Budget, tax plan approved

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Overcoming potentially damning partisan differences, the Texas Legislature Tuesday eliminated 17 months of fiscal uncertainty by approving a $38.4 billion 1988-1989 state budget and a $5.7 billion tax increase to finance it.

The record taxing and spending plans now go to Gov. Bill Clements, who signed the tax plan late Tuesday and indicated he would sign the appropriations bill as well. The governor's signature would balance the state's budget for the first time since plummeting oil prices forced Comptroller Bob Bullock to declare a deficit on Feb. 13, 1986.

"I have to look at the bills and see, but I think that we're on our way," Clements said shortly after the House passed the package. "Everything has come out as well as could be expected under the existing circumstances."

While several questions — including the constitutionality of the procedure the House used to adopt the tax package — remain, the Legislature adjourned its second special session of the summer just four hours before the midnight deadline.

The tax bill boosts the sales tax rate from 5.25 to 6 percent, broadens the sales tax to include services ranging from telephones to country club memberships, maintains the current 15 cent-a-gallon gasoline tax and increases the corporate franchise, cigarette, hotel/motel, motor vehicle sales and insurance taxes. It imposes a new $25 fee for sales tax permits and boosts state licensing fees for 12 professional groups by $110 a year.

The Senate adopted the tax package 26-5, while the House voted 78-70. Representatives then voted 123-23 to put it into immediate effect. The higher sales tax rate begins Oct. 1, and most of the other increases take place Sept. 1.

"You had 76 or 77 very courageous people who voted for a tax bill," said House Speaker Gib Lewis. "That's not easy because it's very easily used against them when they run for re-election. That's a gutsy vote. That's a tough vote."

The appropriations bill — based on a deadlock-breaking compromise Republican Clements reached last week with Democrats Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby — would boost state spending by 4 percent over current levels. Major increases are scheduled for higher education, human services and prisons, while transportation programs would be reduced by 7 percent.

The House accepted the budget 80-69, and senators approved it 26-5.

"It's the best that could be done under the circumstances," Hobby said. "Obviously, I would have liked to see more support for higher education, human services."

'Best choice' defended

By JIM WARREN and DAVE PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Most area lawmakers voted for the largest tax increase in state history because, they said, it was the best choice in a bad situation.

"I think the bottom line on this tax bill, the reason that I am persuaded, is that we are either going to do it here in Austin or the folks back home are going to have to raise local property taxes," said Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock.

But Midland Rep. Tom Craddick, the dean of House Republicans, voted against the tax bill and the spending bill, saying both were inflated. Even after Republican Gov. Bill Clements agreed to the size of the tax bill, Craddick held out for more spending cuts.

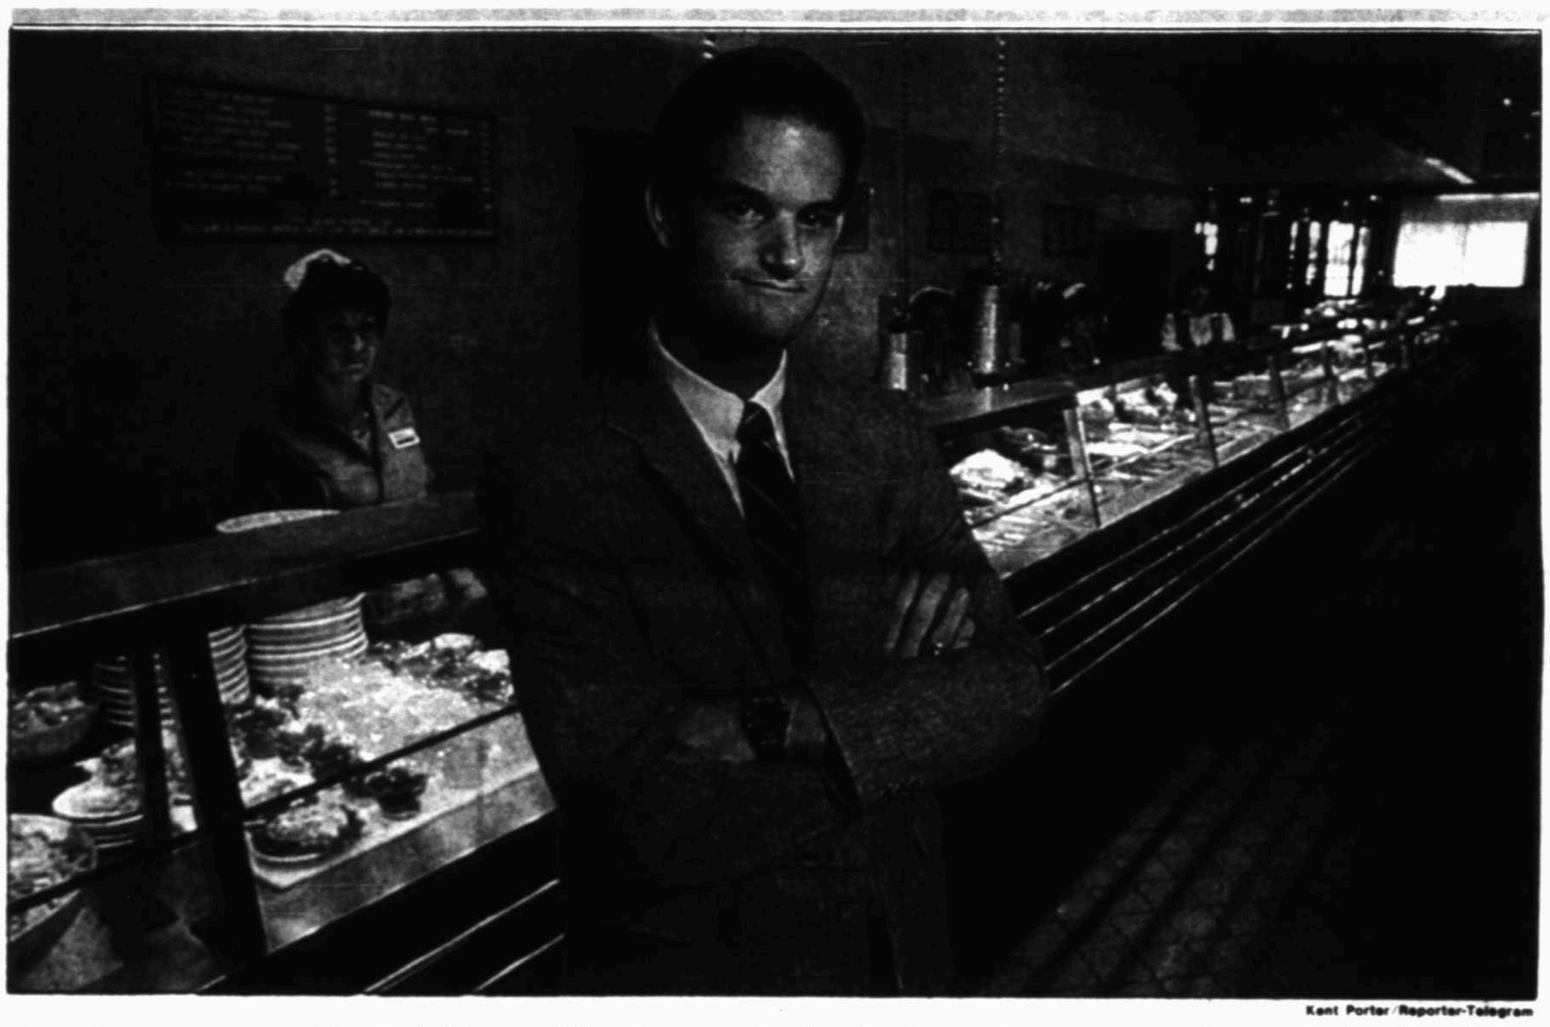

The $5.7 billion tax package, approved in the House on Tuesday and in the Senate on Monday, calls for a 6 percent sales tax rate, broadening of the sales tax in certain areas and increases in the corporate franchise tax and other taxes. The package also includes a separate bill keeping the gasoline tax at 15 cents a gallon.

Craddick said Clements' early pledges against large tax increase and calls for spending restraints probably lopped $3 billion from where the budget would have been.

"But I am dissappointed because the tax and spending is still too high, we need to cut more," he said. "I think the people in the state as a whole, not just in my areas, think we need to decrease spending and decrease costs just like they're having to do at home."

Montford said a more permanent expansion of the sales tax base to address the state's revenue shortfalls is inevitable.

Employer provisions 'confusing'

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Jerry Krueger, manager of Luby's Cafeteria in Midland, acknowledged that he was perplexed at first by employer provisions of recent immigration reforms.

"The whole thing was very confusing," he said.

"The (U.S.) Immigration Service said they were going to ship information to all employers nationwide," he said. "And we still haven't seen anything."

But help for employers like Krueger is available at the Texas Employment Commission, according to Joe Hatcher, local TEC office manager, who said that bosses ought to be concerned about potential liability problems as they attempt to comply with the law.

In a process called "reverse referral," the TEC will interview prospective employees that a business is considering hiring in an effort to determine if the workers are eligible for work under the new law, Hatcher said.

U.S. Navy escorting first reflagged Kuwaiti tankers into gulf

FUJAIRAH, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Two Kuwaiti tankers flying the Stars and Stripes and their U.S. Navy escorts today steamed past a battery of Iranian missiles into the Persian Gulf.

The supertanker Bridgeton and the smaller oil products carrier Gas Prince were flanked by three and at times as many as five American warships. Aircraft from the carrier Constellation stationed outside the gulf threw a rotating air cover overhead.

The tankers weighed anchor about 90 miles to the south this morning off the United Arab Emirates port of Khor Fakkan. By midafternoon, they had cleared the 50-mile-long, 8-mile-wide Strait of Hormuz, considered one of the most potentially hazardous parts of the three-day journey to Kuwait.

The two ships ran up the Stars and Stripes on Tuesday, sealing their registration as American commercial vessels entitled to U.S. warship protection.

The Navy cruiser Fox led the convoy, while the frigate Crommelin and the destroyer Kidd steamed nearby. An Associated Press reporter who was part of a Pentagon media pool on the Kidd said the convoy maintained a condition just below the highest state of alert.

"They are moving fast in close convoy," reported one shipping source who was in touch with witnesses and radio monitors as the cluster of vessels sailed through the strait at about 16 knots, the approximate top speed of the supertanker Bridgeton.

President Ali Khamenei of Iran vowed today "to strike blows to the ominous alliance" of the United States and Kuwait "as we deem necessary," the official Islamic Republic News Agency said in a dispatch monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus.

The vessels passed about 12 miles from Iran's Larak Island, site of Iran's offshore oil shipping terminal, and about 17 miles from the coast of Qeshm Island, where Iran was reported to have installed at least one of its three mobile anti-ship missile batteries.

The convoy also was to pass within 12 miles of Abu Musa, a tiny island that Iran recently fortified with Revolutionary Guard units, helicopter gunships and high-speed gunboats used in attacks on gulf shipping.

Earlier, it skirted the tip of the Oman Peninsula, where mountains rise out of the sea. Forty to 60 miles across the strait is Bandar Abbas, a major Iranian naval base where Chinese-made Silkworm anti-ship missiles are placed.

Shipping sources and gulf area diplomats, all of whom asked to remain anonymous, said they didn't expect the Iranians to take any action against the first convoy to make the trip under President Reagan's plan for the reflagging of 11 Kuwaiti tankers.

"They won't do anything at this stage and let everyone feel complacent, so the fireworks can come at a later stage," said one of the shipping officials.

The Reagan administration agreed to re-register the tankers to protect them from Iranian attacks and safeguard the flow of oil through the gulf. It acted after the Soviets leased Kuwait three tankers and promised military escorts for them.

Committee convinced story will have holes

Iran-Contra Affair

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the heels of sharply conflicting testimony, members of the congressional Iran-Contra committees are giving up hope of ever knowing the full story of the tangled affair but hope to draw some lessons for the future by cross-examining cabinet members.

"It's reasonable and logical to conclude that we will have to close the investigation with a few holes," Senate committee chairman Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said. "The jigsaw puzzle is not going to be complete."

After a rest day today, the committees' investigation enters a new and final phase Thursday when Secretary of State George P. Shultz will appear at the witness table to tell how normal policy channels were circumvented in selling arms to Iran and aiding Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

Shultz will be followed next week by three other top advisers to President Reagan: Attorney General Edwin Meese III, whose handling of an investigation of the affair has come in for harsh criticism, former White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan and Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger.

Assessing the testimony of Rear Adm. John M. Poindexter, who wound up five days of public testimony Tuesday, Inouye expressed dismay over the conflicts between the former national security adviser's version of events and that of his former aide, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North.

"As the king of Siam said, 'It's a puzzlement.' Who should I believe — Admiral Poindexter or Colonel North? It's been a trying week. At the least, it's confusing, and at the most, it's tragic. What the admiral has told us should not have happened."

But he said the discrepancies over who gave authority for the diversion of Iran arms sale money to the Nicaraguan Contras, and other questions, may never be resolved.

■ Related story — 5A

"We are not in the business of determining culpability," Inouye said. "Couple that with the fact that documents have been destroyed by the bushels. Add to that the fact that a major witness (former CIA Director William J. Casey, who died of a brain tumor) is not with us."

Fight to keep fire stations should heat up next week

By RAMONA NYE

Balzer

The campaign to persuade public opinion and keep two north fire stations open will begin in full force by next week with the Midland Firefighters Association distributing pamphlets throughout the city, said two association members today.

"We're not trying to make any waves. We're just trying to get the public informed" said Chip Balzer today, an association spokesperson.

The association is hoping to get the public to appear at an August 25 hearing on the city's proposed $58 million budget, that calls for the closing of two stations and cuts of 14 fire department positions.

The association met Monday night to review a fact sheet about how the cuts would affect the fire department and homeowners, Balzer said.

However, the group, is still gathering information for the pamphlet that they will make available at area businesses, he said.

The City Council proposed on July 1 closing Station #4, 405 E. Solomon Lane, and Station #9, 6005 N. Midland Drive, because they were getting half the calls of Midland's other seven fire houses.

The closings will save the city $460,000 a year and will take a big chunk off this year's $2 million budgetary deficit, city officials said.

Healing takes time, pastor tells families of flood victims

MESQUITE (AP) — The hurt of losing nine teen-agers who drowned in flash floods on their way home from a Texas church camp will take time to heal, a minister said as three of the victims were buried.

"We've lost the backbone of our youth group," said the Rev. Preston Henderson of the Seagoville Road Baptist Church, where many of the teens attended. "They done right. They knew the Lord."

Meanwhile, the search continued for a 10th teen-ager lost in the flooding Guadalupe River. John Bankston Jr., 17, who disappeared after helping others to safety is believed to have perished in the river, authorities said.

Searchers today will move a command post 15 miles downriver of the accident to expand the search for young Bankston, said Department of Public Safety spokesman Raymond Kraus.

In the quiet suburb of Mesquite, funeral services for Cindy Sewell, 16, and her brother William, 12, were scheduled today. They were among the 43 people on a church van and bus that was engulfed by flash floods Friday near Comfort. Thirty-three people survived, some after clinging to trees for hours.

At a service for three victims Tuesday, the Rev. Sylvester Matthew, pastor of the Open Door Baptist Church, read a poem written by one of the teen-aged girls.

Leslie Gossett, 14, in a poem called "I Love You," wrote that if she ever had to leave her loved ones, "please do not let the thought of me be sad for you. For I am loving you just as I always have."

HEARING

While those factors will leave gaps in the nation's knowledge of the affair, enough already has been pieced together to draw lessons that should prevent recurrence of such extra-governmental policymaking, he said.

When Poindexter completed his testimony Tuesday, he left behind confusion and incredulity among members of the panels, and he heard one last rebuke from House committee chairman Lee Hamilton, D-Ind.

"You have testified that you intentionally withheld information from the president that denied him the opportunity to make probably the most fateful decision of his presidency," Hamilton said.

"You wanted to deflect blame from the president, but that is another way of saying you wanted to deflect responsibility from the president. And that should not be done in our system of government," he said, adding later:

"Because he lacked information, the president inflicted serious and repeated political wounds upon himself."

Poindexter responded: "I leave this hearing with my head held high, that I have done my very best to promote the long-term national security interests of the United States."

Several committee members said it was wrong for a government bureaucrat, no matter how well motivated, to presume to make an important decision for an elected official.

"If you have non-elected bureaucrats making decisions, what you're really doing is taking power away from the people themselves," said Sen. David Boren, D-Okla.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said conflicts between Poindexter's testimony and that of North and others may not be resolved. But he added: "Many of the things he said, frankly, no one really buys or understands."

"I think they're still operating on a deniability scenario," added Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md.

Sarbanes also took exception with Poindexter's expressed belief that the president is given a strong foreign policy mandate by the voters every four years and should be left alone by Congress.

"This notion that the president gets elected and then can do anything he wants for four years in the foreign policy field, that's not the way the system works," he said. "We get our policy out of an interaction between the president and Congress."

And Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., criticized the apparent fearful atmosphere at the White House which made policymakers turn inward, sharing plans only among themselves and shunning the Congress, the news media and even other federal agencies as enemies.

Foley said it is difficult to achieve the consensus needed to form policy in a democracy without open debate of issues.

Reagan vows to veto trade measure

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, unshaken by Senate approval of a sweeping trade bill over his objections, is vowing to veto the measure if it reaches him in current form — and that goes for the House version too.

"The Senate trade bill, similar to the House version, contains numerous provisions that are unacceptable," Reagan said Tuesday after the 71-27 Senate vote.

"If either bill came to me in present form, I would have no choice except to veto it," Reagan added.

Reagan usually lets Cabinet officers do his warning for him, leaving himself a freer hand to dicker with lawmakers.

Tuesday's vote marks the first time an omnibus trade bill has won Senate approval in three years, while the nation's deficit in global commerce has climbed to a record $166.3 billion.

Reagan had tried to sway Republican senators with a last-minute appeal against the 1,000-page trade package on grounds it would disrupt global markets and rebound against American industry.

Twenty-seven Republicans voted in favor of the bill and 19 against it. Among Democrats, the measure scored a clean sweep.

In fighting the bill, Reagan called Senate leaders to the White House on Tuesday morning and sent Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter on a mission to Capitol Hill.

The strategy was aimed at building support for major changes in the bill when it goes to a House-Senate conference committee. The House approved its version April 30.

Conferees could meet before the August recess. But most of the work of resolving differences between the two versions is expected after Labor Day.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., told reporters he had expected the administration's appeal to produce 32 to 35 votes against the bill.

"Every vote that was doubtful went against them," said Packwood, the ranking Republican on the Senate Finance Committee.

Packwood, himself, who had earlier joined forces with the administration to combat key import relief provisions, ended up voting for the bill. He said there were more pluses than minuses.

Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan, voted against the bill, saying his vote would emphasize the need for changes in the conference committee.

Republican sponsors said they were prepared to do some dickering over the provisions with the administration as well as House members.

"We've certainly indicated to the administration that we're open for business," said Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo. "And we will continue to do business with them."

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, made it clear that Congress would not bow to White House dictates, saying, " We have a responsibility here and we're going to discharge it."

One major provision already being described as a candidate for alteration would require companies to give employees 60-day notice of impending plant closings or large-scale layoffs.

"I have my doubts about how the White House may receive that particular provision," Dole told the Senate.

Business groups lobbied heavily but unsuccessfully to rid the Senate version of the union-backed plant-closing feature. The House bill has no counterpart.

A feature of the House bill already spotlighted as likely to be softened would require dollar-for-dollar retaliation against "excess and unwarranted" foreign trade surpluses with the United States.

Less-stringent Senate provisions would call for the U.S. trade representative to keep track of countries with "consistent patterns" of unfair trade practices.

SESSION

With Clements' blessing, state leaders devised a convoluted web of parliamentary maneuvers that permitted House Republicans and conservative Democrats to vote against the tax hike and then vote for the bill to take immediate effect. A heated clash Monday, demonstrating heightened political animosity between Democrats and the GOP, threatened to scuttle the fragile compromise and force another special session.

The Republicans balked mainly at a provision in the spending bill that would have cut funding to their districts if the tax bill did not take immediate effect. They called it partisan blackmail designed to force support for a bloated budget.

The Democrats split among themselves Tuesday over whether to let the Republicans "off the hook" for the largest tax increase in state history. "I'm tired of sitting around and feeling like a wimp on this," said Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas.

"We make a strong stand, and then we back up."

But Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio and House sponsor of the tax plan, called on his colleagues to put politics aside and take action to keep the Treasury running when the fiscal year begins Sept. 1. "There are far more important things than the particular career of one member of this body or another member of this body," Morales said to rousing applause from the packed House gallery.

"I think that it has now come upon us to recognize that the responsiblity and obligation and duty is going to be laid upon someone, and my suggestion is that that be us."

The Constitutions requires all bills to receive the vote of two-thirds of the members of both chambers to take immediate effect. On Monday, it became apparent that Lewis could not muster the votes of 100 of the 150 representatives for the taxes, mostly because of the opposition of 56 Republicans. Simple majority approval would have delayed the increase until Nov. 1.

Lawmakers used a separate bill, which gained two-thirds approval in both the House and Senate, to put the tax package into immediate effect. In the end, seven Republicans supported the tax hike and 53 voted for the separate bill.

Sen. Craig Washington questioned the constitutionality of the maneuver.

"I really don't think this is going to get us where we want to be," he said, warning that a single taxpayer could sue to overturn the system. "I think we're going to be down here in special session in October doing what we should be doing now."

The final agreement ended a stalemate between Clements and the Democrat-controlled Legislature that began from the day he took office Jan. 13. The governor first insisted the $5.8 billion shortfall could be made up with budget cuts alone, then consented to continuation of the $2.9 billion in temporary sales and gasoline tax increases lawmakers passed last summer.

The regular session adjourned June 1 without a budget, the first time that has happened since 1961 — when lawmakers returned for a special session to enact the state's first sales tax. The standoff continued until late last week, when the three leaders agreed to a bottom line about halfway between Clements' and Hobby's orginal budget proposals.

Some Republicans argued that they should have cut the budget more still. "We need to sincerely look at the spending side of state government and find ways to be more productive and more efficient," said Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas.

"Until we do that, we will continue to look at increased taxes as the only solution."

This is the final tax compromise House and Senate negotiators agreed to early Sunday.

REACT

"We're going to have to, in some way, deal with what appears to be an irreconciable topic and that is tax equity," he said. "Those words don't seem to go together."

Although his constituents won't be happy with a tax increase, Montford said he is prepared to defend it.

"I think it was the necessary, responsible thing to do for Texas," he said. "It would have been real easy to hide behind a no vote, but I wouldn't be doing my job."

Rep. Gary Watkins, a freshman Democrat from Odessa, voted for the tax package. The state needed the extra money, he said, so schools could open on time and government wouldn't shut down.

"The governor has said that this is an acceptable spending level, and the governor is certainly not one that's going to go out here and have a lot of extra money in the budget," Watkins said. "I'm sure the people in my home district will want me to explain what I've done and how it will affect them, but I feel confident that when I explain to them they'll understand and support it."

Rep. Larry Don Shaw, D-Big Spring, said he and other Democrats voted for the tax bill to pay for spending in Republicans' districts. "It was not difficult for me to vote for this tax bill," Shaw said. "What was difficult for me was letting Republicans off the hook."

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said he voted for the tax package because it was the only way to keep state government running.

"I know some of my constituents would say cut more fat out of it, but I think (the experts) have cut the fat," he said. "I know it is not going to satisfy everybody, but we have done the best that we can."

Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said he couldn't worry about the politics of voting for the tax bill. "I wrote the budget," said Rudd, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. "I have to vote for the tax bill to fund that budget. It's simple for me."

EMPLOYERS

As a result, liability for mistakes in employment will fall on the TEC rather than on the employer, Hatcher said.

Krueger said his business at first used the TEC extensively for the employee verification process, but now — under advisement from Luby's San Antonio home office attorneys — the local restaurant's managers feel capable of achieving compliance on their own, Krueger said.

Under the new employment rules, bosses must make sure that all workers who started new jobs after Nov. 6, 1986, complete an I-9 form, a document on which the person attests to his eligibility for employment in the United States.

The person may prove his eligibility with a variety of documents, including a valid drivers license, social security card, birth certificate or passport.

Making sure the forms are complete and keeping them on file for a required three years creates more work for businesses that may already be burdened by the oil patch economic downturn.

And while enforcement of the law remains in a "citation phase" until May 31 next year, employers ultimately will face sanctions in the form of stiff fines for failing to comply.

Beginning June 1, 1988, employers may be fined between $250 amd $2,000 for each unauthorized alien they employ on a first offense. On a second offense, the fines grow to between $2,000 and $5,000 for each unauthorized alien employed, and the third offense could mean fines of between $3,000 and $10,000 per unauthorized alien employed.

For flagrant violators, the government could institute criminal proceedings that would net the perpetrator a $3,000 fine and a 6-month prison term.

Hatcher acknowledged that in following the new immigration law, employers need to make sure they stay clear of Equal Employment Act violations.

He recalled the recent experience of a Midland petroleum related company that at one time employed between 1,200 and 1,500 people.

"The only people they screened with I-9s was their Hispanic population," said Hatcher.

The company, whose name Hatcher said he could not reveal, had let go two crews partially because among their members were found workers who could not work in the United States legally, he said. That the company also found beer in the employees' workplace was the overriding factor in the firing, he said.

However, "the problem that bothered me more than anything was that the only people they had do an I-9 was the Spanish population," he said.

"That's just not right," he said. "Screening only Hispanics is a no-no," he added to emphasize that all persons who started work after the Nov. 6, 1986 date have to fill out the I-9 paperwork.

"Even on their own son, their own daughter, their own brother-in-law they have to have an I-9 on file," he said.

Pedro Esquivel, district director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, has said the new immigration law already has sparked discrimination cases according to Associated Press reports.

But while employers attempt to comply witht he immigration law, the must simultaneously follow provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, which bans unequal employment practices based on national origin.

EEOC officials said their offices already have been notified of several cases wherein workers — mostly Hispanic — have not been hired or have been fired because employers are fearful of the new immigration law.

"Many employers fear the amnesty law more than Title VII and they think perhaps the commission will not enforce Title VII," regional commission attorney Ismael Alvarez said.

"In fact, we want to give the message that we will be enforcing Title VII," he said.

FIRE

However, the firefighters association and some homeowners contend the stations should be left alone and the money needs to be taken out of a $12 million surplus.

During budgetary hearings in late June the council decided to dip into $12 million surplus fund and took out $936,306.

Mayor Carroll Thomas said the council is reluctant to withdraw any more money with the city facing a drop in property values again next year.

This year property values dropped on the average 5 percent.

The association is mounting a public campaign to keep the two stations open and prevent the elimination of 14 fire department positions.

"We want to keep our station open. If for some reason we can't keep the station open, we want to keep our men," Balzer said.

The association is not working with several homeowners who are circulating a petition to keep the north stations open, Balzer said.

