City fathers eye pay raises

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

A 10 percent raise may be on the way for city employees, nearly a third of whom are eligible for food stamps and most are paid less than the average for Texas cities of similar size.

The pay increases would be paid out of savings from elimination of overtime in January, said City Manager Lanny Lambert, who on Tuesday asked the Big Spring City Council for a five to 10 percent raise for all employees except himself. Other savings are expected with less training from reduced turnovers.

The last raise given city employees, in October 1991, was three percent.

"I think our employees are woefully underpaid," Lambert said. "That's the basic cause of all our morale problems.

"You are not saving money by not paying a decent wage," he told the council. "I would rather have better quality and less numbers."

Council members asked that a proposal be prepared for a meeting in two weeks. Some votes are already there.

"I feel like it's needed," said Councilman Mark Sheedy, who suggested a five percent raise this year and another five percent raise the next.

"My initial reaction is that we should go with the 10 percent and look at it in six or eight months," Mayor Tim Blackshear said.

Council members Ladd Smith and Charles Beil recommended additional study. The council tabled the request and asked Lambert to submit a formal proposal in two weeks.

Councilwoman Pat DeAnda said she was appalled at the number eligible for food stamps. Of 248 employees, 72 are eligible for food stamps, 29 percent, according to Personnel Director Emma Bogard.

"I don't know how many of them take advantage of that opportunity but I know some of them do," Lambert said.

"It should bother all of us," DeAnda said. "Something's wrong when you have that many eligible for welfare.

"It's an embarrassment," Sheedy said.

Low pay is virtually across the board. Salaries for all city jobs except three are lower than averages in 15 Texas cities of similar size, according to a survey presented by Bogard. Of 37 job descriptions checked, 12 are paid a 25 percent less or below.

Jobs in data processing, fire truck drivers and superintendents were as much as a third to half less. Higher than average are city's nurse, water/waste superintendent and municipal judge.

A five percent across-the-board raise would cost $85,860 from now through the end of the fiscal year in September, about what was saved in half that time by requiring employees to take compen-

BSHS academic team headed to state event

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

A group of Big Spring High School students have secured a spot in a Texaco-sponsored scholastic tournament in Waco.

Big Spring competed in a regional tournament with 19 teams in the Permian Basin Texaco Star Academic Challenge, taped at KMID-TV studios in Midland.

A game-show format was used for the tournament, testing area high school students' knowledge in numerous categories.

The April 16-18 tournament will be aired May 8, 15, 22, 29. The semifinal match will be shown June 5 and June 12, with the championship match aired on June 19.

Although Big Spring lost to regional rival, Midland Lee High School, the performance of the Big Spring team was sufficient to gain them a berth in the state competition, according to Counselor Sharion Richardson.

To help defer the $600 entry fee and travel expenses, Scenic Mountain Medical Center presented the team with a check Tuesday.

"In support of education at Big Spring High School, the Scenic Mountain Medical Center has generously donated $300 to the BSHS academic team to help defray the expenses and to help promote this academic endeavor," Richardson said. "Their contribution is greatly appreciated."

Due to the Big Spring team's impressive showing, it was chosen as one of three area teams to compete in the state championship on May 7-8.

The Big Spring team won the first round by defeating Valentine High School by a score of 320 to 45. The BSHS team was defeated in the quarterfinals by Lee, with the score being 315 to 265, Richardson said.

Participation in the state tournament is by invitation only. Only 16 teams from across the state competing in the event.

Along with BSHS and Lee, Odessa Permian High School also was chosen from this region.

The BSHS Academic Challenge team consists of seniors Jeremy Peacock and Corey Laughner, junior Viswa Subbaraman and sophomore Drexell Owusu. Alternates are seniors Joseph Soza and Colin Woodall

Council returns veteran directors to CRMWD board

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Two long-time members of the board of directors for the Colorado River Municipal Water District were reappointed by the Big Spring City Council Tuesday, but with one dissenting vote.

Board Chairman John Taylor and Clyde McMahon were reappointed to two-year terms by a 6-1 vote. Taylor and McMahon, board members more than 30 years and 20 years, respectively, are senior board members for the regional water district.

"These gentlemen have done a great job," said Councilwoman Pat DeAnda, the dissenting voter. "It's my opinion that other members would have the same influence and the same clout as these members."

"There's been a great deal of thought about the board appointments ever since I've been on the council," said Mayor Tim Blackshear, first elected as a councilman four years ago.

"It should bother all of us. Something's wrong when you have that many eligible for welfare."

City Councilwoman Pat DeAnda

Concern includes whether new members could bring a new and better approach, he said. However, it was decided that continuity was more important, especially with current programs enacted under water district Manager Owen Ivie, including a new fresh-water lake and pipeline, as well as salt pollution diversion lakes.

Needed programs in the future will probably include water conservation, said Councilman Mark Sheedy. But, he said, "We don't need to be mixing it up just now. We need to allow them to finish the race they started."

The re-appointments were made following an hour-long meeting in closed session between the council, Taylor, McMahon and Ivie. The water district board members were asked to attend following a closed session two weeks ago. Taylor, McMahon and Ivie were not asked to be at the first closed session and did not attend.

The water district, formed in the 1950s, built three lakes providing water to half a million West Texans. Other projects include diversion lakes to remove salt from water, a dam at Natural Dam Lake to prevent salt water from getting into fresh-water lakes and a cloud seeding program to induce rainfall.

Prison officials honor volunteers

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

The Big Spring Federal Correctional Institution honored more than 200 volunteers Tuesday during the second annual Volunteer Recognition Supper.

"This is done in recognition of all the services they provide for (the prison)," said John Carver, volunteer coordinator. "It's important to honor our volunteers because through all the checks that have to be executed, they are still dedicated enough to be volunteers."

Volunteers undergo extensive evaluations as a prerequisite for their admittance into the facility, including a sponsor letter and close scrutiny of their inmate relations, Carver added.

The number of volunteers at the facility has blossomed form 48 last year to the current number, he said.

The supper featured three speeches from inmates, expressing their appreciation for the services volunteers provide.

Among the services are education, recreation, religious and psychological services, as well as drug and alcohol program assistance.

"Volunteers provide a critical link for the inmate population to the outside world, as well as rendering assistance to the staff," Warden W. F. Woods stated in his appreciation letter. "At the same time, (volunteers) can take personal satisfaction in knowing you have assisted a fellow human being at a critical point in his life."

Administrative staff members in attendance were Randy Davis, associate warden of programs; D.E. Fleming, associate warden of operations; Charlie Marmolejo, camp administrator; Ken Kaz, superintendent for industries; and Chief Chaplain Harvey Simpson.

Davis and Carver presented awards of appreciation to volunteers, who serve more than 350 inmates at the facility located at the McMahon/Wrinkle Airpark on Simler Drive.

The volunteers were also joined by about 130 friends and family members.

Local businesses donated $650 in door prizes.

Out-of-towners offering help after tornado

The Associated Press

CATOOSA, Okla. — June Lock didn't have a bulldozer, a pickup truck or a chain saw to offer. All the 64-year-old woman had was her health and some free time.

She came to Catoosa Tuesday with hundreds of others to pick up trash and sort through the debris left by a killer tornado that demolished several areas in this Tulsa suburb.

"I saw all the damage on the news and could see myself cleaning up somebody's yards," Mrs. Lock said. "I brought an extra hamburger and some french fries in case someone got hungry."

She was given gloves and a trash sack, and began picking up debris along the road.

In all, more than 500 volunteers are helping clear out the debris, some taking time off work, others leaving moneymaking construction jobs.

"Some people just slip in here, do things and they're gone," Mayor Ron Berry said.

Duane Muhs admits his intentions were not the most honorable when he heard about Saturday night's tornado.

Five more Davidians discovered

The Associated Press

WACO — Five more corpses have been pulled from the section of Branch Davidian compound where investigators have found stockpiles of guns, ammunition and other debris, officials say.

Workers rummaging through a fortified room on the ground floor of the religious group's home on Tuesday located the bodies.

They were taken out later in the day and sent to medical examiners in Fort Worth, said Laureen Chernow, a spokeswoman for the Texas Department of Public Safety, the lead agency in the cleanup and investigation.

"As they remove boxes of ammunition, it's exposing more bodies and more body parts. It looks like there's quite a lot of work to be done in there," said DPS spokesman Mike Cox.

McLennan County Peace Justice David Pareya has said four of the 44 bodies removed prior to Tuesday were found inside the cinder-block structure near the center of the city-block-sized complex. Nine more bodies were on top of it.

Including the five additional bodies found there, 18 of 86 Branch Davidians feared dead were inside or near the room, authorities said.

Pareya, however, said he's not ready to conclude that those people sought shelter in the room during last Monday's inferno.

"They seem to be centered in that area, but I don't know if there's a pattern for any particular reason," he said. "The biggest contingent of bodies, in my opinion, was not near the bunker. They were scattered."

FBI officials said they had tried shooting tear gas into the room with hopes of flushing cult leader David Koresh out of the compound on the 51st and final day of the cult's standoff with federal agents.

Authorities said the congestion of bodies, ammunition and other debris is slowing their efforts. Only three or four investigators can be in the room at a time because of the waste, Pareya said.

To help sort out the mess, Doug Ubelaker, a forensic anthropologist from the Smithsonian Institution, joined the cleanup crew Tuesday.

Other factors, including heat, health hazards because of insects and a putrid smell from exploded food cans, have hampered investigators' work. Local health officials on Tuesday provided large bins to haul the food away to a landfill.

Interim U.S. Sen. Bob Krueger addresses the media as an unidentified child rides by at the Martin Luther King Center in Dallas Tuesday morning. Krueger and 23 other candidates are on the ballot for the May 1 special election to fill the Senate seat vacated by Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen.

Senate race could be key to easing judge's burden

The Associated Press

EL PASO — "Disproportionate" is the word Assistant U.S. Attorney Stan Serwatka uses to describe the federal criminal docket in El Paso.

"Unfair" is the word attorney Eliot Shapleigh uses when he notes there's only one sitting judge here to dispense with that selfsame docket and a burgeoning number of civil cases.

Both would agree the situation could be alleviated — if not entirely remedied — by the addition of another sitting judge to shoulder some of the burden now carried mostly by U.S. District Judge Harry Lee Hudspeth.

A resolution may be in sight as interim U.S. Sen. Bob Krueger searches for possible candidates to fill vacant federal judgeships in Texas, including a second El Paso seat previously approved by Congress.

There's a problem, though.

Krueger could lose the May 1 election to fill the seat left open when Lloyd Bentsen was tapped to become U.S. Treasury secretary. A loss would start the review process all over.

It would mark the second time that the elusive second judgeship came close to being filled, only to be derailed by election politics.

Last year, then-president George Bush nominated local attorney Kenneth Carr to the federal bench. His confirmation was stalled, however, during last year's elections and Bush's loss to Bill Clinton closed the door on Carr's chances altogether.

This year, Krueger has established advisory committees to screen potential candidates for Texas' 12 vacant federal judgeships, including four in the Western Judicial District, which includes El Paso. The committee reviewing candidates in the Western District is expected to meet in El Paso sometime next month.

"It will move as quickly as it can," said Bob Mann, a spokesman for Krueger in Washington, D.C.

It's all moot if the interim senator loses, though.

Yet the election's outcome doesn't matter to Shapleigh or the other members of Unite El Paso, a civic organization pushing for a second federal judgeship.

"We would go directly to whoever the winning candidate was and begin to put pressure on them," Shapleigh said.

What is important, he said, is that the push continues.

El Paso has only had one federal judge since 1917. An additional judge has been appointed to serve in the area in the past, only to move his court elsewhere in the district after serving a brief time in the city, Shapleigh said.

"If you look at the facts of federal judgeship and you look at our population (more than 540,000), it's way past due that we get another federal judge in this town," Shapleigh said.

The federal docket reflects the need.

As of March 31, the docket listed 787 pending cases. Roughly 430 of those were civil cases, according to the most recent figures available from the U.S. District Clerk.

By comparison, Midland, which has the next nearest sitting judge, Lucius Bunton, had 78 pending civil cases as of March 31. There were 21 pending criminal cases.

Bunton, who took senior status last year and will only preside over civil cases now, also covers Pecos and El Paso. He spends one week a month hearing cases in El Paso, but the load remains heavy.

"Our cases are significant and there are definitely a considerable amount of them to be handled by one and a quarter judges," said federal prosecutor Serwatka, who heads the U.S. Attorney's office in El Paso.

House tentatively OKs health insurance bill

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — A bill that aims to make health insurance more affordable and accessible to small businesses has won preliminary House approval.

The measure by Rep. Mike Martin, D-Galveston, was approved 126-13 Tuesday. It faces a final House vote before being sent to the Senate for consideration.

"This is an opportunity to move forward and for once be a leader in this country instead of being last in an area of significant social reform and social policy," Martin said. He added that only two other states have approved reform packages similar to the Texas plan.

