Hurricane quits stalling, hits Carolinas

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Hurricane Diana blasted into the Carolinas today with 110 mph wind, blinding rain and tides 10 feet above normal, ripping down a water tower, lifting cars off the ground and catching people who had left emergency shelters.

No injuries were reported today, but one man died of a heart attack while trying to secure his house and a social services worker died in a traffic accident on his way to work as the storm rushed ashore.

"That status is that we've had some very great damage," said Gov. Jim Hunt, adding that early damage estimates were sketchy because of the difficulty in reaching affected areas. He wrote to President Reagan asking that he declare the state a major disaster area, with the worst damage in Brunswick and New Hanover. A day earlier, while the storm was stalled, he had said he doubted a request for emergency aid would be required.

The first Atlantic hurricane of the season ended a day of indecisive spinning offshore when it suddenly charged the coast Wednesday night. The eye of the storm touched land at 1:15 a.m. at Fort Fisher, south of Wilmington, the National Weather Service reported.

The town of Southport, across the Cape Fear River from Fort Fisher, had "been hurt and hurt bad," said Police Chief Bill Corey.

Many residents who had evacuated Tuesday returned Wednesday when the hurricane stalled off the coast to survey damage to their homes and were caught along with sightseers by the storm's lurch to land.

"When the storm began to move ashore, they had to send people out on four-wheel drives and buses to get them back to the shelter," said New Hanover County Sheriff Joe McQueen.

He said deputies and National Guardsmen were sent to a shopping center west of Wrightsville Beach to check reports that "people are breaking windows out and stealing radios and things."

At 8 a.m. Diana was moving west-northwest, producing gale force winds in North Myrtle Beach, S.C., where a state of emergency was declared. Maximum winds had slowed to near 80 mph after daybreak, from a high Monday of 130 mph, but gusts reached 95 mph.

At the wind's peak, transformers on tortured power lines blew up like fireworks, filling the air with sparks. Columns of water swirled in the darkness and trees bent to the ground.

"We've heard a lot of popping, lights flashing, thundering, lightning," said the Rev. Gerald Massey, one of about 50 people stranded at St. Paul United Methodist Church three blocks from the sea in the island community of Carolina Beach.

Officials said 100 to 200 people had spent the night at Carolina Beach. The governor had urged that such island communities be totally evacuated.

Massey said there were torrents of rain and Carolina Beach resident resident Jerry Bigley said "visibility is almost nill ... you can't hardly see out in front of you."

JoAnne Jones, a spokeswoman for the Red Cross Disaster Headquarters in Wilmington, said this morning that the Red Cross was "feeding 12,000 hungry people" housed in 49 shelters in 13 counties. "They were still arriving as of 5 a.m.," she said.

That was down from the more than 14,000 evacuees who had spent Tuesday night at nearly 70 shelters in a 12-county area of coastal North Carolina. Nearly 500,000 people live in the coastal counties targeted by Diana. State officials had said there was no way of knowing how many others were staying with relatives or in motels.

Wilmington police said they would not respond to calls for emergency evacuation until the storm had passed, and the National Weather Service cautioned people to stay away from windows and remain on lower floors of buildings.

Wallenda act opens Basin fair

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Balanced 30 feet above the pavement, Delilah Wallenda once again takes to the high wire in the tradition of her ancestors.

An erratic West Texas gale makes the going more precarious, and there is no net below to catch her should she take the errant step tumbling her from the comparative safety of the wire.

In the tradition of "The Great Wallendas" and generations of relatives who have scaled the heights for entertainment's sake, Ms. Wallenda and her husband, Terry Troffer, have brought their act to the Ector County Fairgrounds.

The Delilah Wallenda Duo will perform their high wire routine through Sunday at the 1984 Permian Basin Fair And Exposition — winds allowing.

The aerial couple took to the wire Wednesday, though strong gusts kept them from performing the entire act, which features a high-wire bike ride, her standing on a chair balanced only on the strand and closes with her taking to Troffer's shoulders for a stroll across the span.

Why not a net in case of emergency? "I think it takes away some of the thrill for the audience," she said.

Talks could settle representation suit

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Negotiations began today in Midland which could lead to an out-of-court settlement of the lawsuit against the city calling for single-member districts for the city council.

Lawyers Charles Tighe, representing the city, and Rolando Rios, representing the two plaintiffs, The League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council, met at 9 a.m. today in Tighe's office.

Tighe wouldn't comment on what was discussed at the meeting, saying it would be "counterproductive" to say anything about it. Asked if a settlement had been reached, Tighe said, "Let me just say we're having some discussions."

According to LULAC Secretary Edia Hernandez, the meeting was initiated by the city.

"Our lawyers were contacted Monday," she said. "It won't be settled today, but it could be settled soon."

The meeting is the first face-to-face negotiation over the lawsuit, which was filed May 31 in federal court. According to the suit, "Plaintiffs seek the formation of a city council of sufficient membership so as not to cancel out or dilute the voting strength of Mexican-Americans and Blacks."

Midland's population is 27 percent black and Hispanic, but there are no minority members on the City Council, which is currently elected on an at-large basis.

In recent years such Texas cities as Odessa, Lubbock, Lamesa, Big Spring, Dallas and Fort Worth have switched to single-member districts, either voluntarily or after court action. Midland officials have declared their intention to resist the change, claiming that single-member districts are undemocratic and inefficient, but today Mayor G. Thane Akins sounded more conciliatory.

"There were a number of plans which were looked at by the city," which were to be presented to Rios today, Akins said. "We hope something can be worked out without having to go to the courthouse."

Akins still feels the plaintiffs showed "bad form" by filing a suit without bringing their proposal to the council first, but said he hopes a settlement can be reached "for everybody's benefit."

City Attorney Joe Nuessle wouldn't comment on the agenda of today's meeting, but said an eventual out-of-court settlement was possible.

"Sure, there's always that possibility," he said. "It's the first time we've sat down and talked. This sort of thing always happens sooner or later — you sit down and see how far apart you are, what you can agree on, what you can't agree on."

Judge removes Tighe from slander suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland lawyer Charles Tighe has been removed from the Sheriff Dallas Smith vs. Police Chief Wayne Gideon slander suit. The change was ordered by 118th State District Court Judge Jim Gregg of Big Spring, according to a courthouse spokesman.

Gideon, 49, had wanted Tighe to represent him in a $4 million lawsuit which Smith, 41, had lodged against the chief last July. Smith alleges that Gideon fueled rumors about Smith being a "wife beater" and that those rumors led to his defeat in the May 5 Republican Party primary election. Since then, Smith has announced as a write-in candidate for sheriff. He has been sheriff since 1977.

Smith had objected to Tighe's representing defendant Gideon, since Tighe's law firm had lent its oil-and-gas expertise to Smith's lawyer, John Hyde, in the sheriff's 1982 property-settlement divorce from the former Gail Mabee. She had sued Smith for divorce to end their nine-year marriage.

"I trusted them," Smith said of the law firm of Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe & Dawson. Smith said he and the firm's Robert "Bob" Bledsoe "talked about personal relations with my wife. We talked about financial conditions...oil-and-gas involvements."

Gideon said he has "high respect and regard" for Tighe who practices law "from the standpoint of fairness and truth."

Gregg was brought in as a disinterested judge last Aug. 23, when he conducted a hearing on Smith's motion to remove Tighe as Gideon's attorney.

Smith's lawyer, Tom Sims of Houston, had argued that it was unethical for Tighe to represent Gideon in the Smith-Gideon dispute and that even the "appearance of impropriety" should be avoided.

Tighe contended it was "absolutely abundantly clear" that there was no conflict of interest, that Smith's and Sim's claims were "superficial" and that there was no relationship between the divorce and the slander suit.

The judge's reasons for removing Tighe from the lawsuit were not immediately available.

Trial date of the Smith-Gideon suit has not been set, but the case is to be docketed for trial after the Nov. 6 general election.

Computer chip controversy stirs fears among defense contractors

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — At the heart of almost every Defense Department weapon are tiny "chips" carrying data on everything from targeting to maintenance. So the revelation that millions of chips were inadequately tested has sparked concern in the Pentagon and among defense contractors.

Over the past eight years, millions of chips produced by Texas Instruments were inadequately tested. Most of them are expected to work, but some may fail at critical moments, Pentagon officials fear.

With chips in nearly every piece of military equipment that moves, the possible complications are enormous.

The Texas Instruments chips could have been placed in everything from radios, walkie-talkies and helicopters to fighter-bombers, tanks and submarines. A Navy ship could use thousands of the fingernail-sized cells.

Pentagon officials on Monday told defense contractors to stop accepting Texas Instruments microchips until the problem can be solved. The Texas computer firm has sold millions of chips to more than 80 other contractors for installations in a wide variety of weapons systems.

Officials admit they don't know how widespread the problem is. However, Donald E. Moore, quality control chief of the Pentagon's Defense Logistics Agency, cited computers aboard the B-52 as one place where the Texas Instruments chips were located. The big planes are the heart of the nation's nuclear bomber force.

More than 15 million of 4,700 varieties of the suspect chips were sold to IBM, Pentagon officials say. Millions more may have been sold to other contractors.

"Any weapon that contains a sophisticated electronic part" could have some of the suspect chips inside, Moore said.

The tiny information-carrying chips aren't confined to the defense industry, and are common in consumers goods ranging from cars to calculators. In weapons, the chips provide data that "tells" a weapon when, where and how to work.

Rescue efforts continue at mine

By BILL BERGSTROM
Associated Press Writer

SHIELDS, Ky. — Rescuers worked through the night trying to reach a miner trapped 1,600 feet inside a coal mine near where the bodies of three others were found after a huge slab of rock fell in, a state official said.

State Mines and Minerals Commissioner Willard Stanley said it has not been determined if the fourth miner trapped inside of Bon Trucking Co.'s No.2 mine was still alive.

"I wouldn't say there is no hope," Stanley said. "But I'd say it would be a remote possibility."

At least three other miners in the vicinity of the cave-in managed to escape, although one of them was injured, officials said.

One of those miners, Rick Simpson, said he had sensed danger. "I told them we're going to get killed if we don't get out of here. I heard the timbers crack and heard the top breaking and I was off."

As he went by the other miners, he said, "they looked at me like I was an idiot or something."

A woman screamed and was consoled by relatives as Stanley announced late Wednesday that the three bodies had been located in the rubble of the mine in Possum Hollow in the eastern Kentucky mountains.

Stanley said today that the body of Mike King, 19, had been removed from the rubble, though it was still in the mine.

He identified the other three miners as Johnny E. Lipfird, 34, Danny R. Simpson, 27, and Bill Worthington, whose age was not available. He said it was not known which of those might still be alive because only King's body was positively identified.

A miner who had helped in the recovery effort said rescuers initially had heard the trapped men "pecking in the mine." But rescue crews later said that they the tapping sound had stopped.

At the floodlit mine entrance, cut into a rock face halfway up Little Black Mountain, haggard rescue workers, black with coal dust from chiseling through rock, ate sandwiches and stood around fires built in old oil drums.

Stanley said about 15 men at a time were working in the rescue effort, which had involved as many as 50 since the accident occurred at 9:20 a.m. Wednesday.

"The bottom is wet, there's about that much water," said Stanley, indicating about an inch. "It's real, real tiresome work."

Stanley said the mine roof was very fragmented, adding that "we're taking all the precautions in the world to not have another accident."

Simpson, who scrambled from the mine as the roof collapsed, said by early Wednesday evening he had little hope for his brother, Daniel, who was among the trapped miners.

"If a 15-foot rock 75 feet long fell on four people I'd say there wasn't much chance they were alive," said Simpson.

Simpson said he and his brother were working as jack-setters in a five-man crew operating a continuous mining machine when the accident occurred.

He said crews had completed "driving" in the section — proceeding into the mountain cutting into fresh coal — and were "robbing" — pulling back and removing coal pillars left to support the roof.

He said that in the immediate area of the mining machine, the roof was unsupported by timbers or roof bolts.

He scrambled through the 28- to 30-inch high coal seam toward the mine entrance.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Hot days that have characterized the past week will cool over the weekend, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service.

Tonight is expected to be fair with lows in the middle 60s and southerly winds of 5 to 15 mph.

Friday should be increasingly cloudy with highs near 90 expected, along with southeast winds of 10 to 20 mph.

Wednesday's high reached 92, nine degrees shy of the record 101 set in 1930. An overnight low of 63 was 14 degrees warmer than the 49 mark set in 1959.

NATION

Hurricane Diana touched land at Fort Fisher, N.C., early today bringing with it heavy rain and 100 mph winds as it once again sent coastal residents scurrying for emergency shelters.

Winds gusted to 70 mph at Wilmington, N.C., and were clocked at 85 mph at nearby Carolina Beach with gusts of more than 100 mph. Tides of 10 feet above normal hit the shore.

The storm could bring 10 inches of rain to southeastern North Carolina today, forecasters said.

No injuries were reported today and the hurricane's only fatality has been a man who died of a heart attack.

Hurricane warnings were in effect today from Myrtle Beach, S.C., to Oregon Inlet, N.C., and a tornado watch was in effect for eastern North Carolina to mid morning.

Meanwhile, thunderstorms rolled across the central Plains and the Great Lakes region. Nearly 3 inches of rain fell at Escanaba, Mich., Wednesday.

Temperatures cooled to the 30s in the northern Rockies. Lewistown, Mont., was 36 while the mercury dipped to 34 degrees at Butte, Mont. A frost warning was in effect for the valleys of western Montana.

WALLENDA

"A net really gives a false sense of security," added Troffer, explaining a fall could throw the aerialist outside the net's expanse. "You're better off to do it right."

Apprentices of Karl Wallenda, Troffer and Ms. Wallenda now travel apart from the remaining Great Wallendas, moving across the country nine months of the year doing shows.

They traveled to Odessa from Albany, N.Y., with a one-day stop in Fort Smith, Ark. "We came to Texas just for this," said Ms. Wallenda, granddaughter of the famous aerialist.

The circus has come a long way from Germany, where six generations of Wallendas performed everything from trapeze to dog acts. "They'd get together, then pass the hat," she said.

They have performed at the intermission of a Fleetwood Mac rock concert and commonly open shopping centers and entertain company picnics. Next stop is Chicago, where they will perform over a corporate gathering.

Times have been tough for "thrill acts," noted Troffer, pointing to the country and western craze as the fiercest competition for fair business.

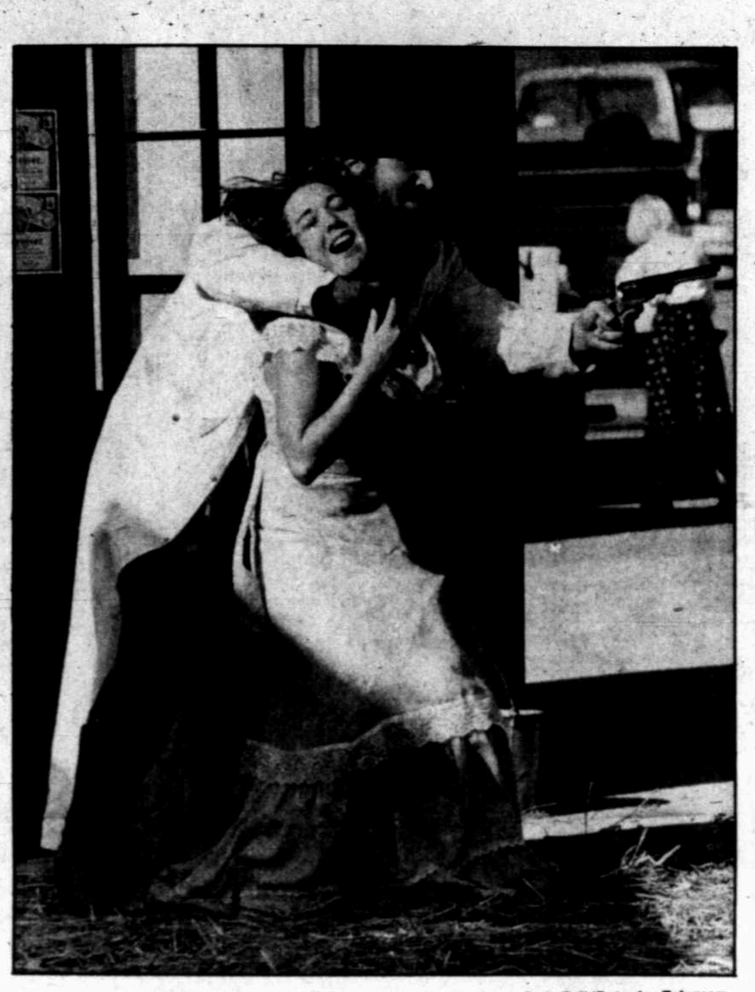

"People aren't bored (with these acts)," said Troffer, but "There is so much more that's being offered."

The heydays of the 50s and 60s are gone, when the Wallendas could afford to travel regularly in a 16-person troupe.

"There's not that big of a demand for acts like this," said Troffer. "Nowadays, a personality is what they're after."

"Amateurs taught by professionals" are undercutting the Wallendas price scheme. "We don't sell the name that's been built over generations for peanuts," said Troffer.

With top country music acts pricing themselves above what many events can afford, Troffer looked for a resurgence in business.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Children of all ages can view a Wild West Show featured at the Permian Basin Fair and Exposition. A carnival, special exhibit halls and different types of food are also featured at the fair, held at the Ector County Coliseum Fairgrounds.

"The circus is family entertainment," said Ms. Wallenda, a mother of two, "the movies are not."

Living from a trailer for most of the year has its drawbacks, admitted Ms. Wallenda, who tutors her children during the touring.

"There are times when I think, 'This is really hard,' but every business is going to have a good and a bad," she said.

"To be in this business, you have to like it to make it, because it is a tough life," said Ms. Wallenda.

Her children, ages 5 and 7, have both walked a 10 foot wire, said Ms. Wallenda, recalling she first scaled a strand as a three-year-old.

Discounting the dangers of children walking the high wire, Troffer said "Most mothers don't know what's involved."

"It's all calculated," he said. "We know what we're doing."

Several years of practice precede proficiency on the high wire, said Troffer.

"You can learn any trick, but the courage is something you can't teach," he said.

Past employees, after mastering the expanse three feet from the ground, have failed at greater heights.

"The minute they got up high, they couldn't do a thing," said Ms. Wallenda.

After all the years with the circus, Ms. Wallenda insisted she continued to enjoy her trade.

"The more pleased they are, the easier it is to work, and the harder I work," she said.

And the different faces and places along the road are enjoyable, she said. In Albany, she was approached by an elderly woman who had performed with Wallenda.

The 73-year-old Wallenda fell to his death during a "sky walk" in San Juan in 1978, but the show goes on.

"We have to look at everything," she said of the fall she attributed to equipment failure.

"If someone in your family gets killed in a car accident, are you going to stop driving?" she asked.

Apparently undaunted, Ms. Wallenda wants to be the first woman in recent times to perform a sky walk.

No one has come up with the right price, but Troffer suggested his wife would consider scaling a span stretched across the roof of the Cotton Bowl for $10,000.

Pope visits strongly Catholic province

MONCTON, New Brunswick (AP) — Pope John Paul II arrived today in New Brunswick, one of Canada's most Roman Catholic provinces, to pay tribute to the tragedy-tested faith of its French Acadian people.

The papal plane, a Canadian military jetliner, touched down in Moncton at 9:10 a.m. EDT on a bleak, rainy day. His flight from Newfoundland, where he spend the fourth day of his 12-day Canadian tour, took more than an hour.

His schedule in New Brunswick included a meeting with clergy and an outdoor Mass. The pope is scheduled to head for Nova Scotia this evening.

Before departing St. John's, Newfoundland, the pope made an unscheduled stop at the St. John's harbor to chat with the 15-member crew of a Polish schooner. Crew members detoured to St. John's to see the pope on their way home to Poland.

He gave rosaries to the young seamen, and they gave him a T-shirt emblazoned with the emblem of the yacht club in Gdansk, their home port.

Half of New Brunswick's 700,000 people are Roman Catholic, most of them Acadians — descendants of the French settlers who were deported from eastern Canada by the English during the 18th century French-English wars.

They were exiled to the American South and other istant colonies. Eventually many returned, but families had been separated, homesteads seized, and the Roman Catholic Church suppressed.

In the past century, the French Catholic culture has revived. Church officials say 60 percent of the New Brunswick's Roman Catholics practice their religion regularly — a relatively high level.

CHIPS

Texas Instruments vice president Norman Neureiter said the company is working "night and day" to find out what went wrong and where the chips were sent.

At first, Neureiter said, the company thought the situation was simply a "paper problem" but "later we began to conclude that perhaps some tests had been omitted."

"There is the possibility of criminal investigation of TI," said chief Pentagon spokesman Michael Burch.

The Pentagon ban on Texas Instruments chips is the second time this year that the Defense Department has had a problem with a microchip supplier.

National Semiconductor Corp. paid $1.7 million in fines and penalties in March after pleading guilty to 40 federal criminal charges that it had inadequately tested microchips sold to the Pentagon between 1978 and 1981.

The Defense Department originally proposed to ban National Semiconductor from doing any more business with the Pentagon, but dropped that idea after the company took what the Pentagon called "significant corrective actions."

Defense Department officials are now demanding better work at a time when the Reagan administration's military build-up is under fire for reports of shoddy work and high prices.

The Navy last week refused to accept 14 jet engines built by General Electric and the Pentagon last month suspended payment of $38 million to Hughes Aircraft because of "poor workmanship" on three types of missiles.

The Texas Instruments case came to light more than a year ago when a routine check by International Business Machines found that chips IBM was purchasing from the Texas company had not been adequately tested.

Pentagon officials who declined to be identified noted that there are now a number of investigations into possible irregularities in other microchip suppliers to the military.

Some of the investigations involve suspected falsification of test data along with selling foreign-made chips as domestic-made and selling commercial-grade chips instead of military-grade chips.

The chips bought by the Pentagon are required to meet more stringent standards than those produced for commercial use.

Moore said it was a bad Texas Instruments chip which caused a computer to "hiccup" on the space shuttle Discovery and postpone the launch. But a NASA official said later that the chip problem was not related to inadequate testing and was caused by a microscopic crack which could not have been detected by tests.

Asked why so many chips were produced before the problem was found, Moore said, "I can't answer for executives who don't pay any attention to their responsibilities." He later cited a "lack of discipline" at Texas Instruments.

When IBM spotted the problem last year, the company told the Pentagon and then tried to work it out with TI, Moore said.

Inmate fatally stabbed in Rosharon unit

ROSHARON, Texas (AP) — One inmate was stabbed to death and another wounded at the Texas Department of Corrections' Darrington Unit, bringing to 274 the number of knifings within the nation's second largest prison system, authorities said.

The slain inmate, 28, was stabbed about 5:15 p.m. Wednesday in a supervised yard area, said prison spokesman Phil Guthrie.

About 10 minutes before the inmate died, Guthrie said, another Darrington prisoner was stabbed while eating in the kitchen. A guard attempted to intervene but was kept away by 12 other inmates who escorted the attacker from the area, Guthrie said.

The inmate was taken to Angleton-Danbury with stab wounds in his chest and back, Guthrie said. He was in stable condition late Wednesday, he said.

The identities of the two victims were withheld until relatives could be notified, he said.

Thirteen of the 274 knifings that have occurred this year have been fatal, surpassing nine deaths recorded in all of 1983, Guthrie said.

Guthrie said the dead inmate was serving a 30-year sentence for an aggravated robbery conviction in Tarrant County and had been under administrative segregatation for violating prison rules.

He walked into the dayroom after being stabbed in the chest and was taken to Angleton-Danbury Hospital, about 25 miles away, where he died about two hours later, Guthrie said.

Guards found an ice pick rod in the area but Guthrie said authorities have no "hard suspects."

"There were about 14 inmates, all considered difficult people to manage, who were in the area at the time and all are potential suspects," he said.

Ms. Hernandez indicated that the plaintiffs would be willing to compromise on certain aspects of the dispute, but expressed confidence that single-member districts would soon be a reality in Midland.

"We will consider all our options," she said, "But we're definitely going to get it."

Parker vows to continue duties despite indictments

Carl Parker

BEAUMONT (AP) — A beleaguered state Sen. Carl Parker, when asked by well-wishers what could be done to help him fight pornography and prostitution charges, urged them to "just say kind words."

Parker, one of the Legislature's most powerful members, vowed Wednesday to continue his duties in Austin despite indictments charging him with wholesaling obscene materials and supervising a prostitution ring.

He kept a scheduled public appearance Wednesday night in Beaumont at a banquet, attended by several hundred people, called "A Southeast Texas Celebration of Women In Texas Inc."

Parker, who received polite applause when he was introduced, presented a proclamation from Gov. Mark White to banquet organizers about Women in Texas Week.

The banquet's keynote speaker, Sarah Weddington, former legislator and currently director of the Texas Office of State-Federal regulations, skipped over the indictment controversy and called attention to Parker and his role in the special session's education reform bill.

Well-wishers came up to shake the senator's hand, and when one asked what could be done to help, Parker replied: "Just say kind words."

During the summer's session, the Port Arthur Democrat was instrumental in shepherding Gov. White's education reform bill through the Senate.

STATE

Earlier Wednesday, Parker declared at a news conference that "I'm not guilty" of the charges leveled at him the day before by a Jefferson County grand jury.

Parker is charged with aggravated promotion of prostitution, wholesale promotion of obscene material and aggravated perjury. The perjury charge involved an appearance Friday before the Jefferson County grand jury.

The veteran legislator said the allegations left him "stunned and heartsick, because I know what these charges will put my family through in the coming months. I have been wrongfully accused and that hurts."

Parker said he will plead innocent to the charges, but declined to discuss the specific allegations against him.

Parker, a 21-year veteran of the Legislature and chairman of the Senate Education Committee, is the second person to be indicted in connection with the investigation of Happy Times Video Co.

Authorities on April 19 confiscated 409 videotapes described as pornographic from Happy Times. The company operated out of a house owned by Parker, and Daniel Lee, the only other person indicted by the grand jury.

Parker, 50, has said previously he sold his share of the house to Lee on June 5. He has said he knew nothing of Lee's activities.

Sisters get 15-year sentences

DALLAS (AP) — Two husbands still say they want their murder-plotting wives back home, but state District Judge Ed Kinkeade says they're going to jail.

After 1½ days of testimony, Kinkeade sentenced the two sisters Wednesday to 15 years in prison for plotting their husbands' murders to collect $15,000 in life insurance benefits.

Lawayne Bancker and Dorothy Watts Scrivano pleaded guilty on Monday to charges of soliciting capital murder, but their husbands pleaded for mercy at Wednesday's sentencing hearing.

"She belongs back with me," said Adrian Bancker, a terminal cancer patient whose wife testified that she told a prospective hitman she "wouldn't mind seeing Adrian suffer a little bit."

Mrs. Bancker, 45, and Mrs. Scrivano, 53, could have received up to life in prison, but both Bancker and Frank Scrivano asked Kinkeade to give the women probation. Prosecutors had asked for 40-year sentences.

"I don't want her to go to prison. I want her home with me," Scrivano testified Tuesday. "When she's not drunk, she's the sweetest thing you ever saw."

Scrivano and Bancker visited their wives in jail and told reporters they didn't think their wives would have carried out the death plot. Scrivano said he thought his wife was "set up" by police.

"Deep down, I have this feeling it was all a mistake," Bancker said Tuesday.

Mrs. Scrivano wept when she took the witness stand and told Kinkeade, "I probably don't deserve him (Scrivano), but I love him so much and I'm just so proud of him."

In tape-recorded testimony presented Monday, the two women were heard telling undercover police officer Charles Jackson — whom they thought was a hit man — that their marriages were unhappy and they wanted their husbands murdered.

"I can't take this kind of life anymore," Mrs. Scrivano tells Jackson on one tape. "Life's too...short to spend in misery."

The two were arrested in a K Mart parking lot April 24 after allegedly giving Jackson $1,100 as a down payment for murder.

Man outraged; Son's attacker not imprisoned

HOUSTON (AP) — The father of an 8-year-old boy molested in a supermarket says he's outraged and bitter that a "gutless" jury granted probation to the attacker "who should have been put away."

The father said Tuesday he is still shocked that jurors let 41-year-old Ronald Blankenship go free on five years' probation and with a $5,000 fine.

"I expected any honest and righteous juror, anyone with the common sense of a crawdad, to put this guy away," the father said. "He's a menace. I was so sure we'd get justice in this case, and what we got instead was the release of a man who should have been put away."

The father screamed at jurors last Friday after the sentence was announced, calling them "gutless wonders" who should take responsibility for the counseling his son will require. He was quickly led from the room by a bailiff.

The man said he expected Blankenship to receive at least two years of prison time.

"My son asked me what they did to the man who hurt him," he said. "When I told him they let him go, he just looked at me. All my life I've taught him to depend on the system, but the system let that man go."

The father says his child is "as different as night and day" since he was attacked June 14.

"He won't go out at night," he said. "He doesn't want to be alone anymore. He's leery of everyone. I believe that man hurt my son in more ways than I can even imagine."

Jurors said they believed Blankenship was genuinely sorry for hurting the boy. Among other things, his sentence also includes 20 hours of public service each week for five years and requires him to pay for any psychiatric counseling the boy needs. It also stipulates he must attend church twice each Sunday.

Bentsen: Democrats have not 'written off' Texas

Lloyd Bentsen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic Party has pledged slightly less for get-out-the-vote this year for Texas than it did two years ago but that doesn't mean the state is a write-off, says Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Bentsen said Wednesday the party and the Mondale presidential campaign have pledged $1.1 million for this fall. In the 1982 senate and congressional races, the amount of money for get-out-the-vote was $1.25 million, he said.

But Bentsen said he met last week with Mondale aides and said they have not chalked up Texas to the Reagan column.

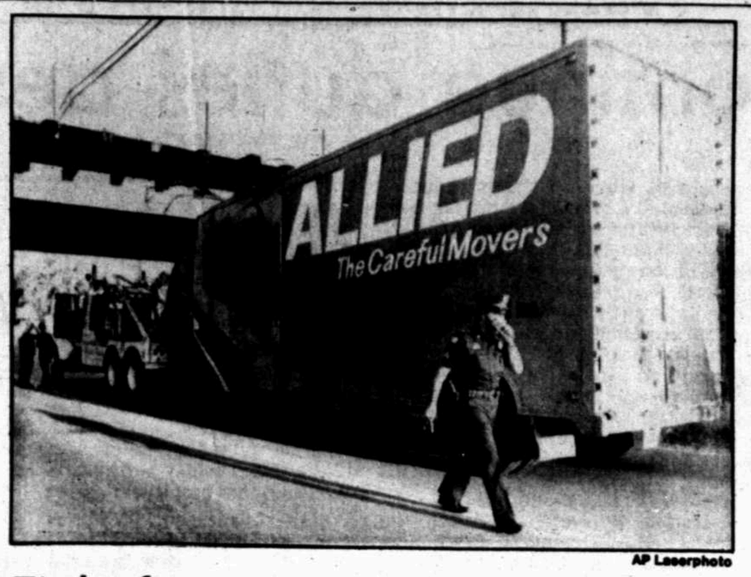

Mondale spokeswoman Janice LaChance said the campaign is not giving out campaign budget figures because "it's changing all the time."

"Texas is a priority," she said. "We haven't written it off. Writing it off would mean we could all go home."

Bentsen told reporters at his regularly scheduled news conference, however, that "as of today" President Reagan would be re-elected.

Bentsen said state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, the Democratic nominee for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by John Tower, will have to play catch-up with his Republican opponent, U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm, on television advertising.

Doggett received on Tuesday another $300,000 from the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, which Bentsen chairs, bringing his total to $450,000, with more to come, Bentsen said.

Bell breakup compared to Humpty Dumpty fall

AUSTIN (AP) — The "beautiful baby" that should have been created by the Bell System breakup nine months ago has not appeared, according to the chairman of Oklahoma's utility regulation.

"We're nine months into divestiture. A beautiful baby should have done been born. Apparently it was stillborn," Oklahoma Corporation Commission Chairman Hamp Baker told the Texas-Oklahoma Telephone Convention on Wednesday.

