about 3 a.m. and began firing rifles and shotguns. The witnesses said people waiting for the tallies to come in from various precincts fled over fences and into private homes.

Vote tallies left behind showed the government losing badly, witnesses said. Witnesses said people were beaten and at least one arrested.

In a statement read over National Radio this morning, Diomedes Rosa, president of the National Tabulation Junta, said it had no precinct reports from local vote collection points to tabulate as of 8:50 a.m., almost 16 hours after voting ended.

The government promised results by this evening and declared today a holiday. The opposition called for an afternoon protest march and threatened a general strike.

For more than a year, the United States has been trying to oust Noriega, who was indicted on federal drug trafficking charges in Florida. The United States imposed economic sanctions, supported anti-government leaders and reportedly gave $10 million to the opposition election campaign.

Noriega, campaigning on behalf of his hand-picked candidate, said a vote for the opposition would ensure suffocating U.S. influence over Panamanian affairs. He also claimed that Washington was preparing to renege on the 1977 treaty giving Panama sole control of the Panama Canal in 1999.

The Bush administration said last week that it expected Noriega to rig the elections and that it was prepared to look for other ways, including freezing Noriega's foreign assets, to oust the military ruler.

At his news conference, Duque called opposition talk of fraud "childish." A late-night communique from the pro-government coalition said, "We can affirm that our triumph is decisive, just, honest and perfectly clear."

Government candidates have been holding "victory dinners" for the past week.

The government coalition released an exit poll of 18,136 voters that it said showed Duque winning by a margin of 50.9 percent to 44.7 percent.

The opposition released an exit poll of 1,022 voters showing Endara leading Duque 55.1 percent to 39.5 percent.

Opposition leaders said the electoral register included about 100,000 extra names, including people who have died or left the country and that many pro-government voters were given more than one identity card.

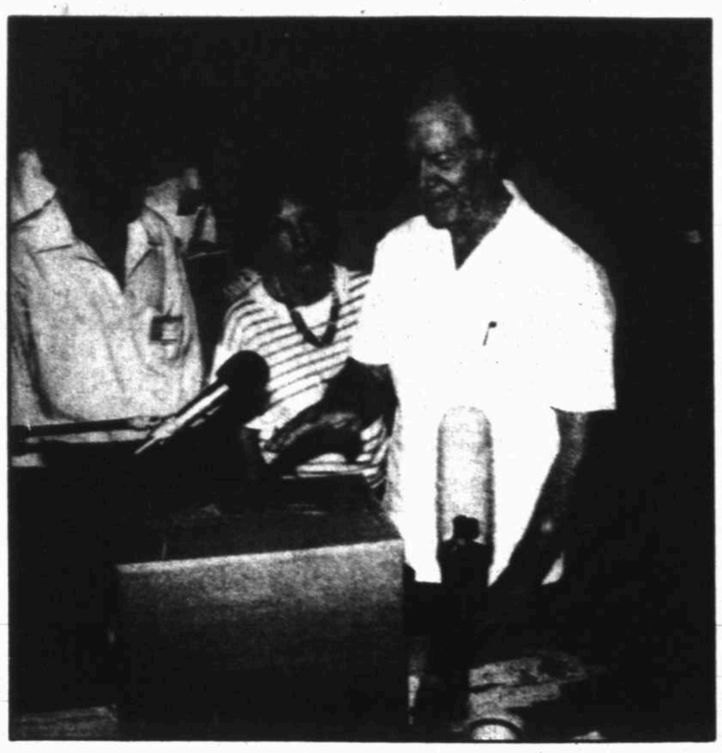

Official figures list the country of 2.3 million people as having 1.18 million registered voters.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., part of a 13-member uninvited delegation sent by President Bush, said Sunday: "We've seen many irregularities, but it is difficult to judge the extent of the irregularities."

Endara charged true democracy was not possible in Panama.

Former President Jimmy Carter said he saw no evidence of fraud during visits to several precincts.

He was greeted by enthusiastic crowds shouting "Viva Jimmy." In 1977, Carter signed the treaties that are to cede control of the canal to Panama.

Pravda reports Stalin ignored warnings of invasion by Nazis

MOSCOW (AP) — Pravda told Soviet readers today that dictator Josef Stalin had detailed information about Nazi Germany's plans to invade the country but ignored the warnings and failed to prepare for war.

The full-page article in the Communist Party newspaper, the most detailed look yet at what Soviet spies knew about Adolf Hitler's plans, came on the eve of the 44th anniversary of the Soviet victory in World War II.

The article marked a sharp break from the Soviet press tradition of publishing uncritical, patriotic reminiscences of Soviet heroism.

The report also contrasted with a jovial mood in Moscow, which was festooned with red banners for Tuesday's holiday. On Red Square a large banner stated simply, "1941-1945," the years of the war in which 20 million Soviets were killed.

Western historians have written extensively about how Stalin ignored intelligence reports about Hitler's plans, but little has come out in the Soviet Union. Stalin traditionally had been portrayed as a brilliant wartime leader.

But under President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of glasnost, or greater openness, many Soviet writers and historians have recently condemned Stalin's political repression of millions of his people and re-examined his wartime role.

Last summer, Pravda published a chapter of a new book about Stalin that denounced him for signing a friendship treaty with Nazi Germany, purging the Red Army when the nation was on the brink of war, and ignoring warnings that war was imminent.

Today's article further rewrote an embarrasing page in Soviet history.

Pravda said the article's author, history professor A. Baida..ov, gleaned the accounts from classified state security archives.

He said the state security agencies managed to infiltrate the Gestapo secret police, Germany's aviation ministry and its coding service.

According to Baidakov, security officials promptly forwarded information to Soviet political leaders about Hitler's invasion plans as early as November 1940. German forces invaded June 21, 1941.

But, the historian said:

"The leadership of the U.S.S.R. people's commissariats (ministries) of state security and defense did not, in my view, do everything to convince Stalin and the country's other leaders of the inevitability of an imminent confrontation with the Germans."

Then, he added, "But the main blame for miscalculating the time of the start of the war, for the country not being turned into an armed camp in time, for not being brought into a state of full military preparedness, lies with the U.S.S.R. political leadership of that period."

Baidakov revealed a series of intelligence reports forwarded to Stalin and his foreign minister, Vyacheslav M. Molotov. In April 1941, for example, the two were told that Hitler had revealed to a Yugoslav prince that an invasion of the Soviet Union was planned for June.

On June 16, this urgent message was delivered to Stalin and Molotov: "All military operations of Germany on preparation of a military aggression against the U.S.S.R. have been completely stopped, and a blow can be expected at any time."

Poland publishes first independent newspaper in more than 40 years

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The editors of Poland's first mass-circulation independent daily newspaper in more than 40 years embraced each other and grinned early today as its first editions rolled off the presses.

The scene was jubilant at the state printing house, where the Communist Party and government dailies are usually printed.

Many of the editors were accustomed to seeing their work — underground papers — roll off mimeograph machines or computer printers in clandestine locations.

Editor-in-chief Adam Michnik smiled broadly as he scrutinized the first issues of Gazeta Wyborcza, or The Election Newspaper. Deputy editor Helena Luczywo obliged ink-covered printers who lined up for her to autograph copies of the paper.

"It's wonderful," she said. "I can't believe it."

The newspaper obtained offices less than a week ago. A lack of telephones in the office and the scarcity of newsprint in Poland had left today's publication up in the air as late as Sunday morning.

Communist authorities agreed to allow the opposition to publish its own daily newspaper during talks that ended April 5.

The government also agreed to legalize the Solidarity independent trade union movement in return for the opposition's participation in Poland's first partially democratic parliamentary elections.

The first issue of Gazeta Wyborcza featured a front-page picture of Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa with a quotation in large type: "For it to be different and better, we must win these elections."

The newspaper will publicize the opposition's campaign until the election on June 4 and then plans to continue as a daily with an opposition editorial viewpoint.

The first run was 150,000 copies of an eight-page, five-column newspaper whose masthead featured the familiar Solidarity logo and said: "There is no freedom without Solidarity."

A censor was on duty as usual at the printing plant, but the initial issue evidently had no censorship problems.

The front page reported on Friday's meeting between Walesa and the country's Roman Catholic leader, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, a campaign rally Sunday with Walesa in central Poland, a Communist Party conference in Warsaw and questions surrounding the deaths of 20 anti-government demonstrators.

PEN expected to admit Soviet chapter

MAASTRICHT, Netherlands (AP) — PEN is expected to admit a new Soviet chapter this week in a move that would open the international writers' group to artists from the Soviet Union for the first time in 65 years.

Alexandre Blokh, PEN's international secretary, said in an interview on Sunday that he expects the organization's 53rd International Conference to admit the Soviet chapter in a vote Wednesday.

"They're certainly welcome and I think there will be no difficulty," Blokh said of the Soviet chapter, which was formed last year.

The PEN conference, a gathering of 300 novelists, poets, playwrights and other literary figures, opens in Maastricht today.

Those attending will represent the 10,000 members of PEN, or Poets, Playwrights, Editors, Essayists and Novelists, a London-based group with about 60 chapters in its member nations.

In 1924, PEN turned down the Soviet Union's request to join the group, and since then the writers' group has consistently opposed Soviet membership because of the nation's persecution of writers and intellectuals.

The first official act of the new Soviet PEN chapter was to condemn the death threat Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of Iran issued against British author Salman Rushdie, according to the Soviet newspaper Literaturnaya Gazeta.

If the Soviet chapter is approved, its members will have to sign the PEN charter, which condemns censorship and says "free criticism of governments, administrations and institutions (is) imperative."

The newspaper said members of the Soviet chapter include poets Yevgeny Yevtushenko and Andrei Voznesensky, novelists Anatoly Rybakov and Chengiz Aitmatov, historian Dmitri Likhachev, and playwright Mikhail Shatrov.

The approval of the Soviet chapter would be a significant breakthrough for Soviet writers, who were isolated from many international cultural groups until their nation's intellectual climate began to improve.

Andrei Bitov, a novelist heading the six-man delegation of Soviet observers at the conference, told The Associated Press that Soviet PEN membership would be only "one of the smaller changes" made possible by Gorbachev.

Arafat condemns Rafsanjani's call to kill Westerners

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — PLO leader Yasser Arafat has condemned Iranian Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani's call for the killing of Westerners in retaliation for Palestinian deaths in the Israeli-occupied lands.

"I reject this call in its totality," Arafat told a news conference Sunday at Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters.

Rafsanjani on Friday called for five Britons, French or Americans to be killed for every Palestinian killed in the Gaza Strip or West Bank by the Israeli army. Washington, London and Paris condemned the statement.

Rafsanjani is one of Iran's most prominent political personalities and observers have said his statement of solidarity for Palestinians, fellow Moslems, may have been motivated by political ambition.

He is the only declared candidate in Iranian presidential elections scheduled for late summer.

The 54-year-old speaker earned a reputation as a moderate through his support for rebuilding ties with Western nations but recently changed tack toward Islamic fundamentalist orthodoxy.

Rafsanjani has come out in support of revolutionary patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomenei's call on Feb. 14 for the death of Salman Rushdie for writing the novel "The Satanic Verses," which many Moslems consider blasphemous.

Arafat on Sunday called on the international community "to act rapidly to put an end to the crimes and the massacres perpetrated by Israel against the population of the occupied territories."

The Palestine National Council, the PLO's parliament-in-exile, on Nov. 15 said it recognized Israel, renounced terrorism and will work toward a peace settlement that includes a state of Israel and a state of Palestine.

Asked if he planned to give up the peace effort because of continued bloodshed in the occupied lands, Arafat said: "It is an initiative of the Palestine National Council and it is not up to me to modify it."

The PLO's peace initiative led the United States to resume a dialogue with the organization after a decade of no contact.

Law, public service: Never-finishing jobs

By CHET CURRIER

Sixth in a series

By nearly any standard, the world economy going into the 1990s will be stronger and healthier than it has ever been before.

But paradoxically, the legions of people needing help to solve their problems and improve their lives seems only to increase.

That lesson can be learned in many ways — reading news accounts of famine and poverty in Third World countries, seeing television pictures of Wall Street miscreants led into court, or passing a homeless man or woman in a bus station.

In a complicated world, people of many descriptions call on specialized professionals who can help them with services ranging from legal advice to child care.

The work these professionals do ranges from selfless to very self-enriching. Rich or poor, though, people in these occupations usually share the opportunity for a common reward — serving others and the society they live in.

Of course, an activity that gives one person a sense of moral accomplishment may be unsuitable or even detestable to another.

For example, consider military service. Depending on your view, you may look at this work as objectionable or as a noble mission, providing security for your fellow citizens.

Law As the 1990s approach, the United States has more than half a million lawyers. Some people think that is too many, promoting suits and quarrels between Americans that add little or nothing to our overall economic welfare.

Others say there is nothing more essential to the American way of life, which is based first and foremost on the rule of law.

Ask a few practicing lawyers, and chances are they will tell you the truth includes both extremes.

Even with rapid growth in the amount of work to be done, the law profession began to attract an oversupply of people during the 1970s.

Ever since then, competition to get started and to succeed as a lawyer has been intense.

Word about this has gotten out, of course. As growth in law school graduates has slowed, the balance of supply and demand for lawyers is expected to settle into a better position in the years ahead.

Still, you can expect that the top-rated law schools will be extremely picky about whom they accept. Major law firms in most areas of the country will continue to set very high standards in accepting new associates and in choosing their future partners.

In these circumstances, the demand has grown for lower-paid, but still highly valued, legal assistants, or paralegals.

Social services Social and human services workers rarely represent high-priced clients. They deal with aging people, troubled children, the handicapped or the unemployed.

Most people who seek out this kind of work don't worry much about what they will earn in dollars. That goes, too, for aspirants to religious work, wmcn In some cases almost means taking a vow of poverty.

The decline of the traditional family in American life may well create opportunities for increased and expanded social services in the future. For example, the question of who will provide child care is wide open heading into the new decade.

Military service Because of changes in population trends, the Armed Forces must recruit today from a small pool of teenagers and young adults. Uncle Sam really does want you.

Never forget, the main mission of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines is preparedness for war. Life in the military means giving up some of the freedoms of choice and expression we all get used to in civilian life.

Still, a stint in the service can provide you with experience and training that is very useful toward a civilian career and a life as a responsible adult. The activities of the armed services encompass most civilian occupations, whether your interests lie in electronics, health care, management, teaching or construction work.

Hot dogs make way to Japan

CHICAGO (AP) — It may not reduce the nation's trade deficit with Japan, but it's guaranteed to be a hot export.

The Chicago-style hot dog — an all-beef wiener with tomatoes, onions, mustard, relish, cucumbers, celery salt and jalapeno peppers wrapped in a poppy-seed bun — is heading for Japan.

But instead of telling the vendor to "drag it through the garden," as Chicagoans do, Tokyo customers might ask for that "heartful food with a harmony taste."

Richard Portillo, a local hot dog-stand magnate, has a deal whereby Tokyo-based Chicago Foods Corp. will sell the Windy City delicacy.

North convictions left some questions

Conviction of Lt. Col. Oliver North on three charges stemming from his role in the Iran/contra affair didn't put to rest all the questions being asked about his actions and the potential actions of other Reagan administration officials. At the same time the fact that the jury which convicted him on charges of obstruction of Congress, shredding and altering documents, and accepting a $13,800 home security system from co-defendant Richard Secord did not prove that he was a thief or a dishonorable man as some have claimed.

The jury's verdict probably gave those condemning North and the Reagan administration a measure of satisfaction as it did those supporting him on grounds that he was involved in a patriotic attempt to help his country. But the North trial is far from over. There is still the matter of appeals to be considered.

Regardless how anyone feels about the patriotic aspect of North's assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras, his conviction on the charges does show that no individual, whether working under directions of a superior or not, is above the law. All government officials and employes would do well to recognize that fact. They will be held accountable by the law for their actions.

But the six acquittals also underscored that North was doing his best — perhaps even enthusiastically — to carry out what he understood to be the wishes of his commander-in-chief.

More than anything, perhaps, the convictions were a graphic illustration of the dangers inherent in Ronald Reagan's managerial style that was too relaxed, too lackadaisical to even determine how North was "helping" the Contras.

At this point, it's much too early to speculate on the final outcome. Even some Democrats have said, for example, that North should not spend time in jail for his actions. But neither is a call for a pardon in line.

First the court system should be permitted to resolve all the legal manuevers that will come before it. Then, once a firm legal decision has been rendered, the pardon question can be addressed.

Debt relief puzzle

While debtor and creditor countries wait for the details of a new U.S.-sponsored Third World debt-relief plan, one small piece of the puzzle has taken shape nicely. A three-year dispute that had hogtied the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) has been resolved. If its 44 member countries accept the compromise and authorize the additional lending it calls for, the IDB could become a small but useful tool for debt relief and economic rebirth in Latin America.

The development bank was a target of the Reagan administration campaign to reform bloated, ineffective multilateral agencies. Because the IDB board is controlled by Latin American borrowers, the administration accused the bank of rubber-stamping loans that did little to alleviate poverty or stimulate development. The United States demanded veto power over IDB lending. The bank's Latin members refused, and accused the United States of seeking to use the bank for self-serving purposes. As a result of the stalemate, the bank was impotent at a time when debt-strapped Latin American countries needed it most.

The impasse was recently broken when the United States settled for a compromise in which member countries can team together to delay questionable loans. The bank, under the new leadership of Uruguayan Enrique Iglesias, also has reorganized and revamped its lending policies. The compromise would give it up to $22.5 billion in new lending authority between 1990 and 1993, with priority going to loans that support economic reforms in debtor countries, alleviate poverty and protect the environment.

Critics question whether the compromise will produce better results. In addition, even an improved IDB cannot do much to alleviate the debt problem. That requires major debt write-offs by commercial banks and multi-billion-dollar backup from the World Bank, International Monetary Fund and creditor countries.

But by allowing renewed lending with full U.S. support, the compromise should help ease friction between the United States and Latin America as harder debt-relief problems are confronted. And the IDB can serve as a bridge for bringing more private investment into the poorest Latin American countries, especially to smaller countries where the World Bank and IMF are less active.

Although it has shared the Reagan administration's suspicions about IDB mismanagement, Congress should help the Bush administration replenish the bank's coffers. The U.S. share of the new funding plan is $78 million a year, a small amount that can leverage billions in loans. With debt eating away Latin American prosperity and democracy, every bit of help is needed.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, May 8, the 128th day of 1989. There are 237 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 8, 1945, President Harry S. Truman announced in a radio address that World War II had ended in Europe.

On this date:

In 1541, the Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto discovered the Mississippi River.

In 1846, the first major battle of the Mexican War was fought at Palo Alto, Texas, resulting in victory for Gen. Zachary Taylor's forces.

In 1884, the 33rd President of the United States, Harry S. Truman, was born near Lamar, Mo.

In 1886, Atlanta pharmacist John Styth Pemberton invented the syrup for a beverage that came to be known as Coca-Cola.

In 1958, Vice President Richard M. Nixon was shoved, stoned, booed and spat upon by anti-American protesters in Lima, Peru.

In 1970, helmeted construction workers broke up an anti-war protest on New York's Wall Street.

In 1973, militant Indians who had held the South Dakota hamlet of Wounded Knee for 10 weeks surrendered.

In 1978, David R. Berkowitz pleaded guilty in a Brooklyn courtroom to the six murder charges against him in the "Son of Sam" shootings that had terrified New Yorkers.

In 1980, Philippine opposition leader Benigno Aquino was released after 7½ years of detention and allowed to fly to the United States for medical treatment.

In 1987, an angry and defiant Gary Hart, dogged by reports about his relationship with Miami model Donna Rice, withdrew from the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Ten years ago: California Governor Edmund G. "Jerry" Brown Junior signed an executive order, effective the following day, establishing an "odd-even" license plate system of gasoline rationing in his state.

Birthdays: Comedian Don Rickles is 63. Environmentalist Sir David Attenborough is 63.

Hussein almost executed his own son

BAGHDAD, Iraq — This is the story of a father and son — a story that is unlikely to warm the cockles of your heart. The father, the no-nonsense president of Iraq, Saddam Hussein, almost had his son executed last fall. And the son, in despair, almost succeeded in killing himself. Once the heir apparent in Iraq, he is unheard of in this capital city today.

Jack Anderson

The story of this falling out between father and son has been kept a secret from the outside world. In the upper echelons of Iraqi government, it is a reminder of what kind of man runs the country.

Revelry in the Middle East usually involves guns. It is a little-known fact to the rest of the world that dozens of deaths have occurred in Lebanon after celebrants at weddings and other family occasions fire their guns into the air. Call it the Middle Eastern answer to rice. Except falling rice doesn't kill and falling bullets do.

Imagine the celebration at the end of a war. When Iran and Iraq reached a truce last August, Baghdad rocked and reverberated for 48 hours with the sound of these "jubilation bullets." Iraqi soldiers still on duty marked the occasion by blasting away with light artillery pieces, tanks and even anti-aircraft guns. The death toll from the party, according to knowledgeable sources, was as many as 300, with more than 2,000 injured.

President Hussein wisely announced a new policy — no more jubilation bullets.

Summer moved into fall, and Hussein's eldest son, Uday, attended a party. Among others there was the wife of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak. At some point, a jubilant young captain started firing his pistol into the air.

