Therapy for cerebral palsy victims is horseplay

When it comes to therapy, there's no horsing around.

Unless, of course, it's at the Midland Cerebral Palsey Center, where children are mounting up as part of a growing trend by those who work with the disabled.

"Hippotherapy" (hippo is Greek for 'horse'), a highly-effective method of teaching children with muscular disabilities how to better control those muscles, will soon be a regular program at the center, according to therapist, Caren Kelly.

"We used to have somone who would come out several times a year," she said. "But we're trying to offer it twice a week."

Ms. Kelly and several others have formed a committee to develop the program and raise funds.

Hijackers seize airliner with Americans aboard

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Hijackers seized an Athens-to-Rome TWA flight today with 153 people aboard, mostly Americans. Several women hostages who were freed said the hijackers terrorized passengers, beating them and threatening to blow up the plane.

The hijackers, reportedly armed with grenades, machine guns and pistols, forced the plane to fly to Algiers after ordering it to Beirut for refueling.

Two American women passengers who were released in Beirut reported shots were fired, and one said a man was wounded.

The airport in Algiers, the capital of Algeria, was closed to all other traffic. Authorities gave the hijacked jet permission to land after being told it was again running out of fuel, said the official Algerian news agency.

The gunmen had demaned that the American ambassador to Algeria be at the airport. In Washington, D.C., President Reagan said, "We're doing everything that can be done," to get the hostages released, but he couldn't talk about details.

While in Beirut for 2½ hours, the hijackers freed at least 17 women and two children, who were then flown on a Lebanese plane to Larnaca, Cyprus.

An official at the Athens airport said it "appears probable the hijackers boarded the plane in Athens." Airport officials, however, said it was not clear how the arms got aboard the plane, which had come from Cairo.

Initial reports said three hijackers boarded the Boeing 727. But Lebanese Transportation Ministry spokesman Ziad Kassem told The Associated Press there were only two gunmen. Freed passengers said they saw only two.

The hijacking was the third this week involving the Beirut airport.

One freed hostage, Irma Garza of Laredo, Texas, said in Larnaca, Cyprus that the hijackers had shot a black man, apparently a passenger, in the neck. She said the man did not appear to be in serious condition, adding she did not know why he was shot.

She said two young gunmen ordered passengers to put their hands behind their heads and confiscated their passports.

Frances Reynolds, 67, from the Chicago area, said: "There was some shooting but I didn't dare raise my head to see what was happening. (The hijackers) were beating people on the heads. I didn't see it, but I could hear the thumps."

She added, "The stewardesses said they (the hijackers) had a bag of grenades and were going to blow the plane up."

A yellow escape chute was lowered from the plane's front door. The freed passengers slid down to the tarmac and raced to a fire station, where they were picked up by airport vehicles and an ambulance.

Reporters in Beirut said the freed passengers appeared stunned. "Are you a good guy or a bad guy?" a white-haired woman with an American accent screamed at a British journalist. "My husband's still on board with the others."

TWA officials in Beirut said the flight had eight crew members and 145 passengers, mostly Americans. David Venz, TWA spokesman in New York, said the airline was not releasing the names of the pilot, passengers or crew "for security reasons."

Asked if he knew where the hijackers boarded the plane, Venz said, "I just have no way of knowing yet."

Dan Howard, public affairs officer of the U.S. Embassy in Cyprus, said the freed passengers reported two hijackers who had been sitting in the plane's rear seats got up 15 minutes after it left Athens and "raced to the cockpit."

"Then one of them came out and brandishing a gun, he ordered the stewardesses to place their hands on top of their heads," he said.

Two male passengers "were roughed up and tied up," he added. He did not mention the shooting incident related by Mrs. Garza.

Drug raid results in arrests of 35 suspected dealers

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

The Midland county and city jails were stuffed to overflowing with suspected drug dealers this morning after a task force of local, state and federal law-enforcement officers arrested 35 people in a massive Thursday night raid.

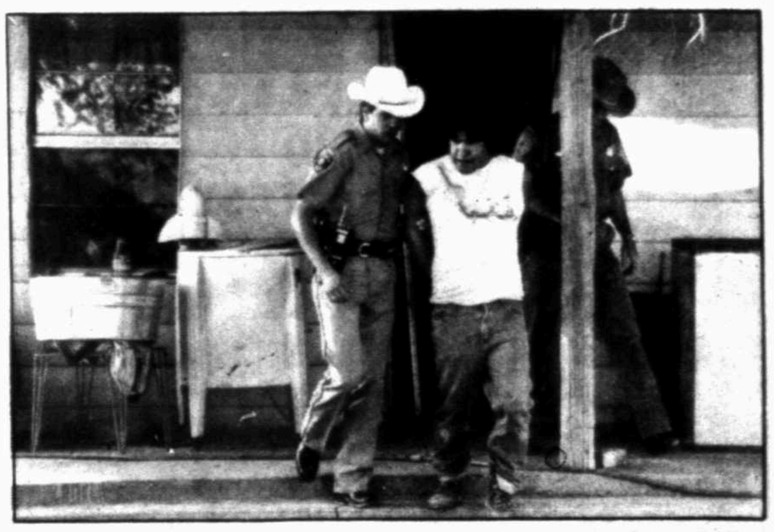

It was described as one of the largest such operations in Midland history.

"We had about 70 officers involved," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter this morning. The raid also netted five vehicles, about seven pounds of suspected marijuana and a small amount of suspected cocaine, he added. There was no trouble with any of the arrests.

Painter initiated the undercover operation when he took office in January, and six months of planning culminated in Thursday's arrests. A Midland grand jury handed down 73 sealed indictments Wednesday against 51 suspected drug dealers, some of whom were already in custody or had moved out of the county, Painter said. About 30 of the indictments resulted from tips from the Crime Stoppers program.

About 10 were still being sought this morning, he said. Of those arrested Thursday, 28 had been among those indicted, "and we wound up with seven extras."

Suit against MMH settled out of court for $50,000

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

A $7.4 million lawsuit against Midland Memorial Hospital for negligence was settled out of court for $50,000 Thursday.

"We're very happy about the settlement," said MMH President Ray Branson after the agreement was approved by 142nd District Judge Pat Baskin. "It completely closes this proceeding."

By settling, Branson said the hospital wasn't conceding any negligence on the part of its nurses in the Oct. 2, 1980 birth of Cassidy Wayne Hamilton, who is severely retarded.

"We're buying our peace," said David M. Davis, the Austin lawyer who was representing the hospital in the suit. According to Davis, plaintiff Ricky Hamilton had agreed never to make any further claims of negligence in connection with his son's birth, and it was worth $50,000 to the hospital not to plagued with the threat of another suit for years to come.

Neither Hamilton nor his lawyer, Gerald K. Fugit of Odessa, could be reached for comment after the settlement.

Their suit had alleged that Cassidy's retardation resulted from questionable treatment given him by MMH nurses in the absence of any doctors. Marilyn Hamilton's scheduled doctor, Jesse L. Coleman, and the doctor who actually delivered the baby, John W. Young Jr., settled out of court with the Hamiltons a year ago. Each doctor agreed to pay $100,000, and the money was put into a fund for Cassidy's care.

Marilyn Hamilton, who was listed as a plaintiff along with her husband on Cassidy's behalf, died of a heart attack May 24. Her $3,000 share of the $50,000 settlement will apparently be used to pay for her funeral expenses.

Fugit got about $16,667 of the settlement; Ricky Hamilton received $3,000; and the balance of about $27,333 will be added to the money received from the doctors to pay for Cassidy's care.

The child, now 4, is blind, almost completely deaf, epileptic, and without control of his muscles.

There was courthouse speculation that a possible reason for the plaintiff's decision to settle for only $50,000 was the probability that the Tort Claims Act would have limited any award to $100,000, even if the jury had awarded them the $7.4 million they asked for.

Mrs. Hamilton's family suffers from a genetic disorder which has left three of her brothers retarded. But the suit contended that Cassidy's retardation was much more severe than that of his uncles, and was due not to genetics but to fetal distress caused by hospital negligence during his mother's difficult labor.

Baptists express hope for calmer, friendlier times ahead

DALLAS (AP) — A stormy, divisive Southern Baptist Convention, the largest in the denomination's history, has ended with fundamentalists more firmly entrenched and moderates thrown on the defensive.

But both sides expressed hopes Thursday for calmer, friendlier times ahead through a newly established "peace committee" representing both sides, to explore causes of the rift and recommend ways to mend it.

The severity of the division showed up in the last 24 hours of the three-day meeting as the moderate wing strove unsuccessfully to stop a fundamentalist drive for more power over the nation's largest Protestant body.

Moderates' attempts to intervene Wednesday night and Thursday were squelched by the re-elected, fundamentalist president, the Rev. Charles Stanley of Atlanta. At the close, he voiced appreciation for the patience of the delegates, who numbered twice as many as at any convention in the denomination's 140-year history, adding:

"If I have offended anyone in any way, I ask forgiveness. I did the best I know how for 45,000 messengers."

He had rankled some moderates, many of whom complained of arbitrary, and sometimes bylaws-breaking rulings from the chair that stymied their floor efforts and solidified fundamentalist advances.

"We believe in the right to speak and we do not believe in dictatorship in the U.S.S.R., Cuba or on the platform of this convention," protested the Rev. William Johnson of Denton, Texas, before he was ruled out of order.

Several others also were summarily cut off Thursday in procedural challenges of the convention's approval the night before of a powerful committee appointed by the president.

That committee picks trustees governing the denomination's 20 national agencies and institutions, with estimated assets of more than $2 billion and annual budgets totaling $130 million.

Fundamentalist wing have sought to control the national agencies, including seminaries, by winning the presidency and its appointive powers.

Inflation rate up .2 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rising energy prices more than offset sharply lower food costs in May and sent the wholesale inflation rate up 0.2 percent, the government said today.

The 3.4 percent gain in energy prices compared with a 5.8 percent increase in the preceding month. Analysts have said the spurt in such costs, which began in March, probably has about run its course. Evidence of softening on world petroleum markets is already evident.

Food, the other major component of the Labor Department's Producer Price Index, fell 1.1 percent in May, the sharpest drop since an identical decline in April 1984. Those prices have not risen since December and have showed declines in four of the last five months.

The largest declines were for fresh vegetables and fruits, beef and veal, fish and coffee. Prices rose modestly for bakery goods, pork and poultry.

May's 0.2 percent overall increase followed a 0.3 percent rise in April and a 0.2 percent gain in March. Revised figures issued today showed wholesale prices were flat in January and February.

For the first five months of 1985, inflation at the wholesale level was running at an annual rate of 1.8 percent. The May figure, if extended for 12 straight months, would translate to a 2.5 percent annual rate.

Wholesale prices for the last 12 months were up 1.1 percent. Most analysts have said that, with the big increases in energy costs mostly over, the rate for all of 1985 is not likely to be much more than that, in part, also, because of continued low farm prices and a steady decline in prices for goods at the crude level, such as cotton.

Prices for crude materials, for example, fell 0.8 percent in May, the seventh decrease in the last eight months. Most of the crude material price fluctuations eventually work their way into the price calculations for finished goods.

Prices for consumer goods other than food and energy were up 0.2 percent in today's report, following a 0.2 percent decline in the preceding month. One of the sharpest gains was a 1.6 percent increase in alcoholic beverage prices.

Gasoline prices were up 3.8 percent after a 9.5 percent rise in the preceding month. Heating oil rose 0.4 percent after a 10.2 percent gain. Natural gas prices, however, rose 4.7 percent after a slight decline in the previous two months. All of the energy price calculations lag a month behind the rest of the index.

Some other details from the May index:

—Automobile prices rose 0.4 percent after a 0.2 percent decline in April. But light truck costs fell for the second straight month, down 0.2 percent after a 0.9 percent drop in April.

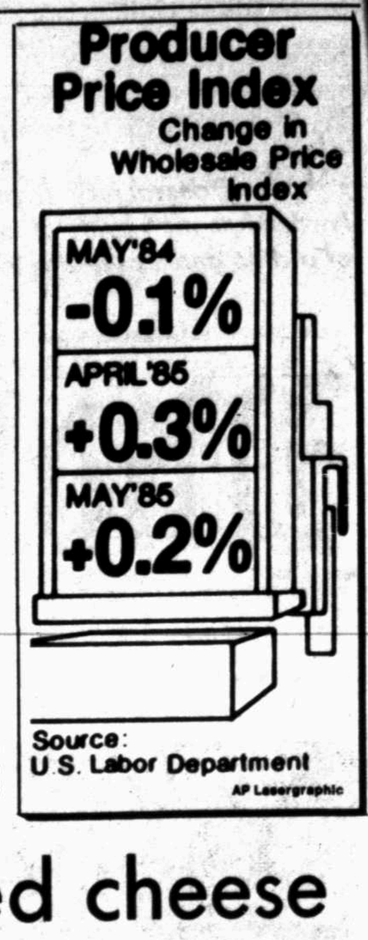

—Furniture prices, unchanged in April, rose 0.3 percent in May.

—Prescription drug prices rose 2.3 percent in May after holding steady in April.

—Shoe prices, off 0.2 percent in May, fell for the third straight month. But prices for luggage and other small leather goods were up for the third month running, rising a sharp 2.4 percent in May.

All the prices are adjusted for normal seasonal variations.

The wholesale price index for May stood at 294.2, meaning that goods and services costing $10 at the wholesale level in 1967 cost $29.42 last month.

Deaths linked to contaminated cheese

From Staff and Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Twenty-eight deaths or stillbirths out of 87 cases of sickness were linked to contaminated cheeses sold mostly to Hispanics, state health officials announced as they ordered the products removed from stores throughout California.

The manufacturer of the cheeses closed down voluntarily.

A spot check of several major Midland grocery outlets indicated that the cheese has not been distributed in the area.

Most victims of the flu-like illness that has struck since April were women and their children, and all were in Los Angeles and neighboring Orange counties. But state authorities Thursday ordered all cheese produced by Jalisco Mexican Products Inc. off market shelves.

The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said bacteria called Listeria monocytogenes were detected in samples of Jalisco cheese sent by Dr. Shirley Fannin, associate deputy director of health programs in Los Angeles County. She studied 50 to 60 different foods beginning in mid-May after health officials detected a link in a rash of influenza-like illnesses in the two counties.

Ms. Fannin said she learned Thursday that the cheese was contaminated.

Dr. Claire Broom, chief of the respiratory and special pathogens branch at the CDC, said Listeria monocytogenes, "attacks either people who have some underlying disease like cancer, or pregnant women.

"But not every pregnant woman who is exposed will become ill. You can't predict what's going to happen, you can just have a probability."

Ms. Fannin said the infection was being blamed for the deaths of 21 people in Los Angeles County since April. In Orange County, 16 illnesses, 14 of them among Hispanics, led to seven deaths, said Dr. Thomas Prendergast, a county epidemiologist.

Health officials said they realized in retrospect that the cases began two or three months ago in people who had eaten the Cotija and Queso Fresco brand cheeses manufactured by Jalisco.

But the pattern of infection emerged slowly because it involved numerous hospitals in two jurisdictions and the disease, with influenza-like symptoms, is not normally reported to health officials, Prendergast said. Officials said it can be treated with antibiotics.

Jalisco, named for a Mexican state, manufactures white, soft, mild-flavored cheeses often used in cooking. Its factory in Artesia was closed.

"We don't know if it's anything in our cheese," said Stephen Gigliotti, an attorney for the company. "Right now we are running tests and the government is running tests and we'll find out what it is."

Experts from the CDC are working with local health officers and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to inspect the plant and its shipping records, Ms. Broom said late Thursday.

"The CDC and FDA will notify the states where the cheese might have been distributed," she said. "We're also trying to pin down how the Listeria got into the cheese."

Ms. Fannin said the bacteria occur naturally in soil and animal viscera and should have been killed during pasteurization.

"Out of the 71 cases (of illness) that we've studied, 45 have occurred in either the mother, her child or both," she said, adding that "all but one were Hispanic."

State officials said the factory was closed indefinitely and all its cheese ordered stored until it could be collected.

The company notified retailers and distributors not to sell its cheese, said Gigliotti. The rest of its food products were not affected.

Ms. Fannin said about 80 percent of Jalisco's cheese is sold in Los Angeles and Orange counties and another 20 percent in other states and elsewhere in California. Jan Wassell of the state Department of Food and Agriculture said the plant manufactured about 9,000 pounds of cheese per day.

Checks with San Bernardino, Riverside, Ventura and San Diego counties revealed no cases there, Ms. Fannin said.

HORSES

"We got our start through the Midland Polo Association who has been holding a tournament for the last four weekends, with all proceeds going to the CP Center," she said.

Also contributing is the Midland CP Center Parents Association, which is holding a horse show in the fall.

"All the 'horse people' really help us," said Pat Baldwin, treasurer and mother of 4-year-old Austin, who has a general muscle weakness. "And we help them too by selling tickets at the shows."

Mrs. Baldwin watches as Austin straddles "Molly Brown", a Clydesdale-Thoroughbred "half-breed", who by her natural horse's gait, forces the boy into using muscles that he normally does not favor.

"The horse has basically three movements that work on the extensibility of the child's muscles," said Debbie Newcum, a CP Center therapist. "A lot of CP kids have high-toned or 'tight' muscles."

The warmth of the horse's body also helps to relax those muscles, said Ms. Newcum.

Austin, who does not have CP, has just the opposite problem.

"His muscles have low tone, which means they're sort of mushy, like a rag doll's," said Mrs. Baldwin. "Riding on the horse teaches him good balance and helps his self-esteem."

But to Austin, it's just plain fun.

Balanced in the Sur Cingles saddle, an English riding saddle which places the body into an erect position, he holds on tightly, as the large animal snorts and than gracefully plods slowly around the courtyard behind the center.

Sharing the saddle, with ever-ready arms to catch Austin should he begin to fall, is Byron Wilson, 21, a polo player, who donates his time to the CP Center's equestrian progam. Wilson holds the reins and guides the horse. Austin is just along for the ride.

The center currently, is depending on the generosity and expertise of Barbara Coe, owner of the Tack Rack and a regular participant in dressage, an equestrian event. The former owner of the shop, Emmy Detlof, was the first to offer her services to the center, which she did several times over a two-year period before selling the shop and moving.

"Molly Brown is a lot like Emmy's horse," said Ms. Coe. "She has a good attitude and likes children."

The horse, which also likes the newly mowed lawn behind the center, does not care for a ramp that was built for wheelchairs.

The structure, about 40 feet long and six feet high at its highest point, allows children in wheelchairs to mount the horse, by sliding on to its back from their chairs.

"She has to get used to the children and the ramp," said Ms. Coe. "For some reason, a child in a wheelchair on the ramp scares her."

The children, in general, do not fear the horse.

"Oh, some of them are scared, but we are planning on getting a film on horses that they can see before they get on the horse," said Ms. Kelly.

The idea of using horses in therapy is not new.

"Horses were first used in physical therapy in ancient Greece," said Natalie Bieber in a recent Dallas Morning News article. Ms. Bieber is a member of the National Board of Directors of the North American Riding for the Handicapped Association (NARHA).

She explained that in modern times, the British used the method to rehabilitate World War II veterans, followed by Scandinavian doctors who researched the idea in the late 1940s and early 1950s.

Therapeutic riding spread to the U.S. in the 1950s and was promoted further by Olympic rider, Liz Hartel, said Ms. Bieber.

"Ms. Hartel was an aspiring equestrian before she contracted polio," she said. "The doctors said she would never be able to walk again. Eventually, she won a silver medal in the 1952 Olympics."

"We know it works, although we don't really know why," she said.

RAID

To make room for Thursday's haul, 17 Midland County prisoners had been transferred to jails in Snyder and Garden City. This morning the County Jail had 18 new occupants from the raid, and another 17 were incarcerated in the City Jail.

"It's the first step in a long process of curbing the narcotics trade," Painter said. "We're going to start at the bottom and work our way up."

Besides the Sheriff's Office and the Police Department, the operation involved the Midland County District Attorney's Office, the Midland County Constable's Office, the Department of Public Safety, the Ector County Sheriff's Office, the Odessa Police Department, the Drug Enforcement Agency and the Texas Rangers.

Painter gave special thanks to the DA's office and the police department for helping prepare the massive operation.

"Chief (Wayne) Gideon and his people have extended a tremendous amount of help," he said.

The operation was directed mainly at street dealers, but Painter said the next step was to go after the larger traffickers.

"We're trying to take out the bottom part of the pyramid," he said. "These are the main street dealers here in Midland. As soon as we've got them out of the way, then we'll be going after the rest of them."

The operation, which used $12,417 in county money, could have been even larger in scope, "but we ran out of money," Painter said.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said the massive bust will help remind the public of a problem it often prefers to ignore.

"This brings to the public's attention that we do have a drug problem and we're trying to do something about it," he said.

Painter noted that the Midland-Odessa area "is a primary distribution point for this part of Texas" because of its interstate highway, its airport, and its proximity to Mexico.

"We put a pretty big dent in it tonight," he said.

But Gideon warned that even operations of this size aren't enough to completely eliminate the drug traffic, because the potential profits will always tempt someone to take a chance.

"I've been in law-enforcement all my life," he said. "I don't think we're ever going to work ourselves out of a job."

HIJACK

In a statement to reporters relayed by the Beirut control tower, one hijacker said the "organization of the oppressed in the world" was responsible for the hijacking. He demanded that all Lebanese Shiite Moslem guerrillas held by Israel be released to the Red Cross in Lebanon's southern port city of Sidon.

Israel is holding about 700 Lebanese, mostly Shiites, in prisons in northern Israel. Israel's Foreign Ministry said today it had no comment on the hijackers' demands.

The hijacker, speaking with a Lebanese accent, denounced what he called "American practices to control the Middle East."

The plane left Cairo, Egypt, as Flight 887, but became Flight 847 in Athens, Greece, according to TWA spokesman Stephen Heckscher in London. He said some passengers from Cairo may have remained on board after Athens.

BAPTISTS

Fundamentalists accuse moderates of taking a liberal approach to interpretating the Bible and want them curbed in denominatinal institutions. But moderates deny the charge, calling it a mask for a political takeover.

In any case, the fundamentalists strengthened their hold on the denomination, by winning Stanley's re-election and convention approval of two of his committees with broad powers — despite some disputed votes.

In a Wednesday night vote that approved the powerful trustee-naming committee on boards, the registrar, Lee Porter, said he had received numerous reports of extra ballots being passed out, but had no way to verify it.

Moderates attempted unsuccessfully to challenge procedures before that vote in which Stanley, backed by his parliamentarian, ruled that the convention could not make substitutions for the administration-approved slate.

Moderates, despite setbacks, kept a strong voice in denominational affairs with election of two of their number as vice presidents. They include Stanley's challenger for the presidency, the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, and attorney Henry Huff of Louisville, Ky.

It was Moore who helped quell persistent complaints by moderates on some of Stanley's rulings, telling the convention: "Those who know me know there are many things I don't like. But more than disliking anything, I love this convention.

"I believe we are on the way...to healing whatever breaches we have in our fellowship. I plead for the sake of God's kingdom, let's do it and let's do it now."

White urges better education system

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' entire education system should raise its standards and seek world-class status, says Gov. Mark White.

White was honored by grade school administrators Thursday, and a spokesman for them pledged to White that Texas one day will have the best elementary education program in the United States.

After receiving a rousing welcome from the Texas Elementary Principals and Supervisors Association, White told administrators the nation's survival depends on how well they do their job.

Brad Duggan, association executive director, introduced White to an audience of 1,200, saying:

"There have been a lot of men and women who claim to be education governors of Texas but there is only one governor who's taken the bold step to restructure and, important to us, reprioritize education, a step to create an equitable education system and to place an emphasis on elementary education."

White is closely linked to a 1984 special legislative session that provided $2.7 billion for public school reform, and Duggan said:

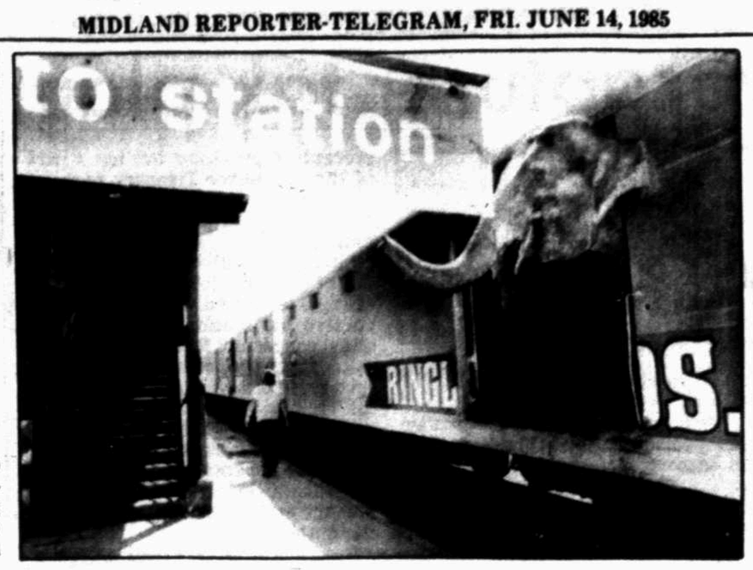

"Starting this year, when you see bright-eyed disadvantaged and language-deficient 4-year-olds coming to school to try to get a chance to survive in the state of Texas, you need to thank the governor.

"When you talk about going to full-day full-year kindergarten programs in this state, you need to thank the governor. When you talk about raising taxes to place over a billion dollars in public education and that money going into elementary education for remedial programs, tutorial programs, to address the issue of social promotion, you need to thank the governor.

"And when you go into those buildings in August and September and you see in most cases no more than 22 students per elementary classroom, you need to thank the governor."

White said having the best education system, through college, in the country may not be "good enough."

He said he would not be "dismayed" by attempts to ease the controversial no-pass, no-play proposal, which requires a student to pass every course to take part in extracurricular activities.

Cisneros named as regent

AUSTIN (AP) — San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros has been named by Gov. Mark White as a new member of the board of regents of Texas A&M University.

Cisneros, 37-year-old graduate of A&M, will fill a vacancy created by the resignation of H.R. "Bum" Bright, Dallas oilman and principal owner of the Dallas Cowboys professional football team, who was appointed by former Republican Gov. Bill Clements.

White said Thursday that Cisneros, a Democrat considered as a running mate by Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale last year, is an "outstanding individual" and he was "very pleased to have the opportunity to make the appointment."

White said he reached Cisneros in Korea, where he is on a trade mission.

Baptists see 'slow erosion'

DALLAS (AP) — Baptist moderates and conservatives from Texas agree: There may be a slow "erosion" of the nation's largest Protestant demonination if a philosophical and theological division continues.

Both winners and losers at this week's Southern Baptist Convention predicted the possibility on the final day of the largest annual assembly ever, a convention that saw the reelection of a conservative president and a strengthening of fundamentalist stronghold within the body.

Meanwhile, the outlook for a "peace committee" approved by the convention messengers to try to deal with the Baptists' philosophical divide is unclear, some leaders said.

"There's not any dialogue" between the two factions, said the Rev. Jimmy Draper,a fundamentalist and past president of the convention. "That's why we needed the committee."

Larry Eason, a member of Sherman's Broadway Baptist Church congregation in Fort Worth, said he was "not cynical, but not hopeful" about the peace committee.

"I think if we don't deal with our differences in a constructive way, we could see a split in time. We can't go on indefinitely like this," said Draper.

The Rev. Morris Chapman of Wichita Falls, another fundamentalist leader, agreed.

"I think there will be no formal split," said Chapman, who helped moderate the convention and planned the agenda. "I think there's always the possibility there could be some slight erosion."

He and Draper were among the winners at the convention, which ended Thursday. Along with more than 24,000 other delegates, they voted to re-elect president Charles Stanley, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Atlanta.

Stanley defeated the more moderate Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo by a 55 percent to 45 percent vote.

Among those in the disgruntled minority were the Rev. Cecil Sherman, who recently left a church in Asheville, N.C., for one in Fort Worth.

He was an outspoken critic of the fundamentalists' handling of the convention, particularly Stanley's refusal to recognize some delegates on the convention floor during a key vote Wednesday.

"Down the way, if over a long enough period of time this group prevails, and exclusion is practiced toward the losing minority...there will be some kind of division," Sherman said.

He believes any such split will occur in "the old South way. There won't be thousands of churches going away and forming a new denomination," he said, "but quietly, they'll go away."

Sherman also predicted the pro-fundamentalist leaning of this Baptist convention will encourage more cases of secret tape recordings and greater efforts to rid seminaries of non-fundamentalist professors.

On the fundamentalist side, Chapman said no one is talking of a "witch hunt."

But he added that those with extreme differences with the views of the majority may feel "their contribution in the ministry would not be through the Southern Baptist Convention."

The theological differences within the denomination have had far-ranging effects.

At Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, for example, one professor in a dispute with the administrator secretly tape-recorded a confrontation with him in January.

As for the secret tape recording of conversations, Draper said, "If you're not afraid of what you say, you shouldn't be afraid of taping."

Meanwhile, other professors at Southwestern have banned the use of tape recorders in the class. Some professors at other Baptist seminaries have been accused of teaching that the Bible is not correct in all scientific or historical facts.

Businesses protest 'recapture' tax plan

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Second thoughts at the White House regarding the $57 billion in business tax writeoffs approved in 1981 are producing grumbling in the nation's corporate executive suites.

Under President Reagan's tax overhaul plan, the government would "recapture" the money by requiring businesses to pay back their gains from the 1981 tax change.

"As it has been proposed," General Motors Chairman Roger B. Smith told the Senate Finance Committee on Thursday, "the recapture provision lacks the basic elements of fairness and should not be adopted."

While declaring the nation needs tax reform, Smith stopped short of promising GM support should Congress refuse to winnow out the recapture proposal.

"That's an awful price to pay for tax reform," he said.

Reagan's 1981 tax cut enabled companies to lower their tax bills by speeding depreciation writeoffs. The White House pushed the idea, saying it would spur investment and thus prime the economy.

But administration economists now say the complex measure has yielded "an unintended windfall" of $57 billion for business.

A major complaint is that the recapture would be retroactive.

Corporate chiefs say it might usher in a regular practice of first aiding business through tax preferences and then, for deficit-cutting or other reasons, snatching back the money.

"The nicest thing we can say about this provision is that it makes no sense from a financial point of view," Philip L. Smith, president and chief operating officer of General Foods Corp., told the Finance Committee. "It can only erode the confidence of taxpayers if the decisions they make today are to be undone by the government tomorrow."

John H. Richman, chairman of Dart & Kraft Inc., told the panel the "recapture provision was not a part of the November Treasury package and has not been subject to the same scrutiny that other provisions have undergone."

"It breaks with the historic practice of Congress to make adverse tax changes effective solely on a prospective basis and raises constitutional concerns," Richman said.

Reagan's proposed overhaul is a reworking of a version fashioned by the Treasury Department in November. Actual bill drafting does not begin until after Labor Day. By that time, the recapture provision will have had a full airing in the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means committees.

