PLO defiance of plans voiced

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Palestinian leader, voicing defiance of Israeli guns and American mediation, vowed today, "We are not leaving Lebanon."
George Habash, speaking as a U.S.-arranged cease-fire stilled the guns around Beirut, told the Associates Press that the Palestinians also reject the idea of American troops participating in a peacekeeping force to supervise the disengagement of Israeli forces and Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas.
The firing between Israeli and Palestinian forces on Sunday was the heaviest since the siege began, setting large portions of the city on fire and leaving 83 people dead and 211 wounded, according to Lebanese police.
Habash's comments indicated that a wide gap still exists between Israeli and Palestinian negotiating positions as U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib tried to negotiate a peaceful end to the siege of Beirut.
He said the PLO would not discuss leaving Lebanon until Israeli troops pull back from Beirut, a demand that Israelis have rejected.
Habash, the leader of the Soviet-backed Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, one of the most radical factions in the PLO, talked to AP correspondent Alex Efty in a small west Beirut apartment.
"We are not leaving Lebanon and will continue fighting not only from Lebanon, but from Syria, Egypt and Jordan, not by taking permission from anyone, but by forcing our military presence in all the countries that surround Palestine," he said.
Habash said the Palestinians would not accept American participation in a peacekeeping force because "the United States is part of the aggression." Striking the arm of his chair for emphasis, Habash said, "We don't want to see them."
Habash said that the United Nations should be the agency to supervise a disengagement, rather than the multilateral force, including U.S. troops, which has been discussed by Habib. The use of U.N. forces also was a provision of an 11-point plan put forward over the weekend by PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.
Israel has thus far rejected Palestinian demands that any evacuation of Beirut be preceded by a disengagement and Israeli pullback. And the Israelis distrust U.N. peacekeeping forces, because the U.N. force sent to Lebanon in 1978 did not prevent the Palestinians from using southern Lebanon as a base for attacks on Israel.
Israeli Cabinet officials, who met Sunday, complained that the negotiating process is getting nowhere and accused the PLO of stalling, according to Israeli radio. Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor issued a warning that Israel will not give the process much more time before taking action to eliminate the PLO presence in Lebanon.
"Our demand lays down that all foreign troops leave Lebanon, down to the last man," Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said in an interview published by a West German newspaper Sunday.
Habib and other negotiators could do little Sunday because of the thunderous barrage of artillery and rockets, some of which fell close to their headquarters. The shelling ended at night, when Habib arranged the sixth cease-fire since the invasion began on June 6.

Museum's diorama lets area history come alive

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Two hundred and thirty million years ago, myriads of colorful tropical fish darted among the shadows and light of a huge reef extending for miles and miles beneath a sunlit Permian Sea. Starfish stretched their arms beneath strange, flower-like animals swaying gently in the warm currents.
Then, geology and climate changed over a period of millions of years, and the Permian Sea was no more. But the lasting effects of that sea, which covered a vast area of West Texas and eastern New Mexico, are still commanding attention both here and abroad.
In fact, the sea still exists, in a glass-enclosed diorama at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum here. That is why a BBC television crew traveled from London to Midland.
If a picture is worth a thousand words, then imagine the good fortune of a professor who can amiably stroll back through geologic time and lecture to his students from "beneath the Permian Sea."
The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum afforded lecturer Peter Skelton just such an opportunity. The BBC production crew, assisted by light

Petroleum Museum British teaching aid

For a few hours Sunday morning, the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum served as a classroom for British university students. The lesson was paleontology. It will be sometime, however, before the lecturer's voice reaches his pupils' ears.
The reason is the students are enrolled in Britain's Open University, a correspondence school with 70,000 students with nothing but homework to do. They learn by studying at home, and at their own pace, specially prepared texts and viewing lectures televised by the British Broadcasting Company. A segment of one such program was filmed in the museum.
A BBC crew filmed Peter Skelton, who lectures on geology for the Open University, as he discussed the characteristics of a Permian reef, using the museum's walk-through reef diorama to illustrate the talk.
The Britons had come one-third of the way around the world to film the brief segment because there is no other place on Earth so ideally suited to their needs.

SKELTON IS a member of a "course team" preparing a "second level" introductory geology course for Open U. students. It will be divided into six "blocks," built around six texts about 100 pages in length.
The first is an introduction to geology, maps and geologic history. Second is a segment on "earth materials," which examines rock types. The third covers internal Earth processes, including igneous and metamorphic rocks.
In the fourth segment, students will learn about surface processes, particularly sedimentation. The fifth is a lesson in paleontology. The final block covers the historical geology of Britain and a review of previous lessons.
Students in the course will be learning about Permian Age reefs. The Permian Basin's Capitan Reef was singled out for particular attention, because, Skelton said, "there is hardly a better example (of a Permian reef) than the Capitan."

He explained the reef has been studied in detail; it is well known to scientists. It is still possible to see the reef's structure in many areas. And for those reasons the Open University had sent the team to the Permian Basin to film portions of the TV lecture.
A KEY FACTOR in the decision, Skelton said, was the presence of the reef diorama at the Petroleum Museum.
The diorama illustrates life on a reef in Permian times, and also perfectly illustrates points to be made in his lecture, Skelton said. It will be possible in the TV film to show the structure and fossils of the Capitan Reef as it exists today, and then, using footage shot in the diorama, show students the way things were when the reef was alive.
Skelton said the course team learned of the diorama when reading material published by the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists. One of the works features photos of the reef. After viewing the photos, Skelton said, the team knew the best possible place to shoot segments of the lecture was the Petroleum Museum.

In addition to filming scenes in the diorama, the Britons will be filming outdoors in the Carlsbad, N.M., area. The Capitan Reef survives there as hills and mountains. Carlsbad Caverns offers visitors an "inside look" at the Capitan.
Skelton will lecture to the cameras from the canyons in the Carlsbad National Park, where the Capitan Reef can be seen in the outcroppings.
Skelton said the scenes shot in the diorama will help his students visualize the points made while lecturing on the canyon walls.
THE PERMIAN BASIN scenes will be included in one of three TV lectures

Investigators looking into wind shears' relation to crash

KENNER, La. (AP) — Cockpit recordings from a Pan Am jet may show whether the crew heard control tower reports of potentially dangerous wind currents before the plane took off in a thunderstorm and crashed minutes later, investigators say.
The National Transportation Safety Board said two wind shear alerts were issued about a minute apart, 7 1/2 minutes before Flight 759 crashed after takeoff Friday just outside New Orleans, killing all 145 people aboard and eight on the ground.
But the board refused Sunday to speculate whether wind shears — unpredictable downward bursts of wind that disrupt normal air currents — caused the nation's second-worst plane crash.
Meanwhile, officials today said the bodies of all victims were believed to have been recovered. The first of the funerals for the victims was scheduled today. Lisa Baye, 6, was among those killed on the ground when the jetliner crashed into the Morningside subdivision.
Jefferson Parish Coroner Dr. Charles Odom said the identification of the dead should be nearly finished today, and the bodies released to relatives.
The victims, laid out in refrigerator trucks in a huge Delta Air Lines hangar at Moisant Airport, were examined by a team of pathologists, medical experts and the FBI's identification unit.

"There probably will be some that will be almost impossible to identify, but once the fingerprints are in, indications are 90 percent will be identified," Odom said.
The flight of the Boeing 727 originated in Miami and was headed for Las Vegas, Nev., and San Diego.
NTSB spokeswoman Barbara Dixon said it was possible the crew never heard the wind shear alerts. The pilot could have switched radio frequencies from ground control, which governs taxiing planes, to local control, which instructs takeoffs and landings, she said.
But the presence of wind shear alone does not warrant cancellation of a flight, said NTSB vice chairwoman Patricia Goldman. "Wind shear is but one of the pieces of information" the pilot uses in deciding whether to fly, she said.
Mrs. Goldman said when wind shears occur, "what happens is you get a change in wind direction and velocity which can create turbulence."
Investigators will learn more when the "black box" cockpit voice recording is processed by an FBI lab, she said, adding that it would be about six months before the board issues its report on the apparent cause of the crash.
The recorder's container was damaged by fire after the crash. The tape was not affected, but it contains background noise, such as sounds of the plane's windshield wipers, and the quality is poor, Mrs. Goldman said.

Investigators plan to use sophisticated recording equipment to try to eliminate the background noise.
"It will take longer than we anticipated" to interpret information from the voice recorder and the other tape in the flight data recorder, said Carol Roberts, chief of the safety board's lab service division.
She said weather would be looked at as a potential cause of the crash, adding, "We're not ruling anything out."
The co-pilot, Donald Pierce, 32, of Miami, apparently was at the controls during takeoff, Mrs. Goldman said. He had logged more than 6,000 hours of flight time.
It is entirely the pilot's decision whether to take off or land in bad weather, said Brad Dunbar of the NTSB. Air traffic controllers advise the pilot of all conditions affecting landing or takeoff, but the pilot makes the decision, even in the event that controllers report conditions that do not meet the minimums for legal operations, he said.
Airport management can close a terminal or a runway in the event that landing strips are obstructed by snow, wreckage or the like, but that is a rare occurrence, Dunbar said, adding it is not unusual for an airport to be officially open even though planes are neither landing nor taking off because of weather conditions.
One of the injured survivors, 7-year-old Rachel Schultz, was transferred Sunday in critical condition to the Shriners Burn Institute in Galveston, Texas.

Last night's heavy rainfall may be repeated tonight

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The 2.25 inches of rain recorded overnight by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport could increase as the NWS predicts a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms with a few possibly heavy tonight. A 20 percent chance of thunderstorms is expected Tuesday.
Midland's recorded monthly precipitation rose to 3.21 inches while the amount for the year stands at 9.49 inches.
In addition to flooded streets and reports of small-sized hail, many Midlanders trying to leave town, or return, via airplane encountered delays, according to Darrell Adams, Midland Regional Airport manager.

"We had a few flight delays, but nothing was canceled," Adams said, adding that runway lights did go out for about 30 minutes, prolonging some flight arrivals and departures.
According to Sara St. Clair, spokesperson for Texas Electric Service Co., a bolt of lightning struck a 138,000-bolt transmission line, TESCO's largest line, that comes from a power plant in Monahans. The line, which feeds three substations in Midland, one of which accommodates a third of all Midland customers, was tripped from 9:36 to 9:37 p.m. and, due to another bolt of

Palace prowler meets Queen in unlikely place

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II found a prowler sitting on her bed in Buckingham Palace and chatted with him for 10 minutes to keep him calm until she could summon a footman to take him away, the Daily Express reported today.
It said the 56-year-old monarch was unharmed and "unruffled by her ordeal."
"The queen was very brave," the Express quoted an unidentified senior police detective as saying. "By being calm she did not alarm the man — or he would have panicked and it might have been a completely different story."
The report of the bizarre encounter Friday prompted calls from legislators for a government inquiry into security for the royal family. Workmen spent the weekend stringing barbed wire atop the old iron spikes on the brick wall around Buckingham Palace.

A palace spokesman appeared to confirm the Daily Express report, saying: "We cannot add any more (because) a man has been charged." Once a person is charged with an offense under British law nothing can be reported about the suspect beyond what is said in court.
Police said Michael Fagan, a 30-year-old vagrant, was charged Saturday with breaking into the palace on June 7 and stealing a half-bottle of wine. Police said he was arrested inside the palace again at about 3 a.m. Friday.

Parton, Reynolds delight Austin crowd

By KATHY BAKER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" reopened Sunday night, but only on the screen.

Thousands of onlookers crowded the streets in sweltering heat to watch bands, singers, politicians and movie stars parade up Congress Avenue before the premiere.

The $25 million musical is based on Larry King's hit play about the demise of the "Chicken Ranch."

Dolly Parton arrived in a Cadillac convertible with longhorns on the hood and was joined by co-star Burt Reynolds as the crowd screamed and cheered.

The premiere of the film, most of which was shot in and near Austin, was a benefit for the Paramount Theater, an ornate, restored movie house. Organizers said the event raised $160,000, although Universal studio's cost for staging the premiere was reported to be more than twice that figure.

Gov. Bill Clements gave Reynolds and Miss Parton plaques making them honorary "Texas stars," and Reynolds delighted the crowd by mugging during Clements' speech touting the attributes of Texas as a filmmaking capital.

Miss Parton, meanwhile, delighted Austin Mayor Carole McClellan by telling her, "We look like twins!"

"I was a little worried about not being a Texan and playing this part," said Reynolds, "but you've made me feel like a Texan and I'm very proud."

The premiere festivities were being taped for a special television broadcast.

The movie recounted the events surrounding the 1975 closing of the "Chicken Ranch," a plainly illegal establishment long-tolerated by state and local officials.

Miss Parton portrays Miss Mona, the madam; Reynolds the local sheriff finally forced to close the bordello down.

King had criticized Universal's handling of his play's transition onto celluloid, especially the "Hollywoodization" of the story to create a love affair between the Parton and Reynolds characters.

King had wanted country singer Willie Nelson to play the sheriff.

Now living in Washington D.C., King has written a book on the subject called "The Whorehouse Papers," although he still is listed in the credits of the movie.

Reynolds made no secret of his displeasure at King's attitude.

At a Saturday barbeque in Pflugerville, where the movie set for the "Chicken Ranch" was created at the Murchison ranch, Reynolds told the crowd, "I never met a Texan I didn't like — but I've never met Larry King."

The Austin American-Statesman reported today that

Reynolds told the newspaper, "You tell him (King) for me that I'll meet him anytime, anywhere, and I'll hit him so hard his parents are going to die."

Train from Nogales jumps track, killing over 30 people

TEPIC, Mexico (AP) — A passenger express train known as The Bullet jumped the rails near this Pacific coast city and plunged into a deep ravine, killing as many as 35 people, authorities said today.

The train was bound Sunday from Nogales, across the border from Arizona, to Guadalajara, 332 miles northwest of the Mexican capital, an official of the federal district attorney's office here said.

Robert Downes, U.S. consul at Mazatlan, 173 miles north of Tepic, said he had no information on whether there were Americans on board. He said Americans living in border areas often take the express train to travel to Pacific coast points in Mexico. The Mazatlan consulate covers the Tepic area.

Bertha Felap, an employee at the U.S. Consulate in Guadalajara, said the consulate there also did not know if the train was carrying Americans.

"We've worked all afternoon Sunday and all night, and rescue squads are still trying to pry the wreckage loose. We have no firm figure, but I believe there may be as many as 35 people killed," Red Cross spokesman Manuel Morales said in a telephone interview.

"We also don't know about the number of injured, but they run into the dozens," Morales said.

being filmed in the U.S., Skelton said. The other segments deal with the ways scientists study the form and function of ancient life with only fossils to examine, and with the formation of coal. The "form and function" segment was filmed in New York, where an expert on the subject works. The "coal" segment will be shot in Oklahoma.

Skelton said the American locations where chosen, in part, because there are no sites in Britain that would illustrate points made in lectures.

There is a Permian reef in England, Skelton said, but it has gone through several changes and its structure cannot be seen as easily as the Capitan's. And, although Britain has great quantities of coal, there are no surviving coal-forming swamps, so the Oklahoma swamp was chosen.

The lectures for the course are being co-funded by the BBC and public television station KRMA, Denver.

Without the co-production money, Skelton said, they would not have been able to film the American segments.

Stuart Carter, a member of the BBC's Open University staff who is directing the filming in the Permian Basin, said KRMA will not receive the final package of programs for about a year and a half. It may, at that time, syndicate the programs to PBS stations.

SKELTON IS a paleontologist specializing in the study of rudist bivalves from the Cretaceous Era. He is one of two paleontologists on the geology course team. The other will be lecturing on the formation of coal in Oklahoma. The two share responsibility for the preparation of lectures dealing with paleontology.

Of the 70,000 students enrolled in Open University, 400-500 will be taking the geology course. The six basic texts they will study are "student active," Skelton said — designed to keep the attention of a student working at home. The students are expected to devote about three weeks, or 30 hours to the study of each text.

The texts will be "enriched" by the TV lectures, Skelton said.

There are also audio visual materials for home use. Students are provided a book of color plates illustrating points made in the texts. Along with the book they are given a tape recording that explains the illustrations.

Open University students earn a degree by successfully completing six credits. An honors degree is awarded those completing eight credits.

Skelton said the only admission require for Open U. students is that they be 21 years old. This contrasts sharply with Britain's traditional universities, which have many admission requirements. Of those enrolled in Open U., Skelton said, 50 percent graduate, suggesting many in Britain are only prevented from obtaining degrees by the entrance requirements imposed by the traditional schools.

Scenes shot in the Petroleum Museum were done by a team of freelance film makers from Dallas. A BBC crew will do the work around Carlsbad.

Odessa man struck by shotshell pellet

ODESSA — An Odessa man was struck in the head by a pellet from a shotshell fired from a vehicle that pulled alongside the vehicle in which he was riding early Sunday morning.

Fallean Dominguez of 409 Johnson told police he and several others were riding in a car in the 800 block of Clements about 12:30 a.m. Sunday when another vehicle pulled alongside them and a shot was fired at the vehicle

Dominguez was riding in. Taken to Medical Center Hospital for emergency treatment, Dominguez had been struck in the side of the head with one shotshell pellet and also suffered a graze wound on his inner left thigh just above the knee, according to police reports.

No charges had been filed by early today, but police officials indicated Dominguez knew who the assailants were.

Odessa woman arrested for attempted shoplifting

A 22-year-old Odessa woman was arrested Saturday evening outside a Midland discount center after she allegedly attempted to shoplift more than $500 worth of merchandise.

The woman was arrested about 6:30 p.m. after she left the store, Gibson's at 3111 W. Cuthbert Ave., with a food processor, electric food slicer and a ceiling fan she had not paid for, according to police reports.

The Wadley Avenue river was flowing as usual Sunday night as more than two inches of rain fell on the area. Here a four-wheel drive pickup prepares to tow a stalled car from the intersection of Wadley Avenue and I Street about 10 p.m. There were reports of numerous stalled vehicles throughout the city as 2.25 inches of rainfall were recorded at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

and sound professionals from Dallas, had learned of the undersea diorama at the museum and knew it would fit in perfectly with their plans to create a program on the reef structures of the Permian period of geologic history.

Producer Stuart Carter and Skelton spent almost eight hours Sunday at the museum transforming the marine diorama into a classroom of sorts.

The diorama is the most expensive and lavish exhibit in the museum, according to museum director Homer Fort. Scientists have come from as far away as France and Japan to see it. It is the one exhibit that elicits the most oohs and aaahs from the public, he added.

The diorama contains close to 200,000 tiny marine creatures, each hand-made from plaster molds that were oven-fired and individually painted.

