Community Fair Next Week-end

Austin—His program for industrial development of Texas is apparently ranked next to pensions in the mind of the gubernatorial nominee, W. Lee O'Daniel, judging from interviews he has given since his nomination. Fortunately, this subject is not, as O'Daniel seems to think, an unexplored field. A wealth of scientific data has been accumulated both in and out of Texas on the problem of industrialization of the State. Some of it has been compiled by experts who have spent years in such work. A great deal of money has been spent by private industrial corporations, by utility concerns, by Chambers of Commerce, the State Planning Board, and other interested groups. The best engineering talent available has been procured. The findings of all these groups have been substantially in agreement. They have not been optimistic in regard to a quick development of large industries in Texas.

HERE ARE BASIC FACTORS

Here are the requirements for the location of industry generally in any given place:

- An available nearby market for the products manufactured.
- Available raw materials.
- Available trained labor supply.
- Available fuel and power.

The greatest of these requirements by far, is the first. And that is the reason why manufacturers in the East find it more profitable to ship the vast resources of raw materials produced in Texas to Eastern and Northern manufacturing centers, and ship the manufactured products back to Texas to supply this market, more cheaply than they can manufacture here.

Texas, with its vast area, is thinly populated, compared to Northern and Eastern market areas, and it is surrounded by states similarly situated. Production facilities in this country have far outstripped distribution machinery. The nation today is equipped with existing factories which are tooled to produce nearly twice the requirements of the present distributing facilities. Economic conditions, of course, have affected the power of the nation to assimilate goods. But the fact remains that a single large shoe factory, for instance, (since O'Daniel has used shoes as an example), could produce in a few months all the shoes that Texas buy in a year. It could not market the shoes it must make during the rest of the year profitably in other territory, in competition with Eastern factories, which were located in those market areas.

Freight Structure Is Wall

The Southwestern freight rate structure, which has been built up by the Federal regulatory authorities over a period of years since the days when an arbitrary advantage was given to Southern and Western railroads on the theory that with light volume it cost more to operate them, forms an artificial barrier against industrial development in the Southwest.

There is, of course, a certain limited field in which it is profitable to manufacture near the source of raw materials. Notably, the processing of petroleum is the outstanding development along this line. The petroleum refining industry, using water transportation from Gulf ports to offset high rail freight rates, has become Texas' leading industrial development. It employs many thousands, at high average wage rates and is prosperous.

But the conditions fit only a few similarly specialized industries, and those who profit from development of these industries have not overlooked Texas. As a matter of fact, the great industrial organizations of the East, such as the DuPont enterprises, Mellon interests, General Motors, etc., have assembled over a period of years a library of data bearing upon possibilities of industrial development in Texas that far exceeds in volume and accuracy any figures available in Texas. Several of these organizations keeps industrial engineers on duty in Texas, studying constantly the development of industrial opportunities. They are not slow to take advantage of such opportunities, as they develop.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY

The best opportunity for industrial development in Texas lies in the local organization and financing of small industrial units, designed to supply local markets with certain classes of goods, mostly perishables, which are financed with Texas capital. Big Eastern capital is not interested in such enterprises, and Texas capital has always been reluctant to seek this field of investment, because it is hazardous.

OTHER ELEMENTS

There are a dozen other elements which enter into the picture. One is the traditional location and association of groups of allied industries. Nobody will build a wool scouring plant in Texas, for instance, because investigation shows that he couldn't sell his scoured wool. The wool scouring plants are located around Boston, where the output is sold to the woolen fabric manufacturers. For a hundred years, these industries have been allied. Interlocking ownership, family association, banking connections—all tend to keep the wool scouring industry centered around the New England mills that consume the scoured wool. A Texas plant would be regarded as an interloper, and the mills just wouldn't be interested in taking its output.

Cotton goods is marketed traditionally through brokers in the East. It goes into the market unmarked, unlabelled. The output of a dozen mills is mingled and sold in one lot. A Texas department store recently tried to buy some cotton goods from a Texas mill, to feature in a "Texas Made" sales event. Its managers found the mill couldn't supply it, because it had a long contract to sell all of its output to a New York broker. If it had sold a few thousand yards direct to the Texas store, it would have furnished material for some nice advertising for the store for a day or two. But the broker wouldn't have been interested in handling the mill's output after that—and the mill has to ship the goods it manufactures all the year, or shut down.

WHAT DALLAS DID

The greatest opportunity for business development in Texas lies in the attraction of sales offices, warehouse stocks, small branch houses, assembly plants and similar small units of Eastern concerns here. They will come if a profitable market is shown them. The Dallas Chamber of Commerce spent $500,000 over a three year period advertising in national magazines and newspapers to this group. They brought more than 800 new concerns to Dallas in three years, and are still getting returns from the investment, several years after the advertising fund was all spent.

Gov. Elect O'Daniel is likely to find the realization of a quick, sweeping industrial development of Texas more difficult to realize than his pensions for everybody program.

W. R. WATSON DIED IN CALIFORNIA SATURDAY

Funeral services for W. R. Watson were held Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock at the Methodist tabernacle with Rev. A. C. Hardin of Post, officiating. Arrangements were under direction of Kiker & Son.

Mr. Watson died Saturday at 6 P. M. in a government hospital in Los Angeles, California, only a short time after he had arrived there for treatment. Only week before last he went to the government hospital at Albuquerque, New Mexico, and from there he was transferred to California. He had been in ill health for several months.

During the world war Mr. Watson served for about two years in the United States army, a great part of this time in France and with the army of occupation in Germany.

