'We're going to win,' Bush says

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — George Bush plunged into his campaign for president today, proclaiming "we're going to win this election," while embattled running mate Dan Quayle tried to fend off a controversy over his military record by making light of it.

Appearing with Bush at a GOP breakfast, Quayle said, "I think I know how I am to introduce myself."

Squaring his shoulders and standing ramrod straight, he shouted in a clipped voice: "I stand at attention. Name: Dan Quayle. Serial number: 303 50 4096. Indiana National Guard, six years and proud of it."

The audience responded with laughter and cheers.

Quayle, a conservative senator from Indiana, has been dogged by questions about whether he used family influence to get into the National Guard at the height of the Vietnam War, virtually assuring he would avoid combat.

Bush, still buoyed by the rave reviews for his convention speech, made no mention of the Quayle controversy, focusing instead on his own self-proclaimed underdog campaign for the White House.

"Now we start. Now comes the beginning of the end, and last night there was a shifting of the gears," Bush said, adding he had received a congratulatory telephone call from President Reagan last night after accepting the GOP presidential nomination.

Bush said he was convinced that with the party behind him, "We are going to win this election."

He and Quayle appeared at a Republican National Committee affair before setting out for Quayle's hometown of Huntington, Ind., where a big welcoming rally awaited them.

Bush told the Republicans "You have given us a tremendous sendoff. I can't think of a better way to get out of town." Quayle got a warm reception at the breakfast, receiving even more applause than Bush.

From Indiana, Bush will point his campaign toward big battlefield states for the November election, visiting Ohio, Illinois, Washington state, Oregon, California and Texas in a non-stop blitz through Wednesday.

"I know that what it all comes down to, this election — what it all comes down to, after all the shouting and the cheers, is the man at the desk" in the Oval Office "and who should sit at that desk," Bush told cheering delegates in a convention windup speech Thursday night.

"My friends, I am that man," Bush said.

Although speechmaking is not Bush's strong suit, he delivered his remarks with strength, confidence and poise.

"He hit it. He hit it out of the park," exulted Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y. "For me, it was (a question of) survival, the speech of his life and he did it." Massachusetts delegate Joyce Hampers called it "a grand slam."

Nebraska Gov. Kay Orr said: "It was a sensitive speech because he was so strong and yet so sensitive. He showed that he is attuned to the American people. I believe he revealed a George Bush people have not yet seen and had a chance to appreciate."

"The main message here," said Florida Gov. Bob Martinez, "is America discovered George Bush."

Bush's wife, Barbara, delighted the convention with a tribute to her husband. "You've nominated for the presidency a man who is as strong and caring and decent as America herself."

Yet, the controversy over Quayle cast a cloud over the convention euphoria and the forging of a ticket to challenge Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis.

Republicans fretted the furor would undermine GOP chances of renewing their eight-year lease on the White House.

"It's not going to help the ticket," said Illinois Secretary of State Jim Edgar, a Republican. "I think we'll just have to wait a few days and see how this thing settles out."

Local GOP delegates describe race as 'close, but winnable'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

NEW ORLEANS — Midland's five delegates to the Republican Convention won't be going to sleep early Tuesday night, Nov. 8.

"Close, but winnable" is how they described the 1988 presidential race pitting the rich against the rich and the Texan against the Texan.

Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle, 41, is a "perfect complement to my father," said George W. Bush, "besides the fact he's a year younger than me."

All five are looking for Quayle to infect Vice President George Bush's campaign with a vitality political experts say is desperately needed.

A grass roots effort is imperative to the Republicans' winning the election, said Lou Brown.

"We're starting from behind, but that will help build the big momentum," added Midland's only female delegate.

Ernest Angelo concurs that the Republicans are starting out behind in the race.

"The Democrats made the jump after their convention, but after this convention I suspect there'll be less than five points difference," Angelo said.

"By mid-September, it'll be a toss-up," he predicted.

State Rep. Tom Craddick sees Quayle as the key to clinching the midwestern states surrounding his native Indiana.

Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, Craddick noted, defeated Bush in those states during the primary season.

Another boon Quayle presents is that he will keep the focal point of the ticket on Bush, Craddick said.

As running mates, New York Rep. Jack Kemp or Dole would have distracted the public from a front-and-center view of the "new" Bush, the state representative from Midland explained.

With Quayle, a wide spectrum of voters is included — just as Gov. Thomas Kean's "politics of inclusion" speech Tuesday night advocated, Mrs. Brown said.

Quayle will attract the baby boomers, the senior citizens — wowed by his spunk — and the conservative right, often a trouble spot with the more moderate Republicans, she added.

Until Thursday morning, the only soft spot Republicans saw in the ticket was a lack of public awareness about Quayle.

By midday Thursday, however, Quayle likely was wishing for that beloved anonymous status he'd lost with the sunrise.

Conjecture swarmed throughout New Orleans Thursday that the Indiana senator had used his wealthy family's influence to gain entrance in 1969 to the National Guard in lieu of joining the Army and going to Vietnam.

Everyone queried on the floor blamed a "scandal-hunting media" for the talk.

"I don't think it's going to hurt him," said Midland oilman Bobby Holt.

"I just don't think it's there. They (the media) can look as hard as they want.

"If this is the best they can find, then give up," Holt said.

Added Angelo: "Baloney."

"It's unfortunate in my opinion this has come up, but it's much ado about nothing," Angelo declared.

Bush phones Midland man, reminisces about old times

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

When George Bush recalled working in the oil fields of West Texas during his acceptance speech Thursday night, he must have had friends like Midlander Ford Chapman on his mind.

That was certainly the case the night before, when Bush called the 79-year-old semi-retired independent just hours before the Texas delegation placed Bush over the top at the New Orleans Super Dome.

"He called him about 4 p.m. (Wednesday)," said Midland Councilman Bob Monaghan, a close friend of Chapman. "They talked about old experiences and the time he and George attended the Texas Republican Convention about 15 years ago."

It was during one of those sessions in San Antonio, Chapman recalled, that a delegate came up to Bush and told him someday he would be president of the United States, according to Monaghan.

Chapman, who has been in poor health for a long time, asked Monaghan Monday night to contact Bush.

Knowledge key to Basin's oil potential, speakers say

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Knowledge, not politics, is the key to realizing the immense petroleum potential the Permian Basin still holds, according to this morning's speakers at the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's annual meeting.

"The complex reservoirs of the Permian Basin hold about 30 billion barrels of mobile oil reserves," not recoverable by current conventional means, Dr. William Fisher of the Bureau of Economic Geology at the University of Texas at Austin told the PBPA members.

"Higher prices and greater drilling efforts in the early '80s allowed us to convert 500 million barrels," into proven reserves, Fisher said. But, "in the future, we will have to substitute greater know-how for price."

Fisher's theme echoed an earlier point made by Jack Ekstrom of Petroleum Information, a Denver-based data brokerage. The company's director of industry affairs recounted the "sins" of past Washington administrations.

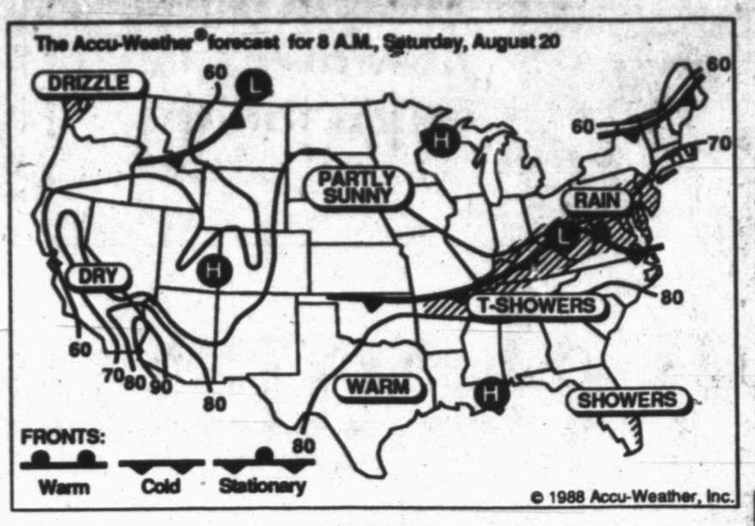
WEATHER SUMMARY



Chances for local rain slim

From Staff and Wire Reports

Less than a 20 percent chance of late afternoon and evening thunderstorms is forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Otherwise, fair skies will prevail. The low will be in the upper 60s and winds will be out of the southeast at 10-15 m.p.h.

Saturday will be much the same, with a less than 20 percent chance of late afternoon and evening thunderstorms continuing in the forecast. The high will be in the upper 90s and winds will be out of the southeast 10-15 mph.

Thursday's high of 95 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 102 set for that date in 1987. The overnight low of 68 was eight degrees warmer than the record low of 60 set for this date in 1950.

STATE

Widely scattered thunderstorms are forecast across much of the state through Saturday, but forecasters say they will do little to alleviate the scorching heat.

Forecasters issued warnings for a vast area of North Texas through Saturday, saying that excessive heat is expected in the area, including the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex and in the Waco area. The highest temperatures will be in the Waco area, where heat index readings will approach the 115-degree mark, forecasters said.

The widely scattered thunderstorms will be most numerous in the Panhandle tonight.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 70s, ranging from the 60s in the Hill Country and higher elevations of Southwest Texas to the 80s along the coast.

NATION

A cold front plodded across central and eastern sections of the nation today, lowering temperatures and scattering rain and thunderstorms.

Rain ranged from southern Iowa and northern Missouri through the upper Ohio Valley to northeastern North Carolina.

Another cold front caused showers and thunderstorms in eastern Montana and northwestern North Dakota.

Elsewhere, showers and thunderstorms were scattered from western Kansas to eastern New Mexico; from Arkansas to Kentucky; and across southern Florida.

Fair skies prevailed across most of the rest of the nation.

CAMPAIGN

"Let's face it, the question is whether a rich kid's family got him into the Guard when other people were getting drafted," said John DeCamp, a Vietnam veteran and GOP delegate from Nebraska. "Some of them like me got shot at a lot and great many of them just got shot and killed."

Quayle, a member of an influential newspaper family, refused to discuss the matter Thursday on the grounds it would detract from Bush's acceptance speech. "It's the vice president's night, why should Sen. Quayle hold some big news conference?" said press secretary Sheila Tate.

The Democratic opposition campaign stepped around the controversy over Quayle and the National Guard but raised questions about his qualifications.

"We leave it to the American people to judge who made the best decision, who made the presidential decision," said Paul Brountas, chairman of Michael Dukakis' presidential campaign. "The key question is: Did (Bush) pick the person who is best qualified to serve?"

Quayle had an abundance of defenders, most notably George Bush.

"I'm proud to have Dan Quayle at my side," Bush said, giving delegates an unmistakable sign that he was not backing away from his running mate. The declaration triggered roars of approval.

Bush, recently revived in the polls after a 17-point deficit to Dukakis, said: "There are a lot of great stories in politics about the underdog winning — and this is going to be one of them. I mean to run hard, to fight hard, to stand on the issues — and I mean to win."

Striking back at the theme of Dukakis' speech in the Democratic convention last month, Bush said, "Some say this isn't an election about ideology, it's an election about competence.

"But this election isn't only about competence, for competence is a narrow idea," Bush said. "Competence makes the trains run on time but doesn't know where they're going."

Quayle, accepting the vice presidential nomination, referred only indirectly to the flap surrounding him. He mentioned his service in the National Guard and said, "I am proud of it."

"I am privileged to be the first person of my generation to be on a national ticket," said the 41-year-old baby-boomer. "I don't presume to talk for everyone of my generation, but I know that a great many will agree with me when I express thanks to George Bush's generation for bringing us an era of peace and freedom and opportunity."

Midlander Ford Chapman, left, stands next to friend and Republican presidential nominee George Bush during an earlier Bush visit to Midland.

FRIEND

"He called me and said he really had to talk with George...it was real important to him to tell him that story. I told him I'd see what I could do."

But Monaghan truly doubted Bush could squeeze in the time to call his old friend, particularly with the nomination so close at hand.

Monaghan attempted to contact former Midland mayor and Republican National Committeeman Ernie Angelo in New Orleans and longtime Chapman friend Bobby Holt, a local independent, who also serves as Bush's Texas finance chairman.

Monaghan said he had no way of knowing whether the men received his message or that they were even able to get it to Bush.

But Wednesday night, while Monaghan was eating dinner, he said he received a cheery phone call from Chapman — Bush had called.

Monaghan said it was an important moment for Chapman — one he'll probably never forget. "He's always been a strong supporter of the Republican party. When George ran (for offices) Ford was there."

Bush was certainly cognizant of that fact during his acceptance speech, when he recalled moving to West Texas with his family in 1948 and starting his own oil business.

While he did not mention Midland by name, it was certainly understood, at least by his local gallery. "I learned a few things about life in this place called Texas," said Bush. "...I learned that the good done by a single good job can be felt in ways you can't imagine."

That thought must have been shared by Chapman, who 60 years ago, worked as a tool dresser on a cable tool rig for room and board. Years later he would become a successful oil independent and civic leader, who would make his fortune in the fields of Pecos.

Pentagon admits mistakes, but defends jet's downing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon today acknowledged that the crew of the USS Vincennes made several mistakes in shooting down an Iranian airliner but concluded that the ship's captain, based on what he had been told, "did what his nation expected of him..."

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. William Crowe, said an investigation of the July 3 tragedy found that Capt. Will C. Rogers III and his crew were acting under severe stress as the airliner approached them during a surface engagement with Iranian gunboats.

The Vincennes mistook the airliner for an F-14 fighter and shot it down, killing 290 people.

"The commanding officer never received the clear evidence that he thought he needed to establish that the Iranian aircraft had not come to participate in the ongoing surface action," Crowe told a news conference.

Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci told reporters he had decided to withdraw a letter of censure proposed for one of the ship's officers, despite mistakes made by that officer.

Crowe said President Reagan had received the report and concurred in its findings.

Crowe cited these mistakes:

— A conclusion that the civilian Airbus was descending rather than ascending as it approached the Vincennes.

— A report that the jetliner was transmitting a signal identifying it as a military aircraft.

— A report by Crowe on the day of the incident that the plane was outside a commercial air corridor crossing the Persian Gulf.

Crowe said that, taken individually, the mistakes "were not crucial to the...decision" to fire two Standard missiles at the Airbus.

"Even cumulatively, they do not change the picture in a decisive way," said Crowe.

"Our past experience in the gulf, the intelligence available to the ship, and the rules of engagement all supported such a judgment" by the ship's captain, Crowe said.

"I believe that giving the operating environment, Capt. Rogers acted reasonably and did what his nation expected of him in defense of his ship and crew," Crowe said.

"The main recommendation of the investigation was that no disciplinary (action) should be taken against any U.S. naval personnel associated with this incident," said Crowe.

Despite some shifts, the findings of the final report were largely consistent with the Pentagon statements on July 3 in emphasizing the stressful combat environment in which Rogers and his crew operated.

The report offered a wealth of new detail: the officers in the command and control center could hear gunfire from the surface battle outside, including the noise of bullets pinging off the metal hull; the ship was heeling at a 32-degree angle as the airliner approached, making it difficult for the men to stand, causing objects to fall off flat surfaces and lights to flicker.

"I dare say that it would be hard to even have this press conference under those conditions, much less reach critical decisions on a number of targets during a very short timeframe," said Carlucci.

In all, Carlucci said, Rogers faced a series of problems "he could not control or discount" in the seven minutes between the plane's departure from an Iranian field and the destruction of the Airbus.

Crowe laid much of the blame for the tragedy on Iran.

"An examination of the events on 3 July leads quickly to the conclusion that Iran must share responsibility for the tragedy, and the investigation so found," he said.

"By any measure, it was unconscionable to ignore the repeated warnings of the United States and permit an airliner to take off from a joint military-civilian airfield and fly directly into the midst of a surface action in the Strait of Hormuz which the Iranians themselves had initiated," he said.

The report exonerated the sophisticated Aegis radar and tracking system aboard the Vincennes, one of the Navy's much lauded Ticonderoga-class guided missile cruisers.

Carlucci said the investigation would lead to a number of changes in operations, including modifying the devices that display critical information on approaching targets and subjecting the operators of the Aegis system to psychological testing to ensure they are ready for combat.

PBPA

He concluded neither of the current presidential candidates offer meaningful help for the industry.

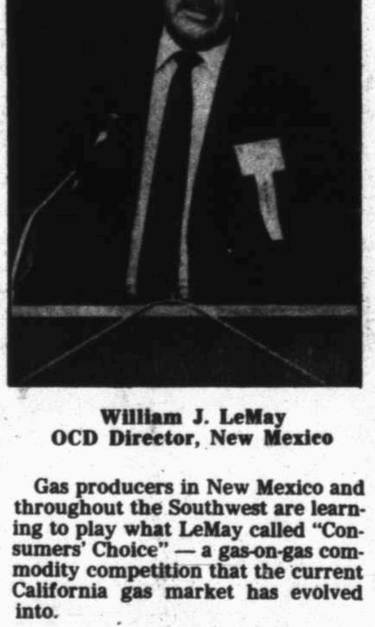
"Don't expect much from this — or for that matter — any election. Any administration cannot and will not work to solve our domestic oil and gas difficulties alone," Ekstrom said.

"The day of reckoning is coming for our energy follies, and it's not very far off. You have unlocked some of the secrets of the Permian Basin — but many more remain," Ekstrom told the group.

"With your knowledge and experience, it could well be that your best days are in front of you, and it will be a long time before that expertise is no longer needed."

Reaching those better days won't come without monumental challenges, especially for gas producers, according to the first speaker who addressed members of the 1,200-member association this morning.

"The knowledge to not only find, but market, new gas will be required to play the rapidly changing gas game," William J. LeMay, director of the Oil Conservation Division of New Mexico, said.



William J. LeMay
OCD Director, New Mexico

Gas producers in New Mexico and throughout the Southwest are learning to play what LeMay called "Consumers' Choice" — a gas-on-gas commodity competition that the current California gas market has evolved into.

The game is not without its side effects, he explained, and when — likely in the early 1990s — supply surplus turns to supply shortage, the game will change to "Producers' Choice," with better prices in store through the end of the century.

All three men emphasized a long-range outlook toward the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which has induced the price problems of today.

Both Ekstrom and Fisher said prospects for price improvements on the basis of the Iran-Iraq cease-fire are overly optimistic. "It won't mean a great deal less or more crude on the market," Ekstrom said.

"History doesn't give us much reason to be optimistic that OPEC will be able to balance supply to demand, regardless of the Iran-Iraq situation," Fisher added.

The reserve growth potential of the Permian Basin will come more from improved recovery from existing reservoirs than from new field exploration.

More than 95 percent of the 7 billion-barrel increase in ultimate resource recovery in the Permian Basin between 1974 and 1986 was attributable to additional recovery from existing fields, Fisher explained.

How fast oil producers are able to move ahead in improving production efficiencies and ultimate resource recovery rates will hinge on price, Fisher said. In addition to OPEC being unwilling to move prices upward "there is no U.S. appetite for making the unilateral moves that would raise and stabilize prices," he said.

"Gasoline prices at their lowest level in 40 years — in real terms — are a powerful economic narcotic," Fisher said. No one in government, or looking to get into government is willing to argue against that, regardless of what the longer term cheap oil consequences may be, the BEG director added.

LeMay of the New Mexico OCD looked at the bargain price of oil in different terms. He said the $15-per-barrel range for West Texas Intermediate is particularly low when compared to the per 42-gallon barrel price of:

- coffee — $336;
- beer — $226;
- gin or whiskey — $2,100 - 2,500;
- distilled water — $21;
- gasoline (at the pump) — $29;
- black ink — $944; or
- red ink — $2,291.

It seems red ink always costs more than being in the black, he concluded.

Brant elected president of PBPA during meeting

From Staff Reports

Glenn Brant was elected president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association during the group's annual meeting general membership luncheon.

Texans won't go with the Dukakis ticket because they realize they can have one of their own in the top — not second — spot, Mrs. Brown said.

Vice presidential nominees don't color a voter's opinion when voting, unless he is totally indifferent to the presidential nominees, Angelo said.

Angelo also admitted he publicly predicted Tuesday morning Quayle would get the nod.

"The concluding part of the process of elimination was that he was conservative, attractive, young and articulate," Angelo said.

Coupled with Bush, it's a winning ticket, the Midland five predicted.

But come Monday, expect their phone lines to be burning.

The race is not over, it has just begun.

Fire still threatens Helena suburbs

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — A 20,000-acre wildfire that left dead cattle and the hulks of houses in its wake continued to lick at timber stands and grasslands southeast of Helena early today, despite the efforts of 2,000 firefighters.

"It sounded like a train," said Barbara Duffy, whose cabin and 30 cows were destroyed by flames as the fire quadrupled in size Thursday. "When we came out of the garage, we saw this fireball coming at us through the trees."

Elsewhere, fire forced Yellowstone National Park officials in Wyoming to close a third campground, and firefighters in California, Idaho, Utah and other Western states battled outdoor blazes.

Fire officials said 10 homes and cabins in the Elkhorn Mountains near Helena had been torched by the flames and that shifting winds Thursday night began pushing the blaze out of the high country and into grasslands near the town of Winston, about 15 miles southeast of Helena.

"We're still at the mercy of the winds," said fire information officer Bob Krepps. "We're not in a real safe position on a lot of the perimeter."

At least 40 people remained out of their homes as volunteer fire crews were helping cut fire lines around houses and other structures west of Winston and near Montana City, a small town a few miles south of Helena, authorities said.

Fickle winds Thursday afternoon turned flames away from the Saddle Mountain subdivision about 10 miles southeast of Helena, where 400 to 500 people had been warned they might have to evacuate, fire officials said.

Gov. Ted Schwinden flew in a helicopter over the fire and said he feared it would get worse. "The wind has come up, the humidity is down, the temperature is up and we still have a serious fire situation," Schwinden said.

Fire officials, however, said they were optimistic about a cooling trend predicted for the weekend.

Krepps said four homes and six summer cabins were burned early Thursday morning when the fast-moving flames took an unexpected turn toward the north.

Before the fire ballooned Wednesday night, about 2,000 firefighters had it 95 percent contained. The blaze began Aug. 9 when a four-wheel-drive vehicle caught fire. Eighty percent of the fire has burned on the Helena National Forest.

Hundreds of miles away in southeastern Montana, about 1,000 firefighters were hoping they could tighten the noose today around fires that have burned 13,600 acres of timber and grassland near Lame Deer.

Most of the three fires surrounding Lame Deer, a town of about 600 people on the North Cheyenne Indian Reservation, were contained by fire lines Thursday night, said fire information officer Ron Smith.

In north-central Montana, nearly 950 firefighters were battling a 4,800-acre fire on the Rocky Boys Indian Reservation. Containment was predicted by tonight.

In northwest Wyoming, Yellowstone officials closed the Norris Campground on Thursday as a precaution due to a 69,000-acre fire five miles to the south.

The fire also forced the closure again Thursday of a 14-mile road as trees scorched by the blaze toppled onto the pavement. Another park campground remained closed because of a nearby blaze, while a third was shut to provide a campground for firefighters.

About 272,000 acres of the nation's oldest park have been damaged by flames in recent weeks.

Meanwhile, in north-central Wyoming's Bighorn National Forest, officials ordered the evacuation for a second time of the Apache Oil Co.'s Paradise Ranch as a 3,000-acre fire, pushed by high winds, jumped fire lines and threatened from a half-mile away.

Firefighters in southwest Utah were nearing containment of an 850-acre brush fire, believed to be man-caused, northwest of St. George.

Odds of drought ending at least 1 in 500

WASHINGTON (AP) — The odds the government is putting on an end to the drought over the next couple of months would likely be of little interest to even the most dedicated riverboat gambler.

The probability of getting enough rain to end the drought ranges "from 1 in 500 for central Iowa to 1 in 1,000" for at least three other major drought regions, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reports.

And, looking back at history, even that may be optimistic.

That's because never in the period that records have been kept has rainfall in August, September and October in major drought-plagued areas been enough to end a shortage equivalent to today's.

In this week's drought advisory, the National Climatic Data Center takes a look at four specific drought areas, and what it finds isn't encouraging.

In central Iowa, for example, the amount of rain needed by Oct. 31 to end the drought totals 22.42 inches. That amount can be expected in the August-October period only once in 500 years, the advisory said.

Richard Heim, a meteorologist at the Asheville, N.C., data center, said those were the best odds found in the four areas studied — the other three all came out to one chance in 1,000 of getting enough rain by the end of October to declare the drought broken.

Those areas are northeastern Montana, near the North Dakota border, where 10.36 inches of rain would be needed to end the drought; the east slope of the Cascades in Washington, where 13.21 inches would be needed, and Tennessee, which would require 21.98 inches by Oct. 31, Heim said.

Only once in 1,000 years can those regions expect that much rain in the months of August, September and October, he said.

"In no prior year," going back to 1895, did any of the four studied regions receive as much rain as they now need in the three-month period, according to records kept by the center.

The calculations are based on the detailed Palmer Drought Index, a system developed to allow scientists to measure shortages of moisture over the long term.

The system compares water available from precipitation and from stored soil moisture with water used by plants, evaporation, runoff, people and to recharge lakes, reservoirs and dry soil. If incoming and outgoing water balance, the reading is zero.

An index reading of minus 4 is termed severe drought, and the drought is considered to have ended when the Palmer reading gets back up to minus 0.5, since that is nearly a balance and indicates that much of the soil moisture has been replenished.

Severe drought continues to afflict large areas of the nation despite some recent rains which provided short-term moisture, but did little to recharge depleted ground water supplies or to improve the conditions of many rivers and lakes. Palmer Drought Index readings range as high as minus 7 and minus 8 in some areas.

In addition to soil moisture prob lems, restoring normal river and stream conditions in some region could take years.

"Two to three years of above normal winter precipitation over the mountainous headwaters of the basin followed by above normal snowpack runoff for each of the years" is needed to get the Missouri River basin back to normal, the National Weather Service hydrologic office reported.

For California, the hydrologic office reports, "one year of normal winter precipitation followed by normal spring snowpack runoff" would do the job.

NATION

The Ohio and lower Mississippi river basins, the agency says, could be restored to normal flows by "a series of major low pressure systems producing at least 8-12 inches of rain over much of the Ohio Basin."

GOP: The Republican National Convention

Briefly:

Houston campaigns for next convention

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Even before the Republican National Convention ended, Houston began campaigning to persuade GOP officials to hold their next quadrennial gathering in the nation's fourth-largest city.

Donald Ward of the Houston Convention and Visitors Bureau was making the rounds this week distributing red, white and blue stickers that read "Houston '92 Convention" and talking with various Republican groups as the GOP gathering ended Thursday.

"I think Houston will host one of the national political conventions in 1992, I really do," said Ward, who made a similar recruiting trip to Atlanta for last month's Democratic convention.

Ward said Houston has one big thing going for it: No matter who wins the November election, a Houston resident will be at the White House.

Republican presidential nominee George Bush calls Houston home, even if his current address is a hotel room. And Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen's residence is a Houston condominium.

Surely, the hometown factor gives Houston a leg up, Ward said.

"We are in a very unique position. Either way it goes, the president or the vice president will be from Houston," he said.

TV ratings drop again

NEW ORELANS (AP) — Television ratings for the Republican National Convention dropped again Wednesday night, and ABC easily outdistanced its two rivals for the largest share of the dwindling audience.

The A.C. Nielsen Co. reported that ABC had an average rating of 8.7 on the night Vice President George Bush secured the party's presidential nomination. NBC and CBS tied with ratings of 6.7.

The three-network total of 16.7 was down from 19.9 on Monday and 17.6 on Tuesday. By contrast, the third night of the Democratic National Convention drew a cumulative rating of 22.1.

Each rating point represents 866,000 homes with television.

For the first three nights of the GOP convention, the three networks' average rating is 18.1, compared to 21.0 for the first three nights of the Democratic gathering in Atlanta.

Gay rights opposed

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Gay rights activists who staged a demonstration to seek more federal money to fight AIDS were denounced by a small group of young Republicans who chanted phrases such as "please go quick, you're all going to die."

The two sides traded slogans Thursday during a demonstration outside the Louisiana Superdome, where the Republican National Convention was held.

Other protests on the last day of the convention included one aimed at vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle and another by Palestinians denouncing Israeli treatment.

About 40 gay rights activists lined up outside a Superdome entrance as delegates and guests arrived to hear a speech by GOP presidential nominee George Bush.

Black enjoys ovation

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former child movie star Shirley Temple Black said the high point of the Republican National Convention for her was the floor demonstration for George Bush.

"I could have been doing the Shirley Temple Black workout tape," the former actress and first-time California convention delegate said of the Thursday night event. "I had a flag in my teeth, I was ringing a bell and I was up and down dancing, really jamming, for 25 minutes."

Mrs. Black, 60, said her goal was to personally demonstrate her support for her longtime friend Bush.

"I've watched the conventions on television for so many years. It's much more exciting to be on the floor, but I could see it better and hear it better back home," Mrs. Black said.

Romney has no regrets

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former Michigan Gov. George Romney says he didn't miss a thing by skipping a trip to the Republican National Convention.

Romney, who himself was a presidential contender in 1968, gave up his delegate seat to make room in the Michigan contingent for a supporter of television evangelist Pat Robertson.

In a telephone interview from Bloomfield Hills, Mich., Romney said he had no regrets about the decision to stay home.

"I'm following the convention and probably I'm seeing more of it than the people there. And I'm sober," he said.

Since the nomination of George Bush was never in question, the significance of one delegate's vote was diminished, he said.

Debate would pit enthusiasm, experience

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS — Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen are expected to debate at least once before the November election, and the contest should provide a stark contrast between youthful enthusiasm and the experience of age.

Quayle, the boyish-looking running mate of GOP presidential nominee George Bush, is a 41-year-old from Indiana in the second year of his second term in the U.S. Senate.

Even as he pursues the vice presidency with Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis, Bentsen, the 67-year-old Texas patrician, is running for his third term in the U.S. Senate.

Youth and experience can cut both ways, and speculations regarding the outcome of a Quayle-Bentsen debate reflect that fact.

GOP consultant Roger Stone said Quayle's youth will be an advantage. "It sets up a classic confrontation between the old and the young," Stone said that Quayle is "a vigorous 41" while Bentsen "is a bloodless patrician, with a kind of slow, southern style."

But William Schneider, a political analyst and commentator, said: "Bentsen is a seasoned pro and a Senate titan. ... Quayle might look like a puppy nipping at his heels."

A vice presidential debate has tentatively been scheduled for Omaha on Oct. 11 by a bipartisan commission created last year by the two major parties.

The League of Women Voters, which has conducted presidential and vice presidential debates since 1976, says it also will sponsor debates this year.

Bentsen and Quayle have debated before — most recently on the Senate floor and on the MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour — when they argued over whether workers should be given 60 days' notice before a plant or business is closed.

Quayle strongly opposed the notification legislation, arguing that it would tie plant managers' hands and, in at least some cases, force plants closings that might have been avoided if negotiations with creditors or investors could have been held in private.

Bentsen, the floor manager for the legislation, argued that Quayle's position showed "a lack of sensitivity for the problems of the average working man and woman in this country." He said that American workers are entitled to more than a 'pink slip" when they lose their jobs.

After once being vetoed by President Reagan, a plant notification law ultimately went into effect without Reagan's signature.

While Quayle's position on the legislation did prevail, his performance against Bentsen in their debates so impressed campaign managers for Bush that it became a factor in Bush's choice of a running mate.

Meanwhile, Bentsen has said that he would relish another debate with Quayle.

On many issues, the two senators share similar views: both favor easing gun control laws, support the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law and aid to the contra rebels fighting the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. Both also support President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, the space-based defense shield popularly known as "Star Wars," tax reform, and limits on contributions to political action committees.

Raymond Strother, a Democratic consultant working for Bentsen on his Senate campaign, speculated that, in a debate with Bentsen, Quayle might avoid going head-to-head on issues and instead try to force Bentsen to defend positions taken by Dukakis.

Issues, however, are not all that debates are about. As GOP consultant Stone put it: "How you look and sound is as important as what you say in these debates."

Quayle's classmates describe 'isolated' character of DePauw

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst News Service

NEW ORLEANS — It was a very different time and a distant place on the campus of DePauw University in 1969 when Dan Quayle and other well-to-do students made sure the Vietnam War did not intrude upon their well-planned lives, Quayle's classmates recalled Thursday.

> "The question is whether a rich kid's family got him into the guard when other people were getting drafted.'
>
> — John DeCamp, Vietnam veteran and GOP delegate

The antiwar movement stirring campuses elsewhere did not touch the isolated, 115-acre campus nestled in Greencastle, a close-knit community of barely 9,000 in Indiana's corn and soybean country.