Uday told him to stop. There is some debate by those present whether Uday was faithfully carrying out his father's edict or whether he was just playing the bully as he was wont to do. The captain's gun was silenced, but only for 15 minutes. Then, caught up in the moment, the captain began firing again and Uday got serious. An eyewitness told us Uday beat the captain in the head with a stick-like object and then showed genuine surprise when the captain fell to the ground, dead.

Saddam Hussein loved his son and was grooming him as a successor, but Uday was about to find out that his father loved the late captain like a son. He was part of the presidential bodyguard, an aide de camp, chauffeur, briefcase carrier and food-taster to President Hussein.

The president was furious. Our sources say he considered executing his son and then threw the humiliated Uday into jail. The despondent Uday apparently attempted suicide, according to our sources. At this point, his mother, Sadija, begged Hussein to spring her son from jail. She trundled Uday off to Geneva where he was supposed to be part of Iraq's mission to the United Nations. Except Switzerland refused to give him credentials.

After a decent interval, Uday was allowed to return to Iraq this spring. He has not been seen publicly since the episode that disgraced him.

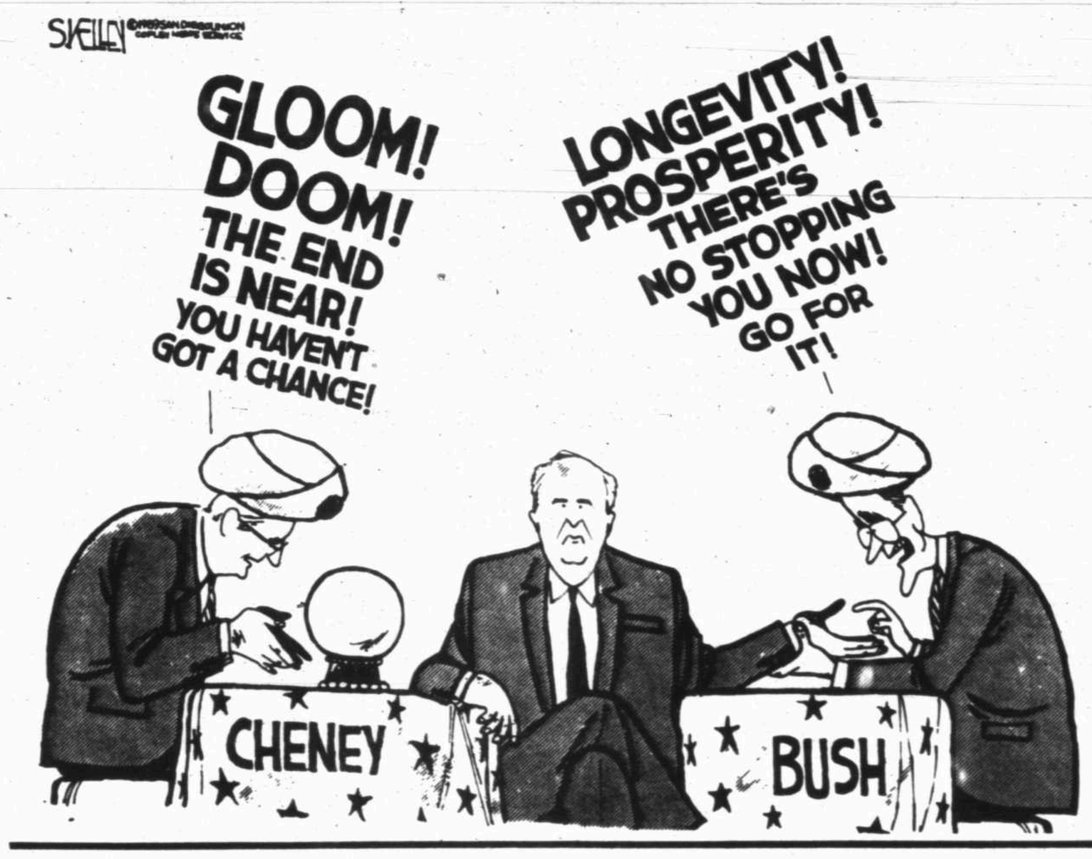

President Hussein has emerged from the incident smelling like a rose, at least among top military leaders and those in the secret service. They know that when push came to shove, their president punished his own son for harming one of their own. That Hussein stopped short of executing his offspring makes him a humanitarian to boot in their eyes.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Center for Women Policy Studies thinks the Scholastic Aptitude Test is unfair to girls. Boys score better on the questions about war and sports, while girls score better when asked about fashion and love. And it seems the SAT has more boy-oriented questions than girl-oriented questions.

The SAT has also been criticized for discriminating against minority cultures. It sounds to us like the test for college admission is unfair to both sexes and all races. Why should a teen-ager's high school achievements be judged by a day spent answering tortured questions about love, fashion, war and sports?

Floridian dragged to court by U.S. Army

Ocie Mills, a 54-year-old retired contractor in Santa Rosa County, Fla., and his son Carey were recently sentenced to 21 months in federal prison and fined $5,000.

Charley Reese

The U.S. Army got them.

You might think the U.S. Army does not go after American civilians, but that's probably because you don't know much about the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

In their news release, they proudly proclaim that Mills and his son were: convicted on four felony counts of knowingly discharging fill material in wetlands, one misdemeanor count for willfully discharging fill materials in wetlands, and one misdemeanor count of dredging a canal in navigable waters.

Sounds pretty bad, doesn't it? Sounds like Mills is one of those big developers just ripping up our precious environment. Well, let me tell you the shocking truth.

The wetlands involved are two small lots in a platted subdivision. Mills bought the two lots to build a house for his son. He doesn't own the subdivision which was platted and accepted by the state back in the 1970s. There are many similar lots in this subdivision with houses on them.

Now let me tell about that canal in navigable waters. It is an existing drainage ditch between the two lots which is included in the approved plat and which has been there for years.

Mills's crime was that he cleaned it out. The fill material was dirt Mills put on that part of the lot, which the state of Florida bureaucrats had told him they considered uplands, not wetlands.

These two lots, by the way, comprise together less than half an acre and they are on the shores of East Bay, along which are not only many subdivisions with storm water and sewages draining into it but several large chemical and industrial corporations.

A little silt and pure rainwater from a drainage ditch less than 300 feet long — that's all Ocie Mills put into East Bay, which is nectar compared to what's already in that bay.

This bizarre case raises several questions, not the least of which is bureaucrats running amok. (The case was the result of a joint investigation by the Jacksonville District, the Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency.)

I gladly stipulate that Mills is in technical violation of the law. Indeed, he admitted he had no permit at his trial. It was his contention that the Florida state bureaucracy had told him no permit was needed to clean out the ditch and to bring in the fill dirt for the uplands portion of the lot.

Unfortunately, a 72-year-old U.S. District judge refused to allow into evidence anything about his dealings with the state. It was the same judge who passed the sentence, which seems on its face outrageously disproportionate to the offense.

Mills is not a developer. He has no criminal record. No toxic chemicals were involved and in fact no damage to the environment was done. He simply did not have the permission of federal bureaucrats to clean out a drainage ditch and bring in some fill dirt for his own property in a state-approved subdivision.

For that, the federal bureaucrats are wrecking his life.

Congress clearly needs to look into this case and several aspects of it:

■ One, to settle jurisdiction. If the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers asserts jurisdiction over private land in state-approved subdivisions by the magic of their definition of wetlands, then state bureaucracies should butt out all together.

■ Secondly, is the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers qualified to enforce criminal laws against civilian citizens? This case indicates to me it is not.

■ Third, if federal judges appointed for life are going to continue sitting on the bench into their dotage, Congress should look at some mechanism for forcing their retirement.

Our forefathers did fight a revolution for this kind of nonsense.

Televised Wright hearings a Demo problem

WASHINGTON — The first test vote by the House on Speaker Jim Wright's fate is likely to determine whether the Ethics Committee hearings are televised, posing an uncomfortable situation for Democratic congressmen.

In general, the House permits television cameras into any public hearing. But the bipartisan committee is expected to split evenly along party lines, 6 to 6, on TV hearings — Republicans for, Democrats against. Since the GOP leadership wants to bring the TV issue to the floor, Democratic members will be faced with either voting to shield the case from public view or defy party leaders.

A footnote: The Wright defense strategy has shifted abruptly and sharply. While the speaker only two weeks ago was demanding a quick resolution of his case, the disclosure of new facts on his oil well investment has led to a go-slow tactic by Wright's lawyers.

NUKE NEWT

A two-pronged campaign against Rep. Newt Gingrich, viewed by Speaker Jim Wright's supporters as the source of his problems, is being launched on two fronts by Democrats: in the House Ethics Committee and on the 1990 campaign trail.

The four Democratic House members who signed a letter demanding that the Ethics Committee hire an outside counsel to investigate Gingrich, as it did Wright, are expected to be joined by well over 100 colleagues. The purpose: to subject the newly elected House minority whip to at least as much scrutiny of every phase of his life, past and present, as the speaker.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

At the same time, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee is targeting Gingrich as its principal goal in 1990. His Georgia district is not considered terribly vulnerable, but there is cloakroom talk of spending $1 million to elect a Democrat there.

NOT FUNNY, CLAUDINE

President Bush and his chief of staff, John Sununu, were not amused by the attempts at humor directed at Vice President Dan Quayle by the No. 1 Republican prospect to unseat a Democratic senator in 1990: Rhode Island's Rep. Claudine Schneider.

Early secret polls show her running only 5 percentage points behind Sen. Claiborne Pell, a 28-year Senate veteran and chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. But in private conversation with each other, Bush and Sununu expressed irritation that Schneider directed barbs at Quayle while addressing a dinner in Rhode Island.

She told an apocryphal story that Quayle felt sorry during his Latin American tour that he had not studied Latin harder in school so he could talk with the natives. The president and his chief of staff were not amused. Nor were they pleased by Schneider's postcript that she prays for Bush's health each day.

CHENEY TOO BUSY

A cordial letter from Sen. Malcolm Wallop, an ally on the Armed Services Committee, to Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, his longtime Wyoming colleague, has not only gone unanswered and unacknowledged but its proposal for Cheney to appoint two well-known defense specialists appears to have been rejected.

The lack of attention to Wallop disturbs administration officials worried about defense cuts. They say Cheney has simply been too busy to answer the nearly 2-month-old letter. But alienating a Republican senator who supports endangered weapons is not the smart politics expected of Cheney.

Wallop's recommendations include Dr. Angelo Codevilla, Wallop's former defense adviser and a father of the Strategic Defense Initiative, and Dr. William Graham, former science adviser in the Reagan administration.

PRODDING SHAMIR

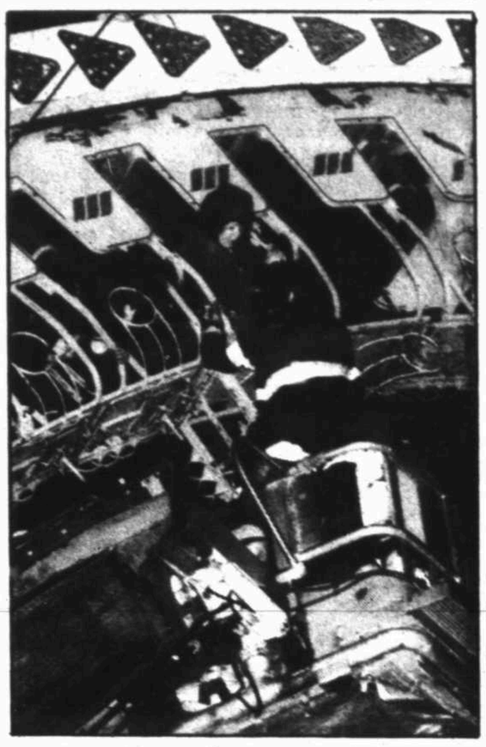

Although the ostensible purpose of a high-level State Department mission to see Itzhak Shamir is to report on what happened during Secretary of State James Baker's Moscow meetings next week, the real purpose is to prod the Israeli prime minister into action on his proposed Palestinian elections.

Baker is sending his key Mideast advisers, headed by the State Department's Dennis Ross and the National Security Council's Richard Haass, to give Shamir the U.S. position on several controversial questions. That includes supporting the right to vote for East Jerusalem Palestinians and non-recognition of Israeli sovereignty over Arab-populated East Jerusalem.

The post-Moscow stop in Jerusalem is getting a cold shoulder from Israeli politicians who want no American interference with Shamir's murky election plan.

8 rescued after 2 ½ hours spent dangling from ride

NEW YORK (AP) — Eight carnival-goers trapped in a broken "super loop" ride were rescued early Sunday after being left dangling upside down and 60 feet in the air for more than two hours.

"Apparently, a light fixture had shaken loose and had come down on the tracks and jammed. When the little train came by it was stopped," said Fire Department spokesman John Mulligan.

The ride in Queens, which was part of a traveling carnival and consists of connecting train cars that run on a hoop-shaped track, ground to a halt late Saturday night at the top of the loop, leaving the eight thrill-seekers screaming for help.

After a while, the trapped riders, tiring of being upside down, unbuckled their seat belts and sat on the safety cage surrounding the seats. Rescue workers feared it might not hold their weight, Mulligan said.

After about 2½ hours, firefighters using a cherry picker were able to take the passengers off the crippled ride two at a time, he said.

No one was seriously injured.

Woman who gave birth while in coma slowly recovering

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Less than five months after she gave birth while in a coma, Barbara Blodgett has composed a poem and is learning to eat, dress and groom herself.

In a meeting with reporters Saturday outside the family's rented home, the 24-year-old woman said little more than "hi," sitting in a wheelchair with her eyes fixed on her husband, David.

He said she composed the following poem to him on a computer keyboard:

"I know in my heart what is wrong, what is right

"I know in my heart our love is worth the fight

"So hold on to me, babe, hold me tight, hold me fast,

"I know in my heart our love is going to last."

As he sat beside his wife, Blodgett gave a bottle to their son, Simon, who was born in Seattle by Caesarean section Dec. 9, five months after Mrs. Blodgett was injured in an automobile accident.

She was the fourth woman in recorded medical history to carry a healthy fetus to term while in a coma.

Mrs. Blodgett was three months pregnant when the vehicle in which she was riding collided with another vehicle June 30, injuring nerves between her brain and the spinal cord. Her cousin, Nicole Valenzuela, was killed.

Blodgett, who was wearing a seat belt, and David Blodgett III, then 13 months and strapped into a car seat, escaped injury.

Doctors had held out little hope that Mrs. Blodgett would recover, but she began to regain consciousness after her son was born.

Since Feb. 14 she has spent most of her time in rehabilitation therapy at St. Elizabeth Medical Center, visiting her family at home on weekends.

A statement issued by hospital officials said she had learned to eat, was learning to drink liquids and was trying to become mobile enough to get into and out of bed, dress and groom herself and perform other functions. She is able to stand only with assistance.

Now that she has mastered the use of a keyboard, the next step is learning to use a device that translates typed messages into human speech.

Blodgett said he returned to work a month ago after using up sick leave and vacation time donated by co-workers at the U.S. Forest Service, where he and his wife worked before the accident.

"I've learned a lot more about responsibility," he said.

Stackhouse, who was slightly injured, was convicted of vehicular assault and sentenced to three years.

House panel attacks Exxon for spill cleanup

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Exxon stalled in its response to the Alaska oil spill and gave bad information, the state's top environmental official told congressional investigators.

The five-member subcommittee of the U.S. House Interior Committee also heard from fishermen who said they fear their multimillion-dollar catch in Prince William Sound will be reduced this season to protect seafood lovers from the effects of the spill.

"We've been told, we've been emphatically told, that we're going to have a normal fishery this summer. We're going to have anything but a normal fishery," Ken Adams of the Cordova District Fishermen United said Sunday.

Adams said the state could put a large portion of the sound off-limits when the commercial salmon season begins May 15. The state has not yet set any limits while it monitors the spill's movements.

At an estimated $84 million, Prince William Sound has the nation's eighth largest commercial fishing industry, Adams said. About 85 percent of the catch is salmon.

Riki Ott, a member of the Cordova group's board of directors, said the fishing industry has long been fearful of a spill. Cordova is a fishing town on the edge of the sound, about 50 miles from Valdez, which is the terminal for the trans-Alaska pipeline.

"We knew we were playing with Russian roulette," she said.

Dennis Kelso, commissioner of the state Department of Environmental Conservation, questioned Exxon's statements that it could have more effectively contained the spill had it been allowed to use chemical dispersants.

Kelso said neither Exxon nor Alyeska, the oil industry's jointly owned operator of the pipeline, was prepared to deal with the oil spill.

"Neither of them had the equipment on site to deal with it either through mechanical means or chemical means," he said.

He also said Exxon's response was "reluctant and myopic, characterized by stalling techniques, disinformation, and a refusal to pay real attention to damage outside of Prince William Sound."

The subcommittee today was to conclude two days of hearings investigating the nation's largest oil spill. Today's session was expected to include testimony from Exxon, which has defended its actions.

Alyeska's vice president for operations, Theo L. Polasek, said the industry's response plans were sufficient to deal with a spill, but that there was confusion after the tanker ran aground.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., told Polasek that "I'm not so sure this (the cleanup) was a high priority for you people."

The tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground on a reef in the sound on March 24 after filling its storage tanks with crude oil from the pipeline. More than 10 million gallons of oil poured into the sound.

Also Sunday, state officials said Exxon's decision to pull crews from an oil-stained beach on Smith Island was surprising.

But Exxon spokesman Bill Stillings said the crews were moved off the northern beach to attack more heavily soiled areas. The island is considered crucial to the annual seal pupping cycle.

"I think we fully intend to come back to that beach. I won't tell you we'll be back on that beach tomorrow," Stillings said. "(Exxon's) best judgment at this point is that it's time to move on."

Bush to speak at black college's commencement

LORMAN, Miss. (AP) — The president of Alcorn State University has asked every president since Lyndon Johnson to speak at the black college's commencement. He was a bit surprised when one accepted.

Alcorn State, one of the smallest of Mississippi's eight public universities, hasn't had a lot of limelight over the years. "Roots" author Alex Haley — who never graduated — is by far its best-known student. It also has produced some pro football players.

Getting President Bush to address Saturday's commencement was quite a coup, and some are hailing the visit as a historic sign of racial progress.

When Bush arrives, he will be "in the boondocks," said school President Walter Washington, who proudly adds that the president will tour an important place in black history.

Nestled in the rural hills of southwestern Mississippi, the campus is seven miles west of "downtown" Lorman — an unincorporated hamlet consisting of a post office, two service stations, an old-time general store and a few houses.

The campus originally was Oakland College, a Presbyterian school founded in 1830 to educate white males.

However, that school never reopened after the Civil War, and during Reconstruction, the state purchased the land for a black college. Hiram R. Revels, the first black to serve in the U.S. Senate, was Alcorn's first president.

The school, renamed Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, became the first black land-grant college in the United States, Washington said. That was in 1878.

Today, the 2,757-student campus is overwhelmingly black and Democratic.

Bush's visit "speaks well of him," said James McDonald, 21-year-old leader of Alcorn State's 100-member chapter of the Young Democrats.

The Republican president also will travel Saturday to much larger Mississippi State University in Starkville to give another graduation speech. The predominantly white school has about 12,000 students.

Several Alcorn State students said they were overjoyed to have a president visit — no matter what his party affiliation.

Navajo Tribal Council split by controversy

By MEL REISNER

AP/Pat Lyons

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz. (AP) — In the temporary Navajo Tribal Council office, one clock runs five minutes faster than another a few feet away, an unintended symbol of a government thrown out of sync by the alleged corruption of its chairman.

Peter MacDonald, who had held the highest office of the 200,000-member tribe with one interruption since 1971, was voted out by the tribal council in February following allegations that he demanded kickbacks.

The 60-year-old MacDonald, who says he's innocent, has lived for years like a potentate in plain view of Indians whose austere circumstances are proverbial. And yet while he rode in limousines and flew to Europe, Hawaii and the Super Bowl, he also promised economic development — a vision of herdsmen becoming technicians.

After spending $650,000 to remodel his offices following his January 1987 inauguration, MacDonald was secure in his fourth term, until January when the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs began investigating corruption in tribal governments.

Witness after witness told of MacDonald demanding kickbacks. His son, Peter "Rocky" MacDonald Jr., testified after receiving immunity from prosecution, using a code term in speaking of under-the-table payments to his father as "golf balls."

When the 88-member Tribal Council began its winter meeting in early February, it rebelled.

On Feb. 17, a Friday night after many MacDonald supporters had left, the dissidents voted 49-13 to place him and Vice Chairman Johnny Thompson on administrative leave.

The majority picked Leonard Haskie as interim chairman on March 10 and has stood united since, giving rise to th name "49ers."

"The joke around here is that it's the 49ers versus the Stealers," said Cecil Jones of Chinle.

Past Navajo leaders "usually were very wealthy men, but I wouldn't say they compare to MacDonald," said Duane Beyal, Haskie's press secretary and chief assistant to former chairman Peterson Zah. "With them, they were counting herds of sheep; with MacDonald, it's the green stuff."

In visits to some of the 109 reservation chapters, or wards, MacDonald has maintained his innocence. He has refused repeated Associated Press requests for interviews and declined to respond in writing to a list of questions.