A doctoral student from the University of Michigan, Terry Chase, took almost two years to complete the work.

The reef was made of chicken wire, wood and plaster, and moved into the museum in sections. Each tiny creature, from crinoid to brachiopod to starfish to snail, had to be individually glued into place.

The most harrowing aspect of the work was that Chase wouldn't let the museum officials, who were paying a pretty penny for the diorama, see it until it was finished, Fort said.

"He was afraid the workmen working on the rest of the museum might get the diorama dusty or dirty, so he closed off the room, where the diorama was, and only worked on it at night," said Fort. "He would come in after everybody else was gone and work on it for eight hours at night. He did it that way for almost two years."

Chase now operates a studio in Missouri making dioramas for museums all over the country.

Originally, the museum committee planning the exhibits wanted a diorama three or four times its present size. They approached French-Canadian sculptor George Marchand about it.

Marchand and his father had specialized in museum dioramas for years, working in museums all over the world.

But Marchand refused the assignment because he was on the point of retiring, and the project museum officials envisioned would have taken seven years, he said.

He was selling all his marine molds anyway.

Committee chairman William T. Snyder rushed back to Midland with this news and donations were hastily raised so the museum could buy the molds.

The real problem was not acquiring the molds, however, Fort said. It was finding an artist who could use them to make castings and who understood paleontology.

Marchand recommended a former student, Terry Chase. Chase was well-suited for the work. He was working on his doctorate in paleontology, was an amateur artist, and had skin dived in the Caribbean among tropical reefs.

Black doctor attempts to disprove discrimination

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A physician is trying to disprove a story in black history books that a black doctor whose research helped develop blood banks was refused care at a whites-only hospital in 1950 and was allowed to bleed to death.

Dr. Charles Mason Quick, 67, of Fayetteville, says white physicians at the Alamance County hospital tried to save the life of Dr. Charles Drew, who was injured in a car accident 32 years ago.

"I'm a black man," Quick said. "And this is my state. I know you can indict North Carolina for a number of things. But you can't indict her for this."

Quick says he intends to work for the establishment of a North Carolina program or scholarship in memory of Drew "that would go a long way toward dispelling this terrible myth."

Last week, Quick urged Gov. Jim Hunt to help him in his efforts.

To back up his version, Quick points to a letter from Drew's widow in the hospital files.

Lenore Drew, now 72 and living in Washington, D.C., wrote the chief surgeon of Alamance General Hospital, "Though all efforts were futile, there is much comfort derived in knowing that everything was done in his fight for life," according to Quick.

Marvin Yount, administrator of the old Alamance General Hospital when Drew died and now administrator of Memorial Hospital of Alamance, says he has been trying for years to debunk the story.

Yount, who is white, said that Drew and three resident doctors at Howard University left Washington about 2:15 a.m. on April 1, 1950, for an annual clinic at Tuskegee University in Alabama. He said the North Carolina Highway Patrol determined Drew fell asleep at the wheel of the car about 7:30 a.m. and the vehicle left North Carolina 49 near Haw River, throwing Drew out and rolling over on him.

Yount said Drew's injuries included brain damage and injuries to his chest and a leg, which was almost severed. Drew died in the hospital's emergency room about two hours after arriving but before he could be admitted.

Quick said he recalled arriving at the hospital and seeing white doctors fighting to save the life of Drew, whose research helped doctors to use blood plasma in transfusions and led to the development of blood banks.

lightning, from 9:42 p.m. to 9:47 p.m., Ms. St. Clair said.

"Five minutes was the longest time the electricity was off," she said, adding that "various spot problems" caused circuits to overload in some areas.

Several Midland area farmers contacted reported no damage from hail or excessive rainfall, although there was an unconfirmed report of a cotton field southeast of town stripped by hail.

Precipitation reported in area towns varied from sprinkles reported in Rankin to hail and "a lot of rain, possibly four inches," in Stanton, sheriff department spokesmen said. Area spokesmen also said that while Andrews received a little wind, Lamesa reported strong winds. In Odessa, a trailer house roof was blown off due to the winds, according to the Department of Public Safety.

The low temperatures for Midland tonight should drop into the middle 60s, with the high on Tuesday climbing into the lower 90s.

Winds will be southeasterly at 5-10 mph tonight and increasing to 5-15 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 97 was nine degrees below the record high of 106 set in 1964. The overnight low of 64 also missed the record low of 55, set in 1936, by nine degrees.

CONSUMER TIPS

Improper car maintenance leads to frequent repairs

By THE BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU OF THE PERMIAN BASIN, INC.

With prices steadily rising, many Permian Basin residents are looking for ways to save money. Two ways of saving for numerous families have been keeping their cars for longer periods of time and using self-service gasoline stations. However, these practices usually lead to frequent repair bills since the cars are often not properly maintained and, of course, accumulate more miles. If not careful, many consumers will be paying more than necessary for repairs by unknowingly using unscrupulous automobile mechanics.

According to Card Ward, owner of Hays Motor Service, in most cars, a qualified mechanic should be able to correctly identify a problem by either listening to the engine or a description of the car's actions from the customer. He should then be able to tell the customer the exact cost. If the mechanic, upon further examination, finds more extensive repairs need to be made, he should contact the customer for authorization before making them.

Although many auto repair shops provide honest, competent service, a few manage to give the industry a bad name by taking advantage of the general public's ignorance of automobile mechanics. Complaints received by the Better Business Bureau primarily involve repair shops making unauthorized repairs, requiring customers to pay for repairs before releasing their cars and misrepresenting the type of work that was needed.

Using the following guidelines may save you from paying more than necessary for auto repairs:

—Practice preventive maintenance: Ed Lowman, owner of The Garage, states that 90 percent of all automobile problems are a result of the consumer not following a planned maintenance program. With the popularity of self-service stations, many people are neglecting to change their car's oil, transmission fluid and air filters, and to keep water in the battery and radiator. While it is wise to consult the owner's manual concerning the recommended schedule of routine servicing procedures, a qualified mechanic should be able to suggest a preventive maintenance program for your type of car for this area of the country.

—Finding a repair shop: Your best start in locating a reliable garage is to obtain recommendations from friends and co-workers. Ask if the work is done right the first time and if the final bill is close to the original estimate.

If your car needs major repairs, get at least three estimates in writing. All repair shops have access to a flat rate manual which states the average time it takes to complete any repair job on any model car. When the time stated in the manual is multiplied by the labor charge per hour, the mechanic should be able to determine an accurate estimate of the repair costs. If you receive an estimate that is much higher or lower than the others, ask for an explanation of how the costs were figured.

—At the shop: Before you take your car in, make a written list of its problems or the specific work you want done. Include your name and a telephone number where you can be reached during the day. Don't leave your car with the understanding that the garage can "do whatever is necessary." This is an open invitation to misunderstandings and contested service bills. Write down what you think needs to be done, then ask for the service manager's suggestions. When you leave the car, leave it with a mutually agreed upon list of items to be serviced, and a mutually agreed upon cost estimate.

For your protection, especially if you are unfamiliar with the shop, you may want the following statement included on the work order: "Make no repairs or replacements without owner's authorization."

When talking to the service manager be on the lookout for the "parts changer." He will always recommend that a new part be used to replace the old one. A mechanic, on the other hand, will pull off and replace it only if it cannot be repaired.

—Before you pay: In the past consumers have paid for repairs that have not been made. Once you are notified your car is ready, be prepared to do some more checking before you write the check.

Ask the service manager to explain all work done and all replacements made. Also ask to see any old parts that have been replaced, especially spark plugs, brake shoes, carburetors, alternators and starters.

The length of the warranty offered by a repair shop will depend upon the warranty provided by the manufacturer of the part. But remember, "a warranty is only as good as the person who stands behind it."

Kids work in mom's publishing company

TRYON, N.C. (AP) — When author Carole Marsh Longmeyer plans a new book for youngsters, she turns to experts — her three children. The kids, ranging in age from 10 to 17, handle public relations, business and editing.

Ms. Longmeyer, 35, credits her family's talent for helping make Gallopade Publishing Group, a fast-growing producer of children's books. The family has turned out about a dozen books that have sold thousands of copies all over the country.

"We've taken our crazy, zany ideas and turned them into quality books for children of all ages," said Ms. Longmeyer, who began publishing children's books three years ago. "And the children have not been sitting idle. Their ideas and their research go into the books."

A teddy bear — The adorable Bear — greets visitors on the porch of the white Victorian-style house that serves as Gallopade's corporate offices.

Wendy, 15, presides over the first-floor gift shop, Gallopade Galleries, and is in charge of public relations.

Michael, 10, who reads the copy to make sure it appeals to children, looks over some research for an upcoming book, then dons a baseball hat and heads for the baseball field.

Michele, 17, on summer vacation from the North Carolina School of Math and Science in Durham, is helping her mother convert Gallopade to a computer system.

"We have found that we can be tough when business decisions call for it," said Ms. Longmeyer, who writes and researches the books. "But fun is mostly what we're about. We have fun doing our books and kids have fun reading them."

Luckily, we've managed to be successful along the way."

Police attempt to find identities of abandoned girl, her mother

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Police say they are "grabbing at straws" for clues to the identities of a 2½-year-old girl and the woman who apparently abandoned her in a motel room, with a note asking for someone else to care for the child.

Attempts to trace the woman through a cab company, a Seattle address and a Washington driver's license number failed, police said Sunday. "We're grabbing at straws," said officer Al Murphy.

The hungry and bruised child, whose hair had been dyed bright red was placed in a foster home after being discovered Saturday, said Sherry Fraizer, supervisor of the Nashville district of the state Department of Human Services.

Pat Hampton, a Metro Nashville police officer, said the child was "very thin, looking underfed, and her hair was so sensitive to the hair dye that some of her hair fell out and left sores."

She had a blackened left eye, a bruise over her right eye and was wearing shorts and a "Panama City" T-shirt, Ms. Fraizer said. Panama City is a community in northwest Florida.

passed with no word from the room's occupants, police said.

An unsigned note on the motel mirror read, "Please forgive me for what I have done, but I had no choice. I cannot afford (sic) to keep and support her. She's better off with other parents. Her name is Sharon. She is 2½. Take care of her."

Police said a woman identifying herself as Mary Roberts of Seattle checked into the motel between 10 p.m. and midnight Friday.

Larry Coleman, a day desk clerk, said a woman called Sunday afternoon and identified herself as Sharon's mother. Police are investigating that report, Currey said.

"Her mother could surface, and it is possible that someone will know this child, so it could be placed with a relatives," Ms. Fraizer said. "It is also possible we'll never know much more than we do now."

Mayor accidentally shot

GALLITZIN, Pa. (AP) — A gun-wielding mayor, trying to help officers surrounding a nearby home, was mistaken for a fugitive and accidentally shot and wounded by a police chief from a nearby town, authorities said.

"We feel bad because the mayor was coming to our aid," said Police Chief Joseph Fox after the shooting in this south-central Pennsylvania borough of about 2,300 residents.

The injured mayor, James Dignan, was reported in stable condition Sunday at Altoona Mercy Hospital with a gunshot wound in the lower left side.

Fox said the mayor, in his early 30s, apparently had left his home with a handgun to help officers who surrounded a house occupied by five persons sought in a robbery of weapons from another residence.

Just before the mayor arrived at about midnight Saturday, a man jumped out a window of the house, fired a couple of shots and fled on foot, said Fox.

Q.1—North-South vulnerable, as South with 60 on score you hold:

♦AK72 ♥AKQ543 ♦73 ♠9
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 1 ♦ Pass
3 ♦ Pass 4 ♦ Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Now that partner has made a slam try, his holding in diamonds will determine how many tricks you can make. You can convey this to partner by jumping to five spades. With the ace of diamonds, partner should cue-bid that suit, and you can contract for a grand slam; with second-round control, partner should bid a slam, either in no trump or in spades; and with no control, he passes.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♦732 ♥K ♦Q8742 ♦10953
The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
Pass Pass Pass 1 ♦
1 ♥ Pass Pass Dble
Pass 2 ♦ Pass 2 NT
Pass ?

What action do you take?

A.—In effect, partner has contracted for eight tricks at no trump even though you might have nothing. You have useful values — a potential guard in the opponents' suit and a fifth card in the suit where you have a known fit. It would be cowardly not to go on to game in no trump.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦6 ♥KQ109 ♦KJ63 ♦A843
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♥ Pass Pass ?
What action do you take?

A.—As a rule, we do not like to allow the opponents to play at the one-level. However, this hand is an exception. First of all, they are playing in our best suit. Secondly, if we double, partner is sure to bid spades. And lastly, neither minor suit is of the length or quality suitable for a two-level overcall. Pass.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦Q10874 ♥Q ♦AKJ9863
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ 1 ♥ 2 ♦ 2 ♦
Pass 3 ♥ ?
What action do you take?

A.—It is not your turn to bid! Despite your great length in diamonds, you should allow partner the courtesy of the road. The hand is a potential misfit for both sides, and it sounds as if partner's second suit, if he has one, is hearts. He perhaps has strong views about the ability of East to make tricks at a heart contract, and you should allow him the opportunity to express his views.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦A5 ♥J109852 ♦A95 ♦K6
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 3 ♦ Pass
3 ♥ Pass 4 ♥ Pass ?
What action do you take?

A.—What started out as only a fair opening bid has improved dramatically now that partner has supported hearts after his jump shift. Your hand revalues to 17 points, so slam should be a laydown. If you are the sort who likes to get there slowly, you can start by cue-bidding the ace of spades. But we would opt for the value raise to six hearts—partner needs too many right-cards for a grand slam to be feasible.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦7 ♥A62 ♦AQJ ♦KQJ976
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with four spades. What action do you take?

A.—If preemptive bids did not cause problems, players would soon abandon them. Here, East is forcing you to guess at an uncomfortably high level. We would gamble on five clubs. While it is quite likely that we could defeat four spades, the chances of making game, and its reward, make the risk worthwhile.

A delightful prediction

Any Midlander whose confidence in the local economy had been shaken in recent months by the much-discussed "levelling off" should be heartened by The Reporter-Telegram's recent report that bank deposits in the Tall City reached an all-time record high of more than $2 billion.

Most Midlanders are aware of how strong the economy here is supposed to be compared to the rest of the nation — basically low unemployment and good job availability, though lower than a few months back. But we tend to forget from time to time and it's good to be reminded that our oil-based economy is as solid as granite.

If you're still not convinced, you need to talk to Walter Ashby who is in charge of market research for First National Bank and as such is considered an authority on Midland's economy. Without reservation, Ashby says the Midland economy is very strong, one of the strongest in the nation.

For those who complain that the economy slowed down here during the first half of the year, Ashby reminds that the first half of 1981, too, was relatively slow. It wasn't until the final six months of 1981 that tremendous business growth and expansion came about. He's predicting the same will be true this year, just in larger quantities. That's right. Larger quantities. And he has research to back up his prediction.

"I expect to see a very significant population growth in the latter half of this year," Ashby predicted. That could easily be in the range of 7,000 to 8,000 new residents, he noted. That would put Midland's population growth at 10,000 to 13,000 people in 1982, a significant figure when you consider that in 1981's "boom" conditions, only about 8,000 people came to the Tall City.

Furthermore, Ashby said that a survey of 39 randomly selected Midland companies in May revealed that one-third of them had expansion plans for the last half of 1982.

And don't forget that Midland will have 1 1/2 million square feet of additional office space opening up in the last half of the year.

For those who worry that oil activity has been dropping off this year, Ashby noted that the rig count is down, but that information available reveals 28 percent more wells were drilled in the first half of '82 than in the first half of '81. And the average drilling rig is drilling one-third more wells this year than last.

What all of that means is that oil drilling is a good investment right now because the cost of drilling a well is "down significantly over last year."

Ashby is not blind to the fact that some Midland businesses are suffering, feeling the pinch of the recession. And, he says, depressed economies in other countries have caused demand for oil to drop and contributed to a mood of caution in respect to petroleum investing. But, overall, the oil industry has sheltered Midland's community from the ravages of the recession.

For the future, Ashby says, Midland is an extremely bright spot. Petroleum activity, he says, "is very strong and is going to be strong for many years." That comes from one who should know and it's a prediction we delight in hearing and sharing.

Editors edit themselves

It is sometimes said that newspaper editors are faster on the draw in criticizing others than in criticizing themselves.

This is not necessarily so. It should be pointed out, in explanation if not in defense, that in recent years several journalistic organizations have devoted much time to self-examination in the interest of serving the public better.

One such organization is the National Conference of Editorial

Writers, which held its 36th annual meeting in Chicago last week. Editorial writers from the United States and Canada gathered to seek ways to improve the quality and conscience of editorial pages.

Editors spent hundreds of man-hours reading editorials and writing critiques.

Candid self-criticism may jolt the ego, but in the long run it pays off for the newspaper reader who has the right to demand the highest degree of editorial excellence.

Another View:

Casey's ethics machine

Let's see if we can get this straight. Certain senior CIA officials will be furnished regularly with lists of CIA Director William Casey's stock transactions.

If they spot any potential conflict of interest in which Casey could use his CIA position to fatten his pocketbook — as when Casey sold $600,000 worth of oil stock last year just as the world oil glut was beginning — they will refer the matter to CIA Deputy Director John McMahon.

McMahon, in consultation with CIA General Counsel Stanley Sporkin and his staff will then decide whether Casey should be excluded from making a decision at the CIA that could be of personal benefit to himself.

Or they can tell Casey that one of his holdings will be affected by an upcoming CIA decision and let him decide whether to sell the affected stock or excuse himself from the decision.

Or, if Casey's holdings are big enough they may flat out exclude him from making the decision if he wants to participate.

For those who cannot follow this, Sporkin's comment on this wondrous Rube Goldberg ethics machine should make things clear: "I'm not going to let him get himself into trouble."

How all this will prevent Casey from using the sensitive information to which he has routine access to enrich himself seems not to have been considered. Nor, apparently, did anyone consider exactly what all this silly and largely ineffectual system says about the man who heads what is undoubtedly one of the most sensitive agencies in the U.S. government.

The result is a declaration that the fellow bears watching, but with a system almost guaranteed not to generate the trust that all this watching is supposed to inspire.

Is this where one wants a man who, after a lengthy U.S. Senate investigation, was declared "not unfit to serve," whose own friends in the Senate declared that they wished "he was more meticulous in his private business life" and who, in the 18 months since he was appointed, has been investigated for more things than one can reasonably keep track of — knowingly misleading investors in a firm in which he had an interest; failing to register as a foreign agent; using inside information for personal advantage in stock deals?