At a press conference last week the mayor said most of the 14 positions cut would be absorbed through attrition, vacancies and transfers.

Another association member, Robert O'Donnell, said, "No matter how you look at it, we're still going to be 14 positions shorter."

The association contends their understaffed department cannot afford to lose the 14 positions and needs 12 more employees.

The two men also said closing the stations will affect emergency calls even though ambulances are not dispatched from the fire houses.

On medical calls, the Emergency Medical Service trained firefighters at the two north stations rush trucks to a scene and begin life saving procedures if they arrive before ambulances, Balzer said.

The association's Ladies Auxiliary will also have a petition set up at a booth in the Midland Park Mall Aug. 1 and Aug. 15 asking the council to keep the station's open, Balzer said.

"We don't feel like they (the council and mayor) are out to get us. We know they are trying to come up with the budget they need, but we don't believe this would be in the best interest of the city," O'Donnell said.

BUS

More than 800 family and friends gathered at the service. Mourners knelt in the aisles of the small church's sanctuary and filled two classrooms equipped with television monitors for the service for Miss Gossett, Stacey Smith, 17, and her sister, 14-year-old Tonya Smith.

Michael O'Neal, 16, and Legenia Keenum, who turned 15 the day she died, were buried later Tuesday in separate services.

At the triple-burial service in Mesquite, photographs of the three girls sat atop caskets that were surrounded by dozens of floral arrangements, mainly pink roses and carnations.

"It's going to take time to heal," Henderson said. "Lean on one another. Use the love that the Bible has taught you."

After the service, the caskets were loaded into three white hearses that were trailed by more than a half-mile of limousines and hundreds of cars en route to the cemetery. Some of the mourners were survivors who were still wearing bandages as they got into their parents' cars.

Warships make for world's riskiest waterway

By ED BLANCHE

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — U.S. warships and the reflagged Kuwaiti tankers they escort will ply what has become the world's riskiest stretch of water in one of the Navy's most disputed operations.

A high-tech force of missile warships, combat planes and airborne radar systems has been assembled to counter the threat of Iranian attacks in the Persian Gulf, where Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980.

More than 300 ships have been attacked by both combatants in the 7-year-old war and more than 100 seamen killed.

In one of the worst attacks, 37 American seamen were killed May 17 when an Iraqi fighter-bomber fired two missiles into the missile frigate USS Stark.

Iraq apologized and said the pilot mistook the Stark for an Iranian warship, but the attack underlined the danger of cruising the 600-mile-long waterway.

Many congressmen oppose the administration's decision to intervene in the gulf to help Kuwait, fearing the United States will be drawn into the seemingly interminable war.

Kuwait is Iraq's neighbor at the northern end of the gulf. Iran accuses the emirate of receiving shipments of arms for Iraq, whose ports have been closed almost since the war began.

WORLD

Iran has made regular attacks since last September on ships owned by or serving Kuwait and says it will not stop because of American flags and U.S. warships.

It claims to have assembled an "unprecedented naval force" of more than 80 warships, armed hovercraft, gunboats, helicopter gunships and attack planes to confront the U.S. Navy.

The American task force has 15 warships in or near the gulf, including the aircraft carrier Constellation. Also in the fleet are air defense cruisers of the Ticonderoga class, which carry anti-aircraft missiles and Phalanx close-quarter guns that fire 3,000 rounds a minute.

Aboard the Constellation are 85 A-6 and FA-18 attack planes, F-14 Tomcat interceptors, EA-6Bs equipped with electronic equipment to jam hostile radars, and E-2C reconnaissance and command planes.

Two Perry-class frigates, sister ships of the Stark, stood by Tuesday 90 miles south of the gulf with the first two Kuwaiti tankers carrying the American flag: the 401,382-ton Bridgeton and the 46,723-ton Gas Prince.

At the outset of the 500-mile run to Kuwait's Al-Ahmadi oil terminal is the 44-mile-wide Strait of Hormuz at the Persian Gulf's southern end, with the threat of Silkworm anti-ship missiles on the Iranian shore.

The mobile Chinese-made missiles have a range of 50 miles warheads containing up to 1,000 pounds of high explosives.

Air cover from the Constellation will concentrate over Hormuz. Fighters will be aided by U.S.-built AWACS reconnaissance aircraft that will spot any attempt to scramble by Iran's badly depleted air force.

Once past the horseshoe-shaped strait, convoys face possible attack by British-built Iranian frigates armed with Italian radar-guided missiles, and by helicopter gunships operating from abandoned oil platforms that stud the gulf.

Iran's navy, which has held the upper hand over Iraq at sea since early in the war, has a major ship and air base at Bandar Abbas on its bank of Hormuz.

Perhaps the greatest danger is from Iran's Revolutionary Guards. The fanatical followers of revolutionary patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini have made human-wave ground attacks on Iraqi lines and now man speedboats in the gulf.

Their boats are based on several islands, including Abu Musa, a fly-speck islet just inside the strait.

Revolutionary Guards units using Swedish-built boats armed with rocket-propelled grenades and machine guns have attacked several tankers and freighters in recent weeks.

The Guards also mine shipping channels leading to Kuwait's Al-Ahmadi oil terminal, the destination of the U.S.-escorted convoys.

Iran has made threats of suicide attacks. Guards commanders claim they have more than 80,000 men, including missile crews, deployed along the gulf for "martyrdom-seeking attacks" on the U.S. ships.

Government to sue Enrile

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The government will file a civil suit against Juan Ponce Enrile, who helped depose Ferdinand E. Marcos, for allegedly taking part in massive theft during Marcos' rule, an official said Wednesday.

Mary Concepcion Bautista, a member of the Presidential Commission on Good Government, known by its initials PCGG, said the suit was expected to be filed either Wednesday or Thursday.

She said Enrile will be accused of illegally acquiring shares in Philippine Communications and Satellite Inc., and the United Coconut Planters Bank.

The PCGG has already filed five suits against Marcos and his associates, seeking the return of billions of dollars in government funds which they allegedly pilfered during his 20 years in power.

Three of those suits were filed with a special anti-graft court Tuesday, naming 11 more defendants.

Enrile served as Marcos' defense minister for 16 years but broke with him on Feb. 22, 1986. Enrile led the military revolt which triggered the "people power revolution" that ousted Marcos from the presidency three days later.

President Corazon Aquino retained Enrile in the defense post but fired him last November after an abortive coup by his followers.

He ran for the 24-member Senate as leader of the center-right Grand Alliance for Democracy in the May election. Latest counts show him in 24th place.

But Enrile's election has not been formally certified because of close races for the final positions and because of a court challenge by administration Senate candidate Augusto Sanchez, who is in 25th place.

Ms. Bautista said the PCGG would also file suit against a law firm of Sen. Edgardo Angara, who was elected to the Senate on Mrs. Aquino's ticket.

She said Angara, a friend of Enrile and former president of the University of the Philippines, would not be named personally in the suit.

Ms. Bautista said the suit would allege that Angara's firm acted improperly in assisting Marcos associate Eduardo Cojuangco, a first cousin of Mrs. Aquino.

Ms. Bautista told the Manila newspaper The Independent that the PCGG found documents last year linking Enrile to various questionable business dealings but held off on pursuing the case because he was "a man who had risked his life to topple the dictator."

Syrian first man to go into space with Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soyuz capsule carrying two Soviet cosmonauts and Syria's first man in space streaked into orbit today after a dawn blastoff from the Central Asian steppe, state-run media said.

Syrian Lt. Col. Mohammed Faris, a 36-year-old veteran of two wars with Israel, and spacemen Alexander Viktorenko, 40, and Alexander Alexandrov, 44, were to spend two days circling the earth while Faris photographs his homeland.

Their TM-3 spacecraft is then scheduled to dock with the orbiting Mir space station, where two other Soviet cosmonauts, Yuri Romanenko and Alexander Laveikin, have been living and working for more than five months.

The Soviet-Syrian flight is the Soviet Union's third manned space venture since the Jan. 28, 1986, explosion of the U.S. space shuttle Challenger that killed all seven people aboard and interrupted the American space program.

The joint mission is also a display of Soviet solidarity with Syria, the Kremlin's closest ally in the Middle East.

The rocket carrying the capsule blasted off from the Baikonur Cosmodrome at 5:59 a.m. Moscow time (9:59 p.m. Tuesday EDT), the Tass news agency said in a brief dispatch.

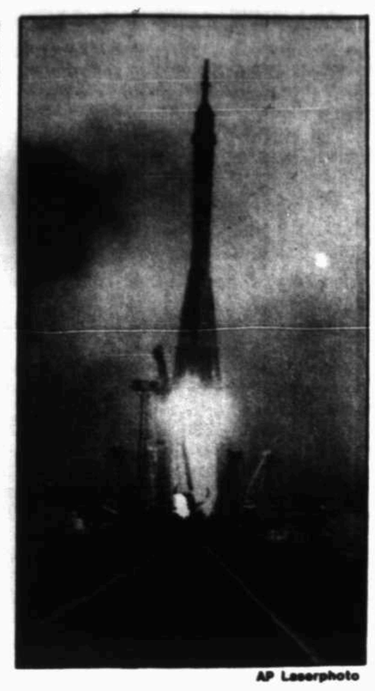

"Everything's normal," one of the Soviet spacemen radioed back to earth in a message broadcast live over domestic Russian-language radio.

Soviet television's morning news program "90 minutes" later showed film of the huge booster rocket rising atop a plume of orange flame into the gray dawn skies over Soviet Kazakhstan.

In the city of Leninsk near Baikonur, banners waved above the streets lauding the ties between Moscow and Syria and calling for their reinforcement, Tass said.

Syrian media have touted the mission as a demonstration that the Arab nation is ahead of its arch-enemy, Israel, in space technology.

Preparations for the flight received almost constant media attention in Faris' homeland for weeks, and Syria's deputy premier and defense minister, Mustafa Tlass, arrived at the Soviet space center Tuesday to be on hand for the launch.

A Soviet TM-3 spacecraft carrying two Soviet cosmonauts and Syria's first space traveler lifts off for orbit from Baikonur, USSR, Wednesday morning.

Tass, quoting from an preflight interview with Faris conducted at Baikonur, said the TM-3 would make three passes over Syria so the Syrian could take photographs.

The pictures, Faris was quoted as saying, will be used "in the interests of geology, of environmental protection. Soil surveys will, specifically, be made in various areas for the needs of irrigation and agriculture."

Tass said the two cosmonauts aboard the Mir, who have been in space since Feb. 6, are growing various plants aboard the space station to study the effect of weightlessness on vegetation.

WORLD IN BRIEF

City recording highest temperature in 115 years

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The Bulgarian city of Rousse recorded a temperature of 107 degrees, the highest in 115 years, the Bulgarian state news agency BTA said Tuesday.

The record temperature was registered about 6 p.m. Monday, BTA said. According to the news agency, which was monitored in Vienna, ambulances responded to 40 heat-related emergencies Monday.

Rousse is on the Danube River about 150 miles northeast of the capital, Sofia.

Sheep fleecing improves

BEIJING (AP) — Chinese herdsmen have discovered there's more than one way to fleece a sheep.

They're putting down their shears in favor of a special spray that allows them to get more wool, the official Xinhua News Agency reported Tuesday.

Herdsmen in the northern province of Heilongjiang are experimenting with a medicinal mixture sprayed on the animals to make them shed their fleeces, the report said.

The method "has proved effective and does not hurt the animals," Xinhua quoted unidentified local officials as saying.

Heilongjiang herdsman have used the method on 100,000 sheep since 1983, the report said. This year they were able to get 27½ tons more wool from 50,000 sheep because the medicine "roots out" the fleeces, adding about a half-inch to each hank, it said.

Xinhua did not say what went into the "specially prepared medicinal mixture."

Forest fire burns bigger

BEIJING (AP) — A huge forest fire in China's northeastern Heilongjiang province burned about 700,000 more acres of land than originally estimated, the official China Daily newspaper reported Tuesday.

The fire, which began May 6 and raged until June 2 in an area near the Chinese-Soviet border, killed 193 people and injured 226.

The paper said Tuesday that 3.2 million acres of land were burned in the fire. Previous official reports had said the blaze affected 2.5 million acres.

Tornado destroys villages

MOSCOW (AP) — A tornado hit two villages in the western Ukraine Tuesday afternoon, killing residents and destroying homes, Tass reported.

The Soviet news agency gave no casualty figures but said "there was loss of human life in Shelvov" in the Lockachi region and 22 houses were demolished in the neighboring village of Granatov.

The Tass report said a broken clock in one of the ruined houses registered the time the tornado struck as 4:45 p.m.

Storm batters South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Landslides and floods killed at least 22 people Wednesday in South Korea and swept away roads, bridges and railroad tracks.

Three people were reported missing and eight injured.

Government officials said they feared that casualty figures would rise as many more people were believed to have been buried in the debris of their smashed homes.

Heavy rains — up to 13 inches in some parts of the peninsula — fell early Wednesday, causing severe flooding that broke bridges and forced evacuations.

The storm hit six days after Typhoon Thelma devastated the southern coast, leaving at least 123 people dead and more than 200 others missing.

Weather forecasters had alerted the country to expect heavy rainstorms as Typhoon Vernon approached the peninsula.

Weathermen said Vernon lost much of its force as it churned across the East China sea but was still strong enough to affect southern South Korea upon arrival sometime Thursday.

Aquino signs land reform decree

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino signed a land reform decree Wednesday covering all agricultural areas but leaving to Congress the decision on how much property landlords may keep.

Presidential assistant press secretary Danilo Gozo said Mrs. Aquino signed the proclamation during a Cabinet meeting and was to hold a news conference later Wednesday.

Landlord associations throughout the country have opposed the plan as confiscatory and some have threatened to organize armed groups to prevent takeover of estates.

"The program shall cover, regardless of tenurial arrangement and commodity produced, all public and private agricultural lands," Gozo said in a telephone interview, quoting from the proclamation.

Details of the proclamation were not immediately available.

Land reform was a major campaign promise of Mrs. Aquino during the 1986 election that pitted her against now-deposed President Ferdinand Marcos.

The proclamation came five days before the newly elected Congress convenes. Members of the legislature had said they plan to pass their own land reform code.

Mrs. Aquino had promised to decree a comprehensive land redistribution program before Congress convenes and she loses sole lawmaking powers.

Israel apparently had own version of arms-for-hostages deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel conducted its own version of an arms-for-hostages deal, bartering weapons for Jews suffering persecution in Iran, Oliver L. North told his superior in a document released at the Iran-Contra hearings.

In a Dec. 4, 1985, memo from the former National Security Council aide to then-National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter, North wrote that Israel sold arms to Iran out of a desire to see the Iran-Iraq war "continue at a stalemate" and "a more moderate Iranian leadership in the end."

He added that whether the United States joined the U.S. arms sale to Iran or not, Israel "will somehow find a way to continue getting their people — Jews — out of Iran through some kind of barter arrangement."

Israel has steadfastly denied its sales were motivated by concern for Iran's beleaguered Jewish community, claiming it acted only to help the United States resolve its hostage problem.

The four-page document includes a description of North's discussions with two Israelis involved in the affair: then-director of the Foreign Ministry David Kimche, and former Defense Ministry director Menachem Meron.

The issue of Israeli efforts to evacuate Jews from Arab or enemy states is highly sensitive in Israel. Reports about the persecution of Iranian Jews or their departure from Iran are subjected to Israeli military censorship.

The number of Jews in Iran has dwindled from some 80,000 at the time of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi's downfall in January 1979 to an estimated 25,000 at the end of last year.

There is no clear picture of how the Jews leave Iran. Officially, Jews are allowed to leave the country for medical treatment or family visits overseas only if they leave property or a cash collateral behind.

Poindexter briefed on Contra gunrunning

WASHINGTON (AP) — The No. 2 official in the Justice Department briefed then-National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter in the spring of 1986 about a politically sensitive criminal investigation into alleged gunrunning to the Nicaraguan Contras, according to congressional testimony.

The disclosure was made Tuesday at the Iran-Contra hearings by Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., who revealed the existence of Justice Department documents showing the department agreed to keep Poindexter abreast of the investigation conducted by the U.S. attorney's office in Miami.

The Iran-Contra congressional investigating committees, as well as independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, are trying to determine whether Attorney General Edwin Meese III or other Justice Department officials in Washington delayed the Miami investigation.

A spokesman for Meese, Terry Eastland, said the attorney general knew nothing about any arrangements to keep Poindexter apprised of the investigation's progress.

In the spring of 1986, the Miami gunrunning inquiry, which now is in the grand jury phase, was taking place while Congress was embroiled in debate over whether to resume military assistance to the Contras.

In addition, at that time, National Security Council aide Oliver L. North was overseeing his secret resupply effort to the Contras, which the Miami investigation had the potential of uncovering.

During Poindexter's testimony before the committees Tuesday, Rodino told the Navy rear admiral that on March 24, 1986, "you were briefed by Deputy Attorney General Lowell Jensen" on the Miami gunrunning investigation.

Rodino asked whether Jensen had given him a copy of a memorandum summarizing the inquiry's status or whether Poindexter had tried to delay the criminal investigation.

Poindexter said he didn't recall receiving the memo and he denied trying to sidetrack the investigation.

The memorandum was prepared by the FBI, according to an administration official who spoke of the matter Tuesday only on condition of anonymity. Rodino said the memo refers to another document on the investigation that "was sent, supposed to have been carried, to Admiral Poindexter. It states on that memo, 'First Floor, West Wing. Carry and wait.'" Rodino did not elaborate.

Rodino disclosed that a cover note attached to Jensen's memorandum says that "DLJ" — a reference to Jensen — "is giving a heads up to the NSC."

The cover note, from then-Assistant Attorney General Stephen Trott to Deputy Assistant Attorney General Mark Richard, asks Richard to "Please get on top of this."

The note from Trott to Richard also says Jensen "would like us to watch over" the investigation and contains the notation "Call Kellner," a reference to U.S. Attorney Leon Kellner in Miami, who was supervising the investigation.

The administration official said someone at the NSC had requested to be kept up to date on the investigation's status. The official said he did not know from whom the request came.

Briefings of the NSC on criminal investigations with international ramifications are standard operating procedure, the administration official added. Richard is in charge of the Justice Department's office of international affairs in the criminal division.

Jensen, now a federal judge in California, was unavailable for comment, and neither Trott nor Richard would comment on the matter.

Poindexter's attorney, Richard Beckler, erupted in anger during Rodino's questioning about the Miami investigation, with the attorney objecting to the fact that his client hadn't been shown the documents earlier. Beckler also said Rodino was leaving the impression that Poindexter had sought to block the criminal investigation.

Poindexter "has answered it several times. He never requested this investigation to end," Beckler said.

The Iran-Contra committees have taken the depositions of several people working in Kellner's office regarding suggestions that Justice Department officials in Washington directed the U.S. attorney's office in Miami to "go slow" in the investigation.

The subject is expected to be covered at length next week when Meese testifies before the committees investigating the secret sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the diversion of proceeds to the Contras.

The documents Rodino referred to suggest top Justice Department officials in Washington were closely monitoring the criminal investigation by the U.S. attorney's office in Miami at least three weeks sooner than has previously been acknowledged.

At a news conference 3½ months ago, Meese said he first raised questions about the Miami investigation last April 13, when he questioned Kellner about it during a trip to Miami because of newspaper accounts about the investigation.

Poindexter was successful in his efforts to delay another Justice Department last October of Southern Air Transport, which was involved in both the shipment of arms to Iran and the resupply effort to the Contras.

Poindexter said he wanted the Southern Air inquiry delayed so the airline's involvement in efforts to free the American hostages in Lebanon would not be disturbed. The delay lasted for nearly four weeks.

Brooklyn building blast leaves four dead, 11 injured

NEW YORK (AP) — Workers using cranes searched early today through the wreckage of three buildings demolished by an explosion and fire that officials say may have been touched off by illegally stored propane tanks.

Police said they did not expect searchers to find any more victims. Four people died and 11 were injured in the explosion that leveled three two-story buildings in Brooklyn. Twelve firefighters and 12 police officers also were injured, officials said.

The blast occurred Tuesday morning after workers accidentally dropped a 20-pound propane canister as it was being taken to the basement of the 18th Avenue Plumbing Supply Co., authorities and witnesses said. The leaking canister fell down the stairs and crashed into others in the basement.

City regulations prohibit storage of highly volatile fuel in a basement.

"On the face of it, it would seem that there is some question as to whether there was compliance with the law in this case," said William M. Feehan, assistant bureau chief of fire prevention. The city is investigating whether the plumbing company complied with other regulations.

It was not known what sparked the blast. Fire Commissioner Joseph Spinnato said it broke a gas pipe in the building and the escaping natural gas fed the fire, said Homer Bishop, the department's chief of operations.

Ari Dubov, 28, said he saw workers unloading containers from a delivery truck. "Somehow, they just, like, banged together, and one of the nozzles broke off. They heard it, and they dropped (the containers) and they said, 'Oh, something's going to happen.'"

Moments later "there was a phenomenal explosion," said Rabbi Eliot Amsel of Congregation Hamaor, across the street from the blast. "Now it looks like London in World War II."

The buildings that collapsed housed the plumbing company, a bakery and several apartments.

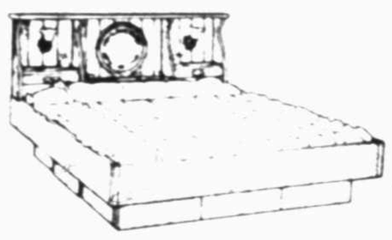

One of the first on the scene, ambulance attendant Volve Herman, said "it was like something you see in a war movie."

"Everybody was there with bare hands, digging, pulling out rubble, pulling out survivors," Herman said.

Reason needed on remote photos

The news media, during the past year, have used images from private "remote sensing satellites" to snare pictures of the Chernobyl nuclear accident and to track the Iran-Iraq war. Imagine, though, TV networks and newspapers with the ability to transmit within minutes high-resolution photographs of military operations — photographs with enough clarity, for example, to show large objects being unloaded from cargo planes.

The Reagan administration and the Defense Department, concerned over the prospects of media-owned satellites transmitting such sharp images, have started trying to limit what the media may transmit. A conflict looms between the First Amendment and national security, even though such satellites are not yet on line and regulations are not official.

Media use of such clear photographs will, in fact, pose foreign policy and national security questions. But the administration is drafting regulations that come dangerously close to prior restraint. The regulations are as unnecessary as they are abhorrent to defenders of the First Amendment.

Consider that the media now have two sources for pictures of such incidents as the Chernobyl disaster — one domestic and one foreign. Even if regulations governing sale of photos by the domestic company were imposed, what would prevent the media from making purchases from foreign suppliers, which are expected to grow in number within the next decade?

Consider, too, that the Soviets already have unrestricted access to their own satellite images, which are far more precise than the high-resolution photos envisioned. Thus, it's only the American public that would be kept in the dark by limiting journalists' access to images.

Furthermore, the Defense Department has asked for "maximum discretion" in determining what kind of satellite pictures would be harmful to the national interest. Giving "maximum discretion" to officials whose natural instinct is to stifle the flow of information is intrinsically dangerous. Government limits on access would almost certainly prompt lawsuits from the news media.

The government is entering a legal, technological, economic and political morass. It ignores the fact that the news media traditionally have respected the Constitution's common defense provision. When lives have been at stake or serious national security issues have been raised, the media have cooperated with the government by withholding information until the danger has passed.

In fact, media access to high-resolution satellite data could have a deterrent effect. Nations would realize that aggressive actions would be seen and reported throughout the free world.

Some secrecy on the part of the government is indispensable to national security. But secrecy, however necessary it may be, is inevitably at odds with freedom. And secrecy and security, despite the predictable concerns of the Pentagon, are not necessarily synonymous.

Before media use of satellite photos becomes routine, before the administration imposes restrictive regulations, we would hope that reasonable people reach a reasonable, informal accommodation.

Whistle blowers still wary of NRC

WASHINGTON — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is belatedly drafting new rules to protect workers who blow the whistle on safety problems and incompetence by officials at nuclear power plants.

Jack Anderson

But the NRC's reputation for blowing the whistle on whistle blowers — exposing them to dismissal or other retaliation by disclosing their identities — is so widely accepted that the commission's latest assurances have not been able to quell suspicion among critics.

In fact, one public interest lawyer, Billie Garde of the Government Accountability Project, is so dubious about the commission's claims of good faith that she refuses to testify about some 500 allegations of deficiencies at the South Texas nuclear power plant near Austin. She is resisting an NRC subpoena to tell what she knows because she's afraid she will be forced to name her informants at the plant, subjecting them to possible reprisal. The Government Accountability Project is a public interest group devoted to protecting whistle blowers.

Garde told our associate Stewart Harris that most of the plant workers and NRC employees who talked to her did so only with the explicit understanding that they would not be identified.

Their fears of retaliation are understandable; NRC officials in Texas have been accused of breaching confidentiality in the past. Charles Atchison, a worker at the Comanche Peak nuclear plant near Dallas, was fired after the NRC broke its promise to him and revealed that he was the source of information about defective welds at the plant. Indeed, according to an NRC internal investigative report, commission officials broke their pledge of protection on three separate occasions.

The last breach occurred as Atchison was walking out of the plant moments after he was fired in April, 1982. The NRC's senior resident inspector, Robert G. Taylor, was overheard to say, "There goes your 1980 alleger," according to the NRC report. The Labor Department subsequently overturned Atchison's firing as "improper," according to NRC files.

Taylor admits he made the comment, but he told us it did not breach the confidentiality agreement, which he says lasted only as long as Atchison worked at Comanche Peak.

More recently, the targets of an internal NRC investigation were given copies of the investigators' highly critical report — which identified their accusers either by name or by the context of the information provided.

The frantic whistle blowers called NRC investigator George Mulley to protest their betrayal. "Most of these individuals felt that the distribution (to targeted officials) was done purposely to expose them to possible future retaliation," Mulley testified at a Government Affairs Subcommittee hearing chaired by Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio.

Mulley was exasperated by the agency decision to distribute copies of the report to the targets of the investigation. But a commission official told us that the informants were not promised confidentiality, and said internal reports are often distributed to regional offices. But sources said such reports would normally go to regional supervisors, not the officials who were subjects of the investigation.

In another case, the NRC Office of Investigation was accused of identifying two welders at the Comanche Peak plant who had made allegations about problems with the fuel pool, where spent fuel rods are stored. According to the individual who relayed their information to the commission, the two welders expected that they would remain anonymous. But when the Office of Investigation published its report, the two welders were identified by name.

As in the earlier case, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission defended its exposure of the whistle blowers on a technicality. In a letter to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, the agency explained that it had never entered into a formal agreement with the two welders to withhold their names.

Footnote: NRC officials assured us that current commission policy is that informants' names will be available only on a need-to-know basis. This, they said, means that officials should avoid using the whistle blowers' names in either documents or discussions.

UNDER THE DOME — It's rare that Senate-White House horse trading over federal judgeships goes public. Usually the bargains are handled quietly, in the manner of Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa. He wants his staff attorney and former chief of staff, Paul Michel, named to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C., and as a member of the Judiciary Committee, Specter's views get respectful attention by the administration.