Reagan's proposal would lower tax rates, shrink the number of brackets from 14 to three, increase the standard deduction from $1,080 to $2,000, abolish the individual deduction for state and local taxes and reshape the system in a variety of other ways.

School requires drug tests

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Students at a northern New Jersey high school say "school and drugs don't mix," but they're giving mixed reviews to a new anti-drug abuse policy requiring blood and urine tests.

"I'll cut school...I won't do it," said 15-year-old Pete Dorando of Becton Regional High School.

Other students, like senior Gail Doris, 18, supported the plan, saying drug use has made it almost impossible to rally students for school causes. "Trying to get everybody motivated this year was a chore," she said.

The school board voted 7-1 Wednesday to add the tests to the annual physical examination, said superintendent Alfred Marbaise. The tests will begin shortly before the school year opens Sept. 4.

It appeared to be the first such action by any school board in the nation. "They're pioneering in a very sensitive area, and maybe at some risk in terms of legalities: the right to privacy, search and seizure," said Thomas A. Shannon, executive director of the National School Boards Association in Alexandria, Va. "All those arguments will be brought up by attorneys who, as sure as night follows day, will be representing busted students."

The board briefly debated the estimated $10,000 it will cost to give the tests to the 500 students who attend Becton from the New York City suburbs of East Rutherford and Carlstadt.

Senator wants death penalty for espionage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Ted Stevens says selling classified secrets is such a serious crime that people convicted of espionage should be executed on national television.

The Alaska Republican introduced a bill in the Senate on Thursday providing capital punishment for conviction in cases where secret information is sold.

Any executions should be televised because "we're trying to bring up the visibility of this type of crime and deter people who may be starting down this road," Stevens told reporters.

Stevens' proposal would provide death sentences only in cases where the secrets are sold for money — as the government alleges occurred in the case involving John A. Walker Jr., his son, brother and friend.

Instances in which classified information is simply given away would retain the current maximum penalty of life in prison under Stevens' bill.

"These recent cases have all involved sale of secrets for money," he said, referring to the latest case.

Selling secrets during wartime is already punishable by death under treason laws.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger briefed members of the Senate Intelligence Committee in a closed session Thursday and Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., vice chairman of the panel, said Weinberger repeated his desire to establish a death penalty for espionage.

And Attorney General Edwin A. Meese told a news conference that he, too, favored capital punishment in espionage case because "I think it would serve as a deterrent."

Leahy, however, said he considered other intelligence issues more pressing, such as catching spies and determining how a Navy spy ring was able to operate for years without detection.

"I'm sure the courts can work out appropriate penalties," he said."The more important thing right now is to catch them."

In the Pentagon, the Army and Air Force announced they have set up special teams to find out if any of their codes and messages were compromised by the spy ring that allegedly sold Navy secrets.

The alleged ringleader, John Walker, is a former Navy chief warrant officer who had access to a wide range of classified material. The three other men charged in the case all served or were serving in the Navy.

Arthur Walker, John's brother, is a retired Navy officer; Michael L. Walker, John's son, was arrested aboard the aircraft carrier Nimitz; Jerry A. Whitworth of Davis, Calif., is a friend of John Walker.

Falwell to lead anti-smut march through Dallas

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell says he and other television evangelists will lead an anti-pornography march through Dallas against the parent company of 7-Eleven convenience stores.

Falwell said television preachers will bring busloads of people from all over the nation for the Labor Day march against Southland Corp., which is headquartered in Dallas.

The preachers want 7-Eleven to stop selling Playboy and Penthouse magazines nationwide. Falwell said he believes the convenience stores sell more pornography than any other single retailer in America.

Falwell, pastor of Thomas Road Baptist Church here and president of the Moral Majority, and Donald E. Wildmon, founder of the National Federation for Decency, have been organizing the march this week in conference calls to other evangelists, including Jimmy Swaggert, Jim Bakker, Pat Robertson and Kenneth Copeland.

If the march doesn't stop the sales, Falwell said, the preachers plan to ask their followers and congregations to boycott 7-Eleven stores across the country.

Organizations have launched boycotts against the chain store owner before, according to Doug Reed, Southland's assistant manager of media relations.

"All they do is publicize that we have the magazines, and in some areas sales have increased" after boycotts or pickets, he said.

Ortega lifts arms moratorium

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega says he is lifting a self-imposed moratorium on arms imports and hinted that Nicaragua might try again to buy sophisticated warplanes in response to renewed U.S. aid to rebels.

The U.S. House of Representatives decision to approve $27 million in aid to the anti-government Contras was "unacceptable, illegal and immoral meddling" that forces Nicaragua to strenghten its defenses, he said Thursday.

Nicaragua rebel leaders have applauded the vote and said it would lead to a major offensive within months.

Ortega spoke to reporters after a nationwide speech in which he said his leftist Sandinista government would bolster its defense "in light of the deepening of the war and aggression and the possibility of a direct intervention of our country."

He did not specifically mention the possibility of buying jet warplanes, but when asked what kind of planes Nicaragua needed to defend itself, he replied: "Nicaragua is almost the only country in Central America that does not have the ability to defend itself rapidly by air."

U.S. officials have said acquisition of high performance jet aircraft by Nicaragua would upset the balance of power in Central America.

In Washington on Thursday, U.S. State Department duty officer Sondra McCarty said the State Department would have no immediate comment on Ortega's speech. White House spokesman Mark Weinberg also declined to comment.

Ortega said in his speech that the ruling Sandinista Front had decided "to suspend the measures that, in unilateral form, our government has taken in the field of defense." Later, he said that included the moratorium on arms imports he announced Feb. 27.

The moratorium included a ban on importation of "interceptor aircraft." Ortega said he declared the moratorium to further attempts by the Contadora countries — Mexico, Colombia, Panama and Venezuela — to get the Central American nations to sign a peace treaty.

The Sandinistas sent home 100 Cuban military advisers in May, but in his speech Thursday, Ortega indicated he would accept additional military advisers from any country willing to send them.

Ortega urged Nicaraguans to "redouble the efforts to crush the mercenaries (the Contra rebels) in order to reject, resist and defeat an eventual direct intervention of North American troops."

He said Nicaragua remains open to a resumption of talks with the United States that broke off last January. The talks "should discuss how to normalize U.S.-Nicaraguan relations and stop the war and escalating intervention," he said.

Barricada, the Sandinista newspaper, said the House "voted for death." Its front page Thursday featured an eight-column banner that read, "The House of Representatives Approves 27 Million for the Assassins." The story called the vote "the result of an immorally historic session."

South African guerilla targets raided

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South African troops firing rifles and rocket-propelled grenades raided 10 alleged guerrilla targets in the capital of neighboring Botswana this morning. Botswana police at least 10 people were killed.

Botswana's government-run radio reported that 11 bodies had been found, including a 6-year-old girl.

It appeared to be the biggest raid by South African forces on their northern neighbor in at least two years.

Gen. Constand Viljoen, chief of the South African Defense Force, said "small elements" of his force had destroyed African National Congress guerrilla targets in business and residential areas of Gaborone, nine miles over the border.

The ANC was formed in South Africa as a non-violent black rights movement but took up arms and was banned in 1960. The group is the main guerrilla opponent of South Africa's racial segregation system under which 5 million whites deny the vote to more than 22 million blacks.

On Thursday, the ANC announced it would hold its first national conference in 16 years this Sunday "somewhere in southern Africa."

In Gaborone, Police Commissioner Simon Hirschfeldt said, "We have been attacked and at least 10 bodies have been recovered," after the raid against what he described as homes of South African guerrillas living in Botswana.

Rolf Mengele to turn over evidence of his father's life in South America

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Rolf Mengele, who claims his Nazi father Josef Mengele is dead, said today he soon would give a prosecutor evidence of his father's life in South America, including a 1970s photograph and a handwriting sample.

In Sao Paulo, Brazil, Thursday, a woman who claimed she harbored Josef Mengele for 17 years says he told her he was briefly detained by American soldiers after World War II.

Mengele's son, a lawyer in the southern German city of Freiburg, issued a statement today to news agencies in Munich. Earlier this week he broke the family's silence about the Nazi doctor by saying he believes his father is dead.

Today, Mengele's 41-year-old son said he has no proof of a motorcycle accident in 1944 in which his father is said to have suffered a hip injury.

On June 6, Brazilian officials exhumed the body of a man who drowned in 1979. They are conducting tests to determine whether it is Mengele's. Experts say they have identified a growth on the hipbone of the body found in Brazil, but they have not determined yet whether it resulted from a fracture or bone disease.

Rolf Mengele said he would send to Frankfurt prosecutor Hans-Eberhard Klein evidence that proves his knowledge of his father's life in South America, including evidence of a trip Rolf made in December 1979.

Gitta Stammer, who says she harbored Mengele, said that Mengele "told me that after the war he was a prisoner of the Americans in Germany. But since his name was not on any wanted list they released him."

Mrs. Stammer said the release "made him believe he was not being looked for...which is why he used his real name when he lived in Argentina" later.

Her statement tends to confirm unverified reports that Mengele had briefly been in U.S. custody.

Last January, U.S.-based Nazi-hunters reported that a 1947 U.S. Army document referred to an unconfirmed informant's report that Mengele had been arrested in Vienna, Austria.

U.S. never sure what it wanted to accomplish in Lebanon

An Analysis

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States involvement in Lebanon proved a fiasco because, some experts say, the Reagan administration was never sure what it wanted to accomplish there.

A grim chapter in the Lebanon crisis was drawing to a close this week with the withdrawal of the last of the Israeli soldiers who invaded Lebanon three years ago on June 6, 1982.

It was a chapter that cost the lives of 265 American servicemen, all but a few in the devastating terrorist explosion that demolished the U.S. Marine headquarters in Beirut on Oct. 23, 1983.

That explosion marked the beginning of the end, but the seeds of the setback were sowed much earlier when the administration proved unable to agree on why the Marines were there or what the United States was trying to accomplish.

One former administration official who was intimately involved in the American policy-making during the period lamented that the decison to send the Marines was controversial from the start, with Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger strongly opposed, but overruled by Secretary of State George P. Shultz and President Reagan.

"The most important lesson from Lebanon was that you have to have consensus among the key players in the executive branch with a lot of support on Capitol Hill. Political-military activity is an extraordinarily hazardous occupation for any president in peacetime," said the former official, who was interveiwed on condition he not be identified.

In Lebanon, Congress only reluctantly went along with the decision to send a Marine peacekeeping force in 1982. Lawmakers complained that the purpose was unclear, and they were quick to demand the withdrawal of the Marines as soon as they became seriously endangered.

It's a lesson that could have application to the administration's policy in Nicaragua. The administration has repeatedly pressured a reluctant Congress to approve funds for the anti-government insurgents called Contras. One of several complaints of congressional critics is that the administration has failed to spell out in a precise fashion what it hopes to achieve.

The Marines in Lebanon, who at the most numbered about 1,800, were in generally fixed positions around Beirut's airport and became targets of attack from various Lebanese militias following the Israeli withdrawal from the Shouf Mountains around Beirut in September 1983.

Liverpool struggles with soccer deaths

By MARCUS ELIASON

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Grimy, good-natured Liverpool is stricken with guilt these days over the 38 deaths caused by its rioting soccer fans in Brussels two weeks ago.

Despite the depressed state of its economy, Liverpool took pride in being the birthplace of the Beatles and the home of Britain's greatest soccer teams.

But the Beatles are gone and the bottom has dropped out of its soccer as a result of the May 29 Brussels horror in which 31 of the victims were Italian.

"With the image we have, what happened in Brussels is going to make it that much harder for us," said Ruth Cooper, an official charged with attracting business investment in the area.

"I think it's going to be a long time before we get over it. It's as if there's a cloud over the city," said Tony Dunne, who runs a downtown fruit stand.

After the initial stunned disbelief have come recriminations. The Belgian police were inefficient, Liverpudlians complain. The stadium was inadequate, they say, and the supporters of the Italian team, Juventus, behaved provocatively toward the Liverpool fans.

They emphasize that only two weeks previously, another Liverpool team, Everton, played an important match in Rotterdam, Holland, without incident. "The Dutch police themselves said the Everton fans didn't so much as break a beer glass," said Andy Pink, information officer at City Hall.

BUT, GENERALLY, people here refuse to pass the buck. Few of them have any patience for sociological punditry about what causes such riots. As they see it, a minority of louts has besmirched their city's hitherto good record for crowd behavior.

Since the riot, there has been an almost universal outpouring of contrition and self-denunciation from the city of 500,000. Both the Catholic and the Anglican cathedrals have held memorial services for the victims. Schools are collecting money for the victims' families. Next week a city council delegation flies to Turin, the home of Juventus, hoping to repair the damage.

Adding to the guilt feelings is the knowledge that the Liverpool supporters' behavior has brought disaster on English soccer as a whole, in the form of the indefinite ban international soccer authorities have imposed on English teams playing abroad.

"When I drove into work the day after, I didn't even have to get out of my car to feel that the atmosphere was, well, flat. Liverpudlians are a happy, bustling lot, and that feeling just wasn't there that day," said Ms. Cooper.

Even without the shadow of fan violence, Liverpool's problems are staggering. It is one of the worst-hit cities in Europe, with an unemployment rate that has doubled to 25 percent since 1979. Its docks, once the gateway to the Americas, have seen their work force shrink from 11,000 to 2,000 in 13 years, handling only 30-40 ships a day compared with 120 in 1972.

ONE REASON has been the geographical shift away from the Atlantic with Britain's entry into the European Common Market. Another has been the repeated strikes called by Liverpool's notoriously militant dockers' unions in the 1970s.

In some districts unemployment is as high as 80 percent. Drug abuse is rampant, race relations are poor and in 1981 the Toxteth slum area erupted in two weeks of rioting, mainly by unemployed blacks and Asians.

Liverpool in many ways is the fulfillment of predictions made years ago that the rise of high-tech industry and the shift in heavy-goods manufacturing to the Far East would create a new "leisure class" of unemployed Britons living on welfare.

That time seems to have come for Liverpool. The big auto plants, shipyards and food factories are unlikely to regain their former glory. According to Ms. Cooper of the Merseyside County Economic Development Office (MERCEDO), the main potential now lies in tourism. With nothing else to produce, Liverpool is being forced to turn inward and feed off the riches of its past.

The city offers Beatle pilgrimages, Beatle conventions and Beatle museums. It has transformed hundreds of acres of derelict dockland into parks, gardens, restaurants and marinas in a $127-million refurbishment. The cavernous Victorian warehouses are becoming museums of the Industrial Revolution. One of them will soon house a branch of London's Tate Gallery.

White faces deadline

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says he still has some 400 bills to consider before a midnight Sunday deadline.

Among those remaining are the $37.2 billion state budget, a bill to triple college tuition and one to require motorists to wear seat belts. They must be signed or vetoed by midnight Sunday, or they become law without White's action.

The governor said anti-crime legislation he signed Thursday shows the state can protect its citizens.

"We are doing something about crime in Texas. We are doing something about criminals and we are doing something for victims," White said.

White said the anti-crime bills passed this legislative session "will ensure that every invididual in every house on every street in every city in Texas will be safer."

The victims' bill of rights calls for notifying and explaining procedures in the criminal process to victims, including pretrial release of suspects, trial, sentencing and parole.

It also provides for written input from victims regarding the physical, financial and emotional effects of crime on them, and says that will be considered by the parole board before a prisoner is released on parole.

The legislation to have parole laws explained to juries was sponsored by Sen. Buster Brown, R-Lake Jackson.

During hearings around the state, he said, "Witnesses decried the fact that juries are not allowed to know the full facts about sentencing. With the passage of the jury instruction bill, the blindfold will finally be removed from the eyes of juries in Texas."

The bill allows juries considering punishment recommendations to be told the effects of parole laws and "good time" rules on the length of time an inmate serves in prison.

Another bill signed by White will require lawyers to bring up an error in an indictment before the time of trial. The state then will have an opportunity to correct the error.

The governor also praised bills that he said will help crack down on inhalant abuse.

The bills increase penalties for possession and use of toxic inhalants, better define abusable glues and spray paint, specify which cannot be sold to persons under age 17.

"Inhalant abuse is one of the most dangerous forms of substance abuse. Unfortunately, while much attention has been focused on various forms of substance abuse, inhalant abuse has been largely neglected," White said.

As for bills he has yet to sign, White said he is inclined to approve the measure tripling state college tuition to $12 per semester hour this fall.

White said he is satisfied that the bill includes sufficient funds to permit poor students who are otherwise qualified to attend college. "I think it's one that met the standards that I imposed," he said.

White also said he is weighing the seat belt bill.

"I hate to see government interfere with individual liberties and I hate to see government mandate decisions that might be wise for citizens to adopt on their own," he said.

Courthouse shooting

Police and emergency personnel wheel Jerome Roady to an ambulence Thursday afternoon outside the Dallas County Courthouse. Roady shot himself in the chest in a restroom just minutes after a state judge sentenced him to seven years in prison for sexually abusing a 12-year-old girl. Roady died Thursday evening while in surgery at a Dallas hospital.

Bond reduction hearing set

DALLAS (AP) — A bond reduction hearing was scheduled today for a Hutchins woman accused of fatally shooting her third and fourth husbands and burying them in her back yard.

Betty Lou Beets, a 48-year-old waitress and bartender, and her daughter, Shirley Stegner, 26, of Corsicana, remained in Henderson County Jail Thursday. They are both charged with murder in the deaths of two of Mrs. Beets' husbands.

The women are being held on $1 million bond apiece.

Meanwhile, Dallas County records have revealed that Mrs. Beets shot her second husband twice in the back 13 years ago. She was indicted on a felony charge of assault with intent to commit murder with malice in the 1972 shooting of Billy York Lane, records show.

She later pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of aggravated assault, a misdemeanor, and was fined $150, records show.

Mrs. Beets and York were divorced at the time of the shooting, according to the Dallas Morning News. They remarried shortly after Mrs. Beets pleaded guilty and then divorced a second time in September 1973, the newspaper said.

York died of a heart attack in 1982, police said.

Decade of death

A decade ago, Karen Ann Quinlan lapsed into a coma. She died Tuesday, but in the 10 years she lay in a chronic vegetative state, the silent dark-haired girl led the nation through an arduous look at life, death and individual rights.

Karen Quinlan's story touched almost every American life in one way or another. Millions of people who never knew her personally, an entire generation born in the decade after she entered her half-life, half-death state, likely are aware of Karen to some degree.

The young woman had fallen into the coma after she attended a party where she drank alcoholic beverages after having taken a prescription tranquilizing drug and aspirin. Then began the first stage of her remarkable battle for life — and death.

For the first few months, Karen's parents had hoped for her recovery, but that hope dimmed as time passed. When doctors told her parents in July 1975, that Karen would never return to a "cognitive state," the Quinlans asked that she be removed from a respirator. The doctors refused.

What transpired after the refusal became the crucial battle point of patients such as Karen Quinlan and others kept alive by mechanical means. The Quinlans sued to have Karen removed from the respirator, the trial judge denied the appeal and the case eventually wound up in New Jersey Supreme Court, which overturned the lower court decision, saying the state has no right to order continued mechanical breathing in a body with no chance of regaining a semblance of life.

The case went to the United States Supreme Court in 1976, but the court refused to hear the appeal, dismissing the final appeal to the landmark state Supreme Court ruling.

In May 1976, on court orders, Karen was removed from the respirator. After a year of court battle to gain the right to allow the young woman to "die with dignity," Karen Quinlan did not die. Removed from mechanical life-sustaining machines, she continued to live.

Over the next several years the battle undoubtedly will continue to rage between the forces that say life should be preserved with mechanical devices and those, such as the Quinlans, who contend dignity in death is better than life on a machine. Perhaps the question is not to be resolved by mankind.

In the case of Karen Ann Quinlan, the verdict was clear. She did not die even when removed from man's devices although the doctors had predicted she would. She lived until the struggle to hold onto life was too much to bear.

Then Karen Ann Quinlan died — with dignity, leaving to society a legacy of greater understanding about the intricate questions involved in the fight to preserve life.

Another View:
The billboard battle

With the billboard lobby having nullified the 1965 federal Highway Beautification Act, groups with the potential clout to match the highway blighters' lobby are finally emerging. Large-scale developers and city boosters are now realizing that multimillion-dollar projects and city images are being marred by ugly signs.

In Houston, which has a law limiting sign height and size, the business establishment has organized against the billboard pushers. Dallas, Fort Worth and Austin, Texas, have set billboard moratoriums — as has Tulsa, Okla. In Washington, the Center for Sign Control is coordinating anti-billboard efforts nationally. With almost every state promoting tourism, states too have an interest in getting rid of billboard blight.

Although polls show a majority of Americans favor billboard controls, slack enforcement by federal and state highway officials and weaknesses in federal law have allowed billboard owners to erect more signs than they have taken down since the 1965 law was passed. After lobbying through a 1978 amendment requiring federal compensation for any billboard removed, the billboard companies often used the money to erect new signs elsewhere. The Federal Highway Administration recently estimated that it would cost $750 million to pay the owners of some 124,000 remaining "non-conforming signs." Then there are 48,000 signs illegally erected by scofflaw firms since the law took effect.

Taking courage from the new support of business and citizen groups, Congress should get rid of the half million signs on federally funded highways, not by paying the owners but by ordering them phased out and by requiring owners to remove illegal signs. Congress gave value to the signs by providing a captive audience of motorists. What Congress gave, it can take away.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 14, the 165th day of 1985. There are 200 days left in the year. This is Flag Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 14th, 1777, the Continental Congress in Philadelphia adopted the Stars and Stripes as the national flag.

On this date:

In 1775, the U.S. Army was founded.

In 1846, a group of settlers proclaimed the free republic of California at Sonoma.

In 1917, General John Pershing and his headquarters staff arrived in Paris during World War I.

In 1922, Warren G. Harding became the first president to be heard on radio. Baltimore station WEAR broadcast Harding's speech dedicating the Francis Scott Key memorial at Fort McHenry.

In 1940, German forces occupied Paris during World War II.

In 1982, Argentine forces surrendered to British troops on the disputed Falkland Islands.

Ten years ago: On the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Army, President Gerald R. Ford hailed the all-volunteer force as an "army of winners" during an appearance at Fort Benning, Ga.

Five years ago: American Telephone and Telegraph Company vowed to fight an antitrust ruling in favor of MCI Communications. The day before, a federal jury in Chicago ordered AT&T to pay MCI $1.8 billion dollars.

One year ago: In a nationally broadcast news conference, President Reagan appeared to relax his conditions for a summit meeting with Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko.

Today's Birthdays: Singer Burl Ives is 76. Actress Dorothy McGuire is 67. Actor Sam Wanamaker is 66. ABC newsman and former White House news secretary Pierre Salinger is 60. Author Jerzy Kosinski is 52. Actress Maria Gibbs is 39. Actor Eddie Mekka is 33. Olympic speed skater Eric Heiden is 27. Singer Boy George is 24.

JACK ANDERSON
U.S. nuclear locations disclosed

WASHINGTON — In the 40 years since the first atomic bomb exploded in the New Mexico desert, the world has rushed headlong down the path of nuclear proliferation. So far, the possession of nuclear weapons by five major powers has acted as a successful deterrent.

Jack Anderson

But the possibility is growing that the nuclear arsenal is getting out of control. Familiarity seems to have bred contempt for the consequences of a nuclear exchange; officials in Washington — and presumably in the other nuclear-power capitals — are thinking what was once called the unthinkable.

Consider the testimony of a top Strategic Air Command general at a closed session of the Senate Armed Services Committee. According to the transcript, classified "secret," he made the obligatory bow to "the complex interaction of many elements" that add up to deterrence, but then said ominously:

"However, should deterrence fail between strategic nuclear powers, all but one of these factors become irrelevant, and we must then look to the ultimate measure of merit: raw military power."

The general then proceeded, through 41 pages of testimony, to plead the case for deploying hundreds and even thousands more nuclear warheads in this country and abroad.

We doubt that even the experts of the Strategic Air Command, let alone President Reagan and his advisers, have a clear idea of just how extensive the world's nuclear arsenal has become. A fresh picture is presented in a new book, "Nuclear Battlefields: Global Links in the Arms Race," by William Arkin and Richard Fieldhouse.

The book is sure to create an uproar in Congress and the Pentagon, and will probably touch off anti-nuclear demonstrations and an FBI investigation. But the furor should not obscure the serious purpose of the book: to give the public enough facts for an informed debate.

With a minimum of rhetoric and a maximum of mind-numbing facts and figures, the book sets out to list every nuclear warhead and every facility related to the production and deployment of nuclear weapons. Though the amount of classified information on Soviet nukes is impressive, the authors can be faulted for inadequate treatment of other Soviet areas, such as civil defense. Nor is there any mention of Israel's nuclear arsenal.

The greatest shock for most Americans will be the discovery that there are nuclear warheads practically in their backyard. Only 22 states and the District of Columbia have no nuclear warheads within their borders. The greatest contiguous warhead-free zone is a roughly Y-shaped, 15-state cordon sanitaire stretching from the Atlantic Ocean (Delaware and Maryland) to the Mississippi River, north to the Canadian border (Minnesota) and south to the Gulf of Mexico (Alabama and Mississippi).

The authors have prepared a chart that ranks the states by the number of warheads and also by nuclear facilities. Surprisingly, the two states with the most nuclear weapons are on the eastern seaboard, not the Great Plains where the intercontinental ballistic missiles are deployed.

South Carolina heads the list, with 1,962 warheads. The Navy weapons station at Charleston stores 1,482 warheads, mostly as spares and for submarines being overhauled. Three subs berthed there account for the remaining 480.

No. 2 is New York, with 1,900 warheads, all of them at the Seneca Army Depot in the Finger Lakes region. A secret Pentagon report we have obtained discloses that the Army has been stockpiling warheads for neutron bombs there since 1981. These and other warheads were made from nuclear material recovered from 1,200 "retired" 8-inch artillery shells, which yielded about 78 tons of highly enriched uranium or alloys.

The rest of the Top 10 and the number of nuclear warheads in each are North Dakota (1,510), California (1,437), Washington state (1,172), Michigan and Texas (630 each), Virginia (542), Louisiana (530) and Arkansas (430).

EVANS & NOVAK
Rebels waiting for Uncle Sam

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — As support for Nicaragua's Marxist-Leninist regime narrows and the economy deteriorates, the democratic opposition here asks a question posed repeatedly the last four years: What does Uncle Sam really have in mind for Central America?

Rowland Evans

Anti-Sandinistas here understand the difference between Ronald Reagan and Congress. What they do not understand is the administration's intention: whether it wants to "contain" communism's Central American expansion in Nicaragua, or to end it by overthrowing the Sandinista regime.

Robert Novak

The consensus of the opposition is that containment cannot work. "Remove, that is the key word, remove," one anti-communist politician told us. "The government must be removed." To do that, most internal foes of the regime want stronger U.S. support for the guerrillas. But others pray for the arrival of U.S. Marines marching into Managua behind the contras.

The phenomenon of any Nicaraguan hoping for the Marines, who became the hated symbol of Yanqui imperialism as occupiers of this country for 21 years, suggests what is happening here today. No objective foreign observer in Managua doubts the unpopularity of the regime. There is no confirmation here of the prediction by Sandinista apologists in the U.S. Congress that the guerrilla war would unify the people behind the regime.

Anti-communist businessmen, academics and journalists here feel they are permitted to exist by grace of the Kremlin. The Soviet Union does not want Nicaragua to follow Cuba's course in openly declaring itself a Marxist-Leninist regime, thereby alienating liberals worldwide and cutting off money from Western European social democrats. With the opposition permitted to exist longer than anybody imagined, ordinary Nicaraguans have become bolder in expressing discontent.

This rising tide of opposition partially explains why the Managua regime has temporarily suspended military conscription, which had the unintended consequence of sending young men out of their villages to join the guerrillas. Even without a draft, the expanding thrust of the police state — most recently in indoctrinating parochial school students — breeds discontent and deepens the economic recession.

Managua never has recovered from the 1972 earthquake, but this once-vibrant capital seems with each passing visit to have sunk deeper into Third World torpor. The city's one sign of lively economic activity, the public market, has long been targeted by the regime, which has tried without success to close it, once even attempting to burn it down.

The communist imperative for economic control has worsened here the commodity deflation that is proving so painful elsewhere in Central America. In a country whose economy has always been based on small entrepreneurs, the regime is starting a tough system of internal taxation. The predictable result: lower economic growth, enhanced smuggling.

The leaders of the Nicaraguan revolution are candid in reporting economic woes. Commandante Jaime Wheelock, minister of farm development, recently traveled to El Viejo to explain the facts of life to workers in the collectivized banana industry. He called the state banana operation "unprofitable" (losing each year up to 340 million cordobas, about $500,000 on the black market). The socialized industry, Wheelock said, is "unproductive, badly planned and dangerously indebted."

Just two years ago Wheelock announced government confiscation of previously profitable banana plantations. But the Nicaraguans are swallowing more of the dog that bit them. Without fanfare or announcement, teams of Bulgarian economic advisers have arrived here, overflowing with East Bloc wisdom.

Although confiscations have slowed to prevent total destruction of the economy, the regime continues to snip away at remnants of the old free-market economy. A current example: a secret government memorandum revealingly titled "Proposal to Gradually Eliminate Exporter-Importer Businesses." It contains a specific "calendar" for "the elimination of exporters-importers."

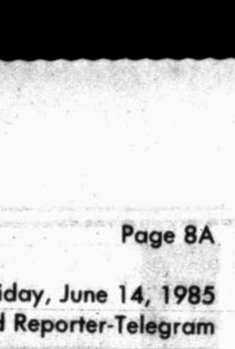

Under these conditions, the U.S. embargo is not hurting the impoverished economy enough to sow real anti-Yanqui hatred. Foreigners who talk regularly to "the little brown men" in the streets of Managua find two heroes: Eden Pastora ("Commandante Zero" of the original Sandinistas, now fighting the regime in the jungles to the South) and Ronald Reagan. Indeed, more sophisticated Nicaraguans fear what will happen to U.S. policy when President Reagan leaves office.

Foreigners disagree on the intensity and seriousness of the opposition, but one anti-communist guerrilla leader sees the Nicaraguan people waiting — like the proverbial pack of dogs watching quietly from a distance as two dogs fight for leadership. The pack waits, ready to jump in to kill off the loser. That happened to Anastasio Somoza in 1978, after the issue no longer was in doubt. With more apprehension than confidence, the resistance here awaits a little help from Uncle Sam to set that process in motion.

CHARLEY REESE
Base trade policy on U.S. needs

Some people are ideologically in favor of free trade and some are ideologically in favor of protectionism. Both are wrong. Whether you adopt a free trade or a protectionist policy should depend on the circumstances.

Charley Reese

In that ideal but non-existent world nations export surpluses and import those things they can't produce themselves. We would, for example, export only left-over wheat and import only such things as coffee which doesn't grow here.

The real world of trade is infinitely more complex, though you would never know it to hear the free traders carry on.

The chief specious argument used by free traders is that in a world without trade barriers goods will be produced where they can be produced most efficiently and all consumers benefit because of lower prices.