Although the Navajo Supreme Court upheld the council action, MacDonald refused to stop giving orders or vacate what Haskie calls "the Mahogany Palace" wing of the administration building.

"I am innocent. And I am entitled under the law to be presumed innocent. But the Tribal Council could care less," MacDonald wrote in an opinion piece for the Gallup (N.M.) Independent.

He has acknowledged taking "gifts" from contractors but argues gift exchanges are a time-honored way of doing business by Indian chiefs. To Haskie, that's a distortion of Indian tradition.

"Those gifts were tokens to establish a longterm friendship with an individual, not hundreds of thousands of dollars but small things — bracelets, moccasins, a shawl," Haskie said.

No one knows how much MacDonald realized from the tribe's 1987 purchase of the Big Boquillas Ranch, a 491,000-acre spread in north-central Arizona. Phoenix real estate broker Byron "Bud" Brown testified that he arranged for a Scottsdale oilman to buy the ranch for $26.2 million and sell it a few hours later to the Navajos for $33.4 million.

Brown said he gave MacDonald $50,000 in cash and the use of a BMW sedan, along with paying off a $25,000 loan; dissidents claim MacDonald may have received one-tenth of the profit. A federal grand jury in Phoenix is investigating the allegations.

In 1975, MacDonald was indicted on fraud and income-tax-evasion charges. A deadlocked U.S. District Court jury in May 1977 failed to reach a verdict, and the judge ordered a directed verdict of acquittal.

The longtime tribal leader is not without defenders.

"Mr. MacDonald is a very strong statesman for Indian people across the country," said Donald Benally, chairman of the council's Advisory Committee until Haskie named a new panel.

"I think we would have really made a big stride in our economic development if Mr. MacDonald would've gone on without any political interruptions."

MacDonald, an electrical engineer, worked in the aerospace industry in Southern California.

NATION IN BRIEF

Cold fusion scientists will defend research

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Two scientists under fire to prove their claims of "cold fusion" go before a jury of their peers tonight at a chemists' conclave in Los Angeles.

University of Utah chemist B. Stanley Pons and Martin Fleischmann of the University of Southampton in England hoped to bolster their claims that they achieved nuclear fusion in a jar at room temperature — a breakthrough that, if confirmed, could open the door to a cheap and virtually inexhaustible source of energy.

Pons said Sunday that he and Fleischmann would present their evidence at the Electrochemical Society's biannual meeting.

Last week in Baltimore, scientists at a meeting of the American Physical Society discounted the fusion claims, accusing Pons and Fleischmann of errors.

Physicists have been the pair's chief critics since they announced March 23 that experiments had produced fusion using rods of palladium in electrically charged coils of platinum immersed in deuterium-rich heavy water.

The two said their experiment yielded more than four times the energy needed to produce it. Pons said he and Fleischmann would report on later research, including "new results that exhibit very large amounts of excess heat."

Old age sure as taxes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — No matter whether you exercise, eat oat bran and take stress-reduction vitamins, it's bound to happen. You will get old.

Two disturbing age reminders occurred last month — the first lady of television, Lucille Ball, and 1960s activist Abbie Hoffman, died.

Other indications, though somewhat less sombering, also indicate the years are creeping up, according to a Los Angeles Times article Sunday. The list offered, in part, that you're not as young as you think when:

- You hear a Rolling Stones song on the Muzak in the elevator.
- Your favorite outfielder is elected to the Hall of Fame — posthumously.
- You know what LSMFT means.
- You can't wait for Baskin-Robbins to come out with an "oat bran" flavor.
- You look back nostalgically at your "midlife" crisis.

Man dies in store shootout

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Gunfire erupted Sunday at a crowded Wal-Mart store, killing a gunman who was described as mentally disturbed and wounding a policeman, officials said.

The man exchanged gunfire with two police officers inside the store filled with shoppers shortly after 2 p.m., said police Lt. Mike McKenna.

The man, identified as Aaron Coleman, 21, of Wichita, died about two hours later at a Wichita hospital, said police Capt. John Hershberger.

One of the officers suffered a gunshot wound to the leg. The officer, who was in good condition at a hospital, was not identified.

Police went to the store after receiving reports that someone was armed and threatening to harm himself or others, McKenna said.

Scientist told to change testimony, senator says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bush administration officials ordered a government scientist to change his planned congressional testimony today on the greenhouse effect to support their "do-nothing approach" to the problem, a senator says.

Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., said Sunday that the Office of Management and Budget "censored" a scientist's planned testimony on global warming to downplay the seriousness of the problem.

Dr. James E. Hansen, director of NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies, was among those scheduled to appear before the science and technology subcommittee headed by Gore.

The New York Times today quoted Hansen as saying OMB edited the text of his testimony to soften the conclusions and make the prospects of change in climate appear more uncertain.

"It distresses me that they put words in my mouth; they even put it in the first person," Hansen told the Times, adding that he had tried to "negotiate" with the budget office over the wording but "they refused to change."

"I should be allowed to say what is my scientific position; there is no rationale by which OMB should be censoring scientific opinion," Hansen said. "I can understand changing policy, but not science."

The Times said Hansen's original testimony was that computer projections of changes in climate caused by carbon dioxide and other gases released into the atmosphere show substantial increases in temperature, drought, severe storms and other stresses likely to affect the earth's biological systems.

Hansen's original testimony would have supported the position that, while there are still many uncertainties, enough is known now about the general and even regional effects of the global warming trend to start acting now to mitigate and prepare for those effects, the paper said.

Hansen was not reachable for comment Sunday night.

White House spokesman B. Jay Cooper said he had no knowledge of the matter.

Officials ordered the scientist to change his testimony because it would "conflict with the ideologically based do-nothing approach which they're most comfortable with," said Gore.

Gore said he was told by sources in the Bush administration that officials had "censored the scientific opinions we have asked to be presented."

"I think they're scared of the truth. I think they're scared that Hansen and the other scientists are right and that some dramatic policy changes are going to be needed and they don't want to face up to it because they prefer to do nothing."

Gore said he knew of no similar orders being given to other scientists scheduled to testify. He said his committee would ask OMB officials to explain why the testimony was changed.

Panel rejects requiring school bus seat belts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal committee today rejected the idea of requiring seat belts on the nation's more than 300,000 larger school buses, concluding that it would cost $40 million and save an average of just one life a year.

"The overall potential benefits of requiring seat belts in school buses is insufficient to justify a federal standard mandating installation," said a committee of the National Research Council after an 18-month study. The NRC was set up by the National Academy of Sciences.

The committee said, however, that some steps should be taken to improve what transportation officials say already is one of the safest public conveyances, including raised seat backs and programs to prevent accidents while children are getting on and off the buses.

The group estimated that if all school buses were equipped with seat belts for each passenger and half the students used them, it might save one life and prevent several dozen serious injuries a year. It would cost $40 million a year to equip and maintain all larger school buses with passenger seat belts, the study said.

Raising seat-back heights from a minimum of 20 inches to 24 inches could save two to three lives, prevent up to 95 serious injuries and cost about $6 million a year, the report said.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration does not require seat belts in buses rated at more than 10,000 pounds gross weight that typically carry more than 16 passengers. Smaller, van-like buses must have belts, however.

The study, ordered by Congress and funded by the Department of Transportation, recommended that all states prohibit children from standing on school buses when they are in motion. Some states allow school buses to carry more children than there are seats.

The committee, which included a wide range of safety and transportation experts, also recommended that states, local school districts and private contractors stop operating school buses made before 1977 because they do not comply with current safety standards.

Buses built after 1977 have extra padding in seats, protected fuel tanks and other modifications to make them less deadly in crashes.

The recommendation on older buses followed a similar conclusion from the National Transportation Safety Board five weeks ago after an investigation into the head-on collision between a pickup truck and an older school bus used by a church group in Kentucky in May 1988 that killed 24 children and three adults.

Although that crash was blamed on the allegedly drunken driver of the pickup truck, who is to face trial in November on 27 murder charges, the safety board said design of the bus contributed to the severity of the accident. The bus' unprotected fuel tank burst into flames that spread fire and smoke through the bus.

The report said a minority of committee members felt seat belt use should be encouraged for all motor vehicles.

In reaching its conclusion that a school bus seat belt law is unwarranted, the committee studied the experience of New York and several school districts in Illinois, New Jersey, Virginia and Arizona that have required safety belts.

The committee said that an average of 10 children a year are killed while riding school buses, but 40 are killed while trying to board or leave a bus, two-thirds of them hit by their own or another bus.

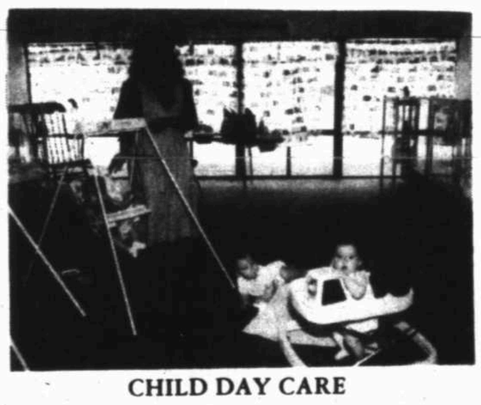

The report proposed more careful driver selection and training, mandatory stop-signal arms on all new buses, and possible use of loudspeakers, barriers and sensors to prevent pedestrian accidents.

"Although the death or injury of any child transported by school bus is cause for concern, the safety record of school buses is good considering the amount of travel involved," the report said. U.S. school buses log four billion miles a year.

An older doe looks on quizzically as four young Toggenburg females partake of mothers' milk during the first Permian Basin Dairy Goat Show.

Just kiddin'around

Ten-year-old Emily Jones of Stanton has a heart-to-heart, nose-to-nose visit with one of her 4-H project goats.

It was a parent's nightmare, rooms full of impatient, bawling kids, waiting to go to the show.

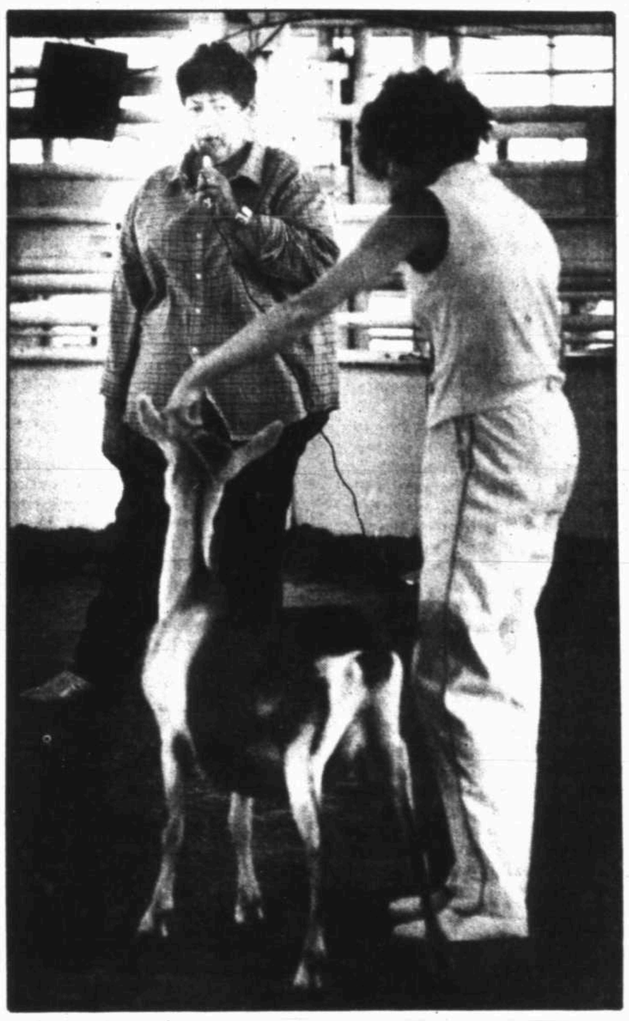

But Saturday in Odessa, the kids were real goats and the show was the first-ever Permian Basin Dairy Goat Show at the West Texas Horse Center arena in West Odessa.

The all-day show, sanctioned by the American Dairy Goat Association, drew nearly 90 entries from Texas and New Mexico.

Odessan Deanna Coulter, whose Lamancha and Pygmy goats share a five-acre pasture with a horse, organized the first local show ever.

Ms. Coulter crganized the show to promote the image of dairy goats and caprine dairy products, which she says have nutrition and health benefits over traditional bovine (dairy cow) products. Those raised for dairy products make up the largest share of the three major types of goats — dairy goats, meat goats and hair goats.

Crash survivor comforted the dying

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston computer salesman on his way to see ruins near Cancun, Mexico says he spent a night in a snake-infested jungle comforting fellow tourists who were dying of injuries suffered when their plane crashed.

"I tried to make them comfortable and get them water," Russ Blocksidge said Sunday upon his return to Houston, a day after he was rescued.

Blocksidge, 33, was among 18 people aboard the Aerocozumel plane that crashed Friday afternoon about 40 miles south of Cancun. Six people were killed.

"All I saw was that we were losing altitude," Blocksidge said. "When I saw we were going real far in, I put my head between my knees. It went right in and hit a tree.

"People died all night long. It happened, and I'm just lucky."

He said an American Airlines pilot saw the smaller plane go down and circled the crash site. He was confident the pilot had notified authorities.

A Mexican navy helicopter soon appeared overhead to drop water but couldn't land because of the dense jungle.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Two men killed in separate accidents

From Staff Reports

Two men were killed Sunday in separate traffic accidents north of Lamesa and near Sterling City, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Ronnie Gene Schneider, 37, of Lamesa, was fatally injured at 10:15 p.m. Sunday when his 1982 Chevrolet pickup truck rolled over in a one-vehicle accident on U.S. Highway 87 1½ miles north of Lamesa.

He was pronounced dead on arrival at Lamesa's Medical Arts Hospital later that night by Justice of the Peace Denise Dyess of Lamesa. DPS Trooper Enrique Nava of Lamesa investigated the mishap.

Police Roundup

Schneider, a Lamesa electrician, was driving south when the pickup truck drifted to the shoulder of the highway, Schneider over-corrected in returning the truck to the road, the truck went into a broadside skid and overturned 1¼ times, said a DPS spokesman. Schneider, who was not wearing his seat belt, was thrown from the truck.

Funeral arrangements for Schneider are pending at Branon Funeral Home in Lamesa.

Billy Leon Johnson, 26, of Odessa, was killed early Sunday morning when the 1988 Chevrolet pickup truck he was driving overran a curve on Texas Highway 158 west of Sterling City and struck a concrete culvert.

Johnson and 26-year-old Shane Alan Osborne, a passenger in the truck, were ejected from the truck upon impact. The accident was investigated by DPS Trooper Ben Burch of Sterling City.

Osborne was listed in stable condition today in Midland Memorial Hospital.

Services for Johnson will be held at 3 p.m. Wednesday in the Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home Chapel in Odessa. Burial will be in Sunset Memorial Gardens.

Lee students to compete

From Staff Reports

Five Lee High students have qualified to represent West Texas in the National Forensic League (NFL) meet to be held at the Colorado School of Mines in Golden, Colo. June 10-17.

Only 14 qualifying slots were available to West Texas students in team and individual events. To qualify, these students successfully competed against 18 area schools in the West Texas NFL qualifier held April 15 and 16.

In addition to Frasier's accolades in the Student Congress category, Lee student Froning was elected presiding officer by her peers for the first "Senate" session and Horn and Buckingham were the presiding officers for the first and second "House of Representatives" sessions, respectively.

Lincoln-Douglas debate competitor Shamitha Reddy and team debaters Karen Herne and Kellye Herne missed advancing to national competition by one vote.

Lee High School student Charlie Lewis was named one of the top two members of the novice House of Representatives, a non-national qualifier event.

'Disruptive' elderly Alvin woman faces eviction suit

ALVIN (AP) — An elderly Alvin woman who never has missed a rent payment for her government-assisted apartment is facing an eviction suit in what boils down to a dispute between her and the apartment management.

"I'm being treated like a dog," says Zella Berry, who has lived in the Alvin Memorial Gardens since October 1987. "We should be treated with respect. We're old, but we're not crazy."

The apartment manager, Mary McElhanon, alleges the 72-year-old Ms. Berry laughs too loud, gossips and has a sense of humor that is unappreciated.

The allegations, spelled out in an October letter to Ms. Berry, include an accusation that Ms. Berry showed off an advertisement for condoms to other residents.

Ms. Berry also allegedly accused another tenant of cheating at bingo, and was spreading lies, rumors and innuendo among other residents. But Ms. Berry says she's been harassed and wants to be left alone.

"They're going to have to put me out on the street," she told the Houston Chronicle. "That's where I'll be staying. I like it here. I feel like I have the right to live here."

A non-payment suit was filed in Justice of the Peace Donna Starkey's court after Ms. Berry's monthly rent check was refused by the apartment management. She pays $45 per month while the federal government, under a subsidy, picks up the remaining cost to cover her $516 rent.

When the non-payment suit was filed, the government revoked the subsidy, says James Wilson, Housing and Urban Development chief in Houston.

"She has been a disturbing element in the project for 1½ years," he said.

"We hoped that she would be forced out, and we wouldn't have to drag anybody to court," Ms. McElhanon said.

The Gulf Coast Legal Foundation has jumped into the dispute, filing a countersuit alleging Ms. Berry's rights have been violated by removing her subsidy without due process.

"All we got from (management) is generalities," attorney Clifton Ransom said.

GOATS

Although the butterfat content of cow and goat milk is generally about the same, the molecules of fat in goat products are smaller and more easily digestible, explained Audrey Evans, the certified judge for Saturday's show.

"That's why people with ulcers and allergies can tolerate it better," said Ms. Evans, who is from Norco, Calif. Infants thrive on goats' milk because "they can digest eight ounces in about 20 minutes versus two hours for the same amount of cows' milk."

However, the smaller fat globules make goats' milk "naturally homogenized," and hard to skim the cream off the milk. Those same characteristics also make the milk sensitive to absorption of odors and break down chemically more quickly than cows' milk, giving it "that goaty taste," Ms. Coulter said.

Nevertheless, properly chilled and stored, goat milk is a nutritious alternative to cows' milk, she says.

Because their closest relatives in the animal kingdom are deer, goats are known by similar gender identifiers — doe for female and buck for male.

As a judge, Ms. Evans looks for several physical characteristics in picking a grand champion doe — body structure, producing potential, and the appearance she will stay healthy. Growing up on a cattle dairy near San Antonio, Ms. Evans learned all about cows from her father. After the family moved to California, she developed an interest in goats "because they were something different."

But many of the same characteristics apply to goats as to their bovine cousins. "For some magical reason, those who carry less flesh, produce more milk," she noted.

Goats are more efficient producers of milk than cows. Their metabolism allows them to digest and create milk from woodier feeds, Ms. Coulter said. As relatives of deer, goats are "browsers," rather than than "grazers," such as cattle and horses.

As browsers, their natural tendency is to look upward for food and their tastes run toward the crispy and crunchy. Mesquite branches and berries suit Ms. Coulter's herd just fine, she said.

Goats' eating habits brought up a popular myth that goat fanciers are eager to debunk — they won't eat tin cans or other garbage.

"Goats are a lot like children," said Ms. Evans. Maybe that's why the young of both groups are called kids.

"They are very curious creatures. They investigate everything and like a small child, the first place they put almost anything is in their mouth.

"If someone comes across a goat with a can in its mouth, they assume it's going to eat the can. Well, it may eat the paper label — just like a child will eat paper — but it won't eat the can," she explained.

However, she added that goats will do an admirable job of shrub trimming and will keep most types of weeds down, while leaving the sweeter grasses to grow.

The local show over the weekend was conducted under the auspices of the West Texas Dairy Goat Association, based in San Angelo.

ADGA-sanctioned shows and 4-H Club shows are the primary opportunities for goat owners to show off their proud animals.

One proud owner is 10-year-old Emily Jones of Stanton who is in her third year of 4-H with a small herd of Toggenburgs. The chocolate-colored animals have alert deer-like ears and distinctive white markings on their face, ears and rumps.

Ears — or the lack of them — are a distinguishing characteristic of most breeds. Alpines, like Toggenburgs, have graceful deer-like ears. Nubians, on the other hand, feature long, drooping ears that hang past their jaw line.

At the other extreme are Lamanchas, who have virtually no external ears. In fact, if their elfin gopher-like ears extend more than two inches from the skull, they cannot be exhibited in sanctioned shows.

Some Vietnam-era vets making up war stories

DALLAS (AP) — A man who served as president of the Vietnam Veterans of America's Dallas chapter gave speeches about seeing buddies killed in Southeast Asia but never served in Vietnam, military records show.

The closest Joe Testa came to the military was Fort Hood near Killeen, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

He was absent without leave twice, received suspended sentences totaling nine months of hard labor and never rose above the rank of private, records show.

Testa's ability to rise to the presidency of the veterans' group, before he was removed in January, illustrates a growing problem: As America shows a belated appreciation for those who served in Vietnam, some people are embellishing their roles in the war, and even fabricating military careers.

"When the war was unpopular, people were reluctant to admit they had served in Vietnam," said Barry Kasinitz, public affairs officer for the 30,000-member Vietnam Veterans of America in Washington, D.C.

