Apache purchases Collins & Ware assets

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Collins & Ware, a longtime independent oil company headquartered in Midland, has sold all its producing assets to Apache Corp. of Houston, for more than $300 million, officials of Apache announced Wednesday.

Collins & Ware has about 50 employees in Midland and approximately 30 employees in the field. Apache has a district production office in Midland with seven employees and 150 in field operations throughout the Permian Basin, but all of its engineers and geologists are in Houston. It is not certain at this point how Collins & Ware employees will be affected, or how many might accept employment in Houston. "We have no plans at this time to change our organization to reflect a larger presence in Midland," said Bill Mintz, spokesman for Apache.

Mintz pointed out that they did not buy the oil company Collins & Ware, only its assets and that Collins & Ware would continue as a company. Sources say a large bank debt and the health of Collins & Ware principal Herb Ware were factors in the sale.

The Collins & Ware asset purchase includes 502 billion cubic feet of gas equivalent with about one-third liquid hydrocarbons, in addition to 151 billion cubic feet equivalent of probable reserves. Current production is 40 million cubic feet of natural gas and 4,000 barrels of oil per day (bopd).

Approximately 3,100 bopd and 7 million cubic feet of natural gas production are in the Permian Basin, which will be added to Apache's current Permian Basin production of 20,000 bopd and 55 million cubic feet of gas.

Said Bill Mintz, spokesman for Apache Corp.: "The Collins & Ware assets are a very good fit for Apache. The South Texas assets in the Stratton field at Agua Dulce, Texas will strengthen our South Texas position, and the Permian Basin assets fit our operations like a glove. Many are in fields where we already have operations." Among those fields are the Northeast Drinkard, McElroy, Brahaney and Lovington Northeast Penn.

Roger Plank, vice president and chief financial officer, said the Collins & Ware assets brings to 126 million barrels of oil equivalent (70 percent gas) the amount of reserves Apache has purchased or put under contract so far this year. He said the reserves represent a full year replacement of

World War II memorial honors Midland's Hispanic servicemen

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland's 123 Mexican-American servicemen who in World War II "rallied to fight for freedom for their families and fellow Americans and future generations" were honored on Wednesday at the dedication of the Reyes-Sanchez Memorial Plaza.

The memorial, near Unity Park on Midland's east side where most of the servicemen lived in the pre-war years, is named in honor of two young warriors, Jose Reyes and Luis Sanchez, who died in combat more than 55 years ago.

The event's main speaker, World War II veteran Max Schumann of Midland, cited the "brave Midland Hispanic" servicemen and how they rallied for freedom's causes in the 1939-1945 war between the Allied forces and the Axis powers.

Schumann, who served with United States Army's Corps of Engineers in Italy during the war, noted his German-Austrian ancestry.

"We are not German-Americans," however, he said. "We are not Italian-Americans, Korean-Americans, African-Americans or Hispanic-Americans.

"We are all just plain Americans," Schumann said to the cheering of the multi-cultural crowd at the dedication. "We need to continually treat each other with respect and consideration."

The tribute to Midland's World War II Hispanic veterans was conceived by Ciro Sanchez, a 77-year-old Midland World War II veteran and businessman.

Sanchez had just finished reading the names of the honored Hispanic servicemen when a flight of three Confederate Air Force vintage aircraft flew over the memorial in paying tribute to the veterans.

New City Council members ready to learn the ropes

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

When the four new City Council members were sworn in June 5, City Manager Rick Menchaca said they would probably need a two-year learning curve to become fully abreast of city issues and comfortable with their responsibilities as public servants.

But the new council members — Mike Canon, at-large; Bill Dingus, at-large; LuAnn Morgan, District 1 and James M. Bradford, District 2 — had differing opinions on how long that learning curve would be. Their first council meeting was on Tuesday.

"Obviously, there's going to be a learning curve," Canon said. "How long that will take, I don't know. We've been asked to do a job and we'll be out there trying to do the best we can. The more experience you have, the more effective you'll be. You deal with each issue as it comes up. Assuming you get enough information, you ought to be able to make an informed decision. It's an interesting process."

'Obviously, there's going to be a learning curve. How long that will take, I don't know.'
— Midland City Council member Mike Canon

Council member Lee Wood, elected in 1996, said it took him nearly a year to become comfortable with the position.

"I asked a lot of questions behind the scenes, but not much during the meetings," Wood said. "The quicker the meetings, the better."

Wood said the responsibility of being a council member can be overwhelming. "The amounts of money used for purchases, we're talking big amounts of money. A lot of people aren't used to dealing with that kind of volume. It's an overwhelming experience and a little intimidating as well," Wood said.

Council member Berry Simpson, appointed to the District 4 council seat in November, 1995, said the initial experience of being a council member can be intimidating.

"It was pretty intimidating at first," Simpson said. "I was the only new guy. It seemed everybody had a handle on the issues. After two or three months, I felt a little more comfortable with how I could contribute."

Dingus said he expects to be fully acquainted with his new council position within 6 to 12 months.

Two local news outlets launch new site on World Wide Web

Kristine Aleman
MRT Correspondent

Two longtime sources of news in the Permian Basin — KWES-TV (NewsWest 9) and the Midland Reporter-Telegram, have joined forces to create a new Web site, MyWestTexas.com.

"I've spent my entire career putting ink on paper, but we're entering a new phase of the Information Age," said Midland Reporter-Telegram Publisher Charles Spence. "This might be one of the most exciting things to come to the Permian Basin."

The Web site will include stories, video and pictures from both NewsWest 9 and the Reporter-Telegram. It will also contain an entire week's newscasts and daily Skycam video. A map and location guide will be featured on MyWestTexas.com, as well.

"It's a whole new endeavor," said NewsWest 9 General Sales Manager Rick Wood, "but it's the future."

The Reporter-Telegram and KWES-TV have formed the first media partnership in this size market to reach the Web, and the second in the nation, after the first such venture in San Antonio.

"Folks in this marketplace will be scrambling to catch up," Spence said. "We will be a model for the country."

Statistics show that more and more households in the Permian Basin are logging onto the Internet each day.

"The Internet will never take the place of television. It's not as compelling or visual, but it will be available to the public as they need it," said NewsWest 9 News Director Laura Moore.

The new Web site will serve as a distribution vehicle, said Reporter-Telegram Editor Meta Minton.

"Papers will be delivered and people will tune into television. That isn't going to change anytime soon. But consumers use their computers to go get information that they want, when they want it. The Reporter-Telegram and NewsWest 9 are the primary gatherers of information and now the strength of those two newsrooms will combine to deliver news and information via the Internet," Minton said. "The consumer is the winner."

The Reporter-Telegram and NewsWest 9 are "trusted" brand names, the leadership of both companies pointed out when making the announcement on Wednesday.

"The trust factor is really critical. Half the time people don't know what to believe on the Internet," Moore said. "The people know us. We make the Internet more friendly and a lot more local."

Korean leaders sign agreement to work toward reunification

By Thomas Wagner
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — In the biggest step toward peace since the end of the Korean War, the leaders of North and South Korea signed an agreement Wednesday pledging to work for reconciliation and eventual reunification.

The two leaders also agreed to allow reunions of families that have been separated for 50 years by the closed and heavily armed border, to hold another summit meeting and to promote South Korean investment that is desperately needed in the North's failing economy.

"Don't worry about anything. Have a good night's sleep and a safe trip home tomorrow," North Korean leader Kim Jong Il said to his counterpart, President Kim Dae-jung, after the two signed the accord following hours of talks in Pyongyang, North Korea's capital.

However, the agreement did not deal with two major strategic concerns: the North's demand that the United States withdraw its 37,000 troops from South Korea, and the North's nuclear and long-range missile programs that have led Washington to label it as a dangerous "rogue" state.

The United State wants to modify the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty it signed with Moscow and develop a missile defense system to deal with the threat from countries like North Korea, a proposal Russia has warned would lead to a new nuclear arms race.

Reunification itself is an enormous task that some observers say could take decades, even if both countries honor the accord.

In the United States, the Clinton administration praised the agreement, saying it hopes the two Koreas can uphold it and benefit from it. "It's certainly our hope that they can find some way to build on the success of the last two days," said White House press secretary Joe Lockhart in Washington.

Lee Hong Koo, South Korea's ambassador to Washington, said American troops in South Korea will remain there for the indefinite future. Asked in an interview whether the summit will lead to a U.S. troop withdrawal, Lee said, "That's a long way off."

The agreement signed in Pyongyang is more detailed than similar ones that were reached by lower-ranking officials in 1972 and 1991. Those deals, which also called for reconciliation and reunification, quickly gave way to renewed hostilities.

South Koreans were surprised by the warmth and openness displayed by the North's leader, Kim Jong Il, the reclusive leader who rules by decree and who has been widely condemned for human rights abuses in his country.

From the moment he warmly met his counterpart, South Korean President Kim Dae-jung, at the airport in Pyongyang on Tuesday, the North Korean leader seemed prepared to reach out to the West and its successful, free-market economies.

After the late-night signing, the two leaders smiled broadly, shook each others' hands vigorously and toasted each other with glasses of champagne.

Kim Dae-jung praised Kim Jong Il for helping him reach a "historic agreement" and said the two must "proceed together on a path of reconciliation and cooperation."

In Seoul, many South Koreans also welcomed the accord.

"I have never thought seriously about reunification with North Korea. For me, that has always been an abstract and remote issue. Now it suddenly looms as a very realistic dream," said 27-year-old Paek Hong-ki.

But others were cautious about whether North Korea would comply with the agreement.

"The agreements look very superficial," said Kim Sun-ja, 47. "We will have to wait and see if this reunion of separated families actually takes place."

The summit was covered by about 50 South Korean reporters who traveled to Pyongyang and were filing print and television pool reports to the hundreds of foreign reporters who had to remain behind in Seoul, 120 miles to the south.

Sways and wobbles: Is London's millennium bridge falling down?

LONDON (AP) — It's as though London has its own, really big Millennium Bug.

The new Millennium Bridge looks like a blade of light shooting across the River Thames — and moves like a roller coaster. It was ordered closed for reengineering two days after it opened this week, the latest of the capital's grandiose millennium projects to get off to a, well, shaky start.

The Millennium Dome, a giant mushroom perched alongside the river in the southeast borough of Greenwich, has fired its top executive, swallowed up millions of dollars in extra funding and failed to draw large crowds.

Then there's the 450-foot-high Ferris wheel dwarfing Big Ben near the Houses of Parliament. The now-popular "London Eye" missed its New Year's opening date by two months because of safety problems with its 32 glass, rotating passenger capsules, which offer breathtaking views.

No one has spent more than Britain on millennium projects, ranging from a restored village church roof to an art gallery in the city of Walsall to a nationwide network of cycle paths.

Prime Minister Tony Blair, eager to make London a focus of millennial activities, hailed the Millennium Dome as a "triumph of confidence over cynicism, boldness over blandness."

Queen Elizabeth II sailed up the Thames to the dome on millennium eve, through a city ablaze with a million lights and magnificent fireworks. Outside the mammoth structure, hundreds of disgruntled VIP guests queued for hours in the cold because of glitches in security.

The 1,050-foot footbridge, an elegant suspension structure linking St. Paul's Cathedral and the new Modern Tate art gallery, opened Saturday amid showers of praise for its sheer beauty and innovative design.

After the swift closure because the bridge swayed and wobbled when pedestrians actually used it, the engineers' assurances made for a bleak contrast.

"The bridge is not going to fall down," said Tony Fitzpatrick of the British engineering firm Ove Arup. "No bits are coming to come off it. But there is a movement which is very uncomfortable."

That spells bad news for the Millennium Commission, a blue-ribbon body that dishes out national lottery money to flagship projects.

The commission already contributed about $10.5 million toward the construction of the $27.15 million bridge. Now, it will be tapped for more for work to stabilize the span, which may take several weeks.

The best-selling Sun tabloid was quick to connect the millennial woes. "Curse of Dome dooms bridge," its headline read.

In Spain, Putin denies politics prompted media tycoon's arrest

By Adam Brown
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Faced with harsh criticism from politicians, journalists and business leaders, Russian President Vladimir Putin denied on Wednesday that the arrest of an influential media tycoon was punishment for criticizing the Kremlin.

Still, Putin said he was "sincerely worried" about the arrest of Vladimir Gusinsky and promised to look into it when he returned home from a trip to Spain and Germany.

Gusinsky, owner of the Media-Most holding company that includes NTV television and several other media outlets that have been critical of Putin's government, was arrested Tuesday and put in Moscow's Butyrskaya jail. He is being held on suspicion of taking part in the theft of $10 million in state funds in a privatization deal.

In Russia, the arrest was widely viewed as revenge for Gusinsky's criticism of the Kremlin and assailed as a step toward Soviet-style repression of dissent that casts doubt on the Putin government's commitment to democracy.

It overshadowed Putin's visit to Spain, where he was peppered with questions about the arrest. During a joint news conference with Spanish Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar, Putin maintained he knew nothing about the arrest.

"I'm sincerely worried," Putin said, adding that he tried to contact the prosecutor general who ordered the arrest. "He's not in Moscow. Where is he? I don't know. But this won't be passed aside. In Moscow I'll have all the information."

According to the Interfax news agency, Putin said he didn't "see a political aspect" in the arrest. "As for criminal, I don't know yet."

Putin wouldn't address the charges against Gusinsky, but said the tycoon's tax status was confusing as he holds both Israeli and Russian citizenship and is registered as a resident the British colony of Gibraltar. Gusinsky is Jewish.

In Moscow, a top official of the prosecutor's office, Vladimir Lyseiko, said formal charges against Gusinsky would be brought within 10 days.

Gusinsky's lawyer, Genri Reznik, who visited his client Wednesday, said officials' attempts to bring charges "have ended up with such a delirium that I can't even risk relating it to you."

In Washington, the White House expressed concern over the arrest but said it did not have enough information to assess whether it was politically motivated.

Spokesman Joe Lockhart said President Clinton raised the issue of a free press when he met with Putin earlier this month in Moscow.

"We'll continue to make the case that a free and open press is an essential part of a democracy, and that, in this particular case, this gentleman should not be prosecuted for any reason relating to his position in the media," Lockhart said.

In Russia, the arrest attracted more criticism than any of the Putin government's moves to date.

Several prominent politicians described Putin's chief of staff, Alexander Voloshin as a driving force behind the action.

"This case stinks of dirty politics," said Vladimir Lukin, a member of the liberal Yabloko parliamentary faction. "If we trust the president's word that he hadn't been informed, that means that they have monstrously tripped him up."

The Russian Union of Journalists said: "The authorities have begun the destruction of the independent media and freedom of speech under the pretext of establishing order."

The Vienna-based International Press Institute, a global network of editors and journalists, urged Putin to quicly release Gusinsky, condeming "in the strongest possible terms the arrest and detention."

"IPI urges you to do everything in your power to halt these escalating attacks on the media," the fax said.

A group of Russian businessmen, including electricity monopoly head Anatoly Chubais and gas monopoly head Rem Vyakhirev, said Gusinsky's arrest was reason for both businessmen and their foreign partners to wonder whether Russia was the democracy it claims to be. Russian markets fell 2 percent Wednesday in an apparent reaction to the arrest.

Looking to solve 1984 killing, investigators check DNA on stamp

PARIS (AP) — DNA testing on a 16-year-old postage stamp may help identify "the Crow," the mysterious suspect in the drowning murder of a 4-year-old boy, one of France's most sordid crimes.

A French court on Wednesday ordered genetic testing on the stamp to help unmask "the Crow," who claimed responsibility in a letter for the drowning of "Petit Gregory," or "Little Gregory," as the child became known throughout France. The letter was sent to the boy's grandparents.

The boy's body was found in the Vologne River in the eastern Vosges region on Oct. 16, 1984. His hands and feet were bound.

