Four armed men rob Wells Fargo terminal

This is the Wells Fargo truck found abandoned today under New York's Brooklyn Bridge after one of the biggest robberies in history.

NEW YORK (AP) — Four armed men broke through a wall and overpowered guards at a Wells Fargo terminal early today, then fled in an armored truck with millions of dollars in cash, police said.

First reports estimated the haul at $25 million to $50 million, but Chief of Detectives Richard Nicasio said later "it's nowhere near that."

"Nobody really knows how much was taken," said Lazaro Rodriguez of Wells Fargo, adding the money was still being tallied.

FBI spokesman Joseph Valiquette said no total for the robbery was expected until late in the day, "but certainly we're talking in the multi-millions."

The previous record for a cash robbery in the United States is $11 million, also from an armored car company, and Kenneth Walton, deputy director of the FBI office here, said the take from today's holdup would probably be less than that.

The four men, armed with handguns, stole the truck from the company's garage in lower Manhattan at about 1:30 a.m., said police spokesman Sgt. Ed LeSchack. "It's the largest (robbery) that I've ever heard of," LeSchack said. The thieves ordered four armed guards at gunpoint to open a vault where the money was held, then handcuffed the men to a hand truck and loaded the cash onto the van, according to Chief Robert Johnston, chief of operations for the Police Department.

The guards "were told they weren't going to be hurt" if they cooperated, Johnston said.

The van was found empty and abandoned several hours later underneath the Brooklyn Bridge, a few miles away, LeSchack said.

Johnston said the four guards were surprised after they arrived at the garage at 1:20 a.m. There normally were no guards on duty on Sunday night, and in accordance with standard procedures, they made a search of the building, then went to open the vault.

At that point, the four men jumped them and ordered them to open it, Johnston said.

One of the captives was close enough to a pay phone to call police at 1:49 a.m., after the robbers left, said LeSchack.

Johnston said the four thieves had been in the garage a total of about 20 to 30 minutes and had apparently been waiting for the employees to arrive.

The robbers got into the Wells Fargo area by punching two holes through a cinderblock wall on the second floor of an adjoining building, he said.

The building houses a mailroom and storage center of Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, said Bill Clark, a spokesman for the brokerage house. He said he had no information immediately about how entry was gained or whether alarms had to be bypassed.

There were alarms at Wells Fargo, "but none that we know of went off," said LeSchack. He said it was too early to speculate on whether the robbery may have been an inside job.

Johnston said the age of the robbers, described as between 40 and 45, was significant because it indicated they were professionals, not amateurs.

Thousands dance in Tyre following Israeli pullout

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Israel withdrew from the last major city it held in Lebanon today, a day after Lebanese Moslem and Druse warriors routed Christians from other areas evacuated by the Israelis.

Thousands of men, women and children danced in Tyre's dusty streets when International Red Cross officials confirmed the last Israeli soldier had gone. They showered each other with rice and rose petals. They hugged, kissed and wept.

"Life under the Israelis turned Tyre into a big jail," said one man, tears welling in his dark eyes. "It was a big prison. But now thank God it's over, it's over."

The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv confirmed the withdrawal from the port 50 miles south of Beirut and nearby Shiite villages that had been a center of attacks against the occupiers. On Sunday, the military command had denied reports a pullout was imminent.

■ Christian Lebanese refugees seek shelter from Moslems — Page 4B

As the Israelis left Tyre, they hurled smoke grenades from jeeps and armored vehicles. At the Qasimiyeh bridge north of the city, they fired tank cannons and machine guns, apparently to warn residents to stay away.

The pullback was the latest in a series designed to get Israeli forces out of Lebanon before June 6, the third anniversary of Israel's invasion of its northern neighbor.

Today's withdrawal left Israeli troops in a strip three to 12 miles wide stretching north of the Israeli-Lebanese border. This belt coincides with the expected dimensions of the "security zone" Israel wants to leave in the hands of Israeli-backed Lebanese militiamen.

Israel still occupies about 330 square miles of Lebanon, or about one-twelfth of the country. At the height of the 1982 invasion, one-third of Lebanon was under Israeli occupation.

France wants to discuss new world monetary system

PARIS (AP) — Days before a Western economic summit, President Francois Mitterrand has announced France will refuse to discuss new international trade agreements without parallel talks on a new world monetary system.

Mitterrand's statement reflected widespread concern over the beating that European currencies have taken in recent months against the dollar, which has been buoyed by high U.S. interest rates.

"It is not possible for us to accept negotiations on commercial affairs if on the other hand there is a refusal to engage in conversations on currency," Mitterrand said in a live TV interview Sunday.

President Reagan departs Tuesday for the West German capital Bonn, where the summit will be held Friday and Saturday. Also participating are the leaders of Canada, Japan, West Germany, Britain and Italy.

The seven nations, the world's largest industrial democracies, are currently enjoying the third year of an economic upturn, but their concerns about the future, and their strategies, vary.

Mitterrand's statement was in line with general French economic strategy — a strategy generally opposed by Washington — but this was the first time he had publicly and explicitly linked trade and monetary talks.

On the world economic front, France is pressing for a radical revision in the way international currencies are valued against each other. The French essentially want to create three monetary zones — the dollar, the yen and the major West European currencies — with built-in mechanisms to prevent wide fluctuations between those zones.

That would replace the system of floating exchange rates.

ARCO to sell stations, minerals businesses

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

Atlantic Richfield Co. said today it is disposing of hundreds of gas stations, abandoning its copper and molybdenum businesses and making other retrenchments that will lead to a one-time writeoff against earnings of $1.3 billion this year.

To sweeten the sting from the second such cutback in less than a year, the nation's sixth-largest oil company said it was raising its dividend and buying back more than 20 percent of its stock for $4 billion.

Arco, based in Los Angeles, said directors approved the sweeping reorganization on Sunday, citing "diminished expectations" for future oil prices.

The company did not say how many of its 39,400 employees would lose their jobs, but announced there would be a special severance and pension plan.

The program will produce $500 million a year in savings from operating cutbacks but increase interest expenses by $250 million, resulting in increasing earnings of $250 million by 1988, Arco said.

Investors appeared to cheer the developments, with Arco stock shooting up $5.50 to $68.50 a share in early trading today on the New York Stock Exchange.

Meanwhile, Tracy L. Stanton, president of the 60,000-member Service Station Dealers of America and owner of a Shell station in Bexley, Ohio, said he was not surprised by Arco's cutbacks.

"That's been going on probably for the last 10 years," Stanton said. "First it was Texaco six years ago, then Exxon three years ago. The majors are restructuring the market, trying to push more volume through fewer stations."

Challenger blasts off just ten days after end of last shuttle mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space Shuttle Challenger, carrying seven astronauts, two squirrel monkeys and 24 rats, blasted off today only 10 days after the end of the last shuttle mission for a week of round-the-clock research in a billion-dollar Spacelab.

The most extensive space research project ever undertaken began at 12:02 p.m. EDT as the space plane thundered to life and darted quickly out over the Atlantic Ocean on twin towers of fire and a massive trail of smoke.

Skies were cloudless and the 106-ton ship was clearly visible as it climbed on a northeast heading. It reached orbit nine minutes after lift-off.

The launch was the second here in just 17 days, cutting in half the old record of 34 days for the shortest period between shuttle flights. Sister ship Discovery was launched April 12 and returned to Earth just 10 days ago.

Observing the flight from the launch control center was Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, continuing the oversight responsibility he began when he was a passenger on the last shuttle flight. He is chairman of a subcommittee that handles NASA funding.

During a week in orbit, the crew, which includes two physicians, two physicists and a chemical engineer, will test new processes for growing electronic crystals and processing exotic materials and they will probe the sun, the stars, the atmosphere and their own bodies.

Cowboy craze rides into sunset

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The urban cowboy who donned western hat and Levis to ride mechanical bulls with buckskin bravado has traded his boots for a pair of Guccis and an evening of white wine and brie.

The cowboy, it seems, has been lapped by the yuppie.

chased country music records, as the rougher edges of honky-tonk that captivated a generation of rebellious city kids have given way to more refined tastes.

"It's been displaced by the yuppie thing as something people want to be," says Dr. Richard A. Peterson of Vanderbilt University, just a brief ride in a pickup truck from this city's famed recording studios.

"It's the preppies five or 10 years later. It means dressing more expensively, going to fancier restaurants, urbane things, not country things," said Peterson, who is chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology.

MIDLAND CENTENNIAL 1885-1985

As Israeli convoys rumbled out of the city, Tyre residents hoisted the Lebanese flag and the banners of the Shiite Moslem Amal militia. Amal guerrillas threatened to hunt down Lebanese who had collaborated with the Israelis.

Israel said it invaded its northern neighbor to crush Palestinian guerrilla strongholds, but its forces in Lebanon have been increasingly harassed by Moslem guerrillas.

The sectarian warfare that has followed the phased Israeli pullout has heightened fears of a final partition of the country into Moslem and Christian zones, after a decade of bloodshed in which the government says 100,000 people have died.

Lebanese police said at least 65 people were killed and 75 wounded in Sunday's civil war fighting in the south, which had been widely predicted in the wake of Israel's withdrawal from the region.

In Beirut today, fighting resumed between the Moslem Druse coalition and Christian militia units across the Green Line that divides the city into mostly Moslem and Christian sectors. The Moslems and Druse reportedly drove the Christians back 200 yards from the line on Sunday.

Moslems and Druse claimed they killed or wounded at least 20 Christian fighters in Beirut and witnesses said bodies were heaped on a sidewalk.

There were claims of massacres and abductions from both Moslems and Christians in the south, but there was no independent confirmation of the reports. Lebanese reporters in the battle area, however, said they saw at least 18 bodies dumped by the roadsides.

Moslem radios proclaimed the "liberation" of Christian-held territory. The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio reported thousands of Christians fleeing in trucks, buses and cars towards Jezzine.

Inmates remember Dachau's liberation

DACHAU, West Germany (AP) — Survivors of the Nazi death camp at Dachau, some clad in the striped uniforms they wore as prisoners, marked the 40th anniversary of the liberation and heard a German official express his "horror and deepest regret" at what happened.

The commemoration of the American liberation at Dachau, near Munich, on April 29, 1945, was one of several such ceremonies around Europe on Sunday.

Other survivors gathered in Struthof, France, site of the only World War II death camp on French soil; in Lyon, France, where Jews held a vigil outside the prison holding Klaus Barbie, the former Gestapo official charged with deporting French Jews to Nazi death camps; in Canada and in Greece.

French citizens marked Sunday as National Deportation Day, in memory of the tens of thousands of French Jews and others sent to death camps. At one ceremony, former Nazi victims clashed with a small group of homosexuals who tried to lay a wreath honoring victims of the death camps.

At Dachau, 2,000 people from 36 countries attended Jewish, Roman Catholic and Protestant services.

Approximately 30,000 people died between 1933 and 1945 at Dachau.

Millions of Jews, Poles, Russians and other groups — including Communists and other political opponents — were interned and executed in the 12 years of Nazi rule.

Max Fischer, state secretary of the Bavarian state government, told the gathering Dachau was "a symbol of the darkest chapter in German history, at which we Germans can only look back with consternation and shame, with horror and deepest regret."

"We cannot undo what was done here," Fischer said. "But we can prevent it from ever happening again."

Simone Veil of France, a former inmate and a former president of the European Parliament, attended the Dachau ceremonies.

Dachau is now a museum.

It was one of the concentration camp sites considered for a visit by President Reagan during his approaching state trip to West Germany. But it was ruled out in favor of Bergen-Belsen, whose location offered better security and communications facilities.

Speakers at the Dachau ceremonies made no reference to Reagan's plan to visit a war cemetery in Bitburg, West Germany, which contains the graves of SS troopers.

But in Ottawa, Canada, death camp survivor Elie Wiesel, who heads the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, told thousands of people at a Holocaust conference that "attempts made to compare the suffering of the victims to the suffering of the victimizers" were unacceptable and there would be "no reconciliation with the SS and what they symbolize."

Reagan has said many Nazi soldiers were victims of the regime that recruited them.

In France, President Francois Mitterrand paid homage to the 12,000 people who died in Struthof, about 40 miles from Strasbourg. The camp housed four crematoria and 17 barracks.

About 40,000 prisoners were held there from 1941 until France was liberated in 1944. They included French Jews and non-Jews, Gypsies and Germans.

The words "Never again" in German, English, Russian and Polish hang from the wall of the memorial at Dachau, West Germany, as two former inmates of this Nazi concentration camp walk past the memorial Sunday during a ceremony commemorating the 40th anniversary of the camp's liberation.

The United States, as it made clear at a recent meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in Paris, is only willing to consider looking at some studies which would alter, but not dramatically change, the current exchange system.

Instead, Washington has indicated it will press its partners at the Bonn summit for a specific date early next year to expand and modify the current General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, a series of guidelines for world trade.

The Americans want to roll back current protectionist measures, postpone others now planned and bring trade in high technology under the GATT guidelines.

The French, who see themselves as the champions of the developing nations in these matters, say the developed world should first abandon protectionist measures against Third World exports if it is serious about dismantling barriers to free trade.

They also say that the current, volatile international monetary system hurts the world's poorest nations the most, adding to their massive debt burdens and preventing any attempts at long-range economic planning.

The complexity of the issues assures that a mere two days of talks among the seven leaders will produce no solutions, but it will be another step on the way toward agreement among the heads of state that the economic problems facing each separate country are a shared problem of all the countries.

Reagan troubled by cemetery controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, preparing for the first European trip of his second administration, is said by his top aide to be deeply troubled by the controversy caused by his planned visit to a German military cemetery.

"Anguish, I believe, is a good choice of words to describe his mental condition," White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan says, adding that the president is standing firm about going to the graveyard near Bitburg, West Germany next Sunday as part of his 10-day trip.

Reagan departs Tuesday evening. "He is wounded by this internally," Regan said. "In his heart, he will be hurt at what has been said about him and his insensitivity when he's a very sensitive person."

Appearing Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," Regan said Reagan is simply "carrying out his word" to West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl to visit the cemetery as a way of demonstrating reconciliation 40 years after the end of World War II.

The cemetery contains the graves of 2,000 soldiers, including 40 members of the Nazi SS, the elite corps blamed for the attempted extermination of Jews and other minorities and massacres of other European civilians and Allied soldiers.

The New York Times said in its Sunday editions that some of the SS dead buried there were from the 2nd Waffen SS Panzer Division, which was held responsible for murdering 920 Soviet Jews in 1941 and the 1944 massacre of 642 civilians in Oradour-Sur-Glane, France.

The stop has drawn fire from Jewish leaders and U.S. veterans groups.

Last Friday, 82 senators approved a resolution urging Reagan to reassess the cemetery visit. A day earlier, 257 House members wrote Kohl urging him to withdraw the invitation.

Regan said that because of the criticism, "the president has been quite upset, as he's been a staunch friend of Israel...The president feels that being a friend as he is to Jews everywhere — to have this now overshadow a state visit is distressing."

