Iranian: Officials lying about arms deals

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The speaker of Iran's Parliament on Saturday accused U.S. authorities of lying in an attempt to cover up the growing scandal over secret arms sales to Iran, according to Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

IRNA quoted Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani as saying Reagan administration officials have made up "new lies to whitewash the scandal facing them." The report, monitored in Nicosia, said Rafsanjani was commenting to other Iranian officials. It did not elaborate on the quote.

Rafsanjani's charge came one day after sources in Iran reported that as many as 20 planeloads of U.S. weapons were delivered in May when Reagan's former national security adviser, Robert McFarlane, made a clandestine visit to Tehran, the capital of Iran.

If the report is true, then far more arms and materiel were delivered to the Iranians than the one planeload of 23 tons of "defensive weapons" the administration has said McFarlane accompanied.

McFarlane reportedly made a subsequent visit to Tehran.

The agency quoted Rafsanjani as saying the planner of the abortive 1980 U.S. attempt to rescue American hostages in Tehran accompanied McFarlane on his May trip.

The news agency did not identify the American official it said "designed and conducted" the ill-fated April 24-26, 1980, raid by the U.S. Army's Delta Force to rescue 52 American diplomats held in Tehran.

Eight U.S. servicemen died in the attempt when a helicopter crashed into a cargo plane at the secret "Desert One" base 200 miles south of Tehran.

The diplomats were held hostage for 444 days before being released in January 1981.

Rafsanjani was quoted as saying that, while American leaders have lied about the arms sales, "Our statements have remained unchanged."

"These events are all evidence of the stability of the Islamic revolution in Iran," IRNA quoted him as saying.

This appeared to be an attempt to play down reports that the contacts with the United States have triggered in-fighting within Tehran's clergy-dominated hierarchy.

There have been indications that the efforts by some Iranian leaders to improve relations with the United States and other major powers after years of isolation have come into conflict with hardline officials opposed to any dealings with "the Great Satan," as the United States is commonly called.

The Iranian sources who reported the extensive deliveries said Rafsanjani and four other Iranian leaders arranged McFarlane's May visit without telling Khomeini. The sources commented on condition of anonymity.

Only after McFarlane landed in Tehran did Rafsanjani tell Khomeini that the American envoy had arrived and sought permission to open negotiations with him to improve relations, the sources said.

Paper says tapes indicate shipments worth $1 billion

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — An Athens newspaper said Saturday that tapes made of U.S. envoy Robert McFarlane's talks with Iranians showed that the United States shipped more than $1 billion worth of military equipment to Iran.

That would be about 100 times more than the amount U.S. officials have said was sent.

The daily Dimokratikos Logos also said that according to the tapes, $2 million of the money paid for the arms by Iranian authorities was sent to the Islamic Jihad group holding Americans hostage in Lebanon.

White House spokesman Dan Howard said in Santa Barbara, Calif., "We are not commenting publicly on the specifics of the arms deal. However, we have briefed the appropriate congressional committees in detail. While the matter is under investigation I don't think it is appropriate to comment on the stories, no matter how crazy they are."

McFarlane did not return telephone messages left at his home and office in the Washington area on Saturday.

Omiros Emmanouilidis, who wrote the Dimokratikos Logos story, told The Associated Press the contents of the tapes were given to him by reliable sources. He declined to say if he heard the actual tapes or read transcripts.

The paper, which has close ties with Premier Andreas Papandreou's Socialist government, has not previously broken a story of major international significance, so it was difficult to gauge the reliability of its report.

President Reagan tries to focus attention away from the Iranian arms deals crisis — 2A

The article was based on what it said were tapes of McFarlane's talks with Iranians in Tehran.

McFarlane, a former national security adviser, reportedly made two trips to Iran this year as part of an effort, begun in 1985, to improve relations with so-called moderate elements in that country's revolutionary leadership.

President Reagan has acknowledged that U.S. weapons were shipped, but he said the arms were "defensive" and only small amounts were involved. He denied that the arms, some of which were shipped via Israel, were intended as ransom to gain the release of Americans held in Lebanon by fundamentalist Shiite Moslems believed to be loyal to Iran.

Three Americans have been released by their Lebanese kidnappers since September 1985, when the first arms shipments reportedly were made. Six Americans remain missing in Lebanon.

An embargo on the sale of U.S. weapons to Iran has been in effect since 1979, when Iranian revolutionaries stormed the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and held 52 Americans hostage for 14 months.

The Iranians have said that they have tapes of McFarlane's conversations and that they might publish the transcripts or distribute the tapes.

The newspaper said the tapes reveal the United States supplied Iran with military equipment worth as much as $1.3 billion. It said the tapes show that Washington had agreed to supply Iran with equipment worth $5 billion.

"From the money paid by the Persians, $2 million was given to the pro-Iranian terrorist group (Islamic) Jihad in Beirut for the release of hostages," the newspaper wrote.

House majority leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, has said the weapons sent by Washington to Iran were valued by the United States at $12 million.

But sources in Iran told the AP that as many as 20 planeloads of American weapons were delivered in May during one of McFarlane's visits.

Iran demanded that the United States continue its arms shipments after the secret negotiations between the two countries were revealed this month, or it would disclose the contents of the tapes, Dimokratikos Logos claimed.

The paper said Iran told the United States to cease shipping arms through Israel, because of Arab reaction, and instead to use American bases in Western Europe.

Reagan said earlier this month that he has ordered a halt in the shipments to Iran.

Wright quickly assuming mantle of Democratic leadership

Wright

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's foreign policy crisis in Iran and Central America has hastened the emergence of Rep. Jim Wright as one of his party's most visible national leaders and an acerbic administration critic.

More than a month before he officially is sworn in as speaker of the House, Wright has found himself already thrust informally into that position, at least when it comes to making public appearances and commenting on revelations of covert administration policies.

Retiring speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. has been easing out of his job for weeks, spending time at home in Boston and finishing up Capitol business, and has left it to Wright to assume the leadership mantle. The Iran crisis has accelerated Wright's march to the forefront.

After it was revealed that the White House had been secretly authorizing arms sales to Iran, it was Wright who appeared in interviews doling out pieces of the puzzle that kept the story on front pages for days.

It was he who revealed that Iran had received more than twice the number of anti-tank missiles that Reagan had acknowledged in a news conference. And it was Wright who later disclosed the value of the weapons shipments.

After the administration disclosed that profits from the weapons sales had been used to aid Nicaraguan rebels, Wright was on the air within minutes, saying the White House explanation "defies credulity" and offering a harsh assessment of Reagan's decision-making.

"Mr. Reagan, of almost all the people I have met in high government positions, is uniquely capable of psyching himself up into a frame of mind in which he can believe whatever he wants to believe, and can just utterly reject factual information which does not fit comfortably with his preconceived predilections," Wright said before the television cameras.

While the Texas Democrat has been a leading spokesman for his party for years and has been included in high-level briefings as House majority leader, he has previously been in the shadow of O'Neill when it came to staking out positions for House Democrats.

O'Neill, with his burly frame and trademark white mane, in his 10 years as speaker, became a symbol for the party, a favorite of political cartoonists and the butt of Republican criticisms about the spending habits of Democrats.

TDHR 'sorely lacking' in human resources

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The Texas Department of Human Resources — responsible for taking care of the less fortunate in Texas — is sorely lacking in human resources, according to officials.

"We can't help it that we have more applications (for Food Stamps and Aid to Families with Dependent Children) than case workers (can handle)," Ann Bradford, operations manager for the TDHS in Midland, said.

What she's referring to is the boom in the number of those applying for welfare brought about by the bust in the oil business.

Food stamps are supplied by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and dispersed by the TDHS.

Financial help in the form of AFDC benefits is given to children whose households lack the support of one or both parents. It is also handled by the TDHS.

The TDHS office at 2301 N. Big Spring has nine case workers handling new applications and maintaining those already receiving welfare benefits.

State law restricts case workers to a 40-hour work week and no more than eight overtime hours a month.

"The current lead time (number of days it takes from the time a person comes in to apply until the time he begins receiving welfare payments) is down to 23 days in Midland and 14 days in Odessa," Ms. Bradford said.

"It had been 60 days in Midland and 82 days in Odessa. The staff has worked unbelievably hard," Ms. Bradford added.

Though case workers are legally bound to an 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. day, Ms. Bradford would say on the record that many case workers work on applications on their "free time."

Job positions were frozen as a result of Gov. Mark White's mandated 13 percent budget cuts for all state agencies announced earlier this year.

However, TDHS Commissioner Marlin Johnston did obtain a waiver to fill two case worker positions in Midland that were otherwise bound to be lost to attrition.

But Ms. Bradford stressed the positions were not new.

Forecasters say '86 hurricane season 'quiet'

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The 1986 hurricane season, which becomes history at 12:01 a.m. Monday, was relatively quiet, but one of the two biggest hurricanes came ashore near Beaumont and authorities are still sorting out the damages.

"This year's been pretty quiet," said Gil Clark, a hurricane specialist with the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla. "We had only six named storms this season, which is pretty dull when you look at previous years."

Only four of those storms were hurricanes: Bonnie, which hit the Sea Rim State Park in June; Charlie, which hit the North Carolina coast in August; Earl, in mid-September; and Frances, which formed earlier this month. Both Earl and Frances posed no danger to coastal areas, Clark said.

Hurricane season runs from June 1 through Nov. 30. Those dates have been in effect for about 50 years, Clark said. The dates were chosen because of statistical background on when previous storms had hit, Clark said.

"I really have to say this year's been pretty quiet," Clark said. "Especially when you compare this year's damage amounts and numbers of lives lost over last year."

Charlie claimed five lives and caused about $15 million in damage, Clark said.

Bonnie, which claimed three lives, caused about $1.7 million in damage in Jefferson County, said Dick Nugent, Jefferson County Civil Defense director.

"We may never know just how much damage Bonnie caused," Nugent said. "Some people who didn't have insurance may have decided not to rebuild and we just don't know about them."

While the county applied for a disaster area declaration from the U.S. Small Business administration, SBA officials determined there was not enough uninsured loss for it to qualify.

ARMS

They said the other four Iranians involved in McFarlane's visit were President Ali Khamenei, Supreme Court Judge Abdulkarim Musavi Ardabili, Prime Minister Hussein Musavi and Ahmad Khomeini, the ayatollah's son.

They said the elder Khomeini ordered that none of his senior officials see McFarlane.

Former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani Sadr told the Mutual News radio network Saturday in a telephone interview from Paris that the initiative for the arms deals came from the Iranian side.

"It was the Khomeini regime which came looking to the United States. The whole initiative came from Iran," Bani Sadr said in French, which was translated by Mutual.

Bani Sadr said Khomeini's subsequent refusal to allow high Iranian authorities to meet with McFarlane "indicates the disarray the Iranian government is in right now."

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) — Movie actor Cary Grant was rushed to a hospital Saturday night, forcing the cancellation of a scheduled appearance at a local theater.

Grant, 82, debonaire leading man of films for more than 30 years, was taken to St. Luke's Hospital emergency room at 9:30 p.m., according to Marilyn Stome, night nursing supervisor.

Reagan focuses attention on economy

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan sought to focus attention away from the secret Iranian arms deals and on the domestic economy Saturday with a promise to battle deficit spending.

"Government has borrowed too much and spent too much," the president said in his weekly radio address, his first public statement since the disclosure Tuesday that up to $30 million of Iranian arms sales proceeds were diverted to aid guerrillas fighting Nicaragua's Marxist-led government.

"While we've been occupied with the Iranian issue over the past two weeks, let's not forget that there are many other issues that concern us," Reagan said in the five-minute speech, delivered from his ranch in the Santa Ynez mountains north of here.

"I'll be back in Washington next week, determined to work with the Congress to get deficit spending under control and keep America growing with record numbers of jobs for American people," said the president.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, giving the Democratic response, urged Reagan to "clean house" to prevent the Iran crisis from undermining the presidency.

"Your presidency, sir, is tottering," said the New York Democrat. "It can be saved, but only you can save it and only if you will talk with us, the Congress. Washington is awash with rumor, intrigue, treachery. Out there in the Santa Ynez mountains, you can't know how bad it is, for you've never been through anything like it," said Moynihan.

— Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan,

"Mind, we do not yet have a constitutional crisis and as yet, there is not an international crisis. But either or both could come unless you act and act now," said Moynihan, who served in the cabinets of Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford.

"Laws have been broken, that must be assumed. Men have betrayed your trust. Very well, let it all come out, in the open with greater than deliberate speed, immediately, regardless," said Moynihan.

"And so I plead, Mr. President, clean house. Out with all the facts. Out with all the malefactors. Come to the Hill and talk, elected official to elected official. We are your friends. We share this breach of sacred authority given by the American people. We want you to save your presidency, our presidency," said Moynihan.

Reagan's brief reference to Iran came near the end of his talk, which was mainly a recital of his administration's record in dealing with the domestic economy.

"This deficit problem remains a major priority," Reagan said. "In order to pursue this issue and all the others like it on our domestic and foreign agenda, we must be certain to maintain peace in the world and keep our defenses strong while, of course, sparking our domestic economy to even greater growth."

"Only four years ago, as our economic policies were just taking effect, we began what became the second-longest peacetime expansion since World War II," he said.

Pelicans along coast in desperate war for food

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The red tide that ravaged the Texas coast killing millions of fish several weeks ago has left another phenomenon in its wake, pelicans attacking other birds over scarce food, according to a marine researcher.

White pelicans have been seen killing cormorants recently, apparently driven to desperate measures by a shortage of small fish in area waters since the red tide bloom, said University of Texas Marine Science Institute researcher Tony Amos.

"As far as I can tell, this behavior has not been observed before," Amos said Wednesday.

Joe Blankenship, marina manager of Port Aransas Marina, said he first noticed the phenomenon a couple of weeks ago near the marina at Cline's Point, a Port Aransas landmark.

"There were 20 or 30 pelicans with about a hundred or so water turkeys," or cormorants, Blankenship said. "A water turkey would surface with a fish and four or five pelicans would grab him."

The pelicans would herd a cormorant into an area where the cormorant couldn't move because it was surrounded by the larger birds, Blankenship said.

The pelican, he said, would "take the cormorant's whole head in their mouth and sort of shake it around and let go. Then another one would grab it."

Amos said white pelican, a large bird often weighing 25 pounds or more, "would thrash the cormorant around like a piece of rag."

Amos said cormorants would be at a disadvantage because if they have a large fish, they have to arrange it before they can swallow it. Birds must swallow fish head first to avoid interference with the fishes' fins, he said.

Blankenship and Amos both theorize that the small bait fish that make up both water birds' main diet were reduced by the red tide, leading to the aggressive behavior by the pelicans.

White pelicans need about 4 pounds of fish a day. He estimated about 10,000 of the birds winter around the Corpus Christi Bay area every year.

"White pelicans do cooperative feeding," he said. "They group together and herd fish, almost like forming a net, only the net is formed by hundreds of pelicans."

When the fish are all in one group, Amos said, the white pelicans can dip their beaks in the water and scoop out the small fish.

Cormorants swim on the surface, then dive for fish. They're able to dive fairly deep and catch fish, Amos said.

Amoco Gas Co. lays off mules used to mow grass

TEXAS CITY, Texas (AP) — The Amoco Gas Co., faced with a cost-cutting program, reluctantly laid off five mules that had pulled mowers at its refinery grounds for years, officials said.

The refinery workers will miss seeing the mules, a sight at the refinery for more than a half century, but mechanical mowers and chemicals that control weed growth are cheaper, said Ray Thompson, the refinery's public affairs coordinator.

"Our objective is to squeeze every bit of product out of every barrel of crude and we are also trying to squeeze the most out of dollars because the times are tough," he said.

Terry Newman, who owned the mules as part of an equipment rental company, said he had to sell the animals after Amoco ended the mowing service Nov. 14. Two mule drivers also were laid off, he said.

The mules had been on the job for eight to 10 years and the workers 12 to 15 years, Newman said. Two teams of mules were hooked up to the mowers while one was held in reserve, he said.

Amoco began using mules in the 1930s when the animals towed materials in assembling the Texas City plant.

After the refinery started up, Newman's father, T.A. Newman, the contractor who supplied the mules for construction work, began cutting grass in the tank farm with mule-drawn mowers. That service continued for more than 50 years, Thompson said.

Seeing the two teams of mules working at a facility whose operations now are largely controlled by computers was a real contrast, Thompson said. The mules also were safer because the mowers they pulled were not as likely to emit a potentially dangerous spark as power mowers, he said.

An Alta Loma man who bought them plans to use the animals to haul wagons on trail rides and in parades.

In order to qualify for the disaster declaration, at least 25 homes or businesses in a county must have suffered a 40 percent uninsured loss.

Jefferson County and its neighboring counties have asked Gov. Mark White to seek a disaster area declaration from the SBA for the area's farmers, Nugent said.

"We're still looking at damages from the farming standpoint," Nugent said. "About 80 percent of the area's soybean crop was damaged or lost because of Bonnie and other crops also suffered damage. We're hoping the SBA will give us the declaration so the farmers can be eligible for low-interest loans. Our farmers may not recover from the damages until the next growing season."

Nugent said White forwarded the declaration to the SBA in Washington, last week.

Experts said numerous factors contributed to the Gulf states getting off so lightly in 1986.

"Several factors are involved in conditions being right for hurricanes, including the water temperature," said Dave Kava, a weather specialist with the National Weather Service in Port Arthur. "A primary factor, however, is the flow of air in the upper atmosphere.

"We've had chiefly a westerly flow that has canceled out a lot of storms from developing. Upper-level winds, 15 to 20 miles up, shifted to the west and that tends to suppress hurricane activity in the Caribbean and Gulf waters," he said.

Hurricanes normally develop when there is an easterly flow, and when in high pressure areas — persisting over the Atlantic and Pacific — shift to the north, Clark said. Water temperature is another factor in hurricane formation, forecasters said. Once water temperature in the Gulf of Mexico falls below 82 degrees, the chances for a hurricane are slim. August and September are the worst months for storms because the water is generally at its warmest.

Just the opposite was true in the 1985 hurricane season, which, besides causing the most damage ever, set records for the most storms to strike the U.S. Coast since 1916, caused the largest evacuation and produced the first November storm to make landfall in 50 years.

In 1985, eight Atlantic hurricanes and tropical storms slammed into the United States. An estimated $4 billion worth of property was destroyed and 30 lives were lost. Louisiana was hit three times by hurricanes that inflicted $600 million in damage and killed 11.

The average hurricane season tally for named storms is 10, with six of those usually reaching full hurricane status, said Clark, the hurricane specialist.

"The numbers vary so greatly from year to year. They could vary from one storm to 21 storms," Clark said.

Unforeseen factors, such as this year's high-altitude winds, still make forecasting difficult, Clark said. For example, he said that although it is unlikely, there is a chance a hurricane could develop after the official season ends Monday. That's happened, he said, two or three times in the 50-year period in which records have been kept.

But as the 99th Congress wound to a close, O'Neill turned more and more responsibility over to Wright and increasingly deferred to him to answer questions during his daily press conferences. The signals were clear that Wright was the anointed successor.

While Wright will not be the same kind of symbol as O'Neill, and will have competition as party spokesman from Sen. Robert Byrd, the leader of the new Democratic Senate majority, he brings to the job a meticulousness that his predecessor did not have.

He already has signaled that the 100th Congress — the first in six years with Democrats in control on both sides of the Capitol — will be an aggressive one.

"We don't intend to waste time. We intend to be productive on an accelerated schedule," Wright said.

TDHR

In an attempt to lend help, the TDHS regional headquarters office in El Paso lent five case workers to various TDHS offices in West Texas.

One case worker landed in Midland for only a total of three weeks, she said.

Ms. Bradford said there are about 350 new applications for welfare each month.

Couple that number with current cases on the books, and one finds the nine case workers being responsible for the daily maintenance of 2,312 people — 1,769 Food Stamp recipients and 543 AFDC recipients.

There is a new group of poor, Ms. Bradford said, who wear white collars and never thought they'd be in need of state aid. She added that things can get hostile.

"They come in tired and upset about having to come in (and apply for welfare) at all. They're desperate many times because they've been waiting so long," Ms. Bradford said.

She explained many applicants put the unpleasant task of requesting welfare off until the last minute. They've been living off savings or hoping to find a new job.

"When you're desperate, though, and you see yourself as eligible, you don't want to wait."

Persons should come in and apply the minute they feel they're eligible for welfare and not wait until it's too late and there's no food on the table, she said.

"The staff was not prepared for the volume of people.

"Of all the state agencies that don't need to be cut, it would seem that the Department of Human Services would be the one," she said.

B-52 arrival sparks 'bomb of publicity'

FORT WORTH (AP) — At the very least, the arrival of a B-52 bomber modified to become the 131st Air Force plane able to carry cruise missiles touched off a bomb of publicity.

At 3 p.m. Friday, the plane trailing a yellow parachute thundered onto the runway at Carswell Air Force Base. When its wheels touched the concrete, the U.S. became formally in violation of the unratified SALT II arms agreement made in 1979.

The bomber was returning from San Antonio, where it had been modified to carry the air-launched cruise missiles. About 25 news media representatives, including five television crews, assembled near the spot where the plane was to touch down.

An Air Force spokesman said 50 news organizations had called asking details about the plane.

At 2:55 p.m., an Air Force spokesman announced that the bomber was just 10 miles from the base. He said it would be the next plane to land. Earlier, a hotdogging F-16 pilot entertained reporters and photographers with a series of ear-splitting fly-bys.

Far off, the 131st bomber came into view, looking like a high-flying flock of geese. As it drew closer, the outline of the fuselage took shape. Headlights shone brightly through the afternoon glare.

It was approaching Carswell from the southwest.

"There's the plane at 7 o'clock," said Lt. Col. Harvey Hettick. "It's an aluminum overcast. When it flies by, it blocks the sun. He's going to make a ni-i-ice landing."

Cameras clicked as the bomber glided smoothly past the media outpost. The plane gently touched down, its wheels emitting puffs of smoke as they hit the pavement.

After the bomber taxied to a halt, the six crew members climbed out of a hatch below the cockpit and walked to a waiting blue van. One crew member waved as the van departed.

Photographers spread themselves out around the plane, some of them sprawling on the concrete to get a better angle for a shot.

The B-52, which was not carrying missiles on its flight from San Antonio, is nothing new at Carswell Air Force Base. The base has about 33 of the big bombers. The exact number may vary depending on whether any bombers are being serviced, said 2nd Lt. Brad Schuldt, an Air Force spokesman.

Master Sgt. Phillip E. Christilaw stood underneath the tail of the bomber and commented that the 131st was no different than the others at the base. It was just another bomber, he said.

Heading out to the observation site, Schuldt told reporters no local Air Force officials would have any comment about the historic arrival of the 131st bomber. He referred questions to the Pentagon.

State rest stops declared 'dangerous' at night

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials, concerned about vandalism and homosexual loitering at highway rest areas, have asked University of Texas professors to help improve the design of the roadside stops.

Officials say the rest areas are generally safe, but two recent Central Texas incidents have led some law enforcement officials to issue warnings about the stops.

"It's a shame, but I wouldn't recommend a family to stop there. Late at night, I would probably declare them dangerous," said Round Rock Police Chief Wes Wolff.

Earlier this month, an Austin businessman was murdered when his car was set afire at an Interstate 35 rest stop near Kyle, south of Austin. Police said the man had been sodomized before he died and had had his hands bound behind his back.

In October, at an I-35 rest area near Round Rock, north of Austin, one man shot another in what police say was self-defense. Police believe the shooting occurred after one man solicited sex from another.

"The bathroom area seems to be the worst area," Wolff said, recommending that people use service station restrooms instead.

Virginia pastor elected to Baptist's Peace Committee

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A moderate pastor from Virginia is the newest member of the Southern Baptist Convention's Peace Committee, replacing a discouraged moderate who resigned last month, officials say.

The Rev. Peter James Flamming of Richmond was elected to the 22-member panel to replace the Rev. Cecil Sherman of Fort Worth, Texas.

Sherman resigned Oct. 22 following the committee's adoption of the "Glorietta Statement," which he says endorses the conservative cause.

The committee's purpose is to seek the causes of, and suggest solutions to, long-term strife in the 14.5 million denomination.

The rift is theologically and politically dividing moderates and conservatives.

Committee chairman Charles Fuller of Roanoke, Va., had requested an election as soon as possible so Sherman's replacement could participate in the panel's meeting in Atlanta on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

At the Atlanta meeting, the committee is expected to examine an eight-point proposal made by moderates and designed to ease tensions.

AFL-CIO supports system

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas AFL-CIO's legislative committee has voted unanimously to support the current system in which Texas voters pick their state judges, AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard said Friday.

The United Labor Legislative Committee voted to fight any efforts in the 1987 Legislature to change to a system in which judges would be appointed.

"The appointive system has been riddled with cronyism in other states," Hubbard said.

Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill is pushing an appointive system. Opponents of the current system say it allows the selection of judges to be placed in the hands of voters who often are not educated about the candidates.

But Hubbard predicted voters would resist any effort to change the system.

"One person appointing all of the judges in Texas is an idea that cannot be sold to the people of Texas, no matter how pretty the package is wrapped. You can call it 'merit,' but most people agree that it's nothing but power politics," he said.

Sketch of man released

CENTERVILLE (AP) — The Leon County Sheriff's Department has released a composite sketch of one of two men seen with Waco tire dealer and polygamist Harold E. "Jack" McCollum on the day McCollum was shot to death on Oct. 16.

The body of McCollum, 68, was found in weeds along the banks of the Navasota River off U.S. 79 near the Leon and Robertson county line.

The McCollum case has attracted attention in part because of revelations after his death that McCollum had secretly maintained separate families in Dallas and Waco for 29 years.

McCollum had three other wives at the same time in the 1970s, but each of those marriages ended in divorce.

Sheriff Royce Wilson said witnesses reported seeing McCollum with two men in North Dallas about four hours before his body was discovered.

Japanese educators marvel over school

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — A delegation of Japanese educators spent two days this week peeking into Port Arthur classes and marveling at the district's computer instruction.

"We had heard that your schools excelled in computer education," spokesman Kyoji Akiyama said last week as the group from Osaka, Japan, toured computer classes in the Summit program at Lincoln High School.

Summit, Port Arthur's magnet school program, is one of the reasons the Japanese picked the district for their only stop in the United States, Akiyama said. The group also visited schools in the Canadian province of British Columbia.

In addition to classes in computer use and programming, Lincoln also offers courses in repair and robotics.

"This class repairs all the computers used throughout the district," Superintendent Joe Pitts said.

The group of 24 met a couple of small robots built and programmed by students. One of the robots wheeled up to the delegation and waved a mechanical hand.

"Everywhere I go people look at me," the robot said. "It must be because I'm so short."

Most of the delegates could not speak English, but had no trouble getting along with students. They took turns photographing each other with Ryan Sallier, a 6-8 basketball player.

Akiyama said he found some classes hard. He gave up translating one student's assignment on Elizabethan England.

"This vocabulary is very difficult," he said.

The students agreed.

The Japanese said they were surprised at the freedom students in Port Arthur have in deciding what courses to take.

Students in Japan go to school six days a week, 11 months a year and attend classes that are controlled rigidly. Each class usually has 40 students, the delegates said.

Reported child abuse cases reveal rise in involvement of 'abusive boyfriend'

HOUSTON (AP) — The pictures of 2-year-old Christopher Kalmbach's body marked with bruises and cigarette burns nearly caused members of a jury hearing his case to weep.

The little boy had died after pepper was forced down his throat by his mother's boyfriend.

In what a judge called the worst case of child abuse he had seen in almost 10 years, the jury heard in vivid detail the case against the mother's boyfriend, Raymond Edward Coffey, 26, and convicted him of injury to a child. He was sentenced to 50 years in prison.

The case is a harsh example of the rise of reported cases of men abusing their girlfriends' children, said State District Judge Michael McSpadden who presided over Coffey's trial in October.

"We're seeing a lot of cases of a live-in boyfriend or a stepfather abusing," McSpadden said. "The frustration is out there — and they're taking it out on smaller people."

"It represents a tremendous problem for us in working with families," said Gene Daniel, regional director of Harris County Children's Protective Services.

He estimated 240 to 300 reported child abuse cases a month involve an abusive boyfriend, about 30 percent of all Harris County reports. Mothers account for most abuse cases, he said.

But, in some years, boyfriends have accounted for half the deaths of abused children, Daniel said.

The problem occurs across the state, Galveston County assistant District Attorney Mike Clark said.

In August, he obtained a 10-year prison sentence for Richard Norwood, 33, who admitted to repeatedly spanking his girlfriend's 6-year-old daughter and stringing her up in a closet by her ankles to rid her of evil spirits.

The next month, Clark prosecuted a case in which Dennis Joseph Florio, 22, was convicted of injury to a child by omission of adequate care and sentenced to 60 years in prison for the death of his live-in girlfriend's 2-year-old son, David McComb.

The child was found with several bruises on his body, bites to his right cheek and a leg, a torn rectum and bare spots on his head where hair had been pulled out.

In both cases, the mothers were aware of the boyfriends abusing the child, Clark said.

Susan Heitman, 29, was convicted of helping her boyfriend abuse the girl, Clark said. Cherelyn McComb, 20, was indicted in her son's death but was given a probated sentence in exchange for testifying for the state.

"So the child's really out in the cold," Clark said. "There's no one really backing him up."

Generally, women who are involved with men who abuse their children are isolated, passive and have few friends, Daniel said.

"These women are obviously very lonely people," he said. "They are looking for companionship. They take the path of least resistance. They want the security of someone to tell them what to do."

"One thing important to understand, child rearing is an extremely difficult task," said Pam Cole, assistant professor of psychology at the University of Houston.

The women tend to have few examples of good parenting because they often lack loving parents themselves, Ms. Cole said. They often do not choose mates well and may move in with men they may have known for only a few weeks, she said.

"The boyfriend is prematurely put in the role of surrogate father," said Patrick Brady, chief psychologist for the Houston Child Guidance Center. "It's an explosive situation."

In other cases, abusive men may seek out passive women to take advantage of the children, said Trudy Davis, state Child Protective Services supervisor in Galveston County.

The women feel they cannot interfere with their boyfriends' disciplining even though the children may cry out in pain, Ms. Cole said.

In some cases, the mother may feel ambivalent as the child may be unwanted or the result of an unhappy relationship, she said.

Both the mother and abusive boyfriend tend to have flat personalities and an inability to respond to others' sufferings, Brady said.

Poverty, unemployment and lack of community or family ties may fuel frustration that is taken out on a child, they said.

Ms. Cole and other psychologists stress most women and their abusive boyfriends can be counseled to become non-abusive parents.

"Most people view child abusers as extremely mentally ill," Daniel said. "Only 5 percent fall into that disturbed category. It's often the case of fairly normal people overreacting to a normal child's behavior."

But in a few cases, the abusive boyfriends show no remorse and deserve a long prison sentence, prosecutors said.

Coffey, who faces a 50-year prison sentence, told police he forced pepper down the 2-year-old's throat and beat him with a paddle to discipline the child for cursing.

Bankers to push for second home mortgages

DALLAS (AP) — Texas bankers are planning a push for a constitutional amendment that would allow homeowners to take out second mortgages, but consumer groups promise to mount stiff opposition to the proposal.

Bolstered by the recent landslide passage of the branch banking law, bankers feel they have the momentum to change the constitutional prohibition on second mortgages.

Although past efforts at repealing the law have failed, bankers say the depressed economy and changes in the federal tax code offer a more advantageuos position from which to bargain for the repeal.

Richard E. Lane, president of First City Bank-Central Park in San Antonio, said the repeal is of first priority. Lane is chairman of the Texas Bankers Association, the main trade group representing the 1,935 commercial banks in Texas.

Current Texas law allows borrowers to obtain home equity financing only to buy a new home, make home improvements or pay taxes. Texas is the only state that prohibits homeowners from taking out second mortgages.

One study directed by Gerald Keim, a professor of management at Texas A&M University, estimated repealing the prohibition would generate $4.15 billion of increased revenue annually and create 34,000 permanent jobs in Texas.

Keim's study also estimates that the $4.4 billion in second mortgages Texans would obtain would generate $177 million in state tax revenue and $26 million for local governments.

Despite the revenue advantages, Texas consumer groups say they will oppose the measure because average homeowners are in no position to take on more debt.

"Because of the fact that things are economically worse than they have ever been, most experts would tell you the worst thing a consumer should do is get into more debt," Brad Wiewel, president of the Texas Consumers Union, told The Dallas Morning News.

Reagan faces undermining of presidential power on Iran issue

NATION

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

An analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, who proved the American presidency was not permanently weakened by the pitfalls of his predecessors, suddenly faces the specter of his leadership being undermined by perceptions of an abuse of presidential power involving the sale of arms to Iran.

With that previously secret series of weapons sales bursting into the proportions of scandal, Reagan is in for a long seige. The extraordinary personal popularity that enabled him to push his programs past an often reluctant Congress and to be re-elected in a 49-state landslide now is being weighed against his credibility and that of his White House.

There has been no suggestion that this president won't be able to finish his term, but Reagan's policy, the conduct of his aides, his own judgment and the methods by which all this is to be investigated will be subjects of intense debate and scrutiny in coming weeks.

The programs he had hoped to preserve, expand or initiate during his final two years in office are in jeopardy.

The Iranian arms shipments themselves already have been killed following their disclosure.

Other projects, such as Reagan's long, lonely and finally successful battle to help finance the Nicaraguan rebels' guerrilla war against their government, are likely victims of the new disclosures.

Sen. David Durenburger, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said on learning that Iranian weapons payments were diverted to the Contra counterrevolutionaries: "I suspect it will be a cold day in Washington before any more money goes to Nicaragua." And Durenburger's Democratic colleague, Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts, promised to try to kill the Contra aid package "the moment we get back into session in January."

Beyond the issues directly involved, the underpinnings of Reagan's foreign policy also are weakened by unfolding events. With the president thrown on the defensive, the hostile Congress he must face as a result of losing the Senate in the fall elections will be emboldened as it challenges his Strategic Defense Initiative, his scrapping of SALT II weapons ceilings, the priorities assigned to military spending and his resistance to protective trade measures.

The questions about his leadership also cast doubt on his ability to carry on arms control negotiations with the Soviets. The confusion over Reagan's position at the superpower summit in Reykjavik, Iceland, in October is compounded by congressional concerns that a president preoccupied by problems at home may be ill-equipped to strike the best deal at the bargaining table.

The president can consider himself fortunate that his administration's primary domestic initiatives, including the tax and budget cuts of his first year and the income tax overhaul adopted this year, are behind him, for the White House will lose much of its influence over legislative matters. A president's agenda always tends to be driven by crises, and much of his staff already is preoccupied with the growing scandal.

Nor can the president expect a quick fix that would permit him to get on to other business.

Criminal investigations take a long time even when the questions are relatively simple to dissect, and the dimensions of this case aren't yet known. What's more, someone still must decide whether this administration can investigate itself. Questions already are being raised about Attorney General Edwin Meese's handling of the matter over the weekend, whether he was tardy in calling in the FBI and whether that may have permitted the destruction of evidence.

Appointment of a special prosecutor is a good possibility.

Several congressional committees are interested in various aspects of the case. The leadership will have to decide whether to let them have at it or create a special investigative panel and give it the lead, as was done for Watergate.

Other issues remain to be resolved along the way. White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, himself a possible target of the probe, says he does not expect the Justice Department to question him or the president. Reagan can claim executive privilege but, as Richard Nixon learned, not without paying a price in public confidence.

This president, who chafed at the safeguards established following the Watergate and CIA investigations of the 1970s, now must watch as others seek to unearth any secrets he might hold. Already he has been forced to acknowledge that the clandestine operation he authorized got out of hand.

He must also explain how that could happen and whether, as some lawmakers have suggested, he circumvented the requirements inspired by previous abuses.

The President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, a panel of outsiders charged with overseeing the government's covert operations, has yet to be heard from as to what it knew or whether it waved any warning flags at the Iranian deal.

Salmonella poisonings investigated

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) -- State officials are interviewing kitchen workers and reviewing health charts at a nursing home in hopes of tracing an outbreak of salmonella poisoning that killed five residents and sickened 20 others.

Leading the investigation is state Health Commissioner S. Douglas Lloyd, who went with other officials Friday to the Mountain View Healthcare home in Windsor and planned to remain through the weekend.

Salmonella poisoning is caused by bacteria spread through infected food and feces. Its symptoms include diarrhea, vomiting and fever. Although it is not usually life-threatening, it can be deadly for infants, the elderly or people with other medical problems.

Patients at the nursing home began falling ill Nov. 16.

The staff first suspected that a virus was to blame and began infection-control procedures, which include limiting visitors and careful handling of soiled linen to prevent transferring infection, said Terry Kuzman, regional vice president of Hillhaven Corp., which owns the nursing home.

The state was notified several days after the outbreak.

"The outcome would not have been altered one bit," if the state had been notified earlier, Kuzman said, noting there is no cure or treatment for salmonella poisoning.

The fifth death, that of 77-year-old Anita Melesky, occurred Thanksgiving Day.

"For me, it was a devastating way to see someone go," said her brother, Joseph Caesar of Windsor, describing her death as "a slow process, very painful."

Deputy Health Commissioner Elinor Jacobson said Friday that no more deaths were expected as a result of the outbreak. Five people remained ill, she said, two of them in the hospital.

Lloyd said inspectors want to determine if the food poisoning victims were properly cared for and what steps can be taken to prevent a similar incident at Mountain View or elsewhere.

A team from the department's licensing division also went to the nursing home to check on its compliance with the public health code, Ms. Jacobson said, but results of the inspection were not immediately available.

State officials said earlier in the week that they suspected the source of the salmonella was pureed food served a day or two before patients began exhibiting symptoms.

Kuzman and Ms. Jacobson said the cause of the outbreak was still a mystery.

Kuzman said state officials also were looking into the possibility that the disease was spread through a meatloaf, eggs, a dessert, employee contamination, or other means.

Caesar criticized the nursing home for waiting to contact state officials. "I have livestock, myself, and the first thing you do when something breaks out is call in a professional," he said.

Wayne Newton fights to clear name in link to organized crime figures

By ROBERT MACY

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Six years ago Wayne Newton ruled this entertainment capital, earning $6 million annually from sellout crowds, and was a rising star in Nevada politics.

Today, Newton is engulfed in an acrimonious fight with NBC over its 1980 reports linking him to organized crime figures.

The story, he says, has left a cloud over his life and lowered his appeal as a headliner in this glittering gambling mecca, forcing him to make expensive road trips that have dropped his net income below $6 million despite his $8 million take, he says. Though he once played host to President Reagan at his ranch, Newton's political allure has faded.

Network attorneys say Newton's problems are of his own doing. They say NBC was reporting what it was told by law enforcement officials, who stumbled onto Newton's name in 1980 while wiretapping the late Frank Piccolo, a reputed East Coast mob figure.

Newton filed a multimillion-dollar defamation suit against NBC in April 1981. After years of maneuvering and millions of dollars in attorneys' fees, the case went to court Oct. 15. It should go to the federal jury in early December, but whoever loses is expected to appeal.

Newton, 44, came to Las Vegas in 1959 near the end of his junior year in high school. He and brother Jerry sang at the Fremont Hotel, six shows a night, six nights a week.

A performance for comedian Jackie Gleason two years later won the brothers a ticket to New York, a job at the Copacabana nightclub — and an encounter with a fan and sometime acquaintance that would haunt Newton 20 years later.

Newton testified that Guido Penosi waved a $100 bill at him at one of their performances, requesting a song. He declined the money, drawing Penosi's wrath.

In subsequent years, Newton says he once went to Penosi's home for dinner, helped Penosi's son by appearing on a television show and got him a room once at a Strip resort.

By the late 1970s, Newton was the top performer in Las Vegas, hobnobbed with political elite, raised Arabian horses and dabbled in other investments.

A partner in one venture, a show business tabloid that failed, was upset by Newton's refusal to put more money into the publication and threatened him.

Death threats followed from a man identified only as "Dapper," an East Coast crime figure. The threats included warnings that Newton's daughter, Erin, then 4 years old, would be cut up and parts of her body sent to Newton in a box.

Newton said he turned to Penosi in early 1980 in an effort to have the threats halted "because I knew he had been in jail and might know who I could contact to get the threats halted."

Penosi said in a deposition that he contacted his cousin, Piccolo, for help in solving the problem. The threats stopped, and Piccolo began bragging to associates that Newton owed him.

When Piccolo was asked about investing in Atlantic City, N.J., he declined, according to testimony, telling associates he would be involved in Newton's purchase of the Aladdin.

FBI agents wiretapping Piccolo's phone on another case heard the references to Newton. The information was leaked by federal authorities to NBC producer Ira Silverman and NBC reporter Brian Ross, defendants in Newton's suit along with the network.

The first NBC report linking Newton to the crime figures was Oct. 6, 1980, a week after the state licensed him to purchase the Aladdin. NBC promotions asked, "Wayne Newton: Did the mob help him buy the Aladdin Hotel?"

Federal authorities say Newton was the target of renewed death threats in fall 1981. The entertainer blamed those threats on NBC reports that he would be a witness against Penosi and Piccolo in a trial on an alleged scheme to extort money from Newton and singer Lola Falana and her business manager.

Piccolo was slain in 1982, before he could be tried on the extortion charges, and Penosi was acquitted twice.

NATION IN BRIEF

Wood alcohol passed as 'moonshine' kills youths

DEL CITY, Okla. (AP) — A teen-ager died Saturday from drinking toxic wood alcohol passed off as "moonshine," part of the same batch that killed one youth and sickened others who had attended a party where it was served, authorities said.

Kevin Elder, 17, died at Plano General Hospital in Plano, Texas, detective Mark Edwards said.

John Lowery, 19, of Oklahoma City remained in custody Saturday on a second-degree murder complaint in the death Friday of partygoer Timothy Scott Tilson, 23, of Oklahoma City.

Mother sees face in clay

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The mother of a missing teen-ager learned her daughter was dead when she spotted a newspaper photo of a clay facial reconstruction made from a skull found in eastern Minnesota.

"Now we know," said Sandra Cook of Eagan, who told the Minneapolis Star and Tribune that she had been searching for her daughter, Tracy Cook of Minneapolis, for nearly a year.

As her pastor comforted her at her home, Ms. Cook told the Star and Tribune that she was shaken when she saw photographs of the clay model. She then sent her daughter's dental records to authorities, who made the identification Friday.

The skull was found by walkers on Aug. 11 in the woods near Aitkin in east-central Minnesota, about 150 miles north of Minneapolis. The skull, five vertebrae and some hair with a barrette were found.

Artist defends nude women

CHICAGO (AP) — An Italian artist complains that "Victorian prudishness is invading the United States" after two of his nudes were removed from a skyscraper lobby because of tenants' complaints.

