Shuttle landing looks 'on target'

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle Columbia sailed on toward Monday's full-mission landing after officials decided there was no reason to fear the blustering New Mexico winds. "We have done 100 percent of the activities we had scheduled," the astronauts were told.

"We're going to make it more than 100 percent," said pilot C. Gordon Fullerton.

And commander Jack R. Lousma chimed in: "Its not 100 percent without a good landing...and we're going to do that too."

Touchdown was set for 12:27 p.m. MST on a desert runway on the White Sands Missile Range. After that, just one more test flight remains before the shuttle begins operational missions late this year.

There was praise all around Saturday after the astronauts fired an engine to change into a slightly elliptical orbit.

"With the completion of the OMS (orbital maneuvering system)...you're back on the timeline. It looks like we're ready for a 100 percent mission," said capcom George Nelson.

And flight director Harold Draughon said scientists got "all or more than they ever hoped for," out of the voyage.

There had been concern that a desert storm might prohibit a Monday landing, but NASA management looked at weather forecasts Saturday and decided to bring Lousma and Fullerton home on schedule. A Sunday landing had been discussed — even Tuesday or Wednesday — but the decision was: "a nominal landing Monday at White Sands."

The shuttle was getting along just fine with its troubled radio equipment. Just one out of four "downlink" S-band channels was working, a minor disappointment among major achievements.

"Our objective was threefold: to go up, stay in orbit 7 days, and come down safely," said Glynn S. Lunney, NASA's shuttle program manager. "I'm just tickled pink with the overall progress of the mission."

The chief forecaster for White Sands Missile Range, David Novlan, predicted possibly stiff winds beginning about 10 a.m. (MST).

The touchdown could still come earlier Monday if the winds kick up.

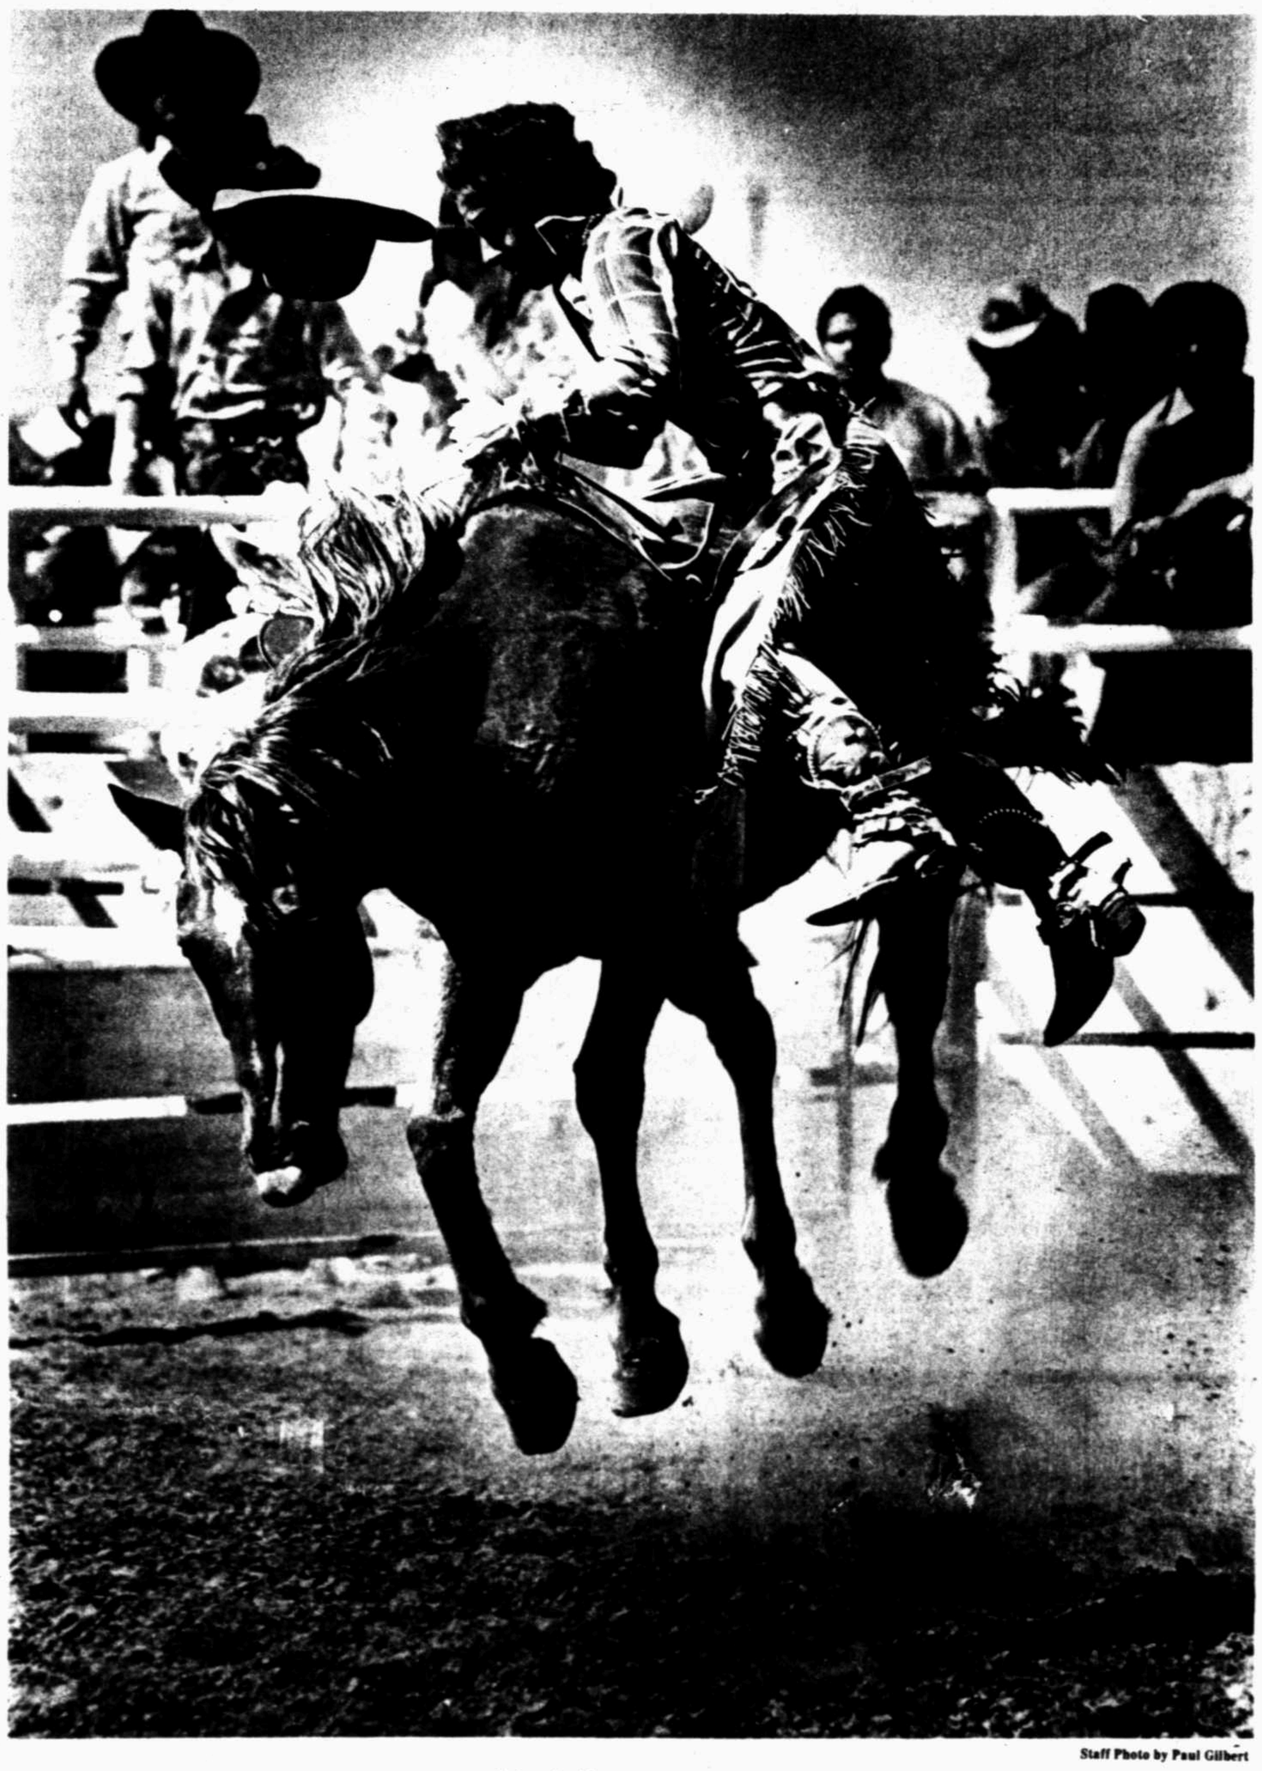

"If we needed to come in a rev (orbit) early, I would exercise that option," said Draughon, the descent team flight director. He said scientists were ecstatic over the data from Flight 3, and he described the performance of the ship's remote arm as "spectacular."

Bringing the orbiter to Earth a few hours early would give ground crews time to secure the spacecraft before the winds worsened, said Alex Paczynski, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration senior engineer.

"We'd like to have three hours to be able to tow it over to the stiff-legged derrick before the winds start kicking up," he said. "That's the lapse time from the time the wheels stop rolling to the time we get it buttoned up where the sand can't get in."

The option remained, of course, to extend the flight. Columbia has enough "consumables" — fuel, power and food — for an extra three days.

The astronauts were busy Saturday with more firings of their engines to determine how they have endured "cold soak" for three days — turned into the minus 215-degree chill of space.

Hospitals gearing up to fight for facility

By GAIL BURKE

With only a little over a week left before hearings begin at the state health agency, applicants of a proposed hospital facility are busily planning strategy and gathering witnesses for the hearing.

Three hospitals — West Plains, Midland Memorial and Parkview — are battling over the chance to offer similar facilities which include psychiatric and/or chemical dependency services (alcohol/drug abuse).

Each filed certificate of need applications for the facility which were reviewed by the local Health Systems Agency in January.

MMH emerged as the apparent winner of the first round with a favorable recommendation given by the Permian Basin Health Systems Agency-12.

WEST PLAINS and Parkview lost when the PBHSA gave both an unfavorable recommendation in competing for the similar facility.

The Texas Health Facilities Commission hearings will begin April 5. The hearing schedules for the three hospitals are still a little sketchy as to the time allowed for each hospital to enter testimony.

According to a THFC spokesperson, each hospital's presentation could take from three to five days.

Officials at Midland Memorial Hospital are quoting tentative dates as April 5 through 8 for West Plains Hospital, April 9, 12 and 13 for MMH and April 14 and 15 for Parkview.

Rebuttals are tenatively scheduled to be heard on April 16, 19 and 20 with a final decision made two weeks thereafter.

West Plains Hospital, a facility proposed by an Arlington-based private corporation called Southwest Health of Midland/Odessa, will be the first group to give testimony on the opening day of the hearings.

THE CORPORATION'S application proposes a 2.9-acre, 60-bed psychiatric hospital with approximately 20 beds set aside for alcohol/drug abuse.

The $4.1 million facility would be built at Midland Air Terminal "to serve Midland and Odessa residents," according to West Plains officials.

The Odessa City Council endorsed the West Plains proposal at its recent meeting, according to Mayor Bob Bryant.

"However, we don't have any problems with the other two; but one between the two cities would better serve the 17-county Permian Basin area," Bryant said.

West Plains' officials have been in and out of the

NEW YORK — At the foothills of the majestic Rocky Mountains where Colorado Springs nestles against a backdrop of spectacular scenic splendor, NATO defense ministers grappled with a thorny issue. They pondered the problem of nuclear arms to defend the West against sweet-talking but ever-threatening Soviet missile superiority. A decision was taken to install 572 new U.S. medium-range missiles on Western allied European territory but the stopry hardly ends with the NATO consensus, which I believe is fully justified in the face of an aggressive Russian buildup and encroachment.

Nearly all our allies, excluding the British government of tough-minded Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, are presently under heavy protest pressure by electorates to go for what has popularly become known as "The Freeze." That option briefly accepts the Soviet peace salvo shot out by President Leonid Brezhnev in offering to dismantle his SS-20s pointed at Western Europe in front of the Ural Mountains, if NATO abandoned our missiles.

OPEC may meet to censure firms

KUWAIT (AP) — OPEC's president said Saturday the world oil cartel may call another emergency session to take measures against Shell Oil Co. and other firms he accused of pressuring Nigeria to drop its price.

"I have made contacts over the past 48 hours with OPEC ministers on the possibility of holding another emergency session," OPEC President Mana Saeed Oteiba said in Abu Dhabi.

"This is in application of Article 4 of OPEC's constitution, stipulating that if a member country is subjected to pressures from oil companies...the organization may call an emergency meeting to adopt measures in support of the member concerned," he added.

"We shall call for this meeting immediately unless the oil companies change their attitude toward Nigeria," Oteiba stated.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries decided at an emergency session in Vienna on March 19 to limit production to 18 million barrels daily, in an effort to soak up the world oil glut, and to defend the cartel's benchmark price of $34 per barrel.

Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest exporter, said in Vienna it would cut its production 500,000 barrels daily, putting the effective OPEC ceiling at 17.5 million barrels. The world oil glut is estimated at 2 million barrels daily.

The authoritative Middle East Economic Survey reported Friday night that Saudi Arabia would take the lead in blacklisting any oil company that acts against the Vienna decisions and was urging Persian Gulf and other OPEC members to follow suit.

The Economic Survey said Saudi Arabia had given oil companies operating in Nigeria, particularly Shell, until next Monday to resume producing regular quantities of crude contracted for in that OPEC member.

The level of Nigerian production is reported to have been halved to 630,000 barrels daily since the Vienna decisions

Both men had to think for a few moments as to why they wanted to run for a low-paying public office again. And the answers were similar — because they were in the middle of several projects and didn't want to drop the ball.

G. Thane Akins is seeking his second term as mayor and with an unopposed race it will mean his seventh and eighth years on the Midland City Council. The first four he spent as a councilman.

For Tom Sloan, running unopposed for Place 5, it will mean a third term and a promise he is breaking to himself.

In looking over the reasons why they are running the race again, Akins and Sloan both cited problems of sewage disposal, the bond issue and coping with growth.

"IT'S HARD TO answer why I'm doing it this time," Akins said of his seeking the mayor's chair again. "There's lots of parts of it I enjoy doing. It goes back to the engineering aspect in my background and problem-solving. I like challenges and, boy, we've had plenty of that."

"I know I said I'd only serve two terms," Sloan said with a grin. "The reason I'm running again is that we're in the middle of expansion at the airport with a parking garage and we have a sewage problem."

Right after Sloan won his first election to the City Council four years ago, he commented that Midland was just beginning to turn from a town into a city. "We're still in the process of transition," he said, "but we're a city now. We are growing fast. We're a long ways from the end of it."

Pointing to Midland's rapid growth, Sloan added, "It's the city's obligation to stay ahead of that by providing services."

The first two years of Akins' term as mayor went by so fast, he said, there wasn't time to get some goals accomplished that he had set.

See Voters' Guide, Page 12D

"Two years is not long when you look at what you do in terms of a city. My wife and I both felt we ought to go another two years. We've just got to get some things going that I think are important."

BUT HE DOES believe the council made some long strides forward in various areas, including long-range planning and cooperation with other gover-

Midland brothers killed Saturday in unusual, back-to-back accidents

Two brothers from Midland were killed in bizarre, back-to-back car-pedestrian accidents 8.5 miles west of Midland along U.S. 80 Saturday night.

Dead are Santiago Marquez, 36, and Nino Padilla Marquez, 40, both of 407 Pennsylvania Ave.

According to the Department of Public Safety, the Marquez' vehicle sustained a flat tire and Santiago was changing it when his hat blew off into the highway median. He retrieved his hat and was attempting to cross the eastbound lane back to his vehicle when he was struck by a car driven by Cheryl Wood of Odessa.

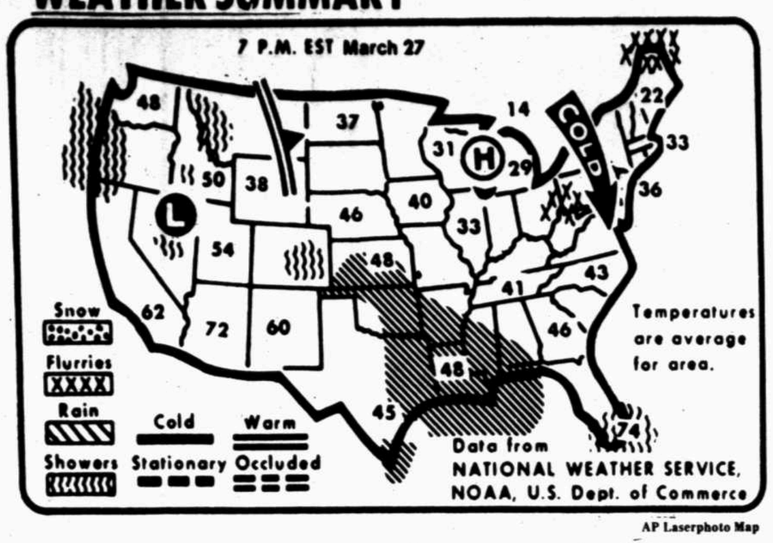

Santiago was pronounced dead at 10:12 p.m. in Midland Memorial Hospital.

While DPS troopers were at the scene investigating the accident, Nino Marquez walked out across U.S. 80 and was struck in the westbound lane by a car driven by Garvin Robinson of Odessa.

The elder Marquez was pronounced dead at 9 p.m. in Odessa Medical Center.

Neither driver was reported injured.

Cunningham wins awards at Texas Press Women convention

ODESSA — Lana Cunningham, assistant city editor of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, received three awards for excellence in journalism at the 90th Annual Convention of Texas Press Women held here Saturday.

Cunningham

The statewide organization of professional writers, photographers and broadcast personnel met at the Odessa Holidome.

Ms. Cunningham won a first-place award for special series for her eight-part series on the housing shortage in Midland.

She also won two third-place awards for special articles covering government, and for newspaper interview in the over-25,000 circulation category.

The award-winning government-related articles covered three subjects — a story about Midland government coping with the city's growing pains, coverage of Tax Day in Washington, D.C., and coverage of a meeting between city and county officials on the Midland Draw controversy.

The award-winning interview story was a feature on Harry Clark, a civic leader who moved from Midland in 1981 after numerous years of noteworthy volunteer service to the city.

All first-place winners advance to national competition, with national winners to be announced in June at the group's convention in Anaheim, Calif.

Judges for the contest were 26 representatives of the journalism profession in 10 states.

Man falls from high-voltage tower

HOUSTON (AP) — A Kansas man jolted from the top of a 90-foot tower by 345,000 volts of electricity was resting and in fair condition Saturday at Ben Taub Hospital, authorities said.

David King, 25, of Winfield, Kan. suffered second- and third-degree burns on his chest, arms and face and multiple fractures to both legs after he fell from the metal transmission line tower Friday.

King said he climbed the high-voltage tower in southeast Houston because he was hypnotized, paramedic Mark Maddox said. But King did not know who hypnotized him or why, Maddox said.

"Another five minutes and we wouldn't have been needed....Time was critical because he was losing a lot of fluids due to the burns and blood because of the broken legs," Maddox said.

Mike Murphy, a repairman working on a utility pole, was talking by telephone with his supervisor when he saw King fall to the ground, police said. Murphy told his boss to call an ambulance, police said.

King, with his clothes afire, fell 15 feet onto a metal beam where he lay and "smoldered a while, then fell to the ground. He was definitely on fire; flaming when he came down," said D.R. McKinney, who was driving by the tower when the accident occurred.

mental bodies.

Last summer, the council and staff took off for a retreat where — away from everyday business distractions — they concentrated on problems and ways to solve them and on setting priorities.

"We're keeping these priorities before us so we don't drop the ball and to make sure these things keep moving. We'd been so busy with day to day things...that major problems would creep up on us and then we had to deal with them on an emergency basis," related Akins.

Sloan vowed four years ago to see "a better working relationship with the county commissioners" and he feels that has been accomplished. "And after this next election, it will be even better," he prophesied in vocalizing his desire to see Commissioner Charlie Welch, who is up for re-election, defeated.

Through the past 1½ years, the county and city have been at odds over sewage disposal and the problem arose in Welch's precinct.

Akins also considered the city's reaching out to work with other governmental bodies one of the major accomplishments. "Cooperation with other governmental entities took a quantum leap. We made the effort to meet together and communicate. There's something to be gained in avoiding problems when you do that."

SPECIFICALLY, AKINS pointed to the advice given by city planners in asking the Midland Independent School District board not to build a new school north of Loop 250 yet, and Sloan illustrated with the Extra-Territorial Jurisdiction line that was moved between Midland and Odessa.

"The attitude between Midland and Odessa has matured," continued Sloan. "They realize they must work with us instead of being self-centered and selfish."

Despite the highlights of both men's past service, each can see some valleys of disappointment.

"There's been some things to take longer than I would have liked," Akins began. "The entrance to Midland Regional Airport of FM 1788 should have been completed by now." The city has done its part in the paving; the rest is up to the county commissioners, he said.

Construction of Loop 250 needs to be accelerated with the city's mushrooming growth in those areas of town. But the opposite seems to be happening, said Akins, as the State Highway Department has been extending deadlines for completion.

The mayor also was disappointed that the school district, despite a joint meeting with the city council, placed the new De Zavala Elementary School in its present site instead of moving it to a site where an east-west thoroughfare could extend through that land.

"AND NOTHING of significance has been accomplished on housing, outside of the low-interest housing loan program. The problem (housing shortage) is still with us after two years and it might even be worse now," Akins said. "I was hoping builders and lenders would take a little more risk in the south and east parts of town with low cost housing. But it hasn't happened, or not to the extent it fills much of the need."

Sloan believes the City Council has addressed the housing issue through zoning. "We've done everything we can to encourage additional housing."

Although a one-way street plan will be implemented soon for the downtown area, it has been modified downward from the original idea, to Akins' dismay. "There's no way around extending it in the future. It's the only solution that has any practicality."

Sloan's biggest disappointment came with his inability to convince the other councilmen to increase the parks budget.

"The parks have been neglected. It's a crying shame," he said. "We have parks that are unmowed and there's trash in the streets. We need to spend more money cleaning up the parks and streets. And we allow things to go on in parks that are irresponsible."

Getting the $7 million bond issue passed in this election ranks as the biggest concern for both men.

"THERE ARE FIVE items and they're equally important," claimed Sloan. "There's nothing there we can do without. It's sort of a 'do or die' situation. We've reduced it from $40-plus million down to $7 million. Midland's gone from 60,000 to 80,000 people in the past few years. That's a huge percentage growth. We're more cosmopolitan than San Antonio."

The largest money item was taken off the bond issue to be financed through the Colorado River Municipal Water District. It amounts to $20 million to pipe primary treated effluent to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city.

"The city's foremost problem is disposing of that effluent. There is no question the Floyd plan will work from the standpoint of disposal," said the mayor. "Whether it accomplishes financially what Floyd hopes or what we would like, well, the jury is still out. That's a big factor in how viable this is to Floyd or anyone else who uses effluent water for agricultural purposes."

Sloan said that by going through the CRMWD, the city's bond rating will be higher. Instead of the A, it should be AA-1, which means a lower interest rate. "One point in interest rates on $23 million over 15 years is a lot of money," he noted.

The two men stood at opposite ends of the council chambers when it came to voting over a year ago on applying for federal Community Development Block Grant funds that would include a plan for housing for low-income elderly, handicapped and families. Sloan voted for the plan, Akins against.

SLOAN POINTED OUT that it cost Midland $1 million each year the council didn't get the money. Noting that CDBG money is tax money sent back to cities, Sloan said, "It's beyond my realm of comprehension why turning down your own money is so conservative. It was a shame the years we didn't take it."

It's not the money Akins is opposed to as it is the requirement that each city must include and fulfill plans to put up housing for low-income persons.

"There's still a lot of projects I don't have problems with, such as street paving, drainage and park improvements in south and east sides of town," he explained. "The housing aspect is my hangup. It's an unknown. If we can do something with housing, such as Hillcrest Manor, we can make good use of the funds for people truly in need. I don't think Midland will have the misuse and fraud that other cities have with this money."

G. Thane Akins

BUT THE TWO MEN'S minds flow together when it comes to water. They both see its critical need for the future of Midland.

After attending a recent Texas Municipal League Water Task Force meeting, Akins isn't too encouraged. "Preliminary reports show no one has any surplus water. Flood water even has a purpose," he said of previous plans to use water from the Midwest or Canada.

Midland doesn't have an unlimited potential for water, even with its contract with CRMWD and its untapped reservoir in Winkler County. Akins believes that once Midland's population jumps to the 150,000-200,000 mark, residents will have to change their lifestyle here.

Sloan sees those changes to include yards with no grass but desert-type landscaping, more showers and fewer baths and possible rationing.

"Avalanche" Akins, named for his "overwhelming" takeover of the mayor's seat two years ago by eight votes over opponent Martin Allday, said the magnitude of Midland's problems has grown with the city.

Looking ahead to his next term in office, Akins mentioned he would like to see more diversification of industry. "Unless we do more work in diversification, we'll have ups and downs of the oil industry. We need something to smooth out that curve.

"I realize it's difficult to think about that with our growth and labor shortage. But if things slow down, I think we should look around for industry that will be compatible with our area."

Sloan, who said he doesn't plan on running for mayor because "you have to cut too many ribbons and kiss too many babies," acknowledgd he hasn't been the most agreeable member of the council.

"Sometimes, I just try to make people stop and think. Basically, I'm pleased with the way things have gone. I've stepped on some toes," he admitted, "but I did what I felt was best for the city and community as a whole. I'm not always on the winning side of a vote. I take a minority stance."

Asked why he drew no opponents this time, Sloan replied, "I'm sure there's a lot of people who would have liked to see someone run against me."

Tom Sloan

You can't do the job I've been doing without making someone mad. I don't think it's lack of interest; maybe they don't have enough time. This is a pretty damn thankless job."

Woman released in strangulation case

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Police said lack of evidence prompted them Saturday to release a woman questioned about the strangulation death of a 6-year-old girl in St. Paul, Minn.

The 24-year-old woman, formerly of Hopkins, Minn., was arrested Thursday for questioning in connection with the Nov. 10 slaying of Cassandra Hansen.

Police released the woman after a prosecutor in Ramsey County, Minn., told two St. Paul police officers who had traveled to Amarillo that they did not have sufficient evidence to link the woman with the slaying, Amarillo police said.

The woman had moved to Amarillo "a few weeks" ago, her lawyer said.

Midland/Odessa area since the local hearings.

MICHAEL BULLITT, Southwest vice president of operations, said he was "in the area to speak with local psychiatrists" and others who may want to testify for West Plains.

MMH's application is for a $3.4 million, 50-bed chemical dependency unit which will be a separate 3.5-acre facility from the hospital.

MMH officials said financing for the project would be by bond issue, but it would not necessarily burden the taxpayer because it could be built through a general obligation bond.

"The taxpayers don't do anything other than underwrite. An example of this is what we have out at the airport," Roy Campbell, chairman of the MMH board of trustees, said.

He added that MMH plans to design the facility where it "should generate enough revenue to retire the debt."

IF MMH IS granted the facility, Ray Branson, MMH president, said the bond issue would be "sometime near the summer."

If the bond issue should fail, Branson said the hospital would possibly finance the project through donations. The Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center was financed through private donations.

According to MMH's certificate of need application, the proposed unit is to be built on a five-acre plot at Wadley and Whittle Avenues.

There has been some question as to whether the public hospital intends to build the facility on the proposed site. MMH has an option to change its site, as do the other hospitals.

Presently, MMH's proposed site is zoned for townhouses with a portion church-zoned.

"We are going with the site that's in the application right now," Branson said, adding that the hospital will continue to search for a separate 30- to 40-acre site which would be in accordance with MMH's long-range plan for a satellite hospital.

BRANSON SAID his administrative priorities must come first and he would not be in Austin for the entire three-week period, but there would be MMH representation there at all times.

"Presently we are preparing testimony and an extensive list of exhibits that will be introduced during the hearing," he said. "You have to believe you've got some advantage with a favorable recommendation from the local HSA."

The application for Midland's private hospital, Parkview, proposes converting the existing 60-bed acute medical care facility into a $500,000 60-bed psychiatric hospital with 14 beds set aside for alcohol/drug abuse patients.

Parkview, 3201 Sage St., is owned by American Medical Centers in Tennesse which have five other psychiatric hospitals.

"I'll be flying to Nashville this week to meet with our attorneys to plan our strategy," Dick Liley, Parkview administrator said.

"We are confident that we offer the best alternative to Midlanders at the lowest possible cost, especially in the light that it will not affect their taxes," he added.

All three applicants will be reviewed by the THFC along with recommendations from the PBHSA.

The procedure begins with the applicants going before a hearing officer, a lawyer who acts as an administrative law judge. In a formal courtroom-like setting, he will hear testimony from witnesses and the applicants.

BECAUSE THE three hospitals are in joinder, or up for review at the same time, it will take approximately three weeks for the hearings to be completed.

After the testimony is completed it is compiled by a THFC staff analyst. A finding composed of facts and recommendation will then go to the three-member commission. The THFC commission will take into consideration the recommendations from the local level and the Austin hearings, but the government-appointed commission may render any decision it chooses.

According to a THFC spokesman, if the commission feels there is enough need in the Permian Basin area for the beds, two of the three applicants could be granted the facilities.

Because the commission's decision is based upon facts that demonstrate a need for the facility, it is imperative that the applicants present an accurate, concise case.

ahead of NATO already that the sly Soviet suggestion was meaningless. He bluntly detailed that the U.S.S.R. had stockpiled 300 new, devilishly advanced SS-20s, with a new one being produced every 72 hours without letup. President Reagan then repeated his November appeal to Brezhnev, the thrust of which was "LET US BOTH DISMANTLE ALL STOCKPILES AND MAKE THEM VERIFIABLE." The Russians had a quick, No, to the initial Reagan recommendation and haven't even had the grace to respond to the president's most recent repeat offer.

Soviet reasoning for pursuing the Brezhnev gambit isn't hard to figure. The Russians see that Washington's ties with major allies in Western Europe and Japan are being strained. While demonstrations against emplacing our missiles gather momentum on the continent, the "freeze" complex also has taken hold among congressional critics and municipalities in this country. As readers of this column recall, I wrote recently that Soviet propaganda and "disinformation" machinery never takes a holiday but emphasizes peace which in Orwellian terms really means war — or surrender on their terms.

In taking precautions against Soviet aggression, it seems to me that many folks have lost sight of multiple brutalities committed by the Brezhnev regime against their own people and regions unfortunate enough to be under Soviet might or its communist surrogates. Think for a moment about Poland and its 36 million people held in the grip of martial law. Or Afghanistan, invaded by the Red Army where a puppet regime is unable to govern most areas by night. Only 100,000 Russian troops, backed by the latest equipment in armor and air power, keeps that country from determining its own future.

Those are only two of the most recent examples of Soviet "peace-making" achievements. Look at the U.S.S.R. at home: The regime denies its 235 million people the average consumer necessities that Western societies cannot live without. even daily bread can come into question frequently because the greatest slice of Russia's gross national product goes into armaments. Who's there to question this bizarre imbalance? There's none to speak of, because critics and dissidents are hustled off to labor camps. When Brezhnev needs additional wheat, he buys it on world markets.

Western communities are, of course, rightly conerned about the prospects of a nuclear holocaust. But in the last analysis, the West must potect itself against Russian encroachment, or it will be gobbled up piecemeal.

We need deeds to prove what the West really means. So, when the West declares that it must take adequate precautions in the face of a massive Soviet superiority in nuclear weapons, we should go ahead and do so. This is always complicated in parliamentary democracies. West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, to his deep chagrin, just learned how rough the road can be. In key regional elections, Schmidt lost what is regarded as a national test in the Federal Republic. He previously was pledged to accept new medium range missiles and may now, after eight years in office, resign. It would be a major blow to NATO should he do so. In West Germany the real winners will be leftists of his Social Democratic Party and anti-nuclear groups demonstrating against new weapons.

In Colorado Springs, NATO's defense ministers unanimously rejected Brezhnev's proposal. They pointed out that the Russians were replacing shorter range missiles with new SS-22s, which have the range to zero in on all Western European capitals. In addition, the U.S.S.R. is working feverishly to develop an SS-23 with fiercer capabilities. The Western defense ministers, working from the latest intelligence data, reaffirmed their decision to deploy 572 new medium range missiles next year.

As is proper, it is now up to all their elected parliaments to accept or deny what the defense ministers decided. I believe that after lots of soul-searching — and more protest pressure — Western parliaments will take the same step of backing their defense representatives. We should take the lead and do it first to show the Soviets and the world that the alliance is alive and well.

Texas feels effects of recession

By JAY JORDEN

DALLAS (AP) — In Detroit, Sunday Texas newspapers sell out by 10 a.m. In Akron, there's talk about the good life in Dallas. And in Kokomo, folks discuss jobs in Houston.

Thousands of Sun Belt immigrants come to Texas each week in search of a new start.

But wait a minute. The recession has hit Texas, too.

"We have again talked a lot about the ripple effect of the national economy on us in Texas, and we're feeling that effect," says Gov. Bill Clements. "I don't think there's any question about it."

About 3,200 electronic components company employees have been laid off since the beginning of the year in North Texas. In Houston, where recent arrivals camp out under freeway overpasses while searching for jobs, city officials say the sluggish national economy has caused layoffs and slowed housing starts. Texas-based airlines have ordered massive layoffs. And sluggish oil prices have sent some energy-based industries into a nosedive.

OFFICIALS SAY the torrent of job-seekers from northern states have contributed to unemployment.

"Some of the people come down here and if they have a skill that is in some of the shortage occupations, they will not find it too difficult to find a job," said I.V. Ferguson, Texas Employment Commission district director in Dallas. "But if you are not, or if you are an unskilled person, you will find it pretty tough."

The economic slowdown has bitten the state on its Achilles' heel — oil production.

Stocks of Texas multi-bank holding companies have dropped an average of 25 percent since the first of the year.

Speaking in San Antonio last week, Robert H. Chitwood, president of the National Petroleum Refiners Association said: "The bottom has literally dropped out of the oil market," forcing the shutdowns of about 50 refineries nationwide. Mostly smaller, older refineries have been affected.

"About 20 percent of the refining capacity in the U.S. ought to be shut in," said Sam. R. Bright Jr. of Rauscher Pierce. He said 40 percent of the United States refining capacity is on the Gulf Coast.

SPOKESMEN FOR Geosource Inc., a major supplier of instruments and equipment used in energy seismic surveys, attributed its layoff off 185 employees — or 1.8 percent of its workforce — to decreased demand.

Officials of United States Steel Corp. said steel-making operations in Baytown, east of Houston, were idled last week. The curtailment affected 400 workers who could elect to take the week as scheduled vacation, company spokesmen said.

Some other U.S. Steel workers in Texas were shifted to four-day workweeks because of the current business slump, officials said.

Houston was among three cities where Texas Instruments Inc. laid off 1,700 workers, citing a sluggish market for digital products and semiconductors. The company's Dallas facility lost 650 employees. And another Dallas electronics company laid off 1,500 employees in March.

"To me, companies are waiting, they're not hiring as many people," said Ferguson. "We are having some fairly good layoffs in some particular industries, and spotty layoffs in all types."

The slackened pace of the airline industry has affected Texas workers. At Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, Braniff International is laying off about one-third of its 9,000 employees. Dallas-based American Airlines also laid off 2,504 of its 37,256 employees.

GENERAL MOTORS' assembly division also announced it trimmed 700 of about 3,000 employees at its Arlington plant.

Ferguson said area TEC offices list an average of 1,850 job openings daily, compared to 10,000 for the same period two years ago.

Statewide, unemployment is 5.8 percent, compared wiwth 4.7 percent in February 1981, said Jerry Biscoe, TEC spokesman in Austin.

In San Antonio, Texas' third largest city, an economic downturn forced Datapoint Corp. officials to delay construction of a $50 million headquarters complex.

Mayor Henry Cisneros said the move by one of the city's major industries was the "first inkling of San Antonio being touched by the national economy."

Datapoint President Harold O'Kelley said the delay allows the company "to maintain our conservative position in today's uncertain worldwide economic conditions and current adverse business climate."

ANOTHER SAN ANTONIO company, Fairchild Swearingen Aviation, said it is cutting the work weeks of 700 of its 1,200 employees. An unspecified number of other workers will be laid off because of slow sales, officials said.

Financial analysts said more companies are declaring bankruptcy and bankers are taking a harder line on credit policies.

"The only common denominator in all businesses is that all are struggling right now," said Robert Diaz de Leon, president of Tri-Tech Engineering Inc. of San Antonio. "If I can break even, I think of myself as having succeeded."

He said his small company, which provides engineering services for construction projects, laid off 17 employees or more than half its staff when residential construction faltered last fall.

"The biggest concern of small businesses is that most of us operate on a very thin edge," said Bill Loftus, a small business marketing and advertising specialist in San Antonio.

A "good percentage" of small businesses are facing bankruptcy, said Harry Straup of Alamo National Bank. "We're looking at each credit closer than before. The year 1982 could be a very difficult year if we continue to move in the direction we're going now."

JOHN MCGUILLICUDDY of New York, chairman of the board, president and chief executive officer of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. complained recently of a "veritable explosion of debt" to oil refiners in San Antonio.

Near the Rio Grande, Texas merchants have been hurt by Mexico's financial ills. Laredo businessmen said devaluation of the peso in February emptied their stores of Mexican nationals who once bought Texas goods.

The devaluation forced foreclosures of resort properties owned by Mexican nationals, and a drop in new car sales in the Rio Grande Valley.

"In the Valley, the devaluation of the peso has hurt business, as much as 15-20 percent, although big cars are still selling," said Gene Fondren, executive director of the Texas Automobile Dealers Association.

Fondren said sales also lagged in West Texas, where farmers are fighting high production costs and low crop prices. Witnesses at a farmers' union hearing in Lubbock said farm implement purchases were also down.

But there are signs that the business slowdown has been slow to affect some areas of the state's economy, and resistance to recessionary pressures has been high.

MONEY ON DEPOSIT is at an all-time high of $7 billion, although a recession's effects could still be felt, said state banking commissioner Robert E. Stewart.

Loan activity in Houston last year was 50 percent ahead of 1980, bank officials said. City officials said more than $3 billion worth of building permits were issued in 1981.

Dallas men reunited with family

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — A 39-year gap was bridged this weekend for two Dallas-area men who had not seen their family since 1943, when their mother was forced to give up her daughter and four sons.

George and Wilbur Dean traveled to Dallas/Fort Worth Regional Airport Friday to meet their elder brother, James McConaha, who flew in from his home in Moses Lake, Wash.

Last month, they went to their sister's house in Kansas to reunite with her and their mother, who lives less than 80 miles away from them in Quitman, Texas.

"I thank the Lord for letting me find my children," said 71-year-old Hazel McConaha Cox.

Mrs. Cox's husband died in 1942 after a four-year illness, leaving her with four children and a fifth on the way.

"After he died, I couldn't take it any longer," she said. She turned her children over to the Oklahoma welfare department.

Maxine Terrel, 47, who now lives in Mulvane, Kan., has fit most of the pieces of her family together with a series of reunions after searching for her brothers 29 years.

She and McConaha, 50, grew up near Mrs. Cox's Cushing, Okla., home and both maintained contact with their mother over the years.

But they lost touch with George and Wilbur — now 45 and 42 respectively — who lived in several foster homes, then were adopted by the James A. Dean family of Kingfisher, Okla.

"I grew up knowing that I had brothers who weren't there," Mrs. Terrel said. "I reached a point in my life when I knew I had to find them. When you're adopted, you don't have any idea of who you really are."

Barbara Cox McCoy, 36, the group's half-sister who lives in Stillwater, Okla., also joined the reunion Friday.

But the gathering won't be complete unless the family members can find a half-brother, Walter Cox.

Amid tears and hugs Friday, George presented James with a banana he said he has owed him since they were boys.

George said he had promised to pay back a banana he stole from his brother's dinner plate.

Mrs. Cox, who was widowed again in 1973, said she was elated to see the family together again.

"In my spirit, yes, I knew we'd be together again," she said. "But in my mind, there was little hope. I had seen so many adopted children that were negative toward their real parents."

Personnel shift could cause increased drug traffic

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drug traffic into Texas could jump if the Drug Enforcement Agency goes ahead with plans to shift personnel from Texas to deal with increased problems in Florida, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, complained Saturday.

In a letter, Bentsen reminded FBI director William H. Webster of the disruption of law enforcement procedures along the Texas border that resulted in 1980 when about 200 border patrolmen and customs officials were transferred to help with the "Cuban sealift" problem.

In remarks taped for weekend use by Texas television stations, Bentsen said three drug enforcement officials already have been moved from Texas and assigned permanently in Florida.

Haid's philosophy based on yoga

By KATHY BAKER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Andy Renko describes himself as "just a 31-year-old white man trying to make his way in the world." He's more concerned about his motorcycle and his love life than solving the larger issues of our time.

Renko is the barrel-chested, swaggering, redneck cop who gets all the funny, throw-away lines on NBC's touted police series "Hill Street Blues."

So imagine the surprise upon meeting Charles Haid, the actor who paints Renko with what he admits are "very broad strokes."

At a shopping mall promotion early in the day, Haid was "on" — delighting the hundreds of fans who lined up for his autograph, teasing the children and giving the women pecks on the cheek.

But the Haid who appeared at a downtown Austin hotel bar that night ordered what Renko would probably call "designer water" and insisted he is on his way to becoming one with the universe through the practice of Siddha yoga.

HAID IS not a large man. He wears rimless glasses, speaks very seriously of himself and his craft and seems prone to brooding.

Raised in a big, Irish, "kind of show-biz" family in San Francisco, Haid started out on the other side of the lights, producing "Godspell" at 24. He played supporting roles in couple of quality, late '70s TV series that didn't make it, and appeared in several movies. The most distinguished was Ken Russell's well-received 1980 visualization of Paddy Chayefsky's "Altered States."

Haid played Mason Parrish — the Tennessee endocrinologist who tried to act as referee between William Hurt and Ultimate Truth.

In earlier, more pedestrian times, Haid turned down a regular part on the long-running police comedy "Barney Miller" for a directing job.

"I did not wish to do situation comedy," Haid said. "I was not looking for and still am not looking for that kind of reputation as an actor. Though I paint Renko in very broad strokes, there is hopefully something within that performance that says I'm an actor."

The industry apparently thinks there is. Haid was nominated for an Emmy last year. His HSB colleague, Michael Conrad, won it.

"HOPEFULLY, ONE'S reputation is based on what one does, and I couldn't do better in what you might call 'popular entertainment' than 'Hill Street Blues.'

"Hopefully, one's reputation is based on what one does, and I couldn't do better in what you might call 'popular entertainment' than 'Hill Street Blues.' It's sort of top of the heap right now, and I guess it's because most of the people involved in it have the same kind of dedication to what they do that I have, or else it wouldn't have come about."

It's sort of top of the heap right now, and I guess it's because most of the people involved in it have the same kind of dedication to what they do that I have, or else it wouldn't have come about."

A half-dozen of the HSB actors, including Haid, have appeared together in other series produced by the creative minds that spawned "Hill Street" — Steven Bochco and Michael Kozoll.

For instance, Haid and Conrad co-starred in the 1978 detective show "Delvecchio." Bochco's wife, Barbara Bosson, and Kiel Martin — both HSB regulars now — guest-starred periodically.

And Bruce Weitz — now known affectionately as "Belker the Biter" on HSB — was a college classmate of Bochco and Bosson.

"This business is nepotistic, to say the least," Haid said, "but usually because certain kinds of people, certain kinds of energies attract one another. And that's why things like this show come about — a fusion of a certain point of view, I suppose."

Haid said he would prefer to do movies exclusively but has not found anything of the quality of "Hill Street Blues." In fact, he had only agreed to do the show's pilot — Renko and his partner were gunned down in the penultimate scene, and Renko was supposed to die.

BUT THIS IS television, and because Renko appealed "marketwise," and because Haid was so impressed with the pilot, Renko lives.

"That's what really turned my head around was the pilot," Haid said. "When I saw what had been accomplished, I said, 'Man, I want to be a part of this.'"

Haid said Renko — a cop in some northern city — has a southern accent, because Haid sees him as "confused" and living a cowboy fantasy.

Renko is a racist, Haid said, because he doesn't understand that we really are one with everything.

"My whole philosophy, the way I operate is based on Siddha yoga," Haid said. "I'm serious. That's after a long, long search for all these other things. There has to be a reason for what one does, rather than just taking home a good paycheck.

"If you don't believe in anything, there wouldn't be any reason to do anything. It would be easy to excess your way right out of existence. Look at poor, lost John Belushi.

"HECK, I meditate two hours a day. I used to drink. I used to do a lot of drugs. But I stopped, because I can't get drunk anymore and I can't get high anymore.

"The idea is to bring yourself to a state where you can see everything — or to relax into the fact that you can't. But again the question comes up — what's there to see? Just another manifestation of yourself.

White to rule on authority to build

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Mark White has been asked to rule whether the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center, Lubbock, has authority to build a structure on property deeded to it by the city of Odessa and Ector County.

Pat Campbell, associate general counsel for the health sciences center, asked White for an opinion on whether a building could be erected on the site subject to an easement, exceptions, reservations and right of reversion.

White has not yet released his ruling on the matter.

Detention center will curb high juvenile crime

By SUSAN STOLER

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Juvenile deliquency spills daily across the border here from Matamoros, Mexico, creating a special problem for state judges and local probation officers.

More than one in 10 juvenile offenders referred to the Cameron County juvenile probation office are illegal aliens.

Most are caught either shoplifting or stealing cars and trucks. Ringleaders often pay the car thieves between $100 to $500 for each stolen vehicle driven into Mexico.

They range generally in age from 14 to 16, frequently have dropped out of school and usually come from an extremely poverty-stricken section of Matamoros, where houses lack running water.

Juvenile probation officers say the young offenders do not respond to traditional rehabilitation programs because of language and cultural difficulties.

"When they wrote the Texas Family code, they didn't think of the unique problem we have along the border," said Joan Macrum, a Cameron County juvenile probation officer for nine years.

"I SEE THESE KIDS and they could be helped with just the right counseling. It would be real easy but there are no services over there (in Mexico)," she said. "We can't follow through. We have no jurisdiction."

Texas officials cannot research a juvenile's background in Mexico.

"We have no way of checking on their records over there," said State District Judge Melchor Chavez. "If they come here, they're considered first offenders although they may have been in trouble over there."

In 1981, 199 of the 1,731 juvenile cases involved aliens.

After years of worrying about the problem, state and county officials have gotten an offer of help from Mexican authorities.

Matamoros Mayor Jorge Cardenas ordered construction of a $500,000, 120-bed juvenile center built with Mexican federal and local funds.

CARDENAS AND TEXAS officials say the center will help the crime problem on both sides since many alien youths arrested in Brownsville also have gotten in trouble at home.

Although some sticky, jurisdictional problems remain, authorities say they hope in the future an alien juvenile will be released by Texas authorities with the condition that he periodically report to or spend time at the Matamoros center.

Cardenas took the judges, district attorney, probation officers and other officials on a tour of the center under construction last week.

"This will help greatly," Cardenas said. "Every house must wash it's own dirty laundry," he said of how the problem must be dealt with on both sides of the border.

The complex of two one-story buildings is located on 80 acres about 12 miles from downtown Matamoros. Residents will grow their own crops, raise cattle and have space for basketball and other outside activities.

Cardenas estimated it will open in one or two months.

It will take time to work out technical details of transferring juveniles to another nation.

"RIGHT NOW, we're exchanging our laws and translating the entire part of the family code dealing with juveniles," Miss Macrum said.

Under current procedure, juvenile authorities first try to locate the family of young alien offenders and get proof that they are under 17.

Mexican Consul Enrique Hubbard of Brownsville frequently is called to help find families and birth certificates.

Charges are not always filed, depending on the evidence, said Amador Rodriguez, Cameron County juvenile probation director.

If charges are not filed, the alien is turned over to the U.S. Border Patrol and bused to the International Bridge. A case often will be held as "inactive," with charges left pending in case the offender returns and is arrested a second time.

UNDER AN AGREEMENT with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, parents otherwise lacking visas into the United States are allowed to visit their child if authorities have decided to detain him.

"We pick them up at the bridge and take them back," Rodriguez said.

If charges are filed, a hearing is conducted on whether to hold the youngster at the county detention center or release him to his parents.

Under Texas law a juvenile can be detained if:

— He lacks proper home supervision.

— No one is available to vouch for his future court appearances.

— Authorities believe he would flee their jurisdiction.

— A felony has been committed.

— The offender has a prior record.

THOSE RELEASED to their parents are told to return for hearings or to pay restitution.

"You might not expect it, but they do come and pay it," Rodriguez said.

He cautions that the Matamoros center will not solve the problem immediately.

"It's not as easy as it sounds because you're dealing with federal law, between countries, not just city to city," he said.

Other border areas face similar problems. In El Paso, a juvenile probation officer complained last year that she was forced to transport aliens to a center in Juarez, Mexico.

"I would never take them across personally, because you could always be held responsible, say if there were an accident," said Miss Macrum.

"The way I understand it, if we get an illegal juvenile, we will coordinte his transfer to the agency in charge of delinquency in Matamoros," Rodriguez said. "There are still quite a few bridges to cross but there a quite a few people concerned enough to do something about it."

Helicopter pilot's body recovered

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Diving teams Saturday recovered the body of a helicopter pilot whose craft clipped power lines and crashed into Lake Austin Friday, injuring a passenger.

Berland "Sandy" Letcher, 36, was found about 7:40 a.m. near a boat dock on the west bank of the lake, authorities said.

Charlie Kallestad, 45, owner of the helicopter, suffered eye and leg injuries in the accident and was listed in stable condition at a local hospital. He had been pulled from the water shortly after the crash by a woman who lived nearby.

Letcher was flying the Bell Jet Ranger 3 craft when it clipped 69,000-volt and 12,500-volt power lines about 11 a.m. Friday.

Collector develops system to catch rare book thieves

By JACK KEEVER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A book thief once almost put publisher-collector John Jenkins out of business, and Jenkins has been on their cases ever since.

His 10-year war against book thieves crystallized Jan. 1 with the completion of a security system utilizing FBI and federal customs agents, telephone reports and a computer program called BAM-BAM.

Jenkins, president of the Antiquarian Booksellers' Association of America, Inc., said the system works so well a person would have to be "awfully stupid" to try to steal rare books and sell them for profit.

In 1971 a stranger offered to sell Jenkins a hundred Audubon prints, which the seller said he had found in his aunt's attic. Jenkins held back and later read in a trade journal that an entire folio of Audubon bird prints had been stolen from Union College at Schenectady, N.Y.

The FBI arrested the man in New York, where Jenkins had arranged a meeting at his hotel, supposedly to buy the prints.

"I realized that if I had not been accidentally suspicious of this man who offered them to me, I would have paid out between $50,000 and $100,000 for the Audubons that would later turn out to be stolen, and I would have had to return them, and these crooks would have hit the road," Jenkins said.

"It would have bankrupted me at that time," Jenkins said. "I would have been absolutely out of business, and I realized that for the whole book world there was no protection, there was no system established to pass the word about thefts."

Establishing the security system was not easy. There had been little coordination between archivists — who handle manuscripts — and booksellers. Also, law officers had had virtually no experience with book thieves, and librarians and school administrators had been reluctant to report major thefts.

"It reflected on them personally," Jenkins said. "Their jobs were on the line, so they would just sit tight until they saw their books somewhere or someone pointed it out and then they would act. All of which adds up to some bookseller getting stung for a great deal of money."

Jenkins explained in a new booklet and in an interview what to do when books are stolen.

On thefts of more than $5,000, call Jenkins, who is security chairman for the rare book dealers association, then FBI agent Mike Burns in Austin. Next, call your attorney and your insurance agency.

Jenkins will call five chapter chairmen of the antiquarian association, and they will call their members. The relay notifies 500 professional booksellers. Within 24 hours the word of the theft is passed to BAM-BAM (Bookline Alert-Missing Books and Manuscripts) in New York, which makes it available on computer terminals throughout America and Europe.

"Within 24 hours, 95-98 percent of the potential buyers have been notified," said Jenkins. "Even if the airlines were running on time, I don't believe a thief could get away with them quickly enough to succeed."

For a few dollars, AB Bookman's Weekly, a trade journal which goes to 11,000 book people, also will carry a notice of the missing book or books on its back cover, Jenkins said.

By the end of seven days, more than 100,000 people in the book world will have been notified of the theft.

Jenkins said three book thieves have been arrested since the system went into effect. "We've literally been 100 percent successful," he said. "There are no major unresolved book thefts at the present time."

There is one final step in the security system — prosecution.

"Since many book thieves when caught are first offenders and have no previous record, courts tend to deal lightly with them," Jenkins wrote in his booklet on thefts. "Libraries, happy to have recovered their books, become forgiving of the crime, especially when the thief is from the local community."

To counter "slap-on-the-wrist" prosecution, members of the rare book dealers association make themselves available as expert witnesses at theft trials. "We will travel and appear to testify book thieves are crooks and should go to jail just like people that rob convenience stores," Jenkins said.

"Rare books...are unique or near-unique and to keep them in existence for the next thousand years is one of our major responsibilities," he said.

States thinking tax hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) — State legislatures are considering proposals to raise taxes $6.8 billion this year to make up for money shortages caused by the recession and the tightening of federal purse strings.

The Tax Foundation, a non-partisan research organization, said Saturday that if all those proposed tax increases were enacted — which is unlikely — the total state tax boost would set a 10-year record for the second year in a row. The states raised taxes by $3.8 billion in 1981.

Of the 45 state legislatures that meet this year, 26 will act on bills to raise taxes. Also pending are proposals for cutting taxes by $410 million.

State lawmakers are depending heavily on general sales taxes as sources of new revenues. The Tax Foundation reported that 13 states are weighing sales-tax increases that would bring in $2.7 billion a year. Higher income taxes have been proposed in 10 states, where they would bring in $1.6 billion. Included are bills to impose new income taxes in Connecticut and Washington.

Ten states also are weighing increases in corporate income taxes, which would raise $340 billion.

Bills to raise gasoline taxes by $894 million are pending in 11 states; plans to raise tobacco taxes by $157 million have been introduced in 12 states; liquor and beer taxes would bring in an extra $84 million in six states.

Legislation to raise severance taxes on minerals by $196 million a year is pending in six states.

Some states are so hard-pressed for money, the Tax Foundation reported, that bills have been introduced to tax taxes — pending legislation would extend the general sales tax to gasoline and cigarettes, which already are subject to special taxes.

"The current rash of tax-raising legislation reflects state responses to the apparently tight squeeze on state budgets due to revenue shortfalls resulting from weaknesses in the economy, the drawing down of previous cash balances and reductions in federal aid," the foundation said.

Senator releases pro-busing letter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four former attorneys general have declared their opposition to congressional proposals that would strip federal courts of the power to order students bused in school desegregation cases.

"These bills would exercise power which we believe the Congress does not possess," they said in a letter to Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., an opponent of the anti-busing measures. Baucus released the letter Saturday.

The letter was signed by Nicholas deB. Katzenbach and Ramsey Clark, attorneys general during the Johnson administration; Elliot L. Richardson, who headed the Justice Department in the Nixon administration; and Benjamin R. Civiletti, attorney general in the Carter administration.

The letter also was signed by three men who served as solicitor general, the Justice Department official that handles court appeals. They are J. Lee Rankin from the Eisenhower administration, Erwin N. Griswold from the Johnson and Nixon administrations, and Wade McCree, who held the job in the Carter years.

"We hold varying views on the Supreme Court's decision in many areas of constitutional law," they said. "But on two matters we are unanimous.

"The first of these is that the Supreme Court was wholly correct" in ruling 28 years ago that racially "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

The former Justice Department officials added, "The second view which we all share is that Congress is not empowered by the Constitution selectively to restrict the jurisdiction of the federal courts to prevent them from enforcing" desegregation "in full measure."

They said bills that would take away the courts' power to order school busing to achieve integration "would truly reverse the course" that the Supreme Court set for the nation in 1954.

A Senate Judiciary subcommittee has approved two bills to prohibit court-ordered busing. Also, the Senate approved an amendment to a Justice Department spending measure that would bar courts from ordering busing of school children more than five miles or 15 minutes from home.

Dole disagrees with 'safe harbor'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate Republican leader on Saturday challenged the Reagan administration's claim that new investment is being spurred by a law that allows money-losing firms to sell their tax breaks to other companies.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan., said the Treasury Department report Friday on the impact of the "safe harbor" tax leases offered no proof that they are helping financially weak companies compete with profitable rivals.

"Despite the Treasury analysis released this week, the evidence continues to mount that leasing has failed to carry out the intent of the provision as it was included in the Economic Recovery Act of 1981," Dole said.

He also said the report did not address the question of whether the government should be subsidizing businesses with billions of dollars of tax breaks while other Americans are being asked to sacrifice in order to bring about an economic recovery.

The safe harbor provision allows a firm that is not making a profit to buy machinery it needs, sell it to a money-making company and then lease it back. The profitable company then gets the investment and depreciation credits of the purchase to reduce its tax liability.

Dole, who is seeking to repeal or at least make substantial changes in the law, said preliminary estimates by the Joint Committe on Taxation show that only 75 percent of the program's benefits are going to the struggling companies that were supposed to benefit.

The Treasury analysis said non-profitable companies were reaping 84.5 percent of the benefits.

"Even under the Treasury analysis, more than 15 percent of the safe harbor leasing benefits — $1 billion — goes to the buyers of the tax benefits and third parties," Dole said. "Last year alone, more than $100 million went to investment bankers and attorneys."

He also noted that more than 85 percent of the $19.3 billion in property that changed hands during the first five months the law was in effect involved transactions worth more than $10 million each.

"It is clear that the vast majority of losing benefits went to big business," Dole said. "The report offers no data to indicate that new companies are using safe harbor leasing — one of the principal justifications for having the provision at all."

May 25 death ordered

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP) — Randy Lynn McKinney was sentenced Saturday to die by lethal injection on May 25 for the execution-style murder last year of a man on a desert shooting range.

McKinney, 20, scribbled on a legal pad as Seventh District Judge Arnold T. Beebe read the sentence on four felony convictions — first-degree murder, robbery, and conspiracy to commit both.

Asked by Beebe if he wished to address the court, McKinney replied, "I don't wish to."

Beebe sentenced McKinney to die for the shooting death of Robert Bishop Jr., 25, of Blackfoot.

McKinney's convicted co-conspirator in the killing, Dovey Small, 28, awaits sentencing on the same four felony charges.

McKinney and Ms. Small were both convicted of plotting to murder and rob Bishop last April at a makeshift shooting range in the Arco Desert in the eastern part of the state.

Bishop was shot once in the chest from a distance and four times in the head at close range, authorities said. McKinney and Ms. Small were found in possession of Bishop's car and credit cards.

McKinney also was sentenced to life imprisonment at the Idaho State Penitentiary for robbery, two concurrent sentences of 30 years imprisonment for conspiracy to commit both murder and robbery and a consecutive 15-year imprisonment for the use of a firearm in the commission of crimes.

McKinney, originally of Tulare, Calif., joins three other inmates on Idaho's Death Row. The last person executed in Idaho was Raymond Snowden on Oct. 18, 1957.

Mayor enters election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Promising to out-campaign all of his opponents, Washington Mayor Marion S. Barry Jr. formally announced his bid for re-election Saturday.

Barry, 46, told supporters who gathered at Beers Elementary School in southeast Washington, where he and his wife Effie will vote next fall, that he has "worked hard to improve the quality of life in our community."

He said his administration helped 10,000 city renters buy their homes, laid the foundation for 30,000 new jobs and improved services for the elderly.

Barry's challengers in the Sept. 14 Democratic primary include four city council members, John Wilson, Betty Ann Kane, Charlene Jarvis and John Ray.

Patricia Harris, secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the former Carter administration, also is seeking the Democratic nomination for mayor.

Ford recall announced

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. says it is recalling 544 1982-model Ford Granadas and Mercury Cougars modified to burn propane gas in order to replace and tighten fuel system fittings.

"Some of these vehicles could experience engine-compartment fuel leakage as the result of improperly tightened fuel system components," Ford spokesman Robert H. Transou said Friday. "Because fuel leakage presents a risk of fire, owners are being asked to return their vehicles to company dealerships. Until the vehicle can be serviced, it should not be parked in an enclosed area such as a garage."

The repairs will be performed at no cost to the owners, Ford said.

Teen accused in death

PAWTUCKET, R.I. (AP) — A teen-ager angered over spilled beer fired a shotgun through a car window, killing another youth, police say.

Kerry Vincent, 18, was pronounced dead Friday night at Pawtucket Memorial Hospital.

William West IV, 19, appeared before a bail commissioner Saturday on a first-degree murder charge and was remanded to state prison to await a court appearance Monday, according to Detective Lt. Herbert Collins.

Collins said an argument broke out when five youths sitting in a car in front of West's home began spraying beer on one another.

West got angry, ran into his house and emerged with the shotgun, which he fired twice, Collins said. He allegedly fired a third blast at the car as his companions fled the scene, shattering the rear window and hitting Vincent, according to police.

Police said Joseph Musone of Providence, the owner of the liquor store where the teenagers allegedly bought the beer, was charged with one count of selling an alcoholic beverage to a minor, which carries a maximum penalty of a $250 fine for a first offense.

Lousma greets Dutch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Jack R. Lousma, whose ancestors lived in The Netherlands, sent greetings from space today to the Dutch royal family.

Told by Mission Control that the Dutch people were following his flight with great interest, Lousma said he had many friends and relatives there, "and while we're talking about that, I happen to know that this is the bicentennial year for 200 years of unbroken diplomatic and trade relatioins between The Netherlands and the United States.

"In connection with that the queen will be visiting the United States on a state visit next month," Columbia's commander said. "I know that she will be welcome and I would respectfully like to send my best wishes and regards to Queen Beatrix and Prince Klaus and the royal family, and hopefully we'll be able to see them when they come next month."

Ford offers investment incentive

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. is offering its 70,000 U.S. white-collar employees a plan to invest in the company's financing subsidiary to earn higher interest rates than are available on passbook savings accounts.

The newly established Ford Money Market Account allows salaried workers to invest as little as $50 a month in Ford Motor Credit Co. and receive interest that will be at a rate one-half of 1 percent above the most recent average seven-day yield of all taxable money market funds.

Investments can be made through payroll deductions, the company announced Friday.

Ohio 'disaster'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has declared Ohio a major disaster area as a result of severe storms and flooding that began March 12 and caused extensive property damage, the White House announced Saturday.

His decision means federal aid from the president's Disaster Relief Fund will be made available for eligible disaster victims.

Isolated president serious matter

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since President Reagan was wounded in an assassination attempt on March 30, 1981, the loneliness of the presidency has grown with the increased security surrounding his every move. One year later, Associated Press Writer Michael Putzel, who was with Reagan the day he was shot, examines the change in the president's lifestyle.

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — "A few days ago, I returned from a memorable three-state visit to America's heartland," President Reagan wrote.