We can easily expose this intellectual fraud. Would anybody like to argue that a Polish farmer is more efficient than an Iowa farmer? Why? Because Iowa hams are priced on a free market basis and Polish hams are priced by political decree. Only if Polish farmers were allowed to operate under the same freedom as Iowa farmers could a rational comparison of their respective efficiencies be made.

Most of the nations in the world do not operate free market economies. Prices and wages are set by political decisions. In communist countries, workers are for all practical purposes slaves. They cannot really bargain for better wages or, for that matter, even change jobs.

It is absurd to tell American workers they must compete with slave labor, meaning they must produce goods just as cheaply, or face the loss of their jobs. Yet that is what free trade ideologues are telling them.

Another complexity is that trade agreements are political agreements between governments; they are not business agreements made between businesses. That means, even in our own case, such agreements are bound to be influenced by political clout.

The impetus to open trade with China, for example, came primarily from New York banks and those businesses closely associated with them, like some of the big oil companies. The deal finally cut was also influenced by political and strategic considerations.

Obviously, the Chinese weren't going to let certain Americans sell to them unless they were allowed to sell something to Americans. About all they have to sell are cheap textiles and so because the American textile industry doesn't have the same political clout as big banks and big oil, its interests were sacrificed.

This pattern with different characters and interests is repeated in nearly all trade agreements. The point is that trade agreements are determined by politics, not by economics.

Finally, Americans must realize that we cannot set national policy solely on the basis of what is going to make products available to consumers at the lowest price. We have other factors to consider, among which are the welfare of American workers and the necessity of maintaining a sound base of machines, workers and assembly lines for use in time of national emergency.

A rational trade policy will always be a mix of barriers and no barriers, both subject to change as the circumstances dictate. Most importantly, trade policy should be based on the national interests and not on the selfish interests of the politically influential.

For example, I believe there is a need to protect America's manufacturing base — steel, automobiles, and machine tools — because of its importance to our economy and to our national security. There is less reason to protect sugar farmers because this is a marginal economic factor, a non-strategic product, and one that can be easily produced should foreign sources be lost.

Our duty as citizens is to insist that trade policy be based on the national interests rather than on selfish interests or on slavish belief in ideology.

Three Solidarity leaders sentenced

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — A court today convicted three leaders of the outlawed Solidarity union of inciting civil unrest and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from 2½ to 3½ years.

The trial judges convicted Adam Michnik, Bogdan Lis and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk on all counts against them. They were charged with inciting public unrest by issuing a call for a 15-minute strike in February and with engaging in illegal union activities.

The strike, to be held in protest of government plans to raise food prices, never took place. The defense had said that since the charges were based on a walk-out that never occurred, the three should have been acquitted.

A relative of one of the defendants, who reported the verdicts from the courtroom because journalists were not allowed to cover the trial, said the three Solidarity activists smiled when the court's decision was announced.

"They received it very lightly," said the family member, who asked not to be identified by name.

The court sentenced Frasyniuk to 3½ years in prison, Michnik to 3 years, and Lis to 2½ years. They were among the most prominent Solidarity figures released from jail under last year's government amnesty that freed more than 600 political prisoners.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviets may already be developing 'Star Wars'

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A West German disarmament expert says the Soviet Union has awarded research contracts to Warsaw Pact countries to develop a "Star Wars" shield against nuclear missiles, and is further along than the West had thought.

"Moscow's Defense Minister (Sergei) Sokolov handed out research contracts for a space defense system to his East bloc colleagues at the April 26 summit in Warsaw" where a 20-year extension of the Warsaw Pact agreement was signed, said Christian Democratic legislator Juergen Todenhoefer.

Todenhoefer, a member of Parliament and a nuclear arms adviser to Chancellor Helmut Kohl, spoke in a telephone interview Thursday.

He refused to reveal the sources of his information. However, West Germany's mass-circulation Bild newspaper said today that his information came from "secret Soviet documents at NATO" headquarters in Belgium.

Moscow has strongly attacked President Reagan's plans to develop such a space-based system.

Leader buys a Chrysler

TOKYO (AP) — Minister of Labor Toshio Yamaguchi did his part this week to ease the trade imbalance between the United States and Japan. He bought a Chrysler.

Yamaguchi now has the distinction of being the only Cabinet minister to drive a foreign car, ministry spokeswoman Aiko Yamazaki said today.

In April, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone called on the Japanese to each buy $100 worth of foreign goods to help bring Japan's international balance of trade into equilibrium. Japan recorded a trade surplus of almost $37 billion with the United States alone last year.

Ms. Yamazaki said the Chrysler Fifth Avenue cost the minister about $31,000. The price includes taxes and transport expenses.

She said Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca sent Yamaguchi a thank you note.

Mexico joins space age

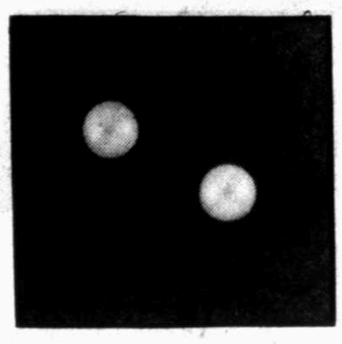

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Officials say Mexico is entering the space age. Government publications boast the nation is showing just what a "driving force" it is in the world.

Newspaper ads urge Mexicans to travel to Florida to be part of the "historic event."

The build-up — and source of national pride — is for Monday's scheduled launching of the U.S. space shuttle Discovery, which will carry and launch into orbit Mexico's first communications satellite, Morelos I.

Later in the year, a Mexican astronaut will ride aboard a shuttle flight carrying the nation's second satellite, Morelos II.

In West Texas, widely scattered thunderstorms this evening mainly north. Sunny and hot Saturday. Lows tonight lower 60s north and mountains to near 70 south. Highs Saturday generally mid 90s except 90 to 106 southwest.

In North Texas, fair and warmer through Saturday. Highs in the 80s and 90s Saturday. Lows tonight mid 60s to near 70.

In South Texas, widely scattered showers or thundershowers on Saturday. Warm days and mild at night. Low tonight in the 60s to lower 70s north and 70s south. Highs Saturday 80s near the coast to the 90s inland.

Nice weather expected for this weekend

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders may want to include outdoor activities in their weekend plans as the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport expects tonight's partly cloudy skies with a low in the mid-60s to become sunny with a high in the middle 90s Saturday. Southerly winds at five to 10 mph tonight are expected to increase Saturday to 10 to 15 mph.

Thursday's high of 82 was 21 degrees below the record set in 1947.

This morning's low was nine degrees above the 1947 record of 56.

STATE

As a high pressure system moved easterly and out of the state, moist air pushed up from South Texas, setting off thunderstorms in West Texas today.

Skies were fair over most of the state however, and afternoon highs in the 80s and 90s were expected for most of Texas, with the likelihood that readings would soar past the 100-degree mark in the Big Bend.

A southeast wind of 5 to 15 miles an hour breezed through much of the state while a calm wind was noted in the east and along the coastal waters.

From Jet to Space age

Matt Alexander to Devon White

By TED BATTLES
ports Editor

Matt Alexander and Devon White provide a graphic illustration of baseball's progress from the jet to the space age in the area of base-path propulsion.

Matt Alexander set the Texas League on fire back in 1972 by stealing 38 bases for the Midland Cubs. He was so good, that Charles O. Finley, owner of the Oakland A's, plucked him from the minors and made him a base-running specialist, perhaps the game's first successful Man on the Moon.

Alexander made a career of stealing bases, and a rather long one. He was still plying his trade up until a year or two ago. Nobody cared whether or not Matt could hit or field. What counted was that he could run.

HOW FAST? Matt claimed that when he and Ralph Garr were at Grambling, "If we raced, I won."

Think of it, 38 stolen bases in a season. That's like flying a WW I Jenny nowadays.

Devon White has already stolen 37 bases for the modern day Midland Angels and there's some question as to whether the 22-year-old New Yorker is even the fastest or best base stealer on the team.

In the base running sweepstakes, White was an "Oh yeah, he can run pretty good, too" entry before the season. White was supposed to steal 38 for a season, not a half season.

In demanding how come a guy who stole only 36 bases last year at Redwood has already surpassed that output this year, White blushes modestly, but admits, "They had me listed for 36, but I actually stole 44."

There was no hint of what was to come even the year before when he stole 43 bases while playing for Nashua, Eastern, and Peoria, Midwest, League.

Last year, according to Baseball America (that's the publication that specializes in keeping up with the minor leagues), White, a 6-1, 170-pounder, who was college scholarship material in two sports at New York City Park West High, was voted the California League player with the "Best Tools" survey.

Coming into the season, most of the base stealing attention was given to second baseman Mark McLemore, who stole 59 bases at Redwood last season. But a knee injury sidelined Mark for a three-week stretch, still White has run wild on the bases, a complete surprise to those who make book by past performance.

"It's mostly a case of Joe (Manager Joe Maddon) giving me the green light," says White.

Maddon's explanation is a little more detailed. "He worked on it in Fall Instructional League. It's not something that just happened. He's more aggressive, gets a better lead and a better jump than last year. The biggest thing is that he wants to steal and he's picking his situation better and going on better counts."

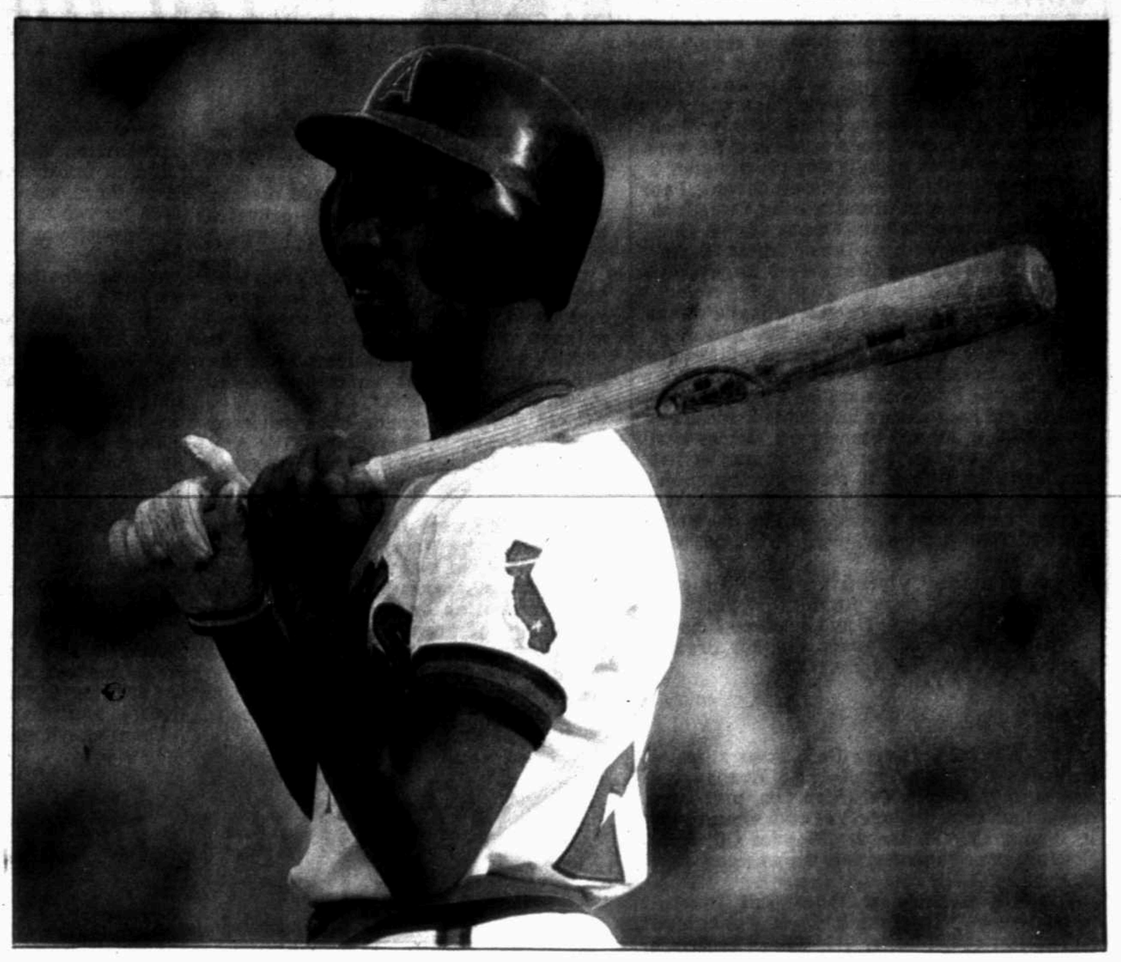

Maddon confirms that White has the green light, "except when I take it off."

"There's no reason why he can't steal 70 or 80 bases," adds the Angels' boss.

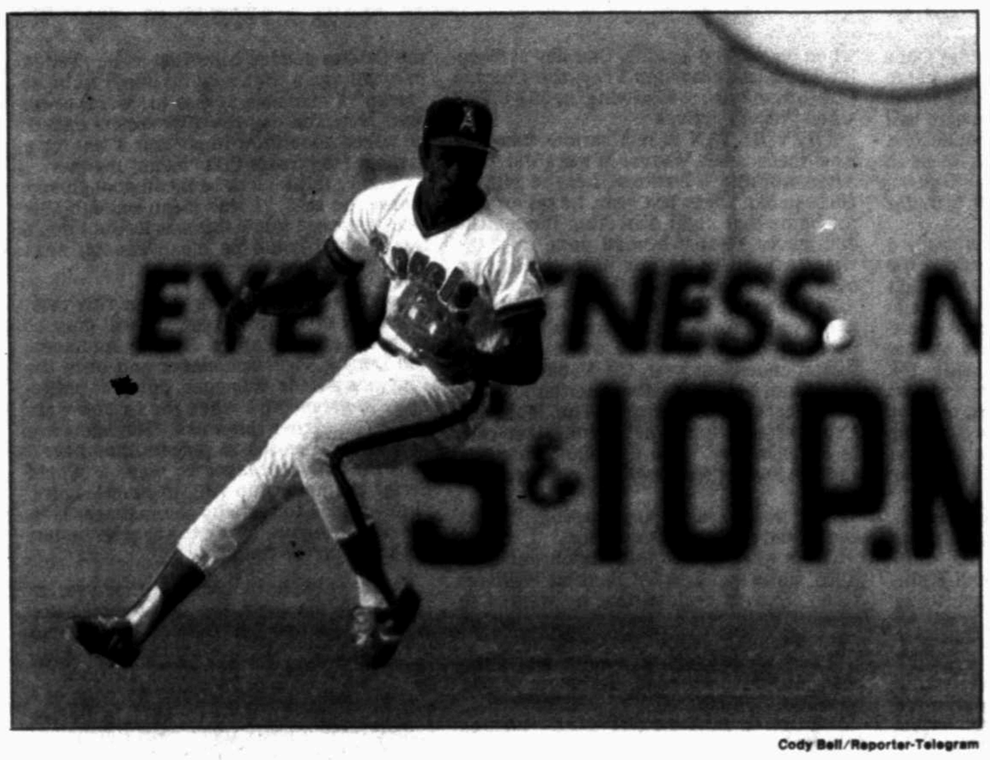

IF HE does, it will be a new club record, breaking the 59 by Rick Baker a couple of years ago. That year, Billy Hatcher was a close second with 56. Henry Cotto, now a New York Yankee, in 1982 stole 52 bases, which broke the old record held jointly by Jose Ortiz (1975) and Eric Grandy (1979) of 45.

Actually, Midland's base-stealing potential is even greater this year than in the Baker-Hatcher year.

College Series most watched ever

NEW YORK (AP) — The 15 telecasts of the 1985 College World Series received an average rating of 2.1, making it the most watched NCAA baseball championship ever, ESPN announced Thursday.

ESPN, the national cable network which televised the entire CWS, said the seven games which were televised live drew an average rating of 2.6, which represents 928,000 households.

Ratings are a percentage of all television sets to which the telecast was available.

Last Sunday's semifinal game between Texas and eventual champion Miami, Fla., received a 3.7 rating and was seen in 1.3 million households. It was the highest rating a live college baseball game received on ESPN, topping the 1.1 million households that watched the 1983 championship game.

Thomas risks heavy title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Unbeaten Pinklon Thomas, who hasn't fought in nearly 10 months, takes on Mike Weaver, another inactive fighter, Saturday in the first defense of his portion of the world heavyweight title.

Thomas hasn't entered a ring for pay since last Aug. 31 when he won the World Boxing Council title from Tim Witherspoon. Weaver has fought only one round during that time. Still, both fighters figure they'll be at their best in the scheduled 12-round bout.

"I think the layoff was to my advantage," said Thomas. "Mike hasn't been too busy either, so it'll be about the same for both of us."

"I would have liked to have had more fights but we'll both be in top shape in that ring," agreed Weaver, who turned 33 today.

Thomas said he has sparred more than 150 rounds in preparation for the bout and has added two inches to his arms and more than an inch to his neck in an effort to create more power in his punches.

He may need it against Weaver, a muscular ex-champion dubbed "Hercules" because of his physique.

"I think I've created a little more power, a little more snap in my punch," said Thomas. "I'm ready to go out and rumble when the bell rings."

Both fighters are supremely confident about their chances in the bout, although oddsmakers rate Thomas the favorite.

Diablos' need more than Angels' want

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

It seemed to be a case of the Midland Angels merely wanting to win Thursday night's Texas League game. For the El Paso Diablos, fighting for the first-half West Division title, it was a matter of needing a win.

And win the slugging Diablos did in decisive 10-3 fashion.

While El Paso righthander Mike Birkbeck, 6-4, was handcuffing the Angels, holding them to two hits through seven innings before tiring in the late innings, first baseman Billy Joe Robidoux and company were touching three Midland pitchers for 11 hits, six walks, two hit batsmen to go with four Angel errors for a total of 10 runs.

THE WIN gave the Diablos the first game in the six-game series and left El Paso alone in first place, a full game ahead of Beaumont and San Antonio, who are fighting out a five-game set in Beaumont. It is the last series of the first half of play.

"Although we didn't play well, Birkbeck really set the tone of the game," Midland manager Joe Maddon said. "The fact that Birkbeck shut us down so hard really put the game in their favor, because I think we can hit with the (El Paso) club.

"And whoever gets the pitching will have the advantage in this series."

FOR THE first 7 ⅓ innings, however, all the hitting was being done by the Diablos, most of it after costly Angel errors. Starter Don Timberlake, 3-6, was the victim of the miscues as well as his own inability to locate the plate, allowing six El Paso runs, just one earned in 5 ⅔ innings of work wile walking five. It was his third loss in as many tries against the Diablos.

In the sixth, with the Diablos already ahead 1-0, Timberlake retired the first two batters then lost a battle with his control walking the next two Diablos. First baseman James Randall then committed the most costly error by booting the would-be final out of the inning to load the bases.

Texas League veteran Dan Purpura took the next Timberlake pitch to the wall in left-centerfield driving in three runs before Robidoux smacked his second RBI single of the night driving Timberlake to an early exit with Midland in a 4-0 rut.

Robidoux then capped his five-RBI performance with his seventh homer of the year in the eighth off Scott Cannon, a three-run shot off the scoreboard in left. It was the fourth homer and 20th RBI for Robidoux off Angels' pitching, and also left him in a three-way tie for the league-RBI lead at 59 with teammate Glenn Braggs and Midland's Reggie Montgomery.

"This is just a good ballpark to hit in. It's a lot like El Paso's, it has a good background," Robidoux said. "The Midland pitchers try to mix up on me, throwing me inside and outside, but I seem to see the ball pretty well off these guys. It's about time, I wasn't getting any to fall in San Antonio.

"This is our biggest series of the year so far, we know we have to win as many as we can and see what happens with Beaumont and San Antonio."

With El Paso secured in a 10-0 lead in the eighth, the Angels rallied for a lone run in their half, and then came back with a pair in the ninth.

Singles by Doug Davis and Tito Nanni and a fielder's choice by Mark McLemore brought in the first Angel run in the eighth, then doubles by Randall and Montgomery scored another and a pinch-hit single by Dave Heath plated the final Angel run.

ANGEL DUST: The Angel pitching corps received some more bad news Thursday when righatander Ken Anguio felt some tenderness in his elbow whiel warming up betwene starts.

If the tenderness is deemed serious enough it could lead to Anguio missing his scheduled turn Sunday, adding another name to the wounded list of Fred Wilburn, Bryan Price (both on the DL) and Julian Gonzalez, who, although not on the DL, "can't throw without pain."

El Paso suffered an injury blow of another kind on Tuesday night when the league's top home run hitter Joey Meyer (18 HRs) injured his knee stealing his first base of the season.

Meyer was safe on the hit-and-run play, but may miss the Midland series with possible cartilage damage...

The Angels had two more baserunners gunned down attempting to steal Thursday, this time by catcher Dave Huppert, who has now thrown out a phenomenal 28 of the last 39 would be base thieves...

From the sixth inning one, Thursday's contest was played under a Diablo protest. Leading 6-0, El Paso manager Terry Bevington and Chris Bosio, a pitcher who was coaching first base, were ejected from the game. The dispute with home plate umpire Zack Bevington, brother of the El Paso skipper, was over a warm-up jacket that Bosio was wearing while coaching on the basepaths.

Chen gets first double eagle

By BRUCE LOWITT

BIRMINGHAM, Mich. (AP) — Tze-Chung Chen had never shot a double-eagle and the U.S. Open had never seen one. Not in his 26 years and not in the golf tournament's 85.

But on a Thursday in which lightning flashed across the face of the Monster known more prosaically as the South Course at the Oakland Hills Country Club, Chen ("Just call me 'T.C.' It's easier.") caught lightning in a bottle.

In his first U.S. Open, his extraordinary shot on the 527-yard, par-5 second hole started the fifth-year pro from Taiwan on the way to a 5-under-par 65.

It made him the first-round, one-stroke leader at the front of a seven-man squadron of players who broke par.

Fred Couples, whose driving had driven him crazy for the past three weeks, had driven to a 66 and was the leader in the clubhouse when Chen birdied No. 18 to finish off the round and the Monster.

Mike Reid, Andy Bean, Jay Haas, Tom Kite and Rick Fehr all came in at 1-under 69 and eight others matched par in a 14-hour stretch which, as defending champion Fuzzy Zoeller put it, "showed us all four seasons" with warmth, chill, sun, rain and, through it all, a precocious wind.

Zoeller had a 1-over-par 71. So did Spain's Seve Ballesteros, one of the pre-tourney favorites. So did Curtis Strange, the PGA Tour's leading money winner.

Chen, whose best finish in four years on the PGA Tour was a playoff loss to Couples in the 1983 Kemper Open, grew up hearing and revering names like Watson and Nicklaus.

For one day, anyway, they can look at him in wonder, and wonder how he did what he'd done. It sounded as though he wondered a bit about it, too. In his broken English, he really couldn't explain how he'd done it, only that it had happened.

"It was a perfect drive," he said of his tee shot at No. 2. "From my ball to the green was 235 (yards) to the front edge, and to the pin was 21. So that's about 255. I took the three-wood. It was perfect. The ball went straight to the pin. I heard the crowd, the people standing behind the green. I knew the ball would be pretty close. I never thought it would go in the hole."

He didn't know it had gone in until he actually reached the green and spoke to the two young standard-bearers, the men holding the scoreboards. He didn't know he'd done what no man had done before at a U.S. Open until the post-round news conference.

"Never?" he exclaimed. "Really?"

Someone asked whether the double-eagle gave him any particular momentum for the rest of the round. "Oh, yes," he said, not quite comprehending the question. "It was a good start."

Tze-Chung Chen
...makes Open history

In fact, he was never less than three under after that. He followed immediately with a birdie on the par-3 third hole, birdied No. 6, bogeyed No. 7, birdied No. 12, then bogeyed the 13th and 15th.

Then the lightning came and, with it, a 14-minute break in play. Chen said he was worried the delay might hurt his game. It didn't. He closed out the round with birds on 17 and 18.

When he was asked how a young man who didn't take up golf seriously until age 17 had managed to become so good so quickly, Chen's reply was — although he didn't know it — the punch line to the classic joke about how to get to Carnegie Hall:

"Practice."

Couples was 8-over 288, tied for 69th, in the Colonial a month ago, 9-over 297 and tied for 45th in the Memorial the next week and missed the cut completely in the Kemper two weeks ago. Last week at Westchester, he had a third-round 82 and finished with a 16-over 300.

"The last few weeks I played horribly," he said. "I hit a bunch of bad shots in the previous rounds. Today I hit only one or two. I drove the ball fairly accurately. ... I feel like I'm back to normal.

"If anyone plays well, they play to their strength. Today, I played to mine, which was driving. ... I have a tendency to give in a little quick. The last couple of weeks it was no fun playing. I just wanted to get off the course. If I shot 75 or 85, it didn't really matter. My mind wasn't on my practice. But this is a funny game. It comes and it goes and maybe it takes a U.S. Open to get you to bear down and play a little harder."

JIM MURRAY

'Let the peasants eat cake'

I don't know what the definition of consummate arrogance is, but I think I've got an example.

Try this on for major league disdain. This is a line that could only be delivered by Basil Rathbone in his heyday. You can't say it, you have to sneer it:

"There is no contractual obligation ever for a player to play in an All-Star game. You could refuse to play in that game without engaging in a strike. There is nothing in a player's contract or in the Basic Agreement that requires players to play in an All-Star game."

Could Marie Antoinette have delivered those lines any better? Louis XIV? Any Czar? Does this make "Let 'em eat cake" sound like a concerned participant?

THE LINES were delivered in their virginal hauteur by Marvin Miller, who, the last time I looked, was the retired director of the players' association in baseball. He was commenting on the advisability of boycotting the annual All-Star baseball game in Minneapolis this summer.

I hope these guys do boycott. I'd be curious just to see how far the public tolerance goes with these dunderheads of baseball, management and player reps.

Now, about the All-Star game. It's my recollection that this extravaganza was brought into being originally by the late Arch Ward, a sports editor in Chicago, in 1933, for two reasons:

–Baseball was in trouble that Depression year. Attendance was down, the Yankees were dominating and prospects looked gloomy.

–He thought it would be a good way to build up a pension fund for the players, who had none in those days.

The game caught on. Baseball was more uniquely suited to the All-Star format than any other sport, precisely because it is not a team game but a kaleidoscope of solo performances by the artists on the order of Heifetz on the violin.

It was such a nice idea, that they started to play two of them a year. That was not such a nice idea but my recollection is, the two games were scheduled at the urging of the players themselves. More money for the pensions.

ALL THIS, of course, was before players got millions of dollars a year for mediocre pitching, indifferent hitting and questionable lifestyles.

There's a syllogism in modern sports philosophy that goes something like this: a) all ballplayers are in it for the money; b) all owners are in it for the money; c) therefore, all sport is in it for the money.

Well, the major premise (a) may be so. The minor premise (b) is not so. All owners are not in it for the money. I don't believe George Steinbrenner is. Other motivations drive him. I know the late Phil Wrigley was not. I know the late Tom Yawkey was not. I know Gene Autry is not.

Players are in baseball because that is what they do well. Marvin Miller is in labor negotiations because that is what he does well. The only owner I can think of who is in baseball because that is what he does well is Peter O'Malley. The Chicago Tribune owns the Cubs but baseball is not really the Tribune's bag. Ted Turner owns the Atlanta Braves, but baseball is not his bag, either. It's not Louis Lurie's, John Galbreath's, nor Nelson Doubleday's.

I just don't see this as a labor dispute between the Colorado miners and John D. Rockefeller. It's not the UAW vs. the stockholders of General Motors. As I said, ballplayers are not the girls in the Triangle shirtwaist fire.

But, regardless, the All-Star game is hardly the proper vehicle for aggressive unioneering. It's kind of like dynamiting baby carriages.

The All-Star game is a kind of harmless little sideshow drummed up to call attention to the main event. It's the circus parade that used to move through town the morning they put up the big top.

I DON'T see it as a proper hostage at all in this warfare between owners and players. I mean, what do you do for an encore – burn bubble gum cards?

Labor negotiations are studies in brinkmanship. But why dangle the All-Star game over the precipice? It's as if the player reps were interested in showing their seriousness, like kidnapers mailing fingers to the family if the ransom isn't forthcoming.

If it's a show of force, we baseball fans don't need it. We remember the strike of 1981 all too well. If these guys are going to keep this game in thrall every few seasons, one of these years the little old fan is going to get fed up and tell them, "Keep it."

Weaver back as Earl of Baltimore

Baseball's most successful manager returns to game

By DAVE ANDERSON
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Until now, Earl Weaver had resisted for more than two seasons the temptation to sneak a smoke in the dugout runway between innings. As recently as late April, when George Steinbrenner was losing patience while the Yankees were losing games with Yogi Berra as manager, the principal owner sounded out Weaver before anointing Billy Martin for the fourth time. Weaver wisely knew better than to be interested.

"I don't know if Billy knows he was the second choice," a source familiar with the Yankees' managerial move said at the time. "But he was."

Then as before, Weaver contended that he had no desire to be a manager again. Even when the ABC network did not resign him after two seasons as a television analyst, he had talked about how happy he was as an ex-manager who played golf, played the horses and played with his tomato plants.

But sooner or later Weaver had to be Weaver again; sooner or later Weaver had to manage again.

And when the Orioles play the Milwaukee Brewers in Baltimore Friday night, Weaver will return to the same dugout he had hopped out of on Sept. 30, 1982, after the Orioles had lost the American League East title to the Brewers in the final game of the 1982 season. Even in the disappointment of that defeat, a spontaneous standing ovation from the Oriole followers had prompted Weaver to appear for an encore, to wave his cap in appreciation, even to use his arms and legs to form an "O-r-i-o-l-e-s" cheer. "Well," he said a few minutes later in his office, "it's over with."

BUT EVEN on that day, Weaver seemed to be the only person who thought his career as a certified genius was over. That day he had walked into the sunset at age 52 — too young to play golf and play the horses for the rest of his life, certainly too young to play with his tomato plants for the rest of his life. Maybe a corporate or corpulent man could do that at 52, but not Weaver, not a manager who was never completely happy unless he was snarling at an umpire, or changing pitchers, or explaining his strategy.

"What if you hadn't been a manager," he once was asked, "what would you be doing?"

"I don't know," he said. "Baseball is the only thing I've thought about since I was 4."

With that in mind, it's surprising Weaver stayed out of baseball for even the last two seasons. But he was never really out of it until this year. As a TV analyst for two years, he had the best of both worlds — being able to stay home during the week, then visiting with other managers when he worked a game. One day at Wrigley Field last year, Jim Frey, the Chicago Cubs' manager, was sitting in his office when Weaver arrived.

THEY BEGAN to talk serious baseball. And that's what Weaver always did best. After working a National League playoff game in San Diego last year, he sat around for hours that night dissecting the managers' moves. "But if he had done this," he would say, "then the guy in the other dugout couldn't have done that."