Regan said the president would spend "10 or 15 minutes" at the Bitburg cemetery. By contrast, he said, Reagan would spend "over an hour or even longer" at the Bergen-Belsen death camp — a stop added to his itinerary after controversy developed over the cemetery visit.

He said that West Germans "are overwhelmingly in favor of this and they want it to go on."

Reagan's determination, meanwhile, has won support from former President Richard M. Nixon, The Washington Post reported.

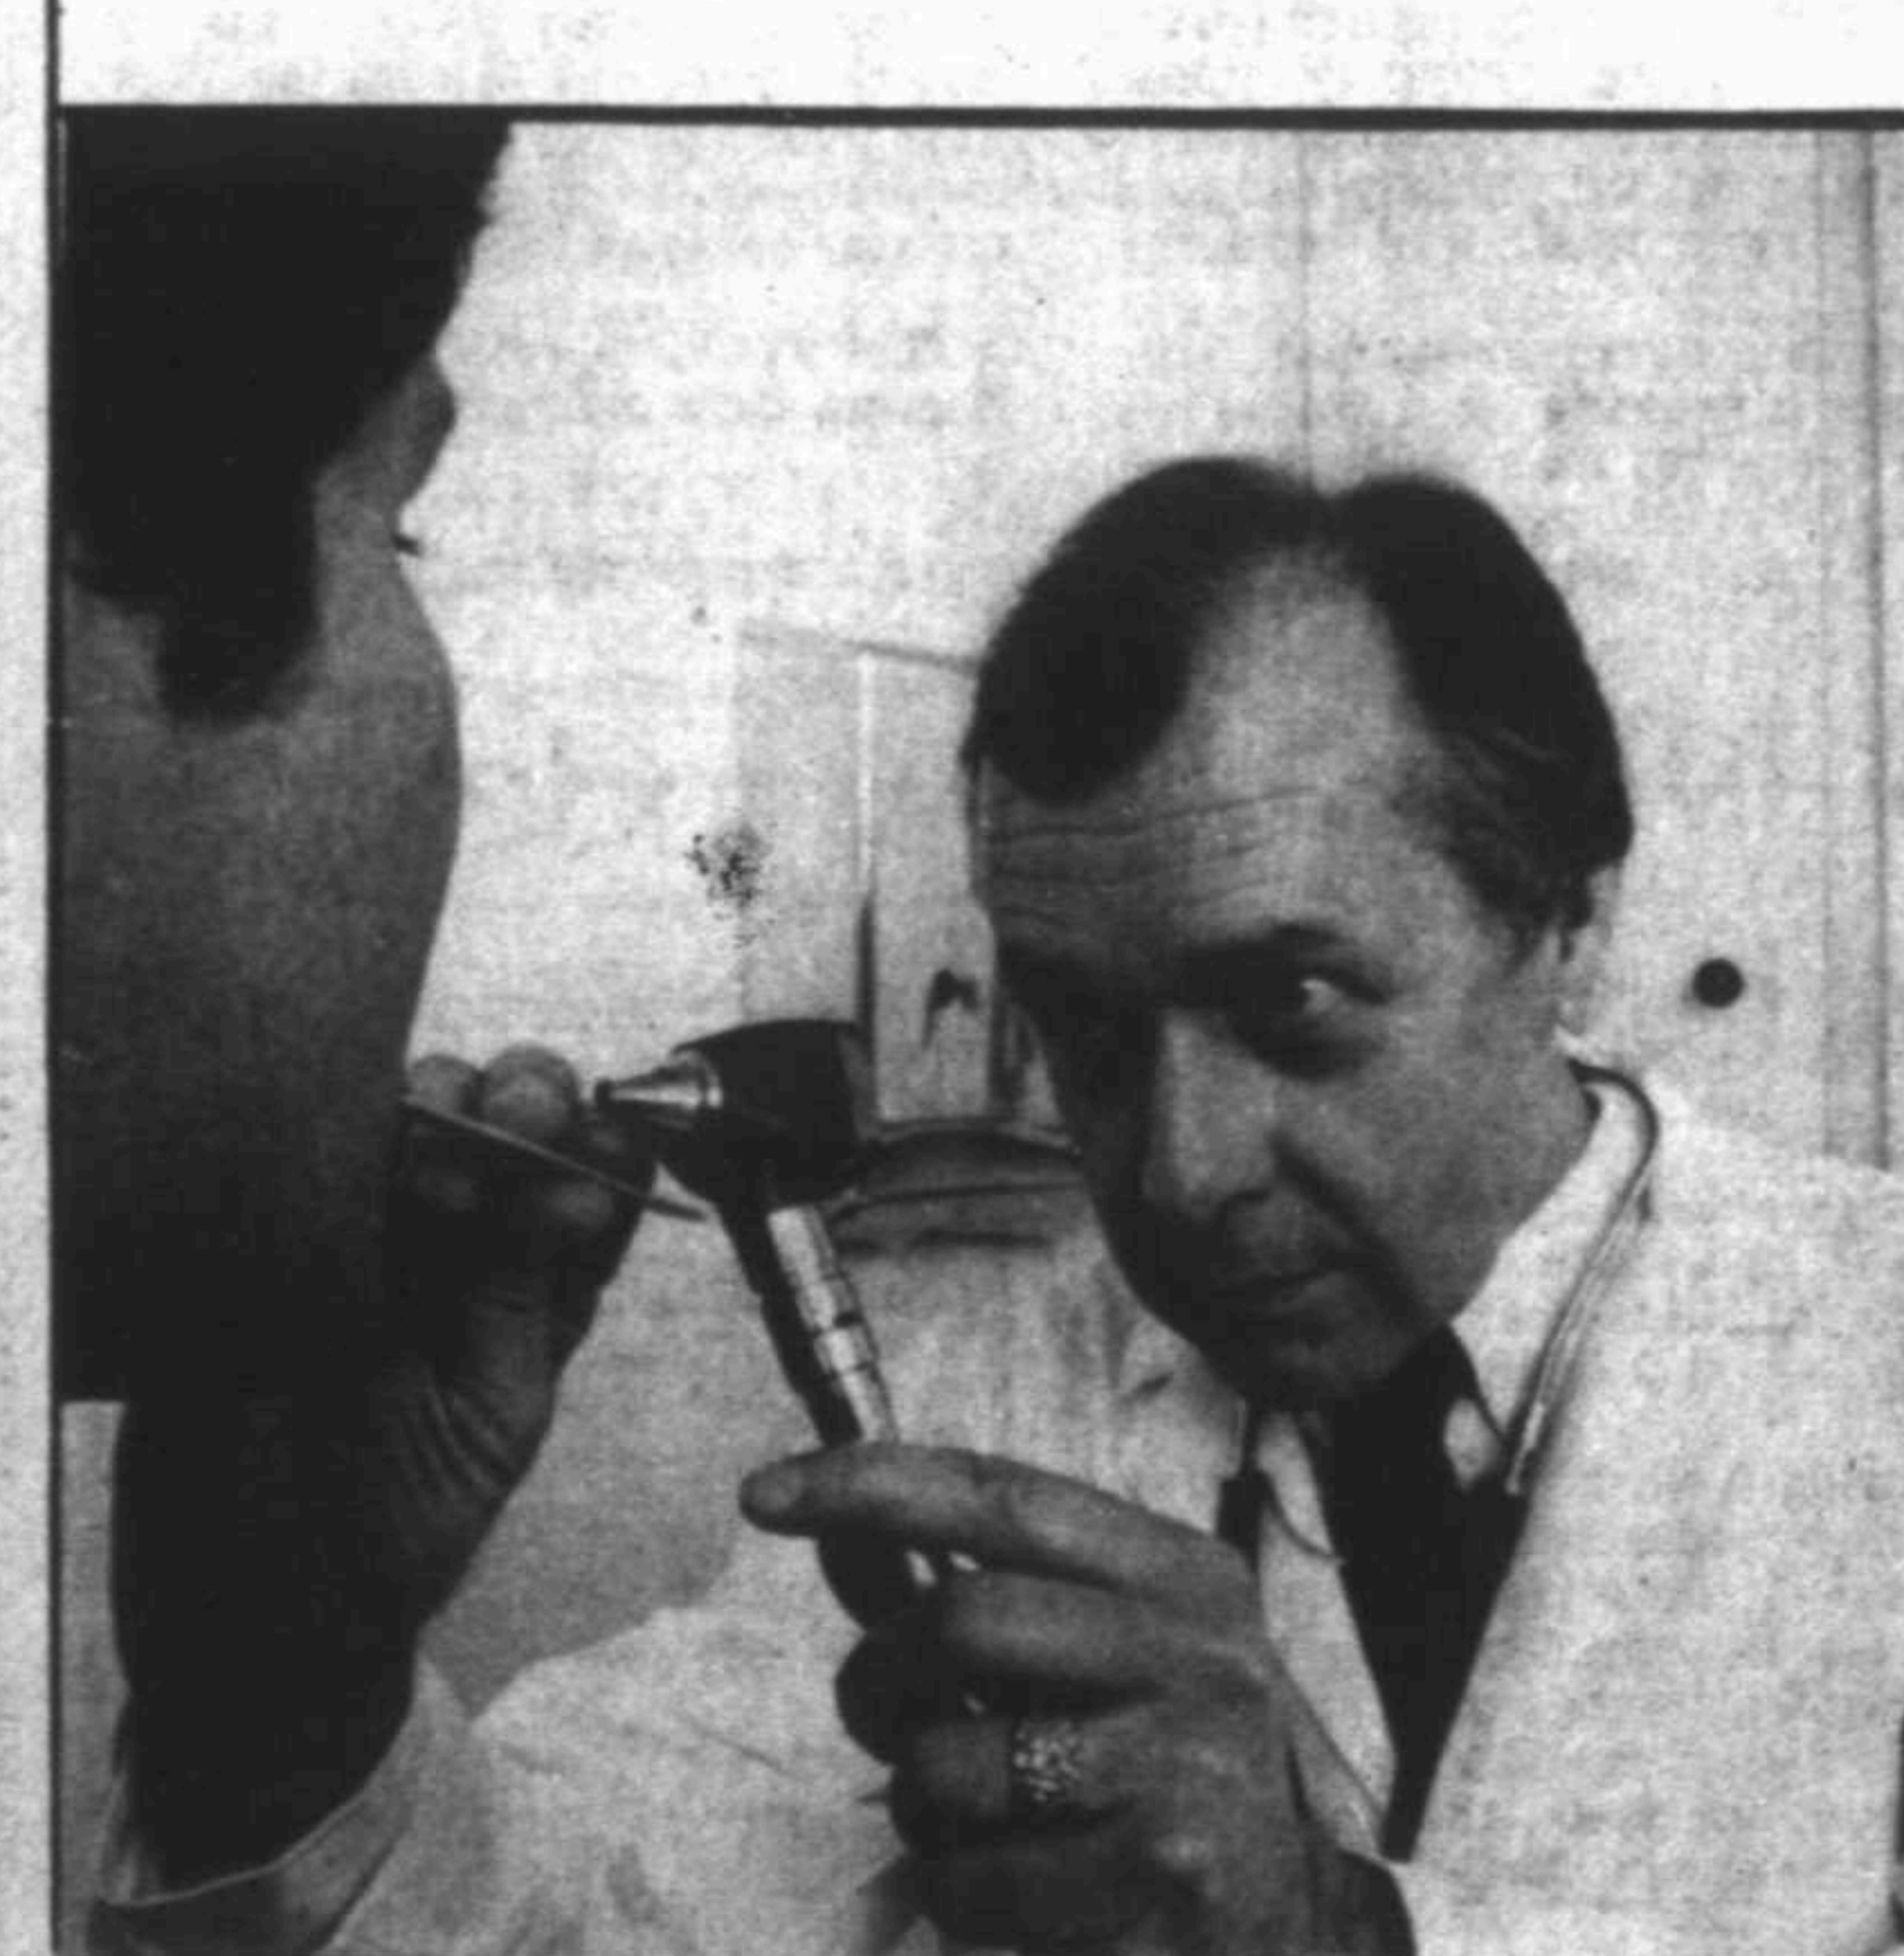

Nixon, whose views were solicited by White House officials, last week privately urged Reagan not to back down because it would be a sign of weakness and undermine the president's standing with Western European countries, the Post reported in today's editions, quoting unidentified sources. Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger also supported the visit, the newspaper said.

The former president was quoted as urging Reagan to use his appearance at the cemetery and at the site of the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp to "frame the visit in his terms," and deliver a dramatic and emotional address.

Chief 'Pepper-Upper' lauds Coca Cola switch

DALLAS (AP) — The president of Dr Pepper says his company's soft drink could get a boost from Coca Cola's revolutionary taste switch.

John Albers also says the change in Coca's recipe has thrown the cola-drinking segment of the market up for grabs.

"I think it will have a positive effect on us," said John Albers, president of Dallas-based Dr Pepper. "Before, there were two distinct cola tastes out there; now, there will be just one."

"It's helping to say that Dr Pepper is something special, with a different taste," he said.

Industry observers said Saturday that the introduction of a sweeter Coke, which reportedly will taste more like archival Pepsi-Cola, will drastically blur the line between the nation's two largest-selling colas.

Albers said that will make the taste of Dr Pepper more distinctive and throw the cola market wide open to competitors.

Albers said Dr Pepper will probably start stressing its taste difference in commercials to appear this summer.

COWBOY

The so-called "urban cowboy" movement was inspired by the 1990 John Travolta movie of the same name about a young Texas man who hangs out in Gilley's — an uproarious Houston honky-tonk — and learns how to ride a mechanical bull.

The movie ignited an upsurge in country music popularity and a fashion trend that had young adults dressing in cowboy hats and western shirts and skirts. Nightclubs switched from rock 'n' roll to country and installed menacing mechanical bulls — an apparatus that simulated a ride on a rodeo bull.

Now, five years later, urban cowboy apparently has seen the last roundup. Country music's share of the record business has dropped from about 15 percent at the beginning of this decade to 9 percent last year. Dozens of country nightclubs that once had 8,500 mechanical bulls have folded or switched to other kinds of music.

The casual dress of five years ago has given way to more formal styles of the yuppie — popular coinage for the upwardly mobile, young person with a fondness for nouvelle cuisine and chic health clubs.

"The chalk white yuppie suit has replaced the cowboy denim," says Kurt Barnard, publisher of the Barnard Retail Marketing Report, a fashion industry newsletter in New York City.

Under the restructuring, Arco said it will "sell or otherwise dispose" of:

— Its refinery in Philadelphia and about 1,000 gas stations, convenience stores and related marketing outlets in 12 Eastern states, the District of Columbia and the Chicago metropolitan area. That will leave Arco with about 1,000 retail outlets in Arizona, California, Nevada, Oregon and the state of Washington and a petroleum and chemical refining complex in Houston.

— All of its remaining non-coal mineral operations. The abandonment of the copper and molybdenum businesses come on top of Arco's decision last year to get out of the aluminum business.

— Certain unspecified investments that "no longer relate to its business strategies."