The bill targets businesses with three to 50 employees. There are about 320,000 such businesses in Texas, employing about 1.2 million people, according to the governor's office.

Under the measure, insurers could not cancel or refuse to renew a policy once the employer is insured, providing exceptions in cases of fraud.

The bill also requires insurers to provide health insurance to small businesses regardless of the health status of employees beginning Sept. 1, 1995.

"What is so fundamentally good about this bill is if you get sick, you can't get cancelled," Martin said. "If you get cancer, they can't cancel you. If you get AIDS, they can't cancel you."

The bill requires that health insurers offer three benefits packages to small businesses. The packages consist of a preventative and routine medical care plan; one covering hospitalizations and follow-up care; and a standard plan combining both.

The measure also provides for rate restrictions, such as a 15 percent limit on increases due to health status, prior claims history or future expected claims.

Corpus Christi to display Columbus ship replicas

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards has announced that replicas of the three ships Christopher Columbus sailed to reach America 500 years ago will be permanently docked in Corpus Christi.

Richards said Tuesday that the Spanish government has agreed to turn over the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria duplicates to the City of Corpus Christi, which mounted an aggressive campaign to display the boats.

"Everyone who worked on this effort deserves a vote of thanks, especially the 50,000 Texas school children who wrote to King Juan Carlos of Spain to plead our case for the ships," Richards said.

Richards says the joint venture with the Spanish government will include cultural and educational programs, including displays of artifacts, along with the exhibit of the ships.

Richards said the ships are expected to arrive in Corpus Christi near the end of May.

Texas profs elected to Academy of Sciences

DALLAS (AP) — Three Texas professors have been elected to the National Academy of Sciences, a private organization that helps advise the federal government in science or technology matters.

Among the 60 members elected to the prestigious academy Tuesday were: C. Thomas Caskey, chief of medical genetics at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston; John Cocke, computer science researcher at the University of Texas at Austin; and David L. Garbers, professor of pharmacology at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas.

There have been 15 members elected from Texas since the academy's inception in 1863. The organization elects 60 members annually.

Richards vows veto of handgun bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards has vowed to veto a bill that would allow Texans decide whether they want to carry concealed handguns.

"The people of this state do not need to be reminded that weapons of violence produce death to innocent children and adults," Richards said Tuesday. "This legislation will only increase the level of violence on our streets."

The bill would allow Texans 21 and over to apply for a license to carry a gun. However, a provision added to the measure calls for it to be approved by voters before going into effect.

The legislation received final House approval Tuesday on a voice vote. It now goes to the Senate for consideration.

Since the bill originated this session, Richards has said she opposes it. However, she stopped short of promising a veto until Tuesday.

Appeals court denies Graham reprieve bid

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A state appeals court has refused to halt the Thursday execution of a Houston man convicted of killing a man during a 1981 robbery.

The decision Tuesday by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals sends Gary Graham's case into the federal courts.

Graham is scheduled for lethal injection before dawn Thursday for killing Bobby Lambert, 53, of Tucson, Ariz., outside a Houston supermarket.

Graham would be the 200th inmate to be executed since the U.S. Supreme Court allowed capital punishment to resume in 1976. He would be the 57th in Texas, which has executed more than any other state in that period.

Graham's conviction was based largely on the testimony of one witness who identified Graham, then 17, as the gunman.

Graham's case has drawn intense publicity from death penalty opponents, who contend he should not be executed on what they consider is weak evidence.

Hospital fighting accreditation panel

Clinton warned of hasty Bosnia move

The Associated Press

President Clinton holds up a chart while addressing the National Association of Realtors at a Washington hotel Tuesday. Administration officials have said Clinton is considering bombing strikes against Serb artillery sites and lifting the embargo on arms for the beseiged Muslims in Bosnia.

WASHINGTON — President Clinton failed to find a quick consensus in Congress for tougher steps to end the war in Bosnia amid warnings that he should go slow and that military action risks dragging the United States into another Vietnam.

Administration officials said Clinton still was considering bombing strikes against Serb artillery sites and lifting the embargo on arms for besieged Muslims in Bosnia.

The president met for about three hours Tuesday with Democratic and Republican leaders of the Senate and House. Defense Secretary Les Aspin, Secretary of State Warren Christopher, Vice President Al Gore and national security adviser Anthony Lake also participated.

"I must say, after all the work we've done on it, the members in there raised some new questions, some new issues and made some interesting arguments," Clinton said afterward. "It was a good meeting."

An administration official said Clinton did not present a preferred course of action, instead soliciting views from lawmakers.

Frustrated by the refusal of Bosnian Serbs to end a war that has left 134,000 people dead or missing, Clinton had committed himself to a stronger policy in the Balkans, promising a decision in a few days. Tuesday's meeting with members of Congress was part of the process of consulting with lawmakers and allies before announcing a new strategy.

At the Pentagon, Adm. David Jeremiah, the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, spoke of difficulties of using force — in particular limited air strikes — to end the Serb aggression.

"Hitting tanks spread out against the desert is one thing ... hitting artillery pieces hidden near barns ... schools and civic centers is another," Jeremiah said. "It is not a simple or easy thing to use air strikes against guerrilla warfare units" spread out around the countryside.

Reservations also were expressed after the White House meeting.

Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on defense, said, "There was no consensus, none whatsoever. Opinions from A to Z. I told (Clinton) to stay the hell out of there. I see it as another Vietnam."

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., cautioned Clinton not to make a hasty decision. "I don't believe in arbitrary time limits in decision-making in a matter of this importance," he said. "I think he needs to make sure he makes the right decision."

"I don't think there are easy answers to this," said Nunn, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Aspin to order air combat for women?

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Female pilots could be flying Navy and Air Force warplanes within months and Army combat helicopters within a year under a new directive set to be signed Thursday by Defense Secretary Les Aspin, Pentagon officials say.

The directive also will tell the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps to provide justification if they want to put any battlefield role, including ground combat units, off limits to women.

"It's big, it's a very big move for Aspin to be making," said one senior official, who like the others spoke Tuesday night only on condition of anonymity.

The action means Air Force and Navy women could be in fighter cockpits within months, but female pilots in the Army will have to undergo special training before flying front-line Apache attack helicopters, officials said.

Because the Marines have no women in training in any aviation unit, changes will take longer in that service.

The law banning women from warships prevents them from serving on an array of vessels ranging from small frigates to aircraft carriers.

The New York Times published the first account of Aspin's plan in its editions today and the report subsequently was confirmed by Defense Department officials.

Aspin's directive is clearly designed to upgrade the status of women in the military. It comes at a time when the Navy has suffered a black eye resulting from a 1991 convention of the Tailhook Association, a private group of pilots and other supporters of carrier-based aviation.

White sergeant draws four months in shooting

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A white Army sergeant drew four months in prison for shooting a black soldier with a grenade launcher.

Sgt. Eric Slankard, 27, was also demoted to private and fined $1,000 Tuesday. He pleaded guilty to charges including assault and battery.

He admitted he shot Sgt. Troy Scott with a smoke grenade on Oct. 14, shattering Scott's right arm. But he said he thought the grenade wasn't a live round, and he disputed Scott's charge the shooting was racially motivated.

"I consider Troy Scott a very good friend of mine," Slankard said.

Scott denied he and Scott were friends, and he claimed the shooting was retaliation for a complaint he filed after members of his unit made him the target of a mock lynching in which a soldier in a white hood held up a noose.

The unit's top non-commissioned officer was demoted and fined after pleading guilty last month to directing the mock lynching.

The Army said its four investigations concluded that the shooting was an accident resulting from Slankard's negligence. And Scott's allegations of racism weren't addressed Tuesday by the prosecutor, Capt. Michael Hargis.

Minister ticketed for loud preaching

BEAUFORT, S.C. (AP) — A minister was slapped with a $234 ticket for loud preaching in violation of the city's noise ordinance.

The citation renewed a dispute street preachers and businesses in Beaufort.

Jeffrey Blake Lindsay, 39, of West Columbia was cited Monday afternoon after a gallery complained, Sgt. Chuck Chapman said.

Last year, preachers reached an agreement with the city and with merchants to deliver their message during a 45-minute period at midday Saturdays in specified areas. The agreement was designed to keep the peace while the constitutionality of the ordinance, which took effect in 1991, was decided.

The state Supreme Court and a federal court are weighing challenges to the ordinance.

Picketing hotel workers jump, beat two tourists

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Two tourists were jumped and beaten by picketing hotel workers in an attack captured by hotel security cameras.

Sean White, 24, and his wife, Gail, 28, of Moorpark, Calif., were treated for cuts and bruises after the attack Sunday outside the Frontier Hotel.

No immediate arrests were made. But a picket line captain was cited for obstruction for refusing to cooperate with the investigation, Lt. Dennis Cobb said.

Police said the beating began after an exchange of insults about the picketing at the Frontier, which has refused to sign a union contract negotiated in 1989 with most of the city's hotels.

The video shows Mrs. White approaching the picket line after someone shouted an obscenity. She was struck in the face by a woman. Her husband then ran across the street and was hit by a heavyset man wielding a beer mug.

Several pickets then piled on, striking the couple numerous times before husband and wife got away.

Doctor warns shampoo can be cause of strokes

CHICAGO (AP) — Getting a shampoo at a beauty parlor can cause strokes in older women, a doctor warned today.

In a letter in the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. Michael I. Weintraub of New York Medical College in Vahalla, N.Y., said beauty parlors often have customers tip their heads backward over a sink, a position that can reduce blood flow to the brain.

Weintraub cited five cases of people who developed stroke symptoms after being shampooed, among them an 84-year-old who exhibited slurred speech, weakness on one side of her face and "strange behavior."

He suggested beauty parlors shampoo elderly people by leaning them forward, a position less likely to compress the arteries.

Isn't It Amazing What You Can Get For A Baseball Card These Days?

When you play Grand Slam from the Texas Lottery, you could win $1,000, instantly. If your score's higher than theirs, you win. If you don't win the first time up, try again. You have two chances to win on every ticket. So if you've ever thought seriously about collecting baseball cards, Grand Slam is definitely a great place to start.

Solutions needed to halt youth crime

It seem like crime will never leave us and the worst is when youngsters take to crime. It seems so senseless.

A recent crime wave this past weekend leaves you wondering where this country is going when teens - barely 15 and 16 years old - commit aggravated robbery, beating a female clerk eight times.

And, a 12-year-old out joyriding!

It seems the ages of our criminals keep getting younger and younger every day.

There are no easy solutions to the problem of young criminals. Education is a key element to keep children away from crime. But, it seems they are no longer afraid of authority or spending time going through the court system and jail.

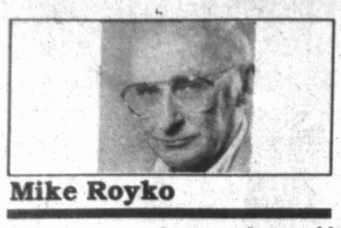

What we need to find is a way to restore that healthy respect for authority and our criminal justice system,Show these children what it really means to wind up behind bars.

Building more prisons isn't the answer. We have more than enough prisons and plenty of people to fill the cells already. That is part of the problem, because we are turning people loose before any amount of their time is served.

Community service is also a . M ing this children work to pay for the damage they hav e or face the people whom they have harmed. Sometimes, see the consequences of what they have wrought can help turn them around.

Right now, any idea is worth trying. We need to find some way to make them think twice before comm g rime.

Activist's moral judgment unnecessary

Mike Royko

Douglas Dobmeyer is a sensitive, compassionate man. That's why he devotes himself to the cause of the downtrodden by being executive director of the Public Welfare Coalition.

Recently, his sensitivity was offended when he looked through a train window as it passed through Joliet, Ill.

He saw the parking lot of a riverboat casino, and it was filled with cars.

The sight prompted him to write to this newspaper: "I suppose the (casino) owners were ecstatic, but what about the rest of us?

"There is something perverse about people crowding a riverboat to gamble in the morning when they could be doing something more productive with their money and time.

"Is that a moral judgment? Yes, it is. Riverboats and casinos are an extension of the hedonistic lifestyle that pits the well-to-do against the poor. The money that people are throwing into the pockets of the gambling interests could be better spent on economic-development projects that produce real jobs and services for people in need of jobs."

He has a point. There are better uses for money than playing blackjack or shoving quarters into a slot machine.

But the same can be said about going to Wrigley Field, Comiskey Park, the racetracks and bingo parlors and playing the lottery. Or dropping into a tavern after work for a couple of beers and some smart talk.

Actually, I could probably fill this entire page and the next with ways that people spend money that could be put to a more socially useful purpose.

But I'm not as sensitive as Dobmeyer. So my reaction to that crowded casino parking lot would be: "Hey, it's your money."

I would assume that the casino patrons — and those at a baseball game or the racetrack or a rock concert — worked for their money. So who am I to tell them how to spend it?

And they might say: "Who is this guy Dobmeyer to tell me what to do with my own money?"