"But now, being a Vietnam veteran is chic, and you see an awful lot of people making up war stories."

Experts say some do it for glory or attention; some to justify their drug abuse, unemployment or other personal problems; and some for the camaraderie of veterans' groups, where they can drink beer and swap stories, real or imagined, about the war.

"These are people who wanted to be combat vets, who, as males in our society, felt they had to prove themselves by fighting in a war," said David Rodriguez, a veterans' counselor in Dallas.

"But they were unwilling, or they didn't get the opportunity, to go to Vietnam.

"So now they live the experience vicariously. They hang around with Vietnam vets and call themselves Vietnam vets."

Veterans and government officials said there may be legions of people who have invented or inflated their military service in Southeast Asia. The impostors often go unchallenged, said B.G. Burkett, treasurer of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund of Texas.

"The etiquette among Vietnam vets is, you don't ask about another vet's experience," said Burkett, an Army lieutenant in Vietnam and now a Dallas stockbroker. "If they want to talk about it, fine, but you don't pry. That allows fraud to exist even among Vietnam veterans."

Science adviser not optimistic on SSC funding

DALLAS (AP) — Newly appointed White House science adviser D. Allan Bromley promised to fight hard for funds to build the $5.8 billion super collider, but said he is not optimistic that Congress will grant the money.

"I can't be optimistic at this point," Bromley said of the funding prospects for the project. "We're in a time of substantial financial deficits."

The super collider, a 53-mile particle accelerator, is planned for construction in Ellis County south of Dallas.

As a new member of the Bush administration, Bromley, a 63-year-old physicist from Yale University, said he supports building the collider.

His backing of the project follows President Bush's support of the super collider, which could bring thousands of jobs to North Texas. Leading congressional representatives have predicted a hard road for the project's $250 million request for fiscal 1990.

The Senate Budget Committee already has cut $1 billion from President Bush's $15.5 billion request for the budget category that would include the super collider. But last week, the committee added $175 million to those funds, a move that encouraged supporters of the proposed accelerator.

Bromley also said he wants to move forward with other science "megaprojects" such as the $3 billion plan to map the human genome, the $20 billion space station or the aerospace plane.

Bromley acknowledged the difficulty of financing such projects and said potential cost-sharing with foreign countries would play a key role in discussions over the super collider as well as the other big science projects.

"But," he added, "even more important, we have to ask ourselves: Can we as a nation afford not to do them? All of these projects have the potential of moving technology forward to pay off in wildly different areas, areas we can't even anticipate at this point."

Bromley was appointed in April as President Bush's chief adviser on science and technology matters.

He said he hopes to improve U.S. competitiveness through science and technology and upgrade science education in the nation's high schools. Bromley also said he favors providing more funds for scientific research on policy issues such as the environment, drug abuse and AIDS.

Bromley expressed skepticism about the recently reported discovery of cold fusion.

Texas sheriff relieved suspects in cult murders dead or in Mexican custody

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — U.S. officials said they are not only celebrating the arrests of members of a drug-smuggling cult, but are relieved that the end came south of the border.

But Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez added that he was disappointed that the cult's alleged ringleader, Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, was slain by machine-gun fire by one of his followers upon his command.

"I think he should have maybe died a little slower death, because that guy, he was a very dangerous man," Perez said.

Members of the cult taken into custody Saturday and those arrested earlier say Constanzo was behind the group's 15 slayings — either human sacrifices or drug-related murders — that occurred at a rural ranch near Matamoros.

"They committed the crimes in Mexico," said Oran Neck; agent-in-charge of U.S. Customs in Brownsville. "If they committed murder in Mexico, we can't charge them here."

Constanzo and a follower, Martin Quintana Rodriguez, were killed Saturday as authorities in Mexico City closed in on an apartment where they were hiding, officials said. Sara Maria Aldrete, the so-called "godmother" of the cult, was arrested at the same Mexico City residence with three other members of the drug ring.

FBI Special Agent Bob Nixon of Brownsville also said it was best that Ms. Aldrete and the others were arrested in Mexico.

"It's great," Nixon said Sunday. "It will save us from having to extradite them" (to Mexico).

Constanzo and Ms. Aldrete were among 11 people indicted by a U.S. federal grand jury in McAllen on drug charges in connection with the case.

"The only reason we were looking for them was so we could extradite them to Mexico so they could be tried there," Nixon said. "The only purpose of the drug indictments here was to have probable cause to pick them up and turn them over to Mexico.

"That's the whole purpose of the task force we formed here, for foreign police cooperation," Nixon added.

The task force included the FBI, Drug Enforcement Administration, Customs and the Cameron County Sheriffs Department.

Perez said he did not expect U.S. officials to try to extradite those in custody in Mexico to the United States.

"I hope they stay over there in Mexico, because that's where the murders were coordinated and they have to stand trial over there," Perez said. Under Mexican law, the worst punishment any of the suspects could receive is a total of 50 years in prison.

Perez did not disguise his disdain for Ms. Aldrete. He said, "Whatever she gets (in punishment), it won't be enough."

News flash: North Texas town gets mayor at last

HICO (AP) — This tiny town in North Texas is hoping it won't be the butt of any more jokes or the focus of any more reporters. Yes, Hico finally has a mayor.

Sandra Ethridge, who served one term as a councilwoman, ran unopposed for the post and garnered 181 votes.

Ms. Ethridge's election on May 6 snapped a 10-month spell in which Hico went without a leader.

Hico, a town of 1,375 located about 65 miles southwest of Fort Worth, had been mayorless since J.M. "Mutt" Blakley resigned last July after just two months in office.

He was upset with the five-member town council, which voted to strip him of his power to vote, except to break ties.

A special election Jan. 21 drew no candidates, but Hico soon drew national attention as the town where nobody wanted to be mayor.

Mayor pro tem Glenn Marshall received 41 write-in votes in the January election, but turned down the gesture, citing the reduced power of the office.

"We just needed a mayor," Ms. Ethridge said Sunday when asked why she decided to run.

Jim Whitney, a 35-year-old quadriplegic announced in March that he would seek the job that nobody else wanted. He wanted to be mayor, he said, "because every town's got to have one."

But town officials ruled that Whitney hadn't lived in Hico long enough and disqualified him from the ballot.

Ms. Ethridge refused to discuss the town's mayoral status during the past year. "We have a wonderful community here full of good people," she said. "Be kind to us in the newspapers."

6-year-old critical after shooting

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 6-year-old boy was in critical condition after being accidentally shot while he and a friend were handling a pistol.

Eric Wilson remained Sunday at Brooke Army Medical Center with a gunshot to his head.

"The other little boy came out of the house screaming," said neighbor Bernice Johnson. The 9-year-old boy's name was withheld by investigators.

Police said a .25-caliber pistol, which belongs to the father of the 9-year-old, was found near Eric's feet.

The older boy's father was visiting a neighbor when the shooting occurred and the child's mother was at work, police said.

"The little boy who lives there knew where it was," Homicide Detective G.P. Salazar said of the pistol

Mission's closing sends men into streets

HOUSTON (AP) — Several hundred homeless men will have to find other places for overnight lodging now that the downtown Houston Star of Hope mission is closing.

"I'm glad we tried and failed rather than having never tried and been successful at nothing," Don Johnson, the mission president, said Sunday.

The men's dormitory had been open for a little more than a year. Mission directors, however, voted last month to close the dormitory effective today after building inspectors found the facility was not in compliance with city codes.

Art deco shows off at Belgian palace

By RAF CASERT

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — An unprecedented show on art deco brings together some of the best decorative works of the 1920s from 12 European nations to redefine the whimsical, elitist style of the rich and powerful.

In all, 274 pieces — from fine jewelry and glassware to massive, bulky dressers — are on show until the end of May at the Beaux-Arts Palace, itself an art deco gem, to mark its 60th anniversary this year.

The "Art Deco in Europe" exhibit aims to shed new light on the much-abused concept of the movement by highlighting work from as far apart as Sweden, Czechoslovakia and Italy. The style is an eclectic ode to superficial prettiness for the rich who failed or refused to face the harsh social realities of the 1920s.

The difference between art deco and other styles of its age is often very thin, said exhibit organizer Marc Lambrechts, explaining why art deco has often been confused with, and used as, an amalgam of everything from stark modernism to flamboyant rococo. The kaleidoscope of forms and shapes at the Beaux-Arts Palace might still leave many visitors lost for a uniform vision of art deco.

But then, Art Deco loved to "quote" from foreign and bygone styles, from the Japanese and Chinese cultures from rococo and classicism, much in the same way that postmodernism does today.

Lambrechts said only the social idea behind the pieces constituted the art deco style. "There is no unity of form, no real style," he said, only a common attitude of snobbery and elitism among art deco artists and buyers.

Through his show, Lambrechts paints a picture of a gilded cage in which a spoiled European elite sought to shield itself from the revolutionary changes that swept society early this century. It did so by cultivating an art that had no meaning other than to please the eye.

In contrast, the contemporary modernism of Le Corbusier and Walter Gropius thrived on the new technologies and social developments art deco shunned. Through its devotion to function and lack of ornament, it gave shape to many of world's modern cities.

"In almost all the capitals of Europe, the high bourgeoisie tried to compensate the threat to its power with a refined culture, while the new rich wanted to create an identity by purely showing off," Lambrechts said.

In return, art deco was dismissed as kitschy and tasteless for many decades. But in recent years it has found a new following as evidenced by the fact that over 2,000 people a day visited Lambrechts' show, which opened March 3 at Victor Horta's Beaux-Arts Palace in the center of Brussels.

France and Britain have long claimed to be the cradle of art deco. But Lambrechts' show breaks new ground there. It shows strong contributions from across Europe, many of them on display for the first time outside their home countries.

The exhibit is not as complete as Lambrechts would have liked, as much art deco was destroyed in West Germany by the Nazis who considered it decadent.

'Cara a Cara' Hispanic's answer to Phil, Oprah

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Maria Laria is rapidly turning into the Hispanic version of Phil Donahue and Oprah Winfrey — with a twist.

She's host of "Cara a Cara" (Face to Face), the first national Hispanic talk show that tries to get the traditional Hispanic community to discuss previously taboo subjects.

During its first year, the show, which is taped in Los Angeles, has addressed issues as varied as homosexuality, incest and domestic violence.

"I think the Hispanic community was ready for this kind of show," Laria says. "They really needed a forum where they could let off steam and express their opinions about a variety of things. When we first started, people thought we wouldn't be able to get them to talk. But that hasn't been a problem at all."

Laria's family left Cuba for the United States when she was 5. They settled first in Miami and eventually relocated to New Mexico, Puerto Rico, and then Boston. After getting her master's degree from the New England Conservatory of Music, Laria began giving piano concerts and recitals. She eventually appeared on several television shows and found it fascinating.

"Being a concert pianist is a very lonely career because you have to practice for so many hours, and I'm a very social person," Laria says. "I found when I was on those talk shows that I was more nervous during the interviews than when I was playing. But that was also a challenge, so I took acting and speech courses to make myself feel more comfortable."

The training helped Laria cross over into television when she moved to Los Angeles in 1982 and was hired as the host of "El Mundo del Espectaculo," (The World of Entertainment), aired on Galavision, the Spanish language cable network. But after four years of interviewing celebrities from the United States and Latin America, Laria was ready for a change and grabbed the opportunity to co-anchor the 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. news for Los Angeles' KVEA-TV, Channel 52.

"I love the fast pace of news. But when (producer) Harry (Abraham Castillo) asked me to host 'Cara a Cara,' I really didn't know if I would be the right person to do it," she says. "It's hard because you have to be aggressive — I'm aggressive about the kinds of questions I ask. But as a Hispanic woman, it was difficult to talk about sex and homosexuality. I never talked about those things with my mother. It's just not discussed in the family."

For that very reason, Laria and Castillo say, it is important for Hispanics to have a talk show of their own. Although the show tries to address the diverse needs of a community that comes from many different countries, it is largely geared to the Mexican-American community.

"Cara a Cara" is shown in all the top 10 U.S. Hispanic markets, except New York City. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, Hispanics number 18.5 million, and their number is growing at a faster rate than the general population.

Laria sometimes adopts the aggressive, interrogator style of Donahue, but other times she is a low-key moderator for a panel of experts. Topics range from issues of national interest like AIDS and drugs, to local issues like the Los Angeles elections from the Hispanic perspective. Future shows will deal with Satanic cults and the grape pickers in Northern California.

German hit comedy explores women's search for Mr. Right

By JOAN FISCHER

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The story of four single women who look for the perfect prince but have to kiss a lot of frogs along the way is the latest hit comedy movie in West Germany.

The movie also blasts others in West Germany's young social scene, from yuppies who marry only for tax breaks to far-out leftist activists.

The movie "Beim naechsten Mann wird alles anders" ("With the Next Man Everything Will Be Different") is based on a best-selling book of the same title by writer Eva Heller, who has also published collections of satirical cartoons.

The film, released in January, was rated No. 5 on the hit movie list published by the Hamburg-based weekly magazine Stern in its March 2 issue. That made "Beim naechsten Mann" the second-highest ranked West German movie on the list after "Herbstmilch," the poignant tale of a young Bavarian farm woman during the Nazi era.

Movies focusing on women are still unusual in West Germany, despite the success in recent years of woman directors such as Doris Doerrie, whose 1985 film "Maenner" ("Men") was an international hit.

The heroine of the movie is Constanze Wechselburger, a film student who sees herself as intellectual, political and prominent in the feminist movement, even though she spends most of her time hunting for men.

The film opens with a chaotic battle between Constanze and her boyfriend, Albert, a young doctor whom she eventually dumps for allegedly being both bourgeois and cheap. Albert criticizes Constanze for her wastefulness, cutting open a discarded toothpaste tube with a scalpel to show there was enough toothpaste left for several more brushings.

Constanze is quick to retaliate. "This is what I think of your cheap Christmas present," she yells, flushing her own gift to Albert, an expensive watch, down the toilet.

Constanze confides her troubles to her girlfriends over numerous glasses of wine, most frequently in a local bar called the Cafe Kaputt.

"I'm looking for a relationship that is built on an intellectual basis, not a material one," she says. She also insists on "emotional freedom," rejecting marriage as a bourgeois institution.

Ironically, she lands in the arms of a married man. Film instructor Gottfried Schachtschnabel, a veteran of the 1960s student revolts, sports a three-day beard and pretentious leftist political attitudes.

He, too, rejects the notion of marriage, but doesn't bother getting divorced. He "forgets" to inform his girlfriends about his status, and defends himself when he's caught.

"Marx was married, too. And he had an affair with his housekeeper. We can only learn from that," he tells Constanze.

There's also Sieglinde, a social-climbing dental assistant whose yuppie boyfriend marries her for tax savings; the old-fashioned Birgit, who looks for her dream man in the want ads; and Julia, a psychologist who also falls prey to Schachtschnabel.

It's a film with which West Germans can apparently both laugh and identify.

"The characters may be cliches, but everybody recognizes a few things that are true in real life, aspects he can relate to," Angela Marquis of the film's Berlin-based production company said in a recent interview.

Although the film focuses on women and the title indicates disappointment with men, it is not just a work for feminists, she said.

"The story is really about curiosity, not disappointment," Marquis said.

"Both men and women are often bored with what they have and think another relationship would be better. But, as the film shows, that isn't always the case."

By the end of the film Constanze succumbs to bourgeois society and gets married after all. She chooses Albert, deciding that thriftiness is not the worst vice in the world.

"The story is really about curiosity, not disappointment."

After U2, Irish musicians no longer just fiddling around

By BEN DOBBIN

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The musically chic Irish, basking in the glory of the Grammy-winning U2 rock band, are exporting an eclectic mix of talent typified by the distinctive styles of three female singers.

From the high-tech lyricism of Enya to the seductive quasi-jazz of Mary Coughlan and the punk-edged punch of Sinead O'Connor, Irish music has gone far beyond fiddles, folksiness and lilting brogues.

"I don't think it's anything to be feeling guilty about that we're not all carrying green leprechauns on our backs when we go on the road," said Coughlan, who sings about adultery, religious tyranny and urban chaos.

The propulsion of Dublin's U2 by the 1985 Live Aid music extravaganza to the top of the rock music heap helped open the door for other Irish favorites seeking world stardom.

"This used to be a culture of begrudgers — successful people always had to leave because they couldn't live with the smallness, the conservatism. That has changed, changed forever," says Eamon Dunphy, author of "Unforgettable Fire: The Story of U2."

Disc jockey Paul McKenna of London's Capitol Radio says Irish pop music's appeal is its originality and thoughtfulness.

It is a "backlash against designer pop," he said in an interview. "Radio listeners hear that and say, 'Wow! that's the way music is meant to sound.' It's predominantly music that is fresh, more natural, less image-conscious."

U2's triumph has fueled a multimillion-dollar domestic music industry which enables those Irish who succeed on the world stage to keep roots at home, recording in dozens of newly built music studios.

Despite a Time magazine cover, and inspiring millions of youngsters with their highly contemporary songs about drug abuse and racism, the four-man group remains based in the Irish capital. So do pop balladeer Chris de Burgh, the Van Morrison-style mysticism of Hothouse Flowers and emerging rock bands such as Aslam and Something Happens.

Windmill Lane, Dublin's leading music studio, handles the home stars plus such major overseas talents as Def Leppard, Status Quo, Elvis Costello, Steve Winwood and Terence Trent D'Arby.

Irish artists used to have to beat down agents' doors in London and New York. Now a concert at the Baggot Inn, Dublin's grimy, atmospheric music mecca, may attract half a dozen British and U.S. talent scouts.

The spotlight on Ireland also has brought Irish traditional music to a wider record-buying audience, but often fused with rock, jazz and other influences by artists as varied as Paul Brady, Enya, The Pogues and Davy Spillane.

Spillane mixes the rhythms of Celtic reels, rock and bluegrass using uillean bagpipes and boghran drums with saxophone and electric rhythm sections. The London-Irish Pogues combine traditional acoustics with post-punk irreverence.

Enya draws on traditional and classical styles in her album "Watermark," an electronic soundscape that has sold more than 2 million copies worldwide. One track, "Orinoco Flow," topped the British pop singles chart in November.

Her crystalline voice is often layered, as many as 100 times, with harmonies and counterpoint melodies and wrapped in synthesizer swathes of instrumentals varying from clarinet and tin whistle to Burundi drums.

Enya, 27, short for Eithne Ni Bhraonain, started out with Clannad, a folk-rock family band famous for its electrifying theme music for an adult TV version of "Robin Hood."

She works from a backyard studio in the Dublin suburb of Artane with sound recordist Nicky Ryan and his wife, Roma, who writes lyrics sung, in English, Gaelic and Latin. She shrugs off descriptions of her music as "Celtic New Age."

'New York' offers listeners real walk on the wild side

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Lou Reed's new album, "New York," has been receiving much critical attention because of its unsparing lyrics about urban blight.

He has been asked about lyrical content so much, he wonders why writers don't go beyond the subject and concern themselves with the poetry in which the lyrics are expressed.

"The opening of 'Romeo Had Juliette' — 'Caught between the twisted stars the plotted lines the faulty map that brought Columbus to New York' — you've got to admit that's a great opening line," Reed says. "Forget about what it means and think of the flow of words. I wish people would notice. Don't you get some kind of pleasure when you listen to the language?

"It's the first song I wrote for the album; it was the standard for the rest. We had the luxury to go in and test out the studio. We tested it with 'Romeo' and kept the cut we did for the record."

Reed talked about his music in an interview at the American Sound Studio, where he and a band were rehearsing for a tour that will include an engagement at Broadway's St. James Theater.

That's a distance from Reed's early, scruffy days in the Velvet Underground. The group was discovered in 1967 in New York's underground rock scene by the late pop artist, Andy Warhol, who promoted them. It remained menacingly non-mainstream and didn't become commercial. Later, though, it became a role model for punk rock. Working solo since 1970, Reed has had only one pop hit, "Walk on the Wild Side," in 1973.

Next November, Reed and John Cale, who also left the Velvet Underground in 1970, will present an evening of songs in tribute to Warhol at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

When he was cutting "New York" — as lyrically street-tough as ever but accepted in these days of rappers and U2 — Reed wasn't expecting media attention.

"You can tell from listening we weren't thinking in terms of radio airplay," he said.

"Dirty Blvd." begins: "Pedro lives out of the Wilshire Hotel. He looks out a window without glass. The walls are made of cardboard newspapers on his feet. His father beats him 'cause he's too tired to beg."

Sire Records wanted to market a single, but Reed said he wasn't the type of person to sell singles.

Lou Reed

"I pushed for 'Dirty Blvd.' because I thought the single should at least be representative of the album. Look what happened," he said.

"New York" is selling better than any previous Lou Reed album, and is fast climbing the charts.

A liner note on "New York" says, "You can't beat 2 guitars, bass, drum." The sound of the record was important to Reed, that the words be understandable and the guitars sound real.

"Even though Segovia said an electric guitar is an abomination, what I like about an electric guitar is it can have all this body from the wood in it," he said. "We had as one of our goals to record it so it comes across that way and doesn't sound like a synthesizer — thinned out and high endy.

"One thing was not to have too many instruments. We wanted my solos on guitar to be thick and beautiful. We wanted everything to be heard. Of course, when there's not too many parts, there's nothing to hide behind. Any mediocrity is heard."