But several other senators also have their favorites for the influential Washington appellate court, so Specter has had to give a little to get a little. In this case, he's giving up his own choices for two federal appellate judgeships in eastern Pennsylvania and agreeing to accept the Justice Department's recommendations instead. The lucky winners are U.S. District Judge Anthony Scirica and Pennsylvania Supreme Court Justice William Hutchinson.

Neal Manne, Specter's current chief of staff, stressed that Specter did nothing so "crass" as to threaten to hold up the Scirica and Hutchinson appointments, or any others. The senator and the Justice Department just want to find a way "to make everyone happy," Manne told our reporter Gary Clouser.

Satellite shipper

With the space shuttle grounded, so are many American space cargoes. Into the vacuum created by NASA's mismanagement the Soviet Union has now stepped with an offer to launch American communications satellites at cut-rate prices. Can the United States afford to accept it?

For commercial users of space, the offer is almost too good to be true. To put a two-ton communications satellite into geosynchronous orbit, the Russians ask $30 million, about half the going rate. They promise full confidentiality and competitive rates on insurance. "Your Fast Track to the Stars," runs the ad for the Soviet Proton rocket service.

Launching so many of their own satellites probably creates economies of scale permitting the Soviet Union to offer such cheap rates without great loss. It gains hard currency and visibility abroad. Launching American satellites highlights its strength and America's weakness.

That's why the State Department is strongly tempted to block the idea, by invoking a law that bans transfer of satellite technology to the Soviet Union. Another reason is that American rocket makers hope to offer commercial launch services when they resume production in a few years. Users may by then have come to expect rock-bottom Soviet rocket prices.

On the other hand, it's hard to deny American space users the benefit of so cheap a service. The Russians could probably learn little of value from launching American communications satellites, provided they give acceptable guarantees not to pry into the launch packages.

The United States landed in this dilemma because for years both the executive and Congress neglected NASA's disastrous space policy. The space agency wanted, above all, to advance the space shuttle. It discouraged further production of most expendable rockets, forcing everyone to put all his space eggs in the shuttle basket. That left no transport at all after the Challenger disaster.

Both military and commercial space activities could have been crippled by NASA's ploy. But so far the reconnaisance satellites already in orbit have sufficed, and fiber optics have reduced the expected need for communications satellites. America's situation is not so desperate; it can take or leave the Soviet offer. The decision can turn on the state of Soviet-American relations when Moscow makes a specific launch offer.

To be faced with the dilemma at all shows how minimally NASA's shuttle policy has served the national interest. More vigorous efforts to foster a commercial launch industry would be the best way to prevent more such embarrassment.

Iran-contra: A struggle against Communism

WASHINGTON — For the first few days of Admiral Poindexter's testimony, the audience at the Iran-contra hearings was silent and even solemn. But by the end of the first week, when he explained that misrepresenting the truth to the Congress was no "lie" and concealing the facts was no "cover-up," people began to laugh.

James Reston

Later they began to ask how this whole incredible series of events, many of them reckless, most of them devious and a lot of them just plain stupid, could have happened. It takes some sorting out, but herewith a try.

Clearly the Reagan administration was driven by the fear that if it didn't strangle Communism in Nicaragua (population 2.9 million), the Russians would establish a bridgehead in the center of the Western Hemisphere and the virus would spread throughout this critical strategic area. "Our credibility would collapse," the president said, "our alliances would crumble and the safety of our homeland would be in jeopardy."

The other nations of the hemisphere didn't share this apocalyptic view, nor did the Western allies or the Congress, which refused to vote the money to carry it out. But it was shared by Lt. Col. Oliver North, the action officer who testified that if the Congress didn't support his covert operations, the United States might have to send its own troops into the war, and build the equivalent of a Berlin wall along the Rio Grande to keep the refugees out.

So the end of the administration's policy was clear enough, and the means to this end were to arm the contras by secret covert action despite the prohibition of Congress and the questions of some members of the Cabinet. Loyalty to the president rather than to the law was the first consideration.

Poindexter believed that the president's general policy was to help the contras democratize Nicaragua and decided, without asking the president, that Reagan would approve the diversion of Iran arms sale money to the contras. The White House said later that the president would not have approved.

Poindexter's approval dominated North, who said he would go in a corner and stand on his head if the president instructed him to do so. Accordingly, the explanation begins with ideology and loyalty not to the law but to the president himself.

This was justified merely by saying first that the Boland Amendment didn't apply to the staff of the National Security Council, second, that the president didn't know that the NSC was involved in covert operations, so it was all right according to this argument for the administration to mislead the Congress and even to shred the critical damaging evidence in the presence of the Justice Department's "investigators."

It helped, of course, to have Ed Meese at the Justice Department, where he sometimes gave advice to Poindexter and North as attorney general and sometimes as "the president's friend," and gave very little evidence of zeal in seeing that the laws were carefully executed.

The absence of continuity at the NSC could also have contributed to the disaster, since Reagan has had five different NSC chiefs in his first six years in office, not to mention Bill Casey, his campaign manager, as director of Central Intelligence and private adviser to North.

It may also be relevant, not only that the secretaries of state and defense protested "vociferously," according to Poindexter, against the arms-to-Iran deal, and were "cut out of the loop" on the contra deal, but that not a single foreign service officer trained in Middle East or Central American affairs took part in this whole adventure.

Put part of the blame, then, on the valor of ignorance, some of it on the arrogance of presidential popularity, and maybe the rest of it on the myth of the Reagan doctrine which insisted that American money and arms can unilaterally solve the complicated and tormenting social and economic problems of nations beyond our control or understanding.

Maybe the tragedy began first with the corruption of language that "patriotism" belonged mainly to those supporting the president's policies, that "deniability" was more important than "responsibility", that "findings" could justify covert operations before they were "found", that for the president, the buck doesn't stop here but there, that "lives" are more important than "lies", and anyway, that lies are merely "terminal inexactitudes."

In the end, it was at least an odd way to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the Constitution of the United States, which assumed a sharing of powers and responsibility and trust between the executive and the legislature. But you shouldn't be surprised. This administration has been living a life of pretense, cheating and borrowing for over six years. Maybe that's the best explanation of the whole sad affair.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 22, the 203rd day of 1987. There are 162 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 22, 1844, Anglican clergyman William Archibald Spooner was born in London. Spooner, who became Warden of New College, Oxford, gained a reputation for transposing words or parts of words — errors that became known as "spoonerisms."

Spooner died in 1930, but spoonerisms — such as the one Harry von Zell committed on radio when he introduced the 31st president of the United States as "Hoobert Heever" — live on.

On this date:

In 1587, a second English colony — also fated to vanish under mysterious circumstances — was established on Roanoke Island off North Carolina.

In 1796, Cleveland, Ohio, was founded by Gen. Moses Cleaveland.

In 1812, English troops under the Duke of Wellington defeated the French at the Battle of Salamanca in Spain.

In 1916, a bomb went off during a Preparedness Day parade in San Francisco, killing 10 people.

ART BUCHWALD

As hero, Ollie faces fate worse than...

"It's all over for Ollie," Demmick said as he clicked the set off.

"How can you say it's over? The man's a designated national hero."

"That's what I mean. Do you know what it's like to be a national hero?"

Art Buchwald

"I guess it's not all confetti and open convertibles."

Demmick said, "Ollie is going to need every bit of his Marine Corps survival training to get through this one."

"Give me an example."

"Let's start with the advertisers who are willing to pay Ollie anything to hold up a pair of pantyhose on television. Or who want Ollie to do a paper shredder commercial. The man is getting it for what he did."

"Ollie can do it without much trouble."

"And after he's finished doing his commercials, he will have to fight his way through 144 publishers camped out on his lawn. Each publisher wants to sign him up to write a book about what it's like to testify in front of a joint committee of Congress and find God. If Ollie commits for a book and ties himself up for TV commercials, then he's going to have a tough time doing his lectures. North will not only have to do paid lectures, but prayer breakfasts and Rotarian lunches that all designated national heroes must attend."

"I get tired just thinking about it," I said.

"Did I mention that as a designated hero Ollie will have to do the Bob Hope show?" Demmick asked.

"I almost forgot the Bob Hope show," I said.

Demmick told me, "Ollie will really have to suffer as a designated national hero because he'll become the property of the press."

"There is nothing wrong with that," I said.

"Nothing except the average honeymoon for a national hero is now six months. Then the media turn on you and make your life miserable. Once Ollie is thrown to the press he will not only have to justify what he did in Nicaragua, he will also have to prove he didn't commit any hanky-panky in Washington."

"North can do it," I said.

"He could if he didn't have to go to all the White House dinners."

"You mean dinner?"

"No, dinners. The President intends to have Ollie to dinner every night. Reagan doesn't get to see a designated hero very often. But the thing that will really do him in will be the banquets he has to attend in hotel ballrooms all over the nation. North will not only have to listen to thousands of windbags, but he will also have to eat the hotel food. This is cruel and unusual punishment. No person can survive more than one hotel banquet a week. As a designated national hero, North will be expected to attend seven. Do you have any idea what this can do to one's digestive system?"

"Do you think anyone told North what he's in for?"

"I doubt it. The designated hero is the last to know what is going to happen when he becomes one."

"Maybe we should tell North what he's in for."

"It's too late — they've already named three streets and a high school after him."

"North's a good man. He doesn't deserve it."

Demmick said, "What makes America great is that the people are the ones who decide when you destroy evidence whether you will be a designated villain or a designated hero."

Foreign policy venture in Gulf may prove disastrous for Reagan

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — At a time when confusion in U.S. policy toward Iran is on display daily at the Iran-Contra hearings, the Reagan administration is entering another open-ended foreign policy venture in which it may fall victim to a crafty adversary.

Critics say President Reagan's policy of reflagging 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers and escorting them through the so-called "tanker war" in the Persian Gulf is as ill-defined and ambiguous as was the mission of American Marines in Lebanon in 1983. The U.S. force was withdrawn from Lebanon after terrorists believed to have links with Iran blew up the American barracks, killing 241 servicemen.

New dangers may come from terrorists with shadowy links, but no provable ties, to the revolutionary regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The fear cited by Capitol Hill critics such as Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, is that Iran will devise a devilish new way to embarrass "the Great Satan," possibly forcing the United States to curtail the naval presence it established in the gulf since the late 1940s.

The Democratic-controlled Congress was unable either to propose an alternative policy or to block Reagan from carrying out his decision, but lawmakers left themselves in a position to say "I told you so" should anything go wrong.

Reagan cited growing Soviet influence in the gulf to justify the risk. But the heart of the administration position is fear that Iranian pressure on Kuwait and other nominally neutral gulf Arab states could force those nations to curtail their aid to Iraq, and that Iraq could lose the war.

Such a loss would establish Khomeini's revolutionary Moslem regime as dominant throughout the region.

Intelligence analysts believe badly outnumbered Iraqi forces cannot win the war it began in September 1980. After an estimated 1 million casualties, the main battle front lies a few miles inside Iraq, denying Baghdad access to the gulf and jeopardizing the city of Basra.

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman rejected the view that the reflagging would increase rather than smooth tension.

"That's really a misperception of what's happening," Redman said Tuesday. "We have had an American presence in the Persian Gulf for 40 years. The tensions which exist in that region clearly come from the war that has gone on for more than seven years.

"It's the attacks on international shipping in international waters, resulting from that war, which have led to the current situation," he said.

Redman said the American response was defensive in nature. "It is deterrent, it's not provocative, it will take place in international waters, and its purpose is to protect international shipping."

Since the furor over the apparently accidental Iraqi attack on the U.S. frigate Stark last May 17, in which 37 American sailors died, the administration has taken diplomatic and military steps to reduce the threat.

In and around the gulf, the Navy has assembled a force of 15 warships, including the aircraft carrier Constellation near the danger zone at the mouth of the gulf. Smaller ships were to escort the tankers in convoy.

At the United Nations, the administration won approval Monday from the other 14 members of the Security Council for a resolution demanding an end to the war.

President Ali Khamenei of Iran denounced the U.N. resolution as "not worth a penny," and Tehran Radio reported that Iranian Revolutionary Guards seized three Kuwaiti "spy boats" in the northern gulf and detained their crews.

Iran, however, may begin to feel the squeeze if the Security Council adopts a second U.S.-sponsored resolution banning all arms sales to the combatants.

China, a permanent member of the council, is the largest supplier of weapons to Iran. It has sold Tehran about 20 Silkworm anti-ship missiles, which U.S. intelligence sources say are being kept at Bandar Abbas, near the Strait of Hormuz at the mouth of the gulf.

Catastrophic health bill to pass House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House gathered to pass catastrophic health legislation that leaders of both parties agree would be the most dramatic expansion of Medicare since the health insurance program was born two decades ago.

The underlying idea to provide America's elderly with additional protection against the devastating costs of serious illness requiring long hospital stays and huge doctor bills had broad bipartisan support in Congress, as well as White House backing.

However, there were differences between Democrats and many Republicans over how far the plan should go beyond the basic concept laid down in February by President Reagan. There also was a fundamental split over how it should be financed.

Those differences spawned an alternative plan crafted by House GOP leaders that was guaranteed consideration when the Rules Committee acted Tuesday to set the framework for today's debate.

One version or the other was virtually certain to pass, and there was little doubt that the Democrats, given their solid majority, would prevail with the more generous and costly compromise plan crafted by two House committees.

Although differing in some detail, similar legislation already has won unanimous approval of the Senate Finance Committee and awaits Senate floor action soon after the House completes work on its bill.

Differences in the two measures will be resolved by a House-Senate conference committee, and it is there that administration objections to some features of the Democratic-driven plans are likely to be pressed.

Reagan's chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said Tuesday the president would veto the measure if it reached his desk in the form of the Democratic plan taken up by the House.

A major administration concern with the Democratic measures in the House and Senate was that both would inject, for the first time, an element of so-called progressive financing into the fee structure imposed on the nation's 31 million Medicare beneficiaries.

An even greater concern with the House version is that it would add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare for the first time, paying 80 percent of home drug costs after a $500 annual deductible.

While the administration proposed to finance its more modest program by an across-the-board monthly premium increase on all beneficiaries, House and Senate Democrats want to couple a flat premium increase with a sliding-scale "supplemental premium" that would be pegged to income.

Under their approach, about 40 percent of the elderly would bear a major share of the additional costs for catastrophic coverage for all while the 60 percent of the elderly who now pay no income tax would be subject only to a relatively modest monthly increase.

For example, the House Democratic bill calls for a $2.10-per-month Medicare premium increase on each beneficiary in 1989 compared with $8.85 under the GOP substitute.

For an individual with less than $6,000 income, the $2.10 would be the only additional cost under the Democratic plan. Those with higher income, however, would pay proportionately more — with the "supplemental premium" figured in conjunction with their annual income tax return.

'Bouquet bomb' case suspect may not testify

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — One of two women injured by a booby-trapped bouquet told a jury she felt the skin peel from her face in the blast the defense claims was masterminded by the other woman's estranged husband.

"My teeth were so hot I put my hands up and my skin came off in my hands," Pamela Castro testified Tuesday, recalling the Nov. 17 bombing at a General Services Administration office that also injured Melanie Pilaski, 41.

Ms. Castro, 42, was hospitalized overnight and was out of work for 45 days. Mrs. Pilaski also suffered cuts and burns.

Lawyers for Shaun Small, 27, acknowledged in opening statements that he delivered the bomb, but claimed he was the dupe of his employer and homosexual lover, a real estate magnate who wanted to get rid of his wife in a high-stakes divorce.

"Shaun did not know that that flower arrangement had been booby-trapped by Peter Pilaski," said defense attorney Karen Snell. "Peter and Peter alone had the motive to hurt Melanie."

Snell told the U.S. District Court jury that Small, dressed in a bellhop costume, fake beard and wig, delivered the bouquet to Mrs. Pilaski's office.

She said Pilaski built the bomb before leaving for Europe 10 days earlier, gave Small instructions on delivering it, and elaborately rigged the evidence to hide his role.

Pilaski, a German immigrant who was in West Germany when the bomb exploded, has not been charged. He has said he will invoke his right against self-incrimination if called to testify, Assistant U.S. Attorney John Lyons said Tuesday.

Snell said Pilaski was trying to intimidate or eliminate his wife, who filed for divorce in October after 20 years of marriage and was seeking $1.5 million in property.

Small, who lived with the Pilaskis and managed some of their real estate, is charged with manufacturing and possessing unregistered explosives and maliciously damaging government property.

If convicted on all charges, he could receive up to 40 years in prison and $750,000 in fines.

The defense said Small's actions, such as wearing a conspicuous costume and asking a cab driver to take his picture, showed that he was unaware of the bomb.

Elementary students think North 'good guy'

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Students in the Houston Elementary summer school classes of Ms. Chrissie Mee and Ms. Deena Harral show off written testimonies to their conclusions that Lt. Col. Oliver North is in the right.

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

In a class essay assigned last week, Midland sixth grader Shannon Olson said she believed Lt. Col. Oliver North was guilty of nothing because he was simply doing what someone else told him to do.

"I don't know that North did the right thing by helping to get our people back, but he must have really believed in it enough to go behind Congress' back and follow the orders he was given," Shannon wrote.

Overwhelmingly, the fourth, fifth and sixth graders in summer school at Sam Houston Elementary wrote in their assigned essays they thought "Ollie" was a good guy.

Chassi Gilmore, a fifth grader, wrote in her essay she was worried about North being put to death because of his testimony not matching up with that of his superiors'.

"He has two bosses. William Poindexter and William Casey," Chassi wrote.

"William Casey died in December, so he can't testify."

"He helped bring arms to the Nicaraguan Contras in Central America," wrote another sixth grader, Billy Mitchell.

"The Contras are Nicaraguans who are rebelling against their government because it is becoming Communist. North gave them help and arms so that the Communists wouldn't get through Nicaragua into Mexico and into the USA," continued the young Mitchell.

"But some people think the Contras are a bunch of thugs that go around killing innocent people for the fun of it. They don't think that Col. North and the Contras are fighting for freedom," the sixth grade boy penned.

Pretty deep thinking from those who just learned cursive handwriting a couple of years ago.

When the fourth and sixth grade factions of the essay-writing group were interviewed Tuesday morning in their classroom, they showed no signs of a possible problem illustrated during the Iran-Contra hearings.

Democratic Rep. Louis Stokes of Ohio eloquently pleaded with North last week: "What do we tell the children of America who learn about one government in their classrooms yet see an entirely different government on these hearings?"

Of the 19 students interviewed Tuesday, only three said they had lost faith in the government because of a president who said he wouldn't trade arms for hostages, yet did just that.

They concurred "North and Co." had done what they had to do to get the hostages back.

However, all the students said they thought it was bad in principle for the president to do one thing but say another; and all but one thought a president would do it again.

Jimmy Anderson, 13, was alone in his assessment that he'd lost faith in the government because of the ordeal.

"They could tell us there wouldn't be a nuclear war either and there just might be," Jimmy explained.

Most of the childrens' understanding of the affair however, went no further than the switch of arms for hostages.

None of the 19 said they understood what Communism was and didn't really comprehend what a "Contra" was.

As well, not one of the students had ever heard of Fawn Hall, North's dedicated secretary who assisted him in the document "shredding party."

A surprise was that only 10 students believed rhetoric overheard in their parents' conversations and 17 said they had read the newspaper to get the facts about the hearings.

Fourth grader Chad Barden concluded in his essay: "...if he would have told Congress they would not have let North do any of the stuff...even if he did buy arms and talk people into giving him money, he should not be guilty."

"They did not have to give him the money," Chad explained.

As an addendum Tuesday morning, 10-year-old Chad said: "I think Reagan was guilty."

"But I think there should be secrets in the government. If you tell, someone could blurt it out," Chad concluded.

But Brandy Wright, 12, who said she's avidly watched the hearings each day after class, disagreed with her classmate. "I don't think there should be secrets. That's what go Ollie in trouble."

Three students said Reagan should quit his job.

"He's pretending he didn't know. He did a lot of bad things," Jimmy said.

But 14 students said they thought it was a good idea to switch arms for hostages, although Brandy disagreed.

"With the arms we sell them they could use to fight back against us," she said.

However, most followed the classroom platform taken by Andres Urias, 12. "If we hadn't given weapons to Iran, they would have killed the hostages."

Although 17 students said they believed the hearings were serving a purpose, many commented on the boredom aspect of them.

Attorney firmly believes in person's right to fair trial

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jeffrey Hinkley

A fair trial is a basic right guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions.

"Everybody is entitled to a fair trial — whether they are guilty or not — and to due process of law and to equal protection under the law," said Jeffrey Hinkley, a Midland defense attorney.

Hinkley, who is a director of the 1,250-member Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers Association (TCDLA), noted that there are two definitions of guilty: the "street definition" and the "legal definition."

The street definition takes on the appearance of a supposed criminal situation: "I saw him do it" without regard to any motives, extenuating circumstances, state of mind, intent or false inferences.

The legal definition comes into play when the defendant is "actually proven guilty in a court of law."

"There are few things more gratifying (to a defense attorney) than to believe your client is innocent and to have a jury come back and tell you that your client is innocent," said Hinkley, 39.

Hinkley, a graduate of San Antonio's Saint Mary's University law school who has been practicing law in Midland since 1981, said that whether or not he is fully convinced of a client's innocence, he will vigorously defend that client "to ensure that he gets a fair trial."

"We should all do the very best and finest work we can for our clients," Hinkley said. "We (defense attorneys) work for our clients. All (trial) lawyers are officers of the court," he said, "and always (should be) working within the law, of course. No lawyer should ever do anything outside of the law."

And both prosecutors and defense lawyers ideally are all working "to protect those individual fundamental rights" guaranteed by the federal and state constitutions.

And Hinkley said that "every time I'm honored to defend a person accused of a crime, I am in fact protecting and defending the constitutions of the United States and Texas."

"What we are dealing with in criminal cases is the person's freedom," he said, "and, frankly, there are fewer things more sacred than one's liberty."

And in that regard, the defense attorney's responsibility to his client is heightened.

"We as criminal defense lawyers are the last line of defense between the citizen accused of a crime and the state or federal government."

Residents to seek help from flooding

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Residents along County Road 1212 have, for the most part, recovered from the heavy spring rains that flooded their property and turned their neighborhood into a lake-side resort.

But they fear the drainage problem — created by the flow of water from the city limits — has not been solved and will occur again when April showers return next spring.

For the second time in as many months, residents in the low-lying area Monday will appear before county commissioners to plea for some relief from the spring rainfall that flooded their property, contaminated wells and damaged roads.

Louisa Valencia, who has owned a home and a business in the neighborhood for 27 years, said most of the problems occur during heavy rainfall when the runoff from the city flows into Mulberry Lake and, in turn, floods private property.

But the problems don't go away when the water recedes, she added.

Mrs. Valencia said residents now are trying to cope with roads that have been washed out from the rains, leaving them full of giant potholes.

County workers were in the area Monday to patch the holes, spread caliche along the shoulders and across heavily damaged streets.

But Mrs. Valencia said she's worried that another shower will wash away the gravel and leave residents at square one.

"If we had pavement, I don't see why we can't get pavement back," she said.

Bond set for man charged in fatal shooting

From Staff Reports

Bond has been set at $25,000 for a 24-year-old Midland man charged with the fatal shooting of another man in an east side alley Monday night.

Jessie Carl Fennell, Jr., 1911 Nash Ave., was ordered held by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. He was transferred to County Jail this morning, said Cpl. Jim White, Midland police spokesman.

Fennell surrendered at police headquarters about an hour after Irl Connally, 24, of Midland was shot to death in an alley behind 1815 E. Oak Ave. Connally was shot once in the chest with a .38 caliber pistol, police said.

According to police, two men were heard arguing shortly before the shooting.

Police Roundup

Police are also investigating a rash of residential, vehicle, and business burglaries.

At least four residential burglaries were reported to police Tuesday, reports said. Among the items reported stolen were a memory writer typewriter valued at $2,000, an electric keyboard valued at $300, a man's watch valued at $150, a piano-shaped jewelry box valued at $106, a 20-inch bicycle valued at $200 and four firearms valued at $775.

The burglaries were reported in the 4100 block of Crestgate, 200 block of East Pecan Avenue, 2600 block of North Midland Drive, and 3200 block of Preston Drive, police said.

Items valued at more than $1,800 were reported stolen from the Western Auto store, 301 E. Illinois Ave., police said.

Two videocassette recorders valued at $1,200, an AM-FM cassette player valued at $500, a set of speakers valued at $100 and bicycle tubes valued at $20 were stolen from the store between 8 p.m. Monday and 9 a.m. Tuesday, reports said.

A telephone valued at $164 and an AM-FM stereo radio valued at $150 were reported stolen from Lee Freshman High, 1400 E. Oak Ave., police said. Reports said the burglary occurred sometime Tuesday.

Police have identified a suspect in the burglary of the West Texas Care Center, 2000 N. Main St. According to reports, $124 in quarters and a metal change box were missing. The burglary occurred between 8 a.m. July 14 and 3:30 p.m. Tuesday, reports said.

Four vehicle burglaries were also reported to police Tuesday. Among the items stolen were three AM-FM car stereos valued at $610, two 150-watt speakers valued at $249, and an amplifier valued at $300.

The Midland County Sheriff's office is investigating the burglary of a tractor-trailer cab while parked at a local truck stop.

According to reports, a nine-inch color television set valued at $300, a 40-channel citizens' band radio valued at $150, and a radar detector valued at $200 was stolen from a truck parked at Warfield Truck Stop, near the intersection of Interstate 20 and FM 1788.

According to reports, the vehicle was entered by slipping a wire through a partially opened window.

It's OK to throw tantrum as long as you feel silly afterward

Ott

Having just finished reading the unauthorized biography of Frank Sinatra, entitled "His Way," it has dawned on me that I don't possess much of a temper.

I get mad occasionally, mind you, but my outbursts tend to pale when compared to Frankie's.

When I get irritable, I kick the trash can and say something terribly crude like, "Gosh darn it!" in a loud voice. Three or four minutes later I feel extremely foolish for my despicable behavior and apologize profusely to anyone who happened to be within earshot of me during my little tantrum.

When Sinatra exploded, on the other hand, the whole world knew it. He was a beast.

And, he didn't apologize, either.

If the book's author is to be believed, he would slap women, call them horrible names in public, destroy valuable private property, order former friends and associates physically intimidated by his bodyguards and break into violent screaming matches with any member of the press who dared to cross him in print or over the nation's airwaves.

Reading the book, I came away with mixed feelings. It has always been my impression that a temper can be a good thing. It allows a person to get rid of pent-up frustrations and emotions. If handled properly, a modest temper tantrum can be good for your health.

People who express themselves freely probably run a smaller risk of experiencing stress-related illnesses. They get mad, and then it is over.

Still, Frank Sinatra took this process too far.

For one thing, he didn't just become angry and then get over it.