The unsolved case gripped France for more than a decade with its elements of jealousy among rival family clans in a rural backwater, extortion, the birth of illegitimate children, crimes of passion and death threats signed by someone who signed letters: "the Crow."

Among the first suspects was Bernard Laroche, a first cousin of the boy's father, Jean-Marie Villemin. Laroche had been seen near the Villemin home around the time the child disappeared from his front yard, and was allegedly jealous of his cousin because his own child was born severely handicapped.

Laroche was released for lack of evidence, and in a fit of passion, Villemin killed him. He spent several years in jail.

Suspicion later fell on Gregory's mother, Christine Villemin, but charges against her were dropped in 1993. The Villemins then left the region where the family had lived for generations and settled in a Paris suburb.

The court in Dijon in central France ordered genetic testing on a piece of the stamp that was glued on an envelope sent to Gregory's grandparents several months before the murder.

The court said that either saliva or a sponge was used because self-sticking stamps did not exist in France at the time. The case was closed before DNA testing became widespread in French police investigations.

Scientists earlier this spring used DNA to uncover the identity of a 10-year-old boy who died in a Paris prison — more than 200 years ago. Using the DNA from the dead boy's heart, scientists were able to identify him as Louis XVII, the son of King Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette and heir to the French throne.

"This is the last chance for the truth to come out," said Paul Lombard, lawyer for the Villemins, who requested the testing. He said it would take several months for testing to be completed.

"Using the latest scientific techniques is very important because if they allow us to identify the Crow, then we will have taken a big step toward solving the murder," he told French radio.

The stamp and copies of tape-recorded phone calls to the Villemins from "the Crow" are the only pieces of material evidence left in the legal file.

The court also ordered a semantic analysis of the words used in the letters.

VETS: Park named after two local warriors

(From 1A)

"That's quite an honor," Sanchez said.

Of the initial 123 Hispanic veterans from Midland, only about 40 percent are living, Sanchez noted.

And the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs says that only 6 million of America's 16-plus million World War II veterans are still living. And they, generally in age from their mid-70s into their 80s and 90s, are dying at the rate of 1,000 a day.

"I feel very good about it," Sanchez said of the memorial, which features the names of the servicemen etched in marble and exhibited within three upright arches.

The $25,000-to-$28,000 memorial is a project of the city of Midland, the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and the veterans, Sanchez said, and is funded by the chamber and the city and by grants and donations, including those of the Abell-Hanger Foundation and the Permian Basin Area Foundation.

"We are gathered here today to dedicate this memorial to our World War II veterans who bravely served their country so that good could prevail over evil," said the chamber's Bo Zertuche.

"We especially dedicate this memorial to those who made the ultimate sacrifice," Zertuche said, "and laid their most precious gift upon the altar of freedom."

In the main, America's fighting men in the war were in their late teen-age years and into their 20s.

Schumann had noted that Jose Reyes was killed in the war "soon upon arriving in Belgium" and that Luis Sanchez "died in the South Pacific defending emplacements when shrapnel from artillery fire claimed his life."

The Rev. Jerome Burnet, pastor of Midland's Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, said that the memorial "will remind us ... to offer prayers for those who have passed away and those who are still with us."

"Everyone who went to war was a hero ... fighting for America, fighting for our rights," said World War II veteran Jesus Castillo, 79, of Midland.

"In those days, it was a hard time for us (Mexican-Americans in society)," Castillo said. "We didn't feel any grudge about that. We went on in (to the military) and served our country."

Castillo served in field artillery with the U.S. Army in Europe.

Among Midland's heroes was the late Isabel Regalado who, Castillo said, earned the Silver Star for gallantry in action.

"Our roots are in Mexico, but we are Americans," Castillo said. "We live here ... in America."

Jack Edwards, a 76-year-old Midland geologist and a World War II naval aviator, said that the war's Midland Hispanic servicemen are "finally getting the honor and the recognition that they deserve.

"They are really, really a great people," he said, and noted that the Hispanics are "really outstanding" in their military service and in patriotism.

"I don't believe any group of people that we have (in America) started with less advantages in our country but are giving more (in service to their country) in proportion to their numbers than the Mexican-Americans," Edwards said. "They are definitely Americans all the way."

Sisters Adela and Teresa Marmolejo paid homage to their father, David V. Marmolejo, who served in the war.

"I'm proud," Adela Marmolejo said of her father. "He didn't have to suffer like a lot of them," she said, because he entered the war in its final stages.

The memorial "is wonderful," said Teresa Marmolejo, a Midland schoolteacher.

The ceremony fell on Flag Day, which celebrates that day in 1777 when the Continental Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes as the official flag of the United States.

"We need to remember the sacrifices of the many (servicemen and servicewomen) who have kept our country free and strong," Teresa Marmolejo said. "I tell my students that the red in the flag represents the blood shed by soldiers to keep us free. And blue represents valor and honor. And the white is the purity of their sacrifices."

Gore and Bush fight over who gets credit for good times

WASHINGTON (AP) — In their fight for the presidency, Al Gore and George W. Bush are offering voters not only competing visions of the future but also of the past. Call it the battle of Clintonomics vs. Reaganomics.

The vice president is now on a three-week "prosperity tour" telling voters that the country's economic boom is due to the Clinton-Gore administration.

"We set our hands to a time of recession and doubt and built it into a time of pride and plenty, the longest period of economic growth in the entire American record," the vice president told a cheering New York crowd on Tuesday.

Gore hopes the expansion — a record nine years and counting with unemployment at a three-decade low — will persuade voters to stick with the Democrats.

But Bush and his supporters note that the last recession hit bottom and the expansion began in March 1991, nearly two years before Bill Clinton took office.

That argument didn't help much in 1992, when a perception that the economy's health was still precarious helped Clinton defeat President Bush, the current candidate's father.

George W. Bush and his people contend that it is not Democratic policies that are propelling today's prosperity, but those of Ronald Reagan, who got Congress to enact a supply-side tax cut in 1981.

"This is a miracle, but not a mystery," Bush tells his audiences. "The momentum of today's prosperity began in the 1980s — with sound money, deregulation, the opening of global trade and a 25 percent tax cut."

It is this tangle of claims that voters are being asked to sort out. What government policies are responsible for the boom and which candidate offers a way to keep the good times rolling?

Voters' answers will be pivotal.

As for the future, Gore's economic proposals are mostly a replay of President Clinton's formula — use the surpluses to reduce the national debt, resist across-the-board tax cuts in favor of cheaper, targeted tax relief for the middle class and spend big on initiatives such as education.

Bush is taking a page out of Reagan's book, proposing the use of $1.3 trillion in surpluses over the next decade to pay for an across-the-board cut in income tax rates. He sees a hefty tax cut as an insurance policy against an economic downturn and a way to keep politicians from spending the surplus on wasteful government programs.

The strategy worked for Reagan in 1980, but that was a year when the economic buzzword was "stagflation," a horrible combination of weak growth and high inflation.

To some, the 1981 Reagan tax cut, coupled with the tight-money policies of Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, launched the country into what they see as a 17-year stretch of prosperity, interrupted only by a mild, eight-month recession in 1990-91 when Iraq's invasion of Kuwait sent oil prices soaring.

Bush economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey, a scholar at the conservative American Enterprise Institute, says that a "sea change" in government economic policy occurred with Reagan's tax cuts.

Gore supporter Robert Shapiro, an economic policy-maker in the Clinton administration, counters, "No one can imagine that the present expansion would have unfolded as it did without (Clinton's) policy to turn large budget deficits into surpluses."

House votes to give e-signatures legal clout

WASHINGTON (AP) — Businesses will soon be able to seal multimillion-dollar mergers and consumers will be able to buy a car, apply for a loan or close a mortgage with the tap of a computer key — no scrawling in ink. Legislation passed by the House on Wednesday would give electronic signatures the same legal status as a penned "John Hancock" on a paper document.

The bill "will further move us from the paper age to the digital age," smoothing the way for a change in the way people have done business since the time of the ancient Egyptians, said House Commerce Committee Chairman Tom Bliley, R-Va.

The bill, passed 426-4, was considered likely to get quick Senate approval and President Clinton's signature.

In addition to easing commerce for individuals, the legislation would open the way for companies to supply their customers with contracts, documents and information online rather than with paper through the mail.

The bill would set national legal standards for e-commerce that is expected to triple from $500 billion last year to some $1.6 trillion by 2003.

It will give consumers "increased confidence that an online transaction has the same legal standing as if we had traveled down to the bank, stood in line for an hour and signed a bunch of papers," said House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas.

The measure is the result of months of negotiations among the House, Senate and the administration on how best to move business transactions into the electronic age without sacrificing consumer protections.

Commerce Department Secretary William Daley applauded the legislation, saying it "enables companies to harness modern information technologies" while "ensuring that consumers in cyberspace will have legal protections equivalent to those in the offline world."

The administration opposed earlier versions of the bill that passed the House and Senate last year, saying they didn't adequately protect consumers from fraud and abuse.

A particular concern was that businesses could convey legally binding information on interest rate increases, new fees or recalls to customers lacking the computer skills or technology to receive it.

The compromise bill makes clear that consumers must agree to electronic transactions and consent to receiving electronic records. The company must verify that the customer has the hardware and software to obtain its online documents.

Notices of termination, such as electricity cutoffs, health insurance lapses or evictions, must still be in paper form.

Consumers Union spokesman David Butler said his consumer advocacy organization believes the new version "does an adequate job of ensuring that consumers will be reasonably protected when they sign a contract."

A tip sheet on electronic signatures put out by Consumers Union advised customers to be sure their hardware and software is compatible with that of the business, to keep backup paper copies of electronic documents, to close unused e-mail accounts and to refrain from giving out e-mail addresses if the person doesn't want to receive e-mail notices from a business.

CITY: Retreat will help learning, Morgan says

(From 1A)

"I'm just going to spend a lot of time on it," Dingus said. "It's not going to take me two years." But Dingus added, "no one can ever know all there is about city government."

Ms. Morgan, a former manager at TXU Electric, said that because she's attended previous council meetings as a spectator, it may not take her long to become familiar with city issues.

"I felt fairly comfortable at Tuesday's council meeting," Ms. Morgan said. "I've attended council meetings for so long that my learning won't take as long. I also think the retreat will help us a lot."

The City Council's annual retreat, a two-day planning session for the upcoming year, will be held June 23 and 24 at Midland International Airport.

Bradford said that, despite his being a government professor at Midland College, he doesn't feel he is any more prepared because of it.

"What many people do not understand is that the theory of governing is far different from the practicing of governing," Bradford said. "Each issue is approached in a particular way. And it all depends on what that issue is."

APACHE: 1990s saw first local asset purchase

(From 1A)

136 percent at $4 per barrel of oil equivalent.

Plank said increased production and higher oil prices enabled Apache to make the purchase. Apache has been heavily engaged in the acquisition of Permian Basin assets since the early 1990s, when it purchased a large block of assets from Amoco. That was followed in 1995 by a similar purchase from Texaco. In 1999, the company bought $730 million in offshore assets from Shell Offshore, and acquired the Plains Business Unit from Shell Canada for $500 million. Mintz said the company had $1 billion pegged for acquisitions.

Lisa Stewart, Apache executive vice president for business development and exploration and production, said the Collins & Ware properties were tailor-made for the type of exploitation activity in which Apache excels. She said 2000 would be "the year of the drill bit" for Apache as it exploits properties.

The Collins & Ware assets contain plenty of opportunity for drilling. Included in the asset purchase are 214,000 net acres, of which 153,000 are undeveloped, and 1,928 square miles of seismic data.

Southern Baptist Convention approves statement against women as pastors

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Southern Baptist Convention decided Wednesday that women should no longer serve as pastors.

"Southern Baptists, by practice as well as conviction, believe leadership is male," said the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Memphis, Tenn., chairman of the drafting committee of a revised Faith and Message statement. "While men and women are gifted ... the office of pastor is limited to men by Scripture."

Wednesday's vote on the statement of faith was by a show of hands.

The new statement does not address whether women should be ordained; it addresses only their role as pastors, who lead congregations.

"I'm very sad," said the Rev. Martha Phillips, interim pastor at Mount Vernon Baptist Church in Arlington, Va., where Vice President Al Gore is a member.

"Women ministers are not going to have a place in Southern Baptist life anymore," she said in a telephone interview. "I think more churches will leave the convention."

About 100 of the 1,600 or so Southern Baptist clergywomen are leading congregations. The denomination has 15.9 million members and 41,000 local congregations.

However, the statement is not binding on individual Southern Baptists, and local congregations would remain free to ordain women and hire them as pastors. Phillips said she hopes to remain pastor of her church.

Women attending a meeting of pastors' wives Tuesday afternoon overwhelmingly supported the statement.

"I don't feel like it's biblical for a woman to be a pastor," said Melissa Folds, a pastor's wife from Trenton, Fla.

Margaret Davis, a pastor's wife from Newport News, Va., was a rare voice of dissent: "I believe if God calls you to pastor, it doesn't matter if you're a man or woman. My husband disagrees."

The women pastor issue comes on top of a hotly disputed 1998 amendment to the 1963 version of the document, stating that "a wife is to submit herself graciously to the servant leadership of her husband." Approval of the men-only pastor clause will probably drive out congregations, said the Rev. Daniel Vestal of Atlanta, coordinator for a group of 2,000 theologically moderate congregations. Convention officials strongly disagree.

'I don't feel like it's biblical for a woman to be a pastor.'

— Melissa Folds, pastor's wife.

Other changes in the church statement underscore that the Bible is "totally true" and God is "all-powerful and all-knowing," and insist that "there is no salvation apart from personal faith in Jesus Christ as Lord."

It also urges Christians to oppose racism and reject abortion and homosexuality.

On Tuesday, the first day of the group's annual convention, the group elected Dr. James G. Merritt, 47, pastor of the 11,000-member First Baptist Church in Snellville, Ga., as president. He promised to make overseas missions, reaching young people and "soul winning" his priorities.

"I will lift high the banner of truth found in God's inerrant word," said Merritt, a graduate of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky., and a trustee of Jerry Falwell's Liberty University in Lynchburg, Va.

"We're one of the few denominations to stand strong in the sharp winds of political correctness and to call sin, sin," Merritt said.

Merritt said he agrees that only men are called to be pastors.

It will take unity to pass school referendum

It's a time for unity in the Midland Independent School District. It's not a time for individual factions to pull the district apart.

That's why the announcement by Midland Federation of Teachers President Steve Buck to the school board this week about teachers and support personnel in the district not getting behind a potential high school bond referendum should be of concern to the entire community.

Buck suggested that faculty and other district personnel feel they are underpaid and that the district ought to do something to rectify their situation.

Buck told the school board that it could take action to increase teacher salaries to a more competitive level by raising taxes to $1.50 per $100 valuation on property and doing away with the 10 percent homestead exemption. We're not certain that would be a wise move at this particular time.

Midland's economy has been picking up some steam in recent months as oil prices continue to hover in the $30 range and the impact in higher oil prices has been reflected in increased sales tax receipts and in a growing number of housing starts and other construction. However, there is lingering concern taxpayers might not yet be ready to embrace a hefty school bond initiative even though they may have youngsters in school and be totally supportive of the schools in all other regards.

We, too, are in favor of higher teacher salaries. Our teachers do a great job of educating the young people of Midland under what many would consider less than desirable conditions. But this likely is not the time to attempt a restructuring of MISD's finances to effect such a salary increase. Increasing salaries definitely is a topic the trustees should put on their list of things to do, but like the hopes for new school construction now just does not seem to be the appropriate time, any more than floating a school bond for construction.

Midland's economy will not always be as shaky as it seems presently. At that future date, it will be the correct moment to talk about new school construction and higher teacher salaries.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has in an earlier editorial suggested that passing a bond issue might be tough in the current environment. It won't be impossible and it certainly is a worthy endeavor.