At the time, Weaver would say, "I just don't want to manage anymore." And he probably meant it. In the weeks after the season ended last year, the Yankees asked about him before Steinbrenner announced that Berra would return. The Montreal Expos offered him what a confidant calls "a lot of money." The Chicago White Sox and the Seattle Mariners also checked him out.

"No, no," Weaver kept saying, "I just don't want to manage anymore."

That's what he also told Steinbrenner in April, but when Edward Bennett Williams asked, Weaver decided that he wanted to manage again. Or at least he decided he wanted to manage the Orioles again.

"I owe Mr. Williams a favor," he said the other day. "My words to him were, 'If you need me, I'll be there.' "

HAVING DROPPED eight games behind the Toronto Blue Jays and into fourth plaae in the American League East, the Orioles needed him. Just as he needed baseball again. But now he needs to be as "mean" a manager, to use his word, as he once was. The day the 1982 season ended, he talked about how important it was for a manager to possess that "mean" manner.

"I don't think I can be mean enough any more," he said. "I was mean enough this year because I knew this was it. But I don't think that I could be mean enough next year. That's why I'm stopping."

Next year for Weaver is now this year. But as with any manager, he will only be as good as his players. Sparky Anderson, the Detroit Tigers' manager and once the Cincinnati Reds' manager, put that philosophy in perspective when the Orioles were in Detroit earlier this week. "Managers are only as solid as the 25 players they have," said the only manager to wear a World Series championship ring in both leagues. "I never look to see who the manager is in the other dugout. I look to see who he has out there on the field."

Oddly enough, in 1983, his first year as the Oriole manager, the now-deposed Joe Altobelli guided the Orioles to a World Series victory over the Philadelphia Phillies in five games. In nearly 15 seasons, Weaver had led the Orioles to only one World Series title — in 1971, a Series remembered mostly for Brooks Robinson's glove. But now Altobelli, a genius himself briefly, is out and Weaver is in again.

WHITE

"McLemore would have 30 steals by now," says Maddon, "If it wasn't for that knee. "I think Mark is a little gunshy on that first step, and that's understandable."

White has been batting No. 2 and No. 3 all season. Since he is making a run at a steal record, wouldn't he rather bat lead off?

"I don't like hitting lead off. I get enough steal attempts where I am."

"Devon could be a perfect lead off man," says Maddon, "but I feel and the California Angels feel he has a lot of rbi potential. And we don't want to take the bat out of his hands by hitting him second where he would take a lot of pitches. Until Mike Madril arrived, we didn't really have a No. 2 hitter, so Devon batted there sometimes."

No. 3 apparently is the ideal spot and the Angels' present one-two-three combination could really make things happen in the second half, if this homestand is any indication.

"McLemore, White and Madril, put them in a foot race and there wouldn't be a yard and a half separating them at the finish," claims Maddon.

A TWO-sport star in high school, White was offered a scholarship in both sports by Oklahoma State, but opted to go pro when picked in the sixth round of the 1981 draft.

"Second or third, they are about the same to steal," says White. "The key is the hitter. Sometimes the hitters sees me go and, if I've got the good jump, he'll take the pitch. If not, he'll try to protect me or spoil it."

After Redwood, Midland and the Texas League is a dramatic change. "I like the warm weather here. In the California League, the nights could be chilly."

The one thing he has had to adjust to is the wind. "Occasionally, it will be deceptive. When the ball is hit, it will sound as though it is hit harder than it is. You'll start back and the ball will be in front of you. And sometimes in the twilight, it's tough to pick up the ball off the bat, but you've just to keep looking."

White is looking at a four or five year timetable for reaching the major leagues. He isn't impatient, "I was on the California roster this spring. It was a nice feeling, but I knew what they were going to do, so it wasn't a letdown when they sent me to AA ball."

DIABLOS

It seems the jacket is not part of the uniform and unsuitable for wear on the bases, home plate umpire Bevington warned manager Bevington that his player could not wear the jacket and both player and manager would be removed from the game if Bosio went out to coach with the jacket on.

Bosio did, and so both were promptly ejected. The brothers Bevington went jaw-to-jaw for 10 minutes and the El Paso manager entered his protest plea.

"We've got a lot of money invested in our pitcher's arms and on a cool night we need to keep them protected," manager Bevington said. "I've never heard of such a rule, our pitchers have worn jackets out there 75 percent of the time. I've seen managers wear them. Why wasn't this rule enforced earlier?

Centerfielder - Devon White

CENTERFIELDER

TERRITORY

Centerfield is the most demanding outfield position because there is more territory to cover. The center fielder usually has first call on balls that are hit to his right or left, because he can so often get a better line on them.

Although the center fielder may look as if he has the best shot at a fly ball that is going between the fielder, that does not mean that the other fielder who is close to it simply gives up. Both outfielders move toward the ball swiftly. And whoever is going to be in a better position to get off a throw, then he should yell for the ball – and yell loud, and keep on yelling until he hears the other guy tell him to take it.

PRACTICE

The most important thing about playing centerfield as any outfield position is practice. Outfielders need to practice as much as possible catching fly balls in a regular outfield with balls hit off a bat from the plate or the plate area. You will find that the fly balls that come straight at you are often the most difficult to deal with because it is hard to judge their carry. A ball may look as if it is going to drop in front of you and just as you start in, it will seem to rise up and sail over your head. It takes a lot of practice to recognize balls like these.

TWO HANDS

As often as possible, catch a ball with both hands, trapping it in the glove and getting the bare hand over it at once so you can be sure it will not spin or bounce free and so you will be ready to get off a throw in an instant. There will of course, be many balls that you will have to strain to get to, and these you may be lucky to catch in your glove alone. If you have confidence in your ability to catch a ball, you will be surprised at how many "impossible" catches you can make.

BOWLING BEAT

Lehman leads city bowlers

BY RANDY ISENBERG

Joe Lehman, with a 248 game and 657 series and Monica Elger with a 225 game and 600 series paced bowlers at Dellwood Lanes, while Ty Bowling with 243-646 and Donna Archer, 215-608 paced participants at Fairmont Park Lanes, in league bowling over the past couple of weeks.

The Busy Mens and Gals League, at Fairmont Park Lanes, is one of a very unique nature. This league consists of all men's teams bowling against all women's teams, on an equal basis. During the 2nd week of league play, Kathy Knox rolled a 213 game and 564 series to pace both men's participants and womens participants for the week. Terry Hobman rolled the men's highs with a 213-534 series. The PDAP team, a men's fivesome, leads the league with a 12 and 2 record. Team No. 1, a women's fivesome, is in second place with a 10 and 4 mark.

Bowling History: Bowling has been traced to articles found in an ancient Egyptian tomb. The child, buried in 5200 B.C. was buried with primitive implements of the game which included nine pieces of stone and a stone ball. The ancient Polynesians also had a game similar to bowling. They rolled stone balls at stone pins 60 feet away, a distance which today is still one of the basic regulations of bowling. Bowling at pins probably originated in ancient Germany as a religious ceremony. The earliest known reference to bowling in this century was made by author Washington Irving in the year 1818, in his story about "Rip Van Winkle."

Grand Prix Scholarship Tournament: On June 29, Dellwood Lanes, will be hosting a regional edition of the Grand Prix Singles Program, a scholarship program developed by the Texas Bowling Centers Association, for the purpose of rewarding youth bowlers who start in a recognized Grand Prix youth program, and remain in the program until they graduate from high school. Grand Prix scholarhip points are awarded on the basis of league participation, all-star youth participation, the National Family tournament, and the Grand Prix program. The June 29 event, will be a no-handicap event, and will be a double elimination format. Qualifying rounds begin at 9:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. Persons to contact concerning this event are: Randy Isenberg, 687-1878, Guy Conley, 689-9725, or Al Benson, 697-7871.

Schedule of Events: The first Pin Point Bowling TV Show, will air Sunday, June 16, from 5 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. on KOSA channel 7. The show is taped every Monday, starting at 7 p.m. at Dellwood Lanes.

Dellwood Lanes is the host center for the King and Queen of the Hill tournament, conducted Friday evenings at 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m.

Centennial News: Dellwood Lanes and Fairmont Park Lanes will be playing a role in this year's Centennial celebration, July 6 and 7. A stub lane with an automatic pinsetter will be located at the corner of Wall and Main, near the Midland Center. Citizens will be able to roll a ball at pins. Profits from the event will be donated to charity.

In addition, the bowling organization is seeking any bowling memorabilia, that anyone may have, old trophys, old bowling equipment, old photographs, and news clippings, concerning bowling history in Midland. To loan these artifacts contact Randy Isenberg at 687-1878, Guy Conley at 689-9725, or Ilene Gould at 697-7871.

Honor Rolls: Fairmont Park Lanes: Men: Ty Bowling, 243-646, Eric Griffin, 233-635, Steve Masoner, 226-628, Tim Saunders, 219-626, Gordon Simmons, 231-619, Ronny Meador, 224-608.
Women: Donna Archer, 215-608, Kathy Knox, 213-564.
Dellwood Lanes: Men: Joe Lehman, 248-657, Tim Saunders, 258-650, Brent Gallagher, 618, 226-612, David Braswell, 234-638, B.J. Williams, 224-615, Jim Kapala, 220-611, Eric Keown, 235-609, Hi Burney, 230-601, Ralph Morell, 255-600.

USFLPA plans to file grievance

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The USFL Players Association will file a grievance by next Tuesday if the San Antonio Gunslingers haven't received the June 11 payroll by then, an association spokesman says.

John Macik, assistant director of the players association, said if such a grievance is filed, it could not be processed until the season is over.

The Gunslingers' play their final game of the season June 23.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, June 15, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: After a period of obtaining mixed results, you emerge stronger than ever both financially and emotionally. Be prepared to defend your ideals. Romance moves you in a new and exciting direction. Spend more time with offspring, and any friction between you will quickly evaporate. Changes at place of employment will work to your advantage. You are able to showcase your special talents. Review pension plans and insurance policies; they may not be as generous as you supposed. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, San Francisco outfielder Dusty Baker, first baseman Babe Dahlgren, country star Waylon Jennings, actor Joe De Santis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make this a day of leisure. Home repairs can wait. You need to relax a while and recharge your batteries. Outdoor activities hold special appeal. Pack a picnic and head for the countryside.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Listen carefully to a family member who wants to make new financial arrangements. You could be a major beneficiary! Handle your domestic duties graciously, and the weekend will be a big success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You could benefit from helping a teen-ager get better organized. A desire to assist the underdog takes over. Let romance simmer for a while. A change in lifestyle brings greater happiness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Spend the weekend with someone who shares your ideals and interests. Inspiration comes from an unexpected source. Be grateful for favors. Repay a loan as soon as possible.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep your temper under control or you could lose out in romance. Financial pressures can be reduced with a phone call or visit. Take someone special out to dinner this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your love for humanity dictates your activities today. Learn from those who have had greater experience in money management. Build savings for investment purposes. Try harder to please mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An unexpected meeting or phone call could give you the solution to a family problem. An effort to bring loved ones closer together proves successful. Stay on your toes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The emphasis today is on pleasing those who mean the most to you. Your past efforts bring fresh rewards. Travel opens the door to romance. Get your home better organized.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A ride in the country or walk in the park brings back happy memories. Take along a favorite canine. You could get a pleasant surprise when discussing a money matter.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be on the lookout for information and ideas you can use in the future. Find less expensive ways to say "thank you." Romance is more rewarding than in the recent past.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An old friend is the best companion when attending a social event. Romance takes a back seat to family needs. An uninhibited individual adds spice to a party. Be tolerant.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You need to make an important personal decision without further delay. A child or pet affects your social plans. Be conscious of what other people are trying to do.

CUTTING IT FINE

North-South vulnerable. West deals.

	NORTH ♠ A Q 10 6 3 ♡ K 8 4 3 ◇ 6 ♣ J 7 5
WEST ♠ 9 8 5 2 ♡ A 6 ◇ A 9 8 3 2 ♣ K Q		EAST ♠ K 7 4 ♡ 10 ◇ K Q 7 5 4 ♣ 9 6 3 2
	SOUTH ♠ J ♡ Q J 9 7 5 2 ◇ J 10 ♣ A 10 8 4

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dble	4 ◇	4 ♡
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

We all have a tendency to draw trumps at the first opportunity. That is a bad habit. There are often more urgent matters to be attended to.

East did his best to take advantage of the vulnerability. He jumped to four diamonds over North's takeout double, but South had too much distribution to be kept out of the auction, and his four heart bid bought the contract.

West led the king of clubs, won in hand. Had declarer followed his natural impulse and tried to draw trumps, he could be defeated. West can rise with the ace of trumps, cash the queen of clubs and then underlead the ace of diamonds. East wins the queen of diamonds and it is not too difficult for him to find the club continuation. West ruffs for down one.

When his hand was played in a major national team championship, Richard Freeman of Atlanta held the South cards. He foresaw the danger of a defensive ruff, and found a very simple counter. Instead of trying to draw trumps, he led a diamond to trick two.

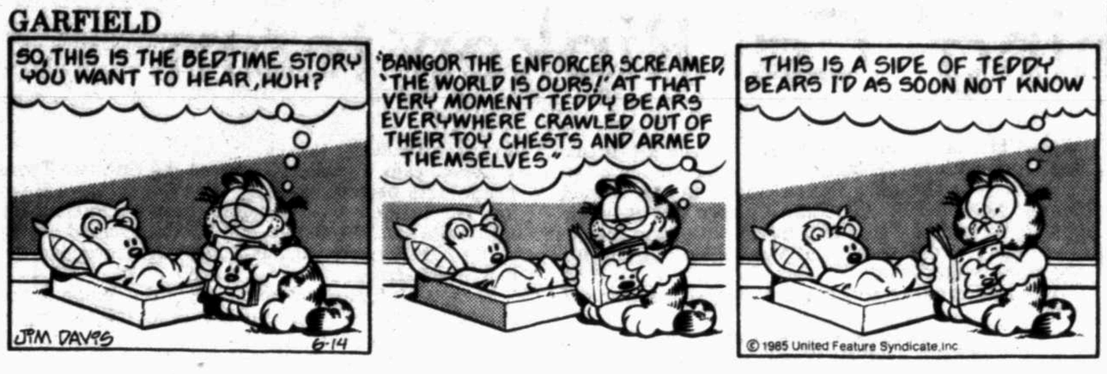

It made no difference which defender won this trick. After West cashed the queen of clubs, he could not reach his partner to score his club ruff. Declarer was able to win any return and force out the ace of trumps. When he regained the lead, he could draw the last trump and claim his contract.

For those of you who are interested, the technical name for this play that cuts the defenders' communications is a "scissors coup."

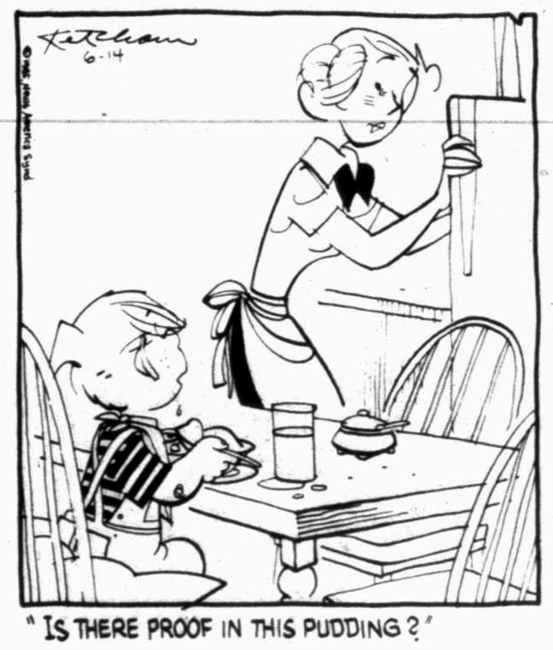

Have you been running into double trouble? Let Charles Goren help you find your way through the maze of DOUBLES for penalties and for takeout. Irving gives birth to boy

Irving

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Director Steven Spielberg, who brought Indiana Jones to the screen and ushered in "The Goonies," had a close encounter of another kind witnessing the birth to actress Amy Irving of their son Max.

The 7-pound, 7½-ounce baby was born Thursday, said Ruth Crane, publicity coordinator for Warner Brothers.

Miss Irving, 31, who was nominated for an Oscar in 1984 for her role as a docile Jewish maiden in "Yentl," had called motherhood "the role I've been waiting for all my life" during her fourth month of pregnancy.

Spielberg, 37, and Miss Irving have been together for eight years. She owns a home in Santa Fe, N.M., but they live together in Los Angeles.

Among the hit films Spielberg directed are "Jaws," "Close Encounters of The Third Kind," "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial," "Raiders of the Lost Ark" and its sequel, "Indiana Jones in the Temple of Doom."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, Texas, was reported in good condition in Bethesda Naval Hospital, but officials said he might be confined there for as long as two weeks while recuperating from an irregular heartbeat.

Wilson contracted dysentery in Morocco early this month during what an aide described Thursday as a fact-finding trip in connection with his service on the House Appropriations foreign operations subcommittee.

The dysentery combined with an asthma attack to cause a heart arrhythmia, a temporary irregular heart beat, Wilson spokeswoman Elaine Lang told the Houston Chronicle.

Wilson will remain hospitalized one to two weeks, she said, mostly for rest.

Wilson was admitted Tuesday at Bethesda Naval Hospital in suburban Washington. He went to the floor of the House in a wheelchair Wednesday to vote for aid to the contras fighting the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

Ms. Lang said Wilson was in Morocco en route to the Paris Air Show, which concluded late last week. He stopped in Frankfurt, West Germany, after the air show to have his condition checked, she said.

Ms. Lang said Wilson apparently contracted the dysentery from eating raw vegetables in Morocco.

Goldwater

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Sen. Barry Goldwater has agreed to lend his name to a new high school but he thinks the school's cheers might sound a bit funny.

"I can't think of any higher honor than having a school named after me," the Arizona Republican said in a letter to school board officials, "but did you ever think of the Barry M. Goldwater High School?

"It presents some problems in developing a song, in developing cheers," he said.

The school, in the Phoenix suburb of Deer Valley, is expected to open in fall 1986. The school board plans to hold public hearings before finally settling on a name.

NEW YORK (AP) — Claus von Bulow, acquitted this week of twice trying to kill his heiress wife Martha, says she tolerated his extramarital affairs.

"Provided that I kept it discreet, she had no objection," he told interviewer Charlie Rose today on CBS-TV's "Nightwatch," "and I kept it discreet."

Von Bulow said Sunny closed her eyes to his mistresses "As long as I didn't go into her own back garden. That I did not do. I didn't have affairs with her friends."

He said he would like to see a reconciliation with his stepchildren Annie Laurie Kneissl and Prince Alexander von Auersperg, who said all along they believe he tried to murder their mother.

"Look, I just want no active hostility on my part. From what they say, I think that's a long shot," von Bulow said.

Graham

LONDON (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham is back in Britain for an eight-day crusade in which he will preach by satellite-relayed television to 51 towns in the British Isles.

Graham, 66, veteran of 40 years of evangelism, will appear June 25-29 at a soccer stadium in Sheffield, a steel-making city in Yorkshire.

His sermons will be relayed to civic centers, school halls and theaters from Dublin, Ireland, to the Shetland Islands, 120 miles off the coast of Scotland.

Graham said Thursday that his style of evangelism was as relevant now as ever. "People are thinking quite deeply about what is the future," he said.

Walters

NEW YORK (AP) — Television newswoman Barbara Walters will wed businessman Marv Adelson in the fall, a spokeswoman says.

The two have known each other for about a year, and plan a bicoastal marriage, with homes in New York and Los Angeles, said Maurie Perl, a spokeswoman for ABC News.

Miss Walters, 53, is co-host of the ABC News "20-20" show and host of her own interview specials.

Adelson, 55, founded Lorimar, a communications company best known for its television series, "Dallas," "Falcon's Crest" and "Knot's Landing."

Miss Walters, whose previous marriage ended in divorce, has a teen-age daughter. Adelson, whose first marriage also ended in divorce, has three children, Ms. Perl said.

DALLAS (AP) — Fred Crane, a jazz pianist who was a regular with such greats as Al Hirt, Doc Severinsen and Johnnie Mercer, died Monday of a heart attack. He was 57.

Crane recorded the album "Night Journey" with Severinsen and several albums with Hirt. He moved to Dallas in 1966 to compose for companies producing jingles and background music for commercials. Crane's most recent work included the music for Muse Air commercials and Martin Mull's "Mr. Telephone" commercials for Metromedia Long Distance. He also had been touring with Hirt and performing as a soloist.

Baltimore breaks up 'winning' Cal Ripken team

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

Someday, Cal Ripken Jr. may get to play again for Cal Ripken Sr. But for now, Earl Weaver is running the show — again — for the Baltimore Orioles.

"I've got to clean myself out of here. I just got fired," Ripken Sr. said with a smile Thursday night after talking by phone with Weaver following the Orioles' 8-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Ripken Sr. guided the team as it broke a five-game losing streak because a prior personal commitment kept Weaver away from Memorial Stadium. Weaver, who managed the Orioles for 14½ years, was named to replace the fired Joe Altobelli on Thursday and will make his return tonight when Baltimore plays host to Detroit.

Owner Edward Bennett Williams, who announced the managerial change, said he had "watched with some anguish" as the Orioles faded after a fast start this year. The team, which won the 1983 World Series in Altobelli's first season after replacing the retired Weaver, appeared "lackluster," during its fifth-place finish in the American League East last year, Williams said.

Ripken Jr. hit two run-scoring doubles to help his father-led Orioles beat the Brewers.

"Earl is definitely a fan favorite," he said. "He may add a certain dimension to the ballclub that we didn't have."

Ripken Jr. said, however, he thought his father deserved a chance to manage in the major leagues someday. "Who knows what the future holds?" the younger Ripken said.

American League

And Ripken Sr. even alluded to the possibility that he might manage on a temporary basis soon.

"I think I've sat in this chair a couple of times before," he said. "Somebody else we know might have been ejected from a ballgame here and there."

Scott McGregor, 5-5, settled down after Cecil Cooper's two-run homer in the first inning to beat the Brewers and Ray Burris, 3-5.

Fred Lynn's two-run homer keyed a four-run rally in the fourth inning that put the Orioles ahead, and Ripken's RBI double and a two-run, pinch-triple by Mike Young added three insurance runs in the eighth.

"We haven't been playing well," Baltimore outfielder Gary Roenicke said. "If anybody can light a fire, it's Earl."

Angels 2, White Sox 1

Reggie Jackson, once again rising to the occasion, snapped out of a 2-for-21 slump with a game-winning, pinch-single with the bases loaded and two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning on reliever Bob Fallon's first pitch.

"When you hit the ball enough times, once in a while you're going to hit it solid," said the 39-year-old Jackson.

Jackson batted for Gary Pettiss after California loaded the bases against Gene Nelson, 3-2, on a single by Bobby Grich and two-out walks to Bob Boone and pinch-hitter Daryl Sconiers.

The hit gave Jackson his 1,538th career RBI and moved him into 22nd place on the all-time list, breaking his tie with Joe DiMaggio.

Grich sent the host Angels ahead in the second inning with an RBI single and Chicago tied it in the fourth on Carlton Fisk's 15th home run of the season. The homer tied Fisk with Atlanta's Dale Murphy for the major league lead.

The loss broke a five-game losing streak for the White Sox.

Red Sox 8, Blue Jays 7

Rich Gedman's two-run double sparked a four-run rally in the seventh inning and Wade Boggs had three hits, including a two-run homer.

Boston roughed up five Toronto pitchers, including relief aces Gary Lavelle and Bill Caudill, for 14 hits in overcoming a 6-2 deficit after 4⅓ innings.

Trailing 6-4, Boggs led off the Red Sox seventh with a walk and scored on a double by Jim Rice. Lavelle, 2-1, gave up a two-run double to Gedman and Marty Barrett singled home the final run of the inning.

"We feel there is no lead big enough to hold us down," said Boggs. "We just go back out there and peck away."

Len Matuszek led off the ninth inning with a home run to pull the Blue Jays within 8-7. Matuszek went 4-for-5, including two doubles.

Rookie reliever Mike Trujillo, 1-1, won his first major league game and Bob Stanley pitched the final two innings for his eighth save of the season and the 105th of his career. That surpassed the previous team record of 104 set by Dick Radatz.

Twins 7, Rangers 5

Kirby Puckett homered and hit two doubles and helped Minnesota score three times in the sixth inning to win in Texas.

Loser Frank Tanana, 1-7, retired the first two Twins in the sixth before singles by Greg Gagne, Dave Meier and Tim Laudner put Minnesota ahead 5-4. Puckett followed with an RBI double, and Laudner scored on the play when Rangers catcher Don Slaught dropped the ball for an error.

Puckett hit his second home run of the season in the third inning and Gagne hit his first major league home run in the fourth to make it 4-0.

A three-run homer by Cliff Johnson highlighted a four-run fourth as Texas tied the score.

"We've been looking streaky all year," said Minnesota Manager Billy Gardner, whose team has had a 10-game winning and losing streaks of 10 and nine games this season. "It's going to get consistent."

Royals 4, Mariners 3

Darryl Motley and Jim Sundberg hit home runs and Kansas City starter Mark Gubicza and relievers Joe Beckwith and Dan Quisenberry made the lead hold up in Seattle.

Bill Wilkinson, making his major league debut for the Mariners, struck out Willie Wilson and Lonnie Smith to start the game. But Frank White then singled, Steve Balboni walked and Motley welcomed Wilkinson to big-league life at the Kingdome with a three-run homer.

Sundberg's homer made it 4-0, before home runs by Ivan Calderon and Alvin Davis helped Seattle pull within 4-3 in the sixth against Gubicza, 3-4.

Beckwith preserved the lead over the next 2 2-3 innings and Quisenberry pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

Controversy simmers

By BOB SUDYK
(c) 1985, The Hartford Courant

Preseason rumblings continue after the recent 19-9 NFL vote that will lop four players from the roster of each team this season. Including average salary and off-the-field costs, this will save each team about $650,000.

It has been four years since the NFL had 45-man rosters, and adjustments will be necessary by 28 head coaches when 112 players find themselves without jobs this season.

While the absence of four players doesn't strike one as alarmingly significant, the move will signal the demise of the ultimate situation player and blunt the strategy of such situation coaches as Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers.

San Francisco defensive coordinator George Seifert resembled a downtown traffic cop at rush hour during games last season, whistling in specialists almost from play to play to keep players fresh and confuse offensive linemen.

The 49-man rosters, in vogue since 1981, made popular such specialized roles as the H-backs, designated pass rushers, nickel defensive backs, pass-covering linebackers and the pure special teams players.

Defenses switched from 4-3 setups to 3-4 and coaches used as many as 21 players during a three-down series. At times it was almost impossible for fans to know who was on the field from down to down.

It is speculated that the 45-man rosters will break down to six defensive linemen, seven linebackers and seven defensive backs, eight offensive linemen, five running backs, seven receivers (including tight ends), three quarterbacks and two kickers.

There is concern in the NFL over the quarterback position. Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell petitioned strongly in the last league meeting for a 45-man roster with one extra spot for a spare quarterback because of the rash of injuries to the passers. It was turned down.

Another compromise was offered that would reduce the rosters to 47 players with three more allowed to practice with the club but not play. It also was rejected.

Teams voting to keep the rosters at 49 were San Francisco, Miami, Dallas, Denver, Washington, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, the Los Angeles Raiders and the New York Giants.

Giants General Manager George Young said, "I'm a 49er (roster supporter) in principle. But I recognize the need to cut costs. If salaries are allowed to increase at the current rate of 15 percent a year, the average player salary will be $377,000.

"If we keep this up, by the end of the current TV contract (1987), every club will be losing $3 million a year. It is not known that each club has around 58 players under contract because of injured reserve. This cutdown is purely a business exercise."

Young admits there will be necessary adjustments in the makeup of rosters this season.

Positions most likely to suffer are at defensive back, tight end and special teams. Kick return specialists who can do nothing else and centers whose skills stop at snapping the ball deep to punters are endangered species.

Veteran lineman specialist Jack (Hacksaw) Reynolds, who was used by San Francisco only to defense against the run, has been released and may find himself without a team. There may be more like him. Also, there will be fewer spots open to rookies.

In addition to economics, a reason given for reducing rosters is opening a talent pool for the have-not teams. But teams are kidding themselves if they think they can win a championship with San Francisco or Miami's 46th, 47th, 48th and 49th players.

New York Jets President Jim Kensil believes the reduced roster will make the players more competitive internally. "People work harder when there are fewer jobs," he said.

The Raiders managing general partner, Al Davis, called the cutback "ludicrous." He said, "When economic times are tough, you find ways to cut costs. But you don't cut your product and your game on the field is your product."

Davis points out that 49-man rosters make for better practices, allow for more specialists to heighten the quality of play and help teams develop more young players for the future.

The bottom line in the cutback demonstrates the belief that the United States Football League is no longer a threat and stockpiling players no longer is a necessary expense.

Phillies' non-hero Wilson turns out Orosco's lights

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

When Jesse Orosco took the mound in the eighth inning in his usual role as protector of another New York lead, Philadelphia's Glenn Wilson hardly pictured himself as a hero.

"All I can remember is two strikeouts and a couple of ground balls," said Wilson, hitless against the Met relief ace since coming to the Phillies last season from Detroit.

So the hot-hitting outfielder threw caution to the wind. He swung hard and got a fly ball into the breeze. It made it over the wall in center field to give Philadelphia a 5-4 victory Thursday night.

The two-run homer, Wilson's seventh, gave the Phillies the rubber match of a wild three-game series which saw them set a slew of club records when they banged out 27 hits in a 26-7 victory Tuesday. The Mets collected 18 hits Wednesday, but had to rally for four runs in the 11th inning to post a 7-3 victory.

Wilson also homered Wednesday night, circling the bases on a three-run, inside-the-parker. He has knocked in 14 runs in his last five games.

The 26-year-old outfielder leads the Phillies in home runs and in runs batted in with 42. After going 0-for-3 against Mets starter Ed Lynch, Wilson's homer extended his modest hitting streak to six games.

National League

"In the minors I once had an 18-game hitting streak of two or more hits, but nothing like this," said Wilson, now batting .261.

It also was the first homer Orosco, 1-3, had given up this season.

Mets' Manager Dave Johnson said he went to Orosco in the eighth because he thought Lynch was tiring.

"He is my best relief pitcher. Jesse is usually effective even if he works two nights in a row. And last night was the best I've seen him pitch all year," Johnson said. "I was looking for him to pitch the same way tonight."

Rookie John Christensen led the Mets with two hits and drove in three runs.

Juan Samuel hit a home run, his fifth of the season, for the Phillies leading off the bottom of the first. Mike Schmidt also had a run-scoring hit and pinch-hitter Tim Corcoran drove in another with a sacrifice fly.

Cardinals 2, Pirates 1

Efficient St. Louis got only two hits, Jack Clark's 13th home run, in the second inning, and a seventh-inning RBI double by Tito Landrum.

"That's making the most out of the least," Landrum said. "You might not see a game like this again for a while."