Students' plans for graduate school and a social life centering on fraternities and sororities dominated the lives of 2,300 largely middle-class students at the private liberal arts college.

"It wasn't that we were numb to the Vietnamese war," said Karel Kelsik, 41, a classmate of the GOP vice presidential nominee now living in Worthington, Ohio. "I think we looked at things from a different standpoint. I'm going to sound like apple pie and motherhood and kind of a ditz, but it was one of the favorite times of my life."

J. Denny Haythorn, a Quayle classmate who is now a professor and director of the law library at Whittier (Calif.) Law School, remembered the same environment: "You almost had to be in Indiana and southern Illinois at the time. It was as if we were five years behind" college students on other campuses.

That pampered collegiate world seemed distant indeed here Thursday as controversy grew over Quayle's apparent use of family contacts to bypass a waiting list to get into the Indiana National Guard.

The move enabled Quayle to avoid a Selective Service system that conscripted 289,000 men that year, many of whom joined the 500,000 troops then in Vietnam.

The controversy is fueled by questions of privilege, hypocrisy and the possibility that Quayle was not forthright with Bush aides before he was chosen as Bush's running mate.

Quayle, 41, scion of a family with a $1 billion fortune, built a reputation as a conservative Republican who backed U.S. defense spending and deployments of U.S. forces around the world during 12 years in the House and Senate.

Telephone calls "may have been made" on Quayle's behalf to gain a slot in the National Guard, Quayle's Senate press secretary, Jeff Nesbit, told reporters.

Wendell C. Phillippi, a retired Army major general and former commander of the Indiana National Guard then serving as managing editor of the Quayle-family owned Indianapolis News, said he "called the military department (in 1969) and said, 'Here's a good man. You ought to take him.' "

A National Guard official said that a waiting list of as many as 35 men existed at the time. But a spokesman for the Indiana National Guard said there were 160 vacancies in the state then. Eighteen-month waiting lists were common at units around the country.

"Let's face it," said John DeCamp, a veteran of Vietnam and a GOP delegate. "The question is whether a rich kid's family got him into the guard when other people were getting drafted."

Bush aides held emergency meetings through the day in a bid to gain control of the politically damaging controversy. Explained James Baker III, Bush campaign manager: ⅞⅞"What you're going to find here at the outside (is) that he was assisted by his family in joining the National Guard some 20 years or so ago when he was 22 years of age."

George Bush vowed to stand by his running mate. "I don't think I could have selected anybody that'll do more to help in the election than Dan Quayle," Bush said after his aides' meetings. "He is going to be outstanding on this ticket."

Emphasized Bush campaign aide Alixe Glen: "Not a single thought is being given to changing the ticket." Quayle is expected to detail the 1969 events at a press conference Friday.

Quayle's decision to join the National Guard in order to attend night law school at Indiana University rather than volunteer for active duty was common on campus at the time, friends said.

"It seemed like everybody I knew was going to law school. We all intended to do it," said Haythorn, who was in an Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps unit at the time. "At that time, people were doing all kinds of things not to go to Vietnam."

Recalled Quayle: "When we were making those decisions in my senior year there were a number of us at DePauw that filed applications for the National Guard or the Army Reserves. ... Many of us got in, so it wasn't just a random example. Many of us got in."

Quayle said he was "willing and ready to serve my country" and chose "to serve my country in the National Guard like millions of other people."

The National Guard at the time had 389,000 personnel, a Pentagon official said.

Nine days before graduation from college on May 25, 1969, Quayle enlisted as a welder in an Army National Guard unit.

He underwent basic training at Ft. Bragg, N.C., starting in August and transferred to welding school at Aberdeen, Md., Proving Ground by the end of September. Quayle was home for Christmas, serving for only a month in a maintenance shop of the state guard headquarters.

Afterward, Quayle transferred to the public affairs office as a clerk typist, eventually qualifying as a public information specialist and leaving the Army with an honorable discharge six years after enlistment in 1975.

At the Pentagon, National Guard spokesman Dan Donahue said the Defense Department was reviewing Quayle's National Guard record and would release portions that did not violate privacy on Friday. A guard spokesman in Indianapolis said a Quayle aide collected his records Thursday and was taking them to New Orleans.

Friends continued to support Quayle.

Said Haythorn: "I'm not personally offended that he was in the Guard and that I was in more jeopardy. It would not affect my decision to support him."

"I don't see him as a draft dodger," said Kelsik. "The guy didn't go to Canada. ... To my recollection of him 20 years ago I was quite frankly shocked to find out he had that much money. I remember him as a waiter in a sorority house. That's not an indication of someone who is sitting back on his haunches."

Memorial visitors have questions on Quayle

By ROB REHG
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — As they solemnly filed past the gleaming black wall of names at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, Americans paying tribute to the country's 58,000 dead in Vietnam found it hard to blame Dan Quayle for avoiding war.

The 41-year-old Republican senator from Indiana, George Bush's running mate, is embroiled in controversy over how he got into the National Guard in 1969, thus avoiding the military draft and service in the Vietnam war.

Bush confirmed his commitment to Quayle on Thursday, and both candidates made clear their intention to hang tough on the issue.

Many of those at the wall viewing the names of those killed in the Vietnam War on Thursday — Democrats as well as Republicans — expressed sympathy for Quayle.

"I used to think as a good American you should go and fight," said Dorothy Sidelinger, a 52-year-old Republican from Bristol, Conn. "But I have mixed feelings about that war. I don't know why we were there. I can't blame young people for not wanting to be part of it and I don't blame Dan Quayle."

Gerald Morris, 55, a Democrat from Slidell, La., said Quayle should not be faulted for his decision even though the senator has a reputation as a hawk on defense issues.

"You are talking to somebody who joined the National Guard out of high school and still was called to serve in the Korean War," Morris said. "Once you get into the Guard, it's not a 100 percent guarantee that you have avoided service."

Donald Cuppett, a 44-year-old Democrat from Uniontown, Pa., who said he was leaning toward his party's presidential nominee, Michael Dukakis, also said Quayle should not be criticized for what he did.

"At least he didn't go to Canada," said Cuppett who served in the Air Force and was stationed in Japan from 1964-66. "He fulfilled his military obligation by serving in the National Guard and that's all we should ask of people."

Of 21 people asked to comment on the Quayle controversy, only two said they thought it was a significant issue to be considered in the presidential contest.

James Bandy, a 48-year-old Dade City, Fla., resident who favors Bush for president, said he would support Dukakis unless Quayle was removed from the ticket.

"Quayle's got a lot of nerve to stand up and ask to be second in charge when he wouldn't even go to war for this country," Bandy said.

Annie Bauer, an Amherst, N.H., Republican said she would withhold her support for Bush until questions about how Quayle got into the Guard were more clearly resolved.

"If in fact it is proven that he did use his family influence to get out of serving in the war I won't vote for the ticket," Bauer said. "It shows sort of an attitude that if you have enough money, you can do anything."

Meanwhile, Rick O'Dell, a spokesman for the Washington based office of Vietnam Veterans of America, a private lobbying organization with a membership of about 35,000 veterans, said telephones were "ringing constantly" Thursday with people expressing "indignation, outrage, shock" concerning the revelations regarding Quayle's military service.

"It's a legitimate question to ask Quayle what he was doing in 1969 and how he did it," O'Dell said. "That war forced hard decisions for a lot of us. We want to hear his explanation."

But as people quietly made their way past the Vietnam memorial on a hot and humid day, the mood was less combative.

"How many people really know at that age what they were doing with their life?" asked George Ford, 39, of Lawrenceville, N.J. "I know a lot of people who joined the National Guard. I can't hold it against (Quayle) for doing the same thing other people were doing."

David Harman, 34, of Orlando, Fla., agreed: "When you're a kid, it's hard to understand what you should do in that situation. It's very unfair that they are trying to make an issue of something that happened 20 years ago."

Harman's wife, Kathy, said she was sure Quayle had paid a price as so many others did during the war: "I'll bet Dan Quayle has just as many friends on that wall as we do."

Quayle makes light of military question

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Sen. Dan Quayle today poked fun at the controversy over his entry into the National Guard during the Vietnam War by introducing himself to party leaders in mock military fashion as if addressing a superior.

Quayle, who appeared with George Bush at a Republican National Committee meeting the morning after the GOP national convention unamimously ratified him as the vice presidential nominee, said jokingly that he had learned how to introduce himself on the campaign trail.

Then Quayle snapped to attention, and in loud, staccato-like military diction, said: "I stand at attention. Name: Dan Quayle. Serial number 303 50 4096. Indiana National Guard. Six years and proud of it." The audience applauded.

Quayle proceeded to praise Bush, the presidential nominee, before the two men headed out on the campaign trail, traveling first to Indiana, Quayle's home state.

The Indiana senator promised answers today to questions over what influence his family used to secure his entry into the National Guard. The issue tarnished Quayle selection as the No. 2 on the GOP ticket even before he was nominated Thursday night.

Aides to Bush spent much of the day debating a response to the furor and denying any thought of replacing Quayle on the ticket.

"There's nothing we feel Sen. Quayle misled us on," Bush campaign official Rich Bond said today on NBC-TV.

But critics were harsher.

"Let's face it, the question is whether a rich kid's family got him into the Guard when other people were getting drafted," said John DeCamp, a Vietnam veteran and Republican delegate from Nebraska. "Some of them like me got shot at a lot and a great many of them just plain got shot and killed."

Rep. Bob Dornan of California, every bit a conservative, said, "It requires a Checkers-like speech, and he must do — must do it — quickly, before this gets out of hand."

New York's Kemp leaving convention, 'not making plans'

Copley News Service

NEW ORLEANS — For the first time in almost two decades, New York Congressman Jack Kemp is not quite sure where he's headed when he leaves the Republican National Convention.

The conservative champion of supply-side economics gave up the upstate New York seat he has held since 1970 to run for the Repulican presidential nomination. That lost, he was left on the sidelines when Vice President George Bush selected Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle as his running mate.

"I'm going to go back and play quarterback for the Buffalo Bills," the former football player joked as he slowly weaved through a crush of well-wishers at a GOP gala. "I'm not making any plans. The convention's not over yet. The election's not over. I'm going to campaign for the Bush-Quayle ticket with a great deal of enthusiasm."

Kemp, 53, denied reports that he is pondering a move back to his native California for a 1992 challenge of Democratic U.S. Sen. Alan Cranston and declined to speculate on any administration post that might be offered if Bush wins.

Earlier, Kemp told reporters that the two principal posts he would like, secretary of treasury or secretary of state, are unavailable.

But former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont, one of the congressman's conservative opponents during the primaries, said Kemp has established himself among the party's "intellectual cutting edge" and deserves a top position in any Bush administration.

"He's done as much as anyone, perhaps with the exception of Ronald Reagan to get us where we are, and I want him in a position where he's got a voice," du Pont said.

The former San Diego Chargers and Buffalo Bills quarterback can expect numerous job offers from the business and financial community that he is closely aligned with, conservative research groups or perhaps even the National Football League, should Commissioner Pete Rozelle retire, said Bov Schuman, a Kemp adviser.

"He has some options open to him, one of which might be commissioner of the NFL," said Schuman, a San Diego political consultant and Kemp's West Coast coordinator.

"It really depends a lot on what happens in the fall," Schuman said.

If Bush wins and does not offer Kemp a major appointment, Schuman speculated Kemp will take a corporate position and remain visible through his new political action committee, Campaign for a New Majority.

"This could be an opportunity for him to really make some serious money over the next few years," Shuman said. 'If Bush loses, then I would think you'll probably see him go into a think tank and use that and the PAC as a vehicle from which to get the word out and begin the groundwork for another run in '92."

Kemp was born and raised in Southern California, entering politics as an aide to then-Gov. Ronald Reagan in 1967. Both he and his wife, Joanne, still have most of their family in the state. But Shuman said a California Senate race has not "even been a consideration."

In New Orleans, party not so grand

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

BOURBON STREET — Looking for a grand old party?

Don't look here, say merchants miffed at the drop in sales brought on by what they believe is the onslaught of meeting-weary, conservative-minded Republicans.

Oh sure, the jazz tunes flood the streets and bars and gift shops are a dime a dozen.

People here are walking and looking and smiling, but are also leaving home without their American Express travelers checks.

Cynthia Clesi, 26, is a scantily clad dancer at Fun Limited, a topless bar here.

"The Republicans have been told these places will take advantage of them. They've also been told not to come in because of the scandal it could create if they were seen in here," Ms. Clesi said Thursday.

"They think it's a sin," she added. "I just want them to go home."

Adds Alicia Pierre, another dancer at Fun Limited: "It's killing us. The Republicans have money. Why hurt us? We're not that bad.

"We're just working to live like everyone else," explained Ms. Pierre, 40.

Woody Woodson, proprietor of the Old Absinthe Bar on Conti at Bourbon streets said Republicans are good drinkers "when they're not caucus-ing."

"We've had more people, but the same amount of money flowing in," Woodson said.

"The people spending the most money here are the media trying to find out what the Republicans are really doing," the bar manager said.

Showcase

At the Golden Fleur de Lis gift shop here, business has been slow, said cashier Frances Poole.

"I didn't expect big bucks. It's only in the aftermath of these things that the money comes in," Ms. Poole said.

Hot sellers at her store are — oh wow — T-shirts with elephants on them.

About four people — a veritable slew — sauntered into the Bottom of the Cup Tea Room here Thursday to have their fortunes read.

Adele Mullin, the proprietress and resident psychic, predicts a Bush-Quayle victory in November.

"And hey, I'm not a Bush-lover," said Ms. Mullin who has correctly predicted 17 of the last 19 Super Bowls.

"I said a long time ago (Vice President George) Bush would pick (Kansas Sen. Robert) Dole or an unknown for the vice presidential" running mate spot, the psychic claimed.

At Sammy's Seafood bar, oysters-on-the-half-shell sales have been good, despite the fact there is no "R" in August.

Oysters are supposedly best during months whose names contain that letter.

"Business in August is normally slow and this convention is no exception," said Roland DiPietro, the restaurant's general manager.

"The city gave a lot of things away to get this convention here," DiPietro claimed.

Free food and liquor abound for many convention-goers. Non-convention tourists don't flock to the French Quarter bacause they don't want to get caught in the maze of Republicans, the manager explained.

The drought, however, has opened up oyster beds in the region and has provided seafood-lovers with some good pickings, he added.

"One good thing, though, the city has cleaned up its act for this convention. Everything has been spruced up," DiPietro said.

"We still haven't recovered I don't think from the World's Fair, which was a total flop, and the oil bust," the manager added.

Georgia delegate Marshall Vandy said he's too worn out from fighting with his state's contingent of Pat Robertson delegates to shop or drink.

"We almost broke out into a fist fight last night at the roll call," Vandy said.

"Robertson threatened to have all his people walk out if we didn't give his people more delegate spots," the Georgia man said.

"I'm just worn out. But today, I said to heck with the convention and decided to start enjoying New Orleans.

"Up until now, I don't think the delegates have had time to spend money," Vandy speculated.

Press briefings and delegate breakfasts in New Orleans start anywhere from 6 a.m. on.

During the night convention sessions, delegates have been "floored" in the Superdome until 11 p.m. at least.

In between the breakfasts and night sessions are meetings, financial planning sessions, naps and hot baths.

Informal queries among the Texas media and press secretaries garnered the same response.

There is no time to shop or partake in recreational activities.

It's work, work, work...sleep.

Drat.

There is one place, however, that experiences good business no matter what.

Pat O'Brien's, a greenly decorated spirits extablishment located at 718 Saint Peter St.

"You haven't been in New Orleans unless you've had a Hurricane," said Paul Bauer, a bartender at the world-famous watering hole.

Hurricanes are made of four ounces of rum and four ounces of Hurricane cocktail mix and sell for $6. The drinker keeps the glass.

Open until 5 a.m. on the weekends and 4 a.m. during the week, "Pat O's" is the "only place in the quarter you can go and get what you pay for," Bauer maintained.

Tourists this week have been coming in at 10 a.m. to start quaffing the potent concoctions, the bartender added. "And we've had the Republicans in here until 4 a.m.," he claimed.

"People love this place. You've got the whole world in front of you."

And after a couple of Hurricanes, Bauer promised, consumers have "double worlds" in front of them.

Texas delegates eagerly grab party line

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

NEW ORLEANS — Texas Republicans have adopted a decidedly partisan stance on the two burning issues of the just-ended Republican National Convention.

Presidential nominee George Bush, they say, did "just what he had to do" in capturing the convention's momentum for the fall campaign in his 50-minute acceptance speech Thursday night.

And second, they maintain that as long as he didn't use his family's wealth or connections to duck the Vietnam War, Dan Quayle's service in the National Guard will not affect the elections.

State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland said Bush sharply defined the differences between himself and Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis on the campaign's important issues. "That's the best speech I ever heard him give," Craddick said.

On George Bush:

'He was the most inspiring speaker. ... I didn't think he'd be this good.'

— Roy Barrera Jr., delegate, San Antonio

"He was the most inspiring speaker of this convention," said delegate Roy Barrera Jr. of San Antonio. "I didn't think he'd be this good."

"He showed America he's a warm, compassionate person, but he's very strong in his convictions," said Plainview delegate John Kirchhoff. "It's obvious the top of the ticket is energetic and enthusiastic, and that enthusasm's contagious."

Indiana Sen. Quayle, the party's vice presidential nominee and an heir to the Pulliam publishing fortune, signed up for the Guard in 1969 — at the height of the Vietnam-era draft — and served until 1975. During those six years as a weekend typist and public information officer, he married, graduated from law school and began his career in public office.

Quayle calls the thinly-veiled allegation of draft dodging "a cheap shot," and Texas Republicans back him up on that, blaming a bored army of reporters.

"I think the press is so starved for an issue that they'll write about anything," said state Sen. Don Henderson, 39, of Houston, who spent the Vietnam years in college and never entered the service.

"It's wild that they're taking to this," said Congressman Tom DeLay of Sugarland, at 41 the same age as Quayle and who also sat out the draft in college. "This cheap shot is telling the majority of those of us our age that we are less than American."

Houston GOP activist Rob Mosbacher said the Democrats could have an issue, with "a very important 'if.' " "If they can prove that he used influence to avoid service in Vietnam, that would be a liability," Mosbacher said, "but how serious a liability, I don't know."

Past employees of Quayle's family-owned newspaper say they made some telephone calls to help the young men enter the Guard, but Guard officials say the Indiana units in 1969 were 85-percent full and looking for recruits anyway.

On Dan Quayle:

'I think the press is so starved for an issue that they'll write about anything.'

— Don Henderson, State Senator, Houston

Based on those facts, Kirchhoff said, "I heavily discount the accusations."

"I don't see it as a positive, but I just don't see it as a mega-issue," U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas, who portrayed GOP nominee George Bush as a John Wayne war hero during a prime time speech Wednesday night, said when asked how the story would affect the November elections. "If this is the worst that Dan Quayle's ever done in his life, this won't keep him from going to heaven."

State Sen. Henderson said Gramm's speech "was to put in perspective those people who try to ridicule George Bush the man." Americans think differently of Vietnam and World War II, he said.

"It's a different time and a different place."

'New' Bush must blend familiarity, challenge

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

NEW ORLEANS — The new George Bush looks, sounds and acts a lot like the old one — but he stands alone now, with a scant three months to prove himself a leader who deserves the kind of loyalty he has been delivering.

His hour upon the stage at the Republican National Convention was a solid sendoff for the campaign against Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis, even though Bush image-makers oversold the performance. They had said it was going to a sort of debut, an introduction to the American electorate.

Bush himself said it was the most important speech of his career, an unmatched opportunity to present himself and his goals.

But this was no transformation. Indeed, if one were needed, the vice president, self-described underdog to Dukakis, would be in far worse campaign trouble.

Analysis

He needed no introduction. He needed to blend the promise of continuity with a set of goals to call his own. That is the task, and the dilemma, that makes running for president as vice president a daunting assignment.

Bush also had to get his convention back on its script, after a day of controversy over the military record of Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, his vice presidential nominee.

That issue remains a problem for Quayle, and therefore for Bush, but it barely intruded on the GOP finale. Quayle was nominated without so much as a murmur of dissent, and drew no louder cheers than when he said he was proud of his stint in the National Guard, the service that kept him out of the Vietnam draft.

It was a distraction Bush didn't need on a night he and his strategists considered crucial. Had Bush stuck to his plan to name his running mate on Thursday, instead of moving it up two days, he would have avoided the Quayle flap. Questions about his military record, and about string-pulling to get into the National Guard, surely would have arisen. But they wouldn't have emerged in the hothouse atmosphere of a political convention, where such things flourish.

Nevertheless, Bush accomplished what he set out to do. He said his piece with humor and style. He played the cheering crowd effectively, sometimes speaking over the din, sometimes pausing to take the ovations.

Neither Dukakis nor Bush ranks among the masters of political oratory. Both Dukakis and Bush rose to their occasions, the Democratic nominee in his Atlanta acceptance speech and Bush in his Thursday night address.

Bush said it was the night his campaign really began. He spoke of the achievements of the Reagan administration, and claimed a piece of the credit. But the pronoun changed from "we" to "I" as he dealt with the campaign ahead and with the measures he said he will take in the White House.

He said he had helped Reagan for 7 1/2 years with candor and with loyalty. "But now you must see me for what I am: the Republican candidate for president of the United States," the vice president said.

"This election isn't about ideology, it's about competence," Dukakis had said in Atlanta.

"Competence is the creed of the technocrat who makes sure the gears mesh but doesn't for a second understand the magic of the machine," said Bush. "The truth is, this election is about the beliefs we share, the values we honor, the principles we hold dear."

Debating Dukakis, joking about his lack of charisma and about putting his silver foot up to relax, etching his own set of proposals for a new administration, Bush gave what Republican cheerleaders called the speech of his life.

"He had to," said Sen. Alfonse D'Amato of New York. "He was like a man down to his last $10 in a poker game. He had to win it, otherwise he's out."

There are a good many hands to be played before the Nov. 8 election decides who really is out.

Unusual praise for speech-making launches fall campaign

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — George Bush's acceptance speech for the Republican presidential nomination was rated a "home run" today by Republican National Committee Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf as the new GOP ticket was given a warm sendoff by Republican leaders.

Bush, in turn, told a post-convention meeting of the Republican National Committee he appreciated the many plaudits he has received for the speech, including one that came by phone Thursday night from President Reagan.

"I just can't think of a better way to get out of town," the vice president joked as he and his running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, embarked on the ticket's maiden campaign trip.

Their first stop was to be Quayle's hometown of Huntington, Ind., for a rally. The two will campaign in the Midwest together through Sunday, when Bush will go on alone for another three days of campaigning on the West Coast.

The vice president gave what many Republicans said was the best speech of his career Thursday night. He portrayed himself as "not the most eloquent" and confessed "I may be sometimes a little awkward."

"I am a quiet man — but I hear the quiet people others don't," Bush told the final session of the Republican National Convention in a speech that probed a personality he previously had claimed was not in focus for the public.

"You hit a home run, Mr. Vice President, you hit a home run," Fahrenkopf told Bush.

At today's meeting, Bush gained effective control over the national party for the fall campaign as the committee voted without dissent to install Fred Malek, who had been Bush's convention manager, as deputy chairman.

Fahrenkopf, at Bush's request, will stay on as chairman, but with reduced responsibilities, as Malek assumes command of election-related activities of the party.

Bush told the panel that he received a call from Reagan after his speech. "I told him I would do my level best to move forward along the lines we talked about last night. ... We're going to win this election."

"Now we start, now comes the beginning of the end," Bush said. "Last night, there was a shifting of the gears.'

But, added Bush, "I'm not going to give you the whole load after a long night."

In his speech, Bush talked about his family, his values, and what he called his desire for a "kinder, gentler nation," drawing repeated applause.

Just as Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis had done at his party's convention last month, the vice president delivered a speech that was better received than even some supporters had expected.

"A grand slam," said Massachusetts delegate Joyce Hampers.

"I think he touched all the important bases he needed to touch," said Oklahoma delegate Dick Freeman.

And, even though Bush's day of triumph was clouded by questions surrounding Quayle's military service, Bush declared: "I'm proud to have Dan Quayle at my side."

Bush stamps 'silver foot,' puts his print on comments

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — George Bush delighted the Republican convention Thursday night by poking fun at his own blueblood background while tweaking Democratic efforts to disparage him.

At the Democratic convention in Atlanta last month, Ann Richards, the Texas state treasurer, drew a big laugh in her keynote speech by saying that Bush was born with a silver foot in his mouth.

Bush mentioned his wealthy Connecticut background Thursday night, saying, "Yes, my parents were prosperous." But he said he also had known a simple way of life when he moved to Texas and started his own business as a young, newly-married man.

"I learned a few things about life in a place called Texas," he said.

"When I was working on this part of the speech, Barbara came in and asked what I was doing and I looked up and I said, 'I'm working hard.' And she said, 'Oh dear, don't worry. Relax, sit back, take off your shoes and put up your silver foot.'"

The convention hall erupted in laughter and applause.

Boosting his chances

Republican presidential nominee George Bush lifts granddaughter Nancy in the air as he celebrates the response to his acceptance of the nomination on the podium of New Orleans' Superdome.

Quotable:

GEORGE BUSH, accepting the presidential nomination of his party: "There are a lot of great stories in politics about the underdog winning — and this is going to be one of them."

DAN QUAYLE, alluding to the controversy over his military service: "As a young man, I served six years in the National Guard, and, like millions of Americans who have served in the Guard and who serve today — and I am proud of that."

REP. BOB DORNAN of California, saying Quayle must act swiftly to diffuse the controversy over his military service: "It requires a Checkers-like speech, and he must do — must do it — quickly, before this gets out of hand."

LEO NADEAU, the vice president's tail-gunner when Bush was a Navy bomber pilot during World War II, plugging Bush for president: "When we elect our next commander-in-chief, we will have made sure he is someone who has the courage and experience we can depend on for our lives and our livelihoods."

Heat wave taking toll

Associated Press

An investigation into the deaths of five elderly Boston residents during the heat wave found no problems with their building's ventilation system, while in Illinois the summer's torrid stranglehold claimed its 40th victim.

Twenty-three cities in nine states set or tied temperature records for the date Thursday, the National Weather Service reported. But forecasters promised that a cooling trend was on the way in several areas as residents cast about, sometimes desperately, for ways to beat the heat.

The deaths in Massachusetts occurred between Aug. 4 and Monday, a period when temperatures soared into the 90s. State Medical Examiner Bryan Blackbourne said the clustering of the deaths in the same place and during a short time led him to conclude heat was a contributing factor. Four of the victims lived on the top floor of the eight-story building.

Illinois authorities said an 85-year-old Danville man died of heat stroke and reported his body temperature was 105 degrees when he was found in his home. They said he had no air conditioner and his doors and windows closed.

In Chicago, Cook County officials said the county's death toll from the summer heat stood at 40. Most of the victims were elderly.

Test-firing called success

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (AP) — More than 2½ years after a flawed booster rocket joint doomed the Challenger, the redesigned part is "the safest thing on the space shuttle" and elated engineers say the craft is ready to launch.

NASA and Morton Thiokol hailed Thursday's performance of a deliberately flawed booster in the last in a series of five test-firings required before Discovery can proceed with its scheduled liftoff this fall.

"Fantastic! It looked really good. This is it," said John Thirkill, vice president of space operations for the company, which designs the booster rockets.

"We're ready to go launch," said Allan McDonald, Morton Thiokol's vice president of engineering, after inspecting the 126-foot-long booster following the two-minute horizontal test.

The test culminated a $470 million effort to correct a faulty joint seal that on Jan. 28, 1986, allowed a plume of fiery gas to escape, triggering the explosion that killed Challenger's seven crew members.

25 kids fly in for fling

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Twenty-five wide-eyed kids from Georgia, beneficiaries of a man who took an airline promotion very, very seriously, began a four-day Southern California fling Thursday with a backstage look at Hollywood.

Clark Howard, a retired travel agent, flew 26,338 miles on 68 flights in 48 days in a marathon-on-wings to earn the free ride West in an Eastern Airlines promotion.

The 30-member entourage, 25 youngsters and five chaperones that included Howard, arrived at Los Angeles International Airport at 11:08 a.m.

White House won't give up Noriega documents

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — The White House says it will not provide information sought by congressional investigators about alleged drug dealing by Panamanian ruler Manuel Antonio Noriega unless the scope of the investigation is reduced.

The announcement Thursday by President Reagan's chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, came as Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis accused the White House of "stonewalling" the probe by the General Accounting Office.

The inquiry could delve into Republican presidential nominee George Bush's knowledge of the Noriega case.

Bush, who is promoting his role in administration anti-drug efforts, has denied having early knowledge of Noriega's ties to the drug world or suppressing information about the matter. For years, Noriega provided intelligence information to the CIA, which Bush headed in the 1970's.

Fitzwater, in Santa Barbara while Reagan vacations at his ranch north of here, said administration officials had "met with the GAO in an effort to narrow the request, which GAO declined to do."

He said the GAO request "asks for a broad range of sensitive intelligence material, information from open law enforcement files, and material reflecting the deliberative decision-making process of the executive branch."

The administration told the GAO on July 13 that it would need to complete a legal review before responding to the request, Fitzwater said.

"The Justice Department has just completed that review and has concluded that the subject matter of the request is beyond GAO's statutory authority," he said. "The Justice Department has also concluded that, even were the request within GAO's legal authority, there are statutory and constitutional objections to providing various specific categories of information requested."

Based on this advice, the White House spokesman said, "We cannot participate in the study as currently designed."

In Miami, Dukakis said, "I think the White House does not want to cooperate because they are embarrassed by this. They should be embarrassed by this."

Nancy R. Kingsbury, who is directing the study for the GAO, an investigative arm of Congress, said the agency has had disputes with the executive branch in the past over specific documents, but it is unusual for the administration to refuse to answer any questions at all.

Nicholas Rostow, legal adviser to the National Security Council, said in a letter to Ms. Kingsbury that the GAO request raised "important statutory and constitutional issues" requiring analysis before the administration could reply.

The Rostow letter was made public by Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark., who requested the study along with Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass.

Rostow's letter was followed by one from State Department comptroller Roger B. Feldman saying the NSC counsel was "acting as the administration's point of contact on this matter" and adding, "All executive branch agencies have been instructed by the White House not to take any action on your request until various legal issues have been analyzed by the administration."

Rostow's office said he was not available to comment.

Ms. Kingsbury said the study is part of a larger inquiry examining how information about drug trafficking by foreign officials has affected U.S. foreign policy decisions.

Noriega was indicted on drug trafficking charges earlier this year by two federal grand juries in Florida. The administration has sought without success to force Noriega from power in Panama since that time.

School tries education in corporate manner

CHICAGO (AP) — A new elementary school in one of the nation's most criticized school systems will "reinvent the wheel," its founder says, by using corporate-style management to boost learning like they do profits.

The school, dedicated Thursday, has gained the blessing and the backing of such giants of capitalism as McDonald's Corp. and United Airlines.

"It's a compelling plan to educate young people — not only in Chicago but across the country," McDonald's spokeswoman Stephanie Skurdy said after the dedication of the Corporate-Community School on the city's West Side.

The school will be run like a business — meaning that if principal Elaine C. Mosley, a former elementary school principal in suburban Oak Park, is unable to produce a superior "product" — students — she could be replaced, said Joe Kellman, the school's founder.

The tuition-free school, slated to begin classes Sept. 6 with 150 students and seven teachers, is being subsidized by almost three dozen sponsors.

Sixteen of the corporations raised $2 million of the $3 million needed to run the school for three years, officials said. The annual cost is about $4,100 per student, about the same as the cost to educate public school students.

"It's a model project, hopeful for urban reform in school programs," said Elaine Younglove, spokeswoman for another sponsor, United Airlines, which has pledged $300,000 in support over a three-year period. McDonald's has given $75,000.

"We thought it was an opportunity. ... There's a high dropout rate in Chicago, and that's one of our personal concerns, getting that dropout rate down," she said Thursday night.

Chicago schools last year were called the nation's worst by U.S. Education Secretary William J. Bennett, who labeled the city's educational bureaucracy "the blob" and said the system was in "educational meltdown."

Nearly 45 percent of students who began school with the class of 1985 dropped out before graduating, and half of the city's public high schools ranked in the bottom 1 percent of U.S. schools for student scores on the American College Test, statistics have shown.

The Corporate-Community School will try to start students out on a better foot.

'We're going to reinvent the wheel," said Kellman, 68, head of the Globe Glass & Mirror Co. and founder of the Better Boys Foundation. "We're going to turn out inner city children with a great education."

The first wave of youngsters — most of them black or Hispanic — were chosen randomly by computer from 2,000 applications for the initial pre-school through third grade program. The seven teachers were selected from 200 applicants from around the nation, said project director Primus Mootry.