He drew loud applause.

Baker compared the Bell breakup to Humpty Dumpty's fabled fall.

"What everyone is trying to do is take that egg and make an omelet out of it," he said.

Phil Ricketts, chairman of the Texas Public Utility Commission, told the convention state utility regulators are frustrated by a loss of control over the telephone industry.

"We had little and virtually no input into the basic issue of divestiture (of American Telephone & Telegraph)," he said. "But we, in one sense, are the ones that get to deliver the bill to the consumer for events taking place at the federal level."

Federal court and Federal Communications Commission decisions have dictated state action in telephone cases, and state officials have faced a series of complicated cases as a result of the AT&T divestiture.

State officials also must weigh the effects on the growing number of long distance companies. Overall, state regulators find themselves in a "confounding position," Ricketts said.

"We are finding ourselves the subject and brunt of so many events that we have no control over," he said. "We had little, virtually no input into the basic issues in divestiture."

Pilot barnstorms over INS office

HARLINGEN (AP) — He may not be the Red Baron, but that didn't stop Jeanmarie Garric from using the famous flyer's tactics to try to plow through some red tape.

Garric, a Frenchman who is living in Edinburg on a tourist's visa, wants to stay in the United States long enough to restore five World War II Russian fighter planes.

To make sure the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service didn't dally on his application, the former French Air Force captain decided to "bomb" the INS office here Wednesday with a streamer-wrapped petition for a temporary employment visa.

Strapped into an open-cockpit "Tiger Moth" biplane, Garric made three low-level barnstorming swoops before completing his publicity stunt.

INS officials, who knew about the stunt in advance, were unmoved. They said Garric's application would be processed like anybody else's.

Laurier B. McDonald, an Edinburg immigration and nationality lawyer, said Garric needs the temporary work visa so he can restore Russian Yak planes, which are currently awaiting customs clearance in Houston. The Soviet aircraft will be restored at a Hidalgo County airport, McDonald said.

He said Garric's flight was intended to illustrate his "distinguished abilities" as an aircraft restorer, one of the INS's requirements for the temporary employment visa.

Garric restored the British Royal Air Force "Tiger Moth" biplane he flew to drop his petition on the INS, literally out of the sky.

He got the old two-seater plane, which the RAF used before World War II as a pilot-trainer, from Belgium's Sabena Airlines several years ago.

McDonald said Sabena bought the plane from the British shortly after the war, and it lay abandoned in a hangar for more than 20 years before Garric rescued it.

The Yak fighters will probably end up in the Confederate Air Force in Harlingen after they are restored, McDonald said. Garric is a CAF colonel and an enthusiastic backer of the museum of World War II era military aircraft.

The Yak fighters were smuggled from a undisclosed location by an unnamed Frenchman who insists on remaining anonymous to protect his sources. McDonald said "French money" is behind the Yak restoration project, but declined to identify the owner of the airplanes.

The propeller-drive Yak fighters were used by the Soviets during World War II, and retained an active role in the air forces of the Soviet Union and its satellite nations well into the 1950s.

Austin residents opposed to nude statues

AUSTIN (AP) — People have written to say they find disgusting the idea of sculptures of five dancing nude figures gracing the front of a new office building planned in Austin.

One person wrote to say it was "too early for Austin" and suggested five Lone Star beer longnecks instead.

Two real estate leasing agents also have advised against the nude sculptures, saying "it will hurt the building."

But developer Frans Posse said he's gotten some favorable response to the idea and plans to go ahead with the $70,000 project.

"The more information I get the more inclined I am to do this. I have the impression that this is quite the time to do this. Austin is growing, changing."

Posse, managing director of the firm based in the Netherlands Antilles, said he plans to commission a bronze casting of Five Dancers, a life-size sculpture of five joyous female figures by Belgian artist Mariette Teugels, to grace the entrance to the development.

Posse is making plans to put the statuary outside his Nater Investments office development on Loop 360. Construction is to begin in March on the 270,000-square-foot development, called The Setting, at Lost Creek Boulevard.

Posse's home has several lifesize Teugel sculptures around his swimming pool, including one of two naked women and a naked man running.

Geraldine Ferraro turns to wave to the crowd gathered on a balcony for a rally in downtown Columbus Wednesday. Ferraro completed a campaign tour through Ohio with the rally.

Ferraro still on offensive

NEW YORK (AP) — Under attack from leaders of her own church and facing investigation by congressional colleagues, Geraldine Ferraro is still on the offensive, hammering away at President Reagan's policies and his "Madison Avenue version of America."

But almost every time the Democratic vice presidential nominee tried Wednesday to criticize Reagan for what she thinks are unfair budget policies, her points were lost in the attention to her stand on abortion.

At a rally in Scranton, Pa., the New York congresswoman, a Catholic, said that when she takes an oath of office, she promises to serve the people of every faith, not just her own.

And she promised to resign as congresswoman or vice president if her private faith conflicted with her public duties.

"If ever my conscience or my religious views prevented me from carrying out those duties — either as a member of Congress or as vice president of the United States — to the best of my ability, then I would resign my office before I would betray the public trust," she said.

Ms. Ferraro also quoted John F. Kennedy, who said in Texas 24 years ago Wednesday, "I do not speak for my church on public matters. Neither does the church speak for me."

"That is exactly my position," Ms. Ferraro said.

In Washington, the House ethics committee voted unanimously to investigate whether Ms. Ferraro violated financial disclosure requirements of the Ethics in Government Act, and she in turn issued a statement.

"I have made the most complete and thorough disclosure of any candidate for national office in American history," Ms. Ferraro said. "I will cooperate fully with the committee, and I look forward to a favorable outcome."

Ms. Ferraro, who planned to film campaign commercials Thursday, appeared at nuclear freeze rally in Cranford, N.J., Wednesday afternoon and said Democratic Presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale deserves credit for pushing Reagan into meeting with Soviet foreign minister Andrei Gromyko.

"Ronald Reagan has finally agreed to meet the Soviet foreign minister — one month before the election," she said. "Walter Mondale deserves a finder's fee for that meeting."

Ms. Ferraro chose the Scranton rally for her comments about religion because Scranton Bishop James Timlin, following the lead of New York Archbishop James J. O'Connor, had publicly criticized her for supporting a woman's right to have an abortion.

Asked if he distinguished between the views of Vice President George Bush and Ms. Ferraro, Timlin said, "It's a little bit different because Geraldine is a Catholic and is making it clear she's a Catholic. Mr. Bush is not. Mr. Bush's position, as I hear it, is that he's holding out just for (abortions to be permitted in the case of) rape. Geraldine is saying it's all right for anyone."

At the rally, Ms. Ferraro said her religion is "a very private and personal matter."

Amendment expected to die in House

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of President Reagan's pet legislative initiatives, a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget, likely will die for the year in the House of Representatives today.

Reagan has made the amendment one of his election-year goals and has repeatedly urged the Democrat-controlled House to act on such a measure.

But Democratic leaders who control the legislative agenda in the chamber have refused to bring the measure to the floor.

In response, Reagan's Republican allies have mounted a discharge petition drive to force a floor vote on the issue.

But such a petition would require the signatures of 218 House members, and supporters of the move said Wednesday they were still about 30 signatures short of the goal and did not expect to get the required signatures today.

Under the parliamentary procedures for such a petition, when 218 signatures are obtained, the petition cannot be acted upon for seven working days. Then, the affected legislation only can be brought to the House floor on the second or fourth Monday of each month.

Seven working days from today would go through Sept. 24, the fourth Monday of this month.

Mondale tries to shake Reagan's hold on voters in Deep South

TUPELO, Miss. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale, unable to shake questions about the finances of running mate Geraldine Ferraro, is back in the Deep South trying to shake Ronald Reagan's hold on voters.

"We're behind in the region," Mondale conceded Wednesday during an interview with editors and broadcasters.

"But I think we're going to start gaining," he added. "You see, the campaign is just starting to focus and I believe as we start moving, you're going to see a big pickup."

Mondale hopes that lingering unemployment in such Southern states as Alabama and problems faced by farmers throughout the region will cause some voter disaffection with the Republican president.

The Democratic presidential nominee was emphasizing agricultural issues in appearances today in Mississippi and Tennessee.

Mondale devoted most of his time in Tupelo to interviews with regional editors and television stations.

A Mondale political aide, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, said the candidate would make weekly forays into the South from now until Election Day.

The aide questioned the accuracy of polling data put out by the Reagan campaign which says that despite the amount of time Mondale has spent in the South, he has failed to make a dent in the president's lead in the region.

"Our polling figures tell us we've gained," the aide said.

Mondale had a good day on the campaign Wednesday, his rhetoric sharp and well received by good crowds in Davenport, Iowa, and Peoria, Ill.

Under sunny skies, several thousand people in Peoria heard Mondale call budget cuts sought by Reagan "cruel and uncaring and mean to people in need."

He said the president was "not against all taxes, he's just against taxes that ask the wealthy and the big corporations to pay their fair share."

Continuing to press his demand that Reagan details how he would deal with budget deficits, Mondale said, "Mr. Reagan is stonewalling the American people and that won't play in Peoria."

Mondale added that "I've got Mr. Reagan on the run on this tax issue."

As he arrived in Peoria he was told that the House Ethics Committee had announced in response to a complaint from the Washington Legal Foundation, a conservative group, that it would investigate whether Ms. Ferraro had violated congressional rules by not disclosing her husband's finances.

Later in the day, Mondale said that under the rules of the House, the ethics committee had little choice but to act on the complaint by what the candidate called "that right wing group."

"I have absolutely no doubt that Geraldine Ferraro will be vindicated," he said. "She's answered all questions and disclosed more fully than any candidate who's ever run for national office."

Asked if he were concerned the renewed questions would distract from the issues he was trying to raise in his campaign, Mondale said, "No, I don't think so. I think the American people are seeing a point that I think is very, very important.

Teen scares man to death

DETROIT (AP) — A teen-ager was charged with murder in the death of a 94-year-old man who died of fright after three youths burst into his home and robbed him of 80 cents, authorities said.

Alvin White, 18, was arrested after police tracking dogs led officers to the suspect's home, authorities said.

White was charged Tuesday with murder and breaking and entering at a hearing before Detroit District Court Magistrate Vesta Svenson.

Two other youths, ages 13 and 14, were being held in the Wayne County Youth Home facing murder and breaking and entering charges in juvenile court, said Wayne County Assistant Prosecutor Charles Marr. Marr said the youths are too young to be charged as adults.

Faro Ruffino collapsed as one youth yelled at him and demanded money, taking about 80 cents, and as another youth ransacked the house on the city's west side, according to court documents.

Ruffino died at Botsford General Hospital in suburban Farmington of a heart attack caused by emotional trauma.

Veterans, others to be honored on stamps

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's veterans of World War I and Korea, wildlife artist John James Audubon, composer Jerome Kern and author Sinclair Lewis are among those who will be honored on postage stamps next year, the U.S. Postal Service reports.

In addition, blocks of stamps will be issued featuring seashells, duck decoys and horses, postal officials said.

The block of four horse stamps will depict the Appaloosa, Morgan, quarter horse and saddlebred. The duck decoys will also be issued in a block of four, in the American Folk Art Series, while there will be five seashells in that series to be issued in booklet form.

The stamp recalling Aubudon marks the 200th anniversary of his birth. Also being honored with stamps on the second century of their births will be educator Alden Partridge and Army engineer Sylvanus Thayer.

Stamps will also mark the 100th annivrsary of the birth of Kern, Lewis, journalist Walter Lippmann and Admiral Chester W. Nimitz.

The World War I veterans stamp is scheduled to be issued on Nov. 11, Veterans Day.

The stamp honoring Korean War veterans will be issued in Washington on July 26.

In addition, an aerogramme, a special one-piece air-mail letter, will be issued commemorating Mark Twain. It marks the 150th year of his birth and the 100th anniversary of the publication of the "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn."

Other commemorative stamps planned for 1985 will include issues honoring Statue of Liberty sculptor F.A. Bartholdi, a stamp featuring the word "Love," a block of four marking the International Year of Youth and commemoratives for Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls and YMCA.

Not all the dates for stamp releases have been set yet, but the tentative schedule so far is:

—Jan. 25, Great Amgricans series stamp honoring Abraham Baldwin. To be issued in Athena, Ga., to mark the 200th anniversary of the U.S. state university system.

—Late January, Performing Arts series stamp honoring Kern, to be issued in New York City.

—Feb. 7, Great Americans stamp honoring Sinclair Lewis, at Sauk Center, Minn.

—Feb. 12, Alden Partridge stamp in the Great Americans series, at Northfield, Vt.

—Feb. 22, also in the Great Americans series, Nimitz stamp, to be issued at Fredericksburg, Texas.

—February or March: Mary McLeod Bethune stamp in the Black Heritage series, honoring this noted educator and consultant in interracial affairs who founded the National Council of Negro Women. Location to be announced.

—April 23, Public Education in America stamp, to be issued in Boston marking the 350th anniversary of the Boston Latin School.

—Apr. 26, Audubon stamp, at New York City.

—May. 11, 50th anniversary of rural electrification, location to be anmounced.

—June 9, Sylvanus Thayer, West Point, N.Y., where he helped establish the U.S. Military Scademy.

—July 25, Gen. Henry Knox, Revolutionary War leader and first Secretary of War, at Thomaston, Maine.

—July 26, Korean War Veterans, recognizing the date the truce was signed, to be issued in Washington, D.C.

—Aug. 16, Social Security Commemorative, location to be announced, —September, Walter Lippmann, during the convention of the National Newspaper Association in Minneapolis, Minn.

—Oct. 30, traditional and contemporary Christmas stamps.

—Nov. 11, World War I veterans stamp, location to be announced.

Trail turns to terror for hikers

HONOLULU (AP) — Five masked men, some brandishing automatic weapons, tied up 25 hikers on a secluded trail and robbed them of cameras, jewelry and other valuables, police said.

One of holdup men said "Aloha" to a victim just before fleeing.

"About half way up we were jumped by at least three guys with some automatic weapons and pistols. Their faces were wrapped in T-shirts," said Lynn Balthazor, of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., after Wednesday's ordeal. "They already had about 15 people when we joined them, and they took about another nine after us."

"The guy put his gun to my face, and said: 'How does that feel?'" said Bill Reed, also of Ft. Lauderdale. "I said: 'cold.'"

Balthazor and Reed, traveling together, gave the bandits both their cameras and the little cash they were carrying.

Police said the bandits used tape to bind their first victims, tying up later hikers with their own clothing, police said. As of Wednesday night, policed had yet tallied the bandits' take. There were no reports of injuries or gunfire.

One victim, Eve Field of Newport Beach, Calif., said one of the masked men respected her request that she keep her backpack.

"I looked at him and said: 'Don't take that, it holds my medicine,'" said Mrs. Field. "So when they sat me down, he left the backpack on me."

Mrs. Field said the robbers took several pieces of jewelry.

The 2.2-mile trail is located in a remote area on the eastern side of the Island of Oahu. The trail ends at a scenic waterfall feeding a fresh water pool at its foot.

After the number of victims swelled to more than two dozen, the robbers fled the wooded area. They were still at large Wednesday night. The victims, who were left bound along the trail, eventually freed themselves and alerted authorities by phone from a store located near the trailhead, police said.

While robberies have occurred in the past on the remote trail, police said none involved as many victims as Wednesday's mass holdup.

"When they were leaving, do you know what one of them said to me?" Mrs. Field said. "He said: 'Aloha, see you next summer.'"

Meese prober turns over his findings to court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The independent counsel investigating Attorney General-designate Edwin Meese III has turned over his findings to a three-judge panel, according to a source familiar with the case.

The source, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said Jacob A. Stein submitted a draft of his findings Wednesday to the panel of U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals judges. The panel appointed Stein in April to conduct a broad probe into the activities of Meese, President Reagan's White House counselor.

The judges now must decide whether to make public all or part of the report.

Reagan nominated his longtime aide on Jan. 23 after Attorney General William French Smith said he wanted to return to private life. Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, led by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio, raised questions about Meese's financial ties with people who received federal appointments. Meese denied any wrongdoing throughout the hearings.

In March, the committee put the nomination on hold at Meese's request after Smith asked a three-judge panel to appoint an independent counsel to probe Meese's affairs.

Stein was to investigate Meese's financial relations with six acquaintances who received federal posts; his knowledge, if any, about the papers that were taken in 1980 from the re-election campaign of President Carter; and allegations that Meese improperly played a role in his own promotion in the Army Reserve.

Thurmond said he feared that election-year politics would interfere with any further consideration of the nomination.

NATION IN BRIEF

Striking unions to appeal ruling

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The chief negotiator for 13 unions that have struck the Phelps Dodge Corp. for 14 months said the unions will appeal a ruling that copper workers hired to replace strikers are permanent employees.

Wednesday's ruling by Milo Price, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, is a major setback for the strikers because it prevents them from voting in an election on union representation.

Price did not set an election date, but said he expected the voting on who represents the workers in dealings with the nation's No. 2 copper producer to start in four to six weeks.

Officials find smoke, not fire on jet

BOSTON (AP) — Officials found smoke but no fire on a passenger jet that made an unscheduled landing after signal lights indicated a fire on board as the plane was en route to New York from West Germany.

A signal light indicator proved faulty, and Pan Am Flight 73 took off after nearly five hours on the ground Wednesday night to complete its journey to New York, said Ann Whyte, a Pan American World Airways spokeswoman.

"There was no sign of fire on board" the Boeing 747, said Massachusetts Port Authority spokesman Nick Lamberti.

The lights had indicated a fire in the cargo area, where officials said they saw some smoke.

Officers to take early retirement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The two top-ranking officers of the 650,000-member Communications Workers of America have told the union's governing board they will take early retirement.

The surprising decision by the pair to relinquish the jobs apparently was related to the timing of their scheduled retirements in 1986, when the CWA is due to negotiate a new contract with the telephone industry.

Union officials, who agreed to discuss the situation Wednesday only on grounds they not be identified, revealed that Glenn E. Watts, CWA president, and Louis Knecht, the secretary-treasurer, gave the word to the union's executive board earlier this week during a meeting in Keystone, Colo.

The presidential term of Watts, 64, is not scheduled to expire until the summer of 1986, as is the case with Knecht, 64.

Film may have provoked murderer

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A handyman who said a horror movie provoked him to kill an elderly couple for whom he had worked will be sentenced Nov. 2 after a jury recommended he be executed.

Richard Delmer Boyer, 26, of El Monte was convicted Aug. 16 of stabbing to death Francis Harbitz, 67, and his wife, Aileen Rose Harbitz, 68. The jury recommendation was made Wednesday.

A judge can either sentence Boyer to death or to life in prison with no possibility of parole.

Boyer claimed he was having flashbacks to the film "Halloween II" when he stabbed the couple.

Father denies charges in deaths

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A father has denied charges lodged against him after his two young daughters died in the back seat of a car where they were left in estimated 120-degree temperatures.

Quindell Lewis, 24, was ordered held on $50,000 bond Wednesday pending a bail review hearing Monday. He pleaded innocent to charges of involuntary manslaughter and felony child endangerment.

Senior Citizens voicing fears about medicare

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

Senior citizens are taking to the streets in about 90 cities today to demonstrate their concern for the health of Medicare.

According to the National Council of Senior Citizens, coordinating "Senior Health Action Day" demonstrations, the elderly will hear and make speeches, conduct rallies, stage marches and take other actions to impress upon presidential candidates Ronald Reagan and Walter F. Mondale their insistence that ways be found to save Medicare.

The government's health insurance program faces a financial crisis as grave as the one that confronted Social Security before Congress enacted a bipartisan rescue plan this year.

ACCORDING TO the organizers, senior citizens in Knoxville, Tenn., were to wear price tags on parts of their bodies to represent the cost of recent operations. In Chicago, petitions in the form of a roll of bandages were being presented to Reagan-Bush campaign headquarters.

In Indianapolis, Ind., senior citizens were to register voters in a downtown area at lunchtime; in Seattle, Wash., a giant "get well card" was to be unveiled; in Columbus, Ohio, a lunch of "depression beans and cornbread" was being served at St. Stephen's Community House; and in Fall River, Mass., Gov. Michael Dukakis was expected to speak at a rally in the Lincoln Park amusement park ballroom, according to the council.

In Washington, D.C., the elderly were gathering outside Reagan-Mondale re-election headquarters on Capitol Hill to demand a response to their concerns, organizers said. Seniors New Cumberland, Pa., planned a motorcade to Republican state headquarters in Harrisburg to demonstrate with a large bottle containing dozens of small prescription bottles representing the out-of-pocket costs Medicare patients must pay.

Eric Shulman, legislative director for the council, said a chart showing proposals endorsed by Mondale for overcoming the financial crisis for Medicare and showing what President Reagan has proposed to do will be erected at many of the demonstrations.

The council sent a questionnaire to both candidates asking for their reaction to five proposals that have been advanced for protecting the elderly from various forms of increases in the fees they pay under Medicare and ways to contain the costs of Medicaid, which provides medical care for the poor.

The organization said it got no reply from Reagan. Mondale supported all five proposals and pledged that if he is elected he will propose legislation that would prevent doctors from charging elderly patients more than what Medicare pays for services performed.

UNDER EXISTING law, doctors can charge above what Medicare allows — and patients must pay the difference from their own pockets.

The Reagan administration Wednesday endorsed a campaign by the American Association of Retired Persons, the nation's largest organization of the elderly, to encourage doctors to accept Medicare fees as full payment for treating the elderly.

Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret M. Heckler endorsed the plan at a Washington news conference.

Under the AARP plan, physicians will have to decide whether to sign a written agreement stating they will accept Medicare "assignment" as full payment for their services.

When a physician accepts assignment, he agrees that Medicare's reasonable charge for a service will be all that he collects for his services. Medicare pays 80 percent of this reasonable charge and the patients pay the rest. When physicians do not accept assignment, patients must pay the extra cost above Medicare's reasonable fee levels.

Doctors are being offered special incentives to sign up. Their names would be included in a special directory which will be made available to consumers through a toll-free hotline.

Reagan administration warns of possible guerrilla offensive

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is warning again about an expected fall offensive by leftist Salvadoran guerrillas, in the wake of "fairly reliable" intelligence reports that new attacks are imminent.

U.S. sources said the reports foresee the offensive starting possibly as early as this week. But the sources, speaking only on the condition that they not be identified, cautioned that the guerrillas might be incapable of carrying out their plans.

One senior State Department official said U.S. analysts have "some doubt that the guerrillas can meet their deadline." He added that the guerrillas have "set (other) dates in the past couple of months and have been unable to get their act together and had to delay them."

U.S. officials have praised the Salvadoran army recently for greater aggressiveness that has put leftist insurgents on the defensive in the 5-year-old civil war. The army has also been bolstered by $196.5 million in U.S. military aid this year, more than double the 1983 amount.

Since spring, Reagan administration officials have claimed the guerrillas would mount a fall offensive timed to embarrass President Reagan's re-election campaign and take advantage of the Americans elections to limit the range of U.S. responses.

Asked Wednesday about the possibility of an imminent offensive, Alberto Arene, a Salvadoran guerrilla representative in Washington, confirmed the possibility of stepped-up rebel activity but added that he did not foresee a "particular" offensive by the 10,000-man guerrilla force.

Arene said increased attacks by government forces and Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte's rejection of the guerrillas' latest calls for peace talks left the rebels little choice but to continue fighting.

"The rejection of those initiatives means a commitment to war (by Duarte and Reagan) and for us to continue with military initiatives," he said in an interview. "Some people...are more interested in dialogue when there is a stronger military position on our part."

On the question of whether a fall offensive was in the offing, the rebel representative answered: "Military offensives are not announced. When the conditions on the ground are favorable and the political situation makes it necessary, you push that sort of initiative."

The American sources would not disclose details about the U.S. intelligence, but said guerrilla attacks are expected to focus on cutting highways and could include an assault on the government's military airport at Ilopango, where the American-supplied Salvadoran air force is based.

"They want to try to raise all the havoc they can," said one high-level administration official.

Plantin' Texas

We know any number of good ol' boys — and girls — who'll get a chuckle out of the new state policy announced by Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower Tuesday that from now on the state will landscape all public buildings and property with native Texas plants.

They'll laugh about the prospect of state officials lining the walks to public buildings with prickly pear and thorny mesquite shrubs and of looking at the latest in architectural grandeur across a field of waving buffalo grass. We have to admit that some of the endless possibilities even strike us as humorous.

But don't laugh too quickly. Hightower and Lady Bird Johnson, who he calls the "first lady of wildflowers," and a host of other state officials are deadly serious. And beyond that, the new policy has merit when you stop to think about it.

In Dallas and Houston, San Antonio and, yes, even in Midland and Odessa landscaping has become more and more exotic in recent years and less and less realistic, generally speaking of course. That's because of a simple fact those of us in this part of the state keep being reminded of over and over: Texas can little afford to be lavish in the greenery it plants around public or private buildings. Not because we can't afford it; we can. We just can't afford to keep exotic, water-siphoning plants up to their crowns in cool, fresh water when the state's suffering from a serious shortage of the stuff. It simply doesn't make sense to keep watering these guzzling plants, particularly when farmers' crops are dying, ranchers are selling off what of their herds haven't starved to death and people in many Texas cities are forced to ration their water.

Charles House, president of the Texas Association of Nurserymen, put it this way: "After all this extreme weather, there is no better time to re-introduce our low maintenance native plants."

According to Hightower, the state highway department plans to use 60 percent of the $1.5 million it gets for highway landscaping in purchasing native plants. He then went a step further in justifying this change by saying, "Why use our taxpayers' money to buy plants from California, Florida or even Japan when we can find hardier, cheaper and prettier plants right here at home?"

We'll add this note: Texas has an abundance of colorful but unheralded plants that would give public buildings or private homes true Texas flavoring and beauty. Good examples are the oak trees that have been planted in past years in Midland, the purple sage planted just outside Odessa and the large, old mesquite trees in some residential sections of Abilene.

When that striking beauty of the plants is mixed with the water savings and hardiness most of the plants will bring to the areas in which they're used, the logic of this new policy is undeniable.

Oh there'll be some who won't care for the change. There always are. Maybe their minds will be changed when they see the multi-faceted beauty the plants offer.

They're bound to get used to it. After all, there was a time a few years back when the armadillo wasn't culturally chic. Look at 'em now!

Free trade works

President Reagan was clearly right to deny protection to the American copper producers. To refuse to protect a domestic industry in distress is always difficult for a president, and more difficult than ever in the midst of an election campaign. But it is generally true that import quotas and tariffs do more harm than good to the economy, and the copper industry is a particularly explicit example.

The American producers argued that their markets were being invaded by subsidized copper from abroad. Subsidized or not, the imports were setting the world price. If Mr. Reagan had given the producers the protection that they wanted, the immediate result would have been higher copper prices forced on all the American manufacturing industries that use copper. That in turn would have handicapped those American manufacturers in meeting their own foreign competition. As they lost sales, they then would have come to the government for protection from imports made with cheaper copper. Far more jobs would have been lost than saved.

Protecting primary metals is always particularly dangerous. If the government keeps out the crude metal because it is too cheap, it will enter the country in the form of finished products. That increases the impact on unemployment here.

Mr. Reagan's next major trade decision will be the steel case, due later this month. That one will be a good deal more important than the copper decision — in terms of jobs, dollars and implications for American industrial policy generally. But the issues will be similar. Again, the domestic industry claims that its foreign rivals are being subsidized. Again, it seeks import quotas that would raise steel prices for American manufacturers and leave them at a disadvantage in their own struggles to hold their markets against foreign competitors. A higher domestic price for steel would be welcomed by the steel makers, but it would be a real threat to American automobile manufacturers.

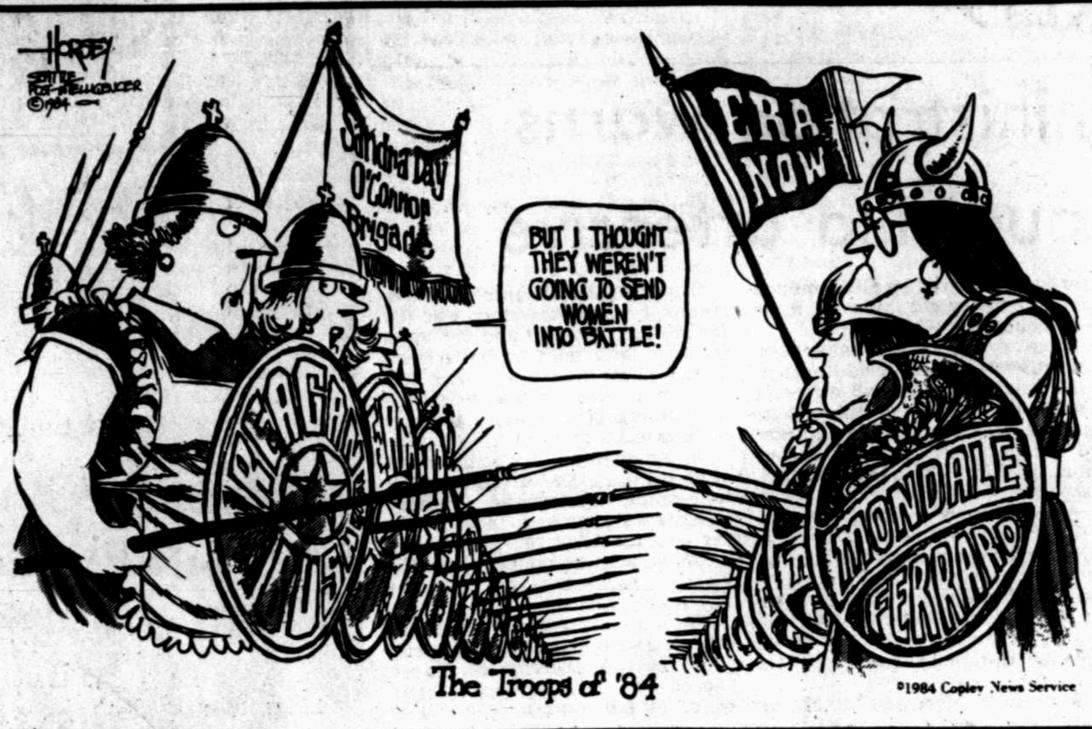

There has been much speculation that, as a matter of political tactics, denying protection to copper gives Mr. Reagan more latitude to help steel. Mr. Reagan has always strongly advocated open markets. In view of all those speeches and statements, according to this line of reasoning, perhaps he felt that he could not protect both the copper and steel industries — and, having to sacrifice one of them, chose the one that was less powerful and more dispensable. That suggestion seems excessively cynical, even by the standards of trade politics.

International trade is one area to which Mr. Reagan's doctrine of the free market really applies, and in which he can genuinely strengthen the economy by pursuing it. He followed the right principle in the copper decision, and the principle is the same in the steel case.

JACK ANDERSON

Hatfield-Tsakos link studied

WASHINGTON — FBI agents are scouring Washington for details of the relationship between Greek arms merchant Basil Tsakos and Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., and his wife, Antoinette.

Jack Anderson

The G-men have their work cut out for them trying to resolve contradictions in the various accounts of the payments that Mrs. Hatfield received from the Greek entrepreneur. She was paid $55,000 by Tsakos while her husband was helping to promote an oil-pipeline project for Tsakos.

At first, Hatfield claimed his wife was paid the money for locating and helping to decorate a Watergate apartment for Tsakos. This was disputed by the people who actually located and decorated the apartment.

Then the senator said his wife took the $55,000, in part, for searching for properties in this country for Tsakos and, in part, for trying to find buyers for two properties Tsakos owned in Europe. Her efforts did not result in any transactions.

Now here are the latest details in the peculiar Tsakos-Hatfield business relationship, unearthed by my associate Corky Johnson from sources close to Tsakos:

— In a reversal of their announced roles, Tsakos tried to help the Hatfields sell their home in Washington's fashionable Georgetown section. But unlike Mrs. Hatfield, who accepted $55,000 for helping Tsakos with his real estate problems, he wasn't paid for his efforts to help the Hatfields. In fact, it cost him a modest sum.