Casey, unlike all other high government officials serving in posts involving potential conflicts of interest, refused to put his stock holdings — estimated to be worth between $1.8 million and $3.4 million, many of them in firms with large foreign operations — into a blind trust. That, of course, is his right. But it is not his right to be director of the CIA, nor, as far as anyone can see, has he ever been especially qualified to hold that post. A man who requires devices like the CIA's "screening arrangement" and people like Sporkin and McMahon to keep him out of trouble, has no business anywhere near the CIA.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Arabs flexing muscles in U.S. business

WASHINGTON — This is the story of a woman who offended the brittle sensibilities of an Arab potentate and was fired for her transgression. It is a perfect illustration of the way the sheiks use their financial muscle to influence the decisions of American corporations that do business with them.

I've already reported on attempts by the Saudi Arabian royal family to use its multibillion-dollar financial investments in the United States as a means of influencing U.S. foreign policy. And many thoughtful observers have expressed misgivings over the fact that both Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Secretary of State-designate George Shultz were high officials of Bechtel Corp., which does extensive business in the Arab world.

These warnings have been dismissed by the Reagan administration with pious proclamations that Arab petrodollars are not a serious consideration in the formulation of U.S. policy in the Middle East, or even in the conduct of corporations doing business there.

Vivian Wilder, a valued employee of the Whittaker Corp. since 1960, takes issue with that claim. In July 1980, she was summarily fired from her job in Whittaker's United Arab Emirates operation because an Arab official took offense at something she wrote for the company's employee newsletter.

What was Wilder's heinous offense? As the company's travel supervisor in Abu Dhabi, the UAE capital, she suggested in a house-organ article that Whittaker employees might want to take advantage of their presence in the Middle East to visit "the Holy Land" — that is, Israel.

Whittaker operates hospitals in Saudi Arabia, Yemen and the United Arab Emirates. These operations are undeniably lucrative. In fact, almost half the company's net earnings last year represented profits from their business with the oil sheiks.

Much of Whittaker's success in the Middle East can be traced to Prince Khalid bin Abdullah, a member of the Saudi royal family. He will probably own nearly half of the company's Saudi operation by the end of this year, and his undoubted influence is considered responsible for Whittaker's success in the region.

But the company claims Prince Khalid's influence does not work the other way. In recent hearings before the House Commerce Subcommittee of Rep. Ben Rosenthal, D-N.Y., Whittaker Chairman Joseph Alibrandi was asked how much influence the company's Arab stockholders have.

"Zero," replied Alibrandi. "I assure you beyond any question there is no influence."

What worries Congress is that Arab investors are in a position to sway decisions by officials of companies — like Whittaker — which have top-secret defense contracts with the Pentagon.

What worries Vivian Wilder, of course, is the influence that cost her a job. The article was seen by an Arab official. He complained to the company, and Wilder's position at the Abu Dhabi hospital was "terminated." A Whittaker spokesman acknowledged to my associates Donald Goldberg and Vicki Warren that Wilder was transferred at the insistence of the UAE government.

Since then, Wilder has been told the only travel supervisor's job has already been filled, and the company has arranged for interviews with other firms. She's suing. A Whittaker official said her charges are "without merit."

LIBRARY VENDETTA: Two researchers at the Library of Congress had the temerity to blow the whistle on a library official who had faked his educational background. Their charges were absolutely correct. But one of the whistleblowers was handed a 90-day suspension; the other was fired, and has been out of work for five years.

The two men, Howard Cook and George Perry, discovered that the official had falsely claimed to have two doctoral degrees. They brought their findings to the attention of the library administration in 1976, and distributed their evidence to fellow employees.

Cook drew a suspension. Perry was fired.

A federal mediator ruled against Perry's dismissal, but Librarian Daniel Boorstin rejected the decision without explanation. When the two men took their cases to court, a federal judge dismissed their appeal.

Meanwhile, the official they accused of lying about his academic credentials later admitted it under oath. And in a 1979 stipulation, the library acknowledged Cook and Perry were correct. But it didn't change its decision to punish the two whistleblowers.

Footnote: A library spokesman told my reporter Anne Suydam that Perry was "not a bad worker" but his actions reflected a personality conflict with the official.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: The poor showing of Soviet-made weapons against American-made Israeli equipment in Lebanon could cost the Kremlin dearly in the Third World. The Russians don't have the money to buy friendship, and their communist philosophy isn't much of a selling point among Third World leaders. That leaves only military equipment — which has now been shown to be inferior.

INSIDE REPORT:

Israel's Lebanon invasion only the start?

JERUSALEM — Israel's once-dominant Labor Party is convinced that secret machinations between Alexander Haig and Menachem Begin not only paved the way for the invasion of Lebanon but pushed Israel into an exposed position carrying the danger of boomerang.

Labor Party leaders and political strategists will not speak out — yet — about their suspicions of collaboration on the Lebanon occupation or their fears about its meaning for the future. But bitterness is privately expressed by some top party leaders who themselves had total control over Israel's life-line to the U.S. until Prime Minister Begin gained power five years ago.

That lifeline is now in the ambitious hands of a more truculent, more demanding political breed. The old Labor Party bosses — the late Golda Meir, Yigal Allon and Moshe Dayan, whose policies are now carried forward by Yitzhak Rabin, Shimon Peres and Abba Eban — never had a master plan for extending the territory of the Jewish state further into Islam. They suspect that Begin and Defense Minister Ariel Sharon do have a plan and that Al Haig was no innocent bystander.

Haig is finished as secretary of state, but Labor Party strategists have not yet found any change in the administration's treatment of the Begin-Sharon government. They fear that President Reagan's refusal to utter a word of criticism of Israel's bloody romp through Lebanon may not reflect true sentiment in the U.S., where public opinion can make or break the tiny state of Israel.

For the immediate future, the Begin-Sharon triumph in making a co-conspirator out of the Reagan administration in the Lebanon affair is perceived by Labor Party leaders as strengthening Begin's refusal to negotiate real Palestinian autonomy and his contempt for the promises of Camp David.

"Israel must accept U.N. Security Council Resolution 242, including some major withdrawal from the West Bank and must accept the autonomy provisions of Camp David," a Labor Party principal told us. But he views Begin now as not likely to dilute his demand for Israeli sovereignty over the West Bank and Gaza in view of Reagan's "quiescence" over Lebanon.

Another Labor Party principal, former foreign minister Abba Eban, was stunned when U.S. ambassador Sam Lewis described Sharon's invasion of Lebanon with words to this effect: Arik came up with a crazy idea and then made it work.

But leaders of the Labor Party publicly resisted the Begin-Sharon policy of laying waste to Lebanese cities and surrounding Beirut. Whatever short-term victory may have been achieved, they believe the last thing Begin-Sharon militancy needed was a shot of Potomac adrenalin. Yet that is exactly what the Israeli government appears to be getting from Reagan.

Israel, just departed from the Suez Canal after heavy pressure from previous American administrations, now stands in physical possession of the most densely populated Mediterranean coastal areas in the Arab world. Road signs in Hebrew are only one manifestation of solid Israeli control from the border to Beirut, one sign of the pervasive character of the Israeli occupation.

No one here sees the slightest chance of Israel withdrawing from Lebanon any time soon — perhaps not for years. That is the crystallization of Labor's private nightmare: that under the leadership of Begin-Sharon, new pretexts will always be found to avoid the serious accommodation with Arabs that the Labor Party knows is essential to Israel's statehood.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, July 12, the 193rd day of 1982. There are 172 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

CHARLEY REESE

Reubin Askew man to watch in '84 race

The man to watch for in the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination is Reubin O'D. Askew, a boyish-looking former governor of Florida.

I have known this man since 1958, once admired him greatly.

Later, with more knowledge, my admiration melted into mere respect for his abilities as a professional politician.

There are a number of reasons why I think he will emerge as the strong contender. One is the competition. For starters, you can scratch Sen. Ted Kennedy, former Vice President Walter Mondale and Sen. John Glenn.

Kennedy is dead in the water. He could not win when every Democrat knew Carter-Mondale was the Titanic Ticket. He can no more escape Chappaquiddick than Richard Nixon can shed Watergate. The spectacle of an overweight multi-millionaire serving lobster at a massive reception in Philadelphia while mouthing platitudes about compassion for the poor will not quicken the hearts of the unemployed in Detroit and Cleveland. Furthermore, he seems to think he can still run against Herbert Hoover.

Next to Chappaquiddick and Watergate, the most unbearable burden for a presidential candidate is to have been Jimmy Carter's vice president. Even those Democrats who hate Ronald Reagan blame Carter for having made Reagan's election possible — and rightly so. A strong man might escape the burden but Mondale has never shown that kind of strength. He's always been somebody's "boy."

John Glenn suffers not from vice but from bad luck. He has the charisma of a turnip. He was only barely exciting while he was a young man in orbit; and since he landed, he has been a competent, but dull public servant and nobody who's dull can win the '84 nomination. That may not be right but it's true.

The second factor in Askew's favor is that the Democrats desperately need new faces and new ideas. Though they need not admit it in public, the Democrats know that with a $1 trillion debt and taxes taking 43 percent of the national income, the old tax-and-spend national won't fly even in the face of Ronald Reagan.

The third and perhaps most important reason he will be a strong contender is an incident that occurred during the 1976 political wars. Early in the game, both Askew and Jimmy Carter made the pilgrimage to the Pocantico Hills barony of David Rockefeller. The leader of the Eastern Establishment anointed Carter, proving that rich is not synonymous with smart. What is more pertinent, however, is the change in Reubin Askew following that meeting.

Askew had gone to Pocantico with a reputation as an anti-business governor. Afterwards, he suddenly discovered the virtues of expanding Florida's economic horizons, particularly in the area of international banking. In short, Askew discovered the power of the Establishment and made peace with it. Subsequently, when he finished his term as governor, Carter appointed him U.S. Ambassador for Trade.

There was no love lost between Carter and Askew. Most assuredly, Askew's appointment was engineered by the Establishment and it has all the marks of grooming, for it gave Askew what he lacked — experience in international affairs.

Whether you believe in conspiracy theories or not, the Eastern Establishment of old money plays a powerful role in presidential politics. Its strategy is to make sure the nominee for both parties is acceptable; and, while it is routinely called the "liberal" establishment, it is really not liberal. It fears the true liberal as much as it does the true conservative. The fact that Rockefeller switched his support to the Reagan-Bush ticket was a dead giveaway that Reagan was less conservative than his speeches. His administration has confirmed that.

Rockefeller and his cronies won't trust either Hart or Tsongas for they are too liberal. They will go with Askew, whose liberal inclinations are carefully controlled by his ambition. That's why I say put your money on Askew. The Rockefeller will and they haven't lost a presidential race since they beat William Howard Taft.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Best to always avoid salt tablets

Dear Dr. Solomon: When I was a youngster, my parents always gave me salt tablets to take in the summer. The reasoning was to retain fluid that would otherwise be lost because of the heat. In the past several years, salt has taken quite a beating. Are salt tablets still a recommended regimen for the summer? — T.R., Easton, Pa.

Dear T.R.: No. Now that we know a lot more about salt and the problems that it can create, we have come to realize that a little salt is sufficient for all of our body needs. Unless specified by a physician, avoid salt tablets altogether. Adding a little extra salt in food is all that is necessary even in hot weather.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is meant by gestational diabetes? I know that gestation refers to pregnancy, but I'm not clear about its relationship to diabetes. — Mrs. A.L., Montreal

Dear Mrs. L.: Some women develop diabetes during their pregnancies. Once they are no longer pregnant, however, their glucose tolerance returns to normal. Gestational diabetes refers to this phenomenon.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I suffer from gout occasionally, but when it happens, it is really very painful. It usually hits me in the big toe. Would acupuncture be of any use in such a case? — John, Muskegon, Mich.

Dear John: At least one American physician has returned from a visit to China with a report that acupuncture is used there in the treatment of gout. Apparently, the Chinese consider it an effective form of treatment. However, there are also other forms of treatment that have proven effective, and I suggest you discuss these with your doctor. Gout is a treatable condition.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been on the pill for quite some time. A few weeks ago it was necessary for me to take tetracycline, and my doctor told me it might be a good idea for me and my husband to use another form of birth control while I was taking the tetracycline. Can you explain why? — Mrs. N.P., Dallas, Texas

Dear Mrs. P.: There have been reports of a few cases of pregnancy occurring among women who were taking oral contraceptives and antibiotic medication at the same time. Apparently, antibiotics such as tetracycline have a tendency to decrease the effectiveness of the pill.

Therefore, women who use oral contraceptives might want to use some mechanical form of contraception while taking tetracycline. It simply comes down to a case of being safe rather than sorry.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Everyone thinks my husband is a mild person and they are surprised when they find out that he has high blood pressure. The trouble with him is that he never gets angry, even when his boss or other people walk all over him. Sometimes his face will get very red, but that's as far as it goes. Is it possible that his high blood pressure is caused by the fact that he never stands up for himself? — Mrs. L.H., Norfolk, Va.

Dear Mrs. H.: It is possible that hypertension in some patients may be a consequence of suppressed anger. Dr. Patrick Sullivan of the Southern California School of Medicine studied 15 patients with primary hypertension. He found that eight of the 15 had suppressed anger, compared with only two of 13 persons with normal blood pressures. The patients with high blood pressure also showed increased anxiety and depression.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a really beautiful niece but she has a birthmark on her face. Is there some safe way to have it removed? I wouldn't want to make the condition any worse. — Edith, Montreal

Dear Edith: Some plastic surgeons and dermatologists report they have had good results in removing birthmarks by using an argon laser. Dr. Ronald Riefkohl of the Duke University Medical Center says that about 70 percent of patients get good to excellent results. The remaining 30 percent have marks that are too deeply embedded in the skin to be affected by the laser beam. The procedure is done on an outpatient basis, under local anesthetic, and each treatment takes about 30 to 45 minutes, depending on the size of the mark.

Fortunately, the argon laser treatment works best on removing marks from the face and neck, where they are most visible. About five percent of patients have some scarring depending on the individual's skin and the follow-up care that is used on the treated area following the procedure.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard that some communities are trying to make it the law for children to wear seatbelts. I'm not against seatbelts but it seems to me there are a lot more important things to worry about. As a doctor, wouldn't you agree? — Sam, Toledo, Ohio

Dear Sam: As a doctor, I am aware that automobile accidents are the leading cause of accidental deaths in young children in the United States. A 10-year review of almost 40,000 children up to 4 years of age who were involved in motor vehicle accidents showed that about 150 died. What is most significant is the effect of wearing a seatbelt in determining death or survival.

Among the children who were wearing seatbelts, an average of one in 3,150 was killed; of those not wearing seatbelts, an average of one in 227 was killed.

I would agree that there also are other things to worry about, but the value of seatbelts in saving lives should have some priority in our health planning.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am a career woman, 35 years of age, who would now like to start a family. What are the chances of my having a baby with a birth defect, particularly Down's Syndrome? — Martha, Salt Lake City

Dear Martha: My answer must of course be based on your age alone, since I know nothing about your family history or any specific health risks. Statistically, 5.6 women out of every 1,000 who are 35 years of age give birth to children with some abnormality; the range of Down's Syndrome children per 1,000 women 35 years of age is 2.5 to 3.9.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am a long distance runner and I seem to have developed runner's anemia. How will this affect my health and my running? — Jay, Boston, Mass.

Dear Jay: According to Rudolph H. Dressendorfer, Ph.D. from University of California, your performance in running should not be significantly affected. No special treatment is required for this type of anemia. The red blood cell levels seem to return to their previous levels as soon as the unusual exertion levels are reduced.

Gloria Gilbert, right, the new Miss Texas, is congratulated by Terri Eoff, Miss Texas 1980, left, and Sheri Ryman, the outgoing Miss Texas 1980. Miss Palo Pinto County 1982 won the

Three-foot tall buddy aids Miss Texas win

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The new Miss Texas for 1982, Gloria Gilbert, will be chaperoned by a buck-toothed, three-foot-tall cowboy when she competes for the Miss America title in September.

She's a ventriloquist. He's her dummy. Miss Gilbert — with the help of her puppet, Homer — outranked nine other finalists Saturday night to capture the crown and a berth in the Miss America pageant.

The 20-year-old Miss Palo Pinto County said she was surprised she won.

"I actually didn't think I had placed," Miss Gilbert said during her first news conference Sunday. "I was so happy for the other girls it took me a minute to realize that they had called out Palo Pinto County."

First runner-up was Belinda Moreland, Miss Greenville; second runner-up was Dana Rogers, Miss Haltom-Richland Area; third runner-up was Kerri Coats, Miss Lubbock; and fourth runner-up was Cindy Green, Miss Hurst-Euless-Bedford.

The new Miss Texas is a student at Texas Christian University, majoring in radio, television, and film.

Miss Gilbert said she became interested in ventriloquism at age 6 when she saw puppeteer Shari Lewis. Two years later, she began competing in beauty pageants using ventriloquism as her talent.

For her win in the Miss Texas pageant, Miss Gilbert received a one-year scholarship at North Texas State University, a $1,000 fashion award, the use of a car for a year, a color television, jewelry and a $500 scholarship.

One hundred horses approved for sale

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — One hundred regal-bred quarter horse yearlings have been approved for the second annual Ruidoso Super Select Sale here at 7:15 p.m. Aug. 29 in the Ruidoso Downs Chaparral Convention Center here.

Sisters and brothers to six champions, including two-time world champion Dash For Cash, are among those catalogued for the sale. Also on the bid list are yearlings from $100,000 producing mares.

"Once again, we're going to offer the finest quarter horse yearlings available in one night of bidding," said Richard Thompson, president and general manager of the sale.

"The finest producing families are included in this year's catalogue, and precise evaluations (by horseman Jerry Wells) confirm the excellent quality of stock available," Thompson said.

In the inaugural mixed sale last year, 54 yearlings passed under the gavel for an average of $63,685, which is four times higher than any other sale's average highest average selling price for yearlings of any stallion. A share in Dash For Cash now is worth $750,000. Dash For Cash will have 11 yearlings in the sale.

This year's Super Select Sale has been expanded to two dates. Yearlings will be offered in the Aug. 29 sale at Ruidoso, while broodmares, weanlings and stallion shares will be sold Oct. 16 at Jerry Wells Ranch near Purcell.

Man finds easy, legal form of drug abuse

HOUSTON (AP) — David Patrick calls himself a "legal" drug abuser.

For years, Patrick said, his doctors prescribed all the drugs he needed and his insurance picked up the tab.

"It's so damned easy to get the stuff," said Patrick, a 26-year-old dental technician. "People spend more time on you when you're cashing a check than most doctors do giving you a prescription. The doctors can't get the police to arrest me because they're calling in the prescriptions for me."