Ludovico De Luigi said Friday that the paintings of bare-chested women emerging from water were less risque than some magazine perfume advertisements.

Congress will thoroughly examine corporate takeovers in Boesky probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' investigation of speculator Ivan Boesky's insider trading escapades will go beyond isolated cases into a thorough examination of corporate takeovers and market regulation, leaders of the House and Senate committees say.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, and Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who will be chairman of the Senate Banking Committee next year, said in interviews they plan to take their inquiries beyond the spate of insider trading cases.

Those cases came to a head Nov. 14 when Boesky, 49, Wall Street's best-known arbitrageur, agreed to pay $100 million and plead guilty to one criminal charge to settle a Securities and Exchange Commission insider trading complaint. Boesky also was barred from trading for life.

Both Dingell and Proxmire said they do not know the extent of the problem yet. But both voiced suspicions of widespread insider trading in volatile takeover stocks.

"It is a major problem, but it is probably more a part of a larger problem" said Dingell. "The real question is whether insider trading is the beginning and the end of all the difficulties to which we find ourselves compelled to look."

Proxmire said his committee will be looking at the broader question of hostile corporate takeovers and their effect on American business. But the senator said the committee plans a close look at insider trading itself because of suspicions of widespread abuse.

He noted that former Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. managing director Dennis Levine, who pleaded guilty to four counts of securities fraud in connection with insider trading, profited from trading in stocks his company did not handle.

"The conclusion should be that there's some kind of a network out there," he said. "A lot of people know about it. A lot of people are passing information.

"We would have to be very naive not to expect that that would take place," he added. "After all, people can make an awful lot of money out of this."

Both chairmen said the insider trading investigation will be among their top priorities next year.

"There's broad interest throughout the Congress as a whole, and you can be assured there will be no resistance to the committee going into this matter with great vigor," Dingell said.

The formal inquiry begins next week. Dingell's investigations subcommittee holds its first hearing Dec. 11. Parallel hearings will begin next year in the securities subcommittee to draft whatever legislation is needed.

The Senate committee inquiry will begin in late January, when the new Democratic-controlled Senate is seated and Proxmire formally becomes chairman.

Proxmire said he expects the issue to be handled by the full committee, rather than delegated to a subcommittee. And a key witness is expected to be Boesky himself.

"He's indicated that he's very interested in seeing that something good comes out of this," Proxmire said. "And he's indicated specifically that he thinks there might be changes in the rules, the laws,...to prevent what he recognizes is wrong from continuing.

"Now a lot of people, including this senator, would be very skeptical about his testimony in view of his record," Proxmire said. "But here's the king of arbitrageurs, a man who managed to beat the system as no one else ever has.

Weinberger leaves for NATO meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger will fly to Europe and northern Africa this week for consultations that are sure to be dominated by nuclear arms control issues and recent developments in the Middle East.

The defense secretary's main purpose on the eight-day trip is a regularly scheduled meeting of NATO defense ministers. But he also ismaking a special side-trip to improve relations with Morocco, and will have to allay European concerns about President Reagan's decision last week to break out from the restrictions of the SALT II nuclear arms accord.

Weinberger expects to be questioned by the allied officials about secret U.S. arms sales to Iran and profits being sent to Contra rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government. But he has little to add to the disclosures because he was not aware of the secret cash transfers to the Contras, said a Pentagon source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The consultations with European defense officials will more likely center on arms control, arms cooperation projects, the president's "Star Wars" initiative; and the need for NATO countries to increase their spending on conventional defense, said Pentagon officials who asked not to be named.

Allied leaders in Europe had previously urged Reagan to hold to the limits of the unratified SALT II pact in the absence of a new agreement, "and the secretary is now expecting lengthy discussions on this matter," one source said.

Reagan decided to exceed the SALT II limits on nuclear missiles and cruise-missile equipped bombers because of Soviet violations of the accord and "overall U.S. requirements and the threat we face."

Weinberger's visit to Morocco, meantime, was prompted by a decision in August by that nation's monarch, King Hassan II, to renege on a 1984 unity treaty with Libya and its leader, Col. Moammar Gadhafi.

U.S. officials do not believe the American bombing raids on Libya last April and efforts to isolate Gadhafi diplomatically led to Hassan's decision, linking it instead to Libya's failure to provide economic assistance to Morocco.

But they nonetheless welcome the change of heart by the leader of a country that rarely attracts the attention of the American public but that can play a key role in Middle Eastern affairs.

Hassan has sent a series of unusually strong signals that he wishes to rebuild his ties to the United States and Weinberger's visit to Morocco will be quite important, said one ranking Pentagon official.

Morocco, located on Africa's northern tip directly south of the Rock of Gibraltar at the entrance to the Mediterranean Sea, occupies a key strategic position, the official noted.

Moreover, Hassan has led one of the most stable Moslem governments in all the region since 1961 and last summer, he became one of the few Moslem countries to open direct talks with Israel by inviting then Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres to Rabat.

Weinberger's visit and consultations with Hassan will mark the first such high-level contact since the king decided to break his accord with Libya. That accord, known as the Oujda pact after the city in which it was signed in August 1984, called for a loose federation and eventual union of the two countries.

Ramos: Philippine military must not be 'power broker'

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Armed forces chief of staff Gen. Fidel V. Ramos said Saturday the military must not become a power broker here lest the nation turn into a "banana republic" condemned to instability, the Philippine News Agency reported.

"I am sure that you and I do not want to have that kind of arrangement in our country," the government-run agency quoted Ramos as saying.

PNA said he made the remarks to a group of soldiers who joined him in an early morning jog around a suburban military camp.

The agency said Ramos, who is credited with foiling a purported coup attempt a week ago, commented that a succession of coups could plague the land if soldiers controlled politics.

Banana republic is a patronizing term applied to small countries, usually Latin American, dependent on a one-crop economy controlled by foreign capital. It also often connotes a nation prone to revolutions.

According to the agency, Ramos said the military is a "bulwark of national stability" but "must never be a power broker."

The presidential palace said Saturday that President Corazon Aquino expects to dismiss two more Cabinet members this week in a governmental renovation she began last Sunday with the dismissal of Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile. Her move followed the purported coup plot by officers close to Enrile.

Besides replacing the controversial Enrile with Rafael Ileto, his deputy, Mrs. Aquino asked the rest of her Cabinet to submit their resignations, saying she wanted a "fresh start" for her nine-month old government.

On Friday, she replaced Public Works Minister Rogaciano Mercado and Natural Resources Minister Ernesto Maceda and said she would announce more changes "shortly." Mercado and Maceda, whose ministries have been accused of corruption, are among officials the military wanted replaced.

In an official news release, presidential spokesman Teodoro C. Benigno said next week's changes would "finish the job of the president in reorganizing or strengthening her Cabinet."

Mrs. Aquino addressed a conference of about 300 business executives Saturday and urged her listeners to start drumming up support for a new draft constitution that will be the subject of a national vote Feb. 2.

"Weekend coups are mere distractions, poor excuses to delay our confrontation with history," Mrs. Aquino said. "Let us now stop bickering and guessing about the future and instead go for it."

Mrs. Aquino assumed office in February after a military-civilian revolt ousted Ferdinand E. Marcos, who had been president for 20 years. She abolished the Marcos-era constitution and the National Assembly he had dominated, and appointed a commission to draft a new charter.

Before her speech, the business executives presented her with recommendations for stimulating the faltering economy.

They urged a definitive land reform policy, an end to bribery in the bureaucracy, a price monitoring system to purge abusive middlemen, measures to increase availability of financing, and improvements in transportation, roads and communications.

Benigno did not identify the ministers to be dismissed, but Manila newspapers speculated during the past week that they are Augusto Sanchez of labor and Aquilino Pimentel of local governments.

Sanchez is viewed by the military and business people as left-leaning.

Engineers put stop to North See pipeline leak

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — Engineers stopped a pipeline leak Saturday that halted production at four North Sea oilfields and caused a 10-square-mile oil slick.

Occidental Petroleum, which operates three of the fields, said engineers pumped seawater into the faulty pipeline, 300 feet down. A weld crack caused the leak.

The oil slick started breaking up Friday and an Occidental spokesman said Saturday it had dissipated significantly.

He said production, which stopped Thursday upon discovery of the leak, would remain halted until repairs were complete.

Occidental's Piper, Claymore and Scapa oilfields and Texaco's Tartan together produce about 300,000 barrels of oil a day, one-eighth of the North Sea's total output. They are connected by a pipeline complex bringing oil ashore at Flotta terminal, 100 miles west in the Orkney Islands.

Cuban parade to mark 30th anniversary of Castro campaign

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — Cubans will get a rare glimpse at the country's Soviet-built military machine during a parade Tuesday that will mark the 30th anniversary of the beginning of President Fidel Castro's guerrilla campaign.

As every Cuban school child knows, Castro landed on Cuba's southeast coast on Dec. 2, 1956, after a perilous weeklong trip from Mexico. Castro brought with him 81 fellow rebels aboard the yacht Granma.

The group was ambushed by a military patrol a few days later and was almost cut to pieces. Undaunted by the huge odds against him, Castro was able to attract new recruits and, within 25 months, he overcame the 40,000-member armed forces of the Fulgencio Batista dictatorship.

Castro now has almost that many troops in Angola, a measure both of Cuba's global ambitions and of the degree of militarization the nation has undergone since the revolution.

The rebel army had 4,000 fighters when Castro took power in 1959. Today, nearly 300,000 Cubans are on active duty or serve in the reserves.

Protesters stage anti-government rally

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Riot police bent on foiling a major anti-government rally fired tear gas Saturday at thousands of protesters at two dozen sites in Seoul and arrested nearly 2,000 people. Injuries were reported.

Demonstrators flung stones and Molotov cocktails at police.

Lee Min-woo, president of the major opposition New Korea Democratic Party, warned if repression continues, the party will no longer seek change through dialogue and compromise, but will launch a campaign to overthrow the government.

The party organized the rally as part of its drive for direct presidential elections. Negotiations by a special parliamentary committee on the issue are stalled.

Opposition and government are deadlocked over efforts to draft a new constitution before President Chun Doo-hwan's term expires in 1988.

The government banned the Saturday rally, saying the opposition was trying to stir social unrest. About 70,000 police officers reportedly were deployed in the capital to enforce the ban.

The rally was to start at 1 p.m. at a municipal park. Hours earlier, thousands of police set up barricades and sealed off the park. Police also were sent to the party's headquarters, foreign legations, government agencies and newspaper offices.

Crowds first gathered at three major intersections leading to the park. A group of about 20 opposition legislators tried to leave party headquarters for the park, but riot police turned them back.

Police repeatedly fired tear gas to disperse people who regrouped in alleys and tried to take the streets. Demonstrators retaliated by hurling stones and gasoline-filled bottles. Police responded with heavier barrages of tear gas.

At one point, about 600 demonstrators carrying torches and placards surged out of a downtown shopping area and scattered leaflets denouncing the government. Most protests were crushed within minutes.

Two opposition lawmakers were among more than six people injured after being struck by tear gas canisters, witnesses said.

By nightfall, 1,937 protesters had been taken into custody in 24 separate clashes, police said. Small-scale protests kept up after dark.

At about 3 p.m., organizers said they would give up holding the rally on Saturday. They said they planned to organize another major demonstration soon.

Lee told reporters that key officials of his New Korea Democratic Party and opposition legislators would hold a protest sit-in at party headquarters on Sunday.

If repression continued, Lee said, the party "will not hesitate to go all-out for a campaign to overthrow the government in place of our efforts hitherto to seek democratic reforms through dialogue and compromise."

"The people will also lose their patience and come forward to demand that we opt for a more decisive method...if all these good intentions continue to be trampled on as was today's rally," he said.

About 50 opposition leaders were placed under house arrest Friday.

In demanding direct presidential elections, the opposition complains that the electoral college system now in effect favors the party in power. The government wants a parliamentary form of government headed by a powerful prime minister under a figurehead president.

Chemical plant explosion in Sydney kills five, injures 14

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — An explosion at a Sydney chemical plant killed five maintenance men who were working with welding equipment and injured 14 other workers on Saturday, the plant's owners reported.

The blast at the Ici Australia Ltd. plant triggered several fires and caused extensive damage. Police said about 80 men were doing maintenance work in the plant at the time.

Ici spokesman Dick Blamey said the five men killed were working with welding equipment close to an empty vat.

"We don't have any idea what caused the explosion," he said. "There must have been a flammable chemical or vapor present."

Police said the five were so badly burned it could take some time before they are identified.

Woman riles non-Catholics

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald's Fine Gael Party has refused to re-nominate a woman legislator who signed a statement saying non-Roman Catholics are enemies of the Irish people.

Alice Glenn, a member of the Irish parliament or Dail, was rejected Friday as a candidate for next year's general election by the selection convention in her Dublin constituency.

She had signed a statement saying all churches except the Catholic church were "enemies of the people" because of their position on divorce, which is banned in the Irish Republic.

The statement from The Anti-Divorce Family Forum group angered non-Catholics and embarrassed FitzGerald who has been campaigning to persuade Protestants in Northern Ireland that he is determined to separate church and state politics in the Irish Republic.

Shiite given death sentence

KUWAIT (AP) — An Iraqi Shiite Moslem was given the death sentence Saturday for the attempted assassination of this oil-rich Gulf state's leader.

The State Security Court found Alaa Mohammed al-Atrash guilty of collaborating with Abdel-Hussein Abdel-Saheb al-Saeed, who rammed a car into the emir's motorcade May 25, 1985.

Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al Sabah, the 60-year-old ruler, escaped with only minor bruises, but Saeed, two of the emir's guards and two pedestrians were killed and 11 people were hurt.

Atrash, a 33-year-old Ministry of Health employee, joins 17 other Shiite Moslems jailed in Kuwaiti.

The 17, three of whom also are awaiting execution, were imprisoned for the December 1983 car bombings at the U.S. and French embassies and Kuwaiti civilian targets. Five people were killed in the blasts and more than 80 were injured.

Pro-Iranian terrorists in Lebanon have demanded the release of the 17 in exchange for kidnapped American hostages. Kuwait has refused.

Chinese border watched

PEKING (AP) — Border officials at the northeast city of Manzhouli stopped 817 people from illegally entering or leaving China between January and October, the official newspaper China Legal News reported Saturday.

It did not say how many people were trying to enter China and how many wanted to leave, or give their nationalities. It said they carried false documents.

Manzhouli, a railroad stop in China's Inner Mongolia province, lies next to the border with communist Mongolia and the Soviet Union. It is on a major railroad from Peking to Moscow.

The Legal News gave the example of six people stopped by officials Nov. 13. They said they were going to Italy, Finland, France or other countries to visit relatives, but their documents were false and had no visas, the report said.

Italians rediscover films

ROME (AP) — Italians are rediscovering some of America's oldest films, like Charlie Chaplin's 1918 "Shoulder Arms" and clips of the 1897 inauguration of William McKinley, the 25th U.S. president.

They are part of a weeklong celebration of silent films sponsored by the Center for Cinema Studies.

The exhibition includes 300 films and a display of 1,000 movie cameras, posters and other paraphernalia.

Temperature to be cooler

From Staff and Wire Reports

Temperatures will drop slightly as the Thanksgiving weekend comes to an end and Permian Basin residents return to their normal schedules, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Today calls for sunny skies continuing, with the high expected to climb into the upper 60s. Winds will be from the southwest at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight's low is expected to be in the low 30s.

By Monday, skies will turn partly cloudy and the high will only reach into the upper 50s.

Saturday's high of 73 degrees was 5 degrees cooler than the record of 78, set in 1975. The low of 33 was 15 degrees warmer than the record of 18, set in 1979.

STATE

Skies were mostly sunny and temperatures mild over most of Texas Saturday, although some high- and middle-level clouds gathered over far West and Southeast Texas.

A weak area of high pressure was over the eastern half of Texas, while a trough of low pressure was across the western part of the High Plains, according to the National Weather Service.

West Texas should be generally sunny today and becoming partly cloudy by Monday with lows in the 20s and 30s. Highs today should range from the 50s to the middle 70s in the extreme south; Monday's highs should be in the 50s.

NATION

Heavy rain saturated the Southeast on Saturday, while snow and wind gusts hampered Thanksgiving weekend travelers in the West.

Gale warnings were posted along the Gulf of Mexico coast from Apalachicola, Fla., to Intracoastal City, La., because of a low pressure system hovering over the Gulf.

Low pressure and a cold front brought snow and wind gusts to the West.

Gusts of up to 40 mph continued across Nevada in the wake of a fast-moving storm that dumped a half foot of snow on the Lake Tahoe Basin. Echo Summit received 10 inches of new snow, and 7 inches fell at Tahoe City and the Sierra Ski Ranch.

In Utah, wind gusted to 48 mph at Cedar City. Strong winds were also blowing across northern Arizona and some of the deserts of southern California.

Three to five inches of snow were forecast for the mountains of Wyoming and the northern and central mountains of Colorado, with heavier amounts at some higher elevations.

''Tis the season for accidental house fires'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

As winter approaches, and the Permian Basin receives sporadic but potent blasts of cold air, officials say 'tis the season for frosty nights — and hot fires, especially those accidentally caused by neglected or faulty space heaters.

Officials also blame signs of the season such as decorative lights and dry Christmas trees for a significant number of fires.

The Nov. 11 death of Haskell Collins, 69, was the season's first fire fatality caused indirectly by the cold weather. Firefighters found his badly burned body at 6:30 a.m. in the living room of his home at 1302 S. Connell St.

Bobby Williams, assistant fire marshal of the Midland Fire Department, said his investigation revealed a natural gas space heater in the living room of the man's home was incorrectly connected, using a rubber hose.

According to the National Weather Service, the low early Nov. 11 was 31 degrees.

"When I moved the heater, there was a piece of rubber hose it was hooked up with," Williams said. "When I moved the heater, there was a hole burned in the carpet and charred into the floor."

Fire officials say even if a space heater does not ignite materials around it, when a material is heated to 160 degrees it begins to decompose, and that decomposition can make a material more flammable.

Current federal regulations require space heaters, which can burn natural gas or propane, to have some type of exhaust mechanism.

Williams said that space heaters located in rural homes, that usually burn propane, are also a potential problem.

"There is a problem we would have near the (heater) regulator, located outside, especially if it becomes built up with ice," he said. "The regulator needs to be protected from ice, and it needs to be right side up."

Six days after Collins' death, a 67-year-old Shreveport, La., woman died in a fire that officials there said was caused when she tried to heat her home with charcoal in a bucket. The woman, Mandy Markham, died of asphyxiation when the fire broke out, officials said.

Her wood-frame home had no electricity or gas, fire officials said at the time.

Williams said he has seen similar situations, but no one has died. Yet.

"Sometimes they are pretty careful," he said. "I remember one time though that sand spread around under the bucket got so hot that it just burned through the floor.

"But I do foresee the day we are going to see someone dead from that type of situation."

Christmas trees, Williams said, are also a severe potential fire hazard, and owners should take care.

He said usual precautions should be taken, like making sure there is plenty of water in the base of the tree.

Continental Airlines to be back at Regional Airport

By RICK BROWN
Staff Writer

Previously empty Midland Regional Airport passenger gates will take on a former bustle Monday when Continental Airlines rejoins the lineup of carriers that serve the Permian Basin.

A 12:20 p.m. a Continental arrival from Denver and Amarillo will nose through a banner at Gate Four to officially herald the airline's return, John Patterson, airline general manager for Midland-Odessa operations, said Friday. A subsequent 12:45 p.m. Houston departure will re-inaugurate Continental outgoing service, he said.

In all, the airline, a subsidiary of Houston's Texas Air Corp., has scheduled three daily outgoing flights from the local airport — two puddle-jumpers with destinations that include Denver, Amarillo, Kansas City, Mo., and Sioux Falls, S.D.; and one non-stop flight to Houston, Patterson said.

Continental at the height of prior service — in 1979 — had scheduled 13 daily flights from the airport, according to City of Midland records.

The airline's renewal of service comes simultaneously with restoration of flights to 20 former Frontier Airlines destinations, according to Patterson. Frontier is a recent Continental acquisition from People Express Airlines.

"We're taking up the slack that Frontier left in the market here," Patterson explained. The airline had pulled out of Midland-Odessa upon a 1983 bankruptcy filing, he said.

In a related development, a Continental attorney told a Houston bankruptcy judge this week that another Texas Air Corp. subsidiary — New York Air — probably will begin flying under the Continental banner by next spring, according to wire reports.

Vic White, City of Midland director of airports, said this week that Continental's Midland-Odessa return should provide a substantial financial boost to the airport.

White had estimated a $7,000 monthly loss to airport coffers with Frontier's departure. Continental's return should bring in excess of $100,000 yearly in the form of additional rental and landing fees, he said.

White added his hope that an additional airline would increase regional competition and lead to more favorable pricing, service and scheduling for Permian Basin flyers.

Pilot says aerobatic flying way to 'express yourself'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Aerobatic flying is an art which Gene Beggs likens to ballet.

"It's a form of aerial ballet," said Beggs, a champion aerobatic pilot and airline pilot who flies for safety, precision and perfection. "Aerobatics is the ultimate form of flying."

Beggs is stalwart and unwavering in his dedication to the sport. And he is a quiet and unassuming mainstay in the International Aerobatic Club (IAC), which promotes safe and precision flying.

"It enables you to express yourself and to experience freedom in ways others do in gymnastics, dancing, figure skating, writing poetry, and painting," said Beggs, who, at 43, has logged more than 15,000 hours as pilot in command, is a board member of the United States Aerobatic Foundation, and is a member of the U.S. World Aerobatic Team. He competes in the biwing Pitts S1-T.

In late 1984 Beggs helped organize the IAC's Chapter 71, which is the West Texas Aerobatic Club Inc. for the Midland-Odessa area.

The club's 47 members include 15 aerobatics pilots. Of those, three are world-class aviators — Beggs of Midland-Odessa, Dr. Julie Pfile of Albuquerque, N.M., and Patty Wagstaff of Anchorage, Alaska. They are on the U.S. World Aerobatic Team.

Aerobatic pilots are competitive in honing their flying skills in stretching toward perfection.

THE CLUB'S LEADER, Paul Erdmann, 55, is an outspoken advocate of safety and of aerobatic flying but prefers to fly "straight and level." He has taken aerobatic training under Beggs to make him a safer and more proficient pilot.

"A safe pilot always leaves himself an alternative," Erdmann said. The airplane's surface controls, such as the ailerons, rudder, and elevators, are "tools of getting you out of trouble instead of into trouble."

"In IAC-sanctioned contests, we have never had a fatality," said Erdmann. "If you can do the things that Gene (Beggs) or (aerobatic pilot) Pat (Day) can do, you're not likely to get in trouble. We don't just put a guy in an airplane and say, 'Go get it' and take his money."

Erdmann is an organizer and leader who encourages pilots and non-pilots to do their best in whatever areas of aviation appeals to them and suits their talents. Like Beggs, he is on the board of the U.S. Aerobatic Foundation. Erdmann was the transportation officer of the 1986 U.S. World Aerobatic Team, which competed in England last summer.

While Erdmann said he doesn't compete in aerobatics, "I get a big sense of satisfaction in putting them (aerobatic pilots) into situations where they can perform and be the champions that they are."

Paul Erdmann

Erdmann said he stays clear of pilots who are not thoroughly dedicated to safety.

Program gives students chance to learn foreign culture

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Looking for an opportunity to open your home and share a summer or a year with a teen-ager from a foreign country?

AFS International/Intercultural Programs — the largest international high school exchange program — may be the place to start your search.

AFS is active in 70 countries, two-thirds of which are in the developing world. Volunteers provide local support in each community to assist families and students. They also arrange enrichment and fundraising activities to enable student participation from all economic and social levels.

Prior to 1981, AFS students could be found throughout Midland-Odessa public schools. After that, the area program sort of died out, said local AFS Director Carol Marshall.

Now, it's experiencing a rebirth in popularity, she said.

"We just started in October and, already, we've sent an application in for a student from Permian (High School in Odessa) for the Winter Departure Program."

Through AFS, Ms. Marshall said skilled professionals select a suitable young person who will be interested in a particular family's way of life. Most AFS students are between 16 and 18 years old and are placed on the basis of family interests and individual characteristics.

Ms. Marshall said hosting involves everyone in the family and often brings a fresh perspective to everyday life.

With AFSers, families often learn that there is more than one way to look at the world. "AFS students have a wide range of interests and personalities," she added.

Couples benefit from having the companionship of an AFSer and will see the world through the eyes of a teen-ager from another culture, said Ms. Marshall. For some AFSers, living in a family with no children is advantageous since it allows them to stand on their own two feet.

Single-parent families also are eligible to host AFSers, she added.

Host families, according to Ms. Marshall, are expected to supply love, moral support, comfort and basic needs — just as they would for a child of their own.

The AFSer will not expect to be treated differently, but as a part of the family, she said.

While families are not paid to host AFS students, they may deduct from their income tax a charitable contribution of up to $50 per month during the student's visit. In addition, AFSers receive a $20 monthly allowance from AFS for incidental expenses, she said.

AFS requires that each AFSer have his or her own bed, but a large proportion of students share a bedroom with their new brothers or sisters as well as the experience of attending the same school.

GARY OTT

After 3 ½ years, Midland beginning to feel like home

When I responded harshly to the seemingly harmless remark, I was immediately embarrassed. After all, it had been intended as a joke. Still, I snapped at the person.

It happened like this.

While visiting my parents on Thanksgiving, a high school friend, also home for the holiday, dropped by the house. We hadn't seen each other for several years so naturally we started reminiscing about the past. Then we moved to the present, catching up on what has been happening in our lives since we had last seen one another.

He's an artist type, living near Santa Fe, so we talked briefly about his work and the natural beauty of the mountains surrounding his new home.

"You can't imagine the marvelous sensation that d[illegible]es through your body when you awake in the [illegible]ng and catch that first glimpse of the sunlight pouring through the multi-colored Aspen trees," he said, arrogantly.

"Yeah, right," I replied, snubbing out a cigarette and refusing to be impressed.

Sensing my tacky attitude, he changed the subject.

"So, how's Midland these days? Economy still depressed?"

"It's pretty flat," I acknowledged. "People are hurting."

He smiled and said, "I guess those rich @#?!# are getting a taste of how the rest of us live. Serves 'em right."

It was then that I verbally lashed out at him. I don't remember exactly what I said, but it was very defensive of Midland and its people. It was as though he had attacked a family member.

Frankly, my overly aggressive reaction to his simple and offhand remark caught me by surprise. It is really not my style.

Indeed, I have told more than my share of Midland jokes over the years, including those about rich @#!*#, but somehow it is different when it comes from an outsider. I can criticize Midland all I want but others can't.

When I mentioned this obvious contradiction to a friend the other day, he pondered the situation briefly and then asked, "How long have you been in Midland, anyway?"

"About 3½ years," I said.

"Well, there you are."

"I beg your pardon?" I was still confused.

He explained his reasoning to me.

"After about three years a place becomes home. Up until then, you feel more like a visitor, kind of an outsider. But then something happens. You get comfortable in your surroundings, get to know more people and slowly but surely it becomes a part of you. And, you become a part of it. It's your home."

He may have a point. My change in attitude about Midland has occurred in the past six months.

It was reinforced last week when I was at my parents home in Plainview, a small town where I grew up and lived most of my life.

I had always considered it home, even when I lived somewhere else. Now that's changing. While there, I found myself feeling like the outsider. I was a guest, not the host.

Plainview, I'm sure, will always be my hometown, but it is not really home any longer. Midland is.

That's going to take some getting used to, but as long as those rich #@*!# treat me right, I think we'll do just fine.

Co-op helping farmers stave off financial ruin

By R. DANIEL CAVAZOS

SAN JUAN, Texas (AP) — Julio Castilleja steps out of his makeshift office and looks over farm machinery that glistens with the wetness of dew from a cool fall morning.

"This is it," he said. "This is our last chance to stay in farming. It's now or never."

For nearly 40 years, Castilleja and his family have tilled the Valley's soils and reaped its harvests. But now the years of profits have been replaced by hardships and mounting debts that show no mercy.

The ever-changing dynamics of the world's farm economy have made the American small farmer a bit player in a complex game that's trying to squeeze him out. It has left the small farmer confused and troubled.

"All we have is through farming," Castilleja said. "We don't know what else to do."

In June 1985, Castilleja decided he wasn't going to accept going broke without a fight. He talked to surrounding Valley farmers he had known for decades and who also were on the brink of financial ruin.

"WE JUST didn't want to quit and give up," he said. They didn't.

Traditionally, farmers are a fiercely independent lot, but when faced with impending bankruptcy, tradition can be quickly set aside.

Castilleja and five other farmers knew they couldn't make it individually anymore.

There was really one option to bankruptcy, Castilleja says, and that was to band together and pool their resources and years of farming knowledge. The farmers knew how to work the land. Now they had to learn the hard-edged business of staying financially afloat.

In what Castilleja says amounts to one last collective stab at financial survival, the farmers formed their own company — the Valley Farmers Co-op.

"We know we have to trust each other," he said. "We don't have anywhere else to turn."

With the help of Valley Interfaith and the Texas Department of Agriculture, the co-op was chartered last December.

THE FIRST step was to borrow $40,000 to buy the needed machinery to process vegetables.

Later, the co-op was given a $10,000 grant from an organization of Oblate fathers from the Roman Catholic Church, and then last spring came the biggest gift of all — a $15,000 grant from Willie Nelson's Farm Aid organization.

The co-op's first harvest was grown by six farmers. Eight more Hidalgo County farmers have since joined the co-op.

Castilleja, who's 56, is the co-op's manager, and his brother and oldest son are also farmers who are members of the co-op.

The fledgling organization is headquartered in a small office adjacent to Castilleja's San Juan home. On the office walls are letters from state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower that exhort the farmers to keep up the fight to stay in farming.

A would-be warehouse that has only a cement floor is located next to the office. Machinery stands ready to process the co-op's crops of various vegetables.

The co-op's farmers are small vegetable growers who own a combined 1,600 acres of farm land that is scattered throughout Hidalgo County.

DURING THE peak harvest months that run from November to March, the co-op employs nearly 100 farmworkers. The co-op's big crop is the jalapeno, but the organization's farmers also grow tomatoes, cabbage, melons and garlic.

"I think they're out to eliminate the small farmer."

By forming their own company, the farmers can now sell their crops directly to buyers and avoid paying the sheds for costly operating expenses.

But of course there's a huge catch.

Behind Castilleja's home, the co-op's diverse crops are displayed in a rural patchwork of brilliant shades of green.

"We've had our share of disagreements," Castilleja said of the co-op. "Sometimes I just get the urge to quit."

But he doesn't because Castilleja and the other farmers are united in their cause to weed out the dreaded middleman, and in the process create profits that are now non-existent.

In Valley agriculture, the large packing sheds provide a small farmer with all the resources needed to grow a crop.

It's the shed that often provides the small farmer with the seed, insecticides and labor to make a crop possible.

These are the kinds of resources a small farmer can't usually afford.

All the farmer has to do is grow and maintain the crop. But in turn, the shed deducts its costs from the farmer's profits, and all too often that doesn't leave much.

"EVERYONE BUT the farmer is paid right away," Castilleja said. "The shed owener and the shippers see the dividends right away, but the farmer, well, he's the last one to get paid."

"And the shed is always after you because they're providing you with everything," added Castilleja's brother, Apolinar, who's also a co-op member.

The co-op has to line up its own buyers, and in the face of stiff competition from the well-established big sheds and produce firms, that's not always easy to do.

"To a lot of buyers we don't exist," Julio Castilleja said. "We're trying to beat the clock while we get established."

Getting established has meant learning about marketing strategies and other business areas farmers don't always know much about.

"A FARMER doesn't want to be tied to an office," Castilleja said, "but these are areas we've had to learn about."

The co-op has endured the hard work and the ups and downs, but there have also been pleasant surprises along the way, especially the one provided by Nelson's organization.

"One day last spring a person from Farm Aid gave me a call," Castilleja said. "She said they had heard of us and suggested we send an application for aid."

Castilleja did just that, and a few weeks later, the co-op received the $15,000 check from Farm Aid, an organization started by Nelson to help farmers in financial trouble.

"We're just so grateful to Willie," Castilleja said.

"We wish we could do something for him, but what could we do?" he asks as he looks out over a field being harvested by farmworkers.

It is in these fields of green where Castilleja has made his living, first as a farmworker and then as a farmer in his own right. It is in these fields where he wants to stay.

He's convinced that this season's harvest, the co-op's second, is crucial to the organization's survival.

"If we can just make it through this crop, I think we'll make it," Castilleja said.

"There are bad moments, but we're going to stick it out."

PILOTS

"WE DON'T NEED any trouble," he said of unsafe and reckless pilots. "I don't want to be in the same county where he (the unsafe pilot) flies."

To help maintain its safety record, the aerobatic club annually sponsors air shows and holds seminars on aviation safety and aircraft maintenance. At its monthly meetings, the club discusses various aspects of aviation. The meetings are at 7:30 p.m. the first Thursday of each month in the Rich Air South fixed-based operation at Midland Regional Airport.

Another aerobatic pilot, Fred Michna, has been flying since 1946 when he was 15.

"I got tired of flying straight and level," said Michna, who started his aerobatic training in 1947.

"Whatever you can do with an airplane, I wanted to do it all as long as it's safe.

Of his interest in aerobatics, Michna said, "It's like climbing a mountain, I'm sure. It's a challenge."

The precision required in maneuvering in and out of loops, rolls, spins, climbs, stalls and other maneuvers makes the aerobatic pilot a safer and more aware pilot in day-to-day flying, said Michna. The pilot learns he safely can put the airplane through virtually any change of position as long as the pilot is aware of his and the airplane's limitations. "Airplanes don't know how to fly; people do."

Michna, 55, a Midland aerobatic pilot, flight instructor, and owner of AirMaster Aviation at Midland Regional Airport, is the West Texas Aerobatic Club's technical counselor.

"It's a new job formed by the EAA (Experimental Aircraft Association) headquarters," Erdmann said of Michna's role in the club. The IAC is part of the EAA. "He (Michna) is almost like a doctor. He can repair aircraft mechanical problems and can determine if an aerobatic airplane is safe to fly. And he must have constructed or rebuilt an airplane once in his life, and he has done that several times."

AEROBATIC PILOT Pat Day of Midland said that the competition in aerobatic flying is more "with yourself" than with others.

"You're the only one who knows if you scored 10 in a maneuver," he said, although the judges may rate a maneuver differently. But competing with others, he said, quickly will let the pilot know if "I am as good as I think I am or am I fooling myself."

"Every once in a while, you get a perfect maneuver and usually that's when you're out practicing by yourself and no one sees it, but you know."

Day, 43, said that a working knowledge of aerobatics makes for a more proficient pilot in "normal flight." He flies a biplane, the Starduster, in competition.

He recommends that "every pilot should have some aerobatic training," for it will prepare the pilot to get out of a precarious situation, such as a stall, spin, or inverted flight (due to wake turbulence, for example). "It's so easy to pop it right back up and go about your business," he said.

"It's a confidence builder," Day said of aerobatic training. "It really is."

STUDENTS

In cases of family crisis, hosts may make adjustments in an unanticipated situation and, if necessary, another family in the area could take over, Ms. Marshall said.

She said the Year Program is about 11 months long. Some families, however, can only host for six months. If this is the case, AFS locates a second family in the area and the student benefits from two different family experiences.

In other cases, AFS students come for a five- or eight-week stay during the summer.

Ms. Marshall said AFS takes the responsibility for a student to be moved to another family if the placement is not successful. Each year 3,000 young people are placed in homes across the U.S. and, occasionally, some students and families prove incompatible, she said.

While the student's natural parents remain the legal guardians, AFS is responsible for his or her welfare, she said. Host families have responsibility on a daily basis, but AFS volunteers maintain contact with the student and family throughout the year.

In an emergency, professional staffers are available 24 hours a day, and AFS voluntarily agrees to pay for any medical treatment required during the time the student is a participant in the program. AFS does not cover any treatment required for pre-existing conditions, preventative purposes or dental and eye care. In these instances, the natural parents must pay.

Apart from expanding and enriching family life, AFS provides local contacts who will help families and the AFSer get the most from their year together, Ms. Marshall said.

Local AFS volunteers may also organize events throughout the year which provide everyone with opportunities to meet other people who are involved with AFS and who are "enthusiastic about making a practical contribution to peace and international understanding," she added

FIRES

Trees should only be displayed away from heat sources, such as fireplaces and space heaters. And, he said a tree should be discarded when it dries out.

Williams said cold weather, especially if it lasts for any period of time, fails to reinforce one's common sense.

"I have talked to some people whose pipes would freeze out and they would use a welding torch to try and thaw them," he said.

"We had some folks that started some fires that way, even inside residences. They were setting walls on fire and all kind of crazy things."

CONTINENTAL

Until Dec. 15 Continental is offering a limited number of low-fare seats to celebrate its return, Patterson said. The general manager said he is unsure what level of pricing the airline will maintain out of Midland-Odessa after that date.

Houston-based Continental joins three other airlines currently flying from the regional airport — Southwest and American Airlines, and another new addition, United Express Airlines.

The latter, a regional "feeder" carrier affiliated with United Airlines, began flights Nov. 24 with service to Denver, Lubbock and Amarillo. United Express Station Manager Darvin Holcomb said Friday. That airline's entrance into the Midland-Odessa market also is the result of Frontier Airline's demise, Holcomb said.

Both United Express and Continental Airlines hope to profit from Permian Basin flyers heading to Denver during the winter ski season, airline spokesmen said.

United and Continental maintain "hub" networks at Denver's Stapleton International Airport, providing passenger connections to national and international destinations. Houston also serves as a hub for Continental.

Keith Beck

P.U.S.H. (Prevention Using Student Help), like other fledgling organizations, depends not only on strong leadership, but also dedicated participants. Midland High School student Keith Beck did serve on P.U.S.H.'s original city board last year; however, his most important role may have been simple, consistent participation in the events.

Concerning drug abuse and drinking, Keith said, "I don't see any good it can do me. I can see a lot of harm it can do... It's got to overlap somewhat with other areas of your life."

Keith is enthusiastic about P.U.S.H., because "Peer pressure plays a big role... P.U.S.H. lets you know that other people out there don't drink," he said.

Like many P.U.S.H. participants, Keith believes that reaching junior high students will determine the long range success of the program. "P.U.S.H.'s big impact is in the junior highs. Once they (students) are in high school... it's hard to change their views."

In addition to being concerned about the success of this important student organization, this original G.E.M. (Gifted Education Midland) participant gives high priority to his academic endeavors. In ninth and tenth grade he lettered in academics. This year he is taking seven honors courses. Keith has been on the Honor Roll every semester.

Last year, this well-rounded young man served as statistician for the basketball team, was in the German Club and participated in the Junior Engineering and Technological Society competition. He has also been on the debate team and involved in the Counselor In Training program.

Along with his dedicated studying this year, Keith is Vice-President in charge of in-town activities for the youth group at St. Nicholas Episcopal Church.

In other complaints, two 8mm video cameras and a tripod were reported stolen during a burglary about 3:56 a.m. from Ultra Electronics, 4519 Garfield St. The property was valued at $2,764.

Also, a video cassette recorder and a television set were reported stolen following a burglary Friday at the Torivio Franco Duran residence, 1202 E. Maple Ave.

According to the report, the burglary occurred between 5 and 11:30 p.m. The property is valued at $575.

The Midland County Sheriff's Department reported $1,030 worth of cigarettes and chewing tobacco were stolen during a burglary Saturday at Twin Oaks Grocery, located two miles south of Interstate 20 on Cottonflat Road.

About 110 cartons of cigarettes and four cartons of chewing tobacco were taken in the break-in. The exact time of the burglary is unknown, according to the report.

Tough job to love

Eighty years ago, American philosopher William James spoke of waging "the moral equivalent of war," a war that would mobilize young people into an army "enlisted against Nature."

James viewed compulsory community service for young men as a way "to get the childishness knocked out of them, and to come back into society with healthier sympathies and soberer ideas."

His idealistic vision of requiring young people to devote a year or more to national service hasn't come to fruition, though some contemporary political figures are addressing the issue. Democratic presidential possibilities, Gary Hart and former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, both have called for mandatory national service. Surely it would be useful in an era when young men and women get much of their sense of community and country from television stereotypes.

While military service is important, other endeavors can be equally rewarding, for both the participants and the nation. Ask the graduates of the New Deal's Civilian Conservation Corps, or Peace Corps volunteers, or the young people who worked side by side with poor Appalachians as VISTA volunteers.

Today, although VISTA and the Peace Corps have dwindled since their heyday in the 1960s, they're still around to remind us that some young Americans welcome challenge and sacrifice.

Education is more than textbooks. It's experience, too. That's why a national service is far more than cheap labor for government programs. It would teach young people the character-building values of hard work. American young people might find that national service, to paraphrase the Peace Corps slogan, is "the toughest job they'll ever love."

End the horror

In some parts of Afghanistan, children fear toys. That's a product of the atrocities of war. The children have learned that harmless-looking playthings sometimes conceal bombs that explode and maim them.

Who would booby-trap a child's toy? According to a report to the United Nations, the Soviets, in their zeal to subdue Afghanistan, have stooped to that level of barbarism.

The Soviets have relied on brute force since 1979 to keep a Marxist government in power in Afghanistan. But despite their announced withdrawal of 8,000 of the 120,000 Soviet troops stationed in that country, their struggle to stamp out Afghan resistance has become more ruthless than ever.

The official U.N. report, prepared by Felix Ermacora, a law professor at the University of Vienna, described the horrors of a civil war that has sent 5 million Afghans — a third of the nation's population — fleeing for refuge to Iran and Pakistan.

Villages have been strafed and bombed; civilians have been choked with chemical weapons. Witnesses said that in Konduz Province on the Soviet border, Soviet soldiers crudely attempted to punish Afghan villagers for aiding rebels by kicking children to death and disemboweling one woman.

These are the atrocities of a desperate army of occupation. War-weary soldiers who can't go home lash out in vengeance against innocent Afghan civilians.

U.N. Under-Secretary Diego Cordovez is again trying to negotiate a timetable for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. We hope the U.N. report helps convince the Soviets they should cooperate with him. Only a speedy departure from Afghanistan can help their tarnished international image.

Another View:
After the ayatollah

No matter what judgment is made of the Reagan administration's ill-fated efforts to reach an understanding with "moderates" in Tehran, Iran will outlast the Khomeini regime, and so will America's strong need for friends among the rulers of that strategically important country on the Persian Gulf.

Soviet ambitions to gain control of Iran are long-standing and intense. In 1946 a Soviet attempt was made to take over the Azerbaijan region in the northwest by establishing a puppet government. But the puppet regime was overthrown and the Soviet effort foiled.

