Men with a mission

HBF Corporation announced plans Tuesday for the development of Mision Dorado, a totally planned community located between Midland Regional Airport and Odessa, north of U.S. Highway 80.

Mission Country Club, parts of which have been under construction since November 1981, will be the focal point for the new community. The 36-hole golf course features eight lakes, two of which are connected by a 12-foot waterfall.

Mision Estates, the residential part of the vast project, will eventually have 4,000 living units capable of housing about 10,000 residents, according to HBF president Larry Bell.

Long-range plans call for construction of shopping and office facilities, and areas for service businesses and entertainment. Land has been set aside for future schools, churches, and police and fire sub-stations, as the community's population grows.

The golf course, country club and residential portion of the community are under development by Mission Joint Venture, a joint venture between HBF and Alamo Bancorp, one of Odessa's largest private trust companies.

Mision Dorado and Mission Country Club represent an initial financial commitment of $20 million. It is expected to take nearly seven years to complete the residential construction and up to 10 years total development time for the business and commercial aspects of the project, Bell said.

Club memberships were to go on sale beginning May 19.

The project covers 10,000 acres from the Faudree Ranch, which straddles the Midland-Ector County line. HBF has an application pending to annex 2,600 acres into the corporate limits of Odessa. That city is providing sewer and water hook-ups for the project.

'Gap looks big' between Britain and Argentina

By The Associated Press

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said today Argentina's response to the latest Falkland Islands peace proposal "doesn't look very encouraging," and British newspapers reported she has already decided to invade the islands.

Mrs. Thatcher said in a British Broadcasting Corp. interview her government had not yet seen the full text of Argentina's response, but that "the gap looks big" between London and Buenos Aires positions.

Argentina's chief negotiator at the United Nations, Deputy Foreign Minister Enrique Ros, said after he presented the response Tuesday night it was intended to bridge differences and resolve the conflict peacefully.

Earlier, British landing forces were reported closing on the South Atlantic islands, and Mrs. Thatcher was quoted by the London Daily Express tabloid as telling Queen Elizabeth II that she has ordered troops to invade.

"Only the time of a British landing on the Falkland Islands seemed in doubt," the London Times reported today.

Mrs. Thatcher told Parliament on Tuesday that Argentina was stalling for time and the outcome of U.N. talks should be known by Thursday. She said if talks failed, "no military action can be held up in any way."

"I believe that any military action or option cannot and must not be delayed by people who are extending negotiations," she declared.

Britain's Independent Television News said about 50 ships with 3,900 marines and paratroopers aboard were believed massed off the South Atlantic archipelago, ready to challenge the estimated 9,000 Argentine troops sent to the islands since they were seized from Britain April 2.

Press Association, the domestic British news agency, said reports were circulating in London that the assault force, including the liner Canberra with 2,000 marines aboard, was within 100 miles of the Falklands.

Correspondents with the British task force reported the arrival Tuesday of a container shipload of Harrier jets to reinforce the estimated 37 vertical-takeoff jump jets in the fleet's air arm.

After Ros conveyed Argentina's new proposals to Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, the U.N. chief delivered them to Britain's U.N. Ambassador Anthony Parsons, who sent them to London for consideration.

The secretary-general's proposed framework for peace reportedly calls for a truce, a phased, supervised withdrawal of British and Argentine forces from the Falklands area, and a U.N. interim administration of the islands during negotiations on their future.

British and Argentine sources say the main stumbling blocks are:

— Britain's insistence that the Falkland islanders' local government bodies be restored during the interim U.N. administration. Argentina contends these are vestiges of British colonialism.

— A dispute over how far the British fleet would withdraw. Britain is willing to move its fleet 200 miles from the Falklands, nearly the distance of the Argentine mainland from the islands, but Argentina wants the task force much farther away.

— Argentina's insistence on next Jan. 1 as the deadline for settling the sovereignty question, which Britain and Argentina had been negotiating for 17 years before the Argentine invasion. Britain proposes that the U.N. interim administration and negotiations continue if an agreement cannot be reached by a target date.

Britain reported no military attacks in the Falklands area Tuesday. A communique from the Argentine joint chiefs of staff said military action was limited to British "attempts at naval bombardment, which were repulsed by Argentine forces, and reconnaissance flights by British planes, which were foiled by anti-aircraft fire."

The Argentine governor of the Falklands, Gen. Mario Menendez, told a Buenos Aires radio station that his troops were "in outstanding military condition" despite the British blockade of the islands and were ready to repel an invasion.

American intelligence sources in Washington said the Soviet Union on Saturday placed into orbit a new satellite with nuclear-powered radar that can track the movements of the British task force through cloud cover. The sources said the launching of the satellite was the latest indication that the Soviets are helping the Argentines with valuable intelligence data.

Upton County residents reject $19.5 million water bond

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

RANKIN — Upton Countians, who are still seeking a solution to their water problems, Tuesday resoundly rejected a $19.5 million water bond issue to develop water fields south of Rankin and southeast McCamey.

The issue, proposed by the Upton County Water District's board of directors, failed by 629 to 487 votes.

"We're just ecstatic," said Odis Holiman, a rancher who, as president of the Upton Land Owners Association, had campaigned against passage of the issue.

The vote reflected 56 percent against the water-bond issue, and 44 percent for the proposal.

The landowners had waged a battle against the proposal, which, they charged, would tally $54.5 million in interest and principal after the payout. They maintained that the proposal was too expensive, was not practical and which ultimately and primarily would be paid for by the landowners, who would not benefit from the issue, and by oil companies.

The issue, which attracted about 48 percent of the county's 2,340 registered voters, passed in Rankin 280 to 153 but failed in McCamey 427 to 122.

"I think the people over at McCamey weren't brainwashed like the people at Rankin," Holiman said in analyzing the vote. McCamey, with a population of 2,600, is more than twice the size of Rankin.

Upton County Attorney John Menefee, who is legal counsel to the five-member water board, this morning said that the water board simply made a proposal on the towns' water problems and, in the wake of the issue's defeat, would let the people seek out their own solutions and possibly submit them to the board.

"I think the board is going to let the people try to work it out," Menefee said. "The board didn't have any organization (to promote the issue) and just laid it before the people."

Menefee said Upton Countians "have a wonderful vehicle" in the water district to find and develop solutions to the towns' water problems. "It's been tested (and upheld) in the courts," he said.

"But they didn't want this one (proposal)."

Menefee noted that the proposal "evidently caused some hard feelings, probably because they (primarly, the organized landowners) thought it was too elaborate."

Holiman accused proponents of the water-bond issue of doing "anything to mislead the public to get the vote."

"We need to come up with a plan to improve the quality and quanity of water" for Rankin and McCamey, said Holiman, who speculated that the Upton County Commissioners' Court, rather than the water district's board, "will have to do it."

Holiman said that the towns' water problems could be solved fairly easily and economically.

"I think the big problem is water management," said Holiman. "The big problem (in Rankin's) case is the system — the storage system," which, he said, accounts for the ill-quality of water. He proposed that the system be cleaned up or otherwise revamped or replaced and that water fields immediately east of Rankin be developed. Hydrologists have, in part, blamed the saline Pecos River on the unsavory waters; others have sought to blame mismanagement of oilfield brine, which seeped or otherwise got into fresh water zones.

"McCamey needs two real good wells," Holiman said.

He also theorized that the major impetus behind the $19.5 million water bond issue was the lure of profit — the legal, engineering, hydrological and

Former police officer, wife, city named in false arrest suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Ex-police officer John Roundtree, his wife, Sherry, and the city of Midland are cited in a $150,000 federal lawsuit in which Roundtree, 38, is accused of harassing and making false arrests and otherwise violating the constitutional rights of evangelical minister Phillip Babcock and his wife, Sharon.

The suit was born out of an incident at Cook's Pantry Buffet restaurant here on Feb. 3, 1980, when Roundtree allegedly accused Babcock and his wife of stealing Roundtree's wife's purse, which contained $2,500 in cash and traveler's checks. Both couples were dining at the restaurant when it was sparsely occupied.

Roundtree, then a Midland police officer, subsequently investigated his own case, and the Babcocks were indicted on April 9, 1980, for theft and jailed. Later, on June 19, 1980, the indictments were dismissed on grounds of insufficient evidence.

"An in-depth review of the current case law regarding this offense leads the State to believe that the evidence is too weak to justify the expense of prosecuting this case at this time," Richard Moore, then assistant prosecutor to District Attorney Vern Martin, wrote in his motion for dismissal. Judge Perry D. Pickett of the 142nd State District Court then dismissed the case.

Moore, who now lives in Plainview, today is district attorney for Hale County.

The Babcock federal suit, which is on file in Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas, acknowledges that Mrs. Roundtree's purse "was allegedly stolen or lost" but says that the Babcocks were unjustly accused of taking the purse.

"John Roundtree, a police officer with the city of Midland, and spouse of the defendant, Sherry Roundtree, summarily and without probable cause accused plaintiffs of having stolen the said purse when in fact plaintiffs had not," the federal petition says.

Roundtree, who operates a used-car lot, was in the employ of the Midland Police Department from August 1972 until his resignation in May 1981.

The federal suit says that Roundtree pursued the case with the "consent and approval of his supervising officers" and then launced into "a campaign of harassment, intimidation and threats against" the Babcocks. Roundtree's "campaign" was an "illegal effort" to compel the Babcocks to admit stealing the purse.

The suit, which is being handled by Odessa attorney H. Thomas Hirsch, says the city of Midland's "defacto policy" allows peace officers to investigate cases involving them. The suit claims that the city's policy sanctions those investigations "whether reasonable or

Spark may have caused explosion

KILGORE, Texas (AP) — A welding spark may have touched off the explosion that killed two refinery workers, hurled debris 800 feet in the air and sent flames soaring to heights visible 16 miles away, officials said.

Two other workers were injured when three storage tanks containing gasoline, naphtha, and diesel fuel exploded Tuesday morning at the Shore Company Inc.

The blast destroyed one-third of the plant and caused more than $1 million damage, said Kilgore Fire Chief Paul Duckworth.

Witnesses said the metal tops from the tanks were blown more than 800 feet into the air and the flames were visible in Longview, 16 miles away.

The blast forced the evacuation of about 760 people in a three-block radius around the refinery for 2½ hours, including 460 elementary school students who were sent to another school after the explosion.

"We had quite a bit of potential in the fuel involved" for a bigger fire, Duckworth said.

He said about 150,000 gallons of gasoline, 20,000 gallons of diesel fuel and several thousand gallons of naphtha were stored at the refinery, along with 3,000 gallons of tetraethyl lead, 4,000 gallons of sulfuric acid and 800 gallons of butane.

Firefighters worked to keep flames away from the lead and acid, Duckworth said.

"The explosion could have possibly been touched off by a welder's spark," he said. "It's one of several possibilities we'll be checking."

Killed were Pat Daniel Shea, a 31-year-old refinery welder from Dickson, Tenn., and G.O. Leach of Kilgore, 59, a dispatcher. Leach apparently suffered a heart attack, authorities said.

"I had the fire chiefs in Longview and Tyler both saying they didn't have any trouble realizing that there was a fire here," Duckworth said.

Firefighters from those cities were called in to help battle the blaze, which was brought under control after more than two hours, officials said.

A Shore spokesman who asked not to be identified said he was sitting in his office when he heard something that sounded "like a sonic boom."

"There were probably about three explosions: one large one and two smaller ones," he said.

Four family members killed in car wreck

ABILENE — Four members of a Midland-Odessa family died and two others were injured when the car they were in went out of control and struck an embankment near here Tuesday afternoon.

Killed were Billy Doyle Ward, 26, of Odessa; Diana Edwards Ward, also 26, of Midland; Sarah Ward, 18, and Michael Ward, 22, both of Midland.

In stable condition this morning with undisclosed injuries at E.L. Graham Memorial Hospital in Graham were 5-month-old Joseph Michael David Ward and Joseph F. Ward, no age available, both believed to be of Midland.

According to the Department of Public Safety, a 1975 Oldsmobile driven by Billy Ward inexplicably left the westbound lane of Interstate 20, crashed through a guardrail and smashed into an embankment. The crash occurred some 2.5 miles east of Putman in Callahan County about 3:40 p.m. Tuesday.

All's fair in steamboat racing

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — After giving the old college try in my graying alumni years to hiking, paddleball, jogging and yachting (if barfing abaft the beam aboard a 16-foot sloop so qualifies), I at last have found a red-blooded American sport that fits my physical and spiritual conditions: steamboat racing.

The sport is elegant, scenic, as fast paced as a papal consistory and as historic as the mighty rivers that serve as its playground. It requires nothing more of the participant than to sit at the teak taffrail with a tall mint julep in hand and watch the big red paddlewheel churn up misty rainbows of spray, while the crowds along the levee cheer each mournful moan of the whistle. A contest that proceeds at the pace of 8 miles an hour does not strain the concentration or neck muscles of the spectators.

Occasionally, but not often, when the going gets rough, the captain issues a call to battle stations, and the tough get going.

"Hold up on that buffet dinner," Capt. James R. Blum, master of the Delta Queen out of Cincinnati, anxiously got on the horn. "Everyone forward, please. Get to the bow of the boat. Weight is important. We gotta lift that paddlewheel higher out of the water."

The Natchez, the pride of New Orleans, was gaining steadily on us, while the Belle of Louisville, with Walter Cronkite aboard, was far astern in the annual "Great Steamboat Race." This geriatric wheeze of straining steam boilers happens every spring over a 12-mile course up and down the beautiful Ohio River from the docks of downtown Louisville.

CAPT. BLUM, who looked like a riverboat gambler with his wide sideburns and dimpled choirboy smile, was risking everything, even mutiny among the 162 passengers paying upwards of $150 a day for their passage and rations, to hang the Golden Anglers, the race trophy, on the roof of his pilot house.

In his anxiety to get going, he had somewhat anticipated the thunderous starting cannon and was 200 yards up river, almost under the railroad bridge, while his two rivals were still lining up two bridges back under Clark Memorial Bridge, the agreed on starting line.

With a look made of all sweet accord and in tones as innocent as the refrain of "Sweet Genevieve" issuing from the steam calliope, the captain denied any wrongdoing, explained he was marching to a different cannoneer and "besides, the Belle of Louisville pulled the same dirty trick last year when she won the antlers,"

That's the civilized thing about steamboat racing. The sport isn't complicated by a lot of fussy, incomprehensible rules and regulations — or any at all, as far as could be ascertained during this, my first passage on a racing sternwheeler.

"Anything is fair in steamboat racing," observed Mark Twain a century or so ago, when the powers that be up on the Texas deck could order cotton bales soaked in bourbon stoked into the wood burning furnaces and didn't have to contend with television crews on every contending boat and a couple of live action news helicopters hovering overhead to monitor the show.

Furthermore, on the integrity issue, Capt. Blum took pains to point out there was an official judge on board, a U.S. Coast Guard officer from Cincinnati, who hadn't seen anything scandalous about the premature start on account of at the time he was busy studying the contours of some bare shouldered belles in plantation gowns instead of the bends of the river. In steamboat racing, each boat supplies its own judge, which would be akin to a major league baseball team going on the road with its own personal set of umpires. Not a bad idea at all, since this cozy arrangement allows plenty of time for drinking in the scenery and whatnot and cuts out boring arguments and childish kicking of waves in each other's faces.

IT'S NOT for naught that in race track parlance the term "boat race" connotes a certain lack of suspense about the outcome.

Built 56 years ago on the River Clyde in Scotland, the Delta Queen showed her age and her determination by belching enormous plumes of jet black smoke from her twin funnels to keep the upstart Natchez, launched in 1974, from overhauling her illicit advantage on the upriver leg. The boats were bucking 12-mile-an-hour head winds and a 2½-mile current and gobbling up fuel oil at the rate of 100 gallons an hour. The Belle of Louisville continued to lag far behind, although she had drawn the favored Indiana side of the river, which riverboat pilot call "the pool," because the water is more slack.

Now the Natchez and the Delta Queen were almost neck and neck, or nose protruding gangplank to gangplank.

"Shove the oil to her," rasped a gnarled tourist river rat, leaning into the wind on an aluminum walker. "Damn the pollution. Full speed ahead." Words to warm the heart of a James Watt, whose ancestors back there somewhere may have invented the steam engine.

It was a losing cause, however. The Natchez bore down relentlessly on us, although the smoke was so thick her lovely gingerbread railings appeared all of a sudden off our stern in a glimmer of ghostly darkness. The engine room telegraph on the bridge still read "Full Ahead," but Capt. Blum reached for the speaking tube and ordered Chief Engineer Edgar Jones to "Do something about that mixture. We can't even see our paddlewheel wake up here."

In the old days, they would have been burning up the deck chairs and the lifeboats, but there were the passengers to be considered and the clean air bureaucrats. The triumphant, deep-throated bellow of an alien steam whistle, raising more cheers along the crowded bans, let us know the Natchez had pulled ahead.

THEN FOR one glorious moment at the turn for home, the Delta Queen boldly took the lead again, running over a marker buoy, a mere technicality that didn't seem to faze Capt. Blum or his pilot, a blonde named Lexie Palmore, who is the only lady pilot on any American river. Or so we were told, which like any words spoken in a wheelhouse don't always add up to gospel truth.

Despite the presence of keen yachtsman Cronkite on the bridge, the badly beaten Belle of Louisville had to be assisted in making the crucial turn at Six Mile Island by the towboat Miss Ida, a clear violation of the non-existent rule book.

Vainglorious in defeat, Capt. Blum came out on the bridge wing and consoled his shipmates drowning their sorrow in juleps at the open bar set up on the bow: "Anyhow, we won in spirits."

Those of us on the runnerup Delta Queen also had the consolation of knowing that our veneralbe riverboat — "a sumptuous temple" in the words of Mark Twain — had served for a week in 1979 as Jimmy Carter's mobile White House.

He went down to defeat sometime afterwards, too, which shows how the wind blows and the funnel stacks up in the satisfying unfettered sport of steamboat racing. The sport hasn't been trustworthy since Noah took his ark wide at Ararat.

Her 'men' don't smoke, drink

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — The men with Mildred Huie don't drink, smoke or criticize her driving. In fact, they never say a word. Her traveling companions are life-size dolls.

Mrs. Huie, a 75-year-old widow, sells the dolls to other single women who are afraid to travel alone and like the idea of being seen with a companion, even a silent one.

"I never go anywhere without one, and sometimes I take two or three along with me," she said.

Mrs. Huie got the idea from a North Carolina woman who made the dolls to sit in automated rocking chairs on the front porch of a country store.

She and her daughter, Mildred Wilcox, drove past one day, noticed the dolls and bought three.

When she tried to board an airplane with the dolls, the airline demanded she purchase tickets for them. Instead, she bought oversized duffle bags and stuffed the dolls inside.

After returning home, Mrs. Huie decided other women who travel alone might feel more secure with a broad-shouldered, well-dressed male doll along for the ride.

MC center renamed after former trustee

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A former president of the Midland College Board of Trustees was honored when board members voted unanimously to rename the MC Learning Resource Center for Murray Fasken during their regular meeting Tuesday.

Fasken, a senior chairman of the board at Midland National Bank, was one of the original board members of Midland College. When MC was established in 1969 as part of the Permian Basin Junior College System, Fasken was one of four Midlanders named to the joint board of regents of that system.

Fasken continued to serve on the board of trustees when the college established its own district in 1972. He was president of the board from 1977 to 1979, resigning from the board in 1980.

"Murray Fasken has done as much for Midland College as any other individual in this community, much of it behind the scenes," MC Board President Fred Wright Jr. said. "He was optimistic when many thought we would never survive. He was a leader when it became necessary for Midland College to become a separate entity. He helped gain the support for the two bond issues which built the facilities at Midland College.

"But even more importantly, he quietly gathered additional financial support to provide the extras which have helped Midland College become first-rank in its academic programs," Wright continued. "And he provided the gifts and scholarships through the Fasken Foundation which have supported educational opportunities for countless young students. His leadership was invaluable to the early, developing years of Midland College."

In other action, trustees approved the resignations of three faculty members. Bill Sands, an electronic instructor at MC for two years, resigned to enter private business. Dr. David Caffey, division chairman of cultural studies, resigned after serving at MC for four years and Dr. Charles Wakefield, dean of occupational studies, resigned after serving for eight years.

Caffey has accepted a position as director of the Harwood Foundation at the University of New Mexico at Taos. Wakefield's plans are tentative.

The re-employment of three faculty members also was approved by trustees. Dr. David Frailey, geology, and Bob Peetz, law enforcement, were given regular contracts, while John Harmon, art, was given a one-year contract. Harmon will be filling in for instructor Stan Jacobs, who will be teaching at Texas Tech University next year.

Board members also extended the contract of Dr. Jess H. Parrish, MC president, from three years to five years.

Parrish recommended several new positions to be included in next year's budget. Instructors in business administration, drafting technology and data processing are needed to ease the enrollment growth in these areas, he said. Parrish also asked for two teachers to be added in the arts area, including a strings teacher and an instructor in dramatic arts. Also, there will be a need for a nurse with psychiatric training at the end of the 1982-83 school year, he said.

Trustees approved an overall 9.62 percent increase in salary costs, including a 9 percent increase with a 1 percent annuity for instructors and an 8.5 percent increase with a 1 percent annuity for administrators and some staff at each step. Trustees approved a $425 per month increase in Parrish's housing allowance.

During the division presentation, Caffey pointed out that the cultural division complements other departments. "We are not competing against the other divisions," he said. "We complete the work skills that students get from their other studies."

Two of the most important events sponsored by the division were the third annual Free Enterprise Day and the exhibit from the Texas Humanist Resource Center, Caffey said.

Dr. Leon Dulin, physical education instructor and tennis coach, and Betty Gaines, instructor in the psychology area, provided some highlights of the programs in which they work within the division. Dulin presented some of the advantages of classes such as aerobics, cardio-respiratory conditioning, strength and endurance, flexibility and weight control. Ms. Gaines discussed approaches to the mental development of a child and classes that work with day care centers in the community.

Begin may avert 'no confidence'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin appeared headed for a tie vote on a parliamentary no-confidence motion today after two independent deputies decided to abstain to avoid bringing down the government.

Yigal Hurwitz of the two-man right-of-center TELEM faction told The Associated Press he feared the opposition Labor Party would take power "and it would be too dovish a government for my liking." Hurwitz advocates perpetual Israeli rule of the occupied West Bank, while Labor is willing to trade parts of it for peace with Jordan.

Hurwitz said Mordechai Ben-Porat, the other TELEM member of the Knesset, Israel's parliament, would also abstain.

A tie vote would give Begin time to try to regain his majority in the 120-seat Knesset. He lost it Tuesday when two members of his Likud Bloc defected and joined the opposition Labor Party, reducing the government coalition to 59 members.

Begin has defeated six no-confidence motions in the 11 months since he was elected to a second term of office last June. A no-confidence motion presented by Labor on March 23 in protest against the government's tough West Bank policies also ended in a tie. Begin wanted to resign, but his Cabinet overruled him.

The cliffhanger vote was to be taken after several hours of debate on the Labor Party's motion, presented in protest against a 10.7 percent inflation rate in April. This pointed toward an annual rate of 136 percent, which would be the highest ever in the Jewish state.

Begin's hopes for defeat of the motion faded when the three members of the right-wing Tehiya (Renaissance) Party decided to vote against the government.

The two defectors, Amnon Linn and Yitzhak Peretz, said they quit Likud because Begin banned flights by El Al, the Israeli airline, on Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, in response to the demand of religious parties in his government coalition.

Although a hawk, Linn said he was also dissatisfied with the government's handling of anti-Israeli unrest in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. He charged it failed to explore ways of co-existing with the Arabs.

If Begin defeated the no-confidence vote, he could try to govern without a majority while trying to get TELEM to join his coalition. Or he could call an election for a new Knesset, three years ahead of schedule, since opinion polls indicate Likud would win more seats than the 46 it now has.

If he lost the no-confidence vote, he would have to resign. He could then try to form a new coalition government, call an election or step aside and let the Labor Party try to form a majority coalition.

With the switch by Linn and Peretz, Labor has 50 seats in the Knesset, four more than Likud.

Most physicians inform their patients about the risks and hazards of medical and surgical procedures, but there has never been a standardized procedure to follow.

At least not in Texas. Not until now.

Texans requiring surgery after June 1 will be asked by their physicians to sign an additional consent form, informing the patient not only of the type of surgery, but also identifying the risks and hazards of the particular procedure.

Although it will not be mandatory for the physicians to have the form available, Dr. James W. McGee, a radiologist, said Midland physicians have agreed they will have the new disclosure and consent form signed in their offices and will then have a copy made for the hospital records.

"Our (old) consent forms have been challenged frequently, to the point that something had to be done," McGee said.

Carroll W. Gregory, Texas Department of Health, who worked with the Texas Medical Disclosure Panel which devised the form, said the initial set of forms "is only a beginning work for the panel. Many, many surgical procedures and medical techniques must be covered."

The panel consists of six physicians and three attorneys appointed by the Commissioner of Health. This ongoing committee was created by the Texas legislature through the Texas Medical Liability and Insurance Improvement Act of 1977 and its function is to examine all medical treatments and surgical procedures.

Consequently, the panel prepared a set of minimum levels of disclosure required by physicians and other health care providers. The form was created to avoid any miscommunication between the doctor and patient and to cut down the escalating malpractice insurance costs.

Even though consent forms have always been used, McGee said attorneys have proven them in court to be invalid, arguing that the patient did not fully understand them.

McGee said that in the late 1970s there were an extraordinary number of medical suits in California, involving the question of whether physicians gave patients enough information to make the decision for the procedure and whether they explained the hazards of an operation to the patient.

"It got so bad that some of the doctors would tape the conversation with the patient to avoid a suit," McGee said.

Today, McGee said, this has not been a big problem.

But one problem that Midland could have with the new form is the lack of a Spanish-language form.

"We really need an official Spanish form," McGee said. "Midland Memorial Hospital's medical staff has formally asked for an accepted official version of the consent form in Spanish."

The Texas Medical Association, Texas Hospital Association and Texas Medical Records Association held seminars throughout the state recently to educate health care providers about the new forms.

MMH physicians were informed of the form in an inservice presentation by a Texas Medical Association lawyer in late April.

Salvadorans dismiss U.S.-prompted farm program

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — El Salvador's rightist-dominated Constituent Assembly has suspended a U.S.-inspired "land to the tiller" agricultural reform program.

The assembly voted 37-18 Tuesday night, after a sharp debate, to cancel for one crop cycle the right of tenant farmers and sharecroppers to acquire titles for up to 17 acres of the land they work. A crop cycle lasts from one to four years, depending on the crop.

The peasants' right to the land was decreed two years ago by El Salvador's ruling junta as part of an agrarian reform designed to undercut peasant support for leftist guerrillas in the civil war.

But President Alvaro Magana, installed after the conservative victory in the March 28 elections, suggested suspending the program. He said landowners had no incentive to plant cotton or sugar cane because they were expecting to have their land expropriated. Those crops are two of the country's biggest earners of foreign currency, and they are due for planting now.

Magana suggested suspending the reform program only for land devoted to cotton and sugar cane, but the members of the assembly's rightist majority decided to extend it to cattle-producing and grain lands. Among them, those four kinds of land account for 95 per cent of the production on the farms involved.

The amendment made the assembly's Christian Democrats oppose the bill. "If what they want is to kill the land reform, they should call things by name and say so once and for all," Christian Democrat Deputy Antonio Guevara said during the debate. All 18 votes against the bill came from the Christian Democrats.

A small group of straw-hatted peasants came to the assembly building to lobby in vain against the proposal.

The agrarian reform program has been carried out with U.S. technical assistance. It is modeled after a similar program the United States supported in South Vietnam, which was also called "land to the tiller."

In the first phase of the program, El Salvador expropriated estates larger than 1,235 acres, turned them into peasant cooperatives and provided compensation to former owners. An estimated 386,000 peasants, about half the country's rural poor, benefitted.

The next phase was supposed to change farms of more than 247 acres into cooperatives, but the junta said there was no money to compensate the owners and never carried out that phase.

Budget changes would increase deficits

By CLIFF HAAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with an almost certain defeat on the Senate floor, Republican leaders are revising their 1983 budget blueprint to drop plans for $40 billion in Social Security savings while adding billions of dollars for domestic programs.

The changes would push the budget outline's projected 1983 deficit to $115 billion.

In the House, meanwhile, Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois was finishing negotiations today with conservative Democrats and moderate Republicans on an alternative budget to counter a package being pushed by House Democratic leaders.

House sources, who asked not to be quoted by name, said Michel's package projects deficits of $99.6 billion in 1983, $73.9 billion in 1984 and $45.7 billion in 1985, and includes deeper cuts in military spending, domestic programs and benefit programs than the Senate plan. No Social Security cuts are contemplated.

In the Senate, consideration of a spending outline stalled Tuesday while majority Republicans held a lengthy closed meeting. Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., emerged from the meeting to say, "I've been instructed to prepare a modification of the budget."

NOT ONLY will the Republicans drop the Social Security provision, but they also agreed to restore budget cuts totaling $3 billion previously slated for Medicare, student loans, veterans' benefits, space programs and housing, officials said.

The original Senate plan, drawn up by Republican leaders and approved by President Reagan, called for $40 billion in Social Security savings over three years — presumably through benefit cuts or increased taxes. Its backers contend this is the minimum necessary to assure the solvency of the giant pension system.

But with at least eight Republicans and virtually all 45 Democrats opposed, Domenici conceded it probably would fail.

The alternative, which Domenici and his staff was drawing up overnight, drops all mention of the $40 billion figure. In its place is a requirement that Congress take whatever action is necessary later this year to make the pension system solvent.

Officials said the changes in areas other than Social Security would add about $3 billion to spending for 1983 and $4 billion in each of the next two years.

Those increases, coupled with the decision not to seek the $40 billion in Social Security savings, produce projected deficits of $115 billion in 1983, about $90 billion in 1984 and about $60 billion in 1985.

Deficits under the original plan were projected at $106.1 billion in 1983, $69 billion in 1984 and $39.5 billion in 1985.

DOMENICI SAID a bipartisan commission Reagan appointed to study Social Security will be asked to complete work in early November, clearing the way for congressional action in December.

The budget will then be altered to take the changes into account, including a lower deficit, Domenici said.

"The only goal we ever had on Social Security was solvency," Domenici said.

Domenici had warned his colleagues earlier that removing the $40 billion would create more red ink.

The $40 billion in Social Security savings was part of an overall three-year budget plan that calls for $95 billion in higher taxes, a reduction of $22 billion in Reagan's planned defense buildup and a freeze in spending for hundreds of domestic programs such as health, education and parks.

There also would be a $33 billion cut in benefit programs such as Medicare and Medicaid and guaranteed student loans, as well as a one-year freeze in pay and pensions for federal workers and retirees.

WHILE SENATE Republicans tried to hold their majority, outnumbered House Republicans tried to build one by outbidding Democratic leaders for the swing votes of conservative Democrats and moderate Republicans. The full House begins consideration of a budget outline Friday.

"We're down to the point where we have...sort of thrown away the adding machines and everybody is...trying to find one more vote. The (budget) changes now are being politically rather than philosophically inspired," said Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., a House Budget Committee member who has participated in Michel's negotiations.

"I believe we have the essence of a bipartisan compromise," said Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, one of the conservative Democrats who joined with Republicans in budget votes last year. "It's just a matter of final laying on of hands."

Doctor: Hinckley thought he had no choice but to shoot

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr., "burning with inner rage" and possibly influenced by tranquilizers, thought he had "no choice" but to fire on the president because the Secret Service had spotted his gun, a psychiatrist says.

Dr. David Michael Bear, testifying at Hinckley's trial Tuesday, also said the Colorado psychiatrist who treated the defendant before the March 30, 1981 shootings devised a "disastrous" plan of therapy for his patient.

Bear, who is returning to the witness stand today for cross-examination by government attorneys, concluded that Hinckley was too mentally ill to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct.

Hinckley has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity in the wounding of Reagan and three other men outside the Washington Hilton Hotel.

"There was no ability to plan, there was no ability to premeditate," the Harvard Medical School psychiatrist told the jury.

"Do I conclude he was logical and planning? My God, my sense of justice says absolutely not," he said.

That remark prompted U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker to inform Bear, "Your sense of justice is not sought here." The jury was out of the room at the time.

Bear said Hinckley told him during psychiatric interviews that he took four five-milligram tablets of the tranquilizer Valium before leaving for the shooting scene.

Hinckley should not have been taking the drug at all, Bear said, because it makes psychotic people like Hinckley more aggressive.

"John Hinckley was burning with inner rage," he said. "It's very possible that Valium released this rage."

At the Hilton, Hinckley was amazed he got so close to Reagan without the Secret Service stopping him, Bear said.

"Their eyes were on me. They saw the gun. Now I have no choice. I have to go forward and shoot," Bear said, recalling Hinckley's description of his thoughts.

Once Hinckley had emptied his .22-caliber pistol, he relaxed in a state of "steely calm," Bear said. At the time, the psychiatrist said Hinckley thought, "I'm relieved, it's over."

At the time of the shooting, Hinckley considered himself a failure because he had stalked former President Carter and was unable to kill him, Bear said. And he was also obsessed with actress Jodie Foster and grief-stricken over the murder of his idol, John Lenoon.

Bear said the decision to allow Hinckley to remain on Valium was among several crucial mistakes made by Dr. John Hopper, the Evergreen, Colo., psychiatrist who treated the defendant from October 1980 through February 1981.

Hopper, who had been hired by Hinckley's wealthy parents, testified he believed Hinckley suffered from anxiety and was upset because he couldn't find a career.

Along with Hinckley's parents, Hopper devised a plan that set deadlines for the presidential assailant to get a job and live outside his family home.

"The plan of the therapy was just disastrous," Bear said. "I think the man (Hinckley) should have been in a hospital. It was an inappropriate time to cut him off from his family. This advice was an absolute calamity."

In addition, Bear said Hopper should have probed more deeply when Hinckley told him of his obsession with Ms. Foster.

The psychiatrist said "to the outside world" Hinckley would have looked normal. Even the law enforcement officers who arrested him could not have determined that Hinckley was suffering frm a serious mental illness, he said.

"If Dr. Hopper, who was trained, sat with the man for five months and did not reach a correct diagnosis, would officers on the scene reach a correct diagnosis?" Bear asked.

The prosecution claims that officers' observations of Hinckley's acute memory and calm demeanor at the time of the shooting indicate he was of sound mind.

Said Bear: "This is not evidence I would use to reach state-of-mind conclusions."

Hinckley is charged in a 13-count indictment with attempting to assassinate the president and assault with intent to kill Reagan, White House Press Secretary James Brady, a Washington policeman and a Secret Service agent.

Two men arrested in rash of burglaries

Two young men have been formally charged in connection with a recent rash of area business burglaries and thefts. Released on $6,000 bond each set by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry Tuesday were 17-year-old Clifton Mullins and Jerry Ervin, also 17, both of Midland.

Meanwhile, sheriff's deputies this morning said all of the $45,000 worth of stolen goods, which ranged from handtools to gooseneck trailers, has been accounted for and is in the process of being returned to its owners. "All the owners have been notified," said one deputy assigned to the case, which broke Monday with a tip on one theft that "just kept snowballing," said the deputy.

Two juveniles also allegedly involved in the ring were turned over to juvenile authorities. No other arrests are expected, according to investigators.

Hot afternoons, warm nights forecast

Hot afternoons and warm nights will continue in Midland through Thursday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Skies should remain partly cloudy tonight and Thursday with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms expected tonight.

The temperatures will drop into the middle 60s tonight, climbing back into the lower 90s on Thursday. Winds will be southerly 10-15 mph tonight, increasing to 15-20 mph and gusty Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 89 was nine degrees cooler than the record high of 98, set for that date in 1946. The overnight low of 60 was 14 degrees warmer than the record low of 46, set in 1971.

Local National Weather Service office will not to be affected by shut down

The federal government's plan to eliminate 18 National Weather Service forecast stations nationwide will not affect the local NWS office, according to supervisor Jim Yates.

Midland NWS will continue all operations "at least in this go-round," said Yates, adding that two staff vacancies are expected to be filled soon.

A plan to shut down the regional office of the NWS at Fort Worth could have indirect effect on the local operation, however, he noted. The federal government is considering combining the southern NWS office with another of the three remaining regional offices across the nation to comply with budget cutbacks.

"I think we would be placed in the western office, but that's not definite," said Yates.

Man jailed after robbery try

One man is in jail after a convenience store clerk foiled a robbery attempt late Tuesday night by refusing to turn over the money until he saw a weapon.

A clerk at the Colonial Food Store at the intersection of Williams Street and Wall Avenue told officers a man came into the store about 11:35 p.m. and indicated he had a weapon under his shirt. The man attempted to open the cash register himself after the clerk said he wouldn't do so until he saw a weapon.

The man fled and was arrested shortly afterward in a car police stopped in the 3800 block of Cunningham Avenue. Five companions were released after they denied knowing the suspect, a 20-year-old El Paso resident, was going to try to rob the store. No money was taken and police were unable to find a weapon.

An alert police officer is credited with stopping a car theft at Frank See Chevrolet, 4100 W. Wall Ave., early this morning.

Officer Walter Knight was on patrol when he said he saw a 1968 Chevrolet pickup truck crash through a chain link fence and gate at the firm about 4:15 a.m.

Knight pursued the truck and stopped it in the 3800 block of West Wall. Arrested was an 18-year-old Big Spring man who allegedly said he wanted to go to jail. Police obliged, and formal charges are expected to be filed sometime today. Damage to the fence was estimated at $2,400.

Robert Reyna of 2205 South Baird St. told officers he was robbed of $220 about 5:30 a.m. today after he pulled the money from his pocket to pay for an order at Red's Drive In, 1807 E. Front St. Reyna said a man standing next to him grabbed the money and fled. Police are investigating.

annexation of the land in the fall of this year," Bell said, with sale of residential lots to follow late in 1982 or in early 1983.

The project got under way when Mike Furman, president of Alamo Bancorp, purchased the old Golden Acres Country Club in 1981 and approached HBF with the idea of developing it.

A Houston firm, 3D/International, is overseeing development of the project's master plan.

The former Golden Acres clubhouse has been remodeled by HBF for temporary use as Mission Country Club, while ground breaking for the new, and much larger, country club will take place in September. Noted Texas architect O'Neil Ford of San Antonio is designing the Spanish-style clubhouse.

The temporary clubhouse later will be remodeled a second time and incorporated into a large athletic center housing racquetball and exercise facilities. Tennis courts, a swimming pool and cabana, a lap pool and a three-hole learners' golf course complete the recreation portion of the club.

The first 18 holes of the counntry club should be playable by the summer of 1983.

New State Highway 191, also now being constructed, will run from Andrews Highway in Midland to 42nd Street in Odessa, passing just north of Mision Dorado. Two major entrances to the planned community, unique in size and scope to the Permian Basin, will access directly from 191.

Mision Estates, the residential portion of the project, will eventually be the site of 49 estate lots, 1,145 single family detached lots, 1,220 townhouse lots, 475 condominium units, and 866 high-density patio lots.

Eight lakes, numerous landscaped mounds up to 12 feet in elevation, bridges and a waterfall will be featured in the 36-hole golf course, designed by Killian and Nugent of Chicago, Ill., under the direction of PGA Tour Director Jack Tuthill.

"The acts and conducts of the defendants constitute assault and battery, false arrest, false imprisonment, intentional infliction of emotional distress, malicious prosecution, negligence and gross negligence."

The Babcocks are seeking $50,000 in compensatory damages and $100,000 in punitive damages from the Roundtrees and the city of Midland.

Water bond issue rejected

other fees to be made by professional people who have been consulting with the water district's board.

"That's the bottom line," Holiman charged.

Holiman said that the landowners' association was "real pleased" by the issue's demise.

"The landowners' association is not opposed to Rankin and McCamey getting good water," he said. "We're just opposed to the way they went about it."