Will R. Watson was born August 28, 1894, at Honey Grove, Fannin County, Texas. He came with his step-father, Mr. W. E. Wimberley, to Mitchell County in 1909 and lived here until he went to the army. After the war he returned to Loraine and in 1922 was married to Miss Hazel Lee to which union one daughter, Margaret Watson, was born.

Mrs. Watson and daughter and Mrs. Virgil Wimberley left Friday night for California after receiving word of his serious illness but arrived Sunday morning, several hours after he had died.

Mr. Watson is survived by his wife and daughter, one sister, Mrs. Joe McGee of New Boston, a half brother, Ezekiel Wimberley, and his step-father, W. E. Wimberley. His mother died in 1908.

'Little' Business

When President Roosevelt called a conference of small business men at Washington last winter, they responded by forming their own association under DeWitt M. Emery of Akron, Ohio, above. Two thousand delegates are attending the first annual convention which opened at Pittsburg, Tuesday, September 13.

CONGRESSMAN MAHON OPENS LUBBOCK OFFICE

Congressman George Mahon advised the Mitchell County News this week that he has established a temporary office in Lubbock for a period of probably two months. He plans to visit as nearly as possible every county in the District before returning to Washington but stated that he will spend considerable time in his Lubbock office in order that he may be more easily available to those from surrounding counties who wish to see him. All correspondence with the Congressman will be handled through the Lubbock office, located in the Federal Building, during this temporary period.

Mr. Mahon's secretaries, Lloyd Croslin and George Witten, accompanied him to Lubbock this week.

SCHOOL BAND MAKES HIGHLAND TRIP

The high school band accompanied by a few business men and others made a trip to Highland Monday night to advertise the fair next week and to explain plans of the cheese plant here. After a short program J. C. Hall invited the people of that community to attend the fair and told them of plans concerning the cheese plant.

Next Thursday, Friday and Saturday the Loraine Community Fair will be ready to greet visitors from all over this territory. Thursday, the first day, will be devoted principally to receiving and arranging exhibits. Judging will begin Friday and exhibits must be in place Thursday.

All kinds of farm and home exhibits are invited. The display room will be in the school bus station, formerly the Manly Garage.

The fair will be formerly opened Friday afternoon with a big parade through the business streets. The parade is to be led by the uniformed High School Band and will include floats of all description, horses, and various vehicles. K. L. Taylor is manager of the parade and invites everyone to enter something in the parade. The parade is to start at 3:30 Friday afternoon.

Entertainment features during the fair will include a concert by the high school band each night and an old fiddlers contest on Saturday night. The old fiddlers contest is to be one of the best features of entertainment and will attract old time fiddlers from far and near. According to W. R. Martin, head of the entertainment committee, a first prize of $500 and a second prize of $300 is to be awarded the winners in the old fiddlers contest. Each contestant must play two numbers. If you are a fiddler be sure to enter this contest.

Other entertainment features that will be on the ground both day and night will be rides and various forms of amusement for children and grown ups.

Fair officials are expecting more and better exhibits this year than last. Crops are better this year and a better show should be made. Farmers and others throughout the territory are urged to bring an exhibit.

This is a community fair gotten up to show what we produce in this section and the responsibility of the success of the fair rests upon the shoulders of every citizen. Do your part by bringing in an exhibit.

750 BALES COTTON GINNED SINCE WEDNESDAY

According to reports received from the gins here Wednesday 750 bales of cotton have been ginned in Loraine since last Wednesday. At four o'clock Wednesday of this week a total of 1311 bales had been ginned.

If the present good weather holds out the bulk of the crop will be out within a few weeks.

Down Memory Lane

Taken from the files of The Mitchell County News of September 11, 1931.

Farmers from all sections of the cotton states seem to favor a curtailment of cotton production. They, together with many other people, seem to think to grow less cotton is the only solution to the cotton price situation.

Farmers of the Loraine community up to 10 A. M. Thursday had ginned 128 bales of cotton. Reports from growers over this district are that production is cut considerably owing to the recent dry weather.

Mayor Alonzo Phillips issued a warning to water and sewer users to pay their bills to save the system from going to bond holders.

(Note—The citizens failed to take the mayor's advice and since that time the water and sewer system has become the property of the bond holders.)

MacMillan Expedition Turns Back Home

Here is the schooner Bowdoin on which Capt. and Mrs. Donald B. MacMillan and a crew of 10 student-seamen sailed late in June from Boothbay Harbor, Me. The Bowdoin was back at her harbor Saturday, September 10, after a 6,000 mile cruise to Baffin land, within 12 degrees of the North pole.

Weekly News Review
Britain Feared Capitulating
In Czech-German Argument
 By Joseph W. LaBine

Foreign

At his office in Fleet street, Publisher Geoffrey Dawson decided that wisdom was the better part of valor. Next morning his London Times put in black and white what England's conservative Cliveden set has thought all along: That Britain had best let Adolf Hitler cede Czechoslovakia's Sudeten territory if no other settlement would satisfy him.

Nor did Der Fuehrer appear content with anything less. While nervous France protested such an idea and rushed troops into her amazing Maginot line like gophers rush to their holes, all eyes converged not on London or Prague, but on Nuremberg where the Nazi party was holding its annual congress and clamor.

There, Chancellor Hitler found the spotlight's rays pleasantly warm. In the first of his eight speeches he made clear Germany's determination to be supreme in southeast Europe. To Czechoslovakia these were frightening words. Immediately Sudeten Leader Konrad Henlein was handed the "fourth and final" list of concessions which he rushed unopened to Nuremberg. Same evening Fuehrers Hitler and Henlein opened them, found satisfaction for every demand except (1) establishment of a one-unit government for Sudeten and (2) freedom for practice of Nazi ideology.