Soon after the Khomeini regime seized power in 1979, Soviet KGB agents streamed into Iran to form a power base. In 1981 numerous members of the Marxist-Leninist groups were executed by firing squads. In May 1983 the Khomeini regime dissolved Iran's Communist Party and expelled 18 Soviet diplomats charged with treason and espionage.

This did not end factionalism in the Khomeini regime, which at times grew intense, leading some Reagan administration insiders to believe an understanding might be reached with "moderates." It was a risky assumption. One leader of the so-called "moderates" was Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, who had been picked by Khomeini to be his successor.

Montazeri "criticized" the regime. Insiders said his intended role was to channel discontents and bridle them to the benefit of Khomeini's successor, but that the scheme went sour when "Montazeri's camp became a gathering place for those cliques and agents who had fallen behind other factions in the ongoing struggle for power."

To suppress this threat, Khomeini discarded and discredited Montazeri and ordered the arrest of hundreds of his associates. Ironically, it was Montazeri supporters who leaked the story of the Reagan group's secret mission to a pro-Syrian magazine in Lebanon and another "moderate," Parliament speaker Hojatolisam Akbar Rafsanjani, who denounced Mr. Reagan and ridiculed his envoy, Robert McFarlane.

It should be no shock that the U.S. mission went haywire, considering the madhouse Iran has become under Khomeini. But its failures and the ensuing furor should not obscure the importance of the need to strive for a constructive relationship with post-Khomeini Iran.

If the United States fails to do so, a force as bad or worse than Khomeini may fill the vacuum.

Khomeini's 'heir' too dumb to lead

WASHINGTON — If the Ayatollah Khomeini's duly anointed successor, Ayatollah Hossein Ali Montazeri, isn't bumped out of line before the old man dies, it's a safe bet he won't last 24 hours into the long-awaited post-Khomeini era in Iran. He's too stupid to triumph over the Machiavellian mullahs and assorted cutthroats who are already planning their own ascension.

Jack Anderson

This is the consensus of our intelligence contacts, as well as sources inside Iran. They note that Montazeri's undisguisable ignorance was probably his principal attribute in his designation as Khomeini's heir. He was a threat to nobody, least of all to the wily Khomeini himself, who obviously realized Montazeri is too inept to take advantage of his exalted position to create his own power apparatus.

Other rivals for Khomeini's favor apparently figured likewise, so there was no significant opposition to his nomination. As a result, Montazeri was officially proclaimed Khomeini's successor a year ago by the Assembly of Experts, Iran's highest religious body. Since then his picture has appeared prominently next to Khomeini's in all government buildings. He holds court in the holy city of Qom, some 90 miles south of Tehran.

How dumb is Montazeri? Even Iranian schoolchildren joke about the stupidity of the heir apparent. It's almost as if the crowds gathered for Friday prayer sermons in Tehran were regaled by an Iranian Johnny Carson: "Montazeri is sooooo dumb ...."

Ever since the fabulous Scheherazade, Persians have been skillful storytellers, and the tales we've heard about Montazeri are classics of their kind. Even if completely untrue, the very fact that they are circulating throughout Iran is fairly convincing evidence of Montazeri's status as a perceived buffoon.

Here are three of our favorite Montazeri stories that are being chuckled at in the bazaars of Tehran and Tabriz:

— Montazeri is hopelessly unfamiliar with modern technology. One day, upon landing after a 30-minute flight, he said to the pilot: "Why did we go up in the air for a half-hour trip? I could have walked that long."

— Visiting some arid, unproductive land, Montazeri was told by the farmers that they were having a hard time growing cucumbers. In a sour twist on Marie Antoinette, Montazeri said: "If the land is not fertile enough to raise cucumbers, why don't you cultivate pickles?" He wasn't kidding; he apparently had no idea where pickles come from.

— Montazeri took his first helicopter ride on a hot, humid day, and the chopper cabin was soon steaming. When he landed, he loudly denounced whoever had designed the aircraft: The overhead "fan" should have been on the inside, not the outside, he said.

Butt of jokes he may be, and certainly no match for his powerful, determined rivals, but the Ayatollah Montazeri is no cheerful, good-hearted clown. He has never been a laughing matter to American intelligence officials — with good reason.

Montazeri was the prime mover and planner of a series of Iranian-backed terrorist attacks that have claimed at least 264 American lives since 1983. In addition, he is in sole charge of exporting the radical Islamic revolution of Khomeini's fundamentalists to other Middle Eastern countries. This task includes sponsorship of attempted coups and assassinations as well as other acts of terrorism.

Montazeri has consistently equaled his mentor, Khomeini, and has sometimes surpassed him in the extravagance of his sadistic religious fanaticism.

Montazeri's despicable record helps to explain why American officials aren't shedding any tears over the recently intensified power struggle in Tehran, which he appears to be losing. At least 200 of his associates were arrested in October.

GEORGE F. WILL

Reagan's luck: Time to reveal everything

WASHINGTON — A parable: Three hunters hire a small plane that lands them in a wilderness where they stalk caribou. The pilot says, "I'll return in a week, but remember what I said last year: Planes like this can carry only three hunters and one caribou." When he returns he sees the three hunters — and three caribou.

George F. Will

The hunters say: "Last year we slipped you $100 and you let us load three caribou." The pilot says: "O.K., but this year it's $200." The hunters grumble but pay, jam the caribou aboard, the plane lumbers a few feet aloft — and plows into some trees. The hunters are scattered through the branches and one shouts: "Where are we?" Another answers: "A hundred yards from where we crashed last year."

Speaking, as the parable does, of U.S. policy regarding Iran, one thing is clear: There are some slow learners loose.

Serious practitioners of covert operations know that such operations can crash. So they begin by asking themselves, "What happens if this enterprise crashes?" They begin with that question and often go no further.

This is not to say that anything that can go wrong should not be attempted. However, anything that could go as wrong as the approach to Iran has gone, and anything that so many extreme, hostile and unpredictable foreign factions could cause to go wrong, should never have been attempted.

The crowning fallacy was to take the approach to Iran, which was itself baroque, and make it rococo by connecting it, through Swiss bank accounts, to the Nicaraguan contras.

This lunatic parlay, this paradigm of overreaching, entangles a speculative and chancy undertaking, one peripheral to Reagan's presidency, with something central to Reagan's presidency. The peripheral thing is the approach to Iran. (Peripheral does not mean frivolous, it only means unlikely to soon produce results, and inessential to the main themes of the administration's foreign policy.) The central thing is support for the contras. The contras embody the Reagan Doctrine, the commitment to support forces of resistance on the expanding edges of the Soviet empire.

The connection between Iran and Nicaragua is apt to shatter the slender, shaky majority supporting aid for the contras. That fact is evidence — not conclusive, but strong — that no one seriously concerned with the President's priorities (such as the President) could have countenanced it.

The question vexing most Americans is: Could a few less-than-senior officials really have implemented the Iran-to-Central America weapons and money-shuffle without the President or his chief of staff or Pentagon officials knowing about it? And, what emboldened Lt. Col. Oliver North to do it?

North is the kind of fellow that Presidents, especially Presidents who feel unreasonably hemmed in by Congress in foreign policy, come to love not wisely but too well. Put plainly, North is a fellow who does things.

In recent decades, the uses of diplomacy, military assets and covert actions have become increasingly subject to public scrutiny and legislative impediments. As more and more avenues of action have been blocked, the impulse to act has sought new outlets. It has become like underground water under increasing pressure. It finds outlets even in tiny crevices in beds of rock. One such crevice has been in the White House basement, in the National Security Council.

Perhaps the impulse to act so recklessly in connecting Iran and Nicaragua presupposed acting without presidential consent. The idea is not as bizarre as it seems at first blush. It accords with a cardinal rule of covert operations: The President must be protected from the flying debris if the operation crashes in the trees.

A President is not a prime minister, not merely the first among equals. He is constitutionally indispensable, irreplaceable by a rearrangement of personnel. So he must be protected, and at times that can mean protection even from significant knowledge. That is why responsible, prudent persons have at times had oblique, backstairs ways of semi-informing Presidents about a few operations that intervening executive-branch committees have not had responsiblity for authorizing.

If the Iran-contra connection was just the result of a twisted application of the principle of deniability, it was atrocious enough. It was even worse if it was part of a pattern produced by a White House ambience. The pattern may be free enterprise in foreign policy by people enjoying disconnection from presidential supervision. The ambience may be a result of presidential delegation to the point of inattention. Reagan's desire to delegate responsibility is disproportionate to his insistence on wisdom in his subordinates.

It requires the willful suspension of disbelief to believe that the two banished officials are the only two culpable here. Such suspension cannot sustain Reagan's authority, so the immediate future and ultimate reputation of his presidency may hinge on the energetic use he makes of his latest stroke of luck. This might seem an odd moment to mention his famous luck, but he is lucky that Congress is away. He has a few weeks to act on Henry Kissinger's principle. Whatever must be revealed eventually should be revealed immediately.

RUSSELL BAKER

Telling all about (you guessed it) Sinatra!

They say Frank Sinatra is cross as a bear about having an unflattering best seller written about him, and I don't blame him. Kitty Kelley, the book's author, was originally going to write that book about me.

Russell Baker

She would have, too, if I had gotten huffy the way Frank did and refused to cooperate. Fortunately, years of experience in dealing with scribblers has taught me that the only way to get mercy out of them is not to resist, but to tell them everything, and then some.

So when Kitty phoned and said, "I want all the lowdown on that business between you and Ava Gardner," I said, "Come over right away, Kitty, and bring several tape recorders because I've been itching for years to tell everything."

After two or three hours of being absolutely honest about my relationship with Yetta Conover, Kitty needed strong coffee to revive her. When she came around she said, "So it was your childhood lust for Yetta Conover that led your mother to the unscrupulous behavior that made you hopelessly corrupt?"

I had to tell Kitty she was missing the nuances. I had not lusted for Yetta Conover. We were only in the seventh grade at the time, and in those days lust was not permitted until high school. True, Yetta and I had arranged a rendezvous. We were to meet for a Saturday matinee at the Horn Theater on Pratt Street in southwest Baltimore.

"Was Ava Gardner to make a personal appearance?"

I winked at Kitty's question. Why ruin development of a powerful lust theme with the squalid fact, which was that only the police would have dared make personal appearances at the Horn Theater.

The crux of the tale, I noted, was that Yetta and I never kept that rendezvous because my mother, snooping in my pencil box, had found Yetta's note. No son of hers, she declared, was going to meet scarlet hussies in the sinks and stews of Pratt Street.

"This is a long story," said Kitty.

"But imagine the shock of discovering that my own mother would go through my pencil box and read my mail."

"What about you and Lana Turner?" said Kitty.

Kitty, Kitty — she was missing the whole point of this sordid tale. My mother was a reader of other people's mail. I began watching my mother. Sure enough, when we visited relatives she would pick up postcards and quickly scan the messages on the back to see where people were vacationing and whether they were having wonderful times.

"When I saw that my mother was shameless about it, I, too, began indulging the vice. Before leaving high school I was so good at it that I could read letters lying on desks 20 feet away, without binoculars."

"Fascinating," said Kitty. "You moved with a rough crowd that didn't hesitate to use muscle to get its way, I believe."

"You bet I did. You want me to talk about the ruthless Wimpy, I guess, but first let me finish about the mail."

Though reading other people's mail was one of the most despicable skills a person could have, I told Kitty, it had fitted me ideally for newspaper work. As a result, I had spent a lifetime reading other people's mail all the way from Capitol Hill to the Pentagon.

Kitty woke with a start. "Were any of those government bozos getting letters from Ava Gardner?"

"Not from Ava, but let me tell about this letter a congressman once got from his daughter at Vassar. Talk about funny! In 1955, I think it was ...."

Next time Kitty woke up I was telling her about Wimpy, whose muscles were so fearsome that even the Skimpinsky brothers wouldn't tangle with him. "Would you believe," I was saying as a flicker of consciousness appeared in her eyes, "that when Wimpy wanted change to play a Frank Sinatra record on the jukebox, he would hold me up by my ankles and bounce my head on the sidewalk until all the coins fell out of my pocket?"

"Who did you say?"

"Wimpy."

"No. That other name."

"Frank Sinatra?"

"You're a prince," said Kitty, racing for the door.

Fortunately, she was gone before she could grill me about the time I met Wilma Thrums at the Legion Hall for bingo and afterward showed her how to twirl a key chain. I wouldn't want my children reading that kind of thing in books.

Iranian-Contra connection not matter for partisanship

Modisett

The Democrats are having a field day.

They shouldn't. This isn't a matter for partisanship. The concern over Reagan administration arms deals with Iran that suddenly has mushroomed into millions of dollars being funneled to Nicaragua's Contras should gain the attention of every American for one reason and one reason alone: Secret deals were being carried out supposedly in this nation's interest without — without — the president's approval or even knowledge. Americans can accept a president doing something illegal or incorrect. What they will not accept is a president not knowing when the information was available and critical.

Personally, I do not have specific reservations about trading arms for hostages. I think Reagan's motives in doing so were honorable. Neither do I have problems with helping the Contras. Again, I think what the preside nt has done in fighting communist expansion in this hemisphere is good and just.

I don 't even really see a problem with se lling arms and using the proceeds t o finance the Contras — as long as the actions are legal and part of an o verall plan approved by the elected representatives of this nation's p eople.

If th e information that has been learnec l so far in this ugly incident holds t rue, it was not carried out legally o r in the full knowledge of the preside nt and Congress. That's unforgiva ble. It was a one-man campaign a nd, folks, that is about as dangerous as a subversive endeavor can become. It's the easiest way for this nation to stumble carelessly into all-out war.

The most disturbing aspect of this whole affair — to this point — is that the president of the United States was not even aware of a lot of what was happening. That's disturbing because it says that the White House is not completely "on the ball" as a lot of Americans had assumed. That gives an uneasy feeling to a lot of Americans who, remembering past presidencies, are understandably tired of feeling uneasy about their nation's top leadership.

Americans will accept mediocrity and understand error, but they will not stand for a president not remaining informed about this country's international actions. If his advisers and other officials are to blame for not keeping the president informed, Reagan should deal with them harshly and quickly. But he can't lead if he remains in the dark about what is being done in this nation's interest.

Reagan should not forget that lesson.

This is that special time of the year between holidays. Thanksgiving has been celebrated and now comes the dash through December. Why does it seem that the dash gets faster while the time between Thanksgiving and Christmas grows shorter with each passing year?

There seems to be so much to do — Christmas shopping to finish, cards and packages to mail, parties and caroling to be done. And somehow, amidst it all we have to find time to be with family and friends.

Ha! I wouldn't have it any other way. Would you?

U.S. overwhelmed by 'sue someone' mentality

Has our society really reached the point where people believe the only way they'll ever make an extra dollar is by suing their neighbor or winning on "Wheel of Fortune?"

After reading Thursday's (Nov. 20) article on the suits filed because of the shigellosis outbreak, I am convinced that this is yet another example of the "sue somebody" mentality. I contracted the disease after eating at one of the named restaurants, and, yes, I felt miserable for a week, but for me it was no worse than the flu or an intestinal virus. Worth $25,000 in damages? Sure! $50,000?

This winter I'd like to get a down payment together on a vacation home. Who could I point the litigation arrow at? How about about a mild case of ptomaine poisoning after a church supper, or maybe I can find an icy driveway to fall down on.

Winter time to recall devotion of family pet

Winter arrived and is here to stay. Cold nights are longer and the wind more bitter. The family dog and cat left outdoors spend a miserable night outside in the elements. It is important to provide the animal with warm, dry bedding. A place of shelter out of the drafts of wind, keep the animal from becoming ill.

Feed the animal more food to build up a layer of fat to help keep him warm throughout the winter months. Let's remember man's best friend, and give back something for the total devotion we receive.

Air Force Band gave superb performance

Our profuse thanks to you for sponsoring the United States Air Force Band of the West in concert here Nov. 24. As loquacious as perhaps I am, I find it difficult to describe the obvious pleasure, pride, and yes, deep feelings of patriotism exhibited by concert-goers. The band performed superbly. It well deserves having been named "America's International Musical Ambassadors."

My father, in the Army Engineers, was accidentally killed at Fort Belvoir, Va., just after his return from the European Theater in 1945 at the end of World War II. His was the first military funeral in my hometown in Louisiana. My husband, prior to our marriage, served over six years in the Navy. The salute to the various branches of the armed services, when each veteran stood during the musical tribute to his or her particular branch, brought back to me feelings of patriotism which I had long forgotten. And, the final number, Stars and Stripes Forever, brought tears to my eyes.

Thanks, Reporter-Telegran, for a most delightful evening. I am indeed proud to be an American.

Who's to blame for degradation of U.S.?

Who's to blame for the mess in the U.S.?

What on earth happened to America? Who is responsible for turning her away from the state of being the great Christian nation which had stood for God and righteousness to our present place of degradation and weakness?

How on earth could any subversive force infiltrate the public school system and change it from the wholesome, stabilizing force that it was in our children's lives, to an institution which destroys any faith in God and country they may have obtained at home or church, and turned them into a sex-mad, drug-oriented generation of rebels? How could it be that the coast-to-coast survey among teen-agers universally found girls ashamed of still being virgins on their 16th birthday (Ladies' Home Journal, March 1980)?

What went wrong that made a school teacher's job more hazardous than that of a policeman? Why the utter breakdown of discipline in schools and the graduating of millions who can hardly read or spell?

Who could possibly bring about a vast change of this kind in one generation? Not the Communists! They can't even do a good job of running their own countries and have to come to us for help. We better find the culprit and break his stranglehold on our nation!

Who destroyed our political structure and turned us into a weak nation? Who keeps manipulating things in Washington?

We feed other nations then they bite the hand that feeds them. There is overwhelming evidence that very intelligent plotters were at work.

1) An utterly ruinous body of teaching introduced nationally that actually encouraged youngsters to a) indulge in free sex, b) disbelief in absolutes ignore rules, do your own thing; c) have contempt for parental and other authority.

2) The promulgation of an unthinkable philosophy designed to break up traditional families.

3) A political revolution which has made the man in the street despise his national leaders.

4) A constantly increasing tax burden with no end in sight.

Photos of city didn't show true beauty

I recently attended the Nov. 20 concert of the Midland Symphony & Chorale and photography show at Chaparral Center.

The music, directed by Mury Sidlin, was wonderful and the photography by James Westwater was breathtaking.

Unfortunately, James Westwater ended the program with a series of very poor photos of Midland. I was left with the impression that Westwater was deliberately making a derogatory statement about Midland. In contrast to the breathtaking scenes of Appalachia and the West, Westwater portrayed Midland with two slides of clouds, two mesquite trees, some cows and several unrecognizable scenes from downtown.

I've only been in Midland one year, but have been amazed at the diversity and scope of Midland's people and culture. Midland is much, much, more than Westwater portrayed. Midland has an active community theater, parks on almost every corner, activities to suit almost every need and taste, excellent schools, beautiful sunsets, and a proud, spirited people who need to see what is special about their city during these "down times."

I certainly hope Westwater is never hired to do a promotional on Midland — no one would want to live here based on his photos.

Iranian arms debacle shows freedom in U.S.

A thought occurred to me that seems worth sharing.

National attention has been focused for the last few days on the international blunder of Reagan's sale of arms to Iran. Congressmen scream, "Illegal." The public screams, "Don't arm the terrorists." The media screams, "You didn't tell anybody." And movie-watchers remark on cracks in the president's voice and the confusion of his lines. Even the idolaters express disapproval of the act and disbelief in his truthfulness.

Reagan has become the victim of his own immense and persuasive charisma. He has so inculcated passionate monolithic hate that the words "Iran," "Communism," and "Gadhafi" send the "American people" into paroxysms of screaming, violent fits. It seems that very few people actually understand anything about either national or international affairs. They respond to personalities and words. This time the words "arms" and "Iran" outweighed the extraordinary persuasive charm of the president — only because he had earlier tipped the scale on the other side.

Postscript: As a Black American, I have naturally been extremely uncomfortable with the government for the past six years. As a Christian, I have to examine my own attitude toward the latest series of events. This is the way I see it: Jim Wright spoke of the damaged "credibility" of the United States in the international community. The way I see it is that this entire affair ought to reaffirm the extreme credibility of the democratic system of government that Thomas Jefferson and others put together. Where else on this earth could a bunch of news reporters grill a chief executive on national television? Where else on earth could a congressman wave a book of laws and avow of the chief executive's decision, "We have ways of dealing with that?" Where else on this earth could an ordinary citizen make a public statement about the government without being led to the chopping block and being summarily executed?

Despite the complaints, thank God for America. And may God bless!

Colleague was patriiot in best sense of the word

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — This report is somewhat brief because one of my best friends died last Sunday. I am deeply grieved by the loss of Charles Gould, a close colleague who was with the Hearst organization for more than half a century.

Charles began his career with Pop's Chicago American and right after Pearl Harbor he enlisted in the Navy. By the end of the war he was a commanding officer of a destroyer escort division and was much decorated.

Charles' newspaper expertise was called into service during the Korean War where he was a director of combat photography. He worked for us after that as an assistant publisher at the New York Journal-American, publisher of the San Francisco Examiner and vice president for the Hearst Foundations.

He was a patriot in the best sense of its meaning and a fine human b eing.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinb erger, a personal friend as was P resident Reagan, helped to have h im interred at Arlington National C emetery with full military honors.

His loss to me is irreplaceable and le aves a deep wound in my heart as w e were very close indeed.

• • •

President Reagan told the nation o n Tuesday that he was appointing a s pecial review board to investigate t he conduct of the Iranian arms deal b ecause he "was not fully i nformed."

The president accepted the resignation of his national security chief, Vice Admiral John Poindexter, who asked to be returned to the regular navy, and relieved Poindexter's deputy, Lt. Col. Oliver North, of his White House duties.

While both Poindexter and North held regular military ranks, they were not on active duty and the whole Iranian arms shipment had nothing whatever to do with the Defense Department or Secretary Weinberger.

The president asked for the special review board after a preliminary report from Attorney General Edwin Meese disclosed that President Reagan knew little of the details concerning the Iranian arms shipment.

Attorney General Meese, who handled the question and answer session after the president's terse report to the nation, made clear data had been given previously to the Congress.

The attorney general who had been a trial lawyer and an assistant district attorney in California earlier, conducted himself with great aplomb during the Q&A session with mainly hostile TV reporters.

I hope that the attorney general's report and the findings to be issued by the president's special panel will put the Iranian arms issue to rest once and for all.

Couple give thanks for fraternal quadruplets

ROCKFORD, Ill. (AP) — Steven and Carmen Sunday will have four extra mouths to feed come next Thanksgiving.

The couple had fraternal quadruplet daughters Wednesday. Jackie, Rachel, Kimberly and Janna were delivered by Caesarean section and weighed from 3½ pounds to 4 pounds 10 ounces. They were in good condition at Rockford Memorial Hospital.

The Sundays have one other child, a 20-month-old girl.

"It's exciting," Mrs. Sunday, 28, said Thursday. "We have known about it since I have been seven or eight weeks pregnant. ...It is going to take a lot of work, but we have a lot of family and friends willing to help us."

Mrs. Sunday, who said she had not been taking fertility drugs, had been pregnant for 35 weeks and was hospitalized for six weeks.

A hospital spokesman said quadruplets are born naturally once in every 1.5 million births.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Basketball team will start conference play

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

The "real" basketball season begins for the Chaparrals this week, as conference play starts. The Chaps open defense of their Western Junior College Athletic Conference title at home Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center. Their opponent is Clarendon College.

On Thursday the Chaps make the long trip to Roswell to play New Mexico Military Institute. That game starts at 8 p.m. Midland time.

The fall season wraps up the following week as Midland College goes to Odessa Dec. 8 and hosts New Mexico Junior College on Dec. 11. After the holiday break, the Chaparrals return to Mesa, Arizona, to defend their title in the Mesa Holiday Shoot-Out. That tourney is being played Jan. 5-7. That's followed with 12 straight conference games in January and February.

All the Chaparrals' conference games are being broadcast on KCRS Radio.

•••

Jazz, that uniquely American music form, will be presented in several of its facets at 8 p.m. Tuesday when the Midland College Jazz Ensemble gives its fall semester concert. Dr. Don Grant, conductor, has arranged a program of both traditional and contemporary jazz compositions, plus quite a number of Christmas tunes.

The public is invited to attend the free concert in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium.

•••

A Christmas concert by the Midland College Chorale and Chamber Choir is slated for 8 p.m. Friday in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium. Both traditional and contemporary compositions are being featured by the groups, which are directed by Dr. Michael Jordan. Shari Weiner is the pianist.

The concert is free to the public.

•••

Dr. Jack Schneider, chairman of the Communications Studies Division and a reknown Southwest historian, has had an article accepted for publication in the Winter issue of South Dakota Review, one of the nation's finest historical publications. The article is "He-Women, She-Men, and Clowns: Manly Hearted Women, Berdaches, and Contraries Among the Plains Indians." Schneider's article is based on reports of some Indians who insisted on riding into battle backward, the men dressed like women and vice versa.

•••

Dr. Pamela Howell, instructor in English, has completed a review on "Art and Geology: Expressive Aspects of the Desert," which is scheduled for publication in an upcoming issue of Western American Literature.

•••

For many students, this week is "make or break" time. With only two weeks remaining before finals, this is the time for final book reports, completion of semester projects and lab experiments, and reviews in preparation for finals.

More students are spending their free time in the Learning Resource Center or the Student Center. While the Student Center is noisy and bustling, quite a few students prefer it for their studying than the quieter LRC. And portable casette players with headphones are extremely popular to wipe out extraneous noises.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

MAKING THE GRADE

LAWRENCE, Kan. — The names of more than 3,000 University of Kansas students receiving scholarships for the 1986-87 academic year have been released through the University's Endowment Association.

Among the students listed was Andrea Knickerbocker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Knickerbocker, 2407 Terrace. She received the W.A. Huxman Scholarship.

ODESSA — Midland resident Jay Stephens, a student at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, recently received a $500 scholarship from the Sheriff's Association of Texas.

Stephens received the scholarhips from Bill Childers, associate director of the Sheriff's Association of Texas in Austin.

Stephens is in the full-time UTPB criminial justice program and was nominated on the basis of scholastic achievement.

Car taken from Odessa dealer

FRANKLIN, Tenn. (AP) — A Chattanooga man who was test driving a $46,000 luxury automobile left a car dealer standing on a curb in Texas while he drove to Tennessee, authorities said.

Tennessee State Trooper Brent Gobble said Donald W. Mosely, 28, was charged with receiving and concealing stolen property after he was stopped on Interstate 65 near Franklin on Thursday.

Mosely was also charged with speeding and driving without a license, Gobble said.

"I understand he was test driving the car Monday in Odessa, Texas," the trooper said. "The dealer said he had been driving the car and got out to let the shopper drive and he drove away."

Mosely was being held in lieu of $2,750 bond in the Williamson County Jail. He is scheduled to appear in General Sessions Court Dec. 3.

LAUNDRY AREA

The basement or mud room located somewhere near the back door were once the preferred areas for the home's laundry. These were suitable locations for boxes of detergents and the wetness that generally accompanied washdays. Today, however, convenience no longer means stacking wet laundry by the back door. This old convention probably originated before gas and electric dryers found widespread acceptance, and clothes were hung outside to dry. Convenience now dictates that the washer/dryer be set near the kitchen. This is where most of the home's daily tasks are centered. Or, the laundry may be located upstairs near the bedroom areas where clothes and linens are stored and changed.

Pelican hitches ride on 727 jetliner

SPIRIT LAKE, Iowa (AP) — A pelican headed south for the winter this week without lifting a wing, hitching a ride on a 727 jetliner.

The bird, crippled by a shotgun blast in mid-September, has been cared for by Linda Hinshaw, a wildlife rehabilitator in Spirit Lake.

It was put on the Northwest Orient jet Tuesday at Minneapolis for a trip to St. Petersburg, Fla.

Computer ...MUST BE DIFFERENT
HEARING AIDS
Twenty-two claims of originality have been recognized in granting the patent!

SOMETHING GENUINELY DIFFERENT IN HEARING AIDS

What's So Unusual About The Computer Hearing Aid?
Computer Hearing Aids have special and sophisticated circuits built in that make them unlike any other hearing aid.

What is Meant By "Special And Sophisticated Circuits?"
The U.S. Patent Office recognized 22 claims of originality in granting the patent (U.S. Patent No. 3,229,049). Since then, more multiple automatic signal processing has been incorporated into the latest models.

What Does This Mean To A Hearing Aid User?
These special circuits control all sounds, soft, as well as loud, automatically. A user will hear at a greater distance (up to 3 times as far) and hear more of the sound in our language—which helps the user to understand better. Computer Hearing Aids are designed for specific hearing loss. Most people with various hearing losses will receive improvement with a Computer Hearing Aid.

How About The Unpleasant Loud Sounds?
Loud sounds are regulated automatically [illegible] need to change the volume [illegible] because the Computer Hearing Aid [illegible] decreases the gain for loud sounds so you can hear without discomfort. This way you are comfortable even in noisy environments.

What About Soft Sounds?
The Computer Hearing Aid automatically increases the gain for the weak sounds and soft whispers. Voices can be heard at a distance.

Will The Computer Sound Natural?
Yes, because all loudness levels are produced in their proper proportions to the need of the defective ear. The Computer Hearing Aid will sound more natural (closer to normal hearing levels) than other aids.

How Do I Know I'll Be Satisfied With A Computer Hearing Aid?
We have a policy whereby you can try this unique hearing aid and experience these benefits firsthand. Then you decide for yourself.

Now You Will Find Loud Sounds Pleasant
Automatically handles all sound levels clearly in order to improve your understanding in noisy places and in large groups.

Now You Will Hear Whispers In A Quiet Place
Automatically brings whispers and soft voices up to your required level for hearing while it controls louder sounds to keep them within your comfort range.

Now You Can Hear The Tick Of A Clock
Automatically makes hearing through a hearing aid a pleasant and rewarding experience.

You owe it to yourself to try one!

'Horns looking for new coach

Texas athletic director reassigns Akers

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas head football coach Fred Akers, the target of mounting criticism as the Longhorns stumbled through their first losing season in three decades, was fired Saturday.

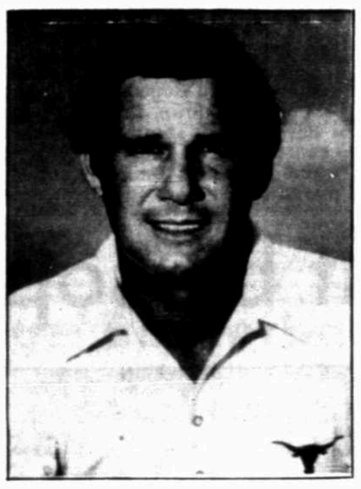
Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds, who met earlier in the day with the school's Athletics Council, said Akers would be reassigned to other duties at the university. Dodds said those duties had not yet been determined.

"I have concluded it is in the best long-term interests of the University of Texas to seek new leadership," Dodds said.

A search for a new coach would begin immediately, Dodds said.

Akers, who had just completed his 10th season as head coach, was informed of the decision Saturday morning. He has five years left on contract that pays him $91,600 a year. He replaced the highly successful Darrell Royal as the Longhorns' coach.

"This was an especially tough decision to make because, in spite of the criticism directed at him, Fred Akers has done some great things for the university during the 10 years he has been head coach and has handled himself in a class way this year," Dodds said.



Fred Akers

"However, sometimes it simply becomes necessary to make such a change and to inject new energy and new leadership at the top of an organization such as our football program," he said while reading from a prepared statement.

Dodds said his recommendation concerning Akers has been reviewed and supported by UT president William Cunningham.

"I believe this recommendation is in the best interest of the university and I support this change in our football program," Cunningham said.

L.O. "Tom" Morgan, chairman of the Athletics Council, said that panel recognizes "the many positive contributions that Coach Akers has made, but the council supports the change and I personally look forward to a revitalized football program in the future."

Akers was not immediately available for comment. He was at his university office briefly Saturday morning after taping his weekly television show. Steve Ross, who hosts the program, said Akers made no mention of his job status during the taping.

Akers' 10-year record at Texas was 86-31-2, for a winning percentage of just under 74.

His Longhorn teams won Southwest Conference championships in 1977 and 1983 and played in three Cotton Bowls, losing to Notre Dame and Georgia and defeating Alabama.

The Cotton Bowl losses to Notre Dame in 1978 and Georgia in 1983 denied Texas the national title. Akers' squads finished in The Associated Press Top 10 four times, including No. 2 in 1981.

"We had it," Akers said after a fourth quarter muffed punt enabled Georgia to escape with a 10-9 victory in the 1983 game.

Akers had a hard act to follow in Royal, whose teams won national championships in 1963 and 1969 and 11 SWC titles. Included in a 20-year record of 167-47-5 was a 30-game winning streak in 1968-70.

And there were those Royal fans who never shifted their loyalty to Akers, whose businesslike style contrasted with Royal's country humor.

Akers appeared resigned to the disaffection, saying certain people did not like him when he replaced Royal, and never would, and there was nothing he could do about it.

Despite averaging 8½ victories a year, Akers was 2-7 in bowl games and in recent years lost by wide margins to arch-rivals Oklahoma and Texas A&M during the regular season. His critics said he simply could not win the big games.

This year was the first at Texas that his team did not receive a bowl game invitation.

Akers graduated in 1960 from the University of Arkansas, where he played defensive back, quarterback and did the placekicking.

He served as a student assistant at Arkansas and was an assistant coach at Jefferson High School in Port Ar-

Coyotes, 'Cats fight to 17-17 tie

Wichita Falls uses penetration edge to gain quarterfinals

By ERIC SCHURER

SAN ANGELO — It was a small step backward for high school football, but a giant leap forward in Wichita Falls' quest for a state Class 5A football championship.

The Coyotes and their antiquated single wing offense veered into Bobcat Stadium Saturday afternoon and managed a 17-17 tie, advancing to the quarterfinals against Hurst L.D. Bell on penetrations, 4-3.

It was an offense that went out when the post-war baby boom came in after World War II that eliminated San Angelo. The Bobcat loss left District 4-5A without a team in the state quarterfinals for the first time since 1981.

"The single wing isn't the thing," said San Angelo coach Jimmie Keeling. "Their players are the thing. They've got the talent to win the world."

Eric Chatman orchestrated the Wichita Falls offense and the upset by rushing for 160 yards and two touchdowns as well as throwing for 111 yards. Chatman is the tailback in the offense that uses no set quarterback and shows a variety of formations.

"Chatman is an excellent back for the single wing offense" Coyote coach Joe Bob Tyler said. "It really utilizes his talents. But he would be an excellent back in the wishbone, in the veer, or in any offense."

"I've been running it since the eighth grade, it's nothing new to me," said Chatman.

Amarillo High owns TCT crown

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The 21st running of the Tall City Invitational basketball tournament came to an expected conclusion at Chaparral Center Saturday night as defending state champion Amarillo High nailed down the title with a 61-41 victory over El Paso Eastwood in the finals.

The Golden Sandies left the tournament with a consecutive string of victories covering 23 games, 17 of which they ended the 1986 season last spring with that state title.

But still Amarillo coach Allen Simpson came out of the tournament with a surprise. That surprise was 6-5 junior Brant Capps, who was named as the tournament's Most Valuable Player.

"I was beginning to wonder if I was any kind of judge of talent," said Simpson. "Brant has not played well this year, but I thought he was going to be a good player. He had a super tournament and I'm feeling a lot better now that he is coming around."

Capps scored a team high 16 points in the championship final and was the Sandies' moving force in the tournament.

Is Amarillo headed back for a repeat state championship?

"We can't say that now," said Simpson after his 6-0 start this season. "The kids are playing hard, but we've still got a long way to go and there is a lot of luck involved in winning a state title."

Amarillo also got All-Tournament performances from returning starters Sammie Simpson, who had 15 in the final, and Ashton Nowak, who

Chaps romp WTC, 120-64

MC claims third tournament win in record style

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

ODESSA — If Midland College isn't as good as last year's 33-1 Region V Junior College champions, they've got a lot of people fooled.

Saturday night MC won its third tournament of the yet young season, pushed its winning streak to 10 in a row with 43 wins in its last 44 games and for good measure ran up its highest score of the season with a 120-64 romp over Western Texas College in the finals of the Odessa College Turkey Shoot.

The 56-point margin of victory also was the largest ever for a Midland College team, eclipsing the 52-point differential tied earlier this season.

Leading the way were Mookie Blaylock, named the tournament's Most Valuable Player, and Billy Ray Smith, who made the five-man all tournament team. But the way things went here the last three days, MC could have placed five players on the all-tournament team.

AGAINST WTC, six players scored in double figures as the Chaps wound up their pre-Western Junior College Athletic Conference schedule.

Monday, the Chaps host Clarendon College in the league opener on what also will be Pack-the-Chap night with tickets available for free at several Midland business locations and the Chap Center.

As for the win over WTC, it actually wasn't a bad game for 27 minutes and for most of the first half, believe it or not, MC had its hands full.

But in the end, it was the Chaps' unrelenting defensive pressure and quality depth that made the difference.

"Our depth was the key," said MC Coach Jerry Stone. "Once Western got tired, they just couldn't keep up."

Over the final 12 minutes, Midland outscored Western a whooping 57-8.

IF THERE was another key, it was the job Blaylock did on Western's Alvin Lee, who scored 48 points in WTC's 99-96 win over Odessa College in Friday's semifinals.

The 6-1 sophomore from Richmond, Va., scored 27 points, but was only 11-of-27 from the field.

A couple of early personals and the task of keeping Lee under surveillance took its toll on Blaylock's offensive efforts. In the first half, he was just four-of-13 from the floor, although he wound up the night with with 24, more typical of a Blaylock performance, going nine-of-26 from the floor.

In fact, MC's guards showed only 5-of-18 for the first half and it was the inside men—Bruce Nix, Smith, Herman Henry and Alex Stanwood-who were instrumental in MC opening up a 57-37 halftime gap after the Chaps trailed 16-11 some six minutes into the game. The Chaps were being outquicked and outrebounded as Western came up with the second and third shots under the offensive boards.

Midland's front line contributed 31 first half points with 17 coming from the bench.

"We seemed to be missing a lot of shots early in the game and Western seemed to be getting a lot of rebounds for a while," Stone remarked.

THE EMERGENCE of the big men as a scoring factor was something Stone was pleased to see. "The guards bring the ball down, and if they are good at hitting the outside shot, that's the end of that story." And that, indeed, has been the story most of the season.

Saturday the guards weren't hitting in the first half and Stone discovered the Chaps have an alternative. "We've got to establish an inside game and tonight we started to get it going," Stone said.

The guards made up for things in the second half with Blaylock, Lincoln Minor and Todd Duncan sinking 12 of 18 from the field to lead that awesome 68 point half. Minor, saddled early with two fouls, didn't score his first basket until five minutes into the second half, winding up with 10 for the night.

Smith scored 15 while Nix and Stanwood had 13 each and Henry had 12.

WTC's last gasp came at the start of the second half, a spurt that closed the gap to 47-58 with 16:55 to go, but that was it.

Joining Smith on the all-tournament team were Marcus Brown, TSTI; Darryl Knight, South Plains; Lee, WTC; and Riley Smith, Odessa College.

Owls add more sorrow to Yeoman's finale, 14-13

Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — The game belonged to Quentis Roper and the Rice Owls for a comeback 14-13 victory, but the day went to Houston's Bill Yeoman, who stepped down as head coach after 25 seasons as the Cougars' innovative head coach.

Roper turned Yeoman's final game into a nightmare over the final 5:36 when he ran 7 yards for a touchdown and passed 11 yards to Darrell Goolsby with 18 seconds left to go Saturday.

Freshman Glenn Ray Hines kicked the deciding extra point, giving Yeoman his first winless Southwest Conference record ever, 0-8.

While the Owls celebrated their comeback victory, Yeoman remained on the field to hear himself praised by school officials, former players and fans. He remained dry-eyed throughout the ceremony and thanked everyone from his family to his players.

"For you teary-eyed people, I'm sorry, I'm not," Yeoman said. "Never has it been more important for alumni, students and players to get together.

Yeoman remained staunch in a somber dressing room.

"It's no different today," he said. "Necessity doesn't give you time to stroke your chin and think about it. I've had enough Cotton Bowls, East-West games and Hula Bowls to stroke my ego."

Cougar captain Robby Brezina told Yeoman, "It hasn't been the most pleasant year, but without you, coach, and your presence, it could have been even worse."

Rice lost to Baylor on the final play of the game two weeks ago and defeated Air Force 21-17 last week after trailing 10-0 at the half. Roper thought the Owls could come back again.

"I knew that we were deep enough in their territory that we could win it with the time left if we executed," Roper said. "Then when we got inside the 20, I knew we could score. It was the best timing we've had on tha play all year."

Rice Coach Jerry Berndt said, "We believe we can play with anyone in the conference. That's what we've been trying to instill all season."

Houston's Vernell Ramsey rushed a career-high 149 yards and the Cougar defense appeared took advantage of four Rice turnovers to give the Cougars a 13-0 lead prior to Rice's comeback.

"It makes it tough to lose after being in control," Ramsey said. "It's hard. We wanted to end the season with a win and have something to come back on. Now it's a reminder. We don't want to have another season like that."

The defeat ended Yeoman's 25-year tenure with a record of 160-108-8, which ranked sixth among active NCAA Division I coaches. The Cougars finished 1-10 and 0-8 in SWC play.

Yeoman, who developed the veer option offense that led the nation in total offense for three years in the mid-1960s, departed with the program on a down note.

Rice, completing its first season under Coach Jerry Berndt, finished at 4-7 and 2-6.

Roper connected on fourth-down pass completions of 12 yards to Chris Nixon and 11 yards to Kenny Major in the Owls' victory drive.

The Owls reached the Houston 11 on Major's reception, and after an incomplete pass, Roper threw to Goolsby, who caught the ball over Houston defender Johnny Jackson.

Roper's fourth-quarter touchdown run came after Eddie Burgoyne blocked a punt by Houston's Simon Rodriguez and returned it to the Houston 14.

Houston's defense preserved the first-half shutout late in the first quarter when Ramsey fumbled and Rice's James Phorne recovered at the Houston 32.

Cougar nose guard Glenn Montgomery sacked Roper for a 10-yard loss on third down, forcing a punt.

Rice missed another scoring chance early in the third quarter when Houston's Dennis Kennedy picked up a blocked Rice punt, fumbled the ball and Rice's Ray Brewster recovered at the Houston 3.

But Rice's Marc Scott fumbled on the first play and Houston's Keith Jenkins recovered at the Houston 7.

Auburn's Dye saved embarassment by soph, 21-17

Associated Press

Auburn Coach Pat Dye won't have to spend the next 364 days explaining what went wrong, due in part to his inability to remember the name of a wide reciever.

That was Saturday's bizarre development in the waning seconds of another bizarre Auburn-Alabama game.