"In Iowa, Minnesota and Indiana, time and again I was inspired by the commitment and resolve of average citizens from all walks of life — farmers, factory workers, small businessmen and professionals pulling together through difficult times to make our country great again."

"At every stop on my trip," the letter continued, "(the American people) urged me to hold firm to the course we have charted for recovery."

The curious thing about that letter to Republican members of Congress was that others who made the trip with him could not recall Reagan meeting with anyone other than two governors and a few big GOP contributors at a quick hand-shaking session in Minnesota.

SENIOR WHITE HOUSE aides concede that the security precautions surrounding the president in the year since he was shot and seriously wounded outside a Washington hotel have served to isolate him from the public.

Asked who the president meant by "average citizens from all walks of life," spokesman David R. Gergen suggested that Reagan was referring to state lawmakers he addressed in speeches to the Iowa and Indiana legislatures.

"Well, he had the experience there in the state capitols of a lot of the cheering that was going on in the legislative meetings from both sides of the aisle," Gergen said.

When pressed, the spokesman conceded that Reagan "was not able to go out and go into shopping malls and walk out in the street. But he was talking to peoples' representatives there in state legislatures. You often find that the state legislative level is a good cross section of people."

It's true Reagan spoke to the legislators, but they had no opportunity to speak to him. In each case, he walked in, gave his prepared speech and left.

Rather than ease with the passage of time, the security around Reagan has continued to tighten, partly in response to an alleged Libyan hit team threat but also because Secret Service researchers keep coming up with new twists in their never-ending search for ways to shield the president.

And some presidential assistants have helped hide him even more by restricting reporters' access to the president and limiting the outsiders invited in to see him.

Gergen, who is in charge of communications, and Michael K. Deaver, Reagan's closest personal aide who handles his schedule, say they actively work to overcome the barriers between the president and practically everyone else. But they acknowledge the difficulty of their task.

"I SPEND SO MUCH of my time saying 'no' and so little time being creative," Deaver said. "Everybody wants to get someone in to see the president, and it's usually for their own good instead of his."

Deaver said Reagan "is very willing" to see a variety of people and has private dinners in the upstairs residential quarters of the White House to talk to people he might not otherwise meet.

When the weather permits, the president goes horseback riding on Wednesday afternoons and, Deaver said, "I always try to find someone to ride with him who can give him a fresh insight." Before winter interrupted his schedule, Reagan's riding partners included Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, a one-time professional rodeo rider; and Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., the president's closest friend in Congress.

"I think every president has over time felt confined in the White House," Gergen said. "The fact is you simply can't walk down the street; you can't go out to lunch; you can't do anything without having a retinue of agents, photographers, reporters, assistants — a long parade of other people going with you. So there is a confinement process that I think everybody recognizes, and I think that's why Camp David (the presidential retreat) has become a haven for every president in recent years as the confinement has increased."

Before he was shot, Reagan did get out more — not so much to mingle with crowds or talk to "average citizens from all walks of life," but to eat in restaurants, go to church and to theater and to see old California friends.

Although he was pronounced fully recovered from his chest wound six months ago, the president hasn't resumed his earlier lifestyle. His wife, Nancy, explained that they hesitate to inconvenience the public too often, now that the Secret Service requires everyone attending the same event as the Reagans to be screened for weapons.

"Secret Service guys are a little bit like lawyers," said one senior White House aide who asked not to be named for fear of offending the president's bodyguard. "You know, they have five different reasons why you can't do something. They protect your best interests, there's no doubt about that, but at the same time...their goal is not always the same as that of an elected official, the president."

THE OFFICIAL HASTILY added that the agents do "exactly what they're supposed to do and are superb at it" while at the same time acknowledging the frustrations of living with so many restrictions.

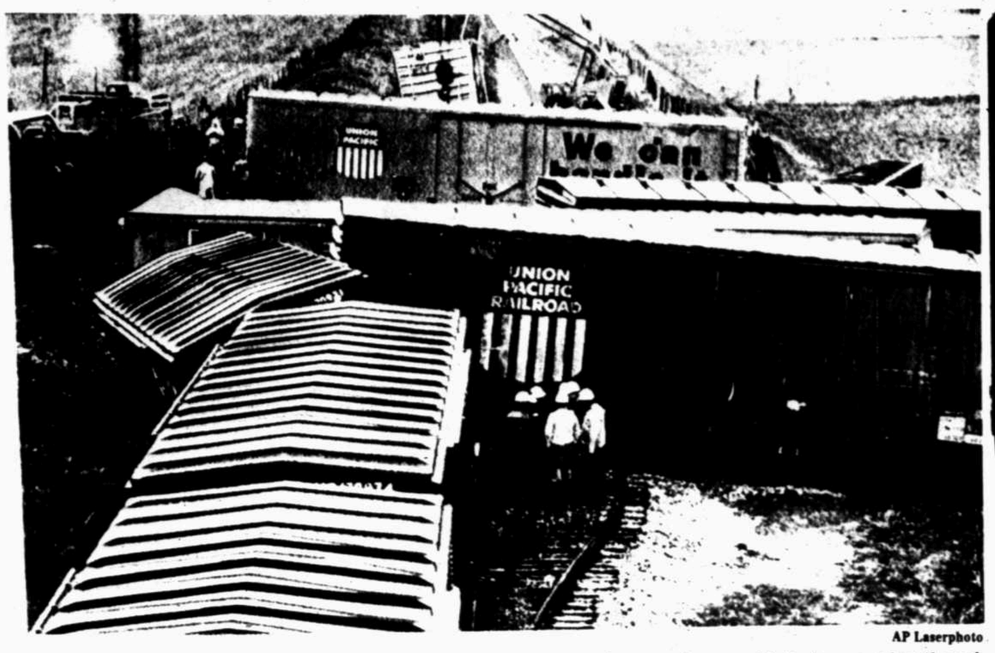

As Gergen put it: "One constant concern of the presidency is that your thoughts begin to narrow, you begin to see things through a tunnel, just by living in Washington and dealing constantly with certain kinds of people."

That's why Reagan and his aides were so pleased with his recent impromptu visit to Ft. Wayne, Ind., to visit the flood-ravaged riverfront and show his solidarity with disaster victims.

The spontaneous nature of the visit overcame many of the usual security problems, and Reagan was able to get out among what Gergen called "real people."

And although the spokesman acknowledged the presidential trip was set up with television cameras and public reaction in mind, he said Reagan "just loved it...just getting to see people out there, how they live, the problems they were dealing with...We were very pleased with the trip."

"He got so much out of it that I'm sure we'll be looking for additional ways for him to get out and see people," Gergen said.

A railroad worker was killed when 18 cars of a Union Pacific freight train derailed in Payson, Utah, shortly after noon Saturday. The train took about four miles to stop and in the process gouged several miles of track. A man working to clear the wreckage said that several railroad workers were able to run away from the track when they saw the derailed train approaching. The man killed was unable to cross a barbed wire fence in time to avoid the train.

Democrats victims of own success?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The old Democratic majority, a victim of its own success, has disappeared from the American political scene and the nation is nearing a time when "neither political party will have a dominant majority," says political author Michael Barone.

"There is room for a party which is somewhat more generous on economic issues and somewhat more cautious on foreign policy than the Reagan administration — room for such a party to thrive and win its share of elections," wrote Barone in the March issue of a new publication called National Policy Papers.

Barone, former vice president of the Democratic polling firm of Peter D. Hart, wrote that the Democratic majority that had existed since 1950 consisted of white Southerners and ethnic and working class Northerners.

"The Democrats lost their natural majority primarily because the country changed, because Democratic politics changed people's circumstances and attitudes for the better," wrote Barone, an author of The Almanac of American Politics.

Barone wrote that Democrats' support for civil rights destroyed their majorities among Southern whites, and Democrats' economic programs helped produce the prosperity which made working class Northerners less dependent on those programs.

"The working class and ethnic Democrats who helped form the natural Democratic majority in 1950 have not just moved," Barone wrote. "In most cases, they have died and been replaced by their children and grandchildren. And these new voters have quite different sets of experiences, which have not inclined them as much as their elders to support Democratic candidates.

"There has been an increase in living standards of blue collar Americans and a decline in working class consciousness," he said.

Barone's analysis was printed in the second issue of National Policy Papers and was titled: "Political Conditions and the Democratic Party: A World Turned Upside Down."

It was published by a new, non-partisan research group in Washington called the National Policy Exchange.

"The working class Americans of 1950 had lived through a period of economic hard times, and felt they had to band together to fight for a decent living in a declining economy," Barone wrote.

"The blue collar Americans of 1980 have lived through a period of great prosperity and economic growth, and one in which there are now protections for them if they do encounter hard times."

Barone said President Reagan's election showed that the natural Democratic majority had vanished — and that it had been gone for some time.

"It showed Democrats — and Republicans — that the world of 1950 had turned upside down," Barone wrote. "The Democrats not only lost the presidency, they lost it big...Democrats today need to re-examine the America of the 1980s and to apply their basic principles to a society which has, in fact, been vastly improved and strenghtened by the success of the Democratic policies of the past."

Nine indicted in loan fraud case

MIAMI (AP) — Two former vice presidents of the Chase Manhattan Bank are among nine people indicted by a federal grand jury in a multimillion-dollar loan fraud case, officials say.

The 40-count indictment, handed up Friday, capped a four-year investigation supervised by the Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force here.

Some defendants obtained $17.5 million in loans from Chase Manhattan and $2.8 million in loans from Miami National Bank for construction projects in southern Florida, the indictment said.

The indictment names former Chase Manhattan vice presidents Michael Calandra, 52, now of Miami, who supervised commercial lending in five New York counties, and Jon Levine, 40, of New York, who was in charge of lending in Brooklyn and Staten Island.

They were charged with racketeering, bank fraud, bankruptcy fraud, interstate transportation of stolen property and other counts.

The loan money was diverted through phony bank transactions and payments to dummy corporations and personal use, the indictment alleged.

The loans were supposed to finance construction and operation of the Outrigger Club condominium in North Miami and the Holiday Isle Resort in Islamorada, it said. Both projects eventually failed.

Bankers from the two institutions conspired with Miami developer Irvin Freedman and his lawyer, Leo Greenfield, to defraud the banks and the two construction projects, the indictment alleged.

Freedman and Levine also were named with the indictment, saying they together held a controlling interest in the Outrigger Club.

The former Miami National officials named were: Joseph Stefan, 64, of Miami, former president of the bank; John J. O'Connor, 64, of Miami Shores, who succeeded Stefan; and Truman Skinner, a lawyer who chaired the bank's loan committee.

Dam breaks loose in Hell

HELL, Mich. (AP) — A 125-year-old earthen dam on the Portage River burst in the village of Hell, flooding a trailer park with 3 feet of water and forcing the evacuation of 25 mobile homes, officials say.

There were no reports of injuries in the Friday incident, but the flooded trailers in this village of 300 people 50 miles northwest of Detroit were a total loss. Road crews used boulders and chunks of concrete to brace the remaining half of the dam.

The aging dam was to have been replaced this summer under an $800,000 cooperative project between Washtenaw and Livingston counties, said Washtenaw County Drain Commission James E. Murrey.

"The project was contingent only on the state of Michigan coming up with its 62 percent share of the cost," said Murrey. "We've been negotiating with the state for that share because about 77 percent of the land in the (four-township) assessment district is owned by the state."

Sub to become oldest active vessel

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — The Coast Guard cutter Duane has tangled with Nazi submarines, landed U.S. troops in France during World War II and patroled the coast of Vietnam since it was put in the water in 1936.

It's still in service and this week it becomes the nation's oldest active military vessel.

The 327-foot cutter, based here, now patrols Maine's fishing grounds. The Coast Guard historian Robert Scheina said the cutter, named for former Treasury Secretary William J. Duane, gains senior status Thursday when the cutter Campbell is decommissioned.

Judge rules Minnesota Jaycees can't expel chapters for OK'ing women

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A federal judge had barred the U.S. Jaycees from expelling two Twin Cities chapters that accept women members, in violation of Jaycees guidelines.

U.S. District Judge Diana Murphy ruled Thursday that the national policy is an unconstitutional violation of Minnesota's laws against sex discrimination. The Jaycees had argued that the state laws deprived it of constitutional guarantees of freedom of association.

The ruling affects 30 chapters in Minnesota that accept women. Dan Aberg, who was St. Paul Jaycees president when the fight began, said the ruling is the first involving national policy by a federal court. He said it will have no direct effect on lawsuits pending in other states, but sets an important precedent.

Illinois company to close factories

KANKAKEE, Ill. (AP) — Roper Corp. says it will mothball its factories here and in Bradley over the next 18 months, idling 1,280 workers in an area already saddled with the highest jobless rate in Illinois.

The factories once employed 2,800 workers, but over the past two years have lost $10 million due to "depressed consumer demand" and rising operating costs, Roper said. The company manufactures lawnmowing and garden equipment and appliances and is a major supplier to the nation's biggest retailer, Sears, Roebuck and Co., which owns 40 percent of Roper's stock.

Unemployment in this area is 16.4 percent.

Engine failure believed crash cause

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Engine failure is believed to be the cause of a helicopter crash that killed two Tulsa police officers, Police and Fire Commissioner Roy Gardner said Saturday.

The Hughes 269-C helicopter was chasing a drunken driving suspect Friday when it clipped a treetop and plunged into a pasture.

Gardner, as part of his duties, has been investigating the crash, along with the Federal Aviation Administration.

Russia-bound equipment impounded

BLAINE, Wash. (AP) — The Customs Service says it has impounded at the Canadian border 15 trailer trucks carrying oil-exploration equipment bound for the Soviet Union.

"We'll have a pretty firm idea Monday whether to seize it or let it go," said Mike Fleming, a Customs spokesman in San Francisco.

Export laws require special permits when technical materials are transported to Soviet-bloc countries, Fleming said. The equipment was assembled by the Mertz Co. of Ponca City, Okla. and was being transported to Vancouver, British Columbia, when it was seized Friday.

Judge upholds death penalty law

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A judge has upheld New Hampshire's death penalty law, which permits executions in murder-for-hire plots.

Sullivan County Superior Court Judge Joseph DeClerico Jr. handed down the ruling Friday in the case of a woman accused of hiring a man to kill her husband.

Execution by hanging also can be invoked in New Hampshire on conviction for killing a police officer or prison guard and for committing a murder during a kidnapping.

New Hampshire abolished the death penalty in the late 1960s and reinstituted it after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that capital punishment is not unconstitutional.

The last hanging in the state was in the 1930s.

Four states experience temporary electricity losses

By The Associated Press

Hundreds of thousands of people in four states, most in California and Arizona, lost electricity for up to 90 minutes Saturday after the failure of three high-voltage lines from Oregon, officials said.

Power was restored within an hour for most customers, according to spokesmen for Arizona Public Service Co. and the Salt River Project in Arizona, and Pacific Gas and Electric in California. Brief outages also were reported in New Mexico and Nevada.

The outages started at about 10:30 a.m. PST after a high-voltage direct-current line failed between southern Oregon and northern California, said Dennis Eyre, administrative manager of the Western System Coordinating Council in Salt Lake City, which coordinates power transmissions among 14 western states.

Shortly afterward, two alternating current lines linking the two states were also knocked out, he said.

Crews were sent to fix the lines but it was not immediately known what caused the problem, he said.

The blackouts were triggered by safety devices to "isolate the problem and minimize customers affected" when grid-wide problems occur, said Eyre.

In California, the outage "affected really the entire state, but the duration was not great," said Pacific Gas and Electric spokesman Dennis Pooler. "It apparently affected hundreds of thousands of customers."

Lights stayed on in most urban areas. The Mission District of San Francisco lost power, prompting transit officials to roll out diesel buses to replace electric trolleys. Power also failed in western San Jose.

"The worst problem we had was that the phones kept ringing off the hook," said police Sgt. Frank McPherson in Pasadena, a Los Angeles suburb. He said traffic signals went out, but there were no accidents.

Arizona Public Service Co. spokesman Rick Cook said an estimated 50,000 to 70,000 customers in metropolitan Phoenix were blacked out for up to 90 minutes. Outages may have extended all the way to Four Corners, the northeastern tip of Arizona, he said.

Thousands more were affected in suburban communities, said Salt River Project officials.

In New Mexico, "we did have some repercussions on our system and we had to shed to residential substations for about 10 minutes this morning," said Bud Mulcock, spokesman for Public Service Co. of New Mexico. He said an estimated 2,000 customers in Albuquerque were affected by the outage.

In Nevada, a Sierra Pacific Power Co. spokesman said a "system outage" cut off power in some parts of the Reno area for 10 to 15 seconds.

Water companies to start pumping again after spill

UKIAH, Calif. (AP) — Toxic formaldehyde in the Russian River flowed past water system intakes and toward the Pacific Ocean on Saturday as water companies serving about 250,000 people prepared to resume pumping from the contaminated river.

Officials of the Sonoma County Water Agency were deciding when to reopen pumps that were shut down Friday after a vandalized valve on a railroad tanker in Ukiah spilled 21,000 gallons of the suspected cancer-causing chemical into a drainage ditch leading to the river.

"Maybe tonight (Saturday) or this evening sometime we'll be able to turn on our pumps," said Bob Morrison, operations engineer for the Santa Rosa-based district, which serves six cities and two water districts in Sonoma and Marin counties.

Police said there are no suspects in the vandalism. The Georgia Pacific Chemical Co. tank car was in a business-residential area of Ukiah, about 100 miles north of San Francisco.

About 4,100 people in Cloverdale, some 25 miles south of the spill, were without tap water late Friday and early Saturday. Water tank trucks were sent to the town to supply emergency water supplies.

Costumed demonstrators protesting U.S. involvement in Central America and El Salvador gathered near El Salvador's Consulate General in Chicago Saturday.

U.S. delegation expects fair Salvadoran election

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — American observers to El Salvador's election said Saturday they are confident that despite past history of fraud and a leftist insurgency they can effectively check the fairness of the voting.

"I see no way that they could steal this election without our knowing it," said Richard Scammon, an election specialist who is a member of the eight-member observer team here.

Scammon said the Salvadoran government has put in place a very good system for making sure of an honest vote. He cited procedures for preventing double voting, assuring a fair count and providing quick tabulation of results.

The election Sunday for a Constitutent Assembly to rewrite the constitution and choose an interim president comes amid tight security in the capital and while guerrilla fighting goes on in parts of the countryside.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., head of the U.S. delegation, said the closeness of the race was a positive sign.

"This is one of the exciting challenges, I believe. There is some strong competition and uncertainty about how the elections are going to come out Sunday," she told a news conference. "There have been polls showing differing results, just as in Kansas."

Mrs. Kassebaum said the observers would fan out to polling places around the country, but would probably not go to areas of heavy guerrilla activity.

She said the team would check on length of waits at polling places, possible harassment, the procedures for voting and the counting of the ballots.

Another member of the team, Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., said there would certainly be charges of fraud from Salvadorans, but Americans should not insist on perfection.

"Louisiana has had illegal elections," Livingston said. "A lot of states in the U.S. have had fraudulent elections. It's not for us as neighbors of El Salvador to come down here and impose any high standards."

Clark Kerr, president emeritus at the University of California at Berkeley, another member of the U.S. delegation, said the team was very concerned about voting in rural areas, where guerrilla activity has been heaviest.

Kerr said special arrangements had been made with peasant unions supporting the election to help assess the fairness of the vote in the countryside.

U.S. officials have mostly expressed concern about possible attempts by leftist guerrillas to disrupt the polling places, but some Salvadorans have said their greater worry is possible retaliation from the army if they don't vote.

At the polling places, a voter's finger will be marked with invisible ink that can be seen only under ultraviolet light.

In tightening security around the capital for the election, the government has stationed a U.S.-trained battalion near the elections headquarters building. The building came under three guerrilla attacks Thursday.

The election is to seat a 60-member Constituent Assembly to write a constitution and elect a provisional government to replace the junta until general elections are held. The centrist Christian Democrats and five groups on the right are fielding candidates.

Guerrillas hope barricades effective in curtailing voters

USULUTAN, El Salvador (AP) — Barricades along El Salvador's key coastal highway are part of the guerrillas' strategy to disrupt the economy and persuade Salvadorans to stay away from the polls today.

Another reason, as one guerrilla explained it, is "to prevent the enemy from passing with armored cars."

He spoke to reporters Friday by the side of the road near the outskirts of Usulutan, the second-largest city in eastern El Salvador. It was the scene of heavy combat Thursday.

He and other guerrillas did not appear nervous or overly concerned about army patrols lurking nearby.

Several in the guerrilla group, all dressed in civilian clothes, carried M-16 rifles. One was armed with a Chinese-made rocket-launcher. They obligingly posed for pictures for journalists who had spotted them and stopped.

Their leader wore a cap which read "county mounty," slang in the western United States for sheriff. The hat was altered with a hand-lettered FMLN logo, the initials in Spanish of the guerrillas' Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

A barricade manned by another small group of guerrillas was within eyesight further down the road.

(On Saturday, the guerrillas' clandestine Radio Venceremos said the rebels had launched new assaults in several areas of Usulutan province and blew up a bridge on the Panamerican Highway in northwestern Santa Ana province. The army said it could not immediately confirm or deny the claims.)

Last October, guerrillas fighting to overthrow the U.S.-supported civilian-military junta blew up the Puente de Oro bridge on the coastal highway.

The bridge, which used to take coastal highway traffic across the Lempa River, now is crumpled, a twisted mass, and the only way over the river is along a narrow railroad bridge that parallels the crippled Puente de Oro.

Even that traffic has been largely suspended because of a scarcity of gas in eastern El Salvador, combat in the area and guerrilla barricades.

Traffic disappears about six miles before reaching the Puente de Oro. A soft drink vendor whose stall is near the bridge said no cars had passed since Monday, just an occasional bus.

Compromise may be needed in Salvadoran political future

An Analysis
By JOE FRAZIER

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Despite the significance tied to today's national election, the course of El Salvador's next government could well rest on tough negotiations for a coalition rather than directly on the votes.

Neither of the two major parties is considered likely to get the 31 seats needed for control of the 60 seats in the Constituent Assembly being elected. That means they may scramble for support from the four smaller rightist parties to control the assembly and choose a new government.

The conservative parties have based much of their campaign on attacks against the Christian Democrat Party of junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte. Some observers see them as more likely to join with the ultra-rightist Republican National Alliance led by former army intelligence Maj. Roberto d'Aubuisson.

The Christian Democrats and the Republican National Alliance are expected to split most of the vote, without a majority going to either.

If the Christian Democrats gain control of the assembly, Duarte is certain to be named provisional president. A victory by the Republican National Alliance would probably give that role to d'Aubuisson.

American officials have said they would try to deal with d'Aubuisson as president, even if that would make it more difficult to muster support for aid to El Salvador within the United States.

The Constitutent Assembly will be seated at a date to be decided by the junta, which has been governing El Salvador since a military coup in October 1979.

Its jobs will include reworking the constitution and picking a provisional government — including president — to replace the junta and rule until general elections that might occur next year. Most of the parties are running in all 14 departments, or states.

Each party can station a representative at each polling place. The vote will be counted when the polls close, the results entered on a form and signed as accurate by the precinct officials and each party member observer.

Dr. Jorge Bustamante, head of the Central Elections Commission, estimated about 700,000 Salvadorans will vote, despite guerrilla threats, the displacements brought about by 2½ years of war, and peoples' distrust built up over half a century of electoral fraud.

Estimates of the number of eligible voters range from 1 million to 1.5 million. There have been no new voter rolls for this election and Salvadorans only need a government ID card to cast their ballots.

"We don't really know how many Salvadorans we have in the territory."

Anti-Israeli protesting continues

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli troops battled Palestinian rioters in Nablus with tear gas and rubber bullets Saturday, and 20,000 Israelis marched in Tel Aviv to protest government policies in the occupied West Bank.

Anti-Israel demonstrations also occurred in the Gaza Strip, and in Bethlehem, Bet Sahour and Hebron in the West Bank of the Jordan, Israel radio reported. And two of the three West Bank mayors whose dismissal by Israel sparked the disturbances alleged that the Israelis were trying to intimidate them.

The military command said two soldiers were injured when struck by hurled stones and bottles while dispersing demonstrators in the West Bank city of Nablus and a village near the northern West Bank town of Jenin.

For the second day, the troubles spilled over into Israel's Arab community. A police spokesman said six Arabs were arrested in Nazareth for burning tires and throwing stones at vehicles. A bus was hit by a stone in the Galilee city and a passenger was injured, the state radio said.

In Tel Aviv, Israelis massed in an organized protest against Prime Minister Menachem Begin's West Bank policy, shouting slogans such as "Peace Yes, Annexation No" and "Zionism is not Vandalism."

Several left-wing Israeli Parliament members were in the crowd, estimated at 20,000 by reporters.

Last week the Israeli Parliament vote on a no-confidence motion was tied, 58-58. Before the vote Begin had said he would resign if there was a tie but his Cabinet later persuaded him to stay on.

"Our parents came here to build a democratic, peace-loving Jewish state," declared a young man addressing the crowd, "but the Begin government is gnawing away at the dream day by day."

The most serious Palestinian disturbances were in Nablus. Ousted mayor Bassam Shakaa said in a telphone interview, "This city is in a revolution."

But reporters found the city of 80,000 people mostly calm outside the marketplace where rioters ran about throwing stones, metal objects and bottles at the troops.

Soldiers arrested dozens of Arab youths, and some troops were seen beating the Arabs they took into custody.

The troops fired their rifles into the air to disperse the rioters. Tear gas also was used, and Israel radio reported that the troops fired rubber bullets at the rioters.

Five Arabs and one Israeli have died since the rioting started. The rubber bullets inflict painful but usually non-lethal injuries.

Nablus stores were shut, observing a general strike, but Israeli troops used boltcutters to break the padlocks and open the shutters. Troops also ordered shops open in Gaza, and Israel radio said about 50 shopkeepers in Arab East Jerusalem were arrested for striking.

Shakaa told The Associated Press that since Thursday, when he and Mayor Kerim Khalaf of Ramallah were fired, five of his friends and relatives had been put under arrest and an additional 10 were summoned to Israeli military headquarters in Nablus for questioning. "They are trying to get at the people close to me," Shakaa said.

Ibrahim Tawil, the mayor of El Bireh who was dismissed March 18, said Israeli troops had kicked the door of his home, cursed his wife and forbade him to go out.

Khalaf said he was ordered to Jericho, 15 miles from his town, and the authorities forbade him to leave. "They want to keep me away from my councilors and my people," Khalaf said by telephone from Jericho.

Trying to cut the political influence of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the occupied territories, Israel dismissed the three elected mayors, charging that they followed PLO directives to incite violence.

The three mayors have an almost heroic status among West Bankers because of assassination attempts against them two years ago. Shakaa lost both legs and Khalaf had a foot blown off in coordinated car bombings, and Tawil had a close call from a bomb in his garage.

They have been replaced by Israeli officers, and the authorities plan to appoint local Palestinian moderates later to run the three cities.

Besides tear gas, Israeli soldiers are using rubber bullets in their efforts to control rioting, which has continued since the government's ouster of three West Bank mayors began.

History makes for real celebration

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — If, at some time in the last two centuries, the Netherlands had declared war on the United States or bombed an American military installation or severed diplomatic ties, the celebration between the two nations this April would be a dramatic affair.

We could dwell upon how two old enemies had settled their animosities in an amicable fashion. We could exclaim over the manner in which diplomacy had healed ancient wounds. Old soldiers could squeeze into their tattered uniforms and reminisce about the day they bombed the dikes of Holland or maneuvered their tanks across fields bursting lethally with Dutch tulip blossoms.

We could even shed a few tears of sentiment over the recementing of the Peter Stuyvesant connection.

But, alas, if any of those violent events had occurred, the two nations could not be preparing for their April gala, which honors 200 years of unbroken friendship.

In essence, the U.S.-Netherlands bicentennial celebration is good news rather than bad news, which unfortunately tends to make it no news at all for a lot of Americans. It pays tribute to a unique relationship: America's longest peaceful ties with any nation in the world.

To commemorate that remarkable alliance, Queen Beatrix, a petite brunette with dimples almost as deep and as stunning as the Grand Canyon, will make two visits to these shores.

Between April 19 and 24, she will be feted in New York, Philadelphia, Princeton, Washington and other communities, where, like her mother, Queen Juliana, and her late grandmother, Queen Wilhelmina, she will address a joint session of Congress.

In June, she will return to visit Los Angeles, San Francisco, Houston, Atlanta and Chicago.

Unfortunately, because the event celebrates two centuries of peace rather than victory on the battlefield, it has stirred far less interest in the United States than in Holland.

Yet, there are frictions between friends just as there are between foes.

As Ambassador Jan Henrik Lubbers sees it, many of the problems are of a multi-lateral rather than bi-lateral nature, because the world's economy and the world's political situation both "are in rather bad shape."

But, as Lubbers points out, there are ticklish issues that affect only the United States and the Netherlands, one of them being commerce between the two countries. Holland, he explains, is "the biggest direct foreign investor in the United States."

While United States' exports to Holland total $6 billion, Netherlands' exports to America are only $1.5 billion. That constitutes a big trade deficit for a small nation.

Then, too, there is the nuclear question and the proposed deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles on European soil which has stirred controvesy all over Europe, especially in Holland.

"There is strong feeling in Europe and particularly in my own country that somehow we should really reflect upon the fact that peace seems to be dependent upon accumulated means of mutual mass destruction," said Lubbers. "If you inhabit a country like the Netherlands, which has a population density of 900 a square mile, in comparison to the American figure of 60 a square mile, one should be aware of the fact that we are all living in a garden in Holland."

Amnesty International council resigns

ROEHAMPTON, England (AP) — The 26-member governing council of the British section of Amnesty International resigned Saturday after delegates at the annual meeting passed a motion of no confidence.

The resignation followed a row over the decision of the council, headed by chairman Roger Briottet, to appoint former Liberal Party leader Jeremy Thorpe as director of the British section.

Thorpe, in a 1979 trial that created months of political scandal, was acquitted in the case involving an alleged plot to kill a male model.

He resigned from the $25,060-a-year post with Amnesty on March 4, two weeks after he was appointed, because of criticism.

Sir Michael Williams, a former vice chairman of the British section who presented the no confidence motion, said the council's shortcomings included "ingrained naivety." The motion passed 919-849.

Spanish prosecutor announces plan to appeal country's abortion decision

BILBAO, Spain (AP) — Prosecutor Fermin Hernandez Villarroya announced Saturday he will appeal to the Supreme Court the acquittal of nine women on abortion charges.

Villarroya said he will also appeal the sentence given Julia Garcia, 55, who was convicted of performing the abortions. A provincial court in Bilbao Thursday gave her a suspended sentence of 12½ years. Villarroya had asked that she be sentenced to 60 years in prison.

The court said it acquitted the nine of charges they had abortions because they had not been able to legally obtain contraceptives. Contraceptives by prescription only were legalized in Spain in 1978, but the women were charged with abortions performed between 1968 and 1978.

About 30,000 people marched through Madrid Friday shouting "abortion is murder" after the court's decision was announced. Police said the demonstration was sponsored by the extreme-right New Force Party.

Gandhi declares intent to visit Russia

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi will visit the Soviet Union later this year, she said Saturday after returning from a six-day trip to Britain. The date will be set later, she said.

It will be the 64-year-old leader's first trip to Moscow since she returned to power in elections two years ago.

Soviet officials have been urging Mrs. Gandhi to return President Leonid I. Brezhnev's 1980 visit here. But the trip had been put off, reportedly as a mild gesture of disapproval of the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

In recent months, Mrs. Gandhi has balanced visits to Italy, France and Britain in Western Europe with stops in Bulgaria and Romania in the Soviet bloc. Her next scheduled trip to Europe, in June, is to the Scandinavian countries.

Holders of Greek antiquities arrested

SALONICA, Greece (AP) — Police from this northern Greek city arrested a farmer and a storekeeper found in possession of marble sculptures, ancient vases and a prehistoric elephant bone, a police spokesman said Saturday.

Police said Dimitri Mangopoulos, 43, from the nearby village of Gefira, admitted he found the fossilized elephant bone and a bone from a prehistoric rhinoceros in an illegal excavation near his farm.

Police said Mangopoulos is suspected of belonging to an international group of antiquity smugglers.

Despite rewards offered by the Culture Ministry for turning in antiquity finds, Greece loses an estimated 300 ancient and Byzantine objects to dealers abroad every year.

Soviets announce Rubik competitor

MOSCOW (AP) — A Moldavian engineer has invented a multi-colored pyramid similar to "Rubik's cube," the popular three-dimensional logic puzzle, the Soviet news agency Tass said Saturday.

Alexander Ordynets of Kishinev, capital of Soviet Moldavia, named his pyramid-shaped puzzle the "Moldavian cube," Tass said. It did not indicate if the game was being produced for sale.

Tass said the Moldavian puzzle has fewer possible variations than Rubik's cube, named after its Hungarian inventor. Tass said the Soviet-invented puzzle is easier to solve. Soviet education experts are studying the pyramid for possible use as a visual aid in teaching geometry and developing logic and other skills, Tass said.

Malaysian 'religious deviants' arrested

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Police have arrested nine people described as proponents of deviationist religious teachings who planned to topple the government and replace it with one of their own.

A statement by police headquarters here Saturday said the men were arrested on March 23 and 24 and held under the Internal Security Act.

Under the act, the government can detain people indefinitely without trial. More than 400 such prisoners are now in police custody.

Authorities said the group subscribes to a religious teaching called Crypto that has existed in peninsular Malaysia since early 1978. They said among those arrested was the founder and leader of the group, Mokhtar Hassan, 38.

Bangladesh martial law head says democracy in two years

DACCA, Bangladesh (AP) — Martial law chief Lt. Gen. Hussain Mohammad Ershad said Saturday he hopes to return Bangladesh to democratic rule within two years.

Ershad, in his first news conference since he seized power last Wednesday in a bloodless coup, said conditions had deteriorated so badly — with corruption rampant and law and order breaking down — that he "reluctantly" moved against the elected government of President Abdus Sattar.

"I waited too long," the general told reporters at his army headquarters. He said it was a "peaceful takeover of power. Not a single bullet was fired, not a finger was raised."

Ershad has named A.F. Ahsanuddin Choudhury, a former Supreme Court justice, to replace Sattar, but under the martial-law regime the presidency will be mainly a ceremonial post.

Ershad, dressed in an army camouflage uniform, said he wants to "restore democracy as soon as possible, but this democracy is going to be a democracy consistant with the needs of the people."

"My time frame is about two years," he said.

The 52-year-old general said after that the army must have a role, but it should be as an adviser to the elected civilian government.

Ershad said martial-law courts will be set up in a few days and open trials will begin.

Party meeting indicates changes

By WILLIAM BRANIGIN
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BANGKOK, Thailand — Vietnam convened a rare congress of its Communist Party in Hanoi Saturday amid indications of a reshuffle of the aging leadership, a broadened party purge and ratification of the country's new, more liberal economic policies.

According to Western diplomats here, there have been indications from Hanoi in the weeks preceding the congress — only the fifth since the party was founded in 1930 — that Le Duan, 74, would retire as party general secretary, a post he has held for 22 years.

Most frequently mentioned as his successor has been Le Duc Tho, 72, the former chief negotiator at the Paris peace talks and political architect of the Communist takeover of South Vietnam. There has been speculation that Le Duan would move up to the more honorific post of party chairman, which has been vacant since the death of Ho Chi Minh in 1969.

ACCORDING TO WESTERN diplomats here, any leadership changes are unlikely to affect Vietnam's foreign policy, on which there is no significant debate within the Communist Party.

In an address to the congress broadcast by Radio Hanoi Saturday, Le Duan admitted to many errors in leadership and economic shortcomings in the country. He called for a major purge of the party membership after the congress ends in about a week.

Radio Hanoi said the congress would set economic policy guidelines for the 1980s and elect a new party central committee.

"At present our country is faced with many pressing problems on the economic front," Le Duan said. "Production has developed slowly while the population has increased at a fast rate." He added that "grain, cloth and other essential consumer goods are all in short supply."

Le Duan blamed "many shortcomings and errors in leadership and management" that he said "constitute the main cause that has either triggered or further aggravated these economic and social difficulties in the past years."

He denounced some party members for failing to "uphold revolutionary quality," adding: "In order to keep the party ranks clean, following this congress we must resolutely expel from the party as soon as possible all opportunists, all those whose revolutionary spirit has been paralyzed, exploiters, smugglers, speculators, persons involved in corruption and bribery and oppressors of the masses."

THE MOVE TO PURGE "bad elements" from the party has been among the contentious issues that have cropped up in preparatory meetings preceding the congress, according to diplomatic reports. Tens of thousands of the party's more than 1.5 million members already have been dropped, and there has been intense debate about whether to halt or escalate the purge. The congress originally had been scheduled for December, but debates on domestic issues delayed it, diplomats said.

According to diplomatic reports from Hanoi, a new economic policy already has been hammered out in a series of unusually polemical preparatory meetings. The Vietnamese press has used such terms as "heated," "intensive" and "frank" to describe debates, which have pitted advocates of a more pragmatic, even quasi-capitalistic approach to the economy against purists wedded to orthodox communist economics.

The pragmatists succeeded in introducing a "new economic theory" in the wake of Vietnam's dismal performance under the 1976-1980 five-year plan, and this approach is expected to be upheld at the party congress. The main features of the new economics have been material incentives for workers and peasants and introduction of a limited free-market approach to increase food production. Production of consumer goods also has been given greater attention.

One particularly controversial feature has been the adoption of a "contract farming system" in North Vietnam allowing families on collective farms to sell produce exceeding their contract quota to the state or on the free market.

The measure is believed to have contributed to Vietnam's production of a record 15 million tons of food grains last year — enough for basic subsistence but about a million tons less than the level targeted by the government for self-sufficiency.

While endorsing the pragmatic approach, the congress is expected to embrace Le Duan's call today to continue to "build socialism" in the country, especially in the South, diplomats said.

ON FOREIGN POLICY, Le Duan's speech strongly reaffirmed Vietnam's close links with the Soviet Union and its commitment to the Phnom Penh government in Cambodia, which Hanoi's troops installed in 1979 after their invasion. He also expressed firm support for Poland's martial-law government and the Soviet-installed leaders of Afghanistan.

Le Duan bitterly denounced China, telling the congress that "the most dangerous enemy of the nation is Chinese expansionism, in collusion with U.S. imperialism."

Voters deal another Mitterrand setback

PARIS (AP) — Conservative opposition forces won control of two more provincial councils Saturday in another setback for Socialist President Francois Mitterrand.

The right now holds 58 councils, up from 51 three years ago. The left controls 37 council presidencies, seven less than it had after the 1979 elections.

The council presidents will become the main administrators of their regions under Mitterrand's decentralization program that gives greater power over local affairs to the councils.

Two rounds of nationwide voting March 14 and 21 for 2,029 seats in the councils produced a clear victory for the right and a setback for Mitterrand's 10-month-old leftist government.

French voters directly elect the council delegates, who in turn cast ballots for the presidencies of their bodies.

Delegates in all but two of the 95 councils elected presidents Wednesday. The election in the Isere and Charente councils had been postponed until Saturday because of a lack of quorum in both councils Wednesday.

French National Assembly President Louis Mermaz, a Socialist, was re-elected president of the Isere council in Saturday's voting. French politicians can serve in national and local posts simultaneously.

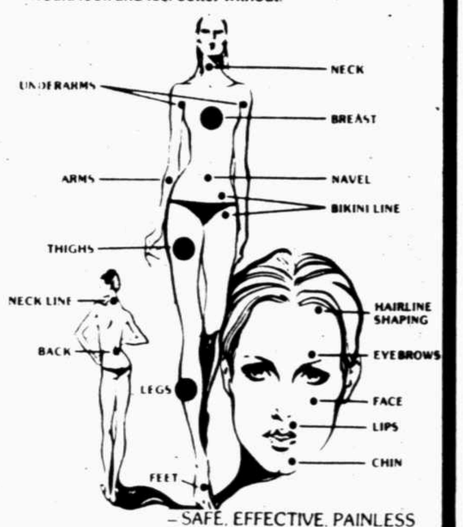

The presidency of the Charente council was won by conservative Pierre-Remy Houssin, a member of the neo-Gaullist Rally for the Republic led by Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac.

The Union for French Democracy of former conservative President Valery Giscard d'Estaing holds the most council presidencies with 32. The RPR has 17 presidencies while nine more offices were won by other rightist candidates.

Hong Kong on clean-up campaign

HONG KONG (AP) — Hong Kong is having difficulties in living up to its name, which in Chinese means "fragrant harbor," as some 10,000 tons of not-so-fragrant refuse are indiscriminately dumped into its harbor every year.

The streets of this British Crown Colony appear no cleaner than its picturesque harbor despite previous government efforts to keep them tidy.

The authorities therefore decided last October to launch a territory-wide "Clean Hong Kong Campaign" which will last until the end of this year and cost taxpayers about $10 million.

Plans are also afoot to use a computer to track down chronic lap sap chuns (litterbugs) who have so far escaped heavier fines because it has proved difficult to differentiate between first and repeat offenders.

To put more teeth in the campaign, the maximum penalty for littering has been raised from about $345 to about $860 and six months' imprisonment.

LAP SAP CHUNS are already feeling the pinch of tougher legislation. In the first two months of the campaign, 3,678 litterbugs were fined.

Some people seem to have discovered that the most convenient way to dispose of their garbage is out of their windows.

Rubbish thrown from high-rise buildings in this densely populated city ranges from empty soft-drink and beer bottles to broken-down television sets and discarded furniture.

Five people died and 253 others were reported injured by objects thrown from buildings.

To counter the anti-social behavior of lap sap chuns, the government has embarked on a massive education and publicity drive to arouse civic pride.

Stickers featuring a pair of angry eyes and the slogan "Hong Kong is watching" are prominently displayed in key public places to remind potential litterbugs that they could be fined heavily or even jailed.

TELEVISION AND RADIO stations have offered free air time to promote the campaign. Some business firms are donating litter bins carrying their names, without advertisement, however.

A Chinese message, "Please do not dispose of empty can improperly," is being embossed on cans of popular beverages. These cans previously carried only the English notice, "Do not litter," which is not understood by the majority of Hong Kong's 98 percent Chinese population.

In an attempt to restore Hong Kong's reputation as a fragrant harbor, helicopters are being used for the first time on lap sap chun patrols to pinpoint particularly bad slicks of floating refuse.

There are signs that the government might be winning the battle as people become more aware of their responsibility to keep their environment clean.

Commented a government cleansing foreman: "Before the campaign, I used to serve up to 20 summonses a day for littering offenses, but within the first three weeks after the launching of the campaign, only 19 tickets were issued."

Home video catching on

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It's Friday night, traffic's bad, parking's impossible and the line at the cinema's too long. So you swing by a video "library" for a movie to go.

That's entertainment, home-style, and it's a trend that's spreading.

Millions of movie cassettes — estimates range widely, from 4 million to 100 million — were rented last year. An estimated 5,000 video specialty stores have sprung up to cater to the growing business.

At Captain Video, a San Francisco-based chain of five stores, executives say up to 1,500 movie cassettes are rented out each weekend for a few dollars each.

The company's 1,400 selections offer more choice than even the biggest, theater-studded city. They range from recent releases such as "Mommie Dearest" to blue adult flicks, bloody horror movies and strange oldies like the 1938 all-midget "Terror of Tiny Town."

Two years ago, the "chain" was a single store, begun by four partners with a start-up investment that they say is equaled now by a month of good weekend rentals.

Before they started the firm, partners Paul Geffner and Robert Friedman were street artists at Fisherman's Wharf, David Prinz was a pension analyst and North American Scrabble champ and Nathan Nayman was a hospital administrator and health grant writer and consultant.

Nayman, 29, says the secret of their success has been decreasing price of videotape recorders and Americans' love of new gadgets, plus service and catchy promotions.

The videotape recorder, a device that can record television programs and play videotaped films on the TV screen, was "a frill, a luxury item," when it first hit the market, Nayman says.

"It still isn't a necessity, but because it's getting cheaper it's becoming an attractive frill," he adds.

More and more consumers are also being drawn to videotape recorders because of the flexibility they offer.

"All of a sudden you have some control over what you're seeing," Nayman says. "You're not at the mercy of network television. If you want to just watch M-A-S-H, you set your machine to record M-A-S-H and you come home and watch it."

And with the rising cost of traditional entertainment, the frill of a videotape player is getting even more attractive, he says.

"We're in a depressed economy. Going out to buy a car, going on a vacation — all the things that you want to do — have become prohibitively expensive," he says.

Going to a movie can mean shelling out for tickets, parking, maybe dinner or a babysitter. "You have these costs that just keep building when it comes to going out for entertainment," he says. But after a one-time expense of say, $600, penny-pinching moviegoers can do their watching at home.

While business is growing, it also is changing as movie companies try new ways of cashing in on the video craze.

CONSUMER TIPS

Don't be deceived by roof repair con men

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin

Last week the BBB began receiving reports that two men were going door-to-door convincing homeowners to have their wood shingle roofs sprayed with a substance represented to be linseed oil. The usual sales pitch involved scaring the homeowner into believing the likelihood of fire is greater if the shingles become dry and cracked. By paying $450 to have his roof sprayed, the homeowner was guaranteed the fire risk would be dramatically reduced.

The homeowners who believed this story were conned. Spray coatings are only helpful when applied to flat or low pitch built-up roofs. Those who hire someone to spray their asphalt shingles are wasting their money. And, while linseed oil can help preserve a wood shingle roof, applications must be started when the roof is new and made periodically thereafter.

Roof repair is the primary focus of itinerant workers. Going door-to-door, these con men will use a variety of tactics to obtain work. You may be told the job will cost less because materials were left over from another job, or, as in this case, the coating will prevent fires. Only later do the victims find they have paid an enormous price to have motor oil sprayed on their roof and the con men have skipped town.

MELTON POST, owner of Stanley Roofing, states all roofs generally fall into three categories:

—Those that can be maintained by patching and coating;

—Those that require resurfacing with a new membrane (new felt);

—Those that have deteriorated to the extent that they require removal and replacement.

Post warns that maintenance roof coatings will not revitalize a roof when the waterproofing membranes have worn out. Therefore, it is important to have a reliable, established company determine the extent of the damage and the best solution.

Many out-of-town roofing contractors are looking for work in the Permian Basin. Before you decide to have someone work on your roof, consider the following:

EXTEND ROOF life expectancy through a planned maintenance program with periodic roof inspections. Roof coatings must be applied before serious deterioration occurs — roof coatings alone, without reinforcing membranes, are not likely to correct serious roofing problems. Also, only use a coating that is chemically compatible with what is already on the roof.

—Use only established, reliable roofing contractors when having your roof repaired. If you are not familiar with the company, ask for references or check with your Better Business Bureau. If a roofer solicits your business door-to-door but gives you a local address and telephone number, be wary, it's probably an answering service.

—Ask if the company carries workman's compensation and general liability insurance. If a worker is hurt or breaks a window and the contractor does not have insurance, you could be held responsible.

—Get at least two written estimates from reliable companies. The estimate should include the materials that will be used, how the job will be done, and the warranty coverage. Don't be taken in by a high-pressure roof coating salesman who knows nothing of the type, age and condition of your roof and who makes all kinds of promises. Once the contractor is hired, make sure the types of materials agreed upon are actually used. Unethical contractors have been known to switch to lower quality materials without the homeowner's approval.

—Don't use a contractor who asks you to pay in advance. Reliable contractors can purchase materials on credit and will not ask you to pay until the job is completed. Also, be careful if the contractor tells you he can start work immediately. Most reliable roofers are extremely busy and will add you to their list.

—Read every contract and paper before you sign. Be sure all the blanks are filled in, including the completion date. After the work is completed, only sign a completion release when you have inspected and are satisfied with the job.

DON'T you be a victim of roof repair con men. They are here this year and they will be back next year. Before you invest, check with your Better Business Bureau.

Models showcase river

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Past is being united with present here as the Mississippi River fleet returns. Flatboat, packetboat, showboat, gunboat and diesel towboat are among 21 types of vessels that will be seen once more.

The vessels, built to scale, will be a feature of Mud Island, a $63-million, 50-acre tourist attraction scheduled to open in July. Each craft has left its marks on the history of the 2,348-mile-long river.

"The boat models, which range in size from a 15-inch flatboat to a 114-inch sidewheel steamboat with working steam engine, are among the finest collection in this country," says Michael Sievers, 36, director of the Mud Island Mississippi River Museum, where the vessels will be on display.

"We conducted a nationwide 12-month search (from 1978 into 1979) before selecting 13 top top model makers from Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Ohio, Tennessee and Virginia," he adds.

"Once we decided we wanted to use models," Sievers explains, "we put together a list of model makers." Several sources, including the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., were used in compiling the list.

SIEVERS MADE his selections on the basis of past work and proposals the model makers submitted. There are about 5,000 people in the world who build models, he notes.

"The boat models add something very special to Mud Island which, after all, is the first national tourist attraction to showcase a river."

Once the building began, each model maker had to submit photos monthly showing the work in progress. Sievers also visited most of them regularly.

The decision of which boats to build, Sievers says, was based on whether the craft played a significant role on the Mississippi. Also taken into account was whether the boats were representative of the types that plied the river.

Most major vessel types that navigated the Mississippi are in the fleet, he adds.

The model makers averaged about 1,000 hours of work on a boat. Some boats, however, required more than 3,000 hours. All boats are built to the same scale, with one-fourth inch equalling 1 foot.

In building the fleet, model makers faced a major hurdle: no original plans or blueprints existed on boats built before 1930.

"To do an accurate re-creation," Sievers points out, "model makers had to do their own research, often quite time consuming. In each instance, we had to provide go-ahead approval as to authenticity."

CONFLICTING information sometimes proved a problem. Plans for the snagboat, Horatio G. Wright, for example, had to be drawn from photos taken at different times during the 40 years the vessel was in operation. During that span the boat underwent construction changes. In some cases, model makers had to work with photos that showed only the port side of the boat, at other times, only its starboard side.

"The boat models," Sievers says, "add something very special to Mud Island which, after all, is the first national tourist attraction to showcase a river.

"I feel the three-dimensional aspect of the models will give the public a greater understanding of the craft.

"This spring we'll activate the fleet," Sievers says.

The models will be taken out of "mothballs," carefully inspected for nicks or other damage and installed in the museum.

The public, however, won't be seeing them until July 3 when Mud Island officially opens.

MONDAY IS DOUBLE VALUE COUPON DAY

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Early scoliosis detection precludes surgery

Dear Dr. Solomon: A neighbor tells me that the school doctor found that her daughter has scoliosis. Because she is still young, she won't need an operation. Does this make sense, or is the doctor looking for credit? — Mrs. C.M., Newport News, Va.

Dear Mrs. M.: I don't know why you would doubt that early identification and treatment of a disorder can prevent more serious complications and more extensive treatment later on. Screening for scoliosis falls within this area.

In parts of the country where scoliosis screening programs have been established in schools, the need for surgical treatment has virtually disappeared. According to Dr. Taylor King Smith, of the University of Texas Health Sciences Center in Houston, early detection of the condition means that bracing and an exercise program may preclude the need for an operation. The primary benefit of such treatment is usually the prevention of further deformity, although it is hoped that the brace will actually make the child's back straighter.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I recall that when my father was operated on in the 1950s, he got pneumonia. I also just got over a bout of pneumonia after an operation. Why does this still happen with all the new drugs we have around today? — Bert, Charleston, W. Va.

Dear Bert: The incidence of pneumonia following surgery does not appear to have changed very much over the past 30 years. Whether a patient will develop pneumonia depends in large part on the severity of the underlying diseases. A history of smoking and the length of the surgical procedure are other risk factors that help determine whether a patient gets pneumonia.

One study has placed the incidence of postoperative pneumonia at 17.5 percent. In patients who are considered to be at low risk, however, the occurrence of pneumonia is rare.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My wife and I are seriously considering sterilization because we have two children and don't want any more. The question is: Who should be sterilized? We've decided that the one that can have the operation reversed should be the one to have the operation in the first place. Do you have any information on this? — Mr. and Mrs. J. F., Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. F.: According to Dr. Theodore M. King, of the Johns Hopkins University department of obstetrics and gynecology in Baltimore, current techniques would permit from 20 to 30 percent of all sterilized women to have the procedure reversed. The restored fertility rate for men who have had vasectomies ranges from 30 to 60 percent.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard of grown-ups who have gotten the mumps, but now someone tells me they can also get whooping cough. Is this possible? — Ron, Madison, Wis.

Dear Ron: It is not only possible for adults to get whooping cough, but they also transmit the infection to children. Sometimes adults who were immunized as children lose the immunity and have no natural immunity from exposure to the disease.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Monday, March 29, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Pearl Bailey, basketball star Walt Frazier and former U.S. Sen. Eugene McCarthy (D-Minn.) celebrate this birthday with you. In the months ahead, business and financial progress depends largely on the influence of other people. Evehts taking place at a distance play a major role in the decisions that are made. Defer to business partners when in doubt. Powerful allies can make the crucial difference in a showdown at work. Your romantic feelings grow stronger and you may feel ready to make a longterm commitment. A hard-driving dynamo on your job, you must learn to show your tender side to those who love you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day for negotiating agreements or seeking employment. Focus on smoothing out any personal problems that may have grown out of yesterday's confrontation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Postpone travel; trips are unlikely to prove beneficial now. Family members who were contrary this weekend now try to make amends. Attend to matters affecting employment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cooperation creates the teamwork that can produce important results. The value of your home could be increased by a few simple repairs and a little paint.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Adopt a more practical approach to business, finance. Friends can help you sort out your feelings if you level with them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your resourcefulness makes life easier and more interesting this week. You could earn a promotion that you thought had passed you by. Get out and be seen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You feel like splurging on some great looking clothes, but may need help when paying the bills. Be sure financial support will be available.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your career really begins to go places now. Friends introduce you to someone who can help. Use all of your talents to ensure your success. You have strong incentives to work hard.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your usually splendid love life can be disappointing now, but you can change all that if you really want to. Be calm when making important decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You run into an old friend and your reunion could lead to new business. Mate, offspring are understanding about a financial situation. Show your appreciation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It is now easier to achieve a special career goal. Do not let anyone hand out cash at work without your prior approval. You could be held responsible for any losses.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may have to put in more hours at work. Although the extra pay is welcome, loved ones resent the loss of your companionship. Do not attempt to rush romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for negotiating and signing contracts. You need time to reflect on the past. Arrange your schedule so that you have more time to think.

Mongooses save Mljet

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Residents of the Adriatic Island of Mljet got tired of battling poisonous snakes which bit people and killed chickens. So they imported mongooses, the snake-killing mammals native of India.

Now, Mljet tourist officials praise the mongoose as the salvation of the island, which attracts more than 30,000 visitors a year to its pristine beaches and pine forests.

Mljet is free of the deadly vipers that still infest nearby islands. The increased mongoose population, offspring of the original half-dozen imports, is thought to be the only one of its kind in Europe.

"We should build a monument to the little Indian mouse," said Vladimir Strazicic, director of the tourism and business organization on the 40-square-mile island.

He admits that the animals, with no snakes left to kill, are themselves fond of an occasional raid on the henhouse.

But "more chickens are destroyed by children (breaking eggs) every year than by mongooses. They usually eat food thrown away by fishermen," Strazicic said in a recent telephone interview from Dubrovnik, nearest major port to the island, a four-hour boat ride away.

There are several versions of how the original mongooses came to Mljet.

Natasha Simonov, a biologist here at the Serbian Institute for Protection of Nature, said that, according to one popular tale, local sailors brought several pairs of the animals on a return trip from India some two centuries ago.

She and Strazicic both credit the version saying that a part-time resident Austrian baron, fed up with the snakes, brought five or six of the creatures from India in 1906. The island was then a part of the Austro-Hungarian empire.

Attempts were made to breed the animals on other islands and parts of the mainland to fight the snakes there, but the mongooses died out, probably because of subtle climatic differences, said Strazicic.

Frequent visitors to Mljet say the mongooses, which are protected by law, can be seen best at dusk.

Slavoljub Vlastelica, an engineer at the Nature Protection Society, said he had been visiting Mljet for several years.

The number of mongooses has stabilized at 100-200, the experts said.

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin

Last week the BBB began receiving reports that two men were going door-to-door convincing homeowners to have their wood shingle roofs sprayed with a substance represented to be linseed oil. The usual sales pitch involved scaring the homeowner into believing the likelihood of fire is greater if the shingles become dry and cracked. By paying $450 to have his roof sprayed, the homeowner was guaranteed the fire risk would be dramatically reduced.

The homeowners who believed this story were conned. Spray coatings are only helpful when applied to flat or low pitch built-up roofs. Those who hire someone to spray their asphalt shingles are wasting their money. And, while linseed oil can help preserve a wood shingle roof, applications must be started when the roof is new and made periodically thereafter.

Roof repair is the primary focus of itinerant workers. Going door-to-door, these con men will use a variety of tactics to obtain work. You may be told the job will cost less because materials were left over from another job, or, as in this case, the coating will prevent fires. Only later do the victims find they have paid an enormous price to have motor oil sprayed on their roof and the con men have skipped town.

MELTON POST, owner of Stanley Roofing, states all roofs generally fall into three categories:

—Those that can be maintained by patching and coating;

—Those that require resurfacing with a new membrane (new felt);

—Those that have deteriorated to the extent that they require removal and replacement.

Post warns that maintenance roof coatings will not revitalize a roof when the waterproofing membranes have worn out. Therefore, it is important to have a reliable, established company determine the extent of the damage and the best solution.

Many out-of-town roofing contractors are looking for work in the Permian Basin. Before you decide to have someone work on your roof, consider the following:

EXTEND ROOF life expectancy through a planned maintenance program with periodic roof inspections. Roof coatings must be applied before serious deterioration occurs — roof coatings alone, without reinforcing membranes, are not likely to correct serious roofing problems. Also, only use a coating that is chemically compatible with what is already on the roof.

—Use only established, reliable roofing contractors when having your roof repaired. If you are not familiar with the company, ask for references or check with your Better Business Bureau. If a roofer solicits your business door-to-door but gives you a local address and telephone number, be wary, it's probably an answering service.

—Ask if the company carries workman's compensation and general liability insurance. If a worker is hurt or breaks a window and the contractor does not have insurance, you could be held responsible.

—Get at least two written estimates from reliable companies. The estimate should include the materials that will be used, how the job will be done, and the warranty coverage. Don't be taken in by a high-pressure roof coating salesman who knows nothing of the type, age and condition of your roof and who makes all kinds of promises. Once the contractor is hired, make sure the types of materials agreed upon are actually used. Unethical contractors have been known to switch to lower quality materials without the homeowner's approval.

—Don't use a contractor who asks you to pay in advance. Reliable contractors can purchase materials on credit and will not ask you to pay until the job is completed. Also, be careful if the contractor tells you he can start work immediately. Most reliable roofers are extremely busy and will add you to their list.

—Read every contract and paper before you sign. Be sure all the blanks are filled in, including the completion date. After the work is completed, only sign a completion release when you have inspected and are satisfied with the job.

DON'T you be a victim of roof repair con men. They are here this year and they will be back next year. Before you invest, check with your Better Business Bureau.

Models showcase river

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Past is being united with present here as the Mississippi River fleet returns. Flatboat, packetboat, showboat, gunboat and diesel towboat are among 21 types of vessels that will be seen once more.

The vessels, built to scale, will be a feature of Mud Island, a $63-million, 50-acre tourist attraction scheduled to open in July. Each craft has left its marks on the history of the 2,348-mile-long river.

"The boat models, which range in size from a 15-inch flatboat to a 114-inch sidewheel steamboat with working steam engine, are among the finest collection in this country," says Michael Sievers, 36, director of the Mud Island Mississippi River Museum, where the vessels will be on display.

"We conducted a nationwide 12-month search (from 1978 into 1979) before selecting 13 top top model makers from Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Ohio, Tennessee and Virginia," he adds.

"Once we decided we wanted to use models," Sievers explains, "we put together a list of model makers." Several sources, including the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., were used in compiling the list.

SIEVERS MADE his selections on the basis of past work and proposals the model makers submitted. There are about 5,000 people in the world who build models, he notes.

> "The boat models add something very special to Mud Island which, after all, is the first national tourist attraction to showcase a river."

Once the building began, each model maker had to submit photos monthly showing the work in progress. Sievers also visited most of them regularly.

The decision of which boats to build, Sievers says, was based on whether the craft played a significant role on the Mississippi. Also taken into account was whether the boats were representative of the types that plied the river.

Most major vessel types that navigated the Mississippi are in the fleet, he adds.

The model makers averaged about 1,000 hours of work on a boat. Some boats, however, required more than 3,000 hours. All boats are built to the same scale, with one-fourth inch equalling 1 foot.

In building the fleet, model makers faced a major hurdle: no original plans or blueprints existed on boats built before 1930.

"To do an accurate recreation," Sievers points out, "model makers had to do their own research, often quite time consuming. In each instance, we had to provide go-ahead approval as to authenticity."

CONFLICTING information sometimes proved a problem. Plans for the snagboat, Horatio G. Wright, for example, had to be drawn from photos taken at different times during the 40 years the vessel was in operation. During that span the boat underwent construction changes. In some cases, model makers had to work with photos that showed only the port side of the boat, at other times, only its starboard side.

"The boat models," Sievers says, "add something very special to Mud Island which, after all, is the first national tourist attraction to showcase a river.

"I feel the three-dimensional aspect of the models will give the public a greater understanding of the craft.

"This spring we'll activate the fleet," Sievers says.

The models will be taken out of "mothballs," carefully inspected for nicks or other damage and installed in the museum.

The public, however, won't be seeing them until July 3 when Mud Island officially opens.

MONDAY IS DOUBLE VALUE COUPON DAY

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Early scoliosis detection precludes surgery

Dear Dr. Solomon: A neighbor tells me that the school doctor found that her daughter has scoliosis. Because she is still young, she won't need an operation. Does this make sense, or is the doctor looking for credit? — Mrs. C.M., Newport News, Va.

Dear Mrs. M.: I don't know why you would doubt that early identification and treatment of a disorder can prevent more serious complications and more extensive treatment later on. Screening for scoliosis falls within this area.

In parts of the country where scoliosis screening programs have been established in schools, the need for surgical treatment has virtually disappeared. According to Dr. Taylor King Smith, of the University of Texas Health Sciences Center in Houston, early detection of the condition means that bracing and an exercise program may preclude the need for an operation. The primary benefit of such treatment is usually the prevention of further deformity, although it is hoped that the brace will actually make the child's back straighter.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I recall that when my father was operated on in the 1950s, he got pneumonia. I also just got over a bout of pneumonia after an operation. Why does this still happen with all the new drugs we have around today? — Bert, Charleston, W. Va.

Dear Bert: The incidence of pneumonia following surgery does not appear to have changed very much over the past 30 years. Whether a patient will develop pneumonia depends in large part on the severity of the underlying diseases. A history of smoking and the length of the surgical procedure are other risk factors that help determine whether a patient gets pneumonia.