His singing is basically talking, and has always been that way. "In my mind I would like to sing like Otis Redding or Al Green. I can't, so I had to find a way I could use my range in my style."

About the songs, Reed said he doesn't know why he wrote them.

"I had pieces of songs. Whatever I get first, I can't change. I can juggle around with later things, but the first phrase or line of melody or title I get for a song, I can't change it. I had the title 'Dime Store Mystery' for 20 years. My wife, Sylvia, said, 'When are you going to finish it?' It came up on this album."

— Guitarist Lou Reed

"I didn't sit and say, 'I'm going to write about this and this.'

"I had pieces of songs. Whatever I get first, I can't change," he said. "I can juggle around with later things, but the first phrase or line of melody or title I get for a song, I can't change it. I had the title 'Dime Store Mystery' for 20 years. My wife, Sylvia, said, 'When are you going to finish it?' It came up on this album.

"I like that song a lot. It had an odd effect on us when it was recorded. We were taken someplace else. I can't say where that someplace was.

"I guess people don't expect much out of records. They keep staying on the plot and asking, 'Who do 'you know in a welfare hotel?' 'Dime Store Mystery' dispenses with plot."

Reed said what the album is really about is the use of language.

"That's what I'm really getting off on. There are phrases in there as good as anything I've ever written.

"It is pretty funny, some of it, I thought. It's not endlessly grim."

Reed took part in a benefit concert Paul Simon organized at Madison Square Garden to buy and equip a medical van to visit New York welfare hotels.

"Paul bought one with the proceeds of 'Graceland.' Every penny from this concert went to get another one."

Reed has been told that "Last Great American Whale" from "New York" will be on a Greenpeace album released in the Soviet Union.

Asked about solutions to the big-city problems limned on "New York," Reed says, "We only had an hour. We'll get into solutions on Vol. 2, maybe."

"Just about covers it for home or office"

Canadian playwright takes U.S. success back home

OTTAWA (AP) — George F. Walker doesn't hesitate to confess his amusement and elation at his success in his chosen field of drama.

"I just laughed out loud on the subway," he said, recalling a recent ride in his hometown of Toronto. "I'm a playwright — and I have children to support."

He laughed again.

The bearded, 41-year-old Walker never has had as successful a year as the past one, with "Nothing Sacred" a staple on the repertory theater circuit from Los Angeles' Mark Taper Forum to the Hartford Stage Company in Connecticut. Time magazine named it one of the 10 best plays of 1988, although it has yet to be performed in New York.

The play is his 18th, yet Walker recalled that when his first play was produced it was only the second play he had ever seen.

"I was just attracted to the idea that you could fill it up any way you want," he said to explain his attraction to the theater.

The jovial, soft-spoken Walker was in Ottawa for the opening of "Nothing Sacred," in a production very similar to its Toronto origin, at Canada's modern National Arts Center.

Walker keeps the 19th century Russian setting for his version of Ivan Turgenev's "Fathers and Sons," but insists that it now is very much a modern, Canadian work.

He first read the original when he was 17 and said he thinks he was in a bit of a trance when he wrote his version.

"I never meant it to be an adaptation," he said over lunch before opening night in Ottawa. "I wrote it in 10 to 11 days."

Walker wanted to bill the play as "inspired by Turgenev," but then decided that would be "hokey."

"Mostly I thought, 'if I just let it come through me, so the language would be, without being forced, for actors living now.'"

Literature was the starting point for "Nothing Sacred" just as other inspirations have come from something read in the newspaper or a conversation with a friend.

"I'm sure if Ivan were alive, he'd be on my side," Walker said about criticism of his adaptation.

Much of his earlier work was of a more eccentric tone, in line with his development in the Toronto alternative theater scene of the '70s. The appeal of the theater, he said, is its access, that the multimillion-dollar budgets required for movies generally are not needed to create plays.

Thinking back 12 or 15 years to his early career, Walker again laughed at the contrast to the days when the crowds were smaller and the theaters less established.

"When you're used to seeing 200 or 300 people come in, and then you see 800 or 900," he joked. "Where are we going to put them all?"

Walker's Toronto agent, Ralph Zimmerman, astutely pitched "Nothing Sacred" last year to American repertory theaters, and there's been some sniping that the success has as much to do with the politics of regional theater as it does with the play.

Time, reviewing the Los Angeles production, said he "persuasively makes the debate among student anarchists in 1860s Russia echo that among Marxist collegians of 1960s America."

The New York Times gave a decidedly mixed review to the production of "Nothing Sacred" at Hartford Stage, saying Walker assumed too much artistic license for a project that could have used a bit more reverence.

On the other hand, Walker believes it's time for the dominant role of New York reviews to be re-evaluated in light of the changing theater scene that is less concentrated on Broadway.

The playwright also said many Canadians gripe about the lack of knowledge in the United States about their country, but he chalked that off to a result of Americans' self-preoccupation.

"They don't know Canada is up here feeling insecure about its culture," he said.

Chicago Bull Michael Jordan (23) loses ball and picks up a charging foul against Cleveland's Ron Harper.

Bulls, Bucks show up for new NBA season

Associated Press

The Chicago Bulls and Milwaukee Bucks have dispelled any doubt that the NBA playoffs are a new season.

After dropping all six regular-season games to Cleveland and Atlanta, the Bulls and Hawks eliminated their tormentors from the playoffs on Sunday — and they did it on the road in the final games of best-of-5 opening-round series.

At Richfield, Ohio, Michael Jordan drove past former Odessa College star Craig Ehlo and hit a 15-foot jumper at the buzzer, giving the Bulls a 101-100 victory over the Cavaliers. In Atlanta, Ricky Pierce scored 25 points and Paul Mokeski and Jay Humphries hit key baskets down the stretch as Milwaukee overcame the absence of injured scoring leader Terry Cummings and beat the Hawks 96-92.

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Lakers, seeking their third straight championship, opened their Western Conference semifinal series by defeating the Seattle SuperSonics 113-102 as Magic Johnson scored nine of his 21 points in the first five minutes of the fourth quarter.

On Tuesday night, Chicago visits New York to start the best-of-7 Eastern Conference semifinals while Golden State plays Game 2 of its Western Conerence semifinal at Phoenix. The Suns won the opener on Saturday 130-103.

Two more games are scheduled for Wednesday — Milwaukee at Detroit in the start of the other Eastern Conference semifinal and Seattle at Los Angeles for Game 2 of their series.

Jordan scored 30 of his 44 points in the second half, 17 in the fourth quarter. Ehlo scored 15 of his 24 in the final period, including three 3-pointers.

After two timeouts, Jordan got the ball near the top of the circle, drove past Ehlo and leaped at the free-throw line. The winning shot barely touched the back of the rim as it went through.

"Everyone had been writing us off," Jordan said. "I was very disappointed after we lost Friday night. I was fighting off tears. But I had to get rid of that attitude today.

"Larry Nance did a good job of keeping me from going where I wanted (on the inbounds pass from Brad Sellers that led to his winning shot), so I had to pull off a fake just to get the ball. Once I got the ball, I penetrated a little and got set up a little. But Ehlo came over and had me covered. I had to hesitate and then I got the shot off. How it went in I don't know."

NBA Playoffs

Bucks 96, Hawks 92

Milwaukee coach Del Harris called Sunday's contest "as emotional a game as I have been involved in. I just have to praise our players for the courage it took to continue to overcome one obstacle after another."

Mokeski twice gave Milwaukee the lead on layups in the final 3½ minutes, the last with 2:51 to play, putting the Bucks ahead to stay 87-86. Fred Roberts made two free throws 30 seconds later, Pierce hit an 18-footer and Humphries scored on a breakaway layup, stretching the lead to 93-86.

It was the second victory in a row at Atlanta for the Bucks, who had broken a nine-game losing streak in The Omni by winning Game 2.

Lakers 113, SuperSonics 102

James Worthy had 28 points and 12 rebounds for the Lakers, who didn't go ahead for good until a jump shot by Johnson with 9:51 remaining gave them an 88-87 lead, starting a 16-4 spurt that made it 102-91 with 4:34 to go.

Byron Scott had 18 points and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Mychal Thompson added 16 points each for Los Angeles. Derrick McKey led Seattle with 23 points and Dale Ellis had 19, but only two in the fourth quarter. Xavier McDaniel scored 15 for the Sonics, only two in the second half.

It was the Lakers' ninth straight playoff victory over the Sonics dating back to April 1980.

Suns 130, Warriors 103

Phoenix won Saturday's game against Golden State by outscoring the Warriors 41-22 in the third period as Tom Chambers scored 13 of his 25 points and rookie guard Dan Majerle had 10 of his 22.

Majerle's defense helped limit Golden State's Chris Mullin to 18 points and Rookie of the Year Mitch Richmond to 12. Mullin averaged 32.7 points and Richmond 25.7 in a first-round sweep of Utah.

Giants' Robinson owns St. Louis

Astros' Deshaies tosses blanks at Gooden, Mets

Associated Press

Kevin Mitchell isn't the only one hitting home runs for the San Francisco Giants this season.

Pitcher Don Robinson did his part with a two-run homer and Mitchell hit his major league-leading 11th home run as the Giants beat St. Louis 5-1 Sunday.

Robinson, 2-3, scattered nine hits, walked none and struck out five. Both victories have come against St. Louis.

"I just try to throw strikes and let them hit the ball as much as they want," Robinson said. "I get paid for pitching, hitting is something I like to do."

The Giants like to see Robinson hit, too.

"You like to have Robinson starting because he can help you so much with his bat," manager Roger Craig said.

Jose Uribe led off the second with a triple and came home on Robinson's 400-foot homer to left field to give the Giants a 3-0 lead. It was the right-hander's ninth career home run.

"It was all Don Robinson today," St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog said. "We had our chances but he was tough when he had to be."

Mitchell, who drove in the game's first run with a sacrifice fly, homered in the eighth and leads the majors with 36 RBIs.

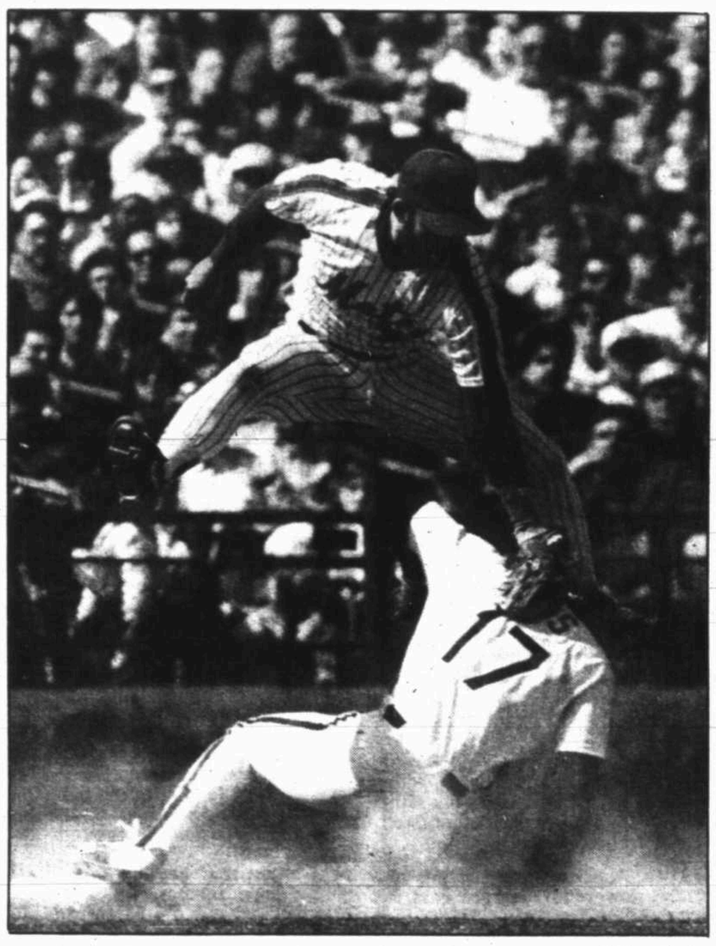

"I've already done what I wanted to do at the halfway point," Mitchell said. "I wanted to hit 10 home runs by the All-Star break, but I'm not surprised. A lot of people told me I had the potential to be a good hitter."

Astros 5, Mets 0

Jim Deshaies pitched a five-hitter and Kevin Bass went 3-for-3 and tied a team record with four stolen bases, leading Houston over Dwight Gooden and New York at Shea Stadium.

Bass scored three runs, hit an RBI triple and singled to set up the Astros' other run. He had stolen only three bases in six tries this year before tying the club single-game mark of four steals set by Gerald Young on Sept. 14, 1987.

Gooden, 5-1, was trying to become the National League's first six-game winner. Instead, he slipped to 10-3 lifetime against Houston despite allowing just four hits in seven innings.

Houston's Kevin Bass (17) steals third base as Mets third baseman Howard Johnson takes a late throw from catcher Gary Carter.

NL Roundup

Braves 7, Expos 1

Pete Smith allowed three hits in seven innings and hit a three-run triple to cap a six-run third inning as Atlanta beat visiting Montreal to complete a three-game sweep.

The victory extended the Braves' winning streak to five games, their longest since August, 1987. It was Montreal's fourth loss in a row and dropped the Expos' road record to 3-12.

Smith, 1-4, struck out eight and walked five for his first victory in seven starts this season.

Phillies 5, Reds 0

Alex Madrid and two relievers combined on an eight-hitter as Philadelphia beat Cincinnati at Riverfront Stadium.

Madrid allowed five singles in 6⅔ innings, Gordon Dillard got the final out in the seventh and Steve Bedrosian allowed three hits to complete the shutout.

Padres 3, Pirates 1

Roberto Alomar drove in three runs with a homer and two-run single and Ed Whitson scatttered 10 hits in 8⅓ innings as San Diego beat visiting Pittsburgh.

Mark Davis struck out the last two batters for his 13th save in 13 opportunities.

Cubs 4, Dodgers 2

Damon Berryhill hit a go-ahead, two-run single in the sixth inning as Chicago beat Orel Hershiser and Los Angeles at Dodger Stadium.

Hershiser, 4-3, has lost twice to the Cubs this season.

Steve Wilson, 2-0, escaped a bases-loaded jam in the fourth inning and got the victory in relief of Greg Maddux. Mitch Williams pitched two innings for his 10th save.

Boston cools off Rangers

Associated Press

Changing cities and leagues has turned it around for John Dopson.

"It seems everything is the opposite of what happened last year," Dopson said Sunday after leading Boston past Texas 9-5, increasing his record to 4-1. Texas has now lost four games in a row.

Jody Reed hit a two-run double in Boston's five-run second inning and Wade Boggs and Nick Esasky homered as the Red Sox completed the three-game sweep.

Dopson, 4-1, allowed three hits and one unearned run before Dennis Lamp relieved in the seventh with a 7-1 lead. Dopson was 3-11 last season for Montreal, which traded him to Boston last December.

"Everything is going great," Dopeon said. "I'm getting the breaks and bounces this year. I'm throwing the ball good, I'm hitting my spots and the guys are scoring runs for me. I hardly ever threw with a lead last year."

The one run off Dotson was unearned. It came in the fifth after and error by Wade Boggs at third.

"The first two innings I felt great," Dopson said. "I was throwing the ball in and out and I had my rhythm going. Then we had that long second inning and I lost a lot sitting around. I had to work to try to get back the rhythm back. Then when I went out for the seventh my arm was a little tight. The wind also had a lot of to do with it."

Dopson has opponents batting .195 against him this season, including .180 in Fenway Park.

Geno Petralli hit a two-run homer off Dennis Lamp in the seventh, the fifth pinch-homer of Petralli's career, which set a Texas club record.

Indians 5-12, Twins 4-1

There's nowhere for the Minnesota Twins to go but up.

"I don't know what the problem is. I can't really say because I'm part of the problem," Kirby Puckett said after Minnesota lost a doubleader to Cleveland, dropping the Twins into the AL West cellar, nine games behind Oakland.

The Twins, who won 91 games last season, have lost 13 of their last 15 and are 11-18.

The sweep was Cleveland's first since last July 5 against Oakland and gave the Indians six victories in their last seven games.

Puckett was 0-for-9 in the doubleheader. He finished the first five years of his major-league career with 1,062 hits. Joe Medwick has the most hits in the first five years of his career, getting 1,064 from 1932-37.

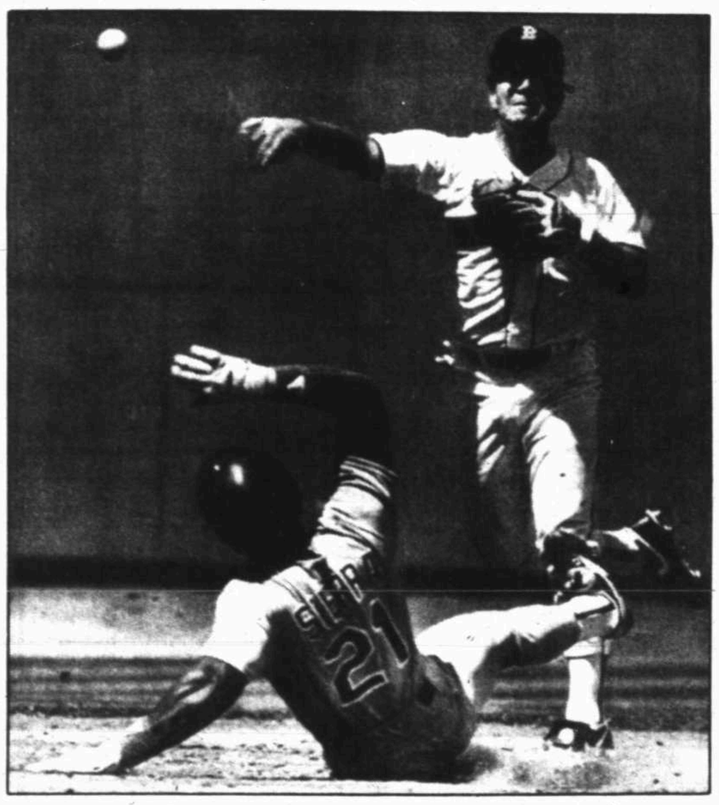

"I would have liked to have broken the record," Puckett said. "It's kind of a wasted day. I should have stayed at home."

Mariners 5, Orioles 3

Alvin Davis had three hits and drove in three runs as Seattle won its sixth straight and beat Baltimore for the third time in less than 24 hours.

Seattle, which Saturday night swept its first doubleheader since 1981, had not won six straight since June 20-29, 1985, when the Mariners won a club- record eight straight.

Angels face Tulsa tonight

From Staff Reports

It will be the Best in the East against the Best in the West, at least at this stage of the pennant race, when Midland's Angels return to Angels Stadium to open a five-game series against the Tulsa Drillers 7 p.m. today.

Tulsa leads the Texas League East and the Texas Rangers' farm club is the defending Texas League champion.

Midland leads the TL West and is coming off a road trip to San Antonio, in which it posted a 3-2 record, despite a loss in Saturday night's finale.

The 14-9 score sounds more like something that might be played in Midland or El Paso, plenty of hits, runs and pitchers, but booming home run bats have been strangely silent in the Permian Basin launching pad this season.

A combination of that two-tier outfield fence, installed for the 1988 season, and uncharacteristic WT winds that have favored the pitchers more than the hitters have resulted in what would be considered at lower altitudes as "normal baseball."

Arkansas, the St. Louis Cardinals' farm club, will follow Tulsa into Midland for five games before Midland will reciprocate the visit with a 10-day tour of the East.

HALO HOOPS— Despite Saturday's loss, Midland has an overall road record of 10-5 for the season.....Everett Graham went four-for-four with five RBI and the game's only home run Saturday while Reed Peters was three-for-five with four RBI...Dave Martinez, 3-2, suffered his worst outing of the season, lasting just five innings, being tagged with six earned runs...This is the only trip to Midland for the Ranger farm hands and is the first of 40 games for the Angels against TL East teams...All TL teams were idle Sunday, travel day....

Airtight Canadiens shutout Flyers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Pentagon could use Patrick Roy's defense system.

Roy, supported by an airtight checking effort, had to make just 17 saves Sunday night as the Montreal Canadiens shutout the Philadelphia Flyers 3-0 Sunday night in Game 4 of the Wales Conference finals.

The Canadiens, seeking their 24th Stanley Cup, lead the best-of-7 series 3-1 and can advance to the finals with a victory at the Forum Tuesday night.

Roy made a couple of tough saves in the first period, foiling good scoring attempts by Brian Propp and Scott Mellanby. But in the final two periods, he needed to make only nine stops for his second shutout in three games.

The 24-year-old goalie is now 10-1 in the playoffs this spring with a 1.83 goals against average. He has allowed only one goal in the last three games.

But Roy said the Canadiens aren't counting out the Flyers.

"The Flyers have won one game in this series," he said. "I respect them. We can't expect the series to be finished. They will play well in the Forum. We must be ready."

However, the Flyers can bring out the golf clubs and beach chairs unless they find a way to penetrate Roy & Co.

"Our concentration is at a high level now," Roy said. "We're confident. We've played with patience all year. Hockey is a sport of mistakes. And we have capitalized on mistakes all year. We did it again tonight."