If so, they would have a point. If a person works for his money, pays his taxes, supports his dependents, and wants to drop a few spare dollars at the blackjack table or in some other "hedonistic" manner, where does Dobmeyer get off hitting them with moral judgments?

Also, people who go to a casino do help create jobs. The casino hires people. These casino employees pay taxes and spend money on groceries, clothing, housing, which in turn helps create or sustain jobs for people in those industries.

And some of the casino receipts go to state and local governments, which help the community pay its bills for other needs that create jobs.

But that's not the point. If people want to spend their money on blackjack or a $100 dinner in a French restaurant, that's their money and their concern, not Dobmeyer's.

A few days ago, there was a story in the Chicago Tribuneabout the sad plight of a welfare mother.

Her apartment had burned. So she and her children were homeless and living in a motel until charitable agencies could find another apartment.

The story clearly was intended to evoke sympathy for the woman, but I suspect it had the opposite effect.

That's because the unmarried woman was only 27 years old but already had nine children.

Sure enough, I received several calls and notes about the woman.

One woman said: "If I had nine cats, people would think I was a crazy old lady. She has nine kids, and we have to support them."

Some of the callers suggested that the woman had those kids so she could get rich off welfare.

They're mistaken. The most the woman can receive is $669 in welfare payments, $833 in food stamps, and an extra $40 for having infants. That's $1,542 a month.

Does anybody want to raise nine kids — rent and 27 meals a day — on about $385 a week?

I doubt it. But does this woman's struggle and problems mean that casino patrons are engaging in something perverse, as Dobmeyer put it?

Most of them would respond: "Who told her to have them? Didn't she know how much it costs to raise nine kids? And where is the hyperactive father, and why isn't he helping support them?"

Dobmeyer would consider those questions insensitive, ignorant and cruel. His organization is devoted to increasing welfare benefits, not discouraging unmarried teen-agers from becoming parents.

For example, he thinks it's a terrible idea to require welfare mothers to get their children inoculated against disease or see their payments suspended. Instead, he says, they should be encouraged with a cash bonus.

An interesting approach: Pay someone to accept free shots for the health of their children. How about another bonus for having the kid brush his teeth?

So is it really intrusive to raise questions about careless parenting? If Dobmeyer can rap casino patrons for gambling with money they have earned, why can't someone ask this mother of nine if she is trying to get in the "Guinness Book of World Records" on their money?

Instead of rapping casino patrons, Dobmeyer might try poking a few numbers into his pocket calculator.

If each of these nine kids has nine of their own, that's 81. And if they keep up the 9-to-1 pace, in a few generations they would go from 81 to 729 to 6,561 to 59,049. That's a lot of meals, shoes and classrooms. Let us hope for restraint.

So rather than worrying about some working stiff betting $2 at a blackjack table, Dobmeyer might look at another problem. How much is nine times 59,049? I don't want to think about it.

Pippin and the grass of life

Since Pippin doesn't get to go outside by himself very often, he misses out on nibbling on grass. And, that is something he seems to enjoy very much.

I had been wanting to grow him some grass indoors so he could get his roughage but had never gotten around to it. So, this friend of mine told me about using rye to grow for cats to eat. It didn't take long to grow and her cats loved it.

So, she gave me some seeds and I planted Pippin some grass in a pot. The seeds shot up and it wasn't very long until it was several inches tall, waving around in that pot.

At first it didn't look like anything was going to come up. but, then the soil took on the look of a souffle - the seeds in the middle were pushing up the dirt and it looked like there would be a cave-in any minute.

But it kept growing and soon there was grass.

The only problem was, Pippin wouldn't eat it. He knew he would get in trouble for getting into one of my plants.

He wouldn't go near it on his own, so undoing all the training about not getting into potted plants had to begin.

When the grass was tall enough to put on the floor for him, I tried to get him to nose it. About all he would do was cut and run for the first few times.

So I took him in there, sat him by the bowl and told him it was ok. Took sticking his nose in it a few times before he completely understood what I was trying to tell him.

He cautiously nibbled on a piece, watching me the whole time. He noticed I didn't get upset and in fact, he got a pat for eating his grass.

So, he went to another piece of it and nibbled there, same reaction. So, he nibbled a circle around the bowl. And he enjoyed it.

He's been back a few times and it's fun to watch.

The first thing is to sniff out the best blade to start with, even if it means sticking your nose though the whole bowl. Then, you chew a bit of the stem off, giving a tug here and there to see if it can be uprooted. Then, choke it down and find another piece and repeat the process.

I have to smile while he eats because cats are supposed to eat meat not greens. But, I guess even a cat likes a salad with his steak.

Take a look at local bands

Editor:

Why is it that we always here the term "keep your money in Big Spring" yet seldom see it actually done. Here is a case in point:

The Cinco de May celebration is just around the corner. We are already hearing advertisements about the musical groups and bands who will be performing. It is being mentioned that there are some out-of-town bands being brought in, including one all the way from Houston.

There are a couple of fine local bands performing; however, what I haven't seen advertised is the new group "La Primera" performing. These guys are great! Their music is in the popular Tejano style and marks the times of today. They are talented musicians who hold regular full-time jobs here in Big Spring. Their talent speaks for itself, as evidenced by the packed house they had at the Howard County Fair Barn on Easter Sunday night. They have been a big smash here locally at Los Tres Amigos Club, the Fair Barn as well as in Lamesa and Sweetwater.

If we have such super talented groups like "La Primera" here in town, why spend extra money bringing in out-of-town groups who will take their money and leave town. Won't hiring local groups keep money circulating here in town? What's the deal?

Vote no on Proposition One

Editor:

A yes vote will legalize the "Robin Hood" system of school tax collection (declared unconstitutional), which resulted in a $1 billion increase in school taxes for taxpayers in 85 percent of Texas school districts last year.

A yes vote gives the Legislature - not the local school board, but the Legislature - new authority to raise local school taxes - allowing Austin to increase individuals' taxes by another $2.4 billion.

A yes vote would do nothing to improve education: no school improvements, no new math or reading programs, no higher standards, no teacher pay raises, no new anything except taxes.

Will the state courts shut down the public schools if the May 1, 1993, "Robin Hood" election fails? No! Our schools won't close any more than prisons would close in a similar circumstance. Only a liberal, locally-elected Austin judge has made the school closure threat. There are other less taxing alternatives.

Will the majority of Texas taxpayers pay dramatically higher property taxes if Proposition One passes and will the state Legislature take over authority to raise local property taxes? Yes! In fact, the Legislature could set school property taxes as high as $2.50 per $100 evaluation (the current legal cap is $1.50).

The people of Texas shouldn't be bullied into a system that doesn't fulfill its basic function of preparing young Texans to be functionally and culturally literate in our information-based society. The taxpayers of Texas must demand accountability of the education system. We should start by slashing overhead and being more cost-conscious; strengthening local control, and local financing; and instituting a "report card" for schools - a result of which would deprive schools of funds if they consistently ranked below minimum standards.

Please vote no on May 1. Remember, "Robin Hood" was a thief.

Proposition One not what it seems

Editor:

On May 1, 1993, the voters of the state of Texas are being asked to vote on three amendments to the Texas Constitution that deal with public schools. Proposition One is especially important to the citizens of Texas.

Proposition One is not about improving school finances, efficiency, or education. Instead it is about constitutional rights and tax increases. The amendment removes the constitutional prohibition against a state property tax and the redistribution of monies between different taxing authorities. It also removes the voters' right to vote to establish taxing authorities. The amendment raises the limit on the maximum school tax rate from $1.50 per $100 valuation to $1.50 per $100 valuation, an increase of 67 percent.

Does Proposition One solve the problems? No! It continues the County Education District plan that has been proven a dismal failure. Event he proponents agree that it is merely a bandaid and will not solve the school finance crisis or keep the courts out. It will not provide any more money for education; over $400 million was "lost" by schools through the CED plan.

Will schools close on June 1? No! Judge McCowan has stated that a constitutional amendment is not necessary to keep schools open. The legislature must act on the various alternatives that are available. A simple across-the-board cut of 1 percent of the state budget would raise $660 million for public schools.

The governor and the Legislature want the voters to hand over their constitutional rights along with a signed blank check. They expect us to vote for an amendment for which there is no distribution or funding mechanism in place. They say it would be too confusing for the voters. Let's show them that we are not confused, that we want to keep the few rights that we have left and vote No for Proposition One.

Ford Thunderbird equals fun

Bob Greene

A current advertisement for a car-rental company offers a weekend deal that is supposed to make potential customers salivate.

The company is offering a weekend special, featuring not just any car, but a Thunderbird. That's right — a Ford Thunderbird.

Only thing is, there's a picture of a '93 Thunderbird accompanying the ad. And the '93 T-Bird is a yawn. Nothing particularly wrong with it — it's just another bland-looking car, one of dozens of bland-looking American cars. If the advertising copy hadn't informed you that it was a Thunderbird, you'd probably have no idea.

If the U.S. car industry wants to save itself, it would be well-advised to look at this ad, and then to remind itself what things were like when people really did get excited at the sight of a Thunderbird. That feeling is what Detroit has to recapture.

For the first six years of Thunderbird's existence — the 1955 through 1960 model years — the cars were as thrilling a product as the United States could manufacture. You saw a T-Bird on the street, you knew what you were looking at. You saw one, and you wanted one.

Somehow, in the name of progress, over the last 33 years Ford has managed to make the Thunderbird all but anonymous. Who would want to rent one for a weekend? An old one, sure. The current one? Why?

"Those first Thunderbirds, there was no mistaking them," said Robert Gadra of West Seneca, N.Y., president of the Vintage Thunderbird Club International. "The slogan that Ford had for the car was 'Unique in All the World,' and it was. When you drove a Thunderbird down the street, people looked at you with envy.

"Today, a Thunderbird is just another cookie-cutter automobile, no better or no worse than any other car. If you drive a current-day Thunderbird, no one will look at the car with envy. They probably won't look at all."

At Ford headquarters, spokeswoman Della DiPietro defended the current Thunderbird, saying that the cars are selling well, and that "I think people don't buy cars unless they like the way they look." She did concede that American autos are beginning to look more and more alike.

"I saw my first Thunderbird in 1956, and I fell in love with it," said Marjorie Price of Santa Fe Springs, Calif., executive director of the Classic Thunderbird Club International. "It was the look — it looked sporty, the top came off, it had portholes ... it just took my breath away.

"I couldn't afford it, so I bought a Studebaker. The Studebaker was nice, but it wasn't a Thunderbird. So I bought a '57 T-Bird, and that's what I still have. It's peacock blue with a white top. When I drive it down the street, people give me a thumbs-up sign. You can see them thinking: 'Oh, boy.' They smile and sometimes they even clap. It makes them have fun just to see it."

That's the key word: fun. The Beach Boys sang, "And she'll have fun, fun, fun, till her daddy takes the T-Bird away." They were singing about the old Thunderbird; it's doubtful that anyone would write a song about the current model. Or, come to think about it, about any current American car.

This is not intended to knock the American auto industry. What the U.S. car business needs is helpful advice, not insults. So the advice is: What would be wrong with trying to make T-Birds exactly like the early T-Birds? Why try to improve on perfection? We wrote here the other day about how the manufacturers of Drumsticks are finding new success by going back to the way Drumsticks were made in 1953. Surely Thunderbirds are every bit as beloved as Drumsticks. If Ford made new versions of the 1955-through-1957 "Little Birds" or the 1958-through-1960 "Square Birds," their sales might go through the roof.

And Ford shouldn't be allowed to use federal gas-mileage regulations as an excuse not to do it. American engineers are supposed to be smart — so let the Ford engineers outsmart the government regulators.

It may be no coincidence that the Hammacher Schlemmer specialty catalog, as the lead item in its current issue, is offering its customers fully restored 1957 Thunderbird convertibles — for $49,000 apiece. "It has such appeal to people," said Hammacher spokeswoman Anne Barclay. "That Thunderbird makes people think of fun."

"What about the current Thunderbird?" I said.

"The current Thunderbird?" Barclay said. "Does Ford still make them?"

If Ford has any brains, it knows what to do. Well, she got her daddy's car and she cruised to the hamburger stand now ...

Congress opens cult hearings

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress is opening an inquiry into how the Clinton administration handled the 51-day siege by federal forces against the Branch Davidian cult near Waco, Texas.

Attorney General Janet Reno, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Director Stephen Higgins and FBI Director William Sessions were called to testify today before the House Judiciary Committee.

They are the government's three main decision-makers in the Feb. 28 raid of the cult compound, the subsequent standoff and the tear-gassing that preceded by a few hours the fiery end of the compound.

Sessions, in testimony prepared for delivery at the hearing, said the FBI did not understand cult leader David Koresh and that agents probably should have moved earlier to use tear gas. A copy of Sessions' testimony was obtained by The Dallas Morning News.

"Maybe we should've taken this step sooner," Sessions says of the decision to use tear gas.

"Perhaps, even with all the expert advice, we never fully understood the mind of a man who would willingly burn up his own children."

