Tracking system

Custody

DALLAS — The paternal grandparents of two children stabbed to death while they slept June 6 will fight for legal custody of the surviving sibling taken from his father this week and placed in foster care. The children's mother, 26-year-old Rowlett homemaker Darlie Routier, was charged Tuesday with killing her sons — Damon, 5, and Devon, 6 — and fabricating an account of a struggle with a phantom intruder.

Suicide

Police have ruled that a 44-year-old Midland man who was found Friday night with a gunshot wound to his chest died as a result of a suicide. The man, who was found Friday night at Midland Inn, shot himself with a .357 magnum to the heart, Midland police Sgt. David Garcia said. His name has not been released.

One winner

AUSTIN — One ticket bought in San Antonio correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The jackpot was worth $4 million. The numbers drawn from a field of 50 were: 1, 10, 12, 30, 32 and 49.

Pro-lifers win majority of Texas' 123 delegates

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — An abortion fight at the Texas Republican Convention ended Saturday with U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison being narrowly elected as a delegate to the GOP National Convention despite her support for restricted abortion rights.

Mrs. Hutchison was at the center of a fray that threatened to split the state's party over the emotional issue.

Anti-abortion activists won an overwhelming majority of the state's 123 delegates and barely missed defeating a slate of delegates that included Mrs. Hutchison on a voice vote.

A vocal group that opposed the final vote attempted to get a recount, but Texas GOP Chairman Tom Pauken said a majority wasn't in favor of such a move.

"I think it's a strong delegation ... that includes Sen. Hutchison," Pauken said after the vote. "I think most elements of the party were reasonably satisfied, some were not and these are good sincere people and I understand that their frustrated."

Bill Price, the president of Texans United for Life and the most vocal opponent of Mrs. Hutchison, said he was disappointed with the vote.

"I thought the vote was too close to call," Price said. "But the fact of the matter is, we sent a signal that a lot of people didn't think we could send. We sent it to Sen. Hutchison and we sent it to Sen. (Bob) Dole that we want a strong pro-life plank."

Anti-abortion activists won roughly 88 of Texas' 123 delegates to the national convention, and Price vowed that the strong presence will ensure that presumptive presidential nominee Dole selects a vice presidential candidate who is anti-abortion.

Mrs. Hutchison, who wasn't present at the convention for the vote, said Friday that she was the target of a "kamikaze mission" by a "small group that is not in the mainstream of our party."

"I believe that I will be a delegate because there's such an outpouring of support from the grass roots,"

From Staff Reports

No, their parents weren't punishing them; it was part of the festivities at the second Pioneer Child's Day on the grounds of the historical Potton House in Big Spring.

Besides using a washboard and lye soap to "do the washin'," the children used old clothespins to hang the clothes to dry and pressed the clothes with a sad-iron.

Other demonstrations of life during pioneer days were butter churning, corn-husk doll making, leather working and branding.

The biggest hit with children was the tortilla booth, sponsored by the Big Spring Hispanic Women for Progress. After the children were shown how tortillas were made, they rolled and cooked their own.

Next, it was to the churn where children made butter to put on their tortillas.

City hopes to expand recycling effort to get most out of garbage

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Recycle Midland and the city are considering expanding the recycling effort by getting the most from the city's garbage.

The private/public recycling cooperative wants to create a Materials Recovery Facility (MRF) to sort and separate recyclable items. "But unlike some MRFs, we're going to process (Midland's) entire solid waste stream," said Phil Handley, director of operations for Recycle Midland.

By picking out recyclable material from trash before it goes to the landfill, Midland's recycling effort would increase substantially.

Currently, about 3,000-4,000 tons of paper, corrugated cardboard, aluminum and plastic are recycled annually through a program in which residents can voluntarily place those materials in special bins around town.

Implementation of a MRF would mean that in the first year an estimated 10 percent of the annual 125,000 tons of refuse headed for the landfill would be saved for recycling, officials said.

"We think our figures are very conservative on how much we are going to extract. In our third year, we think we're going to extract a minimum of 16 percent from the solid waste stream," Handley said.

And, in addition to paper, cardboard, plastic and metals, the effort also could be expanded to include glass and wood.

The MRF would consist of an approximately 50,000-square-foot facility outfitted with three processing lines and compactors. All garbage normally headed for the landfill would be routed to the facility, dumped and recyclable material picked out mechanically and manually.

Recyclable materials and leftover garbage would subsequently be baled and sent off, respectively, for recycling and the landfill.

And the benefit would go beyond the increase in recycling.

Baled garbage would take up less space at the landfill, thus saving the city in its on-going costs for expansion and

Possible epidemic of racial hate rather than conspiracy may fuel church fires

By Michael Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal investigators probing a surge in black church fires fear they may confront a foe more dangerous and harder to stop than a national conspiracy: an epidemic of individuals or tiny groups acting separately out of racial hatred.

"The prospect of a conspiracy is a chilling thing," Assistant Attorney General Deval L. Patrick, co-chair of the fires task force, said in an interview. "But the prospect that these are separate acts of racism is even worse."

Not only would the legal cases be "harder to prove and more work," but "an epidemic of individual terrorists ... is tougher as a social problem," said Patrick, who heads the Justice Department's civil rights division.

As one Treasury agent on the case said, "Conspiracies are easier to crack, because it's harder for two people than one to keep a secret. We spent 18 years chasing the Unabomber and ended up charging a total loner."

But conspiracy hasn't been ruled out. Some small ones have been uncovered and convictions won — each in a different locality.

For the first time, the federal task force is merging computer files on 216 attacks since May 1990 on white churches, black churches, synagogues and mosques so they

N.Y. Times News Service

CAIRO — Joined by fears about Israel's hawkish new government but divided over a myriad of other issues, Arab leaders gathered here Saturday for their first summit in six years to warn Israel against abandoning its land-for-peace commitments and to remind one another of the virtues of Arab unity.

The 21 kings, emirs, presidents and other top officials sought to start picking up the pieces of Arab unity, shattered after Iraq invaded Kuwait in August 1990. The invasion led to the Gulf War and a period of nearly unparalleled sense of defeat and humiliation in the Arab world.

Iraq was not invited to Cairo, and while its fate under international sanctions along with numerous other internal Arab problems were being discussed, the focus of the meeting's speeches and expected communique the process of making peace with Israel, which Israel appears to want to slow down.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt opened the summit by invoking Israel's commitment to negotiate the future of the West Bank, Golan Heights and East Jerusalem, adding, "If any party allows itself to choose what to negotiate and what not, then this means the other parties have the same right," which "totally destroys" the peace process.

Benjamin Netanyahu, who defeated Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel, says he will not give up more land to the Palestinians or to Syria because of concerns over Israeli security, although his foreign minister, David Levy, has suggested room for compromise.

"The Arabs are trying to reconstitute themselves but even their unity depends on the outside," a European diplomat in Cairo said. "The impact of this summit depends on Netanyahu. If he becomes moderate, this meeting will fade away. But if he stays hard-line, it will be seen as a seminal event."

The summit is being held at a convention center in north Cairo in the shadow of the tomb of President Anwar Sadat, who was slain in 1981 by militant Muslims for being the first Arab leader to make peace with Israel. The meeting is taking place around a flower-laden table in the shape of a boat with only the opening and closing speeches open to the public.

Egypt suffered ostracism throughout the 1980s as a result of its peace with Israel but at the start of the 1990s gained position as a conduit for peace talks between Israel and other Arabs.

As Israel entered into direct links with the Palestinians and Jordanians, however, Egypt began to feel its prestige slipping and has been at the forefront of calls for Arab unity, worrying Israel and the United States.

The Clinton administration worked hard over the past week to tone down the summit's final communique, with the president calling Mubarak and Crown Prince Abdallah of Saudi Arabia and meeting in the White House with King Hussein of Jordan, his closest ally in the Arab world, to urge patience with Israel.

The results will be known Sunday when the document is released. But based on Mubarak's mild speech and reports from diplomats, Israel probably will not be threatened. For example, the Palestinians have been persuaded not to ask for a declaration of statehood.

"It was felt that declaring a state would cause anger in the US so it will not be done," said Radwan Abu Ayyash, director of the Palestine Broadcasting Corp.

Moreover, Israel's recent military accord with Turkey, a non-Arab Muslim state, will not be directly attacked, diplomats said. Syria has felt particularly threatened by the growing alliance and was seeking condemnation of it and a reversal of the Arab world's normalization process with Israel.

"Turkey will be mentioned in a balanced way," said Jordan's information minister, Marwan Muasher. Others said the communique will not discourage normalization of ties with Israel.

Jordan, which was seen in 1990 as tilting toward Iraq, has made a complete turnaround in the past few years, calling for the replacement of Iraq's president, Saddam Hussein, signing a relatively warm peace with Israel and welcoming US fighter planes onto its soil.

In fact, Jordan concerns Assad as much as Turkey, and tensions have been high between Syria and Jordan since the 1994 Israel-Jordan peace treaty.

Saturday, Egypt's Mubarak hosted a reconciliation meeting between the two, who had not spoken in two years. On Friday night, Mubarak held a similar "sulha" or reconciliation between Assad and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Officials said both meetings went relatively well, although there is little reason to believe the problems between each set of leaders has been in any way solved.

The summit is being attended by Libya's Moammar Khadafy who broke UN sanctions against air travel to and from Libya by flying in here Saturday. Those sanctions were imposed in 1992 when Khadafy refused to hand over two Libyans suspected of involvement in the 1988 bombing of a Pan Am jet over Lockerbie, Scotland, in which 270 people died.

The Egyptians themselves should not have allowed the Libyan plane to land but Egyptian Foreign Minister Moussa dismissed the issue, saying that there was insufficient notice and "President Khadafy is a guest and member of the Arab League. So all the other details will be taken care of."

The quest for Arab strength through unity has a long history.

"Arabs had their glory when they were united as one nation under one government," remarked Fouad Zakaria, retired chairman of philosophy at Kuwait University, referring to Medieval times when Arab civilization put Europe to shame.

"This kind of yearning for their glorious past is what keeps driving the Arabs toward unity. They dream about bringing back their golden days. They think that unity will automatically bring back that glory. The trouble is that history does not stop. The whole world has changed. The arrival of a new religion, Islam, gave the Arabs their driving force. Today a tiny country like Israel can threaten the whole Arab world."

The changes — material, intellectual and political — that have produced Western strength and Arab weakness continue to elude Arab analysis, Zakaria and other Arab intellectuals contend. Not one of the 21 leaders gathered here was chosen by his people in a real election. But the Arab press has been more and more filled with efforts, some of them painful, to examine the issue.

"Our relation to the West has always been lopsided," Hassan Hanafi, a philosophy professor at Cairo University wrote recently in Al-Ahram newspaper. "They create and produce, we imitate and consume. ... Their innovations progress at a faster pace than we can absorb. The result is a widening gap that leaves us stunned and relegates us to the margins of history."

Edward Said, a Palestinian who teaches at Columbia University, and considers the Middle East peace process a humiliation for the Arabs, expressed similar rage in a recent column in Al-Ahram.

"The problem is Arab powerlessness," he wrote. "Of the 10 countries which lead the world in arms purchases, seven are Arab."

Yeltsin aide, former general Lebed bursts onto Russian political scene

By SERGEI SHARGORODSKY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW — Alexander Lebed defies definitions.

Some fear him as a Russian Napoleon dreaming of supreme power. Others see a defender of democracy. Still others consider him just a battle-hardened soldier turned skillful politician.

In just a few months, the former two-star general has become one of the most important politicians in Russia and is tipped by some people as Boris Yeltsin's heir.

The 46-year-old Lebed wants

■ News analysis

Alexander Lebed, head of the Russian Security Council, holds a child at a meeting of political supporters Friday.

Yeltsin's place — but says he has "all the time in the world."

He left the army in 1994 after 25 years of service, and he easily won a Parliament seat in elections last December. Then in the June 16 presidential election, he finished a strong third with 11 million votes.

Lebed likes authority, but above all he is a pragmatist who advocates force only when unavoidable. He is blunt with a strong sense of mission.

"Our Russian state is just being born," Lebed wrote in his election manifesto. "We must purge it of the dirt of previous rulers. We must make it humane."

Lebed appeals to hard-liners with his vision of a strong army and a mighty Russia and to reformers with a liberal economic program.

His slogan of "Truth and Order" and promise to purge corruption and crime appeal to many Russians. He blasts the Communist past and the "even greater vileness and lies" of today's Russia.

Lebed sees Russia as a battlefield of two ideas — the old idea of communism and the new of imperfect democracy.

"I'm choosing the new idea," Lebed announced after joining forces with Yeltsin last Tuesday. "You cannot go very far with old ideas."

Lebed's distaste for communism goes back to his childhood. Under Josef Stalin, his father was sent to a prison camp for being late for work. When Nazi Germany invaded Russia in 1941, the father was sent to a punishment battalion.

In 1962, as a small boy in the southern city of Novocherkassk, Lebed saw troops shoot striking workers who protested bad living conditions.

But Lebed, a former Communist Party member, says real disillusionment came only in 1990 when he became a delegate to a party congress in Moscow.

"A double, a triple morality was running amok within the party," Lebed recalls in his 1995 memoir. "All the authorities ceased to exist for me."

His rise in the military was as swift as his political ascent. He was a battalion commander in 1981 during the Soviet war in Afghanistan, where he won a top medal. By 1989 he was commander of the elite Tula paratroop division.

The years that followed were murky for both Lebed and his country. The Soviet Union was starting to disintegrate and Lebed found himself trying to quell its mounting ethnic conflicts.

Lebed's paratroopers flew to Baku, Azerbaijan's capital, during anti-Armenian violence. It was one of Lebed's darkest hours when he helped suppress pro-independence rallies and anti-Armenian pogroms. More than 120 Azerbaijanis and at least 25 soldiers died.

A report by Helsinki Watch and Russian Memorial, two human rights groups, said later that ill-prepared troops used excessive force. Shooting at ambulances and using bayonets against civilians were reported.

In his book, Lebed gives only a sketchy description of the Baku events, but denies there were atrocities.

"I am a sinner," he quipped recently. "There is no paratroop general who is free of sin."

Pope praises Germans who resisted Nazis

N.Y. Times News Service

PADERBORN, Germany — Pope John Paul II on Saturday lauded German Catholics who resisted Nazism, but in a departure from his text, omitted remarks laying claim to a broad Roman Catholic stand against the Holocaust.

Before 70,000 people at an open-air mass, the pope spoke of four Catholics who died resisting Nazism, two of whom he has already beatified and two others that he plans to beatify Sunday in Berlin. In Catholic practice, beatification is the penultimate step before sainthood.

"Their martyrdom was a witness to Christ and a sign of resistance against the demonic forces of a godless world," he declared.

But he then skipped over a passage saying: "These four blessed represent the many Catholic men and women who, at the cost of many and diverse sacrifices, rejected National Socialist tyranny and resisted the brown ideology.

"They are thus part of the resistance offered by the whole church to a system contemptuous of God and human beings."

For the Vatican, the prepared text of the pope's speeches is the official record of what he said, whether or not he utters the whole speech.

The Vatican spokesman, Joaquin Navarro-Valls, said he did not know why the pope had omitted the section. He told reporters the written text of the speech stood as the official record of the pope's views on the relationship between the Catholic Church and the Hitler regime.

Thus, the pope will be on record as claiming a far more assertive church role against the Nazis than historians do. But he avoided openly saying so in front of a German audience that has been taught differently.

Many historians have concluded that both the Catholic and Protestant churches in Germany were docile during the Nazi era, although some Catholic scholars maintain that Pope Pius XII, who led the Catholic Church from 1939 to 1958, sought quietly to protect many Jews.

German historians have said German clergymen supported what they saw as the Nazi onslaught on atheistic Bolshevism, and only a handful used their pulpits to condemn the persecution of Jews. Since last year, German bishops have routinely acknowledged that as Bishop Karl Lehmann of Mainz put it recently, the Catholic Church "failed in many ways regarding the protection of the Jews."

Previously, Pope John Paul has called the Holocaust a "monstrous abyss" but has not so far produced a promised definitive text on the church's relationship toward it.

An early draft two years ago spoke of an "anti-Jewish theological tradition of the church that was an important component of the Holocaust." It said centuries of Catholic hostility toward Jews "prepared the way for modern anti-Semitism."

The Vatican and Israel formally recognized each other only in 1993.

The visit to Germany is the pope's first since reunification in 1990.

The selection in our produce department will range from the rare and exotic to fruit and vegetable staples. Your shopping trip can turn into an adventure of discoveries. And you can be sure that, whatever your family's taste, we'll always have the pick of the crop at low prices.

Easy makings with a special touch.

Your H-E-B will include specialty items for all your recipe needs. Like fresh, ready-to-use herbs grown with care on Texas herb farms. There's no substitute for aromatic basil, tarragon, dill, mint or chives. If you like mushrooms, count on your new H-E-B for an incredible choice, including portabella, morel, shitake, oyster or button mushrooms. Perfect with steaks, in stir-fry, in salads or in that special sauce you're whipping up – your H-E-B will make it quick and easy. Our garden of freshness will include salads-in-a-bag, a variety of mixed greens ready for your salad bowl, plus an array of specialty salad dressings. You can serve up a different salad each night of the week! For a quick and easy meal, select one of our stir-fry packs with vegetables already sliced. With H-E-B, dinner is a no-fuss, tasty meal.

Shopping at H-E-B is a bed of roses.

Your new H-E-B Floral Shop will always offer bright, colorful and fragrant fresh-cut flowers and elegant roses. We'll also have plants and beautiful flower arrangements prepared by our own floral designers. So whatever the occasion, you can choose an arrangement, mix or match your own bouquet, or just select a single stem at your new H-E-B Floral Shop.

Just-off-the-truck freshness.

We search for every opportunity to ship fresh produce direct from the farm to your Midland H-E-B store. In addition, more than 700 fresh produce items come from our own produce warehouse in San Antonio daily. We have a special partnership with Texas growers, buying Texas-grown produce first. We work closely with the farmers, inspecting their crops to make sure what we buy meets H-E-B's strict standards. This helps improve the quality of home-grown products and guarantees maximum freshness. So you can enjoy juicy grapefruit from the Valley, as well as Texas watermelons, cantaloupes, honeydews and more.

Quality and freshness head our list.

All our produce is triple inspected — in the field with the growers, then at our warehouse with H-E-B inspectors conducting random quality and pesticide tests, and the last check is at your H-E-B store.

Britain loses EU battle over beef

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

FLORENCE, Italy — All the British chest-beating notwithstanding, Prime Minister John Major lost the mad cow war.

Returning home Saturday from the two-day European Union summit, held in a 16th-century fortress, the British leader now faces an uphill battle to convince his country that the war was worth fighting at all.

For the rest of the 15-nation European Union, it was a lesson well-learned. The need to prevent a repeat of what Germany's foreign minister called "blackmail" may give impetus to bogged-down talks on reforming EU institutions and voting procedures.

'John Major went as naked as Michelangelo's David into the conference chamber ... and came out with a diplomatic fig leaf.'
— The London Independent

■ News analysis

Britain retaliated against an EU global ban on its beef exports by systematically vetoing all EU legislative and policy measures requiring a unanimous vote.

It cast more than 100 vetoes since the ban was imposed in late March, after London revealed a possible link between a fatal bovine illness commonly called mad cow disease and an equally fatal human malady, Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

On Friday, a cease-fire was called when Britain and its European partners agreed on a step-by-step plan to eradicate mad cow disease in Britain and gradually lift the ban on British beef exports.

But the battle left its scars.

Britain always has been the bad boy of the EU, dating back to the days of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who was constantly at odds with Brussels. The risk now is that the animosities built up since March will linger.

Despite London's claims that British action that forced a solution, Britain won virtually no concessions. No British beef will be exported any time soon. The EU still will have final say on what gets exported and when.

"The British, with their confrontation politics, have not achieved anything more than they would have had they opted for politics of cooperation," said Dutch Prime Minister Wim Kok.

What may have been achieved is the political resolve among Britain's EU partners to reform the voting procedures that London exploited in its attempt to get its own way in the mad cow crisis.

Three months ago the European Union launched a year-long conference to rewrite the principal EU treaty in light of plans to expand membership to central and eastern European countries.

Among the issues under study is how votes are taken. With EU membership eventually jumping to as many as 25 or 30 countries, unanimity will become virtually impossible to achieve. London, needless to say, opposes changing the voting procedures.

In the wake of Friday's deal, Belgian Prime Minister Jean-Luc Dehaene suggested that sanctions should be imposed on countries who try to undermine the EU for their own purposes.

Major, however, treated the deal as a triumph, calling it "a rational, common sense agreement" that had come about because Britain had forced it to the top of the EU agenda nearly every day for the past several weeks.

But while Major may not be returning from the continental wars on his shield, he definitely will want to be under it if early British reaction is any indication.

"John Major went as naked as Michelangelo's David into the conference chamber of the Florence summit, and came out with a diplomatic fig leaf on the "mad cow" beef ban," wrote the London Independent.

Major's next battle will be fought Monday in Parliament, when he tries to convince legislators of his European victory.

Violence stalls Chechen peace talks again

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — Military negotiators said their talks to end the Chechen war were at a standstill Saturday, and fighting in the capital claimed more lives despite a cease-fire.

Since Friday, attacks in Grozny have killed five Russian soldiers and four Chechens, the Russian military said.

Both sides have signed peace agreements in recent weeks, and negotiations Saturday in the Grozny suburb of Khankala were meant to clear up problems remaining in a June 10 military agreement to wind down the 18-month war in the separatist republic.

But two hours of talks brought no progress Saturday, negotiators said.

"I cannot say that we have agreed on anything today," Kazbek Makhashev, head of the rebel delegation, told the ITAR-Tass news agency.

Russian officials blamed the Chechens for failing to provide a written explanation for why they had violated a cease-fire. The rebels accused Russia's army of ignoring the truce as well.

Since Friday, attacks in Grozny have killed five Russian soldiers and four Chechens, the Russian military said.

The latest round of talks began Friday and are to resume Monday in Khankala.

The talks were moved today from the village of Shali to federal headquarters in Khankala after the Russians expressed security concerns, the Interfax news agency said.

Clashes have killed dozens since the cease-fire took effect June 1, casting doubt on the peace process.

No details were immediately available on the four Chechen deaths reported Saturday by the military. On Friday, five Russian servicemen were killed when their armored vehicle hit a mine.

Additionally, an election worker in Chechnya's Moscow-backed government, Artur Umansky, was kidnapped Friday night in the city of Argun, ITAR-Tass reported.

As many as 30,000 people, mostly civilians, have died since President Boris Yeltsin sent troops into Chechnya in December 1994 to crush the republic's independence movement.

Yeltsin appointed retired Gen. Alexander Lebed as his national security chief this week, and Lebed quickly called for a speedy, negotiated end to the unpopular war.

But Lebed denies reports that he plans to visit Chechnya next week, saying Saturday he probably will not go before the July 3 presidential runoff.

"To visit Chechnya one must have something," Lebed told independent NTV television. "I am now collecting information. As soon as I am through with this, I will go."

Mozambique children try to cope with peace

GUIJA, Mozambique (AP) — She can't be more than 16. But Marta Mundlovu has the troubled eyes of an old soldier, her childhood lost to violence and uncertainty.

She was one of hundreds of children snatched from their families and forced to work for a rebel army during the 1980s, when Mozambique's 17-year civil war was at its most vicious.

With the coming of peace under a 1992 accord, Marta has emerged a mixture of hardened survivor and bewildered innocent, a symbol of Mozambicans' fragile hopes for renewal after war nearly destroyed their future.

Marta herself cannot see very far ahead.

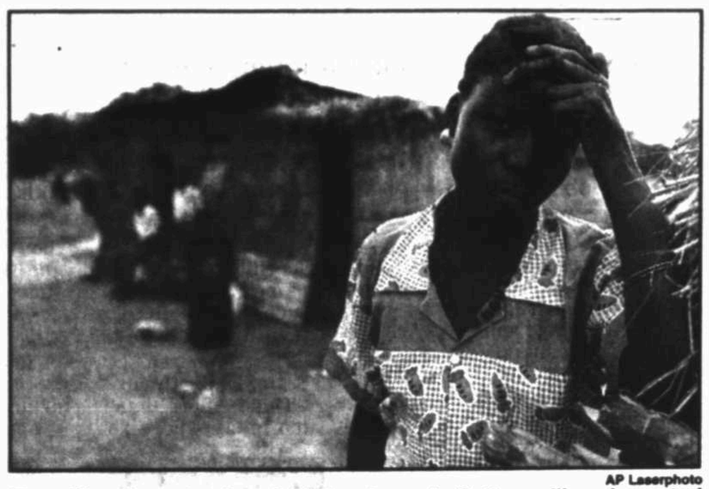
She is confused by the most common of questions put to children: "What do you want to be when you get older?" After a few seconds, she offers only that she wants to return to her parents, a desire frustrated by the chaos still plaguing Mozambique following a generation of war.

For now, she has made a home with Faria Machava and Salfina Chivambo, a couple who cared for her when the rebels who captured them joined Marta's guerrilla camp in 1989.

Machava and Chivambo acted as father and mother to Marta and the rebels never seemed to realize they were not captured together. Children who were part of recognized families were given fewer chores by the guerrillas. Some even had a chance to go to school.

On the surface, Marta is the typical teen-ager, one minute too shy to talk to strangers, the next preening in the gold ear hoops and wooden bead necklace she has found to dress up her T-shirt and faded capulana — the squares of cloth Mozambican women wrap into graceful skirts.

But pressed for personal details, Marta remembers little more than the names of her parents — Celina and Jiquicene — and of the town nearest to her village — Chicaulacuala, on the Zimbabwe border, 280 miles northwest of Maputo, the capital.



AP Laserphoto

Marta Mundlovu stands outside her home in Guija, a village in central Mozambique. She is among hundreds of children who were abducted away from their families and forced to work for the guerrilla army in the 1980s.

"I was afraid all the time. We never knew if we would live to the next day," Marta said, speaking in Shangaan through a translator.

The U.N. Children's Education Fund estimates at least 850 children were kidnapped by guerrillas of the rightist Renamo movement during the war. Some were forced to fight, but most were put to work as cooks and cleaners.

Civilians of all ages were herded into Renamo camps in a campaign to terrorize ordinary Mozambicans and make it impossible for the leftist Frelimo movement to govern.

There is no evidence Frelimo, which took power after independence from Portugal in 1975, used children in its army.

Renamo has never officially acknowledged it targeted children during the war, but the strategy was hard to deny when teen-agers and young adults claiming years of service for the guerrillas demanded demobilization pay at the end of the war.

UNICEF helped the government trace the families of many of the teens and young adults who appeared at demobilization camps during the drawn-out, U.N.-supervised dismantling of the guerrilla army.

A UNICEF spokeswoman, Paula Claycomb, said Marta's story is typical. Children as young as 6 were taken. And whether turned into guerrillas or cooks, the youngsters were forced to follow as Renamo bands waged war across Mozambique, often ending up far from home.

Many other children suffered in other ways, left maimed by land mines or orphaned. UNICEF counts more than 200,000 "children in difficult circumstances" in this nation of 16.5 million people — a heavy burden for one of the world's poorest countries.

UNICEF helped train government social workers to aid youngsters like Marta relearn how to be part of their families and communities, return to school or find jobs.

Dole says administration fails own ethics test in FBI files controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Dole said Saturday that the FBI files controversy was the latest in a "pattern of ethical arrogance" in which the Clinton administration had abused its powers, violated privacy rights and stonewalled investigators.

"The Clinton administration came into office vowing to set a new ethical standard," said Dole, the presumptive Republican presidential nominee. "Unfortunately, the standard they have set cannot be defended. America deserves better."

Dole said the administration was still refusing to turn over 2,000 pages of documents requested by a House committee investigating prior White House conduct, including the 1993 firings of career White House travel office employees.

"It is now time for the White House to put the unanswered questions to rest," Dole said. "I urge the president, and the men and women who work for him, to cooperate with the search for the truth."

Dole delivered his critique through the GOP response to President Clinton's weekly radio address. With the presidential campaign taking shape, Republican officials say the Dole campaign will take the lead role in selecting the GOP's weekly speakers.

The White House wasted no time responding, with spokeswoman Mary Ellen Glynn saying, "If Sen. Dole had any vision for America. ... he would not have devoted his entire radio address to this subject."

Republican presidential hopeful Bob Dole answers reporters' questions.

Harold Ickes, the top political aide at the White House, said of Dole's remarks: "It's obvious he is very short on ideas about dealing with the real issues of the country and is taking the Republican approach of attacking and trying to divide and attacking character."

In the FBI files episode, the administration has acknowledged requesting more than 400 FBI background investigations of people who had security clearance to enter the White House during prior administrations. Many of those whose files were requested were prominent aides to Republican Presidents Reagan and Bush who are still active in GOP affairs.

Clinton has apologized and blamed the episode on a bureaucratic error by aides. The aides, in turn, said they were acting off a list provided by the Secret Service. But the Secret Service has disputed that account and said it has no idea where the list came from.

'The Clinton administration came into office vowing to set a new ethical standard. Unfortunately, the standard they have set cannot be defended. America deserves better.'
— Bob Dole, presumptive Republican presidential candidate

An investigation of the episode has been added to the portfolio of independent counsel Kenneth Starr, who already is conducted a wide-ranging inquiry into the president's financial and campaign dealings during his tenure as Arkansas governor.

In his remarks, Dole took issue with Clinton administration assertions that the files episode was an isolated incident.

He noted that in the early days of the administration, Clinton fired career White House travel office workers so he could replace them with political allies. In that case, Dole said the administration abused its powers by urging the FBI to help justify the firings by issuing a statement that the workers were under investigation.

"In doing so, they misused the FBI and revealed a pattern of ethical arrogance the full extent of which, even today, we are just beginning to discover," Dole said.

A few months after the travel office firings, it was revealed that Clinton political appointees had reviewed the files of 160 Bush administration State Department appointees. Clinton, who had specifically vowed during the campaign that he would not tolerate such conduct, fired the aides after their actions were reported.

"One hundred sixty files in the State Department," Dole said. "This is more than 500 instances too many where political operatives were given access to highly confidential information about American citizens."

Dole noted that the FBI files controversy came to light only after the administration relented and released 1,000 pages of documents to a House committee investigating the travel office firings.

Dole quoted Clinton's own FBI chief as calling the files episode "egregious violations of privacy." And he said the administration's story about how the episode occurred was constantly changing.

"We have learned the privacy of literally hundreds of Americans was trampled on," Dole said.

Simpson to host anti-abuse event

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A group that works to combat spousal abuse has accepted O.J. Simpson's offer to hold a black-tie fundraiser Thursday at his Brentwood estate.

The reception and silent auction will be attended by "a very select group of press and celebrities," according to Stop the Violence-Increase the Peace Foundation, which also seeks to curb other forms of violence.

Leaders of the group said they welcomed Simpson's offer of assistance, even though he pleaded no contest in 1989 to abusing his then-wife Nicole Brown Simpson. He was acquitted last year in the 1994 slayings of his ex-wife and her friend Ronald Goldman.

A message left at the office of Simpson's civil attorney, Robert C. Baker, was not immediately returned.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Detroit celebrates auto centennial

DETROIT — Whether it was the 1927 LaSalle or the 1953 Studebaker Starliner, America's love affair with the automobile has been constant.

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the automobile industry, which began when brothers Charles and J. Frank Duryea produced the first gas-powered motor wagons in Springfield, Mass.

Centennial celebrations featuring thousands of antique and classic cars were being held throughout southeastern Michigan this weekend.

Jay Leno, who last year spent $450,000 for a 1934 black Murphy Duesenberg speedster and whose love of classic cars and motorcycles is well documented, will serve as grand marshal of today's National Auto 100 Parade.

■ Animal rights activists to protest

WASHINGTON — Animal rights activists are descending on the nation's capital to protest what they consider inhumane treatment of animals, including using them for medical experiments.

Today's march is the culmination of the activists' annual weeklong visit to lobby Congress for stronger laws protecting animals used in scientific research.

Some AIDS activists have denounced the march. Animals have been used in experiments to treat AIDS patients — just as they are used in scientific research involving cancer and other life-threatening illnesses.

"In the never ending AIDS war, we have fought very hard for AIDS research. Now we must fight for important animal research that will prove the safety of new therapies and ultimately save lives," said Matthew Sharp, a member of ACT UP/Golden Gate in San Francisco, one of several AIDS and health groups that support using animals in medical research.

■ Police use tear gas at Klan rally

At least five of the 1,000 anti-Klan demonstrators were arrested on charges including assault. No Klan members were arrested.

One woman suffered a minor head injury, a man broke his leg and 30 officers were treated for chemical irritation, said Police Chief Carl Ent.

The melee started about an hour after 15 Klan members began the noon rally at police headquarters, where Ent said they were allowed to assemble for their own safety. The police complex was surrounded by an 8-foot chain-link fence.

When Klan speakers used racial epithets, several anti-Klan demonstrators rushed the fence and began shouting obscenities at officers who stood between the Klan and the protesters.

"The law should follow those who prey on America's children," the president declared.

Clinton used his weekly radio address and remarks to the U.S. Conference of Mayors to focus on crime, even as Dole accused Clinton of a "pattern of ethical arrogance." The former senator, in the Republican radio address, assailed the White House's collection of FBI files.

The president ordered his aides to respond quickly to Dole, while he stuck to his anti-crime script. "I don't see him taking Dole on on this sort of thing," said Harold Ickes, the top political aide at the White House. "What the president is doing is being presidential."

Crime is among a host of issues, traditional staples of GOP campaigns, that Clinton hopes to use. Another example, so-called "family values" issues, will be the focus of a presidential trip to Tennessee on Monday with Hillary Rodham Clinton. They will join Vice President Al Gore and his wife, Tipper, for a family conference.

Clinton's crime initiative is an outgrowth of the so-called Megan's Law, which requires states to tell a community when a convicted sexual offender moves in.

That law, named for a 7-year-old New Jersey girl who was slain, is modeled after a New Jersey statute. The state law was challenged, and in March a federal judge in New Jersey barred community notifications while granting class-action status to some 2,000 released sex offenders. They contend notification was additional punishment and therefore unconstitutional. The man accused in Megan Kanka's slaying is a twice-convicted child molester.

A bill sponsored by Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas, would establish a national registry to track sexual offenders across the country. Rep. Dick Zimmer, R-N.J., has introduced similar legislation in the House.

"They're on the right track," Clinton said. "But we have to move forward now."

He directed Attorney General Janet Reno to report in 60 days with a plan to get the tracking information in the hands of local police.

"We must make sure police officers in every state can get the information they need from any state to track sex offenders down and bring them to justice," Clinton said.

Zimmer agreed. "I'm glad President Clinton has recognized the need for a sex offender tracking system," he said.

The move is another example of Clinton seizing a politically popular issue championed by someone else — from his adoption of Republican adoption policies to plans for supporting a victim's rights constitutional amendment after Dole did so.

Ranchers sell off cattle due to drought

N.Y. Times News Service

GONZALES, Texas — A virtually rainless period stretching back to last fall has dried up rancher Jim Selman's pastures along the Guadalupe River to the point that grass is so sparse "you can count the rocks."