John Tudor, 4-7, scattered six hits over 8 1-3 innings before Jeff Lahti came on to strike out ex-Cardinal George Hendrick on three pitches for his fourth save.

Reds 9, Braves 2

Eddie Milner was "just trying to hit the ball hard" when he stroked a run-scoring single to break a 2-2 tie and start a seven-run Cincinnati rally in the 11th inning.

The Reds had been held to only one hit — Dave Parker's 10th homer, a two-run shot in the fourth inning — over the first eight innings by rookie Steve Shields. They managed only one more off three relievers before breaking the game open with seven singles — two on the infield and one a blooper — in the 11th.

Dave Concepcion, who earlier had extended his hitting streak to 14 games, started the inning with a single off Gene Garber, 1-3. He scored one out later on Milner's liner to left-center.

Expos 9, Cubs 7

Terry Francona rarely gets to start at first base for Montreal, so he tries to make the most of his limited opportunites. He didn't fail as he and Hubie Brooks each had two hits and drove in two runs.

"When you don't play that often you try to at least get in good at-bats and hit the ball hard somewhere," Francona said. "You try to make your presence known in a postive way."

Bryn Smith, 6-2, pitched 7 1-3 innings as the Expos moved to within two games of Chicago in the NL East. Jeff Reardon retired the final Cub batter for his 19th save, tops in the major leagues.

Richie Hebner drove in three runs with a pinch double in the Chicago eighth. Davey Lopes had three hits and his 21st stolen base for the Cubs.

Padres 3, Giants 0

San Diego Manager Dick Williams didn't hesitate to summon his stopper despite having what would normally be considered a safe lead, and starter Dave Dravecky, 5-4, didn't mind a bit.

"We've got an outstanding bullpen. Period. The Goose (Rich Gossage) has a great record, and it was an ideal situation for him," said Dravecky.

Young golf pro now 100

By JOEY HOLLEMAN

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — George Blagg was a young golf professional in 1923 when he took a job at Blowing Rock Golf Club in the North Carolina mountains. It was a decision that literally added years to his life.

"Being at Blowing Rock did me a world of good — the surroundings, the altitude and the people."

Today, as Blagg celebrates his 100th birthday, he is a living advertisement for the restorative powers of mountain air and a daily round of golf. The Professional Golfers Association said they can't recall another of their members ever reaching 100.

Blagg, a native Englishman, joined the PGA in 1918, four years after coming to America as an assistant to French professional Louis Tellier at Canoe Brook in Summitt, N.J.

In 1923, Blagg was recovering from a bout of malaria when he set off for Blowing Rock. It was supposed to be a seasonal job, but he held it for 50 years. He now lives with his daughter in Florida.

Blagg wasn't a tournament player. "There wasn't enough money in it in those days. I had to make a living."

He did that as a teacher for such pupils as Katharine Hepburn and Gary Cooper. He played with Babe Ruth and Lady Astor.

"I played quite a few times with Babe Ruth," he said. "What impressed me about him was his addiction to thoroughness."

LADY ASTOR made an even stronger impression.

"She was relentless. I had to give her a stroke a hole, and we finished all square."

Blagg said he hasn't played a round of golf since 1974, and hasn't gotten around too well since taking a bad fall recently. But he still thinks like a teacher when he watches the professionals on television.

"I see a lot of faults, or at least what I think are faults," said Blagg, who grabbed a club to show how one was meant to be handled.

HIS DAUGHTER, Grace Blagg Taylor, shrieked when he brought the club head too close to a picture on the wall behind him.

"Don't worry, I know what I'm doing," he said, and returned to the lesson.

"The truth of the swing lies in the way you handle it. You have to handle it with authority."

It has been his theory that the left hand controls the heel of the club and the right hand controls the toe. But the heel is more important, he said, and that makes the correct swing difficult for most right-handed players.

"Out of the correct grip," he insisted, "the ball will place itself."

Blagg knows all about the complexities of the game, but at times golf was as frustrating for the teacher as it was for the pupil. He recalled a day at Florida's Hobe Sound, where he spent each winter, when he was heading for his best nine-hole total ever.

Dollar slips

LONDON (AP) — The dollar slipped on currency exchanges in Europe early today amid mixed signals on the American economy. Gold prices gained.

Dealers said investors seemed divided on whether the U.S. economic recovery is regaining its momentum.

They pointed to Thursday's report of a 0.8 percent fall in retail sales in May but also noted the Commerce Department's revision of the April increase from 0.9 percent to 2.4 percent.

With markets in West Germany closed for a long holiday, trading was light and dealers said further economic news due out in America later in the day — including producer prices and industrial production — would not have much effect on currency trading.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar ended the week at 249.50 yen, down from Thursday's close of 249.90. Last Friday the closing rate was 248.60.

In London, the dollar was quoted at 249.15 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Thursday:

—3.0920 West German marks, down from 3.0980.

—2.5938 Swiss francs, down from 2.6107.

—9.4025 French francs, down from 9.4250.

—3.4840 Dutch guilders, down from 3.4875.

—1,968.25 Italian lire, down from 1,969.00.

—1.3700 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3723.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $314.60 an ounce, compared with late Thursday's $313.75. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $315.75.

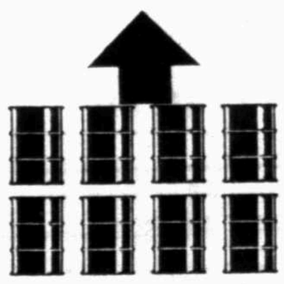

In Zurich, the bid noon price was $315.50, up from $314.50 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose the equivalent of 93 cents to close at a bid $315.65.

In New York Thursday, gold rose 80 cents to close at $314.40.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.18 an ounce, up from Thursday's $6.16.

Prime rates, reports blur economic picture

Interest rates, retail sales show decreases in May

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Interest rates were mostly lower Thursday, as credit market participants digested a host of developments that provided conflicting clues about the likely course of interest rates.

Early in the day, bond prices were weak and yields were higher after the Commerce Department announced that retail sales in May were down by 0.8 percent, while sales in April were revised sharply upward to show a rise of 2.4 percent.

Since many analysts also expect the May data to be revised upward, the stronger sales for April were enough to dampen hopes of some traders that the Federal Reserve would make any quick moves to ease monetary policy and encourage lower interest rates.

Late in the day, however, hopes of an imminent easing by the Fed were revived after the central bank announced an $800 million increase in the nation's basic money supply, much less than expected. Although the basic money supply measure remains well above the Fed's target, the broader money supply measures announced Thursday are within the Fed's annual growth targets.

"The smaller-than-expected rise in money supply clears the deck for further accommodation by the Fed, if the economy remains weak," said William Sullivan, a senior vice president at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. Friday, economists are expecting the Fed to announce a meager rise in the index of industrial production of a few tenths of 1 percent. Before the money supply announcement, some analysts said that the Fed might be restrained from easing policy because of rapid money supply growth in May.

The rise in the M-1 money supply measure consisting of currency and all kinds of checking accounts was far less than the $4 billion forecast by some analysts, and was small enough to spark a brisk rally in the bond market. The Treasury's closely watched 11¼ percent bonds due in 2015 rose late in the day to an offered price of 107¼, to yield 10.44 percent, about unchanged on the day, but up more than ⅝ point after the money supply announcement.

Securities dealers attributed some of the weakness in note and bond prices earlier in the day to rumors of large sales of mortgage passthrough certificates by a West Coast thrift institution. While the market was full of rumors about two sales of $1 billion each, one dealer with close knowledge of the transactions said there was only one institution that sought buyers for $1 billion of securities, but it had sold less than half that amount by late afternoon.

"The sale is nothing more than a case of somebody taking advantage of the market rally, and adjusting their balance sheet away from long-term fixed-rate assets and towards variable-rate assets," one investment banker said.

The sharpest rate declines were in the Treasury bill market, where rates fell more than⅛ percentage point for some issues, with the three-month bill bid at 6.95 percent, down from 7.09 percent. Demand for Treasury bills from investors and speculators was bolstered, market participants said, when Keefe, Bruyette & Woods, a Wall Street securities firm, reduced slightly its short-term debt ratings for the BankAmerica Corp.

The lower rating follows a recent announcement by the bank that its second-quarter earnings would be at the break-even point, and a reduction in the holding company's commercial paper to A-1 from A-1-plus by the Standard & Poor's Corp.

John Keane, a spokesman for the Bank of America, confirmed the lower ratings but said they were not justified in light of the bank's potential and "strong liquidity position." Securities dealers said it was difficult to tell if the lower rating hurt sales of the banking company's securities because the supply of those securities was very light. Although the bank sells certificates of deposit to its customers directly, in recent months it has not been selling the certificates through securities dealers.

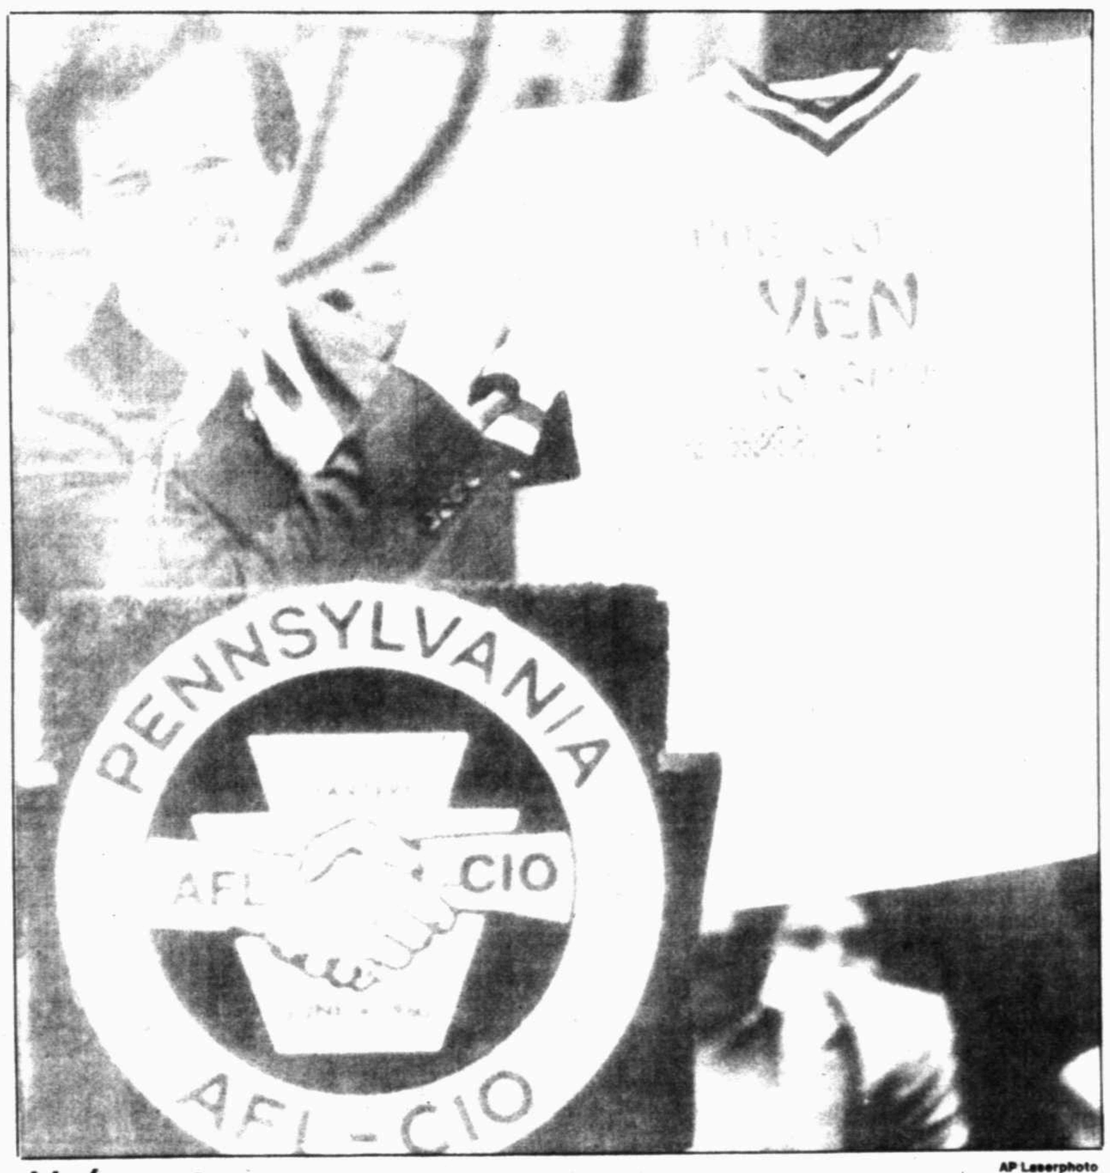

Including the rise of $800 million, to $585.6 billion, in the week ended June 3, M-1 has grown at a rate of 10.8 percent since the fourth quarter, or well above the Fed's target rate of 4-7 percent from the fourth quarter of 1984 to the fourth quarter of 1985.

During May, when some analysts said money supply growth was swollen by the later-than-normal issuance of income tax refunds, M-1 grew at a rate of 9.8 percent, up from 6.1 percent in April.

Despite the rapid M-1 growth, many economists say that the Fed is not using money supply growth as the primary guide to monetary policy. In recent months, many analysts have been puzzled by the rapid money supply growth at the same time the economy is sluggish.

Statistics for broader money supply measures, which the Fed publishes only monthly, showed that the M-2 money measure rose by $16.6 billion, to $2,442.2 billion, a 3.9 percent annual growth rate that was up from a slight decline in April. M-2 consists of M-1 plus small savings accounts, individuals' money market mutual fund assets, and certain overnight bank borrowings.

The M-3 money supply measure, consisting of M-2 plus large time deposits, institutional money market funds, and certain other bank borrowings, rose $16.5 billion in May, to $3,077.4 billion. During May, M-3 grew at a 4.3 percent rate, up from seven-tenths of 1 percent in April.

TWA takeover pits Texas Air president against labor costs

NEW YORK (AP) — The $793.5 million takeover of Trans World Airlines Inc., which has one of the nation's highest airline labor costs and a strike looming, poses a fresh challenge to the cost-cutting skills of Texas Air Corp. president Frank Lorenzo, analysts say.

TWA agreed Thursday to be acquired by Texas Air to avoid a hostile takeover by investor Carl C. Icahn.

The marriage would create one of the nation's largest air carriers, with a fleet of 294 jets second only to United Airlines' 320. The combined operation would employ 40,000 people and its 1984 revenue would have been $5.03 billion.

Lorenzo, 45, the head of Texas Air who wrestled the ailing Continental Airlines back to profitability by slashing costs and ticket prices, has built a reputation for aggressively securing the lowest labor costs possible, said Tom Canning, an analyst at Standard & Poor's Corp.

TWA has been negotiating for months with its machinists and flight attendants in a bid to cut its labor costs, but to date the talks have proved fruitless. The union representing TWA's 7,000 flight attendants has asked the National Mediation Board to start a 30-day countdown toward a strike.

Lorenzo is expected to be a hard bargainer, analysts say.

"The sudden emergence of Frank Lorenzo on the TWA scene in no way changes this union's resolve to obtain a new contract with increased job security," Vicki Frankovich, president of the Independent Federation of Flight Attendants, said in a statement.

"If you put Lorenzo's track record against TWA's, he has been more successful in extracting concessions and productivity gains," said Andrew Kim, an analyst with F. Eberstadt & Co.

Lorenzo started in the airline business in 1966 with a $1,000 stake in a company that then raised $1 million capital through a public stock offering.

In 1972, the firm took over a floundering airline then known as Texas International, and Lorenzo was on his way. He acquired Continental in 1981 and founded an East Coast airline, New York Air, in recent years. His company is now known as Texas Air Corp.

The acquisition agreement is somewhat of a victory for New York-based TWA, which spent the past month trying to defeat Icahn's effort. In addition to seeking friendly bidders, TWA had asked the courts and the U.S. government for help.

The acquisition raises several questions about the future operations of TWA and Continental, even though Texas Air said TWA would retain its identity and present management.

Continental serves 46 U.S. cities and 30 foreign destinations, largely in the Far East, Mexico and Australia. The airline's two hubs, or connecting centers, are in Denver and Houston.

Burroughs, Sperry stocks drop amid merger skepticism

DETROIT (AP) — Burroughs Corp. and Sperry Corp. shares dropped in heavy trading amid skepticism among analysts that a merger of the two data processing companies would work.

Burroughs and Sperry said Thursday they were discussing combining the two companies through the merger of their common stock.

Neither company would comment on the negotiations beyond the one-sentence announcement. At the close of trading Thursday, Burroughs was down $3.12½ at $56.25 a share; Sperry closed at $56.50 a share, down 25 cents.

Analysts said merging the product lines of the two companies would be a difficult undertaking. The merger of Sperry and Burroughs would create the world's second-largest computer company, second only to IBM.

The proprietary operating system of each company is incompatible with the other's, and merging the two product lines would require extensive work, said George Elling, analyst with Oppenheimer & Co. in New York.

Dave Terrie, senior analyst with The Yankee Group, a Boston-based market research and consulting company, said the merger would be a dramatic shift to improve the competitive positions of the two companies, especially against the industry giant, International Business Machines Corp.

Striking pilots delay ratification vote

CHICAGO (AP) — Leaders of United Airlines' 5,000 pilots say they won't consider ratifying a tentative agreement to end their month-old walkout until they are sure flight attendants who honored picket lines won't be penalized.

Discussions between the company and flight attendants focused on the same back-to-work issues that prompted a breakdown in talks between the company and the pilots after economic issues had been settled May 24, saidM.J. Brenne, spokeswoman for the Association of Flight Attendants.

"I can't say what progress has been made," she said Thursday from the union's Washington headquarters. "But I can say the union does not want to see people who honored the picket lines punished, nor does it want people who crossed the picket lines rewarded with seniority."

The Air Line Pilots Association walked off the job May 17. United since has been operating about 14 percent of its pre-strike service of 1,550 daily flights, with 630 pilots.

The 27-member master executive council of the ALPA met Thursday to review the language of the tentative back-to-work agreement. The council met Wednesday but did not have a copy of the pact, drafted by a federal mediator.

The main economic issue, a two-tier wage plan that would put new pilots on a lower scale than those already flying for United, was resolved last month.

Capt. John LeRoy, a union spokesman, said there would be no vote on the tentative pact until the master executive council of the 10,000-member flight attendants union ratified its back-to-work agreement with United.

LeRoy said the executive council planned to continue meeting today.

United spokesman Joe Hopkins said the company would have no comment on the talks with the flight attendants union.

Meanwhile, attorneys for the union and United were to appear today before U.S. District Judge Nicholas Bua for a hearing on a lawsuit filed by the union charging the air carrier with engaging in unfair labor practices. Bua postponed Thursday's scheduled hearing at the request of union attorney Michael Abram.

LeRoy said the issues contained in the lawsuit before Bua are the fate of 570 pilots newly trained by United who honored picket lines, and the seniority of strike-breakers.

United has said it does not consider the newly trained pilots its employees. It also said earlier that pilots who worked during the walkout would be given preference in bidding on assignments.

ALPA spokesman Dave Jewell said Thursday that the union will begin paying strike benefits to the new pilots if the strike stretches into a 31st day.

LeRoy said that when negotiations begin on a new contract, the future of the two-tier wage scale will be up for bargaining. United had sought a two-tier scale that would have taken pilots hired under the new contract up to 20 years to catch up to current pilots.

Continental asks for airline merger delay

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines has asked the U.S. Transportation Department to delay final approval of a merger between Muse Air and Southwest Airlines.

Continental said Thursday it does not oppose the merger but would like the move delayed until the department examines Dallas city officials' interpretation of a federal law titled the Love Field Amendment.

The amendment states that carriers operating at Love Field may only fly within Texas and the four contiguous states. Currently, only Muse Air and Southwest Airlines offer flights to and from the facility.

Continental, based in Houston, filed an application last month with Dallas' Aviation Division seeking permission to use one boarding gate at Love Field, city officials say.

The carrier said it may use some of its Boeing 727-200, DC9-30 and MD-80 jets for the proposed Love Field service.

But residents who live near the field say the 727-200s are louder than the aircraft that Muse and Southwest use at the facility.

Dallas Mayor A. Starke Taylor sent a letter to Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole on May 30 asking that Continental be barred from serving Love Field because of the amendment.

The Transportation Department tentatively approved the Muse-Southwest merger with the stipulation that it would not erect a barrier to other airlines wishing to use the facility.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Treasury has three kinds securities

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. I have a number of Series EE U.S. Savings Bonds, which accumulate interest at 85 percent of the average yield on five-year U.S. Treasury securities if I hold the EE bonds for five years after their issue dates.

Since no one in his or her right mind likes to receive 85 percent when 100 percent is available, where, when and how does one go about getting such "Treasury securities"? What is the proper name for such animals? Is there a commission charge? Is the interest exempt from federal and state income taxes?

A. Here's a quick primer on Treasury securities. The U.S. Treasury issues three types of securities for sale to the public: Treasury bills, with maturities of 13, 26 and 52 weeks, in $10,000 minimum denominations; Treasury notes, with maturities of from two to 10 years, in $1,000 minimums; Treasury bonds, with maturities of more than 10 years, in $1,000 minimums.

One caveat: Treasury notes with maturities of less than four years usually come in $5,000 minimums.

You can buy any of the three types through your district Federal Reserve Bank, free of commission charge, when they are offered for sale by the Treasury. If you don't know the address of your district Fed bank, get it from your local bank. You also can buy those Treasury securities through your local bank or a securities brokerage firm and pay a commission or service charge.

Treasury bills are "discount" securities. You buy a T bill at a price below its face value and receive face value when the T bill matures. The difference between the two prices is your interest. That makes T bills somewhat similar to Series EE and E U.S. Savings Bonds.

Treasury notes and bonds are issued at or very close to their face values and are paid off at face value at maturity. T notes and T bonds pay interest by check twice a year.

As is the case with U.S. Savings Bonds, the interest from Treasury bills, notes and bonds is subject to federal income tax. It's free from state and local income tax.

Q. We purchased a 26-week U.S. Treasury bill and indicated our desire to reinvest the proceeds in a new T bill when the first one matures. We did this by filling out the necessary forms at the Federal Reserve Bank.

Are we expected to continue filling out forms for reinvestment every six months, or will the initial "roll over" request suffice? We're senior citizens and a trip to the Federal Reserve Bank is an effort.

A. You don't have to make a trip. Everything can be handled by mail.

When you make your first T bill purchase, by submitting a "tender" to a Federal Reserve Bank, you're allowed to reinvest once by indicating so on your tender form.

After that, you must complete Form PD 4633-2, which the Treasury mails to you, in order to reinvest in a new T bill. You cannot arrange for a continuous rollover. You have to send back a Form PD 4633-2 each time you want to reinvest. Make sure you mail back that form in time for it to reach the Treasury by the cutoff date indicated on the form.

Q. We did not receive the check for interest due on our U.S. Treasury note a week ago. We called the Bureau of the Public Debt in Washington and were advised by a disinterested clerk that it may take three to five months to clear this up, with the burden of establishing this claim all on us. Do you have any suggestions?

A. Write to Bureau of the Public Debt, Department A, Registered Accounts Section, Washington, D.C. 20239-0001: Explain your problem. After some paperwork is attended to, a duplicate interest check will be issued to you. It's certainly not going to take three to five months.

• • •

Q. The U.S. Treasury notes I purchased through my broker had an incorrect Social Security number on them. I returned the certificates to the broker seven months ago but still don't have new ones. The broker says the Treasury Department is dragging its feet. Is this a common practice?

A. Not at all. In a case such as this, new note certificates normally are issued within a few weeks. Could be there's some foot-dragging at the brokerage firm.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

1. Call the StockQuote Hotline number listed below. A computer voice will answer and ask you for the Account Code.
2. Enter the Account Code, then depress the star key (*) on your telephone. The computer will then ask you to enter your Stock Code.
3. Enter the Stock Code for the stock you wish quoted, the computer will quote the Ticker Symbol, Current Price and Net Change from the previous day's close.
4. After the stock is quoted, the computer will ask you to enter another Stock Code. You have two options:

A. You may request the quote for another stock simply by repeating Step 3, or...

B. You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more depressing the star key (*), in which case the computer will respond with the Price, Net Change, Volume, High and Low. The computer will then ask you to enter another Stock Code (repeat Step 3).

You may enter up to 10 requests per call.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

U.S. car sales best since 1978

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — Despite continuing inroads by imports, sales of domestically built cars rose 15.5 percent for the first 10 days of June, setting the fastest pace for the period since 1978, the automakers reported Thursday.

A total of 216,565 cars were sold by the seven U.S. manufacturers during the period, up from 187,482 in early June 1984.

General Motors, with a 16.7 percent increase, and Ford, up 14.4 percent, outpaced the five other makers — Chrysler, American Motors, Volkswagen of America, American Honda and Nissan USA — in sales, capturing about 84 percent of all sales. Chrysler reported a 20.7 percent increase during the period.

The combined sales rate averaged 27,071 cars a day.

Analysts said that the figures were encouraging but cautioned that increased shipments of imports may begin cutting into sales of domestic autos.

Imports posted their best monthly sales rate of the year in May, accounting for about 25 percent of the U.S. market.

"The (U.S.) market continues to be strong," said Ted Sullivan, auto analyst with the economic forecasting company Data Resources. But he said that the April 1 lifting of mandatory import quotas would begin to show soon in the sales figures.

"Ten-day domestic sales are going to have to start easing a bit. If imports are going to increase, it's going to come at the expense of domestics," Sullivan said.

In the June 1-10 period, only two of the U.S. automakers reported a decline in sales from last year's brisk rate. AMC said its sales were 27.4 percent lower, continuing a slump that has been badgering the company all year. American Honda, which makes cars in Ohio, said its sales slipped 34.1 percent. It blamed the decline on problems with its distribution system.

If the sales pace set in early June were to continue, a total of 8.6 million cars would be sold in 1985. That seasonally adjusted annual rate is down slightly from May's rate of 8.7 million but is up from the 7.6 million annual rate of a year ago.

Ten-day sales figures are not available for foreign car manufacturers, which report sales on a monthly basis.

Trade between South Korea, China growing

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

SEOUL, South Korea — The breakthrough that came last year in sports exchanges between China and South Korea is spreading, and this time the beneficiaries are South Korean businessmen.

"Our trade with China is growing rapidly," Kim Ki Hwan, a vice minister in the Economic Planning Board, said in a recent interview, "and some of our businessmen have been to China."

Many of the new contacts, Kim said, have been at the provincial level, where Chinese economic managers have been given authority to make their own decisions.

According to other sources here, executives from all the South Korean chaebol (conglomerate groups) have been traveling to China. Some have made repeated trips.

Kim said that South Korean companies are wary of investing in China because of the absence of diplomatic relations between Seoul and Peking, but at least one South Korean company has invested in a factory in China, it was learned. That company is now negotiating another joint venture in China, one that would involve a large American company as a third partner.

Chinese officials have forced their new business associates here to keep quiet to avoid exacerbating China's relations with North Korea, which is opposed to any Communist-bloc dealings with South Korea.

No one, Kim said, knows the extent of the trade between China and South Korea.

Kim, who heads a team of South Korean officials talking with North Korea in the hope of restoring the North-South economic ties that were severed by the 1950-53 Korean War, said: "Until last year, there was a considerable amount of ambiguity on the part of the Chinese toward us. In 1982 and 1983, the Chinese applied restraints on shipments we were making to China before that. Later, we discovered it was because of protests from North Korea."

Safety group says 306 deaths caused by Ford

WASHINGTON (AP) — An additional 11 deaths from accidents involving alleged faulty automatic transmissions in certain Ford Motor Co. cars raises the total to 306 deaths, an auto safety group says.

Ford reported the additional deaths to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in a letter last month, according to the Center for Auto Safety, which released a copy of the letter Thursday.

The previously unreported deaths occurred between 1973 and April 1985, and along with the others are linked to the tendency of allegedly faulty transmissions to allow cars to suddenly slip from park to reverse.

NHTSA spokeswoman Roslyn Kasier said the agency was reviewing the new information from Ford but had not recently updated its tally of 260 fatalities linked to the alleged Ford problem.

Ford repeatedly has maintained its cars contain no safety defect and that accidents linked to the alleged problem occurred because drivers failed to follow proper parking procedures.

NHTSA in late 1980 agreed not to force Ford to recall 23 million cars for the alleged problem. Instead,the agency allowed the automaker to distribute dashboard warning labels advising drivers to shut off their engines before leaving their cars.

The Ford letter to NHTSA also said other automakers' cars had been linked to similar accidents and that "unexpected vehicle movement of 1970-1979 model vehicles is not a Ford-only phenomenon."

Ford spokesman Richard Judy said the automaker has provided NHTSA almost 300 similar cases involving competitors' cars. He labeled as "hogwash" the center's reports that General Motors Corp. had recorded only 18 such deaths while Chrysler Corp. reported six.

TWA

TWA flies to 60 domestic cities and 20 foreign destinations, principally in Europe. Its domestic hub is in St. Louis; New York is its foreign hub.

The acquisition of TWA could expand Continental's reach into the lucrative trans-Atlantic market. But domestically, there appear to be several areas where TWA and Continental overlap — particularly in the West and in Florida.

Among the cities served by both airlines are Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Miami and Orlando, Fla., and Phoenix, Ariz.

Continental's fleet was briefly grounded in 1983 after Lorenzo decided to file for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. Texas Air and New York Air were not included in the filing.

Management slashed the airline's operations and payroll, and eventually declared its union contracts void because Continental considered the wages too high to be competitive. Continental has since expanded and become much stronger although it remains under Chapter 11 protection. In 1984, the airline earned $50.3 million, compared with a loss in $218.4 million in 1983.

Texas Air said its purchase of TWA was subject to approval by TWA's stockholders and the federal government, and the arrangement of financing.

The companies said they expected to complete the merger in December.

A group of TWA employees announced in Kansas City, Mo., that it was considering an employee buyout, to be financed in part by pay cuts. The group said it wrote to TWA's 28,000 employees asking them to respond to the plan.

Tests results show decline, reports education agency

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Statewide averages of Texas Assessment of Basic Skills test scores for students in the third, fifth and ninth grades declined slightly from 1984 to 1985, although scores have improved significantly since the tests first were administered in 1980, the Texas Education Agency reported.

By comparison, Midland Independent School District results for 1984-85, indicate that the percentage of students mastering objectives dropped below the state average in some areas; particularly in ninth grade reading and mathematics.

The reading, writing and mathematics tests were administered in February to 225,000 third graders, 221,000 fifth graders and 235,000 ninth graders across Texas, according to TEA reports.

Preliminary results showed scores on many of the test objectives improved or remained stable statewide from 1984 to 1985, while others declined slightly, particularly in reading at the fifth and ninth grade levels.

Commissioner of Education Bill Kirby said the only difference between the 1982 test and the 1985 exam was the addition of several non-scored items that were field tested for use in new tests being developed for administration in the 1985-86 school year.