Questions likely to arise at the hearing included:

—Why did the ATF feel the need to raid the compound at all, and why did it do so Feb. 28 after knowing Koresh might have been tipped off to the plan?

—What evidence did the government have that children were being abused in the compound, what the White House has called the "ultimate rationale" for stepping up the pressure on the cult by inserting tear gas April 19?

—What advice was given by the experts on whom the FBI and Ms. Reno relied when they decided to tear-gas the compound?

—What proof is there for the government's assertion that cult members set the fire that destroyed the compound and killed an estimated 86 people, including Koresh and two dozen children?

In briefing papers obtained by The News, Higgins says agents observing the compound on the morning of the raid saw nothing to indicate cultists were preparing for an attack. The ATF has said it knew Koresh had been tipped to the raid less than an hour beforehand.

ATF agents expected to raid the compound while most of the men believed inside were working in an underground "pit" alongside Koresh, an area well away from a second-story arsenal, Higgins says.

Four ATF agents and six cultists were killed in the initial gunbattle, which erupted when the agents attempted to serve warrants on Koresh.

Higgins' briefing papers also say that ATF intelligence before the raid indicated that "only 10-12 (compound residents) were considered criminals. One-third were trying to leave."

Daughters go to work with parents

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — From the Johnson Space Center in Houston to IBM in suburban New York, employers around the country encouraged parents to take their daughters to work today.

The Ms. Foundation organized the Take Our Daughters to Work campaign to draw attention to low self-esteem among teen-age girls and to introduce them to opportunities in the working world that they might not otherwise consider.

The foundation hoped as many as 500,000 girls ages of 9 to 15 would participate.

Studies have shown that girls have lower self-esteem than boys. Advertising and social attitudes are blamed for making girls pay more attention to appearance than ability.

One study, by Wellesley College's Center for Research on Women, showed that among 230 college freshmen, 56 percent of women feared making a mistake when speaking up in class, compared with 39 percent of men.

Another study released by the American Association of University Women found that in elementary school, about 69 percent of girls reported they were "happy the way I am," but in high school, that figure was down to 29 percent.

The Ms. Foundation raised roughly $400,000 from corporate and other sponsors to promote today's event. Businesses and agencies set up activities.

The foundation helped match 2,000 girls from schools in Manhattan with 77 companies in New York. Businesses in Santa Fe, N.M., Tulsa, Okla., Spokane, Wash., and Philadelphia also set up programs with local schools.

Rebel Serbs threatening U.N. troops

The Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — As heavy shelling rocked several Muslim towns in northern Bosnia today, a British commander with U.N. peacekeepers said jittery rebel Serbs have threatened to fire on his troops if NATO bombs their positions.

The Serbian warning comes a day after tougher allied sanctions were slapped on Yugoslavia for supporting Bosnia Serbs in their year-long uprising against Muslims and Croats in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The shelling by rebel Serbs was reported today for a second day in the key Muslim stronghold of Gradacac, a besieged town in the mountains of far-northeastern Bosnia.

Bosnian radio also said five civilians were killed as Serb artillery pounded the nearby Brcko region.

It reported no new Serb advances today in the Bihac region, a pocket of Muslim villages, but said 21 Bosnian troops were wounded in shelling of Bihac and surrounding northern towns.

The Bihac region, between Serb-controlled territory in Croatia and Bosnia, is home to about 270,000 residents and refugees, most of them Muslim.

Bihac's capture would give Bosnian Serbs control over Bosnia's entire northwestern region and bring them close to their goal of controlling a large, homogeneous stretch of territory.

The new sanctions against Yugoslavia, added to weaker ones imposed last May, are aimed at forcing Yugoslav leaders — primarily the dominating Yugoslav republic of Serbia — to use their influence to stop the war.

In Belgrade, Yugoslav President Dobrica Cosic today appealed for a political settlement — "everything else would lead to an unforeseeable tragedy (and) a long and permanent war in the Balkans."

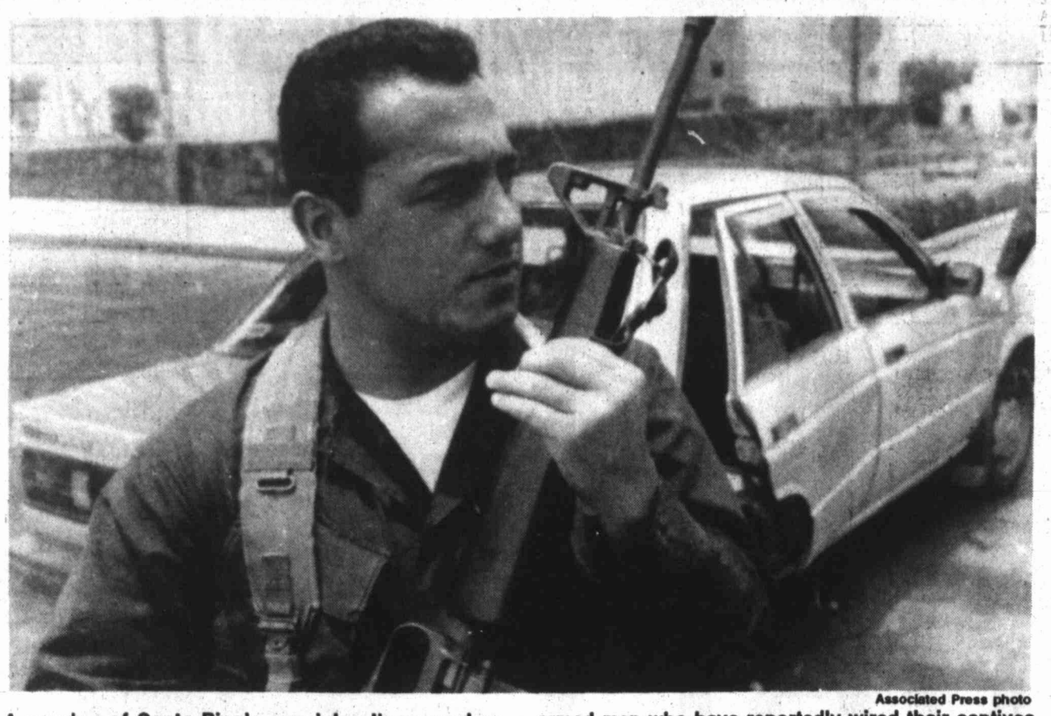

Threats of foreign military intervention against the Bosnian Serbs heated up Tuesday when Russia criticized its Slavic brethren. Past Russian support of the Serbs has added to Western reluctance to turn the sanction screws too harshly.

Said Russian President Boris Yeltsin, pledging unity with the West: "The time has come for decisive measures to stifle the conflict."

The West and Islamic powers are weary of trying to halt a war that has left 134,000 people dead or missing only to be rebuffed at the bargaining table by recalcitrant Bosnian Serb leaders.

Speaking live by satellite from British headquarters in the central Bosnian town of Vitez, Maj. Brian Watters, second in command of the 1st Cheshire Regiment, said a local Serb commander had issued the bombing threat two days ago at a meeting behind Bosnian Serb lines.

"If one NATO bomb drops on his country, he said he will launch an attack immediately," Watters told Britain's GMTV.

Costa Rican gunmen hold Supreme Court

The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — A "Commando of Death" that may be linked to Latin America's cocaine Mafia has held almost the entire Costa Rican Supreme Court hostage for three days, but appeared ready to negotiate a release.

One hostage told a reporter that the assailants had wired their captives with explosives. The four gunmen were holding 18 of the 22 Supreme Court justices and and five assistants.

The gunmen slashed their ransom demand from $20 million to $8 million and asked for safe conduct to Brazil, which has no extradition treaty with Costa Rica, officials said Tuesday.

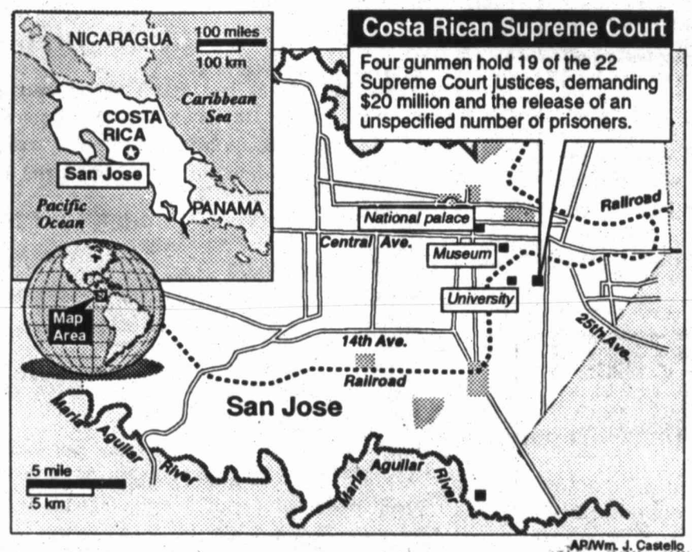

The gunmen had demanded that their requests be met by 3 p.m. Tuesday, but after the hour came and went, they set a new deadline of 1 p.m. (3 p.m. EDT) today.

The lowered demands "indicates to us that we are in the process of negotiation. We hope we can improve on it," Public Safety Minister Luis Fishman said Tuesday.

The group's leader was identified late Tuesday as an employee of the justice system, and authorities said he borrowed the weapons used in the raid from an unsuspecting police officer.

Costa Rican and Colombian officials have speculated that the four men who stormed the Supreme Court building Monday have connections to Colombia's Medellin cocaine cartel and are seeking release of four cartel members being held in Costa Rica.

Colombia said it was sending anti-terrorist specialists to Costa Rica, and Colombian President Cesar Gaviria conferred by telephone with Costa Rican President Rafael Angel Calderon.

In Bogota, the Colombian capital, a relative of one the four jailed Colombians told reporters they do not want to have anything to do with the kidnappers.

Fishman identified two of the gunmen late Tuesday as Guillermo and Gilberto Fallas, brothers and Costa Rican citizens. Gilberto Fallas, who calls himself "Charlie," is the leader of the group and works for the judiciary's Department of Prisons.

Fishman gave no information about the other two. But Radio Monumental said a third gunman was also Costa Rican and the fourth was a Colombian named Cristino Alvarez, whose son, Eduardo Alvarez, was one of the four Colombians arrested in a cocaine bust Sept. 28.

There was no independent confirmation of the radio report.

Rafael Guillen, the judicial police chief, said Gilberto Fallas drove to a Rural Guard post on Monday and borrowed the weapons used in the assault on the courthouse, saying he wanted to do some target practice. Guillen did not specify what kind of weapons were involved.

Greivin Moya, a journalist with Channel 7 television, spoke for 15 minutes with Chief Justice Edgar Cervantes on the negotiators' open line on Tuesday.

He said Cervantes sounded shaken when he reported that some hostages had been wired with explosives. Cervantes also said explosives were placed in the building.

The four gunmen, who called themselves "The Commando of Death," seized 24 people on Monday.

Undeterred by loss, Communists renew battle with Yeltsin

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Undeterred by their loss in a leadership referendum, hard-line lawmakers renewed their battle with Boris Yeltsin today by reviving corruption allegations and accusing him of making secret deals on Yugoslavia.

They also took aim at one of the president's main economic goals: Privatization of Soviet-era industries.

The new offensive from anti-Yeltsin legislators fulfilled predictions that Sunday's nationwide referendum would not end the political skirmishes that have plagued the government for months.

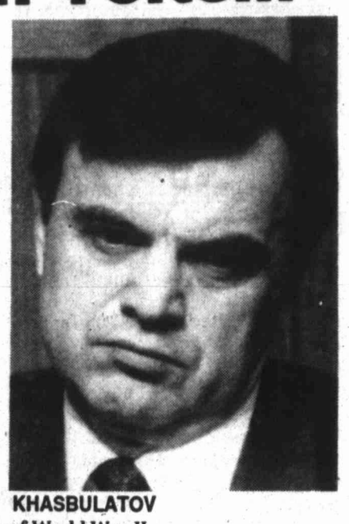

Official returns have confirmed Yeltsin's victory in the vote on his leadership and economic policies. But Yeltsin failed to get enough support to call for early elections in an attempt to unseat the Communist-era lawmakers who remain his most vehement foes.

Yeltsin, meanwhile, has revived two foreign policy initiatives that had angered Russian nationalists and were put on hold before the referendum.

First, he issued a sharp warning Tuesday to militant Serbs in the former Yugoslavia, despite howls of protest from lawmakers who consider the Serbs to be ethnic and religious brethren.

Although he stopped short of endorsing Western military intervention, Yeltsin warned that Russia "will not protect those who stand in the way of peaceful accord. ... The U.N. will stand against Serbian nationalists and any other warring parties who are gambling on force."

Yeltsin also pushed ahead with plans to visit Japan, ignoring hardliners who fear he may agree to give back four islands that the Soviet Union seized from Japan at the end of World War II.

