Vote Awaited By Italy's Politicians

ROME (AP)—Italy's politicians held their tongues Saturday waiting for the country's 34 million voters to have their say Sunday in general elections testing the popularity of the left-leaning government.

The candidates—more than 5,500 for 315 Senate seats—had no choice. The law silenced them, giving Italians a Saturday of quiet reflection before going to the polls.

Voters have two days to cast their ballots, Sunday and Monday. The counting of ballots will not start until the polling stations in the country's 60,472 election districts close.

Premier Amintore Fanfani appeared confident that the outcome would endorse his coalition led by Christian Democrats and backed by Marxist Socialists whose symbol is the same hammer and sickle the Communists use.

Throughout 70 days of campaigning, Fanfani's government had been the key issue. The campaign closed at midnight Friday.

But party workers were still busy—quietly. They hurriedly voters on the streets and rang doorbells. They passed out pamphlets and phoned their friends.

A half-million election workers checked arrangements in polling stations in schools and hospitals. Paper ballots were distributed. Italy has no voting machines.

Another half-million police went on election duty.

There has been no indication the election would result in a major upheaval. The parties that back Fanfani won two out of three votes in the last general election in 1958.

His Christian Democrats then got 42.2 per cent of the popular vote. His coalition allies, the Republicans and Democratic Socialists, obtained another 6 per cent between them. The Marxist Socialists, who do not belong to the government, but support it, won 14.3 per cent.

Air Defense Curbs Slated

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Pentagon has announced the alignment of air defense facilities which will result in shutting down four direction centers and more than a score of manned and unmanned radar sites.

Five of the radar sites are in Texas.

The realignment is aimed at achieving the best means of affording an effective defense against the long range bomber threat, the announcement said.

Blast Rips Rocket Propellant Plant

ROCKET CENTER, W.Va. (AP)—An earthshaking explosion heavily damaged a rocket propellant plant Saturday.

Three men were presumed dead, and 10 others were injured.

The explosion at the Allgany Ballistics Laboratory shook the ground six miles away, shattered windows as far away as four miles and lit up the pre-dawn skies. It also caused a fire but this was controlled quickly.

More than nine hours afterward, a search had not turned up the bodies of the men presumed to be dead.

They are still missing and it is presumed they will not be found alive," a company spokesman said. "There is not much hope."

Those missing were identified as Earl Ludwigsen, 29, Oakland, Md.; David L. Wright, 27, Westernport, Md.; and Chester L. Kenner, 27, Midland, Md.

Four of the injured were released from a hospital after treatment. Of the other six only Dennis L. Yalder, 23, Cumberland, Md., was in serious condition. He complained of pain in his right shoulder and right leg.

The thunderous blast occurred in a building used for processing chemicals, destroying that building and several large trailers used in the plant.

There were no deaths or injuries in the area half-mile in radius.

Three miles away, 12 to 15-foot steel beams twisted, like pretzels, said a newsman at the scene.

But party workers were still busy—quietly. They hurriedly voters on the streets and rang doorbells. They passed out pamphlets and phoned their friends.

DEBRIS SCATTERED — Parts of the building and equipment were left scattered over a wide area after the Friday afternoon storm roared across the Clyde South farm.

WIND SHOWS POWER — This farm building which was used as a tool shed on the Clyde South place at Camp Springs caught the brunt of frisky winds late Friday afternoon.

Rain, Hail, Wind Rake Snyder Area

Wind, hail and punishing rains swept across most of Scurry County Friday afternoon, bringing needed moisture and causing some damage.

Hardest hit by strong winds was an area near the Scurry-Fisher County line. Two farm buildings were demolished and a trailer was heavily damaged on the Clyde South place at Camp Springs.

There were reports of other damage, mostly to outbuildings on farms in the Camp Springs and Hobbs areas. The damage was blamed on twisting winds that dipped out of dark clouds.

Driving rains and marbled hail pelted Snyder. The destructive winds and hail actually came on the second time around for a dark cloud formation. An earlier shower in Snyder at around 3 p.m. brought moisture and brisk west winds, but the hail and stronger winds came later in the afternoon.

Snyder had an official 1.63 inches of moisture, more than the entire year of 1962 had produced previously. Rains were heavier in some areas west of town, and moisture of three inches or more were reported to the north and northeast.

The moisture production dropped off sharply to the south, with areas around Hemphill reporting about an inch.

But party workers were still busy—quietly. They hurriedly voters on the streets and rang doorbells. They passed out pamphlets and phoned their friends.

Walton's Arm, Wellborn's Bat Boost Tigers To Win

By Jerry Jackson News Sports Editor The pitching and hitting wizardry of a pair of senior mainstays—pitcher Dalton Walton and first-sacker Kenny Wellborn—proved to be too much for the Sweetwater Mustangs here Saturday, as Walton mowed the visitors down on two singles to lead the Snyder Tigers to a 6-0 District 3-AAA conquest.

The victory preserved the Tiger status atop the standings, being their fifth win in six outings, and dropped Sweetwater to 6-7. Other action of the same day found the Brownfield Cubs (4-2) taking over second place from the Lamesa Tornados (4-3) by dumping the Tors by a 5-3 count.