Prague's concessions might have been sufficient a week earlier, but shrewd Adolf Hitler now saw a chance to take the whole hog. Britain, anxious to avoid war at all cost, had capitulated, unofficially admitting she was willing to sell Czechoslovakia down the river. And by midnight another unexpected joy had developed, so important that Konrad Henlein was sent scurrying back home with orders to hold out for complete surrender.

At Maehrisch-Ostau, in Sudeten territory, Czech mounted policemen had horsewhipped a noisy crowd, striking a Sudeten legislator on the shoulders. While apologetic Prague hastened its investigation, the incident offered Konrad Henlein a new chance to play the role of martyr.

Next day, with all odds in his favor, Der Fuehrer could afford to assure the world of his peaceful intentions. While Nuremberg's show continued, he received Germany's foreign diplomatic corps, including France's Andre Francois-Poncet who suggested: "Democracies are not exactly lauded at the Nuremberg congress, but their emissaries usually feel welcome." Answered expansive Adolf Hitler: "I hope to continue to make the ambassadors feel welcome, and I also hope that during my regime no mother will have cause for wet eyes on account of any action of mine."

Most foreign envoys left after the reception, but not Britain's Sir Neville Henderson. He stuck around like a guest who won't go home, trying to corner either Der Fuehrer or Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop. If he succeeded, Germany would learn that Geoffrey Dawson was only fooling, that Britain still meant business.

Aviation

U. S. commercial airlines could not operate without government mail subsidy, but since 1934 even that assistance has been insufficient to prevent huge deficits. Part of the infant industry's trouble has been of its own making, as when monopolistic practices caused the U. S. army's painful experience with air mail five years ago. Throughout its brief history, aviation has contended with improper and vacillating government supervision. Not until last winter did congress create a civil aeronautics authority, which was organized last month under Edward J. Noble.

Last week, CAA gave a party. To Chicago they invited representatives of 25 commercial lines for a "get acquainted" meeting that ended in a lecture. Led by Air Transport association's Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, aviation plumped for immediate stop-gap relief in the form of increased air mail subsidies. Also outlined was a five-point industrial program which requires CAA's moral and financial aid.

All this was well enough, but if airlines expected CAA to be a financial angel, they had another guess coming. Up stepped Member Harlee Branch to dispel, once and for all, any mistaken ideas. Said he: "It seems proper to remind . . . carriers that while the authority desires that they shall receive fair compensation, no line should assume that the authority is going to dish out public moneys in any reckless or ill considered fashion. No one should be deluded with the idea that all an air line has to do . . . is convince the authority it has succeeded in operating at a deficit. There will be no premiums on bad management."

War

North of the Yangtze river, two Japanese armies captured three Chinese positions in their drive on Hankow. South of the Yangtze there was a different story, for defenders pierced Jap lines six miles south-east of Juichang and forced the invaders to retreat, leaving 300 dead. Fresh from Tokyo came 100,000 troops, determined to intensify the campaign on all fronts until Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's government is crushed.

On the Ebro front, Generalissimo Francisco Franco's African Moors swept through a gap in the loyalist Cobera line, next day capturing mountain heights dominating the river valley.

Domestic

In Ohio, 110,000 aged people receive federal-state assistance, which costs the U. S. social security board approximately $1,275,000 per month. In August when he ran for Democratic renomination, Ohio's Gov. Martin L. Davey pointed with pride at his record. One accomplishment: Establishment of old age assistance, which has also been established in 47 other states.

Three days before the primary, Social Security's Director Frank Bane charged Governor Davey with using old age assistance to get votes. Though the governor was defeated, that did not stop Social Security from sending out investigators who last week reported to Chairman Arthur J. Altmeyer.

At a hearing from which Martin Davey pointedly absented himself, Social Security claimed that (1) requests for old-age aid addressed directly to Governor Davey received preferential treatment; (2) some pensioners were told it would be "a good idea" to vote for Governor Davey; (3) political and personal influence replaced the merit system in appointment of Ohio's old age personnel.

Next day, Chairman Altmeyer's threat to cut off federal pension grants brought a sharp retort as Martin Davey answered a "dirty politics" charge with a dash of the same medicine: "Frankly, I do not believe you dare deprive these (Ohio's) aged citizens of one-half their scant living to support your political maneuver . . . This was surprisingly dirty politics for one who pretends to be as righteous as yourself."

Before he ever became President, Franklin Roosevelt's pet public utilities idea was a four-point program including (1) Grand Coulee for the Northwest; (2) Boulder for the Southwest; (3) TVA for the Southeast; (4) St. Lawrence waterway for the Northeast. Boulder dam had already been built, and since coming to the White House Franklin Roosevelt has started Grand Coulee, expanded TVA. Only the St. Lawrence waterway is unstarted, nor will it start until Ontario's stubborn Premier Mitchell Hepburn gives his blessing, not forthcoming until Canada's railroad situation improves.

Without mentioning St. Lawrence, the President managed last week to focus attention on it. At Hyde Park he read reports by the war department and federal power commission on power needs. Then he decided an electricity shortage in case of war constitutes "a serious threat to national security."

Appointed at once was a special committee for further study, to find and recommend definite ways and means of meeting this problem. Best bet was that the St. Lawrence plan would be the "ways and means."