The water district was created in 1977 by an act of the Texas Legislature, but, said Holiman, the bill's sponsors — State Rep. Tom Craddick and State Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson — promoted the bill without being fully apprised of its implications after Menefee figured prominently in drafting the wording of the bill, which created the taxing water-district and which gave the district power of eminent domain.

Later, an association of land owners was organized. Taking their case to court, the land owners, including farmers and ranchers in the Midkiff-Rankin-McCamey areas and land and royalty owners in Midland and elsewhere, sought to be excluded from the district; they contended that they and the oil companies would be paying the most — via taxes — on any water system for the towns and that they would not derive benefits — water.

The court, represented in a visiting judge, 143nd State District Larry Fuller of Monahans, ruled in favor of the water district and denied any exemptions. An appellate court subsequently upheld Fuller's stance.

Committee votes to end exemption

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Appropriations Committee has voted to do away with a $75-a-day tax exemption for members of Congress but leave no limit on how much they can claim for living expenses away from home.

"This provides no limit whatsoever," said Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., said before voting against the amendment offered by Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga. The amendment was approved, however, 13-9.

Three adults and four children were killed early Tuesday morning, when a fire swept through their row house in northwest Baltimore. The fire was the second serious blaze in the city in four days. On Saturday, three adults and seven children died in a row-house fire. Tuesday's fire was blamed on careless smoking.

Residents urged to buy smoke detectors

BALTIMORE (AP) — City ambulances driving through neighborhoods where fires have killed 17 people in four days have begun using their loudspeakers to blare a message urging people to buy smoke detectors.

The pleas began Tuesday after a row house blaze earlier in the day, apparently caused by careless smoking, killed seven people. The fatal fire came hours after a memorial service was held for 10 people killed in a Saturday blaze. Eleven of the victims were children.

City officials said the messages would be blared from ambulances returning from hospitals and would be directed at lower-income neighborhoods, where most of the fatal fires have begun.

"We're trying to get the word to the people who don't read the newspaper or hear it on TV or radio. All that was needed was one smoke detector. That would have saved seven lives," said Fire Capt. Patrick Flynn.

So far this year, 48 people have died in house fires in the city, compared with 29 deaths for all of 1981. None of the homes in this year's fires was equipped with smoke detectors.

EARLIER THIS year, in "Operation Firebuster," the city gave away more than 6,000 smoke detectors to poor people.

But Flynn said because of a tight budget, the city couldn't afford to give away any more. He said officials were planning to sell the detectors at discount and use the money to replenish the stock.

In Tuesday's fire, investigators said the bodies were all found in a second-floor bedroom and a smoke detector would have given them time to escape.

"It looks like they made an attempt to get out of their beds but they only made it a few feet," said Battalion Chief Michael Caplan. Dr. Virginia Doland of the medical examiner's office said the victims probably died of smoke inhalation.

Flynn said the city's 16 ambulances broadcast the messages after dropping off patients at hospitals. The program began Tuesday night and will run indefinitely between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m.

The prepared announcement reads:

"THIS IS A message from the mayor and Baltimore city fire department. There have been 48 fire deaths so far this year. Just this week, 17 people, mostly children, have died in fire. Please protect your family and loved ones with smoke detectors. Prevent more tragedies from happening. Help us help you."

Seven children and three adults died in the Saturday fire, which authorities said apparently started when a candle ignited a sofa. The family was using candles and kerosene lamps after electricity was cut off for non-payment of $808 in utility bills, fire officials said.

Flynn said nearly all the fire deaths this year were the result of carelessness. Nineteen were traced to careless smoking and 10 to candles, with others blamed on careless use of flammable liquids or pots left on stoves.

"This is just like a plague," said Sylvia Johnson, a neighbor of the victims Tuesday. "I think we need answers. We need an all-out war on fire. We've got an enemy here...We need to be educated."

Ohio man tries to escape from Arkansas jail

MALVERN, Ark. (AP) — Police planned to return a man to a Houston jail today, one day after he locked a Hot Spring County deputy in a cell and briefly took over the sheriff department's radio.

After subduing Tim Ward, 18, of Terrace Park, Ohio, on Tuesday, officers transferred him to the Garland County Jail in Hot Springs for security reasons, authorities said.

Police had arrested Ward last week on a warrant for aggravated robbery and auto theft charges from Houston.

Ward's escape attempt began about 1 p.m. Tuesday when jailer Ron Smith opened a cell door to give Ward some food, authorities said. Smith said Ward threw a cup of water in his face, then ran past him and into the radio operator's room. Ward tried to break out a window in the room on the county courthouse's third floor, Smith said.

The deputy, meanwhile, used an intercom connecting the sheriff's office with the jail to summon help. Smith said Ward struck him with a coffee pot, sprayed deodorant in his eyes and backed him up with a mop handle. "He broke it and made a spear out of it," Smith said of the mop handle. Ward later locked the deputy in the isolation cell.

After Sheriff Bill Rhodes and Deputy Kenneth Herrin opened the jail door from the stairway, the confrontation ended. Rhodes said Herrin fired a warning shot at Ward and struck the inmate with the gun.

Raid nets 1,200 pounds of cocaine

By The Associated Press

The capture of a cattle transport plane in Louisiana and raids on two homes in Los Angeles netted nearly 1,200 pounds of cocaine valued by authorities at $70 million.

Agents inspecting the plane in New Iberia, La., after its return from Panama on Tuesday arrested three men and seized 1,100 pounds of high-grade cocaine hidden in feed sacks, the U.S. Customs Service said.

Marcella Badie, a U.S. Customs spokeswoman, estimated the value of the drug, if sold in bulk, at $50 million and said the four-engine Convair 880 jet was used to ship cattle from the Acadiana Regional Airport in New Iberia to Panama.

The arrested men were identified as the plane's pilot, Ramon Antonio Sanson, 59, described as a Cuban National; co-pilot Elwood William David, 66, and flight attendant Albert Richard Mikluscak, 63, all of Miami.

The three men were charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, Customs officers said. They were transported to Baton Rouge for processing before a federal magistrate.

In the California arrest, bail was set at $1 million each for five people arrested in what police called the biggest cocaine seizure ever in Los Angeles.

'Orphan disease' affects more than nerves

EDITOR'S NOTE: It's called an "orphan disease," not because it strikes orphans, but because it has been overlooked to a great extent by medical researchers. An uncommon ailment, it is also known as Riley-Day syndrome. It is a rare genetic disorder that affects the autonomic nervous system.

NEW YORK (AP) — On a recent afternoon at the Hospital for Special Surgery, Dr. David Levine showed 13-year-old Melissa Gruber two X-ray pictures of her back.

She glanced at the films, looked at the floor for a moment, propped one sneaker-clad foot atop the other and said weakly, "It's getting worse."

Her spine should have shown up as a broad, white band running straight up and down through the middle of the X-rays. But what she saw instead was a white band twisted to the right in an S-shape, marking the curvature of her back. In the preceding year, the curvature had become worse.

THE PROBLEM IS one consequence of a rare genetic disorder called familial dysautonomia. The word "dysautonomia" means failure of the autonomic nervous system.

Melissa is one of perhaps only a few hundred Americans with the condition, also known as Riley-Day syndrome. It's sometimes referred to as an "orphan disease," a disorder so uncommon that it has been mostly overlooked by medical researchers, federal health agencies and charitable foundations.

The disorder strikes one in 10,000 Ashkenazi Jews, a group of central and eastern European ancestry. One in 50 Ashkenazi Jews is a carrier.

Melissa is beset with a variety of curious symptoms. When she cries, she sheds no tears. She is scarcely able to feel pain, or to tell between hot and cold. Many of the tastebuds that should cover her tongue are missing.

Some of the problems shared by Melissa and others with dysautonomia have been traced to what's called the autonomic nervous system — the network that controls the body's glands, internal organs and certain muscles. Those nerves seem not to have developed properly.

Because of the failure of that system, Melissa has had trouble swallowing since she was a baby. When she was younger she had no gag reflex — she didn't cough.

HER FEEDING PROBLEMS became so severe that she did not grow. Food often became trapped in her lungs, sparking recurrent cases of pneumonia.

Throughout her short life she has been plagued by bouts of vomiting, lasting from three days to three weeks at a time. For a time she had trouble talking and walking.

She has almost completely overcome those coordination problems with the help of therapy.

Because of her success in overcoming her physical disabilities, Melissa's symptoms are not readily apparent. She smiles often, with a little girl's shyness, she is able to attend school and she seems to understand and to be able to cope with her affliction.

The curvature of her spine is the only immediately visible sign of her condition. Once or twice a year, she visits the Hospital for Special Surgery, where orthopedic surgeons led by Dr. David Levine conduct a monthly clinic to evaluate the bone and back ailments of dysautonomia patients.

It's not unusual for patients like Melissa to be misdiagnosed for years. The disorder is so unusual that most doctors never see it, and they often do not recognize it.

Melissa was lucky enough to be born at a time when a handful of doctors and researchers are improving the outlook for such patients. Until recently, half of the victims died before they were 5 years old. Now more than 80 percent survive that anniversary, and for the first time many are reaching adulthood.

The National Institutes of Health, the federal government's principal backer of medical research, has contributed tens of thousands of dollars to fight dysautonomia. NIH also supports a large amount of basic research on the workings and the development of the nervous system, and that work eventually may lead to a better understanding of dysautonomia.

Other direct support for research comes from the Dysautonomia Foundation, a small New York organization that raises some $200,000 a year, mostly from parents, friends and relatives of patients.

THE FOUNDATION'S LARGEST single grant — about $70,000 a year — goes to the dysautonomia center at New York University run by Dr. Felicia Axelrod, a pediatrician.

The center, which now includes a satellite branch in Israel, is the only clinic in the world that deals with dysautonomia.

Preschoolers' lead levels reported high

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of American preschoolers have excessive levels of lead in their blood and the problem is six times greater among blacks than whites, a new survey shows.

The study, compiled by the National Center for Health Statistics, reported Monday that 675,000 preschoolers — roughly 4 percent — have lead levels that exceed the government's standard.

Boys generally have higher levels of lead in their blood than girls. As their ages increase, so do the differences in blood lead levels between boys and girls, the study said.

Lead poisoning can cause kidney and brain damage as well as anemia, mental retardation, seizures and death. It is a special threat to children, because their bodies absorb and retain lead at greater rates than the bodies of adults.

There are no known safe levels of lead. Previous research has shown that even low levels of lead in urban environments may impair the intellectual development of children and interfere with their behavior.

The study said 4 percent of children between the ages of 6 months and 5 years have levels of lead greater than 30 micrograms per deciliter of whole blood.

That is the standard set by the Centers for Disease Control. When a child has a lead blood level this high, the CDC recommends that he see a physician.

About 12.2 percent of black children have excessive lead levels compared with 2 percent of white children, according to the data.

The study also reported that nearly one black child in five — 18.5 percent — from low-income families has an elevated blood level.

According to the study, the level of lead in the blood of children from both races dropped with age. For adults between the ages of 18 to 74, men have consistently higher blood lead levels than women, regardless of their race.

Children from more affluent homes tend to have lower blood lead levels than those from poor homes, and people in urban areas generally have higher levels of lead than those from rural areas.

The statistical study did not explore the reasons for the differences, but researchers suspect lead levels can be influenced by body metabolism, absorption and excretion rates and exposure.

The most common environmental lead sources for young children are air, food, dust, dirt, soil, water and lead-based paint. Lead usually enters the body when it is inhaled or swallowed.

Citing potential lead poisoning in children, environmentalists recently have attacked the Environmental Protection Agency's proposal to loosen restrictions on the amount of lead that can be used in gasoline.

The EPA has come under heavy fire for its consideration of a plan that would relax the amount of lead than can be used in gasoline as an octane booster. The Center for Auto Safety says the plan would endanger the health of children, particularly in urban areas.

Children inhale two to three times as much airborne lead per unit of body weight as adults because of higher metabolic rates and their greater physical activity.

Studies have shown that in very young children, 40 percent of the lead they swallow is absorbed through the gastrointestinal tract. Adults absorb about 5 percent to 10 percent of ingested lead.

Slightly-behind status shouldn't delay launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle Columbia was rolled out of its hangar and into the Vehicle Assembly Building here early Wednesday, about 13 hours behind schedule.

The 30-minute, 300-yard towing job to the shuttle's assembly point came about six weeks before the shuttle is scheduled to rocket into space on its fourth and final test flight in late June.

The rollout, originally scheduled for noon Tuesday, was completed about 1:15 a.m. EDT. It had been postponed several times because technicians in the hangar said they miscalculated the time needed to prepare the space plane for the move.

According to Bill Williams, acting ground operations manager, workers needed several more hours to finish weighing the spacecraft before it could be moved. The weighing of the 100-ton orbiter was the final preparation before rollout.

Officials said they didn't expect the holdup to have any impact on the overall preparations for a launch by June 27, the current planning date.

The rollout from the shuttle's hangar to the Vehicle Assembly Building came 49 days after its third-mission landing in New Mexico.

Columbia is to spend about a week in the assembly building, where it will be placed in a sling and hoisted to a vertical position to be mated with its 15-story-tall aluminum fuel tank and twin solid-fuel rocket boosters.

The shuttle is scheduled to be rolled out to launch pad 39A on May 26.

Earlier Tuesday, technicians had rewelded and tested a defective main engine valve.

Technicians said X-ray and leak inspections of the faulty check valve, part of a gaseous oxygen line, showed that a patch job was successful. The problem was revealed by an X-ray camera on Monday and delayed the scheduled move by several hours.

Officials at Kennedy Space Center said they didn't expect the holdup to have any impact on the overall preparations for a launch by June 27, the current planning date.

"There is time built into the schedule to catch up, if needed," said space center spokeswoman Ann Skinner. "But a decision on the actual launch date is not expected to be made until the shuttle leaves the VAB for the pad."

Columbia is to carry a top-secret military cargo on its fourth flight, a seven-day mission commanded by Apollo 16 veteran Thomas K. Mattingly. The pilot will be space rookie Henry W. Hartsfield.

In its hangar, Columbia had 1,032 of its more than 30,000 heat-resistant tiles strengthened and replaced, Ms. Skinner said. Thirty-six of those fell off during its third flight and several dozen were damaged.

Ten tile gaps remain to be filled, she said. Seven pieces of tile will be installed in the assembly building and three, all in the forward area, will be installed at the launch pad, where access to them is easier.

Two troublesome systems that marred the third flight were repaired in the hangar. Jack Lousma and Gordon Fullerton, who kept Columbia in orbit eight days, lost one communications link and had to clean their vaccum-operated toilet by hand.

The S-band radios and toilet are now reported "in excellent shape."

Landing at White Sands Missile Range also left traces of gypsum dust in nozzles of a space control system. Workers at Kennedy replaced 13 jet thrusters, which allow the orbiter to maneuver in space. Two fuel pumps and an oxygen pump in the main engines were also repaired.

"All in all, we're in good shape," said Al O'Hara, acting shuttle launch director. "It's a tight schedule. But we can make it."

Administration fears possible anti-draft prosecution trouble

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials have expressed concern that prosecuting young men who refuse to register for the draft could rally anti-nuclear groups, The Washington Post said in Wednesday's editions.

The Post said the concern was raised April 12 at a Pentagon meeting of President Reagan's Military Manpower Task Force. The newspaper said it had obtained a transcript of the meeting.

Some participants also suggested that the first trials of men among the 527,000 non-registrants be held in places less populous than New York, Chicago or Washington, D.C., according to The Post.

The newspaper also said presidential counselor Edwin Meese III expressed interest at the meeting in prodding draft registrations by denying such federal benefits as student loans and unemployment compensation to men who refuse to register.

John S. Herrington, assistant secretary of the Navy for manpower, was quoted as telling other participants: "My feeling is that felony prosecutions at this time may have an awful lot to do with the anti-nuclear movement.

"I think we ought to proceed really cautiously on this particular point. This would be a real rallying point. I am not in principle against felony prosecutions for this," Herrington reportedly said. "I think the cases should be quiet. And pick the right jurisdiction so you don't end up in New York or Chicago and end up in Omaha or somewhere like that for your first few trials."

"Not the District of Columbia," the meeting chairman, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, was quoted

Tour group members safe following sinking of plane

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Seven U.S. tourists scrambled to safety from an aircraft at the North Pole in time to watch the plane sink through the ice, an airline official says.

Steve Penikett, general manager of Kenn Borek Air, said Tuesday the stranded passengers and two crew members were rescued unharmed six hours after the accident last Friday.

The pilot, Rocky Parsons, was landing the Twin Otter on a smooth patch of ice at the pole when all three wheels broke through, Penikett said from his office in Calgary.

"He landed on a lead, which is a crack that has opened and refrozen, giving a smooth landing spot. We've been landing on them for years," Penikett said. "This one happened to be newly refrozen."

The plane began to sink slowly and the passengers evacuated with survival gear while the pilot radioed a base camp at Lake Hazen, near the northern tip of Ellesmere Island. Six hours later another Twin Otter landed at the pole for the rescue and other planes were on the way.

Memory is a thing of the past with the Olympus OM-2. That's because unlike other automatic SLR cameras that "remember" exposure information just before taking a photo, the OM-2 has a unique metering system that measures light directly at the film plane, during the actual exposure.

So, without a "memory," the OM-2 automatically takes accurate exposures every time. Used with our Quick Auto Flash 310, the OM-2 renders perfect flash photographs since the camera actually controls the duration of the flash by cutting the flash unit off when the proper amount of light has reached the film plane.

And the complete OM system has over 200 accessories. Remember the name. Olympus OM-2. It's unforgettable.

Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. employee Mary Bass walks an informational picket line in front of Bell's downtown Midland office Tuesday. The Communications Workers of America is protesting the suspension and pending termination of a Corpus Christi union official involved in an ongoing grievance dispute with a company official who has been placed under a peace bond in connection with alleged threats he made to the union official. Midland local Vice-President Tommy Haislip said the union does not plan a work stoppage at this time.

Texas International leaders detail shuttling concept, schedule changes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

In the first steps toward merging itself with Continental Airlines, a new flight schedule and a shuttling concept were announced Tuesday by Texas International during a press conference at Midland Regional Airport.

In light of the scheduled June 1 pullout by Continental Airlines, Ben Karr, TI staff vice president in charge of marketing, explained his company would be replacing all of Continental's scheduled flights.

In juggling the location of TI and Continental aircraft around the two systems to best fit the needs, Karr said TI's DC-9s would be used for all the short hops while Continental's larger Boeing 727s and DC-10s would be utilized for the longer trips.

In addition, to meld the two airlines at airports where both are based, such as in Houston, a new service called Continental Shuffle will transfer passengers from one gate and one airline to another.

TI owns 51 percent of Continental after the purchase was approved several months ago by the courts. Continental employees had fought the merger by trying to buy 51 percent of the stock themselves, but the effort failed.

On June 1, the day after Continental's last flight out of Midland Regional Airport on May 31, TI will begin two flights daily to El Paso, two flights to Phoenix and one non-stop to San Antonio. In addition, TI will have five nonstops to Lubbock, three to Houston (two nonstops) and two direct flights to Denver every business day.

Karr said there may be some concern that Continental's leaving will cause the community to lose some air service. But with the merger of the two airlines, he claimed that there are 875 possible flight connections at Houston and a substantial increase in the number of connections at Denver and El Paso.

In getting from TI to Continental's longer flights at major airports, minibuses will carry passengers between corridors inside the carrier's shared terminal. Smaller electric carts will ferry passengers from gate to gate for late or especially close flights.

In addition, Karr said flight coordinators will be hired to monitor flights of both airlines. If one flight is running late and passengers need to make connections, he said, they can hold the other plane.

TI will continue its "bus fare" program, said Karr, with El Paso rates being $40 and $25, Phoenix going for $65 and $50 and San Antonio for $60 and $45.

"These bus fare rates have worked," said Karr. "We're enjoying a high load factor."

With the demise of Braniff International, he denied that fares will rise dramatically. "But I do think we'll see some changes," Karr said, adding that some airlines' fares aren't economically feasible.

Nor do TI and Continental appear to be in the same financial condition as Braniff. TI "has seen a lot of red in the past year and we'd like to see more in the black. But there is no chance of us closing. Our assets outweigh our liabilities."

While some airlines have been complaining about deregulation, Karr claimed that it has been good for TI. "We're trying to design a system that will make us profitable," he said of the plan to meld the two airlines schedules. "We're projecting TI will be profitable in June."

On June 22, shareholders of TI and Continental will vote on a financial merger, said Karr. Although one possible merger name suggested in the press release was Continental Airlines Corp., the TI official denied that any decision has been made.

By using the smaller DC-9s, the freight space available on flights out of Midland will be less than on Continental's 727s, Karr admitted. But once the new schedules are put into effect, he said there will be more flights available out of Midland and that may take up some of the slack.

"We think this is one heck of a product," said Karr.

Braniff employees' insurance claims to be honored

BLOOMFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Connecticut General Life Insurance Co. officials said Tuesday the company will pay all claims incurred before May 1 by fired employees of Braniff Airways, which last week sought protection from creditors under the U.S. Bankruptcy Act.

G. Robert O'Brien, senior vice president for group insurance operations, said Connecticut General has asked bankruptcy court officials for permission to extend the coverage date until May 13, the date Braniff filed for protection.

Braniff VP won't reveal 'sabotage' documentation

DALLAS (AP) — A senior Braniff International executive has declined to document his allegations that sabotage of a computerized airline reservation system played a role in the airline's financial downfall.

Braniff Senior Vice President Sam Coats, who leveled the accusations against American Airlines last weekend, said they were based on statments made to him and documents turned over to him and the Justice Department.

But Coats declined Tuesday to identify the people who talked to him or to reveal any of the documents.

"I have already stated my opinion about the criminal anti-trust investigation being conducted in Fort Worth. It would be inappropriate to say anything else at this time," Coats said in a prepared statement.

American officials have called the accusations "blatantly irresponsible and without foundation" and denied the computerized reservation system it operates was manipulated to damage Braniff.

American said it knew of only two instances when its computer reported Braniff full when it was not, and that both cases could be explained.

Other airlines and travel agents pay American to use the sophisticated reservation system, known as SABRE.

Some Dallas travel agents have complained the system consistently showed Braniff flights full when they were "wide open" and often lost or canceled reservations made on Braniff flights.

Creditors for the bankrupt airline were to reconvene today to continue briefings by Braniff executives on the current status of Braniff's assets and total debts.

"This debtor will be given an opportunity to reorganize," said Michael Crames of the New York firm of Levin & Weintraub, Braniff's main bankruptcy adviser.

"The creditors are intelligent enough to realize that if they sought a liquidation now, they wouldn't get it. If they sought their collateral now, they wouldn't get that either," he said.

Braniff owes 9,000 creditors about $1 billion. Of that, $732 million is secured by liens on Braniff equipment. The rest is unprotected by any collateral.

U.S. Reps. Jim Wright, House majority leader from Fort Worth, and Martin Frost of Dallas, have complained to President Reagan that thousands of Braniff employees are being denied emergency unemployment benefits to which they are entitled.

Court won't end TDC inmate limits

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A federal appeals court has refused to end the court-ordered limits on state prison inmate population that caused Texas Department of Corrections officials to close prison doors last week.

The U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, in a rare conference call hearing, rejected Tuesday a petition by El Paso County that sought to end the limits imposed by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice's sweeping prison reform order last year.

The state prison system locked its gates to new inmates May 10 because a quarterly report showed it housed 300 more convicts than the 31,755 men the formula in Justice's order allowed.

However, Gov. Bill Clements ordered the prison system, the largest in the nation, reopened and the state Board of Corrections announced a new limited admissions policy Monday.

The TDC accepted eight inmates Monday and 217 on Tuesday, officials said.

According to figures released by the TDC, the prison system now houses about 31,650 male inmates. The approximately 1,500 female inmates are not affected by the court order.

The appeals court also Tuesday temporarily returned a state appeal of the order back to Justice's court.

The court said it sent the case back to Justice so he can eliminate from the state's appeal of two issues on which a settlement was reached months ago.

Attorney General Mark White said the two issues were the state's use of inmate supervisors and the ratio of prison support personnel to inmates. He said both issues were resolved out of court months ago.

He said the order to send the case back to Justice was just to remove the issues and would not affect the state's appeal of the order requiring the TDC to give every inmate at least 40 square feet of space.

Two to be extradited in shipboard murder

HOUSTON (AP) — Panamanian officials have freed three Filipino sailors under shipboard arrest, but they said two other crewmen will be extradited to Panama to face murder charges stemming from an alleged mutiny.

The three released Tuesday and allowed to return to their homeland had been held in connection with the slaying of their first officer and an alleged plot to kill seven others.

But Panama's Consul General Carmen Crespo de Pinzon said the trio was released "because their involvement was a misunderstanding."

She said two other crewmen will be extradited to Panama today to face murder charges.

On Tuesday morning, authorities boarded the freighter Evergreen, docked at the Port of Houston, and questioned the crewmen individually about the murder.

Rodolfo Severino, the consul general of the Philippines, said he was on the ship during some of the questioning but he and his deputy were ordered to leave the ship after two hours because "our presence was influencing statements of the witnesses."

U.S. authorities became involved after the captain, Amos Hecht, an Israeli, radioed that a mutiny was under way. Agents said the ship's first officer, Dajit Suberol, 42, of Jullundur, India, was killed in international waters, 110 miles south of Port Eads, La.

Health groups want warning on aspirin labels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two health groups are suing the Food and Drug Administration, seeking to require that aspirin packages carry warning labels linking the medication with Reyes syndrome, a childhood disease that can be fatal.

The American Public Health Association and Public Citizen's Health Research Group are arguing that the labels should warn parents against giving aspirin to children suffering from chicken pox or influenza.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia on Monday, cited data from studies showing a relationship between the ingestion of aspirin during a viral illness and the development of Reyes syndrome.

Reyes syndrome is an illness marked by the sudden onset of severe vomiting and lethargy and can result in death. The Centers for Disease Control reported 210 cases of the disease last year, with 28 percent of the victims dying. Some cases are not reported.

Last October, a special advisory panel concluded that the association between aspirin and Reyes syndrome — while not fully understood — is documented sufficiently to justify avoiding aspirin when chicken pox or flu-like symptoms are present.

The Centers for Disease Control found the report persuasive and issued a cautionary statement suggesting that aspirin not be used for treating chicken pox and flu in children.

The FDA did not join the CDC in making the statement. Before the FDA decides how to proceed, the agency will hold a public meeting next Monday to review more information on the relationship between aspirin and Reyes syndrome, officials said.

The two health groups and at least one member of Congress have complained that the FDA has taken too long to respond to the panel's recommendations.

Rep. John Dingell, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, already has written Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker to complain about the FDA's pace.

The peak period for flu and chicken pox is December to May.

The Health Research Group claims that by not supporting a warning label, the FDA has bowed to pressure from the makers of aspirin. But aspirin manufacturers have denied exerting pressure, and the FDA says it has not been influenced by outsiders.

FDA spokesman Roger Miller said the agency would not comment on the lawsuit.

Device detects marijuana intake

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A new device allows authorities to test drivers' breath to determine if they are under the influence of marijuana, a researcher says.

"Leaders in industry, the military and law enforcement have strongly expressed a need for a simple, non-invasive procedure to detect recent marijuana use, which may be impairing performance on the assembly line, in the military or among drivers," said Dr. Stanley Gross, a UCLA researcher who showed his device Monday.

He developed it with the help of Drs. James Soares and James Grant of the UCLA School of Medicine and Receptor Research Laboratory in Glendale.

Authorities may find the little gadget helpful. The California Highway Patrol, for example, has been seeking a way to test for marijuana, said UCLA Medical School spokesman Al Hicks.

"The CHP has been stopping people because they were driving erratically, but they couldn't pick them up for drunk driving because they hadn't had any alcohol, but they were still a menace on the road," Hicks said.

In their research, the doctors found that after a single marijuana cigarette was smoked, it could be detected from breath samples for two hours and remained in saliva samples for three to four hours.

The detector, which resembles a white plastic filter for a cigar, was tested with marijuana cigarettes provided through the National Institute of Drug Abuse by the Food and Drug Administration.

Gross said the device never showed a "false" positive, which means it never said that marijuana had been ingested by a test subject when it hadn't.

Smokers breathe out, and the device collects the breath. Laboratory procedures then determine if tetrahydrocannabinol — known as THC, the ingredient that provides the marijuana high — was ingested in the previous few hours.

While only the plastic device is visible, the material that absorbs the THC is inside, said Soares.

"The laboratory procedure to detect the marijuana in the breath is the same one used to find it in the saliva and the blood," Soares said. "It's called radioimmuno assay, and it's being done routinely in labs today. It costs about $10 per test."

Support accorded Washington plight

HOUSTON (AP) — The League of Women Voters has vowed to work harder to secure ratification of a constitutional amendment giving the District of Columbia representation in Congress.

The 2,000 delegates attending the group's biennial convention here unanimously reaffirmed their support for the D.C. Voting Rights Amendment on Monday.

"There was never any sense of jeopardy," said Sue Panzer, president of the Washington, D.C., chapter. "The national league has supported it for 50 years and will be making a special effort to work even harder."

Ten states have ratified the amendment since it was passed in August 1978. Another 28 states must approve the measure before August 1985 for it to be ratified.

Facing SS reality

For all the things the Social Security system isn't, it is definitely the best example of what can go wrong with a well-intentioned government program that's allowed to become a political football.

The fund, in deep trouble for years, is dying, but Congress cannot and will not let it die. Information from Washington indicates the fund will go broke in October unless there is congressional action to bail it out by borrowing from other trust funds.

The Social Security system was a basically good plan for supplementing the retirement income and savings of Americans. As long as the fund was operated on a pay-as-you-go basis everything was fine. But politicians soon learned that by "playing politics" with Social Security they could garner some of the "gray vote." When Congress began adding extra benefits to the system, it grew top heavy.

Cost-of-living increases are a good example. Congress ordered the increases to be paid automatically each year at 100 percent of the annual inflation rate. The system literally could not handle the load added by the benefits and, figures indicate, the trust funds currently spend $17,000 more each minute than they take in.

To add to Social Security's misery, the American work force is aging rapidly. Whereas in 1950 there were 16 workers for every beneficiary in the system, today there are only three workers for every beneficiary. Statistics show that in less than 50 years the ratio will be down to two workers per beneficiary.

In recent years Congress has skillfully avoided the political difficulties inherent in addressing the problem. The Congress has only appied band-aids to a massive deficiency that grows larger with each passing minute. There are solutions to Social Security's woes, but none is easy — from a political standpoint.

What the Congress must consider at this point is to bring federal workers under the program in order to expand the pool of those paying into the system, to limit future cost-of-living increases to a flat annual raise instead of matching the actual inflation rate, to move the planned tax increase forward from 1985 and to attack abuses and loopholes now draining the system.

Then the Congress must begin bringing about the difficult change that will cover over the ill-advised political moves of the past. Workers should be encouraged to stay on the job past age 65 when at all possible and the fact should be stressed that Social Security is not a retirement fund within itself.

None of these changes is particularly pleasant to think about, but they are actions that have to be taken to keep a good supplemental retirement income program afloat.

For a Congress accustomed to "playing politics" with the Social Security system, you can bet these changes will be difficult to swallow.

No housing subsidy plan

A housing subsidy plan proposed by the Democrats and approved by a bipartisan majority in the House of Representatives would do little for the housing industry and would increase the federal budget deficit by $1 billion.

That would only make it harder to bring down the high interest rates which are the underlying cause of the troubles of the housing industry.

The high interest rates are paralyzing the market for homes and condominiums, even in Midland where a high growth rate and exceptional local economy have kept the housing industry basically healthy. The emergency rescue plan would subsidize mortgages for a relatively few number of units, less than 100,000 nationwide, which is a drop in the bucket. The lucky purchasers would get loans discounted at a maximum of 6 percentage points under the going interest rate. The government would make up the discount.

The buyers would have to pay the government back when the property was resold or rented, but meanwhile the government would have to borrow the money at current rates of interest (12 percent on treasury bills at present) and the interest cost would never be repaid. The $1 billion is just the first annual installment on a new government handout program that would continue for at least a generation.

Congress loves to vote handouts, but this proposal is neither effective nor fair.

It would be complicated and expensive to administer. It would support an industry in which wages are higher than almost any other segment of the economy. It would interfere with the operation of the free market, which otherwise will require some wage compromises. Why should the taxpayers support the construction tradesmen at the high levels of compensation to which they have become accustomed?

Subsidies would go to some relatively affluent buyers — with incomes of up to $31,200 a year in the San Diego area. What about the poor stiffs who have just taken out back-breaking mortgages?

There is real suffering as a result of the high unemployment in the construction trades and in the lumber industry. But this billion-dollar stopgap is not the answer. Emergency welfare aid should be directed to unemployed workers whose benefits and savings have run out. Welfare should not be handed out wholesale to entire industries.

Congress should try to improve the entire economy. That, in turn, will help the housing industry.

Another View:

Ending the slaughter

Drunks behind the wheel cause about half of the 50,000 lives lost every year in highway crashes in the United States, so it's hard to come out against anything that might get drunken drivers off the road.

It's hard, though, to see much good coming out of the Presidential Commission on Drunk Driving that President Reagan announced the other day with representatives of the auto industry benignly looking on. Or out of the accompanying seat belt campaign that is supposed to persuade motorists to buckle up.

The administration wants to make people aware that drunk driving is dangerous. Are many people unaware of it now? Is it likely that many people, if asked, would say they were opposed to better enforcement of the drunk-driving laws or "more organized and systematic" handling of the problem by the states?

The trouble with the public relations approach is that it puts all the emphasis on the responsibility of drivers and passengers. All right, sure, citizens ought to be responsible, but what about the responsibility of auto manufacturers to make safer vehicles? What about the responsibility of the government to see that they do?

On those scores, the administration has gone into reverse. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has thrown out the rules that called for "passive restraints" like air bags and automatic seat belts, which, working for sober drivers as well as drunk ones, could save about 9,000 lives. NHTSA also has moved to roll back the federal rule on auto bumpers. It canceled its Car Book, which gave people information on crash tests, safety recalls and the like.

P.R. and persuasion and even penalties (after the accidents) are not going to make much headway in cutting down the slaughter on the highways. Safer vehicles will.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

FTC study says realtors ripping-off public

WASHINGTON — As if inflated housing prices and Pikes Peak interest rates weren't discouraging enough, American home buyers may also be getting ripped off by their real estate agents. This is the conclusion of a secret study that the Federal Trade Commission has carefully suppresed.

Jack Anderson

The 475-page report examines real estate practices, and it lays things right on the line. There are two basic troubles with the industry, according to the study: lack of competition in brokers' commissions and "barriers to the free flow of information to consumers."

The FTC found "substantial evidence ... that (commission rates) are maintained at artificially high levels in the brokerage industry." It added: "Average commissions increased at least 615 percent between 1950 and 1979 — nearly twice the increase in wages for comparable white-collar jobs and nearly three times the increase in consumer prices during the same period."

Most home buyers don't realize that the standard 6 or 7 percent brokerage commission is not set by law, but by agreement among brokers. Current brokerage rates, says the study, "are the result of industry-imposed restrictions and structures that discourage price competition." Estimates the document: "A reduction of one point in the prevailing commission rate nationwide would yield a saving to consumers of $1.3 billion, using 1978 figures."

In transient metropolitan areas where most of the real estate action is, a house that changes hands every few years keeps accumulating large brokerage fees. The constant tacking on of 6 or 7 percent at each transaction artificially inflates the market value of the property, as well as the paper value of nearby homes that may not have been on the market for 20 years.

In short, real estate prices and brokerage fees should be everybody's business. Yet the FTC investigators found that even homeowners are woefully ignorant about the agents' commissions and how they are set. "Approximately half of all sellers offering an answer to our survey question believed commission rates are fixed by law or by the Board of Realtors," the FTC report states.

Another bit of information that real estate brokers rarely volunteer could save the harried home buyer money if he were aware of it: The broker and his sales force are legally the agents of the seller, who pays their commission out of his selling price.

"Brokers consider themselves free to steer buyers to those homes which maximize their income. This includes steering buyers away from homes listed by discount brokers," warns the secret study.

As a result, a buyer won't likely be told the lowest prices a seller will accept — while the agent is duty-bound to tell the seller the highest price he reckons the buyer will pay.

Yet most home buyers mistakenly believe that the friendly real estate agent, who caters to their every whim, is "their" representative. They don't realize their error until settlement time, when "their" agent sits down at the table next to his real boss — the seller.

This is important information for consumers — or would be if they could find out about it. But investigators for Rep. Ben Rosenthal, D-N.Y., told my associate Tony Capaccio that the report has been gathering dust at FTC headquarters since December 1980.

NO-PUFF PRIZEFIGHT: When heavyweight champion Larry Holmes and challenger Gerry Cooney meet in Las Vegas on June 11, there won't be a Camel in sight of the cameras. Under the terms of a promotional contract between R.J. Reynolds and Don King Productions, the Camel cigarette logo was to appear on two ring posts and the mat.

But Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., learned of the arrangement and notified the Justice Department. Waxman was concerned that, when the fight is re-broadcast on ABC-TV and subscription television, the Camel ads would violate the decade-old federal law prohibiting cigarette advertising on television.

The Justice Department agreed with Waxman, and Reynolds agreed to drop the Camel decor.

WHAT'S COOKING?: As unemployment soars, there is one field that is booming, where demand outstrips the supply of qualified applicants: gourmet chefs.

Washington, D.C., is a prime — or at least choice — example of the public's growing insistence on expertly prepared restaurant meals. Dr. Barkev Kibarian, who has operated the Washington Culinary School for the past three years, says he can't keep up with the demand for his graduates.

The social-intellectual standing of his students has risen dramatically. When he started, only about one in five had ever been to college; now only about one in five hasn't. Kibarian gets applications from Yale and Bryn Mawr, from artists and architects, historians and medical students — even government employees who figure they'll get more respect and less hassle in front of a stove than behind a desk.

A CHANGING WORLD

Falklands' future important to sea travel

There was far more than Secretary of State Alexander Haig mentioned in the U.S. logical decision to assist Britain in its efforts to recapture the Falkland Islands from Argentina.

John Pinkerman

True, London is a traditional and North Atlantic Treaty Organization ally of Washington. True, the U.S. decision was based on moral grounds — the fact that Buenos Aires broke off diplomatic negotiations to seize the remote and bleak isles by military force.

The real and strategic reason for the U.S. move, however, was that should the Falklands and their outlying isles fall into unfriendly hands, the safety of important oil-bearing and mineral-bearing sea traffic from the Indian Ocean into the South Atlantic and on to America would be put in jeopardy.

At present there are a number of "safety" spots that help keep these vital supply routes open to U.S. and Western democratic nations. Cape Town, South Africa, is one, even though Washington and most Allied regimes refuse to grant South Africa the credit it deserves for rejecting communist nations and doing its unsolicited best to help the free world.

The Falklands, in British hands, of course, have been another point of safety and protection for friendly shipping. Ascension island, 1,900 miles west of Zaire in the South Atlantic, has been another. It is British-controlled and, as it was in World War II, so is it today an important outpost for U.S. interests. St. Helena, 700 miles south of Ascension, also is British-controlled. Tristan da Cunha, 1,600 miles southwest of St. Helena — and again within London's sphere — is another part of the network that gives supply-ship captains a sense of confidence as they guide their cargoes of essential supplies toward friendly ports. South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands have been other links in the "safety network."

Let's face it. Like most Latin American regimes, Argentina's is, was, and, for some years, will be one of instability — and one certain to be vulnerable to the global domination aspirations and strategy of the Soviet Union.

The presence of Moscow in the South Atlantic would pose significant problems for both U.S. supply routes and for the ability of some of our newer warships to move freely from the Atlantic to the Pacific. For instance, some of the jumbo aircraft carriers are too big to manage transit of the Panama Canal, thus the route around Cape Horn at the tip of South America and adjacent to the Falklands is their sole passageway from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

All of this means, of course, that America needs all the friends it can get and keep in the South Atlantic and in the areas that provide rapid sea movement to the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf oil sources beyond.