By The Associated Press In an effort to gain uniformity, the old familiar title "game warden" almost lost out at a meeting of the State Game and Fish Commission. Commission members considered several alternate titles in a 30-minute discussion, but made only one change: In the future, conservation officers will be known as "Game Warden III."

Scudgully traced the growth and expansion of the Production Credit system from its beginning in 1933 to its present stature as a major agricultural credit source.

"It is eloquent testimony to the ability and determination of the nation's farmers and ranchers to build for themselves a free enterprise system of credit."

In other business meeting activities, President Wiman gave a report for the board of directors. He observed that good management practices in agriculture are becoming increasingly necessary as expenses continue to rise. ## Steels Still Draw Attention

By JACK LEIFER
AP Business News Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Attention remained focused on the steel industry during the week although much of the excitement of the price increase had faded.

Many steel companies adjusted their price boosts to place themselves in competitive positions. A congressional committee began a hearing on steel pricing, and speculation increased about what the United Steelworkers' Union will do about seeking higher wages.

The time called by U.S. Steel, the No. 1 producer, which posted the lowest price increase, was followed by other producers who made "downward" adjustments. The boosts on steel plate announced by some companies evaporated because U.S. Steel did not increase prices in this category.

In the light of lack of opposition from the White House and of heavy demand, steelmakers were confident that they could make the higher prices stick even if steel buying falls off later in the year.

In the early stages of its hearing, the Senate House Economic Committee was told that since 1958 the labor cost of producing steel has risen much less rapidly than in the preceding 18 years. A Labor Department specialist attributed this to increasing productivity and a production increase.

Price analysts said items containing steel account for 16.5 per cent of the total cost of living index and that if the effects of the price increase are confined to these items the upward push on the index will be slight.

Steel production kept on climbing during the week, reaching a three-year high of 2,327,000 tons, which represents an estimated 10 per cent increase over last year's output.

The automakers, using up huge amounts of steel, had their production high—turning out an estimated 134,000 passenger cars during the week against 130,700 the previous week and 54,436 a year ago.

General Motors Corp. reported first-quarter earnings of $44.3 million, second only to the fourth quarter of 1967 when profits totaled $49.7 million. This compared with $23.4 million in the first quarter of 1967.

Whitney Museum Shows Art Of 1910-1920

BY MILES A. SMITH

NEW YORK — It is highly appropriate that the Whitney Museum of American Art now has an exhibition titled "The Decade of the Armory Show, 1910-1920." For the late Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney, creator of this museum and a sculptor herself, was a real pioneer patron of American art in the modern manner.

She had been helping unknown American artists even before the decade in question, and still played a prominent part long after the decade was over.

We are at a half-century point in the history of American art, counting from the 1913 Armory Show, which was the greatest single event to shake this country into an awareness of the modern trend.

GERTRUDE Vanderbilt Whitney, sculpted by Jo Davidson.

It was held in the old 60th Regiment Armory in Manhattan at a time when few Americans had even heard of many of the now recognized masters of 20th Century painting.

Ironically, the real modernists on the American scene at the time—few in number—had no part in the famous show. About their only outlet had been a tiny New York gallery opened in 1908 by the trail-blazing photographer and art lover, Alfred Stieglitz. His gallery also was the first to exhibit the French school of the new century in this country.

It was a conglomeration of 25 "independents"—meaning they refused to follow the academic trend—who organized the Armory Show. This oddly assorted group included some of "The Eight," who also came to be known as the "Ashcan School."

At the head of the group was Arthur B. Davies, who secured agent his friends among the modern artists but did not paint like one. He and some of the committee decided to include a foreign section which proved to be the sensation of the day—introducing to the American public the post-impressionists, fauvists, cubists and others.

Mrs. Whitney, though she had stayed in the background, was an interested participant in this upheaval. She contributed $1,000 for decorating the Armory.

A year later she created the Whitney Studio, an outlet for the paintings of the young innovators. From 1920 to 1928 this became the Whitney Studio Club, and by 1930 had been converted into what is now the Whitney Museum.

The half-century observance began on Feb. 17 with a reconstruction of the Armory Show at the Munson-Williams-Peickert Institute, with Joseph S. Trivette as the moving spirit. It runs through March 31.

This exhibit will move to its original site on Manhattan's East Side from April 6 to 28, as a benefit for the Henry Street Settlement. Meanwhile the Whitney show will run through April 14. The Whitney exhibition takes a different tack from the reconstruction of the Armory Show. Instead of "hunting" itself to the American painters who were represented in that 1913 event, it takes in the whole decade from 1910 to 1920, including many Americans who were living in Europe at the time.

Later the Whitney show will be seen in five other museums—the City Art Museum of St. Louis, June 1-July 14; the Cleveland Museum of Art, Aug. 6-Sept. 15; the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, Philadelphia, Sept. 30-Oct. 30; the Art Institute of Chicago, Nov. 15-Dec. 29; and the Albright-Knox Art Gallery, Buffalo, N.Y., Jan. 20-Feb. 23.