Dye, who had taken a whole year of ribbing for calling the wrong play in a heartbeaking loss to the Crimson Tide in 1984, called the right play Saturday as No. 14 Auburn knocked No. 7 Alabama out of the Sugar Bowl 21-17. But this time the wrong player ran it.

Sophomore wide receiver Lawyer Tillman, on his first collegiate carry, scored from 7 yards out on a double reverse with 32 seconds remaining on what Dye said was "the only play I called all day."

Scott Bolton, who was on the sidelines, was supposed to run the play.

"I couldn't think of his name," Dye said. "I kept saying, 'I want my wide receiver, I want my wide receiver.' "

Tillman, who had run the play in practice, saw what was happening and tried to call time, but failed. Tailback Tim Jessie, going right, gave the ball to Tillman going the other way. He was hit just as he crossed the goal line for the winning touchdown.

DYE DISDAINED a chip-shot field goal on fourth-and-goal at the Alabama 1 in the waning minutes two years ago. Auburn failed to score, lost 17-15 and missed out on a Sugar Bowl trip. Alabama won last year 25-23 on Van Tiffin's 52-yard field goal as time ran out.

"I know I'll be hearing a lot of 'War Eagles' (Auburn's war cry) for the next 364 days but I'll just swallow it and go along," Alabama Coach Ray Perkins said.

"With all the talk this week (that Dye was going to Texas as head coach, that he had marital problems, that he wasn't taking the rivalry seriously enough), this was certainly the sweetest win ever for me," Dye said.

Brent Fullwood, who carried 21 times for 145 yards, scored his second touchdown of the game by running 26 yards on the first play of the final period to cap a 79-yard drive and cut Alabama's lead to 17-14.

LSU 37, Tulane 17

BATON ROUGE, La. — Fifth-ranked and Sugar Bowl-bound Louisiana State University rolled to a methodical victory over Tulane with Tom Hodson throwing three touchdown passes to Wendell Davis.

The victory, coupled with Alabama's loss earlier Saturday to Auburn, gave LSU the undisputed Southeastern Conference championship and an automatic Sugar Bowl bid.

5

Hodson's touchdown passes to Davis went for 30 yards in the first quarter, 10 yards in the second quarter and 15 yards in the third quarter before LSU Coach Bill Arnsparger began substituting liberally.

Tailback Harvey Williams scored on a 3-yard run in the first quarter and kicker David Browndyke kicked field goals of 30 yards in the second quarter, 26 yards in the third quarter and 28 yards in the final period.

College Football

Notre Dame 38, Southern Cal 37

Notre Dame, on the strength of four passes for touchdowns and a pair for two-point conversions by quarterback Steve Beuerlein, and a 19-yard field goal by John Carney time expired, rallied from a 17-point fourth-quarter deficit.

Tim Brown returned a Southern Cal punt 56 yards to the Trojan 16-yard line with 2:15 remaining to set up Carney's winning kick.

Trailing 37-20 early in the final period, Beuerlein rallied the Irish, 6-5, on touchdown passes of 42 yards to Milt Jackson and 5 yards to Braxston Banks. He hit a two-point conversion throw to Andy Heck following Banks' score with 4:24 remaining.

"I just knew that we were going to rise to the occasion," Beuerlein said. "We kept fighting and fighting and we finally won the close one.

The victory was Notre Dame's fourth in as many years over intersectional rival Southern Cal. The Citrus Bowl-bound Trojans finished the regular season 7-4.

The Trojans got three field goals from Don Shafer, including a school and Pacific-10 record 60-yarder on the final play of the first half.

Georgia 31, Georgia Tech 24

Georgia's Lars Tate, who rushed for 154 yards and three touchdowns, scored on a 5-yard run with 4:38 remaining to lead the Bulldogs. Georgia, 8-3, is headed for the Hall of Fame Bowl, where it will meet Boston College.

Tate's game-winning run capped a 10-play, 85-yard drive that completed Georgia's comeback from a 24-21 deficit in the final period. He also scored on runs of 4 and 8 yards, and the other Bulldog touchdown came on James Jackson's 20-yard pass to Nathaniel Lewis.

18

"There were many chances where we could have folded, but we were able to hang in there, keeping fighting and find a way to win in the fourth quarter," Goergia Coach Vince Dooley said.

The Georgia comeback began when Steve Crumley forged a 24-24 tie with 10:10 left on a 39-yard field goal.

Florida 17, Florida St. 13

Kerwin Bell, ineffective most of the night in the rain and mud, threw an 18-yard touchdown pass to Ricky Nattiel with 3:50 remaining to give Florida a victory over arch-rival Florida State and extend the Gators' winning streak in the bitter rivalry to six games.

Nattiel's diving catch in the middle of the end zone capped an eight-play, 60-yard drive engineered by Bell after Florida blocked a 46-yard field goal attempt by Florida State's Derek Schmidt with 7:26 to go.

Wayne Williams, a reserve running back, keyed the winning march with carries of 11, 9 and 13 yards. Bell, on third-and-six from the Seminoles 18, found Nattiel breaking free in front of cornerback Deion Sanders.

Tennessee 35, Vanderbilt 20

Tennessee quarterback Jeff Francis passed for three touchdowns and fullback William Howard ran for two scores as the Volunteers defeated Vanderbilt in a SEC game.

The victory gives the Vols, who will meet Minnesota in the Liberty Bowl on Dec. 29, a 6-5 overall record and a 4-3 SEC mark.

Vanderbilt closed its first season under Coach Watson Brown at 1-10 and 0-6.

San Diego State 10, Brigham Young 3

SAN DIEGO — Chris Hardy's running produced a touchdown and set up a field and an aroused defense enabled San Diego State to claim its first Western Athletic Conference championship with a victory over Brigham Young.

With the victory, the Aztecs gained their first berth in the Sea World Holiday Bowl and ended a nine-game losing streak to Brigham Young that dated back to 1976. It was the first time San Diego State had beaten the Cougars since joining the WAC in 1978.

John McEnroe reaches out for a shot from Ivan Lendl in semifinal action of the AT&T tennis tournament in Atlanta Saturday. McEnroe posted a 6-4, 7-5 upset victory.

McEnroe stuns Lendl

ATLANTA (AP) — John McEnroe is starting to feel comfortable again, especially after his upset 6-4, 7-5 victory Saturday over Ivan Lendl in the semifinals of the $500,000 AT&T Challenge tennis tournament.

The former No. 1 player in the world who has fallen to 12th after a self-imposed seven-month layoff from the game, McEnroe will meet West Germany's Boris Becker in Sunday's final for the $150,000 top prize. Becker, the 19-year-old two-time Wimbledon champion, easily downed Yannick Noah of France 6-4, 6-3.

The Becker-Noah match was a battle of big serves with the West German winning in 68 minutes. Becker never lost his serve and won five of his services games at love. He had a total of six aces and nine service winners.

Noah, who served first in each set, lost his serve each time, although he had seven aces and nine service winners.

"I feel like I'm putting most of my matches away now," said McEnroe. "I wasn't doing that when I first came back."

He said he didn't think Lendl "played badly, although he may not have been at his best."

Lendl had few words for his performance.

"Lousy. One word. Very simple," he said.

Lendl had been the only undefeated player in the week-long, eight-player round-robin tournament with a 3-0 record before his loss Saturday.

McEnroe, who had six aces in the one-hour, 29-minute match, and Lendl, who had four aces on the Supreme court at the Omni in the nationally-televised (ABC-TV) match, each had one service break in the first set until it was 5-4 McEnroe with the 26-year-old Lendl serving.

Lendl took the first point, but then lost four straight points, including a double-fault, to drop the set.

Lendl, who now has lost for the 15th time in 27 matches to McEnroe, tried to take charge quickly in the second set, breaking the 27-year-old McEnroe in the first game. However, he was immediately broken back.

Lendl broke McEnroe again for a 2-1 lead in which McEnroe lost the first point and then asked Lendl if he would rather flip for the next point rather than play for it. Lendl agreed.

The Czechoslovakian, who makes his home in Greenwich, Conn., won the flip and the umpire asked McEnroe if he conceded the point.

McEnroe replied, "Yes," and it was counted, dropping him behind love-30. He eventually lost the game without winning a point.

McEnroe, who returned to tennis in August after his self-imposed hiatus from the sport for personal reasons, was in top form against Lendl.

After finally winning his serve for the first time in the second set, McEnroe trailed 3-2. He finally caught Lendl at 4-4 when he broke the 6-foot-2 right-hander.

Both players then remained on serve until McEnroe, leading 6-5, broke Lendl at love to capture the match.

Zoeller 'Skins' field of greats

Trevino uses wedge for shot of match

LA QUINTA, Calif. (AP) — Fuzzy Zoeller won the most money but Lee Trevino created the most excitement Saturday in golf's Skins Game.

Trevino holed out a wedge shot for an eagle-2 on the 347-yard seventh hole of the PGA West course and collected $55,000.

"There's no luck involved in that, folks. I've been working on that shot for 47 years," Trevino laughed.

"You expect great shots when you get the greatest players in the world," Zoeller said of Trevino's eagle. "Well, you just saw one."

Trevino also stroked a 5-iron to within two inches of the cup on the third hole, but failed to win the hole when Jack Nicklaus tied him by sinking a birdie putt of about 15 feet.

"Jack broke my heart back there on the third," Trevino said after holing out the wedge shot on the seventh.

"Now, if Fuzzy makes this shot (his approach on the seventh), I'm just going to jump in the lake."

Zoeller didn't match the eagle and Trevino got the skin.

Each of the first six holes was worth $15,000 to the golfer who could win it outright, with $25,000 for each of the next six and $35,000 for each of the last six. If there is no winner on a hole, the prize money is carried over to the next hole.

Zoeller, who won a record $255,000 in his first Skins Game appearance last year, won $60,000 when he dropped an eight-foot birdie putt on the fourth hole.

Arnold Palmer, at 57 the oldest of the four Skins Game players, rapped in a birdie putt of about eight feet for a $25,000 payoff on the eighth hole.

Nicklaus, the current Masters champion, made two birdies in the bright, warm, sunny weather, but didn't win a skin and, consequently, no money.

"I played pretty well, really, but I just didn't get a Skin," he said.

With $25,000 carried over from the ninth hole, another $310,000 will be up for grabs over the final nine holes Sunday.

Referees don't fall for tackle from bench

BUENA VISTA, Ga. (AP) — Tri-County's Alberto Minter stopped Brooks County tailback Terrance Thomas' breakaway run near midfield, but the officials in the Georgia Region 1-AA high school football final were more concerned with where Minter started the play — on the bench.

Brooks County was awarded a go-ahead touchdown because of Minter's off-the-bench tackle with 1:17 left in the game and held on to win 14-10.

The play started on the Brooks County 5 when Preston Williams passed to flanker Fred Watts, who lateraled to Thomas.

"Thomas probably would have made it to their 20-yard line, but the refs said it's automatic to award the TD," said Brooks assistant coach Joe Green.

A&M's Sherrill selected as West Hula Bowl coach

HONOLULU (AP) — Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill will lead the West All-Stars coaching staff in the 41st Hula Bowl postseason college football game to be payed here Jan.10, 1987, Hula Bowl officials have announced.

Assisting Sherrill with the West team coaching will be Larry Smith of Arizona and Fisher DeBerry of Air Force.

The East coaches, announced earlier, are Michigan's Bo Schembechler, LSU's Bill Arnsparger and Florida State's Bobby Bowden.

Sherrill will be making his fourth appearance in the Hula Bowl and his second as a head coach.

An announcement on the selection of the players will be made later, a Hula Bowl spokesman said.

Hoch leads CWO golf

IBUSUKI, Japan (AP) — American Scott Hoch shot a 4-under-par 68 Saturday and took a 1-stroke lead with a three-day total of 207 in the $530,000 Casio World Open Golf Tournament.

Australian Graham Marsh, who led after the first two rounds, and Jose-Maria Olazabal of Spain were second. Marsh fired an unimpressive 74 and was at 208 with Olazabal, who carded a 70 in the third round.

Hoch, the 1982 winner of the tournament, bogeyed the par-4 second hole, rolled in a 23-foot birdie putt on the 11th and followed it with four more birdies on the 6,985-yard, par-72 Ibusuki Golf Club course in southern Japan.

Australian Ian Baker-Finch shot a 72 and was alone in fourth place at 211.

Japan's veteran pro Masashi Ozaki carded a 71 and was tied for fifth place with Yoshihisa Iwashita, also of Japan, at 213.

American Kenny Knox shot a 73 to share seventh place, at 214, with three Japanese, including Masahiro Kuramoto, who fired a 67, the day's best score.

A total of 85 players, including 19 foreigners from the United States, Australia, Spain, Taiwan and Britain, are competing in the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

The winner of the tournament will receive $95,000.

Osako leads Lady Borden golf

KATORI, Japan (AP) — Japan's veteran woman pro Tatsuko Osako shot a 2-under-par 70 Saturday for a 5-stroke lead with a two-day total of 136 in the $185,000 Lady Borden Cup golf tournament.

A total of 32 players, including 23 Japanese, eight Taiwanese and an American, are competing in the three-day event, the last among the Japan LPGA tour's 37 tournaments this year. They are either tournament winners in Japan or among the top 30 money-earners of the Japan LPGA tour this season.

Kayoko Ikoma of Japan fired a 72 and was alone in second place at 141.

The winner will pocket $30,800.

New England QB Tony Eason will be an important key for the Patriots today against New Orleans.

Game Of The Week

Cincinnati, 8-4, at Denver, 9-3, 3 p.m. The Broncos lead the series 8-6 and have won the last two games and four of the last five. The Bengals' 38-21 victory at home in 1981 is their only win over Denver in 10 years.

Speaking

"I just felt like I was a scapegoat at that point, and I think all the scapegoats throughout history have always fought back, whether it be the blacks or the Jews or Boomer Esiason." — Cincinnati quarterback Boomer Esiason on his benching at Houston Nov. 9.

"I think he's the type of guy that if he gets a good start, he can pass for 300 or 400 yards. But if you can get on him early, you can get him rattled a little bit." — Cleveland linebacker Clay Matthews on Houston quarterback Warren Moon.

Tough Guy Points

Rick Bryan of the Falcons has played in every game this season despite breaking his leg in training camp. He has six sacks, tops on the team.

"It hurts. Heck, yes, it hurts. The crack in there is bigger than before. They kept telling me it would be okay. But I guess it would be OK if you didn't collide into people for a living."

Modesty

"I figure we've been carrying (the team) since Day One." — Chicago defensive end Richard Dent on the Bears' defense.

Hold That Telecast

The Saints and the NFL have gone to court to stop 14 saloons and restaurants from showing satellite transmissions of blacked-out Saints home games.

As of Friday, approximately 14,000 tickets were unsold for the game against New England at the Superdome, spokeswoman Sylvia Alfortish said. At New Orleans' last home game on Nov. 9, 2,019 tickets were not sold.

The Saints and the league are asking for an injunction to stop the showings until a trial is held, and are seeking $110,000 in damages from each bar and restaurant involved.

Life At The Bottom

Blaise Winter, a tackle drafted by Indianapolis in 1984 and waived Oct. 14, said he has trouble believing that the Colts are winless.

"With the personnel they have, I can't believe it. But with their attitude, yes, I can," said Winter, who was signed this week by San Diego.

Indianapolis ranks last in the AFC in rushing, 12th in offense and 10th in passing and rushing defense.

Numerology

Detroit's 23 points in the first half in its 44-40 loss to Green Bay were the most the Lions have scored in a first half this season.

Dallas' 31-14 loss to Seattle was the Cowboys' fourth defeat in 19 Thanksgiving games and their first since 1979.

Arkansas State eliminates SHSU

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — Quarterback Dwane Brown accounted for more than 200 yards and three touchdowns and fullback Rickey Jemison produced a career best 157 yards as Arkansas State University routed Sam Houston State 48-7 Saturday in the first round of the NCAA Division I-AA playoff.

ASU, seeded second in the 16-team bracket, journeys to Delaware next week. Delaware beat William & Mary 51-17.

Brown, a wishbone operator with an excellent arm, completed seven of 11 for 145 yards and a touchdown and set up one of Scott Roper's field goals by completing two passes for 52 yards.

Brown, who averaged 5.6 yards per play during the season, carried 18 times for 70 yards and scored on runs of 23 and 10 yards.

If Hampton can shred Jets' D, what about Dickerson?

Associated Press

That was Lorenzo Hampton, the NFL's 17th-leading rusher, who shredded the New York Jets' defensive line for 148 yards last Monday night. What does that say for the chances of New York's less-than-killer B's when Eric Dickerson and the Los Angeles Rams arrive Sunday?

"Just because we gave up so many yards to these guys is no reason to believe Dickerson will do the same," said Barry Bennett, who along with Tom Baldwin and Ben Rudolph is holding down what used to be the NFL's best rushing defense until Joe Klecko, Mark Gastineau and Marty Lyons get well.

But that may be some time, and almost certainly too late for Dickerson, whose 1,416 yards are 250 more than any other back in the league. Klecko, who has shown miraculous recuperative powers in the past, is the first due back, but he says that will be "in a couple of weeks or so."

Despite New York's Dolphin debacle, Rams Coach John Robinson isn't overconfident.

"I kind of dismiss the Miami game. It's not indicative of what the Jets are," he said. "It's the kind of game a lot of us have in us. Every team will hit that kind of game once in a while. I think you can write off that kind of game."

Giants (10-2) at 49ers (7-4-1)
Redskins (10-2) at Cardinals (3-9)

The Giants, who beat the 49ers 17-3 in the NFC wild-card game last season, can clinch a wild-card with a win here.

But despite being tied with the Redskins for the NFC East lead, the Giants don't have to win this one. Even if the Giants lose, a New York victory over Washington next week would position the Giants to win the NFC East by closing with victories over St. Louis and Green Bay.

The Giants, of course, don't think like that. Last week's 19-16 victory over Denver was New York's fifth in a row — four against winning teams — by a total of 18 points.

The 49ers are in the midst of a brutal closing schedule — their final four games are against teams currently 37-11. They've shown more verve since quarterback Joe Montana returned three games ago, and will need more to beat out the Rams against the league's toughest closing schedule.

The Redskins, who can clinch their wild-card by winning, are in a sandwich. They crushed the Cowboys 41-14 last week to all but eliminate Dallas from a shot at the division title and get the Giants next week in the one that should decide it.

Steelers (4-8) at Bears (10-2)

An intriguing matchup between the NFL's team of the '70s and what might pass for the team of the '80s.

The Bears can clinch the NFC Central with a win, but that's a given anyway. With quarterback Jim McMahon officially out for the season, what the Bears must accomplish in the remaining games is whether Mike Tomczak, Steve Fuller or Doug Flutie is their playoff quarterback.

This one could be close. The Steelers have been showing signs of life and Chicago's favorite winning score these days is something like 13-10.

Bengals (8-4) at Broncos (9-3)
Eagles (3-9) at Raiders (8-4)
Oilers (3-9) at Browns (8-4)

NFL Roundup

This round-robin, involving the AFC West and Central races, is a matchup made for Cincinnati Coach Sam Wyche, whose latest gripe is the softness of Cleveland's schedule compared to the one faced by his Bengals.

The Broncos have an incentive after losing to the Giants last week. The Raiders are charging, although Los Angeles has to pick up two more games before the end of the season because of losing twice to Denver.

The Raiders, with Howie Long expected back, should have a picnic with the Philadelphia offensive line, which took only three-quarters of the season to set an NFL record for sacks allowed — 73, an astounding six per game.

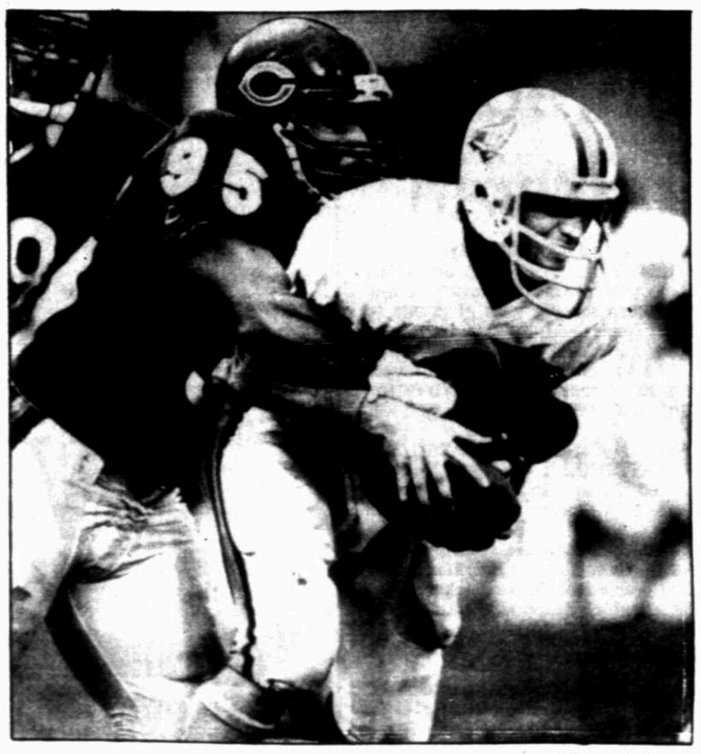
The best that can be said for the Eagles is that they made the 24-20 loss to Seattle close after the Seahawks scored on a blocked punt and a punt return in the final two minutes of the first half.

Cleveland, as usual, has been making things tough on itself despite its soft closing schedule and it could do the same against Houston, this week's nominee for the best 3-9 team in football. Last week, the Browns had to go into overtime at home to beat the Steelers, allowing nearly five yards per carry to a team that early in the season had trouble running for three.

Patriots (9-3) at Saints (6-6)

The Patriots return to the scene of last year's 46-10 Super Bowl embarrassment. The Saints aren't the Bears, but they can be plenty of trouble, particularly at home, against a team that listed 17 of its 45 active players on the injured list.

The natural order of things in the NFC West was restored last week by the Rams' 26-13 victory over New Orleans, but the Saints have the incentive of knowing that three wins in the final four games will make them the first New Orleans team ever to finish over .500.



AP Laserphoto

Chicago defensive end Richard Dent has been a mainstay this year as the Bears look toward defending their Super Bowl title.

Falcons (5-6-1) at Dolphins (6-6)

These are two ships passing in the night. The Falcons have lost five in a row while the Dolphins looked like their old selves in the 45-3 rout of the Jets Monday night.

Atlanta's problem has been offense. The Falcons have scored just 59 points in their last six games, putting more pressure on the defense that carried them early and is starting to crack.

Bills (3-9) at Chiefs (7-5)

Just when the Chiefs looked like a contender, whoosh. The loss in Denver two weeks ago was to be expected, but the defeat by St. Louis last week demonstrated why the Chiefs, who beat the Bills 20-17 at Orchard Park, N.Y., will once again have to wait until next year.

The Bills came back from a 15-0 deficit to get a brief lead at Foxboro, Mass., against the Patriots last week and may have a chance here. It is Coach Marv Levy's first chance to show his stuff against the team he used to coach.

Chargers (2-10) at Colts (0-12)

This shouldn't be anywhere near as close as the records might indicate. Under Al Saunders, the Chargers have beaten the Broncos on the road, forced the Raiders into overtime and are actually playing defense for the first time in nearly a decade.

The Colts? ...

Tampa Bay (2-10) at Minnesota (6-6)

The Vikings probably lost their last playoff shot with the loss at Cincinnati. But quarterback Tommy Kramer is returning, none of the last four games is too tough and if the Vikings win them all, who knows?

The Bucs, on the other hand, may regret their two victories. Without them they might have had a shot at the top draft choice, Miami quarterback Vinny Testaverde.

What's wrong with Cowboys?

IRVING (AP) — The most common question asked in these parts since the turkey was put away Thursday night has been: What's wrong with the Dallas Cowboys?

Should the Cowboys lose all three of their remaining games, the bunch once known as "America's Team" would have its first losing season since 1964.

Nobody seems to know what's gone wrong.

"It's hard to put your finger on it," said secondary coach Dick Nolan.

"You can look at a million different things," said defensive tackle Randy White.

"I'm just as baffled as anyone in Texas Stadium," said cornerback Everson Walls.

"We are in a down dip and it's really coming at the wrong time," said Coach Tom Landry.

The Cowboys, who are 7-6, have lost four out of their last five games. They gave up 72 points in five days in a 41-14 loss to Washington and a 31-14 Thanksgiving loss to Seattle.

Ahead are games with the Los Angeles Rams in Anaheim, Calif., a week from Sunday and at home against Philadelphia and Chicago.

Dallas must win one of the three to break even.

The Cowboys came into the National Football league as an expansion team in 1960 and in the first five years didn't have a winning season, posting an 18-46-4 record.

In 1965, the team broke even at 7-7, although they lost in the Playoff Bowl to Baltimore.

But since 1966, the Cowboys have had a string of 20 consecutive winning seasons.

The Cowboys' worst seasons since 1966 came in 1974 when they were 8-6 and in 1984 when they were 9-7. The 1984 team missed the playoffs — the first time the Cowboys hadn't been to the playoffs in a decade.

Linebacker Jeff Rohrer said, "We haven't been getting any breaks, and that has had an affect on us."

White said, "Anytime you give up the big plays, you put yourself at a certain disadvantage. And we have given up some big plays and it has been hurting us."

Landry said, "You can't win these games against good teams if you don't stop their running and passing."

Landry's most telling comment in recent days tied the Cowboys' past success to the present situation.

"Always in the past we have been able to come back," he said. "But maybe some day we won't."

LSU's Arnsparger resigns after beating Tulane

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Louisiana State University football Coach Bill Arnsparger resigned abruptly Saturday night after accepting an invitation to take his team to the Sugar Bowl and amid speculation he might become the new athletic director at the University of Florida.

Arnsparger said he will continue coaching the team through the Sugar Bowl.

"However, in fairness to the young men being recruited by LSU and to the next coach and his staff, I felt this was the best time to announce my decision," he said.

The announcement was made in the LSU locker room after the Tigers closed their regular season by thrashing Tulane 37-17.

"Life away from coaching offers three options for me," he said.

"One, I can start collecting on my NFL pension and enjoy the life of retirement. Two, I can stay at LSU in some capacity. Three, since I'm stepping aside as LSU's coach, I feel I can discuss other non-coaching opportunities which may come up," he said.

LSU finished as the undisputed champion of the Southeastern Conference this season.

Mann believes fine against him unfounded

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington defensive end Charles Mann says his tackle of Green Bay quarterback Randy Wright during the Redskins' victory over the Packers Nov. 9 "was a legitimate hit" and the $2,500 fine levied against him is "totally unfounded."

Mann received the news of the fine in a letter from the National Football League when he arrived at Redskins Park in northern Virginia for practice Friday.

"I think it's totally unfounded," he said before practice. "I feel like I've been robbed.

"I thought it was a legitimate hit and I still think it was a legitimate hit. It was blown way out of proportion."

Mann said he hasn't decided whether to appeal.

The controversial play occurred with about 30 seconds left in the second quarter of the Green Bay game. Just after Wright released a pass, Mann hit him in the helmet with his helmet.

Wright left the game with a concussion, and officials called a penalty on Mann for roughing the passer.

Mann has played every game since.

"They said in the letter that after reviewing the film that it was not a late hit, but a blow to the head," Mann said, adding, "If I have another opportunity to do the same thing, I'll do it."

Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs also said he thought the tackle was legal.

Mann said he has received a number of letters from angry Green Bay fans.

"There were a few from up in that area that thought it was a cheap shot. I can't believe that," exclaimed Mann. "Football is a contact sport, but there was nothiing blatant about it. It's not like I was trying to hurt the guy, and, I think, if you asked Wright, he'd say the same thing."

Collectors of films back a champion

By PHIL BERGER
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — What do a federal law enacted by Congress in 1912 and the 1948 market status of a certain hair tonic have to do with Mike Tyson, boxing's hottest property and the new World Boxing Council heavyweight champion?

It's a long story, and one that starts in 1948 when television sets came with 5-to-7-inch screens and a New York advertising executive was asked to create a sports show that would promote his hair tonic account.

The ad man first thought about football for his format but decided that the tiny screen would look more like a Jackson Pollack painting — a welter of minute drippings — than a spectacle. To his mind, baseball suffered from the same problem.

The image of two prizefighters having at it, however, was quite another story. The ad man believed that boxing would sell enough Vaseline Hair Tonic to keep his client happy.

So it came to pass that the executive, Bill Cayton, created the show, "Greatest Fights of the Century." From 1948 to 1954, the program was a hit as a 15-minute follow-up to the Friday night fights on NBC.

"Enormous ratings," said Cayton. "More than the live fights even. Our ratings back then were sometimes in the 90s, which makes the Cosby show look anemic."

In 1959, Cayton was contacted by a 29-year-old sales manager from Los Angeles, who was interested in trading fight films that he had collected for some of Cayton's.

The sales manager, Jim Jacobs, working at the time in his father's business machine and supply company, had been collecting old boxing films since he was 12 years old. Jacobs said his task was made harder by the riots that followed the victory of Jack Johnson, a black who beat Jim Jeffries for the heavyweight title in 1910.

"Because of that," said Jacobs, "the Congress of the United States passed a law in 1912 that prohibited interstate commerce in boxing films. It meant that by the 1950s, all the great fight films were sent out of the United States."

It also meant a collector had to put in the mileage to amass a film library. Jacobs went all over the world — to Sydney, Australia, for the film of the Johnson-Jess Willard fight; to London for the film of the Tommy Burns-Gunner Moir fight.

When Cayton met Jacobs, the two men hit it off, and Cayton offered to do more than swap films: He offered Jacobs a job with his company. In time, Cayton and Jacobs became business partners. Later on they took to managing prize fighters, including Wilfred Benitez and Edwin Rosario — and Tyson, who on Saturday became their latest champion.

The Olympic medalists Meldrick Taylor and Virgil Hill are co-featured on the Felt Forum program of Dec. 11.

Ticket-holders who retain their stubs from the event will be offered 20 percent off the higher-priced tickets for the next night's fight card at Madison Square Garden.

The headline bout on that Dec. 12 program has Tony Tubbs challenging Tim Witherspoon, the World Boxing Association heavyweight champion. The winner has the dubious pleasure of fighting Tyson in a bout scheduled for March 7.

UTEP outslugs Utah, 55-44

EL PASO (UPI) — Sammy Garza passed for 402 yards and four touchdowns Saturday night to lead Texas-El Paso to a 55-44 Western Athletic Conference victory over Utah.

The triumph overshadowed the performance of Utah quarterback Larry Egger, who threw for 492 yards and five touchdowns in completing 39 of 58 passes.

It was UTEP's fourth victory of the season, equaling the team' best total for one year since 1974. The squad finished 4-8.

Utah, 2-9, had 607 yards total offense. It was the third time this year that the Utes have had at least that many yards and lost.

Garza's touchdown passes went to tight end Bob Keseday, John Harvey, Harold Collins and Barney Adkison. Harvey had four touchdowns — including runs of 59 and 19 yards.

Eggers threw three touchdown passes to Loren Richey and two to Craig McEwen.

Ponies claim easy season debut win

Associated Press

DALLAS — Junior forward Carlton McKinney scored 24 points, 16 of them during an eight-minute run in the second half, to lead Southern Methodist to an 82-61 victory over Radford in both teams' first game of the 1986-87 season.

Forward Tim Blassingame came off the bench to lead Radford with 18 points. The game was the Virginia school's first as an NCAA Division I team.

SMU point guard Kato Armstrong was the Mustangs' second-leading scorer with 16 points. He also had eight assists.

"There's no doubt that Kato Armstrong penetrating, then dishing off to Carlton McKinney for the shoot was a key play for us several times in the second half," SMU Coach Dave Bliss said.

McKinney played all but three minutes of the game and was 11 of 16 from the floor.

Arkansas 90, Louisiana Tech 64

LITTLE ROCK — Freshman Ron Huery scored nine points and had five assists in the second half to key a surge by Arkansas as the Razorbacks defeated Louisiana Tech.

The Bulldogs led by five at the half before the Razorbacks exploded and outscored Tech 56-25 in the final 20 minutes.

Huery scored six of Arkansas' seven points in a stretch when the Razorbacks expanded a three-point lead to 10.

Junior Tim Scott led all scorers with 23 points and Andrew Lang added 14 points and 10 rebounds for the Razorbacks. Robert Godbolt led the Bulldogs with 18 points and Randy White was the only other Tech player in double figures, with 15.

Stanford 72, Rice 52

RICHMOND, Va. — Stanford guards Todd Lichti and Novian Whitsitt combined for 21 points in the first half to lead the Cardinals to a victory over the Rice Owls in the consolation round of the Central Fidelity Holiday Classic.

The Cardinals built a 31-22 halftime lead on a stingy man-to-man defense, Whitsitt's 11 points and Lichti's 10.

Texas-Arlington 107, Tarleton St. 76

ARLINGTON — Derrick Waggener scored 24 points and grabbed nine rebounds to lead Texas-Arlington to a victory over Tarleton State.

It was the season opener for Texas-Arlington, while Tarleton State suffered its third straight loss to even its record at 4-4.

Darrell Nedd added 20 points to help pace six Texas-Arlington players in double-figure scoring.

Texas A&I 86, MH-Baylor 61

KINGSVILLE — Randy Smith led four other Texas A&I players in double-figure scoring with 21 points to lead Texas A&I to a victory over Mary Hardin-Baylor.

The win is the third for the Javelinas in as many outings, while the Crusaders fell to 5-4.

Sam Houston St. 63, WTSU 53

HUNTSVILLE — Doug DeVore scored 17 points to lead Sam Houston State to a victory over West Texas State.

The game was the season opener for the Sam Houston Bearkats under first-year coach Steve Tucker. West Texas, which dropped to 1-2, and was led by Jerry Singletary with 13 points.

N. Texas St. 92, Southwestern 71

DENTON — Floyd Singleton scored 20 points to lead North Texas State to a victory over Southwestern.

The game was the season opener for North Texas, which also got 17 points from Keenan DeBose, 12 from Glenroy Ferguson and 10 from Deon Hunter.

Southwestern, paced by Bruce Lewis' 18 points, fell to 3-3. Ray Baranco and Greg Potter added 11 points each to the losing effort.

Singleton, a 6-2 senior, came off the bench to shoot 10 of 14 from the field.

St. Mary's 70, Lamar 68

BEAUMONT — Senior Guard Barry Fields scored a game-high 19 points and Pete Hansen added 13 to lead St. Mary's past Lamar.

St. Mary's extended a six-point halftime lead to 12 points on a 15-foot jump shot by Darrin Sublet to make the score 50-38 with 15:28 left to play.

The Cardinals were able to cut the lead to three points on three occasions in the second half and to within a point at 68-67 with 19 seconds remaining. Fields' two free throws clinched the win for St. Mary's.

Lamar was led by James Gulley and DeWayne Brown, who scored 18 each.

This was the first game of the year for Lamar. St. Mary's is 4-1.

Baylor 84, Midwestern St. 69

WACO — Darryl Middleton scored 26 points and Michael Williams added 19 more as the Baylor Bears defeated Midwestern State.

The win was Baylor's season opener, while Midwestern State dropped to 2-2.

A pair of Middleton free throws gave the hosts the lead for good at 33-32 with 1:05 remaining in the half. Baylor's biggest lead was at 59-38, on a Middleton bucket with 14:13 left.

The Indians, who out-rebounded Baylor 41-36, were led by Robert Harris' 20 points and an 18-point, seven-rebound performance by Michael Rhinehart.

For Baylor, Robert McLemore added a game-high 12 rebounds and 12 points. The Bears shot 56.6 percent from the floor, while holding the Indians to 43.5 percent.

Williams, Hunter, Bunning top '87 Hall of Fame ballot

NEW YORK (AP) — Outfielder Billy Williams and pitchers Catfish Hunter and Jim Bunning, the closest also-rans in this year's Baseball Hall of Fame election, were the most prominent names on the ballot for 1987 announced Saturday.

The members of the Baseball Writers Association of America who do the voting were asked to consider only 28 names, one of the smallest number of candidates in years.

Five former players appear on the ballot for the first time, but none is considered to be of the star quality of Williams, Hunter and Bunning. The newcomers are infielder Sal Bando, outfielder Bobby Bonds, catcher Jerry Grote, and pitchers Mike Marshall and Steve Stone.

To be eligible, a candidate must be retired as a player for at least five years.

Bullets beat Spurs, 116-103, for 7-1 home record

Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. — Jeff Malone scored 26 points and Terry Catledge added a season-high 21 as the Washington Bullets extended their home NBA record to 7-1 with a 116-103 victory over the San Antonio Spurs Saturday night.

Malone scored 10 points in the fourth quarter before leaving with 4:31 to play and the Bullets comfortably ahead.

Catledge scored seven points during a 17-6 that gave the Bullets a 28-22 edge after the first quarter. The spurt, which gave Washington the lead for good, came after a 12-1 streak by San Antonio.

Washington clinched the victory by outscoring San Antonio 13-1 to take a 99-79 lead with 7:01 remaining. Catledge and Michael Adams scored four points apiece during that stretch, and Malone added three.

Moses Malone scored 16 points for the Bullets, which has been led by either of the Malones in all but one game this season.

San Antonio, 2-8 on the road, was led by Artis Gilmore and Alvin Robertson with 19 apiece and Tyrone Corbin, who had 18. It was a season high for Gilmore.

NBA Roundup

Mavs 118, Utah 107

DALLAS (UPI) — In addition to playing good basketball, the Dallas Mavericks are getting some breaks with the schedule these days.

With the Utah Jazz playing its fourth game in five nights, the Mavericks rolled to a big lead and then fought off an impressive comeback to win their fifth consecutive game, 118-107.

The night before, the Mavericks had picked on the road-weary New Jersey Nets and won by 25 points.

Four Dallas players each scored more than 20 points, and Derek Harper hit two key three-point goals down the stretch to help the Mavericks.

"I thought we were a little tired in the first half, and then after we made our comeback I thought weariness was a factor," said Utah coach Frank Layden.

"But you have to give the other team some credit, too. The thing is we shouldn't have let ourselves get in a hole to begin with."

The last time the Jazz and Mavericks played, Utah stunned Dallas by overcoming a 7-point deficit in the last 24 seconds to win the game.

"At least we had a little bigger lead in the last 24 seconds this time," said Dallas coach Dick Motta. "We were playing so nicely there for a while and then seemed to ease up a little.

"But every game between these two teams is going to be like this. We played them in the playoffs last year, and when you play a series with a team you get to know them. This game seemed to have playoff intensity. We have a pretty good rivalry going with them."

Nets 102, Rockets 97

HOUSTON — Buck Williams scored 27 points and Pace Mannion added 25 to power New Jersey to a victory over the Houston Rockets, ending the Nets' eight-game losing streak.

Williams also had 13 rebounds, and center Mike Gminski followed with 19 points and 11 rebounds for the Nets, 3-12.

After missing the last five games and 11 total games this season with ankle injuries, Houston's Ralph Sampson came back onto the court and scored 23 points for the 7-7 Rockets.

Bucks 131, Nuggets 99

MILWAUKEE — Terry Cummings scored 12 of his 23 points in the third quarter as the Milwaukee Bucks outscored Denver 44-20 in that period on the way to a victory over the Nuggets.

The Bucks, leading 54-53 at halftime, outscored Denver 12-3 to lead 66-56 on a dunk shot by Jerry Reynolds with 9:55 remaining in the third quarter. After a dunk by Denver's Wayne Cooper, Milwaukee went on a 25-9 run to lead 91-67 on Ricky Pierce's three-point play with 2:30 left.

Cavaliers 90, Knicks 88

NEW YORK — Rookie John Williams scored 26 points, including a tie-breaking seven-foot jumper late in the fourth quarter, and hauled down 17 rebounds, lifting the Cleveland Cavaliers to a 90-88 victory over the New York Knicks in an NBA game Saturday.

The Cavaliers held on to win, despite collecting only 14 points in the final quarter.

Penguins score goal in final seconds to tie Rangers

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Craig Simpson scored with two seconds left in the third period to give the Pittsburgh Penguins a 5-5 tie with the New York Rangers Saturday night in the NHL coaching debut of New York's Tom Webster.

Simpson's goal came after Kelly Kisio had given the Rangers a 5-4 lead with 22 seconds left. Kisio blasted a 40-foot shot past goalie Roberto Romano.

Pittsburgh's Mario Lemieux came away with the puck from a scramble along the boards, skated toward the net and left the puck for Simpson, who put it between goalie Doug Soetaert's legs for his seventh goal of the season.

New York's Pierre Larouche broke a 3-3 tie at 8:53 of the third period with a breakaway goal but Bob Errey tied the score with his second goal of the game at 13:12.

Flames 5, Blackhawks 4

CALGARY — A goal by rookie defenseman Dale Degray at 7:34 of the third period gave the Calgary Flames a come-from-behind win over the Chicago Blackhawks in the NHL.

Degray, recalled earlier this month from the Moncton Golden Flames of the American Hockey League, moved in from the blueline and took a pass from Joey Mullen in the high slot. He fired a 20-foot shot that beat netminder Murray Bannerman low on the glove side.

John Tonelli had tied it at 4-4 five minutes earlier on a power play, stuffing in a pass from another Flames' rookie, Brian Bradley, who also scored a goal.

Jets 6, Canucks 3

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — Lauri Boschman scored twice and rookie Fredrik Olausson and Ray Neufeld each tallied once as the Winnipeg Jets staged a furious third-period comeback for a victory over the Vancouver Canucks.

The second straight road victory — Winnipeg scored four times in the third period Thursday to defeat the Calgary Flames 4-3 — moved the Jets into sole possession of first place in the Smythe Division, two points ahead of idle Edmonton.

NHL Roundup

Whalers 7, Canadiens 5

MONTREAL — Kevin Dineen scored two of Hartford's four third-period goals as the Whalers won their fourth consecutive game with a triumph over Montreal, extending the Canadiens' winless streak to four.

The Whalers took a 3-1 lead into the second period but the Canadiens went to the dressing room for the second intermission leading 5-3.

The Whalers', however, took only the first 36 seconds of the third to even things up.

Dineen's first of the period came 19 seconds after the opening faceoff and Paul Lawless tied it 17 seconds later. John Anderson and Dineen netted goals before the seven-minute mark to finish out the rally.

Flyers 6, Islanders 5

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Two goals by Rick Tocchet, his second with 32 seconds left to play, earned the Philadelphia Flyers a victory over the New York Islanders.

On Tocchet's winning goal, he took a pass from Derrick Smith and beat goalie Bill Smith with a blistering shot from the right faceoff circle. It climaxed a wild six-goal third period.

Bruins 6, Sabres 2

BOSTON — Goalie Doug Keans turned in an outstanding performance before losing a shutout bid on two goals in the final seconds as the Boston Bruins settled for a victory over the Buffalo Sabres.