Britain is a friend and its hold on strategically placed South Atlantic islands is important. Equally and perhaps more important is the Republic of South Africa, the only nation with coasts and ports on both the Indian and Atlantic oceans.

South Africa is totally committed to opposing communist expansionism and would welcome a stronger American presence in both the Indian and South Atlantic oceans. Most Western nations, including the United States, however, spurn the use of South African facilities. They scoff at racial discrimination in that nation — but in the case of Washington there is an incredibly contradictory bending to the wishes of Peking and an acceptance of Moscow. This does not make sense, particularly when there are the South African bases of Cape Town, Durban and Simonstown available.

Even more important, in the context of the danger of South Atlantic islands falling into enemy hands, President Reagan might ponder the fact that southern Africa and the Soviet Union together have 99 percent of the world's platinum metal reserves, 98 percent of manganese, 96 percent of chrome ore and 25 percent of cobalt. Of 27 strategic metals important to America, we are self-sufficient in only five — and most of the others must transit around South Africa and close to the Atlantic's British-held islands. Allies of the United States are even more dependent on imported oil and strategic metals along those same routes.

What all of this means in the consideration of the "bottom line" is that the United States has a vital self-interest in the fate of the South Atlantic's tiny and bleak islands and in the shipping lanes passing those islands to both the Indian and Pacific oceans. Thus, support of Britain involves not only loyalty toward a loyal ally but also a certain amount of self-survival. And, the situation points up further the need for a more realistic and friendly relationship with vitally placed South Africa.

False impression given of raises

To The Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to set the record straight as to the amount of raise the Midland Independent School Board granted the teachers, secretaries, and principals. The principals' and secretaries' salaries are computed with the teachers' salaries.

1. In the summer of 1981, the state legislature gave all the teachers of Texas a 26.6 percent pay increase to be paid over the biennium. We (teachers, secretaries, and principals) received 13.3 percent of that raise in our 81-82 pay checks.

2. For the 82-83 school year we will receive the other 13.3 percent raise from the state. Midland School Board kept the teachers' salaries at 32 percent above state (this has been done for the last three years) and added one more step to the pay scale which amounts to about 1.8 percent increase locally.

3. When the school board withdrew from Social Security, all MISD employees lost 6.65 percent of their pay package. In lieu of that loss, we are to receive 4 percent of our current salary or $650, whichever is less, at the end of the school year. Only those persons who "make it through the year" are eligible. This is for one year only.

4. Yes, taxes have to be raised for the salaries, but the tax increase will also include money for new buildings, improvement to existing buildings, as well as money for salaries. I hope this corrects false impressions given the public by the media.

Unbiased review?

To The Editor:

I just finished reading your critics review of the Permian Civic Ballet production in your Sunday paper dated May 2. I had the privilege of seeing the ballet performance of Giselle on Friday night and I was appalled as to how your critic reviewed the performance.

First of all I did not agree with her interpretation of the performance as a recital — it is not a recital! This is a very good "fine arts performance," which is on a par with your community theater group, and other community related performances that your local citizens work on for several months to produce and present an artistic performance as a service to your growing community.

It was hard for me to believe that your critic's description of the demanding performance of the artistic director and very fine guest artists and their artistic interpretations were not described more warmly.

I live in Houston, and have seen a good number of the Houston Ballet productions, which is rated the third in the nation, and your Permian Civic Ballet productions are produced as professionally as any of the community productions I've seen in Houston and other parts of the country.

I don't believe your critic reviewed this production fairly and without unbiased criticism.

Thing of beauty

To The Editor:

I want to thank some people and I think they probably belong to the Midland Rose Club. The effort that went into producing such a thing of beauty as the rose garden on West Texas Avenue behind the fire station should be applauded.

I go out of my way to drive by and look; sometimes I stop to stroll and smell; then I feel better the rest of the day. If you haven't done so, go by while the garden is at its peak. And again, thanks to those responsible. You're certainly making Midland a better place to live.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, May 19, the 139th day of 1982. There are 226 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 19, 1536, the second queen of England's Henry the VIII, Anne Boleyn, was beheaded.

On this date:

In 1585, Spain effectively declared war on England by confiscating its ships in Spanish ports.

In 1930, white women were given the right to vote in South Africa.

In 1935, British soldier and writer T.E. Lawrence — known as Lawrence of Arabia — died in a motorcycle accident at the age of 46.

And in 1945, more than 400 U.S. bombers attacked Tokyo in World War II.

Ten years ago: A bomb exploded in a washroom at the Pentagon, flooding several offices at the military complex. An anti-war group claimed responsibility.

Five years ago: Big game hunting was banned in Kenya to protect the dwindling wildlife that attracts tourists to that African nation.

Falklands situation not expected to affect Soviet grain purchases

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — American farmers may not see any significant benefits in their grain export situation as a result of the Falklands Islands crisis, according to one Agriculture Department expert.

The Soviet Union has halted at least temporarily its purchases of grain from Argentina.

But James Parker of the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said Tuesday that the Soviet Union has not bought significant amounts of grain from Argentina since January. Argentina invaded the Falkland Islands on April 2.

For that matter, he said, the Soviets have not bought any grain from the United States for two months.

"It's got a lot more to do with their buying strategy than anything related to the Falklands," he told The Associated Press.

Parker, deputy director for analysis in the agency's grain and feed division, was asked to comment on a British Broadcasting Corp. report that the Soviet Union has temporarily stopped buying grain from Argentina, possibly as a result of the Falklands crisis.

Less than half of this year's expected grain contracts have been signed by Moscow, the BBC said.

It noted that this was "probably of more immediate economic concern" to Argentina than Common Market trade sanctions protesting the invasion of the Falkland Islands.

The Soviet Union is the largest purchaser of Argentine grain.

Parker served as U.S. agricultural counselor in Buenos Aires before returning to the Agriculture Department last December. Prior to his assignment in Argentina in February 1980, he was an assistant U.S. agricultural attache in London.

One reason cited in the BBC report for the lull in Soviet grain buying could be the cancellation by Lloyds, the international insurance underwriters, of war risk coverage on any ships trading with Argentina or sailing in the South Atlantic. The cancellation takes effect May 27.

However, Parker said the British war zone announcements have been "very careful about what that implies for commercial shipping" between Argentina and other countries.

"Grain shipments continue very, very heavy," he said. "April shipments were a record for the month of April, and shipments in the first half of May have been very strong."

Asked in the telephone interview whether the Soviet Union will continue to be a good customer of Argentina and the United States, irrespective of the Falklands crisis, Parker replied: "There is no reason to doubt otherwise, unless the military aspects of the situation balloon dramatically."

The Soviet Union, which has been plagued by three poor harvests in a row, is expected to import a record 43 million metric tons of grain in the international marketing year which will end on June 30.

According to current Agriculture Department projections, the United States will provide about 15.3 million tons of the total, with Argentina supplying 12.7 million tons.

In 1980-81, by comparison, U.S. grain shipments to the Soviet Union totaled 8 million metric tons, and Argentina's shipments 11.2 million, according to the department's figures.

Foreign pests, diseases again threaten

WASHINGTON (AP) — It seems every time you turn around the Agriculture Department says it's battling a new wave of foreign diseases and pests which could pose a threat to the nation's livestock and poultry.

In separate announcements on Tuesday, the department said:

—Baby yellow-naped Amazon parrots once again have carried exotic Newcastle disease to southern California.

—An outbreak of screwworms in Mexico is threatening Texas livestock and pets for the first time in a year.

—The United States, Mexico and Canada are helping Haiti eradicate African swine fever to prevent its spread.

Officials said two baby parrots bought by a shopkeeper from a peddler were found to have exotic Newcastle disease and that all 150 birds in the store will be destroyed to keep the virus from spreading.

The disease can cause high death rates among poultry flocks if it spreads. It poses no risk to humans who eat eggs or poultry, although the virus can cause an eye infection in people who handle diseased birds.

In Texas, authorities are keeping watch for outbreaks of screwworms — larvae of screwworm flies which burrow into open wounds and feed on the living flesh of animals, including humans.

The Mexican outbreak was discovered on a ranch across the border from Comstock, Texas, and a joint U.S.-Mexico eradication program is under way, officials said.

An international control program is in effect in Haiti, which involves the killing of all the island's pigs to control the spread of African swine fever.

There is no vaccine for the disease and the only way to eliminate the disease is to eliminate the pigs. New, disease-free swine will be brought in later to restock herds.

Mexico, Canada and the United States are providing funds, personnel, equipment and technical assistance.

Officials said the presence of the disease is a threat to the swine industry in other Western Hemisphere countries.

The Haitian pig slaughter will be completed early in 1983. Many swine owners have already voluntarily killed or marketed their animals.

Those who still have pigs will be paid after their animals are slaughtered and the meat will be returned to them for their use. The disease poses no hazard to people, officials said.

House OKs guns for 'river riders'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House has passed and sent to the Senate a bill designed to protect the lives of Agriculture Department "river riders" by authorizing them to carry firearms for self-protection on their patrols along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Rep. Abraham Kazen, D-Texas, of Laredo sponsored the legislation.

Cowboys — or "tick inspectors" — working for the Agriculture Department have a primary obligation to prevent entry of cattle ticks into the United States. But they have complained of the danger connected with illegal aliens and drug traffickers they occasionally run into.

Corn planting continues slightly ahead of schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corn planting in the major producing states by mid-May was 69 percent completed, 5 percentage points ahead of progress a year ago, says the government's Joint Agricultural Weather Facility.

"Progress was ahead of normal in all states except Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska and South Dakota," the facility said Tuesday in its weekly report. "Rain on the Great Plains delayed planting and pushed progress behind schedule."

Students form anti-Semitic, anti-black hate club

By MARTIE BARNES

MANCHESTER, Mass. (AP) — Five or six eighth-grade boys who formed an anti-Semitic, anti-black hate club are being "virtually ostracized" by their peers to teach them a lesson, fellow students say.

Marc Romano, 16, a junior and student council vice president at Manchester Junior-Senior High School, said, "I know them all. They're terrified and very ashamed. Everyone is bearing down on them."

Meanwhile, school officials in this exclusive ocean-side community of 5,746 people north of Boston tried Tuesday to learn more about the roots of the club.

The club was called the "Nigger and Jew Hater Organization of America."

Students buying candy at Floyd's, a turn-of-the century store downtown, expressed disappointment that their school — predominantly white and non-Jewish — was receiving so much attention.

"My students are concerned this is becoming a media event," said Timothy Averill, English department chairman. He said it was unfair that the school was "paying a price for being open and honest" and being labeled racist and anti-Semitic.

"You (reporters) are here over something that happens day in and day out in this country. It's not peculiar to this town," he said.

About 10 of the 515 students at the school are Jewish or black. Principal Richard Howland said most of the students come from Protestant and Catholic upper middle-class families.

Howland said he and other school officials would be investigating.

"Can a small group of boys, 13½ years old, on their own come up with this, think of it, and organize it all by themselves?" asked Howland, principal for 13 years. He said the possibility was being examined that the club was formed with encouragement from adults.

One member of the group was suspended for three days and warnings had been given to at least another 10 boys, he said.

School officials declined to identify the club members but said there was a core of five or six and another five or six associated with it.

Members reportedly wrote the group's initials on blackboards and desktops.

The group came to the attention of school officials last week when several parents complained their children were being harassed.

Eve Cutter said her two Jewish sons had been called names, although the incidents occurred before she knew of the hate group.

Someone also distributed an anti-Semitic letter in the school, and Howland said 13-year-old June Sharkey, who is Jewish, had her notebook taken from her and returned with swastikas and the word "Jew" written on it.

No intimidation of blacks has been reported.

"It's very sad to see something like this in this day and age in a nice town like this," Mrs. Cutter said.

"I think the town has reacted very appropriately and the school, too, from what I can see," she said. "We've received a lot of supportive calls. Hopefully some good will come out of this."

"I think it first started as a joke," Romano said. "I think they liked the feeling of having a club, of being in a little group."

"My feeling is that the students were expressing a need for attention and that they found a means that they knew would be particularly repulsive," Averill said. "Ironically, they are getting the attention they sought."

Seven women fast for ratification of ERA amendment

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Seven women who say they hunger for justice have begun a fast for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment in Illinois, the only "no" state in the industrial North.

Led by Sonia Johnson, an excommunicated Mormon, the women from five states began their protest Tuesday. They vowed to abstain from all solid food until June 30, the deadline for the ERA's ratification by at least three more states.

If they don't break the fast, it would be a 44-day hunger strike.

Thirty-five states have ratified the proposal to bar discrimination on the basis of sex. Thirty-eight states must ratify it by June 30 for it to become part of the U.S. Constitution. Three states have withdrawn their approval, but the legality of that move is in doubt.

The group called on supporters nationwide to fast each Wednesday until June 30 and to wear a white ribbon to show support for the hunger strike.

"We want the governor and the legislators to change their hearts," said Mrs. Johnson, who was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in December 1979 after criticizing the church's opposition to the proposed amendment. "We think there's something, even in them, to be touched."

State Rep. Susan Catania, the chief Illinois House sponsor of the amendment, said she hopes the pro-ERA hunger-strikers will "embarrass" lawmakers into ratifying the proposal.

"I do think there will be an impact on people around the state who will now begin to say to their legislators, 'This is ridiculous. I thought it was ridiculous before that you had not voted for it. But now, we are being embarrassed across the world because of your failure to vote on the Equal Rights Amendment and I expect you to vote for it,'" said Mrs. Catania, a Republican from Chicago.

But Republican Gov. James R. Thompson, an ERA supporter, told the hunger strikers that their effort would fail.

"Fasting isn't going to change the Legislature's mind," Thompson told the women in an argumentative meeting in his office.

Of states that have not ratified the ERA, Illinois is the only one to require a 60 percent margin of legislative approval. The rule is under attack by pro-ERA forces.

Older parents face major problems and adjustments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Couples who have postponed having children should be aware that even careful planning does not eliminate some potential problems and adjustments, says the Rev. Steven Preister, director of the National Center for Family Studies at the Catholic University of America.

To accommodate children, he points out, the couple will have to renegotiate established marital roles; redefine relationships with in-laws; develop more flexibility; learn how to play with children; adjust to a changed financial status; alter home decor; and find time to spend together despite increased demands on their schedules.

"The decision to have a child at any point in the marriage will necessitate changes in the marital relationship," says Preister, who cautions people to plan ahead rather than wait to work out changes after the child comes.

Whereas in the past the roles of mothers and fathers were clearly defined, fathers are much more involved in parenting now, he points out.

Flexibility in parental roles "builds in a tremendous amount of anxiety because people must define their own roles," says Preister, who suggests that husband and wife actually negotiate the specifics of their new roles. They may want to ask:

— To what extent will each parent participate in caring for the child?

— If either the wife or husband stays at home full time, what will be done to ease the adjustment if he or she is accustomed to being in the business world and in constant contact with other?

— When, if at all, will the stay-at-home parent return to work?

— What type of child care arrangements will be made when both parents are occupied outside of the home?

In addition to redefining their roles within the marriage, the partners may also have to renegotiate firmly established relationships with their own parents, brothers and sisters. The couple should decide who will be involved with the child and what limits will be imposed, he advises.

The specifics of extended family involvement will depend on what has taken place in the family's past, Preister says. This is never a simple matter, he admits, but this is one area where "it may be easier at 31 than 21."

"When a couple lives together for a long time, the partners can become fixed in certain patterns," says Preister. "They get used to eating when they want to and going out whenever they feel the urge."

This usually changes once they have a child, he points out. Meal time often is determined by the child's needs, and the couple is apt to think twice about spending either the money or the time to go out.

When a couple is accustomed to spending a lot of time together, a child forces a big adjustment. The time the partners once spent with each other exclusively will be occupied partly by caring for their child. Preister cautions that couples should not allow their own relationships to suffer.

"They should plan to find some time together, even if it is just to sit alone for 20 minutes and talk over a cup of coffee each night," he suggests.

The home of a childless couple usually is not designed for children. Furpiture and other objects may have been purchased for their aesthetic appeal rather than durability and some changes may have to be made in the decor, Preister says.

"The longer a couple waits to have a child the more difficult it is to relate to a child on his own level. Younger parents are much more comfortable playing with kids," he says, "because they are not as far removed from their own childhoods."

Despite the adjustments and potential difficulties of having children later, he feels there are tremendous benefits to making a conscious choice.

"Older parents have experienced many of the things they wanted to. They tend to be more mature and have had a chance to plan financially," he explains. "Choosing makes for more responsible parenting."

Some of the benefits and adjustments of postponing children are still unknown, Preister adds.

"Ten years ago, most women at 30 were finished with childbearing. Typically, the woman became more outward-looking in terms of shaping a career and the man, who had been in the work world, became more introspective."

Take time in choosing antiques

By CLYDE SMITH
Copley News Service

Many homeowners are buffs of the antique world, so much so that they furnish their homes with a collection of very old chairs, tables and other pieces, whether the genuine or replicas of classic designs.

It is much more than a fad. The passage of time has but dulled the appeal or the popularity of antique collections, which many regard as prized possessions. The same cannot be said of certain other styles in furnishings or clothes, which have enjoyed surges of popular appeal, then faded into obscurity as another "in thing" comes to the fore.

A possible example might be the so-called "Chinese Modern," which was a mild "rage" in housing decor a couple of decades or so ago, a style that now seems to have gone out of fashion.

Not so with such things as Tiffany glass lamps, a Sheraton highboy, a Duncan Phyfe pedestal table, Thonet's Bentwood rocker, Marcel Breuer's cantilevered chair — all of which are examples of home furnishings that have stood the test of time.

They will probably look as good 100 years from now as they do today.

Because they do not fall in and out of fashion, and because they mix well with other styles, classic designs appeal especially to homemakers who want lasting value for their home-furnishings dollars.

But how can you be sure what you buy today will have that kind of staying power?

Well, I am neither an antique furniture buff nor an expert on antique collections, but the other day my mail brought some information on this subject which caught my attention. It offered what appeared to me to be highly logical tips and advice on evaluating antique furnishing styles, and thus worth passing along.

Primary emphasis was placed on the suggestion to "take your time in buying timeless home furnishings." In other words, do not buy on impulse. When you see a piece you like, go back to the store several times before deciding. Between visits, try to determine how well it stands up in your mind and how it would look in your home. For instance, the article said it is not unusual for a person buying a grandfather clock to visit the store six or seven times before making a selection:

Here are other tips that may prove useful:

Stay with accepted designs, whether traditional or modern.

You might want to go to the public library and brush up on furniture design categories that interest you, so that you will be better able to identify design elements and judge their authenticity.

Look into quality reproductions, which may offer better construction than some of the genuine antiques on the market.

Demand and scarcity are pushing the prices of the most desirable American, French and English originals out of sight. If you want serviceability as well as appearance, a good reproduction may probably give you the best of both at far less cost than a fragile antique of uncertain origin. I might add that that would be especially true if the particular piece of furniture is going to be put to daily use in the home. Of course, it would not have the dollar value that antiquity gives to the genuine very old.

Also evaluate the workmanship. Inspect the piece for quality of construction, finish and detail, relating these factors to the price.

Consider the maker. While antiques often are hard to pinpoint, present-day manufacturers make themselves known through labels, hangtags or descriptive literature.

DEAR ABBY

Pollsters rank low in reader's opinion

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: In my opinion the Gallup Poll's list of the top 24 professions in order of their reputation for honesty, integrity and ethical standards reveals a high degree of non-professionalism.

Policeman, congressmen and salesmen would no doubt have ranked differently had the terms "police officers, members of Congress and sales representatives" been used, thus recognizing the important contributions women have made to these professions.

And why were nurses, secretaries, schoolteachers and other predominantly female professions omitted?

You can put "pollsters" down at the bottom of my list for integrity and ethical standards. — APPALLED IN PA.

DEAR APPALLED: Move over. A lot of readers were also appalled. But here's a letter from at least one who had a kind word for the piece:

DEAR ABBY: Seeing pharmacists ranked No. 2 on the Gallup Poll list of professionals in order of their reputation for honesty, integrity and ethical standards offered a small consolation to my husband who is a pharmacist.

He's sometimes treated like a pest when he phones doctors' offices to verify prescriptions as he is required to do by state and federal law.

He's insulted by rude, impatient customers who resent being kept waiting until "all that red tape" is completed before he gives them their prescriptions.

He's even faced a crazed drug addict whose trigger finger was nervous on the gun because my husband wasn't moving fast enough to fill his bag with drugs.

Small wonder none of our children want to follow in Dad's footsteps and become pharmacists. — SMALL-TOWN PHARMACIST'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: You think your husband has problems? Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Recently when the Gallup Poll listed the 24 most "respected" professions, the most important profession of them all didn't even make the list. I refer to agriculture! Since the beginning of civilization, farmers have performed the most indispensable service to mankind — feeding the people.

Farmers today have to be knowledgeable not only in agriculture, but also in veterinary medicine, politics, mechanics and economics — to name a few. They are also at the mercy of unpredictable weather, government policies and world politics.

Perhaps that's why, in a recent government survey, farmers are listed as having one of the highest stress levels of all workers. — NO RESPECT IN COLORADO

DEAR ABBY: Nuts to your suggestion that the cost of the wedding should be split 50-50 between the bride's family and the groom's.

I think the family that wants a big splashy wedding should foot the bill. If they both want it, they can split it, but if only one wants it, the one who wants it should pay for it. — PAID FOR THREE AND WANTED NONE

DEAR PAID: Your suggestion makes a lot of sense to me.

CONFIDENTIAL TO AVOWED ATHEIST: To paraphrase Blaise Pascal, the famous 17th century scientist and religious philosopher: "If there is no God, we have nothing to lose by praying. And if there is one, we have much to lose if we don't."

Many adults choosing braces

By SUSAN PAYNTER
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — A record number of adult smiles are revealing the "railroad tracks" formerly associated with the crooked teeth of childhood.

More adults are now wearing braces for reasons that range from "Me Generation" self-awareness to expanded insurance coverage to advancements in dentistry itself.

"It used to be that adults felt they were stepping back a rung on the juvenile ladder to wear braces," Dr. Donald R. Joondeph, head of the orthodontics department at the University of Washington, says. "But now they aren't embarrassed about being thought vain."

Both Joondeph and orthodontist Dr. John Rogers, president of the Washington State Society of Orthodontics, say people now know that dental health and esthetics go hand in hand. Rogers says orthodontists — the dentists who straighten teeth and correct bites — made a mistake in stressing the importance of looks over function.

It's relatively easy, Rogers says, to make front teeth look straight. What's harder and more important is good "occlusion" — the fit of the teeth when brought together. A bad bite may affect the jaw, gums, general health and how long a person's "permanent" teeth remain permanent.

Rogers says improvements in orthodontic techniques and appliances can correct poor occlusion. By combining orthodontics and surgery, he said, cases that couldn't be treated well before now can get excellent results.

Joondeph says people expect their teeth to last longer. "It used to be that people would accept the loss of a few teeth as they got older, then the idea of getting a bridge and then dentures," he said. "Those days are gone."

Rogers says it isn't unusual today for more than a third of an orthodontist's patients to be adults. In some offices, the adult population runs as high as 75 percent.

Significant, both doctors say, are changes in dental insurance plans, offering inexpensive options for orthodontics coverage.

"That's the biggest boost," Rogers says. "Many companies are starting to take on this added medical program. It doesn't cost much more — around $2 a month — and gives an average of $1,000 in coverage."

Such coverage is especially important to patients who've always been motivated toward braces but whose parents couldn't afford them. With insurance coverage, working mothers can get braces for themselves instead of making the "maternal sacrifice" of getting braces only for their children's teeth.

Adult braces can cost a bit more than children's and may need to stay on slightly longer.

On the other hand, adults make better brace patients.

LIVING TODAY

It's National High Blood Pressure Month

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent — Home Economics

May is National High Blood Pressure Month. Many older Americans are victims of this disease; however, it also is not uncommon among young people. It may, indeed, begin its assault on the body during childhood. In recent years, hypoglycemia has become an extremely popular and "fashionable" diagnosis.

Since both these diseases are so common, they require an informed public.

The Midland County Extension Service is sponsoring a program on "Sugar & You!" dealing specifically with the subjects of hypoglycemia and hyperglycemia, on Monday, May 24, from 7:30-9:30 p.m. The program will be presented in the Community Room of Commercial Bank & Trust. Marilyn Haggard, foods and nutrition specialist of the Texas A&M University System, College Station, will be the featured speaker.

Hypoglycemia may be caused by any number of conditions. It may be organic in nature, due to the malfunction of body organs such as deficiency of the adrenal gland, or by a physical abnormality such as a pancreatic tumor.

Some 70 percent of low blood sugar problems, however, are functional or reactive in nature, displaying such symptoms as extreme hunger, nervousness, difficulty in concentration and headaches.

Treatment varies according to the causes of the symptoms. Organic problems such as tumor, will require the treatment rendered by a physician or surgeon, while functional problems such as depression, anxiety or stress will require psychological counseling and/or drug treatment.

Functional or reactive causes of hypoglycemia, caused by eating at erratic times or eating too much sugar or ingesting too much caffeine, the root of most causes, is to be treated by diet. As sugars are absorbed by the body following a meal, especially one high in sugar or starch content, a rapid rise in the blood glucose triggers the release of insulin, which in turn causes a rapid drop in the blood sugar.

It is most important, in treatment of hypoglycemia, that three regular meals a day be eaten. Snacks between meals are also recommended, thus ensuring a constant flow of glucose into the blood stream. A before-bed snack with foods from the meat (protein) group is most important, due to the long period between the evening meal and breakfast.

No special foods are required in the diet of the hypoglycemic person. Most food eaten by the family can also be used in the diet of the person with hypoglycemia. Foods containing concentrated sugars such as candy, pie, cookies, jams and jellies, etc., should, of course, be avoided. Fresh fruits and vegetables, canned products without sugar and lightly sweetened fruits, which have been drained and rinsed to remove syrup, may be utilized.

The use of herbs to heighten flavor may be used in preparation of foods. Mint, garlic, dry mustard, oregano can make foods palatable. Also fat free bouillon cubes, lemon juice, tomato juice, vinegar and sugar substitutes will aid the cook to prepare tasty dishes for the hypoglycemic.

Now recognized as a health problem of the first magnitude, hypertension is probably the most common of the diseases affecting the heart and blood vessels. Estimates of the number of hypertensives in the United States range from 20 to 25 million adults.

Over a period of time, the contant impact of hypertension, even when slight, takes its toll. Complications resulting from untreated hypertension (high blood pressure) affect vital areas of the body, particularly the heart, brain and kidneys.

High blood pressure can make the heart pump harder than normal and arteries become less elastic. After a while, the heart may get larger, then weaken and stop pumping effectively. Hypertension can speed up the progression of atherosclerosis, hardening of the arteries, involved in coronary heart attacks. In the eyes, wear and tear on the retina's blood vessels may bring on swelling, tiny hemorrhages, and eventually, blindness. Vessels of the kidneys are often hardest hit and eventually the kidneys are no longer able to carry wastes from the body. Stroke (rupture of a brain blood vessel) is another possibility associated with high blood pressure.

In most cases, high blood pressure is painless and produces no symptoms whatever. Headaches, dizziness, shortness of breath, flushing of the face, fatigue or insomnia, may be symptoms, but such "symptoms" are common to other disorders, too. So tell your physician about symptoms you feel, and let him to the diagnosing, and follow through with treatment, if necessary.

Just what causes hypertension? It appears that no one condition will explain all the causes. While there are no conclusive answers, there are several good leads: 1) An inherited trait. 2) Emotions. 3) Body chemistry. 4) Trace metals; 5) Smoking. 6) Diet. 7) Stress.

When a diagnosis of hypertension has been made, it is wise to begin treatment immediately. While in most instances it can be controlled with drugs, your doctor will no doubt have some additional recommendations: watch your diet, keep weight down and exercise. And a final word, eliminate stress, to the extent possible!

Shopping habits seen changing

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Swap meets have the potential to alter the country's future shopping habits, says marketing expert David Gourley.

Gourley, who is associate professor of marketing at Arizona State University, and a graduate assistant, Nabil Razzouk, surveyed shoppers at three major swap markets in the Phoenix area.

"Although 76 percent ... had bought used merchandise, 65 percent were highly satisfied with their purchase," Gourley said. "Only 3.2 percent were highly dissatisfied."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Dealing with a spot of trouble

DEAR HEARTS:

You never cease to amaze me! I'm continually getting letters from faithful readers who want to know how to remove a stain or tell me their own unorthodox discovery about getting rid of a stain.

After reading my column all these years, you know I've passed along many hints about removing stains.

Sometimes I'll get a letter back saying that a hint didn't work and I ask why.

But, since there are as many types of fabric as there are types of stain, who can say what will definitely work on which?

For instance, a lady wrote to say she used baking soda to remove mildew on a blouse. She sprinkled it on the wet fabric and let it stand.

I received a couple of letters from readers who had accidentally put children's clothing in the dryer with crayons in the pockets and had successfully removed the crayon marks.

I've always had success using pre-wash spray to remove crayon — you've just got to work at it long enough. A mild solution of bleach added to the wash water is effective too.

But these readers removed the crayon a different way: one by soaking the garment in ammonia every night, the other by rewashing the garments in very hot water and adding a degreaser.

So you see, Mother Nature has blessed man with ingenuity as well as with a number of good cleaning solvents.

If you can't make a stain-removal tip that has worked for me work for you, don't just throw up your hands and pitch it. Put on that old thinking cap and, if your solution won't harm the garment (test a hidden spot), then give it that old college try. Who knows, you might get an honorary degree in stain removal. — Hugs, Heloise

NO MORE SHINE

Dear Heloise: When my husband's pants become shiny, I grab my vinegar bottle.

Dip a cloth into the vinegar, squeeze it out and then rub the "fire" out of those pants — the shiny spots, that is.

Rub in all directions to work those fibers back up. Once you get those mashed-down fibers to stand back up, the shine should be gone. — F.O.

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise:

My face in the mirror
Isn't wrinkled or drawn.
My house isn't dusty...
The cobwebs are gone.
My garden looks lovely
And so does my lawn.
I think I might never Put my glasses back on'

— Grace D.

+ + +

That's one way to look — or not look — a problem in the face. — Heloise

TISSUE TIP

Dear Heloise: The boutique boxed tissues are pretty expensive so, when the box is empty, I carefully cut out the bottom on three sides, then slip in a roll of toilet tissue.

I remove the cardboard tube from the center of the tissue first so it can be fitted into the box, then I pull the tissue up from the center of the roll. The bottom of the box is taped shut.

I find the tissue lasts much longer than the boxed tissue hankies. — Mapleton

CREATE AN APPLIQUE

Dear Heloise: Appliqued children's clothes are quite popular but also quite expensive.

I create my own appliques by cutting around a little animal or design on a printed fabric.

To keep the applique from raveling, I press it on self-sticking interfacing, making a bond.

I can then machine stitch around it or make an outline stitch with embroidery thread.

Be sure to put a piece of waxed paper between the applique and the iron to prevent the bondable interfacing from sticking to the iron. — Grace Johnson

Dental care for pets

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Don't feed your dog or cat sweets, and clean your pet's teeth once a week with a mixture of salt and soda, advises an article in Better Homes and Gardens. The magazine says proper dental care is the first step in preventing serious infections in household pets.

MOVING UP TO ELECTRONICS
This is the turning point.

Royal® 5010
Advanced Electronic Typewriter

Two-line correcting memory for more productive typing

The new Royal 5010 electronic typewriter shifts the burden of typing to the typewriter, where it belongs. An advanced microprocessor-controlled correcting memory has a 132-character capacity. Two full lines, including programmed functions such as tabs, carrier returns and backspaces, can be corrected automatically.

The Power of Memory

The memory does practically everything... automatically aligns columns, selects one of the three type pitches plus proportional spacing, and sets tab stops, impression control, margins and line spacing.

72-Hour Retention

Once functions are programmed through the electronic keyboard, the memory stores them as long as 72 hours.

Print-Wheel Quiet

Interchangeable print wheels create distinctive-looking printwork. Whisper-quiet, too!

Keeps Pace With the Fastest Typist

A keyboard memory, which stores the last 16 characters and prints them in correct order, allows the 5010 to keep pace with the fastest typist, without jamming or flicking.

Put the Turning Point to work in your office, today! Advanced electronics makes it a smarter, faster, quieter, far more productive typewriter.

THE BUTCHER

Catfish favorite dish in the South

By MERLE ELLIS

We called them bullheads when I was a kid and we caught them by the gunnysack-full out of the Big Sioux River. It was almost a summer ritual for my brother, my dad and me to go fishing for bullheads every Saturday night after work. It began after dark on Friday night when my brother and I would go out to a vacant lot armed with a tin can and flashlight to collect night crawlers. Those were the biggest, fattest worms in that part of the world and the favorite food of bullheads.

The very best time for bullhead fishing was after work on a summer Saturday, just after sundown. There was a gentle, warm, glowing stillness over everything then. Even the river flowed quietly as if giving the water a rest from its week of running.

After we closed the market on Saturday, the three of us would head for the banks of the Big Sioux with bamboo poles, lines, cork bobbers, hooks, and our can of night crawlers. Before dark, there would be a "mess" of fish caught and cleaned (they had to be cleaned or Mom wouldn't let them in her kitchen), ready to take home for a supper of fried bullheads, fried potatoes, corn bread and coleslaw.

I haven't had bullheads in years, but what prompted all of this nostalgia is the growing availability of farm-raised catfish in markets all across the country. Bullheads are members of the catfish family, and it is now possible to enjoy them without sitting for hours on the banks of the Big Sioux.

Personally, I don't think anything will ever compare to the fish we fried on those summer Saturdays. But my memories, I will confess, are colored more by the camaraderie of fishing with my father and brother than by the flavor of the catfish we caught.

Today's farm-raised catfish really are much better in flavor and texture than any we brought home. Perhaps it's because they don't eat worms. Farm-raised catfish are fed a strict, high-protein diet of corn, wheat, soybeans and fish meal. Because the diet is carefully controlled, the taste is consistent, with little of that "fishy taste" even the best of our bullheads used to have.

Catfish have long been a regional delicacy in the midwest and in the south, where "catfish, hush puppies and slaw" are as much a part of the gastronomic tradition as country ham with red-eye gravy and grits. But now they are available in markets all over the country. If you have never tasted catfish you owe it to your taste buds to give it a try. They are versatile, easy to prepare, relatively inexpensive and can be used in any recipe calling for a white, non-oily fish. They can be fried, broiled, stewed, smoked, barbecued, sauteed, or stuffed and baked.

Catfish are available in a variety of forms, from small two- to four-ounce whole bone-in dressed fish to whole-dressed fish weighing over a pound each. Larger fish are sold in the form of catfish steaks — cross section cuts — from larger dressed fish, or as fillets — boned sides of the fish, cut lengthwise from the bone. However you cut it and cook it, catfish has fantastic flavor. Here are a couple of recipes to prove it.

MOM'S PAN-FRIED CATFISH

4 to 6 small catfish or catfish fillets
1/2 cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon coarse black pepper
2 eggs, slightly beaten with 2 T. water
1 cup cornmeal
Oil for frying

Rinse catfish under cold water and pat dry with paper towels. Mix the flour, salt and pepper together in a paper sack. Add fish and shake to dust each lightly with seasoned flour. Shake off excess. Dip the fish in beaten egg and then roll in cornmeal to coat. Heat 1/4 inch of oil in a large heavy skillet. Add the catfish and brown nicely on both sides. This will only take a minute or two on each side. Remove to paper towels to drain. Serve with fried potatoes (in the South, they would be served with hush puppies), coleslaw and corn on the cob. Since I'm certain some of you will ask what hush puppies are, here is a simple recipe:

HUSH PUPPIES

1/2 cup flour
1 cup cornmeal
1 small onion, minced
1-1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1 egg
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
1/2 to 3/4 cup milk
Oil for deep frying

Combine all ingredients with just enough milk to make a rather stiff dough. Drop by the spoonful into deep hot oil at 350 degrees until brown, three to four minutes. Cook only a few at a time, turning frequently with a slotted spoon. Drain on paper towels and keep warm.

The body pays a high price for a bad habit!

There are myths about the use of tobacco and there are facts.

While commercialized aspects of tobacco associates it with a more masculine or feminine look of symbolic stature, the truth about tobacco is that the body pays a high price for a bad habit.

Many studies have indicated that one cigarette reduces the life of a habitual smoker by ten (10) minutes. That is an alarming fact!

Every time a person smokes a cigarette, his thinking process slows down, his teeth become more discolored, irritation of the gums and throat increases and the possibility of heart and circulation diseases become more prominent.

The potential of lung cancer is also increased, and fingernails become stained. With every cigarette, physical endurance and ability decreases.

The use of tobacco is the single most cause of death in the world today. Yet, it is extremely difficult for an individual to quit smoking.

This is where we can help!

Through the procedure of hypnosis, we have helped hundreds of people stop smoking. We can also help you.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, May 20, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Celebrities sharing this birthday with you include Jimmy Stewart, Cher and comedian George Gobel (the mayor on TV's "Harper Valley"). Charles Lindbergh made his first solo transatlantic flight 55 years ago today. Although travel is part of the picture this year, you will still do your best work close to home. Married couples find that they can do well in business together. Joint enterprises bring greater financial rewards than separate ones. You feel more settled now and a love relationship is more fulfilling than ever before. Imaginative and sensitive to beauty, you are especially attracted to people who are artistic.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Discard negative patterns and put a new idea into action. Money problems begin to fade. A child needs more of your time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Differing timetables hamper your efforts to obtain approval for an important project. Rely on those who have proved their loyalty in the past.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your dignity and determination make a big difference! You get business while others lose it. Listen to those who have more experience.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Self-improvement efforts are favored. Imaginative marketing will increase the value of a creative project. Finalize business agreements and sign contracts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A give-and-take attitude will win you new friends and more business. Someone influential from your past does you a good turn. A change of lifestyle proves beneficial.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Discussions with family members go well. Marriage is near, but you must not jump the gun. The financial picture looks promising.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep your opinions to yourself. Influential people are willing to cooperate but prefer that you put your ideas in writing. Emphasize the practical.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Let gossiping associates fritter away their time while you buckle down to work. Telephone call helps you fill in the missing pieces to a puzzle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You find an ingenious solution to a critical problem, thanks to the creativity and loyalty of an old friend. Tie up any loose ends connected with a loan.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Teamwork is the key to greater success. Encourage harmony and cooperation among your colleagues. Your income rises at the same rate as your productivity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A change of scenery would do you a world of good. Volunteer for that business trip your colleagues do not want to make. You will find the sales you need and romance too.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not throw caution to the wind on learning of a windfall. It could be years before you are able to spend the money. A loved one shares good news this evening.

Sometimes, the same suit combination can be tackled in different ways. How would you handle the club suit on this hand?

After he had limited his holding with his one no trump response, North felt that his fine support for both of his partner's suits merited a jump preference. South took heed of the fact that he could not expect more than nine to ten points in his partner's hand and wisely settled for game.

West led the jack of hearts. Since he would surely have to lose a trick in each major suit, the fate of the contract hinged on declarer being able to avoid losing a club trick. Obviously, if the suit were to split 3-3, there would be no problem, but since the odds favored a 4-2 division, the fourth club could present a problem.

One way to manage the suit is to draw two rounds of trumps and then play off three rounds of clubs. However, it is unlikely that the hand that is short in clubs would also have only two trumps. Therefore, that line must be combined with another possibility — that the hand short in clubs might have to waste a trump by ruffing "on air" instead of trumping a high club.

That can be accomplished only if East is the defender who is short in clubs. Win the king of hearts in dummy and cash the ace-king of diamonds. Now the clubs must be handled with care. Cash the ace and king of clubs and lead a club toward the queen. If East does not ruff, win the queen and ruff your fourth club with dummy's high trump, and you make your contract.