With a new board, a strong need for new and improved facilities and a community that cares about its young people, a referendum has a fighting chance.

It has a fighting chance if there is unity.

Today in History

Today is Thursday, June 15, the 167th day of 2000. There are 199 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 15, 1215, King John put his seal to Magna Carta ("the Great Charter") at Runnymede, England, granting his barons more liberty.

On this date:

In 1520, Pope Leo X threatened to excommunicate Martin Luther unless he recanted his religious beliefs.

In 1775, the Second Continental Congress voted unanimously to appoint George Washington head of the Continental Army.

In 1836, Arkansas became the 25th state.

In 1849, James Polk, the 11th U.S. president, died in Nashville, Tenn.

In 1864, Secretary of War Edwin M. Stanton signed an order establishing a military burial ground, which became Arlington National Cemetery.

In 1904, more than 1,000 people died when fire erupted aboard the steamboat General Slocum in New York's East River.

In 1944, American forces began their successful invasion of Saipan during World War II. Meanwhile, B-29 Superfortresses made their first raids on Japan.

In 1960, the Billy Wilder movie "The Apartment," starring Jack Lemmon and Shirley MacLaine, opened in New York.

In 1978, King Hussein of Jordan married 26-year-old American Lisa Halaby, who became Queen Noor.

In 1994, Israel and the Vatican established full diplomatic relations.

Ten years ago: Real estate mogul Donald Trump missed a payment due on junk bonds used to finance one of his Atlantic City, N.J., resorts.

Five years ago: At the O.J. Simpson murder trial, Simpson struggled to don a pair of gloves that prosecutors said were worn the night Simpson's ex-wife, Nicole, and her friend, Ronald Goldman, were killed.

Schools: cockpits for lawyers, playgrounds for therapists

WASHINGTON — The contest between Al Gore and George Bush for the office of national school superintendent means Washington will expand its role in education. Until the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the federal government had essentially nothing — certainly nothing essential — to do with elementary and secondary education. Today the federal government supplies only 7 percent of the money spent on such education, but 7 percent of $313.1 billion is a large lever for moving state and local education policies in directions that Washington favors. And money is not the full measure of the national government's impact on education. Consider school discipline.

Will

Last month Al Gore endorsed a good idea, "alternative educational settings" — special "second chance schools" — for children expelled from schools for disciplinary reasons. However, one reason such schools are needed is that the federal government has complicated the task of maintaining school discipline. To understand how this happened, see "Who Killed School Discipline?" by Kay S. Hymowitz in City Journal, published by the Manhattan Institute.

Because schools reflect the families from which the pupils come, school discipline was bound to worsen as more broken families resulted in more troubled or badly reared children. And maintaining order was bound to become more difficult as popular culture became a sensory blitzkrieg of promptings to sexual and other self-assertions by adolescents. However, government has made matters worse.

In 1969 the Supreme Court held that a school violated five students' constitutional rights when it suspended them for wearing black armbands to protest the Vietnam War. The court said students do not shed their free speech rights "at the schoolhouse gate" and schools cannot be "enclaves of totalitarianism." Thus did important matters of school discipline become federal cases. Thereafter, a principal who confronted, say, a student wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with "WHITE POWER" or with a swastika had to construe the Constitution. Could the principal prove that the behavior was "significantly disruptive"? Did he want to litigate the question?

In 1975, in a case concerning students suspended for fighting, the court expanded students' due process rights, holding that students have a property right to their education. So lawyers and judges were pulled even deeper into school discipline procedures, presiding over — at a minimum — elaborate hearings with witnesses. Designed to make schools more "fair" and "responsive," such decisions, writes Hymowitz, made school administrators act defensively and look legalistic and obtuse:

"When a New York City high school student came to school with a metal-spiked ball whose sole purpose could only be to maim classmates, he wasn't suspended: Metal-spiked balls weren't on the superintendent's detailed list of proscribed weapons. Suspend him and he might sue you for being arbitrary and capricious.

"Worse, the influence of lawyers over school discipline means that educators speak to children in an unrecognizable language, far removed from the straight talk about right and wrong that most children crave. ... Students correctly sense that what lies behind such desiccated language is not a moral worldview and a concern for their well-being and character but fear of lawsuits."

What also lies behind it is the therapeutic impulse.

In 1975 Congress passed the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), which requires schools to provide disabled children an "appropriate" education, within regular classrooms whenever that is possible. The act addressed real needs of many mentally and physically handicapped students. But since, and partly because of, the passage of the act there has been, as Hymowitz says, an explosive growth in the number of children classified under vague disability categories such as "learning disability" and "emotional disturbance."

Part of the legal definition of emotional disturbance is "an inability to build or maintain satisfactory interpersonal relationships with peers and teachers." So children who are unruly, for whatever reason, can claim — and litigate for — protected status within schools that, before 1975, would have had a freer hand to expel them.

The IDEA arrived just as society was becoming suffused with the therapeutic impulse, which de-emphasizes free will and moral responsibility, and postulates social or physiological causes of behavior. This engenders a search for pharmacological treatments, or such therapeutic "remedies" as role-playing games, breathing exercises and learning to "identify feelings" and "manage anger." What Hymowitz calls "the skittish avoidance of moral language" by the therapeutically inclined indicates an enthusiasm for behavioral techniques and an aversion to "inducting children into moral consciousness."

If School Superintendent Gore or Bush wants school discipline that arises from a moral environment that socializes children, he should consider how schools stopped being moral communities and became cockpits for lawyers and playgrounds for therapists.

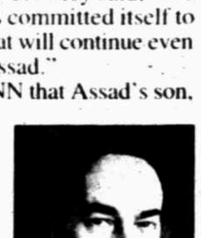
Assad was brutal dictator, oppressor of human rights

Some of the things being said about the late Syrian dictator, Hafez al-Assad, are complete fiction. They remind me of the fantasies floated about expiring and incoming Soviet leaders. Yuri Andropov was a regular guy because supposedly he drank Scotch and listened to American jazz.

Now we are supposed to believe that Assad hungered and thirsted for peace with Israel. National Security Council spokesman P.J. Crowley said, "We think the Syrian government has committed itself to the path of peace, and we hope that will continue even with the passing of President Assad."

One commentator noted on CNN that Assad's son, Bashar, will be easier to deal with because he speaks English and his father didn't. Gee, if only Hitler had spoken Hebrew.



Thomas

President Clinton sheds a phony tear about his "friend" — has he forgotten that Assad was involved in the death of 241 American Marines in Lebanon in 1983? Yasser Arafat declares a three-day period of mourning — this despite the fact that one of Assad's proxies once tried to assassinate Arafat and Assad refused to let the PLO leader into his country.

Assad was a brutal dictator, an oppressor of human rights, a murderer of anyone who challenged him and a man resolute in his opposition to making peace with Israel. His external armies and internal terror squads kept his people in line. He amassed an arsenal of long-range missiles and chemical weapons. Is there any question against whom he planned to use such devices?

This is the worst possible time for Israel to consider withdrawing from the Golan Heights or making any kind of deal involving Syria. Bashar Assad will succeed his father only because the late dictator wanted it that way and because the Syrian constitution was changed to accommodate Bashar who, at 34, is six years too young to serve as president under the former document.

Assad belonged to the Alawites, a Muslim sect that makes up only 10 percent of the population. When the more numerous Sunni Muslims (85 percent of the population) realize this could be their chance to gain power, they may seize their long-suppressed opportunity.

A revolution could erupt in Syria. Middle East commentator Emanuel A. Winston conceives the following scenario: The Alawite-dominated army will first support Bashar Assad in order to maintain its own position. If the army leaders fail to withstand a challenge, they might flee the country. Assad's ruthless and cruel brother, Rifaat, who has influence with the army, could attempt a power grab. If he does, a struggle may break out between factions of the army with Bashar and Assad's brother-in-law on one side. The brother-in-law controls the drug trade in the Bekaa Valley in cooperation with Colombia's drug cartel. Twenty percent of the drugs entering the United States come from the Bekaa Valley.

Commentator Winston speculates there could be a movement in Lebanon to break away from Syria and force Syria's 40,000-man army, stationed primarily in the Bekaa Valley, out of Lebanon.

Iran and Iraq have their own interests in Syria and could support whichever appears likely to win.

Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, who has been in concession mode since taking office — and a lackey of the Clinton Administration and U.S. State Department — is in no position to benefit from Assad's death. He has floated the fiction that giving up the Golan Heights would make Syria more amenable to a peaceful coexistence with Israel.

Apologists will try to whitewash Assad's record as they pursue their own legacies, but they should not be allowed to do so. Libermight say "good riddance" to Assad if that were the end of the story. But there are other terrible dictators — just like him — with the same deadly objectives.

'Do you know what my father said? He said he was my father'

One of the most memorable Father's Days I ever had took place several years ago when I wasn't talking to my daughter, or possibly my daughter wasn't talking to me. I'm not certain what the dispute was all about. It may have had something to do with a difference of opinion over curfew. My figure was midnight; hers was 2 o'clock in the morning.

While the difference was minuscule in her eyes, I considered it to be big time.

She decided to give me the freeze, which was not the worst thing that could happen to me.

Buchwald

Finally one day she came to me in the living room and said, "Do you want to talk?"

"Could it wait until this baseball game is over?"

"I want to talk now."

"Okay," I said, "you have 30 minutes and I have 30 minutes. You go first."

It turned out to be a war-crimes trial. Her grievances included how I treated her siblings, why I didn't like any of her friends, and the fact I wouldn't let her smoke. There were many other charges I have failed to remember.

Finally I said, "Are you finished?"

"Yes," she said.

"Then I will begin. I am your father. Right or wrong I am still your father. Come to think of it I am never wrong as long as I am your father. I do not wish to be questioned about what I say is so. I know when I'm right."

An incredulous look came over her face, and then she dashed out of the room.

I heard from neighbors that she ran down the street and told them, "Do you know what my father said? He said he was my father."

At first there was disbelief when the story spread. Before long everyone in the neighborhood knew what I had said.

Soon the congratulations poured in.

Guggenheim said, "How did you get the nerve to tell her you were her father?"

"It just came naturally. You can't fight with teen-agers because they are ready to take you on even during the last inning of a baseball game."

Valenti stopped by and said, "You are a credit to your race."

"What race?"

"The human race. No one in the neighborhood has shown such courage."

"I may not have done it if Father's Day wasn't coming up and I had nothing to lose."

I knew I had won a skirmish (not the war) when that evening my daughter said, "Of course, you're right about me going to the 7-Eleven tonight. After all, you are my father."

"That's right. Going to a 7-Eleven is too important a decision to leave to a teenager."

Then I rushed into the kitchen and said to my wife, "Do you know what she said to me?"

"What?"

"She said she is my daughter."

Ultra wideband technology opens door for new X-ray vision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thought only cartoon superheros could see through walls to detect the villains?

New technology called ultra-wideband will soon allow mere mortals to detect objects buried underground and to build cars enhanced with sensors that help avoid collisions.

Ultra-wideband uses millions of narrow pulses each second to get an accurate reading of location and distance, opening the door for new applications in radar tracking, precise positioning and wireless communications.

The possibilities vary from short-range computer networking for homes to devices that determine the location of golfers on a course.

What regulators like better is that ultra-wideband devices can work within frequencies already allocated for other radio services helping to maximize this dwindling resource.

The Federal Communications Commission believes the technology is so promising that the agency has proposed allowing it to be used on an unlicensed basis.

"Because of improvements in technology, it is now time to take a look at making this service available to consumers, businesses and public safety providers," said FCC Chairman William Kennard.

It could be a year or more before the FCC gives final clearance. First, government agencies and private groups are testing to make sure ultra-wideband can safely coexist with other services, like the Global Positioning System, the U.S.-built network of satellites for navigation.

Officials want to put to rest any concerns about interference and could require the technology to be used above very congested frequencies, said John Reed, senior engineer in the FCC's technical rules branch.

Still, the technology is being touted for its ability to harness a small amount of power very efficiently. Ultra-wideband devices can emit such little energy, that it could interfere no more "than your laptop does with your TV," said Ralph Petroff, chief executive officer of Time Domain Corp., a Huntsville, Ala.-based company. The company is one of a handful that has received special government waivers to begin using the technology.

Time Domain already has developed some ultra-wideband products which allow law enforcement officials to detect motions through surfaces such as walls. That means firefighters could determine whether there are people inside a room before they knock down a door.

In Fairfax, Va., members of the local county rescue squad were able to see people still breathing under 12 feet of rubble using the devices after a building collapse, Petroff said.

Petroff says the chief benefit of ultra-wideband "is the ability to create entirely new products that don't yet exist and entirely new industries."

Indeed, a separate company has cropped up that intends to use ultra-wideband specifically for the golf industry, so that club owners can detect the location of golfers on a course and even see how quickly players move through the holes.

But ultra-wideband could scan to greater depths, possibly even providing a three-dimensional image of what's inside a slab of concrete, said Chuck Heger, the company's vice president of research and development.

Former colonel arrested in spy case

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A retired Army Reserve colonel was arrested Wednesday, accused of spying for the Soviet Union during a 25-year Cold War conspiracy while he worked in Germany.

The U.S. Attorney's Office identified him as George Trofimoff. It said he conspired to sell classified military intelligence information to the Soviets when he was a civilian employee of the Army.

Trofimoff was indicted by federal grand jury in Tampa. The indictment was unsealed Wednesday, after he was arrested.

Trofimoff obtained the classified information while serving as a civilian chief of the U.S. Army element of the Nuremburg Joint Interrogation Center in Germany from 1969 to 1994, prosecutors said.

Trofimoff also served in the Army Reserve, retiring as a colonel in 1987. He had served several years in the Army before entering the Army Reserve in the 1950s.

Trofimoff, who lived in Melbourne, retired from his Army civilian employment in 1995, after 35 years.

He was born in Germany to Russian parents and was naturalized as a U.S. citizen in 1951.

He is the highest-ranking U.S. military officer ever charged with espionage, federal prosecutors said. He had access to all classified information received or produced by the Nuremberg center.

A hearing before a U.S. magistrate judge was set for midafternoon.

The case will be prosecuted in Tampa, said Steve Cole, a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Tampa's MacDill Air Force base is home to the U.S. Central Command, which directed the Gulf War in 1991.

MacDill is also home to the U.S. Special Operations Command.

Florida has been the scene of other Cold War espionage cases.

Ernst Ludwig Forbrich, 43, was convicted in 1984 in Tampa on two counts of espionage and was sentenced to 15 years in federal prison. Forbrich, a resident of West Germany, was convicted of trying to buy U.S. military secrets on behalf of East Germany.

Helmich admitted to contacting Soviet agents in Paris in 1963, when he was facing a possible court-martial because of bad checks. He was sentenced to life in prison.

Midlanders praise votes against death tax

By Matt Josefy
Staff Writer

The so-called death tax remains alive and well, but the House of Representatives has once again advocated an end to the estate tax, much to the delight of many small business owners, farmers and ranchers.

"I would like to see them drop the estate tax, because there are a lot of farmers and ranchers who have worked all their lives and we've already paid the taxes," explained Virginia Bryant, wife of the late Alvey Bryant Sr.

Ms. Bryant said she and others who own land for farming purposes understand the difficulties of having assets tied up in real estate or other forms of capital. When she attempts to pass along her estate to her five heirs, they would be subject to the tax which opponents of the tax say could be as steep as 55 to 60 percent of assets.

'The tax strongly affects certain businesses who have their assets in real estate, inventory, or receivables and it takes a tremendous amount of planning to give the business a chance to survive.'
— Bill Williams Sr., business owner

Williams

"My children would have to borrow money and probably sell some of the land to pay the tax," Ms. Bryant said. "I think they should do away with it altogether because we're not rich, but something like this could make us lose the farm."

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, who represents a portion of Midland County, is a co-sponsor of the bill which passed last Friday by a margin of 279 to 136, despite promises of a veto from President Clinton.