KHASBULATOV

Yeltsin's arch-foe, speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov, told the Supreme Soviet legislature today he suspects Yeltsin made a secret deal on Yugoslavia with President Clinton at their April 3-4 summit in Canada.

"There is plenty of information that there was an agreement that Moscow will sanction anti-Serb actions," Khasbulatov said. "This is very alarming."

The Supreme Soviet also asked another Yeltsin opponent, Vice President Alexander Rutskoi, to expand corruption allegations leveled against the administration on the eve of the referendum.

The accusations are vague, but they center on claims that high-level officials have illegally profited from Yeltsin's reform programs.

The Supreme Soviet is the standing legislature of Russia's Congress of People's Deputies. The Congress, a holdover from the Soviet era, is dominated by former Communists who have tried to block Yeltsin's reforms and erode his power.

Briefs

Burmese prisoner recovers from ailment

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Burma's most prominent political prisoner, Aung San Suu Kyi, is recovering from a health problem, according to a statement distributed by her husband.

Her husband, Michael Aris, who visited Suu Kyi during a trip to the Burmese capital of Rangoon from April 8-24, said he was optimistic that "there is nothing that cannot now be corrected by proper nutrition and perhaps some medication." He did not specify his wife's ailment.

The statement from Aris, dated Monday, was sent Tuesday by fax to The Associated Press by the Oslo-based Norwegian Burma Committee, which provides support to Burmese pro-democracy groups. It was reprinted from an interview Aris gave to the Norwegian newspaper Dagbladet, the council said.

Suu Kyi, 47, has been under house arrest in Rangoon since July 1989. She won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1991 for her non-violent opposition to the junta.

Israeli ministry sets limits on interrogation

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Justice Ministry statement setting limits on interrogation techniques serves as implicit acknowledgement that there is some basis to complaints about the methods used against Palestinian suspects.

The guidelines released Tuesday bans interrogators from exposing suspects to extreme heat and cold or depriving them of water, food and toilet facilities.

The Justice Ministry statement summarizes a legal brief presented last week by the Shin Bet, Israel's internal security agency, to the Supreme Court.

The brief replies to an appeal by the Committee Against Torture, an Israeli group, against the 1987 Landau Commission, which permitted "moderate physical pressure" against Palestinians suspected of involvement in terrorist attacks.

Russian reactor fire quickly extinguished

MOSCOW (AP) — A fire broke out in the ventilation system of a nuclear reactor in southern Ukraine, but it was quickly extinguished and posed no radiation danger, ITAR-Tass reported.

Nobody was hurt, and there was virtually no damage to the Zaporozhye power plant, where the reactor was located, the agency said.

The reactor was under repair Tuesday when the fire started, apparently because a workman left a greasy rag in a ventilation tube, ITAR-Tass said.

The incident occurred the day after Ukraine, Russia and Belarus marked the seventh anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, which killed at least 32 people and sent a radioactive cloud across Europe.

Former Polish leader charged with deaths

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's former Communist president was charged with ordering soldiers to fire on shipyard workers protesting hikes in the price of meat in 1970. At least 25 workers were killed.

Jacqueline Bigar - Horoscope

FOR THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1993

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Remain consistent and clear with a loved one. It will take all your ingenuity and energy to get past a problem today. Tread with care around a power play. Tonight: Make light of a bad situation. **

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Tension is high as plans change quickly today. You might question what is happening at a distance. You can be sure of one thing: You are not getting all the information. Be careful of exaggerating your fears. Tonight: Vanish to the homestead. **

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Use kid gloves when dealing with a stubborn associate today. A misunderstanding could be exaggerated. Be more positive about your direction. Tonight: Do some reassessing. **

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be careful dealing with partners today, as you might be more upset than you realize. Examine your choices. Listen to a higher-up and make the most of an opportunity to express your side. Tonight: Count on it costing. **

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You hear some news today that could be absolutely frustrating. Check it out carefully, since it could affect your work and cause stress. Be more aware of your image and how others view you. Claim your power. Tonight: Wherever you are, you beam. ***

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A misunderstanding could occur between you and a partner. Look to greater fulfillment, but count on less support than you originally anticipated. Tune into your strengths and do some serious soul-searching. Tonight: Take a night off. **

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Understand just how much you have to offer. Zero in on what you want. A friend is there for you. Be more creative when dealing with a partner who is confused as to what you expect. Tonight: Hang out with friends. ***

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be more in touch with your image today. Do not exaggerate a misunderstanding. Be careful how you handle a loved one, who might have more clout than you think. Eliminate the unnecessary and make your day less frantic. Tonight: Don't overexert yourself. **

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be more in touch with your feelings today. You might be confused about a money-making scheme. Be more tuned into your abilities, energy and creativity. Tonight: Escape to the movies. ***

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Reach out for another and get important feedback. You might want to check out an investment more carefully. Listen to a friend who has more expertise than you. Tonight: Dance the night away. ***

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Others are dominant, and you might question exactly what to expect. Be careful as to how you verbalize your concerns, since a misunderstanding could be brewing. Know another means well. Enjoy your newfound popularity. Tonight: Play with friends. ***

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be more open to feedback from a friend, even if you find the information confusing. Choose a conservative financial path. Your ability to communicate is highlighted. Tonight: Work, work, work. ***

IF APRIL 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You'll be wanting to produce on a high level in the year ahead, as your creativity will be tested to the maximum. Be aware that you need to find an outlet for your nervous energy. Make plenty of time for relaxation and stress reduction. Work will flourish, as long as you stay "clear." You'll get a special professional opportunity this year. You'll flourish emotionally in the winter, when those of you who are single are likely to become attached. Home life will carry exceptional significance. LEO cares.

Dear Abby - Letters...

Opinions differ on child discipline

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter about the divorced father who slapped his 14-year-old son across the cheek for calling him a nasty name. I say, "Hurray for Dad!" I would have slapped the kid, too — and after he called me a nastier name the second time, I would have made him drop his trousers and warmed his butt with my leather belt. —ANOTHER DAD

DEAR DAD: That's where you and I part company. Responding to a teenager's disrespect with violence teaches him that violence is the only response.

However, I do think there is an age, and a time, when a swat on the rear is appropriate. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in reference to the letter signed "Lucky Father" who gave his 8-year-old son's behind a whack in public. Hooray for him for taking responsibility for his son's unacceptable behavior. One quick swat on the butt does not constitute child abuse. Just ask my 3-year-old, as he has received a few on various occasions, and in no way has he ever been abused.

There are times (always in public) when all reasoning, politeness and bribes are ineffective to a child who is throwing a tantrum. There are also times when removing the child from the scene is not an option. One swat is usually the last resort ... and it usually works. — DIANE IN PHOENIX

DEAR DIANE: Much to my surprise, my having approved of one solitary whack met with violent disapproval from my readers. I felt that one whack on a small behind did not constitute child abuse. My readers felt otherwise.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: I can emphatize with Mrs. Dow, who was called "Mrs. Doe," "Mrs. Dowd," "Mrs. Dowdy" and "Mrs. Downey."

Try the name "Self." We have had mail sent to us as "Elf," "Sels," "Fels," "Pelf," and our son, whose name is Brian Self, actually received a package in the mail addressed to "Brain Cells"!

We get a laugh out of all these variations on our name. Having a sense of humor helps. — LYNN SELF IN BOTHELL, WASH.

DEAR ABBY: Can you handle another fractured name? My son changed his address, and telephoned a department store to inform it of the change. When asked what his middle name was, he said "Stephen — with a p-h."

Sure enough, his next bill was addressed to "Mr. R. Pheven Angle." — RUTH ANGLE, SHELTON, WASH.

Lung experiment has astronauts

The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Columbia's seven astronauts were barred from using the shuttle urinal for about an hour Tuesday because of a problem with the waste water tank.

Engineers believe an expandable, accordion-like device in the tank became stuck. The device, or bellows, uses nitrogen to pressurize waste water and force it overboard through a nozzle.

Until pilot Terence "Tom" Henricks could hook up a backup system that reroutes the liquid from the toilet to one of two large, rubber-lined, storage bags, Gemar said the astronauts — all men — could use it only for fecal waste.

Police

The Big Spring Police Department reported the following incidents:

- Shots were reportedly fired on the 1500 block of east 4th Street.
- Shots were also reported fired on the 100 block of Airbase Road.
- $100 damage to a rear vehicle window was reported on the 300 block of Tulane.
- $1,200 worth of tools and other items was reported stolen on the 800 block of Magnolia.
- Ivan Justin Speer, 17, of Big Spring was arrested on local warrants.
- Kenneth Paul Conway, 32, of Big Spring was arrested on local warrants.
- David Lee Spears was released from the city jail.

Sheriff

The Howard County Sheriff's Office reported the following incidents:

- Rudy Joe rodriguez, 30, of Big Spring was arrested on local warrants.
- Roderick Arthur Fair, 26, of Big Spring was arrested and charged with driving while intoxicated.
- Justin Ivan Speer, 17, of Big Spring was arrested and charged with theft of service.

Tornado

Oak in Latimer County, realizing there was money to be made from scores of homes that needed repairs.

"They told me they weren't looking for contractors. They were looking for help," Muhs said.

So he went back home and got it, leaving behind construction projects on a motel and a house in McAlester. He brought two employees and two operators to drive the bulldozer and backhoe.

All are on the clock at his expense. He expects to be out about $5,000 by the end of the week. He couldn't wait to get started.

"Anyone who can walk away from this and not want to lend a hand isn't much of a human being," Muhs said.

Maureen Gullickson sorted through damaged pictures, toys, limbs and insulation. A native of Minnesota, she had never seen the destruction of a tornado first-hand until now.

"If it had gone on the other side of the interstate, all this could have happened to me," said Mrs. Gullickson, 28. "Because it didn't, I'm able to come over and help. I live too close not to do anything. I'll probably stay four or five hours, and if needed, I'll be back again."

Jim Higgins is the volunteer coordinator of the volunteers. His parents' construction and trucking companies have stopped their work to lend a hand. He has written the names of volunteers on yellow legal pads to keep track of where they are, and to thank them when the job is done.

"People have shown up from as far away as Kansas," Higgins said. "They just show up and say 'What can I do? Where do you need me?' And it's amazing some of things they bring."

Stores have donated ice chests, drinks, and gloves. One company donated a solar generator.

Three Payless Cashways stores in Tulsa sent 15 employees to help clear debris, and the stores converted delivery vans into dump trucks.

Greg Phillips, a Dallas-based sales representative for Dewalt Industrial Tools Inc., was paying a call to a Payless Cashways store Monday when he heard about the destruction from the tornado.

By noon Tuesday, he had set his van up outside the high school and laid power drills and saws on a table for whoever needed them.

"I just decided this was where I needed to be," he said. "Then I called the company kind of after-the-fact and mentioned it to them. They're all for it."

sation time off instead of overtime pay, Lambert said. Those savings could fund a 10 percent raise.

Other savings could result from reduced training by keeping good employees who often leave for better paying jobs in other cities, and thousands of dollars could be saved in training. In the past six months, half a dozen police officers have left for jobs in other cities and at least two firefighters made similar moves.

Food and fitness

Diet, exercise linked to overall health

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

A common misconception about maintaining adequate health and weight are that skipping meals in the place of exercise causes weight loss, a local fitness expert said.

Roy Green, director of the Harold Davis Fitness Center at Howard College, said a person who skips meals to lose weight is actually causing weight gain.

"When a person starts skipping meals, their metabolism slows down," Green said. "When it slows down, the body thinks it needs to save energy for later, so it starts storing more fat."

Green added that a researched exercise regiment and proper nutrition control the negative or positive impact on a person's health.

"What you eat is what you are. If you have a lot of fat in your diet, you're going to be fat," he said. "A person must eat the right things like low-fat foods, lots of fruits and juices, and he or she must have some form of exercise.

"You can't have one without the other."

Re-evaluating one's lifestyle to include or improve eating and exercise habits is more than just saying you're going to do it, Green said.

A person must carefully plan, including determining their body type before deciding the level and type of exercise they will perform, he added.

"People don't make plans when they look at their fitness," Green said. "Most people don't know where they're at when they start to work out."

If a person is planning a trip, they find out about the reservations, get a ride to the airport, figure out where they are going to stay; all before they go on their trip, Green pointed out.

"A person should determine their metabolism, what body type they are genetically, their percentage of body fat," Green said. "It's an individual thing."

For some walking is the best exercise, and for others running may be an ideal routine.

"Walking is one of the best things," he said. "It's not how fast, but the distance."

Along with physical fitness, what a person eats can determine maintenance of his or her energy level and fat intake, Green said.

"Most people look at fitness from the outside in, when they should be looking at it from the inside out," he said. "A person should use a common sense approach: three meals a day with healthy snacks in-between."

Meals should consist of low-fat foods, he added.

"If you eat a heavy meal, it gives you a heavy feeling," Green said. "Foods that are low in fat don't put extra fat on you, and they fill you up."