Arco also said it was cutting back spending on oil and natural gas exploration and writing down the value of certain exploration properties.

"The petroleum industry faces a difficult environment," said Robert O. Anderson, Arco's chairman. "We believe that those who are willing to confront it realistically will find substantial opportunities. This program puts us where we need to be in both operating and capital structure."

Arco said it would raise its quarterly dividend by 33.3 percent, to $1 a share from 75 cents, payable June 15 to shareholders of record on May 17.

It said that beginning May 1, it would spend $4 billion to buy back an estimated 50 million to 67 million shares of its stock, or between 21 percent and 28 percent of its outstanding shares.

The dual announcement of major cutbacks and a stock repurchase program followed the strategy Arco used last summer, when it said it would take a $765 million writedown against earnings for the planned sale of mineral and chemical holdings.

SHUTTLE

The astronauts are split into teams — Gold and Silver — and they will work in two 12-hour shifts in Space-lab, which was built by the 10-nation European Space Agency.

The flight is the second for the well-equipped laboratory, which is 23 feet long and 13 feet in diameter. It is mounted in Challenger's cargo bay, where it remains throughout the flight. The spacemen enter the lab from the shuttle cabin through a connecting tunnel and work there in shirtsleeves.

Commanding the flight is Robert Overmyer, veteran of an earlier shuttle trip. The others are pilot Fred Gregory; Dr. William Thornton and Norman Thagard, both physicians; Don Lind and Taylor Wang, both physicists; and Lodewijk van den Berg, a chemical engineer.

Overmyer, Thornton, Lind and Wang comprise the Gold Team. Gregory, Thagard and van den Berg, the Silver.

Thornton and Thagard will perform medical experiments and will observe how the squirrel monkeys and rats behave in weightlessness. No experiments are planned on the animals because the doctors primarily want to see how they adapt to new cages designed for Spacelab.

The rats will be dissected and their internal organs examined within hours after Challenger returns to Earth. Animal experiments are planned on future missions.

Animal rights groups opposed to the experiments planned to picket outside the gates.

Previous space monkeys had such names as Gordo, Able, Baker, Sam and Miss Sam. But the monkeys in Spacelab are known only by numbers — "3165" and "384-80" — because scientists don't want to "humanize" them, said Thornton.

Investigators "have some very encouraging leads," Walton said. "...I think we'll have a break in this relatively soon."

He said the holdup was "obviously a professional job. They had done their homework. They knew, apparently, where the alarms were, and more importantly, where the alarms weren't."

Wells Fargo, which transports money for clients, stores cash in the terminals vaults over the weekend until the banks open on Monday, LeSchack said.

The security service is not related to the Wells Fargo Bank of San Francisco, the nation's 10th-largest bank.

In other large robberies involving Wells Fargo, bandits made off with over $7 million from a company depot in West Hartford, Conn., on Sept. 12, 1983 — with the company robbery record — and with $6.3 million from a Wells Fargo terminal in Memphis, Tenn., on Thanksgiving Day 1983.

In the Tennessee heist, four people have been convicted and sentenced to prison, including a retired policeman and his sister sentenced in January to 35 years in prison each.

Court lets ruling stand in migrant workers' case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today allowed reimbursement for lawyer fees incurred by migrant Mexican-American farmworkers who blocked a date change for a Texas school district consolidation election.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that the migrant workers are entitled to have their lawyer fees paid for winning their voting rights case.

The farmworkers sued to prevent holding an Aug. 14, 1982, election for consolidation of the Progreso and Weslaco Independent School Districts.

Lawmakers begin voting in final month of session

AUSTIN (AP) — Two senators were expected to test their stamina today in a talkathon against a bill that would put Texas' million dollar shrimp and oyster fishing industry under state control.

Sens. Carl Parker and Carlos Truan tried personal pleas, jokes and amendments to defeat the proposal Thursday but lacked the votes.

They got a reprieve, however, when the Senate quit until today, which is day 112 in the 140-day session.

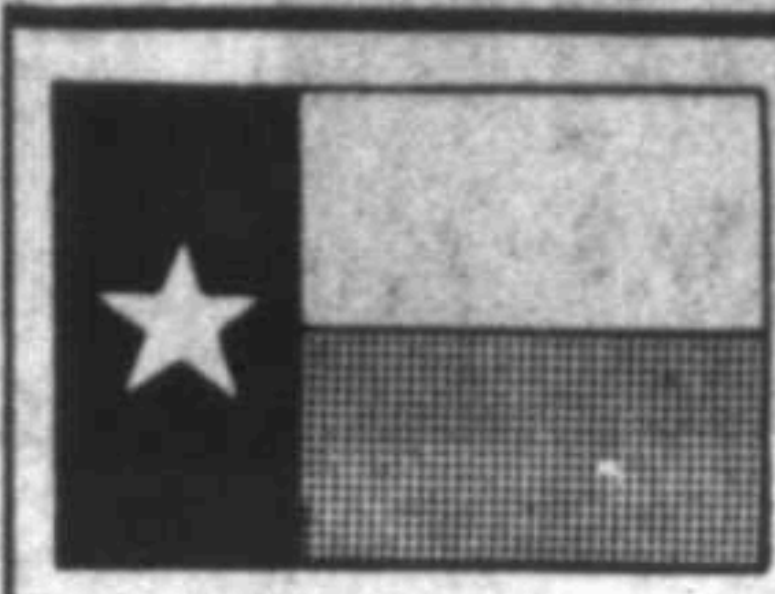

Senate sponsor Tati Santiesteban kept at least 17 or 18 votes on his side in beating back amendments by Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Truan, D-Corpus Christi.

During the two-hour debate Thursday, Truan said, "I'm not going to stand for regulatory authority to apply to the counties I represent," and he asked his colleagues to extend to him the courtesy of exempting five counties. They refused 17-11.

Debate broke off after Parker had proposed an amendment that would automatically remove Parks and Wildlife Department regulation of shrimp and oyster fishing after two years.

Parker joked that tampering with the industry could "cut out shrimp at the private clubs" legislators frequent in Austin. "You wouldn't be able to get a shrimp cocktail at the Austin Club, Headliners Club or the Quorum Club — God forbid, even the Quorum Club," Parker said.

The issue has been described as matching bay shrimpers against

STATE

Gulf of Mexico shrimpers, who reportedly favor Santiesteban's bill. At a recent meeting of fishermen near Galveston, Santiesteban was called the "great shrimp trawler operator from El Paso."

Santiesteban, however, is chairman of the Senate Natural Resources Committee, and sponsors many bills that are assigned to the committee.

He told reporters the Parks and Wildlife Department wanted the bill and would be "willing to take it (regulatory authority)."

Parker said the proposal would put the livelihood of bay shrimpers "at the whim of some bureaucrat."

Bay shrimpers comprise 80 percent of the total shrimp fleet in Texas but take in less than 20 percent of the total catch, according to background material on Santiesteban's bill.

Backed up behind the shrimp and oyster bill is a proposal to triple college tuition this fall. Several conservative senators balked Thursday at accepting a two-year limit on tuition increases.

Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, said limiting the tuition increase to two years, awaiting a study of higher education before the 1987 legislative session, would leave students confused.

"We need to let the (entering) students know what the costs are going to be so they can plan," Blake said.

The bill tripling tuition this fall and raising it again for the 1988-89 school year has been tentatively approved by the Senate on an 18-11 vote. Those 11 in opposition, however, could block a final vote, and Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, said, "We've got 11 votes, and we're sticking."

A bill that would repeal the law prohibiting the sale of 42 items on consecutive weekend days has been approved by a House committee, and could be voted on this week.

"We anticipate it may come up in House this week, in which event we may wait for the House bill," said Senate sponsor Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls. "Otherwise, we anticipate voting it out of State Affairs (Committee) this week."

The state, according to some estimates, would gain an additional $24 million in sales tax revenue if the Blue Law is repealed, and Farabee said, "We can't afford to leave that $24 million on the table."

City declares war on repeat offenders

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Law enforcement officials and Mayor Henry Cisneros say they want to target career criminals for intensive investigation and prosecution, but some authorities wonder about the plan's legal merits.

Cisneros is billing the intensive campaign to retire repeat offenders as the "highest priority" in the next municipal budget.

The multimillion-dollar war on crime would utilize increased police surveillance with sophisticated equipment, undercover informants and sting operations to catch repeat offenders, authorities said.

"The goal is simple: convict them and send them away for a long time," Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap said. "I think we'll convict more of these maggots and send them away if we concentrate our resources as the mayor and I have suggested."

Officials said the campaign is patterned on a successful Washington, D.C., program.

Plans for San Antonio's repeat offender project call for 40 to 50 officers to be assigned for surveillance of people whom police believe will commit crimes.

Authorities said the project will cost about $2.3 million in the first year.

The program, in addition to a special 40-man police unit, involves a team of assistant district attorneys who would work with police on identifying likely targets, bringing them in and prosecuting them successfully.

But prosecutors will study legal and constitutional questions that may arise from targeting known criminals for special treatment by authorities.

"What we're doing right now is dealing with this from a 'legal' standpoint, not a 'civil liberties' standpoint," said Millsap. "We're looking at what is permissible under the law. As district attorney, I'll be guided to the answers to that question."

Four San Antonio officials will go to Washington this week to observe the three-year-old Repeat Offender Processing and Enforcement (ROPE) project.

Inspector Edward Spurlock, head of ROPE, said the project employs 60 officers. Both officers and informants made extensive use of taping targets in the act of committing or planning a crime.

Officials said a task force composed of city officials, the district attorney's office and police and sheriff's departments has already had four meetings.

Assistant City Manager William Donahue told the San Antonio Light that the task force is still trying to determine who is a repeat offender.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K952 ♥QJ1093 ♦Q73 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♦ Pass
2 ♣ Dble Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—Partner's double is not for takeout—it is for penalties. Had he wanted to hear from you, he would have doubled one club! With your overall values, you should be more than happy to accept his decision. Pass.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ ♥KQJ63 ♦A987 ♣65
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ 2 ♣ 2 NT Pass
? What do you bid now?
A.—Since your hand is slightly unbalanced, you should try to play at a suit contract, if possible. Partner could easily have three hearts for his bid, in which case four hearts might be a better contract. Bid three diamonds to tell partner you are two-suited. If he rebids three hearts, however, your next bid should be three no trump to describe a 2-5-4-2 distribution. He should now know where to place the contract.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠6 ♥AK1052 ♦KJ8 ♣KQ53
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 1 NT Pass
? What do you bid now?
A.—You have a very good hand, but not enough to insist on game. Therefore, you cannot jump shift. Again, it is your duty to tell partner that you have a distributional hand. Bid two clubs—unless partner can act again voluntarily, you won't have sufficient values for game.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q853 ♥K72 ♦AKJ763
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
3 ♣ Pass 4 ♥ Pass
? What do you bid now?

A.—With the ace of hearts confirmed in partner's hand by his cuebid, it is simply a matter of whether to bid six spades or seven. Blackwood won't help—you need the Grand Slam Force. Bid five no trump. That asks partner to bid a grand slam if he holds two of the top three trump honors, or settle for a small slam with only one. If he has none, he should not have made a jump shift in that suit.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A5 ♥AKQJ73 ♦1092 ♣K5
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ 1 ♠ Pass 2 ♣ ?
What do you bid now?

A.—Partner did not have enough to bid freely after the overall, but that doesn't mean that he is completely broke. A few strategically placed cards in his hand could give you play for game. However, we do feel that nine tricks will be easier to make than ten, so we suggest you make your intentions known to partner by bidding two no trump now.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ3 ♥984 ♦A85 ♣K1092
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
Pass Pass 1 ♦ Pass
1 NT Pass Pass Dble ?
What action do you take?

A.—You could not possibly have more for your response, and partner should be told of that. The way to do so is to redouble. East was hoping that his partner held your hand—now you must make him pay for his temerity in reopening the bidding.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" Census again

Want to make a city official's day? Just remind him or her that it's only five years until the next census.

Now it's true that just the thought of the census is enough to send anyone reeling, but it's particularly traumatic for a city official. Nationwide, the 1980 census, for example, spawned numerous lawsuits from big cities contesting the head count results. Cities mainly challenged the numbers on black and Hispanic populations.

In the 1980 census, Midland challenged its population figures, too, and with good reason. Anyone who lived here at the time surely remembers the Tall City was in the final stages of an oil boom that brought in literally thousands of new residents and significantly altered the city's demographics. Those residents also will remember the shortage of housing, demolished streets, inadequate sewer and water facilities — all the trappings of a city that has outgrown its status. Those problems are bad enough, of course, but there are some even worse. An undercount carries political and economic consequences. It diminishes representation among minority groups, and results in fewer federal and state dollars for programs tied to official population figures.

Maybe the upcoming 1990 census won't be so controversial. The Census Bureau is already testing forms, new procedures and automated equipment designed to speed tabulation of responses. Officials hope to keep errors to a minimum.

Roy Bancroft of the Census Bureau's public affairs department said recently: "We will be attempting to get more community cooperation in finding and counting everyone. We're always striving for 100 percent, but realistically, it is impossible in our highly mobile society."

That's what we said in 1980.

Honoring artists

National awards in a variety of activities have been handed out for years, but for some reason American artists and their patrons have been overlooked. Two years ago, President Reagan, to his credit, decided to remedy this oversight. He proposed to Congress that it establish the National Medal for the Arts to be presented each year to artists and those who make their artistry possible. Congress quickly approved.

One of the early supporters of the President's worthy project was Frank Hodsoll, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts. He said, "We already have a National Medal of Science to recognize the major contributions in that area, and there ought to be one for the arts, which is equally important to the nation."

This week Mr. Reagan inaugurated the program by presenting 12 sterling silver medals to artists and patrons. Prominent among the worthy recipients was the distinguished soprano Leontyne Price, who showed her appreciation by kissing the medal handed to her in the East Room of the White House.

The list included Georgia O'Keefe, acclaimed for her paintings of the American Southwest, the teacher and dancer and choreographer Martha Graham, and the sculptress Louise Nevelson. These are typical of the sterling caliber of those honored with the nation's first medal citing distinguished achievement in the world of art.

The President and the Congress have contributed to the nation's culture by creating the National Medal of Arts. The awards are off to a brilliant start.

Another View:

Support for Alfonsin

The cordial reception accorded to Argentine President Raul Alfonsin on his recent state visit to Washington for talks with President Reagan was a good sign of pragmatic flexibility of an administration often accused of ideological rigidity in foreign policy.

As leader of the middle-class Radical Party, Alfonsin, a popular lawyer pledged to the restoration of human rights in his country, took office a year ago in Argentina's first national elections in a decade, ending eight years of autocratic military rule.

Argentina is still a bundle of contradictions. A nation rich in natural resources, its government has been wrestling with triple digit inflation on and off for several years. Alfonsin also inherited a strange legacy when he took office, as he tried to restore a national sense of self-respect for his countrymen in the lingering aftermath of their ill-advised military escapade in the Falkland Islands three years ago.