Three years ago, Patrick asked doctors for a prescription to ease the pain caused by a chronic disease and a string of medical ailments.

He said he managed to obtain prescriptions with incredible ease from more than 50 Houston doctors — many who never examined him.

The clean-cut, bespectacled Patrick is suffering from Crohn's Disease, an ailment that forces him to use prescription medication to quiet his small intestine. He is hooked on Lomotil, a synthetic drug similar to a narcotic that in large amounts would dangerously block the bowels of a healthy person.

Patrick said his dependency on Lomotil slowly developed from his temporary addiction to painkillers he received to reduce the discomfort from other unrelated medical problems.

Patrick said he has undergone surgery for appendicitis, kidney stones and urethral strictures.

"After a while, even if I just got depressed or something got me down, I'd go call a doctor. I knew I could do it. I knew how easy it was," he said. "I wanted to float about the room, read my book and forget about the pain. I was absolutely not going to hurt anymore."

After each illness he withdrew from the medication, only to be hit with a new ailment, he said. In 1980, Crohn's Disease began to act up and his doctor prescribed a daily dose of three to five Lomotil.

Patrick admits he used many "tricks" to get the prescriptions, bypassing the loopholes designed by the medical community to prevent drug misuse.

He said he learned that doctors on call for others are unfamiliar with the patients and medical records of their colleagues and often are careless when writing prescriptions. Many also failed to fill in the number of refills allowed, so Patrick said he did it for them.

He also conned pharmacists by taking prescriptions to different drug stores and gaining sympathy from those who bent the rules slightly to accommodate him.

Patrick said he once threw an empty prescription bottle into his backyard and let his puppy play with it so he could take the mangled bottle to the pharmacist and get it refilled.

"I took it into a pharmacy and said, 'You're not going to believe this.' He refilled it," Patrick said.

Big fake feet start legend that won't stop

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

TOLEDO, Wash. — This is one of the little lumber towns near the base of Mount St. Helens. It's a friendly place. There's fishing and hunting in the rivers and forests nearby, and people here have the rugged look of the outdoors to them. Many of the town's 630 residents are loggers, and a few still mine for gold in the surrounding wilderness.

There are many in town who don't believe the stories told about the giant ape-man creatures said to inhabit the forbidding slopes of the volcano that towers over the region. But even they seem to enjoy the legend. It is a kind of charming myth that makes Toledo something more than just another little town.

To some, however, Bigfoot is more than pleasant fantasy. There are a few residents who have told how they have encountered Bigfoot in the wilds. Some have offered evidence in photographs of questionable authenticity and books of dubious fact. A few of them have made some money from the legend, and this has caused some bitterness that slightly tarnishes the myth.

For years, two of the town's best-known residents have feuded openly about Bigfoot. Rant Mullens and Ray Wallace originally had no quarrel about the existence of Bigfoot himself. Wallace was simply one of those who had managed to profit from the legend, and Mullens wasn't. It was Mullens' view that Wallace had cheated him out of some money, and Wallace made it known to all in town that he feared Mullens was eventually going to shoot him over the disputed debt.

Mullens still chuckles about this as he tells his side of the story. At the age of 86, he has trouble moving around and he is a bitter man in many ways. But the thought of Wallace worrying about Mullens coming after him with a gun brings a smile to the old man's face. The local sheriff even stopped him in the middle of town once and searched him for a weapon, obviously believing in the gunfight some were predicting.

Instead of shooting Wallace, however, Mullens settled on a less violent revenge. The Bigfoot legend was nothing but a hoax, he declared. In fact, he had started it himself more than half a century earlier in his younger days as a forest ranger.

One day he got the idea to carve some enormous feet out of some slabs of wood. Then a couple of friends took the feet around with them in Washington and California, leaving phony tracks that people credited to Bigfoot. Mullens told this story first to a local newspaper, then again on national television after CBS News had learned about it and judged it worthy of a broader audience.

He had decided it was time to tell the truth about Bigfoot because it wasn't fair that some people were getting rich by deceiving the public, he declared. For Mullens, it was a moment of victory. But it didn't last for long. What Mullens soon came to realize was that most people didn't realize what that most people didn't really seem to care if Bigfoot was a hoax or not. It was a legend that was easier begun than ended.

As for Wallace, he was promoting Bigfoot with greater enthusiasm than ever. Of all the local storytellers, he was the unchallenged king. He had personally run into Bigfoot on more than 2,000 occasions during the years, he contended. He had some film of a creature he identified as Bigfoot, and it wasn't true as some people charged that it was either his son or another local resident named Lurch Slumsky dressed up in a bearskin, he said.

Recently, while Mullens recounted his story of the hoax and told again of his personal misfortunes, he seemed more of the loser than the winner in the latest battle. Wallace, meanwhile, was holding forth in the local tavern on one of his many Bigfoot adventures.

A full-grown Bigfoot can throw a rock half the size of a shot put and kill a deer at 300 to 500 feet, he was saying. One time he had a camera with him and could have taken a great picture of Bigfoot, he added.

DEATHS

'Sonny' Ingram

ANDREWS — Services for L.T. "Sonny" Ingram, 38, of Andrews and formerly of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Thursday at the First Baptist Church in Andrews. Officiating will be the Rev. Keith Wiseman, pastor of the Methodist Church in Big Spring, and assisting will be the Rev. H.A. Hanks, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Andrews. Burial will follow in Andrews Cemetery under the direction of Singleton Funeral Home of Andrews.

Ingram died Saturday from injuries suffered in a motorcycle accident 11 miles southwest of Andrews.

Ingram was born April 16, 1944, in Pecos and was raised in Midland. He married Kaye Martin on Oct. 9, 1971 in Midland and moved to Andrews in 1980. At the time of his death Ingram was the owner of Casa Chevrolet Company in Andrews. He was also a member of the Masonic Lodge and the Shriners.

OSHA head soft on many regulations

WASHINGTON (AP) — During his first weeks on the job as President Reagan's job safety chief, Thorne G. Auchter ordered his agency's field offices to stop distributing 50,000 pamphlets describing the dangers of inhaling cotton dust fibers.

Auchter said the picture on the cover of the pamphlet, showing a suffering victim of brown lung disease, made a biased statement on the still-unresolved issue of whether there is a direct link between inhalation of cotton dust fibers by mill workers and contraction of byssinosis, a disabling respiratory disease.

Seventeen months have elapsed since Auchter's seeming act of censorship stunned the labor establishment. Today, he remains one of the Reagan administration's most controversial figures.

Auchter, 37, is a pragmatist, a little-known Florida building contractor recruited by President Reagan to run the Occupational Health and Safety Administration. He is an unemotional manager whose style and priorities are in stark contrast to those of Eula Bingham, the toxicologist who headed OSHA during the Carter administration.

"YOU'RE NOT going to see OSHA write a citation because the drinking cups are on the ground," Auchter said in an interview. "OSHA was interested in high numbers. We were in places we had no business being in — traditional Mom-and-Pop operations, if you will."

In Thorne G. Auchter's America, you measure job safety by the quality — rather than the quantity — of workplace inspections.

You subscribe to the notion that decision-making at OSHA must be governed by sound management principles, and that emotional hand-wringing is best left to the critics.

Substance takes precedence over symbolism. In an era when the Labor Department boasts of helping Reagan get government "off the backs of the people," Auchter's agency issued a statement on "regulatory relief" stating that targeting of workplace inspections "will assure that OSHA's scarce compliance resources are efficiently allocated to firms and industries with serious health and safety problems."

Big labor doesn't see it that way. "The Reagan administration has made clear its determination to enfeeble the Occupational Safety and Health Act," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has asserted.

Dr. Bingham, who returned to the University of Cincinnati after her stint at OSHA, said in a speech to the AFL-CIO's Industrial Union Department that from February to November 1981, the number of job safety complaints brought by workers declined by 40 percent.

She said complaints have declined because "workers have no expectation of an investigation ever taking place."

She said her successor had brought a tougher managerial style to OSHA. "Yes, he manages not to enforce the act," she said. "He manages not to see any workers who have occupational diseases."

J.C. TURNER, president of the powerful union of operating engineers and head of the AFL-CIO executive council's job safety committee, declared, "We mean to defend the integrity of the law against those who would destroy it."

Auchter sticks to his guns. He means to lessen "the adversarial role" of OSHA in American business life. The impact of that policy on worker health and safety may not be known for some time.

The most recent government figures on the rate of injury or job-related illness showed a 10 percent decline in 1980 from the year before, the first decline in five years.

The decline occurred during the last year of Bingham's tenure at the job safety agency. Figures for 1981 have not been released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Midlanders register to vote until Oct. 3

Midlanders not yet registered to vote have until Oct. 3 to register to vote in the Nov. 2 general election, according to Janeice Buita, elections administrator for Midland County.

Currently, about 39,000 Midlanders are eligible to vote in the general election.

Citizens age 18 or older who wish to vote and who don't have their voter certificates or who have changed addresses since receiving their 1982-84 salmon-colored voter-registration cards may drop by Ms. Buita's office in the basement of the Midland County Courthouse or may telephone her at 682-9481, Extension 391, to register to vote.

Auchter defends his policies despite the carping. "I'm the man who has to make the decisions," he said, adding that he has a cordial working relationship with the health safety officers of many labor unions.

"You want to talk about an outfit that has as many factions as the Republican Party does or the Democratic Party does, certainly it's organized labor," he said. "They understand what I'm doing here and yet they choose not to relay that information for their own particular purposes."

Auchter asserted that the amount of money spent on workplace safety inspections "is no measure of effectiveness."

The overall OSHA budget was cut from roughly $196 million in fiscal 1981 to $192 million in fiscal 1982, but the agency is one of the few in government to get an increase in operational funds under the budget Reagan proposed for the new fiscal year starting Oct. 1. The agency's funds would rise to $206 million in fiscal 1983.

Whitewater rafting becomes popular sport, is now clogging rivers of Maine

By GLENN ADAMS
AP Writer

MILLINOCKET, Maine (AP) — A raft drifts into the current below the Ripogenus Dam in northern Maine's wilderness, bobbing toward the first rapids.

"If you don't hold on to the ropes, you'll be in the river," Tom Andrie, a guide, warns the eight novices in the craft. "They call this 'The Exterminator'."

Rough, but often a memorable introduction to a sport that has soared in popularity since 1977, the year after the log drives ended, opening some of the wildest and most scenic rivers to whitewater rafting.

BUT NOW THAT THE SPORT has caught on, Maine's rivers — once jammed with logs — are quickly becoming clogged with rafts.

That, plus the specter of dams that would tame the state's two most turbulent waterways, threaten to wipe out a new industry which, according to many state officials and outfitters, has grown to its limit and must be controlled.

WHITewater RAFTING has caught on in about 20 states. A year ago, when an estimated 15,000 people took on Maine's rapids in rafts, there were nine licensed outfitters in the state, said Jim Ernst of Maine Whitewater Inc., one of the 16 outfitting companies now licensed in the state.

This year, Ernst expects 22,000 people to take to the rapids.

THE MAINE LEGISLATURE, with prodding from the Whitewater Outfitters Association of Maine, considered a moratorium on new licenses until a study on the industry is completed next year. The freeze was rejected, but the Legislature agreed to authorize a study.

However, an outfitters association in Maine is regulating the number of rafts each member outfitter can put into the river in a day.

"It's to prevent overuse of the rivers," said Ernst. "This would destroy it for everyone."

DEAR ABBY

Wife's sex budget makes mate question balance

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is going to be a "first" for you. Vera (not her real name) and I have been happily married for nearly two years. Vera is 24 and I'm 33, and we enjoy a healthy, normal sex life.

About six months ago she asked me if I would mind "paying her" every time she had sex with me. Now, don't get me wrong, Vera is a nice girl from off a farm, and she really doesn't need the money because she works and so do I. She doesn't ask for much — just a few dollars. She says it makes her feel like a "wicked" woman and that "turns her on," so I go along with her little game.

I suppose I shouldn't complain because this hasn't hurt our sex relationship. If anything, it's improved it. If I don't have the cash, she lets me charge it. She won't take a check. She wants to see the cash.

Have you ever heard of anything like this before? Do you think Vera is bonkers? Or am I, for going along with it? — CASH "CUSTOMER" IN CANADA

DEAR "CUSTOMER": About sex: Anything that is agreeable between two consenting adults, done privately and hurts no one, is OK.

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago you had something in your column about chastity belts. I believe you said that they were coming back in style. I would very much appreciate it if you would give me some information on where I might get one. According to what I read in the newspapers, this town has become the rape capital of the United States. Thank you. — NEEDS PROTECTION IN RICHMOND, VA.

DEAR NEEDS: A woman threatened with rape should be more concerned about her life than her chastity. Call your local rape crisis center or police department and find out what courses are available for women who need to learn how to protect themselves against rape. It will be well worth your time.

DEAR ABBY: When I was divorced 15 years ago, I gave my sterling silver tea set to my sister to use until I remarried. She lived in Iowa and I lived in Missouri.

Well, three years ago I remarried and asked my sister to return my silver tea set. She said, "I have grown to love it so much, I just can't part with it." I could not believe she was serious, but shortly after that she sent me a cheap silver-plated tea set to replace the sterling silver set that belonged to me! I returned the silver-plated set and told her she could keep it — I wanted my own set back!

Would you believe she ignored my request? I wrote to her four times and called her at least a half-dozen times asking her to return my set, but she still has it. This has ruined our relationship and I am sick over it. I still want my set back.

Last year my sister moved to California and took my set with her. What can I do? I consulted a lawyer and he told me I could sue her, but I would have to go to California and hire a California lawyer to handle the case. I really can't afford to go to California to sue her, but if that's the only way to get my set back, I guess I'll have to do it and save somewhere else.

What would you do if you were in my place? — SICK OF FIGHTING

DEAR SICK: Your sister obviously covets your tea set more than she values your friendship. If I were you, I'd write the loss off and forget it.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Defrost the refrigerator

HELOISE:

Please help your readers by giving instructions on defrosting a refrigerator.

You would be amazed by the number of people who don't know how. We had to pay a $100 repair bill when one of our renters used an ice pick. — M.L.L.

Defrosting a freezer can be a frustrating job, to say the least, but no matter how impatient you get, never use a sharp object to hurry it along.

As Mrs. L. can attest, you're only hurting yourself, moneywise, so take it easy.

Line the top shelves with newspapers to absorb the drips, then turn the freezer off for a while and let that ice loosen up.

Using a hair blow dryer on high heat speeds up the process, but be careful using electrical appliances around water. Make sure the area around you (and your feet) is dry.

If you don't have a hair dryer, putting pans of hot water in the freezer will help.

Once you've removed the ice (carefully using a scraper or pancake turner, so you don't scratch the metal — no sharp objects), wipe down the ice compartment or freezer and dry it. Then, spray the metal parts with a vegetable spray. This will make the next defrosting chore much easier, as the ice won't be so unyielding.

Keep cool! — Heloise

SOFT MARSHMALLOWS

Dear Heloise: I've tried for years to keep marshmallows soft in the package so they wouldn't become hard and unusable.

One day my smart husband saw my dilemma and calmly suggested I put a slice of fresh bread in the package, seal it tight, and leave it a day or two.

Soft marshmallows! — H. N. Fink

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: While I was watching TV, a commercial came on advertising a refrigerator that beeps when the door is left open or it gets too warm inside — even beeps when you need to clean underneath.

What next? TVs, couches and beds that beep when you haven't dusted under them?

I'm curious to know how we're going to get any sleep with all that beeping going on! — Niki Wiggington

Just be thankful it's not a siren... — Heloise

NO STICK UPS

Dear Heloise: When you buy greeting cards by the box, or several cards ahead of time, if you put a piece of waxed paper under the flaps of the envelopes, they won't be sealed when you are ready to use them.

Humidity sometimes causes them to stick and there's nothing more useless than a sealed envelope with nothing in it! — June

GIANT ICE CUBES

Dear Heloise: My husband works outdoors and during the summer months he takes along a gallon picnic jug of ice water everyday.

He was always telling me the two trays of ice cubes I put in the jug melted too fast. So I decided to make ice cubes in the pound margarine tubs and whipped topping containers.

My husband said the giant ice cubes worked great. — Jeanne M.

Birds in the hand worth a lot to owner of aviary

By ROBERT L. WILLIAMS

KINGS MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — When Mark Hoffman was still in school he bought a parrot, later tired of it, and sold it. A short time later he bought two more, decided to advertise the birds for sale, and the response was so great that he rushed out and bought several more birds simply to fill orders that kept pouring in.

The simple adventure was to determine Hoffman's career, for from that time his entire life has centered largely around birds. His aviary in Kings Mountain is now stocked with 4,000 birds from Mexico, Brazil, Paraguay and other Latin American countries.

His toucans, macaws, cockatoos, conures, parrots, finches and other ordinary and rare birds can be bought at prices ranging from $12.50 for a finch or parakeet up to $4,750 for a tame Hyacinth Macaw. The untamed version of the same bird sells for $3,600.

The birds are all closely segregated according to species and all are protected against chills, winds, diseases and other types of health hazards. All are housed in 9,000 square feet of sanitary cages that spread over the 10-acre establishment on Route 1, two miles outside Kings Mountain.

"I think we're the largest business of our type between Maine and Florida on the East Coast," Hoffman said, "and between here and California, I know of two places that have more space and a few more birds but none with a greater variety than we have here."

Hoffman, who is 27, married and the father of two boys, has been in the bird business for slightly more than four years. At present his sales are about one-fourth retail and three-fourths wholesale.

In addition to stocking and selling birds, Hoffman ships to pet shops and retailers in all states of the Union except Alaska. Before shipment, all birds larger than a cockatiel are surgically sexed by Hoffman to determine which sex the bird is, whether fully mature, and whether the bird is fully able to be used for breeding.

Birds are rather delicate creatures, and Hoffman takes great care to prevent disease outbreaks. He says that at no time since he has been in the business has there been a real threat to his stock.

"Newcastle disease, an acute viral infection characterized by pneumonia, has hit the general area previously," he says, "but we were untouched."