"After careful analysis of the scores, we have determined that the decline probably can be attributed to the fact that the test, particularly in reading, was longer because of the addition of the more difficult, non-scored field test items," Kirby said.

"Students apparently were fatigued by the lengthier test as evidenced by the fact that students scored lower on some test questions placed toward the end of the 1985 exam than they did on identical questions that were placed toward the beginning of the 1982 test," he added.

Maridell Fryar, MISD director of secondary education, said however, that the TEA has given the district "no concrete information" as to the reason for the decrease in percentages; nor has it received any "assistance" from the organization on how it may raise future percentages.

"We're in a position as a school district of working in the dark," Ms. Fryar said. The reason for the decline "is one of the questions we'd like to have answered ourselves.

"We feel we're doing everything a school district can do...At this point we've received absolutely no assistance from the TEA," she added.

MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi is vacationing and was unavailable for comment.

In the third grade test, many statewide scores improved on the reading and mathematics portions of the exam with a decline of more than 4 percent on only one of the eight reading test objectives and one of the 10 math objectives. Two of five writing objectives showed declines of more than 4 percent.

MISD results show a decline of more than 4 percent on only one of eight reading test objectives, and two of the 10 math objectives. One of five writing objectives showed a decline of more than 4 percent.

The fifth grade test results show a statewide decline of more than 4 percent on two of the 12 math objectives, four of 11 reading objectives and one of six writing objectives.

MISD results indicate a decrease of more than 4 percent on three of the 12 math objectives, four of the 11 reading objectives and one of six writing objectives.

At the ninth grade level, 84 percent of the students across the state mastered the math test objectives in 1985 compared to 82 percent in 1984; 78 percent mastered reading objectives compared to 86 percent in 1984; and 65 percent mastered writing objectives compared to 70 percent in 1984.

Eighty-two percent of MISD ninth graders mastered the math test objectives — 2 percent below the statewide average. The percentage increased over the 1984 figure of 81 percent, however. On the reading test, 76 percent of the students mastered the 11 reading objectives; dropping 2 percent behind the state average and 11 percent below 1984 figures. The percentage of writing test scores were above the state average as 67 percent of MISD ninth grade students mastered the six objectives. Percentages were down from 1984 when 81 percent of all students mastered the test's objectives.

Overall statewide test scores showed a marked improvement between 1980 and 1985.

Hispanic and black students continued to improve at a faster rate than white students, although minority test scores remained significantly lower than the scores for white students, TEA reports specify.

Seventy-seven percent of Hispanic ninth graders mastered math objectives and 65 percent mastered reading objectives in 1985 compared to 58 percent who mastered math and 52 percent who mastered reading objectives in 1980.

Black students' performances on ninth grade math objectives improved from 42 percent in 1980 to 68 percent in 1985 while their reading performances improved from 44 percent to 62 percent over the five-year period.

"We are delighted that the gap between minority and majority student scores is continuing to narrow," Kirby said, "but we realize we have a long way to go to improve our efforts in educating Hispanic and black children.

"And despite the slight decline in overall scores from 1984 to 1985, we are convinced that test results will improve in the future as recent education reforms are given time to work," he added.

Ms. Fryar said Kirby's prediction that the percentages will rise with the implementation of education reforms is "overly optimistic."

"We already have in place the education reforms, specifically the seventh and eighth grade reading programs, that the state believes would eventually raise TABS scores. Still, our scores are down. I think he's being overly optimistic about what the reform legislation is going to do," she said.

In the 1985-86 school year, the Texas Assessment of Basic Skills tests will be replaced by the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills tests, which will be administered to students in all odd-numbered grades.

Students who fail the 11th grade TEAMS tests must pass the tests in the 12th grade to receive their high school diplomas.

Jury finds LeClair guilty

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 70th District Court jury of eight women and four men deliberated less than two hours Thursday afternoon to find a 47-year-old former Gardendale man guilty of the aggravated sexual assault of a child and assessed a sentence of 99 years.

Ector County District Attorney Eric Augesen, following announcement of the sentence by retired District Judge C.V. Milburn, said he was pleased the jury apparently heeded the final argument of prosecutor Dennis Cadra and handed Donald LeClair the maximum sentence.

LeClair's court-appointed attorney, Bill Alexander, asked jurors to give his client only 25 years in prison, which was the minimum sentence the jury could have imposed because of two prior convictions in New Mexico and Colorado.

Against the advice of his attorney, and to the surprise of prosecutors and the judge, LeClair took the witness stand in his own defense Thursday morning. He testified concerning his employment as a laboratory technician at Medical Center Hospital and the fact that he performed a standard test on specimens from one of his alleged victims. He stated the test was conducted under the watchful eye of a MCH doctor.

Alexander raised the question of additional indictments against LeClair and prior convictions in addition to the two cited in grand jury indictments. Alexander noted that LeClair had been named three different times in eight separate grand jury indictments alleging aggravated sexual assault or indecency with a child involving eight girls.

Had LeClair decided not to testify in his own behalf, and his attorney had not raised questions about the other indictments and prior offenses, prosecutor Cadra would have been barred under the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure from introducing "extraneous offenses" and jurors would not have known that LeClair had served a total of 12½ years in prison for such crimes as burglary, grand larceny and interstate transportation of a stolen vehicle. Alexander said after the trial ended he believed the revelation concerning the other indictments and prior offenses hurt LeClair's chances with the jury.

The aggravated sexual assault for which LeClair has been convicted and sentenced to prison involved a girl who was 7-years-old at the time of the incident. The child was called to the stand Wednesday and testified for the better part of an hour about what LeClair had allegedly done to her at his Gardendale home.

March 22, LeClair faced trial on a comparable charge involving a different child. That trial ended in a mistrial in 70th District Court when Judge Gene Ater discovered a juror had been improperly seated.

District Attorney Augesen, following conclusion of the two-day trial Thursday, said he fully intended to prosecute the remaining seven cases in which LeClair has been indicted by the grand jury.

LeClair's testimony Thursday morning was briefly interrupted when Assistant District Attorney Cadra was informed one of his children was ill. Milburn recessed the trial until Cadra determined nothing serious was wrong with his son that required his immediate attention.

Rash of auto thefts reported

From Staff Reports

Another wave of auto burglaries struck Midland Wednesday night, with nine break-ins of cars or pickups reported, according to police.

Calvin Horne, 4415 Northcrest, reported the loss of a $250 radar detector and a $150 cassette player from his 1979 Chevy pickup. The burglary occurred sometime between 6 p.m. Wednesday and 6:45 a.m. Thursday, according to reports.

Lisa Kerr, 3100 Caldera, reported the loss of a $500 cassette stereo taken from her 1966 Ford Mustang sometime Thursday. Two other auto burglaries from Quinten's Walk Apartments were also reported:

Leticia Reyes, 3100 Caldera, reported the loss of a $700 stereo from her 1979 Chevy Z-28 sometime between 11:30 p.m. Wednesday and 7:45 a.m. Thursday, and Chad Sullivan, 3100 Caldera, reported the loss of a $900 stereo from his 1985 Chevy pickup sometime between 1 a.m. and 9 a.m. Thursday.

Scout project 60 percent complete

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Buffalo Trail Council, Boy Scouts of America, has set out to "shape tomorrow."

In a 1984 long range study, the council agreed that a number of capital improvements were required in order to serve a larger number of available youth; thus the creation of "Shaping Tomorrow" — an $845,600 development program designed to raise money for repairs and expansion.

About 60 percent complete, the project focuses on improving, acquiring or expanding four specific areas. The plans include: To improve the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch to the tune of $283,000; acquire waterfront land and develop a new Aquatic Camp on Lake Colorado City (now called ColTex) for $417,500; improve Camp Pagasus located about 15 miles south of Midland Regional Air Terminal at a cost of $41,000; and purchase new or replace equipment at the Scout Service Center, 1101 W. Texas Ave. Cost is estimated at $104,100.

"The money (about $500,000 to date) was raised primarily through foundations and donations," according to E.O. "Gene" Vaughan, trust development officer. "The project should be complete late next year."

The Council tends to upgrade facilities about every 10 years, Vaughan said. "You have to upgrade just like a business does. We try to do things as money is made available."

The Buffalo Trail Council, Boy Scouts of America, provides services to over 3,000 volunteer adult leaders and 200 sponsoring institutions, thereby enabling it to provide programs through the Boy Scouts of America to about 10,000 youth members each year, Vaughan said.

Services include the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch, a 6,000 acre camp located in the Davis Mountains; other camps including Aquatic Facility on Lake Colorado City; training courses for volunteer leaders; Jamborees, Camporees, Cub Camp Day; and organization of cub packs, Boy Scout troops and explorer posts.

The Council also operates a Scout Service Center, located at 1101 W. Texas Ave., approximately in the geographical center of the Council area. The office staff provides information, serves as a resource center, provides printing, mailing, record keeping, visual aids, recognition awards, literature and scouting "know-how," according to Vaughan.

In addition, the council provides professional leadership through eight Trained Career Scouters to help recruit, train and guide volunteer leaders.

"If we don't keep up and provide an exciting program, there's a lot of other things that will attract the interest of our youth," Vaughan said.

Water act may benefit Texas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas and other high-growth states will come out ahead if final approval is won on amendments to the Clean Water Act.

The Senate Thursday unanimously approved the measures to continue federal aid for wastewater treatment. The states with booming growth would get a bigger share of the money if the amendments are approved by the House and become law.

The action allocates funds at three times the level sought by the Reagan administration. It came after big-state lawmakers dropped a threat to tie up the legislation with a filibuster.

The lawmakers from larger states were opposed to a revised allocation formula that would have cost their states almost $290 million a year in federal grants.

"Texas and other high-growth states have been shortchanged for too long," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a ranking member of the Environment and Public Works Committee which developed the new formula for distributing funds.

"Our new formula is a much more accurate reflection of both needs and the shift of population. It shows clearly the shift in growth to the South and West," he said.

A compromise resulted in a formula that would shift about $225 million from 19 states, most of them bordering the Great Lakes and Atlantic Ocean, and give it to mostly smaller states, many of them in the South and West.

The big winners would be Texas, $34.4 million; Washington, $25.2 million; and Florida, $25.2 million. The big losers would be New York, $43 million a year; California, $37.7 million; and Ohio, $21.9 million.

The bill, approved 94-0, was sent to the House. The revised funding formula appears headed for trouble there, where a House committee recently endorsed a continuation of the current program into the 1990s.

Bentsen said the new formula would give Texas an additional $270.8 million over the next nine years for construction of wastewater treatment facilities.

Under the old formula, Bentsen said, Texas would have received $691.5 million through 1994 compared to the new formula's $962.3 million total.

Overall, the legislation would provide $18 billion in federal aid to states to combat water pollution through 1994 — four years beyond the time the administration wants the 13-year-old program abolished.

'Informal' meeting urged

DALLAS (AP) — Corrections board members meeting in Dallas to discuss a huge construction program for the state prison system should "let their hair down," board chairman Robert Gunn said.

Gunn met with some of the board members over lunch here Thursday in what he called an "informal meeting that I think is very important."

"We need to let our hair down," he said. "We've got a lot of logistics and long-range planning to do."

The session was closed to the public under a section of the Texas Open Meetings Act that allows government officials to meet privately when discussing litigation.

Gary Michael Chapman, 15, of Singapore and formerly Midland Scout Troop 232, has earned his Eagle Scout Award. He has served as senior patrol leader and was inducted into the Order of the Arrow. A freshman at the Singapore American High School, he is the son of former Midlanders Joe and Sandy Chapman.

Stewart Taylor, 14, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Taylor, has received his Eagle Badge. A member of Scout Troop 95, he has earned 22 merit badges, painting playground equipment at a local church day care center for his ranking. A ninth-grader, he is going to the National Scout Jamboree in July at Washington, D.C.

Couple wins $12,000 in attorney fraud case

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 244th District Court jury of seven women and five men has awarded a Monahans couple nearly $12,000 in damages against an Odessa attorney they claimed had failed to properly represent them in a personal injury case.

In the civil suit against Bobby Bearden, Elisa Vasquez, affiliated with the law firm of Warren Burnett, contended Bearden defrauded C.A. Drake and his wife, Roberta, out of a portion of an insurance settlement that grew out of an injury suffered by Drake in a 1982 automobile accident.

According to testimony in the trial, the Drakes claimed they received a check for $8,568.39 in August 1983 as their part of a settlement with an insurance company for Drake's injury.

The Drakes claimed Bearden's check bounced and it took them four months to collect their money from him.

In awarding the Drakes $4,050 in actual damages and $7,709.40 in punitive damages, the jury also ruled that Bearden wrongfully withheld an extra $2,000 from the settlement and awarded an additional $2,000 to the Drakes for mental anguish.

The case was tried under the deceptive trade practices law which automatically triples the actual damage award.

The $7,709.40 awarded to the Drakes as punitive damages exactly matched the legal fee Bearden collected from the Drakes in the personal injury case.

Optimists donate tickets for Water Wonderland

From Staff Reports

As part of the Optimist Club of Midland Youth Program, it has given the Midland's Boys' Club twenty paid admissions to Water Wonderland to be used either Saturday or Sunday. The money for this project came from the sale of Christmas trees and a recent garage sale held by the Optimist.

Karl Reagan presented the tickets to Boys' Club Director Nicky Sanchez in behalf of the Optimist Club.

Sanchez said the twenty tickets would be given to boys and girls who met certain standards and earned points by following the guidelines of the club. The Optimist Club will have a hot dog/miniature golf party in August for all members of the Boys' Club.

The Boys' Club is in its second week of its summer program lasting through August 9. The daily attendance of the club runs as high as 140 boys and girls ages 6 through 18.

An $800 stereo, a $200 necklace, a $250 camera and camera lenses worth $250 were reported stolen by Dennis Brown of Odessa. Brown told police he parked his 1983 AMC Jeep in an alley near 1801 N. Midland, and the items were taken sometime between 11 p.m. Wednesday and 8 a.m. Thursday. Total loss was $1,500.

Aaron Broomfield reported the loss of a $250 stereo from a 1981 GMC Silverado belonging to Joe White of Faye, Okla. The vehicle was parked at 711 W. Spruce, and the burglary occurred sometime after midnight Thursday, reports said.

Thomas Jarvi, 3600 N. Midland, reported the theft of a $250 stereo from his 1985 Chevy pickup sometime between Wednesday night and Thursday morning.

A $250 radar detector was reported stolen from a 1984 Chevy pickup belonging to Jim Brewster, 4500 Tanforan. The burglary occurred sometime between 10 p.m. Wednesday and 2 a.m. Thursday, reports said.

T-tops worth $200 and a $300 set of golf clubs were taken from a 1981 Chevy Camaro parked in the Midland Park Mall parking lot, 4511 N. Midkiff, reports said. The car belongs to David Massoglia, 5101 N. A, and the burglary occurred sometime between 11:45 a.m. and 12:20 p.m. Thursday.

Not all the burglaries reported Thursday concerned cars and pickups. Wal-Mart, 4715 Billingsley, reported the theft of $970 worth of guns, which were apparently taken from a storage room sometime between May 1 and Thursday, reports said.

An unoccupied furnished apartment at the Lakewood Apartments, 4410 Lanham, was burglarized sometime between Tuesday and Thursday. Taken were a couch, a coffee table, chairs and other furnishings worth a total of $1,500, reports said.

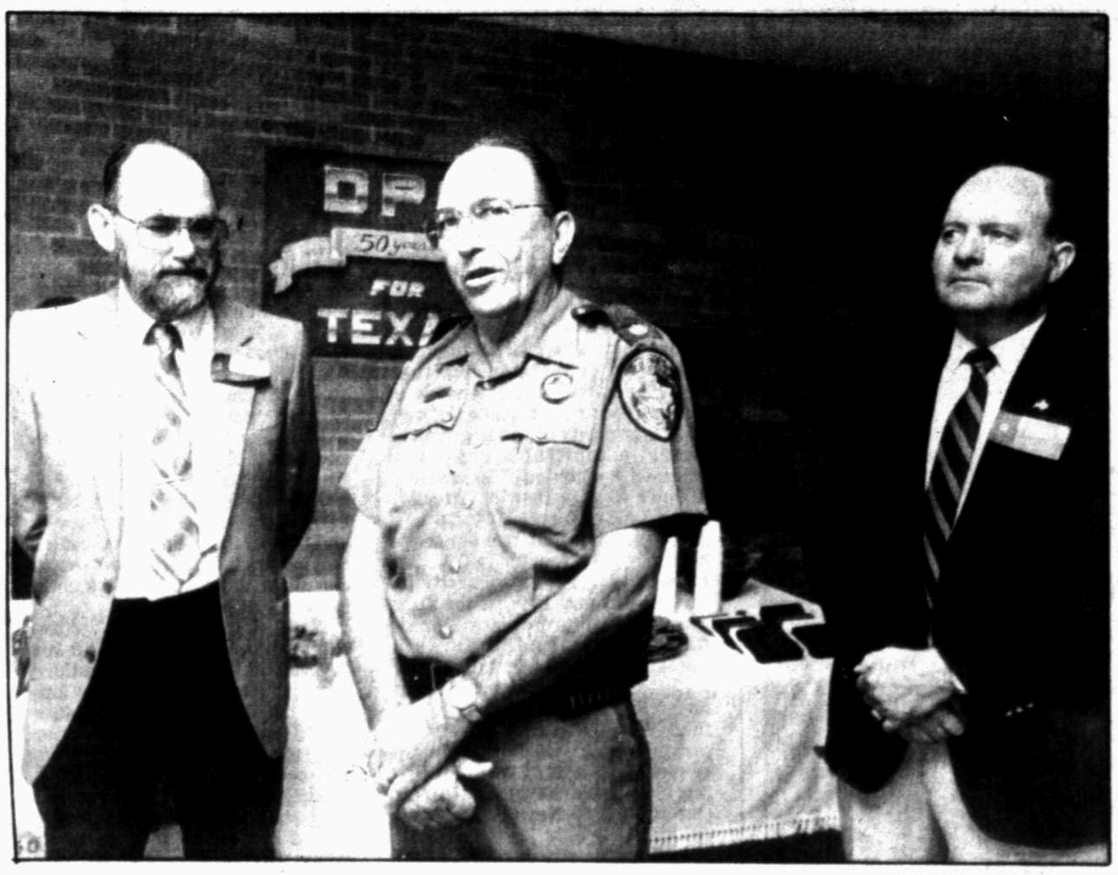

Diego Navarro Jr., 1108B E. Nobles, reported the loss of a $250 cable-converter box Thursday. The burglary occurred Thursday sometime between 6 a.m. and 1 p.m., reports said.

A $1,700 1978 Buick was reported stolen by Fernando Gabaldon, 1210 S. Baird. The car was taken sometime between 9 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Thursday, reports said.

La Casa Verde Nursery, 2615 N. Midland, reported a burglary which occurred sometime between 7 p.m. Wednesday and 8:45 a.m. Thursday. Taken was a $300 stereo and tools and other items for a total loss of $560, reports said.

The Music Den, 4706 N. Midkiff, reported the loss of $509 in currency and about $167 in checks made out to the store in a Thursday burglary. The money and checks were taken from a safe sometime between midnight and 9:30 a.m., reports said.

Roger Baker, 708 S. Baird, reported the loss of a $3,200 garden tractor-mower from a storeroom near a vacant trailer house on County Road 1135, just south of County Road 60. The burglary occurred sometime between 9 a.m. Wednesday and 7 p.m. Thursday, reports said.

DPS celebrates 50 years

Mayor G. Thane Akins, left, helps Maj. Ira Dees, center, and Lt. Col. Leo Gossett, assistant director of the Department of Public Safety, celebrate the DPS' 50th anniversary at a field observance Thursday in the DPS Midland Regional Headquarters. The Midland office was established in 1957, and moved into its current building at 2405 S. Loop 250 in July 1974. Gossett, now stationed in Austin, is a former Midland regional commander. Dees has been commander since 1977; his territory comprises 49 counties, from El Paso to Ranger and from O'Donnell to Eagle Pass. There are 287 officers and 129 support personnel under his command.

College clown seeks doctorate

RICHARDSON (AP) — "The fool doth think he is wise; but the wise man knows himself to be a fool."

So quotes (from Shakespeare's King Lear he thinks) Kimo the Clown, alias University of Texas at Dallas student Langston James Goree VI.

The ironies abound: The 31-year-old Dallas entertainer graduated cum laude from the University of Texas at Dallas this spring, and he plans to juggle more books and classes than colored balls this summer, when he will begin a master's program in interdisciplinary studies at UTD.

Eventually the clown who has entertained at children's birthday parties and adult nightclubs in Dallas for 10 years hopes to get a doctorate and teach at a university.

After 12 years of on-and-off attendance, including a 21-hour sprint last semester, Goree earned his bachelor's degree in general studies, for which he combined classes in philosophy, psychology and Latin America.

"Some people need the structure of a university occasionally to return to an organized way of learning," said Goree, who spends six months a year traveling and entertaining in Central and South America. "There's something nicely structured about a university that shines up your habits."

And, he added, "we do live in a credentialed society."

Goree said students at UTD, where most work full-time and are around 30 years old, do not ask general studies majors, "How are you going to get a job with that?"

"Going to school to learn a trade is simply an unrealistic goal," he said. "You should go to school to learn to learn — something that's going to carry you through for the rest of your life."

Goree kept his clown identity in the closet while on campus, but some people picked up on his nickname, the Hawaiian name for "James," which he was dubbed upon birth in a Hawaiian hospital.

Goree grew up in California and after he did not get accepted into Stanford University, he turned to street comedy and eventually clowning and acting. He has had roles in the 1977 Ron Howard movie Cotton Candy and opposite LeVar Burton in the movie Acorn People with Cloris Leachman.

A descendant of a companion and compatriot of Sam Houston, he came to Texas, the home of his father, in 1974.

Goree, named Best Clown Act in 1981 by D magazine, said he likes Dallas audiences.

"California audiences say 'Oh, I've seen it all.' New York audiences say 'I dare ya. Just try to make me laugh.' Texas audiences say, 'Well ...., I ain't never seen anything lahk that in mah life.'"

Goree said he prefers children to adult audiences, because children still believe in the magic of clowns.

'All Gospel Opree' planned

ODESSA — Gospel music will fill Odessa's Globe Theatre when the Odessa Brand New Opree hosts an All Gospel Opree at 8 p.m. Saturday. The opree will feature traditional and contemporary gospel groups and performers.

Featured groups include the "Second Edition Gospel Quartet" of Midland; "Shiloh," a contemporary gospel band from Odessa; "Living Now," a family trio from Odessa performing bluegrass gospel; and "The Church of the Rock Men's Quartet" of Odessa.

Admission is $4 for adults, $2 for students and senior citizens and $1.50 for children under 12. Tickets are on sale at the Globe ticket office beginning at 7 p.m. Saturday.

Frontier Day to be held

SAN ANGELO — Frontier Day at Old Fort Concho is set for Saturday.

Events include the third Texas Sheep Shearing Contest, with a team from New Zealand entered this year, and the new Fiesta Del Concho Sheep Dog Trials. Charros, muzzleloaders, a frontier family, the Fort Concho Cavalry and Infantry regiments, and dozens of frontier artisians and craftsmen will be performing throughout the day. Artisians' wares are for sale.

Providing refreshments for the spectators will be 15 beverage and food booths.

White announces training funds

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN—Gov. Mark White has announced the allocation of $3,911,742 to six counties in the Upper Rio Grande region, to provide job training and other services to teenagers and adults.

Also, $1,863,699 will be provided specifically for summer youth employment programs, according to the governor's office.

The funds are part of $103,949,667 being provided to the state's 34 local service delivery areas for job training programs under the Job Training Partnership Act, White said.

Under the act, local officials work with private industry councils composed of businss and community representatives to design and implement job training programs tailored to meet the needs of area residents.

Counties in the region to receive funds are Brewster, Culberson, El Paso, Hudspeth, Jeff Davis and Presidio.

Campaign makes clean sweep

From Staff Reports

Midland's backyards and alleyways are now 1,500 tons freer of debris and accumulated junk, thanks to area residents who participated last month in the 1985 Spring Clean-up Campaign, sponsored by Clean Midland and the City of Midland for the third consecutive year.

Clean Midland volunteers and members of the Midland Board of Realtors answered more than 1,400 telephone requests for trash hauling this year - an increase of more than 600 over those answered during the 1984 campaign. "We were pleased to see that the number of requests had increased across the board, in all six divisions of the City," said Jane Leslie, executive director of Clean Midland, "But in particular, we were pleased that the largest percentage increases occurred in areas of south and east Midland."

The City of Midland Street and Sanitation Divisions hauled away the more than 1,500 tons of debris over a one-month period of time, resulting in a total of 3,150 equipment and man hours and representing a total cost to the City of approximately $32,140.

As in past years, tree limbs and brush seemed to be the number one culprit of alleyway clutter, with appliances and old furniture following as a close second.

White signs trade bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White on Thursday signed into law a bill authorizing the creation of a foreign trade zone for the General Motors Saturn facility should it locate in Texas.

Designation of an area as a foreign trade zone permits businesses in those zones to import automotive parts with reduced federal taxes and customs duties.

White said a Texas "incentive package" was forwarded to GM officials May 10 but details were not publicized then due to competition among states for the Saturn facility.

Texas' package, according to White, includes:

— A commitment of $50 million for job training over three years.

— Favorable financing.

— A statewide search to meet Saturn's need for workers.

— A commitment to work with GM and local governments in providing highway and road improvements for the Saturn site.

The governor said Saturn will employ 6,000 workers, and supplier companies are expected to employ an additional 14,000. Saturn operations are expected to produce $3.4 billion a year, generating an additional $6.2 billion annually in business for related and support companies.

Texan's solo flight postponed

HONOLULU (AP) — A Texas chiropractor postponed Thursday his attempt at a world record nonstop solo flight to Miami.

"We're going to wait for the wind to die down," said Dr. Dan Bookout of Texarkana, Texas.

Although winds of 10-15 miles per hour are not particularly strong, they can cause problems over a period of 30 hours, he said.

"We will keep trying on a daily basis, and hope to leave tomorrow or the next day," he said.

Bookout will pilot a Piper Lance on the flight of about 5,000 miles to Miami. All seven passenger seats on the plane have been removed to make room for gasoline cannisters.

Self-protection is child's tool

Hearst News Service

A new grandmother recently remarked that things were different when she was a mother. She could leave her preschool-age children in the back yard while she went about her housework, occasionally glancing out the window to gaze at the little ones playing with the neighbor kids in the sandbox. This was during the 1950s, a hopeful decade in American life.

"It was easier then," she explains. "These days, I won't take my eyes off my grandson for a second. Not because I'm a nervous grandmother, but because of what is happening today — missing children, child molestation, weirdos everywhere."

According to Susan Newman, author of a new book for children and parents called "Never Say Yes to a Stranger: What Your Child Must Know to Stay Safe," there were weirdos and missing children back in the '50s — we just weren't so aware of the problem. Awareness, Newman believes, is important for creating a better world for our children, even though it means facing the cold truth. That's why she wrote "Never Say Yes," a practical manual for acquiring child street smarts.

The mother of five and a free-lance magazine writer, Newman has been researching and writing about the subject of abduction and child safety since 1971, when a stranger was discovered lurking in her child's schoolyard. The man was scared away before anything devastating occurred, but as anyone who is up on the news must know, that is not always how it goes.

NEWMAN'S OVERSIZE book is illustrated effectively with black-and-white photographs that show re-enactments of threatening situations based on real incidents. Children play the part of children, and the abductors are portrayed by parents. Newman stresses that dangerous strangers often appear to be friendly, everyday people just like Mom and Dad.

Chapter 1, "No Thanks, Stranger," tells the story of Hillary, a girl of about 9 who is picked up in a car by a stranger who promises her ice cream. She is taken to his house, locked in and trapped until she sneaks to a phone and calls the operator, who asks for the phone number listed on the telephone she's calling from. As a result, Hillary is returned safely home, where her parents let her know how much she was missed.

Chapter 3 is about a girl named Amy who is waiting for her mother to pick her up from school. Her mother is late, and Amy stands in front while all the kids go home. A strange woman appears and tells the child that her mother sent the woman to get her. Amy is suspicious, but the woman insists. "Your grandmother is sick," the woman claims. "She couldn't come to get you. I'm an old friend from high school." Amy finally refuses and retreats into the school office. It turns out that the woman didn't know the family's secret code word for emergency situations. "Amy wondered why the woman didn't say, 'Hi, your secret code word is 'grapefruit,' " Newman writes.

INSTEAD OF DWELLING on the scary details of what might happen to a child who goes off with a stranger ("When we teach water safety we don't explain what happens when you drown"), Newman tells children how to get out of the situations and mostly how to avoid such confrontations in the first place.

Each chapter ends with a section called "You Should Know" and another called "Always Remember."

You Should Know:

— Hillary made many, many dangerous mistakes. Never agree to go anywhere with a stranger. Like Hillary, you are very special. You are an important part of your family. If you disappeared with a stranger, no one would know where to find you. Always Remember: Stand back from cars out of the driver's or passenger's reach. Don't tell strangers your name.

— Most strangers who try to pick up children are men, but sometimes that stranger could be a woman. Adults will lie if they want to trick you. They will say anything to frighten, worry or confuse you. Don't believe a word!

Always Remember:

— Tell someone in the school office if you see a person you have never seen before hanging around outside or inside school. If someone grabs you, yell. Calling for help is not a babyish thing to do.

NEWMAN STRESSES that it's important for kids to know they're not going to be punished severely if they do get into trouble with a stranger.

"You want a child to be absolutely sure that he or she is safer at home. I also like to point out that most people are good," she adds.

In addition to encouraging awareness, Newman says her book "is designed to build confidence. To make children feel that they are important, that they are loved and that they don't have to do what a strange adult tells them. One of the pitfalls that parents fall into is that they're raising their kids to be perfect ladies and gentlemen who are polite and never contradict adults. (If an adult orders a polite child to get into his car, the child might obey simply because he's responding to what he perceives as an authority figure.) It is especially those obedient good little children, the loners, who are perfect victims."

Critics might argue that books like "Never Say Yes to a Stranger" are helping to create a society of terrified, suspicious children. Newman objects and says that children are not frightened by the book.

"I think fear of the unknown is worse. Besides, we're fooling ourselves if we think we can shield our children from this. It's on every milk carton," she says, referring to the pictures of missing children that are circulated by some dairies on their containers. "Kids like the book rather than being frightened by it because they see how other kids can handle incidents."

"Never Say Yes to a Stranger" is not the kind of book parents will turn to lightly. But, says Newman, "I tell those who resist to try to imagine what it would be like to be the parents of a missing child."

Body language provides clues

NEW YORK (AP) — No matter how well you think you know another person, understanding his body language can give you additional clues as to what he's really thinking, according to Feeling Great Magazine.

"Body language is a remarkably accurate expression of our inner, unconscious feelings," says psychiatrist Anthony Pietropinto, author of "Beyond the Male Myth." He cautions, however, that the messages you receive depend on many factors.

"Once you've allowed for some margin of error, interpreting body language can be a useful way to tune into what a man is feeling and respond realistically," concludes Pietropinto.