Keans had 35 saves before Normand Lacombe scored a power-play goal on a rebound with just 20 seconds remaining. Then Adam Creighton beat the final buzzer with a goal officially timed at 19:59.

Keith Crowder scored two goals one each in leading the Bruins to their first victory in five meetings with the Sabres this season.

Nordiques 4, Capitals 3

QUEBEC — Michel Goulet scored two goals as the Quebec Nordiques extended the Washington Capitals' winless streak to 10 games with a victory.

Jason Lafreniere and Alain Cote also scored for the Nordiques, who won their fourth game in their five starts.

and Ken Linseman, Tom McCarthy, Reed Larson and Nevin Markwart

North Stars 7, Maple Leafs 2

TORONTO — Brian Bellows scored two goals, Dino Ciccarelli fired his league-high 25th and Minnesota goaltender Don Beaupre made 40 saves as the North Stars defeated Toronto and stretched their undefeated streak against the Maple Leafs to 12 games since February 1985.

Dennis Maruk, Ron Wilson, Dirk Graham and Brian Lawton also scored for the North Stars, who improved their record to nine wins, 11 losses and two ties to inch within four points of first-place Toronto, 10-10-4, in the Norris Division. The Maple Leafs have won only one of their last seven games.

Costas 'plays hand I'm dealt' on NFL '86

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

Bob Costas didn't climb the ladder of success by being unprepared, but as the freewheeling host of NFL '86, he has not rehearsed a line.

Each Sunday, Costas takes his seat in the NBC studio and awaits a director's cue that will signal the start of another show. The camera pans the set showing Costas, Paul McGuire, Ahmad Rashad and Frank Deford. It backs up the center isle, offering proof that the show is a throwback to the old days of live TV.

"Yes, that's right, more spontaneous applause from the assembled studio audience," Costas tells the viewers.

Where he goes from there is anybody's guess ... even his own.

"I play the hand that I'm dealt," says the 34-year-old Costas, who rose to prominence as a broadcaster by seriously discussing controversial topics while working as a play-by-play man during NFL telecasts.

"I have never had a script," Costas explains. "Anything I say on the show is something I thought of while I was sitting there."

The show is not played for laughs. It's more of a fly-by-the-seat-of your-pants format that often generates humor. But delivering news and information is its principal aim, says Costas, now in his third year as host.

Last Sunday's show is an example:

He opens by detailing heavyweight Mike Tyson's devastation the previous night of champion Trevor Berbick in their WBC title fight and updates the situation in college football.

Then Costas turns to prognosticator McGuire, who had his sights on the New York audience largely composed of Jets and Giants fans. McGuire details the reasons — as he does most Sundays — why the Jets will lose, this time to the Miami Dolphins.

"Bobby, they will not win another game for the rest of the year," he assures Costas.

A mixture of boos and cheers follows. A rarity. McGuire will be right about the Jets.

Former NFL wide receiver Rashad is next, airing a taped interview with Giants All-Pro linebackers Lawerence Taylor and Harry Carson about the difference in their personalities on and off the field.

"We're like psychotic killers," Carson tells Rashad. "We're like Hekyll and Hyde."

Realizing he is confused, Carson turns to Taylor for help.

"What is it?" he asks.

"Hekyll and Jekyll," Taylor tells him.

"Jekyll and Hyde!" Rashad says with a laugh.

Then it gets serious. The tape rolls, and Taylor is shown imploring his teammates moments before the kickoff of a recent game.

"Hey, Baby!" he shouts. "Let's go out there like a bunch of crazed dogs and have some fun."

Then there is the tongue-in-cheek piece by sports writer Deford, asking all to watch the Fiesta Bowl on NBC Jan. 2 in hopes of padding TV ratings to the point where overwhelming interest will lead eventually to a national championship game. Deford suggests that viewers even give up other NBC programming, and hands the hot potato to Costas.

"NBC executives, thrilled with the commentary, especially to the early reference — inadvertent I'm sure — to the SIESTA bowl," says Costas.

He is not concerned about his off-the-cuff remarks.

"In don't think the NBC executives are up tight," he says. "Their attitude encourages us to be freewheeling."

He fits right in.

His steady rise at NBC was nurtured in part by his frank on-air discussions of controversial subjects, but never at the expense of the event.

Costas came to the fore as a broadcaster during a 1981 telecast in which he and partner Bob Trumpy debated the merits of an altercation between then New York Jets quarterback Richard Todd and New York Post sports writer Steve Serby.

Todd struck Serby, and Trumpy, a former tight end for the Cincinnati Bengals, said that professional football players at times can take only so much criticism from the media. Costas argued that no amount of criticism justified physical violence.

"That's the first thing a lot of people remember about me," Costas says.

But the discussion might not have taken place, he insists, had the game been anything but one-sided.

"That conversation took place when the score was 38-10," he said. "It would not have taken place had it been 38-35."

Fishing has two seasons: Winter, rest of the year

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

Fishing is a two-season sport throughout much of the North: ice-fishing season and the rest of the year.

Devotees of ice fishing claim there is no finer eating than fish caught through a hole in the ice. With winter just a few weeks away, they should be eating some pretty fine meals soon.

There are two basic forms of ice fishing: tip-up and jigging. The easy way is to use a tip-up, which suspends bait in the water. When a fish hits, a flag tips up and the angler, who can be tending several of the devices, plays the catch on a hand line.

Jigging requires a very small rod and reel to flick the bait up and down. Jigging can be done while sitting on an upside down bucket next to a hole in the ice. Comfort-minded anglers build fishing shanties over the hole.

It takes 4 inches of clear, solid ice to support an adult safely. A snowmobile needs 8 inches of ice for support; a car 12 inches or more. Ice moves with the winds and the currents.

On big lakes, like Lake Erie, a solid ice shelf can become an ice island. The Coast Guard or some other agency usually get the fishermen off, but any cars, truck or snowmobiles, or fishing shanties, end up on the bottom.

The best safety advice for the new ice fisherman, said Jim Addis, director of fish management for Wisconsin, is "go to the local bait store or tackle shop, find some people who know the water you're going on, people who do know the ice. We do have a lot of springs in our lakes and that usually leaves a spot of thin ice."

If you do fall through, he said, don't try to climb out.

Try to get a grip on the ice, a frozen chunk or stick a knife in the ice, then "try to float up and sort of scootch out. Don't exhaust yourself trying to climb out," Addis said.

Proper clothing is vital for the angler who wants to enjoy the sport, rather than make it an endurance contest.

Warm boots are esential. Boots with inner liners of felt or other insulating material are best. Gloves that can fit inside larger mittens are another good idea.

The rest of the clothing should include lightweight thermal underwear, warm pants, shirt, sweater and vest, plus an outer layer of a parka or snowmobile suit, cap and hood.

Layers of clothing are ideal because they can be added or removed according to conditions.

Finally, Addis said, an ice fisherman's best friend can be a 5-gallon plastic bucket. You can use it to carry bait and equipment. Then you can sit on it while you fish. "Some people put a lantern under it so they get a little heat coming up while they're fishing.

"I wear a long coat when I'm ice fishing, sitting with my back to the wind. It's amazing how warm you stay. When the fish are biting, you don't even notice the cold."

Ferraro uses six straight strikes to gain first title

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Top-seeded Dave Ferraro of Kingston, N.Y., opened the title game with six straight strikes and went on to capture the $150,000 Budweiser Classic with a 254-221 decision over John Gant on Saturday.

It was the first Professional Bowlers Association championship for Ferraro, who earned $27,000 and a trip to the 1987 Firestone Tournament of Champions in Akron.

Gant, from Independence, Ky., appeared unbeatable in the semifinal match, starting with six straight strikes and routing Ron Palombi Jr. of Erie, Pa., 277-223.

"I saw John striking every ball out there (against Palombi), and he was pretty intimidating," Ferraro said.

In the final game of the sixth round Friday night, Gant posted a 279-207 victory over Palombi to reach the nationally televised finals.

Nine Rebs on 4-5A elite

Permian's Crow tagged MVP

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Odessa Permian's Shawn Crow and Midland Lee's Anthony Pertile head the football class of 1986 in District 4-5A.

Crow, a unanimous selection at running back, was named the Most Valuable Offensive Player when the 1986 All-District team was selected by a voting panel of seven league coaches and four sports writers.

Crow led the league in rushing with 1,363 yards and was one of only two juniors to make the team.

Pertile, a senior cornerback, spearheaded the Rebel defense that helped Lee gain an 8-1 regular season record, earning honors as Most Valuable Defensive Player. Voting was done on the basis of regular season play only.

The elite team was dominated, as expected, by district co-champions San Angelo and Lee. San Angelo placed 10 players on the All-District unit and Lee had nine picks. Permian had five and was followed with three from Abilene High, two from Odessa High and one from Abilene Cooper. Midland High did not have a first team selection.

Joining Pertile on the All-District team from Lee were quarterback Rodney Johnson, tight end Jack Chase, center Chris Jones, linebackers John Kendrick and Greg Bick, defensive linemen John Bradley and Kevin Jackson and safety Jimmy Fennell. Fennell and Crow were the only juniors on the team.

Only two players earned the honor of being named to both the offensive and defensive teams. They were San Angelo's Scotty Allen at safety and wide receiver and Permian's Mike Yandrich at defensive lineman and offensive tackle.

Only three players on the team drew the distinction of being unanimous choices. Crow led the list while Abilene High running back Junior Bell, who was the only other runner to break the 1,000-yard barrier, was also a uncontested choice. On the defensive side, Permian safety Darren Allman was a unanimous choices.

Although Midland High didn't get any first team selections, three Bulldogs earned honorable mention. They were cornerback Jaime Madrid, running back Anthony Adkison and offensive guard Mike Mechler.

Five Rebels earned honorable mention status. They were running back Joe Woodard, guard Mark Barnes, safety Billy Wagner, wide receiver Freddy Dawson and defensive lineman Dejuan Norris. Woodard and Norris are juniors.

The following is a complete list of the 1986 All-District and honorable mention selections.

had seven, but was a defensive force in the tourney. Lance Perry had a big final with 14 points.

Coach Simpson will get added help this week when quarterback Dod Clapp, a starter last year joins the team after the AHS football team was beaten in the Region football playoffs by L.D. Bell.

Eastwood, which has been a Region I team every year but one under Bobby Lesley, since the tournament moved to Midland, placed Tony Provencio and Brett Wagner on the All-Tournament team. Wagner had only one point in the final while Provencio was held to six.

Lubbock Coronado captured third place with an 80-53 victory over Lubbock Caprock in an all-District 3-5A matchup. Coronado got 23 points from Johnny Grusing while three other players were in double figures. Caprock's Ken Flowers had 28 points in a losing cause.

Still, it looks like District 3-5A will be chasing the Sandies again this year. However, Coronado looks like they have the makings of being a playoff team.

Andrews, the only Class 4A team in the tournament, won the consolation championship with a 77-73 win over District 4-5A's Odessa High as Bernard Williams turned in a big 30-point performance to lead the way. OHS got 23 from Victor Dancer and 16 more from Tracy Blaylock. Andrews' only tournament loss was to defending Class 5A state champion Amarillo High in the first round Friday.

The Midland High Bulldogs finished last in the 12-team tournament, losing all three of its tournament contests.

The Bulldogs lost the battle for 11th place in a 73-60 loss to El Paso Parkland Saturday morning.

Michael Ball led the Bulldogs with 16 points while Joe Wayland added 10. However, Parkland got a big two-pronged attack from Roger Giles with 22 points and Robert Thomas with 21. In addition, Javier Macias had a 14-point night.

Eastwood got to the championship finals with a 54-49 win over Amarillo Caprock in the semifinals Saturday as Brett Wagner and Ricky Olivas both hit for 15 points.

Amarillo High got to the finals with a 56-43 win over Lubbock Coronado with Brant Capps leading the way with 16 points and Sammy Simpson 12. However, Coronado's Johnny Grusing had one of the tournament's high point outings with 27 points in the losing cause.

In a play-in game for the right to play for fifth place, Midland Lee met Odessa Permian in a District 4-5A preview. Permian won 54-45 as the Rebs turned the ball over 24 times. Lee trailed by 11 at the half and narrowed the margin to three before letting it get away.

Permian's Todd Evans had 13 points and Lance Watkins had 11. Lee was led with 12 from Mark Van Cott.

Permian went on to win seventh place with a 78-68 victory over Lubbock High as Watkins hit for 21 points. Toby Christian had 24 for Lubbock.

Lee lost again, 77-51, to Lubbock Monterey in the battle for ninth place, but no results were available from that game since it was played late in the Midland High gym. Lee finished with a 1-3 tournament record.

Others to make the 11-player All-Tournament team were Ken Flowers, Caprock; Johnny Grusing, Coronado; Toby Christian, Lubbock High; Bernard Williams, Andrews; Victor Dancer, Odessa High; and Lance Watkins, Odessa Permian.

'CATS

IT WAS Chatman, behind a wall of 200-pound-plus blockers, that strolled into the right corner of the end zone on a five-yard roll-out with 2:47 left in the game to break a 9-9 deadlock, and seemingly wrap up a Coyote victory.

A two-point conversion run by Mark King gave Wichita Falls an imposing 17-9 advantage. But the Bobcats, trailing by eight points and two penetrations, went to the air against a porous Wichita Falls secondary and scored 1:23 later.

Quarterback Doug Bonds found little-used Sean Sullivan in the back of the end zone to pull within two. A Bonds to Joseph Tijerina conversion pass followed, knotting the score at 17, but San Angelo still trailed by a lone trip inside the 20. And that turned out to be the difference.

With 0:16 remaining, Bonds and the Bobcats got the ball once more and only needed to get inside the Coyote 20 because they led in first downs, the second tiebreaker, 17-16. But Bonds failed to connect in two "hail Mary" attempts.

"It's another win, penetrations can win it for you just like points," said Chatman. "It advances us on to the next round."

"(WICHITA FALLS) going for two was a smart deal on their part," Keeling said of Tyler's decision on the final Coyote touchdown. "With the penetrations situation like it was, it put us in a bind."

The real bind for San Angelo came early in the third quarter when the Coyotes drove deep into Bobcat territory after King intercepted a Bonds pass at the San Angelo 32.

It took three runs by Chatman to put Wichita Falls on the 18 and record the crucial penetration, though it was hardly noticed at the time. That was because three plays later, Larry Hook stepped in front of a Chatman pass at the goal line to halt the drive.

Sergio Alcala led the Bobcats in rushing with 97 yards, 95 in the first half as Keeling tried to take advantage of a suspect Wichita Falls secondary. Bonds finished eight of 19 with two interceptions and two touchdowns.

"We threw the ball a lot in the second half, maybe we should have run more with it because we do that so well," Keeling said. "But we were pressing, trying to score, really."

Chatman, who was the entire Coyote offense in the first half, was joined by Roger Pollan in the second half. Pollan ran for 61 second half yards, 65 total.

BUT THE venerable veer seemed to disable itself in the early going, as Chatman fumbled the Coyote's first snap. However, the Bobcats failed to convert a fourth down deep in Coyote territory, leaving the game scoreless.

San Angelo's next fourth-down situation was more successful as Bonds found Charles Kelly at the goal line for the first score. Shane Bruton bobbled the extra point snap and the 'Cats led 6-0.

John Stodghill's 29-yard field goal early in the second quarter put the Coyotes on the board and broke a personal 0-for-6 three-point slump. Russ Childers then answered with a 26-yarder for a 9-3 San Angelo lead.

Chatman brought Wichita Falls right back into the hunt. First, a scrambling Chatman hit Robert Woodruff over the middle for a 57-yard gain to the Bobcats' 23.

Then the 6-foot-2, 190-pound senior showcased his running skills with a 16-yard run to the seven, before rolling in from the five. But then Stodghill's fickle foot came center stage once more.

Stodghill, who earlier in the season earned a place in the National High School record book for 66 straight PATs, missed his fourth extra point in postseason play, leaving the two teams tied at nine at intermission.

AKERS

thur, Texas, for one year before becoming head high school coach at Edinburg, Texas, for three years.

Akers coached one year at Lubbock High School in Lubbock, Texas and was hired by Royal as an assistant in 1966, staying on until 1975 when he accepted the head coaching job at Wyoming.

After a 2-9 record in 1975, Akers' 1976 Wyoming team went 8-4.

That same year, Royal called it quits, and Akers was selected for the Texas job over longtime Royal assistant Mike Campbell.

Cranes come within seconds of quarters

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Jason Bednar kicked a field goal with seven seconds left on the clock to end Crane's hopes of a Class 3A state title and give Lampasas a 10-8 area victory here Saturday.

A Crane penalty kept alive Lampasas' winning drive after Bednar missed a field goal from 35 yards out with 1:04 left. Given a first down and new life, Bednar made good on his next attempt, ending Crane's season at 9-4.

The Cranes, riddled with injuries after a pair of playoff victories and playing without 1,800-yard rusher Gerald Mitchell and backup Sharod Vaden, held a slim 8-7 lead heading into the final minutes.

Fullback Cliff Wilson punched in the Crane score in the second quarter on a one-yard run and the "Purple Rage" defense stemmed the explosive Lampasas offense. The Badgers helped keep the Cranes in the game by losing seven fumbles.

Lampasas will face Iowa Park in the Class 3A quarterfinals next Saturday.

Coaches lament firing of UT boss

DALLAS (AP) — Fred Akers' fellow Southwest Conference coaches lamented his firing from former SWC powerhouse Texas Saturday, calling the embattled coach a classy guy who had done a good job.

"It's a shame," Rice coach Jerry Berndt said after the firing was announced. "Fred Akers has one of the best coaching records in the country. He has handled a difficult situation with dignity and class."

Akers is leaving UT after 10 years at the helm, where he compiled an 86-31-2 record and a winning percentage of just under 74.

"I don't know any other coach in America that's ever been fired with a 74 percent won-loss record," Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield said. "I'm just saddened for a guy who's given 10 years of his life and has done a tremendous job."

Berndt said it is hard for him to believe that UT officials and fans would go so far as to fire Akers even though the 1986 Longhorns suffered the SWC school's first losing season in 30 years.

"I blame the media for a lot of that," Berndt said. "The press had him gone before the season. The media was somewhat responsible for him being reassigned. ... I was hoping they would win their last few games so maybe he could keep his job."

Baylor Coach Grant Teaff said, "From a personal standpoint, I was disappointed. I felt like he would make it. I thought he did an outstanding job this year with all the injuries and with the situation surrounding him.

"He's a very good coach and I know he'll land on his feet," Teaff said.

Bears' video start of rush to recording studio

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Bears' "Super Bowl Shuffle" video has sent its stars shufflin' on down to the bank and the team's competitors shufflin' into the studio to film their own rap music images.

To date, the "Shuffle" has sold more than 700,000 records and 170,000 videos, says a recent audit by the Laventhol and Horwath accounting firm.

Assistant sorry to see Akers go

SAN ANGELO — Texas Longhorn assistant football coach Bill Hicks became an assistant without a boss Saturday as he sat scouting the San Angelo-Wichita Falls area football contest at Bobcat Stadium.

Hicks, a 23-year veteran of college coaching but in his first year at Texas, learned of head coach Fred Akers' firing from a reporter in the first half of the playoff game.

"I've been anxiously awaiting an announcement, we knew there was a press conference scheduled by the Athletic Council this afternoon," a dejected Hicks said upon hearing the news. "I guess I was expecting it.

"I'm very disappointed because he certainly deserves better. I have the utmost respect for the man, and by most standards he's been very successful. But the University of Texas has very high standards.

"Coach Akers has been very positive oriented all season, trying to take care of the business of winning football games. There was a lot of pressure on him, but he never put that pressure on the staff or on the kids to try and save his job."

Hicks is the Longhorns' defensive coordinator and in charge of high school scouting in West Texas. It is not clear what role Hicks and the other assistant coaches under contract to the Longhorns will have under a new coach.

Want a car that gets 50 feet to the gallon?

Listen! Fed up with the family jalopy, are you? Tired of not having that burst of quick speed when you want to get around a big truck on a crowded highway? Like a little excitement in your Sunday driving?

How about a car that will accelerate from 0 to 100 m.p.h. in 1.2 seconds? That will go from 0 to 271 in 5 seconds?

Of course, we're not talking economy here. What we're talking is a vehicle that gets, oh, say, 50 feet to the gallon. Anyway, look at it this way: It goes a quarter of a mile on 10 gallons.

Also, we're not talking your unleaded regular here. We're talking a tankful that costs $30 a gallon. Some kind of nitro-methane. It can burst into flames if you just snap your fingers too close to it.

Of course, not many people would want to invest $300 just to go a quarter of a mile. But we're also talking people to whom expense is no object. Because the car we're talking about costs nearly as much as a yacht that would sleep six.

IT'S NO wonder they call them "Funny Cars." They're not half as funny as the people who drive them.

Funny cars, of course, are just hot rods with delusions of grandeur. They are an offshoot of the drag strip competitors, the ones that look at first blush like 250-mile-an-hour insects screaming through a slot and down a measured asphalt track. Actually, these are the funny cars, and the ones they call "funny" really could pass for hunks of Detroit iron and wouldn't get a second look on the Santa Monica freeway.

Under the hood is another story. There, they are seen to be 3,000-horsepower brutes with a fiberglass shell that lifts right off to let the driver in. It's just a kind of rocket with wheels on it.

But if you think the car is far out, you should see the driver.

Kenny Bernstein doesn't fit any mold you ever preconceived as a hot-rodder or even a race driver. Most drag racers were youngsters who were lube rats growing up, under or in a car and with either a steering wheel or a lug wrench in their hands from the time they could walk.

Kenny was actually the scion of a department store family, owners of a chain outlets all over the Southwest, and his first job was not greasing a hot dragster, it was hawking a line of women's ready-to-wear through the dress shops of Texas and New Mexico.

Kenny couldn't see himself starring in a real life "Death of a Salesman" and he kept slipping off to country tracks from Amarillo to Lubbock to pursue his real love, auto racing.

There was a war going on in Kenny. One side of him wanted to be A.J. Foyt, any Unser, Johnny Rutherford. The other side wanted to be a rich businessman.

So, he did both. He was still schlepping a line of frocks one day in Lubbock, Texas, where he paused in a mall one day looking for a place to get a beer and a sandwich. There wasn't any. Kenny went to the manager. "I'll put one in for you if you'll lease me the space."

THAT WAS the start of a chain of fast-food shops called The Chelsea Street Pubs, where Kenny made his first million on the way to a 21-store, $17-million-a-year business.

He ran it for six years, but his heart was always in a cockpit. He hankered for something more life-threatening than serving up burgers-with-everything to college kids.

He became the most successful and best-known funny car pilot in the business, the first to break the 250-m.p.h. record and the 260-m.p.h. record, and he has attained top speed of 271.

But the businessman in Bernstein was not completely dormant. He could see the business opportunities, the promotional potential of his sport, and he soon convinced the Budweiser and Ford promo departments of the value of corporate sponsorship of this popular sport. Bernstein not only brought his lead foot to the business, he also brought his silver spoon.

You figure a guy would get behind the wheel of a funny car because he would otherwise be behind the wheel of an 18-wheel rig on I-5 or a stretch limo in Beverly Hills. But Kenny Bernstein came there directly from a board room, went from the back seat of a Rolls to the driver's seat of car that doesn't even have a phone in it.

And even though he brought corporate methods with him, what you have here is a man who walked away from a $17-million-a-year business and a four-phone desk in an executive suite to get in a flameproof suit and climb in a car that burns up a gallon of $30 fuel every couple of turns of the wheel. And they call the cars "funny."

Grey Cup ready for winner of CFL championship game

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The Grey Cup is shined and polished, ready to be presented Sunday to the champions of the Canadian Football League.

But symbollically, the old trophy has become a bit battered and a little tarnished.

The hype and hoopla traditionally associated with the Grey Cup has been sorely missing in this city, which desperately wanted its B.C. Lions to defend their championship. A community that has celebrated its centennial and Expo 86 this year seems a bit partied out.

And while the favored Edmonton Eskimos and the gritty Hamilton Tiger-Cats spent the week practicing at the domed B.C. Place for Sunday's 74th Grey Cup — kickoff time is at 5 p.m. EST — as much attention was paid to the league's off-field problems.

Commissioner Doug Mitchell signed a new contract with the league Thursday, then spent half an hour explaining to reporters that the future is bright for the CFL — even though the owners of three out of the four Eastern teams (all but Montreal, which is also suffering severe financial problems) have talked this week about selling their franchises.

The 59,000-seat stadium will technically be a sellout for the Grey Cup — all tickets are distributed through the nine clubs and the league — but there could be a lot of no-shows. The Vancouver papers have been full of want ads for excess tickets from people who weren't counting on Edmonton's 41-5 victory over the Lions in last week's Western final.

Edmonton, which had the best record in the CFL with 13 wins, four losses and one tie, is favored by about 12 points.

A victory for the Ticats, who finished second in the East with a 9-8-1 record and are appearing in their third successive Grey Cup, would be their first Grey Cup since 1972 and their first win over Edmonton since 1977.

"We're loose, but not loose," Hamilton Coach Al Bruno quizically surmised when asked how his team felt after their final practice.

A Weekly Advertising Section About Real Estate In The Permian Basin Produced For And In Cooperation With The Real Estate Industry

Midland Reporter-Telegram

Before

With the escalation of housing prices in the last decade, more and more people are deciding to keep the homes they have and remodel and/or redecorate.

Such is the case with this week's featured home. Located at 1600 Humble, the three bedroom two bath home on this week's cover shows the dramatic changes possible with a minimum of money, according to designer Sharon Spear of Permian Interior.

"Every room in the house received some attention, with several having major renovation, and all for less than $10,000," Spear pointed out.

&

Text by Nancy Clise Photos by Jerry Mennenga

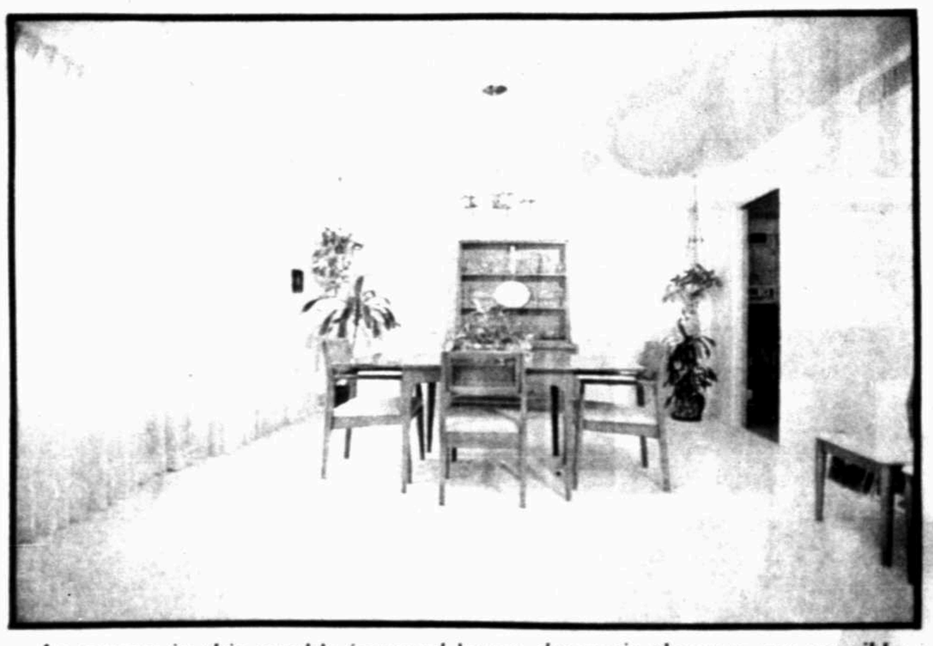
After new draperies, a fresh coat of paint and new carpeting, this dining room is transformed into a space everyone will enjoy. But renovations need not be expensive, as explained in today's Homes and Living article.



As proven in this week's featured home, dramatic changes are possible with redecorating and/or remodeling. This photo shows the formal dining room at 1600 Humble before interior designer Sharon Spear worked her magic.

After

Prior to redecorating the home was a hodgepodge of colors with each room having different accents and no two tying together.

"This is a common problem in many homes," said Spear. "It can also be difficult to remedy, but without a proper color scheme a house can look disjointed."

Designer to answer readers' decorating questions in new column

By NANCY CLISE
Advertising Feature Writer

Not long ago, furnishing a home with the help of a professional designer was the prerogative of older, upper income clients.

Sharon Spear

Nowadays, busy two-income professional couples and singles are also consulting designers, as are families with young children who want to make their money go further.

Besides the greater level of awareness that professional guidance is available, the increasing cost of decorating a home is also responsible for the growth of the field.

Next Sunday, Dec. 7, will mark the beginning of a new biweekly column named by Design. In the new column Sharon Spear will answer your questions about color scheme, furniture placement, accessories and even exterior design and landscaping. Send your questions to by Design, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702.

Spear, a qualified interior designer, has been in business for more than fifteen years. She has been working in the Midland area for the last three years and established Permian Interior with her partner, Dot Parsons, in 1982.

Following is an interview with Sharon Spear concerning some basic questions clients might have.

Q. What is the single most important factor in choosing an interior designer?

A. It is extremely important to choose the interior designer that is right for you. Someone who will take the time to find out and understand exactly what you want, and not just reflect the desires of the designer. Look at your friends homes and if you like what you see ask who did their house. Anyone considering hiring an interior designer should make some inquiries before they make a decision.

Q. Should you have a budget in mind before talking to the designer?

A. Definitely. You should know exactly how much you can afford to spend before you see anyone. Also the decision should be made about exactly what you want changed. Are you going to do one room or the whole house? Do you want to get all new furniture or use what you have?

Q. More and more people are using the services of an interior designer. Why do you think that is?

A. Interior designers are meeting the needs of people in all walks of life. They are a personal shopper as well as a preventer of costly mistakes. Their knowledge of balance, design and color can make the difference between a room that you love and one that you dislike.

Q. What made you decide to write for by Design?

A. I want people to know that they don't need to be intimidated by professional help. Interior designers provide a service that has the potential to save money.

In the case of this week's featured home a color scheme did prove to be something of a challenge, especially in the kitchen and bathroom areas.

"This home has been well maintained and the original tile was still in very good condition," said Spear. "Too good to tear up and start over." However, the colors could prove difficult to work with.

A lavender tile was in place on the counters and walls between cabinets, while at the same time the original sink and oven are pink porcelain.

"Luckily this beautiful blond paneling on the walls and cabinets is coming back into style," Spear said. "Even if it weren't we'd still use it. I don't believe in fads. People should have what they feel comfortable with and not the latest fashion trend."

To pull the room together Sharon looked until she found a print wallpaper with the different colors she needed. A royal blue background continues the theme of the rest of the house and was hung by Joan Nerrifield.

A beige, patterned tile was replaced with one that has a wood look to match the cabinets and a small wool dhurrie throw rug helps to centralize the colors.

Once the kitchen was finished the owners were so pleased they decided to replace the dishwasher and cooktop, which are included in the price of the remodeling.

The formal dining room, pictured on the cover, shows a equally dramatic change. Originally the room was done in white, making the room look larger, but perhaps somewhat empty.

The new room is carpeted in tan with a royal blue border. Repainted in a lighter blue, new velisor blinds and draperies bring the room to life. Other changes include track lighting and reupholstery of chair seats. (Each of the rooms received new window treatments and draperies were hung by Logan Hohle.)

"One of the first things I do when I'm called in for consultation is study the rooms and their furniture," Spear explained. "Most people are amazed at the difference just moving their furniture around can make."

Such proved to be the case in the living area of this week's featured home.

"While there is a counter between the kitchen and living area, the way the furniture was arranged made it seem as though the room didn't end, but went on into the kitchen," Spear commented. "By placing a chair and table at the end of the carpeting the room has a definite border."

New furniture was unnecessary in the living area except for the reupholstery of a favorite chair.

"By using existing furniture, doing the work that you can yourself and comparison shopping when you do need to buy something you can keep costs down," Spear pointed out. "Everyone has favorite pieces of furniture that they don't want to part with and they shouldn't have to. The days of a designer walking through the door and telling you to throw everything out and start from scratch are long gone."

Another trouble spot in the living area involved a built-in planter located in a area that received no outside light. Artificial plants were being used as a substitute for what could not be grown.

Spear covered the ineffective planter with a mirror and arranged the homeowners collection of crystal on top into a display appealing to the eye.

Vertical blinds on the large window and sliding glass door help to lighten the room and give a clear view of the beautiful backyard.

To help keep costs down the owners did all their own painting. Classic Carpets supplied and installed the vinyl and carpeting, except for the wool dhurrie, which came from Pier One Imports.

"Pier One is a great place to look for small accessories," Spear said, noting that the place mats and many of the wall decorations came from the store.

Another amazing transformation has turned the master bedroom into a room anyone would love to enjoy. Again new carpeting and a fresh coat of paint were the beginning of the conversion.

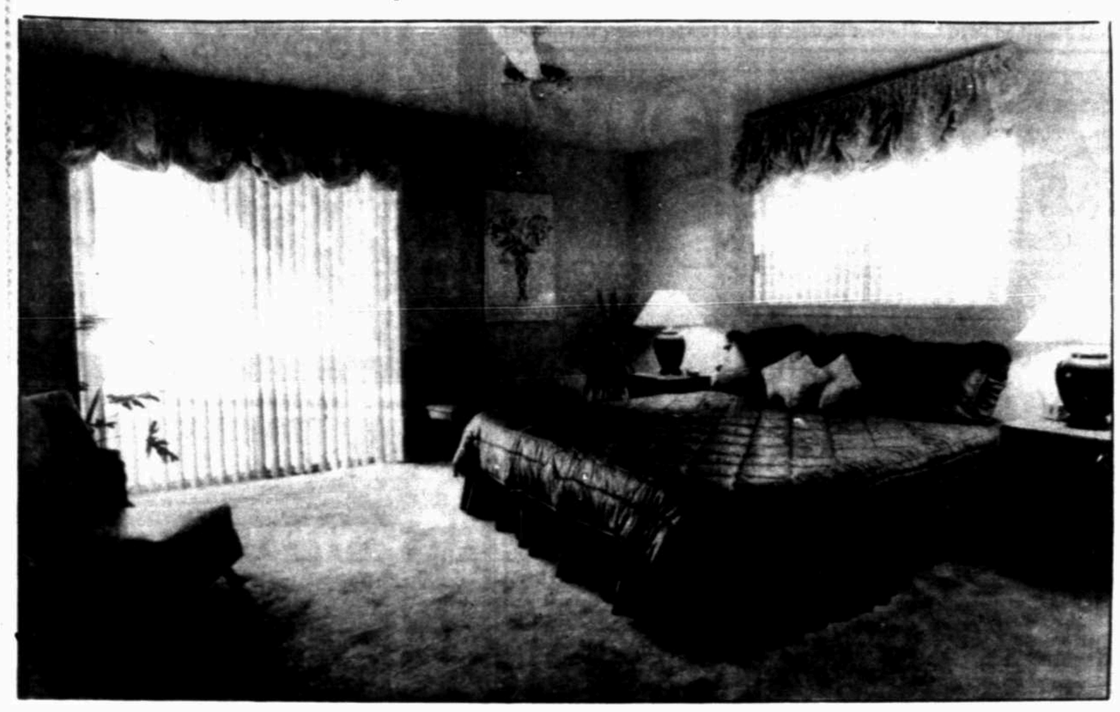
A light burgundy was used for the walls while the quilt, pillows and dust ruffle are a deeper, more dramatic shade of the same color. The matching lamps and night stands (also from Pier One) are both convenient and versatile.

A floral fabric was used to reupholstery the chair and make the false balloon draperies. Vertical blinds complete the window dressing.

In the adjoining bath blue ceramic tile and a seafoam green sink are pulled together with a floral wallpaper and color-coordinated accessories.

"Again, the tile and sink were in perfect condition, making it impractical to change them," Spear said. "So we used them by tying the colors together with wallpaper and accessories."

By utilizing furniture and accessories already acquired and doing what work they could themselves, this homeowner was able to redecorate their entire house. Perhaps this could be the solution you've been searching for.



The two photos to the left show the master bedroom and kitchen prior to redecorating. The photos above show the rooms after the changes have been made.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

In the Middle Ages, a coronation ceremony was performed by a high church dignitary and the monarch was then considered to be a consecrated personage. Coronations were held at a venerated places. The church at Aix-la-Chapelle, founded by Charlemagne was used for Frankish kings, the cathedral at Rheims for French kings, the Stone of Scone, for Scottish kings and Westminster Abbey for English kings. In 1296, King Edward I of England carried the Scottish Coronation Stone to England and it now forms part of the Coronation Chair in Westminster Abbey.

These days you don't need to be a king to live like one. Why not add an efficient and economical Coleman Furnace to your castle? Homemade gifts from the kitchen (above — left to right) are Microwave Fantasty Fudge, Wine Jelly, Tortilla Basket, Sausage Rounds, Candied Orange Peel and Lemon-Garlic Dressing. Bread dough ornaments, made by Mary Pape of San Angelo, and a Bouquet Garni (below) decorate the tree.

Everyone has a few individuals on their Christmas list that are difficult to shop for, not to mention the hours consumed wandering in the crowded stores. What do you get the single men on your list? The boss? Your co-workers or your children's teachers?

And how can you get something for everyone without putting a serious crunch on your pocketbook?

An inexpensive (and possibly timesaving) solution is the kitchen.

That's right — the kitchen. Quality gifts can be made quickly and easily in your own kitchen. New techniques have erased tedious ones and simple recipes have replaced complex ones.

The efficiency of creating gifts from your kitchen can be especially helpful when a gift arrives from someone unexpected.

One afternoon could produce serval baskets of goodies or a dozen personalized bread dough ornaments.

A GREAT GIFT for anyone, especially the single folks on your list, are sausage rounds. These small tasty rye rounds, topped with a spicy sausage and cheese mixture, can be made weeks in advance and frozen. They can be given in freezer bags and take just seconds to re-heat in the microwave or minutes in the oven. A platterful is perfect for an afternoon of football watching or just to have on hand during the holidays.

Consider the following fudge recipe made in the microwave. It has only four ingredients and eliminates constant stirring and repeatedly testing the temperature.

Another make-ahead gift is jelly sealed by parafin in wine glasses. Jelly, may not seem much, until you remove the wax, and suddenly are reminded of ripening fruit on sun-gilded paths, the essence of the countryside preserved in a glass. The glasses are a nice gift in themselves and eliminate the canning process needed to store the jelly in jars.

A festive food basket can be made with fudge squares (total preparation time with microwave, 3 minutes!) wrapped in plastic wrap and tied with ribbon, along with small freezer bags of sausage rounds and Bouquet Garni. Bouquet Garni is made from spices and wrapped in cheesecloth, which can be submerged in stews or soups to add flavor.

Candied orange slices, another edible gift idea, add sparkle to Mason jars as does lemon-garlic dressing to carafes.

Bread dough ornaments courtesy of Miss Cayce's Christmas Store & More.

If you want to give something that is longer lasting, and have a little more time, consider bread dough items such as personalized ornaments or baskets. There are dozens of illustrated books on bread dough art available in craft shops. Also a tortilla basket adorned with chiles makes a wonderful hostess gift with a Southwestern flavor.

When in a pinch, these quick-fix items are delicious and attractive, worth giving and keeping.

BOUQUET GARNI

(makes 10 garnis)
10 bay leaves
5 teaspoons dried thyme
2½ teaspoons dired marjoram
2½ teaspoons summer savory
10 peppercorns

Cut cheesecloth into ten 3-inch squares. Divide bay leaves and dried herbs evenly among them. Gather up the edges of cheesecloth and tie with cotton string.

(A bouguet garni is tossed into stew or soup at the beginning of cooking and removed before serving).

LEMON-GARLIC DRESSING

3 garlic cloves
3 shallots, peeled
2 cups white wine
2 lemons, peels only
5 whole peppercorns
16 ounces olive oil

Pour white wine and oil into carafe. Add other ingredients. (Use as a dressing for pasta or for glazing meats and poultry).

WINE JELLY

2 cups Burgundy, port, or sherry wine
2 cups sugar
1 3-ounce package liquid fruit pectin

Combine wine and sugar in a flat-bottomed kettle. Bring to a rolling boil, stirring frequently. Add liquid pectin and return to a rolling boil. Boil one minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; skim off foam with a metal spoon.

Quickly ladle jelly into sterilized wine glasses (heavy cut glass preferred) about ½ inch from the top. Seal by pouring parafin, melted in a double boiler on top of the jelly. Store in refrigerator until ready to use.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The party whirl began Wednesday for this year's Minuet Club debutantes, who are home from college for the Thanksgiving holidays.

A cocktail party was held that evening in the home of Lorraine and Rufe Bynum to honor Laura Black, Carolyn Britton, Kathy Scott Bird, Magan Donnelly, Sharon Karcher, Mab Fitz-Gerald and Laura Schneider. Co-hosts were Jody and Jack Blake and Phyllis and John Grimland.

Susan Fry was honored by her grandmother, Artie (Mrs. M.D.) Fry, with a brunch Friday in the Fireplace Room of Midland Country Club. Following the party, the girls gathered at the Petroleum Club for bow practice for their presentation on Dec. 22.

The home of Doris and John Redfern III was the setting for a cocktail buffet Friday evening honoring all of the 1986 debs. In addition to those already mentioned, they are Sharon Cowden of Dallas, Catherine Bolger, Elise de Compiegne, Dee Dee Dyer, Tammy Eiteljorg, Elaine Hinchey, Bitsy Hopper, Kelly Munn, Andrea Neisig and Leigh Ann Runyan.

The Redferns' co-hosts for the party were Nancy and Barry Beal, Suzy and Jim Boldrick, Bonnie and Orman Hubbard, Barbara and Bill Jowell and Mary and Bill Kennedy.

Following the cocktail buffet, Kay and Charles Bird and Mary and Henri de Compiegne entertained for their daughters, Kathy and Elise, with a formal dance at Midland Country Club.

Elise and Dee Dee were honored with a Saturday luncheon at LaBodega Restaurant hosted by Judy and Hugh Corrigan and Frances Metcalfe.

The weekend's festivities concluded Saturday night with a Sock Hop given in Magan's honor. Held at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, the party was hosted by her grandparents, Jean and George Donnelly, and her aunts and uncles, Jeannine and Robin Donnelly and Jan and Joe O'Neill.

JUDY MURPHY, whose husband, Matt, is the new president of Republic Bank, was the honoree at a recent luncheon in the Pinnacle Club. Hostesses for the introductory occasion were the executive vice presidents' wives, Jan (Mrs. Marvin) Schiebout, Lori (Mrs. Mark) Wright, Maggie (Mrs. David) Kling and Cheri (Mrs. Bill) Hill.