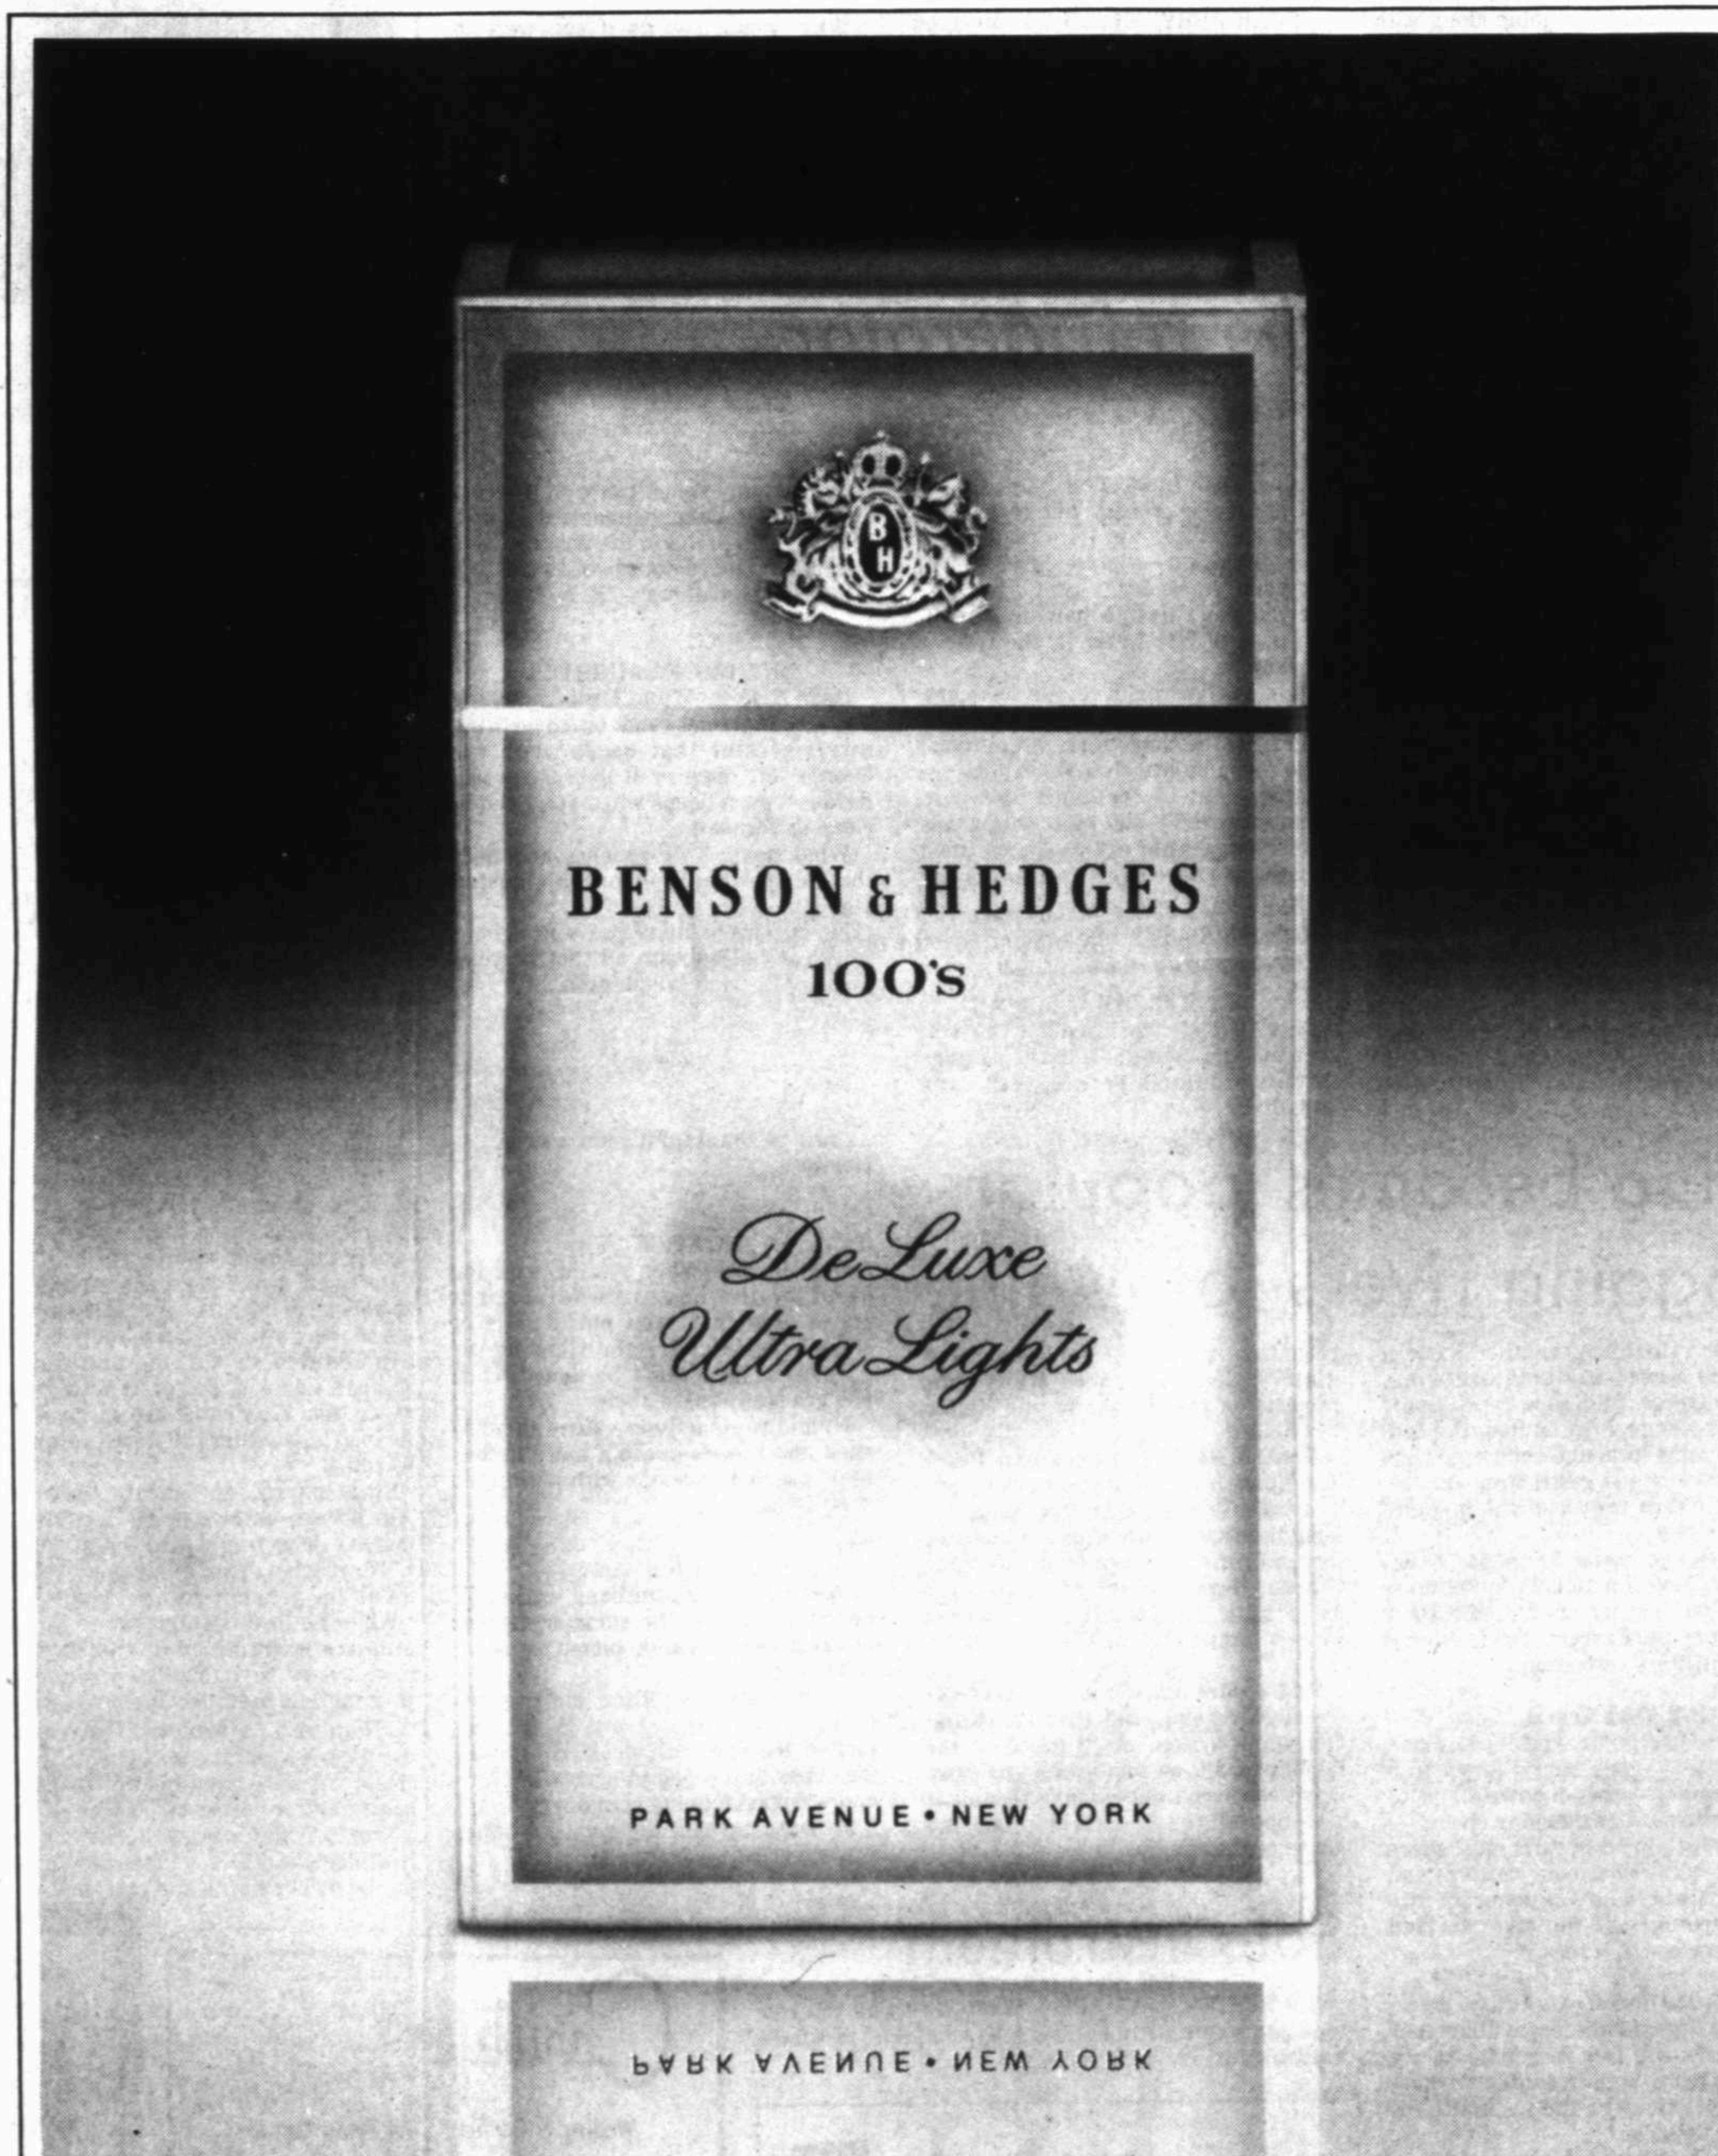

When he buys a shipment of birds, as much as $37,000 worth at one clip, the birds are quarantined at the shipping point. Then when they arrive at Hoffman's aviary, he immediately quarantines the birds and will not sell any of the stock until he is certain the birds are disease-free.

"If there is a problem," he says, "the quarantine remains in effect until we have solved the difficulty. The entire building housing the birds will be closed off until good health conditions are restored. An outbreak of Newcastle, psittacosis, or herpes could wipe out my entire stock."

The Hoffman Aviary stocks 180 species of birds, some tame, others untamed. Hoffman describes a tame bird as one that can perhaps talk, one that will sit on the owner's arm, and one that will accept and return affection.

Gandhi backer favored in election

By STUART AUERBACH

NEW DELHI, India — India is expected to elect one of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's most faithful supporters as president today amid opposition charges that Gandhi has politicized the independent character of the job of head of state.

Former Home Minister Zail Singh is the overwhelming favorite to win the presidency in an indirect election by members of India's state assemblies and national parliament, which are dominated by Gandhi's Congress-I Party.

He is being opposed by a former supreme court judge, H.R. Khanna, who entered the race after opposition leaders failed to persuade Gandhi to pick a consensus candidate.

While India's president is largely a ceremonial figure, he is the commander in chief of the military forces and the glue that holds the country together during times of political instability. The president, for instance, chooses the person to form a new government after a parliamentary no-confidence vote, and thus is in a position to influence the future course of the country.

Traditionally, the president has been a man of stature who has remained above party politics.

Although Singh is a strong Gandhi partisan, he has promised to be non-partisan if elected. "I will not permit the opposition or the Congress-I to establish an office in the Rashtrapathi Bhavan," Singh said, referring to the imposing red sandstone president's house originally built for the British viceroy.

Singh, 66, is considered by many to be an inept political figure because he continually puts his foot in his mouth. This spring, for instance, he praised Adolf Hitler in a parliamentary speech that embarrassed other Gandhi aides so much that they had his remarks expunged.

He appears to have been picked for president by Gandhi because of his loyalty to her, her party and her family.

"If my leader had said I should pick up a broom and be a sweeper, I would have done that," he said in a statement that revealed his devotion to Gandhi, since being a sweeper is considered demeaning in India.

The Indian Express, a leading opposition newspaper, compared him in an editorial to "Caligula's horse," and said his main qualification for being India's seventh president is "his total and complete loyalty to the prime minister."

His nomination, however, won great support from among India's small but prominent Sikh religious minority. If he wins as expected, Singh will be the first Sikh to be president.

Singh would succeed N. Sanjiva Reddy, who in the last months of a five-year term that expires July 25 has antagonized Gandhi by his outspoken criticism of growing corruption in Indian life.

Twenty-year-old U.S. private found dead in submerged tank

MANNHEIM, West Germany (AP) — A 20-year-old U.S. Army private who stole an ammunition-laden tank and went on a rampage through downtown Mannheim was found drowned inside the tank after it plunged into the nearby Neckar River, police said.

The soldier, whose identity was withheld pending notification of his family, was trapped in the 60-ton tank after it fell from a bridge Saturday and came to rest bottom up in 16 feet of water.

West German rescue teams found his body Sunday when they pulled out the M-60 tank with a barge crane.

Army officials refused to speculate on the motive for the rampage, which injured four people and left the U.S. Army with a bill for property damages estimated by Mannheim police at $810,000. The Army said it would pay.

The soldier, stationed with the 8th Infantry Division Battalion attached to the U.S. Army's 3rd Brigade, stole the tank from a base about six miles outside Mannheim after passing through a security check dressed in full uniform Saturday afternoon, Army officials said.

They said the tank was carrying "its normal combat ammunition load" but that this presented "no danger" since firing mechanisms are kept separate while the tanks are on the base.

The Army said the tank damaged eight cars, a trolley, three light posts and various sidewalks as it careened through Mannheim. But local police said residents have reported 14 cars damaged, 11 of them beyond repair.

The tank plunged into the river after being trapped on the bridge by convoys of U.S. military police at both ends. Seeing himself cornered, the driver rotated the tank's turret a few times, witnesses said, before aiming his guns at the military police.

He then put the tank into reverse, smashed through the bridge's railings and slammed into the river.

Soviet defense minister accuses U.S. of blocking talks

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov today accused the United States of blocking progress in U.S.-Soviet talks on reducing medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe.

He also charged that the Reagan administration was coordinating a "trade, credit and scientific-technological war" against the "socialist community" in an effort to gain military superiority over the Soviet Union.

This was an apparent reference to President Reagan's credit and technology squeeze aimed at the Soviet Union to protest martial law rule in Poland.

"One gets the impression that the United States is not going to make constructive steps at the talks (in Geneva)...in response to the Soviet Union's initiatives," Ustinov wrote in the Communist Party daily Pravda.

"It does not go any further than its notorious zero option."

President Reagan has proposed scrapping plans to station 572 U.S. Pershing II and Cruise missiles in Western Europe if the Soviets agree to dismantle their force of more than 200 new SS-20s — each with a triple nuclear warhead — already targeted on NATO countries.

Ustinov repeated Moscow's claim that the "zero option" was designed to force "unilateral disarmament" on the Soviet Union, while excluding from the talks U.S. "forward based systems" — nuclear-armed aircraft and submarine-based missiles — as well as French and British nuclear armaments.

The U.S. proposal was designed to create "an impasse" at the Geneva talks "with a view to delaying them indefinitely" so that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization could go ahead with its missile modernization starting next year, the Soviet defense minister asserted.

Ustinov branded as "deliberate and malicious disinformation" U.S. claims based on satellite surveillance that the Soviets were continuing to deploy SS-20s in the western Soviet Union in violation of its unilateral moratorium declared this spring.

"The Soviet Union keeps its word. It doesn't deploy medium-range missiles in the European part of the country. On the contrary, it is reducing them," Ustinov wrote.

U.S. withholding key torpedo technology from Japan

TOKYO (AP) — The United States, fearing possible leaks to the Soviet Union, will withhold key technology for advanced torpedoes to be produced under license by a Japanese manufacturer, a leading Japanese newspaper reported today.

The mass-circulation Asahi Shimbun said Mitsubishi Heavy Industries will import parts for MK46 torpedoes from the U.S. manufacturer, Honeywell, Inc.

But the report said secret homing devices and fuses will be delivered in sealed "black boxes" in keeping with a U.S. government policy designed to prevent possible leaks of high technology to the Soviet Union.

The U.S. Navy has advised Japan's Defense Agency that the key technology will be withheld from Mitsubishi until deployment of a successor torpedo, now under development, the paper said. It reported the Defense Agency agreed to the proposal.

MK46 torpedoes, principally used to attack submarines, are scheduled to be mounted on the Maritime Self-Defense Force's P-3C aircraft, the paper said.

Professor learns first hand real cause of housing problems

By Richard B. Mancke
Hearst Feature Service

After an 18-month search and inspecting at least 25 houses, my wife and I just purchased a 100-year-old home. Our difficulties in finding the "right" house at the "right" price are instructive about the real causes of the housing market's current depression.

The almost total demise of the housing market is both a principal cause as well as a consequence of our current economic doldrums. Housing starts have plummeted from well over 1 million in a normal year to less than 400,000 and builders as well as real estate agents and condominium converters are falling with alarming frequency.

In addition, many Americans — who learned during the 1970s that the combined effects of low mortgage rates and rapidly rising home prices made housing the one "can't miss" investment — are suddenly discovering that home ownership has become a financial albatross.

