Snelson wins bid; GOP runoff set

Van Archer

Lamar Smith

Pete Snelson

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Democrats easily answered the question of who would represent them in the ring in the 21st Congressional District battle scheduled for November, but the Republicans will be fighting until the first Saturday of June when a runoff will serve them up the answer.

Associated Press had declared Midland resident and former state senator Pete Snelson the Democratic winner with about 58 percent of the vote. By presstime early this morning, unofficial reports by the AP also pitted San Antonio residents Van Archer and Lamar Smith against each other in the June decision for Republicans. However, former Midland mayor G. Thane Akins said totals given him could put him in the runoff against Smith.

Also seeking the Democratic nomination but falling far behind Snelson were Midland petroleum landman and Lyndon LaRouche follower Terry Lowry, former military officer David Hunsicker and San Antonio college professor Joe Sullivan. Other candidates on the Republican ballot were former congressional and White House aide Henry Gandy of Kerrville, former San Antonio county commissioner Jeff Wentworth and San Antonio resident Lowell "Duke" Embs.

Area and Ector results, other related stories — 2,3,7A

WITH 93 PERCENT of the precincts reporting, AP said Smith had received 16,049 votes or 31 percent; Archer had 12,381, 24 percent; Akins had 7,626, 15.03 percent; Wentworth received 9,929, 19.6 percent; Gandy had 4,422; and Embs, 314.

The battle for Congress erupted after incumbent Republican Tom Loeffler decided to seek the gubernatorial seat.

Not surprisingly, Akins and Snelson carried their party's banner in unofficial Midland County results. On the Democratic ticket, Snelson received 1,453 votes; Sullivan, 105; Lowry, 83; and Hunsicker, 283. The Republican primary gave Smith 2,324 votes; Embs, 39; Gandy, 317; Akins, 4,570; Wentworth, 1,379; and Archer, 1,316.

Snelson, a local advertising executive who served in the State Legislature first as a representative and then as a senator for over 20 years, said his next move will be to begin making a game plan for the November general election.

Victories in sight for White, Clements

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — With no runoff in sight, Democrat Mark White and Republican Bill Clements will square off in a November grudge match race for the Governor's Mansion.

At 10 p.m. Saturday, White's camp claimed victory, predicting their candidate will ultimately garner 55 percent of the vote. Clements said the numbers look good but refrained from dismissing his two challengers outright. White came from behind to force Clements from the mansion in a hard-fought 1982 campaign.

With 6,052 of the 6,724 Democratic precincts reporting, White led with 518,288 or 54 percent of the vote. Andrew Briscoe III, who early in the night seemed to be gathering enough votes to force White into a June 7 runoff, followed in second with 211,550 or 22 percent of the vote. A candidate must win at least 50 percent of the vote to avoid a runoff with the runner up.

A. Don Crowder led the rest of the Democrats with 11 percent of the vote, followed by Bobby Locke with 5 percent, Ron Slover and Sheila Bilyeu with 4 percent each.

With 3,592 of 5,150 Republican precincts reporting, Clements led his two challengers with 229,289 or 60 percent of the vote. Tom Loeffler trailed with 21 percent and Kent Hance brought up the rear with 19 percent. Clements led all night, with Hance and Loeffler trading second and third place.

White and Clements both interpreted the results as predictions for victory in November.

"I think what we have is an endorsement from the people of Texas by over a 2-to-1 margin," White told a cheering crowd of supporters. "We are going to have better schools in Texas, better roads in Texas and we're not going to turn our face away from the future and run to the rear. That's the Republican approach, and the people of Texas will not accept it."

Gov. Mark White

Clements said the returns tell him Texans want a new governor.

"The people of Texas are saying, 'Look, Bill Clements was in office, he left us a billion-dollar surplus in the state treasury, he ran the governor's office down there the way it should be run, there was a high sense of integrity and credibility there, and that no longer exists," Clements said.

Loeffler press secretary Nancy Dorn said the congressman would concede to Clements. "Tom ran a good race," she said. "We started a year ago from ground zero. We just didn't get over the top."

Shortly after 11:30 p.m., Hance called Clements to concede. "I told him I was truly impressed...If I had to do it again, I wouldn't have changed a thing," he said.

On the Democratic side, Briscoe refused to give in. "Mark White's still showing a vulnerable point, and we don't quit until the bell's rung," he said.

Clements, the 69-year-old millionaire Dallas businessman, became Texas' first Republican governor since Reconstruction when he upset Democrat John Hill in 1978. Clements lost a bitter and expensive reelection campaign to White four years later. The former governor suprised observers last summer when he decided to enter this year's race, saying neither Hance nor Loeffler could oust White from the governor's mansion and he owed it to the state to try.

Hance, 43, an attorney, represented the Lubbock area as a Democrat in the state Senate and in Congress. After losing a razor-close fight for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination in 1984, Hance jumped to the GOP at the urging of U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, a fellow party switcher. Hance's campaign has focused on economic development and — most recently — illegal aliens.

Both Clements, White score big in Midland to capture nominations

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Former Gov. Bill Clements scored a resounding victory over his two Republican opponents in Midland County to help him capture the GOP gubernatorial nomination in Saturday's primary election.

Clements received a total 4,036 Midland votes to U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler's 3,316 votes and Kent Hance's 2,816 votes.

Meanwhile, Gov. Mark White defeated five other gubernatorial opponents by a 2-to-1 margin on his way to winning the Democratic primary. White received 1,073 total votes in Midland County to A. Don Crowder's 257 votes, Bobby Locke's 121 votes, Ron Slover's 82 votes, Andrew Briscoe's 305 votes, and Sheila Bilyeu's 56 votes.

In other GOP races, Midlanders chose former Midland Mayor G. Thane Akins over five other opponents in the race for the 21st U.S. Congressional District seat. Akins received 4,570 votes to Lamar Smith's 2,324 votes, Lowell "Duke" Embs' 39 votes, Henry Gandy's 317 votes, Jeff Wentworth's 1,379 votes, and Van Archer's 1,316 votes. For the entire district, Smith and Archer appear headed for a runoff.

Ahders defeats Blair; Craig, McCrary in runoff

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County political primary races wound up Saturday with winners, losers, and an impending runoff election for a Republican Party county commissioner nominee.

Midland County Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders emerged the victor over his challenger, Matthew Blair, for the county judgeship in Saturday's Republican Party primary election.

"I am pleased that the people of Midland County have confidence in me," said the 70-year-old judge, who will be entering his third four-year term of office in January 1987. Ahders mustered 60 percent of the vote to Blair's 40 percent — 5,644 to 3,697. He faces no opposition in the Nov. 4 general election.

But in the three-way race for the party's nomination for Precinct 2 commissioner, Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, 62, was forced into a run-off election by his strongest challenger, 32-year-old marketing consulting Guy McCrary.

The third candidate, computer consultant Milton Rister, 35, of Greenwood, surmised that his candidacy forced a run-off election, which is set for June 7. He is lending his support to Craig, a real-estate broker who has been in office since 1983.

"I think my philosophy is a little closer to Wally's," Rister said Saturday night. "I believe Wally will keep our taxes in line. And that's why I am going to support him."

Craig polled 46 percent of the vote, McCrary got 40 percent, and Rister mustered 14 percent. The tally was 1,671 votes for Craig; 1,436 for McCrary, and 514 for Rister.

Winner of the Craig-McCrary match will be in a campaign against Democrat Don Boydstun, a 39-year-old design technician, for the commissioner's post in the general election.

IN THE THIRD Midland County contested race, retired accountant Tom Miller, 50, handily defeated District Attorney's Investigator Dewey Lee, 55, for the Republican Party nomination for county treasurer.

"I think the voters realized the need for a qualified manager with a financial background," Miller said, "and the Treasurer's Office is a management position."

Miller won 65 percent of the vote to Lee's 35 percent. The vote was 4,750 for Miller and 2,573 for Lee.

Miller will oppose Democrat Dee Thompson, county treasurer since 1959, in the general election.

In his triumph, Ahders said Blair, a 30-year-old Midland lawyer, congratulated him by telephone. "He's a good sport," said the judge, a retired special agent of FBI and a former Midland Municipal Court judge.

Crude oil closes at $14.73 a barrel on Friday

By LEE A. DANIELS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Futures contracts for crude oil closed at $14.73 a barrel Friday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, their highest level in nine weeks, and oil analysts said that the market was poised to move above the $15-a-barrel level.

Underpinning the rise, analysts said, is a continuing low level of gasoline inventories as demand strengthens.

The analysts added that reports that the Soviet Union had shut down 16 nuclear plants that use graphite cores for safety checks gave an important psychological boost to the oil market.

The closing of those plants would temporarily remove 15,000 megawatts — the equivalent of about 400,000 barrels of oil a day — from the Soviet power system.

The analysts noted that such closings should have only a relatively minor and short-term impact on oil supplies, and questioned the validity of the market's response.

Charles Eppinger, an expert on the Soviet nuclear and oil industry, remarked: "Yes, the market is reacting to the Soviet situation, but I'm not sure it should be reacting to it in the short term."

Eppinger is director of the energy and resources program at the Georgetown Institute for Strategic and International Studies.

"The Soviet nuclear situation won't have any impact on the world oil crisis," said Maurice Adelman, professor of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "What this indicates is that in the current environment any rumor that blows over the market will push prices up or down."

Steve H. Hanke, chief economist of Friedberg Commodity Management Inc. of Toronto, said, "With the unreliability of any information coming from the Soviet government, I'd be hesitant to react without specific confirmation."

Nonetheless, crude oil prices on the futures market and the open market did react.

The 92-cent gain from Thursday for the crude oil futures contract, covering the West Texas Intermediate grade, pushed the price to its highest level since it closed at $15.11 a gallon on Feb. 24.

Crude oil futures finished between $14 and $15 twice more that month, once in March, and once in April.

On the open market Friday West Texas Intermediate closed at $14.58 a gallon, up 80 cents. Brent North Sea crude oil, the British blend, closed at $13.25, up $1.

Hispanic assured of runoff spot in GOP attorney general primary

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — San Antonio State District Judge Roy Barrera Jr. assured himself of a spot in a runoff and was near an outright win in the Republican attorney general primary Saturday.

With 41 percent of the 5,150 GOP precincts reporting, Barrera had 82,819 votes, or 45.4 percent.

Former Williamson County District Attorney Ed Walsh was second with 60,482 votes, or 33.1 percent. State District Judge John Roach of Plano was third with 39,338 votes, or 21.5 percent.

Barrera was seeking to become the first Hispanic elected to statewide office in Texas.

The top two finishers would advance to a June runoff if no candidate drew more than 50 percent of the vote.

"I'm satisfied now that Texas knows what Roy Barrera stands for," Barrera said.

"We're still hopeful," added Barrera campaign spokeswoman Karne Massari. "We're not giving up the idea of an outright win."

Walsh said, "It looks like a runoff to me, between Barrera and myself."

Attorney General Jim Mattox was unopposed in the Democratic primary.

Barrera drew support from some Republican Party regulars who believed their overall November effort could benefit by having a Hispanic on the ticket. Barrera's father Roy Sr. was a Texas secretary of state.

Sharp makes cut for runoff in Democratic race

DALLAS (AP) — State Sen. John Sharp on Saturday assured himself the nomination or a place in the runoff in the Democratic primary for Texas Railroad Commission through a campaign emphasizing the need for stronger rail safety laws.

Sharp, three other Democrats and four Republicans fought for a single spot on the commission in Texas primaries, with the winner of each meeting in November to battle for election to the seat.

Most of the candidates running for the position in the little-known state agency argued for trucking deregulation — but agreed on little else. Some made new efforts for rail safety — a traditional focus of the commission — a campaign issue. Others pushed for a health care investigation.

With 48.1 percent of the vote counted, Sharp grabbed 180,016 votes, or 44.6 percent. Lawyer John C. Pouland had 86,001 votes, or 21.3 percent, while P.S. "Sam" Ervin had 83,190 votes, or 20.6 percent. William MacNaughton trailed with 54,360 votes, or 13.5 percent.

In the Republican primary, John Thomas Henderson led with 44,434 votes, or 29.8 percent. Milton Fox followed with 41,830 votes, or 28.1 percent. Ed Emmett had 35,663 votes, or 24 percent. Ralph E. Hoelscher trailed with 26,972 votes, or 18.1 percent, with 39.5 percent of the vote counted.

MacNaughton is a 64-year-old Austin attorney. Other Democrats were Sharp, 35, of Victoria; Pouland, 31, of Dallas; and Ervin, a 71-year-old Dallas oil and natural gas consultant.

Emmett is a 36-year-old state representative; and Henderson, 78, is an Austin real estate broker. Hoelscher, 42, of Miles, is a farmer and rancher and the 59-year-old Fox is a state representative.

The commission seat was the only statewide position up for grabs this year in which an incumbent did not seek re-election. Buddy Temple announced last year he would not run for another term.

The Texas Legislature has broadened the authority of the state's oldest agency, created in 1891, to include oil and gas production, the trucking industry and surface mining.

"When Buddy Temple said he would go out as a commissioner, two-thirds of the people didn't know what the commission was all about," said Sharp. "I wish it were as visible and vocal as the governor. But it is the most difficult office to explain."

The railroad commission issues statewide and fieldwide rules for the spacing and density of oil and gas wells. Commissioners fix production quotas for the state, for Texas oil and gas fields and for each well within the fields.

Several candidates said the commission, which regulates petroleum production, can be instrumental in formulating a national energy policy.

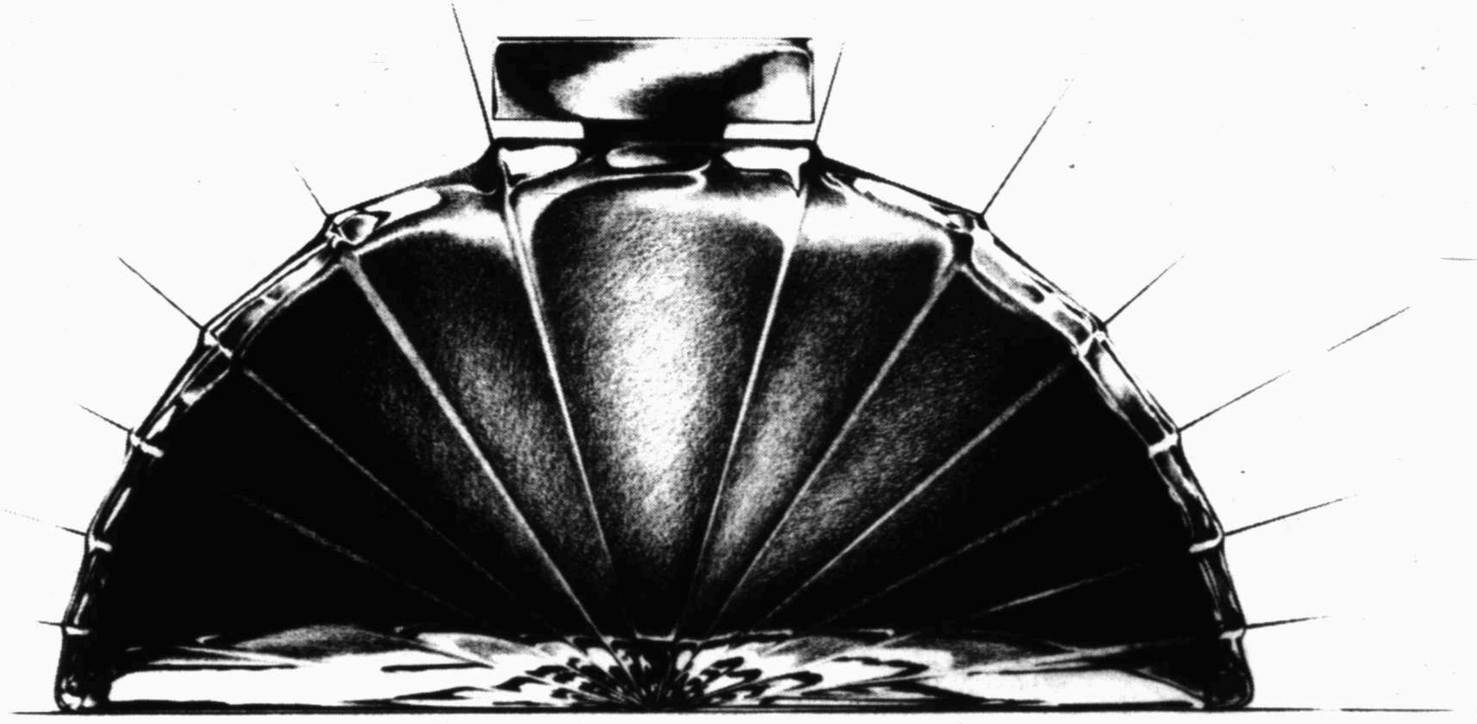

"The commission can no longer be an obscure agency that does all its work in a back room and does not get the public involved," said Emmett. "It doesn't matter whether it involves oil and gas or trucking. These are the 1980s."

LaRouche candidates fail to win any major contested races

DALLAS (AP) — Major candidates backed by extremist politician Lyndon LaRouche failed to win any major contested races Saturday in Texas primary elections, which drew the interest of national Democratic Party leaders.

Texas' election was the first since the Illinois primary in which LaRouche followers were nominated as Democrats for lieutenant governor and secretary of state, to the chagrin of party stalwarts.

Democratic National Committee spokesman John Florescu had said the party would be "monitoring Texas very closely," but officials hadn't expected a repeat of Illinois.

The only LaRouche candidate for statewide office was Noel Cowling of Dublin, who opposed state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower in the Democratic primary. Hightower won easily, maintaining a 4-to-1 lead.

The 11 Democrats and one Republican seeking congressional seats were soundly drubbed.

Results from almost 200 local offices being sought by LaRouche candidates were not readily available.

The strongest LaRouche competitor — 8th Congressional District candidate Harley Schlanger of Houston, the full-time southwest coordinator for the LaRouche group — garnered only about 25 percent of the vote, losing to Blaine R. Mann.

Other LaRouche congressional candidates recorded even smaller percentages.

Two LaRouche candidates were unopposed in the Democratic election for congressional seats held by Republicans in Harris County.

They were Henry Kniffen of Houston, seeking the 7th Congressional District seat held by U.S. Rep. Bill Archer, and Susan Director of Houston, who wants the job held by U.S. Rep. Tom DeLay of Sugar Land in the 22nd Congressional District.

Democratic officials said no other Democrats filed because their chances of winning in those districts were virtually nil.

Most state party leaders were concerned about staving off an invasion of LaRouche candidates at the county and precinct level.

But Schlanger decried the Democratic Party's efforts to exclude LaRouche candidates as violating its own bylaws, which call for a party open to people of all persuasions.

In San Antonio, the outgoing Democratic Party chairman for Bexar County took the unusual step of endorsing a potential replacement in an effort to thwart the LaRouche candidate for the office.

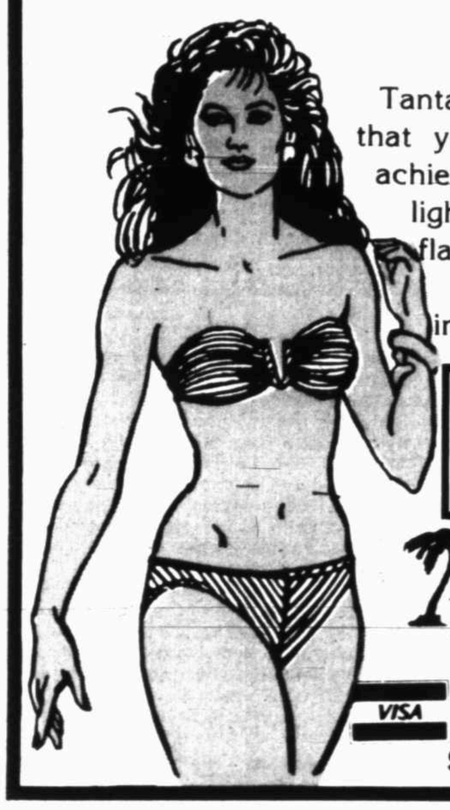

Marilyn Jones said she endorsed Jane Hibler as her replacement because she was afraid LaRouche candidate Donald Varella might win because he was the only Hispanic in the race and the other candidates were not well-known.

"You do need to distinguish the wheat from the chaff," Ms. Jones said.

In Dallas County, the Democratic Party sought write-in candidates for an estimated 11 out of 455 county precincts where LaRouche candidates ran unopposed.

State Democratic Chairman Robert Slagle and other party officials urged Democrats to be careful about casting protest votes against incumbents lest they unwittingly support a LaRouche candidate.

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — An explosion apparently caused by a time bomb tore through an AirLanka jetliner at the Colombo airport Saturday as passengers were boarding, killing 21 people and wounding dozens, the government announced.

Several Japanese and at least a half dozen Europeans from Britain, France and Germany were among the victims, according to state radio and other reports, but no identities were given.

The government issued a statement blaming Tamil militants, but police said no group or individual had asserted responsibility.

"It is...suspected that a separatist terrorist group has been responsible for this explosion that claimed the lives of so many innocent people," the statement said.

"This is plain terrorism," said National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali who visited the scene accompanied by senior military officials.

The official Sri Lankan news agency Lankapuvath said the blast was believed to have been caused by a bomb in the rear of the plane. The explosion broke the plane in two, sent plumes of black smoke skyward and shattered glass panels in the main terminal builing.

Officials said 24 people were injured, but witnesses at the airport put the number at more than 40. Lankapuvath said 12 of the injured were in critical condition.

Passengers were boarding the AirLanka L-1011 at 9:10 a.m., 20 minutes before the scheduled departure, when the explosion occurred, state radio said.

A Western pilot who spoke on condition of anonymity said he saw bodies lying on the tarmac and cargo, such as chickens and vegetables, strewn over the area. Passengers were running and screaming, he said.

One injured passenger, a member of the French navy, told reporters he had not yet taken his seat when the explosion rocked the aircraft. "I was lucky to escape alive," said the man who would only identify himself as Redato.

The airport was closed for four hours after the explosion.

The security minister claimed the explosion was timed to coincide with the arrival of an Indian delegation seeking to mediate between the Tamil rebels and the Sri Lankan government.

Tamils, most of whom are Hindus, make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 15 million people. They claim discrimination by the majority Sinhalese Buddhists.