Montreal's Shayne Corson, Chris Chelios and Guy Carbonneau scored in a 7:31 span of the second period, giving Roy all the offense he needed.

Corson opened the scoring by tucking in his own rebound at 10:09. Chris Chelios scored on a 20-foot slap shot during a 5-on-3 power play at 13:57 and Guy Carbonneau finished off the Flyers with a shorthanded goal at 17:40.

The Canadiens, first in the Adams Division with 115 points, may be just too good for the Flyers, who finished fourth in the Patrick Division with 80 points, and coach Paul Holmgren seemed to recognize the obvious.

"One goal in three games doesn't say much for our offense," he said. "It says a lot for their defense. We just have to capitalize on our scoring opportunities. Against this team you are not going to get a lot of chances. They are doing a tremendous job of shutting us down."

Especially on the power play. The Flyers led the NHL in power-play percentage during the regular season and connected for 20 man-advantage goals in the first two rounds against Washington and Pittsburgh.

But against the Canadiens, the Flyers are 0-for-15. They also surrendered Carbonneau's goal, which Holmgren said was the killer.

"It's hard to imagine they can play so well for three games in a row," Holmgren said.

Not even the return of goaltender Ron Hextall could slow down the Canadiens.

Hextall returned after missing four games with a strained right knee and made 29 saves, but it wasn't enough.

Propp said the Flyers must score first against Montreal to stay in the series.

"We need to get the first goal," Propp said. "It would give us a rush of excitement. They play well with a lead. If we don't get the first goal Tuesday, we could be in trouble.

Winston 500 course no problem for Allison

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — He didn't do it blindfolded, but Davey Allison drove the last lap of his Winston 500 victory with hardly a glance at the familiar track in front of him.

His father and his uncle both have won on the 2.66-mile Talladega Superspeedway oval, and the 28-year-old Davey, also the 1987 Winston 500 winner, knows it like an old friend.

"I don't think I looked out the windshield the whole last lap," Allison said Sunday after taking the checkered flag for his fifth career victory, but his first win in 15 races, dating to Sept. 11, 1988 at Richmond, Va.

"I know this place pretty much by heart, so I figure I can pretty much run it looking out the mirror," he said.

Young Allison's attention was riveted on the Ford Thunderbirds of Terry Labonte and Mark Martin, who loomed large in his mirrors as he drove his Robert Yates-owned Ford around the 188th and final lap of the day.

Labonte started to make a move coming off the fourth turn, but a slower car in the bottom lane moved him back in line and the three Thunderbirds crossed the finish line nose-to-tail, Allison beating Labonte by just 0.22-seconds.

"I definitely didn't know for sure we had the power (to hold the other two off), but we did have priority on the line," Allison said.

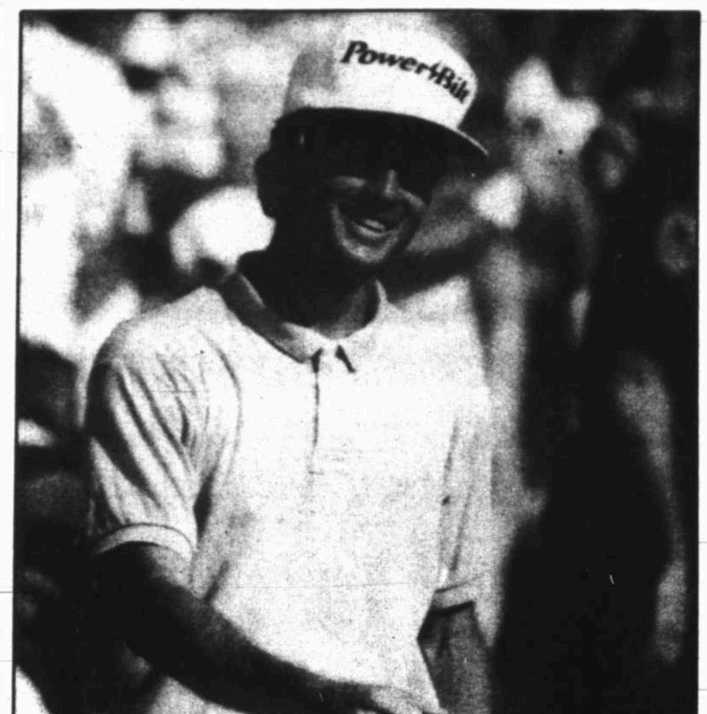

"We just weren't strong enough," said Martin, who started from the pole, alongside Allison. "At the end, Terry and I were doing this and that (with hand signals), trying to get something set up. But, when the time came, we couldn't even get up to him. We couldn't even catch him."

Allison, who led nine times for 94 laps — exactly half the race — first had to dispose of Morgan Shepherd's Pontiac Grand Prix, which he did on lap 180.

Shepherd, who was ahead of Allison late in the race, appeared to have the only other car as strong as the eventual winner, but faded to fourth at the end.

"I didn't know if I could get by Morgan, but I knew I was gonna do everything I could short of crashing him to get by," Allison said. "When he looked in his mirror, he must have been saying, 'What in the world is he doing?' I was all over trying to make him go somewhere."

Asked how he finally got past Shepherd, dragging the other two Fords with him, Allison replied: "I don't know what happened to him. He moved over and gave me room.

Jodie Mudd with sudden death smile

Mudd beats Nelson in Nelson's playoff

IRVING (AP) — Jodie Mudd was another of those PGA millionaires who hadn't won many tournaments.

Until Sunday.

Mudd, 29, whose only previous Tour victory came last year at Memphis, doubled his lifetime total by beating Larry Nelson in a playoff to capture the Byron Nelson Classic.

The former Georgia Southern star made a 12-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole, a 554-yard par-5 to beat Nelson, a former U.S. Open and PGA Championship winner.

"I've been here (on the tour) for 7½ years and I decided it was time to get my career going," Mudd said. "I decided it was time to take my shot and be more aggressive, to play for wins instead of a good tournament."

Mudd shot a final round 65 to tie Nelson, who had a 67, at 15-under-par 265 over the Tournament Players Course at the Four Seasons resort in Las Colinas.

It was the fourth playoff in five years at the Nelson Classic. Bruce Lietzke won last year.

The $180,000 first-place check increased Mudd's lifetime earnings to $1,356,494. It was Mudd's first playoff victory. He had lost to both Phil Blackmar and John Mahaffey in 1985.

Nelson, who is now 3-2 in playoffs, won $108,000. It was his first top 10 finish this year after suffering an ankle injury last November playing touch football with his son.

"It's a sad feeling to lose a playoff," Mudd said. "I've been on the other end of it twice."

Nelson left the course without discussing his round, but Mudd said he knew he was battling a fierce competitor.

"Larry is a great pressure player," Mudd said. "He's won all those majors."

Mudd said he thought he might have an edge on the playoff hole because he normally outdrives Nelson.

"Playoffs are petrifying because it can be over in one hole," Mudd said. "I did feel comfortable because I thought I had an edge in my length.

Indy 500 runs speed tests for Andretti clan

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Michael Andretti is having more fun working with his father than against him, even though family loyalties remain in the pits when their race cars are on the track.

The younger Andretti and his father, Mario, teammates for the first time in the Indianapolis 500, spent much of Sunday's practice in a friendly duel for speed. Today was the third day of practice leading up to Saturday's start of qualifications, and both Andrettis showed they're capable of challenging for the pole position.

"We're very excited," said Michael, who has finished better than Mario in three of the five years they've raced against each other at Indianapolis. "It's a great opportunity for both of us (to be on the same team).

"We help each other out. Together we can be as strong as a pack rather than being against each other. We're excited about it."

Both Andrettis are driving new Chevy-powered Lola race cars. Michael had a fast lap of 220.858 mph on Sunday, while Mario was clocked at 218.978.

The quick speed of the day, recorded moments before the track closed, was a lap of 221.347 by Emerson Fittipaldi. Al Unser Jr. and Jim Crawford were both clocked above 219 mph. Bobby Rahal and Rick Mears joined Mario Andretti above 218.

Inkster takes Crestar title

CHESAPEAKE, Va. (AP) — The hardest thing to do in sports is to repeat as champion. Juli Inkster is making it look easy.

Inkster's victory Sunday in the LPGA Crestar Classic was the 13th of her career. Of those 13, five were at events she had won in the past. Her Crestar victory also marked the second time she had successfully defended a title.

"I enjoy that kind of little extra boost," said Inkster, whose victory was her second of the season and was worth $45,000 from the $300,000 purse.

Inkster closed with a 3-under-par 69 for a 54-hole total of 210, six shots under par and five ahead of her closest pursuers on Greenbrier Country Club's 6,275-yard layout.

Inkster won the tournament last year at Sleepy Hole Golf Course, ending the event's eight-year run at the club in nearby Suffolk.

Mowry tours San Antonio

Seniors Golf

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Changing his tournament preparation in hopes of improving on the past paid off handsomely for Larry Mowry at the RJR at The Dominion Sunday.

"Instead of going to the course on Monday, my wife and I really got to see the city," Mowry said. "We got to see the Riverwalk (a downtown tourist attraction) and I bought an authentic imitation John Wayne cowboy hat.

"It got me more relaxed. I had always liked this course, but I never did well here. This makes it much nicer. Next year, we may come even earlier."

After previous finishes of 15th and tied for 28th, Mowry calmly birdied the final hole Sunday to take a one-shot victory over Gay Brewer in the $250,000 RJR at The Dominion seniors PGA tournament.

Mowry's three-day total of 201 was 15-under and set a tournament record. The previous record of 14-under 202 was set by Bruce Crampton in 1986. Mowry carded rounds of 66, 67 and closed with a 4-under 68.

Brewer's card for the tourney read 65-69-68—202.

Miller Barber took third place, finishing three shots behind the leader at 12-under 204.

Mowry earned $37,500 for the win, while Brewer picked up $21,500 for second. Barber pocketed $17,800 for third.

Defending champion Billy Casper finished fourth this time, with a 10-under 206 and a check for $14,800.

Despite making five birdies and just one bogey, Mowry had to fight a case of a nervous putter to claim the win.

"I had a little case of the jitters on the greens," Mowry admitted. "Putting is uasually the strongest part of my game. Today I had the jitters, and I'll tell you, it wasn't any fun."

Mowry managed to hold his putter steady enough to make the 15-inch tap-in on the final hole for the win. The 18th hole at the Dominion Country Club is a 545-yard par 5.

"If it had been 24 inches, I don't know if I could have made it," Mowry said with a chuckle.

"If I had hit a good third shot (at 18) it might have put a little pressure on him," Brewer said. "He hit a great pitch-and-run. He played well; made a lot of short putts; he deserved to win."

Mowry, the leader after the second round, recorded three birdies on the front nine Sunday. The three birdie putts going out came from 15 feet or less.

Mowry got another birdie on the 11th hole, a 522-yard par five.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Domestic happiness depends on your sorting out a relationship problem. You may be torn by a shattered romance or by your feelings for two people. Write down inspirational ideas and refer to them often to lift your spirits. Travel abroad is a distinct possibility in December. Business soars when you and partner decide to compromise. Make intelligent concessions on a regular basis.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actresses Candice Bergen and Glenda Jackson, dramatist Sir James Barrie, actor Albert Finney, tennis star Pancho Gonzales, abolitionist John Brown, TV correspondent Mike Wallace, industrialist Henry Kaiser, country singer Hank Snow, golfer John Mahaffey.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can take a giant step forward in a relationship just by showing more patience and affection. Travel and romantic opportunities capture your attention. Keep a close eye on details at work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You find it easier to communicate now. Put your personal interests ahead of business for a change. Group activities help you reach some of your goals. You attract a new and influential audience.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A new trend in your personal relationships boosts your spirits. The future looks much brighter. A relatively stress-free period helps you sort out your priorities. Go after what you want!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get things moving forward by making the first move yourself. Business keeps you busy, even beyond quitting time. Work projects must be completed on schedule. If necessary, ask co-workers for assistance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Enjoy your time in the spotlight. It will be good for both you and business. Use your leadership skills to straighten out a family matter. Romance is highlighted. Go for it!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Small purchases will help cement a relationship. Stay in touch with someone who played a special role in your life. Open new lines of communication with others in your workplace. You need allies!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A business partnership needs rejuvenation. You better take the first step. Computers begin to play a more important role in your life -- and in your eventual success. Welcome technological advances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can move forward quickly now that you have eliminated doubts that clouded your decision-making abilities. Explore travel opportunities. Those at a distance will be impressed by what you have to offer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You run the risk of upsetting others with your enthusiasm for far-away sights and sounds. Your energy and experience open many doors for you. Collaborative ventures do great.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You find practical applications for your inspirational ideas. Many people benefit. Postpone travel and concentrate on a special project. Look for ways to help an associate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Think of what you have achieved, not of past disappointments. Clarify a situation before it becomes agonizing for both you and your partner. Check bills for possible errors before paying them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can correct mistakes if you move quickly. Taking certain risks is necessary to move forward. Good luck will favor you in many ways.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K7 ♡KJ9 ◇AQ105 ♣J986
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—What's the problem? Surely with four-card support for partner's suit, a raise to three clubs is obvious. But if ever there was an exception to that rule, this hand is it. A nine-trick contract seems more feasible than an 11-trick one, and a rebid of two no trump will have the added benefit of protecting your tenaces from a lead through.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K983 ♡AJ72 ◇83 ♣762
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner's three hearts is a game try, and does not necessarily promise a real suit. Nevertheless, since you are going to game anyway you might as well offer a choice of contracts. Bid four hearts. Should partner have four hearts, the 4-4 fit could play better than the 5-4—he might be able to discard one of your losers on his fifth spade.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K983 ♡AJ72 ◇63 ♣Q87
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
A.—Unless you're playing limit raises, you are not strong enough for a jump raise to three hearts, but too strong for a simple raise to two hearts. The solution is to make a temporizing bid of one spade, then bid hearts at the three-level next. That secondary jump, if necessary, is considered invitational, not forcing.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠75 ♡762 ◇942 ♣AKJ107
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—If you consider only point count, your 8 points qualify for an invitational raise to two no trump. However, this hand rates to produce five tricks for partner, making it a much better hand than one with, say, some random collection of secondary high cards. Bid three no trump.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ1095 ♡86 ◇QJ3 ♣KJ7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have two choices: a raise to three hearts, or a bid of two no trump. (A rebid of two spades would show at least a six-card suit and less outside strength.) With tenaces and soft values, we feel the latter bid is more descriptive.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q753 ♡J82 ◇Q9652 ♣6
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What do you respond?
A.—With your unbalanced hand, you would prefer a suit contract if one was available. Bid three clubs, a request for partner to show a four-card major. If he bids spades, raise to game. Over anything else, settle for three no trump.

Cardinal O'Connor says 'I Love Lucy' provided 'decent laughter'

NEW YORK (AP) — Cardinal John O'Connor, who last month blasted television as "radioactive filth," says Lucille Ball's program in the 1950s provided "decent laughter."

O'Connor said Ball's "was a TV marriage that was a good marriage." He said that with her on-air pregnancy in 1953, "she made married pregnancy the sacrament that it is."

"I was a real fan," he said.

O'Connor said Sunday that Ball, who died two weeks ago in Los Angeles, was owed a great deal for providing "decent laughter."

The cardinal described her show as "decent, human and entertaining."

"I'm not proposing her for canonization" O'Connor said. "She had personal problems. She was a woman who overcame adversity."

A memorial Mass was scheduled for tonight in New York City. Memorial services were also planned in Chicago and Santa Monica.

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Actor Pierce Brosnan and his wife have bought an estate worth nearly $3 million.

The Irish actor and his wife, Cassandra Harris, purchased the six-acre, ocean-view estate in Paradise Cove near Barbra Streisand's beach compound, said Robert Rubenstein of Malibu Realty.

The agent described the seller only as "an in-law to the Getty family."

Rubenstein said the property has lush tropical grounds and a pool with a waterfall. He called it "a Mediterranean masterpiece."

Brosnan, who tried unsuccessfully to land the part of James Bond in a 1987 film role that went to Timothy Dalton, is perhaps best known as the television detective Remington Steele.

Last month, he had the starring role in the NBC-TV miniseries "Around the World in 80 Days."

His Australian wife also is an actress. The couple have three children.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Hank Williams Jr. will cover the losses of an arena where officials said he cursed, failed to finish a song and stumbled offstage after 20 minutes, a spokesman for the country music star promised.

Angry fans in the Saturday night audience of about 7,000 threw beer bottles and burned souvenir T-shirts. There were no injuries or arrests reported and damage to the Baton Rouge Centroplex was minor, police said.

"We don't want any hard feelings," Williams' spokesman Kent Arwood said by telephone Sunday from Nashville, Tenn. "It was just an unfortunate thing that occurred. It's not the norm for this kind of thing to happen with Hank Williams Junior."

Arwood said Williams was sorry and promised to pay for ticket refunds and other expenses, and for any profit the arena would have made.

Just to make sure restitution is paid, Centroplex management got a judge to sign an order seizing Williams' private jet until the matter is settled.

Witnesses said Williams talked incoherently and attempted several songs, then threw his fiddle into the air and stumbled offstage, helped by members of his entourage.

Arwood said Williams' behavior was caused by a personal problem but he would not elaborate.

NEW YORK (AP) — The daughter of one-time Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro is engaged and will be married in October.

Donna Anne Zacarro will marry Paul Arthur Ullman of St. Louis, according to an announcement Sunday in The New York Times.

Ms. Zacarro, who graduated from Brown University and has an master's degree in business administration from Harvard University, works at a women's clothing company in New York City.

Ullman is a graduate of Washington University and is vice president of mortgage trading at Salomon Brothers in New York.

Ferraro was Walter Mondale's running mate in 1984.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Kitty Dukakis urged a college graduating class to be "open and flexible" enough to accept bad and good times — qualities she used to fight her drug and alcohol addiction.

"I've had to be open to the reality that I would spend the rest of my life recovering from that dependency, one day at a time," the wife of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis said Sunday in her address to the 1989 New England Institute of Technology graduates.

"I've had to learn these lessons in the public eye, with the intense scrutiny of the media and with the knowledge and awareness of tens of millions of people."

Mrs. Dukakis, keynote speaker at the institute's 49th commencement, received an honorary doctorate. She and her husband also received the school's annual America's Finest Award.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Folk-rocker Melissa Etheridge says she has advice for other would-be performers.

"I just would recommend that people do it and not wait around. Do it whenever and wherever you can and get people to believe," Etheridge said.

Etheridge, a Kansas native, said she got her first guitar at age 8 and began writing songs two years later.

In 1987, an Island Records executive signed her on the spot after seeing her perform in a Los Angeles bar.

"That's what happened to me...I was at the diviest bars you can imagine. But pretty soon people started telling each other and pretty soon people started coming to see me," Etheridge said.

Etheridge's hit single "Bring Me Some Water," won her a Grammy nomination. Her other hits include "Like the Way I Do" and "Chrome Plated Heart."

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Guy Williams, the actor who played Zorro in the popular 1950s television series of the same name, apparently suffered a heart attack and died in his apartment, according to police. Williams was 65.

Williams

Williams' body was found Saturday at his home in the exclusive residential neighborhood of La Recoleta. He apparently died about a week ago, the government news agency Telam reported.

Williams' real name was Armando Catalano. He was born in New York.

"Zorro" recounted the adventures of Diego de la Vega, a dashing young aristocrat in colonial Mexico who stood up for the rights of his countrymen against the abuses of Spanish overlords.

Williams also starred as professor John Robinson in the 1960s show "Lost in Space," portraying the leader of a family marooned in space.

New York traders given subpoenas

By KURT EICHENWALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A federal grand jury in Manhattan has issued subpoenas as part of a criminal investigation of trading practices on the floors of as many as four New York commodity exchanges, people involved in the inquiry said Sunday.

The number of subpoenas issued in the criminal investigation is unclear, but a person involved in the case said that at least one trader has been ordered to testify before the grand jury.

The subpoenas in the criminal inquiry come on top of subpoenas issued last week in a civil investigation by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the industry's regulator.

In addition, Preston Semel, a trader at the exchanges who received a civil subpoena last week, was said Sunday to be under investigation for numerous trading violations by the Commodity Exchange Inc. in what was called one of the largest inquiries ever brought by the exchange.

People familiar with that inquiry said Semel has been offered the opportunity to settle the case by paying as much as $500,000 and being barred from the industry for a year.

The government's investigation into commodity trading in New York was disclosed last Thursday when a number of traders and the four exchanges were served with the civil subpoenas by CFTC investigators. In addition, postal inspectors delivered search warrants to the offices of as many as four brokers and traders as part of the grand jury investigation.

Both the CFTC and grand jury inquiries are focusing on trading at the New York Mercantile Exchange; the Commodity Exchange; the Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange and the Cotton Exchange.

The inquiries are separate from an investigation into commodity trading violations in Chicago, at the nation's two largest commodity exchanges.

Two people directly involved in the New York civil inquiry said as many as 26 people, and possibly more, had received subpoenas. But another source said he knew of only 16 such subpoenas.

While the civil subpoenas to the exchanges have contained almost 60 names, people involved in the case said far fewer people were actually under investigation.

The people who have been subpoenaed in the civil case have been asked to turn over many documents, including their financial records and the cards on which trades are recorded. The subpoenas ask that the information be supplied for the period from Jan. 1, 1986, to the present.