The secretary of the committee which organized the 1913 show was the late Elmer Lavin, long-time MacLure. A few years ago a great mass of documents on this subject was discovered in a barn at the rear of the MacLure Club, Conn. Spring. The material was acquired by the Joseph H. H. H. Foundation, which then commissioned the writing of a book by Milton W. Brown, professor of art history at Brooklyn College. Brown's book, "The Story of the Armory Show," will be published May 13, and will be distributed by the New York Graphic Society, Greenwich, Conn.

The Whitney show contains 115 works by 48 painters and sculptors, many of them from the museum's own collections. Some of those represented were not in the Armory Show, but definitely were a part of the new trend in American art.

Live More With Space Galore

The importance of having space in the home has skyrocketed in the past two decades.

Not only are many post-war homes built with limited attic space and no basements, but the construction cost has soared. A recent national survey reported that during the past ten years the average construction cost of a single-family dwelling rose from $9,300 to $13,871. This 49 per cent increase places additional value on every square foot of living space.

And for the nation's 14 million families that live in apartments, limited space is an ever-present problem.

But you can do something about it. Here are several space-saving ideas you can use to "engineer" your home for better living:

Optical illusions serve well to reduce whatever claustrophobic coma comes over you when you enter a particular room. Use a framed mirror to reflect an outside scene from an opposite wall. The movements of the reflected sunlight create the effect of having another window. White or neutral walls, draperies and carpets add to a spacious feeling. Lightly scaled furniture will help make a room seem larger as will pale, solid colors. Nothing is worse than large, patterned furnishings with see-through qualities and straight lines help, too.

But there are methods for creating real space, too, not just the illusion. You can store more in your hall closet by hanging hats on doors racks. Make a hinged box for the closet to hold out-of-season footwear. Consider the use of hidden storage areas such as pull-out units under beds for extra blankets and linens.

In the kitchen, careful choice of both food and non-food items can save considerable space in the refrigerator and cupboards. Look for packages that provide the most product in the least amount of space, such as soft drinks in cans, facial tissues in a space-saving box, and concentrated juices and other foods.

Choose dual purpose and fold-away furniture. Space-saving furniture can include upholstered chairs that fold up and tuck away, dining tables that perform other duties between meals, bookcases that double as room dividers and of course a sofa-bed combination. Accordion style or hinged shutter-type doors free wall space otherwise needed to accommodate an open door. And a hanging lamp provides a good light and saves floor or table space.

So, if your walls seem to be closing in, try some of these space-engineering tips. You can be both compact and comfortable.

Yes, Wool Evening Gowns Even In Springtime

BY JEAN SPRAY WILSON
An Fashion Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Despite all the education on the subject, there are still humdrum souls who think that dancing in a wool dinner gown is like going swimming in ski pants.

These dollars are handfasted to style broadens. They grew up with the idea that tailored garments are limited to daytime only; that dress appeal must rustle, flutter or float; that wool is for the winter, and willing cottons are for the summer.

And nothing will alter their views.
To show you how little they know about wool, for instance, they have whispered it around that the Twists came into being with long wooden ball gowns—implying the dance gyrations were a natural compulsion to relieve the itch.

Changes Made
If they were with it, they would realize that textile stylists have changed the look and feel of wool in so many ways that it doesn't deserve its stereotypes anymore. It's baby soft and cottony (wool), it's sleekly silky, it's crisply linenlike. It's as diaphanous as organza, and as malleable, as need be, as putty. Of course, it's tweedy too, but not in every instance.

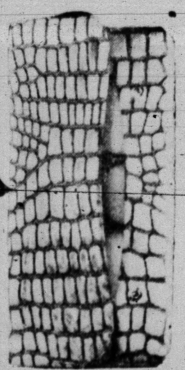

The King of America's couturiers, Norman Norell, has always been disdainful of monorail fashion thinking. One track, says he, can lead a woman round and round into a dizzy sameness. Yet Norell is not the kind who does new things simply for the sake of newness. They must make practical fashion sense.

Heave wool evening gown.
They eliminate giddy fussiness and with Norell's costumes at least, they offer women the freedom from her underpinnings. Having body and appearance, wool eliminates the need for additional supporting or covering garments.

INSTEAD OF MINK . . . Vera Maxwell created this reed-slim buttonless, collarless, wool coat in flaming coral, a color which picks up the floral print of the dinner gown and its matching lining.

1/2 cup cream
1 teaspoon salt
3 cups hot cooked rice
1 canned pimiento, diced
2 cups cubed cooked chicken
1/3 cup blanched split almonds

1 cup butter
Cook the mushrooms lightly in the 2 1/2 tablespoons butter. Sprinkle flour; add chicken stock and stir constantly over low heat until thickened. Add cream and salt. Mix rice with pimiento in a buttered 1 1/2 quart casserole. Add chicken and cover with sauce. With a fork, lift chicken and rice lightly so sauce will run down. Brown almonds lightly in the 1 cup butter; drain, sprinkle over top of casserole. Bake in a moderate (325 degrees) oven 20 to 30 minutes. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Decorating Under A Low Ceiling

BY VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Small rooms and low ceilings create decorating problems for many people. A handsome break-front and sectional sofa, perfectly at home in a room with large dimensions, can't always adjust to the proportions of a small room, points out interior designer Jay Dorf.