"Repeal of the death tax means the next generation of young farmers and ranchers may inherit what is rightly theirs, instead of having to consider selling off a part of the family operation just to satisfy a tax penalty from the federal government," said Combest, who serves as the House Agriculture Committee Chairman.

Bill Williams Sr., owner of Bill Williams Tire Center, is also a staunch supporter of eliminating the tax.

"With an example such as my business, it would be easy to see what we're talking about," Williams said. "Only a very small part of my business is liquid cash; the bulk of my money is in my estate. Paying the tax would probably require selling part of the company."

Proponents of the bill cite statistics which suggest that 60 percent of small businesses do not survive into the second generation and 90 percent do not successfully pass to the third generation.

"The death tax is imposed at a critical juncture. When an owner is passing away, it is already a crucial time for the health and well-being of the business," explained Ray Keating, chief economist of the Small Business Survival Committee.

Williams intends to pass his company, which is entirely family-owned, to his children and grandchildren who are already active in running it on a day-to-day basis.

"The tax strongly affects certain businesses who have their assets in real estate, inventory, or receivables and it takes a tremendous amount of planning to give the business a chance to survive," Williams said. "One problem is the unknown tangible of what the federal government would value the stock of my company that we issued 30 years ago. It can be startling, the values they put on it."

Currently, any estate worth more than $675,000 is subject to the tax, though that

Wildfires spark revelation

Story by: Emily Statton

Most people's interest in the New Mexico fires began to dampen as soon as the flames were doused. But for Midland Red Cross volunteer Bob Cornell, the Los Alamos blaze will be forever seared in his memory.

Cornell was part of the relief team sent into New Mexico on May 12 while the fires were still raging.

"I first became involved with the Red Cross in 1977 when I was in New York," the former school teacher said. "They always need people to help. After I retired, my volunteer work with them became my first interest."

'People everywhere were saying, 'Thank God for the Red Cross.'
— Bob Cornell
Red Cross Volunteer

The Red Cross of Midland sent Cornell to New Mexico in the local Emergency Relief Vehicle (ERV) prepared to spend up to three weeks in Los Alamos. In El Paso, Cornell picked up his co-driver, a Swedish sergeant-major, before heading up to Albuquerque to meet with other Red Cross volunteers from across the nation.

"We had ERVs come from California, Arizona, Missouri, Texas, and New Mexico," Cornell said, "All of them were equipped to hand out necessary items to the people who had been evacuated."

The 22,000 people of Los Alamos had been relocated to nearby towns, many of them staying in shelters provided by the Red Cross.

"People everywhere were saying, 'Thank God for the Red Cross,'" Cornell said.

As the fires were tamed, Cornell and other volunteers moved into the remains of Los Alamos and parked their ERVs in front of the local high school.

"We had people coming back to find their house burned to the ground. They would see our ERV and come to it," Cornell said. "We could give them things like shampoo, food and information about where they could stay."

"I will always remember the way the city looked," he said. "You'd drive down a street with little fires burning on either side. You'd see one pine tree untouched, and then a blackened stump a few feet over, because the wind swirled the fire back and forth."

The most powerful images for Cornell, however, were not

Fund-raiser slated to help purchase new 'Rescue Cam'

By Margaret Rendall
MRT Correspondent

A group of Midland Firefighters will conduct a fund-raiser at Wal-Mart from 9 a.m.-7 p.m. Saturday as part of the Rescue Cam campaign. The firefighters from Station No. 9, which is located at 6005 N. Midland Drive, will be raising money and roasting hot dogs. The public is invited to join in the event.

Wal-Mart has agreed to match the funds raised on Saturday, as well as donating hot dogs and condiments. Coca-Cola is lending a trailer and donating ten cases of the soft drink.

Don Turnbow, a Midland firefighter, with the help of his wife, came up with the idea for and organized this fund-raiser. His wife, a Wal-Mart employee, helped obtain the support from Wal-Mart.

"At first we were going to raffle a bicycle, but we decided that a gift certificate to Wal-Mart or Sam's would be something more people could use to buy groceries and other useful items," Turnbow said.

The Midland Fire Department is also hoping to have a couple of fire engines and the Safety House, "a little caboose filled with artificial smoke that children can crawl through to see what a fire is like," according to Turnbow, on site.

All money raised during this campaign, which kicked-off in April, will go toward the purchase of these lifesaving cameras. The "Rescue Cam" is a thermal imaging camera that allows firefighters to see images in a fire, even when visibility is zero. The Midland Fire Department currently owns two "Rescue Cams" and eventually wants to have one $17,000 camera at each of the 10 Midland stations.

"Many people are mistaken about how these cameras actually work," battalion chief Russ Conely said. "The camera doesn't see light at all, it measures differences in heat. The heat projects a picture and we are able to see where we are going, recognize objects such as couches, walls or people because they all project heat differently and detect where the fire is coming from."

"For example, children will hide under a bed, in a closet, or in a corner under blankets if they are afraid," Turnbow added. "The rescue cam can see through all of these things enabling firefighters to find the child immediately."

Surveying begins for railroad gates

By Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

A process that will eventually provide Midland with gate arms at four railroad intersections got underway Wednesday with a surveying crew evaluating the sites.

But despite the timing, the inspections were not prompted by lingering fear from a fatal accident Saturday at Midkiff Road and Industrial Avenue, when a train collided with a van and killed three members of a local family.

Gary Saunders, the city's traffic coordinator, said an application for the gate arms was submitted to the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) months before Saturday's accident, which killed Daniel Martinez, 44, his wife Deborah, 46, and their son Matthew, 11.

Saunders' meeting Wednesday with a group of engineers from TxDOT and Union Pacific Railroad didn't bring forth any major decisions, but initiated the project, which could be complete within the next 18 months.

Within the next 18 months, gate arms will be installed at four Midland railroad crossings. The following list indicates the location and the numbers of vehicles that cross those intersections each day (vpd):

- Industrial and Midkiff - 22,000 vpd
- Front and South K - 830 vpd
- Front and South G - 1,486 vpd
- Front and Carver - 2,830 vpd

The fact that the surveying crew was out at the crash site four days after the family's tragedy is a coincidence.

"This work was scheduled way before the accident," Saunders said. "Every crossing is considered for upgrade, not just this one."

Robert Martinez, railroad coordinator for the Midland-Odessa TxDOT district, said the four sites were among hundreds chosen for rural and urban areas across the state.

TxDOT last installed gate arms in Midland County three years ago at crossings on East County Road 1140 and East County Road 1160. In addition, TxDOT and Union Pacific have a database that informs them when each crossing is scheduled for inspection and maintenance.

TxDOT has secured $630,000 for the project, which Union Pacific will use to purchase the necessary equipment, Martinez said. Any plans the group will make this week will be submitted to the Austin TxDOT office for approval.

Union Pacific is not under any time constraints to install the gates.

From rainfall to the plains, there is beauty and preciousness

At last, those people called policy-makers and politicians have awakened and discovered something we folks variously called clog-busters, paper-pushers, post-hole diggers, cowpokes, spudders, literary types, and the scientifically inclined have known since we could tell the difference between William Shakespeare and Grub Street literary hacks.

They've awakened to the water crisis, probably.

I read somewhere the other day in a big-time journal that fresh water is not just "a" but "the" most precious natural resource.

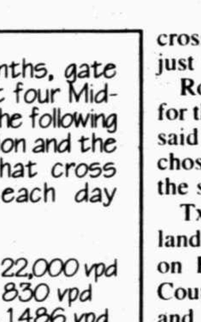
Well, what do you know.

Now those high-hatted folks who supposedly look after the nation's welfare and, extrapolated, the world's well-being have been damming up rivers and draining swamps and creating water authorities and all that.

But, still, it seems like they have been viewing water as if it were as common as dirt.

Well, it is, and it isn't.

Like cool, clear, fresh water, that good old vibrant and naturally fertile soil — dirt — is becoming more and more dear and dearth.



Todd

And without a lot of it, we're out of business.

We ought to thank the Good Lord for every drop of fresh water we drink and ought to feel just a tinge of guilt when flushing this vital resource down the drain and especially with no conscious thought of recycling it.

Fortunately, nature does what we can't and often don't do for ourselves. But nature would appreciate some consideration.

And, as the world knows, those farmers and ranchers who live and die by the rain cycles probably appreciate rain more than any other group of people. And their appreciation, I'm sure, goes deeper than their livelihood that is intrinsically tied to rainfall.

There is the wonderful aesthetics associated rain from mist to gully-washers.

There's something else that is becoming more and more precious and something which much of the world's population is missing out on.

And that is the wide, open space — a clear shot from horizon to horizon.

Just the other day, I was passing through Big D and missed sighting Dallas's perennial medallion, the old Magnolia Petroleum Company's Flying Red Horse — Pegasus.

The stallion, as if flying to the backside of the stars, to my notion is still the high point in Dallas even if towering skyscrapers cast their shadow on the grand symbol.

Outside the big town, especially to the north and to the east, there are other towering and often-sprawling forces that could be cast as skylines: trees.

Magnificent — from the oaks and pines to the bois d'arc and the chinaberry.

They are lovely and necessary environmentally and aesthetically. They are friend to wildlife and to the civilized sorts, including builders, whittlers and tree-climbers, and make the world's best shade.

Tree country, however, doesn't afford the vision of the West Texas prairies.

Viewing the world from horizon to horizon there is as rare as losing sight of the break of dawn and the close of sunsets on the plains.

Each has its own beauty and rewards and peace.

And out West, there is the exhilarating freedom and joy of experiencing vast, wide-open space and being caught up in the glorious sunrises and sunsets.

In such natural beauty, there is the sense of flight, a soaring. It is a wonderment at least as precious and as vital to the spirit as water is to the body and soul.

Police Reports

House fires

A vacant house at 2313 Siesta Drive sustained minor damage from a fire Wednesday afternoon.

No injuries were reported. The cause of the fire was not immediately determined.

Meanwhile, a house at 1413 Oak St. sustained major damage from an afternoon blaze. Officials said the house was unoccupied when firefighters arrived.

The tenants arrived and asked the firefighters to search for two puppies in the garage. Both of them were rescued.

Robbery arrest

Christopher Todd Criswell, 22, remained in the Midland County jail Wednesday in connection with a Tuesday night robbery.

According to police reports, a man took items from Dillard's department store and ran south of Midland Park Mall. A sheriff's deputy found the man in a ditch near the intersection of Hayes and Dawn.

Criswell was charged with robbery and taken to the county jail. His bond is set at $10,000.

Carver reunion set for weekend

From Staff Reports

This weekend some 300 Carver High School graduates are expected to descend on Midland to celebrate the history of the all-African-American, which closed in 1968 as part of a nationwide desegregation effort.

Carver's first graduating class received their diplomas in 1946 and a member of that class, Mary Francis Booker, will be on hand at the reunion. Registration is today from 6:30 to 12 p.m. at the Holiday Inn Holidome. The festivities will last throughout the weekend.

Following is a schedule of events:

Friday:

- Registration continues at Holiday Inn Villa at 6 p.m.
- Teacher, parent, booster club banquet at the Carver Cafeteria from 6-7:30 p.m.
- Talent and Gospel Festival at the Holiday Inn Villa from 8-9:30 p.m.
- Games and Dance at the Holiday Inn from 10 p.m. until 1 a.m.

Saturday:

- Juneteenth Parade from Lamesa Road to Washington Park at 10 a.m.
- Barbecue lunch at Carver Cafeteria from 11:30 a.m. until 1:30 p.m.
- Reunion program at the Carver auditorium at 1:45 p.m.
- Banquet and Dance at the Holiday Inn from 7 p.m. until 2 a.m.

Sunday:

- Reunion Worship Service at Carver Auditorium from 9:30 until 11 a.m.

FIRE: Tragedy helps man appreciate life more of the blackened landscape.

"Companies who make stuffed animals had donated some soft, cuddly things to the Red Cross," he said. "We gave one to all of the little children who came over to us in the parking lot."

"The kids were so scared and confused, but when we gave them something of their own, something to hold on to, their faces would just break out into a smile," Cornell said. "I would have to turn away to keep the tears from coming to my eyes. You don't forget smiles like that."

Everywhere, Cornell said, people were busy helping those who had lost everything to the flames.

"You forget the little things like the prom, for example," Cornell noted. "The seniors at Los Alamos High didn't think they would get to have their dance. Then girls from Sante Fe and surrounding towns sent up gowns in all sizes for the girls in Los Alamos to borrow."

Cornell worked for 14 straight days in New Mexico, skipping his day off to go help locate pets that had been left in the town after evacuation.

"There was a man, Bob Anderson, who usually worked with the forest animals. He had volunteered his time to find any pets which had survived the fire," Cornell said.

"I went with him on my off day. We were searching for a little boy's cat when we came to a tree with a litter of baby raccoons," he said. "There is nothing in this world that sounds like a baby raccoon. It purrs like a kitten, only deeper, and its whole body shakes."

Cornell said he came away from Los Alamos with a "greater appreciation of my house, my family, my flowers, and, of course, the purring of a baby raccoon."

"I always tell the kids I work with that its nice being nice," said Cornell, who gives free tennis lessons to children. "One of my favorite quotes is, 'Service is the rent we pay for the space we occupy on Earth.' I was just paying my rent."

TAX: Local reaction to repeal is favorable

exemption will increase to $1 million by 2006.

"When you factor in lawsuits, what it costs the government to collect this tax, the impact on the economy of losing small businesses, and the costs of estate planning done by individuals, it certainly can be argued that the tax is a net-loser for the economy and possibly the federal government as well," Keating said.

In addition to Combest, Midland County's other congressmen, Henry Bonilla and Lamar Smith, are also co-sponsors of the bill, H.R. 8 "The Death Tax Elimination Act," which would begin reducing the tax until it is removed entirely in 2010. It is estimated that the bill would bring $28.3 billion worth of tax relief over the next five years.

U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm, a Democrat who represents District 17, also has taken a stance towards reforming the tax, but voted against H.R. 8 in favor of a Democratic alternative.

"I want to bring estate tax relief, but I want to do so from a fiscally responsible way, that which does not harm debt reduction or endanger necessary programs," Stenholm told the House. "The Democratic alternative provides immediate estate tax relief and does a much better job of targeting. It would exempt 99 percent of family farms and estates and reduce the number of estates subject to the tax by 50 percent."