Early last year, Tsakos placed a classified ad in the International Herald Tribune, describing the Hatfields' N Street home and directing inquiries to Mrs. Hatfield's real estate firm in Washington, D.C.

Sources said Mrs. Hatfield dictated the wording of the ad by telephone to an employee of United General Enterprises, Tsakos' arms brokerage headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. The Tsakos employee telexed the ad copy to the newspaper's office near Geneva; the Trib sent back a copy of the ad and a bill for about $250; the employee paid the bill with a United General Enterprises check.

The ad ran twice, and the Tsakos firm sent Mrs. Hatfield a copy of the ad with a United General Enterprises card bearing the slogan "Pacemakers in International Trade." The Hatfields eventually sold their Georgetown home, though apparently not through the Tribune ad. Hatfield did not list the cost of the ad as a gift on his Senate financial disclosure form.

A Hatfield spokesman did not respond to repeated requests for an explanation.

— Mrs. Hatfield said some of the money she got was for the loan of furniture to the Tsakoses during the renovation of their Watergate apartment. Tsakos described the borrowed furniture as a "table to eat (on), chairs to sit (on)." But sources said the table was a rickety wooden folding affair about the size of a typewriter stand. They said a Watergate workman had to fix a broken leg on the table before it could be used.

Sources said the Hatfields also lent the Tsakoses a bedside lamp, but they could not recall the loan of any chairs.

— Some of the money paid to Mrs. Hatfield was for seeking office space to house Tsakos' pipeline company. But a Tsakos employee, working with another real estate agent, actually found the Watergate office that Tsakos rented.

Watergate manager Henry Winston said Tsakos sublet space from a firm named International Energy Associates, which paid the real estate agent about $300 in commission.

— Although Mrs. Hatfield said she tried to find buyers for apartments the Tsakoses owned in Paris and London, neither of these properties has been sold. In fact, sources claim, the Paris apartment was never up for sale, having been extensively renovated in neoclassic Greek style after its purchase in late 1982.

WITH FRIENDS LIKE THESE: Rather than helping Geraldine Ferraro in her difficulties over financial disclosures last month, Walter Mondale's campaign people actually made things worse for the embattled vice presidential nominee.

On Aug. 20, the day Ferraro and her husband, John Zaccaro, released their income tax returns, Mondale aides issued a statement intended to clear up an earlier disclosure that Zaccaro's partnership, the Second Grand Co., had leased office space to a pornography firm, Bo-Na-Te Distributors, in Manhattan.

The Mondale release named the Bo-Na-Te president who signed the lease: Nathan Gramma. What it failed to note was that Gramma has been linked in at least four law enforcement reports dating back to 1978 as an associate of an organized crime family.

Does this mean that Ferraro's husband was connected with the Mob? My associate Tony Capaccio called the Mondale people for further information, but they simply didn't call back.

Meanwhile, we checked the situation out through other sources. Official reports say Gramma was indeed tied to mobsters, but Zaccaro probably had no knowledge of that.

Zaccaro had no direct business dealings with Gramma, and has said Bo-Na-Te's lease will not be renewed when it expires in January.

Since the amount of the lease has not been disclosed, it's impossible to tell how much of the $69,504 Ferraro reported as income from Second Grand since 1983 came from the partnership's porno-dealing tenant.

GEORGE F. WILL

Springsteen teaches work ethic

WASHINGTON — What I did on my summer vacation:

My friend Bruce Springsteen...

George F. Will

Okay, he's only my acquaintance, but my children now think I am a serious person. I met him because his colleague Max Weinberg and Max's wife Rebecca invited me to enjoy Max's work, which I did. He plays drums for Springsteen, who plays rock and roll for purists, of whom there are lots. For ten shows in New Jersey, he recently sold 16,000 $16 tickets in the first hour, all 202,000 in a day. His albums can sell one million copies on the first day of release.

There is not a smidgen of androgyny in Springsteen who, rocketing around the stage in a T-shirt and headband, resembles Robert DeNiro in the combat scenes of "The Deerhunter." This is rock for the United Steelworkers, accompanied by the opening barrage of the battle of the Somme. The saintly Rebecca met me with a small pouch of cotton — for my ears, she explained. She thinks I am a poor specimen, I thought. I made it three beats into the first number before packing my ears.

I may be the only 43-year-old American so out of the swim that I do not even know what marijuana smoke smells like. Perhaps at the concert I was surrounded by controlled substances. Certainly I was surrounded by orderly young adults earnestly — and correctly — insisting that Springsteen is a wholesome cultural portent.

For the uninitiated, the sensory blitzkrieg of a Springsteen concert is stunning. For the initiated, which included most of the 20,000 the night I experienced him, the lyrics, believe it or not, are most important.

Today, "values" are all the rage, with political candidates claiming to have backpacks stuffed full of them. Springsteen's fans say his message affirms the right values. Certainly his manner does.

Many of his fans regarded me as exotic fauna at the concert (a bow tie and double-breasted blazer is not the dress code) and undertook to instruct me. A typical tutorial went like this:

Me: "What do you like about him?"

Male fan: "He sings about faith and traditional values."

Male fan's female friend, dryly: "And cars and girls."

Male fan: "No, no, it's about community and roots and perseverance and family."

She: "And cars and girls."

Let's not quibble. Cars and girls are American values, and this lyric surely expresses some elemental American sentiment: "Now mister the day my number comes in I ain't never gonna ride in no used car again."

Springsteen, a product of industrial New Jersey, is called the "blue-collar troubadour." But if this is the class struggle, its anthem — its "Internationale" — is the song that provides the title for his 18-month, worldwide tour: "Born in the U.S.A."

I have not got a clue about Springsteen's politics, if any, but flags get waved at his concerts while he sings songs about hard times. He is no whiner, and the recitation of closed factories and other problems always seems punctuated by a grand, cheerful affirmation: "Born in the U.S.A!"

His songs, and the engaging homilies with which he introduces them, tell listeners to "downsize" their expectations — his phrase, borrowed from the auto industry, naturally. It is music for saying good-bye to Peter Pan: Life is real, life is earnest, life is a lot of work, but...

"Friday night's pay night, guys fresh out of work Talking about the weekend, scrubbing off the dirt... In my head I keep a picture of a pretty little miss Someday mister I'm gonna lead a better life than this."

An evening with Springsteen — an evening tends to wash over into the a.m., the concerts lasting four hours — is vivid proof that the work ethic is alive and well. Backstage there hovers the odor of Ben-Gay: Springsteen is an athlete draining himself for every audience.

But, then, consider Max Weinberg's bandaged fingers. The rigors of drumming have led to five tendonitis operations. He soaks his hands in hot water before a concert, in ice afterward, and sleeps with tight gloves on. Yes, of course, the whole E Street Band is making enough money to ease the pain. But they are not charging as much as they could, and the customers are happy. How many American businesses can say that?

If all Americans — in labor and management, who make steel or cars or shoes or textiles — made their products with as much energy and confidence as Springsteen and his merry band make music, there would be no need for Congress to be thinking about protectionism. No "domestic content" legislation is needed in the music industry. The British and other invasions have been met and matched.

In an age of lackadaisical effort and slipshod products, anyone who does anything — anything legal — conspicuously well and with zest is a national asset.

ART BUCHWALD

Okay! No more Mr. Nice Guy!

Tip O'Neill has criticized Fritz Mondale for not running a hard-hitting personal campaign against President Reagan.

Art Buchwald

It's shaken the Mondale advisers and they had a meeting with the Democratic candidate to loosen him up.

"Fritz, you have to take the gloves off and show you're damn mad about what's going on in this country."

"I want to stick with the issues."

"The hell with the issues. Tomorrow you're going to address the steel workers and you have to prove you're one of them."

"How do I do that?"

"For one thing you might take off your suit coat when you talk to them."

"Gosh, I hate to take off my suit coat. I could get my white shirt dirty."

"Forget your shirt. And you could loosen your tie and open the button on your collar."

"In front of all the media?"

"We want you to look like a regular guy. Our surveys indicate that you're coming off stuffy and uptight."

"I don't care how I look. I believe this election should be decided on the massive budget deficits, waste in defense and tax breaks that go to the rich."

"We know what you believe. We also know what the voters are looking for. They're watching your style — and you don't have any."

"Of course I've got a style. I may not be as exciting as Ronald Reagan, but I'm very presidential, and when the people listen to what I have to say they'll forget his charisma."

"That's the problem, Fritz. They're not listening. You're putting the voters to sleep. Can't you get more anger in your voice when you're talking about jobs and Reagan's foreign policies?"

"Sure I can. I'm angry right now."

"Then why aren't you screaming at us and telling us we don't know what we're talking about?"

"I don't like to show my true feelings. People from Minnesota never do."

"Fritz, we're way behind in the polls. You have to prove you'll be a tough president, and no one can push you around. You're going to have to let the sparks fly, and whip up the crowds to a frenzy."

"If I do that they won't listen to the issues."

"You can deal with the issues AFTER the campaign. First you've got to win the election."

"Well, if you say so. After I take off my suit coat and open my tie, what do I do next?"

"Slam your fist against the podium for starters."

"I could hurt my hand."

"Okay, so if you hurt your hand we'll put a bandage on it. It will show the voters how angry you really are about the state of the nation."

"Reagan never slams his fist on the podium."

"He doesn't have to. He's the incumbent. Besides he's a natural Mr. Nice Guy. You can't beat a nice guy with another nice guy. Our only chance of winning is for you to convince the people that when you get in the White House you're going to be a first-class S.O.B. Can you do it?"

"Of course I can do it. Look, I'm taking off my coat and I'm opening my tie and I'm hitting my fist on the table. Now what?"

"Get angry because all the steel workers are losing their jobs."

"How's that?"

"Is that as angry as you can look?"

"It's the angriest you'll ever see me."

"Okay, it will have to do, until we think of something else."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Manufacturer boasts of Exocet missile hits

LONDON (AP) — The French manufacturer of the Exocet missile boasts in a full-page advertisement in The Economist magazine that the weapon has hit 103 vessels in the Persian Gulf and disabled at least 47.

"Exocet is and remains the leader in its category...that's why it upsets people so much," said the ad for Aerospatiale.

The figures used in the Aerospatiale ad exceed the number of ships confirmed hit by Lloyd's of London. The insurance underwriter has said 70 vessels were attacked in the gulf during the period cited in the ad.

France has supplied Exocet missiles to Iraq, which has used them in attacks on commercial shipping in its four-year-old war with Iran. Such attacks were stepped up this year after Iraq declared a blockade of Iranian oil ports.

Filipinos flee volcanoes

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Thousands of Filipinos fled today from villages around Mount Mayon as the volcano roared with a series of explosions, pouring out flaming lava and showering towns six miles away with ash, scientists reported.

Many of the evacuees carried their household goods with them, and some held umbrellas to protect them from falling ash.

No deaths or injuries were reported as government officials accounted for 15,243 evacuees, mostly women and children housed in school buildings.

The government's chief volcano expert, Rey Punongbayan, said the explosions, occurring about once an hour, might have relieved some pressure from molten lava bubbling deep in the volcano. If so, "there is less danger of a major, big eruption," he said.

Mount Mayon, 8,100-feet high, is about 200 miles southwest of Manila, in Albay province on the island of Luzon.

Soldiers, guerrillas killed

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — A colonel, three soldiers and six leftist guerrillas were killed in a gun battle near in a northern province near the Mexican border, the army reports.

A statement Wednesday from the army press office said Col. Victor Augusto Quilo Ayuso was among those killed when troops he was commanding were attacked by rebels during a routine patrol Tuesday.

The clash occurred in Petan province near the hamlet of Vista Hermosa and the Usumacinta River, which divides Guatemala from Mexico, the army said.

Orchestra routed by smell

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Cockroaches and a foul smell reportedly forced some members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra to check out of a government-run hotel.

The 140-member group, led by Indian-born conductor Zubin Mehta, arrived in the Indian capital Tuesday for five concerts in New Delhi, Bombay and Calcutta.

Several major newspapers reported that about 60 members left the Ashok Hotel in central New Delhi soon after they checked in, complaining that their rooms had cockroaches, bugs and a foul smell.

Some unidentified musicians were quoted as complaining about dirty toilets, exposed plumbing and a lack of electrical fittings.

Indian speaker resigns, collapses

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A state assembly speaker resigned and then collapsed today after failing to halt disruptions by backers of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi that delayed a showdown with opposition lawmakers.

The speaker of the Andhra Pradesh assembly, Gandhi loyalist M. Baga Reddy, collapsed and was hospitalized shortly after adjourning a chaotic session at which the opposition sought a vote of confidence on the new state chief minister appointed by Mrs. Gandhi's government, N. Bhaskara Rao.

The United News of India agency quoted a cardiologist as saying Reddy was a diabetic and suffered from high blood pressure.

Supporters of Andhra Pradesh opposition leader N.T. Rama Rao, who was dismissed as chief minister on Aug. 16, had threatened to mount nationwide protests if the government did not allow the confidence motion to come to a vote today. The vote — which the opposition describes as a test of Indian democracy — had been postponed both Tuesday and Wednesday.

Opposition leaders have accused Bhaskara Rao's supporters of creating pandemonium in the assembly in order to scuttle the confidence vote.

Thousands of people defied a curfew Wednesday to demonstrate support for Rama Rao, staging a procession in Hyderabad, the state capital.

Peres, Shamir finally form government

JERUSALEM (AP) — Shimon Peres, on the verge of becoming Israel's prime minister, announced today that he and outgoing Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir had formed a bipartisan government and would present it to Parliament this afternoon.

A deadlock between Peres' Labor Party and Shamir's Likud bloc was resolved after all-night negotiations to settle the question of naming a minor minister in the joint Cabinet.

"Despite all the difficulties until now and the problems we still face in the future we are convinced that we are off on a road which holds no little hope for the people and the state," Peres told reporters.

"We are sure that the formation of this government is necessary," said Shamir, who will act as foreign minister for two years before switching positions with Peres.

He told reporters that "we have no experience in this field. There are no precedents and we will have to use all our forces and resourcefulness to overcome the difficulties."

The Knesset, or Parliament, will convene for a vote of confidence in the new government following the signing of the Labor-Likud contract.

Labor and Likud will have an equal number of Cabinet members in the national unity government. Critics say the parity between the sides and their deep ideological differences will prevent the government from making any meaningful foreign policy moves.

Peres said his first step would be to deal with the country's economic problems. "They cannot wait," he said.

Peres said among the issues that must be handled are increasing unemployment, a drop in the country's foreign currency reserves, a projected 400 percent annual inflation rate and negotiations for increased U.S. aid.

South Africans seek asylum at Durban's British embassy

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Several of the opposition leaders hunted by security police since being freed from detention over the weekend appeared at the British Consulate in Durban today, a British diplomat said.

John Hedley, public affairs officer for the British Embassy in Pretoria, said "five, or perhaps six" of the seven men sought by police were at the consulate in Durban, a resort and shipping city on South Africa's Indian Ocean coast.

Cassim Saloojee, publicity secretary of the Transvaal Indian Congress, said the men, all non-whites, would ask for "temporary asylum," and would ask British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to intervene on their behalf.

Hedley said, "I am not aware that they have asked for asylum of any sort. They are talking now,"

The men were among seven who Natal Province Supreme Court Justice Brian Law ordered freed from detention Friday. Police arrested them in August on the eve of parliamentary elections for Asian and mixed-race delegates to new segregated chambers of the all-white Parliament.

The detainees are leaders of groups that urged a boycott of the polls to discredit the elections.

Law set the detainees free, saying their incarceration orders by Louis le Grange, minister of law and order, were vague. About 36 hours later, le Grange issued fresh detention orders. The new ones were no different from the first, except they said le Grange believed public interest would be harmed if he disclosed why he wanted the men jailed.

Police said they could not locate the detainees when they went to their homes Sunday morning. A nationwide hunt ensued.

The South African Press Association reported two hours after the detainees appeared at the consulate that South African Foreign Minister R.F. Botha said British consular officials refused to act as intermediaries.

The association also said a letter purportedly signed by the detainees was slipped under the door of the news agency's Durban bureau this morning.

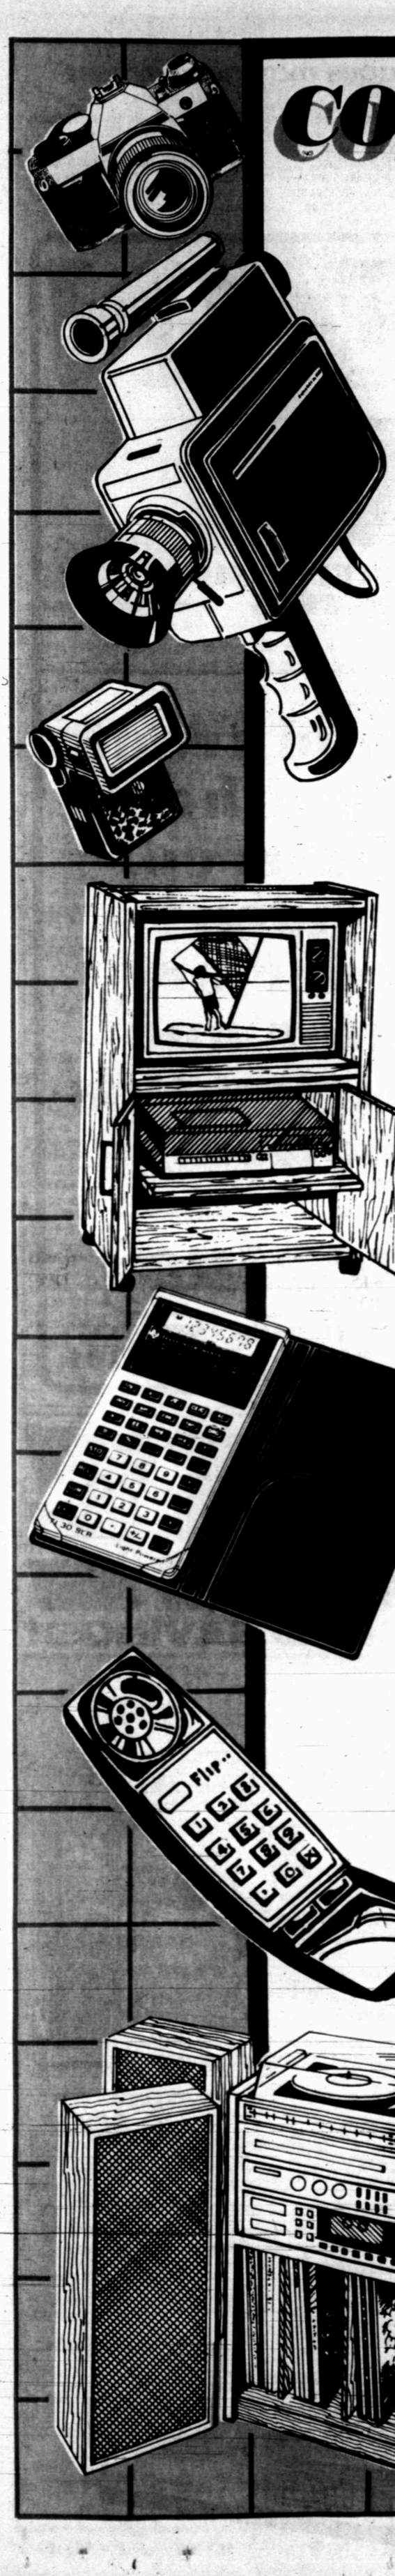

The letter said the men had not broken laws, and they would soon make their whereabouts known.

CONSUMER ELECTRONICS & CAMERA GUIDE

Imagine a world without audio cassettes or studio mastering tape, with only "live" television and no video cassette recorders, without video games or computers or magnetic storage of any kind. It would be a vastly different place from the fast-paced, modern world we live in.

Yet, the technology behind all of these modern marvels is 50 years old. It was in 1934 that the first 50,000 meters of usable recording tape was delivered to a German firm, AEG for its "magnetophone," the first practical magnetic audio recording device to use magnetic tape. A year later, both devices were demonstrated at the wireless exhibition in Berlin.

In 1936, magnetic tape was used for the first time to record concert music when the London Philharmonic was recorded under the baton of Sir Thomas Beecham.

The concept of storing information by magnetic means is, of course, much older. Oberline Smith, an American, was the first to propose the idea of magnetic sound recording in 1888 in an article published in "The Electrical World." Ten years later, a Danish physicist, Valdemar Poulsen, introduced a working model of his "telegraphone," which used steel wire as the carrier medium. But, it was not until 1928 that an engineer from Dresden, Fritz Pfleumer, introduced the first prototype of a magnetic tape - a paper tape coated with steel dust.

This basic idea was refined in a number of ways. Plastic film was introduced as a base which replaced the original paper tape. Improved oxides took the place of the steel particles.

Thus was born the first practical magnetic recording system, which today touches all of our lives.

Still essentially the same product introduced 50 years ago, magnetic tape offers seemingly endless possibilities for both the amateur and the professional. In audio, it provides for editing and multi-track recording, inexpensive pre-recorded performances and home taping. Video uses include programming, delayed broadcasts and instant replays.

Magnetic tape provides the physician with comparative recordings of heartbeats and with instant reproduction of x-rays on a monitor. In education, it helps to facilitate teaching and learning. Reporters use it to make faithful recordings of sight and sound for instant playback over the airwaves. It is used in the search for oil, for controlling industrial machinery and robots, and it is essential to the guidance of space satellites and to store the information they gather. It is essential to the operation of computers and to their storage and retrieval of data.

During the past 50 years, there has been a constant search to improve the technology and find new uses for its invention. Tape recording in the home became practical in the early 1950s. Then in 1953, the first long-playing tape was introduced and the first compact cassette followed in 1963.

The use of magnetic tape is just one example of the great advances that have been made over the past fifty years in the field of electronics. Such rapid technological progress means new, advanced products are introduced each year in the marketplace. Video cassette recorders, stereo televisions, and audio disc players, not to mention telephones in every shape and size, are just a few of the newest products which are available to consumers.

This Electronics and Camera Guide not only reveals some of the latest technological developments which have been introduced in the marketplace, but will also let you know where to find what you are looking for in the Permian Basin.

Midland Reporter-Telegram

Compact disc players are becoming a common part of stereo systems such as this Yamaha Concert System.

Disc players utilize lasers to read 'pits'

Technology and consumer demand have combined to reduce the price of compact disc players to a point where they can now be included in high quality, moderately priced, complete home audio systems. Compact disc players, introduced just a year ago as one of the greatest innovations in home audio, and costing more than $1,000, are now part of full home audio ensembles costing under $2,000.

Compact discs are shimmering plastic "records" about five inches in diameter. They are recorded on one side only, but can contain more than an hour's worth of music. The discs and players combine digital and laser technology to deliver sound never before possible in the home.

Rather than a needle tracking a spiral groove, as in a conventional record, compact disc players use a lser to "read" microscopic "pits" in the disc. The pits contain musical information the same way that record grooves do. However, since only a beam of light actually makes contact with the disc, there is no record wear. Gone are the pops and clicks heard on even the finest conventional records. Music as heard via the compact disc system is considered by many experts to be remarkably close to a live performance.

As a result, today's consumer can buy a stereo system for under $2,000 that equals the performance of a system costing several times that only a few years ago.

The audio disc player has a couple pitfalls

One of the hot items in the electronics business these days is the "compact digital audio disc." In case you haven't heard, it's basically a new kind of record that may, some say, eventually replace the convention 12-inch LP you've come to know and appreciate.

With all the hoopla surrounding the compact disc (or "CD" as it's commonly called), you should bear in mind that compact disc players will never be able to play your existing record collection. It's also true that most of the records in your collection will probably never be issued on CD. So, if you should choose to invest in a compact disc player, make sure you don't neglect your current "analog" turntable. With the advent of the CD, your record collection has become more valuable and irreplaceable than ever, and it's extremely important that you do whatever you can to preserve it.

According to Shure Brothers Inc., the world's largest manufacturer of phonograph cartridges, one of the best ways to make your records last a lifetime is to regularly check the stylus of your phonograph cartridge for signs of wear. Your stereo dealer will be glad to examine your stylus under a microscope and tell you if your stylus is too worn or damaged to play your records safely. If this is the case, it's important to replace it immediately.

If you've caught "CD fever" and you simply want to hear better sound coming out of your stereo system, you should realize that you can significantly improve your hi-fi sound without making the substantial investment the CD requires. Installing a new, upgraded phonograph cartridge in your present turntable will make a big difference in you system's sound quality.

Dynamic range gives live sound

One reason why music from records and tapes sounds "recorded" is that an essential component of live performance sound is missing: full dynamic range. Simply put, dynamic range is the difference between the sound level during the quietest and the loudest passages of music - the difference between the whisper of a solo flute and the thunderous finale of a symphony. This essential quality makes music sound "live".

When we listen to live music, it's not too unusual to experience a 90 decibel (dB) dynamic range. More than one-third of that dynamic range is lost during recording and playback processes because physical properties inherent in magnetic tape and vinyl phonograph records limit the amount of music information which can be stored on these materials.

However, up to 100 percent of the dynamic range lost in the recording process can be restored by using a dynamic range expander which can easily be added to a home stereo system.

It's easy to shovel TV snow

If the picture on your television coming in from your VCR looks like a snow scene from "Dr. Zhivago," don't despair. You probably have clogged video heads.

Don't call a doctor. Just get a videocassette headcleaner.

Used sparingly, these special cassettes shovel off the oxide, dust and binder reside shed by poor-quality videocassettes.

Reused tapes may need eraser

Tapes can be recorded and re-recorded many times, but some deck's erase facilities are not always sufficient to provide full erasure.

If residual signals or noise seem to mar new recordings on previously recorded tapes, a "bulk eraser" accessory can restore their original, fully demagnetized condition.

One warning: don't turn a bulk tape eraser on or off within several feet of any recorded tape, whose contents you want to preserve.

Computer users can learn to monitor and control their own stress levels through a new, scientific yet enjoyable computer software program - all in the comfort of their home or office.
The program allows users to "see" stress by representing muscle tension graphically on a video monitor. This tension is picked up by electromyograph (EMG) sensors on a headband, and a control unit converts the readings into visual patterns indicating the user's level of stress. As the person reduces his or her stress level, the images on the screen change to reflect an increasing state of relaxation.

Carelessness is floppy disks' biggest enemy

The floppy disk has the power to store and recall vast amounts of information and respond to all the needs of your computer system. But without a few basic guidelines, those powers can be in danger.

Human carelessness is the floppy disk's biggest enemy. Keeping the disk in top working condition involves so few precautions and so much common sense that there really is no reason not to keep your disks in perfect order.

It's elementary...

* Do not bend or fold the jacket. This warps or scratches the jacket and/or disk which results in distorted data output and errors.

* Do not use paint thinner or alcohol to clean the disk. This will cause dust to adhere to the disk, producing errors.

* Do not touch the exposed magnetic surface of the disk.

* Do not force the disk into the disk drive.

* Do not turn the system power on and off without removing the disk from the disk drive unit. Transient voltage can make your disk unreadable.

* Do not write directly on the jacket. Write on the supplied index label before affixing it to the jacket; if you must write on the jacket, use a felt-tip pen. Pencil or ball point pressure can harm the floppy disk.

* Do not rest heavy objects on the disk.

* Do not expose the disk to magnetic or magnetized objects, such as metal clips or nearby electrical appliances. This can erase data from your disk.

* Do not put paper clips on or rubber bands around disks. They cause warping.

* Keep liquids, dust and residue from pencil or pen erasers away from the disk. They are contaminants that can cause disk errors.

* Do not affix a label on the exposed magnetic surface of the disk. And, never affix more than one label on to a disk; it will increase the thickness of the jacket and you may have trouble getting it into your disk drive.

* Do not expose the disk to direct sunlight or high humidity for prolonged periods of time. The jacket may warp or malfunction.

* When not in use, return the disk to its protective envelope with the exposed surface, or head window, going in first.

* When storing the disk for extended periods of time, keep it in a box or acrylic storage case in an upright position.

Is your home computer protected by insurance?

Computer enthusiasts should be sure that costly computer equipment is fully protected against a variety of perils.

The typical homeowners policy will not compensate you if your computer equipment is damaged by an electrical surge, extremes in temperature or other perils to which the sensitive data processing equipment is vulnerable.

So, to avoid disappointment, the Insurance Information Institute advises each home computer owner to check with his or her insurance agent to determine what type of coverage their policy provides for a computer system's hardware and software.

Under a typical homeowners policy, your computer will be insured against the same perils, such as fire, theft and lightning, as any other possession in your home, whether a couch, television or refrigerator. And each loss is subject to the deductible included in your policy.

But the homeowners policy excludes coverage for any damage caused by a power surge, an occurrence that could damage the system's hardware and destroy the programs stored on the tapes or disks.

The policy also may not provide coverage if you use your home computer for business pursuits, even if the cmoputer damage is caused by a covered peril such as fire.

But several insurance companies have developed policies which provide consumers with comprehensive coverage against most perils and even offer protection if you use your computer for business.

A policy developed by one major insurance company providess all-risk coverage (with just four exclusions for wear and tear and damage caused by insects or rodents, war or nuclear accidents) for all of the system's hardware and software. The company also will compensate a policy-holder for the time and energy needed to place information back onto the software.

Another company, which specializes in insuring high-technology firms, has a home computer policy on the market that also offers comprehensive coverage for the system's hardware and software.

Although this policy won't cover the cost of restoring lost information onto the software, business interruption insurance of up to $2,500 is available for a $10 increase in the annual premium charge. The policy offers protection for up to $7,500 worth of equipment for a $50 annual premium.

Simple exercises for VDT operators relieve stress

As technology changes the ways in which Americans do business, the workplace is undergoing a radical transformation. Computers and their video display terminals (BDTs) are replacing typewriters and other office equipment. One study has concluded that, by 1990, 75 percent of all office jobs will involve VDTs.

Though the computer may make office tasks easier, recent studies indicate that the health of VDT operators is in jeopardy. A report in The Harvard Medical School Health Letter (April 1983) cites numerous hazards including musculoskeletal difficulties and job stress - the latter reported by 75 percent of VDT workers. VDT operators, and many other office workers, must remain stationary for long periods, often with little or no break from routine, and often in poorly designed chairs.

Neck, shoulder and lower back pains, headaches, irritabilitiy, and insomnia are stress-related symptoms brought on by tedium, and these often result in increased absenteeism and decreased productivity.

Corporations are examining the plight of the sedentary office worker in the 1980s. Many states have legislation pending which will provide safeguards for workers, and a bill before the U.S. Senate recommends tax credits for companies with preventive health programs.

Many people such as Robert L. Gedaliah, president of Productivity Effectiveness Programs, Inc., have developed simple cost-effective approaches to alleviating these health hazards.

Gedaliah presents his program in his book, P.E.P.: The Productivity Effectiveness Program,. The program centers around exercises which office workers can do while seated at their desks. The program is easy to learn and can be performed in just nine minutes a day.

Everyone unconsciously stretches to revive flagging alertness or to relieve tension. Exercises can be structured on these natural responses, making the most of the body's inherent ability to energize itself. In fact, many exercises can be done while seated at a desk.

individual is working out.

In our age of automation, the human factor needs to be considered. All office workers, not just VDT operators, will benefit from desk exercises. The program is the perfect "no-calories" alternative to the coffee break.

The exercises can also be done while commuting by car, train or bus, on airplanes - anywhere, and by anyone who must sit for long periods.

Proper wiring cuts 'noise'

Use correctly wired three-wire electrical outlets for your computer system. This is important for safety reasons (the three wire plug grounds the equipment) and to avoid erroneous data caused by electrical "noise" on the wires from refrigerator motors in your house, etc. A three-wire outlet is also important in order to minimize interference that your computer system might cause to TVs or radios in your house or apartment building. (If you get interference, turn off your computer and peripherals to see if the interference stops. If so, it's probably cased by your computer system. You should contact your computer dealer to have it corrected.)

Try these tips

Photo equipment today is becoming so advanced and easy-to-use that it's simple for anyone to be a good photographer.