One study has placed the incidence of postoperative pneumonia at 17.5 percent. In patients who are considered to be at low risk, however, the occurrence of pneumonia is rare.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My wife and I are seriously considering sterilization because we have two children and don't want any more. The question is: Who should be sterilized? We've decided that the one that can have the operation reversed should be the one to have the operation in the first place. Do you have any information on this? — Mr. and Mrs. J. F., Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. F.: According to Dr. Theodore M. King, of the Johns Hopkins University department of obstetrics and gynecology in Baltimore, current techniques would permit from 20 to 30 percent of all sterilized women to have the procedure reversed. The restored fertility rate for men who have had vasectomies ranges from 30 to 60 percent.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard of grown-ups who have gotten the mumps, but now someone tells me they can also get whooping cough. Is this possible? — Ron, Madison, Wis.

Dear Ron: It is not only possible for adults to get whooping cough, but they also transmit the infection to children. Sometimes adults who were immunized as children lose the immunity and have no natural immunity from exposure to the disease.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Monday, March 29, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Pearl Bailey, basketball star Walt Frazier and former U.S. Sen. Eugene McCarthy (D-Minn.) celebrate this birthday with you. In the months ahead, business and financial progress depends largely on the influence of other people. Events taking place at a distance play a major role in the decisions that are made. Defer to business partners when in doubt. Powerful allies can make the crucial difference in a showdown at work. Your romantic feelings grow stronger and you may feel ready to make a longterm commitment. A hard-driving dynamo on your job, you must learn to show your tender side to those who love you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day for negotiating agreements or seeking employment. Focus on smoothing out any personal problems that may have grown out of yesterday's confrontation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Postpone travel; trips are unlikely to prove beneficial now. Family members who were contrary this weekend now try to make amends. Attend to matters affecting employment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cooperation creates the teamwork that can produce important results. The value of your home could be increased by a few simple repairs and a little paint.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Adopt a more practical approach to business, finance. Friends can help you sort out your feelings if you level with them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your resourcefulness makes life easier and more interesting this week. You could earn a promotion that you thought had passed you by. Get out and be seen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You feel like splurging on some great looking clothes, but may need help when paying the bills. Be sure financial support will be available.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your career really begins to go places now. Friends introduce you to someone who can help. Use all of your talents to ensure your success. You have strong incentives to work hard.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your usually splendid love life can be disappointing now, but you can change all that if you really want to. Be calm when making important decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You run into an old friend and your reunion could lead to new business. Mate, offspring are understanding about a financial situation. Show your appreciation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It is now easier to achieve a special career goal. Do not let anyone hand out cash at work without your prior approval. You could be held responsible for any losses.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may have to put in more hours at work. Although the extra pay is welcome, loved ones resent the loss of your companionship. Do not attempt to rush romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for negotiating and signing contracts. You need time to reflect on the past. Arrange your schedule so that you have more time to think.

Mongooses save Mljet

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Residents of the Adriatic Island of Mljet got tired of battling poisonous snakes which bit people and killed chickens. So they imported mongooses, the snake-killing mammals native of India.

Now, Mljet tourist officials praise the mongoose as the salvation of the island, which attracts more than 30,000 visitors a year to its pristine beaches and pine forests.

Mljet is free of the deadly vipers that still infest nearby islands. The increased mongoose population, offspring of the original half-dozen imports, is thought to be the only one of its kind in Europe.

"We should build a monument to the little Indian mouse," said Vladimir Strazicic, director of the tourism and business organization on the 40-square-mile island.

He admits that the animals, with no snakes left to kill, are themselves fond of an occasional raid on the henhouse.

But "more chickens are destroyed by children (breaking eggs) every year than by mongooses. They usually eat food thrown away by fishermen," Strazicic said in a recent telephone interview from Dubrovnik, nearest major port to the island, a four-hour boat ride away.

There are several versions of how the original mongooses came to Mljet.

Natasha Simonov, a biologist here at the Serbian Institute for Protection of Nature, said that, according to one popular tale, local sailors brought several pairs of the animals on a return trip from India some two centuries ago.

She and Strazicic both credit the version saying that a part-time resident Austrian baron, fed up with the snakes, brought five or six of the creatures from India in 1906. The island was then a part of the Austro-Hungarian empire.

Attempts were made to breed the animals on other islands and parts of the mainland to fight the snakes there, but the mongooses died out, probably because of subtle climatic differences, said Strazicic.

Frequent visitors to Mljet say the mongooses, which are protected by law, can be seen best at dusk.

Slavoljub Vlastelica, an engineer at the Nature Protection Society, said he had been visiting Mljet for several years.

The number of mongooses has stabilized at 100-200, the experts said.

Texas farmers urged to join government's set-aside program

AUSTIN — Since Texas agriculture is in a "critical economic bind," Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown is urging farmers to participate in the federal government's set-aside program.

"Right now," Brown said, "it's the only thing standing between agriculture and a near collapse of the farm economy in grains and cotton."

"Texas agriculture is in a critical economic bind this year with large inventories of grains and cotton and a worldwide slow-down in sales," said the commissioner. "Reducing acreage can help prices. We must also increase our efforts to sell — to any nation that wants to buy."

"We have protested the low target prices, loan rates, and the amount of set-asides since the farm bill was first introduced, but changes are unlikely."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has established a 15 percent set-aside in wheat, cotton, and rice and a 10 percent set-aside in feed grains. Deadline for farmers' participating in the federal program is April 16.

In Texas, only 1.28 percent of the eligible acreage is in the program. The government will make no payments for set-aside acreage.

Brown to host SASDA meeting

AUSTIN — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown, who is president of the Southern Association of State Departments of Agriculture (SASDA), will host the annual meeting of SASDA June 20-23 in Austin's Hyatt-Regency Hotel.

Convention speakers will include representatives of government and industry and will include Texas Congressman Charles Stenholm.

SASDA functions to help "shape the direction of agriculture," said Brown.

Short-term pork outlook good

DES MOINES, Iowa — The short-term outlook for pork is bright, according to the National Pork Producers Council.

Foremost on the upbeat side is a U.S. Department of Agriculture report which indicates that the hog and pig count is 90 percent of the 1981 level. And the number of hogs kept for breeding is down 14 percent from last year. Those figures suggest a "steady hog price" in the mid-$50s per hundredweight range.

A USDA report also indicated that the supplies of pork in cold storage were 100,000 pounds lower than last year's level, and the supplies indicate a "good" movement of pork at the retail level and a stable demand on the part of the consumer.

Area land prepared for planting

COLLEGE STATION — West Texas farm land is being prepared for spring planting even though the non-irrigated land is still dry, according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Alfalfa is being irrigated and is into a good early growth.

Livestock is good to fair.

Brown blasts Hightower

FORT WORTH — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown is charging that political opponent Jim Hightower is "in way over his head when discussing farm issues."

Brown, who is seeking re-election to the state's top post in agriculture, also said that fellow Democrat Hightower "is totally out of touch with the realities of Texas agriculture."

The commissioner said that Hightower's recent proposals reveal "an appalling lack of knowledge about vital issues of concern to Texas farmers and ranchers."

"As a non-agriculturalist, Hightower has a tough time keeping his head above water when the discussion turns to agriculture," Brown said. "But he's about to go under for the third time by backing a multi-state grain compact scheme, which has been kicked around for years by Texas grain producers and dealers, and which has been rejected every time."

Advantages of fertilizing young pecan trees sometimes offset by risk of burning roots

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Continuing our discussion of fertilizer practices, today we will discuss the fertilization of home yard pecan trees.

First year pecan trees (those planted this winter) should receive no soluble fertilizer applied to the soil. The risk of burning new roots offsets the advantages. They should receive foliar applications of zinc after leafing out, as outlined below.

Young trees in the second growing season should receive a split application of ammonium sulphate (21 percent nitrogen), the first right now and the second in early June. Use about ½ pound of ammonium sulphate per tree per application.

Older trees growing in yards where lawn grass is regularly fertilized should receive an additional application of one pound of 16-8-8, or similar analysis, fertilizer per diameter inch of trunk size (measured about two feet above ground level). Punch holes with a crowbar, sharp-shooter shovel or similar tool, eight to 12 inches deep around the tree at the drip line and place fertilizer (½ cupful) in each hole until the required amount is applied. Space holes about three feet apart.

The reason for placing the fertilizer in holes is because the phosphorus portion is relatively insoluble and does not move downward to the root zone when broadcast on the surface, as does nitrogen.

Note: Soils where phosphorus (P205) levels are in excess of 156 ppm (as determined by soil test) probably should not receive phosphorus containing fertilizers. In such cases, apply nitrogen only (21-0-0) at the rate of one pound per diameter inch of trunk in March and again in early Jone. Nitrogen is soluble in water and can be broadcast in the drip line and watered in. If lawn grass surrounding yard trees receives heavy applications of nitrogen reduce the above amounts by half.

Zinc is another element critical to good growth of pecans. Zinc is not highly efficient when applied to the soil but in the case of large homeyard trees where spraying is difficult with limited equipment, an insurance application of one pound 36 percent zinc sulfate per inch trunk diameter applied in the holes as outlined above (can be mixed with the 16-8-8) will furnish a limited amount of zinc. Zinc chelate can also be used in the soil, according to the product label.

A foliar spray combining zinc sulfate (two teaspoons per one gallon of water) should be applied to control pecan rosette (zinc deficiency). The first spray should be applied at bud break, a second one week later, and then every two weeks as long as there is any new growth. On young trees this may mean a total of five to seven applications.

A small two-or three-gallon pump-up sprayer or some of the hose-on sprayers available at garden centers, along with the use of step ladders, can permit zinc spraying of fairly large trees. Spray even though you may not be able to reach the very top. Cover as many leaves as you can.

An excellent spray mixture for late season (July, August) is one teaspoon zinc sulfate, two tablespoons Zineb (tradename Dithane-78, a zinc containing fungicide) and four tablespoons wettable sulphur to one gallon water. Add 1½ teaspoons household detergent or surfactant as a spreader-sticker.

Foliar sprays are most effective when application is made late in the afternoon or very early in the morning when evaporation rate is the lowest.

Liquid NZN (zine nitrate) can be used to mix foliar sprays of zinc. Follow label instructions for mixing but usually suggest 1¼ quarts per 100 gallons water (about two teaspoons per one gallon water).

Zinc is utilized by pecan foliage for the manufacture of a growth hormone called indole-acetic-acid. Without zinc and indole-acetic-acid pecan growth is greatly reduced. The leaves will be small and the shoots will be short and in clusters, forming what is commonly called "zinc rosette." Zinc is not readily translocated from shoot to shoot; consequently zinc sprays are needed if new growth is to receive zinc. This is also why good coverage is important.

Rain aids much of state, misses West Texas area

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Scattered spring rains early this week should help farmers in central areas of Texas get their crops up and should help conditions in coastal areas and parts of East Texas.

However, most western areas remain dry.

Spring planting continues to increase over the eastern half of the state, said Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service of the Texas A&M University System.

Corn and grain sorghum planting is complete over most of Southwest Texas and the Central Texas Blacklands and ranges from 70 to 80 percent complete in South Texas and the Coastal Bend, he said.

Cotton planting is about 50 percent complete in the Coastal Bend and 60 percent complete in the Rio Grande Valley and is also active along the Upper Coast and in South Central Texas, Pfannstiel said.

Rice planting continues in coastal areas.

Warmer soil temperatures that are vital for good seed germination and good crop stands have prompted increased planting, said Pfannstiel.

Temperature averages as recorded by the Agricultural Weather Service for the past week were as follows: Austin, 67 degrees; Beaumont, 75; Beeville, 75; Bushland, 53; College Station 66; Eagle Lake, 74; Dilley, 79; Lavon Dam (near Dallas), 66; Longview, 76; Lufkin, 69; San Angelo, 67; Uvalde, 76; Waco, 65; and Weslaco, 80.

Could you 'pass' the salt?

Salt crystals which are 40 percent sodium have become the "demon crystals," according to advocates of the "shake the salt habit." Nutritionists and doctors are linking a high salt intake with high blood pressure.

Hey, America, can you 'pass' the salt?

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Americans were asked to eat fewer eggs to lower their cholesterol intake.

They were asked to stop smoking to avoid heart attacks and lung cancer.

They were told dangers such as saccharin, nitrates, sugar and cyclamates lurk in their food.

Now, Americans are being asked to give up their favorite flavoring — salt.

Some doctors and nutritionists are telling Americans that in the diamond crystals lies a potential killer — sodium.

But, some critics are saying this is just another food fad hysteria.

However, the American Medical Association, the American Heart Association and the Federal Food Drug Administration all advocate cutting back on the daily salt intake to avoid the number one killer in the U.S. — hypertension, commonly known as high blood pressure.

HIGH BLOOD pressure is the most common cause of a stroke, that is, a hemorrage into the brain from an artery.

But it's not the actual salt that physicians are saying no to. It's sodium.

While it is not known how sodium contributes to hypertension, doctors and nutritionists are in an uproar across the country to get people to stop using table salt, lower the amount of sodium used in processed foods and are asking for sodium labeling on products.

Salt is 40 percent sodium. It is estimated that Americans consume the sodium equivalent of 2 to 2½ teaspoons of salt a day, and somewhere between 35 and 60 million Americans have some form of high blood pressure, with 35 million having serious blood pressure problems. Is there a connection?

Midland physician Dr. Brian Mohr, cardiologist, says yes, but "only in a general way."

"THE COMMON CAUSE of high blood pressure is unknown. It seems to come in families and it is on a hereditary basis. That's about 80 to 90 percent of the hypertensives we see."

He added there are some people that argue that sodium is not a health problem.

"I think it is prudent to use as little salt as possible. I would not go to the store and actively seek items with low sodium.

"However, when I brought the food back home I would not put extra salt on them. By simply doing that, Americans cut their salt intake in half."

Mohr said the average intake of sodium for Americans is about 10 to 15 grams a day.

"They go down to five or six grams if they just do not use the salt shaker in cooking or at the table," he said.

"I think it is prudent to use as little salt as possible. I would not go to the store and actively seek items with low sodium."
— Dr. Brian Mohr

The worst thing Americans do concerning their health is smoking and then the American diet, according to Mohr. However, currently there is not any solid scientific evidence to show the effects of a high sodium intake in the body.

"THERE IS NOT any strict scientific data to show that if we took 1,000 Americans and put them on this four gram sodium diet and compared them to South Americans who ate 15 grams and then looked to see what happened to them over 30 or 40 years. That study has not been done. But it would be prudent to eat as little salt as possible."

Mohr said he is not ruling out that there is an association between low salt intake and low blood pressure in the world, but he contends there is not a valid study to show that it prevents hypertension.

He added that the American Heart Association agrees with a limited salt intake.

Sodium is a mineral element essential to life itself. Nobody could survive on a sodium-free diet. It helps maintain what is called the osmotic pressure of the blood and is essential for maintaining blood pressure.

Sodium attracts water into the blood vessels, maintaining proper blood volume and keeping the pressure within the blood vessels more or less constant.

MOHR SAID nobody knows what sodium does to raise the blood pressure, but there are two theories.

"The amount of fluid in your blood stream is determined by sodium. The more sodium you have in your body, the more blood you have. If you eat a lot of sodium, the amount of fluid in your body goes up.

"Think about a closed system with a pump. The more fluid you have in that closed system — the heart is pumping the same — the higher your blood pressure will be."

"Another thing is the amount of sodium in the blood vessel walls, in the muscular walls of the artery. Somehow the more sodium there is, it may increase the tonicity. The muscles may contract a little more, making the arteries a little smaller.

"Again if the heart is pumping the same, against smaller and smaller arteries, the pressure goes up," he said.

Limiting the amount of sodium is not as easy as it sounds. Mohr said a majority of sodium is received through salt, but it is also consumed through other sources, including other ingredients added to foods.

"FOR EXAMPLE, salt foods," Mohr said. "Baking soda is sodium bicarbonate and there's a tremendous amount in a quart of water."

Additionally, many processed foods are preserved with sodium benzoate, sodium nitrite and flavorings like monosodium glutamate.

Applesauce, dill pickles, cottage cheese, tomatoe sauce, soups and soy sauce are among some of the processed foods which are high in sodium, according to the FDA.

Advocates of "shaking the salt habit" are currently asking private industry to reduce and label the amount of sodium in products.

Don Aird, FDA consumer affairs officer in Dallas, said the FDA is taking "the Reagan approach" in asking private industry to voluntarily label the salt content in its products.

"Secondly, we're asking private industry to lower the sodium used in processing. Campbell's soups is one that is really helping out," Aird said, referring to the line of low sodium soups the company has on the market.

"AND THIRD, WE'RE piggybacking on the AMA and other groups to get people to stop using additional salt at home."

Aird explained that the AMA has asked the FDA to make it mandatory for this type of labeling, but "with the Reagan approach of keeping government out of private business, were giving businesses a chance to do this on their good faith."

However, Aird said if this approach does not work, the FDA will make it mandatory which industry is aware.

The FDA is not trying to revolutionize the nature of the American food supply, Aird said, but it is actively stimulating readily available choices to the consumer. He added it was not the FDA's intention to "wipe out sodium," but to encourage moderation.

Policeman's report, transient's tale differ

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

To law enforcement authorities, he's a burglar. Just one more scumbag in the rank file of lowlifes who'd sooner prey on others than carry their own weight.

To hear him tell it, though, he's simply an innocent transient who came to Midland in search of work and instead found his dreams interrupted by a snarling police dog and the dim confines of a cell in the county jail.

David L. Custer is a 28-year-old, longhaired oilfield hand jailed since Feb. 22 for allegedly breaking into the Carter Furniture Warehouse on the south side of the tracks, a block or so east of the Salvation Army.

City police responded to a burglar alarm in the weathered warehouse at 10:44 p.m. that night. They found a sliding door with its hasp pried off and filed this arrest report. (The officer's name has been changed because there's no evidence of impropriety on his part.):

"Officer Jones opened the door and advised that any subjects in the building to come out or he was going to send his (canine) in to search the building.

"Officer Jones waited 30 seconds and turned his K-9 loose to search the building. The K-9...(caught) a white male subject trying to get out the door on the west end. This white male was cuffed by reporting officer and transported to the police department.

"Recovered was a 3-foot nail bar used to gain entry to the building. Nail bar placed in evidence locker at 2:31 a.m."

Case closed.

Not so fast, argues Custer, who thumbed his way here from Toledo, Ohio, Feb. 21. He stayed that night — a Sunday — at the Salvation Army, got a day-job with a landscape firm in the morning and claims he wound up with no place to stay Monday night.

"They told me they were filled up," he said in a phone conversation from the jail.

Salvation Army officials confirm his Sunday night presence and say they don't know why he would have been turned away the next night. It could be he tried to check in after everything was taken, or it might be that he was too inebriated for admittance.

Custer doesn't deny drinking beer at the bar across the street from the Salvation Army. He says he stayed there until the place closed at 10 p.m., then donned his orange backpack and started walking the streets.

What he does deny is breaking into the Carter Warehouse: "The door was open two or three inches. I wouldn't have stopped there if the door hadn't been open. It was pitch dark inside. I lit a match and saw all these crates around. How was I going to steal anything? I don't even have a car."

Using his backpack for a pillow, Custer maintains he curled up next to a crate and went to sleep. "Pretty much passed out is more like it," he said. "I was pretty drunk."

The next thing he says he remembers is being awakened by a police dog: "It was biting the back of my head. I thought it was a damned grizzly bear. Then it started mauling my leg before they called it off."

Before being placed in jail, Custer was taken to the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital. In addition to 10 stitches to his left knee, hospital records show he received two sutures for a "dog bite laceration to the occipital skull area, approximately one inch."

Carter officials say nothing appeared to have been disturbed, and the only thing missing is a 3-foot nail bar which resembles the one being held by police. Custer says all he knows of a nail bar is that he saw officers pick one up as he was being taken from the building.

Warehouse Manager Bob Wise acknowleges that transients are a growing problem in the area. They congregate in a clump of trees across the street and sometimes squirm under the warehouse to get in from the cold. Wise was probably the last one to leave the building the night Custer was arrested and he insists the sliding door was locked when he went home about 6 p.m.

The warehouse burglar alarm system is fashioned in such a way that the door can be ajar as much as two or three inches before the alarm is triggered by the separation of two electrical-type cables when the door is opened any further.

The cables and their white plastic coupling hang head-high just inside the door and are plainly visible from the outside when the door is ajar.

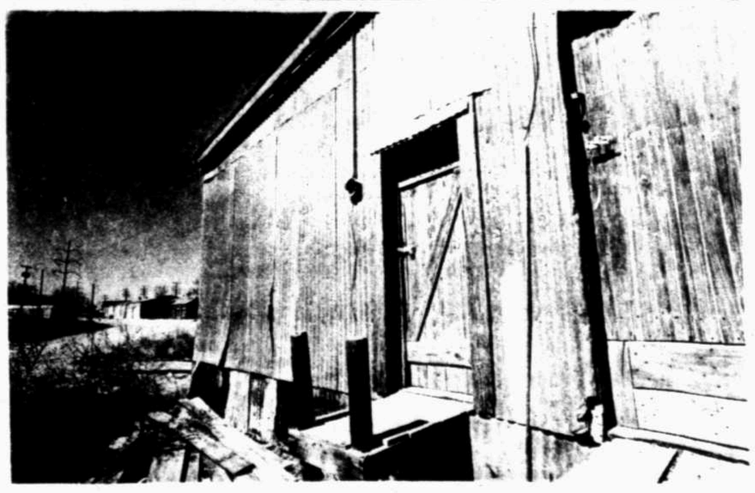

Assuming Custer is telling the truth — and court-appointed defense attorney Hal Brockett Jr. leans toward that assumption — speculation is that someone else pried the hasp off the door earlier that night and left in a hurry after spotting the alarm system.

"That's probably what I'll be offering at the trial," said Brockett, adding that he thinks the most his client should be charged with is misdemeanor criminal trespass. "They have to prove he entered the building with the intent to commit theft."

No court date has been set yet, and Brockett says he'll file a motion Monday to have Custer's $10,000 bond reduced so he can get out of jail and back to work.

'Social worker' takes on new meaning as Texas prepares for certification

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Social Worker Month concludes this week, and by the time the annual month rolls around again the field of social work will have undergone considerable upheaval in the state of Texas.

While in the past no particular qualifications designated by the state had to be met to undertake social work, the Social Work Certification Act — passed by the legislature last year — will change all that.

According to John H. Young, secretary of the West Texas Chapter of National Association of Social Workers, the Certification act which goes into effect Sept. 1 specifies educational, work, or written test pre-requisites for the various degrees of social work.

"This act states that those who use the title 'social worker' in Texas must be certified by the state," said Young, who serves as a social worker with Family Services of Midland.

According to the Texas Department of Human Resources, social work became a legally recognized profession in Texas Sept. 1, 1981, and that certification of social workers will ensure:

—That the public can identify qualified workers;

—That a legal vehicle for addressing grievances against social workers will be available;

—That a roster of qualified applicants can be made available to agencies employing social workers;

—That a possibility will be enhanced for public and private agencies to obtain third-party reimbursements for social work services as an additional source for funding of human services programs.

Social workers who meet qualifications and apply for certification before Sept. 1 will be exempted from the new certification exam, said Young.

The categories of social workers which now will be regulated by the state include the Social Work Associate, who must have a high school diploma or equivalency and five years' experience, or associate of arts degree and three years experience, or a bachelor's degree in another field and one year's experience; Social worker, bachelor's degree with social work curriculum; and Certified Social Worker, master of social work degree, or doctorate of social work degree.

"Not all social workers are welfare workers," said Young, who noted that local social workers are involved in a number of fields, including mental retardation, epilepsy, hospital work, and private counseling.

Marc Cofer, 18, a senior at Midland High School, has been named Junior Jaycee of the month by the Midland Jaycees. Cofer, son of John and Marge Cofer, 5116 Sunnyside, is a member of Student Council, Latin Club, Junior Classical League and National Honor Society. He also has held three elected offices at Bovs State.

NOTICE OF TAX RELIEF AVAILABLE TO CERTAIN HOMEOWNERS OVER 65

Homeowners who were 65 years of age or older on January 1, 1979, and failed to receive their school district homestead exemptions in 1979 have until April 1 of this year to do so. In this way, elderly homeowners will be able to take advantage of the tax freeze associated with the $10,000 homestead exemption.

According to a law passed by the 67th Legislature, over-65 homeowners who were qualified for the school homestead "tax freeze" in 1979, but who did not apply for or receive their homestead exemption, may file an application with the chief appraiser of the country appraisal district in which the homestead is located.

Eligible over-65 homeowners in Midland County must make application to the Midland County Appraisal District, Suite 160, Dellwood Mall, Midland, Texas, before April 1, 1982.

To qualify for the tax relief, a homeowner must have satisfied these requirements on January 1, 1979:

- Been 65 years of age.
- Owned his home.
- Used that home as his residence homestead.

The chief appraiser of the Midland County Appraisal District will consider all applications and notify each applicant before April 15, 1982. If the application is approved, the chief appraiser will make an entry on the appropriate school district's 1982 appraisal records.

This entry will indicate the amount of tax the over-65 taxpayer should have paid in 1979, had he applied for and been granted the $5,000 general homestead exemption and the $10,000 over-65 homestead exemption. No refunds of taxes paid may be given for 1979, 1980 or 1981.

For 1982, the taxpayer's school taxes on his homestead may not exceed the amount of taxes the school district would have imposed on the homestead for 1979, had the taxpayer received his homestead exemptions. This frozen tax amount will remain the same as long as the homestead remains the same.

For applications, contact Virgil Jones, Jr., chief appraiser, at the Midland County Appraisal District, Suite 160, Dellwood Mall, Midland, Texas or call 699-4991.

Noted comedy writer Ace, 43, found dead

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Goodman Ace — characterized by his malaprop wife as "a ragged individualist" and by such comedic peers as Groucho Marx and Fred Allen as one of the wittiest men of the century — is dead at the age of 83.

He was found dead in his New York apartment Thursday night. He had continued to write for television until recently.

Ace's professional writing career began (after a stint as a hat salesman) as a $20 a week critic for a Kansas City newspaper and peaked in the 1960s when he was the $10,000 a week head writer of the Perry Como television show.

"He was in the top echelon of comedy," Danny Kaye said Friday.

At one time or another he wrote some of the funniest lines ever delivered by some of America's funniest men — Kaye, Milton Berle, Sid Caesar, Bob Newhart. He also wrote a regular humor column for Saturday Review, several books and a few movie scripts.

His personal fame reached its zenith in the 1930s and '40s when the radio show "Easy Aces," which he wrote, directed, produced and co-starred in with his wife, Jane, was considered one of the most consistently funny productions on the air.

He wrote most of the good lines for Jane Ace — and the most memorable were such malapropisms as:

"Be it ever so hovel, there's no place like home."

"Familiarity breeds attempt."

"Every picture I see of Abraham Lincoln makes him look so thin and emancipated."

Ace's family name was Aiskowitz, but he changed it to Ace sometime after he began his newspaper job. He liked to say later that "Easy Aiskowitzes" probably would not have made it big on radio.

As critic for the Kansas City Post (later the Journal-Post), Ace reviewed drama, vaudeville and movies. He also wrote a humor column, and when his paper bought a local radio station, he converted his columns and reviews into a 15-minute radio show.

One evening in 1929, seven years after their marriage, Jane Ace was waiting in the studio while her husband wound up his local broadcast. When the network show that was scheduled to follow his could not be picked up for technical reasons, Ace was forced to fill the dead air.

"I'd like," he said calmly but with inner desperation, "for all of you to meet my roommate." Thus introduced, Jane simply talked to Goodman— and it was funny talk. And thus, "Easy Aces" was born. She was paid $15 a week. He was paid $25.

By 1931, it was being broadcast from Chicago, and the Aces were earning $1,650 a week. In 1932, the show went on the CBS network, and in 1933 the Aces moved to New York and switched to NBC.

In 1946, he was named "supervisor of comedy" for CBS, and a year later, the network established a school for comedy writers, with Ace as the dean.

MISD trustee urges bond issue vote in Emerson Elementary PTA meeting

Ann Page, Midland school board trustee, urged parents to vote for the school bond issue in the April 3 election during the recent Emerson Elementary PTA meeting held on Teacher Appreciation Day.

Mrs. Page reminded parents of the urgent need for additional classroom space in Midland, citing the fact that elementary schools are receiving 25 to 30 new students weekly. The upcoming bond election will provide funds for some of the needed space, she said.

Joe Cummins, Emerson principal, invited parents to visit their childrens' classrooms and have lunch at the school during the week, which was designated throughout the district as MISD Spotlight Week. Teachers were introduced at the meeting and received special treats from parents during the day.

Kathryn Nichols, PTA president, announced that Emerson PTA had presented a life membership to Mary Beck. Mrs. Nichols also announced that Elizabeth Malone was the first place winner in Emerson's fifth grade spelling bee. Miss Malone and Bee English, alternate, will represent Emerson in the city contest.

The second grade students presented a musical program during the evening and the flag ceremony was under the direction of Brownie Troop P67.

area in brief

Field day to be held at area farm Friday to study irrigation methods

GARDEN CITY — A field day to evaluate irrigation methods used in the St. Lawrence-Garden City area will be held at 9 a.m. Friday on the Hubert Frerich cotton farm, which is four miles east of here and off Texas Highway 158.

Conducting the field day training session will be Leon New of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service's engineering staff and Jerry Walker of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service's irrigation team in Amarillo.

"The purpose of the field day will be to educate agricultural professionals and local farmers in pumping efficiency of motors and the amount of water needed to efficiently water the soil," said Kathy Kohls, manager of the Glasscock County Underground Water District, which is hosting the field day.

Metering equipment and other tools will be discussed from the SCS trailer, which will be on display during the field day," Mrs. Kohls said.

"The cost of pumping ground water has been spiraling severely due to the increase of energy prices," she said. "Inefficent pumps cause lower pumping levels and increased cost, limitation on water yield and a restriction on the available drawdown."

The field day session is open to the public.

EPA, dental school to study water

ANDREWS — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the research department of the Dental School of The University of Texas' Health Sciences Center are to join in a study of the effects of heavily fluoridated water in Andrews, Seminole and Lamesa.

The study, which is to be carried out this summer, would focus on adults who have grown up in the three towns. Andrews' drinking water comes from wells and contains 4.8 parts per million of fluoride. EPA says the maximum safe levels of fluoride content in drinking water is 1.8 parts per million.

Dr. Edwin Collins, coordinator of research at the UT Dental School, said the study would focus on both the positive and negative effects of fluoride in water. In addition, he said that the study like would note that the cost — about $6 million — of a defluoridation plant here would be prohibitive.

While Andrews and Seminole get their water mostly from wells, Lamesa has shut down most of its wells and takes its water largely from the Canadian River pipeline, which runs south from Lake Meredith in the Texas Panhandle.

24 in program for gifted, talented

GREENWOOD — Frontier, which is the name of Greenwood School's program for the gifted and talented students, "places the responsibility for learning on the students," says B.K. Dean, who heads up the program here.

Twenty-four students from the fourth-grade through high school are enrolled in the program. The Frontier students were selected from the testing of 169 students.

Bell says most cable cuts, service outages unnecessary, avoidable

Increased construction activity in the Midland area is causing Southwestern Bell and its customers daily service problems in the form of telephone cable cuts which, in most cases, are unnecessary, according to the phone company.

The company is experiencing from one to five major cable cuts every day in Midland, according to Dave Walker, manager of the Repair Service Bureau in Midland.

Walker said each cable cut requires a minimum of three to four hours in repair time and might affect thousands of customers' service.

"A cable cut also means technicians must be pulled off important customer service jobs to repair the damaged cable," Walker explained. "Obviously, it's also inconvenient for a customer to be without telephone service, especially if an emergency situation of some kind came up."

Walker said that anyone who expects to do any digging near telephone cables should call the operator and ask for "Enterprise 9800" or call the repair service number located in the Customer Guide section of the telephone directory. When Southwestern Bell is notified of the digging location, it will dispatch a representative to locate the cable and prevent a possible cut.

"Most cable cuts are completely unnecessary," Walker said. "Individuals who cut cables are liable for the monetary damage they cause. For the benefit of our customers and our company operations, we just ask that contractors or anyone else doing any digging exercise a little care and caution."

—"Distribution of Chupadero-black-on-white; or the black and white of jug use," by Pat Beckett, Las Cruces.

The public is invited to all events.

Highway department to take bids on three area projects

AUSTIN — The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation will be taking bids in April for three Midland-area projects.

The first project involves approximately 13 miles of safety improvements to Interstate 20 from State Highway 349 to the Martin County line. The roadways at U.S. Highway 80 and Missouri-Pacific Railroad overpasses will be widened to meet current safety standards. Guardrails, approach guardrails and drainage structures will be replaced at intersections of the interstate and FM 307, SH 158 and FM 715.

The second proposed project is the upgrading of FM 662 from near Loop 250 westward for 3.2 miles. The existing county road will be widened to 40 feet and asphalt-surfaced.

The third project calls for upgrading 12.3 miles of SH 158 from the Glasscock County line toward Midland. The existing pavement will be strengthened by reshaping the top four inches of base material and then resurfacing.

Longtime educator recalls early Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Professor E.L. Jordan was educating children and youth long before educators were required to be educated by degrees.

"Back then, you didn't have to have a degree," Jordan said of the 1930s when he was young and into his early teaching days.

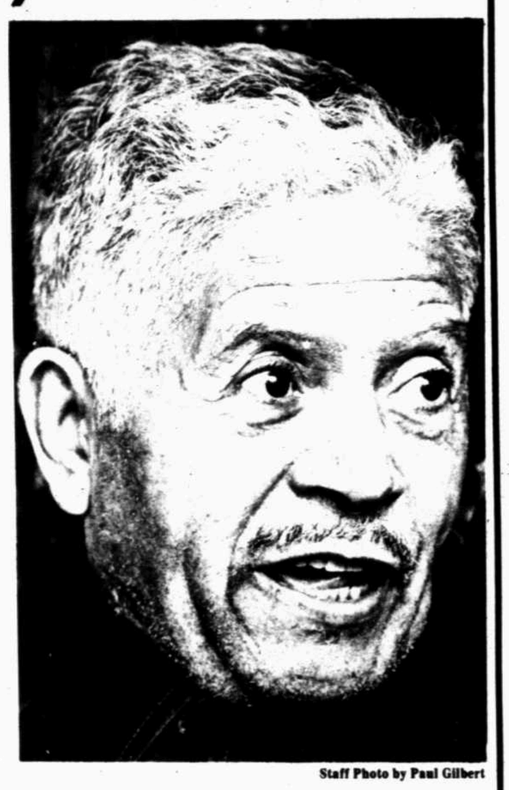

Today, at 75, Jordan has been out of education since the 1960s and rarely returns to his old school grounds. But back in his teaching heydays, he was principal of Midland Colored School, which came to be known as George Washington Carver Junior-Senior High School, from 1940 to 1954, and was principal of Booker T. Washington Elementary School from 1954 until his retirement.

In 1968, the Midland Independent School District awarded him a Certificate of Merit.

"He's a great man," said Thelma Jordan, his wife of 32 years. Jordan is listed in the 1959-60 edition of "Who's Who in American Education."

Jordan began his days on a cotton farm three miles from Donie in Freestone County in East Texas on Jan. 21, 1907. He was one of 16 children of Alexander and Ocie Mae Jordan. They toiled on the family farm. "Cotton, that's the main thing," Jordan reflected. "That was the king."

Midlander in Profile

Professor E.L. Jordan reflects on the past: "It's a nice town; I helped make it (Midland)." And he is looking to the future: "I'm getting ready for the next world." He is a retired Midland school principal.

"I'm a country boy," he said.

"Sure is," reaffirmed his wife.

As he was approaching manhood, Jordan left the farm and headed east for the city and for Houston.

"He got tired of it (farming cotton); he left," volunteered his spouse. "Oh, Lord, he was tired of that."

A few years later and still minus a degree, Jordan returned to that country school — Spring Seat Elementary — where he was educated and started teaching.

"He taught his brothers and sisters," Mrs. Jordan said. "He used to whip them, and they'd get mad at him and go and tell daddy."

Jordan taught at Spring Seat from 1930 to 1940, when he moved westward to Midland. But by that time, he had earned (in 1939) a bachelor's degree from Prairie View Normal and Industrial College of Texas, now Prairie View State University. And by 1954, he had earned the master's degree from Prairie View.

In Midland in 1940, Colored School was a three-room building which accommodated seven grades. "Not all of them (school-age children) was going to school," Jordan said. "They weren't making them go."

Education was to change, though.

"After I got there, we raised the standards," Jordan said of the all-black school. "We added the eighth grade, ninth grade and added the high school." Eventually, Carver Junior-Senior High School grew into brick buildings but was closed as a high school in 1968, when Carver students were transferred to Midland High School or to Robert E. Lee High School.

"I was one who pulled for them to get together...for integration" of the public schools, Jordan said. "It used to be segregated. That's the way it was; they liked it, but that's all changed."

Jordan's life was the school. "I worked night and day for the Midland Independent School District and for the kids," Jordan said.

"He was wrapped up in the school," noted his wife. "He did wonders for the black people."

Jordan's devotion to education and to his students is indicated in his awards and is reflected in the 1951 Hornet, Carver High School's first yearbook. In dedicating the annual to Jordan, the 1951 Carver High School Senior Class wrote that "his sympathetic understanding, energetic counselship and cultural ideas have caused his personality to be indelibly written" in the school.

Jordan's open letter in the yearbook likewise was inspirational: "We are sure that in the days that are ahead, as in the days gone by, you will regard your education as a power to be used, not alone for your advancement, or for your own selfish ends, but for the betterment of all mankind."

Jordan seems content with his role as a retired educator, for his accomplishments in the past, and for helping mold the children and youth of the community.

"It's a nice town; I helped make it," Jordan said.

Nowadays, though, he is looking toward things more spiritual.

"I don't care for this world now," he said in his gentle manner. "I'm getting ready for the next world."

South African leader in struggle over proposed racial reforms

Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Prime Minister P.W. Botha told the whites of South Africa in 1979: "We must adapt or die."

He meant they would have to reform some — not all — of the strict racial segregation laws if they wanted to survive in South Africa.

"I am in favor of the removal of hurtful, unnecessary discriminatory measures," he said in August, 1979. "Many of those already have been removed. But I am not in favor of a system of forced integration and not in favor of endangering the rights of self-determination of my own people."

Then he spent three years looking over his shoulder at the right-wing of his own National Party and at those who seek to preserve their hallowed principle of "Afrikaner (white) unity."

Last February, however, the 66-year-old prime minister confronted the ultra-conservatives, provoking the deepest split in the party — and Afrikanerdom — since 1948.

After the first skirmishes, Botha remained firmly in control of South African politics. But the consequences of his challenge to the right remain uncertain for the disenfranchised black, mixed-race (colored) and Asian peoples who make up the majority of South Africa's population.

Both supporters and critics agreed that the future depends largely on Botha, a farmer's son who spent his life mastering every facet of political organizing.

Pieter Willem Botha (he prefers initials for his first and middle names) left his law studies at University College in Orange Free State Province in 1936 to begin a career in the Cape Province with the National Party. Described as a hot-tempered 20-year-old, he was said to have used strong-arm tactics against political opponents, especially the governing United Party of the time, to the point of breaking up their meetings. A friend said Botha was beaten up more than once in those rough, early days.

Now a father of five, Botha rides horseback to relax and to shed the frustrations that sometimes set off his still-sharp temper.

"He can be quite volcanic at times in his outbursts," a Botha acquaintance said recently. "It was always regarded as his main weakness — although it can be used quite positively sometimes."

Botha rose through the ranks to become the party's national information officer in 1946, and was elected to Parliament from the Cape Province constituency of George in 1948, the year the "Nats" — as National Party members are called — took lasting control of the government. His loyalty and organizing skills brought him minor Cabinet posts and then the Defense Ministry in 1966, giving him wide contacts through the military.

Those experiences came while the National Party was building the structures of the racial separation policy known as apartheid and cementing Afrikaner domination of the civil service and other institutions.

Most of South Africa's whites are Afrikaners, descendants of 17th-century Dutch settlers or French emigrants. Other whites are descended from the English who made South Africa part of their empire in the 19th century.

Botha became prime minister in October, 1978, at the height of South Africa's worst political scandal. His predecessor, John Vorster, and Information Minister Connie Mulder, then the heir apparent, were both dragged down by revelations that the government secretly spent millions of dollars to try to influence public opinion at home and abroad in favor of South Africa. The scandal left the government severely tainted but Botha emerged with clean hands.

"He came to office in a flurry of idealism — he was going to rid the government of corruption, clean up the mess," one of his confidants said.

Botha also took some cautious steps toward racial reform. He set up commissions to re-examine the 1936 Land Act, cornerstone of the system separating race groups by area, and to look into ways to give urban blacks outside those areas some political say.

A major step was to recognize the rights of blacks to join trade unions. But none of the measures challenged the basic tenets of "separate development."

Facing stiff conservative resistance to change, Botha concentrated on streamlining the government bureaucracy and other administrative areas he was comfortable with from his Cabinet days. He brought academics and private business people into the government, using a teamwork approach.

"I am in favor of the removal of hurtful, unnecessary discriminatory measures. ...But I am not in favor of a system of forced integration...."
— P.W. Botha

The constitutional reform process, set in motion in 1977, became impossible to avoid in February as the Cabinet tried to define its stance on the role of the 3.5 million coloreds and Asians, as differentiated from the 21 million blacks. Botha openly endorsed a still undefined "healthy power-sharing," and the long-expected split between moderates and ultra-conservatives occurred.

Botha surprised critics, who had claimed he lacked initiative, when he showed up personally to confront the far-right rebels at a crucial party caucus in Transvaal Province. He emerged with a 172-36 vote of confidence. He continued the offensive with a rare 45-minute interview on the government-run national television to explain his policies — and to say the rebellion would not affect his decisions on where to take the country.

The balding prime minister, whose wry smile, bifocals and low-key style give him an undemonstrative appearance, quietly tried to reassure whites that change would not come at their expense. But he declared that "co-responsibility" could give other race groups their "human dignity and legitimate rights" — making the country more stable for all.

In going to the Transvaal, Botha was an outsider in the heartland of Afrikanerdom and the core of National Party strength. As the first Cape Province man to be prime minister since the 1950s, Botha has faced considerable suspicion in the Transvaal.

Vorster and Mulder, both from the Transvaal, are among the hardliners now attacking Botha for pointing what they view as the "thin edge of the wedge" toward the political and economic supremacy of South Africa's 5.5 million whites.

But supporters see in Botha no trend toward dismantling the system his party has built.

"He is a reluctant liberal — a man who reforms because he has to, not because he likes to," said Petrus Cillie, a friend since 1936 and a professor of journalism at Stellenbosch University. "He is basically a very careful, reformist conservative."

Cillie said Botha's handling of the split in the party would be "absolutely crucial to his career."

"If he puts this down successfully and gains the confidence of the people, he will be able to go ahead without looking over his shoulder," Cillie said.

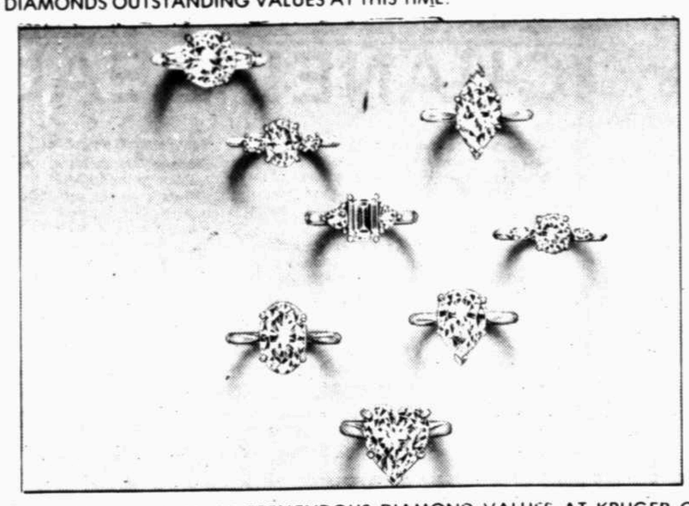

Fourteen of 16 National Party rebels in Parliament were expelled from the party, and Botha's lieutenants began local battles with the breakaway forces.

The Citizen, a pro-government newspaper, said, "What we are seeing is a rift that will run right through Afrikanerdom and its institutions" — meaning it would reach down to white teachers, police and farmers.

The paper said Botha's government was at a crossroads. It could move ahead with reform, without its far right, or it could try to undercut that far right by slowing down on reforms.

Wanna used eyepatch? See ya' at Billy Bob's

AP Laserphoto

Kevin Levya, 5, is examined by Dr. Kenneth Salyer as his parents look on. Surgery to correct unnatural development of the child's face, brain and head, caused by Crouzon Syndrome, is one of many items to be "auctioned" at Billy Bob's benefit for the 1984 U.S. Olympic Team.

EDITOR'S NOTE: You might say it's the revelry of the rich, with a twist. In boots and jeans, the affluent will gather Sunday night at a giant honky tonk to eat, drink, dance and bid on prizes ranging from a Texas Longhorn and a Hawaiian vacation to a hot air balloon ride and John Wayne's eyepatch. And it's all for a good cause.

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — For $1,000 a table, or $100 a head, you're invited Sunday evening to bid on a signed portrait of Elvis Presley.

Or how 'bout the autographed original script from "Who Shot J.R.?"

Maybe you'd like to purchase a walk-on part in those daytime dramas "Days of Our Lives" or "The Young and the Restless." This includes lunch with the cast.

If show biz isn't your bag, there are vacation trips to Hawaii, Aspen, Winter Park or the Caribbean.

You can even spend a weekend on former baseball magnate Brad Corbett's yacht out of Pompano Beach, Fla., or take a VIP tour of the White House.

The occasion is the "First Annual United States Olympic Auction" from 5 p.m. until midnight Sunday at Billy Bob's Texas.

Almost any Texan can tell you that Billy Bob's is the world's largest and liveliest C&W palace, notwithstanding Gilley's of Houston and "Urban Cowboy" fame.

But no matter. The party overshadows the place and the good surely outweighs the bad, even if John Wayne's "True Grit" eyepatch is a bummer.

Proceeds go to support and train America's 1984 Olympic team.

The auction, while innovative, also has an admirably unique touch. One of the gift items is craniofacial surgery for the deformed child of a Pecos truckdriver.

The recipient, Kevin Leyva, 5, suffers from Crouzon Syndrome, a defect which prohibits natural growth and development of the brain, head and face.

Corrective surgery will curb facial distortion and prevent potential mental retardation and blindness.

Such surgery and hospital bills would cost at least $25,000, medical experts say. Though the surgery was donated, it still will be auctioned and the money funneled into the Olympic fund.

"Craniofacial surgery is a new specialty of plastic surgery," said Dr. Kenneth Salyer, the Dallas donor who heads the medical team.

"It combines techniques of the neurosurgeon and plastic surgeon working together to effect major changes in the cranial and facial skeleton."

Salyer told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram: "If the surgery were not done (for Kevin), it would be a major disaster."

The idea of such an unusual auction item grew from a suggestion that Salyer donate a facelift, which would hardly raise an eyebrow among some of the other items.

No doubt there will be a scramble over Sylvester Stallone's custom-made Harley-Davidson used in "Rocky III."

And who could live without Hugh Hefner's autographed pipe or Carol Burnett's trademark washerwoman hat? With the pipe you get a tour of the Playboy mansion.

Should you want a Texas Longhorn to go with your Texas Longnecks, L.S. Ranches has donated one. There's also a quarterhorse named "Dusty Deck Bar" for sale.

For the daring, there's a hot air balloon ride for two, dubbed the "Champagne Flight Adventure."

More conventional items include a full length natural mink coat with sable collar, a case of Chateau Lafite-Rothschild, a Buick Skylark and a baby blue 1975 Cadillac.

Billy Bob hisownself has donated a steer, slaughtered and packaged and earmarked for the charity of the buyer's choice.

For the athletic among you, there is Texas Ranger catcher Jim Sundberg's baseball glove, six tickets and parking pass to a Dallas Cowboys game or a round of golf, and lunch, with Byron Nelson.

In that vein, Gerald Ford's putter is up for grabs.

Jetsetters can vie for the first-class, round-trip fare to London via Braniff...if there is a Braniff. Or five nights in Mexico City.

There is some truly spectacular art work on the block, but autographed portraits of Mork and Mindy, Carroll O'Connor and Ryan O'Neal hardly fit that category.

Nor does the original theater poster from Elvis' first movie, "Love Me Tender," or Gene Autry, John Wayne, Clint Eastwood and Dustin Hoffman posters.

Dolly Parton, Jacqueline Bisset and Jane Fonda posters come a little closer, but still seem somehow less than true art.

For the clothes horse, there is Sally Field's original wedding gown worn in "Smokey and the Bandit" and Sissy Spacek's outfit from "Coal Miner's Daughter."

The musical backdrop for this epic will be provided by C&W entertainer Razzy Bailey, who has given us such classics as the currently popular "She Left Love All Over Me."

It is only fitting that Gov. Bill Clements has christened Sunday "Olympic Day" in Texas.

No doubt the fiesty Republican governor would cherish a signed, original theater poster from "Hellcats of the Navy," starring Ronald Reagan.

See you at Billy Bob's, Guv.

Much now 'subject to FAA approval'

By CAROLE SHIFRIN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — "Thank God we had a beachhead established," says Neal Meehan, president of New York Air, weighing the effects of the now almost eight-month old air traffic controllers' strike on the airline industry.

Meehan had hosted a party to celebrate New York Air's first birthday in December, using invitations that informed guests that the event was "subject to FAA approval," a somewhat light-hearted reference to the delayed Federal Aviation Administration approval New York Air received for getting off the ground.

"Subject to FAA approval," however, is a phrase that has become even more important now than it was then — especially to the group of new airlines that have been created since the advent of deregulation in 1978 and paper airlines with plans and hopes to get started soon. No longer does the phrase just refer to the operating certificate an airline needs from the FAA before it can use the nation's airways, a certificate assuring the public that the airline's planes, personnel and procedures meet federal safety standards.

BECAUSE OF THE CONTINUING flight constraints resulting from the strike and firings of the 11,500 controllers, the FAA's approval now must be sought by airlines to operate any flights from the nation's 22 major restricted airports or that will pass through air space controlled by the affected enroute traffic control centers. As a practical matter, that includes nearly everything.

As a result of the FAA's controls, expected to last in some form through 1984, Meehan's plans for expanding New York Air's services at some of the nation's major airports have been squelched, and their services at others have been cut back or even eliminated. But at least New York Air got started when it did, Meehan said in an interview. "I'm worried that if they don't begin to increase the capacity of the system significantly, we will slip back into a regulated environment.

"The strike has stifled the whole thrust of deregulation," he said. "Just look at Columbia Air and Air Chicago."

Columbia Air and Air Chicago both were granted the required Civil Aeronautics Board authority to get started last summer but both have been delayed in getting off the ground because of a lack of capital, believed in good part a consequence of the effects of the constrained air traffic control system:

COLUMBIA AIR, with plans to operate high-frequency, low-fare services between Baltimore-Washington International Airport and three major cities initially, so far has failed to get funding to begin services, planned originally for a pre-Christmas 1981 start. A public offering of 1,000,000 shares of stock failed in November. Columbia's officials, who include former Pan American World Airways President Dan Colussy, now are seeking private capital and said last week they were "very optimistic" about completing financing very soon. A summer start-up is expected, they said.

Air Chicago, which plans flights in and out of Chicago's Midway Airport to four major cities, is also in the process of seeking so-far-elusive financing, and its start-up date, too, has been delayed. Last year, the airline agreed to buy five Boeing 727-100 aircraft from Pan Am for $12.2 million. Under the agreement, Pan Am was to acquire about 5 percent of Air Chicago's outstanding stock and would train Air Chicago's crews.

Before the controllers' strike, new airlines more easily attracted capital. Sources say they are having more trouble getting financial backing now because of investors' fears that the new airlines might not have enough operating authority and flexibility in the current environment to become successful. According to one New York investment banker, Columbia's offering may have failed because of the market's distrust of the Columbia concept at a time when the understaffed air traffic control system has limited access to airports Columbia wanted to use.

OTHER NEW AIRLINES that started up since 1978 are scrambling in a quest to become successful or even viable under today's operating environment, made worse by the recession and accompanying fall-off in passenger traffic. Even Midway Airlines, the first to start up and a deregulation success story — bringing travelers low fares and starting to chalk up profits for its shareholders — has begun to feel the effects of the flight restrictions. Although its center of operations — Chicago's Midway Airport — is not technically a controlled airport, the traffic control center through which its flights must flow is severely restricted. So Midway can't expand flights at Midway.

As a result, Midway President Gordon Linkon last week announced that the airline would end its hub-and-spoke route system and start flights next week to Topeka, Kan., and Lincoln, Neb., through cities already served, collecting passengers there for already operating flights to Chicago.

"With the shortage of take-off and landing slots in Chicago, we decided it best to serve these two newest cities through Kansas City and Omaha, at least for the time being," Linkon said. With new planes ordered before the strike scheduled for delivery soon, the airline has to do some something to utilize them adequately in the restricted operating environment.

PACIFIC EXPRESS, a new West Coast airline that started service Jan. 22, initially wanted to begin frequent, low-fare service between Los Angeles and San Francisco, later fanning out from them to other medium-sized cities within 90 minutes. But the FAA initially gave the airline just two arrivals in Los Angeles and eight at San Francisco, not enough for its planned service. So instead, Pacific Express, using four BAC-111s, has had to try to make a go of it with flights from Palm Springs to San Francisco, Oakland, and San Jose; San Francisco to Chico and Portland, Ore.; and flights from Portland to Medford, Ore. and Boise, Idaho.

"We're moving to a Portland hub because it's not impacted," says Terry Ashton, president of Pacific Express. "We just had to shift our emphasis."

Muse Air, started by a father-son team, had the bad timing — in hindsight — to start frequent low-fare service between Dallas and Houston on July 15, barely three weeks before the strike. Extensive flight delays at the start of the strike forced a lot of its customers back to their cars, according to the Muses.

Muse sought and failed to get permission for the second operational phase it had planned — daily roundtrips between Houston, Atlanta and Chicago's Midway Airport. "The FAA approved half of the pattern," Muse president Michael Muse said. "It's absurd." Although Muse uses two "uncontrolled" airports — Dallas Love Field and Houston Hobby — the centers their flights must use are restricted.

The airline is ready to expand; by the summer, it will have a total of six new 155-passenger, fuel-efficient, quiet — and expensive — DC9-80s. "I don't know where in the hell we're going to use them," Muse told a recent Oppenheimer & Co. seminar on new airlines. "Mr. Helms (the FAA administrator) will have to tell you that," Muse said.

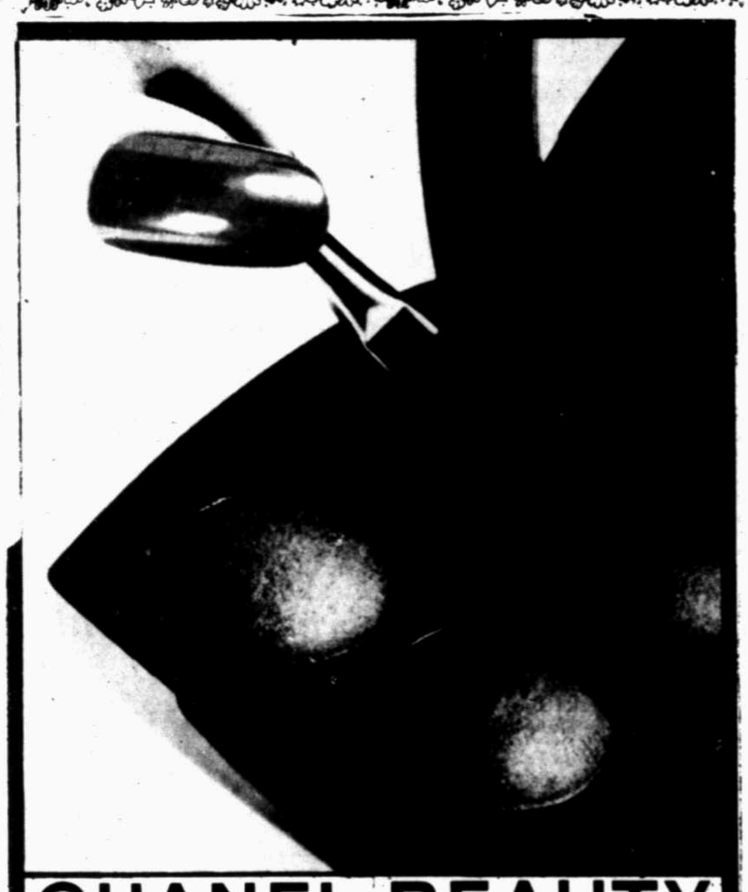

SOME AIRLINE OFFICIALS complain privately about the FAA's intrusion into "economic" regulation but are reluctant to criticize publicly the agency that has so much control over their economic futures. Muse Chairman M. Lamar Muse, Michael's father and a colorful airline executive who started the successful Southwest Airlines a decade ago, doesn't share his colleagues' inhibitions. "I'm very disturbed that we now have regulation all over again of the very worst form that could possibly be conceived," he said. "The CAB never told a carrier how many trips to operate between A and B or what time to fly.

"The FAA is now the master of the industry...and these bureaucrats are, thoroughly enjoying the power they are amassing," he said. Meanwhile, "the big are getting bigger and the smaller are getting squeezed out," he said. Unlike other airline executives who support the controllers' firing or have remained silent, Muse has called on the FAA to rehire some controllers. "They won the b$ttle; Why lose the war?" he said.

Muse, Midway, Pacific Express, New York Air and two other new airlines banded together last week to suggest to the FAA that it alter its airport slot allocation system to encourage the entry of new airlines — a key element of the national policy of deregulation, warning that without it, the low-fare and new-service benefits of deregulation will disappear.

Under the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, an airline theoretically needs no federal authority to begin a new route. Entry to new routes is supposed to provide a damper on excessive fares by allowing other airlines to come in and introduce new services at lower fares when a market opportunity is seen. The concomitant exit authority gives an airline the flexibility to drop flights that don't work out and put those planes on different routes.

BECAUSE OF THE FAA airport constraints, entry to new routes, especially by new airlines, is difficult. Although the FAA says it will give some priority to new entrants in doling out new airport slots as they become available, the FAA considers as new only airlines that weren't operating by Feb. 17. So New York Air, Midway, Muse and Pacific aren't "new entrants." The FAA also agreed to give airlines a chance to swap slots at the 22 major airports to better their schedules or route systems — and more than 200 exchanges were made recently. But only those holding slots at the 22 could participate. Muse, for instance, has no assigned slots at those airports so had nothing to trade. The older airlines, with extensive routes and aircraft fleets, operate many flights at the controlled airports and had more flexibility to move flights around under the swap, their officials admitted.

When economic indicators suggest the sky is falling, it's prudent to seek the shelter of a Volvo DL station wagon.

A recent finding shows that the life expectancy of a Volvo is 1.3 longer than the average life expectancy of all other cars on the road.* So you shouldn't have to return to the money market for a new-car loan for some time.

And as your family grows, you won't have to replace your Volvo wagon with a larger car. The DL comfortably seats five adults....not gnomes of Zurich. There's even an optional third seat in back for late arrivals.

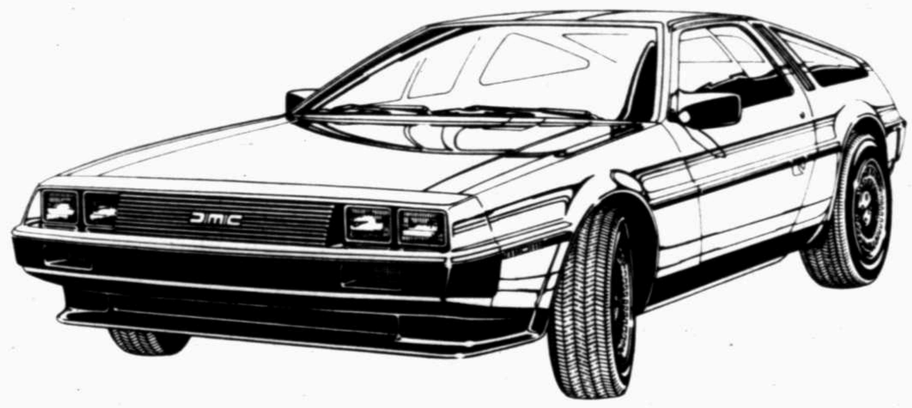

Best of all could be the sense of security that comes from Volvo's reputation for safety....a reputation that rests on years of building tough, rugged automobiles. Ask your Volvo dealer to point out all the safety features built into the DL wagon. Then, be your own security analyst. You'll probably end up selling your car and buying ours.

VOLVO DL WAGON
A car you can believe in.

*Analysis conducted by Ken Warwick & Associates, Inc. Based on a comparison of U.S. registration data for Volvo and for the automobile industry as a whole and not by individual make. Summary available at your Volvo dealer.

*The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 12.5% for 90% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at the most recent six-month Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5% rounded to the highest 1/8 of 1%, but not to exceed the maximum rate allowed by law. Payments on GPAM mortgages are graduated so as to increase 7.5% each year for the remaining four years. At the end of the first five year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 3%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13.25% ON 90% LOANS.

Heels, Hoyas gain Final Two

By KEN RAPPOPORT

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — After playing what they considered some of their poorest basketball of the season in the NCAA semifinals, both North Carolina and Georgetown are looking for better things in Monday night's championship game.

"We're going to have to get stronger on the backboards," said North Carolina guard Jimmy Black after Saturday's 68-63 victory over Houston. "We're going to be boxing out a lot harder in practice tomorrow."

(Related stories 8D)

The Tar Heels were outrebounded by the Cougars 33-26, and Coach Dean Smith admitted, "It gives me some cause for alarm" in the national finals. "Georgetown is a tough rebounding team."

Georgetown Coach John Thompson, meanwhile, said his Hoyas would have to play better offensively against North Carolina than they did in beating Louisville 50-46 Saturday in the second semifinal at the Superdome.

"I can't remember our offense ever playing this poorly since I've been at Georgetown and still winning," Thompson said. "Louisville just took us out of our game."

Thompson hopes North Carolina doesn't do the same thing Monday night.

"Carolina will change defenses a lot more than Louisville — and that's something to worry about," Thompson said. "Carolina will show you a lot of defensive faces — zone, man-to-man, trap. They force you to concentrate on what you're doing."

Eric Floyd, Georgetown's All-American guard and team leader, feels the Hoyas will have to "keep pressure on the ball and cut off the passing lanes" to beat the nation's top-ranked team.

"It's nothing complicated," he said, "but we'll have to do it well."

The Tar Heels have a terrific incentive in this game. The players, to a man, want to win the championship as much for their coach as for themselves. Smith has taken six previous teams to the Final Four but has never won a national championship.

"We're getting tired of the questions about Smith never winning this thing," said James Worthy, the North Carolina forward. "We intend to do something about it this year."

This is a rare meeting for the Tar Heels and Hoyas. They've played each other a total of three times, with North Carolina winning twice, the last time 83-71 last season.

Thompson and Smith are close friends. And Thompson insists that the outcome of Monday night's game won't affect that friendship.

"I won't deny we have a close relationship," Thompson said, "and we will still have one after Monday night, win or lose. It may not look like that during the game, but we'll still be friends afterward."

Lee Frosh capture Tall City Relays

Saturday was a field day for General Lee's namesake as two West Texas schools named after the civil war general won their respective titles in the Tall City Junior Relays at Memorial Stadium.

Midland Lee Freshman won the ninth grade division going away by capturing first place in nine of the 13 events. San Angelo Lee Junior High had a closer encounter as it defeated Goddard Junior High by less than a point to capture the eighth grade title.