Most of all, however, he had to flush out into the open the anti-leftist "dirty war" of the generals that caused the disappearance of thousands of their political opponents from 1976 to 1983. The worst part was the kidnapping of hundreds of infants and small children of dissidents, a dark chapter in Argentine history that just came to light several days ago. Hard as it is for decent people to imagine such an outrage, many of the children were secretly passed along to pro-government families.

There is some significance in the fact that the Argentine political process finally allowed for a major change from a military government through peaceful elections. The change helped to highlight former U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick's useful distinction between an autocratic military dictatorship and a totalitarian Marxist regime. Democratic change comes only with great difficulty to the former, but almost never to the latter.

It is all the more reason for the United States to continue cultivating closer ties with Alfonsin and the new civilian government he now heads.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, April 29, the 119th day of 1985. There are 246 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

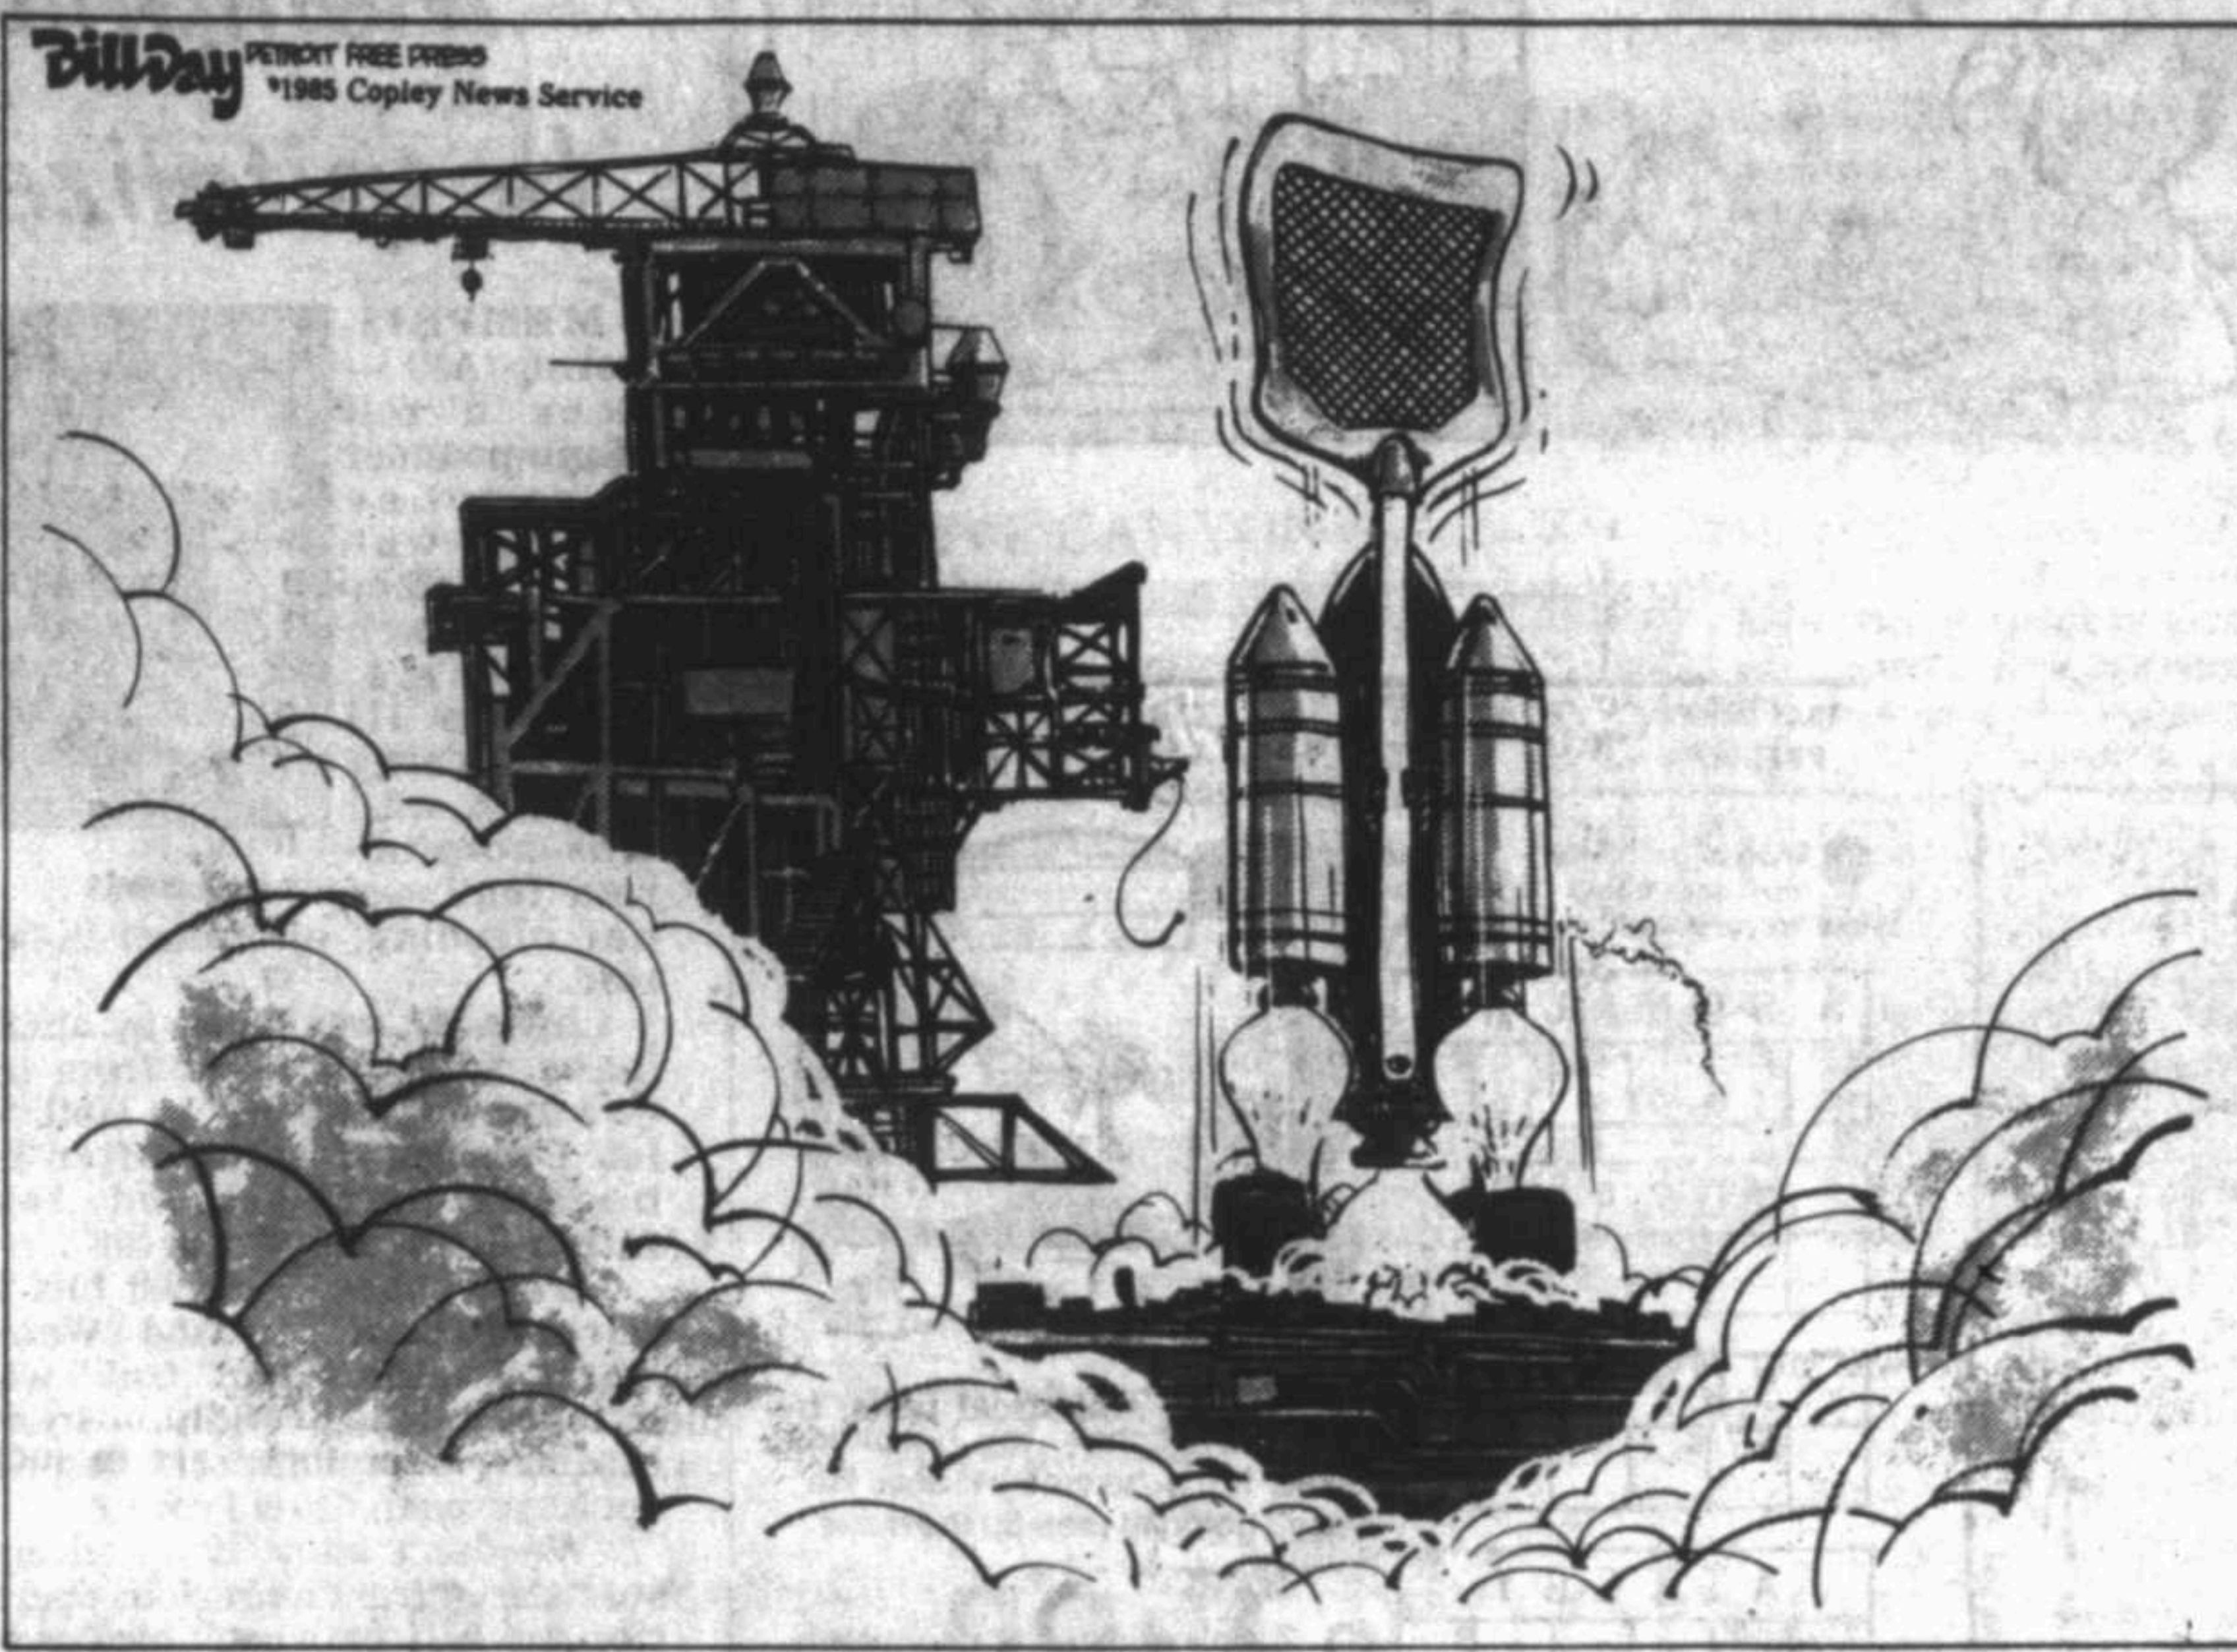

On April 29, 1945, American soldiers liberated the Nazi concentration camp in Dachau, Germany, where tens of thousands of people had perished.

On this date:

In 1429, Joan of Arc entered the besieged city of Orleans to lead a victory over the English.

In 1861, Maryland's House of Delegates voted against seceding from the Union.

In 1862, New Orleans fell to Union forces during the Civil War.

JACK ANDERSON

Choppers bringing worst fears

WASHINGTON — The worst fears of federal officials who uncovered the illegal sale of American helicopters to North Korea have been confirmed by the latest top-secret intelligence from Seoul: North Korea apparently has already penetrated South Korean airspace with the choppers.

Jack Anderson

In fact, high administration officials have told us that the South Korean air force is so alarmed at overflights by look-alikes of the helicopters we supply that it has grounded its own U.S.-made choppers at various times.

The idea is to make sure that if ground troops (and anti-aircraft units) see one of the Hughes helicopters nosing around south of the demilitarized zone at a designated time, they'll know it's a North Korean infiltrator.

In a war or emergency situation, it's obvious that the North Koreans could use their look-alikes to create confusion in South Korean defense forces and perhaps gain a crucial advantage in the early stages of an invasion.

The tragedy is that U.S. intelligence had several major clues that the helicopter diversion to North Korea was taking place, but the right people in the Defense and Commerce departments — the people who certainly would have put a quick stop to it — were never informed. Here's the frustrating story:

In September 1983, U.S. Customs agents received detailed information that the North Koreans were illegally acquiring Hughes helicopters through a West German company. In fact, customs intelligence reported, two helicopters — the first of an eventual 87 — had been shipped out of the United States six months earlier. Incidentally, the bill of lading filed with the Customs Service had actually listed a North Korean company as the recipient.

For still unexplained reasons, customs did not share this alarming intelligence with the Commerce Department, whose undersecretary for international trade, Lionel Olmer, could have halted further shipments. And although customs did pass the information along to the Defense Intelligence Agency, the DIA for some reason did not pass it on to the Pentagon official who undoubtedly would have spotted the security breach: Assistant Defense Secretary Richard Perle.

With no one barring the door, the West German company was able to buy and send five more shipments to North Korea. The last load before Commerce caught on was sent in November. Fifteen helicopters left Los Angeles on a Panamanian freighter to Antwerp, Belgium. They were then loaded onto trucks and taken to Rotterdam, the Netherlands. On Dec. 10, the choppers were loaded onto a Soviet ship, the K.H. Prorokov, which carried them to Hong Kong and finally to North Korea.

It wasn't till January that Commerce learned in general about the illegal diversion of the helicopters and began an investigation. (Hughes Helicopter Co. was cleared; Commerce is investigating the West German businessman who was crucial to the operation.)