Tamil guerrillas have been fighting for three years to establish a separate homeland in northeastern Sri Lanka, where most of the nation's Tamils live. Moderate Tamils seek autonomy for the region but not independence.

The Lockheed TriStar had arrived from London via Zurich, Switzerland, and Dubai in the United Arab Emirates. Passengers had left the plane so it could be cleaned and refueled.

News reports said 128 passengers were scheduled to reboard for a flight to Male in the Maldive Islands, 388 miles southwest of India's southern tip.

Among the passengers were people from Britain, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, Japan, India, Sri Lanka and the Maldives.

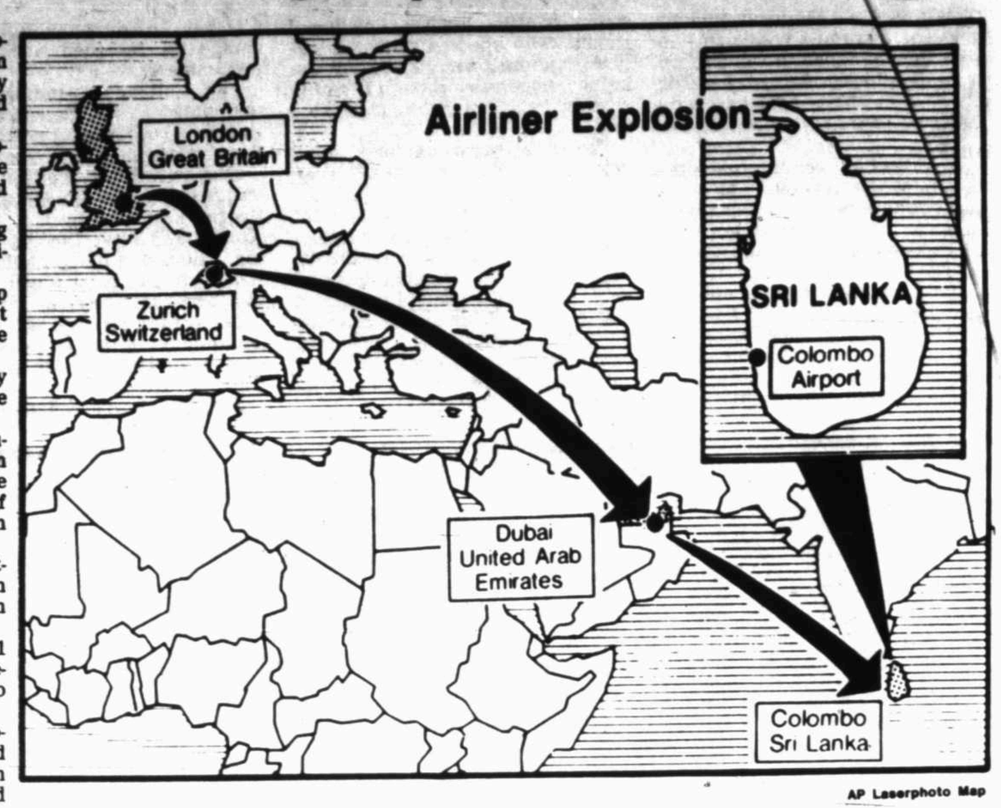

A Japanese Foreign Ministry official in Tokyo said a Japanese newlywed couple was feared killed and two other Japanese were injured.

The French Foreign Ministry in Paris said at least four French nationals were reported missing and one was seriously injured. The ministry said 16 French passengers escaped unharmed.

The British High Commissioner in Sri Lanka, contacted by the British television station TV-AM from London, said one Briton was among the injured.

The Lankapuvath news agency quoted security sources as saying a bomb was planted in the tail of the aircraft. Reporters and other witnesses said the blast went off in a rear cargo hold.

AirLanka sources in Dubai, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said aviation officials in Colombo told them an explosive device probably was hidden in a shipment of meat from Colombo for the Maldives. They said shreds of meat were scattered near the explosion site.

NASA explodes careening rocket

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — An unmanned rocket carrying a weather satellite went out of control and was blown up by ground command shortly after launch Saturday, the second failure of a U.S. spacecraft since the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger.

Just over a minute after liftoff, the Delta rocket's main engine shut down for unknown reasons, leaving it without guidance and careening out of control at 1,400 mph, said Bill Russell, NASA's Delta manager.

Safety officers then sent a destruct command "and finished the job," Russell said at a news conference about an hour after the launch.

Saturday's launching followed the Jan. 28 space shuttle explosion that killed seven astronauts, and the April 18 explosion in California of an Air Force Titan 34D rocket thought to have been carrying a spy satellite.

The Delta, the space agency's most used and most dependable rocket, had been launched successfully 43 times stretching back to September 1977 before Saturday.

The next scheduled launch from Cape Canaveral is an Atlas-Centaur rocket, scheduled to power a Navy communications satellite into orbit May 22. Charles Gay, head of NASA's expendable rocket program, said he didn't know whether the Delta loss would affect plans for that mission.

"We have had a loss of the vehicle. There is a breakup of the vehicle," launch commenter Lisa Malone said as the 116-foot rocket broke apart.

The flight appeared normal through the first minute, with the first set of solid rockets being jettisoned at 64 and 65 seconds, Russell said.

"We were flying along, and at about 71 seconds, the main engine...shut down," he said. "It's a very sharp shutdown, almost as though it were a commanded shutdown. Once you lose that, of course, the rocket has no stability control."

After the shutdown, the rocket began drifting, creating an angle of attack great enough that the fairing, or shield, that covers its nose tore off.

There was no indication that a command had been sent to shut down the engines, he said. Preliminary data, such as turbine speed and temperatures in and around the engines, "all appeared to be very normal," Russell said.

"The final three solids (boosters) were burning very well" after the main engine shut down, he said. The six solid-fuel boosters that began their burn at liftoff had been jettisoned at that point.

Russell said he had never before seen such an abrupt main-engine shutdown "in an uncommanded sense."

The three-stage Delta is assisted into space by nine solid-propellant boosters strapped to its bottom stage. The boosters are similar to those that help power the space shuttle and Titan 34D, but are much smaller and made in one section, rather than segmented like the others.

Investigators believe that the Challenger and Titan rocket explosions were caused by failures of joints between segments.

Morton Thiokol makes both the solid-fuel boosters used for the shuttle and the Delta.

The debris from the rocket landed in the Atlantic about 30 miles off Cape Canaveral, said Air Force Col. Albert M. Thomas. There were no immediate plans to try to recover the debris, he said.

NASA said the rocket was almost 15 miles high and 46½ miles downrange over the Atlantic when it was destroyed by an Air Force range safety officer 1 minute and 30 seconds after liftoff. The time of launch was 6:18 p.m. EDT.

The last 43 Delta launches, dating to September 1977, had been successful.

Gay and Russell said they were extremely disappointed by the failure. NASA had counted on a successful launch to instill some badly needed confidence in a program heavily damaged by the shuttle and Titan failures.

"It devastates me," Russell said. "It's quite a setback because we were counting on a success...and the Delta was our most reliable vehicle."

Gay said launch managers in the control blockhouse "couldn't believe it happened...people out there were sad...obviously we're very upset about it."

U.S. Rep. Manuel Lujan Jr., R-N.M., the senior Republican on the House Science and Technology Committee, said after the failure that there should be a temporary halt to all launches pending an investigation.

"The space program is losing credibility. This places us further back," Lujan said. "It looks as if we have no capability of any launch and it's a cause of real concern that our last three attempts at launch have been failures."

Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., who rode aboard the last successful space shuttle in January and whose subcommittee oversees NASA, said "space flight is a risky business."

"It means that if we had to launch tomorrow, we wouldn't be able to. But if we really had to, for national security, we could in a matter of weeks...We're gonna get it together and we're going to have a very vigorous and robust space program."

Earlier Saturday, engineers reported no sign of any further fuel leakage in the rocket's main engine, a condition that resulted in the scrub of the mission three hours before Thursday's scheduled liftoff. Russell said the fuel leak was not the cause of the engine shutdown.

The space agency said Thursday's launch would have been postponed even without the Challenger and Titan failures, but extra precautions at the Delta's launch pad and the two-day delay over the main-engine leak indicated the concern that everything go well.

NASA's acting administrator, William Graham, said earlier in the week that the launch was important because "we need this satellite and we need to remind ourselves that we have had success in the space program."

The Delta rocket has been the space agency's workhorse for almost 28 years, logging a 94 percent success rate in 177 flights.

Its payload was GOES-7, the Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellite designed to track and report the formation of hurricanes and other adverse weather conditions along the nation's Eastern Seaboard.

The $57.5 million satellite was to have been parked in a permanent 22,300 mile-high orbit above the equator over Colombia. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration paid NASA $42.5 million to launch it.

Weighing 998 pounds, GOES-7 was built to replace a similar satellite which went silent two years ago over the Atlantic. Another satellite of the series, GOES-6, has been performing double duty, reporting weather patterns along both of the country's coastlines.

But its service has been limited, and the newest satellite was expected to be particularly useful during the coming hurricane season because it would have been able to detect storms brewing in the Caribbean and lower Atlantic region.

GOES-6 was to be repositioned over the Pacific Ocean later.

SNELSON

However, part of that plan will depend on who the Republican nominee will be, he noted.

"I'll spend Monday developing some plans. I'll immediately start my campaign and won't let any grass grow under my feet," he said indicating a summer working on the election. Issues will boil down to "what needs to happen in the district is a positive trust. It's a matter of translating who, by experience and knowledge of the district, can relate these issues to the congress and the people. It's a matter of I know the district and I know the issues important to the district."

Archer and Smith also were beginning to think in terms of a future game plan.

"IT'S GOING to be a battle royal," said Archer. He pointed out he had expected Smith to be in a runoff after spending $600,000 on the primary. "To win something like this without a runoff would have been very difficult to do." He added he's expecting to win over many of Akins' supporters.

But that also is part of Smith's plan, who said he will be in Midland early Monday morning to thank his supporters and begin working on the runoff. "That shows how important I think Midland is. Midland is crucial to our campaign." Smith said he ran a "positive issues-oriented campaign; I think that's what the voters wanted."

Midland is the northernmost point of the 21st Congressional District and the county was expected to represent about a third of the votes cast in the Republican primary with the second third coming from San Angelo and surrounding counties and the final third from Bexar County. Midland, however, had a low turnout with an unofficial figure of about 10,172 while Bexar County sent twice the amount to the polls than voted in the 1984 presidential primary. Smith said the turnout was about 22,000.

It's the Midland turnout that disappointed Akins. "That's the same amount we had in the mayor's race six years ago. Since then we've grown a third. I thought 20,000 would have been a good number. Even with 15,000 to 16,000, we would definitely have been in a runoff.

"I don't know if it's the economy and people being more concerned about their jobs."

SMITH AND Wentworth began their campaigns last summer and Smith said that may have made a difference in his outcome. Archer, a city councilman for several years, already had a widely recognized name; Akins and Gandy didn't enter the race until early 1986.

"Our support across the district was consistently strong," said Smith. "It helps to have an early and fast start."

On the Democratic side, the closest contender to Snelson was Hunsicker, who acknowledged the winner's experience and name identification in the district helped.

"We feel pretty good about it," said Hunsicker, a retired Air Force officer now in real estate and building in San Antonio. "He ran hard. We will support him. I think Snelson is a very nice person and a very credible candidate. I intend to support him 100 percent. I think he will be a good candidate in November. He's a first class person. There is no bitterness, no hard feelings."

Lowry also agreed that he feels Snelson will "do a good job for the district." But he said the LaRouche candidates, such as himself, "gave notice that no longer will special interests run the Democratic Party. It's just one battle in a total war."

OIL

Futures contracts for petroleum products also moved up Friday. Heating oil ended at 43 cents a gallon, up more than 2 cents. Both leaded and unleaded gasolines gained more than a cent, to nearly 52 cents a gallon.

"The market was very anxious about the Soviet action," said Richard Marose, senior oil analyst at Geldermann Inc. of Chicago. "The gasoline situation — low inventories, rising demand — had been slowly bringing the market up recently. But this clearly provided the impetus today."

Marose said the breakthrough could pave the way for crude oil to recover to nearly $18 a barrel soon.

Peter C. Beutel, assistant director of Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., put the probable recovery figure closer to $17 a barrel, but agreed that "a lot of traders were waiting to get past this point."

"Every time the market had gotten to $14 recently," he went on, "it was aggressively bid down. Now, it seems in as strong a position as it's been since prices began falling in January."

Former columnist goes public with redneck drive-in movie critic

By DOUG CRICHTON

DALLAS (AP) — For three years, he was a drawling, offending voice from behind closed doors, nothing but a dotted outline of a red-necked bumpkin in newspapers' promotional ads.

But now, almost exactly a year after the Dallas Times Herald yanked the "Joe Bob Goes To The Drive-In" column for being too offensive, Joe Bob Briggs has gone public.

On college campuses, in comedy clubs and with videocassettes, the man who could draw venom from an armadillo with his barbed, racist and downright tacky movie reviews is trying to show America "that Joe Bob ain't Darth Vader."

Former Times Herald columnist John Bloom, who began writing the Joe Bob columns in January 1982 after a stint as a "real movie critic," says he had to dump Joe Bob's celebrated anonymity to keep his alter ego alive.

He contends his former bosses — the guys who Joe Bob entreats Jesus in one of his comedy routines to turn into "editor fondue" — have tried to assassinate Joe Bob to keep him quiet.

It's an allegation Times Herald Associate Editor Roy Bode strenously denies.

Bloom has sued the newspaper and the Los Angeles Times Syndicate, which had distributed the column to 57 newspapers nationally, over rights to the Joe Bob name.

He is seeking $900,000 in damages and charges that the Times Herald indefinitely delayed publication of a book of "Joe Bob Goes To The Drive-In" columns in a dispute over who owns rights to the fictitious persona.

The newspaper dropped the Joe Bob column last April after Bloom's parody of the pop music "We Are The World" song precipitated a storm of protest from the city's black community.

The syndicate followed suit, and Bloom, 33, resigned from the Times Herald a few days later and took his pen pal to the Universal Press Syndicate, which now distributes the Joe Bob column to about 45 newspapers.

"We're not interested in any further contact with Joe Bobb Briggs' character or John Bloom," the Times Herald's Bode said. "We never attempted to censor John Bloom. We did attempt to set some conditions on how the character can be used."

Specifically, the Times Herald didn't want Joe Bob to attack the paper either in his columns or in speeches. But Bloom calls that censorship and has refused to bend.

So while attorneys from both sides try to work out a settlement, Bloom, who is working on a historical novel, actively is promoting his alter ego through stand-up comedy routines, videos and speeches around the country.

"My new syndicate told me to go out and talk to people so they'll realize that Joe Bob isn't Darth Vader," Bloom said recently in his glassy Dallas high-rise apartment.

It's hard to imagine the slender, soft-spoken, well-educated Bloom as Joe Bob, but there he is, sauntering bow-legged onto stages with a grizzly, four-day stubble, an 8½-gallon hat, a Texas-sized belt buckle and a smirk that won't quit.

NRC proposes penalties for nuclear plant

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff has proposed civil penalties totaling $370,000 against Texas Utilities Electric Co. for several alleged violations of NRC requirements at the Comanche Peak nuclear plant, a spokesman said Friday.

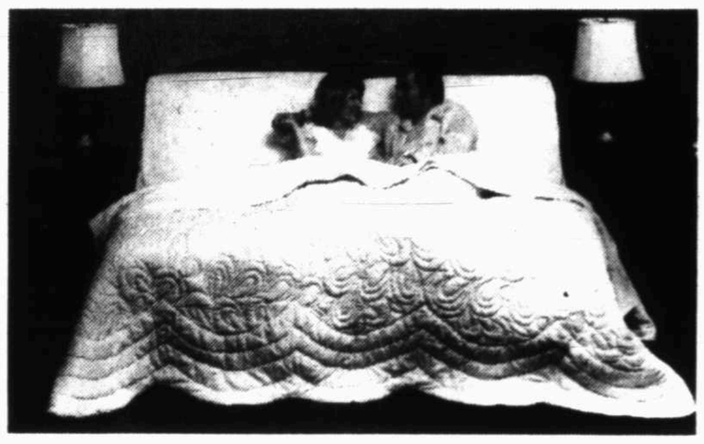

Clyde Wisner, spokesman for the Region IV NRC office in Arlington, said the proposed civil penalties at the plant near Glen Rose are the result of two separate actions by the NRC staff.

He said the proposed penalty was submitted by the NRC's Office of Inspection and Enforcement. The company was informed of the proposed fines by the Arlington office Friday, Wisner said.

One action for which a civil penalty of $120,000 is proposed concerns Texas Utility's failure in three instances to ensure quality control inspectors freedom to identify problems.

The second action for which civil penalties totaling $250,000 are proposed relates to multiple failures on Texas Utility's part to meet requirements pertaining to the construction and quality assurance program at the plant.

Hughes influence widely felt

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Howard Hughes, who died 10 years ago April 5, was a Hollywood playboy and daredevil aviator who bought and sold casinos and airlines and had the ear of presidents.

But before his death, the richest man in the United States was pursued by legal problems, wracked with pain and dogged by phobias. The once-strapping Texan had become a 94-pound recluse, hop-scotching from nation to nation.

Still, while ultimately disappointed in life, he might be proud today of the way his influence is still felt in high technology, aviation and medical research.

"I think it's very, very sad that his many accomplishments have been diminished by the problems he went through in his final years," said Bob Maheu, who worked for the billionaire for 16 years, running his empire for the last four, but never met him face-to-face. They communicated by phone and memo.

Hughes' rise to fabulous wealth — he was estimated to be worth more than $2 billion when he died at age 70 — began in 1923 when, at age 19, he inherited majority interest in Hughes Tool Co., plus patent rights to an oil and gas drilling bit invented by his father and a partner. The inheritance was worth about $871,000.

The tool company became what an associate called "the cash register" for the young tycoon. Clearly Hughes had a genius for the right investment, but often his money followed his heart.

He moved into the movie industry in the 1920s, buying RKO Studio and selling it a short time later at a substantial profit.

Before he left the Hollywood world in the mid-'50s, saying it had grown "too complicated" for him, he had produced a checkered list of films and became known as squire to a parade of actresses, including Katharine Hepburn and Jean Harlow. Actress Jean Peters became his second wife in 1957, but they divorced 14 years later.

Another Hughes passion was flying, an affection that led to his creation of Hughes Aircraft Co., which made warplanes and grew into a pre-eminent satellite builder — in 1985, the ninth largest privately held U.S. corporation.

It also led to creation of his Spruce Goose, a giant seaplane constructed of wood to save metal in wartime. The plane struggled into flight only once, but another aviation venture, his investment of $80 million in Trans World Airlines, repaid him more than six times when he sold his shares for $546 million.

The flamboyant flier performed aerial stunts and crashed three times, suffering critical injuries in 1946.

As an empire-builder, Hughes always had help. Like Maheu later, accountant Noah Dietrich managed Hughes' holdings for three decades starting in the '20s. If the billionaire sometimes misstepped in his investments, he was "never thwarted by failure," Deitrich once said.

Nor was profit always his only motive. Hughes is remembered, too, for efforts to influence U.S. politics and for enormous philanthropy.

The Howard Hughes Medical Institute is now the world's largest private medical research organization, and in February it announced plans to spend more than $1 billion in the next five years to support studies in 14 states.

Hughes created the institute in 1953 and later gave it sole ownership of Hughes Aircraft. The institute sold the company to General Motors Corp. last year for $5 billion.

But Howard Hughes' grand plans did not always unfold so smoothly.

In Maheu's words, he wished to control history — and found he could not.

He could change the face of Nevada, where his umbrella company, Summa Corp., owns four hotels and six casinos in Las Vegas and Reno, along with much valuable property in California and elsewhere.

Perry Lieber, a longtime Hughes associate and now a Summa consultant, recalled empty stores on what is now the Las Vegas Strip before Hughes arrived, bought up hotels, and gave the city a "feeling...that an honest man had taken over."

Hughes' open-checkbook approach to Nevada helped improve its national image, said former Gov. Paul Laxalt, now the state's senior senator.

He also had an open checkbook when it came to contributions to any number of politicians, according to Maheu.

"If Mr. Hughes were interested in certain candidates, I'd prepare their campaigns," he said.

"There were Washington problems and the political arena," Maheu said. "I would represent him at the inaugurals...I was his alter ego."

The billionaire's largesse created a quarter century of political due-bills, and Hughes was dissapointed when he tried to call them in. He complained to Maheu that his contributions to the nation's defense and space programs should be rewarded with a halt to nuclear testing in the Nevada desert.

From the Desert Inn Hotel penthouse where he secluded himself for years after 1966, he sent an emissary to Lyndon Johnson's White House in 1968 in a futile effort to halt a Nevada nuclear test.

When Richard Nixon's administration folded under the weight of a bungled burglary at the Democratic National Committee office in Washington's Watergate complex, Hughes watched with a personal interest, Maheu said.

Larry O'Brien, then head of the DNC, had once been hired by Maheu to help with Hughes' public relations. Some people believe the break-in was "to try and determine whether Larry O'Brien might have had any papers in his possession that were compromising to Nixon," according to Maheu.

In a book, Nixon aide H.R. Haldeman said the president's obsession with getting information on O'Brien's connection to Hughes led to the break-in. Author Michael Drosnin made the same case in the 1984 book, "Citizen Hughes," presenting memos purportedly written by Hughes that Drosnin says disclose an attempt to buy control of the White House by paying off other leading politicians.

"There were some memos where references pertaining to absolute power were sent to me. To protect him from himself, I took no action on those memos. To buy a particular president or to buy someone into the White House — no action was taken in that direction," Maheu said of Hughes.

He insisted Hughes' political contributions were legal.

Like Nixon, Hughes hated communism. In one of his last public appearances, in the mid-'50s, he delivered a blistering anti-communist speech. And by claiming that the CIA ship Glomar Explorer was one of his own, Hughes provided cover for CIA efforts to recover a sunken Soviet submarine in 1970.

That same year, a power struggle developed within Hughes' empire.

The billionaire had been gradually losing control and growing more incapacitated by physical pain and by apparent drug dependency. He became unkempt, with a scraggly beard.

On Thanksgiving Eve 1970, associates decided to spirit him away from Nevada — walking him down nine flights of an outdoor fire escape while a capacity crowd in the Desert Inn's showroom watched Bob Newhart and Edie Adams.