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, June 15, 2000:

This year, give form to your dreams. Mobilize your ideas. You experience an unusual sense of success and fulfillment, especially in 2001. Your ability to understand others helps you in all walks of life. Avoid power plays in your personal life, especially in a key partnership. If you are single, what you think works for you changes substantially, as does the type of relationship you want. If attached, empathize; you will understand your partner better. You have the capabilities to make this relationship even better. SAGITTARIUS is changeable.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Let a friend take the lead. Listen to suggestions. Discussion gives you a whole different take on a present matter. Review your ideas. Take another look at your procedures. Make calls. Consider signing up for that special course. Tonight: Think about long-range plans.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Work with, not against, a partner. Redesign finances and come up with a better plan. You'll discover the pleasure of operating as a cohesive unit. A boss inspires you to move past present limitations. Work with new ideas, even if they aren't just yours. Tonight: In the limelight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Others present information they have been researching. Revamp your thinking. Reach out for another. Accept and work around differences. Break past natural barriers and restrictions. If you have been thinking of taking a course or traveling, now's the time! Tonight: Enjoy friends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Concentrate on work, even though you might be doing more than your share of daydreaming. Make an effort to share more of your daily life with a loved one. Your relationship bonds on a deeper level now. Work on increasing your efficiency. Tonight: Off to the gym for a workout.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Go with the flow. Your intensity and need for self-expression drive you. An associate entices you to join him. Throw reason to the wind. Brainstorm. Let your imagination and creativity flourish. Give yourself the freedom to be spontaneous. Tonight: Start to celebrate the weekend in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Domestic and personal matters are highlighted. You see what changes need to take place. Don't resist them. Though at first you could be worried, you will ultimately be a lot better off. Play with an interesting work idea. Consider trying a new venture. Tonight: Order in.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Reach out. Try different words or a different way of expressing your thoughts. Hopefully another can hear you. Your ability to visualize helps you create. New ideas come from out of the blue. Take time for a loved one. Feelings are mutual. Tonight: Munchies with friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Revamp financial plans one more time. By getting another's feedback, you see how you can make a long-term dream happen. Your intentions for a real-estate matter and your home life become possible. Use your imagination. Don't discard any idea right now. Tonight: Your treat!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Don't undermine yourself. Make it OK to change your mind and head in another direction. Others might not understand where many of the changes have come from. Note your intuition. You might want to follow through. Be clear when speaking to others. Tonight: Do what you want.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ You know what to do. Follow your instincts. In many ways, you are testing yourself and questioning what you want. Some might be manifesting issues physically. Don't let a money matter stop you from having what you want. Tonight: Handle your mail.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Aim for what you want. Your ability to visualize and create what you want peaks. A friendship plays a key role in your decisions; what you want could be changing presently. Be sensitive to a special friend. Network; your social and professional lives mix. Tonight: Zero in on what you want.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Work proves to be demanding. You might need to change your schedule to accommodate a new demand. Resist getting into a power play or struggle with a boss or higher-up. Follow a hunch. A boss appreciates your sensitivity and follow-through. Tonight: Willingly work late.

Opening lead: Jack of ◇ Finesses, finesses everywhere, yet declarer landed a good small slam in hearts by spurning them all!

North's jump to three no-trump was a balanced game force in hearts. With such extreme distribution, South correctly judged that there would be excellent play for slam even though the high-card count might suggest otherwise — the minor-suit high cards held by the enemy were not going to take many tricks.

West led the jack of diamonds, and declarer was delighted with the contract. The first trick was won with the ace perforce. Declarer crossed to dummy with the king of spades, cashed the king of diamonds and ruffed a diamond in the closed hand. Next a club to the ace provided the entry to the table to lead a trump toward the closed hand and, when East showed out, declarer rose with the ace and threw West on lead with the queen of trumps to the king.

Now the advantage of eliminating the diamond suit became obvious. West could not lead another diamond because that would yield a ruff-sluff and the contract. But neither black suit was any better. A spade would be into declarer's A-J tenace, and a club would allow declarer to ruff away the king, cross to the board with a trump and discard the jack of spades on the high club in dummy.

Grand Ole Opry stars take show online

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Vince Gill and the other leading lights of the Grand Ole Opry will soon shine in cyberspace.

The Opry, the longest continuously running radio show in the country, will begin broadcasting on the Internet on Saturday.

The country music showcase, which hasn't missed a broadcast in its 75-year history on WSM-AM, will be available on three Web sites: the Grand Ole Opry site, the WSM-AM site and Gaylord Entertainment's country music site.

Most of the greats of country music, such as Johnny Cash, Tammy Wynette, Loretta Lynn and Dolly Parton, have performed on the show over the years. Today, the stars include Gill, Garth Brooks and Trisha Yearwood.

LAWRENCE, Kan. — What a struggle over "muggles."

As it turns out, a Lawrence woman may have been the first to use the name "muggles" in her children's book — not the author of the Harry Potter series or the American writer who is suing the Potter author.

Carol Kendall, 82, wrote "The Gammage Cup," which includes a candy maker named Muggles, in 1959.

In three books by Scotland's J.K. Rowling about the young orphaned wizard Harry Potter, "muggles" is the word wizards use for humans.

Another writer, Nancy K. Stouffer, argued in a lawsuit in March that ideas for the Potter series were lifted from her 1984 book "The Legend of Rah and Muggles." In her book, muggles are little people who care for two orphaned boys.

Scholastic, Rowling and Time Warner filed their own suit in November, asking a judge to rule that the Potter books do not violate Stouffer's trademark and copyright.

Kendall, who has published 10 books, said she came up with the name while living in London. A friend often joked she was in a "muddle," or a predicament.

Kendall loved the word, and altered it to "muggles" to create her character.

But she said she's not the litigious type.

"There's only so many ideas," she said, "and if you have one then someone else out there probably has the same one, too."

LONDON — Media snoops, take heed.

The chairman of the watchdog Press Complaints Commission urged newspapers Wednesday not to intrude on the privacy of Prince William as he turns 18, and said he will issue rules for covering the prince after he leaves school.

Despite his birthday on June 21, William remains a schoolboy until he finishes his studies at Eton College at the end of the month, Lord Wakeham said.

"That means he should remain free from unnecessary intrusion — particularly in view of the fact that he is currently sitting his (final) exams — and should not be photographed without the permission of the school authorities," Wakeham said in a statement.

Interest in the prince has always been high in Britain, but newspapers generally have respected the palace's request that the privacy of William and his brother, 15-year-old Prince Harry, be protected.

NEW YORK — Woody Allen was a hit in his offscreen role as a neighborhood activist.

"I'm very pleasantly surprised," Allen said Tuesday after the city Landmarks Preservation Commission unanimously rejected a proposed apartment tower on Manhattan's Upper East Side. "I'm so used to losing."

The 17-story building was slated to go up on Madison Avenue in the Carnegie Hill Historic District. Allen testified against the project in February and distributed a three-minute video to commission members.

"Invariably when I'm filming, I come to Carnegie Hill to film because there are very few areas anywhere on the island where I can really present the city in the way that I want to world to see it," he testified.

On Tuesday, Allen said he was pessimistic about preservation battles, but added "if you love the city you really have to try all the time."

Texas Republicans set to meet without VIP Bush

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Gov. George W. Bush won't be attending, but Texas Republicans are promising one of their biggest and most upbeat state conventions ever beginning Thursday.

An estimated 16,000 people were expected at the gathering in Houston, billed as the country's largest political convention.

Now that Republicans hold the state's high-level elected offices, the Texas GOP enters its convention with a firm grip on Texas government and an optimistic outlook.

"The 2000 Republican convention will be the most energized, united convention that we've ever had," predicted Texas Republican spokesman Robert Black.

Although religious conservatives and moderates within the party have clashed in the past over issues such as abortion, controversy is likely to be kept under wraps this week as Republicans await Bush's expected selection later this summer as the GOP presidential nominee.

No major changes were expected in the party's platform, officials said. Once again, the Log Cabin Republicans, a gay rights political group, won't be permitted to have an information booth at the convention.

The Log Cabin group planned instead for an exhibit booth of some sort outside the George R. Brown Convention Center. Other organizations were expected to demonstrate near the convention center.

A worker puts the finishing touches on the stage set for the Republican Party of Texas state convention, Wednesday in Houston. An estimated 16,000 people are expected at the gathering, billed as the country's largest political convention.

A much-anticipated appearance by Bush won't happen. Bush's spokespeople say he will be out of the state campaigning.

"Texas is solidly Bush country," said Bush spokesman Ray Sullivan. "The governor needs to spend his precious campaign time in states like Kentucky and Ohio, where he will be during the convention."

The governor also will be in Portland, Maine, on Thursday after spending time at the Bush family vacation home in Kennebunkport.

Bush's absence at the state convention is not a snub of the state party or a signal of reluctance to associate with the state party for fear of political disputes arising, Sullivan said.

"He has a strong and good relationship with the party chairman and the party executive committee as well as the grassroots networks around the state," Sullivan said.

The Texas GOP is disappointed Bush won't be in Houston, but party leaders understand, Black said.

"Obviously we would love to see Governor Bush at our convention. But what we'd really like to see is George W. Bush being sworn in as president. The governor's time is limited," Black said.

Democrats say Bush's decision to skip the Republican meeting means he's trying to disassociate himself from the "radical right" that controls the Texas GOP.

"With Bush out on the campaign trail attempting to cloak himself as a moderate, he does not want to be associated with a state party controlled by the radical right," said state Democratic party chair Molly Beth Malcolm.

His strength in Texas and his presumed nomination as the party's presidential candidate means Bush has no obligation to attend the state convention, said Walter Burnham, a government professor at the University of Texas at Austin.

"He is, in a sense, the uncontested king of the Republican party," Burnham said, adding that even religious conservatives who haven't always agreed with him in the past are remaining quiet.

"They're really eager to win, and they're swallowing everything and going along with 'compassionate conservatism' and the whole nine yards," Burnham said. Bush has adopted "compassionate conservatism" as his mantra.

Texas First Lady Laura Bush will speak at the state convention. So will a host of prominent Republican state officials, including Lt. Gov. Rick Perry, Attorney General John Cornyn and Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander.

A home school choir will serenade during opening ceremonies at the George R. Brown Convention Center. U.S. Sens. Kay Bailey Hutchison and Phil Gramm will address the meeting on its final day.

Before the convention adjourns Saturday, the party will select its 124 delegates for the Republican National Convention set for Philadelphia in August.

Trio of Midlanders reach WT Championship semis

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

Lisa Beck triumphed over three-time champion Marian Barker as the Midland contingency continued to protect the home turf during Wednesday's second round of the Women's West Texas Golf Association's 66th Annual Championship played at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Wednesday, Midland's best were a stellar 3-1, raising their two-day total to 7-2 during the match-play format.

In addition to Beck, Jo Dickson and Krystal Mehaffey pulled out second round wins and advanced to today's semifinals. Amarillo's Carol Buchanan crashed the Midland party, rounding out the tournament's final four. She is the only player standing in the way of Midland's first title reign since 1988.

Today's semifinals feature Mehaffey versus Buchanan at 8:55 a.m. and Dickson against Beck at 9 a.m.

Wednesday's featured match between Beck and Barker lived up to its lofty expectations. Both players went blow for blow as no player ever held a multiple-hole lead until the very end, which was quite impressive considering the number of holes each player won.

Beck won holes 1, 4, 6 and 8. Barker responded with victories on 3, 5, 7, and 10. Barker, then, followed a win at 10 with another at 11 to take her first lead of the match. It set up the match's defining stretch of holes.

On No. 12, Beck came through with a tough up and down from off the green to halve the hole with a par.

"It was crucial for me to get up and down (No. 12)," Beck said. "Being 2-down would have been disastrous."

After another halve on 13, she delivered back-to-back birdies on 14 and 15 to take her fifth lead of the match.

"Those holes were pivotal," said Beck of holes 12-15. "Every shot from there on out was important."

The match went all the way to No. 17 where Barker uncharacteristically three-putted to give Beck one of her top West Texas tournament wins.

NBA FINALS

Bryant comes of age in OT win

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Kobe Bryant became a true superstar Wednesday night, bum ankle and all.

Coming to his team's rescue after Shaquille O'Neal fouled out in overtime, Bryant made three of the most clutch shots of his young career to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 120-118 victory over the Indiana Pacers and a 3-1 lead in the NBA Finals.

Superstars make great plays at big moments, and that's what Bryant did three times in the extra session. He showed an uncanny calmness for a 21-year-old playing on a "throbbing" ankle that had kept him out of most of Game 2 and all of Game 3.

Two of the shots were straightaway jumpers to restore three-point leads; the last was a reverse layup putback of a miss by Brian Shaw with 5.9 seconds left.

The Pacers had a chance to win it after that, but Reggie Miller — after scoring 35 points — couldn't get an open 3-pointer to drop from the right elbow of the 3-point line.

Of all the stuff that makes Bryant a star — the slam dunk title, the numerous commercial endorsements, the girls who go gah-gah in his presence — the only thing missing was a heroic basketball story to make it all matter.

And this was the night for it to happen as Bryant had 28 points in 47 minutes to give the Lakers the victory in what was easily the best game of the series.

"In our mind this was the championship so we came out with effort," Bryant said. "We wanted to keep it close and then make a run."

O'Neal added 36 points and 21 rebounds and Robert Horry scored 17 off the bench for Los Angeles, which shot 52 percent from the field.

"We let one get away so we came in with a conscious effort to get this one, and we did," O'Neal said.

Miller scored 19 of his points in the fourth quarter and overtime, and Rik Smits added 24 and Jalen Rose had 14 for the Pacers.

O'Neal had a chance to win it in regulation but missed an 8-foot jump hook at the buzzer after Travis Best had shot an airball on Indiana's final possession of the fourth quarter.

It went into overtime tied 104-104, and the Lakers scored six of the next eight points. Miller then hit a fallaway 3-pointer, O'Neal had a layup, and O'Neal then went over Smits' back to pick up his sixth foul with 2:33 left.

"I just relaxed like I was playing the back yard," Bryant said of how he played after O'Neal fouled out.

Coach Phil Jackson stood with his mouth agape, staring at referee Steve Javie, who called the sixth foul, and the Pacers immediately got the ball to Smits for a jump hook.

Bryant calmly answered with a 23-footer to give the Lakers a 114-111 lead. Smits rolled in another jump hook and again Bryant answered with a long jumper. Miller made two from the line and Glen Rice tossed up a short airball at the other end — an airball that landed right in the hands of Brian Shaw for a chippy that made it 118-115.

Smits made two from the line with 28.1 seconds left, and Bryant rebounded Shaw's miss and converted it with 5.9 seconds left. The Pacers scored one more point on a foul shot after the Lakers committed a foul before the ball was inbounded, but Miller's last-gasp attempt hit the front of the rim and bounced over the backboard as the final buzzer sounded.

Now the Pacers must try to become the first team ever to recover from a 3-1 deficit in the NBA Finals. Game 5 is Friday night.

In the fourth quarter, Perkins hit a 3-pointer to tie it with 35 seconds left, and Horry threw a horrible entry pass to Rice, missing him by five feet, to give the ball back to Indiana with 17.4 seconds left. Jackson gazed angrily at Horry as he walked back to the bench for a timeout.

The Pacers then ran a pick-and-roll and got Best isolated one-on-one against O'Neal, and Best had a clear look at a fadeaway from 14 feet. It hit nothing but air, however.

Tiger's not only Open attraction

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Tiger Woods, beware.

The last time there was this much buzz at Pebble Beach was when the best player in the world arrived at the spectacular seaside course for a major championship.

The year was 1929. The results were shocking.

Bobby Jones was unceremoniously bounced from the first round of the U.S. Amateur by Johnny Goodman, and hotel rooms emptied across the Monterey Peninsula.

That won't be the case when the 100th U.S. Open gets under way, and not just because Woods has proved close to infallible over the last year. Never before has so much history converged on a major championship.

■ The centennial U.S. Open in a millennium year.

■ The void left by defending champion Payne Stewart, killed in a plane crash last October. He was remembered Wednesday with a 21-shot salute by his peers, who hit balls from the edge of the 18th fairway into the Pacific Ocean.

■ The farewell appearance of Jack Nicklaus, a four-time U.S. Open champion and the only player to win an Open and a U.S. Amateur at Pebble Beach.

■ The legend of Pebble Beach, which has produced great champions and unforgettable shots whenever it plays host to a U.S. Open — Nicklaus, Tom Watson, Tom Kite.

"This might be the most intriguing event in a long time," said Paul Azinger, who offered another heartfelt eulogy of his good friend and promised to play with the kind of focus that brought Stewart so much success in the toughest test of golf.

It all unfolds Thursday, over a course that was designed by two amateur golfers and has become America's beloved cathedral of golf along the rugged California coastline.

"The golf course has always had a special place in my heart," Woods said. "One, for its pristine beauty, and another for the mystique behind Pebble Beach."

For Jones, it was his first trip to a place described as the "greatest meeting of land and water in the world," and there were some who predicted he might have problems with the tiny greens and 10 of the 18 holes exposed by the Pacific wind.

That's not the case for Woods.