He held a grudge — in some cases for years, or until the other person finally died.

What is needed here, obviously, is a middle ground — a list of times and places when it is OK to throw an ugly tantrum. The only rule is that you must feel terribly silly after creating a scene and immediately apologize to everyone who saw or heard your outburst.

One final note: You must remember that you are not allowed to actually hit anyone during your explosion, though it is all right to think about it. Also, it is acceptable to curse loudly and to kick various objects that happen to be your way when you decide to get mad.

Ready? Good. Please take notes.

1) You flush your commode and it overflows on the bathroom floor, ruining the carpet and creating a smell in your apartment that won't go away for three weeks.

2) Some jerk swerves in front of your car without signaling first.

3) You miss an easy three-foot uphill putt on the 18th green, thus losing $10 to an opponent you have always secretly despised.

4) Your wife bursts into uncontrollable laughter when she catches you admiring your physique in the bedroom mirror.

5) Your wife bursts into uncontrollable laughter when she catches you pretending to play an imaginary guitar in front of the bedroom mirror while an old Elvis Presley song blares on the stereo.

6) Your snooty wife calls you a "neo-Nazi" and then bursts into uncontrollable laughter when you express your political views at a cocktail party.

7) Your waiter performs an indignant pirouette, mutters something tacky under his breath and waltzes away from your table after you order catsup with your $22.50 steak.

8) You are driving alone on a narrow stretch of highway in western New Mexico — miles from anything — when suddenly your oil light comes on.

9) You are having a drink and meet a charming young woman. You start making your move and she seems semi-receptive. You become a little more bold and she doesn't slap you, so you figure things are looking good. Then this Neanderthal man approaches you from the rear and places his hairy paw on your left shoulder. The woman glances at you, smirks and says, "I'd like you to meet my fiance, Dr. Doom. He's a professional wrestler."

10) It is fourth and goal in the Super Bowl. Your team has the ball. Only seconds remain in the game. Tension fills the air. The players break the huddle and head for the line of scrimmage. The crowd roars. Then, without warning, the network interrupts the game for a public service announcement telling you not to drink and drive.

Idea for class turns into business

DENTON, Texas (AP) — Sue Schafer could call herself the "Betsy Ross" of Denton and almost get away with it.

While Mrs. Ross probably got more notoriety than money from her flag making — if indeed she ever made a flag — Mrs. Shafer has done the opposite. For her, flags are not only a hobby but a business and a way to learn about that most American of endeavors — entrepreneurship.

Mrs. Shafer is the owner and operator of Flags Unfurled. Though she primarily is a distributor, she makes flags, too.

She says she got involved in flags largely because of her husband Rollie's interest in history. His involvement in "living history" re-enactments required flags, some of which she has made.

But a business class at North Texas State University, where she is a graduate student, prompted her to really begin waving flags. "It started as a business idea based on a hobby," Mrs. Schafer said. "I haven't been a collector of large quantities of flags, but I've always been interested in flags."

While taking a course in entrepreneurship she developed the idea of becoming a distributor of flags. During last year's sesquicentennial, she got swept up in the historical fervor and decided to make one.

She made her prize flag, a replica of the New Orleans Greys flag, last year. The original was carried into the Alamo by volunteers of the First Company of New Orleans Greys, who had come to aid Texas in its fight against Mexico.

Although other flags were at the Alamo, this was the only one to survive, and consequently is of great historical interest to collectors, known as vexillologists.

The original flag is in Mexico, where it was carried by Santa Anna to be displayed as a battle trophy.

AP Laserphoto

Sue Schafer, owner and operator of Flags Unfurled in Denton, shows off the New Orleans Greys flag. Schafer says she got involved in flags largely because of her husband's interest in history.

"No one's sure where it is at this point," she said. "It hasn't been well taken care of," she added and pointed out a recent photo which shows a badly deteriorating flag.

To reproduce the flag, Mrs. Schafer studied a photo of it made in the early 1960s while the lettering still was fairly legible. She read historical accounts of the battle and checked as many references as she could find.

"Our goal was authenticity" she said. To achieve that goal she spent more time determining the correct materials, lettering and proportions than doing the actual sewing.

During her research she learned not only about the flag itself but also a lot about textiles. "I had to find out what the flag was made of (silk), what the exact color was. Some said blue, others said azure blue. So I had to decide what azure blue meant...I didn't know silk was hard to find. I didn't realize it came in so many qualities and grades."

She hired a local artist to do the lettering and silk-screening. The artist discovered the type for the lettering on the original flag no longer existed and had to make his own.

Also, during her research, she discovered the design was slightly off-center on the original and that it had a pole hem, or a hem which wraps around the pole on which the flag was carried.

Only one other company that she knows of has reproduced the Greys flag. Theirs, however, is made to appear as the flag might have looked after battle, and not as it did in its original state.

"When I saw theirs I thought I could do a better job, and I think I have," she said.

Others think so too. She has sold the Greys flag to Alamo enthusiasts from as far away as New York and Minnesota. The Sons of the Republic bought one and displayed it at the annual candlelight ceremony at the Alamo March 6.

Because so much research and work went into the flag, it is the most expensive one she sells. "We market this as an artist would a painting. It's a collector's item."

The collector's edition is $296 and includes the off-center design. The regular edition has the design centered and sells for $233.

Her newest flag, the national colors of Mexico, is a companion to the Greys flag. "It is a companion in that the eagle in the center (of the Mexican flag) is of the era (of the Greys flag)," she said.

She originally made the Mexican flag for her husband's living history activities, she said, explaining that he portrays the Mexican calvary as well as U.S. troops.

In addition to making flags, she distributes them for three companies. She also sells flag poles and advertising flags.

She says she plans to stick with the distributing end of her business more than manufacturing for now. "I'm still learning what I want to make, who I want to deal with. I'm still testing the waters."

Since she's been in the business, her interest in and love of flags has grown. "Flags serve a lot of purposes," she said. "They are a rallying point, they have a lot of symbolic meaning.

"I don't know if you can liken it to music, but there's a common language (with flags) that people understand. I rather enjoy them."

NORTH

"Everyone I talk to says they don't care about it," Chad said. "It's getting pretty boring," said Jeremy Delozier, 12.

And though Brandy watches daily, she's upset the hearings are on many different channels.

Ten students wanted to go into politics after watching the hearings and at least one thinks North has a political career ahead.

Wrote Chris Martinez, a fourth grader, "Lt. Col. Oliver North should be elected for president because he is a good man...and is giving the money to the Nicaraguans.

"My opinion is that he is a cool guy."

FLOOD

County Commissioner Scott Welch has acknowledged that a problem exists, but has also maintained that he's not sure what to do about it because the neighborhood rests in a natural draw designed to catch runoff.

Welch said the only possible solution is to dig a channel to divert the overflow. But he warned a channel could cause more problems if the water is allowed to flow naturally through the neighborhood.

Mrs. Valencia said most residents want to work with the county to come up with some kind of a solution to the problem. She added that she's willing to pay part of the cost of ensuring that the flooding is stopped.

"We understand we've had a lot of rain, but we also understand that the county hasn't dug a channel to divert that water," she said.

Officer invents purse with gun compartment

FORT WORTH (AP) — An entrepreneur and reserve sheriff's officer has devised a purse with a secret gun compartment for women law enforcement officers who have to carry a gun while in plain clothes.

Improving on a borrowed invention, Sarah LePere, a Dallas County reserve sheriff's officer manufactures a purse that can be pulled open quickly, revealing the weapon.

"A lot of law officers are required to carry a weapon when they're off duty," LePere said this week at the Sheriff's Association of Texas conference, where she has a booth.

"If they carry a purse, the weapon is going to wind up at the bottom," she said.

Woman supervises SMU freshmen, prisoners

DALLAS (AP) — Word gets around quickly among Southern Methodist University freshmen this particular dormitory director is someone to be reckoned with.

To some, it's the authoritative way she carries herself. To others, it's her no-nonsense management style. And to others, it's the fact that, from time to time, this grandmotherly figure packs a .357-Magnum pistol with her name engraved on it. "Capt. Joan Waldrip."

You see, when she isn't managing the four freshmen residence halls on the SMU campus, the 56-year-old Mrs. Waldrip puts on the uniform of a Dallas County Sheriff's Department reserve officer and manages a dormitory of another sort: the Dallas County Jail.

Mrs. Waldrip is among more than 120 Dallas County residents who volunteer several hours each month to help the sheriff's office in a variety of ways — from working patrol duty to supervising visitations at the county jail.

Mrs. Waldrip, who has been a reserve officer for 11 years, was named the department's first reserve captain in 1980.

For the last 19 years, Mrs. Waldrip has been residence hall manager at SMU, where, with help from graduate student dorm directors, she supervises four freshman dormitories "physically and fiscally," she says. For instance, she oversees maintenance of the buildings, student transfers and bill collecting, among other things.

She does not live on campus, however. "Oh my, no. I got these gray hairs from just being there during the day," she says.

Mrs. Waldrip says she enjoys the job, although freshmen tend to be a bit uncontrollable, especially on those occasions when they get intoxicated. "It's incredible how many ways they've come up with to throw up," she says. "And in so many places, too."

As a reserve captain, Mrs. Waldrip spends most of her time in administrative work. But she says she sometimes misses the more direct duties of a line officer. So on a recent Monday night, in a bit of a change of pace, she helped process visitors into the jail at the Dallas County Government Center, where all female prisoners and some male prisoners are held.

"You'll have to check with the turnkey," she said to two men seeking admittance. One of them carried a paper sack. "No," the captain said, rummaging through the contents of the sack, "you can't take these things in the jail. The only things allowed are underwear and gowns, and they have to be cotton."

About 100 visitors filed through the metal detector at the entrance to the jail. Some knew the routine having been there many times before, while others were confused.

"You frequently have people coming up here who obviously don't belong," Mrs. Waldrip said. "It really tears some of them up. Sometimes the women will bring their purses and purses aren't allowed in the jail. They can't take them past this door.

That means they have to leave them out here (in the waiting room) and we can't be responsible for watching them."

The pistol with her name on it was a gift from the 31 reserve officers she supervises, one of whom happens to be her husband, Ben, a reserve sergeant. The Waldrips joined the reserve force at the same time at the urging of another couple who were members of the reserve.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

MCHD will consider setting date for election

From Staff Reports

Midland County Hospital District directors will consider Thursday setting a date for the 1988 election of two new board members, the agenda said.

Although a date may be set, directors do not have to decide on a method of election until 120 days before the actual election date, said a Midland Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Tuesday.

Controversy brewed earlier in the year when hospital district directors voted to postpone selecting a method of election until 120 days before the day.

Minority rights groups vowed to sue the district unless a seven single member-district system of election was chosen by directors.

However, the redistricting bill, as authored by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, stated directors would have a choice of anything from a four single member-district three at-large system of election to the "7-0" plan.

The meeting will be held in the MMH medical staff conference room on Thursday at 2 p.m.

Class of '47 plans reunion

From Staff Reports

Midland High School Class of '47 will celebrate its 40th reunion Friday and Saturday.

Registration and hors d'oeuvers will begin at 7 p.m. Friday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

On Saturday, activities begin with a dutch treat breakfast from 9-10:30 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Country Villa. A bus tour of Midland is planned for early afternoon. Happy Hour will be at 7 p.m. with a buffet dinner and dance to follow at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Classmates are expected to attend from California, New Mexico, Ohio, Arizona, New York, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana and from various cities in Texas.

Frank Monroe of Dallas (former superintendent) and Harlan Howell of Midland (former principal) are expected to attend.

Also, former students from the Classes of '46 and '48 are invited to attend.

Afghan leaves MMH

From Staff Reports

Mohammad Jafar, 28, one of two Afghan freedom fighters who received medical treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital earlier this month was discharged Monday, a hospital spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Jafar and Mohammad Alam, also 28, had orthopedic surgery in Midland free of charge as a result of a humanitarian program based in Washington D.C.

Alam, who had more serious surgery, is expected to be released in two to three weeks, said Lisa Ball, an MMH spokeswoman.

Jafar flew to Dallas Monday and will remain there until August when he will fly to Washington and then return to the Afghan-Soviet war in his homeland.

Fire damages restaurant

The Midland Fire Marshal's office is investigating the cause of a blaze that damaged a restaurant early this morning, according to fire department reports.

HINKLEY

Hinkley noted that "It's the state's burden to prove guilt...beyond a reasonable doubt, and there is no obligation whatsoever for the accused to prove his innocence."

However, sometimes the defense is compelled take the aggression to refute the accuser's allegations and essentially to prove the defendant's innocence.

"Although it is not our burden to do it, it has almost gotten to that point," Hinkley said.

Many times, he noted, disinterested observers or even jurors may "assume guilt" or presume that the accused "must have done something wrong." Otherwise, goes the reasoning, why would the accused have been indicted — charged with an offense?

But not all jurors assume guilt and then await to be convinced of a defendant's innocence.

"We've got those basic rights."

Hinkley was mindful of 18th Century English jurist Sir William Blackstone's academic view of justice: "It is better that 10 guilty persons escape than one innocent suffer."

Hinkley, who said he considers himself a "very conservative individual," said that "the United States has the finest system of government and judicial system in the world. I am a staunch supporter of the United States and Texas constitutions."

House tax battle may leave political scars

AUSTIN (AP) — The House tax battle has left some political scars, but it remains to be seen whether there will be repercussions at the ballot box.

Some members predicted one casualty will be the good relations between Democrats and Republicans in the House. The GOP members are upset about a Democratic trap aimed at making Republicans vote for the tax bill.

Democrats are upset that Republicans escaped the trap and got away without voting for the tax bill that ended the special session Tuesday.

"You're seeing a transformation from the good old boy network to partisan politics. And if I come back next session I will encourage the speaker to run this House strictly on partisanship," said Rep. Eddie Cavazos, D-Corpus Christi.

Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, downplayed talk about increased partisanship. Texas speakers, though always Democrats, have traditionally given committee chairmanships to Republicans.

"If I punished every committee chairman that didn't vote the way I wanted them to I wouldn't have any committee chairman left," Lewis said.

"Politically, no one got the best of this deal. People don't understand politics. Half of them think they got underfunded. The other half thinks they got overtaxed," he said.

Lewis said House members who voted for the tax bill were "gutsy" and would face political heat for doing so.

"That's one they will have to spend thousands and thousands of dollars defending in the next political campaign," he said.

The tax trap that failed was the so-called "doomsday clause" which would have cut funds to districts represented by anti-tax lawmakers. Democrats dropped doomsday in order to get the tax-and-budget work done before the midnight end of the special session.

"We let them off the hook. There's no question about it," Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston and a doomsday drafter, said. "It was more important that we continue to provide an adequate level of services to our people and not worry about the assigning of blame."

When doomsday was removed, Republicans and conservative Democrats were able to vote against the tax bill, which passed 78-70, but for a separate measure that put the tax bill into immediate effect.

Republicans "did not have the political courage to vote for a tax bill straight up but instead insisted on a procedural maneuver to sneak their funding vote by the people," said Texas Democratic Party Chairman Robert Slagle.

"The Republican House members are still the free-lunch bunch who want the benefit of state spending, especially in their districts, without having the guts to vote for a tax bill to fund essential state services," he said.

But Rep. Randy Pennington, R-Houston, said it was a matter of not voting to tax Texans to cover excessive state spending.

"What we said is these are (Democrats') programs. You want this runaway government spending. We don't feel like a $6 billion tax bill at this time is appropriate," he said.

Mattox rules changes must be made in way UT offers Bible classes

AUSTIN (AP) — An arrangement under which Bible courses have been offered in the University of Texas system must be discontinued to comply with an opinion by the attorney general and to avoid "excessive entanglement" between government and religion, a system official says.

An attorney who has been working with religious groups that support the courses told the Austin American-Statesman Tuesday he was surprised by the changes that have been ordered and said he thinks they are not required by the attorney general's opinion.

James Duncan, executive vice chancellor for academic affairs, told university officials in a letter Monday that UT must discontinue all official connection with Bible courses taught by instructors who are selected or paid by religious groups.

Duncan also said transfer credit will be limited to religious studies courses offered by accredited institutions.

The changes will result from an opinion issued by Attorney General Jim Mattox in May in response to a request by the UT System for a clarification of a 1985 opinion by Mattox, Duncan said.

The courses had continued to be offered at three UT campuses, in Austin, Arlington and El Paso, pending the attorney general's reply to the UT System request.

Under procedures dating to 1919, UT-Austin has offered credit for courses taught by instructors who hold Bible chairs affiliated with the Biblical Studies Association, an off-campus, interdenominational group.

The courses were listed in the UT-Austin catalog and class schedule and administered through the College of Liberal Arts according to the rules that apply to regular university courses.

Holders of the Bible chairs have been approved by UT-Austin but have been paid by denominations that belong to the Biblical Studies Association.

The instructors are not considered university faculty members, but they are listed in the campus directory and have faculty identification cards.

Similar Bible courses have been offered at UT-El Paso and UT-Arlington, as well as at a dozen or more other state universities, but details of how the courses are administered vary at each campus.

The attorney general's opinion said state universities may continue to give credit for religion courses offered by religious organizations if the universities "operate within constitutional guidelines."

The opinion said those guidelines include requirements that the courses be secular in nature, do not "advance or inhibit religion," and "be offered in a manner that avoids excessive entanglement between government and religion."

In the opinion, Mattox said one form of "excesive entanglement" has been the practice of identifying the Bible teachers as university instructors. But he indicated that a university could continue to give credit for the courses if that practice were dropped.

"It would be unfortunate if controversy over the professional status of these outside-religious-studies instructors were placed above the value of the programs to students," Mattox wrote.

Duncan's letter to the UT presidents rules out the option of giving credit for the courses after they have been separated from the universities.

"While we appreciate the alternatives detailed by the attorney general as legally permissible, one of the preferred solutions, the grant of transfer credit for a course offered by a religious organization, is not available to components of the University of Texas System," Duncan wrote.

"As is the case with most institutions of higher education, the university does not accept academic credit from non-accredited institutions," he continued.

William Hilgers, an Austin attorney who represents Friends of the Biblical Tradition, a group that has supported continuing the Bible courses, said he thinks the UT System has misinterpreted the attorney general's opinion.

"This goes far beyond the attorney general's ruling," Hilgers said. "I'm sure this will come as a complete shock to supporters of the courses. This is going to bring major changes, and I don't understand how the university draws these conclusions from the ruling."

Attorney says Tower's wife not entitled to alimony

Tower

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. John Tower's wife is worth more financially than he is and therefore isn't entitled to alimony, his lawyer says.

However, Lilla Burt Cummings Tower, 58, claims in her divorce suit that she needs the payments because she is unemployed, a contention Tower ridiculed in court papers.

Tower, 66, the Texas Republican who chaired the presidential review panel on the Iran-Contra affair, is accused of "marital misconduct" and is being pressed by his wife of 10 years to provide alimony payments.

Neither Tower nor his wife were present at a hearing on the matter Tuesday.

Still unresolved is the question of whether the two sides will go ahead with extensive discovery procedures, in which each side would air the other's shortcomings. Both attorneys said they needed more time before seeking a final court decision on discovery.

Ms. Tower's financial statements show her net worth is in excess of $2 million, many times that of the defendant, according to papers filed by Tower's attorney, Kenneth Lyons.

"Under such circumstances, the plaintiff cannot seriously contend she is entitled to alimony," Lyons said.

Ms. Tower is also asking the court to honor a prenuptial agreement, which Tower signed, giving her ownership of all property owned by her prior to their marriage, including the Washington house where she resides.

In addition, she wants the court to permit her attorney, David Povich, to take statements from at least one woman, Estil "Dottie" Hyser of Dallas, to "establish the relationship between the witness and defendant with respect to cause of the breakup of the marriage."

Tower's attorneys countered that the only purpose in taking testimony from Ms. Hyser would be to harass and embarrass her and the former senator to coerce concessions.

Superior Court Judge Sylvia Bacon agreed to give the attorneys more time to work out an agreement between their clients, and suggested the names of several judges who would be willing to help guide them.

Alligator wanders onto driveway

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman was surprised when a neighbor called her to say there was an alligator in her driveway.

And what an alligator. The 8-foot-3 creature weighing about 230 pounds had made its way into Hazel Farrill's drive on Monday. She believes it came from a canal behind her home.

Minutes before her neighbor called, Mrs. Farrill had heard her Norwegian elkhound, Princess, barking. But Princess barks a lot, she said, so she didn't pay much attention.

"I think that thing must have been after our dog," she said. "He had walked up the driveway, and the dog was in the back yard on the other side of the redwood fence."

Texas Parks and Wildlife Department authorities sent a game warden and a three-man crew to the house. The rope they brought was too small, but a neighbor had a bigger rope that they used to catch the animal. It was taken to a wildlife management area near Port Arthur and released.

"He was a pretty nice feller until they roped him," she said. "Then he put up a fight."

Firemen may wear rubber gloves

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston fire chief is endorsing a recommendation to issue rubber gloves to firefighters to protect them from diseases that may be transmitted through victims' blood.

Dr. Paul Pepe, the fire department's medical examiner, said the primary reason for the gloves is to protect the firemen from highly contagious hepatitis, which several firefighters contracted, apparently after handling a person infected with the disease. He said some of the requests also stemmed from concern about AIDS.

Pepe, who said he has been warning personnel of contact with blood for some time, said although many personnel have disregarded the warning, there has been an increase lately in the number of firemen not assigned to ambulance duty who request gloves.

Chief Robert Clayton says although gloves weren't budgeted for 1988, he will find the funds to purchase them.

A police officer's union recently asked the Houston Police Department to provide gloves to protect officers in situations where they would have to deal with blood. A spokesman for the union said no action has been taken on the request.

Chopper, patrols tracking oil slick

SABINE PASS (AP) — A helicopter and beach patrols were being used to track an oil slick in the Gulf of Mexico, according to the Coast Guard.

"The sheen is 20 yards by six miles," said Coast Guard spokesman John Holmes. "We have crews patrolling the beach between High Island and Rollover Pass with cleanup operations ready to begin at the beach."

The slick, at least 100 barrels of light crude oil, began about 6 a.m. Monday when a tank overflowed at an offshore rig, about five to eight miles offshore of Sabine Pass, owned by Energy Exploration Co. of High Island, Holmes said.

The slick then began to drift toward shore between High Island and Rollover Pass, Holmes said.

"There were 4- to 5-foot waves with 40-knot winds. The slick seemed to be breaking up," Holmes said. "We think that it might not come ashore at all. It is dissipating in the Gulf right now."

Mattox opposed to dump site

AUSTIN (AP) — State Attorney General Jim Mattox has asked federal authorities to eliminate the Texas Panhandle as a possible site for a high-level nuclear waste disposal dump.

Mattox said Tuesday that a Friday ruling by the First U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston invalidated the Environmental Protection Agency's guidelines for disposing of nuclear waste.

The EPA standards were used by the Department of Energy to select possible sites for the nuclear waste dump, including a site in Deaf Smith County in the Texas Panhandle.

Mattox said the court ruled the EPA standards did not give enough protection to groundwater resources and that the public had not had enough opportunity to review and comment on the standards.

"Any further activity on these sites is unjustified and would be a waste of both money and time," Mattox said in a letter to Secretary of Energy John Herrington. "This is especially so at the Texas site where ground water is one of such importance."

Mattox said the dump would have been placed directly below the Ogallala aquifer in Deaf Smith County, which provides water for drinking and irrigation.

Blake again elected pro tem

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. Roy Blake is claiming new honors, as the most-elected assistant presiding officer of the Senate.

For the fifth time, the Nacodoches Democrat was sworn as Senate president pro tempore, who also is third in line as governor of the state.

He was first sworn in at the end of the regular session. "We've been so busy I have not had a chance to have a governor-for-a-day celebration," Blake said Tuesday night, "but this time I'm going to have it on Oct. 17."

It is traditional for the Senate pro tem's friends and supporters to honor him with governor-for-a-day festivities at some time during his term.

"Actually I've already served as governor of Texas," Blake said. "The governor and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby want off out of state on July 4th and left me in charge. I sat by the telephone all weekend waiting for an important call. All I got was a request from a constituent who wanted to be named a Texas Navy admiral."

Wrongful death lawsuit settled

DALLAS (AP) — A lawsuit seeking $7.4 million in the death of an undocumented Mexican worker in a construction trench collapse tentatively has been settled out of court for $250,000, officials said.

In the suit filed by his parents and wife, attorneys said Jesus Albarran would have earned $288,000 had lived and included that amount in their demand for compensation.

Attorneys for the employer and the general contractor argued that the worker would have been forced to leave the country had he lived, drastically reducing the value placed on his life.

Albarran, 24, an employee of Weaver Construction Co., was buried in an 18-foot trench in north Dallas where he was installing a sewer line. He was trapped beneath tons of dirt when the trench walls collapsed on him April 8, 1985.

Fire ant bites lead to man's death

DALLAS (AP) — A man bitten by five or six fire ants suffered an allergic reaction, lapsed into a coma and died, doctors at a Dallas hospital say.

Gary Weidner, 43, of Carrollton died Monday night at Baylor University Medical Center. His wife, Sue Weidner, said doctors told her the ant bites caused an allergic reaction that led to her husband's death.

A field agent for the Dallas County medical examiner's office said, however, that the cause of death would not be determined until an autopsy is performed.

Weidner, owner of a Carrollton computer business, was working in his yard July 12 when he was bitten as he weeded the flower bed, his wife said.

"He was wearing shorts, and when he kneeled down, five or six ants bit him on his knees," Mrs. Weidner said. "He came inside and five minutes later said he felt like he was going to pass out."

Spanish monarchs to visit Texas

MADRID, Spain (AP) — King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia plan a late September visit to the American Southwest, where the first European settlers were 16th century Spaniards, the daily newspaper El Pais said.

The newspaper also said Tuesday the Spanish monarch would meet with President Reagan in Washington on Sept. 25 before starting out on an eight-day tour of of Texas, New Mexico and California.

The royal tour was to stop in Houston and San Antonio, Texas; Santa Fe, New Mexico, and Los Angeles, Monterrey and San Francisco, California.

A visit last May by Juan Carlos and Sofia to the U.S.-administered commonwealth and former Spanish colony of Puerto Rico created a large outpouring of pro-Hispanic sentiments.

Inmate receives stay of execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A former laborer scheduled to die by lethal injection had his third execution date stayed by a federal judge.

Jesus Romero Jr., 22, had been scheduled to die early Wednesday.

Last Friday, he was granted a stay of execution by U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela in Brownsville, according to Texas Department of Corrections spokesman David Nunnelee.

Two other execution dates for Romero were stayed by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Romero was convicted of capital murder along with two other men in the December 1984 stabbing and beating death of of 15-year-old Olga Perales near San Benito.

TDC to accept inmates again

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas Department of Corrections was to reopen today after a one-day closure caused by having too many inmates.

On Monday, the prison system exceeded its federally-mandated 95 percent of capacity for the 16th time this year. The prison system released 153 inmates Tuesday bringing its inmate count to 38,438, or 94.96 percent of capacity, said spokesman David Nunnelee.