Here are some simple tips that can help almost everyone improve their pictures:

• Know your camera and what it can do. That seems too simple, but it isn't. At a minimum, you should be aware of how close to a subject your camera can focus, how to recognize if a flash is necessary and how to tell when your film has run out.

• Move in close. Too many people simply stand too far from their photo subjects. The result is the main subject is lost in the picture, overshadowed by other extraneous subjects.

Take your pictures as close as possible to your subject, but be sure not to get any closer than your camera can focus.

Also be aware that some people get uncomfortable with a camera stuck a foot from their faces. Be aware of people's "personal space."

• Use the rectangle. Most cameras today have a rectangular format, which is an important tool for improving pictures.

If you're taking a basically vertical subject, such as a person or the Empire State Building, hold the camera vertically. Conversely, wide or panoramic pictures are usually served better with a horizontal shot.

When you're lining up a picture, try holding the camera both horizontally and verticaly and choose the way that seems to suit the subject better.

• Don't amputate at the joints. You don't have to show an enter person in a picture; often just a head and shoulders shot will tell the story.

If you do leave part of a person out of the picture, have the photo end in the middle of a limb rather than at a joint. Cutting a person off at the joint of a limb leaves an uncomfortable-looking picture.

• Watch the background. It's easy looking through a camera to have selective vision. We see the main subject and nothing else. Unfortunately, the camera records everything.

Before you press the shutter button, examine the background. Is it distracting? Is there a tree or a pole apparently growing from someone's head? Try to use as plain a background as possible to concentrate attention on the main subject.

• Vary your position. If all your pictures are taken with you standing straight up, they'll have a certain unexciting sameness. Examine some other shooting angles. Sometimes taking a picture from slightly above or below your subject will give you a plainer background.

Children are often best photographed from their own level. Flowers may be shot from directly above. Don't be afraid to experiment.

• Hold your camera steady. With higher-speed films, blurred pictures caused by camera movement are not as much of a problem as they once were, but moving a camera can still spoil a picture.

Keep your elbows under the camera for support, rather than sticking out to the sides. And squeeze the shutter button, don't jab it.

• Have your subjects doing something. Your pictures will look more natural and your subjects will be more relaxed if they're engaged in an activity instead of staring stiffly at the camear. You don't need a lot of action; even holding a newspaper will do.

Watch for photo opportunities in day-to-day activities such as cooking, gardening, or playing games.

• Try shooting out of the sun. Bright, direct sunlight is no longer a must for good pictures. In fact, that light sometimes casts harsh shadows on people's faces and can cause your subjects to squint.

Move your subjects into the shade. An overcast day often offers very flattering light for pictures of people.

• Shoot lots of film. Not even professional photographers depend on catching a scene or expression with just one shot. Remember, your subject may blink just as you take the picture.

Besides, taking more than one shot allows you to experiment with slightly different angles or poses.

• Know your flash ranges. Flash units, whether built into a camera or used as accessories all have limitations. That is, they can only throw their light so far.

For instance, taking a flash picture from the top row of a sports stadium is probably a waste of time and film. The flash just won't reach to the field and your picture will be nothing but darkness.

You can also get too close with flash. Then the result is an all-white, overexposed picture. Your camera or flash's instructions will explain further.

• Move your subject off dead center. Often photos are more interesting if the main subject is not smack in the middle of the picutre. Try moving your subject to one side or the other.

Another hint: If the subject is moving or looking in one direction, put him or her on the opposite side of the picture. Having the subject looking out of the photograph is often distracting. Keep this baker's dozen of tips in mind the next time you take pictures and you'll be pleased with the results.

Children develop visual skills with photography

Childern rarely need much encouragement to begin photography; most kids love to copy the actions of parents and other adults taking pictures.

But a simple camera will do more than allow a child to mimic a parent; it can help a child develop the visual skills needed for an adult career.

There's no question we live in a visual world. Newspapers, television and magazines are the dominant media of our day.

While drawing and painting in a school curriculum go a long way in teaching necessary visual skills, they do have limitations.

For one thing, young hands must struggle to translate what children see to paper. Many children seem so conserned with form and color that there is no room for discussing and learning perspective and composition.

Photography can help fill those gaps in visual training. Because today's cameras are so simple, they literally can be operated by a child. and their light weight and small size make them comfortable for children's hands.

With a camera doing most of the technical work of making the picture, a child can concentrarte on the creative or experessive side of the process.

To get your child started on photography, you'll first need a camera. Try to find one that's simple enough for the child, but rugged enough to take somewhat rough handling.

Explain the function of each major part of the camera (e.g., the lens, the flash, the film). You may want to have your child practice "taking pictures" with the camera empty for a while until he or she learns how to hold the camera.

You should also explain that the camera won't make good pictures if it's too close to a subject (that is, closer than its minimum focusing distance).

Try to find an easy-to-remember measure of that minimum distance, such as two steps by childish legs.

Then load the camera and stand back. You may be surprised by some of the subjects your child chooses to photograph, but remember that children have a different sense of what's important to them and their world. Try not to inhibit their choice of picture subjects.

When the prints come back from the processor, sit down with your child and talk about them. Point out some simple ways to improve pictures: moving in closer to the subject for more impact, turning the camera vertically instead of shooting all photos with the camera horizontal, being aware of what's in the background.

Photography can also play important roles in school activities, such as science fairs, and out-of-school activities, such as scouting groups.

And, of course, pictures can be used in a lot of other ways, too. They can hang in a child's room, be arranged in a photo story or be sent as gifts to relatives.

Don't just concern yourself with the technical side of photography when you discuss the pictures; talking about the subject of the photos can give you some surprising insights into your child's life.

Furthermore, keeping those photos over the years can mean preserving those insights for a time when they'll be appreciated by both you and your child.

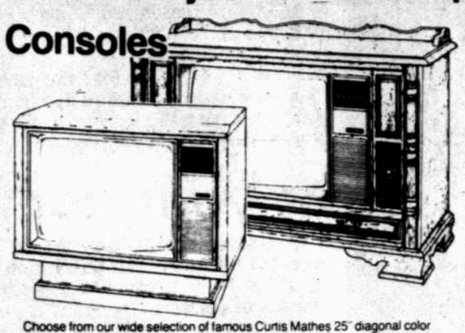

A minimal investment in photography now can pay ample dividends to both you and your child and besides, it's a lot of fun.

Modern technology makes robots much more than fantasy

Robots: they bring out an almost child-like curiosity in all of us.

We have always thought of them as going hand-in-hand with science fiction and fantasy. Our images of them have been largely confined to the imaginations of filmmakers and authors. They seem always to belong to another place, another time, the future.

Robots have always played on our curiosity about the unknown. When you envision a robot, you most likely picture a gleaming silver statue, able to move only with great caution and not without some squeaking at the joints.

It is this bias which, in our minds, has kept the robot as nothing more than fantasy, certainly not a working and functioning part of society in the '80s.

That is what makes The Robot Exhibition: History, Fantasy and Reality, currently at The Fine Arts Museum of the South in Mobile, Alabama, all the more fascinating. It shows just how much the robots are becoming a part of our lives.

The exhibit, which is the first major museum exhibition of robots in the United States, was fist displayed at the American Crafts Museum in New York, New York. It is scheduled to travel to 11 other museums.

The exhibition is the brain child of Robert Malone, a consultant and lecturer in the field of art, technology and robotics, and the author of the Robot Book (Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, 1978).

It was Malone who first approached the Crafts Museum about the Robot exhibition 2½ years ago, and serves as the guest curator for the exhibit.

According to museum publicist Susan Harkavy, the Crafts Museum fist became interested in Malone's idea for the robot exhibit because of the museum's interest in design.

"We are interested in how design effects the environment," Harkavy said. For the reality aspect of the exhibition, Harkavy noted that there is an importance to looking at the history - not just the technology of how robots have evolved until today, but where they came from.

This theory is an important part of the robot exhibit. Malone addds, "...What once only existed as fantasy has now, in the 1980s, entered the home, office and factory."

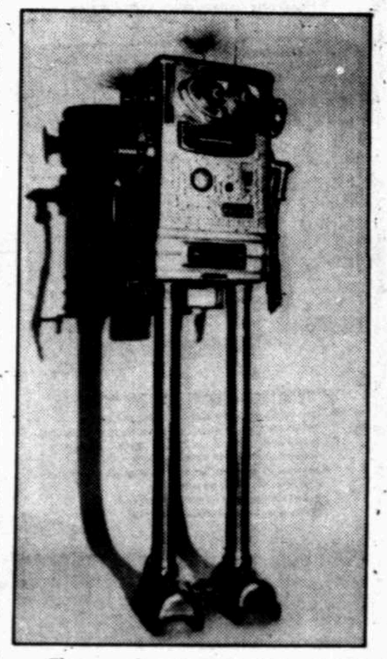

The museum exhibition is broken down into three categories, an historical overview, a section on interpretations (including pieces produced by artists, writers, and filmmakers) and a section on the working robots.

Since the show's intial opening in January in New York, its popularity has been astounding. The exhibit attracts just about every type of person. Harkavy credits the show's diversity as a reason for its enormous appeal.

"The various aspects of the show broadened its appeal. It's far more than just a trade show for robots," she added.

It is much more than a trade show. The exhibition, which took over two years to compile, maintains over 160 objects including working and interpretive robots, prints, drawings, books, toys, slides, video, and explanatory photo murals.

If you have the chance to see the exhibit at one of the museums which will be housing the exhibition (see schedule), make sure to look for the robot RB-5X. According to Harkavy he is the smartest robot in the exhibition, because he is capable of learning. If he bumps into something, he can actually program himself not to make that mistake again, and to go a different way. Too bad we can't all do that.

The punk robot built in 1983 by Clayton Bailey, is just one of the many exotic robots being displayed at The Robot Exhibit: History, Fantasy, Reality at The Fine Arts Museum of the South in Mobile Alabama, on the second stop of its national tour.

Preventive maintenance is the best defense against 'The Computer Crazies'

If you use a computer, either at home or at work, you're probably familiar with "The Computer Crazies." You know, those unexplainable incidents when your data disappears or your print-out skips or your disk crashes.

These occasions are always frustrating and often out-and-out disasters. But what can a computer user do to prevent or minimize this type of computer failure?

According to experts preventive maintenance is your best defense against computer failure.

Dust, dirt and static on computer equipment can lead to faulty operation and even damaged circuitry. Removing foreign debris on a regular basis from computer terminals, PC's, printers, disk drives, disks and CRT's is strongly recommended. All that is required are a few inexpensive items and a little of your time.

Start your preventive maintenance routine by cleaning all computer and computer peripherals of loose dust and dirt. Use a compressed-gas cleaning system to blow away potentially harmful dust and dirt.

To remove static charges from all surfaces, use an anti-static device. This will safely remove static charges from computer equipment.

To prevent harmful dust and dirt from collecting on floppy disks, always store disks in a covered disk storage container.

Cleaning your CRT or computer screen is another imporatant part of a preventive maintenance routine. Because most computer screens are multi-coated, an ordinary glass cleaner will damage this delicate surface.

Use a non-silicon product that contains no ammonia or alcohol to clean both coated and uncoated screens. Cleaning the haeds of computer disk drives is another MUST for computer users. There are many head cleaning kits availalbe. Ask your computer dealer or office supply dealer which kit is recommended for use with your equipment.

A care and maintenance routine for your computer is your best defense against "The Computer Crazies." Pick up a few of the inexpensive items needed and make a commitment to using them. Your investment, in time and money, will easily pay for itself in no time at all.

Audio Pro fills Midland's sound and video needs

Audio Pro began in 1969 under the name of C.H.M. Electronics, solely owned and operated by Charles H. Moore. Since that time Charles has built a reputation in the professional sound field by designing and installing systems for churches, stadiums, homes, offices, clubs, gyms, auditoriums and schools.

In 1977 Charles expanded his business and changed the company name to AUDIO PRO. His move to 1023 N. Midkiff in Midland gave him over 5,000 square feet of space in which to exhibit several new lines of equipment. It also allowed for a generous shop and storage area.

In 1978 Audio Pro began selling and servicing video equipment as well as audio products. In additionto selling the equipment, AUDIO PRO has always offered the service of videotaping. They have a staff which is specially trained and experienced in videotaping special events such as weddings, reunions, anniversaries, parties, etc. Civic and private groups can rent quality equipment from Audio Pro. Public address systems, microphones, and outdoor speakers are also available for rent or sale. For professional recording needs, both audio and video, AUDIO PRO has the equipment and expertise.

The staff at AUDIO PRO takes real pride in their stereo and video equipment, servicing each and every line they carry. They boast such quality lines as AKAI, AKG, JVC, NECR, OHM, SANYO, KENWOOD, REVOX, and many more. Expert installation is available with the car stereo lines. Furthermore, you will find a very complete selection of accessories from such lines as DISCWASHER, RECOTON, TDK, FUJI, KOSS, NORTRONICS, and many more. Just a few of the available accessories are: head demagnatizers, head phones, stylii, cleaning kits, video cassettes, reel-to-reel blank tapes, and compact disc recordings. Also, there is a full assortment of speakers, plugs, jacks, and audio cables to fit every need.

AUDIO PRO is proud to be the FIRST AKAI DEALER in the area. AKAI's famous "lifetime" guaranteed glass and crystal ferrite head is very popular. This feature, among others, catches the attention of all audio and video experts.

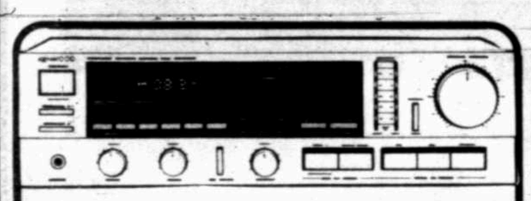

AUDIO PRO is also the FIRST JVC DEALER in the area. They are still the only dealer/servicer, serving as one of JVC's warranty service stations.

JVC has chosen AUDIO PRO to be their exclusive PRO-VIDEO equipment dealer in Midland and the surrounding area. Now for the first time at AUDIO PRO you can buy ½" portables, the "new" ½ editors and pro cameras (one and three tube).

Visit the staff at AUDIO PRO and get answers to your sound and video problems...commercial, professional, residential, and auto.

VCR popularity spurs video revolution

Home television viewing is undergoing a revolution that rivals the impact of color TV's intorduction in the 1960s.

The increased offerings of cable TV's music, news, sports, movie and children's entertainment channels has helped create a "boom" in home entertainment. But, perhaps the most significant contributor to the home entertainment revolution has been the video cassette recorder (VCR).

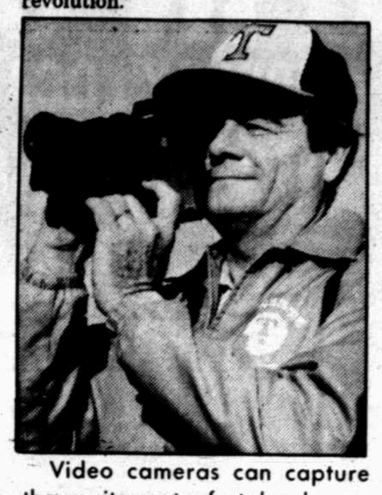

"Our forecasts call for sales of more than 5.2 million VCR units in 1984," says Richard B. Williams, general manager of marketing for GE Video. "It is estimated that about 10 percent of American households will own at least one VCR by the end of the year."

The reason for their rapid rate of public acceptance is that although VCR technology has become increasingly sophisticated, the new models are much simpler to operate. Gone are the days when you needed an engineering degree just to decipher the programming instructions. With today's "user friendly" models, operation is the simple part - what's difficult is choosing between the tantalizing array of features and options.

While ease of operation is a key factor in the growing popularity of VCRs, sound is rapidly emerging as another major consideration in consumers' purchase decisions. More music-oriented programming on video, cable and network TV has led to increasing consumer demand for better sound. That demand, coupled with the recent FCC decisions to allow television stations to start broadcasting in stereo, has led to a "sound explosion" in the video industry.

This "marriage" of audio and video has resulted in a new breed of VCRs - VHS Hi-Fi. These high fidelity units produce sound nearly twice the quality of conventional systems and better than even most audio tape decks.

"The VCR has evolved in a short time from being considered a specialty high-tech item to a necessity in many American homes," Mr. Williams said. "By continuing to develop more advanced systems that are simple to operate, VCRs will remain at the forefront of the video revolution."

Video cameras can capture the excitement of stolen bases, broken bats, and squabbles with the umps.

Stereo is television's wave of the future

After 25 years of hearing TV sound through one speaker roughly the size of a baseball, an ever-growing segment of consumers want more.

According to research conducted for General Electric Video, sound quality ranked second only to picture quality in consumers' television purchase decisions. "Consumers are watching more music-oriented programming, via FM/TV simulcasts, cable videotapes and discs," and Richard B. Williams, general manager of marketing for GE Video.

"But, the true importance of sound has only begun to emerge. The recent FCC decision to allow television stations to broadcast in stereo represents the biggest advance in the U.S. television industry since the introduction of color," Williams said. "As the saying goes, you ain't heard nothing yet!"

MTS - Multichannel Television Sound - means their will be a second audio track available to broadcasters for each TV channel. On television sets equipped with stereo reception capability and dual speakers, the viewing experience will take on a more life-like dimension, because the sound on stereo broadcasts will appear to "move" with the action on the screen.

Some cable networks, such as MTV and the Disney Channel, are already broadcasting in stereo, while NBC plans its first stereo broadcasts in mid-1985 with the Tonight Show and Friday Night Videos. However, industry officials believe the most common initial use of MTS will be for bilingual broadcasting - sending a simultaneous translation of the audio track in a second language. The Public Broadcasting System has been presenting second-language broadcasts for the past few years through FM radio simulcasts and is ready to provide programming for the second channel as soon as stations have the technology to receive it.

The growing importance of sound has led TV manufacturers to produce sets with stereo speakers.

Stereo television started appearing on showroom floors last summer, ranging upward in price from $700. However, many sets sold in the past few years are "steady-ready," meaning they only need an adaptor to receive stereo broadcasts. these adaptors range in price from $50 to $200.

"There's no question that the whole concept of home video entertainment has evolved dramatically," said Williams. "Today's consumer wants a total, integrated hoome entertainment experience, with the best in video and audio performance.

Plan the action for home movies

Taping your own home movies using a videocasseette recorder and a video camera can be rewarding if you devise a method and plan of action before you actually shoot.

Before you go out to buy, here a few tips from the Electronic Industries Association Consumer Electronics Group.

It is wise for a beginner to buy a camera and VCR of the the same brand. Also, always try out the camera and recorder in the store. Make sure you have everything you need including a rechargeable battery and blank videotape. Finally, you might want to consider buying some accessories like a tripod and a carrying case with a shoulder strap.

The first point to remember is to always look through the viewfinder and to never turn and check out the monitor to see what the picture looks like. The best idea is to not even connect the VCR to the TV when you are shooting indoors. This will help break you of this bad habit.

Unless you are a great imporviser, don't get fooled into thinking that anything and everything you shoot will somehow end up as viewable material.

Indulge yourself to your heart's content when familiarizing youself with the equipment and its capabilities, but when recording a piece intended for viewing by family, friends and relatives, don't be self-indulgent. It is not necessary to spend hours planning your home movies. Just jot down some notes outlining what you would like to see on the finished product. Have an objective in mind which will serve as a road map of where it is you are going. Also consider staging a run-through of any specific action you have in mind to give yourself and your on-camera "talent" a sense of direction and unity. Remember, too, that a little patience and planning go a long way. It will make your role as director/producer/cameraman that much easier and more effective. A common pitfall for many beginners is the tendency to turn the VCR on, point the camera, and simply shoot everything is sight. You can avoid slipping into this by becoming as intimate as possible with the camera's features and controls. Develop a sensitive trigger finger for the camera's VCR pause control. After repeated practice with this touch-sensitive technique, you will be able to catch all the essential action on tape, and leave behind those static moments that prove dreadfully dull during play back.

A couple of other useful techniques to keep an eye on are "composition" and "framing." The first simply means that what goes into the viewing area should comprise a pleasant, balanced picture. Proper framing, on the other hand, means fitting all elements of the picture composition within the borders of the viewing area. Leave room to spare, because what you see through your camera's viewfinder may turn out to be a little more than what shows up on the TV screen when you view the playback.

Even though you are using portable equipment, you do not have to carry it around every minute you are shooting. There are those special occassions when continuous body movement is the only way to capture the true spirit of an event.

Still, you would be surprised how many times you can remain stationary and still capture exciting footage that evokes all the flavor of the scene on which you are focused. Our advice in this situation is "Don't just do something, stand there." Often, needless movement on your part creates more headaches than it is worth.

A good rule of thumb when taking video movies is that the action should be taking place in front of the camera, not behind it. Some behind-the-camera action, however, is unavoidable. Hand-holding the camera can give you the shakes after only a few minutes, depending on how much it weighs and how well it is balanced.

This is were a tripod comes in handy. The tripod actually frees you to appear on camera yourself, and affords flexibility of camera movement that your hands could never match. For instance, if you wanted to "pan," (move the camera smoothly on an even horizontal plane from side to side) you would need a tripod. The same is true of "tilting" (moving the camera in an up and down direction). Effective use of a tripod will add unquestionable professionalism to the look of your tapes.

If you do not have use of a tripod, be sure to balance the camera securely on your shoulder or place it firmly against your body for maximum steadiness.

Perhaps the most misused function on a video camera is the zoom lens control. It can never be used with too much discretion, since the zoom's primary purpose is to let the camera operator adjust the focal length in between shots, not during them.

You might want to open with a "cover" or establishing shot. Next, you may want to close in on a particular object or person of spcific interst. Instead of zooming in while recording, press the VCR pause on the camera, zoom in, then release the plause to resume recording. You will find this use of the zoom usually results in more effective, dramatic transitions than the more dizzying conventional roller-coaster method.

One of the most important jobs of the person operating a video camera is to keep the on-camera subject(s) animated and inspired. Of course, this only applies if you are not shoooting a pre-staged event. For original home movies, though, remember that talk trnslates into action, so get a conversation going with your performers. All too many home movies start off like a rocket with a burst of energy, and then fizzle into a fast fadeout. The cameraman also has to be the catalyst.

Do not be surprised when you play back the tape to hear all the remarks and background noises that occurred during taping come over as part of the soundtrack. The camera's built-in microphone picks up everything, so keep that in mind during the recording process. You can always employ the audio dubbing feature that is a standard feature on all VCR models to add new audio after the camera recording is over.

If taking home movies on video gets to be too much of chore, you know you are doing something wrong. It shoud be fun and exciting, providing you with a lifetime of memories.

Electronics are bargain of `80s

When video cassette recorders (VCRs) were developed in the 1950s, a basic model cost about $120,000. By 1975, when consumer VCRs hit the market, the price dropped to about $1,000, while the number of features increased. Today, VCRs can be purchased for under $400 and offer such extras as freeze frame, one touch recording, remote control and high-fidelity sound.

The VCR story may be an extreme example, but according to the consumer price index, television and video products are the bargain buys of the decade.

"The 1967, the average retail price of a TV set was $568," said Richard B. Williams, general manager of marketing for General Electric Video and Audio Operations. "Had prices grown with inflation, the average set today would cost $1,682. However, the average price of a TV set in 1983 was only $585, or just $17 more than its predecessor.

PBRPC favors program for retarded adults

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission gave favorable comment Wednesday to a proposal that would allow some developmentally disabled adults in Midland to live in apartments instead of state institutions.

The $100,710 request by the Midland Association of Retarded Citizens would be matched with $43,850 in local funds.

"What they are proposing is to take 12 people who are developmentally disabled but who could live in a kind of structured environment" and let them live in the community instead of in an institution, said Jerry Tschauner, director of planning for the commission. "The whole idea is to get those people to be able to take care of themselves, to be able to live a normal life."

The project would allow disabled people to room together in apartments, with one full-time staffer or couple to supervise six disabled people.

"We will rent existing apartments" rather than build separate units, said Ray Unterbrink, executive director of MARC.

Besides allowing the disabled to lead a more normal life, the program would cost significantly less than the current system of state institutions, Unterbrink said.

Putting the disabled in the apartments would cost only $7,200 per year, while institutionalization costs $25,000 per year for each person, "And that's a whopping big difference," he said.

The proposal includes funds for a public awareness campaign "that would help the citizens of Midland understand that there are a lot more similarities than differences" between the developmentally disabled and other people.

Unterbrink said 80 percent of people now in institutions could, and eventually will, be placed in alternative living arrangements.

In other action, the commission:

— Approved a $54,000 request by Lamesa to buy a seven-acre section along Sulphur Springs Draw between south Avenue K and south Avenue M and between south 6th and 8th streets.

"The city's been pursuing purchasing the entire draw area for several years" for a park and to prevent encroachment on the drainage area, Tschauner said.

Lamesa is using $54,000 in federal community development funds as its local match, a practice Tschauner described as "unusual."

— Adopted a 1984-85 budget of $4.14 million.

Ordinance regulating owning wild animals in effect

Permits for keeping animals must be obtained by Dec. 5

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Owners of wild animals living within the city limits have until Dec. 5 to obtain permits to keep their animals since the city's new wild animal ordinance has been put into effect, according to a spokesperson for the Midland Animal Control.

"If they don't do it, and it (the animal) gets out and we pick it up, they can't get it back," said Rice Freeman-Zachery, public information officer. "Because we can't adopt it out, we'll have to put it to sleep."

Under the city ordinance, wild animals include "all wolves, coyotes, panthers, lions, bobcats, cougars, ferrets, skunks, armadillos, poisonous reptiles and any other animal typically found in a zoo" except for domestic dogs and cats and livestock and poultry defined in the Midland City Code.

The ordinance prohibits city residents from purchasing and keeping wild animals in the city although it allows those who already own them to keep them under certain regulations.

An inspection of the facility must be made by animal control department officers to determine whether the facility meets size and safety requirements.

Owners of wild animals must pay a noncompliance fee of $25 annually for each wild animal in their possession, provide a written statement from a licensed veterinarian stating the wild animal is in good health and provide proof of liability insurance.

The insurance should provide the following:

— At least $300,000 worth of liability for bodily injury and accidental death protection for any one accident or incident;

— At least $100,000 for any bodily injury and accidental death protection for injury to any one person;

— At least $50,000 for property damage protection for any one accident or incident;

— And $25,000 for property damage protection to any one piece of property.

Also under the ordinance, owners of a wild animal must report to the animal control department if they remove the animal from its approved facility even when the animal requires medical attention.

State law requires any incident of a bite, scratch or open wound to a person by a wild animal to be reported to the animal control department. The animal then shall be impounded within 24 hours and be humanely destroyed so that the brain can be sent to the Texas Department of Health for rabies diagnosis. The only exception is if, at the expense and request of the owner, the animal is placed in a veterinary hospital in Midland County to be humanely destroyed.

Snelson would seek balanced state, local education control

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Midland school officials complain that control of public education is being torn from their grasp and confiscated by politicians in Austin. If appointed to the new State Board of Education, Midlander Pete Snelson says he will attempt to create a balance between state and local control.

"One of the key areas that's going to go through a resolving process is just how centralized regulation is going to become and just how autonomous local boards will be. In trying to establish statewide requirements, there is going to be an encroachment in that area. But local taxpayers still provide a great deal of the money that goes into public schools."

The 27-member elected board was abolished by the Legislature during special session and ordered replaced by a 15-member appointed body.

Pete Snelson

Snelson, a former state senator and educator, Katherine Pearcy Raines of Cleburne and C.G. Whitten of Abilene are all in the offing to represent District 14, which encompasses Midland County. The Legislative Education Board pared a list of more than 400 nominees to recommend to the governor 45 candidates, three from each district. Mark White, whom Snelson has known for several years, has said he may name the 15 appointees before the week is out.

"Looking at the list of nominees, I'm the only one from the Permian Basin. I think it's important there be some type of representative from this area," Snelson said. He has received backing from the Midland school board.

After earning bachelor's and master's degrees, Snelson taught at the high school, junior college and university level. He served in the Texas Legislature from 1960 to 1983. He was chairman of the Senate Education Committee, chaired two committees dealing with education for the handicapped and introduced many education bills to the Legislature. He also represented Texas for 12 years on the Southern Regional Education Board which administers a 14-state compact on higher education.

"I believe I'm being considered because of my background and the knowledge that I have gained down through the years in working in the legislative process." Because the board will be new, and because it will have to begin work immediately, Snelson said it is imperative it be comprised of persons who have "knowledge that can be put to good use in a hurry.

"I don't think there's going to be the usual breaking-in process. It's important to have people on the board who have knowledge of the Texas Education Agency, the legislative process and schools in general in order for the board to function as it's going to have to function. I have some knowledge that I think would be helpful to the board at a very critical time."

Opponents of an appointed board have charged that politics will be the primary factor in selecting members. "It was an elected board, so it's been a political board all the time," Snelson contended. "Now it's simply moved to the appointed process. Whether that makes it more or less political, I don't know. It's difficult to separate politics from public policy, because that's what public policy is all about.

"I believe I'm being considered because of my background and the knowledge that I have gained down through the years in working in the legislative process."
— Pete Snelson

"But I don't think that's a key factor at this point in time. Regardless of why they're appointed, the objective is the same, and that is to provide the policies under which we can develop the best possible system of public education in our state. First and foremost our responsibility will be to provide proper regulatory and administrative policies that will enhance educational opportunities in our state for all citizens."

The previous state board had its problems, Snelson said. "I think the weaknesses as regards to the state board was its size. I think that caused some problems in developing, implementing and maintaining as close a supervisory role as was important in good management."

But he doesn't believe the board should be singled out as a scapegoat. "I think the failure that people have talked about cannot be layed exclusively on the state board. I have found them to be good people with an interest in education. I don't think people can point a finger and say 'That's the ones responsible for the state of things.' The legislature, the public, that board and administrators are all responsible."

He would also argue with those who portray public education as being on the brink of disaster. "I'm not as pessimistic as that. I think we have got problems, but with all the things wrong in public education there's still an awful lot of things right about it.

"I think that the state does have an excellent opportunity to bring about some substantial help for the young people of our state, and I think this board is going to play a key part in it."

Museum board dissatisfied with Lancaster House committee's report

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

After sparring with one another at the Midland County Commissioners meeting Monday, the two factions in the Lancaster House dispute met under quieter circumstances Wednesday.

The Save the Lancaster House Committee, represented by Jody Gilles and Harris Kerr, presented its report to the executive committee of the Board of Trustees of the Museum of the Southwest during a closed meeting at the museum.

Kerr and Gillis said they handed their report to the executive committee. Committee members, headed by president Terry Wilkinson, said, "Thank you."

"Frankly, I'm disappointed in what we received," Mrs. Wilkinson said, referring to the committee's final report. "They haven't done what they originally said they would do when we gave them the 90 days."

The original petition from the Save the Lancaster House Committee states that the group will:

— Determine "the extent of damage, structural or otherwise, which Lancaster House has suffered," — Determine "alternative uses and functions of the property which are compatible with the uses, functions, programs and desired objectives of the Museum of the Southwest,"

— Provide "the funding of sums necessary to refurbish or remodel Lancaster House in accordance with the new designated uses and functions and the funding of sums necessary to maintain Lancaster House in accordance with the new designated uses and functions."

"We've got no concrete information we can work with," Mrs. Wilkinson said. " We have never received a single cost estimate."

One of the points of controversy in past weeks has been that the Save the Lancaster House Committee requested a liaison person from the board and never received one.

During Monday's session in commissioners court, board members said they had designated such a person, former president of the board Al Dillard, but had never received what they requested, which was a schedule of committee meetings.

Committee members then said they met on Monday nights.

Emotionalism usurps intellect

"What we got here is a failure to communicate."

That one-liner got Cool Hand Luke shot dead in the movie about a prisoner and his hapless defiance of authority.

A somewhat similar situation may prove fatal to the Lancaster House — that rock edifice which one movement wants preserved as a historic site and which another, the establishment, wants razed in the name of progress — for the future expansion of the Museum of the Southwest.

Such strife is wholesome for the community when it gets people together and starts them thinking. For now, the two factions in Midland are getting more and more polarized.

And what's interesting about this "war" between two honorable and well-intentioned groups is the communications gap. Emotionalism has usurped the intellect.