A decoy caravan of limousines headed for McCarran International Airport to throw any reporters off the trail. Minutes later a van bearing Hughes headed for Nellis Air Force Base, where he was loaded on a private jet for a flight to the Bahamas.

Maheu was deposed, and in the 5½ years that followed, Hughes traveled to Canada, England, Nicaragua and finally Acapulco, Mexico.

On Monday morning, April 5, 1976, Hughes' assistants loaded his comatose body, shriveled to 94 pounds, onto a stretcher, sneaked out of the Acapulco Princess Hotel and boarded a private jet.

Hughes died 2½ hours later as the jet descended, half an hour out from his hometown of Houston, where the aides planned to seek medical treatment. Death was attributed to kidney failure.

Hughes failed in Hollywood filmmaker role

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Over three decades, Howard Hughes was a provocative and compelling figure in the movie world, filming aerial epics, battling censorship and turning shapely beauties such as Jean Harlow and Jane Russell into stars.

Was he a daring filmmaker or simply a dilettante who used movies to promote romances with glamorous actresses?

There are arguments for both sides. His films include true achievements like "Scarface," "Hell's Angels" and "The Front Page" to later trash like "The Outlaw" and "The Conqueror," which starred John Wayne as Genghis Khan.

Hughes' romances included Billie Dove, acclaimed as the most beautiful woman in films; Katharine Hepburn, whom he taught to fly; Jean Peters, whom he married, and Terry Moore, who received a settlement from the Hughes estate on her claim that he had married her.

"Howard was the best lover I ever had," said Miss Moore, who has been married five times.

The lanky Texan arrived in Los Angeles in 1925 when he was only 19 but already in charge of an oil-drill manufacturing empire he inherited from his father. To help on business matters, he hired an accountant named Noah Dietrich, who ended up being Hughes' manager, fixer and right-hand-man for 31 years.

"Howard was crazy about the movies, especially because of all the pretty girls that were around the studios," Dietrich said in his late years. "An actor named Ralph Graves attached himself to Howard and convinced him to back him in a movie called 'Swell Hogan.' Graves directed, and the picture was so bad that it was never released.

"But Howard was never thwarted by failure. He merely resolved to find better help the next time."

Hughes hired an established director, Marshall Neilan, to make a sophisticated comedy, "Everybody's Acting," and it was a 1926 hit. Hughes then became associated with a brilliant Russian emigre, Lewis Milestone, who won an Oscar for "Two Arabian Knights."

With Howard Hawks' "Scarface," Hughes had his first run-in with film industry self-censorship. He refused to eliminate graphic scenes of gangster violence, and the outcry against the glorification of crime brought a stricter censorship code.

Hughes' fascination with airplanes led to "Hell's Angels," an epic of World War I aerial warfare. He directed it himself and even flew stunt planes, injuring himself in a crash. When talkies emerged in mid-filming, he scrapped all the silent footage, fired his Swedish-accented star and replaced her with Jean Harlow. "Hell's Angels" took $3.5 million and three years to finish.

In the 1930s, Hughes lost interest in films — though not in actresses — and devoted himself to breaking flight records and developing his aircraft industry.

In World War II, he discovered a beauty in a dentist's office, and he starred Jane Russell in an overwrought Western, "The Outlaw." Again he fought the censors, this time over his star's cleavage. He removed the film from release but brought it out three years later, again to critical scorn.

Jane Russell became Hughes' favorite star even though there was no romance. In a memo cherished by his aides, Hughes gave a detailed account of how her brassiere should be engineered.

In 1948, Hughes bought control of RKO Studio and theaters for $10 million. Legend insists that Hughes visited the studio only once, touring with a night watchman and departing with the words, "Paint it."

Operating from the Goldwyn Studio a mile away, Hughes embarked on an ambitious program, designing a John Wayne film "Jet Pilot" as his latter-day "Hell's Angels." But "Jet Pilot" failed, as did most of the RKO films. He lost interest in the movies and sold the company in 1954 for a $10 million profit.

AHDERS

"I'm going to do everything I can to justify the support of the people of Midland County," Ahders said. He said he was "aware" of the tax and budgetary problems in today's faltering economy. "I know that each office in the courthouse is going to have to cut down."

Blair, who was sporting a "Love Ya Midland" button on his dark suit's lapel, turned to Craig at the Midland County Elections Administrator's Office Saturday night, and lamented: "Looks like I won't have the pleasure of working with you — at least not officially," he said.

"A POLITICAL RACE is like hitting your head with a hammer," Blair said. "It feels so good when it stops."

In his campaign, Blair said he did "my best. I can walk out of here with my head held high."

Blair speculated that he lost the race basically because of Ahders' "name ID (identification). The judge has been here for a long time (since about 1950), and he got the support of the 45-to-65-range consistent primary voters. They are the ones who have been in Midland for a long time. I think the race was predictable by the low-to-moderate turnout of voters."

Blair said he ran for the judgeship because he felt "the job wasn't getting done for lack of leadership and poor economics. He campaigned on the Commissioners' Court leadership, the county budget problems, the continuing jail problems and today's depressed economy.

"I think the Commissioners' Court now will be very conscious of those two (jail and budgetary) issues."

Blair said he waged a "clean, hard-fought, aggressive race."

"I'm proud of myself," he said. "I'm pleased with my effort. I did the best job I could. I've very proud of and thankful for the people who supported me and the volunteers who worked so hard for me and my wife who put up with me." Blair noted that Ahders raised five times more campaign funds than did he.

Blair, a former lawyer with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), said he would devote full-time to his law practice.

RISTER SUGGESTED that he was disappointed in his vote-gathering results. "I guess I'll go home and lick my wounds. I wish I could have done a little better."

He noted that the commissioner's race was a "very visible race" due to the issue on the County Jail and economics.

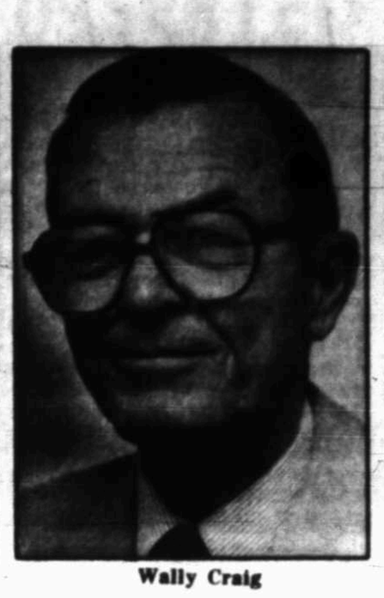

"We three (Rister, Craig, McCrary) made different solutions for the jail and we three represented different groups of people. I represented the people of Greenwood (community), Guy got the youth vote, and Wally got the establishment vote.

"I admire both gentlemen," Rister said. "But I think my philosophy is a little closer to Wally's."

Rister said he would continue being active in community work — promoting good county roads, proposing privatization of the county jail and being fiscally prudent in the depressed economy. "There's a good possibility that the jail will be an issue four years from now," Rister said.

Bill Ahders

Wally Craig

Guy McCrary

"I made the investment of time and money in this race," he said, "and I intend to do everything I can to make this a better community, because I live here by choice."

McCrary, who said he was "excited to be in the run-off," said he didn't know how he differed philosophically from Craig, as Rister had suggested. "Budgeting has to be scrutinized vigorously."

THAT THE RACE ended in a run-off did not surprise McCrary.

"We knew from the beginning that we were going to have a very difficult challenge in overcoming the incumbency (of Craig). I feel like we've made our points and identified the issues."

Of the issues, the jail has been the "most colorful," McCrary said.

"But saying you are going to 'cut taxes' is standard dialogue for anyone running for public office," he said. "People are concerned over the economy, because it is so unpredictable." McCrary said his approach to today's economics will be, "Just button down the hatch and run things as lean as we can."

Craig said he had "hoped to not have to be in run-off at all, obviously. I'm glad that so many people voted for and supported me. It's hard ro get a majority (of votes) with three people running for the same office."

Craig noted that the jail has been an issue "without an obvious solution for some time." He supports "one jail only to solve the jail problem."

"You are always going to have people running for office who say we need change," noted Craig, who said he "still is pledged to no tax increase, as I said all along."

In the contested race for chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party, Chairman Janet Massey, manager of Midland Oil Scouts Association, beat her challenger, Lyndon LaRouche candidate Robert W."Bob" Pollard, a 50-year-old Midland oil man.

"I'm delighted," Ms. Massey said, "and I look forward to (Democratic Party) victories in November for (Texas Gov.) Mark White, the entire state slate and especially for Pete Snelson (U.S. Congressional candidate) and Don Boydstun, county commissioner candidate for Precinct 2."

Voter-getters in the uncontested races were:

White gets 44.3 percent of Ector vote; Clements gets 56.96

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Final unofficial Democratic and Republican vote returns in Ector County show that incumbent Gov. Mark White captured only 44.30 percent of the ballots cast, while challenger Bill Clements garnered 56.96 percent of the votes cast in the Republican primary.

White's nearest challenger was Andrew Briscoe III, while Democrat-turned-Republican Kent Hance trailed Clements with only 25.48 percent of the vote with all the ballots counted.

The big upset in Ector County occurred in the Democratic race for Precinct 4 County Commissioner. Newcomer Joe "Eddie" Hernandez, 38, with unofficial returns complete in that precinct, gained the nomination without a runoff, taking 50.88 percent of the total votes cast. Losing the nomination to Hernandez was two-term Coommissioner Willie Hammond Jr., who wound up with 40.26 percent of the vote. Thomas Perkins, who opted to run against Hammond rather than seek a third term as District 1 city councilman, got only 8.87 percent.

In the Precinct 2 county commissioner race, Republican incumbent Bryan Henderson garnered 78.72 percent of the votes cast to Kent Gantz's 21.28 percent. Democrat Tony Chavez, who had no opponent for the nomination, will run against Henderson in November.

In the Justice of the Peace, Precinct 3 race, former County Commissioner J.E. "Coach" Pressly defeated retired Odessa Police Lt. Rusty Baker, taking 61.81 percent of the vote.

In the Precinct 4 Justice of the Peace race, incumbent Manuel Valles faces a runoff with Lee Norman, who operates a southside Odessa grocery store. Valles received 49.62 percent of the vote in Precinct 4 and Norman got 25.46 percent of the 1,850 votes.

In the 19th Congressional District race in the Democratic primary, Gerald McCathern led Mary Nell Mathis with 52.75 percent of the 3,649 votes cast.

In the District 75 State Representative Democratic race, former Ector County Judge Gary Watkins had no opponent. In the Republican race for the District 75 nomination, Carolyn Powers garnered 56.25 percent of the votes in 16 boxes against UTPB student David Eudaly's 43.75 percent.

Hobby easily wins Democratic nomination

DALLAS (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who holds the record for longevity in the office and is seeking his fifth term, easily won the Democratic nomination over challenger David Young of Austin. With 24.9 percent of the vote counted, Hobby had 175,012 votes, or 73.3 percent.

On the Republican side, business consultant and former preacher David Davidson of Austin led with 22,653 votes, or 30.89 percent, over three others.

Attorney General Jim Mattox had no opposition in the Democratic primary. State District Judge Roy Barrera Jr. of San Antonio — seeking to become the first Hispanic elected to statewide office — led three Republicans with 41,482 votes, or 46.5 percent, with 22 percent counted.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower easily defeated Noel Cowling of Dublin, a backer of arch-conservative Lyndon LaRouche, in the Democratic primary. With 57.3 percent of the precincts counted, Hightower led with 435,503 votes, or 82.1 percent, to 95,212 votes, or 17.9 percent.

Two Democratic incumbents, Comptroller Bob Bullock and Treasurer Ann Richards, had no opposition from either party.

Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple was the only incumbent holding a statewide office not to seek re-election, and four Republicans and four Democrats vied to replace him.

Democratic state Sen. John Sharp assured himself the nomination or a place in a runoff in the Democratic primary, and John Thomas Henderson was ahead in the Republican primary.

Voters cast ballots for four places on the Texas Supreme Court, with Republicans seeking nominations for three.

In Place 4, appointed Justice Raul Gonzales, a Democrat and the first Hispanic on the high court, led three opponents. In Place 1, 18-year incumbent Sears McGee failed to get the nomination by his party. State Sen. Oscar Mauzy held a lead over Shirley Butts, an appeals court judge from San Antonio.

GOVERNOR

Loeffler, a 39-year-old attorney and rancher from Hunt, worked as a special assistant to former President Gerald Ford before winning the 1978 election as the first Republican congressman from the Hill Country. Loeffler has touted himself as "a fresh, young face" who has never lost an election and who wants to "bring the Reagan revolution to Texas."

White, 46, served as secretary of state and attorney general before upsetting Clements in 1982. The incumbent has used the massive 1984 public education reforms as his key platform plank, branding any challenger — Republican or Democrat — who suggests changes in the reforms "ignorant and superstitious."

Briscoe, the 33-year-old second cousin of former Gov. Dolph Briscoe, became the first Democrat to challenge White when he entered the race last June. The Dallas businessman has stressed his conservative credentials and claims he could garner enough protest votes from disgruntled teachers and others to force White into a June 7 runoff.

Dallas attorney Crowder, the 43-year-old former law partner of Attorney General Jim Mattox, also predicts he and White would face off June 7. Crowder first earned headlines when he branded White "a nerd" for the governor's stern support of the no-pass, no-play rule for extracurricular activities.

Ms. Bilyeu, a 42-year-old unemployed guidance counselor from Corpus Christi, Locke, a 46-year-old San Antonio contractor, and Slover, a 49-year-old Amarillo oil man, have all run low-budget campaigns. Locke had picked up the most publicity, particularly last week when he challenged Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy to a one-on-one fight to the death July 4 in the waters of the Gulf of Sidra.

D-FW controllers say they're overworked

DALLAS (AP) — More air traffic controllers at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport say they are overworked than do controllers at four of the nation's other busiest airports, according to a federal survey.

The survey by the General Accounting Office was requested by a House subcommittee after the Aug. 2 crash of Delta Air Lines Flight 191, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

According to the survey, weather warnings to pilots are "often delayed" because controllers are frequently too busy separating airplanes to broadcast weather information.

The Delta plane, landing during a peak evening period, had received no warning that a severe thunderstorm was forming in its approach path. The L-1011 crashed short of a runway, killing 137 people.

Federal Aviation Administration officials in Dallas denied Friday that D-FW controllers are frequently overburdened and said air traffic is being handled smoothly.

"There's always going to be someone who disagrees with how things are going," said D-FW tower manager Norm Scroggins.

At the nation's five busiest airports, the percentage of controllers who said they were handling "much more" or "somewhat more" traffic than appropriate during peak periods ranged from 20 percent at Los Angeles International to 79 percent at D-FW.

At Hartsfield-Atlanta International Airport, 57 percent of the controllers surveyed complained of being overburdened. Fifty-nine percent of the controllers at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago and 71 percent at Stapleton International Airport in Denver made the same complaint, according to the survey.

The survey, conducted last summer, also found that 9 percent of the D-FW controllers questioned said they were so overworked that they "very often" failed to provide weather advisories, while 7 percent said they "often" omit weather warnings and 26 percent said they "occasionally" do so.

But airport officials said the overall level of traffic remains safe and a special effort is made to broadcast reports of hazardous weather, even though the reports are sometimes delayed.

"I unequivocally and totally disagree that (D-FW controllers) are overwhelmed," said Clarence R. "Tex" Melugin Jr., chief of the FAA's Southwest Regional Office.

Scroggins said the real problem is not the number of planes using D-FW, but the fact that controllers who work radar positions at the airport also are responsible for separating airplanes on their way to Love Field and five other busy airports in the metropolitan area.

Negative work attitudes at D-FW and Stapleton "stood out like sore thumbs," said Art Shantz, who headed the GAO study.

Odessa's meteor crater repeatedly vandalized

ODESSA (AP) — A giant crater created when a meteorite smashed into the earth near this West Texas city has been struck again — this time by vandals who defaced signs and blasted the lock off a deep shaft dug to study the site.

But an Ector County judge said that caretakers will begin staying at the site of the county-owned Odessa Meteor Crater soon to protect it from vandals.

"I think the best thing out there is going to be the presence of someone," Judge Jan Fisher said.

The second largest U.S. meteor crater is is a national landmark, listed on the Department of the Interior's registry.

But an Odessa woman said that when she invited another resident to see the tourist attraction last week, she was appalled to find signs battered, riddled with bullet holes and thrown into gullies.

Lorraine Wells, 59, said she no longer plans to take visitors to the meteor crater.

"If any of my friends come to see me again and want to go there, I am going to say, 'No, let's go to the sandhills,' " she said, referring to the dunes near Monahans, 51 miles southwest of Odessa.

The 10-year Odessa resident said weeds grew at the crater site, a lock protecting a 265-foot-deep shaft had been shot off and a fence around the crater was down.

"And the main information sign wasn't even there," she said.

Land is being prepared for a mobile home where a married couple is to live, said County Cemetery Director Jim Tobin, whose department is responsible for the property, located about seven miles west of Odessa.

Tobin, who has had responsibility for the site since October 1984, said the shaft's lock was missing but the door covering it was welded shut.

He said the shaft was dug in the 1930s as a Works Progress Administration project, with the intent of locating the main body of the meteorite. The meteorite was never found, Tobin said.

"That (site) has been used as a target practice range for quite a while," he said. "It's getting to the point where there's too much destruction out there."

Man shared what he had with friends at shelter

FORT WORTH (AP) — Sidney Leonard Batsford shared what little he had with animals and members of the Humane Society of North Texas.

He had a simple wish.

He wanted someone to attend his funeral, his dogs taken care of and some flowers on his grave.

Batsford got his wish thanks to his friends at the Humane Society.

Stoney Prater, executive director of the Humane Society, said Batsford, who had no known relatives in the Fort Worth area and lived alone on his social security income, started visiting the society's animal shelter in 1980.

She said Batsford brought apples and carrots for the horses and loved to feed them. He brought other food for the dogs and cats.

"He came down one day and saw that the employees didn't have any way to warm up their sandwiches," she recalled. "The next day, he returned with a new microwave oven. We know now that he had to sacrifice to present that gift."

STATE IN BRIEF

UT winner in competition

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas is one of three winners of a national competition to help in the effort to design an aerospace plane dubbed the "Orient Express" by President Reagan.

The aerospace plane could replace the space shuttle, officials say.

J. Parker Lamb, chairman of the university's department of aerospace engineering, said Friday that UT competed with about two dozen other universities around the country for $600,000 from NASA over the next three years.

The State University of New York at Buffalo and Stanford University of Palo Alto, Calif., also will receive $600,000 grants over the next three years.

The schools will use the money to develop educational and research programs necessary for the design of a plane that could take off and land like an airplane but be capable of flying in and out of space, Lamb said.

Frivolous suit draws fine

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has ordered a Houston lawyer and his clients to pay more than $167,000 for filing a frivolous lawsuit.

U.S. District Judge Norman Black on Friday ordered attorney Benton Musslewhite and his clients, Fergus Ginther and Adriana Newton, to pay costs and fees to six attorneys.

"As far as we can tell, this is the largest award by any federal court for the filing of a bad-faith lawsuit," said attorney Stephen Kirklin, who received $50,000 from the order.

Ginther is being sought on a federal arrest warrant stemming from his failure to appear in court on the case.

It is the second sanction against Ginther, who has filed a spate of lawsuits in the last six years against Texas Commerce Bank, RepublicBank Houston and other creditors.

A man identifying himself as the pilot told a Mont Belvieu-area ham radio operator Friday evening that his plane crashed east of Texas Highway 146 near Interstate 10, a Department of Public Safety spokeswoman said.

The pilot reported that he and a passenger were injured, she said, and said he was numb from the waist down but was trying to reach flares so authorities could locate him.

Search for plane called off

MONT BELVIEU (AP) — Authorities ended their search Saturday for an airplane that supposedly crashed near the Liberty-Chambers county line, a sheriff's dispatcher said.

"They never located it," said Dawn Rayner, dispatcher for the Chambers County sheriff's office. "They searched until midnight last night and again today from daybreak until about 9 a.m."

U.S. experts mobilized to probe disaster

WASHINGTON (AP) — Shortly after workers at a Swedish nuclear power plant found unusually high levels of radiation on their shoes even though there was no problem at the plant, U.S. officials mobilized to find out what had happened.

"The Swedish statement Monday morning tipped everyone off that there was a serious problem and that given the way the winds had been blowing, it was probably from something that had gone wrong in the Soviet Union," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Indeed, something had gone terribly wrong in the Soviet Union — an explosion and meltdown at one of the four reactors at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant 80 miles north of Kiev. It soon developed that the accident was the worst ever for the world's nuclear power industry.

In Washington, the pace of what had been expected to be a slow week, as is normally the case when the president is out of the country, quickly speeded up.

American officials reacted with expressions of sympathy and offers of help for the Soviet Union, but criticized the Soviet government for not being more forthcoming about what happened.

American intelligence officials stepped into the information void and quickly became the world's foremost source of information about the accident.

Meanwhile, industry critics warned that the accident showed again the dangers of nuclear power while defenders repeatedly pointed out the differences between the U.S. reactors and those in the Soviet Union. On Wall Street, energy and utility stock prices dropped sharply, particularly for companies closely tied to nuclear power.

Shortly after Sweden announced that the radioactivity found on its workers must have come from the Soviet Union, the Soviets themselves admitted there had been an accident. But the brief announcement gave few details.

"As soon as we heard about it, we knew that something had gone wrong," recalled Harold Denton, director of reactor regulation for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the man best known for overseeing the federal government's response to the 1979 accident at the Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania.

"One of the first things we thought about was that such a large release of radiation might mean a meltdown," said Denton, referring to the worst type of power plant accident. It occurs when the nuclear fuel overheats and cannot be controlled.

By Tuesday, White House officials, traveling with President Reagan in Indonesia on the way to the Tokyo economic summit, announced that an interagency team had been set up to monitor the situation and coordinate the American response.

Plants' safety record getting worse, groups say

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressman and an anti-nuclear citizens group released separate reports on nuclear safety Saturday and charged that the industry's safety record is getting worse instead of better.