Cancer screening kit can save lives

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Antibiotics were pumping through her veins. A tube probed the remote chasm from her mouth to her stomach. And her colon, ruptured by a tumor, had become a useless burden.

Norma Shiner clung to a thread of life that seemed to be getting more tenuous by the minute.

"I wasn't expected to make it," she recalled.

Not after her second bout with colorectal cancer. Not after repeated blood transfusions and a devastating infection. Not after the removal of 7 feet of colon.

Yet now, nearly three years later, Shiner counts herself among the fortunate few: a former cancer patient who is healthier than before her two episodes. She has learned to eat differently, to exercise regularly, to steer her lifestyle, at 62, along the path of least resistance.

Shiner, a San Diegan, is among the 45 percent of colorectal (colon and rectal) cancer victims who survive. Cancer researchers expect to handle 138,000 new colorectal cases in the United States by the end of the year — second only to lung cancer. And 55 percent of such victims are expected to die within five years, according to Dr. Howard Robin, chairman of the education committee of the American Cancer Society, San Diego County branch.

However, pointed out Robin, if detected in its earliest stage, the cancer is curable in 90 percent of the cases.

Early detection. To the medical community, it is the No. 1 priority today in the defense against colorectal cancer. All people 50 and older (93 percent of colorectal cases occur after the age of 50) are encouraged to undergo an annual examination consisting of:

— An occult blood test, to detect hidden blood in the stool.

— A digital rectal exam, which checks for tumors in the rectum.

— A proctosigmoidoscope, which examines the colon.

If the tests sound uncomfortable and intimidating, consider the disease itself. Shiner understands. She only wishes she had been more vigilant a decade ago, and she wishes she had been less reluctant to discuss her symptoms with her physician.

"Four years previous to my first cancer surgery," she said, "I had a proctoscope and X-ray (two detection measures), then a proctoscope every year after that — but I didn't have other procedures. It was my fault, not my doctors'.

"I feel a person has to be responsible for his own health, and that includes going to a physician for a regular screening. It's up to you to become educated and ask for these tests."

Shiner, a retired accountant, detected subtle symptoms "about three or four months before my colon ruptured," she said. "I would have pain, but it would go away."

Symptoms, according to Robin, include:

— Anemia due to blood loss.

— Black, tarlike stools.

— Pain with defecation and change in the shape and size of the stool.

Said Robin: "Blood in the stool could be a sign of rectal cancer, diverticulosis or hemorrhoids. The presence of blood doesn't necessarily indicate cancer.

"Maybe only 10 to 15 percent of those with blood in their stools may have cancer. With the others, there is something wrong, but we don't want to scare them into thinking it's cancer. Sometimes if they've had recent dental work, where blood is swallowed, blood can show up in the stool.

"Some show blood in the stool because they eat meat. We recommend that the person stop eating meat during the testing procedure. We like them to observe a high-fiber diet, which increases the quantity of the stool. And they should not take vitamin C for two days prior to the testing procedure, because this can produce a negative test when blood is present.

"Those with a positive test," said Robin, "will be asked to see a doctor for a follow-up, and the doctor can be recommended by the Medical Society. Not everyone with a positive test has a malignant tumor.

"If a growth is detected (as opposed to a tumor), it is 100 percent curable."

Colorectal detection procedures, said Robin, should be part of an annual physical examination for all adults over the age of 40. "One test," he pointed out, "will not detect all cancers."

Colorectal cancer, statistics show, occurs slightly more often in women than in men. Eighty-five percent of all rectal cancer patients and practically all colon cancer patients do not need a colostomy when diagnosed at the earliest stages.

Sadly, a study commissioned in 1982 by the ACS indicated that most adults 40 and older do not consider the three recommended early detection tests a part of their regular health checkup.

Cancer research viewed as success and failure

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Is the 15-year-old National Cancer Program a huge success because, as National Cancer Institute director Vincent T. DeVita says, "You can just about name (a type of cancer), and we're ready to test (a promising new drug) on it?"

Or is the $10 billion-plus program a failure, as Harvard University public health expert John Bailor says, because "there has been no evidence of a downturn in age-adjusted cancer rates over 30 years?"

Based on statistics and a seemingly reliable new forecast of the role of cancer in the year 2000, the results apparently can now be read either way.

Five-year survival rates of victims of some of the most common cancers, including breast cancer in women and Hodgkin's Disease, show "significant improvement," DeVita said during a recent meeting in San Diego. NCI's statistics now show that more than 50 percent of breast cancer victims, for example, survive.

But Bailor, who concedes that there have been major advances against Hodgkin's and several childhood cancers which are now virtually 100 percent curable, argues that the breast cancer figures are "probably meaningless."

He notes that "any graph showing the number of breast cancer deaths per 1,000 women in America is a straight line since 1933. The death statistics haven't changed."

So how to account for the big improvement in five-year survival?

That, suggests Bailor, is due to modern technological advances like mammograms, which spot cancers very early — but also may finger growths that look like cancer, but aren't.

Women who "survive" those false positives on mammograms are included in the five-year survival statistics, Bailor said, but they don't change the death rate at all.

"Intense screening efforts produce evidence that some so-called cancers caught very early on are not really malignant," Bailor said. "They look that way to a pathologist through a microscope, but they don't actually behave that way and a few years ago, they never would have been noticed."

Such "misleading" statistics, Bailor said, cloak the fact that "We are losing the war against cancer."

But the most complete forecast yet issued on the anti-cancer effort indicates Bailor may be only partially correct.

It's true, says the study from the UCLA School of Public Health, that cancer remains the only major illness for which the death rate has not dropped since 1900. The rate still stands at two persons per 1,000 Americans per year.

There's little chance that will change until the turn of the century, said UCLA public health professor James Enstrom, chief author of the forecast.

And it's true that the chances for any American to suffer cancer sometime during a lifetime are actually going up, not down, reaching 41 percent by the year 2000, compared with 35 percent today.

But Enstrom told a seminar here last week, "This is largely a result of declining death rates from other causes."

In fact, he said, cancer will shortly surpass heart disease as the leading natural cause of death. But cancer deaths among persons under the age of 54 will decline from 61,000 this year to 54,000 in 1999.

"The biggest growth in cancers will occur in the 75-plus age group where 40 percent of all cancer deaths will occur 15 years from now," Enstrom said. "So cancer will increasingly become a disease of the aged."

Among cancers, lung cancer will continue to be the most lethal, followed by colorectal, breast and prostate malignancies.

But Enstrom added that "cancer will grow the most in places with the highest standard of living — except where people don't smoke. Our studies of low-risk populations indicate that the single best way to avoid cancer is not smoke."

Fashions sensible

By ERMA BOMBECK

Ever since the fashion industry deregulated, I don't know what to wear anymore.

It was easy when "formal" meant white gloves to the elbow, corsage to the navel and hemline to the floor, "dressy" meant hose and Sunday best, and "casual" translated to anything you could breathe in, wash stains out of, and wrinkled around your stomach if you sat in it too long.

That was before come-as-you-feel came in. I haven't been dressed properly since. One night I showed up at a dinner where I was the speaker. I had on a full-length chiffon gown and moth sleeves that looked like I was looking for a flame to dance around. Everyone in the audience looked like they had just come from a bowling tournament.

Another time, I wore a polyester slack suit with the elastic waistband and plastic bracelet that glowed in the dark and every other guest had just come from the "Dynasty" wedding.

In the last 10 years I have not been to one event where someone did not come up and say, "You didn't have time to go home and change before you came?"

Frankly, I'm sick and tired of being the only machine-washable at a dry-clean-only evening. Someone has to set the standards here.

Let's talk pajamas. Either we're going to bed in them or we aren't. But swooping around in them tablehopping at a luncheon. Please.

Jeans are informal. I don't care if they do fit and cost $85 and you wear them with five-inch heels and a sequined overblouse and have a white wine spot on the leg and a designer zipper ... they're still informal!

Hats are for a Bette Midler concert. That's it.

Cut-off shorts at a church service are definitely a no-no. I know some people feel they can get away with them if they are accessorized by carrying a frisbee in one hand, their car keys in the other, and a confident smile that says, "Christ wore sandals," but it's wrong.

Never wear anything so bare or transparent in the daytime you can't pin a name tag on it.

Obscene T-shirts (if you must wear them) should never be worn during morning, afternoon or prime time ... only during the late hours when children are in bed.

I know. Some will accuse me of stifling imagination and suppressing fashion independence, but some of us just aren't ready for it. I realized that the other night when I went to an affair billed only as "Black Tie Required."

I was the only woman there wearing one.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Aspirin-sensitive persons should avoid ibuprofen

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been reading about the new pain-reliever called ibuprofen. Can it be used like aspirin or should some people avoid it? — Mrs. C.A., N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. A.: Ibuprofen has been suggested for the temporary relief of aches and pains and menstrual cramps and to reduce fever; however, patients who are sensitive to aspirin may have the same reaction to ibuprofen and should avoid it. In addition, ibuprofen should not be used with aspirin or acetaminophen, or by pregnant women or children under 12 years old.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I find that I begin to wheeze when I exercise outdoors. I was running with a group of people recently, and one of them said that it sounded as if I have asthma. I don't have any allergies, but I'd like to know if he might be right. — Gus, Dallas.

Dear Gus: Asthma may be exercised-induced; that is, the wheezing may be brought about by physical exertion, particularly in cold weather.

Wheezing does not have to indicate the presence of allergic asthma.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would you please comment on the use of acyclovir for the treatment of herpes? When it first came out, the newspapers reported it as if herpes was going to disappear. But I know only too well that that is not the case. Were the early stories too optimistic? And how good really is acyclovir for herpes? — Ms. B.W., Los Angeles.

Dear Ms. W.: You may be correct in your observation that acyclovir aroused more optimism than was warranted when it was first introduced. Neither topical acyclovir, which is applied locally, nor oral acyclovir is a cure for herpes, although the oral form appears to be more effective.

There is also an intravenous form of acyclovir, but treatment requires hospitalizing the patient for five days, and the cost is therefore very high.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband has been coughing a lot now for several weeks, and he has tried almost every over-the-counter medicine he could find in the store. I've been trying to get him to agree to see a doctor, and he has finally agreed to do so if you felt it was a good idea. May we have your opinion? —Mrs. J.L., Alexandria, Va.

Dear Mrs. L.: Cough suppressants that mask the symptom without resolving the underlying problem may do more harm than good. Whether or not your husband is a smoker, it's about time he saw a physician.

The cause of a chronic cough can often be revealed through a history, physical examination and chest X-ray. Other diagnostic tests may be indicated for individual patients. The sooner these are begun, the better.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Could gonorrhea be the cause of irregular menstruation? — Ms. A.U., N.Y.C.

Dear Ms. U.: Any pelvic inflammation, including gonorrhea, can cause menstrual irregularity.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Ever since I was in elementary school, I've been aware that smoking is bad for the heart. I'm not arguing that it isn't, but I've never been clear as to why it should have a harmful effect. Would you please provide a simple explanation? — Mr. S.T., Macon, Ga.

Dear Mr. T.: Dr. Joseph J. Barboriak, of the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, points out that smoking forces the body to produce more red blood cells. This makes the blood thicker and therefore forces the heart to work harder. In addition, nicotine constricts the blood vessels, which also forces the heart to work harder to pump blood.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I heard a doctor say that women who are on the pill have less chance of getting rheumatoid arthritis. Is this his own idea or is it something that is generally accepted by doctors? — Cindy, Baltimore, Md.

Dear Cindy: There have been suggestions that oral contraceptives exert a number of immunologic effect. Although I believe it would be premature to conclude that the use of oral contraceptives reduces the risk of rheumatoid arthritis, there is some evidence that this may be the case. For example, the results of a Swedish study indicate that women who used the pill for more than a year were less likely to develop rheumatoid arthritis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The papers have carried a number of stories about some well-known people who have been using cocaine and how they have gone to some clinic or hospital for treatment. The stories make the point that the same facility also treats alcoholics. Is the treatment for cocaine addiction and for alcoholism so much the same that the same people can be experts in treating both? — Sue, Pittsburgh.

Dear Sue: Apparently the treatment for cocaine abuse is very similar to the treatment for alcoholism. The fact is that many cocaine users turn to alcohol to counter the effects of the cocaine wearing off. As these people become more and more dependent on the cocaine, they require increasingly large amounts of alcohol. The result is that they often become addicted to both cocaine and alcohol.

Dr. Joseph C. McCarthy, of the Haight-Ashbury Free Medical Clinic in San Francisco, says that the kind of support offered to alcoholics by such groups as Alcoholics Anonymous is also very important for cocaine users. In fact, some sections of the country now have Cocaine Anonymous groups for people addicted to cocaine who refuse referrals to Alcoholics Anonymous.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why is it that some children constantly seem to be getting involved in accidents? I have children of my own and they have an occasional accident, but I also have a nephew who is always getting hurt. Is it just a matter of fate? — Mrs. W.Z., San Francisco, Ca.

Dear Mrs. Z.: There are certain characteristics of children that can almost predict the frequency with which they will be involved in accidents. For example, the very fact that a child is a boy rather than a girl increases the chance of some injury. In addition, hyperactive children and those who are emotionally disturbed are more likely to be hurt.

Regardless of the risk, parents can take steps to minimize the possibility of accidents around the home. Some simple steps include the installation of a smoke detector and the creation of barriers to prevent physical contact between exposed heaters and fireplaces.

No one can provide constant and continuous supervision of a child, nor would this be advisable from a developmental standpoint. However, a recognition of the hazards that exist around the home and the introduction of safety measures can help reduce a child's risk of injury.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there such a thing as a family tendency to pain? I have an uncle who has been complaining about his back for as long as I can remember, and now his son (my cousin) is always complaining about headaches. Is it possible that a problem with pain can be inherited? — Craig, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Craig: The results of various studies have shown that chronic pain does seem to run in families. In one study, more than 75 percent of patients who were experiencing chronic pain were found to have family members who also had chronic pain. This figure compared with less than 45 percent of patients in a control group.

Whether patients from such families are more sensitive to pain, or whether they are more prone to behave as if they are, is still not clear.

For Denise, Yonkers, N.Y.: People who are affected by allergies have less resistance to colds and the flu, and are made more uncomfortable by these infections than are individuals who do not have allergies.

For Karl, Milwaukee, Wisc.: Autotransfusion refers to the collection of reinfusion of a patient's own blood. The procedure is generally safe and economical.

DEAR ABBY

Stolen jewelry may stir up family feud

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: An expensive piece of jewelry was taken from our home recently. The sad part is that we have good reason to suspect a teenage relative who visited us at the time.

The young relative reads your column faithfully, so perhaps seeing this in your column might result in the piece being quietly returned. There would be no questions asked.

We carry insurance, but if we report the loss to our insurance company, they will insist on a police report, and the police will want a list of people who were in our home at the time in order to question them. We are afraid that our young relative might break down under questioning, which would cause very bad feelings in the family.

Should we get the law involved in this? Or should we risk talking to the parents? We've considered talking directly with the teen-ager, but if said teen-ager denies taking it and tells the parents of the accusation, it still spells family trouble.

We are waiting for your answer. We want to help — not punish — the young person, Abby. To me that is more important than getting the jewelry back. — A LOVING (AND HURT) RELATIVE

DEAR RELATIVE: Pass the word around among the family concerning the missing piece, stressing that the insurance company wants a police report, which will include a list of people who were at the house at the time. If that doesn't cause the piece to turn up, then speak privately to the young person you suspect. If that doesn't bring results, proceed with the routine report to your insurance company.

DEAR ABBY: Many years ago, my one and only love decided he should not marry me, so he told my father, "Your daughter is too good for me"!

Ever since then I have wondered if this was a cop-out, or if some men really feel they aren't good enough for the women they love.

I'd like your opinion. — STILL WONDERING

DEAR STILL: If a man tells a girl's father he isn't good enough for his daughter, all concerned should believe him. He knows himself better than anybody. And if it's a cop-out, that's further proof that he's neither good enough — nor brave enough.

DEAR ABBY: Our son, 42, is getting married for the second time. His first marriage ended in divorce nine years ago. The woman he's marrying is 22, and this is her first marriage.

Her parents are planning a large church wedding with all the trimmings — the kind our son had the first time. What part do we play in this wedding? It's 17 years later, and our lifestyle has changed considerably. My husband is retired, and we are in much more modest circumstances now. We hosted one lavish rehearsal dinner the night before the wedding, as is customary for the groom's parents, but we are in no position to do it again. The bride's parents are fine people — younger and better off financially than we are.

We want a good rapport with them, so please tell us how to handle this. — PARENTS OF THE GROOM

DEAR PARENTS: Explain your circumstances candidly to the bride's parents. Don't do any more than you can comfortably afford. Parents who have participated in one wedding have paid their dues, and are exempt from the obligations of repeat performances.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Back pain is common problem

ATLANTA (AP) — Back pain is one of the most common health problems in the United States, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

It is a leading cause of lost work time in the nation, and costs the economy $16 billion a year in treatment expenses and lost wages.

Back pain can range from an uncomfortable ache to a severe pain. It can last for a day or two, or it can go on for weeks, months or years. Back pain can be due to many different problems, lack of exercise and being overweight.

Book: Nuclear web sticky with danger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's major nuclear powers have constructed an extensive web of war-related support facilities around the world that is as dangerous and provocative as their stocks of warheads, a new book asserts.

This "infrastructure" of command posts, research facilities, weather stations and even observatories to help "synchronize its watches" operates continuously and is as likely to trigger nuclear war as it is to help wage it, according to "Nuclear Battlefields," a book published Thursday.

The infrastructure has grown as rapidly as the arsenals of the United States, the Soviet Union, England, France and China, said authors William Arkin and Richard Fieldhouse. There are now more than 50,000 and possibly as many as 59,000 nuclear warheads either deployed or stored around the world, 25,000 of them belonging to the United States, they said.

Worldwide, more than 10,000 nuclear weapons are "on alert" for near instant firing; some 11,800 nuclear weapons are now deployed outside the homelands of the nuclear powers or at sea. And half of all nuclear weapons — including artillery shells, shorter-range missiles and nuclear depth charges — are outside the current arms control process.

The United States has deployed or stored its nuclear weapons within the borders of 28 states, on the island of Guam and in eight foreign countries, including Belgium, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Turkey, Britain, West Germany and South Korea, the authors add.

South Carolina contains the greatest number of nuclear warheads, with New York in second place and North Dakota in third. The largest nuclear storage sites within the United States are the Naval Weapons Station at Charleston, S.C.; Seneca Army Depot in New York; Barksdale Air Force Base in Louisiana; Kirtland Air Force Base in New Mexico; and Lake Meade Base, which is the storage depot for Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada.

The Soviet Union appears to have deployed nuclear warheads in at least four foreign countries — Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary and Poland. England has some nuclear weapons deployed in West Germany, while France and China maintain their arsenals within their borders.

As dangerous as those arsenals are, however, it is "the infrastructure (that) perpetuates constant tension and threatens to cause war."

"Simply tallying up the number of nuclear weapons in a nation's arsenal does not indicate how ready or able it is to use nuclear weapons in a war," the authors write.

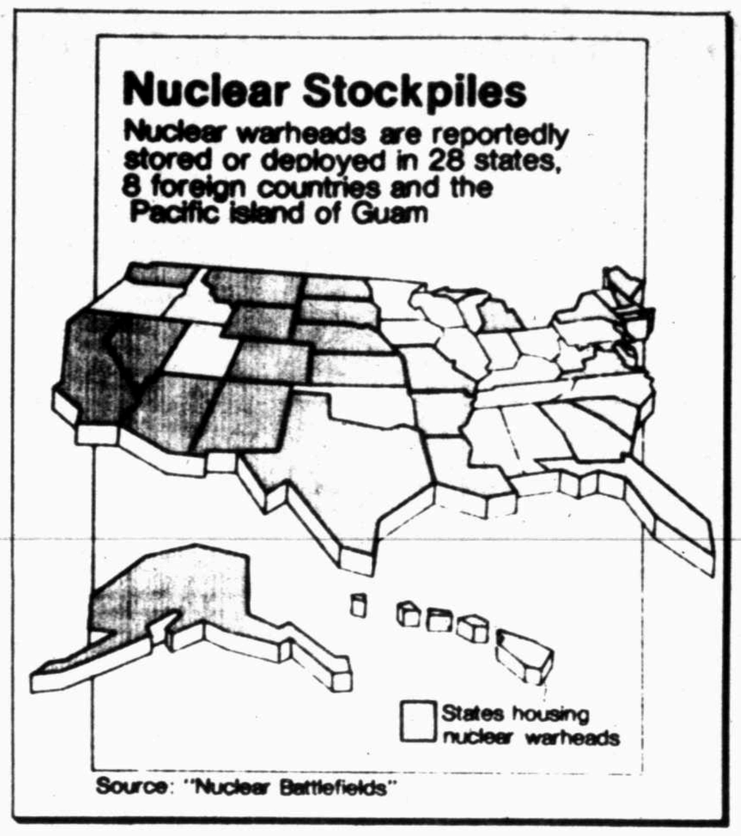

The infrastructure includes research and production facilities, radar sites, communication and surveillance centers, weather stations, command posts and observatories and oceanographic and seismic labs.

Weather affects missile and bomber flight patterns and must be constantly charted. Flare activity on the sun affects satellite orbits and radar operations. Efforts to construct survivable communication networks are putting "targets into towns across America."

Indeed, 48 of America's 50 states and 65 nations around the world are now "on the front lines" of any nuclear battlefield because of the infrastructure, the authors claim. Within the United States, only Delaware and West Virginia "house no nuclear infrastructure facilities."

Around the world, "passive-sounding" facilities for such things as surveillance have become "active instruments to prepare and implement nuclear attacks."

"They tie these countries into nuclear plans in such a way that they not only become nuclear targets, but nuclear catapults."

Quinlans say goodbye

LANDING, N.J. (AP) — A flower arrangement with the inscription "To Our Precious Gift" adorned the casket of Karen Ann Quinlan as family members and friends gathered to say goodbye at two separate viewings.

Miss Quinlan's family viewed the open casket at the Leber Lakeside Funeral Home on Thursday.

Monsignor Thomas Trapasso, who counseled Julia and Joseph Quinlan during the 10 years their daughter lay in a coma, said "there was some real emotion."

Miss Quinlan, 31, died in her weeping mother's arms Tuesday at the Morris View Nursing Home in Morris Plains where for 10 years she lay comatose, a worldwide symbol for the right to die with dignity.

Meese wants money-launderers prosecuted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III says he favors prosecuting bank executives who are "knowingly involved" in the laundering of money.

Meese, pushing for enactment of legislation to help authorities combat the hiding of profits obtained through criminal activities, said the proposed law "exempts no one," including top bank officers.

The attorney general unveiled the legislation during a wide-ranging news conference Thursday in which he also said it will be some time before authorities learn whether a body discovered near Sao Paulo, Brazil, is that of Nazi fugitive Josef Mengele.

Meese also said he believes U.S. officials should launch a wide-ranging review of the system of classifying secrets in the wake of the alleged spy ring that passed Navy secrets to the Soviets.

In pushing for heavier sanctions against those who launder money, Meese said, "It may well be that at some point if chief executives of banks are knowingly involved, that they will be prosecuted."

Authorities believe huge sums of money are laundered by financial institutions, Meese said, although he added that no reliable statistics are available on the amount involved.

He said the Justice and Treasury departments had lined up Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., as chief sponsors of the proposed legislation.

Unlike the administration proposal, existing law "does not reach the transaction directly involving the 'dirty money,'" Meese said.

The principal law dealing with money laundering, the Bank Secrecy Act, merely requires the filing of reports concerning certain monetary transactions and punishes those who fail to file reports or who file false information.

Earlier this month, following raids by 200 federal agents on seven financial institutions, the government charged 17 people in Puerto Rico, many of them bank executives, with money laundering.

Meese said the bill will "create a new crime" of money laundering and enable the government to prosecute "the often well-educated and always clever criminals who are involved in this activity."

On Capitol Hill, a convicted money launderer told a House panel that banks sometimes made his trade easy, with tellers even warning him when federal agents were on his trail.

"On the West Coast, they would welcome us," testified the witness, who used the pseudonym "Mario" and concealed his identity with a black hood. In one California bank, the teller warned, "The IRS is after you, watch out," he said.

Mario described for the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime how he worked in a money-laundering operation as a "smurf" — running to banks across the country to exchange illegally obtained cash for cashier's checks, which then would be deposited in foreign accounts.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Child's teeth found by survivalists's home

WEST POINT, Calif. (AP) — The diary of a dead survivalist linked to a cabin where children's teeth and the remains of five people have been unearthed led authorities to expand their search to a site more than 300 miles away.

"There are at least five at the absolute minimum...the maximum could go to anything," Calaveras County Coroner Terry Parker said Thursday. "There are very young teeth up there. There are children's teeth up there, possibly baby's. There are not enough to work with (to identify)."

Two new sites with bone fragments were found Thursday near the yellow, hillside house used by Leonard Lake, died after swallowing a poison pill while in police custody last week, Parker said.

As many as 25 missing people are believed to be linked to Lake, 39, and his companion, Charles Ng, who is being sought in an international manhunt, police say.

Authorities expanded their search to Miranda, a small logging community in Humboldt County, because of a diary Lake left behind, detailing his activities for at least two years.

Lake apparently lived there in 1983 and began a plan called "Operation Miranda," Humboldt Sheriff Dave Renner said.

Operation Miranda involved Lake's belief that he could survive a nuclear war in underground bunkers stocked with female "sex slaves," police say.

Mayor to be called

CROWN POINT, Ind. (AP) — Gary Mayor Richard Hatcher will be subpoenaed to testify at an inquiry into the drownings of five youngsters in a city swimming pool, says the coroner who claims the city bears blame in the deaths.

Hatcher "is, of course, administrative head of the city of Gary and he is responsible for the actions of all of the people under his administration," Lake County Coroner Daniel Thomas said Thursday.

Thomas has claimed the city was negligent for not draining five feet of rainwater that had accumulated in the deep end of the Fisher Park pool, where the children drowned Sunday after trying to climb out.

Perjury charge filed

WASHINGTON, Pa. (AP) — An 18-year-old woman who recanted testimony that sent her mother's boyfriend to jail on statutory rape charges has been charged with perjury, but a prosecutor says he doubts her new story is true.

Ronnda Baker of Niles, Ohio, was arrested at her home earlier this week and released on her own recognizance until a hearing Monday, Washington County District Attorney John Pettit said Thursday.

Ms. Baker testified in 1981 that William Davis, 39, had sex with her several times between August 1979 and March 1981.

After Ms. Baker testified in April that she had lied in 1981, Common Pleas Judge Thomas Gladden ordered a retrial. Pettit, who has asked a state Superior Court to deny the retrial, said he believes the young woman lied in April.

"It is the feeling of this office that the rape did actually occur," he said.

Carrying capacity not usually best stocking rate

AGRICULTURE

Without doubt, one of the most difficult and critical decisions a rancher must make many times each year is the adjustment of stocking rates. This decision affects both the marketing policy of his livestock, as well as the utilization and future production of his range forage base.

Even the term stocking rate is often shrouded in confusion. Many ranchers set their livestock numbers more by the carrying capacity of the range, than the actual stocking rate at any given period of time. Actually, there is a great deal of difference between the two approaches.

Carrying capacity refers to the average number of livestock a unit of range can support over in a year without damage to that resource. Stocking rate infers more frequent adjustment of animal numbers to match forage production on a seasoned basis.

The year-long carrying capacity of range will be less than that possible by adjusting livestock numbers seasonally and over years. Setting livestock numbers based primarily on carrying capacity, will result in over-utilization of the range during dry seasons or years, and under-utilization during wet periods. To achieve maximum economic production, livestock numbers must be matched to current and projected forage levels rather than by annual carrying capacity. This method of adjustment will result in more efficient harvest of forage without damage to the forage base, but will require more managerial input as compared to setting livestock numbers based primarily on carrying capacity.

The first question often asked is how often, and under what circumstances, should stocking rates be adjusted. This is further complicated by the erratic rainfall patterns in the Trans-Pecos, and the lack of any significant rainfall peak in the spring. One of the most critical periods for adjustments in stocking rates occurs in early October. This is toward the end of the major growing season in the Trans-Pecos, which occurs from July to October. During these months, the most significant and predictable rainfall occurs, resulting in production of the majority of the years forage. During October, forage produced in the preceding months must be evaluated for the number of animals the range will support through the normally dry winter ahead. If winter precipitation is received in the Trans-Pecos, resulting weed growth can increase potential stocking rates tremendously. The problem is that this winter moisture is extremely erratic from year to year and hard to predict.

A second-critical period for stocking rate adjustments occurs in March. Moisture may have been received during the winter that resulted in an increase in stocking rates. Unfortunately, weed growth produced in the winter is often short lived once spring arrives. At this time a decision must be made concerning the number of animals the range can support until the next expected rainy period which occurs in mid-summer. If the unpredictable spring rains occur, this decision will be much easier.

Above, two critical periods were identified in terms of stocking rate adjustments. In actual fact, stocking rate adjustments must be made in accordance with changes in range forage production. Unfortunately, forage production in the Trans-Pecos is extremely variable over seasons and years.

A second question often asked, refers to how pastures should be evaluated at a certin point in time in order to set actual livestock numbers. Most ranchers accomplish this task based on past history coupled with a visual evaluation of their forage supply. As with most subjective decision processes, this method works better for some individuals than others. Generally, those ranchers who keep accurate written records of past grazing use of pastures, rainfall and forage conditions, have the most success accurately balancing livestock numbers with present and future forage supplies.

It is possible to actually clip plots to estimate forage available at any point in time. By clipping a few plots seasonally, total pounds of forage available can be determined. At that point, depending on grazing management system used, 25 to 35 percent of the total should be calculated as available for livestock use. This is necessary to compensate for forage lost due to insects and trampling, as well as the plant material that must be left to insure reproduction and maintenance of vigor for the forage base. The pounds of forage available can then be used to determine stocking rate for a given period of time by assuming it takes 26 lbs. of forage to support one animal unit for one day. Using this procedure animal unit days of grazing available in a pasture can be determined. Of course, type and class of livestock should be converted to an animal unit basis when actual animal numbers are determined.

Director Lone relates closely to 'Paper Angels' theme

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The story of Chinese immigrants that is told in the public television drama "Paper Angels" is close to the heart of director John Lone.

"I can feel for these people," said Lone, who came here from Hong Kong. "They came over for a better life. So did I."

"Paper Angels," which PBS will telecast Monday on "American Playhouse," tells of the Chinese detained on Angel Island in San Francisco Bay. Genny Lim adapted the play from her book "Island: Poetry and History of Chinese Immigrants of Angel Island, 1910-40," winner of the 1982 American Book Award.

Lone is best known as an actor. He was the Neanderthal in "Iceman" and plays a Chinese businessman in the upcoming movie, "The Year of the Dragon," director Michael Cimino's first film since the disastrous failure, "Heaven's Gate."