But it does help East to ruff the club, for now you follow with your low club and East has ruffed your loser. East does best to continue with a heart. You win the ace and discard a heart from dummy on the queen of clubs. Now you can ruff your heart loser on the table, and you lose only a spade and a club ruff.

Probation called part of trouble

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Adult Probation Commission says state prisons are not the only part of the criminal justice system that is having growth problems.

Although the probation system is an effective method of holding down the prison population, "the growth of probation is reaching close to the point of exceeding our resources," the commission said Monday.

It said in 1978 there were nearly 120,000 adults on supervised probation.

New concept for missile deployment 'likely to be selected', says paper

By FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior defense officials say no final decision has been made, but a revolutionary concept for deploying the new long-range MX missile in closely spaced silos is "most likely to be selected."

Their comments came after the Baltimore Sun published a copyrighted story saying President Reagan had approved the Closely Spaced Basing System, which would rely on the mutual self destruction of attacking Soviet missiles to save American weapons sitting in super-protected launch silos underground.

The White House declined comment on the report of a Reagan decision on the most controversial remaining aspect of his program for rebuilding U.S. strategic nuclear power.

But several officials close to the deliberations and studies agreed the tilt is in the direction of the closely based system, but that more work still must be done on the concept even though it was rated the most attractive.

These officials insisted on anonymity.

"We are continuing to look at other alternatives," said one official.

An approach known to have been strongly favored by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger calls for placing MX missiles in special planes which could remain aloft for up to seven days at a time, and, in an emergency, could launch the big weapons toward targets in the Soviet Union.

The search for what is called a "survivable" method of basing the MX stems from the increasing accuracy and proliferation of big Soviet missile warheads. Many defense specialists believe that Soviet land-based missiles are now capable of knocking out virtually all 1,052 U.S. Minuteman and Titan intercontinental ballistic missiles in their underground silos.

Technical specialists believe the Soviets would target two warheads on each missile silo to assure destruction.

The key to the closely spaced basing concept is a phenomenon called "fratricide." What this means, according to the scientists, is that incoming Soviet missiles focusing on U.S. weapons clustered in a relatively small area would destroy each other without blowing up the U.S. MX missiles in their covered launch silos, superhardened to resist 5,000 pounds of blast pressure per square inch.

Under the closely spaced basing concept, 100 MX missiles would be placed in silos near the surface and about 1,800 feet apart.

This is an entirely different idea than past proposals to space missile silos as far apart as possible so as to safeguard them from destruction by all but a vast barrage of nuclear warheads.

The Carter administration-approved plan thrown out by Reagan contemplated scattering 200 MX missiles among some 4,600 shelters and moving them around in a "shell game" strategy to confuse Soviet missile officers.

Defense officials said the closely spaced basing system could be in operation by 1986 and at less cost than the estimated $33.8 billion which was projected for the Carter-approved plan. If this could be done, officials said, it would supercede the current plan for interim basing of the first 40 MX missiles in Minuteman silos, an idea strongly opposed in Congress.

It was not clear that the closely packed missile field would require a defense by anti-missile missiles, officials said.

Pentagon official receives reprimand

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Pentagon official won't be fired but will be reprimanded for allegedly violating regulations on classified information, according to his attorney.

The attorney said Tuesday night that Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger also has dismissed a specific leaking charge against his client. There was no announcement from the Defense Department and a spokesman said he had nothing to say on the matter.

The charges against John C.F. Tillson, a decorated veteran of the Vietnam War, grew out of an alleged leak of information from a high-level Pentagon conference last January.

The attorney, James H. Heller, acknowledged that the penalty decided upon by Weinberger was much less severe than it might have been. But he said his client was innocent. Heller said Tillson has not yet decided whether to file a formal challenge to the letter of reprimand, which is to be placed in his personnel file for two years.

Tillson's lawyer said Weinberger cited Tillson's war record in deciding on the lesser punishment. That record includes two Silver Star medals for bravery while Tillson, a West Point graduate, was an Army captain in Vietnam.

Tillson is to be returned to his job as director of manpower management in the office of the assistant secretary of defense, from which he was transferred while his case was under investigation, Heller said.

Weinberger and Deputy Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci were said to have been angered when The Washington Post published a story including the gist of dicussions at a meeting of the Defense Resources Board. The newspaper said estimates were presented at the meeting that the administration's five-year defense buildup might cost up to $750 billion more than the projected $1.6 trillion — an estimate Weinberger later publicly said had no validity.

After the leak, Carlucci ordered an intensive investigation which included lie-detector tests for at least 25 senior civilian and military officials who attended the closed-door meeting.

Senate vetoes FTC used-car rule

By ROBERT PARRY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fifty-six senators who voted to kill a federal rule requiring used-car dealers to warn buyers of known car defects received a total of $323,350 in campaign contributions over the past five years from the chief lobbying group against the rule.

But Frank McCarthy of the National Automobile Dealers Association, which spearheaded the lobbying drive, said he doesn't think the donations "changed a single vote."

The Senate voted 69-27 Tuesday to veto the Federal Trade Commission regulation which would require the warning.

The congressional veto — the first ever of a FTC rule — now goes to the House, which is expected to follow the Senate's lead. The House has until May 26 to complete congressional action blocking the plan.

"It doesn't look good for us," said an aide to Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., a key backer of the rule in the House.

The FTC regulation would require dealers to disclose all known defects in each car they sell and to state whether the vehicle is covered by a warranty.

The rule would make car dealers subject to fines up to $10,000 for failing to disclose defects they know about.

The association's donations, made through its Automobile and Truck Dealers Election Action Committee, went to 36 Republicans and 20 Democrats who voted to throw out the rule, according to Federal Election Commission records.

Eleven other senators — nine of them Republicans — received contributions but opposed the veto effort.

Backers of the FTC rule blamed the dealers' intensive lobbying campaign for the lopsided vote, but said the campaign contributions were only part of the story.

"Car dealers are respectable citizens in every town in this country," said Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee. "They are often pillars of their community. A senator could think, 'why not give them my vote?'"

By vetoing the rule, "we are in essence saying to the public: We approve of shoddy dealers, we approve of cheats," Packwood said. "Most dealers are honest. But unfortunately, in every barrel there are a few rotten apples."

The senator with the most contributions from the dealers' association was Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., who received $15,500 over the five-year period, according to the FEC.

Jim Arbury, Riegle's administrative assistant, said the contributions did not influence the senator's vote for the veto. He said Riegle opposed the FTC rule because it does not apply to private used-car sales and would be ineffective in protecting consumers.

"It will give consumers a very false sense of security," Arbury said.

Arbury added that donations do not give contributors any special access to Riegle. "Anyone who wants access to his office gets access," Arbury said.

Jane Boorman, an aide to Sen. James Abdnor, R-S.D., who received $13,000, also denied any relation between the senator's vote for the veto and the contributions.

"He has always made a point of making his decisions independently of any contributions from anybody," she said.

Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., also received $13,000 from the dealers and 10 others received $10,000: Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn.; Alan J. Dixon, D-Ill.; Jesse Helms, R-N.C.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H.; Paul Laxalt, R-Nev.; Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.; Steve Symms, R-Idaho; Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.; and John Tower, R-Texas.

One senator, David Durenberger, R-Minn., received $10,000 from the dealers' group and voted against the veto.

Asked about the impact of the dealers' contributions on the Senate vote, McCarthy, the association's executive vice president, said: "We don't think the donations had anything to do with it."

McCarthy attributed the dealers' victory to its arguments that the rule would do little to protect consumers while driving up the cost of used cars and prompting a flood of lawsuits from unhappy buyers.

McCarthy said the association decides who it gives contributions to based on recommendations of dealers in the senators' home states.

Meese: New budget should lower rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential counselor Edwin Meese III has predicted that congressional approval of a new federal budget should reassure the money markets about the economy and trigger a reduction in interest rates.

But if that doesn't happen, "then I think we'll look to other measures" President Reagan might take to bring rates down, Meese said Tuesday night.

He would not say what those measures might be.

"We'll be looking at everything possible at that point," Meese told a group of reporters.

Meese said approval of a budget, even with the record deficit the administration projects, should be a signal to the money markets that there will be no "wild spending schemes" that would disrupt the economy.

"We think it's important to have the budget, to have a significant event that will trigger a lowering of the interest rates," Meese said.

Catholic Church establishes new guidelines for marriage

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

The Catholic Church has gone through many changes during the past several years concerning rules and guidelines for the practice of Church sacraments, celebrations, ceremonies and functions.

In the case of the newly-effective (January 1, 1982) guidelines for marriage, the purpose of making the changes in the guidelines was to make the process of being married in the Catholic Church the same for each diocese.

The Rev. Cliff Blackburn, O.M.I., pastor of St. Ann's Catholic Church in Midland, said, "All dioceses in the United States have done this. Before, each diocese had its own rules. All the bishops in Texas got together to make a set of rules so they would all be alike in Texas."

He explained why these new guidelines have been established. "Each diocese had a different pastoral practice which resulted in no little confusion when the parties to be married were from different dioceses. The substantial differences in the guidelines caused many couples to cross over to the diocese where the guidelines were easier. Our Church feels that many divorces are due to the lack of proper preparation and the immaturity of many who are married."

"The bishops remind us that these are guidelines for marriage preparation; they are not Church law," said Blackburn. "They have a basis in Church law, but we must take into consideration each couple who gets married. The guidelines are not to be applied rigidly."

The new marriage guidelines are in three parts, Blackburn said. The first is that the "engaged couple must have an initial interview with the pastor of the church where the marriage is to take place, at least four to six months before the date is set for the marriage."

He said the reasons why this interview is so far ahead of the actual wedding are: (1) to determine the eligibility of the couple to be married according to civil law — "for example, are they both old enough to marry?"; (2) to determine their eligibility according to Church law; (3) to explain the marriage preparation process; and (4) to set a provisional date for the wedding.

The second step in the marriage planning is the Primary Marriage Preparation (PMP). "This consists of the couple taking one of three courses — the Pre-Cana, which is conducted by a priest, a doctor and a married couple; the Engaged Encounter, which is a weekend to get with other engaged couples and is usually conducted by a priest and two married couples; or the Sponsor-Couple Program. The sponsor is a married couple from the parish who gives a series of four two-hour lectures."

Blackburn said the Sponsor-Couple Program is the course usually taken by an engaged couple at St. Ann's "because Pre-Cana is not offered very often here and Engaged Encounters are always full — everybody wants to go to Engaged Encounter."

"The PMP must be completed by 60-90 days before the wedding," he said. "If a couple refuses to go through PMP, it's questionable that they are ready for marriage."

Blackburn added that there are some exceptions to participation in PMP. These include the validation of a long-standing civil union, and marriage of the elderly or widowed.

The third step in the marriage preparations is the follow-up. The engaged couple, after completing their PMP, returns to the pastor of their church. He then discusses with them "the evaluation of their PMP, and such things as any religious or cultural differences they may have, their views on human sexuality, financial realities, in-laws, children and communication," said Blackburn.

"After all this is done, the couple may make the final preparations for marriage," he said.

If a Catholic who is not practicing the Catholic faith wishes to be married in the Catholic Church, Blackburn said that person should get some instructions in the Catholic faith before marrying, as well as the PMP.

"A Catholic is said to enter a mixed marriage when the other person is not of the Catholic faith," he said. "The Catholic, first of all, must respect the religion of the other person. Then he must promise to do everyting in his power to have his children raised as Catholics. The non-Catholic must be informed of this promise of the Catholic, and any conflicts must be settled before marriage."

"The bishops of Texas do not consider these guidelines to be the answer to all the problems of marriage today," said Blackburn. "They are only a help."

Theme wedding showers increasing in popularity

NEW YORK (AP) — For the estimated 278,000 couples who will wed this June, bridal showers can combine practicality with romanticism, says Katherine Orr, who deals with romance in books.

"The best part of my job is keeping up-to-date on romance," says Ms. Orr, consumer relations director for Harlequin Books, a publisher of romance fiction. "And one of the nicest new twists on an old tradition is the theme bridal shower.

"We've come a long way since the days of the kitchen shower, when the bride received pots, pans and measuring spoons. Now, showers can really reflect the interests of the couple being married," she adds, offering these tips:

—Make any shower more romantic by making it more personal. Keep in mind the personality and lifestyle of the bride and consider the groom, too, when choosing gifts.

—An old standby, the ordinary kitchen shower, can be enlivened with a "theme" — a couple interested in haute cuisine will appreciate a gourmet shower. Gifts could include appliances — pasta-maker, espresso machine, spice or coffee grinder — and gourmet or regional cookbooks.

A cordon-bleu course, a wine-tasting class at a local university, or a subscription to a gourmet magazine are also appropriate.

Luxurious treats such as caviar, truffles, exotic teas (try ginseng for the health-conscious), and hard-to-find spices will add zest and romance. Try serving a few gourmet delights at the party itself.

—Wine lovers? A shower with a bacchanalian theme would be a smash and provide spirits for many romantic anniversary celebrations to come.

Present the couple with their very own wine cellar by suggesting that some shower guests give bottles of wine or champagne from various countries or states. Other guests can provide gift items such as a wine rack, an engraved souvenir corkscrew, a wine cooler or holder, special glasses — even a wineskin for an intimate honeymoon picnic.

—An entertainment or hobby shower is a wonderful way to show you care. Music lovers will appreciate concert or opera tickets, as well as new releases by their favorite performers, or even a portable cassette player — with a second headset!

Art enthusiasts will enjoy tickets to a special exhibit at a local museum. Several guests can team up to give a romantic evening on the town by presenting the bride and groom with theater tickets and dinner for two at an elegant restaurant. (Arrangements are easy to make; just contact the restaurant's manager or use a credit card.)

Games and puzzles that two can play alone will enliven cozy nights at home; choose a handsome backgammon or chess set or one of the other traditionally popular games. (Giant jigsaw puzzles are recommended for fanatics only.)

A sporty twosome will welcome camping or athletic equipment — a double sleeping bag is a good choice. Special backpackers' dinners for two are available in the freeze-dried foods section at sporting-goods stores.

His and hers warmup suits, shorts and sweatbands — accompanied by scented massage oils might be appropriate for dedicated joggers.

Love, romance often sweeter second time around

By ELAINE OSBORN
Copley News Service

Bert and Kitty's courtship followed a course similar to many romances.

Their less than amiable first encounter occurred in a laundry room. She left him a huffy note because he had left his clothes too long in a dryer.

He apologized. She accepted.

From then on, they shared quiet dinners, favorite television shows and long conversations.

Bert and Kitty fell in love.

It's a typical boy meets girl tale except that the youthful connotations don't apply in this case by even the most generous stretch of the imagination.

He was an 80-year-old widower. She, a 75-year-old widow.

And it was precisely because of their ages that Bert and Kitty met with a raft of criticism when they announced their engagement.

Neighbors smugly scoffed that the marriage would never work. Their children, fearful of losing an inheritance, demanded that they live together instead.

The negative reactions that Bert and Kitty encountered are not uncommon.

They are experienced by many seniors who choose remarriage over singlehood, according to Chris Hayes. He is director of Psychological Alternative Counseling for Elders, a Santa Ana-based program in California.

Hayes said that the marriage-bound senior often is misunderstood by society largely because of the "dirty old man (or woman)" stigma.

"We've stereotyped individuals so that as soon as they reach 65 or 70, they no longer have sexual urges or want to go out on a date," he said. "That's so far from the truth, it's unbelievable.

"I've seen a lot of seniors on the down and out largely because of loneliness and then they'll meet someone of the opposite sex and there's a rejuvenation that's the neatest thing you'll ever want to see."

Only 10 years ago, a bereaved person was expected to dwindle away his or her remaining years in a rocking chair after enshrining a dead spouse, Hayes said.

But that is a role against which many seniors are rebelling, he added.

"We see a lot more people accept the fact that they're back on the market as far as dating," Hayes said in refereecne to people widowed after 30, 40 or 50 years.

U.S. statistics reveal that more than 35,000 weddings occur each year in which at least one of the partners is over 65 — a rate double that of 20 years ago.

In a study of senior citizen marriages, Barbara Vinick, a research associate at Boston University's Sociology department, said that widowers are usually more eager to remarry than widows.

Normally, men have a harder time dealing with a spouse's death, she explained. They usually haven't built close ties to family and friends that most widows have.

Men may have also suffered the recent loss of a job through retirement. And they miss the home-cooked meals, the tidy house that the wife provided, Vinick said.

She added that the male senior citizen who wants to remarry has statistics on his side since there is one widower for every five widows in the United States.

Out of 24 elderly newlywed couples she interviewed, Vinick reported that 13 of the men wed less than a year after their wife's death. Only three of the women married within two years of their husband's death.

But for either sex, self-inflicted guilt commonly emerges if marriage is considered too soon after a mate dies.

Hayes said that a senior's guilt about remarriage may also be caused by his or her chilren.

"Some kids can't fathom Mom and Dad getting romantically involved."

Others fear that the surviving parent will love his or her new partner more than a deceased mother or father, Hayes said.

"The thing that hits me," he added, "is the son and daughter who have real problems with their parent's selection of a mate.

"They're not convinced their parents have the mental ability to make decisions for themselves. They'll say, "Mom and Dad, this is what is good for you.'"

Hayes said that some children are frankly concerned about losing a legacy or a family heirloom if a parent remarries.

The program director said that the senior citizen newlywed may also encounter similarly negative reactions from his or her friends.

Vinick agreed.

"People mentioned that friends felt deserted by the remarriage," she reported. Or, not having the courage to remarry themselves, they felt apprehensive in regard to a friend's chances for happiness.

Sometimes, such doubts are confirmed, the sociologist added.

Photographing weddings is delicate work

By HOLT CONFER
Copley News Service

If you're involved with the financial planning of a wedding, you're certainly well aware of just how expensive getting married can be.

Wedding photography is always one of the items looked at as a potential spot for savings. After all, wedding photographs are a $300 to $500 item and the cost could well go higher if a great many prints are ordered.

The alternative to using a high-priced professional is to ask a camera nut to take the wedding pictures for you. And while this move is an alternative, I'm not so sure it's an acceptable alternative.

First of all, it's not really fair to ask your friend to accept the pressure of photographing a once-in-a-lifetime affair. Nor is it fair to the families and friends of the wedding party who just might not get to see what any of the ceremony looked like.

Several weeks ago I was visiting a camera store when an incident occurred that triggered this column.

A young lady asked to see a strobe light — she wasn't quite certain which one she wanted, but whichever one it was, she needed it by the weekend.

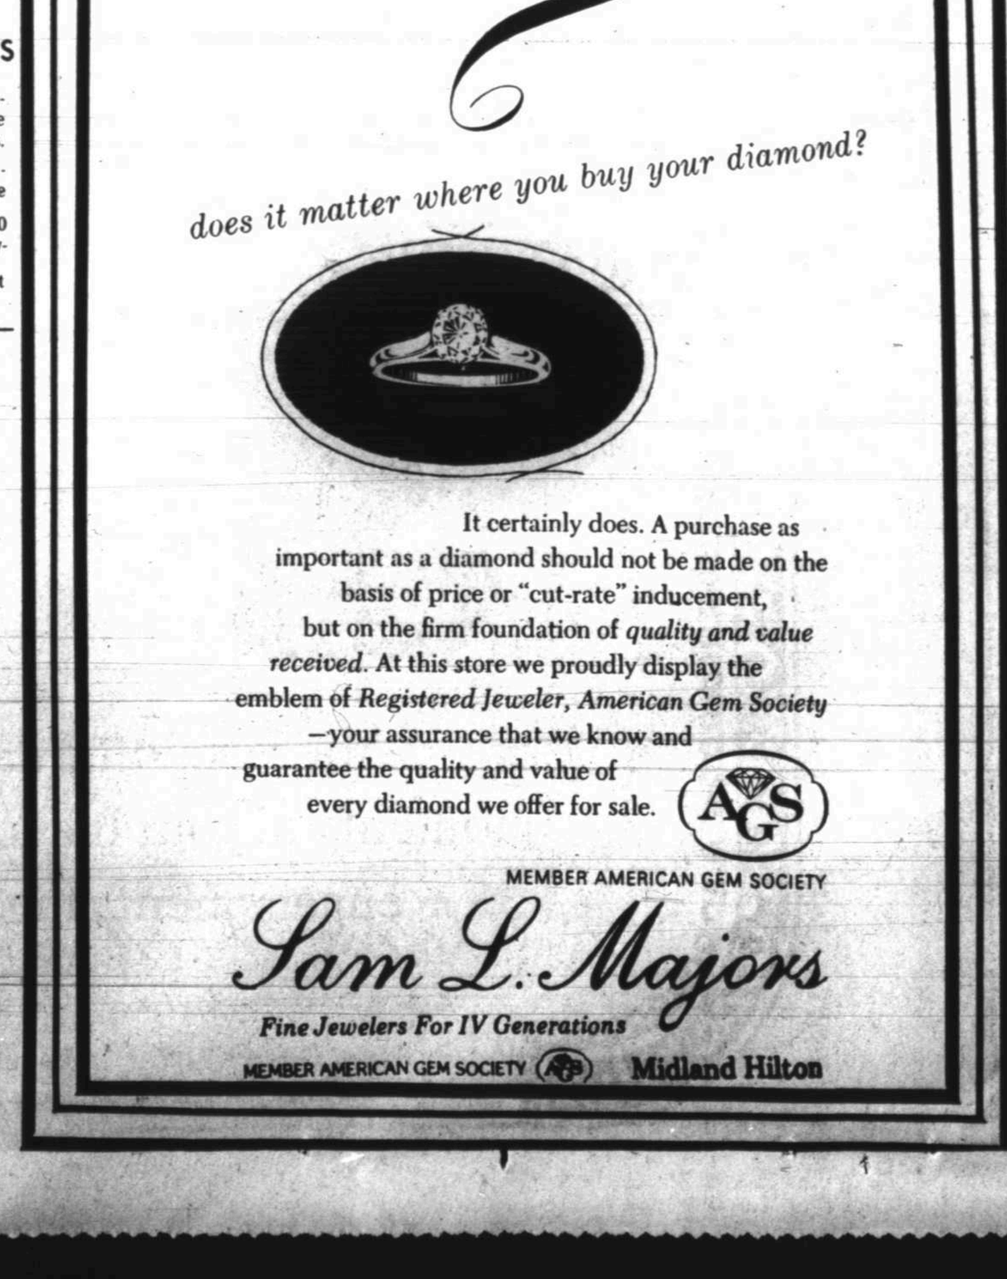
"I'm shooting a wedding for a friend and I'll need the strobe light for the interior group shots," she said.

Price was a prime consideration, so the capabilities of several units were discussed along with their cost. The customer eventually decided to spend about $65 on her strobe ... a unit that works well around the house and does a good job on subjects that aren't too far away (10 to 15 feet).

Lighting a group on a church altar requires a lot of candles (sorry about that). Churches are very big and, mostly, very dark. Just how big and how dark will become very apparent when you try to light them with a small strobe. The unit the customer selected puts out about 2,800 Beam Candle Power Seconds (BCPS).

But light output isn't the only problem this young lady might face during a wedding. She only had one camera and one strobe. If one of these pieces of equipment fails to function, the wedding photography comes to a halt.

The professional will never show up at a wedding without at least two cameras, two strobes, extra PC cords, etc. If the pro has a problem, you can be certain there's a backup system in the car.



Wedding gowns

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

Ever since you were a little girl, you've dreamed of wearing that wedding gown. You saw yourself in yards and yards of billowing white fabric, a picture of white clouds, lace and promises.

Bridal gowns are particularly gorgeous this year. And representatives of the local bridal boutiques in Midland say that the traditional look is still the most popular.

Victorian-style gowns with lots of lace are strong this spring as are full, romantic "Southern-style" gowns.

"The most popular styles are a return to the romantic look," said Kathleen McKenzie Owen of Alyce Owen bridal shop.

"The off-the-shoulder look has been building speed for the past three years," she said. "I don't think Lady Diana influenced our girls that much. They had already been wearing the antebellum, light, airy garden look."

She said that the other popular look is traditional—high necked, long tapered sleeve, and cathedral length train.

According to Rosa Ray, manager of the Bridal Boutique, the dress most often chosen by the prospective bride is one with a long, cathedral train, full bishop sleeves and Queen Anne neckline. Bouffant styles are also popular at her shop, she said.

For most, then, the choice will be between traditional lacy looks with updated details and those with high-fashion silhouettes balanced by traditional features or fabrics.

"Some of these gowns have as many as 15 layers of tulle," said Ms. Owen. "The gown is usually topped off with lace. It goes with anyone who wants a softly feminine look."

In general, brides nowadays are waiting longer to marry and don't want to look like innocent baby lambs laced to the lips.

Many of these brides choose to show a little shoulder and a lot of collarbone.

The trend is still following the Lady Diana influence a little. Just the influence, however. Not the total look. "Modern Bride" magazine calls this the "sexy, off-the-shoulder style with billowy sleeves, diminutive or dropped waistlines and full, full skirts."

But while most brides will find the traditional gown their favorite, still others—particularly the older crowd—may choose those in styles ranging from bright ball gowns to sedate, trilored suits.

"I usually recommend that my clients, especially those on a limited budget, concentrate in spending less on a dress andmore on the veil," said Ms. Owen. "You can't change a wedding dress around at all, but the veil makes a big difference. There is a lot of versatility you can get with a veil.

"We have picked up the European influence in the veil in a cathedral length, with handwork silk flowers or extensive beading."

Cindi Cowden from the Alyce Owen shop models a wedding gown by Ron LoVece patterned after a Victorian Riding Habit. It is of silk faced satin and lace. The lace has small satin rosebuds.

Traveling tips for the wedding couple

Copley News Service

A recent survey indicates that over 96 percent of all marriages involve honeymoon trips. For many couples, a honeymoon represents the first vacation away from home which can cause as many "jitters" as the trip down the aisle.

To help ease the worries of honeymooners, The American Tourister Information Center has put together a "pack-and-go" guide for couples traveling for the first time and for veteran travelers who might benefit from a useful checklist. In either case, it will help make honeymoon or future travel more enjoyable and hassle-free.

1. Make a checklist of everything you need to take, then pare it down. If you have the slightest doubt about whether you'll use something, leave it at home.

2. Plan your traveling wardrobe around one or two basic colors. That way, you can mix and match pieces and need only one set of accessories and jewelry. Whenever possible, choose clothes that are washable and drip-dry.

3. Bring items that can serve several purposes. For example, beach thongs can double as slippers; a scarf can be used as a belt or shawl; and a raincoat with a zip-out lining is also perfect when making the change from a cold climate to a warm, damp one.

4. If you find out the day and evening temperature ranges for your destination, you'll be better able to anticipate your wardrobe needs. Most airlines will supply the information.

5. A full but not overstuffed suitcase helps keep clothes wrinkle-free. Decide how much you will need, then select a suitcase accordingly.

How To Pack Perfectly: Basic Principles For All Luggage Types

1. Pack in layers. Begin with heavy items such as shoes, toiletries kits and appliances. Shoes should be placed in plastic bags or cloth mittens to prevent them from soiling other clothes. The insides of shoes are also ideal for stashing and stowing small items such as socks, handkerchiefs and belts.

2. Roll clothes that won't wrinkle — sweaters, lingerie, T-shirts — and place them around heavier items. Any empty spaces in the suitcase should be stuffed with tissue paper. This prevents heavy items from sliding and crushing clothes while in transit. The even weight distribution also makes the case easier to carry.

3. Layer heavier clothing, such as jackets, pants and skirts. Placing such items in plastic dry cleaning bags, cushions clothes and helps prevent wrinkles. The "alternating fold" technique is the best way to keep garments wrinkle-free in transit. Be sure to close all buttons, zippers and snaps. Fold trousers in the suitcase along natural creases and allow the ends to hang over the sides. Lay a second pair of trousers over the first, but alternate putting the top of each garment on the right and left side so that the thickness remains uniform. Leave them in this stage. Now, begin to fold the jackets. Spread out each jacket, lining side out, then fold vertically and horizontally. Place each jacket on top of each pair of trousers, folding legs in an alternating fashion over the jacket.

4. Once all heavier items have been packed, continue the layering technique with more delicate items such as dresses, dress shirts and blouses.

5. When packing a split-lid suitcase, the same basic rules apply. However, heavier items should be placed on one side of the case, more fragile items on the other.

6. Packing for soft-sided or nylon totes requires the same cushioning methods. Fold clothing items on a flat surface and insert into the case.

Quick Reminders:

1. Don't pack valuable jewelry. Wear it. If you can't wear it, then carry it with you in your purse or pocket.

2. Pack a collapsible, lightweight tote bag if you plan to go on a shopping spree and bring home more than you let with.

3. If your traveling requirements call for electrical appliances — whether hair dryers, electric rollers or shavers — purchase travel-size units that are lightweight and compact. Don't forget electrical adapters for overseas travel.

4. Should your clothes become wrinkled in transit, hang them in a bathroom full of steam to restore neatness.

5. If you plan to hand wash any clothes, bring several inflatable hangers with you. They help to separate the back and front of a garment and allow for quick, wrinkle-free drying.

6. Transfer your cosmetics and toiletries from breakable glass containers into plastic ones. Use plastic sandwich bags to help organize smaller items, such as cotton balls and Q-tips. If you travel frequently, it's helpful to keep a duplicate cosmetic kit packed so you can avoid preparing one each time you take a trip.

Get a great-looking hairstyle for 'the big day'

Copley News Service

The date is set, and now you're scurrying around trying to complete what seems like millions of little chores. Don't overlook an important aspect of your total look on the big day — your hair.

If you are having your hair done professionally, you'll relieve a lot of pre-wedding tension by using a hairdresser you can trust.

Consult your hairdresser at least six weeks beforehand, especially if you color or perm your hair. Bring in photos of the overall image you'd like. Pictures help avoid later disappointments.

Pick a hairstyle based on how your hair holds up in different types of weather. For instance, if your hair won't stay straight in warm weather and your wedding is in the summer, it's unreasonable to choose a straight hairstyle. Also, do not choose a style that doesn't look great once you take the veil off.

As a rule of thumb, don't go in for a drastic change in hairstyle. This is not the time to experiment.

If you're doing your own hair, get a haircut well in advance of the wedding day, so there will be enough time to allow the hair to "grow in" and achieve a more natural look.

But remember — unless you have healthy hair, no style will look good. To help you attain lustrous hair for your wedding day, the Aerosol Packaging Council hair-care experts have these tips.

First determine if your hair is oily, dry, normal or damaged, and then choose the appropriate product for your type of hair. Shampoo regularly as directed.

Hair is abused from many sources — overheated rooms, exposure to the elements and heavy brushing. Conditioners are needed to compensate for damage that may occur. Deep conditioners can improve the texture of your hair almost immediately and have a long-lasting effect. Conditioning sprays are also helpful.

When setting and drying your hair for your wedding day, use an aerosol setting lotion for an effective hold. If you plan to use a blow dryer or curling iron, follow directions carefully to prevent damage. Never use the highest heat setting except after shampooing when your hair is wet.

After washing, drying and setting, gently brush and smooth hair into place. Combing requires the same care as brushing. Never yank or pull at hair. Use a natural bristle brush for best results.

As the finishing touch, use hairspray to keep loose strands in place.

Choosing right wedding toasts

By DENISE FOWLER
Copley News Service

Well, she made it down the aisle without getting tangled in her bridal train.

That allegedly waterproof mascara held up and didn't stream down her cheeks when her daddy gave her away.

And colorful Aunt Sue has behaved — at least so far.

Now it's time for that portion of the wedding day where she really begins to worry about her in-laws and out-laws — the reception.

It's highlight? The toasts to the newlyweds.

If you're a member of the wedding party, and particularly if you're the best man or maid of honor, don't recite one of those blase toasts you've heard at scores of other weddings.

If you can't come up with something original, at least find something meaningful. Scour the writings of your favorite poet to find the choice words.

Susan Polis Schutz, one of America's best-selling poets, is also editor of "Expressing Our Love." It's a book of poems especially appropriate for this special occasion.

"Writing your own toasts gives all of you an opportunity to think about and discuss the goals of the marriage. Besides it will make the toast more memorable for you and your guests," says Schutz.

"I believe your toast should be brief yet include the most basic reasons for getting married."

"A Wish For Newlyweds" is one of Schutz' favorite wedding toasts.

"Grow together and enrich your lives with the friendship you share.

Grow together and enrich the world with the love you share."

Couple pays for wedding by barter

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

It was evening, the first day of spring, and Darla Kay Bardelli and David Charles Carson exchanged vows on the boat dock in front of their condo and "united their lives" in matrimony. It didn't cost them one red cent.

They had just bartered their way into marriage. The wedding was followed by a honeymoon at the Travelodge Tropicana in Las Vegas, which they bartered for.

The wedding's flowers, worth $150, didn't cost any money, either.

Nor did the custom wedding rings.

Even the minister, the Rev. Elmer H. Zachay, whom they selected from page 110 of an exchange directory, was bartered for — he and his wife are looking to a second-honeymoon cruise, instead of money.

Nancy Suenaga, in exchange for specially designed wedding rings, hopes to install a solar system in her home instead of accumulating money in a banking account.

Too, the services of the young couple's doctor, who wants a color television, won't involve the usual exchange of money.

The entire wedding was bartered, including arrangements for the reception, invitations, a wedding cake — including even the gown worn by the bride and the tux rented by the groom.

"We use it (bartering) for everything we can use it for," Bardelli said. "It's like when you were kids and traded things, except it's more sophisticated."

While it may be unusual to hold a full-size wedding without juggling a lot of bucks around, Bardelli and Carson's arrangement is a natural for them. Using cash would have been odd.

That's because they both are members of the Barter Exchange of San Diego, part of a nationwide network of some 40 barter franchises. Carson is an account executive with the exchange. And Bardelli's business partner is president of the exchange.

The partner is Frank Mahler, and the business they have been operating is Types Typesetting, Graphics and Design, a computerized setup.

The photo-typesetting shop is equipped with drawing tables and other furnishing obtained through bartering.

Half of Types' business is from outsider cash, the rest from exchanging goods and services with bartering members.

"I've been in business only six weeks and already have 40 design jobs. We're getting more business than we can handle," Bardelli said.

She attributes her success to additional business from Barter Exchange membership, which allows her to operate without a large outlay of cash.

How do you order $150 worth of wedding flowers by trading commodities? In the old days, farmers grabbed a couple of chickens, headed for market and came back with ham for dinner. And you may remember that Peter Minuit traded some blankets and beads for a Big Apple in 1626 — that trade for Manhattan remains one to be matched. (The goods were valued at $24.)

Fortunately, man eventually traded a few brain cells for computers, and a sophisticated computer system makes modern bartering possible.

When Bardelli ordered her flowers, she didn't take a suitcase full of type faces with her. Instead, she traded $150 worth of her barter credit in form of coupons.

The flower shop, in return, provided flowers. And the shop owner can use the barter credit toward purchase of, say, a new delivery van or repair of same.

This is possible because a computer keeps track of the trading, and each member of the exchange gets an account statement each month.

Like cash and other holdings, bartering accounts are assets of a business (the exchange deals with firms rather than individuals).

Is it a tax dodge?

Bardelli's greenish-brown eyes were blank when confronted with the question.

"I don't know anything about that because I've never tried it." (The IRS recognizes bartering. Disputes arrive, however, over the cost of services at tax collection time.)

Bartering, she said, is just another way of doing business. Books are kept the same as if cash were flowing. And any revenue is taxed the same. Too, state sales taxes are collected.

This is Bardelli's second marriage. Her first was paid for in cash. Does modern-day horse trading have any advantage over cash this time around?

Definitely, she said.

"Had it not been for our Bartering Exchange credit we would have had to drive to Vegas, and that would have been it," she said. "The cash outlay would have been too hard on us financially. I feel I'm making out like a bandit!"

Bardelli's mother, Janice DeVitto, was matron of honor. Bardelli's stepfather, Frank DeVitto, gave her away. And her brother, Chris, a college student, was photographer.

"The only thing better than bartering is family," Bardelli said.

Darla Bardelli and David Carson flank the Rev. Elmer Zachay at their wedding. It was arranged entirely through battering.

Romance and maturity are necessary in the establishment of a lasting relationship

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

Is there something almost mystical in the eye-to-eye contact between you and your mate or lover? Do you feel that you were meant for one another? Do you think that your relationship has something splendid and very hard to find?

Chances are, if your relationship is a happy one with a good chance of lasting, your answers to these questions will be "yes."

Despite the nay-sayers who argue that such passionate sentiments are fit only for characters in movies, high degrees of romantic attraction are necessary if a love relationship is to succeed, says La Jolla, Calif., psychologist Harold Bessell.

So, too, says marriage and family counselor Bessell, are large quantities of emotional maturity, the caring and devotion which provide a relationship's lasting "glue."

Together, they make an unbeatable combination. One without the other, however, is doomed to failure.

By coupling the Emotional Maturity Scales he has designed, which are used worldwide to measure character traits in children, with his new Romantic Attraction Questionnaire, Bessell says he can determine with 90 percent reliability whether a love relationship will succeed or fail.

By using the Romantic Attraction Questionnaire — and answering truthfully such questions as "I have a feeling of excitement when we are together" — couples can discover, Bessell says, whether they have what it takes.

A lukewarm score on the scale, which ranges between 60 and 300, is 180, he says. Those in relationships that should be taken seriously rate each other at around 220, while those who come up with mutual scores of 240 and up have got it made.

That is, as long as they score high on the emotional maturity scales in such areas as:

— Awareness: getting desires met constructively, knowing your own feelings, being able to discuss problems, coping with discouragement, sorting out the real from the make-believe.

— Relating: being considerate, getting attention constructively, willingness to share, keeping promises, sharing in the desision-making, resolving conflicts constructively.

— Competence: showing initiative, creativity, self-reliance, self-confidence, high standards and flexibility, and behaving with realistic expectations.

— Integrity: showing self-cotrol, waiting willingly, being fair, truthful, persevering, neat and genuine, and accepting blame when at fault.

If one or both love partners have an emotional maturity problem, the relationship can work with professional guidance or counseling, Bessell says, as long as the romantic attraction is there. But if one or both partners lack romantic attraction, chances of that relationship being satisfying for a long time are slim.

What this means, Bessell says, is half the people get married for the wrong reasons, and half get divorced for the wrong reasons.

"Too many marriages are held together by dependency and fear of change, more than a great respect, admiration and appreciation for the partner," he said in a recent interview. "Just because people stay married doesn't mean they are happy. It just means they aren't changing anything.

"Half of the people who get married should not get married in the first place because the potential is not there. Either one is not sufficiently romantically excited, or there is some significant degree of emotional immaturity that will prevent the relationship from developing."

If the chemistry is low, Bessell said, couples should look for other partners. If the chemistry is high, and both are willing to undergo therapy, "these people can have a satisfying relationship."

Premarital counseling can help couples avoid divorce

By ANNE FLAHERTY
Copley News Service

"Have you ever watched a television program called the 'Newlywed Game?' The couples who know the most about each other win the most money and prizes; real life is like that, too," said Maxine Kolius, clinical social worker and marriage and family counselor. "Couples who learn more about each other before they marry have a better chance for happiness and successful relationships."

Kolius is a psychological counselor who aids couples in gaining such knowledge through premarital counseling, a service traditionally offered only through a church.

"With divorce statistics climbing — 91 percent more divorces in America since 1970 and 157 percent more divorce cases since 1960 — couples must invest the time it takes to become more totally acquainted with a prospective mate before the marriage. I personally believe that premarital counseling can prevent what might be a partnership doomed to failure, and help make sturdier and happier relationships of those already on solid foundations," said the counselor.

"With the rise in divorces, we also see an increase in second marriages — fully three-fourths of all divorced people do remarry — and those people with divorces behind them especially need premarital counseling," she said.

According to the Journal of Family Issues, more than 1.5 million men and women in the United States will have been remarried in 1981 — accounting for almost half of all Americans who wed.

Kolius says that engaged couples experience three stages of feeling about their partner. The first stage is romantic infatuation.