He returns to a course where only four months ago he put on a performance that showed why he is always a threat to win. Trailing by seven shots with seven holes to play, he made three birdies and an eagle from the fairway to win by two

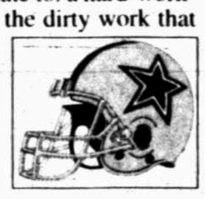
No more Moose calls: Fullback Johnston retires from Cowboys

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — For 11 years, Daryl Johnston was the kind of guy football fans could relate to: a hard-working, hard-nosed blocker who did the dirty work that made his teammates — and his team — better.



The Dallas Cowboys fullback was so beloved that even fans in rival cities such as Washington and Philadelphia screamed his nickname. He was so appreciated that the NFL changed its rules to create a spot for him at the Pro Bowl.

But Johnston's style took a heavy toll on his 34-year-old body, especially his neck. He announced his retirement Wednesday, fulfilling a promise he made to his doctor following an operation in 1997.

"It just didn't seem to have that risk-reward benefit," Johnston said. "But you can't be sad, you can't be disappointed, because this career has exceeded any of the expectations I could've had growing up in a small town."

Johnston jokingly referred to himself as "a guy that couldn't even muster 1,000 yards in his career." Maybe not, but he was a big reason why Emmitt Smith is the No. 2 rusher in NFL history.

"He's meant an awful lot to me in my career," Smith said. "I've been so naturally following behind him for so long that it's sad that he's not here."

Johnston was among the most respected people in the Cowboys' locker room. He inspired teammates with his competitiveness and toughness and he used his popularity in the community to promote reading campaigns.

Johnston was Dallas' second pick in the 1989 draft. He played in 149 consecutive games before the first injury, including Super Bowl victories following the '92, '93 and '95 seasons.

He returned to play every game in 1998, but admits he was a bit tentative. He felt he was peaking again when he felt a burning sensation in last season's opener against the Redskins.

Tests showed problems near the vertebra he had surgically repaired in 1997. Johnston knew then his career was over, but spent the rest of the season hanging around the team, making for a long, slow goodbye.

Tailgate party greets champs

By Amy Westfeldt
Associated Press Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Who needs a ticker-tape parade down a canyon of heroes? This is New Jersey: A tailgate party on a concrete prairie was just fine, thank you.

A crowd of more than 40,000 New Jersey Devils fans turned out Wednesday in a parking lot at the Meadowlands Sports Complex to celebrate the team's second Stanley Cup championship in six seasons.

Light rain and cool temperatures did not deter fans from saluting their team. They cheered wildly as captain Scott Stevens came out with the Cup against a backdrop of fireworks and ticker tape.

Stevens thanked the fans for their support, particularly when the Devils were away from home.

"That's why we're such a great road team," Stevens said on a podium filled with the team and family members. "We always have you guys there."

Larry Robinson, who hasn't officially decided whether he will coach the team next season, was greeted with chants of "One more year" as he got up to speak.

Robinson indicated he would return as long as general manager Lou Lamoriello also comes back under the team's new owners.

WOMEN: Mehaffey, Dickson win easily

(From 1C)

"There was so much pressure today, playing with Marian who has won three times," Beck said.

Barker, who won this tournament the last time it was held in Midland (1997), had problems getting anything going consistently. The culprit for the veteran was, of all things, nerves.

"On the front, I didn't handle myself like I should have," said Barker, a high school golf coach from Lubbock. "I couldn't handle my nerves. Everyone can hit the ball and everyone can make putts, but keeping composed is the hardest part of the game."

Beck, for all her hard work, will be rewarded with another tough match today against an opponent she is very familiar with — Dickson. They have battled often, usually with much at stake.

Between them, they own six Midland city titles and are considered two of the city's best amateur players over the last decade.

"It will totally come down to putting, this whole tournament is putting," Beck said. "That is very scary. That (putting) is my weakest suit."

That could mean big trouble for Beck today. Dickson's putter was on fire Wednesday as she defeated her good friend Trina Albright, 5 and 4.

Albright has been suffering from a bad back, and that and a Dickson's extremely hot putter paved the way for a six-hole lead on the front side.

"Putting was the difference in the whole match. I putted really good," Dickson said. "On the front, I played regulation golf and got ahead early."

The lopsided win made for awkward situation.

"It is hard in any match when playing a good friend," Dickson said. "It is hard to create conversion. I tried to concentrate on playing well."

The other semifinal features the tournament's top-seed, Mehaffey, and the out-of-towner, Buchanan.

Mehaffey produced the championship flight's biggest blowout, dismantling a pretty good player, Pat Jarrett, 6 and 5. Mehaffey, a member of the Midland College's two-time national championship teams, birdied three of the first six holes en route to a 5-up lead after six holes.

That lead was still 5-up after nine. Another birdie on 10 increased the lead to 6-up. From that point on, she didn't let up.

"After I birdied 10, I decided to hit greens and two-putt instead of firing at the flags," said Mehaffey, who struggled to finish off her first round match on Tuesday. "I didn't need birdies. I just needed to go for par.

"Today, I played pretty solid. Everything just clicked."

Mehaffey, who will attend the University of Texas-El Paso, will not be the first college player Buchanan has faced. Playing in the Amarillo city tournament, Buchanan knows what it is like to ward off talented young players. Buchanan has won her city's title seven times.

Buchanan is also looking to make her second finals appearance in the West Texas Championships, and Wednesday, she defeated Loretta Cantu of Odessa 3 and 2 to take that second step. Now she takes on Mehaffey, who has been a machine in her first two matches.

"I have to stay within my own game, play my own game and make my wedge and putter count like it has in the last three days," Buchanan said.

Notes: Tournament action begins today at 8 a.m. with the second flight... Ann Steward (first flight) and Susan Collier (third flight) won matches which lasted for 21 holes, which ties for the longest of the tournament... Myra Schmitt, competing in the eighth flight, had Wednesday's most-lopsided win qith a 9-and-7 victory...

OPEN: Pebble presents challenge, history strokes.

It was his sixth straight PGA Tour victory, the longest streak in over 50 years, and continued a stretch he carries into the U.S. Open — in his last 25 tournaments around the world, Woods has finished out of the top 10 only twice.

"We're all looking for one score all the time," Colin Montgomerie said. "And it's his."

While Woods goes after his first U.S. Open title and continues a slow climb toward Nicklaus' benchmark of 18 professional majors, Montgomerie and so many other have come to Pebble Beach with their own nuggets of history.

Montgomerie thought he won at Pebble Beach in 1992, his first U.S. Open, by getting out of the wicked wind and into the clubhouse at even-par 288. He wound up third, and has suffered through two other close calls in the Open since then.

"I have to be honest — it's not a normal tournament," the Scotsman said Wednesday. "There's slightly more pressure on the situation."

Phil Mickelson played his first professional round at Pebble Beach in the '92 Open, a 4-under 68. He followed with an 81 and missed the cut.

With 16 victories, including three this year, Mickelson figured he would have won a major by now.

"I think it's very important that it take place fairly soon, because I've had so many opportunities to really break through and win, and for whatever reason I just haven't come through and done it," Mickelson said.

Driving him on is memories of Pinehurst, where Stewart beat him by one stroke with a 15-foot par putt on the 72nd hole. Disappointment turned to joy the next day when he watched the birth of his daughter, followed by a sense of shock four months later when Stewart perished in a plane crash.

Tom Lehman, who played in the final pairing of the U.S. Open four years in a row without winning, considers Pebble Beach a special setting, particularly since he met his wife here. David Duval gets another crack at his first major and has a history of playing Pebble well — he holds the course record, a 10-under 62, along with Kite.

And while no European has won the U.S. Open since Tony Jacklin in 1970, that could change. Darren Clarke and Lee Westwood have both overcome Woods to win this year, while Sweden's Jesper Parnevik is a two-time winner on the PGA Tour.

Still, it all goes back to Woods, the No. 1 player in the world trying to survive the most demanding test of golf in the world.

"You always want to see how far in front or how far behind you are from him," Sergio Garcia said. "You know that beating him, you're going to be probably winning the tournament, or getting very close to it."

Such pressure is not unknown to Woods, who has been regarded a favorite ever since he won the Masters by 12 strokes in 1997. That victory, in a roundabout way, also is linked to Jones' first trip to Pebble Beach.

After losing in the first round, Jones went a couple of miles up the coast to a new course called Cypress Point. There, he found inspiration to collaborate with Alister McKenzie on a course they designed in Georgia that became Augusta National.

'Reject' McDougall leads FSU past USC with pair of homers

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Southern California coach Mike Gillespie blamed major league baseball. If that's the case, Florida State coach Mike Martin ought to send out a few thank you cards.

Marshall McDougall homered twice, tying the College World Series career record, and Mike Futrell singled in the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning as the Seminoles staved off elimination again with a 3-2 victory over Southern California on Wednesday night.

"I'm really, really, really bitter at pro baseball for being so stupid and not taking McDougall last year," Gillespie said. "He was a star."

McDougall, drafted in the 26th round last year by the Boston Red Sox, produced all of Florida State's offense until the ninth inning. He had two of the team's three hits, both solo home runs, before the final frame.

Futrell, 0-for-3 with two strikeouts as he stepped to the plate in the ninth, lifted Ronald Flores' 1-2 pitch into right field to score Ryan Barthelemy from third.

"My first three at-bats were pretty gross," Futrell said. "I just didn't want to strikeout three times."

Flores (6-2) gave up three hits in 1 1/3 innings.

■ College World Series

"It's a tough pill to swallow," Flores said. "I thought it was a good pitch, but it wasn't unhittable."

Seminoles starter Jon McDonald almost was, though.

McDonald (12-5) pitched a four-hitter. He struck out seven, walked four and hit three batters. The only two runs he allowed were unearned.

"If there's such a thing as justice in baseball, Jon McDonald got it tonight," Martin said. "He pitched so well and deserved to win. We were very fortunate in the ninth inning to get a run across for him."

Louisiana-Lafayette 5, Clemson 4

Two runs scored on Steven Feehan's bunt single in the bottom of the ninth inning as Louisiana-Lafayette rallied to beat Clemson in a game that ended with a scuffle.

The Ragin' Cajuns (49-19) extended their first CWS appearance and earned a rematch Thursday with Stanford, which beat Louisiana-Lafayette 6-4 in the opening round. Clemson was eliminated.

Feehan's one-out bunt down the first base line scored Jarvis Larry from third. Rick Haydel scored from first on the play when pitcher Rick Mottl's throw got past a diving Ryan Riley, who was rushing over from second to cover first.

JOHNSTON: Fullback may be on TV

(From 1C)

"He had a full season to wean himself, going on road trips, sitting in on meetings," said his wife, Diane. "I know it's going to be difficult this fall, but he's had the best possible scenario."

Johnston's next job likely will be in broadcasting. He worked three NFL Europe games this summer and he's auditioned with CBS and ESPN.

Still, he can't help but think of opportunities lost.

The Cowboys are returning to the offense in which Johnston had his greatest success and he'd love to get another chance in it. Worst of all, he won't be the one breaking open the hole Smith runs through should he break Walter Payton's all-time rushing record.

"He won't be on the field to share with me when and if that special day comes for me, but he will be with me in heart because he has carried me for such a long time," said Smith, who is 2,764 yards away.

Johnston said what he'll miss most is receiving respect from rival coaches, players and fans.

"It was obvious to see why we were known as America's Team when you can go into RFK and Veteran's Stadium and some of the other hostile areas around the country and still hear the fans give you the Moose call," he said. "It always brought a smile to my face."

Fittingly, Johnston threw one last block for his teammates. By scheduling his farewell news conference for 2 p.m., he forced coaches to cancel the final practice of a three-day minicamp.

Wizards finally land Hamilton

WASHINGTON — Michael Jordan wanted a college coach for his Washington Wizards, a team short on discipline and fundamentals. He also had to find someone who does not mind starting at the bottom.

Leonard Hamilton fit the bill.

Though he was not Jordan's first choice, the University of Miami coach signed a five-year, $10 million contract with the Wizards on Wednesday and accepted with relish his new lofty assignment.

"I'm not sure I wouldn't be more excited about this challenge than I would taking over a team that just won the NBA championship," said the 51-year-old coach, who has rebuilt programs at Oklahoma State and Miami over the last 14 years. "This separates different kinds of personalities. I just get excited about taking those things over that appear to be difficult."

Difficult is the optimal word.

Hamilton is the Wizards' fifth coach in three seasons. The team hasn't won a playoff game in 12 years, with the only postseason appearance since 1988 coming in a three-game, first-round sweep by Chicago in 1997.

The Wizards are in need of a roster overhaul, but the huge salaries of underachieving veterans Juwan Howard, Rod Strickland and Mitch Richmond make it nearly impossible for Jordan to move players under the league's salary cap guidelines. Furthermore, the Wizards do not have a first-round draft pick this year.

Also, Hamilton must buck a recent trend of successful college coaches, such as Rick Pitino, P.J. Carlesimo, John Calipari and Jerry Tarkanian, who have struggled in the NBA.

"Sure, it hasn't really been proven properly that a college coach can make the transition from college to the pros," said Jordan, the Wizards president of basketball operations. "That doesn't mean he can't be the first. The idea that we have is to try to surround him with knowledge about the game and let him utilize that knowledge. We will have to support Leonard as much as possible and help him understand the professional game."

Jordan fired Gar Heard shortly after joining the Wizards front office Jan. 19, but the hiring of Hamilton is His Airness' biggest management decision to date.

The search was long and not always smooth. Lenny Wilkens, the NBA's career leader victories, said he had been offered the job when he hadn't, and St. John's coach Mike Jarvis turned down Jordan in a disagreement over money.

Jordan said he didn't want a recycled coach from another NBA team. He said a college coach would symbolize a new beginning and help repair the lack of fundamentals that "a lot of players on this team need."

"They need that type of attention, to the little things that have been skipped in their education of basketball," Jordan said.

Burkett shoots below age

Bob Burkett of Midland accomplished one of the rarest feats in golf, shooting below his age on Tuesday at Midland Country Club.

Burkett fired a 78, a couple strokes lower than his age of 80. Don Haden witnessed the round.

Garza hired at Trinity

Dean Garza has been hired at Trinity School as an assistant football coach an P.E. instructor. He will also work with the track team.

Garza is a graduate of Odessa High School and UTPB. He has 11 years of coaching experience, the last four at Permian High School.

Garza replaces Mark Mays, who resigned to into private business.

Harper named All-American

Britt Harper, a Midland Lee graduate, has earned first team NAIA All-American honors.

The senior designated hitter at Lubbock Christian University hit .336 with 18 doubles, four triples, 14 home runs and a team high 84 RBIs.

The Chaparrals went 53-16 on the season, winning their third Sooner Athletic Conference title and earning the No. 1 seed in the NAIA Region VI baseball tournament in Houston.

Permian hires hoops coach

ODESSA — John Servance, a football and basketball assistant coach at Permian High School the last seven years, has been hired as head coach of the Panthers basketball team, it was announced Tuesday.

Servance replaces Gary Bridges, who resigned to coach at Class 4A Levelland.

Last season, Permian was 13-19 overall and 5-7 in District 4-5A.

Three straight HRs lift Astros

DENVER (AP) — Moises Alou made sure the Houston Astros didn't have to dwell on the home run that got away.

Alou, Richard Hidalgo and Tony Eusebio hit consecutive homers in the eighth inning as the Houston Astros set a team record with six home runs an 8-4 victory over the Colorado Rockies on Wednesday night. The back-to-back-to-back display came one inning after Lance Berkman's apparent go-ahead homer down the right-field line was called foul by first-base umpire Jeff Nelson.

"It was like home run derby out there," Astros manager Larry Dierker said. "We've been there before when it was the other way around. I've seen them play home run derby with us a lot more than we've done it with them."

Alou homered twice and Jeff Bagwell and Berkman added solo shots for the Astros.

Wild pitch in 10th dooms 'Hounds

Staff Report

TULSA, Okla. — A scoreless Texas League game into the 10th inning?