A high White House official described the helicopter diversion as "one of the most serious we've ever had" in more than a decade of Soviet-bloc efforts to beg, borrow and steal American technology.

The civilian helicopters North Korea obtained can easily be converted into military aircraft by adding machine guns, anti-tank rockets and air-to-ground missiles. But the confusion factor could be more important in the always sensitive DMZ area, because the South Koreans have more than 200 identical Hughes helicopters.

UNDER THE DOME: A backroom deal has put Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., in charge of arms-control matters on the Foreign Relations Committee, to the dismay of those who know him as a determined opponent of arms agreements with the Soviet Union.

Although he is the senior member of the committee, Helms waived the chairmanship so he could remain head of the Agriculture Committee and protect his tobacco-growing North Carolina constituents. No senator may be chairman of more than one committee — or of two subcommittees on the same committee. Helms was already chairman of the Latin America subcommittee, and so couldn't take over arms control as well.

But the new committee chairman, Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who owes his chairmanship to Helms' refusal to exercise seniority, obligingly gave Helms the supervision of arms control he wanted — by reorganizing the arms-control subcommittee out of existence and privately assuring Helms that he would be informally in charge of arms control, which is now handled by the committee as a whole.

Affable Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., apparently was stung by the nickname pinned on him because of his imposing girth: "Huge" Howell. The senator — whose actual weight is a tightly held secret — has gone on a diet and already has lost 20 pounds. He has confided to friends that he feels great. New monicker: Hungry Howell.

State Department officials have been quietly urging the House Foreign Affairs Committee to temper its traditional enthusiasm for Israel. The officials want the committee to go slow on new aid requests until Israel shows signs that it will make genuine economic reforms and not just count on U.S. aid to support its fragile economy.

CHARLEY REESE

Ostriches in Congress risk lives

It would be a mistake to view the issue of U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters as a test of fortitude of the Democratic majority in the House. No test is necessary. Grown men who quake before unarmed feminists should not be expected to stand firm against the Soviet Union and its proxies.

There are no valid arguments against aiding the contras who want to replace the communist government in Managua with a democratic government. To make even a semblance of an argument, the Democrats have to pretend the Soviet Union does not exist.

Charley Reese

Of course men and women who are not ostriches know the Soviet Union does in fact exist. They know that it is not necessary to provide Nicaragua with $350 million in high tech armaments, a 119,000-man army, and advisors from the Soviet Union, Cuba, East Germany, Bulgaria, Libya, North Korea and the PLO just to establish socialism in Nicaragua.

They know that building deep water ports and 10,000-foot runways with concrete protective coverings for planes while the people are hungry and short of almost every civilian commodity does not indicate a government which is concerned about the people of Nicaragua.

They know that Cubans who stand before Nicaraguan soldiers every morning and deliver a half hour lecture on Marxism-Leninism are not school teachers. They know that block spies, food rationing, censorship, harassment of the church, confiscation of private property, forced relocation of people, and an army and a labor organization which belong to the party are all characteristics of a communist government.

People who are not ostriches know when the present leaders of Nicaragua as early as 1974 announced themselves as communists in a published manifesto that those Americans who say they are not communists are either fools or liars. They know that a government whose national anthem refers to Americans as the enemy of mankind and whose national seal depicts a U.S. Marine being beheaded is not a friendly government.

Nor do ordinary Americans fall for the communist propaganda line that the communists in Managua turned to Moscow and Havana only because grumpy old Uncle Sam was not nice to them. Sensible Americans not afflicted with the liberal amnesia recall that the Carter administration actively assisted the Sandinista Revolution, deposed the Somoza government for them, and immediately handed them $170 million in aid and supported them in obtaining loans from international organizations.

Listening to Democratic and Republican liberals trying to rationalize the behavior of a foreign enemy and justify turning our backs on people who share our ideals, you are tempted to question their patriotism. As Joseph Sobran put it ever so nicely, however, a person has to have some patriotism before it can be questioned.

It is clear that what is going on in Nicaragua is directed from Moscow and aimed at the United States. Central America's 13 million people are a two-day drive from the U.S. border. Mexico's 75 million are on the U.S. border. Even the janitor at the Kremlin can easily see the advantage to Moscow of having those countries under communist governments allied to and armed by the Soviet Union.

Even the Kremlin's janitor can understand that for the United States to turn its back on the Nicaraguan democrats sends an encouraging message to all the communists in those countries and a demoralizing message to all the lovers of liberty.

That some members of the House and Senate cannot see these obvious things or, seeing them, cannot find the courage to thwart the Kremlin's plans is as ominous for America's future as the massive Soviet military buildup.

Unfortunately, President Reagan has not done a good job of selling his policy, in part because it is itself a weak policy. The one valid criticism is that it is foolish to finance the overthrow of a government with which you have diplomatic relations. Reagan should answer that by breaking relations with Nicaragua and recognizing a government in exile.

We will fight communism in Central America or we will fight it on the U.S. border. I don't know how you feel but I do not look kindly upon those who want to bring war to our borders.

Charley Reese is a syndicated columnist for Sun Belt Syndicate.

EVANS & NOVAK

No place for Scoop's democrats

WASHINGTON — Just how deep lie the roots of the House Democratic victory on Nicaragua is suggested by an anti-contras lobby group's private report quoting Majority Leader Jim Wright as blessing the Managua regime's staged elections.

An internal memorandum by the Coalition for a New Foreign and Military Policy quotes Wright as telling "peace" lobbyists in his Fort Worth district in February: "The Sandinistas might have come in by force, but they (have) been ratified by elections."

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The tone of Tuesday's House debate conformed to the mindset of some 15 Democratic House members who last summer signed an appeal for financial aid to Marxist guerrillas in El Salvador. One of them, now Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, went to Managua to serve as a conduit for successful Sandinista lobbying of Congress.

To reassure themselves about the danger inherent in this game, Democrats point to low American public support for the contras. But that only reflects years of hesitancy by the White House staff and State Department to commit the president's full prestige to Central America.

Communications Director Pat Buchanan is the first senior White House aide who sees no higher priority than such a commitment. But he was blocked in seeking an 11th-hour Reagan speech before the contra vote, failing to Republican preoccupation with the budget. The counterpoint to Democratic obsession with protecting Sandinistas is Republican apathy over saving contras.

Yet, word has filtered up to Capitol Hill of how a steely-eyed Buchanan in White House meetings promises retribution for the Democrats if Central America is lost. That causes trepidation among those Democrats who attended a recent dinner of the Coalition for a Democratic Majority (CDM), the Scoop Jackson remnant.

At the dinner, Sen. Sam Nunn (seconded by House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Dante Fascell) proposed a reasonable compromise for contra aid. It was embraced a week later in a presidential letter after administration negotiations with Nunn and fellow Jacksonite Sens. David Boren and Bennett Johnston.

That enabled aid to pass the Senate, but with only 10 Democratic votes. Its impact in the House was non-existent. Wright and Foley neither turned up at the CDM dinner nor showed interest in Nunn's initiative.

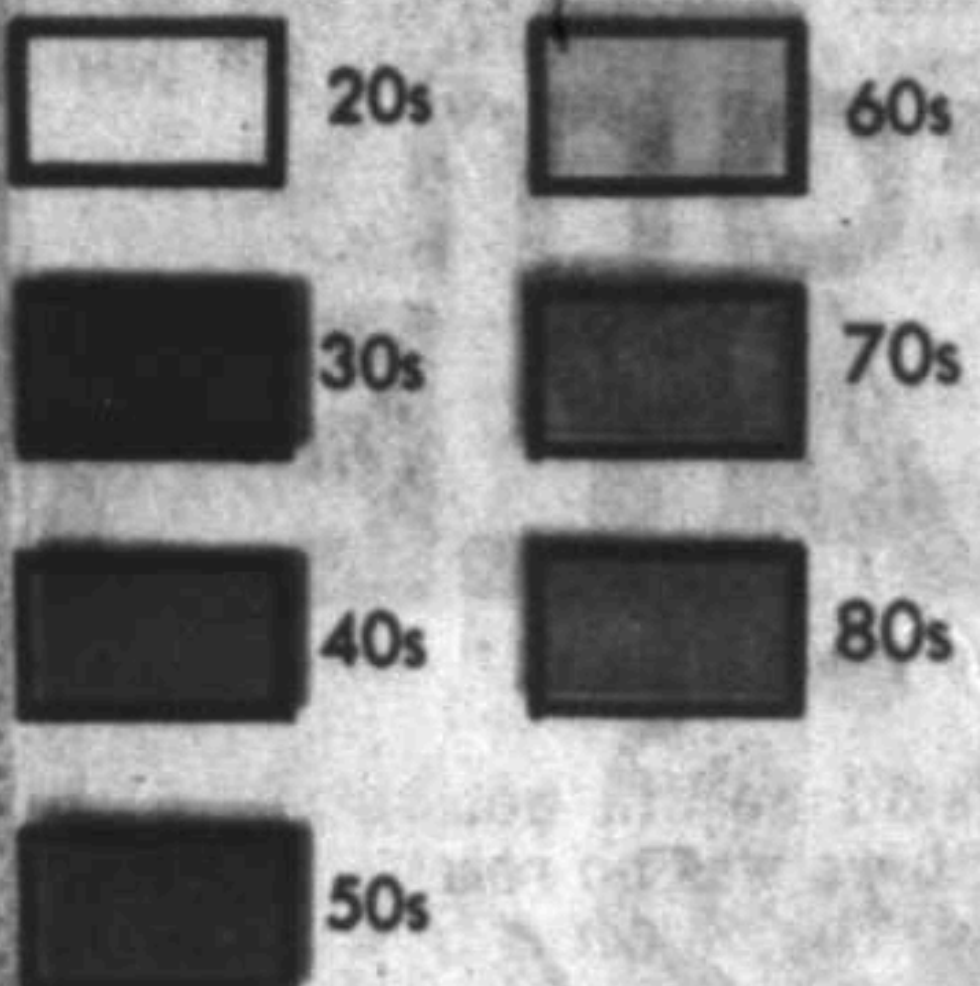

Boren lectured a closed-door Senate Democratic Conference to practice the "moderation" that party leaders nor preach. But when he says, "We'll have another Cuba (in Nicaragua), only you can't walk to the United States from Cuba," he turns off fellow Democrats — even Jim Wright, hurrying to the speakership.

Counties forecasts

Midland, Bexar, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Garza, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin, Howard, Sterling, Coke, Irion and Tom Green counties. Tonight, partly cloudy, isolated evening thunderstorms, probability of rain less than 20 percent and low near 60. Light variable winds.

Tuesday, partly cloudy, high mid-80s and wind northwest 5 to 15 mph.

Midland again has chance for showers

From Staff and Wire Reports

Rain may again fall on the Midland area tonight as partly cloudy skies bring the possibility of isolated evening thunderstorms, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Forecasters expect tonight's low near 50 to warm to a high in the middle 80s Tuesday. Light and variable winds should increase from the northwest Tuesday at 5 to 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 89 was 4 degrees below the record set in 1948. This morning's low was 15 degrees above the 1968 record of 41.

STATE

A flash flood and tornado watch remained in effect today across North Texas in the wake of violent thunderstorms that spawned damaging winds, hail and torrential rain, resulting in the deaths of at least nine people.

One person was reported missing following 24 hours of violent thunderstorms, which also generated at least four reports of tornados late Sunday and early today.

An 81-year-old Shep woman died when a twister lifted her frame house off its foundations and hurled it more than 100 yards into a field Sunday night, Taylor County sheriff's officers said.

The body of Emma Talley was found in the wreckage. Her husband, 83-year-old Alva Talley, was admitted to Ballinger Memorial Hospital with cuts and abrasions, said sheriff's Deputy Ricardo Campos.

The twister moved about 1 1/2 miles before striking the Talley home, located in the southwest corner of Taylor County near the Nolan County line.

Authorities said three Rockwall residents, including the town's fire chief, died at a flash flood Saturday night in the community about 15 miles northeast of Dallas.

NATION

Tornado watches were posted for much of central and northern Texas today following a deadly weekend storm, while fair skies prevailed over much of the rest of the nation.

Nine people were killed in the storm that unleashed torrential rains and 18 tornados in Texas. The National Severe Storms Forecast Center issued a tornado watch, while heavy rain Sunday prompted a flash flood watch today for north-central and northeastern Texas.

White Sox' victory last straw for Yankees' Berra

Associated Press

Ozzie Guillen and Yogi Berra both took a hike — but Guillen's was a happy 90-foot trot to first base while Berra walked the plank.

Shortly after the Yankees lost for the third time in a row and 10th in 16 games this young season — the Chicago White Sox beat them 4-3 when Joe Cowley walked Guillen with the bases loaded and two out in the bottom of the ninth inning to force in the winning run — the hard-to-please owner fired Berra and replaced him with — who else? — Billy Martin.

The move overshadowed Tommy John's first victory since last August as California handed Seattle its eighth straight setback 2-1. Walt Terrell's first American League shutout as Detroit's Milwaukee 5-0 and Minnesota's eighth consecutive victory, a 10-1 pounding of Oakland.

Greg Walker opened the Chicago ninth with a single and Carlton Fisk, who homered in the second inning, sacrificed. Oscar Gamble, who hit a game-tying two-run homer in the seventh, was walked intentionally and Daryl Boston filed out, but pinch-hitter Jerry Hairston walked to fill the bases before Cowley walked Guillen on four pitches.

"I don't think I've ever walked on four pitches in my life," said Guillen. "I'm only a little guy at 150 pounds and most of the time the pitchers throw strikes and say, 'Hit it.' That's why I'm always swinging. I said to myself I wouldn't swing until he got two strikes on me. The first pitch was a ball. The next one was close, but when he called it a ball I decided to wait. The last two were not close."

Angels 2, Mariners 1
Tommy John allowed seven hits in 5 2-3 innings for his first victory since last Aug. 6, leaving the game when he strained an abdominal muscle. Gary Pettis opened the California first with a triple and, after Rod Carew walked, they worked a double steal for the first run. In the second, Bobby Grich walked, took second on a groundout, went to third on a wild pitch and scored on

American League

Donnie Scott's passed ball. Seattle scored in the fifth on Phil Bradley's homer.

"I've always pitched well in this ballpark (the Kingdome) and against the Mariners," said the 41-year-old John, who snapped a personal five-game losing streak.

Tigers 5, Brewers 0
Terrell, who entered the game with a 5.68 earned run average, hurled a four-hitter while Alan Trammell and Lance Parrish cracked eighth-inning home runs off loser Teddy Higuera. It was the third straight victory for the Tigers after a brief slump in which they dropped six of eight.

Terrell is 2-0 in the AL, both victories coming against Milwaukee, which hasn't managed an earned run against him in 15 2-3 innings. Against the rest of the league, Terrell has given up 12 earned runs in 12 2-3 innings.

"There is no book on any team because the book can always change," he said. "You can't pattern-pitch them because they are too good of hitters. They'll adjust. They hit the pitches I wanted them to hit," Terrell said. "They hit 'em and we caught 'em."