Breakfast is the most important meal. "If you don't 'break' that overnight 'fast' by having the first meal of the day, your body tells you it's got to store up more energy, and then you gain weight."

Green added, "The things that are killing us today can be controlled by two things: exercise and nutrition. It is crucial that you have to have both components in maintaining a healthy lifestyle."

Original pasta dish will make May month of culinary delight

Sue Haugh

The month of May is almost upon us. May got its name from Maia, the Roman goddess of growth. How appropriate - in May come the flowers that the April rains promised.

May Day, occurring on the first day, originated in England in the 16th century. The young at heart would rise before dawn and gather flowers from the woods. At sunrise they would decorate doors, windows and a Maypole which was set up in the village square. They would fashion a crown of flowers for a local beauty who was proclaimed Queen of the May. Today, in contemporary American life, these traditions still survive when young girls leave flowers at a friend or loved one's door and when some communities celebrate May first with the crowning of a May Queen.

Lily of the Valley is the May flower and Emerald is its gem.

Now for some gastronomical history.

Pasta is the Italian word for "paste," which in culinary usage describes an alimentary paste made from semolina wheat flour and water. Pasta is a rich source of complex carbohydrates and provides B vitamins and iron. Enriched pastas contain some protein, thiamine, riboflavin and niacin with appreciable amounts of calcium, phosphorus and potassium.

It is recommended that pasta be cooked al dente. Translated, al dente means "to the bite" or "to the tooth." Unadorned pasta simply tossed with fresh vegetables or a rich tomato sauce is a dish fit for company. However, we Americans tend to sabotage the regimen of the conscientious diner with pasta dishes heavily laden with sauces made from high-fat and high-sodium ingredients.

The Italians are amazed at the enormous platefuls of spaghetti we Americans serve as a main course. In Italy they serve a small portion of pasta as a light first course, followed by a light entree with a salad, fruit and cheese as a classic meal. At one sitting, Americans eat more pasta than Italians do.

Recently we visited with our son Brian and his family in San Antonio during Fiesta week. Our daughter-in-law, Cherrie, prepared the following absolutely marvelous pasta dish. She agreed to share her recipe with my readers, so I have fondly named it Cherrie's Fiesta Fettuccine. It is my hope you will enjoy it as much as we do. Cherrie used a dry Red Chili Fettuccine in her recipe. One could substitute egg or spinach fettuccine or a combination of both if the Red Chili is not available.

• • • •

CHERRIE'S FIESTA FETTUCCINE

12 oz. fettuccine, cooked al dente, rinsed in cold water and drained
4 ears fresh corn, boiled and cut off ear
2 avocados, diced
1 green bell pepper, diced
1 yellow bell pepper, diced

SALSA
1/2 cup corn oil
Juice of 2 limes
1 small red onion, diced
1 clove garlic, minced
1 jalapeno pepper, diced
6 Roma tomatoes, diced
3 tbsp. fresh cilantro, chopped
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. black pepper

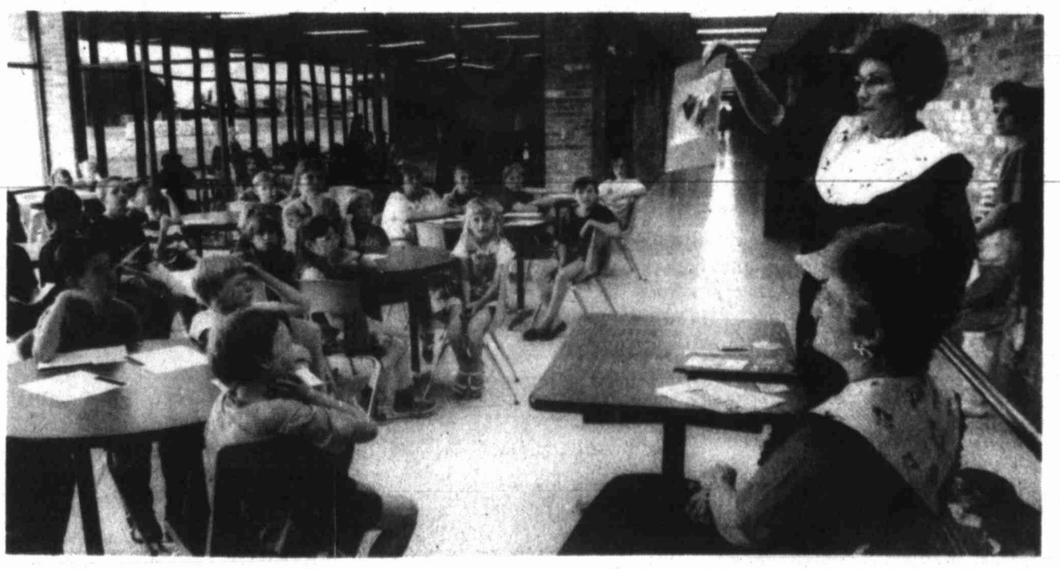

Whisk together oil and lime juice. Add next 7 salsa ingredients. Mix well and set aside.

In very large bowl toss together fettuccine, corn, avocado and peppers. Pour salsa mixture over all, toss again until well blended. Serve at room temperature. Serves 6.

Season swims with suits for all shapes, sizes

By PATRICIA CORRIGAN
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Bodies of water traditionally have welcomed bodies of all sizes and shapes slipping in for a few laps or wading forth in the surf.

Some minds, from time to time, have tried to convince some bodies they are the wrong size or shape to experience the pleasures of playing in water, but most people suit up and jump in, regardless.

Swimming suits always do well in my shop," says Cynthia Geitz, owner of Cynthia's, a large-size shop in St. Louis with prices for swimwear ranging from $65 to $90.

"When a customer finds a good quality suit with a good fit in a nice style, she buys it," Geitz said. "I sell swimwear year-round. There is always someone in the store who is going on a cruise or on a vacation to a warmer climate, or someone taking water exercise classes who needs a new suit."

The new suits are downright feisty — no more tasteful black or dark blue tank suits.

Polka dots, stylized Egyptian prints, rowdy florals, seashell motifs, metallic jewel tones and more are on the racks in turquoise, red, gold, purple and hot pink.

Customers can find blouson suits, suits with skirts, boy-leg shorts, high-cut legs, suits with lots of cleavage or suits with substantial coverage. Some suits feature underwire bras, some have built-in bras. Some have tummy control panels, some do not.

One store even offers a modest two-piece for large-size women who have made peace with midriff bulge — or wrestled it into submission at the gym.

Even the simpler suits have pretty scalloped necklines or decorative buttons.

What's old is new in swim styles

By BECKY HOMAN
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Fashion themes that are in the swim are animal prints, nautical colors, tie-dye looks and eye-popping brights of turquoise, purple and fuchsia.

And that's just what the kids are wearing.

Swimsuits for moms and other fashionable women this summer feature those options plus the grown-up trends of suits in sleek black velvet, in frisky suede-like fringe, in sexy, sheer insets and all topped, if swimsuit cover-ups are warranted, with see-through crochet.

Perhaps newest for women is the oldest look of all: skirted suits based on what an Esther Williams might have worn in the 1940s or '50s. In fact, a new line is called Esther Williams. But everyone from Calvin Klein to Anne Cole is featuring retro styles for the younger woman or for the young at heart.

And the skirted suits are, indeed, new.

"That's really, I think, been a big focus from all of the lines," says Ellen Adams, manager of Margaret's swimwear and lingerie store in Clayton, Mo. "The skirted and dress-style suits are kind of fitted to the body, not like the old-style skirts. They're figure-conscious suits this year, like a skirted tank, almost. And they look young."

Adams says swimwear makers aren't immune from copying adult styles for the kids' market. It's happening more and more these days.

Police tips to protect yourself from crime

By The Associated Press

Crimes against women are on the rise — but they can minimize their chances of becoming a victim by using some of the same self-defense strategies that work for policemen.

The first step in avoiding danger, Joe Dacy II wrote in an article in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, is being aware of it. Be alert to your surroundings and keep a check on situations that seem chancy. If you sense trouble, keep your guard up — suspicions often are correct.

Following are other suggestions:

— Scan your surroundings. Walk briskly, keep your head up and your manner confident. Your demeanor and carriage could encourage — or discourage — a would-be assailant. Before going through a door or entering an elevator, look to the right and left. When getting into a car, check the interior.

— Be suspicious of strangers. Don't let appearances deceive. You may have no reason to fear a man passing through a parking lot, yet his presence should trigger a "yellow alert." Assume hostile intent — it could save your life.

— Keep your distance. When a policeman questions someone on the street, he usually stands about 6 feet away from the suspect — giving himself a few extra seconds to respond in case of attack. Give yourself a safety zone — try to keep 12 feet away from anyone who seems a threat.

— Don't act like a victim. If approached by a stranger, don't run — immediate flight can set off a stalker's attack response and could trigger a sociopath's attack.

Cash's new album manifests pain

The Associated Press

Rosanne Cash describes the songs she writes as messages from her subconscious about her future.

Even though her groundbreaking "Interiors" album was viewed widely as a document of her crumbling marriage to fellow musician Rodney Crowell, Cash insists she didn't realize that when she wrote it.

"The first review I read that said that, I think was Robert Christgau in the (Village) Voice and I was surprised," she said. "And then I went, 'uh, oh.' I took a harder look at myself and it was kind of a self-fulfilling thing. I find that happens a lot in my writing."

If that's the case, her music heralds better times for the 37-year-old Cash.

She's moved from Nashville to New York City, where she's always wanted to live, and just released a new album, "The Wheel." It represents the light at the end of the dark tunnel of "Interiors."

From an opening line that evokes waking up from a bad dream to the climactic "Fire of the Newly Alive," Cash tempers her emotional torment with stirring songs about rebirth.

"It's quite a relief, actually," she said. "The time period around 'Interiors' — the record itself and tour — was such an intense period of my life. I'm happy not to do that anymore. This record, and this time in my life, has more emotional balance, more spiritual balance, more peace."

"Interiors" marked a turning point both personally and professionally for Cash.

After several albums produced by Crowell, Cash produced the record herself. Her intensely personal songwriting style matured to the point where listening became almost voyeuristic.

On a video of a live performance after "Interiors" was released, Cash told how her mother read a review of the album and called to ask if there was trouble between her daughter and Crowell. Cash reassured her that things were fine.

Cash said she meant it at the time.

"I didn't know my marriage was in trouble," she said. "I didn't know it in a conscious way. It was interesting. My writing knew it and somewhere I was deeply disturbed."

That same video featured Crowell guesting on a couple of songs, eyeing his then-wife with love and trepidation. "I guess we were kind of naive," she said.

"It didn't hurt our relationship," she said of the album. "It documented some parts of our relationship and drew inspiration from some parts of our relationship, but it didn't hurt it."

The "Interiors" album came out in 1990 and the couple was divorced in 1992.

Cash said it's far more draining to hide her emotions in her songwriting than it is to put up a false front to protect an image. She most admires artists who reveal something of themselves in their work.

"It's a commitment to truth. I can't do anything else. If I started to do anything else, I hope someone would slap me around," she said, laughing.

"The Wheel," like "Interiors," has drawn some worshipful reviews. Entertainment Weekly described it as "an intensely spiritual and ultimately uplifting album ... about making life choices and sticking with them even as you're hounded by doubt and uncertainty."

The title song and the romantic "Sleeping in Paris" were the first two songs Cash wrote after completing "Interiors."

"I was struck by how elemental this album really was," she said. "It really leaned toward alchemy — all of the references to fire and water and rivers and moons and the wheel itself. It's about transformation but is ultimately about very earthy things."

Cash, who sings about her new hometown on "Seventh Avenue," also moved her career, in effect, to New York City.

The daughter of Johnny Cash and a consistent country chart hitmaker during the 1980s, she no longer is marketed by Columbia Record's Nashville, Tenn., staff.

"I think I lost a lot of people on 'Interiors,'" she said. "But it's OK. I almost felt up until 'Interiors' that my career kept getting in the way of my work."

The problem with her hit records was that she kept having them, she said, only half-joking.

"I built this career and once you do that, there's a certain pressure to keep going and keep it up and make records," she said. "And sometimes I didn't want to make records. Sometimes, I had just had a baby and hadn't written anything but I was pressured to go in and make a record anyway — to just keep going.

"It was like I was on a treadmill. I finally stopped and wrote 'Interiors.' I felt in a way like I had made my first record, that I had started over from a place that I totally wanted to be in."

Aerosmith gets political with 'Get a Grip'

By LARRY McSHANE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The topics for today are censorship, presidential politics and the right to vote. Our guests: Steven Tyler and Joe Perry of Aerosmith.

No, this is not "Wayne's World." (First clue: This is a newspaper, not a television.) And yes, these two know what they're talking about. Aerosmith — better known for its attitude than its aptitude — has brought its rock 'n' roll viewpoint out of the studio and into the open in recent years.

There's the anti-censorship award the band received this year from attorney Alan Dershowitz for funding a controversial art show.