Government investigators are examining a number of trading practices on the exchange floors.

One of the most significant involves the commodity market's

Rostenkowski may put S&L bailout on books

New York Times News Service

Rostenkowski

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee is considering whether to support a move to put the Bush administration's savings bailout legislation on the books of the federal government, instead of off-budget as is now planned, a committee aide said.

"He thinks it should be on budget because basically it will make the plan cheaper," the aide to Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said Friday.

If Rostenkowski takes that course in a meeting of his committee Tuesday, it would again raise a conflict with the White House, which has insisted that the $50 billion in borrowings envisioned under the plan to sell or close hundreds of insolvent savings institutions not be included in the budget.

The financing side of the bailout plan has been particularly contentious, with some members of Congress arguing that the off-budget plan increases the total cost of the bailout over 30 years by $4.5 billion. This is because the borrowings will be done through a newly created government agency, the Resolution Financing Corporation, whose borrowing rate will be higher than if the Treasury did the financing directly.

An on-budget plan was proposed by the Senate Banking Committee's chairman, Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., but failed to get the needed support.

The Ways and Means Committee has scheduled three days of meetings on the bill. Rostenkowski hopes to address the financing issue, as well as whether federal money used to salvage bank and savings failures should be tax exempt to the recipients beyond Dec. 31, when the exemption is due to expire.

The committee has been given limited jurisdiction over the bill because of its responsibilities for tax law.

Gas prices jump nearly two cents

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices jumped nearly two cents a gallon in the past two weeks as wholesalers passed on rising costs and took advantage of rising demand, an industry analyst said Sunday.

The national average retail price for all grades of gasoline, including taxes, was 117.38 cents per gallon May 5, Trilby Lundberg said.

That figure was up 1.95 cents per gallon over the price reported in the April 21 survey of 12,000 stations nationwide.

Average prices at self-serve stations, which comprise most sales, were 106.60 cents per gallon for regular leaded, 108.13 for regular unleaded and 123.19 for premium unleaded.

Full-serve prices were 130.08 for regular leaded, 132.39 for regular unleaded and 143.96 for premium unleaded.

The jump was far smaller than the approximate 10 cents per gallon hike last month after the Valdez oil spill temporarily cinched oil supplies, but consumers who expected a price break were disappointed, Ms. Lundberg said.

"A great deal of the prices we've seen in recent weeks has been directly related to the rising price of crude oil," which has risen by several dollars a gallon, she said.

Prices also were affected by increased demand and by changes in gasoline composition mandated by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to make gas less volatile during hot summer months, Ms. Lundberg said.

Market faces new Nabisco bonds

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The "junk bond" market, beset by worries about a slowing economy, is facing a record array of new high-yield securities for RJR Nabisco Inc. this week, investors and underwriters said.

The bonds are expected to total nearly $4 billion.

RJR Nabisco's financing, which has cast a shadow over the $100 billion junk-bond market for several weeks, will help repay some of the short-term borrowing used by Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co. in its $24.88 billion takeover of the food conglomerate last year.

In addition to the new bond offerings, the market is also confronting $6 billion face amount of "cramdown" securities, so named because they were part of the package shareholders were required to accept in last year's buyout.

The huge size of the financing has helped raise interest rates on the high-yielding bonds by about three-fourths of a percentage point since early March.

Treasury bond yields have declined slightly in the same period.

The higher yields on junk bonds are also the result of government reports indicating slower economic growth. A weaker economy causes lower prices and higher yields for junk bonds because investors worry that some companies' income may fall enough to cause bond defaults.

Over the last 10 years, when the junk-bond market has grown rapidly, the bonds' high interest rates have compensated for the losses resulting from defaults. But many investors worry that defaults will be

More Tenneco spinoffs said unlikely

New York Times News Service

Ketelsen

DALLAS — Tenneco Inc. was a favored punching bag on Wall Street a year ago, branded as a lumbering conglomerate that was too tolerant of losses in an age of leaner, sharper competitors.

The company answered with fireworks last October, auctioning its huge oil and gas properties for $7.6 billion in cash and then quickly spending $1 billion to buy 21 million of its shares and paring debt by $4 billion.

Now the question on Wall Street is whether other moves are afoot, or is James L. Ketelsen, chairman and chief executive, determined to stand pat?

In Friday's trading on the New York Stock Exchange, Tenneco's shares closed at $52.625, far below a breakup value that Wall Street analysts put at about $75, or what some of them say is enough of a premium above the current price to attract corporate raiders.

"A lot of people are looking for a breakup, or a takeover, or a massive sale of remaining pieces," said Bruce E. Lazier, an analyst with Prescott, Ball & Turben in New York.

"But it looks like management is committed to keeping the company more or less as it is."

Ketelsen is playing his cards close to the vest. In a statement last Monday that accompanied the Houston-based company's first-quarter earnings report, he said Tenneco would sell "underperforming assets."

But he also stressed that the company's "present mix of businesses are capable of generating earnings growth" and a favorable return on equity.

The latter point resonated with Tenneco's first-quarter results. Net income soared 73 percent, to $109 million, or 38 cents a share, compared with $63 million, or 36 cents a share, in the quarter a year earlier. Sales were flat at $3.3 billion, reflecting the absence of sales formerly generated by the oil company subsidiary.

Tenneco's Case IH unit, the long-troubled maker of farm and construction equipment, posted $24 million in pretax earnings, a dramatic reversal from its $60 million loss in the 1988 quarter.

Case has lost $270 million in the last five years, and Ketelsen, a former Case president, has been criticized for investing heavily to keep the unit alive.

California insurance reform sparks bitter debate

By RICHARD W. STEVENSON
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The California Supreme Court ruling upholding the main provisions of a sweeping insurance reform initiative has generated a bitter debate over what constitutes a fair profit for insurance companies.

Even as it bolstered the efforts of consumer advocates in other states to reduce insurance premiums, the ruling on Thursday struck down as unconstitutional a provision that would have exempted insurers from the initiative's mandated rate rollbacks only if they faced a "substantial threat of insolvency."

Instead, insurers retain the right to earn a "fair return," the court said, and rates should be set accordingly.

But the court gave no definition of a fair return, effectively passing that question to the state's insurance commissioner, Roxani Gillespie. Carey Fletcher, a spokeswoman for the California Insurance Department, said the department was still studying the issue and that Ms. Gillespie, who was out of the country on vacation, had not yet reached any conclusions.

As a result, it remains unclear whether insurers in California, the nation's largest insurance market, will ultimately have to roll back their rates by 20 percent or more, as the initiative requires.

While the court's decision means the industry will be regulated much more tightly in California than before, Ms. Gillespie's approach will be crucial in determining the initiative's financial impact on the industry, company executives, consumer advocates and analysts said Friday.

The initiative, Proposition 103, was passed by voters last November and immediately challenged in court by the insurance industry, which said its terms would cause many companies to lose money and stop doing business in the state.

The initiative called for rate rollbacks of 20 percent or more on automobile and other forms of property and casualty insurance, including homeowner's and most commercial and malpractice policies. The initiative does not affect life insurance or workers' compensation.

The insurance industry takes in about $22 billion a year in premiums in California from the policies affected by the initiative. Auto insurance accounts for nearly half of that figure. In general, California has the nation's third-highest auto insurance rates, behind New Jersey and Alaska.

Confident that they can prove their rates are not excessive, many insurance companies that do business in California said Thursday and Friday that they would maintain their current premiums and petition Ms. Gillespie for an exemption.

Among them were the State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., the state's largest auto insurer; the Aetna Life and Casualty Co. and the Farmers Insurance Group of Cos. No company is known to have cut its premiums in the wake of the decision.

"In my opinion, there will be no rate rollbacks of auto insurance companies," said William B. Snyder, chairman of the Government Employees Insurance Co., another large insurer in California.

The debate over what constitutes a fair return is likely to be complicated and contentious and could lead to more litigation. Insurers and the sponsors of Proposition 103 differ sharply on the proper standard.

Analysts said it would be almost impossible to set a single standard for a fair return that would be sensible and equitable.

For one thing, companies with inefficient, high-cost operations could use their low rates of return on equity as justification for premium increases, essentially being rewarded for poor management. Such a situation would thwart the intention of the initiative.

Moreover, some types of insurance can be more profitable than others. The industry contends, for example, that auto insurance is at best marginally profitable in California.

Oil prices slide in early trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures prices declined in light trading Friday on a wave of profit-taking after gains earlier in the week.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the June contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude, closed at $20.02 a barrel, 56 cents lower than Thursday's session. The contract traded as low as $19.99 but rose shortly before the close, traders said.

Other crude contracts also closed the day lower.

Among refined products, unleaded gasoline for June delivery fell 2.12 cents to 67.50 cents a gallon, while June heating oil declined 1.22 cents to settle at 47.37 cents a gallon. All other contract months were down, but less sharply.

Prices surged late Wednesday and Thursday after an announcement that repairs on a North Sea oil platform would take longer than expected. Brent crude production may be disrupted until the end of May, officials said.

Friday's decline reflected concern that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has increased production and might boost its quota in the second half of the year, traders said.

Machinists may buy Northwest

EAGAN, Minn. (AP) — The Machinists union at Northwest Airlines has told the carrier's parent it plans to mount its own bid to buy the airline holding company, union sources say.

The International Association of Machinists District Lodge 143, Northwest's largest union, made the proposal in a letter to the board of directors of NWA Inc., Northwest's parent, the sources told The Associated Press on Friday.

NWA is the target of a number of takeover bids, including a $2.7 billion, or $90-a-share, hostile offer from billionaire oilman Marvin Davis.

Icahn interested in buying Eastern

NEW YORK (AP) — Takeover strategist Carl C. Icahn has signaled his interest in buying strikebound Eastern Airlines' Philadelphia airport hub, an Icahn associate says.

Icahn filed documents with the federal bankruptcy court Friday expressing his interest in the hub without specifying the price he'd be willing to pay, Trans World Airlines General Counsel Mark Buckstein told The Associated Press. Icahn, who publicly expressed interest in all of Eastern some time ago but hasn't formally bidded, is the owner and chairman of TWA.

On Sunday, Eastern advertised in major newspapers across the country for pilots to replace the striking members of the Air Line Pilots Association.

Boeing selling jets to South Africa

SEATTLE (AP) — Boeing Co. says it will sell up to $502 million worth of 747 jumbo jets to South Africa in a deal which drew strong criticism from members of the state's congressional delegation.

The aircraft maker and South African Transport Minister Eli Louw said Saturday South African Airways would buy two Boeing 747-400s and has options for two more aircraft.

House Majority Leader Tom Foley, D-Wash., said he thinks Boeing officials know there are strong feelings in the United States and Seattle about South Africa's system of apartheid. Foley said Boeing Commercial Airplanes President Dean Thornton told him Boeing's policy is to sell planes without regard to foreign policy as long as the sale is legal.

A spokesman for the California Public Employee Retirement System, which owns 8 million shares amounting to about 0.6 percent of Exxon's outstanding common stock, said Friday the fund may back New York City's plan to use its holdings in an effort to advocate the company change its spill strategies.

New Coke's popularity remains flat

ATLANTA (AP) — New Coke is 4 years old and an also-ran in the cola wars, but Coca-Cola Co. says there's plenty of fizz left in the beverage that helped revolutionize the marketing of soft drinks.

Coca-Cola was the world's most popular soft drink and more. The brand had become a symbol of the pervasive influence of American power and culture around the globe.

So it was no small decision when the company decided to reformulate the cola it had sold for 99 years. And it triggered no small reaction. The consumer backlash to the new drink was so strong that the company quickly brought back the original formula under the name Coca-Cola Classic.

Four years later, what goes by the label of Coke is virtually ignored by consumers while Classic Coke reigns No. 1. But company officials say they have no plans to drop the new formula, and industry analysts say they're right.

"It's regarded as the absolute biggest marketing travesty ever hoisted on the American public. With God's help, everyone will have similar mistakes," said Jesse Meyers, who publishes Beverage Digest in Greenwich, Conn.

"The announcement of new Coke gave new birth to all Coca-Cola products and the entire soft drink industry," he said.

The introduction of the new Coke heated up the "cola wars," and saw companies step up their efforts to introduce new variations of their name-brand products to gain a greater share of the $45 billion soft-drink market. Now there is not only Coke and Classic Coke, but diet Coke, caffeine-free Coke and even regular and diet Cherry Coke.

Arch-rival Pepsico may regard the new Coke as a "pretty nominal player," but it believes a company's full product line is more important than any single drink, said spokesman Todd MacKenzie.

"The parts make up the whole," MacKenzie said.

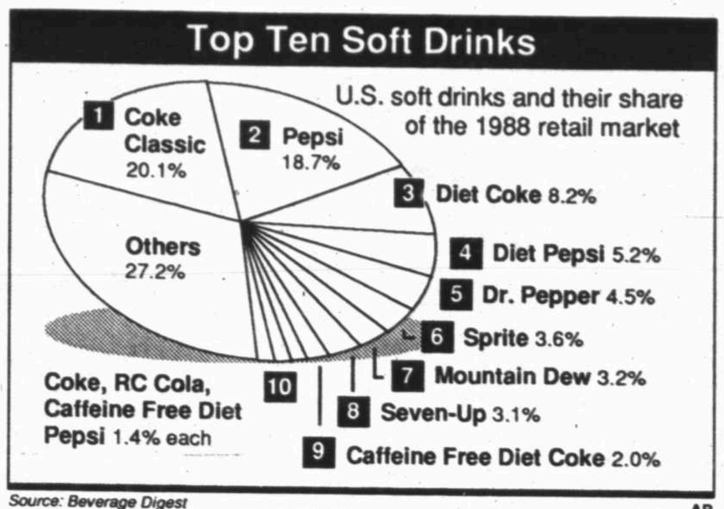

Indeed, Coca-Cola emphasizes that its entire line of soft drinks is strong and claims to hold a dominant 33.7 percent share of the retail market.

The brand name with the new formula that for years was the best-seller had dropped to 10th place at the end of 1988, tied with RC Cola and caffeine-free Diet Pepsi. The new Coke had a mere 1.4 percent of the market, down from 1.6 percent in 1987, according to Beverage Digest.

By contrast, Classic Coke — the old Coke with the new name — held the No. 1 position with 20.1 percent of the market. Pepsi Cola was No. 2 with 18.7 percent.

Even with its slim market share, the new Coke makes money and generates $675 million a year in revenue, said Randy Donaldson, a spokesman at the company's Atlanta headquarters.

"If Coca-Cola had any other name on it, it would be perceived as a huge success," Donaldson said. "Because the can has 'Coca-Cola' on it, the expectations were huge."

Source: Beverage Digest AP

Emanuel Goldman, a soft drink industry analyst with Paine Webber Inc. in San Francisco, said the new Coke still sold 4 billion cans last year, which makes it unlikely the company would drop it.

"There are people still drinking it," he said. "If they take it away, they may go somewhere else."

Donaldson said taste tests continue to show consumers like new Coke better than Pepsi.

Improving the taste was behind the decision to alter the formula, the company said when it announced the change in April 1985.

The new Coke hit the stores on May 8 of that year, the 99th anniversary of the date the first Coca-Cola was sold. But notwithstanding test results, the backlash was swift and harsh from consumers who resented the removal of a drink they had enjoyed for generations.

Two months later, Coca-Cola apologized to the public and brought back the old formula as Classic Coke.

"There's no question it didn't work out as planned," Donaldson said.

Still, the bungling hasn't tarnished the vaunted brand name, Meyers asserts.

"In the public's mind, what they call Coke is what the company is Atlanta calls Coca-Cola Classic," he said.

equivalent of insider trading, known as front-running.

Through such trading, a broker executes a trade for his own account before his client's, aiming to take advantage of the subsequent change in market price.

Investigators are also examining whether some traders engaged in "wash trades."

Such pre-arranged trades are executed to create bogus losses for tax purposes. They may also be used to move prices on the market or gain some other advantage.

The tax issue is important in the investigation. People involved in the inquiry said agents with the Internal Revenue Service were working with other investigators.

One area under investigation, a number of sources said, is silver trading in April 1987.

In that month, the price of silver plummeted to about $4 an ounce from more than $11, causing havoc in the market.

People familiar with the investigation said many traders named in the civil subpoenas are silver traders.

Some traders who received subpoenas said they were told they were not under investigation.

For example, Mark Dickstein said in an interview that he had been told by his lawyers that he was not under scrutiny. Dickstein said he had been asked to turn over a limited number of documents to the CFTC.

These include Semel, 39, and Mark Fisher, 28.

Both Fisher and Semel had been investigated by the Comex for engaging in pre-arranged trades in 1983.

Fisher was fined $60,000 as a result of the Comex inquiry. Semel paid $75,000 in fines and was suspended for 60 days, according to a Comex spokesman.

Other actions have also been taken against Semel. In 1985, he settled CFTC charges that he had engaged in wash trades and other illegal transactions, paying a fine of $5,000.

But the most significant inquiry by the Comex regarding Semel is the one under way now.

That investigation is looking into a wide range of potential abuses, including front-running and wash trades, according to people familiar with this inquiry. The inquiry was also said to be examining whether Semel had transferred profitable customer positions into his own account, essentially taking money from his customers.

Robert McGrath, a Comex spokesman, said he could not comment on an active investigation before the filing of a final disciplinary action.

A telephone call to a number listed in Semel's name was not answered Sunday. Andrew Kaplan, Fisher's lawyer, said his client had not violated any laws.

Interviews with traders and other sources painted Fisher as a brilliant man who moved quickly through the trading world, making millions of dollars in a short time.

Fisher was described as perhaps the most influential trader for his own account on the floor. "When he made a move, everyone wanted to follow him," one trader said. "He always seemed to know where the market was going. And he never seemed to make a mistake."

HDTV dominates broadcasting convention

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — High-definition television was the undisputed star of this year's National Association of Broadcasters' convention, dominating conversations around hotel lobbies, at restaurants and in numerous technical and policy sessions.

A dozen companies laid out advanced television displays, covering 22,000 square feet, as they tried to convince TV station owners and engineers that crisper, wide-screen TV images and compact disc-quality sound will be worth the large investment in new equipment.

Some estimates have put the cost at $3 million to $18 million to convert a TV station to full HDTV capability.

At the same time, no one knows if TV viewers will pay the $3,000-$4,000 that HDTV sets are expected to cost when they first appear in this country, probably by 1995.

But no matter how HDTV develops, many members of Congress want to make sure it's an American show. Those congressional proponents see HDTV, which is expected to be a $50 billion business in 20 years, as a means of revitalizing a U.S. electronics industry that was decimated by competition from low-cost Asian imports in the 1970s.

"American industrial competitiveness in advanced electronics, especially consumer advanced electronics, is not what it should be, is not what it could be ... and high-definition television does offer a vehicle to combat" that loss of competitiveness, Rep. Don Ritter, R-Pa., told an NAB session.

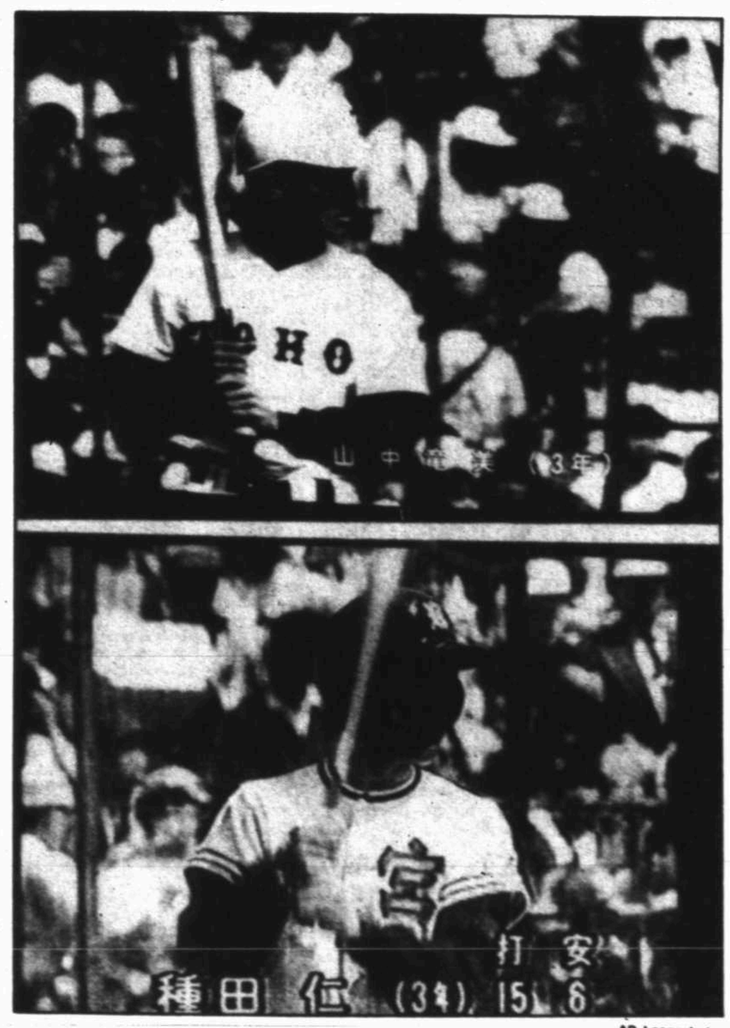

Ritter has introduced a bill to pump at least $100 million a year in federal grants or loans into HDTV research, as well as revising antitrust and trade laws to spur a U.S. HDTV industry.