The most severe difficulties are being suffered by those who must sell their homes and who discover that they cannot do so at a "reasonable" price. Many who bought homes in the late 1970s are discovering they cannot even sell their houses at prices high enough to pay off their mortgages.

It is commonplace to put virtually all the blame for the slowdown in housing sales on high mortgage rates. After all, at an 18 percent rate, the monthly interest charges alone on a $50,000 note are $750. Even with any tax savings most of us would regard this as a tidy bit of change. It seems even higher when we remember that there are many other costs of home ownership and that a mere $50,000 or $60,000 no longer buys a very impressive home.

By themselves, high interest rates have not caused the huge decline in housing purchases. Indeed, if housing prices were rising at a rate higher than mortgage rates, we would all find it profitable to buy a house by borrowing as much as we could now and paying off our loan when we sell the house later.

Of course, this is exactly what did happen during the 1970s when nearly all who resold a house reaped large profits. Thus, the housing market's present problem is not high interest rates. It is because housing prices are no longer rising nearly as fast as interest rates.

A major part of the explanation for the sudden slowdown (indeed, reversal) in the rise of housing prices is the same explanation as why other goods, such as oil, also have seen their prices stabilize and then fall. The price rises were so large for such goods that they became much more expensive than their substitutes. In the case of oil the substitutes were largely a mix of greater use of coal and price-induced energy conservation.

In the case of housing there has also been some "conservation" — more living at home, doubling up and living in "sub-standard" housing. In addition, there has been a growing awareness that one can rent an apartment at much lower cost, even after taxes, than buying equivalent housing. My family's experiences confirm that the sharply lower costs of renting vs. home ownership is a relatively recent phenomenon.

In 1972 we bought a duplex as a rental property. At that time owners of rental property could expect to receive sufficient rents to give them a rate of return on the total investment that was significantly higher than the interest rate charged by the bank.

In contrast in 1982, when we looked at several similar rental properties, we discovered that the rents we would receive on even the most favorably priced offerings would yield us a rate of return on the total investment that was less than two-thirds the interest rate charged by the bank.

Our experiences, which are typical, show that as housing prices soared during the 1970s, renting has become much cheaper than home ownership. Until there is a movement toward greater parity in the cost of home ownership vs. the cost of renting, the housing market will stay in the doldrums. For this to happen either one or both of two things must occur: housing prices must fall significantly below current inflation-adjusted levels and/or rental costs must rise.

Dan Lundberg: Oracle of the gas pump

By STEVE LARUE
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Suddenly, Dan Lundberg pumps two pudgy fists in front of his rumpled white shirt, lifts a shoe about two inches from the floor, and slightly swivels his great hips.

The scene is the bunker-like headquarters of Lundberg Survey Inc. in suburban North Hollywood. Lundberg, the oracle of gasoline prices and supplies, frugs to the distant accompaniment of a computer, hissing as it massages scraps of data from around the world into surveys the energy world reads.

In the middle of discussing the oil glut, Lundberg has assumed the role of a market factor, illustrating by the second-hand disco performance the enthusiasm with which tank farm owners, who partly created the glut by draining reserves, will rebuild them now that gasoline prices are rising again.

As in his bi-weekly Lundberg Letter, the bear-like guru of gasoline has managed to infuse color and excitement into the arcane of petroleum price and supply, along with trend information no one else can supply so accurately and so soon.

Economists may seek refuge in abstractions to describe what's happening at the gasoline pump. Lundberg dances, if that's what it takes to make his point. Mostly, he says things like: "The leavening element are these private brands; they're smarter than striped-a-baboons."

A former novelist, sailor, foreign correspondent, and television talk show host, Lundberg, 69, has been the fount of much of the public's information about gasoline since being credited with accurately predicting "the days of lines and hoses" during the fuel shortage of 1979.

"It was three months before the (federal) Department of Energy knew what was happening," he agrees affably. "We projected that it was upon us."

With his shock of white hair, Kentucky colonel beard, and Wagnerian voice, Lundberg has been an easy subject for caricature, and he complains that "up close" personal profiles have amounted to little more than "another view of a horse's a—."

He says: "I am so vulnerable to screw-ups. If some reporter sees my fly open in a 40-minute interview, he writes, 'Lundberg has been known to travel with his fly open.'"

Lundberg doesn't dabble. He appears so vitally inspired by whatever topic is on his plate that he will discuss it until he literally is out of breath, and will enlist any means to communicate what he has to say.

The son of a concert violinist, he appears to have a voracious intellectual appetite which has consumed, among other careers, writing a successful 1941 novel, The River Rat; sailing around the world in the mid-1960s on a ketch with a piano bolted to its deck for his pianist daughter, Trilby; service as a foreign correspondent in Mexico during World War II, and producing an album of a comic opera in Latin.

His five children, all born in Mexico, appear to have inherited this appetite.

Conversation over a leisurely lunch one recent Saturday drifted from Latin American oil deposits to a comic ending to a violin concerto (which Lundberg performed vocally) to a discussion about whether a common Spanish expression in Latin America is also used in Mexico.

Around the table were son Jan Lundberg, the company's expert on alternate fuels; his wife, Xenia, an energy reporter; Trilby Lundberg, concert pianist and editor of the letter; and German Chacin, former spokesman for the oil minister of Venezuela and now editor of Energy Detente, the company's bi-weekly newsletter dealing with hemispheric energy issues. Lundberg's wife, Mesa, is the firm's attorney.

"I was thinking to myself, 'Who isn't my child there?'" Lundberg mused. "They all are, pretty much."

The barbed wire and cyclone fencing guarding the building, a former medical office, are not to protect energy secrets so much as to fend off burglars who believe doctors still store drugs in the building, Lundberg said.

There are no signs, save the hand-labeled "Lundberg" over an obscure doorbell at an outside gate.

A model of the 50-foot ketch, a library volume of the novel, and mementos of his TV period are stowed in Lundberg's wood-paneled office where, nowadays, he'd rather talk oil and gasoline.

The company began with one-man retail gasoline price surveys in the mid-1950s, he said, and since has ballooned to a staff of about 35, and about 250 surveyors who, every two weeks, report prices at 17,000 selected service stations across the country.

The jobs pay between $100 and $200 per month and are so prized that the "mice" often leave their jobs to close friends, and openings rarely occur.

Computers can do the fishing

HOUSTON — Engineers at Johnston-Macco Schlumberger have succeeded in developing an accurate computer model of a fishing string, enabling them to determine how changes in components and their positions affect the final results.

Fishing is the process of removing stuck pipe or other objects from a borehole. Until now, it had been more of an art than a science, based on experience, intuition and luck.

A major component of the fishing string is the jar, a device that provides upward and downward impact to free the stuck "fish." Jarring, basically, is the conversion of stored energy in the pipe, collars and booster of the typical fishing string into kinetic energy to slide the "fish" past the stuck point or to fracture rock that is trapping the fish.

The stored energy in the fishing string is easily calculated, explains Gordon L. McDaniel, Johnston-Macco Senior Developmental Engineer. Calculation of the conversion of this stored energy into kinetic energy is not easily done, however, he points out.

"Two fishing strings with equal stored energy but different configurations generally will not produce the same useful work," McDaniel observes. "The jar in one string might have too long a stroke that permits much of the kinetic energy of the pipe and collars to dissipate through wall rubbing before the impact reaches the fish."

Johnston-Macco researchers gauged calculations against experiments conducted in a test hole using a 267-foot test string containing: 3 1/2-inch, 9.5 pound per foot pipe; 5 1/4-inch by 2-inch by 60-inch collars, a Johnston-Mocco hydraulic jar and a load cell containing a 100,000 lbf capacity quartz force ring.

The fish was simulated using a retrievable bridge plug and the results of each test were recorded on a storage oscilloscope fed through wireline cable.

Following three years of testing calculations against forces observed in the downhole test cell, McDaniel's group was able to develop a mathematical model of farring forces that corresponds to conditions found down the test hole. He points out that no results are presented for fishing strings containing boosters, a device that boosts the "springiness" of the string.

McDaniel explains that a fishing string can be thought of as a stretched rod, and kinetic energy results from the release of the strain, in the form of "free contraction velocity."

"A valuable analytical tool for further investigation of fishing strings is now available, and in use," McDaniel notes.

State wins mineral rights case

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials have won a ruling from a state district judge that could bring "billions of dollars" to state coffers from mineral royalties on public school lands.

Attorney General Mark White said the ruling last week could have far-reaching effects.

"The precedent established by the decision in this lawsuit could involve billions of dollars in royalties to the state," said a release from White's office.

Judge Charles Mathews ruled the state retained its right to mineral royalties when it sold a Webb County tract in 1907. Mathews said the state and the Public Free School Fund should receive the royalties from coal and lignite at the 817-acre tract.

White said a ruling against the state would have meant the state and the school fund would have been deprived of mineral rights from 7.3 million acres of state land.

The Webb County tract brought in royalties of $344,613 during the past two years. White said it eventually could bring royalties of up to $3 million.

Lundberg said.

The key to the surveyors' work is a categorizing system Lundberg devised to keep track of 90 investment factors at service stations. It allows the computer, for example, to compare self-service sales at Chevron stations which do and do not offer lubrication service.

What emerges is an economic snapshot of what Lundberg likes to call "the texture of the market."

The system allowed Lundberg to report authoritatively that mechanical service bays were a casualty of the fuel shortage of the late 1970s, endangering "America's mass-transit system, the passenger car."

The information was vital in the 1950s and 1960s to oil companies with so much fuel they were passing out steak knives and antenna baubles to induce motorists to stop.

"I used to be with Tidewater Oil, and my sales manager would rush in to me and say, 'You know what, so-and-so has just done this or that. Why don't we match it?'" James McDonald, an oil industry consultant, remembered. "Lundberg had gone around and made a survey, and when you read it you knew better what was happening than what somebody told you."

The company surveys prices of a realm of petroleum products, from obscure solvents to gasoline in small local markets, to gasoline. Understandable, with effort, by non-professionals, the Lundberg Letter emerged in its present form six years ago.

Subscribers range from the oil companies themselves, to the Environmental Protection Agency, which uses the information to keep track of grade

Louisiana well finalized

HOUSTON (SWN) — Odyssey Energy, Inc., says the P.O. Landry No. 1 well in Iberia Parish, La. tested 707 barrels of condensate and 5.168 million cubic feet of gas per day through an 18/64-inch choke with 7,309 pounds per square inch flowing tubing pressure from 28 feet of perforations in the Planulina 2 sand.

Odyssey said the well also includes two other prospective pay sections which will probably be tested in subsequent wells on the lease block covering over 2,200 net acres in both Iberia and Vermilion Parishes.

Odyssey Energy acts as General Partner for its 81-III, Ltd., Gulf Coast, Ltd., and Gulf Coast Partners, Ltd., private exploratory partnerships which own a 12.5 percent interest in the prospect. Kilroy Company of Texas, the operator, owns a 37.5 percent interest. Texas Gas Exploration Corp. owns a 25 percent interest. Pend Oreille Oil & Gas Co., a 16.67 percent interest, and Milestone Petroleum Corp. an 8.33 percent interest in the prospect.

Mesa Co. tests 'Big hum' gas

AMARILLO — Mesa Petroleum Co. (NYSE) announced recently test results on the Brazos A-7 well No. 1 in Miocene "Big hum" trend offshore Texas.

The well, previously announced in September as having indicated gas pay, was tested from perforations between 13,062 and 13,104 feet and flowed at a daily rate of 9.9 million cubic feet of gas through a 16/64-inch opening with a flowing tubing pressure of 9,390 psi. Development drilling will continue through a 4-slot platform jacket presently installed over the discovery well. Development plans for this tract call for installation of several four-well platforms to expedite development and production.

switching — the illegal use of leaded gasoline in autos designed to use unleaded fuel.

Lundberg doesn't predict, he "projects" prices and events, based on current trends, though the difference is elusive to some experts. Not all of the projections have come true.