It's not a trite affair.

The rift between the two factions heightened Monday when both groups met on common ground — in the Midland County Courthouse. Bearers of the Lancaster House flag wanted the county commissioners to intervene and to save the house for all time.

The commissioners, in effect, said, "You're intelligent, responsible people. Counsel one another and resolve your own problems."

The problem, of course, is the old scape goat — human nature.

The meeting was embroiled in emotionalism, anger and resentment radiated from many in the full-house courtroom. Some of the more vocal were tactful; others were quite plainspoken.

When emotionism rides supreme, reason and rationality get buried. The intellect is excused for awhile. Perspectives are lost. And, sadly, decisions may be made on personalities rathar than on issues.

That would be a sham. Is this not the age of communications?

And man does pride himself on his marvelous ability to communicate.

Ed Todd is a staff writer for the Reporter-Telegram.

LANCASTER

Mrs. Wilkinsons said Dillard attended this Monday's meeting and found that the ideas being discussed were ones the board had considered prior to making its decision to raze the buildings on the Lancaster property.

One of the buildings is the former home of Naomi Lancaster, longtime cultural leader in Midland and a founding member of many arts organization including the museum, Midland Community Theatre, Midland Arts Association and the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale. Mrs. Lancaster, now deceased, gave her home and property to the museum in 1970.

During Wednesday's meeting, Mrs. Wilkinson said Kerr asked the board to "reconsider all these things you've gone through."

Mrs. Wilkinson said it agreed to do so, adding, "We're trying to work something out."

Also included in the final report is the suggestion, presented Monday to the county commissioners, that the board sell the property to the county. The petition suggests that the property could be purchased for the raw value of the land, since the board is willing to raze the buildings on the property. The committee has raised $38,727 in pledges which could go toward the purchase.

However, the museum's director, Jerry Porter, disagreed with this assessment of the property's value. "The house is of no value; the property is very valuable. Where else is the museum going to expand to?"

The full board meeting has been moved from Sept. 19 to Sept. 26 so that the executive committee can have more time to reevaluate uses for the Lancaster House.

"They have not met us halfway," Mrs. Wilkinson said. "They have not even done a fourth of what they said they'd do. They have not provided us with the information, so we have to go out and get it ourselves. That's why we'll need at least two weeks."

"We will assist in any way we can," Gilles said when contacted about the executive committee's decision to move the full board meeting to Sept. 26 so that the executive committee has more time to gather data.

Bond set for persons charged in burglaries

From Staff Reports

Bond was set Wednesday at $75,000 each for four Midlanders arrested on burglary of habitation charges after investigators acting on a search warrant Tuesday arrested them in an apartment believed to contain about $15,000 worth of items stolen in northwest Midland residential burglaries.

An additional $25,000 bond was set by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry on Joseph Lujan Saenz, 21, for forgery charges.

According to Midland County District Clerk Office records, Lujan, of 3001 N. Midland Drive, was convicted on a burglary of habitation charge and given a five-year prison term by a jury last year. His notice of appeal was filed Jan. 20.

Others arrested in the North Midland Drive apartment and formally charged with burglary of a habitation were Johnny Saenz, 20, of 4607 W. Graceland; Samuel Moreno, 17, of 506 Mineola; and Tammi Dawn Hambrick, 20, of 4208 Pasadena.

The four are suspects in ongoing investigations of several residential burglaries which, according to Lt. Jim Colburn of the police department, "all had the same MO (method of operation), so to speak, that these people exhibited. There were a lot of reports that they were the same exact (types of crimes)."

The search warrant was obtained after a 3½-month-long investigation,

Police Roundup

Colburn said.

Two people critically injured Sunday night in a two-vehicle collision on Interstate 20 have been identified as Jimmy Wood, about 12, and his mother, Geraldine Banks, about 40, both of Waxahachie. The two are listed in critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital with head and internal injuries.

They were passengers in a tractor trailer driven by Fred D. Smith, 34, of Odessa. Smith's vehicle hit the rear of another tractor trailer parked on the shoulder of the interstate, according to police reports.

Smith was arraigned on two counts of involuntary manslaughter for the deaths of Glyn Edward Wilson, 38, and Carl Karaffa, 8, both of Odessa and passengers in Smith's vehicle. According to Sprayberry, bonds were set at $20,000 each.

In complaints filed with police Wednesday, a $230 refrigerator and $120 worth of tires and wheels were stolen from a mobile home at 2211 S. Baird. Reported by Tyler Moore of the National Mortgage Corp. of Odessa, owner of the property, the theft occurred sometime since March 1.

William P. Daly of 3100 N. Fairgrounds Road reported a cassette tape deck valued at $450 was taken from his mobile home between 9 p.m. Tuesday and 2 a.m. Wednesday. Entry apparently was gained by cutting a screen, lifting an unlocked window and opening a door.

UTPB offering Spanish language class for police officers

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Because law enforcement officers in West Texas frequently are faced with the difficulty of trying to communicate with persons speaking a different language, a new course is being offered at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Spanish for Police Officers will be taught by professor Robert Medrano from 8:30 to 9:45 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays. The course will take peace officers through an intense, semester-long learning experience which should enable the officer to speak and understand Spanish.

Although most departments have Spanish-speaking officers, often it is those who do not speak Spanish who must determine the facts of an investigation or learn the seriousness of an injury without the ability to talk to the person with whom he or she is dealing.

Medrano described his teaching technique as a "total physical response," and compared it to teaching a child to talk.

"The students will first listen to instructions spoken in Spanish," he said. "As he hears the instruction, he will see the instruction carried out, which will soon give him a level of comprehension."

The order of hearing, comprehending and speaking allows language students to absorb new information quickly and almost automatically, he said.

The course work also will teach students how to "decode" the Spanish language through reading and understanding Spanish, he said. Another aspect that will be taught will allow police officers to be fluent within their domain.

"In all languages, there are several domains," he said. "Home is one domain, church another, school is still another. Policemen on the job don't have the same kinds of conversations they have at home."

To illustrate the importance of the domain instruction, Medrano pointed to another new course he will teach entitled Spanish for School Teachers. In that course, which meets from 7 to 8:15 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays, many of the words and sentences learned will be completely different from those taught in the police officer courses, he said.

For more information, call the UTPB admissions office at 367-2210. Late registration will continue through Monday.

Museum curator to give lecture on Anschutz exhibit

Elizabeth Cunningham, curator of the exhibiton "Masterpieces of the American West: Selections from the Anschutz Collection," will give a docented tour and lecture, "A Critical Look at the Anschutz Collection," today at 7:30 p.m. at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Over 100 works from this critically acclaimed exhibit are on display at the museum through Oct. 28.

"Masterpieces" offers a survey reflecting more than 150 years of Western history and culture as interpreted and recorded by artists. The exhibit includes major works by Frederic Remington, George Catlin, Helen Frankenthaler, Jackson Pollack, Stuart Davis and Georgia O'Keeffe.

"Masterpieces" has not been exhibited in Texas since 1978 and the museum show is the only stop it will make in Texas for the next three years. The Atlantic Richfield Foundation and the Midcontinent Production and Southwestern Exploration Divisions, Exxon USA, worked to bring this exhibit to the museum. Their co-sponsorship includes covering the cost of shipping, insurance, promotion, as well as providing public educational programs and docent training materials.

This collection, which totals over 500 works, has toured extensively throughout the world, making stops in Vienna, Paris, Munich, Shanghai, Brussels, Helsinki and Calgary.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is no charge to view any of the exhibits at the museum. At this time in the Stables Gallery, the exhibition "Life in the Davis Mountains: Recent Works by Wayne Baize, is on display through Nov. 4.

Animal control officers search for dog which bit Midland woman

From Staff Reports

Midland Animal Control officers are searching for a dog that bit a woman Wednesday afternoon at a city park when she reached down to pet it.

According to Rice Freeman-Zachery, the woman was with two friends at the Moore Park, A Street and Nobles, shortly before 5 p.m. when a black Labrador retriever with a red nylon collar and tags approached them. Thinking the dog seemed friendly, the woman reached to pet it when it attacked her.

She was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room, where she was treated and released.

Under state law, any domestic animal bite must be reported to the animal control department. The animal must be quarantined for 10 days to determine whether or not it has rabies.

If the dog is not found, the woman most likely will undergo rabies treatment.

Ms. Freeman-Zachery urged any Midlander who sees a dog matching this description to contact the animal control office at 683-2941. No one should approach the dog.

Man dies from accident injuries

From Staff Reports

A San Angelo man died Wednesday morning from injuries suffered in a traffic accident Sept. 7, on U.S. Highway 86, a mile north of San Angelo.

James Leroy Ziegler, 38, slipped and fell off a utility-type trailer loaded with household goods and pulled by Gordon Skelton, also of San Angelo, at about 8:30 p.m. Sept. 7. According to the Department of Public Safety, the trailer partially passed over his body.

He was taken to Shannon Memorial Hospital in San Angelo, where he died shortly before 9 a.m. Wednesday. His body was taken to Johnson Funeral Home in San Angelo;.

Phil Upton of the San Angelo DPS office was the investigating officer.

Man sails over Niagara Falls — in balloon, not barrel

WACO (AP) — Few people fly hot air balloons; fewer still have flown one over Niagara Falls.

But Joe Heartsill of Meridian has done both.

While other balloonists have crossed part of the falls in a balloon before, few have crossed both the Canadian and American sides of the falls on the same flight. That's because the falls are not in a straight line.

On July 13, Heartsill, born and reared in Walnut Springs in Bosque County, took off from the Canadian side of the falls, with the intention of heading in a straight line over Horseshoe Falls (on the Canadian side) and setting down in the United States.

But the wind had other things planned.

Halfway across Horseshoe Falls, the wind died and left Heartsill stalled over the Canadian falls. For 20 minutes, he said, his balloon hung virtually motionless, suspended above the crashing thunder of falling water.

While suspended, Heartsill lowered his balloon into the mist from the falls in an experiment to test whether the cool mist would significantly cool the hot air in the balloon, thus causing a rapid descent. The mist, however, had no effect.

Then the wind changed directions.

It began blowing him in a direction at a right angle to his original course, pushing him over the American side of Niagara Falls and sending him downstream, over the river and steep gorge between the Falls' Rainbow and Whirlpool Ridges.

Like an airplane pilot testing his skills, Heartsill did a "touch and go landing" in the middle of the river — touching the bottom of his basket to the water before taking off again.

For Heartsill, the 1½-hour flight was one of the high points in his 4½-year ballooning career.

"The weather conditions were just perfect," he said of the wind shift that allowed him to fly over both sides of the falls and then down into the gorge. "We did it all. It hadn't been done that way before.

"If I had a steering wheel in the balloon, I couldn't have driven a better course."

Heartsill landed on the idea of flying a hot air balloon back in 1979 when he saw a beer company's name on the side of balloon. "I thought that would be a good was to do some advertising for my business and have some fun, too," he said. Joe and his brother Tom own Heartsill and Co. Realtors with offices in Meridian and San Angelo.

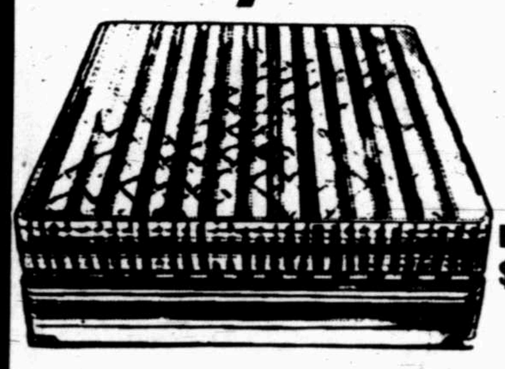

Heartsill headed off to a balloon rally in Oct. 1979 at Albequerque, N.M., where more than 400 hot air balloons filled the skies over a 10-day period, he said.

From then on he was hooked, and with his desire to soar in the wind, Heartsill bought a slightly-used balloon. But he had forgotten one important point.

"I bought a balloon and brought it back and didn't know how to fly it," he said. He found a hot air balloon pilot in Belton by the name of Steve Jones, who taught him how to fly. Heartsill soon earned his private balloon pilot's license and now holds both a commercial license and is a certified FAA instructor.

Heartsill taught a man in San Angelo how to fly and later sold him his balloon. Heartsill now owns a new balloon with his company's advertisment on the side.

MCT kicks off classic film series with 'Dr. Zhivago'

From Staff Reports

Midland Community Theatre presents its new series of film classics, "Cinema '85," beginning with the Oct. 22 showing of "Dr. Zhivago."

The showings are on alternate Monday evenings through April 1. The movies will be shown at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., at 7:30 p.m. Most features, depending on the length, will be shown with an award-winning vintage cartoon. This year, taking full advantage of the wide screen at the Yucca, three features will be shown in their original CinemaScope.

Admission to the films is by series membership only. No single admissions are sold. A membership card, which is mailed out upon receipt of payment, must be shown at the door.

Cost for all 12 in the series is $20 for MCT members and $25 for non-members. That averages out to $1.67 per feature.

Full-time students of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Midland College may attend the series under special arrangement with those institutions.

Movies to be shown this season include:

— Nov. 5, "Gigi," 1958 release, winner of nine Oscars including Best Picture, CinemaScope and color, starring Maurice Chevalier, Louis Jourdan and Leslie Caron;

— Nov. 19, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," 1932 release, Oscar winner for Best Actor, starring Fredric March and Miriam Hopkins;

— Dec. 3, "The Bad and the Beautiful," 1952 release, director Vincente Minnelli's inside-Hollywood look at an ambitious producer (Kirk Douglas) and his relationship with an actress, a writer and a director, also starring Lana Turner and Dick Powell;

ENTERTAINMENT

— Dec. 17, "City Lights," 1931 release, Charles Chaplin's masterpiece about the "Little Tramp" in love with a blind girl (Virginia Cherrill) is a blend of comedy and tragedy, silent with music track;

— Jan. 7, "The Lady From Shanghai," 1948 release, Orson Welles directed this mystery about a sailor who becomes involved with a seductive woman and her sadistic husband, which includes a climax in a hall of mirrors, starring Rita Hayworth, Wells and Everett Sloan;

— Jan. 21, "Cabaret," 1972 release, tells the story of Sally Bowles in pre-World War II Berlin, winner of eight Oscars including Liza Minnelli, Joel Grey and director Bob Fosse, color, also starring Michael York;

— Feb. 4, "The Good Earth," 1937 release, Pearl Buck's novel of greed, famine, plague and fight for survival in China, outstanding special effects, Luise Rainer won Oscar for Best Actress, also starring Paul Muni;

— Feb. 18, "The Man Who Knew Too Much," 1956 release, Alfred Hitchcock spy thriller, color, starring James Stewart and Doris Day;

— March 4, "The Man Who Came to Dinner," 1942 release, adaptation of the hit comedy by Kaufman and Hart about a pompous author who comes to an average family home for dinner, breaks his leg, then stays a month and drives everyone crazy, starring Monty Wooley, Bette Davis and Ann Sheridan;

— March 18, "Autumn Sonata," 1978 release, Ingmar Bergman guided Ingrid Bergman in her last great dramatic performance in this probing film about the relationship between mother and daughter and the chasm that separates the generations, color, also starring Liv Ullmann;

— April 1, "Lawrence of Arabia," 1962 release, a winner of seven Oscars including Best Picture, Cinemascope and color, starring Peter O'Toole, Omar Sharif and Alec Guinness.

Australian group answer to Duran Duran

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — INXS, the rock 'n' roll sextet from Sydney, say they are Australia's answer to Duran Duran and have the female fans to prove it.

Frenzied young female fans by the dozens had to be dragged off the stage throughout a recent INXS concert here, and flamboyant lead singer Michael Hutchence dodged lingerie thrown from the front rows all evening long.

"The new Tom Jones. Yeah, that's me," said the pony-tailed Hutchence in an interview. "We draw a very young audience like Duran Duran does — very hip, young people. They're a totally different brand of teeny-bopper. I call them 'the new TV bopper.'

"They climb up on stage and we threaten each other with death. It's all very harmless," added Hutchence. "But we, as a group, haven't fallen into the great abyss of being a bunch of little pop stars. Let's just say we've upset all the right people so far."

INXS, which derived its name from the street idiom, "in excess," is on its second American tour and hyping its fourth LP, "The Swing." Though their single, "Original Sin," was No. 1 in Australia and Japan, sales have been slow so far in the United States.

"With Americans, it's tough to catch their attention sometimes," said Kirk Pengilly.

'Dogs wary of Mustangs

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Doug McCutchen era at Midland High got off to a good start Friday with a 10-7 victory over Lubbock Monterey. Now, McCutchen and his Bulldogs are turning their attention to one of their most troublesome pre-district foes: the Andrews Mustangs.

In the past four years, Midland High, a 5A school, has managed only one victory over 4A Andrews. It is a trend McCutchen hopes will reverse itself this year.

"Probably, in the past, one of our biggest things has been trying to overcome the 5A against 4A mentality," said McCutchen. "I think the kids have finally come to understand those A's don't win games. Andrews has a very fine program and I think after three losses in four years, our kids understand that."

They also need to understand that Andrews has an offensive unit that McCutchen is worried about.

"To us, the biggest thing about Andrews is their offense," said McCutchen. "It is totally different than anything we've seen this year. They run the Wing T and use a lof of misdirection plays. We have to execute against it and not watch what the back are doing."

Until they've committed themselves to one direction that is!

Andrews coach David Visentine agrees that his team's offense is "our strongest point at this time in the season and that's because we have three starters back from last year on the offensive line and one starter in our backfield, tailback Jeff Tidwell.

"We're certainly not where I anticipated we'd be at this point of the season," said Visentine. "I thought we'd be farther along. With a number of young players, it's taken us awhile to get things going the way we'd like to."

Visentine also has a lot of respect for the Bulldogs on both sides of the ball.

"The first thing you have to say about Midland High is they have some outstanding athletes, especially Darrell Davis," said Visentine. "It's going to be hard to keep him quiet. He is outstanding, both on offesne and defense.

"I also think Midland High has a good corps of receivers and they will present us with some problems."

Even though one of those receivers, flanker returning starter Allan Foret was quiet last week against Monterey, Visentine isn't planning on ignoring him. He remembers last year.

"Foret is to good not to catch the ball," said Visentine. "He made some fantastic catches against us last year and of course he has the speed to go all the way at any time."

Both McCutchen believe the Midland High defensive unit has a slight edge over the Bulldog offense.

"The defense really had several occasions to let down against Monterey because of turnovers and the bad things that happened but they never did," said McCutchen. "We had a bad punting situation where we fumbled the ball on our end of the field and the defense rose to the occasion. The defense is playing as a team with a lot of people doing the job their supposed to be doing. We have five interceptions against Monterey and I think they went to five different people."

"Midland High is playing real sound defense," echoed Visentine. "I've been real impressed with their defense."

Over the past four years, the game has been benificial to both schools. Andrews gets to play a team bigger, and in most cases better, than any team the Mustangs face during the season.

Midland High gets a football game from a quality opponent, no matter the size.

"It's been a good ball game for both schools," said Visentine. "We look forward to playing Midland High. It's always a good game for us. I just hope we can hang in there with them this year. I think they are stronger than they have been in the past and I don't think we are quite as strong and that might present us with some problems."

"I think it will be an excellent football game," said McCutchend. "The two schools have built up quite a rivalry in the past few years. We need to go over there this year and execute. It's getting close to the start of district play and we need to be improving.

Andrews, I'm sure, has the same feeling and they have an excellent program."

Gooden establishes rookie strikeout mark in win

Associated Press

Dwight Gooden struck out 16 batters and set a major league record for strikeouts by a rookie pitcher in powering the New York Mets to a 2-0 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Wednesday night.

Gooden's 11th strikeout of the night, which came in the sixth inning against Marvell Wynne, broke the previous major league record of 245 established in 1955 by Herb Score of the Cleveland Indians. Gooden now has 251.

The rookie used a simple but effective philosophy: "You gotta take charge, go out there and intimidate them. Don't let them intimidate you," said Gooden, who scattered five hits for his second consecutive shutout and fourth of the season.

Gooden said he wasn't thinking about strikeouts and didn't realize he finished the game only two short of Bill Gullickson's single-game rookie mark of 18.

"I didn't even know I had broken Score's record," said Gooden. "Then the crowd started to yell, and I figured I'd done something."

Nevertheless, the Chicago Cubs lowered their magic number for eliminating the Mets to 10 with an 11-5 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Any combination of 10 Cub victories or Met losses will clinch the National League Eastern Division championship for Chicago.

In other National League games, Philadelphia snapped St. Louis' four-game winning streak with a 3-1, 6-5 sweep of their double-header. At night, Cincinnati scored five runs in the first and defeated San Francisco 7-4, Atlanta scored twice on a ground ball and beat Houston 4-1.

In an NL late game, Pedro Guerrero hit a pair of two-run home runs as Los Angeles beat San Diego 8-1.

In the American League's day game, Ron Kittle homered as Chicago downed Oakland 4-2.

At night, Jorge Orta's ninth-inning sacrifice fly lifted Kansas City to a 3-2 victory over Minnesota and into a first-place tie with the Twins in the AL West.

Doyle Alexander twirled a six-hitter as Toronto downed New York 2-1. As Detroit lost 3-1 to Baltimore, the Tigers' magic number remained at seven. Meanwhile, Boston rallied to down Milwaukee 5-4.

In late games, Bert Blyleven fired a two-hitter while striking out 12 batters as Cleveland defeated California 7-1. Rookie left-hander Mike Mason scattered six hits as Texas beat Seattle 8-1.

"He throws so hard that all you're trying to do is protect the plate," said Wynne, Gooden's record-breaking strikeout victim.

Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner said Gooden is "19 going on 30. He has poise. Nothing bothers him."

Score, who is now an Indian broadcaster, sent a congratulatory message to Gooden that was flashed on the stadium scoreboard.

The 16 strikeouts by Gooden, 16-8, made for the highest single-game total in the National League this season and tied the 16 registered by Mike Witt of the California Angels against Seattle on July 23.

Hubie Brooks supplied all the offense Gooden needed when he cracked his 16th homer of the season, a two-run drive off John Tudor, 9-11, in the fourth. Keith Hernandez was on base after a single.

Ryne Sandberg's three-run homer capped a five-run sixth inning that powered the Cubs over the Expos.

Left-hander Shane Rawley pitched a seven-hitter in the opener and pinch-hitter Len Matuszek cracked a three-run homer off Bruce Sutter in the eighth inning of the nightcap as the Phillies regained third place in the NL East.

Paul Runge and Alex Trevino broke a 1-1 tie in the seventh inning when they scored on a ground ball by Rafael Ramirez as the Braves defeated the Astros for the seventh straight time this season.

Dave Concepcion drove in three runs in the first inning with a bases-loaded double for the Reds.

Onix Concepcion went 4-for-4 for the Royals and also scored in the fifth on an RBI single by George Brett, who started for the first time in 20 games.

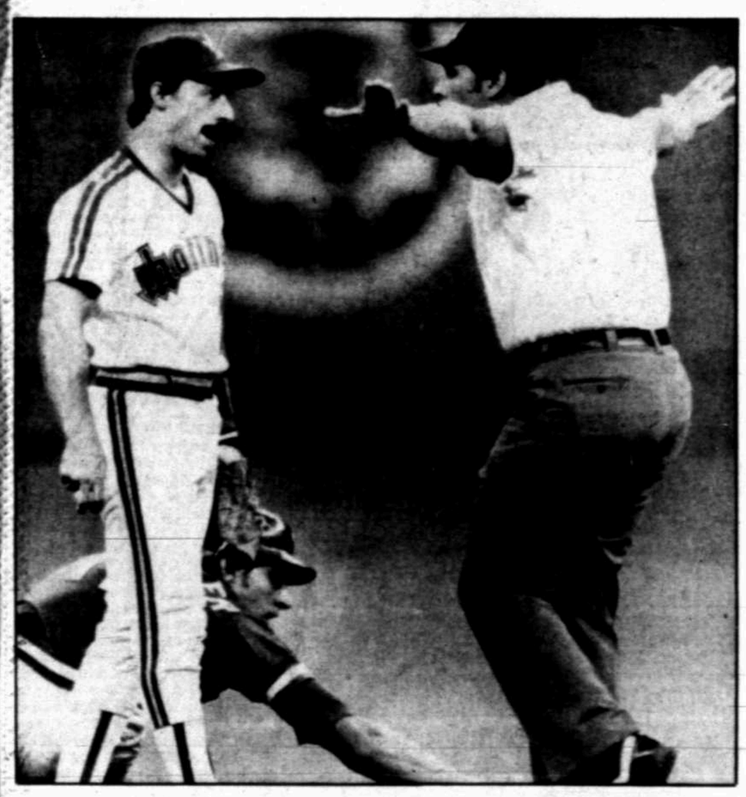

Left-hander Britt Burns gave up only four hits in seven innings to lead the White Sox.

Area gridders hit the highways

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

University of Minnesota head football coach Lou Holtz once noted that one of the best things about freshmen players was that they became sophomores.

Similarly, one of the best things about a football season is that after the first go-round, coaches and players have a better idea of what is required to be successful. Six of the eight area teams returned home with victories in their season openers last week, so many of those coaches just want to build on the foundation of the 1984 campaign.

The McCamey Badgers dodged the bullet more closely than anyone. McCamey is seen as the team to beat in District 8-AA, and Iraan very nearly did just that Friday. The Braves, ranked sixth among class A schools by Texas Football magazine, went the distance in a slugfest at McCamey last week. A fourth-quarter blocked punt set up a four-yard McCamey scoring drive that produced the only points in a 7-0 squeaker.

Coach Buster Leaf's team gets no respite Friday as the second week of play winds towards game day. McCamey visits Marfa in a grudge match. The Shorthorns were playoff entries a year ago, and their first round opponent was none other than McCamey. The Badgers shortened the Shorthorn playoff experience when they exploded for 21 fourth-quarter points, blowing Marfa out 40-19. Marfa lost it's opener last week and was not impressive.

CRANE COACH Rickey White has been on both ends of the spectrum in the four years as coach of the Golden Cranes, culminating in last year's adventurous trek through the 3A state playoffs. But the Cranes were thrashed by a powerful Fort Stockton team 34-0 last week and face a greatly improved unit Friday against Big Lake.

Reagan County's Owls ground out a tough 20-7 win over Robert Lee at home last week and seek a form of vengeance against White's Cranes. A year ago, Crane managed a 12-7 win at Big Lake, and the loss set the tone for the Owls, who finished the year with only two wins.

The roles are now reversed. The 3A Cranes are now in a position that they rarely faced last year. The Cranes must bounce back.

Rankin also faces some adversity and questions after a 28-0 loss in their opener at Eldorado. The Red Devils only won three games a year ago, and play in one of the toughest class A districts in Texas with Wink and Iraan on the slate.

If Rankin is to recover, this week would be a good time to start. The Devils open their home schedule with Sterling City. Rankin started slow a year ago then finished strong, but coach Dwayne Turner doesn't want to see a repeat of last year's horrendous start. The 1983 Red Devils didn't score a point until four games into the season.

GREENWOOD CONTINUED its' amazing story last week with a season opening 12-0 win at Ozona. A year ago the Rangers were struggling and lost their first two ballgames. Since then, only a 7-6 loss to Klondike in the opening round of the class A state playoffs has obscured the ledger.

Greenwood's first game as a class AA school came against the AAA Lions on the road. The victory cements the Rangers as a sleeper team that could make waves in the ultra-tough District 8-AA.

The 1-0 Rangers return to the friendly confines of their refurbished stadium against Water Valley, a team they faced in District 7-A a year ago. The Rangers claimed a 20-7 victory then.

Greenwood's nearest district foe also sounded a plea for recognition. Stanton rolled to 1 25-7 halftime edge against Tahoka last week, then held on in the second half to make the score a final.

The Buffs experienced some ups and downs a year ago in a 4-6 campaign. Now, coach Dale Ruth's squad is playing with confidence spurred by a strong, quick line.

Stanton has a heavy workload ahead Friday, hitting the road for the first time and doing it in Coahoma. Wins in Coahoma come about as often as rainstorms, but the Buffs show signs of being an unpredictable threat again.

Coach Clyde Noonkester's rebuilding program in Lamesa got a major shot in the arm Friday as the Golden Tornadoes eked out a 7-3 win over Levelland. Lamesa has not been 1-0 very often lately, and with their two wins in Noonkester's first season a year ago have won four games in three seasons and one tenth of another.

Noonkester has been around for the last three. Lamesa visits Brownfield Friday, who lost 21-14 to Andrews. Andrews and Lamesa will meet later down the road in the District 2-AAAA schedule.

Gastineau convicted of misdemeanor assault

NEW YORK (AP) — Mark Gastineau, the New York Jets' All-Pro defensive end, was convicted Wednesday of misdemeanor assault in a nightclub brawl.

The six-member jury acquitted another Jet, quarterback Ken O'Brien, 23, of similar charges stemming from the fight last year at Studio 54.

Gastineau, 27, was convicted of a single count of the three third-degree assault charges lodged against him. He faces up to one year in jail and a $1,000 fine, but prosecutor Jeffrey Schlanger has said such a severe penalty was unlikely.

Gastineau's wife, Lisa, gasped as the verdict was read. Gastineau, standing before the jury, dropped his head for an instant, as his lawyer patted him on the back.

Gastineau, after a few minutes in seclusion, said he was shocked at the verdict and maintained his innocence.

"I'm still not guilty," he said. "I hate to disagree with the judicial system, but that's the truth. And it's the God's honest truth."

The lawyer, Peter Morrison, said he was "real disappointed, man. The verdict is the verdict and the truth is the truth. I don't think the verdict changes the truth."

He said he and Gastineau had not yet decided whether to appeal the verdict.

In a statement, the Jets said, "The club is very happy for Ken O'Brien and obviously very disappointed with the misdemeanor verdict against Mark Gastineau. We will support Mark in every future effort to prove his innocence, whatever that might entail."

Both defendants and their lawyers said they believed the case was tried only because of the players' celebrity.