There's the outrageous "Rock the Vote" ad they did before the 1992 presidential election, complete with whipped cream and a giant condom, encouraging voter registration.

There are the food-bank shows, the benefit for battered women, their unlikely 1990 hit single about child abuse, "Janie's Got a Gun."

Now there's a new album, "Get a Grip," the band's first since 1989's multiplatinum "Pump." The first single, "Livin' on the Edge," deals in part with the Los Angeles riots.

So what about its, guys? Aerosmith, out-of-control party band of the '70s, new role models for musicians in the '90s?

"I've had enough of rock 'n' roll," Tyler joked in an interview from Boston. "We did enough damage in the '70s, and now it's time to get socially relevant."

To quote Wayne and Garth, "Not!" Which explains some of the other tracks on the new album: "Flesh," "Shut Up and Dance," "Fever," "Eat the Rich." It's more of what you'd expect of the band whose success gave way to excess before a late '80s comeback.

"You don't want to do too much. We try to stay out of politics, stay out of that stuff," explained lead guitarist Perry. "But you bring elements of what you know into your art. You bring in your feelings."

'Quantum Leap' stumbles, Bakula leaps to new show

By JENNIFER L. STEVENSON
St. Petersburg Times

Scott Bakula can sing, dance and even tumble through time, but the real question is: Can he leap into a new television series?

He will have to do just that. NBC officials confirmed last week that one of their most innovative shows, "Quantum Leap," has taken that high dive to extinction; it will not be in the fall lineup.

It's no surprise. The quirky time-travel drama is expensive and has suffered a rating slump for some time, despite efforts by fans who besieged the network with thousands of supportive letters.

The final blow probably came last week when the episode was ranked third in its time slot, behind "Rescue 911" and "Full House" — even though the network heavily hyped the clever episode in which time traveler Bakula leaped into the body of a young Elvis Presley.

Bakula, who starred on Broadway before landing the role of scientist Sam Beckett in 1989, impressively covered some early Elvis songs, including "Blue Moon of Kentucky," sounding almost like the King himself.

This Thursday's episode (8 p.m. EDT), in which Sam appears to leap into his own body, will be "the last of the series," says Margo Ninberg, the show's press representative. "It's sad. I've already received a call from one of the 'leapers.'"

It's all rather ironic.

In the series, as veteran "leapers" know, Sam continually bounces back in time to save people from harm.

What the series needed was just such a time traveler who would leap in and work some magic — say, Roseanne Arnold making a guest shot or Seinfeld telling a joke.

HC battered but not out of WJCAC race

Steve Reagan

Howard College baseball coach Brian Roper can be excused if he sounds like a man who just survived a three-car pileup.

All last week, Roper was warning anyone who would listen about the Hawks' series with New Mexico Junior College. Sure, Howard was in first place in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. Sure, NMJC was third, four games back of the Hawks.

But Roper eyed the NMJC series with trepidation. He compared the talented Thunderbirds to a powderkeg, just waiting for the right time to explode.

The right time came last weekend.

The T-Birds thoroughly manhandled Howard. Not only did they sweep the Hawks, they 10-run ruled them in every game. When the debris was cleared, the linescores read 30-9, 10-0 and 13-3, all in favor of NMJC.

That, faithful readers, is a car wreck.

Roper said that Friday's 30-9 slaughter set the tone for the whole weekend.

"As a coach, that was the worst defeat I've ever taken," Roper said. "They scored nine runs in the first inning and never stopped. The wind was blowing about 45 miles an hour straight out. Everything they hit up went out – and if it didn't go out, we couldn't catch it."

It seemed like the classic case of one team doing everything right while the other couldn't do anything correctly. New Mexico, which came into the series with a .382 team batting average, did nothing to hurt that statistic, banging out almost 40 hits in the three games.

Aiding the T-Birds' domination was a sudden case of the stone-hands on Howard's part. In the three games, the Hawks committed 12 errors.

This is not to say that an absence of errors would have reversed the outcome – the way New Mexico was hitting the ball it is doubtful that the Rangers could have beaten them – but Howard surely didn't help its own cause.

Things didn't get much better Monday, either, as the Hawks committed four errors en route to dropping a doubleheader to Texas Tech's junior varsity. That makes five games in a row that the Hawks – now 38-16 – have lost.

"We just found ways to lose," Roper said of the losses to Tech's JV. "We haven't lost two games back-to-back since the first series of the year, and now we've lost five in a row.

"Right now, I'm really concerned," he added. "We're in a big-time slump. Everything we hit was with a wet newspaper ... We just didn't seem to have any fire (Monday)."

Nobody is conducting funeral services for the Hawks just yet. With a conference record of 12-6, they are still in second place and in the running for a spot in the state junior college tournament. But there is a concern that Howard's season – which has been so remarkable up until now – is starting to slip away.

"We still have a shot at the conference championship," Roper said. "Just because it's a battle, I don't want anyone to lay down."

Odessa College currently leads the conference with a 16-5 record, with Howard second at 12-6 and New Mexico third at 14-7.

As it stands now, the Hawks must win at least two games in their weekend series with Odessa College to remain in the hunt for the state tournament. If Howard can accomplish that and sweep Frank Phillips next week – and if NMJC sweeps New Mexico Military – Howard, Odessa and New Mexico would end up in a three-way tie for first.

And that's when things would get difficult.

Roper said if the three clubs end the season tied, a power rating would be used to determine the two conference representatives in the state tournament. The first factor – head-to-head matchups – would be inconclusive because the three teams would own the same records. The second factor – records against the next-best team in the conference – would favor Howard and Odessa, leaving New Mexico as the odd man out.

Of course, Howard could make things easy on itself by sweeping Odessa this weekend at Jack Barber Field.

Steers secure hold on 1st place

Kennedy's three-hitter gives Big Spring 3-1 win over Andrews

By MIKE BUTTS
Sports Editor

Big Spring continued its mastery over District 3-4A baseball teams Tuesday at Steer Park with a 3-1 win over Andrews. And after the game winning Steer pitcher John Kennedy and Andrews coach Joe Ray Halsey offered some explanation for Big Spring's success.

"They're able to relax and play a little bit," said Halsey, whose team fell 1 1/2 games behind the first place Steers. "We're just too tense in a few situations."

"We (didn't) put any pressure on ourselves," Kennedy said. "We were just going to go out there and play."

Big Spring has apparently relaxed its way into another playoff appearance. The Steers' win over Andrews (7-2 in district, 18-7 overall) assured Big Spring (9-1, 14-7) of at least a tie with Lake View for second place and playoff qualification.

Kennedy three-hit the Mustangs and struck out nine to get the complete-game win. And the Steers took advantage of three walks in the fourth inning to break a 1-1 tie with two runs.

If Andrews was tense, that's understandable. The two teams came into the game with 1/2 game separating them at the top of the district standings. With the season winding down - the Steers have two more league games to play - Tuesday's contest probably decided the district championship.

"I think it really helps us to come and win a game like this, especially after a loss to Fort Stockton (Friday)," Steer coach Bobby Doe said. "It showed character in these kids."

Big Spring took the lead when Mustang starter and loser Jason Matthews (6-4) lost his control in the fourth inning. At that point he had given up one run on two hits and walked none while striking out five. But in the fourth he ran the count to three balls on five straight batters.

Matthews, a senior fastballer, struck out Brandon Rodgers and Trey Terrazas after loading the count on both to open the inning. He then walked Ricky Gonzales, Brandon Hamblin and David Akin to load the bases.

Rudy Madrilas relieved Matthews and Matthews went to shortstop where he bobbled Pat Martinez's ground ball to score Gonzales. Mike Ross then hit a high bouncer up the middle that Matthews and second baseman Vincent Dominquez couldn't get to, scoring courtesy runner Michael Sizenbach for the Steers' 3-1 lead.

"We made some crucial errors in the infield," Halsey said. "Those were some tough chances but they were ones we usually make."

Starting second baseman Xavey Emiliano slapped Kennedy's first pitch of the game between third and short for a hit. He later scored on catcher Hamblin's passed ball for a 1-0 Andrews lead. But after that Kennedy shut Andrews down on only two hits.

He faced only four over the minimum number of batters in the last six innings. Emiliano got to third on a fifth-inning single, a sacrifice and a passed ball. But Kennedy got Heath McBeth to hit into a forceout at second to end the threat.

"He kept us off balance," Halsey said. "He's a good pitcher. He threw enough off-speed stuff and we didn't handle it."

Big Spring evened the game at 1-1 in the bottom of the first when Todd Parrish drove in Pat Martinez with a single. The Steers ran frequently in the early going and ran themselves out of chances to score. They stole five bases in the first three innings, but also had two runners picked off.

"We knew they had real good pitching (so we) were trying to be real aggressive base running, trying to make something happen," Doe said. "(But) they made the good plays on us."

The Steers don't have a game scheduled until May 7 against Monahans here. They close the season May 11 at home against Sweetwater. Doe said he will call Midland Lee and Abilene Cooper today to see if they're interested in playing Tuesday.

Upsets could mark first round of playoffs

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

Half of the NBA's eight first-round playoff series pair teams that split their season series, offering the promise of competitive games and possible upsets.

One of the 2-2 splits involved Chicago, the No. 2 seed in the Eastern Conference, and Atlanta, the seventh seed. That series also features the NBA's leading scorers, Michael Jordan and Dominique Wilkins, who both averaged well over 30 points against each other during the season.

The best individual matchup, however, could be between power forwards Shawn Kemp of Seattle and Karl Malone of Utah. The SuperSonics and Jazz also split their season series 2-2.

The other two series that had 2-2 splits during the season are Portland and San Antonio in the Western Conference and Cleveland-New Jersey in the East.

Here's a capsule look at the first round, with the projected winner of each best-of-5 series:

EASTERN CONFERENCE

No. 1 New York vs. Indiana

Season Series: Knicks won 3-1.

Key Players

Knicks: All-Star center Patrick Ewing leads a strong front line with forwards Charles Oakley and Charles Smith and reserve Anthony Mason. John Starks is the main scoring threat behind Ewing. Pacers: Reggie Miller is one of the best outside shooters, All-Star Detlef Schrempf is an all-around talent and Vern Fleming was a late-season spark in place of injured starter Pooh Richardson. Dale Davis provided much-needed rebounding help. Rik Smits is inconsistent at center, but has had some strong games recently.

Outlook

New York, which leads the NBA in scoring defense and shooting percentage defense, hasn't been to the conference finals since 1974, and it's difficult to see it falling short this time. Smits would need to have a monster series against Ewing to save Indiana. The Pacers are relatively tough at home, but New York had an NBA-best home 37-4 record, including 20 straight victories at Madison Square Garden.

Prediction

Knicks in 4.

No. 2 Chicago vs. No. 7 Atlanta

Season Series: Tied 2-2. Key Players

Bulls: Michael Jordan matched Wilt Chamberlain with his seventh straight scoring title and is the world's most dangerous player when a game is on the line. Scottie Pippen, hobbled by an ankle sprain, is a perennial All-Star and combines with Horace Grant and Jordan to provide the nucleus of a formidable defensive setup. Hawks: Dominique Wilkins is second only to Jordan as a scorer, Kevin Willis is a top rebounder and improved scorer and Mookie Blaylock is the best point guard Atlanta has had in years.

Outlook

Jordan averaged 34.8 against the Hawks, Wilkins 32.8 against the Bulls. The series will be decided by who's the toughest down the stretch of close games.

Prediction

Bulls in 5.

No. 3 Cleveland vs. No. 6 New Jersey

Season Series: Tied 2-2. Key Players

Cavaliers: All-Stars Brad Daugherty, Mark Price and Larry Nance all were fighting injuries as the season ended, but are expected to return. Nets: Kenny Anderson and center Chris Dudley are out and Drazen Petrovic and Bernard King also have been troubled by injuries. Derrick Coleman almost had to carry the load alone in recent weeks.

Outlook

The Cavaliers, despite the late-season injuries, won 11 of 12 games to finish the season. The Nets lost 10 of 11. Enough said.

Prediction

Cavaliers in 3.

Tech JV takes two from HC

LUBBOCK – Texas Tech's junior varsity swept a doubleheader, 3-2 and 5-4, from the Howard College Hawks here Monday.

The losses, Howard fourth and fifth in a row, drops the Hawks' record to 38-16 for the year.

Four errors in the doubleheader hurt the Hawks, head coach Brian Roper said.

In the opening game, a throwing error led to the winning run in the bottom of the fifth. Ryan Roberts (6-4) took the loss in the opener, while Artie Valdez (1-1) was the losing pitcher in the nightcap.

"We got pretty good pitching," Roper said. "I thought Matt Higgs, Artie and John Major looked particularly sharp. We also played pretty good defense, except when it counted."

The Hawks return to action Friday and Saturday when they host a three-game series with Odessa College. Friday's game begins at 1 p.m., while the Saturday doubleheader begins at noon. All games are at Jack Barber Field.