Equally sparse are the cows — Selman has sold off two-thirds of his herd so far. His driest 1,000-acre pasture is down to 32 cows.

The cows that remain are hard to find, hiding from the heat under oak trees shedding leaves as if preparing to die.

Throughout much of Texas, drought is forcing ranchers to empty their pastures, presaging more expensive beef for consumers by about the middle of next year.

Ranchers, who have been hurting from low calf prices for years, are reluctant to buy hay. And feedlots, which buy ranchers' calves and grow them to slaughter size, are throttling back, because they can't push down the price of calves enough to make a profit.

Consumers won't notice this for months, because the sell-down of breeding cows is providing ground beef for 79 cents to 99 cents per pound plus discounts for lower-quality cuts.

Record grain prices have already forced cutbacks in chicken production, producing a 16 percent increase in broiler prices at wholesale.

In Gonzales County, the heartland of Texas' calf-producing country, an estimated 40 percent of the breeding herd has been sold. Sell-off estimates range to 50 percent of the breeding herd for all of central and south-central Texas and the state's Coastal Bend area.

Since Easter, the number of breeding cows hauled to auction has been 10 times the normal rate in some Texas towns, said Jay Gray, general manager of the Graham Land and Cattle Co. in Gonzales.

Selman, president of the Independent Cattlemen's Association, started selling cows in March after his supply of hay was eaten up.

Like many other ranchers, he decided to sell cows rather than purchase expensive feed. The lack of drinking water in the state is expected to force further sell-offs this summer.

Ponds are going dry, and those not completely dry are being fenced off to keep cows from becoming stuck in the mud.

On Selman's ranch, a stock pond that held water through the driest part of the 1950s is down to about six inches.

Yet he is more fortunate than most landowners, because he owns frontage on the Guadalupe River, which is still running.

What remains of Selman's breeding herd are the very best animals, young cows under 5 years of age, which he is determined to keep.

WEATHER WATCH

Today to be partly cloudy, upper-90s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high between 95 and 100 with south to southeast winds at 10-20 mph, according to the National Weather Service.

Tonight's forecast calls for fair skies and a low between 70 and 75.

Monday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and a high between 95 and 100.

The high for Saturday was 98, compared to the record high for that date of 107, set in 1951.

Saturday's low was 73, compared to the record low of 60, set in 1973.

STATE

West Texas was mostly sunny Saturday while the rest of the state was partly to mostly cloudy with showers in the south.

Temperatures were mild to hot with readings ranging from the 70s in the rain to 90s in the sun.

An upper level low pressure area over the northwest Gulf provided the focus for shower and thunderstorm development across much of South Texas.

The area of showers was generally east of a line from Johnson City to Hondo to Beeville. The showers were producing locally heavy rainfall amounts of one to two inches.

Winds were generally out of the south with speeds at 5 to 15 mph.

The North Texas forecast is for today to be partly cloudy with a chance of mainly afternoon thunderstorms; most numerous in the southeast. Highs will range from 91 to 94. Tonight will be mostly clear in the west and partly cloudy in central and eastern portions with a chance of evening thunderstorms. Lows will range from 71 to 75.

South Texas is to be rainy and hot with highs in the 80s to mid 90s. Tonight will be cloudy with lows in the 70s.

Forecasters said West Texas will have mostly sunny days and fair nights through Monday. There is a slight chance of late afternoon and evening thunderstorms over the far west and Davis Mountains as well as across the Concho Valley, Edwards Plateau and Panhandle. Highs will be in the lower 90s to around 100 degrees with readings along the Rio Grande nearing 114. Lows in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Thunderstorms with locally heavy rain and damaging wind were scattered over the lower Great Lakes and along the Gulf Coast states and a tornado touched down in Montana on Saturday.

Scattered thunderstorms moved along the Great Lakes from Ohio through Pennsylvania and upstate New York, with showers extending into New England.

In the West, thunderstorms gathered along the eastern slopes of the Rockies in Colorado and New Mexico.

Thunderstorms also were likely along a line extending across the middle of the country from Kansas all the way into Indiana.

Showers rolled across sections of central and eastern Montana and headed into the western Dakotas.

A tornado touched down just north of Hardin, Mont., 50 miles east of Billings. Some buildings were damaged, but no injuries were reported.

In Michigan's Bay County in the eastern part of the state, a car was swept into a rising creek during heavy morning rains, killing the driver.

On Friday night, two tornados touched down in central and eastern Michigan, damaging or destroying dozens of homes. No deaths or injuries were reported.

Elsewhere on Saturday, a low-pressure system from the Gulf of Alaska is moving toward California carrying winter-like weather, the National Weather Service said Saturday.

That includes the possibility of snow this week in the mountains of Northern California and the Sierra Nevada, the weather service said.

Saturday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from a morning low of 32 at Truckee, Calif., to an early afternoon reading of 96 at Sherman, Texas. The highest heat index, the rating based on a combination of temperature and humidity, was 120 at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., and the lowest wind chill was 21 at Cut Bank, Mont.

Crowd marches to show racial unity

GREENVILLE (AP) — Bearing posters and high hopes, about 150 people marched Saturday past modest, elm-shaded homes to show community solidarity in the wake of two church burnings and a Ku Klux Klan rally.

"I was here to give support and to show that we are a city that stands together and we always will regardless of all the hate groups that came," said 18-year-old Stakunta Pierce, who graduated from Greenville High School last month.

Pierce was one of several dozen black men participating in the Hunt County African-American Men March with black women and children and about 20 white people, including Mayor Sue Ann Harting.

Wearing ball caps, straw hats, T-shirts and tennis shoes, the crowd slowly walked the two miles between the Clark Street Christian Church and the municipal building, bearing posters with slogans of peace and racial unity.

As they processed, the marchers sang "When the Saints Go Marching In" and other hymns.

At the municipal building, the East Texas State University president's assistant said the march was to reaffirm blacks' roles as community and family leaders.

"It is a message that we must convey and a message that we must receive," said ETSU's Anthony Harris. "We know some are here because you want to send a message to the Klan and other outside groups that you are not going to be intimidated, not going to be pushed aside."

The march was planned about three months ago by the Doers Club of Hunt County, a group of a dozen civic-minded black men, organizer Anthony Harris said.

But chance intervened on timing, placing it shortly after events that have left many townspeople heartsick over how the nation and the world views the town of 24,000 people, about 45 miles northeast of Dallas.

On Friday, a dozen Ku Klux Klansmen from Arkansas held a rally on the steps of the Hunt County Courthouse. Dozens of state troopers joined police from Greenville and surrounding communities for security as a crowd of more than 100 onlookers variously jeered and cheered.

But there was no violence and no one was arrested during the addresses by Michael Lowe, the KKK's regional director, and two other Klansmen, including National Director Thomas Robb.

A Texas chapter of the KKK has said it will hold a rally on June 29.

Police had feared that members of the militant New Black Panther Party of Dallas would show up at Friday's Klan event. After two black churches burned overnight June 9, a group including some party members toured the remains of the New Light House of Prayer, brandishing shotguns and semiautomatic rifles and threatening to kill white arsonists.

The church's associate pastor quickly denounced the display.

maintenance of disposal regulations. And the bundled trash also would prevent problems with blowing garbage at the dump.

"It's a win-win situation for our community and the contractor," Assistant City Manager Glen Hackler said.

In addition to savings to the city and profits for Recycle Midland, a MRF would create about 30 jobs.

Although an MRF will save residents from sorting recyclable items, the existing recycling program — with collection bins at public schools — will not be affected. And it will not affect the partnerships with Keep Midland Beautiful and other recycling initiatives, Hackler said.

"Still the most efficient recycling is done at the source," Hackler said.

FUEL: Church burnings may be epidemic can be searched for patterns.

"We have been trying to investigate the possibility of links within small numbers of cases or across regions or even nationally," Patrick said. Combining these FBI and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms files "gives us another perspective on that question."

And, after two weeks of intense publicity and stepped up investigations:

■ Federal civil rights charges are not far off in a South Carolina case where two Ku Klux Klan members have been charged locally in two black church fires last June.

■ More FBI and ATF agents and civil rights prosecutors are soon to be added with $21.5 million in extra funding for what is already the largest federal arson investigation in history. Nearly 250 federal agents are at work with an equal number of state troopers and local policemen.

■ More than 800 citizen tips have come into a toll-free federal hotline — "some very useful and some nutty ones," according to one federal agent.

■ The first systematic prevention efforts have begun: volunteer church-sitters, new locks and lights on churches and more frequent police patrols.

This activity is in response to a surge in attacks on churches since January 1995, particularly fires in black churches in the Southeast.

More than 55 percent of the 216 church attacks investigated by federal agents since 1990 came in the last 18 months — two-thirds of the recent ones in the Southeast.

And 56 percent of the recent attacks targeted black churches even though there are far more white churches.

It's more concentrated this year. Since January, 78 percent of all suspicious church fires in the Southeast occurred at black churches.

"It's plain that racial hostility is behind many of the fires," Patrick said.

Last October, three men pleaded guilty to federal civil rights charges in the February 1995 firebombing and cross-burning of two black churches in Maury County, Tenn. They had talked with drinking buddies of "burning nigger churches."

In rural southwest Mississippi, three white teen-agers pleaded guilty to federal civil rights charges of torching two black churches in 1993 on the anniversary of civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination.

In South Carolina, two Ku Klux Klan members are in local custody on charges of burning two black churches a year ago. Federal charges could be added. "We're investigating that case further, all dimensions of it," Patrick said.

But not all attacks on houses of worship involve racial motives.

"This investigation includes white churches as well as black ones, synagogues and mosques," Patrick said. "Religious hostility is driving many of the attacks, particularly on the synagogues."

At white churches, "sometimes it's anti-religious animus; sometimes it's more personal issues within the congregation," he said.

Youth vandalism spawns some attacks; juveniles are in custody in North Carolina and elsewhere.

Burglars set fires to cover their tracks and vagrants in unlocked, unwatched rural churches have lost control of fires set to keep warm, said one Treasury official. Now there may be copycats "because some people get a thrill out of seeing public attention to their actions even if they aren't identified."

Finally, accidents have explained 7 percent of all church fires federal agents investigated since 1990, and twice that share of recent black church fires in the Southeast, where poorer churches have sometimes fallen victim to bad wiring.

But the fires have recalled church bombings 30 and 40 years ago during the civil rights movement in the South and have elicited offers of help from across the political and religious spectrum.

"If the lesson of all this is that, despite extraordinary progress in the last 40 years, we have some distance still to go and we come together as a country to go that distance," Patrick said, "that may be the triumph that comes from this tragedy."

WIN: Texas narrowly elects Sen. Hutchison

(From 1A)

Mrs. Hutchison said.

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm and U.S. House Speaker Newt Gingrich were vocal supporters of Mrs. Hutchison's being a delegate.

"I very much admire what Sen. Gramm said — they're either going together or he won't go. And I think that it would be ridiculous for the delegates to the party to not send the United States senator to the convention," Gingrich said in Roswell, Ga., at a Habitat for Humanity site.

Texas Republicans balked at the request, responding by toughening their abortion platform with the removal of a mother's endangered life as the only exception. They also collected signatures from potential delegates on a "pro-life pledge."

Dole didn't attend the state convention, but officials on his behalf bargained to make sure Mrs. Hutchison would be included in the national delegation and avert a potential black eye in Texas.

While it appeared Dole won the fight over Mrs. Hutchison, several of his delegate picks were defeated in elections for the 90 slots awarded from the state's 30 congressional districts.

Among those defeated were Dole's Texas co-campaign chairman Richard Collins, U.S. Rep. Henry Bonilla and former Texas GOP chairman Fred Meyer as anti-abortion activists took firm control of the state's delegation.

Collins later was voted in on the slate of 33 at-large delegates that also included Mrs. Hutchison, Gramm and Bush.

"We view this weekend as a major victory for the pro-life, pro-family movement," said Ralph Reed, executive director of the 1.8 million member Christian Coalition.

The Texas GOP Convention also heard from former presidential hopefuls Pat Buchanan and Steve Forbes.

Buchanan sounded an anti-abortion message while blaming President Clinton for increased immigration and deploying troops to fight on behalf of the United Nations rather than the United States.

"Name one thing this man (Clinton) has done to make abortions rare in this country," Buchanan said.

Forbes blasted Clinton and talked about the country's need for tax reform.

In echoing his campaign theme of tax reform, Forbes said, "It's high time that we turn those initials IRS into RIP, Rest In Peace."

Study: Early intervention costs less than '3-strikes' law

By Fox Butterfield
N.Y. Times News Service

Programs that try to steer the young from wrongdoing — the training of parents whose children often misbehave, for example, or incentives to graduate from high school — are far more cost-effective in preventing crime over the long term than are mandatory sentences that imprison repeat adult offenders for long periods, a new report says.

The report, issued Thursday by the Rand Corp., is the most comprehensive yet to compare the cost-effectiveness of long-term prevention programs, which try to deter children from a life of crime, with that of the politically popular "three strikes and you're out" laws, adopted in many states in recent years, which seek to prevent crime by mandating lengthy imprisonment of criminals after a third felony.

The study concluded that a state government could avert 157 crimes a year by investing $1 million in a parent training program and 258 crimes a year by investing the same amount in a graduation incentives program.

In contrast, it said, investing $1 million in the building and operating of the new prisons needed to incarcerate more career criminals for long periods would prevent 60 crimes a year.

The study also found that a $1 million investment in a program to monitor the behavior of 12- and 13-year-old delinquents could prevent 72 crimes a year, though a more broadly aimed program like Head Start, which provides home visits to expectant mothers and several years of day care, would prevent only 11 a year.

The authors of the study, "Diverting Children From a Life of Crime: Measuring Costs and Benefits," acknowledge that their estimates are based on "limited data" and, given the complexity of the issue, are subject to "large uncertainties."

The authors used a complex formula to calculate the number of crimes that would not be committed by individuals over their lifetimes if money was invested in one of four preventive programs.

The formula began with a widely accepted calculation on the number of crimes that individuals may commit over a lifetime. It then took account of the reductions in problem behavior and crimes committed by each program's participants, as recorded in follow-up evaluations.

This number was then adjusted to account for the expected drop in efficiency when a small, intensive pilot program is expanded, and for participants' ages, since it is easier to predict that delinquent adolescents will break the law than to predict that very young children will do so.

Peter Greenwood, the chief author, said he believed the results should provide "clear policy implications" for government officials.

"The big policy question is, Who will act on this?" said Mr. Greenwood, the director of Rand's criminal justice program.

"The difficulty is that state attorneys general, who oversee crime fighting, do not normally have budgets for parent training or high school graduation incentives." But he said there were now enough small, well run and carefully evaluated crime prevention programs around the nation that state or city governments should begin adopting them on a large scale.

Professor Alfred Blumstein, a criminologist at Carnegie-Mellon University, said the study was "a very welcome step" in offering "the kind of analysis that should underlie public policy."

"I'm not sure I buy the numbers, because they were grossly estimated," Blumstein said. "But the basic principle is correct: If you intervene early, you not only save the costs of incarceration, you also save the costs of crime and gain the benefits of an individual who is a taxpaying contributor to the economy."

The Rand report will provide strong evidence to many criminologists who have been arguing that early intervention is a more effective anti-crime tool than the longer prison sentences prescribed by politicians.

The report also comes at a time when some states are discovering that the cost of prisons, now between $40 billion and $50 billion annually, is forcing them to cut spending on other vital services, like higher education.

The three-strikes law on which the study focused was California's, the most punitive in the nation. That statute was substantially watered down Thursday by the California Supreme Court, which held that judges may ignore a defendant's prior convictions if they think the sentence mandated by the law would be too harsh.

thing interactive," Angie Way, curator of the Big Spring Heritage Museum said. "We wanted to show them that everything made back then was pretty much made from scratch."

To go with their buttered tortillas, children could buy a glass of hand-made lemonade for two bits, or a quarter.

For all their hard work, children walked away with some souvenirs — pieces of leather with their names on it, branded pieces of wood and corn-husk dolls.

"We wanted to demonstrate to kids that people back then could make something out of nothing," Ms. Way said.

Crafting corn-husk dolls was one way pioneers used something that today is probably thrown away or used for tamales.

"Corn-husk dolls show how pioneers made a toy out of a secondary or waste material," Ms. Way said.

Volunteer Shelly Burrow helped about 100 children make corn-husk dolls and said they were just as popular with the boys as with the girls.

"While the boys were making the dolls, they would turn the apron around to the back to make a cape," Ms. Burrow said. "I guess they were making a Batman."

Calligraphy is another example of how things were done during pioneer days. In earlier days, emphasis was given on penmanship, Ms. Way said.

"Back then, handwriting was considered an art," she said. "A letter was how many people made first introductions and you wanted to make sure your lettering was perfect."

The last example of pioneer life and know-how was evident during a tour of the Potton House, which was built in 1901 and has much of its original furnishings. It is also an example of pioneer ingenuity.

Tour guides told children that rain water was collected on the roof where it went through the gutter and into a pipe system. The water traveled through the pipes into a cistern and was then pumped for use in the home.

Proposed water law would require disclosures

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Congress is considering a far-reaching proposal requiring municipal water systems to tell the public what contaminants have been found in local drinking water.

The water systems would put those findings in water bills once a year, explaining what pollutants were found and, if federal water quality standards were violated, how the pollutants could affect the consumers' health.

Advocates of the legislation contend that this relatively simple step would be a powerful tool for insuring that water providers maintain good water quality. Critics say that, on the contrary, the notices would confuse consumers.

The so-called right-to-know provision is the latest in a steadily expanding list of federal programs that seek to deal with pollution not by prescribing how to prevent it or to clean it up, but merely by making information readily available to the public.

The provision, sponsored by Republicans and Democrats alike and unanimously approved by a House committee, is virtually certain to be approved by the full House when it votes on revisions to the Safe Drinking Water Act, probably by the end of the month.

Even though the Senate rejected such a plan when it unanimously approved its own version of the drinking water bill last year, it could well survive in the one piece of major environmental legislation that is likely to pass the 104th Congress.

The provision is strongly supported by the Clinton administration and environmental groups, and there is little vocal opposition from state and local governments or water companies.

Although California law requires similar disclosures and some utilities elsewhere provide them, the new federal law would make the statements much more widely available and easier to understand.

"I think this will have a profound effect on the quality of drinking water in this country," said Richard Wiles, vice president for research at the Environmental Working Group, which lobbied hard for the provision and has collected and publicized data on pesticides and other contaminants in drinking water.

'Nobody wants to hide information from the citizens.'
—Thomas W. Curtis, director for natural resources at the National Governors' Association

"The easy problems will be fixed right away," he said, "and there will be a much greater effort to fix the more difficult problems."

But Thomas W. Curtis, director for natural resources at the National Governors' Association, said state and local officials, while not opposed, are "skeptical and have some questions" about the proposal. He said that it would cost millions of dollars to administer and that it might cause suppliers of water to make misguided decisions about controlling pollution based more on adverse publicity than on demonstrable risks to public health.

"Nobody wants to hide information from citizens," Curtis said, "and no elected official that I have ever spoken to says, 'Hey, we have to protect people from information because they can't deal with it.' At the same time, you have to insure that there is a context. What is the value of the information, and how will it be used?

"I think there is a potential for people to get very alarmed and not to understand what to do with that information."

The provision, as drafted by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., and H. James Saxton, R-N.J., would mean that consumers would be presented each year with a complete list of contaminants that had actually been detected in their drinking water.

If the detected levels exceeded standards set by the Environmental Protection Agency, or if they involved substances deemed to raise especially serious health concerns, the notice would include a simply worded explanation of the possible health consequences of exposure to those substances. The notices would provide a toll-free telephone number where consumers could get more information.

Some states already require that water customers be notified when contaminants are detected, even if there is no violation of federal standards.

New York state has a law, for example, that requires water suppliers in Nassau and Suffolk counties on Long Island to publish notices each year in local newspapers about the results of water testing.

California requires all major water systems to mail such information to consumers. Some other water suppliers do so voluntarily. The proposed new federal law, which would apply to any water system serving more than 10,000 people, would bring clear, simple notices directly to most of the nation's population for the first time.

It is an approach that the Clinton administration has increasingly adopted as a way of putting pressure on industry and others to prevent pollution. Several other measures also show the approach:

— The Toxic Release Inventory requires industries to make public data about their emissions of hundreds of chemicals, and is about to be expanded for the second time in the Clinton administration. Industry groups are suing the agency and lobbying Congress to prevent the expansions.

— There are new rules requiring landlords and home sellers to disclose information to renters and buyers if the property owners know about hazards from lead paint on the premises.

— The EPA is trying to improve the labeling of pesticides and household cleaning products so that consumers will know more about what is in these commonly used chemicals.

Astronauts continue experiments

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Columbia's astronauts donned strange-looking goggles and backpacks Friday, so researchers could electronically measure and record movements of their eyes, heads and upper torsos as their nervous systems make what is often an uneasy adjustment to weightlessness.

When schedule and cloud conditions permit, they will attempt to collect photographs of Texas croplands and reservoirs for state Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry to help assess the impact of a severe drought.

About two-thirds of all space travelers suffer some degree of motion sickness during their first days aloft, according to previous studies of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Experts believe there may be a link between the illness and the way astronauts attempt to compensate for weightlessness by moving their eyes and heads.

Researchers believe space travelers may inadvertently contribute to their unease by involuntarily turning their upper torsos to redirect their gaze — much as someone wearing a neck brace does — instead of simply shifting their eyes or swiveling their heads as they do under the influence of gravity.

■ For updates on the space shuttle mission, call Cityline at 560-2400, enter category 6202

Astronauts may do this to suppress unwanted signals from the inner ear, which contain gravity sensors that help maintain balance on Earth but are useless in the weightless conditions of space.

"Even on Earth, we really don't know why people get motion sickness," said Dr. Douglas Watt, director of aerospace research at McGill University in Montreal. "We are measuring eye movements, head movements and upper back movements, and we are looking at the pattern of eye, head and body coordination. From that, we can tell they are suppressing their inner-ear function."

Columbia blasted off Thursday on a planned 17-day flight, the longest ever for a shuttle. Astronauts Charles Brady, Rick Linnehan, Robert Thirsk and Jean-Jacques Favier plan to repeat their motion sickness experiments near the midpoint and at the end of the mission.

Citing federal rules designed to protect the medical privacy of astronauts, mission officials would not disclose whether any of the four experiment subjects was experiencing illnesses.

The astronauts were vague as well. But Thirsk, a Canadian physician, told ground controllers, "I think we can tell you we have all experienced some unusual sensations we didn't experience on Earth."

In live television views of astronaut activities beamed to Earth the six-man, one-woman crew appeared healthy and active as they worked shoulder to shoulder in a school bus-size laboratory module tucked into Columbia's cargo bay.

The fliers are engaged in a range of other medical experiments documenting changes in their muscle and skeletal systems as well as a variety of physics and biotechnology investigations.

Striking machinists blame fill-in workers for crash of F/A-18C

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A jet fighter that crashed in Illinois had just undergone major repairs by replacement workers, striking machinists at McDonnell Douglas Corp. claimed Friday.

But while the machinists stopped short of laying blame for the fatal crash, the defense manufacturer stood by the white-collar workers who have filled in for the strikers and denied there was any problem with the plane.

"The fact is we don't know what happened, and any speculation at this point is pure conjecture," McDonnell Douglas president Herb Lanese said.

The Navy and McDonnell Douglas are investigating the cause of Wednesday's crash, which may not be determined for several weeks.

Machinists did not blame replacement employees directly, but one machinist who had worked on the ill-fated FA-18C Hornet previously said fill-ins are not qualified for such complex work.

The jet clipped a row of trees, ripped through power lines and slammed into a garage in Bethalto, Ill., a suburb 25 miles northeast of St. Louis.

Test pilot Jeffrey J. Crutchfield, 44, of St. Charles, was killed in the crash. He was flying solo, taking the plane through aerial maneuvers in preparation for an air show in the Czech Republic next week.

White-collar company employees have been on the assembly line since June 5, when 6,700 machinists walked off the job over concerns about job security. Some temporary replacements also were hired.

McDonnell Douglas contends the replacements are highly qualified — many are the engineers who designed the planes and the p

The pilot's 18-year-old son, Jim Crutchfield, witnessed the crash. A pilot for two years, he told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that as the plane plunged, the engine made a clicking sound as if it was deprived of fuel.

Lack of pattern makes daunting task for investigators of church fires

N.Y. Times News Service

ROCKY POINT, N.C. — Standing under a tall oak tree with singed leaves near the charred remains of the Hills Chapel Missionary Baptist Church here, Louis A. Iliano explained how tough it is to find the cause of a fire amid the scattered piles of burned wood on the ground.

"Every fire is real hard to investigate because all the evidence is consumed," said Iliano, who as a federal investigator has moved from one scorched site to the next in the Carolinas.

The diverse characteristics of the blazes in the Carolinas alone illustrate the daunting task faced by federal and local investigators searching for causes to nearly three dozen suspected arsons at black churches in the South.

In the last several months, their findings have led to the arrests of two men with ties to the Ku Klux Klan in connection with a fire at a Greeleyville, S.C., church as well as this week's fairly quick conclusion that a fire here was caused by faulty fluorescent lighting. And still there are dozens left unsolved, tinged by the suspicions of many that the fires have been racially motivated.

Iliano, referring to his investigations in North and South Carolina, said, "There is no one set pattern or motive," even when the fires are ruled arsons.

But as the rate of such fires has accelerated across the South, the search for patterns and answers has intensified.

The White House and other political and church leaders have debated whether the blazes represent a regional conspiracy, or reflect heightened racial tensions in the country, or are the work of copycats. The answers, however, are more likely to come from the painstaking investigations conducted by Iliano and others.

Just this week, investigators believe they have found the cause of three fires at black churches in North Carolina. In addition to determining that the Rocky Point fire was caused by faulty wiring, they also charged a white volunteer firefighter in East Howellsville with arson, in a case that some officials say may be racially motivated.

And in Cerro Gordo, police arrested two black men after a month-long investigation and charged them with burning a historic building on the church property.

North Carolina Attorney General Michael F. Easley said the number of church fires this year in the state may not be much higher than last year, but that his figures show a slighter higher percentage of black churches have burned. And he is troubled by the regional incidence of the fires. "There is certainly a problem there when you select a church based on race," he said.

"People are reminded of back during racial persecutions" he said, noting that although he is just 46, he can remember when there were segregated bathrooms and drinking fountains. "I suppose rationally or not, that's why I find it so offensive," he said.

The fires have destroyed old, rural buildings where generations of mostly black congregations have worshipped. And they do inflame racial tensions simmering beneath the surface of small-town societies, opening the old wounds caused by racism. But the flames also tend to generate forgiveness from the very churchgoers whose memories have been turned to ashes.

Mary Ann Gowans, 55, is a lifelong resident of Cerro Gordo, where life is still slow enough that many residents spend part of the day sitting on benches inside the gas station on the corner near the railroad tracks, catching up on local gossip.

She had raised money to restore the 132-year-old wooden school house on the grounds of Mt. Tabor Baptist Church there. Mrs. Gowans, who is black, went to the first through eighth grades there when schools were segregated.

The building burned May 23, and this week police arrested two black men, both contractors at the schoolhouse, and charged them in connection with the burning. While she was relieved to hear that the fire at her church was not racially motivated, she remains unsettled by the series of fires elsewhere in the South.

"It seems like history is repeating itself," said Mrs. Gowans, now a fourth-grade teacher at Cerro Gordo Elementary School.

The backroads area in Rocky Point, where Hills Chapel burned early Monday, is similar to the setting of many church fires in the South. A two-lane street where children pedaled along on bicycles interrupted by corn and tobacco fields. Every so often, a small house or trailer home appeared alongside the road.

Locals were stunned when they heard about the fire. The Rev. William T. Howard Sr. said that when a member of his congregation phoned that night and woke him, "I shook my head to see if I was dreaming."

When he saw his charred church, he said, "It never crossed my mind that someone would burn the church."

He suspected some sort of electrical problem had caused the fire, since there were no lightning storms that night.

The Rev. Howard and several of his 100-member congregation gathered on a moist, hot afternoon this week where the church had stood to hear what they all initially said they suspected: the fire was not caused by human hands. Investigators found that faulty wiring to a fluorescent light had caused the fire.

Democrats to unveil new 'families first' agenda today for fall campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Expressing optimism about the fall campaign, Democrats will outline a "families first" agenda on today pledging action on a series of pocketbook issues if the party regains control of Congress in November.

The program, to be unveiled simultaneously in five cities, ranges from tax breaks for education to pay equity for women to expanded health insurance for children. Anti-crime legislation is also pledged, according to several sources who described the Democratic blueprint on condition of anonymity.

Congressional Democrats will also embrace their own program of welfare reform. And they will issue a promise to balance the budget — more slowly than Republicans favor — while pledging to protect Medicare, Medicaid, education and the environment. No specifics are expected to be provided.

The program is "modest and moderate and feasible," House Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt said recently, underscoring that Democrats are eager to shed the label of big-program liberalism that doomed them to defeat in the 1994 election campaign.

Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota told reporters on Friday the program was designed to permit voters to "better understand the differences between Republicans and Democrats."

The Democrats make their announcement at an important juncture in the 1996 political campaign. Most recent public opinion polls give President Clinton double-digit leads over his opponent, former Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole. At the same time, Democrats report improving prospects in numerous congressional races.

Republicans point to polls indicating that the GOP generally fares well in hypothetical matchups against Democratic congressional candidates. At the same time, as if to underscore the stakes, Republicans attacked the Democratic initiative this week, even before it was announced, as "election-year hot air."

They said it paled in contrast to their own "Contract With America." They also sniped that fewer than a dozen incumbent Democrats were joining in today's program, in contrast to virtually unanimous support among Republicans when the Contract With America was signed two years ago.

On that, at least, the Democrats are quick to agree. Gephardt has repeatedly said Democrats are attempting something more modest than the GOP agenda. And whereas Republicans unveiled their Contract in September 1994 in a splashy ceremony on the steps of the Capitol, Democrats are dispatching lawmakers and congressional candidates to Sacramento, Houston, Des Moines, Detroit and Fairfax, Va., in the Washington suburbs, where Gephardt and Daschle will preside over a 75-minute program linked by satellite.

In crafting their plan, said one Democratic official, Gephardt and senior party leaders want to "make it clear to people what we're for...The purpose is to give Democratic candidates something to run on."

The party is expected to spend millions this fall trying to depict Republican incumbents and challengers as slavish followers of Speaker Newt Gingrich, whose own poll ratings hover in the 30-percent range.

The Democratic blueprint has been months in the making, and work began on it at a time when the party seemingly had only the remotest chance of regaining control of either the House or Senate next year. In the months since, their political fortunes have improved as Clinton's political Officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, provided the following description, although no details were available on the costs.

Pledging paycheck security, Democrats will declare support for pay equity for women, expanded child and dependant care credits and a ban on clothing and other imports made with child labor.

A program of expanded health care coverage for children will also be included, although details were unavailable. To fight crime, Democrats are expected to pledge to add police beyond the 100,000 called for in legislation enacted in 1993, as well as a "safe haven" program designed to give some school-age kids a safe after-school environment.

Other proposals include support for two Clinton legislative proposals, one calling for an expanded tax deduction for education expenses and the other for a measure to make pensions more available and portable for workers switching jobs.

Democrats also want to cut inheritance taxes on family-owned businesses, and repeal tax breaks for corporations that move jobs overseas.

Officials said there would be no detailed breakdown of plans for balancing the budget. Rather, they said the party would commit to passing a plan to erase deficits in seven years. That would place Democrats two years beyond the GOP timetable.

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Maybe Guy Arnone should get hit by lightning more often.

Arnone, 30, returned to work Friday to the cheers of his colleagues and a jostling crush of media attention, fresh from a recent appearance on "Oprah" and with claims of keener sight, hearing, taste and smell.

"People have asked me if I've been given supernatural powers, or if I'm telepathic now," Arnone said at the offices of Funders Mortgage Company in the Calabasas section of Los Angeles, where he works as a loan officer. "Sometimes I wonder."

Yet it's highly unlikely that Arnone would elect to relive the events of March 14 — even though he still doesn't remember what happened.

On that day, Arnone had just sprinted across a parking lot through a driving rain to his car whena bolt of lightning punched him to the asphalt. Friday marked Arnone's first day back to the scene of the freakish event which landed him in the hospital and, because he survived, on the front page.

"When I saw him up close my first thought was, 'He's gone,'" said Joe Abdullah, the first person to reach Arnone's side after the strike.

"There was steam coming out of his mouth," said Los Angeles County Fire Department Capt. Richard Leitch, a member of the first emergency crew to arrive after frantic and horrified co-workers called 911.

Yet there he was the next Friday, June 22, crisp and dapper in a double-breasted suit, his wife and 3-year-old daughter at his side.

"I'm lucky," he said. "We all know that."

As well as lucky, Arnone may be the most media-savvy lightning-strike victim in memory. He expertly choreographed photo opportunities for the cameras, suggested story angles to reporters and generally conducted himself as if a Hollywood handler was watching from the wings.

And just when reporters seemed ready to move along, he produced the clothing he was wearing when he was struck in all its scorched and shredded glory, leading to a new flurry of photographs and questions.

"Hey, I saw that on 'Oprah'!" a co-worker said, clearly taken with her brush with celebrity.

"I love it!" Nierenburg replied.

But few could blame Arnone for milking the moment. "I'm ready to come back to work now, and that means a lot," he said. "My family and I just want to thank everyone for the love they've shown us."

And so Guy Arnone is back and, according to one co-worker, only one critical mystery remains: "We haven't decided whether to call him 'Flash' or 'Sparky.'"

Yankees cut Howe

Moorer takes title

DORTMUND, Germany — Michael Moorer regained the vacant IBF heavyweight title Saturday with a split decision over Germany's Axel Schulz. Moorer dominated the first six rounds against a sluggish Schulz, who staged a comeback beginning with a flurry of punches in the seventh round of the 12-round fight.

Fabregas demoted

MILWAUKEE — The California Angels activated lefty reliever Brad Pennington from the 15-day disabled list Saturday, and optioned catcher Jorge Fabregas to Triple-A Vancouver. Pennington, 27, was placed on the 15-day disabled list May 30 with a sore left elbow, and completed an injury rehabilitation assignment in Vancouver. Fabregas was hitting .261 with two home runs and seven RBIs in 115 at-bats.

Reports: Suns offer Barkley to Mavs

Associated Press

The Phoenix Suns have offered to trade Charles Barkley to the Dallas Mavericks, according to a published report in each state Saturday.

The Arizona Republic quoted two Mavericks sources as saying the proposed deal would send Barkley to Dallas for guard Jimmy Jackson and the Mavericks' first-round pick in Wednesday's NBA draft.

In Texas, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram also said the offer was being discussed, citing sources it did not identify.

Both teams and Barkley's agent, Glenn Guthrie, declined to comment.

"It's all speculation," Suns spokeswoman Julie Fie said. "There's a lot of it at this time. It's not the first we've heard and I'm sure it won't be the last."

Suns general manager Bryan Colangelo also declined comment, saying it was team policy not to comment on trade rumors or talks.

"We are not in the business of fueling speculation," he told the Republic.