SYNOPSIS

Young Rex Hale calls on Casper Kneeland, friend of his father, in New York, and finds him proudly successful but strangely preoccupied. He tells Hale of his wife's death while insane, invites him for the summer to Halcyon Camp, his home on Long Island, and promises him he will be "useful" as his secretary there. Hale is joined at lunch by Fred Ainsworth, an unpopular college mate, also at Halcyon, who leaves him with a premonition of unpleasant mystery. He is met at the train by Mrs. Wilbur Nash, whom he questions about the message, and experiences a disturbing premonition.

"Is Miss Kneeland at home? My name is Hale," he said.

The maid responded promptly to the smile.

"Yes, sir. Miss Kneeland is expecting you. If you will leave your luggage here in the hall Joe will take it up to your room. Miss Kneeland is in the living-room."

Hale dropped the luggage with a sigh of relief, hung his hat on a rack, and followed his guide. In the past ten minutes he had been repenting some of those purchases of yesterday. Probably he wouldn't need any of them here, except knickerbockers and a bathing suit. But the atmosphere of the house was unexpectedly luxurious. The living-room into which he was ushered was full of charm and beauty. There were admirable pieces of furniture in it, good pictures, and fine old rugs. There was a small log fire in a huge grate. Two women sat before the little blaze. Hale took them both in, while one of them rose and came to meet him.

She was a plump person, probably in her fifties, with pompadoured white hair, pink cheeks, and pale blue eyes. She had a pleasant welcoming smile and an unexpectedly firm grasp as she shook hands with him.

"You had to walk," she said regretfully. "I'm so sorry. I can't understand why Casper—"

"Only as far as the clearing," Hale explained as he smiled down at her. "One of your neighbors, Mrs. Wilbur Nash, gave me a lift."

"Trust Helen Nash for that," Miss Hosanna said appreciatively. "Come and meet Mrs. Spencer Forbes. You must be surprised to find it so cool here."

Mrs. Spencer Forbes had been sitting with her gaze on the fire. She looked up and nodded as they came toward her.

"How do you do, Mr. Hale?" she asked languidly. Languor seemed to be her note. It contrasted as sharply with Miss Hosanna's brisk New Englandism as her tall very thin figure did with Miss Hosanna's plumpness. "It's too late for tea," she went on, as Hale bowed before her. "But we might give this young man a few cocktails and a sandwich. I'll have some cocktails, too, Hosanna. Side-cars, I think, if Mr. Hale likes them. But do remind Banks not to put in too much lemon juice."

Miss Hosanna summoned her butler and ordered the cocktails and sandwiches. Now she sat with her pale eyes on her friend's face. Her expression was expectant, almost rapt. Later, Hale learned that to Miss Hosanna Mrs. Spencer Forbes' conversation was as the music of the morning stars singing together.

"It's ten years since I was in Spain," Mrs. Spencer Forbes said dreamily on learning that Rex had just returned from there. "I'm not optimistic enough to think it has changed."

"Every train still starts about dawn," Hale admitted.

"And stops at Bobadilla at high noon and lets its passengers stew for two hours on the broiling station platform. I know. I've done it."

Banks brought in the cocktails. He was, Hale learned, a man of fifty who had been with the Kneelands for 15 years. He was soft-voiced, soft-footed, deferential, and sorely tried by Miss Hosanna, with whose high housekeeping standards he was not always in sympathy. Mrs. Spencer Forbes straightened with the first real interest she had shown.

"Not too much acid this time, Banks?" she asked alertly.

"I hope not, Madam." Banks' glance slid past her face and fastened on Hale. Hale took a cocktail and a sandwich from the tray the man offered him. Miss Hosanna had waved it from her with the simple but eloquent word "Poison!" Mrs. Spencer Forbes, who had already drunk one cocktail, apparently in one gulp, took another from the tray Banks had thoughtfully left on a low table beside her. Her outlook on life brightened.

Cocktails over, both ladies started toward the door. Hale went with them.

"I'm going upstairs, so I'll show you to your room," Miss Hosanna said with her comfortable matter-of-factness. "You have half an hour to dress for dinner."

They went along the central hall and up a wide staircase at the left of the front entrance.

"Who is he?" Mrs. Spencer Forbes asked Hosanna in a piercing whisper. She added before her slower friend could answer, "Anyway, he's a personable youth, and he seems to be alive. That will be a pleasant change at Halcyon Camp. Has anyone warned you, Mr. Hale, that you are visiting Long Island's most remote and least interesting mausoleum?"

"I don't think you ought to say such things," Miss Hosanna protested affectionately. She gave Hale a glance that directed his attention to the charm of her friend.

"We're all dead except Joan," Mrs. Spencer Forbes said calmly, "but most of us don't know it. Joan is beginning to look livid and I give her about three months more. A revival, Mr. Hale. This is my chaste bowler."

She nodded and vanished through an open door in the upper hall at

On the blue and orange silk cover of his bed, near the foot, a wad of paper lay. It was crushed and soiled and it looked sadly out of place. Strange that he had not seen it before, or that Miss Hosanna, evidently a typical New England housekeeper, had not observed it during her presence in the room. He went to the bed, picked up and unfolded the grimy sheet with some reluctance, and read its penciled message. This was printed. Its characters straggled unevenly down the page, as if they were the first effort of a child. It read:

THIS PLEASE IS DANJERUS. GET OUT QUICK.

Hale frowned, then grinned. He tore the paper into small pieces and dropped them into the waste-paper basket beside the desk. His next

"Old acquaintances is what I really said, Miss Hosanna," Ainsworth purred as he lounged forward to shake hands. "We were at Ithaca together, but Hale never liked me."

"Another bond between Mr. Hale and myself," Mrs. Spencer Forbes said sweetly. "I've felt strangely drawn to him from the first. You needn't tell us any of Mr. Ainsworth's bad habits at college, Mr. Hale. We can easily imagine them."