Two hatchet-wielding assailants arrested after violent crime spree

DALLAS (AP) — Two men were jailed today in connection with a lakeside crime spree in which two teenage girls were raped, a man was beaten and three other people were attacked or robbed by hatchet-wielding assailants.

"It was like something out of a horror movie," said Edward G. Mulder, 36, who was fishing Monday night when he was confronted by the men.

Mulder told police he and Jack Griffin, 52, were fishing when the men approached him, said they were police officers and demanded to see his fishing license.

He said the men pulled out their wallets and he and Griffin were beaten and robbed. Mulder said he was beaten with a hatchet and kicked in the head.

Authorities said the assailants were joined by two companions and approached a van where two 24-year-old men, a 16-year-old girl and a 17-year-old girl were talking.

The victims said the men first identified themselves as police officers, but immediately pounced on them, beating and robbing them. The girls were then dragged to a secluded area, where they were raped.

"Before I realized what was going on, I had a hammer up side my head, and I was on the ground," one of the men told police. "When I came to, I found (my roommate) in a ditch."

"(One of the girls) was walking around in a daze," he continued. "She was crimson, solid red from the blood."

"I remember them (the girls) hollering, 'Please don't hit me any more,' " he said. "They were just begging not to be hit, just begging to stop."

One of the girls told officers her assailant threatened to kill her with the hatchet while the other girl said her attacker told her he would kill her.

Mulder, who had remained on the ground where he was attacked, said he could hear the girls screaming.

"You're right in the middle of the city, there are people screaming for their lives and there's nobody to help," Mulder said. "It's like you're on and island. It was a helpless feeling."

"...(One of the girls) was walking around in a daze. She was crimson, solid red from the blood. I remember them (the girls) hollering, 'Please don't hit me any more.' They were just begging not to be hit, just begging to stop."

— Victim of crime spree

One of the two girls managed to run about 100 roads to a busy street where she finally managed to flag down a car after several motorists ignored her.

"She said she couldn't get anybody to listen," the girl's father told the Dallas Times Herald. "People would just laugh and point."

The men in the car the girl flagged down took her to a convenience store where she summoned police.

Dallas police arrested two brothers Tuesday inside a pickup truck stolen from one of the victims. Authorities said Timothy Gaines, 27, and Steven Lamont Gaines 21, both of Dallas, were being held on investigative charges of aggravated robbery and aggravated sexual assault.

Bond for each brother was set at $100,000 for each of the four counts against the men, for a total of $400,000 each, a spokesman at the Dallas County jail said.

Additionally, the elder Gaines was being held on $610 cash bond on charges of possession of marijuana, speeding, no driver's license and failure to appear in court. The traffic counts had been filed in Irving.

The younger Gaines was also being held on a probation violation for burglary, with no bond set on that count, officials said.

Three generations of family have served as Kleberg County sheriff

DALLAS (AP) — For 62 of the past 74 years, there has been a Jim Scarborough as Kleberg County sheriff, a tradition that spans three generations in the rural county that is home to the sprawling King Ranch.

Jim Scarborough III is sheriff now. His grandfather, Jim Scarborough Sr., who became the county's first elected sheriff in 1913, was famous for his fierceness.

"He wore his badge heavy, and he wore his gun heavy," Scarborough III said. "My grandfather solved a lot of big cases, and he killed a lot of men."

Scarborough III's father, Jim Scarborough Jr. was the antithesis of his father, becoming famous for never wearing his badge or his gun in 50 years of law enforcement, his son said.

Scarborough III recently attended the 109th annual conference of the Sheriff's Association of Texas, a three-day event at the Tarrant County Convention Center with 129 Texas sheriffs present.

He said his father, a World War I veteran who fought in France, vowed that if he returned home from the war alive, "he'd never lift a gun towards another man, and he didn't."

That's not to say Scarborough Jr. didn't see any action in his 37 years as sheriff. At one point, he and his chief deputy were pinned down by a gunman, said Scarborough III, 67, who took office when his father retired, in 1972.

"The chief deputy wanted to kill (the gunman), and Dad said, 'No, I'll take that gun away from him,' " Scarborough III said. "And he did."

The senior Scarborough was the opposite of his peace-loving son.

A large man who liked to pose for pictures with his guns, Scarborough Sr. narrowly escaped death when a sniper shot off his handlebar mustache in an ambush, his grandson said.

"He was a fierce man," Scarborough III said.

He said he chose his father as a role model.

"I like to take after my dad more because of his calm, peaceful attitude. He was effective."

Scarborough III said he hopes to see his son, Jim Scarborough IV, carry on the family tradition of being county sheriff, but that's not likely to happen in Kleberg County.

Romanovsky slams door on Drillers

From Staff and Wire Reports

TULSA, Okla — Mike Romanovsky gave Midland its first complete since July 3 and took a shutout into the ninth in Midland's 10-1 win over Tulsa Tuesday.

Romanovsky scattered five hits and four walks while striking out eight in handcuffing the Drillers for the second straight night. Romanovsky gave up a solo home run to Mike Jirschle in the ninth for the lone Driller run.

The Angels have now won four in a row and remain just one-half game behind El Paso in the second half race in the Texas League's West Division.

Stan Holmes ignited the carnage of Driller starter Dave Pavlas with a two run double in the first after Pavlas walked the bases loaded for a 2-0 lead.

Norm Carrasco continued the damage with a two run homer in the second after Jim Thomas was hit by a Pavlas pitch. In the third, the Angels put it out of reach with a four run outburst, chasing Pavlas 1-4.

The Drillers then brought out a parade of pitchers concluding with pitching coach Mike Kouchee. Kouchee provided one of the lowlights in Tulsa's evening, getting smacked in the forehead by a Bill Geivett line drive, turning it into a double.

In other news, Tulsa's Eddie Jurak was moved up to Oklahoma City to replace the ailing Jeff Kunkel. Jurak, a former major leaguer with Boston, was hitting .345 and was a member of the TL East All-Star team.

Veteran fullback Todd Fowler, right, does battle with rookie linebacker Dave Brown at the Dallas Cowboys' training facility in Thousand Oaks, Calif., Tuesday.

Top picks Noonan, Francis still training camp no-shows

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys' top two draft picks have missed two days of workouts for rookies and free agents, and coach Tom Landry says they aren't helping their chances with the team.

Danny Noonan and Ron Francis were no-shows Monday and Tuesday.

"Every day they're out, they're hurting the heck out of themselves," Landry said.

"This is a valuable time for the rookies this week because if they miss this they're going to have to take a back seat to the veterans," said Landry, who has said both have a chance to start for the Cowboys this season.

Cowboys president Tex Schramm said the Cowboys don't plan to offer Noonan or Francis another penny for rejecting their contract offers.

"We don't pay dividends for rookie draft choices to stay out of camp," Schramm said. "Neither player will get more or less than what we've already offered them."

The holdout is hurting Noonan's chances more than Francis because Noonan plays on the defensive line, Landry said. "Noonan is not going to be a nose tackle (as he was in college), so he has a lot to learn," he said.

Their absence is the result of "slotting," a system by which agents try to ensure their player doesn't make less than players drafted behind them, Schramm said.

"What is happening is agents are posturing so it will help them next year in recruiting the college seniors," he said.

The Dallas Times Herald quoted an unidentified source saying Noonan agent Tom Condon is asking for a $2.3 million contract. Condon said he doesn't believe Noonan's absences will hurt him.

"As much as he would like to be there with the rest of the rookies, and as much as I'm sure the Cowboys would like for him to be there, I don't think this is hurting him yet," he said.

Darwin throttles Expos, but can't gain on Reds

MONTREAL (AP) — Danny Darwin can't be termed an Expos' killer just yet, but the Houston Astros right-hander sure knows how to spoil Montreal's fun.

"He's beaten us like a drum this year," Montreal Manager Buck Rodgers said after Darwin pitched a five-hitter into the ninth inning and defeated the Expos 4-2 Tuesday night.

The loss ended Montreal's eight-game winning streak and gave Houston just its second win in six games since the All-Star break. The Astros remained 4½ games behind Cincinnati in third place in the NL West.

In four career starts against Montreal — all in 1987 — Darwin is 3-1. The latest triumph, however, didn't hold any great secret for the man who engineered it.

"The main thing was that when they hit the ball hard a couple of times — when it could have made a difference in the game — the balls were right at people," said Darwin, who was working on his ninth career shutout, and first since joining the Astros last season, entering the ninth.

Tim Raines ended the bid by sending a 1-0 pitch over the right-field fence for his eighth home run, cutting the Houston lead to 4-1.

Darwin was relieved for bullpen ace Dave Smith who retired the side, but not before the Expos touched him for a run.

Floyd Youmans, 7-4, the Montreal starter, had a streak of his own entering the game. He had pitched two straight shutouts, but his scoreless string was snapped at 20 innings when the Astros cuffed him for three runs in the third.

Gerald Young opened the scoring when he stroked a leadoff single, stole second and continued to third on a throwing error by Expos catcher Jeff Reed, before racing home on a groundout to shortstop by Bill Doran.

Consecutive doubles by Denny Walling and Alan Ashby produced another run, and a two-out, RBI single by Jose Cruz padded the lead to 3-0.

NL Roundup

Reds 4, Phillies 3

Paul O'Neill hit a solo homer that capped a three-run third inning, after Kevin Gross balked in a run, leading Cincinnati to its fourth victory in its last five games.

Bill Gullickson, 10-6, allowed six hits over 6⅔ innings. Rob Murphy pitched one-hit relief over the final two innings for his second save.

Gross, 6-9, also allowed six hits over 7⅓ innings, but hurt himself with an error and the balk in the fourth.

Buddy Bell singled to open the fourth and advanced to third on a single by Eric Davis. Bell scored and Davis moved to second when Gross balked.

Davis took third when Gross' pickoff attempt went into center field for an error. Davis scored on Parker's ground out to tie the game 3-3 before O'Neill homered.

Cardinals 6, Dodgers 1

Willie McGee hit a three-run homer in in the fifth and Bob Forsch went the distance on a four-hitter to lead St. Louis over Los Angeles.

McGee connected after Fernando Valenzuela had walked Tommy Herr and Jack Clark with two outs. The three-RBI gave McGee 16 in his last 13 games.

Valenzuela, 8-8, allowed all six runs on six hits and a season-high seven walks in six innings.

Braves 8, Mets 3

Doyle Alexander pitched a four-hitter to end a personal five-game losing streak and Andres Thomas hit a two-run double in the sixth inning, ending Atlanta's five-game losing streak.

Dion James opened the game with a home run off Dwight Gooden, 7-3, who gave up five runs on six hits in seven innings. Dale Murphy hit a two-run homer, his 26th, in the eighth off Randy Myers and Gerald Perry had a two-run single and two doubles.

Padres 4, Cubs 3

Garry Templeton's run-scoring triple and Tim Flannery's RBI double in the seventh inning rallied San Diego from a 3-2 deficit over Chicago and sent the Cubs to their fourth consecutive loss.

Shortstop Luis Quinones threw away Shane Mack's before Templeton tripled. One out later, Flannery doubled off Jamie Moyer, 9-7, to score Templeton.

Mark Davis, 5-5, pitched the final 2⅓ innings to win his first game since coming over from the Giants in a seven-player trade July 4.

Giants 7, Pirates 0

Dave Dravecky pitched a six-hitter for his first shutout in over a year and Chili Davis and Bob Brenly drove in two runs each, leading San Francisco over Pittsburgh.

Dravecky, 5-8, allowed six singles, struck out four and walked one in his first shutout since the opening week of the 1986 season.

Sierra solves Blue Jays

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — After losing nine of 10 games this season to the Toronto Blue Jays, Texas Rangers manager Bobby Valentine says he's found the secret to beating them.

Just have Ruben Sierra hit a couple of home runs, that's what it takes, Valentine said Tuesday night after Sierra's second homer of the night — a 2-run shot in the ninth — lifted the Rangers to a 6-4 victory over the Blue Jays.

It also helped the Rangers' cause that rookie left-hander Paul Kilgus held the Blue Jays hitless for the first five innings and relief ace Dale Mohorcic squelched a late-inning threat.

Kilgus went 7⅓, allowed four runs on four hits, walked one and struck out three. The first hit he allowed was a Garth Iorg single leading off the sixth after retiring 15 of the first 16 batters he faced.

After the Rangers gave him a 3-0 lead through the first five — one of the runs coming on Sierra's first home run of the night — Kilgus was nicked for consecutive pitch home runs in the seventh by Jesse Barfield and George Bell.

The home runs were Barfield's 20th and Bell's 30th of the season.

The Blue Jays took a 4-3 lead in the eighth when Kilgus issued his first walk — to Iorg with one out — and Charlie Moore hit a line drive that left fielder Pete Incaviglia played into a three-base hit by missing a shoestring catch.

Fernandez struck out, but Juan Beniquez bounced a single to center and the Blue Jays took a 4-3 lead.

Pete O'Brien tied at 4-4 in the bottom of the inning with a one-out home run — his 20th — off Toronto starter Jimmy Key.

In the ninth, reliever Jeff Musselman gave up a single to Bob Brower, got Scott Fletcher to line out to first, then balked Brower to second before serving up Sierra's 16th home run of the season.

AL Roundup

Royals 3, Indians 2

Bo Jackson didn't waste the opportunity to get in some football practice while helping the Kansas City Royals break a six-game losing streak.

Jackson, who last week signed a contract to play for the NFL's Los Angeles Raiders after the baseball season is over, knocked in the winning run Tuesday night with a sacrifice fly in the eighth inning of the Royals' victory over Cleveland.

In the second inning, Jackson bowled over Indians catcher Rick Dempsey at home plate, knocking him out of the game and breaking his left thumb. Dempsey went sprawling about 10 feet, but held the ball for the putout.

With Cleveland and Kansas City tied 2-2 in the eighth, Danny Tartabull singled off Scott Bailes, 3-3, before Frank White singled off Sammy Stewart, sending Tartabull to third.

Jackson, who has been booed in Kansas City since announcing his plans to play football, sent right fielder Cory Snyder to the warning track with his opposite field sacrifice fly.

Charlie Leibrandt, 9-8, pitched a five-hitter for his first victory since June 20.

Red Sox 3, Angels 0

Roger Clemens failed to strike out a batter for the second time in July, but the Boston right-hander allowed only five hits and no walks as he beat California for his fourth shutout, tops in the majors.

Clemens, 9-7, allowed only two runners to reach third base as he pitched his 10th complete game of the season.

He got all the support he needed when Wade Boggs singled and Jim Rice hit his ninth homer, off Kirk McCaskill, 2-2, in the fourth inning. McCaskill, making only his second start since undergoing right elbow surgery last April 27, left the game in the fourth because of tightness in his shoulder and elbow.

Twins 2, Yankees 1

Minnesota won the battle of division leaders when Kent Hrbek knocked in the game-winning run with a single in the bottom of the ninth, breaking a streak of 11 games without an RBI.

Gary Gaetti started the winning rally with a leadoff double off Tim Stoddard, 2-2. Stoddard intentionally walked Tom Brunansky, who homered for the Twins' other run, and was relieved by Pat Clements, whose second pitch to Hrbek was lined into center field.

Bert Blyleven, 9-7, pitched his fifth complete game, allowing seven hits and striking out eight, giving him 3,195 strikeouts for his career. He moved past Ferguson Jenkins into eighth place on the all-time list.

Tigers 6, Athletics 5

Detroit rallied in both the ninth and 10th innings to defeat Oakland despite another homer by rookie Mark McGwire.

John Grubb's two-out double scored Lou Whitaker from first base, capping a two-run 10th-inning rally after McGwire hit his 35th homer for the Athletics in the top of the 10th.

Jay Howell, 3-4, struck out the first two Detroit batters in the 10th, then hit Kirk Gibson, who stole second and scored on Whitaker's single. Grubb followed with a liner off the center field wall, making a winner of reliever Eric King, 5-7.

NFL to study Carter request

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — NFL officials have no timetable for acting on a petition by former Ohio State receiver Cris Carter for a special supplementary draft under which the All-American would enter the league.

League spokesman Joe Browne said Tuesday in New York that Commissioner Pete Rozelle had the authority to grant Carter's petition, but that it was the first such request the league had received. He said officials were still studying it.

"I don't believe in past years (we have) ever received a request for special eligibility based on the fact that the player was declared ineligible due to receiving money from an agent," Browne said.

Carter was declared ineligible for his senior season at Ohio State for signing a contract and accepting money from New York-based sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom.

The NFL has agreed with college football not to take players who have not graduated, not used up their eligibility or whose class has not graduated.

But Browne said special NFL eligibility has been granted on a few occasions before.

Carter's attorney, Bob Berry, contends in the petition that Carter's case is unique because Carter was coerced by his brother into signing a contract with Walters and Bloom. Berry claims George Carter, 27, of Middletown, working as a sub-agent for Walters, illegally signed the contract as his younger brother's legal guardian.

Berry also said that Cris Carter's status with Walters' agency, World Entertainment Inc., is not clear.

"Any time you have your name on a contract, you will have trouble getting it off," Berry said. "But I think we have good grounds to claim the contract is not enforceable."

Rose likely to return next month

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Cincinnati Reds Manager Pete Rose figures his team can't afford to do without baseball's all-time hit leader with a pennant drive looming. So he's getting ready to play again.

After taking batting practice for two days, Rose said Tuesday he probably will activate himself next month and serve as a pinch-hitter.

"The ball still looks the same to me," the 46-year-old Rose said. "And I've got a sneaky suspicion that if I go up there, I am going to hit it."

Rose thinks he can be especially valuable in the playoffs.

"This team is going to be in the playoffs — I know that — and I have one of the best playoff records in baseball," he said.

Rose, baseball's all-time hit leader with 4,256, has not played since last Aug. 17. Before Monday, he hadn't taken batting practice once since spring training. Rose must be activated by Aug. 31 to be eligible for the playoffs.

"Let's be honest, our left-handed pinch-hitters haven't exactly been setting the world on fire and it's not for a lack of opportunity, I don't think," Rose said.

"And I believe Bill (Bergesch, Reds general manager) will back me up on this. We can't just pick up the phone and call Nashville to get another one. We had to sign a guy who was out of baseball for a year already."

He was referring to Dave Collins.

The Reds' pinch-hitters are batting .186 (26-for-140). The left-handers — Paul O'Neill, Terry Francona and Kurt Stillwell — are hitting .181 (13-for-72).

Rose made it clear he would not activate himself merely to add hits to his record.

"I would never think about activating myself in September," he said. "It doesn't matter to me if I get one or two or three more hits. It doesn't matter to me if my last at-bat is a hit."

Bergesch said he would support whatever decision Rose makes.

Ex-Cowboy Hill named to O's board

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Baltimore Orioles have named a prominent black sports figure, former Yale University and NFL star Calvin Hill, to their board, three months after owner Edward Bennett Williams vowed to boost the role of blacks in baseball.

Hill, now a Washington businessman who played in two Super Bowls for the Dallas Cowboys, will fill the vacancy created by the recent death of Jack Dunn III, a longtime Orioles executive, team owner Edward Bennett Williams announced Tuesday in statement.

"I am real excited. I'll be working for a winning organization," said Hill, a 13-year veteran of the NFL. "I will be more involved in this organization than in others I have worked for in the past."

Williams' naming of Hill as the 13th member of the board, follows his promise in April to help boost the role of blacks in baseball. At that time, racially inflammatory remarks by Los Angeles Dodgers vice president Al Campanis sparked a re-examination of the number of blacks in management and coaching jobs.

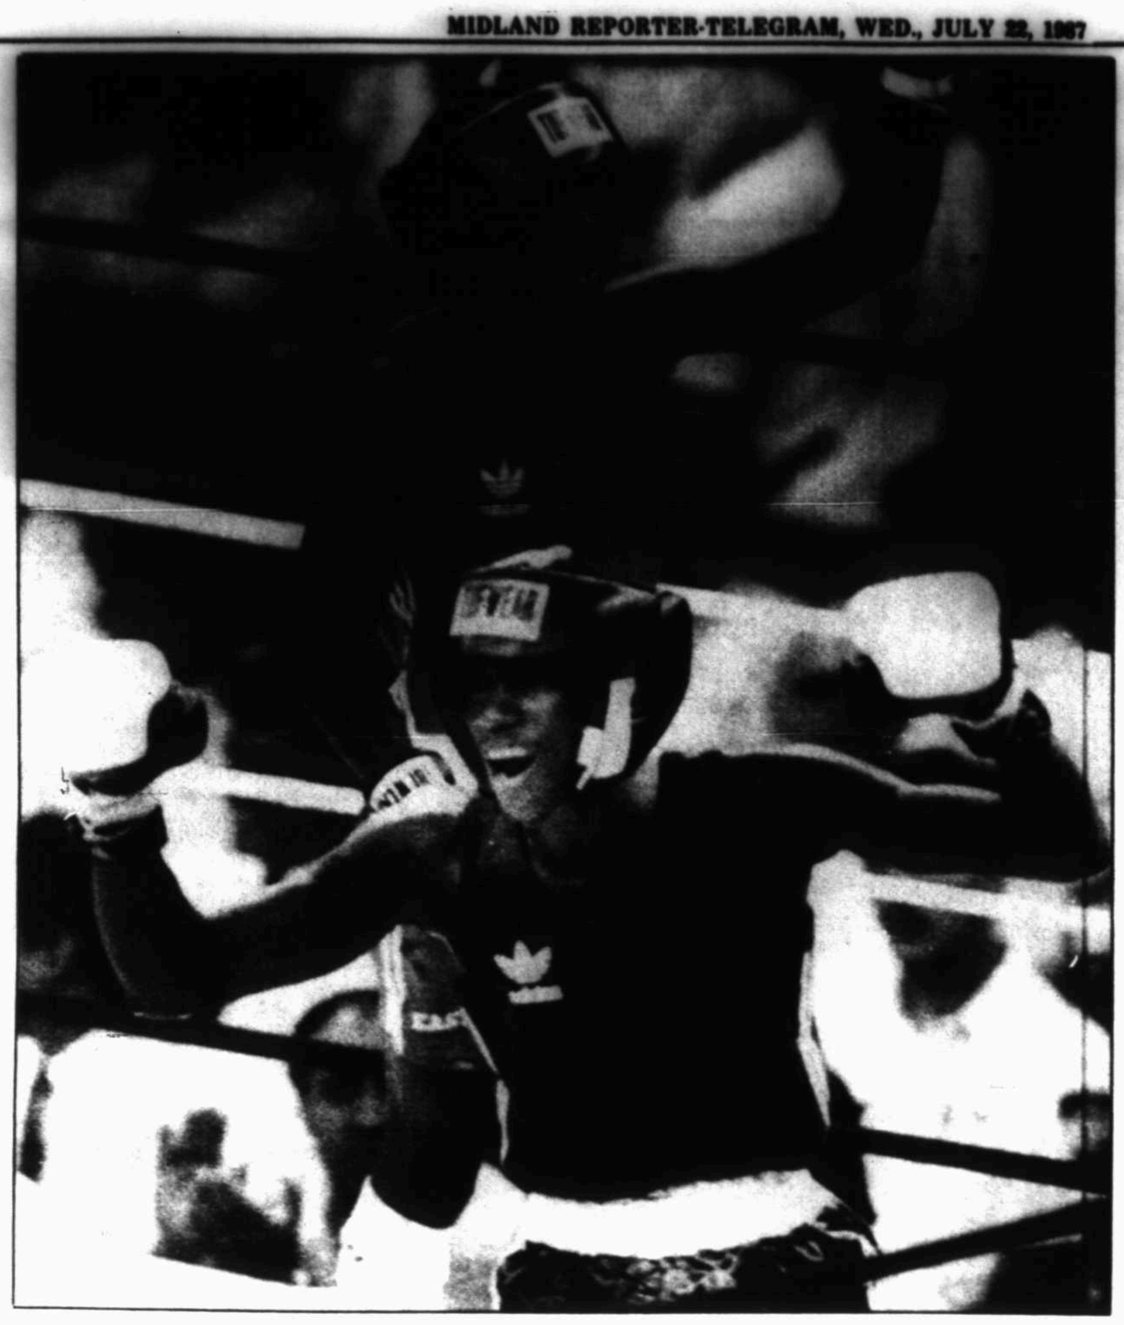

"I will take second place to no one in the United States on my sensitivity to racial justice," Williams had said.

Hill, a Baltimore native whose mother still lives in the area, said he had known Williams for 11 years. When asked if the Campanis incident might have influenced his appointment, he said, "I think of myself as eminently qualified to do a lot of things."

"I was named because I am qualified and willing. Second, I'm a big, big Orioles fan. Third, I'm a Baltimorean. I want to do whatever I can to help out the Orioles.

"This position with the Orioles makes me feel like I'm home again," said Hill, 40, a member of the Maryland Athletic Hall of Fame.

Hill, who now works as a financial consultant for athletes and entertainers with Fleet Financial Services, was a running back for the Dallas Cowboys, Washington Redskins and Cleveland Browns. He played in four pro bowls and two Super Bowls during his 13-season football career.

McMahon OK to play; Perry must lose weight

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago's irrepressible Jim McMahon got the go-ahead to train with the Bears next month, but irreducible William "The Refrigerator" Perry won't even get into training camp if he doesn't lose weight.

McMahon got clearance Tuesday from his Los Angeles surgeon, Dr. Frank Jobe, to begin training camp Aug. 1 with the rest of the National Football League team at Platteville, Wis., according to Bears spokesman Bryan Harlan.

"Dr. Jobe was extremely pleased with the progress Jim had made and gave him clearance ..." Harlan said.

McMahon has been recuperating since undergoing rotator cuff surgery on Dec. 12, 1986.

Any decision on whether McMahon will participate in contact drills will be made after he reports to the pre-season camp, Harlan said .

With a daily rehabilitation program of weightlifting, racquetball and throwing the football, McMahon already has restored his throwing speed and distance almost to pre-injury levels, Harlan said.

"There are still a lot of things he has to do, but now he can at least be practicing while he's rehabilitating," Harlan said.

Bears coach Mike Ditka said Monday that although he thought McMahon looked good physically, the true test of his recovery would come on the field.

"We won't really know if he's all right until game pressure and someone misses a block and the linebacker catches him flush with a tackle and you say, 'Uh, oh' and see how fast he gets up," Ditka said.

BUT DITKA said defensive tackle Perry won't have the privilege of even picking up a football at training camp if he doesn't drop some pounds.

"You can book this. If his weight is not under 325, he will not be at Platteville," Ditka said.

"He can go back to South Carolina and do whatever ... he wants to do, and we will go on without him."

Ditka said Perry would be "the best defensive tackle in football" if he kept his weight under 325 pounds.

"I'm not going to mess around with Perry anymore," Ditka said. "We called him the other day. Supposedly, he weighs 325. Heh, who knows? He's running twice a day — from the refrigerator to the bathroom."