Mavericks player personnel director Keith Grant would not confirm or deny the report.

Barkley, 33, was out of town. He has said that if he's traded, he would want to go to a team that has a chance for the NBA championship title. Teams that fit that description include the Chicago Bulls, Houston Rockets, Indiana Pacers and the New York Knicks, Barkley said.

The Suns acquired Barkley in a trade with the Philadelphia 76ers four seasons ago. He won the league MVP award in 1993, when Phoenix

Olympic Trials thrill ends for ex-Rebel Mills

■ Rice senior-to-be finishes seventh in 200-meter quarterfinals, chalks up Atlanta meet as "valuable lesson."

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

ATLANTA — It is easy to be left behind by outstanding talent at a competition like the United States Olympic Track and Field Trials.

Midland's TaNisha Mills found that out Saturday, finishing seventh in her quarterfinal 200-meter heat. However, the experience in her two days of running at Olympic Stadium may just serve as the lesson she needed in order to become a better runner in the future.

"I think it served as a valuable lesson," said Mills, whose 24.38-second time was the slowest of the 22 quarterfinalists. "I am grateful I got the experience at this level. It is intense. I didn't realize that until I got here."

Mills' heat was loaded with talent. Four of the eight runners ranked in the top 12 in the United States going into the race with Danette Young leading the way. Young placed herself as the top American in 1996 on Friday with a 22.32 in the first round. Inger Miller, Aspen Burkett and Treshell Mayo also had top 12 times. Miller won the heat with a time of 22.57 on the 112-degree track. Miller and Young would later advance to today's final.

Mills got out quickly but fell back going into the homestretch.

"I got out well on the curve," Mills said. "I wanted to run the curve as fast as I could and maintain it on the straightaway. I just didn't feel any reaction coming off (the curve). I did feel strong. I just wish I would have got more reaction."

After the race, Mills tossed her non-reactive shoes into a trash canister. The act was a product of her frustration. Moments later it served as a realization of the lesson she hopes will allow her to make the transition to an elite sprinter.

"I got some insight on how to be a good athlete mentally and physically. You say you want it but you have to dig inside," Mills said. "That is something I realized you have to do. Those athletes take those things seriously and transfer them onto the track. I will take those things seriously from now on."

To the same effect, the senior to-be at Rice University not only knows what she must do, but she is also pleased as a whole with this past season, that was capped by the Trials' appearance.

Mills, a Class 5A state 400 champion while at Midland Lee, set personal-best times in the 100 (11.44) and 200 (23.44) while at Rice. She ran a key leg on the 4X400 team that earned her All-American honors and also set a school record in the 60 meters (7.44).

"There are not many athletes who went as far as I did," Mills said. "You have to remain positive."

Mills, 21, has many years to perfect her skill and she knows there is time and that means everything right now.

"When I am 25 and come back here, I will know what to expect," Mills said. "To get here at age 21 is quite an accom-

Saturday's Trials: 75 minutes of glory

ATLANTA (AP) — Michael Johnson came within a breeze of the world record in the 200. Dan O'Brien cleared a psychological barrier in the pole vault before challenging his own record in the decathlon.

In a scintillating 75 minutes of track and field excellence that also included the fourth-fastest time ever in the men's 110-meter hurdles, American athletes gave a preview Saturday of the Atlanta Olympics.

On the same track that will be used for this summer's Games, Johnson and O'Brien were among the heroes on a sweltering day in the U.S. track and field trials.

Johnson won his 200 semifinal heat in 19.70 seconds, which would have broken the 17-year-old world record if not for a tailwind over the allowable limit. Jack Pierce ran 12.94 in the semifinals of the hurdles, the fastest ever in the United States.

O'Brien used the pole vault, the event that destroyed him four years ago, as a springboard to the decathlon title and his first Olympic berth. He was on pace after nine events to break his own world record, but wilted in the 108-degree heat in the 1,500 meters.

Also included in the glorious hour and 15 minutes that began with Pierce's run and ended with O'Brien huffing and puffing through the 1,500:

— Carlette Guidry had a time of 22.29 seconds in the semifinals of the women's 200, fastest in the world this year.

— Carl Lewis, saying he "felt incredible," joined Johnson in the 200 final with a semifinal time of 20.29. Also advancing

Irvin lawyers request 2nd indictment be thrown out

DALLAS (AP) — Defense attorneys have filed a new request to have the indictment against Michael Irvin thrown out.

The motion ended a week in which the defense challenged the legality of the search that led to drug charges against the Dallas Cowboys

Criminal District Court Judge Manny Alvarez scheduled a ruling on the motion for Monday, the day before Irvin's trial is set to begin. The second motion was filed Friday.

Irvin, 30, Jasmine Jennipher Nabwangu, 22, and Angela Renee Beck, 21, were indicted April 1 on cocaine and marijuana charges arising from a police search on the Irving hotel room in which they were having a party.

The defense succeeded in getting Irvin's original indictment thrown out last week, halting his trial on grounds that one of the Dallas County grand jurors returning the indictment lives outside of Dallas County.

Irvin's lawyers contend that the second indictment is also flawed, this time because a commissioner of the grand jury is an assistant district attorney who is prosecuting cases that went before the grand jury.

Another grand jury, termed A-1, re-indicted them June 14.

One of the commissioners of that panel was Keith Anderson, an assistant district attorney who took a leave of absence in January to run for office and was back on the job March 14, the motion says.

An attached computer printout "clearly shows that Mr. Anderson is the prosecutor in numerous cases before the 292nd District Court that were indicted by Grand Jury A-1," the motion says.

It continues to say that state law "specifically requires that a grand jury commissioner have no suit in said court which requires the intervention of a jury."

Commissioners select prospective grand jurors. When the first indictment

Cook stymies bogey-free Adams

■ Former Midland Lee golfer falls to six strokes back as John Cook finishes third round with PGA record 24-under, 189.

Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — John Cook wanted to shoot low scores and give himself a chance at his first victory in nearly four years. Mission accomplished in record-setting fashion.

Cook shot an 8-under-par 63 Saturday in the third round of the $1.35 million St. Jude Classic. That gave him a six-stroke lead and a 54-hole score of 24-under 189, the lowest total in PGA Tour history through the first three rounds.

That breaks the previous mark of 191 set by Johnny Palmer in 1954 and tied by Gay Brewer in 1967. His 189 also tied the low total through three consecutive rounds set by Charlie Harper during the 1954 Texas Open.

"I've done things the way that I've wanted to do it," said Cook, who last won in 1992 when he took three tournaments.

"In my mind, somewhere back in the cobwebs of my head in the last couple of years, I knew that I could do something like this at some point in time. Again, whether it happens tomorrow or not, I don't know."

■ Golf Roundup

John Adams, playing with Cook in the final group, started the round three strokes behind Cook. He finished six back at 18-under 195 despite his own bogey-free round of 66.

Adams came into the interview room wanting to talk about Cook's eight-birdie, no-bogey performance.

"You get kind of wrapped up watching him go," he said. "When it's your turn to make birdie, sometimes you get lackadaisical a little bit."

Cook declined to celebrate early.

"There's a lot of good scores to be shot. Luckily, I've shot three of them, but someone will come out tomorrow and shoot a low score," he said.

Adams shot down that idea, pointing out how well Cook is driving, putting and thinking.

"Tomorrow I would just have to lose my mind out there and shoot 9- or 10-under. And in most cases, that's not going to happen," Adams said. "It's fun to watch. He's playing good. Maybe he'll drag me along with him a little bit."

Kenny Perry was briefly tied with Adams at 16-under, but he fell back to 196 after a 67. Paul Stankowski shot 66 but was 10 back at 199. Kirk Triplett (64) and Justin Leonard (66) were at 200.

Cook, whose only bogey through 54 holes came Friday, turned in five of his eight birdies on the back nine to match the biggest lead through three rounds on tour this year and in the history of the tournament sponsored by FedEx.

Greg Norman led by six strokes going into the final round of the Masters in April before losing. In Memphis, Dave Hill (1967) and Ray Floyd (1982) each led by five strokes and went on to win.

Cook's second birdie on the par-4, 427-yard No. 6 put him four strokes up on Adams at 19-under before Adams pulled back with his own birdie on No. 7.

Cook saved par on No. 10 after driving into a bunker, then strung together four birdies starting with No. 11 and including No. 13 where he nearly holed out his second shot.

A 20-foot birdie putt on the par-3, 223-yard No. 14 closed his birdie run and moved him five strokes ahead. Cook added his final birdie on No. 16 when he set up an 8-footer with a sand wedge.

Senior PGA Bell Atlantic Classic

PHILADELPHIA — Local favorite Jay Sigel attacked the course with a 4-under-par 66 in the second round to take a share of the lead Saturday with John Schroeder at the Senior PGA's $900,000 Bell Atlantic Classic.

TRIALS: Johnson blazes in 200 meters were 1992 Olympic champion Mike Marsh (20.20) and 1995 world champion bronze medalist Jeff Williams (20.02).

The finals in those events are today, the last day of the trials.

Johnson, who got a great start and led comfortably halfway through the race, looked to his right with 50 meters remaining and eased at the end. He punched the air four times with his right hand when he saw the time.

But the wind registered 2.7 meters per second, over the allowable limit of 2.0, so the record of 19.72 set by Pietro Mennea in 1979 — the oldest record in track and field — still stands.

"This is very encouraging. It's further indication that I can run 19.6, which is something I've felt all along that I could do," Johnson said. "The track is definitely fast."

Johnson's mark was the second-fastest in history under all conditions. Leroy Burrell ran a wind-aided 19.61 in 1990.

O'Brien came into the trials as the strong favorite to win the decathlon and go on to capture an Olympic gold medal — just as he went into the trials four years ago.

In 1992, O'Brien held a comfortable lead after seven events and decided to make his first pole vault attempt at his usual opening height of 15 feet, 9 inches. But then he missed all three of his jumps.

That failure ruined his Olympic hopes, as well as the "Dan or Dave" Reebok commercials that featured O'Brien and fellow American decathlete Dave Johnson. It haunted him for years, leading him to seek counseling with a sports psychologist who specializes in trauma management.

On Saturday, he set his opening height at 14-9. He easily cleared his first attempt, bounding out of the pit and pumping both fists in triumph. He ran over to an opponent for a high-five.

The three-time world champion easily went over at 15-1 and 15-9, grinning broadly after clearing the height that tormented him in 1992.

"I was thinking: 'Do it right, be aggressive and don't think about the outcome. Don't think about missing, because you can't,'" he said.

Then he kept clearing the bar until he had succeeded at 17-0 3/4. He nudged the bar at that height, but it didn't fall. That put him ahead in the decathlon, and he added a career best in the javelin to take command of the two-day competition.

"Going back four years ago, I was feeling horrible. This is a great feeling, but it wasn't beyond my imagination," O'Brien said. "This feels very normal for me to win the national championship and to have a shot for gold at the Olympic Games."

O'Brien finished with 8,726 points. If he had run 29 seconds faster in the 1,500, he would have broken his 1992 world record of 8,891 points.

"I almost broke the world record and I still just had an average performance," O'Brien said. "It was very difficult. It was very, very hot."

Steve Fritz placed second and Chris Huffins was third to earn berths on the U.S. team. Dave Johnson finished sixth and said "this is certainly my last decathlon."

In the men's hurdles, two-time Olympic gold medalist Roger Kingdom, world champion Allen Johnson and Mark Crear, the top-ranked hurdler in the world, joined Pierce in today's final.

"I love big meets and this is one of the biggest," said Pierce, the 1992 Olympic bronze medalist. "The hurdles felt like 36 inches today. They didn't feel like the regular 42 inches."

In the women's 200, Torrence showed little sign of her thigh injury while running her semifinal heat in 22.35.

Torrence, who said her thigh has been hurting since she won the 100 final a week ago, reached for the thigh at the end of quarterfinal and semifinal rounds that were run 90 minutes apart Saturday.

Her husband and coach, Manley Waller, said she still was struggling with the thigh injury.

Torrence, the 1992 Olympic gold medalist and a five-time national champion in the 200, hopes to win gold medals at 100 and 200 this summer at the Atlanta Games. She must finish in the top three.

Clark no chicken in 10M win

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Climbing the stairs to the 10-meter platform for her last dive, Mary Ellen Clark's only thought was to attack the tower that has alternately scared and thrilled her for 26 years.

If she was going to fail to make a second straight Olympic team, Clark wasn't going to chicken out trying. Already in the last eight months she had overcome another case of vertigo, a terrifying and mysterious condition that causes dizziness and could have ended her diving career.

So one last plunge off a platform that is equivalent to a three-story building was much less worrisome. Trailing 18-year-old leader Becky Ruehl by seven points, Clark pulled off a solid backward 1 1/2 somersault with 2 1/2 twists to win the platform title in the U.S. Olympic diving trials Saturday.

"I just wanted to go after it because if I was going to be tentative, I would be kicking myself for the rest of my life," she said.

Hurtling into the water at 31 mph, Clark emerged to see the scoreboard light up with six marks of 9.0 or better, giving her the title with 865.08 points.

In the men's 10-meter platform, Patrick Jeffrey led after the preliminary round in his bid to make his second Olympic team eight years after competing in the Seoul Games.

Jeffrey of Madison, N.J., had 455.46 points going into today's final two rounds. David Pichler of Butler, Pa., the current national platform champion, was second with 449.31. Troy Dumais of Ventura, Calif., the youngest men's competitor at age 16, was third with 430.65.

Clark, 33, qualified for next month's Atlanta Games, where she is the defending bronze medalist. She missed most of last year with vertigo.

Ruehl, of Lakeside Park, Ky., finished second to earn the other Olympic berth in her first trials. Ruehl, the current national platform champion yet a relative newcomer to international competition, totaled 857.94 points.

"I didn't think I was going to be on the team," said Ruehl, a freshman at Cincinnati whose coach bought out an entire seating section for her screaming boosters. "It's been a fun week. I've been having fun more than being nervous."

Eileen Richetelli of Milford, Conn., the leader through the preliminary and semifinal rounds, botched her fourth dive to drop from first to third, where she finished with 844.71 points. Only the top two finishers qualify for the Olympics.

"This is a little sweeter because of the personal challenges I had in '95 and the total comeback," she said. "I'm so psyched for my dad. He gets to watch an Olympic Games."

Clark's father, Gene, missed seeing her medal-winning performance at Barcelona when he underwent quadruple bypass surgery prior to the games. He was diagnosed with bladder cancer in April and interrupted chemotherapy treatments to travel to Indianapolis for the trials. Gene Clark saw his daughter miss her third dive, a backward 2 1/2 somersault pike, that dropped Clark from first to third with two dives remaining.

Ruehl kept the pressure on with a nearly flawless backward 1 1/2 somersault with 2 1/2 twists that earned one 10.0 to move her into second, while Richetelli regained first.

On her previous dive, Ruehl earned three 10s for a reverse with 2 1/2 somersaults that kept her third. Not to be outdone by the teen-ager, Clark responded with six 10s for the same dive that she had missed in Friday's preliminary.

Then everything changed on the fourth dive of the five-dive final. Competing ahead of Clark and Richetelli, Ruehl moved into first by seven points on an inward with 2 1/2 somersaults that earned marks of 9.0 or better. Clark followed with her most difficult dive and pulled off mostly 8.0s or higher to regain second.

That put Richetelli on the spot. Her backward with 3 1/2 somersaults carried a 3.3 degree of difficulty — the toughest dive attempted in the final — and a good score could have kept her on the Olympic team.

Instead, she missed badly. The marks of 3.0s and 4.0s pushed her 21 points behind Clark with one dive remaining.

"I knew it was going to come down to that dive," said Richetelli, a three-time NCAA platform champion at Stanford. "I was pretty nervous and didn't see my spot. I came out of it too late."

Near tears, Richetelli could barely comprehend she lost an Olympic berth by 13 points.

lost to Chicago in the NBA Finals. Barkley averaged 23.2 points and 11.6 rebounds in 71 games last season.

The Mavericks have made the playoffs once since 1988, losing in the first round to Portland in 1990. The team is under new ownership and is searching for a general manager.

Jackson, a fourth-year guard from Ohio State, is considered a good young talent but a player with a history of dissension with teammates. He averaged 19.6 points last season.

The Mavericks source cited by the Fort Worth paper said the team is weighing the wisdom of trading the 26-year-old Jackson for the veteran Barkley.

"In the long run it may not make the best sense, but if the new ownership is committed to winning now they've got to seriously consider it," the source said. "It's not every day you get a Hall of Famer offered to you."

IRVIN: Attorneys file motion to have indictment thrown out was quashed, the grand juror in question was on the panel when it took up the Irvin case.

The motion filed Thursday makes no suggestion that Anderson was a grand jury commissioner when grand jury A-1 issued the second indictment.

For the past week, the defense has been examining witnesses on a motion to suppress marijuana and cocaine evidence seized at the Marriott's Residence Inn in Irving the night Beck was arrested and Irvin, Nabwangu and Irvin's business associate, Alfredo Roberts, were detained.

Lawyers finished questioning Mike Bailey, the manager on duty the night of March 3-4. Bailey called Irving police March 1 to say that "two individuals, two women, I should say, who are prostitutes" were going to set up in a Residence Inn suite. He proposed a "sting" operation to have them arrested.

Defense attorneys questioned him on this point for nearly six hours, and by midafternoon Thursday prosecutor Mike Gillett began objecting to the repetition and Irvin's three lawyers rose to protest.

"Again, this is a motion to suppress, and I'm going to start calling this a lot closer if you get much farther outside the bounds of the motion," Alvarez told the defense. "There's a lot of tension in here today."

Rodriguez, Rangers hit Pavlik to 10th win, 8-2

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Ivan Rodriguez drove in four runs with a triple and a double, and Roger Pavlik won his 10th game as the Texas Rangers handed the Boston Red Sox their fifth straight defeat, 8-2 Saturday night.

Pavlik (10-1) allowed six hits in his league-leading fifth complete game, matching his previous career total. Pavlik, off to the best record by a Rangers starter after 11 decisions, struck out seven and walked one.

The Rangers trailed 2-1 in the fifth when Rusty Greer hit a three-run homer, his sixth. Mark McLemore singled and Rodriguez was hit by Tim Wakefield's knuckleball before Greer's two-out hit.

Angels 6, Brewers 4

MILWAUKEE — Rookie Darin Erstad drove in three runs and Shawn Boskie pitched eight solid innings before tiring as California won for the 12th time in 14 games.

Boskie (8-2) earned his first win in four starts since June 1 and is 5-1 as a starter this year. He allowed four runs on 11 hits and one walk over eight-plus innings. Boskie allowed consecutive solo shots to Jose Valentin and Jeff Cirillo to start the ninth before Troy Percival got three outs for his 20th save.

The Angels took a 3-0 lead on one hit off Angel Miranda (3-5) in the third. With one out, Randy Velarde walked and scored on a double by Gary DiSarcina.

Tigers 6, Twins 0

DETROIT — Brian Williams pitched Detroit's second straight shutout as the Tigers roughed up former teammate Scott Aldred and beat Minnesota.

Williams earned his first win in five decisions, allowing only four hits with five strikeouts and four walks. His shutout followed Felipe Lira's four-hitter in a 2-0 win over the Twins on Friday.

The last time Detroit pitchers threw consecutive shutouts was Sept. 30 and Oct. 1, 1990, against the New York Yankees and Minnesota. Both were combined shutouts.

Baseball Roundup

Orioles 5, Royals 3

BALTIMORE — Mark Smith hit Baltimore's third home run in the bottom of the ninth inning, capping an improbable rally that gave the Orioles a win over Kansas City.

Kansas City starter Tim Belcher took a two-hitter and a 3-0 lead into the ninth, but a one-out double by Roberto Alomar and a homer by Rafael Palmeiro got Baltimore within a run. Jeff Montgomery (1-5) entered and gave up a game-tying homer to Bobby Bonilla. After a walk to Cal Ripken, B.J. Surhoff hit a fly ball for the second out. Smith followed with a shot that barely cleared the wall in center.

Yankees 11, Indians 9

CLEVELAND — Ruben Sierra hit homers from both sides of the plate, including a three-run shot during a nine-run sixth inning, and New York beat Albert Belle and Cleveland.

Belle, back in the lineup after serving a two-game suspension during the Yankees' doubleheader sweep Friday, went 3-for-5 with a double. Eddie Murray hit his 488th career home run for Cleveland.

Dennis Martinez (8-5) failed to hold an early 5-0 lead, and lost his 11th straight decision to the Yankees dating back to 1982. He is 0-4 against New York this season, and 2-17 lifetime.

Athletics 8, Blue Jays 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jason Giambi homered and Bobby Chouinard earned his first big league win as Oakland ended Toronto's five-game winning streak.

Chouinard (1-2), making his sixth career start, pitched the first five innings and allowed four runs on six hits. He walked two and struck out four. Ed Sprague had three hits, including his second homer in as many days and his career-high 19th of the season. He drove in two runs and scored once for Toronto, which saw its season-high winning streak snapped.

Mariners 4, White Sox 2

CHICAGO — Bob Wells won his fourth straight start and Seattle beat Chicago, the Mariners' third win in a row since star slugger Ken Griffey Jr. was injured.

The White Sox lost their eighth consecutive game. Two weeks ago, they were tied with Cleveland for the best record in the majors.

National League

Phillies 5, Rockies 4

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Benjamin drew a bases-loaded walk from Colorado reliever Ryan Hawblitzel with two outs in the seventh inning, giving Philadelphia a win.

Dante Bichette and Ellis Burks homered for the Rockies. Colorado connected in its 16th straight game, one short of the team record set in 1993. Rookie Ron Blazier (1-0) pitched one inning and won his first big league deicision. Ricky Bottalico worked the ninth for his 16th save. Hawblitzel (0-1) lost his first decision in the majors.

Braves 6, Giants 0

ATLANTA — Greg Maddux pitched two-hit ball for eight innings and Atlanta matched a season-high with its fifth straight win. Chipper Jones homered and drove in three runs to back Maddux's second straight strong outing. Atlanta has won 17 of its last 20 against the Giants.

The four-time Cy Young winner had gone five consecutive starts without a victory before beating San Diego in his last game. Pitching in 93-degree heat, Maddux (7-5) walked one and struck out four. He retired 14 straight batters at one stretch.

Pirates 4, Marlins 1, (10)

MIAMI — Pinch-hitter Dave Clark broke a scoreless tie in the 10th inning with a two-out RBI single, and Jeff King followed with a three-run homer as Florida lost an extra-inning game for the third time this week. With one out in the 10th, Jason Kendall walked and pinch-hitter Mark Johnson singled off Yorkis Perez (2-2). Terry Mathews relieved and retired Carlos Garcia, but Clark hit a one-hopper that deflected off the glove of first baseman Greg Colbrunn into right field.

Mets 5, Reds 2

NEW YORK — Mark Clark pitched eight strong innings to win his third straight decision and Alex Ochoa drove in two runs in his season debut.

Butch Huskey drove in three runs in support of Clark (7-6), who gave up four hits. John Franco pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

Pete Schourek (4-5), making his first start since being placed on the disabled list May 31 due to an injured left elbow, lost his fourth consecutive decision. He allowed two runs and four hits in five innings.

Cardinals 9, Expos 4

MONTREAL — Willie McGee drove in four runs and Mike Morgan pitched eight strong innings before tiring as St. Louis won for the seventh time in 10 games.

Ray Lankford and John Mabry hit solo home runs, and Danny Sheaffer added a two-run double.

Morgan (2-1), who entered 0-6 in nine appearances at Olympic Stadium, allowed four runs on nine hits in eight-plus innings.

Dodgers 3, Astros 0

LOS ANGELES — Ramon Martinez pitched his first shutout of the season, scattering seven hits as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Houston Astros 3-0 Saturday night.

Martinez (6-1) won for the 15th time in his last 17 decisions since August 1995. He allowed three hits in the final six innings and retired 18 of the last 22 batters for his 19th career shutout.

Martinez, who has yet to allow more than four runs in any of his nine starts this season, struck out a season-high eight and walked one in his first complete game of the season.

Camacho outpoints Duran in decision; Douglas successful in return

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The clock probably struck midnight for Roberto Duran as a major boxing attraction when he lost a 12-round unanimous decision to Hector Camacho a few minutes after 12 a.m. Sunday at Trump's Taj Majal.

The 45-year-old Duran tried to pressure the faster Camacho throughout and actually came on in the final rounds to make the fight close in the eyes of some ringsiders. But the three judges gave the match to Camacho by from two to six points. Duran seemed to land the harder punches throughout the 12-round bout but the left-handed Camacho had more hand speed and scored with counters and right jabs.

"I thought I outboxed him, just like I wanted to," the 34-year-old Camacho said. "He put up a big effort. God bless him."

When the decision was announced, it was widely booed by many in the crowd of 5,200 in the Mark Etess Arena.

Judge Tim Figley scored it 115-113, judge Dana De Paolo had it 116-113 and Paul Venti had it 117-111, all for Camacho.

The fight followed James "Buster" Douglas' return from a 5 1/2-year absence. The 36-year-old former undisputed heavyweight champion stopped outgunned Tony La Rosa after three rounds of a scheduled 10-round bout. Douglas said he hopes to be back in top shape by the end of the year as he strives to get back into the heavyweight championship picture.

Halos outhit Diablos but fall 7-3 in TL

Staff Report

EL PASO — Midland outhit the El Paso Diablos 14-10 here Saturday but left 15 men on base to lose its third game in a row, 7-3. The Angels fall to 2-4 to as they begin a 6-game set with the 2-4 San Antonio Missions at 6 p.m. tonight in San Antonio.

Angel starter Matt Beaumont took his fifth consecutive loss Saturday to drop to 4-9. Meanwhile the Diablos' Jeff D'Amico improved to 5-4 with four of his wins coming against the Angels. He beat Midland in the first game of the 6-game series Monday.

D'Amico allowed 13 hits in eight innings but he gave up only three runs, two of them earned, and struck out five. El Paso, 4-1 and now tied with Wichita for the Texas League lead, scored four runs in the second inning to break a 1-1 tie.

ANGEL NOTES: Two Midland players have been selected to play in the July 9 Double A All-Star game in Trenton, N.J. Third baseman Aaron Guiel and outfielder Basilio Ortiz will play for the American League against All-Stars from the National League.

Zanardi claims G.I. Joe's 200 start

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Immediately after a brief, unplanned detour into the grass infield, Italian Alex Zanardi used a late fast lap to win the pole Saturday for the Budweiser-G.I. Joe's 200.

Zanardi, a past Formula One driver in his rookie IndyCar season, is on the pole for the second time this year. His first was for the Rio 400 in mid-March, and his fourth-place finish in that race is his best of the season.

Zanardi's Reynard Honda had a top lap of 117.209 mph, just off the Portland International Raceway record of 117.614 set by Jacques Villenueve last year.

Scott Pruett lasted only 11 minutes in Saturday's qualifying session because the engine blew in his Lola Ford Cosworth. Still, Pruett wound up alongside Zanardi on the front row at 117.021 mph.

Jimmy Vasser, Zanardi's Target-Chip Ganassi Racing teammate, could only barely improve on the speed that won him the provisional pole on Friday. He qualified third in a Reynard Honda at 116.989.

A cloud looming over all three top qualifiers was the forecast for showers today. Zanardi, Pruett and Vasser all use Firestone tires, which were extremely uncompetitive in the rain two weeks ago at Detroit.

"Unfortunately, the rain tire really isn't where we want it to be," said Pruett, who tested a modified version of the Firestones last weekend. "We've made a little improvement from Detroit. They understand they need to make more improvement and that will be an ongoing program."

Bryan Herta, fourth in a Reynard Mercedes-Benz at 116.861 mph, was the top qualifier using Goodyear tires, which dominated on the wet surface in Detroit.

Pruett was watching from the television tower as Zanardi steered his car back onto the course and took over the pole.

Michael Andretti, seeking his third consecutive victory of the season and fourth in Portland, had persistent problems with his car's handling that had him return to the pits three times. He slipped from second in Friday's provisional qualifying to sixth in the starting grid.

Zampedri out of hospital

Miller 400

BROOKLYN, Mich. — There is some good news for Winston Cup competitors tired of following Jeff Gordon. Some of them won't have to — at least for a while today.

Gordon is not the pole-sitter for the first time in more than a month. After earning top starting positions for each of the last three races, the defending series champion was seventh in qualifying for the Miller 400 at Michigan International Speedway.

His race days have been almost as successful recently, with a fourth-place finish at Charlotte followed by dominating victories at Dover and Pocono.

So, virtually everybody was paying attention when Gordon drove his Hendrick Motorsports Chevrolet onto the 2-mile, high-banked oval in qualifying Friday.

Gordon was somewhat bemused by the situation.

"We were trying for the pole, but you can't expect to sit on the pole every week," he said. "We expect a lot out of ourselves, though, and we've got a lot of confidence right now no matter where we are.

"The cars have been running great and the team has done an excellent job preparing the cars. They've been doing a great job on the pit stops, and that's definitely got my confidence level up."

That's a scary prospect for the rest of the drivers, who have seen Gordon bounce back from a miserable first two races — failing to finish either one and sitting 40th in the standings — to third place in the series standings. He trails leader Dale Earnhardt by only 64 points, and runner-up Terry Labonte by 12. Since those first two races, Gordon has won five of 11. But Earnhardt, who has two wins, has faced such challenges before.

"I'm happy with where we are in the points," the seven-time Winston Cup champion said cautiously.

Spectator Drags: Eddie Vasquez.

GOLF: Rochester rained on again

(From 1B)

But for Sigel, of nearby Berwyn, Pa., the fireworks were nothing new at Chester Valley Golf Club.

"I can remember playing here as an amateur before it was redesigned and there were these power lines over some of the holes," he said. "We used to hit them and the balls would explode and turn black. It was neat."

Sigel, who birdied Nos. 2, 4, 6, 8 and 9 on the front, had a 5-under-par 135 after 36 holes. Schroeder followed Friday's 68 with a 67 to keep pace.

Tom Wargo, a co-leader after 18 holes, was one stroke back. Bobby Stroble was at 137, Dale Douglass at 138, and defending champion Jim Colbert and Walter Morgan were at 139.

Sigel's best hole was the 371-yard, par-4 ninth. After blasting a 1-iron into the left rough, he hooked a 4-iron around a tree on his second shot. He then chipped in from 40 feet for the birdie.

"Just like I planned it," he joked.

He said he'd be thrilled to win in his own neighborhood.

"If there was a tournament I'd like to win, it would certainly be here," Sigel said. "I couldn't think of anything that would be nicer."

Schroeder, who began the day at 2-under, grabbed a one-stroke lead after a birdie at the par-5 14th. But he three-putted on the next green to go back into a tie with Sigel.

"I'd like to have that one back, but I am feeling good about my chances here tomorrow," Schroeder said. "Anytime you can get a lead on this course you've got to feel good about yourself."

Only seven players were under par after a breezy and partly sunny day on the difficult, 6,608-yard layout.

In the 12-year history of this event, no more than six golfers have ever finished under par in a given year. Only one golfer, Gary Player in 1990, has ever scored in the 60s in all three rounds. In 1995, three of the tour's 10 toughest holes were at Chester Valley.

Ray Floyd had six birdies en route to a 68 to get to 2-over after 36 holes. Player was 1-over and Chi Chi Rodriguez was 2-over.

Two-time Bell Atlantic champion Lee Trevino withdrew before the start of the second round due to back spasms. Trevino, who shot 71 in the first round Friday, won this event in 1992 and 1994.

Rochester LPGA

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Amy Fruhwirth played just one hole Saturday, yet fell back into a tie for the lead with Michelle Estill in the rain-curtailed second round of the Rochester International.

Just 66 of the 141 golfers completed the second round after a downpour suspended play for almost seven hours at the Locust Hill Country Club course.

Estill, who played just two holes, sank a 40-foot birdie putt on the par-4 first to join Fruhwirth at 4-under-par. They lie one shot ahead of five players.

"I wasn't really thinking of the lead when I made the putt — there's still a long ways to go," said Estill, whose victory in the 1991 LPGA Championship is her only victory in five years on tour.

Fruhwirth, who teed off 20 minutes before sundown, will finish her round this morning along with the rest of the first-round leaders. Her best finish in four years is a tie for fourth in the LPGA Classic last year.

Thursday's opening round was washed out, and the tournament was shortened to 54 holes from 72. The final round will be played this afternoon, following the completion of second-round play.

Any further rain delays could extend the tournament into Monday.

Bullock on target about Bush but...

It seems that Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, whom we've long admired for his uncanny ability to push aside bureaucratic double-talk to cut to the heart of issues, has seen in Gov. George W. Bush many of the same fine leadership qualities we observed after the 1995 legislative session.

In fact, Bullock was quoted in an Associated Press story as saying that Bush has worked so well with politicians in both major parties since taking office "that a lot of strides have been made since he's been governor."

It's somewhat unusual for a Democrat, which Bullock is, to be so outwardly civil to a Republican, which Bush is, but it's refreshing. And that's the kind of bipartisan attitude Bush took into the Governor's Mansion.

As far as the future is concerned, Bullock speculated that Bush, who is a former Midlander and the eldest son of President and Mrs. George H.W. Bush, could rise to the presidency himself at some point. While Bullock's comments on that possibility may be a bit premature, we certainly agree that Bush has been providing outstanding leadership for the Lone Star State and his record in that regard makes him a prime candidate for national political office at some future date.

During his first term, Bush has provided what appears to be a case study in bipartisanship — working one-on-one with other state leaders, including Bullock, to bring legislative measures to fruition and to keep state government serving the people of Texas. In the 1995 legislative session, legislators passed Bush's four top priorities — welfare reform. tougher juvenile crime laws, limits on civil lawsuits and increased local control for schools.

Even while he has maintained excellent relations with legislators and other government officials, Bush gets good marks from Texans for having done an outstanding job as governor.

So it seems that the sky's the limit for George W. Bush. Bullock even thinks Bush "will be president someday." Well, that's a wonderful compliment for a Republican governor by a Democrat serving as his lieutenant governor. And we're not saying it won't happen — someday.

But if Bullock doesn't mind, let's not rush Bush out of the Governor's Mansion. He is doing a great job for Texas, so let's keep him around

Lack of funding hamstrings reform effort

WASHINGTON — One year after President Clinton and House Speaker Newt Gingrich agreed to work toward campaign finance reform, the verdict from Washington's political class is clear: Trust us.

Anderson

More than two decades after it was created, the Federal Election Commission still lacks the funding and support that it needs to do an effective job. The agency, which is supposed to enforce federal campaign laws and collect financial information on candidates, is facing a budget crunch that could be good news for candidates who are skirting financial disclosure rules.

A House committee recently voted to freeze the agency's funding at $26 million for next year. Because of mandated spending increases in parts of the FEC budget, enforcement and disclosure spending would drop below their current levels.

All this is happening in the middle of what the FEC estimates will be the most costly election cycle ever. The total cost could top $2.5 billion, 25 percent higher than the previous record.

Founded in the wake of the Watergate scandal, the FEC is the cop charged with keeping politicians honest when raising money. Without enough enforcement tools, however, the agency has been the political equivalent of an officer with a badge but no billyclub.