"Sorry to disappoint you, but he hadn't any," Hale testified cheerfully. "He was an exemplary young man in every way, and always knew his lessons."

Hale was increasingly uncomfortable. What an extraordinary lot these people were, with their deliberate rudeness.

"If you're hinting that I was a grind I'll admit it," Ainsworth said sharply. "I was there to work, and I worked. I was no popular idol, like Hale here." He smiled unpleasantly. In his evening clothes he looked more than ever like a sleek black cat. "You must have missed all that adulation, when you left Ithaca and got into real life," he added unpleasantly.

Hale wanted to kick him. The fellow was intolerable. He turned away from him and smiled at Joan Kneeland, with a sudden lift of the heart. She was a charming thing, a pleasure to the eye. Her small bobbed head was beautifully shaped. She had the blackest hair he had ever seen. It fitted her head like a black satin cap. Her eyes were deeply and vividly blue. It was not until he saw her smile, however, that he gave himself wholly to her spell. Her smile was enchanting. It was also fleeting. It disappeared almost as quickly as it had come. Hale felt as if he had watched the door of a house swing open, had caught a glimpse of light and warmth inside, and had seen the door close again.

Joan had said a few words to Craig when they sat down. She was now listening to what seemed an overlong story of some medical experience of his in Paris.

"You psychiatrists have your work on your mind all the time," Ainsworth remarked. "Is it true that most doctors and workers associated with the insane, eventually go off their heads themselves? I've heard that theory a dozen times."

"Your application of it is too general," Craig said coldly. "Most doctors and other workers don't do anything of the kind. A few do. They're usually the neurotically inclined, and those very susceptible to suggestion. I remember . . ."

"Oh, come now, Craig, don't get started on your cases again!" Young Kneeland spoke so irritably that Craig's eyebrows rose. "Sorry," Kneeland jerked out, "but that stuff is depressing to most of us."

"I love it!" Ainsworth's tone was purring again. He was plainly enjoying his dinner, which was excellent. He appeared to be at peace with the world.

Joan raised her blue eyes and looked at the speaker. It was a long look and a strange one. Ainsworth met it and smiled again.

the left of the staircase. Miss Hosanna led the guest to a door on the opposite side of the hall.

"Don't pay any attention to what Ruth says," she advised Hale as she opened it. "Everything that comes into her head pops out through her mouth. She has always been like that, even when we were girls at school. She loves to shock people. It's harder now than it used to be," she added comfortably. "Almost everybody seems to be trying to shock everybody else. The competition stimulates Ruth and the things she and young Mr. Ainsworth say to each other . . ."

She left the sentence unfinished, evidently a habit of hers. Hale hardly heard her. He was gazing with pleasure and a dawning sense of proprietorship around the big comfortable room they had entered. It had three windows. Two looked over the sea. The third, at the rear, faced west. There was a long divan between them. There was a fireplace for cool days; and a brass wood-box full of logs stood near it. There were easy-chairs; there was a flat-top writing table with many drawers.

"Casper says you're going to be with us all summer, so try to feel at home," she invited. "That door leads to a closet as large as a small room. The door near the side window leads to your bathroom. I will say for Cass that he put in enough bathrooms when he built his house. He wasn't as foresighted about closets. It takes a woman to think of them, but I wasn't consulted. I think Banks has unpacked for you," she went on. "He usually unpacks and puts the cases away."

She crossed to a highboy and pulled open a drawer. "Yes, here are all your ties and socks and handkerchiefs," she went on. "How bright and cheerful they are!"

"That's the colorful influence of Spain," Hale laughed. He felt self-conscious. He hoped Miss Hosanna would not go through the other drawers. She didn't, but she opened the closet door. It revealed suits on hangers and shoes on pegs. It also revealed his new dressing-gown, which caught the last of the sun's rays as they entered the west window.

"You do like beautiful colors," she said, regarding it approvingly. "So do I. I hope you won't find it dull here," she added in a different tone. "Try to like your room."

"It's the ideal guest room," Hale said warmly.

"I'm glad you think so. Now I'll leave you to get dressed. You'll hear the gong at half past seven."

He followed her to the door, observing again her erect shoulders, her proudly held white head, and her surprisingly light, quick step. He opened the door for her and slowly closed it after her. Then for a long moment he stood very still, hands in his trousers' pockets and eyes on the room's thick blue and orange rug, trying to analyze his impressions. Suddenly he stopped and stared.

impulse was to hasten into the bathroom and wash his hands after handling that note. He followed it. The note, of course, was someone's idea of a practical joke. Or, on second thoughts, it may have been some servant's revolt against the additional work made by an extra guest. It may have been hurled through the open window, or through the transom above his door, or brought into his room and dropped on his bed. In any case it was plainly not worth another instant of thought. Nevertheless, his mind touched it as he dressed.

"QUIK." "DANJERUS." Those words upheld the spelling standards of Joe the porter, whom Hale had not yet had an opportunity to tip. He must repair that oversight. He must placate Joe. With that resolution the little matter dropped from his mind. He whistled a Spanish tango as he went on with his toilet.

CHAPTER II

They were all in the living-room, except Casper Kneeland, when Hale went downstairs in response to the summons of the gong. He entered a trifle self-consciously, abashed by the gaze of so many strangers. Instinctively he made for Miss Hosanna and Mrs. Spencer Forbes. They now seemed to him almost like old friends. He skirted Joan on the way and took her in with a quick side glance. Miss Hosanna had risen and was doing the honors.