"When you are in love you tend to idealize your mate in the beginning. You realize later that they have faults. In the idealization phase a person is blinded to their mate's flaws.

"Then the disillusionment phase begins. The person begins to realize that their chosen mate has bad habits like everyone else. At this time, problems begin to arise," said Kolius.

"Finally, couples experience an acceptance phase, in which they learn to adjust and to accommodate to their partner. And conflict resolution and accommodation must take place for any relationship to work."

Kolius offers the following reasons why divorce has increased so dramatically in the last decade:

— Partners have different expectations of marriage, primarily in the areas of sex and money.

— Lack of honest communication based upon fear.

— Partners do not allow each other individual "space," that is, the right to have their own opinions, free time, etc.

"Commonly, couples who get into trouble in a marriage do not communicate or accommodate on topics dealing primarily with: sex, alcohol, in-laws, friends, religion, money, recreation and the rearing of children," noted Kolius. "But the important aspect of conflict is not that it occurs, but how it is resolved. Unhealthy marriages are characterized by an inability of partners to resolve conflict to their satisfaction — and conflict resolution skills can be learned."

Premarital counseling, according to the counselors themselves, works better than counseling AFTER a crisis because couples are more willing to do what it takes to make their relationship workable.

"There is, of course, no such thing as abolute adjustment in marriage," Kolius stated. "People are constantly growing and therefore changing. Adjustment is always an ongoing process."

Who has the best chance of achieving a loving and successful marriage?

"First of all, couples have a mistaken notion of what love is," said Kolius. "Love is not exclusively romance and roses. Love (by my definition) is having positive regard for your spouse even though she or he doesn't always behave the way you'd prefer.

Time, care necessary in choosing the right caterer for a wedding

By NANCY GRAY
Copley News Service

Fairy-tale weddings require real live cooks, and unless you've got a godmother of Cinderella's stature, you'll want to hire a caterer to produce yours. Here's how professional party-givers handle the job.

• OUTLINE THE PLAN: Sit down with a pencil and pad and envision your "perfect" wedding. If you can get your fiance, parents and in-laws to do the same, you will get a feeling for the kind of celebration everyone would enjoy. It is your wedding, but you may want to consider following some of your in-laws' traditions as a way of sharing the occasion.

Start planning your reception as soon as you've set the date. Caterers will take last-minute business when they can, but usually work far in advance. Six months' notice is not unusual.

• FINDING A CATERER: Once you've decided on what, when, where, how much and how many, it's time to call the caterer. If you're renting a location, the people who lease the space may have suggestions. Ask friends for personal recommendations, and check the Yellow Pages under both CATERERS and WEDDING SUPPLIES AND SERVICES.

• BUDGET PLANNING: Decide how much you can afford to spend. Perhaps both families will help pay for the reception. It used to be a gift from the bride's family, but circumstances have changed, and now it's not unheard of to share the expense. Or, someone may wish to make a wedding gift of the photography or wine.

In any case, decide what your top dollar will be and when you make your arrangements, hold 20 percent aside for unexpected and last-minute expenses. You will also want to have some cash on hand for tips.

Call several people to get an idea of price. Many caterers charge per person. Some charge a fee based on labor and bill expenses as incurred.

Once you have an idea of the actual cost of things, sharpen your pencil and bring your dreams into focus. If there's not enough money to cover every item (and there rarely is), what are the most important ones?

The time of day influences the choice of refreshments. You can serve a delightful light tea at 3 to 4 p.m. with a beverage for toasting and a cake, but if your party is set for 7 p.m., hungry guests will be anticipating dinner.

If your ideal meal pushes you over budget, modify: switch to a time of day when refreshments are less costly, serve buffet instead of sit-down, pare the guest list or trim the menu.

• THE MENU: Martha Stewart, who runs a catering service in Westport, Conn., and has served such glamorous clientele as Beverly Sills and Robert Redford, suggests offering the more exotic foods as hors d'oeuvres and keeping the main course "down to earth." It puts less strain on both guests and budget.

She advises, "Don't skimp on the details. Little touches make guests feel pampered and the occasion memorable. Wedding matchbooks cost little but make nice souvenirs."

Ask the caterer about specialties. Inquire about the ingredients. They should be high quality. A well-prepared meal is more important than an elaborate one.

Theme your menu to the season. When you use what's abundant on the market, it's not only fresh, but economical, too.

A spring menu could start with smoked salmon and trout followed by asparagus mimosa, roast lamb and new potatoes for a dinner or asparagus and watercress sandwiches, curried toast, deviled eggs and tiny puff pastry tarts filled with hot minced lamb in gravy for a tea.

A mid-winter menu would more likely feature beef or ham. A fresh vegetable side dish could combine sauteed carrots, zucchini and turnips. Yorkshire pudding or popovers would be the specialty breads.

A satisfying breakfast at this time of year could be as homespun as citrus salad followed by ham and eggs and hash browns — or give it a French accent and make omelets and croissants for the same cost.

Your menu should reflect your own personal taste. Build it around family traditions, include macaroni and cheese if it's a favorite, make it ethnic or vegetarian, but do be sure to serve a few basics to make conservative eaters feel at home.

Thirst is ever-present at a party. Your caterer will be able to advise on how much to have on hand; it's up to you to choose exactly what.

Punch is economical; it can be "spiked;" you can even offer alcohol on the side so guests may add if they please. Or, you may have a complete bar set up. It's traditional to offer something special for toasting the newlyweds.

It's thoughtful to offer some soft drink alternatives. Perrier sparkling water is low in sodium, so it appeals to guests of all ages. Stewart adds a choice of garnishes: lime twists, lemon peels and generous orange slices.

• THE CONTRACT: When you've agreed on the details, it's time to write up the contract. Meet your caterer in person, don't just talk on the telephone. Make sure you have the same tastes. If you have never eaten food from the prospective caterer, they may be willing to give you a "sample."

If you are renting linens and tableware, ask to see them, to make sure everything is in good order and not overly shopworn.

Some caterers do it all from renting a tent to baking the cake. Some only serve your guests. Have your caterer confirm, in writing, the specifics of your order.

Make sure that you understand and agree to the cancellation terms in the contract. You don't need the added stress of surprise if there's a last-minute change in plans.

Finally, appoint someone to be in charge on the wedding day to "stage manage" and make sure all is well. Remember, you're the star of the show, so sit back and enjoy.

Elegant entertaining is still possible even for those on a limited budget

By JEANNETTE YOUNG
Copley News Service

You are just married and you want to show off your new home, but the thought of all the expense and fuss of a party tuckers you out. Fortunately, there are many choices between a six-course dinner and a standard chip and dip party.

Today, with the trend toward tradition, more young couples are experimenting with elegant, yet inexpensive entertaining.

"The key is attention to detail," says John Mariani, food critic and writer for Cuisine, Food and Wine and TV Guide. "Use only fresh, seasonal produce, have fresh flowers, avoid the same kinds of foods and serve a good jug of wine and quality liquor like scotch." If the presentation is elegant, the evening will be a success.

Typical accessories for elegant entertaining might include a marble cutting board, an ice bucket, bar tools and a decanter with matching crystal glasses.

On that note, rather than have guests toss coats onto the bed in the bedroom (where they later have to rummage through the heap), clear a space in the hall closet or set up a portable coatrack. Your guests will feel special when you greet them.

The "new" cocktail party means creative, light hors d'oeuvres, served with a limited liquor selection. Out are standard canapes, like miniature hot dogs, quiche, onion dip — no more bowls of pretzels. Instead, think seasonal and try creative combinations. Mariani suggests fresh vegetables, like asparagus with hollandaise dip. Or try oysters, cheese balls, a vegetable terrine or sliced cucumbers topped with chicken salad. Color and texture are just as important as taste so vary the finger foods. And of course, see to it that the platters circulate.

As for drinks, you needn't stock a full bar. Serve a premium white or red jug wine from California or New York (don't scrimp here). Besides wine, other basic requirements are a premium blended Scotch whiskey and a bottle of either vodka or gin to drink on the rocks or with mixers. Avoid sweet drinks. "Sweet drinks mask the taste of foods, are filling and add calories," says Mariani, a scotch drinker who frowns at the mention of a "Harvey Wallbanger."

Remember, the idea of a cocktail party is to offer bite-sized foods to accompany drinks, not to fill the stomach. Besides, many of your guests will be having dinner afterward.

If you want to extend your budget, try a buffet. First, prepare the table with a fine linen tablecloth and linen napkins and a centerpiece of fresh produce or dried herbs. Out are paper plates and napkins, plastic utensils and plastic wine glasses. Use your wedding gifts: china, serving platters, silverware and crystal glasses.

Pick an ethnic food theme, like Mexican or Chinese. It's not only innovative but can be economical, too. Serve a main course with a salad or appropriate vegetables and a dessert. Says Mariani, "The buffet table provides a retreat where people can more easily meet each other or join in conversations."

Beverages for the buffet should include a jug wine and a few liquors that will complement your food choices, such as beer, tequila or scotch, one of the few libations that stands up to spirited, spicy foods.

Another party version is the dessert open house which allows guests to arrive after the movies or dinner at home. Serve a sacher torte, fruit pies and an ice cream cake. To accompany desserts, offer a rich brewed coffee and a couple liqueurs.

First marriage advertisement

The first known matrimonial advertisment appeared in John Houghton's "Collection for the Improvement of Husbandry and Trade," July 19, 1695: "A Gentleman about 30 years of age, that says he has a Very Good Estate, would willingly Match Himself to some young Gentlewoman that has a fortune of 3,000 pounds of thereabouts. And he will make Settlement to Content."

Developing modern coins

Modern European coins began to develop in the 11th century A.D., the best-known being the English pound. When the Normans conquered England in 1066 they brought with them a silver penny containing 7⅓ percent copper and decorated with a small star, or "starling." The Saxons corrupted the name to "sterling."

Because 240 of these coins weighed a troy pound, as the need arose for a more valuable item of currency, the British came to speak of the pound sterling.

It's not 'Fuji-Yama'

Mount Fuji, Japan's highest and loveliest mountain, is called in Japanese "Fuji-san," never "Fuji-yama." "San" and "yama" are alternate readings of the same Chinese character for mountain, but "yama" is a generalized term for mountain while "san" is always used for particular names and can be considered the equivalent of the English "Mount."

Older first-time parents enter a different world

By JUDEE KELLY
Copley News Service

Diane and Joe Rey were avid sailors when they met more than five years ago.

"We married and decided we'd just sail into the sunset," said Mrs. Rey.

There was little talk of beginning a family. The Reys were in their 40s. He already had a teen-age daughter by a previous marriage, and Diane had been told she could never have children.

During the last two years, the Reys have barely touched their boat, and they are in the process of selling their split-level home perched on a bluff overlooking the ocean.

About two years after their marriage, Mrs. Rey went to her doctor for a diagnosis of the pain and swelling she feared was a tumor. She was six months pregnant.

The house, which has no back yard for a child, and boat the Reys no longer have time for, are casualties of parenthood, sacrifices the Reys say they are more than willing to make, even after their years of independence.

"This baby was a dream come true," said Mrs. Rey. "I didn't feel I would really be fulfilled unless I had children."

New parents over 30, whose numbers are increasing every year, generally seem to gladly accept the responsibility, and often do a better job of child rearing despite the obstacles they face as older parents, counselors say.

Those who teach and advise parents believe couples who wait and make a conscious decision to have children are more emotionally prepared for parenthood.

Bill and Sylvia Coates waited eight years before they felt ready to become parents.

"Before this little guy, I had hated children," said Coates, 37.

During his wife's pregnancy, Coates said, he had qualms about relinquishing the den, his favorite room, to the baby.

"After he was born, I felt isn't it great to give him our favorite room," Coates said. "There was such a big change in our attitude, but it doesn't seem like a change. It seems normal."

It was, the Coateses said, just a feeling that a spontaneous weekend vacation or a career was no longer enough that changed their attitude about parenthood.

"The joy of having all those things when were younger, it's immaterial now," said Coates.

Although older parents interviewed said they made the transition gladly, most agreed it was a difficult challenge. Depression and guilt, some counselors say, accompany the new lifestyle.

The Reys said they felt isolated at first.

"Most of our friends were single or people with older children," said Rey, an aerospace engineer. "No one was worried about getting home early to relieve the sitter."

At 43 and 48 respectively, Diane and Joe Rey also were concerned their new daughter, Elizabeth, might grow up not knowing her grandparents, and perhaps spending some of her youth without her parents, should they die in 10 or 20 years.

Then the birth of their second child, Patricia, seven months ago reassured the Reys their girls at least will have each other.

Above all, the couple believes they can live up to the rigors of parenthood because their daughters will keep them young.

Still, age can be a sensitive issue.

Rey recalled a recent visit to a local swap meet. They were pushing Elizabeth in a stroller when a huckster tried to convince their daughter to ask "grandma" to buy one of his wind-up toys.

"Mister, you just lost a sale," Rey told him.

The Reys and other couples like them said they were grateful for their years of experience, which helped them accept the responsibilities and restrictions of parenthood they would have struggled with 10 years ago.

While most older parents said they delight in caring for their long-awaited children, they disagree on whether mothers should return to their careers.

Selecting furniture for first home

Copley News Service

With the big day almost at hand, you've been more than busy — dashing off to fittings, rehearsals and parties, ordering invitations and planning your honeymoon itinerary.

In the midst of all the happy turmoil and excitement, you are also planning on furnishing your first home together.

More than just a roof over your head, this shared living space will be a place where you will work and grow together. It will also be one of the first major investments you will make as a couple.

According to Harley F. Shuford Jr., president of Century Furniture Co., Hickory, N.C., many newlyweds often feel pressured to "buy everything at once," rushing into decisions without a definite plan. To make the furnishing of your first home a trouble-free experience, he offers these basic guidelines:

ome time together talking about the type of furnishings you and the groom like. Decide what pieces are going to be important to you in your new home. Make a few excursions to furniture stores, display rooms and model homes. This is an excellent way to become familiar with what is available and what various pieces will cost.

Analyze the activities which will take place in your home and make a list, room by room, of where they will occur. Will the living room be used mostly for quiet family living? Will it double as a work space or be reserved for more formal entertaining? Will the bedroom be the place where you decide to watch television?

Most rooms will have to be planned and furnished to accommodate several activities. This will help to determine the general mood or theme you wish to express in each room: formal or informal, bright and cheerful or restful.

Plot your entire living space on graph paper, using a one-fourth-inch-to-the-foot scale. Indicate the location of windows, doors, electrical outlets, heating units and other architectural features that would affect the placement of furniture.

Cut out patterns (templates) to scale representing the furnishings you have, and those you wish to purchase. Place them on the graph paper in major groupings: the conversational area in the living room, the dining room setting, sleeping areas. Fit in smaller supporting pieces. Check to make sure you've allowed adequate space around furniture for easy movement.

Now you're ready to head to the store. Many young couples feel that they will "make do" at first — buying less expensive furniture to start with and replacing it with quality pieces later on. "We advise young people to consider the economics of purchasing quality pieces at the outset; well-made furniture will last and in the case of upholstered pieces, can be recovered at a later date if you wish," Shuford says.

Start with the basics: sofa, dining table, beds and storage units. Keep in mind that the basics you select for your first home may form the nucleus for future homes.

"It's generally wisest to invest the greatest sum possible on the items which will receive the hardest wear and are of a more lasting nature," Shuford notes.

"Well-made sofas, upholstered pieces and chests of drawers will provide lasting pleasure. Spend smaller amounts on the accessory pieces, such as lamps, small tables or drapes, as these items go in and out of fashion more quickly, and are also not as expensive to replace."

If you're unable to afford a really good sofa, you might consider purchasing two or three armless chairs. Two placed side by side will form a love seat; three could equal a sofa. At a later date, these can always be utilized as occasional chairs, so they're a good investment.

Furniture for dining should be comfortable and attractive. If your first home isn't overly spacious, you may want to consider purchasing a piece of furniture that can expand when in use and take up less space other times.

Or you might consider a sturdy card table, a casual table in one of the easy-to-care-for materials, which might later be shifted into the kitchen or patio if you move into a house or you can use one of the convenient drop-leaves, which take up less space.

When considering storage space, ideally, items should be within easy reach of their work area. Many furniture companies manufacture modular units which are easily movable and can be stacked or arranged in a variety of ways.

Once you've decided what items to purchase, make the following tests while you are still in the store in order to determine whether you are purchasing quality:

1. Look at the label. A manufacturer of fine furniture is proud to identify himself and to stand behind his product. The label also provides information concerning the materials used in the construction of the piece.

2. Look at the finish. Wooden parts should be smoothly finished without any form of bumps, bubbles or unevenness. Well-rubbed quality furniture should be free from flaws such as "spots" or streaks of finishing material.

3. Check the construction. Tables should not wobble. Drawers or other moving parts should operate smoothly. Chairs should offer solid support. Upholstered furniture should have ample padding.

4. Scrutinize the tailoring. Seams should be even, buttons aligned. Skirts on chairs or sofas should hang evenly. Fabric patterns should match.

Last, but not least, check the proportion. Be sure that the pieces you are considering are the right size for your room.

After the basics have been purchased, you can let your imagination run free. "Remember," says Shuford, "your first home together is a time to get to know each other's tastes and personality. Have fun and do, by all means, purchase that one wonderful item — painting, an antique cabinet — or a magnificient sofa — that symbolizes the home of your dreams and the future you plan to share."

Marriage is healthy

People whose mates have recently died are in danger of dying themselves, say two Yale University researchers.

After reviewing U.S. and British mortality records, Dr. Selby Jacobs and Dr. Adrian Ostfeld discovered that among people over the age of 50, it is possible that half the deaths of those who have just lost a loved one can be directly or indirectly attributed to their bereavement. — CNS

Estimated $1 billion spent on bride, groom rings yearly

Copley News Service

Getting married is big business. Today's bridal market generates billions of dollars in sales each year. An estimated $1 billion of that is spent on engagement and wedding rings for the bride and groom.

According to a recent study by the Gold Information Center, some 3.9 million wedding bands were purchased during 1981.

Close to nine in 10 wedding bands are made of gold. This preference for gold bands has been on the increase since World War II.

Most brides and grooms buy 14-karat gold wedding bands. Wedding rings of 10-karat gold have shown little consumer acceptance. Bands of 18-karat gold are favored by those preferring a higher gold content in their rings. In fact, despite the higher price, there is a much stronger tendency toward 18-karat bands than toward 10-karat bands.

Today's newlyweds are more affluent and educated than ever before. They have become better informed consumers who comparison shop before making their ring purchases. Jewelry stores top the list of preferred places to buy wedding rings, but department stores and catalogue showrooms also capture their fair share of wedding ring sales.

There has been no change in the tradition of the woman's wedding band being purchased by her intended husband. However, the bride-to-be has become increasingly more influential in the selection process.

The average price of a bride's gold wedding ring today is about $199, according to the Gold Information Center. Wedding rings are typically bought three to four months before the wedding date. The proportion of wedding bands received as heirlooms has remained constant at 3 percent over the course of time.

Today, almost all young married men under 30 wear wedding rings, unlike many of their fathers. Their mothers often have more than one wedding ring, as married women tend to add to their ring collections over the years.

Seventy-five percent of American brides receive an engagement ring while virtually all new brides receive a wedding ring. It is interesting to note that wedding bands bought as part of a set with an engagement ring or purchased to match the engagement ring have declined in popularity over the years.

Seven out of 10 American women prefer individual rings over matching bridal sets. The same is true of husbands and wives surveyed together, with seven out of 10 preferring unmatched wedding band sets for the bride and groom.

A myriad selection of gold wedding bands, from traditional to comtemporary, awaits those entering wedded life. According to the Gold Information Center, bright, polished finishes continue to be most favored, followed by textured and matte finishes. The newest looks in wedding rings are the textured gold bands, with variations which include open-worked basketweaves, twists, diamond-cut patterns, sculpted florals and other carved designs with continuous or non-continuous patterns.

Today's newlyweds (some 4.4 million of them annually) are exchanging more gold wedding rings than ever before. Amost all have double ring ceremonies these days, with 87 percent of the newly married men and nearly 100 percent of the new brides receiving rings. The band of gold has become a tradition — one that promises to continue as long as couples continue to say "I do."

Among the latest trends in gold wedding bands are those with textured finishes and patterns, such as these by Art Carved.

Couples are reaffirming their wedding pledges

Copley News Service

Have you ever said to yuour husband or wife, "I love you so much I'd marry you all over again?" Now there's a way to make good on your promise: Have a reaffirmation ceremony.

According to Barbara Tober, editor-in-chief of Bride's magazine, "Across the United States, the custom of reaffirming one's wedding vows is fast becoming popular for couples who are happily married and want to say so to each other and to the world."

Marriages in the United States set a new national record this last year while the divorce rate leveled off.

"Committed couples are working harder to reduce the possibility of failure," says Tober. "They want to ensure the kind of stability that will see them right through their 50th anniversary — and beyond." When in particular might a couple want to rededicate their commitment to each other? Some choose a significant anniversary — say the fifth or the 25th. Others mark a major event in life, such as the birth of a child. Still others are prompted to renew their vows after they've successfully weathered a period of marital stress and decided to stay together.

To plan a reaffirmation ceremony, says Bride's, speak to your clergyman. He could help you work out your own service, complete with readings, music, even a processional. Another option would be for you to arrange a quiet interlude for the ceremony within an anniversary or other party you'll have.

You should also decide what vows to recite. Maybe you could repeat the same ones you said to each other when you married, having the clergy insert something like "renewing their promise in the presence of God." Or look into the revised marriage services many faiths now offer. "The Book of Common Prayer," for instance, asks guests to promise to "uphold these two persons in their marriage."

One way to make sure your vows express exactly what you and your spouse feel is to write them yourselves. For example, you might want to make pledges relating to patience, health, a sense of humor or ability to communicate. If you and your spouse have children, by all means include them in the ceremony. They'll be thrilled! Young children may serve as flower carriers or ring bearers. Teens could usher, read a poem, scripture passage or sing.

After the ceremony, why not have a special reception? It can be anything you want, from a candlelit dinner for just family to a cocktail party for just about everyone you know. Carry out the reaffirmation theme by including some classic wedding touches such as champagne and a festive cake. Decorate the party area with colors and photos from your original wedding.

If you'll have a formal celebration for more than 50 guests, it's a good idea to send printed invitations. For a formal invitation, the wording would be: The honour of your presence is requested at the reaffirmation of the wedding vows of Mr. and Mrs. ... (continue in traditional wedding invitation form).

Finally, what should you wear? For the "bride:" You might consider bringing your actual wedding dress out of storage for the event. Updated with some new accessories, it'll look both nostalgic and fashionable. Or, you might prefer to shop for a new, more sophisticated look — perhaps a sleek sheath, smooth charmeuse or floaty chiffon in a "tea" or "ballet" length. Ask your local bridal salon to help you.

To complete your outfit, select imaginative flowers — such as a nosegay pinned to your bodice or a garland circling your waist — and jewelry that has special significance — a new anniversary ring or the string of pearls he gave you your first Christmas together.

The "groom" could wear either a tuxedo or a well-tailored business suit depending on how formal the party will be. Both of you should dress up and enjoy the occasion. After all, you're the guests of honor.

Anyone wanting more information on reaffirmation ceremonies is encouraged to write Bride's magazine, Copy and Features Department, 350 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Scouting out the grocery counter

Copley News Service

Many brides return home from their honeymoon unprepared for the weekly task of food shopping.

Proud owners of shiny new appliances and gourmet cookbooks, these novice homemakers often find their limited food expertise of little help when faced with the thousands of food products available.

The meat counter, for example, is stocked with rows of different types and cuts all looking identical.

Which is the best buy? How do I cook this? What cuts are most nutritious? How much do I buy? These may be some of the questions the bride is asking.

If that's your dilemma, too, take the time to learn the fundamentals of meat selection and preparation now. Not only will your studies save time and money, but perhaps tears and ruined meals, as well.

Here are some important facts to remember: First, all cuts fall into two categories: those that are naturally tender and those that are not.

Tenderness depends on the amount of activity the muscle performed in the living animal, plus the amount of marbling (fat) within the lean muscle meat. Only 22 percent of beef is tender, so it's in great demand. That's why you find these cuts priced at a premium and in short supply.

Meat from the remaining 78 percent of the steer presents an economical alternative. Less tender by nature, these cuts require time-consuming "moist" cooking methods, such as stewing or braising. However, when these cuts are prepared with a natural meat tenderizer they can be broiled or baked with dry heat in much less time with tender results.

Health-conscious brides will be glad to know that Adolph's Natural Meat Tenderizer is made from papaya juice, not MSG (monosodium glutamate). And, for beginner to experienced cook, meat tenderizer is a culinary aid. Not only does it add flavor, it also reduces cooking time and shrinkage by up to 25 percent. Another bonus for the busy and thrifty bride.

As for nutritional value, the less expensive cuts are a better buy on a pound-for-pound basis. That's because the marbling in costlier cuts contributes mostly calories and it's the lean or muscle meat that provides the vitamins and minerals. Consumers who want to avoid fat and calories in favor of the other nutrients, will do well to select the leaner, less-expensive cuts.

Serving up the best meat buy can be a dilemma for the new bride.

If you've come from a large family, you may find yourself cooking more meat than you need, by force of habit. Unless you want leftovers, purchase about two-thirds pound of a boneless cut for you and your husband.

Naturally, you'll need more when there's a bone in the piece, so buy about a pound of meat in that case. If your selection is really bony meat, like spareribs or short ribs, nothing less than two pounds will do.

If you still have leftovers, don't fret. Just refer to a cookbook for recipes like chow mein and beef stroganoff, which make these dishes taste like "planned overs." With today's meat prices you'll want to get every bit you paid for.

Licenseless marriages a way to protect a tax quirk that penalizes couples

By CHERYL BRASS
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Michael and Krista were married in September.

Well, kind of.

Although there was a religious ceremony performed — complete with prayers, flowers and organ music — there was one thing missing. A state-approved marriage license.

So while the couple is recognized as married by their church, their family and friends who witnessed the ceremony, they are not recognized as such by the state.

But that's OK with Michael and Krista and approximately 10 other couples who have been married the same way.

The licenseless marriage performed at Grace Lutheran Church and Akiba Temple, both in suburban Culver City, are a protest against the quirk in the tax code that makes two-income couples pay more than if they remained single.

"Basically, it's a protest against what we see to be an unfair taxing of persons who are married by filing joint IRS tax returns," said the Rev. Robert Johnson of Grace Lutheran.

What they're hoping to do, Johnson said, is raise the issue before U.S. governmental officials so that a bill might be introduced to eliminate the unfairness in the tax code.

"The fact is that married people filing joint returns are paying more tax than people who are living together but filing separately," Johnson said.

The tax code states if the wife makes at least 25 percent of the household income the couple will pay considerably more, Johnson said.

"If that's the case at the $40,000 a year level, they will probably pay an income tax of $900 to $1,500 more a year without deductions," Johnson said.

The Rabbi Allen Maller, of Akiba Temple, said he got the idea after he married a couple and they complained their taxes were $1,000 a year more because they were married.

"The more I thought about it, the more I became outraged," Maller said. "There are so many forces that are counterproductive to marriage anyway, and I don't think the government should be doing something to discourage marriage."

Johnson agreed, saying, "Marriage has enough pressures, especially in an economic sense, without pressuring it more. This is just one more blow to marriage."

So, Johnson said, the licenseless marriages were developed, because the government knew about the problem and yet "was not acting in good faith to remedy it."

Johnson said the service he has put together isn't any different than a service where the marriage is licensed, except the union is not registered with the state.

"Usually I say, '... by their promises before God and in the presence of this congregation have made themselves husband and wife. ...' The key statement there is that the couples marry themselves in the presence of witnesses and God," Johnson said. "We have simply taken off the civil authority."

Couples are then given a certificate, that, Johnson said, looks very much like a license, which reads "... united in marriage according to the ordinance God. ..."

Maller said he views marriage not as a legal financial agreement but rather, a spiritual emotional commitment.

"What is important in a marriage ceremony is the emotional commitment being made," Maller said. "For most people the marriage is the way they live together — their goals, their commitment to a home."

Maller said the majority of people that he marries have been living together.

"I ask them why they decided to marry now? They usually tell me they feel they are ready to make a further commitment. I think it's important to encourage people to make that commitment," Maller said.

Relatively few couples have taken advantage of the licenseless marriage, Maller and Johnson said but, many people are probably not aware that it exists while others may be worried about the legal sanctions.

Johnson said many couples feel the marriage might not be "real." But Johnson and Maller both ask couples considering a licenseless marriage to consult a lawyer and draw up a legal agreement.

"No one should enter a marriage thinking they may get divorced and yet, if that or a death should occur a legal agreement can set things straight as much as a license could," Johnson said.

Engagement rings are a bride's best friend

Copley News Service

When a couple decides that their relationship is the real thing, the question of getting an engagement ring begins to pop up in conversation. Does a diamond ring mean the same to the groom as it does to the bride?

According to in-depth interviews with several couples, the answer is "not necessarily so!" He is more aware of the traditional overtones expressed by the diamond engagement ring. It is a "public" announcement to family and friends that they plan to wed. Her pleasure concerns him, too.

The groom tends to think in terms of "bigger is better" and feels it is important to set aside two month's salary to get the better ring, say sources at the Diamond Information Center.

The bride, on the other hand, is more aware of her engagement ring's personal and "private" meanings. Frequently, she's an out-and-out romantic. The ring sums up his feelings for her, their feelings for each other and the uniqueness of their relationship.

She may be more concerned, too, about the ring's style and how it reflects her personal taste. For this reason, most couples comparison-shop together, so he can find out what diamond shape his wife-to-be prefers, and what style looks best.

The majority of women said they'd like to be surprised when they're given the ring.

According to the survey results, the man is more likely to pick out a bigger diamond than the woman. If he makes the final selection and purchase alone, she might be happily surprised by the diamond's size.

In shopping for a jeweler, choose one in whom you have confidence. Make sure he will talk frankly and freely about the quality features of his diamonds and their prices.

The better stores in a community are not always the most expensive. More often such stores give the best values.

How do diamond prices run today? Inflation must be taken into account. Diamond values have changed significantly in the last few years. However, the diamond purchased today will continue to appreciate in value.

Figure that a quarter-carat (25 point) diamond will cost between $600 and $1,200 and a one-half-carat (50 point) diamond will run between $1,500 and $3,500. A three-quarter-carat (75 point) stone will range in price from $3,000 to $6,000.

The solitaire, or single-stone engagement ring is the best buy for a given sum because almost all of its value is in the one diamond. When one considers what it costs to purchase a good quality diamond, two months' salary seems to be a good rule-of-thumb as the purchase price.

Diamond values and prices are determined on the basis of the 4 Cs — carat weight, cutting, color and clarity.

CARAT WEIGHT — Ths is the unit of weight used for diamonds, a word derived from carob seeds used to balance scales in ancient times. There are 100 points in a carat. A diamond of 27 points weighs a little more than a quarter-carat. The average rough diamond weighs less than a carat, and half of its weight is lost when it is cut. The larger stones are very rare because they have a greater value per carat.

CUTTING — The diamond's beauty depends on the way it handles light for brilliance, fire and scintillation. Cutting refers to the precision of the placement of the 58 facets to handle light for maximum brilliance. Compare two diamonds at a time to check their reflective capability.

COLOR — Most diamonds are "white," but with an undetected tinge of color. Completely colorless diamonds are rare, and therefore, more valuable. Jewelers can discuss a diamond's color grade and how it affects a diamond's price.

CLARITY — Natural imperfections — spots, bubbles or lines occurred in the stone when it was crystallized from carbon millions of years ago. Such "inclusions" do not interfere materially with the passage of light through the stone and do not affect its beauty. The fewer inclusions in a diamond, the more valuable it is.

Easy-to-follow makeup tips

By JANE SANDERS
Copley News Service

From the first step down the wedding aisle to the cutting of the cake and many goodbyes, a photographer will be recording every move. During this marathon picture-taking session, it is important to wear just the right shades of makeup colors to enhance your features.

First, consider the shape of your eyes. If they are close-set, choose two shades in the same color family — for a versatile eye look. Apply the light color or highlight shade between the inner eye corner and the bridge of the nose and the medium tone from the center of the lids outward.

Even if the "blushing bride" isn't really blushing, cheek color can help you look glowing and vibrant. The color selected should blend with the rest of your makeup to give a balanced, natural look.

Powder blush produces a soft, matte finish — best for normal-to-oily skin. Creme blush provides normal-to-dry skin types with a sheer, natural glow. Apply blush color in upward and outward strokes on cheeks, at temples and on chin.

Outline lips with a well-sharpened pencil. Place the point in the center of the upper lip and draw a fine line from center to corner on both sides.

Mattress shopping

Copley News Service

As a bride-to-be, you must compact an incredible amount of purchasing into the few months surrounding your wedding.

And your most important purchase just might be the one on which you spend one-third of your life: your bed.

The primary component of your bed is, of course, your mattress. Here are some facts and tips about mattresses that will help you when you go shopping.

You and your husband will probably want to buy a queen- or king-size mattress. With the standard double bed, each person has only 26.5 inches of sleeping space, about the room a baby has in its crib.

The queen-size bed is 60 inches wide. That additional 7 inches of space adds a great deal of comfort, since most people twist and turn during the night. According to sleep scientists, the average person turns from 20 to 40 times a night.

If you really want the maximum amount of space possible, buy a king-size mattress. A king offers you 76 inches of width. Not that's luxury.

The key to mattress-buying is to thoroughly test every mattress you wish to consider. In other words, you can't be bashful.

You and your husband-to-be should shop together — you'll both be sleeping on the mattress for years to come. Lie down on each mattress side by side. Turn on your side, your stomach, whatever positions you sleep in. And spend more than just a few seconds on each mattress.

A mattress should provide three essential services: support, comfort and resilience (the ability to "come back" so that the good feel of a new mattress lasts for years).

According to the American Innerspring Manufacturers, you should buy the firmest mattress that feels comfortable to you. If your mattress is too soft, your hips will sink down and your muscles will strain to keep your body in line, putting you on the road to backache.

Don't place too much credence in manufacturers' labels of "firm," "extra firm" or "super firm." What is firm to one person may be super firm to another. You and your mate must decide what combination of firmness and comfort meets your needs.

Approximately four out of five Americans purchase innerspring mattresses. (And among hotels, whose chief product is sleep, some 90 percent carry innerspring constructions.)

The springs which are made by coiling high-quality steel wire provide firm support and resiliency. Surface comfort comes from a cushioning layer of cotton or foam on top of the springs. A special device called an insulator ensures that the cushioning doesn't work into the springs.

Manufacturers use two types of foam to make mattresses. Latex foam is liquid rubber that has been hardened in a mold. Latex mattresses are generally more expensive than polyurethane foam (the other type). However, they offer better support.

Polyurethane is an oil-based material. The type of polyurethane which offers the best support is usually referred to as HR foam (for high resiliency) in stores.

One note: Most bedding experts (including retailers) state than an innerspring mattress will last longer than a comparably priced foam mattress. That is a major reason why hotel chains such as Sheraton and Hilton carry innerspring mattresses exclusively.

Whether you choose innersprings or foam, your mattress will be enclosed by ticking, the highest quality of which is usually made of damask. Ticking can be smooth-topped, quilted or tufted.

Box springs are designed to share with the mattress the job of supporting you and your spouse over some 10 or 15 years. According to the American Innerspring Manufacturers, the box spring provides over 40 percent of the support your body gets from a matched set. In other words, if you place a mattress on a solid base (such as the floor) instead of a box spring, you are reducing the life of the mattress considerably.

Critics say elimination of ground effects technology will make racing safer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Midland's Jim Hall, the man who introduced the first ground effects car a decade ago and dominated Indy-car racing in 1980 with the first pure ground effects machine, says high-speed racing is probably here to stay.

Hall, owner of Johnny Rutherford's Chaparral entry in the May 30 Indianapolis 500 and car owner for two previous Indy winners, disagrees with former Formula One world champion Jackie Stewart, who said that the elimination of ground effects technology would make racing safer.

"Downforce is with us to stay," Hall said Tuesday, reacting to Stewart's comments in an Associated Press story from Detroit. "(Car) designers are going to go for it any way they can get it. If not under the car, then some other way."

"It's the job of the car designer to do the best he can under the regulations," Hall added.

GROUND EFFECTS is an aerodynamic concept in which the air that flows under a race car is channeled to produce a low pressure area, similar to a vacuum. That produces downforce, virtually gluing the cars to the track and allowing them to go much faster through the turns.

This year at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, the Indy cars are going faster than they ever have. Rick Mears shattered the old qualifying records, averaging 207.004 mph for his four-lap trial. But most of the top teams says the straightaway speeds still are what they were three of four years ago and that it's the cornering speeds that have taken a big jump.

Stewart, now a television commentator, is simply the most visible of those in the racing community who would like to see the cars slowed down in the interests of safety.

In Detroit on an advance trip for the June 6 Formula One race there, Stewart said, "If we are going to reduce those risks, we have to do something about ground effects. A very easy way would be to require the car to be a flat-bottom car and not allow the underneath of the car to be used and contoured to give the suction effect that ground effects producs."

His comments came in the aftermath of an accident at Indianpolis last Saturday in which driver Gordon Smiley was killed while getting ready for a qualification attempt for the 500.

THERE IS a school of thought that when a ground effects car gets away, as Smiley's did, that the downforce suddenly disappears and the driver is at the mercy of the car.

"That's not really true, I don't think," Hall said. "The download on these cars is so strong that even when the car begins to slide it keeps some of it (downforce), and a spin scrubs off speed, too. We test these cars in wind tunnels and other ways, but we've never tested them backwards. So I don't know it that's true going backwards, but I don't think it (the theory that ground effects car are more dangerous in a slide) is correct."

Hall, a former sports car driver and the man who introduced the Chaparral Fan car, the first ground effects machine, to Can-Am racing in 1970, added, "I don't think (ground effects) had anything to do with Smiley's accident, in my opinion. It was a very unfortunate accident. He went straight into the wall at 180 miles per hour and he had no chance. I really feel these cars are pretty safe (hitting the wall) any other way but head-on.

"It's true that the faster you go, the more energy there is in an accident. But that's why we have restrictions built into the rules. The sanctioning body has to decide which rules it wants to run under, then it has to enforce those rules."

THE U.S. Auto Club sanctions the Indianapolis race and Jack Beckley, chairman of the USAC technical committee and the man in charge of enforcing the regulations, said, "I would think what he (Stewart) said has some validity. With his experience and expertise, some of the things he says are probably right. How much, it's hard to say.

"We had two or three cars hit the wall earlier (last week), and nothing happened like Smiley. But I don't know if it would have made a difference if he (Smiley) didn't have ground effects. If you lost a non-ground effects car and hit the wall at 190 or 200 miles an hour, it wouldn't make much difference.

"There's so damn many 'ifs' in the deal, it's hard to say what would have happened (if Smiley had been going slower). But the speed alone wouldn't have made any difference. Most of the time you have an angle to ricochet the car off the wall. But when you hit the wall like he did — and nobody here's ever seen one like this — the difference between 180 and 200 is nothing."

It's only the standings that counts for Chaps

FT. LAUDERDALE, Fla. — The best the Midland College women's golf team could do in the first round of the National Junior College Athletic Association's national tournament here Tuesday was one score of 85 and three of 87.

Those are not scores to hang hopes of national titles on, but, suprisingly, Midland College's balloon looking team score of 346 was good for a two-stroke lead as the Chaps eye their first national golf crown.

"Many, many sandtraps," was the way MC golf coach Susan Holland put it, but she now thinks the first round jitters are over for the MC team and hopes her squad can extend that lead today.

The Atlantis Country Club course here is pot marked with lots of sand traps and some of the players complained about wind and heat. The MC girls didn't think the wind was blowing at all, coming from the wind tunnel of West Texas.