The guests were the wives of the bank's board of directors. Attending were Maurine (Mrs. John L.) Cox, Lou (Mrs. Decker) Dawson, Sandy (Mrs. James E.) Hall, Ann (Mrs. W.D.) Kleine, Beverly (Mrs. B.J.) Pevehouse, Kerry (Mrs. Clarence, III) Scharbauer, Marianne (Mrs. Wilbur) Yeager and Alva (Mrs. John P.) Butler.

Floral arrangements in shades of dark green, blue and pink decorated the tables. The guests enjoyed chicken salad served in pineapple boats artistically sculpted to resemble swans and Strawberries Romanoff.

WHEN JANET (MRS. BOB) POLLARD entertains, you know you're in for a fun time, and her recent program for the Midland Country Club Ladies Association was a delight.

Janet and her band (J.P. and the Boys), with the help of friends, created a trip down memory lane for the audience. The program, entitled "Christmas Through the Decades," featured songs and clothes of the past 80 years, with many well-known Midlanders as the models.

Posters made by Leslie Rhodes were displayed around the ballroom. They chronicled the major events and the popular songs, movies, books and foods of each decade and were illustrated with the fashions of that period.

Janet, who derives great pleasure from her music and performing, tells us how much she enjoyed the research that went into her show. She credits Dale (Mrs. Roy) Kimsey for a crash course in antique clothing and the book, "Life: The First 50 Years," for providing much of the background material for her program.

To close the show on a holiday note, Janet asked the audience and models to join her in singing the ever popular "White Christmas."

Models included Melanie, Lucia Lee and William Crump, Cliffy and Katie Beal, Dale and Kristen Kimsey, Carolyn, Karen and Ashlee Winkler, Modesta and Chim Williams, Becky Englestead, Ann Fullenwider, Shelly Childers, Carol and Jason Phillips, Patty Herd, Laulie LaForce, Chic Williams and Adam Pollard.

The preceding luncheon featured Stuffed Turkey Roll with Broccoli and Supreme Sauce and a Chocolate Mousse. The floral centerpieces were given to the lucky woman at each table whose birthday was closest to the date of the meeting. Hostesses for the day were Cathy (Mrs. Richard) Stump, Janice (Mrs. Frank) Kubica and Patty (Mrs. James H.) Chandler.

SAUSAGE ROUNDS
4 pounds hot or mild sausage
Large box Velveeta cheese
Tabasco — several shakes
Oregano — several dashes
2 packages cocktail rye rounds (available in the bakery section of grocery stores)

Crumble sausage and cook until brown, drain. Add cheese and melt slowly. Add seasonings. Remove from fire. Spread bread rounds and bake at 350 degrees for seven to ten minutes or until bubbly. Put into plastic freezer bags and freeze. Reheat at 350 degrees for 8 to 10 minutes or in microwave on high for one minute per round.

Variations:
Add dollop of sour cream and chopped jalapenos.

Top each round with thinly sliced tomato and broil lightly. Serve with pasta or green salad and light lunch.

MICROWAVE FANTASY FUDGE
12 ounce package of semi-sweet chocolate morsels
14 ounce can sweetened condensed milk
1 ¼ cups walnuts, chopped
1 teaspoon vanilla abstract

In glass bowl combine semi-sweet chocolate morsels and sweetened condensed milk. Microwave on high for three minutes. Stir until morsels melt and mixture is smooth. Stir in walnuts and vanilla extract. Spread into foil lined 8-inch square pan. Chill until firm (about 2 hours). Cut into squares and wrap in plastic wrap, tie with bow.

TORTILLA BASKET
Cut corn tortillas in the shape of flowers. Cut a small hole in the center. Let dry overnight. Leave a toothpick in the hole to prevent it closing up during drying. By morning, the petals will have curved into a natural shape.

Put a styrofoam square in a basket. Cover with Spanish moss.Cut stems from floral wire, insert into tortilla flowers and mount in styrofoam base. Add chiles and other items as desired. Tortillas will be brittle and can be sprayed with a plastic spray to avoid breakage.

SIMPLE SALT DOUGH
4 cups flour
1 cup salt
1⅛ cups water

Mix ingredients; knead for a few minutes until smooth. Use immediately or store in refrigerator or in plastic wrap.

Shape dough into desired designs. Bake small items at 250 degrees for 6 hours or until dry. Bake large items at 350 degrees for one hour. When cool paint with tempera or acrylic paints if desired.
(Can be used to make bread baskets, and personalized ornaments).

CANDIED ORANGE PEEL
(yields one pound)
4 navel oranges
2½ cups sugar
1 cup water
¼ cup light corn syrup

Remove peel from oranges in large pieces. Place in a medium-size saucepan with enough cold water to cover. Bring to a boil. Boil 2 minutes, than drain. Repeat process 3 times, discarding water each time. Scrape excess pulp from peel. Cut into ¼ inch strips.

Heat 2 cups of sugar, water and corn syrup to boiling in a large saucepan. Stir until sugar dissolves. Add peel. Simmer gently until peel is translucent, about 30 minutes. Cool in syrup one hour. Roll, a few pieces at a time, in remaining sugar to coat well. Place in single layer on wire rack to dry for about 8 hours. Store in covered container in a cool, dry place. (A mason jar is great for both storing and giving).

DEAR ABBY

Mother's suprise visits upset family's routine

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My mother-in-law just left after one of her surprise visits, and I am ready to explode. Mummy has no husband and can come and go as she pleases. She lives 20 miles away and we never know when she's coming or how long she'll stay. (Overnight? For the weekend? A week? Two?) It's maddening! Arthur and I work different shifts. We have two children and our free time is limited. I work from 11 p.m. until 7 a.m., so I need to sleep in the morning. Mummy always brings her dog, who barks all morning and ruins my sleep. I've asked her to please not bring him, but she brings him anyway.

Yesterday, Arthur and I spent our only day off together in two weeks entertaining her. We had made other plans, but had to cancel them when she showed up.

How can we tell Mummy to back off without offending her? Arthur is her only child. Lord have mercy on us! We've begged her to please call and let us know when she's coming, but she says, "I'd rather 'surprise' you — that way I'm sure you won't go to any extra trouble."

Abby, can you — or perhaps one of your readers who has had to handle this problem — help me? Arthur says, "Just don't pay any attention to her." But you know that can't be done. — HATES SURPRISES

DEAR HATES: There appears to be a communication gap here big enough to jump a horse through. Sit down with Mummy and stress the inconvenience and unfairness of her surprise visits. If your pleas are ignored, then your husband's solution seems the most practical. Don't change your plans; just go about your business as though she weren't there and spend whatever time you have available with her. The barking dog problem is one Arthur should handle — and firmly! Dogs can be trained to be quiet, you know. And if this one isn't, he should be banished from the premises.

DEAR ABBY: With the holidays just around the corner, many people are wondering what they can give an elderly parent or friend who "has everything." I'd like to share with you a gift I gave my mother.

Mother was a great cook, but her eyesight was failing, and she had a difficult time reading her recipes, so I printed all her favorites with a felt-tip pen in large block letters and put them into a three-ring binder under plastic-covered pages. We all enjoyed her delicious meals until she died at 89.

With a felt-tip pen, I made an alphabetized file of the addresses and phone numbers of all the friends and relatives she wished to correspond with. This, too, I wrote in extra-large letters, and easy-to-read numbers. I included the doctors she saw regularly, utilities, store, emergency numbers, etc.

Mother was a thoughtful, active woman and these small things I did helped her to remain independent and better able to take care of herself. — BETTY JO MINGS, GARDEN GROVE, CALIF.

DEAR BETTY JO: Thank you for an excellent suggestion. Helping an older person to remain independent is one of the greatest gifts one can give; it's also one that money can't buy.

DEAR ABBY: Here's a suggestion for the woman who felt frustrated and helpless because her mother's clothing kept vanishing in the nursing home:

Since your mother is either in bed or in a wheelchair and on view from one angle only, take a great big black indelible marker, and in large letters write her name across the seat of all her clothes — expensive ones and all. I guarantee that your mother's wardrobe will remain intact. — ROBERT TAYLOR, HOUSTON

Emptying gas tank children's talent

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I don't know how they do it, but kids have a sixth sense about how much gas is left in the tank of a car right down to the thimbleful.

It's a gift. The car will roll into the driveway, gasp, thrust forward, die, and the gas gauge will drop like a stone to "E." It's one of the first things young drivers learn how to do.

I have yet to grab my car keys and walk out the door and not hear, "Your car needs gas!" It didn't get to be "my car" until it did.

One time I actually took one of the kids in the car with me and said, "Do you know where Mother is taking you? We're going to a place you have never been before."

"Will there be kids there my own age?" he asked.

"Not many, but mingle and make friends."

As we pulled in front of the pumps he said, "What is this place?"

"It's a gas station. You take a nozzle from the pump, put it into the gas tank, and the fuel converts to energy and makes the car run."

"Are you serious?" he asked.

"Surely you have had some curiosity as to why they put signs on these that say, "Last stop until freeway.'"

"I thought they were restrooms," he said.

Sooner or later when you share your car with a young driver you will encounter the Do-I-have-to-buy-it-with-my-own-money mentality. Going to the library is your idea. Ergo, you pay for the gas. Going to the store to pick up a loaf of bread for "your" dinner is to your advantage. So, you pay for the gas. Picking up a younger brother or sister at school is saving you time, so you should have thought of these expenditures before you gave in to lust and passion.

It is as if overnight the sweet, innocent child who couldn't say hello in metric becomes a world-class mathematical genius. He knows instinctively that two liters of gas will take him to the game, out for a pizza afterward and roll the car into the garage before it sputters and goes dead, but only if he makes three traffic lights and does not have to idle.

Mentally, he keeps track of every gas transaction, including the time he put $1.50 worth in the tank and the battery went dead. You don't know pressure until you owe your kid $1.50 worth of gas.

In homes all over America wherever teenagers gather the subject comes up, "Where were you and what were you doing when you found out about a gas pump?"

The other day my son was with me when I pulled into a gas station. "Fillerup," I said. He asked, "What did you say?" I repeated the word. "That's a new one," he said.

Sometimes I think about the woman who said instead of kids, she should have raised tomatoes. At least you can eat them.

Phones talk back

Copley News Service

"Stick it in your ear, pal."

You might not say that to someone on the phone, but an experimental phone service in Mississippi would do it for you.

Called "call rejection," it is the grand experiment of South Central Bell telephone company. It lets you keep up to six phone numbers from harassing you after you program the numbers into the phone and record a message.

Meanwhile, Japan's Sony Corp. has designed a "counterattack phone" that harasses harassing callers for you. It automatically records the crank message and repeats it so the caller hears his or her voice over and over and over again.

Because it has a built-in memory, the device stores up to 16 seconds of a crank call and plays it back at the push of a button.

Big sales expected for small electronics

Associated Press

Smaller may be bigger in sales when it comes to electronic gifts this holiday season, according to some manufacturers.

In the kitchen, "half pint" or down-sized microwave ovens are getting the promotion over their larger counterparts.

Televisions and clock radios that mount under kitchen cabinets and thus take up less space are other examples.

"The popularity of down-sized food processors demonstrates that people want to take advantage of the latest food technology, but prefer the convenience of a compact appliance," says Kenneth E. Homa, vice president of marketing, Black & Decker Household Products Group

Stitchery hazardous occupation

Associated Press

You probably don't think of stitchery as a hazardous occupation, but needlecraft can involve harmful tools and materials. Better Homes and Gardens Christmas Ideas magazine offers a few pointers for avoiding mishaps.

For the most part, good work habits are your best protection. Make a point of sweeping and vacuuming your work area often to pick up stray pins. Put away all materials when you're not using them, especially if you're working in a high-traffic area.

Avoid using toxic materials near food preparation areas. To a certain extent, crafts materials such as fabric dyes or paints can cause health problems, depending on individual reactions to chemical fumes. Read the label warnings carefully before you buy new materials; follow all directions, paying special attention to room ventilation and storage of the materials. Also, use great care when working with combustible materials, such as hot wax.

To protect children, assess all your crafts materials for potential hazards. Do you work with thimbles and buttons or other small objects that could be swallowed easily? Do you buy batting and fiberfill in plastic bags, which could suffocate a youngster? Do you have some of the sharp or toxic materials mentioned above? Keep them out of the reach of small children.

You can also help prevent accidents by teaching your children the proper use of crafts equipment. Look for good crafts books for children so they have their own projects to do as you work on yours. You may find that when children learn to knit, for example, they will be less likely to think of the knitting needles as miniature swords.

Also, familiarize your children with the proper way to carry a pair of scissors. Caution them about keeping their fingers out of the way of the moving sewing machine needle. Emphasize the importance of cleaning up when they've finished a project.

Stenciling used to transform walls

Copley News Service

Break the monotony of white walls. Add whimsey and color to your floors or ceiling. Hide your home's architectural flaws — or poke fun at them. Transform your living quarters using a handmade stencil and colorful — or soft-hued — paint.

Send for a free stenciling flyer and learn how to make stencils or your favorite motifs and how to echo those motifs wherever you choose. The two-sided instruction sheet provides a list of supplies and all the information you'll need to stencil walls, floors, ceilings, roller shades, wood, fabric and wallpaper.

To add character and elegance to your surroundings, follow the flyer's suggestions for choosing a design. For example, you might want to pick your favorite tile, quilt, curtain or wallpaper pattern and carry that pattern to doorways and white walls. Create a ceiling design inspired by prints from a children's storybook or find a traditional folk motif to stencil around baseboards or on your kitchen chairs.

Send: A long, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Mail To: Freebies Magazine, Stenciling Flyer, P.O. Box 20283-CP, Santa Barbara, CA 93120.

'Caregivers' becoming more important

By GRACE LIM
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — More and more women are finding themselves going through the process of child-rearing twice in their lifetimes — once with the young, and another time with the old.

There are about 5.2 million older persons with disabilities who need help with day-to-day tasks. About 80 percent of such people are being cared for by wives, daughters and daughters-in-law at home.

Adults who care for other adults are known as "caregivers," and their numbers and importance are growing. Congress has noted this by designating a "National Family Caregivers' Week."

Although caregiving has been around for years, it took dramatic demographic changes to force public and private sectors to take notice, said Cyril Brickfield, executive director of the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP).

"Americans are living longer than ever before," he said Tuesday. "The 85-plus population is the nation's fastest growing age group; 78 percent of them still live in their own or in relatives' homes.

"With advances in medical treatment, older persons are more likely now to survive and be incapacitated after having strokes or heart attacks," Brickfield said. "Whatever their problems, older people turn most frequently to their spouses or adult children when help is needed."

Caring for the elderly is often a long and thankless job, Brickfield said, adding that the job often rests on women who likely would soon need care themselves.

Out of 2.2 million caregivers in America in 1982, 71 percent were women, according to a National Center for Health Services Research study. About one-third of the caregivers were over 65; the average was 57. Almost one-third were at the poverty level and 25 percent rated their own health as only fair or poor.

"It is a tragic irony that the reward many of these women may receive for their years of sacrifice may be their own poverty or neglect," said Marie Gooderham, a member of the AARP board of directors.

Several organizations and individuals who have been pioneers in furthering caregiving were recognized by the AARP Tuesday at a breakfast in Washington.

Travelers Corp., the Hartford, Conn.-based insurance firm, was one of the AARP award recipients. Travelers became involved with the caregiving issue when officials realized that a high percentage of its more than 10,000 full-time employees spent a significant amount of time caring for elderly relatives and friends. The company initiated steps to assist them.

To help employees cope with some of the stress, the company held seminars dealing with caregiving.

"This is not just a woman's issue," McAboy said. "(This) has to be dealt with in a broad-based way by the private sector, the public sector, businesses, government and the individual."

Other AARP award recipients are the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, the Older Women's League, The Public Broadcasting Service and author Jane Heald, former director of the National Support Center for Families of the Aging and author of "Help For Families of the Aging."

Home care recognized

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

This week the nation is celebrating National Home Care Week to recognize and honor the contributions of the home care community to the health care need of Americans throughout the country. Proclaimed by Act of Congress and the President of the United States, National Home Care Week affords the opportunity to focus national attention on the issues and providers of home care.

Led by the recent changes in Medicare laws involving Diagnostic Regulatory Groupings (DRG's), home health care has rapidly become a crucial part in meeting a patient's total health needs. The result of the DRGs has meant that most Medicare Patients as well as patients of all ages are being dismissed from the hospital at a much earlier time than ever before.

Many of the patients have required additional health care in the home setting. Patient care through a combination of hospital and home settings has not only been seen as a cost effective measure, but has also provided additional benefits to the patient.

"Home care is helping my 80-year-old mother maintain her independence and good health by bringing any care she needs right to her doorstep," said one family member.

"It's amazing what they are doing at home now. A friend of mine needs intravenous chemotherapy and is getting it at home," said another.

One mother spoke about her son being born prematurely. "With home care, he got all the professional care he needed and all the love that only comes with being at home with us." As one nurse from the Visiting Nurse Service commented, "It's encouraging to know that our residents are utilizing home care when they know about the options available to them. We want everyone to know that home health care, from the most basic asistance to sophisticated high tech medical treatment, is an essential element of the patient's total care recovery."

Home health care visits are covered visits under Medicare Part A and Part B as well as most private insurance policies. However, as noted in this column over the past several weeks, there are restrictions and limitations to the coverage.

Medicare participants are strongly encouraged to pick up the Mediacare handbook provided by the Social Security Administration. It describes in detail what is covered under both parts of Medicare (hospital insurance and supplemental medical insurance). This booklet should be kept where it is readily available so it can be referred to tas often as necessary.

As the Medicare program is subject to change, you should contact your Social Security office periodically to determine if you have an up-to-date copy. The handbook also provides a comprehensive list of what is not covered by Medicare. The exclusion that affects the greatest number of people is that Medicare does not cover any drugs or medicines you buy yourself or without a doctor's prescription.

Due to the fact many insurance companies are following Medicare's lead in early dismissals from the hospital, adults should check their policies for home care coverages. Knowing that home health care may be utilized by all ages of patients, this review and even possible change of policy may subsequently save you from extensive out of pocket costs if future home care is required. Questions concerning home health care may be directed to the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland, 682-7577.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

FDA approves aspartame usage

CHICAGO (AP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has approved the use of the low-calorie sweetner aspartame in four more food and beverage groups, the NutraSweet Co. says.

The FDA gave the go-ahead for aspartame, marketed under the name NutraSweet, to be used for refrigerated juices in ready-to-drink, concentrated and frozen packages; ready-to-eat frozen desserts on a stick; breath mints; and ready-to-drink teas in can or concentrated form, the company said Tuesday.

"These new categories will give consumers a wider choice of great-tasting products that are nutritious, sugar-free and low in catories," NutraSweet Chairman Robert B. Shapiro told a Chicago news conference.

The company is based in suburban Skokie.

The FDA last week rejected a claim from consumer attorney James S. Turner that aspartame may cause seizures and should be banned from grocery shelves. Turner says he will appeal the agency's ruling with the FDA or through the courts.

Aspartame is formed from two amino acids, materials which make up proteins in the human body. It is used as a tabletop sweetener and as an ingredient in carbonated beverages, breakfast cereals and other foods.

March of Dimes campaigns against low birth weight

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The rate at which infants in New York City suffer from dangerously low birth weight — blamed for nearly 1,000 deaths in 1984 — is about 25 percent above the national average, the city's health commissioner said recently the announcement of an educational program designed to improve prenatal care.

More infants died in the city last year from complications resulting from dangerously low birth weight than people died from drug abuse, suicide or drunk driving, the city's Health Commissioner Stephen Joseph said.

Joseph spoke at a press conference called by the Greater New York March of Dimes to announce a three-year, $3-million campaign to help lower the number of infants born each year weighing too little to survive without high-cost neonatal intensive care and other supports.

The medical complications of low birth weight are estimated to have cost $190 million in 1984, Joseph said. According to 1984 figures, 113,332 babies were born in the city. Nearly 10,000 suffered low birth weight and nearly 1,000 of those babies died — most in the first month of life.

The March of Dimes has prepared television, print and radio public service announcements that link low birth weight to smoking, drinking and a lack of prenatal care.

Death rate falls

DALLAS (AP) — The death rate from coronary heart disease has declined twice as fast in white men as in women and blacks since 1976, a government study has found.

The decline in death rates for blacks and women began to level off in 1976, while deaths in white men continued downward as they had since the mid-1960s, according to Christopher Sempos, an epidemiologist at the National Center for Health Statistics in Washington.

"Nobody knows for sure why, what happened," he said in an interview. Changes in medical care and changes in lifestyle are among the variables that could account for the statistics, he said.

The new disparity between white men and the other groups follows a decade ending in the mid-1970s when heart disease deaths began unexpectedly to decline, Sempos said.

The coronary heart disease death rate for white men fell by an average of more than seven per 100,000 every year until 1984, when it was 211 deaths per 100,000 people. (The figures have been adjusted to allow accurate comparisons following a change in the definition of coronary heart disease, Sempos said.)

One of Sempos' colleagues, Dr. Richard Cooper of Cook County Hospital in Chicago, said the discrepancy could be due to a lack of continued improvement in medical treatments for high blood pressure.

Preliminary evidence now shows that the decline in deaths from strokes has likewise continued in white men but fallen in women and blacks, Sempos said.

There's No Place Like Home

By ALICE A. BERTHELSEN

The comfort, privacy and security of home just can't be beat. Home is where you can be yourself. You don't have to get dressed up, you don't have to create an image. You can just relax. For these and many other reasons, some people are opting to do their business at home.

These at-home businesses provide their owners with everything from convenience to a much-needed second income to time with their families.

Mavis Murphy, Melissa Late, Celia Wilson and Regina Griffin are four Permian Basin residents who have choosen to do business at home. Their reasons are as varied as the businesses they own and although each recognizes certain disadvantages of working at home, each believes the advantages far outweigh them.

Midlander Ms. Murphy was an oil and gas secretary when she began taking art lessons at Midland College eight years ago. "I started painting, actually, as a hobby," she recalled.

Because of her exhibits during the Midland Arts Assembly's "Celebration of the Arts" and the Trinity School's annual "Mayfair," she began to get regular commissions for her paintings. Ms. Murphy eventually gave up her secretarial job to accommodate her painting schedule.

"Starting a business was not possibility for me when I started painting," Ms. Murphy said. "But, when I began receiving invitations to show my work, and started selling my paintings, I learned from fellow artists that I needed a tax number. That led to opening my own business."

YET, AS most new business owners will attest, start-up expenses can be overwhelming, especially when it comes to leasing or buying space.

"When it all began, I couldn't do much more than buy an easel and put it in a little corner of the guestroom. Now, that same room is a studio with a daybed, so, unfortunately, we don't have many guests anymore," the artist says with a chuckle.

A native of Great Britain, Ms. Murphy says that, in the beginning, she found working at home had several disadvantages. "There's always the doorbell or the telephone or something to distract you, like laundry that you've allowed to pile up and your conscious won't let you forget. But, because of the growth in my business, I find that I have learned to set aside each afternoon for painting — after my errands and housework are done."

The artist said the advantages to running a home business far outweigh the disadvantages. "If I wake up and want to paint something specific, I don't have to get dressed up and go off to a studio somewhere. By then, you can often lose the inspiration.

"I guess the big change from hobby to business is that my attitude about subjects to paint is different now. Because I'm in the marketplace, I am more aware of what subjects are most popular," Ms. Murphy said, "and I try to paint a number of small paintings so my prices will fit every budget."

AN OTHER convenience of working at home Ms. Murphy said is being able to merely close the door to her studio/guestroom for the day. "I found you just can't paint on the kitchen table because you have to clean up the mess before you can start dinner."

Odessan Melissa Late and Midlander Celia Wilson not only use their homes for business, but ask others to open their homes for business too. When the two started talking seriously about launching a joint venture, their families were the primary consideration.

"Both of us have small children," Ms. Wilson said, "and we didn't want to do something that would take us away from home on an eight-to-five basis."

Because of Ms. Wilson's modeling experience and a shared interest in fashion, the two housewives began a seasonal apparel business called "Back Rhoads." The idea behind it was to " ... test the market and to give us time with our children, too."

Their husbands offered a short course in business, then Ms. Wilson and Ms. Late traveled to Dallas Apparel Mart. They spent several days talking to fashion representatives and selecting their first line of fashions.

"We wanted something unique," Ms. Wilson said, "and decided on a group of casual activewear that would appeal to every age group."

"We were looking for something that was different from fashion available in Midland/Odessa, something that you shop for but can never find," explained Ms. Late.

ONCE STYLES selections were made, the two developed a plan of action — scheduling fashion parties in homes of Midland/Odessa residents, as well as homes in Austin, Dallas, San Angelo, Abilene and Albuquerque, N.M.

"Then, we called friends in those cities and asked them to host the parties and to send guest lists. Between the two of us and help from our friends we've developed a good clientele," Ms. Wilson said.

After two shows in the Permian Basin, "Back Rhoads" boasted sales of 95 percent to those attending, with each sale averaging over $200. "At least we know we're on the right track," Late says.

The partners added that the help from their husbands has been invaluable. "They're really excited about what we're doing, and they've given us pointers — Word (Wilson) with computer work and Steve (Late) with retailing techniques," Ms. Late said. "Most of all, we're enjoying the business and still have time to keep the family on a regular schedule."

And while at-home businesses help some keep a regular schedule, others find it takes extra hours of every day to maintain their at-home money-makers.

"Because of my budget, I couldn't afford to work any place but at home and I found I could fill orders by fitting my business hours around by job and my classes at Odessa College," said Regina Griffin, an eletronics technician for Texas Instruments. "That sometimes means working into the wee hours of the morning."

Ms. Griffin said she had always been interested in graphics, so when she bought her IBM computer, she began experimenting with type styles (fonts) and programming original logo designs. Through word-of mouth, she soon realized her computerized graphics could supplement her income as a single parent.

"I started out doing banners and signs, and making logos for non-profit organizations," said Ms. Griffin, now owner of Griffin's Graphics, a home-based business specializing in creating personalized invitations, banners, signs or anything requiring graphic illustrations.

MS. GRIFFIN markets her work through Odessa's Party Express and takes individual orders.

Griffin said in the beginning, she averaged about one order a week. "Now, I'm getting five or six orders a day."

While the bulk of her work consists of party invitations and banners for special events, she has received some unusual requests.

"One banner I made was for a man celebrating his 90th birthday that read 'Tot Hoffleson, You're the Greatest." And, the graphic artist says she gets a lot of orders for birthday greeting, complete with skull and crossbones, that read, "Lordy, Lordy, Look Who's Forty!"

These at-home business owner represent only a small percentage of people who actually own and operate from there domestic quarters. Although they have varied opinions of what the advantages and disadvantages are, they all seem to agree about one thing — there's no place like home.

'Interpersonal boredom' studies reveal reasons some persons boring

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe complains about his life when he's not rattling on about some esoteric thing, asks a lot of questions and mumbles "uh-huh" a lot when you talk.

Jack keeps calling things "far out," tells you his feelings and just tries too hard to be nice.

Who is more boring?

New studies suggest it's Joe.

The research is among the first in "interpersonal boredom," a line of study that could lead to help for "chronically and excessively boring persons," researchers wrote in the November issue of the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology.

"We're all boring sometimes and we're all interesting sometimes (but) some people are more boring than others," said Mark Leary, assistant psychology professor at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., who wrote the report with three students.

Harry Reis, psychology professor at the University of Rochester in New York, called the work "a first step in a whole new direction that we need to know more about."

The experiments were based on a survey of undergraduate students and analyses of brief conversations between undergraduates who had just met. More work will be needed to see if the findings apply to other kinds of people and situations as well, Leary said.

In one experiment, 42 students suggested a total of 210 things other people do that bore them, which researchers distilled into 43 themes for a second survey of 297 students.

That survey found that the most boring behaviors were banality, such as talking about trivial or superficial things or showing interest in only one topic, and "negative egocentrism," which essentially meant complaining about oneself and showing disinterest in others.

The least objectionable behaviors were "boring ingratiation," which meant trying to be funny and nice to impress others, and a mixture of distracting behaviors, such as going off on conversational tangents or overusing small talk or slang.

An example of slang is, "Hey wow, man, this was far out, it was too cool," Leary said in a telephone interview. "It gets a little old."

A second study focused on five-minute conversations between 52 pairs of strangers. Transcripts were reviewed by 12 undergraduates who rated a randomly chosen person in each conversation for "boringness." That person's conversation was separately studied for grammatical form and communicative intent, and the results compared to his "boringness index."

The study found that more boring people tended to talk less. In addition, their conversation tended to have higher proportions of questions and of simple acknowledgements.

Editor of 'Connoisseur' predicts boom in art forgeries

Associated Press

The former head of New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art predicts a boom in art forgeries, with fakes ranging from early-Christian silver to imitations of Thomas Hart Benton.

Thomas Hoving, now editor of Connoisseur magazine, wrote in its November issue that he believed a lot of fakes were suddenly appearing on the market — something that happens in cycles every 10 years or so.

While a new boom in art fakes seems underway, Hoving wrote that forgeries are always common in the art world.

"In the 16 years I worked at the Metropolitan Museum of Art," he wrote, "I was responsible for collecting some 25,000 works and must have seen 100,000 more. Fully 60 percent of what I examined was not what it was supposed to be."

Hoving said recently he had heard about a new silver factory in Rhodes currently making "early Christian and Sassanian" silver. An informant has hinted that a gold treasure of the Scythians will shortly make its way to the market from "a private collection from behind the Iron Curtain, where it has been since the days of Peter the Great."

"The other day I roared with laughter at a pair of gigantesque 'Hellenistic' pieces," Hoving said, "that looked like a pastiche of Rene Magritte and the macabre cartoonist Gary Larson. The modernists, too, are busy as spiders. Thomas Hart Benton's principal forger is continuing to daub along."

Hoving added that crafty Italian stone carvers might have received a setback when Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos were ousted from the Philippines, but they are "stockpiling their 'Renaissance' wares, waiting for another art-loving totalitarian leader to come along."

"One of my favorites was silver plate three feet in diameter made, it said, 'possibly for the great early Christian emperor Theodosius.' The thing depicted Adam and Eve. Great stuff! The faker's only mistake was in having supplied fig leaves, which do not appear in art before the 15th or 16th century."

Hoving did not find all fakes hilarious — sometimes he was fooled, he said. What seemed like a superb 15th-century painting showing Christ bound to a column, was bought by the Met for close to $75,000. But what appeared to be a complex network of cracks on the surface turned out to be black paint brushed on with a single hair. The museum had to swallow the loss.

Another time, just after Hoving became associate curator of the Cloisters, the Metropolitan's medieval section, he bought a German late-Gothic wood-painted Madonna and Child for $56,000 — that turned out to be fake.

Hoving said the two questions he was most commonly asked about art forgeries were: Can a fake remain undetected forever? And, if a forgery can fool everyone, why isn't it as valid as the work it pretends to be?

Hoving's answer to the first question is that almost every art fake eventually will be detected.

"As for fakes being as good as the real thing," Hoving wrote, "I can only say that art collecting is a love affair, and when you find out your lover has been deliberately lying to you for years, it's all over."

"Surely it's time for another forgery exhibition," Hoving wrote. "But what art museum in America these days would have the courage to put one on?"

Acupuncture 'intrigues' experts; Effectiveness doubted

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Acupuncture, which involves stimulation of various parts of the body with needles or finger pressure, was developed in China more than 2,000 years ago and is still widely used there for both the treatment of disease and alleviation of pain.

Western interest in the technique surged over the last two decades as China opened its doors to outsiders, but the effectiveness of acupuncture remains in dispute among medical experts.

According to traditional Chinese theory, acupuncture's stimuli influence the flow of "vital energy" through the body.

Western scientists reject that explanation, but some, intrigued by the apparent effects of acupuncture on pain or mood, have tried to incorporate it into modern medical practice. Often they are not quite sure how it works.

Some clinics have used acupuncture to fight chronic pain or the agonies of withdrawal from addiction to heroin, alcohol and, most recently, cocaine.

Dr. Herbert Kleber of Yale University, an authority on addiction treatment who does not use the technique in his own program, said acupuncture "does produce some real effects."

Studies have shown that needles placed in the ear and carrying a mild electrical current can trigger the release in the brain of endorphins, mood-enhancing chemicals sometimes called "natural opiates."

Used in this manner, acupuncture has a generalized effect against malaise, not a specific counteraction against cocaine or heroin.

Studies have found that acupuncture provides temporary relief to patients undergoing withdrawal from heroin, but the problem, Kleber said, is that the effect is brief. Presumably, he said, the same benefits and problems would arise in treatment of cocaine addicts.

Kleber said that according to his understanding of the data, the treatment would have to take place more than once a day to make a significant difference. He noted that drugs were available that work better for helping heroin and cocaine addicts through withdrawal.

Less frequent use of acupuncture, as is common in most programs that use the technique, might provide a useful psychological crutch to some.

Experts caution that getting through the discomfort of withdrawal is only the first step in breaking a drug addiction.

Smoking less can mean inhaling more

Associated Press

Smokers who cut back on doctors' orders may compensate by smoking more intensely, tripling the tar and nicotine they inhale, a study has found.

A co-author of the study, directed by Dr. Neal L. Benowitz of San Francisco General Hospital Medical Center, said, "The best thing to do is quit entirely."

Holiday season difficult time for eating disorder sufferers

NEW YORK (UPI) — When holiday meals are finished and the dessert plates stacked, eating disorder specialists say most people will sit back and contend with a variety of emotions elicited by food.

"Holidays and food are solidly linked," said Dr. Timothy Walsh, a psychiatrist who treats anorexics at the New York State Psychiatric Institute. "It's a tough time for people who have problems with food, and their perception of food."

For the anorexic or bulimic, holidays can be perceived as a dangerous threat to their need to control their bodies. For chronic overeaters, festive meals are an excuse to indulge.

And for the multitudes who doctors say believe they are overweight when they are not, there will be feelings of guilt.

"Most people feel a little guilt when they push back from a table after eating a very large meal, that feeling of 'Oh, I won't eat again for the rest of the week,'" said Charles A. Murkofsky, medical director of the eating disorders clinic at Gracie Square Hospital in New York.

"But that guilt feeling should dissipate by morning," he said. "For people with eating disorders, guilt feelings become so distorted they lose all perspective."

BUT DOCTORS said the holidays are also an excellent opportunity to discover eating disorders, especially in young adults who return home from school on vacation breaks.

Walsh said the parents of many of his patients say they first noticed something was wrong when their children refused to participate in festive family meals or were discovered purging food they had eaten.

Doctors said it is not unusual for anorexia, or self-starvation, to develop at college, especially in young women who are critical of their bodies and feel a need to have control over their lives.

"Anorexics will typically continue their strict regimen during the holidays, although they may try to hide it," Murkofsky said. "They will sit at the table and pick, or hide food under a napkin, but they will absolutely not eat it."

Doctors said it is easier to detect anorexics than bulimics, people who eat either normally or excessively and then force themselves to throw up when the meal is done.

"Likely there will be more subtle signs," Murkofsky said. "A dash to the bathroom, swollen glands or complaints of sore throats."

Doctors said eating disorders are compounded by stress that usually surfaces in even the most genial families during holiday times.

"Young people home from school, or home after being out on their own, may feel a need to establish independence while their parents are set in certain parent-child relationships," Walsh said. "This all contributes to the emotions people with eating disorders have toward food."

EVEN PEOPLE without eating disorders may suffer feelings of guilt over the holidays, doctors said.

"Holidays revolve around a feasting aspect," Murkofsky said. "It's become a normal thing to overeat."

Walsh said it is not unusual for some people, especially women, to diet for weeks before a holiday, then indulge in eating more food than they would normally.

This break in normal eating patterns is not necessarily good for the body or for the general well being of people who harbor a lot of emotions about food, he said.

"It would be great if the emphasis at holidays would be on variety rather than quantity, if people ate the same amount as they usually do but ate things they usually don't have," he said. "The food aspect doesn't have to be dropped, just altered."

Mail-order furniture catching on

Associated Press

The ads promise brand name furniture at big discounts. All you have to do is pick up the telephone, dial an 800 number and give the operator the style number of the furniture you want.

Though there are no figures to prove it, authorities say that many thousands of American are taking those offers in the belief that they will save money. With so many satisfied customers, it must be a good idea, mustn't it? The answer, however, is not always.

"I don't recommend it for all types of customer. If you need design service or fast delivery, it's not a good idea," says Edgar Broyhill, a furniture-by-mail merchant himself.

Despite the caveats, buying furniture by mail has apparently caught the fancy of the public. Indications are that consumers can save at least 10 percent to 20 percent off rental prices.

This is possible because mail order retailers have lower costs and can pass those savings on to their customers. They may, for example, have no store or a small store in a town with low overhead. They may do little advertising and they don't have to maintain large staffs or a warehouse crammed with expensive furniture, explains Nancy High, consumer affairs specialist for the American Furniture Manufacturers Association.

As in other areas of life, she adds, there is a trade-off. What you give up includes: decorating service; a chance to see the furniture "in the flesh" before buying; a local dealer who will handle the headaches, making sure the furniture is delivered and placed where you want it, and who will be there if something goes wrong.

Potential customers of long distance furniture retailers need to ask lots of questions before they send in their money, according to Miss High. She says it can be aggravating to deal at long distance with a product as cumbersome as furniture. So even though there is a certain cachet in buying your furniture from North Carolina (where most of the dealers are clustered), you could be better off buying from your local retailer.

To be sure that furniture by mail is right for you, she suggests you ask the following questions before placing your order:

- What happens if the furniture arrives damaged?
- Is delivery included in the price? (It is usually not included and adds from 4 to 10 percent to the cost.)
- What type of carrier is used? Does the carrier deliver the furniture to the home or curb? Is it placed where it will be used and unpacked?
- How long a wait is there? If the date is not met, can the order be canceled with full refund?
- How can a sample be seen, especially if there is a choice of fabric or finish?
- How much of a deposit is required and when does the balance have to be paid?
- If service should be needed later on, is any available?

Broyhill answered these questions by noting his firm will try to have damaged pieces repaired in the customer's home. "If that is not possible, we pick the piece up and take it to our service department in Clemmons (N.C.) for repair or we order a substitute from the manufacturer."

Broyhill added that he uses independent moving van lines to deliver furniture, which arrives blanket wrapped and is placed where the customer wants it.

Delivery charges vary depending on the size of the order and location of the customer's home. On average, delivery charges amount to 7 percent of the cost of the furniture. Customers can cancel (though few do so) if orders are not delivered when promised, approximately 10 weeks after a deposit of 50 percent has been received.

Broyhill, whose business is known as Edgar B Furniture Plantation, says the customer is asked for the final 50 percent when the furniture has been received at his warehouse. "We consolidate everything ordered from several manufacturers and ship at one time."

He contends that customers realize savings of 10 percent to 20 percent over prices in other stores, a sizeable amount on a large order, but relatively minimal on small orders.

Edgar B has several devices to help customers. A $12 catalog pictures the furniture and "if they need to see a finish or a fabric we will send them a sample or a swatch." He has recently started his own upholstery line.

Broyhill is a grandson of the founder of Broyhill Furniture, one of the nation's largest manufacturers.

'Chapter Two'

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"I think it's one of Neil Simon's best comedies primarily because, although all the comic elements are there, it has more depth of character. It's not quite as fluffy as most of his. I think one of the reason for this increased depth is the fact that the subject matter is autobiographical. Shortly after his first wife died, he met Marsha Mason, and this is the story of their courtship and what both of them were going through when they met and how they got together."

— Sharllynn Shaw
director of "Chapter Two"

Lights dim. Curtain rises. And, from the stage can be heard the following words: "OK, Leo, oh brother of mine, I'm back...Chapter Two in the life of George Schneider. Where...do I begin?"

Thus, Neil Simon in his George Schneider disguise weaves the story of his second-time-around love affair and marriage to Marsha Mason in his comedy hit "Chapter Two." The Midland Community Theatre production opens Friday in the Davis Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., and will run through Dec. 20.

"Neil Simon reaffirms his mastery of the comic phone conversation in Chapter Two," says director Sharyllynn Shaw. "For example, George and Jennie probably wouldn't have met, if it hadn't been for the phone."

Schneider's first love and wife has recently died when the play begins. He is sorting out his life and trying to put it together again when Leo secretly sets him up to make a phone call to Jennie. This coincidental call, which neither one of them sets up, is the beginning of their falling in love.

"I think it's one of Neil Simon's best comedies primarily because, although all the comic elements are there, it has more depth of character," says Ms. Shaw. "It's not quite as fluffy as most of his. I think one of the reason for this increased depth is the fact that the subject matter is autobiographical. Shortly after his first wife died, he met Marsha Mason, and this is the story of their courtship and what both of them were going through when they met and how they got together.

"Most of Simon's plays are autobiographical, but this was written closer to the time it happened than most of the others; the others are more reflective. This one's a little closer to home. It talks about the difficulty, especially in the Simon character, of letting go of past happiness to claim new happiness."

Ms. Shaw, who spends most of her time working as MCT's choreographer and dance teacher, emphasizes that "Chapter Two" is "definitely not a heavy play; it's a very funny play. But then, most of the best comedies deal with things that concern us, or we wouldn't care to laugh at them."

Since the production opened on Broadway Dec. 4, 1977, it has been made into a "very popular movie," by the same name, starring Marsha Mason and James Caan.

"Marsha Mason got to play herself (Jennie)," Miss Shaw says. "The supporting cast is quite wonderful, too — Valerie Harper and Joseph Bologna.

"The screen play stayed fairly close to the original play, but of course there were some differences, there always are."

The movie has a different setting for different scenes. The play takes place in two apartment living rooms. In the movie, Miss Shaw says, George takes Jennie to the same place he'd taken his first wife for their honeymoon, and, in the play, he doesn't take her anywhere close to the place he spent his first honeymoon.

"But the essential facts all remain the same," she says. "If you know the movie, then the basic story is still the same."

Starring in the MCT production are John Bourke as George Schneider, Martha Manulik as Jennie Malone, Jerry Green as George's brother Leo and Jane Burgess plays Jennie's best friend Faye.

"We're in real good shape at this point," says Ms. Shaw. "I think its going to be an excellent production. The cast — they're all wonderful, and they all have a good feel for a Simon comedy."

Simon is, Ms. Shaw says, "very much a native New Yorker, which means that all of his comedy has a certain rhythm to it. One of the reasons why all of his most successful comedies have some authentic element to them is because he's writing about where he's from. Even when he wrote 'California Suite' he was still dealing with primarily people who are from New York. Without that New Yorkese, his comedies do not work as well."

Ms. Shaw cites "Fools" as an example of a Simon comedy without references to his New York heritage.

"In 'Fools,' he moved out of his milieu. It's funny, but more of a slapstick humor than word humor. And, slapstick is fun, but I'd prefer to have my brain or my mind titlitated."

MCT's production staff includes Richard Kowalski, stage manager; Eric Thunem, assistant stage manager; David Layman, set design; Jon Clark, technical director and lighting designer; C. Elizabeth Lee, assistant technical director; Mae Dawson, costumes; and Jim Sosa, technical intern.