"My niece," he heard her say. "Doctor Craig, my nephew, Herbert. Mr. Ainsworth says you and he are old friends."

Discovery of Radium Revealed That Atom Was Shattered With Explosive Violence

The discovery of radium and the phenomenon of radio-activity turned the course of history for Twentieth century physics, writes John A. Maloney in the Scientific American. With its discovery came the knowledge that the atoms of certain heavy elements were not permanently stable but broke up with explosive violence. The inner structure of the atom, which had defied the mind of man since the days of the atomists in ancient Greece, the discovery of isotopic elements—elements identical in their physical and chemical makeup but differing in their atomic weights—these, and many other secrets of matter were solved by the discovery of radium.

Men were excited about the possibilities of this new substance. The energy that it gave off was staggering to the imagination. It was natural that the question should arise as to how this energy could be harnessed and put to work. Flannery and the others thrilled with the possibilities. Were not such eminent physicists as Sir Ernest Rutherford writing essays on harnessing the energy of radium and its future as a source of power?

All of these men realized that what was needed was a catalyst that would speed up the rate of disintegration of radium so that, instead of dissipating half of its energy in 1,600 years, its power could be drawn off to turn a dynamo or push a piston in an instant. It may appear now that they were anticipating and were far ahead of their times.

The Duke of Sussex

George IV of England had no sons. The sixth son of George III was August Frederick, duke of Sussex, who was born in 1773. The prince was married in Rome in 1793 to Lady Augusta (died 1830), daughter of John Murray, fourth earl of Dunmore. The ceremony was repeated in London and two children were born, but under the Royal Marriage act of 1772 the Court of Arches declared the union illegal. The children took the name of d'Este. The second wife of the duke of Sussex was Cecilia, widow of Sir George Buggin. She was created duchess of Inverness in 1840. The duke of Sussex died at Kensington palace on April 21, 1842.

JONATHAN: COURAGEOUS FRIENDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—1 Samuel 20:1-17. GOLDEN TEXT—A friend loveth at all times.—Proverbs 17:17. PRIMARY TOPIC—Noble Prince Jonathan. JUNIOR TOPIC—Noble Prince Jonathan. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Adventure of Friendship. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Cost of Being a Friend.

Without question, the most precious possession any man or woman has (apart from his fellowship with God if he is a Christian, and the love of his own family) is friendship. It is the flower that blooms by the side of the rugged pathway of life. Like many flowers, some friendships need to be cultivated and encouraged.

It has been said that the love of a woman for another woman is a beautiful thing, the love of a man for a woman an even more devoted and precious thing, but that the bond of love between man and man surpasses all in its strength and glory. Some might question such a statement, and yet it is true that between man and man there is the possibility of the highest type of friendship. David and Jonathan stand at the head of an inspiring list of men who loved each other with their whole souls.

The lesson for today calls for a careful reading of the incidents in the life of Jonathan and David recorded in I Samuel, chapters 14, 18, 19, and 20, as well as the first chapter of II Samuel. It is a story which will richly reward a careful reading. Considering the printed portion in the light of this background we note six things that characterized this great friendship.

I. Cultivated (v. 4). Friendships must be "kept in repair." Foolish and almost wicked is that man who by boorishly offending his fellowmen, or by neglecting the thoughtful words and acts that cultivate friendship, drives men away from him. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly" (Prov. 18:24). Consider the admonition of our Lord in Luke 16:8, 9, where he urges the righteous use of even our worldly possessions to cultivate eternal friendships. Read what Jonathan did in I Sam. 18:3-5, only one of his many loving and thoughtful acts.

II. Courteous (v. 8). David asked that Jonathan deal kindly with him, and the entire story reveals that he did just that, always. More friendships are wrecked on the rocks of little discourtesies than in almost any other way.

We live in an age which affects an outward veneer of culture but which is at heart often thoughtless and unkind. Let Christian men and women be courteous. They should be as followers of the gentle Jesus, and it will bring them countless friends.

III. Candid (v. 9). Friendships that last must be built on absolute candor, not the kind that delights in telling an unpleasant truth, but one which speaks the truth in love. Jonathan told David the truth.

IV. Courageous (vv. 12, 13). Jonathan was such a faithful son that when the time of parting came he stayed with his wicked father rather than go with David, whom he loved. But he was true to David even though he knew it would incur the wrath of his father if that friendship became known.

Things that cost us nothing are usually "worth it." Real friendship calls for sacrifice, standing by in the night hours, sharing burdens, loyal even though others may condemn us for it.

V. Covenant Keeping (vv. 16, 17). Covenants entered into by solemn treaties in our time are soon discarded as "scraps of paper." People make promises to one another that they never intend to fulfill. Jonathan and David made a covenant and kept it. True friends do not violate their loving agreements.

This matter of trickery and falsehood in life and business is one that deeply troubles the writer of these notes. He sees unmistakable evidence that this perverse spirit has come into the precincts of the church itself. We should have a revival of honesty in office, home, state, and church.

VI. Complete (v. 17). "He loved him as he loved his own soul"—such a friend was Jonathan. His devotion to David had no qualifying "strings" on it. He was not seeking something for himself. The closest he came to that was to bring his children into the covenant with David (v. 15), and who could question the propriety of such devotion between true friends? He saw that David was to supplant Saul as king, and in the face of his own interest as Saul's son, he put David forward.

Friendship is akin to our relationship to God in that it calls for a complete giving of ourselves, if we are to be true friends. This does not mean that individuality is lost, or special interests and abilities destroyed, but it does mean a whole-souled desire for our friend's welfare, and a complete devotion of our all to his good.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Not so much to report this time. Some of our people were tired, others sleepy, some had just gotten home from a trip. Anyway they did not attend Sunday school and preaching and we were just a little off.