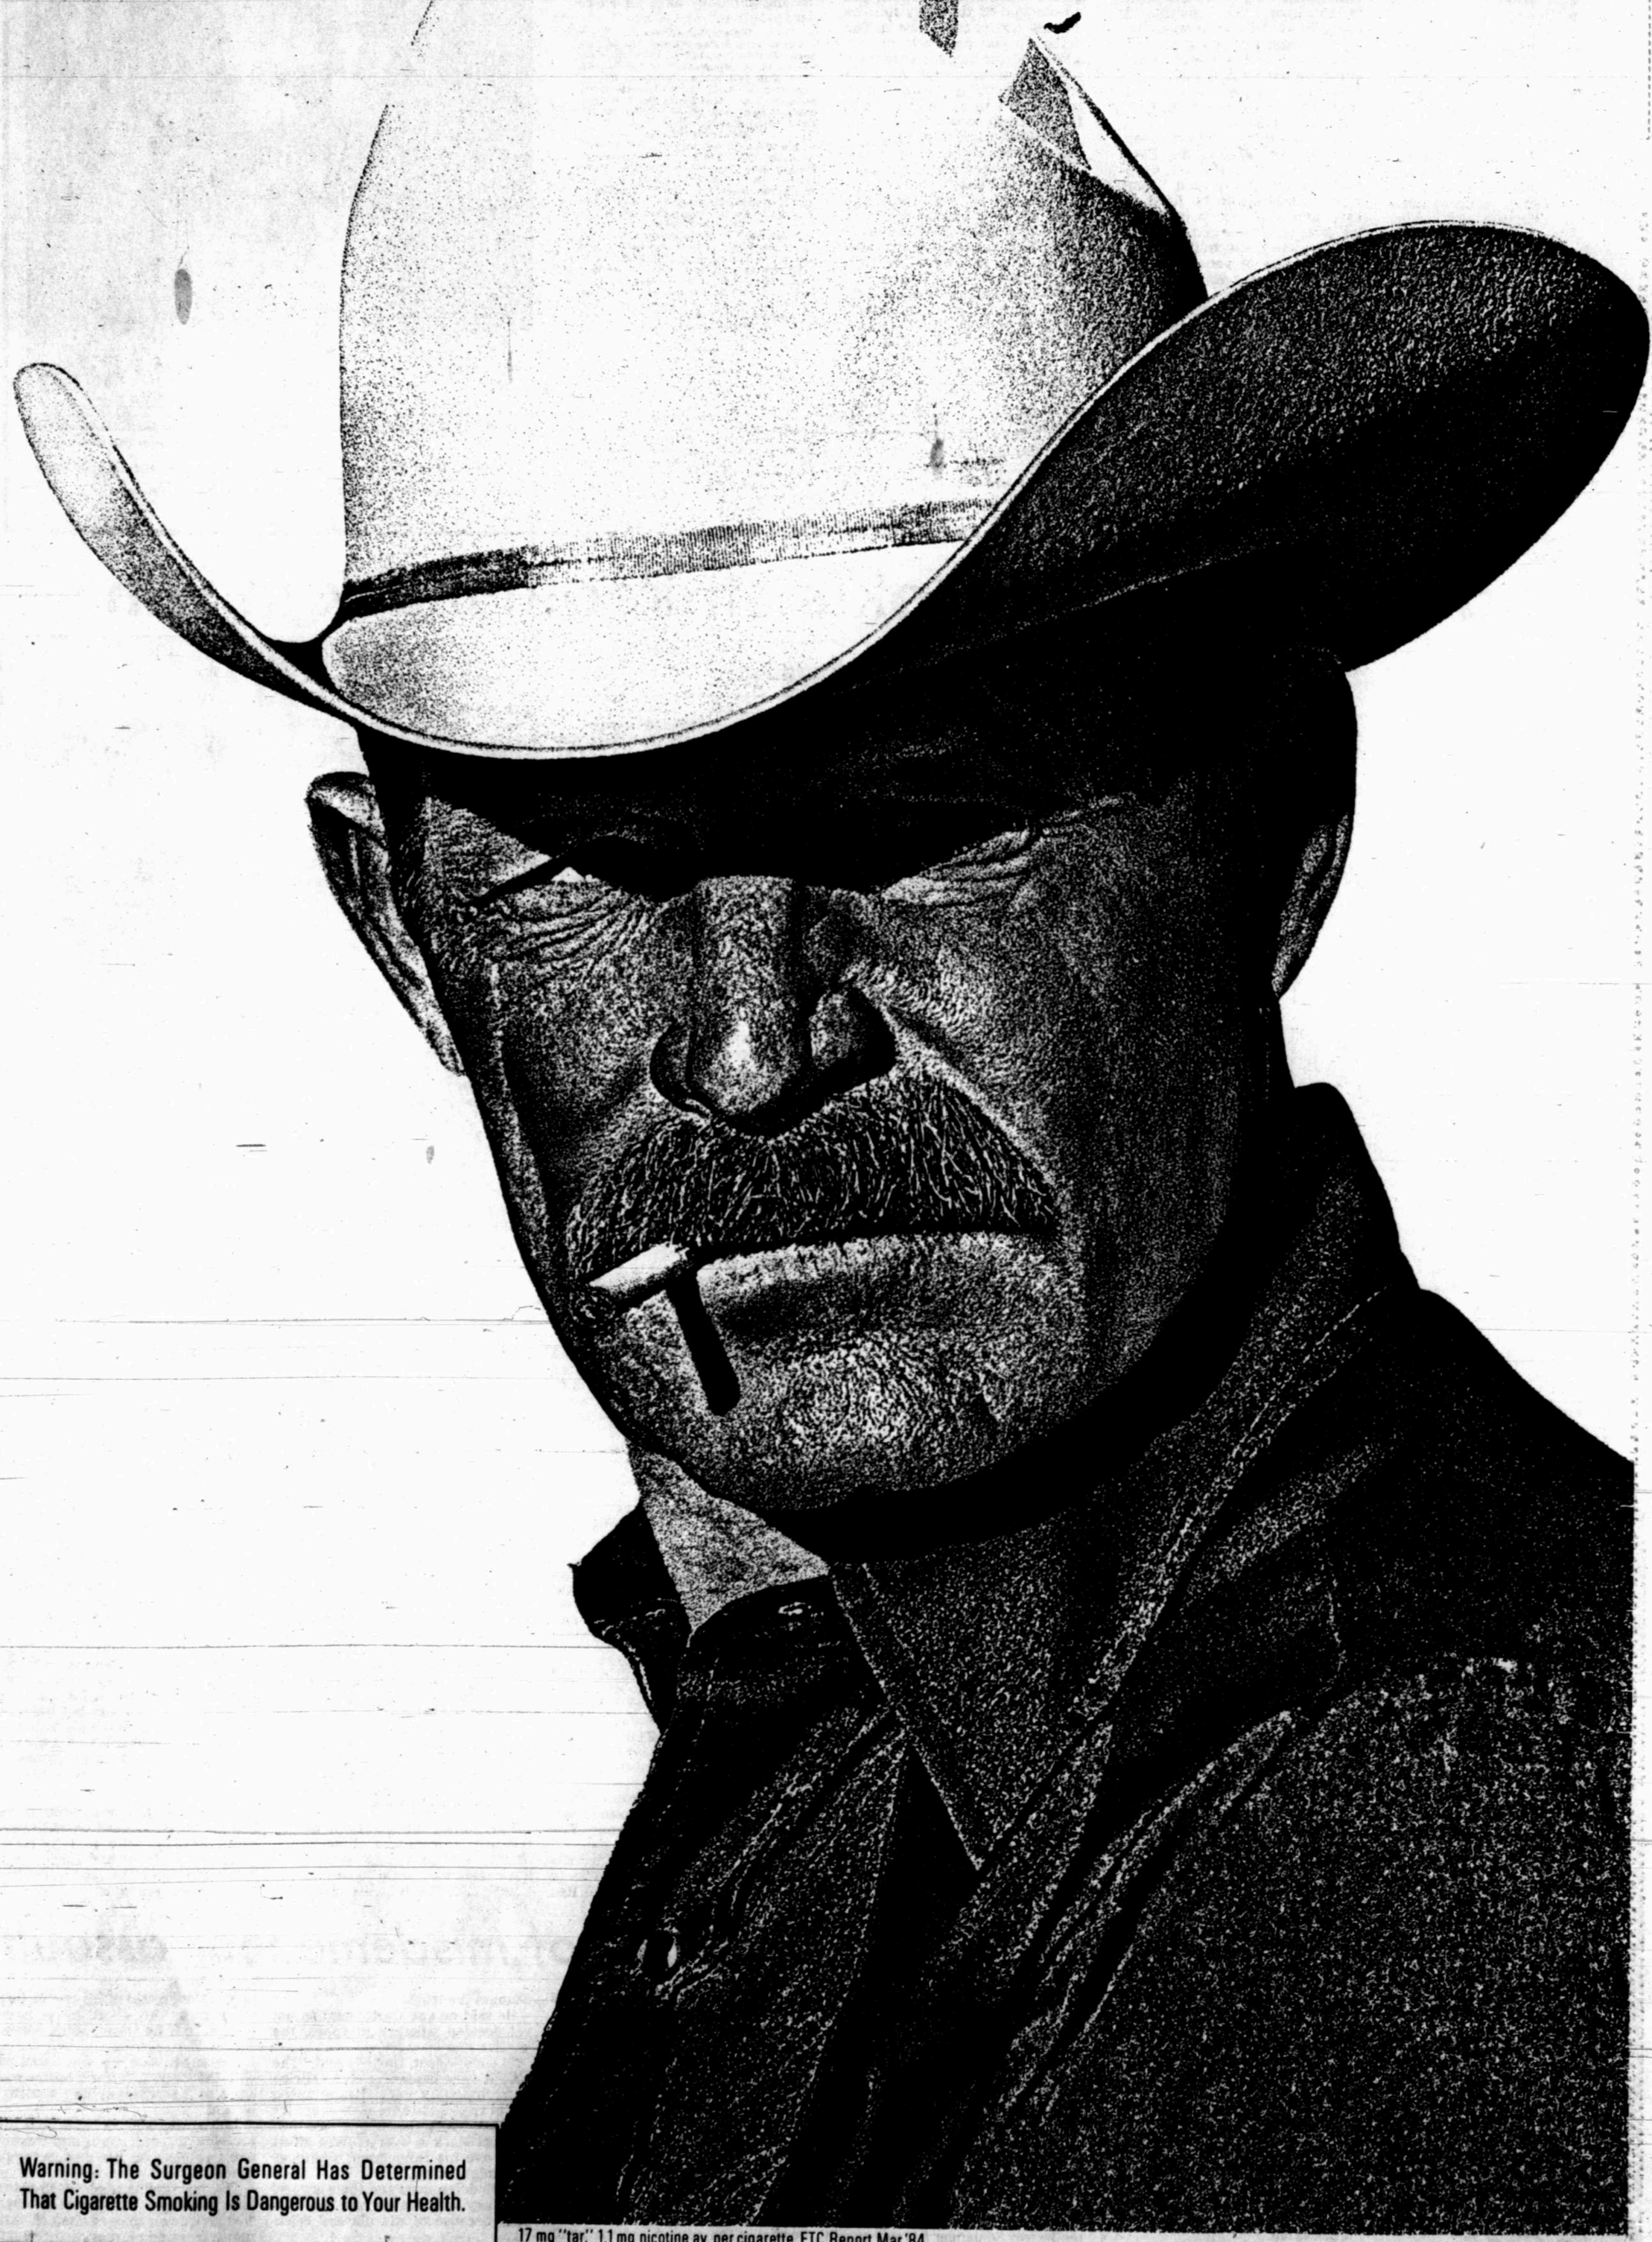

"I think it's a piece of exploitation," O'Brien said of his teammate's conviction. "He would never have been here if he wasn't Mark Gastineau."

Schlanger said he was satisfied with the verdict. "I think justice was done, as it is with any jury verdict," he said.

Judge Alan Marrus set sentencing for Nov. 20 and continued Gastineau's release on his own recognizance.

The jury deliberated for 15 hours over two days. Nearly half the time was given over to re-reading of testimony from employees of the nightclub.

Secret out on Edinburg end after 16-catch opener

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

Edinburg split end Steve Alaniz caught 16 passes in a game last week that tied him for second place on the state's all-time single game receiving list and likely made him a marked man for the rest of the season.

"I imagine teams will double cover him from now on, which should help the rest of our offense," Edinburg Coach Richard Flores said. "People are going to decide if they're just going to put their best athlete on him or what."

Alaniz, considered Edinburg's best athlete, amassed 184 yards and a four-yard touchdown catch in his near-record performance. The Bobcats still lost to Gregory-Portland 28-27 with a 39-yard field goal by Shane Smith as time ran out in the game.

The receiving gem earned Alaniz mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll along with Schertz Clemens running back A.J. Johnson who disobeyed his coach and got patted on the back for it.

Dublin's Sammy Taylor holds the state record of 22 catches in a 1980 game against Ranger.

Dublin quarterback Bill Boy Bryant, now a receiver at the University of Texas, completed 37 of 55 passes in the 1980 game and his brother Blake caught 16 more in the same game.

Alaniz is tied with Blake Bryant and Mike Coomer of McCamey, who caught 16 passes in a 1970 game against Coahoma.

"He's probably the best all-around athlete in the school," Flores said. "He plays golf, basketball and runs track and he could probably be good at pool or handball or whatever he tried."

Lehnhoff isn't criticizing his star runner because when Johnson took matters into his own hands and fielded a Seguin punt at his own 10, he returned it 90 yards for one of four touchdowns in a 33-14 victory.

Johnson, 5-9, 160, rushed 209 yards on 18 carries, scored on runs of 66 and 86 yards and caught a 56-yard touchdown pass. Johnson, a senior, also returned two punts 35 yards for 388 total yards and punted six times for a 38.6 average.

Johnson's all-around effort earns mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll.

"He's extra strong and he was fast enough to win our district in the 100 and 200 meters," Lehnhoff said of Johnson. "He's not very big but he doesn't get spun around."

Lehnhoff had instructed Johnson to back away from any punt inside the 10 yard line prior to his 90-yarder.

"But he's an intelligent player," Lehnhoff said. "He could look down the field and see an opening so he took it. I looked out there and said 'Oh, no, he's going to catch it.' But then I saw the same opening he did."

San Antonio Madison's Mitch Price scored four touchdowns and ran a two-point conversion in a 45-20 victory over San Antonio Edison.

Price had a 44-yard kickoff return to set up his first touchdown, a one-yard run. His other scoring runs went for 62, two and two yards.

In other outstanding first week performances:

–La Marque adopted the United States Football League's run-and-shoot offense and quarterback Ed Lovell took to it in the first game with 258 yards passing for four touchdowns in a 28-6 victory over Baytown Lee.

–Klondike's Tim Cope had a six-touchdown performance in a 48-0 victory over Buena Vista.

Football glut hits airwaves

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The biggest winners in college football this season will be the television networks and the armchair fan.

Thanks to the U.S. Supreme Court ruling that killed the lucrative NCAA-ABC-CBS TV plan once and for all — at least for 1984 — the networks are saving money by paying the schools less. And on most Saturdays a viewer can stay glued to his set for more hours than the final day of the U.S. Open Tennis.

For example, this Saturday features Washington-Michigan (noon, EDT, CBS-TV), Oklahoma-Pitt (3:30 p.m., EDT, ABC-TV) and Auburn-Texas (7:30 p.m., EDT, ESPN). And that doesn't include all the regional and conference TV packages.

While Saturday's schedule also includes such appetizing fare as Penn State-Iowa and Miami-Purdue, Nebraska will be putting its new No. 1 ranking on the line, so to speak, at home against Minnesota. And the line says Nebraska is a 38-point favorite.

So why is Coach Tom Osborne worried? Seems that last year, Arkansas had an open date the week before it played Texas and Coach Lou Holtz and four assistants traipsed to Nebraska for two days.

"They looked at all our cut-up reels (of film)," Osborne remembers. "They came over and looked at each play — our 41-pitch and 34-trap — over and over. We talked about it and tried to tell him everything."

But Holtz changed jobs in December and turned up — surprise! — at Minnesota, which was 1-10 a year ago, including that memorable 84-13 rout by Nebraska.

"Normally, you don't tell a coach you're going to play against the next year everything you know about your own offense," Osborne says. "I wish we hadn't done that. Normally, we don't even exchange film if we're going to play a team one or two years down the road."

Holtz, that noted quipster and amateur magician, had better bring his full bag of tricks to Lincoln. But it won't be 84-13 this year. How about . . . Nebraska 48-13.

Last week's record was 36 right, 10 wrong and one tie for a percentage of .783; for the season, 55-17-1—.764. Against the spread, however, last week was only 11-13—.458; on the year, 14-16—.467. Both of last week's Upset Specials covered — Southern Mississippi against Georgia and Syracuse against Maryland.

No. 16 Washington at No. 3 Michigan (favored by 5): The Wolverines intercepted Bernie Kosar six times in beating Miami last week and Washington doesn't have anyone in Kosar's class . . . Michigan 21-14.

No. 11 Auburn at No. 4 Texas (pick 'em): Auburn has had almost three weeks off since losing (a) to Miami and (b) its preseason No. 1 ranking. And the Tigers are still smarting over last year's only setback, 20-7 to . . . Texas 20-7.

No. 12 Penn State at No. 5 (tie) Iowa (by 6): The Nittany Lions have a score to settle, the score being last year's 42-34 loss. But the Hawkeyes might be better and Penn State didn't show much against Rutgers . . . Iowa 28-14.

No. 5 (tie) Miami, Fla. (by 13) at Purdue: Apparently the oddsmakers weren't impressed by Purdue's upset of Notre Dame . . . Miami 28-21.

Long Beach State at No. 7 UCLA (no line): The Bruins will be looking ahead to Nebraska but it won't make any difference . . . UCLA 42-14.

Tulsa at No. 8 Brigham Young (by 14): Tulsa has one of the most underrated programs in the country, but BYU has one of the best . . . BYU 35-13.

Washington State at No. 9 Ohio State (by 9): Buckeye quarterback Mike Tomczak has been cleared for action but he might not want to play before the boo-birds that caused Coach Earle Bruce to say, "We sort of consider Ohio Stadium as an away game." All is forgiven, Earle . . . Ohio State 27-13.

Bowling Green at No. 13 Oklahoma State (no line): The Cowboys' 45-3 rout of Arizona State thrust them into the Top Twenty for the first time since 1977. But BG's Mark McClure is the nation's top-rated passer and this one won't be that easy . . . Oklahoma State 28-17.

No. 14 Southern Methodist (by 23) at Louisville: The Mustangs haven't played yet and they're chomping at the bit . . . SMU 38-13.

No. 15 Oklahoma at No. 17 Pitt (by 3½): The Panthers dropped their opener to BYU, but Coach Foge Fazio says they "can get it all back" by beating Oklahoma. "One nice thing about football is that there's always that game next week." This week . . . Pitt 24-20.

No. 18 Florida State (by 16) at Kansas: The Seminoles will be looking ahead to Miami and this won't be any vacation. Upset Special of the Week . . . Kansas 27-24.

No. 19 Alabama (by 7) at Georgia Tech: The Crimson Tide won't have Doug Flutie to kick them around this week, only a bunch of injuries to worry about . . . Alabama 28-17.

Vanderbilt at Maryland (by 7): Second Upset Special . . . Vandy 28-17.

Mississippi at Arkansas (by 7½): Third Upset Special . . . Ole Miss 20-17.

Other games:

Southwest — Houston 31, Miami of Ohio 7; Texas Tech 28, Texas-Arlington 7.

Winslow makes biggest catch of NFL career

By JERRY MAGEE
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — After feinting in the direction of the United States Football League, the San Diego Chargers' Kellen Winslow went in for about a $3.5 million score Wednesday.

The San Diego club has not disclosed terms of the agreement it has reached with the tight end, but Winslow's agent, Jim Steiner, said it averages about $700,000 a year for five years.

"His deal averages over a five-year period in the ballpark of what was speculated that we were asking," Steiner said Wednesday night from his St. Louis home.

Speculation that Winslow was seeking $700,000 a year had been based on his remark recently that he considered that figure "a nice neighborhood."

Steiner said he plans to come to San Diego next week, at which time Winslow will sign. When he does so, he will become the second-highest paid player in the Chargers' 25-year history.

Only quarterback Dan Fouts, who before the 1983 season signed for six years for a reported $7.2 million, has had a more rewarding contract.

Winslow's contract apparently will bring him more than double what the National Football League's next-highest paid tight end is earning. The Green Bay Packers' Paul Coffman, at $290,000, has the highest salary among tight ends, according to studies of figures obtained from the NFL Players Association.

Winslow's agreement came a week and three days after he "retired" following the Chargers' opening game in Minnesota Sept. 2. It also came two days, by Steiner's account, before the deadline the Houston Gamblers of the USFL had given Winslow to accept a contract proposal.

Steiner emphasized Wednesday that when he and Winslow went to Texas last weekend to hear the Houston team's bid, they were not doing so in order to gain leverage in negotiations with the Chargers.

"The Gamblers made a very aggressive attempt to sign him. It was not a bluff," Steiner said. "I had a legitimate offer from the Gamblers. It was something that could have been signed."

Had Winslow wished to accept the USFL team's terms, he could not have joined the Gamblers until 1986. He is bound to the Chargers through the 1985 season by the terms of his existing contract, which will be replaced by the one he will sign next week.

Under his existing contract, Winslow is being paid $210,000 this season. In 1985, he would have received $231,000, or 110 percent of the last figure for which he was contracted.

In detailing Winslow's agreement Wednesday, General Manager Johnny Sanders said the athlete's existing contract has been extended three years, through 1988. But he is to receive substantial increases this season and in 1985, according to Steiner.

"Let me phrase it this way: He's playing for different numbers in the next two years than he had been," Steiner said.

Before Winslow embarked on his "retirement," he had been offered a reported $480,000 for this season by the San Diego club, and four yearly increases in increments of about $50,000. That adds up to $2.9 million.

By listening to the Gamblers, then, Winslow placed himself in a bargaining position in which he has won from the Chargers an additional $600,000, or $120,000 a year for each year of his new agreement.

Jerry Argovitz, president and part owner of the Gamblers, was traveling to New York Wednesday, and could not be reached for comment on Winslow's decision. Jay Roulier, a Denver real estate developer who has assumed an ownership role in the Houston club, last week said the team was willing to give Winslow as much as $600,000 a year.

"The dollars are in the ballpark," Steiner said of Roulier's statement, "but the length was much shorter (than five years)."

Steiner said the Chargers kept two promises they had made to Winslow: that they would not negotiate with him as long as he was not with them and practicing, and that, should he rejoin them, they would resume talks.

Winslow rejoined the club Monday. "We then got it done in 36 hours," Steiner said.

"I don't think either side got what they wanted," Sanders said. "Mr. (Alex) Spanos is very happy that everything is out of the way, and we can get the best players we can on the field. Onward."

Spanos, of Stockton, Calif., is the newly seated managing partner of the San Diego team.

In a meeting with reporters after the Chargers' practice Wednesday, Winslow said he was sincere in retiring.

"Very sincere," he said.

Then why did his "retirement" last only six days?

"I had an offer from the Gamblers, and in order to accept that offer, I had to serve out my contract with the Chargers," he said. "I think that's common sense."

'Premium' white bread gets mediocre rating

By LINDA ANDERSON

Going to the corner store for a loaf of bread isn't as easy as it once was. Now, not only is the corner store a supermarket three miles down the road and across heavy traffic, but bread now comes in so many shapes, sizes and flavors it is difficult to pick the right one.

Whole wheat, cracked wheat, 100 percent whole wheat, rye with or without seeds, country white, sour dough, oatmeal and pita — it becomes confusing.

Plain, ordinary white bread is the most common bread today. Now (just to make things more confusing) Rainbow Bread Co. has introduced Rainbow Gold Label Milk and Honey (which is wrapped in a gold label, of course), and is advertised as a premium white sandwich loaf.

We tested Rainbow's new loaf against ordinary Rainbow white sandwich bread for price, taste, texture and advertising accuracy. The taste testers were adults, children and teenagers.

The new Rainbow loaf is advertised as being better than ordinary white sandwich bread — "the gold standard in bread," according to television commercials. Newspaper advertising claims it is "...the best-tasting white bread...because it's made better. With real golden honey. And pure wholesome milk...richer texture. Stays fresher longer. And tastes like nothing you've ever tasted. In fact, we guarantee it to be the best-tasting white bread ever made." (Reminded me of those old Hollywood cliches: "Stupendous! Colossal! Gigantic!")

Right away I spotted a major difference in the two loaves — the Rainbow Gold Label loaf cost $1.07 for a 1½-pound loaf. The regular Rainbow cost 84 cents for the same sized loaf. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

The two breads look the same — like ordinary square, white sandwich bread. We had trouble telling which was which by appearance.

Ingredients listed on the ordinary Rainbow bread label included unbleached wheat flour, water, corn syrup and "2 percent or less" of several other items such as yeast, salt, whey solids and malted barley flour.

On the Rainbow Gold label, ingredients listed are unbleached wheat flour, low fat milk, honey and "2 percent or less" of yeast, salt, corn syrup, soy flour, etc.

Both breads are identical in nutrition, according to their label lists. Per two-slice serving, both breads contain five grams protein, 28 grams carbohydrates, two grams fat and 150 calories. Both provide 8 percent of the protein, 15 percent of the thiamine (vitamin B1), 6 percent of the calcium and 8 percent of the riboflavin (vitamin B2), niacin and iron recommended in the U.S.RDA (recommended daily allowance).

The taste-testers agreed the two breads are almost identical in flavor. Those who did decide one was better-tasting, chose the Gold Label — but all said the difference in flavor was so slight as to be almost nonexistant.

Rainbow Gold Label bread is a good sandwich loaf. So is regular Rainbow bread. Gold Label is square and white and contains a certain amount of nutrients necessary for good health. So does regular Rainbow. Gold Label tastes good. So does regular Rainbow.

In fact, the only difference we could find is Gold Label really does contain milk (low fat) and honey, and regular Rainbow doesn't.

I don't know if Gold Label stays fresher longer, like the advertisement said, because with six people in my family, bread never stays around long enough to turn stale. But "the best-tasting white bread ever made"? Hardly.

Kindergartners retained after failing tests

New York Times News Service

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — When about 300 of this city's children were not promoted from kindergarten this spring, the news prompted a few jokes.

But to Dr. Richard R. Green, superintendent of the Minneapolis Public Schools, it was no laughing matter. He says pupils must master basic skills before they start first grade.

"I think our statement of last year is a powerful one," Green said.

Other school systems test competence in basic skills for promotion to the next grade, but Minneapolis is thought to be the only one that tests kindergartners for readiness for first grade.

Among other things, they must recognize letters of the alphabet, colors and numbers up to 31 and be able to add different coins to equal 10 cents.

School officials in 28 states and the District of Columbia have inquired about the 60-question oral test in language arts and mathematics that was administered individually to kindergartners in April.

School officials said 291 of 3,010 children scored below the cutoff mark and were retained in kindergarten. Six others passed the test but were retained because their teachers deemed them unready for first grade. Fifty-four students were later promoted after passing the test in summer school.

Green's efforts have received little public criticism, even from those parents whose children attended summer school after the kindergarten experience and still were not promoted to first grade. The fact that what was considered a disproportionate number of the children who were not promoted were members of racial minorities brought no big protest, either, and some parents who initially planned a march changed their minds.

Peter A. Rode, research director for the Urban Coalition of Minneapolis, a private group that reviewed the test before it was administered and is now monitoring the program, said: "There have been some parents who think that it doesn't make sense to keep their kids back and who say that they've never heard of such a thing before."

"But," he added, "in general, there seems to be a 'let's wait and see, try it out' attitude."

Rode said there was widespread support for "the underlying idea of having a realistic way of assessing what the kids can do, and, once you've found the gaps, making sure you can bring them up to the rest of the class."

Ronald A. Edwards, president of the Minneapolis Urban League, said a few black parents initially wanted to protest to the school board about their children's retention. Cooler tempers prevailed, he said, when it was pointed out that Green had been warning for two years that "there would have to be a radical departure from the standard 'Well, let's just pass them right on through.'t"

For months, school officials, particularly teachers, had been in regular contact with parents to discuss how their children were progressing. That paid off, Edwards said, when the bad news came in the spring.

"The other thing," he added, "is that parents began to realize that this was also a quiet indictment of them, of how they had done in preparing the child in the previous five years."

As part of Green's five-year plan for improving public education in the city, a series of "promotional gates" have been established. Students reach these gates at the end of kindergarten, second, fifth, seventh and ninth grades. To get through the gates, they must pass tests devised by Minneapolis school officials.

The kindergartners were the first to face these requirements, but tests will also be administered to second and ninth graders next spring and to fifth and seventh graders in 1986.

DEAR ABBY

Sex theory ignores call of the wild

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You advised "Mismatched," the woman whose sexual appetite didn't match her husband's, to seek therapy. Bad advice, Abby. It's just another example of the guilt trip that has been laid on women ever since Freud and Kinsey came along with their crackpot theories about sex.

It is a biological truth that female mammals, which includes human beings, have a brief period of sexual desire when the ovum is ready for impregnation by the male. This period is easily observed in wild mammals and is familiar to owners of female dogs and cats. We humans have chosen to ignore its existence, and try to make our females feel guilty because they desire sex far less frequently than males, whom nature created to be always ready for action.

A woman who loves her husband will willingly accommodate his need for sexual pleasure even if she does not desire it at the time. For this she will receive another kind of pleasure — the pleasure of pleasing her husband. — HAPPILY MARRIED

DEAR MARRIED: The female of the human species need not be in her fertile phase to desire sex. The biological "truth" you cited is a misconception. (No pun intended.)

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 36-year-old gay man. Last fall I lost "Randy" (my lover of 14 years) in an accident. We lived together. Although Randy was the chief breadwinner, he always referred to the furnishings in our love apartment as "ours."

Immediately after his funeral I was too grief-stricken to do anything but stay in bed. Randy's mother, an aunt and a niece came to see me and asked if it was all right if they took a few mementos. I told them to take whatever they wanted. (Nothing material mattered to me at the time.)

By the time I got out of bed and started to live again, I found that there was nothing of value left — no silver, glassware, stereo, records, towels. They had cleaned me out!

Last week an old friend stopped by. He told me that he had been to a garage sale at Randy's mother's house, where she had sold the things she had taken from our apartment. Randy's precious opera collection went for 10 cents an album! And there were many items that had great sentimental value. I am still heartbroken, but my anger at Randy's family is beginning to overpower my grief at losing Randy.

What should I do? — HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: Although you did give Randy's mother permission to help herself, the greedy, grasping woman clearly took advantage of your grief-stricken state. You could sue, but it would probably be a very costly, painful and possibly futile experience. My condolences. Perhaps others who read this will learn from your sad experience.

BETTER BUSINESS

Canadian lotteries illegal in U.S.

By LINDA TRUITT

The Better Business Bureau has received a rash of calls regarding Canadian lottery tickets being sold in the United States. Be warned that selling Canadian lottery tickets is illegal in this country.

While lotteries are legal in Canada, Canadian officials respect U.S. laws and do not support tickets illegally sold by unofficial representatives.

Violators often operate out of post office boxes and Canadian officials have a difficult time determining who is responsible for the illegal activity or where they are buying the tickets. Be assured the advertisement you received is not from an authorized dealer.

A Canadian lottery solicitation being received by many people in this area has a return address in Vancouver, British Columbia. According to the Postal Inspection office in Fort Worth, the company sending this mail has had a stop order issued against it. This means if you decide to enter the lottery, your check will not be sent to Canada but to New York and classified as undeliverable.

If by chance your money does reach Canada, because you are dealing with an unauthorized dealer there is no guarantee your ticket will be entered in the lottery and there is no way to check.

Home purchases require two family incomes

Copley News Service

Sometimes families have to really stretch their resources to swing a home purchase. But they're doing just that to satisfy that powerful "home ownership" desire.

For starters, it usually takes two incomes to qualify for a needed home mortgage loan in today's market. Both spouses must work and pool their income to squeak by the loan qualification requirements — and to pay those sizable monthly payments.

In fact, a recent survey conducted by Century 21 Real Estate Corp. revealed that 65.5 percent of all new home buyers this year are working couples whose earnings from a second income are necessary to qualify for home financing.

The survey, incidentally, also noted that an increasing number of single-income families are renters. Even though many of these folk would much rather own their home, they can't handle a purchase with only one income.

The proportion of two-income families has been steadily increasing since 1977. And a major reason for that trend is the strong motivation to own a home.

Two incomes are particularly necessary for young, first-time home buyers, who lack a substantial down payment or the capability to transfer equity from one property to another. About 40 percent of today's home buyers are first-timers.

Planned Parenthood board meets

A planning session for board members of Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin will be Saturday at the Odessa Hilton. The session will also serve as an orientation for new members of the board of directors who were recently selected.

Featured speaker will be Amy Dienesch of Atlanta, associate director of developement for the Southern Region, Planned Parenthood Federation of America. Mrs. Dienesch has worked in the field of family planning for 12 years and has a master's degree in family development and a B.A. in psychology.

Before assuming her position with PPFA in Atlanta, Mrs. Dienesch worked for other Planned Parenthood affiliates as director of counseling, education director and director of development. She has served as a board member for a Planned Parenthood affiliate.

She has also served with other social service agencies as an executive director and worked with public relations. She has been a consultant and university teacher in marriage, family and human sexuality.

Board members of PPPB will have a short business meeting followed by discussions about roles and responsibilities of the board and staff. Future plans, family planning issues and fund-raising will also be discussed.

PPPB is a non-profit organization serving 17 counties and providing family planning care. Services are charged on a sliding scale basis so no one is turned away because of inability to pay. There are eight clinic locations: Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Lamesa, Seminole, Monahans, Fort Stockton and Pecos. The PPPB affiliate is now in its 20th year of operation.

Museum tour scheduled

Elizabeth Cunningham, curator of the Masterpieces of the American West collection now featured at the Museum of the Southwest, will conduct a tour and discussion of the exhibit at 7:30 p.m. tonight at the Museum. The tour will be free. The Museum will open at 7 p.m. tonight for viewing the exhibit before the tour.