"You may not be able immediately to put your finger on the object that is out of proportion," he says. "But you will have an uneasy feeling that there is something wrong with the planning of the room."

Since we can't physically stretch a room, our object must be to shrink the things within it — by illusion. If necessary, he says. The solution may be as simple as getting rid of one oversized piece, although some people may solve the problem to their satisfaction by using one tall, slender piece — a cupboard, secretary or bookcase — with low pieces.

"The French have always been very clever about this," Dorf points out. "Even in the 18th Century they had paneled walls with many narrow panels, giving the illusion of height."

Wallpaper and decorated walls are popular now so that plan may offer a stylish solution.

"Keep everything low in the room as much as possible, except perhaps the slender piece," he says. "Chairs, tables, lamps should be kept low. Sculptured pieces that are delicate, rather than heavy and ornate. Keep pictures, scones, wall brackets and chandeliers as low as possible, without making them a household nuisance. Use low candles, candle holders and flower arrangements," he says.

Dorf prefers area rugs to wall-to-wall carpet in small rooms, so that the rug can pinpoint a small central area such as under a dining table and chairs. But there should be a large amount of floor space showing. If this design idea is used, he explains.

If a large piece of furniture must be used in a small room, it should be kept as isolated as possible. Don't jam a lot of other objects around it, he emphasizes, and keep the units that take up a lot of space in dark tones.

Color schemes can help create an illusion of spaciousness, too, he emphasizes. "Keep walls and ceiling as light as possible, alternating between light and dark shades of furnishings throughout the room."

White is a popular background color for small rooms, ideal for making a small room look larger. In one dining room setting created by Dorf, white walls and ceiling form a light, airy background.

The discovery of natural gas in Holland's Groningen Province has made the entire North Sea geological basing one of the liveliest prospecting areas in the world.

ground with a low - scaled white table flush against the wall and blending into it. The table is light enough to be pulled away from the wall when its entire surface must be used. Low - back chairs with clean lines increase the airy feeling. A free - form sculpture on the wall in the delicate lines of extruded metal is kept low. Table flowers and candelabra also are kept low.

SMALL DINING ROOM with low ceiling still can have a formal look. Interior designer Jay Dorf has used white walls and a low white table with low-back chairs. He even has been able to include a painting and a chandelier by making sure their size and placement are in keeping with the scale of the room.

NUTRITION—A large group of people, including various club women, nurses and elementary school children, heard Mrs. Cleo Arnett of Austin present a special nutrition program Thursday afternoon in the fellowship hall of First Baptist Church. She told of the large numbers of nutritional problems, and the solution of these problems can come only if everyone chooses the kinds and amounts of food to provide his body with the necessary essentials. Preparation of foods and the factor influencing the kinds and amounts of nutrients we consume were explained and seemingly impressive to the school children.

Armchair Traveler

THE GREAT SAHARA MOUSE-HUNT. By Catherine Collins and Miggs Pomeroy.

Adventure stories often gain flavor when they are seasoned with humor, as in this case.

The adventure is a trip across the desert, from Benghazi to the remote mountains of Tibesti and back, in a period of about six weeks, by a party of 14 American and English travelers, half of them civilians and half military personnel.

Among the civilians, all but one is making the trip for kicks. The exception is a museum mammalogist from America, who diligently collects specimens all along the route, mostly of rodent size. Hence the title.

There are some pretty grim hazards — extreme heat by day and cold at night; mechanical breakdowns in the caravan; the danger of getting lost in the trackless wastes.

But the light-hearted narrative gives an almost flippancy color to these grim possibilities, and even manages to treat with disdain the insect bites and discomforts of desert travel.

The book is credited to two authors, but it is constructed as though it were a first person singular narrative by Mrs. Pomeroy.

Between them, the authors prove to be fine observers of the African scene — the colors, smells, sights and sounds of the desert and mountains; the odd and fascinating flora and fauna; the colorful appeal of the isolated oases.

On the human side, they have reported with sly humor the idiosyncrasies of their caravan companions and the quaint characteristics of the natives and the military figures at the outposts.

This is one of the better books for the armchair adventurer, who should not expect any vicious thrills in its pages.

ALL ABOUT BABIES...

A Public Service of the National Baby Care Council

By C. Robert Gruber, Editor, All About Babies

Mothers traditionally are kind to their babies. In the matter of communicable diseases, they're kind without even knowing it.

Babies usually are born with immunity to communicable diseases, and they get that immunity from their mothers. The immunity is only good for about the first six months of the child's life. After that, baby is on his own.

But antibodies can become his allies even before the baby can walk. These antibodies frequently develop during a child's sickness. They also enter the picture through immunization—a method by which the body is stimulated to build the needed antibodies. There is a third way: injection of antibodies against a definite disease.

Immunization has been found to be the most effective attack on the more common communicable diseases of babyhood. So doctors have set up an immunization timetable.

The baby's first immunizations are against diphtheria, tetanus and whooping cough. These usually begin when the child is one or two months of age, and three or four monthly inoculations are given. "Booster shots" are usually given a year or so later, although many doctors feel that in the case of whooping cough, such shots are not needed after the age of five. They do recommend continuous care against tetanus "boosters" at three to ten-year intervals.