And he said the Japanese have no right to criticize this "Team America" approach.

"I don't think it's appropriate to be lectured to by the Japanese on how to deal with important technological advance when it comes to one's own national interests," he said to an appreciative audience of broadcasters.

Although it will be at least two years before the Federal Communications Commission decides on standards for over-the-air HDTV broadcasts, companies such as NBC, Zenith, Japan's NHK broadcasting network and others are beating the drums for their competing approaches to advanced television.

The FCC has said a U.S. HDTV system must not make the nation's existing 160 million TV sets obsolete. That means manufacturers must find ways to give viewers both the standard signal, called NTSC, and the new HDTV signal for those who have special TV sets to receive them.

AP Laserphoto

HDTV signals typically pack seven times as much information as do NTSC signals.

No one has yet demonstrated a way to fit that much information into current TV channels without causing interference with neighboring channels.

HDTV probably will need more space, and it will be up to the FCC to decide whether to give HDTV a bigger chunk of the already crowded airwaves.

Some are proposing that stations broadcast two signals — the standard NTSC signal, and then a second high-definition signal on a channel that isn't being used currently.

Older sets would receive the NTSC signal, while new HDTV sets could receive both the old and new signals.

Others want stations to send a standard NTSC signal that when combined with another signal on an adjacent channel would create HDTV.

Others, such as NBC, are taking a more cautious approach. Its Advanced Compatible Television system provides an "enhanced" TV image that NBC is promoting as a low-cost interim step towards true HDTV.

The ACTV system, which is being developed by NBC, RCA and the David Sarnoff Research Center, was demonstrated at the NAB meeting.

NBC also demonstrated computer simulations of the proposed second generation of ACTV, which would provide double the clarity of existing TV displays and very high-quality sound — considered true HDTV.

Zenith officials at NAB claimed they had found a way to fit their Spectrum Compatible HDTV signal into the amount of space — six megahertz — that TV stations need for each channel, without causing interference with adjacent channels.

Zenith doesn't have such a system yet, but it proposes to transmit its signal on the so-called taboo channels that aren't being used on the TV dial.

FCC regulations require that stations in a single market separate their signals by one channel in order to avoid interference. If, for instance, a community has stations on channels 7, 9, 11 and 13, channels 8, 10 and 12 would be open.

Zenith says there are enough empty channels to allow 99.7 percent of all U.S. broadcasters to transmit HDTV signals. It expects to have hardware available for testing by the end of the year.

NHK was promoting its enhanced-definition system, MUSE-6, that will provide a better picture to existing TVs, and it also showed an HDTV system, MUSE-9, that would require 1.5 channels to transmit.

HDTV sets would combine the 1.5 channels into one to produce an HDTV picture, while older sets would receive only the one standard channel.

A small California company, Faroudja Laboratories, says others are barking up the wrong tree in their pursuit of HDTV. Faroudja has found a way to dramatically improve current NTSC TV signals to create what Faroudja calls SuperNTSC.

Faroudja's system was used to broadcast an enhanced TV signal at NAB, and it was used on a videotape of the movie "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom."

The Faroudja exhibit attracted large numbers of spectators at the HDTV demonstration area at the Las Vegas Convention Center, where a large Barco video projector displayed very high-quality images of the movie on a screen 8.5 feet wide and 12 feet high.

BONDS

come more common when the economy slows, particularly among companies that have restructured finances to reduce shareholder equity sharply and increase borrowings in the junk-bond market.

The cramdown securities consist of preferred stock and convertible debentures exchanged for the 26 percent of RJR stock not bought with cash.

These securities, known as PIK, or pay-in-kind, because dividends and interest are paid in the form of additional securities, not cash, will be distributed this week.

While the junk-bond market has been wobbly, RJR Nabisco securities have earned high marks from analysts.

Lawrence S. Pidgeon and Alan H. Cohen, analysts at Goldman, Sachs & Co., concluded in a recent analysis that RJR is likely to fare well even under conservative assumptions about sales and profit growth in its tobacco business.

Comparing the debt burden of the new company with other companies in the junk-bond market, they concluded that Kohlberg, Kravis "does not appear to have overpaid for RJR" and RJR's ability to pay its debts appears "quite strong."

Even if RJR Nabisco poses few problems for bond buyers, the size of the financing has sent a shiver through the rest of the market.

The pay-in-kind preferred stock, for example, has a face amount of $4.2 billion. That is more than the $3.3 billion of similar issues outstanding by all other companies.

The $1.8 billion of pay in kind debentures issued to shareholders plus $1.25 billion of publicly offered pay-in-kind bonds will exceed 70 percent of the market for all other pay-in-kind bonds.

"Because the financing is so big, dealers have to attract new investors and convince established buyers to buy larger amounts than they are used to. That requires attractive yields," said one trader who asked not to be identified.

"And since RJR is a benchmark for the market, it has pulled up the yields on other bonds as well," the trader added.

A key feature of the financing — as well as the preferred stock and convertible debentures being distributed this week — is that many of the new issues do not call for cash interest payments in the first years of the financing.

That structure leaves Kohlberg, Kravis with ample funds to pay commercial bank lenders.

Until the bonds are actually offered, underwriters led by Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. and Merrill Lynch & Co. have flexibility to change interest rates, maturities, and other details of the RJR financing.

A $1.25 billion issue of debentures due in 2001 will be sold at a discount because they do not pay cash interest until April 1994, when the rate would be about 14½ percent.

Another $1.25 billion in pay-in-kind debentures due 2001 will also pay interest at a 14½ percent rate after 1994, but in earlier years the 14½ percent interest would be paid in the form of additional debentures.

An additional $500 million of debentures due in 2001 will have some arrangement for resetting the interest rate in 1991 at a rate high enough to make the securities worth a price of 101. The initial interest rate could range from 12⅞ percent to 13½ percent, depending on the arrangement made for resetting the interest rate and other provisions for early retirement.

Dallas S&L placed in receivership

DALLAS (AP) — The Federal Home Loan Bank Board moved Thursday to protect Murray Savings Association, a thrift already under federal control, from possible action by some of its creditors.

The FHLBB transferred virtually all of the institution, except unsecured debt, from Murray to a newly chartered institution, Murray Federal Savings and Loan Association, which immediately was placed into receivership.

The board said the action was taken "to conserve the association's assets and to minimize the eventual cost to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp."

The move does not affect any depositors, whether they are above or below the $100,000 insured level, or secured creditors, said FHLBB spokesman David Colgren.

"The institution no longer has obligations to its unsecured creditors," Colgren said. Murray has about $30 million in subordinated debt.

Murray, with assets of $1.45 billion and deposits of $1.16 billion, was placed in conservatorship on April 6.

TENNECO

The company's other major division, the Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co., earned $112 million before taxes in the quarter ended March 31, compared with $87 million a year ago.

Tenneco's smaller packaging and chemical units posted modest profit gains along with its automotive parts business, which includes widely known Monroe shock absorbers.

The only unit with a decline was the Newport News Shipbuilding division, which makes attack submarines and aircraft carriers for the Navy. Profits slipped to $30 million from $34 million, but its order backlog rose to more than $5 billion.

Most analysts expect Tenneco's profits to continue rising through 1990. Earnings forecasts are between $4 and $4.25 this year, and between $4.75 and $5 in 1990.

That compares with earnings from continuing operations last year of about $2 a share, according to an estimate by Lincoln A. Werden Jr., of Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc. in New York. Tenneco earned $5.48 a share last year, but capital gains from the sale of Tenneco Oil generated the bulk of the income.

The Case farm equipment unit, which ranks No. 2 to Deere & Co. in domestic sales, has "tremendous upside potential," according to Ronald J. Barone of Kidder, Peabody & Co.

Deere and Case also have been helped because the rising value of the yen has made it more costly for their major Japanese competitor, Komatsu Ltd., to import into the United States.

Some money managers are hoping Komatsu will bid for a portion or all of Case in order to shift some production into the United States, a strategy used by some Japanese car manufacturers and steel companies.

Annual Bachelor Auction benefits Big Brothers/Big Sisters

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Bachelor Forrest Allen walks down the runway at the third annual Benefit Bachelor Auction Saturday at the Midland Hilton. The event is a fund-raiser for Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Start with 37 tuxedo-clad eligible bachelors, add celebrity hosts, an auctioneer, champagne and hors d'oeuvres, and rose centerpieces; open the doors to several hundred single women, and the result is the annual Benefit Bachelor Auction, a fund-raising event for Big Brothers-/Big Sisters.

Saturday, the third annual Bachelor Auction was presented at the Midland Hilton. Each of the participating bachelors had arranged a special date package — including everything from dinner and theatre in Midland to trips to Disneyland or the Ramses Exhibit in Dallas — and each successful bidder will accompany the bachelor she "bought" for that date. Three of the 37 bachelors, and their date packages, were raffled off rather than auctioned.

This year's event raised $20,600 for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, according to Linda Macias, executive director of the agency. "This year, all the money raised will go directly to the agency because Pepsi is underwriting the whole cost of the auction," she said. "There are 146 children on the waiting list (for Big Brothers or Big Sisters). We hope to recruit more volunteers and match them with the children — some of them (children) have been waiting for four years for Big Brothers/Big Sisters volunteers."

In his welcoming speech, Tony Farish, chairman of the fund-raising committee for the agency, said, "All the money you raise (from the auction) will stay here in Midland. Each dollar you give will go to help ... find special friends in their (the children's) lives."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Bachelor Patrick Galvin is escorted onto the runway by Katherine Lynn.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters pairs children from single-parent homes with adult volunteers who can spend quality time with the children and become positive influences in their lives.

Walking — alone — down a runway in front of hundreds of people can be an unnerving experience, but the participating bachelors agreed that the cause was worthy enough for them to risk a little embarrassment. "Definitely you are nervous, but we'll get over it," said bachelor Patrick Galvin, before he made the runway walk. "I have lots of mixed feelings, for all the right reasons. ... But we like it or we wouldn't be here. Anything for the benefit of Big Brothers/Big Sisters, and a good time."

Bachelor Darrell Hopkins said he was not too nervous. "I'm one of the first ones to go, so I don't have to worry about it too long."

Three-year auction veteran bachelor Ed Adcock was more relaxed. "This is always fun," he said.

Masters of ceremonies for the auction were Skip Baldwin (who was also an auctioned-off bachelor) of KMID-TV, and Janet Storie of KTPX-TV. Auctioneer was Dennis Black.

Jerry Griffith, 41, was the bachelor who was auctioned off for the highest amount — $2,150. His date package is a three-day weekend in Las Vegas.

This year, the bachelors participating in the auction were Mark Lancaster, Darrell Hopkins, Bill Schammel, Paul Bauernfeind, Woody Leverett, Rex Henderson, Jay Workman, Dave Perkins, David R. Lemons, Larry Wollschlager, Patrick Galvin, Kevin Taylor, Bill Rutter III, Doug Thomas, Ken Dinger, Baldwin, Tim Bryson, Forrest Allen, Scott Haselwood, Griffith, Kevin Sparks, Mark Linroth, Kyle Chandler, Ed Todd, Gary Peak, Jeff Rea, Jim Slaton, Michael Moylett, Rollie Hyde, Christopher Shea Goree, Joe Sena, Randy Wood, Stan Garrett, and a surprise bachelor, Paul Cox.

Leverett's date package included a Saturday flight to Dallas to watch a Texas Ranger's baseball game, dinner and drinks in the Metroplex and return flight to Midland on Sunday.

Sleeping on airplanes, trains cause pain in back

NEW YORK (AP) — An overnight plane ride or a long train trip often can cause lower back and neck discomfort.

Since most seats are designed for space needs, it is up to you to modify the chair for comfortable seating, says the Travel & Leisure Information Center.

Try placing a small pillow, a rolled up towel, or a blanket in the hollow of your back to keep it from flattening out.

Then, place a smaller pillow or towel behind your neck and recline your chair to help alleviate neck discomfort.

Love sometimes many-fatal thing

Copley News Service

Love isn't always a many-splendored thing. To the contrary, it can be a maddening sickness that drives you to suicide.

As drastic as that sounds, psychologist Dr. Dorothy Tennov believes some people fall so deeply in love that it possesses every part of their lives. When that love isn't reciprocated, they quit eating, sleeping and often consider suicide as a way of escape.

Tennov calls the condition "limerance" in her book, "Love and Limerance."

She says "limerant lovers" are stuck in a trap of sorts because they often keep their feelings of love for someone completely secret.

That inability to share their feelings is brought on by a fear of rejection.

With that in mind, Tennov says the only cure for the limerant lover is to leave town.

Otherwise, the torture of hopeless love will continue to tear that person apart.

Gadget buzzes

Copley News Service

Remember tying a string on your finger to remember something, or snapping a rubber band on your wrist to get rid of bad habits? A Minnesota behavioral psychologist has developed a simple gadget that replaces the rubber band and string. Dr. Steve Levinson calls it the "MotivAider."

The battery-operated gizmo is worn like a pager and buzzes the wearer with a harmless vibration at pre-set time intervals — like every five or 10 minutes. So if you want to stop acting like a slouch, you will think about not acting like a slouch every time the device buzzes you.

DEAR ABBY

Dad giving fidelity tips needs education himself

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a man (my husband) who, in my presence, informs his 16-year-old son from a previous marriage that although certain body parts of mine have deteriorated and become less attractive due to childbirth and aging, he would still (not unlike a martyr) rather have sex with me than a younger, firmer woman with whom he would run the risk of contracting AIDS?

The message I received was that I was no longer attractive to him, and that he just "puts up with me." Since then, I don't enjoy sex with him as much as I used to. Also, I feel that my privacy has been invaded.

My husband's defense was that he was just being "honest and open" in trying to set an example for his son to be a faithful husband when he marries.

Am I too sensitive? — FEELING BELITTLED

DEAR BELITTLED: Too sensitive? Certainly not. Your husband's lack of respect for your privacy, plus his boorishness and cruelty (however inadvertent), are appalling.

All attempts to educate this incredibly ignorant man may be useless, but do let him know that his references to your sex life and deteriorating body parts are gross and demeaning, so he'd better find another way to stress the importance of fidelity in marriage to reduce the risk of contracting AIDS, or any other sexually transmitted disease.

DEAR ABBY: I am a single parent trying to raise an 11-year-old son without a father. "Kevin" lost his father when he was 8 years old.

Abby, this boy has started to ask me questions about sex (gulp) that really startle me. I had no idea he was even thinking about such things at his age. He says all the kids at school talk about it.

Some time ago you advertised a booklet on how to talk to teen-agers about sex. Do you think it would be appropriate for Kevin? I don't want him to know too much at his age, but I want him to know enough to satisfy his curiosity and keep him safe from trouble.

If you think he's not too young for your booklet, please tell me how to order it. — SINGLE PARENT, ATHENS, GA.

DEAR PARENT: Correct information — at any age — can do no harm. Ignorance can. "What Every Teen-ager Ought to Know" has been very well-received. It has been purchased in large quantities for use at both Baptist and Catholic summer camps for children and young adults.

To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included in the cost.)

DEAR ABBY: I am an adopted child and know how you champion the causes of this group of people. My adoptive mother's family can be traced directly back from Ohio to the founding of Hartford and Saybrook, Conn., in the 1640s, and then back to England and William the Conqueror, and before that time to Normandy. They were prominent in the American Revolution.

When my mother died, she left two "Spinning Wheel" pins from an all-female historical society for her two granddaughters. However, when I approached the group for membership for the granddaughters, I was told that they were excluded since I was an adopted child. It seems that you can adopt the name, but not the heritage that goes with it. Mother was the last of her line. Can you help? — ZANESVILLE, OHIO

DEAR ZANESVILLE: Help? If you mean help your daughters to gain membership in a society that would discriminate between birth children and adopted children, I would urge you to consider adopting the attitude of the late Groucho Marx, who facetiously said, "I wouldn't want to be a member of any club that would have me."

CONFIDENTIAL TO DISAPPOINTED IN NEW HAVEN: If you pull a few wires while your children are growing up, you may not have to pull any strings to get them into a top-notch college. (Suggested wires to pull: television, stereo and telephone.)

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

'Sound of music' very loud in boom cars

By MARY EVERY
New York Times News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — On Friday and Saturday nights, State Street comes alive with the sound of music — loud music.

Up and down Santa Barbara downtown's main artery, young drivers cruise along in mini-trucks flexing their muscles of sound. In the beds of their trucks are woofers, large speakers geared to belting out the bass sounds.

They drive what are known as "boom" cars — vehicles with stereo systems that deliver jarring decibels of sound. The drivers have the power not only to set their own vehicles vibrating but also to rattle entire neighborhoods.

Mark Kowal, owner of Laser Auto, said there are three reasons people — mostly men — go for heavy-duty stereo systems: "They like loud music, want to have a status symbol, or are going for trophies.".

The appeal of boom cars isn't limited to the cruising set.

People over 30 are ripping out back seats, dashboards and insides of their car doors to make room for advanced stereo equipment that puts out the sound loud and clear.

Big decibels can mean paying big bucks.

Tony Cataldo, 18, a senior at San Marcos High School, said he has spent about $2,000 turning his '67 red Ford Fairlane convertible into a boom-mobile.

The system includes a tape deck, eight speakers and an amplifier that generates 230 watts of electrical power, said Cataldo.

"I've been building it up a piece a time for two years," he said.

His family gave him the money as birthday gifts.

He uses his sonically souped up convertible for entertaining.

"My friends like to feel the vibrations going through them," he said. "People a block away hear you and give you a thumbs up.

"I play songs with a lot of bass so people can appreciate how much bass I'm putting out."

But he is beginning to envy the more sophisticated systems, such as those his older pals, Craig Wines and Joe Moreno, have in their cars.

"They're awesome," Cataldo said.

Moreno, 22, has $10,000 worth of stereo equipment in his '86 black Ford Mustang, he said.

The equipment throws out about 870 watts of power and can produce more than 135 decibels at full volume, according to Wines, an installer with Creative Stereo who put in the system.

"By comparison," Wines said, "a stock car radio is six to eight watts, and a home stereo may have 50 to 100 watts."

Sitting in a closed car with such powerful stereo equipment is "like sticking your head into a speaker box or wearing head sets," Wines said.

But 135 decibels, already deafening, is mild compared with some big boomers: A fellow in Texas broke the world's record when his $27,000 system pounded out "Flashdance ... What a Feeling" at 154.7 decibels, more than twice as loud as the sound of a jet taking off, according in the March 6 issue of Time magazine.

Moreno has the components of his system — AM-FM stereo cassette player, 12-disc changer, 11-band equalizer, 20 speakers and four amplifiers) — discreetly concealed behind panels and under carpeting in his car.

Special fiberglass door panels were made to accommodate three speakers per door, and the dash was modified for the CD player and equalizer. The spare tire was relocated so four 8-inch sub-woofers could be installed in its place.

Moreno got into auto stereo as a hobby because he enjoys listening to music, he said.

Contests, sponsored by manufacturers and retailers of car stereo equipment, are staged at local, regional and national levels, with trophies awarded to the winners.

The competitions have simmered down somewhat since they started about six years ago, according to Kevin Kelly, manager of Santa Barbara Car Stereo.

Early hearing loss gradual

NEW YORK (AP) — Hearing loss is three times as prevalent as vision problems among adults over 45, according to the National Center for Health Statistics, yet that same group is twice as likely to wear eyeglasses as hearing aids.

In fact, less than one-third of the estimated 16 million Americans who could benefit from hearing aids actually use them because they can control much of the volume around them — and thus ignore or hide a hearing loss for a long time.

"In many cases, people will seek help only at the urging of another family member," says John Megale, an audiologist and hearing instrument specialist in Winchester, Va. "For a while, they will try to deny having a hearing loss. But eventually, they grow tired of being told they talk or play the TV too loud and their friends are tired of being told they mumble, or of getting nonsensical answers to their questions."

According to Megale, those are some of the warning signs of hearing loss. Others include hearing but not understanding and difficulty understanding in a large group or when not facing the speaker.

Once you recognize these warning signs, the next step is to take a hearing test.

"Education about hearing help is the key to increasing awareness and acceptance," says Carole Rogin, executive director of the Hearing Industries Association. For example, she says after President Reagan's first hearing aid was highly publicized in 1983, industry sales jumped 20 percent.

"The big news in hearing instruments is how small they have become," says Lawrence Posen, president of Beltone Electronics Corporation, manufacturer of hearing instruments.

Like Reagan's canal instruments, he says, new models are form fitted to an individual's ear contours. Once in place, these finger-tip size devices virtually disappear. According to Posen, even today's smallest models pack a lot of sophisticated equipment.

They have amplifiers customized to the amount of hearing loss by adjusting the shape of the frequency response curve. Some have automatic noise filters that can adjust for annoying background noise.

"Hearing starts its gradual deterioration at the age of 30, but a sudden shock, illness or some medications may speed up the process," says Dr. Allan H. Bruckheim, a specialist in family medicine and vice chairman of the National Council of Patient Information and Education.

"Anyone over 50 should have an annual hearing test," he says.