Ditka said he did not know the extent of Perry's daily conditioning program because the former Clemson player has been in Aiken, S.C., where he is building a home.

But Ditka did offer some advice for Perry, should he weigh in under the 325-pound limit.

"To be No. 1, you have to reach deep down in the gutsack and make it hurt. His rear should drag off the field daily. And anyone who gets in his way at training camp, he ought to knock them down," Ditka said.

A CLAUSE in Perry's contract requires the Bears to pay him $40,000 if he works out three times a week at the team's Lake Forest, Ill., headquarters, but Perry has forfeited the sum plus thousands of dollars in bonuses because of his fluctuating weight, Ditka said.

Perry's agent, Jim Steiner, said his client will be ready to play.

"I can't tell you what he weighs now because I'm not with him on a daily basis," Steiner said.

Despite being labeled a wasted pick when he was selected by Chicago as the team's first-round NFL draft choice in 1985, Perry was effective on defense and became known as he scored two touchdowns in five rushes in goal line situations.

Tribble admits using cocaine with Bias

WASHINGTON (AP) — Brian Tribble, after admitting he used cocaine with basketball star Len Bias on the day Bias died, now wants to speak to youth groups about the dangers of drugs, according to his attorney.

Tribble, who was acquitted June 3 of supplying the drugs that killed the University of Maryland All-American, began his public speak-out on Monday with an interview on WJLA-TV.

"It was one of the things he wanted to do," his lawyer, Thomas Morrow said Tuesday. Morrow said he was helping Tribble make arrangements for anti-drug talks.

"He wants to talk to groups, primarily young people," Morrow said.

Tribble was not available Tuesday for an interview with The Associated Press, but his attorney said the 25-year-old "wants people to know that drugs represent a significant danger."

During the television interview, Tribble said he had used cocaine with Bias immediately before Bias collapsed on June 19, 1986.

"It's a mistake I readily admit. I admit it truthfully and now, right here on camera," he said.

Prince George's County assistant state's attorney Robert Bonsib, who prosecuted Tribble on cocaine possession and distribution charges, said Tribble is free from further prosecution in the case.

He was found innocent by a jury, and because he did not testify on his own behalf, Tribble cannot be charged with perjury, Bonsib said.

A&M's Vick inks with Jets

NEW YORK (AP) — In first-round draft pick Roger Vick, a fullback from Texas A&M, the New York Jets think they have signed a well-rounded football player.

Frank Ramos, a Jets spokesman, said Tuesday that Vick signed a series of one-year contracts. Terms of the contracts were not released.

Vick was the 21st player chosen in this year's NFL draft. The 6-foot-2½, 230-pounder rushed last season for 960 yards, averaging 4.4 yards per carry, and was the first A&M player in 35 years to win the Southwest Confernce rushing title.

Mike Hickey, Jets director of player personnel, said there was no hesitation in picking Vick.

"Vick is a heck of a football player," Hickey said. "If your prerequisites for fullback are running, blocking and catching, he does all of them well."

Although he played on the losing team in the Cotton Bowl, Vick was named the game's offensive Most Valuable Player after he rushed for 113 yards and scored on a two-yard run against Ohio State.

Vick becomes the fifth first-round pick to sign this season.

The others are quarterback Vinny Testaverde of Miami, with Tampa Bay, running back D.J. Dozier of Penn State, with Minnesota, running back Paul Palmer of Temple, with Kansas City, and linebacker Tony Woods of Pittsburgh, with Seattle.

Becker, McEnroe hold keys

Two countries face elimination

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Boris Becker says the pressure of playing in a Davis Cup tennis event is different from normal competition because "it's not only for yourself, it's for your country and for your teammates."

The two-time Wimbledon singles champion from West Germany said after practice Tuesday that he hopes to face John McEnroe on Friday in the first of two singles games the U.S. and West German teams will play.

The other singles games will be played Sunday and the doubles will be on Saturday at the Civic Center Coliseum. The draw for this weekend's relegation round between the two countries won't be decided until Thursday.

Because each team has lost already in Davis Cup competition — West Germany to Spain and the United States to Paraguay — the winner here goes to the World Group of 16 countries that will vie for the cup in 1988.

Becker said that in national team play, a player cannot afford to feel like he's "having a bad day, like it's just not your day."

"We all work now for two weeks together every day almost, and it's just not fair (to teammates) to let them down by thinking maybe you cannot win every time. But you can try every time as much as you can."

Becker said the West Germans will be underdogs against the U.S. doubles team of Robert Seguso and Ken Flach, even though Seguso and Flach lost in Sunday's final at the Volvo Tennis-New Jersey championship at Livingston, N.J.

"Everybody said we were the outsiders because they were the Wimbledon champions and they win everything," Becker said. "So they have to be the favorites, that's for sure. They are one of the best doubles teams in the world and we haven't played so many doubles yet."

The West Germans lost to Spain in singles, not doubles.

"We've been playing against good teams and we've beaten them," Becker said. "It's going to be a very important point."

McEnroe, coming off a back injury, hasn't played since May in his first-round loss at the French Open.

"He's not playing that great anymore, with that consistency throughout the year," Becker said. "But he can play ... a couple of matches a year really good. Especially in a Davis Cup kind of thing, he had time to prepare himself and really psych himself up."

Earnhardt to challenge Hillin's hold on Talladega

By HOYT HARWELL

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Despite moves to slow stock cars on the fastest tracks, the Alabama International Motor Speedway is not the place for the faint-hearted, the year's top NASCAR driver said Tuesday.

"I don't like to run second and I do all I can to win," said Dale Earnhardt, winner of eight of the 16 races so far this year in the Winston Cup Challenge.

"I race hard because I enjoy it and because I want to come in first," he said.

Earnhardt, a two-time winner of the Talladega 500, is expected to top the $1 million mark in earnings this year in Sunday's 19th edition of the race. That would be the earliest ever for a NASCAR driver to earn that much money.

The 40 drivers will be competing for $533,900, the most ever for this race.

"It seems I always run competitive here," Earnhardt said. "I'm going to race as hard as I can."

He said he believes NASCAR's order to reduce the size of carburetors for this track and the Daytona International Motor Speedway following a dramatic Bobby Allison accident at Talladega's Winston 500 in May will bunch the cars up more than in recent years.

"The draft will play a bigger part with these smaller carburetors," Earnhardt said.

Allison's car, running at speeds over 200 mph, became airborne and slammed into a fence in front of the grandstand, raining bits of the car on spectators and injuring several people.

MIDLAND'S BOBBY Hillin Jr., who at 22 became the youngest driver ever to win a NASCAR event when he took the checkered flag a year ago at the Talladega 500, said he has tested his car at speeds above 200 mph with the smaller carburetor.

"When I come to Talladega, I expect good luck," he said. "It has been my track, a track I feel I can turn things around on. Our chances are about as good as anyone's."

However, Hillin said, "I'm still running the car on the ragged edge and I can't tell much difference in the speed. The race ought to be one where everybody can run as hard as they can and nobody get hurt."

Hillin said NASCAR's rules changes have made the sport more competitive, though it was Hillin that came out on top in last year's Talladega, one of the most competitive races in NASCAR history.

Twenty-six of the 40 drivers led the race at one point or another, with 49 official lead changes. But track officials estimate the unofficial lead changes, those not marked at the start/finish line, at 190 in the 188-lap event in 1986.

"Midland is kind of on a roll this year, so I'd like to add to that. Alysheba (owned by Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer of Midland) won the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness this year, so I'd like to add the Talladega 500 and a few more races to the 'Midland Winner's list.'"

Hillin is just one of two Texans to post a NASCAR win in the 1980s. The other is Terry Labonte of Corpus Christi.

THE JULY 4 Firecracker 400 at Daytona was the first race run under the new smaller carburetor rule and was one of the closest in years. The Talladega 500 will be the second race with the smaller carburetors, with most drivers saying speeds will be reduced from 5 to 7 mph.

NASCAR is expected to study Sunday's race to see if any additional chances might be needed.

Practice runs for Saturday's Permatex 500 and the Sunday race will begin Wednesday, with qualifying runs Thursday and Friday. Earnhardt arrived early to donate a car to the International Motorsports Hall of Fame located adjacent to the track.

The car is the 1977 Monte Carlo in which Earnhardt won the 1980 championship, a yellow and blue vehicle restored to its original condition. "I am proud to give it to the museum," he said.

Highland Park falls to Class 4A

HIGHLAND PARK (AP) — Declining enrollment may force Highland Park High School to drop out of the UIL's largest classification, where it has competed for more than half a century, school officials say.

Beginning with the 1988-89 school year, the Dallas suburban city may be competing in 4A, Athletic Director Bo Snowden said Monday.

The school's enrollment is expected to drop this fall to about 1,385 students, below the 1,440 cutoff the University Interscholastic League used for 5A classification in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

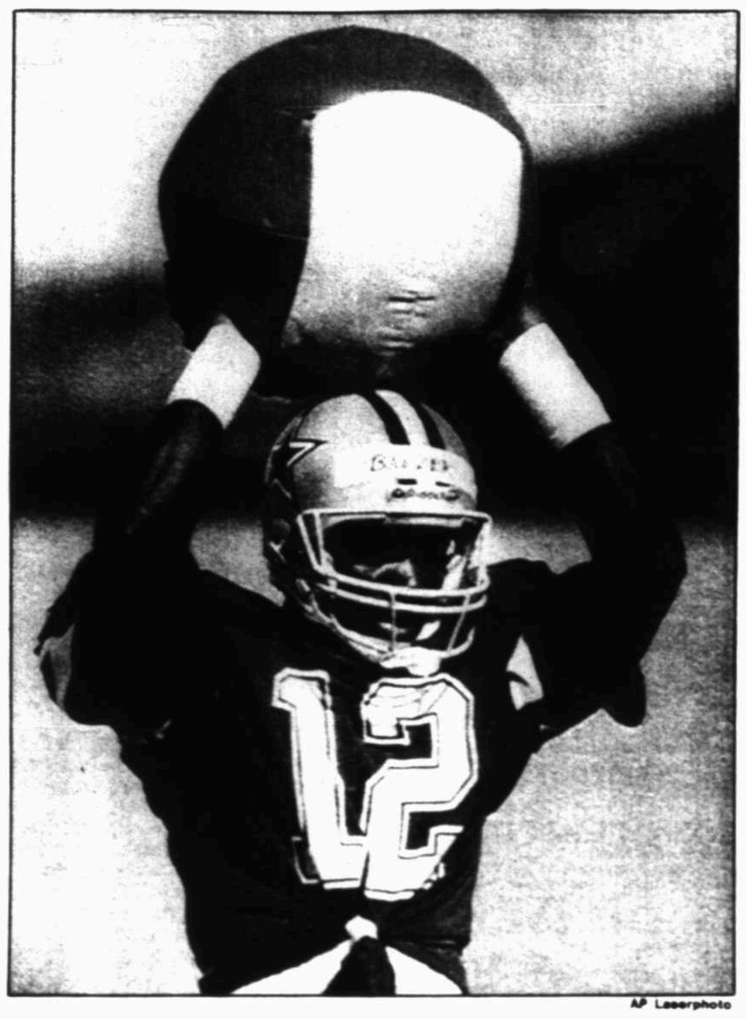

"We feel like we're definitely going to 4A," Snowden said. "We're going and we're going to be excited about it. We feel like the 4A schools in the area have some excellent athletic programs, something more in line with our school."

Highland Park, which has competed in 5A since 1928, won the state football championship in 1957 and tied for the state title in 1945. Highland Park also played in the state finals in 1944 and 1947.

Arredondo reclaims crown

TOKYO (AP) — Rene Arredondo of Mexico, fighting aggressively from the opening bell, stopped champion Tsuyoshi Hamada of Japan in the sixth round Wednesday night to regain the World Boxing Council junior welterweight crown.

It was their first meeting since July 24, 1986 when Hamada, 26, knocked out Arredondo in the first round to capture the title. This time the fight was halted 43 seconds into the sixth round.

'Kong' wants one last chance

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Dave Kingman is winding up his cameo appearance in the Pacific Coast League this weekend, and the moody slugger who has 442 major league home runs insists says he doesn't care if he gets one more shot at the big time.

He says he's enjoying what he calls his chance to "swing the bat for a couple of weeks and play baseball" with the San Francisco Giants' AAA affiliate in Phoenix.

"The Giants were nice enough to let me work out and get into shape," Kingman said, explaining his contract situation with the Firebirds. It allows him to play with the club in case some major league team gives him another shot.

He says if no major league team comes calling, his last game will be this weekend against Tacoma.

Kingman hopes that his brief stint with the Firebirds will convince some major league team to employ his skills during the pennant drive.

Going into Wednesday's game with the Portland Beavers, Kingman was hitting .242 with two home runs, eight runs batted in and seven strikeouts in his 10 games with the Firebirds.

The 6-foot-6, 210-pound Kingman says he still would like to achieve a couple of goals in major league baseball, including playing on a pennant winner and a chance hit 500 home runs.

"The way I've been going the last three years, I don't see why I can't attain that number," he said.

But if it doesn't happen, Kingman says he won't fret.

"It's not life or death if no one signs me. There are a number of things I've been able to do in the summer time for the first time since high school like fishing and traveling," he said after going hitless in four at-bats Tuesday night against Portland.

Longtime observers of Kingman would easily recognize his performance Tuesday night.

He hit two groundouts, loping with apparent disinterest to first base. Next came a long fly ball to the deepest part of the ballpark that brought a gasp from the 1,852 assembled. Finally, there were three looping swings that resulted in an eighth-inning strikeout.

WITH EACH at-bat, Kingman still strides disdainfully to the plate oblivious to the derisive calls from the crowd. And with each out, Kingman returns to the dugout minus the theatrics that often accompany the outs of a struggling young player or a frustrated older player trying to recapture past glories.

"I've got real peace now," Kingman said. "I still have the same desire. I put in the same effort I always have. It's all part of the game.

"Everybody changes. I've mellowed out a lot. We all mellow out."

Meanwhile, the numbers are there for all to see in addition to the 442 home runs: 1,210 runs batted in and a .236 lifetime batting average in a 16-year major league career that took him to seven different teams, including four in the 1977 season, tying a major league record.

In 1984, Kingman was named the American League Comeback Player of the Year by the Sporting News. He hit 35 home runs and drove in 118 runs to complement his .268 batting average that season with the Oakland Athletics.

Although in his last two seasons with Oakland, the homer pace continued with 30 in 1985 and 35 last season, the RBI tailed off to 91 and 94 and the average plummeted to .235 and then to .210. With young right-handed power hitters such as Mark McGwire and Jose Canseco, Kingman suddenly became very expendable.

"The whole game has changed drastically. If it hadn't been for compensation, I'd probably be playing somewhere now," Kingman says.

But he says he harbors no bitterness toward Oakland. "They gave me three years of employment" at a salary Kingman refused to disclose, saying it was "nobody's business."

Both his teammates and his manager say the 38-year-old slugger has been a positive influence on the club.

"At first, he kind of kept to himself," outfielder Randy Kutcher said. "But he's starting to open up now that he's traveled with us for a while."

PHOENIX MANAGER Wendell Kim says Kingman has been "super."

"He's been real good with the young players," Kim said. "A lot of big-time players aren't like that. I can't believe a lot of the negative stuff I've read about him."

Kim hesitated though when the conversation turned to whether Kingman was ready for the majors.

"He's only had two weeks of spring training. He might be all right, though if he were to go to an AL club where he could DH."

But then Kingman always knew he could do that.

"I don't have any regrets," he said.

"I far exceeded my expectations. I've gotten far more out of baseball than I ever imagined.

"It desn't bother me if my career begins and ends in Phoenix."

Delgado wrests jersey from Roche

L'ALPE D'HUEZ, France (AP) — Pedro Delgado of Spain took the overall lead in the Tour de France cycling race Tuesday after the 20th stage, finishing with a climb to the top of l'Alpe d'Huez.

Countryman Federico Echave won the 125-mile stage in five hours, 52 minutes, 11 seconds, but Delgado moved from second place to the top by finishing just three minutes, 44 seconds behind. Delgado was seventh in Tuesday's leg.

Former overall leader Stephen Roche of Ireland and Frenchman Jean-Francois Bernard were 5:32 back.

The course had three major climbs at the Cucheron, Coq and Laffrey Passes, before the most ominous of all at l'Alpe d'Huez. Here the riders ascended 3,500 feet in eight miles to the summit finish.

Tour de France

Luis Herrera of Columbia broke away from the pack and only Delgado could respond. Three miles from the summit, Roche lost the overall lead as his cushion of 1:19 over Delgado was wiped out.

Runnerup was Anselmo Fuerte of Spain, 1:32 back with Christophe Lavainne of France third, 2:12 off the pace. Martin Ramirez of Colombia crossed the line fourth, exactly three minutes behind, while Herrera was 3:19 behind the leader in fifth.

In the overall standings, Delgado has a time of 90:32:28 and leads Roche by 25 seconds, Bernard by 2:02, and Frenchman Charles Mottet by 2:12. Herrera is fifth, 5:03 back.

"My form has been improving gradually each day," Delgado said, after putting on the leader's yellow jersey. "I just hope this continues until Paris."

Delgado is no stranger to success, having won the Tour of Spain in 1985, but lacks consistency. He failed to finish in two of the last four tours.

When asked if his performance was disappointing, Roche said, "No, no, of course not. "That's what happened, that's cycling."

The race concludes Sunday.

LIFE'S A PICNIC

with easy summer suppers

Summer invokes thoughts of swimming and sunbathing, long leisurely days, the first delicious bite of a home-grown tomato, and the laughter and contentment of backyard picnics and barbecues.

Complicated meals are out, down-home cooking is in, and this Easy Summer Supper menu features All-American favorites: fried chicken and bean salad.

Beans, rich in fiber and flavor, are the starting point for Garden Bean Salad. Low in fat and cholesterol, packed with complex carbohydrates and iron, beans emerge as a winner. Zucchini and sweet red peppers provide color and textural contrast to an otherwise humble dish. Shell macaroni complements the beans to form a complete protein source.

Who wants to be hampered with kitchen fussing when the world shifts outdoors during the summer months?

Swanson Plump and Juicy fried chicken with its crispy bread crumb coating and great chicken flavor is another picnic natural. Heat up the chicken ahead of time according to package directions. Let it cool for 30 minutes, then refrigerate it and take it to the picnic cold. Make a "Buffalo wing" type of hot sauce to go with the chicken by combining a prepared blue cheese salad dressing with some Louisiana hot sauce. You'll have the best of two worlds – cold chicken and a spicy dip.

For dessert, Cherries In The Snow is a fine way to conclude the meal. Sweetened whipped cream is folded into cooked, chilled rice and spooned into individual dessert glasses. Canned cherry pie filling offers excellent food value as well as color and sweet sensations in every bite. It contains more Vitamin A and protein than any other processed fruit.

Quench summer thirst with a frosty pitcher of iced tea. The fresh, clean taste complements any summer meal. Make it with a quality brand to ensure the most satisfying brew.

Enhance your table with a big display of the freshest, most vibrant flowers. Casual food doesn't have to mean dull ambiance. Set out oversized napkins, big goblets or tall glasses, and seasonal table decorations.

Here are some other hot weather tips:
- Plan summer dishes that can be prepared early in the day when the weather is generally coolest.
- Find a terrific bakery and purchase top-quality bread to accompany your meal.
- Patronize a local farmers' market for the freshest produce.
- Enjoy the magic of summer!

For more fresh ideas using Beans this summer, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Easy Summer Suppers, P.O. Box 964, Bensalem, PA 19020.

Iced Tea Three Easy Ways

- Traditional Way – Bring one quart of cold water to a full boil. Remove from heat and immediately add 15 tea bags or 1/3 cup loose tea leaves. Stir, cover and let stand 5 minutes. Stir again and strain into a pitcher holding another quart of cold water. Makes 2 quarts.
- Cold Water Way – Fill a quart jar with cold water. Add 8–10 tea bags (remove tags). Cover and refrigerate at least 6 hours or overnight. Remove bags. When ready to serve, pour into ice-filled glasses. Recipe may be doubled.
- Instant Way – Allow 2 rounded tablespoons of instant tea powder for each quart of cold water. Stir to dissolve. If using a flavored iced tea mix, use 1/2 cup (or 2 envelopes) to a quart of cold water.

Filled breads prevent picnic sandwich fall-out

By WANDA A. ADAMS
Hearst News Service

The trouble with packing sandwiches for a picnic is the tendency they have to fall apart en route. So here are two recipes for filled breads that are just a little out of the ordinary and won't lose their middles in the picnic basket.

Fatayir is the Lebanese vegetarian answer to the Cornish pasty. Make the bread casing from scratch using the recipe below, or use refrigerated canned biscuits or store-bought bread dough. If you use commercial bread dough, defrost it and let it rise before filling.

This recipe is from "A World of Breads" by Dolores Casella (David White, 1966, now out of print) and was her grandmother's. The recipe does indeed call for 2 tablespoons salt — one for the filling, one for the bread; cut the salt back if that strikes you as too much.

FATAYIR

1 cake yeast (1 tablespoon dry)
2 cups warm water
5 cups white flour
1½ cups whole-wheat flour
1 tablespoon salt
¾ cup melted butter
4 pounds spinach
3 onions, minced
½ cup pine nuts
½ cup fruity, extra virgin olive oil
Juice of three lemons
1 tablespoon salt

Dissolve the yeast in the warm water. Sift the dry ingredients and add to the yeast mixture with the melted butter and salt. Knead the dough. Place the dough in a bowl, brush the top with melted butter, cover and allow to rise until doubled in bulk.

Meanwhile, make the filling: Wash and drain thooughly the 4 pounds of spinach and tear into small pieces. Blend in the onions, pine nuts, olive oil, lemon juice and 1 tablespoon salt.

Punch down the dough and roll it out to a thickness of ⅛-inch. Cut the dough into 5-inch squares. Place some filling into the center of each square, fold the dough to make a triangle and seal the edges. Place on buttered cookie sheets. Brush the pastries with melted butter. Bake at 450 degrees F for about 25 minutes or until browned and done. (If you're using commercial bread dough, bake at 375 degrees F.) Cool the spinach rolls and pack them for the picnic.

This is the loaf to choose if your picnic is taking place in the back yard. It shouldn't be transported too far, as it's to be served warm.

A LOAF OF MEAT LOAF

1 large, round loaf French bread
1 pound lean ground beef
¾ pound highly seasoned Italian bulk sausage
1 cup pitted ripe olives, cut in half or chopped coarsely
1 medium onion, chopped
1 cup diced bell pepper
2 eggs
¼ cup tomato sauce
¾ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper
4 tablespoons butter or margarine, softened

Slice the bread in half horizontally with a serrated knife. Pull out the soft center from each half, leaving walls ½- to 1-inch thick. Make bread crumbs from the bread that has been removed from the loaf. Mix 2 cups bread crumbs plus all ingredients except the butter. Fry a small amount of this mixture and taste for seasoning; adjust the seasoning if necessary.

Form the meat mixture into an 8- or 9-inch loaf (one that will fit inside the bread loaf). Bake this loaf on a rimmed baking sheet at 350 degrees F for 35-40 minutes. Spread the cut surface of the bread loaf with butter. Carefully lift and fit the meat loaf into the bread loaf cavity. Cover with the top half of the loaf and weight it down with a plate or a heavy, flat object to force the juices into the bread. Cool the loaf.

Summertime — and the living is risky

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Ants come with picnics, but food poisoning shouldn't.

Yet summer heat and humidity, combined with the protein in our favorite foods, can create the ideal breeding ground for the bacteria that cause food poisoning, warns Michael P. O'Neill, executive chef at Thomas Jefferson University Hospital.

"In this setting one cell can multiply into 281 trillion bacteria after 24 hours," he said.

"Careful food purchasing, preparation and storage, combined with thoughtfully chosen menus and creative presentation can go a long way to prevent any unpleasant aftermath following meals served outdoors in warm weather," said O'Neill, a graduate of the Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, N.Y.

While his suggestions are designed for summer entertaining, most apply all year long.

"You can't tell just by looking at food you intend to purchase whether it's free from bacteria that cause food poisoning," O'Neill said. "That's why it's wise to shop at a store with a reputation for quality."

Nevertheless, O'Neill said, appearances should not be totally ignored:

■ Meat should look fresh, be deep red in color and not brown around the edges.

■ Whole fish should not have a sheen on the skin, which means bacteria are already starting to form. And the eyes of the fish should be clear, not clouded.

■ A package of chicken shouldn't be moist on the bottom or contain an excessive amount of juices in the container.

O'Neill said shoppers also should make sure, in the case of meat and poultry, that their dealer is selling merchandise approved by the United States Department of Agriculture.

This means that the chicken or the animal from which the meat comes has been slaughtered and processed, and the plant maintained in accordance with standards established by the department.

As for canned goods, they should not have lids that bulge, and should not be dented or rusty, no matter what time of year they are purchased.

Frozen foods should be solidly frozen all the way through with no soft spots indicating that the temperature is probably high enough for bacteria to breed, O'Neill said.

The best way to make sure that frozen food has not been thawed and refrozen is to look for ice, not frost, on the outside of the package, he said.

The next step in preventing food poisoning is proper storage of perishable foods at temperatures outside the danger zone in which bacteria flourish — below 40 and above 145 degrees Fahrenheit.

This means refrigerating or freezing perishables as soon after purchase as possible, O'Neill said. "Especially in the summer, unless you use the food the day you purchase it or the following day, freeze food in a freezer set at the coldest possible setting.

"When you are ready to use the food, defrost it in the refrigerator instead of on the kitchen counter. Even though it takes longer, this method will keep bacteria from multiplying as rapidly as they would otherwise.

"Be sure to cook food at the appropriate temperature so you achieve the proper internal temperature — for example, in the case of pork, 160 degrees." O'Neill advises keeping your refrigerator temperature below 40 degrees Fahrenheit and leaving plenty of room around each container so that the cold air will touch every surface.

Uncooked fish or seafood that will be kept in the refrigerator for a day or so before using should be stored in a container filled with ice cubes that are replaced as they melt. If the fish starts to have a clear look or even a faint smell of ammonia, dispose of it immediately.

"Cleanliness of hands, utensils and all surfaces with which your food comes into contact, whether during preparation or serving, is essential to prevent food poisoning," he said.

"To help kill bacteria, the rinse cycle in your automatic dishwasher should be set for at least 140 degrees. The temperature gauge is usually found near the motor," O'Neill said.

He also advises discarding any cracked dishes or glassware because bacteria breed there.

After the picnic or buffet, it's time to decide which food should be discarded.

"Don't even consider keeping any salad or entree which is meant to be served cold; contains meat, poultry or fish; has a cream or mayonnaise-based dressing and has sat out in the sun for a long time," O'Neill said.

WHAT'S COOKING

Woman has business, culinary talents

EDITOR'S NOTE: This series of "What's Cooking" interviews will feature nonprofit organizations that have published cookbooks. This is the fifth article in a series of interviews with members of the First United Methodist Church.