Our church was represented at the Mitchell-Seurry Baptist Association that met with the church at Union, 6 miles west of Snyder, by the pastor and wife, Everett Henderson and wife, Mrs. R. E. Bennett and Walter Nix. The association was well attended by the local people and many visitors, some from Dallas, Abilene and Brownwood.

Well, we will be lonesome this Sunday. Some of our best young people are leaving for school this week. We will miss them but are glad they can go to school.

The W. M. U. of the church is meeting at the church Monday to organize their Circles. We hope many of the ladies are present.

The pastor and wife were in Big Springs Tuesday to attend a district Board meeting.

Foes in Maine Election

"As Maine goes, so goes the nation." That ancient political belief was tested again Monday, September 12 when the incumbent Gov. Louis O. Barrows, Republican, left, faced Former Gov.

Louis J. Brahn, Democrat, right. All other states will hold general elections November 8. Early returns showed the Republican governor to be leading his opponent.

Do It The Easy Way

Texas Breeder-Feeder Association By T. C. Richardson, Secretary

The fall litter of pigs is the second semi-annual dividend the sow pays if she is well cared for and bred on time. By the time the pigs are weaned they will weigh more than the average two-year old sow, which amounts to the sow doubling her own weight in potential pork every six months. It is becoming common for litters to weigh a ton at six months of age, and two ton-litters a year are equivalent to multiplying the sow's weight 12 to 15 times.

Of course this does not always happen under even the best management—in fact it never "happens" at all. It is the result of a definite purpose which is achieved only by the exercise of good judgement, close attention and care.

Generally speaking a fall litter is as good in the Southwest as a spring litter, requires little more attention after the critical farrowing period is over and the pigs begin to eat, than does a litter farrowed in the spring, if—and this is a pretty big "if"—green pastures, water, and dry sleeping quarters are provided.

Exercise and sunlight are as essential as food to the health of pigs, and our open winters permit hogs to live a more natural life than in the North, where expensive houses with glass windows still leave much to be desired in the way of healthful conditions. We are so accustomed to raising hogs out of doors that we scarcely appreciate the great advantages the Southwest offers over the laborious and expensive methods which the northern swine breeder cannot escape.

At this time of year the pastures and fields of the Southwest are still green, and there are gleanings of grain which pigs will save while getting sunlight and exercise. Many a corn or grain sorghum field, pea, peanut, or sweet potato patch has enough waste to make as much pork as the family will need, and which the pigs will thankfully work.

When the waste grain has been cleaned up and pastures are still green, grain can be supplied in a self-feeder, enclosed in a creep to keep the sow out. Grain will go father while the pigs are suckling than at any other time in their lives, and it is poor economy to stiait them. A self-feeder large enough for an ordinary litter can be built with very little expense of lumber and time, and filling it once or twice a week does away with the double-daily chore of hand feeding. When the elements of a good ration are always accessible to hogs they take care of their needs instead of being "wasteful," as people are sometimes inclined to think, the self-feeder method is better than the owner can, and more economical of feed (as well as time) than doling feed out by hand.

Protein supplements and mineral mixtures are not always necessary when hogs are on good pastures, but it is worth while to let the hogs decide. Put the protein supplement in the self-feeder (in a separate compartment from the grain) and if the hogs don't need it they won't eat it. Mineral mixture is so cheap and easy to prepare there can be no good reason for withholding it, and again, if the animals are getting plenty of minerals in pastures that in the box will last indefinitely.

Water should be accessible at all times. The hog's stomach is small, and he cannot "tank up" once or twice a day, and still do his best in digesting his feed.

The pasture and self-feeder method of producing pork is best and most economical from every standpoint. As "Hico" Endaly says in his trench silo talks, "Do it the easy way and you'll like it."

How foul to the senses the old-fashioned hog-pen When hars recollection recalls it to view;

Its fly-swarming slop-trough, its muddy loblolly— The cob-cluttered hog-pen which my boyhood once knew.

Old-Age Pension Schemes Figure In Primaries in Several States

Lead to Success of Senator Pepper in Florida and Defeat Of McAdoo in California; Delude Aged and Infirm Voters; Fallacy of Plans Shown.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART
WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — A good many Easterners had nearly forgotten about Dr. Francis Townsend and his $200-a-month pension plan until lately they were suddenly awakened by the far South and the far West. Sen. Claude Pepper won a Democratic nomination to the senate in Florida largely because of espousal of the Townsend plan and just recently Sen. William G. McAdoo had his public career abruptly terminated because Sheridan Downey, his opponent for the Democratic senatorial nomination in California, proposed and promised some fantastic scheme of paying $30 every Thursday to persons over 50 years of age.

In addition to these results, there have been 12 or 15 candidates for the nomination to the house of representatives who have won in primaries by saying the Townsend plan or the $30-every-Thursday or some other impossible and illogical and unsound pension plan would be put through congress. I cannot describe them all; they are obviously variations of the Townsend plan, and none of them will work any more than the Townsend bubble will work, and each has been used to delude aged and infirm voters whose ballots were needed to swing an election.

It is tragic that such things have happened, and are happening today. The fact cannot be ignored, however, because the condition is with us. The one thing to do, then, I believe, is to attempt to disillusion those folks who have swallowed the slick words of those campaigners or those racketeers who are preying upon the faith of folks who, through no fault of their own, do not have access to information that shows these schemes to be rainbows. And, as far as history records, nobody on earth ever has found the end of the rainbow where the pot of gold is reputed to be.