Twins 10, A's 1
Mickey Hatcher went 4-for-5, extending his consecutive hit streak to nine at-bats before flying out in the seventh inning. Hatcher, who went 5-for-5 Saturday, scored twice and capped the Twins' five-run sixth inning with a two-run single. He tied Tony Oliva's team record of nine straight hits and came within three of the major-league record of 12, set by Mike "Pinky" Higgins of Boston in 1958 and equaled by Walt Drobot of Detroit in 1962. Hatcher also tied several players for the AL record of nine hits in two consecutive nine-inning games. Mike Smithson allowed seven hits and extended his string of shutout innings to 16 2-3 before surrendering an eighth-inning run.

"Sometimes I get lucky, and I think I got a two-game lucky streak," Hatcher said. "I'm feeling comfortable at the plate and seeing the ball well. Just a couple of games ago I was struggling and didn't feel comfortable, so I watched films of myself when I was going good and realized I didn't have the plate covered. I just moved up on the plate."

Orioles 8, Indians 7
A two-run double by Eddie Murray tied the score and the winning run scored on pinch-hitter John Lowenstein's sacrifice fly as Baltimore came from behind with three runs in the eighth inning. The Indians, who led 7-1 in the fourth inning, used five pitchers in the eighth.

Bert Blyleven was lifted after walking Jim Dwyer to start the inning and pinch-hitter Fritz Connally singled off the glove of reliever Dave Von Ohlen, who was replaced by Tom Waddell. After a checked-swing single by Cal Ripken loaded the bases, Eddie Murray double home two runs, tying the score. Mike Jeffcoat intentionally walked Fred Lynn, and Lowenstein's sacrifice fly came off Rich Thompson, who was making his major-league debut.

Blue Jays 6, Rangers 3
Willie Upshaw hit two home runs and Buck Martinez and George Bell also homered while Doyle Alexander scattered 10 hits, including home runs by Cliff Johnson and Gary Ward. Loser Mike Mason went 5 2-3 innings, giving up four runs on five hits.

Royals 5, Red Sox 2
Frank White hit two home runs in a game for the third time in his 12-year major-league career to pace the visiting Royals. White, who also had a double, lined his second homer of the season off the light tower atop the left-field wall in the second inning and drilled his 90th career home run into the screen in left-center in the sixth. Both came with the bases empty.

TULSA, Okla. — Top-seeded Jimmy Connors needed just an hour and 27 minutes Sunday to dispose of Yannick Noah of France 6-4, 6-4 in the final of the Bank of Oklahoma Tennis Classic.

FOOTBALL

SAN ANTONIO — Jim Kelly threw four touchdowns, two each to Gerald McNeil and Richard Johnson, to lead the Houston Gamblers to a 38-29 USFL victory over the San Antonio Gunslingers. Kelly, picked the league's second-best pass defense apart, completing 29 of 40 passes for 282 yards. Kelly threw for three touchdowns in Houston's first three second-half possessions.

Houston also received a record-breaking performance from Clarence Verdin, who returned a second-quarter kickoff 102 yards for a touchdown. The league record return, which bested a 97-yard effort by Derrick Crawford of the Memphis Showboats last year, was Verdin's third for a touchdown this year.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. Jacksonville quarterback Ed Luther passed for one touchdown and running back Mike Rozier added another as the Bulls blasted the league-leading Birmingham Stallions 27-17.

TAMPA, Fla. — Tampa Bay quarterback John Reaves threw scoring passes of 47 and 57 yards in the third quarter to lift the Bandits over Baltimore, 28-14. Bandits halfback Gary Anderson, who scored on a 2-yard run in the second quarter, compiled his third 100-yard game of the season, finishing with 106 yards on 23 carries.

METS

Padres 1, Dodgers 0
Again, Fernando Valenzuela pitched a superb game. Again, his record fell — to 2-3 — this time because of Tony Gwynn.

Gwynn homered with one out in the top of the ninth inning for the game's only run. It was the second and last hit of the game for visiting San Diego.

The home run accounted for the first earned run off Valenzuela in 41 1-3 innings. That streak broke the major-league record for most consecutive innings without an earned run at the start of a season, a mark previously held by Hooks Wilson of the 1912 New York Giants at 40 2-3 innings.

Mark Thurmond blanked Los Angeles on eight hits over 6 1-3 innings. Craig Lefferts won his first decision of the season and Rich Gossage pitched the ninth inning for his fifth save.

Phillies 3, Cubs 2
Rick Sutcliffe will not go through this season with a 16-1 record, which he did last year for Chicago in winning the 1984 Cy Young Award.

Two errors by the Cubs and a good effort by surprise starter Kevin Gross of Philadelphia pinned the loss on Sutcliffe, who is now 3-2.

Gross made his first start since last September after scheduled starter Steve Carlton had some shoulder stiffness. It was only the seventh time in his 14 years with the Phillies — a span of 477 starts — that Carlton has missed a starting assignment.

Astros 2, Braves 1
Pinch-hitter Enos Cabell lined a two-out double in the bottom of the ninth inning to barely drive home Alan Ashby for first base.

With one out, Ashby singled off Terry Forster. One out later, Cabell hit a ball into the left-center gap, that left fielder Brad Kominski just missed catching with a diving try.

Center fielder Dale Murphy backed up the play and relayed the ball to shortstop Rafael Ramirez, whose throw to catcher Rick Cerone was slightly off the third-base line, which allowed Ashby to slide safely home.

Astros starter Nolan Ryan pitched seven innings and struck out seven, raising his all-time leading strikeout total to 3,902. Dave Smith, 3-1, worked the final two innings for the win.

Giants 2, Reds 1
David Green, mired in a season-long slump, picked a good time to get his third hit of the year. Green cracked a two-out single in the bottom of the 11th inning to drive home the winning run in San Francisco.

Designed by the Odessa architectural firm of Peters & Fields, the Art Institute for the Permian Basin building is located on 2½ acres of land south of the UTPB campus.

Museum dream

ODESSA — It has taken about 13 years, and the unstinting dedication of many of the members of Fiesta Del Arte, to bring an Odessa art museum to reality.

In fact, through six years of planning, Fiesta Del Arte board members had planned to call the facility the Odessa Art Museum but, because the museum has gained support and donations from some Midlanders and others in the surrounding area, as well as from Odessans, the board decided to call it the Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

According to Fiesta Del Arte board member Leonard Fisher, it was felt naming the facility for Odessa might limit its appeal.

When the art institute officially opens Sept. 2, Labor Day, it will have no mortgage because about $1 million was raised over a 13-year period from annual Fiesta Del Arte benefits and donations and the group did not have to buy land for the facility.

The University of Texas Regents helped pave the way for the art institute to achieve mortgage-free completion by agreeing to lease 2½ acres of University of Texas of the Permian Basin campus land, fronting on East University, for 99 years at $1 per year.

According to board member Doris Breaux, gaining UT Regent's approval of the lease took three or four years, but allowed the arts group to save the $500,000 budgeted for land purchase.

The art institute's new director, Ronald Hickman, introduced during a news conference at UTPB March 28, said it is unusual to walk into a facility of this nature and find there is no mortgage to worry about. He's never heard of this anywhere else in the country, he said.

Hickman will be coming to Odessa from Seattle, Wash., where he's been a consulting partner in an art consulting and public relations firm for the past four years.

He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Kansas and was assistant professor of art and head of the Mammel Art Center at Ottawa University, Ottawa, Kan.

Later he was director-curator of of Galleries for the Wichita Art Association in Wichita, Kan., and in 1967 became executive curator and assistant director of the San Diego, Calif., Museum of Fine Art.

Before moving to Seattle, Hickman spent eight years as director of the Phoenix, Arizona Art Museum.

Fiesta Del Arte board of trustees president Joann Lambert, introducing Hickman, said, "We feel very fortunate to have found a candidate with the credentials of Mr. Hickman. His interest and enthusiasm for the art institute complement the goals set by our steering committee: To have a first rate art museum and a learning facility that will serve the entire Permian Basin."

His immediate task on arriving in Odessa, he said, would be to begin preparing for the Labor Day weekend opening.