SAN JACINTO Junior High won the seventh grade crown in a division which Midland schools took the top three places.

Walter Jones was a four-time winner for the Lee Freshman as he swept the 100 and 200 meter events and anchored the 400 relay team. His fourth triumph came in the long jump when he flew 20-11¾.

The 1200 meters was another large point getter for the Rebs as they again took the top two honors. Lupe Reyes won the event with a time of 3:32.20 as Tim Hill finished seven seconds behind his teamate.

Lee's relay teams won both baton events as Jones, Nicholson, Brackens and Brown won the 400 relay. Brackens then teamed with Swearinger, Thurman and Westbrook to take the 1600 relay.

Brackens captured three first place ribbons as he won the 400 meter run in 53:57 to go along with his two relay awards.

Derrick Westbrook and Tim Hill made the 1600 meters another 1-2 sweep for Lee and Westbrook became the third Rebel to capture three first place awards as he won the 600 meters.

E. DAVIS wasn't slowed by any obsticles as he captured the 220 hurdles in 31-08.

Marc Williamson leaped five feet 10 inches to give Midland Freshman School their only victory in the meet. The Bulldogs finished in fourth place with 45 points. Lee won the event with 172½ points and San Angelo Lee was second with 88½.

IN THE eighth grade division San Angelo Lee scored a mere 3/4's of a point to beat out Goddard for the team title 83-82¼. San Jacinto finished third with 74¾ points and Alamo was fourth in the close contest with 63⅔.

Midland girls end 2nd-place 'slump'

SEMINOLE — In the three consecutive track meets, the Midland High girls have had to go home in second place. That streak was one that Coach Brenda Mitchell was happy to see end as the Bulldogs won the Indian Relays here this weekend, beating out Odessa Permian for top honors, 120-117.

The MHS, also competing in the Indian Relays, finished fifth with 47 points.

In winning the meet, the Lady Bulldogs posted six first place finishes including a clean sweep in the three relays.

The 800-meter relay team, with Penny Griffen, Virgie Cooks, Lydia Jackson and Arlene Adams, set a meet record of 1:46.52, beating the old mark of 1:46.81 for a victory while the mile relay team of Demetra Fort, Sheila Christian, Adams and Jackson, posted its best time of the season, 49.68.

THE MILE relay victory, the last event and most important win of the meet for MHS, was run in two heats with the top two teams in the points standings, MHS and Odessa Permian, running at seperate times. The Lady Bulldogs, Griffen, Arlene Griffen, Christian and Cooks, out ran Permian 4:19.58 to 4:22.03 to capture the 20 points awarded for a relay first place.

Individually, Jackson ran a 12.57 to win the 100-meter dash, Adams won the 200-meter dash in 26.04 and Fort won the Long Jump with a meet record leap of 18-feet-7½. The old mark was 18-feet-2.

OTHER POINT finishes for the girls came from Christian in the 400-meter dash in 63.99 for second; P. Griffen in the 200-dash for fourth in 27.05; A. Griffen in the 400-dash for fourth in 65.73; Christian in the long jump for fifth with a 16-feet-5 leap; Cooks in the 100-dash for sixth in 13.2 and Claire Hardy in the 3200-meter run for sixth in 13:40.51.

Midland Lee scored nine points with Felicia Farias sixth in the high jump with a 5-1; Carrie Orrell third in the hurdles while the 880-relay team was sixth.

"Sophomore Lydia Jackson, who won the 100, has only been beaten once this year. That was in Abilene. She anchors our spring relay. She doesn't have as fast a time as Carla Jackson of Big Spring, but she seems to run as fast as we need here to to win."

Distance runner Chuck St. Germain was the only member of the boys team to win an event. He took top honors in the 800-meter run in 1:59.2. He also was a member of the third place finishing mile relay along with Anthony Adams, Earl Phillips and Ricky Madrid. The time was 3:28.9.

Byron Campbell brought home a third place in the discus with a throw of 147-feet-2; Phillips placed fourth in the 400-meter dash with a 42.3 time and Troy Bush placed fourth in the high jump with a leap of 6-feet-2 followed by Ross Petree in fifth at 6-0. The 400-meter relay team, consisting of Kenneth White, John Hibbitts, Randell Swindell and Terry McGowan, finished fourth in 44.1 Jesse Diaz placed sixth in the 3200 meter run with a 10:53.0 time.

Freeman sets MHS swim mark

AUSTIN — Midland High swimmer Andrea Freeman set a school record time of 5:31.1 in the 500-meter freestyle in the preliminaries of the State Swimming and Diving Championships at the Texas Aquatic Center here Friday, but was hit with a sickness before Saturday's finals that took 25 seconds off her time as she finished sixth in the consolation finals for 12th place overall.

The only other individual to place in the two-day meet was Billy Worley as he swam to a second place finish in the consolation finals of the 100-meter butterfly in a time of 53.81.

The girls 400-meter free relay team of Suzie Simpson, Debbie Fleeger, Julie Spaugh and Carrie Mays (replacing Freeman) finished sixth in consolation finals for 12th place overall.

"We had some good times," said MHS swim coach Jesse Marsh. "Bill had his best time of the year (in the 100 butterfly) and so did Julie (her split time in the 400 free relay).

Worley and Freeman's times qualify them for consideration times for the National Junior Olympic meet. The top 40 times in the nation will swim in Milwaukee. It will be about 10 days before it's determined whether they qualify or not."

Killeen Ellison ends Rebels' streak

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

SAN ANGELO — The Midland Lee Rebels are recognized as one of the top track powers in West Texas, but they found out here Friday and Saturday in the 24th running of the San Angelo Relays that they are not unbeatable.

Lee scored 81 points to place third behind Killeen Ellison's 115 points and Killeen's 95. The loss ended the Rebs' three-meet win streak and was the first time this year that Lee has scored under 100 points. To boot, Darren Williams lost his unbeaten streak in the 100 meters as did Roosevelt Fort in the long jump.

In fact, the Rebs brought home only one first place with the wheels of Damon Polk turning in a 39.12 in the intermediate hurdles. However, Lee was close to winning several events, placing second five times. It always seemed, however, that Killeen or Ellison was on top though.

Lee track coach Sam Volpe was not disappointed in the Rebel showing, saying, "This was a first class meet with a tough field and we did about as well as we could do. We even had a few surprises. This is just like going to the Region meet for us because of the competition and I hope our kids learned some things."

Williams turned in his third 10.9 in the 100 meters this year, but this time it wasn't good enough for a win as Ellison's Prince Fields scorched to a 10.61.

Lee was also second in the 1600 relay, but Sam Morney, Carlton Johnson and Troy Barber held the lead through three laps before Fields caught Williams on the last lap to bury Lee to second again. Lee posted a 3:20.84 while Ellison had a 3:20.05, not a best for either team.

But Polk was the saving grace with his hurdle victory over some stiff competition. "I got a horrible start in the high hurdles and finished third, so I knew we needed the points and I went out and raced my race in the intermediates," Polk said.

Fort had a 21-7½ in the long jump, not his best, but the real hurt came when he lost to 5-5A's Trey Wright of San Angelo, who had a 21-8½. It was Fort's first loss.

Lee was also second in the sprint relay with a fine 42.30, but Ellison's 41.75 was a new record.

Lee did get a surprise second from sophomore Issac Garnett in the shot put with a 51-5¾. This is an event the Rebels needed help since Terry Thompson has a pulled muscle and Van Gravitt is out for the year with a broken wrist.

"That was my best throw. I had a 45-7 in Andrews," said Garnett, who is throwing for the first time this year.

Wayne Brandt got a third in the pole vault with a 13-0, but had to drop out after twisting an ankle. It still tied his personal best.

Killeen's Carlos Quinones won both the 1600 and 800 meters as expected. He has been a Region I and state power since being a sophomore. Ellison's Angelo Bryant set a 200 meter record with a 21.45. The only other Division I records were by Killeen in the 3200 relay with a 7:56.06 and El Paso Jefferson's Rudy Liggins with a 9:31.15 in the 3200 meter run.

Lee will join Midland High as host of the Tall City Relays next Friday at Memorial Stadium. It will be a chance for the locals to perform at home, but all concerned would

Rebels suffer first 5-5A loss

Boots cost Lee, 1-0

SAN ANGELO — A pair of errors in the first inning of play cost the Midland Lee Rebels the game as San Angelo went on to post a 1-0 District 5-5A victory here Saturday.

Both pitchers in the game went the distance and each gave up five runs. San Angelo's Zeke Barron, 3-2, recorded the shutout victory striking out six batters and walking two. Lee's John Denton, 0-2, struckout eight batters and walked three.

Bobcat Morrie Hartgraves led off the inning with a single and went o second base on a sacrafice bunt by Andrew Morin. The two errors came following a strikeout by Kel Crain. Henry Klepac reached first on a throwing error by Lee thirdbaseman John Bostwick sending Hartgraves to third. With Scott Duda at the plate, Klepac took off for second base and Lee catcher Scott Page's throw went into center field sending Hartgraves home with what turned out to be the winning run of the game.

Hartgraves led the Bobcat hitters with a two-for-four performance. Lee's Scott Ullom led the Rebels with two hits in three attempts.

The victory upped San Angelo's record to 8-10 overall and 1-1 in 5-5A play while Lee fell to 9-7 and 1-1.

On Tuesday, the Rebels will play their first home district game of the season when they host Abilene Cooper at Lee Field. The game is scheduled for 4 p.m.

STOCK-UP WEEK LONG MONEY-

The champs

It was more than just winning a national junior college basketball title. It was a week of wonder and amazement — a week when the Midland College Chaparrals stole the hearts of a city and the nation with a scrawny, unranked and unknown power.

But more than anything else, it was a story of individuals who gave from the heart while scoring from a dream.

Tiny 5-foot-6 Spud Webb, who scored 94 points in four games, was the talk of Hutchinson, Kan., after the Chaps upset defending national champion Westark, Ark. The fans had heard that he could dunk the ball and it took only one for the Chaps to be adopted as the home team.

Webb earned the Outstanding Small Player Award for his efforts and was featured on CBS Morning News last Tuesday. The freshman, who was ignored by the major colleges, had earned his place in basketball.

Puntus Wilson was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player after scoring 94 points, but he probably had it in his hip pocket after a blocked shot at the buzzer against Westark, which sealed MC's first tournament victory.

The 6-3½ sophomore, who many thought had no position to play with a major college, found himself besieged with college offers.

And there was 6-6 Chester Smith, who had to play every night against 6-8 and 6-10 postmen. It was Smith who always came out the winner with quickness and determination — and 75 points to boot.

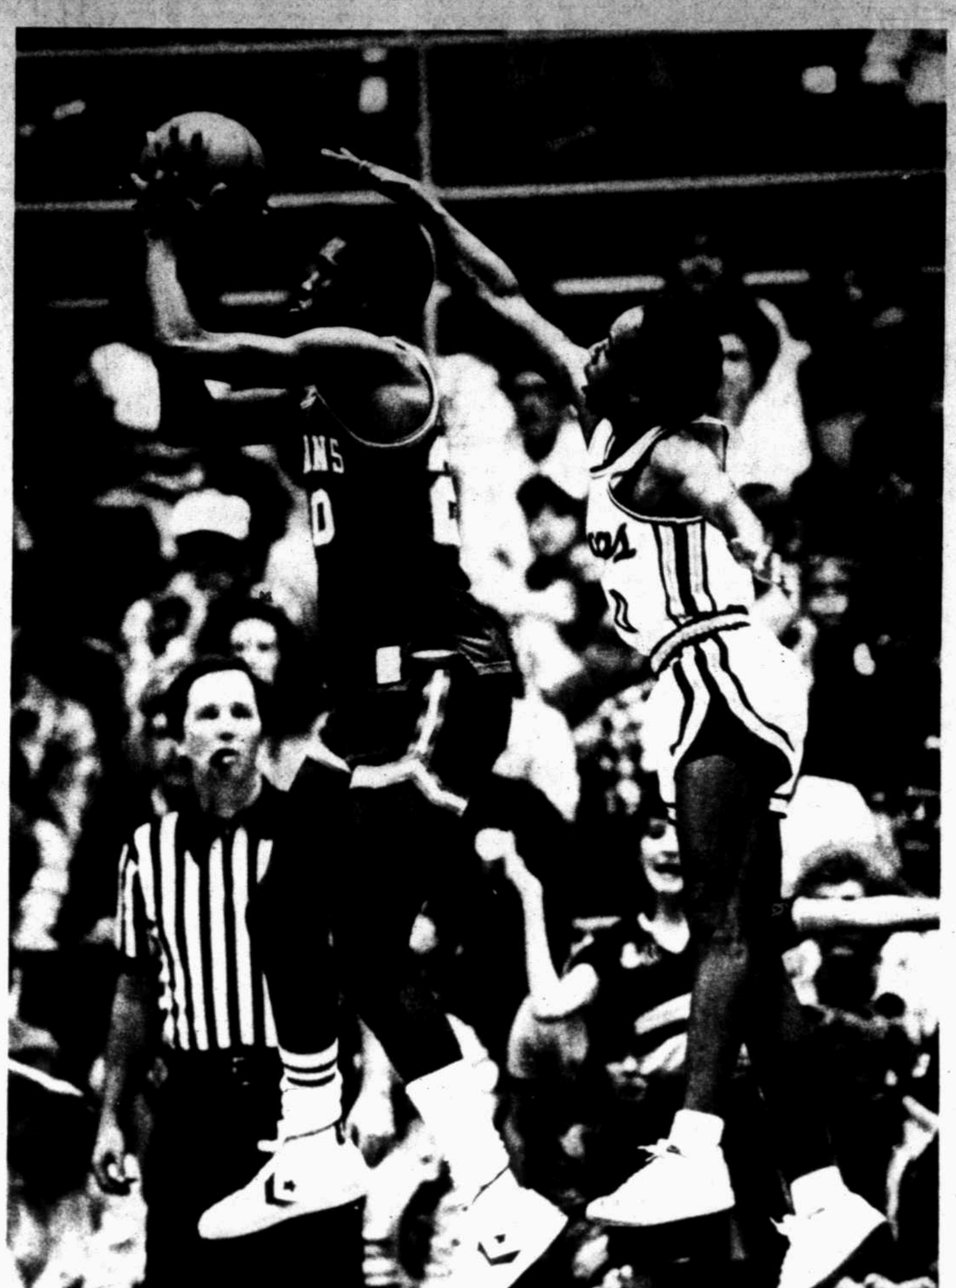

The human side also showed, as starter Lance McCain found out he would miss the final two tournament games with a cracked neck vertebra. Tears poured from his eyes, but his spirit wasn't crushed as he almost became Coach Jerry Stone's chief assistant on the bench, prodding his teammates at every turn. He wouldn't let them die. He was a part to the end.

There was Rodney McChriston, who was pressed into a starting assignment in the two most important games in Chap history and came out carrying his load. There was Jerome Crowe, who blocked a shot against Dade's 6-10 Yvon Joseph to set the tone in the championship game. And off the bench came Justin Morett, Chuck Robinson and David Thompson in overtime against Dade when the Chaps could have folded, but didn't.

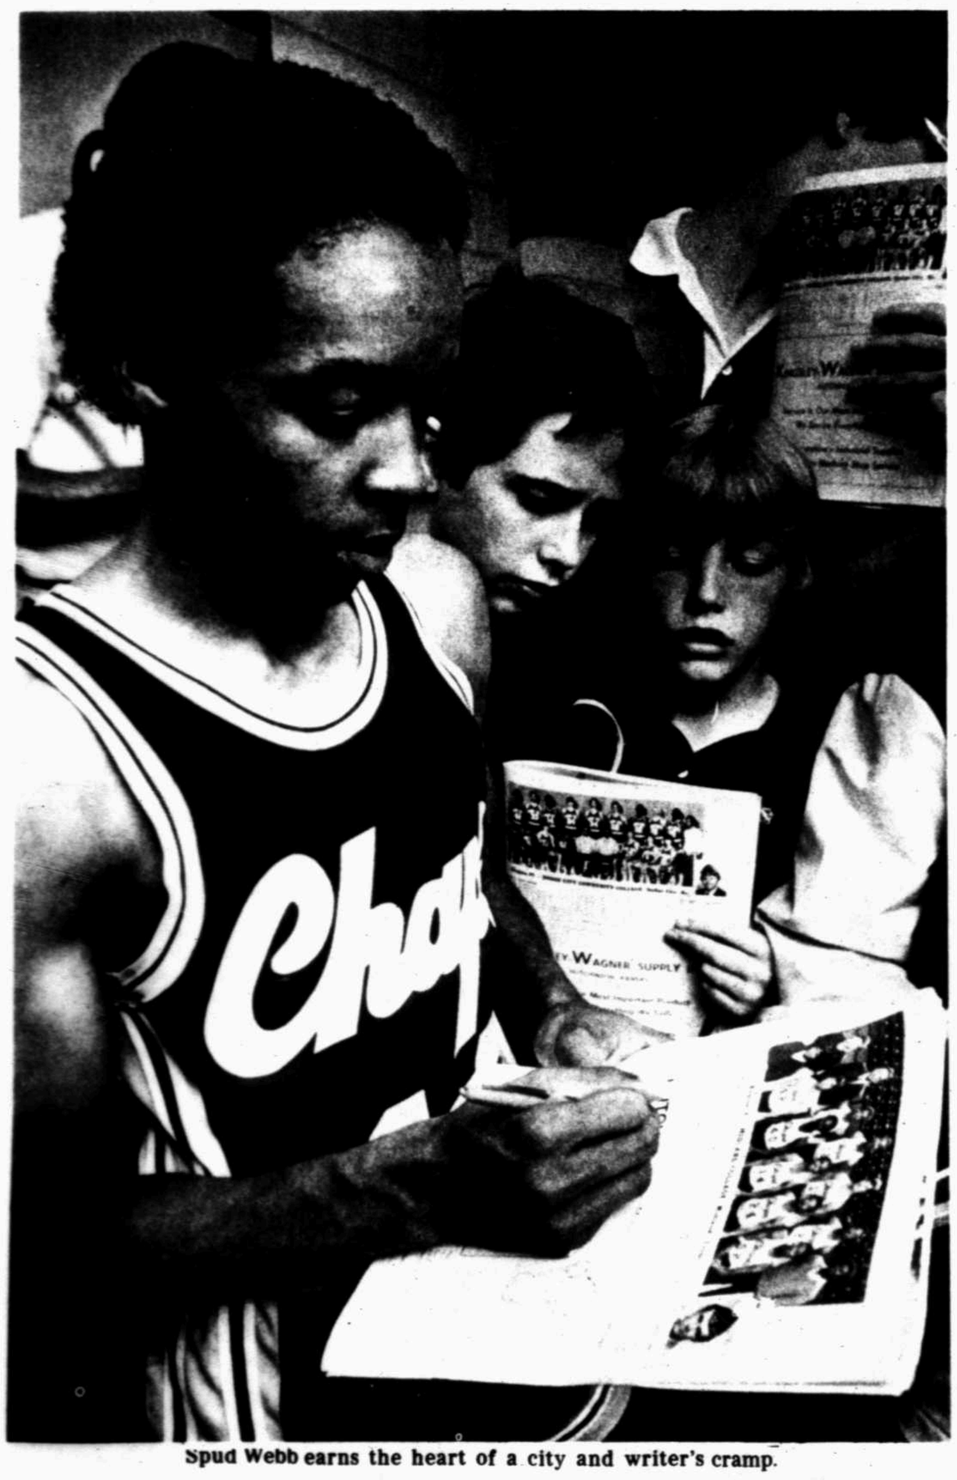

And at the bottom of it all was Stone, who was named Coach of the Tournament. He had his Chaps prepared mentally for what was to come with a game plan for them to sink their teeth into every night. He was a master at his job.

There may be more national titles to come for Midland College, but this one will always have a special place in the heart of the Tall City. Because of these individuals, we are "Taller" still.

Spud's incredible leaping ability helped him win Hutchinson fans and national recognition.

Spud Webb earns the heart of a city and writer's cramp.

Injured starter Lance McCain remained a part of the team, becoming almost an assistant coach.

Coach Jerry Stone was a master with the use of his bench. Here Stone calls on Justin Morett.

Cubs work hard in sun

Chances are the Midland Cubs will embark on the Texas League season April 9 in better shape than ever before. That's the impression of Midland Cub General Manager Bill Schammel, who recently returned from a visit to the Chicago Cubs spring training headquarters in Mesa, Ariz.

"They are doing more stretching exercises than I've ever seen the team do before and it's paying off in the absence of pulled muscles and injuries," Schammel said.

Another change will be in the way the catchers handle the pitchers. Mike Diaz has been returned to the Midland roster and Schammel notes that last year he was a curve ball catcher. "He called for a lot of curves, but this year they want him to call for more fastballs. They want the pitchers to be aggressive and attack the hitters and avoid getting behind the in the ball and strike count," Schammel says. "The theory will be to throw hard for 80 pitches and then go to the bullpen."

In addition to Diaz, Schammel looks for outfielder Joe Carter, last year's No. 1 draft choice, to return to Midland along with a slimmer Carmello Martinez, who made five errors in one game as a third baseman. The new Chicago regime will send Carmello back to Midland as a first baseman.

Also possible returnees are shortstop Dave Owen and pitchers Dave Thompson, Mike King and Carlos Gill, who has been throwing the ball impressively this spring.

Schammel is also hopeful that Fritz Connally, the third baseman from Baylor, will be back.

SHORT STOPS—Catcher Mike Shepston, who was with the Midland Cubs parts of the last three seasons, has decided to hang up his spikes...Joe Hicks (1980 Cubs) and Mike Upton (1981 Cubs) are battling for first base with the AAA Des Moines club and it is rumored that one may be traded...Outfielder Randy LaVigne appears to have a good chance of sticking with Des Moines...All but 20 box seats have been sold for the season....George Enright, who managed Midland last season after the departure of Roy Hartsfield, will pilot the Cubs' Class A Quad Cities Midwest farm club...Among the improvements at Cubs Stadium this season will be a shade that will offer relief from the sun for box seat holders down the first base line and also make it easier for a first baseman to catch a ball from the pitcher, which comes out of the setting sun in the early innings...

Cox pigeon takes first place

Flying against a gentle headwind and under mostly clear skies Saturday, a homing pigeon belonging to 15-year-old John Cox of Midland won the second race of the Midland Racing Pigeon Club's spring old bird series.

The blue check hen, hatched in 1979, took the 100-mile event with an average speed of 1,031.54 yards per minute, or 35.16 miles per hour. She returned to her home loft after two hours, 44 minutes and 47 seconds in the air. She was followed home by 249 other birds racing for 15 lofts from Midland, Midkiff and Big Spring.

Second place went to T.L. Stall, Midland, whose blue barred yearling hen winged home at an average speed of 34.93 mph. A two year old black check cock, flown by Howard Abernathy, Midland, placed third with a speed of 34.66 mph.

Cox is the son of Don and Rosemary Cox of Midland. Although a novice pigeon racer, he has earned a reputation amongst Midland homing pigeon fanciers as being "one of the men to beat." His flock of high-calber racers is well regarded.

Saturday's race from Ropesville, a small town southwest of Lubbock, was a relatively slow one, compared to the previous week's. March 20 the homers hurtled back to Midland on a roaring tailwind. The winning bird made home then with an average speed of 67 mph. The record speed from 100 miles for a Midland Racing Pigeon Club homer is right at 70 mph.

The racer's modest speeds Saturday were attributed to early morning fog and haze at the release point, which made it difficult for the birds to navigate.

Homers taking the remainder of the top-ten postions were flown by: Stall, fourth, 1,007.478 yards per minute average speed. Betsy Woodford, fifth, 1,003.984 ypm, Calvin Sanders, sixth, 1,003.779 ypm, Abernathy, seventh, 996.751 ypm; Sanders, eighth, 987.125 ypm; Randy Huddleston, ninth, 983.080 ypm; and Cox, tenth, 973.987 ypm.

Nine more old bird races are planned for this spring, with the longest being a 600-miler from Julesburg, Colo. on May 28.

A young bird series for racing homers hatched this spring is scheduled for the fall.

The Midland Racing Pigeon Club competes in races against clubs in Odessa.

Rose makes Spring debut

By The Associated Press

Pete Rose made a successful spring debut Saturday and pitcher Larry Christenson turned in an impressive six-inning stint as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-2 in an exhibition baseball game.

Rose, who has been slowed by a back muscle injury, played in his first spring game and singled twice in three at-bats. The 40-year-old first baseman also stole a base.

Christenson yielded just three singles and struck out seven and also doubled home two runs in the second inning off loser Ted Power. Manny Trillo hit a two-run homer for the Phillies.

Meanwhile, Houston's Nolan Ryan tuned up for his opening day assignment with seven strong innings and Alan Knicely's second-inning homer gave the Astros a 2-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. Ryan, who has pitched a record five no-hitters during his career, allowed seven hits in seven innings.

Rookie Wallace Johnson, who drove in the tying run with a sacrifice fly in Montreal's two-run ninth inning, singled home the winner with one out in the 11th to give the Expos a 6-5 triumph over the New York Mets.

Jim Sundberg homered, while Frank Tanana, Paul Mirabella and Danny Darwin checked Atlanta on six hits as the Texas Rangers clipped the Braves 5-1. Sundberg's fourth-inning homer followed a double by rookie center fielder George Wright, extending his hitting streak to 16 games.

Ron Guidry allowed one run in seven innings and Dave Revering homered as the New York Yankees edged the Cincinnati Reds 3-2.

Mickey Hatcher's bases-loaded triple with two out in the 13th inning boosted the Minnesota Twins to a 10-7 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

The San Diego Padres got eight-hit pitching from Tim Lollar, Dan Boone and Fred Kuhaulua and downed the San Francisco Giants 3-2.

Gorman Thomas drove in all Milwaukee's runs with a pair of two-run homers to power the Brewers to a 4-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs. Moose Haas became the first Milwaukee pitcher to go six innings this spring. He gave up two hits and struck out five.

Lee Lacy belted a pair of home runs and three other Pittsburgh players added solo blasts — Doug Frobel, Gary Alexander and Steve Nicosia — to power the Pittsburgh Pirates to an 11-5 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Jerry Martin broke out of a spring slump with a two-run single in the fourth inning as the Kansas City Royals routed the Baltimore Orioles 9-1. Kansas City's George Brett continued his torrid spring pace with a 3-for-4 performance that lifted his average to .475.

Jerry Turner's pinch single in the eighth inning drove in Detroit's winning run as the Tigers edged the Chicago White Sox 4-3. The Tigers tired the game in the seventh on Kirk Gibson's two-run double.

Floyd Bannister, Shane Rawley and Larry Andersen combined on a five-hitter as the Seattle Mariners beat the Oakland A's 5-3. Bannister went six innings, giving up three hits.

The Mariners also announced that 43-year-old Gaylord Perry, three victories short of becoming the 15th pitcher in major league history to win 300 games, officially signed a contract. Perry, a free agent, has worked out with the club since March 6.

Geoff Zahn pitched one-hit ball for six innings as the California Angels blanked Cleveland 5-0 and snapped the Indians' nine-game winning streak.

Rose beat out an infield hit in the first inning. After striking out in the second, the veteran first baseman grounded a hard single to right field in the fourth. Rose then stole second with a customary head-first dive into the bag.

Connors wins semifinal match

MILAN, Italy (AP) - Top-seeded Jimmy Connors won a thrilling third set tie-breaker to overcome Australian Peter McNamara 1-6, 6-2, 7-6 in a hard-fought semifinal match of the $350,000 Cuore Tennis Cup tournament Saturday night.

Connors advanced to the finals and a match against Guillermo Vilas of Argentina who had downed Sandy Mayer 6-3, 6-3 in the other semifinal.

Sunday's final, with the winner taking home $70,000 will be the replay of last week's final in the Rotterdam tournament, won by the Argentinian.

Connors needed two hours and a half to defeat the fourth-seeded Australian, taking a lot of risks in the final set after spoiling five match points.

At one moment Connors trailed McNamara 4-6 in the tie-breaker and struggled to 6-6 through a double fault and an error by McNamara.

A long lob by McNamara and a winning volley gave Connors a 8-6 lead, the set and the match.

In the decisive third set Connors climbed to a 5-3 lead after breaking McNamara's serve in the sixth game and appeared headed for an easy win.

A swimming pool... it's a good idea.

If you're thinking about spending your money on club memberships, lake properties, campers, motor homes, motor boats or overseas trips...Compare those with an investment in a permanent family recreational center...an inground swimming pool. Although it is gernerally accepted that inground pools keep pace with replacement value in most property evaluations, pool owners will talk most about those invegorating morning dips, long lazy weekends, poolside parties...almost by accident. But more importantly, in a society laden with pressure, a pool can be a very effective release from tensions. Swimming is the most enjoyable and healthy exercise you can imagine. It should be a vital part of your life body and condition your heart and lungs. Your kids can benefit, too. They will grow up in a healthier atmosphere and develop good active exercise habits.

College coaches against shot clock

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — College basketball coaches voted overwhelmingly against using a shot clock in any form, NCAA rules committee editor Ed Steitz said Saturday.

Due to a steady decline in scoring in the NCAA's Division I, there has been a growing sentiment in favor of rules that would require a team to shoot within a certain amount of time after getting possession of the ball.

Steitz announced Saturday the result of voting by coaches of the NCAA, NAIA and the National Junior College AA.

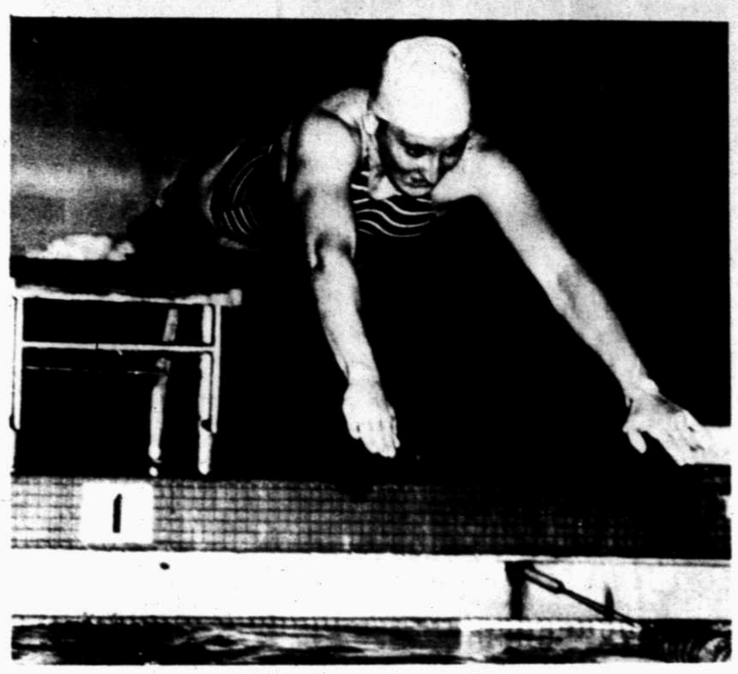

The survey questioned coaches and referees on three different rules governing the shot clock. The vote was 391-1 against a 24-second clock as used in the National Basketball Association.

Of the 1,524 who responded to the survey, the vote ran almost four to one against a 30-second clock. The vote was two to one against using a 45-second clock for the first 36 minutes of a game. The Sun Belt Conference uses that form of shot clock.

Steitz, of Springfield College, said he was surprised at the results.

Six years ago, coaches and officials opposed the clock 55-45.

"After the game in the Atlantic Coast Tournament finals between the No. 1 team in the country (North Carolina) and the No. 3 team (Virginia), my phone rang constantly for three days," Steitz said. It seemed everyone was in opposition to the low scoring game played in the last eight minutes by the two teams.

Brigitte Coon swims for BYU.

Swimming really wasn't Brigitte Coon's first love

Brigitte Coon's first meeting with a swimming pool was not a case of love at first sight.

Just eight at the time, Brigitte was a member of the City of Midland Swim Team where the cold water and hard workouts took their toll on Brigham Young University's future all-WAC performer.

"I really didn't like swimming," she says, "And I couldn't swim very well then. I spent a lot of time on the side of the pool crying. But my parents taught me never to be a quitter. They gave me the desire to achieve and always do the best I could."

When Brigitte raced with a relay team that won fourth place, however, her confidence grew. Two years later, at 10, she swam to a third place finish in a national AAU meet in Oklahoma, and went on to a successful career in junior and senior high school. And this week she swam on the BYU 200-free relay team in the AIAW nationals at Austin.

SHE RECEIVED high school All-America citations in the 50 and 100 freestyles, setting regional records in both events. After high school graduation, she was recruited by several universities, including Georgia, Pittsburgh, Texas Tech and Lamar, before choosing BYU.

Still, the 5-6 senior, with two collegiate all-conference nominations and six BYU records behind her, finds the rigorous workouts the hardest part about swimming.

"It's tough to swim lap after lap for four hours a day and not get bored. And when 6 a.m. rolls around I have to be up and in the pool. But at the same time the workouts are good discipline. I enjoy them or I wouldn't go."

BRIGITTE points out that like any other athlete, when workouts get tough or after bad meets, she can easily be discouraged.

Sometimes I wonder 'why am I doing this?' or 'what's it all worth?'," she says. "But I just have to toughen up. Most of the time I don't really want to quit. I've just had it for the moment. The support from my teammates is what really pulls me through. They all go through the same thing I do. And they encourage me."

Brigitte says she has found a number of ways to relieve the tedium of practice. "Sometimes I concentrate on stroke techniques or sing songs to myself. Sometimes I use the work to take out frustrations against other things."

FOR MANY athletes, trophies and ribbons provide a keen incentive for the physical and mental demands of competitive sports. But Brigette is not one of those.

"Winning races and setting records is exciting, but the thrill doesn't last long. Just knowing I have performed well and improved myself is what really counts. When I succeed personally, I win races."

"Probably the biggest thrill I've had as a swimmer has come from going places that I have never been before,

Midland's Jim Gunnels squares away to bunt during MHS-Big Spring action at Memorial Stadium Field Saturday.

Purple Pack slumps to 0-2

Bulldogs lose to Steers, 3-1

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Big Spring pitcher Adam Rodriquez gave up five hits, struck out eight batters and walked three as he went the distance for the Steers for a 3-1 District 5-5A victory over Midland High Saturday at Memorial Field Stadium.

The victory gave Rodriquez a 4-2 record and upped the Steers' record to 11-8 overall and 1-1 in the 5-5A while MHS' Joel De La Garza, 3-3, suffered the loss and dropped the Bulldogs' record to 6-8 and 0-2. Billy Miles replaced De La Garza at the start of the third inning because the righhanded MHS starter complained of a stiff shoulder.

"He said he felt real stiff and couldn't control the strikes so I just took him out," said Bulldog head coach Tim Whalen. "He wasn't doing bad, but he also wasn't doing as good as he can."

Though the pitching was good for both teams, it was the fielding the decided the outcome of the game. All three of Big Spring's runs and the solo tally by MHS were the result of errors.

BIG SPRING scored the first run of the game in the top of the first inning. Oscar Limon reached first on an error by Bulldog secondbaseman Faustino Granado and went to second on Blake Rosson's single.

With one out and runners on first and second, Big Spring got a break by an umpire call as MHS catcher Tim Davis was called for interference on the batter on back-to-back plays.

The first interference call came when Tom Olague hit a grounder and was awarded first because of the infraction which loaded the bases. Rosson was called out on the play at second, but the infraction erased that call. The second interference call cost the Bulldogs an inning-ending double play as well as a run when Tom Cudd hit a shot to shortstop Jose Carrasco who threw to Granado who completed the play on the throw to Gunnels. That play too was erased and Big Spring was up 1-0.

"The umpire said he was reaching for the ball and interfered with the batter," said Whalen about the two calls against Davis. "I told him (Davis) to back up in the catcher's box and not to reach (after the first call). I think their hitters were back deep in the box and he didn't adjust for it. That's a sign of a green catcher, not adjusting."

THE STEERS made it 2-0 in the second when Marcus Armendariz connected for a single to left field and went to second when Marty Rodriquez grounded out to De La Garza. An error by Jose Carrasco on a hit by Limon scored Armendariz. The Bulldogs finished the inning with a double play when Hipolito Zarate fielder a fly to center field and threw out Limon who was caught trying for second base.

Carrasco led off the top of the third with a walk and went to second on a sacrafice bunt by Grandao and a sacrafice fly by Peter Galindo. Carrasco scored when Arguiano mishandled a Tim Davis grounder down the line.

The final Big Spring run was scored in the fifth inning when Rosson, who went three-for-four on the day for a single, double and triple, connected for his double, went to third on a throwing error by Carrasco and came home on a sacrafice fly by to left field by Cudd.

A major problem for the Bulldogs has been stranding runners on the base paths. The Big Spring game was no exception.

"WE HAD six runners in scoring position and got one in," said Whalen. "The other times we grounded out, had three strike outs and a put out to end innings. We're not producing with runners on base. We're not getting it done. They're expecting the pitcher to make a bad pitch instead of getting out there and competing with him."

On Tuesday, the Bulldogs will travel to Abilene where they face Abilene Cooper at 4 p.m.

Carner, Melton lead share 1st

KAANAPALI, Hawaii (AP) — Nancy Lopez-Melton, looking for consecutive victories on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, shared the 54-hole lead Saturday with JoAnn Carner in the $175,000 Women's Kemper Open golf tournament with 5-under-par totals of 214.

Lopez-Melton shot a 4-under-par 69 Saturday, while Carner had her second-straight 70.

Alone in third place, one stroke back, was Amy Alcott, who fired a 69 Saturday for a three-day total of 215. They were the only three golfers in the field to break par at the 6,393-yard, Royal Kaanapali North Course, which has proved to be a difficult and different test each day.

Lopez-Melton birdied the 18th hole when her sand wedge hit the pin and stopped less than two feet from the hole. Her tap-in birdie enabled her to tie Carner.

Ozona won six of 15 events for 112 points to run away with the Division IV field, but Greenwood's Stuart Burleson shocked the Relays with a 6-9 victory in the high jump. Rankin's Terry Turner won the long jump with a 20-11½.

Odessa Ector won seven events for 106 points to win Division II, but Ector's win in the 1600 relay was the most impressive. Greg Lyons pulled a muscle on the second lap with a big lead, but had enough courage to complete the last half of the oval in sixth place. Joe Ellison went from sixth to first for the Eagles on the third lap.

Ector's Tony Gamble won both the 800 and 1600, setting a new records in both events with a 4:23.75 in the 1600 and a 1:54.56 in the 800. Charles Ricks won the 100 while Dennis Alexander won the 400. Ector also took the sprint relay.

Andrews' Henry Farris recorded a 10:01.20 in the 3200 for a new Division II record.

Baylor, Texas Tech split two

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Bobby Kohler got three hits, including a solo home run, to lead Texas Tech to a 4-2 win over Baylor, which won the nightcap of the Southwest Conference double-header 11-6 Saturday.

Tech got three unearned runs off Baylor losing pitcher Steve Smith, 2-2, in the opener. An error by shortstop James Woods on Jeff Harp's grounder allowed Tech's Pat More to score the winning run in the fourth.

Kohler's home run in the fifth ensured the win for Tech starter Gene Segrist, 2-2.

Baylor's Blair Hibbert hit a bases-loaded triple in the eighth inning of the second game and Jim Trevathan, who had three hits, belted a ninth-inning home run for the Bears.

Bear reliever Stan Hilton, 1-1, got the win in the second game.

The split of the double-header gave Baylor a 12-12 season record and a 2-4 mark in the SWC. Tech is 15-10 for the season and 4-2 in the conference.

Arkansas sweeps Rice

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Second baseman David Van Horn stroked an RBI single to left field in the bottom of the seventh to boost Arkansas over Rice 2-1 in the first game of a double-header Saturday.

The 11th-ranked Razorbacks embarrassed the Rice Owls 17-2 in the Southwest Conference nightcap.

Van Horn's game-winning single scored John Benberg from second to break a 1-all tie. Mike Robinson led off the seventh with a double down the left field line, but Rice's Mike Horn nabbed him at third on a Benberg bunt.

Benberg then stole second to set up Van Horn's winning shot over third baseman Dave Edwards that brought Benberg home.

Rice scored first in the game on a sacrifice bunt in the third that scored Mike Fox. The Razorbacks countered in the fifth with a sacrifice by Chris Shaddy that scored Benberg.

Arkansas' Ed Meyers, a junior right hander, went the distance in the seven-inning game to improve his season record to 4-0. Rice's Norm Charlton was he loser, dropping to 3-2 this year.

Honolulu retains Pro Bowl

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Honolulu, site of the National Football League's Pro Bowl for the past three years, has been designated to host the post season all-star game for the next three years, league officials announced Saturday.

The announcement, by NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle and Hawaii Gov. George Ariyoshi, noted that the designation still needed formal approval in collective bargaining between the league and its players.

"The vote to place the game in Hawaii for three more years was unanimous," Rozelle said. "I'm very grateful to Gov Ariyoshi and to the people of Hawaii for their cooperation."

The site had been designated one year at a time before this, league spokesman Al Ward said.

Sioux scalp Badgers, 5-2

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Co-captain Phil Sykes fired three goals and assisted on another to lead North Dakota to its fourth NCAA hockey title Saturday night with a 5-2 victory over defending champion Wisconsin.

Scott McKenney's three goals led Northeastern to a 10-4 win over New Hampshire in the afternoon consolation game.

Sykes, a senior from Dawson Creek, British Columbia, popped a rebound of Craig Ludwig's shot into the open side of the net for the winning goal at 6:27 of the third period.

Sykes' score, his 38th goal of the season, broke a 2-2 tie and teammate Gary Eades made it 4-2 at 10:07. Sykes completed his three-goal effort at 15:08.

It was the rubber contest in the season series between the two Western Collegiate Hockey Association teams, each having won three previous games. North Dakota finished first in the WCHA regular season, and Wisconsin won the conference playoffs.

Glen White sent North Dakota off to a 1-0 lead at 1:26 of the first period, batting a Sykes' feed past Wisconsin goalie Terry Kleisinger.

Ron Vincent got it right back for the Badgers, firing a 35-footer in the net off a faceoff won by Tim Thomas deep in the North Dakota zone at 3:55.

The two teams again matched early goals in the second period in which the Fighting Sioux outshot their Western rival 10-5.

Gordie Sherven won a faceoff for North Dakota at 1:09 and gunned the puck to Sykes, who beat Kleisinger for his first goal of the game.

Wisconsin's big gun John Newberry, tied it at 5:30 with a shot that bounced in off North Dakota goalie Darren Jensen's arm for his 38th goal of the season.

JIM MURRAY

This·vet trains like rookie

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

PALM SPRINGS – Ordinarily, when a blue-jowled veteran of the pitching wars, of hundreds of big-league starts, comes to spring training camp, he's allowed to set his own pace – a few leisurely appearances, mild set-ups, wind sprints. No curveballs, elbow-jarring fast balls. He works on control and loosening the over-the-winter adhesions. They don't count strikeouts in March, the spring training ERA is as meaningless as a politician's smile.

So, why is Gaylord Perry busting that fast one on the outside corner of the plate? Why is he trying to set up Reggie Jackson for the forkball inside? Why is he working the corners, moving the ball in-and-out, acting as if this were October and the World Series was on the line?

Because he's trying to make the club is why.

Oh, not the Seattle Mariners. That bunch of rinky-dinks and whozits and the field full of My-God-does-he-call-himself-a-major-leaguer?

GAYLORD'S TRYING to make a lineup that consists not of these guys but of Ruth, Gehrig, DiMaggio, Mays, Musial, Aaron, Cobb, Hornsby, Mantle and Williams. He wants to get on a rotation with Walter Johnson, Christy Mathewson, Cy Young and Grover Alexander. He's bucking for a higher league – Cooperstown. The Immortal League.

You see, only 14 pitchers have won more baseball games than Gaylord Perry. With only four wins, he can pass two of them. With 11 wins, he can pass five of them and tie a sixth.

The usual rationale of a returning veteran under these circumstances is summed up in the baseball platitude "I can help this club." Gaylord Perry can't help this club. God himself would have trouble helping this club. Nor can this club help Gaylord Perry. As usual he has to do it himself.

Gaylord Perry is 43 years old. His hair is almost gone and so is his fastball. But Gaylord Perry is as stubborn as a cowlick. He comes from the hardwood country of North Carolina, and you could make a kitchen table out of him. When he says he didn't come back to baseball "just to win three games," you have to believe him. He came to strike out 172 more guys, for one thing. If he does that, he'll be the all-time strikeout leader of major league baseball. Nolan Ryan, eat your heart out.

GAYLORD PERRY would probably go to the Hall of Fame without 300 wins, but to fall short now would be a slap in the face from history – like the pilot who gets shot down on Armistice Day, the miler whose all-time tops was four minutes and 1100th of a second, the basketeer who scores 99 points, the high jumper who raps out at 7'11.

Gaylord Perry is a surprise entry to the hall of the immortals anyway. Gaylord has spent his entire career celebrated for the wrong thing. His name is associated with a four-letter word, his career rated "R" in some quarters. "S-p-i-t," a horrid word anywhere, is particularly abhorrent if you're a major league batter.

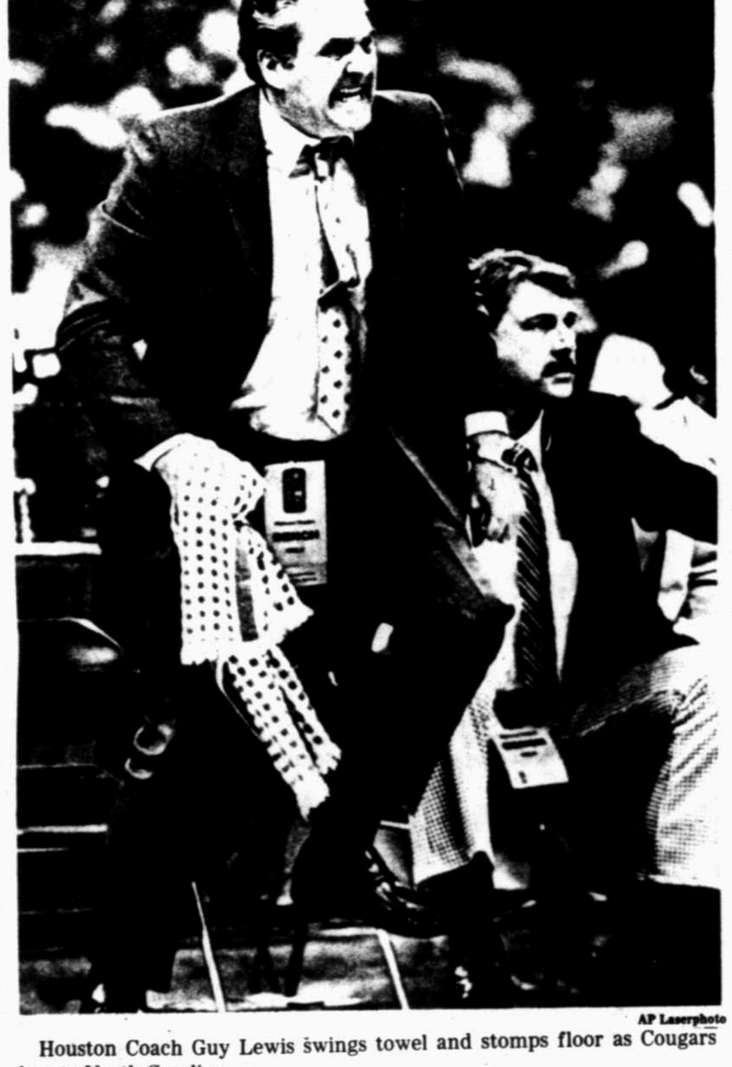

It's preposterous to think a man could win 300 major league games with one (illegal) pitch. Gaylord Perry had every pitch Christy Mathewson or Grover Alexander had. But when he first came up to the Giants, they had other candidates for Cy Young's footsteps – Juan Marichal, Mike McCormick, Billy O'Dell, to name a few. Perry crept up on history. But you don't cheat your way into the Hall of Fame. You can't spit 300 wins.

PERRY'S STOCK-in-trade was taking advantage of hitters. He knew how to doctor a baseball, but he was better at doctoring a hitter. Bob Shaw, a journeyman pitcher who fell 192 wins short of 300, taught Gaylord the loaded pitch. But Gaylord learned more about it from Don Drysdale who never showed him a thing in person.

"In those years, I noticed how our players were more worried about Drysdale going to his belt, to his cap, to his pocket than what he'd throw. They'd think 'Oh, oh, there it comes!' and they'd get themselves all psyched up. Instead of looking for a ball to hit, they'd be so distracted they'd pop up anything, and then they'd come back to the bench and say 'Well, he did it to me again.' It occurred to me if it worried them that much, it was another psychological weapon for the pitcher. Anything you can get to break a hitter's concentration is a big plus," Gaylord Perry recalled as he sat by the Seattle Mariners' dugout down here the other morning.

Conner refuses to count his chickens

By BOB GREEN

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Frank Conner, a one-time tennis pro seeking his first victory on the pro golf tour, denied that he held a one-stroke lead after three rounds of the $300,000 Sea Pines-Heritage Classic.

"On a golf course like this, I don't think there is a leader," Conner said Saturday after he'd taken over sole control of the top spot with a solid, 1-under-par 70 in cold, blustery winds.

"If there is a leader, it's the golf course.

"There's just too many players too close —Couples, Hoch, and Tom Watson is right there. If anyone of them shoots a 66 or 67 or 68 tomorrow, well, that's any awfully good score.

"If I can play as consistently as I have the last three days, I might have a chance to win. I'll just try to avoid the bogeys, make a birdie when I have a chance and hope for the best," Conner said.

Conner, 36, in his eighth year on the tour, put together a 54-hole total of 207. He was six shots under par for three trips over the difficult Harbour Town Golf Links that wends 6,650 yards through piny woods and along the marshes of Calibogue Sound to the red-and-white striped lighthouse that looms behind the 18th green.

Despite a shaky finish with bogeys on three of his last four holes, 22-year-old Fred Couples was second at 208 after a 71.

"Actually, I'm pretty fortunate," said the tour sophomore, who one-putted for two of those bogeys. "I could have had a couple of doubles in there and got away with bogeys."

Tom Watson, the current Masters champ and a former winner of this prestigious event, and Scott Hoch were another shot back at 209. Hoch had a 69 in the difficult conditions and Watson managed a 72 despite some erratic iron play.

Doug Tewell and Craig Stadler, each with a round of par 71, were at 210, only three back and well within striking range. Ed Sneed, who made up a lot of ground with a 68, and Australian Bob Shearer, with a 71, were at 211.

Couples birdied three of his first four holes and appeared to be poised to make a rout of it. He got it to 8-under par on two occasions, then backed off with three consecutive bogeys starting on the 15th, where he took two to get out of a bunker.

He put a wedge in a bunker and bogeyed the 16th, then bogeyed the 17th, where he flew the green, put his next in a bunker and had to get up and down for bogey.

While Couples was scattering bogeys and birdies all over the course, Conner remained steady. He birdied the ninth from five feet but 3-putted for bogey on the 16th. He got that stroke back, and sole control of the lead, with an eight-foot birdie putt on the difficult 17th.

Cougs' Williams suffers through worst contest

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Houston's Rob Williams said he couldn't remember having a worse performance than the one he suffered through Saturday as his Cougars lost to North Carolina 68-63 in the semifinals of the NCAA college basketball championship.

Williams, an honorable mention All-America and the Cougars' leading scorer with nearly 22 points a game, failed to hit a field goal and finished the contest with only two points.

"I didn't expect them to trap on defense," the 6-foot-2 guard said. "They were pushing me out of my range."

Williams missed all eight of his tries from the floor against the swarming Tar Heel defense.

"I've never been shut out from the field," Williams said. "But at the same time, I don't remember ever shooting as few times."

Houston Coach Guy Lewis couldn't come up with an answer for Williams' performance either.

"I don't know what happened to Rob," Lewis said. "He's a much better player. It didn't look like he was trying to score enough."

Williams said he wanted to score, but the North Carolina defense wouldn't let him. "They would not give me the percentage shots so I wouldn't shoot," Williams said.

The crappie is one of the all-time favorites of Texas anglers. One reason is the simplicity of equipment needed. More crappie fall victim to the cane pole and minnow than all other methods combined. In addition, the schooling tendencies of crappie provides non-stot action once a school is located.

Many Texans feel it's the best eating fish of all.

Crappie are members of the sunfish family and exist in two species, black and white. For positive identification, count the hard spines on the dorsal fin. Blacks have seven or eight spines while white have six.

BLACKS prefer clear, slightly acidic water found in East Texas. The white originally were found only in the central and western areas of Texas, but stocking programs make them prominent in the east, as well, now.

Black crappie begin spawning when water temperatures climb to 60 degrees and the whites begin when it reaches 65 to 70. When water warms in the spring, spawning migration moves toward shallow water and both species build nests in depths of one to eight feet, usually in gravel or hard bottom.

Fry normally hatch in five days. Fry feed on microscopic animals called zooplankton. As growth continues, insects and small fish make up the bulk of the diet. In summer, fall and winter, crappie school in deeper and more open areas.

GROWTH RATES of three to five inches the first year are normal and fish reach seven to eight inches after the second year. Life expectancy is about six years.

Crappie are most vulnerable during spawing season. A feathered jig, tiny spinner or live minnow hooked through the back are successful methods in the spring. At other times of the year, crappie can be found concentrated and suspended in deep water structure. A depth finder can be an asset in locating schools. Once located, spinners, jigs, minnow fished day or night, by lantern, are usually successful methods.

The current state record for white crappie is four pounds, nine ounces.

Due to the prolific spawning ability of the crappie, stocking in small bodies of water is not recommended. In most situations, small ponds do no provide enough food for young crappie.

April is a good time to try your favorite lakes for crappie.

Best lure no good if no one trusts it

Expert plays Baiting Game

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) — The best bait is no good if anglers don't trust it, says Tom Mann, who built one of the country's largest bait companies out of a cigar box and a washtub full of fish.

Many gimmicks in bait manufacturing probably are aimed more at fishermen's fancies than the fish they try to catch, Mann feels.

"But the thing is that a fisherman has got to have full confidence in anything he fishes with or he will not fish with it," he continued. "He will lay it back in his box and forget about it."

Every bait maker is seeking to convince the angler of a product's effectiveness. Even the hottest lure will not lead the field for long, Mann said.

"There's always a little something you can add to it," Mann, of Eufaula, Ala., said during an interview at the Atlanta Boat Show. "The bait would still be catching fish, but the fishermen aren't using it. They're looking for another one."

SO BAITS change — new colors, soft bodies, different curves to provide more enticing action in the water.

Mann's interest in fishing began when he was a child. Fish from local ponds supplemented food grown on a Depression farm. First came little cork popping bugs for fly fishing. Then he turned to spinning gear and lead-head jigs.

As his local reputation grew, other fishermen bought his lures.

"I had a pickup truck and I had a washtub, and I'd catch those fish and lay them in the washtub and take them around to all the tackle shops," Mann said. "And the fellas who were sitting around talking fishing would all run out to see what I had.

"The first thing they wanted to know is, 'Where'd you get 'em?' and the second is, 'What'd you catch 'em on?'" he recalled. "I always had what I caught them on in the truck with me, so I sold everything I could make. The demand got so great, that I'd open up the cigar box and for a quarter apiece, they'd just wipe them out."

First, it was Ma[illegible] and his wife making lures on the kitchen table. Th[illegible]e began hiring neighbors and dug out his basement to build a factory. Marketing became regional, then national.

IN 1960, he resigned his job as an Alabama conservation warden and moved to Eufaula, on a huge manmade lake, where he built a factory and research facility. Today, he employs 250 people.

Research is the key, Mann said. He can carve 10 nearly identical lures, but one will be clearly superior. He finds that one by watching fish in a test tank.

"I get to see my fish eyeball-to-eyeball every day," he said. "I can see their reaction to a lure, rather than throwing it down in a dark pool and thinking what they're doing. I actually see them through a window."

Then comes that marketing gimmick — Mann's version of the plastic worm, for instance. He came up with a translucent, super-soft worm.

"The idea came to me, 'Let's call it a jelly worm.' My wife said 'It looks like jelly, why don't we flavor them, and make them smell and taste like jelly.'"

They did, in assorted fruit flavors, and the bait was a success.

Just remember, with Yankees, George is boss

By BLACKIE SHERROD
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. — This is in the nature of a public service announcement for all those who have misplaced the identity of the New York Yankee manager.

A certain amount of confusion is understandable for there has been considerable shifting around in this post of late. It reminds one somewhat of the office of Attorney General under Mr. R. Milhous Nixon, once the father of our country. Or maybe the cousin.

Adding to the muddle is the fact that some Yankee bossmen seem to serve several different terms. It reminds one somewhat of the office of governor in the sovereign state of Alabama where the head guy must vacate the state house every four years to give the place a good airing out. He may return, and usually does, after the enforced breathing spell. Bob Lemon and Billy Martin and now, Gene Michael have signed up for separate hitches at Yankee Stadium. It reminds one somewhat of parolees who get lonesome for the old prison farm so they knock off another filling station.

Actually, your confusion is needless. It makes no difference whose name is on the door. Any number of gents can pittypat to the umpire with the day's lineup. The true manager of the Yankees is now and ever shall be George Michael Steinbrenner III.

Iron George. If ever a movie is made of his life, George C. Scott will play the role.

SHOULD YOU hold any doubts about his dominance, you have only to visit Yankee spring training at nearby Fort Lauderdale. Who set the camp up? Who established the rules? Who outlined the training routine? Who suggested emphatically that it would be nice if all Yankees report Feb. 9, although union agreement sets March 1 as official reporting date? Who hinted broadly that any Yankee who did not report early might find himself on the next flight to Cleveland or Terre Haute? Who is the focal point of postgame critiques as the Yankees lose yet another exhibition? To whom do the reporters?

Iron George, that's who. Not Bob Lemon, the interim doorstop, or Gene Michael, the doorstop-in-waiting. There's room for only one ringmaster in this particular circus. Iron George is the one and only big cheese and don't you or Bob Lemon or Lou Piniella forget it.

IN AN OLD-fashioned Jeffersonian way, you can see Iron George's reasoning.

Caveat viator. He's risking his money. Like the late Bennie Bickers would say when his eating tastes were questioned: "It's my mouth. I'll haul coal in it if I want to." Steinbrenner has an alienable right to cut his employees off at the pump.

George grew quite purple of gill last October when the Dodgers spanked his lads like barefoot watermelon thieves. His Yankees played like sandlotters, moaned George. They were deficient physically and mentally. Iron George jutted jaw and slapped pearl-handled riding crop across palm. It won't, by gar, happen again.

So these were retributive tactics from Steinbrenner. Bring those bums to camp early. We can't do it officially, but if anybody fails to show, I'll ship his behind to Devils Island.

Then when the Yankees, somehow a bit fearful of Iron George, checked into Fort Lauderdale, each found a new jogging suit in his locker and the inference was clear. They is going to be some sweating, baby.

When Lou Piniella weighed in at 207, expecting to have a couple weeks to melt off seven pounds, Iron George slapped him with a $7,000 fine. The proposition was supposed to be on the q.t. according to a furious Piniella, but Steinbrenner popped off to the press, one of his favorite pastimes.

THE YANKEES ran sprints and jogged miles. Jokes bounced from the citrus groves. The Yankees lost their power with the departure of Reggie Jackson, so now they will steal bases for a living. Stretch singles into doubles. Steinbrenner's Burners. They may not do well in the American League but they'll be a helluva threat in the Penn Relays.

Georgetown flips Cards

Hoyas use power, finesse

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Georgetown parlayed the finesse of Eric Smith and the power of Patrick Ewing into a 50-46 victory over Louisville in the semifinals of the NCAA Basketball Championships Saturday, giving the Hoyas their first chance at a national title since 1943.

Smith, carrying much of the offensive load for foul-troubled Eric 'Sleepy" Floyd, scored eight straight Georgetown points in a 14-4 run that erased a one-point deficit and produced a nine-point lead.

Smith, who averaged only 9.3 points a game in the regular season, scored 14, including an assortment of twisting layups, back-door plays and jump shots to help the Hoyas end Louisville's title hopes.

THE VICTORY earned Georgetown the right to meet top-ranked North Carolina Monday night for the national championship. In their only other appearance in the Final Four, Georgetown lost to Wyoming 51-43 in the 1943 title game.

The Hoyas made that trip ancient history Saturday. Battling Louisville all the way, they intimidated the Cardinals inside, with the 7-foot freshman Ewing blocking shots, causing turnovers and harrying shooters.

Even his absence was intimidating. At one point in the second half, Louisville's Derek Smith went up for a short baseline jumper — when he saw Ewing had moved out into the key, Smith threw his jump shot well over over the basket without touching the rim.

IT WAS that kind of day for Louisville. The Cardonals, national champions in 1980, trailed by only 24-22 at the half. They outscored Georgetown 8-5 in the first 4:03 of the second half, twice taking one-point leads, the final time on a 15-foot baseline shot by Wiley Brown that made it 30-29 with 15:57 to play.

That's when Georgetown exploded. Floyd, Georgetown's All-American guard, started it with a pair of free throws and Ewing added a layup on a feed from Fred Brown.

Then Smith took over. He scored two baskets before Floyd picked up his fourth personal foul, forcing him to the bench. Smith then hit another basket and pair of foul shots and Ewing capped the run with two free throws that made it 43-34 with 5:50 left.

Sixth-ranked Georgetown still clung to a nine-point lead, 47-38, when Louisville began to show championship-caliber courage. The Cardinals, ranked No.20 in the final Associated Press ratings, outscored Georgetown 8-2 over the next three minutes and trailed by only 49-46 on a basket be Derek Smith with 14 seconds left.

GEORGETOWN'S ERIC Smith had a chance to sew up the victory when he went to the line with a one-and-one with 11 seconds left, but he missed the first shot. But Louisville lost the rebound out of bounds and when Georgetown inbounded, Floyd was fouled. Floyd sank the first of two free throws, sending Louisville home for the season with a 23-10 record. Georgetown upped its record to 30-6 in only its seventh appearance in the NCAA Tournament.

Louisville, with four starters back from its championship team of two years ago, managed to neutralize the brute force of Ewing through much of the first half by using a swarming, double-and sometimes triple-teaming defense. The Cardinals were able to force Georgetown to shoot from the outside.

The Hoyas built their biggest lead of the first half, 18-12, by scoring six straight points, including four in nine seconds by freshman Anthony Jones.

But the Cardinals rallied with a 6-2 burst that brought them within 20-18 on a baseline shot by Derek Smith with 5:38 left in the first half.

Floyd managed to avoid fouling out and contributed 13 points. The top scorer for Louisville was Derek Smith with 10, and Charles Jones and Jerry Eaves had eight apiece.

Gary-Feemster set pace

Rick Gary and Lynn Feemster shot a 61 to lead the Mission CC two man Scramble Saturday as 120 teams participated in the two-day event.

Kyle Rowland-Hull were second with 62 while Monty Gregg-Don Adams tied with Mickey Wilson-Billy Carson for third at 63. In today's final round, all teams 69 or under will tee off at 2 p.m. or after. Teams 70 or above will begin teeing off at 9 a.m.

Perkins, Worthy spark Tar Heels over Cougars

By JOHN NELSON

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Sam Perkins and James Worthy, the pillars of North Carolina's offense, took control late in the game, giving Coach Dean Smith another chance to win that elusive national championship.