Masterpieces of the American West includes art, history, painting, living legends, fascinating tales, Indians, cowboys, beautiful landscapes, harsh climate and other features of the region. The collection has been exhibited in China, Belgium, France, Finland, England, Canada and throughout the United States.

Hot water does double-duty

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — A local fast food hamburger restaurant that uses more than 1 million gallons of hot water each year has cut its energy requirements for heating this water by 25 percent. This has been done by reclaiming formerly wasted kitchen heat and using it to preheat the facility's hot water supply, reports a national energy industry journal.

The eatery heats its water electrically, a widely used method in restaurants. The savings is achieved, says Energy User News, by capturing heat thrown off from the kitchen's semi-automatic dishwater, passing it through a condenser to transfer it to water and then repeatedly circulating the partially heated water to storage tanks until the water reaches the required level of 140 F.

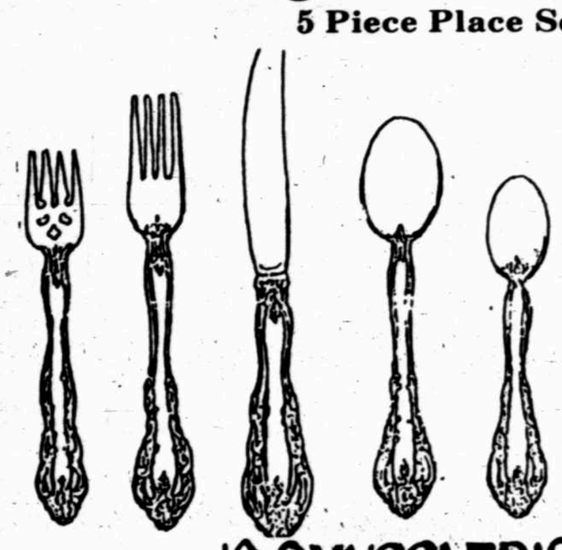

In addition to preheating the restaurant's water, the system supplies the kitchen area with the equivalent of approximately three tons of air conditioning by drawing off the heated air in the kitchen and transferring it to the water. After having some of its heat removed, the air is blown from the system and back into the kitchen area at a temperature 10 to 15 degrees cooler than the existing air.

Author won't get monetary damages

Collins

NEW YORK (AP) — Best-selling author Jackie Collins won't be getting the $10 million she was awarded after being wrongly identified in a skin magazine photograph because she had surrendered some of her right to privacy and there was no malice involved, a court said.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said it was clear Miss Collins was mistakenly named as the nude woman pictured in a May 1980 issue of "Adelina" magazine, distributed by publisher Larry Flynt. The photo came from a movie she had written, "The World Is Full of Married Men." She did not appear in the film.

In its ruling Monday, the court said Miss Collins surrendered some of her right to privacy by becoming a public expert on sexual mores.

As a result, her lawyers had to prove that the Flynt Distributing Co. Inc. of Los Angeles acted with malice — the same standard used in libel suits involving public figures. The appeals court found no evidence of malice.

Miss Collins, author of "Chances" and "Hollywood Wives," was awarded $40 million in June 1983 by a six-woman jury at U.S. District Court in Manhattan, and the amount later was reduced to $10 million.

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — If he had to do it all over again, G. Gordon Liddy said he would not hesitate to stage another Watergate-type burglary of a political opponent's headquarters.

"In a similar circumstance, I would behave in a similar manner," Liddy said Wednesday. "But with the benefit of hindsight, I'd have a more hearty crew the next time around."

Liddy masterminded the May and June 1972 burglaries of the Democratic National Committee's headquarters in the Watergate Hotel complex in Washington.

He received the stiffest term of any of the Watergate conspirators — 21 years in prison and a $40,000 fine.

Later, Liddy was convicted of burglarizing the office of the psychiatrist of Daniel Ellsberg, who had leaked the "Pentagon Papers" to The New York Times. For that, he received a 3½-year term.

Liddy served a total of four years in nine prisons before his sentence was commuted in April 1977 by President Carter and he was paroled the following September.

His comments preceded his speech to the Sales and Marketing Executives of Tidewater.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Hank Williams Jr. says he turned to drugs in the 1970s to escape his legendary father's shadow, but gave them up when doctors told him he could end up dying at an early age like his dad, who died at age 29.

The 34-year-old country singer has been off drugs since late 1979, Williams told The Tennessean, Nashville's morning newspaper, in a copyright story in today's editions.

"I do not fool with drugs any more," he said. "I don't have time for that now. I did all that...in the past, but that's the past.

"I realized I was coming to a dead end real quick. I thought, 'This is stupid, I don't want to kill myself,' so I got off drugs."

His father Hank Williams, recognized as one of country music's biggest stars, died of alcohol-induced heart failure Jan. 1, 1953, while in the back seat of a car en route to a concert in Canton, Ohio.

LONDON (AP) — A Soviet foreign policy adviser has told a television interviewer that Konstantin U. Chernenko is continuing his work as the Soviet Union's top leader.

Stanislav Menchikov, the adviser, was asked about an unattributed report in the West German newspaper Die Welt that said the 72-year-old Soviet president was hospitalized after appearing at an awards ceremony last week.

"This is the first time I hear about it," Menchikov said in Moscow, where he was interviewed in English by the British Independent Television program "Channel 4 News."

"All we know is that Mr. Chernenko is working at his desk," Menchikov said Wednesday.

Woman accused in Belushi death fights extradition

TORONTO (AP) — Cathy Evelyn Smith, the former singer charged with murder in the drug-overdose death of comedian John Belushi, will appeal a judge's ruling ordering her extradited to face trial in California, a spokeswoman for her lawyer says.

Judge Stephen Borins of York County Court on Wednesday ordered the 37-year-old Miss Smith extradited on the murder charge and 13 counts of administering dangerous drugs. He said prosecutors had presented a case strong enough to warrant a trial.

Miss Smith will appeal the extradition ruling, said Betty Shipman, a spokeswoman for defense lawyer Brian Greenspan. The appeal was expected to be filed at the provincial Ontario Supreme Court today.

The appeal, which will extend indefinitely the time Miss Smith can remain in Canada before being surrendered to U.S. authorities, could take years if pursued to the Supreme Court of Canada.

However, Los Angeles County District Attorney Robert Philibosian said: "Ultimately, we will have her back. I'm expecting to have her back in Los Angeles in two to six months."

Crown Attorney Ari Coomaraswamy said he believed Miss Smith would apply today for a bail hearing, but Ms. Shipman did not confirm that.

Belushi, who gained fame on NBC-TV's "Saturday Night Live" for his portrayals of a Samurai swordsman, a blues singer, a bee and other fanciful characters, died March 5, 1982, at age 33 in Los Angeles.

An autopsy found acute cocaine and heroin intoxication.

Police questioned Miss Smith, a former backup singer for Gordon Lightfoot and others, and released her. She moved back to Canada, where she is from.

The case was reopened after the National Enquirer, a weekly tabloid, quoted her as saying she injected Belushi with a "speedball" mixture of heroin and cocaine which killed him. She was indicted in March 1983.

In affidavits presented at the extradition hearing, two friends of Belushi's said they saw Miss Smith mix white powder with water and inject the comedian with the solution many times in the five days before he died.

Greenspan argued in the three-day extradition hearing last month that the evidence against Miss Smith would not support murder charges under Canadian law because there was nothing to suggest she intended to kill him.

He also said the evidence on the drug administration charges was too weak.

On Wednesday, Miss Smith listened to the judge's ruling without visible reaction, then was taken immediately to a detention center.

Miss Smith has been free on bail for the past 18 months, writing an autobiographical book to be called "Chasing the Dragon." It is scheduled for publication in October.

Young mother surprised by draft registration notice

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Christine Bragg couldn't believe it when she received a draft registration notice in the mail this week.

"At first I thought, girls don't have to register for the draft yet, do they? Oh well, they can draft me if they want to — if they will pay for a babysitter," the 21-year-old mother of two young sons said.

The draft notice received Monday said, "As a result of a computer check of government files, you have been identified as someone who should have registered for selective service."

What shocked her was the way the form had everything right — name, address, Social Security number — except her sex, which was listed as male.

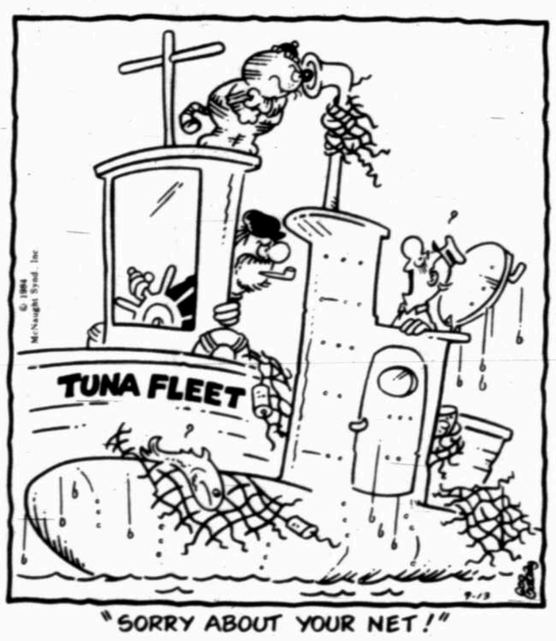

"I read the stuff on the back about the fine and everything and I thought, 'Oh geez! A $10,000 fine and five years in prison for failing to register!" she said.

She's not sure what to do about the draft registration notice.

"I called a recruiting officer and he said there wasn't anything he could really do about it, but I could ignore it if I wanted to," she said.

She said the officer laughed "but I wonder what would happen if I ignored it. Would they come to my door with an officer?" she said.

Cabbies hot under the collar over proposal

MIAMI (AP) — A proposal to spruce up the sartorial splender of cab drivers and boost the city's tourist image has cabbies hot under the collar.

County officials proposed earlier this week that all cab drivers wear the loose-fitting Latin shirts known as guayaberas.

"The first impression arriving visitors get in many instances is the taxi cab driver," said J.R. Fernandez, chief of the regulatory branch of the Dade County Transportation Administration.

"It's very important we make that first impression a good one."

Fernandez and other officials and businessmen are boosting the guayabera as the perfect fit for Miami's casual lifestyle.

The garment, highly popular in the Caribbean and Central and South America, is bright, light and comfortable, they said.

But some of the 3,500 cab drivers who would have to wear them found holes in the idea.

"If somebody's cab breaks down, you have to climb under the hood and work on it. It would be very expensive to keep them clean," said a Super Yellow Cab driver who did not want his name used.

"You'd have to buy six or seven of them," said driver Andy Sirak, 21. "Who's going to spend $60 to $80 when he's got his rent to pay?"

Another driver, who identified himself only as Mike, said he didn't like the style of the garment, worn outside the pants.

"I would never wear that kind of a shirt," he said, "I want a shirt I can tuck into my pants."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ◇.

It is a natural tendency that, when you can give your partner a ruff, you do so at the first opportunity. That can be fatal. You must consider the hand as a whole.

North bid aggressively and South conservatively. As a result, they reached a four spade contract that would make far more often than not.

West decided his best chance to defeat the contract was to score diamond ruffs. East won the opening diamond lead and dutifully gave his partner a ruff. Unfortunately, West had no way to reach his partner for a second diamond ruff, so declarer was able to force out the ace of trumps. When East returned another diamond and West could not ruff again, declarer had an easy time making the rest of the tricks.

East should have realized a diamond ruff would only give the defenders three tricks. Since South chose four spades rather than three no trump as the final contract, he was marked with exactly a five-card trump suit. That left West with only two trumps.

If West held an ace, he would surely have time to cash it. However, if West held the king of hearts, it was vital to set up that card before declarer could get discards on the diamonds.

Observe what would have happened if, at trick two, East had shifted to a heart. If declarer plays low, West scores the king of hearts. Sooner or later East will win the ace of trumps and give his partner a diamond ruff for down one. And if declarer rises with the ace of hearts to lead a trump, East wins, gives his partner a diamond ruff and West cashes the king of hearts for the setting trick.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actresses Mary Frances Crosby, Zoe Caldwell and Joey Heatherton, Clayton Moore (the Lone Ranger), producer Hal Wallis, San Diego baseball announcer Jerry Coleman, newscaster Hughes Rudd, feminist-author Kate Millett and school labor leader Albert Shanker celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: actor Nicol Williamson. A business relationship may not be as good as it seems. Challenge decisions you do not feel to be in your best interest. Insist on getting answers to your financial questions. October is an especially happy time for romance and family life. Travel broadens your horizons, bringing you good luck. Take mate along.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Attention to detail will pay off in a variety of ways. Concentrate on your financial accounts and correspondence. A great day for both creative projects and entertaining. Go slow in romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Postpone negotiating major financial deals. You could be asked to take over someone else's duties. Do so without complaining about the inconvenience and you win higher-up's admiration. Entertain neighbors tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Getting involved in someone's secret romance could cause you problems at home. A business encounter could lead to a new love. Sign contracts. Show compassion for someone who has difficulties.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Protect your business interests. Avoid going overboard in an effort to increase your income. Romantic partner's body language reveals a lot. Stay alert. Changes are in the wind.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Bargains abound. Buy things on sale only if they are items you really need. A cooperative attitude helps you further your weekend plans. Put more effort into your work.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Others are responsive when you ask for favors but not loans. Get in touch with an influential person who may come to town this weekend. A good evening to combine business with pleasure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Changes in your work schedule will be for the better. Routine tasks go quicker than usual. Guard any secrets. Romance is sweet. Make the most of what the moment offers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stick to regular schedule and you will accomplish more at work. Family members need to know exactly where you stand. A friend plays the helpful role of go-between in romance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A period of quiet meditation helps you make an important decision. Learn from previous mistakes. A fellow Sagittarian begins to play a larger role in your professional or personal life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Move ahead with your career plans. Influential people prove helpful and cooperative. Do not shirk your responsibilities. An elderly person makes an unusual request. Romance has its flaws.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Unexpected developments could slow progress. Resist the temptation to take shortcuts. A lot depends on your attitude. Keep an eye on expenses. The evening looks promising for romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Continue to keep a tight rein on spending. Influential person will be understanding if a family emergency arises. Live in the present, not the past. Some exciting new opportunities are on the horizon.

GM strike deadline close

AP Laserphoto

WILLOW SPRINGS, ILL. — United Auto Workers Local 558 president Emmett Cyrus, left, and vice president John Orr prepare strike signs in Willow Springs, Ill, Wednesday as talks between the UAW and General Motors Corp. continued in Detroit. Bargainers from each side stepped up the pace of their joint meetings in an effort to avert a nationwide strike against the nation's biggest automaker at midnight Friday.

DETROIT (AP) — United Auto Workers union President Owen Bieber says General Motors Corp. has "not addressed" the union's job security demands and the two sides remained far apart — with a possible strike deadline just over a day away.

Bieber's remarks at a news conference Wednesday shattered the optimism some union officials expressed earlier this week after GM presented its proposal.

Bieber, his bargainers having spent more than a day in off-and-on questioning of GM negotiators, called a news conference to blast the company and its 20-page document.

"We're going to have to see some very significant movement of the job security issue if we're going to settle this thing by midnight on Friday,' Bieber declared.

"If the corporation fails to adequately address the range of job security issues, including future jobs and outsourcing, then I'm sorry to say that I see us heading for the ditch."

GM spokesmen said chief company bargainer Alfred Warren would not comment on Bieber's remarks.

Both sides said they would meet each other at bargaining tables today.

Neither side has been willing to disclose the specific contents of the GM proposal or how it would affect the 350,000 workers represented by the UAW.

But officials of a smaller union that is bargaining with GM, the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, said they received a similar document and were confused by it.

It is complex and contains "terms that have never before been used" in IUE contracts, union Secretary-Treasurer Ed Fire said.

The contract expiration with the IUE, with 25,000 GM members at nine U.S. plants, is the same as the UAW's — 11:59 p.m. EDT Friday. However, its contract says it must give three days' notice before it legally can strike.

The UAW has demanded that its new contract contain a ban on plant closings; curbs on GM's use of foreign and non-union labor — called outsourcing; tough limits on overtime, to make room in the factories for laid-off workers; and union rights to review GM's plans on where it will build its cars.

GM's response, sources said, included protection for some workers and offers to retrain others who might lose their jobs. Warren earlier said the proposal would be "costly," but he would not elaborate.

The union said some of its job-protection demands, notably overtime curbs, were not mentioned in the GM proposal.

Bieber said GM so far has refused to budge on its demand to do as it pleases on the subcontracting of work. The company already has in place plans to import several hundred thousand cars annually from the Orient, where labor costs are a fraction of those in the United States.

GM also wants to cut down on the number of parts it manufactures, preferring to submit contracts to outside bidders who operate at a lower cost.

August record month for Southwest Airlines

DALLAS — Southwest Airlines flew a record 446.3 million revenue passenger miles (RPMs) during August, up 29 percent over the 346.7 million RPMs flown in August, 1983.

Passengers boarded in August increased by 22 percent to 999,801 compared to the 821,431 boarded in August of last year establishing a new record for the company. The average length of a passenger's trip increased six percent to 446 miles for the month.

Load factor for the month was 62.1 percent compared to the 63.1 percent recorded in the same month of 1983.

Seller's market for housing shows survey

CHICAGO — Appreciating home values and a continuing demand for single-family housing has produced a change from a buyer's to a seller's market, relocation specialists of the nationwide RELO/Inter-City Relocation Service noted in a recent random survey. The RELO service is the nation's largest referral network of independent real estate brokers, headquartered in Chicago.

Despite gradually rising mortgage interest rates, more than half of the survey respondents forecast "a good buying season" in the home market, at least through the third-quarter of this year.

Fannie Mae offers $6.5 billion in debentures

WASHINGTON — The Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) has announced the offering of $6.75 billion face amount zero coupon subordinated capital debentures. The debentures, due 2019, are subordinated capital obligations of Fannie Mae. Salomon Brothers Inc. will be the sole underwriter of the offering. The capital debentures will be sold at a substantial discount from the face amount. The debentures do not pay interest periodically. The only scheduled payment will be the amount due at maturity.

Tandy Corporation shows decline in sales

FORT WORTH — Tandy Corp. has announced that consolidated sales for the month of August were $203,171,000, a decline of two percent from the August 1983 sales of $206,720,000. Sales to Tandy's U.S. Radio Shack division declined five percent to $159,653,000 during August 1984 from $168,032,000 in August 1983. Sales of U.S. Radio Shack stores in existence more than one year declined six percent during August 1984.

Consumer credit increases world economy rebounds

A surge in auto loans helped lift Americans' installment debt outstanding by $7.11 billion in July, the third-largest monthly increase on record, the Federal Reserve reports.

However, the July increase trailed the debt increases of June and May, which some economists said would help slow the economy's brisk expansion.

The worldwide economy, meanwhile, expanded considerably over the past year but its rebound remains clouded by rising interest rates and the soaring value of the dollar, the International Monetary Fund said Wednesday.

The July increase in consumers' installment debt outstanding followed an increase of $7.8 billion in June and the record monthly rise of $10.2 billion in May.

"The big green consumer machine is still humming," said James Christian, chief economist for the United States League of Savings Institutions.

He said the August increase could top July's as consumers finance end-of-model-year car purchases and back-to-school items.

But Christian also predicted that the trend was downward, partly because consumer debt as a percentage of disposable personal income has been rising. It now stands at 16.9 percent, up from 15.8 percent at the beginning of the year.

"There is going to be a point where consumers will reach a discomfort level with the amount of consumer debt outstanding, particularly at these interest rates," he said.

Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department, said the smaller July debt increase was "another piece of evidence of moderating growth in the economy."

Economists forecast that the rapid 8.9 percent growth rate turned in during the first half of 1984 will be cut in half during the final six months of the year.

In reviewing the worldwide economy, the 147-member IMF cautioned that stubbornly high interest rates, particularly in the United States, and a strong dollar will make it harder for poorer countries to repay billions of dollars in foreign debts as they struggle to regain their economic balance.

The IMF urged that the United States and other industrialized countries to work to reduce budget deficits, which it blamed for high interest rates and partly for the dollar's rising strength against foreign currencies.

Moreover, the report said, the pickup in interest rates earlier in the year could, if it persisted, "jeopardize the economic revival of heavily indebted countries."

In other developments:

—The dollar resumed its advance in U.S. trading after closing mostly lower on European markets. However, the dollar did climb to an 11½-year high against the West German mark in Frankfurt.

—The United Auto Workers union and General Motors Corp. stepped up the pace of their joint meetings in a bid to avert a strike against the nation's biggest automaker at midnight Friday. But UAW President Owen Bieber complained GM was "dragging its feet" and said he sees contract talks "heading for the ditch" unless GM revises its offer by midnight Friday.

Dollar aggressive, gold dips

LONDON (AP) — The dollar resumed its record-shattering march on European exchange markets early today. Gold bullion prices edged lower.

After easing in Europe Wednesday, the dollar rallied to record highs this morning against the French, British and Italian currencies, an 11½-year high against the West German mark, a 10-year high against the Dutch guilder and seven-year high against the Swiss franc.

Dealers said currency markets were being swept by a wave of dollar-buying that pushed other investment factors into the background.

–3.0210 West German marks, up from 3.0050.
–2.5055 Swiss francs, up from 2.4887.
–9.2790 French francs, up from 9.2025.
–3.4095 Dutch guilders, up from 3.3800.
–1,859.75 Italian lire, up from 1,843.00.
–1.31695 Canadian dollars, up from 1.31525.

The value of the British pound fell to $1.2705 from $1.2792.

In Tokyo, the dollar rebounded from a two-day decline to close at 245.60 yen, up from 244.75 yen. Later in London, the dollar was quoted at 245.925 yen.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed an indicative gold price of $337.50 a troy ounce, down 1 dollar from late Wednesday. In Zurich, gold was bid at $337, down from $338.25.

Earlier in Hong Kong, bullion shed $3.10 to close at a bid of $339.30.

Gold was quoted at $338 in New York late Wednesday.

Silver was bid at $7.08 in London, down from $7.195.

Holding company formed

Four Midland-based companies providing services to the oil industry, municipal governments, real estate developers, and the business community have been organized under one holding company, Jim Sale Enterprises Inc. The announcement of the consolidations was made by Jim Sale, chairman of Jim Sale Enterprises.

The companies included in the reorganization are E.J. Stevenson & Associates Inc., Ted Buchanan & Associates Inc., Taylor-Sale Inc., and Success Personnel Inc.

Sale, who has been active as a Midland independent oil operator for more than 14 years, is a native of Stanton. He obtained a BBA in marketing at Baylor University. He is actively engaged in developing oil and gas properties throughout the Permian Basin.

All technical services and support staff functions of the four operating companies will be transferred into Jim Sale Enterprises Inc. In addition to cost savings to each company, this will mean more efficient technical services to clients.

The engineering and architectural services rely on state-of-the-art computer technology. They employ computer aided drafting (CAD), computer aided engineering (CAE), and computer aided architecture (CAA) in preparing project documents. This allows extreme accuracy in less than 20 percent of the time of conventional methods. Instantaneous revisions are routine, at a fraction of the cost.

E.J. Stevenson & Associates Inc. is a recently organized engineering consulting and management company, specializing in the design, management and supervision of equipment and facilities for oil and gas production, gathering, and transmission. The company has special expertese in secondary and enhanced oil recovery systems. It especially has concentrated on the most advanced techniques applicable to the Permian Basin.

FAA sees end for delays

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials, alarmed in recent months by mounting complaints about airline delays, predict the problem will subside dramatically as a result of airlines shifting hundreds of flights to ease congestion at six of the nation's busiest airports.

After marathon negotiations over eight days, the airlines and the Federal Aviation Administration reached an accord Wednesday night on more than 1,000 schedule changes aimed at spreading flights farther apart and away from the most popular travel times.

The agreement also for the first time put a ceiling on the number of departures and arrivals at Newark International, one of three airports serving the New York area where some of the worst delays have occurred.

"The new schedules will mean fewer delays for air travelers by assuring that fewer planes compete for the same gates and runways at the same time," said Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

The FAA has said the airports covered by the agreement — Atlanta, Denver, Chicago, Newark and both LaGuardia and Kennedy International at New York City — account for about three-fourths of the delays of 15 minutes or longer this year. The frequency of such delays jumped by 80 percent, including a record 44,000 in August, prompting demands that they be brought under control.

The airline industry agreement covering the six airports has yet to be approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board. That agency granted the carriers special antitrust immunity to hold the sessions after the FAA said it would impose controls on flights at the airports if the industry did not act.

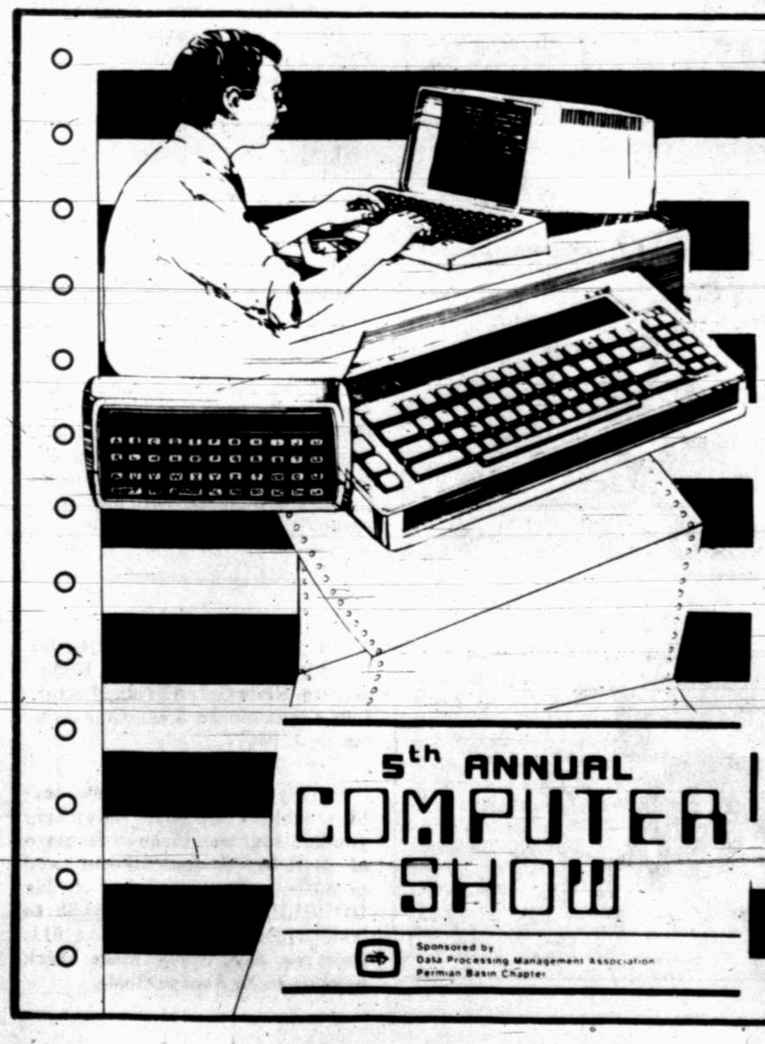

The new schedules go into effect Nov. 1, when the airlines begin their winter season, and are to last generally until the end of March, when officials say the air traffic control system may be able to handle more traffic.

But some small airlines complained that the industry agreement, created under close FAA direction, has frozen them out of some of the airports and reduced competition.

"After two months of working (to get operating rights) we're basically excommunicated," declared Samuel Clark, vice president of Air Atlanta. His airline thought it had been cleared to begin service between Atlanta and Chicago O'Hare Airport, but was told the landing and takeoff slots were no longer available.

"We're not only being raped, we're being skewered," declared an angry William Howard of Zenith Airline, which also had hoped to begin flights into Chicago after obtaining operating rights last April. His slots also were now in doubt because the new schedules do not include the fledgling carrier.

While the schedule changes were characterized as voluntary, FAA officials held a tight rein on the proceedings and outlined its expectations for each airport in detail.

More WATS for less comes to Midland.

Introducing WATS from MCI.
More complete WATS service that saves the typical business an average of 15% over AT&T.

Till now, West Texas businessmen haven't had much to say about WATS service. That's because only AT&T provided WATS here. But now, for the first time, West Texans have a choice. WATS from MCI. And now you can get better, more complete WATS service and, for the average business, save an average of 15% on your long distance phone bill.

How MCI WATS and AT&T are the same.

Both MCI and AT&T offer 5 bands of coverage in 18 rate steps, volume discounts, and 6-second call rounding. You can call every other phone coast to coast as simply as you do with AT&T. Just dial the area code and local number. And like AT&T, MCI WATS can be installed with no special equipment and without interrupting your regular phone service one bit.

How MCI WATS is better than AT&T WATS.

With MCI, you can call any phone in Texas and any phone in every other state coast to coast (Alaska and Hawaii, too) on the same line. With AT&T you can't. So, on one MCI WATS line, you can call Cleveland, Texas, as conveniently as Cleveland, Ohio.

MCI WATS lets you call major areas in Canada. AT&T WATS doesn't. So with MCI, checking up on oil exploration in Calgary is just as simple as checking the spot market in New York.

And only MCI's WATS bill tells you which department made particular calls to particular numbers. Our call detail reporting and accounting codes make it a lot easier to bill your clients in Houston.

And a lot easier to figure out just who's been making all those long distance calls to Dripping Springs.

The bottom line: You can get all this WATS service from MCI and, for the typical business, save an average of 15% over AT&T.

Over 10,000 major corporations have already signed on with MCI WATS. Just last year, our WATS customers kept over $50 million for themselves. Money that would have gone to AT&T if they had not switched to MCI.

So if you think it's time you put more of your money where your business is, and less where your mouth is, call your West Texas MCI representative. And then decide which sounds better to your business. AT&T WATS. Or MCI WATS at an average of 15% less.

It's your call.

China buys equipment from Geophysical

PASEDENA — Geophysical Systems Corp. has announced the sale of one of its Geocor IV systems to the Peoples' Republic of China. The gross sale price was approximately $1.5 million with five percent of the purchase price to be paid after the successful conclusion of system performance tests. More than $1 million of the purchase price was paid to the firm's banks to be applied to the debt incurred prior to the filing of the firm's Chapter 11 proceeding. The company is continuing negotiations with the Peoples' Republic of China for additional equipment and services in anticipation of a significant continuing relationship.

FORT WORTH — The Albuquerque office of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD/FHA) has announced a seminar on affordable housing to be held on Friday, September 21 at Popejoy Hall, University of New Mexico, in Albuquerque. Representatives from housing and related industries, and government agencies will discuss possible alternative to reduce housing costs to the homebuying public.

Sun Oil calls for offshore leasing

DALLAS — Calling bans on Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) leasing a threat to America's economic and energy security, Sun Exploration and Production Co. has urged Congress to legislate in favor of offshore oil and gas development when it reconvenes Wednesday, September 5.

Sun opposes a House bill that would ban the leasing of 45.6 million acres off the coasts of California and Massachusetts.

Austin to build solar plant

AUSTIN (AP) — The city of Austin is seeking bids for building a small solar-powered generating plant that would make the city one of the few in the world to generate electricity from the sun.

The plant, to be built on several acres adjacent to the city's natural gas-fueled power station in East Austin, first was announced in April and is scheduled to begin operation late next year, officials say.

Officials say the plant is part of a plan to eventually reduce power demands during peak use periods by 553,000 kilowatts through a combination of energy conservation measures and use of solar energy.

The solar plant would use photovoltaic cells to convert sunlight directly into electricity without burning fuel or turning turbines.

The plant's would be used during peak demand times, such as on hot summer days when many people are using air conditioners.

Initial plans call for building a facility that can generate up to 300 kilowatts of electricity at any one time. That capacity is equivalent to the power used by 100 to 200 homes, officials said.

John Hoffner, city electric department solar program manager, said the city is taking bids in two stages.

The first step calls for firms to submit information on their qualifications to design and build the project. Companies will be selected from that group and asked to submit preliminary design and cost estimates, Hoffner said.