Classes are to be organized by skill level rather than age, so slower students are not predisposed to an early image of failure, organizers said. The curriculum will emphasize basics of reading, writing, arithmetic and spelling, as well as the development of social and reasoning skills.

Mootry said one teacher and one teacher's aid will be assigned to each class of 25 pupils, and parental involvement will be encouraged.

Study: Lowering expectations from alcohol helps deter drinking

ATLANTA (AP) — College students reduced their drinking more if their assumptions about alcohol's benefits were challenged than if they were warned about its dangers, psychologists say.

"We're looking at this as an approach to prevention" of problem drinking, said researcher Renelle Massey of the University of South Florida at Tampa.

Study results support a theory that one reason people drink is because they think it will make them funny, brave, more sociable, sexier, more assertive or better in some other way, she said.

Levels of such "expectancies" have been linked to alcohol consumption in previous studies, she said in an interview Sunday at the American Psychological Association's annual meeting.

Her study, done with Mark Goldman of the university, included female college students who said they drank moderately.

After the students recorded their normal alcohol consumption for three weeks, 25 were assigned to a program to lower their alcohol expectancies, 25 others to a more traditional program that focused on dangers of excessive drinking, and 27 to receive no training at all.

For one activity in the expectancies program, students of legal age were given either an alcoholic beverage or a placebo, but they were not told which. Afterward, the group played charades.

Then, those students and the under-age members of the group were asked to guess who had gotten alcohol, on the basis of their performance.

"Everybody made mistakes," Massey said.

Their inaccuracy led to a discussion of how people have been led to believe through television, advertising and everyday conversation that alcohol can make people sexy, funny and so on.

Participants also were asked to look for songs, advertisements and other places "where they may be told alcohol is going to do good things for you," she said.

The impact on their drinking habits a month after the program shows that examining expectancies and demonstrating how misleading they are "is a lot more potent than just telling people about the potential hazards of excessive drinking," Massey said.

To analyze the effect of the experimental and traditional programs, researchers divided the students into 36 low-level and 41 high-level drinkers, depending on whether they had drunk fewer or more than eight drinks per week before the training.

The expectancies training made both groups cut back significantly. High-level drinkers went from an average of 9.7 drinks a week to 6.1, while low-level students dropped from 5.5 drinks to four.

In contrast, the traditional program affected only the low-level drinkers significantly, reducing their consumption from 6.4 to three drinks a week. High-level drinkers changed only from 10.9 drinks to 9.4 drinks weekly.

Future program may be able to target particular expectancies and provide an alternative to alcohol, Massey said. For example, people who think alcohol would make them more social could be taught social skills, like how to meet people, she said.

Peter Finn, assistant professor of psychology at Indiana University and an alcohol researcher, said Massey's experiment was well done and the results make sense.

But such research must look at changes in other expectancies besides just positive ones, he said.

People also hold notions that alcohol can be bad for their health and their self-control, and those ideas also play a role in how much people drink and whether drinking becomes a problem, he said.

Smugglers evading detection

OTTAWA (AP) — They pose as a happy family on vacation but stuff their suitcases with marijuana. Others blithely sail into port with a hold full of liquid hashish, or dissolve their illicit cargo in windshield wiper fluid.

Whether the methods are obvious or ingenious, most drug smugglers in Canada are evading detection, say law enforcement agencies.

Only a fraction of the 90 million travelers who entered Canada last year were checked for narcotics and few drug shipments were intercepted, said Arthur Lewis, head of enforcement at Canada Customs.

"I've seen estimates as low as 5 percent," he said. "We're not naive enough to think we're going to stop it."

Vast empty spaces and a 5,335-mile border with the United States make Canada an easy touch for drug traffic in both directions.

"They're trying to move further and further north because of (law enforcement) pressure in Florida and so little patrol capability here," said Lewis.

Authorities rule out a U.S.-style "zero tolerance" blitz at the border because of concern for constitutional rights.

"I don't think our country would tolerate it," said Detective Inspector Gerry Hawke of Ontario Provincial Police.

Canadian enforcers did seize 40 tons of illicit drugs last year and nab more than 10,000 people for drug offenses. Customs agents expect to confiscate drugs worth $330 million this year, a tenfold increase since 1982.

Large-volume traffickers use sealed ship containers and trailer trucks, knowing that police cannot possibly check them all.

"Trailers are lined up at all the bridges from the U.S. and we know a fair amount of drugs are coming in this way. But we can't ask them all to unload," said Hawke.

Drugs were also found in a baby's diapers, jade figurines, a piano, the tubing of a luggage cart, scuba tanks, sacks of coffee, in the lining of running shoes, car windshield wiper fluid and a truck's hydraulic system, officers said. One hardened cocaine solution was disguised as a shipment of ponchos.

A trawler was seized at Vancouver in British Columbia with eight tons of marijuana from Thailand, and a woman and her son were jailed for attempting to import $1.6 million worth of Columbian cocaine in 3.5-ounce packages sent registered mail.

"Swallowers and stuffers" concealing drugs on their person are the bane of airport security, said Inspector Neil Pouliot of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. A chief method is to swallow condoms filled with cocaine.

Thorough body searches are increasing. "There is no moral code when you're dealing with narcotics. Everything is fair game," said Customs inspector Michael Crichton.

U.S. customs officers at Niagara Falls found $75 million worth of heroin in the false bottom of a suitcase two Vietnamese-born couriers were taking to New York. Police in Regina in Saskatchewan discovered a basement lined with aluminum foil where a forest of marijuana was growing hydroponically under 5,000 watt lightbulbs and an automatic watering system.

Neither Canada Customs nor the Mounted Police even attempt to patrol the Great Lakes, an open invitation to drug merchants. "We rely on inside information so we can be there to meet them," said Lewis.

His problem is that Customs has just 197 drug officers nationwide, aided by 32 dog teams sniffing baggage and cargo at ports of entry. The Mounties deploy 1,100 drug enforcers, including 27 liaison officers at Canadian embassies from Thailand to Jamaica and one each in Miami, Fla., New York and Los Angeles.

The country's combined anti-narcotics force of 1,500 concentrates on suppliers, not users. Even with major busts, street prices declined last year as the flow continued.

The Mounties estimate the drug trade in Canada is now worth $8.3 billion a year, while their budget to combat the scourge is less than $83 million.

"The market is expanding, there's no doubt about that," said the Mounties' assistant commissioner, Marcel Coutu. "We could do a better job if we had more money and more people."

Drug offenses also rose 9 percent last year; Montreal police say half the crime in the city is now drug-related. Marijuana remains the most popular drug, while Canada has about 500,000 cocaine users — compared to an estimated 12 million in the United States. Crack use is not widespread.

Bush speech put race in high gear

George Bush accepted the Republican nomination for president Thursday evening in a speech that should answer the questions about who he really is and what he stands for. And in providing that insight, the vice president detailed for the American public what he would seek to accomplish as the nation's highest elected official.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis even got an answer to the question that's been bothering him: Where was George? during the Reagan years. George was providing staunch support for a strongly conservative president attempting to pull the nation back from the threshhold of economic calamity, brought on by the failed policies of previous administrations.

Thursday night's address was a bold stroke by a man who admittedly sat silent for seven-and-a-half years as Ronald Reagan masterminded the greatest economic expansion of the nation's history. No longer silent, Bush noted that as president he would continue along the path Reagan placed the nation on in 1981 because that plan has worked, evidenced by low inflation and unemployment rates, an interest rate half that which the nation struggled under when the Reagan-Bush team first moved to Washington, a highly improved employment picture and no higher taxes. Bush obviously is proud of where he and Reagan have brought the nation in only seven and a half years and is confident he and Vice Presidential nominee Dan Quayle can improve on the current statistics in the next term. As Bush noted, though, the gains of the past years are not permanent and could be wiped out if correct choices are not made on the next administration.

Bush showed Thursday night that many of the derogatory labels that have been attached to him in recent years are so much back-biting and political hot-air. The George Bush who addressed the Republican National Convention — and the nation — was not an uncertain, waffling and unprepared "wimp." Instead, the Bush who spoke was confident, although not cocky; certain that he knows the correct future course for the nation; at ease with his abilities, gained through years of public service; and imaginative about what can be accomplished in the future. George Bush was a different man, but the same man. The nation has not seen enough of the leader who addressed the Republican convention.

The one hitch in the Thursday night performance is that questions are still being asked about Sen. Quayle's service in the National Guard, and whether favoritism was shown to keep him out of the Vietnam draft. Bush says he will keep Quayle on the Republican ticket, and unless future revelations dictate otherwise, that seems to be the correct move. Loyalty is an important quality, as Bush noted in his speech, referring to his own loyalty to Reagan.

Bush's speech signaled the start of his campaign. Obviously, Dukakis is aware he will be running against the same man as before. But to the voters, the George Bush who spoke Thursday night could give the race an entirely different look.

Mexico's agrarian reform vital to U.S.

WASHINGTON — Issues of unrest south of the border are bound to crop up time and again in this presidential campaign. George Bush, the entrepreneur, once did business with Mexican oilmen and feels a close affinity with that country. So does Michael Dukakis, who uses his fluent Spanish to punctuate his interest in Hispanic issues.

Jack Anderson

But Hispanic issues, particularly in the border states, go much deeper than promising cabinet posts, speaking the language or courting Latin friends.

The greatest threat to Mexican stability is also a threat to the border states. That threat is a revolt by the masses of underprivileged peasants in Mexico. At worst, the violence could spill over into the United States. At the very least, unrest among the underclass in Mexico increases the flow of illegal aliens into this country.

That makes Mexican efforts at agrarian reform crucial to U.S. interests. If the Mexican government is not successful in redistributing the wealth of its land from large landowners to peasants, guerrilla forces in the rural areas will use the resultant hard feelings to rally the unhappy peasants.

We have seen a classified Central Intelligence Agency report on the progress of Mexican agrarian reform that is surprisingly optimistic.

CIA operatives in southern Mexico report that the reform policies, in spite of the corruption that pervades the Mexican bureaucracy, are doing a fair job of promoting stability and discouraging rural guerrilla activity.

The Mexican government has convinced the peasants, in most cases, that the bureaucracy is on their side.

Critics of the agrarian reform program say it will never give the peasants a decent livelihood, and that breaking up the land into smaller ownerships will decrease the nation's agricultural output, and profits. But productivity and profits don't seem to be the point, according to the CIA. "We believe that the granting of inalienable land titles to peasants provides important psychological and political props for maintaining stability," the report says. "Social science studies suggest that the primary goal of the peasant is security ... not profits."

To enhance that security, the Mexican government throws in some social service programs — health clinics, schools, agricultural extension services. They are all riddled with corruption and inefficiency, the CIA reports. But they have done enough good to convince peasants that Mexico City cares. And more important, they have created a network of jobs to hand out to the locals as a way of ensuring loyalty.

The downside is that when co-opting local leaders and redistributing land doesn't work, the Mexican government falls back to its old standby — repression. In the past, the government has not been shy about arbitrary arrests and even torture of peasants suspected of aiding any guerrilla insurgency. It works, according to the CIA assessment. "Rather than radicalize the peasantry, this repression seems to have heightened the popular perception that confronting the authorities entails a very high risk."

The administration of outgoing president Miguel de la Madrid has emphasized reform programs in southern Mexico because, according to the CIA, that area is ripe for subversive activity and has frequently complained about neglect from Mexico City.

Indians in the south appear to have been given more access to government services than peasants in other parts of Mexico, the CIA reports, "because of the special concern over the welfare of Indians and the potential for insurgent recruitment in the southern border ..."

The CIA report includes a warning that, in spite of the reform programs, "peasant discontent may be mounting in some areas; at a minimum, it seems better organized than in the past."

BUYING A TICKET HOME — Deposed Philippine president Ferdinand Marcos is shopping for a one-way ticket back home. He has secretly offered $5 billion to be allowed to return, and is promising to abandon his political ambitions and support his successor, Corazon Aquino. Marcos added money to the equation after Aquino sent envoys to talk to him earlier this year. Marcos had hoped he could negotiate a return, but it became apparent in his meeting with Aquino's representatives that they were there to pump him for information about his hidden wealth. Our intelligence sources say that Aquino never authorized her envoys to discuss a reconciliation. They were there to check out rumors about his health and to find out about his wealth before he dies. But Marcos wasn't dying, and when he caught on to the drift of the conversation, he wasn't talking either. Now he will use the money as a bargaining tool.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Honoraria, the token amounts paid to distinguished lecturers, are taking on a dishonorable tone in Congress. Common Cause, the citizens lobby, reports that members of Congress collected about $9.8 million last year in honoraria. We aren't talking here about paying a congressman a small token to lecture a college class. We're talking about paying $2,000 to have a congressman show up for breakfast with the tobacco lobby or lunch with defense contractors. We just hope our honored members of Congress don't trip when they leave the table after all those strings have been attached.

Sleeping in subway could be nightmare!

NEW YORK — I am riding to work in this shaking steel box. These two guys are spread out sleeping on a pair of long side seats that most people avoid unless the subway car is packed. Two is good, but three's a crowd.

We are pulling into 34th Street and Eighth Avenue on the E train heading for mid-town Manhattan. This is beneath Penn Station where trains from Long Island and other parts mesh every morning like spaghetti in a pot. Then, by the thousands, the commuters dash for the subway — the last few miles on their daily 40- to 100-mile stomach-shaker to work.

These button-down types are cool and aloof. They've abandoned the city to the punks and the poor — and penthouse poodles.

So I smile as these two guys snore away and force the bankers, Bloomie salesgirls and day barmen to stand. This is New York in the raw, the naked city and its flesh on the hoof.

More people sleep in the subway these days than at the Waldorf Astoria, Plaza and the Helmsley Palace combined. There are no sheets or blankets, but it's not $195 or more a shot.

There are more panhandlers in the subways than all of Calcutta.

More late trains than lost kids at Coney Island.

More idle cars than the broken bones of a junkyard dog.

More graffiti than all the works of art in Europe.

Dirtier cars than the movies around Times Square.

Toilets as foul as the blood vials and syringes spilling on the beaches of Long Island, New Jersey and Rhode Island.

More daily subway robberies than most towns in America.

The ride is a buck — with another fare hike due in two years.

Two-thirds of the millions of commuters refuse to ride the subways. They take the bus, hail a cab — or walk. Some drive — with parking costs ranging from $9 to about $23 a day.

The Metropolitan Transit Authority is now in the midst of a $6.4 billion rehabilitation program, replacing cars and tracks. In every car, it asks riders not to eat, spit, smoke or litter. Yet, in each car, people often eat and spit, sometimes smoke and frequently litter. I call it "The Underground Jungle."

Yet the New York subway system represents one of the most remarkable human daily feats in the world. It moves 3.7 million riders a day on 710 miles of track.

The average rider is a long-suffering soul who goes about the daily war between home and work with incredible patience and calm.

Nowhere in this land are people more willing to help a lost or faint-hearted traveler. And, despite the crowds and clamor, nowhere is there a more resilient throng of people. They return to the wars each day with a grin-and-bear-it grit that makes them what they are — sentimental suckers about their home town.

Indeed, the subway is a monumental testament to democracy — the only place in town where rich and poor regularly meet in large numbers.

New Yorkers and the subway are living on the edge. The system is buckling under the strain of people, time schedules and repairs. New Yorkers are optimistic on only one count:

The Los Angeles freeway may be worse.

Crew of Vincennes was right to shoot plane

Journalists are playing word games with the USS Vincennes crew.

They are making much of the fact that the ship shot down an Iranian jetliner because of "human error."

Charley Reese

Well, if you define error as shooting down a plane that turned out to be a civilian aircraft rather than a military plane, then of course it was an error.

The problem with this little word game is that the situation faced by the crew of the Vincennes was a judgment call, not a quiz with correct and incorrect answers.

In combat, you have to make judgment calls. To use a simple analogy, a police officer may be facing a felony suspect who rather than putting his hands up, reaches inside his coat. Is he reaching for a gun? The data is incomplete. The officer has to make a judgment call. He may decide to shoot. If, after the fact, he discovers the guy had no gun, he has in fact shot an unarmed man — but he did not necessarily make the wrong judgment.

The situation on the Vincennes was this: they had just been engaged in a firefight. They had intelligence warnings that the Iranians would try to hit the U.S. on the Fourth of July. They had electronic data of an aircraft approaching their ship. The data was unclear. Was it an enemy? Could be. Could not be. They had to make a judgment call.

They made the right judgment call. In that situation they could not wait indefinitely for complete data. If they did and it was an enemy, it would have been too late to defend the ship. They made the call to defend the ship.

It ticks me off when civilians judge others out of context. You cannot judge men in combat in a peacetime context. The USS Vincennes was not engaged in a Christmas bird count for the Audubon Society. It was engaged in combat. The captain's duty was to defend the ship and the crew against all threats, definite and possible. A sister ship, the USS Starke, had hesitated and 37 lives were lost.

Civilians should understand that in war people get hurt. Rounds fall short. People are shot by their own sentries. The environment of war is the one of extreme stress, confusion, uncertainty, haste, incomplete data and quick decisions.

The crew of the USS Vincennes made the correct judgment — to defend the ship while they still had time to do so. The fact that the perceived threat turned out to be a civilian plane does not change the fact that the U.S. sailors made the right decision. Their choice was not to shoot or not shoot a civilian plane. It was to attack a perceived threat or wait until definite confirmation. I strongly disagree with President Reagan that compensation should be paid by the U.S. Compensation should be paid by the Iranian government. It was the Iranian government which launched the aircraft across the path of a warship engaged in a firefight. It was the Iranian government which apparently instructed its pilots not to talk to American warships.

In war it is not an error to shoot perceived threats before you have complete data. Failure to shoot can be fatal and no competent commander can afford to gamble his ship and the lives of his crew on the chance that what appears to be a threat will turn out not to be a threat.

Americans should wake up and face the real world. That includes President Reagan. He didn't offer to pay compensation to the Libyan civilians killed in the reprisal raid he ordered on that country. And rightly so. Civilian casualties are unavoidable in modern war.

The captain and crew of the Vincennes should receive commendations and no amount of sentimentalism should be allowed to put those men under an unjust cloud.

Nor should anyone allow a comparison to the Soviets shooting down the Korean liner go unchallenged. They were not the same. The Soviets were not in a combat situation. They sent planes up and made visual contact with the airliner. They knew they were shooting down a civilian plane. They had plenty of time — two hours — to make a decision. The men on the Vincennes knew only they were shooting down a plane which electronic signals indicated could be a threat to their ship and they had to make a judgment call in seconds.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Camping's OK — if you can stand the smell!

My good friend, Browny Stephens, is an expert camper. He knows where all those poles and stakes that come with tents actually go, and he can put up a tent in less than 15 minutes.

Grizzard

He puts his salt and pepper and coffee in little containers that are easily packed, he can eat freeze-dried grits for breakfast with no apparent problem and the zipper on his sleeping bag never gets stuck.

He's also hiked long portions of the Appalachian Trail.

"Can you take a dog with you on the Trail?" I asked him.

"Not where there are any bears," he said. "Dogs attract bears."

I know very little about camping. As a matter of fact, I am a camping disaster.

I attract bugs and rain. I injure myself and others while attempting to erect a tent and when I was in the Boy Scouts, the zipper of my sleeping bag got stuck with me in it.

The scoutmaster had to call Shorty's Texaco to bring over various tools with which they cut me out of my sleeping bag.

Regardless of all this, however, Browny took me camping with him during my recent vacation. He is a kind and patient man. We went camping somewhere in the woods of North Carolina.

"The drought has been terrible here," he said, as he put up my tent. "They haven't had rain in weeks."

A half-hour later it rained and put out our fire before the hamburgers had time to cook thoroughly.

"If you can't eat raw hamburger," Browny said, "I can fix you up with some freeze-dried grits."

I found a box of raisins in Browny's pack and ate them.

It rained the second night, too.

Desperate, I put some raisins in my freeze-dried grits. As I was eating, a large bug flew into my bowl. I don't know if it was the collision that killed the bug or the freeze-dried grits.

The third night was the night of the skunk.

"Lots of skunks around here," the forest ranger had warned us.

I asked Browny, "What do you do if you see a skunk wandering into your campsite?"

"The most important thing," he explained, "is not to frighten the skunk. Be very still and let the skunk have whatever it is looking for. Losing a little food is a lot better than being sprayed by a skunk."

It was just about time to crawl into my tent, when I saw the skunk.

He came out from behind a tree and seemed to be headed directly toward our campsite.

"Skunk!" I screamed. "There's a skunk coming toward us!"

"See how fast that skunk ran after I screamed at it," I asked Browny later.

"Would you hang around a place that smelled this bad?" he asked back.

Other than all of that, we had a great camping trip, which is to say I didn't poke out anybody's eye with a tentpole, nor leave the lighter-fluid can too near the fire and cause an explosion.

I felt so confident after our trip, I mentioned to Browny I might want to tackle the Appalachian Trail one of these days.

"I've got to be in Czechoslovakia that week," he said, "but maybe you can take along your dog."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Aug. 19, the 232nd day of 1988. There are 134 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 19, 1812, the USS Constitution — also known as "Old Ironsides" — defeated the British frigate Guerriere in a naval battle east of Nova Scotia during the War of 1812. It was a victory that made a hero of Captain Isaac Hull, and boosted American morale in the early stages of the war.

On this date:

In 1848, the New York Herald reported the discovery of gold in California.

In 1929, the comedy program "Amos and Andy," starring Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll, made its network radio debut on NBC.

In 1934, a plebescite in Germany approved the vesting of sole executive power in Adolf Hitler as Fuehrer.

In 1942, more than 1,000 Canadian and British soldiers were killed in a raid against the Germans at the port city of Dieppe, France.

Attorney general picked as president of Burma

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Burma's attorney general, Maung Maung, today was named chairman of Burma's ruling party and president, state-run radio said. The American-educated lawyer is the country's first civilian leader in 26 years.

Student leaders rejected the choice and called for a nationwide strike to press for an end to one-party rule, a Western diplomat in Rangoon said.

Burma's official Radio Rangoon said that Maung Maung, 63, was selected during emergency meetings of the central committee of the Burma Socialist Program Party and of the People's Assembly, Burma's parliament. The radio was monitored in Bangkok.

"Students have called for a nationwide strike on Monday," the Western diplomat said by telephone from Rangoon, the capital. "They're agitating for abolition of one-party rule. The more militant (student) leaders are disappointed."

He said students called for the strike in leaflets circulated during a peaceful rally in front of Rangoon General Hospital. Japan's Kyodo news service, reporting from Rangoon, said 15,000 people took part in the rally.

Maung Maung is one of only two civilians in the top ranks of the government hierarchy.

His selection was a surprise. Most Burma watchers had predicted the new party boss would be chosen from among the clique of active and retired top military officers who supported former leader Ne Win's system of rigid socialist economics, strict military control and international isolation.

Maung Maung is considered a relative moderate, and thought more acceptable than other figures to Burmese who took to the streets in waves in the past two weeks to topple hard-line President Sein Lwin and press demands for an end to a quarter-century of military dominated, authoritarian rule.

Sein Lwin was party chairman and president for 17 days until his resignation Aug. 12 following five days of bloody battles between security forces and anti-government demonstrators. At least 95 people were killed.

After Burma gained independence in 1948, Maung Maung studied at Rangoon University. He later received a doctorate in international law from Utrecht University in the Netherlands and a law degree from Yale University, where he spent two years as a visiting lecturer in the early 1960s.

After the 1962 coup, he served as Ne Win's legal adviser. He was elected to the party central committee at the first party congress in 1972, and in 1974 became a member of the State Council, the highest state organ.

In a 1974 autobiography, "To a Soldier Son," he wrote admiringly of the military but also praised the ideals of youthful activism. He is seen as a figurehead for military powerbrokers but a leader who can calm the protests.

Maung Maung was elected to the party's Central Executive Committee in 1977.

Maung Maung seen as front for military

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Maung Maung, an American-educated intellectual and Burma's first civilian leader in 26 years, is seen as a figurehead for military powerbrokers but a leader who could calm violent anti-government protests.

Maung Maung, recently named the country's attorney-general, today was elected chairman of the ruling political party, Burma's most powerful post, and the country's president.

Although Maung Maung has been closely associated with the military dominated political system that activists seek to dismantle, some analysts say his civilian status and only indirect involvement in the recent ruthless suppression of dissent may serve to blunt the protest movement.

The 63-year-old Maung Maung has been a journalist, lawyer and author who joined senior government and party ranks following the 1962 coup by Ne Win.

He is described by Tzang Yawnghwe, an author and son of Burma's first president, as "one of the few Burmese intellectuals who sincerely and deeply admired Gen. Ne Win."

Maung Maung served as Ne Win's personal legal adviser, wrote a flattering book — "Burma and General Ne Win" — about the authoritarian leader, and was one of the architects of the country's 1974 constitution.

He was born Jan. 11, 1925 and graduated from high school in Mandalay, the former royal capital. He enrolled at Mandalay University's law school but his higher education was interrupted by the outbreak of World War II and the fight for Burmese independence from Great Britain.

Maung Maung joined the Burma Independence Army, a ragtag but fiery outfit organized by the leaders of the independence struggle known as the "Thirty Comrades." The army, which included Ne Win in a key leadership role, marched into Burma from Thailand in early 1942 initially bent on fighting with the Japanese against the British but later switching to the Allied side.

Walesa says shipyard workers to join strike

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa today said workers at the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk will join striking coal miners and dockworkers unless the government legalizes the trade union, a spokesman said.

The union's national executive commission later called on its members to support the strikers, who have closed six mines in southwestern Poland and shut down docks and public transportation in Szczecin, according to a labor leader.

"They (the strikers) are fighting for our common cause," said the commission statement, read by Jacek Kuron, a senior union adviser in Warsaw. "Experience teaches us that only wise social pressure can lead the authorities to the road of economic and social reconstruction."

The strikes, which began Tuesday, are demanding Solidarity's legalization, higher pay and improved working conditions.

Workers at a coal mine in the Silesia region today joined the strike. Solidarity spokesman Adam Kowalczyk said about 1,000 miners were occupying the 30th Anniversary of the People's Poland Mine. Other strikers occupied mines in Andaluzja, Moszczenica, Morcinek and two plants near Jastrzebie.

Walesa told a rally in Gdansk that shipyard workers there are prepared to stop work Monday if the strikers' demands are not met, a union spokesman said.

A strike by workers at the shipyard eight years ago led to nationwide labor unrest that spawned Solidarity. The union existed legally for 15 months before being suppressed in a military crackdown in 1981 and outlawed the next year.

The Gdansk shipyard workers also went on strike in May in support of steel workers who had shut down operations at a huge steel mill near Krakow.

Slawomir Majewski, a Solidarity activist in Gdansk, said by telephone that Walesa's call for a sympathy strike was met with applause from 500 workers attending the rally.

Majewski said they chanted, "There is no freedom without Solidarity!"

The strikes began Tuesday when miners occupied the July Manifesto mine near Jastrzerbie, in southwestern Poland.

In Szczecin, Poland's second largest port, transportation workers stopped work Thursday, joining dockworkers in the city.

The state-run PAP news agency estimated that 70,000 tons of coal had gone unmined as a result of the miners' strikes, resulting in a loss of more than $1.7 million. It has denounced the strikes as illegal.

All the mines are in Silesia, the rich mining region of southwestern Poland, and are major producers of high-grade export coal. Together, they employ more than 40,000 workers.

Solidarity activists estimated that 10,100 miners joined the strikes. They said 5,000 strikers occupied the July Manifesto mine. A management spokesman put the July Manifesto figure at 800-900.

In Szczecin, 600 bus drivers and other employees of the municipal transport service walked off the job. PAP said the walkout stopped normal bus service and forced authorities to lease buses to aid stranded commuters.

About 2,000 Szczecin dockworkers were on strike, said Solidarity spokesman Wojciech Maziarski.

Czeslaw Czerwiec, a spokesman for July Manifesto strikers, said security forces were hampering efforts by supporters and relatives to bring food into the mine.

Witnesses described the scene as tense, with police still holding positions around the mine's entrances. A regional leader of Solidarity, Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, was picked up by police in Wroclaw on Thursday night, union activists said.

Miners are paid more than twice the national average but say Poland's 60 percent inflation and nationwide price increases of 40 percent this year make it impossible to get by.

Coal resources are crucial to the nation's economy. Poland is the world's fourth-largest exporter of coal and the mining operations are essential to its steel, power and shipbuilding industries.

The strikes have surpassed the number of actions that broke out in April and May, the worst labor unrest in the country since the 1981 martial-law crackdown. However it appeared that a smaller number of workers were on strike than in April and May.

The spring strikes, in which workers also demanded legalization of Solidarity and wage increases, ended inconclusively after police broke up one strike and striking shipyard workers gave up without a settlement.

Pakistani official says sabotage caused crash

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A government minister said today that sabotage was almost certainly the cause of a fiery plane crash that killed President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq and U.S. Ambassador Arnold Raphel.

But a government information officer discounted all speculation on the cause of the explosion and crash, which also killed 28 others.

The country, meanwhile, was preparing for Zia's funeral, scheduled Saturday at the world's largest mosque, Faisal Masjid. A grave was dug for him today on the lawn in front of the mosque.

Across the border in India, authorities lifted curfews in two towns on the India-Pakistan border after police clashed with Moslems protesting Zia's death.

India, which is mainly Hindu, and Pakistan, which is Moslem, are longtime adversaries and have fought three wars since they both gained independence from Britain in 1947.

Police and paramilitary forces continued to enforce a curfew in the summer capital of Jammu and Kashmir, a strategic state claimed by both countries, officials said. Many Moslems in the region support the Pakistani claim and admired Zia, who earlier this year put his country under Islamic law.

But a government information officer, speaking on condition of anonymity, discounted all speculation on the cause, including a newspaper report that a time bomb was hidden in a basket of mangos aboard the plane. "Nothing is known yet," he said. "The investigators are still at the scene."

Security forces today fired warning shots in the air to disperse crowds that violated the restrictions, but no one was hurt, they said. On Thursday, police killed four Moslems and wounded more than 100 others trying to set fire to Hindu homes, shops and temples.

Pakistan's minister of communications and railways, Aslam Khattak, told reporters that sabotage was "a 1,000 percent certainty" as the cause of the military transport plane crash. He did not elaborate.

But a government information officer, speaking on condition of anonymity, discounted all speculation on the cause, including a newspaper report that a time bomb was hidden in a basket of mangos aboard the plane. "Nothing is known yet," he said. "The investigators are still at the scene."

"Rumors About Blast Cause" was the headline in the English-language opposition daily, The Muslim. "All sorts of reports and rumors are circulating in the federal capital in the absence of an authentic official regarding the crash," it wrote.

The moderate non-government daily, The Nation, asked in a front-page headline, "Who eliminated Zia and why?" It said unnamed civilian aviation experts "surmise" there must have been an explosive device aboard because the C-130 is known as a sturdy, reliable aircraft.

The protocol section of the Foreign Ministry was arranging to receive dozens of foreign dignitaries, including U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Indian President R. Venkataram.

The Faisal Masjid mosque, at the foot of the hills that overlook the tree-lined federal capital, can hold more than 10,000 people in its prayer hall and 200,000 on its grounds.

The U.S. Embassy said today a team of American investigators would arrive at Bahawalpur, 330 miles south of Islamabad, to help investigate the air crash that claimed the lives of 30 people, including most of Pakistan's top military brass.

Acting President Ghulam Ishaq Khan, the former Senate chairman, has said he would not rule out sabotage but would await a report from investigators.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said the body of Raphel and U.S. defense representative Brig. Gen. Herbert Wassom, who was also killed in the crash, would be flown Saturday to the United States for burial.

The White House announced Thursday night the appointment of Robert Oakley, a National Security Council adviser on South Asia, as new U.S. ambassador to Pakistan.

Sandinistas to let radio station reopen

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government said it will extend its unilateral cease-fire with Contra rebels and is ready to resume peace talks immediately, according to a U.S. senator who met with President Daniel Ortega.

Also Thursday, the government said that Radio Catolica can go back on the air, but without news broadcasts.

Monsignor Bismarck Carballo, spokesman for the Catholic archdiocese in the capital, Managua, said Radio Catolica would resume broadcasting today, 38 days after being ordered shut for news coverage that allegedly incited violence.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., who met Thursday with Ortega and his brother, Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, said the Sandinistas are willing to resume peace talks immediately with the U.S.-supported rebels known as Contras.

"There are no preconditions on talks" with the rebels, Dodd said at Augusto Cesar Sandino Airport shortly before leaving Nicaragua.

"They said they would extend (the cease-fire) indefinitely," said Dodd, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs.