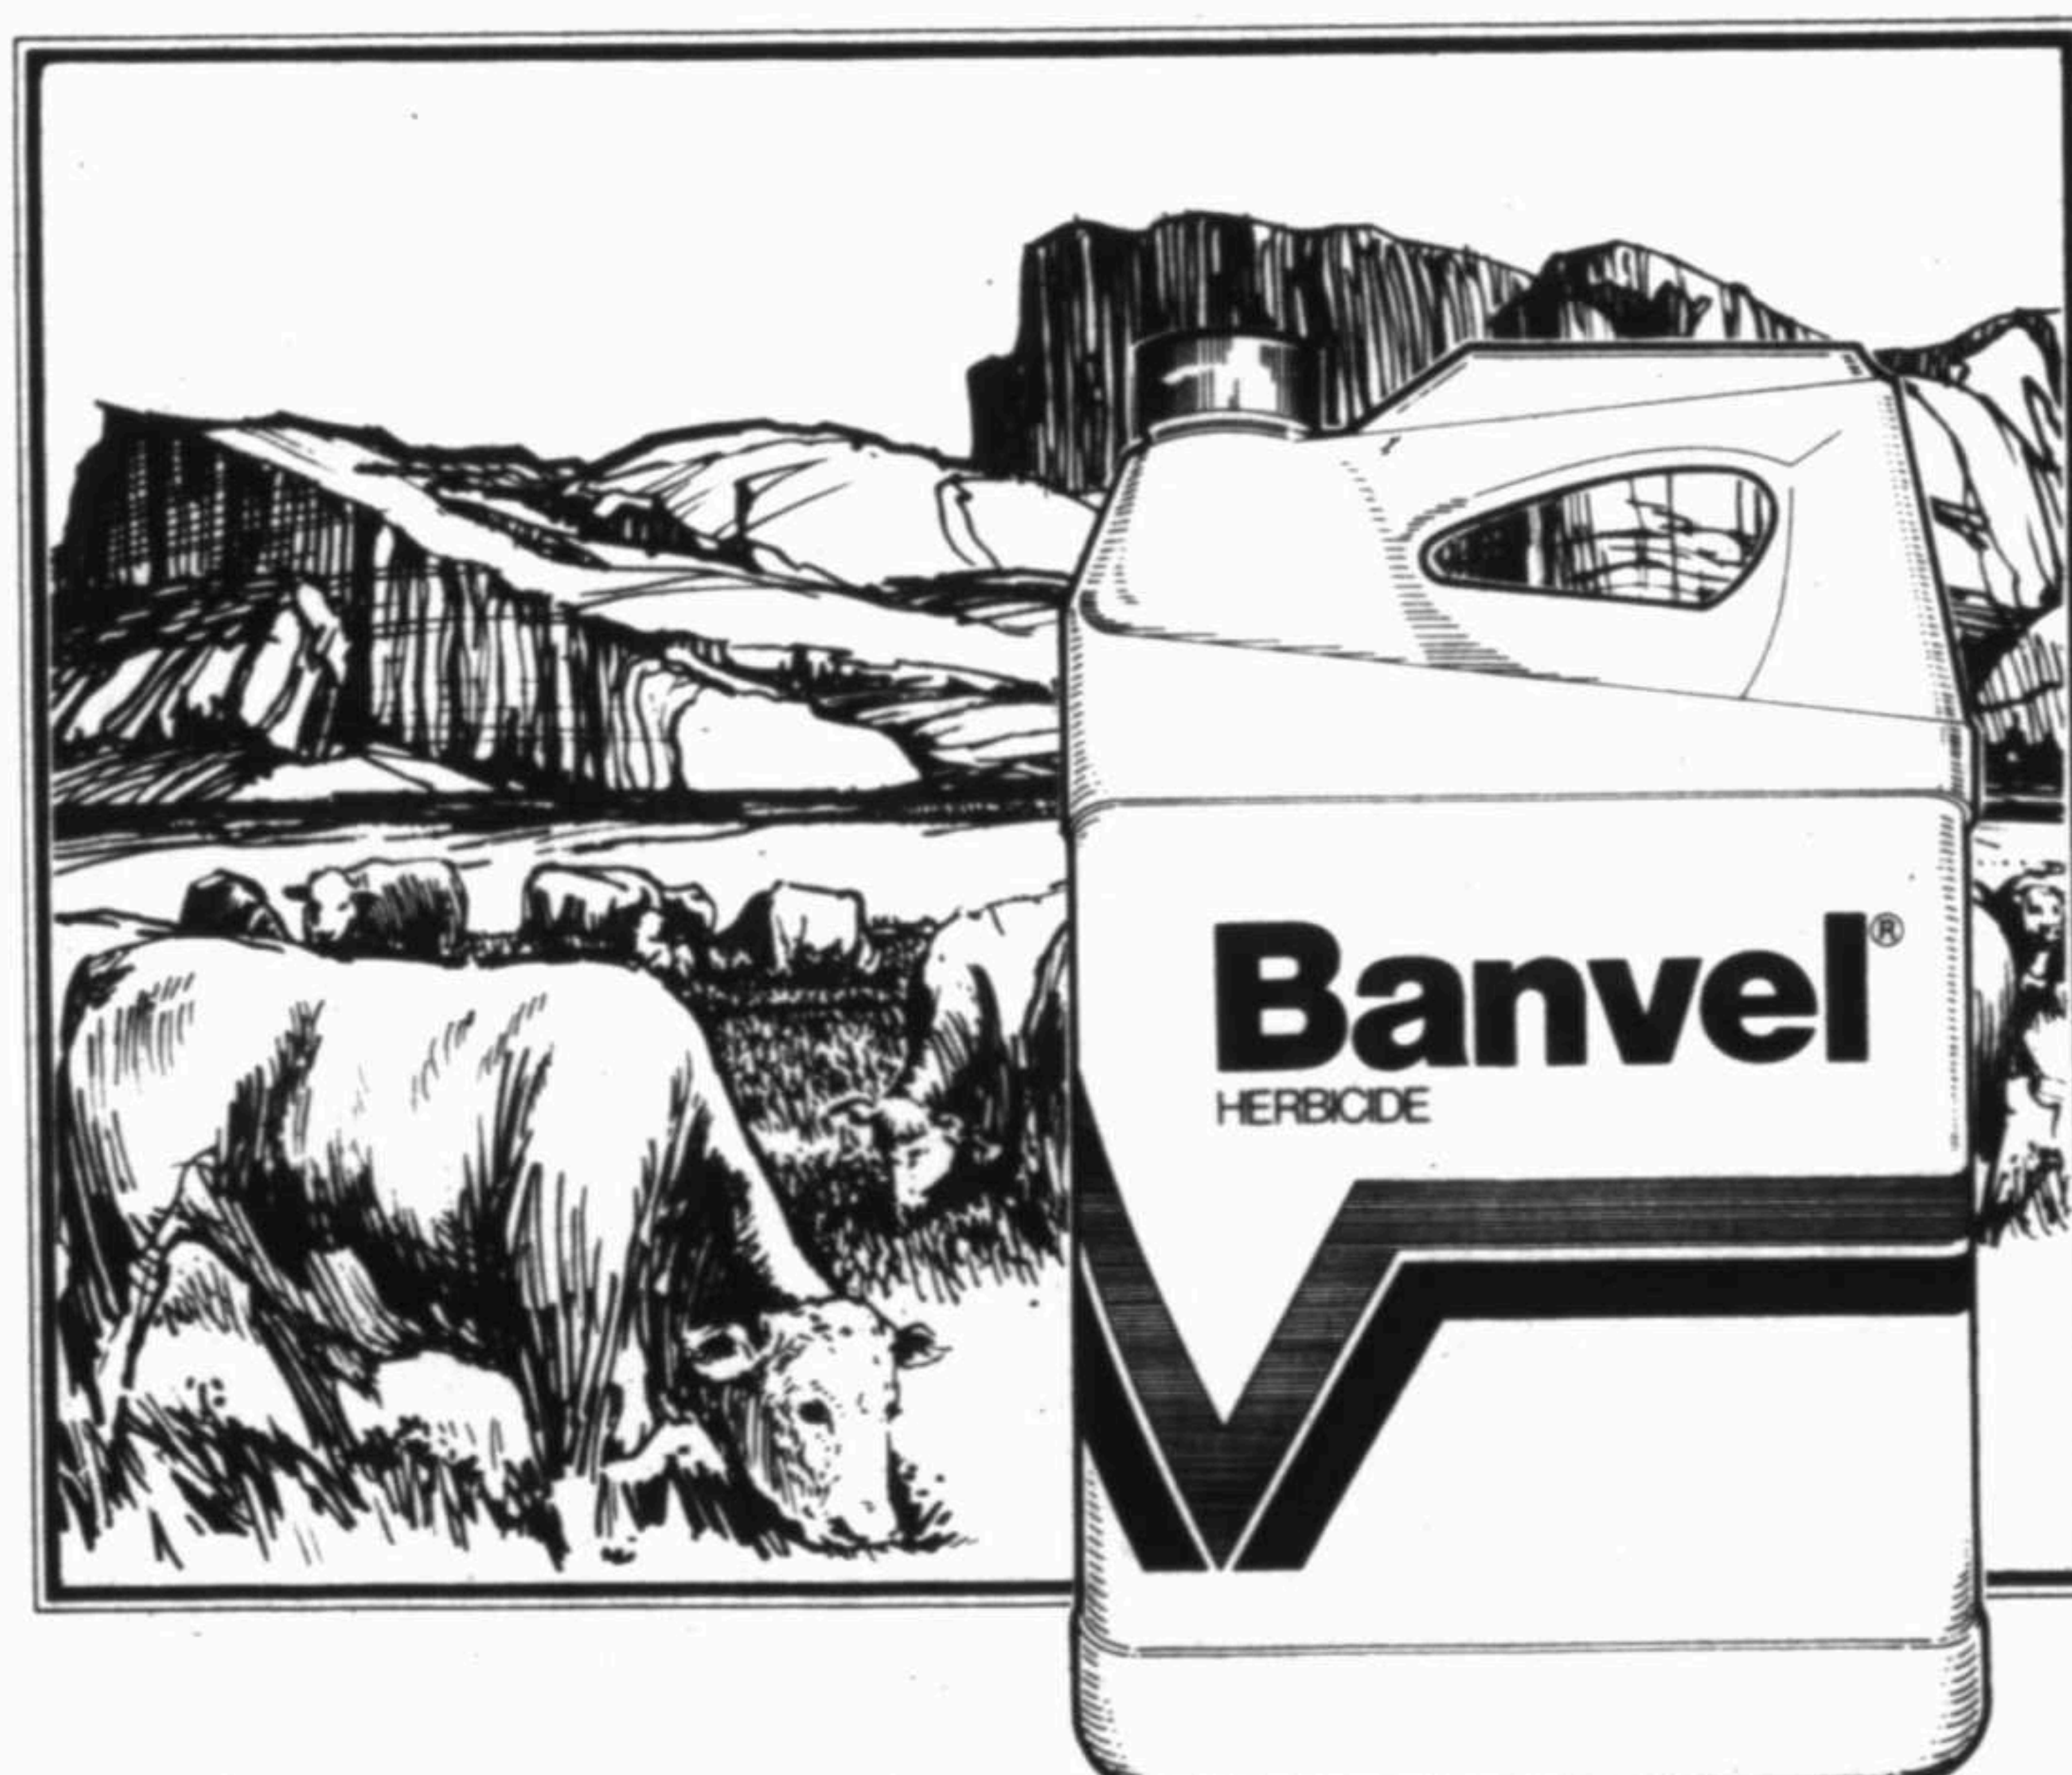

The letter of Nov. 28, 1980, for example, reported that gasoline prices had begun to climb, but added that they were likely to continue to rise through 1981. Actually, prices dropped about 20 cents per gallon over ensuing months amid an oil glut which the letter also had reported, in an earlier issue.

Lundberg's defense is that he never has claimed to be a seer, and that decisions in Washington and OPEC capitals that affect fuel prices cannot be foretold.

"We've never kissed the a— of any oil companies, and they take turns hating our guts," Lundberg proclaims. In the next breath, he may say something like, "The oil industry has, in my opinion, a secular, if not sacred, trust," to continue to provide fuel and service for the American passenger fleet.

Lundberg and his letter have fought some of the oil industry's battles, for example, for decontrol of gasoline prices and against regulation and certain taxes.

On the other hand, it was through the Lundberg Letter that the public, and reportedly certain federal agencies, learned that federal gasoline price ceilings were being exceeded by about 40 percent of U.S. service stations in late 1979, and 20 percent of the stations in the summer of 1980.

Olympic just not an All-Star setting

The major league all-star game will be held in Montreal's Olympic Stadium, not exactly the setting one might expect for such a gem.

Olympic comes across on TV as an abandoned warehouse for remnant carpets that draws large crowds for its frequent sales.

It's not at all what you expect from a ball park, which it isn't.

BASEBALL parks should be a breath of fresh air where you walk in and wish you had a lawn just like it.

Baseball parks should and, often do, rise above their squalid surroundings. Ruppert Stadium where the old New York Yankees played was located in the tough, calloused industrial district, close enough to the Meadows so that when the wind was right you could gag on the fragrance. And the mosquitoes.

Still, the ball park was an old, but refreshing oasis when you walked in.

It had more atmosphere for an All-Star game than the Olympic. In fact, if baseball was concerned about the image it was creating, they'd move it over to old, friendly and, unfortunately, abandoned Jarry Park.

But the fans who are there, probably won't even notice. They'll buy their carpets and go home happy.

THERE'S another thing that has changed about the All-Star game. It doesn't carry quite the same impact that it once did. There was a time when it was a life or death struggle and the arguments over which league was better could become violent.

Like that argument from the bar the other day when they called the sports department and the guy asked if Bjorn Borg had played in Wimbledon this year. The expert answered, "No, of course, not."

"Here, tell this guy that."

When the other guy got on, he asked belligerently, "You mean Bjorn didn't play in Wimbledon?" The answer was, "Of course he did. What's that guy trying to pull on you."

We don't know what happened after the gun shot.

But we digress.

SOMEHOW the memories of long ago All-Star games remain more vivid than even last year's. We can't really say we remember Hubbell's remarkable feat in the first game, but we do vividly recall the Boston Braves' Max West's three-run homer that gave the Nationals their first win and Dizzy Dean the victory in 1936 at old Braves Field.

And 1937, at Washington's Griffith Stadium, the Americans won 8-3, but that was incidental to the line drive Earl Averill hit off Dean's toe, nipping a spectacular career in the bud.

And in 1941, Ted Williams hit that last inning homer off the Claude Passeau so hard that it cleared Detroit's Briggs Stadium roof and gave the Americans an 8-5 win; and Williams again the year he hit that Rip Sewell blooper pitch into the seats...was that 1946?

RED Schoendienst's hit won that 14-inning game at Comiskey in 1950, a real cliff hanger. Those were the days when the National League didn't win very often, but it has changed now. The NLers never lose.

McEnroe staves off

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The United States staggered a bit before continuing on its way toward retaining its Davis Cup title. It was John McEnroe, withstanding a record-breaking effort by the leader of the young Swedish team.

"It (the match) became an emotional thing at the end because it was so long and I really wanted to win," McEnroe said Sunday after he outlasted Sweden's Mats Wilander 9-7, 6-2, 15-17, 3-6, 8-6.

Last time the AL won was also a memorable game, compliments of Reggie Jackson who won it with a prodigious clout off the Briggs Stadium light tower in right to win the game way back in 1971.

Somehow the old bitter, "we're better rivalry" is gone. Maybe it's because so many players move between the leagues now that the line isn't as sharply defined. Ironically, the NL dominates, but the ex-American Leaguers compile better figures in the NL than the ex-National Leaguers do in the AL.

Going into Tuesday's game, you've got to wonder whether Bruce Sutter, the former Midland Cub, can keep his streak going. He was the winner in 1978 and 1979 and he gained saves for the Nationals in 1980 and 1981. That should be approaching some kind of record, shouldn't it?

Officials catch it from all directions

Third of a Series
By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

For a decade, John McCauley was regarded as one of the best referees in the National Hockey League. Then one night his life changed when a fan decided he wasn't one of the best referees after all.

McCauley worked the final game in the 1979 Challenge Cup Series between the NHL All-Stars and the Soviet Union at Madison Square Garden. The Russians put on an awesome show that night, blanking the NHL 6-0. After the game, McCauley and three other NHL officials, Matt Pavelich, Ron Finn and Leon Stickle, went across the street to eat.

"This fellow started talking to the others, complaining about the Russians," McCauley recalled. "The ironic part is, he never said anything to me. I'm sure he knew who I was, though."

ONE OF THE officials suggested that perhaps losing to the Soviets wasn't so terrible, that the NHL might learn something from the experience. That's when the patriotic fan started swinging, and the referee went down.

"He hit me in the right eye," McCauley said. "I took it well, I thought, but not well enough."

Blood spurted and Finn jumped in to break it up. Except for a sore, swollen eye and a scrape, McCauley thought he was all right. He was not.

"I figured I'd treat it myself," he said. "Referees carry first-aid equipment. I put a butterfly (stitch) in and went on to Toronto."

The next night, McCauley was scheduled to work a game between the Philadelphia Flyers and the Maple Leafs. "With the tight schedules and all, you don't like to miss an assignment," he said. "You know, you feel the show must go on."

But by then, the eye was swollen shut. "The players were calling me Rocky," he said. "I knew right away that I was in trouble. My depth perception was gone. I lasted one period and that was it."

For the next two years, McCauley battled muscle and nerve damage which produced double vision in the

In perhaps the most ill-fated promotion in baseball history, thousands of rowdy fans overran the Comiskey Park field during "Disco Demolition Night." Lightning jolts Cubs-Caps

Chalk up another one to Mother Nature.
Two bolts of lightning in the area knocked out the lights at Cubs Stadium Sunday night forcing a delay which quickly turned into a postponement when the ensuing rains came, leaving the Midland Cubs and Shreveport Captains deadlocked after five innings, 2-2.

The game is scheduled to be continued tonight at 7:30 p.m. before the regularly scheduled game.
In the uncompleted contest, Joe Carter led off the scoring with a towering solo home run over the scoreboard in the first inning, his 13th round-tripper of the season.

Shreveport answered with a pair of runs in the second when Bob Cummings led off with a walk, went to second on Kelvin Torve's shallow single to right and scored on Dean Kornacker's single to center. Torve made it 2-1 when he scored from second base on Billy Heimach's single to center.

The Cubs tied the game in the bottom of the fourth when Carter, who was 2-for-3 with two runs and an RBI in the game, beat out a bunt down the third base line and went to second on a hit-and-run with Carmelo Martinez at the plate. Martinez' hit went to Captains second baseman Heimach, who didn't have time to get the lead runner so he settled for the force at first.

Fritz Connally then hit a shallow double to score Carter.

Both starting pitchers were still in the lineup when the game was called. Mike King had given up his two runs on six Shreveport hits while Scott Garrelts was working on a five-hitter, six-strikeout pace.

Italy wins third title

Ties mark set by Brazil

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Italy survived the agony of a missed penalty shot and recovered to defeat West Germany 3-1 in the 12th World Cup soccer championship Sunday on second-half goals, the first by Paolo Rossi, a hero risen from disgrace.

The title was the third for the Italians, equalling Brazil's record in the world's premier soccer tournament.

Marco Tardelli and Sandro Altobelli also scored in the second half of a slow-paced match played in 86-degree heat between two teams tired at the end of the month-long competition. Paul Breitner got a late goal for West Germany.

The championship was the first for Italy since 1938. It also won in 1934.

The match had not started well for the Italians, who lost forward Francesco Graziani with an injury after only seven minutes of play and then watched Antonio Cabrini squander a 26th-minute penalty — the first missed penalty shot in a World Cup final.

But then the Italians, cheered on by an estimated 35,000 of countrymen in a crowd of 110,000 at Santiago Bernabeu Stadium, tore the German defense to shreds in the second half, attacking with nerve and skill.

The Germans, who also had been seeking a third World Cup victory, suffered their first loss to a European team in more than four years. They had won the Cup in 1954 and 1974.

Rossi became a storybook hero not long after serving a two-year suspension in a bribery scandal. The man who became the top scorer in the four-week tournament had looked unimpressive in early games.

It was a sluggish, foul-ridden match between two tired teams and was scoreless at halftime.

Rossi finally broke through, scoring on a header in the 57th minute.

Italy's Claudio Gentile sent a free kick into the penalty area that eluded several players, then Rossi headed it past German goalie Harald Schumacher.

Tardelli scored what proved to be the winner in the 69th minute, taking a passing and kicking the ball wide of Schumacher and into the net.

Altobelli made it 3-0 in the 81st minute. Bruno Conti crossed from the right. Schumacher ran out, but failed to get the ball, and with the German defense spread-eagled, Altobelli sidestepped the goalkeeper and slid the ball into the corner of the net.

Two minutes after Altobelli's goal, Paul Breitner scored for West Germany, beating 40-year-old goalie Dino Zoff, the Italian captain and oldest player in the tournament.

Besides Rossi's inspired offensive play in the second half, a key to the Italian victory was the play of Giuseppe Bergomi, an 18-year-old Inter-Milan defender playing only his second game for Italy. He was given the job of guarding Karl-Heinz Rummenigge, a five-goal scorer in the tournament, who been considered Germany's major threat despite being troubled by a thigh injury.

West German manager Jupp Derwall pulled Rummenigge out of the game in the 70th minute.

Although the contest was marked by sluggish play, it also was rough.

Bruno Conti was booked in the first half for a foul on German Klaus Fischer. Karl-Heinz Dremmler was booked in the 62nd minute for a foul on Gabriele Oriali.

Later, Oriali was shown the yellow card for pushing Uli Stieleke. When Stieleke continued to protest, the referee booked him, too. Germany's Pierre Littbarski was booked for arguing in the final minute.

The fans were well behaved, but there was scuffling between some Italian and West German supporters after Rossi's goal.

King Juan Carlos of Spain, Italian President Sandro Pertini and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt were among the dignitaries attending the final of the world's biggest soccer tournament.

The 86-year-old Pertini leaped to his feet, laughing and waving, after the Italian victory.

Schmidt went to Pertini in the stands and shook his hand.

Juan Carlos presented the Cup to Zoff, then the entire 22-man Italian squad paraded the Cup around the ground, drinking champagne and carrying Zoff on their shoulders.

Italy paved the way for its championship with a shocking 3-2 upset of favored Brazil in the second round as Rossi scored all three goals.

Rossi was the only scorer again when Italy beat Poland 2-0 in the semifinals.

For much of the semifinal between West German and France, it appeared France would be Italy's championship opponent. The French led 3-1 late in an overtime period.

Then Rummenigge came off the bench to score and Germany managed to tie, the win 5-4 on penalty kicks.

Boston Bruins Terry O'Reilly takes a swing at NHL ref Andy Van Hellemon. O'Reilly was fined and drew a light 10-day suspension.

Because of it, Coulis will sit out the 1982-83 season, suspended by CHL President Bud Poile.

It began when Hall called a penalty on Coulis during a playoff game against Salt Lake City. With the Dallas player in the penalty box, the Golden Eagles scored on the power play, Coulis returned to the ice and began skating around the referee and glaring at him in what Hall later called "an Indians-and-covered-wagons routine."

The referee told the player that he wasn't amused and, when Coulis continued the act, Hall tagged him with a misconduct penalty. He reported the penalty to the scorer's table and then returned to center ice. At that point, the referee took the butt end of Coulis' stick to the back of his head and was knocked unconscious, suffering a concussion.

Poile held a hearing and told Coulis to take the next year off without pay.

"It was very serious," Poile said. "When you deliberately strike an official, I don't think you measure that in fines or games suspended. I think you measure that in seasons."

NHL officials said O'Reilly's act deserved sterner action, perhaps as stern as what Coulis got. Brian O'Neill, the NHL vice president who imposed the 10-game suspension and fine, disagreed.

"IT WAS not a similar offense," he said. "Coulis was far bigger. There is no comparison between the two incidents whatsoever."

Jim Beatty, counsel for the officials, said, "Such a decision shows the league is either unable or unwilling on the basis of Mr. O'Neill's judgment to give proper support, protection and respect to its officials."

Padres' Tim Lollar shows fans by boosting record to 10-2

(Compiled from R-T wires)
 Dick Williams stood behind his desk in the visiting manager's office at Shea Stadium Sunday, a wistful grin on his face. "Shoo ...," said the San Diego Padres' skipper, "he's something, isn't he?"

"He" is Tim Lollar, the Padres' winningest pitcher and their secret weapon on offense as well. All Lollar did was belt his third home run of the year, improve his batting average to .296 and combine with Eric Show on an eight-hit game as the Padres defeated the New York Mets 6-2.

"He's a free spirit. He has fun out there," said Williams. Lollar's impressive numbers, however, did not get him a berth on the National League pitching staff for Tuesday's All-Star Game. "We were going for our 50th win today. That's more important than the All-Star Game," he said.

Lollar, 102, who leads the National League with a .333 winning percentage, struck out three and walked four before yielding to Show in the ninth. Mike Scott, 6-7, took the loss.