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Now that Barbara McIntosh's children are grown, her daughter married and her son at Texas Tech, she is able to concentrate on "having time to do even more things that are rewarding." Midlanders for 27 years, Mrs. McIntosh and her husband, Larry, have both been active in First United Methodist Church since they moved to Midland.

"The church has always been a big part of our life," Mrs. McIntosh said. Mrs. McIntosh worked on her bachelor of science in business at the University of Oklahoma and is a past business teacher for Midland College. Mrs. McIntosh uses her business knowledge in the business end of producing cookbooks for the church.

"The cookbooks are fund-raisers for the circles (of United Methodist Women), which raise funds to meet the needs of the church and the community," Mrs. McIntosh said.

She also contributes recipes for the cookbooks produced by the Grace Guthrie Circle. Currently, she is serving as co-chairman for the circle's casseroles and vegetables cookbook which is planned to be completed in October.

Mrs. McIntosh recently attended a family reunion in Los Angeles, and, since she is always on the lookout for good recipes, she brought back a recipe for zucchini casserole.

"It was the best dish at the reunion," Mrs. McIntosh said. "The zucchini recipe will be in the new casserole and vegetable cookbook."

Mrs. McIntosh said she has been rearranging her menu plans at home. "It may sound boring, but I am cooking lighter, healthier foods to fit the needs of a healthier diet."

One family favorite is Plum Cake. "My family would rather have Plum Cake than steak," Mrs. McIntosh said. "I always have the ingredients on hand. It is a great 'stand-by' recipe which can be made in three minutes. Also with just my husband and myself at home, we don't need a big cake."

Mrs. McIntosh also has been the chairman of volunteers for Midland Memorial Hospital's blood drive, is active in Partners, plays golf, plays bridge, enjoys needlepoint and works at the Stitching Post on Thursdays.

"Working at the Stitching Post keeps me in touch with what's going on in the community," Mrs. McIntosh said.

She recently completed some intricate needlepoint work to inset in her dining room panels.

"I worked on them (the needlepoint insets) in my spare time," she said. "I'm never bored."

Mrs. McIntosh said she is looking forward to participating in the Walk to Emmaus, an interdenominational spiritual retreat named for the spiritual journey to Emmaus in Luke: 24. "And of course," she said. "I'm looking forward to our next cookbook."

Following, Mrs. McIntosh shares some of her family's favorite recipes.

Copley News Service

As you gear up for the season's picnics, family outings, beach trips or class reunions, plan an alternative to photograph albums for documenting and remembering your summer activities. Recipe albums, a collection of good food and flavors you shared at any of these events, will bring back the fun in full color each time you prepare a dish.

Use a standard size or miniature photograph album as your recipe file. If yours is the type of album with plastic-covered pages, simply press recipe cards between the plastic sheet and the sturdier board. If the leaves of the album are plain sheets of paper, either write recipes directly on the paper or tape cards to the page.

There are several ways of spicing up the outer cover of the photo album. Your custom design on front will make the recipe file not only handy in the kitchen but attractive, as well.

If you enjoy needlework, cut a piece of Aida cloth 2 inches smaller in width and length than the dimensions of the album cover. Then work up a design in thread count from the many commercially available patterns.

You can personalize the album even more by creating your own thread count pattern. On graph paper, sketch out letters, border designs and geometric repeat patterns. But first, ensure the finished design will fit within the boundaries of the cloth by counting the total number of squares on the cut piece of cloth and marking off the same number of squares on the graph paper as your design area.

Once you have made any adjustments of the pattern on paper to suit you, work it up on the Aida cloth. Then, after completing the needlework, finish the edges of the cloth by topstitching a wide satin or grosgrain ribbon in place around the sides.

Now spread craft glue across the surface of the album cover, center the cloth over the cover and press it into place.

A simpler, faster way of adding color and style to the recipe album is to apply a self-stick shelf-lining paper to the cover. Cut the paper to fit across the front of the album only and trim around the edges with colored tape. Or cut it large enough to wrap around to the inside of the book.

And shelf paper on the cover really serves its purpose here, because you can use it to mat a super family or scenic shot on the front. Before sticking the paper down, jut cut a hole out of the paper with a craft knife. Be certain the hole is small enough to hold the photo in place while showing as much of the scene as possible.

'Branding' beef takes new meaning in '80s

By MERLE ELLIS

Branding is nothing new to the beef industry. The red hot-branding iron is as much a part of the mystique of the Old West and the cowboy as are high-heeled boots, fancy saddles, and six-guns.

But, "Branded Beef" has taken on a whole new significance in modern meat marketing. It's a red-hot topic in the beef industry today and it has nothing to do whatever with red-hot branding irons.

Traditionally in this country, beef has been marketed as a generic commodity. Ranchers and farmers raised cattle, put them into trucks, closed the tailgate, and sent them off to the feedlot. Where they went from there, who bought them, and how well folks liked the steaks that come from them was not the cattleman's concern. They just raised 'em.

They determined the type of cattle raised, the breed, the color, and the size, making these decision on a variety of criteria.

Not always — indeed, I think not often — in recent years has the quality of the meat been a critical factor. Most cattlemen in the Southwest, for example, raise cattle that contain some Brahman, not because the quality of the beef was the best, but because the Brahman breed does well in the dry desert climate of the Southwest.

Things like mothering ability, weaning weight, daily rate of gain, color, even tradition ("that's the way my daddy did it") have had more to do with the beef produced today than has the eating quality of the meat. That may change. Branded Beef may demand that it change.

The Excel Corporation, one of the country's largest and most aggressive meat packers, has recently come out with their line of "Branded Beef." Instead of selling beef to the supermarket chains in large "primal" and "subprimal" cuts, to be reduced into retail cuts at the individual store level, Excel is trimming and sizing cuts for the retail package at the packing plant. Each cut goes out packaged for the retail counter in a package clearly labeled Branded — an "Excel" product. Under this system, the identity of the carcasses providing the most desired quality and profitability will become quickly evident and word should get back through the system to the cattlemen raising the cattle as to what the market really wants. "Color," "weaning," "weight," "humps and floppy ears" may turn out not to have much to do with it.

At a recent meeting of the Beef Improvement Federation in Wichita, Excel announced its new cattle-buy-beef that could be marketed on a brand name basis:

- High Quality Beef, assuring maximum muscle, palatability.
- Retail Store Beef, consistent palatability, little external fat.
- Institutional Beef, consistent palatability, greater tolerance in cut size and weight.
- Lean (Lite) Beef, emphasizing reduced fat.
- Organic Beef, produced without use of growth stimulants and food additives.

Dr. Allen noted that some of these categories of beef will be in greater demand than others.

Allen predicted that the days of producing and selling cattle on the averages in all segments of the beef business are coming to an end.

"The shift to purchasing cattle to fit brand-name product specifications will result in higher prices being paid for superior animals and ultimately will result in greater and greater price discounts for inferior animals. These price signals will be transferred back through the beef production chain and will result in a significant shift in breeding and production practices."

Excel's message was quite clear: If they are going to put their name and reputation on the line by "Branding" the meat they sell, they are going to be very picky about what they buy.

The idea of being told what kind of cattle to raise didn't set too well with all the cattlemen at the meeting. One was heard to growl as he put on his Stetson and got ready to leave: "No damn packer is going to tell me how to raise cattle."

We'll see!

Marketing tips help insure purchasing best produce

Associated Press

Take along more than a canvas bag to go thumping, sniffing and poking your way through farmers' markets.

Armed with these tips from Midwest Living magazine, almost anyone will bring home only the freshest, tastiest produce.

Instead of grabbing the first eye-catching zucchini, learn the tests for ripeness, tenderness and maturity.

Corn: Look for brown, dried silks and ears wrapped firmly in green husks. Then use the thumbnail test. If a milky fluid squirts out when a kernel is punctured, the corn is just right. (The fluid is clear, not milky, in new high-sugar varieties.)

Cantaloupe: Look for a firm, tan melon with heavy netting on the rind and a sweet smell. Avoid melons with rough stem ends. On vine-ripened melons (the best kind), stems fall off during harvest.

Lettuce and cabbage: Choose solid, heavy heads, but not necessarily the biggest ones. Dark green lettuce is higher in vitamins than light-colored lettuce.

Squash: Summer squash (zucchini, crookneck and straightneck varieties) should be no more than 8 inches long, with a firm, glossy skin. Squash that's too ripe has big seeds, stringy flesh and may even be hollow.

Tomatoes: Buy tomatoes that aren't completely ripe, along with ripe ones to ensure a steady supply until the next excursion. Let tomatoes ripen on the kitchen counter out of direct sunlight. Refrigerate them as soon as they're ripe.

Get produce home as quickly as possible. Perishable vegetables don't tolerate hot cars, so make the farmers' market the last stop before home. Shop early in the day for the best choices and head for vendors whose produce is shaded. If the day is a scorcher, take along an ice chest.

Don't wash vegetables until serving time (unwashed produce keeps better).

Most, but not all, produce should be refrigerated in a crisper compartment or in plastic bags punched with a few air holes (husk corn before refrigerating it in a plastic bag).

Put potatoes in a cool, dark spot. Refrigeration turns them from starchy to sweet. Peaches and pears, like tomatoes, should be ripened at room temperature out of direct sun.

Before refrigerating cantaloupe, give it the fingernail test. If a fingernail easily pierces a melon seam, it's ripe. If the rind makes a crunching noise, leave the melon on the counter another day or two.

Cut a small plug in watermelon and peek inside. If the melon isn't red-ripe, replace the plug and leave the melon at room temperature for several days.

Don't be bashful about wanting to know varieties, either. Certain types of tomatoes and cucumbers, for example, are better for canning than others.

Find out when the produce was picked. Obviously, fresher is better, especially when it comes to peas and most varieties of sweet corn, which lose sweetness rapidly after harvest.

Sprouts small but nutritious, tasty

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Sprouts may be small but they are big on nutrients, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

Sprouts contain vitamins and minerals, are low in calories and are easier to digest than beans.

Sprouts can be grown at home in a jar or on a tray.

They also taste good inside casseroles, on sandwiches or topping off a salad.

Meringue crown of lemon torte

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Celebrate a summer birthday with this lush dessert, a variation of traditional lemon meringue pie. The same fluffy meringue and tangy filling top an easy one-bowl cake instead of a pastry shell.

LEMON MERINGUE TORTE

¼ cup margarine or butter
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
5 eggs
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup milk
¾ cup sugar
⅓ cup all-purpose flour
1 cup water
½ teaspoon shredded lemon peel
¼ cup lemon juice
1 tablespoon margarine or butter
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
½ cup sugar

In a mixer bowl beat ¼ cup butter with electric mixer for 30 seconds. Add the ½ cup sugar and vanilla; beat until fluffy. Separate 2 of the eggs. One at a time, beat the 2 egg yolks and 1 whole egg into butter mixture. Combine the 1 cup flour, baking powder and salt; add alternately with milk to beaten mixture. Beat until combined. Turn into greased and floured 9- by 1½-inch round baking pan. Bake in 350-degree oven for 30 minutes. Cool 10 minutes. Remove; cool.

For filling, separate remaining 2 eggs. Combine the ¾ cup sugar and 1-3rd cup flour. Stir in water, the 2 egg yolks and lemon peel. Cook and stir until bubbly; cook and stir 2 minutes more. Remove from heat. Stir in lemon juice and 1 tablespoon margarine until melted. Cover surface with waxed paper; cool.

Place cake on baking sheet. Spread filling over top. Beat the 4 egg whites and cream of tartar to soft peaks. Gradually add ⅓ cup sugar, beating to stiff peaks; spread over top and sides of cake. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 12 to 15 minutes.

DEAR ABBY

When writing to Abby, include full address!

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We discuss your column during lunchtime with the people I work with. In November of 1985 I wrote to you and enclosed a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply. I waited for months to hear from you, but no letter came, so I finally gave up.

What do you do with all those self-addressed, stamped envelopes? After collecting 1,000 of them, they amount to $220 in unused postage stamps. I hope you don't throw that kind of money into the wastebasket.

Enclosed you will find another self-addressed, stamped envelope, and I am betting at work that this letter will also be ignored. — EDELGARD BAHR, BEAVERTON, ORE.

DEAR EDELGARD BAHR: You are right; I have at least $220 in self-addressed, stamped envelopes. And do you know why? Because most of the envelopes are addressed to ABIGAIL VAN BUREN — not to the sender! And the rest are addressed to the sender, but instead of the name of the city, the sender has written "city" — with no clue to the city and state.

Then there are a number of people who state that they have enclosed a stamped, self-addressed envelope, but none is enclosed.

I repeat, every letter accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope is answered. And promptly.

And by the way, you neglected to enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope with this letter.

DEAR ABBY: I am illegitimate. I have known this all my life, but it has taken me 40 years to say it out loud. I grew up in a small town where everyone had two parents but me. I always felt inferior and wondered why I was so different and "incomplete." I used to ask my mother why I had no father, but she never answered me. She would become hysterical, so I never found out.

I am now in the process of getting my head together and need some answers. Do I have the right to ask my mother once and for all to tell me who my father was and something about him, even if it upsets her? I need to know in order to become completely healed. — IN THERAPY IN IOWA

DEAR IN THERAPY: Now that you are in therapy, you surely are aware that your mother has not been "healed" — and may never be, unless she chooses to get professional help as you did. Her hysterical reaction to your demanding to know who your father was is evidence that the mere mention of his name is painful to her. Discuss this with your therapist. Even though you have the "right" to know, please be patient with your mother, who unfortunately is still unable to deal with a very tragic part of her life.

DEAR ABBY: My ex-husband is remarrying a woman whose first name is Dorothy — same as mine. I have children, so I am keeping my married name (Johnson). After he marries, his wife's name will also be Dorothy Johnson.

I am the owner of an insurance policy on my ex-husband's life. This policy was purchased prior to our divorce, and I am the beneficiary. I am designated as "wife of the insured." Should this be changed to avoid a mix-up? — THE FIRST DOROTHY JOHNSON

DEAR FIRST: Yes. After your ex-husband marries Dorothy II, you will be known as the "former wife of the insured." Also, his new wife will be known as Mrs. Howard (or whatever his given name is) Johnson, and you will be known as Mrs. Dorothy Johnson.

Abigail Van Buren is a columnist for Universal Press Syndicate

Souffles are a snap

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — You don't have to be a gourmet cook to prepare a souffle, according to Donna Higgins.

Higgins, director of Del Monte Kitchens, says a few tips can make souffle preparation easier.

She recommends giving close attention to the preparation of egg whites in souffles.

"Egg whites should be stiff enough to stand in upright peaks," she says. "At room temperature, egg whites will expand to greater volume more quickly than if they are chilled.

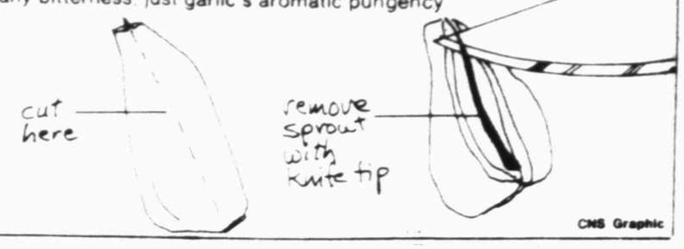

"Finally, try adding a pinch of cream of tartar to help egg whites hold their stiffness."

How to avoid bitter garlic oils

Here's how to do it:

1. Cut the garlic in half.
2. Pry out the green sprout and discard.
3. Remainder of clove can be used without any bitterness, just garlic's aromatic pungency.

Major bridge events in Europe have long been sponsored by commercial organizations, but the U.S has lagged behind in that regard. This might be changing. The American Contract Bridge League's Golden Anniversary Pair Championship, to be played nationwide on Sept. 15, will be sponsored by Royal Viking Line, which has been very active in promoting bridge on their cruises.

This hand was played aboard a cruise ship some while ago. West's double was optional, showing a no trump type hand, and East elected to make the best of a bad lot by passing.

West got off to the unfortunate lead of the ace of clubs, then shifted to the jack of diamonds, covered by the king and taken by East's ace. The diamond continuation was ruffed, and a low heart toward dummy's jack was won by the queen.

Obviously, West must attack the table's spade entry before the clubs can be put to use. How should he go about it?

If West leads a spade honor, declarer will win in hand and later finesse the ten of spades if necessary. West's best chance is to hope that, if his partner does not hold the king, he at least holds the nine of spades, so he must shift to a low spade!

That gives declarer a chance to go wrong. If he inserts the table's ten, all will be well. However, declarer actually chose to play for split spade honors and hope that West held the nine. So he followed low, and was forced to capture East's nine with the king. After cashing the queen of clubs, declarer did well to lead the king of trumps, pinning East's ten as West grabbed the ace. But now a spade honor led to the inevitable one down. Declarer won in dummy and tried to discard his spade loser on the king of clubs, but West's ruff was the death knell.

WATCHES

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

Mississippi girl wins Miss Teen USA title

EL PASO (AP) — Kristi Addis' victory in the Miss Teen USA pageant is the high point in a lifetime of competition, her parents say.

The 16-year-old blonde from Holcombe, Miss., who won the beauty pageant Tuesday night during a live television broadcast, is an all-state basketball player and has won the national championship in baton twirling five years in a row, said Miss Addis' mother, Geraldine Deloach.

"All this competition has made her able to withstand the pressure," Mrs. Deloach said. "Plus, she's a dedicated Christian and a hard worker."

Her father, Carl F. Deloach, said Miss Addis has engaged in competition of all types all her life.

Immediately after winning, Miss Addis said, "I feel great. I think the interview had a lot to do with it because all the girls were equally pretty. There were 51 beautiful girls."

She said she hopes to be a broadcast journalist and would like to write a novel.

The 1st runnerup was Miss North Carolina, 17-year-old Peggy Blackwell of Fayetteville. Miss Louisiana, Bobbie Brown, 17, of Baton Rouge, was 2nd runnerup; Jannetta Coffman, the 17-year-old Miss Oklahoma from Oklahoma City was 3rd runnerup; and Miss North Dakota, DayNa Decker, a 17-year-old from Fargo was was 4th runnerup.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sean Penn has until Friday to do some explaining to a prosecutor who thinks the pugnacious actor may be violating the terms under which his jail sentence was postponed.

Penn was sentenced to 60 days in jail for parole violation but granted a delay July 6 to finish film projects in West Germany and New York. Unconfirmed sightings have put him out on the town in New York and Los Angeles.

"I'm outraged that he is wandering around the country having a good time when he is supposed to be working," Deputy City Attorney Alice Hand said Tuesday.

A warrant gives Penn until Friday to explain his whereabouts.

Jeff Auerbach, vice president of Streen-Greenblatt Productions, which is filming Penn's latest movie, "Judgment in Berlin," said Monday, "Penn is in Berlin right now and arrived there the middle of last week."

Penn was on probation in connection with a nightclub scuffle. He was sentenced to jail after being charged with reckless driving and punching an extra on the set of the movie "Colors."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Dynasty" star Joan Collins told a divorce court she resisted marriage proposals from Peter Holm until the former Swedish rock star signed a prenuptial pact safeguarding her income.

"I was still absolutely adamant that I wanted an agreement that would protect my income if there was a breakup," Miss Collins testified Tuesday, recalling Holm's initial opposition to the document.

Miss Collins, 54, and Holm, 40, testified Tuesday in the first day of the trial to end their 13-month marriage. Holm is seeking $80,000 a month, pending a final settlement.

Holm told the court he doesn't consider the pact valid. "It was just something between Joan and me," he said.

Holm's attorney, Frank Steinschriber, maintains the pact was informal, compensating Holm while the couple was married. Celebrity lawyer Marvin Mitchelson, representing Miss Collins, insists it is a binding agreement.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Irish tenor Dennis Day, who appeared on the Jack Benny television show and recorded such standards as "Danny Boy," has been diagnosed as suffering from Lou Gehrig's disease, a spokeswoman said.

Day

The disease, which forced the baseball great Gehrig into retirement, is a rare and incurable nerve disorder.

Day's spokeswoman, Kitty Davis, said Tuesday the 71-year-old singer "isn't giving up or giving in."

He missed an appearance at the Irish Fair in Burbank, Calif., last month. Ms. Davis said then that Day had to cancel due to leg and back pain he began experiencing during a vacation in Maui with his wife Peg.

After tests at the Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, Calif., doctors determined Day suffers from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease, Ms. Davis said.

Day plans to release a single record with proceeds going to research on the disease, she said.

Day has recorded songs including "Danny Boy," "Peg of my Heart," and "Clancy Lowered the Boom."

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Richard Egan, who spent much of his film career playing rugged leading men in action and western movies, died Monday of cancer. He was 65.

Egan

His 33-film career included "A Summer Place," "The Damned Don't Cry," "One Minute To Zero," "Demetrius and the Gladiators," "The View From Pompey's Head," "Love Me Tender," "The Revolt of Mamie Stover," "The Hunters," "Pollyanna," "The Destructors," and "The Sweet Creek County War."

In the 1959 movie "A Summer Place," Egan played the father of Sandra Dee, whose character became pregnant after a fling with a handsome boy portrayed by Troy Donahue.

Egan also starred in two short-lived television series, "Empire" in 1962 and "Redigo" in 1964. Both were contemporary Westerns.

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack Lescoulie, a founding personality on NBC's "Today" show, died today of cancer in a Memphis Hospital, NBC said. He was 75.

Lescoulie was second banana to Dave Garroway on the original "Today" show in 1952, handling light features on the morning program.

His last regular appearances on the program were in 1963, when Hugh Downs was anchor.

Dollar slides

LONDON (AP) — The dollar retreated in thin European trading early today as exchange markets awaited word on the U.S. inflation rate. Gold bullion rose.

Traders said the dollar was likely to fluctuate within a narrow range until the midday release of the U.S. Consumer Price Index for June. Speculation that the index would show a sharp rise in inflation put the dollar and U.S. bond markets under pressure in New York late Tuesday.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with rates in Europe late Tuesday:

1.5412 Swiss francs down from 1.5452.

6.1850 French francs down from 6.1925.

2.0927 Dutch guilders down from 2.0960.

1,343.75 Italian lire down from 1,346.25.

The British pound was fractionally higher against the dollar trading at $1.6040 compared with $1.6010 late Tuesday.

The dollar edged up in Tokyo to 152.35 Japanese yen compared with 152.30 yen on Tuesday. In later London trading Wednesday, the dollar was quoted slightly lower, at 152.20 yen.

GOLD

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $454.45 a troy ounce at midmorning, up from $452 late Tuesday.

In Zurich, gold traded at a bid of $454.20, up from $452.50.

Gold closed earlier in Hong Kong at a bid of $454.96, up from $453.14.

Silver bullion traded in London at a bid of $7.74 a troy ounce, up from $7.65.

Opinions vary widely on oil price direction

By STEWART TAGGART
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — While crude oil price futures have been climbing amid fears of supply disruptions in the Persian Gulf, oil experts disagree on how high prices may go.

Monday's price for West Texas Intermediate crude closed at $22.20 a barrel. Prices for the U.S. benchmark crossed the $22-per-barrel mark last week for the first time in 18 months.

"Technically, if there is a threat of interruption of supply (from the Persian Gulf), there really isn't a top to the market," said Al Ballard, manager of the Houston office of Broder Oil Futures.

About 8 percent of the non-Communist world's supplies are shipped through the Persian Gulf, with most of the oil going to Japan and Western Europe.

Because of fears of Iranian attacks, the U.S. plans to fly Kuwaiti tankers under U.S. flags and offer them military protection.

While analysts generally agree future prices will depend largely on how high hostilities escalate in the Gulf, they vary in their assessment. Most agree Persian Gulf tensions have added $2 to $4 to futures prices of West Texas Intermediate crude, the U.S. benchmark.

The premium reflects fear and uncertainty over whether oil can continue to be transported safely through the constricted waterway, and some analysts say a disruption of Persian Gulf supplies would cause the price of oil to shoot up sharply.

"You are looking at something like double the current price if there is all out war," said Aivars Krasts, vice president of planning and analysis for Conoco Inc. in Houston. "It all will depend on the length of it, the extent of it, and how much oil gets out anyway."

Krasts says he doesn't anticipate a complete shutoff of Persian Gulf oil to world markets because Saudi Arabia and Kuwait have access to land-based pipelines that could carry some oil currently shipped from the area by tanker.

"(But) the alternative routes are not invulnerable," said Krasts. "If they (the Iranians) become determined to disrupt supplies, there is a lot more they can do."

Tony Lentini, spokesman for Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. in Houston, says a disruption of supplies from the Persian Gulf could send oil prices up to $55 to $60 per barrel.

But Dale Steffes, founder of Houston-based Planning & Forecasting Consultants, says the present Persian Gulf uncertainties are unlikely to raise oil prices much from what he feels are their currently overvalued levels.

"It could go to $25 on a temporary basis, but I think it will fall to the $18 to $20 range," said Steffes. He predicted the Saudis would boost their volume before allowing the price to reach $25.

"The thing they don't want to see is exploration start up," Steffes said. OPEC's benchmark price for oil has been set at $18, a level that largely discouraged exploration by non-OPEC producers.

Steffes says a sustained $22-per-barrel price could cause the number of active drilling rigs in the United States to rise to 1,000 by Sept. 1.

The Baker Hughes rig count, a widely watched index of U.S. drilling activity, stood at 891 as of July 13, up roughly 34 percent from its low of 663 in July 1986. The rig count reached its zenith of 4,530 in 1981.

Ike Kerridge, who tabulates the index, says the current count is a long way from enabling the United States to find new sources of oil and gas to replace what it is now producing.

"If we are going to be less dependent on imported oil, we ought to be running 2,600 rigs," Kerridge said.

Economists: Consumer price jump no threat of resurgent inflation

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, paced by a rebound in energy costs, rose at an annual rate of 5.4 percent for the first half of 1987, the government said today.

That gain — the steepest since the first half of 1982 — compares to the minuscule 1.1 percent inflation rate at the retail level for all of 1986 and suggested that inflation this year will likely be a full percentage point or so above the roughly 4 percent rate that prevailed from 1982 through 1985.

For June, prices rose a moderate 0.4 percent as costs for gasoline and food rose significantly.

That gain, equivalent to an annual inflation rate of 4.3 percent, followed a 0.3 percent rise in May and 0.4 percent increases in each of the preceeding three months. Prices had risen 0.7 percent in January.

Gasoline prices rose 1.4 percent in June, more than triple the 0.4 percent rise in May. Electricity costs were up 2.5 percent.

For the first six months of 1987, energy costs rose at an annual rate of 16.7 percent, regaining most of the sharp 19.7 percent decline of the year before.

Food prices were up 0.7 percent in June after a 0.5 percent rise in May. Prices rose significantly last month for beef, pork, fruit and vegetables. So far this year, food prices have risen 4.4 percent.

Food and energy costs were expected to moderate in the months to come. Subtracting food and energy, consumer prices rose 0.2 percent in June.

Most economists now say that a major resurgence of prices, thought possible just a few months ago, seems doubtful for the rest of 1987.