North Carolina blew an early lead, then regrouped behind the four-corner offense to defeat Houston 68-63 Saturday in the semifinals of the NCAA Basketball Tournament.

"We're delighted to be in the Final Two," said Smith, who will be going after his first national title in seven Final Four appearances. "We were there last year (losing to Indiana). Our work is cut out for us.

"We'd like to win, of course, but win or lose we've still had a successful year. Our world would not come to an end if we lost."

Houston's world, at least for this season, did come to an end. Perkins and Worthy saw to that by combining for 11 straight North Carolina points in the final 9½ minutes. Worthy scored six straight points, including a slam dunk after North Carolina went into the four-corner spread with seven minutes left. Perkins then scored his team's next five points as the Tar Heels built a lead they could live with.

"When it gets down to a single-digit lead, I start thinking about going into the four-corners," said Smith, whose team lead 52-48 when the slowdown began.

North Carolina breezed to a 14-0 lead to open the game, but Houston's powerful baseline game got the Cougars back into contention.

"We were getting shots from the baseline," Perkins said. "But then they started to block out. They go to the boards really well. And all of sudden we had a ballgame."

Perkins scored 25 points and had 10 rebounds, while Worthy added 14 points and four rebounds to help the Tar Heels offset the Cougars' inside strength.

"Our cold start in both halfs hurt us," Houston Coach Guy Lewis said, adding that a poor game by guard Rob Williams also hurt. Williams was 0-for-8 from the field, scoring only on two free throws, and Lewis said: "I don't know what happened to him. North Carolina did a good job on him, but a lot of teams have done a good job on him. It looked liked he wasn't trying.

Williams went into the game with 21.8 points per game average.

Smith, whose strategy may have won it, almost let the game get away in the first half. After the Tar Heels breezed to their 14-0 lead, Smith began wholesale subsititution that allowed Houston to regroup.

Smith said it was the law of averages, not his strategy, that allowed Houston to rally.

"When you get two very good teams and one gets an early lead, it's just the percentage that they will come back," Smith said.

Whatever the reason, Houston trailed 31-29 at halftime.

The loss prevented Lewis from registering the 500th victory of his 26-year career as the Cougars' mentor. Houston ended the season with a 25-8 record.

The game was played before an estimated crowd of 61,000 at the Superdome, an NCAA record. The previous record for any game indoors was 52,693, set in 1968 at the Astrodome for UCLA-Houston.

A crowd of 31,248 for the championship game in 1971, also at the Astrodome, was the former NCAA tournament record.

After North Carolina opened its 14-0 lead in the first 4:48, Smith put in substitutes Buzz Peterson, Chris Bruft and Warren Martin. The Cougars scored 13 of the next 17 points and trailed by five, 18-13, with 10:36 left.

Larry Micheaux, who finished with 18 points, two less than teammate Lynden Rose, had five points in that run, including a three-point play.

The Cougars finally tied it 29-29 on a feed underneath to Micheaux with 1:45 left in the half. North Carolina took a 31-29 into intermission.

The Tar Heels opened the second half in a fashion similar to the way they began the game, outscoring Houston 7-2 in a 2:49 stretch to take a 38-31 lead. North Carolina led by as many as nine, 46-37, when Worthy drove the lane and hit a jumper with 12:15 left.

Oscars are family affair

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Henry and Jane Fonda, nominated for Oscars as best actor and supporting actress of 1981, provide the latest exhibit in what has become over the years a family affair — the Academy Awards.

The 53-year history of the motion picture awards is filled with nominees and winners who were parents and children, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives, or otherwise related. The lesson, perhaps, is that talent — or at least recognition by one's peers — runs in families.

Take the Fondas. Both will be in contention Monday night at the Los Angeles Music Center because of their performances in "On Golden Pond." Astonishingly, Henry has been nominated only once before: in 1940 for "Grapes of Wrath." (He received an honorary award for his career's work last year.)

Jane Fonda's current nomination is her sixth, and she has won as best actress twice — for "Klute" in 1971 and "Coming Home" in 1978. Her brother Peter has been nominated for an award once, not as an actor but for co-writing "Easy Rider" in 1969.

The Minnelli clan is also prolific. Father Vincente won the 1958 Oscar for directing "Gigi," and daughter Liza scored as best actress for "Cabaret" in 1972. Her mother, Judy Garland, was winner only of a special award as a child actress in 1939, though she was nominated as actress for "A Star Is Born" in 1954 and supporting actress in "Judgment at Nuremberg," in 1961.

The Barrymores, First Family of the Theater, made their marks in film. A latecomer to movies, Ethel was nominated four times as supporting actress and was the winner in 1944 for "None But the Lonely Heart." Lionel was selected best actor in 1930-31 for "A Free Soul," but brother John, the most flamboyant of the trio, never drew a nomination.

The Coppola clan set a record in 1974 with "The Godfather, Part II." Francis won for producing, directing and co-writing, and his father Carmine was awarded for collaborating on the original score. Francis also directed his sister, Talia Shire, to a nomination as supporting actress.

Walter Huston at the 1948 awards remarked: "Many years ago I raised a son, and I said to him, 'If you ever become a writer or director, please find a good part for your old man.' And he did."

The part was the crusty old prospector in "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," and it won Walter the supporting actor award. Son John collected two Oscars for writing and directing the film.

Joan Fontaine and Olivia de Havilland behaved less than sisterly at the 1946 awards. That was the year that Miss DeHavilland was awarded best actress for "To Each His Own." Backstage she refused her sister's hand in congratulations, snapping, "How can you do that when you know how I feel?"

It was the outbreak of a longstanding antagonism, which was helped along when they competed against each other for best actress of 1941. Miss Fontaine won for "Suspicion."

Lynn and Vanessa Redgrave formed another sister act in 1966, nominated for "Georgy Girl" and "Morgan," respectively. Neither won. Three nominations later, Vanessa was named best supporting actress in 1977 for "Julia."

Their father, Michael Redgrave, was in the running for best actor for "Mourning Becomes Electra" in 1947.

The Thalberg-Shearer family may own the Oscar total record. Norma was nominated for best actress five times and won for "The Divorcee" in 1929-30. Her sound-director brother, Douglas, reaped five Oscars in 15 nominations. Miss Shearer's husband, Irving Thalberg, won several Oscars for his films while production chief of MGM.

Not so lucky are Warren Beatty and Shirley MacLaine. She has no Oscars in four nominations, and her brother was previously scoreless in seven. However, Beatty has four more chances Monday night, with "Reds."

Richard Burton acquired no Oscars in six nominations, while Elizabeth Taylor was victorious in two out of five ("Butterfield 8," 1960 and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," 1966). Another of her husbands, Mike Todd, produced the 1956 best picture, "Around the World in 80 Days."

And there are more:

Ryan O'Neal, nominated for best actor, "Love Story," 1970; daughter Tatum winner as supporting actress, "Paper Moon," 1973.

Joanne Woodward, best actress of 1957 for "The Three Faces of Eve"; husband Paul Newman, nominated for best actor this year ("Absence of Malice") after three previous losses.

Husband-and-wife Jules Dassin and Melina Mercouri nominated in three categories for "Never on Sunday," 1960.

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, nominated for best actor and actress, "The Guardsman," 1931-32.

Frank Sinatra, winner as supporting actor in 1953 for "From Here to Eternity," wife Ava Gardner nominated as best actress in "Mogambo," the same year.

Rex Harrison, "Cleopatra," and wife Rachel Roberts, "This Sporting Life," acting nominees, 1963.

ENTERTAINMENT

A re-enactment of this scene from Midland Community Theatre's 1971 production of "I'm Herbert," starring D.A. Plumlee and Charles Dixon, will be among the many performances redone by local talent at the "Gala of Stars" today at 3 p.m. and April 3 at 8 p.m. at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. Tickets, priced at $6, are available at the theater, or at First Presbyterian Church. Proceeds from the benefit will go to the Westminister Ringers, the handbell choir at First Presbyterian Church.

Trying to guess Oscar winners perilous

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Will it be "Reds" or "On Golden Pond"? Or will a dark horse race through with Academy honors Monday night?

Predicting Oscar winners ranks with Alp climbing in terms of peril, something only the foolhardy try. And yet — it's there.

Here's how the 54th awards look to this Alpinist:

Best Picture — "Reds," despite its excesses, will probably impress Academy voters as the outstanding film achievement of 1981. The endearing "On Golden Pond" is a strong contender; "Atlantic City," "Chariots of Fire" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" less so.

Best Actor — Henry Fonda ("On Golden Pond") and Burt Lancaster ("Atlantic City") are the leaders, but it seems likely that the Academy will correct the long and inexplicable neglect of Fonda for acting honors. Paul Newman ("Absence of Malice"), Dudley Moore ("Arthur") and Warren Beatty ("Reds"), also non-winners, will probably remain so.

Best Actress — Meryl Streep ("The French Lieutenant's Woman") appears the winner, although the Academy could set a new record (four Oscars) with Katharine Hepburn ("On Golden Pond"). Others: Diane Keaton ("Reds"), Marsha Mason ("Only When I Laugh"), Susan Sarandon ("Atlantic City").

Best Supporting Actor — John Gielgud seems unbeatable, on the basis of his long, distinguished career as well as his delicious guardian-butler for "Arthur." Others: James Coco ("Only When I Laugh"), Ian Holm ("Chariots of Fire"), Jack Nicholson ("Reds"), Howard E. Rollin ("Ragtime").

Mel Tillis

Tillis performs at Chap Center

Singer Mel Tillis will perform at 8 p.m. April 6 at Chaparral Center.

Although Tillis and his band, The Statesiders, perform over 200 tour concert dates, most are familiar with Tillis' name through his many television appearances. He has been a guest or host on most talk shows, including "The Tonight Show," "Merv Griffin" and "The Mike Douglas Show." He also has been a guest on "The Today Show," an early morning news program.

This type of exposure becomes multi-media in nature when it is coupled with his motion picture appearances in "W.W. and the Dixie Dance Kings," "Every Which Way But Loose," "Smokey and the Bandit II," "The Villain" and "Cannonball Run."

Tillis has written over 1,000 songs, with well over 500 of them having been published.

From 1971 through 1976, Tillis was named the Country Music Association's Comedian of the Year. In 1976 he won two prestigious honors: The Country Music Association's Entertainer of the Year and an admission to the Songwriters Hall of Fame.

Tillis was born and raised in Florida, and at age 16 he made his first public appearance as a singer and acoustic guitar player. When a tour in the U.S. Air Force came along from 1951 to 1955, Tillis joined a band, The Westerners. The group entertained weekends and evenings in local clubs.

1956 was a turning point for Tillis. Webb Pierce recorded Tillis' "I'm Tired," thus opening the doors for Tillis to a writing job with the Cedarwood Music Publishing Company in Nashville. He was hired at $75 a week.

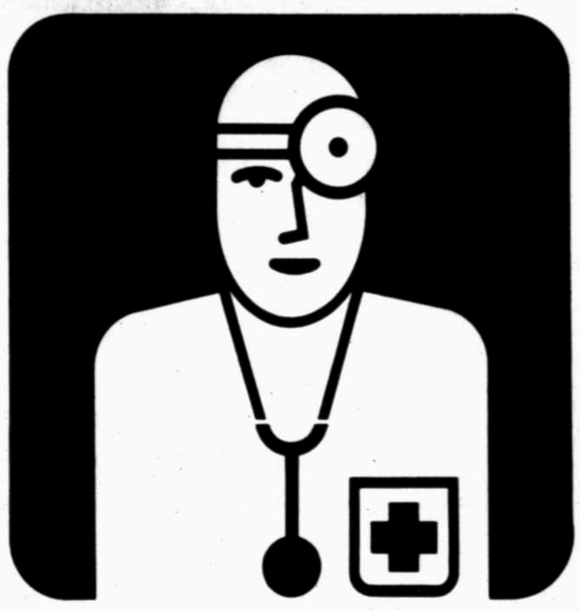

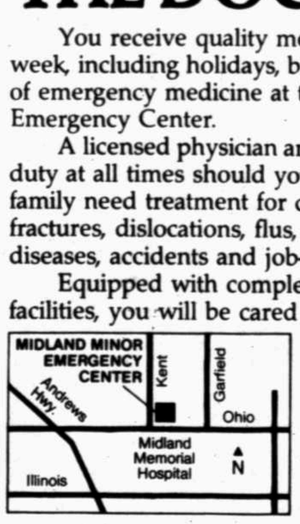

Today, he makes most of his personal appearances by traveling in his Beachcraft King Air A-100 plane. He has a 1,300-acre farm 30 miles northeast of Nashville, with a 6,000-square-foot log cabin on it made of 250-year-old logs taken from Tennessee and Kentucky. He and his wife, Judy, live there with their five children.

Tickets, priced at $9.50, may be purchased at Endless Horizons, Midland and Odessa, both Music Haul locations, Flipside Records, Odessa, and Chaparral Center.

In "Quest for Fire," from left, Ron Perlman, Everett McGill and Nameer Elkadi star as three courageous warriors who venture in search of the life-sustaining element — fire.

New Christy Minstrels have long, illustrious history

They were looking for a banjo player and they'd heard he was one of the best. They decided to find out.

Picking up the phone, one of the group's members dialed the Atlanta, Ga., number.

"Hello, is this Steve Goodyear?"

"Yes, it is."

"This is the New Christy Minstrels in Los Angeles. Could you get your banjo and play it over the phone for us?"

"What?" came the surprised reply.

Goodyear soon discovered it was the New Christy Minstrels he was talking with and they were serious — they wanted him to audition over the phone.

He did.

"The next day Steve was on a plane from Atlanta to L.A. and he's been with us ever since," Don Holst of the Minstrels said onstage Friday night in response to the audience's unasked aloud but silently wondered question — How does one get to be a New Christy Minstrel?

Holst said, "We're constantly being asked how different people get in the group. Everybody has a different story. Some come up after the show with a guitar and, when we can, we do an audition. Others go through regular audition procedures in L.A. Then there's Steve."

The almost-full house at Midland High auditorium for the Community Concert Association's 1981-82 season concert, responded with laughter to the story.

There was also some amazement Friday night among audience members, especially those who've not been avid Minstrel fans through the years, when the Minstrels paid tribute to those who have gone before them — Karen Black, Terry Ann Meusam (Miss America 1972), Barry McGuire, Kenny Rogers, John Denver, The First Edition (all the members of this group), and so on.

The group has a long and illustrious history behind it dating back to 1842 and the original Christy Minstrels.

"Pops (Edwin Christy) and his minstrels traveled all over the country finally making it to Broadway where The Christy Minstrel Show became Broadway's longest running show," Holst said, by way of introducing the first medley following intermission.

"The group included a young man who was a songwriter. Because of the Christy Minstrels and its travels across the country, this man's name became a household word."

Next came the sounds of "Jeanie with the Light Brown Hair," "Old Folks at Home," otherwise known as "Swanee River," "Beautiful Dreamer" (about which one audience member said reminiscently, "My mother used to sing that to me when I was little."), "Camptown Races" and "Oh! Susanna." This number was well done, with the harmonizing being of a much finer timbre than it had been during the show's first half.

The show's first half lacked the sparkle it had during the second half. Although the group presented a variety of musical selections ranging from the not-so-well-known to the well-known — from "Daddy's Song," written by Holst, to "Today," one of the group's greatest singles and also an album title, allowing the audience to know who they were by the songs that they sang — the New Christy Minstrels "can't be contented with yesterday's glories;...can't live on promises winter to spring. Today is" the "moment and now is" the "story" and Friday night they did not harmonize as smoothly as yesterday's Christy Minstrels.

It is possible that two of the three female members had colds, because they kept coughing, moving their heads away from the mikes, and drinking water. Still, the group's sound was not what it used to be.

The New Christy Minstrels held its first show at the Troubador in Los Angeles in 1961. Through the years, the group's popularity has been based on its blended sound, made up of strong voices of solo caliber which can also harmonize together as one.

Such was not the case Friday during the concert's first half. On several occasions, group members, perhaps all of them, were flat, especially on the closing notes. The group's stage presentation of the works performed was professionally done; however, the sound was just not right. The group sounded noticeably more in-key and stronger following intermission.

The audience seemed to enjoy all of the selections, with "Green, Green," which was dedicated to "all the Christy Minstrels, past, present and future," receiving immediate applause.

As an encore number, the Minstrels performed a song which they "never finish a show without doing." Written by Woody Guthrie, "it sold more records for us than any other."

The audience was invited to sing along. Most knew the lines, if only the chorus. Thus, the show closed with the New Christy Minstrels, accompanied by the audience, singing "This Land is Your Land."

— GEORGIA TEMPLE

'Quest for Fire' produces chuckle

Even before the Leakey family sat down in the earth of Tanganyika's Olduvai Gorge to search for man's ancestral bones, the human being has yearned to know his past, and the search goes on. In film, the view of man's predessors is relatively unflattering — from Hal Roach's "One Million B.C.," to Mel Brooks' "History of the World — Part I." Now, with the latest effort to get familiar wih our forefathers, in "Quest for Fire," French director Jean-Jacques Annaud takes a leap forward in the genre but lands in quicksand and, like his characters, is just about to go under.

The story begins 80,000 years ago with a tribe of cavemen sitting around a fire. This tribe is dressed in furs and likes its meat medium rare, so if it sounds like a Texas four-star barbecue, the comparison only gains credence when the bad guys show up to crash the party.

There is a fierce battle where grunts and groans are more important than the blows themselves, presaging an Oriental form of combat. The surviving good guys head north, to the melodramatic strains of the London Symphony in the background, carrying their most prized possession — the dying embers of fire in a makeshift lantern.

After the flame is accidentally extinguished, the head of the tribe sends three men in search of fire. Apparently no one knows how to make it — they have just been preserving the flame during their lifetime without its ever going out.

As the men trek south, they encounter saber-toothed animals and cannibals and we begin to see a connection being made between hirsuteness and lack of civilization; hairy people are bullies. The men notice the cannibals have fire as well as two people strung up like dead deer, who are being eaten piece-meal. A battle ensues and the hairless ones rescue one of the cannibal's entrees, a winsome girl who displays advanced stages of body decoration.

The four set off again with a regularity that makes modern day nomads look sedentary, but the girl balks at the obvious lack of chivalry shown her and she leaves. With civilization dawning on the horizon, the leader finds he cannot live without her and abandons his quest to find her. Find her he does, and along with this he learns how to make fire and convinces the girl he cares. She rejoins him on his trip back to his tribe, teaching him variations for his sexual repertoire along the way.

When the four arrive, there is so much rejoicing that the flames get doused during the revel, but with the girl's help the fire is rekindled.

"Quest for Fire" acknowledges the killer ape and evolution theories while suggesting that stereotyping of mankind began during the Ice Age. Most modern equivalents are present in some form in "Quest for Fire," the victimized female who chatters incessantly and uses a sense of humor to get by, the macho male whose asset is brawn, the budding intellectual leader, and the hordes of followers.

The language spoken in "Quest for Fire" was fashioned by linguist-novelist Anthony Burgess, with body gestures by anthropologist Desmond Morris ("Naked Ape"). Though everyone involved has obviously taken the project seriously, filming from Scotland to Africa (beautiful panoramas shot by French photographer Claude Agostini) and garnering actors who were hired for their ability to improvise the free-form man, the effect produces a chuckle. Is it because we cannot look at our remote past and connect the prehistoric man to ourselves? Or is the remote past not remote enough for comfort?

Whatever the answer, there is room for thought in "Quest for Fire," intermingled with the laughs, and this film comes closer than previous attempts at a slice-of-life Neanderthal style.

"Quest for Fire" is rated R and contains graphic violence, and sexuality as befits man on his way to becoming monogamous.

City Council

		What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	How would you propose to protect and improve the quality of life as our city continues to grow? (100 words)	What do you see as top priorities for Midland in the next two years? (100 words)
Mayor	G. Thane Akins	Graduated Abilene Christian University and Texas Tech in 1957 with a BA degree in Liberal Arts and BS Degree in petroleum Engineering. Employed by Atlantic Richfield in 1957 and located in Midland holding various engineering assignments. Assigned to Joint Interest Superintendent in 1975. Left ARCO in October 1981. Member Board of Directors, Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME; 4 years on City Council, 2 years as mayor.	I believe it is incumbent on all of us as individual citizens to maintain those qualities that are so impressive to newcomers and visitors. The openness, friendliness, honest dealings, hard work and conservative attitudes are all trademarks that need preserving. As Mayor, I want to encourage all of these qualities by example, by a strict code of law and order and to impress upon all of those who represent our City to do likewise. However, I reemphasize that these are primarily individual qualities and they will be protected and improved only if each of us as individual citizens maintain them.	Housing is still our number one priority and the City Council has already taken steps to encourage more affordable housing. Construction of a pipeline and disposal site for sewage effluent also has high priority and plans are being finalized for this. Work will continue on rebuilding streets, improving traffic with one-way streets and better signalization, and encouraging additional public parking in the downtown area. Other items that are critical and included in the April 3rd bond election, are new fire substations, remodeling the police building, and the expansion of City Hall and the vehicle maintenance building.
Council Place 4	Steve Davidson	As an incumbent, I have the experience and the desire to continue to serve all of the citizens of Midland. I have a broad based college education in management and finance from TCU, and I am active in my own business of oil and gas investments as well as several charitable and civic organizations in our city.	The major way the City Council can protect and maintain the good quality of life that already exists is through good planning and zoning policies. This would include good street planning and design, attention to landscaping requirements, development and maintenance of needed park sites, good public services and a responsive city government.	I see as the top priorities for Midland in the next two years as the following: 1. Maintaining sound management and fiscal policies in city government. 2. Passage of the proposed bond issue on April 3rd. 3. Expansion and improvement of Midland Regional Airport. 4. Continued attention to the development of our long term sources of water.
	R. Jimenez Salazar	B.A. in social studies and language, professional politician. But I feel nobody "qualifies" for this position, unless one speaks of perpetuating the status quo or one who is a tool of the Ruling Class. I am a poor but somewhat formally educated and very informally educated individual who represents the majority of the east side and south side.	Again, I am strongly advocating assistance, educating, and organizing of the exploited and disadvantaged classes. To double or triple the tax on the revenue of the exploiters or the wealthy and a retroactive 7 percent increase on property tax on those over $100,000 and a 10 percent decrease under $35,000.	Most institutions here, whether public or private, local or national, are controlled by Reactionaries or very conservative groups and individuals. The time has come, not only to expose these bigots and subconscious facists, but to seriously challenge the monopolistic power and control. As the local official represenatative of Barry Commoner's Citizen's Party, we have come to do just that with the help of the working class.
Council Place 5	Tom Sloan	Have served for four years on the Midland City Council, this last year as Mayor Pro Tem. Graduate of The University of Texas School of Business, and have 23 years experience as a financial advisor with Shearson/American Express, of which I am now a Senior Vice-President. This company is now an international financial institution. Worked in Midland as Boy Scout Leader and Merit Badge Counsellor. Currently on Advisory Committee of Hospice of Midland.	To protect the rights of the individual, first as to his homestead, and second, as to his business. Also to help promote orderly and sound physical and economical growth of our community.	To accommodate City functions to the phenomenal growth rate of our city, notjust with an eye to keeping pace, but in an all-out effort to move ahead of the demands.

MISD Board of Trustees

		What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What long-range policies or goals would you hope to see MISD pursue? (100 words)	What management policies would you implement to cut the teacher resignation rate and to attract and keep quality teachers? (100 words)
Place 5	Parker Humes	Dedicated to better education for every child. Leadership experience in civic, business and educational affairs including officer of School Board for the past two years. Children in public schools. Degree in communications and education.	We must continue to strive for academic excellence from kindergarten through high school. It should be a policy of the School Board to provide adequate space and facilities for a rapidly growing District through ongoing long range planning.	Our schools have been fortunate in keeping our teacher resignation rate one of Texas' lowest among major school districts — even lower than most major business employers in today's booming Midland. We are constantly working to reduce the resignation rate. Examples: as requested by over two-thirds of the teachers, the Board voted to permit our teachers to withdraw from the federal social security system. The last two years the teachers were given their biggest-ever raises (without increasing taxes last year), keeping Midland's teacher pay scale one of the two highest among major school districts in the state.
	Benton Peterson	1. 20 years experience in instruction. 2. President-elect of the West Texas Association for the Education of Young Children. 3. Member of the National Association for the Education of Young Children. 4. Former Head Start Policy Council Board member.	1. Challenging students at all levels. 2. Make MISD THE place for teachers to work. 3. Instead of making tests easier for the students, train the students to reach up for superiority.	1. Get the school board out of day to day administration and leave that to the Administrative office. 2. Place any teacher evaluation program on a "What Can We Do To Help You" basis, rather than the throwing around of bureaucratic power of "I Can Tell You What You Can and/or Cannot Do."
Place 6	Patrick Chaney	My varied background in education, industry, mangement and group decision making add up to desirable qualifications. I hold BS and Master's degrees, have taught in high school, college, and industry and am certified to be a high school principal. I am also the father of three school age children.	Generate financial support responding to population growth. Compensate educators at levels which are competitive with available options in industry. Change to a more efficient work schedule (9 months to 12). Stimulate professional growth through workshops, self-evaluation, and close supervision. Include subjects such as: discipline, problem-solving, goal setting, self-esteem, etc.	Implement tools to accurately measure teachers' effectiveness (accountability) in order to offer realistic bonuses, encouragement, support, and recognition to deserving teachers. Reward outstanding job performance with: time off to attend professional meetings, allowances for self-improvement, financial aid for educational travel.
	Joe Golding Jr.	Graduate of Texas Tech University with a B.S. Degree in Education. Businessman with broad experience and knowledge through operation of retail businesses requiring understanding of projections, budgeting, etc. Active over the years in Midland Jaycees, Downtown Lions Club, Little League Soccer and Basketball coaching, 1979 Christmas Parade Chairman. Lay Reader and High School Class Sunday School teacher in Holy Trinity Episcopal Church. Father of three young children with the oldest attending Sam Houston next year.	Maintain equality of all Midland schools with respect to enrollment, quality of teaching, materials, athletics and plant facilities. Develop and maintain a close working relationship between teachers and School Board. Keep pace with the growth of the city by providing adequte educational facilities without overbuilding. Continued re-evaluation of the Open Campus policy. Continue development of an education system tailored to the needs of all youngsters including the gifted, special and "average" student. Always attempt to recruit top quality teachers by providing the most desirable teaching environment.	Support by administration for discipline. Develop a way to conduct needed testing and evaluation with less paperwork and time required of the teachers. Less extensive and fewer re-evaluations of teachers. Maintenance of top salaries for teachers, commensurate with Midland's standard of living. Quality in-service training with more tacher input. Maintain a low student-teacher ratio. Institute a reward program showing appreciation for outstanding contributions to our educational system.
	Charleen Rosebery	Masters Degree, Memphis State; Memphis: taught English II and III; yearbook sponsor; Montgomery County, Maryland: English, seventh ninth, II, and III, including honors and vocational; student teachers' supervising teacher; Phoenix, Scottsdale, and Paradise Valley substitute; Midland: Head Start Policy Council; Board — Battered Women's Center; classroom volunteer; Bowie PTA Board; past president LWV and Elcor Wives; lector at St. Ann's; AAUW; Act IX; public relations consultant; children in public schools.	1. — strengthen basic education by striving for a learning climate of mutual respect and self-discipline between teacher and student. 2. — broaden the scope of the gifted and talented program to identify exceptionally talented students in the arts and athletics. 3. — modify vocational training to reflect changing community needs. 4. — increase cooperation among parents, teachers, and administrators in coping with students having special needs. 5. — implement flexibile scheduling. 6. — confront problems openly. 7. — provide opportunities for teachers to observe other teachers in their own buildings or on other Midland campuses. 8. — generate broad community support for public education.	1. — encourage staff commitment by providing policies that broaden teacher input in administrative decisions. 2. — reinforce quality teaching by more public recognition. 3. — provide a P.E., Music, or art teacher at the K-3 levels. 4. — relieve teachers of lunch duty. 5. — strive to reduce class size. 6. — establish criteria for in-service seminars based on innovative techniques reviewed by administrators, teacher input, and practicality. 7. — review evaluation procedures for fairness and effectiveness. 8. — study the relative mertis of providing an assistant principal or a guidance counselor at the elementary level.
	Paul Thorpe	Children in the public school system — vested interest in MISD decisions. Academics play an important feature in our family life as we have worked with teachers/principals. Goddard PTA — MHS Freshman PTA Board. Genuine concern for youth — taught in Midland/Odessa schools, coaching all sports — 16 years, Director — Senior High Department — First Baptist — 12 years. Developed a business system that is statewide and franchised. Consultant throughout the Southwest in management, motivation and sales.	To provide an environment and opportunity in which each student is motivated to develop to their fullest potential. To achieve the very finest independent school district in facilities, curriculum/programs and instruction in the basics of education. To draw upon my business background in expansion and development and work with the City Council in planning for the growth and improvement of the physical facilities of MISD. During my term in office, MISD will spend over $100,000,000, which I will make certain is spent effectively and efficiently to continue to ease the burden upon the taxpayers.	This critical problem must be solved immediately. The key is to attract and retain quality administrators, like Dr. Baressi. The solution is in working with top administrators to provide first class salaries, working conditions and facilities, making MISD the district that attracts the brightest
Place 7	Joyce Sherrod	Seventeen years experience as a public school educator; masters degree in special education; instructor at Permian Basin Graduate Center; Regional Director and instructor of Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics; three years on the school board as committee chairman for investigating and informing the board of future developments in education, facilities and teaching methods that will affect education in future years.	Expansion of the Gifted and Talented Program to include Tier II grouping in third grade; more communication with Tier I parents in K-3; full-time elementary librarian service; secretarial aides in all elementary schools over 450 enrollment; expanded use of the Waukegon Program to improve self-discipline and self-motivation; introduce computer science into the junior highs; redesign the junior high schedule to include a greater variety of electives in shorter time segments including career counseling; include career counseling as a semester course in our high schools.	Our school system can only compete with other school systems, not oil companies or banks. I feel we must continue to offer 32% above state salaries to remain in the top 1% of comparable school districts in Texas. We need to give our teachers the support and appreciation they deserve. We ask them to incorporate new programs into their schedules, individualize their instruction, communicate more with parents and the community. More time should be provided for planning and coordinating activities. I would like to see more Midland businesses offer teachers discounts and be more helpful by offering them summer employment.

Midland Hospital Board of Directors

		What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What do you see as the main issues facing Midland Hospital District? (100 words)	What improvement would you favor to control the cost of hospital care to Midland County residents? (100 words)
	Mrs. Pat Estes	Resident Midland County for 37 years. Concerned taxpayer interested in the best possible local medical facilities. I am now serving on the Midland County Hospital Board of Directors. I have the time to devote to the Midland County Hospital District. I stand on my past service to the Hospital District and to our community and will dedicate my knowledge, integrity and enthusiasm to the overall health care program.	To provide the best possible health care services at the lowest cost is my goal.	Seeing that our tax monies are spent in a responsible manner, carefully studying and monitoring services of Midland Memorial Hospital.
	W. Martin Neill	I have served one term on the Board and have become informed regarding the medical service needs of the community and the needs of the Hospital with regard to making it a more efficient operation. Also, I have served on the Midland City Council; I served on a board dealing with eight hospitals state wide. I hold a license to practice Public Accounting.	The Hospital must be ready to face the needs of the community in providing the latest treatment and services. To do so will require a great deal of planning and financial expertise. The public will be called upon to make some of these decisions but the greater number of decisions will fall upon the Board. Expansion will be the key but operational finesse will be the backbone.	Basic at this point is efficiency and good management. There are some areas of operation which need to be greatly improved and the administration is working on them. However, this is the key to every decision we must make for future expansion. Cost control of our present operation must be our first goal. We will need to follow through on programs started to accomplish this.
	Tevis Herd	Born and reared in Midland, graduated from Midland High School in 1960, University of Texas (B.A.-1964, L.L.B.-1967), practiced law in Midland since 1968, partner with Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe & Dawson since 1974. Member since 1974 of Midland Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees, (President 1979-1980). Member, Central YMCA Board of Managers 1975-1978 (President 1977-1978) Member, Board of Trustees of Permian Basin Community Centers for MH/MR 1969-1974 (President 1972-1974)	(1) Continued development of Midland Memorial Hospital as a first rate acute care general hospital, including a construction program for additional medical/surgical beds, relocation and expansion of ancillary departments within the hospital to meet the needs of Midland's expanding population. (2) Completion of a master site plan for Midland Memorial Hospital, including planning for additional land adjacent to the hospital for future expansion, parking and a physician's office building. (3) Development of plans for Midland Memorial Hospital to establish other primary care facilities in Midland. (4) Determination of need for and development of nonacute care facilities, such as intermediate care and nursing facilities.	(1) Operate Midland Memorial Hospital as a business, to reduce bad debts, the time for collecting accounts receivable, and to make the best use of funds available for equipment and improvements. (2) Development of an ongoing program of community education with respect to health care, to help Midland County resident better know how to stay healthy. (3) Promotion of "wellness" programs. (4) Emphasis on less costly alternatives to health care other than hospitalization, such as annual medical examinations, more use of outpatient (same day) surgery at Midland Memorial Hospital, development of a chemical dependency unit and other nonacute care, and therefore less expensive, facilities.

MC Board of Trustees

		What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What specific areas at Midland College do you feel need the attention of the Board? What solutions if any would you propose? (100 words)
Place 4	W. Hoyle McCright Jr.	Resident of Midland 34 years. Recently retired from First National Bank of Midland after 34 years of service with that organization. Active in community affairs — very interested in need of others. Have served on Midland College Board of Trustees since its beginning. Want to help Midland College continue to be the best community college in the state.	To continue to set policies and goals.
Place 5	W.R. "Bill" Kleine	Resident of Midland approximately 25 years, served on the college board for last two years by appointment, graduate of Missouri Valley College, Marshall, Mo., member of Missouri Valley board for approximately 15 years.	It is important that Midland College responds to the needs of Midland and the Midland area. The growth of both the college and Midland needs to be closely monitored and should proceed in an orderly fashion. New programs, such as the nursing program, must continually be sought.
Place 6	Gloria Hinojosa	I have served conscientiously for nine years as a board member of Midland College. I work as director of St. Andrews Presbyterian Mission and have taught children and adults. I hold a B.S. in education. I am a ruling elder of Trinity Presbyterian Church, member of the Mexican-American Council and MISD's GEM Advisory Committee; past board member of Human Relations Council, Planned Parenthood, Park Center Y, Midland County Library, and Presbyterian Pan-American School, Kingsville.	Midland College Board must respond to the needs for growth. Trustees must continue to represent the community and keep the college active in its primary roles in academic education, vocational and technical training and a variety of adult and continuing education programs. Board members will continue to make Midland College the finest comprehensive community college, but also will be fiscally responsible, consistent with the needs of maintaining excellent plant, good equipment and outstanding faculty.
	Hugh White	My qualifications include: three years as a Board Member/Friends of the Library; six years on the School Board/St. Ann's School; various committee chairmanships/West Texas Geological Society; 28 years as an active duty and reserve officer/U.S. Air Force; current service/Midland County Public Library Advisory Board. Degrees: B.S. in Geology/The University of Texas; M.Ed./Sul Ross State University. My 24 years in Midland have created a strong community spirit.	Rapidly expanding enrollment has placed heavy pressures on all functions of Midland College...academic, vocational and continuing education. Midland College must not only respond to these community needs, it must coordinate these accommodations with a long-term program for orderly development. Future growth of both the physical plant and the curriculum must be well planned, to preclude any deterioration of the current high standards of Midland College.

The Edna Gladney Home — shelter and help for girls in need

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Statistics show that one out of every 10 girls in the United States will become pregnant before she reaches the age of 18. In the past, the outlook for an unwed mother was grim. Today the picture for a girl in the same situation is much brighter, due largely to services like those offered by the Edna Gladney Home in Fort Worth.)

Picture a home for unwed mothers. The usual image is closed and shuttered windows, tiny dark cells for rooms, almost a prison-like atmosphere of darkness and despair.

Now picture a college-type campus with trees, flowers and swimming pools, a homey atmosphere filled with friends, freedom to come and go, and lots of sunshine. This is a picture of the Edna Gladney Home in Fort Worth, a non-profit agency.

"The focus at Gladney is always on the biological mother," said Melva Nussbaum, adoption case worker at Gladney. "Pregnancy is part of it, but they have other needs, also. This can be a useful time for them to work through other things in their lives. We provide counseling as to what is the best thing for mothers and babies."

Barbara Monk of Midland, president of the Edna Gladney Auxiliary of the Permian Basin, and an adoptive parent, said, "They want to make sure the girl leaves Gladney with the best idea of herself that she can."

"Their first concern is for that young lady — to help her as much as possible to make some decision for herself so she can leave there with as much a positive outlook as she can," said John Parrish of Andrews, prospective adoptive parent. "Their second concern is the baby. And the adoptive parents are the third concern."

"The people at Gladney don't say they are a pro-life group or advocate getting an abortion," Parrish said. "They don't try to pump the girls in any way. They always want to be sure a girl can make an informed decision."

"Staff-to-resident ratio is almost one-to-one at Gladney," he said. "They don't turn anybody down. They don't take a girl without her parents' permission, unless it is a life-threatening situation for the girl."

The home was founded in the 1890s by the Rev. I. Z. T. Morris, under the name of The Texas Children's Home and Aid Society. Incorporation came in 1904, and Edna Gladney became director after the Rev. Morris retired in 1925. The name of the home was changed in 1950 to honor Mrs. Gladney for her leadership. In 1960, Mrs. Gladney retired, and in 1963 Ruby Lee Piester became the current director.

The young women who stay at the Gladney home average between 14-18 years of age, but some are older and some are younger. "The last time we were on campus, the youngest girl was 11 and the oldest was 30," said Parrish.

"People don't want to think about it, but it happens at 11 and 12," said Paula Parrish, prospective adoptive parent.

According to Parrish, young women of school age are "required to continue their educations, and they do assigned jobs at the home, such as filing. At Gladney, they try to teach additional skills to the girls — they all have something they are involved with — so that a girl has a plan for herself when she leaves there, so she can make something of herself."

"We are sincerely interested in the welfare of the girls, and in helping them plan for their futures," said Ms. Nussbaum.

Because of new methods of birth control and the legalization of abortions, the numbers of babies available for adoption has decreased in the past few years, making the process of adopting a baby more difficult and more time consuming. From start to finish, the process can take as long as two years or more.

"We get around 4,000 requests each year from people who want to adopt," Ms. Nussbaum said, "and we can only place 350-400 babies. You can see why it takes so long."

Providing for the mothers-to-be is "pretty much on a case-by-case basis," said Ms. Nussbaum. "Some girls stay in their home communities. We try to see what would be the most benefit to a specific girl. One thing about being a private agency is you can change your program."

Duncan Memorial Hospital, on the campus of the Gladney home, is a fully accredited hospital with a 24-hour nursing staff, which provides service only for the girls from the home.

Although about 95 percent of the girls at Gladney give up their babies for adoption, they are not pressured to do so. The decision is made when the baby is about three days old and the mother has recovered to a large extent from childbirth. "The girls can't sign any papers (giving the baby up) until after their babies are born, so there is no piece of paper they are tied to," Ms. Nussbaum said. "And a girl cannot place a child up for adoption against the father's wishes."

Babies born at Gladney are provided with any medical care they need. If they are to be adopted, Gladney pays for their care and provides their adoptive families with as comprehensive a medical history of the babies and their biological families as is possible.

To adopt a baby from the Edna Gladney home, a couple must both be between the ages of 24-39, must have been married at least three years, and must have a medical reason why they can't have biological children. And they must live in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana or Arkansas. "The biological mother has a say in what type of parents she wants her baby to have," said Ms. Nussbaum.

"We don't adopt for single parents, mainly because there are so many couples who want to adopt," she said. "A lot of times the main term of the adoption is the biological mother wants her baby to have a stable home life with both a mother and a father."

"We work with a wide variety of people, from all occupations. Our main concern is that they have a stable marriage and can provide for the child," Ms. Nussbaum said.

The babies and their prospective parents are very carefully matched, to provide the right baby for the right parents.

Biological families and adoptive families never know the identity of each other. General information concerning the families is exchanged, but never names. And babies are never adopted by couples who live in the same general geographical location as the biological families, said Robert Monk, adoptive parent.

"The girls are placing their children up for adoption and there should be a breaking of ties," said Ms. Nussbaum, "but sometimes a girl will want to know if her baby is okay, usually on the baby's birthday. In that situation, we won't give her specific information, but we'll talk to her and let her know the baby is all right."

"Some people who adopt children tell them their mother abandoned them," said Parrish. "That is NOT the way Gladney operates. A Gladney baby grows up knowing his mother cared very, very much for him or her, and made the most loving decision she could to give him up."

"We encourage the adoptive parents to bring the children back to see where they were born," said Ms. Nussbaum. "One of our requirements is that they tell the baby he or she is adopted."

As a non-profit organization, the Edna Gladney Home must rely on donations to obtain the funds needed to stay in operation. Some of these funds come from fees paid by adoptive parents, but those fees usually amount to less than half of the cost of the biological mother's residency and care in the home. Some of the cost is paid by insurance. And the residents of Gladney pay, each according to her ability. "A lot of companies contribute money each year because they consider Gladney a good cause," Ms. Nussbaum said.

The home is also supported by approximately 15 auxiliaries in several different areas, made up largely of adoptive or prospective adoptive parents and grandparents, but anyone who is interested in helping the Gladney home is welcome to join an auxiliary.

"There is no state or federal aid given to the home at all," said Parrish.

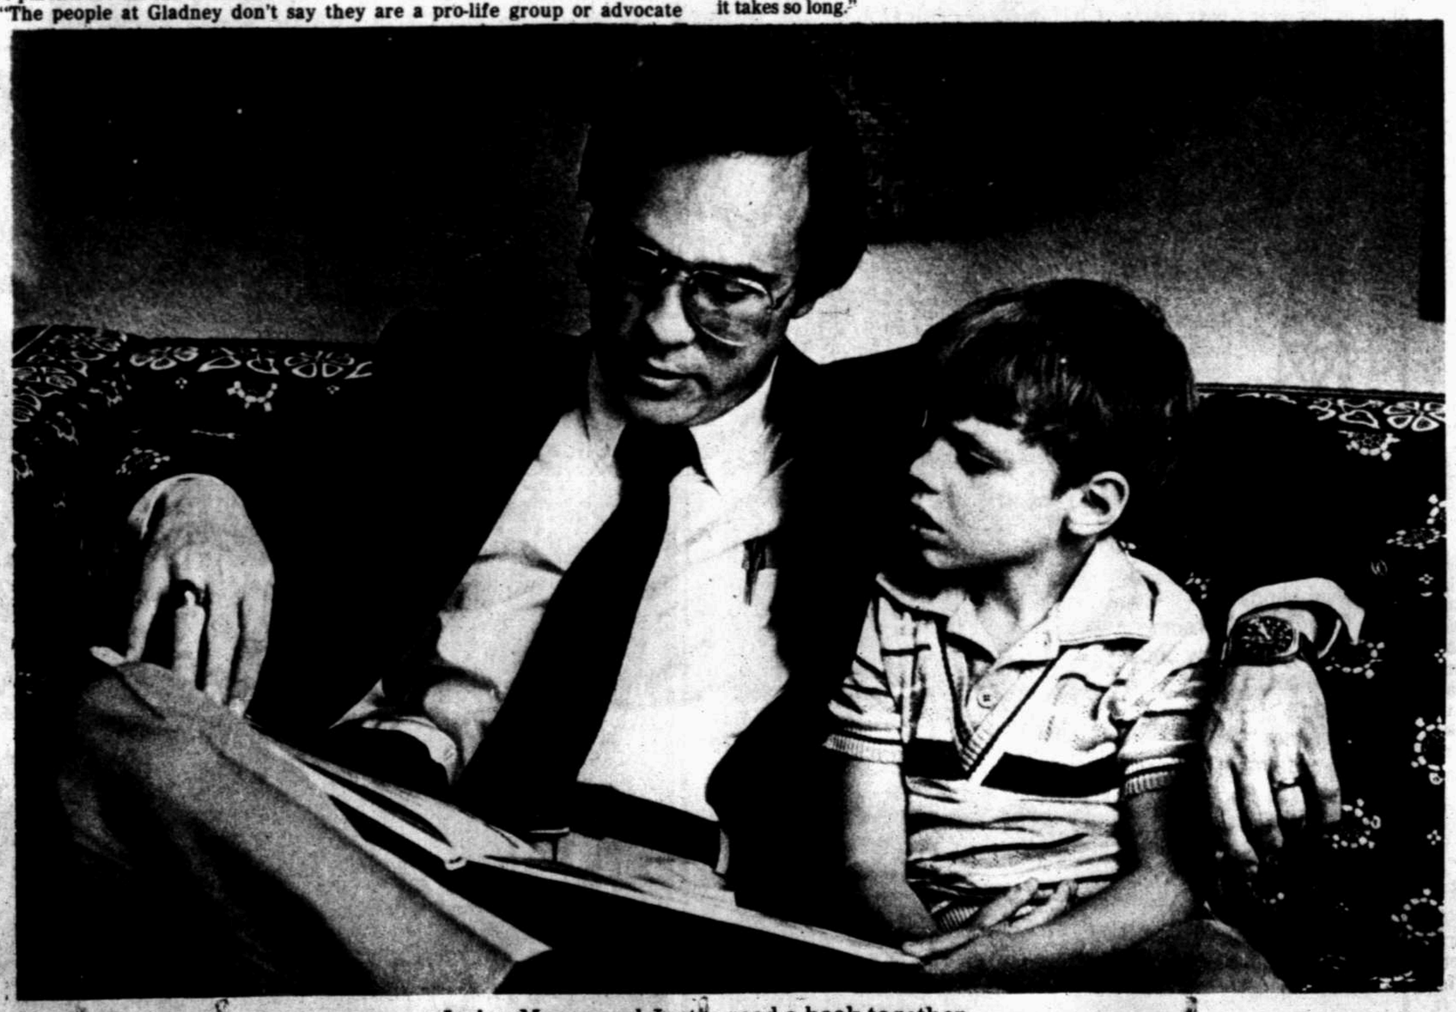

"They can't take funds from the United Fund because then they could adopt children only in Fort Worth," Mrs. Parrish said.

The goal of the Permian Basin Auxiliary is "to contact as many people as possible to be aware of the Gladney home and how to get in contact with it," said Parrish. "I want to support the home and raise money for it, but I'd like as many people as possible to know of the home and help pregnant girls make responsible decisions."

"The work they do there for children and mothers is incredible," he added.

"If anyone makes it down to the campus in Fort Worth, they come away very impressed with what they do," said Monk. "Now that I've seen all the things that are done there for the girls and the babies, I'm glad we went to Edna Gladney."

The Edna Gladney Auxiliary of the Permian Basin has films available for viewing by any interested groups or organizations. Members of the auxiliary can answer questions concerning the Edna Gladney Home or the Edna Gladney Auxiliary of the Permian Basin. Sesame singalong

NEW YORK (AP) — The sounds of Sesame Street, no matter what the musical style, continue their popularity in the children's record field.

The award to "Sesame Country," a Nashville-sound album featuring some of the educational TV show's well-known Muppets singing with a quartet of country-western stars, has been elected the "best recording for children" in 1981, by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences. The award marks the sixth such Grammy earned by the company since its inception in 1970.

The newest winner features guest appearances by Glen Campbell, Crystal Gayle, Loretta Lynn and Tanya Tucker, performing with Big Bird, Oscar the Grouch, Cookie Monster, Grover, and Ernie and Bert.

Rare earths

Rare earths are metal elements that have a multitude of uses. They help treat certain illnesses, refine crude oil into gasoline, polish precision lenses, help strengthen steel, and color stained glass windows and ceramics. Zirconium is useful in everything from nuclear reactors to surgical instruments because of its corrosion resistance. Niobium adds toughness and flexibility to stainless steel and is used in making rockets.

Calling in sick

The average employee calls in sick about 3½ days a year. The main reason: respiratory ailments, such as colds. The second most frequent reason is injuries.

DEAR ABBY

Reader disagrees with Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You were off base in your response to "Lutheran Mother of Four Daughters" who wrote in support of the pastor who refused to allow an obviously pregnant bride to have "I'm Having His Baby" sung at her wedding.

Your answer: "A pregnant bride is also enfitled to a church wedding with a 'soloist, fanfare, etc.' if that's what she wants. It is not the pastor's function to judge her. That's the Lord's job."

That answer might have been all right if you had preceded it with: "In my opinion." As it stands, it is dead wrong — at least in Lutheran practice.

Lutherans consider a church wedding a religious service and have strict rules as to how it is to be conducted. No secular music is allowed. There are rules on the types of floral arrangements. A specific liturgy must be followed; bride and groom may not prescribe their own rites, etc.

The Lutheran pastor is charged with seeing that these rules are carried out and may refuse a church wedding to those who insist on deviating from them. He may, in fact, refuse to marry a couple if he feels they are not entering the marriage in a right relationship. On the other hand, he may perform a secular marriage for the couple at another location if they choose not to abide with the church wedding rules.

So you see, a bride (pregnant or not) is not necessarily entitled to a church wedding with a soloist, fanfare, etc., if that's what she wants — at least not in a Lutheran church. I think you owe your readers a correction. — AN OHIO LUTHERAN

DEAR LUTHERAN: I do, and you provided the evidence, for which I thank you. I stand corrected.

DEAR ABBY: I sit home about two nights a week while my wife goes out to play tennis with her friends. Abby, there is no way I could ever be interested in that sport. I tell her she has no right to leave me alone, but she says she has her own life to live and I should find something of interest to do myself while she's playing tennis.

This argument is shaking our marriage. Who is right? — UNHAPPY

DEAR UNHAPPY: She is. Even though you are not a tennis player, the ball is in your court!

DEAR ABBY: All those letters in your column about "the missing silverware" apparently caused a twinge of conscience in one of our past dinner guests.

My husband and I just received a package containing the clipping of your column plus a knife, fork and spoon!

But here's the kicker: It wasn't our pattern! — STILL LAUGHING IN ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: To the "Light-Fingered Transvestite" who stole women's undies rather than be embarrassed by buying them: Tell him to simply pick out what he wants and ask the saleslady to have them gift-wrapped. The saleslady will then envy the lucky lady who's to receive the gift rather than suspect the gentleman of cross-dressing. — BUYS A LOT OF GIFTS IN WICHITA

CONFIDENTIAL TO HURTING: Give your grief a chance to express itself. Cry your eyes out. Let yourself go and let the tears flow. It's healthy. Don't try to put on a "brave" show. It takes honesty, courage, strength and real manliness for a man to express his emotions. The weak man hides.

(If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters For All Occasions." Send $2 plus a long, stamped (37 cents) self-addressed envelope to ABBY, Letters Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Kids beat jitters in stress course

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — If Scott comes home and finds his family bickering, the house a mess and a pile of work on his desk, he might shut his bedroom door, lie down and breathe through his feet. At the age of 13, he knows how to fight stress.

It's a trick he learned in his eighth grade class: with a bit of creativity, he can imagine there are teeny holes in his feet. When he gets antsy, he slumps down, inhales deeply from the floor and sucks cool air into his lungs.

The next thing he knows, the jitters are gone.

Granted, it's not the stuff of grammar school textbooks or hygiene lectures. But recently, it was an important part of the school day at Lincoln Junior High in Skokie, which offered an experimental class in stress management.

In the class, Scott and his adolescent pals, who school officials asked not be identified by their real names, learned that stress is not for adults only, says Antoinette Saunders, a psychologist who devised the eight-week experimental course and acted as teacher.

"People don't think about kids having problems," she said. "We think of them as carefree and playful."

But children suffer from queasy stomachs and throbbing head pains just like harried executives, Ms. Saunders says. And they worry, too.

"We have children with ulcers, backaches and migraine headaches," she added. "All of the things you see in adults, you see in a child."

And nowadays, "It's an incredibly stressful time for kids," Ms. Saunders adds. "There's a lot of competition. There's drugs. Pressures around sexual intimacy. Most kids by the definition of being a kid can't handle it."

The eighth graders gathered each week and sat in a circle, learning how to relax with exercises. There was deep breathing and muscle relaxing. And the children learned that when they have stomach pains or a headache, they should regard the signs as an alarm.

"It's our body giving ourselves a message," Ms. Saunders says. And if it's ignored, there's trouble ahead.

There also was role-playing, with improvisations of real-life troubles, such as sibling battles or confrontations with mom or dad.

Most of all, the kids talked about what stress means at the age of 12 or 13.

"There's divorce and school work," Scott said. "And worries if you're kicked out of school. And there's drugs. Maybe someone's father is an alcoholic."

His classmate Ian adds: "There's pressures from friends to do stuff and (worry if) you're not going to be accepted."

And even though many of the children are not yet even in their teens, they're worried about the future.

David says he worries because, "If you don't get good grades, you can't get in a good college."

There are parental pressures, too. "Your parents want you to do things," says Laurie, another student. "They want you to be a nurse. And you don't want to be."

Relationships with parents often creates stress even if a child isn't involved, says Laurie Bankroff, a teacher whose class was chosen for the first experimental stress class. She and other teachers will receive between 21 and 30 hours of training so they can teach subsequent stress management classes.

"They are so affected by the problems at home," Mrs. Bankroff said. "If there's an argument between mom and day they feel it."

In the class, the children discussed nutrition and how to avoid being a victim of stress.

Children, Ms. Saunders said, "need to take charge of their lives, not to be victims in this world. Children don't have a lot of options. But they do have the option of changing some of their behavior."

And at least one child believed that coping with stress certainly has some broader implications.

In a mini-essay written by Tony, one of Ms. Saunder's students, the young boy heartily endorsed the course. "Coping with stress should be taught not only to adults but to children as well. People get killed every year because they can't control it."

Information tech good career field

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Information technology will create millions of new jobs in the 1980s, according to a corporate strategic planner.

"Not only are there extreme labor shortages in jobs related to information technology — but the business depends to a large extent on minds, not factories, so information workers will be well paid," says Paul A. Strassmann, vice president, Xerox Corp.'s Information Products Group.

The jobs emanating from high technology are vast, Strassmann explains. They include electrical engineering, programming, systems analysis, training, counseling, marketing, clerical, service and management.

He says almost all of the new jobs will be directly based on or influenced by new technologies such as computers, microcomputers and word processors.

Strassmann says the faster job category growth will be among professionals and technical workers with 5 million new jobs by 1990, followed by secretaries and clericals with 4 million new jobs. The business area that will see the greatest growth is health and business services with 4 million new jobs in the next eight years, he predicts.

"But, to pursue even the least technical of these careers," Strassmann says, "people need certain fundamentals. First, they need quantitative skills — a strong science and math background.

"Second, they need functional skills — the use of microprocessors, text editors and the like.

"Finally, they need an understanding of high technology — mini-computers, magnetic discs, electronic typewriters, optical scanning devices. People need to know how the devices work individually and together and how they are beginning to impact the way we work and live."

More medical degrees given for 'advanced age' students

Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — More doctors are taking their medical degrees at "advanced" ages.

Barbara Ostanek will be 35 years old and about $100,000 in debt by the time she becomes a doctor. John Prairie, with a wife and two kids, will be close to 40 and roughly $50,000 in debt.

Both students, at Albany Medical College, are among a growing nationwide group that enters medical school at ages when most prospective doctors are practicing. Last year, students 28 years of age and older accounted for 14 percent of the nation's medical students - up more than 10 percent from five years ago, according to the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC). The most prevalent age for starting medical school has held steady at between 21 and 23.

AAMC spokesman Charles Fentress speculates that there are probably both advantages and disadvantages in starting late.

"Usually, older students are disadvantaged in being out of school so long; they're rusty on the medical school admissions test. And they may have family responsiblities and more distractions than younger students."

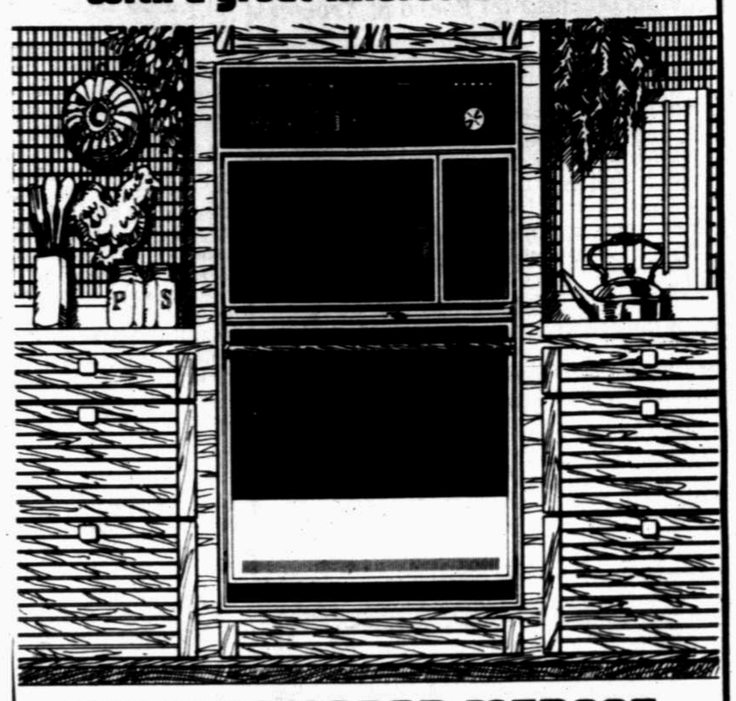

On the positive side, Fentress theorizes that "they have had more time to know more clearly what they want to do. They've looked at other professions and chosen medicine."

Medical consultant Dr. Timothy Johnson of television's "Good Morning America" is one of the best-known older students.

New tax law can work for you

By DONALD S. STROETZEL
(Special from Reader's Digest)

After all the fanfare over the "biggest tax cut in history," many Americans expected early relief, not realizing that most of the benefits won't come until the 1982 and 1983 tax years. "I saved exactly $43.71 over the old rates," snorts a $25,000-a-year St. Louis foreman. "Maybe somebody's making out, but it isn't me!"

Who then? The smart minority who "plan" their taxes. Maybe you noticed that some doctors and tradesmen dallied until January to bill you for services performed as early as last November. It was not oversight or charity. Had they received that income before 1982, it would have rated only a 1.25-percent tax reduction (the 5-percent cut for the fourth quarter spread over the year).

By postponing income, they will benefit from the 10-percent cut in 1982 (5 percent averaged with the additional 10 percent that is effective July 1). Why can't moderate-income taxpayers use such tax-saving techniques? They can — and they are legal.

Consider what a working couple with two small children and a combined taxable income of $40,000 might pocket by taking advantage of the new tax law. Instead of $9309, their tax payment for 1981, their 1982 taxes could be just $6297; their 1983 taxes, only $5304.

Part of these reductions everyone will reap as the rates drop. The rest will come from three provisions: reduction in the "marriage tax penalty" (which socked marrieds for more than they would have paid as two singles); improved credits for child care; up to $4000 in deductions when a working couple both open Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs). But start now. If you wait until tax time next year, it will be too late. Here are some pointers:

Postpone income and maximize deductions. Having year-end income delayed until 1983 will give it nine percentage points more in tax cuts than you'll get in '82. Postponing income may not be feasible if you're on a fixed salary, but salaried people will come out ahead if they prepay deductible 1983 expenses in Dec. '82, to reduce taxable income.

It's often possible to prepay real-estate taxes due in January, as well as state and local income taxes. Consider prepaying your '83 contributions to church and charities. If you're close to having enough medical deductions this fall to equal 3 percent of gross income, get any expensive bridgework or optional surgery done before year's end. Insist on a bill by December so you, not the doctor or dentist, get the tax break.

Open Individual Retirement Accounts. Almost anyone can now open an IRA. Not only can you deduct up to $2000 you put into your account ($2250 if you have a non-working spouse), but you pay no taxes on your IRA contributions and earnings until retirement (when your tax rate should be lower).

Where will you get cash to prepay deductions and to shelter income in IRAs? Salaried employees can ask employers to withhold less from their paychecks each month. Put that extra take-home pay into a savings account where it will gain interest and be there in December for your tax-reduction investments.

Child care. Working couples with children or other qualified dependents can benefit from an increase in tax credits for sitters, day-care centers, etc. The credit is greatest for wage earners with two or more dependents and an income of $10,000 or less a year.

House sale. People 55 or older can make as much as $125,000 profit on the sale of a principal residence without having to pay tax on the gain. Anyone selling a principal residence will benefit from the two-year grace period in which to invest the proceeds in another, higher-priced principal residence without subjecting the gain to tax. While house hunting, consider putting part of the cash into one-year All-Savers Certificates and enjoy up to $2000 (for a couple) in tax-free interest.

Gifts and inheritance. You can give as many gifts (up to $10,000 each) to as many people as you desire, without incurring taxes. An estate can go to a surviving spouse without federal estate-tax charges. Even when the estate is passed on to your children or others, it will be taxed only if it exceeds $225,000, a maximum that rises to $275,000 in 1983 and progressively to $600,000 by 1987.

If you are convinced now that tax planning is important, you'll have the satisfaction come April 15, 1983, of having helped the economy by helping yourself.

AT WIT'S END

Time of reckoning is six and a half years

By ERMA BOMBECK

I read the other day that the average marriage that ends in divorce is over at six and a half years.

Why? Why is six and a half years the end of the line for I-said-I-do-but-I-didn't, and I-said-I-will, but-I-won't?

There isn't anything mystical about it. Born in all of us is a level of tolerance. The marital warranty is set to expire at 78 months. At the end of this time the bride will have cooked 5,408 meals. It's as good or as bad as it's going to get. The decision is yours.

At the end of 78 months, you will have met all of his/her relatives . . . away from the church. The father-in-law who eats like a Cro-Magnon at the table, a brother who sponges, and a mother-in-law who will call your husband "Baby" when his gut hangs over his belt buckle and his hairline looks like the state of Florida.

At the end of six and a half years, the pretenses go. Company manners are put aside. Courtesies are no longer a consideration. His feet have started to smell. She leaves toothpaste on the bowl. He cleans his fingernails at the table. She doesn't just blow her nose. She flushes it!

At six and a half years, the trousseau is faded and raggy. The see-through nightgown is worn with underwear and wool socks. The wedding proofs have faded on command from the photographer who didn't want you to get anything for nothing.

There is a child who has taken over your whole life with his demands, and must be watered, fed, educated, clothed, maintained and disciplined.

Anniversaries become just another day or worse. When you ask, "Do you know what day it is?" you hear, "I told you I put the garbage at the curb last night before I went to bed."

Affection at 78 months becomes a notation on your calendar of "THINGS TO DO TODAY" and the goodbye kiss in the morning has all the fervor of giving mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to a dead parakeet.

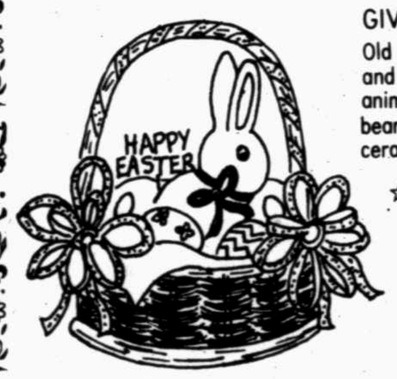

At the end of six and a half years, you are both yourselves. And if that's what you thought you married, you're probably good for another 30 or 40 years.