ST. LOUIS Manager Whitey Herzog can't explain the success the Houston Astros and pitcher Bob Knepper have had against his Cardinals this season. Knepper scattered five hits to pitch the Astros to a 4-2 triumph over the Cardinals Sunday, giving Houston six wins in nine games against St. Louis this year.

"They've got a couple of pitchers we can't hit," Herzog said. "When we came down there at the beginning of the season, Joe Niekro beat us 3-2 and Knepper beat us 1-0. When you can't score, you can't win. In four games here, we scored only six runs."

Knepper, who is 3-10 on the season and 2-0 against the Cards this year, has allowed just three earned runs against the Cardinals in 26 innings as an Astro. Against the Cardinals Sunday, Knepper logged a season-high eight strikeouts and two walks, carrying a two-hitter into the ninth inning.

Danny Heep slugged two doubles and knocked in a run, while Terry Puhl and Ray Knight also batted in runs with extra base hits.

George Hendrick's two-run homer in the ninth accounted for the Cards' runs. Tommy Herr had singled prior to Hendrick's homer.

A HOME run and three RBI is more than a solid day's work, but you couldn't convince Bill Buckner of that Sunday after he led the Chicago Cubs to a 9-2 win over the Cincinnati Reds. "I'm just doing what I'm supposed to do," said Buckner, who also collected a pair of doubles to lead the Cubs' 14-hit attack.

Bump Willis and Ryne Sandberg, who hit first and second in the Cubs' lineup, had three hits apiece, and Buckner said that made Sunday a red-letter day.

Cubs starter Doug Bird, 6-8, scattered 11 hits en route to the victory, a welcome change from his struggles earlier this season.

Cincinnati Manager John McNamara said he couldn't put his finger on a reason for the dismal performance of his team, which has lost 13 of its last 15. "I don't know whether it's our lack of hitting or the pitching."

Before falling to the Cubs, Cincinnati captured a 6-5 victory in the completion of a game that had been suspended Saturday because of darkness when the two teams were tied 5-5 in the ninth inning.

In Sunday's regularly scheduled game, the Cubs pounded out nine hits and six runs in the first four innings, knocking out Cincinnati starter Tom Seaver, 4-10, after 2 1/3 innings.

MILT MAY belted a solo home run with one out in the 10th inning, his second of the day and the fifth for San Francisco, enabling the Giants to defeat the Montreal Expos 8-7 Sunday. May's homer, his sixth of the season, was hammered into the right field bleachers on a 2-2 pitch by reliever Jeff Reardon, 3-1. The blow made a winner of Greg Minton, 6-4, the fourth Giants' pitcher, who worked 2 2/3 innings.

Gary Carter's sacrifice fly tied the game in the ninth. Andre Dawson and Al Oliver led off with singles, then Carter drove home the tying run with his fly ball to center.

BOB DERNIER'S run-scoring single and fundamental mistakes cost Los Angeles left-hander Fernando Valenzuela a chance for his 13th win as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Dodgers 4-3 Sunday. Valenzuela, the winningest pitcher in the majors with a 12-7 mark, gave up only one earned run in losing his first game since June 23. The Phillies, who handed Valenzuela his first major-league loss last season in their only other meeting with the 21-year-old All-Star — who was 8-0 at the time — scored four runs on five hits in six innings.

Pedro Guerrero tied the game 3-3 with his 16th home run leading off the fourth.

Dodgers first baseman Steve Garvey, hampered by a pulled hamstring, extended his consecutive game streak to 1,034, the longest in the majors, with a pinch-hit appearance in the seventh for Valenzuela.

PITTSBURGH pitcher Larry McWilliams realized before he took the mound Sunday against his former teammates, the Atlanta Braves, that he would be at something of a disadvantage. "They knew my whole repertoire and how I would use it."

But McWilliams also admitted that the familiarity worked both ways. "When you play with guys every day you get to know their weaknesses, too," he said.

McWilliams exploited the Braves' weaknesses to the fullest as he scattered seven hits over seven innings to lead the Pirates to a 3-1 victory. It was the left-handed McWilliams' third victory since being traded by the Braves on June 29.

It was the third straight victory for McWilliams, 5-3, who struck out three and walked three before leaving the game for a pinch-hitter in the eighth.

The Pirates scored a run against Atlanta left-hander Ken Dayley, 4-6, in the first inning when Lee Lacy singled with one out and came home on a double by Bill Madlock. They got another in the third when Madlock hit a two-out single, stole second and later scored as Dave Parker's grounder bounced over the head of Atlanta shortstop Rafael Ramirez for a single.

Scypion wins decision

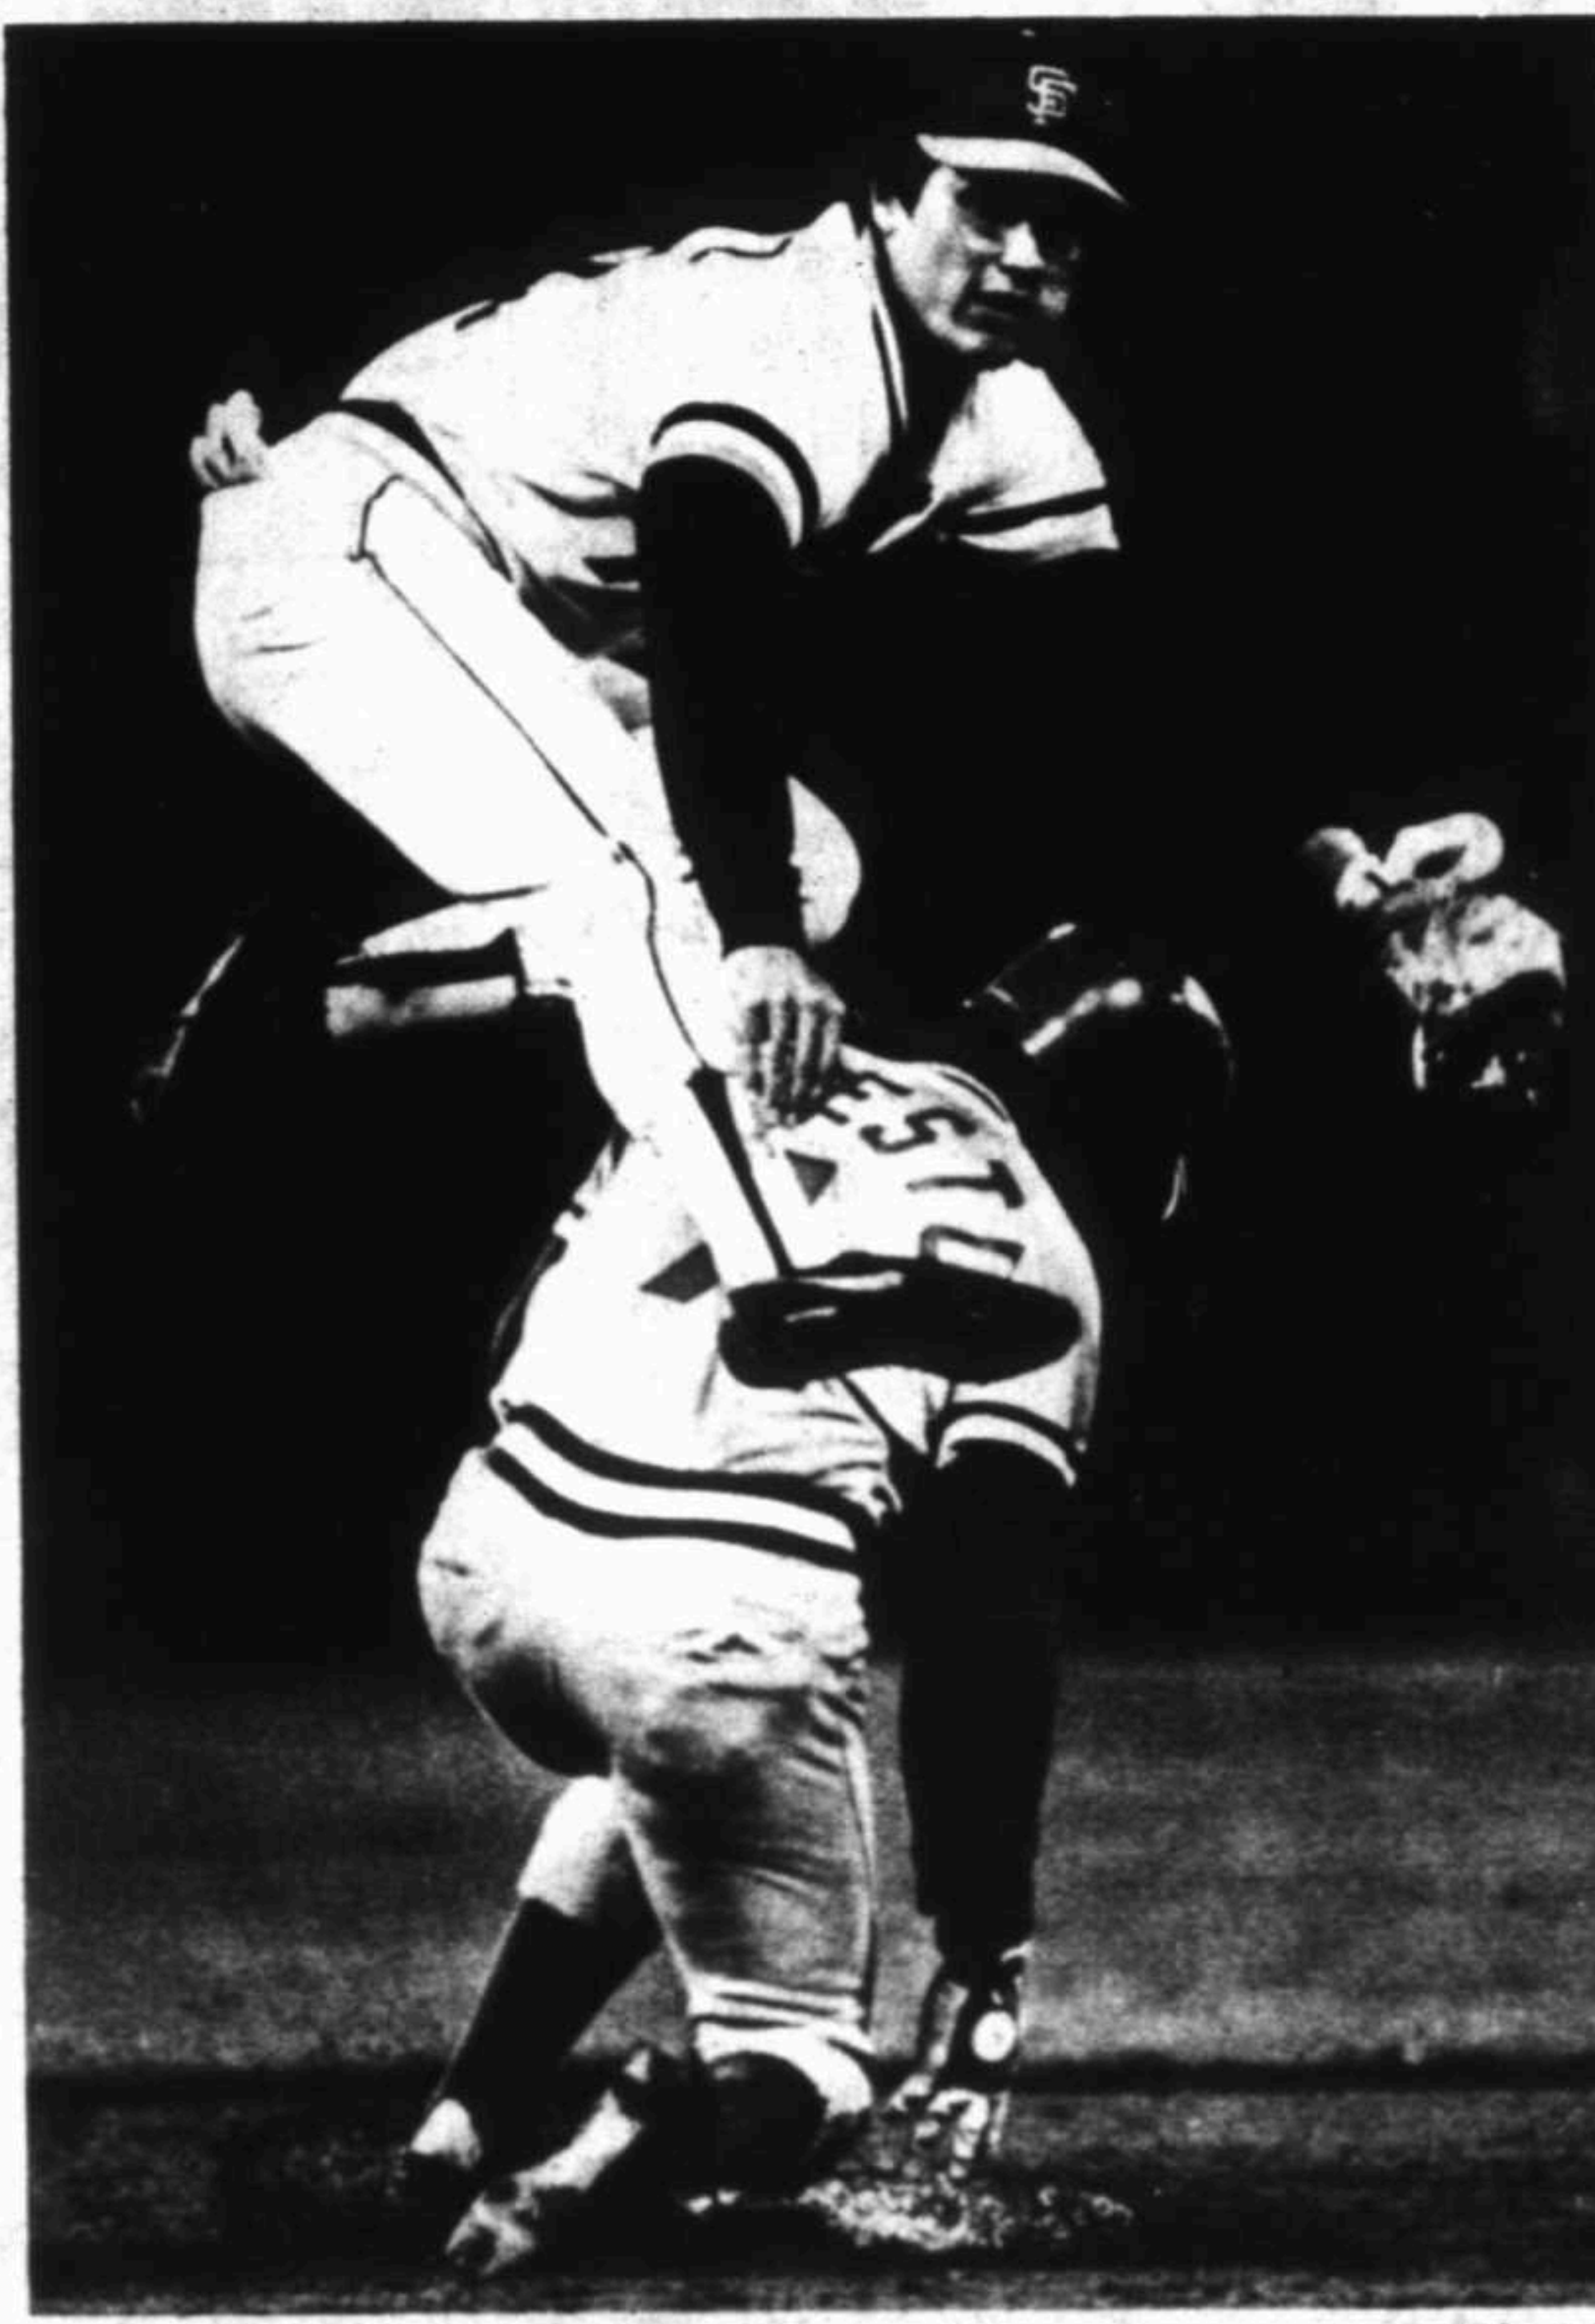

BOXING—Wilfred Scypion used a relentless attack to score a 10-round decision over previously unbeaten middleweight Mark Frazier.

MARATHON—Miguel Tibaduza, a 23-year-old college senior and Colombian native, outpaced his brother, Domingo, 32, in the final steps to capture the San Francisco Marathon Sunday in 2 hours, 14 minutes, 31.7 seconds. Domingo Tibaduza, a Colombian Olympian who, like his brother, studies at the University of Nevada-Reno, finished the 26.2-mile course in 2:14:53.

The defending champion, Hal Schulz, 24, of San Anselmo, Calif., was third at 2:15:10. Last year, he won at 2:15:17. Nancy Ditz, 28, of Menlo Park, led female entrants across the finish at 2:44:05. Ditz, who started jogging two years ago, ran her first competitive marathon...

Calvin Peete captures his 2nd Milwaukee title

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Calvin Peete, playing on his most productive course, fired a 3-under-par 69 Sunday to win his second Greater Milwaukee Open Golf Tournament title.

The 38-year-old veteran from Detroit won by two shots in building a 72-hole total of 274, 14 under par for four trips over hilly Tuckaway Country Club.

Peete, whose only other PGA Tour title came here in 1979, clinched his victory with a birdie on the 17th hole. Terry Diehl, a co-leader at the time, bogeyed the same 220-yard, par-three hole to drop from the lead in a dramatic two-shot swing.

Diehl, 31, trying to shake a season-long slump, eventually settled for third place behind Victor Regalado of Mexico.

Diehl, who had missed the cut in four of his last five tournaments, carded a 71, the same as Regalado, another slumping veteran.

Rangers beat Detroit, 3-2

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Larry Parrish has been slowly but steadily making the long climb from zero to hero for the Texas Rangers, but now he has the three-day All-Star break to ponder a star step backward. In Texas' first 79 games this season, Parrish had only one home run and six runs batted in. Then, in the next 10 games, Parrish clouted five home runs, produced 19 RBI and tied the major-league record for grand slam home runs in a week.

But Sunday against Detroit, Parrish went hitless, stuck out three times and dropped a routine eighth-inning fly ball that let the winning runs score in Detroit's 3-2 win.

After the game, Parrish went immediately to the Rangers' equipment room and worked off some frustration lifting weights. Then, he patiently answered all questions from a crowd of reporters. He offered no excuses.

"I missed it," he said. "It hit in my glove and bounced out. It was in the lights all the way, but it still hit in the middle of my glove. You don't miss those. It's a team sport, but you've got to perform as an individual."

Parrish is batting almost 100 points below his career average and is playing the outfield for the first time in his big league career, after seven seasons at third base for Montreal.