The schedule calls for selecting a contractor from the second group by early January. Hoffner said construction of the project should take about 10 months.

After a year of monitoring the plant's operation, the city will decide whether to install additional photovoltaic facilities. A major consideration will be whether the costs of such facilities continue to drop, officials said.

A plan developed by the city's electric and resource management departments calls for a four-step process leading to the construction of photovoltaic units capable of generating up to 31,300 kilowatts of power, if the price is right.

Solar cells first gained widespread attention for their use in powering space satellites. They have been installed in a number of remote areas to pump water, power navigation lights and operate weather and communications equipment.

The use of solar cells has been limited, however, because of their high cost, currently four to eight times more expensive than conventional power plants.

Costs have dropped in recent years, and some experts predict that solar-generated electricity will be competitive with conventional power by the early 1990s.

Judges question Comanche Peak firings

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Two judges of the U.S. Atomic Safety and Licensing Board say they question whether slogans on T-shirts were used as a pretext for firing eight inspectors who had reported numerous electrical defects at the Comanche Peak nuclear plant.

The federal licensing board members focused in a hearing this week on an incident last March 8 in which eight quality control inspectors were held under guard for four hours.

Officials said the eight had showed up for work with T-shirts bearing the slogan "Comanche Peak nit-pickers. We're in the business of picking nits."

Officials said the slogan referred to claims by managers and construction workers that inspectors were holding up work by being too picky.

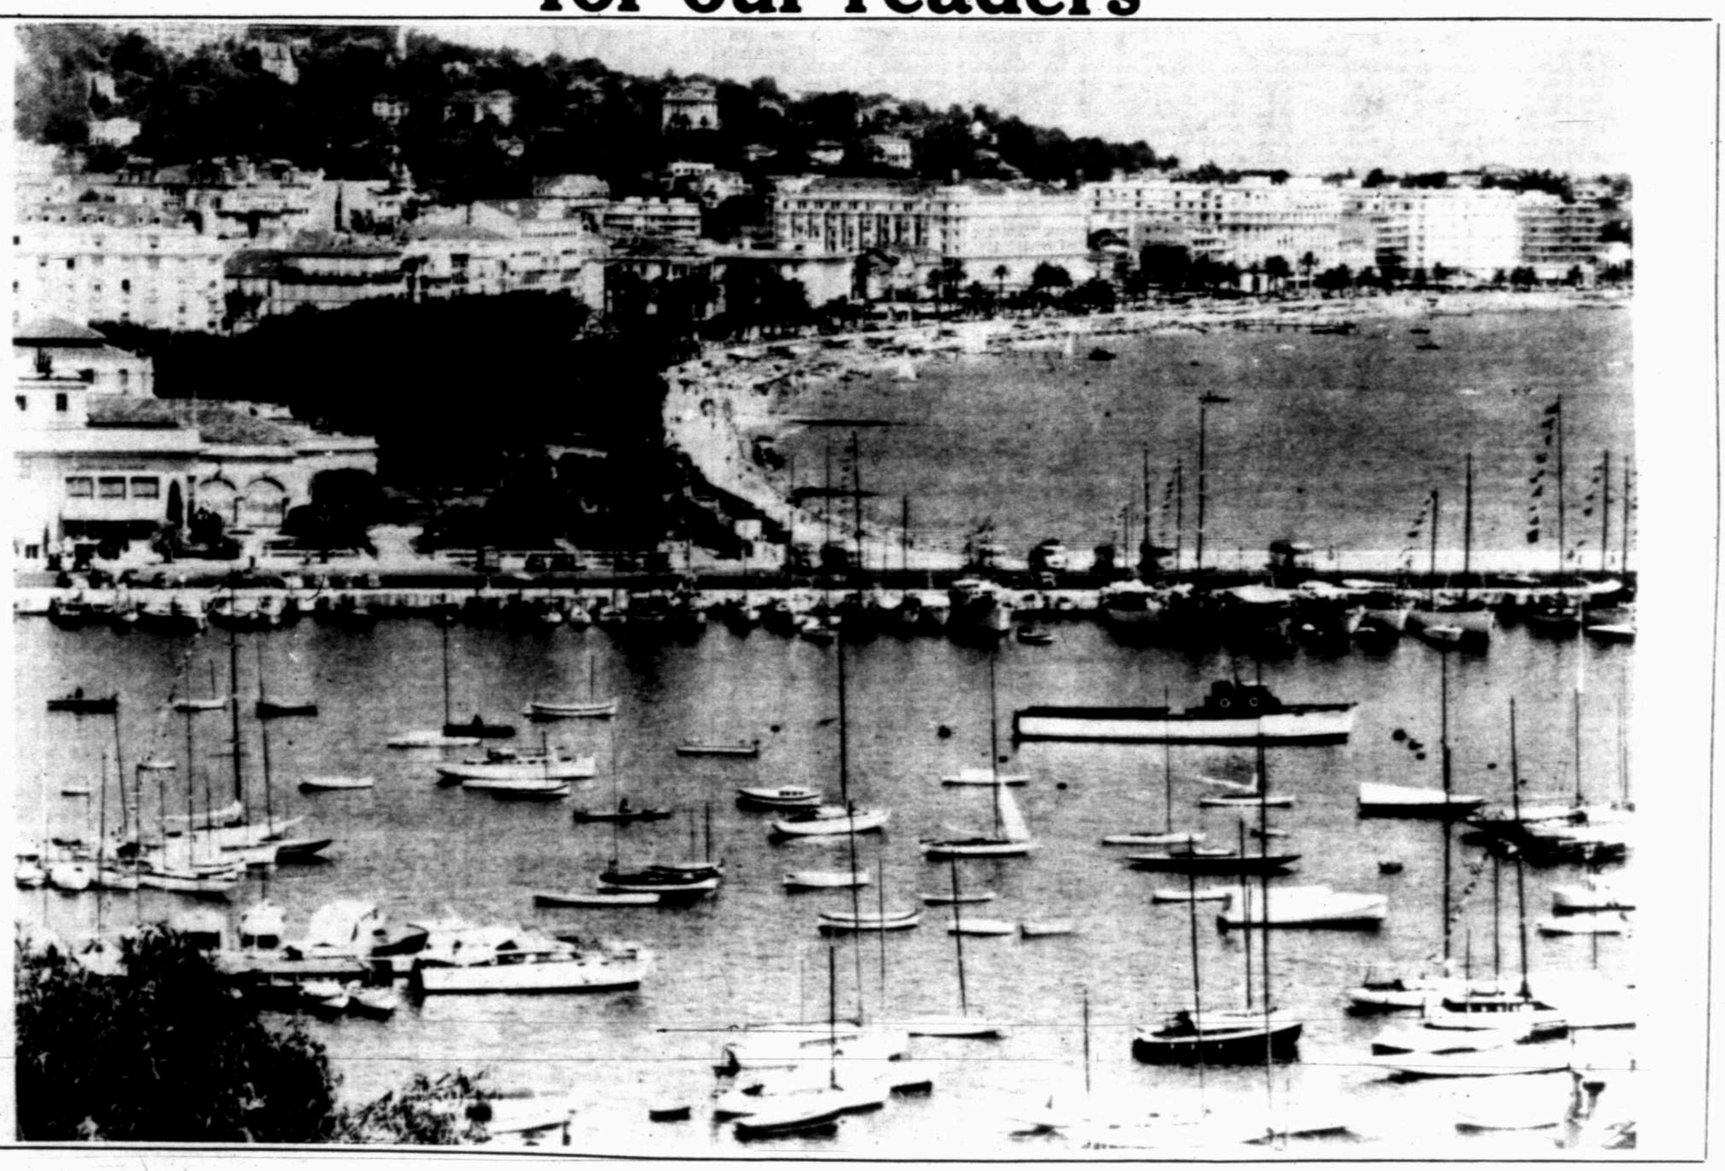

A plant official told the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission that supervisors intended to send the inspectors home and tell them they could return to work the next day if their jobs were still "unfilled," according to an NRC memo.

Licensing board member Herbert Grossman discounted a company explanation that inspectors' desks were searched because their supervisors were afraid they might destroy plant records.

Egypt tries to make citizens toe the line

By JEFFREY ULBRICH

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The government believes that Egyptians are careless, noisy, wasteful, reckless, indifferent to traffic laws and generally inconsiderate — in a word, undisciplined.

People in Cairo jostle one another, throw garbage into the street, smoke in crowded public rooms and shout. They ignore policemen, stoplights, one-way signs and pedestrian crossings.

Cairo's streets are constantly jammed with people, cars, trucks, buses and carts. Sidewalks are narrow, broken and overcrowded. Hordes of people squeeze by each other, spilling out into the traffic. Car horns blare continuously. Motorists jam the city from dawn until well after midnight. Cars double and even triple park.

But enough is enough, said Gen. Ahmed Rushby, who recently became the nation's interior minister, which puts him in charge of the police.

"Discipline shows the civilization of a people who love their country and respect the law," he said in an interview.

"Some people have accused me of being tough, but I am only a champion of right," he added, explaining the government's recent crackdown on "indiscipline" and the effort to instill people with a little respect for others and for the law.

The problems are enormous.

THIRTY YEARS ago, Cairo's population was under 2.5 million. Today, the metropolitan area is estimated to have well over 10 million people and it is growing every day because of a high birth rate and a continuing flow of rural residents to the capital in search of jobs.

There are believed to be about 1 million cars and trucks coursing through the streets of Cairo every day, not only filling the air with pollution but an ear-shattering din as well. Parking garages are rare, overpasses over main squares only partly effective and a new subway is far from completion.

Television viewers are bombarded daily with a series of commercials aimed at making people more considerate and instilling "indibaat," — discipline.

In one commercial, a man is shown riding a bicycle down the street. A tin can thrown onto the road bounces in front of him, causing the cyclist to hit it and fall in front of a car.

— The message: Don't throw anything into the street; it could kill somebody.

In Egypt, a bride and groom traditionally are driven around in a car with friends after the wedding, horns creating a tremendous racket. One of the government's TV spots shows a couple in their wedding clothes spending the night in a police station, the bride crying.

— The message: A little more consideration for the ears of others.

ANOTHER SPOT shows a family throwing away a large amount of food, saying that government subsidies pay for much of it anyway.

— The message: Don't be wasteful.

Other commercials show how unpleasant it can be when people smoke on a crowded bus, a man getting drenched by a housewife throwing a pail of water from a window, or a bucket of garbage landing on the head of a passerby.

In central Cairo, thousands of white-uniformed traffic policemen do battle with pedestrians daily, forcing them back onto the curb until the walk light changes to green.

At best, the police are only partially effective. Many people simply ignore orders, some scream and shout at the largely powerless traffic policemen, and others retreat from the corner to cross at mid-block.

Policemen sometimes fine citizens for walking in the street — 1.05 Egyptian pounds, about $1.20 — and illegally parked cars occasionally are towed away.

In the huge Tahrir Square, pedestrians dodge between cars and trucks streaming in from all directions while trying to avoid the buses that leave a central station in the square in thundering herds of a dozen at a time.

Swarms of policemen shouting into bullhorns and blowing whistles add to the chaos and don't even pretend to be in control of the situation.

TWO YEARS ago, the government built a pedestrian bridge over the square and policemen were supposed to fine those who didn't use it. People frequently were observed trying to convince a police officer that they were too ill to walk up and down the stairs, a few even producing medicine bottles to prove their case.

Acid rain falling on Latin America

By PETER MUELLO

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — The mountains near the industrial city of Cubatao in southeastern Brazil are littered with dead and stunted trees. The denuded earth slips away in landslides.

Environmental scientists say the forest was killed by acid rain, a phenomenon so new in Latin America that many people, even government officials, have never heard of it.

In central Chile, about 2,000 miles away, farmers in the town of Los Maitenes are abandoning their homes and fields. The acidity of the rain, due to unchecked pollution, has corroded their machinery and poisoned livestock and crops.

Acid rain, until recently detected only in North America and Europe, is now affecting many parts of Latin America, but because it is only now being detected, it is not yet a public issue and not widely seen as a problem.

But environmentalists say acid rain already is causing health problems, defacing archeological treasures and poisoning water and farm land across the continent.

"It's very serious," Paulo Nogueira Neto, head of Brazil's Special Secretariat for the Environment, said in an interview. "In some areas the damage is obvious, but it could be occurring in other places that we don't know about."

Scientists believe acid rain is caused mainly by air pollution. Waste gasses of sulfur and nitrogen dioxide in the atmosphere change chemically to mild but corrosive solutions of sulfuric and nitric acid, which return to the earth in rain.

IT DIFFERS somewhat from the problem in North America. In the United States, for example, local anti-pollution measures required factories to build high smoke stacks that send pollution high into the air and away for the immediate area. The pollution is then carried hundreds of miles away where it falls to earth as acid rain. In Latin America, because of geographical features and a lack of air-quality controls, the pollution is generally local and, as a result, so is the acid rain.

An informal survey by Associated Press bureaus in Latin America showed that acid rain has become a serious problem in Brazil, Mexico and Chile. It also has been reported in Peru and Argentina. In Venezuela and Bolivia, the prevailing winds blow air pollution away from cities, and its effects are unknown.

The survey showed that in Latin America, as in the United States, coal-burning plants are cited as a major cause of acid rain. But it also turned up other sources, including copper smelters in Chile, high-sulfur oil in Mexico and even a volcano in Peru.

Most Latin American countries, many of them with stagnant economies and large foreign debts, have put more emphasis on industrial development than on pollution control.

Here are some of the effects of acid rain in Latin America:

CHILE

The worst recorded rain is in the central town of Ventanas, where a state-owned copper smelter and coal-burning generator dump sulfuric gasses over a 12-mile radius. Houses in surrounding towns are visibly corroded. Wire fences wear out so fast they need replacing every two years instead of the usual 12 years.

In Los Maitenes, two miles away, farmer Antonio Fernandez claims acid rain has killed his cows and destroyed his crop of wheat, beans, peaches, figs, apricots, pears and grapes.

In Chagres, to the north, a copper smelter owned by the mining subsidiary of Exxon, the U.S. oil company, is affecting the country's wine industry. Acid rain corrodes the wires used to support grapes. Farmers are forced to cover their fields with huge plastic sheets to protect crops from the rain. Exxon has paid some damages and raised the smelter's smokestack to disperse gasses, but environmentalists say that only means farmers farther away are being affected.

BRAZIL

Acid rain was first noted in Cubatao, where dozens of factories spew out sulfuric gasses, which are trapped by nearby mountains and dumped back on Cubatao and its 80,000 people, as acid rain. Most plant life in the hills is dead, and the soil is increasingly acid.

"It's a no-win situation," said Dr. Licia Moreira-Nordemann of the National Institute of Atmospheric Reasearch. "The rain is dirty but it cleans the air (of stagnant pollution). When 20 days go by with no rain in Cubatao, we have a state of alarm" because of the stagnant pollution.

A bizarre and more serious problem exists in the coal mining region of southern Santa Catarina state. Open pit mines pile up mounds of a sulfur-rich, reject ore called pyrite, which oxidizes upon contact with the air, spontaneously bursts into flame and pours sulfur fumes into the air. The resulting acidity attacks house paint, window curtains and household appliances and utensils.

Brazil has some of Latin America's toughest anti-pollution laws, but they rarely have been enforced.

Caribbean nations try to save seas from pollution

AP Laserphoto

Mexico's runaway well spills oil into the Gulf of Mexico in this 1979 file photo. Environmentalists say a 16-nation anti-pollution treaty just ratified by the U.S. Senate is a first step toward protecting the Caribbean beaches, reefs and coves that draw tens of millions of vacationers every year.

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — The nations ringing the Caribbean — communist and capitalist, rich and poor — are quietly coming together to try to save its blue crystal waters from the sewage and chemicals that have spoiled other seas.

Environmentalists say a 16-nation anti-pollution treaty just ratified by the U.S. Senate is a first step toward protecting the Caribbean beaches, reefs and coves that draw tens of millions of vacationers every year. But obstacles remain.

On some islands, political leaders would rather build factories than sewage-treatment plants. And in the richest nation, the United States, the Reagan administration has balked at helping finance a common Caribbean environmental fund.

"For Caribbean governments, building housing gets votes. Protecting the environment doesn't," Jill Sheppard, executive director of the Caribbean Conservation Association, told a reporter. The association is a private environmental education group based on this eastern Caribbean island.

"The emissions are monitored, but not much is done about it. It would mean closing down plants and putting people out of work."

— Dr. Patrick Fairbairn, Jamaican government's chief ecologist

As for the U.S. attitude, "they prefer doing things bilaterally — direct U.S. aid to a single government or project. Their reasoning is that if it's done multilaterally, who knows where the money may end up?" the British-born Miss Sheppard said.

It might end up, for example, in Cuba or Nicaragua, U.S. adversaries and potential treaty beneficiaries. One of the multilateral trust fund's few current projects is an $80,000 pilot program to study and control pollution in Havana harbor.

Public and private U.S. aid is already at work in the Caribbean. In May, for example, the United States financed attendance by representatives of 15 Caribbean nations at an oil-spill preparedness exercise in Puerto Rico.

But the U.S. government prefers choosing who benefits from its aid money, a State Department official said in a Washington interview.

"I wouldn't anticipate that we will contribute to the trust fund as such," he said, speaking on condition he not be identified.

The new treaty covers a "wider Caribbean region" of 1.7 million square miles that includes both the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico.

Twenty-three nations and a dozen other territories encircle these arms of the Atlantic. Because many are economically underdeveloped, the Caribbean does not yet have the industrial urban expansion that made dumping grounds of such seas as the Mediterranean, where 95 percent of the shellfish are contaminated.

Fifteen Mediterranean nations, with U.N. sponsorship, signed the first "regional seas" treaty in 1980, committing themselves to a cleanup.

A year later, again under U.N. auspices, two dozen governments approved a Caribbean Action Plan of 66 environmental projects, only 11 of which have been financed. This led to the Caribbean treaty — formally the "Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region" — which was signed in Cartagena, Colombia, in March 1983.

Venezuela ripe for political, economic unrest

Caracas (AP) — With money pouring in from skyrocketing oil prices a decade ago, Venezuelans couldn't find enough ways to spend it. But they think twice these days as inflation creeps up and oil income slips down.

With prices steadily rising for meat, shoes, books and other essential items, housewives now avoid fashion houses, and labor leaders are urging the government to come to the rescue, including granting workers a general wage increase.

Government officials say inflation could reach 20 percent this year, but private financial analysts are forecasting 25 to 30 percent. It was 8.3 percent when the Venezuelan spending spree began with the spurt in oil prices in 1974.

Political leaders now speak of the possibility of social unrest and a potential threat to the country's 26-year-old civilian government.

Referring to the economic crisis in a recent speech, Minister of Economic Planning Raul Matos Azocar said, "Venezuelans are not any more passive than Nicaraguans or Salvadoreans," alluding to the possible social and political consequences of the economic problem here.

Ten years ago oil brought unexpected riches and promises of a carefree future to many Venezuelans.

But today the nation finds itself with more than 1 million unemployed — 24 percent of the labor force — and a $35-billion foreign debt, the fourth highest in Latin America after Brazil, Mexico and Argentina.

"It has been an emergency landing, and we are all shaken up, but thank God still alive," commented TV analyst and writer Carlos Rangel, author of the book "The Latin Americans."

Since Jan. 1, 1976, when the U.S.-dominated oil industry was nationalized, until last Dec. 31, oil accounted for more than $106 billion in foreign revenues, almost 90 percent of all export earnings.

Venezuela spent the oil dollars of the 1970's largely in financing huge development projects that, besides not yielding the expected results, forced the country to borrow heavily abroad.

In 1976, after signing the Oil Nationalization Bill, then-President Carlos Andres Perez warned the nation that the sudden oil dollars wouldn't mean much "if we are going to fritter them away buying all kinds of imported trifles."

Many analysts maintain that is precisely what happened.

Many Venezuelans flew off to weekends in Miami, Fla., or the casinos on the nearby Caribbean islands of Aruba and Curazao.

"The merry spenders" is what people called them.

Others regularly attended the auctioneering rooms of Christie's and Sotheby's in London and New York, competing with Arab sheiks to buy paintings by Manet or Renoir by the dozen to decorate their newly built and elaborate homes.

In the early 1960's, Juan Pablo Perez Alfonzo, then the oil minister and founding father of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, cautioned that petroleum could become a curse for Venezuelans. He said the risk was that they would waste away their wealth and wake up one day to face a misery much more difficult to bear.

"It was not difficult to foresee the denouement of this crazy race at waste and unproductive spending of non-earned riches," said the respected writer Arturo Uslar Pietri. "The whole comuntry became an immense and joyful oil parasite."

As far back as 1936, Uslar Pietri had urged the Venezuelan government to "sow the oil," meaning to plant the proceeds of its oil wealth in agriculture and education to help develop the country.

But today Venezuela has to import 60 percent of its food, and leading experts say education has been in crisis for years.

The decline in the demand for oil and the weakening of prices on the world oil market in recent years came as a shock to Venezuelans.

"We have to forget the consumerism spree of other times and turn to creative work, learning the lesson," the current president, Jaime Lusinchi, recently said in a speech.

Miss Massachusetts overcomes deafness to win talent prize

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Being deaf in her left ear was no problem for Miss Massachusetts, Margaret Marie O'Brien, who won a preliminary talent competition by singing a medley about men at the Miss America Pageant.

And Miss Texas, Tamara Hext, proved true to her state pageant director's assessment that she "has all the parts it takes to win" when she captured a preliminary swimsuit competition in a shimmering white outfit.

A third of the 51 contestants competed in each of three categories Wednesday in the first night of preliminaries, which continue tonight and Friday. The results of the evening gown competition are kept secret to leave some suspense in the selection of the 10 finalists who will vie for the title of Miss America 1985 on Saturday.

The victory by Miss O'Brien, of Weymouth, Mass., came on her 26th birthday.

"This is the greatest birthday present in the world," said Miss O'Brien, who wore a fire engine red sequined sheath slit to the thigh and accented with ostrich feathers as she sang "The Man That Got Away," "The Man I Love" and "My Man" before a crowd of 9,000 at Convention Hall.

"I had my lucky charm on," she said afterward. The silver sand dollar she attached to her underwear belonged to a first runner-up and a second runner-up in previous pageants.

A number of last-minute changes had to be made on the Miss America stage to accommodate Miss O'Brien's deafness, which developed when she was about 5, although doctors are unsure of the cause.

She said the mix of music coming from the monitors onstage made it difficult for her to hear her accompaniment.

Miss Hext, 21, of Fort Worth, is a hazel-eyed brunette who stands 5-foot-6½, and weighs 114 pounds.

She said she was glad she could prove correct Texas pageant director B. Don Magness, who said before she left for this seaside resort that "there may not be a better body in the U.S."

"He's a very sweet man. I appreciate his compliments. I bet he is glad he said it," said Miss Hext, clasping her swimsuit trophy.

All of the women had private interviews Tuesday with the panel of eight judges, but the results of that competition also are not revealed.

The crowning of Miss America 1985 will end a year in which Vanessa Williams twice made history — by becoming the first black woman to win the pageant and the first Miss America to step down.

Miss Williams, 21, of Millwood, N.Y., gave up her crown in July when a men's magazine published nude pictures of her in intimate scenes with another woman.

Suzette Charles, 21, of Mays Landing, who also is black, was first runner-up as Miss New Jersey in last year's pageant and replaced Miss Williams as Miss America.

Miss Charles finally received the crown she will pass on to Miss America 1985.

"It feels like I'm officially Miss America," she said after receiving the rhinestone-studded headpiece Wednesday.

Magazines target smaller, wealthier readers

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you own a four-wheel-drive car, if you have a satellite dish, if you like computers, if you live in Chicago, New York, Los Angeles or a handful of other cities, there's a magazine aimed right at you.

Production of so-called specialty magazines has jumped 126 percent over five years as publishers divide their marketplace into small, lucrative pieces.

"Special interest (magazines) focus more on people, their leisure time activity; it's almost a captive audience," added Rose Marie Bratland, a periodicals specialist at the Commerce Department's International Trade Administration.

"The shift from general editorial magazines to a proliferation of very specialized publications filling a small niche has been amazing," said Curt Risley, publisher of the Ayer Directory of Publications, which keeps track of the industry.

Computer periodicals had been leading the pack, but some have begun to fall by the wayside. Popular science magazines such as Science 84 have also been doing better.

More homespun-sounding entries such as Blair & Ketchum's Country Journal are gaining ground among rural-oriented periodicals. And the more traditional women's magazines are losing readers as Working Mother, Working Woman and Washington Woman get more attention at newsstands. Especially specialized magazines include 4WD, the magazine for four-wheel-drive owners, and a periodical for owners of home satellite dishes.

Aggregate sales of specialty magazines averaged 193 million copies, according to the 1982 Census of Manufactures. That was up from just over 85 million in sales five years earlier, the Census Bureau reported.

During the same period, general interest magazines remained relatively stable in sales and news magazines showed smaller gains, the government said.

"WHENEVER ONE magazine goes into a new, more special-interest field, and has an obvious success, it tends, like any business, to attract competitors," said Marvin M. Gropp, vice president for research at the Magazine Publishers Association. "The most awsome example is computer magazines."

Risley's magazine director listed 137 computer-oriented periodicals in 1982, compared with 42 in 1977.

"You don't go through one day that someone is not talking about a personal computer or a piece of software," Risley said in a telephone interview from his Fort Washington, Pa., office.

Overall, Risley said, the number of magazines published in the United States climbed from 9,582 in 1977 to 10,952 in 1982.

One specialty magazine, TV Guide, has stayed near the top of circulation lists in the last several years. TV Guide led in 1977 with sales of 19,811,268, while by 1982 Reader's Digest was first at 18,171,628.

The preliminary Census report also found a drop in average total circulation of women's magazines, which includes home, fashion, domestic, housekeeping and garden management publications.

The Census report showed advertising receipts of women's magazines rose 62 percent over five years to a 1982 total of $788.2 million. But income from advertising rose 118 percent for the specialty magazines to $991.8 million over the same period.

General-interest magazines had an advertising income increase of 87 percent to $472.1 million during the period, and news magazines increased their take from ads by 127 percent to $668.5 million, the Census Bureau reported.

Art expert Clark had 'romantic friendship' with Queen Mother

LONDON (AP) — Kenneth Clark, the art expert who made the television series "Civilisation," had a "romantic friendship" with Queen Mother Elizabeth that provoked the jealousy of King George VI, says an American biographer.

Meryle Secrest, whose book "Kenneth Clark" was published today, doesn't suggest that Elizabeth, mother of the present queen, was anything more than flirtatious.

But she says that Clark "liked her very much. He might have been a little in love with her."

Clark, son of a millionaire Scottish thread manufacturer, became Sir Kenneth Clark in 1938 and Lord Clark in 1969. He died at age 79 in May 1983.

Queen Mother Elizabeth, widow of King George VI, was 84 in August. She is a patron of British artists and was guided in her choice of buying paintings by Clark, who was the royal art adviser from 1934 to 1944.

The queen and Clark met often at Windsor Castle, where most of the royal art collection is kept, and at Buckingham Palace.

The author, who knew Clark well and whose list of sources fills six pages of her book, is the first writer to detail the friendship.

She writes that when Clark recalled his life to her he said that he and the queen "saw as much of each other as they dared, adding that the king became unreasonably jealous and twice made scenes, once at Windsor Castle and again at Buckingham Palace."

Miss Secrest said Clark might have assumed "more than was warranted from the queen's lively interest in art and what another called her mild flirtatiousness, in a very proper romantic old-fashioned Valentine sort of way."

The writer claims that the queen's letters to Clark "all about paintings and written in an artless hand, have been burned, making the extent of their friendship impossible to assess." It was not clear how she was sure of the content of the letters if they had been destroyed.

Buckingham Palace spokesman Michael Shea told The Associated Press, "I know nothing about it," when asked if he was aware of the story in the book.

Truman fondly recalled at special U.N. seminar

New York Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — Harry S. Truman was fondly recalled here at a special seminar by a handful of speakers from around the world who knew him during the fledgling days of the United Nations.

Elder statesmen of the world organization delivered tributes to President Truman at the meeting Tuesday, which was sponsored by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

The conference, called "President Harry S. Truman and the United Nations: An Historical Consideration" was billed as a closed meeting; the press and public were barred. Entrance was denied to all but participants and Secretariat officials. Only a few onlookers attended, among them former Rep. Jonathan Bingham, D-N.Y., and Clark Clifford, the former secretary of defense. Copies of the participants' remarks were obtained afterward.

At the seminar, Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar recalled a story told to him years ago about how Truman had once observed that the eagle in the official presidential seal was "a bit confused," sometimes facing the olive branch and other times facing the arrows. According to the story as recounted by Perez de Cuellar, Truman promptly issued a directive that "the eagle was always to point to the olive branch." It was a small gesture, the Peruvian diplomat said, that he never forgot.

Carlos P. Romulo, one of the founding fathers of the United Nations in 1945 and the permanent representative of the Phillipines here for a decade, said the United Nations Charter "bore the strong imprint of the ideas of President Truman," particularly in the areas of peacekeeping and human rights.

The white-haired Romulo, 85, said: "Simple people are not necessarily at all simple-minded. Indeed, they often may see the issues with a clarity and perspective not granted to those whose thinking is convoluted and intricate. In my experience it was thus with Harry Truman."

Romulo, who served as his country's foreign minister as well as two years on the Security Council, described Truman as a strong supporter of "the populist side of the United Nations," a man who advocated that "smaller powers should have a say in the peaceful settlement of disputes."

Romulo has long been an advocate of changes in the world body's structure that would disseminate power and reduce the influence of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

Lord Gladwyn, who served as Britian's chief delegate in the early days of the United Nations, said that although he knew Truman only slightly, "I always thought that President Truman was one of the best American presidents, outshining even his famous predecessor, Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

Gladwyn contrasted the two, saying Truman was "less clever, no doubt, than the latter, less adroit, less charmingly aristocratic, certainly, less capable of making an emotional political speech."

Brown pelicans make valiant comeback

VICTORIA, Texas (AP) — Brown pelicans are making a valiant comeback effort after near-extinction 20 years ago, and the white pelican colony in the Laguna Madre — the only one on either the Atlantic or Texas coasts — had a banner year in 1984, officials say.

But that upswing, reported in preliminary results of the annual Texas colonial waterbird survey, contrasts sharply to a general decline in waterbird populations this year, survey coordinator Gene Blacklock said.

Preliminary results of the 1984 survey, conducted during May and June, show a general decline in colonial waterbird populations across the state, the Victoria Advocate reported. Colonial waterbirds are those that nest in colonies, such as pelicans, herons, egrets and gulls.

The decline was biggest in Southwestern Texas, including Victoria, and the survey concluded that an excessively cold winter followed by a summer drought probably caused the decline.

While substantial, the population drop isn't alarming, Blacklock said, particularly because of the counter-trend for brown and white pelicans.

"Brown pelicans fledged the largest number of young since 1950," Blacklock said. "An estimated 117 nests fledged 230 young. The brown pelican is considered threatened in Texas. The only white pelican colony in Texas, located in the Laguna Madre, fledged 350 young."

Blacklock, coordinator of environmental education and curator of the museum and research projects at the Welder Foundation near Sinton, noted that the brown pelican was virtually wiped out in Louisiana by 1960, and for years afterwards there were no nestings at all in Texas.

Environmentalists blamed the brown pelican decline on the insecticide DDT, and "since they have improved substantially since it (DDT) was banned, it is presumed that was the cause (of the decline)," Blacklock said.

The white pelican is an inland bird, whose habitat ranges from Utah northwestward to British Columbia. Exceptions are the Laguna Madre colony on the Texas coast and one off the coast of the Mexican state of Tamaulipas.

"They winter on the coasts," Blacklock said of the northwestern white pelicans, "but they migrate back there (North America) in the spring. The exceptions are the colonies in Laguna Madre and off Tamaulipas, which remain."

The survey is a joint project of the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, Texas General Land Office, Texas Parks & Wildlife Department, National Audubon Society, the Rob and Bessie Welder Wildlife Foundation, Texas A&M and Texas A&I universities, and various local organizations.