The Critical Mass Energy Project, a Ralph Nader group, released a study of safety violations reported to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission since 1979. The group said problems have been on the rise since then and called for a phase-out of all U.S. reactors.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., released a list of the 10 worst atomic power safety breaches provided to his subcommittee on energy conservation and power by the NRC. He said 1985 was the worst year for safety since the Three Mile Island accident in 1979.

"The number and severity of accidents during the past year is simply too close for comfort," Markey said. "The list of close calls strongly suggests that a major U.S. nuclear accident could be lurking around the corner."

Critical Mass said nuclear mishaps reported to the NRC rose from 2,310 in 1979 to 5,080 in 1983.

In 1984 the NRC instituted a new reporting system that yields about half as many mishap reports as the old one, the group said. Under the new system, it said, plant operators filed 2,417 "licensee event reports" on mishaps in 1984 and 2,974 in 1985.

The group also said the NRC levied 38 fines totaling nearly $3.8 million against utilities in 1985, $1.7 million higher than in 1984. And it said each nuclear plant experienced an average of 33 events in 1985 — 13 percent higher than in 1984.

"The Soviet accident has provided the United States and the rest of the world a stark reminder that nuclear power is a dangerous technology and that the consequences of an accident are enormous," said Joshua Gordon, author of the Critical Mass report.

He said the United States should re-evaluate its nuclear policy and "begin planning for the orderly phase-out of nuclear power."

In its report to the Markey subcommittee, the NRC cited the failure of cooling systems at the Davis-Besse reactor near Toledo as the most serious safety breach of 1985.

NRC spokesman John Kopeck said it was hard to compare years in terms of safety but that the commission "is not pleased with any abnormal occurrences, particularly those in 1985."

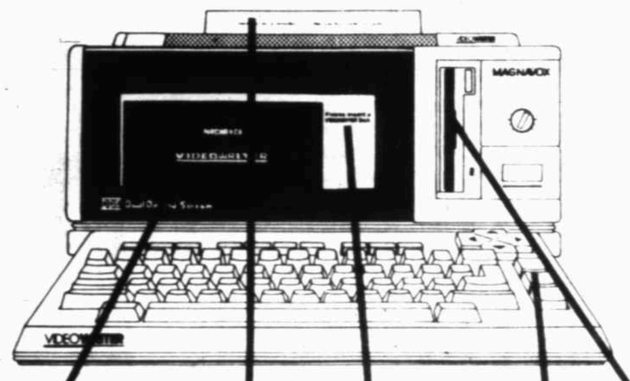

Another NRC spokesman, Bob Newlin, said the Critical Mass numbers sounded accurate but noted: "These licensee event reports are any unplanned operational event that happens and they range all the way from very minor to more significant things."

He said abnormal occurrences, the most significant events, did rise from five in 1981 to 10 in 1984 and nine last year. But he added, "at the same time, there are more reactors in operation." There were 68 nuclear plants in 1979. Currently 100 plants hold operating licenses.

In calling for a phase-out of nuclear generators, Critical Mass cited NRC testimony that there is a 45 percent chance of a major core meltdown at a commercial U.S. reactor before the year 2000.

Reactor's neighbors uneasy with facility

OTHELLO, Wash. (AP) — Jack Koelzer and his neighbors began reclaiming their farms from arid sagebrush atop a bluff overlooking the Columbia River about the same time the N Reactor went on line at the Hanford nuclear reservation in 1963.

Koelzer and neighbor Melvin McLane are uncomfortable living less than 10 miles downwind of the graphite core reactor.

But like many people in the region, they differ on whether the plant, similar in design to the troubled Chernobyl reactor in the Ukraine, should continue to operate.

"They ought to shut the thing down," Koelzer fumed over a breakfast table shared with sons Rick, 28, and Brian, 26.

"I always figured it was safe before," Koelzer said. "Now, I'm not so sure."

Koelzer's farm is 35 miles north of Pasco, one of three cities heavily dependent on Hanford's annual $1 billion budget.

A random poll by telephone by the Tri-City Herald in Kennewick found that many Tri-City residents favored the idea of a study of the N Reactor's design and safety, although few called for shutting it down. U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington has ordered such a study to begin Monday.

Koelzer began farming his 400-acre spread in Block 23 of the Columbia Basin irrigation project in 1966, three years after the weapons production N reactor went on line.

His property shares a boundary with the reservation, about a mile from his well-kept ranch house. From a field behind the house, he can see some of the eight reactors the government began shutting down in 1964.

A little more than a mile south, and closer to the river, Melvin McLane tinkers with a hay baler in a work area of Greenfield Farms, a 640-acre hay and wheat concern shared with his father and brother.

The family knew the reactors were operating 22 years ago when they began scraping sagebrush from the light brown sandy soil and began irrigating with Columbia River water, and McLane said he's not too bothered by his nuclear neighbor across the river.

"We think about it from time to time," he said. "There's an uneasy feeling in the back of your mind."

But neither McLane, nor his mother, Minnie, would call for the reactor to be shut down.

"Right now, it just doesn't bother me," Mrs. McLane said. "The scientists came and took some tests about 20 years ago. They told me it was safe.

"I lived in Los Angeles and the earthquakes. I guess what's coming is coming."

That prospect doesn't sit well with Koelzer and his sons, who help on the farm and live in trailers less than a mile north and south of his place.

Koelzer said he was surprised to learn this week that the N Reactor, which produces plutonium for weapons and steam for electricity, does not have a thick containment building around its core.

Lack of cooling water likely cause of mishap, experts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. experts believe interruption of a vital flow of cooling water to the Chernobyl nuclear reactor triggered last week's meltdown, and they have several theories on how the flow could have been cut off.

A leading theory is loss of electrical power to run pumps, instruments and other equipment, but scientists also say water flow could have been cut off if a portion of the 1,661 three-inch pipes running through the reactor became clogged or if there was a chemical explosion.

The Soviets have implied the accident was triggered by human error. In an interview Friday night with West Germany's ARD national television network, Moscow Communist Party chief Boris Yeltsin, said the cause of the disaster "lies apparently in the subjective realm, in human error."

Thomas Cochran, scientist on the staff of the Natural Resources Defense Council, said the electrical theory is the most likely.

"To get a whole-core accident, it seems the most probable way is to lose coolant flow before the manifold, which means pump failure, which means loss of power to the pumps," he said.

Ed Zebroski, chief nuclear scientist for the Electric Power Research Institute, agreed, saying that with about 1,000 workers at the four-reactor Chernobyl site, "the chance that someone knocked down part of the (electrical) switchyard...is at least one of the plausible scenarios."

John Auxier, nuclear engineer and director of the Oak Ridge, Tenn., Radiological Sciences Laboratory of IT Corp., said "A piece of something that got loose," perhaps part of a pump blade, could clog cooling tubes. "Unlikely — but it's possible."

Meltdown-proof reactor tested

ARGONNE, Ill. (AP) — Engineers at Argonne National Laboratory say they have successfully tested a prototype for a nuclear reactor that cannot melt down.

Designers hope the U.S. nuclear industry will embrace the model to regain public confidence after a Soviet nuclear power plant spewed clouds of radiation last week and killed at least two people.

Argonne's breeder reactor, located near Idaho Falls, Idaho, uses a new metallic fuel developed by Argonne scientists. Its radioactive core and all other working parts are submerged in liquid sodium.

Those innovations make a meltdown impossible, according to the researchers.

Even when all safety systems are shut down and no coolant is being pumped to the core, natural forces of physics shut down the nuclear reaction and cool the core, they said. The theory was twice tested successfully April 3.

Although the 20-megawatt prototype has only 2 percent the capacity of many commercial nuclear reactors, the tests would be applicable to larger models, said Robert Avery, a senior scientist at Argonne.

Additional research on the reactor will take place during the next few years to demonstrate that it is not only safe but efficient and cost-effective enough for commercial development, Avery said.

However, the reactor will not be ready for commercial application for at least five to 10 years, researchers believe.

'Work of sanctuary' will continue, leader says

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Leaders of the movement to provide sanctuary to Central American refugees say it will flourish despite the conviction of eight of its members on alien-smuggling charges.

"We're not going to stop," said defendant Margaret Jean Hutchison, one of those convicted last week in U.S. District Court.

"The work of sanctuary will continue exactly as it has," said James A. Corbett, one of three activists acquitted of all charges. "We'll stand trial as often as we have to. It'll continue as it has because the refugees and their needs actually set the agenda."

The six-month trial did nothing to scale back the scope of the activities of the Tucson-bred movement, said the Rev. Kenneth Kennon, head of the Tucson Ecumenical Council's Task Force on Central America.

"All I can tell you is we continue to have refugees just show up at churches in Tucson," he said. "Last Saturday we had nine show up at one church. We probably see a dozen to two dozen a week."

Most of the refugees go to other U.S. cities, receiving shelter and transportation from the sanctuary network, Kennon said.

He said he doubted the convictions would discourage volunteers, adding that the movement would continue acting in the open.

NATION IN BRIEF

Challenger pilot buried

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — Navy Capt. Michael J. Smith, who died piloting the space shuttle Challenger, was laid to rest Saturday with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery.

Six white horses, guided by a seventh, pulled his casket on an ancient caisson to the gravesite overlooking Washington following an afternoon memorial service.

"Mike Smith had a clear vision of life and where it was going to lead," said Cmdr. Richard H. Purnell, who attended the U.S. Naval Academy with Smith and delivered the eulogy. When they were classmates at Annapolis, Smith would assert, "I am going to be an astronaut," Purnell said.

"We lost him long before we could afford his loss," he told the friends, colleagues, and family gathered in the chapel at Ft. Myer, adjoining the cemetery. "Mike would insist the quest, above all of us, must go on."

The U.S. Navy Band played before the service and as the casket was brought to the gravesite.

Coke stages classic party

ATLANTA (AP) — When Coca-Cola celebrates its 100th birthday this week with 25,000 guests and a parade that could be the biggest in Atlanta history, you can bet the party's going to be a classic.

The company is bringing in about 14,000 of its bottlers, employees and their families from around the world to join about 10,000 Atlanta-area employees for the four-day celebration that begins Wednesday.

Between company dinners and business sessions, the world-famous soft drink will be honored with theatrical shows and exhibits of Coke memorabilia that include a reconstruction of the soda fountain in Jacobs' Pharmacy, the Atlanta drug store where Coke was first served May 8, 1886.

Company spokesman Eric Riggle said the $1 million celebration would be mostly private because Coke's use of the Georgia World Congress Center, site of most of the activities, is limited to a few days.

The public is invited, however, to join the celebration Saturday when a 100-unit parade moves through downtown Atlanta to the Coca-Cola Co. building, headquarters of the company that brings in $8 billion a year in revenues.

Plane's hijacker surrenders

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A man accused of commandeering a commuter plane and threatening to blow it up surrendered quietly Saturday after slashing his wrists, authorities said.

Douglas B. Thomas, 29, of Tulsa, Okla., was being held without bail at the Washington County Jail on hijacking charges after being treated for minor wrist cuts at a hospital.

None of the 11 other passengers or two crew members on board the Horizon Air twin-engine Metroliner were injured, and no weapons or explosives were found on board, said FBI agent Bart Gori.

Dollywood park opens

PIGEON FORGE, Tenn. (AP) — A thousand balloons drifted skyward Saturday as entertainer Dolly Parton cut the ribbon to officially open Dollywood, her namesake theme park in the Smoky Mountain foothills where she was born.

"It's a bonafide barn burner going on today," park spokesman Bill Baker said.

An estimated 12,000 visitors passed through the gates by noon, and officials expected about 4,000 more by the end of the day.

The balloons, a gift from singer Neil Diamond, highlighted the opening of the park, which includes rides and a steam locomotive tour as well as the Dolly Parton Story Museum.

Capitol fence planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Senate leaders have their way, tourists will be forced to wait outside a 6-foot, wrought iron fence and pass through elaborate police screening devices before entering the grounds of the U.S. Capitol, the historic symbol of an open democracy.

But once inside the fence, visitors would be able to roam freely through the 127 acres of flowery, tree-shaded lawn and enter the Capitol unhindered. The only evidence of security precautions inside the building would be metal detectors outside the House and Senate galleries.

Those would be the most noticeable differences.

Winds spread silent message of Chernobyl through Europe

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

In Kiev, among the chestnut trees of Kreshchatik Boulevard, a spring sun warmed the Sunday strollers. But in Sweden it was raining last Sunday, a sinister shower.

The chill raindrops pelting the forests and spotless little towns of the Swedish coast bore unseen molecules — cesium-137, radioactive iodine. And in the days to come, down through the Baltic, to the Alps and the Balkans, the winds would spread the particles across Europe, silent messengers of the perils of the nuclear age.

Like most such disasters, Chernobyl wasn't supposed to happen.

"A serious...accident is practically impossible," Soviet nuclear scientist Boris Semenov wrote confidently of his nation's atomic power reactors three years ago.

But on this weekend, just upriver from Kiev's relaxed parks and avenues, one of those miniature suns had gone frighteningly out of control, burning itself up, spilling radioactivity out over the Ukrainian countryside and into the atmosphere, finally touching off an explosion that ripped apart the reactor building.

In terms of spread of radioactivity — the insidious elements that take years to kill through cancer — the Chernobyl nuclear power plant disaster was the equivalent of a small atom bomb explosion, a Swedish expert concluded.

WORLD

And the political impact on the Soviet Union may have an even longer half-life.

Although Western scientists, by week's end, were cautioning against some of the most terrifying reports emanating from Washington and elsewhere, international anger against the secretive Soviets did not subside.

Sweden's energy minister, Birgitta Dahl, summed up the feelings of tens of millions: "They should...have warned us."

Some kind of accident apparently occurred at the Chernobyl plant Friday, April 25, led to a reactor fire Saturday, and to an explosion Sunday, Western specialists said. But on those three days, the Soviets kept it to themselves.

Then, early Monday, the Swedes detected the rise in radioactivity. Thirteen hours later, after being confronted by the Stockholm government, Moscow finally, though tersely, acknowledged an "accident" had occurred and people had been "affected."

By Tuesday morning, nervous Soviet envoys were calling on nuclear experts in West Germany and Sweden, looking for advice in fighting a reactor fire. Then, that night, the Soviets made their first casualty report — two dead — and called it a "disaster." And on Wednesday, they told more: 197 hospitalized.

But other casualty estimates ranged higher and, throughout the crisis, the Kremlin withheld details of how the disaster occurred and how it was being handled — critical information for the outside world to assess the threat.

The Soviets' efforts to reassure the world were not always reassuring. As Soviet diplomat Vitaly Churkin matter-of-factly told a U.S. congressional panel Thursday, "We are still trying to manage the situation."

Then on Friday night, Boris Yeltsin, head of the Moscow city Communist Party and a close associate of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said on West German television that water reservoirs near the nuclear plant are contaminated and the region is too radioactive for evacuated residents to return. He said the accident was caused by human error.

Soviet secrecy dates from days of czarist rule

MOSCOW (AP) — Secrecy in the Soviet Union is not just an official policy of censorship, but a tradition that goes back to czarist days and is embedded in the culture.

Its basic tenets are to mask the bad and glorify the good, and to zealously guard information which the state considers security-related — from the grain harvest figures to a nuclear accident at a power plant.

A reluctance to disclose bad news, as has been the case with the Chernobyl nuclear plant accident, is not exclusive to the Soviet Union. But in the Soviet Union playing down bad news is considered an affair of state.

Because of the international concern the accident aroused, the world is asking why the Soviet Union waited three days to announce the disaster and, more than a week later, still has not providing details.

It is not known when Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev was informed of the accident or its severity.

The information released by the Soviets — on casualties, evacuations, and a bit about what happened — dribbled out in government statements. The situation was similar in September 1983, when the Soviets shot down a South Korean airliner that strayed into Soviet airspace.

The Soviets, reacting to Western reports, first said that an unidentified plane had intruded, that fighter jets tried to direct it to land, that the intruder ignored its warnings and "continued its flight in the direction of the Sea of Japan."

The report did not technically lie, it just failed to state that Soviet missiles sent the plane plummeting into the sea, killing all 269 people aboard. The Soviets later said they shot the plane down, claiming it was on a spy mission.

The Marquis de Custine, a French traveler in Russia in 1839, wrote in his journal that hundreds of people and perhaps as many as to 2,000 died when boats carrying them to the czar's reception capsized in a sudden squall. The disaster was concealed to avoid disrupting the palace gala and later mentioned without detail in two sentences in a newspaper.

"Can you imagine the thousands of stories, the discussions, the gossip of all kinds, the conjectures, the shouts to which such events would give rise in any country other than this one?" he wrote.

"Up to now, I believed that man could no more do without truth for the spirit than air and sun for the body," he said. "My journey to Russia disabuses me. Here, to lie is to protect the social order, to speak the truth is to destroy the state."

In Washington, Soviet-born academic Dmitri Simes told the AP that Soviet secrecy has its seeds in an unwritten compact that the state's duty is to protect the people from harm. He said the people are not surprised about secrecy, but would be surprised if the government did not know how to cope with the accident.

Information is not only withheld from the general public in the Soviet Union, but also from officials, who have degrees of access.

Poland walks line between radiation threat, Soviets

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist government of Poland is confronting the twin problems of protecting people from radiation originating in the Soviet Union and being candid about the issue without offending the Kremlin.

Poland's eastern border is only 300 miles from the Chernobyl nuclear plant in the Soviet Ukraine that last week spewed clouds of radiation.

But an American environmental expert who arrived here Saturday said his initial radiation readings showed no measurable contamination or evidence of a health hazard.

Richard Hopper, a specialist in the Environmental Protection Agency's Office of Radiation Programs, said background radiation levels were "very, very slightly elevated," or about two times above normal. He added he had not yet checked soil and water contamination.

The state-run news agency PAP said radiation levels had dropped to a point where "only normal, routine measurements of the air" would now be conducted instead of the widespread, continuous monitoring conducted last week.

In contrast to efforts by the Soviet Union to play down the disaster and limit information about possible dangers, the Polish government moved quickly to inform the public and reduce health hazards.

Most Soviet bloc countries took the Soviet position and provided little news about the nuclear accident. But Poland was more open, an approach that in part reflected the government effort to give the public more information following the 1980-81 Solidarity labor union upheaval.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said once it was confirmed part of Poland was contaminated by radiation the government decided "the event has such a character that Polish public opinion should know about it."

The government set up a special commission to monitor radiation, banned the sale of milk from grass-fed cows, and ordered protective iodine solutions be given to children.

Members of a government commission appeared on a special television call-in program Wednesday to reassure people and answer viewers' questions about the radioactive threat.

"This is the fastest I've seen the government react to anything except for imposing martial law in 1981 (to suppress Solidarity)," said one Western diplomat, who demanded anonymity.

"The authorities have acted in a very natural way with one exception — while everyone in Western Europe is yelling and screaming at the Soviets, they are not," said the diplomat.

Italian police seize contaminated salad greens

ROME (AP) — Police seized tons of salad greens at markets throughout Italy on Saturday and the government warned children and pregnant women not to drink fresh milk because of radiation from the Soviet nuclear accident.

In Vienna, the Austrian Health Ministry banned imports of milk, fruit and vegetables from East bloc countries for fear of radioactive contamination, the official APA news agency reported. It gave no duration for the ban.

And in London, officials said traces of radiation were found Saturday in British milk, but there was no immediate health hazard. The National Radiological Protection Board said earlier that remnants of the radioactive cloud detected Friday in southeastern England had spread "right across the United Kingdom." It also said there was no risk to health.

Italy's Health Ministry, while acknowledging that radioactive levels were returning to normal levels, issued a decree Friday forbidding the sale of leafy vegetables for 15 days.

But the ministry did not specify which vegetables were forbidden, and police, vendors and farmers were uncertain about what was covered by the decree.

Police permitted zucchini to be sold, but only if the vegetable's yellow flowers were removed. The flower, now in season, is a popular appetizer on restaurant menus.

Another debate arose over the sale of carrots at Rome's main wholesale market. Although carrots have leaves, officials finally decided to allow vendors to sell them because the vegetable itself grows underground.

Rome police seized 440 tons of basil, lettuce and artichokes, while in Milan, officials carted off tons of salad greens that were to be examined for radioactivity before being destroyed.

Meanwhile, some politicians urged the government to demand compensation from the Soviet Union.

"Italy must immediately advise, protect and compensate anyone who has been harmed in the country...and get the Soviet Union to accept all the consequences of the explosion," the news agency ANSA quoted Christian Democrat Sen. Publio Piori as saying.

Opposition politicians held rallies outside nuclear reactors throughout the country and staged a symbolic "occupation" of one power station, while a group of Radical Party members led a protest outside the Soviet Embassy in Rome, leaving behind baskets of vegetables and cartons of milk.

Others attacked the Italian government's handling of the problem.

The Environmental League assailed "the shameful lack of information and the tardiness and uncertain manner in which preventive measures were taken." It also criticized the "absolute lack of information on the level of radioactivity...which appears to be far superior to the figures provided by the Civil Defense Ministry."

The Health Ministry said feeding fresh milk to children under age 10 or to pregnant women was forbidden for 15 days, although a ministry spokeswoman acknowledged there was no way to enforce the measure.

Minister of Civil Defense Giuseppe Zamberletti told a news conference Friday that the levels of fallout recorded in Italy were higher than first expected because of weather patterns.

Zamberletti said levels of radioactivity ranged from two times to four times normal levels, with higher readings in northern Italy. He declined to say what the normal levels were.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Walesa briefly detained

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity founder Lech Walesa was briefly detained by police in Gdansk Saturday after joining some 10,000 worshipers at a Roman Catholic Mass marking the anniversary of Poland's 1791 constitution.

In Warsaw, riot police dispersed a demonstration by hundreds of Solidarity supporters.

Walesa said he was stopped by police and ordered into a police vehicle after placing flowers at a monument to the 17th century King John Sobieski III.

"They drove me through the city for about 20 minutes and then asked me where I wanted to be dropped off," said Walesa, contacted by telephone at his Gdansk apartment. "They were quite polite."

He said the police released him at St. Brygida's church in the Baltic port city and he then returned home.

Walesa also said one of his aides was beaten by police and some people were detained, but he did not know how many.

Tear gas fired into church

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Witnesses said police fired tear gas into a church Saturday during a funeral service for eight blacks, and three people may have been killed later when police fired on mourners as they dispersed.

Police said they fired tear gas near the church in a black township outside Port Elizabeth and that some of the fumes may have drifted into the building. A police report said one man was slain in the area, but that his death was not related to the funeral.