The truce began March 21, two days before the government and rebels signed an agreement to negotiate a permanent end to the 7-year-old war. High-level peace talks broke off June 9, and a unilateral government extension of the cease-fire was set to expire Aug. 31.

Ortega Thursday renewed his proposal to begin a new round of talks in Managua on Aug. 26. The rebels, citing restrictions on their freedom of movement, said they would not return to the capital. They also demanded that the president take part in any future discussions.

The Interior Ministry has authorized the Roman Catholic Church's radio station to resume broadcasting. An Interior Ministry spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Carballo sent a letter Wednesday pledging the station will not broadcast news.

The leftist government closed Radio Catolica indefinitely on July 11, the same day it shut down La Prensa, the country's only opposition newspaper, for 15 days.

Flood of mail cancels British boy's post-card collection

By MAGGIE JACKSON

SUTTON COLDFIELD, England (AP) — Thirteen-year-old Mario Morby began collecting postcards for charity last year during a battle with cancer. He has received nearly 2 million of them in the mail, setting a world record.

But he has mixed feelings about the Great Postcard Flood, and prefers swimming and tennis to collecting them, now that his cancer is in remission. For Mario and his family, it's been the story of a good cause waylaid somewhere in the mail.

With some well-wishers from around the world thinking he was someone else and others accusing him of a hoax, the cards cheered Mario but pained him too. For these and other reasons, Mario's entry will be the first and last for the Guinness Book of Records in postcard collecting.

"I thought I was only going to get 48,000," said Mario, a cheerful, curly-haired boy who suffered more than two years of grueling treatment for a malignant tumor in the pelvis.

"But they kept coming. One day I had 60 sacks," he said at his home near the central England city of Birmingham.

His father, David Morby, sorted cards from early afternoon to 1 or 2 a.m. every day for months, and estimates they received 2 million. His mother, Anna, said "it took over" their lives and those of their other two children Dassos, 17, and Elena, 8.

The saga began last September when the Birmingham Children's Hospital, where Mario was treated, asked him to take over the campaign another boy had started. Its aim was to set a record and raise money for the hospital.

So far, the family has raised 1,700 pounds ($2,800) through sales at an auction house which has taken most of the cards. Many were picture postcards from around the world. Purchasers of the cards mainly were people who collect postcards, as others collect stamps.

Some of the cards Mario received were considered valuable — his mother said a few dated back to the 18th century — but Mario has kept only three.

Postcards are still trickling in, but the post office now diverts them to a local cancer fund-raising group.

Worse than the numbers were the distortions. Small ads placed locally by the family were spread by others, and the further afield the appeals went, the more skewed the message became.

"They started coming with my Dad's name," says Mario. "They thought I was a 7-year-old boy named David. They were saying, 'God Bless, I'm sorry to hear you're dying.'

"Sometimes they sent things too, but they were all things for 7-year-olds," said Mario, whose mother says her son didn't know that cancer could kill him until he read the cards.

"If I thought it was going to get out of hand the way it did, I wouldn't have done it," said Mario's father, who quit his job as a stonemason to spend time with his son when he became ill and only recently found other work cooking chickens for retail sale.

"But he got his name in the Guinness book and we raised money for the hospital, which is something I wanted to do. They saved his life," he said.

Mario's mother said the cards helped occupy Mario during the long days when he was too ill to attend school.

Mario, now back at school full time, said, "sometimes when I was bored or sick, I'd sort out the postcards."

Not all were pleasant, said Mrs. Morby. Some people mixed up Mario with a fictional 8-year-old cancer-stricken Scottish boy, "Buddy," who was at the center of a five-year hoax.

A mystery hoaxer had circulated appeals in 1982 saying Buddy's last wish was to get a record number of postcards to win a place in the Guinness Book of Records, and some 10 million people, including President Reagan, responded.

Because it was a hoax, Guinness did not count that collection as a record.

As a result of that hoax, Mario received letters accusing him of being the perpetrator.

"Sometimes we had people calling us con men," he said.

Guinness will list Mario as having received 1,265,000 cards, which is where it stopped its count, said spokeswoman Anna Nicholas. However, the Buddy hoax and other factors led Guinness to decide to halt the category.

"We do feel sometimes it can generate hoaxes and complications for families like Mario Morby's," she said. For now though, "the whole thing is over. So everyone is smiling."

Malaysia cracks down on bouncing checks

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Beginning this week, anyone who in a year writes three checks that bounce in Malaysia will not be allowed to have a bank account for six months.

Jaafar Hussein, Governor of Bank Negara (Central Bank), told reporters that just too many people have been issuing dud checks.

Currently, anyone issuing bad checks is fined 100 ringgits ($37) per check.

"In a recent survey, the Association of Banks In Malaysia discovered that every month about 30,000 checks turn up that aren't worth the paper they are printed on, The New Straits Times in an editorial today.

Friends, family grieve deaths at club service

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Tears flowed amid prayers, scriptural readings and eulogies today in a Boys' and Girls' Club of Midland memorial service to honor the five children who died a week ago today in the crash of a club van near Sweetwater.

Club members read Scripture before a solemn and silent audience of other children, club directors, families and friends at the brief memorial service in the club building, 110 E. New Jersey Ave.

A tearful Nick Sanchez, the club's 43-year-old executive director, said in his eulogy, "I know you are hurting by the loss of your friends.

"Well, I'm hurting, too. They were also my friends," he said.

"But in times like these, we need each other's support. We need to join together" in continuing to carry out the club's mission of providing uplifting educational and recreational programs for boys and girls, he said.

"The club depends on the community and each and every one of you for support," he said.

"This club...is where you are always welcomed and where you always have a friend."

Freddie Nelms, a saddened community leader who was a founding director of the club, noted that when the club was established in the 1960s, "We saw this need of helping our boys and girls" in a community that was, and is, concerned about its disadvantaged children who cry for love and guidance.

Nelms said, "We are here to share in the sorrow, and anything that we can do — we are here to help," he said. "May God help you and God bless you."

Billie Ann McNatt, the club's education director, recited the 23 Psalms: "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want...Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me...Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

"But in times like these, we need each other's support."
— Nick Sanchez, club director

Friends of the five children who died last week read Scripture early in the service.

"Let the children come unto me (the Lord)...Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest...Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven," Lori Perales, 16, Skeet Bowers, 15, and Jerry McInturff, 12, recited in turn.

In a sensitive moment, Steve Wilson, 14, offered names of his five friends who died in the Aug. 12 accident: Denise Cristal Brown, 11, Anthony Johnson, 11, Ebony Polk, 10, Jamie Polk, 12, and Jimmy Shepherd, 12.

Laura Fields, a club director, played a guitar in leading the mourners in in singing: "Peace is flowing like a river...Jesus loves me, this I know...Bind us together, Lord..."

After songs and prayer, Chuck Clarkson, president of the club's board of directors, thanked the families and friends "for sharing with us today" and expressed the club's "heartfelt sympathy" to the families and friends of the five children who died.

Hugs, tears and words of comfort followed the service just as those solaces preceded the service.

Four residents turn out for city tax rate hearing

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

It was a morning meeting with a lot of mourning — over a proposed tax increase, that is.

But that didn't deter Midland City Council from passing a resolution at a public hearing to consider a 7.22 percent tax increase and a proposed $57.3 million budget at its regular meeting set for Aug. 23.

Council outnumbered those opposed to the increase and also had the votes to carry the resolution through — 7 to 0 in favor.

That didn't sit well with the four residents who managed to make the 10 a.m. session, including Scott Davis.

"I suggest that if this meeting was held at a later time, this place would have been full...the public is tremendously opposed to" the increase, said Davis.

City officials have proposed billing local residents an additional 6.85 cents over the current effective rate of 43.8 cents per $100 valuation. Based on the most current estimates, a homeowner with a valuation of $54,380 will pay $28.66 more annually.

Davis said council and all other taxing entities in Midland are underestimating the groundswell against any tax increase. The school, junior college and the hospital districts all have proposed increases for the coming year.

Midland resident John T. Atchison agreed with Davis. "Some of these oil companies and a lot of us farmers took cuts a few years ago, and we've never got them back...I have to do with what I make...I don't know how we're going to stand all these increases."

Councilman Gordon Marcum II said the combined increases of all taxing entities will amount to no more than a $100 hike on a home valued at $100,000. "We knew the economy was in bad shape (three years ago) so we reduced taxes to maintain stability."

Added Councilman Robert Rendall: "What's happening here is happening in every city across this state. The sales tax declined. The property base declined, but the demand for services is greater than ever," he said. "I'm very proud of this budget."

But Edna Walger isn't.

"It's just not a good time for every entity in this community to be raising taxes....I have no doubt this will go through, but I just wanted to get my two cents in," she said.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas, while sympathetic to resident concerns, said the city could no longer stand by and operate on a budget that failed to address the service demands.

"It's like your home. When it deteriorates, there's just certain improvements that have to be made...we have to remain competitive with other cities our size," he said.

And that competition is for attracting new companies. Thomas suggested that such an ideal cannot be achieved without improvements in streets, drainage, parks and safety.

Councilwoman Oralia Corrales, whose district encompasses many low- and moderate-income families, also stood by the proposed increase.

"It's been a difficult situation for everyone, but the fact of the matter is we had no choice...the thing people aren't commenting on is we didn't raise taxes for three years," she said.

Jury begins punishment phase in bar stabbings

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A state district court jury today was to decide punishment for 20-year-old Richard Rene Subia, who was convicted Thursday of stabbing two Midland men in the back during a brawl outside a local nightclub.

After two hours of closing arguments this morning, the jury began discussions about the case.

Subia stood hands folded next to his attorney, Sylvia Chavez, when the verdicts were read Thursday by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin.

He was convicted of two counts of attempted murder but acquitted of a third count after the 10-man, two-woman jury deliberated for six hours. During the deliberations, the panel sent out several notes asking that portions of testimony be read to them by court reporter Jerry Shortes.

Subia faces a sentence of two to 20 years in prison for each conviction.

The defense had rested its case late Wednesday, which ended two days of testimony.

Will Willmon, Vance Thurman and Alton "Zeke" Baker were all 21 years of age when they went to the New West Club, 1008 S. Midkiff Rd., on March 15, which happened to be "Ladies Night" at the establishment, they testified.

A dance floor confrontation with Subia apparently led to the fight outside, according to testimony.

Subia — who was 19 at the time but was admitted to the club anyway — had gone to the bar the same night with Eddie Portillo, his 24-year-old brother, Eric, and two other men, testimony showed. After midnight the two groups and Willmon's then-fiancee, Vonda Willmon, met outside the bar.

Testimony showed everyone involved except Ms. Willmon had been drinking, and at least three persons were legally drunk. The jury had to decide what happened next.

Two witnesses — including one of the victims — testified Subia stabbed at least two of the men in the back, then ran from the scene. The surgeon who treated the men said the wounds could have been fatal.

Subia was not injured in the fight.

During closing arguments, prosecutor Randall Fluke asked jurors not to be swayed by testimony that the Hispanic men were taunted in a bar filled with Anglo "cowboys."

The defense during the trial attempted to elicit "anger" from the jury in response to alleged "prejudice," Fluke said. He urged the jury not to "reward the defendant because racial epithets were used."

Richard Rene Subia was convicted of two counts of attempted murder but acquitted of a third count after the 10-man, two-woman jury deliberated for six hours. Subia faces a sentence of two to 20 years in prison for each conviction.

Jurors apparently agreed with defense attorney Sylvia Chavez' closing remarks about the charge that her client stabbed 22-year-old Vance Thurman.

Evidence showed Thurman was legally drunk at the time he was treated for his wounds, and told a Midland police detective a few days later he "was too drunk" to give a statement.

"You cannot convict the defendant on the evidence they have brought to you," on the Thurman count, Ms. Chavez told the jury.

Only briefly did the attorney mention the racial overtones that had appeared in testimony throughout the three-day trial. She reminded jurors that although testimony showed the Hispanic men were called "spicks" and "Mexicans" by the Anglos, they did not respond in kind.

Ms. Chavez said the testimony of prosecution witnesses was contradictory, and that at least one witness — the 22-year-old Ms. Willmon — remembered details of the brawl when it helped the case against Subia.

"Once again, Vonda very conveniently does not see when one of her friends started the fight," she said of one portion of Ms. Willmon's testimony.

But prosecutor Robin Sams told jurors the state's case was solid, and was in fact corroborated by most of the defense witnesses.

On Wednesday, Subia took the stand and said he grabbed a knife from an Anglo in self-defense, and started swinging " 'cause I thought those guys were going to kill me."

Ms. Sams dismissed the story as unlikely, but "well-rehearsed."

"I ask you to draw the line and not condone what has happened here," she said.

Subia was acquitted for the attack on Thurman. All three victims recovered from their wounds, and testified at the trial.

Two killed in unrelated accidents

From Staff Reports

Two persons were killed in separate accidents in Howard and Andrews counties Thursday, including a Lousiana man who died when his rental truck rolled over him moments after he stopped on Interstate 20, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Thomas Foreman, 73, of Leesville, La., was pronounced dead at the scene at 9:55 p.m. by Howard County Justice of the Peace Bill Shankles, according to DPS reports.

The accident occurred about 9:20 p.m. on the eastbound shoulder of U.S. Interstate 20 two miles west of Big Spring.

Foreman had been driving a 1988 Ryder truck when he saw two apparently stranded vehicles and pulled to the road shoulder to assist, DPS reports said.

He stopped the truck on an incline, and shifted the transmission to neutral but failed to set the parking brake, the report of the accident said.

As Foreman stepped down from the truck, it rolled backward and the door knocked him to the ground. The left front tire then ran over him, fatally injuring him, according to the DPS.

A 38-year-old Andrews man was killed in a one-vehicle accident after he lost control of his pickup truck seven miles east of Andrews Thursday afternoon, the DPS reported.

Miguel C. Hernandez was pronounced dead at the scene at 2:05 p.m. by Andrews County Justice of the Peace Bill Orson.

At about 1:35 p.m., Hernandez was driving his 1981 Chevrolet pickup west on State Highway 115 when he ran off the roadway, lost control of the vehicle and rolled over. He was not wearing a safety belt and was thrown from the vehicle, the DPS reported.

Indicted Odessa man jailed again

By PATRICK CRIMMINS

STANTON — An Odessa man accused of killing five persons in a July 23 West U.S. Highway 80 traffic accident has been jailed again, the Martin County sheriff said today.

Troy Dal Richburg, 23, is being held without bond in the Martin County Jail, Sheriff Dan Saunders said.

"We had him on felony probation for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, and after he was indicted for those deaths in Midland, our district attorney filed for a revocation of probation," Saunders said.

Richburg turned himself in earlier this week after Saunders spoke with his attorney, Roy Bell of Odessa, the sheriff said.

Bell was on vacation and could not be reached for comment, his secretary said.

Richburg was placed on four years probation on Aug. 15, 1984, after he pleaded guilty to stealing a vehicle, Saunders said. The theft occurred in Midland County, but he was apprehended in Martin County, the sheriff said.

He was less than a month away from completing the probated sentence when the July 23 accident occurred two miles west of Midland. He was indicted August 10 by a Midland County grand jury on five counts of involuntary manslaughter and is accused of being drunk and speeding when the wreck occurred.

Bond for Richburg was denied by Martin County Justice of the Peace F.E. Kennedy. He will be jailed until a hearing is held on the probation revocation, the sheriff said.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, who is handling the Richburg case, was out of town and could not be reached for comment today.

ODESSA — The field of candidates seeking to succeed retired Odessa Fire Chief Bill Childers has been narrowed from eight to two, and City Manager Bill Brown expects to announce the new chief next week.

"We've got a couple of good candidates," Brown said Thursday, noting that his deadline on the selection is Aug. 31, "I'm really on schedule," he said.

The two final candidates are: James Wiggs, 49, a 29-year veteran of the department, who has been an assiatant chief since 1976 and served as acting chief since Childers' retirement; and C.A. Ranch rodeos round up memories, spirit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Texas ranch rodeos are making a comeback to celebrate ranching and the origins of rodeoing and to bring cowboys, ranching families and oldtimers together.

Midland County ranchers put together a ranch rodeo here on the nation's Independence Day "to try to preserve the ranching heritage in this part of Texas and to celebrate the Fourth of July," said Charlie Welch, a Midland rancher who helped organize the event.

"The ranch rodeo was fantastic, and next year, it will be fabulous," Welch said of the Midland County Ranch Rodeo, Chuck Wagon Cooking Contest and Western Dance.

Welch, his wife Eileen and Midlander Judy Jackson were honored by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the Midland County Livestock Association, and Midland rancher Ralph Powell and Powell's Cactus Feeders for organizing and promoting the rodeo, chuck-wagon cooking contest and the Western dance.

The ranch rodeo events raised more than $2,800 to benefit the livestock association, which serves Midland County 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America youth who exhibit livestock in the annual association show each January.

Mrs. Jackson was the main thrust behind the dance, which featured Big Spring fiddler Jody Nix and the Texas Cowboys.

"The reason we had the rodeo is to try to preserve the ranching heritage in this part of Texas and to celebrate the Fourth of July," said Welch.

The ranch rodeo also brings old ranching families together. For example, Welch said that Midland rancher Button Estes "came up to me and said, 'I got to visit with 200 people I hadn't seen in 20 years.'"

The ranch rodeo featured events performed by working cowboys — not always tasks offered in rodeo sporting events designed to attract crowds. Ranch rodeo events include calf branding, team penning, team roping, ranch-horse cutting and wild-cow milking.

The Windham Ranch team was judged the top team among 10 Midland ranch rodeo teams in the friendly contest here.

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Midland rancher Ralph Powell, second from left, presents "Ranch Rodeo" appreciation awards to Judy Jackson, left, and to Charlie and Eileen Welch for their work in organizing the Midland County Ranch Rodeo, Chuck Wagon Cooking Contest and Western Dance held on Independence Day.

Midland's ranch rodeo apparently is an indirect spinoff of the annual Texas Ranch Roundup, now in its eighth year, held in Wichita Falls. The rodeo is being held today and Saturday in the Wichita County Mounted Patrol Arena.

"I think they (today's ranch rodeos) sprung up from Wichita Falls," said Powell. "It's for the bigger ranches."

Last spring in Abilene, Powell and rancher Candi Cowden attended the Western Heritage Classic, another apparent spinoff of Texas Ranch Rodeo. They returned to Midland with eagerness to put on a local ranch rodeo.

"That's what inspired me," Welch said.

Ranch hands participating in the Texas Ranch Roundup in Wichita Falls include those from the R.A. Brown Ranch at Throckmorton, the Burnett-Triangle Inc. at Guthrie, Cowan & Son and Circle Bar Ranch at Seymour, Double U Hereford Ranch at Levelland, JA Cattle Co. at Palo Duro, King Ranch Inc. at Kingsville, Lewis Ranches at Clarendon, Moorhouse Ranch Co. at Benjamin, Pitchfork Land & Cattle Co. at Guthrie, Renderbrook-Spade Ranch at Colorado City, Tongue River Ranch and Spur Headquarters Ranches at Dumont, and the W.T. Waggoner Estate at Vernon.

The 1987 Texas Ranch Roundup winner was the Renderbrook-Spade Ranch team from Colorado City.

"The Texas Ranch Roundup illustrates just what it's like to be a Texas cowboy — the kind who still works cattle every day for a living," said Roundup coordinator Ruth Ann Allred of Wichita Falls. "Ranch life has withstood the test of time," she said, "changing very little since the cattle industry's inception on the Texas frontier."

Those heading up from Midland to the Roundup include Powell and the Welches.

"Like their forefathers did for the early rodeos in the late 1800s," Ms. Allred said, "entire ranch families and crews come from throughout the state to visit, swap tales and watch as their outfits compete at working cattle."

Like the Midland Ranch Rodeo, which benefited the Midland County Livestock Association and boys and girls in agriculture, the Texas Ranch Roundup benefits causes. Those include the North Texas Rehabilitation Center in Wichita Falls, the West Texas Rehabilitation Center in Abilene and the West Texas Boys Ranch in San Angelo. The Texas Ranch Roundup is sponsored by Budweiser and the North Texas Rehabilitation Center.

Woman suspect in Austin, New Mexico bank robberies

AUSTIN (AP) — Police say a tip from a "mysterious caller" led to the arrest of a female bank robbery suspect who left a New Mexico jail after telling prison officials she needed an emergency leave to attend her mother's funeral.

Victoria Lynn Stevens, 32, of Albuquerque, N.M., remained jailed today in lieu of $50,000 bail in connection with the Aug. 15 robbery of the Frost Bank in Austin, said Kellye Norris, a police spokeswoman.

Authorities also are investigating whether Ms. Stevens may have been involved in the Aug. 9 robbery of the Bank of Austin and similar robberies in Albuquerque, Ms. Norris said Thursday.

Police said Ms. Stevens was arrested along with David E. Garrett, 30, also of Albuquerque, at an Austin motel Thursday morning.

Ms. Norris said police recovered "a large amount of money believed to be from the bank robbery" and three grams of heroin in the room. Police would not disclose the amount of money recovered.

The spokeswoman said Garrett also was being held for failure to appear in a New Mexico court on burglary charges.

Ms. Norris said Ms. Stevens had been in the New Mexico Department of Corrections system in July, using an alias, but had requested a three-day emergency furlough to attend her mother's funeral.

Furlough papers ordered her to return Aug. 2, but she did not, Ms. Norris said.

Kevin Jackson, a spokesman for the New Mexico Department of Corrections, said he could not confirm whether Ms. Stevens had been a prisoner.

An unknown woman called Austin police on Aug. 15 after seeing the 6 p.m. television news and said she had heard of similar reports while vacationing in Albuquerque a few weeks before, Ms. Norris said.

The spokeswoman said that, before police could get the woman's name, "she got embarrassed and said it was silly and that there probably wasn't any connection" and hung up.

Texas investigators called Albuquerque police the next day and were told a woman or two women using the same methods used in the Austin heist had recently robbed two Western Banks, a Banquest National Bank of Albuquerque and had attempted another Banquest robbery, Ms. Norris said.

Authorities in New Mexico gave Austin police a description of a yellow car seen leaving the scene after some of the robberies. A patrolman spotted a yellow car with New Mexico plates parked outside the motel early Thursday.

Officers saw Ms. Stevens come out to the car a few times and it was determined that she matched photographs taken by the Frost Bank's surveillance camera during the robbery.

Doug Beldon, an FBI spokesman in Albuquerque, said investigators were checking to see if she could be connected to the New Mexico robberies, saying Ms. Stevens was "a good suspect."

'Last Temptation' gets mixed reviews in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Local pastors gave a generally passive reception to "The Last Temptation of Christ" after a private screening, but at least two local religious leaders differed strongly in their views of the film.

Universal representatives set up the Thursday screening of the movie, opening today in Austin, for pastors and staffs of several local ministries.

The movie, which portrays Christ as reluctant to take the role of Messiah, has come under fire from some religious groups. The most controversial scene depicts Christ imagining having sex with Mary Magadalene.

"I enjoyed it," said Dr. Gerald Mann, pastor of the Riverbend Baptist Church.

"It's not biblically accurate — it's (director) Martin Scorsese's interpretation of the New Testament. And I can see where Christians who want an accurate biblical portrayal will be offended. But if you wanted to portray Christ's humanity, it's graphically portrayed," Mann said.

Although he did not give the film an outright endorsement, Mann said the movie "wouldn't hurt" anyone investigating Christianity.

"I would have them read the New Testament as well," he said. "I think everyone should have a right to go or not to go to the movie, or to protest it if they want."

Houston schools return $850 to Kentucky nuns

HOUSTON (AP) — A company collecting taxes for the city's school district returned more than $800 to an order of Roman Catholic nuns who said they had paid that amount in disputed property tax penalties and interest under protest.

A check for $849.14 was given to the Kentucky-based Sisters of Loretto on Wednesday.

Heard, Goggan, Blair & Williams and its affilate company, United Governmental Services of America Inc., the Houston Independent School District's tax collection firm, gave the check to the nuns.

Richard Lewis, spokesman for the firm said the refund was paid with the firm's money, not HISD tax money.

"Very honestly, we didn't want any more publicity," Lewis said.

"We decided to make a contribution to the Sisters of Loretto because of their unfortunate position," he said.

The dispute began when the nuns said they didn't receive their annual tax bill.

Lewis said Heard, Goggan stands by its position that the bill for 1986 taxes on the sisters' 17-acre tract in west Houston was mailed in January 1987. He said state law requires property owners to pay their taxes even if a tax bill was not mailed.

Sister Mary Swain, the order's treasurer at its mother house in Nerinx, Ky., wrote HISD's tax office on Feb. 4, 1987 — four days after the tax deadline — to say she had not received a 1986 tax bill for the $1 million tract. The sisters had paid their taxes punctually since buying the land in 1961.

Last chance for MC early registration next week

From Staff Reports

Final chance to register for Midland College's fall semester before classes begin comes Tuesday or Wednesday during formal registration.

Students who obtained time permits last week will register on Tuesday in the Physical Education Building. Times to come for registration have been assigned between 9 a.m.-1 p.m. or 4:30-8 p.m. on Tuesday.

Those who did not early register or obtain time permits should come to the P. E. Building on Wednesday between 4:30-8 p.m.

"With the large number of students who completed early registration, a lot of classes have been filled, but new sections are being created wherever possible," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar.

"We encourage everyone who hasn't registered or obtained a time permit to come in Wednesday. Our staff will process students and help them register for classes as quickly as possible."

Fall semester classes begin on Monday, Aug. 29. Late registration also begins that day, with an extra late fee charged for those who fail to register by Wednesday, Aug. 24. The college will observe Labor Day on Monday, Sept. 5.

"Based on past years and the response during early registration, administrators are predicting a final fall enrollment of about 4,000 students. Enrollment during the 1987 fall semester was 3,785, the all-time enrollment record," Cates said.

Bulletins listing classes being offered this fall are available at the college's Student Services Office, Administration Building. They also may be obtained at any Midland bank, the Midland Chamber of Commerce office, or the Midland County Library.

Information about course offerings or closed classes is available by calling 685-4501.

Drought to save government $10 billion in farm payments

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Higher prices for drought-reduced commodities and cutbacks in subsidy payments will mean a two-year saving of $10.6 billion for major farm price support programs, according to Agriculture Department projections.

When USDA's proposed operating budget was sent to Congress last February, net price support outlays by the department's Commodity Credit Corp. were estimated at $17.7 billion for the current year and $17.1 billion for the fiscal year that will begin Oct. 1.

The revised estimates, based upon a "mid-session review" of USDA budget figures, are tentative and still subject to revision. However, as of now, they call for commodity price support spending to drop this year to around $13.1 billion and in fiscal 1989 to $11.1 billion.

Spending on farm supports soared to a record $25.8 billion in 1986, the first year of a new farm law passed in 1985. The law authorized gradual reductions in "deficiency payments" made to farmers when market prices are depressed. It also allowed other adjustments, including the lowering of basic price support loan rates for major commodities.

Outlays for support edged down to $22.4 billion in 1987 but were expected to decline more in future years as lower adjustments were made in the law's various formulas, including reduced dairy supports.

But rising exports, followed by drought this year, boosted commodity prices sharply. That has lessened the need for large deficiency payments for some crops.

Not all commodities have shared in the expected cost reduction. Some programs, including cotton and rice, will be more costly to operate in the coming year.

But the anticipated savings in direct payments to farmers was an important arguing point in favor of the recent $3.9 billion drought relief measure signed Aug. 11 by President Reagan. Corn, soybeans and spring wheat areas have been the hardest hit.

According to a summary provided at the request of The Associated Press, most of the $10.6 billion in savings this year and next will come as a result of reduced payments to producers of feed grains, which include corn, sorghum, oats and barley.

Feed grains payments in fiscal 1987 totaled nearly $14 billion. This year's payments are expected to decline to $8.2 billion and in 1989 those will drop to less than $2.73 billion, according to the estimates.

Last February, USDA budget analysts said feed grains payments might be about $12.6 billion this year and $11.1 billion in 1989.

Some other payments and comparisons, included:

— Wheat, $2.84 billion in 1987, $556.9 million in 1988 and $695.5 million in 1989. Earlier, this year's payments were forecast at $1.08 billion and 1989's at $1.52 billion.

— Rice, $905.9 million in 1987, $124.6 million in 1988 and $1 billion in 1989. The earlier forecast was $189 million in 1988 and $320 million in 1989.

— Upland cotton, $1.79 billion in 1987, $756.8 million in 1988 and $2.61 billion in 1989. The earlier forecast was $42 million in 1988 and $229 million in 1989.

Blistering weather stressing crops, livestock

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Temperatures of 100 degrees-plus blistered much of Texas the past week, further stressing crops and livestock, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The hot weather, combined with continued dry conditions, put further stress on such growing crops as peanuts, soybeans and pecans as well as pastures and ranges, Carpenter said in his weekly report on the state's agriculture.

However, the open weather was ideal for harvesting mature crops and for hay making. Corn and sorghum harvesting was active throughout central and coastal sections. Corn harvesting also continued in South Texas, where the sorghum harvest is complete. Sorghum harvesting also was nearing completion in coastal areas and in southwestern counties. Rice harvesting continued in coastal counties.

Widely scattered rain showers interrupted the cotton harvest in South Texas the past week, Carpenter said. But cotton harvesting remained active in the Coastal Bend and was getting under way in south central counties. The cotton crop was making good progress in western areas and in the plains although farmers continued to battle bollworms and boll weevils. Also, some plants were shedding squares and bolls due to moisture stress.

The state's hay situation continued to improve as harvesting remained active in areas that received some July rains. Although hay supplies are still short in about 30 percent of the counties, the volume of hay for sale continues to increase and now stands at more than 52,000 tons. Producers needing hay should contact their local county Extension office, said Carpenter.

Some hay feeding continued in areas where grazing is short due to the drought, particularly in eastern and southern counties. Also, stock water is short in many locations. Cattle marketings continued heavy in areas with limited grazing.

A few Panhandle farmers have begun planting wheat, while land preparations for small grains continued in other areas. Planting of fall vegetables continued in some eastern counties and in the Rio Grande Valley, Carpenter said.

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions.

PANHANDLE: Crops are making good progress although hot, dry conditions are causing cotton to shed some fruit. Potato and onion harvesting continues in Deaf Smith County. A few farmers have started planting wheat while others continue to get land ready.

SOUTH PLAINS: Most crops are in good shape but need rain. Irrigation is active. Cotton is setting bolls, corn is in the dough stage and sorghum is starting to turn color. Land preparation continues for wheat. Ranges also need rain.

ROLLING PLAINS: Cotton is making excellent progress, but farmers are continuing to battle bollworms and boll weevils. Some hay making continues, and land preparation for small grains is under way. Dry conditions hurt the peach crop, and pecan prospects are dropping as the dry weather continues. Stock water is short in many locations.

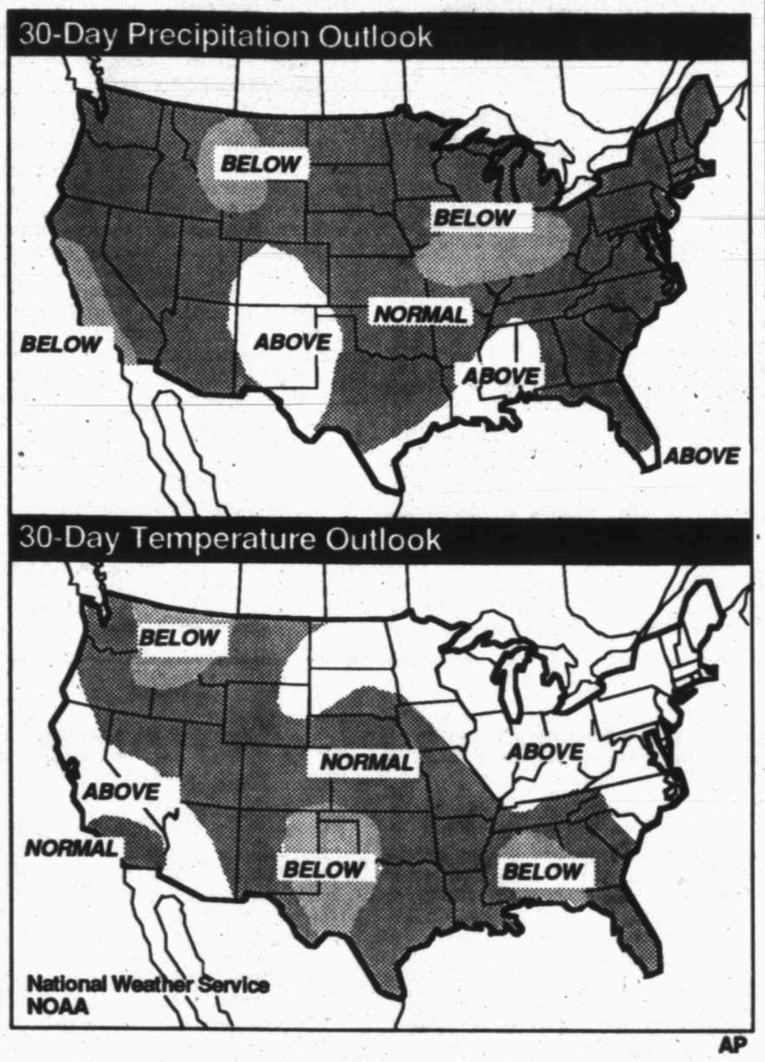
NORTH CENTRAL: Farmers are starting to harvest corn and sorghum, and some hay making continues. Crop prospects continue fair to good, but rain is needed for later crops such as peanuts and soybeans. Some pecans are shedding due to moisture stress and also need rain, as do pastures. High temperatures are stressing livestock.