But just to show how tough the Atlantis course was on the teams seeking national honors, Terri Myers of Edison Community College leads the medalist chase with a hefty 80.

In the team race, MC is two shots ahead of Florida's Broward Community College, 346-348, and it looks like a two-team race from here on out in the 54-hole tournament, which is scheduled to end Thursday.

Temple is a distant third with a 382, some 36 shots off the lead set by the Chaparrals. Glendale Community College of Florida is fourth with a 397 and is followed by Palm Beach with a 405.

Jill Himmelman led the MC charge with an 85 while Wendy Swift, Ann Coombes and Deborah Latham all came in at 87. Rebecca Bradley posted a 92. The scores were high, but MC and Broward were at least consistent from top to bottom to take command of the tournament after only one round.

The second round was set for early today and the third round will be Thursday morning.

Johnny Rutherford, the driver for Jim Hall's Indy 500 entry, frowns after an Indy practice session. The three-year-old updated Chaparral car has been able to reach a speed of only 197 mph in practice, sending Rutherford to try the backup car on Tuesday.

Bobby Unser gets itch for Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Bobby Unser's got the itch again, but he has only three days to decide whether to scratch.

After three victories among his 19 consecutive starts in the Indianapolis 500, Unser was ready to pass up the world's richest automobile race to devote all his time as team manager for Mexico's Josele Garza.

But Garza, the 1981 Indy rookie of the year, has had a disappointing and frustrating month. He didn't qualify his year-old March race car last weekend and has not been able to get the car over 194 mph.

Unser tested the car Monday, and among his first laps in a champ car this year, he was clocked at 192.664. On Tuesday, Unser improved his best time to nearly 194, but he still wouldn't say whether he intends to try to qualify this weekend.

"Yes, I kinda missed it," the 48-year-old defending Indy champ admitted. "I enjoyed being out there again, and it felt good."

Unser was among 25 drivers who practiced during Tuesday's rain-shortened session. Only five of the 25 already had qualified for the May 30 race, including veteran Danny Ongais, who had the day's top speed at 198.938.

Another three-time Indy winner, Johnny Rutherford, took out his backup car on Tuesday for a shakedown run. Rutherford, who has had difficulty with his four-year-old Chaparral racer this season, has qualified at 197 mph for a fourth-row start.

Among the non-qualifiers was rookie Dale Whittington, who hopes to join his two older brothers in the starting lineup.

Whittington, 22, approached 194 mph in a March racer as he tried to gain enough speed to become part of Indy's first trio of brothers to start the same race. Oldest brother Don, 36, qualified in the middle of the third row last Saturday, and middle brother Bill, 32, earned a starting spot on the outside of the second row.

Another driver tying to regain some speed he lost over the weekend was rookie Chet Fillip, who had practiced at more than 196 mph last week but called off a qualification attempt when he failed to get over 194. Fillip's top speed Tuesday was 194.258.

One of Tuesday's top speeds belonged to four-time Indy winner A.J. Foyt at 196.764 mph, well below the qualification speed of 203.332 that put him on the outside of the front row. Foyt, earning a spot in his 25th straight Indy race — a record — is driving a champ car for the first time since he seriously injured his right arm in an accident at Michigan International Speedway last July.

Besides Foyt's new Cosworth-powered March, the only other already-qualified cars in practice Tuesday were those driven by Ongais, Howdy Holmes and Indy car rookie Bobby Rahal, another of the growing number of sports car stars coming to Indianapolis.

Wednesday, May 19

On this date in baseball in 1912:

With the Detroit Tigers on strike in protest over the American League's suspension of outfielder Ty Cobb for punching a fan in New York, a team of pickups, sandlotters and coaches represented the Tigers and were pummeled by the Philadelphia A's, 24-2. Losing pitcher Allan Travers, who would never pitch another game in the majors, gave up all 24 runs on 26 hits.

SMU takes third place in NCAA tennis tourney

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — UCLA tennis star Blaine Willenborg said he had nightmares about losing before his 5-7, 6-3, 6-2 victory over John Van Nostrand clinched the Bruins' 5-1 victory over Pepperdine for UCLA's 14th NCAA tennis championship.

Willenborg's victory Tuesday came in the No. 3 singles after Pepperdine's Glenn Michibata defeated UCLA's Marcel Freeman 6-3, 6-3 and UCLA's Robbie Venter downed Pepperdine's Brad Gilbert 6-3, 6-4.

Earlier in the day, Southern Methodist defeated Georgia 5-1 to take third place in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament, played on the University of Georgia campus. Play was scheduled to begin today in the individual competition in singles and doubles.

The UCLA-Pepperdine match was not taken into the doubles, since the Bruins already had clinched the victory in the singles.

"Momentum is very important in a match like this," UCLA Coach Glenn Bassett said. "After Robbie (Venter) won, everybody seemed to pick up and it all started snowballing. I really wasn't looking to win this in the singles. I'm real happy for our seniors. They've had four great years and this is a great way for them to go out."

The win was Bassett's sixth NCAA championship.

Willenborg said he was nervous going into the championship match.

"I had nightmares about losing," he said. "Coming in after the shaky win over Georgia (on Monday), I wasn't real confident. We knew that Pepperdine would be real tough and we were thinking about doubles before we had even started. But we did want it bad."

Pepperdine Coach Allen Fox, whose team was making its first appearance in the NCAA finals, was not distraught after the loss.

"We were as ready as we could be, but so was UCLA," Fox said. "Our guys fought well, they didn't panic or lose their heads. It's been a good year for us. We didn't have any seniors so we'll be back. I guess you can't have it all in one jump. You have to get there a little at a time."

In other matches in the UCLA-Pepperdine competition, Danny Saltz of UCLA defeated Rich Gallien of Pepperdine 6-4, 6-4; Bruce Brescia of UCLA defeated Bill Baxter of Pepperdine 4-6, 6-1, 6-1; and John Davis of UCLA defeated Clive Egdes of Pepperdine 6-2, 7-6.

Gervin wants new contract

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — George Gervin, the NBA's leading scorer, wants a $1 million raise for each of the four seasons remaining on his current six-year contract, a San Antonio newspaper reported.

Gervin, the second most prolific scorer in the history of the National Basketball Association, signed his current $3.6 million contract in 1980. But the San Antonio Express reported Tuesday he is trying to renegotiate for an additional $4 million.

It would be the fourth renegotiation in Gervin's nine years with San Antonio. Spurs president Angelo Drossos had termed the current pact "a lifetime contract."

Drossos already had his hands full with pending negotiations to keep coach Stan Albeck and five free agent players when Gervin's reported dissatisfaction surfaced Tuesday.

"He wants them to either tell him they are going to give him the extension or trade him," the Express quoted a source close to Gervin as saying. "He wants to stay badly, but he doesn't want things to get ugly."

Big Red machine needs DeSoto parts

NEW YORK (AP) — The Big Red Machine has gone the way of the nickel beer, the Charleston, and the DeSoto. It had its day — for sure — but this, dear friends of baseball, is its eulogy.

Those wonderful teams of the 1970s, whose players wore full-lengthed red hose and socked baseballs, one after the other, into the seats in Cincinnati, are gone.

In the heart of their heyday, the names of the players were trumpeted from loudspeakers in ballparks from Oakland to New York. "Leading off and playing third base, Pete Rose. Joe Morgan at second base, batting second. Catching and hitting third, Johnny Bench. At first and hitting cleanup, Tony Perez."

And on down the line it went, with the likes of George Foster, Dave Concepcion, Ken Griffey and Cesar Geronimo. That was the team that dominated the 1970s, but most of those men have left Cincinnati.

"A lot of time and a lot of people have passed since those days," says Bench, still wearing those long red hose after 15 years. "Those were our days, in the middle '70s, but you don't see the 1927 Yankees or a lot of the other great teams of the past out there anymore either.

"We had four, maybe five, Hall of Famers on that ballclub — Rose, Morgan, Foster and myself," Bench says.

NOW, they're spread across the country and new players have taken their place. Rose is in Philadelphia, Morgan left for Houston then San Francisco and Perez bounced from Montreal to Boston. Foster and Griffey both left for New York — Foster to the Mets and Griffey to the Yankees — and Geronimo plays in Kansas City.

Only Bench and Concepcion are left from the lineup that started Game 1 of the 1975 World Series against Boston. Assembled around them is an assortment of farm club graduates and trade acquisitions. Bench has moved from catcher to first and finally to third base, giving longtime Red Dan Driessen, a permanent starting spot at first base.

Bench's bat still has pop, and Concepcion, firmly entrenched at shortstop, still drives in a pile of runs with singles.

BUT MOST of the big bats are gone. In 1975, when the Reds beat Boston in a seven-game series characterized as one of the most exciting in history, Cincinnati's starting lineup hit 110 home runs. They had 118 the following year when they swept the Yankees in the World Series to become the first National League team in more than 50 years to win consecutive world championships. In 1977, Foster hit 52 home runs and Bench hit 31.

This year, the Reds' home run pace has slowed to a crawl. While struggling to a record of 16-19 through the first 35 games of the season, Cincinnati had just 12 home runs, the same number as league leader Dave Kingman of the Mets.

"I don't care if we hit any home runs this year," says Manager John McNamara, who took over for Sparky Anderson in 1979. "If we can get runs on the board, with our pitching, we don't need home runs. I think power is overrated."

MCNAMARA may sound as though he has a slight case of sour grapes, but Bench says the emphasis on the team has turned toward pitching — if not entirely by design.

"In the mid-70s, we had such a great ballclub that our emphasis on development and drafting was on pitching," Bench says. "We didn't have to draft hitters. Now, you're starting to see the pitching come up. When you have the luxury of a starting nine like we did, you draft pitchers."

Besides young hitters like Paul Householder and Eddie Milner, who have come up through the Reds' farm system, McNamara has collected a very respectable group of pitchers. Starters Bruce Berenyi, Frank Pastore and Mario Soto and relievers Tom Hume, Joe Price and Charley Leibrandt all have come up through Indianapolis.

Outside of that farm system and through occasional trades — such as the one that brougnt pitcher Tom Seaver from the Mets — the Reds have found little help. President Dick Wagner and chief executive Bob Howsam regard the free agent market with disdain, while allowing players like Rose and Morgan to flee via that route.

IN AS kind words as possible, Bench says his bosses are cheap.

"It's hard to replace people when the Reds set restrictions on how they will pay," Bench says. "If you set limits for yourself, then you see the effects.

"We have to battle, to adjust. We don't hit the long ball anymore, or at least we haven't been. We've been slow to get going. We're not the '75 or '76 Reds anymore, but you don't see very many teams to compare with them.

"If you have a car that only goes 65 mph, you have to drive 65. we just don't have the acceleration we once did."

Lamar Hoyt of the Chicago White Sox must have looked like this to the Texas Rangers Tuesday night as Hoyt limited Texas to five hits on his way to his eighth consecutive victory of the year. See story on Page 2D.

Hoyt still rolling; Herndon's streak ends

Boston's Carl Yastrzemski tries to get out of the way of a Floyd Bannister fast ball Tuesday night in Seattle. Bannister tossed a shutout at the Red Sox in a 3-0 Mariner win.

By The Associated Press

Lamarr Hoyt's winning streak is at 13 and counting, while Larry Herndon's home run barrage ended at four in a row, but both players have their names in the record books.

Hoyt, the Chicago White Sox' right-hander, is unbeaten in eight decisions this season and set a club record with his 13th consecutive triumph in a 10-2 rout of the Texas Rangers Tuesday night.

MEANWHILE, Herndon, Detroit's left fielder, homered his first three times at bat and drove in seven runs as the Tigers outslugged the Oakland A's 11-9. Since he also homered his final time up Sunday against Minnesota, Herndon tied a major league record of four home runs in as many trips to the plate.

It was the 16th time in major league history a player hit four consecutive home runs over a two-game stretch. Pittsburgh's Ralph Kiner did it twice and the last American Leaguer to accomplish the feat was Baltimore's Don Baylor in 1975.

AL streaks were not limited to Hoyt and Herndon. Elsewhere, the California Angels won their fifth game in a row, defeating the Milwaukee Brewers 4-1; Minnesota rookie Tom Brunansky homered for the third straight game as the Twins outlasted the Baltimore Orioles 8-7, New York's Ron Guidry won his fourth consecutive game as the Yankees downed the Kansas City Royals, the Seattle Mariners blanked the Boston Red Sox 2-0 and the Cleveland Indians edged the Toronto Blue Jays 6-5.

"I've been working pretty hard with (batting coach) Gates Brown," Herndon said. "I was just trying to see the ball and hit it hard. The ball was traveling real good."

HERNDON hit his three home runs against Mike Norris — a three-run blast in the first inning and two-run shots in the third and fifth — but the streak ended in the seventh when he grounded out against Dave Beard.

"He always had power, but he always was an opposite-field hitter," Brown explained. "He told me in spring training that nobody ever showed him how to open his hips and pull the ball."

Manager Sparky Anderson permitted himself an I-told-you-so concerning his slugging outfielder, whom the Tigers acquired from San Francisco over the winter.

"Larry Herndon is a fine example to every ballplayer in the major leagues," Anderson said. "He comes to work, does his job and keeps his mouth shut. He's a player, he's not a statistic. I said in the spring the best player to come from the National League to the American League will be Larry Herndon."

Lance Parrish also homered for the Tigers, while Rickey Henderson, Danny Goodwin, Dave McKay and pinch-hitter Jeff Burroughs connected for Oakland. Burroughs' grand slam capped a six-run seventh that tied the score 9-9, but the Tigers went ahead in their half of the seventh on Richie Hebner's single, an infield out and Parrish's two-out single. Singles by Lou Whitaker and Alan Trammell scored Parrish.

White Sox 10, Rangers 2

Chicago backed Hoyt's five-hit pitching with a 14-hit attack. Greg Luzinski drove in four runs with a double and two singles, while Carlton Fisk had two singles and three RBIs. Hoyt's 13-game winning streak is four short of the AL mark of 17 consecutive triumphs shared by Johnny Allen of Cleveland in 1936-37 and Dave McNally of Baltimore in 1968-69.

Hoyt, who was in the bullpen earlier in the season, has won all five of his starts and the White Sox have given him a total of 52 runs in those games.

"I know there are some people who are calling me 'Mr. Lucky,' but I don't care," said Hoyt, whose 1.53 earned run average should take care of any critics.

Angels 4, Brewers 1

Steve Renko pitched a three-hitter and retired the last 20 batters for his first complete game since 1980 and Bobby Grich hit a two-run homer. Renko completed only one of 23 starts in 1980 and started 15 games without going the route last season. It was his third start of 1982.

Twins 8, Orioles 7

A three-run homer by newly acquired rookie Tom Brunansky, his third in the last three games, snapped a 3-3 tie and helped Minnesota end an five-game losing streak and defeat Baltimore for the first time in 13 games. Brunansky, appearing in his fifth game since the Twins obtained him in a trade from the California Angels' farm system, connected in the fifth inning off reliever Jim Palmer.

John Castino singled home what turned out to be the winning run in the top of the ninth as the Twins withstood Baltimore homers by John Lowenstein, Terry Crowley and Jim Dwyer.

Yankees 6, Royals 2

Ron Guidry posted his fourth consecutive victory with eighth-inning relief from George Frazier as the Yankees snapped a three-game losing streak. Bobby Murcer drove in two runs with a first-inning double and Ken Griffey laced three singles, stole two bases and scored twice. Guidry, 6-1, retired the Royals in order just once in seven innings but ran his career record to 8-2 against them. Kansas City's only runs came on Hal McRae's two-run homer in the fourth.

Mariners 3, Red Sox 0

Floyd Bannister fired a three-hitter and Bruce Bochte hit a solo home run as Seattle handed Boston only its seventh loss in the last 26 games. Bannister, 5-2, boosted his league-leading strikeout total to 58 by fanning nine. He walked one, never allowed more than one runner in any inning and retired 15 batters in a row at one stretch.

Indians 6, Blue Jays 5

Toby Harrah slammed a one-out home run in the bottom of the ninth inning off Dale Murray, his eighth of the season, to snap Cleveland's four-game losing streak. The Blue Jays, who trailed 5-1 after two innings, tied the game in the top of the ninth when Lloyd Moseby tripled and scored on Garth Iorg's sacrifice fly. Cleveland built its lead with the help of Von Hayes' three-run homer.

NFL's cooling off period over

NEW YORK (AP) — The cooling-off period is over and the two sides in the National Football League's contract talks were ready to go back to the trenches.

Representatives from the owners and player's association were to resume talks this morning at the New York Sheraton hotel following a layoff of more than one month.

The NFL Player's Association representatives walked out of an April 12 meeting, claiming the owners were not bargaining in good faith. The association's counsel, Jim Berthelson, filed an unfair-labor-practice charge the following day and the two sides have not meet since then. The charge is still pending.

NFL Management Council spokesman Jim Miller said last week that the current talks will center on non-economic issues. He said that management will give the union a proposal to streamline from 60 to 30 days the time in which a player may file a grievence.

Miller said the players union would probably submit a proposal to revamp the waiver system. The union wants players who are waived to be declared free agents. The present system allows teams to acquire waived players in reverse order of the previous year's standings.

With the present labor agreement scheduled to expire July 15, the two sides remain far apart on economic issues.

Mets win battle of the slams

By The Associated Press

It was grand slam night when the Jackson Mets and Amarillo Gold Sox tangled in a Texas League baseball game. The Mets came out on top, 11-10, in a wild game highlighted by a grand slam homer by each team.

In other Texas League action Tuesday night, El Paso beat Tulsa, 3-0, and Shreveport swept a doubleheader from San Antonio, 3-1 and 6-3. Midland's scheduled game at Arkansas was postponed because of rain.

Rick Poe had a grand slam homer for Jackson in the first inning. George Hinshaw had a grand slam homer for Amarillo in the fourth inning and Joe Scherger had a solo homer for the Gold Sox in the second inning.

The Mets grabbed a 9-0 lead in the second inning, but Amarillo came back to make it close at 9-8.

Buce Kastelic had three hits and drove in three runs for Jackson.

Dan Purpura of Amarillo extended his hitting streak to 17 games as he slugged two hits in Tuesday's game.

Little signs free agent contract with Atlanta Falcons

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — University of Texas wide receiver Donnie Little has signed a free agenct contract with the Atlanta Falcons.

Little's Monday signing brought to 17 the number of Longhorns who have signed with National Football League teams this year.

Little was UT's starting quarterback until he switched to wide receiver during his senior season. His failure to be drafted surprised many observers who considered Little one of the Longhorns' finest athletes.

Baker's homer gives Dodgers dramatic victory

By The Associated Press

One thing about Pedro Guerrero: He doesn't think small.

"I wasn't thinking single or double," the Los Angeles Dodger outfielder said about his trip to the plate Tuesday night leading off the bottom of the ninth inning against the Chicago Cubs. "I was thinking home run."

Guerrero translated his thoughts into action, belting a 3-1 pitch from Bill Campbell into the center field seats at Dodger Stadium.

The result was a dramatic 2-1 victory for the Dodgers over Chicago that saved some embarrassment for reliever Tom Niedenfuer, who had given up the Cubs' tying run in the top of the ninth.

"I knew I would hit one," said the confident right fielder who has delivered the long ball on eight other occasions this season for the defending world champions. "You've got to feel good after winning a game like that. (Manager Tom) Lasorda told me to get on base. But as I walked to the plate, I wasn't just thinking about getting on base."

Astros 2, Phillies 1

Alan Ashby's two-out single in the 12th inning scored pinch-runner Scott Loucks from third base to lead Houston over Philadelphia.

Ray Knight, who earlier extended his batting streak to 15 games, opened the 12th with a double off reliever Ed Farmer, 1-2. After Jose Cruz flied out, Loucks, running for Knight, advanced to third on an infield out by Joe Pittman.

The Phillies elected to walk hot-hitting Phil Garner, who had hit in 14 of his last 16 games, to face Ashby. Ashby, who snapped an 0-for-17 slump with two hits Monday night, then spoiled the strategy by lining a single to center.

Braves 6, Expos 4

Bob Horner and Chris Chambliss hit successive home runs in the fifth inning to send Atlanta over Montreal. The Braves trailed 2-1 before Horner opened the sixth with a game-tying homer off Expos starter Bill Gullickson, 2-3. Chambliss followed with another homer.

The Braves then sewed it up with three runs in the seventh. Dale Murphy brought home one run with a single. A throwing error by left fielder Terry Francona allowed another to score, and Murphy eventually scored the third run of the inning on Chambliss' sacrifice fly.

Cardinals 2, Padres 0

Bob Forsch pitched a five-hitter and singled home a run and Gene Tenace blasted a homer as St. Louis blanked San Diego.

Forsch, 5-0, drove in the Cardinals' second run with a two-out single in the seventh after Tenace had walloped his homer leading off the inning. The right-hander walked one and struck out two.

John Curtis, 2-2, pitched eight innings for San Diego, allowing seven hits, and was locked in a scoreless duel with Forsch until Tenace slammed a 3-2 pitch for his third homer of the season.

Mets 2, Reds 4

Gary Rajsich hit a three-run homer, the first of his major league career in a four-run fifth inning, as New York defeated Cincinnati.

Randy Jones, 5-2, was the winner with relief help in the eighth from Neil Allen, who gained his 10th save. Cincinnati starter Bruce Berenyi, 4-2, lasted five innings and gave up all the Mets' runs.

Jones walked to start the New York fifth, Mookie Wilson singled and Wally Backman beat out a bunt to load the bases. Rusty Staub's sacrifice fly scored Jones to give the Mets a 4-1 lead and Rajsich then hit Berenyi's first pitch over the right field wall at Shea Stadium.

Giants 2, Pirates 1

Rookie Bill Laskey pitched a four-hitter and batterymate Bob Brenly belted three hits and scored twice as San Francisco ended a four-game losing streak by beating Pittsburgh.

Laskey, 3-2, allowed singles in the first, third and eighth innings before giving up Jason Thompson's 11th home run with two out in the ninth. He retired 12 straight batters between the fourth and eighth, and finished with seven strikeouts and two walks.

Sam Houston's Yommy Sangodeyi wants NBA shot

NEW YORK (AP) — He didn't get the publicity that surrounded James Worthy of national champion North Carolina. He's not an All American like DePaul's Terry Cummings or Quintin Dailey of San Francisco. Yommy Sangodeyi of Sam Houston State, though, does have the same career ambition. He wants to play in the National Basketball Association next season.

Sangodeyi, a 24-year-old, 6-foot-9 center from Nigeria, Worthy, Cummings and Dailey were among a dozen players who decided to end their collegiate careers early and seek professional status, the NBA announced Tuesday.

Eleven of the 12 are juniors, while Sangodeyi is a freshman.

Other players who also filed letters of intent to the NBA office postmarked prior to the Saturday, May 15th deadline were: John Bagley of Boston College; Ollie Johnson of Washington State; Clark Kellogg of Ohio State; Cliff Levingston of Wichita State; Michael McDuffen of Murray State; LaSalle Thompson of Texas; Dominique Wilkins of Georgia and Rob Williams of Houston.

"Frankly, we're surprised he (Sangodeyi) declared," said Rick Campbell, Sam Houston's sports information director. "He's got a lot of raw, natural talent. He's strong and agile, but he plays like a freshman, good one game, bad the next."

Sangodeyi, who played for the Nigerian Olympic team, averaged 11.9 points per game and 4.6 rebounds in helping Sam Houston State to a 22-9 record. He was named the Lone Star Conference Freshman of the Year.

"We thought he would stay in school at least one more year," said Campbell, who added that Sam Houston didn't recruit Sangodeyi, who he said is a cousin of Houston freshman center Akeem Abdul Olajuwon. "They played together in Nigeria and since we're only 70 miles from Houston he came here."

Sam Houston, an NAIA member, will be playing NCAA Division II basketball next year. Sangodeyi will be trying to make a bigger jump.

The NBA draft will be held June 29 in New York with the team to get the first pick to be determined Thursday at noon EDT. A coin flip between the Los Angeles Lakers, who own Cleveland's No. 1 pick, and the San Diego Clippers will determine which gets to choose first from a mediocre crop of seniors and a bumper crop of underclass eligibles.

Worthy, a 6-9 second team All-American, could be to first underclassmen picked. He scored a career-high 28 points when North Carolina beat Georgetown, D.C. 63-6 for the NCAA title.

Cummings, 6-10, averaged 12 rebounds and over 20 points per game for DePaul, while Dailey was the nation's fifth leading scorer at 25.2.

Bagley, who had a 21.1 point per game average — the same as Williams — helped Boston College to the finals of the Mideast Regional. Thompson was the nation's leading rebounder with a 13.5 average.

Wilkins, 6-7, led Georgia in scoring. Kellogg averaged 10 rebounds a game, while Levingston, 6-8, decided to make a bid for the pro a after Wichita State was placed on three years probation by the NCAA for recruiting violations.

Robinson not surprised by Haak remarks

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The opinions voiced by Pittsburgh Pirates chief scout Howie Haak are nothing new, according to San Francisco Giants Manager Frank Robinson.

"I'm not surprised," Robinson said Tuesday night. "The only thing that surprises me is that he came out and said those things publicly."

Haak, in an interview earlier this week with the Pittsburgh Press, said, "We're going to have to trade for some whites. You have to have at least four white starters. People won't come out and see a team if you have too many blacks."

Robinson, major league baseball's first black manager, said he disagrees with Haak's contention.

"If you've got a winning ballclub, it doesn't matter who's playing. The fans will come out. And if you're losing, it doesn't matter, either," he said.

"But some people have been saying the same kind of thing he (Haak) is, just not publicly. That kind of thinking has been around for a long time, since blacks came into baseball.

"I heard of one baseball man who went to a pro basketball game, saw 10 black players on the court and said, 'Let's get out of here. I can't take this.'"

Death is racing's hazzard

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Death is a fact of life in auto racing, the ultimate price drivers might pay as they challenge the limits of speed.

It's a subject they don't like to think or talk about, but one hard to avoid this week in the wake of Saturday's fiery crash that killed Gordon Smiley in practice during qualifications for the May 30 Indianapolis 500.

Most race drivers are fatalists. They could just as easily be killed, they say, by a truck while crossing the street.

Most are skilled men, with snake-like reflexes, who love going fast. A lot of them are pilots as well. They don't like the idea of living with the spectre of death hovering over them, but they know the possibility of dying in a race car always exists.

Kevin Cogan is a young man with movie-star good looks and enough natural driving talent that at age 26 he already has moved onto one of the leading teams in Indy-car racing. And he is not one to dwell on the gloomier aspects of the sport.

But Cogan, being a race driver, is a realist.

"Accidents happen and, at the speeds we run, people can get hurt or killed," he says. "But I wish nobody ever got hurt, that nobody ever got killed, and we could just leave it up to the individual skills of the drivers.

"Then maybe we could get rid of all this stuff about race drivers being daredevils.

"If nobody was hurt or killed, then people would know we're just good at what we're doing. It would be perfect. There would be nobody saying, 'Look at those crazies, going out there and trying to kill themselves.' None of this death wish stuff.

"But there's no way you can just stop people being hurt and killed sometimes. So the people who talk about us wanting to kill ourselves or being crazies will always be around. We have to live with that."

THE INDIANAPOLIS Motor Speedway opened in 1909 as an auto test track. By the time the first Indy 500 was run in 1911, six people — including two spectators — had died at the track.

Smiley was the 62nd fatality — 38 of them drivers — but the first in nine years.

Car builders and rules-makers have made tremendous strides in safety over the past two decades.

Until the early 1970s, fire was the biggest killer in auto racing. Gasoline or methanol, the fuel that Indy cars use now, would burst into flame on impact, and the faster the cars were going, the more the fuel, and the fire, would spread.

After several particularly horrifying crashes at Indianapolis in 1973, one of which killed driver Swede Savage, the rules-makers made several important changes. They limited on-board fuel to 40 gallons, eliminated fuel tanks on the right side of the cars (the side most likely to hit the wall in an accident on an oval track), and adopted new crash-worthy fuel cells and breakaway valves that stop the flow of fuel from the tank instantly upon impact.

SINCE THEN, the cars, which keep going faster, have been made safer through the discovery of new lightweight, intensely strong materials such as carbon fibers and kevlar. These materials, now used in building race car bodies and chassis, diffuse the energy of a high-speed impact, throwing it away from the center of the car — the driver's cockpit — and taking much of the force with them as they break away.

"The new cars are safer," says Roger McCluskey, competition director for the U.S. Auto Club and a former Indy-car national driving champion. "It's amazing that you can have accidents at pretty high rates of speed, and seldom do you have injuries when it's a glancing blow. The structure of the cars is so much better. They absorb the energy (of impact) in most cases. And the cars handle much better."

Steers whip Denton, 6-0

BIG SPRING — The Big Spring Steers opened bi-district playoff play here Tuesday afternoon with a sound 6-0 win over the Denton Broncos behind the two-hit pitching of Domingo Rubio.

The 24-9 Steers can wrapup the bi-district title Friday in a 2 p.m. contest in Denton. If the Steers lose the first game, a second will be played to see who advances to regional level of the playoffs.

BIG SPRING got all the runs they needed in the second inning with one run, but added three in the fifth and two in the sixth as Rubio did the rest with his shutout performance.

Allen Trevino had a double for the Steers and James Walker added a triple to key Big Spring's seven-hit attack.

Rubio is now 11-2 on the season while losing pitcher Kevin Hooper fell to 9-3. Denton is now 16-5 on the year after the loss.

Big Spring is representing District 5-5A in the playoffs while Denton is a member of 6-5A.

Big Spring got to the playoffs after winning the 5-5A title. The Steers tied with Abilene High for the first half district title, but won the second half title outright with only one loss. Big Spring lost only two district games this year.

Mullins duo takes title

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mullins won the Green Tree Country Club's Sunday Couples golf tournament Sunday with a net 51 in the scramble low net event.

Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Youngs took second with 51½ while third went to Mr. and Mrs. Steve Brown with a 52.

In the second flight, top honors went to Mr. and Mrs. Diedurado with a 45½ with Mr. and Mrs. John Epley placing second with a 49½. Mr. and Mrs. Buddy Cole placed third with a 50½.

Gifford, Henderson win

Joe Gifford and Lloyd Henderson defeated Bill Haws and R.C. Banks, 6-4, 6-2, in the finals recently to win the Midland Country Club Tennis Association's men's doubles championship tournament.

Jean Henderson and Freda Harris took the women's title with a 6-1, 6-7, 6-3 victory over Susan Britton and Connie Scharbauer in the finals.

Austin softballers ban use of extra light ball

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Austin Softball Association, concerned about player safety, has banned the use of an extra light softball that killed a man in Alabama.

Bunny Bennett, Parks and Recreation Department athletics supervisor, said the ball — marketed as the Dudley T-4000, Worth Hot Dot and DeBeer 300 Plus — dangerously cuts reaction time for fielders.

The ball is made of a solid hard-rubber core which replaces the traditional cork-and-string core. Tests conducted by the National Softball Association confirmed what heavy hitters and scared pitchers already knew — the new ball flies farther and faster.

When dropped from a height of 20 feet, the solid-core ball rebounded 120 inches, while the traditional ball rebounded 70 inches.

Ms. Bennett said fielders have suffered broken jaws, ankles and arms as a result of the new ball.

A Birmingham, Ala., man was killed by the ball while coaching at third base, she said. Despite the fatality, the Birmingham Softball Association has not banned the ball.

"So long as it's an official softball, we're going to let our teams play with it," said Walter Garrett, BSA executive director.

Cliff Warrick of the Amateur Softball Association, said the new ball travels about five mph faster than the old one.

"That may not seem like much, but it's the difference between a player getting a glove up to protect himself," he said.

John Dutton faces surgery

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys defensive tackle John Dutton will undergo surgery in Muenster on Friday to remove a cyst on his right knee.

Dutton was expected to be able to resume off-season workouts in six weeks.

Chinese doing 'fantastic job' in oil, gas

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

From an oil and gas standpoint, the Chinese have done a "fantastic job," especially given that the People's Republic has been so isolated for the past 30 or 40 years, according to an expert on China's petroleum industry.

R. W. Scott, editor of World Oil magazine, spoke on China at Tuesday evening's meeting of the Permian Basin Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers' annual family night banquet.

Scholarships were presented to Timothy S. Green, Midland Lee High School, and Robert A. York, Permian High School, Odessa. Both are going to Texas A & M next year. A third scholarship was given to Gabriel Schindler, Houston Stratford, who will attend Midland College.

Scott was chairman of the petroleum production committee of the National Council for United States-China Trade in 1977-1979, and has led three trade delegations to China.

He entertained the dinner guests with many humorous tales of his experiences in China, and compared the American and Chinese oil industries.

"The Chinese oil fields are in a mature state of life, and are, in fact, declining," said Scott. "Projections of Middle East-type reserves, and we've all heard these grandiose projections, are a bunch of 'bull,' to put it mildly.

"If China is analagous to any other oil-producing country, it's the United States, in terms of current production."

The Chinese are very much aware of their technological deficiencies, however, Scott said. He estimated their drilling and production methods are about 30 to 40 years behind ours, while exploration technology is about 10 years behind the Americans.

"Their rigs are about what you would find along the Gulf Coast thirty years ago," he said, although he showed one slide of a rig whose mast was made of tree trunks bound together.

Most of the equipment comes from Romania, especially since 1960, when China had a "falling out" with the U.S.S.R., Scott said. More and more equipment is being purchased from the United States and Great Britain; however, but the main problem is China doesn't have enough money to buy the technology it needs.

The Chinese have been known to receive 50 crates of a certain piece of equipment and leave the majority of the equipment unpacked, Scott said, although he didn't know why they would do this.

Appearances can be deceiving in the Chinese oil fields, he said, citing the example of the time his group went to a well where a large frac job was going on. The oil company had five or six frac trucks and lots of hoses and equipment. At first look, it seemed fairly impressive, until Scott noticed that only one of the trucks was actually working. The valves on the others were flat or closed.

The country, larger than the United States in land area, is vastly under-explored, so Scott thinks the Chinese will undoubtedly find more oil and gas in the future.

China probably won't ever be a major crude oil exporter, Scott predicted, because of the needs of their huge population of one billion.

Energy conservation is even now strictly practiced, he said. Most light bulbs, even those in Peking's luxury hotels, are only 25 watts. The Chinese play cards at night under street lights on the corner rather than use the dim lights in their small apartments.

Some of the oil fields in China have become cities of 100,000 people, all of whom live in company housing and work six days a week on the rigs.

"Oil field living conditions range from terrible to intolerable," Scott said. Most of the housing resembles spartan and crowded barracks, heated by a single coal stove. The workers raise their own food and pull "KP" duty as well.

One offshore crew was seen catching sparrows in their nets, for that night's supper. They also traded diesel fuel with passing boats for fish.

Garbage disposal on the offshore rigs is handled by raising pigs right on the rig.

In spite of this, the people seem happy and are very hard workers, he said. It was not unusual to see elderly women toting loads heavier than what the American men felt they could easily lift themselves. Many Chinese haul loads by means of a two-wheeled cart pulled by a man.

"We saw a man hauling three joints of 9 5/8 inch casing one time. It was absolutely incredible what these people can carry."

"The ERA is alive and well in China," Scott said. Many roughnecks and roustabouts are female, he said, showing a slide of an all-female rig crew and another of female pumpers practicing rifle maneuvers in the early morning before their rig shift.

Every location is well taken care of, Scott said. Each well has a pumper, because "labor is cheap."

The major activity is southeast of Peking, in the Dagang and Shengli Fields, and in the Weiyuan gas field in south central China. In addition, there are several American rigs working in the Bohai offshore region.

The Chinese are fairly inventive at making do with what they've got. Scott described a rig where the brand new cementing hook up was rigged strangely. "They had run out of connections, so they took two drill pipe subs, put the pins together and ran a well bead around them, and that's what they did. Apparently, they got away with it."

The latest drilling equipment is from Romania. Typically run by diesel, and having only one blowout preventer, which is manually controlled, the rigs were described by one man on the trip as "early erector set."

Scott showed slides of a 2,000 horsepower rig capable of going to 20,000 feet.

"They still don't care much for blowout preventers. They only had two ram units on this thing, and no choke manifold.

"They did have a BOP control unit on the derrick floor, though. This particular rig had been on location for 420 days and was at 17,000 feet, drilling in a high pressure gas area. Somebody went over and looked at the (rig) cellar and there were a bunch of bubbles coming up, so we left."

Scott said most of the time, the Chinese don't set the blowout preventer until intermediate casing has been set. Most of the rigs are rotary ones, but hydraulic workover units are available in some fields, he said.

Normally, the rigs run at constant speed as there is no throttle. Most rigs are surrounded by worn out clutches, Scott said laughing.

All the mud pumps run backwards because the gear reducers used change the rotation of the compound, he added. "We never thought about that, but they seem to work, so I guess it's all right."

Damco Energy finals discovery

Damco Energy Corp. recently completed a Deleware Mountain discovery 18 miles northwest of Fort Stockton.

The No. 2 McIntyre, on Damco's 2,710-acre Rojo Caballos prospect, was bottomed at 7,000 feet, and completed between 5,310 and 5,322 feet.

The well tested 221 barrels of crude and 60,000 cubic feet of gas daily through an 8/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 640 pounds per square inch.

Indians discuss legalities

DENVER (AP) — Representatives of more than a dozen Indian tribes, including tribal officials and attorneys, discussed legal issues concerning energy resources on tribal lands during an Indian Tax Forum here Monday.

Included in the closed-door informational session was a discussion of ways to tax energy resources on reservations as a result of a Supreme Court decision in January, said Theodore Smith, chief operations officer for the Council of Energy Resource Tribes, sponsor of the meeting.

The council's research staff produced a financial analysis of various types of taxes, such as severance taxes, and the economic impact on resource bases.

Several tribal attorneys gave presentations on the court cases they have been involved in concerning Indian taxation.

The cost of administering such taxes also was discussed, along with how such administration might be tied to oil and gas monitoring.

Excessive regulation is troubling issue

By John K. McKinley
Chairman-
Chief Executive Officer
Texaco Inc.

Excessive government regulation is the most troubling issue facing American business today. If its insidious growth is not stopped it will smother the creativity of America's economy, and, as a result, diminish the abundance and variety of goods and services available to the American consumer at prices he can afford.

Recently, the government has begun to clear away some of the regulations that have been accumulating for decades. The Reagan administraton is taking some courageous and admirable steps in the war on excessive regulation.

From the consumer's standpoint, the case against regulation is a strong one. And that raises a question. Why hasn't the business community been more successful in demonstrating to the consumer how unnecessary controls cripple the economy? Why hasn't the business community been more successful in convincing the consumer that less regulation is in the best interest of the consumer as well as the businessman?

One clue to that puzzle may be seen in a recent advertisement displaying Time Magazine's "Man of the Year" covers since the first one in 1927. In the 30 years between 1927 and 1957, there were three businessmen who were named Time's man of the year. In the 25 years since, there hasn't been one.

Does that say something about the standing of the business community? Does that say something about the prestige business people once had — and since lost?

Here are three suggestions on how the business community can improve its credibility while contributing to the welfare of the country.

Suggestion number one is for businessmen and women to look beyond the employe, the stockholder, the balance sheet — to the voter, the family member, the consumer.

Minding your own business, your own store, is important. But as the oil industry learned in the 1970's, minding your own business is not enough. By spending all of its time concentrating on its specific business problems, the industry had conceded the field of public opinion to others who wanted to influence the politics of America.

More people in corporations should take more time out of their corporate and private lives to play an active role in community affairs, to put their thoughts into the political decision-making process, to lend their managerial and professional skills to community organizations.

Suggestion number two is that American business regain their sense of adventure, their willingness to take new business risks. Today, more than ever before, it is important that the business community not become a captive of the regulatory mentality, of the bureaucratic outlook.

It is most important at a time when some of the nation's largest companies are being forced to take great risks just to ensure their survival. This is true of the oil companies which in the future will invest billion of dollars in lease sales for offshore drilling with no guarantee of success. It is true of the American auto industry, which must spend billions on retooling to meet foreign competition.