Diseases that were monsters not so long ago, are gradually fading from the American scene. Inoculations have provided the answer. In many cases, anti-tetanus "boosters" at three to ten-year intervals.

Seabury Fought City Hall

THE MAN WHO RODE THE TIGER: The Life and Times of Samuel Seabury. By Herbert Mitgang.

Seabury's decades of fighting the corruption that coated through New York's government as a result of its domination by the infamous Tammany Hall made him one of the nation's best known men during the 1820s and 1830s — the very personification of honesty and idealism.

Yet, ironically, Seabury's own indiscretions in the political arena during his youth were perhaps the major factor in keeping him from achieving greatness, or at least from winning high public office.

New York Times newsmen Mitgang, with financial help from the Crowell Foundation and the co-operation of the Seabury family, has produced a thoroughly documented, yet very pedantic, book describing the man who exposed the bribery, theft and fraud of the Tammany era in general, and the administration of Jimmy Walker, the playboy mayor, in particular.

One thing the book does particularly well is to make clear what a contest of wills ensued when Seabury and Walker faced each other during a legislative investigation of New York City's government in 1832. The picture of the dapper, pen-writing Walker sparring with deadly skill with the aristocratic, courtly Seabury is a fascinating one.

Yet Mitgang doesn't neglect the earlier years, in which the fiery young Seabury allied himself with socialists, the Henry George single taxers and Labor Party forces — alliances which made it possible for his opponents to label him a radical when he sought the governorship of New York and when his name was mentioned as a presidential possibility.

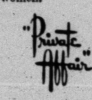

The book is replete with the names of the famous — both Roosevelt, Al Smith, Woodrow Wilson, Herbert Lehman and Fiorello LaGuardia — and Mitgang shows how and why Seabury was at home in such illustrious company.

BUT DESERT DISTANCES CAN BE DECEIVING

New Technique Is Threat To Colorful Krush Interviews

AP SPOTLIGHT
By PRESTON GROVER
MOSCOW—AP's Premier Khrushchev's new technique for interviews threatens to end the easy and sometimes stormy give and take of earlier days.

The new system, if it truly is a new system, was tried out last weekend on Italo Pietra, editor of Il Giorno di Milano. It resulted in an interview lacking much of the Khrushchev zest even though packed with statements of Soviet positions on Berlin, China, abstract artists, and a host of other things.

It was a safe, studied reply. Pietra got his answers in writing. It was unlike several previous interviews. Others, such as Turner Catledge, Walter Lippmann and more recently Roy Thomson, went to see Khrushchev and the exchanges began, then, Catledge, managing editor of the New York Times, spent nearly two hours with Khrushchev in 1957 and reported that he answered most questions in an apparently free and easy manner.

With Thomson there was one pretty sharp moment when the Canadian-born publisher told Khrushchev he would do better to side with the West than to count on China. He made a gesture of throat cutting to indicate what Khrushchev might expect from China. The premier, boiling back with a reply, told Thomson not to count on China and the Soviet Union ever splitting up for the West's benefit.

Lippmann spent a day with Khrushchev two years ago at the premier's dacha on the Black Sea. First they talked, then they ate, then they played badminton, then they talked some more.

Once Khrushchev seemed irritated by a comment. He had insisted that France was in a position to test nuclear weapons for the United States even if the Soviet Union and the United States hanged tests.

China would do the same for the Soviet Union, observed Lippmann. Khrushchev braced for a reply, but controlled himself, and observed that this was fair comment.

With Pietra it was all new style except for the final bit. The Milan editor, asked through the Soviet Embassy in Rome for an interview. He was told to write out questions.

He submitted 12 questions April 4. The interview was set for 16 days later. He came to Moscow and was taken to the Foreign Office where he was handed a 32-page document containing questions and answers, both in Italian and Russian.

Peace Corps Is No Place For 'Losers'

By REILMAN MORIN
WASHINGTON—AP—The sign on the door warns: "There is no room on this team for good losers."

Stacks of reports, papers and photographs, precariously balanced, clutter the desk. A primitive African banjo stands beneath a modern abstract painting. There are other souvenirs from around the world. In a corner, framed under glass, is a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Crozier of West Plains, Mo. Their son was killed on duty in Colombia. Their letter says he wrote them, shortly before the accident, "I would rather give my life trying to help someone than to have to give my life looking down a gun barrel at them."

This is the office of Robert Sargent Shriver Jr., director of the Peace Corps.

"I often look at that letter," he says. "It pretty well sums up the whole point of the corps, doesn't it?"

The Peace Corps is moving into its third year now and, although there are still some doubters and dissenters, the consensus is that the experiment is a whopping success.

About 5,000 volunteers are working today in 45 countries. Some are teenagers. Ralph Cole, of Dallas, Tex., an irrigation expert, is 78.

"Every country, without exception, has asked us to double or triple the number already working there," Shriver says.

Twenty-five more governments have asked the corps for help. For the moment, Shriver says, he can't meet all the requests.

He is asking Congress for $100 million for the fiscal year, and authority to put 13,000 corpsmen in the field.