This has created a culture in which politicians often feel free to break the rules, or to file incomplete or misleading information about their donors. Violators often wait years before they're penalized. And when the FEC does act, it's often in the form of a gentle wrist-slap. By that time, the election is long since over and forgotten.

For example, an audit of George Bush's 1988 presidential campaign took seven years. Eventually, the agency confirmed more than $200,000 in illegal contributions. Nonetheless, the campaign ended up with a reprimand rather than a fine.

It was not until after Clinton was safely ensconced in the White House that the FEC determined that he should repay $1.4 million to the government. Clinton's general election committee was also docked, to the tune of $108,000. Questions are now surfacing about whether Bob Dole is breaking the pre-convention spending limits. But nobody will know for sure until after the election. The FEC says it doesn't want to interfere until then.

In smaller races, the violations can be even more egregious. Rep. Enid Greene, R-Utah, is resigning her seat after 858 violations of campaign finance law were revealed from her 1994 campaign. Greene blames the whole ordeal on her estranged husband.

Some lawmakers have branded the FEC as an agency run amok. House Appropriations Chairman Bob Livingston, R-La., recently summed up the feelings that many members have about the agency:

"The FEC has spun out so many regulations and conducted so many enforcement cases that drag on for years and years that I fear that the FEC is making criminals out of honest people, while it does not effectively deter the serious offender."

GEORGE WILL

Israel's perilous position requires tough leader

When Barry Goldwater told the 1964 Republican convention that extremism in defense of liberty is no vice, a scandalized journalist reportedly exclaimed, "He's going to run as Goldwater!" Today comparable exclamations resound concerning Israel's new prime minister, Benjamin Netanyahu.

Will

Some news reports of his government's guidelines make much of the fact that they closely resemble his campaign promises. Well did you ever.

President Clinton, speaking from his bunker on barricaded Pennsylvania Avenue, says he hopes Israel will continue to take "risks for peace." In the 48 years since Israel was founded on one-sixth of one percent of the 7.5 million square miles of land that is too casually called "the Arab world," Israel has not known an hour of true peace. It has suffered four wars (1948, 1956, 1967, 1973). Five if you count the 1969-70 "war of attrition." Six if you count the continuing conflict with various terrorist organizations supported by hostile nations. In three weeks of war in October 1973 Israel's casualties, as a percentage of its population, were three times larger than U.S. casualties in eight years of war in Vietnam. For Israelis, boarding a bus is risky. How grating they must find the exhortations to risk-taking that issue from a powerful nation surrounded by two friendly neighbors and two broad oceans.

Jews were 10 percent of the population of the Roman Empire, and if today they were the proportion of the world's population that they were then, they would number 200 million. They number 13 million. The world was an especially dangerous place for Jews before they had a national home. And that home was especially vulnerable in its pre-1967 borders, when it was 12 miles wide at the waist.

Netanyahu's guidelines say the Golan Heights, from which tanks poured in 1973, will not be returned to the aggressor Syria. And there will be no Palestinian state or other foreign sovereignty west of the Jordan River. And Israel has a "right" to act against terrorism "everywhere," and "will act" to remove the threat in Israel's north. Much as the U.S. government acted against threats out of Mexico in 1916.

The guidelines say Jerusalem shall forever be Israel's undivided capital under Israel's sovereignty. Ask average Americans to name the capitals of Delaware, Vermont and Israel. More will know Jerusalem than Dover or Montpelier. Yet the U.S. government for decades said that locating the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem would "prejudge" the city's status. Indeed. That is a good reason for locating the embassy not just in Jerusalem, as Congress has committed a reluctant Clinton to do by May 1997, but in East Jerusalem, the portion Jordan lost by its 1967 aggression, and which Arafat plans to make the capital of a Palestinian state.

Netanyahu's guidelines say Israeli settlements in the West Bank and elsewhere are important for defense and "Zionist fulfillment." In 1990 Strobe Talbott, who now holds the State Department's second highest position, compared Israel's West Bank settlement policy to Saddam Hussein's claim to Kuwait because Kuwait and Iraq had been part of the same province under the Ottoman Empire. Actually, the settlements are legal because the West Bank, which Jordan seized militarily in 1948-49, is an unallocated portion of the Palestine Mandate of 1922.

It has been nearly half a century since Israel became the first salient of democratic values in an inhospitable region, and the world still waits for an Arab nation to become the first democracy in the history of Arab civilization. While waiting for such developments, the Netanyahu government's unspoken guideline will be Golda Meir's admonition: Jews are used to collective eulogies but Israel will not die so that the world will speak well of it.

On the eve of the 1967 war, a young Israeli soldier wrote in his diary of an Englishman, an American and an Israeli caught by cannibals, put in a pot and offered a last wish:

"The Englishman asked for a whiskey and a pipe, and got them. The American asked for a steak and got it. The Israeli asked the chief of the tribe to give him a good kick in the backside. At first the chief refused, but after much argument he did it. At once the Israeli pulled out a gun and shot all the cannibals. The American and the Englishman asked him: 'If you had a gun all the time, why didn't you kill them sooner?' 'Are you crazy,' answered the Israeli, 'and have the U.N. call me an aggressor?!'"

So wrote the man who on a memorable date — July 4, 1976 — led, and was the only Israeli killed in, the raid that rescued the hostages at Entebbe. Jonathan Netanyahu. Benjamin's brother.

ANOTHER VIEW

Banning Internet act was free speech win

A panel of federal judges' decision to block the Communications Decency Act is a victory for common sense and free speech.

The act, signed into law Feb. 8, bans "indecent" and "patently offensive" words and pictures from places children can find them on the Internet.

In other words, the law is designed to do what parents should be doing — monitor what their kids are finding on the Internet.

The Internet, while unique in many aspects, is a medium for free speech like television, radio and print. The federal government is not making any moves to ban "indecent" or "patently offensive" material from these media, because it would be a violation of our First Amendment rights.

To impose the Communications Decency Act would do the same.

On the surface, the act looks harmless enough. But what exactly does "indecent" or "patently offensive" mean? Each is a subjective term, meaning different things to different people. The federal government should not be in the business of regulating taste.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 23, the 175th day of 1996. There are 191 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 23, 1868, Christopher Latham Sholes received a patent for an invention he called a Type-Writer.

On this date:

In 1836, Congress approved the Deposit Act, which contained a provision for turning over surplus federal revenue to the states.

In 1888, abolitionist Frederick Douglass received one vote from the Kentucky delegation at the Republican convention in Chicago, effectively making him the first black candidate nominated for president. (The nomination went to Benjamin Harrison.)

In 1938, the Civil Aeronautics Authority was established.

In 1969, Warren E. Burger was sworn in as chief justice of the United States by the man he was succeeding, Earl Warren.

In 1972, President Nixon and White House Chief of Staff H.R. Haldeman discussed a plan to use the CIA to obstruct the FBI's Watergate investigation. (Revelation of the tape recording of this conversation sparked Nixon's resignation in 1974.)

In 1985, all 329 people aboard an Air-India Boeing 747 were killed when the plane crashed into the Atlantic Ocean near Ireland, apparently because of a bomb explosion.

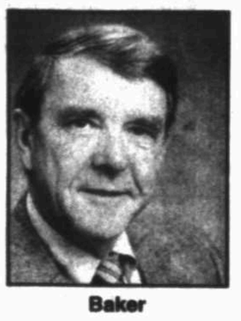
One year ago: Dr. Jonas Salk, the medical pioneer who developed the first vaccine to halt the crippling rampage of polio, died in La Jolla, Calif., at age 80.

RUSSELL BAKER

Hitler wasn't good at first, or shortstop either, Marge

Baseball turned its back on Adolf Hitler last week. As the team owners said in a formal statement, "When your business has troubles as bad as ours, who needs to mess around with Der Fuhrer?"

So saying, they persuaded Marge Schott, majority owner of the Cincinnati Reds, to give up control of her business. In a flagrant exercise of the First Amendment, Mrs. Schott had spoken well of the early Hitler.



Baker

One sports story reported that she had said "Hitler was good at first." This sent me to the archives where I discovered that Hitler was no good at all at first, and not at second either.

Rudolf Hess's memoir says, "The Fuhrer could have been a great shortstop if he hadn't gone into politics," but Hess was crazy as a loon when he wrote it.

A more reliable source, Hitler's masseuse, wrote a book titled, "I Rubbed Hitler the Wrong Way," which indicates he had very little interest in baseball. "One day while massaging Hitler's arm," she wrote, "the Fuhrer seemed in a light-hearted mood, so I ventured to speak to him as follows:

" 'Do you know, mein Fuhrer, that if you were an American baseball pitcher what your pitching arm would be called by the scribes?'

" 'Scribes?' Scribes?' he said. 'Explain scribes to me.'

" 'They are sportswriters,' I said.

" 'So,' he said, 'these scribes would call my pitching arm what?'

" 'They would call it "the old soupbone," ' I said."

Hitler ended the conversation abruptly, telling the masseuse that when the Wehrmacht occupied America he would like to see a game from the best seat in Camden Yards, but that would have to wait until he finished conquering Russia.

Here is final proof of Hitler's ignorance of baseball: Camden Yards was not built until 50 years later, and even then he couldn't have got a decent seat unless he was a corporation. By then, of course, no scribe had called a pitching arm "the old soupbone" for 50 years, and no sportswriter had been called a scribe for 45.

Most of the Nazi leaders were hopelessly ignorant of baseball, as we discover in the Hitler file. Hermann Goering, being the great collector and chief looter in the Nazi hierarchy, apparently wanted a baseball signed by Babe Ruth.

In a note to Hitler the propaganda chief, Joseph Goebbels, wrote that Goering was writing to a woman in enemy America. Impressions in Goering's desk blotter, said Goebbels, showed that a note had been sent to a New York woman named Babe Ruth.

Totally ignorant of baseball, Goebbels advised Hitler to turn Goering over to the Gestapo and explain his correspondence "with this American Mata Hari."

Hitler, who was soft on Goering, was "delighted," he wrote in a note to Eva Braun, to show his "superior knowledge of American culture to Goebbels."

"I told him that Babe Ruth was the name of an American candy and that Hermann, who has a sweet tooth, was probably ordering some from New York," Hitler wrote.

We now know, of course, what Goering was really up to. His gardener's memoir, "Down the Primrose Path With Goering," reports that he was often ordered to stand in a hay field for hours chasing fly balls Goering hit off a fungo bat. The gardener writes:

"He once said to me that Hermann Goering was not much more corpulent than the greatest batter in history. 'What's more,' said Goering, 'both of us are named Hermann.'

"I didn't know then that Herman was only the second name of the famous Ruth and that it had only one 'n,' while Goering's was his first name and had two 'n's.' "

Goering apparently hoped to meet Babe Ruth once the Wehrmacht occupied New York and to impress the Yankee slugger by smacking a few batting-practice pitches out of the park. Babe Ruth, he hoped, would be impressed enough to sign a baseball, thus making it unnecessary to loot the Baseball Hall of Fame.

The baseball owners' distaste for Hitler reminds us that baseball and Adolf once had something in common. Hitler became furious because a black American sprinter, Jesse Owens, beat the flower of Aryan athletics in the 1936 Berlin Olympics. Such an embarrassment could not have happened that year to major league baseball owners. They simply didn't let blacks play.

Editorial sign of what is wrong with America

Not surprisingly, your editorial of June 14 regarding "filegate" parroted the rest of the Clinton apologists. The "junior military aide" you refer to was an experienced professional intelligence officer brought in to perform his speciality: digging up dirt. Do you honestly believe Clinton's excuse that this was just another bureaucratic snafu, and that nobody even looked at those files?

Apparently you do believe this since you readily accepted Clinton's statement, that he "would never condone any kind of enemies list, nothing like this will ever happen again." You also say the actions he has taken should resolve this situation. How many of these "gosh, I'm really sorry, it won't happen again" apologies are we expected to swallow before gagging? This is the way a spoiled brat tries to avoid punishment for knowingly doing wrong, and, they will keep doing wrong until they are finally held accountable for their misdeeds. It's nauseating and highly inappropriate when our president acts like a spoiled brat and is given a free pass.

You used half the editorial insinuating that it couldn't possibly be as bad as what Nixon or Bush did. This is the typical liberal reaction to any of Clinton's abuses of power - somebody else did it first, so don't blame me. I might remind you that Nixon's enemies list was predominantly reporters he would not invite to the White House, and that investigating draft-dodging activities is a legitimate duty of the FBI.

Hooray for Bob Dole!

After hearing his speech as he left the Senate and watching his actions and words since then I could not be more pleased. He is definitely my man. He is smart, he is wise and he is witty. Bob Dole knows what is going on in the government and in the world. I trust him to make the best decisions as he campaigns for the presidency and as our next president because over the years he has proven to be a man of integrity and courage.

Teacher's letter was ridiculous, misleading

The Speaking Out column by Patricia Maurer regarding the recent MISD bond election was one of the most ridiculous and misleading I have ever read. In fact, it is so full of absurdity that it makes a detailed response impossible. Hopefully, this is not representative of the approach she takes in educating our children.

I suggest Ms. Maurer look for a soon-to-be-published book by Susan MacManus about failed school bond issues. Ms. MacManus says voters everywhere are refusing to raise their own taxes to fund school districts they view as top-heavy and poorly managed. And what makes it worse is that school districts tend to blame everyone but themselves when they fail. "The more they preach that 'we didn't get our message out' or 'these people didn't come through,' the more it infuriates people who voted against the proposal thinking the district is ineffective and inefficient," she said.

Americans must keep their standards

It's great to be around in 1996. I suspect that never before in the history of our country has there been such a panorama of passion, deceit, mistruths, dishonesty and just plain wickedness that we now are seeing. How great my dismay. How sad my heart. And to see so many people who look a lot like myself being led by a master politician who embellishes the very things in the name of patriotism. He, who would not serve his country, he who covers his past with the protective cloak of office. He, who now uses the mantle of the presidency to further his term of office at the expense of gullible taxpayers.

Unfortunately he is not alone. About him on the banks of the Potomac is gathered a group of his appointees who, in some instances, epitomize those very lifestyles that are leading our children to question the basic values and concepts of family life. We see an acceptable deficiency in moral, spiritual and intellectual interests.

We have seen violent death and destruction of a magnitude never before witnessed or even imagined in this nation, brought about by a few who set themselves up as both judge and jury and then take on the role of executioner. But will they pay? Perhaps not. The highest court of the land, composed of political appointees, is no better than the appointed federal judges who throw common sense to the wind and destroy the vote of the majority. The lowly citizen has become disenfranchised. Those proven with criminal intent are free to continue their designs on the unsuspecting.

Now comes an official statement from the highest office of the nation, that the present administration "has created eight million new jobs." Meanwhile, the factual loss of five-hundred thousand jobs in the oil industry is smothered by their belief that importing energy fuel from non-friendly nations does not threaten our security.

America with its great accomplishments is being eroded at an alarming rate. The morning sun, arising in the east, is casting a pale light that portends disaster for its noble virtues.

Disney has given Christians no choice

How unthinkable to boycott Disney the giant! Yet, I personally have chosen to stay away from Disney products since last year when I learned that they have chosen to celebrate "Gay/Lesbian Week" during June for the past five years. The perfect time of year for the children to witness the goings-on. What's to celebrate? This harmful, destructive and wrong lifestyle should be discouraged, not celebrated!

Disney has been the money behind recent movies and television programs that make fun of priests and Christmas, while presenting the gay/lesbian lifestyle in a favorable, preferred light. God says this lifestyle is wrong, an abomination. If it was wrong yesterday, it is wrong today. God's word does not change, regardless of what Hollywood and Washington decide.

It was the Christian voice that kept October from becoming "Gay/Lesbian Celebrations" month in our public schools. The National Education Association tried to slip that one in. That's another reason public education needs to be turned back to the states.

Children have mastered what we taught them

Dear children: Your conduct has begun to get the attention of the adults, let's see why:

First the gangs, true, there is a common purpose; you are usually led by an unscrupulous bully or two; most of you are ovine and are led along by the tide. Funny, we have gangs, too; we call them associations or societies or clubs. We usually are bound by some common purpose. We have our share of both bullies and sheep.

You dress funny. So do we. Your baggy pants and vile T-shirts are manufactured by adults who want you to buy things from them. Our suits and ties and accessories are of the latest adult style. They tell us this so we will buy more next year. Just like you.

You use drugs. That's awful. Where do you get them? Adults grow drugs, manufacture drugs, ship drugs, sell drugs and then curse you for using drugs. Adults also produce the pornography so popular among you.

You have little respect for authority. Why? Many authority figures, called politicians, are actually little more than glorified mafioso. Many government agencies treat people under their care like lepers. No wonder you hate authority - authority hates you!

Your use of weapons is appalling - do you make your own guns? Knives? Bullets? No, they are made by adults who want to hurry and get your money before someone kills you. Drive-by shootings are very popular among the cowardly. You should see what a gang of adults can do to a village in somebody else's country - you have learned well.

Adults slobber and drool about how much they (we) care about you kids. If we really cared you would be home at night. You would care about yourself and would respect others. You would appreciate schooling and training and good advice from good people.

You hate us, I suppose, because we hate you.

CHARLEY REESE

Signs of our collapse are just facts of life

The Southern Baptists have voted to boycott Walt Disney Corp. It won't have any effect on Disney. Disney's initial official response was sarcastic and contemptuous.

Reese

It's always a cause for celebration, however, whenever Americans recognize the reality of the 1990s. In this particular instance, the reality to be recognized is that the Walt Disney Corp. of today is not the same organization that the late Walt Disney founded and ran. It is controlled and run by different people with different values. Actually, with one value -- making money.

Any discussion with Disney officials would be pointless. They and the Baptists have a different set of values. Disney officials are not doing anything by accident or out of ignorance. They are doing exactly what they wish and intend to do. So what is the point of any conversation? When someone has values opposed to your own, you just separate.

The incident reminds me of some remarks by Tom Fleming, editor of Chronicles magazine, at a recent meeting of the Southern League. Someone asked Fleming, a classical scholar, if the analogy between the fall of Rome and the present situation in America was valid. Fleming said it was, only that the United States was in worse shape today than Rome was in the fourth century.

Then he reminded the audience of what he used to tell his students: "No one ever woke up one day and said, 'Gee, I'm in the Dark Ages.'"

The point is that great historical transitions, while clear to historians in retrospect, are difficult for the people living through them to see. All the signs of American collapse are to us just the facts of life -- the crime; the pervasive corruption in politics, business, science and academia; the decadence the Baptists object to; family dissolution; drugs; the embrace of gambling; the paralysis of government; the debased currency; the debased land; etc.

To us it's just the way things are, but to someone in the future, however, these things will be seen for what they really are -- signs of a collapsing civilization.

We are walking around in the ruins of the American empire established in 1865, when the constitutional republic was replaced with a unitary state. The facades of the old institutions are there, the old names -- like Disney -- are there, the old forms are there, but behind the facades, names and forms it's all different, all changed. The empty suits mouth the old platitudes, pay lip service to the old truths, but do so with hollow voices and empty hearts.

Oswald Spengler, who wrote "The Decline of the West" prior to World War I, made a chart of the various stages of Western civilization. Spengler predicted that our current decade would be one of transition from the age of money to the age of Caesars -- from an age characterized by obsession with money and huge cities to an age of dictators. Does the obsession-with-money-and-huge-cities part ring a bell?

That has been the pattern of history, from dissolution to dictatorship.

Normal people cannot stand chaos. When conditions become chaotic, they follow those who promise order.

So it's probably no accident that the idea of secession is resurfacing. It's actually happening in Europe. Northern California wants to secede from Southern California. The Southern League wants one day to see the South secede again. The Baptists are seceding from decadence.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Netanyahu's appointments stir up Israel

JERUSALEM — Coping with the least of his problems — moving into a new, fortified residence — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu calmed the decorating concerns of his wife, Sara: "They're just not used to what we're trying to do."

Safire

That goes for the entire enterprise of the ninth Israeli leader. His own party was not used to his idea of filling the most powerful cabinet posts with outsiders. It promptly rebelled. The way he rolled with the intra-party punching is revealing.

Ariel Sharon, who unified the right and enabled Netanyahu to run against Shimon Peres one-on-one, had an ironclad right to expect the post of Finance. When offered the lesser post of Housing, he refused. The man Sharon had persuaded to stay out of the race, David Levy, then refused to accept foreign minister, which Sharon had brokered.

At the Knesset lectern for his low-key maiden speech as prime minister, Netanyahu looked down at the front row, where two empty seats were as startling as a couple of missing front teeth. The parliament gasped as he temporarily held those two portfolios for himself.

After a finger-wagging lecture from Peres (whose recovery from a near-catatonic state came two weeks too late for Labor's campaign), the prime minister induced Levy to accept the Foreign Ministry by whipping together a new super-ministry — of "infrastructures" — for Sharon. That heavy-set hard-liner is thinking it over, but Levy's quick acceptance lessens his leverage.

A Likud moderate, Dan Meridor, one of Netanyahu's generational rivals, did better after being overlooked. The prime minister was forced to name him to Finance, but created a new job for the financial professional he wanted: head of a U.S.-style council of economic advisers that will provide the business-trained prime minister the staff he needs to manage the economy.

Upshot: The new prime minister pushed, pulled back, created some new facts on the political ground, bruised some egos, and wound up with more than half the loaf he wanted.

That was the easy part of beginning to create a new mindset; now he has to negotiate one on the world scene. And the place to start is in building a fresh relationship with Israel's key ally, the United States.

When the Israeli comes to Washington, where Moshe Arens may be his ambassador, he must explain to President Clinton why Arab leaders, European bureaucrats and Russian spymaster-diplomats are treating his election as an offense to world peace. Their dudgeon suits their interests, which are not necessarily our interests.

Egypt, for example, seizes this election as cause for an emergency Arab summit meeting, in a bid to re-establish Cairo as the center of the Arab world. France wants a meeting of the European Union, to castigate Israel and snatch back business from America in the Middle East. And Yevgeny Primakov, Saddam Hussein's friend, called from the Yeltsin Foreign Ministry to urge Netanyahu to accept Russian co-sponsorship of Madrid II, thereby projecting Moscow's influence in the region.

Whoa. This is not the time for Clinton to say "Ain't summits fun?" Perhaps Netanyahu can persuade him to suggest to fellow world leaders that the U.S. disapproves of such pre-emptive diplomatic strikes against Israel. Clinton should review U.S. policy toward terrorist Syria, occupier of Lebanon, transporter of Iranian rockets that rain on Israel, home to terrorists attacking Turkey and Jordan, in light of that appeasement's eight-year failure.

The old mindset makes a test of leaving Hebron; the new mindset explores ways to guarantee personal security to Israelis living in the West Bank and job security to Palestinians working there and in Israel. The old permits foreign ministers to visit Palestinian representatives in Jerusalem; the new raises no false hope of dividing Israel's capital.

Netanyahu should thank Congress fervently for voting to move the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem, and startle us all by taking up A.M. Rosenthal's idea of phasing out U.S. economic aid.

We are just not used to what this shaker-upper is trying to do. I am long out of the speechwriting dodge, but can recommend a line of Lincoln's: "We must think anew and act anew. We must disenthrall ourselves."

Grandparents plan to fight for legal custody of surviving son

DALLAS (AP) — The paternal grandparents of two children stabbed to death while they slept June 6 will fight for legal custody of the surviving sibling taken from his father this week and placed in foster care.

The children's mother, 26-year-old Rowlett homemaker Darlie Routier, was charged Tuesday with killing her sons — Damon, 5, and Devon, 6 — and fabricating an account of a struggle with a phantom intruder.

Mrs. Routier has been charged with two counts of capital murder and is in the Lew Sterrett Justice Center with bond set at $1 million.

A custody hearing will be convened within two weeks in Dallas County by District Judge Cheryl Shannon, who also will appoint an attorney to represent the interests of the surviving son, 8-month-old Drake Routier, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported in Saturday's editions.

Because her husband, Darin Routier, 28, and other relatives have rallied to the mother's defense, Dallas County's Child Protective Services Unit took emergency custody Wednesday of the couple's remaining child, to spare him "physical harm," court documents show.

"I'm not going to comment on that inference," said Banetta Jordan, the Lubbock attorney representing grandparents Leonard and Sarilda Routier. "We'll do whatever the judge asks us to do."

The grandparents referred all calls yesterday to their attorney, who was hired solely to assist with the custody case.

The slain brothers were attacked while sleeping in a downstairs room of their family's brick house. Their mother called 911 shortly after 2:30 a.m., saying an assailant cut a screen wind[illegible] into the garage, then walke[illegible] the utility room and kitch[illegible] then attacked the trio.

Sources close to the inv[illegible]tigation have said the case will be difficult to prosecute because there is no confession, no witness, no cl[illegible]

[illegible]ice Lt. Grant Jack, who over[illegible] department's criminal investi[illegible]vision, acknowledged that it is [illegible]ation of all the evidence that implicates Mrs. Routier in the deaths of her two children.

"We don't have any major piece of evidence or any one big piece — it's a combination of all the evidence that tells the story," Jack told The Dallas Morning News on Friday. A grand jury could review the case as early as late next [illegible] he said.

Police said they noted in[illegible] Mrs. Routier's st[illegible] of the investigat[illegible]ember, who is not a suspect in the case, told police that he and Drake were sleeping upstairs at the time of the attack.

During their two-week homicide investigation, police said they gathered personal notebooks, calendars and papers belonging to Mrs. Routier that contained diary notations.

"The physical evidence seems to be overwhelming," he said.

Mayor, county want voters to decide Houston stadium issue

HOUSTON (AP) — Mayor Bob Lanier and Harris County Judge Robert Eckels are prepared for the biggest gamble yet in their battle to save Houston professional sports: a vote on whether the city needs new stadiums.

By law, voters can be left out of such a costly decision and, given the ill feelings in the wake of Bud Adams' decision to move the football Oilers to Nashville, voter rejection of the issue isn't far-fetched.

That could leave Houston with the likelihood that the baseball Astros and basketball Rockets would follow the Oilers out the same door to cities willing to spend tax dollars on arenas and stadiums.

Despite the risk, both Lanier and Eckels said in early editions of today's Houston Chronicle that taxpayers must have a say in whether the city and county should commit what could be more than $625 million in spending.

"I'm going to do everything I can to make sure we have a countywide vote on football and baseball facilities," Eckels said. "I'm not sure how we're going to do it, but the voters have the right to determine this."

Lanier echoes such sentiments, which means there likely could be a referendum only for Houston voters should the mayor decide to build a new arena for the Houston Rockets.

"I'd like to have one when a large turnout is guaranteed, because that would make it easier to get the thing passed," Lanier said. "But I'm sure we will have one."

Under state law, a public vote would be required only if general obligation bonds, backed by property taxes, were used to fund construction. Both Eckels and Lanier favor using revenue bonds to finance stadium construction. Such bonds would be repaid from such fund sources as taxes on rental cars, hotel occupancy, seats and parking.

A countywide referendum would have to be authorized by the Legislature. Eckels, who hopes to have a financing plan for a new baseball park and a football stadium by early July, could seek that approval in January, when lawmakers convene.

City officials are unclear whether they have the power to call a vote on such an issue. Lanier said the city's legal team will investigate the question.

Either way, Lanier said he would expect a referendum to be held, should the city decide to build a basketball arena, because state law allows city voters the right to petition for a referendum.

"My sense is that this issue is of such importance that enough petitions would be raised," Lanier said. "So we might as well call one ourselves."

Lanier said that because such referendums cannot be conducted during presidential elections, one could not be held this November.

"The next best date might be the mayor's race next year, but I'm not sure the owners can wait that long," he said.

Timing is important because Astros owner Drayton McLane Jr. has said he wants to decide quickly whether to keep the team in Houston or try to move his team to another city. A fast exit is key to McLane because, unlike professional football and basketball, few cities clamor for baseball teams.

Astros executive vice president Bob McClaren said the ball club likely could not wait for a May 1997 referendum because McLane wants the team in a new facility by April 1999.

But San Diego Padres owner John Moores, who is trying to position himself to buy an NFL franchise for Houston, said he has no problem with a countywide referendum.

Timing is not as important for football because Eckels' current plan calls for converting the Astrodome into a football-only facility. Such construction could not start until a new ballpark was built for the Astros.

Rockets vice president John Thomas said he had no comment. However, a source close to the Rockets told the Chronicle that team owner Les Alexander fears a referendum would fail and prefers not to have one.

Regardless of when referendums are conducted, political experts predict a hard time getting them passed.

Wendy Lee Gramm, wife of U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, toured the area Saturday on a swing through West Texas while campaigning throughout the state.

By Joe Gaines
Staff Writer

Wendy Lee Gramm, wife of U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, was in Midland Saturday, campaigning for her husband as part of a four-day swing through West Texas cities.

As part of her visit to Midland and Odessa, Mrs. Gramm first met with Ector County law-enforcement officers at the Odessa Police Department to discuss her husband's efforts to set up a national system for tracking convicted child molesters.

The senator's bill has bipartisan support and was recently endorsed by President Clinton, Mrs. Gramm said.

Later, she took a tour of the Tomcat USA Co., where they make stage rigging, trusses and lighting equipment. The tour was to highlight the company's growth and expansion over the past eight years. The company started with four employees; now it has more than 80 and international recognition, she said.

'The company has a worldwide reputation and it is good example of what kind of work can be done here in Midland.'
— Wendy Gramm, on Tomcat USA Co.

"The company has a worldwide reputation and it is good example of what kind of work can be done here in Midland," she said.

"Junior Achievement is a great program of people giving back to the community," she said.

She commended the program for raising all of its funds locally and for teaching personal responsibility. The program teaches valuable work skills and helps show a person their abilities, she said.

"Programs like Junior Achievement show that by hard work and America's freedom and opportunity, one can get ahead," she said. "Junior Achievement makes it possible for many to achieve the American dream."

Her family used that same motto to gain their own piece of the American dream, she said. Her grandparents were immigrants from Korea who worked in the sugar cane fields of Hawaii. With the next generation, her father became part of management in the sugar cane industry. She then represented the industry under Presidents Reagan and Bush.

Mrs. Gramm was chairwoman of the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission under Reagan and Bush. She has also served with the Federal Trade Commission and the Office of Management and Budget

Independence Day

Abilene author Nancy Robinson Masters will kick off Independence Day celebrations in Midland when she tells about the time she tried to grow flags on her daddy's cotton farm — or so the story goes in her book, "The Fabulous Flying Flag Farm" — at 1 p.m. Saturday at Hastings, 3111 W. Cuthbert Ave. In addition, Lu Parker of the D&L Flag Co. will give away free miniature American flags to all youngsters in attendance. Ms. Masters, a former newspaper columnist, conducts clinics for aspiring authors, is a pilot and has written books for children and adults.

Road closure

Construction of the Midkiff Road and Bluebird Lane waterline project will begin at 7 a.m. Monday. Portions of Midkiff Road — from Mockingbird Lane to Cardinal Lane — will be closed during the first phase of construction. As work progresses, Midkiff Road will then be closed from Cardinal Lane to Bluebird Lane. Notice of that closure will be posted before construction. Motorists should observe all barricading and warning signs, and are encouraged to avoid that section of Midkiff Road as much as possible. The project is expected to last 60 days.

Oil-well service cleared in gross negligence case

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — A Big Spring family will not be compensated for the loss of their loved one because a jury has determined that Yale E. Key Inc., an oil-well service company, was not grossly negligent in the death of Roy "Gene" Strickland.

Strickland was repairing a "split-ring" truck tire in April of last year when the tire exploded, blowing the bead ring out and crushing Strickland's skull, said Drew Mouton, attorney for the plaintiffs.

During a four-day trial that started Monday, Mouton tried to show that the company was grossly negligent in the death, since all those who repair split-ring tires are required to be specially trained.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) requires that these kinds of tires only be repressurized while within protective cages.

Yet Strickland did not receive the special training, nor did he have the proper working environment, Mouton said.

Repairing these kinds of tires is a known hazard and people are regularly killed when working with them under improper conditions, Mouton said.

Because of the physics involved, the mass of 110-pound-per-square-inch air inside the tire actually blows the ring outward at a force of more than a thousand psi when the bead ring fails, Mouton said.

The jury in 118th District Judge Robert Moore's court did not find Yale E. Key was grossly negligent in Strickland's

Nematodes help conquer ants

"Boy, howdy!" cheered Ginger Hanna as she zeroed in on a squad of nematodes on her microscope's slide. "They are all hugging up with each other."

Her friendly batches of microscopic nematodes are the nemesis of the aggressive red-imported fire ants, which have infested much of Texas and the southeastern United States.

"Something (problematic) is easy when you have the right solution," said Ms. Hanna, who recently returned to Midland to visit her parents and friends.

Her strains of nematodes, marketed as ANTidote, are exciting to her. Her two-nematode strains are among an estimated 12,000 identified strains of the slender and tapered nematodes, which also are known as round-worms and eel-worms.

"They are my best friends. They are just great," said Ms. Hanna, who was designated to field test Sweden strains of nematodes after scientists had discovered their propensity to attack, assassinate, and feast on fire ants, termites and other pests.

"They are gregarious little critters," she said.

Unlike the gardener's and the cotton farmer's detrimental nematodes that harm plants by sucking juices out of their roots, Ms. Hanna's strains of nematodes are beneficial and attack the fire-art larvae, worker fire ants and fire-ant queens. ANTidote nematodes, for example, will not harm tomato plants.

Crowning jewel of first apartment is very loud stereo

The two young men — I'd guess they were in their late teens — were standing in the checkout line at the grocery story discussing with great excitement and anticipation their upcoming move.

Yes, a dramatic change was about to take place in these two young people's lives. And they could hardly contain themselves.

Who could blame them?

They were, after all, about to get their first apartment.

Hot dang! Your first apartment. Does that bring back fond memories, or what?

No more mom and dad looking over your shoulder. No more college dormitory rules to follow. No more curfews. No more proper meals. No more shouts of "Turn down that blasted music!"

Ott

You have now hit the big time. Indeed, at the precise moment you pay a deposit and the first month's rent, you become magically transformed into one of the grown-ups who gets to come and go whenever you darn well please.

So get the women and children off the street, a wild man is on the loose.

But the first thing you've got to do is decorate the apartment. That's crucial. A person's personality is often vividly depicted by the style in which he (or she) chooses to furnish his (or her) first apartment.

I distinguish between "his" and "her" apartment because there are significant differences. Women, for example, generally possess some semblance of taste; men, especially those under the age of 21, do not.

Thus, they generally do their furniture shopping at the nearest construction site. That's why there are certain standard pieces of furniture in all men's first apartments: the giant wooden spool that doubles as a dining room table, old bed sheets that instantly become drapes, several large boxes that serve as ideal chest of drawers, a couple of orange crates for "catch-all purposes" and, of course, the old standby coffee table that is comprised of two cinder blocks and a large piece of plywood.

Throw in several empty pizza boxes, a refrigerator full of beer and slimy green stuff, a ratty mattress on the floor (for unexpected guests), and the most expensive stereo system money can buy and you've got every guy's first apartment.

What can I say? A man must have his priorities in order. And nothing is more important than a stereo system that will rattle the walls ... of the house next door.

But loud music is not all that is involved with renting your first apartment.