Who would've guessed that the two worst pitching staffs would accomplish that feat on Wednesday night. In the end, however, it was a wild pitch that decided the outcome.

Tulsa's Corey Wright scored from third base on a wild pitch by Midland's Bert Snow (2-3) in the bottom of the 10th to give the Drillers a 1-0 win over the RockHounds. Snow was delivering a 1-0 pitch with two outs to Jason Grabowski.

Wright had gotten on base when he was hit by an 0-2 pitch. He then stole second and reached third on a groundout.

The game was a pitching gem as both offenses combined for 10 hits. Both teams had their chances early in the contest but both failed to convert. The RockHounds ended up leaving 10 men on base, while the Drillers left nine stranded.

Tulsa's Chad Poeck (2-1) got the win in relief.

With the loss, the RockHounds dropped to 31-35 for the first half of Texas League play, meaning with just three games left in the first half, the 'Hounds are assured of finishing below .500.

Rangers suffer ugly seventh straight loss

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The game, like the weather, was far from exemplary.

"It was pretty ugly, but I don't care because we found a way to win," said B.J. Surhoff, who helped the Baltimore Orioles rally from a late four-run deficit to an 11-10 victory over the slumping Texas Rangers on Wednesday night.

Delino DeShields singled home the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning as the Orioles handed the Rangers their seventh straight defeat. The Orioles blew a 5-0 lead built on Albert Belle's 12th career grand slam, then rallied from a 10-6 deficit with a four-run eighth.

The game was played in a driving mist that made fielding difficult and caused many in the announced crowd of 39,231 to leave well before the conclusion of the see-saw affair.

"It was really tough conditions. The field was wet and it was tough to see because the rain was in your face," said Surhoff, who went 3-for-4 with a homer and four RBIs. "It was an exciting game, not necessarily a well-played one."

Texas' losing streak is its longest since a seven-game skid in June 1997.

Cal Ripken led off the ninth with a single against Tim Crabtree (1-3). After John Wetteland replaced Crabtree and Brady Anderson ran for Ripken, Will Clark flied out and Charles Johnson walked.

DeShields then lined a single to right, and Anderson easily scored. Midland High graduate Mike Trmlin (2-1) pitched a perfect ninth for the Orioles, who won their third straight.

Baltimore tied the game in the eighth when Rich Amaral hit a two-run single off Mike Venafro before Surhoff hit a two-run, two-out single off Crabtree. DeShields entered the game as a pinch hitter and drew one of two walks in the inning.

"We get late in the ballgame and we walk two guys with a four-run lead. That's the ballgame," Rangers manager Johnny Oates said. "That's all I've got. That covers the whole ballgame. You can use your imagination the rest of the way."

Ivan Rodriguez hit his 22nd homer and also had two doubles in a seven-run fourth inning that gave Texas a 7-5 lead. David Segui hit a three-run homer in the fourth, the second time in five games that Baltimore yielded seven runs in an inning.

"This club is very resilient," Baltimore manager Mike Hargrove said. "To come back the way did, that says something about the character of this club. We come to play, and we're serious about what we're doing. It's a beautiful thing when it works."

Belle's first grand slam since 1997 gave the Orioles a 4-0 lead before Texas starter Kenny Rogers recorded an out.

Blue chips rise

NEW YORK (AP) — Blue-chip issues advanced Wednesday after a closely watched inflation gauge rose less than expected. But technology stocks slumped, dragged lower by industry leaders like Qualcomm and Intel.

Trading was choppy as investors reallocated money from technology stocks to industrial names that have been neglected in recent weeks. Analysts said the choppiness betrayed some confusion about the best way to play the market now that a modest economic slowdown appears to have begun.

"Investors are torn between enthusiasm over how strong the world remains and concern about the fact that things are indeed decelerating," said Charles G. Crane, chief market strategist at Key Asset Management in New York.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 66.11 to close at 10,687.95.

Broader stock indicators were mixed. The Standard & Poor's 500 index edged up 1.10 to 1,470.54, and the Nasdaq composite index fell 53.65 to 3,797.41.

Gold falls

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was mixed against other major currencies in European trading Wednesday. Gold prices fell.

The euro was quoted at 95.97 cents, up from 95.96 cents Tuesday.

Other dollar rates compared with late Tuesday: 106.72 Japanese yen, down from 106.76; 1.6298 Swiss francs, up from 1.6288; 1.4687 Canadian dollars, down from 1.4690.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5021, down from $1.5126.

At midday in New York, the euro traded at 95.90 cents while the pound was quoted at $1.5012. The dollar was quoted at 106.79 yen.

Based on euro rates, the dollar is worth: 2.0375 German marks, up from 2.0371; 6.8336 French francs, up from 6.8322; 2.2951 Dutch guilders, down from 2.2953; and 2,016.53 Italian lire, down from 2,016.74.

Gold closed in London at $288.50 bid per troy ounce, down from $289.40 on Tuesday.

In Zurich the bid price was $287.05, down from $292.85.

Gold fell $5.70 in Hong Kong to close at $286.75.

Silver closed in London at $5.11 bid per troy ounce, up from $5.03.

Crude climbs

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil prices continued their steep climb Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, lifted by soaring gasoline prices amid reports of declining inventories of cleaner-burning formulas.

The Department of Energy reported Wednesday a decline of 1.5 million barrels in reformulated gasoline stores, slightly less than a Tuesday report by the American Petroleum Institute that showed a 1.871 million barrel draw.

On the International Petroleum Exchange in London, July Brent crude from the North Sea fell 47 cents to $31.02 a barrel.

Unleaded gasoline futures touched a nine-and-a-half-year high, with the July contract topping out at $1.0960 a gallon before settling at $1.0805 a gallon, up 1.83 cents for the day.

Crude oil for July delivery rose 29 cents to $32.85 a barrel, their highest level in three months on speculation that OPEC will not increase oil production any time soon.

120 charged in securities fraud bust

By Larry Neumeister
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Charges were brought Wednesday against 120 people in what federal prosecutors said was the largest securities fraud crackdown in U.S. history. Among those charged were members of all five New York City organized crime families.

The far-reaching fraud stretched over five years, and never before have so many people been charged at once in such a case, U.S. Attorney Mary Jo White said. She said 98 of them had been arrested by early afternoon.

Barry W. Mawn, FBI assistant director in charge of the New York office, said the investigation had "uncovered once again La Cosa Nostra's efforts to infiltrate the securities markets."

"No matter what market the mob tries to infiltrate, from the fish market to the stock market, the methods it uses are always the same: violence and the threat of violence," he said.

Richard Walker, director of enforcement of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, called the crimes "among the most egregious witnessed in recent years."

As part of the overall scheme, the Internet was sometimes used to promote stocks, and companies were falsely touted as dot.com companies to induce investors to capitalize on the Internet boom, prosecutors said.

The charges were detailed in 16 indictments and seven criminal complaints unsealed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan. The schemes allegedly resulted in total losses of more than $50 million.

Among those charged in the mammoth scheme were 10 alleged members and associates of organized crime, a former New York police detective, a West Coast investment adviser, stock promoters, brokers, and officers, directors and other insiders of several companies.

Arrests occurred in New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Texas, Illinois, Utah and California, Mawn said.

The participants allegedly engaged in racketeering, using bribery, extortion and even soliciting murder to further frauds that reaped millions of dollars in illegal profits.

As part of the scheme, members and associates of the Bonanno and Colombo organized crime families allegedly forged alliances with members and associates of the remaining three New York organized crime families.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Pat Smith explains a chart showing the web of corruption as charges were brought Wednesday in New York against 120 people in what federal prosecutors said was the largest securities fraud crackdown in U.S. history. Among those charged in the mammoth scheme were 10 alleged members and associates of organized crime, a former New York police detective, a West Coast investment adviser, stock promoters, brokers, and officers, directors and other insiders of several companies.

They then sought to defraud union pension plans, using traditional "boiler-room" operations and Internet techniques to carry out their crimes, prosecutors said in a statement.

When those techniques failed, they resorted to threats, extortion, physical intimidation and the solicitation of murder to further their goals, they said.

The criminal enterprise allegedly tried to manipulate eight publicly traded securities and to defraud investors in connection with three private placements of securities, including one by Ranch 1 Inc., a company that operates fast food restaurants in the New York City area and elsewhere.

Area hospital begins major renovations

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Odessa Regional Hospital has begun a major expansion project, breaking ground on the 25th anniversary of the hospital opening its doors to the public.

The expansion will add 50,000 square feet of new construction includes renovation of 30,000 square feet of existing space. The renovations will allow the hospital to provide private rooms and expand the number of actual beds within the next 45 to 60 days.

Currently a 130,000 square foot building with 75 available rooms, the hospital will have almost 200,000 square feet and over 100 rooms when the expansion is completed in the first quarter of 2002. No new departments will be added as a result of the expansion, but the hospital will broaden services in existing departments.

The expansion includes new labor, delivery and recovery rooms, C-section areas, a nursery and neonatal intensive care unit and new private rooms in the postpartum area. The facility will also gain an expanded outpatient surgery pre- and post-operative area and a new lobby and entrance.

"We project an additional 10 percent in admissions for the hospital," said Mike Potter, chief executive officer. "That translates, in terms of financial impact, to somewhere in the neighborhood of $1.5 to $2 million in additional funds per year."

The hospital was purchased eight months ago by IASIS Healthcare Inc. from Tenet Healthcare. The expansion is being designed by CRA Inc. of Dallas, which also designed Westwood Medical Center in Midland.

THE ECONOMIST

Consumers are a fickle bunch and Fed is on a slippery slope

By M. Ray Perryman

It was the mid 1940s. America had just won the war. There was euphoria and celebration everywhere — except in most of the economics departments around the country. Practitioners of the ever-dismal science feared that, with the stimulus of the government's wartime spending gone, the economy would slip back into the doldrums of the Great Depression. They were wrong.

Perryman

The mistake made by the bulk of economists was simply that they didn't consider the fact that something was out there to replace the government stimulus. The end of World War II marked the beginning of the Age of the Consumer. A few economists — notably Nobel-laureate Lawrence Klein with his new-fangled econometric model — saw it coming, but the majority didn't.

During the conflict, most people had jobs. Because of material shortages and rationing, however, they didn't have much to buy. Also, savings in the form of bonds to finance the war was viewed as quite a patriotic thing to do. At times during the early 1940s, the savings rate exceeded 35 percent. Hard to believe, isn't it?

When the soldiers came home, people lined up to buy appliances, radios, furniture, and all the other things they had been deprived of during the war. America became a consumer society and hasn't looked back. Today, the consumption sector constitutes about 70 percent of the overall economy.

This dominance has some interesting implications. Essentially, if Americans feel confident and continue to buy stuff, there will generally be growth irrespective of anything else that might be happening. Similarly, if they feel bad, it's really hard to get anything going.

Needless to say, I'm leading up to something. As Federal Reserve policy continues to tighten, the objective is to slow economic expansion and thus reduce the risk of that pesky inflation that's been "just around the corner" for the past 10 years or so. In order to do that, you basically have to put the brakes on consumers.

The recent spate of interest rate increases appears to be taking a modest bite out of some sectors, yet the recent Consumer Confidence Index numbers remain near record highs. It is only when the effects of the rate hikes penetrate our collective psyche that we can expect any substantial cooling of business activity to occur. Therein lies the problem.

If the Fed continues its recent policies, it may well get more than it bargained for. Study after study has confirmed that consumers are not the purely rational automatons that we depict in textbooks. In particular, they cannot be counted on either to always (1) react to the next incremental bump in rates in the same way as the previous one or (2) react to increases and decreases in a systematic manner. Try as you might, we simply refuse to be predictable.

At some point, consumers may decide that enough is enough and significantly reduce their spending. It is impossible to say exactly when or even if that will happen, but six interest rate hikes is certainly sufficient to flirt with it. Once this happens, it's not merely a matter of dropping rates a bit to turn things around. If conditions turn south, it may take a lot more than that. The Fed might well find itself in the unenviable position of trying to push on a string.

I say all of this to point out that consumers are a fickle bunch. It may not be wise to try to get them to be "a little" pessimistic because they might end up "a lot" pessimistic. Once the direction moves downward, it can be a slippery slope. It's definitely something worth thinking about.

Jennifer Lopez is back on the beat

As a federal agent in 1998's "Out of Sight," Jennifer Lopez chased escaped convict George Clooney. Now, as a Chicago police officer in Warner Brothers' "Angel Eyes," her mission is not so clear-cut. Officer Sharon Pogue (Lopez) meets a mysterious man named Catch (Jim Caviezel) and, while uncovering the truth about him, is forced to confront her own secret past. Currently in production, the movie is directed by Luis Mandoki ("When a Man Loves a Woman" and "Message in a Bottle").

Is Selena Forever —or not?

"I wish I knew exactly what was going on," says Rebecca Valadez, one of the leads of the stage musical "Selena Forever," based on the life of the late Tex-Mex star.

"Being that I was one of the Selenas, you'd think that I'd get some information." But Valadez says she's been left in the dark since the show's run was cancelled May 17. Meantime, the San Antonio native plans to keep working on her own music, doing background vocals at a local studio, and pursuing a college degree.

Spanish butterfly flies to U.S.

Award-winning Spanish director Jose Luis Cuerda had only one problem last year. His latest film, "Butterfly," was up against Pedro Almodovar's "All About My Mother" in their homeland's most prestigious competition. Almodovar "took every prize," says Cuerda.

But he's not bitter. And why should he be? "Butterfly" (or "The Tongue of the Butterfly" as it was originally called) was nominated for 13 Goya awards (Spain's Oscar), including best picture; won for adapted screenplay; will be seen everywhere from Iceland to Japan; and opens in New York and Los Angeles on June 16.

Which is why the director is on a whirlwind publicity tour in the U.S.

Looking very much like Santa Claus, this law school graduate and former cinematography professor sits in the lobby of New York's TriBeCa Grand Hotel to discuss the project. Set in a small Galician town on the eve of the Spanish Civil War, the film examines "the traumatic rupture of ordinary life among individuals who are very close to one another," he explains.

The theme is developed through the story of a shy, asthmatic, clever little boy and his wise and kindly schoolmaster, whose unorthodox (for 1936) teaching methods include taking his students outdoors and explaining that butterflies indeed have tongues.

The characters are brought to life by legendary Spanish actor Fernando Fernan Gomez, winner of 1993's Best Supporting Actor for "Belle Epoque," and newcomer Manuel Lozano. Both earned Goya nominations for their performances.

Miramax, the picture's U.S. distributor, loved the film, says Mark Gill, president of Miramax LA, because it is "extremely nuanced and sensitive and smart and intriguing and ... different."

And Miramax is betting that "different" will sell.

Cuerda, too, is optimistic about the film's prospects here after witnessing audience reactions at the Sundance Film Festival. But, he says losing to Almodovar prepared him for whatever may come. "Getting used to winning is a vice. Getting used to losing is a discipline."

Border Patrol reports heightened pace of immigrant deaths

By James Pinkerton
Hearst News Service

SASRITA — On Thursday afternoon, Kenedy County officials held a double funeral in the small city cemetery in this South Texas ranching community. But they had no idea who they buried beneath the metal tags marking a pair of pauper's graves.

All they know is that the two people they buried — a young Hispanic woman who died of dehydration and the skeletal remains of a young man — are among the growing hundreds of undocumented immigrants who perish as they attempt the hazardous journey north.

On Memorial Day, a young mother died in the Arizona desert, saving her water for her 18-month-old daughter. Less than a week later, an injured woman was left by smugglers in the desert near Yuma with her two young sons, where she died. In both cases, the children, amazingly, survived.

Since October, U.S. Border Patrol stations along the 2,000-mile Southwest border have reported 217 immigrant deaths, a heightened pace that officials predict could surpass the 231 who died during the last fiscal year and the 262 deaths the year before.