All this has developed in less than a year. The first trainee sailed for Ghana on Aug. 29, 1961. At the time, many Americans were skeptical and some openly critical.

As the Tampa Tribune put it: "Only a few hardy optimists expected the experiment to last out the first year. Well, so far all our doubters have been proved wrong. The contraption actually works."

Many other newspapers, in the United States and abroad, along with heads of government, and senators and congressmen, joined the chorus of praise.

But there is an ironic bit of history here — at one point, Shriver himself was one of the doubters.

John F. Kennedy—who is Shriver's brother-in-law—voiced the idea of a Peace Corps during the 1960 presidential campaign. After his election he asked Shriver to organize it.

Shriver held up in a Washington hotel. He read reports, sought help from a number of colleges and universities, consulted educators, technicians, men with experience in underdeveloped countries. Weeks passed.

By the end of February 1961, Kennedy was beginning to express impatience. He asked Shriver, "Why can't we announce the Peace Corps?" Shriver says that even his wife, the former Eunice Kennedy, asked why he was so slow.

Shriver says, "I was looking at it this way—the worst mistake a young president could make would be to fail in something involving young people. You could fail at something else but not in an undertaking of this kind."

"I wanted to be as sure as any one could be that this was not going to be a childish, soft, do-gooder operation. So I wouldn't recommend it until it seemed there was at least a fighting chance."

Junior Editors Quiz on SOUNDS

QUESTION: When we sing a tone to the piano, why does it answer?

ANSWER: Bob told Wilma the piano would answer him, but she didn't believe it. Now he's proving it to her (above). First he got another friend to hold down the loud pedal (see lower left). He lifted the lid of Wilma's grand piano and shouted down into it. To Wilma's surprise, it did answer back, not with the real word, but distinctly in the same tone. Then Bob explained the sympathetic vibration principle he'd been studying. "You make a sound," Bob said, "and it makes the air around vibrate at a certain rate or frequency. Each group of strings in your piano which represent one note vibrates at a certain rate—that's why some strings make C sharp and others B flat. My shout was a kind of note—it made the air vibrate at the same frequency that the F sharp on your piano vibrates. So the F sharp strings in the air set the F sharp strings vibrating because this is the natural note they make. The other strings didn't vibrate because they are tuned to different frequencies and the F sharp air vibration couldn't stir them into action. But as you heard, the good old F strings sang right back, and boy, they were sharp!"

FOR YOU TO DO: Find a pair of piano strings which have the same note. Pick one and put your finger on the other; you can feel its sympathetic vibration. It's this vibration of the strings which vibrates the air around them and makes them seem to sing back.

The Gardeners Corner

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

One of the most natural of the delightful exhibits at the 46th International Flower Show in New York City's Conservatory Garden was the native plant garden of the New York Botanical Garden.

There were more than 250 varieties of wild flowers in a setting that included a cascading waterfall, a running brook and full-size trees.

Setting up this garden colored by white birch and blossoming dogwood was a task that began while last year's show was still in progress. It was the planning, selection and planting of items.

Large sections of earth and living plants were lifted last fall and moved into warm greenhouses at Botanical's Bronx acreage. There they were prepared to burst into flower at precisely the right time for the March show, an especially difficult feat when dealing with wild plants.

Moving piles of earth and hundreds of living plants from the Botanical Garden to the Conservatory required careful protection against the cold.

General Kept Out Of War

SPYING FOR PEACE. By John Kimche

Swissmen tend to take Switzerland's neutrality for granted. There's something about Swiss mentality, one would almost think, as well as about Swiss geography, that have made the landlocked little country a haven of peace in a warring continent.

This ineptly named volume by a Swiss-born British newspaperman shows that this is only half the story.

When World War II started, the Swiss put all military power in the hands of an elderly colonel named Henri Guisan, who was designated general. It was the general according to Kimche, who really made Swiss neutrality stick.

First he bluffed the Germans into staying clear of Swiss territory. Next he outfoxed his own government, which was all for working hand in glove with the Nazis. Next he set up a spy system, and worked with Allied intelligence groups, until he knew just what was going on in the front countries. Finally he established a great fortress area in the Alps that discouraged the defeated Germans from ever trying to make a last stand in Switzerland.

The whole performance was an exercise in courage and subtle judgment, in which spying played an important but certainly not a dominant role. Not that the Swiss spy system wasn't impressive — it included a pipeline right into Hitler's headquarters.

Moby Dick Is Submarine

THE BEDFORD INCIDENT. By Mark Rasovich

There is a double pattern in Rasovich's story of the cold war in the Arctic. It is an action novel, and it is keyed to a psychological situation similar to that of Captain Ahab, the whale hunter.

The action takes place on a destroyer leader named the Bedford, whose skipper is Captain Finlander. He is a man who runs a tight ship and believes in keeping every member of the crew in a state of razor-sharp readiness for combat.

Finlander is obsessed with the idea of tracking down a Soviet submarine nicknamed the Moby Dick in the waters off Greenland. Just what he intends to do about the submarine once he runs it down is not clear, even in Finlander's mind.