Polyester suffering from a bad image

By SHERYL FITZGERALD
Los Angles Times - Washington Post News Service

Polyester.
Polyester?
Polyester!
There was a movie named after it.
In some circles, everybody knows at least three jokes about it.
And some wags say that, like deer and moose, it should be made available — in season — to hunters.

Nobody can prove that any of this has given polyester its poor image. But, after all those mint-green, elasticized-waist pant suits, polyester does have a reputation for being tacky and cheap, a serious public relations problem many people believe it does not always deserve.

In fact, although polyester still has a long way to go before it ever becomes a staple in the world of haute couture, a few designers are beginning to recognize its advantages. "I do use it because I love its silky looks, especially in the crepe de chine and in the blends," said designer Albert Capraro. "I use it in organza and taffeta."

Despite the wincing of elitists, life on Spaceship Earth would not be as easy without polyester, said Adly Gorrafa of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. Statistics compiled by the Textile Economics Bureau estimate that it is the fabric of choice for more than 80 percent of the American population, with more than 9,665 million pounds of polyester produced annually, compared with 3,000 million pounds of cotton and 126 million pounds of wool.

AND, IF POLYESTER should suddenly disappear, Goraffa said, and all the clothing now made of it had to be replaced with 100 percent cotton garments, it would take all the wheat-growing land in the states of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois and Iowa, to name just a few, to grow an adequate crop.

Polyester fiber was first developed in 1953 at Du Pont's laboratories. Although it is the most-used man-made fiber in America today, it wasn't the first to appear. That honor goes to rayon, a cellulose-based fiber developed in 1910 by American Viscose Co.

Now there are about 21 general categories of man-made fibers, ranging from spandex, triacetate and nylon — names we all know and love — to things like Nytril, Aramid and Novoloid that we have rarely ever heard about. Their end results vary from protective clothing and industrial fabrics made of Aramid to shoes, bathing suits and ribbons made of Lurex.

When researching polyester, the first thing you learn is that people who work with it start to chew up conference tables when it's referred to as "synthetic." They prefer to call it a man-made fiber, as opposed to, for instance, cotton, which is made by nature. Nor is polyester the same fiber as nylon, rayon, acetate or acrylic. Each of these fibers is made from a different formula and has its own set of advantages and disadvatages.

The second lesson is that there is only one polyester. All those polyester fabrics in your department store start out basically the same: as a manufactured fiber in which the fiber-forming substance is a long-chain polymer at least 85 percent of which is an ester — aromatic carboxylic acid — and other organic chemicals.

Among polyester producers are Du Pont (Dacron), Celanese (Fortrel), Hoechst Fibers Inc., (Trevira, a star-shaped polyester fiber), Eastman Kodak (Kodel), and American Enka (Encron).

UNDER A MICROSCOPE, the original polyester fiber was round and had little dark spots inside it. The roundness, said Gorrafa, who works for Du Pont's textile research laboratory, was the reason the first polyester fabrics were so shiny. Now, most polyesters are octagonal or tri-lobular in shape, causing light to refract differently.

Right out of the vat, polyester is in a form called a continuous filament. This is a super-long, very thin string of fiber that is formed after the required chemicals are blended to form a polymer. The polymer is spun through a spinneret — a device that looks much like a showerhead. Hundreds of these fibers (the size of the holes in the spinneret determine the fineness — or denier — of a fiber) can be put together to make a multifilament yarn, or they can be chopped up into various lengths. Cut up, polyesters are called staple fibers.

After the filaments are made, polyester is textured so that it looks pretty and feels like something that you're familiar with. Then it becomes a 100 percent polyester yarn or is blended with other fibers such as cotton, wool or silk or, in some instances, other man-made fibers. Once the yarn is spun, it is woven or knitted into fabric.

There are three basic ways to weave a fabric — plain, twill and satin — and all the fabrics that we use are variations on these basic patterns. In a plain weave, multiple yarns running in one direction (filling) go over and under alternating single yarns that go in the other direction (warp). This makes a heavy, dense fabric like taffeta, chambray, seersucker or poplin.

In twill weaving, yarns that run in the filling direction go over one or more warp yarns and under other groups of yarns, producing what look like diagonal lines in the fabric. Such weaves — serge, foulards, tweeds, gabardine and flannel — are durable and firm with the ability to hold creases.

The satin weaving process is a modification of the twill weave, in which wider spacing leaves no diagnoal lines visible on the face of the cloth. This makes the cloth smooth, shiny and luxurious in appearance.

Thus, said Jerry Pawlak, of Burlington Industries, fabric definitions like poplin, twill, gabardine or tweed refer to weaving techniques, not fiber content and can all be achieved with polyester fibers.

Some of the drawbacks attributed to polyester begin to appear in the fabric-making process, said John E. Berkowitch, a research associate at Du Pont. People complain that polyester doesn't breathe, he said, but breathability is as much a function of weave as of fabric. Tightly woven fabrics like poplin or gabardine don't breathe as well as looser weaves or knitted fabrics, he said.

Cotton, he said, acts like a wick with perspiration. It soaks it up quickly and thoroughly. But, he said, once cotton fibers have absorbed their limit, they will not get rid of the moisture quickly. They just stay wet. Polyester, on the other hand, while less absorbent than cotton, rids itself of moisture much quicker. This is part of the reason a polyester fabric needs less time in the dryer.

BUT, SAID ARTHUR PRICE, professor of textile science at the Fashion Institute of Technology, polyester only works when the humidity is low.

Another drawback of polyester fabrics, said Price, is that although labels may say that they're permanently stain- and soil-resistant, they really are not. Resins are put onto the surface of the fabrics to achieve these benefits, and, like starch, they will wash away. Thus, after about 20 washings, you'll find that your polyester garments are not shedding certain greasy stains as well as they did when they were new. One way to minimize this is to wash older polyester garments before stains have a chance to set.

If 100 percent polyester is beyond the pale to some folks, polyester blends are finding a comfortable home in the marketplace. Blends of polyester and cotton are used in men's shirts and women's blouses and the new craze for sweatsuit dressing thrives on fabrics knit of polyester and cotton.

Blending retains the best features of a natural fiber — like breathability — Berkowitch said, while taking on the more desirable characteristics of polyester — easy care. But again, said Price, you win some and lose some. In a blended fabric, the natural component will wear out, but the man-made part never will. Also, the natural part needs treatments to make it match up with the polyester. Hence, the term "permanent press." What this means, said Berkowitch, is that the cotton in cotton-and-polyester blends has been treated with a chemical that gives it the same memory, or ability to retain its shape, that polyester is born with. This surface memory washes out.

Scotlander first known embalmer

The modern method of embalming, by arterial injuection, is attributed to Scottish anatomist William Hunter, who in 1775 injected camphorated spirits of wine and oil of turpentine into the arteries of Mrs. Martin Van Butchell.

Her will stipulated that her husband could use her fortune only as long as her body remained above ground. For years, he kept it in his living room — in a glass-topped coffin.

According to a recent survey, teen girls are now wearing their hair longer.

Serious health risks posed in high-altitude jetliners

By JOSEPH CAREY
Hearst Feature Service

When a 60-year-old woman, fully recovered from a mild stroke, told her doctors that she planned to vacation in the Swiss Alps, she received a firm order: Absolutely not.

The reason: Thinner air in the mountains and changes in air pressure in high-altitude commercial jetliners posed a serious health risk to her.

She cancelled when her doctors told her that those who have heart or lung problems have even greater difficulty dissolving oxygen in their blood as it passes through the lungs at high elevations.

Although pilots have to make emergency landings because of very sick passengers only once in every 10,000 flights, and the death rate aboard planes is about one per 6.4 million flights, non-fatal medical emergencies during flight probably number in the thousands each year.

They are caused by the changes in air pressure in the plane's cabin as it rises above 22,500 feet and then descends. Most modern jetliners cruise at heights from about 28,000 to 43,000 feet.

Pressurization equipment can keep the cabin air at sea-level pressure only up to 22,500 feet. Above that, cabin pressure drops. When the plane reaches 35,000 feet, cabin pressure is the equivalent of 5,500 feet above sea-level. At 40,000 feet, cabin pressure reaches the equivalent of 7,500 feet.

Those with chronic heart, lung and other disorders can't handle pressure and air changes. Thus, the American Medical Association's commission on emergency medical services last month included people who are courting trouble in the air.

"Patients with cardiovascular or pulmonary problems. . . should have supplemental oxygen at all times during flight at levels above 25,000 feet," the commission said.

"Cardiovascular or pulmonary problems" includes people with cystic fibrosis, chronic emphysema, congenital heart defects that hinder oxygen absorption, chronic asthma and conditions in which coronary arteries cannot supply enough oxygen to the heart muscle.

The commission pointed out that all airlines carry emergency oxygen. Most will have a special supply on hand for a passenger, given 48 hours notice.

People with clogged nasal passages and sinuses from colds and allergies may develop an earache, accompanied by decreased hearing and a ringing sound. As the plane descends and cabin pressure rises, air should re-enter the head to equalize pressure. But if the Eustachian tube, which regulates pressure, becomes congested, the pressure in the middle ear will remain lower than the surrounding air pressure. This can immobilize the tympanic membrane of the ear, causing symptoms.

This is why the commission advises people with upper respiratory tract disease not to fly. If you must fly, you should take nasal sprays or nose drops an hour before you land.

A less common problem is the expansion of trapped gas in body cavities. Gas trapped in a defective dental filling can cause toothache as the plane climbs, the commission said. And "expansion of a pocket of gas in the (small intestine) may cause mild to severe discomfort or nausea and vomiting."

Dehydration due to low humidity of the cabin air may pose a problem for young children, who have a relatively greater body water content than adults.

"Infants should be given water in frequent small amounts throughout the flight," the commission suggested. "If fed during descent, the sucking and swallowing mechanism may be helpful in ventilating the middle ear."

The commission also warned vacationers who have been scuba-diving not to board a commercial aircraft for at least 12 hours after the last dive.

Scuba diving forces in "considerable nitrogen into the body fat tissues. Liberation. . .is satisfactory at sea-level, but at relatively low cabin altitudes (it may not be)," said the commission. The result could be nitrogen bubbles in the blood, causing rashes, tingling of the skin, pains in the joints and lung and inflamed nerves.

Are there people who shouldn't fly — ever? Yes, said the commission. They include:

Those who have had a heart attack within the previous four weeks or a stroke in the previous two weeks; people with severe high blood pressure, surgical wiring of the jaw (especially in the event that motion sickness causes vomiting), uncontrollable epilepsy, severe anemia, sickle cell disease or hemophilia, and pregnancy beyond 240 days or threatened miscarriage.

Jogger's feet receive jolts

Every time a jogger's running shoes strike the ground, 26 bones, about 20 muscles and more than 100 ligaments in each foot are jolted. Running puts the foot under pressure equal to about three times body weight.

Survey shows students think more discipline could curb school violence

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Old-fashioned school discipline is the way to curb school violence, a survey of more than 12,000 junior and senior high-school students indicates.

In the poll of subscribers to the national school publication, Read Magazine, 80 percent of the students said violence could be curbed with discipline. Eighty-seven percent said they would appreciate "a lot of" or "some" discipline, says editor-in-chief Dr. Terry Borton.

The magazine, published by Xerox Education Publications for half a million junior-high and high-school students in reading and English classes, runs student opinion polls on a regular basis.

"What surprises us about the discipline survey," says Borton, "is both the large response — twice the normal — and the overwhelming support for school discipline."

As one student from Beaver, Pa., put it: "Principals and teachers let kids break rules. They say 'well, just this once we'll let it go.' But, every time they let a kid get away with something, they make the situation worse for themselves, for the troublemaker and for the kids who want to learn something."

The discipline survey was conducted in conjunction with a Read Magazine article that cited several causes as the root of vandalism and the lack of discipline in today's schools:

—Violence in society is on the increase.

—Large impersonal schools, which make students feel like "nobodies."

—High divorce rates, resulting in kids who feel no one cares.

—Boredom; students, used to the quick stimulation of television, become bored with school.

—Lack of discipline; many think school control is now in the hands of parents and students instead of principals and teachers.

Borton said the students wrote about all problems, but comments on the last — lack of school discipline — far outnumbered the others.

"Kids are disruptive to prove they are someone," wrote a boy from Lowell, Mass. "They need to show they can survive in the world."

A boy from Boontown, N.J., said: "I think parental negligence — and lack of parental discipline — is at the root of it."

From Gillet, Wis., a girl wrote: "I think problems are caused by boredom. Kids have nothing to do, but they want action, so they vandalize."

From Marquette, Mich., another girl suggested: "Teachers just don't know how to handle troublemakers. They've got to take strong action against these kids."

A Grand Blanc, Mich., boy explained: "The teachers are afraid of the students, so they don't discipline. The kids know it and think they can get away with anything — merely by threatening the teacher."

The students have a number of suggestions for solving the problem.

"Hire teachers who are strong enough to handle bigger kids," advised a girl from Grand Blanc, Mich. "Then use a lot of discipline."

A Rio Hondo, Texas youth urged: "Get the principal to tell the kids 'this is the rule and if you don't abide by it, you will get a punishment to suit your crime.'"

From Macungie, Pa., a girl wrote: "Be strict and involve the kids more in activities at school."

A girl from Lowell, Mass., recommended: "Talk with students and parents and try to solve some of the problems students have."

From Covina, Calif., a girl wrote: "You should solve the problem first at home — then at school."

In general, Borton says, the students seem to support old-fashioned school — and home — discipline.

Breast-feeding a 'political' issue

By JOANN RODGERS
Science Correspondent, Hearst Feature Service

The Nestle Company's agreement to curb its profitable promotion of bottle feeding among Third World mothers may be, in the end, an empty gesture.

A case in point emerged from a recent visit to a decidedly Third World country, Peru.

Sales of bottled infant formulas as a substitute for breast feeding are limited in the Andean regions of the nation. (Sample-toting company reps understandably prefer sea level habitats to high sierra.) Health officials, moreover, insist that Nestle, Mead-Johnson, Ross Laboratories and other makers of infant formula, maintain a low and responsible profile wherever they go.

In fact, there are no billboards blaring the advantages of bottle feeding; there is no obvious disregard of the World Health Organization code forbidding saleswomen in nurse-whites pushing expensive formulas to impoverished, illiterate mothers.

Critics of Nestle marketing practices abroad charge that a million babies die each year from diarrhea, under-nutrition and other problems linked to bottle feeding. But while scientists estimate that half of all children under five in Peru have moderate to severe forms of malnutrition, Peruvians deny that widespread infant deaths occur because mothers dilute the expensive formulas with contaminated water.

In Lima, however, the bustling coastal capital of 5 million, the bottle brigades are winning anyway. They get their converts by default, and the reason is that breast feeding is actively discouraged among social and medical leaders.

"It's unbelievable" says Dr. Kenneth Brown, a pediatrician from Johns Hopkins University conducting research at Lima's Institute for Nutritional Investigation.

"Everyone here seems to interfere one way or another with breast feeding. Women from the barriadas (slums) are finally convinced that childbirth is safer in the hospital, but once there, the nurses and doctors separate them from their infants and make breast feeding difficult at best."

Brown noted that because maternity hospitals are often run by political parties and staffed by medical personnel trained in highly politicized medical schools, breast feeding had become a partisan issue.

There were even indications that Dr. Julio Garcia, the minister of health, was pressured out of office because he favored policies to actively encourage breast feeding.

In the U.S., the association of social and economic status with infant feeding practices has been turned around.

Scientific hair analysis arrives at OC

ODESSA — Scientific hair analysis has arrived in the Permian Basin and is now available at Odessa College.

OC's cosmetology department is now teaching trichoanalysis to students and putting the scientific method of hair analysis to work on clients.

According to Faye Morgan, chairman of OC's cosmetology department, trichoanalysis is a method of analyzing hair to determine what kind of condition it is in, what kind of conditioners to use and whether or not the hair could withstand chemical treatments — such as permaments or color. Morgan said trichoanalysis can aid in achieving better results every time hair is cut, colored, permed or styled.

"Tricho" is the Greek word for hair and combined with "analysis" it describes a scientific method determining the condition of hair, which according to Morgan, "takes the guess work out of discovering what condition a client's hair is in."

The method was developed by Redken Laboratories to analyze hair and correct damage with Redken products. In the past, a hair stylist could only use an unaided power of vision, a sense of touch and some hard-earned experience to determine the condition of a client's hair.

Morgan said Redken scientists put an end to those "hit and miss" hair examination techniques with the development of trichoanalysis. The same sophisticated instruments developed and used for medical biological and chemical research have been applied to problems such as "Why does hair look and behave as it does?", "Why won't my hair hold a perm?", "Why doesn't it take color evenly?" and more importantly, "What can be done about it?"

According to Morgan, her students do trichoanalysis on single strands of hair cut or plucked from different areas of the client's hair. The hair is examined under a high-powered microscope (trichoscope) under different lights to determine damage. Then the hair is placed in the trichogram, which mechanically stretches the strand of hair to the breaking point to test its structural strength and competency.

Trichoanalysis gives a physical and optical analysis of the hair for scientific hair care. The physical analysis is done with the tricogram and the optical analysis is done with the tricoscope.

"The instruments allow us to determine the condition of our client's hair and recommend the most scientifically correct re-conditioning treatment to bring hair back into condition," Morgan said.

Morgan said trichoanalysis is one of the most modern techniques available. "As far as we know Odessa College has the only trichoanalysis equipment in the Odessa-Midland area," Morgan said.

During OC's upcoming 35th anniversary celebration, May 1, the cosmetology department will be doing trichoanalysis as a free service to the general public.

The newest, most innovative hair analysis technique, trichoanalysis, is now available in the Permian Basin at Odessa College's cosmetology department. Steve Hawkins, OC cosmetology, is doing trichoanalysis on a client's hair.

Have some hangups about tools

By AL CARRELL

In storing tools, whether you have just a few to cope with disasters or enough to build your own furniture, there are two major considerations. The first is protection. The tools must be protected from rust and corrosion. They must be protected from damage from other tools and other objects. They must be protected from theft. They must also be protected from unauthorized use by kids and incompetents. The other consideration is convenience. This last is what we'll talk about today.

In the average shop or garage, a very convenient place for your tools is hanging from the wall. This gets the tools out of the way, and also makes them easier to find when needed. If you use perforated hardboard — the type with all the holes — as a wall covering, then you can use hooks to hang the tools from. Exposed studs also offer hanging opportunities unlimited.

It's not only my idea that folks like to have their tools just hanging around. I get a lot of ideas from readers who have come up with tool hanger ideas like these:

Dear Al:

The old style brace and bit isn't all that easy to hang from the shop wall. However, I've come up with a winner. An ordinary wire coat hanger will hold the tool. With the chuck and handle part on one side of the hanger's horizontal cross piece, and the "U"-shaped crank on the other, the brace is held and the hanger can then fit over a pegboard hook. It's easy to retrieve when you need to drill. — P.M.

+ + +

Dear Al:

I first got too old to chase women, and then too old to chase the golf ball around. However, I have found a good use for golf tees I no longer use. They will go into the holes in pegboard, and because the tees are tapered, they will wedge tightly in place. You can hang many lightweight objects from the tees. — K.W.N.

+ + +

Dear Al: Rather than spend money on hooks and hangers for perforated hardboard, I have found that I can form these from coat hanger wire. They can be shaped to be similar to most types that you buy. In some cases, they don't make a hook just right for my purposes, so I design my own. Since I use so many to hang up my tools, it has saved me some money. — V.L.

+ + +

Dear Al: There is an easy way to store C-clamps. Just let them clamp themselves to the edge of a shelf in the shop. This way, you can easily pick out the size of clamp that you need, and they are always convenient. Also they don't take up shelf or drawer space. — D.G.Y.

+ + +

Dear Al: I have exposed studs in my garage workshop area. I've made many racks and holders for my tools by nailing 2x4s between the studs. I just came up with a new idea, for me anyway. I attached a 1x4 to the face of two adjoining studs. There are holes drilled in the board that are big enough for the face and neck of a hammer to go in. The hammer will stay in place there with the handle hanging down. — B.J.G.

The only suggestion about any hammer hanging trick is to be sure the hammer can't fall off if jostled. If it hits your toe, you can lose a toenail as well as your religion.

These are just a few of the many hangups for tools. You probably have come up with some clever tool storage ideas of your own. Send 'em to me, and I'll tell the world.

Peninsula a refuge for lovers of the sea

By BILL FREDDE
Special to The Reporter-Telegram

You never get enough of the Yucatan Peninsula!

It doesn't matter if you've vacationed there for 14 years in a row, it never gets old.

Delightfully compact and yet fantastically diverse, Mexico's legendary Yucatan Peninsula has been my personal vacation nirvana since 1964. In those days, Cancun was merely a germ of an idea in some long forgotten engineer's creative mind and the Yucatan was relatively unknown as a tourist destination. Its striking Mayan pyramids, temples and palaces were explored primarily by archaeologists, only avid divers were aware of Cozumel and Isla Mujeres was the well-kept secret of a select group of international travelers who loved the simple life.

Then in 1970 FONATUR, a tourism develoment arm of the Mexican federal government, fed a computer with such diverse facts as sunlight, rainfall, quality of beaches and water, distance from Yucatan's archeological sites and miles from United State's population centers and Cancun, the world's ultimate super-modern resort was born.

In Mayan, Cancun means "Pot of Gold" and that's just what the resort has proven to be for the Yucatan. The creation of Cancun thrust all of the sun-drenched beaches, crystal clear waters and ancient allure of the Yucatan into the international spotlight. And today I share the delights of my vacation mecca with visitors from every part of the world.

There's no doubt the big attractions of the Yucatan are its resort islands of Cancun, Cozumel and Isla Mujeres. Each island has sun-drenched shores, bathed by warm, soothing Caribbean waters, but each island also has its own character.

Cancun is the dazzling international star of the Yucatan's sun spots. Located on a 14-mile long, quarter mile wide island, it was carved from the tentacles of the thick Yucatan jungle. Connected to the mainland via a causeway on one end of the island, Cancun is one of the world's most popular beach resorts. It offers ultra-modern comfort and an alluringly informal lifestyle where everything has been built in to make living easy and luxurious.

Cancun's beaches of talcum powder soft white sand rank among the finest in the Western Hemisphere. The calm, turquoise waters of the surrounding bays, lagoons and Caribbean are ideal for all water sports, superb for diving and snorkeling. On one long section of the beach, where the sea is as calm as a swimming pool, the shore is dotted with idyllic coves, coral and rocky outcroppings.

The elegant hotels of such major chains as Sheraton, Hyatt, Camino Real, Krystal, El Presidente, Caristos and the 300-unit Club Mediterranie village place Cancun on a par with the world's most sophisticated fun spots.

An 18-hole Robert Trent Jones golf course at Pok-ta-Pol Golf course is open to all hotel guests. Most hotels have tennis courts, and there are others at the golf course club house. Diving and snorkeling enthusiasts will find that the crystalline water surrounding the island offers visibility to the depths of 100 feet or more. Equipment can be rented at most hotels.

Cancun City, a new town built from "scratch" to accommodate local residents, most of whom have moved in from other parts of Mexico to staff the resort's hotels, is located across a narrow bay on the mainland. Buses run regularly from the island's hotel strip across the causeway into the town, and inexpensive taxi service is available. There are several good restaurants in town, along with a few hotels. Smaller and less elaborate than those on the island.

I like to shop the Centro de Artesianis. Its numerous small stalls and colorful shops are patterned after the traditional Mexican markets and items are considerably less expensive than in the luxury shops of the resort hotels. This is an especially good place to shop for huipils, the traditional Yucatec white cotton shift dresses with brilliantly colored neckline and hem embroidery. For men's classic embroidered guayabera shirts, try one of the department stores across the street from the shopping center.

As my taste in vacation hideaways doesn't run to dazzling international playgrounds, I always use the island of Cozumel as the headquarters for my Yucatan vacations.

Lazing in the Caribbean 12 miles off the Yucatan coast, Cozumel has the double charm of being Mexican and Caribbean. It is a deliberately low-key coquettish island paradise. It is Mexico's largest island but only one-fourth of it is populated. Cozumel's beaches are among the brightest and whitest in Mexico and its crystal waters attract divers from all over the world.

Cozumel in its time has been a holy place to the Mayas, a base for the Spanish fleet and treasure galleons and headquarters for the pirates who preyed on them. Today it is a splendid refuge for those who want to spend their days by the incredibly blue sea, on it or under it.

An impressively pretty string of hotels full of plush contemporary comforts and top notch facilities are clustered on the more sheltered west coast just north of the island's only town, tiny San Miguel.

Although tiny and tranquil, Cozumel has enough sun and sea activities to satisfy any vacationer's plate. Scuba enthusiasts, including Jacques Cousteau, journey from afar to dive off Palancer Reef, considered one of the world's five best reefs for coral and marine life. From the dock of your hotel take a leisurely cruise to uninhabited Passion Island and feast on fresh fish and conch, caught by the crew only minutes before. Rent a motor scooter or safari jeep for trips to Chacanab Lagoon, San Francisco Beach or a run into San Miguel for shopping.

If you want to be one of the 16 luckiest people in the world, fly over to Pez Maya, a fishing village and resort just over an hour from Cozumel. It's like an imaginary tropical paradise come to life with endless white beaches, magnificent flying fish, superb bird watching and a tranuility that even urban millionaires can't buy. And even better, there's not a shop or a radio to disturb nature's bliss.

Isla Mujeres, the Yucatan's third Caribbean island, is strictly for the traveler seeking the ultimate simple life by the sea — no big hotels, few telephones and almost no night life. It is a casual, stroll-around-barefoot-in-the-sand kind of place, just made for unwinding from today's hectic pace.

Visit Europe in the spring

The beauty of Italy's lake country and the lure of Monte Carlo are only part of the appeal of Scandinavian airlines' ten-day "Springtime in Europe" program. Equally appealing is its all inclusive price of $984.

For those wishing to concentrate on central Europe, the $995 "Swiss-Bavarian Holiday" is available.

Both tours feature Chicago departures, and the cost includes roundtrip airfare, first-class hotel accommodations (based on double occupancy) and daily continental breakfasts.

The "Springtime in Europe" program departs on April 19 and May 3. Optional tours to Nice, Cannes and the resorts of the French Riviera are available. The program also includes two days of sightseeing in Rome and concludes with visits to Florence, Milan and Copenhagen.

With departures on May 10 and May 12, the "Swiss Bavarian Holiday" offers 10 days of visiting Rothenburg, Seefeld, Villars and Wiesbaden. The itinerary includes such special features as a "Fairytime Bavaria Excursion," with visits to the Linderhof Palace and the Monastery of Ettal, an excursion featuring the three countries of Switzerland, Italy and France, and a steamer cruise on the Rhine River. Optional tours to Salzburg, the city of "South of Music," and Geneva are also available. Additionally, a "welcome to Austria" dinner, featuring Tyrolean specialties and traditional wines, as well as a farewell dinner, are included.

Travel experts feel devaluated peso might affect Texas and all of the U.S.

Most travel industry observers feel that the recent devaluation of the Mexico peso will affect Texas and all of the U.S. since it will inrease the coast of out-of-Mexico vacations, according to information in "Travel Log," a pamphlet issued by the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Although some travel agencies believe Mexican shopkeepers will raise prices other disagree. Richard Dayoub, an owner of Bucks Rogers Travel Service in El Paso, said that with Mexico's sagging tourist, shopkeepers there will be "very careful" not to overcharge vacationers.

Bank officers in El Paso advised those embarking on a Mexican vacation to take U.S. traveler's checks in dollars for exchange there. And, above all, do not pay with credit cards since a delayed biling might find the vacationer settling up at a less favorable rate of exchange.

This cruise is no 'love boat' adventure

By FRANK SALDANA
Copley News Service

The muffler fell off the family station wagon when we hit a bump on the way to the airport. We should have known it was an omen of things to come.

For days, there had been much planning for our first cruise. It was to be a seven-day adventure, aboard Bahamas Lines, S.S. Veracruz, from Tampa, Fla., to the Yucatan Peninsula of Mexico. We would visit the famed pyramid at Chichen Itza and rub elbows with the international jet set at the beach resort of Cancun.

We hoped to snorkel in the clear waters of Cozumel and to visit Key West where Truman sought solace from the pressures of Washington during his administration.

We were advised to pack lightly — weather this time of the year is warm so you dress accordingly.

After an hour layover in Houston for a change of planes, we arrived at Tampa expecting to be greeted by the warmth of Florida's fabled sun.

Wrong.

The famed Florida warmth had taken a nose dive into the 30s as an arctic cold wave swept through the South.

Next morning there were rumors flying about the Admiral Benbow Hotel lobby that all was not well on the Veracruz.

Rumor became fact as we waited dockside to check in.

Prospective passengers received a letter which read in part: "We regret that due to a temporary mechanical malfunction requiring repair, SS Veracruz will not be able to depart Tampa until Sunday evening."

The cruise line added that passengers would be "eligble for a future credit of 50 percent of fare paid for the present cruise toward any cruise of SS Veracruz taken within one year of this departure."

The line also offered a full refund of the cruise fare, exclusive of air or land cost, to any passenger wishing to cancel the trip. About 20 people did.

Also, to compensate for the inconvenience, the ship's bars would serve complimentary drinks until departure.

As an added bonus, about 500 passengers were taken to Busch Gardens on Sunday for an outing at the "Dark Continent" entertainment park while repairs were being completed.

The ship finally got under way early Monday, 33 hours behind schedule.

As the Veracruz escaped the Tampa chill and steamed south, passengers headed for the ship's fantail to work on their tans. Movies, betting on "wooden horse races" and parlor games were a big favorite with a large contingent of senior citizens.

But it was the one-armed bandits in the casino lounge that nightly appeared to get the most action — along with the blackjack tables.

Some of the passengers said they were on their fourth cruise aboard the Veracruz. They really enjoy the games and the people they meet.

Soon we could see low-lying islands off the Yucatan peninsula. The high-rise hotels that mark Mexico's Caribbean Riviera stood out in sharp contrast. This was Cancun.

Enjoying the warmth and sunshine of the Gulf of Mexico, passengers aboard the SS Veracruz take to their deck chairs for lovely, long hours.

Enjoy the beach, snow skiing here

(EDITOR'S NOTE — Hawaii - lush island of sun and sand and snow. Snow? Yes, skiing in Hawaii is real and an enterprising New Englander is making the most of it on the slopes of Mauna Kea.

By LINDY WASHBURN
Associated Press Writer

MAUNA KEA, Hawaii (AP) — A black-suited skier squints at the photographer, his cheeks seared by wind whipping over the ridgeline.

"I gave up the best snow in 10 years at Tahoe to come ski here," he yells. "Will you take a picture of me so I can prove I was really here?"

He swishes into the "Poi Bowl," as S curving behind him in the powder, soft snow dropping like an exclamation point at this sudden stop. Beyond him is the blue Pacific, to the left a Hawaiian volcano.

"Now," he says, posing. "Be sure to get the ocean in."

At 13,796 feet, the summit of Mauna Kea of Hawaii Island oversees a cineramic view of the Pacific. As the skier poses, a skirt of clouds lay pleats over the volcano's lower slopes, and a thread of white sand hems the coastline.

Only 2½ hours by Jeep from Hawaii's storied tropical beaches, this moonscape where astronauts trained for lunar landings is the highest elevation, southernmost skiing in the United States.

"It's just almost perfect," says Dick Tillson, founder of Ski Shop Hawaii and guide to the mountain. "We sometimes have three-or four-mile runs, with 2,000 feet of vertical."

THE ADVENTUROUS CAN choose among sparkling, snow-covered cindercones studded like dollops of chocolate candy in the ancient caldera. The smooth-surfaced piles of ash and cinder are debris from fire fountains during prehistoric volcano eruptions.

Skiers can take them straight — Prince Kuhio's run has a pitch of 35 degrees — or circle the cone endlessly in a long, smooth traverse. No trees mar the geometry of white shapes against the inky blue edge of outer space.

Tropical sun, untracked powder, heart-pounding oxygen-hunger: if these ingredients comprise a skier's fantasy, then the sleeping volcano christened "White Mountain" by the Hawaiians has them all.

"We were playing in the snow on Mauna Kea one day and watching lava fountains on Mauna Loa," Hawaii's second-tallest mountain and an active volcano, Tillson says. "We can be playing in sunshine up here and not know anything about a storm on the coast."

The unparalleled weather has a cutting edge, though. With four times its intensity in Waikiki, the sun blisters unprotected skin and lips.

And there is no lift, no lodge, and no roads to the top of the world navigable by anything except a four-wheel drive Jeep.

Tillson, 56, presides over this scene with the improbable aplomb and unshakeable enthusiasm of a surfboard salesman in Alaska. He is the only man who will rent you the equipment and drive you there — for a fee of $96, including down parka and mittens.

A FORMER AEROSPACE engineer reared in Salem, Mass., Tillson parked a trailer at the summit in 1967 and skied every day for two months. That way, he says, he could adjust to the altitude.

He mapped the trails, studied the weather and started dreaming about developing the mountain for serious skiing.

The skier's day begins at 8 in a double-story warehouse in the ranchtown of Waimea, 2,000 feet in elevation and 48 miles from the summit. In sandals and T-shirts, Ski Shop Hawaii's ground crew fits boots and binding, collects signatures on liability waivers, and loads the Jeep.

Two hours later, gasping and wheezing from its own oxygen-hunger, the Jeep rumbles to a stop at Hale Pohaku, a base camp for astronomers who staff five observatories atop the mountain. There, at 9,000 feet, the paved road ends. So do the trees.

Tillson passes out aspirin and gives a little lecture on altitude sickness.

"I have everyone put their boots on here," he says. "Bending over like that at the summit can knock you out if you aren't used to it. We're above one-third of the earth's atmosphere."

Some people who sit down to rest, he adds, pass out just as if they were falling asleep. Aspirin can stave off headaches and nausea, while the only other caution is to take things slowly and breathe deeply at first. Eventually, one adjusts.

"I was coming down the slope and wanted to make a turn," said one skier later in the day. "So I said to myself, 'OK, turn.' But nothing happened." He laughed. Lack of oxygen had weakened his muscles; they reacted slowly and felt like they were burning.

Soon the Jeep mounts the switchbacks, its passengers' ears popping at a dizzying rate.

"Now you see the hidden inner secrets of Mauna Kea," Tillson says as the Jeep comes over the lip of the summit crater into white snow fields. "From the bottom, the snow can look like icing on a cupcake. Up here we've got three to four feet."

> Only 2 1/2 hours by Jeep from Hawaii's storied tropical beaches, this moonscape where astronauts trained for lunar landings is the highest elevation, southernmost skiing in the United States.

He points to runs with Hawaiian names such as King Kamehameha, Alii, Pele's Parlor, and Poi Bowl — names he chose when the mountain was uncharted.

"What a day," he whistles.

The Jeep functions as a lift, dropping skiers off at the top of a run and picking them up at the bottom on the snaking summit road built to serve the observatories.

Traffic on the road is surprisingly heavy. Jet-setters from the Mauna Kea Beach Resort and other expensive watering holes mingle with local islanders who pose in bikinis for picture-taking friends. Partners in ramshackle pickups drive their buddies up and down.

Non-skiers build snowmen by the side of the road and slide screaming down cindercones on plastic trays, their speeds up to 45 miles an hour.

LAST YEAR, IN THE only fatal accident known on the mountain, a woman slid down the side of a cindercone, into a bank of volcanic rocks. She hadn't allowed enough run-off distance.

A 30-mile-and-hour wind packs the south faces and blows a dusting of powder over the leeward slopes.

"We're as good as 50 percent of the ski areas in the country," Tillson says. "I've matched our seasons against a chart put out by Aspen, and we've matched them for as many years as I've been watching. When they have a good year, so do we."

But unlike most ski areas on the mainland, where the season ends in March of April, Tillson says he plans to ski into May or June.

"Snow doesn't melt here, because of the altitude," he says. "It evaporates. That evaporation has a super-coolant effect, making the snow last longer. Then the sun softens it, and we get beautiful corn snow. I call it ego-builder — it just makes you ski so beautifully.

"We're kind of unique," he adds. "Where else can you relax on the beach after a hard day on the slopes?"

States respond to consumer needs in timesharing

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A relatively new concept called timesharing has revolutionized the vaction real estate market in recent years. An estimated 350,000 families have purchased timeshares to date and industry sales in 1981 reached an estimated $1.3 billion.

Timesharing basically is a technique for the multiple ownership and/or use of resort and recreational properties. Timesharing has been applied to hotels, motels, condominiums, townhouses, single family detached homes, campgrounds, and even boats and yachts. It involves both new construction and conversion of existing structures, along with properties solely devoted to timesharing and projects which integrate timesharing and non-timeshared properties. While most programs may be classified as either ownership or non-ownership (right-to-use), there are wide variations in program and legal format.

The attractions of timesharing are simple: it allows purchasers to own or have occupancy rights at a resort accommodation for a period of time each year for a fraction of the purchase price of the entire unit. Timeshare owners pay for exactly what they plan on using and when they leave they don't have to think about where they'll be vacationing next year. Another option — and advantage — of timesharing is the exchange program. The exchange system affords vacation flexibility by allowing owners to "swap" their timeshare for other locations and time. Finally, a well-designed timeshare program can be a hedge against inflation in resort accommodations.

The benefits of timesharing are substantially borne out by the high degree of consumer satisfaction it has achieved: in a survey of approximately 10,000 timeshare buyers, conducted by the National TimeSharing Council (NTC) of the American Land Development Association (ALDA), 86.3 per cent of the respondents said they were "very satisfied" or "satisfied" with their purchase.

Where castles stand guard

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

The final notes of the overture crescendo — the brass, deep and mellow; the strings carrying the rich melody to the rooftop. Slowly, the curtain rises and the audience beams in anticipation at the sight of the village: half-timbered houses gable over a narrow street, a flowered courtyard blooms around a beautifully carved well. Any second now, a lyric voice will begin the tale.

But no sound is heard, just the everyday noises of everyday life. For this is not really an operetta.

We are merely walking through the medieval town of Riquewihr, resting peacefully behind its 13th-century gate, midway along the Alsatian wine road in northeastern France.

Alsace is like that for some 70 kilometers south of Strasbourg — a long golden valley with fine vineyards marching over the south and east facing slopes of the Vosges Mountains.

ITS VILLAGES, many of them dating back to the 13th and 15th centuries, nestle in the gentle foothills. Ruins-of ancient castles, many founded on other ruins of Roman forts, stand guard along the ridge road. And the Rhine, the busiest river in Europe, weaves in and out of the shadows and sun, dividing the now-French province from Germany.

This area has been coveted and fought over since the Romans first looked favorably on it somewhere about 100 B.C. The Romans pitched a camp, Argentoratum, near what is now Strasbourg. In good Roman fashion they settled in, married the local girls, built homes, carved roads and — mirabile dictu — planted grapes.

It is the grapes which have best survived the long centuries of peace and conquest. Deo gratias!

To travel the wine road from Strasbourg south is exhilarating — and probably a little inebriating, too. For each charming little village, with its flower-fronted, half-timbered houses, has its own special wine and the temptation to sample the light, golden Rieslings and Sylvaners and the spicy Gerwurztraminers for which the area is famous, is almost irresistible on a fine day.

We left Strasbourg on a lovely, sunny Sunday in the fall — the best time to visit the area, though festivals and fairs occur all through the late summer and early harvest season.

South, the road winds through what was once marshland along the river and is now a nature conservancy. Small farms, their neat kitchen gardens reduced now to the winter's supply of cabbage, interlace with open fields where mushroom hunters wander. Storks, so typical of the area, nest in carefully guarded areas where a program is under way to restore their endangered numbers.

OBERNAI, HOME OF SAINTS Odile, patron of Alsace, is celebrating its festival today,and the town is fresh-scrubbed, poster pretty beneath its 9th century wall.

Then on to Barr, and over the hills to Mittlebergheim, where old wash houses straddle the river and the sylvaner grapes produce a crisp, rich wine.

Ittersviller is built on an old Roman town. Kintzheim is famed for its museum of birds of prey. The little villages carry French or German names, or that strange blend of both which is pure Alsatian. All are immaculate, flower-filled, the townspeople friendly but reserved.

Pretty clay hearts or empty wine bottles dot the tiled rooftops — a signal to all that a marriageable son or daughter resides within. Construction dates are carved in the keystones: 1599 — 1342. It adds to the mystique to think how many families have lived in these same shelters.

Koenigsburg Castle itself is a restoration of an old 12th century fortress which William II had restored in 1900 as a hunting lodge. There's a bit of a Disneyworld air about it as thousands of visitors climb through it year after year, inspecting the artifacts, listening to the long — and often bloody — history of the place. It is actually the No. 3 visitor attraction in France, for its pink sandstone battlements encompass a great deal of history.

Bergheim, a 15th century walled town, is a refuge for murderers — and no cars are allowed.

Ribeauville celebrates its musical heritage with a great festival the last Sunday in August when music makers come from all over to fill the air with glorious sounds and drink the fine, fine Trimbach wine.

RIQUEWIHR IS THE HOME of Dopff wineries — and the classic "background for an operetta" village. The buildings date from 1516 to 1574 with few changes. It is so beautiful it is difficult to believe it is real and that people go about the business of daily life as they have for centuries.

Riquewihr stands in a time-warp that muddies the mind. Cars and buses park outside the town gate and visitors stroll through the narrow, winding streets, pausing here and there at one of the many places to sample the wines, to chat and to try to realize that this is the 20th, not the 15th, century.

It's not easy.

Ammerschwihr, which stands in the plain, suffered a different fate. It was almost completely annihilated in World War II and in the rebuilding has lost much of its ancient charm.

Colmar, on the other hand, has somehow kept a great number of its 15th century buildings, blending them with manor houses from later centuries and a post-World War II reconstruction.

From Colmar we continued on through Turckheim along the road of the five chateaux, to the walled 16th century village of Eguisheim, home of Pope Leo IX.

Fine — and hearty — food and wine are hallmarks of Alsace. But even more are the hospitality and friendliness of its people. The tour of the Alsatian wine road is not a popular favorite with Americans — they don't seem to be aware of its extraordinary combination of history, beautiful scenery, and fine food and wine. Too bad. Alsace carries its great age with extraordinary great grace.

'Inspiration-givers' aid with enthusiasm

By Norman Vincent Peale

Have't you noticed how certain people always inspire you? They give you a big lift and provide inspiration. Since enthusiasm tends to run down, such people are a real asset.

There are many like this for whom I personally am grateful. One, for example, was Dr. John W. Hoffman, president of Ohio Wesleyan University. He had an amazing way of making boys believe in themselves simply because he believed in them. His faith in them helped to remove self-doubts and inferiority feelings. Students loved him because he made them like themselves a little bit better.

I shall never forget walking home with him from a dinner on campus. As he bade me goodnight he punched me affectionately in the chest. "You've got something," he said. "I believe in you and will always be pulling for you." It was a mystic June night before graduation — the future stretched excitingly ahead — and I walked home with the glorious feeling that maybe I really could do something with my life.

Naturally, I knew he overestimated me; but he stimulated me and generations of young peole to at last try to do their best. This unfogettable man was an inspiration-giver who is enshrined in the affectionate memories of a host of men and women.

Try believing in kids — and let them know you do. It's bound to have a salutary effect upon them.

Another kind of priceless people are those who buck you up and keep you fighting on. I mean fighting on for the things you believe in. This sometimes takes fortitude, especially when the opposition is formidable, and especially when the opposition calls you names and makes things unpleasant for you.

Harry Truman once said, "If you're afraid of getting burned better never get near the stove." Of course, if you are going to fight for principles and convictions you can hardly avoid a rough time now and then. That's a natural part of struggle. So don't weaken or back down. But all of us feel like doing so at times. We would like to get along with everyone — be one of the boys, so to speak. But if you yield to that temptation, while life may be easier, it sure will be innocuous.

Some time ago I was being given a rather rough time for certaint things I had said. I felt I was right but also realized that my position was not popular with some people — and they were hitting at me pretty hard. Being of a genial and friendly disposition, I didn't find this conflict any too plaeasant. Though never one to fold up, I'm ashamed to admit I was momentarily supine enough to wonder why I had stuck my neck out.

At this time I was fortunate to meet a couple of old friends, and belive me, they proved to be inspiration-givers. One was Bishop Fred Pierce Corson of Philadelphia. He said, "Look, Norman, you can never change your image with people who are against you by backing down for them. You'll never make them like you anyway. So if you believe you're right, stand up to the opposition and hit hard for your convictions."

Well, this kind of man-sized advice was just what I needed. And I decided that one should think less about himself and his feelings and more about the principles in which he believes — and get back into the fight.

Another inspiration-giver who helped me to do just that was my old friend Walter H. Annenberg, former publisher of The Philadelphia Inquirer. When I was sitting with him in his office, surrounded by autographed photos of the world's great men — Churchill, Kennedy, Mac Arthur and many others who had expressed admiration for this great newspaper man — he quoted a few words which really bucked me up. It was a statement from Basil King's great book on fear: "Be bold and mighty powers will come to your aid."

How right that is! When you attack boldly in support of a right as you see it, then creative and spiritual forces will indeed come to your aid. You will be given a support and strength you wouldn't have believed possible.

Indeed, inspiration-givers really do something for you.

Magnetic device on shuttle may be communications aid

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A powerful electron "gun" aboard the space shuttle has produced an eerie, glowing beam of light that may be able to carry messages between the ship and Earth, scientists say.

"That's our fondest hope," said Peter Banks, a Stanford University electrical engineer who is the head of the experiment.

The $2 million experiment, officially called the Vehicle Charging and Potential experiment, or VCAP, fires a beam of electrons upward into the thin atmosphere around the shuttle.

Because such a gun had never been fired in outer space, Banks and his colleagues from Stanford and Utah State University were not quite sure what to expect when it was tested Wednesday.

After a number of firings, they were told by shuttle commander Jack R. Lousma that when the gun was fired he thought he saw the glowing beam through the window, but he wasn't sure. The glow was clearly visible on television monitors aboard Columbia, however.

Lousma said the television screen showed the beam moving "up and over to the right."

The television displays were videotaped and still pictures were taken, officials said, but it was not known when those pictures or tapes would be transmitted to the ground.

The gun is not designed solely to produce colorful visual displays. It is intended to be fired repeatedly by the shuttle astronauts to determine the effect on Columbia of the Earth's magnetic field and the thin, electrically charged, upper atmosphere around the shuttle.

Does capital punishment really exist?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Does capital punishment exist in the United States? It's a trick question. According to one Supreme Court justice, "the existence of capital punishment in this country is virtually an illusion."

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

Across the nation 1,000 convicts, most of them men, await death by electrocution, hanging, poison gas, firing squad or lethal injection. For a decade, the population on death row has grown steadily.

It is likely to grow some more before it declines.

"Judges like the notion of capital punishment — provided that nobody gets killed," says George Georgieff, the man in charge of trying to kill Florida's killers.

That's how he explains why, six years after the U.S. Supreme Court said the death penalty can be a valid punishment, only one man who did not want to die has been executed for his crimes.

Thirty-six states have a death penalty law. Georgieff, as head of the criminal appeals division in the Florida attorney general's office, is paid to carry out his state's law.

Experts, proponents and opponents, will not predict with any certainty when — or if — the actual imposition of capital punishment will become routine once again. But the consensus is that 1982 will not be the year.

IN TEXAS, SOME believe the overflowing point has been reached.

"We are spending lots of time, lots of money and lots of energy" trying to bring criminals to justice, "but that justice is not being carried out," says Harris County District Attorney John B. Holmes from his Houston office.

"There seems to be no finality. If we are not going to carry out the death penalty, let's repeal it," Holmes says. A repeal would free more than 150 from the Texas death row.

Not long ago the country's most dangerous outlaws were put to death with regularity. There were 717 executions in the 1950s, and 191 from 1960 through 1967.

An undeclared moratorium began in 1957, and appeared to become permanent when, in 1972, the Supreme Court ruled that capital punishment as it then existed was unconstitutional.

The high court said the states were too "arbitrary and capricious" in the way they decided who would die and who would spend their lives behind bars.

State legislatures drafted new laws they hoped would meet constitutional standards, and in 1976 the Supreme Court said at least three of them — in Florida, Georgia and Texas — succeeded.

Today, four of every 10 death row inmates can be found in those three states.

Other state laws subsequently were modified in attempts to conform to what met with court approval in 1976. What has happened since? Not many executions. Plenty of court action.

FOUR MEN HAVE been executed: Gary Mark Gilmore in Utah in 1977; John Spenkelink in Florida in 1979; Jesse Bishop in Nevada in 1979; and Steven Judy in Indiana last year.

Of the four only Spenkelink pursued all legal appeals. The others, in effect, chose death over further court battles.

Although it was anticipated the Spenkelink case would be the first of a flood of executions, instead it stands as an aberration. Hundreds of other condemned convicts have gone to court with uninterrupted success to prolong their lives.

Nowhere are state officials more zealous in seeking to impose the death penalty than in Florida, where nearly 200 prison inmates await execution.

"We are simply stymied," Georgieff says when discussing inmates who have been on death row since the mid-1970s. "Our only barrier exists at the federal level" — a barrier he believes was built by "timid federal judges."

"It doesn't matter to me if tomorrow they wipe the thing out. But if we have the death penalty, let's cut the malarkey and get to it," Georgieff says. Robert Stubbs, executive assistant attorney general in Georgia, says: "As long as a defense lawyer wants to fight and a defendant doesn't want to die, they will find some judge who will listen — and delay."

In Georgia, where more than 100 people are on death row, capital punishment is a political issue.

The state legislature has called on federal judges to clear the way for more executions, and Gov. George Busbee promised Georgians that as many as three death row inmates could be executed this year.

The normal appellate process can take three years — or much longer.

It can include three or more trips to the nation's highest court, with time-consuming stops in state and lower federal courts along the way.

Stubbs says it is in the federal courts where the most time is wasted.

"In (Atlanta) some judges have sat on a case for two years or more before making a ruling," Stubbs says. But review by federal judges recently has grown speedier. "They read the newspapers, too," Stubbs adds.

Independent Realty Associates Receive Awards

Penny Wilhite
Tops Two Major Catagories

Penny Wilhite, Managing Broker of Independent Realty Associates, was honored recently by the Midland Board of Realtors with the two top awards in the category of non-residential sales. Mrs. Wilhite sold $4,100,000 in non-residential Midland real estate in 1981, making her top dollar salesman for the city. (She was also top dollar salesman for Midland in 1979). She also listed $4,500,000 in non-residential real estate that resulted in sales, making her the leading non-residential lister as well. She was also MLS Co-Op Champion for July, 1981, and she also sold over $2,000,000 in non-residential real estate in 1981 in New Mexico.

We don't know whether to applaud Penny for her "non-residential" feats or award her a booby prize for the dubious honor of being "Worst Residential Salesman." In any event, if you have a personal residence to sell, don't call Penny. Call Nona.

Nona Orr can sell anything. Or list anything. Mrs. Orr was cited by the Midland Board of Realtors for million dollar performance in residential sales and million dollar performance in residential listings, and million dollar performance in non-residential sales. She also received an award for excellence in non-residential "unit" sales. (In 1980, Nona was the top award winner for non-residential sales).

Goodrich Heil
Co-Owner

Goodrich Heil, Nona Orr and Penny Wilhite are co-owners of Independent Realty Associates, a company formed in December, 1979 with the express purpose of offering professional brokerage service in the field of commercial as well as residential real estate. You will find that the Independent Realtors here are as comfortable selling a hotel as they are a home, and all are especially knowledgable in the areas of downtown real estate, undeveloped land and invester-type real estate.

A new licensee in 1981, Beverly Murphy has already earned two million dollar awards. The Midland Board of Realtors awarded Mrs. Murphy Million Dollar Certificates for her success in residential sales and residential listings. Beverly is perhaps best known to the public as the on-site agent at Green Tree Canatex's Ninth Tee Townhomes, and she represents Canatex's non-residential properties as well.

A. J. Ashby-Thomason
Experienced Broker

Before moving to Midland in 1981, A. J. Ashby-Thomason was the top selling broker for her company in Colorado where she specialized in condominium conversions. Now a Texas broker, she has over six years' experience in residential and non-residential sales. Whatever your real estate needs you will be well represented if you choose A. J. as your agent.

You may remember her as the patient Mrs. Whalen, your child's seventh grade teacher at Alamo Jr. High. We know her as our newest licensee, the most humble Realtor in town.

Perrie Whalen attacks the marketing of a mobile home site with the same enthusiasm as the listing of a 5 million dollar office building (both are current projects), and God sent her to all the award winners around here as a lesson in service and humility.

You'll enjoy working with the versatile Perrie---and she may do your personal color chart while she's showing you houses...or skyscrapers.

Mary Erwin puts finishing touches on her "clay fantasy." The large oil behind her she is "currently trying to resolve." The oil on the easel is being done by Julia Chandler, while the flowers immediately to the right are Virginia Berry's work in progress.

Artists at work

Spools of thread, neatly arranged in color combinations and weights, filled the shelves on two sides of the room. Additional yarn hung from handmade fabric bins above the shelves on one side. Two looms, one which ran most of the width of the room, wider than it was tall, and another much smaller one, taller than it was wide, occupied the room's center. A medium sized wicker basket, filled with yarn, sat next to the smaller loom, waiting for its owner to resume her weaving. On the far side of the large loom was a work area complete with potter's tools and finished works.

It was a room one wanted to spend time in. Even the look and feel of it from the doorway invited all to come in, look around, and let its cozy comfortableness slow one's pace, while cheering one's heart.

It was hard to believe this room once housed the family cars. But it did.

Jean Posey's converted garage studio at 2501 Camarie St. will be among those on Midland Arts Association's first Artist Studio Tour being held April 4 from 1 to 5 p.m. Others on the tour include the studio of painter and sculptor Mary Erwin, No. 9 Hanover St.; watercolorist Margaret Marcum, 2607 Lockheed St.; watercolorist Paula Mallams, 2313 Auburn Place; and the art department at Midland College. Each stop on the tour will include members of the MAA working in their various mediums.

Tickets, priced at $3, are available from all MAA members, at MC's art department and at the studios the day of the tour. Those touring the studios may do so at their own pace, starting in any order they choose. For more information call Jeanette or John VanAuken at 694-0356.

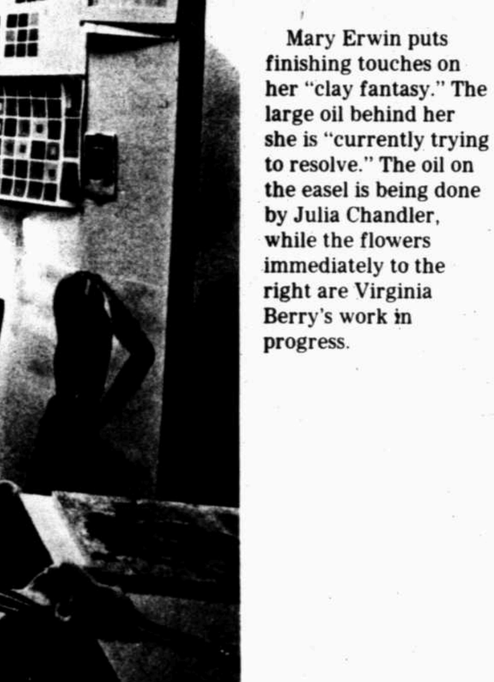

Purpose of the tour is "to let the public see first-hand the working conditions and the many different kinds of artists working now in Midland," Mrs. Marchum said. "It's also a way to let people who are interested in studying art, whatever kind it is, know it can be done at home. It isn't necessary to have a fancy studio. You can even convert a closet," Mrs. Marcum said, remembering when she did just that.

"What you do have to have is the desire to do it in the first place," she said.

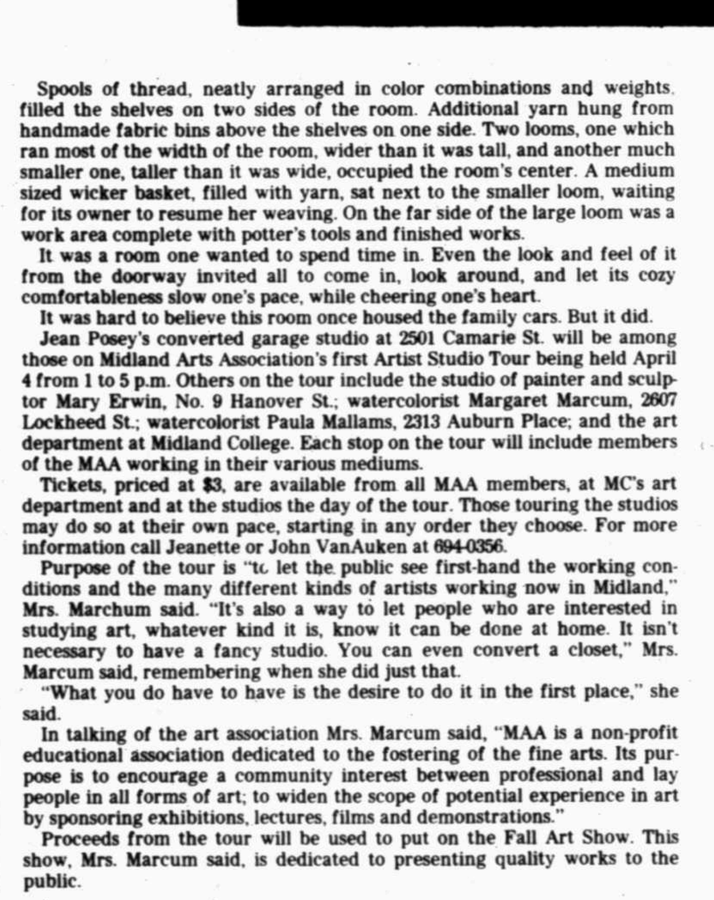

In talking of the art association Mrs. Marcum said, "MAA is a non-profit educational association dedicated to the fostering of the fine arts. Its purpose is to encourage a community interest between professional and lay people in all forms of art; to widen the scope of potential experience in art by sponsoring exhibitions, lectures, films and demonstrations."

Proceeds from the tour will be used to put on the Fall Art Show. This show, Mrs. Marcum said, is dedicated to presenting quality works to the public.

Margaret Marcum, left, has been working in watercolors since 1975. The medium requires "lots of color mixing. I use a minimum of five different values and I try to keep working prismatically too, starting with very lights and then going to darks." Paula Mallams, above, researches before she works. "Right now I'm doing New Mexico landscapes and I always research my subject before I start painting."

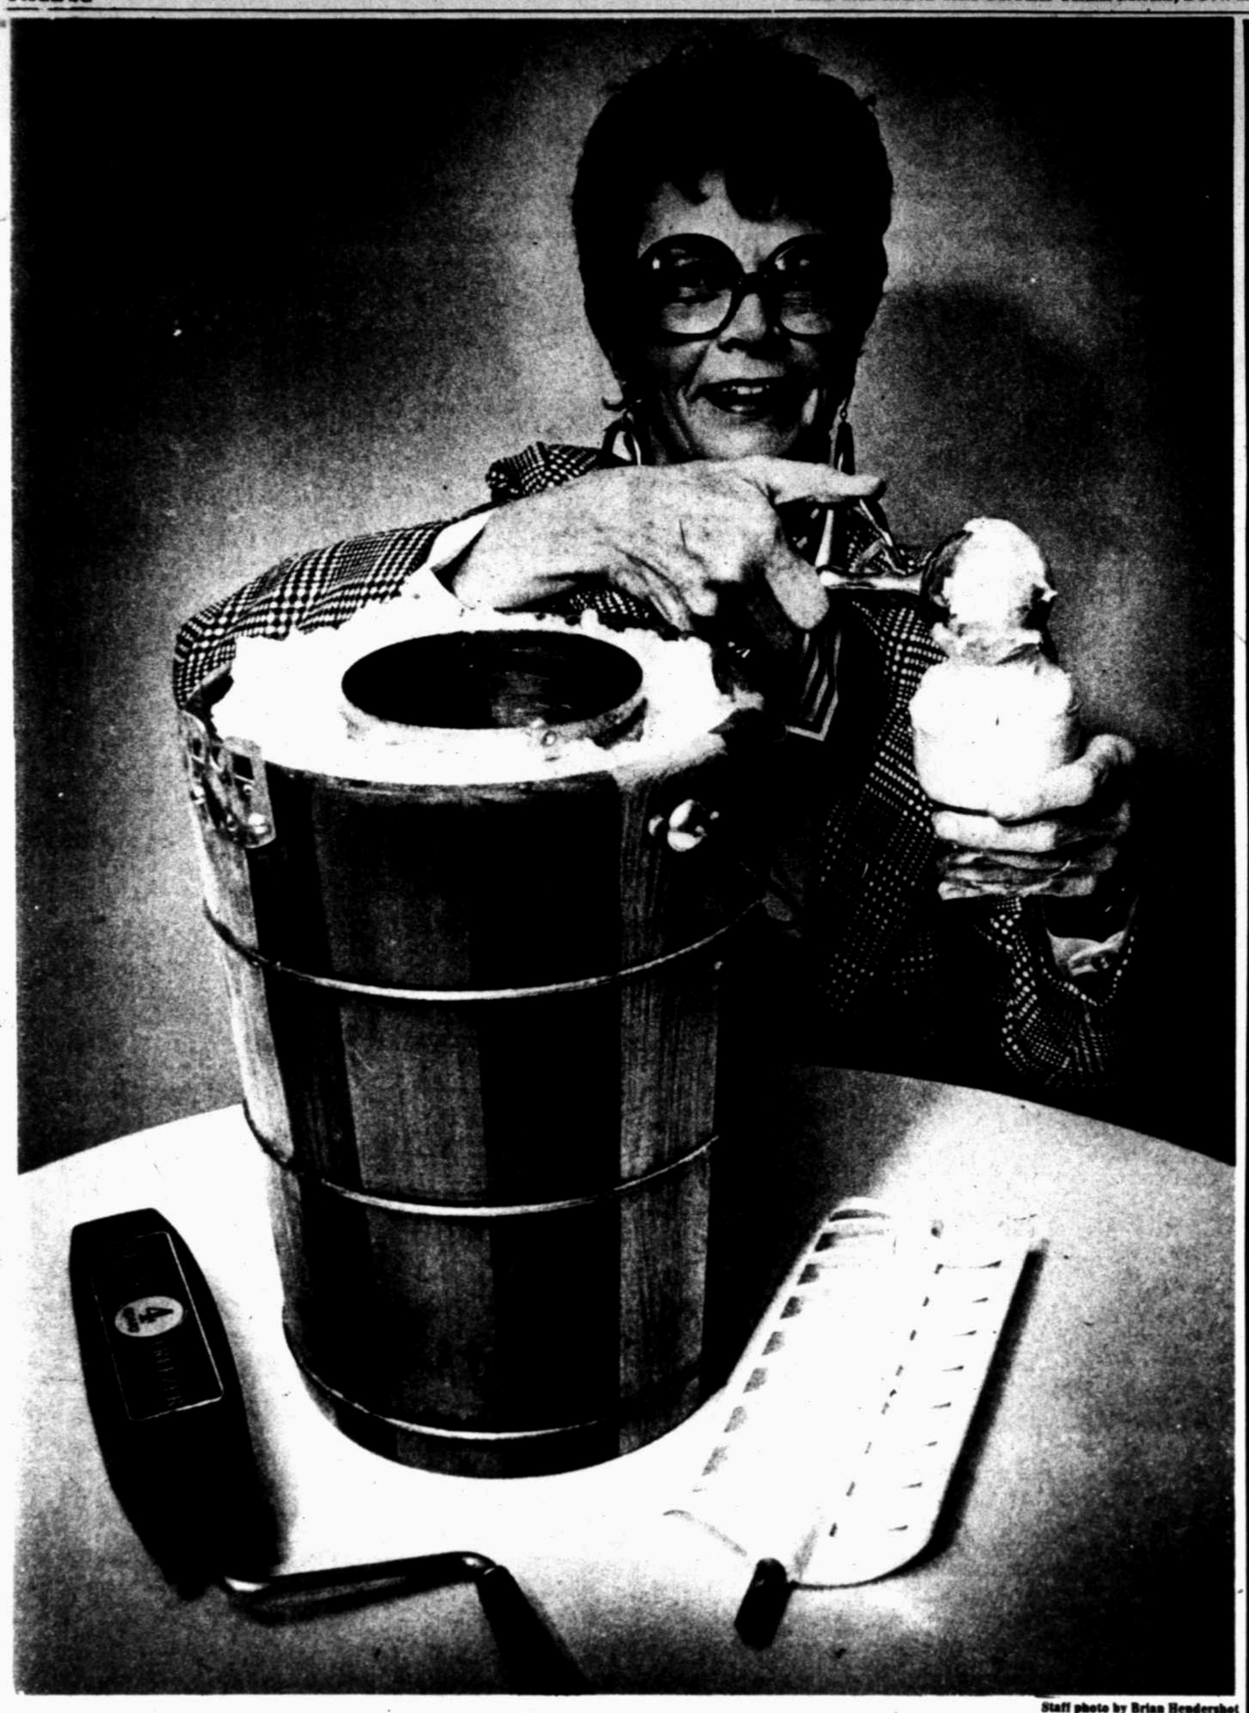

Pottery will be one of the mediums demonstrated at Midland College's art department April 4 during the Artist Studio Tour being presented by the Midland Arts Association. MAA member and potter Suzy Ervin works on her latest project in the MC studio.