No indeed. You must also be prepared to become the "official party host" for your friends, especially those poor souls who still live at home. In their desperate attempt to avoid all contact with their parents, these young people, most of whom have very stringy hair and glazed-over facial expressions, will drop in for a "brief visit" at 3 p.m. on Sunday and not leave until the following Thursday.

You, as "official party host," are expected to be pleased by this development. After all, you have an apartment and they don't.

But it gets worse. Much worse.

That's when your parents call and announce that they soon will be making their initial appearance. And since they are paying the bulk of the rent, you can't very well refuse to let them in. So, instead, you spend the next three days trying to make the place presentable: picking up dirty underwear, hiding all your girlie magazines and emptying the kitchen sink for the first time since you moved in.

Then the big moment arrives. Your parents enter the front door. You try your best to be cordial and they, in turn, bite their tongues when asked how they like the

Hispanic lawmakers fight proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hispanic lawmakers are up in arms over a Republican congressman's proposal to end a federal requirement that 28 states, including Texas, provide non-English voting ballots.

Fifteen Hispanic lawmakers, Democrat and Republican alike, have signed onto a letter contending that Rep. John Porter's bill "would have a devastating impact on the rights of language minority populations to participate fully in the democratic process."

The AFL-CIO also is urging lawmakers to oppose the repeal of the Voting Rights Act requirements.

But Porter, supported by two committee chairmen, counters that the provision does not effectively promote election participation and has burdened counties with a needless expense.

Since 1906, immigrants seeking to become naturalized U.S. citizens — giving them the right to vote — have had to demonstrate oral English proficiency. Since 1950, would-be citizens have had to show "an understanding of English, including an ability to read, write and speak words in ordinary English usage."

Porter says that if immigrants are gaining citizenship without knowing how to read English, then the Immigration and Naturalization Service is not enforcing the law.

If 18-year-old citizens, born and raised in the United States, cannot understand English, then the education system must be improved, Porter says.

"I do not believe that multi-language ballots should be used to fill any such gaps in our immigration and education systems," he said.

The Judiciary subcommittee on the Constitution approved the legislation, which has 47 co-sponsors, in late May. The full committee may consider the legislation in the next few weeks.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde, R-Ill., and Appropriations Committee Chairman Bob Livingston, R-La., have written House colleagues, telling them it is "entirely appropriate and necessary to re-examine" the requirement.

"You can have as many other languages as we want, but we've got to have one that we can talk to one another in," Porter said in an interview.

appear as patches of discarded coffee grounds. Mound entrances into the tunnels below are not always obvious. But a foot-stomping around the mound will summon an immediate charge by aggressive fire ants that seem to be looking for a fight.

In East and Central Texas, fire-ant mounds, each of which may harbor millions of fire ants, may be 2 feet tall and can damage farmland and ranch land and harm livestock and wildlife.

Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) Entomologist Doug Paxton of Midland said that fire ants have been in Midland for at least 10 to 15 years.

While he acknowledged that many chemicals or pesticides "do a fair job" in controlling fire ants, "there is not a 'silver bullet' when it comes to killing fire ants.

"The key to controlling fire ants for the homeowner is persistence. Some of them (measures) work well.

"If you have a small fire-ant mound, you probably can knock it out," he said. "But if you have a big fire-ant mound, they are going to keep coming back because there could be more than one queen" producing eggs. "Every time you see movement (of a mound), treat it again."

Paxton said that fire ants "have expanded their territory rapidly in the last few years, which means they are moving to other people's yards."

Their sting is noxious, may form pustules, and can be toxic and even lethal.

"They sting. If you kneel down directly in a fire-ant mound, you can come up with a couple of hundred fire ants on your knees," he said. "They are quicker than a hiccup."

Fire ants "will feed on just about anything," Paxton said. "They will feed on boll worms if there is a cotton field ... (and other) insect pests. ... They will feed on small animals, native ant populations" including red ants, lizards, including horned toads, dogs, cats, and livestock.

Paxton said that he tells people who have red ants in their yards to "be thankful you still have got them. If you have red ants, you probably don't have fire ants, yet.

The smaller "fire ants will displace the red ants," he said. "They will take them out. They will fight them and win the battle."

"There is hope," according to a booklet from TAEX, "that natural enemies of the fire ant can be imported from South America and released in the United States to provide some fire-ant suppression."

Ms. Hanna's nematode force against the fire ant comes in moist, sand-like mica in tubs of 8 million, 13 million, and 30 million nematodes.

The small tubs of mica and nematodes are mixed with water and poured on fire-ant mounds.

The nematodes take it from there and will slither down into the fire-ant tunnels and catch rides on toiling fire ants, who seek out and nourish the egg-laying queens deep below the mounds.

"Mix it with water, pour it, and the ants carry it for you" to their own detriment and death, Ms. Hanna said.

The South American fire ants, which first entered the United States by ship at Alabama in the 1920s, are soil-boring.

"They walk through the soil like we walk through the air," Ms. Hanna said. "They go 20 to 30 feet deep to the water table."

Deep down, the soil temperature is a cool 45 degrees or so, said Ms. Hanna, who holds a degree in agriculture. "A male (nematode) and a female (nematode) have to meet inside of a fire-ant adult or a fire-ant egg. They breed. They reproduce. The adults die. And the kids go on."

And within the soil's coolness, "they are down there breeding, having a good time in air-conditioned (comfort)," she said.

"I have just been amazed how these (nematode) organisms start diminishing a (fire-ant) population that has been there for 14 or 15 years."

Ms. Hanna, who currently wholesales her nematodes in Texas and from coast-to-coast and who soon will be culturing them, theorized that termites aided the fire ants but to their downfall.

"One reason the (fire-ant) population" has grown so rapidly and widely is that "termites have bored their way through (soil and wood) for thousands of years, so when the fire ants came in, they moved those termites out of the way. Termites gave them (nematodes) an open gate.

"They (fire ants) will eat a termite. They will destroy a termite. So, when they came in and start boring, they will hit those (termite) tunnels. They will live together, but if they are disturbed, they will eat that termite."

And given a chance, Ms. Hanna is convinced that her friends, the nematodes, will assault the fire ants and control their population and territory.

Gross negligence requires that Mouton prove the company intentionally allowed the accident to occur.

If the family could have sued charging ordinary negligence, the jury probably would have found in their favor, Mouton said.

In Texas, however, an employer must be determined to be grossly negligent before damages are assessed. Employers cannot be sued for ordinary negligence, Mouton said.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Schedule announced

Members of Holy Cross Lutheran Church have announced their summer service schedule.

Services at the church, 5400 N. Big Spring St., will begin at 9 a.m. with Sunday School and Bible classes for all ages beginning at 10:15 a.m. An adult Bible class has started a study of the Book of Romans.

The Rev. Phil Konz will deliver the message "Glorify His Name" Sunday.

Also, smocking lessons are offered at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays in the fellowship hall. All interested parties are invited to attend.

The Women's Guild of Holy Cross Lutheran Church will meet Sunday to discuss the upcoming LWMU District Convention and Fall Bazaar.

Conference held

St. Paul CME Church hosted its District Conference this past week.

One of the highlights of the conference was Mission Night's "The Woman in White." During this service, the district women make a presentation to the community hosting the conference. Dr. Viola Coleman, a member of the St. Paul congregation, recommended that the women consider contributing to Freewill Foster Home. In response, the home was given many boxes and baskets of gifts to be used by the foster children as needed.

"The presentation was very impressive and heartwarming," said a release from the church.

Mt. Rose Baptist Church added to the month's shower as it made weekly church tithe contributions to Freewill. St. Luke AME Missionary Society also gave a financial contribution.

A spokesperson for Freewill Foster Home expressed gratitude for the community's support.

Network adds on

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill. — Three Angels Broadcasting Network, 3ABN, has recently added UHF Channel 31 in Midland to its growing list of downlinks across the country.

From its Uplink and Production centers in rural southern Illinois, 3ABN beams Christian programming to satellite Galaxy 3R, Channel 23.

In addition to its UHF and VHF downlink stations, the network is rebroadcast by a number of cable stations in North America and is viewed by thousands with home satellite dishes. 3ABN is totally supported by its viewers and has production facilities in the United States and in Nizhny Novgorod (Gorky), Russia.

Sermon planned

"Me...Not Worry? You've Got to Be Kidding!" will be the title of Mary Beth Anton's sermon at the 10:55 a.m. service Sunday at Trinity Presbyterian Church.

Sunday School starts at 9:30 a.m. and has classes for ages 18 months through adult. A nursery is available. For transportation to services call the church office, 682-2514.

Bible school held

Hours are 6:15 to 8:30 p.m. Ages are 3 years old through eighth grade. For more information, call 694-2774.

Farewell planned

A "Despedida" farewell Mass for the Rev. Domingo Estrada will be held at 7 p.m. Monday at the shrine of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

A come and go reception will follow. All are invited to attend.

Guest to speak

Goodwill Baptist Church, 1508 S. Main St., has a special speaker for its Pastor Aid Program set for 3 p.m. Sunday.

The Rev. A.L. Patrict of Odessa will speak.

Also, the church is hosting a Gospel Concert at 3 p.m. July 7. Guest speaker will be the Rev. O.J. Archie, pastor of the Macedonia Baptist Church and moderator of the Lovely Sunset District.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Leroy Lengyon, invites the public to attend both events.

Convention ends

The State Sunday School and Young People Willing Worker of the Texas Northwest Convention concludes at Faith Temple Church of God in Christ, 1605 N. Terrell St.

Officiating will be the host pastor, the Rev. W.C. Kenan; the Rev. A.L. Jackson, State Sunday School superintendent of Texas Northwest; and the Rev. Lemuel Thuston, state YPWW president.

Day and evening services will be held daily. Bishop W.H. Watson will be speaking Thursday night. For more information or the hours of services, call the church. The public is invited to attend.

Seminar planned

Former atheist and scientist John Clayton will conduct a free seminar entitled "Does God Exist?" at the Fairmont Park Church of Christ, 3813 N. Midland Drive, Friday through June 30.

The seminar will run from 7 to 9:15 p.m. Friday and 6 to 8:15 p.m. Saturday. On June 30, Clayton will speak at the 8:15 and 10:30 a.m. worship assemblies and at the 9:30 a.m. Bible class. Topics will include, among others, "The Cosmos: A Proof of God's Existence," "Jurassic Park and Genesis" and "The Problem with Human Suffering."

A teacher and geologist by profession, Clayton uses charts, slides and fossil demonstrations during his presentations, and he takes questions from the audience at the end of each session.

He has traveled the country since 1969 giving as many as 40 seminars a year.

Clayton holds a master's degree in chemistry and psychometry from Indiana University and in geology and Earth sciences from Notre Dame University. His most recent honors include being selected in 1992 as a finalist for "Indiana Teacher of the Year" and as a participant in the "National Science Teacher Association Teacher of the Year" and "Presidential Teacher of the Year" programs.

The seminar is free and open to the public. For more information, call the church, 699-7064.

Concert scheduled

During the Sunday morning worship services June 30 the Sanctuary Choir of Crestview Baptist Church, directed by Ty Morris Jr., will present a concert of patriotic songs.

The services will be held at 8:30 and 10:30 a.m. in the sanctuary of the church, 3300 Thomas Ave. The public is invited to attend as the church celebrates the birth of the United States.

Crusade set

The guest evangelist will be the Rev. Carlos Vera of Boca Raton, Fla.

Trip scheduled

The Activities Ministry at First Baptist Church is planning a trip to Glorieta Oct. 7-11 that will end with the Balloon Festival in Albuquerque, N.M. Oct. 7-11.

At the end of the trip, those wanting to may return to Midland. Others will go on a trip to the Grand Canyon, Hoover Dam, Sequoia and Yosemite National Parks Oct. 11-18. For expenses and more information, call the church, 683-0618.

Schedule starts

Hope Lutheran Church, 2003 N. A St., has started its summer worship schedule.

Sunday School hour is from 9:20 to 10:15 a.m. Services Sunday are at 10:30 a.m. The adult Sunday School studies are covering the Sermon on the Mount.

AIR CONDITIONING & HEATING

Q. Why should you choose Aztech Air Conditioning & Heating for your service needs?

A. Honest, dependable, 24-hour availability, quick response, insured, satisfied service guaranteed and formerly employed by one of Midland's more prominent companies.

Q. Why should you have your air conditioner and heater checked each season?

A. Preserve the life of your unit; proper maintenance of your unit cuts down on your utility expenses as well as improving the efficiency of your unit thereby cutting down on numerous service calls.

CARPET CLEANING

Q. Can you get Kool-Aid stains and pet stains and odor out of carpets?

A. You Bet! I use special chemical that are made to clear up specific types of stains. I use a deep-cleaning action, scrubbing the carpet first with a heavy-duty scrub brush, then I come back and extract everything out of the bottom of the carpet. You can walk on a carpet immediately after I'm done. Since I use very little water the carpet is usually dry in about an hour.

In addition to carpet cleaning, I do fire restoration, upholstery cleaning, carpet repair and carpet stretching. You name it and Super Star will do it!

DEBS HOUSECALLS

Q. What's causes my Lamps to quit working?

A. Sometimes just age, in most cases sockets getting burned out from using a 250 watt 3 way.

Lamp sockets are rated for 150 watt. Don't wait for it to quit working - you could be in fire hazard zone.

Remove the bulb and inspect the socket for blackening. This is the time to repair. Replace sockets, cords and switches as needed for safety and light. In home repair is the painless way to go.

Q. ~ My Mother is seriously ill, but wants to remain at home as long as possible. How can we help her meet medical and personal care requirements?

A. Many people prefer the privacy of their home for personal care and much has been written about a home environment assisting in the healing process. Home Health care provides a variety of services which may enable a person to stay in their own home and have their medical needs monitored by trained professionals with a contingent of support staff. Professional services are coordinated with an individual's physician without the patient having to travel to their office or to other medical facilities for medical and personal care. Skilled Nurses plan, assess, and evaluate the overall care of the patient, which includes, but is not limited to, medications, post-surgical care, wound care, and IV therapy. Home Health Aides assist with personal activities, bathing, meals, and light housekeeping. Physical, Occupational, Speech, and Respiratory Therapies, as well as Social Services, can also be arranged under the Home Health umbrella. Many providers of Home Health services offer free evaluations and their services are often covered by Medicare at 100%. Your Mother may need medical attention requiring hospitalization; however, short and long term problems may best be monitored and resolved more comfortably in the home.

ROOFING

Q. We had some hail recently in our neighborhood. How do I know whether I need a new roof?

A. The roof of your house takes a lot of abuse not only from hail, but also from sun, wind and extreme temperature changes. Distinguishing between weather damage and hail damage takes a trained eye, and that' where the Roofs by Nicholas experts can help.

Q. I've heard of fly-by-night roofing companies. How do I know the company I select will do a good job?

A. Don't be shy about asking questions. Ask for references, and then check them out. Ask how long the company has been in business, and whether you may stop by their office. What professional organizations are they members of? Do they guarantee their work?

Roofs by Nicholas has satisfied thousands of homeowners and businesses throughout the Permian Basin. They provide prompt, free estimates, insurance claim assistance and cost-effective roofing, reroofing, and repair. Frequently "one call does it all" since these professionals also install siding and seamless gutters. They are a member of the National Roofing Contractors Association, the Cedar Shake and Shingle bureau, the Roofing Contractors Association of Texas, and the Better Business Bureau Care Program.

Owner Dan Nicholas invites you to stop by to meet his friendly staff at 6600 West Highway 80, and he also reminds you that whether you have a hole in your roof, or need a whole new roof, "We top 'em all. That says it all. Give us a call...520-7348 or 1-800-266-7348.

HOUSTON (AP) — Margareta Luna doesn't invite friends to her one-story brick home in southwest Houston. It's just too embarrassing.

Like most Houstonians and residents along the Texas Gulf Coast, Mrs. Luna has a roach problem.

"There is no area in the house without roaches," she says. "They are everywhere."

After trying countless insecticides, she answered an ad in a national magazine.

The manufacturer of a roach bait was conducting a contest, looking for homes of people across the nation who have serious roach problems.

Mrs. Luna fired off a letter to the company describing the situation in her house.

"I have the worst roach problem in America. There is no place like my home. Roaches are in our clothing, appliances, stereos, radios and clocks," she wrote.

"Clean a vase, move a pillow, or dust a wall portrait, they are there," she said.

Out of 425 entries from 39 states, Luna's letter was among the handful that most impressed the executives of Combat. They sent a local exterminator to her house to assess the situation.

Mrs. Luna's house, along with homes in Phoenix, Ariz., St. Louis, New Orleans and Tampa, Fla., were chosen for treatment.

The company also sent Austin Frischman, an entomologist who worked on the team that developed the company's baits.

"Of the people who enter the contest, this is average. Of all of America that I see, on a scale of 1 to 5, with 5 being the worst, I would say this house is about a 3," Frishman said Friday.

"The difficult part here is that they are not just in the kitchen anymore. They are in the garage, they're in the bedrooms, they're in the bathrooms," he said. "There are probably 25,000 to 30,000 roaches in this house".

KENT KWIK
CONVENIENCE STORES

Why join TEAM KENT?

What turns you on about your job? For most people, these thoughts focus on several different areas. How does your current job stack up against TEAM KENT?

SALARY, SECURITY AND FLEXIBILITY

Our minimum starting salary is $5/hour. Manager trainees can start at $300 a week or more (depending on experience.) Our company offers stable employment year-round. If you aren't getting enough hours (at least 40) at your current job, WE CAN GIVE THEM TO YOU! If you want to work part-time, we can work with you to tailor-make a schedule that meets your needs! Our Kent Kwiks are open 7 days a week, with most open 24 hours a day.

BENEFITS

We offer medical, dental and life insurance to our full-time Team Members. We have paid vacations, a sick pay plan, college tuition reimbursement, and a profit sharing plan. There are also incentive programs available that allow you to earn extra money on a quarterly basis!

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

95% of our Managers started at the entry-level and received the training necessary to become successful at running a small business. We offer continual classroom education in customer service and personal leadership skills. You can tell the difference high-quality training makes when you come into one of our Kent Kwiks.

SO HOW DO WE COMPARE?

Where will you be one year from now if you stay with your present company? With Kent, the chances are very high that you could be running one of our locations, making in the mid to upper $20's, plus bonuses! If all of this interests you, the first step is to pick up an application at any one of our Kent Kwiks, complete it, and bring it to our Midland area office (3314 No. Loop 250) between 8 A.M. and 3 P.M. Monday - Friday. If you live in Odessa, we take applications at Texas Commerce Bank Building 9th floor, Monday-Friday, 8-11am or 1-4pm. You will then take a battery of tests and questionnaires which give us the information we need to determine if you have the customer service attitudes, math skills and work ethics required to be successful in our business. We also do criminal and credit background checks, and a drug test is required. Relocation within our operating areas may be available.

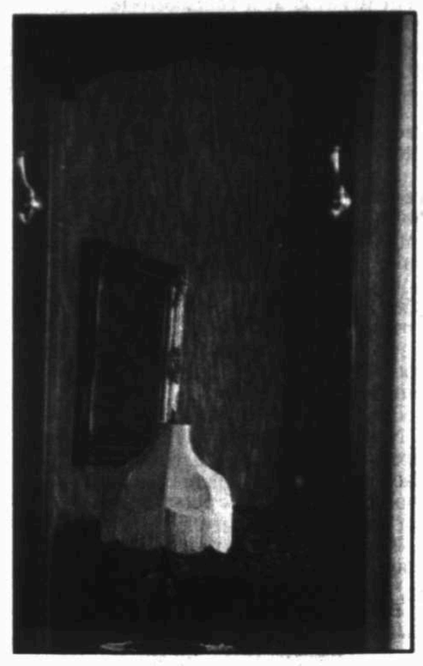
Chic, fun & flexible



STORY, PHOTOGRAPHS AND PAGE DESIGN BY KES GILHOME

The large kitchen offers a light bright decor coupled with practical aspects such as easy care flooring and counter-tops. The storage space is augmented by the well-proportioned utility room. With the dining room and one end, and the breakfast room at the other, this kitchen is perfectly placed for all occasions.

Only seven years old, this charming home on Northfield Drive in Trinity Meadows is full of features that are as attractive as they are practical. The well thought out floor-plan can accommodate all sorts of activities: From formal garden parties to informal family suppers. An good example of how flexible the layout is, might be the wet bar which opens to the family room via double doors and also opens onto the patio for outdoor parties.

With four bedroom, three baths and two living areas there is plenty of space at 3501 Northfield for a sizable family. The kitchen follows this theme and is perfect for every type of occasion.

Brightly decorated with light countertops and tile floors, the kitchen opens onto the formal dining room at one end, and the morning room at the other. This of course helps to make the room extremely handy for the chef in the family. A sizable utility room adds to the already copious storage space.

The family room continues the theme of large, well-appointed room. Built-in bookcases, a well proportioned fireplace and a wall of windows overlooking the garden all combine to transform the room into an extraordinary space that is a pleasure to be in.

There will be an opportunity to view this charming family home, which is being listed at $152,500, during the open house this afternoon (between two and five o'clock). During the tour, visitors will get a chance to appreciate the master suite with its French doors to the patio, large bathroom with double vanities and separate shower and tub.

Gardeners will find the yard a perfect place for their favorite hobby as there are a number of winding flower beds surrounding the plush lawn. The deep, covered patio provides the perfect place from which to admire the fruits of one's labors.

For more information about this elegant property, either stop by the open house or call the listing agent, Joel Oldham of Re/Max at 682-8820 for a private appointment.

Dreams come true

Are you looking for a home that is customized for your family's special needs, but can't afford to build one yourself?

One way to achieve the home of your dreams at a relatively low cost is to renovate and older, suburban ranch home.

Sutton

Built in droves during the 1950s and early 60s, ranch style homes were intended for sale to younger couples with growing families. To keep costs down, the rooms tended to be fairly small, but three, four or even more bedrooms was often the norm.

Nowadays, with fewer children, people are rediscovering these one-story ranch homes and looking at them as opportunities for custom renovation.

For example, a master bedroom suite might be created by removing a wall between two existing bedrooms. A skylight could be fitted into the ceiling for a luxurious touch.

A large informal family room could be created by combining the living room - often featuring a fireplace - with another bedroom. A small kitchen could be enlarged by shifting a wall to provide a separate dining area.

Since the alterations will be ones you plan yourself, al little hard work on your part may be all that is needed to create the home you have always dreamed off, while still saving thousands of dollars over the cost of building your own home from scratch.

The most important thing, however, is to enlist the services of a real estate agent to help you find your dream home.

...Making House Calls

When it's time to sell your home, you'll have plenty of questions like; "How does our home compare to others in the area?", "Should we re-carpet the den?", Should we rearrange the furniture?", Does anyone look in the closets?", What about the dog during Open House?", Will it show as well empty?", What will the inspector look for?". What if we have termites?"

Sandi Gonzales holds out a meal for Earl Allen to take in his "wheels" in the Meals on Wheels Restaurant Roller Relay scheduled to kick off Thursday. The Relay will be July 27.

Midland has the reputation of an "eating-out town," and is it any wonder, with all the quality restaurants in town?

Unfortunately, some Midlanders have such limited physical abilities or limited finances that "eating in" is often an iffy proposition, and eating out an impossibility.

That's what brought Restaurant Roller Relay into being. The event, which is planned for July 27 at the ClayDesta north parking lot and is a benefit for Meals On Wheels, gives those who are financially able the chance to help provide hot meals for those who are not.

According to information from Meals On Wheels, the setup goes like this: Five-person teams from restaurants and corporations will challenge each other to a 10-lap roller relay using roller skates, in-line skates and other means of wheeled transportation (subject to approval). Each participant will complete two laps around a course while carrying a restaurant tray. Each team will complete a total of 10 laps, and each lap completed will equal one meal for Meals On Wheels.

Sponsorships are $3 per lap (which means $3 for each meal). Everyone interested is invited to attend.

Kickoff for soliciting pledges for meals begins Thursday.

Dr. Billy Cook, avid in-line skater and chairman of the event, said the benefit will basically be three events: (1) A children's race — one lap around the course — which is "designed for younger kids," he said, with donations of $3 (one meal) per participant; (2) A recreational race of several laps for teens and adults, with entry fees (five meals — $15 — in advance or seven meals — $21 — at the gate) donated to the restaurant/corporate team of choice and the team raising the most money receiving the prize; (3) The main event — the Restaurant Roller Relay itself.

"All funds raised go to Meals On Wheels," Cook said.

The first event, the children's race, is scheduled for 9 a.m., with the recreational race planned for 9:30 a.m. and the Restaurant Roller Relay itself set for 10 a.m.

Midlanders travel to to see 'Cats,' sights in the Alamo City

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Fifteen Midlanders were among those who boarded a bus recently for a Classic Group Tour to San Antonio. The main purpose of their trip was to see a performance of the musical, "Cats," but they enjoyed the colorful sights of the Alamo City, as well as interesting stops along the way.

McKnight-Harrison

Staying at the Hilton Palacio del Rio in San Antonio, the group enjoyed a variety of activities, including a riverboat dinner cruise, tours of Fort Sam Houston, Mission San Jose and the Steves House and Guenther House in the King William Section of the city. They also enjoyed lunch and shopping at El Mercado Market Square, familiarly known as the Market. Their attendance at "Cats" was preceded by dinner at the Tower of the Americas.

En route to San Antonio, they stopped off in Boerne for lunch and antique shopping. On the way home, they shopped in Fredericksburg and then enjoyed a tour and lunch at the Fredericksburg Herb Farm.

Those going from here were Enid Davis, Mary Bechner, Ann Estes, Carl Fisher, Jo Fouts, Jeane Harman, Shirley Ireland, Barbara Larsen, Beth Mitchell, Heather Mitchell, Arthur and Lulene Oldham, Colleen Scury, Lynn Smith and Raylene Smith. They were joined by fellow travelers from Odessa and Hobbs, N.M.

TO HONOR July bride-to-be Tricia Treat of Lubbock, a display shower was held recently in the home of Tamra (Mrs. Land) Boyd. Tricia is the fiancee of Midlander Peter Reed.

Special guests included the prospective bridegroom's mother Jan (Mrs. Jack) Reed of Midland; his grandmother, Olga Phillips of Fort Worth; Tricia's mother, Dennie Treat of Lubbock, and her grandmother, Helen Dunn of Abilene.

The couple will be married on July 6 in Lubbock at Asbury United Methodist Church, which Tricia's father, the Rev. Dave Treat, serves as pastor. Among the officiants at the wedding will be Dr. Charles Lutrick of Lubbock, former senior pastor of Midland's First United Methodist Church.

IT WAS FUN to see Debbie and Ron Ellison's new home, which showcased Debbie's decorating talents, at a recent open house and housewarming.

Among those stopping by were Sheila and Tom Vermillion, Tricia (Mrs. Kip) Boyd and daughter, Lindsey, Sherry Brookshire, Elaine and Rick Denson, Pam and David Dunbar, and Jerry Kelly.

ALEXANDER S. HAROZ, a resident of Trinity Towers since November of 1994 and father of Midlander Alexandria "Alex" Rose, celebrated his 90th birthday on June 15.

However, friends and family have gathered here this weekend for a belated observance of the milestone event.

Highlighting the festivities was a dinner on the patio of La Bodega Restaurant Saturday evening and a country and western dance afterward at the American Legion Hall. The family is celebrating Mass together at this morning's 10:30 service at St. Ann's Catholic Church. Heather Tamm, Mr. Haroz's granddaughter from New York, is playing the harp during the service.

The agenda for the family reunion also has included "Summer in the City" at Centennial Plaza, Summer Mummers, various athletic events, and the Museum of the Southwest's Sunday Lawn Concert.

Mr. Haroz has seven children, 14 grandchildren, including Karen Weeks and her husband, Greg, of Midland, and nine great-grandchildren, who include the Week's children, Jennifer and Branden.

In addition to Alex, Mr. Haroz's children are Jeanne Renne and husband, Chuck, of Denver, Colo.; Mary Tamm and husband, Manfred, of Princeton, N.J.; Richard Haroz of Geneva, Switzerland; Tom Haroz and wife, Judy, of Albuquerque, N.M.; Don Haroz and wife, Carole, of Madison, N.J., and Mike Haroz of Boston, Mass.

RELAY: Kickoff set for Thursday

(From 1E)

"We have to get the waiters through and back to their restaurants by 11 a.m. (to serve lunch)," Cook laughed.

Restaurant Roller Relay is a new concept in fund-raising for Midland, according to Holly Hughes, the Meals On Wheels volunteer who came up with the idea. "To my knowledge, it's the first time it's been done here," she said.

The idea for Restaurant Roller Relay came with an international flair, Mrs. Hughes said. "We were on vacation in France, and we were watching International CNN and it was covering a waiters' race in Paris. I thought, 'What great visuals.' I was aware of Meals On Wheel's needs and decided it was the perfect tie-in."

The goal of the Relay is to raise "15,700 meals at sponsorships of $3 per meal," she said. "Three dollars isn't much — it's affordable by most people's standards," but since Meals On Wheels is a local organization, the people it serves "could be your neighbors."

They are, in fact, everybody's neighbors, said Connie Glover, executive director of Community and Senior Services. "Meals On Wheels is one of our programs," she said.

The people served by Meals On Wheels are homebound; elderly and disabled individuals who are unable to provide hot, nutritious meals for themselves.

"We serve (through Meals On Wheels) about 400 meals a day, Monday through Friday, and about 70 meals per day, Saturday and Sunday," Ms. Glover said.

"Those served on weekends are our neediest clients, the ones most at risk of malnutrition because of a lack of financial or social support to get adequate nutrition on weekends," she said.

The meals are delivered by volunteers, such as Mrs. Hughes, who has been a volunteer for the agency for two or three years and who goes on her route once a month. Traveling her route takes about an hour, "usually from 10: 15 a.m. to 11: 15 a.m.," she said.

"Each volunteer has a route and becomes familiar with houses on that route and the people on the route.

"One of the benefits of (volunteering) with Meals On Wheels is that people appreciate the food, but (the visit) seems to make a real difference to people."

Social isolation can be just as destructive as hunger, she said. "A lot of times, the Meals On Wheels volunteer is the only person they (the client) will see or speak to during the course of the day."

Mrs. Hughes said she decided to become a volunteer after accompanying her mother, Bee Oldfield, on her rounds as a Meals On Wheels volunteer in another community. "I found it was really an extremely satisfying way to volunteer," Mrs. Hughes said.

"It's something you can do a little bit and feel like you are helping, but it's not a big time commitment. Anybody could do it one day a month."

Meals On Wheels has a professional staff preparing the meals it delivers to those in need. "We receive some federal and state funds, so we have to meet strict guidelines," said Ms. Glover.

But while the meals are prepared by a paid professional staff, they are delivered by volunteers. "We have about five or six volunteers per day who help in packaging the meals for home delivery," Ms. Glover said, "and about 50 volunteers per day who deliver the 400 meals (on average).

"Through the year we use about 1,200 volunteers. It takes a lot of volunteer effort to make the program possible."

Meals On Wheels is supported through the community in other ways too — that's the reason behind Restaurant Roller Relay in the first place. "We get partial government support, but there's no such thing as a free lunch," said Ms. Glover. "We get funding from seven different government sources, (which makes up) about 60 percent (of the annual budget for Meals On Wheels). The other 40 percent comes from the community.

"The budget for Meals On Wheels is $430,000 this year. Of that, 40 percent comes from the community — that's $172,000 that we have to raise every year to support the program."

Some of the money comes from the clients themselves, who "are not asking for a handout," Ms. Glover said. "If they are able, they do make contributions."

But the majority of the 40 percent of the budget not covered by government funding comes from donations from the community.

And Restaurant Roller Relay is one way the community can provide that support. Corporations participating in this year's Restaurant Roller Relay are Arco, Conoco, KGEE/KODM, the Reporter-Telegram, Target and Texas Commerce Bank. Restaurants participating are Black-eyed Pea, Chili's, Harrigan's, Luigi's Italian Restaurant, Outback Steakhouse, Popeye's and Red Lobster.

Collector attached to old staplers

By Barbara Mayer
Associated Press

The four-pedestal, center-drawer desk is being rendered obsolete by the computer station as surely as the electric typewriter replaced the manual and the PC wrote the end to them both.

But wait long enough and it will all come back, not as utility but as an aesthetic. Cruise the garage sales, flea markets and antiques stores and see what collectors are coveting as a personal stamp on an impersonal office — at home or at work.

Old fountain pens have enjoyed a renaissance for several years. Now blotters and ink wells, useless since the advent of the ballpoint, are in demand. So are other desk accessories from the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

"They are not necessarily 100 percent useful, but they are beautiful and lend individuality to a desk that has the same anonymous computer, mouse, telephone set and tape dispenser," says Leah Gordon, an antiques dealer in New York.

"These things go in cycles," she says. "There is the period when people say 'What do I want that old thing for?' Then, the next generation comes along and says 'Isn't that nice?' and they buy it."

Harry Greenberger of Riverdale, N.Y., a dealer in industrial design objects, began collecting old staplers four years ago when one caught his eye at an antiques show.

"Design-wise, it screamed at me," he says. "Then I started finding others, and before I knew it, I had a collection of about 250 staplers dating from 1896 to 1950. They are powerful examples of the modern design aesthetic, yet not too expensive."

Prices typically range from about $10 to $350. The high end, he says, is for a really wonderful stapler from the 1930s. If you're lucky, you might pick up an ordinary stapler at a garage sale or flea market for a dollar or less.

Greenberger says he sold about 100 staplers to the Triple Pier Expo antiques show in New York in February.

"Many of the prime examples went on the first day of the show," he says. "A man bought the 80 that were left on Sunday as accessories for an office."

Greenberger says old magazine racks, desk accessories such as pen trays, letter openers, in-and-out trays and desk lamps have also been popular recently.

Old desks to put the accessories on are available in wood and metal, as-is or refinished. There are vintage desk chairs, too.

Steve Mogol of Minneapolis refinishes metal desks and chairs, the ones that were made in gunmetal gray beginning in the 1930s. They were ubiquitous and ugly then. Now that retro is chic, they are taking on a glamour that they never had when new.

Mogol paints them in bright colors, sometimes putting on a new desktop such as a solid resin surface or sand-blasted glass. Chairs, too, are refinished and recovered.

Prices range from $175 to $600 for the chairs, $1,950 to $3,000 for the metal desks. They're sold at his Minneapolis store, Past Present Future, and at antiques shows around the country.

For those who prefer wood, City Barn Antiques of Brooklyn, N.Y. specializes in Heywood Wakefield's solid maple and birch desks, bookcases, chairs and sofas and easy chairs.

Heywood Wakefield was in business in Massachusetts from the late 19th century into the 1970s, but it's the modern styles of mid-century that are in demand, says Brenda Benek of City Barn.

The antiques shop specializes in pieces that date from about 1930 to 1965. Prices range from about $650 to $2,500 for a desk and from about $250 to $400 for a desk chair.

"Everyone from Martha Stewart to Country Living has run articles on Heywood Wakefield furniture," Benek says. "As a result, more people know about it than used to. They seem to like the furniture because it is modern, yet warm and inviting."

And the desk accessories? Greenberger says they are conversation pieces.

"They are also a clue that a person knows there is more to life than working all the time."