"Paper Angels" was the first film directing assignment for Lone, who had directed the play on stage in New York.

"It's not quite film and it's not quite television," said Lone. "It has a poetic essence. It's atmospheric, with a glimpse of the time, rather than an epic. Much of the book was taken from the poetry written on the walls at Angel Island by the immigrants."

The film's closed-in feeling underscores the immigrants' surroundings.

The one-hour drama, set in the early part of this century, stars Rosalind Chao, Joan Chen, James Hong, David Huang, Beulah Quo, Victor Wong and Ping Wu as the seven Chinese whose stories are told.

"Angel Island still exists," Lone said. "I went through it and it gives you a chilling feeling. Since I read Chinese, I was able to read some of the poems still on the walls. Many of them have been painted over. I remember seeing one so painful in its despair and loneliness and relating to that feeling.

"The immigrants were put through rigorous questioning, which was a conscious effort by the bureaucracy to find any excuse to keep them out. If their papers didn't match, if any answers to questions didn't match, they were sent back to China."

Lone directed the drama immediately after completing work on "Year of the Dragon."

"Year of the Dragon" tells of a power struggle in New York's Chinatown after the arrival of a new policeman, played by Mickey Rourke.

"I play a businessman who is supposed to be the godfather of Chinatown," Lone said. "But I don't consider myself a bad guy. There's a reason for what he does. He's not a typical heavy."

Lone was born in Hong Kong. At the age of 10 he entered the Chin Chiu Academy of the Peking Opera and for the next eight years underwent strict training and discipline. He saw very little of the outside world, except on the bus rides to and from performances.

"You have to start very young because if you're too mature you can't do what you have to do," he said. "It's very sophisticated theater. I was cut off from the world. You're in it for life.

"But I kept traveling outside the walls and I kept seeing a world I didn't know. I finally escaped. I stayed in Hong Kong for a while and film companies there offered me contracts, but I didn't like anything they were doing. After my freedom I saw American films, and even though I couldn't understand English, they grabbed me and moved me."

Lone wouldn't reveal his age but admitted he was older than he looked, about 30.

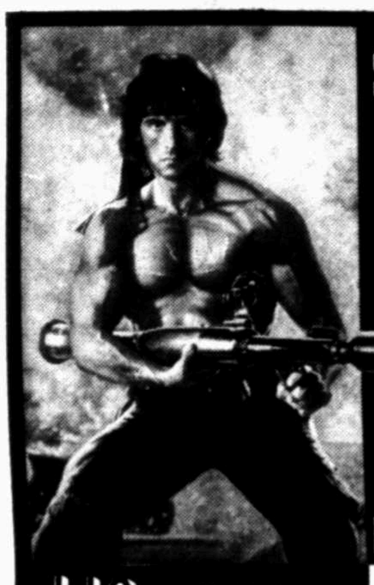

"I am very healthy because of my training in the opera," he said. "I was like a piece of steel constantly heated and hammered until it became a sword. So I look much younger than I am. As an actor I try to play different ages. I don't want to be specific.

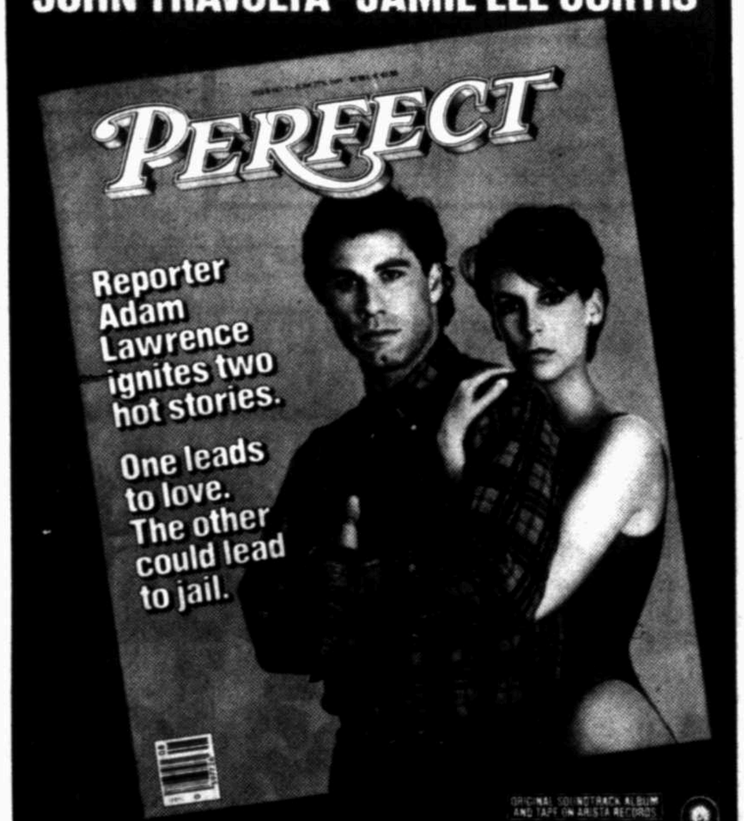

"When I auditioned for 'Iceman' they weren't looking for anything specific, but they did want someone with a primitive look so they wouldn't have to go through a lot of makeup. They wanted it to be more naturalistic. What made that character work was the unusual look and his unfamiliar posture.

After three years, Rich Little wonders, 'Where's Johnny?'

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Rich Little munched on a piece of toast, glanced around the crowded hotel restaurant and repeated the question that's been bugging him for three years: "Whereee's Johnny?"

The celebrated impressionist said "The Tonight Show" was always one of his most important vehicles for reaching the public and he's been one of its top guests and hosts. But now getting on the show is as tough as unlocking the mystery of Vice President George Bush's mannerisms.

"The thing that bothers me is that I did the show for so many years and it was such an important show for me to do; still is," Little said of his three-year hiatus from the late night classic. "I even hosted it a lot of times and the ratings were always good. I don't know why I can't get a definite answer as to why I can't get on anymore."

Little says he's not alone in being banned in Burbank.

"I think there's a lot of good entertainers who don't get on 'The Tonight Show' and they have no idea why they don't. That's why you see the same people on all the time.

"I don't think they're getting the biggies on anymore," Little continued, toying with an elusive egg. "But the ratings are great. I like Johnny. I think he's the best there is at what he does."

Freddie de Cordova, producer of "The Tonight Show," returns the compliment, calling Little the best in his field. But he says impressionists have been eliminated from the show.

"If we were to move into that area now, the first person we'd think of would be Rich," de Cordova said through an NBC spokesman.

He may have been banned because Carson likes to do impressions himself, Little admitted.

"But if that's true, why don't I go on with Joan Rivers? The answers they give don't make much sense."

Meanwhile, Little's coming off the best year he's had since he began working small clubs in tiny Canadian towns 25 years ago. He's cut a new album, "There He Goes Again" — a takeoff on President Reagan. And he's working on plans for an HBO special on the same subject, which he hopes to shoot at the White House. Both are scheduled for release in September.

Little rocked audiences with his impressions of Richard Nixon and Jimmy Carter but admits he was stumped by Ronald Reagan — until a Reagan campaign worker passed along the secret.

"Start every sentence with 'Welllll,'" the worker told Little during a plane flight while Reagan was campaigning for his first term five years ago.

Little did, and it became a hit with the public and the president.

"Everytime he sees me, the first thing he says is 'Welllll,'" Little grinned. "He stood up to address a huge audience on the White House lawn recently. Jeanne (Little's wife of 12 years) and I were in the crowd. He looked down at me and said 'Welllll.' Then he got serious and went ahead with his speech."

Not every subject is easy for Little to imitate. He frets that George Bush would be "very tough."

"I told Mrs. Bush at the inauguration, 'If he's gonna run for president, would you tell him to work on his mannerisms, his lisp, his nervous twitch. Give me a break.'

Little, 46, currently headlines at the MGM Grand on the Las Vegas Strip six to eight weeks a year and is also a standard at Harrah's in Reno, Lake Tahoe and Atlantic City. In addition he's doing symphony dates around the country and has just completed a video for Parker Brothers on a new charades game.

Daughter Bria, who sat patiently waiting for a trip to a water theme park, was asked for her favorite subject done by her famous father.

"Which singer do you like me to do best?" Little asked the perky 7 year old.

"Jack Nicholson," she replied.

Media courts von Bulow during trial

But they had to 'play by von Bulow's rules'

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — When a verdict was about to be handed down in his retrial on charges he twice tried to kill his heiress wife, Claus von Bulow ordered his 18-year-old daughter, Cosima, to stay in her hotel room. He said he didn't want some camera poking her eyes out.

It wasn't such a remote possibility.

Von Bulow himself was hit on the head with a camera once, when journalists covering the celebrated retrial surged toward him. And shortly before von Bulow's acquittal Monday, his chief defense attorney was nearly knocked down when reporters questioning him spotted the defendant coming out of the courthouse and stampeded in his direction.

On the whole, however, reporters played by von Bulow's rules. The main one: he would make himself available as long as he was able to speak off the record. Most of what he said on the record was hardly newsworthy.

During his frequent chats with reporters in the courtroom hallway during recesses, he often ignored questions of any substance about the case, preferring to dwell on subjects such as his stint as a London barrister.

After one court recess, von Bulow was asked repeatedly by a newly arrived reporter arrived whether he would take the stand. Von Bulow said he did not want to tip off the prosecution, adding that the reporter had not given the customary promise to keep the conversation private.

"You're very persistent. You must be new here," he said. He then quickly put his arm around the stranger and apologized for appearing hostile.

> "This falls more as entertainment, but what passes as entertainment in newspapers concerns the human condition. People are looking for confirmation that life as they know it is really the way life is. When these people who are bigger than life have problems, it gives them the confirmation they need."
>
> — Tom Stites, Chicago Tribune correspondent

He wanted to be perceived as a friend of the media for reasons that, in light of the sequestered jury, were largely unclear. Even when the push of the media members turned to shove, he always came back for more.

"You find out that individually they are nice people, so you get used to it," he once said when asked if he ever tired of the media.

The media courted him. Some reporters had drinks and dinners with von Bulow and his lover, Andrea Reynolds. They also feted the presiding judge, Superior Court Judge Corinne P. Grande, on at least two occasions and threw separate cocktail parties for the defense and prosecution teams.

Jonathan Friendly, a former New York Times media critic who covered the trial for the newspaper, said he organized the cocktail parties "to get to know both sides ... better than I thought possible to do in the setting of the court."

The parties were presumed to be off-the-record affairs, but the prosecution get-together led to a major development in the story.

The state's chief investigator let slip that New York theater critic John Simon told him Alexandra Isles, von Bulow's former mistress and 1982 star prosecution witness, had left the country rather than testify again because Von Bulow had written her threatening letters.

The judge herself was not unaware of the media. When the retrial ended, she called several reporters to rebut allegations that she had been pro-defense.

During the retrial, she called reporters into her chambers to discuss their stories and once visited the media center, in an office building about a block away from the courthouse.

Von Bulow's stepchildren, who pressed the case against him, also sought out the media.

Alexander von Auersperg, 25, and Annie-Laurie "Ala" Kneissl, 27, hired a publicist and offered exclusive interviews to several newspapers in an attempt to counter defense portraits of their mother as an alcohol and drug abuser.

After those interviews appeared, Mrs. Reynolds distributed photocopies of a handwritten note she sent to the children chastising their behavior.

Mrs. Reynolds, a New York socialite who watched her lover's retrial from a television van, called reporters to offer critiques of their copy.

When the case neared its conclusion, nearly 200 reporters and photographers, some of them from as far away as Europe and Australia, covered the story.

On one trip to court, von Bulow, surrounded by a throng of reporters, was struck on the back of the head by a TV camera. The ordinarily composed defendant snapped angrily at the cameraman, but the journalists continued the chase. After he entered the building, the courtyard in front was strewn with shoes lost in the rush.

Why did the retrial attract so much media coverage?

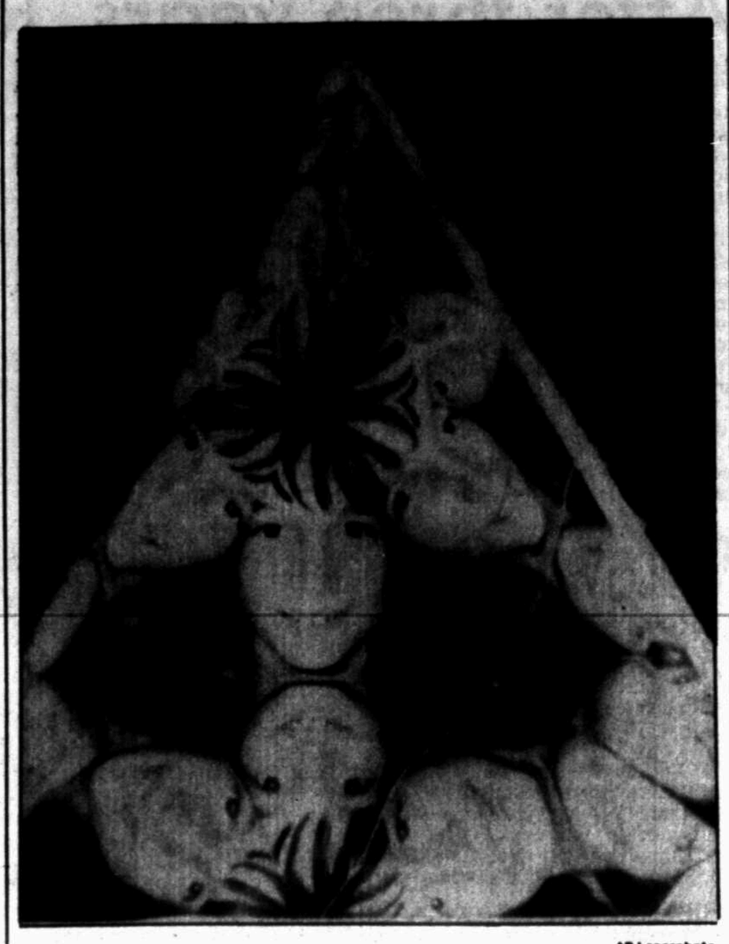

"This falls more as entertainment, but what passes as entertainment in newspapers concerns the human condition," said Chicago Tribune correspondent Tom Stites.

"People are looking for confirmation that life as they know it is really the way life is. When these people who are bigger than life have problems, it gives them the confirmation they need," Stites said.

"It's big in Denmark," said Michael Meyerheim, U.S. correspondent for Copenhagen's Politiken newspaper.

"Basically, people don't know what to believe but a lot of people are fascinated by it. And it has this Danish connection, with him (von Bulow) being Danish...," Meyerheim, who is based in Washington, said.

Von Bulow will get his chance to report on the reporters. He is writing a book about the case.

South Dakota Wall Drug store tourist attraction

WALL, S.D. (AP) — Wall Drug is an oasis offering ice water for parched vacationers traveling through the sun-baked moonscape of South Dakota's Badlands.

Wall Drug is a trinket heaven for tourists. Wall Drug is a Western portrait studio. Wall Drug is the Old West come alive for kids who can pose next to a cast-iron sculpture of Annie Oakley, shoot it out with a bad guy for 25 cents or put a coin in a slot and watch a hanging re-enacted.

Wall Drug is also a nickel coffee stop and a two-egg breakfast and hot beef sandwich lunch at low prices.

And, believe it or not, Wall Drug can still fill your prescription.

"We're pharmacists. You've got to be pharmacists to run a drugstore," said Bill Hustead, who now operates the multimillion dollar tourist attraction located just off Interstate 90 in western South Dakota.

A drugstore was all it was when Ted and Dorothy Hustead bought it in 1931, picking the sparsely populated prairie town for their business over 14 others they had considered because the doctor in Wall said he would give them all his prescriptions.

Ted Hustead, now 83, recalls those early years.

"When we came here, all we had in mind was to make a living," he said.

A few years later, unable to sleep from traffic noise on a hot summer Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Hustead had an idea that would become the ingenious marketing trademark of Wall Drug.

"She came back to the front of the store and said there was a lot of traffic out there...zing, zing, zing. She said they were probably thirsty and we should offer free ice water," Hustead said.

"Well, before I got back to town from putting up signs, people were already starting to pull into the store."

That was 1937. The next year Hustead hired eight people to serve the customers. The Husteads now employ more than 150 people each summer.

The making of Wall Drug is now legend.

Billboards using the Burma Shave technique of rhyming words on a series of signs to whet the appetite of motorists quickly dotted South Dakota's roads, imploring travelers not to miss Wall Drug.

Wall Drug signs have been carried to three wars. Soldiers left the signs with them in Guam, Shanghai and the South Pole.

Photographs of people holding Wall Drug signs in faraway corners of the world line the drugstore's walls, with the signs telling people how far it is from where they are to Wall Drug.

But the Husteads don't rely solely on other people carrying their business message. They have bought advertising space in Amsterdam, Paris and London, where signs on double-decker buses this year will tell the British how far it is to Wall Drug.

Wall Drug is the free enterprise system at its best or worst, depending on your point of view.

"A successful business is the greatest thing there is," said Bill Hustead, who now is in charge of the business, even though his father, Ted, comes to work regularly. "We put people to work, we pay taxes. We help everybody."

Bill Hustead grits his teeth over those who consider Wall Drug a gaudy tourist trap.

"We get few complaints. And why should we? People can come in here and get entertained without spending a dime, but for a nickel they can get a darn good cup of coffee.

"A tourist trap is where you get people in with false promises. We don't do that," he said.

If 1985 is an average year, and Bill Hustead expects it to be at least that, Wall Drug will amass staggering retail figures for a drugstore in a town of 800 residents.

About 10,000 people will come to the store each day over the summer travel months, and Wall Drug will gross more than $5 million.

During the year, the Husteads will give away more than 1 million glasses of ice water and pay the city about $7,300 in water bills — an excessive amount by most standards, but a drop in the bucket compared to the sales that will grow from the free water.

Nearly 26,000 T-shirts will be sold in 1985, and cooks will use thousands of eggs and up to 200 pounds of beef each day.

Also, more than 10,000 signs and 109,000 bumper stickers will be given away to carry the Wall Drug story across the nation, not to mention the free word-of-mouth advertising that will be provided by such people as Catherine Larus of Chicago, who stopped at the store one day in May.

"I'm just amazed. We don't have anything like this in Chicago," said Mrs. Larus, reaching for her billfold.

And she wasn't talking about prescriptions.

Scientists to study mummy's head

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A panel of scientists is planning to get wrapped up in studying a mummy's head that's been in "attics in this wonderful old hatbox" since it was brought from Egypt a century ago.

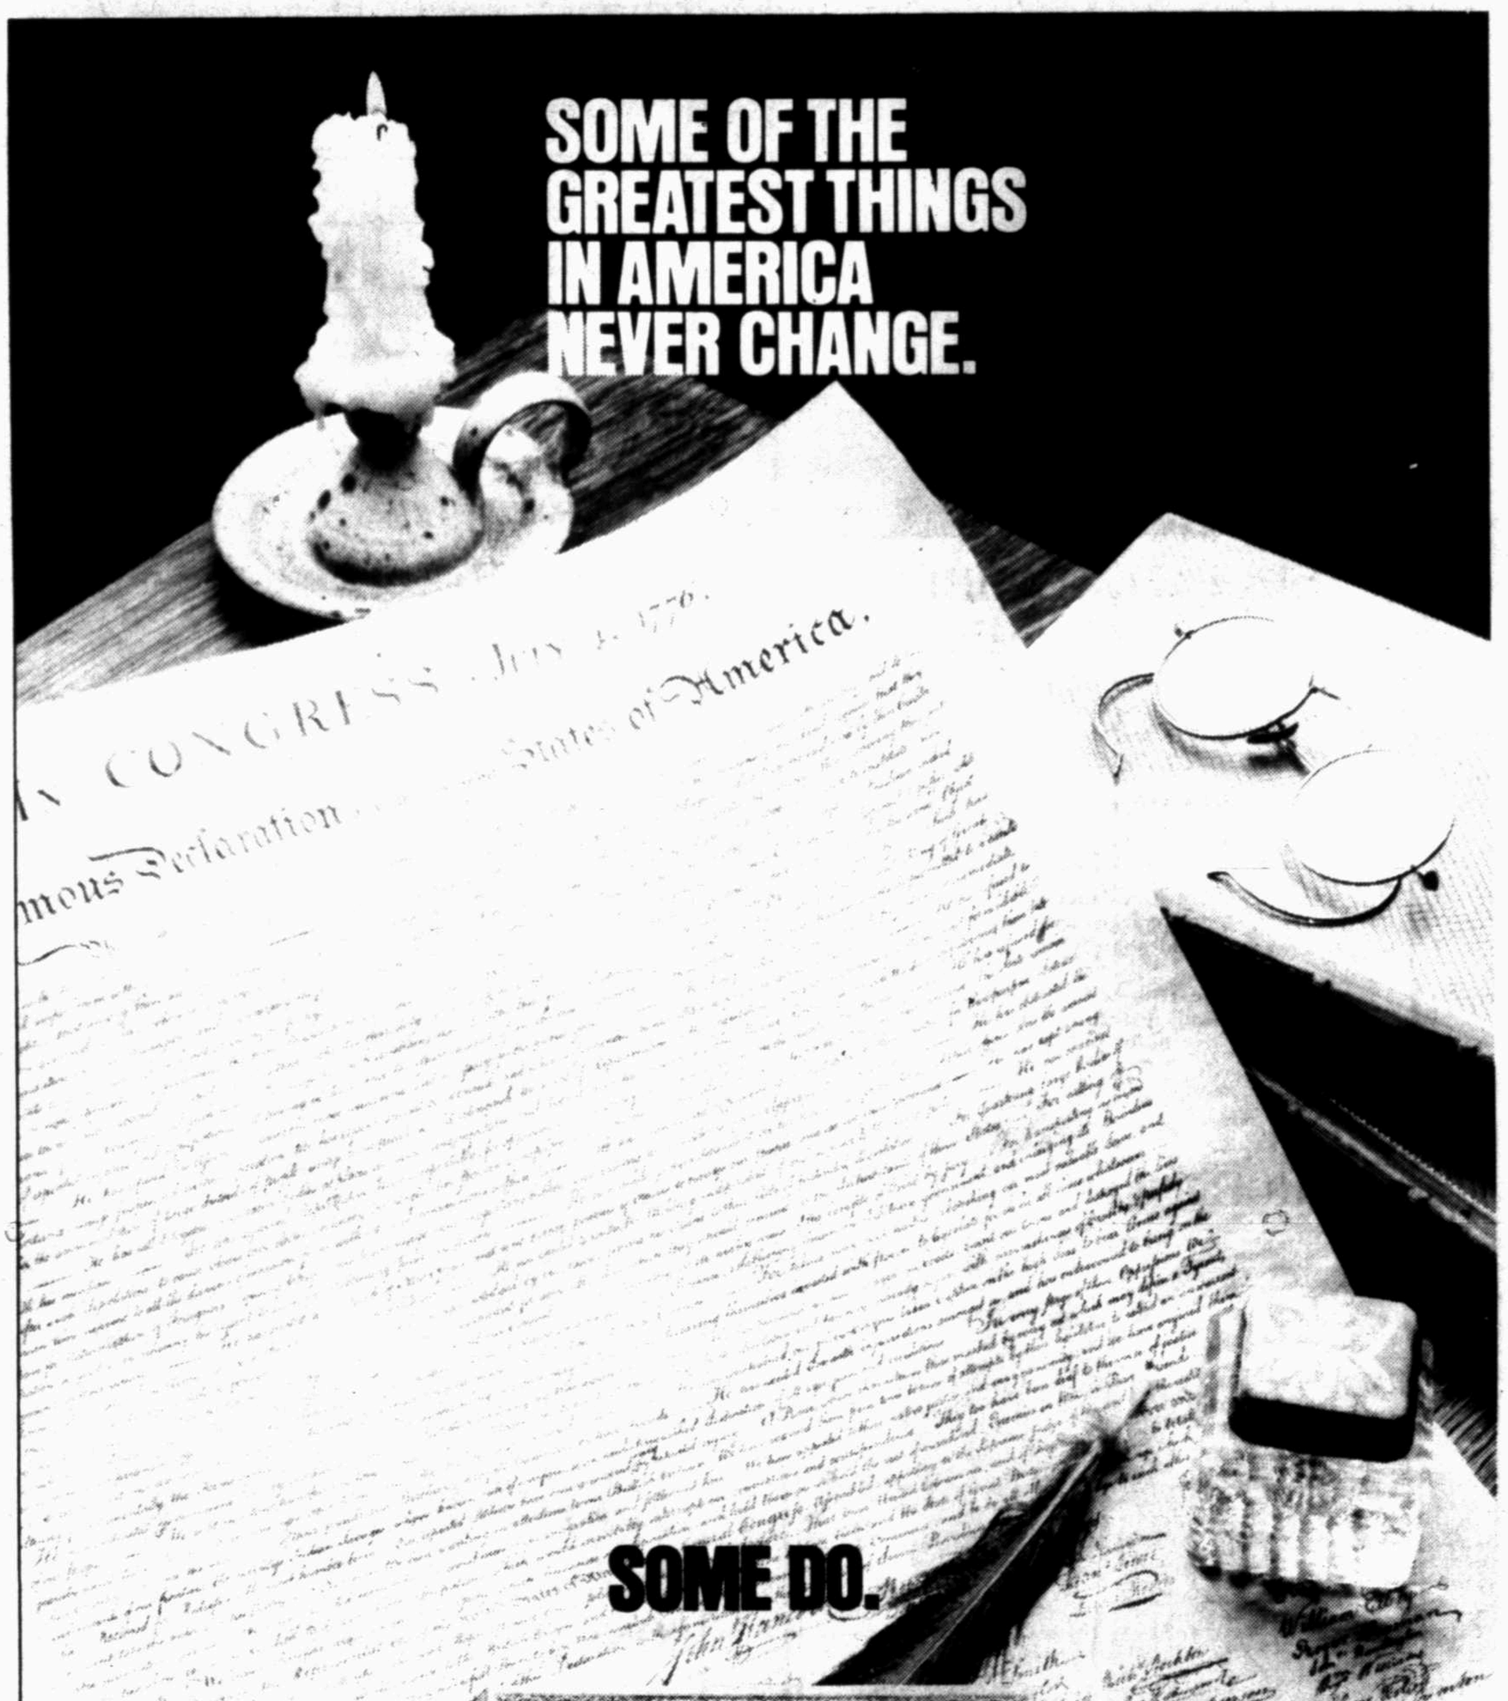

"We don't know where we'll go with this," University of Tennessee forensic anthropologist Hugh Berryman said Thursday. "We may find some very interesting things" from the head belonging to Claire Austin's family.

Mrs. Austin, who recently took the head to Memphis State University for study, said her husband's great-uncle, Archibald Marvine, brought it back from Egypt about 1850. "It just stayed in people's attics in this wonderful old hatbox. We dealt with it as a curiosity rather than a valuable artifact."

Rita Freed, director of the university's Institute of Egyptian Art and Archaeology, said the head probably dates to about 300 B.C.

"It is one of the finest mummy heads I've ever seen," she said. "The preservation is superb."

Berryman said his team of investigators may be able to determine the mummy's age at the time of death, its sex, what kind of chemicals were used to preserve it and whether it suffered from disease.

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay like money market accounts! At the current rate—10.94%—you could double your money in less than seven years.

Just hold your Bonds five years or more and get the new higher variable rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That means you can earn a lot more—but never less than 7½%. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

But some of the best things about Savings Bonds haven't changed. They're still as safe as ever. They're still exempt from state and local income taxes. And since Bonds cost as little as $25, they're as affordable as ever.

What's more, Savings Bonds remain a great way to keep our country strong.

You can purchase Bonds almost anywhere. At neighborhood banks, savings and loans and credit unions. Or easier still, through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. Today, more than 5.5 million Americans are saving the easy way—through Payroll Savings. Isn't it time you joined them? That's a sure way to appreciate how much Bonds have changed for the better.

U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying 10.94%.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS
Paying Better Than Ever

Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower interest.

UPI workers picket

By Associated Press

Workers for United Press International walked informational picket lines in at least 11 cities to protest the wire service's plan to extend a wage freeze and suspend pension contributions.

Lunchtime picket lines were up Thursday in New York, Dallas, Los Angeles, Chicago, Washington, San Francisco, Seattle, Boston, Hartford, Conn., Charleston, W.Va., and Salt Lake City. In Raleigh, N.C., legislative staffers wore their UPI lapel pins upside down.

UPI filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy law on April 28.

A cost-cutting plan unveiled Monday by UPI management would continue to freeze wages at 90 percent of August 1984 wages until Jan. 1, 1986, when wages would reach the 95 percent level. Under the current contract, raises were to reach the 95 percent level July 1.

In Washington, meanwhile, UPI Chairman Luis Nogales rescinded a $23,500 raise awarded to a top official after the official defended his pay hike in an unauthorized message to UPI employees worldwide. Two other raises are going ahead as planned, UPI spokesman Bill Adler said.

Wire Service Guild President William Morrissey, on the picket line outside the Daily News building in New York City where UPI's offices are located, said the management cost-cutting plan could give UPI $35 million.

"It's far, far too much," Morrissey said. "We're not going to give this company one more nickel."

UPI spokesman David Wickenden said an hourlong lunch-time picket line in Washington did not affect the news service's operations.

The guild said UPI officials are seeking pay raises, ranging from 16.6 percent to 33 percent, for the head of the company's broadcast division, the company controller and the vice president for special projects.

Adler said Bob Brown, whose $23,500 raise to $96,000 a year was rescinded, remains head of UPI's broadcast division but was relieved of his communications responsibilities.

He said a UPI story on the action described Brown's message to employees as "a long, rambling message that attempted to explain the salary (increase) with a bit of humor and apparently it wasn't taken that way by UPI's managers and employees, who were offended by it."

Adler said raises are still in effect for the company controller, who was promoted to treasurer and financial vice president, and the southern division manager who lost his income from commissions recently when he was named to head "a very important effort to keep all of our accounts (receivable) current."

API board members elected

RESTON, Va. (AP) — Six new members have been elected to three-year terms on the board of directors of the American Press Institute, effective July 1, the institute said.

The new members are:

A.L. Alford, Jr., president, editor and publisher, Lewiston (Idaho) Morning Tribune; John S. Goodrede, executive vice president, Ottaway Newspapers, Inc., Campbell Hall, N.Y.; Robert G. McGruder, managing editor, The Plain Dealer, Cleveland; Michael P. Metcalf, chairman, publisher and chief executive officer, The Providence Journal Co., R.I.; Burl Osborne, president and editor, The Dallas Morning News; and Franklin D. Schurz, Jr., president, Schurz Communications, South Bend, Ind.

J. Patrick O'Callaghan, publisher of The Calgary (Alberta) Herald, was re-elected to a three-year term.

FRANKLY.....
Scarlet, I don't care for those new homes. I prefer the grace, charm and elegance of the older homes. The big bedrooms and huge master give a feeling of spacious elegance. A canopy of huge trees comes only with an established neighborhood. If you want more than new can give, see this today. For details, ask for Connie Powell Tindall