Jean Posey has been working in fiber for "about six years. I'd always been a potter — I taught pottery for years — when Sara Gilstrap (past MAA president) came to Midland and started teaching weaving on a frame loom. I took one semester and I've been weaving every since."

Wichita Falls cop suspended after possum and poem joke

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — A policeman with poetry in his heart and a practical joke on his mind was suspended last week after admitting he put a dead opossum in a police lieutenant's car.

Office Bill Pursley Jr., who has been on the force since 1977, was suspended indefinitely for putting the opossum and a Valentine's Day message on the seat of Lt. Jim Shelton's car.

Pursley's message read:

"Roses are red,
Violets are blue,
Even a possum has its day —
And so will you."

Pursley said he had no idea he would be suspended, saying officers regularly engage in practical jokes to relieve the tensions of their job. Pursley is appealing the suspension, and the Wichita Falls Civil Service Commission is expected to hold a hearing for Pursley within 30 days.

Spring fashion for the older set

Senior Citizens Center has style show

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

There's no big secret to success in fashion for senior citizens. Judging by the clothes modeled at a recent style show at the Midland Senior Citizens Center, styling for the older set is much the same as for anyone else, but modified a bit.

Models for the event were senior citizens Estelle Sander, Jewel Holbrook, Hattie Griffith, Mildred Presley, Evie Pace and Gladys Mitchell.

Fashions for the event were provided by the Anada Shop. Coordinators were Emma Dixon, Florida Hyson and Madele Crider. Pianist was Ola Dardis.

Marion Fisher was commentator.

Most of the dress styles had non-defined waistlines for the usually thicker waistline on the senior citizen. Nearly all of the dresses were of a flowing, soft material, "graceful from the waist down," said Mrs. Fisher.

Two of the most important features advised for senior citizens include those which are styled for comfort and easy care. Knit fabrics are almost universally popular.

Mrs. Fisher recalled writing Stanley Marcus of Neiman-Marcus fame some years ago, in which she told him, "'In 1969, there numbered 65,000 brides over 65 years of age.'" She suggested that Marcus and other fashion industry leaders pay attention to that figure, and to the fact that these brides had a probable interest in wanting to stay attractive.

She went on to explain that Marcus returned her letter, saying that he had turned it over to his board of directors for consideration.

"I later received a reply from the chairman of the board, who told me that all of the fashion industry is geared toward the tall, slim, slender woman," said Mrs. Fisher. "He went on to say that Neiman-Marcus would be glad to custom tailor anything I would like to purchase."

"I'm glad that there are stores like the Anada Shop so that senior citizens can purchase things in the larger sizes at more economical prices than Neiman-Maracus," she added.

"And in feminine styles with soft, pretty colors."

Fashions for spring featured the traditional shirtdress, and jacket and skirt outfit. Pants with matching jacket were also popular.

Necklines are an important part of the fashion scene, with pretty neckties, and collars in the Peter Pan style, or with a subdued ruffle, or even accented with a perky flower.

Colors leaned toward the new pastels, such as aqua, turquoise blue, lemon yellow, mint green or pink, and a few navy blue outfits. The only bright, loud colors in any of the fashions were in the accessories—handbags, purses, shoes—or in parts of the wardrobe such as the collar or blouse.

The secret revealed to successful dressing for the senior citizen is finding the right size and fit. But being a senior citizen doesn't exclude one from also being fashionable.

Gladys Mitchell is elegant in a navy blue dress in a soft, flowing fabric. The outfit is accessorized with a white Peter Pan collar and cuffs, silk flower at the neckline and white handbag and shoes. It's a new, feminine look for spring.

Volunteer for 'Christmas In April'

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Bertha Starks lives in a beautiful, well-cared-for home on the east side of Midland. But many of her neighbors on the south and east side of town live in sub-standard housing.

Mrs. Starks has been with Christmas In April since 1974. She serves not only as a board member, but also as a volunteer.

"I think it's a marvelous program," she said. "I work with a couple of organizations. Each year we take a house and do painting inside and outside, depending on the house we select."

"I'm a member of the Negro Business and Professional Women's Club, and we take a house. And I'm a member of Greater St. Luke's A.M.E. Church, and we also take a house every year," said Mrs. Starks. "Usually it's my responsbility to see that we get some volunteers from our church."

"Last year was better than any," she said. "It was quite easy to get 20 or 25 volunteers from our church, and we got about 15 from the Negro B&PW."

Christmas In April is a project in Midland, for which members of the community join together to repair homes of people who cannot afford to repair their homes themselves. In order to qualify, the people whose homes are to be repaired must be 60 or older or handicapped, and own their own homes.

Mrs. Starks said the goal this year for Christmas In April is to repair 150 homes, "if we can get the volunteers. That's the major problem — getting the volunteers. Some people have to get over the idea that some other people could do more for themselves or aren't worthy."

The homes to be repaired by Christmas In April must be screened and evaluated by people who are knowledgeable about what types of repairs are to be made. "We try sincerely to interview the people and go inspect the houses to see if they are really eligible for the assistance of Christmas In April," said Mrs. Starks.

In the nine years since the project started, more than 500 homes have been repaired by Christmas In April, said Mrs. Starks.

"Some we've done work on more than one time," she said. "One year it might be the roof, the next year the plumbing. Usually when it gets to the plumbing or anything electrical, we try to job that out — unless we have a volunteer who is a plumber or an electrician — to make sure the job is done according to city ordinances."

Mrs. Starks said, "I can certainly say we need more volunteers. I want to get more people involved. We are growing and expanding in Midland so much. If we can't do something about the substandard housing here, it is a blot on Midland. The people helped by Christmas In April are older now and aren't able to keep up with inflation."

Volunteers for Christmas In April form into teams or crews and pick the houses they want to repair. "Unless we find volunteers who will work on a specific house, it won't get fixed." said Mrs. Starks. "The selection of which house to work on is purely a volunteer thing. Christmas In April does not assign volunteers to work on a particular home."

She said, "Some of the volunteers work for Christmas In April all during the year, especially people like plumbers, electricians and carpenters." Often these volunteers will work on a weekend or a holiday to do some needed repairs for Christmas In April, said Mrs. Starks.

The last weekend in April is usually when the major repair drive is held. Volunteers can do many different jobs. "All the people involved might not be out working on the houses," said Mrs. Starks. "For example, some may be preparing food for the workers. Sometimes the Salvation Army will donate food. There have also been some restaurants, organizations and businesses that have donated food for the workers."

"Once in a while people helped by Christmas In April will show, besides saying so, that it's been appreciated," said Mrs. Starks. "We have had a few cases where the people had a little money, but not enough to get the work done themselves." She said these people often pay a little each month to Christmas In April for repairs done to their homes, even though is isn't required or requested.

"There are some people who don't always have their hands out for something," said Mrs. Starks. "That's why we need volunteers. Everyone is welcome. We will find something for everyone to do that will be needed and helpful."

Mrs. Starks said Christmas In April was started "to help needy people who are not able to keep their homes in repair. In turn, this will help the whole community."

"I do it for the personal satisfaction I get out of helping others who aren't able to help themselves," she said. "You are worn to a frazzle when the day is over, but you feel so good because you were able to help others."

The goal for Christmas In April in 1982 is to repair 150 homes on April 24.

A meeting of volunteers will be held on April 8 at 7:30 p.m. in the First National Bank Room of First National Bank. Photographs of the homes to be repaired will be on display. Anyone interested in becoming a volunteer for Christmas In April can come to the meeting or can call 694-4907 for further information. You do not have to attend the meeting to be a volunteer.

According to Bobby Trimble, president of Christmas In April, the community project has become an independent agency.

"In the past, the Human Relations Council has helped coordinate the program, and we want to thank them for their help during the past seven years," said Trimble. He added that Christmas In April will continue to function with the help of an all-volunteer board of directors and a part-time secretary.

Tax deductible contributions may be made to Christmas In April Inc., P.O. Box 3744, Midland, Texas 79702.

Bertha Starks, volunteer for Christmas In April, checks over the paint used by volunteers in the community project to help repair homes owned by some of Midland's handicapped or older citizens who cannot afford to have their homes repaired themselves. Mrs. Starks also serves as a member of the board of directors of Christmas In April.

IS YOUR SEX LIFE GOING UP IN SMOKE?

Science has long known that heavy smoking can cause stillbirth and miscarriage. Now there is suspicion that sexual performance may also be impaired.

Paul and Linda Conrad had been married six years, and since the third anniversary had been going from doctor to doctor in a vain attempt to discover why "we can't have a baby!"

Finally Paul agreed to be tested, despite a typical male ego, "I'm sure I'm not to blame!"

The Lansings were also childless, but their problem was somewhat different.

Patricia's first baby had been stillborn--a tiny full-term girl, barely weighing four pounds.

They desperately wanted another baby, but feared "something might happen again!"

Although he was only 31, Ken Farrell was worried about his health.

His lists of complaints included shortness of breath, fatigue, edginess, occasional pains in the legs, chronic cough and a recent decline in his sexual capabilities.

"I keep reading about guys that are 70 and going strong," Ken confided to a doctor, "and I'm having trouble at 31!"

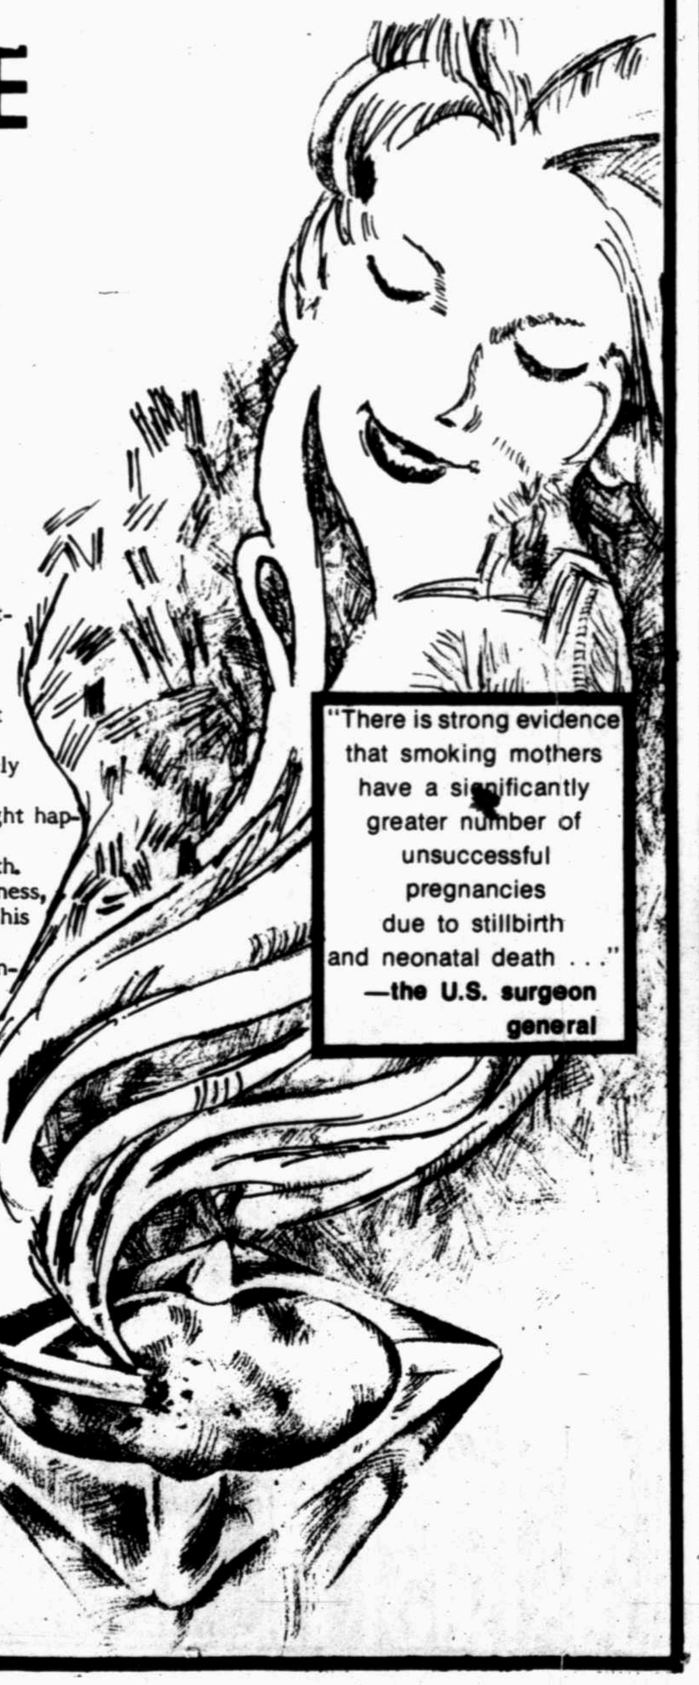

Three medical cases involving real people who seem to have little in common, except all have a problem that is sex related.

And, the prescription for each was identical--STOP SMOKING!

Most habits are hard to break. Smoking is one of the toughest.

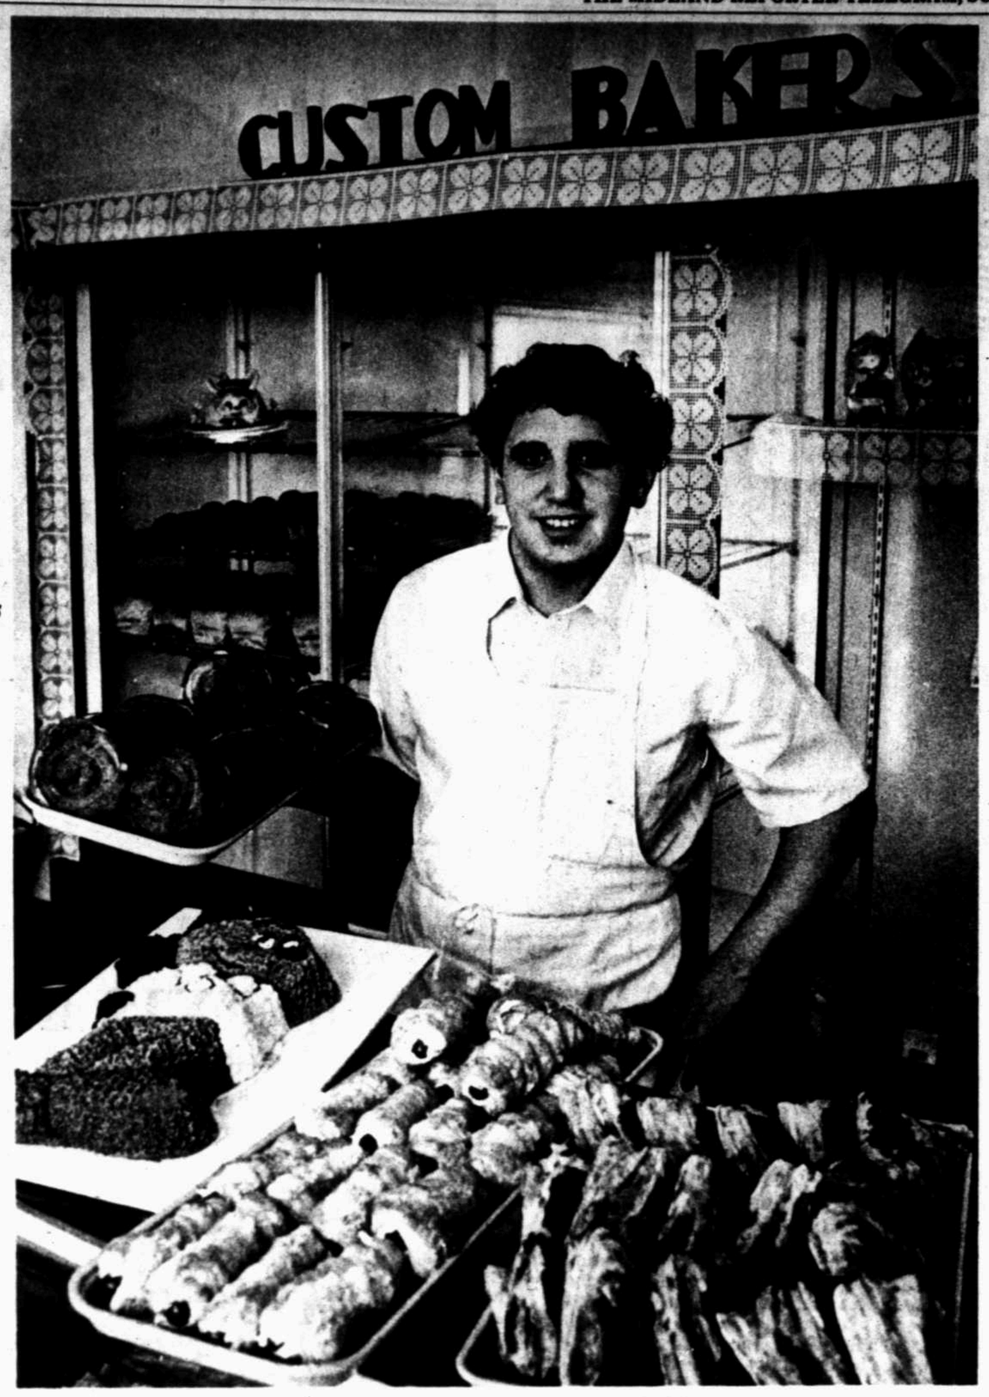

Midland psychologist Marie Moore has successfully worked with hundreds of people. She specializes in hypnotherapy.

She can help you Stop Smoking!

"There is strong evidence that smoking mothers have a significantly greater number of unsuccessful pregnancies due to stillbirth and neonatal death . . ."

Robert Levin shows off some of the fresh-baked specialties at the oldest bakery in town, the Bake Shop. Most recently called Lucia's, the store has been recently obtained by Levin who wants to retain its image of being an old-fashioned bakery. He plans to expand it into a coffee shop, offering fresh breakfasts and lunches.

'Old-fashioned' bakery is rare

But one here is taking on a new image

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

Entering the shop, you're immediately assailed by aromatic odors of freshly baked bread, fruit pastries, and other fresh cooked goodies.

There's nothing like visiting an "old-fashioned bakery."

If you can find one anymore.

The oldest bakery in town, the Bake Shop (formerly Lucia's) is taking on a new look with a different owner.

"We're retaining our image of being a turn-of-the-century store that bakes everything from scratch, but we want to provide something more and meet the needs of Midland," said new owner Robert Levin.

He has plans of turning the place into a coffee shop which provides small breakfasts and lunches. "We'll serve sandwiches, quiche, fresh pecan pie and cheese cake," he explained.

The bakery, located on Andrews Highway, is noted for its long time landmark, the big, white chef sign.

He wants to revive a nostalgic look in the store, which was originally called the Cake Shop.

"I plan to install 'old-timey' ceiling fans, pink and white tiles, put in lots of plants and set up some antique-type chairs and tables," he said.

He is also taking the original Cake Shop out of storage, having it cleaned and hung again.

He recalls that some of the current employees were also employed when it was called the Cake Shop.

"So many of the chain stores or large bakeries nowadays take short cuts," he said. "Some have even been known to spray paint the decorations on cake tops, etc."

He explained that everything in the Bake Shop is prepared with real milk, butter and cocoa. "No preservatives are used—everything is fresh," said Levin.

He has also begun some specialties of his own, such as adding liquers to different desserts. One such example is Blueberry Contreau and Apricot Florentine.

Other specialties and traditional favorites include Apricot Nut Roll, Butter Split Top, Mexican Hard Roll, Alatian Apple Tarts, Triple Chocolate Meringues, Almond Lemon Cookies and coffeecake.

A strapless camisole is easy to make

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

Today, many women collect whole wardrobes of innerwear in the same way others gather shoes, handbags and sweaters. Like potato chips and any pretty fashions, one piece is never enough.

Innerwear is even more practical to collect than outerwear. Unlike dresses that change shape with each season, camisoles, slips and teddies can remain in our closets until they fall apart. Styles have hardly changed since grandma's day.

However, while the camisole described in today's column, may have its turn-of-the-century counterpart, it is used for fashions that grandma would have found scandalous: strapless and spaghetti-strap dresses.

A strapless camisole is extremely simple to make. Here are the directions.

MATERIALS: One-half yard of 45-inch wide fabric. Choose light, supple, non-stretch silk or silklike fabric. Avoid stiff or extremely flimsy fabrics.

Also required are 1¼ yards of lace; one yard of ½-inch width elastic; tape measure; safety pins; sewing supplies.

STARTING: 1. Sew lace to right side of fabric at one 45-inch edge. 2. Trim fabric to ⅛ inch of seam. This lace edge will be the lower edge of camisole.

TEST FOR FIT: 1. With lace at bottom, wrap fabric around the body. Camisole should fit comfortably around the bust, with an extra two inches for seam allowance and ease of wear. 2. Trim fabric to size. If a shorter camisole is desired, trim fabric from top edge, too.

CENTER-BACK SEAM: Make an ordinary ⅜ inch seam at center-back, or a high-fashion, enclosed seam as follows: 1. Fold fabric in half with wrong side inside. 2. Machine-stitch seam close to edge. 3. Trim seam to ⅛ inch. 4. Turn fabric to wrong side. Press seamed edge. 5. Stitch three-sixteenths inch from seam.

ELASTIC CASING: 1. Measure your chest above your bustline. 2. Cut elastic one inch shorter than this measurement. 3. Turn under ¼ inch on remaining raw edge. Stitch in place. 4. Turn under additional ¾ inch. Stitch close to edge. Leave one-inch opening.

FINISHING: 1. Using a safety pin, guide elastic through the casing. 2. Stitch ends of elastic together. 3. Stitch casing closed.

Chip communication

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — As the world of electronics shrinks, computers and other high technological equipment, silicon chips used to store and process mountains of information also have shrunk.

One of the challenges to engineering is designing a package to hold the miniature chips. At Honeywell's Solid State Electronics Division here, special frames or containers for the chips are designed for particular needs.

Packaged chips tap into tiny electrical channels to put impulses on wires big enough to keep track of a store's inventory, run an airline's reservation systems or operate an oil refinery.

The average chip isn't as big as the pushbutton on a telephone, yet it can handle more information than a computer the size of a room in the old days, according to Dr. Carl Nomura, head of the division.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Get rid of roaches

DEAR HELOISE:

It works, it works, it really works! The recipe you printed some time ago to rid the premises of roaches is a downright blessing!

The creatures that invaded us were wood roaches, my husband said, but they were as unpleasant and scuttly as their yukky cousins.

Thank you again. The bug balls, as the children call them, are a bit of a nuisance to make, but well worth the effort! — B.J. Meiler

+ + +

I especially agree with your last sentence, and your enthusiastic endorsement of the recipe is one of many we've received saying the same thing. It does work, and pricewise, it can't be beat!

For readers who may have missed it, here's the recipe again. So grab your scissors and clip it out. It's practically worth it's weight in gold if you have those pesky roaches to deal with.

In a large bowl, mix 16 ounces of powdered boric acid, one cup flour, one-fourth cup sugar, one small onion, chopped, (optional) and one-half cup shortening. Add water (small amount at a time) to form a soft dough.

Shape into small balls and place them throughout the house in places normally inhabited by roaches, but KEEP THEM OUT OF REACH OF CHILDREN AND PETS. — Hugs, Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: For scraping out squash, use the inset from the two-piece type lids used on canning jars.

The best! (Caution! Sometimes they may be a bit sharp.) — Don Fraser

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: I knew it had been a long winter but I didn't realize how long until I asked my 3-year-old son to try on some shorts.

"But, Mom! These pants are broke," he said.

"How's that?" I asked.

"They have no legs"! — Joshua's Mommy

TIME SAVER

Dear Heloise: Here is another use for our old friend, nylon net...

When you've finished husking an ear of corn, take a wad of nylon net and rub up and down the ear, thus removing all the silk that's stuck in between the rows.

Sure helps when you are preparing lots of corn for canning or freezing. — Carol Orr

SEWING GOODY

Dear Heloise: Store sewing machine bobbins in a clear prescription bottle with a snap-on lid.

Colors are easy to see, and no tangled thread. — Eileen Blaney

UNDAMAGED WALLS

Dear Heloise: My husband and I are temporarily living in an apartment. The kindly hardware man suggested that instead of buying nails and making holes in the walls we use straight pins to hold up pictures. (Pound them gently into a wall at a 45-degree angle.)

I was amazed at how many pounds one small pin would hold! — Irene Robertson

+ + +

Sewing machine needles work well, too, and are quite a bit stronger than a pin, yet they, too, will leave only a small hole.

Good hint to know especially when you're hanging something on someone else's wall! — Heloise

SWEET BAKING

Dear Heloise: When baking a cake, grease the pan and coat it with sugar instead of flour. I've never burned or even scorched a cake since using this hint.

It's wonderful. Hopefully, it will help someone else as much as it has me. — Mary

+ + +

Don't hoard a good hint. Why not send it to Heloise, P.O.Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but will feature the best hints in her column.

Fort Stockton man puts tires in torture chamber

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

FORT STOCKTON, Texas (AP) — E.E. "Hatch" Marable estimates he's driven more than 2 million miles during his lifetime — a feat he says would take the average driver more than 150 years.

The 53-year-old Marable is a test driver at the Firestone Tire Test Center near Fort Stockton and he has spent a good chunk of his life behind a steering wheel.

"I've been working here since September 1956," Marable said. "In 1971, they told me it would take 150 years for the average person to drive that far. Ten years later, I'm still doing it."

Marable is the dean of the 129 drivers who make their living by running test vehicles through the modern day torture chamber for tires.

The center was begun in 1956 as a way for Firestone to gather safety and performance data on its products before distributing them to consumers. Manager Dick Vannoy said the company now spends about $7.5 million a year on the center.

If tires could talk, they'd scream upon their arrival at the center. They are run around a banked track, sometimes at high speeds. They are run over cobblestones and along concrete zigzags designed to tear the sidewalls. They are run through salt baths that let corrosive salt water seep into the tire.

They are driven through a city course, with all the stops and starts and corners and curbs a tire faces in metropolitan driving. For the tires, it's literally hell on wheels.

The keystone of the tests — the 7.7-mile banked track — was completed two months after Marable joined the center and it is his second home.

"This track is something," he said, roaring along at 75 mph. "There's a certain speed you can go — it's around 75 or 80 mph — where you can turn loose of the steering wheel and it will go around these supers by itself, right in the groove.

"We have to keep a guard here on the weekend because people want to come and drive on the track," he said.

Weekends are the only time when Firestone test vehicles aren't running on the track. The drivers work eight-hour shifts, three shifts a day.

The biggest problem for the drivers, says William Straub, manager of tire testing at Firestone headquarters in Akron, Ohio, is driver fatigue. "We lost two drivers (in 1975 and 1978) who allegedly fell asleep," he said.

There have not been any deaths of test drivers since, he said. Straub said that tires blow all the time because they are run until they fail. "But I don't recall any accidents ever from tire failure," he said.

Sometimes, Marable said, race car drivers will stop by the track and run their cars because its design is so precise. Mario Andretti holds the speed record at 195 mph.

While the test drivers can't match that, they sometimes test tires at speeds of more than 90 mph.

"Anything above 90, they have a roster of people who will sign up to run the high speeds," Marable said. "It's strictly voluntary, but you get extra pay for doing it."

The drivers are greeted every morning by a bulletin board that tells them what tests they will run that day. Besides the speed and endurance tests, there are the torture tracks.

There is 260-foot cobblestone course, which has large rocks embedded in concrete. A driver may bounce the car over the cobblestones, then run it through a salt bath, a tunnel filled with a strong salt water solution. Then it's back to the cobblestone course.

Marable said the city course is most disliked by the drivers. It is a maze of streets with curbs and stop signs, set in the middle of a mesquite-covered field.

Once the drivers' work is done, the tires are analyzed to see how much damage has been done.

Marable says he plans to keep behind the wheel a few more years.

Little Rock activist feeds hungry kids

By DEBBYE HALE
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Like an evangelist saving souls, Say McIntosh walks the aisles of his restaurant, feeding young bodies and minds as he delivers his gospel.

"Everybody go to church yesterday?" he asks.

Ten little hands go up as the children wolf down a second bowl of Cap'n Crunch cereal, the last bites of a scrambled egg or a hunk of a cinnamon bun.

McIntosh waves a wad of dollar bills and says: "Who's the first person you should put in your life?"

"God!" the youngsters shout.

He hands a dollar to the child who answered first.

"Who's the first person you respect?" he continues.

"Yourself!" they say.

Out comes another dollar.

"When you finish school and start making good money, what are you going to do with it?" McIntosh says.

"Give it to the church," one child says.

"Save it for your kids," another says.

"Help people who don't have any," a third says.

"Right," he says and forks out a dollar.

"And the only way you can do that is to finish school," he says. "So, I don't want to see any more F's."

The questions continue as the youngsters enter the cafe by ones, twos and threes and sit down to a free plate of pancakes or eggs, bacon and toast.

To many, McIntosh, 38, is known as the man who spent $11,000 on gifts for poor kids last year. To others, he's the man who unsuccessfully ran for lieutenant governor two years ago and tied himself to a cross last summer to demand a meeting with Gov. Frank White. He was protesting White's appointments to state positions.

But to a poor kid with an empty stomach, he's a man with a big heart — a man 120 hungry kids can count on for a free breakfast before they go to school each day.

McIntosh spends $125 to $150 a day for the food program. It is money he earns from his restaurant, which he named after himself. He also has received a few private donations.

"This program would probably cost the federal government $1 million to do, and then six months later from now when they got the program started they could serve two breakfasts and be out of money," he said.

McIntosh began the program in January while giving away holiday dinners. He noticed many hungry children. "For a kid to eat three plates of black-eyed peas and hog jowls and candied yams and corn bread, I realized that they evidently weren't eating breakfast," he said. "Not only were they not eating breakfast, but some of them were going to bed without any supper."

To make sure the minds of children are fed as well, he keeps one of the 14 tables in his restaurant laden with notebook paper, pencils and other school supplies. He spends about $65 a week on the supplies.

He also teaches the children to work. Seven help wait on tables for $1 a week. He also pays $1 for each "A" grade and $5 to the child with the best attitude each week.

"We're trying to show these kids some love, some affection and hope that people will start saying, 'Well, if he gets up and feeds that many kids, I can get up and feed my own kids.' I want kids and the parents to learn how to feed themselves," he said.

"These kids probably won't see a dollar no more until I give them another one," he said. "If I thought I could buy up all these kids' minds, if I thought a dollar would help them change their attitude, then I would buy whatever. If you could buy happiness, if you could buy kids to realize that somebody cares about them ... then I would."

McIntosh says the program financially hurts him.

"But if I had to be broke," he said, "I couldn't think of a better way. This is what I like doing — working and helping people."

Do all people gain weight when they quit smoking?

So you want to quit smoking, but you are afraid if you do you will gain weight.

If you are of average weight, you would have to gain 60 to 100 pounds to do the same damage to your body done by one pack of cigarettes a day.

However, if you really want to quit smoking and are really worried about gaining weight, we have several ideas that will help you eliminate your habit and stay trim, if not trimmer than you already are.

First, you must realize that it is not necessarily true that everyone who stops smoking gains weight. Actually, one-quarter of the people who stop smoking lose weight. However, many times the ex-smoker's appetite is no longer dulled by nicotine and he usually gains some weight. It is often sudden, but only a few pounds.

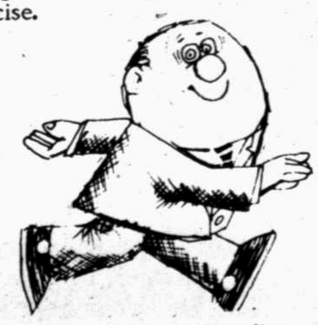

Many people who have tried to kick the habit, make the mistake of assuming they will continue to gain weight, so they light up again.

People oftentimes do not give their body metabolism enough time to stabilize--it's panic and resume smoking.

In desperation others attempt crash diets which makes the habit even more difficult to beat.

We have helped hundreds of people in West Texas kick the smoking habit and we have also helped them do it without gaining weight.

What we suggest is a moderate change in eating habits along with a simple plan of exercise.

When a transition smoker first comes to us for advise about his fear of becoming overweight, we suggest: 1) Eat slowly. Take time to enjoy the flavor you have been missing.

2) Drink more water! Not only is it good for your system, it also curbs your appetite.

3) Get regular, moderate exercise. A simple walk in the afternoon helps reduce tension.

Always remember that everyone needs portions of the basic food groups everyday. These include protien from meats, fish, poultry or dairy products--along with vegetables, fruits, breads and cereal.

There are simple ways to cut calories. Always bake or broil--never fry!

Remember that 8 ounces of skim milk has 85 less calories than 8 ounces of whole milk. Dry toast has 50 less calories than one slice of buttered bread. A cup of sherbert has 80 less calories than a cup of ice cream.

And, diet soda has 158 less calories than a regular 12 ounce can drink.

There are other ways to cut calories by using artificial sweeteners. However, the simplest program is to reduce the portions of food during the initial days of your stop smoking campaign.

We understand that the smoking habit is possibly the hardest to eliminate.

But, if you want to stop smoking and you are having trouble doing it on your own, we have helped hundreds of people beat the habit through simple hypnosis.

Not enough money to clean up plant

By RICH KIRKPATRICK
Associated Press Writer

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP) — Three years after the accident at Three Mile Island, there still isn't enough money to clean up the nuclear power plant. Where once there was fear and anger, now there is anquish over the slow pace of recovery.

Congress is considering legislation to make money available to repair the damaged power plant, but the prospects are not good. And meanwhile, most major goals in the $1 billion cleanup are more than a year away.

On Sunday, the anniversary of the March 28, 1979, accident, protesters plan to burn utility bills on the state Capitol steps in nearby Harrisburg to register their frustration.

"That thing over there is still cooking," said Florence Kerns, who works in a country store near the plant's gate. "I'm always afraid every time the siren goes off ... I just wish they'd get it cleaned up."

BERYL AND LEWIS Young, who live in a mobile home on a hill overlooking the plant, also worry when they hear the sirens wail and loudspeakers crackle at the plant. Some are drills. Some are not. Three low-level emergencies have been declared at the plant since January, with the latest coming just last week.

"Nobody comes up here and tells us whether we should grab our stuff and go," said Mrs. Young. "They say there's nothing down there that can happen, but who knows what's down there."

As for the cleanup: "I feel they certainly could have been much further along," she said.

The plant's owner, General Public Utilities Corp. of Parsippany, N.J., has struggled financially since the accident, the worst at a U.S. commercial reactor. GPU says it could be forced into bankruptcy if it doesn't get help in paying for the decontamination.

It also says it needs to restart the undamaged Unit 1 reactor on the island to pay its share of the cleanup. But a court suit and a still uncharted steam tube problem have delayed the unit's reopening by six months to a year.

MEANWHILE, the cleanup at the damaged Unit 2 reactor proceeds slowly. The accident was triggered when a pressure relief valve in the Unit 2 reactor system stuck open for nearly 2½ hours, letting water escape from the primary coolant system.

Plant operators then misread their instruments and turned off high pressure emergency water systems that would have kept the core covered.

At various times during the accident as much as two-thirds of the 12-foot high core was without its cooling water shield. Estimates are that about 10 million curies of radioactive xenon and kypton were released to the atmosphere during the accident.

Since then, new filtering and waste storage systems have been built, but inside the containment building, technicians have gotten only as far as removing radioactive water that spilled into the basement. About 600,000 gallons have been filtered and stored at the plant.

Congress has approved $32.8 million in research and development funds through the Department of Energy and about a third of that is going directly to on-site efforts, said TMI spokesman Doug Bedell. In addition, GPU has been spending $300 million in insurance funds.

UNDER A DOE-SUPPORTED project, technicians have been spraying the interior walls of the containment building to wash off radioactive decontamination, he said. Tests are under way with a plastic coating that will also will be applied to the walls and then scraped off and disposed of with other radioactive wastes.

The stiffest technical challenge, the mangled reactor itself, won't be faced until 1985, and the lack of money is delaying preparations for that task, Bedell said.

Gov. Dick Thornburgh and members of the state's Washington delegation have proposed a number of financial plans, all of which call for cash commitments from the nuclear industry.

A six-year $760 million cost-sharing plan proposed by the governor was endorsed by the Edison Electric Institute, a nationwide utility organization, but it has not gained support in Congress.

"Why should owners and customers of a nuclear plant who are already paying for safeguards on their own facility pay for the negligence at a plant across the country," Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., asked when a House subcommittee first considered a TMI bill last year.

AT THE SAME time, the nuclear industry has said federal legislation is needed before it can contribute any of the $190 million Thornburgh suggested.

Pennsylvania's share of the plan would be $30 million. New Jersey, where GPU and Jersey Central Power & Light, part owner of the plant, are located, would be asked for $15 million. The federal government would contribute $190 million and GPU, $245 million. The remainder would come from insurance.

Of all the parties involved, Congress is least aware "that the option to do nothing is not on the table," Thornburgh said in an interview. Even so, he said Pennsylvania will continue to push for needed aid.

"We're not going to give up," he said. "... It's not a dollars and cents matter. It's a matter of health, safety and environmental integrity in this area."

One argument against TMI in Congress is that the company's ratepayers are not sharing enough of the cleanup burden. The Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission has approved $37.5 million in GPU customer rates for decontamination.

BUT THE NEW rates and the company's contribution under the governor's plan won't materialize until the plant's undamaged Unit 1 returns to service.

Once back on line, TMI-1 would save GPU about $7 million a month in replacement power costs. That money would be available for cleanup.

But cracks recently were found in the unit's steam generating tubes and as many as one third of the 31,000 tubes may be involved. Also, a federal court has ordered that a study be conducted to see whether the restart would cause stress among nearby residents.

Still, both company and federal officials say the cleanup could be moving faster. Technical staff was trimmed in late 1980 and a once ambitious 1983 completion target has evaporated.

After a tour of the plant in February, Nunzio Palladino, chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, said he was unhappy with the pace and had a "major concern" that new problems could surface at the plant.

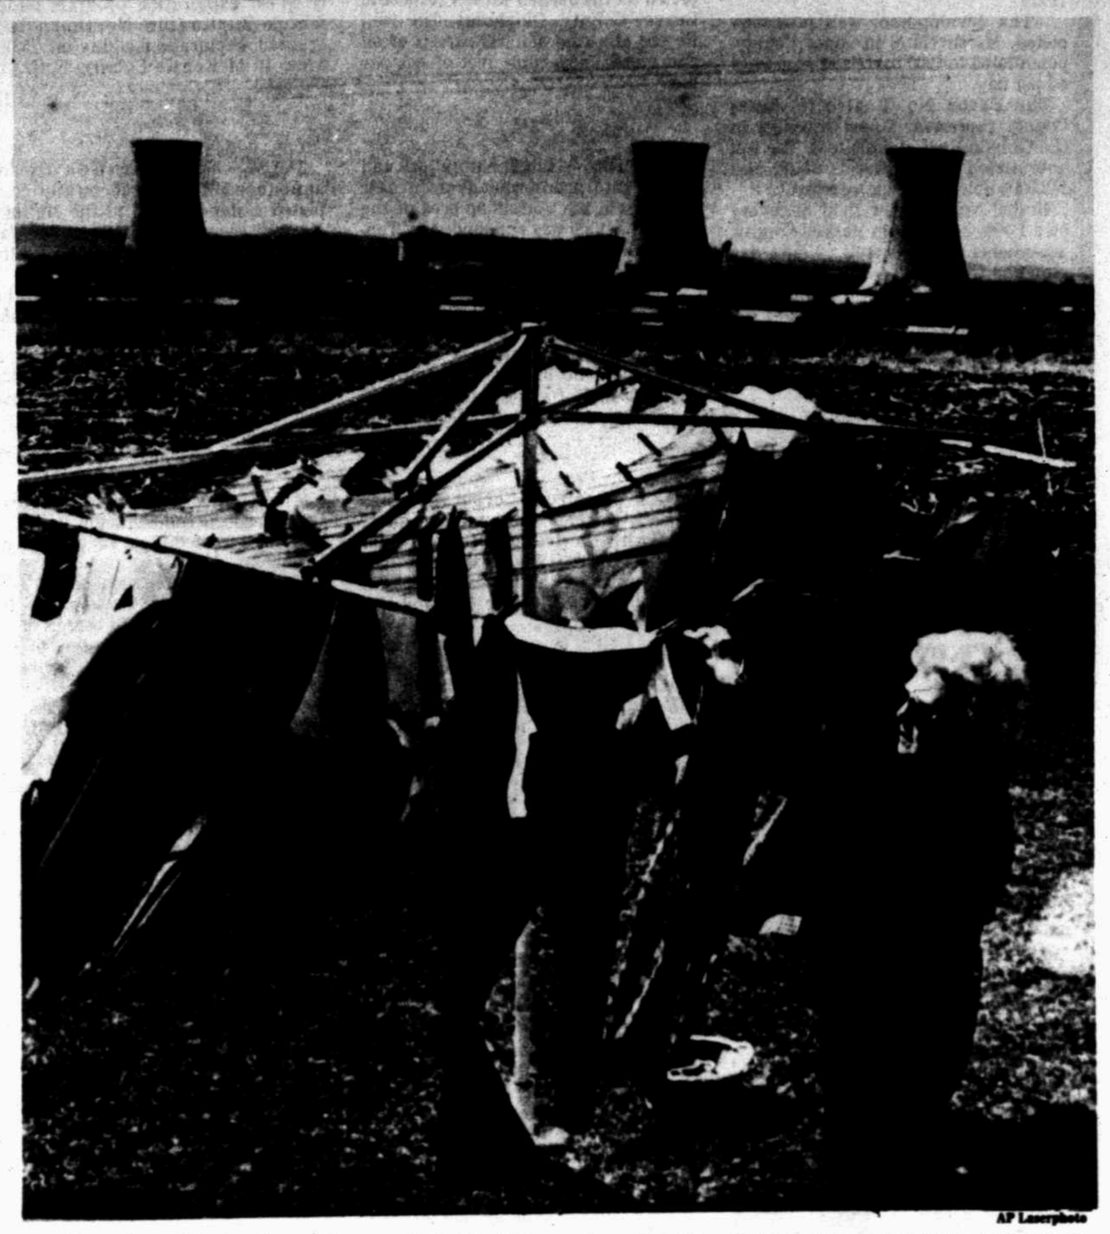

BEARING OUT his assessment, three "unusual events" — lowest of four emergency stages — have been declared at the plant this year. They proved minor, but officials had some anxious moments before the incidents could be explained.

Palladino said the potential for deterioration of plant systems and unexpected radiation releases "argue, that as a last resort, it is time for the federal government to take a more aggressive role."

But the NRC spelled out last week that it can't act as a TMI lobby.

"This commission cannot, so to speak, put a deal together," NRC Commissioner Victor Gilinsky told the Newhouse News Service.

Local officials are at a loss as to what to do, except argue more strongly for federal involvement.

Synfuel project gettting careful look

By KAREN TUMULTY
(c) 1982, Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — In the wake of reports that the Colony Shale Oil Project may cost billions of dollars more than Tosco Corp. has estimated, the United States Synthetic Fuel Corporation announced Friday that it will take a careful look at the project before allowing Tosco to draw on any more of its $1.1 billion in federal loan guarantees.

Further, in a closed-door session, the board passed a resolution giving its chairman, Edward E. Noble, the authority "to take any actions which are necessary preconditions to termination of the (loan-guarantee) commitment," if he feels it is necessary.

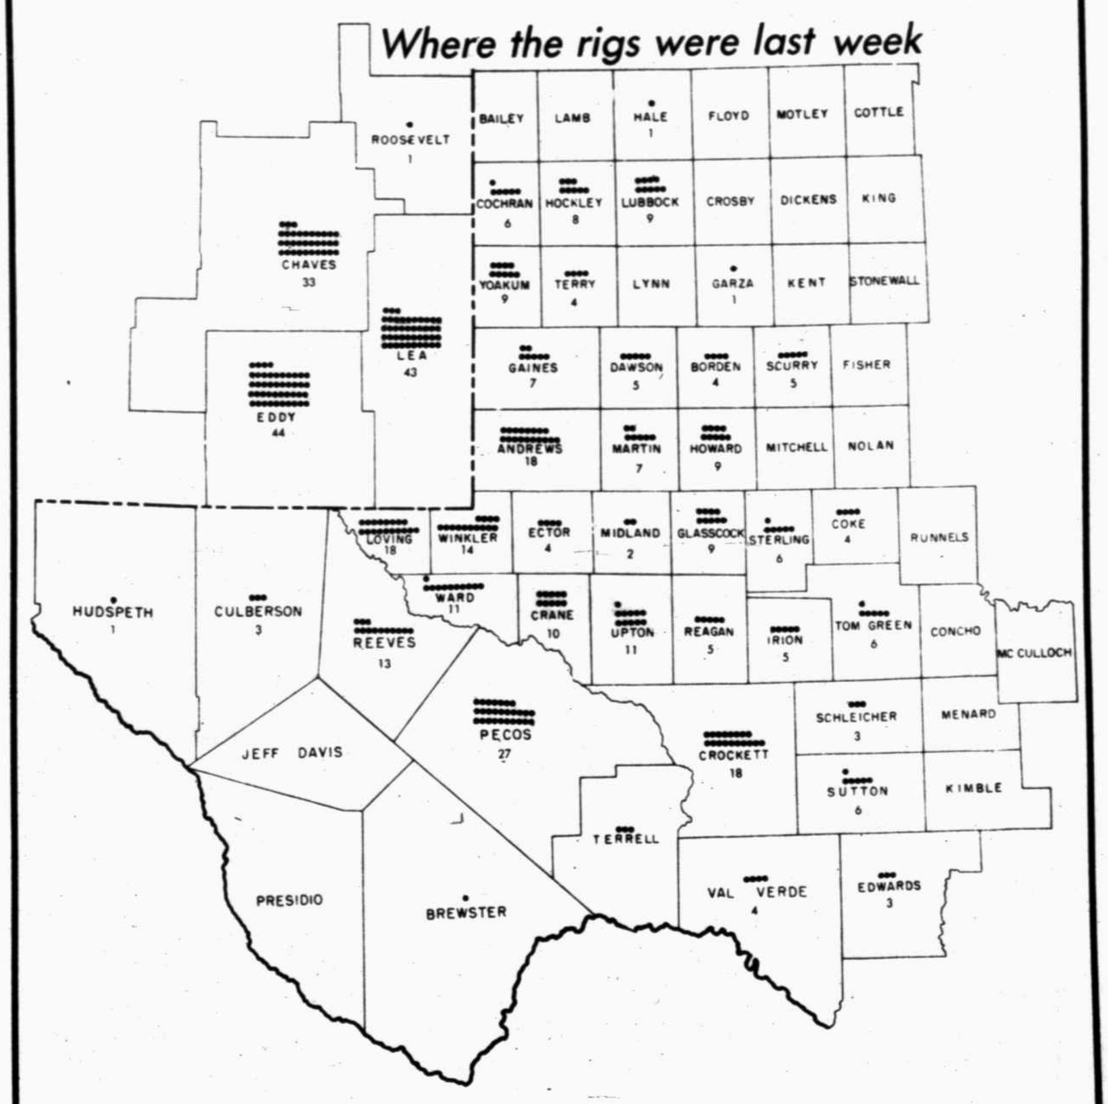

The proejct entails extracting fuel oil from tons of shale.

Calling the potential cost overrun a "very serious situation," Noble said, "We've got to assure ourselves that the monies of the federal government are adequately protected."

No decision has been made concerning Los Angeles-based Tosco's next draw down on the loan, which is scheduled for April 1. Tosco already has been authorized to draw $75 million.

Tosco previously indicated it could not participate in the project if it did not have the loan guarantee. However, a Tosco spokesman said that a "modest delay" would not harm Tosco's ability to continue participating in the project.

Rotary tally continues decline

The Permian Basin rotary rig count contined a down hill slide last week, according to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. The bit makers reported 401 rigs making hole throughout the Basin, down considerably from 427 the previous week.

Last week's total was the lowest since last May.

Other totals for the past month were: 446, March 12; 454, March 5; and 454, Feb. 26.

One year ago Reed counted 406 rigs working the region shown in the map above.

Nationally, the rig count figures are still dropping like a rock. The International Association of Drilling Comtractors reports 3,747 rigs were turning to the right March 22. The previous week's total was 3,823. February 22 the number was 4,072.

On March 23, 1981, the IADC saw 3,605 rigs running.

The IADC figures show 1,087 onshore rigs making hole in Texas last week, and 139 working New Mexico.

Gas prices dropping; but what are the effects

The largest drop in fuel prices in years has sent prices plummenting at the pumps. Naturally, motorists are pleased, but why are prices diminishing and what will the effects be?

In the lasts survey taken by the American Automobile Association, (AAA), 346 station were surveyed. The survey indicates significant decreases, in some cases 8 cents per gallon since the January 29, 1982 survey. Overall state averages reflect the drop, but some hold-outs cause the average to appear slightly higher than actual prices reported in some of the larger Texas towns.

Prices run the gamut; survey highs and lows are as follows: Full service regular 1.07 (Waco) to 1.47 (Temple); unleaded 1.267 (Beaumont) to 1.51 (Temple); premium unleaded 1.55 (Temple). Self service regular .999 (Galveston) to 1.555 (Temple); unleaded 1.08 (Huntsville) to 1.48 (Temple); premium unleaded 1.13 (Huntsville) to 1.52 (Temple).

But why are prices decreasing? Prices depend on suppliers' and gasoline dealers' profit margins as well as rent and labor costs. overall, gasoline dealers have increased margine over wholesale to about 10 cents a gallon from 8.47 cents a gallon at the beginning of the year. That margin includes money used to meet expenses. The plea for conservation has been heeded, the economy is weak and the demand for gasoline is decreasing.

With oil prices plunging, motorists may decide that now is the time to travel, causing a rebound in demand and a boost in prices. Prices are down by as much as 8-9 cents sper gallon (full service regular and unleaded) to 16 cents per gallon (self services regular and unleaded) since last year at this time. The American Automobile Association Fuel Survey shows that the last time we saw prices at this level awas as long ago as October, 1980. With the confusion in the market, there is no accurate away of measuring how far prices will drop in the months to come.

Current average full service gasoline prices (January 1982 prices are in parentheses) are: Regular 1.268 (1.336); unleaded 1.312 (1.371); premium unleaded 12.381 (1.431); diesel 1.27 (1.303),. The average prices in the self-service category are: regular 1.112 (1.187); unleaded 1.179 (1 262); premium unleaded 1.277 (1.346); diesel 1.1151 (1.206). Following is a summary of the average gasoline prices in various Texas cities:

Unbelievable.

But true.

There are some investors who do their own research, make their decision and then call a traditional "full commission" stock brokerage firm.
The result: They pay a commission much higher than is necessary.
The alternative: Little and Company - an execution specialist.
By eliminating a research department, commissioned salesmen and related management staff, Little and Company is able to provide what the experienced client wants...fast, accurate executions with substantial commission discounts.
Many investors have questions about an execution specialist's operation. These are a few of the most often asked:

Q: Will I get the same price as from a traditional "full commission" firm?

A: Absolutely. Our orders are directly transmitted to the proper exchange floor or respective OTC trader. Our New York correspondent, Pershing, is one of the industry's most respected names.

Q: Are checks issued locally?

A: Yes, Little and Company issues checks directly to its clients.

Q: Can I phone for quotations?

A: Yes, our traders are available throughout the day for quotations.

Q: Are certificates issued promptly?

A: The average time frame is less than four weeks for exchange-traded issues. Certain foreign and obscure issues require additional time.

DALLAS (SWN) — Enserch Corporation announced/the filing of a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission relating to a proposed public offering of $100 million in sinking fund debentures due 2007. Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Salomon Brothers Inc. will act as joint managers for the group of underwriters that will market the debentures.

Net proceeds from the proposed financing will be used by the Corporation to reduce commercial paper indebtedness.

In the filing, Enserch disclosed that for the first two months of 1982 revenues were $666 million compared with $542 million for the like 1981 period. Earnings totaled $37.7 million for the first two months of 1982, unchanged from the year-earlier level. Earnings applicable to common stock were $.67 for the first two months of 1982 versus $.74 for the comparable period a year earlier. The reduction in per share results reflects some seven million additional average common shares outstanding, 13.9 percent higher than the year-earlier period.

DALLAS (SWN) — Texas Oil & Gas Corp.'s Board of Directors declared today a regular quarterly cash dividend of six cents per share, payable April 15, 1982 to stockholders of record April 5, 1982.

The dividend is the third regular quarterly cash payment for fiscal 1982, which began September 1, 1981, and brings the yearly total to date to 18 cents per share, compared with an adjusted 13.5 cents per share paid through the same year-earlier period. Presently there are approximately 95.3 million shares of common stock outstanding.

The Woodlands — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. has reported record earnings and revenues for the fiscal year and quarter ended Jan. 31, 1982.

George P. Mithcell, chairman and president, said net earnings for fiscal 1982 amounted to $115,217,000 or $2.41 per share, up 15 percent from the $100,535,000, or $2.10 per share, earned in the prior year. Revenues rose to $1,064,844,000 from $696,044,000.

It was the company's 12th consecutive year of increased earnings, Mitchell said, and its first in which revenues topped $1 billion.

At $35,280,000, earnings for the last three months of the most recent year were 11 percent ahead of the $31,827,000 earned in the corresponding year-earlier period. Per share earnings increased to 74 cents from 66 cents and revenues to $285,666,000 from $219,735,000.

FORT WORTH — Southland Royalty Company recently announced that the present value of future net revenues from proved reserves at December 31, 1981 increased 9 percent to $1,333,000,000 compared with $1,218,000,000 at year-end 1980.

Estimated future net revenues from proved reserves increased slightly to $2,969,000,000 compared with $2,929,000,000 at December 31, 1980.

Projections of future net revenues and reserve estimates are made by independent petroleum engineers using price and cost assumptions required by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC).

Proved oil and gas reserves at December 31, 1981, were 88,507,000 barrels of oil and 604,966,000 thousand cubic feet of gas or 189,335,000 equivalent barrels of oil after converting gas to oil. This is 5 percent less than 199,605,000 equivalent barrels reported at December 31, 1980. In 1981, Southland produced 18,214,000 equivalent barrels and added 11,129,000 equivalent barrels through extensions, discoveries and other additions.

The SEC requires that projections of future net revenues be made using current prices and costs except that prices may be escalated where allowed by existing contracts or by current federal regulation. A discount factor of 10 percent is required in computing the present value of future net revenues.

Southland Royalty Company reports higher future net revenues are estimated when prices and costs are escalated for inflation. If prices and costs are escalated 7 percent per year, up to $70 per barrel of oil and $50 per barrel equivalent of gas, estimated future net revenues increase to $4,631,000,000 and present value, discounted at 10 percent, increases to $1,834,000,000. These assumptions are used by Southland's lenders in determining debt limitations and should not be interpreted as a market value of the Company's proved reserves. A determination of market value would include many additional factors.

••••

FORT WORTH — Southland Royalty Company announced recently its board of directors has authorized the purchase of up to 2,000,000 outstanding shares of the Company's common stock.

The purchase, if completed in full, would amount to approximately 4.4 percent of currently outstanding shares.

Such purchases may be made on the open market or in privately negotiated transactions, and the amount and timing of purchases will depend upon market conditions and other factors.

The company may terminate or suspend this repurchase program at any time. In June 1981, the Company repurchased a total of 1,235,700 shares, pursuant to a similar repurchase program.

The company believes the per share value of its net assets exceeds the current market price of the common stock and that the purchase would be an attractive investment for the company.

Jon Brumley, Southland Royalty Company's president and chief executive officer, said the repurchase program will not affect the company's planned exploration and development programs and that any reacquired shares will be available for use in acquisitions, employee option or benefit plans, or for other corporate purposes.

Mineral Development Inc. recently announced that due primarily to a six-fold increase in oil and gas sales in the third fiscal quarter over the same period last year, operating results showed an improvement over the first two quarters of the fiscal year.

Third-quarter revenues were up 20 percent to $838,000 from $700,000, including a gain in revenues from oil and gas operations to $173,000 from $28,000. For the nine months ended December 31, 1981, revenues were $2.7 million compared to $1.7 million, including an increase in oil and gas revenues to $341,000 from $121,000.

Sales at our Petroflex subsidiary are up on a year-to-year basis, but these operations currently are in their annual winter slump. The seasonal softness in the market was more pronounced this year due to general economic conditions, a decline in business activity and a slight decline in drilling acitivity in Petroflex's sales area caused in part by severe weather conditions.

Oil production rate set at 100 percent

DALLAS — The Railroad Commission has set the Texas oil production rate for April 1982 at the market demand factor of 100 percent for the 62nd month in a row and the 118th time since the Commission first went to the ceiling level in April 1972.

Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Mack Wallace and Buddy Temple directed the continuance of the maximum statewide allowable after receiving and reviewing purchaser nominations for Texas oil in April totaling 2,420,367 barrels per day, a decrease of 39,025 barrels daily when compared with March 1982 buyer requests. April 1981 nominations totaled 2,590,116 barrels daily.

Next month's permissible rate of output is calculated to average 2,990,139 b/d with actual production estimated at 2.415 million b/d. The maximum allowable applies to all but 10 fields in Texas that are assigned lower legal rates of flow for conservation purposes. Actual production in April 1981 was 2,463,100 barrels daily.

Nugent reported that April 1982 nominations for the purchase of Texas gas totaled 23,350,693 Mcf/d (thousand cubic feet per day). Gas nominations for March amounted to 24,523,689 Mcf/d. April 1981 gas nominations totaled 24,237,960 Mcf/d.

The next statewide oil and gas hearing will be held Tuesday, April 20, at 9 a.m. in Midland at the Holiday Inn-Country Villa (Holidome).

Texas oil and gas wells produced 553,888,555 thousand cubic feet of gas in December 1981, down 5.61 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 468,478,581 thousand cubic feet and reflected a 7.3 percent decrease from the December 1980 volume. Marketed production is the total gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in December totaled 264,626,797 thousand cubic. Natural Gas Pipeline Company of America was the month's largest exporter, moving 68,505,632 thousand cubic feet of gas of which 39,038,005 thousand cubic feet was Texas-produced gas.

Exports of Texas-produced gas in December totaled 195,790,731 thousand cubic feet, and reflected a one percent decrease from the year-earlier month.

Texas gas production in December came from 221,094 oil and gas wells.

In November 1981, Texas wells produced 525,220,915 thousand cubic feet of gas. Marketed gas production in November totaled 434,680,488 thousand cubic feet. November exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 262,933,473 thousand cubic feet.

Sixty-five refineries in Texas processed 130,448,866 barrels of crude oil and hydrocarbon blends during December 1981.

This volume compares with 138,499,111 barrels in the previous December, the Commission's Oil and Gas Division reported in its monthly recapitulation of Texas refinery operations. Inputs of crude oil and blends totaled 120,270,632 barrels in November 1981.

Texas refineries ran 99,909,980 barrels of crude oil in December compared to 106,761,921 barrels in December 1980 and 91,664,681 barrels in November 1081.

Products manufactured in December 1981 totaled 136,738,492 barrels, down from 139,783,419 barrels in the same month the previous year, and up from the 121,137,193 barrels in November 1981.

December 1981 manufacture of motor gasoline totaled 54,653,418 barrels, compared to 52,375,919 barrels in the year-earlier month and 52,948,950 barrels in November of 1981.

Texas refineries manufactured 12,181,754 barrels of home heating oil in December 1981 — an increase of 459,171 barrels from the year-earlier volume. November 1981 output was 8,597,885 barrels.

Oil firm sues for $45 million over explosion

HOUSTON (AP) — The Pennzoil Co. has filed a $45 million lawsuit contending that failure of a gas venting system on an exploration rig in the Gulf of Mexico was to blame for an explosion and fire that killed at least five workers.

The rig exploded March 24, 1980, while drilling for natural gas about 95 miles southeast of Galveston. Five bodies were recovered. A sixth man remains missing and is presumed buried in drilling mud. Twenty-nine of the rig's 41 workers were injured.

The suit blames the blow-out on the malfunction of a diverter system marketed by Oil Field Rental Service Co. of Dallas and Oil Field of Texas Inc., the two defendants in the case.

The diverter system, used on all gas drilling rigs, is designed to vent unexpected gas pressure increases.

E.D. Vickery, attorney for the defendant, said he was "not surprised" by the suit but declined to comment further.

Damages were assessed at $15 million, but because the suit was filed under the state's Deceptive Practices and Consumer Protection Act, the oil company can sue for three times that amount.

Gas pipeline system approved by FERC

CHICAGO, ILL. — A five-member natural gas pipeline consortium recently received approval from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to build the Trailblazer Pipeline System, the nation's first major pipeline designed to move natural gas from the Rocky Mountains to Midwestern and Eastern markets. The 800-mile-long pipeline will extend from the Wyoming-Utah border, near Evanston, Wyo., to Beatrice, Neb., where it will connect with existing interstate pipeline systems.

Construction of the approximate $550 million pipeline, to tap the large Rocky Mountain-Overthrust Belt natural gas deposits discovered in recent years, is expected to begin this spring and be in operation for next winter's heating season. Authorized daily devilability at Beatrice is 525 million cubic feet of gas.