Protect against sun-caused damage

By Dr. Jean Claude Bystryn
Associated Press

Here comes the sun. Watch out.

Spring and summer sun is always welcome after a long, dreary winter, but pleasure at seeing sunlight has to be tempered by warnings about the damage it can do and reminders of the protective measures to be taken.

The damage comes from the ultraviolet radiation in sunlight. Some exposure to UV light is needed for the body to produce vitamin D. Too much can cause sunburn, premature wrinkling, or in the worst case, the deadly skin cancer called melanoma.

There are two types of ultraviolet radiation, both of which can cause damage. UVA light penetrates deep into the skin, leading to premature aging, sunburn and skin cancer. UVA reaches the Earth's surface at a constant level all year-round. The other type, UVB, is stronger than UVA and more intense in the summer.

Protective measures start with avoiding exposure when sunlight is most intense, in the middle hours of the day.

Clothing — a hat and shirt — is next. But the ordinary cotton fabric of a T-shirt isn't an effective UV blocker. Now there are special fabrics designed to block sunlight.

Applying a sunscreen to the skin is also effective. All sunscreens are labeled by their sun protection factor (SPF), the amount of sunlight they block. The higher the number, the more effective the blockage.

A sunscreen with an SPF of at least 15 is recommended for a sunny day. It should be applied at least 20 minutes before going outdoors, and reapplied every few hours, or after vigorous exercise or swimming.

It's especially important to protect children. Most people get their greatest exposure to sunlight during childhood.

Melanoma can show up years later. It usually appears as a pigmented mole. The telltale signs of melanoma are an irregular border and irregular coloring of the mole, and a diameter larger than the eraser of a pencil.

Bleeding is a major warning signal that medical attention should be sought. A mole that changes in size and color, is suspicious and should be seen by a physician. Early detection and removal are essential for cure of malignant melanoma.

Other diseases can be aggravated by exposure to sunlight. They include lupus erythematosus and porphyria.

A reaction to sunlight can also be provoked by certain drugs such as tetracycline and some soaps that contain antibiotics.

So welcome the sun — but guard against it.

Nostalgia at the beach turns up bikinis, trend-setting swim dresses

By Anne-Marie Schiro
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The bikini is back. And so is the swim dress, which used to be the choice of the middle-aged but now comes in perky youthful styles.

No less a trend-setter than Calvin Klein has his label on bikinis and swim dresses. Saks Fifth Avenue has his polka-dot string bikini in yellow or orange ($69), azure-blue string piped in green ($75) and polka-dot swim dress in yellow, orange or green ($119). Bergdorf Goodman has his grayish blue-and-white checked string ($85) and a hip-slung bikini in khaki by Eres ($240).

Among Lord & Taylor's bikini selection are a black-piped red bikini ($58) and a ribbed black style ($54), both by Baja Blue, and a floral pique teeny bikini by Jantzen ($48). Swim dresses include black tanks by Anne Klein, one with a sheer middle inset ($60) and one with a sheer skirt ($64); Calvin Klein's drop-waist dress in black ($74), and Adrienne Vittadini's mini-checked black and white empire ($80).

The Warriners have lived in Texon, Benedum, Abilene, Odessa and Midland. Warriner retired from Phillips Oil Co. in 1985. His wife is a homemaker. They are members of Calvery Baptist Church.

Associated Press

SEBRING, Fla. — Rex Beach (1877-1949), American author of adventure stories, left his law studies to join the Alaskan gold rush in 1900. Failing to find gold, he turned to writing.

He wrote more than 30 novels of adventure, many on Alaskan themes, including "The Spoilers," (1906). His other works included "The Barrier," (1907) "The Silver Horde," (1909) and "Jungle Gold." (1935).

Beach was also a pioneer of motion-picture scriptwriting, renting his novels rather than selling them.

This method of business paid the adventure author quit handsomely when "The Spoilers" was filmed four times and "The Barrier" was filmed three times. Beach died in Sebring, Fla., Dec. 7, 1949.

LIFESTYLE POLICIES

Information for Sunday pages must be in the Lifestyle Department office by 5 p.m. the preceding Monday.

For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within six weeks of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within six weeks of the anniversary date or celebration.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographs will be published only of winners, not runners-up or contestants. These announcements will be published on a space available basis.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office.

All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and with anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required.

A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits.

Color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted.

The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and articles.

Dad's role in family is finally valued more

By Richard Deuriarte
N.Y. Times News Service

Divorced dads, along with smokers, are among America's last unprotected minority groups. You can say practically anything about them without fear of contradiction or repercussion. In word-association games, "deadbeat" has largely replaced "dear old" as the most commonly used description.

Until recently.

A "convergence of forces" — scientific, economic and political — has reshaped conventional wisdom, living arrangements, even media stereotypes.

■ Pundits, even liberals, are acknowledging Dan Quayle was at least half-right in his "Murphy Brown" critique of Hollywood four years ago.

■ A New York sociologist recently refuted "the most oftencited statistic in all social science" — that in the first year after divorce, a woman's standard of living drops 73 percent while the man's household rose 42 percent.

Research piles up daily about the bad outcomes which occur in single-parent, father-absent households. A 1987 survey suggested 72 percent of youthful murderers grow up without fathers.

Even Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio, a man who prefers the punchy sound bite to careful nuance, announced recently that his office would pursue "deadbeat parents," a not-so-small nod to divorced fathers who had challenged him earlier.

"There is a sea change happening, in attitudes and philosophy," acknowledged Dr. Sanford Braver, a psychology professor at Arizona State University. "It is clear that we (society) have made errors in assuming that fathers are dispensable."

Braver ought to know. He has made divorced families the focus of his research for 15 years. His national standing in the field positions him well to detect changes in academic, legal and political circles. "It has become clear beyond argument that children have suffered when they don't have fathers around. A mountain of evidence has led to a substantial shift in the ways fathers are viewed."

In various research and service programs here in Maricopa County, Braver himself has compiled no small amount of that evidence.

Braver contends much of the father-bashing statistics are either out-of-date or flawed to begin with. Braver bristles, for example, over the popular notion that only "one in six" non-custodial fathers have weekly contact with their children.

"In our more recent data, three years after the divorce, of those divorced fathers in Maricopa County who live in the same town, five of six fathers retain that close weekly contact," Braver said in an interview. "That's a five-times difference."

And even those fathers who "abandoned" their children were often misunderstood. It's not that they didn't care, Braver said. "Sometimes, they cared too much. Abandonment was a way of grieving, of coping with the loss of a family."

The new appreciation of a father's role has manifested itself in several forms.

Elsewhere, the Religious Right is pushing legislation in several states to do away with no-fault divorce, making divorce more difficult and expensive.

Braver credits the Clinton administration with a dramatic shift in national child-support policies within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The agency is moving away from one-dimensional, punitive and "punching-bag" attitudes towards divorced fathers, he said.

In a promising scientific and service approach, Braver and William Griffin, an ASU professor of family services, have received a $3 million, five-year grant from the National Institute of Mental Health. They have developed a "Dads for Life" educational program to help divorced dads remain engaged with their children, manage the conflict with their spouses and play a positive role in their children's lives.

"They can still be dads," Griffin insisted. "They have the power to exert a positive influence on their kids."

Father's Day 1996, then, arrived last Sunday with a welcome recognition and sympathy for the struggles that many divorced dads, most of them, in fact, undergo to act responsibly and maintain their place. And, as a byproduct, lead happier, more satisfied lives after divorce.

It's been a long time coming.

Longhouses and Pizza Huts: In search of exotic Borneo

By Denis D. Gray
Associated Press

KUCHING, Malaysia — Loincloths and longhouses, wild headhunters and White Rajahs, steamy jungles unconquerable by man.

Those exotic images evoked by the Malaysian state of Sarawak on Borneo's northwestern coast suffer a prompt bruising on arrival at the gateway — the mushrooming capital of Kuching.

Kuching's lifestyle is increasingly defined not by the tropical languor of the riverfront, its timeworn Chinese alleys and Malay mosques, but rush-hour traffic jams, McDonald's and Pizza Hut and high rises.

Visitors can still be transported into the 19th century by simply glancing across the Sarawak River to The Istana, a palace built by the White Rajahs — three generations of adventurous Britons who ruled Sarawak as their private preserve for 105 years, until 1946.

But eyes need not stray far from the lush northern river bank to view what the profits from Sarawak's oil and very much conquerable forests have wrought: megaroom hotels, shopping malls, a soaring office tower with neo-Roman flourishes.

AP Laserphoto

A Penan woman sits on the porch of her hut and smokes a cigarette at sunset in the village of Long Galoh in Sarawak, northwestern Borneo March 17. The future appears uncertain for the Penan, as logging companies encroach on the tribal living and hunting grounds and modernity usurps their cultural heritage.

ONE OF THE few places you'll find Borneo as Eden is in the Sarawak Museum, a rather sad place because much of the rich ethnic and natural diversity so wonderfully exhibited has vanished.

The colorful wear of the Ibans, woven from wild cotton, and the Melanaus' sago-leaf hats have been largely replaced by jeans and baseball caps. Backpacks rather than the elaborate baskets of the Bidayuh are now the carriers of choice.

Also on display are human skulls, once taken by Kelabit warriors as victory trophies. This is one custom few regret has passed into history.

Francis Jalong, of the Kenyah ethnic group, lives in the small Baram River trading town of Marudi, working with Friends of the Earth to try to regulate logging and protect native land rights in northeastern Sarawak.

He understands why the tribal longhouses — the shared communal space that binds neighbors and generations — have been largely emptied of young people. There are few jobs, so they leave for the oil boom town of Miri, Kuching or abroad.

"Our culture is slowly dying. Luckily we can still see some of it because of the old generation," he says. "But the young can no longer sing the old songs or dance the old dances."

For some tourists, the search for a traditional longhouse becomes a veritable obsession. And one rarely satisfied, even if they travel into the upper reaches of the great rivers — Rejang, Belaga, Skrang, Baram.

Expecting tribal dances and open fires, visitors find satellite dishes, modern kitchen appliances and receptions not unlike those of a hotel if they ask to spend the night.

FEW OUTSIDERS get to Long Win, a small settlement of Penans, who not long ago roamed the forests in loincloths and hunted with blowpipes.

After 340 miles of travel from Kuching by plane, boat and four-wheel drive, two journalists were welcomed with wild boar soup and sleeping mats next to the chief's family.

Dinner over, the Penans gathered in a large, bare room perched on stilts. Elders smoked and talked, children tumbled around the floor, a mother suckled her baby, teen-agers flirted.

The chief's wife, bearer of 10 children and missing many teeth, sensuously swayed her hips and arms to music from a cassette player. It was a slow, sad dance of the forest people, and the Borneo of legend came alive.

Then the teens took to the floor to a very different beat — a pounding American rock song that almost drowned out the patter of rain and chatter of jungle insects. Dressed in orange pants, one of the chief's daughters could have held her own with any urban disco queen.

"Oh, oh, we're in trouble, somebody's along come and burst our bubble," sang the American rock group Shampoo.

Getting there, sleeping and eating in Sarawak

Associated Press

Some costs in visiting Sarawak:

GETTING THERE: Round-trip flight from Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia's capital, to Kuching, $210.

HOTEL: Single room at luxury hotels in Kuching, $100-150 a night. Small hotels upcountry, $25 a night. Longhouses frequented by tourists expect presents or small fee for overnight stays.

FOOD: Meal without drinks at top Kuching restaurant, $30 or more per person. Outdoor foodstalls or smaller restaurants in Sarawak are cheap — great noodles for little more than $1.

The gilded cupolas of Kuching Mosque Shire March 12 in Kuching, Malaysia. The mosque, previously known as the state Mosque, was built in 1968, and its cupolas make it one of the city's most striking landmarks. The mushrooming capital of Kuching, at the gateway of Sarawak and Borneo, is increasingly defined not by tropical languor, but by rush-hour traffic jams and a growing crop of high-rises.

Three Spanish inns offer cooking lessons

N.Y. Times News Service

Three of Spain's government-run hotels, or paradors — noted for their regional cuisine — have begun offering a week of cooking classes that combine culinary instruction with sightseeing excursions into the countryside.

The cooking school program, which is available through November, is being offered at the paradors of Cordoba, Javea and Oropesa. The parador of Oropesa, a 14th-century castle outside Toledo, highlights Castilian cuisine.

The modern parador of Javea along the Costa Blanca on the Mediterranean emphasizes the preparation of fish and seafood. The parador of Cordoba, at the site of the ruins of an eighth-century palace of Moorish rulers, features Arabic and Andalusian flavors.

"The Cuisine of Spain in Paradores" is conducted in the mornings by the parador's chefs, with simultaneous English translation. Results of the classes are consumed at lunch, followed by afternoon sightseeing. Dinners are often at other paradors nearby. The program costs $2,700 a person based on double occupancy and includes three meals a day, cooking classes and sightseeing excursions.

For more information, call Marketing Ahead, the United States organization that handles reservations for Spain's paradors: (800) 223-1356.

Midlander wins district title for first time since 1982

Staff Reports

Kasey Wolters competed with 12 contestants from around the district to earn the title of Lions District 2-A1 Queen during the District Convention in San Angelo. She is the first Midlander to win the district title since 1982 when Celest Elig, who was sponsored by the Midland Morning Lions Club, won.

Miss Wolters, daughter of Tim and Karen Wolters, has many hours of volunteer work in the community and for the Lions Clubs. She has been a teacher's aid, volunteered at Casa de Amigos and Trinity Towers, and participated in many Lions Club fund-raising projects. She was named "Student of the Year" and "Summer Lions Ambassador" by the Midland Morning Lions Club, and was elected Queen for the Downtown Lions Club.

In addition to being selected February's Outstanding Senior Girl from Lee High School by the Graduate Women of Midland and being named the Downtown Lions Junior Lioness of the Week, Miss Wolters was also named Newcomer of the Year in Volleyball and All-District First Team. She took part in the dedication of the Texas Lions Eyeglasses Recycling Center, attended several Lions Clubs' functions and served pancakes at the annual Pancake Jamboree.

Miss Wolters, a recent graduate of LHS, was active in National Honor Society, PALS, Senior Girls, Texas Association of Future Educators and Peer Assistance Leadership, and is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students. She participated in the U.S. Volleyball Association's Junior Olympic Volleyball and was a member of the LHS varsity volleyball team, where she was the team captain and voted the most valuable player and All Around Rebel for volleyball. She was named a Texas Scholar, All-American Scholar and earned the National History and Government Award.

She plans to attend the University of Texas of the Permian Basin to major in health science (premed).

Following the parade a short patriotic program and awards ceremony will be presented in Centennial Plaza. For more information call 682-3376...

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Early heat creates stress in tomato plants

By Deborah Benge Frost

Are there no tomatoes on your tomato vines? You've fertilized, watered, sprayed, coaxed and still can not find any delicious red slices? Don't feel like the Lone Ranger ... nobody else has tomatoes either. A brief spring that turned hot in a hurry followed by more high temperatures has put tomato fruit at an all time low.

Benge Frost

Tomatoes are the most popular vegetable grown by home gardeners. I know people who don't even like tomatoes, who like to grow them. This drive to grow tomatoes isn't because they're so easy ... because they aren't. They've got worms, stink bugs, viruses, fungi, birds, fruit cracks, blossom end rot, and this year, no fruit.

Growing tomatoes in West Texas has always a little touchy. If you don't plant during a critical time frame, it is too hot by the time the plant is big enough to flower and set fruit. This is why the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and gardening experts stress setting out transplants as soon as late freezes are over. This usually occurs about April 1, and no later than April 15th. In normal years, this will give plants time to establish, grow, bloom and set fruit while spring and early summer weather permits. In other words, before it becomes too hot.

When day time temperatures get above 90 degrees and nighttime temperatures stay above 70 degrees, fruit set drops off to almost nothing. Small fruited tomato varieties like cherry types, Porters and other small tomato varieties will still set fruit, but medium and large probably will not. Tomatoes that do set on the medium and large varieties aren't very good quality.

This year, the last week in April, almost all of May and much of June has had temperatures well over 100 degrees with warm nights. These conditions came shortly after most of us got our tomatoes set out, so fruit set has been very meager.

In some cases, gardeners are getting tomatoes, but they have a dark brown, sunken leathery spot on the bottom of the fruit. This is a common problem we see during stressful weather, but it also can be aggravated by growing practices.

The disorder is called blossom end rot and it is caused by water stress. Water stress can be caused by not enough water, too much water, or, surprisingly, a fluctuation of soil moisture levels from dry to too wet and back again. Eliminate this problem by mulching your tomatoes with no less than 4 inches of organic mulch. Hay, cottonseed hulls, grass clippings, wood chips or other suitable mulch will do. Water so that the soil moisture levels are maintained at a moist level. You'll need to check the soil with your hand to see when you need to water. Watering everyday won't do and watering once a week probably won't do either. Every garden soil is different with different conditions that will have a bearing on how fast the soil dries out.

So, in light of this fruitless condition, what's a gardener to do? Keep your vines as healthy and pest-free as possible with good cultural practices. If you are able to keep your vines healthy until temperatures moderate, you can still have good harvests.

Find out how to keep those vines healthy and in good shape by making plans to attend Totally Tomatoes, Part II, 7 p.m. June 24 and 25 at the Confederate Air Force Museum, Air Terminal. This program will deal with summer care of tomatoes, pest management, watering, fertilizing, mulching, harvest and storage. Extension agent and Master Gardeners will give you step by step details and handouts. Extensions Home Economist from Midland and Ector County will provide some quick, sassy salsas and main dish recipes, tips, pointers and suggestions on how to use fresh and preserved tomatoes. There will be lots of recipes to help you with all the tomatoes you will have when the weather cools.

Preregister at the Ector or Midland County Extension Service offices. For more information, call (915) 335-3071 or 687-1351.

Deborah Benge Frost is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector Counties.

Tour of Xeriscape Garden planned

Deborah Benge Frost

Tired of battling the extreme heat, high winds and no rainfall that nature has dished out? Are you contemplating a landscape of concrete and astroturf. If the battle to have a lovely, shady, colorful garden and landscape has dampened your spirits, try Xeriscape landscapes. They are beautiful, functional and have lower water, pest and maintenance demands.

There will be a tour of the Memorial Xeriscape Garden 6 p.m. June 25 at the Confederate Air Force Museum. You'll see for yourself the principles of Xeriscape; good design, soil improvement, mulches, efficient irrigation, adapted plants, reduced turf and less maintenance. The timely tour will give you an idea of alternative ways to garden, but we are not talking about cacti and gravel. These gardens have color, form and design. There is no registration fees or preregistration necessary.

1995-96 Teacher of the Year
Emerson Elementary

Peggy Hailes

Peggy Hailes values the importance of family involvement in education. She credits her parents with instilling a love for learning in her. "I have wonderful parents who took the time to talk to me, read to me, answer my questions and whet my appetite for knowing more." During her 24 years of teaching, of which the last five have been at Emerson Elementary, she has never stopped "being a learner." According to her, "that's a must to good teaching." Hailes received her bachelor's of science from the University of North Texas, and her master's degree from Sul Ross. She challenges herself to stay current of new teaching strategies and programs, and has spent her summers in programs such as the New Jersey Writing Project, Math My Way, and Writing Literature Units. She serves on district committees for charting writing/social studies curriculums, selecting textbooks, interview teams, as well as CEIC, IMPACT, TCTA, and National Councils of Teachers of English and Mathematics. According to Emerson Principal Mary Smith, "Peggy has never stopped striving for knowledge and strategies that will impart to her students the ability to progress socially and academically."

GED changes announced

Changes to the General Education Degree (GED) have been announced by the Texas Education Agency, governing body for the GED. Effective Jan. 1, 1997, the passing average will increase from 40 to 45 and the lowest score accepted on any section will be 40. Also, the Midland College test center will allow six months from the starting date for test participants to complete the GED.

Students who do not complete their testing by Jan. 1, 1997 will fall under the new scoring system regardless of when their testing began.

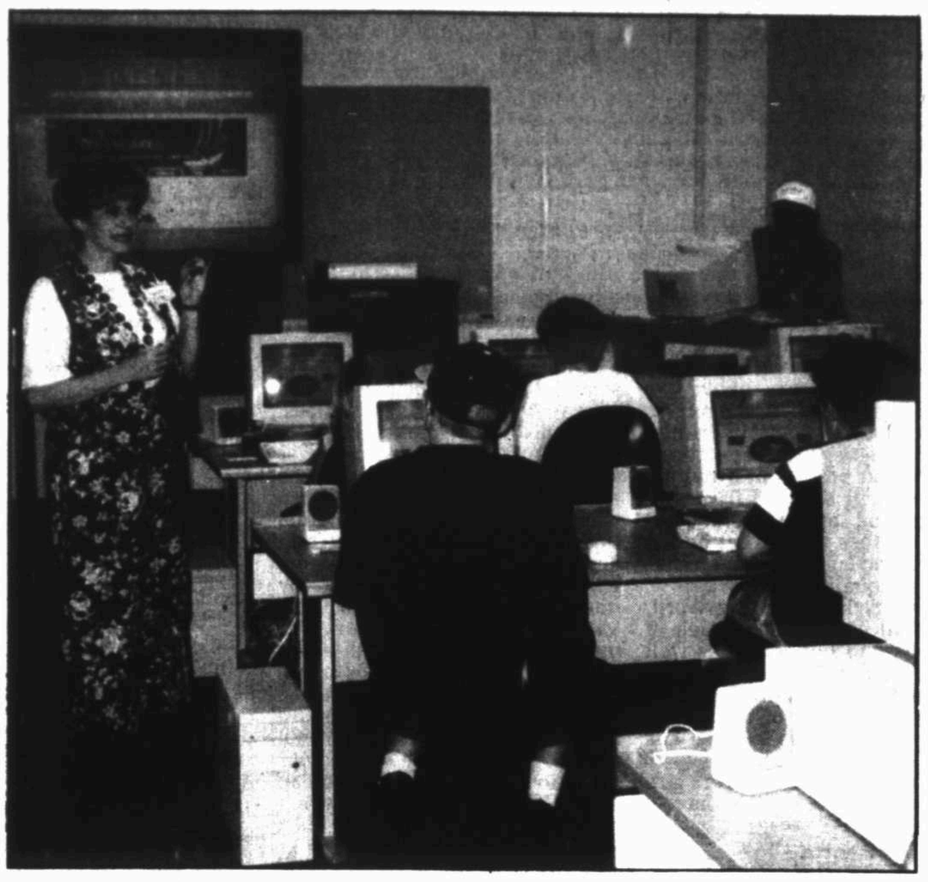
Continuing Education Computer Classes



Web novices explore the Net

Continuing Education Instructor Charlotte Cooke 'surfs the Net' with 17 adults in the morning and three classes of Kids' College students (left) in the afternoon. Cooke and fellow instructor Alfred Cooke each teach more than 40 continuing education computer classes—from basic word processing to Quicken and spreadsheet. Staying current with technology is a challenge, Cooke said. For instance, some information in the manual she and Johnson prepared for the Internet class only a week ago has already changed. Internet classes will be offered at the college on a regular basis.

Continuing Education instructors help computer users stay current

Charlotte Cooke begins class by apologizing for her casual attire. "I'm sorry, but after yesterday my feet hurt, and today I just had to wear tennis shoes," she told the class.

But, the 17 Midland College employees in Cooke's Internet class are too busy clicking and scrolling on their computer screens to pay any attention to her feet.

In less than four hours, Cooke and fellow instructor Alfred Johnson have taken a class of Internet novices from tentative typing to a group of avid "net surfers."

It is easy to see why Cooke's feet might hurt at the end of the day. She frequently abandons her own computer workstation with its big screen display to move through the classroom helping people who are stuck somewhere between Netscape and Yahoo.

But, the instructors' day is not over when this four-hour class session ends at noon. Cooke spends the afternoon teaching three sections of Internet to students in Kids' College, Midland College's summer program for elementary school students. And, Johnson teaches business management classes.

Cooke and Johnson estimate that they each teach more than 40 continuing education classes—including word processing, spread sheet and Quicken—each year. They also conduct business seminars, planning classes that are individually tailored to meet the needs of local businesses.

This ability to teach computers to a variety of different students is a direct result of Cooke's own philosophy and the college's.

"I am amazed at how hard the continuing education department strives to meet the needs of the community and how quickly they change or create courses to meet those needs," Cooke said.

One of Cooke's favorite courses is "Computers for Grandparents," offered on a regular basis through the continuing education program. "I love this class, and I have great respect for the people who take this class for trying to stay current with computer technology," Cooke said.

> "People who grew up when computers were not around have discovered they have to learn new skills . . . the classes are geared toward people who are saying 'my job would be easier . . . more productive if I knew more about computers.'"
> —Alfred Johnson
> Continuing Education computer instructor

In fact, staying current with technology is the driving force behind the continuing education computer classes, which have grown in less than five years from two instructors and two classes to three fully equipped labs and more than 80 classes.

Helping community members upgrade computer skills makes the continuing education department at the college a "vital program," Johnson said.

"People who grew up when computers were not around have discovered they have to learn new skills," he said, adding classes are geared toward people who are saying "my job would be easier . . . more productive if I knew more about computers."

Cooke and Johnson both have their own business consulting firms, and they both bring to their work at the college an understanding that keeping up with computer hardware and software changes is vital to business.

"Midland College reflects the professionalism that I try to bring to my consulting business," Cooke said.

By working through the continuing education department, Cooke said she gets to share her expertise with people she would never meet in her consulting business.

"Midland College provides a great community service at a great price," Cooke said. "And, the college has the computer facilities to do the job right."

Through the college, Cooke and Johnson have both finished projects with local companies to provide for training needs.

"These classes are unique to each company from the handouts and other materials to the length of the class," Cooke said.

"We do whatever it takes to make the class an enjoyable and successful experience—and the students usually want more."

ELISE COOMBES

Beauty of MC campus invites community use

Midland College is known for its academic and technical programs, and for its outstanding golf and basketball teams, but one of MC's most valuable assets is its campus.

From Garfield street, motorists get a good view of the outer circle, the Hodge Carillon Tower and the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center, but many Midlanders may not realize that the campus is used much as a city park is used.

As early as 4 a.m. and as late as midnight, the circle is used by walkers, runners, rollerbladers, bicyclers and people walking their dogs.

Many shaded areas provide quiet places for picnics.

A grounds maintenance crew of seven full-time employees mow, water, weed, trim, hoe, rake and shape the grounds. Bruce Orrick, grounds supervisor, said they maintain between 80 and 90 acres.

One of the most interesting areas is Beal Plaza. "We have a very large mesquite tree which wants to grow laterally rather than vertically. We have to stay on top of trimming and shaping it."

Beal Plaza is also home to several sweet gum trees which shed round, porcupine-type pods. The plaza also had wooden benches built around two, large gardens.

At the north end of the plaza sits the Marion Blakemore Memorial Fountain which overlooks the Court of Honor where memorial bricks are inlaid.

"We also have between 400 and 500 rose bushes spread among several gardens," Orrick said.

Live and red oaks also grace the campus, as well as several fruit-bearing pecan trees.

"Area residents watch the pecan trees and pick up pecans when they've ripened," Orrick said.

Orrick, a 15-year MC employee, said that through the years many contributors have designated money for landscaping. Some even donated the plants and helped plant them, he said.

"The buildings are spread out. Our campus is similar to many four-year campuses in its layout and landscaping," Orrick said.

"Our grounds maintenance crew tries to do the best we can do. We have a lot of ground to cover," he said.

Many residents enjoy watching the antics of the campus ground squirrels. Orrick said he recently saw a fox on campus. "At one time there were four or five foxes with dens in the ditch near Chaparral Center but most of them have disappeared," he said.

DEAR ABBY

Forgetful minister raises spirits, not the dead

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was intrigued when I saw the letters in your column about forgetting people's names and trying to bluff. They reminded me of an incident that happened to my father, who is a 79-year-old Baptist minister.

Van Buren

Dad worked many jobs over the years. He had a "paying job" to raise us kids, and on the side he preached. He met people all over the Southwest, and they remembered him because he was educated, articulate, poetic, literate, compassionate, forgiving and loving. (He still is, and he still preaches that God is a loving, compassionate and forgiving entity.)

Dad can remember the faces of most of the people he has met, but not their names or the context in which he met them. One Sunday he returned to a church where he had served as an interim pastor. A lady walked up to him after the service and said with tears in her eyes, "Brother Clark, I can't tell you how moved I am to see you again. I haven't seen you in 10 years."

She chatted on about how happy she was to see him, and Dad tried vainly to remember her name. When she mentioned how much her husband had always thought of "Brother Clark," Dad put out a feeler based on that continued theme. "And just how IS your husband?"

"Still dead," was the much colder reply. It turned out that the last time the lady had seen Dad was when he had preached at her husband's funeral!

Dad not only raises people's spirits when they are grieving, he also raises the most beautiful flowers in Clinton, Miss. (just outside of Jackson). My mother is deceased now, but one of my favorite stories about my parents concerns a woman who stopped quite often to admire the gorgeous landscaping. One day the lady turned to my mom and asked, "How much do you pay your yardman?"

"Nothing," Mom replied. "But I have to sleep with him." — KAREN CLARK, FORT WORTH, TEXAS

DEAR KAREN: Your letter is a day-brightener. You are fortunate to have been raised in a loving home in which laughter was not a stranger. That reminds me of a quotation I treasure from Wilferd Peterson: "Laughter is the best medicine for a long and happy life. He who laughs — lasts."

DEAR ABBY: Mothers-in-law are so often given a "bad rap," I just have to tell you about mine.

Recently my marriage was faltering. My husband, "Jack," is a complex man whom I had always had great difficulty understanding. I felt I had tried just about everything, and was one step away from filing for divorce.

Out of desperation, I called my mother-in-law (I'll call her "Adele"). She listened as I poured out the story. She did not judge, criticize or condemn either one of us. She supported her son and me equally. Adele provided some keen insights into Jack that I didn't have. In a kind and gentle way, she also helped me to see where I needed to improve.

I learned a lot about my husband and also about myself from Adele's wisdom, and I'm putting what I learned into practice. Jack and I are staying married, and our marriage is growing stronger.

I thank God for my mother-in-law every night, and I pray that when my children are grown and have spouses of their own, I will be to them the same wise and loving mother-in-law that Adele is to me. — MICHELLE IN GEORGIA

DEAR MICHELLE: What a beautiful tribute to your mother-in-law. As your letter so accurately illustrates, there are times when it takes more than two to make a marriage flourish. Thank you for sharing that valuable lesson. Adele sounds like a jewel.

DEAR ABBY: Unless you are willing to state unequivocally that the books and magazines you read and the movies you saw in your youth did not affect the way you conducted yourself, then your statement, "It's unrealistic to hold the media responsible for your daughter's morality ..." is unrealistic.

When I was a teen-ager, the movies and what I read had some influence on my behavior toward others. Today we see raw sex on TV as early as 7 p.m., and magazines on supermarket shelves devoted almost entirely to sex. I have seen sexual innuendoes on many TV shows to such a degree that it destroys their humor. I have heard more foul language in one Eddie Murphy movie than I heard in my several years in the Navy — ashore and at sea.

You cannot tell me that the language of the movies is not absorbed by teen-agers, resulting in unbelievable rudeness. And the sex scenes ARE going to reduce their inhibitions.

There is no way that "Concerned in Chicago's" daughter can avoid seeing or reading all of this. When our children said, "But everyone else is ..." we could say, "YOU are not going to ..." with neutral or positive influence by the media. Now the movies and the printed word tell them that such conduct is all right. — ALEX R. THOMAS, SAN ANTONIO

DEAR MR. THOMAS: It is the job of parents to supervise the exposure their impressionable children have to "the media" and to provide moral standards for them. Although the idea seems tempting, I am opposed to censorship. The family should provide the "filter" through which their children view society.

DEAR ABBY: Whatever you say, I promised my sister I'd do.

My boyfriend, "Chuck," has been married three times and has children from all three marriages. Chuck told me he had married young the first time and just made "bad" choices the other two times.

Before I get in any deeper with Chuck, my sister suggested I call his ex-wives and get their side of the story. She also heard that he'd been engaged before. My sister says Chuck is bad news. I believe he is just the romantic type who jumped into these marriages after whirlwind romances with what turned out to be crazy women. What do you think? — BEING CAREFUL

DEAR BEING CAREFUL: Listen to your sister and chuck Chuck. Her advice is right on target.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I have been dating for almost a year; however, we are not officially engaged yet.

Some of our friends have gotten married; and we attended those weddings together, as we were both invited.

This summer, his family will be invited to many weddings. I have met many of his family's friends, but if they do not include my name on the invitation, is it proper for my boyfriend to call the bride and ask her if I may attend? — MAY NOT BE INVITED

DEAR MAY NOT: No, it is not proper. If there is no "and Guest" on the invitation, it would be extremely presumptuous for your boyfriend to telephone the bride and ask if you may attend.

Chronic pain with increasing severity should be checked by a physician

Associated Press

ROSEMONT, Ill — Ignore pain, and you may make matters worse, warns the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons.

"All too often, by the time a patient decides pain is no longer bearable, minor injuries have blossomed into major problems," the organization says in its Orthopedic Perspectives newsletter. "For example, neglect of a painful shoulder due to bursitis or tendinitis or a fall on an outstretched hand can quite easily lead to a serious rotator cuff condition."

Injuries to muscles, tendons, ligaments, bones, joints and nerves that have been neglected often take longer to recover once treatment begins, and chances of recovering full function of the injured part are not always as good, AAOS says.

Any pain that does not diminish or returns chronically with increasing severity needs to be checked out by a physician, the group says.

Grass isn't always greener, say adults who've been there

By Bill Hendrick
N.Y. Times News Service

George Marlow took his first toke on a marijuana cigarette in 1968, only months before leaving the United States to tote an M-16 in Vietnam. And though the weed didn't affect his future, he's worried it could "mess up the minds" of his three kids.

So Marlow, a 47-year-old entrepreneur and pillar of his church and community in Lawrenceville, Ga., asks them to stay away from grass and not to do what he did.

But millions of other baby boomers apparently don't find it as easy to tell the truth. And while studies show that marijuana use is growing among middle school and high school students, surveys also indicate that boomers with teens don't want to believe their kids are getting stoned.

Marlow hopes his message may get through to his kids better than warnings from his parents in the '60s, when there were no studies linking marijuana smoking with lung cancer, poor school performance, or a greater tendency to drop out of high school.

Experts say how to advise kids about drugs is a unique dilemma for boomers — 80.5 million of whom, born from 1946 to 1964, have 29.8 million children between ages 13 and 20.

Leigh Leventhal of the Partnership for a Drug Free America said, "the vast majority of boomer parents don't want their kids using it, and many feel hypocritical," but shouldn't because "part of adulthood is wisdom you glean from growing up."

The Partnership says children have a way of knowing when their parents are being honest, that parents should admit use and say "I made a mistake."

The Partnership's 1996 study found that even drug-savvy boomers underestimate the threat of drug use among their children and that the nation is losing ground in the drug war.

The group's survey of 10,000 teens found that more believe drugs can aid in relaxation than did teens a few years ago, and that smoking pot is "no big deal."