As many as 25,000 people attended another funeral in the far north of the country for Peter Nchabeleng, a 59-year-old activist who died in police custody in the Lebowa black homeland. That service ended peacefully.

Also, blacks attacked a bus near Port Shepstone, an Indian Ocean coastal town, and a black passenger was killed, police headquarters in Pretoria said.

Several thousand people attended the service in Zwide township near Port Elizabeth for the eight black victims of riots, including five killed fighting police after a funeral last weekend.

Riot police disperse crowd

INCHON, South Korea (AP) — Riot police fired tear gas to disperse an estimated 10,000 people who had congregated for an anti-government rally in this port city on Saturday, and some demonstrators responded by throwing firebombs and rocks.

The running clashes resulted in the cancellation of the rally, injuries to both sides, and the arrest of about 100 demonstrators.

Skirmishes continued well after nightfall, with police firing tear gas as they pursued small bands of protesters.

Yoo Kil-jong, provincial police director, said 30 policemen were injured, and a number of them hospitalized.

There was no immediate word on the number of injured among the demonstrators, mostly students and laborers, but reporters saw several being helped from the areas of street fighting.

Bhutto rallies supporters

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Opposition leader Benazir Bhutto was greeted Saturday by tens of thousands of cheering supporters at one of the largest rallies yet of her nationwide tour to push for the ouster of President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq.

"General Zia must go and he must go now," Miss Bhutto told the cheering crowds, who chanted "Benazir" and "Zia is a dog."

Miss Bhutto, 32, the leader of the Pakistan People's Party and daughter of former Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. Her father was ousted by Zia, an army general, in a 1977 coup and was hanged in 1979 after being convicted of conspiring to murder a political opponent.

Miss Bhutto was greeted by more than 50,000 people when she arrived at the airport in Karachi, Pakistan's largest city with 7 million residents. An effigy of Zia was hanged.

Hundreds of riot police armed with 5-foot-long, metal-tipped bamboo clubs surrounded the airport, and other police carried rifles and shotguns.

Punjab politics in turmoil

CHANDIGARH, India (AP) — The Punjab state government led by moderate Sikhs was in turmoil Saturday after the resignation of three Cabinet ministers and other officials to protest a government raid on the Golden Temple in Amritsar.

Warm weather will continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

The weekend will continue to be warm with temperatures in the 90s expected for Monday, reports the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Airport.

Today will be partly cloudy and warm with a high in the upper 80s. Winds are expected to be south at 10 to 20 mph and gusty. Tonight will be fair and warm with a low in the mid 60s.

Monday will be sunny with a high in the lower 90s.

Saturday's high of 80 degrees missed the record high for that date by 18 degrees. The record high of 98 degrees was set in 1947. The overnight low of 53 degrees missed the record low mark by 15 degrees. The record low was 38 degrees set in 1978.

STATE

Mostly clear skies and mild temperatures were the rule across Texas Saturday except for scattered showers lingering along the lower coast and isolated rainshowers from the Permian Basin to the Upper Pecos Valley.

Skies were mostly cloudy over South Central and deep South Texas as well as the south plains of Northwest Texas, but elsewhere it was sunny with southeast winds breezing over much of the state, the National Weather Service said.

NATION

A large center of high pressure over the Great Lakes and strong winds brought chilly weather to the Northeast on Saturday, as a storm system produced rainshowers in the Pacific Northwest.

Winds of up to 30 mph with higher gusts lowered the wind-chill temperature into the teens and single digits over much of that area.

The temperature dipped to 7 degrees at Mount Washington, N.H., where winds gusting to 85 mph reduced the wind chill to 50 degrees below zero.

Rain fell from eastern Washington and western Idaho to parts of northern California. Rainshowers were scattered from the south Texas coast to eastern New Mexico, and over southwest Missouri.

Winds of 20 to 35 mph blew over interior sections of Southern California and Nevada, and the central Plains.

The forecast for today called for rain over Idaho, northern Nevada and eastern sections of Washington and Oregon.

Pastor marks Kelview 25th anniversary

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Frank Johnson never dreamed at that first meeting in June of 1961 just how much Kelview Heights Baptist Church was to flourish in the 25 years he would serve as its pastor.

Johnson — a newly graduated Bible College student — conducted his first church service that Sunday in a one-room building (a structure that measured 20 feet by 40 feet with no restrooms or water). The meeting produced two men, a few women and a $9 offering.

While that building still exists, more than 125,000 square feet of floor space has been built around it in the past 25 years and the congregation now exceeds 1,500 persons, providing offerings of more than $1.2 million annually.

Today, Johnson celebrates his 25th anniversary with the church, reflecting back on only the good times, not that there weren't any bad times.

From his meager beginning, Johnson said he saw potential with the challenge at hand: To move to Midland and join a few other families who had been struggling and praying to start an independent Baptist Church — a ministry that would practically apply the Bible to the lives of Christians.

Johnson was reared in the hills of souteastern Oklahoma, and married his childhood sweetheart, Lois. As young adults, the couple lived in Houston and later moved to Fort Worth when he got the call to enter Bible Baptist seminary.

During his tenure in Fort Worth, Johnson worked for J.H Ramsey at Rolling Hills Baptist Church until he completed a bachelor of divinity degree (since then he has earned bachelor of arts, a master of arts and five honorary doctorate degrees).

It was there that he was challenged to build a church.

In June of 1961, the Johnson family moved to Midland where the young pastor, who wanted to start a church but nad never pastored, was united with a few families with a similar dream.

"Some people had tried to organize a church. They were discouraged and didn't know what they were going to do. I wanted to build a church; I didn't want to take a church," he said.

Johnson literally started from scratch, walking from door-to-door to recruit a congregation. It was from all that hard work that he built the foundation for what was to be the first church in Midland to provide bus ministries, television broadcasts and services to newcomers.

"I feel like we provoked the good works of others (churches)," he said. "Churches lend strength to churches. Churches are not competitive."

Johnson attributes his success these past 25 years to his faith in God and the philosophy that success itself depends on the kind of people the church builds.

"We're in the people business," he said. "Our goal has been if a person in Midland has spiritual problems, they can come to Kelview Heights Baptist Church for help."

But he added, "These can be exciting times for Christians because we learn to trust the Lord."

These are the philosophies that have stood the test of time for Johnson in his career. As president of Pacific Coast Baptist Bible College, he said he hopes to instill them in the lives of the young preachers there.

His priorities, however, remain at Kelview Heights Baptist Church. "Our situation is unique. We're like family. We've grown up together, we've buried our loved ones together and now we're growing old together."

He believes the greatest 10 years of his ministry are ahead.

New device allows patients to dispense own medication

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Patients at area hospitals are feeling no pain these days. Or at least they're having some say about how much pain they must endure, according to proponents of a new device revolutionizing the manner in which pain medicine is dispensed.

The machine, called a "patient controlled analgesia (PCA)," works by dripping standard pain relievers such as morphine into the patient's body via intravenous tubing. The patient "regulates" the amount of medication that is administered by pushing a button on a hand-held monitor.

"We've had rave reviews," said Joe Kiowsky, director of Midland Memorial Hospital's pharmacy, "particularly from the post-operative Caesarean patients." MMH began using the units three months ago on a trial basis.

"We ordered 10 of them but we're getting ready to buy four more," said Kiowsky.

Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, which began using the PCA's a little over a month ago, had a similar reaction.

"We've had a wonderful response," said Rachel Cross, patient education nurse. "We have two of the machines so far and 75 percent of the people who've used them really enjoyed them."

Ms. Cross said there were some problems with a couple of patients because the prescription orders for the machines were not written properly.

"IT'S JUST a matter of educating the doctors on the new system," she said.

"With any new piece of technology, the doctors have to understand how it works," echoed Kiowsky. The director said the pharmacy had developed a protocol, or a pre-printed order, which the doctor fills out before obtaining the medication.

While the new system is not for every patient, it is being hailed by hospital officials as both a money-saver and a psychological boon for the patient and nurse.

"For years, physicians and nurses have relied on subjective, often ineffective methods to determine when to administer analgesic drugs, and in what amounts, to patients suffering from post-operative pain," said a report from Abbott Laboratories, one of several manufacturers of the patient-controlled pain units.

"Analgesic drugs usually are given by intramuscular injection at intervals of four to six hours or at the discretion of the nursing staff according to the pre-set orders. Problems arise because of the inability to determine appropriate dosages, which causes patients to become over-medicated and sedated or to endure continued pain because the dosage was insufficient"

GARY OTT

Talking to the less-fortunate makes one feel guilty

When the old man in ragged clothes headed toward me as I was getting in my car, my initial thought was, "Good Lord, I hope he doesn't want to talk to me."

He did.

He said, "Aren't you that guy that writes for the newspaper?"

"Maybe," I replied, which is what I always say when a stranger addresses me in that manner. Then I relented and said, "Yeah, that's me."

"I need a job," he said. "I'm hungry. I got laid off three weeks ago and times are tough. I'll do anything. Heavy work, you name it."

I lit a cigarette and began to feel guilty, something all bleeding heart liberals do when confronted one-on-one by a person who is down on his luck.

"Look," I said. "I don't do much hiring. An occasional reporter, that's about it. And, you'd need a degree and some writing experience for that."

I was feeling more and more uncomfortable and, quite frankly, didn't want to have to deal with this situation. That's what employment services and want ads are for, I reasoned. Still, the old man persisted.

"How about other jobs at the paper? Surely, there's something for a man who's willing to work. Like I said, I'll do anything. I just need a job."

He seemed sincere; his voice had a pleading tone to it. I've been conned many times in my life, but this guy appeared legitimate.

I gave him a couple of names to call but, if the truth were known, it was more of an attempt to get rid of him than anything else.

He must have sensed that because he wouldn't let me off the hook.

He engaged me in more conversation. "You know," he said, "This country is getting a little crazy. Everybody gripes about people on welfare and how it's costing the taxpayers, but when someone like me begs for a job all we get is blank stares and apologies."

The liberal guilt in me came out again as I glanced at the ground and said, "Gee, I'm sorry, man, but I just don't have any work for you. I mean, I live in an apartment. I don't even have yard work."

"I'm not talking about you, in particular," he assured me. "It's society as a whole. Most of us were brought up thinking a job was the most important thing in our lives. I still believe that. A person needs to work if, for no other reason, to maintain his self-esteem. But, when something happens that he can't control and that job is taken away, he's left with nothing. He becomes an outcast. People feel sorry for him, but that doesn't put food on the table. It doesn't pay the rent."

I began to squirm. I wasn't prepared for this philosophical debate on the unfairness of life, especially since I found myself agreeing with what he was saying.

It also didn't make it any easier that I have a job and have never been so down and out that I had to go begging for work.

So, we just sort of stood there and stared at one another.

I hate awkward moments like that.

Finally, I decided it was time to end the ordeal. I handed him a $20 bill and said, "Here, take this and get you something to eat. I wish there was something more I could do, but I've really got to get back to the office."

Somehow, as I think back on it, that was probably the wrong thing to say.

Local officer retires after 29 years

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Law enforcement officer Charlie Jones has retired after serving Midland County for 29 years.

Charlie Jones is a most likeable guy who wears a white hat and, until recently, wore a badge and rarely strapped on a sidearm.

Jones, 64, recently gave up work as a law-enforcement officer and chief investigator for Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman and entered a career unfamiliar to him — retirement.

"Charlie is a real fine officer," Midland County Judge Bill Ahders said on Jones' last day at work. "He would not treat anybody unfairly. He was thorough in his approach and didn't give up 'til his job was done. He has integrity, honesty and perseverance."

Jones rounded out a 29-year career as a Midland police office, Midland County deputy sheriff and deputy constable and, for the last six years, as the investigator for the County Attorney's Office.

Robert V. Rendall, former county attorney, hired Jones in 1980 as that office's first investigator.

"Charlie says that that (the investigator's job) is the best thing that ever happened to him," said Dettman.

"And," said Rendall, "he helped to get a fairly green county attorney on his feet — to tell the truth."

Rendall said Jones added "a whole new dimension" to the office in his ability to "track people down" and to make witnesses and others comfortable when talking to them.

"The best attribute about Charlie is his attitude and the way he pursues everything without getting flustered or upset," Rendall said.

Dettman said he has never "seen him carry a gun, and I think that speaks highly of the quality of the person he is and the respect he commands."

However, Jones did allow that the "only time" he strapped on a sidearm was when he served warrants. That was for "just in case."

Midland County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose said he has "never known anybody to handle a drunk or mentally ill person better than Charlie. That's because of his temperament."

Midland Municipal Court Judge James Zane Brazell recalled working with Jones when he (Brazell) was an assistant county attorney.

"Charlie was the man behind the scenes who kept everything running smoothly," Brazell said. "I think Charlie knew more about out-of-the-way places and things in Midland than anybody I had ever known."

Assistant County Attorney Paul Williams said Jones has a knack for serving warrants and summonses without leaving his office.

"He'd just call the person and say 'Come get it' and they did," said Williams. "They knew Charlie was fair and that he would come and get them if they didn't show up.'

Judge Barbara Culver of Midland's 318th State District Court recalled working with Jones when she was county judge and he was a deputy.

"We just worked day in and day out," she said. "He was always cheerful and pleasant and a pleasure to work with. He has served the people of Midland County well."

That penchant got Jones a commendation from the Commissioners' Court, which, in a resolution, recognized Jones' faithful and loyal service to the community.

Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon described Jones as "very dependable, very knowledgeable and very sincere." And Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said Jones "is one of the finest law-enforcement officers that a man would hope to work with. He was continuously helping people, including a lot who didn't deserve it."

Jones' wife, Delma "Blondie" Jones, said her spouse "is the greatest."

"Oh," she said, "Everybody has his ups and downs. We were old (33 and 31) when he got married and (then daughter) Vickie came along. And she was kind of like a play pretty."

Mrs. Jones said her husband's work as a lawman made her apprehensive.

"And he's made it without having to shoot anyone or anyone having to shoot him," Mrs. Jones said. "You have to treat them (the public) the way you want to be treated yourself."

In his retirement, Jones said he would "miss everybody down here (at the courthouse). Everybody has been so nice to me. It's been real nice."

"It's been a lot of good friendships," Jones said. "I've tried to make friends and never tried to make any enemies. I worked for peace and harmony."

Town of Goldsmith celebrating 30th birthday

GOLDSMITH (AP) — It's not quite attracting as much attention as the Texas Sesquicentennial, but this West Texas town, know as "The Other Town in Ector County," is celebrating a birthday.

Goldsmith City Secretary Betty Fife notes that the town of about 400, originally formed as an oil camp in 1936, was incorporated in 1956.

Any Goldsmith residents who care to celebrate the occasion by taking in a movie or night at the disco, however, will find themselves traveling southeast for 18 miles — to Odessa and the nearest such entertainment.

There's no remedy here for a Big Mac attack and the town has no topless bars, movie houses or home mail delivery.

Big city life, it isn't, but the former company camp town's older residents don't complain.

They point with pride to the town's own utility services, ballparks, churches and a school that has more students than the town has residents.

The town was founded in 1936 by Fort Worth oilman Harry Tucker and is named for Charlie Goldsmith, a rancher who owned the land used to form the oil camp, according to Fife, who has served as city secretary for 17 years.

The town emerged from dusty oil field facilities and company camps.

Refineries, gas plants and other oil field facilities operated by El Paso Natural Gas Co., Humble Oil Corp. (now Exxon) and Gulf Oil Corp. arose from the parched West Texas dirt to pump and process the hydrocarbons below.

For the people required to operate the rigs and valves of production, the companies established camps in what would become Goldsmith.

Original plans called for the community to be named Ector. But because another town already bore that name, the name was changed.

Goldsmith has a volunteer fire department and Goldsmith Elementary School, part of the Ector County Independent School District.

Goldsmith Elementary has more students than the town has people, according to Harold McKelvain, 38, principal.

McKelvain, who has been at the Goldsmith school since August, said it has 538 students, most of whom ride the bus from west Odessa, Notrees or Gardendale.

Junior and senior high school students living in Goldsmith are bused to Ector Junior High and Odessa High schools, McKelvain said.

H.D. Timmons, 41, has been mayor for the past 12 years and previously served on the city council for 14 years.

Gib Roch, 59, an Ector County deputy sheriff, handles the law enforcement for the small town. There's not much crime to worry about in the area that includes Notrees and "about 40,000 oil wells," he added.

One of the most popular gathering places in town is Steak House Restaurant. It's where residents begin gathering about 6 a.m. each day to drink coffee and talk.

"I try to stop in there (the restaurant) for at least an hour a day to catch up on the gossip," Roch said.

Nightlife in Goldsmith usually entails sleeping, residents say.

"Nothing major goes on, unless somebody has a party or fish fry," Timmons said.

"In the summer, people attend the Little League baseball games, and the swimming pool is always busy. But the teen-agers have to go to Odessa to go to the movies," a resident said.

Student arrested for carrying false bomb

AUSTIN (AP) — The editor of the University of Texas student newspaper, the Daily Texan, was arrested during an awards banquet and charged with carrying a false bomb that was part of a costume, authorities said.

Russell Scott, 23, was sitting at a restaurant table with other students at a year-end awards banquet of Texas Student Publications, when Travis County sheriff's deputies told him to step outside Friday night, investigators said.

Authorities said they received a phone call that a man dressed as an Arab with a grenade strapped to his belt was at the restaurant. Deputies wouldn't say who made the call.

Scott was dressed in a turban and had attached to his chest an alarm clock and road flares wrapped with wire, a comstume he said was designed to represent an Arab terrorist. Several other students also attended the dinner in costumes.

Scott was charged with possession of a hoax bomb, a Class A misdemeanor, and released on a personal bond.

"It's ridiculous," Scott said of the arrest.

Woman charged in husband's capital murder

HOUSTON (AP) — An 18-year-old man repeatedly mentioned that he expected to come into some money because his mother had hired someone to kill his stepfather, the man's girlfriend testified.

Tony Palmire wanted to "fix up his truck" and buy clothes with his share of Gilbert Boyce Swaim's $375,000 insurance policy, Judy Green told a state district court jury Friday.

Ms. Green was the last witness for the state in the capital murder trial of Geraldine Swaim, 43. Mrs. Swaim, a vocational nurse, is accused of paying two young men to kill her husband at their home early Dec. 7.

Ms. Green said Palmire would not tell her at first why he was expecting some money. He finally told her in October, she testified.

"He told me that his mother wanted to hire someone to kill his father," Ms. Green said.

She also testified that Palmire told her about his stepfather's life insurance policy.

Ms. Green said Palmire complained that his mother wanted him to pressure the killers to hurry up with the slaying. She also said that "at least three times a week" during one period, Palmire told her that Swaim, 40, was to be killed that night.

Palmire showed some reluctance before the slaying and had planned to talk to his natural father about it, but he wouldn't see him, Ms. Green said.

Charles Steven Sisk, 20, and Jerry Chaffin, 19, are accused of committing the killing. Chaffin is charged with capital murder while Sisk pleaded guilty to murder. Palmire also is charged with murder.

PCA

Abbott said physicians and nurses traditionally are extremely cautious when administering narcotic pain relievers to avoid errors in judgment that might cause them to overdose a patient. Therefore, many patients continue to experience pain because their prescribed doses are too small or inappropriately timed.

A RECENT study published in "Contemporary Surgery" showed that "48 percent of post-operative patients studied were grossly sedated following conventional injections.

"The major problem with control of pain has been the inability to provide a prolonged level of comfort to the patient," said the Abbott report. "Much of the inadequacy of traditional dosing regimens is caused by the unpredictable and uneven absorption of intramuscularly injected drugs. Time lapses between a request for an injection and the onset of pain relief can seem tortuously long for a post-operative patient.

"Patients in pain first have to call a nurse's attention to their problem. The nurse then retrieves a drug, usually morphine, from a secure cabinet and precisely records the withdrawal. Once the injection is given, about 20 minutes is required for the drug to take effect."

Both Kiowsky and Ms. Cross agree the new PCA's are good for the patient's mental outlook.

"It saves the patient from the anxiety of waiting for the nurse and the nurses aren't having to run back and forth," said Ms. Cross. "It's a real step saver."

"The fact is, since the patient is in control, they are using less medication and are more alert," said Kiowsky. "From the standpoint of the nurse, it's much easier. Before, the nurse took about seven minutes just to fill out the paperwork for each injection. Now there is one medical record and all the nurse has to do is stick her head in the door and ask if everything is all right."

If it is not, said Kiowsky, both the nurse and the patient are well-alerted.

"An alarm goes off, for example, if the tubing gets cramped. Also, there is a screen which flashes off and on the front of the machine," he said.

Cost, too, is a consideration.

"In the current environment of cost-containment, it was felt this would save money, particularly in labor," said Kiowsky.

THE PHARMACY director echoed the Abbott report, saying that "most patients used less medication" on the new machines.

"Clinical studies in Europe have shown that patients on PCA tend to use analgesic drugs very effectively...and also have tended to use less drug than the amount normally given by...injection," said the report.

Other cost-cutters included "reducing the workloads of nursing staff, freeing them for other duties."

Centerpiece of the PCA system is a portable, computerized pump with a chamber that accommodates a prefilled syringe. The pump is programmed by the physician, who designates the total amount of the drug the patient can receive over a period of time and the amount of each dose.

"When a patient experiences pain, he simply presses a button at the end of a cord attached to the pump," said the report. "The syringe then dispenses a small dose of drug into the patient's intravenous line, assuring immediate entry into the bloodstream."

Currently the PCA's are not a standard hospital procedure, although they are offered for an extra $37.50 per day at MMH to those who wish to use them.

"Sometime in the future, medication will be on an automated basis," said Kiowsky, who believes the devices are here to stay.

Chernobyl's wake

While the full extent of the Chernobyl nuclear reactor accident may not be known for weeks or even months, the potential for disaster that existed and, in fact, came to pass in the Soviet Union in recent days make a number of observations unavoidable.

— Blame it on the Kremlin's tight-fisted control, and unconcern for human life or human rights, but the fact that the Soviet hierarchy did not even take the simple step of informing its European neighbors that the accident had occurred goes against every principle of responsible action for advanced nations.

— Based on projections made in the wake of this country's Three Mile Island nuclear mishap, there's little doubt the Soviet Union will need a great deal of assistance in overcoming the effects of the Chernobyl accident, agriculturally, medically and otherwise. In that regard, the United States should be commended for stepping forward early on and offering assistance, even though the Soviet leaders' reluctance to acknowledge U.S. compassion may keep the level of assistance low.