NORTHEAST: Hay supplies remain short in many counties although some harvesting continues. Some cattle feeding continues due to short grazing, but cattle marketings remain steady. Corn and sorghum are maturing and cotton is setting bolls, with insects increasing. Fall vegetable planting is under way.

FAR WEST: Cotton is maturing well but bollworm numbers remain high, with spraying active. Cantaloupe harvesting continues while the onion harvest is complete. Jalepeno peppers are about ready to harvest. Pecan prospects continue to look good. Livestock conditions are poor to good; some sheep and goats are going to market.

WEST CENTRAL: Cotton is setting bolls, with farmers spraying the crop for bollworms, boll weevils, aphids and flea hoppers. Irrigated peanuts look good but the dryland crop needs rain. Sorghum prospects also look good. Ranges are providing some grazing but also need rain.

CENTRAL: Most grain crops have been harvested, and farmers are now getting ready to harvest cotton. Peanuts are making good progress but the dryland crop needs rain. Some producers have harvested a second cutting of hay. Grazing on pastures and ranges continues to decline due to the hot, dry weather.



AP

EAST: Hay making continues in some locations, particularly where July rains fell. Hay supplies remain short over much of the area. Grasshoppers are heavy in pastures. Fall vegetable planting is under way. Some cattle continue to go to market due to poor grazing conditions.

UPPER COAST: Farmers are harvesting rice, corn and sorghum, and cotton harvesting is starting. Recent rains helped peanuts, pecans, soybeans and pastures, but moisture is still short in many locations. Hay making continues, with supplies short to adequate.

SOUTH CENTRAL: Corn and sorghum harvesting continues, with generally good yields. Cotton bolls are opening and harvesting is about to start. Peanuts are pegging and need rain, as do pecans and pastures. Grazing remains short in some counties, and hay yields continue to be low.

SOUTHWEST: Most of the sorghum crop is in and the corn harvest is gaining momentum. Yields on irrigated land have been excellent, but dryland yields have been dismal due to the drought. Cotton is opening and some early harvesting is under way. Farmers are preparing land for fall crops as soon as spring crops are harvested. Ranges continue to offer little grazing.

Political season brings another wave of talk of rural development

WASHINGTON (AP) — For generations, farm and political leaders have debated rural development and usually wound up being for it, much like the proverbial consensus that apple pie and motherhood are good and should be supported by all true Americans.

So it is not surprising that the 1988 political season brings another wave of dedication to rural development, including suggestions on how to make life on farms and in small towns easier and more beneficial to all concerned.

An idea of what rural development is all about can be had from recent testimony by two former secretaries of agriculture — John Block, a Republican who served in President Reagan's cabinet, and Bob Bergland, a Democrat who was secretary in the Carter administration.

Block's views on rural development were in his general statement last week in New Orleans at a Republican agricultural platform hearing, and were intended to be partisan since he was helping mold the 1988 GOP platform.

Since he left the Agriculture Department's top post early in 1986, Block has been president of the National-American Wholesale Grocers Association, Falls Church, Va.

Bergland is executive vice president of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, the Washington-based umbrella group that represents about 1,000 rural power systems in 46 states.

It was in his NRECA capacity that Bergland appeared last month before a rural economy and family farming subcommittee of the Senate's Small Business Committee.

Both men described rural America and cited its place in the nation's economic and social fabric. Each made observations and suggestions regarding ways to aid rural development.

"The federal government can play an important role in helping to revitalize the rural economy," Bergland said. "However, such a role must be carefully thought through and executed. In particular, it is our experience that local development cannot be solved by large federal spending programs which lack local support."

Bergland added: "Successful efforts must have a strong element of local commitment and initiative. The federal role should be limited to doing what only the federal government can do, or what it does best — making use of its regulatory authorities, developing standards, providing technical assistance, and, where needed, financing."

Block, who noted that about 25 percent of the U.S. population lives in rural areas, although only 9 percent are farm residents, said rural development "must be a high priority in the next Republican administration."

Some other points made by Block:

—Rural areas must be integrated with the nation's overall economic health, and the business environment must be improved through the implementation of rural enterprise zones and other measures.

—The federal government should help retrain rural workers by targeting more job training.

—All grants and formulas that allocate federal money to state and local areas "should be reviewed and changed if rural areas are not receiving their appropriate share."

—Federal funds for rural road and bridge improvements should be increased as part of an incentive program to get state and local governments to contribute more to help in this effort.

—Rural education should be upgraded "so that employers will locate in rural areas where there is a highly educated labor force."

Bergland cautioned against the government jumping into massive projects to overhaul the countryside.

"Generally, the most beneficial and long-lasting economic development results are achieved by starting out small," Bergland said.

Sprays, baits can control pesky flies

During this time of year, climatic conditions favor housefly production around the farm. With proper temperature and moisture, a generation of houseflies can be produced in a little less than one week.

To control the buildup of houseflies on farm premises, use either poison baits or residual sprays. Baits are most effective when used before populations have reached excessive numbers. They must be readily accepted by flies and must be easily accessible to them.

Residual sprays can be quite effective for quick population reduction. However, additional applications are usually required at required intervals as specified on the label of the material used.

For maximum benefit, apply residual sprays to surfaces where flies rest, such as walls, ceilings, support beams and trusses. Also spray areas where manure collects. Apply spray materials thoroughly so that surfaces are wet.

Several ready-to-use baits and residual sprays are cleared by the EPA for housefly control. The Extension Service publication B-1306, "Suggestions for Managing External Parasites of Texas Livestock and Poultry," contains information on products used for premise housefly control and is available at the county Extension office.

Before purchasing a product, read the label carefully to make sure the material is appropriate for your particular situation.

FAMILY MATTERS

Alcoholism affects whole family

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: My brother is an alcoholic. We have tried and tried to get him to seek professional help but he refuses. When his children come over to play it just breaks my heart to think about what they must be going through. I don't think my brother would abuse them or anything, but he does get really angry sometimes.

I know those children's lives must be really tough, but I don't know what to say. I can already see some signs of problems in my niece who is 9. What can I do to help? — WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: Children of alcoholics face a number of potentially destructive problems, including:

■ Emotional neglect and physical abuse — Alcoholic parents often leave their children with anyone who will care for them. These children are vulnerable to physical abuse by both alcoholic and non-alcoholic parents.

■ Family conflict — Alcoholic homes often contain so much strife that children can't do their homework, or even eat at home.

■ Inappropriate parental behavior — Parents in an alcoholic home often confide their sex, health and financial problems to their children. Sexual abuse is common in these situations.

■ Parental illness, divorce and death — Children are caught in a cycle of illness of and separation from the alcoholic parent, and often bounce back and forth from one parent to the other, worried and afraid for their parents' health. During a divorce the children are often weapons used in visitation and support payment battles.

■ Confused feelings — Children of alcoholics typically resent their alcoholic parent and his actions, yet feel protective and concerned about him. They often feel guilty because of their emotions, and powerless to fix things.

What can you do about all this? Nothing directly. You can support your sister-in-law and continue to be a good aunt for your nieces and nephews by letting them know you are there for them — that it's not disloyal for them to share their family problems with you.

I encourage you to attend an Al-Anon meeting and then, with your support, help them to attend an Alateen (ages 12-18) or Alatot (ages 5-11) meeting. For information about the days, times and locations of the meetings call 682-4721.

Alcoholism is an awesome, destructive force that has long-term effects on everyone in the family. Please don't give up on those children — they need you. God bless you.

DEAR FAMILY: I am a school teacher presently preparing to return to school. My mother is laying her usual guilt trip on me about my going off to work and leaving her granddaughter with some stranger. My daughter is a healthy, well-adjusted 3-year-old who is well cared for in a home environment.

My mother makes me mad and guilty at the same time. I love my daughter and my work. I love my summers with her, but I also feel that I make a real contribution to my students. Would it be better for me to stay home with my daughter? GUILTY

DEAR GUILTY: No studies have ever been able to determine whether children are better with a mother who works outside the home or one who doesn't.

However, the research has consistently shown that the well-being of the children is directly related to the mother's satisfaction with her role. Children do best when their mother is happy with her job, no matter where that job takes place.

You seem to be happy with your job, and are making a contribution in both worlds. Acknowledge your mother's position and agree to consider it thoughtfully — and then go on with your life.

DEAR ABBY

Welcome mat rolls out, in, for self-invited houseguests

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Today a woman who has been a friend of my wife for many years telephoned to tell her that she and a married couple whom we have never met would be visiting our city in the near future.

"Agnes," my wife's friend, then invited herself and the couple to stay with us for the week of their visit. To my surprise, my wife accepted this "offer," then "asked" if it would be OK with me.

Abby, I love my wife and I am willing to have Agnes stay here, but I do not like the idea of having a strange couple staying here as well. We have a small (two bedroom, one bathroom) house, and it would be too much of an inconvenience for five adults to live here for "only" one week. I think I should have been consulted before my wife made these arrangements. Furthermore, I think Agnes should be informed that she is welcome, but her friends should make arrangements to stay elsewhere (like a hotel).

My wife thinks I'm being selfish, unreasonable and inhospitable. What do you think? — FRIED IN FRISCO

DEAR FRIED: I think Agnes was presumptuous to have asked if she could invite a couple of strangers to be guests in your home. (She put your wife on the spot.) And your wife should not have agreed to welcome the additional couple without having consulted you. She should telephone Agnes and say, "I'm sorry, I just shared this with my husband. Now we both agree that our little place cannot accommodate five adults for a week." Then she should offer to make reservations for Agnes' friends. Don't worry about offending Agnes. She appears to be anything but thin-skinned.

DEAR ABBY: I would like your opinion on a difficult matter. I am one of many divorced fathers and I'm doing my best to build a good relationship with our 2-year-old daughter.

My ex-wife is in the process of toilet-training her, and has voiced concern over the fact that I intend to take our little girl into a men's rest room when she has to use the bathroom.

I cannot think of another reasonable alternative during our outings together, and feel that if this is done using good judgment, there is no problem with it. Is there another way for divorced fathers to handle this situation? — DIVORCED DAD

DEAR DAD: Obviously, you should take your daughter to the men's room. Of course, if there is a stall with a door, that's the one you should choose. (Women would be properly outraged to see a man in the women's bathroom even though he's there tending to his little girl's needs.)

If your wife is concerned because the plumbing facilities are unlike those in the women's bathrooms, she need not be. A 2-year-old will think nothing of it — unless an adult makes a fuss.

No place like someone else's home

EDITORS NOTE: Erma Bombeck is on vacation. In her absence, the "Best of Bombeck" will run. This column originally appeared in August 1985.

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

My mom has a plaque just inside her front door that reads, "If we get to drinking Sunday afternoon and start insisting that you stay over until Tuesday, please remember we don't mean it."

My mother likes houseguests as well as the next person, but let's be realistic. Houseguests should be regarded as perishables: Leave them out too long and they go bad.

It is rare when you can unite in holy wedlock two families in one house any longer than 48 hours without the hostess attacking her welcome mat with a steak knife.

Some families eat at 4:30 in the afternoon. Others fall right out of happy hour into bed. Some guests consider a picnic in the park as a forced death march, while others, if allowed to sit around and watch TV for more than an hour, whine, "We can do this at home. We want to see something!" It's a game.

Take Len and Bernadine. Take their children, Puberty and Sissy. Take their dog, Carl. Please.

We could hardly wait until they came for a visit. Hadn't seen them in six years. You forget a lot in six years.

We forgot that Bernadine was a vegetarian but was allergic to 18 vegetables and nine fruits.

We forgot that when Len snored, cattle became restless 40 miles away.

Somehow we had forgotten that Puberty was light-fingered, so you had to hide your purse in the crisper in the refrigerator.

There were a lot of little things. One was the fact that Sissy could bounce a ball against your bedroom window at 6 in the morning 5,786 times without missing.

We had forgotten that Len and Bernadine each smoked three packs of cigarettes a day and kept assuring us we would get hit by a beer truck driven by the surgeon general before the smoke got us.

It had slipped my mind that Bernadine never touched a dish because "I don't know where they belong," or a washer because "I don't want to break it," or came into the kitchen because "I don't want to get in your way."

And then on the last day of their visit, Len and Bernadine said, "You know, you should get a booster for your hot water. We've been taking cold showers since we got here."

They had forgotten something, too. They had forgotten that my husband, in his infinite wisdom, had installed the hot water spigot on the cold water and the cold water spigot on the hot water.

Stress strikes working women

Copley News Service

When it comes to working women, stress strikes everyone, regardless of education, occupation, marital status or number of children.

That's the sad finding of a survey of more than 200 working women conducted at the University of Alabama.

Psychiatry professor Dr. Lee Badger says her findings show that the dual responsibility of home and work is often too much of a burden for most women, but some women are worse off than others.

For example, women with a Ph.D. education report being the most depressed over job responsibilities and child rearing.

But Badger says the biggest contributor to stress overload may be job captivity — a feeling that you are stuck in a job you hate with no way out.

Choosing baby's name important task

By GLENDA WINDERS
Copley News Service

Naming another human being is a rare responsibility.

Parents of a new baby have to somehow muster up a moniker that can bypass the snickers of childhood and land with dignity on corporate letterhead, the cover of a book or the side of a truck. Is Tiffany too trendy? Wendell too wimpy?

We cherish our names, no matter what our age, but they can give others a mistaken impression. Will anybody ever trust an Adolph again? What image comes to mind with the name Marilyn? And would a certain Marine have been so convincing without an innocent name like Ollie?

New parents need all the help they can get, and in response to that need, there's a lot of advice on the market. One helpful new book is "Beyond Jennifer and Jason: An Enlightened Guide to Naming Your Baby." The book is a hefty paperback that approaches the name game in a new way.

CNS Graphic

NAMES ARE divided subjectively into lists with such titles as "Cold Cash Names," "The Hundred Year Cycle," "High Energy Names," "Neu Spellings" "Power Names" and "Baby Men and Women." Each is introduced with an essay that is as informal and chatty as a talk between two friends, which is exactly how this book came to be.

When Pamela Redmond Satran was expecting her daughter, she discovered that her friend Linda Rosenkrantz shared her passion for naming things. Both had made lists of names for their dolls as little girls, and both wanted to choose the best possible names for their real-life children.

But Satran found that the name books on the market didn't help her.

"They were all so boring, like reading the dictionary," she says.

Satran, then an editor at Glamour, suggested that her friend write an article on naming for the magazine. Rosenkrantz developed enough material for a book and asked Satran to co-author it with her.

"We did some library research," Rosenkrantz says, "but the heart of the book came from observation."

The two talked to friends about issues such as how a person thinks about his own name, what names are typical of the late '80s sensibility, what names suggest power or artistic talent and how a couple can come to agreement about a name for their child.

They also pored over every available name book to make sure they didn't leave out important categories.

"We wanted a way of looking at names that hadn't been done before," Rosenkrantz says, "something that was more useful in a real way."

"IT BREAKS groups of names down into categories so you don't have to plow through the whole book to find what you want," Satran adds. "If you want a traditional masculine name, such as George or Paul or Michael or Richard, it can easily be found.

"We talk a lot about implications without being didactic. There are advantages to having a trendy name, and some families like the tradition of naming their sons 'Junior.'"

They discuss middle names, being named for someone else, names taken from movie stars or political heroes, ethnic names and foreign names in a way that manages to be funny and entertaining as well as informative.

When the book was still in manuscript form, Satran says she rushed "emergency chapters" to friends in need, and several changed their minds about what to name their children after seeing the book. One new grandmother persuaded her daughter-in-law that "Desiree" might conjure up a sexual image that would not be helpful later in life.

Satran, who named her daughter, now 5, Rory, says that she would choose a different name if she had known then what she knows now.

"I liked the image of an energetic, tomboyish little girl," she says, "but I didn't anticipate how many people would misunderstand. People call her Laurie or Tory. When people ask her name now, she automatically says 'R-O-R-Y, Rory.'"

If she had it to do over, she'd choose her husband's grandmother's name, Rose.

"It sounds fresh after not being used for 20 years," she says. "There are a lot of grandmothers and great-aunts called Rose but no little Rosies running around."

ROSENKRANTZ IS still happy with Chloe, the name she chose for her daughter 13 years ago. She and her English husband, writer Christopher Finch, found the name in a book after rejecting several others, and it still fits their daughter.

"She likes being slightly unusual," Rosenkrantz says. "When she calls a friend on the telephone, she can say, 'Hi, it's Chloe,' instead of 'It's Jenny Jones.'"

Both writers are currently busy on other projects. Rosenkrantz is writing a movie script with her husband and a weekly column on collectibles for Copley News Service. Satran is finishing a book on style and writes a weekly column, also for CNS, for working parents.

But both think they might like to co-author another book. They are already keeping files of names for a second edition, and they're looking forward to finding out whether their predictions will turn out to be true. Are Erin and Michelle so far in they're out? Will little girls named Gillian and Judith and Rachel turn out to be the CEOs of tomorrow? Will Harry and Jacob and Sophia return after a period of disfavor?

In the meantime, they hope new parents will find their book practical and useful.

"Mostly it's a book about possibilities," Rosenkrantz says.

Jigsaws still puzzling after all these years

NEW YORK (AP) — The jigsaw puzzle has come a long way since its invention over two centuries ago by a London mapmaker. These first puzzles, called dissected maps, were designed to help children learn geography.

Current puzzles offer almost unlimited choices for "kids" from 2 to 102, but this was not always the case, according to researchers at Random House Inc., which makes still-popular puzzles today for children and adults.

In the 1760s, printer John Spilsbury produced map puzzles with large pieces that slid together instead of interlocking like modern jigsaws. They were priced at $5, so only the wealthy could afford puzzles until the 19th century, when technological advances brought them within the reach of the middle classes.

Then, the range of titles broadened to include topics such as "Chronological Tables of English History for the Instruction of Youth" and "Lessons for Young and Old on Industry, Temperance and Frugality."

Puzzles reached America at the time of the Revolutionary War. However, they did not truly come into their own until the Great Depression of this century, when millions of American searched for inexpensive entertainment.

Puzzles today feature a wealth of themes, shapes, sizes and subjects, all reproduced with brilliant graphics on precision-cut pieces. Children's puzzles may depict favorite characters from books and movies, and can be printed on extra-large pieces designed especially for children.

Although today's jigsaw puzzles are more sophisticated than the earlier creations, they continue to be excellent teaching tools, experts agree.

Playthings magazine, the toy industry bible, reports that "parents seem to be latching onto puzzles these days in hopes that their children will develop earlier. They're discovering that children are capable of learning much more than anyone thought, at a younger age, and puzzles are a great tool for this."

"Puzzles encourage the imagination and help kids learn, adds Suzanne Glazer of Random House. "Perhaps that's why they continue to be a favorite. They teach problem solving, lead to a sense of accomplishment, and help children increase manual dexterity.

"It's important to select the right puzzle for a child's age and development," she points out. "For very young children, for example, choose inlaid puzzles with no more than 12 large pieces that fit into framework. These are designed for easy manipulation by young hands.

"For older children, ages 5 and up, boxed puzzles are available with up to 100 pieces. For teen-agers and adults, the most popular puzzles have 500, 1,000 or even 1,500 pieces that form intricate patterns, photographs or drawings."

Agents say FBI discriminates in assigning undercover jobs

STATE

EL PASO (AP) — The FBI discriminates against Hispanics in assigning undercover cases and in helping agents reenter normal life, several agents have testified in a class-action suit.

Retired agent Joseph Yablonski, who is known in FBI circles as "the father of undercover," testified Thursday that Hispanic agents often are "typecast" when undercover assignments are handed out.

The bureau assigns dangerous undercover narcotics investigations to Hispanics because "many of the important cartels in narcotics emanate from Colombia or Bolivia or any of those countries," Yablonski said. "But it isn't always necessary because we see people from all backgrounds involved in selling narcotics."

The 311 Hispanic agents who have joined in the class-action suit in U.S. District Court contend the FBI discriminates them in hiring, promoting, assignments and discipline. They seek damages and changes in FBI policies. About 400 of the FBI's 9,000 agents are Hispanic.

Several agents have testified since the trial began Monday that undercover narcotics investigations are the most dangerous kind of FBI work, and that Hispanics are much more likely to be given those assignments.

Yablonski, who started doing seminars for prospective undercover agents in the early 70s, said agents should serve at least five years as regular investigators before being assigned undercover work. The five years give the agents more street smarts and help prevent agents from suffering identity crises, he said.

Hispanic agents have testified all week that they were assigned narcotics and foreign intelligence undercover work within months of being hired, and that they did not receive the recommended psychological counseling at the end of their undercover assignments.

In other testimony Thursday, agent John Hoos of the Los Angeles office described treatment of Bernardo "Matt" Perez when Perez was assigned to that office in 1982.

Perez, now the assistant special agent in charge at the El Paso office filed the class-action suit in January 1987.

Hoos described how the No. 1 agent in the Los Angeles bureau at the time, Richard Bretzing, kept Perez uninformed about investigations, rebuked Perez for participating in a successful Hispanic recruitment drive and assigned him to a less-desireable office in the building.

Perez, who was expected to testify today in concluding the plaintiffs' case, has accused Bretzing of criticizing his performance because of racial bias. The highly publicized fight led to charges of a "Mormon Mafia" in the Los Angeles office because Bretzing, a Mormon, was accused of favoring other Mormons in the office.

About 50 of the 450 agents in Los Angeles are Mormons and many agents in foreign posts are Mormons.

They are chosen because Mormon men often serve as missionaries in foreign lands and learn languages.

Brenda and Marshall Watson pose in front of their shiny red '61 T-bird at the Terrace Drive-in in Texas City, where they met in 1958. The Watsons meet at the Terrace every Friday night.

Fifties car group relives carhop days

TEXAS CITY (AP) — The dying sun glints off chrome and Turtle Wax. A carhop scurries past with an order of onion rings and an RC. The Beach Boys oo-ee-oo-ooo about Surfin' U.S.A. in the background.

Scenes from a long-ago prom night? No, just another Friday at the Terrace Drive-In.

Over the past year, gathering at the Terrace every Friday has become a tradition for members of the Texas City 1950s Unlimited CarClub.

Starting about sundown, they begin rolling in — Chevys, Plymouths, Fords, even a pink Edsel, most from those flash-and-fins Fifties, although club President Konrad Clegg himself arrives in a dark-green, 1947 Plymouth Special Deluxe four-door sedan.

Now, don't mistake the Friday conclave at the Terrace for a club meeting — those are on Tuesdays, Clegg said. This is just for fun.

"We've been getting together here on a regular basis every Friday for about a year," he said.

It would be hard to find a better setting in which to show off these special cars, since the Terrace Drive-Inn is very much their "turf." The restaurant itself is a Texas City tradition, dating, as best the club members can remember, from the 1940s.

More than one car-clubber has memories of pulling into the same parking lot after a football game or before a sock hop, when his or her now-vintage car was the newest thing on wheels.

Brenda and Marshall Watson — the shiny red '61 T-bird — can certainly tell you about the Terrace. They met here in 1958.

"I used to have a little Willys station wagon, and it would conk out right here, all the time," she said, laughing. "I had to get the football boys to push it out."

One evening, she said, she and several girlfriends were at their hangout, "and he (nudging Marshall) was up here with what he called his cousin, but it was actually his brother-in-law's brother."

Now, as the sky darkens and the bare bulbs up under the aluminum drive-in awning come on, reflecting in little stars off the chromed grilles and paste-waxed hardtops gathered underneath, time slips back.

The sultry funk of cheeseburgers and french fries lingers in the humid night air, and the carhop strides jauntily out the door and across the asphalt, holding a laden car-window tray aloft.

A black '57 Chevy glug-glug-glugs up and stops, and half a dozen voices at once shout a greeting. Burger wrappers crinkle and milkshake glasses empty with a soft "slurrrrp?"

And in the background, the Beach Boys are having "Fun, Fun, Fun."

Teachers group asks for $5,000 pay raise

Beard

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas teachers should get a $5,000 pay raise, which would boost the average state salary above the national average, the Texas State Teachers Association said.

"The fact is that in relative terms, teachers' salaries have been slipping faster than the price of Texas crude," TSTA President Charles Beard told a Thursday news conference. "It is a myth that significant progress has been made in teacher salaries as a result of education reform in Texas."

The average teacher salary in Texas moved from 27th to 21st in the nation following House Bill 72, the 1984 education reform measure. But the state has been losing ground since then, Beard said. Last year, the average salary again was 27th in the nation, at $25,655.

TSTA's proposal would push the average state teacher salary just above the national average, which was $28,031 in the 1987-88 school year, Beard said.

The proposal to raise teacher salaries $5,000, and to boost pay 20 percent for other school employees, would cost $1.07 billion over two years, TSTA said. Under the current system, the state would pay $715 million of that cost, and local districts would pay the remainder.

The 95,000-member association has been active this election year and should be listened to by the Legislature, Beard said. He said it spent $180,000 from member contributions on the primary election.

Citing 1984 reforms that included massive teacher testing and a new teacher appraisal system, in addition to classroom changes, Beard said, "Texas teachers feel betrayed.

"Teachers responded to all challenges ...But teachers are still waiting for the rewards," he said.

Beard also said a suggestion that teachers be paid $50,000 salaries is "not unreasonable." John Cole, Texas Federation of Teachers president, suggested that pay level in Wednesday testimony to the Select Committee on Education.

The TSTA proposal "is a step, that's all it is," Beard said. "It's not adequate, but it's certainly a step in the right direction."

Bentsen wraps up week-long campaign on home turf

DALLAS (AP) — Democratic vice presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen is wrapping up more than a week of down-home campaigning on his own turf by welcoming running mate Michael Dukakis to the Texas hustings.

The two Democrats planned to meet here tonight for a fund-raiser and then visit the LBJ ranch and President Johnson's widow, Lady Bird Johnson, on Saturday. The joint appearances were designed to underline the importance Democrats place on the Lone Star State — which Vice President George Bush also claims as his home.

Bentsen flew to Texas a week ago and has been criss-crossing the state on behalf of Democratic presidential nominee Dukakis, selling the ticket to skeptical Texans — most of whom are more conservative than the Massachusetts governor.

The Texas senator planned to continue that effort today before supporters in Wichita Falls and during a visit to a Texas Instruments plant in Sherman before returning at day's end to Dallas.

Bentsen began Thursday in Tyler in East Texas, explaining to his longtime Senate supporters why he was seeking both re-election to that seat and the vice presidency.

He met in Kilgore with oilmen, a conservative group, and promised that he would continue to fight for them in Washington as vice president with the same verve as he has in the Senate.

He also spoke before the East Texas Regional Development Group, an audience of more than 500 businessmen and women, mostly Republican.

"They were attentive and they were polite. I think we made some headway," he said after the appearance. To win Texas' 29 electoral votes, Bentsen says, Democrats who voted for Reagan must "come home to the Democratic Party."

When he flew to Dallas at day's end, Bentsen met the other end of the political spectrum — one that might find him a tad too conservative. Both Bentsen and the Jesse Jackson supporters he talked with said they were pleased with the encounter.

"It went quite well," Bentsen said. Although problems remained, "In campaigns, there are always those things. We did very well."

John Wiley Price, a Dallas county commissioner and a Jackson supporter who walked out of the Democrats' convention in Atlanta, said Bentsen went a long way toward alleviating his concerns about black participation in the campaign and bringing him on the bandwagon.

"Sen. Bentsen agreed they can't win without Jackson, so he is going to make sure these needs are going to be discussed," Price said.

Bentsen planned to leave Texas on Saturday, flying to Florida for a Democratic Party dinner before returning to Washington.

Shiite teacher sues IRS to get liens removed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has been sued by a Hill Country Shiite teacher in an attempt to get $10 million in tax liens removed from property.

Associates of the teacher, Fadhlalla Haeri, filed a civil lawsuit against the Internal Revenue Service, seeking to have the service remove liens on the property. The complicated case is being heard by U.S. District Judge Emilio Garza.

The IRS is claiming the liens are proper because Haeri and his wife, Muneera, owe about $10 million in back taxes and penalties.

The plaintiffs claim the liens should be released because Haeri no longer owns the property, which includes a mosque and school.

A decision in the case is expected next month.

The assets in question include 158 acres in Blanco and Bexar counties, the mosque and Moslem school located near Johnson City, an indoor swimming pool, a publishing house and luxury cars.

Area evacuated after fuel tank explodes

DECATUR (AP) — A fuel company tank exploded and erupted into fire today, causing authorities to evacuate a six-block area around the site, a Wise County Sheriff's Department spokesman said.

The explosion occurred at about 7:25 a.m. today near Decatur, sheriff's department spokesman Richard Evans said. There were no immediate reports of injuries.

All fire departments from the incorporated cities of Wise County were arriving to fight the blaze at the Mobil Oil Co. site, located next to a railroad track just south of Decatur, said Wayne Hinshaw, the county's emergency management coordinator.

Also, foam trucks were on standby at Carswell Air Force Base in Fort Worth, Texas, in case they were needed, but they had not been called to the scene, Hinshaw said.

He said he did not know what type of fuel was in the tank that exploded. "I just know they handle gasoline and diesel there," he said.

Authorities were evacuating a mostly industrial area within six blocks of the fire, Evans said.

"We've got foam trucks, fire trucks, deputies and everyone out there," Evans said.

The Mobil Oil Co. facility is located within a 100-yard radius of three other fuel storage sites along railroad south of Decatur.

Hinshaw said there is no indication the fire has spread to any of the other three facilities.

Preston Cocanougher, manager of Cocanougher Feed Mill and one of the volunteer firefighters at the scene, said the tank burned about 30 minutes.

Joan Rivers 'Broadway Bound' to earn respect

ENTERTAINMENT

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA

NEW YORK (AP) — Ask Joan Rivers why she took a chance on Broadway, and the answer comes back in her familiar rapid-fire delivery.

"Are you kidding?" she machine-guns. "It's the best woman's role written in the last five years. Besides, I wanted to see if I could do it at this stage in my life."

Could the queen of 23 years of stand-up comedy, the woman who coined the phrase "Can We Talk?" (it's now a federally registered trademark) and a battle-scarred veteran of the television talk-show wars become a plain, world-weary, middle-class Brooklyn housewife whose marriage and life are falling apart?

She could, and she did, earning cheers from audiences and respect from the critics.

The role is the centerpiece of Neil Simon's 1940s autobiographical play "Broadway Bound." Linda Lavin won a Tony Award when she first did it in New York nearly two years ago, but Rivers has made the role her own. Her contract with the play, originally for four weeks, has been extended and there is talk she may star in the London production when it opens next year.

Rivers' success caps a turbulent and tragic year that began in May 1987 when she was unceremoniously dumped from Fox Broadcasting's late-night talk show after only seven months on the air. Three months later her husband, Edgar Rosenberg, died from an overdose of Valium.

Rivers was determined to get back to work. "Broadway Bound" has been an effective tonic.

"It's the first good experience since my husband died and the Fox firing," she says simply. "It's been a very positive thing."

Rivers sits on a couch in her Madison Avenue hotel suite and works on a needlepoint sampler. Spike, her tiny mop of a dog, sits at her feet and chews contentedly on a bright pink slipper.

"One of the reasons I wanted to do the play was that nobody in California thinks of me as an actress," Rivers says between stitches. "They would think of me only as talk-show hostess or a stand-up comic."

That's a tough reality to face, particularly for someone who says, "The first thought about what I was going to do with my life was that I was going to be an actress. From infancy on. No question about it."

Simon and Gene Saks, the original director of "Broadway Bound" who came back to the show to help her, offered strong support.

"Simon said, 'We don't want a stunt and Joan doesn't want it to be a stunt,'" she recalls. "I came in, read and they offered me the part right there.

"I've been acting for a lot longer than people realize. You're acting every minute when you do a stand-up. I knew it was still in me. Timing. Inflection. There's so much to watch when you are building a character. How she walks, how she stands, how she reacts."