Leo (Jerry Green) and Faye (Jane Burgess), above, are caught embracing by Faye's best friend, Jennie (Martha Manulik) in this scene from MCT's upcoming production of Neil Simon's "Chapter Two." Snuggled on the sofa, George (John Bourke) and Jennie, top right, decide that "although we've only known each other for two weeks, it feels like we've known each other for years." "If you won't date her, I will," Leo tells brother George, who finds this an interesting threat since Leo is married. These rehearsal photographs were shot in Bourke's living room.

GEORGIA TEMPLE

Workshop on love, relationships worth every penny

The flyer reads: "The best Christmas present you can give someone you care about." When it comes to words like best, never, always and worst, I'm cautious. I usually qualify those four words — one of the best, one of the worst, have never to this point in time, or almost always.

However, rules have exceptions. And, this exception changed my life.

Several unsuccessful relationships, including a 13-year marriage, brought me to the conclusion three years ago that perhaps I didn't know much about intimacy. After all, a course on it wasn't offered in school.

When I asked a few co-workers, Ed Todd had a quick reply, "My definition of intimacy is sex." Hummm.

Webster's said, "the state of being intimate." Intimate — "intrinsic, essential; belonging to or characterizing one's deepest nature."

"Essential" caught my attention. I also noticed that directly below intimate was the word intimidate — "to make timid or fearful: frighten; especially: to compel or deter by or as if by threats." Ah, ha! Now, that was a word with which I could identify. Intimacy sounded so-o-o personal.

Nonetheless, three years ago this October I took the plunge and attended my first workshop under Dr. Pat Ponder-Love. Before then, I thought there were no answers to why questions. Now, I know better. You know the ones I'm talking about — Why did I ...?" "Why did he...?"

Cost — $50-per-person (It's being offered Dec. 13 for $50 for two or $35 for one). It was hard for me to part with that amount of money, especially since I was spending it on myself.

Then, I arrived late, had a raging headache, and they took a break just as I eased into a chair. Frustrating.

However, two hours into the workshop, several things had happened in my life. My headache was gone, and I hadn't taken anything for it. Most importantly, my life made sense for the first time. I had received my money's worth and wondered what came next. I wasn't disappointed.

Based on Dr. Harville Hendrix's Imago Therapy, the information presented covered love relationships, friendships, work and spiritual life. The tools I received made a difference in all areas of my life.

Until then, I didn't realize how much of my life was spent in miscommunication. Have you ever been in this spot — "You don't understand that you misunderstood what I said, and now you're trying to make a federal case out of what you thought I said that I didn't say." Then you explain, and matters get worse? I have.

Today, I hear myself and others more clearly. I have more lucidity.

I've lost count of the times I've taken her workshop, but not of the valuable information I've received. When she comes back Dec. 13 for a repeat performance at Midland Center, I'll be there. For more information on the Intimacy/Communication Skills Workshop, which runs that Saturday from 9 a.m. to 6:30 p.m., call 686-7923.

It is the best Christmas present you can give someone you love, especially when you include yourself.

The workshop certainly would have made a difference for Fonsia Dorsey and Weller Martin, the stars of D.L. Coburn's Pulitzer Prize winning comedy "The Gin Game," onstage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. The action starts in Mabee Theatre II when Fonsia, a new arrival at a home for the elderly, accepts Weller's invitation to play gin.

The play deals with how the elderly are treated in U.S. society and interpersonal relationships through focusing on these two characters. This dark comedy has funny lines, is witty and sad, and contains profanity.

Staged at The American Theater Arts in Hollywood in September of 1976, the play opened on Broadway Oct. 6, 1977. In 1977, it won the Pulitzer and, in 1978, Best Play Citation.

Starring in MCT's production are Corby Considine and Gloria Stevenson. During dress rehearsal, Considine was working himself into being the irascible, cantankerous rebel, and Ms. Stevenson was moving toward the somewhat withdrawn, shy, judgmental widow.

Both do an admirable job of handling certain difficulties — playing characters older than themselves, playing gin almost continually during their time onstage and being onstage most of the two acts.

Amid the humor is the pathos. He has two sons and a daughter. She has a son. Neither has visitors.

He teaches her to play, then deals every hand. She wins. He explodes.

The rules Weller plays by in cards and life can almost be summed up in his statement: "The only sin in playing cards is drawing to an inside straight, and that's not a sin if you do it." She thinks she's different. She isn't. Both are compulsive, stubborn people, who only hear the distorted sound of their own voice.

Fear drives them. The gin they play turns into a nerve-shattering, high-stakes game. Only the audience wins.

Imago Therapy workshop offered

Dr. Pat Ponder-Love is presenting a workshop on "Imago Therapy and Intimacy/Communication Skills" from 9 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Dec. 13 at Midland Center, Wall Avenue and Main Street.

"This workshop is especially appropriate for those who want their holiday season to be rich in terms of personal relationships and full of the joy that comes from relating to those they love," Ms. Ponder-Love says.

The workshop covers all aspects of interpersonal life — love, friendship, family, business, social and spiritual.

"The workshop helps to improve and enrich communication skills in personal as well as business relationships, it provides information which increases the individual's understanding of self and others, it answers questions concerning unmet needs and recurring frustrations and provides tools which help the individual change his or her negative inner dialogue with self," she says.

A marriage and family therapist in private practice in Austin, Ms. Ponder-Love is a clinical member and approved supervisor of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy. Formerly associate professor and director of the Marriage and Family Program at East Texas State University, she is Chair of the American Association for Counseling and Development Committee on Children, Youth and Families.

She is widely published in professional publications and previously has presented workshops on Dr. Harville Hendrix's Imago Relationship Therapy under the title of "Love or Illusion" in the Midland-Odessa area.

Cost of the workshop, which includes a workbook, is $35 per individual or $50 for two. Lunch break is at 12:30 p.m., and the workshop will include hourly breaks. Registration is due by Dec. 10. For more information or to register call 686-7923 during business hours.

Presidential Museum planning holiday program

The Presidential Museum will host a special holiday program for children Dec. 6, 1-3:30 p.m. Admission is with a can of food which will be donated to the Permian Basin Food Bank, Inc.

"The festivities were planned specifically to give something back to the community that has so generously supported the museum," explained Anne Sherburn, director of the Presidential Museum. "Not only are we providing an afternoon of fun for children of all ages, but just as importantly the museum is helping to gather food for the needy."

The event begins at 1 p.m. with the musical production, "Wiggle Worm Surprise." Performed by first and second grade actors and actresses from Milam Magnet Elementary School, this Christmas play tells the adventures of the Wiggle Worm who saves the lives of many trees in a forest doomed for destruction. The Milam Minstrels will also perform during the play.

A Christmas carol sing-along and a chance for each child to make three Christmas ornaments will follow the play.

Children will also have an opportunity to visit with Santa. Refreshments will be served.

An animated film, "The First Christmas Snow," will conclude the afternoon's activities. It depicts the life of a young shepherd boy who learns the meaning of Christmas when he sees snow for the first time.

The public is invited. Groups are welcome, but are asked to call and register at the Museum to ensure the availability of enough supplies.

The Food Bank requests that no homemade foods or fresh produce are brought.

For further information, contact the museum at 332-7123.

Rosanna Arquette says mediocre films 'pay the rent'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rosanna Arquette's advises aspiring actresses not to worry about being in mediocre movies: "Don't starve. Take it. What have you got to lose?"

It hasn't hurt her career. In the beginning, she was in such fare as "Zuma Beach" and "Having Babies, Part 2," which as she said, "paid the rent."

Then filmmakers bwgan placing her in such movies as "Desperately Seeking Susan," "After Hours," "The Executioner's Song" or "Nobody's Fool."

It's the year 1327. An old man begins narrating his memoirs. The scene opens with snow-spotted hillsides and horses hooves crunching in the crusty ice of a ravine. Up ahead, a massive tower (the abbey) seems overbearing and oppressive time. It is the dead of winter and the bitter cold seems to waft right off the screen.

We are in the wondrously haunting, brooding world of Academy-award winning director Jean Jacques Annuad as he attempts to bring Umberto Eco's "The Name of the Rose" to the screen.

The novel, first published in Italy in 1980 and the U.S. in 1983, has sold four million copies worldwide, has been translated into 24 languages and has won numerous literary awards.

Although I didn't read the book, I was immediately caught up in the spellbinding tale of death and intrigue set in the confines of 14th century cloister. Annaud, who's last film was "Quest for Fire," has a real knack for bringing out the most primitive aspects of history, oftentimes uncomfortable to watch in its excruciating realism.

"The Name of the Rose" is intellectual fare with fine acting. Sean Connery plays Brother William of Baskerville, a sleuthing monk, just one step ahead of the Inquisitor, Bernardo Gui (F. Murray Abraham). Connery makes a fine detective team along with his young novice, Adso Melk (16-year-old Christian Slater). However, Abraham's powerful acting ability, demonstrated in "Amadeus," is never allowed to develop here.

William of Baskerville arrives at the abbey with a delegation of clerics, the wealthy Dominicans and the impoverished Franciscans, to decide one issue: Did Christ — or did he not — own the clothes that he wore?

William, however, is immersed in more immediate problems when he discovers a fresh grave as soon as he arrives. He deduces that a series of murders that happen soon after have worldly — not otherworldly — causes.

Connery, as William, brings a dignified strength and a sense of humor to his role. Slater is refreshing as the novice who loses his innocence. But the background of haunting medieval images — a live pig being gutted, a pasty, obese monk flagellating himself and a hunchback muttering about the prophocies of the apocolypse — adds to the unrest, so that the period itself almost becomes a character.

The finely photographed period piece is entertaining as it moves through ecclesiastical corruption.

Slater falls in love with a peasant girl who is declared a witch and ordered to be burned at the stake by the Inquisitor. William tries to get into a labyrinth behind a well-guarded library door and the body count keeps mounting.

The only flaw in the film was the pacing, which occassionally slowed downed, dulling the urgency of the situation. Just the same, "The Name of the Rose" is a good, provocative movie.

"The Name of the Rose," rated R, for violence and sex, (a night of passion is depicted) is playing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Brutal '52 Pick-Up' true to its genre

As brutal as the crimes it depicts, "52 Pick-Up" stars Roy Scheider as Harry Mitchell, the philandering husband, whose affair with a young woman plunges him into a taut drama of blackmail.

The tough guy image of Mitchell is not an unfamiliar role to Scheider, who was nominated for two Academy Awards for his performances in "The French Connection" and "All That Jazz." He also starred in such tension packed films as "Klute," "Marathon Man," "Blue Thunder," and the thriller, "Jaws."

"52 Pick-Up," a brutally effective adaptation of the crime novel by Elmore Leonard, is definitely not for the squeamish or easily offened.

John Glover, as the creep with morals lower than a snake's belly, vies with Dennis Hopper ("Blue Velvet") for the vilest villain of the year award. Which one of these guys would you least like to take home to dinner? Hopper wins, but Glover's character comes in a close second.

Glover, who received an Emmy nomination for his sensitive portrayal of a dying AIDS patient in the critically acclaimed NBC-TV movie "An Early Frost," plays the ruthless Alan Raimy.

As Mitchell's blackmailer, Glover is frightening, as he alternates between being charming and diabolical. He's the kind of guy that is not above forcing people at gunpoint to watch "snuff" films (films of people actually being murdered). He takes even greater delight in being the cameraman and filming these events himself.

Ann-Margret portrays Barbara Mitchell, whose political career is threatened by her husband's philandering. She seems miscast for this part. Ann-Margret as a politician is just too much of stretch.

Clarence Williams III plays the sociopathic assistant of Glover. The role is a real departure for Williams, last seen as Prince's father in "Purple Rain," and is even farther away from his days as a hip cop on the "Mod Squad."

One of the most notable performances is given by Robert Trebor as the nuerotic, babbling Leo.

Vanity, as Doreen, proves once again that her greatest contribution to the screen is what she is not wearing. The always-scantily-clad Vanity comes off as one-dimensional. She should stick to singing.

The movie centers on Mitchell's refusal to buckle in to the demands of Glover without a fight. "52 Pick-Up" is a hard, fast ride to the end, but not without a few detours through sexual situations and seamy parties.

There is a lot of violence and action, which is generally expected in this genre. Like the game of the same name, 52 cards are thrown on the floor and Mitchell is left to pick up the cards — or rather pieces — of his life. We know the end before it comes, making it anticlimatical. "52 Pick-Up" is well-directed and action-packed; it just doesn't break any new ground.

"52 Pick-Up," rated R for heavy sex, nudity, language, violence and drug use, is playing at the UA Cuthbert Cinemas.

Strong series give NBC 'sweeps' win

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — NBC's strong regular programming has given the network not only its ninth straight weekly ratings win, but an apparent November "sweeps" victory as well.

Since 1963, when CBS won every week of the season, the last time a network racked up a nine-week winning streak was when ABC did it nine years ago.

Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects, makes it sound easy: "We're very strong on Monday, we're very, very strong on Thursday, we're strong on Saturday and we're competitive on Wednesday, in fact, we're second on Wednesday and Sunday — and that's how you do it."

Jaffe also said Tuesday that the network had won its seventh sweeps in a row, probably by about two points over CBS when the final numbers are in later this week.

The month-long ratings battle four times a year determines advertising revenues for local stations and provides prestige for the winning network.

The sweeps period ends this week.

According to A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings released Tuesday, NBC won last week with a prime-time average of 18. CBS was second with a rating of 16.8, and ABC was third with 14.2. That gives NBC a season-to-date average of 18.8, CBS a 16 and ABC 14.5.

The rating is a percentage of the estimated 87.4 million households with television.

CBS won the news ratings, however, marking the first time NBC has been out of first place in six weeks.

"The CBS Evening News" had an average 12.4 rating to the 11.9 for NBC's "Nightly News." ABC's "World News Tonight" was third with an 11.

In prime-time, the story was the same as in previous weeks, with NBC's Thursday and Saturday comedies dominating the top 10.

As if to rub it in, "Family Ties" placed in the top 10 twice — No. 2 in its regular time period and No. 8 in a special Monday showing to benefit "ALF," a sitcom about a furry puppet space alien.

"The Cosby Show" remained the highest-rated show with a 34.7 rating — 50 percent of the available viewing audience.

"ALF" was assisted to a 21.5 rating, but Jaffe said the show was expected to drop again this week without the benefit of a lead-in from "Family Ties."

The rest of the top 10 shows, in descending order, were "Murder, She Wrote," "60 Minutes," "Cheers," "Golden Girls," "Moonlighting" and "Night Court."

"Cheers" and "Night Court" follow "Cosby" on NBC on Thursdays. "Golden Girls" is on NBC on Saturdays. "Moonlighting" was ABC's only top-10 entry. "Murder, She Wrote," and "60 Minutes" are part of CBS' strong Sunday lineup.

"Kate's Secret," NBC's movie about bulimia, placed 10th with a rating of 24.1, the best for a special movie so far during the November sweeps.

As expected, the CBS miniseries satire "Fresno" slid further down the rankings as it proceeded through the week. It had garnered a 19.7 rating in its opening two-hour segment the previous Sunday when it aired in CBS' usually strong Sunday lineup. But on Monday it dipped to a 15.2 and was in 36th place.

The Tuesday installment dropped to a 12.8, Wednesday drew a 12.5 and the wrapup Thursday rated a 12.7.

"Women of Valor," starring Susan Sarandon as commander of a group of nurses taken prisoner by the Japanese during World War II, did reasonably well among the other TV movies last week, drawing a 19.6 rating for CBS and ranking 17th.

But the other television movies did not fare as well. "Nazi Hunter: The Beate Klarsfeld Story" starring Farrah Fawcett got only a 13.7 rating for ABC. "Gone to Texas: The Sam Houston Story," with Sam Elliott, rated only a 10.8 for CBS and was in the bottom 10.

In the battles-to-watch category, the ABC soap "Dynasty," dropped from last week, to 15.6, while its CBS competition, "Magnum, P.I.," drew an 18 to win the time period. "Dallas" was down two points to 21.5, but still bested "Miami Vice," with a rating of 18.6, up two points.

The lowest-rated shows, from the bottom, were "Heart of the City," "Spenser: For Hire," "Sledge Hammer," "Sidekicks," "1986," "Love Boat: Special," "Sam Houston," "A-Team" in a special showing, football — Los Angeles Raiders vs. San Diego and "Fast Copy."

NEW YORK (AP) — Bobby Short was recently honored for his 50 years in show business by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at a concert and dinner-dance in Alice Tully Hall.

And Short, with an 11-piece band, was the entertainment.

"You dazzle audiences everywhere. You remain the essence of sophistication in song," New York Mayor Edward I. Koch said in a message read by NAACP Executive Secretary Benjamin L. Hooks.

WESTBROOK, Me. (AP) — Stephen King fans can get their hands on two of his hard-to-find books through a raffle the Walker Memorial Library will hold.

The first prize is a signed and dated galley proof of King's "Pet Sematary." The second prize is a signed and dated copy of the second edition of "The Dark Tower/The Gunslinger."

Raffle tickets are $20 each. The drawing will be held on Jan. 3, 1987, and proceeds are to benefit the 1894 library building.

Sandi Patti, First Call to give local concert

Sandi Patti & First Call will present a contemporary gospel concert at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 9 at Chaparral Center.

The 30-year-old singer has garnered two Grammy Awards, 13 Gospel Music Dove Awards and her first Gold Record for "More Than Wonderful." Her current recording, "Morning Like This," is predicted to reach platinum within the year.

When ABC television used her recording of "The Star Spangled Banner" for the Liberty Weekend finale, the result was unpredictable and overwhelming. Americans across the country telephoned to discover the identity of "the torch singer."

First Call will be featured in the concert as back-up vicalists while Dick Tunney will assist with keyboards. Tunney traveled as music director for The Imperials prior to joining Miss Patti's tour.

The Midland area Chick-fil-A Restaurants are co-sponsoring this concert with Spring House Associates. The national restaurant chain will co-sponsor 10 other Sandi Patti concerts around the country this year.

Reserved seats are $8.50, $10.50 and $11.50. Tickets are available in Midland at Sonshine Corner and Lighthouse. For more information, call Sonshine Corner, 697-4481.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon
Monday, December 1, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Be ready for anything in the year ahead and you will rack up new financial and career gains. A child teaches you something about love. Grant all family requests that are reasonable. Adjust your course to take advantage of a golden opportunity. Remain true to your high ideals. You need to take a firm stand where business ethics are concerned.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Bette Midler, multi-talented Woody Allen, actor David Doyle, Mary Martin, Mets slugger George Foster, dancer Dame Alicia Markova, Brooklyn Dodger star Cookie Lavagetto, singer Gilbert O'Sullivan, comedian Richard Pryor, singer Lou Rawls, comedian Dick Shawn, author Rex Stout, golf's Lee Trevino, actress Charlene Tilton.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A problem related to a friendship or organizational tie could assume worrisome proportions. Keep your plans to yourself. Others are anxious to cash in on your ideas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get an early start this morning. Your efforts to get along with an influential person could be thwarted. Distant affairs can be handled through an intermediary.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Devote more time to creative and artistic projects. They could become a source of extra income. Friends will be harbingers of good news.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Not a good day to take risks. Do not hang on to outmoded methods or procedures. A startling discovery will put you in line for a promotion or raise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Discuss your special talents with an authority figure who is in a position to help you. The situation calls for more self-discipline. Fantasy enhances romance, however!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A powerful source of inspiration prevails. A self-improvement project is more successful than you imagined. Others understand your total absorption with a project.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Strive for excellence at work and you will be richly rewarded. Wider public recognition is part of the picture. Domestic disagreements can be quickly resolved if you make concessions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Mate or partner's encouragement boosts your ego. Show your appreciation. Dress to impress if you have a special business lunch. Share the limelight with the deserving.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A major decision this morning will bring peace of mind by evening. A phone call may hold romantic promise even if you do not realize it! A special relationship benefits.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The atmosphere at work improves, thanks to a change in personnel. Influential person is impressed by your ideas for saving valuable time. Make certain you get full credit for your suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A teen-ager receives good news regarding a college scholarship. Be careful not to jump the gun. Impulsive action should be avoided. Spend some time getting personal affairs in order.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Those employed in the arts enjoy special financial benefits. People at a distance show new interest in your talents. A calculated risk begins to pay off. An excellent day for entertaining.

Opening lead: King of ♠

Some people are never satisfied. They complain when they don't hold cards, then carp again when they have a few high cards and it turns out to be at least one too many. Such was the case with West on this hand.

North-South were trailing in a Swiss team match, and that accounts in part for North's decision to bid the grand slam in hearts. Not that it was all that bad an action—South was certain to be short in clubs and even one red queen in declarer's hand would mean that the grand slam had good play.

Sitting South was Sandy Burns of Florida. He won the opening club lead in dummy and cashed the king of trumps. A club ruff confirmed that West had started with six clubs, so he chose to play him for heart shortness. After trumping two spades around a club ruff, declarer opted for a heart finesse. When that won, he still had to hope that West held the queen-jack of diamonds, or any four cards in the suit, along with his clubs.

Declarer cashed his last trump and the two high spades, reducing all hands to four cards. In hand he held the K-9-4 of diamonds and dummy was reduced to the A-6 in diamonds and the nine of clubs. West found the pressure more than he could bear. Since he had to hold a club to guard against the table's nine, he was forced to bare his Q-J of diamonds. When those cards fell under the ace and king, declarer's nine of diamonds became the fulfilling trick.

Observe that West had just cause for grievance. If he had been a bit stronger, i.e., if he held the guarded queen of hearts, the contract might have failed. And that also would have been the case had he been weaker, had East held one of his diamond honors.

Batik 'exchange students' getting look at old African fabric craft

By RICHARD EVERETT

BOUAKE, Ivory Coast (AP) — The young white woman gingerly dipped the carved wooden block in a bucket of molten wax, shook it and stamped it firmly on a piece of cloth spread over the rickety wooden table.

Smiles flashed approvingly from the observing Africans who practice this traditional batik cloth-dying method for a living.

"They make it look so easy," said Susan Siegel, an art teacher from New York.

Other Americans maneuvered around pots of boiling wax that hugged charcoal fires in the narrow alleyway workshop and eagerly picked out their designs from a pile of stamps carved with images of fish, animals, plants and geometric designs.

They were a group of art students, artists and art collectors who spent three weeks apprenticing themselves to African craftsmen in Ivory Coast as part of a cultural program offered by the Parsons School of Design in New York.

Most American exchange programs in Africa find Americans teaching Africans. Not this one.

The Parsons participants stay in the towns of Korhogo and Bouake, and are bused to different villages each day, where pottery, weaving, cloth dying, jewelry making and other traditional crafts may be a specialty.

Despite the language barrier — Ivory Coast's official language is French, and many villagers only speak tribal languages — the participants dived into the experience, learning age-old skills from the villagers.

"We couldn't speak but somehow we connected ... through our work," said Marvin Chatman, a sculptor and jewelry maker from Detroit.

Chatman apprenticed himself to jewelers from Baoule and Senoufo-speaking villages, as well as Senegalese goldsmiths in the bustling market of Bouake, Ivory Coast's second-largest city and the crossroads of West African trade from neighboring Guinea, Mali, Burkina Faso and the coastal port of Abidjan.

He spoke excitedly of the hours of careful instruction in traditional Baoule goldsmithing methods which finally led to his being initiated into the local group of artisans. He said they taught him secret techniques which he had to promise never to reveal to anyone.

"I made a cultural connection. From that my own art forms will evolve," he said.

Chatman's experiences are typical of the program's participants, who not only work side-by-side with traditional artisans, but also eat, talk, sing, dance and farm with them, spending long days and occasional nights in the villages.

"If the students are open to it, it's the experience of a lifetime," said Carol Spindel, one of the program's leaders. Spindel is a graduate student of art history at the University of Illinois and has spent a year making pots in a Senoufo village.

Dr. Victor Diabate, an archaeology professor at Ivory Coast's national university, leads the students through his native Senoufo region, while Baoule painter and art teacher Gerard Santoni is the guide for the Baoule villages.

"The students always come as invited guests, brought by people who know the villagers. Being guided by Ivorians around their own country the students get experiences that could normally take years," said Spindel.

The Ivorians also benefit from the program. Diabate, Santoni and all the villages are paid for their work with the American students, and the students often buy many local crafts to take home as gifts or souvenirs. The Ivorians also share in the exciting meeting of two cultures.

"There's a sense of cultural inferiority left over from colonial days. The Ivorians are fascinated by all these strange people interested in coming to learn from them," said Jerome Vogel, program director, who first came to Ivory Coast in 1964 as a Fulbright scholar.

"It makes us proud to be Baoule," said Jean Koffi Kouadio, a schoolteacher in the Baoule village of Tano Sakassou, where the Americans learned traditional pottery methods.

German novel 'Perfume' leaves behind malodorous, monstrous scent

By GEORGE BOEHMER

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A baby is born under a fishmonger's table in 18th-century Paris. He is unlike any child ever born for he has absolutely no odor.

But he does possess a keen sense of smell, a so highly refined talent for identifying scents that he unnerves just about all he meets. At first, Jean-Baptiste Grenouille uses his almost inhuman ability to create the greatest perfumes in the world. He later turns his talent to a monstrous quest — to assimilate the scent of young virgins to enhance himself.

It is into this strange and malodorous world that Patrick Sueskind takes us with his new book, "Perfume" (Alfred A. Knopf, $16.95). The novel about a fictional 18th-century serial murderer in France has been a best seller in Europe since March 1985.

About 450,000 hardback copies of the original German-language book, "Das Parfum," have been sold since it first went on sale in March 1985 and became an instant hit. Rights for publication have been sold in 23 countries. The English-language version was released in the United States and Britain in September.

Sueskind, who has a reputation for being a very private man, is ill at ease talking about his unusual book. He won't even venture a guess why it's been so popular.

"I am the worst source to ask such a question. I don't know why so many people are buying it," the 37-year-old author said in an interview.

The novel tells of Grenouille's birth as the fifth illigitimate child of a fishmonger woman amid the stench of the 18th-century Paris street market. She fails to snuff out his life at birth as she did with the others, and in a delirium confesses to police and is guillotined.

Police give the child to a priest, who names him Jean-Baptiste and pays a series of foster mothers to nurse him. One by one they reject the child, indeed cringe before him because he has no odor and because of his vociferous appetite. Finally, the priest finds a woman who doesn't notice the baby's strange deficiency, and she raises him.

Grenouille grows into a physically unattractive person. Others are repulsed by him, because he doesn't smell and because they sense something evil about him.

As he matures, he discovers he was born with overdeveloped first cranial nerves, which give him a highly-tuned sense of smell, and allow him to become the best perfumer ever. Still, he is rejected by those around him.

Grenouille decides he must invent a perfume that he can sprinkle on himself to make him loved, to make him human. It is something he has never felt. Normal perfume doesn't work, though. But he discovers that young virgins emit the scent he needs to make himself attractive.

To obtain the ingredients for a super-scent, he systematically murders two dozen virgins, and uses parts of the remains to develop the most irresistible perfume ever.

Sueskind's unusual approach to the story keeps the reader galvanized.

However, the author is wary of beating his own drum, and even has trouble discussing his role in writing the irreverent TV series "Kir Royal," a show about a prying newspaper gossip columnist in Munich and his colorful high-society targets.

When he is asked about the series' success, the writer pauses and says most of the credit goes to his friend, the writer Helmut Dietl, who directed the six parts for West German TV.

"I only helped Dietl write it. We have been good friends for a long time, and worked together in the past," said Sueskind.

"Perfume" remains Sueskind's major achievement.

The book was initially published by Diogenes Verlag of Zurich, Switzerland, and broke all records for the publishing company.

"With 450,000 copies sold, this is the most successful book we've had in the 35 years of our existence," said Christine Doering, a Diogenes spokeswoman.

Sueskind has turned down a $5,000 literary prize from the Frankfurter Allgemeine newspaper, which serialized all of "Perfume."

Marcel Reich-Ranicki, the Frankfurter Allgemeine's chief literary editor, said he mentioned the prize to Sueskind but the author said he won't accept literary prizes.

"He said he's making enough money," Ranicki said, indicating Sueskind would prefer that someone less fortunate be chosen.

Greeley's autobiography looks past 'steamy' novels

"Confessions of a Parish Priest," by Andrew Greeley. Simon & Schuster. 507 Pages. $18.95.

By CAROL DEEGAN
Associated Press

Why does Andrew Greeley write the kinds of stories he writes? He is a priest, after all. And his novels have been described as "steamy." Greeley's autobiography, "Confessions of a Parish Priest," tries to provide some of the answers.

Greeley caught the public's attention when "The Cardinal Sins" appeared on the best-seller lists in 1981. Since that time, six more Greeley novels have been best-sellers.

Greeley, a priest in the archdiocese of Chicago and a professor of sociology at the University of Arizona in Tucson, denies his novels are "steamy," as some critics have claimed. He insists, too, that curiosity about a novel written by a priest is not the reason his books sell. Greeley says other priests have written novels, and he points out that books by and about priests don't automatically hit best-seller lists, not even books with sex in them.

To Greeley, his novels are an exercise in the search for understanding, just as "Confessions of a Parish Priest" is an exercise in self-explanation and self-understanding. Greeley says his decision to become a novelist was a moral decision on his part; a decision made with some awareness of the risks involved.

He does not claim to be the greatest novelist in the world — or the worst. "If I have written a lot of books, the reason is I have many, many stories I need to tell for myself and shape the reality of that life as it continues."

In this book, Greeley tells about his life. How he grew up. Whey he decided to be a priest. He explains why he started writing novels and what his novels mean to him. He talks about his critics — and their criticisms of him.

He makes it clear he is a priest first and foremost, not a priest-sociologist or priest-journalist or priest-novelist. He writes: "The other things I do in life: sociological research, journalistic writing; storytelling, are merely ways of being a priest. I decided I wanted to be a priest in the second grade, have never changed my mind, and have never had any doubts."

"Confessions of a Parish Priest" is a book full of emotion — anger, pain, love and humor.

For the most part, it is an open and revealing book. Some might even suggest it much better written than any of his novels.

Building a string quartet both difficult, rewarding

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — "I've been looking all these years for the ideal quartet," says violinist Peter Marsh. "And the longer I look, the more difficult the search."

On the subject of string quartets, Marsh speaks from the experience of more than three decades. With that authority, and after 23 years as leader of the Lenox Quartet, half a decade as first violinist of two other ensembles and today first violin of the Los Angeles-based Sequoia Quartet, he says that quartet-playing is not for everyone, whatever their interests and qualifications.

For the time being, however, Marsh says he is happy to be a part of the Sequoia ensemble, a group of ostensible stability through most of its 14-year history, but one which has been in transition during the past two seasons.

Building a quartet, whether from the ground up or from the foundation of an existing ensemble, is a very complicated business, says the veteran chamber-player.

The technical demands on the individuals are enormous and not forgiving of any musician who is less than virtuosic in accomplishment, he says.

And beyond that, Marsh says: "It's really tough finding that right combination of players who have strong qualities as musicians, yet who can get along with each other. It's a matter, first, of personality, of being an artist with an individual sense of perspective, then of interacting with others in a productive way.

"There are so many quartets who do well, who play with admirable style and ensemble — but who really have no face."

Beginning a new season this week, the Sequoia Quartet, comprising Marsh, two of its original members — violinist Miwako Watanabe and violist James Dunham — and cellist Bonnie Hampton (new to the ensemble this summer), still seeks its face.

All four players profess hope and faith that this combination of members will be successful and lasting. Each of the four admits that there are risks involved. But optimism is the prevailing mood of the newest incarnation of Sequoia.

• • •

Founded in 1972 by four young musicians with connections to the California Institute of Art — Watanabe, Dunham, Yoko Matsuda and Joel Krosnick — the Sequoia Quartet in the intervening years has survived both success and failure.

(Within two years, Robert Martin replaced cellist Krosnick — who left to pursue free-lance work and later joined the Juilliard Quartet, of which he is still a member.)

Among its successes have been the quartet's Beethoven cycle, its Bartok cycle, a Naumburg Award—and subsequent East Coast debuts and engagements — an Australian tour and an expanding hometown series. The quartet's fortunes have been guided and supported by a number of professional managements and by the Sequoia String Quartet Foundation.

The group has had only one clear-cut failure. That was the breakup of the marriage, five years ago, between first violinist Matsuda and violist Dunham. For most members of the quartet's public, that event seemed not to take place, as far as they could see and hear, it caused no disruption in the ensemble's schedule, no interruption in its performances, nor any apparent lowering of its musical standards.

Four years later, however, in the spring of 1985, the very survival of the quartet came into question.

At that time, Matsuda and Martin decided to leave the quartet. Each cited a desire to pursue a number of other musical options.

Eighteen months ago, the impending departure of half its personnel was first seen by the other half, Dunham says, as a termination.

"In that moment, which didn't last very long, it seemed that their leaving had to mean the breakup of the quartet," he remembers. Immediately, however, both musicians considered another possibility.

"We thought again. In that second moment, which we shared with each other, Miwako and I decided the quartet meant too much to both us to let it go. We decided to survive." Thus began a transition period which may not be over yet.

• • •

"It wasn't easy and it wasn't cheap," Dunham describes those months. "Looking for new members for an existing quartet, especially when you're looking for two new members, entails great expense and great agonizing."

During an extensive, five-month, transcontinental search, Watanabe and Dunham first found a first violinist and then the three members auditioned cellists. The two new members were first violinist Peter Marsh — veteran of the late, lamented Lenox Quartet (1958-81), as well as, later, the Philadelphia and Berkshire Quartets — and the young British cellist Marius May. They made their first appearances with the Sequoia in October 1985.

Less than nine months later, May, with the blessings of his three partners, left California and returned to England to resume his solo career. May's leaving, his former colleagues insist, was amicable.

Enter the veteran American cellist Bonnie Hampton, San Francisco-based, who joined the ensemble in June of this year, and makes her second appearance when the quartet begins its new "...and Friends" season this week at the Japan America Theatre here.

The featured friend at this opening concert of the year will be Nathan Schwartz, a highly regarded pianist on the faculty of the San Francisco Conservatory. He also happens to be Hampton's husband.

• • •

Officially, the foursome express confidence in the future of their ensemble.

In his typically quiet but authoritative way, Marsh says, unequivocally, "My feeling is just as positive with this group as it was in the old days of the Lenox Quartet."

"In the sense that I feel confidence that this (combination of players) is going to work, I am very optimistic at this point," Dunham adds. "Yes, it's like starting over in some ways, but in others — in the fact that we have name recognition with the public, that we have a following, and that all of us are at a certain level of experience — we are ahead."

"Am I just stubborn, or am I an idealist?" Watanabe asks, rhetorically. "This quartet has meant too much to me to let it go. Since I was a student in high school, I've always been in an ensemble. It's part of my life. Now, with all this experience behind us, the idea of going different ways just doesn't make sense."

The present combination of players, she says, "may be the most rounded group we've had. I think it's going to be good." Does she feel resentment about those who have left?

"No, not at all. I'm not sour, or bitter, or anything. I've gone past all that. I try to remember the good times, the good moments. I have nothing bad to say about anyone."

When cellist May left, Watanabe remembers: "I wished him only good things. He should go after the solo career, if that is what he wants."

On the other hand, Watanabe feels that she, as an experienced musician — who spent six years in Europe as an ensemble player before coming to Los Angeles — is now, like Dunham, coming into her own.

"We don't have to show off anymore. We're beyond that. We are at the point where our experience is worth something, especially to us."

"It's really tough finding that right combination of players who have strong qualities as musicians, yet who can get along with each other."

Late-night television talk show crowd thinning out

AP Laserphoto

In the world of late-night television, only Joan River, left, David Brenner and Robert Klein remain to compete with Johnny Carson.

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — The late-night talk show crowd is thinning out.

"The Dick Cavett Show" and "Jimmy Breslin's People" have been canceled, leaving stand-up comics David Brenner, Robert Klein and Joan Rivers as the remaining late-night challengers to Johnny Carson and David Letterman.

While Cavett maintained that he and Breslin weren't victims of the talk-show glut, the two programs clearly were done in by scheduling problems complicated by the amount of syndicated material available, including talk shows.

ABC had offered Cavett's show to its affiliates for airing Tuesdays and Wednesdays at midnight EST. On Thursdays and Fridays, the stations were offered "Jimmy Breslin's People" in the same one-hour time period.

In canceling the shows, ABC eliminated midnight-to-1 a.m. programming until it comes up with something new next year.

"This must be how Gimbels' clerks felt. They didn't feel specifically singled out," Cavett said in a telephone interview, referring to the venerable Herald Square department store that shut recently.

"The Late Show Starring Joan Rivers" is pretty much a copy of Carson's "Tonight Show," of which Rivers was frequent guest host.

Klein and Brenner, both of whom have served as occasional guest hosts on "Tonight," say they are trying to break the mold.

"I don't need the celebrities as much as good tight shows," said Klein, whose weekly, hour-long "Robert Klein Time" is carried on USA Network.

He tries for "themes." An early sample of his show featured three ventriloquists. (The comedian promises an upcoming "all-impressionist" show — "Cezanne, Monet....")

"It's a chemistry thing," Klein said. "There's no way that I am going to present guests each week who have never been on any other program, who are so thoroughly unique that they're practically virgin territory. The answer is me sitting there with them."

Brenner, with 18 minutes of actual talk time in his half-hour nightly show, said his job was "serving an appetizer so good people don't want the main course."

In an interview, he described "NightLife," produced by former "Saturday Night Live" producer Bob Tischler, as "in the David Letterman neighborhood but ... going down a different street."

"I think I have a childlike curiosity about people," Brenner said of his interviewing style.

"I try to ask what I think I'm interested in and what I think the audience is interested in hearing without it being what everyone else is going to ask."

Brenner sits at a desk on a hip, busy set and has Motown keyboardist Billy Preston as his bandleader.

Klein, who makes a continuous joke of being on "basic cable," one of the stations subscribers get automatically without paying extra, sits in a chair in minimalist surroundings. On one show, his keyboard player gave a young girl piano lessons in the background — just one of the side jobs necessary, Klein explains, when working on basic cable.

Brenner's show is syndicated by King World, the people who offer local stations "Wheel of Fortune," and other popular syndicated programming.

Paar made talk show genre what it is today

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Steve Allen was a pioneer. Johnny Carson holds the longevity record, nearly a quarter century in the field. David Letterman gave the format a twist. And David Brenner and Joan Rivers are purveyors of carbon copies. But Jack Paar is the man who made the talk show what it is today.

From 1957 to 1962, as proprietor of "The Jack Paar Show," he introduced America to Dodi Goodman, Jose Melis and witty, urbane talk. He defined the form but hates the term talk show. It's conversation, he said, not talk.

The show was five seasons of fits and fights. There was his walkout over a censored water closet joke, his sympathy for Fidel Castro, his attempt to arrange a trade of tractors for prisoners from the Bay of Pigs fiasco. Throughout it all, there was the wit and charm and an emotional vulnerability virtually unheard of in men, especially then. He is much the same today.

In New York recently, in a now rare public appearance, he turned a press conference into a monologue.

He was there to promote "Jack Paar Comes Home," a compendium of Paar shows airing Saturday night on NBC. Paar ranged far and wide over those five years when so many Americans watched television to listen.

The conference was like his show — witty, charming, emotional and peculiarly endearing. Here is Jack Paar conversing, once again.

I kid you not. I tell you, I'm going to tell you a lot of interesting things. I'll answer any question on any subject whether I know anything about it or not.

Noting that his memory "is not what it was," Paar recalled meeting two men in a restaurant.

They stood there and (one) said, 'You don't recognize me, do you?' And I didn't. I knew vaguely, but he'd gotten older, this guy. And I said, 'Forgive me, but just give me a clue.' And he said, 'I'm Don Durgin. I was the president of the National Broadcasting Company when you were there.' And I said, 'Mr. Durgin, I'm so sorry' ... Then I felt so bad I turned to the other guy trying to make up for this gaffe I had made ... and I said, 'What do you do, sir?' Like I cared, you know. And he says, 'I'm with RCA' ... I said, 'Well, then you must know my good friend Herb Schlosser-whom I see all the time, and I'm very fond of Herb, he's a wonderful guy.' And the guy says, 'I know he's a wonderful guy. I'm Herb Schlosser.'

He recalled a similar story involving the late Huw Weldon of the BBC, as he showed up for a party.

And he walked in, took his jacket off, the butler took it, and he went into the living room and there sat the host and hostess in their pajamas by the fireplace having a little dinner, and Huw — Sir Huw — said, 'I'm so terribly sorry. Jesus, I'm so sorry. I've come the wrong night. It's Thursday, but it's next Thursday, right? I'm so sorry.' And he's backing out, and the hostess says, 'No, Sir Huw, it was last Thursday and you were here.'

I'm not a big television watcher. For instance, I know more about David Letterman than any of you in this room, yet I know less about him than any of you. You all know his work; I know nothing about his work. But I know him as a man — we're neighbors — and there's no one that I have more respect for.

I've never met a young guy who is as modest and decent and mysterious. I can't figure him out, and I tell you, I know him very well. But I don't know anything about his work, except that I understand from reading what some of you write he's, like, reinvented that whole genre of physical humor that I know nothing about. I never did bits or sketches. I'm not good at that. But I have enormous affection for him. (Paar is scheduled to appear on Letterman's show Wednesday.)

And how about people who are alive, other than Ustinov?

Jesus, you really have me.

You know, if you ask me why my show was different, well, who else doing talk shows went to New Guinea, spent two weeks in a 60-foot boat trying to find the man who saved Jack Kennedy's life? Who went to the Soviet Union with "The Tonight Show"? Who went to the Berlin Wall with "The Tonight Show"? Who went to Havana?

Well, I wanted to see a revolution so...I decided to go to Cuba. I'd gone many times, but now Fidel was coming into Havana, and I was down there by myself — no crew, no writers, no producer, nothing but me.... The press wasn't there.... I was first (to talk to Castro), because some people liked me in the revolution and promised me....

Well, it went on for three days where he was going to come down and see me. I was on the 24th floor of the Hilton; he was on the 26th.... They have just terrazzo floors, they don't have carpeting. And here are these troops marching all night long....

And there's the headquarters right above my bed, and now I'm getting scared because I know that I'm going to get Castro — I mean, they promised me — but I gotta be patient. Three days went by. Two o'clock in the morning I got a call: Dr. Castro's coming down. Now I'm scared, because all of this foreplay was interesting because NBC was excited about me being there and everything, but now is the real thing.

And I don't know what to ask him. What are you going to ask? The guy came out of the mountains with a beard, you know. I didn't know what to do, but I just thought it was great to be the first. And I ran down, got a cameraman, sound man and lights at 2 in the morning, set it up, and in 10 minutes he came down with nine guys with machine guns and walked in the room.