— Although this is no method to utilize in getting the U.S. and Soviet Union officials to talking about the need to work more closely on world concerns, it certainly provides an opportunity for such a discussion in the future.

As more information becomes available on the extent of the damage suffered as a result of the Chernobyl disaster, U.S. officials undoubtedly will be better able to make further assistance offers. That isn't to say that the Soviet officials will accept the assistance, of course. But since the site of the accident was in what is considered the heartland of Soviet agricultural production, the Kremlin may well be forced to turn to the United States and other notable agriculture producers around the world to acquire food and fiber.

Soviet medical technologies may also be hard-pressed to deal with the problems that could arise over a period of time if a large number of people were exposed to varying degrees of radiation. Although the Soviets had declined most offers of assistance, they had agreed to accept assistance from a noted Los Angeles physician who specializes in bone-marrow transplants. Bone-marrow deterioration is a major cause of death for those exposed to large levels of radiation.

Without a doubt, though, the Chernobyl accident merely underscores the hazards inherent in a secretive society — not only to the people comprising the bulk of that society, but also to the world population in general.

Granted, Soviet and American societies are not the same. Their backgrounds and their goals are unlike. But when an industry in either of those societies possesses the potential to wantonly injure or kill scores of innocent people, the governments involved bear the common human responsibility of making those endeavors the safest possible in the interest of humankind.

That is where the Soviet Union has failed. Now the task is for the United States to help convince the Soviet leaders that there is a better way — in the interest of all nations.

Another View:

Nuclear power lesson

The power plant tragedy in the Soviet Union could deal a severe blow to the nuclear industry. The industry — at least so far as building new plants goes — has already been stopped in its tracks in the United States because of prohibitive construction costs.

The Soviet Union, on the other hand, recently announced plans to double its nuclear output within five years.

The incident at the Chernobyl nuclear complex near Kiev cannot be called predictable, but invites some comparisons between nuclear plants in the United States and the Soviet Union. The major difference is the emphasis on safety.

It is the American concern for safety that has driven up nuclear power plant construction and refitting costs. The complaint has often been heard that the pursuit of "fail safe" systems has been carried to an extreme in the United States, unnecessarily restricting the development of needed energy sources.

In contrast, no one has ever accused the Soviet Union of being overly concerned with the safety of its own or neighboring populations as it pursued cheap nuclear power.

The reactors at the Chernobyl plant reportedly were not even housed in containment vessels, a standard safety feature in Western nations. Containment vessels are shells — usually made of concrete — designed to keep radiation from escaping.

The Soviet citizens who died near Kiev may have indirectly been victims of their government's casual attitude toward public safety. The Soviet Union simply does not have the independent court system, free press, regulatory agency pressure and informed citizenry that has made safety the number one concern in the U.S. nuclear industry.

The Soviet incident will justifiably increase concern about the safety of U.S. nuclear plants. Repercussions are still being felt from the limited and localized leak of radioactivity at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant near Harrisburg, Pa., in 1979, and that incident pales in comparison with what has happened in the Soviet Union.

An intensified examination of nuclear power will be well and good, but there appears to be no need to ban this energy source in the United States.

What is urgently called for is international cooperation to assure that every nation that builds nuclear power plants adheres to stringent safety standards.

Perhaps the Soviet Union will join the United States in a spirit of cooperation to increase nuclear power plant safety. If such a joint venture signaled the beginning of cooperation in other areas with the public good in mind, it could at least be said that something constructive was learned from the tragedy at Chernobyl.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1626, Dutch explorer Peter Minuit landed on Manhattan Island, later buying it from the Indians for $24 worth of trinkets.

In 1776, Rhode Island declared its freedom from England — two months before the Declaration of Independence was adopted by the Continental Congress.

In 1970, Ohio National Guardsmen opened fire on a crowd of anti-war demonstrators at Kent State University, killing four students.

In 1980, Marshal Josip Broz Tito, the president of Yugoslavia, died just three days short of his 88th birthday.

Ten years ago: Ronald Reagan defeated President Gerald R. Ford in the Indiana and Georgia Republican primaries. Jimmy Carter won both Democratic primaries.

Five years ago: Irish Republican Army hunger striker Bobby Sands died at the Maze Prison in Northern Ireland on the 66th day of his fast in an attempt to win rights for nationalist prisoners.

GEORGE F. WILL

Disaster emphasizes Soviet mendacity

WASHINGTON — People who know little about U.S. grain exports or even less about geography say the Chernobyl nuclear accident has contaminated "the breadbasket of the Soviet Union." Actually, Nebraska is the breadbasket of the Soviet Union.

George F. Will

Soviet agriculture bureaucrats must be musing: It is indeed an ill wind that blows no good. A wind that blows radioactivity onto prime farming land blows for the bureaucrats this benefit: After blaming bad agriculture since 1917 on 69 years of unusually wet and/or dry weather, they have a new alibi.

If the wind had not blown radioactivity onto Sweden (doesn't the wind know Sweden is elegantly neutral?) and others, the accident would have remained an Orwellian non-event. The good for the West that is blowing in this wind is a stark reminder of the kind of regime that runs the Soviet Union.

Environmental depredation is almost a principle of Soviet "scientific socialism," a doctrine that accommodates only materialist values. Negligence about nuclear contamination also is a Soviet pattern. In the last 10 years, there have been two incidents of leakage from U.S. underground nuclear tests, each provoking Soviet complaints. There have been well over 100 leakages — that we know of — from Soviet tests.

It was predictable that the Soviet regime issue the particular lies it issued ("Spy plane!" etc.) after the Korean Airline massacre. It was predictable that the first Soviet reaction to the nuclear accident would be a comprehensive lie: "What accident?" (Soon to become: "Accident? There was no accident and Western nations should help cope with it.") First the Soviet regime jeopardized neighboring nations by not notifying them; then it began announcing grudging, partial quarter-truths ("two killed"), as usual.

In 1979 there was an epidemic of anthrax near Sverdlosk. The Soviet regime lied robustly, saying it was animal anthrax. There are, in fact, several different strains. But the epidemic was of the kind that afflicts humans and was probably produced in a biological weapons plant that is a violation of an arms-control agreement. That probably is why the Soviet regime refused all requests for on-site inspections of the area. This is the regime that arms-control lobbyists say is ready to negotiate verifiable arms-reduction agreements.

A reasonable surmise is that the accident became serious because the facility was built without proper containment structures. To some extent that may merely represent misplaced Soviet confidence in technology. No society, and no technology, can be regulated in accordance with a no-risk criterion. A few U.S. reactors are without containment structures. That lack may represent a mistaken calculation of costs, risks and benefits. But when the Soviet neglect of containment structures is viewed, as it should be, in a cultural context, it has a sinister aspect.

The fire at Chernobyl illuminated a fundamental fact of Soviet culture. Throughout its dark history, the Soviet regime has been willing, even eager, to trade human lives for forced-draft economic development.

A ghastly constant of Soviet policy has been to regard the Soviet population as an abundant, renewable and hence expendable raw material. The huge ongoing system of slave labor is a manifestation of this mentality. Readers of the second volume of Solzhenitsyn's "Gulag Archipelago" will remember his account of the construction of the White Sea Canal. Uncounted scores of thousands of lives were squandered because foreign exchange was considered more valuable — too valuable to "waste" on labor-saving (and life-saving) machinery.

A survivor recalled: "At the end of the workday there were corpses left on the work site....At night the sledges went out and collected them. The drivers threw the corpses on the sledges with a dull clonk." That "clonk" was and is the sound, almost the voice, of the regime. It is reasonable to suspect that in the construction of reactors, as in the construction of canals, the Soviet regime is reluctant to spend money merely to minimize risk to life. Certainly the regime's behavior regarding the Chernobyl accident illustrates the lesson that must be learned over and over concerning the Soviet ruling class: They are not like us. Never mind the "common humanity" of the Soviet people. It is the regime with which we must contend.

The science editor of the Financial Times (of London) says we must "ask hard questions of Moscow about its obligations to neighboring states and why it tried to conceal an accident with manifestly far-reaching consequences." These are not science questions, and neither are they hard to answer.

From Poland around to Afghanistan, it is easy to see the Soviet regime's sense of its "obligations" to neighboring states. And the regime tried to conceal the accident because mendacity is the regime's ruling principle.

U.S., Soviets abandon SALT II treaty limits

WASHINGTON — In a secret White House report, President Reagan has admitted what we disclosed more than a year ago: The United States and the Soviet Union tacitly agreed four years ago to scrap the limits on nuclear missiles set forth in the unratified SALT II treaty.

Jack Anderson

News reports continue to regale the American public with details of supposedly vehement arguments within the Reagan administration over deployment of new nuclear missiles without cutting up old ones — as if SALT II numerical limits were still being observed by the two superpowers. The news media generally seems unaware of what really happened behind the scenes in 1982.

On Feb. 21, 1985, we reported that the Soviets had secretly notified the Reagan administration in 1982 that it no longer planned to abide by the SALT II limits on the number of nuclear weapons each side could have in its arsenal. We added: "President Reagan secretly agreed to this."

That same evening, at a nationally televised press conference, a correspondent asked an apparently bewildered president about our report. Reagan said, in effect, that he had read it and had no idea what we were talking about.

Our enterprising colleagues in the Fourth Estate let the matter rest. And to this day, their stories continue to make much of supposed Soviet "violations" of the missile limitations — and of supposed pressure from hard-liners to have the president scrap those same limitations. The plain fact is that the decisions were made in both Washington and Moscow four years ago to ignore the limits — and were given mutual, if secret, approval.

The president finally confirmed our revelation in a White House report to Congress last Dec. 23 entitled "Soviet Non-compliance with Arms Control Agreements." Because the report is classified "Secret," the public is not aware of its contents.

We've obtained a copy of the report. It contains a fascinating explanation of why the administration has failed to hold the Soviets' feet to the fire over breaches of the SALT II limitations. There's a hard shell of bureaucratic and legalistic obfuscation, of course, but the meat can be picked out of pages 16 to 19.

"Since signature of the SALT II Treaty there have been three distinct time periods during which the obligations of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. have varied," the report states. This in itself will be news in some quarters.

The first period, the report explains, was from June 18, 1979, when the Carter administration signed SALT II, until September 1981. Both sides had agreed to abide by the missile limits set, pending ratification by the Senate (which never came).

And both sides kept their word. The Soviets continued to have the same number of "strategic nuclear delivery vehicles" — a term that includes all intercontinental nuclear missiles as well as plane-carried bombs. In fact, the secret White House report states, the Soviets may actually have had "a few less" than the limit of 2,504.

President Reagan started the second "time period" in September 1981, when he secretly notified Moscow that he was "relieving both parties under international law of any obligation with respect to the treaty," the report states. Surprisingly, Reagan did not inform the Senate until the highly classified report of last December.

Equally surprising was the fact that the Soviets, though let off the hook of compliance by Reagan, reacted with moderation. Instead of speeding up their missile assembly lines to swell their nuclear arsenal, the Soviets built only a handful of missiles between September 1981 and June 1982. The best CIA estimate for that period gave the Soviets only 2,507 or 2,509 nuclear bombs and missiles — that is, three to five above the treaty limit which both superpowers abandoned.

The third period began on June 18-19, 1982, when then-Secretary of State Alexander Haig cut a secret deal with the Soviets' then-foreign minister (now president), Andrei Gromyko.

The two superpowers agreed to continue their "independent political commitment to SALT II" — an essentially empty phrase that seemed to mean they would publicly talk a good line about devotion to the treaty. But the report then spells out exactly how the bombs/missiles limits, the heart of SALT II, would be quietly laid to rest — already had been, in fact.

RUSSELL BAKER

Don't offend 'em — on way to the bank!

NEW YORK — Say this for David Stockman: He gives value for money. Two million dollars is the money he is said to have got for writing his book, "The Triumph of Politics: Why the Reagan Revolution Failed," which illustrates again why, if your game is either literature or government, Washington is the only place to play it.

Russell Baker

Two million smackeroos is not an unheard-of take for the stars of the best-seller charts, but Stockman, remember, didn't even pay his apprenticeship dues by collecting the usual suitcase full of rejection slips.

And what about those New York public servants sitting around grand-jury rooms? You think they don't stifle sobs of pain when they hear that another public servant came away with $2 million for a book, a crummy book for Pete's sake?

Anybody can do a book. You don't even have to know how to spell anymore, thanks to the tape recorder. In New York, public servants were selling souls and the going price was trifling. The standard bribe in the New York public sector seems to have been $30,000. Thirty thousand is to two million as a can of cat food is to a villa on the Riviera.

All right, let's not swoon. Everybody has long known that one way to get rich is to spend a few low-salaried years committing public service in Washington. It's been 40 years since Tommy Corcoran observed that Washington was full of Roosevelt New Dealers like himself who "came to do good and stayed to do well."

To Stockman's credit, he has not done what the Washington gang so often does to publishers. Usually these birds hijack some publishing house for a million or two, then produce a book that's better than sleeping pills.

Lyndon Johnson's presidential memoir holds the speed record for putting readers into stupor, but Richard Nixon's was a close second and Gerald Ford's not far behind. Henry Kissinger produced an encyclopedia, which may be more fun to read than a dictionary, but is not what a publisher's inflamed imagination envisions when he signs away his millions.

Stockman, though, gives his publisher fair value. Having left Washington a chastened man, he doesn't hesitate to do some chastening of his own in telling what he thought of the people surrounding the president (not much) and even of the president himself (nice but dim).

This is the stuff that publishers' dreams are made of: it has the feel of being an "inside story" told by an authoritative fellow sore enough to throw punches yet respectable enough to be read seriously and not dismissed as a bad sport selling sour grapes.

Bad sportsmanship, naturally, is the charge brought against him by loyal Republicans. The president calls the book "fiction," though saying he hasn't read it. White House courtiers take the line that Stockman is a spoiled egocentric who hasn't played the game like a gentleman.

This rancor is easily understood. As the cartoonist Mark Alan Stamaty observes, "The guy wrote a feel-bad book in a feel-good era."

Stockman is outspoken about presidential advisers, and straight talk wins even fewer friends in Washington than anyplace else. Worse though, he says the present big budget deficits came about because the administration cooked the figures needed to sell the 1981 tax cut and lacked the nerve to fight for spending cuts. That's fraud and spinelessness.

This will come as old news if you followed the news of the Reagan years, but the Reagan people assume that Americans don't follow much of anything except the stock market listings and the TV guide. Hearing Stockman tell it over and over on television, as he has been doing, is bound to disturb people who believe television is where America lives.

While Stockman becomes the pariah of the Republican Party, another former White House star, Michael Deaver, is having a hard time becoming even an embarrassment.

An old friend of the Reagan family, Deaver was one of the president's closest advisers during the first term. Now, having left the White House to make big money running a multimillion-dollar lobbying operation, he is accused of peddling his influence with the president without observing the legal requirements governing sudden transfers from public to private employment.

Reagan says it's "ridiculous" to think Deaver could do bad; party loyalists prefer denouncing Stockman's rotten sportsmanship.

BILL MODISETT

Bill Modisett

Anytime there is an accident of major proportions, there is a segment of the world population that cries: "Man was never intended to venture into this area. Let's stop while we're still alive."

That segment is now being heard in the wake of the Chernobyl nuclear meltdown in the Soviet Union. They're saying, in effect, that nuclear energy is the forbidden fruit in society and we should leave it alone lest we buy ourselves — unintentionally — a one-way ticket out of existence.

They're wrong.

Nuclear power holds the potential to alter the entire scope of mankind's existence for the better, and to walk away from it now would be comparable to the fuzzy-headed caveman chunking his newly-invented wheel into a pond of slush while muttering something about man simply not being ready. Of course mankind isn't ready for the massive changes nuclear power will bring about, just as he wasn't ready for Henry Ford's Model T or Orville and Wilbur Wright's introduction to flight.

But, the critics will contend, nuclear power can, in the case of accidents such as the one in the Soviet Union, kill hundreds or thousands of people and endanger the lives of countless others.

They're right in that regard. No one is attempting to say nuclear energy is risk-free. Officials in the industry contend, and the statistics seem to bear them out, that the safety record in that industry is so impressive there really isn't a reason for the public to fear that form of power.

For what it's worth, I think they're right. The biggest problem with that argument is that it's based on American standards of safety and, unfortunately, that really isn't the situation. Americans may be the pacesetters where safety is concerned but they darn sure can't tell the Kremlin or Peking or any other foreign government to abide by those standards.

That's where the catch comes in. Any new technology (and nuclear power is, essentially, a new technology) requires exceedingly careful progression. America is attempting to do exactly that, primarily because of the notoriety of the Three-Mile Island accident. But, as noted before, Americans can't hold the entire world accountable for our concern for safety

The decision to move forward in any new technology is based on need. There's little doubt that the world needs nuclear power. Beyond that question, the matter comes down to weighing risks. Do the "benefits" justify the "risks"?

In that regard, the question appears to have been answered when the United States and other world powers began constructing and arming themselves with nuclear weapons. Suddenly the risk of commercial nuclear plants became considerably diminished.

Nuclear power is important and this road should be followed. The real hope at this point is for the Soviet Union and other nations utilizing nuclear power to learn a lesson from the Chernobyl accident. Nuclear power holds the potential to help mankind in enormous ways, but its dangers are directly proportional to its potential for good. It must be treated with respect.

Metermaids collect more than they cost

Marianne O'Rourke of Odessa was quoted in the Reporter-Telegram (Thursday, April 24) on her suggestion on how to cut local government costs: "I think they could be less diligent in parking tickets. They waste a lot of time on that. They could put those people to better use."

Au contraire, O'Rourke. Midland's admittedly diligent metermaids are one of the few groups of city employees who generate more revenue than they cost. To curtail their efforts would increase costs of city government to its citizens.

Usually people who complain about metermaids are those who "collect" the most tickets. This situation is reminiscent of Tennessee Ernie Ford's song: "If you don't like the way my little song goes, It's a mighty good sign I've been stompin' on your toes."

Medical society seeks to make sports safer

The Midland County Medical Society has contributed $2,000 to Midland High and Lee High Schools to assist with the purchase of protective football equipment. The Midland physicians are very supportive of Midland's athletic programs and want to strive to make them as safe as possible. We feel that the incidence and severity of knee injuries will decline with the use of protective braces.

Midland orthopedic surgeons Thurston Dean, Don Floyd, David Mallams, and Charles Younger each contributed $1,000 toward the purchase of knee braces for varsity football teams of Lee and Midland High Schools. Midland Lee High School has in excess of 150 players with only 30 knee braces. This does not allow the school to fully implement a complete protective program. The MCMS felt the need to provide funds to improve this situation for the acquisition of additional knee braces.

According to "Doc" Dodson, the athletic trainer, they purchased 125 pairs of knee braces at $39.20 per brace and spent a total of $9,996. They definitely prevented at least six serious knee injuries during the 1985 season.

The Midland County Medical Society is supportive of Midland athletic programs and hopefully our $2,000 contribution will improve the situation. Let us all assist in reducing and hopefully eliminating knee injuries in the forthcoming season.

Nick Shroff, MD
President, MCMS

It's great to be alive even if vacation cut short

First, it's great to be alive even if our vacation was cut short! Howard is now out of the critical care unit.

We were in the van that burned April 22 at Terrell and Front Street.

I want to thank the unknown lady who helped me pull Howard out of the burning car. The lady from the Exxon station there tried to put out the fire with two extinguishers, but nothing could have kept that car from exploding.

I'm glad the people in the other vehicle were unhurt.

The ambulance, police and fire truck got there promptly.

We lost the van, money, clothes, credit cards, jewelry and most important of all: our ID's and keys.

The emergency doctors, nurses, and attendants took care of us. When they realized we had no clothes they found me a scrub uniform (pretty cute, too). The chaplain, Pete Adcock, got a suit for Howard and a nightgown for me. He also took me to a pharmacy to get my prescription filled and gave me a ride to the hotel.

The Hilton Hotel let my use their copier free. The lady in the gift shop found me a ride to the hospital the next day.

A waitress in Denny's Restaurant offered me some of her clothes. Wrong size. She was little.

I'm also glad my children's yellow tomcat escaped from the van just before it exploded. He's been seen since, and I've been back to the accident scene many times, but I keep missing him. We will be here until Howard is well enough to be released.

The people of Midland, Texas have a town to be proud of. Thanks again.

Compassion provides other side of story

In response to Ed Todd's article about an injured cat and the two citizens he encountered, I also have a story to share.

A few weeks ago on a Sunday afternoon, I received a call about an injured dog at a residence on the west side. When I arrived I saw a lady kneeling beside a small dog, which was lying prostrate on the ground. The dog, she said, was hit there in front of her house by a driver who never stopped. The condition of the dog was serious. Immediate veterinary care was essential.

Since the dog was not wearing identification tags, no owner could be notified. The remaining choices were euthanasia or someone willing to take on the responsibility of taking the little dog to the Emergency Vet Clinic. This kind lady chose the latter. We fashioned a stretcher from a piece of board, loaded the dog in her car and off she went, after hastily consulting her husband.

Later, I checked with her on the condition of the dog. Thanks to her caring and concern, the little dog was expected to fully recover.

Unfortunately, Mr. Todd's type of encounter happens all too often. My story is the other side of the coin and the one I focus on. There are many wonderful, compassionate people here in Midland.

SPEAKING OUT

First year on City Council full of rewards, challenges

By ORALIA CORRALES

Oralia Corrales won election a year ago as Midland's first City Council representative under the single-member district system. She was invited to give her views in that regard.

The past year has been a very rewarding and challenging experience. I have traveled more around the entire community, listening to more people from our Tall City than in all my years in community service.

The experiences have been gratifying, meeting so many different people from all walks of life. We continue to serve the many needs presented to us on a daily basis. The job is very time consuming and probably more for those of us who are new and striving to do our very best.

The biggest challenge we have had in recent months is working on the budget, postponing the airport improvements and cutting every corner without cutting service or personnel.