Suggestion number three is that the business community must ask government to cooperate in improving the overall climate. The Reagan administration is offering bold leadership in this direction.

This is a good time to accelerate the process so that, when new administrations with differing philosophies are elected, the current drive towards reforming the government's economic policies will be too strong to be easily diverted.

The business community should take the initiative to work with government to distinguish between regulations that are necessary to the welfare of the nation and its people, and those that are simply bureaucratic nuisances.

There could be no better time for business to seize the initiative and demonstrate that all Americans continue to have a real stake in their free enterprises system.

Aminoil to acquire gas plant

HOUSTON (SWN) — Aminoil USA, Inc. announced the signing of an agreement to acquire from El Paso Natural Gas Company its 30 percent interest in a natural gas processing plant in Live Oak County, Texas.

The terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

The purchase provides Aminoil, which is the nation's second largest independent petroleum exploration and production company, 100 percent ownership of the plant.

The purchase also increases to seven the number of natural gas processing plants wholly owned by Aminoil. Aminoil owns, operates or holds interest in a total of 11 gas processing plants in Texas, Oklahoma, California, North Dakota and Louisiana.

The plants separate liquid products from the gas, and the products are sold on a wholesale basis.

In 1981, the plant, located at Aminoil's East Chapa field, handled an average of nearly 25 million cubic feet per day (mmcf/d) of natural gas. Additional drilling by Aminoil in the gas field in 1982 is expected to result in increased production at the plant, which has a processing capacity of 50 mmcf/d.

The plant processes gas production from the East Chapa field as well as gas from other producers in the area.

The East Chapa field, located about midway between Corpus Christi and San Antonio was discovered by Aminoil and drilling partners in 1978.

In addition to natural gas processing, Aminoil conducts an aggressive domestic and international petroleum exploration and production program. The company also markets crude oil, natural gas and petroleum products, and develops and sells geothermal steam for use in electric generating plants.

GUSHER — A well that reaches an oil zone containing such great pressure that the oil blows out of the well and up into and above the derrick like a geyser. With improved drilling technology gushers are rare today so that the term now refers to an exceptionally good producing well.

HIATUS — A gap or missing time interval where rock formation should be present but are absent due to never being deposited or having been eroded away prior to the deposition of overlying younger rocks.

HYDROCARBONS — Any compound consisting of molecules of hydrogen and carbon that form the basis of all gaseous, liquid or solid crude petroleum.

IGNEOUS (ROCK) — A rock formed by the cooling of molten material.

LIMESTONE — A sedimentary rock composed mainly of calcium carbonate. Reefs for example.

Oil cartel agrees on prices but not production quotas

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — OPEC leaders say oil prices will hold steady for the rest of 1982, but they disagree sharply on how much oil each of the 13 nations should keep off the market to keep prices up.

"We are going to keep the price level the same for the rest of the year; we are committed to that," said Venezuela's oil minister, Humberto Calderon Berti, as the Organization of Petroleum Export Countries prepared for a semi-annual meeting Thursday in Quito, Ecuador.

With conservation and recession curtailing demand in the industrialized nations, a four-nation committee decided Tuesday in a meeting at a Caracas hotel to recommend that the cartel stick to the production ceiling of 17.5 million barrels a day that is helping to dry up the international oil glut.

However, informed sources said there was sharp disagreement over how to divide up that production.

Some members have been forced to scale down their spending plans and raise domestic gasoline prices because of reduced oil revenues. The hardest-hit countries are believed to be Nigeria, Ecuador, Indonesia and Kuwait.

Iran, needing money to finance its war with Iraq, is known to be selling more than its quota of 1.2 million barrels a day and has undercut OPEC's base price of $34 a barrel by $3.80 to attract customers.

Some analysts think Iran may offer at the Quito meeting to raise its price in exchange for a bigger quot a.

"The important thing for OPEC first is to defend the price," Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto said.

He said Indonesia does not want to lower its price of $35 a barrel even though it is producing about 60,000 barrels a day less than it is allowed under the production-sharing system adopted in March.

Calderon Berti said some of the weaker members are regaining customers they lost earlier this year when non-OPEC prices were falling. He said Nigeria, whose output was down 50 percent to 650,000 barrels a day in March, boosted its production this month to 1 million barrels a day.

OPEC is struggling to regain control of world oil prices. After forcing a 10-fold increase in prices during the 1970s, the cartel fell on hard times as the industrialized nations cut energy use because of recession.

Oil consumption is down about 6 percent in Japan, 8 percent in the United States and 12 percent in Europe so far this year. OPEC's current daily production, estimated by Calderon Berti at 16.5 million barrels, is more than 25 percent less than its average last year and almost 50 percent below 1979 levels.

Argentine cease-fire proposals sent to London for consideration

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — New Argentine proposals in the Falkland Islands crisis were sent to London early Wednesday for consideration by the British government.

The Argentine delegation worked through Tuesday to complete its response to British conditions for a cease-fire in the South Atlantic, even though Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar gave them until Wednesday to consider the proposals.

Argentine Deputy Foreign Minister Enrique Ros told reporters when he arrived at U.N. headquarters Tuesday night that his government's response to Britain was drafted "to bridge and narrow differences, taking into account the principle of preserving peace and the settlement of this dispute in a peaceful way."

ASKED IF IT was Argentina's final position, he replied: "The word final does not exist."

Ros met with Perez de Cuellar for an hour and made no statement as he left. Then Britain's U.N. ambassador, Sir Anthony Parsons, met with the secretary-general for 40 minutes. Afterward he told reporters he would transmit the Argentine proposals to his government.

In London, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told Parliament earlier in the day that Argentina was stalling the peace talks. She said that if there were no agreement within two days, Britain "will not flinch from a settlement by force."

Mrs. Thatcher did not specify how Britain would attempt to recapture the South Atlantic islands, which were a British colony for 149 years until Argentina seized them April 2. Argentina claims sovereignty over the islands 250 miles east of its southern coast.

Argentine spokesman Jorge Herrera Vegas refuted Mrs. Thatcher's charge, telling reporters: "The Argentine government maintains its will to continue the negotiations under the assistance of the secretary-general."

Earlier, Perez de Cuellar said he was suspending his indirect peace talks until Wednesday to allow Argentina more time to consider the British proposals, which he said were "very close" to Britain's final conditions for a settlement.

The secretary-general said that once he received the Argentine position, he would be able to tell "whether there is room for maneuver." He said he would know by Thursday if his peace effort would succeed, but there still were important differences between the two sides.

Parsons returned from London on Monday with the British proposals, after conferring with Mrs. Thatcher and her "War Cabinet" over the weekend.

Ros conferred Tuesday with Chinese Ambassador Ling Qing, Security Council president for the month of May. This prompted speculation that Argentina was preparing to call for an urgent council meeting if U.N. peace talks broke down, but Ros refused to speak with reporters after the meeting.

Parsons also met briefly with Ling, and said afterward he merely had "brought the president up to date."

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S proposed framework for peace reportedly calls for a truce, followed by phased and supervised withdrawal of forces and a U.N. interim administration of the Falklands during negotiations on the future of the islands.

According to British and Argentine sources, the main stumbling blocks are:

—Britain's insistence that the Falkland Islanders' government bodies be restored during any interim U.N. administration. Argentina contends the government bodies are vestiges of British colonialism.

—A dispute over how far the British fleet would withdraw during a cease-fire. Britain is willing to move its fleet 200 miles from the Falklands, about the distance of the Argentine mainland from the disputed islands, but Argentina wants the fleet much further away.

—Argentina's insistence on a Jan. 1, 1983, deadline for settling the sovereignty question, which had been debated at the U.N. for 17 years before the Argentine invasion. Britain proposes that U.N. interim administration and negotiations continue if an agreement cannot be reached by a target date.

Reagan, Hassan to discuss Moroccan war

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials intend to impress on Morocco's King Hassan II the need for a political solution to his country's debilitating war against Polisario rebels in the disputed Western Sahara.

Hassan arrived Tuesday night for a four-day official visit that is to include a meeting with President Reagan at the White House today.

U.S. officials say neither Morocco nor the rebels can win the war in the Western Sahara, which has been dragging on for six years and threatens to expand into a wider conflict.

Morocco claims the former Spanish territory, while the rebels are fighting for an independent state.

A SENIOR U.S. official, who briefed reporters on Hassan's visit, said the monarch has taken important steps toward a political settlement to the conflict by proposing a referendum and a cease-fire.

However, the steps taken so far haven't succeeded in ending the fighting, in part because the Polisaro insists on direct negotiations with Morocco, which Hassan refuses.

"There is a risk of a wider war in that area the longer this goes on," the official said, adding the United States wants "a political solution" to the conflict.

The 52-year-old Hassan recently observed his 21st year as the ruler of Morocco and its population of 20 million. Although he takes the Arab side in the Arab-Israeli dispute, he has otherwise been one of the United States' staunchest supporters on the global scene in recent years.

Hassan has also agreed to consider permitting the United States to use Moroccan air bases for its rapid deployment force in the event of a Mideast emergency. Discussions for a specific agreement will be conducted during Hassan's visit, officials here say.

The United States also has been supportive of Hassan, whose country is suffering from economic ills that have recently resulted in sugar and food riots.

With encouragement from the United States, the International Monetary Fund approved a loan of $300 million to Morocco on April 26. A significant portion of IMF lending is underwritten by the United States.

A SENIOR ADMINISTRATION official said this week that the administration also will discuss with Hassan a direct U.S. aid package, possibly to include more security-related economic assistance and food aid.

The United States now provides Morocco with $55 million in economic aid annually and $30 million in credits to purchase military equipment. The administration proposed increasing military credits to $100 million this year, but the House Foreign Affairs Committee recently approved only half of that.

That is sure to displease Hassan, who has been seeking more U.S. military aid for his war against the Western Sahara guerrillas.

The official who briefed reporters and asked that his name not be used said, "I'm at a loss to understand the action of the House committee."

The Polisario's position was strengthened when it was recently admitted into membership in the Organization of African Unity (OAU), which is endeavoring to bring about a peaceful settlement.

While shying away from specific suggestions, administration officials have said privately they hope Hassan will realize the need to continue to work for a negotiated peace.

Both Morocco and the rebels have been building up their armaments in the Western Sahara. The Polisario recently used Soviet-made SA-6 missiles in combat, and has threatened to turn to the Soviets for greater supplies of armaments if the United States continues supplying Hassan. Algeria and Libya both support the Polisario.

"We do not see it as a war which can be won by either side. The Polisario cannot defeat the Moroccans and we don't see the Moroccans as finally finishing off the Polisario," the official said.

He said the United States hopes a solution can be found before Libya's Moammar Khadafy takes over as head of the OAU later this year.

Once Khadafy is at the helm of the OAU, officials here believe, a political solution will be even more difficult to achieve.

Third world's growth catalogued

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's less developed nations are growing rapidly and by the year 2000 their populations will outnumber those of the developed countries by four-to-one, a private population study group is predicting.

The report by the Population Reference Bureau said residents of less developed nations exceeded those of developed countries by two-to-one in 1940. They currently have a three-to-one advantage.

The bureau lists the population of less developed nations as 3.4 billion, up from 1.5 billion in 1940 and headed for 4.8 billion within 18 years.

The report, released Tuesday, said there are currently about 1.15 billion people in the more developed countries, up from 798 million and headed for 1.25 billion by the turn of the century.

Increasing at 2.1 percent annually, the populations of less developed nations are rising at more than double the rate of developed countries, the report said.

Population growth has nearly stopped in many developed nations, said demographer Carl Haub. In West Germany, the population rate has declined.

The overall growth rate for the more developed, or industrialized, countries is 0.6 percent.

Haub suggested that the recent surge in growth is likely to be a one-time occurrence in human history.

For centuries the populations of most nations grew only very slowly, he said, but they are now undergoing a sharp increase due to a variety of reasons, including medical advances and a reduction in infant mortality rates.

The new report predicts that the population of Africa will reach 1.5 billion by the year 2050, double the number of people living on the continent in 1950.

The study said that some government officials in Africa support continued growth for the continent, contending it needs more people to exploit untapped resources such as agricultural land.

For Africa, the overall growth rate was 2.9 percent, with Kenya topping the list at 3.9 percent, followed by Libya at 3.5 percent.

In Asia, the picture is more mixed, with some countries struggling to cut their growth rates. Bangladesh, however, currently has 90 million people and is expected to grow to more than 300 million in the next century.

The overall growth rate for Asia is 1.9 percent, according to the study.

The study noted that many countries in Latin America have reported problems finding jobs for millions of young people now reaching working age, Haub said.

The growth rate for Latin America was 2.3 percent, ranging from 0.8 percent in Uruguay, Cuba and Barbados to 3.4 percent in Nicaragua.

To ease the pressure on social and economic development, many of these countries are now working to achieve lower growth rates, Haub said.

Europe's rate of growth overall was 0.2 percent, with West Germany posting a small decline.

Israeli town's people tired of running for shelter

KIRYAT SHMONA, Israel (AP) — A jet fighter's sonic boom or a column of tanks rumbling down the highway is enough to tell the people of this Israeli town on the Lebanese border to clean out their bomb shelters.

Mayor Avraham Broshi only has to look out of his office window at the highway to know whether tension is dropping or rising. When the hardware heads north to the border five miles away, he can expect trouble. When it moves south, he can relax a little.

The threat of a massive sweep against Palestinian guerrillas in southern Lebanon receded following a decision by Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet to exercise restraint. But the quiet probably won't last. And the rapid fluctuations of the military barometer are tough on the nerves of the 20,000 Israelis living in the "Galilee Finger."

THE FINGER IS A panhandle of mountain-rimmed farmland, 22 miles long and 15 miles wide, that juts up between Lebanon and Syria. The nearest Palestinian guns are three miles to the north.

After an Israeli air raid a month ago, the Palestinians mined an Israeli road, the Israelis responded with another air attack, and the Palestinians bombarded the Finger with artillery shells and Soviet Katyusha rockets.

The pattern is a familiar one. Many Kiryat Shmona people wear T-shirts showing a bandaged finger. But they say they can't ride the merry-go-round of violence any longer.

Menachem Amit, the town psychologist, says he took a poll and found that if the town was shelled again, half the 13,000 residents would go south, out of range of the guns.

Many have already left for good. Menachem Horowitz, a journalist, says he rented a handsome villa from a departing family for only $70 a month.

"The feeling here is that the terrorist positions must be destroyed," says Horowitz. "For that purpose people would be willing to spend days on end in the bomb shelters. But just to bomb, get shelled, bomb and get shelled — they won't stand for it."

When the shells fall, the people pack into underground shelters built to hold a crowd for an hour or so. After that the air gets hot and humid. Toilets clog up. Children get restless. Adults worry about damage to their homes and get jittery.

Ruth Schechter says when tension rises, she doesn't allow her children into her kitchen because it faces the Palestinian guns.

San Juan discovers unexpected guests

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — About 250 squatters spent the night in the rotunda of Puerto Rico's capitol after police evicted them from three acres of government land they had been living on for 18 months.

One policeman was killed by sniper fire and at least 10 people including two policemen were injured, most of them with burns, cuts and bruises, in the eviction.

The police were enforcing an order, issued by a Superior Court judge and upheld by the island's Supreme Court, to remove 300 squatters from a tract near a shopping center in a suburb of San Juan.

The squatters, who had been expecting the eviction for at least two months, tried to barricade the entrance to their settlement with burning automobile tires and other debris.

But riot police moved in under clouds of tear gas in military formation, herding the settlers to the edge of the highway bordering the community.

Most of the squatters marched into San Juan to picket the governor's mansion. But as they passed the capitol, an opposition party legislator invited them in and they surged into the rotunda, shouting and jeering and forcing the scanty building police force to run for cover with a hail of stones.

Leaders of the squatters met with House Speaker Severo Colberg, who arranged for temporary lodging for the group at a rehabilitation center for drug addicts.

Ivy League newspapers turn conservative

EDITOR'S NOTE: Some see it simply as turning the tables on the politics of the Sixties. Others view it with alarm. Whatever, conservative papers are sprouting on Ivy League campuses to do battle against what they deplore as the liberal establishment.

By STEPHEN C. SMITH

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — In button-down shirts and blue blazers instead of jeans and T-shirts, a new breed of campus press lord is descending upon the Ivy League, promoting conservatism and raising the hackles of liberal academics.

Supported by traditionalist pundits William F. Buckley Jr. and William Rusher and bankrolled by grants from corporate foundations, conservative newspapers are making their presence felt across prestigious Ivy campuses, criticizing liberal student editors, professors and administrators in much the same way the "Berkeley Barb" attacked the establishment in the turbulent 1960s.

Conservative publications have appeared at Harvard, Princeton and Dartmouth and are planned at other universities.

Even the venerable Yale Literary Magazine — "The Old Lady in Brown" to generations of Yale undergraduate writers — has turned to the right. Bought 3½ years ago by Yale graduate Andrei Navrozov, whose father, Lev, is a writer who fled the Soviet Union in 1972, the Lit has been filled recently with articles blasting the Soviet government, The New York Times and the New York Review of Books.

Author John Hersey, adjunct professor of English at Yale, says the magazine "has become more of a political journal than a literary magazine, but since the First Amendment is so important to us, we can't condemn it entirely on this ground. But it calls itself 'Yale Literary Magazine,' and that's the problem in my mind. It doesn't seem to be what it represents itself to be."

"The campus mood is more amenable and oriented towards conservative ideology," says John Goodwin, a Princeton University senior who is publisher of the Madison Report, a monthly tabloid named in honor of President James Madison, a 1777 graduate of the university who espoused limited government and a strict interpretation of the Constitution.

"What's common on a lot of campuses, and especially here at Princeton, is that students are bothered by the entrenched liberal orthodoxy present in the daily press on campus and also in the school administration and faculty. The academic environment as well as the journalistic media on campus both are dominated by liberals. We want to offset and neutralize that dominance," says Goodwin.

IN ITS first editorial, the Madison Report acknowledged that liberalism is still a dominant political force on American college campuses and promised to "search for alternatives to the Kennedy liberalism that is still pervasive at Princeton and other Ivy League schools."

Goodwin says if the Madison Report and similar publications are to be successful, they must present "distinctly conservative views which bite with sarcasm. We're going to be progressively more biting and provocative."

Stona J. Fitch, chairman of the established student newspaper, the Daily Princetonian, says "a lot of people find it amusing when they take a very snide attitude." Students, as he sees it, find Madison Report "either amusing or offensive, depending on how seriously they take them... But they do offer a different point of view."

The Madison Report stirred some controversy on campus by opposing the use of endowment funds to pay for student abortions and by supporting an anti-abortion group organized at the university.

The Harvard Salient, on the other hand, is more of a "think piece" journal with lengthy articles and editorials on economic policy, foreign affairs and other issues.

By far, the most biting and provocative conservative campus publication is the Dartmouth Review, a one-year-old newspaper that already has drawn fire from the administration, faculty and student groups at the Hanover, N.H., university.

Last spring, the newspaper published parts of correspondence and membership files from Dartmouth's Gay Student Alliance, much to the chagrin of those students whose names suddenly appeared in print. The Review has sharply criticized Dartmouth's affirmative action, women's studies programs and courses it considers "truly ridiculous."

In a recent issue, the Review poked fun at a sociology professor teaching a course entitled "Identity, Self and Society," and recommended an award for those able to translate the course description into English. More recently, one Review columnist said he was considering undergoing a "race change operation" because he was having trouble getting into the law school of his choice.

"I WOULD CALL our publication dynamic, flamboyant, energetic and sprightly," says Dinesh D'Souza, an Indian from Bombay who is editor of the Review. "Our positions are mainly ideologically mainstream conservative, slightly to the left of Ronald Reagan. We're not off the wall...the people who oppose us are either very soft skinned or very much to the left of the American center."

"The Dartmouth administration doesn't seem to like us very much," D'Souza says. "One reason is the Dartmouth Review caps onto a conservative alumni sentiment. The administration has some sort of delicately fabricated theory of fanciful academic modes that don't apply in the real world."

The Review's advisory board is made up of prominent conservatives — U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., National Review publisher Rusher, syndicated columnist Patrick Buchanan and Dartmouth professor Jeff Hart, an editor of the National Review.

The Dartmouth Review has its non-admirers, among them Robert Graham, a Dartmouth spokesman who says the paper "has lost a lot of credence by thrashing around in areas of bias." Critics say it "puts down minorities" in a snide way. And Dartmouth President David T. McGlaughlin won't talk to Review staffers, Graham says, because of the general tone and attitude of the Review.

Says Graham, "the general view of many here is that it's unfortunate that those who started the Review didn't really work at putting out a serious conservative newspaper."

The political philosophy of the Dartmouth Review, the Madison Report and the Salient, published by Harvard's Conservative Club, has attracted the attention of some foundations.

A generous benefactor has been the Institute for Educational Affairs, a think tank founded by former Treasury Secretary William Simon and neo-conservative Irving Kristol.

IT HAS donated more than $1 million to conservative publishing ventures such as the Review, the Salient and similar publications at Claremont College and the University of Chicago.

"These are young kids who want to do something different," says Philip N. Marcus, executive director of the IEA. "And that means doing something non-liberal. Many of the students I've talked with personally all recount hearing a kind of '60s consciousness (from their professors). And they're dissatisfied with that."

Harvard Salient editor Mark Sauter says although his magazine has received financial support from IEA and other conservative foundations, "no one has ever said to us we should take this line or that line. We're lucky we have that freedom."

Mike Joyce, executive director of the John M. Olin Foundation, says the new wave of campus conservatism "represents an attempt to offer alternatives to the prevailing orthodoxy on campus which, loosely described, is liberal.

"What we have here is kind of an alternative press movement not unlike what happened in the 1960s, only now there is a prevailing orthodoxy that's conservative in nature. You've have pretty well the same thing in form...the content simply has shifted," says Joyce, whose organization last year made 90 grants totaling $3.3 million to various conservative-oriented organizations.

In 1981, the foundation, whose president is former Treasury Secretary Simon, donated $5,000 and made a $5,000 loan to both the Dartmouth Review and the Harvard Salient. This year it made the same financial arrangements with the Madison Report.

"The reason why we split the money between a loan and a grant is we're trying to encourage business sense among these young people," said Joyce.

Goodwin says the Ivy League conservative journalists have a tough struggle ahead against prevailing liberalism, but "we're not going to be out in front marching to the sound of Bob Dylan and Joan Baez. We plan on winning on the level of ideological truth."

Sake-makers campaign to win back consumers

By DEBORAH SMITH

TOKYO (AP)— In a move to counter the growing popularity of scotch whisky in Japan, the producers of sake have launched a new promotion campaign to win back the nation's drinkers. A California firm has joined in the competition.

The Numano Sake Co. of Berkeley, Calif., is marketing sake made from California rice in a traditional method it claims is more authentic than the technique followed in modern Japan.

Sake, which local tradition holds was first drunk by the gods, is found at most Japanese celebrations — from the sips taken at a Shinto wedding to the swilling of huge quantities at annual cherry-blossom viewing and company year-end parties. It is usually heated to 99-104 degrees on those occasions.

But in bars, restaurants and homes, many Japanese are shunning the sweet taste of sake for "mizuwari," a scotch and water, or "onzarokku," Japanese for "on the rocks."

The National Tax Agency says the Japanese drank about 390 million gallons of sake annually in 1980 and 1981, down 5 percent from 1979. Whisky and brandy consumption was up 7 percent for a total of 93.6 million gallons in 1980. Beer accounted for 1.14 billion gallons in 1980.

Total alcoholic consumption in 1981 was 1.8 billion gallons, an amount that would fill the 35-story Kasumigaseki building in central Tokyo 13.4 times.

Sake producers now advertise "softer" brands which complement more heavily seasoned Western food and can be poured over ice, said Hiroshi Kawashima, director of the Japan Sake Center.

Sponsored by the Japan Sake Makers Association, the year-old center in Tokyo's Ginza shopping district has a computer full of information about the 4,000 brands produced by 2,600 Japanese makers, and a tasting room with a weekly rotation of samples.

Sake's alcohol content generally ranges from 15 to 17 percent, a little stronger than regular wine. Kawashima says sake brewers are aiming for new varieties with 12 percent or less alcohol.

Numano, the California entry, was founded five years ago as a joint venture by Japanese businessman Taketsugu Numano and a major U.S. Grain distributor, Pacific International Rice Mills Inc. of San Francisco.

Toshi Funakoshi, vice president of Numano's import office in Yokohama, said the product, which includes a type to be served chilled, "tastes more like a California Chablis." He says use of natural fermentation rather than the modern practice of adding alcohol means freedom from the kind of headache that often follows an evening of sake drinking.

Numano's method was common before World War II rationing cut the amount of rice which could be used for sake. To furnish the needed kick, makers added grain alcohol diluted with water — a procedure that has continued despite Japan's present-day rice surplus of 6 million tons.

Funakoshi said the government-controlled price of rice in Japan makes it too costly to return to the old method. California rice costs one-third as much, he said.

Japan's fourth-largest sake maker, 271-year-old Ozeki, also produces sake in California, in a joint venture called Ozeki Sanbenito Inc. It began selling the U.S. product in America two years ago, and 1981 production was 166,789 gallons. Ozeki's Japanese production was 17 million gallons.

Funakoshi said sake demand is increasing in the United States — now 1.2 million gallons a year, 2.5 times more than three years ago. He estimates it will be 4.7 million gallons in five years.

"Americans want to know Japanese culture and history. They had 'Shogun' and 'Ninja.' There are 2,000 Japanese restaurants in the United States — 450 in Los Angeles. Every day somebody opens a Japanese restaurant," he said.

Sake makers hope the Japan's sales decline will be slowed by the growing popularity of "jizake" or local sake, which is native to a region and often stronger and drier than commercially produced sake.

The jizake boom stems partly from lower prices. For tax purposes, the Ministry of Finance grades sake in three classes — special, first and second. Jizake is not subject to ministry testing and thus falls in the second class, meaning less tax and a saving for the consumer.

Sake drinkers say the rankings have little to do with quality and "the best thing is a very good second-class sake."

City still 'normal'

BIALYSTOK, Poland (AP) — Tucked away in northeast Poland amid forest and marshland and near the Soviet border is Bialystok, a city that might be called normal in an abnormal situation.

On the other hand, what is normal for Bialystok, even in normal times, may not be considered normal anywhere else.

"Why are things so quiet here?" mused a middle-aged, grey-haired woman during a recent evening of vodka, tea and sandwiches. "We have a saying that everything gets here with at least two weeks' delay."

The abnormalcy of martial law throughout Poland doesn't seem to have arrived with much force to Bialystok, a city of 224,000 people.

"Things look sort of normal here, and have looked normal," the woman added, "and if it hadn't been for the curfew, nobody could have thought we had martial law."

BIALYSTOK HAS HAD its experience with Solidarity, the independent trade union that was banned when martial law was imposed in Poland last Dec. 13. But in keeping with the town's image, Solidarity's activity here was never as it was in Warsaw, Katowice or in Gdansk, where the union was formed.

On the night the military crackdown began, some Solidarity unionists were interned here and police occupied the city. The situation, which had never really been out of control, was under control.

"There never was a strong or violent Solidarity movement here," said a young worker.

Asked if he was a member of the union, he replied: "Sure I was, I am and I always will be.

"Now some of them (union members) are interned, and some quieted down and some want something. But even though the people want it to happen, they'll wait for others to start it."

People in Bialystok, a center for textiles, food processing and small machinery, go about their lives as they used to, taking Sunday walks at the ornate Branicki Palace that looks like a mini-Versailles and now houses a medical academy.

BUT AS EVERY other city, Bialystok has its regulations, its shortages and its lines for the purchase of consumer goods.

"We were lining up for an automatic washer and found to our disappointment and disbelief that the washers were on sale only for the blind," said one man.

"And in a store selling clothes and material, there were three rolls of cloth on the shelves and a sign saying, 'Priority for those with a death certificate'."

The availability of food has not been too bad in Bialystok because many of its inhabitants, split between Poles and Byelorussians, have "country connections" and seek them out on weekends to stock up on meat, chicken, eggs and sour cream.

Afrikaner churchman confined for his beliefs

By ROBERT WELLER

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Rev. Beyers Naude, the highest-placed Afrikaner churchman to rebel against South Africa's white-supremacist system, remains an influential apartheid critic more than four years after being banned by the government.

Confined by the banning order to a sort of a house arrest and a limit of contact with one person at a time, relatives included, Naude's datebook, nevertheless, is full of appointments.

The 67-year-old former leader of the dominant Dutch Reformed Church in the populous southern region of the Transvaal Province may not be quoted in the public media or leave the Johannesburg area without special permission.

But he spends four hours a day meeting with churchmen and ordinary people who have problems reconciling themselves with apartheid laws rigidly separating the races. He tries to keep his afternoons open for surprise visitors, including foreign theologians and journalists who prefer to visit unannounced.

One such recent visitor said Naude still believes the church he once served, whose membership includes nearly every important member of the governing National Party, faces "a crisis situation because white Afrikaners believe so deeply that blacks are barbarians."

THIS VISITOR said Naude holds that "blacks should have the right to take part in the government of their domicile and to own land. And that ultimately the majority of the people of South Africa will insist on a one-man, one-vote system."

This is heresy for a man with Naude's flawless Afrikaner credentials. His father, a Dutch Reform minister himself, helped found the secret Broederbond (Afrikaner Brotherhood) which aided the Dutch-descended Afrikaans-speaking whites to gain control of the government through the National Party in 1948.

The son holds a masters degree from Stellenbosch, the most prestigious Afrikaans-language university, and later was elected moderator of the church for southern Transvaal.

Naude initially accepted the church's claim that the Bible justified apartheid. But after the 1960 Sharpeville incident, when police shot and killed 69 blacks during a demonstration, Naude revolted. He joined a number of church leaders in supporting resolutions demanding that blacks be allowed to vote and own land.

He formed the ecumenical Christian Institute, whose goals included church pressure for rights for blacks. Naude was not re-elected church moderator and in 1963, after 23 years as an ordained minister, his status was withdrawn.

Naude joined the Dutch Reformed Church in Africa, a branch for blacks, and preached in Alexandra, a small black enclave in Johannesburg. He met more and more black militants after deciding the only solution to South Africa's problems would come through black pressure for change.

IN THE CHARGED atmosphere following the 1976 riots in the black township of Soweto, Naude and his institute were seen as subversive. The institute and 17 black activist groups were banned Oct. 19, 1977, and Naude was banned individually.

His two decades of championing the rights of blacks had made him a saint to many of the country's black majority. Dr. Allan Boesak, a leader of the Dutch Church for coloreds (mixed race people) calls Naude "one of the greatest South Africans ever."

But to some of his former friends, Naude is a traitor. Naude began receiving threatening phone calls and occasional visits by the Security Police. He was briefly jailed for refusing to testify before a commission investigating the Christian Institute.

Police have noted Naude's continuing anti-apartheid work and late last November they searched his house for six hours and found three banned books. Later he was asked to sign a statement admitting he had been preaching to a small group of black servants, a violation of his banning order.

No prosecutions resulted, but a friend was brought to court on terrorism charges.

So Naude lives one day at a time, beginning each day with Canadian Air Force exercises at 6 a.m. He has little chance for other exercise, which might be considered interaction with more than one person.

HE WAS REPORTED as being amused by a recent Law Journal article on whether banned people could play singles tennis, but not doubles.

The angular, soft-spoken cleric has no way of knowing whether his banning order will be renewed upon expiration Oct. 31. He is described as not hopeful.

Friends say Mrs. Naude, 68, suffers as much as her husband because she is psychologically banned, if not legally so.

Late last year the couple was allowed to visit her mother on the coast, their first joint holiday since the banning. They get by on money from several overseas prizes honoring his work for human rights.

The Naudes put much energy into the dozens of plants and flowers blooming in the garden of their suburban house.

"If it is all you will see it might as well be pretty," Mrs. Naude said. Naude's bookshelf is lined with books on current South African controversies.

TO KEEP IN touch, the Naudes send out a newsletter to friends beginning with the warning, "Not for publication," covering the sections Naude writes.

A recent issue began with a cheerful thank you note from Mrs. Naude to their many friends for writing.

"In many respects I experienced a long and difficult year," she wrote. "Emotionally I was not always able to cope with the situation in a positive way, especially the abnormal life which we are forced to live."

Bone to get phones

BONE, Idaho (AP) — Since residents here must drive 15 miles or so to make or break appointments, the wear and tear on local roads is bound to decline this summer when this town of 40 people gets its first telephones.

"We're coming out of the dark ages," said Bonneville County Commissioner Tom Loertscher. He has done without regular phone service for the 10 years he has lived in this eastern Idaho town, 15 miles from Ammon and 20 miles from Idaho Falls.

Construction begins June 1 and by sometime in July there will be two-dozen phones in Bone.

"You'd have to run to town every time you needed something, like a piece of farm equipment," said Van Sandifer. "And sometimes they wouldn't have that piece and so you'd end up making three or four trips before you found what you wanted."

Sometimes, parents didn't find out for hours when their children had been sent home from school because of bad weather.

"YOUR HEART'S in your throat until they come home," said Marla Meyer, who has lost track of her children more than once because she couldn't be reached in case of an emergency.

The Meyers were instrumental in getting phones to the area. They tried to convince Mountain Bell to install phones about five years ago, but the $8,000 to $10,000 cost per phone was prohibitive.

Mrs. Meyer became resolute when last December her father died. If she had been told soon enough, she could have driven to Idaho Falls to be with him during his last hours, she said.

The cost per phone dropped to $700 each when residents agreed to hire a contractor to lay 30 miles of cable and enough people signed up to buy phones.

"People are really excited about it," said Loertscher. "But sometimes I think it's all a dream and that it's really not going to happen."

Loertscher has been luckier than the rest. He installed a mobile phone when he was elected county commissioner nearly four years ago.

BUT MRS. Meyer's three children have never had a phone in their home before.

"They don't even know what it is to talk on the phone," she said, then laughed. "Well, I guess you have to take the good with the bad."

People who have sought help in the middle of the night for their ailing autos were usually shocked to find no one in Bone had a phone.

"People always ask me how I can possibly live without one, but you know you just get along and you make do," says Mrs. Meyer.

Hottest guessing game: He runs or he runs not

By ANN BLACKMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — At a recent Washington cocktail party, each of the 70 guests was handed a red jellybean and asked to deposit it in one of two glass jars. One jar was labeled "He Runs," the other, "He Runs Not."

No one needed further explanation. For one of the hottest guessing games in town is whether or not Ronald Reagan will seek another term as president.

Election Day is 2½ years away, and chances are, even the president doesn't know for sure.

The political and economic conditions that will prevail in 1984 are impossible to predict. But Washington without speculation would be like Reno without blackjack, so the guessing is fast and furious.

The party guests included VIPs from the White House and Capitol Hill, Republicans and Democrats, political analysts and reporters. When their jelly bean ballots were cast, the vote was 3-to-1 that Reagan will not seek another term.

"IT WAS apparent from early on in the evening which jar was filling up faster," said party host Marty Plissner, who is political editor at CBS news in Washington.

The "He Runs" camp generally argues that it is unlikely that the president will accomplish his goals of reshaping government in four years, that Reagan is a healthy man who will stay until the job is done. These people are usually happy to be quoted by name.

"I definitely think he'll run, though a lot can change in two years," said Nancy Reynolds, a close friend of the Reagans and a vice president of The Bendix Corp. "The Reagans are settling in, and if the president feels he has a job to finish, he will (run.)"

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., another close friend of the Reagans, put it this way: "I hope the president sees fit, Lord willing and all that, to run for a second term. It's apparent from the magnitude of the problems we have here that it will take at least that long."

Richard S. Williamson, White House strategist for the "new federalism" program, predicted that Reagan will not make his decision for another 15 months.

"If his economic recovery plan is in place and he has reasserted world leadership and been successful with the new federalism, if all is done in fulfilling his dreams, he won't run again," Williamson said. "He is more likely to run if he feels the job is undone."

OF COURSE there is sound reason for Reagan supporters to cast the "He Runs" ballot. In Williamson's words, "To make him a lame duck wouldn't help."

The president will be 73 years old in 1984 and, as one White House insider said, off-the record, "that plays a factor." They point also to the tightened security measures since the assassination attempt 14 months ago and say Reagan sometimes feels cut off from his friends.

Those in the "He Runs Not" camp argue that public support for Reagan's policies is eroding, that even Americans who voted for Reagan are less enthusiastic about his economic program as high unemployment, federal budget deficits and high interest rates persist.

These people rarely like to be quoted by name, usually because a Republican with political aspirations has nothing to gain by offending a Republican president — or his aides.

"I think the job is harder than he expected," said a high-ranking White House official who claimed he would lose his position if he allowed his name used. "I think he likes the job but will find four years enough."

An Associated Press-NBC poll taken last week found Americans are divided on the subject. Forty-two percent of the respondents said the president should run again; 43 percent said he should not.

MRS. REAGAN'S attitude about a second term is another subject of close attention. It's no secret in Washington that the first lady is extremely protective of her husband and that she was enormously shaken by the attempt on Reagan's life.

Man obsessed with miniatures

BISBEE, Ariz. (AP) — It might have started with the Vikings. Richard Dohe has traced his family tree back to a small seaport town in medieval Norway.

Perhaps it was watching Errol Flynn in the 1950s classic, "Robin Hood," a film he has seen more than 50 times. Or it could stem from the only comic strip Dohe read avidly as a child — Prince Valiant.

Whatever the impetus, one thing is certain: Richard Dohe has been obsessed with tiny figures ever since he bought some miniatures in a Chicago hobby shop 15 years ago and began changing them to suit his own tastes.

At first he was content to study the dress of the period and paint the figures he bought in stores. But soon this wasn't enough, and he set out with a homemade scalpel to reshape the positions of the figures before he painted them.

"It wasn't that the store-bought figures were poorly made, it was that many times I liked the figure but not the way it was standing or the position of an arm," he said. "So I simply started changing them to the positions I did like."

It was inevitable that Dohe soon began to sculpt his own figures. Today, the collection of miniatures he has designed and sculpted numbers close to 15,000. Many stand less than an inch high, and most are from the medieval and mythological worlds.

There are dragons and dwarfs, characters from J.R.R. Tolkien's "Hobbit," monsters and demons from other worlds and — of course — Vikings.

"Most people still believe that the Vikings were always at sea and ran around wearing helmets with large horns protruding out the sides," he said. "In reality, that type of helmet was only used on special ceremonial occasions and was not designed to withstand the rigors of life at sea."

Texas legislator among House rich

WASHINGTON (AP) — At least 18 members of the House are millionaires while many others have hardly more than a home to call their own, financial disclosure statements show.

It's hard to tell who's the richest man in the House. But neither Rep. James Collins, R-Texas, nor Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y., appear in need of food stamps.

Both men reported earning perhaps as much as $1 million last year. And that doesn't include their congressional salary of $60,662.

Green took 12 pages to detail the stocks and other assets held by himself or by members of his family. His statement showed assets of at least $3.3 million and possibly far more. His income from his holdings was at least $611,000 to $900,000 and possibly even higher in 1981.

COLLINS, A CANDIDATE for the Senate seat now held by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, listed assets of $5.3 million to $10 million and up. He made at least $749,000 on his stock and real estate holdings and may have made $1.3 million or more, according to his statement.

Collins' holdings were so extensive that he added a statement to his form noting what he didn't have. The statement said he had "no stocks or bonds in banks or savings and loans, insurance companies, utilities, airlines, railroads or bus companies, radio, television or newspapers, government municipalities, shipping or hospital management."

Several other members aren't doing too badly. Rep. Richard Ottinger, D-N.Y.; Sam B. Hall Jr., D-Texas; James Quillen, R-Tenn.; and Eugene Johnston, R-N.C., apparently were among the richest of the 18 House members reporting assets of more than $1 million.

Another 25 House members indicated their assets could top that mark. The House forms require only general descriptions of income, debts and assets. Thus, it's impossible to tell just how well off — or how not so well off — individual members really are.