The Partnership said teens are getting "fewer discouraging messages about drugs" than teens in the '80s, who were exposed to a barrage of warnings about the dangers of drug use. Also, teens today report pot being glamorized in movies, music and the media.

Dr. Richard S. Winer, a Roswell psychiatrist, said, "it's amazing the looks you get" from kids and their parents who aren't aware that drug use is increasing, and how dangerous it is.

Marlow, who smoked pot often as a combat soldier in 1969- '70, tells his children, ages 20, 17 and 12, that it can hamper their learning skills.

"A lot of adults our age deny it . . . but the truth is, most of us did it," he said. "In Vietnam, it took your mind off the ever-present thought of dying. You didn't do it in combat. I don't know if marijuana helped me get through it, but it's not something I need now. And I want my kids away from it. This is a competitive world, and they need to be 100 percent."

Honesty is best policy for parents, experts say

By Bill Hendrick
N.Y. Times News Service

So, how do you get your kids not to do what you did?

Experts say the answer's easy: "Be honest," says Dr. Richard Winer, a Roswell, Ga., psychiatrist. "The worst thing is for the kids to find out later on that mom or dad didn't tell them the truth."

Dr. Elizabeth Wallace, a professor of psychiatry and behavioral sciences in Atlanta's Emory University School of Medicine, says "parents should be honest about previous use of all substances and answer all questions straightforwardly. In teens and preteens, honesty is appropriate. Indicate whether you would do it again, and give them a rational explanation of what you went through in life. In early childhood, parents should use more discretion."

Leigh Leventhal of the New York-based Partnership for a Drug Free America, says it's important to be blunt, to stress that 80 percent of cocaine users started out by using grass, and that the psychoactive ingredient in marijuana known as THC is so much stronger now.

"You should say, 'I did something that was bad, but I love you too much for you to do that,' " she says. "Say, 'I want you to enjoy life's gifts.' It may sound corny, but the truth is, kids listen to their parents. What you tell them will ring in their ears for years."

Leventhal pointed out that a new study published this year in the Journal of the American Medical Association found that marijuana use impairs cognition and brain function — facts unknown 30 years ago.

"But you should also tell them that marijuana is two to five times stronger today than in the '60s; that in itself it is a big deal because we know more now," she says. "It impairs learning, thinking, and judgment of speed and time. It can cause anxiety attacks. It can cause cancer."

Bill Hendrick writes for The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

Surveys reveal teens have little knowledge of drugs' effects

N.Y. Times News Service

Two new surveys by the National Institute on Drug Abuse and the Partnership for a Drug Free America found that:

- 42 percent of high school seniors said they had smoked marijuana — a 38 percent increase in the past three years; 34 percent of 10th-graders and 20 percent of eighth-graders smoked pot — doubling in the past three years.
- The average age for first-time marijuana users is 13.5 years.
- Though teen use has risen, the number of those who think smoking marijuana is harmful has dropped 22 percent.
- 60 percent of 900 parents surveyed acknowledged using marijuana at some point in their past, but 75 percent didn't want their kids to smoke pot and only 14 percent conceded that their children had used it.
- 95 percent of parents with teens said they had talked to their children about drugs, but only 77 percent of teens said their parents had talked to them.
- Most kids today aren't aware that scientific studies have linked marijuana smoking with lung cancer, poor school performance and a greater tendency to drop out of high school.

AT WIT'S END

Only children can make it happen

EDITOR'S NOTE: Erma Bombeck died April 22. As a farewell tribute to this well-loved columnist, the Reporter-Telegram will publish some of her classic columns for several weeks. This was Erma Bombeck's first column for a daily, metropolitan newspaper. It was published in the Journal Herald in Dayton on Jan. 5, 1965. (Journal Herald, owned by Cox, was then Dayton's morning newspaper.)

By Erma Bombeck

It's time we quit kidding ourselves. The only group that can alleviate the national coin shortage is children.

Bombeck

I don't know what the appeal will be to get them to lighten their loafers, empty their socks and unfatten their little ceramic pigs, but it had best be soon.

It has been an insidiously slow process, but our national economy now rests with a group of plotting little bandits who have amassed a fortune in coins for emptying garbage, cutting grass, minding babies, scraping plates, bringing in milk, clearing snow-laden driveways, redeeming baby teeth and racking up A's on their report cards.

A large boost to their independent solvency has been the Friday night allowance. How much can this amount to, you ask? I thought you'd never ask.

We doled out 15 cents a week until we awarded the "Chintzy Employer of the Month" award in our block. A grievance committee informed us our children could make more in a Chinese rice paddy. They pointed out we subscribed to three newspapers, had two cars in the driveway, and an outside TV antennae, yet underpaid our children. Before we started receiving CARE packages from some European family, we thought it best to grant an increase. The kids now rake in a quarter a week.

But the flow of currency does not stop there. Ages 4-9 are retirement years for most youngsters. They live solely off their loose teeth. They spit these out like popcorn as the financial urgency hits them and before you can whisper in the darkness, "Mother have you got change for the tooth fairy for a half dollar?" a little hand in the darkness reaches out, snatches the coin, whisks it under the pillow and snores a little to keep you from feeling like a complete fool.

The mound of coins continues to grow as the little Kool Aid tycoons and garbage financiers continue to amaze and to amass. Any adult can only marvel at their grasp of finances.

"Mother, you are not cognizant of the fact you are four-weeks arrears in your allowance to me. Computed in simple compound interest over a four-week period, you have forced me to miss the current fiscal dividend from my bank, costing me an additional . . ."

(Oh shut up!) This yet, from a son who has not mastered his 3's timetables.

For those parents foolish enough to float a loan from a child, a word of warning. They are less than discreet in their business dealings. In the middle of a dinner party, they are likely to emerge in pajamas, complete with ledger and query, "Daddy, when are you going to pay me the $40 you borrowed out of my bureau drawer to make the car payment last month?"

The coins continue to roll in from the most unexpected sources. One pitch that has been pretty successful has been the appearance of our youngest at bedtime. He appears pink and scrubbed in his "Jammys" and clutches a little coffee can (keep it simple) and goes to guests and grandparents chanting through adorable gums, "Christmath ith coming . . . the geese are getting fat . . . please put a penny in the old man's hat."

He then jingles his little can, and the guests laugh (but not much) and drop a coin in. He started it last August, had a peak month in December and is still pulling it off.

I could go on forever on how children hoard coins. The problem is who is going to pry them away from them. This is how a child reasons. Paper money is nice. You can make planes out of it, paste it on walls and windows, color it or use it for bookmarks. But a drawer full of coins!! Why, that's better than owning your own bottle of catsup!

PERMIAN BASIN CO2 SUPPLIES

SUNDAY, JUNE 23, 1996 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

The view from a drilling rig floor.

Drilling improves

Drilling continued to improve during the week ended June 14, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

Lea County, N.M. remained the most active with 23 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 18 rigs and Crockett County with eight rigs.

The U.S. rig count fell by a similar eight rigs, to 773 for the week. A year ago the count was 670.

Among major producing states, Louisiana posted the sharpest drop, 15 rigs. Texas and New Mexico recorded the biggest gain, five rigs each.

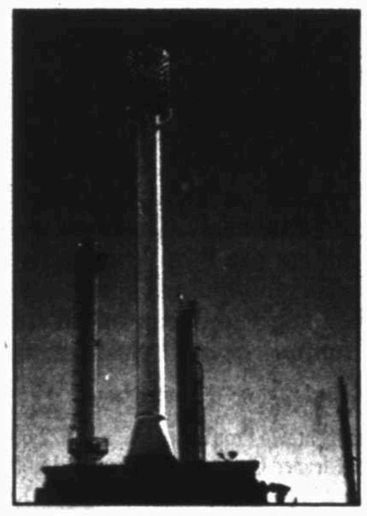
Lease nominations

The Board for Lease of University Lands has issued a call for nominations for the regular oil and gas lease sale No. 90 and Frontier Oil and Gas Lease Sale No. 90-A. Nominations for all available Permanent University Fund Lands, with the exception of lands in El Paso, Hudspeth and Terrell counties may be nominated.

The frontier lease sale will include lands in El Paso, Hudspeth and Terrell counties.

Nominations must be received at the University Lands office in Midland by 5 p.m. on July 30. The lease sale will be November 11.



A local gas flare. Gas prices set a record for June this week as hot weather kept air conditioners humming.

Prices climb

Crude futures soared above the $22 level at the beginning of the week as reports of heightened tensions between Iraq and United Nations inspectors raised the possibility that the sale of Iraqi oil on world markets would be delayed.

The following day, natural gas futures set a record for the month of June, climbing to $2.61 per thousand cubic feet as hot weather kept air conditioners humming and cut into tight energy supplies.

Prices in both commodites quickly retreated, however, as crude oil imports grew and temperatures began to moderate.

Late in the week, July crude futures closed at $20.65 a barrel and natural gas contracts closed at $2.61 per thousand cubic feet.

Pipeline venture

DALLAS — Halliburton Co. announced that COMMISA, a joint venture consisting of Halliburton's Brown & Root subsidiary and Grupo "R", a Mexican contractor, has been awarded a contract by Pemex for laying the first half of an 80 km oil pipeline and to perform a platform tie-in to the Pemex pump platform PR1 in the Bay of Campeche in Mexico. The contract is valued at about $60 million.

COMMISA will handle the tie-in and has contracted with European Marine Contractors (EMC) for laying the 36-inch pipeline.

Permian Basin operators announce large acquisitions

■ Acquisition and divestiture game heated up this past week.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The acquisition and divestiture game in the Permian Basin took a strong turn upward this week with the sale of three primarily Permian Basin producing packages totalling almost $110 million.

Midland-based Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. announced the sale of 2,000 wells to another Midland company, Costilla Petroleum Co., while Collins & Ware purchased 4,700 wells from Amerada-Hess Corp.

The Permian Basin package was one of nine packages put on the block by Amerada-Hess. The total group of properties, spread across the U.S. and offshore, was reported to be valued at over $380 million. The highest priced block of properties was in East Texas; the Permian Basin sale to Collins & Ware was second in value.

"This was a great package for us," said Ted Collins, president of Collins & Ware. "It will give us an opportunity to capitalize upon considerable upside potential." Collins said the company plans to use the strategically located property base to increase its exploration operations in the Permian Basin and Rocky Mountains.

The purchase price is approximately $60.7 million, adjusted for the properties' revenues and expenses from the effective January date, and closing is expected in late June.

The acquisition includes ownership in approximately 4,700 wells in 65 fields, and it is anticipated that Collins & Ware will operate 29 of the fields.

"We got a lot of acreage — fee acreage, royalty interests, and undeveloped leases in the package," said Don Jones, vice president and chief financial officer, "but initially we don't plan any seismic at all."

Jones said the purchase was primarily a producing package with significant upside potential in all categories including: infill drilling, behind the pipe possibilities, horizontal drilling, workovers, waterfloods and CO2 floods.

Some of the more significant fields in the package are the North Cowden, Levelland-Slaughter, and East Brahaney, in which Fina intends to execute a CO2 project. "We already know what do and will launch an ambitious capital expenditure program as soon as the sale is final at the end of this month," said Jones.

The Parker & Parsley sale to Costilla involved 2,000 oil and gas wells, the Three Rivers Pipeline, a 119-mile gas transmission pipeline in Pennsylvania, and the Person Gas Plant in Karnes County, Texas.

Scott Sheffield, chairman of Parker & Parsley, said the sale represented 1,800 barrels of oil and 16 million cubic feet of natural gas. "The properties represent approximately 20 percent of our total oil and gas wells, but less than four percent of our reserve value."

Sheffield said the sale would allow Parker & Parsley, one of the largest independent oil companies in the U.S., to reduce its long term debt to $300 million with a borrowing capacity of $350 million, giving the company the ability to increase its drilling budget and tar-

Basin CO2 supplies tighten

■ Shell to drill new wells in CO2 field to help meet Permian Basin CO2 demand.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The CO2 supply has gotten short in the Permian Basin, and for the first time in six years, Shell Western E&P will drill new wells in its McElmo Dome field to meet the growing demand for CO2 in West Texas and Southeast New Mexico.

Over the past 18 months the demand for supply has grown from 550 to 710 million cubic feet daily. Now, Shell plans a five-well program in the Southwest Colorado CO2 field, with the first well to get underway within 30 days and the others to be spudded within the next five to six months.

The first well will be drilled to 8,000 feet and is expected to flow 50 million cubic feet per day from the Mississippian Leadville formation. Parker Drilling is the contractor.

In addition to drilling, Shell has a workover program to deliver 40 million cubic feet more of gas by replacing the 4.5 inch production tubing in four wells with 5.5 inch tubing.

Said Drilling Engineer, J.B. Ward: "We expect each new well to deliver about 50 million cubic feet daily, and with our compressor upgrades, we should be able to increase deliverability 700 to 1 billion more cubic feet than we produced last year. That will almost double our production over this time last year." McElmo Dome is the only CO2 source field serving the Permian Basin capable of upping its production.

Tim Bradley, manager of Shell's CO2 business unit said demand created by CO2 activity in the Permian Basin had escalated 300 million cubic feet in the last 12 months, nearly outstripping supply.

Part of the demand was created as the result of an aggressive marketing campaign by Shell and Mobil, the two major owners of the McElmo Dome field. As many Permian Basin fields come to the end of their waterflood potential, most are looking toward CO2 to continue their productive life. Shell and Mobil developed a number of engineering, partnership and financing plans to facilitate this shift, and make CO2 a viable economic alternative for independent oil companies.

At the same time, Mobil, a 43 percent owner in the McElmo Dome field has decided to take a large portion of its share of gas from the field to launch or expand its own tertiary projects. Said one Mobil executive: "We believe in what we preach." Among the units Mobil has pegged for expansion are: Salt Creek, Denver City and Seminole.

Another factor accounting for tight CO2 supplies in the Basin is the closing of the Canyon Reef Carrier pipeline, which was delivering 50 million cubic feet daily of CO2 gas from the Val Verde Basin to the SACROC Unit is Scurry County. Shell had been supplying 25 percent of the CO2 unit, but will now have to supply 100 percent. Other units in the Scurry area set to go on CO2 are also expected to tighten supply.

While the shortage of supply could impact CO2 prices, it is not expected to present a price increase that will become a spoiler in the CO2 movement.

Pipeline buy puts strains on CO2 supplies

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The announcement of USX Delhi Group this week that Delhi Gas Pipeline Corp. has acquired 82 miles of the Canyon Reef Carriers Pipeline has put even more constraints on CO2 supply in the Permian Basin.

While the acquisition and conversion may be a boon for natural gas producers in the Val Verde Basin, it has not been that to other producers planning CO2 projects.

Several Basin operators had been moving forward on CO2 projects under the impression that Val Verde Basin CO2, which had been flowing into the SACROC unit for the past 15 years, would be available as a source. Now, the purchase of the 12- and 16-inch pipeline and its conversion from CO2 to natural gas will leave approximately 80 million cubic feet of Val Verde Basin CO2 without a market.

"It could put several tertiary projects in jeopardy," said the CO2 coordinator for a major oil company in Midland. "We were caught off guard. It leaves us without a source."

Four gas plants— Shell Terrell, Enron Mitchell, Valero Gray Ranch, and Warren Puckett —connected to the southern leg of the Canyon Reef Carrier line had the capacity to flow 100 Mmcfd of CO2 into the line. Now, instead of being put in a pipeline and sold, the carbon dioxide gas will now be vented. But Bill Waldrip, regional manager for Delhi Gas Pipeline, notes that all but one of the gas plants along the line had been venting CO2 for some time.

"At the time we purchased the system, only the Shell Terrell plant was still selling CO2 into the line."

Waldrip said the four plants on the line were all processing Ellenburger gas which was high in CO2 with some H2S.

Delhi bought the portion of the pipeline that connected with Terrell County gas plants and the interconnect near McCamey and will convert it to a gathering system for its recently acquired Tippett Process-

Royalty owners show disdain for lack of energy policy

■ National association adopts resolutions criticizing Congress, White House for lack of action on energy problems.

Staff Reports

WASHINGTON — After intensive briefings by top federal and private industry energy officials, at its annual policy and strategy session the Legislative Council of the Oklahoma-based National Association of Royalty Owners (NARO) adopted resolutions that showed growing disdain for the inability of Congress and the White House to tackle the nation's energy problems.

"The NARO Legislative Council, which reflects the views of the nation's four million owners of oil and gas mineral properties, is outraged over the growing cracks in our nation's energy armor," said James L. Stafford of Ada, OK, president of NARO.

"Energy continues to be used as the political ante in a giant poker game where elections are the pay-off for artificially rigged cheap fuel," he said. "The consequences — less domestic exploration, the loss of thousands of marginal wells and a growing dependence on foreign imports — are chilling and show the dark side of energy politics with ruthless clarity.

"The Legislative Council again urged Congress and the Department of Energy to forge a national energy policy to stimulate exploration and development in the lower 48 states with the same zeal they court the favors of the fanatical and dangerous Middle-East powers," Stafford added.

Stafford said the resolutions adopted by NARO's Legislative Council included:

1. "As Congress deals with the very serious problems our nation is facing, NARO urges consideration of the following steps to ensure the preservation of the domestic energy industry which is so vital to our national security and economic stability:

Support the Natural Gas Competitiveness Act, which will allow independent natural gas producers and royalty owners to form cooperatives in order to promote the long-standing goal of increased competition in the natural gas market and its subsequent benefits to consumers and also promote production for small producers and royalty owners;

Incentives for increased domestic exploration and maximum development of existing oil and gas reserves; and

2. "Whereas, the Department of Commerce investigation reveals that excessive reliance on foreign oil constitutes an imminent threat to national security, NARO urges the Administration and Congress to initiate all appropriate actions based on such investigation to avoid another Gulf War."

3. "Whereas, the oil and gas industry provides 80 percent of the national energy supply, NARO urges the Department of Energy to proportionately realign its present disproportionate spending in support of oil and gas research and development to promote increased domestic exploration, ensure extended life of America's marginal wells, and enhance public awareness of the vitality of the fossil fuels industry to America's well-being."

4. "Whereas, since 1982 NARO has encouraged the creation of a national energy education policy, NARO hereby endorses the Independent Producers Association of America's educational efforts and advocates the creation of a national program modeled upon that of the Oklahoma Energy Resources Board (OERB) and any other similar state programs."

5. "Whereas, NARO recognizes the substantial contribution of Native Americans, NARO calls for full disclosure by the federal Minerals Management Service (MMS) of royalties owned on production from tribal lands."

6. "In the interest of reasonable and equitable treatment of the domestic oil and gas industry, the EPA should be required to use a judicial rather than administrative process, and an economic impact and risk assessment report should accompany all environmental impact statements."

These resolutions will be presented to the full NARO membership at NARO's annual meeting in November in Dallas.

NARO, headquartered in Ada, OK, is a national association dedicated to the needs of the nation's mineral, surface and royalty owners.

N.Y. Times News Service

London — New supplies of oil and natural gas continue to be found faster than they are being used up, even as world consumption reached a record last year, British Petroleum Co. said in its annual review of global energy.

Economic growth sparked a 1.8 percent rise in energy consumption last year, the biggest jump since 1989, even as Russia continued a six-year collapse in consumption, the U.K. oil company said in a report it first produced in 1953.

While oil prices that have remained historically low the past decade could rise if supply is disrupted, it won't be because there isn't enough of the stuff in the ground, BP officials said.

"There is growing demand but there is no visible shortage of potential supply," John Browne, BP's chief executive, said at a press conference. "The issue of price is a matter of economics and politics — not one of resources."

Oil supplies of proven reserves, which total an estimated 1.017 trillion barrels, remain at or near a 43-year supply at current levels of consumption, which reached a record of 67.93 million barrels a day last year.

"This does not mean oil will run out within 43 years," said Peter Davies, BP's chief economist. "It is certain that more oil reserves will be proven before that time."

Even as demand has risen, proven oil reserves have increased by 50 percent during the past two decades, or at a rate of 1.77 barrels for every one consumed, Davies said.

That's because new technology has made it easier and cheaper to search for and produce oil. While most of the new reserves have come in the oil-rich Middle East, production outside that region has reached record levels and continues to grow, BP said.

The BP survey confirms what lots of other oil company executives say about supplies.

"It's hard to see oil prices moving significantly out of their established trading range," John Jennings, the chairman of Shell Transport & Trading Co., said in an interview last week.

"Demand is still progressing, but not at the same pace as supply," Jean-Michel Tournier, head of crude oil trading at Total SA of France, said in an interview last week.

BP said world consumption is rising even though demand in the former Soviet Union is shrinking.

Russian consumption fell 10 percent last year to 2.935 million barrels a day, although the drop was a lot less than in previous years. Consumption was more than 5 million barrels a day in 1989.

"The evidence so far is that the decline in Russia is slowing, but it hasn't stopped," Davies said.

Energy consumption has tumbled in the former Soviet Union as the new republics, including Russia, struggle to reinvent their economies and political systems after 70 years of Communism.

The decline in consumption has been matched by the fall in Russia's oil production, which was once the largest daily output in the world. It's now the third behind Saudi Arabia and the U.S.

"With oil consumption down nearly 8 percent in the former Soviet Union and marginally down in the U.S. and Japan, more than 100 percent of the growth in demand came from the newly emerging economies," Browne said.

"Ten years ago, Asia used one barrel in six of the world's consumption of oil," he said. "Now, it uses one in four."

Natural gas demand also has been rising, although reserves have slipped a bit, BP said.

Gas reserves at the end of 1995 stood at 139.7 trillion cubic meters, or a 64.7 year supply. That compares with 141 trillion cubic meters at the end of 1994, or a 66.4 year supply.

Mike Grella, president of Costilla, said this purchase, which is the second major acquisition the company has made from Parker & Parsley, would provide Costilla with a solid opportunity for growth.

He said the acquisition would create intense activity for the company. "With this purchase and what we acquired last year from Parker & Parsley, we plan to drill 12 wells by the end of the year. We will be very busy with typical upside potential and new drilling opportunities. We also have five new 3-D projects scheduled for the next 12 months." Grella said the latest acquisition includes a large number of properties in the Sawyer Canyon field.

The company was founded in 1988 by Cadell Liedtke and Michael Grella, and Henry Musselman joined the company as a principal in 1992. Since its founding, the company has had phenomenal growth through acquisitions. Last year the company purchased over $50 million in properties from Parker & Parsley. Grella said the Costilla did not participate in any sale process but negotiated sales.

Currently the company operates a total of 1600 wells, of which about 40 percent are in the Permian Basin. Another 40 percent are located in South Texas with 20 percent located in the Rockies.

In another significant acquisition, WestCo Producing Co., a wholly owned subsidiary of GulfWest Oil Co. has agreed to purchase 100 percent working interest in 250 oil wells on 4,000 acres in the Vaughn Field, Crockett County, Texas, for $3.1 million in cash.

Currently, 82 of the wells are active, producing an aggregate of 220 barrels of oil per day. The company plans to place 80 of the inactive wells back in production by the end of 1996 through enhancement and recompletions, increasing production to approximately 420 barrels per day. The properties have proved developed producing and non-producing oil reserves estimated at 1.3 million barrels.

Marshall A. Smith, president and CEO, said the field has numerous infield drilling locations as well as secondary recovery potential.

"This purchase is significant in helping the company achieve several key objectives," Marshall A. Smith, president and chief executive officer, said. "It increases our total proved reserves by 45 percent, provides a long-term reserve base and establishes a stable cash flow stream for the company. It also creates a more attractive ratio of oil to gas reserves," he noted. Following the acquisition GulfWest's reserves will be 60 percent oil and 40 percent natural gas. At the close of 1995, the ratio was 75 percent natural gas and 25 percent oil.

TMBR/Sharp revenues increased 18 percent in fiscal 1996

MIDLAND — TMBR/Sharp Drilling Inc. reported an 18 percent increase in total revenues for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1996, over the previous fiscal year, to $23.0 million from $19.4 million. The Company recognized a non-cash charge of approximately $2.6 million related to a change in accounting method which resulted in a net loss of $952,000, or 23 cents per share, compared to net income of $1.5 million, or 38 cents per share, in fiscal 1995.

The charge resulted from the adoption of Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 121, which requires assessing the need for an impairment of capitalized costs of oil and gas properties on a property-by-property basis, rather than evaluating the carrying value of the Company's oil and gas properties as a whole.

TMBR/Sharp's net cash provided by operating activities during fiscal 1996 increased by approximately 35 percent to $4.8 million from $3.5 million. Contract drilling revenues increased by approximately 16 percent, to $21.3 million from $18.4 million, while the rig utilization rate increased to 45.1 percent from 43.5 percent.

Oil and gas revenues increased by approximately 62 percent to $1.7 million from $1.0 million. During the year, the company participated as a working interest owner in the drilling of 28 wells, 14 of which were completed as producers.

At fiscal year-end, the Company's proved reserves included 368,600 barrels of oil, up 34 percent over 275,600 a year earlier, and 2.8 billion cubic feet of natural gas, up 149 percent over 1.1 billion at March 31, 1995.

Thomas C. Brown, chairman, said the company would have achieved approximately the same net income in fiscal 1996 as the previous year, except for the non-cash charge. "We are continuing to add cash flow and oil and gas reserves through the exploration and development drilling program for our own account, and we are optimistic about our future opportunities."

ing Facility in Crockett County. Canyon Reef Carriers Pipeline still retains that portion of the pipeline from the McCamey interconnect to SACROC.

"During the last five years, more than 100 million cubic feet per day (MMCFD) of new, processible gas supplies have been developed in Terrell County and significantly more drilling activity is projected there over the next few years," says David M. Kihneman, president of Delhi. "This county is remote as far as existing gas pipeline and processing infrastructure are concerned, so these acquisitions give us a timely, strategic entry into a rapidly developing gas supply area. Furthermore, the acquired pipeline can be efficiently integrated into our existing West Texas operations."

Since 1992, based on exploration work done by Conoco, Tom Brown and Riata, over 140 rich-gas Strawn and Wolfcamp wells have been drilled into the trend. Delhi intends to take gas only from these Strawn and Wolfcamp wells and hope to flow 35-40 Mmcfd into the Tippett plant by the first of July. Strawn and Wolfcamp production in the area now exceeds 100 Mmcfd.

Waldrip said the converted Canyon Reef Pipeline, along with the recent acquisition of the Tippett Processing Facility, would enable Delhi to offer producers in this area the ability to extract added value from the processing of these rich gas supplies. Initial volumes from Terrell County are anticipated to load the 40-MMCFD-capacity Tippett Processing Facility.

"The synergistic opportunities these acquisitions provide are exceptional," Kihneman added. "We are already working on plans to further expand our 1,000-mile West Texas system to gather and process additional supplies as they are developed in Terrell County."

It is unlikely a new pipeline will be built from the Terrell County plants because of the high cost. Also, the CO2 is atmospheric gas making for very expensive compression charges. "It is very expensive to take the CO2 from atmosphere and put it into a line at 1800 psi, which is what the Canyon Reef Carrier Pipeline had to do," said Waldrip.

Still, with compression charges, producers say the Val Verde CO2 was cheaper than the northern supplies from Colorado and New Mexico. There are no commodity prices for CO2, but sources say northern source gas generally sells for 65-75 cents per Mcf while Val Verde gas sells 10-15 cents cheaper.

Said Waldrip: "The Canyon Reef Carriers CO2 pipeline was a system that had just outlived its usefulness. There is now in place an extensive infrastructure that delivers cleaner CO2 without compression costs."

LOCATION OF JOBS: Permian Basin Area (TX & NM)

TYPE OF JOB: Fracturing. Halliburton's Flowback Enhancement System℠ using PropWrap, A Proven Technology For Controlling Proppant Flowback.

CUSTOMER CHALLENGE: Economical alternative to eliminate proppant flowback problems common to many of the Permian Basin formations such as San Andres, Clearfork, Spraberry, and Delaware, etc.

HALLIBURTON'S SOLUTION: Halliburton recommended the use of PropWrap which has been field proven to effectively eliminate proppant flowback problems. Extended shut-in times are eliminated because it locks itself into the proppant pack by interaction with the proppant through friction or adhesion.

DETAILS OF JOB:

Formation	Delaware Sand
Casing:	5-1/2", 15.5 ppf
Tubing:	2-7/8", 6.5 ppf
Perforations:	6,800-6,900 ft.
Job Volume:	24,000 gallons Hybor G 3195
Proppant:	74,500 lbs 20/40 White Sand
Average Rate:	16 bpm
Average PSI:	2,200 psi
PropWrap	Treated 20,000 lb Tail-in
Shut in Time:	Recorded 15 min shut in followed by flowback

RESULTS: PropWrap controlled proppant flowback and eliminated any potential production problems.

PRODUCTION RESULTS: Initial Production: New Well Post Frac Production: 1.2 MMCFD, 30 BOPD, and 75 BWPD

CUSTOMER TESTIMONTIAL: PropWrap performed great in controlling the sand flowback. The first well we fraced did not use PropWrap and we are still having sand flowback problems. We plan on using PropWrap on all frac jobs in the future.

COST ANALYSIS:

Fracturing Treatment w/o PropWrap	$22,000
Pulled Pump & Cleaned Out Sand (3 Times)	15,000
Lost Production (6 days)	13,500
System Cost w/o PropWrap	$50,500

FRACTURING TREATMENT W/PropWrap

Fracturing Treatment	$25,000
Lost Production (6 days)	0
System Cost w/PropWrap	$25,000
ECONOMIC VALUE TO CUSTOMER	$25,500

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Andrews yields lower Clearfork discovery

Staff Reports

AMOCO PRODUCTION CO. tested the No. 92 C.W. Logsdon "A" to pump 67 barrels of crude, 50 Mcfd and 270 barrels of water from perforations 6,830 to 7,370 ft.

Permitted as a 9,700 ft. test, the well was drilled to 9,885 ft. and plugged back to 7,566 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 8,360 ft.

Amoco initially tested the Wolfcamp from 8,120 to 8,168 ft. and found non-commercial amounts of oil. The company next tested the Ellenburger from 9,625 to 9,885 ft., which tested wet, and the Pennsylvanian from 8,227 to 8,240 ft., which tested tight.

Conoco completes Terrell extension

CONOCO INC. has completed a western extension to production in the KM Southwest (Wolfcamp) field of Terrell County, 11 miles southwest of Sheffield.

On potential test, the No. 5 Creek Ranch "60" flowed 487 barrels of 48 gravity crude, 328 Mcfd and 58 barrels of water on a 12/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 620 psi. The well flowed from Wolfcamp perforations 4,774 to 4,920 ft., which had been fractured with 115,640 lbs. 16/30 sand.

Scheduled as a 7,000 ft. prospect, Conoco drilled the well to 5,135 ft., where 5 inch casing was set, and plugged the well back to 5,054 ft.

Winkler recompletion extends AW field

A former Fusselman producer in the AW field of Winkler County has been recompleted as a Devonian producer in the field, extending production north in the field, 12 miles east of Kermit.

EXXON CO. U.S.A. INC. reentered the No. 15 Waddell Brothers & Co., testing it to pump 120 barrels of 34.6 gravity crude from perforations 9,182 to 9,274 ft. The interval was acidized with 6,000 gallons 15 percent HCL acid.

Originally drilled to 9,788 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 9,680 ft.

On elevation of 3,070 ft., formation tops include the Rustler at 1,280 ft., San Andres at 4,280, Clearfork at 5,826, Wichita at 6,415, Devonian at 9,180 and Fusselman at 9,737 ft.

Reentry completed in Howard field

An abandoned well in Howard County has been reentered and completed as a Canyon Reef extension in the CC Gunn field, five miles east of Vincent.

SHARP IMAGE ENERGY reentered the No. 1 Ingram "A", testing it to flow 89 barrels of 38 gravity crude and 133 Mcfd on a 9/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 710 psi. The well flowed from perforations 7,738 to 7,745 ft., which had been acidized with 350 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid.

Originally drilled to 8,000 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing is set, the well was plugged back to 7,955 ft.

The well was drilled by IP Petroleum Co. Inc. and plugged and abandoned in May 1993.

Enron completes Reagan extension

ENRON OIL & GAS CO. has extended Strawn production south-southwest in the Grierson Spring (Strawn) field of Reagan County, 10 miles south of Best.

The No. 2 University "6A" was tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 775 Mcfd from perforations 8,631 to 8,743 ft. The interval was acidized with 10,000 gallons 20 percent acid and fractured with 15,000 gallons of gel and 48,000 lbs. sand.

Total depth was 8,940 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 8,938 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,763 ft., formation tops include the Base Cretaceous at 893 ft., Wolfcamp X Marker at 7,698, Strawn at 8,628 and Devonian at 8,850 ft.

Chevron, partners to proceed with deep Gulf of Mexico project

N.Y. Times News Service

San Francisco — Chevron U.S.A. Production Co., Exxon Co. and Fina Inc. said they'll proceed with the $750 million Genesis Development Project, an oil and gas venture deep in the Gulf of Mexico.

Chevron will operate Genesis, its first management of a deepwater development. Deepwater projects allow oil drilling up to 5,000 feet deep, more than three times the maximum depth of conventional offshore drilling.

Chevron, which participated in three deepwater wells operated by other companies, holds a 57 percent interest in the project. Exxon holds a 38 percent interest and Fina 5.0 percent.

Production is scheduled to start in late 1998, with peak production in 2000 of about 55,000 barrels of oil and 72 million cubic feet of natural gas per day, Chevron said in a statement.

Recoverable reserves for 15 to 20 years are estimated to be the equivalent of 160 million barrels of oil, Chevron said.

"Genesis ... reaffirms the deepwater gulf's role as a promising new source of oil and gas," said Bob Herrin, Chevron U.S.A. vice president in charge of Gulf of Mexico operations.

Deepwater projects usually require expensive floating production facilities attached to the sea floor with cables, unlike conventional offshore projects, which use steel platforms that stand on the sea floor.

The Genesis project will use a floating "spar" production facility moored to the sea floor by 14 anchor lines. Chevron said the design will save money and time during development, yet perform as well as other deepwater production systems.

The spar structure will be built by Spars International Inc., a Houston-based joint venture of Aker Oil and Gas Technology and J. Ray McDermott. The contract to design and produce the platform is valued at about $300 million.

Genesis, formerly called the "Vancouver" or "Green Canyon 205" project, is located about 150 miles south of New Orleans. The project cleared final joint-owner approvals this month.

Newpark Resources gets NORM contract

METAIRIE, La. — Newpark Resources, Inc. has amended an agreement with a major oil company to provide for the disposal of NORM (Naturally Occurring Radioactive Material) estimated to generate revenues in excess of $10 million over the next twelve months.

The project is expected to require disposal of more than 200,000 barrels of NORM and related NOW (Nonhazardous Oilfield Waste), and is the first major remediation project scheduled to utilize the recently awarded direct injection license for NORM disposal at the Company's Big Hill, Texas facility.

In 1995, Newpark processed approximately 70,000 barrels of NORM waste, generating revenues of $6 million.

Enserch sells Rocky Mountain properties

DALLAS — Enserch Exploration announces that agreements to sell substantially all of the Company's Rocky Mountain assets have been reached.

The sales, effective April 1, are expected to close by the end of August and to provide total proceeds of approximately $120 million.