And in my nervousness what I said you won't believe, but we have it on film.... I said, 'You're a good neighbor, you don't make too much noise, and I hope you didn't come down to borrow sugar.'

I was enthusiastic about the revolution — you might compare it somewhat like you are, many of you are, or like we all are — for Ms. Aquino. There was a time, six-month period or a year, where we just thought it was going to be wonderful. Well, it didn't turn out that way.

And so when I am accused — well, I rather like it. It gives me a certain panache, color. I like it because when they accuse me of being pro-Castro and procommunist, it's so damn amusing because I'm a registered Republican.

I'm a great reader, and I think of all the pleasures of life that diminish as you get older, the one that holds up the best is reading. I'd sure hate to lose the faculty to read. That's how most of my life is spent.

On bringing the upcoming show to NBC: I didn't want to take it to NBC, because I didn't think NBC would take it because of Carson. Johnny is enormously successful, more than any of us have ever been or ever will be. He's a very gifted man but he has, forgive me, enormous influence.

And Johnny always has had, so I'm told — because great numbers of his staff are from my show, and the Letterman show. All these guys were with me. We started this idea of what we did, whatever the hell it was. They're now doing it other places. But I have heard from them...that Johnny has this thing about me, and I thought, well, I guess...NBC would turn it down....

Don't make a big thing out of that, please. Please, I beg of you. OK, but it's only fair that I continue the thought. They said, you know Johnny never could get over — or doesn't get over — or they felt...that despite his talent, despite his money — you know, he makes more in a night than I made in a month. There's no reason — there was an impact that I had that none of them have....

I was booked on his show when I had my book. And they called me and Johnny read the book and wrote me a longhand note and it said, 'Jesus, it's funny and everything, and I didn't know you could write this funny stuff.' So I thought that was pretty damned nice of him to write me in longhand.

And then a man called me, his name is de Cordova (Fred de Cordova, Carson's executive producer), and he said, 'Jeez, Johnny loved the book.' I say, 'You know, if he really loved it, why don't you just hold it up some night? I mean, that would be nice. I did it for so many people. Christ, I mean, I made best-sellers, you know. You know about Alex King and things that I did for people.'

And he said, 'Hold up the book? We want you.' 'Oh,' I said, 'that's something else altogether.... Give me a date.' ...(Later) the phone rang and it was de Cordova, and he said, 'Jack, you're booked for the Carson show in two weeks, or something like that. We — I gotta ask a favor of you.'

I said, 'What favor?' He said, 'Give us two weeks to think it over.' And I said, 'I can't believe this. Give you two weeks to think over whether you want me on that show?'

And I said, 'I'll give you an answer right now.' ...I wouldn't go on. (Paar was scheduled to appear on the Carson show last week.)

Buddy Marcum poses with a "work-in-progress," one of the dollhouses he builds by hand. He is developing complete dollhouse kits and hopes to begin manufacturing dollhouses in early 1987. His aim is build dollhouses just about anyone can afford.

Little houses could mean big business

Midlander hopes to capitalize on dollhouse craze

By MELLA McEWEN
Business Oil Writer

Buddy Marcum has been building houses for over 45 years. Lately, however, the houses have been getting smaller in scale.

A retired builder of homes and motels, Marcum has now turned his attention to building dollhouses. While he has been building the one-inch to one-foot scale houses for five years, it has only been recently that he has considered selling them.

"People kept telling me I ought to try selling them, but I never considered it until the people from Re/Max asked me to build them one," he notes. Earlier this month, Re/Max of Midland held a drawing to give away a dollhouse built by Marcum. According to Realtor Carolyn Nickell, owner of Re/Max, the drawing was held because "We thought, with Christmas near, it would be a good idea to help make Christmas a little brighter." She added that the winner has three granddaughters.

"The biggest thrill," Marcum says of the display, "was seeing the older people react. They'd kind of stand back and look at it, then they'd move up a little and look some more, then they'd come up to it. It was wonderful seeing the gleam in their eyes. I imagine most of them either lived in houses like that or had dollhouses like that when they were young."

He is still working on his first dollhouse, begun over five years ago. He describes it as a three-story Williamsburg Colonial style dollhouse, completely furnished, with light fixtures, and says it's about 90 percent complete. Asking price for the house is $5,000.

Building things on a small scale is nothing new for the West Virginia native, who 35 years ago would build furniture for his daughter when she was small, and 15 years ago built scale models of the motels he was building "to see what they would look like." He makes everything for the houses by hand — including the floors, brick, and paneling, and they're wired for electricity. His wife of 44 years, Jackie, makes the curtains for the dollhouse windows and covers the furniture. She also makes stuffed animals, which she gives to friends or relatives when they're sick.

"I love to work with my hands," admits the self-described workaholic. "I love the feel of the wood, how it all fits together." He recalls how, before he retired two years ago, he would get up at 4 a.m., work in his garage for a few hours, go to work building or remodeling houses, come home and go back to work in his garage. "My wife used to say she never saw me except when I got a drink of water or went to the bathroom," he laughs.

His father was a builder, and Marcum took up the profession when he was about 12 or 13 years old. "I learned the hard way — My father made me do everything from the plumbing to the wiring to laying brick," he recalls. After moving to Midland from Virginia in 1979, he built seven or eight houses, often taking six months to complete one. "I became a one man builder. I did everything but pour the concrete. When I was building and selling houses, I would sell one and move into the other until I sold it."

Marcum not only builds houses, he builds furniture, such as kitchen tables and gun cases. He also has "a garage full of barnwood frames," he says, built from houses he's torn down. He also builds special doghouses.

However, the response to his showing at Midland Park Mall has prompted Marcum to concentrate on buiding dollhouses. In fact, since the showing earlier this month, he's opened a store in Imperial Shopping Center, made plans to build dollhouse kits, and is also planning to manufacture his dollhouses. He also plans to tour the country with his dollhouses, making the rounds of the doll shows. He's even considering the possiblity of franchising.

"It seems like dollhouses are coming back," he points out. "All over the country they have shows with dollhouses, and they're a real thriving thing. But in Midland, it just hasn't caught on yet."

He hopes his new store, Buddy's Attic, will change all that. The store will carry his dollhouses, dollhouse kits, which he hopes to have ready for Christmas giving, and all the incidentals. Customers can find antiques and Marcum's barnwood frames, some of which include photographs of the Chihuahuan desert taken by Tom Bruner.

He's busy developing two styles of dollhouses for his kits, which he calls Colonial and Georgetown. His goal is to market a dollhouse that almost anyone can afford, he says. He hopes to be able to sell his kits for under $500, and the ready-built houses for around $1,000, and is trying to make arrangements for a financing plan. "If I work alone, the more complicated houses can take two months. I hope to do two a week using plain, uncomplicated plans," he notes. He'll still take special orders, which could take two months or more. "Of course, right now I have two elves helping me," he smiles, referring to his two grandchildren. Customers can stop by and watch the houses being built.

Marcum also plans to begin manufacturing his dollhouses, beginning the first of the year, which could employ a big group of people, he says. "It'll use the same wood and everything," he says of the manufactured dollhouses. "I just won't be putting in 12 1/2 hour days building them." He points out that the houses are rustic. "They're not meant to be perfect, but I try to get close."

Dollhouses are a pastime he highly recommends. "It's especially good for the older folks. It passes the time and gives you the thrill of accomplishing something."

Marcum with a completed dollhouse. When he says "I mean I do it all," he really does it all.

Producers face choices after El Paso decision

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Whether El Paso Natural Gas Co.'s decision to stop buying released gas for spot marketing into California has left a gaping hole or opened a window of opportunity in the outlook for gas sales depends on perspective.

For the more than 3,000 independent producers left without an immediate market for their gas which had historically gone to El Paso and more recently been released to and marketed by El Paso Gas Marketing (EPGM), the next six weeks appear to be a runway to the edge of nowhere.

But for independent gas marketers, the void left by El Paso opens a market niche to provide access to released gas for which there is still demand in the markets previously met by EPGM's programs. Marketers looking to provide services to help producers keep their gas flowing are now scrambling to line up deals with producers and match them with end users and local distribution companies (LDCs) in California.

One gas marketer, Houston-based GasMark Inc., has contracts for more than 100 million cubic feet per day (MMcfd) of gas in place with Southern California Gas Co., San Diego Gas & Electric and the City of Long Beach. The company is now concentrating on signing up producers with sufficient deliverability and reserves to meet those contracts.

A Midland-based gas marketer, Citigas Corp., has contracted demand for more than 200 MMcfd primarily small industrial end users and some LDCs in California, according to company chairman Roger Crawford. He says his company has been small producer-oriented throughout its five-year history.

Marketers typically write price-sensitive contracts tied to California spot market prices, regardless of contract lengths which currently range from six months to 20 years. Price-sensitivity in contracts helps to ensure that gas continues to flow under the contract without the curtailments seen with fixed-price contracts when monthly spot prices are lower than the contract level.

"One of the new truths of the gas industry in the wake of FERC orders 436 and 451 is that the California spot market price for gas is going to be the market price level for gas flowing out of West Texas regardless of old contract price levels," says Crawford.

Although El Paso has stayed their original deadline for pulling out of its spot marketing arrangements from Dec. 1 to the first of the year, marketers say producers need to make immediate decisions to keep from losing their place in line under the "first come, first served" provisions of Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) Order 436 opening interstate pipelines up for third party carriage of natural gas.

Because the last producers who sign on for a portion of a pipeline's available interruptable capacity will be the first to be cut off if firm demand capacity rises enough to require curtailments, "It's important that producers make some move to get in line for that capacity, whether through a marketer, broker or some other gas pooling mechanism," says Crawford.

In selecting a method to move gas without El Paso or its marketing affiliate, producers need to consider the services each type of market intermediary offers.

"Full service marketers take title to aggregated supplies, arrange transportation and make sales to end-users, providing the needed contract administration along the way," explains M.E. (Ed) Ireland, president of Gas Mark.

Brokers put producers and purchasers together but typically do not get involved in contracting between the two parties.

Juke box business seeing big change

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The jukebox is going through its biggest technological changes since 45 r.p.m. platters began to replace 78's in 1950. The coin-operated music business, depressed for more than a decade, is bursting forth again with such jazzy innovations as laser videos, compact audio disks and videotapes.

In the 1950's more than 400,000 jukeboxes could be found in cocktail lounges, restaurants, malt shops and bowling alleys of the inner city. But as America moved to the suburbs in the 60's and 70's the jukebox industry fell on hard times. Fast-food restaurants took over, and they did not want customers to linger around a jukebox. In addition, video games competed for quarters, and consumer tastes moved to albums, not singles. Today there are about 250,000 boxes in operation.

The jukebox industry is pinning its hopes for a comeback on the two hottest trends in the music business: music videos and compact audio disks. That was apparent at the Amusement and Music Operators Association's annual meeting in Chicago earlier this month.

The Seeburg Corp. of Addison, Ill., reborn in 1983 after the original company went bankrupt, has introduced a compact disk (CD) jukebox. Its Sony-built changer can hold as many as 60 CD's, each the equivalent of an LP album, for a total of more than 1,000 selections.

"This is no nickelodeon," said Edgar C. Blankenbeckler, Seeburg's chairman. For one thing, Seeburg's LaserMusic box doesn't take nickels — or any coins, for that matter. It accepts only $1 and $5 bills, generally at three plays for $1. A three-beam laser replaces the phonograph needle that used to wear out 45 r.p.m. records, and advanced circuitry sends crisp digital sound through a 200-watt stereo amplifier.

Critics of the CD jukebox say the superior sound is superfluous in a noisy barroom. They say video is the future, and they cite the popularity of MTV, the music video channel.

Joel Friedman, vice president of marketing at Rowe International Inc., a subsidiary of Central Jersey Industries of Whippany, N.J., said Rowe had decided not to pursue the CD or the 12-inch video laser disks, choosing instead an independent twin system of audio (45 r.p.m. records) and video (beta-format tapes, developed by Sony). The company chose 45's, Friedman said, because "oldies," specialty songs such as "Happy Birthday" and ethnic tunes such as polkas are not readily available on CD's. Beta was chosen over other formats because of better image resolution and superior editing and reproduction qualities, said Michael J. Reinert, Rowe's director of music programming.

Anthology of a former high-roller

I hadn't seen Buddy Gill in almost eight years and I was surprised one morning several weeks back to look up and see him walking down the hall. His short, lumpish frame looked about the same, the crow black hair had not grayed and the eyes still contained an icy stare. But as he neared, I noticed something different. Gone was the bowed, cocky strut that once made him look like a prowling bulldog. Now, he dragged a semi-helpless leg behind him, the result of a brain tumor I later learned.

I first met Buddy in the early seventies when he was an energetic and determined up-and-comer in the oilpatch. At that time, his Gill Industries, Inc. was one of the first mud companies to get involved in polymers. His $850,000, 12,000-barrel liquid mud facility at Pecos was the largest in the Permian Basin, and much of his fortune was made leasing mud to deep rigs in the Delaware Basin.

In his heyday, I wrote a profile of Buddy Gill and Gill Industries for Drill Bit magazine. His story was one of meteoric success. After dropping out of high school at the age of 15, he went to work as a roughneck and later became a driller. Hankering to keep moving up the ladder, he went to work for a service company in Corpus Christi, became a crack oilfield salesman, and after a short time, was promoted to district manager.

Two years later, he had developed enough sales and management skills to launch his own small specialty products company. Buddy would sell anything in the oilpatch for 10 percent commission and pay his own expenses. Those who knew him said he was a super salesman, with a line of bull that mesmerized and a knack for spreading the "grease" that was unsurpassed.

Mostly he sold other people's drilling chemicals, but it didn't take him long to realize he could make a lot more money if he manufactured and sold his own chemicals. Besides, he had begun to notice some flaws in current drilling products. So with the help of a chemistry professor at the University of Alabama, and after much field testing, Gill finally developed his own drilling mud polymers.

In 1970, he moved his company to Odessa with the intention of becoming a millionaire in five years. But, he made his million in a lot less than five years, then proceeded to turn it over many more times, eventually ending up with three drilling mud companies in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico and one in the West Indies.

I continued to hear the tales about his wheeling and dealing and high-rolling episodes, but lost track of him in the late seventies, shortly before I took a hiatus from Midland.

Now, after the customary round of good ol' boy pleasantries, I was finding out "whatever happened to Buddy Gill."

"Where are you now?" I asked innocently enough.

"At the bottom, the absolute rock bottom. I'm dead broke. I work on a dude ranch in Colorado for my room and board part of the year, and the rest of the time I live in a one-room apartment in Meeker and draw social security, as a result of my disability from a brain tumor," he poured it all out, without shame or hesitation. "I can't afford a subscription to the Reporter-Telegram, and I'm almost to the point of walking."

This was not the Buddy Gill I remembered. He had been a high-living, high-roller, with a stable of Lincolns, a $500,000 spread in Ruidoso, a $1.2 million ranch in Colorado and a twin-engine plane to get him from place to place and party to party. (At least until his pilot forgot to put down the landing gear one day and landed it belly first at a Houston airport.)

The only thing he loved better than making money was spending it, and he went to work everyday equipped with a $30,000 diamond ring and an ostentatious $60,000 watch, with a band of gold nuggets.

"Is it true, what I heard, that you used to pack around $100,000 in a brief case?" I asked.

He grinned: "All the time. I used to fly friends to Las Vegas to parties and to the Super Bowl and other parties."

"The money — where did it go?" I wondered.

"The damned IRS got it all; the ranch, the cash — everything!" he exclaimed with bitter flavored words. He went on to say that personal mistakes, high-living, low oil prices, a divorce and three months in a hospital following a brain tumor operation had done him in.

"They say the higher the roller, the harder the fall. I guess I'm one Midland high roller who found that out. I've got nothing left but pride and determination."

Beginning to feel the ill effects of a growing brain tumor, Buddy said he thought it was the fast living and 18-hour days that were getting to him and in 1979 he made the decision to sell out for $25 million and live the good life on his Colorado ranch. "I thought I would just spend the rest of my days looking at my deer and cattle, but I was not happy out of the oilpatch."

He continued: "Friends from the Permian Basin would come to visit, and tell me I was really living the life. No, I would tell them, life is going without sleep for 36 hours, driving 90 miles an hour between Orla and Pecos, with a growling belly and a can of vienna sausage on the way to a remote rig to sell some mud — that's living! And, I would give anything to be back there."

However, the brain tumor which debilitated him in 1981, and was removed in 1982, kept him from going back to the oilpatch. After getting out of the hospital, he made another stab at getting back, spending $800,000 to develop a downhole drilling tool which he hoped to sell himself, but by the time it was ready for the market, the bottom had fallen out of the drilling business.

Then, the years of fast and free spending finally caught up, and in 1985, the IRS came after him for back taxes: "They took all the cash out of my banks, and sold my ranch and all the cattle at public auction. Then, in the process of losing everything, my wife and I got a divorce."

"So, what will you do now?" I asked.

"Find some way to get back to the oilpatch. Right now, I'm trying to sell this polymer asphalt sealer. I had a chemist to develop it for me. Works real good. Keeps roads from deteriorating. But, at the right point in time you'll see Buddy Gill back in Midland. I've got to be selling something ... inventing something ... making money. I'll be a millionaire again," he rambled.

"Don't doubt him for one minute," said a mutual friend, when I called him and told him I had seen Buddy Gill. "He will be a millionaire again."

And so it goes. And so goes the magic that fuels Midland.

Each jukebox holds 80 records, for 160 selections, plus 40 video selections that are displayed on a 25-inch monitor. When non-video selections are displayed, customized commercial messages can be shown on the screen, such as "Eat Joe's Pizza."

Programming is the key to the success of video jukeboxes, Reinert said. Recent advances in videotape duplication allow new tapes to be sent out each month, he said, while laser videodisks are more costly and take more time to reproduce.

Not so, at least for volume production, said Thom Kidrin, president of Laser Video Music Inc. of Cambridge, Mass. Kidrin said that master tapes from record companies could be transferred to optical laser disks in three days.

The 12-inch laser disk offers superior video images to tape, and includes the advantage of digital sound, he said.

GAS

Producer gas pools don't provide immediate end-user marketability, but allow small producers to package their deliverability into more substantial volumes. Pooling gas can give producers greater credibility as a secure source of supply and can help them avoid additional charges against dwindling gas revenues, explains Charles Kuss, of Smart & Kuss, a Midland natural gas consulting firm.

Purchasers, particularly LDCs, are becoming increasingly reluctant to deal in small gas volumes. For example, SoCal Gas has announced that effective Dec. 1, it will no longer accept supplies in packages smaller than 10 MMcfd, because of the anticipated increase in the administrative and dispatching work load resulting from working with numerous suppliers, rather than EPGM.

Producers at local gas marketing meetings have voiced concerns over the apparently complex schedule of gathering fees assessed by El Paso in getting gas from the wellhead to the company's main line.

The intricate schedule of "unbundled transportation rates" approved under El Paso's Order 436 rate case will apply only to gas moved into "incremental markets," explains Art Hammell, director of gas transportation and exchange for El Paso. Gas moving into "displaced markets," those using gas directly or indirectly from EPNG during the past 12 months, is subject to a 10 percent field fuel shrinkage gathering fee. In addition, El Paso retains natural gas liquids removed from the gas stream, but makes up the difference in added gas to "keep the Btu whole," meaning that the producer receives the full Btu equivalent of 90 percent of the wellhead production volume.

Citigas' Crawford says that producers should not be scared off by the apparently high gathering fees associated with incremental market gas for several reasons. First, "there are sufficient displaced markets to absorb the Permian Basin production thrown off-line by the El Paso decision."

Secondly, "FERC won't allow exorbitant gathering and transportation rates. The commission is dedicated to their decision to make 'railroads' — strictly transportation conduits — out of the interstate natural gas system and will see to it that rates are reasonable."

And third, "Producers with non-operating working interests in wells may find themselves left out of their operator's gas sales plans and be left to make their own arrangments."

An additional complication on the horizon is that in the advent of implementation of FERC Order 451, currently set for Dec. 18, large volumes of shut-in, dedicated old gas may be automatically abandoned by pipeline companies and be available to the market. Several major gas producers are already staffing up and making plans to market that gas in that event, according to Ireland of GasMark.

While marketers are finding some producers hesitant to fully commit to contracting with end-users either through independent marketing programs or brokers, Crawford says his company has been contracting nearly 50 MMcfd of gas daily in the last two weeks. GasMark officials say they hope to have their existing West Coast contract obligations filled with committed production by the end of the year and are signing up additional volumes daily to that end.

The outlook for gas demand is unclear as well. Hadson Corp., which is involved in gas marketing through its Hadson Gas Systems subsidiary, expects natural gas consumption to decline from its current 16.5 trillion cubic feet (Tcf) per year to 15 Tcf in the next 10 years.

Crawford doubts that demand will slip that dramatically and says, in fact, it may well come back to 17 Tcf within the next year or two.

Administration gives up plan to shut down SBA

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Reagan administration has been trying to hang a going-out-of-business sign on the Small Business Administration for the last two years, but now the 33-year-old agency has a new lease on life.

After spending most of this year and last trying to ax the agency for its ineffectiveness, the White House has abandoned its plan to close the SBA's credit operation, sell its loan portfolio and give the rest of its programs to the Department of Commerce.

"The SBA will continue as an independent agency" but must achieve a "revival and refocusing," Charles Heatherly, acting administrator of the SBA, told a crowd of about 100 small-business people gathered Thursday at the Los Angeles Area Chamber of Commerce.

"I believe that the SBA stands at a crossroads and at a historic opportunity that may not come again in this century," said the controversial administrator, who was named in April to champion the break-up of the agency.

"We need a new SBA," he said. "We ... deserve an SBA that's worthy of the dynamism and creativity and sheer courage and toughness of the small business community."

The Small Business Administration provides loan guarantees and direct loans to small companies, gives management assistance and access to government contracts and acts as an advocate for the nation's more than 14 million small businesses.

The Small Business Administration is considering the possibility of raising some loan fees, instituting fees for some services and tightening loan eligibility requirements to reduce the cost of the agency's programs, Heatherly said.

"We don't want to impose any new user fees that will impair the program itself. I know there's some skepticism about that," he said. "We don't intend to use user fees as a back-door way of undermining programs."

The plan to dismember the Small Business Administration was dropped because "it was recognized that it was just not politically doable," Heatherly said in an interview. The administration lacked the necessary support in Congress to get its proposal enacted, and small business took on the agency as a "symbolic issue," he said.

"It was seen by many people as an attack on small business itself, which was never the intent," Heatherly said.

The first hint that the administration had given up its Small Business Administration phase-out plan came in August when White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan told the 1,800 delegates gathered at the White House Conference on Small Business in Washington that a permanent SBA administrator would be named soon. Heatherly said Thursday that he was not a candidate for the job, which he expected to be filled early next year.

"I think there was a conscious decision to wait until after the November elections (to pick a nominee) to see what the new crop of ex-congressmen might yield," he quipped in his speech.

Heatherly has drawn fire in a position he described as "banner-carrier" at the Small Business Administration for the Reagan administration. When the former SBA deputy administrator was named acting administrator seven months ago, he promptly fired six of the agency's 10 regional administrators.

During his speech Thursday, Heatherly was questioned closely about the possible plans for new or higher fees and tougher loan eligibility requirements. At one point, he was grilled by a private SBA lender about the growing length of time it takes to process loan applications.

The SBA's effectiveness "varies from program to program and region to region," Heatherly said in the interview.

Production rate continued at 100 percent by TRC

Austin — The Texas Railroad Commission has continued the state's oil production for December 1986 at 100 percent of market demand.

The commission continued the top production allowable after reviewing oil companies' nominations to buy a total of 2,064,566 barrels of Texas oil per day. The December nomination total, a decrease of 4,837 barrels daily when compared to November purchaser nominations, indicates market demand. December 1985 nominations totaled 2,245,610 barrels daily.

December nominations for the purchase of Texas gas totaled 21,704,422 Mcfd, while November nominations totaled 21,526,939 Mcfd. December 1985 nominations amounted to 21,563,109 Mcfd.

Nugent notes improvement in state statistics

Austin — Amid the worst downturn in the history of the state's oil and gas industry, RRC chairman James E. Nugent says there are some positive signs in the drilling and exploration statistics coming into the Commission.

Nugent said the number of drilling applications, reports of new wells drilled, and well completion reports received in October all reflected increases over the previous month. The relative stability in world oil markets over the last two months, coupled with the normal year-end rise in well drilling to hold leases and realize tax benefits, represents some rare good news for beleagured oil and gas operators, he said.

Nugent says 1,401 drilling applications were received in October, an increase of 94 over the previous month. Reports of new wells drilled were up 158 to 1,106, and completed wells rose by 68 to 840.

"It's too early to call this upward move a trend," he said, "but it has to be encouraging to an industry that's seen the bottom fall out since the first of the year."

From selling to stitching and back again

Business began by fulfilling a need

NEW YORK (AP) — Twelve years ago, Jane Schaffhausen Trimble had a problem. She couldn't find on Seventh Avenue, or anywhere else, enough of the kind of dresses she wanted to sell in her small women's apparel chain.

So she decided to get out of retailing and into making just the dresses she knew from her own experience were in demand.

Today, hordes of women wear Mrs. Trimble's easily recognizable Belle France dresses — prim, floral prints in cool colors with white lace collars.

And Mrs. Trimble, 57, presides over an expanding, multimillion-dollar family venture that has come full circle and is back into retailing.

AP LaserPhoto

Jane Schaffhausen Trimble presides over an expanding multi-million-dollar family fashion venture. She holds a variety of print patterns she designed in her business which she has taken from retail, to manufacture and back into retailing.

"Usually, filling a need is a good way to start a business," said Mrs. Trimble, who — it is immediately obvious — is absolutely print-crazy.

The stylist's fashion district office is decorated a combination leopard and rose print, but in a salmon color. And all of her employees are under orders to wear only Belle France dresses, so everywhere you look are swatches, larger samples and planning boards of prints.

"I do about 200 prints a year, which is a lot of prints," Mrs. Trimble said.

Her inspirations come from museums, the theater, print archives.

"They have a limited lifespan, but a good print can be resurrected for years," Mrs. Trimble said.

She is currently fascinated with 1930s designs.

That's not surprising since she grew up in that decade in Paris. Her father was writer Bravig Imbs. Her mother was a Latvian countess.

Mrs. Trimble, who worked as a child model for French high fashion designers, was surrounded with writers and artists. Gertrude Stein was her godmother. Alice B. Toklas baked her cookies. Marcel Duchamp gave her drawing lessons and Henry Miller played children's games with her.

Later, she attended Vassar College, and was graduated Phi Beta Kappa.

Then she found herself in Birmingham, Mich., newly married to a lawyer and with nothing to do. So she and a friend opened a clothing store called the Village Store.

Mrs. Trimble's talents were immediately obvious.

"I already had a lot of style. People had always asked me to choose their clothes, to borrow my clothes," Mrs. Trimble said.

Her business grew to five stores by the time she was 28 years old. It eventually expanded to 12.

But then there was that problem.

"You couldn't find attractive, feminine, pretty everyday dresses. Impossible," Mrs. Trimble said.

So in 1974, she started her new business here, although she had not had any formal training in fashion design.

And she created her distinctive look.

"You either love it or hate it," said Mrs. Trimble. "We have a very faithful clientele. It's a narrow but very deep following."

Mrs. Trimble the growing number of working women needed just the kind of dresses she wanted to sell.

"I hate suits. I am waging my own private war against suits," she said. "Women should not look like men."

And suits are uncomfortable and take time to coordinate, she said. "I have a 10-minute allotment to get dressed in the morning."

She does produce more "sober" dresses for bankers and lawyers, but: "We still don't sell neutral. No beige, never."

Her clients aren't only businesswomen, however. They range from students to movie stars to matrons.

"There are about 3 million or 4 million dresses out there. I'll see one on Park Avenue: 'Oh, my god, we sold that one in 1975.' People don't throw them out," Mrs. Trimble said.

But she updates her lines, dropping waists here and adding shoulder pads there. "It can move along with fashion," Mrs. Trimble said.

Belle France sells about 250,000 dresses annually. The company produces a line of 80 dresses for each of the year's five seasons.

The dresses, which cost an average of $140 each, are sold in 2,000 stores and in catalogs.

Mrs. Trimble travels to Europe repeatedly to work on fabric design, and 75 percent on the dresses, which are mostly made of rayon, are made overseas.

In recent years, Mrs. Trimble has expanded her product line.

She now sells $250 evening dresses and sportswear and petite selections. This year, she is introducing wedding and bridesmaid dresses, and larger sizes — 14 to 33.

And she has returned to retailing.

"I realized I was running into this terrible stumbling block. Stores always want to push you back into what you sold last year; it sold a lot."

She added: "You have to be a merchant, too. You can't design in a vacuum."

Belle France has opened five stores the last two years: two in New York, and one each in Beverly Hills, Calif., Boston, and Washington, D.C.

The company hopes to open stores in all the nation's major cities.

And, Mrs. Trimble said, "We're now going to push in malls."

In addition, the company has 14 franchises that sell only Belle France products in smaller markets.

"We feel they are better run by a local person," Mrs. Trimble said.

Belle France's revenues totaled $26 million in fiscal 1986, which ended Sept. 30, a gain of 10 percent to 15 percent over the previous year, she said.

Belle France has been profitable in all but one of its 12 years, she said.

Mrs. Trimble serves as chairman of the company, which has 110 employees.

Her 32-year-old son, Sam Watters, serves as president and chief executive officer. Her daughter, Valeska Watters, 28, is vice president for sales and merchandising.

Belle France has licensed to other companies maternity wear, patterns, and fabrics for retail.

The company is considering entering the home furnishings market and children's clothes.

But Mrs. Trimble said: "We don't want to grow too fast. When you grow too fast, you make a lot of mistakes."

In her leisure time, Mrs. Trimble hits the stores.

"I'm a shopper," she said.

She has a particular fondness for shoes: she owns 120 pairs.

Gulf phase-out almost complete

PITTSBURGH (AP) — When executives Fred Kellinger and Jim Stevenson go to lunch on the ground floor of the Gulf Oil Corp. building, they often call it "the last staff meeting."

Gulf, once one of the world's mightiest oil companies, has been reduced to just 11 employees, and the company's former headquarters, a 44-story building in downtown Pittsburgh, stands virtually empty.

"It's like a mausoleum," said Stevenson, a personnel executive who worked 19 years for Gulf.

As recently as 1981, Gulf had more than 3,100 employees crowded into its art-deco style headquarters and a suburban research center. Then came staff cutbacks, a takeover attempt by oilman T. Boone Pickens in 1983 and the $13.3 billion "white knight" acquisition by Chevron Corp. in March 1984.

"You have to feel good about the fact that we were able to last longer than most," said Stevenson. "But, emotionally, it's been very draining. A lot of people couldn't take the sadness of losing their friends one by one."

Since 1983, the headquarters staff has been all but eliminated, the building has been sold to three New York investors and the research center has been donated to the University of Pittsburgh.

Gulf's payroll is seven in Pittsburgh and four in San Francisco. By year's end, all will be gone except for two tax experts.

Kellinger, former manager of executive staff services, is in charge of the Pittsburgh phase-out, which ranges from shipping records and furniture to Chevron headquarters in San Francisco to answering dozens of daily telephone calls from Gulf retirees and former employees who have questions about their benefits.

The building still has an outplacement office where laid-off employees can use typewriters, telephones and copying machines in their job searches.

Retailers gambling on high-tech toy season

NEW YORK (AP) — Toy guns that shoot beams of infrared light and a second-generation menagerie of talking animals will help determine whether retailers chortle "ho ho ho" or sigh "ho-hum" over their sales this Christmas season.

High-tech toys are among the few standouts foreseen by industry analysts and retailers, who expect only mediocre sales increases overall this year in the $12 billion toy market.

Some computerized cuddles come as plush toys, which have evolved into a number of new "life" forms since the species first appeared in the form of Teddy Ruxpin last year.

Action toys, from 22-year-old GI Joe to ultra-modern Lazer Tag, also are considered some of the most popular picks.

"So far there doesn't appear to be a single blockbuster hit in the toy industry as in past years when we had products such as Cabbage Patch (Kids) or Trivial Pursuit, which were big successes," said Charles Riotto, marketing projects director for the Toy Manufacturers of America.

Sales also are hindered by low supplies. Some shipments have been delayed because of production problems stemming from new technology, analysts say.

This is apparently the case for the electronic light guns marketed by Worlds of Wonder as Lazer Tag and by LJN Toys Ltd. as Photon. The space-age version of tag, at $40 to $70 for the basic equipment, includes a pistol and sensor badge — a target worn by a player that beeps when hit by the gun's infrared light beam — and with Photon, a sensor helmet.

A few of this year's projected best sellers are already proven hits, including Worlds of Wonder's trend-setting Teddy Ruxpin, a talking, animated stuffed bear and Tonka's Pound Puppies line of stuffed dogs.

This year's shoppers will encounter the second generation of these critters, some of which build on the idea of Teddy Ruxpin, who talks and moves his eyes and mouth when a child inserts a cassette tape.

Some toy animals can echo a child's own words and other computer chip-controlled creatures make up random, sometimes interactive sentences.

Interactive versions include Hasbro's Yakkity Yaks, under the identities of Bingo Bear and Montgomery Monkey, Coleco Industries Inc.'s Talking Wrinkles, and Lewis Galoob Toys Inc.'s Baby Talk. A child operates the toy's mouth like a puppet or touches the figure in various places and it makes random remarks in response.

Interactive creatures such as the Yakkity Yaks will ask the child to do something on their own, such as give the toy a hug, and won't respond further until the child does so. Those figures do not need a cassette player, so can be made more soft and cuddly, say the manufacturers.

The interactive and chip-controlled toys range from $60 to $70, although some run a bit higher.

"All of these items are really great because they're entertaining, not only to the child but also to the parents," said Angela Bourdon, corporate spokeswoman of Toys "R" Us, the nation's biggest toy retailer.

There also are modern versions of traditional toys, or toys that have become perennial favorites.

Hasbro's Jem and the Holograms rock 'n' roll theme dolls are going head-to-head with Mattel's Barbie and the Rockers. Ms. Bourdon said both dolls have the same general persona, with Jem posing as an executive by day and fronting a rock group at night, with available stages, lights and cameras. Jem also has a social conscience, funneling profits from her record company into a home for runaway girls.

The toy picked by some to be this year's best seller is an old soldier. Hasbro's GI Joe line, revamped in 1982 into a smaller form from the original 12-inch dogface that first appeared in 1964, was named by retail store toy buyers nationwide as the 1986 best seller in a survey by Playthings magazine.

Another updated perennial is a computerized version of Ohio Art Co.'s 27-year-old Etch-A-Sketch, which some analysts say illustrates renewed popularity of toys that Baby Boomers had in their childhood and now want to buy for their own children.

In its survey of buyers representing more than 5,400 toy retailing outlets nationwide, Playthings came up with the following list of the season's best-selling toys:

—Hasbro's GI Joe line
—Tonka's Pound Puppies
—Mattel's Barbie and the Rockers
—Worlds of Wonder's Teddy Ruxpin
—Kenner's MASK
—Galoob's Baby Talk
—Playmates' Cricket
—AmToy's Madballs
—Mattel's Muscles
—LJN's World Wrestling Federation Superstars.

Toy sales in 1985 grew by more than $1 billion to about $12 billion. Analysts say this Christmas may be only a so-so season.

Hallmark loses first round in card suit

DENVER (AP) — A small company that claims its successful line of greeting cards was copied by Hallmark Cards Inc. has won a federal court injunction ordering the industry giant to pull the disputed cards from store shelves.

U.S. District Judge Jim Carrigan ordered Hallmark to pull the 83 cards of its Personal Touch line from store shelves while a $50 million lawsuit brought by Blue Mountain Arts of Boulder, Colo., is resolved.

Carrigan said Hallmark's Personal Touch cards are so similar in appearance to Blue Mountain's AireBrush Feelings and WaterColor Feelings lines that "there exists a likelihood of confusion" for customers.

Blue Mountain Arts claims in its suit that unfair competition from Hallmark is stifling sales of its cards featuring personal, emotional, blank-verse messages.

"Naturally, we are disappointed in this judgment and concerned about its implications for the entire greeting card industry," Hallmark spokesman Charles W. Hucker said from the company's base in Kansas City. "The court has effectively granted Blue Mountain Arts a perpetual monopoly."

Hucker said Hallmark will appeal the ruling "because we have strong feelings about the correctness of our position."

Hallmark's Personal Touch cards were designed "to compete fairly and directly with Blue Mountain, filling a consumer demand," Hucker said. "The consumers are the ultimate losers for their choices for this type of card and now have been severely limited."

Blue Mountain Arts is owned by Stephen and Susan Polis Schutz.

"We are fighting for the rights of artists to protect what they create," Susan Schutz said during a hearing on the suit last month.

Susan Polis Schutz and her husband Stephen developed the highly successful Blue Mountains Arts greeting cards in 1971 and are suing Hallmark Cards, claiming that the greeting card giant copied their work.

The Schutzes developed their card style in 1971 and founded Blue Mountain Arts shortly afterwards. They said their firm has sold more than 200 million cards and has been voted the top greeting cardmaker in the United States the past two years by Retail Market Report.

Moore said Hallmark's Personal Touch line was introduced in 1977.

Texas auto sales boom in September

AUSTIN (AP) — Business for Texas auto dealers boomed in September due to the low-interest and no-interest incentive programs offered by U.S. automakers, the Texas Automobile Dealers Association reported.

Because of the incentives, the state recorded a 21 percent increase in new vehicle registrations over the previous month, the association said Tuesday.

"The most recent registration numbers confirm our reports that the new car and truck showrooms were packed with buyers in September," said association president Gene Fondren.

New car registrations in September totaled 67,625, up from 55,864 during August, the group reported.

Despite the increase, registrations still showed the ill effects of the sagging Texas economy. New car and truck registrations in September were lower than for the same month in 1985, Fondren said.

New car registrations were down almost 13.4 percent in September from the 78,082 in September 1985. Year-to-date new car registrations were down 8.8 percent, to 478,306, compared with the first nine months of 1985.

New truck registrations in September dropped 5.3 percent to 42,994 from September 1985. Year-to-date new truck registrations were down, too, with 300,655 for the first nine months of 1986, compared with 331,394 for the same period of 1985.

Fondren said he still predicts that 1986 new car and truck registrations will be the fourth-highest in Texas history.

"Looking at the change noteed when comparing 1986 to 1985 can be deceptive. Texas had record new car and truck registrations last year," he said.

Nike recalls promotional stuffed bears

BEAVERTON, Ore. (AP) — Nike Inc. said it is voluntarily recalling 25,000 stuffed toy bears given away in a sales promotion because the bears have small parts which could choke young children.

The stuffed bears were imported by Superior Toy & Novelty Corp. of Kansas City, Mo., and distributed in a sales promotion Sept. 4-14 by Mervyn's department stores in Oregon, Arizona, California, Colorado, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Washington.

The eyes on the bears may separate and present a hazard to children who put them in their mouths, according to Kevin Brown, a Nike spokesman.

Consumers should return the stuffed bears to the footwear department of the nearest Mervyn's store. A certificate for a $5 credit on the next purchase of Nike athletic shoes from Mervyn's will be issued for each bear returned, Nike officials said.

Nike and Superior announced the recall in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Safety Product Safety Commission in Washington, D.C., Brown said. No injuries involving the toys have been reported, however, Brown added.

For further information on the recall, consumers may call Mervyn's Consumer Affairs Department at 415/786-7000, collect.

Arlington to require gas price postings

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A new city ordinance will require gasoline dealers within 300 feet of Arlington's three major highways to post prices on signs visible from access roads.

The action, approved tentatively Tuesday by the Arlington City Council, was triggered by complaints that some stations near the Six Flags Over Texas amusement park were gouging tourists by not posting prices that are as much as double what other dealers charge.

The ordinance was approved by a vote of 6-3. It requires dealers within 300 feet of Texas Highway 360, Interstate 30 and Interstate 20 to post prices not only on pumps but on signs visible from the street.

One station near Six Flags was charging as high as $1.59 per gallon while other stations were charging less than 80 cents per gallon.

If approved again next week, the ordinance will carry a maximum fine of $200 a day for violations.

Bill Roesler, who has been charging $1.49 per gallon for full service extra unleaded gasoline at the Exxon station he manages, opposes the ordinance.

"If I'm a customer, and I drive in here, and I don't like what I see on the pump, I don't have to pay it," he said. "I can drive right out."

Forced compliance with the new ordinance will be a "pain in the neck," Roesler said, adding that dealers don't have time to display their prices.

The next meeting of the Permian Basin chapter of the American Petroleum Institute will be Dec. 2 at Greentree Country Club. Social hour will begin at 5:30 p.m. with dinner at 6:30 p.m. Price of the dinner will be $15 and a cash bar will be available.

Oil marketers plan district meeting

Members of the Texas Oil Marketers Association in a 15-county area surrounding Midland will hold a district meeting at 11:30 a.m. on Dec. 3 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa in Midland. Special focus of the meeting will be the insurance liability crisis and tort reform efforts planned for the 70th Legislative Session.

Oil marketers and other business owners are concerned not only with the insurance availability problem, but also with rising premiums, due in part to excessive claims awards. According to TOMA President Lynton Allred of Hereford, "Businesses with good records have had their insurance premiums tripled and in some cases quadrupled — when they can secure coverage at all. Oil marketers are concerned with the situation and are meeting now to make plans for dealing with the problem and restoring a fair and equitable civil justice system."

Allred will share the program with TOMA District Director Jerry Smith of Fort Stockton. In addition to the tort reform discussion, marketers will be briefed on legislative issues they may face in the 70th Session.

Cities Service executives retire

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Cities Service Oil & Gas Corp. has announced the retirement of four vice presidents a week after it was revealed the company would be consolidated with other Occidental Petroleum Corp. subsidiaries.

Cities Service merged with Los Angeles-based Occidental in 1982 and has served as Occidental's domestic oil and gas exploration and production arm.

The company announced last week that the Tulsa operation would be consolidated with Occidental subsidiaries based in Bakersfield, Calif., and Houston, Texas. The move will consolidate domestic and international oil and gas exploration and production work.

The resulting subsidiary, Occidental Oil and Gas Corp., will be based in Tulsa. David Hentschel, chairman and chief executive officer for Cities, will retain those positions with the new subsidiary.

Officials whose retirement was announced by the company are: C.H. Adams, executive vice president of exploration and production; Robert Dillsaver, senior vice president of employee relations and services; B.C. Frihart, vice president of government affairs; and William H. Heyland, vice president of management information systems.

Officials said last week that 300 jobs would be cut in the Occidental consolidation.

Cities Service employed more than 20,000 people before the merger. Since 1982, employment has declined to about 4,000 with 1,800 employees remaining in Tulsa.