Most of the narrative is a suspense-filled chase in which the Bedford uses all the refined scientific techniques of modern warfare to stalk its prey.

Aboard the Bedford are a few individuals who suspect that Finlander's obsession has gone beyond normal bounds and constitutes a dangerous threat to his own crew and the delicate balance of the cold war.

At the climax there are two bizarre developments, one justifying these fears and the other giving a final conclusion to the whole episode.

Rasovich gives a convincingly real picture of all the high-pressure drama of a sea hunt, filling his story with an amazing technical background. His skill is not quite so sure in such matters as characterization, dialogue and motivation.

But after all, this is an action novel of the sort that grips the reader's attention, and on that level it is bound to satisfy a good many readers.

And when the huge show opened, the native garden bloomed with harbingers of spring — bloodroot, three-petaled white trillium, lavender hepaticas, pink and yellow ladyslippers, fragrant trailing arbutus, native azaleas, little blue-ettes.

Botanical Garden Horticulturist Louis P. Poffo accentuated the exhibit with redbud, terrestrial orchids, pines, laurel and rhododendron.

Several new vegetables had prominent places among the flowers. One was "Executive," snap bean, the 1963 All-American winner from W. Alice Burpee. Featured by Perry Morse, seed was Alfalfa Tomato, a well-suited plant suitable for growing indoors in the winter.

Half a Million Blooms
More than half a million blossoms were arrayed in living gardens, cut flower displays and hundreds of competitive potted plants and flower arrangements.

The largest garden was the Child's Garden of Eden, a 2,500-square-foot recreation of a setting at Old Westbury Gardens on Long Island. This exhibit by Kodak included approximately 1,000 delphinium, geranium, popular perennials, evergreens and other trees and shrubs.

Berry Garden
For the first time, the big show had a berry garden, a 300-square-foot planting of berryed plants which had been nurtured by Madson & Christensen at near-freezing temperatures since last autumn to keep berries at their peak.

On the very practical side was a new soil conditioner called "Bet-R-Growth," developed by Mississippi State University. It is made of sugar cane pulp from the Mississippi delta, 98 per cent organic but with nitrogen availability.

Also featured were:
A contemporary garden in blue Brookside Nurseries with hundreds of delphinium in many shades of blue, plus pink and rose hybrid delphinium and pink peonies and mountain laurel.

A Noel Garden with Oriental and California influences stressing dogwood and Japanese azaleas in flower.

A tulip promenade garden of 1,000 tulips and 100 primroses, and the spectacle of 7,500 cut tulips.

Four do-over gardens and an educational display of landscaped bays.

A June lily garden, Christmas-blooming amaryllis, more than 1,000 brechtia in shadow boxes and 1,000 rose bushes (Jackson & Perkins) featuring Tropicana, the warm orange-red hybrid tea that has won 14 international awards.

Moments Of Truth

HAPPY NEW YEAR, HERRIE

And Other Stories. By Evan Hunter

One of the better functions of a short story — the true short story — and not those spurious slices of life compositions that trail off into ambiguity — is to give the reader a feeling that he has experienced some moment of crisis or tension in the life of a human protagonist, carrying at least a glint of significance in the sad, glad, sorry scheme of human affairs.

This observation is quite applicable to Hunter's book, a collection of "magazine pieces."

There is a pretty wide range in the collection, but each story has the virtue of carrying its own built-in quality of intensity.

One very short one is simply a grim anecdote about a peasant who is fooled by imagined lions, snakes, and other horrors in a tough, sordid precinct, who does not realize that he had taken on the deadly taint of his surroundings until he faces a realistic situation that shakes even his callous spirit. In contrast, there is a touching description of the death of a boy gangster.

There also is a touch of the supernatural in a circus story, and a touch of the fantastic in a farce about the advertising business. There is a devastating portrait of a movie producer and a moving sketch of a young matron who bumps into a former lover.

The book opens with a longer piece about a young counselor in a summer camp who learns to distinguish the major and minor criteria of life through an utterly nonsensical incident. It closes with a poignant tale which gives the book its title.

Mr. Hunter, with a sharp, incisive skill in portraying people — clearly successful and without the mumbo-jumbo of word-impressionism. His stories have a point; they are vivid, often ironic, yet sympathetic.

Burt Reynolds Scores High In Difficult TV Assignment

By BOB THOMAS

 HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Burt Reynolds is a man who has made good at a difficult assignment, joining the "Gunsmoke" family.

Burt plays Quint Asper, the Dodge City blacksmith who is hated by the townsfolk.

King Thrives On Family Troubles

By CYNTHIA LOWRY
AP Television-Radio Writer
 NEW YORK (AP)—A police man walked up to comedian Alan King the other day with out stretched hand.

"I want to thank you," he said. "I don't want to see you on television."

King thought this over for a couple of days and finally decided it was a compliment. He is grateful for the public's reaction. His fans provide him with a lot of his material.

The Brooklyn-born monologist, a frequent guest on Tuesday night's "Garry Moore Show" on CBS, has staked out a comedy claim in the "family" area: the everyday frustrations and annoyances of the average family man.

Alan has been around, and doing very well, for a long time—he played the Palooka in 1948, but it was not until five years ago on Moore's program that the big, armchair audience began to react to his special brand of humor.