The role of Kate Jerome is not Rivers' first venture on Broadway. She appeared in New York in 1971 in "Fun City," a play she co-wrote with her husband.

"It's a joy to see my name on the marquee," Rivers says. "That's when I say, 'Where's my mother? Where's my husband?'"

It was Rosenberg who guided Rivers' career, the one person who knew immediately when something wasn't working on stage or in a club.

"He would have told me, 'Do this differently or do that differently,'" she says. "I miss that part of it so much. He was a brilliant editor, and I had respect for him."

Who says "no" now?

"No one," Rivers replies quietly. "Nobody wants to rock a boat. Gene Saks was wonderful and gave me a lot of encouragement, but you're really on your own out there."

If she faces the audience alone, some of them don't recognize her when she first walks on stage, a slightly stooped woman wearing no makeup and a faded housedress.

"There's a lot of my mother in Kate Jerome, in her strength," the Brooklyn-born Rivers says. "And my father's patients, particularly in her expressions. He was a doctor who had a large Jewish medical practice."

Rivers began rehearsals for the show at the end of May.

"At my age, it's hard memorizing a script," she laughs. "I asked everybody for advice. Somebody told me it takes Alec Guinness a year to memorize a script. He apparently types the whole thing out. Roddy McDowell says he records it and listens on a Walkman."

While she was working in Las Vegas, Rivers hired an unemployed actor and actress who fed her lines constantly when she wasn't on stage in a club.

Her 20-year-old daughter, Melissa, who wants to be an actress, came opening night and told her, "Mother, I hope my opening nights are as good as yours."

Melissa, now a college student, calls every night, phoning her mother in her dressing room at the Broadhurst Theater.

In August, while starring in "Broadway Bound," Rivers will work after the show at Michael's Pub, an East Side nightclub. She'll try out new material, much like she does when she's in California at Carlos 'n' Charlie's, another small nightspot.

Rivers has never been shy about going after a job.

"Nothing has ever fallen in my lap," she says. "I've always had to go out and get it. When you're a working performer, you're a gun for hire. You do what comes along."

To reach her mass audience, Rivers still has that center square on television's "Hollywood Squares," the never-ending game show she tapes when she has the time.

"I love playing the game, and I like the exposure," she says. "There is no other exposure for me at the moment. I'm persona non grata at Carson and also at Letterman because Letterman is a Carson production."

She says she would go back to "Tonight," where she reigned as Johnny Carson's leading substitute host until becoming his rival on the Fox network.

"He doesn't want any part of me," Rivers says. "He's angry because I dared to leave and take my own show after my contract was up. I did nothing wrong."

Rivers is selling her home in California and is buying a smaller house there, but she's also purchased an apartment in New York.

Joan Rivers talks with an interviewer in a Manhattan hotel recently. Rivers is presently starring in "Broadway Bound," the third part of Neil Simon's autobiographical trilogy, on Broadway.

Leonard Cohen laughs at image in new disc

By JEFF BRADLEY

TORONTO (AP) — He still dresses in black and sings about love and pain. But after years in the wilderness, Leonard Cohen, the mournful poet laureate of folk-rock, has a new hit album in which he laughs at his own dour image.

There's a disco spring in the beat for "I'm Your Man," the Montreal troubadour's first album in four years, and his gravelly baritone sounds darker and more secure than ever before.

"There are certain periods when the voice and the material are deeply suited for one another," the 53-year-old singer, songwriter, poet and novelist said in an interview.

He didn't mean that the confessional style of the 1960s was back, just that the coldheartedness of the "me generation" is waning.

"The '80s personality — hard-edged, hard-bitten, cynical, money-directed, stopping bravely at the surface, going for the goods, justification of greed, the scorn of introspection — I think all that has run its course. "There seems to be a hospitality to my kind of work now."

From the cover of the new CBS Records album showing Cohen eating a banana in a pinstriped suit, to the tongue-in-cheek "Tower of Song" in which he says, "I was born with the gift of a golden voice," Cohen's work has never seemed so much fun or met with so much acclaim.

The album was first released in Europe, where Cohen fans are legion, and had sold more than 650,000 copies by late July, his biggest success since going down to the river with "Suzanne" in 1967.

The New York Times called the disc "a masterpiece, pure and by no means simple," and one song derived from a Lorca poem, "Take This Waltz," hit No. 1 in Spain. A successful 70-concert tour of Europe will be followed by a North American tour in October.

"This album has done a lot to change the way I'm looked at. People really can locate a few chuckles. It has a surface you can stop at," said the composer of "Bird on a Wire" whose career seemed to evaporate in the 1980s.

Accompanying himself on synthesized keyboards, he brings in former backup singer Jennifer Warnes and Anjani for choruses that lighten the mood and contradict the toughest lyrics on the album.

"First We Take Manhattan," which Warnes put on her best-selling 1986 album of Cohen songs, gets an almost frivolous treatment from the composer.

"Without that Sergio Leone-Clint Eastwood track it would have been truly demented geopolitical fantasy. But with that soundtrack and with the Motown chorus veering over to bubble gum, you get a different twist on the thing," said Cohen.

The song is quintessential Cohen with lines such as: "I don't like your fashion business, mister. I don't like the drugs that keep you thin. I don't like what happened to my sister. First we take Manhattan, then we take Berlin."

What does it all mean?

"People don't like the scene anymore," said Cohen. "I don't mean they want a revolution — that kind of talk is obsolete. But some kind of revision has to be made. It's a kind of song of revenge."

"Everybody Knows" lists the world's woes from slavery to the crucifixion, but Cohen sets it to a jaunty beat with an uplifting chorus. He pokes fun at himself in "Jazz Police," inspired by attempts to stop his band from using jazz chords.

"Ain't No Cure for Love" might be a Cohen anthem, reflecting his many songs and poems about the ache of love gone wrong.

Never married but with two teen-age children, Adam and Lorca, from a former liaison in Paris, Cohen says love is more important to him than ever. "There's someone in my life," he adds in answer to a question.

"The idea of relationship has been central to my work. Those are my politics in a way: what happens with somebody across the table, what is appropriate behavior with a lover or a friend. The abrasive quality of daily life is such that without someone to love, the whole situation is untenable."

Dividing his time between Los Angeles, Paris and Montreal, Cohen credits Zen meditation with tempering an imagination the Canadian Encyclopedia once called "dark and despairing."

"I'm willing to stick with things, with relationships, with my own predicament, with knowing it's dark a lot of the time but somehow cheerfulness keeps breaking through."

Woman focuses on Jewish composers

By CHARLES WARD

HOUSTON (AP) — In 1985, Houston cellist Paula Eisenstein Baker innocently started looking for music with Jewish themes for a program she was planning. She has become the American expert on a group of Russian Jewish composers known as the St. Petersburg School.

While preparing her lecture-recital for a local performance, she found a work by Mikhail Gnessin, who studied with Nicolai Rimsky-Korsakov at the St. Petersburg Conservatory. In her search to find something about the unknown Gnessin, she noticed that a publisher of reprinted books was offering Albert Weisser's "The Modern Renaissance of Jewish Music." She got it and suddenly discovered a realm of music she didn't know.

"That was serendipity — like all things in life," said Ms. Baker, who teaches at the University of St. Thomas and performs in local orchestras.

Her fascination was soon focused on the Society for Jewish Folk music, organized in 1908 in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad).

Works by composers associated with the St. Peterburg group were featured in a program recently at Congregation Emanu El. Included was the American premiere of Joel Engel's "Hadibuk Suite," incidental music for "The Dybbuk," an early 20th-century Yiddish play.

In the short period the St. Petersburg society was active, less than a decade, "It had an extraordinary success," Ms. Baker said.

It presented numerous concerts, attracting such legendary musicians as violinists Nathan Milstein and Jascha Heifetz and bass Feodor Chaliapin. It spawned chapters in other Russian cities, mostly notably Moscow. It published at least 81 compositions, including two songs for soprano and string quartet by Lazare Saminsky that were on the program.

The list of that music in Weisser's book captured Ms. Baker's imagination, and she set out to find all the works. She lacks about a dozen. "Obviously, I'm trying to perform as many of the pieces as I can." And, she wants to update and correct Weisser's checklist of those pieces.

The group started in composition class of Rimsky-Korsakov. In 1902, a Yiddish song submitted by a class member prompted Rimskey-Korsakov to ask his students, "Why do you imitate European and Russian composers? The Jews possess tremendous folk treasures...Jewish music awaits her Jewish Glinka." (Mikhail Glinka was the 19th-century Russian composer credited with infusing a sense of nationalism into Russian classical music; his influence stretched to Tchaikovsky.)

Six years later, the young composers went to the Governor of St. Petersburg to have their society legalized.

Houston cellist Paula Eisenstein Baker has become the American expert on a group of Russian Jewish composers known as the St. Petersburg School. It started in 1985, when she started looking for music with Jewish themes for a program she was planning.

As Ms. Baker began her search she didn't know what she was looking for. "I was just enamored with the whole idea of exploring it," she said.

In the process she made "all the first-year graduate student mistakes," she said.

One American acquaintance suggested she contact the widow of a Russian cellist during a trip to Tel Aviv in 1986. Ms. Baker did, and the woman, in turn, directed her to Israel's Central Library for Music and Dance, where she found "quantities of these works by St. Petersburg composers." She returned to Houston with photocopies of more than 400 pages of music.

Fitfully, she began to make other contacts and visit other sources: librarians at Jewish educational institutions and libraries in the United States, especially in New York and Philadelphia, and private collections.

"The entertaining thing is that it's such an incredible detective story," Ms. Baker said.

She doesn't always know what she's looking for or what she might find. One folder of material in a collection may contain bills paid by the society, while the next may have folders and programs from concerts. "It gives a real sense of immediacy."

Typical of her search was finding the two Saminsky songs, which were on Weisser's checklist.

"I spent the first three weeks of June in Albert Weisser's widow's basement, sorting through papers. Sure enough, in the boxes there were these two pieces I didn't find in Tel Aviv or Philadelphia or New York or anywhere," she said.

"Little by little, I've become the U.S. authority," she said. "Now, I think I have the best holdings (of these pieces), because now I'm getting calls."

However, she faces a choice: to devote the energy and time needed to write about her discoveries and, thus, possibly sacrifice some of her own playing career.

While rummaging in Weisser's basement, she came across a copy of his book, loaded with annotations, stuffed with papers and marked "for the forthcoming second edition."

She might carry through the project.

Too, the entire history of the Moscow chapter remains to be discovered. She has been urged to take advantage of this era of glasnost to explore it.

"My principal goal has been to perform these pieces. What fun to have found all these other things," she said.

Ms. Baker's new knowledge also has illuminated her own family history.

Her maternal grandparents came from a small "shtetl," a tiny Jewish community in "the pale," or the swath of European Russia where Jews were allowed to live. (It is now mostly in Lithuania.)

"This group of composers came from upper-middle-class society in Russia, which I didn't know about," she said. "The story (of the composer's group) tells about the flexibility of society in Russia at the time — you couldn't just move or go to St. Petersburg. You had to have a pass, if you were Jewish.

"Here was this group, doing all this work for pleasure." They evidently had survived the pogroms in Russian in the 1880s. "They were financially comfortable enough to live there and study.

"This is a fascinating, different echelon of Russian Jewish society that I knew nothing about."

Dodgers make it 4 in a row

From Wire Reports
Associated Press

Everyday another player seems to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to victory.

NL

Dave Anderson singled in Tracy Woodson from second base in the eighth inning Thursday and the Dodgers beat the Philadelphia Phillies 2-1 for their fourth consecutive victory.

Woodson singled to open the eighth off Kevin Gross, 11-9. Alfredo Griffin sacrificed and Anderson hit a 2-2 pitch into short right field, sending Philadelphia to its fifth straight loss.

"It was one of those balls that was a base hit as soon as it hit the end of the bat," Anderson said. "You couldn't have thrown the ball out there any better. We needed some breaks today to beat him. I had faced him in the past, so I pretty much knew what he was throwing. I knew he had his good stuff today, so you just go out there and take a shot and try to put the ball in play because if you do, a lot of things can happen."

Gross allowed five hits in his fifth complete game, striking out five and walking none. Philadelphia is last in the National League in hitting and it was the ninth time in 25 starts that Gross has been involved in a one-run game.

"We're a last-place team, and we're not scoring a lot of runs," Gross said. "We had Martinez on the ropes a few times and nothing happened. They know they were lucky to win that game."

Jay Howell, 3-3, pitched 1 1-3 hitless innings in relief of Ramon Martinez, who made his second major-league appearance. Martinez allowed four hits in seven innings, striking out seven and walking three.

Jesse Orosco got two outs for his eighth save, escaping a bases-loaded jam.

Giants 4, Mets 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Mike Krukow beat New York for the third time this season and increased his career record against the Mets to 20-7 as San Francisco beat New York for the seventh time in nine games.

Krukow, 7-4, has won seventh of his last eight decisions against New York. He gave up four hits in six innings, struck out a season-high seven and hit an RBI double. He left with a stiff back and Roger Samuels pitched two innings before Scott Garrelts came in for his 11th save.

Bob Ojeda, 8-12, gave up seven hits and all four runs in four innings.

Padres 5, Expos 4

SAN DIEGO — Carmelo Martinez snapped a tie with a ninth-inning bases-loaded single as Montreal lost its fifth straight despite the first two-homer game of Andres Galarraga's career.

Mark Parent doubled off Tim Bruke, 3-3, to open the ninth. Garry Templeton sacrificed pinch-runner Stan Jefferson to third, Marvell Wynne popped out and Roberto Alomar and Tony Gwynn were intentionally walked, bringing up Martinez, who lined a singled to center.

Lance McCullers, 2-6, who relieved Ed Whitson with a runner on in the ninth and a 4-2 lead, gave up Galarragga's 24th homer. Galarraga had hit a two-run homer in the second.

Reds 9, Cubs 1

CINCINNATI — Danny Jackson pitched a seven-hitter to become the National League's first 17-game winner and Eric Davis drove in five runs as Cincinnati won for the seventh time in 10 games.

Jackson, 17-5, has won his last seven decisions and 10 of his last 11. He is 10-1 in Riverfront Stadium with victories in eight consecutive home decisions.

Davis hit a two-run homer off Jamie Moyer, 6-12, and drove in three runs off Frank DiPino with a double and a single. It was Davis' first five-RBI game of the season.

Cardinals 2, Astros 1

ST. LOUIS — Tom Brunansky tripled in the Cardinals' first run and snapped a tie with a sixth-inning homer off Mike Scott, Brunansky's 18th home run of the season.

Houston fell 4½ games behind Los Angeles in the National League West. The first-place Dodgers beat Philadelphia 2-1 Thursday afternoon.

Tigers rally for 4 in 9th to beat White Sox, 6-4

Associated Press

DETROIT — Dave Bergman capped a four-run rally in the ninth inning with a two-run homer, giving the Detroit Tigers a 6-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox Thursday night.

AL

Trailing 4-2 going into the ninth, Tom Brookens singled and Lou Whitaker walked off Bobby Thigpen, 5-7, and both runners moved up on a sacrifice by Luis Salazar.

A wild pitch made it 4-3 and moved Whitaker to third. Thigpen then got Alan Trammell to hit a pop-up to second baseman Fred Manrique, but he dropped the ball, allowing Whitaker to score the tying run.

Bergman then followed with a homer into the upper deck in right field, making a winner of reliever Mike Henneman, 6-2, and snapping a streak of three straight losses and five in six games by the Tigers, who lead Boston by three games in the American League East.

Trammell and Darrell Evans also homered for Detroit, while Daryl Boston homered for Chicago.

Mariners 6, Red Sox 1

BOSTON — Jim Presley hit a three-run double in the sixth inning and Mark Langston pitched a five-hitter for 7 1-3 innings, leading the Seattle Mariners to a 6-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Seattle won two of the three games and became the first team besides Boston to win a series at Fenway Park since Toronto won four straight from June 2-5.

Langston, 9-11, struck out three and walked five before giving up a run-scoring single to Dwight Evans in the eighth. He was relieved by Mike Jackson.

Mike Boddicker, 9-14, gave up eight hit and five runs in 5 1-3 innings for the loss.

Seattle took the lead in the second when Harold Reynolds tripled and Bruce Fields doubled, then broke open the game with a four-run sixth. After Presley's three-run double, Reynolds followed with an RBI double off reliever Jeff Sellers.

Orioles 10, Athletics 1

BALTIMORE — Jeff Ballard pitched a four-hitter and Terry Kennedy, Jim Traber and Cal Ripken had three hits each as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Oakland Athletics 10-1.

Ballard, 7-10, pitched his second consecutive complete game, striking out three and walking five. He did not allow a runner past first base after the fourth inning, when Mark McGwire homered to account for Oakland's only run.

Baltimore, which ended a streak of nine consecutive losses against American League West teams, went ahead 5-0 in the first and made it 10-1 in the fourth, batting around in both innings.

Bob Welch, 14-7, allowed nine runs in 3 1-3 innings and walked five for Oakland, which had won eight of its last nine and 12 of its last 14.

Angels 7, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Chuck Finley allowed one run in 5 2-3 innings and California took advantage of shoddy defense by New York as the Angels defeated the Yankees 7-1.

The Yankees entered the game with 40 hits and 20 runs in their previous three outings, but were cooled off by Finley, 7-11, and reliever Greg Minton. Finley won for only the third time since June 29, and Minton pitched 3 1-3 innings of hitless relief for his seventh save.

Tommy John, 8-5, was seeking his 286th victory but was the victim of fielding lapses in the third inning when the Angels scored two unearned runs.

The first run scored on a bad throw by shortstop Rafael Santana, and the second on a double by Johnny Ray over the head of center fielder Gary Ward, who first broke in on the ball and could not recover to make the catch.

Brian Downing hit a sacrifice fly and homered for the Angels, giving him 20 homers this season, five of them at Yankee Stadium, where he had never homered before this season.

The Yankees' only run came on a 478-foot homer by Dave Winfield, his 23rd.

Indians 4, Brewers 3

CLEVELAND — Andy Allanson broke a 1-1 tie with a three-run double in the seventh inning and Cory Snyder threw out B.J. Surhoff at home for the final out of the game as the Cleveland Indians beat the Milwaukee Brewers 4-3.

With the Indians ahead 4-1, Cleveland starter Rich Yett allowed two hits to start the ninth and was replaced by Doug Jones, who gave up an RBI double to B.J. Surhoff, leaving two runners in scoring position.

Jones got the next two outs without allowing a run before Jim Gantner singled to right field. Rob Deer scored from third, but Snyder's one-hop throw to Allanson got Surhoff for the final out, giving Jones his 27th save and Snyder his 14th assist, tops among American League outfielders.

Yett, 7-4, allowed eight hits, struck out six and walked none as Cleveland won its fourth straight game. The loss was Milwaukee's third in a row.

Rangers 4, Twins 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Jeff Russell pitched a five-hitter and Pete Incaviglia and Geno Petralli hit consecutive homers in the second inning, lifting the Texas Rangers to a 4-2 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Russell, 10-5, allowed only one hit, a fourth-inning double by John Moses, until the eighth, when he allowed two runs and three hits.

WTGA golfers begin arriving

From Staff Reports

Golfers began arriving today for next week's 66th annual Women's Texas Golf Association tournament at Green Tree County Club Monday through Thursday.

Today and Saturday will be devoted to practice rounds while Sunday the 144 competitors will play in the Babe Zaharias Memorial Low Ball event with proceeds going to the American Cancer Society.

The Babe, an Olympic champion, a longtime star on the LPGA tour and a former WTGA champion, died of cancer.

Actual, tournament play begins with the qualifying round Monday, followed by three rounds of medal competition.

Defending champion Sue Thomas is playing this week in the LPGA qualifying tournament in an attempt to win her playing card and will not be here. However, Toni Wisener, last year's medalist at West Columbia with a 72, is back and ranks as one of the pretournament favorites.

Among the leading challengers will be the seven collegiate golfers in the field.

Katie Golden, Jasper, and Sandy Hamby, Houston, two of the collegians, each carry two handicaps. Hamby is a junior, under 18, and competed in the 1984 and 1985 WTGA events.

Other collegians in the field include Kim Spencer, Boerne, six handicap; Beth Paul, Austin, four-handicap; Cindy Haley, Dallas, four handicap; Krista Tucek, Houston, five handicap; and Lisa Beck, Snyder, six handicap.

A year ago, Sue Thomas defeated Mary Ann Morrison in the finals while Wiesner and Carey Ruffer, Conroe, reached the semifinals.

Registration ends today at 5 p.m. and continues from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Sunday's Zaharias play will be followed by a Welcome Party at GTCC's main ballroom.

Play will in seven eight-player flights.

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. (AP) — Tom Watson came up a point short and was eliminated as the second half of the field played the first round in the $1 million International Golf Tournament.

Watson, needing a birdie-birdie finish to advance to the second round of the tournament, birdied the 17th hole but missed from four feet on the 18th.

Ben Crenshaw and Mark O'Meara earned $8,750 apiece as they led the 39 qualifiers from the 81-man field with 10 points, while defending champion John Cook missed the cut with zero points.

The tournament is being played under a modified Stableford scoring system which awards five points for an eagle, two for a birdie, none for a par, minus-1 for a bogey and minus-3 for worse than bogey.

Navratilova, Evert on collision course

MONTREAL (AP) — Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert moved closer to another showdown Thursday as they advanced to the quarterfinals of the Player's Challenge women's tennis tournament.

Navratilova, the top seed, thumped No. 11 Sylvia Hanika 6-1, 6-1, to improve her career record against the West German to 14-2. She has not lost to Hanika since 1982.

Evert, seeded second, eased by Isabelle Demongeot of France 6-4, 6-2, after finishing off Toronto's Rene Simpson 6-1, 6-2 in an earlier-round match delayed from Wednesday.

Canada's top player, 13th-seeded Helen Kelesi, took advantage of sloppy play by seventh-seeded Lori McNeil to win the first set but was beaten 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Kelesi led 4-1 in the second set but allowed McNeil, ranked ninth in the world, back into the match.

"I wanted to finish the match, and it was getting frustrating," said Kelesi. "It was definitely a case of nerves."

Navratilova, a three-time Player's winner, needed just 53 minutes to eliminate Hanika, who was unable to take advantage of any inside tips she may have received from her coach, Mike Estep — Navratilova's former coach.

Navratilova faces the Soviet Union's Natalia Zvereva in Friday's quarterfinal. Zvereva, who ousted Navtatilova at the French Open, downed Argentina's Nicole Provis 6-4, 6-0.

Third-seeded Pam Shriver struggled past Nathaline Tauziat of France, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4. Shriver trailed 4-2 in the opening set and had to rally from 1-3 in the tie-breaker.

Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, the fifth seed, rolled past Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden, 6-3, 6-0.

The only seeds to fall in afternoon play were 10th-seeded Barbara Potter, who lost to Terry Phelps, 6-0, 3-6, 6-0, and ninth-ranked Zina Garrison, who was beaten by fourth-seeded Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, 6-1,

Three-way fight seen in Big Ten

Associated Press

The Midwest

Michigan, Michigan State and Iowa will fight it out for the Big Ten title, while Notre Dame's chances of contending for the national championship appear slim.

That's the Midwest football picture for Autumn 1988.

Michigan State, the Rose Bowl champion, will be striving to make it two straight Big Ten crowns, but the Spartans will get strong arguments from Michigan and Iowa.

The matter should reach a head quickly. Iowa will be at Michigan State in a Big Ten opener Oct. 1. The following week, Michigan State plays at Michigan and, on Oct. 15, Michigan plays at Iowa.

If that's a bit confusing, all it means is that the top three contenders for the Big Ten title will all have played each other in the first three weeks of the season.

If they wind up beating each other, it could open the doors for Ohio State, Indiana, Minnesota or any other team that gets a hot hand. But if the conference does have a dominant team, it should emerge early and maybe even make a run at the national championship.

That will not happen, says Michigan coach Bo Schembechler. "We're too busy beating up on each other."

The Big Ten hasn't produced a national champion since 1968, when Ohio State finished No. 1.

Dame's last national title was 1977. There are too many major powers on the schedule for the Irish to contend nationally.

Coach Lou Holtz will be without Heisman Trophy winner Tim Brown. Ricky Watters has been moved from tailback to flanker and Mark Green will operate at tailback. Tony Rice will be back at quarterback, but he will have to improve his passing to go along with his running ability.

Michigan State has dates with Notre Dame and Florida State before opening the Big Ten race against Iowa.

"It all comes down to Iowa," said MSU Coach George Perles, who has eight starters returning from a defense that led the Big Ten and ranked No. 2 nationally. "If we don't beat them, it will be an uphill battle all year."

Blake Ezor will take over the tailback spot vacated by Lorenzo White. The real key to the Spartan attack will be quarterback Bobby McAllister. If McAllister's passing game improves to go along with his running ability, Michigan State will be difficult to dethrone.

Schembechler is entering his 20th season as a head coach at Michigan and he claims he liked things much better when it was just Michigan and Ohio State battling for the title annually.

"Unfortunately, those days are over," said Schembechler. Nevertheless, he feels his Wolverines can win the Big Ten this year. "But we must improve our defense, we must reduce the number of turnovers and we must have better luck with injuries."

Schembechler hasn't named his quarterback, but in all liklihood it will be Demetrius Brown. Brown will have excellent targets in John Kolesar and Greg McMurty, and Michigan is never without a running game.

John Vitale and Mike Husar will provide the blocking and Mark Messner anchors the defensive line.

Iowa's Hawkeyes should be undefeated by the time they reach the Big Ten race. Hawaii, Kansas State, Colorado and Iowa State will provide little more than tuneups for what Coach Hayden Fry promises will be an "entertaining and explosive." team.

"We have the program at a level where we can compete for the Big Ten title every year," Fry said.

Quarterback Chuck Hartlieb will ignite the explosives this year. Last year he emerged from a three-way battle for the starting job with 217 completions in 334 attempts for 3,092 yards and 19 touchdowns. Hartlieb has an excellent supporting cast in wide receiver Travis Watkins, tight end Marv Cook and fullback David Hudson.

It was only four years ago that Indiana went 0-11. But the Hoosiers have improved rapidly under Coach Bill Mallory and some think they can be serious title contenders. Last year they finished 6-2 to tie Iowa for second place in the Big Ten.

However, Mallory lost linebacker Van Waiters, tackle Eric Moore and wide receiver Ernie Jones.

Still, the Hoosiers have the makings of an explosive offense, led by quarterback Dave Schnell and tailback Anthony Thompson.

But Mallory warns Indiana fans, "The closer you get to the top of the mountain, the tougher the climb."

There have been two coaching changes in the Big Ten this year with John Cooper replacing Earle Bruce at Ohio State and John Mackovic taking over for Mike White at Illinois.

Eastern Michigan appears to have a chance to repeat as champion of the Mid-American Conference, but replacing quarterback Ron Adams and tailback Gary Patton will be difficult. The Hurons will have to fight off Kent State.

Kent State has a new coach in Dick Crum, but the Golden Flashes have 13 starters returning from a 7-4 team last year that defeated Kansas and lost to Pittsburgh. Tailback Eric Wilkerson, the league's MVP, is back, and so is quarterback Patrick Young.

Roper worried about reputation

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M linebacker John Roper wants it known he's not losing any of his affinity for "splattering quarterbacks."

Roper broke through the line at a recent scrimmage and had a clear shot at Aggie quarterback Lance Pavlas, but he mercifully sidestepped him.

"The coaches have been thanking me every day for not hitting him," Roper said Thursday, recounting his play for touring Southwest Conference writers and broadcasters.

The Aggies started workouts this week for their Kickoff Classic opener Aug. 27 against Nebraska, and Roper was taking it easy against quarterbacks, but opposing quarterbacks should expect no similar mercy.

"I just like to splatter any quarterback," said Roper, a first-team Associated Press All-America last year. "I've always played this way since high school."

"You just go play and have fun. It's no mercy for the weak and the strong will survive."

"In high school I was known as a cyclone and I still have that attitude."

All four starting linebackers — Roper and Aaron Wallace on the outside and Adam Bob and Dana Batiste on the inside — return from last year's SWC champion team.

"We've played together for four years and know each other's strengths and weaknesses," Roper said.

"I think we have a chance to be the best linebacking corps in the nation."

Roper says he enjoys playing on the same defense as Wallace.

"He's a 4.4 (40 yard dash) and I'm a 4.5 so it's a big game who gets to the quarterback the fastest," Roper said. "We're mainly just having fun."

Roper had fun at the expense of opposing offenses last season when he led the SWC with 15 quarterback sacks and 26 tackles for losses.

He was the SWC Defensive Player of the Year with a team-high 104 tackles that included 139 yards in losses.

"John Roper has gone to another level," Texas A&M coach Jackie Sherrill said. "By that I'm saying that on every snap he's as good as you'll see."

Roper says he generally has trouble getting along with an offensive player, but tries to make exceptions for his oun teammates.

"One year I hit (former A&M quarterback) Kevin Murray," Roper said. "The coaches got red in the face and Kevin jumped up and threw the ball at me."

Roper says now he's learned more control — at least against his own teammates.

And playing together as a defensive unit will be important for the Aggies this season, Sherrill says.

"We will line up like 11 linebackers on defense," Sherill said. "We may be the smallest we've ever been on defense and that concerns me lining up against Nebraska."

The Aggies play the Cornhuskers and then have games against Alabama, Louisiana State and Oklahoma State before starting SWC play.

Oilers' Glanville not happy at SWTS

Battles

One of the reasons the Houston Oilers abandoned San Angelo as their summer camp in favor of San Marcos, they said, was the humidity.

It didn't make sense at the time and makes even less sense now.

At a lower altitude, the humidity figured to be more punishing at Southwest Texas State than it was at Angelo State. After all, it was to escape Houston's suffocating summer weather that the Oilers came west in the first place.

And now...."You can't practice twice a day with what we have here," complains Oiler Coach Jerry Glanville, "then have a football team playing well in September. I don't want, this team tired in September and wondering why we're not winning because you're trying to recover from August."

Hey, Midland has nice grass practice fields and, in the matter of humidity, the Tall City beats either San Angelo or San Marcos. All we lack is some high-rise dorms to house a pro football team....

IF THE Atlanta Hawks aren't ready to challenge and beat the Boston Celtics now, they'll never be.

Acquisition of Moses Malone gives Atlanta the one missing ingredient it needs, the point-supplying big middle man.

The Hawks have better talent on their bench than most divisional rivals, but it has suffered for lack of the dominating inside force. And now they have him in the 33-year-old Malone. Moses, 20.3 points per game, replaces Tree Rollins, who contributed a scorching 4.0 points to the Atlanta cause last year.

That really puts Coach Mike Fratello under the gun who finds himself in a "no excuses" pressure cooker....

AFTER SHOCK— The Wayne Gretzky blockbuster is expected to double season ticket sales for the Los Angeles Kings and it led to 2,500 immediate cancellations in Edmonton.

The Kings figure the Great One will add $3.5 million to the Kings' coffers next season.

Gretzky gets an immediate raise of $252,000 for the next two seasons because he will now be paid in dollars. Even better for Wayne, in order to prevent Gretzky from becoming a free agent in 1992, Los Angeles will do its best to keep hockey's best player happy and tied up for the rest of the century....

Hey, and Babe Ruth remains a legend well beyond his time. His daughters reportedly still receive well into six figures a year for posthumous promotions using his name.....

And did you know the biggest jump in sports TV ratings last year was made by boxing, showing a 9.7 increase. Of course, the year before it suffered a 35.4 loss, leaving the ring sport with a barely visible 3.4 viewer rating in 1987.

Although NFL football and major league baseball still top all sports, the NBA is making steady gains....plus 15.5 in 1985-86 and 3.7 plus last year for an 8.5 audience last year. That compares with 14.5 for football and 10.3 for baseball.

Angels lose again, 5-2

From Staff Reports

EL PASO— Jim Hunter hadn't won a game since July 21, but he came through for the El Paso Diablos with a five-hit, 5-2 win over the Midland Angels when they needed him.

Hunter not only silenced the Angel bats in inside the snare drum that is Dudley Field, but notched his eighth win in 18 decisions and chopped off a 14-game hitting streak by Dan Grunhard and an eight-bat binge by Jim McCollom.

It all resulted in Midland's Texas League West lead being trimmed to a half game going into tonight's final game before the Angels move on to San Antonio for five games.

Midland, at 29-28, is a half game ahead of the Diablos and 1 1/2 ahead of San Antonio.

Todd Brown, Joe Mitchell and Leo Carillo led off with singles to open the fourth of a 0-0 game against Midland starter Tim Burcham. Then his defense fell apart.

A two-base throwing error let two runs score and a passed ball leaked in a third run before Chris Spiers singled home a fourth run, all Hunter would need to win.