But if general conclusions can be drawn, it's safe to say the House is hardly a haven for the very rich. Many members reported they live solely on their $60,662 annual salary. Others said their only source of outside income is speaking fees to trade associations and other groups in need of oratory.

MOST REPORTED THEY were comfortably fixed with assets between $100,000 and $300,000.

Most members reported at least some income from speaking fees although only a few reported earning near the $18,198 they are permitted by House rules.

Fifty-four House members reported owning no assets except for private residences — which they don't have to list on the forms. More than 80 others said they had assets under $100,000.

Some reported debts but little assets. Rep. Ken Holland, D-S.C., who is retiring to return to his law practice, listed debts of between $20,000 and $65,000 and no assets.

The forms revealed differences in the way members approach financial disclosure. Most used the general categories, which paint only a broad picture of their holdings. But others, like Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., went into excruciating detail.

Sensenbrenner detailed assets of $982,902.31 — including a $14,500 stamp collection. But his form also showed even the most astute businessman doesn't always pick them right. His extensive stock holdings include 333 shares of a mining company with an estimated value of zero.

While some provided more than required, others did not. Rep. Gus Savage, D-Ill., scratched a line through his form, providing no information, and signed and dated it. His office was unable to provide any further information.

REP. BOB STUMP, D-Ariz., listed $30,000 in income from a partnership but said that was an estimate "because I have an extension and have not filed my income taxes for 1981."

Argentines fight for homeland, far from home

MIAMI (AP) — They gather everything from guitars to blood for their countrymen on the front. They pass out thousands of leaflets and mimeographed sheets. They try to play on the cultural roots of Miami's Latin exile community to rally support.

Headquartered in a Miami abortion clinic, a determined group of Argentine-Americans fights a lonely battle for the Falkland Islands.

Sonia Fornoni and Pedro Caccamo, amid typewriters, bumper stickers and tiny paper flags, marshal the effort.

THE ENEMY'S CARICATURE is on the wall — he's grizzled, peg-legged and brandishes a cutlass. The caption below him says: "Pirate."

"Are the English anything else?" asks Mrs. Fornoni, a 26-year-old housewife from San Carlos de Bariloche who came to Miami 2½ years ago.

Along with several hundred of their estimated 6,000 compatriots in southern Florida, Mrs. Fornoni and Caccamo gathered in a Little Havana restaurant after the Royal Navy set sail for the South Atlantic, and formed "Ateneo Malvinas Argentinas," the Argentine Malvinas Society.

They say they love America, but their homeland must come first.

Headquarters for the society is an empty suite of hospital rooms on the second floor of the Women's Care Center. The nerve center of the fledgling group is a stuffy sunroom whose windows overlook Miami's major artery, Biscayne Boulevard.

There, fortified with frequent demi-tasses of espresso, Mrs. Fornoni and Caccamo are joined by dozens of volunteers. A relief map of the "Republica Argentina" commands the white-walled room. The Malvinas — the Falkland Islands to English speakers — are colored chocolate, like the mainland.

FIGHTING THE WAR FOR the Malvinas from Miami is a never-ending struggle, they say. The Argentines say they feel drowned in a sea of English speakers and Anglo-Saxon culture. They accuse the American press and television of telling only the British side of the story.

"First, we have to fight all the misinformation. We need to know the truth," says Mrs. Fornoni.

Volunteers telephone a collective of journalists in Buenos Aires daily. Then a war dispatch is typed out and circulated, or fresh news bruited about by word of mouth or telephone.

When the Argentine troops dug in at the Falklands, volunteers scoured attics and basements and went knocking on neighbors' doors. The result? — "hundreds of guitars shipped to the men on the front," says Mrs. Fornoni. Now, she says, Argentine troops will be able to sing serenades around the fire as the Southern Hemisphere's winter grows colder.

"It is necessary for us to keep up morale," says Caccamo.

For "la patria," the Argentines say they are ready to sacrifice time, money, even blood. A Miami blood bank has started accepting pints to be airlifted to Argentine soldiers and sailors wounded in action.

Fighting has brought the war a continent away terribly close for some. Anna Maria Cespedes, a 32-year-old housewife from the seaport of La Plata, has two cousins now on the islands.

Esther Parisi, 39, of Buenos Aires, lost a son when the cruiser General Belgrano was torpedoed by a submarine and sank. She cries softly. "The day the Belgrano went down, things were terrible here," said Mrs. Fornoni.

IN PICKETING, PRAYER meetings, bumper stickers ("Argentina Keep Strong") and letters to the editor, the Argentines have tried to enflame Greater Miami's 700,000 Latin residents. A portrait of Argentine president and junta leader Leopoldo Galtieri is labeled: "a man for the Americas," and the Argentines tirelessly repeat that their struggle is that of all Latin Americans opposed to colonialism.

Although some 700 Cuban exiles are among more than 1,000 people who have told Argentine consulate officials here they're ready to fight for the Falklands, the Argentines have been frustrated in their efforts to mobilize South Florida's powerful Cuban community.

"It's an issue that certainly generates interest here, but it's not many people's overriding passion and concern," says Roberto Fabricio, executive editor of El Herald, a 63,500-circulation Spanish edition of The Miami Herald.

"England had those islands for more than a century, and Argentina suddenly feels it has to attack. Why?" asks Manuel "Tony" de Varona, a former Cuban vice president and head of the Cuban Patriotic Junta. "We think they're fighting for no good reason."

A recent convention of anti-Castro exile groups considered a resolution in support of Argentina, however, as part of a general disapproval of "colonialism in any form." But reports of Argentine flirtation with the Soviet Union and Cuba turned off most Cuban exiles.

On the second floor of the Women's Care Center, truth seems much simpler.

"Before the Malvinas crisis, we were Peronists, anti-Peronists, social democrats, radicals, conservatives," says Caccamo. He stabs his thumb at a blue-and-white paper flag tacked to the wall. "Now, we are only this — Argentines."

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Food with potassium no substitute for medication

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am taking water pills for high blood pressure and I have to take potassium, which tastes terrible. Can you tell me some foods that have potassium in them? — Mrs. G.D., Washington, D.C.

Dear Mrs. D.: Some of the foods that contain potassium include lean meats, whole grains, vegetables, dried fruits, legumes and sunflower seeds. However, I hope you are not planning to use these foods as a substitute for the potassium which I assume your physician has prescribed.

The potassium available in these foods may fall far short of the amount you require. I strongly advise you to check with your physician before making any change in the way you obtain your potassium.

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've gone from drinking whole milk to drinking skim milk. Now I'm thinking of going one step further and using nonfat dry milk. But first I'd like to make certain that I would save calories and not lose out on nutrition. Would nonfat dry milk do this for me? I'd also appreciate suggestions about how to make it taste appetizing for the whole family. — Mrs. N.T., Albany, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. T.: The nutritional value of nonfat dry milk is very close to that of skim milk. Nonfat dry milk contains a little less fat and somewhat fewer calories.

As you imply in your letter, some people do object to the taste of nonfat dry milk. You might try to overcome this by mixing the reconstituted dry milk with regular fluid milk in a 50-50 combination.

Nonfat dry milk also lends itself to being used in cooking. The powder can be mixed with other dry ingredients and water can be added at the same time as the other liquids.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter is pregnant and has been told to use a vitamin supplement. I've always believed in letting nature provide as much as possible, and I don't understand why she needs pills. Why can't her obstetrician put her on a diet that would give her everything she needs instead of depending on pills? — Mrs. D.M., Denver

Dear Mrs. M.: I would not minimize the importance of nature in preserving good health, but sometimes nature needs a little help.

As for your daughter, pregnancy can lead to a vitamin deficiency. Not only must your daughter's own needs be considered, but those of the fetus as well. During pregnancy, the fetus draws upon the mother's circulation for its vitamins, a process that would eventually deplete the mother's supply. If the mother is depleted of vitamins, the fetus may be depleted as well.

It is therefore important to supplement the mother with vitamins throughout the pregnancy in order to protect both her and the fetus from vitamin deficiency disease.

Rules need to be set in 'blended families'

By KENNETH W. WOLFMSSW, SP

In today's society with divorce and remarriage becoming increasingly common, problems frequently arise in terms of people's efforts to establish "new" families as well as their continuing need to relate in some way to their former families.

The term "blended family" has been used to describe this situation. For example, a divorced female with young children may remarry someone who may or may not have children of his own. Either member of this new couple may or may not have custody of their children. To further complicate the issue, the ex-spouses of this new couple also may remarry individuals with children of their own.

If each member of the new couple has custody of his own children, then a very important problem facing this couple is how to blend together each parent and his own children into a new family unit. For the children involved, the situation can be quite confusing. Each child in such a situation may be exposed to as many as four different sets of parental expectations: Those of the natural parent who has custody, those of this custodial parent's new spouse, those of the non-custodial natural parent and those of this parent's new spouse.

If expectations and messages are conflicting and if there is an unspoken message to the children to keep things secret from the other parents, then the child is certainly placed in a very difficult position which may lead him or her to develop problem behaviors or mental health problems.

To help avoid this situation, the parent and step-parent should go out of their way to establish rules and expectations which are clear and agreed upon by the adults. Once such rules and expectations have been agreed upon, they need to be presented to the children by both adults. In such a manner, the children will be aware that the adults are united on the rules and expectations. If problems of rule violation occur, either adult (whether natural or step-parent) should have full authority to deal with the problem when it occurs and not have to wait for the natural parent to deal with it.

The problems involving rule setting and enforcement in such families is only one of many that most families must deal with. Even with clearly established rules and full authority by both adults to enforce them, problems may still occur in terms of the children's resentment of the new step-parent.

The resolution of such problems is made much easier, however, when the adults are communicating clearly with one another and trust each other's good will and common sense in dealing with the children.

Comments or questions from our readers are invited. Although the Update cannot give personal replies or give specific advice, we will use as many comments and questions as possible in our future columns. Please address them to: Mental Health Update, 3701 N. Big Spring, Midland, Texas 79701.

Call for wasps brings honey of a reward

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — A call for 300 live wasps by researchers at Cornell University, who sweetened their offer with a reward of honey, has brought results from as far as California.

"The public response has been overwhelming," said Kenneth G. Ross, a graduate student who is seeking the live, queen yellowjacket wasps for research on an antidote to their venom.

Ross called off the invitation last week after the quota was nearly filled in just two weeks. Each wasp carried a reward of a pound of honey, but Ross said about one in four people declined the reward.

"People are genuinely interested in the type of work we are doing," said Cornell entomologist Roger A. Morse, who supervises Ross' research.

Experimental treatment helps addicted doctors

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An experimental treatment that has helped doctors shake drug addiction is "relapse-proof," since an addict under treatment would experience no high if he resumed his old drug habit, a researcher says.

Dr. Mark Gold, who is testing the drug Naltrexone on doctors with drug habits, says it could help cure other addicts.

"We're having more and more working addicts without an idea of how to treat them," Gold said in a telephone from his home in Millburn, N.J.

Unlike methadone, which is a synthetic opiate, Naltrexone is not addictive. And an addict using the drug would experience no high if he took an opiate such as heroin, morphine, methadone or other addictive drugs, Gold said.

The only problem, he said, is that Naltrexone eliminates the euphoria, which is why the patients take drugs in the first place, so counseling also is necessary.

Gold, director of research at the 150-bed Fair Oaks Hospital in Summit, N.J., treated musician John Phillips and his actress daughter, MacKenzie, for drug addiction.

The 33-year-old doctor, who won a 1981 American Psychiatric Association prize for developing the non-addicting treatment for drug withdrawal, will deliver a paper on his study of physician addicts at an APA meeting Thursday in Toronto.

For six months, Gold studied 15 addicted physicians being administered Naltrexone, which is in its last stage of U.S. Food and Drug Administration testing. Eleven became drug-free after completing the program, a much higher rate than is usual with methadone treatment among addicts, the psychiatrist said.

He said he decided to focus his study on doctors because their lives are more stable and easier to monitor.

"Nobody knows the total number of physicians involved (addicted), but the best guess is that it is 50 times greater than the general population. About 1 percent of doctors therefore are addicts at one time in their lives."

Addiction is an occupational hazard for doctors, mostly because drugs are easily obtained and their jobs are very stressful, he said.

During the 1970s, the American Medical Association began forming regional "impaired doctor committees" to investigate and aid doctors with such problems as drug addiction, Gold said. The committees tell addicted doctors that their licenses are in jeopardy and often refer them to hospitals such as Fair Oaks, Gold said.

Gold is testing Naltrexone for its developer, E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. of Wilmington, Del.

Gold said addict-doctors can perform despite their addiction, although the time spent finding drugs and taking them detracts from the quality of their work, he added.

All-night party ends seniors' year

Senior activities for the remainder of the year include baccalaureate on Sunday at 6 p.m., graduation on Friday, May 28, at 6 p.m. and an all-night party following graduation.

The party is scheduled from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m. at Midland Civic Center. The featured theme is "Up, Up & Away" and music will be provided by Condominiums from Austin and Gold Rush from Odessa. Door prizes will be awarded. Tickets are $8 in advance and $10 at the door.

Seniors, be ready for a terrific party with plenty of food and continuous music and dancing.

The end of the year signals goodbye. Thanks to all who have helped us get Chatter to you — Mrs. Masburn for typing, Mrs. Moore for guidance with our column, the Reporter-Telegram for the opportunity to print. The responses to this column has been positive and are greatly appreciated.

Graduation is a big step in every young person's life. Friends begin to change as we move on to college and our family becomes more distant. New and exciting careers and opportunities await the graduate outside the sheltered wings of home.

High school has been fun and the memories will be locked inside forever. Nothing can compare to the support and dedication shown by our families and words will never be able to express our gratitude. Witout help and encouragement from teachers, the desire to strive for excellence would not have been there. Thanks Midland High forgreat times and memories.

LIFE IN THESE UNITED STATES

Special from Reader's Digest

My son's fiancee drove downtown one afternoon and, taking a package out of the car trunk, went into a store. Returning later to her car, she was distressed to see what she took to be a parking ticket under the windshield wiper. But it turned out to be an envelope containing her car keys and a note: "You left your keys in the trunk lock. I'm returning them this way because no one ever steals a ticket."

While waiting for my wife in a discount store, I noted the usual sign: "This area is under constant surveillance by closed-circuit television." Immediately below the sign a small TV camera was continuously revolving. Idly, I began to wonder if the camera was just a rotating dummy, when suddenly the camera itself answered my question. It stopped in mid-revolution, did a double taken, and then became fixed in one position.

Fully expecting to be an eyewitness to a shoplifting, I turned and followed the camera's gaze, to discover a shapely young matron in hotpants coming slowly up the aisle and examining merchandise. The camera swiveled downward as she approached, quickly reversed itself as she passed beneath, and followed her progress through the department. When she disappeared from view, the camera returned to its slow but steady circling.

I gave my 16-year-old son permission to drive the car to take three of his friends bowling. As they were leaving, I overheard my son say, "I have to be home by midnight."

"Why, Cinderella," taunted one of the boys, "does your coach turn into a pumpkin at the stroke of 12?"

"No," answered my son dryly. "My mom's car turns into my bicycle."

Attending a conference in New York City, I was in the East for the first time in many years. The fast-moving traffic and the complexities of skyways, thruways and interchanges appalled me. After staying overnight at my brother's home in New Jersey, I elected to take public transportation the next morning rather than drive. As I boarded an unfamiliar New Jersey bus, I asked the driver if his destination was the Port Authority Bus Terminal in New York City.

"Well," he said solemnly, after a moment's reflection, "I'm going to try. You never really know for sure, but I'm certainly going to try."

When the hospital's painter came to do some new shelves in a closet we had taken over for nursery supplies, I aksed him to paint the walls, too. The new administrator, overhearing my request, informed me that we could not do more than was originally ordered without going through channels. He explained the procedure and made several attempts to call the department head. After detailed evaluation of the project, we returned to the scene, where the painter said, "While you two were talking I did the whole closet."

My husband admits to being the world's worst Mr. Fixit. When our toaster went on the blink, I convinced him that the trouble was merely a loose wire, or something equally uncomplicated, and that he could easily repair it. I left him in the kitchen with his assortment of tools.

When I returned later, I was just in time to see him dump the toaster into the trash can. I noticed, to my surprise, that he had carefully laid aside all the screws. I asked him why, when he found it so easy to throw away the toaster, he felt compelled to save the screws.

"There's nothing wrong with the screws," he replied.

In San Francisco, a city noted for its steep hills and stiff breezes, there is a medical center atop a steep slope. One dry and windy day, I saw a young man — white lab coat billowing — holding an open umbrella high in front of him. Under full sail he was letting the wind "power" him up the hill to the medical center.

As the luggage was weighed in before a charter flight to the Bahamas, each passenger was asked to give his own weight. In the line stood an oddly matched couple: the husband short and slight, the wife a towering, ample figure who looked twice his size. When they arrived at the front of the line, the husband discreetly confided to the recording clerk: "That will be a total of 338 pounds for the Lawrences."

Swiss village does not dig out until May

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Winter's end is near for the 40 residents of the mountain village of Goeschneralp. Sometime toward the end of May, snowplows will break through from down below and the annual five months of isolation will be over.

In late November, blowing snow starts blocking the only road and by January the snowbacks are 18 feet deep. They usually are still half that deep by late May, when the plows start to clear them away.

Goeschneralp with its six houses, several barns, a church and an avalanche shelter on a central mountain plateau 5,445 feet above sea level is the only Swiss village to be isolated by snow for so long each year.

Its inhabitants are related by blood or marriage, from the youngest 2-year-old to the community matriarch of 85.

Alice Mattli, a 42-year-old housewife who teaches primary school to the 10 village children while they are cut off from classes in the town below, said in a recent telephone interview she feels that the sense of "being one large family" compensates for some of the isolation of the winter months.

She moved to the village when she was 19 after her marriage to a Goeschneralp man.

"The length of the winter is still hard to take, especially for us women who don't know how to ski," she said. "We cope by playing a lot of cards and getting together for long evening talks."

The long winter evenings contrast starkly with the hectic athmosphere in autumn, when the villagers ready themselves for their extended isolation.

The last trip outside for each family is usually one to stock up on provisions. Then it is long days in the kitchen preserving the food for the long isolation period.

The winter is more difficult for families whose children are away for five months to attend school or learn a trade.

Before November ends, these children say goodbye, returning only for rare visits during the five-month winter, provided the community's old tractor can make it through the snow to bring the children home for a weekend.

"My husband and I have four children and the two oldest are away for most of the winter," said Mrs. Mattli. "We normally don't see them for three weeks at a time."

At one time this winter, it appeared the village would have to scrap the old tractor, with not enough money for a new one.

Bought used two years ago, the vehicle had a series of breakdowns this year, leaving villagers to consider a return to the rescue sled — their only previous way of reaching the town below.

A newspaper campaign, however, collected more than the 50,000 Swiss francs (about $27,000) for a new vehicle and the villagers are to be presented with the check later this year, when the snow is gone.

Television — the staple of families elsewhere on long winter evenings — is also denied Goeschneralp households, which are cut off from reception by the mountain peaks around them.

Only Waldemar and Jobst Mattli, who supervise the village's hydroelectric dam, are able to watch TV because their house near the dam is high enough to allow good reception. Villagers often go to the dam to watch TV but it's an hour's trek.

Then there's the danger of snow avalanches. When that time comes the villagers huddle for three or four days in the community's avalanche shelter.

The concrete shelter was built under an overhanging cliff in 1978, after avalanches threatened the village for several consecutive winters.

Now's the time to fix mailboxes

The Postal Service is urging postal patrons — and especially those on rural routes, city curblines and highways — to turn their attention to repairing and improving their mailboxes during Mailbox Improvement Week, which ends Friday.

"The effects of weather, vandalism, abuse and neglect are evident in leaning support posts, rust and corrosion, broken hinges on doors and missing box numbers and names," said Postmaster D.E. Holster.

Noting that rural carriers serve more than 15 million boxes daily, the Midland postmaster said a damaged or improperly placed box will make it more difficult for rural letter carriers to leave those special letters and packages.

The postmaster noted the Postal Service has restrictions on the type of mailbox customers may choose. Rural customers must erect mailboxes which have been approved for use on rural routes. Should customers prefer a custom-made box, it must meet certain standards for size and strength and be approved by the postmaster before being placed in use.

Holster said a variety of approved commercial mailbox designs are available for use with decorative posts. Those who would prefer a custom-made mailbox or who need information on mailbox specifications and requirements may check with the Midland Post Office, 684-5801.

Farm cooperatives decline revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 2,000 farmer-owned cooperatives disappeared during the decade of the '70s, half of them going completely out of business for various reasons, says the Agriculture Department.

The department's Agricultural Cooperative Service said Monday that its master list showed there were 7,790 farm co-ops in 1969-70. By 1979, the list was down to 6,445 co-ops.

Although the net loss was 1,345 cooperatives during the decade, the difference was accounted for by more than 600 co-ops which came into existence during that period.

The analysis was included in the May issue of Farmer Cooperatives distributed Monday. It was written by Diane Moore, a statistical assistant in the agency.

Fifty percent, or 1,000 cooperatives, went out of business in the decade, the report said. The reasons most often given were declining business or membership, financial trouble or poor management.

Soviets don't seem to let nukes interfere

MOSCOW (AP) — Despite a roar of Kremlin rhetoric on the dangers of nuclear war, Soviet leaders give their citizens little information on Moscow's role in the arms race or how a nuclear war would affect them.

Soviet newspapers and radio and television reports are filled with accounts about anti-nuclear demonstrations in the United States, western Europe and Japan, but public debate and demonstrations on arms are tightly controlled here.

The Kremlin has given generous encouragement to the pacifist movement outside the socialist bloc, a role that Western leaders charge is designed not to bring peace to the world, but to advance Soviet strategic interests.

THE MOST RECENT example of Soviet support for the "peace movement" was the World Conference of "Religious Workers for Saving the Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe," held in Moscow May 10-14.

The Russian Orthodox organizers and delegates from countries friendly to the Soviet Union have steered the conference close to the Soviet line, laying sole blame for the nuclear build-up on the United States.

U.S. clergymen at the gathering expressed concern over its anti-American tone, but their remarks were ignored by Soviet news media. Westerners at the conference also criticized a Soviet decision to bar Dutch delegate Wim Bartels from delivering a speech condemning the nuclear policies of both Moscow and Washington.

Westerners taking part in the conference, unaccustomed to the workings of Soviet society, were apparently surprised by Kremlin tactics at the conference.

Soviet leaders debate their nuclear strategy behind closed doors, with virtually no information leaked to the public.

The names and numbers of Soviet nuclear weapons go unmentioned in the Soviet press. The exception came last fall in an interview given by President Leonid I. Brezhnev. He disclosed estimated levels of Soviet medium range nuclear weapons deployed against western Europe.

The Soviet names of nuclear armaments are not used publicly. Western arms control negotiators have reported that the Kremlin penchant for secrecy is so pervasive that Soviet military leaders will not discuss their own force levels with civilian Soviets present.

ALTHOUGH BREZHNEV REGULARLY advocates reducing the nuclear stockpiles of the two superpowers, no one in the country has dared to call publicly for unilateral disarmament.

Despite Soviet support of western peace activists, Soviet leaders tolerate no anti-war sentiment at home. Nikolai V. Ogarkov, first deputy defense minister and chief of staff, warned in a recent book of the need to counter growing pacifism among Soviet youth.

Official Soviet media, movies and popular literature play their role in shaping the popular view of war and overcome their silence on the effect of a nuclear war with heroic and tragic tales from World War II. Twenty million Soviet people died in the conflict.

The Kremlin is also careful in manipulating public demonstrations. During a May 1 parade, thousands of Soviet workers marched through Red Square pushing large, wheeled signs bearing approved slogans against the neutron bomb and North Atlantic Treaty Organization plans to deploy Tomahawk cruise and Pershing II missiles in western Europe.

In contrast, uniformed and plainclothes police quickly detained seven western Europeans in Red Square on April 19 after they tried to distribute pamphlets urging the Kremlin to ease world hunger by reallocating money "wasted on conventional and nuclear arms."

Soviet media regularly report western opinion polls showing sentiment against nuclear weapons. But the Kremlin does not release similar information on the Soviet Union.

A book issued this spring, "The Danger of Nuclear War," gave detailed medical data on the U.S. atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki at the close of World War II.

THE BOOK AND its principal author, heart specialist Yevgeny Chazov, have been widely quoted by Soviet media. Neither the book nor the Soviet press, however, speculated on the possible destruction of Moscow, Leningrad or other major cities in a nuclear holocaust.

Chazov, reportedly Brezhnev's personal doctor, is emerging as a key figure in the "Soviet peace movement," due largely to his role as founder of "International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War." The group includes prominent doctors from a number of western countries.

Lee band concert Thursday

The Lee High School Honors and Symphonic Bands and the Lee Freshman Band will present their annual spring concert in the LHS auditorium at 7 p.m. Thursday.

The Lee Freshman Band, under the direction of Ron Davis, will begin the program, followed by the symphonic band, under the direction of Mark Nelson, and the honors band, under the direction of Randy Storie. Selections vary from movie themes to popular songs.

Seniors and recipients of the John Philip Sousa and Senper Fidelis awards will be recognized following the honors band performance. The three bands will play the alma mater, fight song and "Dixie," concluding the program.

Everyone is invited to attend the reception in the cafeteria following the concert.

Tuition tax credits said to be threat

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The president of the Association of Texas Professional Educators said Monday proposed tuition tax credits are a potential threat to public education.

"Our public school system is the antithesis of elitism and has been a foundation of our democratic system," Sally Wiedemann told a news conference. "A tax break for parents who choose to withdraw their children from public schools will only thwart efforts to serve the youth of this country on a fair and equal basis."

Physical fitness going to dogs

Hearst Feature Service

An exercise program for dogs?

"Why not?" says Dr. Joel Ehrenzweig. "Exercise combined with proper diet is something I've been talking about to my patients' owners for 12 years. A happy dog is a healthy, physically fit one."

Ehrenzweig's program for canine fitness is based on games owners have played with their dogs since puppyhood: tug of war, catch and fetch, high jump and running up and down stairs.

"People are doing real numbers on their dogs," Ehrenzweig says. "Dogs are not allowed to lead the lives they were intended to lead. They are purchased as pets, but it's work to care for a dog.

"The number one problem I see as a veterinarian is that people just don't know how to care for their dogs. They start feeding them table scraps when they are puppies; it's a hard habit to break. It's very subtle, but dogs actually train their owners, who find it's easier to give in than fight."

Ehrenzweig equates table scraps with "junk food," saying it's hard to feed a dog a balanced meal from the table. In older dogs, he says, table scraps (which are mostly protein) may be harmful because excess protein damages a dog's kidneys.

Ehrenzweig, who runs three animal hospitals in New York, says he sees at least 13,000 dogs each year. He firmly believes that 75 percent of their problems could be avoided with proper diet and exercise.

"More than half the dogs I see are overweight," he says. "Too many dogs just sit home and watch television. And when they're fed table scraps the results are flabbiness, loss of muscle tone, back and leg injuries, a decrease in alertness and deterioration of their sensory perception.

"Dogs don't bring themselves in for appointments or open the refrigerator door to feed themselves," he says. "I have to convince owners of what's best, but I can't slap their hands. What we have is a people motivation problem."

Exercise in dogs must be approached just as it is in humans, so Ehrenzweig offers a few words of caution before beginning a canine fitness program:

—Always check first with your veterinarian.

—Insure proper diet for your dog's stage of life — older dogs need less protein than younger ones.

—Set realistic goals and build up slowly.

—Avoid extremes in temperature.

—Always warm up and cool down before and after each session of vigorous exercise.

—Never use food as an incentive or substitute for praise. Affection is all a dog needs as a reward.

Ehrenzweig also recommends the "pinch an inch" skin test to determine flabbiness. Another indication of flabbiness is when the dog's ribs cannot be seen or felt under the skin, he says.

"Before beginning, set aside a block of time and stick with it," the veterinarian advises. "Exercising for a short time three times a week is much better than one long weekly bout. But be consistent. The exercise will help the owner feel better, too."

Ehrenzweig's program consists of easy fitness exercises:

—TUG OF WAR, using a towel or rope, is good exercise for strengthening the neck, jaw, shoulders and legs.

—CATCH AND FETCH is most fun when played with a frisbee, but a ball or stick will do to help build alertness and burn calories.

—UP AND DOWN STAIRCASE builds cardiovascular strength by running up and down stairs. For best results, stand at the top of the stairs, drop a ball down and have the animal retrieve.

Daily News union applaud rescue plan

NEW YORK (AP) — Union leaders at the Daily News have praised the management's $92 million rescue package, which proposes that the company buy a 25 percent reduction in the newspaper's workforce.

The Tribune Co. proposal announced Monday called for elimination of the equivalent of 1,340 full-time jobs under union jurisdiction and 40 management positions to effect labor savings of $55 million a year by 1984. The union jobs would be reduced "through a voluntary buyout program, supplemented by layoffs where necessary," the company said.

In exchange for the job reductions, the company offered to give the workers $48 million in early retirement pay and to invest an additional $44 million in new and refurbished printing plants.

The plan calls for moving the presses of the nation's largest-circulation general-interest daily out of Manhattan.

George E. McDonald, leader of a labor council speaking for all of the unions, described the union officials as "satisfied with the commitment" of management to assure continued operation of the News at least through 1984.

There are 3,800 full-time employees at the paper but guaranteed overtime and part-time work raises the number to the equivalent of 5,000. The early retirement bonuses would range from $25,000 to $50,000 per individual.

Management outlined a plan to shift its printing out of Manhattan to a modernized Brooklyn plant and two new satellite plants in Long Island and northern New Jersey. The plan also calls for closing a color printing plant in Queens.

Robert M. Hunt, president and publisher of the tabloid, outlined the proposals at a closed meeting with the leaders of 11 unions representing most of the News employees.

The Tribune Co., the newspaper's parent company, announced late in April that it was terminating a proposed sale of the News to Texas millionaire Joe Allbritton and would itself rescue the paper with labor's help.

Hunt said the News lost approximately $13 million last year and projects losses of about $30 million annually for 1982, 1983 and 1984 if cost-cutting cannot be achieved. He set no deadline for job-reduction agreements with the unions. But union officials said management indicated it wanted the agreements "in the next six or eight weeks."

A series of meetings between News management and the individual unions was expected to start soon.

William J. Kennedy, president of the Pressmen's New York local, agreed that the Hunt proposals appeared "workable." Kennedy led an 88-day strike against the News and The New York Times in 1978 that produced the first loss for the News since its founding in 1919.

Moon prosecution called 'persecution'

NEW YORK (AP) — The Rev. Sun Myung Moon's conviction for conspiracy to evade income taxes is a 20th century equivalent of the persecution of Jesus Christ, says the president of the American branch of Moon's Unification Church.

"As with all of the world's great religious leaders, he has been met with hatred, bigotry and misunderstanding," Dr. Mose Durst said after the verdict Tuesday.

A U.S. District Court jury deliberated four days after a six-week trial before returning the guilty verdict against the 62-year-old Korean evangelist. The Unification Church leader could receive up to 14 years in prison when he is sentenced July 14.

Moon was convicted of filing false income tax returns to the Internal Revenue Service and conspiring to evade taxes on about $162,000 in personal income. An aide, Takeru Kamiyama, 40, was convicted with him in the tax evasion conspiracy and also of obstructing justice through lying and submitting false documents in an effort to block the investigation. Both are free on bail.

Durst said Moon's only comment was: "Don't worry. No problem. We will go forth. We are people of principle, not personality. Our life is a public life of righteousness and of service to the world." The evangelist, who lives on a church-owned estate in suburban Irvington, showed no emotion when the verdict was delivered, but some spectators brushed away tears.

Moon's attorney, Charles Stillman, had objected to a jury trial and said the verdict would be appealed.

On May 6, the Court of Appeals, New York state's highest court, ruled Moon's church was a genuine religious organization entitled to tax exemptions.

Durst charged that the jury in the income tax case was "snowed and bamboozled" by prosecutors who "repeated the word 'cash' over and over again until the jury was brainwashed."

He also compared Moon's conviction to the persecution of Christ "for treason against the state," saying the only difference is that "the way to get him in the 20th century is through the IRS."

But juror Freddie Bryant, a clerical assistant from the Bronx, said Moon's position "didn't have anything to do" with the verdict.

"We made an effort to push his publicized image out of our mind," she said. "I wanted to make a true and just decision because his life is at stake, and I didn't want anything to affect my decision other than the facts of the case."

Moon, who is married and has 12 children, became a permanent resident of the United States in 1973. According to the church, Moon was born clairvoyant and at age 16 saw Jesus in an Easter vision, during which he was ordered to carry on Christ's unfinished business.

Moon's church, which claims 3 million worldwide members and 30,000 in this country, has amassed millions of dollars and gone into numerous business ventures, including a fishing fleet in Gloucester, Mass., and newspapers in New York City and Washington, D.C.

The church is best known for its youthful adherents, who seek converts on city streets. Some of his followers have been kidnapped by parents, who sought to have them "deprogrammed."

Moon was charged with failing to report $112,000 in interest earned for 1973, 1974, and 1975 on $1.6 million in deposits in his name at the Chase Manhattan Bank.

He also was charged with receiving $50,000 worth of corporate shares without paying for them and failing to declare them as taxable.

Mastroianni gets 'walking papers' until proper working papers issued

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Italian movie star Marcello Mastroianni says he felt "sad and humiliated" at being forced to leave Brazil to get proper working papers to make a film here.

The actor confirmed Tuesday that he and 15 other non-Brazilians went to neighboring Paraguay last week and obtained legal working papers.

"This is the first time in 36 years such a thing has happened to me," Mastroianni said at a news conference.

Mastroianni came to Brazil in April to star in the film version of Brazilian author Jorge Amado's best-selling novel "Gabriella, Clove and Cinnamon." The movie is being shot in the seaside town of Parati, 200 miles southwest of Rio.

However, the actor entered the country with a tourist visa, barring him from engaging in moneymaking activities.

The justice ministry gave Mastroianni and the others one week to leave the country and apply for the proper visa.

The film's Brazilian director, Bruno Barreto, said filming would continue on schedule. The movie is budgeted at $3 million and shooting is scheduled to end in 10 weeks.

Lousma

ALAMAGORDO, N.M. (AP) — Astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton returned to where they landed the space shuttle Columbia for their induction into the International Space Hall of Fame.

"The landing has got to be the most memorable moment of New Mexico for us, but this day is certainly second," Lousma said at ceremonies Tuesday at White Sands Missile Range.

The astronauts ended the third mission of the space shuttle on March 30 when they landed the Columbia on but now says he made a mistake.

"The fourth and final test flight is to take off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., on June 27.

About 300 people applauded as New Mexico Gov. Bruce King presented plaques to Lousma and Fullerton making them the 59th and 60th inductees into the Hall of Fame.

Fullerton said the astronauts accepted the plaques "in the name of the team that makes each of the space shuttle missions go."

NEW YORK (AP) — Miss USA, Terri Lea Utley, says she'll bring sales experience from her old job to her new title and doesn't mind delaying her marriage a year.

"The company (Miss Universe Inc.) expects me to represent the United States," the 20-year-old Miss Utley said Tuesday. She sold time-share condominiums at a Hot Springs, Ark., resort before winning the Miss USA crown Thursday.

"This will open up some career opportunities in modeling and maybe broadcasting. It's going to change my life," she said, posing for photographers here.

The native of Cabot, Ark., which has a population of 4,000, said she was "kind of scared" when she first arrived in Manhattan, where she will live when she isn't traveling.

Her fiance, 22-year-old Brian Faught, was "really upset" when she told him their June wedding would have to wait a year.

"But now, he's really excited and everything's wonderful," she said. "He's a writer, and we hope to write a book together at the end of my year."

Miss Utley will enter the Miss Universe Pageant in Lima, Peru, on July 26.

BELMONT, Mass. (AP) — Paul A. Samuelson, the Nobel Prize-winning economist, loaned his name and voice to a radio ad for a moving company, but now says he made a mistake.

titute of Technology professor said Tuesday. "It was an error of judgment on my part."

In one of a series of 60-second ads, Samuelson's voice is heard saying: "I'm Paul Samuelson of MIT. I won the Nobel Prize for my book on economics. One thing economics teaches is the importance of controlling risks. One risk that worries is the cost of a household move. That's why I like Allied Van Lines ..."

Viking ship's modern problems slow its voyage to Norway

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. (AP) — The voyage to Norway by a wooden replica of a Viking ship has been slowed by uncooperative winds and a problem with some non-authentic equipment — a radio.

The Hjemkomst, which passed Tuesday through the Soo Locks, will probably stay in port several days for radio repairs before heading down Lake Huron toward Detroit, said crewman Tom Asp. He is the son of the ship's builder, Robert Asp, who died before he could launch the vessel.

The 3,500-mile journey, expected to take about 60 days, will wind down Lake Huron, across Lake Erie and then into the New York barge canal system before it heads across the Atlantic for Bergen, Norway.

The 76-foot, square-sailed ship left Knife River, Minn., last week for the trip across Lake Superior. It was towed by the tugboat Chippewa from Whitefish Bay through the Soo Locks, a distance of about 15 miles, Asp said.

Asner blames politics, not president, for ills

NEW YORK (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported Monday that actor Edward Asner said he suspects the White House may have worked for the cancellation of his television series, "Lou Grant."

Asner, president of the Screen Actors Guild, said he believed CBS' decision not to renew his series was linked to attacks on him for his union work and his aid to rebels in El Salvador. But he did not say that the White House may have worked for the cancellation of the show.

Congregation OKs Magruder for post

BURLINGAME, Calif. (AP) — The congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Burlingame has approved onetime Watergate conspirator Jeb Stuart Magruder as an associate pastor.

After the 321-24 vote Tuesday, Magruder thanked the congregation, praised its "spirit of understanding" and led a closing prayer. He will begin his duties this summer if his call to the ministry is approved by the San Francisco Presbytery next month.

"We see in this man unique gifts for ministry that will be useful to this church," said the Rev. Thomas Gillespie, pastor of the 1,400-member church 20 miles south of San Francisco.

Magruder, 47, who holds a divinity degree from Princeton Theological Seminary, was chosen by the church's search committee from more than 100 candidates. He will join two associate pastors and handle the church's adult education acitivities, among other programs.

Asked whether the notoriety of Magruder's Watergate connection posed any problems, Gillespie said, "I preach and believe and experience the forgiveness of sins, and I think the same is true of Jeb Magruder. What's past is past. If God forgives, why not the rest of us?"

An early casualty of the scandal that brought down the Nixon administration, Magruder pleaded guilty to conspiracy to obstruct justice and perjury in connection with a plan to wiretap the Democratic National Committee headquarters in the Watergate complex in Washington.

Magruder said at a news conference after the two-hour meeting that he has tried to put Watergate "behind me."

Asked whether he had changed since his days in politics, Magruder said, "Obviously I have different values ... Watergate had the effect of changing our lives."

The former White House deputy director of communications was sentenced to 10 months to four years in prison and released in January 1975 after spending seven months at the minimum-security federal penitentiary in Lewisburg, Pa.

He became active in religious affairs while jailed and after his release became vice president of Young Life, a Colorado-based Christian social service program.

He later enrolled at the Presbyterian-affiliated seminary in Princeton, N.J., and received his degree last June.

He and his wife Gail have four children.

Texas Baptist organization elects executive director

DALLAS (AP) — William M. Pinson Jr., president of Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, was elected executive director Tuesday of the Baptist General Convention, which has more than 2 million members.

He will succeed James H. Landes, 69, who retires this year after serving as executive director since 1974.

Pinson, 47, who will serve as executive director elect until Jan. 1, was selected by the 190-member Texas Baptist Executive Board.

He will be coordinator and liaison between the Executive Board and the 23 colleges, hospitals and children's homes supported by the 4,500 Southern Baptists churches and missions of Texas through the Cooperative Program.