The five companies participating in the Trailblazer Project, either directly or through affiliates, are: Colorado Interstate Gas Company, Colorado Springs, a subsidiary of The Coastal Corp., Houston; Columbia Gulf Transmission Company, Houston, a subsidiary of The Columbia Gas System, Inc., Wilmington, Del.; Mountain Fuel Resources, Inc., Salt Lake City, a subsidiary of Mountain Fuel Supply Company; Northern Natural Resources Company, Omaha, a division of InterNorth, Inc.; and Natural Gas Pipeline Company of America, a subsidiary of Chicago-based MidCon Corp.

The FERC order, which approved project financing for the pipeline, is conditioned upon the companies' their right to seek recovery of their equity investment in the event that the project subsequently fails. The participants have 30 days to accept the certificate offered by the Commission. If the waiver is not acceptable to the participating companies, the Commission stated that it was prepared to entertain an application for the Trailblazer System based upon a conventional financing plan and to expedite review of such a plan.

George L. Morrow, president of Natural Gas Pipeline Company, said that Trailblazer is one of the most significant natural gas projects to be launched in recent years, primarily because it taps one of the country's major undeveloped gas sources.

"Friday's action by the Commission in approving Trailblazer will have a major impact on the nation's natural gas supply," he said. "It not only makes the vast potential reserves of the Overthrust available to major markets in the Midwest and the east, but will also lead to further exploration and production now that a pipeline for delivering the gas has been approved." The pipeline project is divided into three segements, each to be separately owned and operated. All the pipe will be 36 inches in diameter.

The western segement, called Overthrust, to be built and operated by Mountain Fuel Resources and owned equally by all five participating companies, will extnd 88 miles from the Whitney Canyon/Carter Creek producing areas on the Wyoming-Utah border to Rock Springs, Wyoming. The middle Colorado Interstate segment, to be constructed, operated, and owned by Colorado Interstate, extends 269 miles from Rock Springs to Rockport, Colo. The easternmost segment, 436 miles long, will extend from Rockport to Beatrice. This segment, called Trailblazer, will be constructed and operated by Natural Gas Pipeline, and jointly owned by Natural, Columbia, and InterNorth. Construction will proceed simultaneously on eight separate spreads with the total project expected to be completed in the fall, 1982.

Together, the pipeline companies participating in Trailblazer serve about one-fourth of the nation's natural gas customers in nearly two dozen states. Large Urban areas served include Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha, Minneapolis-St. Paul, the Iowa-Illinois quad cities, the Chicago Metropolitan area, Cincinnati, Co,lumbus, Charleston, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, and the District of Columbia.

Deliveries to Colorado Interestate's and Mountain Fuel's markets will be transported through Trailblazer and existing pipelines of the two companies. The gas for markets north and east of Trailblazer's terminus at Beatrice will be delivered either directly, or by displacement, through existing pipelines of Columbia, Northern Natural, and Natural Gas Pipeline.

Cutbacks could result in deferral of modernization programs

WASHINGTON — Any substantial cutback on the business-tax benefits of th Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1081 would "almost certainly" result in "cancellation or deferral of a major part" of the announced modernization programs of companies in the steel industry, Donald H. Truatlein, chairman of bethlehem Steel Corporation, said today in testimony prepared for delivery to the Senate Finance Committee.

The Administration's proposal that more than half the tax reductions granted by the 1981 Tax Act for fiscal years 1982-1985 should be reversed is "more than a cause for concern, it is alarming," Mr. Truatlein said, testifying on behalf of the American Iron and Steel Institute. He reminded the committee that since November 1980 individual companies in the steel industry have announced modernization programs which total more than $6.9 billion of capital investments.

The Administration's collective tax recommendations would offset the venefits of the 1981 Act before they can even begin to be felt, Mr. Truatlein said. "The apparent instability in tax policy which is inherent in this decision may very well erode the confidence of the business community in the Administration's over-all economic policies," he told the Committee.

Mr. Truatlein described the effect on the steel industry of several proposals to amend the law:

Alternative Minimum Tax. The most adverse impact will be on cyclical low-profit capital intensive industries, such as steel, which need cash for investment in productive assets. Six companies representing about two-thirds of doemstic raw steel production estimate that the proposal would cost them $634-million in increased tax payments in 1983-1985 – a tremendous cash drain which comes not in a time of great prosperity but during or at the end of a period of severe economic decline. The effect of the Alternative Minimum Tax proposal, which Mr. Truatlein termed "totally illogical," would be to defer to more prosperous times a reduction in taxes resulting from unused tax credits.

Safe Harbor Leasing. These rules were adopted in place of investment tax credit refundability or transferability, as a mechanism whereby low profit capital intensive industries, such as steel, could utilize their unused investment tax credits to generate much needed investment capital. In 1981 the steel industry generated some $250-million through this provision, and it is expected that the amount would be double that in 1982. Mr. Trautlein described this leasing method as a "timing device" which provides no additional deductions or credits but which permits less-profitable companies to receive cash now rather than in the future.

Mr. Trautlein urged the committee to resist growing pressure to repeal or curtail the leasing provisions in a time of recession, because "internall-generated funds so essential to modernizaion plans will be so severely curtailed."

Sausalito Corp. to offer special financing package

MIDLAND — Sausalito Corporation, owner of Town Plaza Condominiums at 3000 West Illinois in Midland has arranged a special financing package for qualified purchasers. The package allows condominium buyers to lock in a lower-than-market rate for the first three years of their mortgage loan.

The special rate available during March is 13.25 percent.

The mortgage rate is set monthly, and is tied to a rate less than the average yield of one-year U. S. Treasury bills. Qualified applicants are then guaranteed that rate for the first three years of a 30-year mortgage. Principal and interest payments will increase 10 percent in the fourth year, and an additional 10 percent in the fifth year.

Town Plaza Condominiums is a 51-unit project at 3000 West Illinois.

'Legacy' is the beginning

In commissioning author Gus Clemens to write Legacy, a panorama of Midland local and regional history from the arrival of Stone Age hunters more than 15,000 years ago to the dynamic energy center of today, First National Bank is embarking on another extraordinary example of the fine public service it has exhibited down through the years.

True, there is a financial aspect to Legacy. But the historical saga will go beyond that. First National is producing Legacy because it is a story that needs to be told, a story that will detail how and why a barren plain was destined to become one of the most important regions in the world today.

In fact, details of the production of Legacy are reminiscent of the original production of the drama Texas that enters its 17th season this summer at Palo Duro Canyon State Park in the Texas Panhandle. Just as Texas, the brainchild of Margaret Harper, retraces the steps of early day Texans on the South Plains and Panhandle in drama, dance and music, so will Legacy immortalize in print the men and women who visualized a modern, progressive city midway between Fort Worth and El Paso.

Just as Texas recounts development of the South Plains and Panhandle region from days of the dinosaur through the years of Indian occupation and Spanish exploration to settlement by the farmers and ranchers who inhabit that area today, so can Legacy serve as the springboard to a dramatic production of historical import about the Permian Basin.

This region shares every one of the ingredients that came to life in Texas by the skill of the late Paul Green and, through the end of last season, had attracted and entertained a total of 1,322,911 people. What's more, the Permian Basin boasts a rich oil heritage that is custom-made for adding an exciting dimension to any historical production.

Is all of this wishful thinking? A production about the Permian Basin, telling the stories of our forefathers in drama, song and dance? Possibly. But we don't think so. Legacy as it is planned is just the kind of literary work that will lend itself to relatively easy interpretation on the stage. Legacy will be in and of itself an outstanding production, we are sure. But it could serve as the substantial foundation for another work that would blend more fully the talents of local artists.

The result of Legacy could be twofold: (1) It could spawn a major new summer attraction for this region and (2) it could cultivate a deeper appreciation of Midlanders' cultural heritage while providing yet another outlet for the city's expanding talent in music, drama and related arts.

Texas has the scenic Palo Duro Canyon as its backdrop, but a natural amphitheater is not essential. Dramatic works should be presented in as natural a setting as possible whenever available. Midland's sparkling clear summer nights and mild temperatures would be conducive to the outdoor production the work should have.

Legacy will be a fantastic beginning. But with what Midland has going for it, the historical saga might just serve as a springboard to the stars.

Israeli system works

Politics in Israel is a complicated business. Nothing could have demonstrated this more sharply than the 58-to-58 Parliament vote on a no-confidence motion, with Prime Minister Menachem Begin emerging as the winner.

Under the Israeli system it takes a majority to pass such a motion. A tie vote is not enough, so, technically, the victory went to Mr. Begin. Being a realist, however, the Prime Minister did not take this as any resounding endorsement of his administration, so he offered to resign. The cabinet knew this was an inopportune time for such a move, so by a vote of 12-to-6 it rejected the resignation.

Why the close vote? Some of the more liberal members of Parliament have been protesting Begin-backed settlements on the West Bank, causing increased violence in the past few days. Conservative parliamentarians grabbed the no-confidence motion as an opportunity to protest removal of Israelis from Sinai.

These were the more obvious reasons for protests against Mr. Begin, but in the background were other issues that played a role in the tie. No-confidence motions, of which there were three the other day, provide members of Parliament an opportunity to vent their frustrations on all manner of policies and programs. A sodden economy was one of them recently. So was displeasure over many aspects of the peace process, and doubts about the Begin administration's ability to work harmoniously with Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak.

More than a single issue was involved in the ironic 58-to-58 vote which at once registered resentment of Begin policies but saved the administration from an upheaval. Many points of friction were responsible for the outcome.

What all this adds up to is another display of the strength of Israel's democracy, which never has been a simple process. The tie vote episode shows once again that free expression prevails in Israel, but that the system has mechanisms to absorb shocks that might bring down a government unnecessarily.

Injustice in India

India's Prime Minister, Indira Gandhi, continues to try to keep the press under her thumb. This is an injustice to publishers, editors and reporters, in a country that has distinguished itself for the vigor and veracity of its reporting of the news.

If India has become known for a wayward press, one that needs to be disciplined to remind it of its responsibilities, Mrs. Gandhi's harassment would be more understandable. But waywardness has not been one of its characteristics. Indeed, at one time, the newspapers of that nation were generally linked on the scale of excellence with those of Japan, Canada, Great Britain, West Germany and the United States.

Then came Prime Minister Gandhi's first regime. To protect her government from criticism she had newspapers censored and some of their proprietors jailed. During what was euphemistically called a "state of emergency" the flow of information in India was shamefully stifled.

It was hoped that period was past, but in recent days such hopes have been shattered. Mrs. Gandhi once again is complaining that the press does not print the news as she would like it. In her opinion:

"For a country which is trying to pick itself up from such a tremendous trauma of having undergone colonial rule, cynicism and pessimism is very close to crime. The press does not admit that anything good has happened."

As a result of their failure to report and edit as told, some of India's journalists have been arrested on questionable charges. Some have been assaulted and beaten, by assailants suspected of working for the Gandhi government.

What Prime Minister Gandhi does not realize is that a free press can be the best ally of a nation trying to bounce back from the "tremendous trauma . . . of colonial rule." People with the right to know what is going on within their government, and are allowed the independence to criticize it, are less likely to be cynical and pessimistic.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

IAEA is a toothless watchdog in Mideast

WASHINGTON — The Israelis' preemptive strike against Iraq's nuclear facility at Osirak last June raised a storm of controversy centered on the rights and wrongs of Prime Minister Menachem Begin's decision to bomb Iraq. The Reagan administration was particularly incensed that Israel hadn't notified its ally ahead of time.

Jack Anderson

But the bigger issue, almost lost sight of in the general uproar, is what impelled Israel to undertake the raid in the first place. Iraq is a signatory to the multination Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty; if it was in fact building a nuclear weapon at Osirak, such a violation should have been discovered and reported by the treaty's watchdog, the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The sad truth, though, is that the IAEA is a toothless watchdog. It suffers from political, financial and technical constraints. And the treaty itself is so full of holes the signatory nations routinely thumb their noses at the enforcement agency.

As a former IAEA inspector told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last year, common sense led to a plausible assumption that the Iraqis were indeed building a nuclear weapon. Iraq has too much oil to feel a need for nuclear power plants, and the Iraqis' claim that the Osirak facility was simply intended for "research" was ludicrous.

So why didn't Israel simply voice its suspicions and ask the IAEA to determine whether there was weapons-grade material or capability at Osirak? The answer: Israel presumably realized how ineffectual the IAEA is.

A number of secret studies have been made of the nuclear watchdog agency. One of the most telling was a confidential report by the General Accounting Office's international division. My associate Lucette Lagnado has seen a copy of the still-unreleased GAO report.

The GAO was sharply critical of the IAEA, and warned that the United States should not count on it to uncover clandestine nuclear weapons activity.

"The United States has placed great trust in the international safeguards system to sound the alarm if nuclear material is diverted," the report notes. "Moreover, it has, over the years, helped to persuade other nations that they too should rely on the IAEA system for assurances that others were not diverting nuclear material from peaceful uses."

The GAO auditors then go on to spell out some of the fatal weaknesses in the international inspection system. Here are some of them:

— Politically motivated "safeguards" allow any signatory nation to reject individual inspectors arbitrarily. Unfortunately, this provision has evolved into a wholesale rejection of inspectors on grounds of politics or nationality. The effect has been to limit the makeup of IAEA inspection teams to individuals from "friendly" countries. Iraq, for example, had allowed only inspectors from the Soviet bloc to check its Osirak facility.

— Even if a truly neutral inspector is allowed onto an IAEA team, there is still little chance that illegal activity will be discovered. "IAEA inspectors do not have unlimited access on their inspections," the GAO explained. "IAEA has no authority to implement physical protection measures, such as armed guards or fences, in their safeguards activities, or to pursue and recover diverted nuclear material." They aren't even allowed to search for "undeclared or clandestine facilities," the report adds.

In other words, the nation being inspected for possible covert nuclear weapons activity has virtually total control over what the international inspectors are allowed to see.

— The technical equipment available to IAEA teams is often inadequate. Much of it is not sensitive enough to detect losses of nuclear material that might have been diverted to bombs.

"Because the existing equipment cannot precisely determine the amount of material on hand, there can be no assurance that every loss will be detected," the GAO report states. "This decreases the ability to detect potential diversion when large amounts of nuclear material are handled."

A particularly alarming deficiency in the IAEA's equipment is its inability to verify the content of spent fuel — the stuff that bombs are made of. "U.S. officials also believe that equipment needs to be developed on an urgent basis for the effective and efficient application of safeguards at commercial fuel fabrication plants, especially those handling plutonium and highly enriched uranium," the GAO reports.

— In addition to everything else, the IAEA is short of money. Its job has grown infinitely more complicated with the proliferation of nuclear-energy plants around the world in recent years, but the agency's funding has not kept pace.

Not surprisingly, American taxpayers are saddled with the biggest share of the IAEA financial burden. The United States contributes several million dollars a year, while some signatory nations kick in only a few hundred dollars.

— Finally, the GAO concluded, the IAEA doesn't have the necessary expertise to check out the most dangerous kinds of nuclear facilities. Though IAEA inspectors are competent to check the light-water power reactors that were once the norm, they aren't very good with the reprocessing and enrichment plants that have increased in recent years. "Such plants are key to the proliferation issue because they can provide direct access to weapons-usable material," the GAO noted.

GEORGE F. WILL

Where is Trotsky when you need him?

WASHINGTON — Where is Trotsky, now that we really need him?

I have been done hideous injury by a malefactor of great wealth, a capitalist pest called CC Assets Distribution Corp. That is the clanking, officious name for what until recently was called, melodically, the Chicago National League Ball Club.

George F. Will

The Cubs, who have notoriously few athletic assets, invented trickledown baseball. They acquire aging players (Dizzy Dean, Ralph Kiner) as their careers trickled down to a level suitable for the Cubs, a team forever trickling down in the standings. And now the Cubs' pestilential new management has engaged in a rapacious business practice that makes me think the Russian Revolution treated capitalists about right.

The brutes at the CC Assets Distribution Corp. inform me that they are exercising their right — a right, mind you: is this America or Poland? — to buy back my one share of Cub stock. Because these robber barons are conscienceless, and because the law is deaf to the voice of justice, I am no longer a baseball owner.

If this is the capitalist system Ronald Reagan wants to save, I say bring on Walter Mondale to destroy it, root and branch. Peremptory letters from faceless financiers; mere money given in exchange for a piece of my soul — Hell must be very like this.

But on a spring day, when all of Nature seems to shout "Play Ball!", even Cub fans can enjoy one exquisite baseball pleasure. They can read Thomas Boswell's nifty new book, "How Life Imitates the World Series."

Sports serve society by providing vivid examples of excellence. So do sports pages when graced by Boswell's by-line. He is the thinking person's writer about the thinking person's sport. Like baseball itself, he is graceful, subtle, elegant, inexhaustibly interesting, and fun.

Baseball is for all of us who feel as Pete Rose does: "I was raised, but I never did grow up." Boswell is for all who like fine writing. Baseball, like Pericles' Athens (or any other good society), is simultaneously democratic and aristocratic: Anyone can enjoy it, but the more you apply yourself, the more you enjoy it.

Boswell has applied himself. His father works at the Library of Congress and one day smuggled his son into the closed stacks, to the sacred precincts of deck 29, and said: "Okay. Here is every book on baseball ever written. Don't go blind." Heaven must be very like that.

Bill Veeck, who, like me, is a former baseball owner, thinks it is to baseball's credit that when the times were out of joint, baseball was out of step: "The Sixties was a time for grunts or screams. . . . The sports that fitted the times were football, hockey and mugging." One of Boswell's (and my) pinup's, Earl Weaver, the philosopher-king who manages the Baltimore Orioles, says: "This ain't a football game. We do this every day." An Orioles coach says: "In this game it's never going to be third-down-and-one. You don't hit off tackle in baseball, and you can't play the game with your teeth gritted. Muscles are fine. But this is a game of relaxation, conditioned reflex, and mental alertness."

That is why Boswell says a good team depends on "the ability to achieve a blend of intensity and underlying serenity which, in daily life, we might call mental health. . . . Baseball is to our everyday experience what poetry often is to common speech — a slightly elevated and concentrated form." Boswell, an English major from Amherst, says, "Each team's season is like a traditional nineteenth century novel, a heaping up of detail and incident about one large family."

Yes, but some teams' seasons call to mind Dickens' "Great Expectations," an eventful progress toward a happy ending. The Cubs' seasons are Dostoyevskian — "Crime and Punishment" and "The House of the Dead" — full of angst and gnashing teeth. It is the Karamazov family at play. But the CC Assets Distribution Corp. is about to erupt from the dugout for another crack at life without a safety net. Recently (since the days when fans drove to the park in Hudsons and Packards — since 1946) the Cubs have had two problems: They put too few runs on the scoreboard and the other guys put too many. So what is the new management improving? The scoreboard.

Management recently chastised the players: "The Cubs have gained the reputation of being somewhat laissez-faire in their approach to work." At Wrigley Field, they handle words the way they handle ground balls.

ART BUCHWALD

It's not wise to say bye to the help!

"Mr. Reagan, Mr. Reagan. Wake up, your honeymoon is over."

"So soon?"

"You've had a longer one than most presidents, sir. If you weren't such a lovable guy we would have asked you to leave the honeymoon suite three months ago."

Art Buchwald

"Gosh, I was having such a good time. I wish it could have gone on forever."

"Don't we all? But no honeymoon can last forever — or it wouldn't be called a honeymoon. Now you have to go and find out what its really like to be married to the American people. Don't forget when you took your presidential vows it was for better or for worse."

"How does a president know when his honeymoon is over?"

"When the population starts to question all those beautiful things you whispered in their ears. They've heard them before, but when they're in love, they want to believe them. Then one day they say, 'He promised me a rose garden, and all he gave me was cheddar cheese.'"

"It's the media that have done it. They've made me into a Scrooge. I am a compassionate, kind, generous person and the softest touch they've had in a long time. But all they talk about is budget deficits, and unemployment and high interest rates. Why do they do that?"

"Because the press is in show business, Mr. President. They're always playing up the bad news in South Succotash and they never talk about the good news. Now will you please get out of bed so the maid can clean up the room?"

"You know who really ruined my honeymoon?"

"No, sir."

"Congress. They're out to get me because they hate to see anyone happy."

"I couldn't agree with you more. Congress always promises a president a honeymoon, and then when he turns out the lights, they start dropping shoes on his head. Here, Mr. Reagan, is your bathrobe. Would you like to take a shower before you go?"

"Business hasn't been any help either. They're all so skeptical and downbeat, they don't believe anything I told them. If anyone ruined my honeymoon it was the gloom and doom boys on Wall Street. I gave them everything they wanted, and they still turned against me when I needed them."

"Businessmen are terribly fickle. They'll applaud you in the East Room and as soon as you leave for the Oval Office, they'll sell you short. I'll start packing your clothes while you're shaving."

"I'll tell you who really ruined my honeymoon. It was all those government bureaucrats who kept screaming about what I was doing to the old and the poor. I was willing to take care of the old and poor, but I wasn't going to let people who could work get a free ride any more. Did I ever tell you about that lady in Chicago who was getting ten welfare checks at the same time?"

"Many times, Mr. Reagan."

"How about the student who took his college loan, and put it into a 20 percent money fund?"

"That was one of your best ones."

"Or the guy who took his food stamps and bought vodka with them."

"You told that one to everybody."

"They say I never get my facts right."

"They'll say anything, Mr. Reagan, when the honeymoon is over."

"Maybe my problem is everyone thinks I'm just a nice guy. As long as they ruined my honeymoon, I can now be myself, and show them I'm as tough and mean as they are."

"It's worth a try, Mr. Reagan. Well, I guess it's time to leave the suite. We've enjoyed having you, sir. Here, I'll carry those bags for you."

"I'm going to miss this place. I had some wonderful times here. Can I say goodbye to the help?"

"I don't think that would be wise, sir. The TV reporters will just start interviewing the people I had to lay off."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, March 28, the 87th day of 1982. There are 278 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 28, 1979, the worst nuclear accident in history occurred at the Three Mile Island reactor in Pennsylvania.

On this date:

In 1938, Japan installed a puppet government of the Chinese Republic at Nanking.

In 1939, Madrid's surrender to General Francisco Franco ended the Spanish Civil War.

In 1945, Germany ended its V-rocket attacks on Britain in World War II.

In 1965, an earthquake struck Chile, killing at least 428 people.

Ten years ago: Thousands marched on Parliament in Belfast, Northern Ireland, to protest against British rule.

'New Federalism' probably won't please city governments

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Mayors who have complained in the past about having to go to Washington to get money for local projects may find themselves complaining about having to go to Austin, once the "New Federalism" is completed.

"I don't say that it's something we're going to enjoy," comments Richard D. Brown, executive director of the Texas Municipal League.

"I do think it's something that is inevitable."

The reason for Brown's assessment isn't that Texas cities are in such terrible shape.

"Financially speaking," Brown says, "they're generally as healthy today as they were two or three years ago...but that will change some in the immediate future and over the long term with the withdrawal of federal aid."

That means cities will have to turn to the Legislature and to their own local resources, Brown says.

The conceptual basis of the "New Federalism" is that as federal aid is withdrawn, federal taxes will be reduced or repealed, enabling states and local governments to use those resources.

For Texas, he comments, it means the Legislature must either broaden the revenue base for cities or provide transfers of funds from the state level.

The only other choice for the cities is to increase local taxes — and Brown notes that that action isn't a politically feasible choice, as demonstrated by the "taxpayers' revolts" of the past several years.

Cities haven't been increasing taxes, he notes, but neither have they been increasing services — and in some instances, services have decreased.

"Cities had to cut back," Brown says, and capital improvements have been deferred, since money hasn't been available."

Cities have delayed bond issues due to high interest rates, he notes — with San Antonio recently having to pay over 13 percent interest, despite an "excellent credit rating," whereas it would have had to pay only seven or eight percent just a few years ago.

But while cities have stayed away from the bond market, municipal facilities have deteriorated, and sooner or later, there must be a "catch up period," Brown believes.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

For example, he says, city street repair budgets have increased over 50 percent in the last two or three years, but roads continue deteriorating.

That, he explains, was the reason for the so-called "pothole bill" offered in 1981 by Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, to provide $75 million for street repairs and maintenance.

Such requests by cities for help from the Legislature are likely to increase in 1983, and as state aid increases, the independence that cities traditionally have enjoyed is likely to decrease, Brown comments.

"The Legislature has tended to leave cities pretty much alone," Brown says — but state money is likely to mean state control, just as federal money has meant federal control — and that will be a "significant departure" from the previous relationship of the Legislature and the cities.

Lawmakers and state officials already are looking at possible changes in state financing to help cities meet their obligations, but some financing officials are saying Texas needs to be cautious in making any alterations.

Some indication on long-term government debt may come with a report due this spring from the Texas Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, which has been examining the debt of water districts, school districts and municipalities.

TACIR also has been looking at municipal financing and alternate revenue sources.

There also have been several suggestions for various state-backed financing programs, such as that of Sen. Pete Snelson, D-Midland, candidate for Land Commissioner, for use of the Permanent School Fund to guarantee local school bond issues — to allow local districts to get a better interest rate.

Snelson argues that there have been no defaults on school bonds in 40 years — and the state could provide a service to local districts with no risk or cost to the state.

Bond experts agree that such a program may be possible — and note that the problem in Texas hasn't been with the security of the bond issues, but with the interest rates — so that getting the interest rate down could help local districts.

But those experts also wonder what sort of strings might be attached to the state's assistance — with one authority predicting school districts would reject any plan which put restrictions on their construction programs.

Those sorts of issues are likely to be talked about increasingly next year, as the cities and the state try to work out their new relationship.

SPEAKING OUT

Yes, Virginia, there are Republicans in Texas

By ROGER M. OLIEN

A resident of Midland the past nine years, Roger M. Olien is Dunagan Fellow at the University of Texas-Permian Basin in Odessa. He holds his doctorate from Brown University.

Not so long ago, many Texans might have reacted to mention of the state's Republican party with amusement: "What Republican party?" was a common response. In 1982 it is no longer necessary to apologize for studying the Republicans in Texas. The election of Ronald Reagan to the presidency, with massive and effective support from Texas, the election of Texan George Bush to the vice-presidency, and William P. Clements's tenure in the governor's mansion in Austin have stemmed the once inevitable jokes about the scarcity of Republicans in the state. The most ardent Democrat might wish, but he could hardly believe, that all the Republican voters in Texas can meet in a telephone booth. For the GOP a new day has dawned — though it was a long time coming.

Charlie Goldsmith, a Midland old-timer, recalled that during the 1920s there were only two Repulicans in Midland County, the local postmaster and Taylor Brown, a local rancher. The postmaster obviously owed his job to a political appointment. As for Taylor Brown, "it was just his way." Allowing for the customary blanket-stretching to which every accomplished storyteller is entitled, Charlie Goldsmith was closer to the truth than one might believe.

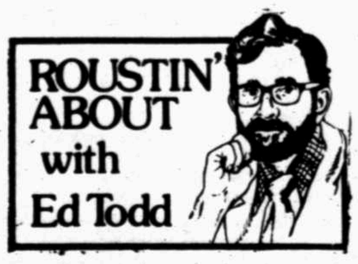

Born out of scattered Unionist sentiment in 1860, the Texas Republican party held power from 1865 to 1874; for nearly a century thereafter it failed to win another statewide election. By 1914, the Republican party was so weak that it mustered fewer votes than the Socialists in Texas. In 1920 the party was, for all practical purposes, an historical vestige, long past challenging the permanent majority party for control of the state. The Republican Party defied the conventional wisdom of Texas observers, however, and lingered on. It enjoyed some local successes during the 1920s, survived the long patronage-dry year of the Roosevelt and Truman administrations, and attracted new adherents who took over the party and renewed it during the 1950s. During two decades of growth under skillful and aggressive leadership, which succeeded in erasing the party's public image of a perpetual loser, the GOP built highly efficient grass roots operations in Midland, Dallas, Houston and the other expanding cities of Texas. By 1970, it turned its corner. Texas turned with it, into the modern arena of two-party politics.

Since then, the GOP has enjoyed an impressive string of victories, including an increasing number of successful contests for the state legislature and for Congress. John Tower, the incumbent of the Sam Houston seat in the U.S. Senate, has successfully defended it three times. Most recently, he won re-election in the general election that also placed William Perry Clements Jr. in the governorship, the first Republican to hold that post in more than a century. The string of triumphs continued in 1980, as Texans backed Ronald Reagan, long a favorite in Midland.

Will the triumphs last? Like all important historical questions, the answer will not be clear for years to come. In some measure, the answer will rest on the course of national politics; perhaps in equal measure it will rest on future developments in both parties. If the Democrats succeed in revamping their political machine and construct an effective modern organization from the assorted scraps of the current 19th-century model, and if they find candidates who have personal appeal sufficient to hold their ungainly coalition together, the Republican winning streak might be cut short. If, however, the Republicans keep their organization in efficient order and maintain their recently established credibility with conservative Democratic voters, the victories of Bill Clements and Ronald Reagan might well mark the beginning of a new era in Texas politics. In any event, the elections of 1978 and 1980 confirmed the long-awaited arrival of competitive politics in Texas. After the delusions of the 1920s, the slow growth of the 1950s, the mingled hopes and frustrations of the 1960s, the Republican party has brought real two-party politics to Texas.

Pollution clutters view

This is the Age of Pollution. It evolved in a careless sort of way on the plains, covered the lands, ran into the oceans and rose to the lower heavens.

The immediate problem, though, is when it drifts to your nostrils and offends your smell, pounds your ears with its cacophony, becomes a blight before your eyes and generally messes up your day.

Pollution is as common as dirt and, as the sway of life now goes, has little chance of becoming extinct. For now, though, pollution is too profitable not to be forced into dissolution.

There's noise pollution, water pollution, mind pollution, spiritual pollution, food pollution, body pollution, chemical pollution, mathematical pollution, computer pollution, anything pollution. Pollution, pollution, pollution. Pollution is liable to become an over-used word, and that's not just because of over use; it's over do.

If something annoys you, you're being polluted on. It happens every time you allow it to and sometimes when you don't.

You may blame it on the age, and recognize that were you pure, you'd be defiled.

Dirt and noise offend you.

Listen around you wherever you are; you'll hear noise if you choose to. The muffled sound of exploding gases in an engine may be noise to you but it may be the purr of an expertly-tuned engine to someone else. The rumble of a hundred voices in a room may be a bother if you're overly sensitive one morning. But if you're part of the rumble, you'll hardly notice it; you are absorbed in your little world of conversation.

The banging of a jack-hammer or a carpenter's hammer may unsettle your dinner. But if you'll notice a certain beat of the hammering, which the tradesman may view as a living, the noise may give way to a sign of man's creation. It's just a tool.

If you sense that you are being polluted on, maybe you are; maybe not. Someone else, such as the "polluter," may be the source of the noise and likely is oblivious to any disturbance.

So it is with the sound of flight — be it bird or airplane. To one, it may be a bother; to another, a thrill.

Anyway, nowadays there is ample opportunity to be the "pollutee" or the "polluter." Most everything brushed by civilization is subject to pollution. And much of what was formerly pristine is now polluted.

The "basics" — air, water and soil — take priority on the clean-up campaign from this time forward. But those other things called pollution often can be corrected merely by a change of viewpoint.

Need support

To The Editor:

The Midland Independent School District and the city of Midland needs the support of the people of Midland in the forth-coming bond elections. The items being proposed by both bodies are necessary for the continued growth of the city. However, I do take issue with Midland Memorial Hospital (MMH) officials' attempt to place MMH, a tax supported institution, in direct competition with private industry to establish a "chemical dependency unit." In the hearing where MMH cleared the first step in their attempt to establish a "certificate of need," it was pointed out that the hospital group would have to go to the people with a bond issue of something in the range of three and one-half to four million dollars to build the fifty bed chemical dependency unit. The officials of MMH have also picked out a site in an area that is zoned residential.

I feel that by their action on the chemical unit MMH is placing in jeopardy the bonds needed by the City of Midland and Midland Independent School District. Their needs are necessary, where MMH does not need the bond money to compete with private industry. We should not remain silent in this, as it is an example of government or a tax-supported institution using tax dollars to compete with private industry.

Parkview Hospital appeared before the hearing in their request for the certificate of need and they planned to convert an existing facility into a 120 bed unit, at their own expense. The other group that appeared proposed the building of a 60 bed unit, also at their own expense. MMH people have also mentioned for some time that the present hospital facility needs expanding, which is probably needed to supply the present population of Midland and the surrounding area. In the news media it was reported that MMH was of the opinion that the dependency unit could be operated at a profit. I cannot take this on face value, had they ever operated even close to being in the black.

I will not support our tax supported MMH entering into competition with private industry. We should remove the government from competition at every opportunity. If there was no one available to build this drug dependency unit, then let MMH propose it, but not stay there and fight privte industry when there are two other groups that will supply this need, and not use tax dollars.

No frills

To The Editor:

Because we are concerned and interested parents we felt we should write this letter. On Saturday, April 3, we will be asked to vote on a school bond. We feel we are qualified to write because we are involved with the schools and the problems they face.

The up coming bond issue has no frills added but only what is needed and necessary to continue to provide quality education to the children of Midland.

Because Goddard Junior High is a feeder school from some of the overcrowded elementary schools and feeds into the over-crowded Midland Freshman School we have experienced first hand the need for expansion.

We are proud of the excellence in education afforded our children by the Midland Independent School District and we urge you to help us to continue to provide this excellence by voting yes on Saturday, April 3.

The Goddard Junior High School PTA Board

Well covered

To The Editor:

Thank you for your excellent coverage of the upcoming April 3 city, school and hospital elections. Your 14-part series examing the candidates and bond issues has proven very valuable to many Midland residents.

Our schools in Midland (the elementary schools in particular) are full. We at Rusk Elementary have been feeling the pressure of over-crowded classrooms and buildings for well over a year now, and other schools in Midland have also.

The student figures being projected by the Midland Independent School District and the school board are very conservative and theoretically, the proposed items included in the bond issue are full to capacity right now. There are no alternatives. We must have these facilities and cannot afford to delay building any longer. With construction costs increasing at the rate of two percent per month, delaying construction for only one year would add as much as $2,541,590 to the total bond cost.

Without adequate coverage by the news media, as provided by your staff, the voters of Midland could not become aware of our urgent needs in this area. Thank you for your coverge in this issue of importance of Midland's young people. They are our future.

Marlene Bellamy

Rusk Elementary PTA

All the facts

To The Editor:

After reviewing our candidates who are running for the school board, I couldn't help but write and express my opinion on a matter of importance to me, and I am sure to others who have children in public school.

I am referring to candidates who wish to hold a position on our Midland Independent School District's board, yet choose to send their own children to private school.

Paul Thorpe has made an obvious issue over being a PTA member for three or four years, yet he also has an elementary age child attending a private school, just as his older children did during elementary years.

Thorpe's statement that he doesn't consider it enough to just be "a nice person or a concerned parent" to be qualified for the board is certainly a point, yet I must add that being in "Big Business" — the owner of Health Spas — does not qualify him to make "Big Decisions" for our children anymore than that of a "nice person or a concerned parent." Although I believe I would prefer the latter two!

When we go to the polls to vote on April 3, let's make sure we know "all" the facts on the candidates, who if elected will be making important decisions for our children in public school.

A commendation

To The Editor:

I feel compelled to write this letter commending Mrs. Gloria Hinojosa, who was one of my bosses while I served as president of Midland College. Mrs. Hinojosa was one of the original members of the college board of trustees, having been appointed by the school board, then elected to her post by the people of Midland.

Gloria Hinojosa cares more about Midland College, its students and its program than almost anybody I know. She has served as a member of the board of trustees with great dignity and tremendous insight into the college program. Those of us who have been closely associated with Midland College have been very thankful for the outstanding contributions she has made to its growth and development.

Midlanders can express their appreciation to Gloria Hinojosa on April 3 by re-electing her as Midland College Trustee, Place 6. She deserves our support.

The other side

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because the writer felt strongly that aspects of the trial had been overlooked in Reporter-Telegram coverage, we are making an exception to our policy of not "re-trying" court cases in our Letters to the Editor column and are publishing the following letter in its entirety.

Our goal is and will remain to be as thorough and fair as possible in coverage of local issues, including court trials.

To The Editor:

The type of reporting which was done during the Booker T. Green trial is indicative of the type of one-sided half-truth reporting which is becoming a characteristic of the Midland REPEATER (usually slanted) Telegram in its strive toward sensationalism. The entire coverage of the trial as reported in the newspaper implied that the defense was making all of the positive points when it wasn't. My special and sincere thanks go to District Attorney Vern Martin and his brilliant young assistant Marian Bentley for a job well done.

The defendant's attorney, Mr. Hirsch, is a very clever, dapper man who with his antics attempted to convince the jurors that my late husband was such a villian in contrast with the "white hat" defendant. The prosecuting attorneys, however, presented evidence and witnesses to offset all of his tactics and most of the jurors were able to see through his ruse and recognize the true facts presented in the case.

Any thinking person should rationalize that the D.A.'s office presented the stronger case even though The Repeater-Telegram primarily printed the defense attorney's statements and made it appear that he was so much better than the prosecutors which was definitely not true. Marian Bentley outmatched court wit with Hirsch each day and Vern Martin always came through with the knock-out punches.

The Black Community, as well as many in the Anglo and Mexican-American Communities, knew my husband. I can proudly say that my late husband was a generous, proud, fun-loving, family caring man who contributed much to the betterment of Midland. My sincere appreciation and thanks to the many friends who called to express concern about the derogatory comments which were said by the defense attorney and printed in the paper. However, I would remind them that Hirsch was a paid attorney who was trying to win anyway he could and anyone should know by now to take everything The Repeater-Telegram prints with a grain of salt (and bicarbonate). Reputable and respectable Blacks (and there are many) knew the true characteristics of my late husband. They know that he was a benevolent man who because of his lavish style of living generated envy and jealousy among many of his peers.

Again I thank the prosecuting attorneys for a job well done and also thank those jurors who were "thinkers" enough to realize that my husband was a man with a family whom he loved and who loved him.

Because the reporter (who was always late and usually asleep) managed to report only part of the truth, I feel the public should know the other half of the facts concerning the trial:

1. Immediately after the defendant was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, he, through his attorney, filed a motion for probation. Some of the jurors (thank goodness) would not go for that; thus the hung jury. Other points as summarized by District Attorney Martin:

2. None of the evidence supported Mr. Hirsch's statement that R.J. was a "professional" gambler. (All of the Black community knows that he did not gamble any more than or even as much as some of the other witnesses. A better description would have been "one of the best" when he did gamble.)

3. The conspicuous absence of the defendant's younger brother, who according to all witnesses, ran into the liquor store with a pistol while the people inside were on the floor.

4. The testimony of many witnesses that R.J. was shot while standing by our five-year-old grandson who was sitting on the lap of his pregnant mother.

Not that many

To The Editor:

In regard to the article in the Feb. 21, 1982, edition of The Reporter-Telegram by Hallye Jordon on alcohol and drug abuse in Midland:

The article stated that Betty Summer of MAD says that some 70-80 percent of adults in Midland abuse alcohol.

Hogwash!!

Webster says abuse is the excessive or injudicious use of anything. Taking a snort now and then — or even every weekend, if one desires, does not qualify as "excessive." Getting drunk often, or on a regular basis, does.

Now, how could she know that 70-80 percent abuse alcohol unless every man and woman in Midland was polled? A random poll is no good (if such a poll was made), because those polled could be abusers, but certainly not representative of 100 percent of the adults here.

There are a lot of Baptists, Mormons, Seventh-Day Adventists, various other religious organizations, members of AA and some (like myself) who just plain can't stand the taste of the stuff. I can't believe all these people account for only 20-30 percent of the population of Midland.

Dont' be giving Midland a black-eye and a bad reputation by printing a supposition that around ¾ of us are nothing but a bunch of boozers. There's a lot of good, decent people here.

We advise...

To The Editor:

In our recent meeting, March 24, 1982, of the Mexican American Advisory Council it was unanimous that we, the members, make every effort to see the passage of the School Bond Issue and the election of Gloria Hinojosa to the Midland College Board and Parker Humes to the Midland School Board.

With Midland growing at such a rapid pace and the public school population at approximately 17,000, we need to pass this bond just to keep up with the climbing enrollment.

It is a person with experience that can continue the excellent leadership our college and public school boards have benefitted from up to this point and which Gloria Hinojosa and Parker Humes have contributed.

As concerned citizens fo the betterment of education, we urge everyone to go to the polls April 3, 1982, and VOTE.

Critical issue

To The Editor:

The San Jacinto Junior High PTA Board would like to take this opportunity to express its thanks and appreciation to The Midland Reporter-Telegram for its endorsement of the upcoming School Bond Election. This is a critical issue that must be addressed this spring if we are to meet the needs of Midland's rapid population growth. It is evident that existing classroom space is not adequate when some 20 new students are enrolling in our elementary schools alone each week. The recent fire at Carver Center also points up the need for more classroom space.

The recommended items for the forthcoming bond issue include two new elementary schools, 20 added classrooms at existing elementary schools and an addition to Midland Freshman High School.

It is on this latter issue that the San Jacinto PTA Board would like to voice its concern. Those of us who have children moving on to Midland Freshman School need to be aware of its critical need for more classroom space to accommodate our youngsters and provide them with adequate learning facilities. At the present time Midland Freshman School has 12 fewer classrooms than Lee Freshman School. It is very important that the two freshman schools be of equal capacity, so they can continue to feed into the same high schools. Otherwise, it may become necessary to shift the freshman school attendance boundaries in some way.

Thank you for your extensive coverage of Midland's public schools and for letting us speak out on this serious issue facing our city.

Marilyn Harrison, President
The San Jacinto PTA Board

Tidy Car processes from G&G Auto

Tidy Car, the world's leading auto appearance specialist, is locally represented by G & G Auto Appearance, a dealership owned by Beorge Johnson and Gene Moore. These two personable and energetic independent businessmen can be found under the Tidy Car sign at 1112 S. Midland Drive.

Tidy Car originated in Canada about seven years ago when Gary Goranson became interested in improving the appearance of his car. Goranson, now president of Tidy Car, began humbly buffing cars treated with his product in the cold of a Canadian winter. He now heads an international network of some 2700 independent dealers in the United States and 40 foreign countries who have professionally treated over a million motor vehicles.

Tidy Cars dealers are independent businessmen in the community, offering "Protection you can trust from people you know." Furthermore, Tidy Car's exclusive processes are backed by the manufacturer, giving double assurance of quality and service.

Tidy Car is not a car wash. Automotive appearance specialists, they offer preservation of exterior and interior car finish, upholstery, and carpet. They also do motor homes, airplanes, upholstery, and carpet. They also do motor homes, airplanes, boats, motor bikes, recreational vehicles, etc. Equipment is portable and can be taken almost anywhere.

Exterior care consists of a four-step protection system featuring Preserve-a-Shine, a product which bonds itself to a vehicle's finish. After buffing, the "new" finish protects for a minimum of 12 months. The whole process takes from five to six hours, and Tidy Car offers free pick-up and delivery service.

Upholstery-Gard 2 gives total protection to carpet and upholstery. Unlike most fabric gtreatments which stiffen fabric and protect only as long as the surface they form is unbroken, Upholstery-Gard 2 has a unique wicking action which forms a protective seal around every thread. Stains cannot be forced down into unprotected layers of the weave. Foreign substances can be lifted easily by vacuming or blotting with a soft absorbant cloth. The fabric is easier to clean, resists imbedded grime, and lasts up to 50 percent longer than untreated fabric.

Tidy Car means longer life for your vehicle, more trade-in value, better-looking protection, and a superior warranty. Call George Johnston and Gene Moore for an appointment at 694-8706 or drive by Tidy Car at 1112 S. Midland Drive between 8 a.m. and 5:30 p.m., six days a week. When your're through talking cars, ask them about their Tidy Car ladies bowling team - the gals are currently in first place.

Low prices sell Sagewood Condominiums quickly

An impressive 50 percent of the Sagewood Condominums community planned for construction at Midkiff Road and Caldora Boulevard has been sold in only three weeks of pre-sales. This spectacular response, however, came as no surprise to Jack Petrucelli, spokesman for Rhodessa Development Company, who chalked it up to the property's low prices, below-market financing and prime location.

"Half of the one and two bedroom homes slated for the first phase are now sold and at this rate, we'll sell out well before construction is complete," said Petrucelli, project manager. "We couldn't be more pleased with the immediate acceptance of Sagewood by the Midland community. They're discovering the joys of condominum ownership and they want to live in Midland's premier community."

A pre-completion price from $49,000 is just one reason for Sagewood's runaway popularity, Petrucelli noted. Another drawing card has been the prestigious and convenient location. Just north of Loop 250, the homes will be near major shopping and business centers, downtown and the airport.

"Then, just take a look at the many 'custom home' amenities to be incorporated into each condominium," Petrucelli continued. "In the kitchen, for example, we wll include a comprehensive package of appliances-a microwave and self-cleaning over, refrigerator with icemaker, dishwasher and disposal. There's even connections for full-size-not stacked-washers and dryers."

"Spacious living areas in each of the five floor plans will center around a brick-trimmed woodburning fireplace." he noted.

Owners may choose from a number of decorator shades of carpet and from a variety of wallcoverings. Other bright, new design elements, including French doors, are featured.

"Owners at Sagewood will also enjoy a unique environment that offers the perfect setting for social activities," said Petrucelli. "There will be a beautiful decked swimming pool, jacuzzi, and clubhouse for entertaining."

"And best of all, the maintenance of this common property, as well as that of the landscaped grounds, will be handled by professionals."

Below market financing is available through the developer, the Rhodessa Development Company.

For more information, visit the sales center for Sagewood Condominiums from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily in Suite 110 of the Western Building at 1031 Andrews Highway. Or call Joyce Sullivan at 699-1693.

Unions still afraid of inflation

By DAVID LIGHTMAN
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — General Motors and the United Auto Workers locked arms last week to produce a job-saving, money-saving, perhaps face-saving contract — but there is evidence that their hands are still shaking when they think of the future.

Despite all the optimism about the days ahead and fresh statistics showing the rate of inflation finally under control, one major item the UAW did not give up were future cost-of-living adjustments.

That continued a pattern maintained by major unions in recent months. The autoworkers and Teamsters, which agreed last month to an early settlement with major trucking companies, made a number of untraditional concesssions, but not that one.

While they did accept some cost-of-living changes — the Teamsters will get fewer adjustments, and Ford and GM workers will not actually receive their cost of living for several months — the principle remains chiseled into the contract.

"They're still afraid the inflation thing will swing back," said Michael Drapkin, public relations official with the United Steelworkers of America at its Pittsburgh headquarters. "There is still that fear."

THE DEPARTMENT of labor estimates about 8.6 million American workers have cost-of-living clauses in their contracts, and in 1981 alone, new agreements were negotiated in which 4 million people retained or got the adjustments.

The insurance policy against future price booms is the few major traditional elements left in this highly untraditional labor year. Only months ago, 1982 had been seen as a year when major unions had the ability to throw wrenches into the Reagan administration's economic recovery plan.

The Teamsters, who went on a 10-day strike when their 1979 pact ran out, were up March 31. Even more ominous were the auto contracts — GM's was due to expire Sept. 14 — just at primary and general election time.

But because job losses in the auto and trucking industry have been so severe, the unions were willing to talk and settle early and with relatively little fanfare.

All sides tended to give something. GM workers got a profit-sharing plan similar but not considered as attractive as Ford's. But workers at both companies gave up their basic annual raises and the equivalent of two weeks of paid time off a year.

YET THE COST of living stayed, even as the inflation rate slowed to a 3.6 percent annual pace in January and only 3 percent last month.

"There's still a need by our workers to keep up with inflation," said Karl Mantyla, UAW spokesman.

History may be on their side.

The Steelworkers unions at the major companies, for instance, who last renegotiated in 1980 and whose pact is not due to expire until 1983, found they have received increases from cost of living twice as big as the basic flat increases. They also learned a lesson from the last time they played patriot.

The 380,000-member union had cost of living until 1965, when they gave it up as the pace of inflation slowed. "It wasn't generating anything," said Drapkin. Between 1958 and 1965, the cost of living increased less than 2 percent each year.

BUT IN 1966, just after the union gave up the inflation adjustment, it was up 3.4 percent and rarely looked back, as the pace quickened to 6.1 percent in 1969 and 5.5 percent in 1970.

In 1972, the Teamsters got a clause back, and since then, it has meant $5.14 in the hourly wage, or more than double the $2.10 won in flat raises.

The auto unions were thus not about to let their cost-of-living adjustments go. It was the UAW that pioneered the modern cost-of-living adjustment in 1948, and in the latest GM proposal, the workers will get no increase in the basic hourly wage, but will get compensation as the inflation rate changes.

"The members are much more resistant to having something taken away than not getting something," said John J. Driscoll, president of the Connecticut State Labor Council, AFL-CIO.

GM will not comment on the meaning of retaining the cost of living. "We're not talking about the agreement yet," said Bruce McDonald, a company spokesman in Detroit. The UAW's General Motors Council okayed the pact Thursday by 299 to 25, and it now needs approval of the members. Voting could begin as early as April 1. Ratification deadline is April 10.

THERE APPEAR to be several reasons workers want the cost-of-living increase retained.

First, they as well as others are not completely convinced the inflation rate will stay as low as it is now.

One big reason for the flat inflation rate of the last five months has been lower oil prices, and experts are wary the plunge will maintain such a frenetic pace, particularly since the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced last weekend it was cutting back production.

"The inflationary slowdown is still in the blip category," said William Burns, research director for the United Food and Commercial Workers. "It's not evident yet that the downturn will last.

"For business to sell labor on the need to take away the cost-of-living adjustment will take a long time," Burns said. "You learn by experience what you need to do, and we've learned that having that adjustment is one way to protect your wages."

A SECOND REASON for keeping the cost of living is that it is seen as protection, insurance, against future inflationary spirals.

Statistics indicate that is not always the case, but AFL-CIO collective bargaining specialist John Zalusky studied the issue and concluded "They are the best thing workers have going for them."

Zalusky found, and other studies confirm, that cost-of-living adjustments do not really keep pace with inflation.

A time lag that hurts the worker. The Bureau of Labor Statistics announces the Consumer Price Index around the 23rd of each month, or about three weeks after the month has ended, and that figure usually represents data usually compiled before the middle of the affected month.

Thus, if the bureau releases the February CPI on March 23, they are announcing statistics that are already at least a month old, Zalusky contended.

THEN THERE is a second lag — it is usually several weeks or even months before the CPI factor shows up in the worker's paycheck. This, Zalusky said, "is a major reason (the) clauses never fully restore lost purchasing power."

Texas given grant for energy program

DALLAS — The State of Texas has been awarded a grant for $381,100 to continue implementation of the Energy Extension Service (EES) Program, Curtis E. Carlson, Jr., Director of Albuquerque Operations' Dallas Support Office of the U. S. Department of Energy (DOE), announced today. Texas was required to provide a 20 percent match of federal funds.

The Energy Extension Service Program was established by DOLE in 1979 as a federal-state partnership to offer personalized information and technical assistance or energy conservation to small-scale users, such as individuals, families, owners of small businesses and local governments. The primary objective of the 1982 Texas EES program is to provide direct personalized services and technical assistance to small energy users to encourage adoption of conservation techniques or technologies. To accomplish this objective, the following programs will be offered in 1982:

Solar Hot Water Heater Workshops will target single family units in the Dallas/Fort Worth area. The workshops will permit paying participants to build their own residential solar water heating system from a kit components.

Rural Residential Conservation Program will offer information and assistance to rural areas of the State. Services will include presentations to group and organizations, energy related workshops, demonstration projects and direct mail series.

Community Self Hellp Program will make small, short-term funding available to non-profit, community organizations and educational institutions to conduct energy conservation projects.

Additional information concerning Texas' Energy Extension Service Program can be obtained by contacting Dr. Milton Holloway, Director, Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council, Fifth floor, 200 East 18th Street, Austin, Texas 78702 (512-475-0414).

May need to double drilling

HOUSTON (SWN) — Maintaining present levels of U.S. oil and gas production through 1990 may require annual drilling activity twice that of 1981, said the chairman of Hughes Tool Company in New Orleans today.

James R. Lesch, addressing oil and gas securities analysts at the annual seminar hosted by Howard, Weil, Labouisse, Friedrichs, explained that industry studies disclosed an average of 20 equivalent barrels were found for every foot drilled during 1971-1980. Based on a forecast that this "finding rate" will decline to about 18 equivalent barrels per foot through the rest of the decade, Lesch said exploratory drilling would have to average 266 million feet per year in order to replace the expected depletions of current fields. Assuming that exploratory drilling would account for about 35 percent of total footage drilled — compared to the 25 percent current level — total needed footage on a statistical basis would average 760 million feet per year. "I want to make it clear that we are not forecasting this level of drilling," said Lesch.

"This is a statistical calculation of need. We expect that drilling during the remainder of this decade will average only about 70 percent of what is needed." Lesch said that the Hughes Tool forecast on total footage drilled would work out to an eight to nine percent annual increase for the remainder of the decade.

Standard exploring Quasar prospects

FORT WORTH, Texas, March 26--(SWN)--American Quasar Co., Fort Worth, and Conquest Exploration Company, Houston, announced recently the Board of Directors of The Standard Oil Company (Ohio) gave its approval to spend a minimum of $100 million--and up to $350 million--over the next five years on seismic and drilling to earn an interest in approximately 2.25 million net acres owned by American Quasar and Conquest.

The acreage is located in the western U.S., with over 900,000 acres centered in the active Rocky Mountain Overthrust Belt.

American Quasar is contributing approximately 2.18 million net acres to the venture. Conquest is contributing approximately 74,000 net acres, all of which are in the Rocky Mountain Overthrust Belt.

The approval is subject to finalization of the definitive agreement within the next 45 days.

Contractor's Bureau moving to new offices

Contractors Bureau has announced relocation of its offices to 3404 West Illinois Avenue, Suite 200, effective April 1.

Since it opened January 1, the bureau has officed at 3108 N. Big Spring St., Suite 104, but the bureau's rapidly expanding personnel force and client population necessitated larger accomodations.

Robert Law, co-owner and founder of the bureau said, "When we opened we really anticipated being at this location longer than we have stayed. But the bureau's services have been readily accepted by both the contractors of Midland and Odessa, and the Public at large.

Contractors Bureau serves a unique function in the Midland-Odessa region, bringing together contractors of all lines and the consuming public in one central location. The bureau also serves as a protection agency for consumers and contractors.

FIVE CLUES TO DRUG ADDICTION
Many a parent has learned to their dismay that one of their children has become a drug addict. Usually by the time this information becomes known, it is because the child is in serious trouble as both a drug user and a criminal to procure his daily supply.
Look for these symptoms: 1) A good scholar becomes erratic for no apparent reason. 2) A shy child becomes talkative. 3) A truthful child starts telling lies and plays truant. 4) A healthy child loses weight and is unable to sleep. These characteristics indicate a possible, but not positive drug addiction.

SBI sets annual hearing on property insurance rules, rates

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance plans to hold its annual hearing on property insurance rules and rates at 9 a.m. June 2, with hints that the long-awaited "simplified" homeowners policy may be on the agenda.

SBI hasn't yet announced what items will be considered, but some department officials report the simplified homeowners form-which has been under study for over five years — may be ready for presentation.

SBI appointed an advisory committee to work on the proposal in February, 1977, and the effort has proceeded-with several stops and starts-with various revisions.

One problem has been in changing the language to make the policy more understandable without altering coverages or rates.

The effort has gained the support of industry groups, including the Texas Insurance Advisory Association.

Harry Rodgers, director of air carrier administration for the Texas Aeronautics Commission, reports commuter airlines regulated by the TAC are "holding rather steady," with the majority "surviving the state ecomonic situation very well."

One casualty of economic conditions has been Sundance Airways, San Antonio, he reports.

TAC now has eight airlines under its authority, and has had as many as 12, Rodgers says.

One Application for a new helicopter service has been heard and two other applications are being processed.

Rodgers says most TAC carriers reported increased traffic in January and February, months which historically have been a "very slack time" for air travel, so "hopefully the returning traffic signals an end — shortly — to the recession for the carriers."

Texas Industrial Commission has installed a new manager in the State of Texas Office in Mexico City, with Mexican national Luis Morales taking over March 15.

Morales holds a B.S. degree in foreign service from Georgetown University and M.A. degree in tourism development and travel administration from George Washington University.

He previously worked with the Consejo Nacional de Tourismo in market research and analysis, TIC reports.

TIC will be sponsoring a foreign investment seminar for groups from Denmark and Norway in cooperation with the Bank of the Southwest, Houston, in Houston May 7, in conjunction with the offshore technology conference held there.

TIC also reports an increase in the number of projects being funded through industrial revenue bonds during the first part of 1982, with 62 projects totaling $173,560,000 though March 17.

For the first three months of 1981, there were 38 projects, for a total $137 million. Industrial revenue bond issue accounted for $956 million in 1981, as compared to $392 million in 1980, TIC says.

SBI staff members are preparing a form and form letter to be used by companies in making applications for rate deviations under the Texas commercial multiperil program.

SBI recently approved the first application for rate deviations under the program, and requests are expected "in some volume," the agency reports.

Part of the reason indicated for the approval of the deviation request was to allow stock companies to continue to compete with non-regulated companies in the commercial market.

Texas Department of Health is continuing its efforts to draft new regulations dealing with low-level radioactive wastes, with an advisory panel attempting to complete work on proposed regulations on processing of such wastes in time for State Board of Health action this summer. Texas Department of Health also has set hearings on proposed changes to existing rules, including requirements on wireline service operations and subsurface tracer studies (Wednesday, March 30) and fees for licenses under its current regulations on use of radioactive materials (April 13).

Department of Water Resources will take bids through April 30 on engineering services related to evalution and classification of non-hazardous industrial solid waste disposal facilities.

The inventory is funded by a federal grant under the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act.

Food exposition to display many 'space age' items

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Washington — A new spread that combines cheese and butter, and which comes in 10 flavors?

Fresh milk in a package that doesn't require refrigeration until it's opened?

A compact camera that sets the exposure, activates the flash, takes the picture, advances the film and recharges the flash — all in a split second?

None of these are on the space shuttle.

But the items, and many "space age" innovations like them, can be found May 9 through 12 at the Food Marketing Institute exposition in Chicago — when some 680 supplier companies will introduce new items to the marketing trade before they find their way to the nation's supermarket shelves.

Other interesting items at the convention will include:

A non-rub car wax that allows a car owner to wax his vehicle in less than 15 minutes.

Toothbrushes for infants seven months or older, with three training brushes available to help baby adopt proper dental habits?

A breakfast sausage pattie made from ham — a real HAMburger.

A drink that comes in a box featuring orange, grape and fruit punch flavors with a straw attached for sipping.

A shredder-compactor that cuts up everything from wood to plastic.

Natural heavy-resined pine wood sticks that contain no chemicals, wax or petroleum and which can be used in place of kindling to start fires in the fireplace, stove or campsite.

Still more products that will be introduced for the first time to the food distribution industry include a new electronic ground meat fat tester, a holder that makes it easier to use plastic bags at the checkout, a throw-away grinding system and a "protector" for use at refrigerated case ends to eliminate impact damage from shopping and stock carts.

INDUSTRY TO HELP

Private industry is again stepping in — as it has been over and over again by the Reagan administration — this time to help the financially beleagured Census Bureau conduct a much needed program to close out the findings of the 1980 census.

The bureau announced recently that it had cancelled a plan to tabulate 1980 census data for all of the nation's five-digit ZIP code areas — involving statistics important in market planning.

But now, under a $250,000 contract with the National Planning Data Corporation (NPDC) of Ithaca, N.Y., the bureau intends to run off the information on computer tape files, including such data as general population characteristics as well as income, employment status, education and housing costs. Files will be produced for each of the 50 states.

The corporation intends to distribute the ZIP code data among retailers, direct mailers, private data firms, an insurance company, a publisher and a university.— the groups which aided NPDC in funding the project.

FOOD LAW CHANGES DUE

A new report by the American Council on Science and Health (ACSH) claims that U.S. food safety laws need a comprehensive review to keep up with the changes in the nation's food production industry since the law was last amended in 1958.

"Since then," says Dr. Frederick J. Stare, ACHS board chairman, "there have been enormous scientific and technological advances in this field." Congress is already considering legislation to modernize the statute.

ECONOMIES SOUGHT

In another move to make government more businesslike, the General Service Administration (GSA), has requested bids on its small package delivery business.

Administrator Gerald P. Carmen said that competition and rate fluctuations created in the transportation industry by deregulation has provided GSA with a good opportunity to save money on the cost of shipping small packages. His aim, he said, is to seek lower rates while streamlining these operations through contracting.

The GSA last year spent $60 million to deliver packages across the country.

Carmen has also ordered deep cuts in spending for travel, leasing or buying of office equipment — a move that will deeply affect business doing business with his agency.

The administrator cut travel 50 percent, slashed rents and leases by 20 percent, curtailed magazine subscriptions 50 percent, ordered a 25 percent reduction in printing and supplies and put a freeze on consultant hiring as well as purchase of carpets, drapes and office equipment.

TRAINING ATTACKED

A few days ago, Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., questioned the manner in which sites for special training seminars for federal employees are chosen, claiming that workers are often being flown to luxury resort hotels for the purpose.

Pryor is right in asking for a reevaluation of cost control measures, responded Donald J. Devine, the Reagan administration's director of the Office of Personnel Management.

"The cost efficiency of OPM's $35 million training program has been a serious concern of mine ever since I became director a year ago," added Devine, sending a clear enough message that he is not about to take the blame for any abuses that might have taken place before he took office.

Incidentally, President Reagan is spending the Easter vacation in Barbados, with the trip being billed as a "working vacation."

AROUND AND ABOUT:

The National Association of Manufacturers believes the nation's inflation rate may well fall to six percent this year...Mayors and other city officials will be meeting next week with corporate executives and representatives of non-profit organizations in Philadelphia to explore ways how corporations can help communities cope with problems...When the Joffrey Ballet, recognized as one of the seven great ballet companies of the world, appears in San Antonio on June 15 through 19 and in San Francisco from July 6 to 17 it will do so under a $150,000 grant by Philip Morris Inc., the largest corporate giveaway ever awarded a dance company for a national tour.

Wildcatting depends largely on economy

COLLEGE STATION — The chances of successfully drilling for oil or gas in previously unexplored and unproven areas may be improving, but such risky "wildcat" ventures will always be tied to the economy, says the head of the nation's largest and top-ranked petroleum engineering department.

When times are good and investors have money to risk on wildcat wells — which are usually drilled by independent oilmen — wildcatting is likely to increase, said Douglas Von Gonten of Texas A&M University.

Wildcatting declines in times when money is tight and a sluggish economy slackens the demand (and price) for oil, he explained.

The American Petroleum Institute reports that in 1980, nearly one of every five wildcat wells drilled hit paydirt, twice the success rate of a decade earlier.

Von Gonten, whose petroleum engineering faculty at Texas A&M instructs more than 1,400 undergraduates, says the university's program is geared to producing tomorrow's wildcatter as well as professionals for the largest energy companies.

Texas A&M's students not only receive training in drilling and production techniques, but in the management skills of reservoir engineering as well.

Reservoir engineers must analyze an oil or gas field for its potential worth and provide answers as to how fast the minerals can be produced and how soon the field would be expected to quit producing. In addition, Texas A&M reservoir engineering students are given instruction in business and finance techniques needed to make an oil venture successful.

Flexibility in raising investment capital and obtaining other finances has been one of the basic advantages of independent wildcatters, Von Gonten explained.

"They are set up to move fast," he said. "They are working with risk capital and their investors realize it is a risk venture."