If there was a bright spot for Midland, besides Burcham's pitching, it was the continued muscle work of Lee Stevens, who Thursday was about all the offense Midland had.

Stevens pounded a tape measure homer over the right-center field fence for Midland's seventh-inning run. It was his 21st of the season. He led off the ninth with his second double, moved to third on Jesus Alfaro's single and scored on Jeff Manto's fly ball.

MATT MAYSEY hurled a six-hitter in Wichita's 3-1 victory over San Antonio.

Maysey, 8-8, struck out six and did not walk a batter in his second complete game of the year. San Antonio starter Greg Lafever fell to 8-7 with loss.

Wichita opened the scoring in the first inning on a two-out double by Jeff Yurtin and Bill Stevenson's RBI single. Wichita added a run in the second on Pat Jelk's sixth homer of the year to make it 2-0.

San Antonio narrowed the score to 2-1 in the sixth on a leadoff double by Mike Huff and an RBI single by Wayne Kirby, but Wichita added an insurance run in the seventh on Yurtin's RBI single.

GEORGE Threadgil slugged a three-run homer to lead Tulsa to a 7-5 victory over Arkansas while Jackson edged Shreveport, 4-3.

Threadgil's homer came in the sixth inning. Kevin Reimer added a solo homer for Tulsa and other runs came on a sacrifice fly, an error and a a balk.

Arkansas scored four runs in the sixth on a two-run single by Sal Agostinelli and RBI singles by Bien Figueroa and Maricio Nunez. The final run for the Travelers came in the ninth inning.

Rick Lundblade's seventh-inning single drove in two runs to break a 2-2 tie and lead the Jackson Mets to 4-3 victory over the Shreveport Captains.

Romy Cucjen homered in the top of the ninth inning, his eighth of the season, to bring Shreveport to within one, 4-3.

That was the only run allowed by Jackson reliever Rich Rodriguez, however, who struck out four over the last two innings to record his sixth save. Virgil Conly, 4-4, earned the win on the mound, pitching into the eight inning.

Shreveport took a 2-0 lead in the first inning, keyed by Cucjen's two-run double. Jackson tied the game with a run in the first inning on Miguel Roman's double and a run in the fifth inning on Mike DeButch's sacrifice fly.

Alan Hayden stole two bases to set a franchise record with 60 on the year.

The winning pitcher was Virgil Conly, 4-4 and Rich Rodriguez picked up his sixth save.

HALO HOOPS— Midland Manager Max Oliveras comes off a 15-day suspension for tonight's game....McCollom, although he saw his latest hit streak ended, is batting .340, within reach of TL leader Mario Monico, .349, with 11 games to play....Lefthander Ed Puig earned his 10th save with two innings of relief....

Aug. 19

1909 — The Philadelphia Phillies were rained out for the 10th consecutive day, an all-time record.

1913 — The Chicago Cubs tagged Grover Alexander for nine straight hits and six runs for a 10-4 triumph over the Philadelphia Phillies.

1921 — Detroit's Ty Cobb got his 3,000th career hit at age 34, the youngest player to reach that plateau. The milestone hit was a single off Elmer Myers of the Boston Red Sox.

1951 — Eddie Gaedel, a 43-inch, 65-pound midget, made his first and only plate appearance as a pinch-hitter for Frank Saucier of the St. Louis Browns. Gaedel wearing No. ⅛ was walked on four pitches by Detroit Tiger pitcher Bob Cain and then was taken out for pinch-runner Jim Delsing. The experiment by Browns owner Bill Veeck was completely legal, but later outlawed.

1957 — Horace Stoneham owner of the New York Giants announced that the team's board of directors had voted 9-1 in favor of moving to San Francisco.

1965 — Jim Maloney of the Cincinnati Reds no-hit the Chicago Cubs, 1-0, in 10 innings in the first game of a doubleheader at Chicago. Leo Cardenas homered in the 10th for the Reds. Earlier in the year, Maloney lost 1-0 in 11 innings after holding the Mets hitless for 10 before Johnny Lewis homered leading off the 11th.

1969 — Ken Holtzman of the Cubs blanked the Atlanta Braves with a 3-0 no-hitter at Wrigley Field. Ron Santo's three-run homer in the first inning provided the Cubs' offense.

Today's Birthdays: Gary Gaetti 30, Ron Darling 28.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You can look forward to a fuller social life and a healthier bank account. Although circumstances beyond your control will frustrate you at times, you will make giant strides forward where career and finances are concerned. Find practical solutions to parent-child conflicts. A new look — perhaps shorter hair — gives you a younger appearance.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: author Edgar Guest, architect Eliel Saarinen, President Benjamin Harrison, infielder Graig Nettles, slugger Tom Brunansky, composer Isaac Hayes, NBC's Connie Chung, novelist Jacqueline Susann, Adm. Oliver Perry.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Events could make this a topsy-turvy weekend for you. Stay calm, cool and collected, and you will find more pleasure than you thought possible. Spend time outdoors getting in touch with nature.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Family ties are strengthened just by talking about the past and future. Avoid rushing around if high temperatures prevail. Relax with friends or a good book. Let romance simmer for a while.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your actions work like magic to advance a special cause. Trim waste from family budget. Plan outings for family members of all ages. A spirited exchange is possible when you discuss the past.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Summer's fresh vegetables and fruits should make dieting easier. Turn a deaf ear to those who espouse negative views. Be good to yourself this weekend. Catch up on your rest and reading.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may feel like stirring things up this weekend. A relationship will benefit from new ideas and a candid exchange of views. Have fun outdoors, but be careful not to get too much sun.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Rely on experts when making a career or financial decision today. Trust those who have worked with you the longest. Good cheer is contagious. Romance reflects your upbeat mood.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial services tailored to your special needs will help you stay in the black. Look carefully before making a money commitment. A career decision may have to be postponed. Do not fret.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Indulge mate's wishes. Doing so could be great for both of you! Paying close attention to bills and bank matters saves you dollars. Spend part of the day playing your favorite sport.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Let others take chances. You observe, then act. Profits rise when you find better ways to answer your customers' needs. Indulge yourself by buying a new outfit. Someone sends romantic signals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not commit yourself to something you cannot handle emotionally or financially. Working with your hands gives you a feeling of satisfaction. Put safety first. Call an expert for more information.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Welcome a break in the action. Join family or friends by the water. Practical approaches pay off handsomely now. Expand your circle of friends. A sociable evening brings great pleasure. Pursue romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mate or other loved one could be restless. Use discretion in social and romantic encounters. A sticky situation calls for tact. Keep your opinions to yourself. Limit spending on non-essentials.

Opening lead: King of ♠

"Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury:

"This lawsuit is frivolous in the extreme. There can be no reason why my client, Mr. South, should be found guilty of negligence. Consider how carefully he played this hand.

"He won the opening lead in dummy, then drew two rounds of trumps ending in hand. Next came a finesse of the jack of hearts. Had this succeeded, he would have been able to discard one of dummy's diamonds on the king of hearts, and he would have been able to try for an overtrick with the diamond finesse.

"Unfortunately, the heart finesse lost and East returned a club. My client ruffed, crossed to the ace of hearts and took the diamond finesse. That, too, lost, so my client went down one trick. Since the odds on one of two finesses working is at least 3-to-1, how can anyone blame my client?"

"Ladies and gentlemen, honorable counsel's defense of South has been more learned than accurate! Mr. South would have done better to claim his slam at trick one—the defenders would probably have conceded.

"Suppose he wins the opening lead, then ruffs a club. Two rounds of trumps, ending on the table, are followed by another club ruff, and then come ace-king of hearts and a heart ruff. Now declarer completes the elimination by leading the jack of clubs and sluffing a diamond from hand!

"When West wins the queen—he must hold milady in light of his opening lead—he can either yield a ruff-sluff or else lead a diamond into declarer's major tenace. Either way, declarer loses a club trick and no more. We insist on a guilty verdict and damages."

There'll be no beating around the Bush.

He's come out on top. And this year's Republican Convention is delegated to be informative. Don't miss CNN's up-to-the-minute coverage August 15-18 on channel 6.

Baby foils attempt to steal radio as would-be thief runs out of time

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — An 8-month-old infant thwarted a would-be burglar's attempt to steal a clock radio, the baby's sister said.

Eight-month-old Selman Walker was sleeping next to his 17-year-old sister, Roxanne, when a burglar apparently tried to reach through the window and take the radio, police said. But the baby grabbed the cord, Roxanne Walker said Thursday.

"Anything that moves, the baby will grab it," she said. "I felt something moving and then the baby started laughing. I guess he thought it was funny."

She described herself as a sound sleeper but said she was awakened by the baby being tugged from the window, which opens onto an alleyway.

"I grabbed him and then I screamed," she said, adding that the thief panicked, let go of the radio and fled. She only saw a hand and could not give police an accurate description of the man.

NEW YORK (AP) — If you're planning on watching the "Today" show anytime soon, don't expect to see co-host Bryant Gumbel interviewing David Letterman. Or Cher. Or James Earl Jones. Or Garrison Keillor. Or ...

"Meeting celebrities has never been something that thrills me. I can't believe what (expletive) some so-called stars can be," Gumbel says in an interview in the Sept. 5 issue of US magazine.

Gumbel holds a grudge against Letterman stemming from a 1984 prank when the "Late Night With David Letterman" host interrupted a "Today" show taping by using a bullhorn to proclaim he was NBC boss Grant Tinker and "not wearing any pants."

"I still think he's an (expletive) and many people interviewed by him think so too. He never apologized and I have nothing to say to him," Gumbel said before ripping into other performers.

Cher

— On Cher: "I have an aversion to professional celebrities who appear on the cover of 'People' every six months, and who run out and do every little cheap gym ad."

— On James Earl Jones: "When an interview with him is going badly, I feel no compulsion to make him look better."

— On Garrison Keillor: "A real jerk...the worst."

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Actor Gary Merrill, suffering from lung cancer, has been hospitalized for treatment of a chest infection, a spokeswoman said.

The 73-year-old Merrill, who appeared in the 1950 Oscar-winning movie "All About Eve" and later married co-star Bette Davis, was rushed to Mercy Hospital Tuesday from his Portland-area home. Merrill said he had undergone exploratory surgery at the hospital last week and was released after two days.

"I didn't slow down after they let me out," he said. "I'm like any other little kid. So they've grounded me; they want to keep track of me."

Hospital spokeswoman Leslie Gall said Thursday Merrill was being treated for a skin infection in his chest wall and was in good condition.

Merrill's stormy 10-year marriage to Davis ended in divorce.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One day after his company filed for bankruptcy protection, moviemaker Dino De Laurentiis' estranged wife filed for divorce.

The divorce papers filed Wednesday by Silvana De Laurentiis in Superior Court cite irreconcilable differences and seek unspecified spousal support.

The couple was married July 18, 1949, and separated in September 1983, the petition said.

De Laurentiis Entertainment Group filed for protection from creditors Tuesday under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code, which allows the company to operate while it reorganizes.

De Laurentiis, who produced such films as "Blue Velvet" and "Crimes of the Heart," owns 61.9 percent of the company. He stepped down from management in February.

Trump

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — New York real estate tycoon Donald Trump says half-seriously that he wishes media mogul Rupert Murdoch hadn't sold the New York Post.

"Rupert, come back!" Trump implored Thursday at a breakfast at the Republican National Convention.

Trump accused new Post publisher Peter Kalikow of picking on him in the newspaper at the same time Kalikow persuaded him to buy advertising for a department store chain Trump controls.

"You son of a gun, you're killing me," said Trump, who related that a Post reporter called him about the same time as the advertising request to ask whether the stores were closing.

"You don't know how devastating that is to employee morale" to see stories like that in the paper, Trump said.

Kalikow, who bought the financially ailing paper in March, was sitting a few feet away in the audience. Trump sounded at least half-serious, and while Kalikow was laughing, he looked uncomfortable.

NEW YORK (AP) — Writer Gary Giddins plans to change the date Louis Armstrong was born — at least in print.

Giddins' biography of the jazz trumpeter, "Satchmo," to be published in November, will give Armstrong's birth date as Aug. 4, 1901. Armstrong, who died in 1971, celebrated his birthday on July 4 and said he was born in 1900.

Giddins is not the first to question Armstrong's birth date. James Lincoln Collier's 1983 biography "Louis Armstrong: An American Genius" placed the correct birth year at 1898.

Writing about his research in the current issue of the Village Voice, Giddins said he found a baptismal record for Armstrong at the Sacred Heart of Jesus Church in New Orleans that gave his birth date as Aug. 4, 1901.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pat Buttram, best-known as the sidekick of singing cowboy Gene Autry, has been enshrined in concrete with a Hollywood Walk of Fame star in front of a sandwich shop that features his name on its menu.

More than 200 fans crowded in front of the Hollywood Boulevard site Thursday to witness the star unveiling, including old friends Iron Eyes Cody, George Gobel and Autry, who was leaning on a cane.

"This is the first time I've ever been speechless," said the usually talkative Buttram in front of Checker's Specialty Sandwich Shop.

Buttram appeared in more than 40 westerns and portrayed the rural con man Mr. Haney on the old CBS-TV series "Green Acres."

Mad Max back in fashion, thanks to Bull Durham

By DAVID MORRIS

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The Harrisburg Senators are stretching in shallow left field and a line from a Paul Simon hit, "I need a photo opportunity," roars over the loudspeakers as Max Patkin arrives for a night's work at RiverSide Stadium.

A year ago, that line could have been Patkin's theme song.

Through more than four decades of entertaining fans across the country, the Clown Prince of Baseball had little more to show for his antics than a bum knee, a bad back and a list of cheap places to sleep from coast to coast.

But a part in the baseball movie, "Bull Durham" has changed all that.

"It's been the biggest summer I've ever had," the 68-year-old Patkin said during an interview before a recent Class AA Eastern League game between the Senators and the Albany Yankees. "People recognize me in airports, in restaurants. It's been a rejuvenation of my career."

The Harrisburg visit was a homecoming of sorts for Patkin, who was born in King of Prussia, just outside Philadelphia. It was here that the sore-armed, broken-hearted former minor league pitcher started a new career making people laugh. That was in 1946. They're still laughing.

For a moment, the man with the contortionist face and bulbous nose actually looks sad as he recalls being released by the Wilkes-Barre Barons, a Cleveland Indians farm team that had no room for a right-handed pitcher who clowned around in the coaching box when he wasn't on the mound.

"That was the most depressing day of my life. I actually cried," Patkin said as he awaited instructions from a camera crew taping part of a network show scheduled to air this fall.

After his release, Patkin earned $100 for being a clown coach at a game in Harrisburg, and when Indians owner Bill Veeck learned of his antics, Patkin's wish came true. He was off to the big leagues.

With a straight face, Patkin claims 80,000 fans jammed the ballpark the day of his first performance in Cleveland. Later, with a grin, he admits most of the fans were there because baseball greats Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb and Tris Speaker were being honored.

The act hasn't changed much through the years:

He mimmicks the visiting team's first baseman during warmups before an inning, flings dirt on himself while giving exaggerated signs to batters, kisses unsuspecting baserunners, gets doused with buckets of water and shaving cream and is unceremoniously ejected by the umpires.

"Certain nights I do get stale, yes I do," Patkin says as he sits in the trailer that serves as the Senators' dressing room. Especially when the crowds are sparse and aren't laughing.

On this night, however, the players and fans in Harrisburg seem to inspire him. He wants to do his schtick for two more years, then only half-jokingly says he'd like to be inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y.

Though he doesn't expect to get there, Patkin says he and the late Al Schacht, '4e's original clown prince, deserve to be in Cooperstown for all they've done for the game.

For the moment, though, he's happy to bask in the afterglow of the movie and the fame it has brought him. He tells anyone who will listen about a recent experience in a North Carolina airport.

The captain noticed him in the airport lounge, invited him to sit in first class and announced to the other passengers that they had a well-known star aboard. Patkin's malleable mouth breaks into a wide grin as he tells of spending most of the rest of the flight signing autographs.

Life hasn't always been so rosy for the man who wears a baggy Mets uniform and a Montreal Expos cap twisted sideways on his head.

Patkin complains when he compares his fee, usually between $1,000 and $1,500, with the much higher ones paid to the San Diego Chicken and other baseball mascots.

"The Chicken, he's made more in five years than I've made in 43 years," Patkin says. He quickly adds that he isn't bitter, but his droopy, sad eyes seem to betray him.

Jets use big play to beat Browns

MONTREAL (AP) — The New York Jets won the first NFL game played in Canada in 19 years Thursday night, using a big-play defense that shut out the Cleveland Browns for the final three periods in an 11-7 victory.

After Cleveland drove 79 yards in 12 plays on its opening series for its lone touchdown, the Jets clamped down. Even Mark Gastineau, New York's beleaguered defensive end, had his first sack of the exhibition season.

And when the Browns got to the New York 13 in the final two minutes, the Jets' defense stopped them.

The most recent of three NFL exhibition games played in Canada was Aug. 25, 1969, when Detroit beat New England 22-9, also in Montreal. This game, played at Olympic Stadium, drew 39,112 fans, most of whom cheered for the Browns, although the Jets technically were the home team.

The quick-moving first half featured three time-consuming drives by the Browns, but just one touchdown, on a 4-yard pass from Bernie Kosar to Kevin Mack. A 35-yard interference call on Bobby Humphery, who tripped Reggie Langhorne, helped the drive.

New York came back with a 63-yard, 15-play march that ended in Pat Leahy's 34-yard field goal. The Jets got to the Cleveland 7 before a 10-yard pass interference call on Kurt Sohn stymied the drive.

Leahy's field goal was the final scoring of the opening half. The Browns, behind second-string quarterback Mike Pagel, reached the New York 1 late in the second period, but a poor pass into the end zone was intercepted by Rich Miano.

Pagel got some rough treatment in his own end zone 1:56 into the third quarter when he was sacked by blitzing cornerback Carl Howard for a safety, making it 7-5.

Later in the period, Pagel was sacked again, by Gastineau, who is in danger of not making the team. Gastineau then threw his arms in the air and jumped around before heading to the sielines.

Chris O'Brien's 38-yard field goal with 1:39 remaining in the third quarter gave the Jets their first lead. Leahy added to it, making the score 11-7 with a 22-yard field goal with 8:13 left. It was set up by rookie Gary Patton's 51-yard punt return and a scrambling 22-yard run by reserve quarterback Pat Ryan.

Montreal Mayor Jean Dore conducted the coin toss, during which a banner was unfurled in the stands, saying, "We Want a Team and We Want It Now."

The NFL has said that Montreal will not be considered in its next expansion.

Early in the game, the clock kept running on several incomplete passes and changes of possession. At one point, referee Gordon McCarter held up play for two minutes trying to get the scoreboard clock at Olympic Stadium to conform with the official time.

By the second quarter, such problems had disappeared.

Yanks honor greats

NEW YORK (AP) — Hall of Fame catchers Bill Dickey and Yogi Berra will be honored Sunday at the Yankee Hall of Fame Day at Yankee Stadium. In ceremonies prior to the Yankees-Seattle Mariners game, plaques will be dedicated to Dickey and Berra in the stadium's Memorial Park section.

Berra, a coach with the Houston Astros, will be represented by his family, while Dickey will be present for the ceremony.

Physical proves life-saver for Arizona State gridder

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Improvements in physical examinations of athletes may have saved the life of an Arizona State University football prospect, his father says.

"We are indebted to (team) Dr. (Richard) Lee," said Gene Fresch, father of freshman Pat Fresch, of the examination which determined that his son has Hodgkin's disease.

"We are very fortunate Pat chose a school that includes this type of physical. It was a godsend for us, because otherwise this would not have been detected," said the Palos Verdes, Calif., resident.

Fresch, a 6-foot-6, 306-pound offensive lineman, received his physical Aug. 11, before the team left for preseason camp.

Lee said the initial chest X-ray revealed a wide compartment between the lungs, which "makes you extremely suspicious" of a tumor.

After a second X-ray the next day confirmed the results, Fresch flew home for further testing by specialist. Coaches said they learned Tuesday the prognosis was for full recovery after three to four weeks of radium treatment at the Stanford (Calif.) Medical Center.

"No one looks forward to three-a-day practices, but this is a hell of a way to get out of them," Fresch said in a telephone interview.

Good fishing found in wake of shrimp boats

By JOE DOGGETT

HOUSTON (AP) — The shrimp fleets are a picket fence of promise for kingfish skippers aiming offshore. That's what the distant riggings first look like when you spot the boats lining the Gulf's horizon — a picket fence.

The offshore shrimpers drag at night, then anchor up to cull nets. This activity creates a giant "chum line" to attract passing pelagic fish. The schools gather and feed down current, setting a boiling, churning stage for some of the finest light-tackle action in the Gulf. Best of all, this seasonal fishing is something that the average weekend skipper can locate and enjoy. No jealously guarded Loran numbers are needed.

Once the fleets are established, the general coordinates become public knowledge available at bait camps and marinas that cater to offshore traffic. During the prime season of late July through August, shrimp boats are seemingly scattered all over the horizon starting as close as a few miles off the beach and extending as far south and east as the skipper with double tanks wishes to run.

I've fished the shrimp fleets for years and enjoyed many productive kingfish trips with friends, non-pros with trailerable open boats. Here are some of the tricks that we have learned.

Get an early start and plan on clearing the jetties at first gray light. This jump should give you first shot at several boats. If the seas are marginally rough (but safe enough for open boat traffic) try to tuck in behind a large crew boat or party boat.

The bigger hull will run interference and flatten the oncoming swells and chops. As you are running out, start thawing a box of fish baits (cigar minnows, sardines or ribbonfish) and a carton of chum.

Get an early start and plan on clearing the jetties at first gray light.

It is possible to obtain a full ice chest of fresh chum and bait by negotiating with an anchored shrimper for net cull. The barter system flourishes, with high points being awarded for cold beer, cigarettes and certain magazines (Newsweek and Houston business Journal not being among them).

However, be cautious about calling for favors if no one is on deck. At best, the crew is sleeping and in no disposition to be bothered. At worst, the boat could be illicit, perhaps carrying a full hold of "square groupers" and waiting for a covert rendezvous. It wouldn't do to roust the wrong nest and have your new center console hosed down by an Uzi.

Don't squander an early start out of Freeport or Galveston by stopping too soon to fish a shrimper in nearshore sandy or murky green water unless you will be satisfied catching jack crevalle and sharks, with an outside chance at kingfish or tarpon.

The "inside" shrimpers along the upper coast seldom stack up with kingfish and ling unless the water is exceptionally clear. Keep running until you reach blue, or at least blue-green water.

Carry a pair of binoculars and scan the horizon for distant boats. Spotting shrimpers at a great distance permits prompt course adjustment and allows you to reach the action sooner. While you're at it, check a few near-shore shrimpers and study the angle at which they ride at anchor.

All anchored boats will have the same "signature" on a given wind or tide. This knowledge can save you the false alarm of tearing over the horizon after a running shrimper.

As you approach a shrimper anchored in suitable water, have a rod rigged and baited. If you have a pair of polarized glasses, wear them now. As the skipper cozies alongside the shrimper, toss a handful of chum against its looming stern. Now, don't do anything else.

Stand cocked and ready and watch for the casual patrol of a "brown bomber" — a big ling. If Poseidon smiles, a pod of a dozen or so may waddle out. Ling, or cobia, often lurk in the shade of an anchored hull, and these fish have a curious habit of coming out to inspect incoming traffic.

This thrilling appearance usually is reserved for the first boat on site — another excellent reason for clearing the dock early. The best way to catch a cruising ling is to sight cast to the fish; the best way to blow a fat chance is to cast blindly as soon as you pull within reach of the shrimper.

Packers' Infante looking for first victory

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Lindy Infante still doesn't know how it feels to win a football game as coach of the Green Bay Packers, but that won't be his chief concern Friday night.

The Packers play the Kansas City Chiefs at County Stadium in the last preseason game before rosters must be chopped to 60 next week.

"We expect to win the game but we're not going to do it at the expense of running the first team out there the whole night," Infante says.

"We got to be very careful that we don't try to win the game at the expense of evaluating players. We've got to make sure we get all the guys on the field. The guys who go in and play in the backup roles will have to go in and play well enough for us to win."

Both the 0-2 Packers and the 2-0 Chiefs will continue to shuffle quarterbacks.

Green Bay will start Marc Wilson, who will play the first half. Don Majkowski is scheduled to play the third quarter and Randy Wright the fourth.

Even though Wilson and Majkowski have taken most of the snaps in practice this week and Wilson appears to have the edge for No.1, Infante insists he has not made up his mind on who will start the regular-season opener.

Kansas City, with impressive wins over Cincinnati and Atlanta, will use Bill Kenney for 1½ quarters followed by Steve DeBerg. Danny McManus and Frank Seurer will share the fourth quarter.

Texas Hall once more an orphan

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — The Texas Sports Hall of Fame officially becomes an orphan again on the last day of August, a victim of the economy and a public with light regard for yesterday's heroes.

Texans apparently like their sports figures live and on the hoof. Respect for old sports legends doesn't go billfold deep.

Fred Graham, general manager of the TSHF, had the solemn duty of packing into cardboard boxes Doak Walker's helmet, Roger Staubach's shoes, Bobby Layne's shoulder pads, Byron Nelson's golf clubs, A.J. Foyt's race uniform and other mementos.

"It's sad, real sad," Graham said. "These items should be where they can be seen and admired by the public, not packed away in some old dusty box."

Due to the sale of the building by its owner, the TSHF must vacate the Hall of Fame building by Aug. 31.

"We are having ongoing discussions with four separate entities which have expressed an interest in providing a site for relocation of the TSHF and its exhibits," Walter Robertson, president of the TSHF Foundation, said in a letter to enshrinees and their families.

"Each proposed location has viability but until a final resolution is made, in the interim, we must store the exhibits and displays," he added.

An auction will be held in the Hall of Fame building on Aug. 27 but will not involve any of the exhibits. Items to be sold are kitchen appliances, gift shop fixtures, office furniture and display cases.

"ALL of the exhibits, displays, memorabilia, archives and records will be removed from the building prior to that auction," Robertson said.

The building opened in 1981 but the funds ran dry on Labor Day, 1985. Since then no financial angel has come along to open the doors again.

What is the Hall of Fame's chances of finding an immediate new home?

Dicey, at best, in the cash-strapped Texas economy.

The idea of moving the TSHF to Waco next to the Texas Rangers' Museum is apparently a dead issue. The city had been heavily courting such an action.

Sources say there was a big sticking point — a $100,000 donation to the TSHF to get the Waco move started. It would be like asking for the moon and stars.

Count Waco down, if not out.

Feelers have come from Sea World in San Antonio but talks are on the backburner until the crush of that attraction's summer season is over.

Killer whales and the Texas Sports Hall of Fame. It would take some getting used to, but any port in a storm.

TEXAS' sports legends deserve some respect. The Grand Prairie location was thought to be the final answer.

It was modeled after the NFL Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, and was a first-class facility. The exhibits were a treat for old and young alike. You could see films and hear old radio broadcasts. It took a good half-day to see and do everything.

Although it was thought to be ideally located on Interestate 30 between Dallas and Fort Worth, the Hall of Fame never caught on.

Despite ample parking and low ticket prices, sports-crazy Texans never took the time to tour the facility. It lost money every year.

Some people smell rat, Great White Rat

Murray

If I were the Dodgers, I would be very careful about dealing with Dorrel Norman Herzog, the manager of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Sitting in on a hand with Dorrel, otherwise known as baseball's White Rat, is a little like getting in a game on a river boat with a guy wearing a beaver hat and a pinchbeck suit and carrying a gold cane. You should bring a priest. You're better off buying a wristwatch from a guy with a suit lining full of them on a New York street corner. Or kneeling in an alley craps game with a guy named Slick.

Look what Dorrel has done in the grand old game:

In 1982, old Slick Herzog got Ozzie Smith from the San Diego Padres for Garry Templeton. Now, that's Ozzie Smith as in the Wizard of Oz, maybe the surest thing for the Hall of Fame you will see on a baseball field today, the man who may be the greatest shortstop who ever lived. If he never got a hit with a bat, he'd stay in a lineup, because he gets plenty of hits with his glove. Two a day, usually.

Still, he batted .303 last year. Templeton batted .222.

Score one for baseball's Great White Rat.

SCORE TWO for what he did in 1985. At that time, Whitey hadn't won a pennant in two years. He needed power. He already had baseball's version of the Olympic 400-meter relay team, but no one who could hit the fences.

He got Jack Clark from the San Francisco Giants, one of the genuine power hitters of the game for — are you ready for this? —David Green, Gary Rajsich, Dave LaPoint and Jose Uribe. If someone did that on the New York Stock Exchange, they'd go to jail. Clark hit 66 home runs in what was, effectively, two seasons with the Cardinals. The only year the Cardinals didn't win a pennant was the year he was on the disabled list for nearly the whole year (from June 25 on).

In 1981, Whitey got Willie McGee from the New York Yankees for somebody named Bob Sykes. The last time I looked, Sykes hadn't made the big leagues yet, but Willie McGee led the league in hits (216), average (.353), triples (18), and he stole 56 bases in 1985.

The league should take out a policy against running into Whitey Herzog in an elevator. If Whitey calls, you should have your secretary say you're not in and she doesn't know when you'll be back. The franchise you save may be your own.

So, now, the Great White Rat and Cardinal General Manager Dal Maxvill come dangling a left-handed pitcher, John Tudor, for a power hitter, Pedro Guerrero. It's the Dodgers' turn in the barrel.

On the face of it, it looks like a good deal. But with Whitey, who made it clear to Maxvill that he wanted Guerrero, you always have to assume the watch is hot, the diamond is glass, the lot is underwater.

THERE IS AN axiom in baseball trading: When in doubt, get a pitcher. John Tudor may be a good one.

He was in 1985 when he won 21 games and got 21 out of 24 votes for second place in the Cy Young Award balloting (Dwight Gooden got all 24 first-place votes).

But Pedro Guerrero is a very good baseball player. Not as good as he thinks he is — but good. If he plays a full season, he bats .300, he hits 30 home runs, give or take a couple. He knocks in 85-100 runs.

No one ever mixed him up with Pie Traynor in the infield or Joe D. in the outfield. But he will be missed in the middle of that Dodger batting order. When you had Kirk Gibson, Guerrero and Mike Marshall coming up, you had a mini-murderers row. You had nobody to pitch around.

Trades-that-help-both-clubs are as rare as rain in the Sahara. And Whitey Herzog has no reputation at all for helping anybody but Whitey Herzog.

If you're going to sit down and play stud with Whitey Herzog, a good idea is to get him to roll up his sleeves first. A better idea is to say "Some other time, Whitey." If you must deal, at least ask him for World Series tickets first.

Aaron Jackson....eligible again.

34-TD prepster goes to Arkansas defense

By HARRY KING

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Today is a big day for Arkansas wingback Aaron Jackson. For the first time in more than a year, the Denison, Texas, native will take a lick from a defensive player.

Jackson was academically ineligible last year — he took engineering courses as a freshman — and spent the year at a junior college in California. He kept up with the Razorbacks by talking to former roommate Quinn Grovey, the No. 1 quarterback this fall.

"There is no way that it is close to being here," Jackson said. "He would always say, 'We need you here.'"

Jackson, who scored 34 touchdowns during his senior year at Denison, was a running back in the Arkansas wishbone when he was a freshman. Now, he's a wingback in the revamped offense and not quite comfortable.

"I have to think about it on the move," he said Tuesday. "I'm still in the thinking stage. I've got to get to the reaction stage. I feel kind of awkward right now, kind of tentative."

People in the Denison area lost track of Jackson, who was on every Texas blue chip list and led his team to a 29-1 two-year record, after his freshman year.

"People say, 'Where is he now,'" Jackson said. "Hopefully, I can give them something to read about."

"The spring after his freshman year, Jackson had the best spring of any of the backs," Coach Ken Hatfield said. "He can really be a force for us."

The wingback, Jackson said, will be able to catch short passes against linebackers, run counter plays and go one-on-one with linebackers. "It's an opportunity to do more things," he said.

He said he compiled a 2.5 grade-point average in junior college while working part-time doing valet parking at a San Jose hotel. "I was driving my share of Ferraris and Rolls'," he said. "It was a pretty exclusive hotel."

While in California, he went to a couple of San Jose State football games. "It was really hard to sit in the stands and watch," he said.

For Jackson, there was no football, not even intramurals. Getting back into shape, he said, was no problem. Agility and balance were a little more difficult. "It was a little harder to et back into jumping and catching the ball," he said.

Asked about his freshman year, Jackson said, "I dug myself a pretty big hole during the fall and couldn't quite get out."