The many improvements in our city are starting to show — we approved funds to build a new park in our district; we hope to have that completed next year. Many streets have been approved for paving and those will be completed this summer. We added another member on the crime prevention force and another to Crime Stoppers; both of these departments are working to reduce the number of crimes in our city. Lalo Camarillo and his department have been very busy training people from all areas of our community on how to protect themselves against crime. The citizens are taking a more active role in being the eyes and ears of the police department and helping to solve more crimes. It is only on the grassroots level with each person being actively involved in assisting our police department that we can continue to reduce crime in our city. We receive many calls daily of people who call and let us know problems they are facing in many areas of service, we attempt to respond and solve as many as we are able to. It appears to me that there has been more involvement in the elective process and that more people are becoming involved in our community in various levels of responsibility.

During the past year we have appointed Margie Titus to serve on the transportation board, Dorthy Smith on Airport Zoning, Tony Carrillo, Sulton Bradley, Iris Hall and James Ramsoure on the Crime Prevention board, and Ciro Sanchez is on the housing board.

Recently I attended a seminar sponsored at the John Gray Institute. I gathered many ideas on economic diversification and have presented these ideas to other members on the council, members of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Task Force and our new mayor, Carroll Thomas. The new Bid Resource Center is a program that should promote many new business ventures for our community.

Some of the frustrations I have experienced have had to do with my lack of knowledge on how best to resolve conflicts that sometimes come about due to rumors or misunderstanding. Praise the Lord, those are soon overcome once the correct information is presented.

The members of our city manager's office and all department supervisors have made my job a lot easier. They have cooperated and have been very instrumental in obtaining much needed facts for a more effective decision-making process. Recently we toured my district with several members of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Task Force, staff members of the Planning & Zoning department and members of our district. The work being done in removing the dilapidated houses and lots being cleaned is to be commended; however, we still have to very much to accomplish before we can really see the results. It is a very time consuming process to notify all the people involved for the removal of dilapidated housing.

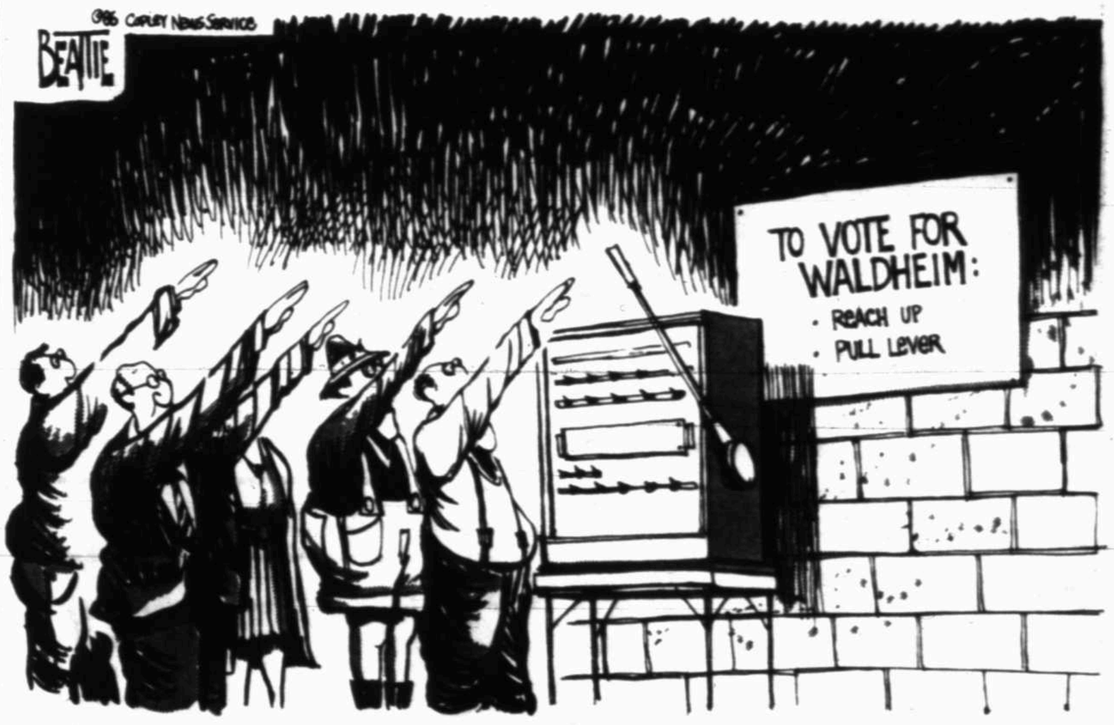

It takes every member of our city to make it possible for us to do our job. The members of the council have all been very supportive and encouraging. The fact that we do not always share the same philosophy has not hindered us from doing the best job for our community and the citizens we were elected to represent. All of these people have been and will continue to be committed to serving the citizens of the Tall City.

My plan for my second year in office is to spend more time with people from south Midland. It is my hope that we can work together to make Midland a better place for all citizens to enjoy a better quality of life. Recently we voted to allow the County of Midland to apply for funds to bring water into the windowpane area around Midland Freshman School. I share with great anticipation in seeing this become a reality for our southside residents. Together we can and will make Midland a better place for all citizens to live, work and play.

A question posed to me during my campaign was how would I keep from being isolated from the rest of the council members. We all knew that the answer to successful representation was to work together with all members of the council. Isolation has not been a problem; we have all worked together for the common good of our community.

Contrary to the belief shared by a few that single member districts would not work in Midland, my experience in working with the entire council has illustrated that the concept can work and will work. This city is more unified now than ever before, relative to city government and what it provides. Our goals are the same, but the means of achieving those goals may at times differ. With us all working together as we have done this year, we can improve upon city government and city services for everyone.

Soviet nuclear disaster generates world-wide concern

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The most dominant news this week was the disaster at a nuclear plant 80 miles north of Kiev, the third largest city in the U.S.S.R. and the radiation aftermath that could affect its neighbors in particular and all Europe in general.

It also is a problem of world-wide concern and President Reagan, on his way to the Tokyo Economic Summit, promptly offered Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev humanitarian assistance and any other possible technical aid that may be required to quell the fire still raging. The Soviets, however, rejected with thanks our offer.

To try to soften international criticism, they asked an American specialist in bone marrow transplants to come quickly to the Soviet Union which he did Thursday night.

Moscow has asked Sweden and a private West German firm experienced in handling nuclear conflagrations for advice — the first time the U.S.S.R. ever requested outside help.

The American offer proposed by President Reagan is a far cry from what the Soviet regime displayed during the problem we had here at home with the nuclear incident at Three Mile Island, near Harrisburg, Pa., which by the way, did not result in a single casuality.

SOVIET OFFICIALS asserted in Moscow that the Three Mile Island affair could be traced "to greedy, capitalist companies — and that such an accident could never happen in the state-run Soviet plants."

So far all Soviet official agencies have stuck to the figure of only two dead, whereas independent sources including foreign scientists, contend there must have been many thousands of casualties. Secretary of State George Shultz, travelling with President Reagan, described the nuclear nightmare in the Ukraine as a "major calamity."

American scientists have said about the disaster in Chernobyl, acknowledged by the Soviets to be the worst in the world ever since nuclear power has been adapted for generating electricity, that if the radioactivty is even within 70 miles from the site of the nuclear accident "we'd sure hate to be anywhere within ten miles of the place."

The United States is miffed, and Europe is irate, about the lack of information from the Soviets and are strongly supporting an international call for on-site inspection of the nuclear disaster scene. President Reagan is known to be deeply concerned about the lack of data supplied by the Soviets although our spy satellites record tremendous damage caused by the meltdown.

The officially admitted deaths at Chernobyl, the first ever recorded from a nuclear power plant malfunction, should not in my view halt nuclear generation of electricity.

Presently, the world gets about 15 percent of its electricity from nuclear generated power and France, Belgium and Taiwan get well over half of their electric energy from nuclear power. All other forms of energy, for that matter nearly all forms of human activity, also result in accidents and fatalities.

BACK IN 1957 in the Urals the Soviets had apparently been testing some unspecified weapons when a mammoth accident occurred which left 29 communities contaminated by radiation and unfit for human habitation. Those communities have been removed from all maps of the Soviet Union as if they never existed.

The plant at Chernobyl was set amid houses, a hospital and stores. When the Three Mile Island accident occurred, the Soviets glibly declared that they had no concern about placing nuclear installations in built-up areas, because their system mastered the techniques of nuclear uses.

I don't know what the technical problems may be, but just from a layman's standpoint, it would seem that we should take a lesson from this disaster and put containment structures on all five of our federally operated nuclear reactors in this country which lack them, to prevent release of radioactive material in an accident.

While en route to Tokyo, President Reagan quickly appointed a special panel to monitor the effects of the Soviet disaster and at its first meetings the scientists reassured the American public that there is nothing to fear from the catastrophe in the Ukraine.

Most Americans, I think, would agree that in making this trip to the Tokyo summit President Reagan displayed remarkable courage. His stopover at Indonesia was marred by the hostile manner in which the Indonesians handled two Australian reporters who were compelled to leave the presidential party as well as the treatment given to a New York Times reporter who was similarly manhandled.

THIS PRACTICE by Indonesian security, protested vigorously by our presidential party, shows that the Indonesian regime, like all dictatorships, doesn't care about basic human rights, especially the right of a free press to study and report objectively on what it finds.

Continuing his journey to meet with colleagues in Tokyo President Reagan also will be running the risk of home-grown terrorism as practiced by groups calling themselves Japanese "Red Flag" extremists. They are given haven in Libya and are used in homicidal missions around the world including one especially grisly incident at an Israeli airport some years ago when they opened up with machine guns on pilgrims, killing and wounding almost everyone in sight before being overpowered.

Actually, the president will probably relax at the summit because he now can count on many friends who since he ordered the raid on Libya, have come around to his way of thinking for stricter restrictions against potential terrorists and their supporters. Included among his colleagues will be a longtime, warm friend, Britain's Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, originally the only European head of government to side with our president on the Libyan raid.

Prime Minister Thatcher is again leading her European colleagues in support of an American proposal that would improve extradition procedures between summit nations to bring IRA and other terrorists to justice.

PERSONAL USE OF VACATION HOME
Under today's tax laws, if you are claiming your vacation home as an investment property, you are restricted to personal use of no more than 14 days or 10% of the annual number of days the property is rented. If you exceed this number of "personal use days", you'll lose many of the important investment deductions, such as depreciation and utility and maintenance costs.
This 14 day limit of personal use can be extended if the visits are for the purpose of maintenance and upkeep. If this is your case, be sure you can document the fact that you actually did the maintenance work during that extra time period.
In the past, if you brought a relative or friend along, it was automatically considered personal. Now you can bring the whole family, as long as you can prove that you did maintenance work during the visit. Since the IRS is always looking for their share of taxes, you must be prudent about the number of visits and the timing. It is doubtful that they'll buy visits every weekend during the rental season. Talk to your C.P.A. or Tax Attorney for more information.

Police department getting new white and blue cars

By JAMES BROWN
City Manager

Brown

City police cars will be taking on a new look during the coming months. Being phased out are earth-colored vehicles. The new cars will be white with reflective blue identification. The new look will make police units easier to recognize and safer for night use.

Missouri Avenue is under complete reconstruction from Big Spring Street to the Colorado Street intersection through June 20. Work will begin on the south half of Missouri. When the south half is completed, work will then begin on the north half. Two lanes of traffic will be maintained on Missouri during the construction. Also, the Missouri entrances to the library and the library parking lot will be closed. Access to library parking will be available from Big Spring just south of Missouri Avenue. The reconstruction will provide this busy section of Missouri Avenue a welcome facelift.

Victor White, director of aviation, received the designation as a Professional Member of the American Association of Airport Executives. There are only 230 such designations in the United States. We heartily congratulate Vic on this significant accomplishment.

Dr. Weldon Horton was honored by the City Council last week for his many volunteer hours of work in restoring historical records and documents of the city. Dr. Horton is director of the Learning Resources Center of Midland College.

Also recognized by resolution of the council was Bobby Trimble for his continuous community service through the Christmas in April program.

We want to welcome Mayor Carroll Thomas, Councilman Kelly Fish and Councilman Robert Rendall to the Midland city government. The city of Midland has always been blessed by capable and dedicated city council members and the new additions are no exceptions. We welcome them aboard.

Houston in running for '88 Democratic convention

HOUSTON (AP) — After a two-day visit, five Democratic Party representatives said they were impressed with Houston as a possible location for their 1988 presidential convention.

But the representatives also said they were impressed with convention facilities in Atlanta and New Orleans, the only other candidate cities they have visited.

'I think the competition will be keen," said Nathan Landow, chairman of the site selection committee as he concluded a review of the three southern cities.

The group is scheduled to visit Los Angeles, Seattle and San Diego.

Lanlow said it is too early to talk about Houston's chances, but he praised officials and business leaders for showing "absolutely total commitment" to bringing in the convention.

Mayor Kathy Whitmire accompanied Landow to the Houston convention site. She said the $104 million facility, scheduled to open Sept. 15, and will be "one of the best facilities in the country."

Developer Joe Russo, chairman of the local committee, said about $6 million is needed from the private sector to pay for modifications, transportation from the center to hotels, liability insurance and an enormous police and security force.

'Little Prince' to be staged at Permian Playhouse

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Kaleidoscope Company of the Permian Playhouse will present Antoine de Saint-Exupery's "The Little Prince" at 2:30 p.m. May 10 and 11.

"The Little Prince" is the story of a journey. Unable to understand why his flower has mistreated him so, the Little Prince sets out to understand the universe around him.

During the course of his travels, he comes upon a number of Grown-ups. All of the Grown-ups are portrayed as being single-minded and self-centered. Their only care is themselves. The Prince comes across a King who only wants to give orders, a Conceited Woman who only wants applause, a Tippler who only wants to drink and so on. All of these different Grown-ups, depicting the worst side of adulthood, bother the Little Prince. The Grown-ups' inability to imagine or believe force him to continue to planet Earth.

His experiences on Earth lead him to the answer he is seeking, an answer he is given by the Fox. This story has been called, "A story which in some way, in some degree, changes the world forever for its reader."

Hampton, Cooper sole Tall City survivors

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK - With 16 individuals and five relays qualified for the Region I track meet, there were some high expectations going into this weekend's meet at the Texas Tech oval.

A lot of those expectations were scorched in flames in Saturday's finals and even the state berths earned by Midland Lee's Quintus Hampton and Brad Cooper had a hollow ring.

Hampton was favored to win the 300 hurdles, but fell to Amarillo Tascosa's George Jones when Hampton almost fell trying to clear the fourth hurdle of the race. Hampton recovered for a respectable 37.87, but Jones had a 37.38 to give Hampton his first loss of the year in that event.

"I had him beat, but I got my foot all twisted coming over one hurdle," said a dejected Hampton.

Lee coach Eddie Wolski said, "It scared me to death when I saw Quintus land wrong. I knew he was going to fall. My heart climbed into my throat."

Cooper also entered the meet unbeaten this year in the 400, but his streak ended when he lost to O.D. Wyatt's Pressie Ford. Ford had a 48.06 while Cooper had a 48.36.

However, Cooper was less disturbed by his loss, saying, "I've been waiting three years to get this opportunity to go to state and I'm not going to let this loss ruin that. I completed my goal. I set a goal on New Year's day that I wouldn't be beaten until the region meet and I did that. Now I just want to place at state."

Region I Track

AT LEAST, Hampton and Cooper advanced to the Austin run in two weeks, but the rest of Midland's list sounds a bit like an army's casualty list.

Midland High's Ethel Edwards, favored in the 200 and a state qualifier in that event a year ago, was scratched from the event after a false start.

"She's crushed," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "Ethel was so anxious to run against Tracy Mayfield (Fort Worth Southwest) that she just tried to start too soon. I was shocked when I saw it happen because she hasn't had a false start in two years."

Edwards did come back with a gutsy leg in the 1600 relay, bringing MHS from last to fourth and anchor Amy Cumings held that position.

Edwards missed another state chance in the 800 relay where MHS finished last and Permian took second and a trip to Austin. MHS had beaten Odessa Permian at district in that event.

Midland Lee's Mike Garza, who had state hopes in two events was fourth in the 800 and third in the 1600. The steady junior had no comment after those events.

Midland High's Anthony Adkison, who was figured to have a good shot in the 100, ran his worst race of the season with an 11.00 for sixth place. He has been 10.3 this year and Wyatt's Julis Wilson won the event with a 10.51, well within Adkison's capabilities.

"They made us run the 100 against the wind and everyone in the field was a lot bigger than me. I just couldn't handle that," said Adkison, who is only a junior.

THE LEE girls had a near miss in the 100 as Tangi Carter finished third with a 12.27. Carter finished second in district but did beat Odessa High's Kasandra McDaniel, who won the district title.

"I'm not going to state, but I'm not disappointed with my race," said Carter. "At least, I have a medal to show for my region performance."

Lee's Roz Eaden placed fourth in the long jump and sixth in the triple jump, an event that four leapers beat the Region I record. Sophomore Susie Dunn failed to make the finals in the long jump.

Lee's Tami Woodberry was fourth in the 100 hurdles. The junior was fifth a year ago. Junior teammate Piette Mayfield was last in that event.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Bill Mims turned 50 last year. Since 1953 he has been a quadriplegic.

Mims suffered a football injury in a preseason scrimmage and it changed his life forever.

Instead of a career, perhaps in law, life became a struggle. The day-to-day functions that the rest of us take for granted were anything but routine for Bill.

Since 1953....

The Midland High players who will participate in Thursday's Bill Mims game weren't even born when Bill suffered his spinal injury.

Since 1953...

Bill Mims' world has been a bed and a wheel chair, which provides the mobility needed for his occupation. He has only limited use of his arms and hands, and that represents a major achievement in itself.

But his is not a life bereft of purpose or achievement. He contributes to his own support through his real estate activities. And despite his own problems, he has time to lend a sympathetic ear to others with problems that seem overwhelming.

IN 1969, he became involved in the Crisis Intervention Program (CRISP) through the Mental Health Clinic.

He also has his real estate license and specializes in managing and leasing single homes.

"I can do about what others do," he assures, "It just takes longer for a quadriplegic to get the day going. I need a little flexible time."

"With CRISP, I work as a backup to the pro staff, which screens and trains volunteers. They look for people with stability in their lives. We cover personal relationships, parent-child conflict. CRISP is an invisible free will source for someone who doesn't have a lot of resources." CRISP is available to those who need it 24 hours a day.

"We work closely with AA, the Midland Council for Alcoholism and the Johnson Center."

It has been an eye-opening experience for Mims.

Since becoming involved in the mental health program, "I've stopped reading fiction...After you've worked with the program for a while, you recognize certain types of calls. Many just need supportive listening."

Mims emphasizes the strict confidentiality of the program "and the information is guarded closely."

"It was a program I met coming around a corner. Friends told me about it. I found things were needed in the program and discovered I could help."

Leasing is important to Mims, "because it helps provide the income I still need," to help with the day-to-day care and getting in and out.

In the past few years, Mims has witnessed some dramatic changes in the real estate business. "With a house you either sell it or you don't. Leasing is something else.

"Since the boom years, the price of leasing has dropped. From the boom years leasing has changed from a few days to months. But things are levelling out now. And in Midland, the population has grown each year and it has helped the rental market."

Mims regards June as a telltale month for Midland. "Normally, we have an exodus at that time of year, after school is out. This year, the numbers moving away could be unusually large."

Mims says one of his new clients, "Texas Plastics, which makes parts for Mazdas, is hiring people. I don't think most people are even aware that they are here."

"I HOPE that I never see anything like that again," Bob Byron, a former Midland sportscaster who did Bulldog games back in the early 1950s, began.

"Bill had one of those Greek God builds, and he was a good student, captain of the football team, all-district the year before — a popular young man.

Shoe, Ferdinand smelling roses

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Racing Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Bill Shoemaker, admittedly in the twilight of racing's greatest riding career, teamed with a colt named Ferdinand Saturday to shine as bright as the Kentucky sun.

Ferdinand, benefitting from Shoemaker's 38 years of experience in the saddle, cut between horses to reach the rail at the top of the stretch, then sped home to win the $784,400 Kentucky Derby.

It was Shoemaker's fourth Derby victory in his 24th Derby ride and the 54-year-old jockey said it was his biggest.

"This is more of a thrill," said Shoemaker. "I know my riding career is in the twiglight and I might not ever get another chance to win the Derby. This is a great thrill."

It seemed to be a great thrill for most of the more than 100,000 people on hand at Churchill Downs as they roared a welcome to the "Shoe" as he entered the winner's circle aboard Ferdinand.

It was also a thrill for Charlie Whittingham, the 73-year-old, Hall-of-Fame trainer, who was saddling only his third Derby starter and his first since 1960.

"It took me 26 years to have a horse good enough to get here and I've got one now," Whittingham said. "I don't know how Bill did it. It looks like somebody was looking down on the Sunshine Boys."

The Sunshine Boys Whittingham referred to were himself and Shoemaker.

THE SUNSHINE Boys going into the 112th Derby were Carl Grinstead, a retired electrical engineer, and Ben Rochelle, a former song-and-dance man, the owners of favored Snow Chief.

Shoemaker used the 1986 success of another older athlete as a buoy to his victory.

"Really, I thought Jack Nicklaus did it," Shoemaker said of the 46-year-old golfer's recent Masters victory, "and now I did it, too."

Snow Chief, winner of five straight races, went off as the 2-1 favorite and, on the final turn, it looked like he might become the fourth California-bred to win the Kentucky Derby.

Ridden by Alex Solis, Snow Chief made a mighty move on the turn, then suddenly the Derby was over for him.

He staggered home 11th, beating only five of the 16 3-year-olds in the field and becoming the seventh straight Derby favorite to lose. The last favorite to win was Spectacular Bid in 1979.

"At the 3-16 pole, four horses went past him," Solis said of the colt who has raced once a month since November. "He just got tired."

FERDINAND, WHOSE next start according to Whittingham will be in the Preakness May 17 at Pimlico, got to the end of the 1¼ miles 2¼ lengths ahead of English-Bred Bold Arrangement.

Broad Brush, who didn't even get to Churchill Downs until two days ago, was another three-quarters of a length back and a neck in front of Rampage, the crooked-legged colt who had won the Arkansas Derby.

Ferdinand carried scale weight of 126 pounds home in 2:02 4-5 to earn $609,400 and reward his backers with a payoff of $37.40, $16.20 and $8.60, eighth best in history.

Bold Arrangement, ridden by Chris McCarron returned $9.40 and $6.80, while Broad Brush, ridden by Vincent Bracciale Jr., was $9.20 to show.