King's work over matters that are familiar to most husbands: troubles with the plumber, real estate agents, bills, his wife's habits, making the kids behave—no easy thing.

LIGHTEST MEXICO

BY JOHN ABNEY

MEXICO CITY—Like some body once said, clothes make the man. In rural Mexico, the man who is a man walking around without his trousers.

City men are a different breed. Mr. Norman Pelham Wright, the overseer of all facets of life here, estimated that 90 per cent of the metropolitan gentlemen are armed with headgear ranging from floppy caps to the dark brown trilby. Everybody else stays comfortable. On Sundays you see lawyers and bankers turn out for a gallop-dressed in silver-trimmed charro Mexican cowboy suits and sporting elegant charro hats.

These are special jobs: Heavy, ornate and built like an inverted umbrella with a high crown.

Floppy, inexpensive versions designed to keep him in the shade and show that he is an old coak.

In most parts of the country, Indian tribes have their own design that dates way, way back and you can tell where most men come from by the type of hat they wear.

Around Veracruz, for example, they have a creation similar to the famous Panama hat which comes from Ecuador and not from Panama like most people think.

Then in Oaxaca State you find the plain old straw hat made of tough grass. Men and women wear them and the women weave hats as they walk along the roads.

Maybe you are driving through this territory and spot a lady walking beside the highway wearing half a dozen hats stacked on her head while she works on a new hairdo.

You stop and say, "Excuse me, Ma'am, how far is it to the next town?"

And she calculates a moment.

"The town you want is 10 miles away," she says. "But if you want to go to the next town, you'll have to wait here. This being the summer, she can make while waiting the distance."

AMUSEMENT

Albee Is Calm In Hectic Profession

By WILLIAM GLOVER
Associated Press Drama Writer
 NEW YORK (AP)—Edward Albee, the theater's spotlight author of the year, regards all the hullabaloo with calm, cryptic, mildly amused detachment.

"I've always assumed," he says, "that things are either going to happen or not happen for me as a matter of course."

"I'm happy doing what I'm doing. I'm not surprised that I've had some success doing it. I don't know how much longer I'll keep on writing plays."

Albee staked his claim as a new theater force early in the season with "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" a biting, shocking and funny play about two married couples.

Although new works by such established talents as Williams, Inge, Kinsley and Hellman subsequently appeared, the Albee piece remained unchallenged as the term's top specimen of Broadway's domestic dramatic creativity. All other standards were either revivals or imports.

Whether "Woolf" can grand-slam all the awards-Critics Circle, Theater Wing, Pulitzer and various minor items—that are scheduled for distribution during the next couple of weeks, remains to be seen. But as a first work, it has already stirred up more excitement for Albee than for any newcomer since Tennessee Williams' master work debut in 1944.

"How does he feel about the prize cult?"

"I've always felt that in writing it is better to be a success than to be a failure. I suppose if there are prizes around, it's better to win than not."

The calm, boyish, dark-haired and slim-mannered author of dramatic fireworks does not, as a matter of fact, regard White Way experience with awe. For several years, Albee has been getting a lot of attention with one-act plays of Broadway and abroad—areas which he regards as unimportant as the commercial bigtime.

Before tackling the full-length "Woolf," there were just four brief dramas in his catalogue—"The Zoo Story," "The Death of Bessie Smith," "The American Dream" and "The Sandbox." The first was written just before his 30th birthday, when an inner, unpleasant pleasure ended an extended era of hollering, interrupted by only occasional bursts of poetry writing and two plays at a time.

Two of the plays, and the current hit at the Billy Rose Theater, offer raw and scathing portraits of domestic scenes and milky pleasure. This has prompted some critics to regard Albee as an anti-feminist, which he disputes.

"Actually, I try not to concern myself with the so-called philosophical implications of what I do. There's a good deal wrong, however, with the male-female relationship in this country."

"It's not a very happy situation. Men are abdicate their responsibility all over the place, forcing women into a position they don't really want. Women don't want to be the power—I don't think they do."

The girl he had gone with since his teens and a couple of years later they bought a small house on Long Island.

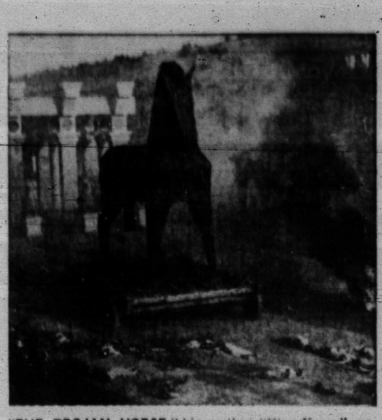

"I opened in a Florida club six weeks later, and I was fooling around before, talking about the house," he said. "Jack L. Leonard listened and then he said, 'You work that in. You're a fool if you don't use that.' I did—and that was the start."

King's style is to go beyond the first big joke and to build up on another, and still another joke. It's a style he has been developing for years, but it came into full flower on Moore's show.

"THE TROJAN HORSE" bigger than "King Kong" according to Robert Sylvester of the New York Daily News, is coming to the Palace Theater here May 5.