One reason for economists' new optimism about inflation is the recent firming of the U.S. dollar against other major key currencies, recovering from a nosedive that had threatened to erode sharply Americans' purchasing powers.

A weaker dollar can help ease this nation's trade deficit, a record $166.3 billion last year, by making foreign goods more expensive at home and U.S. goods more competitive abroad. But too fast a fall in the currency can trigger an inflationary spiral.

The Labor Department offered these other specifics on June price activity:

- Grocery store prices were up 0.8 percent; restaurant meal prices gained 0.5 percent.

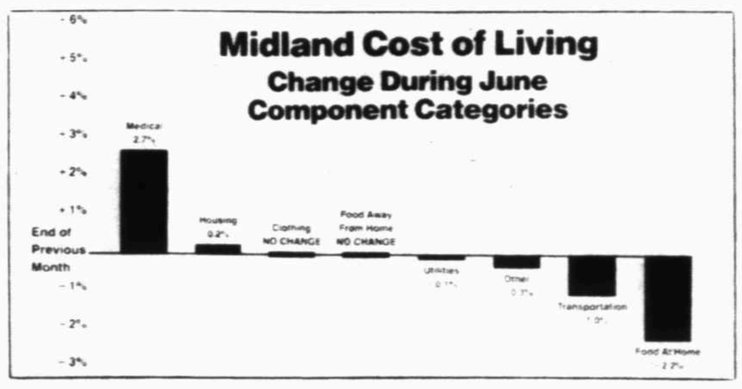

Beef prices rose 2.1 percent; pork prices jumped 2.3 percent; fruit and vegetable prices advanced 3.9 percent. Poultry prices dropped 1.0 percent.

- Natural gas prices rose 0.4 percent. Fuel oil prices fell 0.3 percent on the heels of a 1.3 percent drop in May.
- New car prices rose 0.4 percent. Used car prices jumped 1.1 percent.
- Clothing prices overall dipped 0.8 percent.
- Medical care costs rose 0.7 percent.
- Housing expenses were up 0.3 percent.

The index for all products listed in the Consumer Price Index stood at 340.1 for June, compared to 327.9 for June 1986 and 100 for the base period of 100. Thus, a market basket of goods that cost $10 in 1967 cost $32.79 last June and $34.01 last month.

Unlike other figures in the report, the index itself is not adjusted to remove predictable recurring seasonal factors.

Retiring Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker, whose conservative money management policies have been widely credited with helping tame inflation from the double-digit levels of the beginning of the decade, said the stabilizing of the dollar helped ease some of the central bank's concerns about renewed inflation.

Summertime: The living is cheaper in Midland

From Staff Reports

Lower food costs and transportation expenses made it cheaper top live in Midland in June than in May, according to cost of living figures released by ClayDesta National Bank this morning.

A 2.2 percent decline in the cost of food for home preparation and a 1 percent decline in transportation costs last month offset more expensive medical care and increased housing costs. Utility bills were down slightly while the price of clothing and food away from home remained stable.

The overall cost of living index was down 0.3 percent in June after an increase in May. The six-month annualized rate of deflation equals 0.9 percent.

Over the last year, the cost of living in Midland has declined 2.4 percent, with 0.4 percent of the decline coming in the last six months.

In Odessa, the cost of living decline 0.6 percent during June. The annualized rate of inflation in Odessa equaled 4.5 percent. Only medical and transportation costs posted modest gains of 0.7 percent in Odessa and the price of eating out remained flat. The other five categories of goods and services in the index all declined in Odessa in June.

During the past year, the cost of living in Odessa has risen 1.8 percent, wiping out a half-point decline in the last six months by increasing 2.3 percent.

In specific areas Midland saw:

- At-home food costs drop 2.2 percent, led by produce and shelf items which declined 8.8 and 3.7 percent respectively. An 8.3 percent decline in coffee prices paced shelf item declines.

Modest increases were seen in meat (1.3 percent) and alcohol (2.3 percent) during the month.

- Overall transportation costs decreased 1.0 percent, with a slight upswing in auto insurance costs offset by mixed, but generally lower, trends in gasoline prices in June.
- Lower electric bills pulled total utility costs down 0.1 percent during June despite stable rates for gas and water service in the city.
- June was the second consecutive month that the cost of dining out stayed flat.
- June's stable clothing expense followed two months of declines.
- Medical costs were boosted by higher costs for both doctor's care and non-prescription drugs. In the last six months, medical costs have risen 5.6 percent.
- Housing costs reversed a three-month trend in June by rising 0.2 percent.

Greenspan backs wider bank powers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alan Greenspan, nominated to succeed Paul Volcker as chairman of the Federal Reserve, sounded very much like his predecessor on issues ranging from Third World debt to the need for vigilance against inflation.

But he parted company with Volcker on banking deregulation, signaling a willingness to be much bolder than Volcker in granting banks expanded powers.

Greenspan's comments came during a 3½-hour confirmation hearing on Tuesday before the Senate Banking Committee, at which he was praised by committee members.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis. and committee chairman, predicted Greenspan would quickly win Senate approval even though he said he may vote against him in part because of his views on banking deregulation.

Following the hearings, economists who closely follow the Fed said Greenspan had handled himself well during his first public comments since he was nominated for the Fed post by President Reagan on June 2.

"There were no surprises. He took a hard line on inflation, which is what you would expect the chairman of the Federal Reserve to do," said Frank McCormick, senior economist at Bank of America in San Francisco.

Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers in New York, said Greenspan "said all the right things."

Greenspan's testimony came as Volcker was making one of his last congressional appearances as Fed chairman, presenting the central bank's semiannual monetary policy report.

Asked if he had any advice for his predecessor, Volcker said Greenspan should "scratch, fight, complain — whatever is necessary to make the point to Congress and the American people" that a politically independent central bank is critically important to the country's economic health.

Greenspan, who headed the president's Council of Economic Advisers in the Nixon and Ford administrations, heard the same exhortation directly from senators during his confirmation hearing.

Proxmire noted that for the past four decades the Fed has been headed by people of the stature of William McChesney Martin, Arthur Burns and Volcker, chairmen who did not hesitate to assert the Fed's independence.

Proxmire said Greenspan might find this particularly difficult since he will be heading a Fed board in which every member has been appointed by Reagan.

But Greenspan assured committee members that he would follow the example set by other Fed chairman.

"It is important for the Federal Reserve to retain its independence, and I will do everything I can to make sure that occurs," he said.

Volcker, who turned down administration overtures to serve another four-year term, gave a generally upbeat assessment of the economy's prospects, pointing to an improving trade deficit and an expected big drop in the federal budget deficit for this year.

But he said much more needs to be done, especially in making sure the budget deficit continues on a downward track.

Greenspan, echoing familiar Volcker themes, pledged to make inflation-fighting his No. 1 goal and warned about the continued threat from high federal budget deficits.

However, Greenspan did depart from his predecessor on the issue of banking deregulation, signaling much more willingness to allow banks to expand into areas outside of traditional banking such as securities underwriting and insurance, a change that Volcker has opposed.

October lease nominations more than double April sale

AUSTIN (AP) — Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says increased interest in oil and gas leases on state land indicates future increases in drilling activity.

Mauro said Tuesday there had been a 147 percent jump in offers received for the October oil and gas lease sale.

"The oil and gas industry has shown increased interest in leasing state tracts for exploration, nominating 565 tracts for the upcoming October sale, compared with only 229 tracts for last April's lease sale," Mauro said. "More importantly, this big increase is a continued indication of future increases in drilling activity, which would ultimately mean more jobs for Texans."

The April 1987 lease sale brought in $6.6 million in total bids on 53 tracts totaling 30,285 acres.

Unlucky winners trash mink coats in promotion

Pitts

Giving away mink coats is normally not a problem — unless, that is, you try it by third class mail. CONNIE'S FASHIONS, which operates two stores in Midland and two in Odessa, recently initiated a promotion to give away a $1,500 mink coat at each location. Over 6,660 fliers were mailed out locally with a scratch-off portion that informed customers if they had won the mink coat or received a large discount.

Of the four coats set to be given away, only one was claimed. The lucky winner, by the way, was Sylvia Robertson of Odessa.

Now for the rest of the story. Connie's Fashions operates 18 stores in Texas. All the stores, including Lubbock, Abilene, Big Spring ran the promotion, and Sylvia Robertson was the only one to bring her winning letter to the store.

"We were disappointed that we did not to give away all the coats, but we will try again," said Stephanie Large, manager of Connie's Fashion at Midland Plaza, who added that they would only need to buy one more fur coat to duplicate the customer appreciation sale and promotion.

MIDLAND PARK MALL has finished counting the change from the fountains (wishing wells) and will add the entire take to the $500 recently raised by the Ugly Tie Contest sponsored by the Mall, KMID-TV, KWES-102 FM and the Midland Reporter-Telegram for the Saragosa Relief Fund.

The contest was won by Sam Flores, president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, with a yellow and pink flowery tie.

Attention shooting enthusiasts, strap on your six-shooter, shotgun or other side arm. LOVE'S SHOOTING RANGE, southwest of Midland, is open for public rifle, pistol, black powder, archery, trap and skeet shooting.

Weekly shooting leagues, company and organization shooting parties and registered trap shoots are held at the range, according to owner Gene Love.

Shooting instruction — both beginners' and refresher courses — are available in action pistol, rifle and skeet and trap shooting.

The range is open daily from 8 a.m. until dark on County Road 170 West, 2½ miles east of County Road 1270.

Midland 7-ELEVEN stores will soon host a variety of events from roof-a-thons, cook-offs, tournaments and car washes for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. 7-Eleven stores have raised more than $49 million in its 12 year association with the Jerry Lewis Telethon. This year, Midland-Odessa stores have pledged to raise $34,000 for MDA.

The first event supported by 7-Eleven for MDA will be Saturday's water volleyball tournament at The Clusters apartments. Play begins at 10 a.m. and will run all day. 7-Eleven will be vending food and refreshments with proceeds going to the MDA.

Bill Jones, who originally opened the Steak Out on North Big Spring last year and closed shortly thereafter as a result of management problems, is going with a new concept at the same location.

"HUNGRY HOMBRE fills a gap between a fast food and a sit down mexican restaurant," said Jones. "We will offer all the traditional mexican dishes with service as fast as fast-food."

The strictly mexican menu, which Jones developed himself, includes items from the house specialty, a $6.49 mesquite charbroiled fajita dinner to .99 cent burritos.

While one restaurant on North Big Spring opens its doors, another has closed its doors. OCEAN'S SEAFOOD has closed its location at 2800 N. Big Spring, but the original location at 4306 Neely remains open.

The GOOD HOUSEKEEPING SHOP, an appliance store on Front Street, has closed. Rumor has it that MAJOR VIDEO, a video rental store, is looking to locate in Midland. Rumor also has it that BENTLEY'S, a Lubbock men's fashion store formed by the former operation manager for Anthony's is looking to locate within a year or so in Midland and Odessa, with possibly two stores in Midland. SHOPPER'S HOTLINE, rumored to be moving, will reportedly remodel and remain at its present location.

New businesses include: RAMOS AUTOMOTIVE REPAIR, 3005 W. Industrial...DOMAIN ENTERPRISES, an oil field tubulars location operated by Don Spain, at 4001 W. Industrial...R & D REPAIR, an appliance, TV and stereo repair shop at 1308 Midkiff.

Candidates share remarks on North

By EVANS WITT

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Dole isn't sure Oliver North is a hero, but the Senate minority leader gave $100 to North's legal defense fund anyway.

Pete du Pont says the former White House aide did more to explain foreign affairs to Americans "than the State Department has in 60 years."

But Paul Simon loves to denounce North and to get booed in the process, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson worries the truth may never be known if North "throws his whole body on the grenade."

When North held the nation's attention for six July days with his televised testimony to the congressional Iran-Contra committees, the men and women who would be president also tuned in to his testimony.

And they've been talking about North on the campaign trail in the past few days, even though North's tale of Iranian arms sales and covert support for the Nicaraguan Contras was replaced by John Poindexter's low-key description of what was never said to President Reagan.

The presidential hopefuls' reactions have broken down pretty much along party lines. And everyone has been cognizant of polls that show high public regard for North.

Perhaps the most unabashed North backer has been the Rev. Pat Robertson, who calls North a "great American hero," adding that the real scandal is "the fact that the Democratic-controlled Congress and much of the national media don't want to lift one finger to liberate a communist-Soviet base in the North American hemisphere."

Paul Laxalt, the former Nevada senator, first friend to Reagan and GOP hopeful, said, "The positive reaction toward Ollie North is unbelievable.

"He's probably done more to further the Contra cause than all the rest of us combined, including the president," Laxalt said during an appearance in Chattanooga, Tenn., this week.

Du Pont, the former Delaware governor who is trying to grab the GOP presidential nomination, condemned North for lying to Congress, but he said North's testimony did have a positive effect.

Dole revealed Monday that last year he sent North's legal fund $100, after North was fired as a White House aide by Reagan when the diversion of Iranian arms sales proceeds to the Nicaraguan Contras was revealed.

"I sent it because I thought he had provided great service to America," Dole said in Concord, N.H. "He was fired by the president but I felt that he had worn the uniform with pride and from what I knew at the time, he had a good record and I knew he had a high-priced lawyer."

Dole got off a bigger applause line about North for the partisan crowd of Young Republicans: "I believe he may have been shredding a lot of things, but last week he was shredding senators."

Shredding popped up in the Democratic hopefuls' comments about North, but the allusions to North's admitted destruction of documents were dramatically different.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado, who is looking at a bid for the Democratic nomination, said that while Reagan is celebrating the birthday of the Constitution, "Ollie North was in the basement ripping it up."

Jackson, also seeking the Democratic nomination, said North was telling half-truths. He said the nation may never get the whole truth "if Oliver North throws his whole body on the grenade. ...He has become a national martyr. ...I see him as the fall guy in a bigger game show."

Simon, the bow-tied senator from Illinois who would be the Democratic presidential nominee, actually loves the boos he gets for denouncing North.

"No one deserves the hero rank who admits he lied, he deceived, he shredded evidence, he violated the laws of the nation he swore to uphold," Simon said last week to scattered boos in Indianapolis.

His reaction was to repeat a favorite campaign theme: "I am less willing to be twisted by public opinion polls than a lot of other candidates. ...I think people want that. I think they want someone who is genuine, who is not simply constantly trying to figure out what the latest polls say."

Mario Cuomo, perhaps a little liberated by not being in the presidential race, had some even harsher things to say about North and Poindexter's appeal to higher values.

"Every madman who ever took over a country started by saying, 'I'm better than the law, I'm wiser than the law, I don't care what the rule says,'" the New York governor declared on Thursday.

Cuomo added he couldn't have succeeded with a denial of knowledge like Reagan's denials about the diversion of money to the Contras.

If a Cuomo aide "had shredded documents and made a deal" and not told the governor. "They would run me out of Queens on a rail. ...But the rules are different, I guess, if you're president."

NATION IN BRIEF

Senate urges alternative to reflagging tankers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although the reflagging of Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian gulf has already begun, the Senate has passed a resolution calling on President Reagan to try to come up with other means of protecting Gulf shipping.

The resolution, approved Tuesday on a voice vote, calls on Reagan to "pursue alternatives to the reflagging of Kuwaiti vessels, including the leasing or chartering to Kuwait of vessels of the United States domestic tanker fleet, as a means of accomplishing United States objectives in the Persian Gulf."

The measure was sponsored by Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said in a floor speech that U.S. foreign policy is at a "fateful crossroads" in the Persian Gulf.

"Given the decision to go forward, I recall the sage advice of Teddy Roosevelt, 'now is the time to speak softly while carrying a big stick,'" Pell said. "I hope that the administration will recall that advice as they contemplate the dangers inherent in our involvement in the Persian Gulf."

Japan supports Star Wars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japan has become the fifth U.S. ally to formally support the Star Wars effort.

After 10 months of negotiations, the United States and Japan signed an accord Tuesday authorizing Japanese industry to participate in the Strategic Defense Initiative research program.

Under the agreement, signed at the Pentagon by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Japanese Ambassador Nobuo Matsunaga, Japanese industry will be eligible to bid directly on Pentagon contracts, to form joint ventures with American companies, or to be hired as subcontractors by U.S. firms.

The Japanese government had not made any commitment to participate directly or to fund Star Wars research, said an official who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity.

Although the program is facing deep budget cuts on Capitol Hill, the Pentagon is spending more than $3.5 billion on the research during the current fiscal year.

NRC set for internal probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top congressional investigator has been appointed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to conduct an internal probe of alleged misconduct by NRC officials.

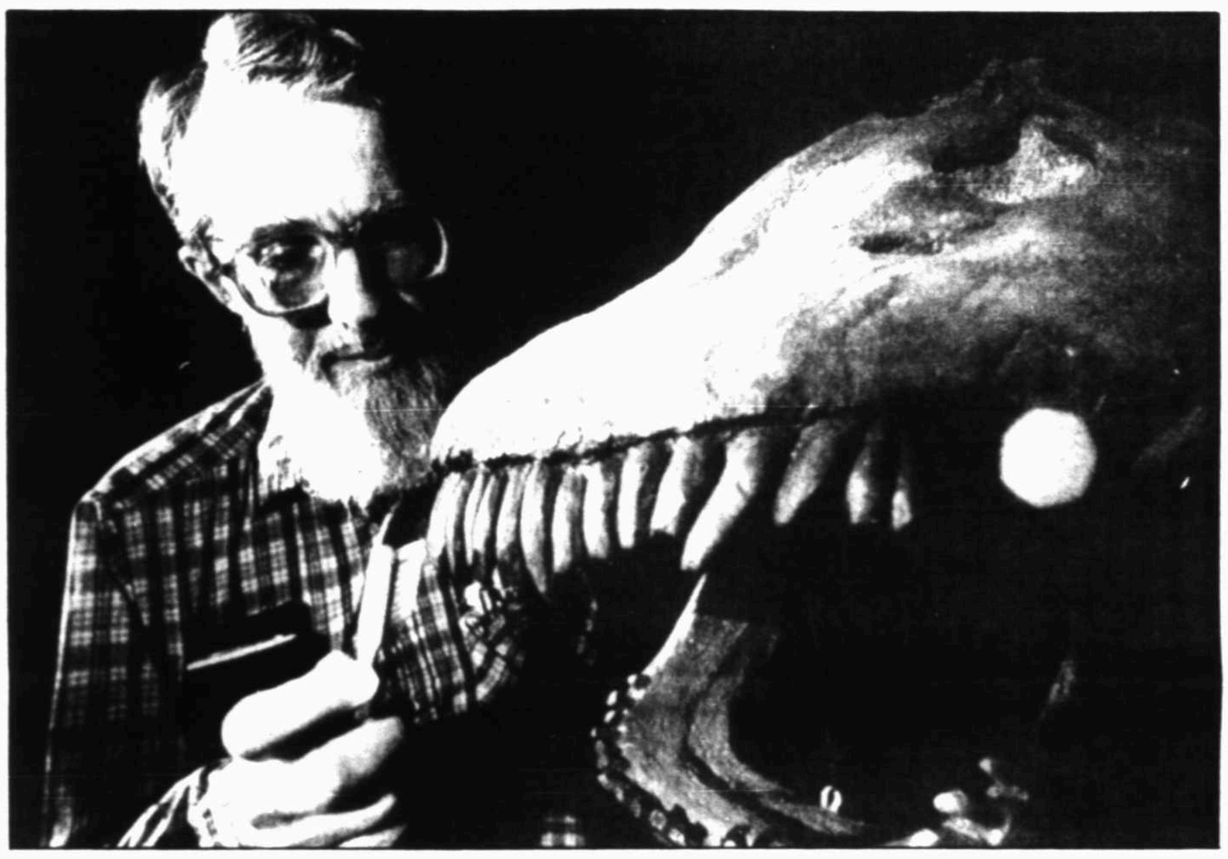

David C. Williams, special investigations director of the General Accounting Office, was named Tuesday by NRC Chairman Lando Zech after the selection was endorsed by key members of congressional oversight committees.

Williams, who served previously with Army intelligence, the Secret Service and the Labor Department's Office of Labor Racketeering, will investigate three areas of alleged collusion between NRC officials and the nuclear power industry.

New evidence suggests that the Apatosaurus was probably a land animal with an elephant-like trunk, rather than aquatic, as has been thought.

Judge rules Hammett's Maltese falcon exists

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Looking out over a glowering effigy of author Dashiell Hammett's Maltese falcon, a judge ruled Tuesday before the moot Court of Historical Review that the famed jewel-encrusted bird of fiction is an actual relic that exists somewhere.

"I now find that the legend of the Maltese falcon is authentic and will remain so until the end of time," Municipal Court Judge George Choppellas told a courtroom full of laughing, cheering spectators.

Quoting detective Sam Spade's parting words in "The Maltese Falcon," written in San Francisco in 1930, the judge intoned, "That's the stuff that dreams are made of."

The question of whether the bird in the novel is an authentic relic was settled at one of the more outrageous sessions of the mock court that looks at history, rewrites or revises it, and occasionally stomps on it.

The opposing lawyers, Frank Winston and Public Defender Peter Keane, insulted one another, objected to everything, ignored the judge and leaped up and down with direct pleas to the audience.

"I object to his objection," hollered Keane routinely. "In fact, my colleague is objectionable."

"I object to everything he objected to," replied Winston, as the judge indicated each side had a good point.

Police Chief Frank Jordan testified gravely that he was convinced the priceless falcon is somewhere in San Francisco's Chinatown and the matter would be thoroughly investigated.

PTL to answer questions from creditors

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Auditors' discovery of unreported payments to PTL founders Jim and Tammy Bakker could heighten the drama at a bankruptcy court hearing that already has been moved to a theater to handle the expected crowd.

The normally routine court procedure set for today was designed to let a representative of the company in debt be placed under oath and answer questions from creditors.

In this case, however, the company is a tax-exempt religious organization with a TV network, a church and a Christian theme park. And the number of potential debtors, including Bakker himself, is approximately 121,400.

There is also a leadership conflict. Among those planning to attend were ministry members who want to get rid of the Rev. Jerry Falwell, who took over as board chairman after Bakker's downfall in a sex scandal in March.

Neither Falwell nor Bakker was expected to attend, although Bakker lawyer W. Ryan Hovis said Tuesday he would have some questions for PTL chief operating officer Harry Hargrave.

Bakker claims the ministry has reneged on an agreement to give him a house in Tega Cay, and may owe him royalties, Hovis said.

Some information from an internal audit of PTL also will be raised, according to The Washington Post, which reported today that auditors found hundreds of thousands of dollars in previously unknown payments.

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

After a warm and overcast morning, the weather cleared and grew hot with temperatures in the 80s.

Quaker James Todd: "After dinner read till meeting time, then went to the meeting took a turn in the State (House) Yard with J.P., S.W., and L.W., then drank tea and rode to Harrowgate. Back by half past seven ... then walked in the State Yard and spent the Evening with A.P."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

The Virginia delegates in Congress wrote an unusually lengthy letter to deputy Gov. Randolph concerning indents of interests.

CONVENTION TODAY

The Convention was adjourned until Monday morning, following a week of solid accomplishment.

On Monday, the Convention had agreed to the Connecticut Compromise — proportional representation and money bills to originate in the House, equal representation in the Senate. After an acrimonious flare-up late Monday, an uneffectual caucus of the delegates opposed to an equal vote in the Senate, and some grumbling, the Convention had put its toughest issue behind it and was making rapid progress on an outlined frame of government which could be given to a small committee to flesh out.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson recorded Mr. Sherman's "punishment" for sneaking home early. "Embarked (from New York) at 8 o'clock on Board Capt. Allen. Fair wind and agreeable Passage, tho Mr. Sherman Sea Sick, arrived at Newfield 5 o'clock." He arrived home in Stratford at 8 p.m., and found the family well.

George Washington got up early, and left Philadelphia with Gen. Mifflin at 5 a.m. to ride to Spring Mills. The party dined at Mifflin's country seat before returning to the city. The general wrote Chevalier John Paul Jones a note asking him to deliver a small package to Lafayette, and to tender the general's best regards to the Count de Rochambeau, Marquise de Chastellux and others.

Benjamin Franklin also wrote Jones, promising to send the papers Jones needs to France in care of Jefferson, and asking Jones to give Jefferson Franklin's regards.

Daniel Carroll observed his 57th birthday.

LOOKING BACK

Vineyards and Bees

At Spring Mill, 13 miles northwest of Philadelphia, Peter Legaux meticulously recorded the day's weather statistics for his meteorological tables in the Columbian Magazine.

Legaux's routine was enlivened that morning when, according to his diary (still in family hands in 1898), "Gen. Washington, Gen. Mifflin and four others of the Convention did us the honor of paying us a visit in order to see our vineyard and bee house. In this they found great delight, asked a number of questions, and testified their highest approbation with my manner of managing bees."

George Washington's diary entry for July 22 reveals that he left Philadelphia at "5 o'clock A.M. Breakfasted at Genl. Mifflin's. Rode up with him & others to the Spring Mills and returned to Genl. Mifflin's for Dinner." Washington's route from Market Street took him out Ridge Road to the village called Falls of Schuylkill and the stone Mifflin mansion in today's East Falls neighborhood of Philadelphia. The house eventually became a beer garden and was pulled down in 1892 to make way for rows of houses.

After breakfast, the expedition continued northwest on "the Ridge" climbing the hills of Manayunk and Roxborough to Barren Hill Road in newly erected Montgomery County. There, near the site of Lafayette's 1778 encounter with the British, they turned left and rode about a mile down to Spring Mill on the Schuylkill River.

Mount Joy, Legaux's stone, gambrel-roofed house, stands today above Hector Street in Conshohocken below the Spring Hill Volunteer Fire Co., the current owner. Terraces which exposed Legaux's vines to the sun and a stone-faced vault carved into one of the slopes can still be seen much as they were when Brissot, Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, Wansey and other travelers as well as they delegates from the Convention visited him. Until Dec. 1, 1985, Legaux's great-great-grandson lived there with his large family.

Fish reels fisherman in OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Brian Bird went to Lake Overholser for a leisurely battle with the fish, and wound up battling for his life.

Bird, 24, hooked a flathead catfish Tuesday that he estimated weighed 40 pounds. When Bird decided to give up after a 10-minute fight with the fish, he was caught in a violent undertow just below the dam.

Bird was pulled under water briefly at least twice before swiming to a sandbar, where he was rescued two hours later by firefighters.

Bird said that after hooking the big one, his line became entangled with another line below him so he threw his rod down to some fishermen below him, ran below the dam and began trying to reel it in.

Instead, the fish reeled Bird in.

The lake suddenly dropped off over Bird's head. He was carried into the turbulent water where other fishermen said they saw his head bob like a cork.

"He went under for awhile, and I thought he'd drowned," said witness Linda Ware.

Bird let the fish take his gear and swam 50 yards to a small island. A fireman lowered himself by rope from the dam to the sandbar, then helped hoist Bird to safety.