I am not concerned about the public career of Mr. McAdoo who has been in public service off and on since 1913. He never impressed me as being any great shakes of a statesman. As secretary of the treasury, he did the job probably about as well as the average political appointee. I never have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Downey. So I can't comment. Senator Pepper's senate record is a great deal like many another senator's record, and probably will continue to be just so-so. In other words, here were two average senators—one winning with the aid of the promises about the Townsend plan and the other losing because he stayed away from such promises, although he was thrice blessed by the President of the United States. That situation, along with some letters accusing me of giving the Townsend plan a "silent treatment" in these columns, seems to warrant a new analysis of the conditions that now confront the country.

It Appears Townsendism Is Not Dead After All

As I said there is evidence that Townsendism is not dead at all. It has formed the basis of a dozen new panaceas, of which the $30-every-Thursday is but an example. It happened that this scheme was proposed in California which, particularly in its southern sections, has a vast population of aged people who have gone there to enjoy the famous climate and have the health that it gives them. Old people are militantly behind these schemes. That is one of the reasons why Mr. Downey was able to boast more than a million signatures to the petition that made the question an issue in California. And Florida, too, with a fine winter climate, is a fertile field for the racketeers who promote such ridiculous programs. It is a harsh thing to blame the strength of these movements, all of which crop up during depression times, upon elderly people. It is nevertheless the cold fact that they are the type among whom such schemes are promoted, and because they have votes, the candidate for office stoops to the level of adding further to hopes that never can be fulfilled in that manner.

To show how silly the scheme of $30-every-Thursday is as a campaign issue for Mr. Downey—just as an example—he is a candidate for the United States senate. The pension dream he has advocated is planned as part of the welfare program of the state of California. How Mr. Downey can do anything about it as a member of the United States senate, I can not understand, and I seriously doubt that Mr. Downey can explain it.

Nor will the plan work if made into law without bankrupting the state of California. I doubt that it will work anyway, but assuming that it may work, the state will be assuming a burden that will cost it so much money that the California books will be so far in the red as to cause them to appear spotted with blood. This idea of placing "stamps" on each warrant each week so that an actual $1.04 has been affixed by cash payment in a year will stop the transfer of them very shortly. Few storekeepers, for example, will accept them beyond the necessities of their tax payments to the state of California; it is certain also that those who continue to accept them would not pay the face value, and the possessor would be forced into paying higher prices for the things that he buys. That is, the possessor would be buying 50 cents worth of sugar and a dollar warrant for it. All of this is the result of a lack of confidence among the people in any form of exchange except the currency that is backed and guaranteed by the United States, as has been shown so many times before.

Downey Plan Would Make Trouble for New Dealers

Then, I believe I foresee some other trouble respecting such warrants as Mr. Downey's scheme proposes; not that I think his plan is worse than any others but it serves as an illustration. It is proposed that the possessor put a two-cent state stamp on the warrant for each week in his possession, or 52 such stamps in a year. Well, I imagine that the warrants would be in the hands of many persons who had no cash at all—not a cent. Immediately, there would be a cry go up to have the state supply the stamps free, and it is quite certain that there would be some politicians dis-honorable enough to campaign for office on that issue.

Now, assume that Mr. Downey comes to the senate; assume that he is elected over his Republican opponent in November. I seem to see some added trouble for President Roosevelt and his New Deal friends who have been promising too many things and too much of them. Of course, many persons believe that Mr. Roosevelt's methods to date have encouraged all kinds of quackeries because he has talked at length of humanitarianism. He has aroused the minds of elderly persons who are suffering under conditions not of their own making. He has likewise aroused a lot of flabby brained individuals among the younger people who live on illusions. It is made to appear that congressional leaders, seeking to follow presidential policies, are going to be confronted with frequent bulges for national pensions of a kind that no nation can bear.

The number and type of these panaceas ebbs and flows with the economic tide. When business is good and there is plenty of work, when storekeepers are able to sell and people are able to buy, we hear little or nothing of the dream-world children of the Townsends and the Downeys and the others. When there are "hard times" and there are thousands upon thousands without work and food and clothes, those suffering minds become easy prey to the silver tongue.

Pursuing the thought a bit further, it then becomes possible for a movement which demands not $30 every Thursday for persons over 50, but one demanding $40 or $50 every Friday or $60 every Saturday. The amounts can be pushed up and up and the fervor of the suffering under this illusion grows greater and greater. And always, such movements provide the breeding ground for other racketeers who want to promote dissension and dissatisfaction. Always, too, there will be political champions for the "cause" whatever it may be, because there is something, some halo, about public office that will lead men into the strangest views.

President Cannot Dodge Some of Responsibility

Mr. Roosevelt has said with emphasis several times that none of these things will work. He believes they should not be propagated and spread, because he recognizes how easily miserable humanity can be lead off at a tangent. It is a type of hysteria, an emotion. The President, however, must not dodge responsibility for a part of it. As I said above, his methods have been conducive to hysteria of several kinds. These panaceas that threaten again to cause grief for his administration are but an outgrowth of the numerous plans that have been given birth by various persons in official position. True, they have been fed by the dregs of hard times, but they had their encouragement first from illogical phases of the New Deal.

Truer words were never spoken than President Roosevelt uttered at Pittsburgh, Pa., in his 1932 campaign when he said: "Any government, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns, but you and I know that a continuation of the habit means the poor house." Adoption of any of the pension schemes, whatever their variation from the Townsend plan may be, means the poor house because there can not be enough taxes levied or collected to meet the need.

Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feet tired, nervous, all worn out.
Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.
The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. In fact, Dr. Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.