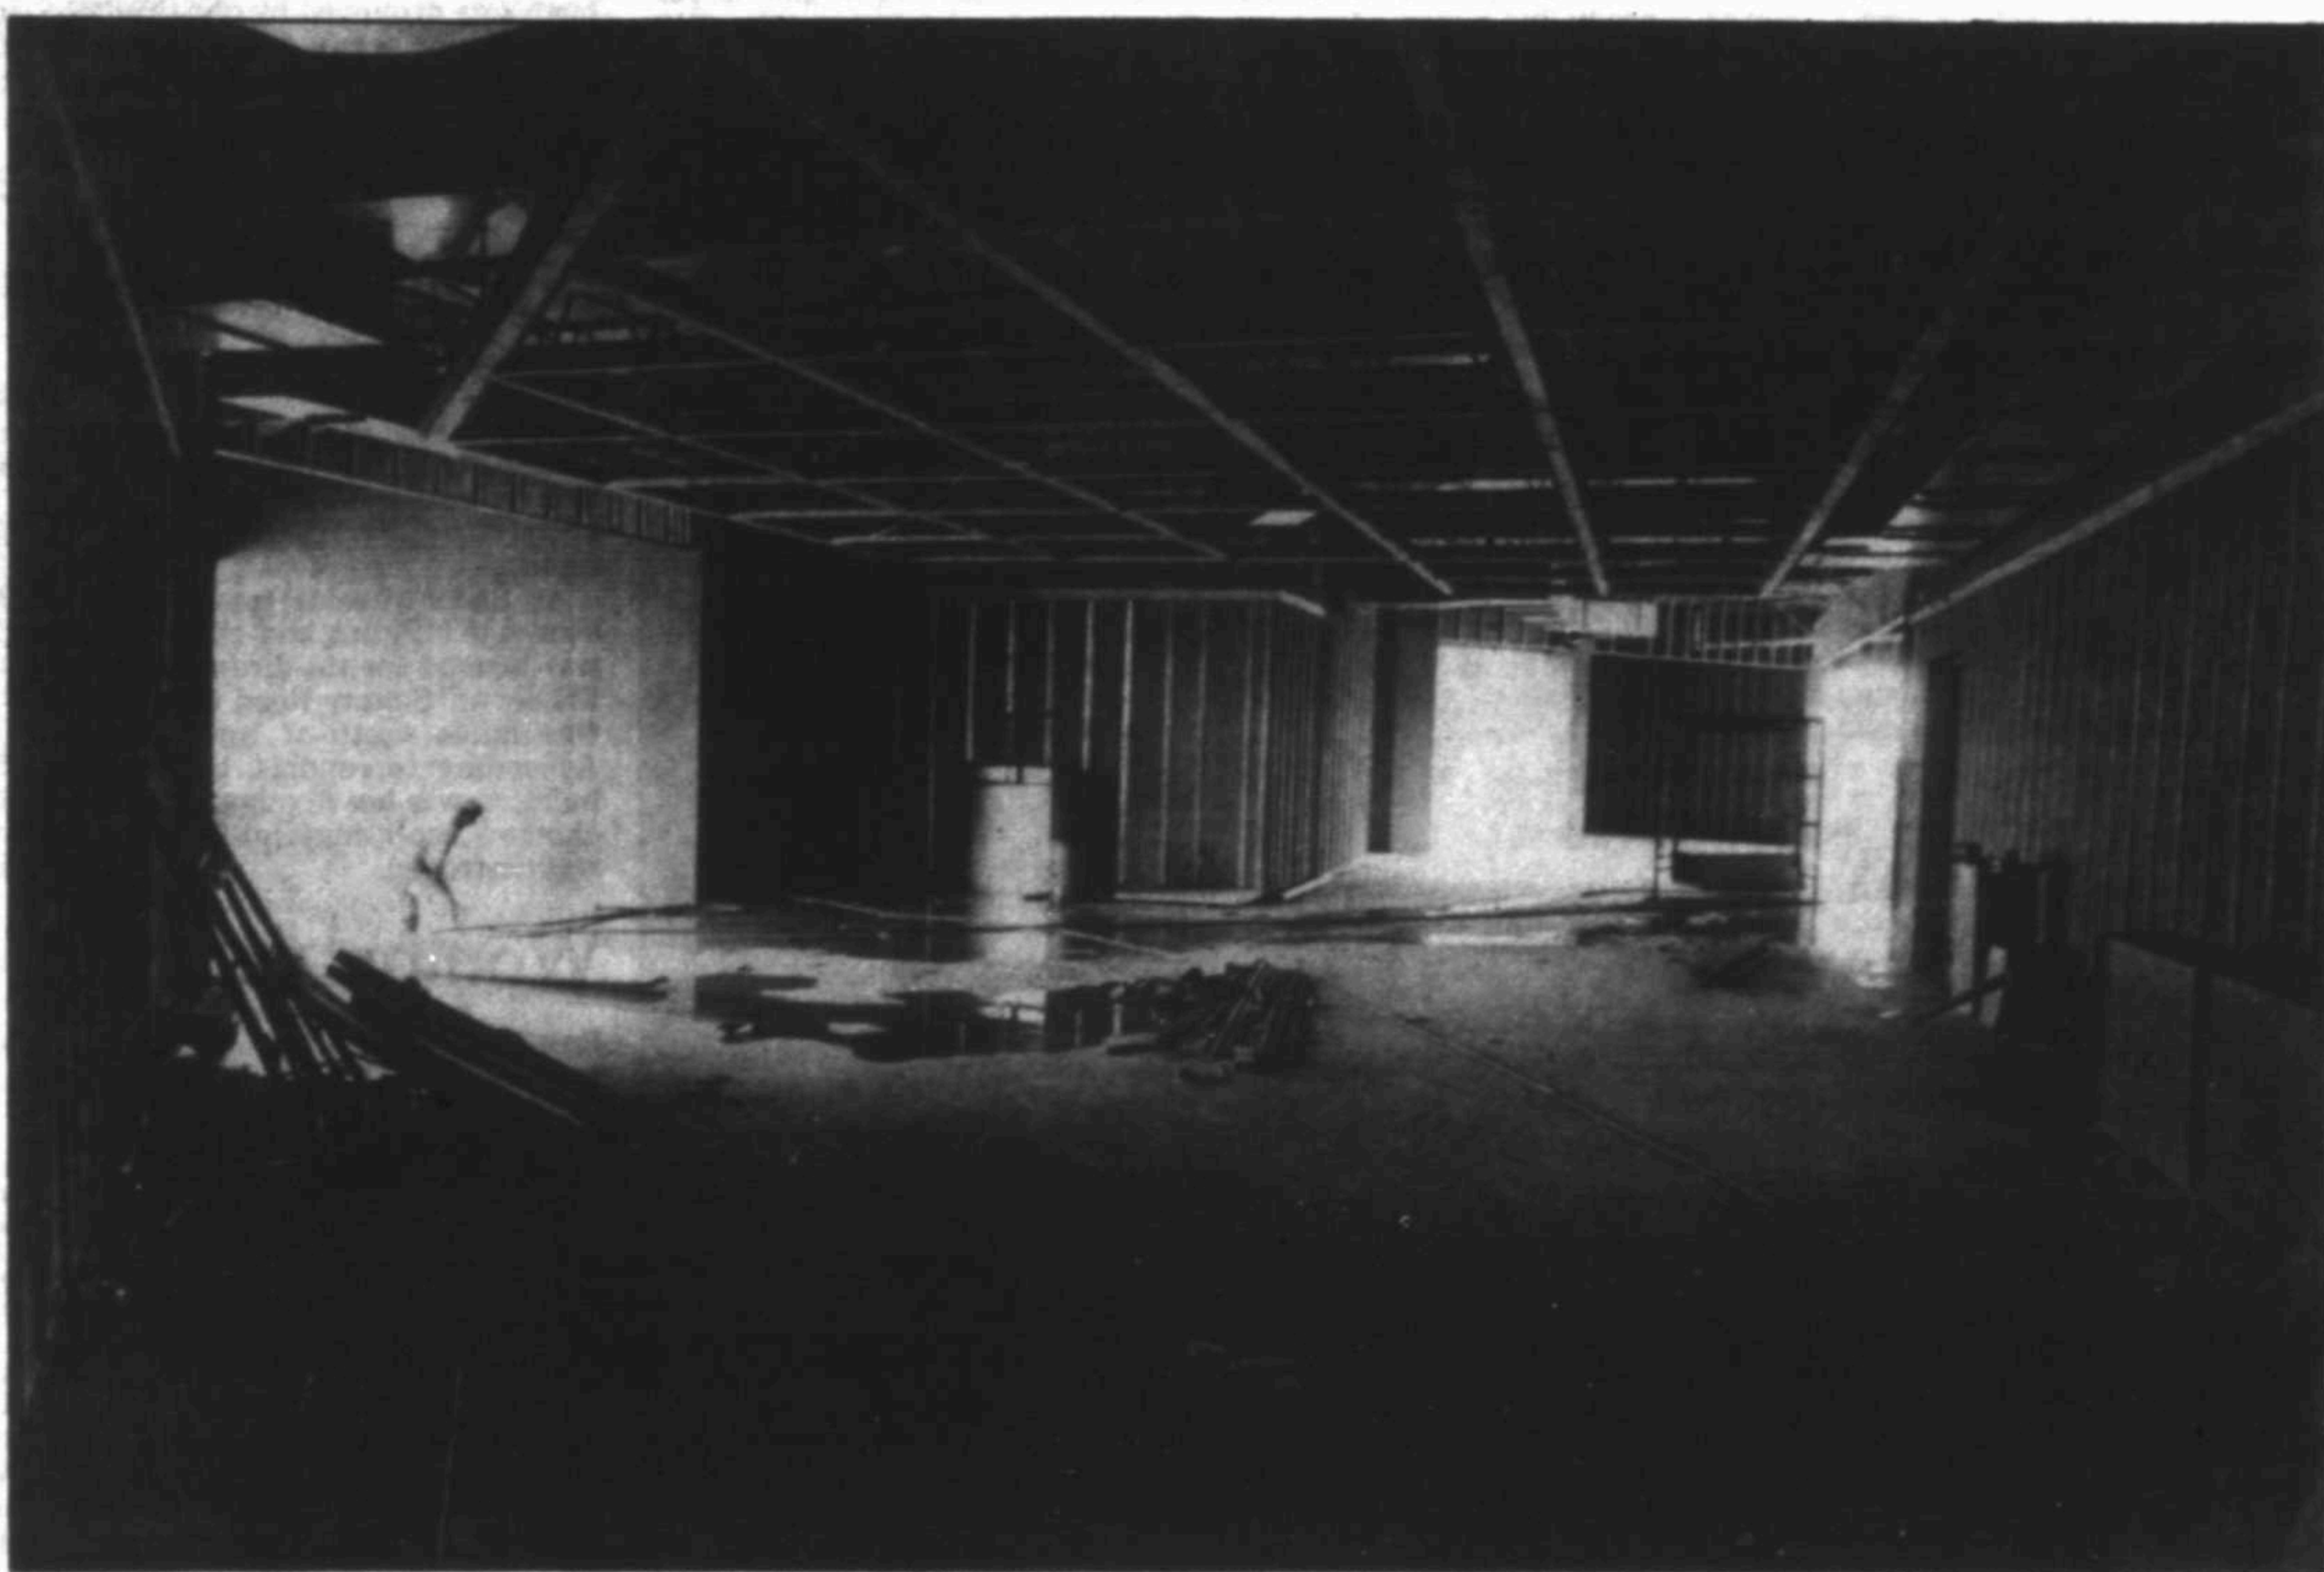

Hickman has staged exhibitions for many of the country's leading artists and organized exhibits which have toured the United States and abroad.

Noting the art institute will contain 12,000 square feet, Hickman said he plans to establish a sculpture garden in one section.

The emphasis, he said, however, will be on developing a contemporary 20th century theme, which will be complemented by Mexican art.

The art institute, when completed, will feature an auditorium with an 84-person seating capacity, two workshop areas for seminars and lectures, two gallery areas and the sculpture garden.

Please see MUSEUM, Page 2C

The completed art institute building will consist of an 84 seat auditorium, display galleries, workshop areas for lectures and seminars, administrative offices and a sculpture garden.

Ronald Hickman, hired as director March 28 by the Fiesta Del Arte board of trustees, said it's unusual to walk into such a facility as the art institute and find no mortgage.

The Odessa Art Museum, was the name Fiesta Del Arte board members lived and planned with for about six years, but support from Midlanders and others in the area convinced them the facility should be named to reflect a wider area of interest and encourage greater participation.

United Way of Midland names new director to staff

From Staff Reports

Stuart Gottlieb has been named new director of planning and allocations for the United Way of Midland, according to Jane Wolf, president. He started his new role April 22.

"Stuart brings to our staff the expertise in volunteerism and human relations we have needed to bring our efforts to full strength," Ms. Wolf said. "We look forward to the assistance he will give us not only in working cooperatively with our constituent agencies, but also in planning and government relations."

Gottlieb will work with all agencies which provide human services to Midlanders, as well as with the lay leadership program.

"I desire only to help continue the splendid work of the United Way of Midland and to strengthen the bonds of cooperation and understanding between those who make possible the delivery of human services by giving of their time and resources and those who actually perform the work of meeting human needs in our community," Gottlieb said.

Gottlieb is a native of New York City and has degrees from Hofstra University and Georgetown Law Center. He has spent his 35-year professional career in public service positions and in education. Prior to coming to Midland, he had been in public school contract negotiation work in Oregon. Before that, he resided in Santa Fe, N.M., where for five years he was a consultant for, among others, the National Issues Council and the state Attorney General's office.

His wife, Katherine, teaches third grade at Bowie Elementary School. The couple has seven children, five of whom are native Texans now living in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Expert opposes sterilization plan

HOUSTON (AP) — Family planning is a better approach than voluntary sterilization of poor, pregnant women to control the world's population, a demographics expert says.

Most people in nations throughout the world would use birth control if it were available to them, said James William Brackett, director of policy studies for the Population Institute in Washington D.C.

The institute compiles demographic statistics for governmental and private use.

Brackett said he disagrees with a recent proposal by state Rep. Brad Wright, R-Houston, that indigent mothers voluntarily undergo tubal ligations if they get tax-supported medical care.

"I think it would have a very detrimental effect on some of the goals that we have, and for that matter, that everybody has," Brackett recently told the Houston Chronicle.

A World Fertility Survey of women in 41 developing countries showed 50 percent of the women did not want any more children and 25 percent wanted to delay pregnancy.

"We're interested in encouraging countries to provide family planning services so that individual couples can determine the number and spacing of their children," he said.

Brackett said that in most countries, birth rates decreased after the government offered family planning services.

Mexico, for example, began family planning services in 1973.

"At that time, they became quite concerned about the problems of urbanization, pollution in the cities, unemployment and so on, and they launched a family planning program," he said. "Within 10 years, the birth rate dropped by one-third."

Indonesia began family planning services in 1970, he said. Since then, about 60 percent of Indonesian couples use the program, and the birth rate has dropped dramatically.

In some African nations, a woman must give birth to six children in hopes that one son will survive. Eleven million of the 133 million babies born each year in those countries do not live a year.

According to Population Institute figures, 30 percent of all couples worldwide who use modern methods of birth control use sterilization. Another 20 percent use birth control pills, 10 percent use condoms and 15 percent use intrauterine devices.

In some East Javan villages where the pill is widely used, he said, "the head man will ring a gong at some time of the day, and when that happens, the ladies are reminded to take their pill."

Brackett said the United States has funded international family planning programs since 1968 and Congress budgeted $290 million for the program this year.

Crabb's kid mayor nonchalant about his movie

CRABB (AP) — Like any politician, Brian Zimmerman has become used to talking to the press.

But Marcia Zimmerman can hardly keep the tears back when she talks proudly of her son, who at age 12 is the nation's youngest mayor.

"Oh, she gets excited easily," Brian, who is an only child, said of his mother in interviews with two Houston newspapers.

The mayor of Crabb, a tiny town 20 miles southwest of Houston, was elected two years ago in an unofficial election at Gonyo's Grocery, his aunt's store.

Now, Anson Williams, who played Patsy on the Happy Days television series, is producing a movie for New World Pictures about Brian. The kid mayor says he might even get to star in it.

But Brian is rather nonchalant about it all.

"I've been in the press and on Good Morning America. I'm not jumping up and down," he told the Houston Post.

Even if he doesn't star in the film, he plans to go to Hollywood to watch the shooting.

On Sunday, the mayor and his parents hosted a barbecue for Williams, who was in town to get acquainted with Brian and Crabb, a town of about 225 people.

Like most politicians, Brian declined to comment on how much money he received for the movie rights to his story.

"I don't talk about financial matters to the press."

Board member Fisher has said the combined resources of local groups and the UT System, which owns large art collections, can be expected to produce exhibits that have never been seen in the Permian Basin before.

According to Fisher, the arts group that has become the Fiesta Del Arte Guild actually had its start about 27 years ago when seven people formed the Art Association of Odessa.

Today, the group of ladies who only wanted to put on an art show, has grown to some 150 volunteers who have conducted the fund-raising drives necessary to build an art center which they hope Permian Basin residents will use and enjoy.

Victims for Victims founded because of brutal attack

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — On a Los Angeles-hot afternoon Theresa Saldana rattles into her friend's apartment, a little late so a little flustered, brushing the heat from her forehead. Everything about her seems as aglow as the unseasonable sunshine, from her flushed complexion to her black-and-hot-pink-striped tunic to her animated speech.

She doesn't look like someone who, three years ago, was slashed within a breath of her life.

"I think people expect me to come rolling in in a wheelchair, hunched over, paranoid, hallucinating, jumping around," Saldana laughs. "People see me now and say, 'Oh, you look so good, you look so different.' Yeah, I've been this way for two years now. I'm recovered. Life goes on."

Her story is well-known: "Raging Bull" actress attacked outside her apartment, rescued by bottled-water delivery man, recuperates to organize an activist group for victims of crime.

The multiple stab wounds that left her lying near death on a West Hollywood sidewalk have long since healed, and whatever scars she has are not apparent. Even her once battered hands, which Saldana used to shield her face during the attack, are smooth and healthy.

"My life is back to normal," she says. "I mean, I'm not the same girl I was before, I'll tell you that much. But I have no physical repercussions. I took dance lessons for 2½ hours this morning. I'm happy again."

SHE IS "not the same girl" in many aspects. For one, Saldana's marriage deteriorated in the months following her tragedy.

"It (the aftermath of a violent attack) is such a stressful, horrible circumstance," she says. "It's very hard on the mate because they're traumatized, and they suddenly have incredible responsibilities both financially and timewise. Family members go through a horrible upheaval — they feel left out, overburdened, helpless.

"Victims find it hard to relate their experience; friends and relatives can't sympathize but they can't empathize. Most people don't realize that victims suffer post-traumatic stress that doesn't go away when the bullet hole mends. Victims are a misunderstood group."

Although she recommends both the victim and his or her mate undergo counseling together, Saldana has no 20/20-hindsight, if-only laments.

"Everything has worked out for the best," she says. "I feel fine, my ex-husband and I are still friends. I think things would have been different if we'd gone into therapy, for sure. But I can't say I wish I had because everything seems to have somehow fallen in place. I'm OK now, so I don't have any regrets."

"Of course, I have regrets that I got attacked," she quickly adds. "I'm not saying that I'm jolly well glad it happened so I could start a group" — Victims for Victims, which also changed the "girl" she was three years ago.

"Before, my entire life revolved around acting," Saldana says. "Acting is still a very important part of my life, but at the same time I am very compelled to work in this field (advocating victims' rights)."

SHE BEGAN ORGANIZING Victims for Victims while still in the hospital recovering from her wounds. Composed of survivors of violent crimes and victims' families, Victims offers its members support and understanding while lobbying to reform the criminal justice code.

"I used to think our system worked, but now I know it doesn't work at all," Saldana says. "Now I know that you can butcher a woman almost to death and walk free in six years."

Scottish-born Arthur Richard Jackson — a former mental patient who stalked Saldana for months before the gruesome attack — could be released from state prison as early as 1988.

"I find it a gross miscarriage of justice," the actress says. "In releasing him, it just makes a mockery of everything I've been through. There are people who get busted for drugs and get 20 years to life. Yet if you wound someone but don't manage to kill them because someone else intervenes, like Jeff (Fenn) did, you're given a little slap on the wrist and released."

"It's sick. Very, very sick. If it weren't so terrible, it'd be laughable because it's so ludicrous. People nudge me and say, 'Oh, they won't let him out.' They will let him out."

Saldana says she's not interested in punishment but separation. "Someone who is deranged and violent should not be on the streets with the rest of us. I'm not talking about putting them in some pit, some hellhole. The concept is not to torture deranged people, it is to keep them from harming those of us out here minding our own business and abiding by the law of the state."

"(Jackson) was sentenced as a regular, sane person, though he has been diagnosed as paranoid schizophrenic," Saldana says. "We need to come up with legislation so we can discern people who are deranged and violent and not simply release them because their time is up."

"We can't lock up everybody who commits a violent crime and throw away the key. Sure, people have the right to try again to put their lives back together and, hopefully, some (ex-convicts) will do that. But when you're dealing with someone who looks you in the eye and says, 'I'm going to kill and maim again,' someone who not only is not normal but not even close to normal, then it is sick to unleash that person on society."

MASSIVE DISILLUSIONMENT with the justice system, Saldana says, fostered the overwhelming public support of "vigilante" Bernard Goetz, who shot four youths harassing him on a New York subway.

"Everyone knows that the system doesn't work, and that when you get mugged and attacked, you're not taken care of. The criminal is taken care of, the victim is forgotten. People do not believe in the system anymore — not because they're radical, not because they're fanatics, but because they've had experience with it and they know it doesn't work."

However, Saldana elaborates, she does not condone Goetz's action. "I don't think we can start shooting everybody who asks for $5."