Watch exercise in extreme heat

NEW YORK (AP) — Vigorous exercise such as running, bicycling or even hiking uphill in intense heat can lead to heat stroke and possibly a heart attack with few warning signs, researchers say.

The danger becomes even greater when the air contains high levels of carbon monoxide and ozone, both of which put additional stress on the heart and lungs, one of the researchers said in an interview Tuesday.

The researchers were interviewed following the recent disclosure that two men had died after competing in races in New York's Central Park during this summer's intense heat wave.

The two men reportedly were not runners and were not accustomed to exercising in the heat, which meant that they faced a special risk of injury or death.

"I don't think it's generally recognized that even in these short races, when you're exercising very intensely and you're not trained or acclimated, you can very quickly produce and store enough heat to kill you," said Edward Coyle, director of the Human Performance Laboratory at the University of Texas in Austin.

"They were untrained, unacclimated and they were running very intensely for their level of ability," he said.

IN NEW York and many other parts of the country, the intense heat has often been accompanied by unusually high pollution and ozone levels.

Carbon monoxide can trigger a heart attack in exercisers who unknowingly have latent coronary artery disease, said Peter Raven, an exercise physiologist at the Texas College of Osteopathic Medicine in Fort Worth.

Ozone irritates the lungs, causing the tiny airways in the lungs to shrink and decreasing the amount of breath taken in with each inhalation, Raven said.

"We've had elite cyclists complain at very low levels of ozone that they couldn't perform anywhere near where they're used to," he said.

Exercisers should be concerned whenever the ozone level is reported to be higher than one-tenth of one part per million, Raven said.

According to the American College of Sports Medicine, the amount of heat produced in muscles that are exercising hard is 15 to 20 times that produced in muscles at rest.

Even short races can raise body temperature from its normal 98.6 degrees to 104 degrees, which is the point where serious injury can occur, the college says.

This problem is not limited to runners, but can occur with any type of exercise that involves expending a lot of energy, including brisk walking and hiking, especially uphill, Coyle said.

Coyle, an expert on fluid loss and replacement during exercise, said that dehydration is one of the prime causes of heat stroke.

Unfortunately, dehydration is a difficult thing for an exerciser to be aware of, Coyle said. "It's difficult to tell that you are in danger because you don't often get sufficient warning time, or you don't get warnings early enough."

EXERCISERS who are seriously dehydrated will feel chilled and stop sweating, Coyle said. Their skin turns white and they will feel tingly sensations — the hair on the back of the neck stands up.

"At that point you know you're in trouble. Stop exercising and seek some help to try to cool yourself down. Usually at that point you're not thinking very clearly, so it's important to try to get some help," Coyle said.

Diver Kimball competes as victims' friends protest

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Bruce Kimball began competing Thursday at the U.S. Olympic diving trials as a group of Florida residents upset over his participation held a silent protest.

Seven people, who described themselves as friends of the victims of the Aug. 1 accident in which Kimball's car plowed into a group of teen-agers in Brandon, Fla., arrived as the prelims of the men's 3-meter springboard competition began.

Two teen-agers were killed and six others injured in the accident and authorities have charged Kimball with five felony counts of driving under the influence. He is free on $10,000 bond pending an Aug. 29 arraignment in Tampa, Fla. U.S. Diving officials have said they do not have a rule to ban Kimball's participation here.

"We believe in our cause," said Cheri Beck, a mother of a teen-ager who was at the scene of the accident. "We've got a lot of backing."

Beck cut short questions from a reporter at the Indiana University Natatorium.

"We've driven 1,000 miles in 18 hours to be here and we want to be at the competition to watch Bruce Kimball dive," she said. "We will have a news conference later today and we will be heard."

FHLBB merges 12 thrifts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal regulator says the consolidation of 12 insolvent Texas thrifts in a single $1.3 billion deal signals the things to come in Texas and elsewhere as the government tries to clean up the battered thrift industry.

M. Danny Wall, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, declined on Thursday to specify when the next consolidation would take place. But he indicated about half of an estimated 200 insolvent thrift cases currently in various states of negotiation, bidding and marketing may be resolved by the end of the year.

The FHLBB scheduled simultaneous news conferences in Dallas and Washington at 3 p.m. today to announce more transactions, but officials would not reveal which institutions were involved.

According to reports, a deal is expected that would combine Sunbelt Savings Association and Western Federal Savings and Loan Association of Dallas with Independent American Savings and Loan Association of Irving, as well as half a dozen or more smaller thrifts.

Earlier in the week, bank board member Roger Martin said that by the end of August 35 insolvent thrifts would be dealt with under the so-called Southwest Plan to consolidate and recapitalize ailing thrifts in the region.

Wall's comments came as regulators announced the government would spend $1.3 billion to assist the acquisition of 12 failed thrifts by an investor group led by Chicago banker William Gibson.

The transaction, the fourth consolidation under the Southwest Plan, was the biggest single such deal to date and doubled the number of Texas thrifts to be merged since the first transaction in May.

"While we're focusing a lot of attention on the state of Texas, because of the concentration of the problem within the industry in that state, we continue to work elsewhere," Wall said.

The consolidation brings to 68 the number of mergers, consolidations and "insurance actions" approved nationwide so far this year. Wall said the number was "ahead of what we had established as a minimum goal so far this year and that ratio, that average per week, would only continue to increase as we move toward the end of the year."

Howard Beasley, left, chairman of Lone Star Technologies, William Gibson, president and chief executive of the newly formed American Federal Bank F.S.B., and George Barclay, president of the Dallas Federal Home Loan Bank Board, discuss the merger of 12 ailing Texas thrifts.

The action accounts for 24 of the 109 Texas thrifts that were insolvent when work on the Southwest Plan began earlier this year, "and we plan to complete the work in Texas by the end of May 1989," Wall said.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. will provide an immediate $499 million note to fund the new consolidation, with the money going to boost capital and help cover bad loans. Outside investors will inject $48 million.

Gibson, executive vice president of Continential Illinois National Bank and Trust in Chicago and Continental Illinois Corp., will serve as president and chief executive officer of the new institution.

Gibson is a former senior vice president at First RepublicBank Corp. of Dallas. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. bailed out First RepublicBank in July when it pledged $4 billion to help NCNB Corp. Charlotte, N.C., take over the troubled banking giant.

The new Dallas-based thrift will be called American Federal Bank F.S.B. It has more than 50 branches in Texas, but it was not immediately known how many would be closed.

The bank board, regulator of the thrift industry, said the 12 thrifts had combined assets of nearly $2.4 billion and liabilities of $3 billion.

Two more Texas banks closed

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of bank failures in Texas this year climbed to 88 with the closing of banks in Austin and Harlingen, officials say.

Kevin M. Blakeley, deputy comptroller of the currency, declared the Town and Country National Bank of Harlingen and the First National Bank of Austin insolvent and closed them Thursday.

FDIC spokesman Bill Olcheski said the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. approved the assumption of the deposits and other liabilities of the Town and Country bank by Harlingen National Bank.

The failed Town and Country bank's sole office will reopen today as a branch of Harlingen National, and its depositors automatically will become depositors of the bank, subject to court approval.

FDIC directors also approved the assumption of the deposits and the other liabilities of First National Bank of Austin by First State Bank of Austin, said FDIC spokeswoman Caryl Austrian.

The failed Austin bank, with total assets of $26.6 million, will reopen today as a branch of First State Bank.

Harlingen National will assume about $28 million dollars in 3,300 deposit accounts and will purchase all of the failed bank's assets at a discount of $10,109,000. The failed bank had total assets of $31.6 million.

First State Bank will assume about $26.4 million in 1,500 of the Austin national bank's deposit accounts and will purchase $26.1 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of $10,971,250.

The board of directors approved the deposit assumptions under its authority to do so whenever it determines such a transaction will reduce the potential loss to the FDIC, Olcheski said. The transaction will result in a lower cost to the FDIC than if the assts were held and liquidated in rewceivership, he said.

Oil prices open slightly higher

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices opened slightly higher today with a midmorning quote of $15.67, up ten cents from Thursday which say only moderate trading.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, Thursday, contracts for September delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, rose 10 cents a barrel to close at $15.57. Other contract months were mixed.

Futures prices of oil products traded on the exchange also rose. Contracts for September delivery of wholesale heating oil rose 0.22 cent to finish at 44.15 cents a gallon. September gasoline rose 0.66 cent to 47.28 cents a gallon.

Analysts attributed most of the rise in the September contract to last-minute positioning by investors in advance of the closeout of the contract on Monday.

"There is little news to spur the market," said Richard Kane, a trader with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. "People are positioning themselves on the September contract and waiting for further direction."

Traders also were influenced by reports that crude inventories on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico had declined by 6 million a week, analysts said.

"It's important for the crude market," Kane said. "Prices firmed off of that."

Traders also were watching the gasoline market in anticipation of some tightening in the near future, analysts said.

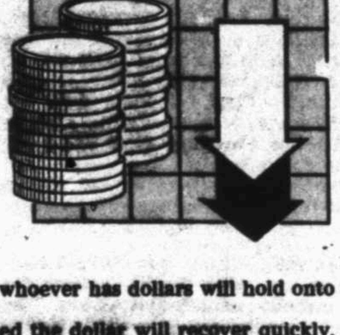
Dollar trading erratic in Europe



LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell slightly in thin, erratic trading in Europe today with market players unsure about the currency's next direction.

Gold prices drifted higher in quiet trading.

Foreign exchange dealers in Italy said enthusiasm for the dollar waned, especially after concerted intervention by major central banks on Thursday, which pushed the U.S. currency lower.

Dealers said they didn't expect the dollar to make any major moves.

"Given (higher U.S.) interest rates, whoever has dollars will hold onto them," said one trader in Milan.

In Frankfurt, some dealers predicted the dollar will recover quickly, but others said the market must still consider the possibility of another round of central bank intervention.

"It's not at all clear where the dollar will move now," said a trader at a major West German bank.

In Tokyo, where the business day ends before Europe's begins, the dollar fell 0.53 yen to a closing 133.40 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 133.50 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Thursday's rates:

- 1.8945 West German marks, down from 1.8980
- 1.5930 Swiss francs, down from 1.5965
- 6.4243 French francs, down from 6.4340
- 2.1350 Dutch guilders, down from 2.1408
- 1,403.55 Italian lire, up from 1,402.75
- 1.2270 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2288

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7089 from $1.6989 late Thursday.

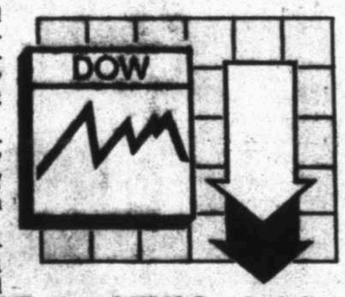
Gold opened in London at a bid price of $431.30 a troy ounce and at midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $432.40. Both were up from Thursday's late bid of $431.00.

In Zurich, the bid price was $432.50, up from $431.00 bid late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.98 to close at a bid $434.21.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.68 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $6.66.

Wall Street advance goes flat



NEW YORK (AP) — A feeble Wall Street advance fizzled on profit-taking Thursday in another slow trading session, and brokers said they saw little prospect for a significant rally anytime soon.

"I think it's just an apathetic market, I don't think anybody cares," said Peter J. DaPuzzo, manager of retail equities at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. in New York.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, up more than 11 points early in the session, declined in the final hours and closed with a 1.07 gain to 2,027.03. Broader indices also showed only marginal advances.

Anxiety over the economy's direction and rising interest rates, combined with the growing attractiveness of bonds and money-market funds as rival investments, have contributed to the malaise on Wall Street.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Whirlpool acquires stake in NV Philips

NEW YORK (AP) — Whirlpool Corp. says it will acquire a majority stake in the appliance division of Dutch electronics giant NV Philips in a $470 million deal that will make Whirlpool the world's largest appliance concern.

Whirlpool and Philips said Thursday the world's largest television producer and Europe's biggest electronics company, will create a joint venture company that will develop, manufacture and market major appliances under Philips' brand names.

Batus extends deadline for buyout

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Batus Inc. has extended the deadline for its hostile $4.9 billion buyout of Farmers Insurance Group Inc., as both sides continued negotiating a truce in their lengthy takeover battle.

Batus said Thursday it was giving shareholders until midnight Wednesday to accept its $63-per-share tender offer. The offer had been set to expire at midnight last Wednesday.

Batus said 16.3 million of the 68.4 million shares outstanding were tendered as of Wednesday.

Westinghouse pays $35 million in suit

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Westinghouse Electric Corp. has agreed to pay an apparent-record $35 million to settle an age-discrimination lawsuit brought by employees who were denied severence pay after losing their jobs through plant closings.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission said Thursday thousands of former Westinghouse employees could receive substantial payments under the agreement.

EEOC's negotiators were armed with a federal court ruling that Westinghouse violated federal law when it denied severence pay to employees eligible for pensions at the time their jobs were eliminated.

Continental expected to dismiss employees

By MIKE SHERIDAN
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Continental Airlines, which reported a net loss of $231 million for the first six months of the year, is expected to lay off between 500 and 1,000 employees in the next several days, according to sources close to the company.

The layoffs and furloughs will include pilots, flight attendants, gate agents, reservations representatives and management, the sources said.

The primary focus of the layoffs is expected to be in the Denver area. Continental employs about 36,000 workers, including about 9,000 in Houston.

The expected cutback is due to planned reductions in Continental operations next month, primarily at the carrier's largest hub in Denver, sources – who were not willing to be quoted by name –said.

"If you don't have as many flights, you don't need as many people," one person said. "It's simple economics."

Earlier this year, Continental announced it was reducing the number of flights it offers at Denver's Stapleton International Airport to 200 next month, down from the 260 flights per day scheduled earlier this year.

Continental officials would neither confirm nor deny reports of the layoffs.

"Obviously, we continue to look at our fall schedule and the continued overcapacity of Denver and are focusing our attention on what changes may be required and the effect that might have on our employees," said Bruce E. Hicks, Continental vice president/corporate communications.

"First and foremost in this assessment is minimizing the impact on our employees while assuring the profitability of the company," he said.

Industry analysts said they would not be surprised by the move, particularly since the third quarter is a weak time for the airlines.

Texas Air accuses rivals of illegal acts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Air Corp. has accused American and United airlines of gaining hundreds of millions of dollars through illegal use of their reservations systems.

Texas Air, the nation's largest airline group, charged in a complaint filed Thursday with the Department of Transportation that United and American were deliberately misleading travel agents using their computerized reservations systems.

By giving agents unreliable information about rivals' flights, American and United have discouraged the agents from booking passengers on airlines other than theirs, the complaint said.

"This is the first time anyone has documented how American and United use the power of technology to pick the pockets of consumers," said Bill Diffenderffer, vice president and general counsel of System One, which runs Texas Air's computerized reservations system.

The complaint was made in the names of System One and Texas Air's two main carriers, Continental and Eastern.

American and United both denied the charges, saying past attempts by Texas Air to challenge the legality of their computerized reservations systems had failed.

"This effort by Texas Air is unworthy of serious attention," said Charles Novak, a United spokesman in Chicago. He said Texas Air had been unsuccessful in past lawsuits against the United computerized reservations system.

Novak accused Texas Air of trying to "use the courts, the Congress and federal agencies ... to gain for itself business that (United) has secured through hard work, large investments and innovation."

Jim Brown, an American spokesman, said Texas Air's charges were without foundation.

The inch-thick Texas Air complaint said United's computerized reservations system, called Apollo, and American's, known as Sabre, are supposed to allow travel agents to make seat reservations and issue boarding passes reliably for flights on other airlines.

Instead, Sabre and Apollo are designed deliberately not to provide consistently reliable information about other carriers, the Texas Air complaint said. Because of the unreliability, travel agents are discouraged from booking flights on airlines other than American and United, Texas Air contended.

Study: Coastal states better off economically

WASHINGTON (AP) — Regional disparities in personal incomes widened last year as strong economic growth continued for coastal states while states in America's heartland did not fare as well, the government reports.

The Commerce Department said Thursday that the current economic expansion is the first in 28 years in which regional differences in incomes have grown larger rather than narrowing.

The department said all 10 of the states with the highest average personal incomes last year were on the nation's coasts: eight along the Atlantic and two, California and Alaska, on the Pacific.

Connecticut ranked No. 1 with residents earning $21,266 for every man, woman and child last year, an increase of 8.8 percent over 1986.

For the entire nation, incomes rose 6 percent to an average of $15,481 last year, the best showing since a similar 6 percent increase in 1985. Incomes had risen 5.1 percent in 1986.

The gain last year kept Americans ahead of inflation, which climbed 4.4 percent.

Seven of the 10 states with the lowest incomes were in the South. Mississippi remained in last place with a per capita income of $10,292, an increase of 6.5 percent over the previous year.

In contrast to most recovery periods, regional economic differences have widened since the 1981-82 recession, the report said.

The Southwest and Rocky Mountain regions were farther behind the national income average in 1987 than they were in 1982 at the depths of the recession, while New England and the Mid-Atlantic regions were farther ahead.

"This has been a somewhat unusual economic expansion," said Rudolph DePass, a Commerce Department analyst. "Regions like New England have benefited from rapid growth in high-tech industries and

Rio Grande depositors to get 23 cents on dollar

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — Today's expected sale of the failed Rio Grande Savings and Loan Association should bring depositors of Texas' only uninsured thrift at least 23 cents on the dollar, the state liquidator said.

None of the 6,249 depositors, however, will receive any money until the sale is approved by four different state and federal agencies, said Jorge A. Gutierrez, whom the Texas Savings and Loan Department in April appointed to liquidate the institution.

Approval could take anywhere from two weeks to three months, Gutierrez said Wednesday.

The liquidator said he expects to close the buyout today with CitiSavings and Loan Association in San Antonio.

CitiSavings chairman Paul Tillman said the purchase makes good business sense.

The state declared Rio Grande insolvent in May 1987, freezing $75 million in deposits representing in some cases the life savings of retirees. Depositors have not been able to touch their money since.

Gutierrez was ordered in April 1988 to begin liquidation after efforts failed to recapitalize or find a buyer for the institution.

Rio Grande was the only savings and loan in Texas not covered by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which insures accounts up to $100,000.

Parker & Parsley Partners trim losses during quarter

From Staff Reports

Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P. trimmed its losses during the second quarter compared to both the previous quarter and year-earlier levels.

For the quarter ended June 30, the partnership registeres a net loss of $382,000, or 10 cents per unit, on revenues of $7.8 million. This compares to a net loss of $2.3 million, or 59 cents per Unit, on revenues of $10.9 million for the quarter ended June 30, 1987.

Cash flow before depletion, depreciation, and amortization was $3.5 million, this year vs. $5.5 million, for the same three months of 1987.

Cash flow remained relatively constant for the second quarter at $3.5 million compared to $3.6 million for the first quarter of 1988. Net losses were reduced by 45 percent from the first quarter of the year when the partnership lost $831,000. The current losses are primarily attributable to non-cash charges of depreciation, depletion, and amortization.

Oil and gas revenues dropped roughly 29 percent and 9.8 percent for the three months and six months ended June 30, 1988, respectively, in comparison to the corresponding periods of 1987. The decreases are due primarily to reductions in gas production volumes associated with voluntary curtailments, seasonal decreases in gas prices during the quarter, as well as normal declines in reserves.

The partnership elected to reduce its sale of gas well gas during contract renegotiations in one major field and other areas of gas production while actively seeking maximum prices for its gas production.

General and administrative costs have been reduced about a half-million dollars compared to the first half of 1987.

The decreases are a result of operating efficiencies realized from the consolidation of the 32 HCW partnerships into one entity as of Dec. 15, 1987. Interest expense for the six months ended June 30, 1988 was about $401,000, due to borrowings to finance the acquisition of certain drilling acreage and producing oil and gas properties.

Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P. is a Midland-based publicly traded limited partnership of which Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. is the general partner.

HOUSTON (SWN) — ANR Pipeline Co., a subsidiary of The Coastal Corp., has called for redemption on September 30, 1988, 200,000 shares of its Cumulative Preferred Stock $2.675 series under sinking fund provisions for the series. There are 1,300,000 shares of the series currently outstanding.

CONTINENTAL

"Usually, airlines cut back in the fall," said Louis Marckesano, airline analyst with Janney Montgomery Scott in Philadelphia.

He added that a cut back at Continental might indicate that the airline hired in anticipation of picking up traffic at the expense of its sister carrier, Eastern Airlines, but that the additional traffic hadn't materialized. Both airlines are subsidiaries of Texas Air Corp. of Houston.

"If Eastern doesn't shrink, as many people think it will, then Continental may not be able to fill the void, and they might have excess capacity," Marckesano said.

Earlier this month, Eastern announced it was reducing operations by 12 percent and eliminating about 4,000 jobs. A federal judge, however, issued a temporary injunction and is holding hearings on the job cuts.

One of the reasons given for the slimming down of Eastern was that the airline's traffic has dropped off recently following an extensive inspection of the carrier's operations by the Federal Aviation Administration and the U.S. Department of Transportation.

relatively slow increases in population, while the Southwest and Rocky Mountain states have been hit by a slump in the oil industry."

New England was the top-earning region in 1982, with incomes 9 percent above the national average. It increased that lead last year with incomes 20 percent above the national average. The Mid-Atlantic region, which had incomes 10 percent above the national average in 1982, had incomes 14 percent higher last year. And the West had incomes 11 percent higher than the national average last year, compared with 12 percent higher in 1982.

By contrast, the Southwest and Rocky Mountain regions saw their incomes fall to 12 percent below the national average in 1987, compared with 4 percent or less in 1982.

This drop put these two regions close to the Southeast, which still came in last with incomes 13 percent below the national average. The Southeast had been 14 percent below in 1982.

The Great Lakes region was unchanged, with incomes still 2 percent below the national average in 1987.

THRIFTS

FHLBB officials said the 12 thrifts were losing a combined $105 million a quarter. One of the merged thrifts, Richardson Savings and Loan Association of Dallas, had a $77.6 million loss in the first quarter of 1988, the 10th worst earnings record nationally among thrifts.

Two other thrifts, Mercury Savings Association, Wichita Falls, and Ben Milam Savings and Loan, Cameron, were in the bank board's management consignment program, which replaces the management of ailing thrifts with those from healthy ones.

The acquisition was the first involving capital from outside the thrift industry, Wall said.

"Today's transaction shows that private investors are willing to bring in hard cash for the opportunity of participating in the Texas thrift recovery," he said.

Wall said the end of the federal fiscal year, Sept. 30, and the end of the calendar year, are helping drive the bank board forward. A tax exemption involving FSLIC-assisted transactions is scheduled to be phased out Dec. 31, Wall said.

The thrift industry continues to lose capital, although the decline apparently slowed down in the last quarter, and officials have put the cost of restoring health to the industry anywhere from $26 million to $100 million as debate continues on Capitol Hill over whether a taxpayer bailout will face the next president after he takes office in January.

The FHLBB reported earlier this month that the industry's capital declined by $1.72 billion in the April-June period, compared with a drop of $3.51 billion in the first quarter and $4.68 billion the last three months of 1987.

TEXAS AIR

The Houston-based Texas Air claimed United and American had violated Section 411 of the Federal Aviation Act, which prohibits unfair or deceptive methods of airline competition.

The complaint includes a copy of what Texas Air called an internal American memo dated July 15, 1980, expressing concern that United's Sabre system might be giving United an edge.

The complaint also accused United and American of preventing travel agents from obtaining competing computerized reservations systems, such as Texas Air's System One.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Treasury bills much misunderstood subject

By BILL DOYLE

Q. You have explained that U.S. Treasury bills are issued at discounts — prices below their face values — and are redeemed at face value when they mature. If I buy a T bill at a 6 percent discount and it pays 6 percent interest, won't that be a 12 percent annual yield?

Doyle

A. Not by a long shot.

T bills don't pay interest separately. Instead, the difference between the discounted price at which a T bill is purchased and the face value collected at the T bill's maturity is interest.

Here's an example using round numbers but, of necessity, slightly inaccurate.

Let's say you purchase a new $10,000 face value T bill with a one-year maturity at a 10 percent discount. Your cost is $9,000. The $10,000 you get when the T bill matures includes the $9,000 you paid and $1,000 interest.

The $1,000 interest on the $9,000 you invested works out to 11.11 percent. That's your investment yield, also called the "coupon equivalent."

This exercise is imprecise, because T bills are not issued with maturities of exactly only year. They usually have 13-, 26- and 52-week maturities.

Also, T bill rates now aren't as high as in this example — and won't be, unless interest rates in general skyrocket. At the July 18 Treasury Department sale, 13-week T bills went at an average 6.76 percent discount, for a 6.97 percent annual yield; 26-week T bills at an average 7.09 percent discount, for a 7.45 percent annual yield.

Q. My nephew says the big advantage in buying Treasury bills is getting the interest "up front." He says if I purchase a T bill I will get the interest right away and won't have to wait for the T bill to mature. I find this hard to believe and told him so. Is it correct?

A. No. But don't be too harsh on your nephew. There is much misunderstanding on this subject, even among people who should know better.

When you purchase a T bill, you put up the full face amount. The discounted price at which the T bill is issued is determined at a Treasury Department auction. Then, the amount of the "discount" — the difference between the T bill's issue price and its face value is sent to you.

Under the "Treasury Direct" system, which has been in effect for T bills since 1987, that discount is transmitted by wire to the bank account you have designated.

But that's a discount — not interest. You get the interest as part of the T bill's face value when the T bill matures.

Q. If I roll over a Treasury bill when it matures, do I have to put up extra money equal to the amount of the discount?

A. Nope. When a T bill you own reaches maturity, it's worth its full face value. That amount can be used to purchase a new T bill through the rollover process.

At that point, the discount on the new T bill is sent to you and the process starts all over again.

Q. What is the difference between T bills and Treasury notes and bonds?

A. All three, of course, are direct obligations of our federal government.

T bills are discount securities and are issued in minimum denominations of $10,000 and multiples of $5,000 above that.

Treasury notes and bonds are issued at or very close to face value and redeemed at face when upon maturity. They are "current interest" securities on which interest is paid every six months.

Treasury notes have maturities of from two to 10 years. Two- and three-year notes come in $5,000 minimums and $5,000 multiples; four- to 10-year notes in $1,000 minimums and multiples.

Treasury bonds have maturities as long as 30 years. They are issued in $1,000 minimums and multiples.

Robber's gun fired fatal shot, German officials say

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A bank robber probably fired the bullet that killed an 18-year-old woman hostage, one of three people who died in a 54-hour crime spree across West Germany and the Netherlands, officials said today.

Bischof

West German media said if police had moved sooner, they may have prevented the deaths. Two bank robbers and a woman accomplice, who hijacked a bus at one point with 30 people aboard, left a trail of terror across Germany and the Netherlands before police captured them Thursday in a shoot-out near Bonn.

Hostage Silke Bischof, 18, squeezed next to one of the gunmen with a pistol pointed at her head, had spoken to reporters Thursday while the getaway car was parked in downtown Cologne. She said she was being treated well but that she feared someone would be killed if police moved in to end the hostage crisis.

Two hours later, she was killed in the gun battle with police, who set off flash bombs to stop the getaway car on a busy highway. The other hostage in the car, also a woman, was injured.

One of the gunmen, Hans-Juergen Roesner, 31, was shot in the thigh, said Reinhard Schmidt-Kuentzel, a spokesman for the North Rhine-Westphalia Interior Ministry. The other gunman, Dieter Degowski, 32, and Marion Irma Loeblich, the accomplice, were not injured, he said. All three were under arrest.

"We are 99 percent certain that Degowski fired the shot that killed Silke Bischof," he said.

Earlier, a 15-year-old Italian boy held hostage and a police officer died in the bizarre drama. Reports said the boy died trying to protect his sister.

"Did they have to die? Shouldn't the police have moved in much earlier?" the mass-circulation Bild newspaper asked in a front-page editorial.

Police gave the bank robbers two getaway cars and hundreds of thousands of dollars in efforts to persuade them to free their hostages and surrender. The shooting sprees and car chases left at least five people injured.

"Police should have acted much more decisively and swiftly," said Heinz Guenther, a lawmaker with Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic Party.

A random telephone poll by the respected Wickert Institute in Tuebingen said 93 percent of the respondents could not understand why police did not act sooner to end the situation.

Eighty-nine percent of the 1,708 people questioned said they believed the top state-level politicians responsible for law and order should resign because of the incident. No percentage of error was given.

But law officials such as Peter Mueller, police chief in the northern port of Bremen, defended their actions.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Sewage contaminates water in Khartoum

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Sewage networks have burst and contaminated water in Khartoum, the capital of Sudan, and up to a million people are threatened with deadly disease in the aftermath of devastating floods, a Cairo daily said Friday.

Government authorities and international relief agencies in Sudan were reported to have stepped up efforts Thursday to fight more than 5,000 cases of disease caught by drinking unclean water.

The Egyptian state-run newspaper al-Ahram, quoting unspecified sources, said in its early Friday edition that one person had died of cholera in Omdurman, across the Nile River from Khartoum.

Egyptian television said in a Thursday evening newscast that the Sudanese Red Crescent reported 5,211 people as suffering from severe diarrhea, 70 percent of them young children.

The television said Sudanese health authorities and international agencies identified the cases as typhoid, malaria and cholera and increased their efforts to treat them.

New Ripper evidence found

LONDON (AP) — Police said they recovered lost-long photographs and documents from the Jack the Ripper file, but the evidence still doesn't allow authorities to identify the man who terrorized London a century ago.

Nevertheless, the documents released Thursday have helped fill in historical gaps and included a chilling letter, written in neat script and red ink, said to be from the Ripper, according to police.

The Ripper's five victims, all prostitutes, fell prey to the murderer's knife in the seamy East End of London during a nine-week period beginning Aug. 31, 1888. Most were disemboweled and mutilated.

"We're quite pleased that they are in our possession now," Metropolitan Police Deputy Commissioner John Dellow said of the photos and documents. "We can't say at this stage where or how they became detached or where they've been since."

Will Mandela be freed?

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government Thursday gave its strongest hint yet that it soon will free jailed black leader Nelson Mandela, reportedly suffering from tuberculosis.

President P.W. Botha praised Mandela's cooperative attitude and said he hoped the 70-year-old leader of the African National Congress would not have to go back to prison from the hospital.

Botha said he expects "positive results" from his standing offer to free Mandela if Mandela renounces violence.

Other officials indicated the government was considering Mandela's release more seriously than ever before.

The South African Press Association quoted unidentified government sources as saying the release was imminent. The sources suggested that militant supporters of the guerrilla movement might start a campaign aimed at questioning whether Mandela, in the event he renounces violence, was able to think for himself.

North, South Koreans meet, make no progress in talks

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — Lawmakers from North and South Korea met for the first time in nearly three years today to discuss easing their long rivalry, but they made no progress on a non-aggression pact or on the North's demand to be a co-host at the Olympic Games.

The two five-member delegations agreed to hold a second meeting at the truce village of Panmunjom on Saturday to see if they could agree on terms for full-scale parliamentary talks. Today's meeting was the first between delegates from North and South since 1985.

Chief South Korean delegate Park Joon-kyu said afterward that he rated chances for holding parliamentary talks at "50-50" and said North Korea will have to be more flexible.

North Korea urged the two sides to hold meaningful talks.

"The head of our delegation stressed that we should not repeat the undesirable history of past...in which dialogue was arranged but failed to bear fruit and a preparatory contact was held but failed to lead to full-dress talks," said the state-run Korean Central News Agency, monitored in Tokyo.

The two Koreas, technically still at war, are archenemies with hundreds of thousands of troops along the 150-mile border. The two sides have no relations.

North Korea's chief delegate, Chon Kum Chol, said the two sides had yet to clear the way for the North's proposal for talks between their parliaments on a non-aggression pact and the Olympics. North Korea says it must be a co-host at the Olympics or it will boycott the Games. They start Sept. 17 in Seoul.

The Olympics, he said, were a "serious political problem which will decide the destiny of the Korean people."

Park, in an opening speech, said the only solution was for the North to participate in the Olympics. He said the South will keep the door open until the last moment for the North but noted the deadline for entries is Sept. 2.

"The only way for the two sides to cooperate with each other in the cause of the 24th Olympiad is for your athletes to take part in the Seoul Games together with our athletes," he said.

The meeting was held in North Korea's unification building at the truce site with delegates facing each other across a huge wooden table. The mood was amicable at the start, with delegates exchanging small talk, but the atmosphere became somber as they failed to make progress.

Security was light and U.S. soldiers who normally help guard the South's side of the truce site were withdrawn. The United States has 42,000 troops in the South under a defense treaty.

All the North Korean delegates were drawn from the rubber-stamp Supreme Peoples' Assembly. The South Korean delegation consisted of two government National Assembly lawmakers and a legislator from each of the three main opposition parties.