The properties being sold represent proved reserves of 150 billion cubic feet equivalent and average daily production of 45 million cubic feet equivalent. "The offers we received for these properties were in-line with our expectations, and we are very pleased with the results," said Gary J. Junco, president and chief operating officer.

"Proceeds from these sales will be applied to debt reduction and the gain on the sale will reduce the full cost balance," he added. The company is retaining its interest in one Rocky Mountain property, the Pleasant Valley waterflood project, and plans to further develop it.

Chase Securities, Inc. served as investment advisor for the sales of these properties.

Enserch Exploration, Inc. is a natural gas and oil exploration and production company with activities focused in Texas and the Gulf of Mexico.

Chevron awards $300 million Gulf platform

HOUSTON — Spars International Inc., a joint venture between J. Ray McDermott and Aker Oil and Gas Technology, has been awarded a contract by Chevron U.S.A. Production Company for the design, fabrication, and installation of the Genesis spar platform in the Gulf of Mexico.

The contract is valued at approximately $300 million with McDermott and Aker each responsible for approximately half of the project under subcontract to Spars International.

The Genesis platform is due to be installed during the summer of 1998 in 2,560 feet of water in Green Canyon 205, about 150 miles south of New Orleans. Fabrication of the platform's topside deck will begin later this fall at J. Ray McDermott's Morgan City, La. facility under subcontract to Spars International. Also under subcontract to Spars International will be Finnish-based Aker Rauma Offshore, who will manage the fabrication of the hull in Finland.

Daily production from the Genesis platform is expected to total 55,000 barrels of crude oil and 72 million cubic feet of natural gas per day. Recoverable reserves are estimated in excess of 160 million barrels oil equivalent and is expected to produce for 15-20 years.

Chevron U.S.A. Production Company is the operator with a 56.67 percent interest. Exxon and FINA have 38.38 percent and 4.95 percent interest, respectively.

The spar concept comprises a catenary-moored, cylindrical hull designed to support production and/or drilling facilities. The system provides for the economical use of dry production trees and allows conventional intervention into the well bore. The world's first production platform to utilize spar technology is now nearing completion by Aker and McDermott for Oryx Energy Company.

Spars International designs, markets, and contracts for deepwater platforms using spar technology and is owned equally by Aker Oil and Gas Technology and J. Ray McDermott. The technology comes to the company via an exclusive license agreement with Deep Oil Technology, which holds background patent rights. Spars International is headquartered in Houston with branch offices in London and Oslo.

Texoil, Phillips plan 3-D survey in Louisiana

HOUSTON — Texoil, Inc. has entered into an agreement with Phillips Petroleum to conduct a proprietary 24-square mile 3-D survey in Lafourche Parish, in South Louisiana.

Texoil has already acquired lease options on the prospective area, and the 3-D survey is expected to commence during the third quarter of 1996. Texoil's working interest after completion of the 3-D survey will be 30 percent. Phillips will serve as operator.

Seismic work on Texoil's two previously announced 3-D projects is nearing completion. 3-D seismic data acquisition has been completed on the company's prospect, in Galveston County, Texas. The data is now being processed and interpretation will follow. Depending upon the results of the interpretation, drilling activities would begin shortly thereafter.

3-D seismic data acquisition is in progress on the company's multi-prospect 64-square mile proprietary 3-D seismic project around a producing salt dome in Lafourche Parish, La.

Data acquisition is expected to be completed in the third quarter, 1996 immediately followed by interpretation. Depending upon the results of the interpretation, drilling activities would begin shortly thereafter.

Texoil serves as the operator and its partners include Pogo Producing Company, MCN Corp., GEDD, 3DX Technologies, Inc. and Shore Oil Company.

Ruben Medrano, Texoil's president, said, "We are excited about starting another 3-D seismic project to complement our other 3-D exploration projects which are progressing quite rapidly now. Like our other projects, this is another example of the excellent exploration opportunities Texoil seeks to create for its shareholders and its industry partners."

Rotary rig activity

Rotary rig activity continued to improve during mid-June, according to Smith International Inc. The company's Smith Tool Activity Tracking System for June 14 showed 836 rotary rigs, up 14 from the previous week and up 6 percent from 789 a year ago. There were 802 rigs drilling, up 19 from the last week and up 12.5 percent from 713 last year. There were 34 rigs rigging up, down five from a week earlier and down 55.3 percent from 76 rigging up last year.

Leviathan, Occidental begin offshore gas production

HOUSTON — Leviathan Gas Pipeline Partners, L.P. and MidCon Corp., a unit of Occidental Petroleum Corp., announced that subsidiaries have initiated production from their jointly owned Garden Banks Block 72 lease in 525 feet of water, offshore Louisiana. Initial production from the first two wells totals approximately 2,000 barrels of oil and 4.8 million cubic feet (MMcf) of gas per day.

Gas production is being transported to shore on the Stingray pipeline system, a 50/50 joint venture which is owned by subsidiaries of Leviathan and MidCon. The oil production is being delivered into the Poseidon oil pipeline which is owned by subsidiaries of Leviathan and Texaco, Inc.

"The Garden Banks 72 project is an excellent example of Leviathan's role in bringing oil and gas infrastructure to the deeper water areas of the Gulf," stated Grant E. Sims, chief executive officer of Leviathan.

The Garden Banks Block 72 lease was first acquired in a 1992 federal lease sale by MidCon and Tatham Offshore, Inc., an affiliate of Leviathan. A multipurpose platform was installed on Garden Banks Block 72 in November 1995 and drilling operations began on the lease in February of this year. Leviathan and MidCon initiated the drilling of the third well on the Garden Banks Block 72 lease earlier this month. MidCon owns a 50 percent working interest in the GB 72 lease and Leviathan owns the other 50 percent working interest, subject to certain reversionary rights held by Tatham Offshore.

The same companies are in the process of developing an adjacent lease, Garden Banks Block 117. The GB 117 development has involved the installation of approximately 3.5 miles of gathering lines to the GB 72 platform capable of handling the production from two subsea wellheads. The first well scheduled for production was drilled and tested during late 1994 and flowed at a rate of 10,500 barrels of oil and 11.9 MMcf of gas per day during the test period. Initial production from the GB 117 lease is anticipated in late June 1996. The companies plan to drill a second well on GB 117 after the initial well is placed on production.

MidCon Corp. is based in the Chicago suburb of Lombard, Ill. Other MidCon units are engaged in interstate and intrastate natural gas transmission, sales, storage and marketing. During 1995, MidCon companies sold or transported about 2.2 trillion cubic feet of gas.

Leviathan is a publicly owned limited partnership which was formed to acquire, own and manage offshore pipelines and related assets. Leviathan operates or has interests in eight gas pipeline systems located offshore Louisiana and Texas which currently gather approximately 2.6 billion cubic feet of natural gas per day.

AGA board adopts restructuring recommendations

LAGUNA NIGUEL, Calif. - The board of director of the American Gas Association has approved a majority of recommendations from a management consulting firm on restructuring the association. The board also voted to fund new gas product and technology advertising at an amount not to exceed $4 million annually. In March, the board had voted to no longer mandate financial support for any type of advertising through AGA member dues.

The approved recommendations, made by the Chicago-based firm Towers Perrin, included:

AGA's primary role will be as an advocate for local distribution companies with federal legislators and regulators. U.S. LDCs will be the only companies with full membership and board representation.

A membership category will be established for North American natural gas companies other than U.S. LDCs. AGA President and Chief Executive Officer Michael Baly and the study's steering committee will continue discussions with natural gas pipeline companies and Canadian and Mexican LDCs about their participation.

It is expected that AGA staff will be reduced by more than 30 positions, including nine currently vacant, from its current level of 158.

Association expenses will be reduced by a maximum of $10.8 million, including brand advertising expenses of $7.2 million.

AGA's marketing services group will refocus its efforts toward support of members' own marketing initiatives and away from direct marketing to consumers. Key accounts activities will be targeted at technology deployment opportunities.

The international affairs program will be phased out as an AGA member service. A group of companies is investigating options for creating a self-funding center to coordinate this program.

The membership will be polled biannually to determine overall association priorities. The Executive Committee will work with AGA staff to ensure that association goals support membership requirements.

AGA Chairman George A. Davidson Jr. said the board has empowered AGA's senior management to develop and implementation plan that reflects the major findings of the study. "Our consultant has helped us identify the issues and programs that must be addressed, but now it's the job of Mike Baly and the capable AGA staff to create a plan of action," he said. "Their recommendations will be reviewed with our Executive Committee in September and a final plan will be presented at our October board meeting."

"The implementation of these recommendations will be difficult and sometimes painful," Baly said. "AGA has a dedicated and talented staff, some of whom we are going to lose. But it is necessary to make these changes to keep our association in step with the new competitive era we are all facing. We expect the new AGA to be an extremely effective advocate for LDCs and a major provider of information and services to its members."

Other recommendations approved by the board include combing and/or reducing the number of committees; transferring many natural gas vehicle activities to the NGV Coalition; and enhancing partnerships and alliances with other gas industry associations.

West Texas tracts included in July Land Office sale

AUSTIN - Tracts in a number of West Texas counties are included in a special sealed bid sale set for July 16 by the Texas General Land Office.

The sale involves 100 tracts of surplus state land and tax foreclosure land in 34 counties, ranging from a 1.18 acre tract in Leon County to a 1,239.5 acre tract in Presidio County.

Other West Texas counties included in the sale are Borden, Brewster, Coke, Culberson, Dawson, Hudspeth, Jeff Davis, Lynn, Midland, Pecos, Presidio, Reeves, Runnels, Terrell and Ward counties.

There are two types of property included in the sale. The first is surplus Permanent School Fund land. All revenue generated from these tracts goes to support public education in Texas.

The second is tax foreclosure land. These tracts were deeded to the state by counties that could not dispose of them through public auction. The General Land Office was given the authority to sell these tracts by state law. The land office is authorized to dispose of surplus tracts that are not generating much income for the state with the proceeds used to buy property that maximizes leasing incomes for the Permanent School Fund.

Some of the tracts in far West Texas are being sold subject to executing a conservation easement with the Texas Historical Commission to protect sites that have archeological or historical significance.

Minimum bids have been set for each tract. There is no limit on the amount that may be bid above the minimum.

Bids must be received no later than 10 a.m. July 16 with bid opening in Room 831, Stephen F. Austin building, 1700 N. Congress, Austin.

Sale information and a bid packet is available by calling 800/348-9161 and sending a $5 check or money order to the Texas General Land Office, 1700 N. Congress, Room 720, Austin Texas 78701-1495.

Oil Report Downsized Up

We are going down in size, but up in versatiltiy

On June 30, the Permian Basin Oil Report will downsize to a smaller tabloid format, and go on its own as a separate publication in order to better serve the Permian Basin oil and gas industry.

The informative news content of the Oil Report will remain the same, and will continue to be found each Sunday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

The only difference is: the Oil Report will now be available to more readers, easier to read, easier to file, and consequently of more value to our readers and advertisiers.

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

HS Resources, Tide West Oil finalize merger

SAN FRANCISCO — HS Resources Inc. announced the completion of the previously announced merger of HS Resources and Tide West Oil Co.

"The merger with Tide West, together with the Wattenberg Field asset purchase from Basin Exploration, which closed last week, positions HS Resources as one of the largest independent oil and gas producers in the United States with proved reserves of approximately 144 million barrels of oil equivalent," stated Nicholas J. Sutton, chairman and chief executive officer. Sutton added, "The Tide West merger diversifies HS Resources into the Mid-continent region which, along with our Gulf Coast activities, provides the benefits of risk reduction from both commodity price and project risk perspectives while also giving HS Resources significant exploration and exploitation opportunities."

Pursuant to the merger, each Tide West shareholder shall receive 0.6295 shares of HS Resources common stock and $8.704 cash for each outstanding share of Tide West common stock.

MEETINGS

Gas producers discuss cutting operating costs

Prentice Creel will be the guest speaker at Thursday's luncheon meeting of the Natural Gas Producers Association. The meeting will be at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:45 a.m.

Creel will speak on "Ways to Reduce Operating Costs." He joined Halliburton Services in Odessa in 1981 as an engineer and has served in numerous key positions with Halliburton. In 1993, he became the technical advisor for the Conformance Control, Permian Basin area and since 1994 has served as Technical Specialist addressing the Conformance Control for the Permian Basin and advisor for Halliburton's North American area.

Reservations should be made by noon Tuesday by calling 563-1170.

United Petroleum tests 1.370 Bcf from Kentucky natural gas well

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — United Petroleum Corp. announced that the recently completed Bogar No. 1 well in Pike County, Ky. has been successfully stimulated in the Devonion Shale and Berea Sandstone.

A petroleum engineer retained by the company, stated that the initial natural gas flow from the two stimulated zones was approximately 984 MCF per day. He further estimated reserves from the two zones to be approximately 1.05 BCF. Additional reserves behind pipe in the Injun Sandstone, Big Lime and Salt Sand are estimated to be approximately 320 MMCF.

The company is now preparing to connect the Bogar No. 1 well to a pipeline with the intent to begin sales of natural gas in July.

Company President, Michael F. Thomas, stated "The company is extremely pleased with the results of the first Pike County well and is now in the process of permitting two additional well sites near the Bogar No. 1 well. Drilling is expected to commence on the second Pike County well in approximately two weeks."

Triton signs first exploration contract in Sultanate of Oman

DALLAS — Triton Energy has signed its first production-sharing contract with the Sultanate of Oman at an official ceremony at the Ministry of Petroleum & Minerals in Muscat. This is the Company's initial exploration venture in the Middle East.

The production-sharing contract will allow Triton to explore for hydrocarbons on Block 22 about 5.5 kilometers (km) (3.5 miles) offshore the southeast coast of Oman in the Arabian Sea. Triton has a 100% working interest in the 8,271-square-kilometer (3,193-square-mile) block.

Under terms of the contract, the initial phase of exploration calls for Triton to acquire 1,000 km of seismic data beginning in 1997. The Company also will reprocess existing seismic information and perform geotechnical studies.

"We are honored to work with the Ministry of Petroleum & Minerals of the Sultanate of Oman in the vital and exciting oil and gas exploration business," said Thomas G. Finck, Triton Chairman and Chief Executive Officer.

Attending the signing ceremony from the Sultanate of Oman's Ministry of Petroleum & Minerals were H.E. Said bin Ahmed Al-Shanfari, Minister of Petroleum & Minerals and H.E. Salim bin Muhammed bin Shaban, Undersecretary of Petroleum & Minerals. Finck also attended the ceremony along with other Triton executives.

NAMEDROPPING

Grant Geophysical Inc. has named STEPHEN KING supervisor of its Western U.S. Operations. He will be based in Midland, Texas. In his new position, Stephen will be responsible for Grant's Permian Basin seismic data acquisition crews as well as Grant's Midland Service Center.

Stephen has 17 years of technical and operational experience gained while working in both International and U.S. Seismic operations.

RENEE WITHERSPOON has been elected the "Safety Professional of the Year" by the Permian Basin chapter, American Society of Safety Engineers.

She is a certified safety professional, employed by Witherspoon Architecture Co. in Odessa. She is also a part-time instructor at Odessa College in the Safety & Health Degree program.

Consolidated Natural Gas Co. has appointed RONALD L. ADAMS, a top executive from Transcontinental Gas Pipeline, president of CNG Transmission Corporation, its interstate pipeline and storage subsidiary.

Mr. Adams succeeds L.J. TIMMS JR., who retired in December 1995. Adams will start in his new position on July 15.

Adams, 36, joined Transco in 1982 as a compressor engineer in the Houston office. He worked his way up rapidly through the operations side of the business, serving in posts including director, field operations, and vice president, pipeline operations. Most recently, he was vice president of both operations and engineering, a position that put him in charge of more than 1,000 employees and a capital budget of some $250 million.

Pumped-dry oil field gets new life as underground storage facility

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Buried nearly 8,000 feet beneath the slopes of Oat Mountain in the north San Fernando Valley is a vast reservoir of natural gas — 70 billion cubic feet of it, enough to supply more than one million homes for a year.

The 3,200-acre site in Aliso Canyon was once home to oil fields. Today, the Southern California Gas Co. uses jet engine-powered compressors to inject gas deep into the played-out fields, where it is stored for later delivery to customers.

On the surface, the setting is one of classic California beauty — oak-dotted hillsides that are green in spring, golden-brown in summer. But it is the underground geology that makes Aliso Canyon a perfect natural gas tank.

"Basically, you've got a sponge up against a granite wall," said Tom Schroeder, a Gas Co. field engineer at Aliso.

The "sponge" is sandstone — porous rock that is able to store large quantities of oil and gas in the spaces between the grains of sand.

Using many of the same wells that once pumped oil, the Gas Co. uses powerful compressors to force natural gas back into the ground — where it rests in the sandstone, trapped on three sides by granite and the fourth side by underground water.

"Right now we're injecting gas," said Dick Wiegman, the storage operations manager at Aliso. "We'll store the gas all summer in preparation for the winter months — basically from early November through mid-March."

The gas is piped to the facility from Texas, Wyoming, Mexico and other sources. When the gas is pumped out in winter, it is odorized and then sent on its way to the Gas Co.'s nearly five million residential and commercial customers.

Fifty-eight employees work at the site in a round-the-clock operation, but few signs are visible from Los Angeles' suburban San Fernando Valley floor.

"We can operate without disturbing the neighbors," Wiegman said, looking over the steep slopes of his domain — which extends to nearly 3,000 feet above sea level to the top of Oat Mountain.

The quiet operation of the site was significantly disturbed only once in recent decades — on July 19, 1975. A fire broke out at one of the wellheads, sending up a plume of flame that burned for 10 days and could be seen at night across the valley.

Red Adair, the Texan famed for fighting oil-well fires, was brought in to extinguish the blaze. But before Adair could drill down to the shaft to pinch off the gas supply, the erosion of ground near the wellhead caused the fire to shift direction — allowing workers to turn off a shut-off valve at the surface.

The fire itself was caused in the process of extracting gas. Because the gas is under pressure, it comes up from below ground at high speed. Occasionally, particles of sand and other substances will come up with it.

Gas Co. officials theorized the fire was caused when sand deteriorated some of the wellhead fittings, allowing the gas to mix with air. At that point, the friction of the particulates hitting the wellhead fittings at high speed sparked the fire.

Wiegman and Schroeder counted off a series of steps that have been taken since 1975 to ensure the safety of the operation.

Chief among these are sensors that detect when sand or other particles are eroding the fittings. These sensors are designed to automatically shut down the flow of gas.

The facility rode through the 1994 Northridge Quake without major incident.

"We were up and running in four days," Schroeder said. "Most of that time was for inspection — it takes a long time to inspect 3,000 acres."

The facility has a good record with regulators. A check of Public Utilities Commission inspections for the past five years showed no violations, while the South Coast Air Quality Management District said there were only two violations in recent years, both involving storage permits, which resulted in $300 in fines in 1991.

With a capacity of 70 billion cubic feet, Aliso Canyon is the Gas Co.'s main facility for Southern California. The company's four other Southland facilities — in Playa del Rey, Goleta, Montebello and Castaic — hold a combined 45 million cubic feet.

According to the Gas Co., Aliso ranks No. 1 in the nation in the amount of gas it can pump out of the ground in one day — 1.9 billion cubic feet.

On an average day, Gas Co. customers in Southern and Central California use about 2.5 billion cubic feet, according to Denise Day King, corporate communications manager for the Gas Co. King notes that much of the gas never goes underground, however, but is piped directly to homes and businesses after being transported cross-country.

Without underground storage capacity, gas would have to be stored above-ground in large tanks of the kind that once dotted urban landscapes. Few of these tanks remain locally, although the city of Long Beach — which has its own gas system — still has two such storage tanks.

History of Texas at the Presidential Museum

ODESSA — Maps that guided the early Texas explorers, as well as the history of Texas as a republic and a state, form the nucleus of two exhibits on display at the Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee St.

"I think we're fortunate that we were able to display both exhibits at the same time," said director Carey Behrends. "And that was just by happenstance."

"Crossroads of Empire," which remains on display through Aug. 10, tells the story of Texas and the Southwest through maps — ranging from the earliest one known to outline the Gulf of Mexico — Martin Waldseemueller's 1513 chart of the area — as well as late 19th century railroad surveys.

"By studying these documents — the crude Spanish sketches of the Gulf Coast, the decorative maps of the 17th century, and the scientific surveys of the 19th century — the careful viewer can trace the history of the American Southwest, the land, and its people," Behrends said.

The other exhibit, "Annexation: Celebrating 150 Years of Texas Statehood," is sponsored by a grant from the Daughters of the Republic of Texas and The Texas Army and will remain through July 20.

"Annexation" features 24 panels of photographic images and captions detailing the conditions of life in Texas during the era of the republic and the debate that raged on whether to admit Texas as a state.

"In particular, it describes the rivalry of Sam Houston and Mirabeau B. Lamar and their opposing views of what Texas should be," Behrends said. "Attention is paid, also, to both the foreknown and the unforeseen consequences of admitting Texas into the United States."

Both exhibits were organized and are being circulated by the Texas Humanities Resource Center in Austin. "Crossroads" also received support from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JUNE 23, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Adopting a give-and-take attitude will lead to more fulfilling relationships. You are able to put a romance into proper perspective. Peruse real estate ads. Your hunt for a new home will end on a happy note. Be optimistic about your family's future. Going back to school will enable you to climb the ladder to fame and fortune. A valuable lesson will be learned early in 1997. Depend on the values your teachers instilled when you were growing up.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: country singer June Carter Cash, track legend Wilma Rudolph, singer Diana Trask, choreographer Bob Fosse.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hidden fears are easier to handle when brought out into the open. New lines of communication develop. A one-to-one relationship blossoms. Choose an intimate restaurant to dine in.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A loved one may be reticent now. Avoid probing. You may have to choose between two relationships soon. Acting reluctant will not fool anyone; make a definite choice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Beating around the bush will only cause trouble. Be direct. Others will appreciate your sincerity. A temporary cash flow problem could make family members more cost-conscious.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Welcome an opportunity to meet new people. A sermon is both enlightening and inspiring. An older person wants to bridge a generation gap. Meet this individual halfway.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone could exaggerate a romantic conquest. Deal promptly with a family financial problem. Take nothing for granted. A parent-child relationship requires careful nurturing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your optimism makes you fun to be around. You gain an advantage by not acting openly competitive. A relationship based on trust could last forever! Show more affection.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Try not to crowd your loved ones. Back off and give them some breathing space. The financial outlook brightens when you keep a lid on spending. Singles will find romance taking a surprising turn.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Analyze your relationships with an eye to improving them. Romance is in the air! Know what you really want in a mate. Home improvements are best left to experts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You receive strong support from many sources now. Speak up! Guard your reputation and privacy. Joint financial ventures bring better returns than anticipated.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You now realize that your original choice was the right one. Do not let others second guess you. Influential people like your style. Your appearance could influence a business decision. Dress on the conservative side.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance could blossom between you and a neighbor. Take things nice and slow. Protect your reputation. Travel will give you a fresh perspective on a domestic situation. Accept a gift with good grace.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not succumb to peer pressure. You can assert your independence without being abrasive. A phone call brings welcome family news. A financial crisis can be averted. A favor is granted when least expected.

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST

2♣	Pass	3♡	Pass
4◇	Pass	5♣	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♠

In the second series of Bols Bridge Tips quite a few years ago, Billy Eisenberg advised declarers to play low from dummy to the opening lead on many combinations. That advice worked splendidly on this deal from a major British team championship.

By jumping to three hearts on the second round of the auction, North showed a limit raise with only three trumps. In view of the fact that the holding contained no ruffing value, North would have done well to sign off at four hearts in response to partner's diamond cue-bid. Note that a doubleton club in the North hand would have made the slam well-nigh unbeatable barring some truly unlucky breaks.

Considering the auction, a spade certainly looked like the right lead from the West hand, and we can sympathize with the choice of the two. Since one discard was unlikely to be enough to land the slam, declarer called for a low spade from dummy. Not surprisingly, East could not read the situation and rose with the ace, then shifted to a diamond.

Declarer made no mistake. South shot up with the ace and started running trumps. After following to the first round, West could spare a diamond and two clubs on the next three trump leads, but the penultimate trump proved to be too much. A spade discard would promote the table's nine to the fulfilling trick; another club would set up the clubs; and the king of diamonds would establish declarer's queen. Just one of those run-of-the-mill slams that romp home with the greatest of ease.

EXHIBIT: Texas history hangs in museum

talks about serving the land and what the early explorers found on the land," Behrends said. "They put on some of the maps things like water sources, food sources, where the abundant herds of buffalo were. They showed where the Native Americans were found. That's a whole different point of view. That talks about the explorers.

"The 'Annexation' talks about the people themselves who settled the land. It's interesting because it talks about the history of Texas as a republic as well as what has happened in the state over the last 150 years."

While the "Annexation" exhibit is in Odessa, additional materials may find their way into the facility to enhance the display, he said.

"There's some Odessa residents who have looked at it and said, 'I've got so and so and I want to bring it in.' So we may be getting some more material for the exhibit before it's all over.

"We did get a collection of flags that represent the history of Texas. That adds to the color of the exhibit. Some other people in town have things like spinning wheels that were actually from the era represented in the photo murals. That will add another dimension to the exhibit."

In addition to the exhibitions, The Presidential Museum has a concert series ongoing this summer on Friday nights. Called "Back Porch Swing," the event brings a venue of talented folk performers to the facility for free performances through Aug. 23.

The selected entertainers write and perform original lyrics and acoustic music; many of their songs are inspired by their own experiences. The 8 p.m. summer concert series, made possible through community support, is family-oriented.

"It's doing real well," Behrends said. "We've had two so far and considering this is our first time to try anything like this, people are real receptive to it."

Museum members may pick up tickets during regular hours of operation Saturday, Tuesday and Wednesday before a particular performance. Non-members may pick up tickets Thursday and Friday.

For more information call 1-915-332-7123. The museum is open during the concert for self-guided tours. As always, no admission is charged, but donations are welcome.

'We did get a collection of flags that represent the history of Texas. That adds to the color of the exhibit. Some other people in town have things like spinning wheels that were actually from the era represented in the photo murals. That will add another dimension to the exhibit.'
— Carey Behrends, museum director

A native of Miami, Fla., Ward has been a private detective, an analyst for the oil industry and a Methodist minister. Through all of these careers, he's played music. Starting with the piano, guitar and ukulele when he was 5, he expanded his base to more than 30 instruments by the time he was in college.

He wrote his first song when he was 10. His song "Something for the Children" was selected as the theme for the March of Dimes in 1978.

"Bill's songs are intelligent, down-to-earth portraits that capture the very soul of his audience," Behrends said. "Each picture he paints is an insight into life, born from his diverse background and keen eye for the triumphs and tragedies that are so much a part of our everyday lives:"

Other performers are Andy Wilkinson, Lubbock, July 12; Joseph and Theresa Brunelle, Austin, July 26; Bill and Mary Muse, Willow City, Aug. 9; and David Edwards, Odessa, Aug. 23.

"The first one was done on the back porch itself, and guests brought their blankets and lawn chairs and put them on the lawn. Last week we had rain, and we brought it inside.

"So rain or shine, it's going to happen. It's more comfortable outside — we have more room to expand. If the crowd gets so big, we can flood onto the sidewalk. That won't be a problem."

Institutions hustle culture with fliers, freebies

By Carol Vogel
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — A cash card isn't just a cash card anymore: It also can get you free admission to a museum or a botanical garden. So can a ticket to a baseball game. And some airlines now offer culture as well as free trips in exchange for frequent-flier miles.

It may seem like an odd marriage of high and low, but as blockbuster museum shows and concert series proliferate this summer ("Cezanne" at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, "Winslow Homer," opening this week at the Metropolitan Museum, and Lincoln Center's "Festival 96" next month, to name a few), institutions are competing harder than ever for a slice of culture lovers' money and leisure time.

In the process of making up for cuts in subsidies, they have taken lessons in creative marketing from film studios and cosmetic companies.

Gifts-with-purchase abound. Users of a Chase Manhattan Bank ATM card get a receipt good for admission for two to the New York Botanical Gardens. Join Lufthansa's frequent flyer program and gain free admission to the Guggenheim Museum's Fifth Avenue and SoHo branches in New York as well as the Peggy Guggenheim Collection in Venice.

If your seat number is drawn from a lottery at the Philadelphia Phillies game on July 4, you win a pair of tickets to the hugely popular Cezanne retrospective. There's also a chance of winning a baseball with a facsimile of Cezanne's signature on it in a radio promotion by WXTU-FM in Philadelphia.

"WITH LESS government money around, we all have to be more entrepreneurial and figure out ways to stretch our advertising dollars," said David A. Ross, director of the Whitney Museum of American Art. "We are slowly learning lessons others have known for years."

While neither the institutions nor the sponsors will say how much money they have committed to marketing and promotions this summer, their methods have come a long way from the days when hanging a banner outside a museum was considered innovative. (The Metropolitan pioneered the strategy with its "Great Age of Frescoes" exhibition 28 years ago.)

Today cultural institutions are plugging their events on home shopping networks, the World Wide Web and ATM screens, and offering admission as part of discount travel packages.

The brochure will be available at each of the museums, at Lincoln Center, at a kiosk outside the "America's Smithsonian" exhibition at the New York Coliseum and at hotels and many McDonald's around the city. The four are also planning joint advertisements in other markets like Washington and Philadelphia.

"WE CAN be competitive, but sometimes the whole is greater than the parts," said Elizabeth Addison, deputy director for marketing and communications at the Modern. "Not only are we all competing for audience; there's also more pressure to generate revenue than ever before."

Officials at the Modern say the museum has nearly tripled its advertising this summer. It has also begun to develop promotion packages with hotels: The ITT Sheraton, for instance, is a sponsor of the Modern's "Picasso and Portraiture" show and has worked with the museum to offer discount travel packages.

Ms. Addison said the museum was also relying more on radio advertising to promote the exhibition. "It's so immediate," she said, "and you can change the message quickly when things like hours change."

Giving visitors more for their money is part of the sales pitch. The Modern, for example, has begun packaging tickets to the show, the tape of its "Picasso and Portraiture" Acoustiguide and the exhibition catalog at a price of $44.50, compared with a total of $51 for those items purchased separately. The package is available at the museum or through Ticketmaster.

THE RAIL and air industries are also seeking lucrative tie-ins: For the duration of the Cezanne show, which runs through Sept. 1, US Air and Amtrak are offering discounted fares to Philadelphia.

Corporate sponsors are also refining their strategies. Just as visitors expect more and more for the admission price, sponsors are beginning to expect more for their money. "It's no longer enough to just put a sponsor's name on a poster and give them thanks at the opening-night dinner," said Ben Hartley, a spokesman for the Guggenheim.

Hartley said that sponsors choose the Guggenheim for specific reasons: Lufthansa, for instance, knows that 60 percent of the museum's audience is international and it wants to tap into that market.

Hugo Boss, the German menswear company, has made a five-year commitment to the Guggenheim as a way of making its name known in the United States and cultivating an image as a company devoted to the arts.

Another German company, Deutsche Telekom, sponsored the reopening of the Guggenheim SoHo. Because it is in the process of going public, the telecommunications company is not allowed to advertise. But having its name on the museum's ground-floor multimedia galleries enhances its U.S. reputation.

Deutsche Telekom has also issued a phone card in Germany embossed with the museum's image.

PHONE CARDS with images of museums' facades or works from their collections are ubiquitous this summer. MCI has produced a series of cards depicting the Smithsonian or objects from its collections, and Nynex has come out with a card featuring the Whitney Museum. "It's a way of carrying the museum in your pocket," said Ross.

Its a bit of free advertising for the museums and a way of giving the telecommunications companies a new venue, since the cards are sold in museum shops.

Corporations see benefits beyond being known as arts benefactors. "It's a way of attracting new customers and retaining them," said Lisa Walker, a vice president of cultural affairs for Chase Manhattan.

"Arts funding used to be considered just a philanthropic donation, but now corporations are also discovering there are ways to support the arts that are also marketing-driven, so funds can come from different budgets within the bank."

This summer Chase is offering its customers free or discounted admission to the New York Botanical Gardens, the Roundabout Theater and the International Center of Photography. (The bank sponsors all three institutions.)

QVC, the home shopping channel, is tapping into the art world too. Its three-month old "Museum Tour" — two-hour specials on museums and gardens around the country not only sells museum-related products but also includes interviews with curators about exhibitions or permanent collections.

QVC HAS already broadcast from the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Mich. and plans to broadcast live from the Cezanne exhibition galleries from 10 p.m. to midnight on July 6. Philippe Cezanne, the artist's great-grandson, will be a guest on the show.

"So far we've had an overwhelming response," said William Lane, vice president for new markets at QVC. "It's great advertising for the museum. And for our viewers, all of a sudden a museum becomes a place and the art becomes accessible."

Besides selling the usual merchandise — scarves and beach towels with images of artworks — QVC is marketing a set of 14 by 11-inch "miniprints" of "Card Players," "Still Life With Curtain and Flowered Pitcher" and "Lac d'Annecy." A set costs about $20 and comes with a certificate signed by Philippe Cezanne, the great-grandson.

QVC also plans a show at the Metropolitan Museum this fall that museum officials say will probably focus on the permanent collection, although the details have not been worked out.

Since the Met does not sell separate tickets to its big exhibitions, it likes to see itself as different. "We don't use the term marketing," said Harold Holzer, a spokesman.

Original oils, limited edition prints to be on display at Midland Country Club

Original oils and limited edition prints by Midland artist Sharon V. Jackson will be on display at the Midland Country Club from July 1 through Aug. 26.

Mystical spirit horses of legends and dreams, Arabians, Andalusians, Afghan Hounds and ethnic and romantic women are central themes in most all of the artist's work.

Ms. Jackson has a bachelor of arts from Texas Tech University and studied interior design and art at Southern Methodist University.

She has been painting professionally since 1987.

Scary rides, stories may be good for children

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Space invaders lay waste to the White House.

Just your basic, wholesome childhood fantasies right?

Apparently, yes. And if you believe Phil Hettema, such seemingly horrific fare may, in fact, be healthy for young minds.

"This stuff has probably been controversial since the Brothers Grimm wrote their stories, but that's what storytelling is all about," says Hettema, senior vice president of attraction development for Universal Studios Hollywood.

As the summer gets under way, Southern California kids are, as usual, being inundated with visions of mayhem, menace and grotesquerie. From amusement park attractions like Universal's new Jurassic Park ride to movie blockbusters such as Disney's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and the PG-13-rated aliens epic "Independence Day," there's no shortage of raw material for a year's worth of prepubescent nightmares.

Yet as head of the team that developed the Jurassic Park ride (which opens Friday to the general public), Hettema asserts that fear can be not only fun for children and adolescents, but therapeutic as well.

While parents, educators and media watchdogs wring their hands over contemporary kiddie entertainment, a case can be made that dark subject matter helps children tame their inner demons and resolve universal fears of abandonment, death and annihilation.

That principle may apply no less to the slickly packaged, $100 million Jurassic Park ride than to hoary tales like "Little Red Riding Hood," movie classics like "Bambi" or prize-winning modern children's fiction such as Maurice Sendak's "Where the Wild Things Are."