The Bronx-accented actress claims she's not going to worry about her assailant's release until the day becomes more imminent. "It took me a long time to recuperate, and I feel I need a couple years to concentrate on being happy again," she says. "I will, as time goes on, be more active; I'll minimally ensure that he will be deported to his native country, Scotland, and that he will not be permitted to re-enter the United States — but, of course, he entered illegally before, so that's no complete solution."

Saldana may have recuperated from her ordeal, but recuperating from the expense it tallied is a longer process. "I'm still paying hospital bills," she says. "My health insurance didn't cover my physical therapy or psychiatric treatment."

"It's pathetic. Someone stabbed me and I have to pay the bills. I'm not saying the doctors shouldn't get paid, but I really believe that our government should pay my bills — not me, just because some lunatic who got in this country illegally came up and stabbed me."

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I got a good laugh from the letter about the family who had their ex-son-in-law airbrushed out of a family portrait. I found it particularly funny because I am a photo retouch artist who has given many people "the brush." I remove not only wrinkles and zits, but entire people. I once turned a handsomely tuxedoed groom into some grass and shrubbery — leaving his bride visible.

On another occasion I removed two ex-husbands from a family wedding portrait. The parents of these divorced daughters became annoyed every time they looked at the picture, so they hired me to remove the offending parties.

My talent for making people "disappear" in photographs comes in handy. When I want to keep my husband in line, I just tell him if he doesn't behave, I will turn him into a tree! — KIM COUSINEAU, BUF-FALO

DEAR KIM: I'm reminded of some unsolicited advice I heard many years ago from a political figure who never missed an opportunity to get his picture in the newspaper. "Honey," he said, "when you're posing with three or more people, never stand on the end; they might cut you off."

DEAR ABBY: I must respond to "Money Wasted," whose husband died after his dentures were finished, and the dentist refused to give her even a partial refund.

I went through a similar experience, only the results were exactly opposite. My 24-year-old son died suddenly a few months ago. Just one week before he died, he had gone to an optometrist for an eye examination. He took his prescription for eyeglasses to Pearle Vision, selected the frames, and was told to pick up his glasses in about a week.

When I notified the folks at Pearle Vision about my son's sudden death, even though the glasses were ready, they expressed their sorrow and told me not to worry about paying for the glasses. They even sent back his deposit.

It didn't stop there. My son had his own apartment, and as his bills came in — electric, telephone, etc. — I contacted each one and explained the situation. All his creditors offered sympathy, and not one would accept a cent from me.

So please tell "Money Wasted" not to judge everybody by that one dentist. There are still a lot of people who put human caring ahead of money. — FROM VIRGINIA

DEAR FROM: I'm glad you wrote. I thought all the angels were in heaven. Some must have settled in Virginia.

DEAR ABBY: I was appalled that you advised your readers not to send wedding invitations, etc., to patients who were terminally ill and/or senile.

Some do have lucid moments and would be delighted to know that they have not been forgotten. — WORKS IN A NURSING HOME

DEAR WORKS: I apologize to those who have "lucid moments" and could appreciate being remembered. I had in mind comatose patients who can neither respond to an RSVP nor send a card or gift. This responsibility would then fall on family members or caretakers whose time and money are probably in short supply.

CONFIDENTIAL TO WAITING TO HEAR: According to Anne Harrison Clark, national director of public affairs for the March of Dimes, in response to my suggestion that readers send a dollar to President Reagan for his birthday for the March of Dimes, approximately $48,500 was raised.

Most well-wishers sent a dollar, but some sent two or three (one for each of their healthy children, they explained). A Texas woman, apparently gung ho for the March of Dimes and President Reagan, sent a check for $500.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage). Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Judge says Pickens group destroyed documents

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A federal judge says an investor group led by corporate raider T. Boone Pickens Jr. "systematically destroyed notes and other documents" and had a "habitual inability" to recall key decision-making talks.

This action by Mesa Partners II, which is locked in a battle for control of Los Angeles-based Unocal Corp., "strongly suggests a studied effort by Mesa to conceal its true intent," U.S. District Judge A. Wallace Tashima wrote in a 33-page ruling.

The document containing the ruling was made public Saturday.

Although Tashima, in handing down the ruling Friday, refused to block Mesa from voting its shares as had Unocal sought, the document lists a litany of actions by Mesa which the judge said make it clear that Mesa's early stock purchases weren't "for investment purposes only."

The question of Mesa Partners' intent is central to the suit brought by Unocal, parent of Union Oil Co. of California, the nation's 13th largest oil concern.

Mesa Partners quietly began buying Unocal stock last October and publicly announced its purchases were under way on Feb. 14, by which time it had accumulated 7.9 percent of the company's 173.9 million shares.

At that time, the group said it intended to acquire about 15 percent of the company "for investment purposes only."

Not until March 27 did the Mesa group announce its intention to seek control of Unocal.

Currently, the group owns 13.6 percent of Unocal and is offering $54 per share in cash for another 64 million shares to boost its stake to 50.1 percent.

Tashima, citing previous court rulings, held that federal securities laws require investors to disclose even tentative takeover plans in order to protect other shareholders.

He also said that evidence showed the investor group had destroyed documents and was regularly unable to recall conversations that would have revealed its actual intent.

"The fact that Mesa executives systematically destroyed notes and other documents, together with the habitual inability of Mesa executives to recall discussions concerning the subject of intent, strongly suggests a studied effort by Mesa to conceal its true intent," the judge wrote.

He cited portions of a speech earlier this month by Pickens to a group of lawyers in Galveston, Texas.

In the speech, according to excerpts in the court ruling, Pickens said, "We have a shredder in my secretary's office, and I shred anything that is not going to be of any use... What we do is try to keep those files clean and not have something stupid come out."

Tashima wrote, "In the context of this case, I infer adversely to defendants (Mesa) that destroyed documents and unrecalled testimony would have been favorable to plaintiff (Unocal)."

The judge also cited a confidential memo from Mesa Partners to its investment banker outlining a plan that would provide a significantly different picture of the debt that Unocal would end up with.

Reached by telephone in Amarillo, Texas, Pickens spokesman Warren Vieth said he had no comment on the findings in Tashima's ruling.

Bass brothers make Frontier Holdings bid

DENVER (AP) — The Bass brothers of Fort Worth have entered into bidding for Frontier Holdings Inc. and the possible sale of Denver-based Frontier Airlines.

The entry was confirmed Friday by a spokeswoman for the Frontier Employee Coalition who also is trying to buyout the financially stricken company.

Frontier reported a $142 million first-quarter loss on the heels of a $31.4 million loss in 1984 and a loss of $13.6 million in 1983.

Other potential buyers confirmed earlier are California financier Travis Reed and the Frates Co. of Tulsa, Okla., which is working with the workers' coalition.

M.C. "Hank" Lund, who resigned as president of the airline following Thursday's annual meeting, told stockholders that "the Bass trust has an ongoing dialogue with the company's management and the coalition of unions."

Frontier Holdings, parent of Frontier Airlines, is 45-percent owned by Gencorp of Akron, Ohio. Gencorp has wanted to sell its stake in Frontier for almost 18 months.

The workers coalition made its first bid, $19 a share or $265 million, last December. When it was unable to finance that plan, it made a second offer, with the Frates group, of $16 a share or $224.4 million.

Frontier's stock on the American Stock Exchange closed Friday at $13.50 a share.

Analyst predicts gas prices will probably go up again

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Retail gasoline prices, which have already risen more than 8 cents a gallon in two months, will probably go up another 3 cents as dealers try to keep pace with wholesale prices, an industry analyst says.

The biggest increase likely will be for unleaded gasoline because of tight supplies, analyst Dan Lundberg said Sunday.

In a nationwide survey of 17,500 gasoline stations compiled Saturday, the overall price of all grades of gasoline was $1.22, an increase of 8.4 cents per gallon from two months ago, the publisher of the oil-oriented Lundberg Letter said.

Wholesale prices have risen 11.4 cents a gallon, cutting dealers' operating margins, he said. Retail prices will probably go up at least another 3 cents overall to cover that spread, he said. In Lundberg's most recent survey, regular leaded gasoline averaged $1.10 per gallon, regular unleaded averaged $1.18 and premium unleaded was $1.30. All prices are for self-serve.

Only 54 stations nationwide were selling gasoline for under a dollar, compared to the 50,000 to 60,000 stations that were offering such prices February 8.

Wholesale price increases stem from OPEC's decision to hold maximum production to 16 million barrels a day, in contrast to worldwide demand for 16.5 million barrels daily, Lundberg said. Oil-producing nations outside of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries are cooperating and are also refraining from over-production, he said.

Supreme Court will rule on 'non-bank banks' regulation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, setting the stage for an important financial industry ruling, today agreed to decide whether the Federal Reserve Board may regulate limited-service banks.

The court said it will review a decision blocking the board from limiting growth of the new financial institutions, called "non-bank banks."

The justices' decision in the controversy is not expected until next year.

The ever-increasing new institutions do not provide conventional checking accounts and conventional commercial loans.

They are springing up around the nation as major brokerage firms such as Merrill Lynch & Co. and leading corporations such as J.C. Penney and Gulf & Western enter the field.

Traditional full-service banks are worried that nationwide chains could jeopardize their survival.

The Federal Reserve Board, unhappy about the trend, last year sought to regulate the limited-service banks, in effect by classifying them as conventional banks.

The Fed said NOW — negotiable order of withdrawal — accounts were no different in practice than checking accounts that allow the customer to withdraw money on demand.

The board also said the limited-service banks are engaged in commercial lending because they deal in commercial paper, retail installment loans and similar money market instruments.

The board said it should be allowed to limit or prevent the spread of the limited-service banks, including barring interstate operations.

"The non-bank phenomenon for the first time permits the largely unrestricted growth of interstate banking networks," the board said in its appeal to the high court.

The U.S. Comptroller of the Currency has charted about 170 limited-service banks and more than 200 applications are pending, the appeal noted.

"This creation of a large and growing class of banking institutions that are not regulated (by the board) will change the face of banking in the United States," the board added.

The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year rejected the board's effort to gain control of the new financial institutions by, in effect, changing the definition of a full-service bank.

"The new definition... was a device to freeze the changes in the business of financial services until the board could persuade Congress to act," the appeals court said. "We cannot hold that the limited authority of the board permits it to bring about the change... in its own jurisdiction no matter how necessary it perceives the change to be."

A Reagan administration banking bill that would have expanded the Fed's jurisdiction passed the Senate last year but was shelved by the House.

The board's restricted role is regarded by critics of the expanding limited-service banks as a loophole in a 30-year-old federal banking law.

But the comptroller, C. Todd Conover, an advocate of deregulation, has said allowing corporations to start their own banks has not hurt the public. He said that since federal law technically allows the new limited-service banks, he has no choice but to grant them charters if they meet other federal regulations.

Experts: Turner will never get CBS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The way Ted Turner tells the story, when CBS executives talked to him in 1961 about buying Turner Broadcasting System, he replied, "Why don't I wait a year and then I'll buy you."

It took four years, and it still seems unlikely, but now Turner is in the marketplace with a multi-billion-dollar offer to buy control of the top-rated network.

"Financially imprudent" was the quick and hostile response of CBS board of directors to the offer from the Atlanta-based broadcaster.

If the experts on Wall Street are right, Turner will never achieve his goal of acquiring two-thirds of CBS' stock. They take an even dimmer view of the chances that allies of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., can mount a successful campaign to become Dan Rafter's boss.

But the unorthodox broadcaster and maverick politician have long records of confounding predictions that they would fall short of their goals. If the experts were infallible, Turner and his Cable News Network would have been bankrupt long ago and Helms would not be in the Senate.

Whatever the eventual outcome, CBS' siege mixes politics and business and has come about at a time when the media in general is under intense scrutiny. It also is occurring at a time the government is less likely to intervene to block a takeover — friendly or unfriendly.

The CBS takeover drama is no miniseries. In fact, most analysts expect it to take at least a year until the outcome is known and, even then, it could take turns impossible to predict.

"The thing will heat up more before this over," said Bonnie Cook, an analyst with J.C. Bradford & Co. of Nashville, Tenn. "If Turner begins to pursue this more aggressively and CBS begins to feel threatened, then all kinds of things could happen."

"There's several months before CBS really has to start sweating," said Edward J. Atorino, an analyst with Smith Barney, Harris Upham and Co. in New York. He was referring to the period it could take before Turner gets the required government approval to proceed with his bid.

So far, the apparent winners are the long-term holders of large blocks of CBS stock which has risen about $30 a share since the takeover talk began early this year.

"They're all waiting for CBS to do something to pay them off," said Atorino. "There's a great greed motivation here."

For some players, the motive is political, a desire to humble what Helms calls the "elite media," a group the conservative senator says is "profoundly out of sympathy with the ideals and goals of the American people."

Those sentiments were echoed last year by Turner when he told a conservative group that "these networks need to be gotten into the hands of people who care about this country."

Allies of Helms in North Carolina formed Fairness in Media and announced a campaign to get conservatives to buy CBS stock in an effort to combat what the group called the network's "liberal bias." After Turner made his bid, FIM's organizers said they would urge conservatives to back him.

Many on Wall Street felt the FIM effort was doomed from the start. They saw no chance an ideological campaign could raise the $4 billion it might take to pull off a hostile takeover.

"I don't think there's any way on God's green earth they're going to be able to form any sort of coalition with cash and march in there and take over CBS," said Miss Cook.

"They don't have any real financial power," she added. "If their goal was to try to scare the media into being a little more even-handed from what they consider to be a liberal bias, they've probably accomplished that already."

"There is a greatly increasing concern among conservatives with the media," said Richard Viguerie, publisher of Conservative Digest.

Pat McMullen, manager of Midland Sample Cut, cuts a mud sample which geologists will analyze to see which formation is being drilled. The mud sacks are brought in by well operators.

Sample lab may have to close doors

By MELLA McEWEN
Business-Oil Writer

In the early days of the oil industry, before electrical logs, oilmen depended entirely on mud samples from the drilling wells to tell what was in the ground.

Back then, oil scouts, the people who scouted the wells, following the entire history of a well, would cut the samples and make sample logs to analyze. Midland-based scouts formed the Midland Oil Scouts association, and in 1928 opened the Midland Sample Cut lab to store, cut, and furnish samples to interested companies.

The lab's business had been good, according to Pat McMullen, manager, until last October when business began to fall off. Now the lab may have to shut its doors because not enough well operators are bringing in samples, McMullen said.

"I don't know if samples aren't being collected at the drilling site or if they're just not being brought in, but we just aren't getting enough samples."

Geologists analyze the sample log to see what formation is being drilled — lime, shale, sand, and to determine the geological age.

McMullen said the lab takes samples from all over the Permian Basin as well as samples shipped from places such as lower Oklahoma and Colorado.

He noted that valuable information is being lost by the lack of samples, and he urged drilling companies to bring in well cuttings from drilling wells, especially wildcat wells. He emphasized that there is no charge for bringing in a cutting unless a cut is requested.