Biggio's first RBIs give Astros 9-2 win

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Craig Biggio went 3-for-4 and tripled in his first two RBIs of the season for Houston as the Astros downed St. Louis 9-2. Biggio singled to start a four-run first inning and hit a two-run triple in the fourth for a 6-1 lead. He began the game with no RBIs in 69 at-bats.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

PIRATES 6, BRAVES 2

ATLANTA — Knuckleballer Tim Wakefield survived 10 walks while pitching into the 11th inning as Pittsburgh beat Atlanta.

The winning run scored in the top of the 11th when Braves relief ace Mike Stanton made a throwing error on a sacrifice bunt by Wakefield, allowing Carlos Garcia to score from second. Wakefield scored on Jeff King's two-out single to left and Orlando Merced followed with a two-run double off Stanton (0-1).

MARLINS 4, REDS 3

CINCINNATI — Cincinnati left fielder Cecil Espy misplayed Dave Magadan's liner into a three-base error, allowing Florida to score the winning run.

ROCKIES 11, CUBS 2

DENVER — Andres Galarraga hit a two-run homer to highlight a six-run fourth inning and Butch Henry pitched a complete game for Colorado.

Galarraga's 464-foot shot to right-center field, on the first pitch from reliever Jose Bautista, capped the highest-scoring inning in the expansion team's short history.

Jerald Clark started the uprising with a double and scored on Henry's single past a drawn-in infield. Eric Young followed with another single and Daryl Boston hit a two-run double to the base of the wall in left-center field.

PADRES 4, EXPOS 1

SAN DIEGO) — Andy Benes held Montreal to four hits in 8 1-3 innings to notch his fourth straight victory. The win was San Diego's seventh in 10 games.

Benes (4-1) took a no-hitter into the seventh inning, but Moises Alou led off with a double to the right-field corner.

Hentgen 3-hits Texas, Key shuts out Angels

By The Associated Press

TORONTO — Pat Hentgen held Texas to three hits for eight innings Tuesday night and the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Texas Rangers 4-3 for their fourth straight victory.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Hentgen (3-1) gave up two runs, on Dean Palmer's homer in the second inning. He walked none and struck out four.

Duane Ward relieved to start the ninth and Julio Franco homered with one out. Franco became the first right-handed hitter to homer off Ward in 170 games since Tom Brunansky connected on Sept. 29, 1990.

Ward finished for his eighth save in eight chances.

YANKEES 5, ANGELS 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Jimmy Key pitched his second career one-hitter, giving up only a single in the sixth inning, and the New York Yankees beat California, stopping the Angels' six-game winning streak.

Mike Gallego hit two homers in a game for the first time in his major league career and Bernie Williams and Danny Tartabull also connected in New York's third straight win.

ATHLETICS 7, RED SOX 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Mark McGwire hit two long home runs and Ruben Sierra and Lance Blankenship got home runs on balls that glanced off outfielder's gloves, leading Oakland over Boston. The Athletics ended a four-game losing streak and sent the Red Sox to their sixth straight loss.

Bobby Witt (1-0) pitched six innings and Goose Gossage worked two scoreless innings for his first save since 1991 and the 309th of his career.

MARINERS 4, INDIANS 0

SEATTLE — Chris Bosio, making his first start since pitching a no-hitter, gave up a single to start the game and was later injured, but wound up the winner in Seattle's victory over Cleveland.

Bosio's bid to duplicate Johnny Vander Meer's 1938 feat of consecutive no-hitters lasted all of one batter when Kenny Lofton led off with a single.

Coahoma tops Ozona for 6-2A win

By STEVE REAGAN
Sports Writer

COAHOMA – Perhaps the Coahoma Bulldogs looked at the Ozona Lions and saw themselves two years ago: a young team in its first year of organized baseball, struggling to be competitive.

If the Bulldogs did experience a bit of deja vu, however, they did't show any sympathy toward the Lions, as Coahoma totally dominated Ozona, 18-5 in District 6-2A action here Tuesday.

Coahoma spotted its guests a quick 2-0 lead, then used big innings in the second and fourth to steamroll the Lions. Coahoma improved its record to 9-6 overall, 1-1 in district play, while Ozona fell to 1-6, 0-1 with the loss.

A 14-hit attack, led by Jeff Phernetton's five RBI performance, made Brandon McGuire (4-2) an easy winner. Phernetton was two-for-four from the plate, including a three-run homer in the fourth inning.

Coahoma coach Doc Rowell said the Lions looked like a first-year team.

"They're young," Rowell said. "We're young, too, but we have some seniors and a couple of years experience that they don't have – and we know what that's like."

In the top of the first, however, it was the Bulldogs who looked like the inexperienced rookies. With runners on first and second and no outs, McGuire's pickoff throw to second eluded second baseman Brian Ruiz and bounced all the way to the centerfield wall, allowing both runners to score for a 2-0 Ozona lead.

Coahoma quickly regained command in their half of the first. Steven New led off with a double and scored on Jay Bingham's single to right. Bingham then stole second and scored when Bryan Sledge reached on an error. Ruiz and Phernetton added another pair of runs with back-to-back doubles, making the score 4-2 heading into the second.

For all practical purposes, the game ended in the second, when Coahoma sent 10 batters to the plate, scoring six runs on four hits and an error.

McGuire, meanwhile, overcame his shaky first inning to keep the Lions in check. For the game, he allowed three hits and three earned runs while striking out 10 and walking five.

"I'm proud of the way the kids got after it today," Rowell said. "But we need to cut down on our mental mistakes."

The Bulldogs return to action a week from Friday when they host district leader Wall. Game time is scheduled for 4:30 p.m.

NBA

No. 4 Boston vs. No. 5 Charlotte
Season Series: Celtics won 3-1.
Key Players
Celtics: Only Robert Parish remains as a key player from the Bird-McHale-Parish triumvirate that was nearly always good enough for a finals berth. The real keys for Boston are Reggie Lewis, Kevin Gamble, Xavier McDaniel and Sherman Douglas. Hornets: Larry Johnson is an All-Star in his second season, Alonzo Mourning had a stellar season as a rookie in the shadow of Shaquille O'Neal, and Kendall Gill, whose future in Charlotte is uncertain, is dangerous.
Outlook
Both teams are hard to figure. Boston finished the season by going 9-0, 0-5, 6-1. Charlotte was 22-19 at home and on the road. But Boston has the homecourt and has been here before.
Prediction
Celtics in 5.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

No. 1 Phoenix vs. No. 8 Los Angeles Lakers
Season Series: Suns won 5-0.
Key Players
Suns: Charles Barkley was one of four clear MVP candidates, but he got plenty of support from Dan Majerle and fellow newcomers Richard Dumas and Danny Ainge. Kevin Johnson is injured and is expected to miss the first round. Lakers: A.C. Green and Sedale Threatt have been the most consistent players, but a strong series from James Worthy is their only hope.
Outlook
KJ's absence was hardly noticed for 33 games. The Lakers' appearance in the playoffs will be hardly noticed.
Prediction
Suns in 3.

No. 2 Houston vs. No. 7 Los Angeles Clippers
Season Series: Rockets won 4-0.
Key Players
Rockets: Hakeem Olajuwon was magnificent all season, separating himself from the sudden abundance of strong NBA centers. Otis Thorpe, Robert Horry, Kenny Smith, Carl Herrera and Matt Bullard had solid seasons as role players. Clippers: Danny Manning made his first All-Star team. Ron Harper and Mark Jackson had solid seasons.
Outlook
Houston had the best record in the league after the All-Star game, but few believe it had the best team, especially after season-ending losses to Dallas and San Antonio that could cost the Rockets homecourt advantage in the second round. We'll find out how good Houston really is later on, but not in this series, even with Vernon Maxwell out with a broken wrist.
Prediction
Rockets in 4.

No. 3 Seattle vs. No. 6 Utah
Season Series: Tied 2-2.
Key Players
Sonics: Shawn Kemp was an All-Star at midseason, but got in coach George Karl's doghouse when he slipped. Seattle can't afford Kemp being dominated by Karl Malone or for Gary Payton to be dominated by John Stockton. If Payton and Kemp can hold their own, the Sonics' depth should prevail. Jazz: Jay Humphries, Tyrone Corbin and Larry Krystkowiak are the veterans acquired to help Stockton, Karl Malone and Jeff Malone find a way to win in the postseason.
Outlook
The Sonics are seen by many as a threat to the Suns. But Utah, a perennial playoff disappointment, has the veterans to pull an upset. Karl has been playing mind games with starters Kemp and Derrick McKey, a strategy that could motivate them or backfire.
Prediction
Jazz in 5.

No. 4 Portland vs. No. 5 San Antonio
Season Series: Tied 2-2.
Key Players
Blazers: Clyde Drexler has been in an out of the lineup with hamstring problems, and he hopes to be ready. Terry Porter, Rod Strickland and Mario Elie have played well at guard in his absence and Cliff Robinson has emerged as the NBA's best sixth man. Spurs: David Robinson, who has slipped in the second half as San Antonio fell from first place in the Midwest, must dominate Portland inside. Sean Elliott, Dale Ellis and Avery Johnson need to be consistent.
Outlook
These teams have met in the playoffs before, with Robinson either injured or unable to exploit his advantage at center. With or without Drexler, the Blazers are playing better than the Spurs.
Prediction
Blazers in 4.

NBA may issue real fines next season

Jim Litke

The cost of everything else is up, so why not the cost of attitude adjusting?

NBA commissioner David Stern could be forgiven for thinking that way, but that's not the point of this latest exercise. Tired of the brawls that have made for NHL-style headlines and WBA-style photo ops, Stern will convince the league's Board of Governors today to make every punch thrown during a game a little more expensive than it used to be. More to the point, the new meter will be up and running in time for this weekend's playoffs.

"There will be increased penalties down the road. And eventually, we'll take a look at a few of the underlying causes of the fighting ... the jabbering, the crowding in the lane.

"But for right now," one NBA insider said, "it looks like heavier fines coming down more than anything else."

This might not seem like much of a deterrent, or the kind of news leak to which you'd mind your name affixed. And unless we're talking increases of a few hundred percent (and we're not), it's easy to imagine the rich and cynical members of pro basketball's ranks — not to mention the Charles Barkleys of this world — greeting the announcement with a smirk. Or to imagine them saying, as Barkley did after paying $20,000 for trying to adjust Bill Laimbeer's attitude (and face) a few years back: "I make $3 million; so what's a few thousand dollars."

But that's precisely the attitude that Stern is planning to adjust, and the fines are nothing more than a first step, an attention-getter, if you will. Anything more drastic at this juncture of the season would play havoc with the teams' competitive balance. But by the time the league's competition committee finishes tinkering in the offseason, there's likely to be a much costlier structure of fines, quicker and longer suspensions and a policy of dealing much more severely with repeat offenders. The $3,500 punch is going to become a thing of the past.

Everybody likes a bit of carnival in the middle of a game now and then. The problem is that it's getting hard to tell the one from the other. The NBA coffers — and we're talking billions now — rakes in most of its money by selling high-flying and not-collecting fines for low blows; by selling the Bulls' Michael Jordan walking on air and not Knicks' coach Pat Riley being dragged across the floor in an expensive Italian suit trying to break up a fracas. The problem right now is that both are making the highlight films.

Nobody knows this better than Stern, who rehabilitated the NBA's image once and is dead serious about refurbishing it again in time for the league's showcase event. And he also knows that all the fines in the world won't replenish the money that goes out the door if fighting stays in. Anyone who doubts that has only to look at the direction that Gary Bettman, once Stern's understudy and now commissioner of the NHL, is steering pro hockey.

Last week, during a mostly off-the-record talk with sports editors from around the country, Stern grimaced regularly when the discussion turned to the wave of fights and flagrant fouls since the All-Star game.

Any number of past and present players and coaches have said this year is no different than last — especially if you overlook last year's Knicks-Bulls playoff meeting — but the numbers generally say otherwise. At last accounting, 13 players had been suspended for at least one game and contributed mightily to the almost $300,000 in fines assessed this season. In the 1991 season, 96 players got tagged for flagrant fouls; this year, that number was exceeded in March, thanks largely to the infamous New York-Phoenix brouhaha that, counting the fines both clubs contributed, raised a total of $160,000 for the players' favorite charities.

When that March 23 incident was raised by his visitors, Stern said quietly but confidently, "It won't happen again."

Don't doubt him.

After the aforementioned Mr. Barkley chased a referee down the hall in Madison Square Garden in January, the imperious one got slapped with a $10,000 fine, but more importantly with a one-game suspension. Barkley spent the evening in a sports bar thinking about how the loss in that one game he missed might have cost the Suns the homecourt advantage.

Hard to believe, but his name was missing from the list of the 21 players fined after the Knicks-Suns free-for-all. This attitude adjustment thing just might work after all.

This Sunday in PARADE

The postman can't answer questions about medicine.

When you have us fill your prescription, you can talk with someone about it who can answer your questions. Order through the mail and you can't. And that's not good.

Being here when you need us is just another way we show you every day that we care about you and your health.