After all, the worst of the summer is still ahead, in the remaining 3 1/2 months of the Border Patrol's fiscal year.

The leading causes of death are drowning and exposure to both heat and cold.

"The number of deaths is ahead of last year in our busiest sectors, and that is certainly a cause for concern," said Virginia Kice, spokeswoman for the Border Patrol's western regional office in Los Angeles.

"We've got 2,000 miles of border . . . and smugglers are leading these people into these remote areas and not telling them there is no way they can successfully cross. They can't carry enough water."

The smugglers, she said, are abandoning them.

This year as in the last two, most immigrants died along the rugged border Mexico shares with Arizona and California.

On June 4th near Yuma, Ariz., a rescue party set out after a 15-year-old boy stumbled out of the desert seeking help for his mother and younger brother. When the Border Patrol found them, the 10-year-old brother was nearby, but the boys' 39-year-old mother, Efigenia Chavez Solorio, was dead.

The woman had a dog bite on her ankle, and investigators believe she couldn't keep up; smugglers left her and the two boys behind.

"We've lost close to 20 people going across (the border) this year," said Detective Rick Hanson, with the Yuma County Sheriff's Department. "Out here, this desert will kill you in a heartbeat."

"We're running 10 to 15 degrees above normal, temperatures are already 110 degrees, and our average yearly rainfall is 3 inches and we haven't even had half that," Hanson said.

On Memorial Day, tribal police from the Tohono O'odham reservation near Sells, Ariz., west of Tucson, encountered a Mexican immigrant seeking help for a young mother sick in the desert.

When Border Patrol agents arrived, 19-year-old Yolanda Gonzalez was dead of dehydration after walking four days in the desert and giving most of the water she carried to her 18-month-old daughter. The toddler and the relative accompanying them survived.

Nathan Orosco prepares for his art show in the art lab at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

UTPB artist goes to Washington State

Staff Reports

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin doesn't have the rich history of some of the older schools in the country, but it does have one asset that sets it apart — art student Nathan Orosco.

"It was a pleasure to be his teacher," art professor Chris Stanley said. "He is one of those rare birds who shows up once in blue moon.

"It is a joy when you get a kid like Nathan, who has an understanding of tools, and you can push him a little more."

Stanley said Orosco is one of about five or six students he thinks can make a career out of art.

Orosco's hard work paid off for him when he was awarded a full scholarship to Washington State University and a teaching position to boot.

An art career did not always seem to be a career possibility.

For awhile it looked like Orosco would continue on the tradition in his family and become a diesel mechanic.

However, after taking art courses in college, Orosco knew his life would not follow the same pattern as the others in his family.

"I didn't start art seriously until college. In high school I knew I learned art faster than others so I knew I had some skill," said Orosco.

Growing up in a blue-collar Mexican-American home, Orosco was not exposed to many different cultures, which is something the young artist says he wants to rectify this summer. "I want to leave the country after school.

The whole part of being an artist is to explore other cultures like in Europe or China," said Orosco.

The 22-year-old thinks his experience overseas will help give him substance and a better way to express himself artistically. " I want to express the modern world, but I want it to touch the common folk as well," said Orosco.

"My family has always been supportive. They are very proud and really liked my work, which is important to me," he said.

Reaching a level of success in the Permian Basin was not easy for Orosco. He said that he thinks there is far too little support for local artists in the area.

"I would like to encourage people in the community to go to art exhibitions instead of buying movie tickets," Orosco said. "Talented artists in this area are not recognized enough. I want to represent this area someday, but I want those in the community to learn to look and respect art."

Orosco's work will be at UTPB's Gallery of the Visual Arts studio June 13-July 7.

Hispanic influx spreads through remote Arkansas county

By Melissa Nelson
Associated Press Writer

DE QUEEN, Ark. — Six pairs of tiny feet dangle from the semicircle of chairs surrounding Sarah Hooper. The teacher and her students are at a stalemate over the sound roosters make.

The rooster in their book says "cock-a-doodle-doo," but the kids insist it should be "qui qui ri qui."

The kids twist and squirm as they talk in Spanish about the rooster dilemma while the teacher flips to a page about cows.

These children embody a cultural metamorphosis happening in De Queen, where as many as 4,000 immigrants, most from Mexico, have nearly doubled the population in a decade, by one estimate.

It's the economy of chickens, rather than the sound they make, that attracts them. Lured by job advertisements in Mexico, they have come to work for Tyson Foods Inc. and Pilgrim's Pride, processing a combined 3 million chickens a week.

Arkansas led the nation in Hispanic population growth in 1999 — 149 percent. The southwest town of De Queen, nestled between rolling hills and dotted with pine trees, is among the communities faced with integrating a large and rapid influx of one culture into another.

"Our town has become a pueblo de Mexico," said Father John Kerr, a 32-year-old Catholic priest who grew up 140 miles away in North Little Rock and learned to speak Spanish after he moved to De Queen in 1998. "No one can believe that this church is now one of the largest in the entire (Arkansas) diocese."

Average Mass attendance has gone from 80 to more than 1,200 in a decade, and six of the church's eight Masses each week are in Spanish.

De Queen's business district has seven Hispanic-owned restaurants, groceries and other businesses. Church marquees and business ads are bilingual. Soccer has supplanted baseball as the popular sport in the city park, and on weekends the town square becomes a Mexican market of food, clothing and crafts.

KDQN, the town's only radio station, still speaks English and plays country music on FM, but switched to Spanish music on AM four years ago.

Straddled by the Oklahoma line and the banks of the Cossatot River, De Queen was founded in 1897 by a Dutch railroad magnate. Its most famous son is Collin Raye, the country singer. Until the poultry boom of the 1990s, it depended on the timber industry.

Immigrants like Jose Fernandez use words like pretty, tranquil and peaceful to describe De Queen. Unlike traditional migrants, who move from state to state in search of work, these new arrivals have come to stay.

"In other places like Miami, it was too big, too crazy," said Fernandez, who left his hometown of San Luis Potosi, Mexico, 10 years ago and moved to De Queen in 1996. "Here, I like the work and I like the life."

Fernandez flew past his competitors on a recent afternoon, his long hair dripping sweat as he dribbled the soccer ball toward the goal at the Herman Dierks Memorial Park.

Poultry work is difficult — pulling feathers and butchering around the clock — but offers year-round

HISPANIC: More Latinos are making homes north of the border

employment and average wages of $7 an hour, making it much better than migrant farm labor, he said.

But the paradise found by Fernandez and others is something else to longtime residents.

Enrollment at De Queen's lone elementary school topped 900 this year, making it one of the state's largest. The district is building a second elementary school.

Half of De Queen's 200 kindergartners entered the 1999-2000 school year speaking only Spanish.

A map of North America adorns the wall of one middle school classroom. Above the map is a sign that reads, "We all smile in the same language." Push pins cover the places in Mexico where students were born.

"What I hear from my parents is that they want a better life for their children so that their children don't have to work in the chicken plants," said Principal Don Higgins.

Hooper, the elementary school teacher, agreed to head the school's "English as Second Language" program two years ago because she was one of only a few teachers trained for the job. None of the teachers in the 1,784-student district spoke Spanish.

Spending eight hours a day in a classroom of children who speak limited English, she often hears arguments like the one about the rooster.

"The culture is so different here and that is a little scary for the kids. Culture shock is a huge issue because many of them come from such poor towns in Mexico," she said.

Hooper said she's proud of how De Queen is dealing with change.

"I guess De Queen has always been a go-with-the-flow kind of place," she said. "To be this podunk town in southwest Arkansas, we are really much further ahead than people might think in terms of cultural acceptance."

Superintendent Bill Blackwood agrees.

"Most people here are dealing with it and accepting it; there will always be a few who never will accept it," he said. "But we have really had very, very few problems in the schools and we think things will only improve with time."

Still, relations aren't perfect.

Just ask De Queen Mayor Chad Gallagher, who recently named a task force to study race relations. Or police Chief Richard McKinley, who says the influx of immigrants has been "a lot to deal with."

"It's a huge cultural change. I've been here my whole life and when it first started happening, it was kind of scary," McKinley said.

School district leaders blame anti-immigrant sentiment for the failure of a 1996 effort to raise taxes for schools.

"We think it was a message from some people in the community who had feelings about us providing services to non-citizens," said Judi Ponder, who heads the district's migrant education program.

Paulita and Vicinte Trujillo, who moved to De Queen from Guerrero, Mexico, seven years ago, say they have been discriminated against because they don't speak English.

Mrs. Trujillo said she dreads taking her children for checkups at the local health department because she does not feel welcome.

"It isn't the same as in our country because there are so many laws and things that are different," she said.

But complaints also come from the locals, particularly about the immigrants drinking beer in public and keeping livestock in city limits. "A 70-year-old woman who has lived in De Queen her whole life living next to a Hispanic family with a goat in their front yard," is one example Gallagher cites.

"The biggest challenge we face is ignorance within the Hispanic community of our way of life and, in the same way, we are ignorant of their way of life," the mayor said.

Response to the 2000 census could mean a lot.

Gallagher hopes a strong count will prompt the Immigration and Naturalization service to open an office in De Queen.

The school district hopes it will lead to bigger federal grants.

"The census is huge for us," he said.

Jesus and Maria Mendez came from Reynosa, Mexico, five years ago after their son opened the Reynosa Grocery here.

Their store offers fresh tortillas, Mexican candies, dried chilies and candles emblazoned with religious symbols.

"We have everything you would find at a store in Mexico," said Jesus Mendez, manning the checkout counter on a recent afternoon.

Mexican immigrant Robert Martinez was an example to newcomers like Mendez. He moved to De Queen 21 years ago and now owns the 500-acre Rancho Esperanza (Ranch of Hope) where he raises more than 650,000 chickens a year.

Martinez said the workers come with little education and no English, and likens the language barrier to a Berlin Wall through De Queen.

"It is not necessary to speak English to live here, but it is necessary to speak English to grow and to do better," he said.

Language forms an invisible wall at the Marcos Mexican Restaurant. Hispanic families gather on one side, black and white families on the other.

DEATH: Body count on the rise on the border

(From 1D)

Smugglers had told Gonzalez her journey would be a six-hour walk.

"It's just so incredibly tragic," said Rob Daniels, spokesman for Border Patrol in the Tucson sector. "This is far and away the worst summer we've had in terms of migrant deaths. Thankfully, we've been able to rescue almost 800 others."

"The smugglers are telling them if they are willing to go out a little farther from town, they have a better chance of getting around the Border Patrol," said Daniels. "They're telling them they're in for a couple hour's walk to the highway where they can catch a ride away from the border, when actually it could be days."

Several factors are driving the upswing in immigrant deaths, Border Patrol officials agree.

Immigrants are attempting to cross the border in Arizona and New Mexico, an expected reaction to the Border Patrol's ongoing containment operations in San Diego, El Paso and South Texas. The heightened efforts to control the Southwest border has involved aid from the Defense Department. U.S. Army engineers are installing miles of 5-foot steel pipe barriers near desert crossing points around Santa Teresa and Columbus, N.M.

Later this summer, the Army plans to erect a 2-mile-long, solid steel wall along the border in Douglas, Ariz. There is already some fencing in place at Douglas and other crossing points in Arizona.

Border Patrol agents now carry life-saving equipment, extra water and other supplies to help rescued immigrants, part of a Border Safety Initiative begun in 1998. A database of immigrant deaths and rescues was created, said spokeswoman Kice, and officials are tracking all rescues and fatalities so they can shift resources as needed.

To warn immigrants about the dangers, Border Patrol officials have sponsored advertising campaigns and brought Mexican and Central American journalists to tour the border. Mexican officials have mounted a similar campaign.

"The challenge we face is our public service announcements will fly in the face of what the smugglers are telling these migrants in their sales pitch," Kice said.

While the Border Patrol tracks immigrant deaths, the dismal task of making final arrangements is often left to local officials like Kenedy County Sheriff Rafael Cuellar Jr.

On Thursday afternoon Cuellar, his chief deputy, a mortician and a Catholic priest held a 20-minute service for two unidentified immigrants buried at county expense — $950 each.

The first casket contained the remains of the young woman who died of dehydration. Pinned to her shirt was a distinctive, red-enameled cross that had a dove with outstretched wings set between the words "Jesus is my Lord" in Spanish.

The second casket contained the remains of a young man found in January. Cuellar theorizes both became ill and were left behind by others in their group. "Usually they have a smuggler, a guide. And once you get sick, you're going to stay. They're going to abandon you," he said. "And if you don't have the sense to walk to the highway, you're going to die."

The two were buried in a small cemetery outside Sarita where 22 other unidentified or unclaimed bodies lie beneath a tangle of grass and mesquite sprouts, marked only by metal tags.

Because one of the two principal highways leaving the Rio Grande Valley cuts across Kenedy County, hundreds of immigrants walk through the ranchland to evade the permanent Border Patrol highway checkpoint south of Sarita.

The Rev. Peter Koziell of Corpus Christi said prayers for the two immigrants, burned incense and sprinkled holy water over the caskets.

"I'm a foreigner, and I can sympathize with all those who strive to come over," said Koziel, a Polish immigrant who has lived in the United States for 14 years. "I can imagine how their families might feel."

DEAR ABBY

Stepfather's past incest may be forgiven but not forgotten

by Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My mother is married for the second time. They were married when I was 14. A year later, she discovered he'd had an incestuous relationship with both of his daughters from the age of 5 until the oldest went to college and the second girl was 14 or 15. The relationship with the second daughter ended six months before he married my mom. Mother forgave him, and we all went to counseling.

Van Buren

I'm 29 now, with a 7-year-old daughter. We see them only on holidays. My mother doesn't understand why my daughter can't go to their home without me or my husband. My daughter is asking why she doesn't get to see Grandma or spend the night when Grandma asks. Should I tell her why? Is she old enough to understand? My mother has threatened to take me to court for "grandparent rights." What do I do? — SUSAN IN LUBBOCK, TEXAS

DEAR SUSAN: Your daughter is old enough to be told the difference between appropriate and inappropriate touching, and she should report to you any behavior that makes her "uncomfortable."

Under no circumstances should your little girl spend time at your mother's house without supervision. If your mother threatens to take you to court for "grandparent rights" again, tell her that you will discuss her husband's history of incestuous behavior with the judge. That should be the end of it.

DEAR ABBY: In March, my son was involved in a serious auto accident. "Ruth," my best friend for almost 30 years, went to visit him at my father's house. Dad later told me that while she was there, she badmouthed me, my husband and our other children. She also talked about our finances.

I feel so betrayed by Ruth that I'm not sure I'll ever want anything to do with her again. Abby, Ruth and I had been friends since high school. We shared our most intimate secrets over the years. I would never have discussed her personal business with my family, and I'm hurt that she disclosed mine.

She was the only person other than my husband that I trusted with my innermost feelings. Should I write her off or should I confront her? — BETRAYED IN INDIANA

DEAR BETRAYED: I hope your son has recovered from his automobile accident.

Before writing off such a long friendship, talk to Ruth and give her a chance to explain. If her reasons for revealing the secrets make sense, give her another chance. However, should you discover a malicious streak in your old friend, say farewell to her.

DEAR ABBY: My 67-year-old husband has taken up with a 45-year-old married woman. We live in a small town, and of course everybody knows about it.

As I see it, I have two options. The first is to maintain the status quo and pretend all is well for the benefit of friends, family, children and grandchildren.

The second option is to sue him for divorce and clean his clock. I have all the evidence I need — credit card receipts, motel records and eyewitnesses. Perhaps he won't be so darn "charming" without his money.

I could also sue her for "assault on a marriage," which I saw on TV the other evening.

Can you think of any other options? — TRYING TO DECIDE

DEAR TRYING: Offer your philandering husband the option of healing the marriage. If he refuses to end the affair and join you in marriage counseling, consult a lawyer about your other options.