Ferdinand is owned by Mrs. Howard Keck and was bred in Kentucky by her husband, Howard, who knows something about winning famed races. Keck owned the cars that Bill Vukovich drove to victory in the Indianapolis 500 in 1953-54.

NOW, HE has a colt that Shoemaker thinks is good enough to win the Triple Crown.

The Angels did unto San Antonio what the Diablos had been doing unto the Angels all week, rallying for seven runs in the eighth inning to defeat the Dodgers, 9-4, and sending 2,734 fans home from Angel Stadium all smiles Saturday night.

As far as the Dodgers are concerned, the way things have been going, everybody looks alike. This was San Antonio's sixth straight loss.

Catcher David Heath delivered the game-winning blow with two out, looping a single to left to chase home two runs. As it turned out, there was more where that came from.

FOR SIX innings, it looked like a long night of disappointment for the Angels. Dodger starter Shawn Hillegas had a no-hitter going for five innings when McLemore finally broke the spell with a one-out single up the middle.

With two-out, Glenn Walker drilled his fourth homer in three games over the left field fence, a well-hit shot on which outfielder Chris Gwynn took a couple of steps back and then watched helplessly as it disappeared into the night.

That still left San Antonio in front 4-2 and even when Midland made waves in the eighth, it looked like the righthander was going to escape with a lead.

Raul Tovar doubled with one out in the eighth and Walker's hit to left plated the run. James Randall walked, but Billie Merrifield skied to center for the second out before Brian Brady singled and Kevin King drew his third walk of the night to load the bases.

That's when Heath came through with his clutch hit and brought Hector Heredia out of the bullpen. In all, Midland sent 12 batters to the plate and six straight runners reached base after two were out in the uprising.

Of his game-winner, Heath said, "He fooled me. I was looking for a fastball and he threw me a slider-...but I'll take it."

Plagued by injuries from a scuffle a week ago, Heath feels he's beginning to come around. "I'm seeing the ball now. I think I'll be all right."

MCLEMORE, MEANWHILE, stretched his hitting streak to 16 games with his two-hit night and added his 16th stolen bases.

"Stolen base goals? Some think I should be shooting for 100. I'll just take what I get and hope it helps us win some games. We've got to start playing nine innings instead of five," he added, referring to the four losses in five games in El Paso.

As for the Angels' turnabout this season, "Last year we had a lot of talent and little experience. This year we've got talent and a lot of new guys on the team who add experience."

WALKER, ON a tear, represents some of that new experience.

His two hits and three RBI Saturday night were a big factor in the win and also extended his batting streak to 10 games, during which he has 19 hits in 42 at bats.

MHS duo wins Region I tennis crown

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK — Jill Bramlett and Laura Legg evened the score in the Region I tennis finals Saturday, and two weeks from now at the state meet, they should be well rewarded for it.

The Midland High doubles pair carded a two-set, 7-6 (7-2), 6-2, victory over Ann Donnell and Tonya Hamilton of Lubbock Coronado to win the Region I 5A doubles finals. It was the second win for Bramlett-Legg over the Coronado team in four matches — and their second in a row.

With the win, the pair earned a favorable seeding in the state meet, facing a runner-up team from another region. Only eight doubles teams attend the state meet in Austin. Their season's record is 29-2.

"Bramlett played her normal top performance from the base line and I would say it was the top performance of the year for Laura Legg simply because she hit some great passing shots down the center," said Bulldog coach Pete Barizon. "As a team it was their top performance, the best they've played all year."

After a close first set which went to a tiebreaker, Bramlett and Legg were never really challenged. The MHS team took a 5-1 advantage in the tiebreaker on the way to a 7-2 decision. Then in the second and final set, Bramlett and Legg overpowered Donnell-Hamilton.

Lee's Carrie Roach was seventh in the 200 and Lee's sprint relay team was last.

THE MHS boys were fourth in the 1600 relay with a 3:18.34, not a season best. The Lee boys lost that chance Friday when Kevin Witt pulled a hamstring on the leadoff leg in the prelims.

Lee junior Rodney Clark placed 13th in the 3200, but suffered throughout the race with stomach cramps.

So while the Lee and MHS entries had little to crow about, Odessa Permian came away shouting. The Permian girls won the Region I team title for the second consecutive year and the Mojo boys tied for second.

The Permian girls scored 49 points while advancing Elaine Gamble in the 400, Julie Blavier in the discus and placing a surprising second in the 800 relay.

"I've never had a nicer surprise than this in my life," said Permian girls coach Dot Brashear. "I didn't even have any idea we were anywhere close to winning this meet when they announced our name."

The Permian boys tied Bryan for second place with 54 points while Wyatt easily won the meet with an awesome 77 points.

Permian did upset Wyatt in the 400 relay with a fine 40.95 as Patrick Wilson ran a great anchor leg.

Permian also got a double advancement from Troy Baker, who won the discus and placed second in the shot put. Bryan Phillips won the pole vault at 14-6 on Friday for another Panther honor.

There were no other state qualifiers from District 4-5A other than the ones from Permian and Lee.

ANGELS

"Last year I played at Memphis until June 10 and then went down to Mexico City where we won the championship" and the Washington State Univesity product, who contributed 14 homers and 51 rbi in 59 games.

Walker played three years in the Pacific Coast League with the Seattle organization. When he joined the Kansas City farm system he was sent back to AA ball and last year belonged to the Orioles.

"As a six-year veteran, the Angels were free to make a deal with him," says Midland Manager Joe Maddon, and as far as the Angel skipper is concerned, he's worth it. "That foul in the eighth, before he flied out to left, I thought that was another homer."

While the fireworks in the eighth won it and Randy Harvey, who just joined the club's bullpen, picked up the win with a hitless, runless eighth. But starter Mike Cook, again not around for the decision, did his job for 7⅓ innings.

"Mike didn't cave in. He kept it at four runs so that we were in position to come back. And he did it in spite of not having his best stuff," said Maddon. "In this park you never give up when you are down by four and you never give up even when two are out. You can score a lot of runs after two are out like we did tonight."

And while first baseman James Randall went hitless, he dug a couple of Billie Merrifield throws from third out of the dirt in the second and fifth to avert what could have been big innings.

Whalen's call wrong again, 'Dogs in Abilene

From Staff Reports

Midland high baseball coach Tim Whalen can only hope his Bulldogs have more success on the field in the upcoming state playoffs than he does in calling coin flips.

Whalen's inability to win a coin flip was obvious again Saturday when he lost a flip with Abilene Cooper coach Andy Malone to determine home field for the first place playoff in District 4-5A this week.

"I haven't won a coin flip since Moby Dick was a minnow," Whalen said.

And so, the Bulldogs will have to travel to Abilene Tuesday for a 5 p.m. date with the Cougars at Hardin-Simmons Field.

The playoff was forced Friday when Malone revealed that the Cougars had unknowingly used an ineligible player in Cooper's season-ending 9-5 win over Abilene High. The win reverted to a loss and dropped the Cougars into a tie with MHS at 10-4.

The Bulldogs have won two previous meetings with Cooper, halting a three-year winning streak by the Cougars on their home field in a 14-10 slugfest. MHS also took the first contest, a 2-1 squeaker at Angels Stadium.

Whalen indicated he was likely to start ace Kenny De La Garza, 10-5, 2.71, in the playoff, but may also use Ricky Castaneda, 3-4, 4.38, if necessary. Cooper is likely to throw Dave Tollison against the 'Dogs. Tollison was 6-2, 3.04, in district play.

The winner of Tuesday's game will play Amarillo High in the first round of the playoffs, while the loser will face District 3-5A winner Lubbock Monterey.

Greenwood's girls were tied for sixth with Reagan County in the point totals with 32.

The relay, consisting of Kenny Walker, Gerald Mitchell, Cliff Wilson and Dwayne Tarpley, finished in 3:23.83 leading the Golden Cranes.

Bad D Oilers draft offensive talent

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers' 1986 college draft selections may have provided the ultimate example of following that hackneyed draft phrase, "picking the best athlete available."

The Oilers went into the draft desperately needing to improve one of the most porous defenses in the National Football League.

Houston finished 27th among the 28 NFL teams in total defense the past two seasons and was last against the rush in 1985.

Instead, the Oilers used their first three choices to select offensive players — Purdue quarterback Jim Everett, Louisville wide receiver Ernest Givins and Notre Dame running back Allen Pinkett.

The Oilers, with 10 picks in the 12-round draft, eventually selected defensive players in the eighth and ninth rounds.

Have the Oilers shot themselves in the foot? Are they preparing to score 40 points per game next season and allow the other teams to score 45 points?

Coach Jerry Glanville doesn't think so.

"We selected the best player available for the round in which we picked," Coach Glanville said."We had areas of need and we tried to fill those needs.

"Last year, people were wondering why we were scrambling to get a fifth round pick to take a guy like (linebacker Frank) Bush, but now they know," Glanville said.

Bush was a fifth round selection in 1985 who made the team and drew Glanville's praise last season.

The Oilers selected Everett, who led the nation in total offense last season, although they have invested $5.5 million in former Canadian Football League star Warren Moon.

Moon and former Coach Hugh Campbell came to the Oilers in a package deal two year ago, General Manager Ladd Herzeg said last year after firing Campbell.

The Oilers deny they are also giving up on Moon, who has three years remaining on his $1.1 million per year contract.

"We have no quarterbacks on the trading block at this time," Glanville said.

Backup quarterback Oliver Luck performed well in his supporting role last season.

But the Oilers still had chances to pick up defensive help.

They chose Everett over Alabama defensive end Jon Hand, who could have provided a strong pass rush opposite end Ray Childress, an instant starter out of Texas A&M last year.

Givins, 5-9, 170, was "the best athlete available" when the Oilers selected him in the second round, Glanville said.

"He's the second fastest player in the draft behind Bo Jackson and he's got big play potential," Glanville said.

But Boston College nose guard Mike Ruth and Texas Christian running back Kenneth Davis still were available when the Oilers picked Givins.

Ruth, a finalist for the Lombardi Award, was ranked the 19th best athlete in the nation by one rating service.

Davis, 5-10, 212, was a possible Heisman Trophy candidate before he was dismissed from the team for accepting money from a booster.

Glanville said no thought was given to selecting Davis over Givins.

Davis had been selected by the third round when the Oilers chose Pinkert, 5-7 1/2, 180.

"There was nothing to discuss. We already knew what we wanted to do," Glanville said.

Glanville said Pinkert was the top weight lifter at Notre Dame the past two years.

"He has great strength and the ability to make you miss and turn a run into a long gain," Glanville said.

Glanville, the Oilers' defensive coordinator last season, thinks the defense will be improved with the pat hand he's apparently decided to go with, barring trades.

But it would have been better with a helping Hand.

Reggie acting like Billy?

MILWAUKEE (AP) — California Angels outfielder Reggie Jackson was sought by police Saturday after an autograph-seeker was sent to a hospital following a scuffle at a tavern.

Jackson, sitting with some teammates at a table, was accused of grabbing a man who had torn up an autographed paper and slamming his head on a table.

Jackson, staying at a hotel across the street from the downtown tavern, later told an interviewer he simply seized the man's shirt and asked him to leave.

Donald Weimer, 26, of Racine was treated for forehead bruises and a chin cut that required stitches, then was discharged, a spokesman for Mount Sinai Medical Center said.

Police said the matter would be reviewed Monday by the Milwaukee County district attorney's office. A police car was parked outside the hotel for two hours, but police Lt. Donald Werra said Jackson's whereabouts were unknown and that investigators at 11:20 p.m. had yet to question him.

Police Capt. Carl Ruscitti said the incident occurred about 6 p.m. after the Angels lost 4-3 in 10 innings to the Milwaukee Brewers at County Stadium.

Largent Parks, 29, of Santa Barbara, Calif., and other tavern patrons said Weimer approached Jackson's group at a table, asked for an autograph and was refused.

Decisions. Decisions.

New Mexico. The choice between a pueblo and a polo field, La Traviata under the stars and La Fiesta under the Zia Sun.

New Mexico. The daily double and the 18th hole or a white water rapids and a race for the summit.

New Mexico. Where to go when you want mountains, lakes and deserts. What to do when you want to dine continental, dance to jazz, or drink in the beauty of Southwestern art.

New Mexico. The choice of Enchantment.

Two outs when win

Derby gamblers bet record $$$

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Patrons at the 112th Kentucky Derby on Saturday sent record amounts of money through the pari-mutuel windows.

The $6,165,119 bet on the Derby itself far surpassed the 1985 record of $5,770,074 and the total bet set a new record for a single day's racing at any North American race track.

Churchill Downs patrons dug deep into their pockets to bet $13,114,331 on all 10 races.

The Derby betting was led by a pair of million-dollar losers, Snow Chief and Badger Land.

Snow Chief, who went off as the favorite at just over 2-1, drew $1,177,264. Badger Land, the second favorite at about 5-2, drew $1,139,970 from some of the 123,819 patrons at Churchill Downs.

The 1985 betting totals at the Downs were $12,330,650 for the entire 10-race card and $5,770,074 on the Derby itself.

Off the track, there were 56 locations that took bets totalling $19,776,332 on the Derby. Both figures are records.

The previous record for a single day of betting was set at Santa Anita in March 1984 with $12,611,415.

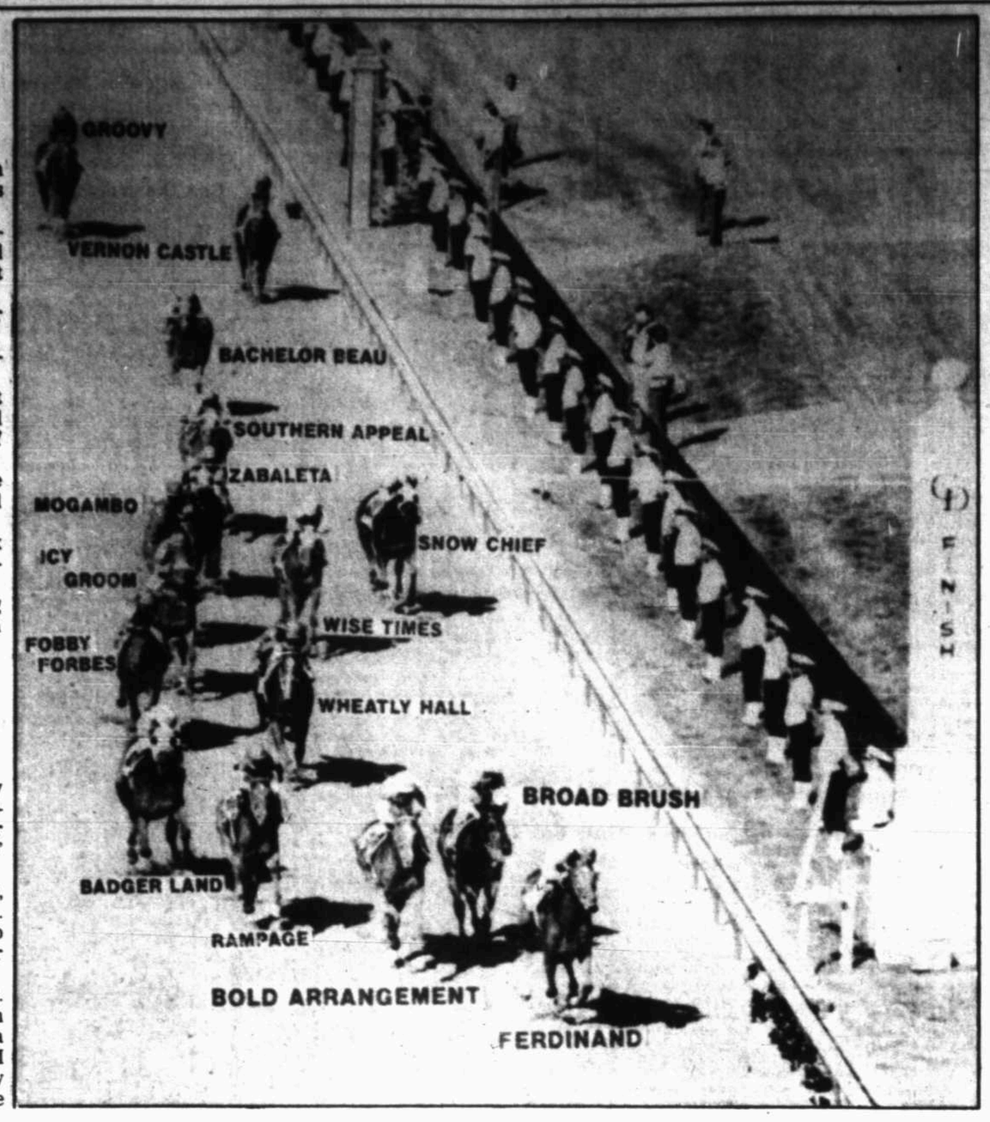

Rough start almost takes out favorites

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Saturday's Kentucky Derby was over almost as it began for several horses, including favorites Snow Chief and Badger Land, because of a rough start, the thoroughbreds' jockeys said.

"I got killed out of the gate," Jorge Velasquez, jockey of Badger Land, who finished fifth, said. "He got bothered badly. I was lucky not to go down. I was in serious trouble for the first three or four strides.

"I was not expecting to be so far back like that. Then, going into the first turn, he got bumped in the rear end and it knocked him sideways for a second. When he made a move on the turn, I thought he still could do it, but it was probably asking too much for him to overcome all that. He ran a good race considering."

Alex Solis, jockey of favored California-bred Snow Chief, said his colt "stumbled leaving the gate and then I had to rush him a little to get a position."

DERBY

That he is even going to the Preakness is a victory for racing traditionalists, who were more than a little annoyed in 1985, when Derby winner Spend a Buck skipped both the Preakness and the Belmont Stakes.

The traditionalists would have been disappointed again if the stretch-running Bold Arrangement had been able to overtake Ferdinand.

Racing for only the second time in the United States, the English colt must return home by May 10 under an arrangement with the U.S. Department of Agriculture. His next race will be the English Derby at Epsom Downs June 4.

Two colts foaled in England have won the Kentucky Derby.

They were Omar Khayyam in 1917 and Tomy Lee in 1959. Tomy Lee was ridden by a 27-year-old jockey named Bill Shoemaker, who also won the Derby with Swaps in 1955 and Lucky Debonair in 1965.

Only Bill Hartack and Eddie Arcaro have won more Derbies than Shoemaker — five each.

GROOVY LED at the end of the first quarter-mile after the run past the stands for the first time with Zabaleta second and Bachelor Beau third.

At this point, Shoemaker and Ferdinand were 11th.

When the field hit the quarter pole, Broad Brush was in front by a head over Bold Arrangement, who had a one-half length lead over Badger Land. Snow Chief, who had moved outside horses on the turn, was already beginning to fade and was fourth.

At the quarter pole, Shoemaker had Ferdinand fifth and was four horses wide straightening for home.

Then, Shoemaker managed to weave Ferdinand between horses to reach the rail.

Why, the veteran was asked.

"To save ground," he said simply.

Save ground, he did and there was no catching Ferdinand in the run to the wire.

Before the race, Shoemaker assessed his chances for a fourth Derby by saying "I know he has ability, it's just a question of his getting it all together. He's my best Derby horse of the last 5-10 years."

The Shoe had a lot to do with Ferdinand getting it all together.

"I'm happy for Charlie and I'm happy for myself," Shoemaker said.

FERDINAND, A son of Nijinsky II, who was an English Derby winner, won one of five races last year with one second and two thirds.

He opened his 3-year-old campaign with a second in the restricted Los Feliz Stakes at Santa Anita, then won in the restricted Santa Catalina and second in the San Rafael.

His Derby prep was the Santa Anita Derby, in which he finished third, seven lengths behind Snow Chief and his Derby upset boosted his bankroll to $950,300.

An announced crowd of 123,819 watched one of the biggest victories of Shoemaker's career, which numbers more than 8,400 victories, more than 200 in stakes races worth $100,000 or more.

The order of finish after Rampage was Badger Land, Wheatley Hall, Fobby Forbes, Icy Groom, Wise Times, Mogambo, Snow Chief, Zabaleta, Southern Appeal, Bachelor Beau, Vernon Castle and Groovy.

Most of the attention paid to Ferdinand before the Derby was due to the fact that Whittingham trained him and Shoemaker rode him.

Heavyweight Mike Tyson rears back to land a right hand to the jaw of James "Quick" Tillis in a non-title bout Saturday. Tyson won the fight in a decision.

Tyson wins, Tillis still standing

GLENS FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Undefeated Mike Tyson knocked James "Quick" Tillis down late in the fourth round Saturday and went on to claim a unanimous decision in a 10-round heavyweight fight at the Glens Falls Civic Center.

Tillis became the first opponent to go the distance against the 19-year-old from Catskill, N.Y. Tyson had knocked out the first 19 opponents of his 13-month-old professional career in six rounds or less.

Jesse Ferguson lasted into the sixth round against Tyson in February, the longest any fighter had previously gone.

Tyson's knockdown came with eight seconds left in the fourth round when he landed a left hook to the head after Tillis, 27, had missed with a wild left hook of his own. Tillis, who weighed 207¾, was on his feet at the count of five and the round ended three seconds later, preventing Tyson from following up.

Tyson appeared to have Tillis in trouble again in the fifth round and also in the seventh, but there were no further knockdowns in the fight, televised live by ABC.

Starting in the eighth round, Tillis made a comeback, throwing jabs and moving to keep away from the body shots that Tyson, 215, had landed consistently in the first five rounds.

Tillis' mouth was bloodied from the sixth round on and a cut was opened briefly above his left eye in the seventh.

Judges Al Reid and Bernie Frieken scored it six rounds for Tyson and four rounds for Tillis, while Judge Tony Moratte had it eight rounds for Tyson and two rounds for Tillis.

Canadiens take 2-0 lead over Rangers

MONTREAL (AP) — Guy Carbonneau scored twice in a four-goal second period as the Montreal Canadiens beat the New York Rangers 6-2 Saturday night in the second game of their Stanley Cup semifinal series.

The victory gave the Canadiens a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 Wales Conference final and sent the series back to New York for Games 3 and 4 on Monday and Wednesday nights.

Montreal, the Adams Division champion and a 2-1 winner in Game 1 of the Wales series on Thursday night, came back to tie the score at 9:25, as Bobby Smith circled around from behind the Rangers' net and fired from five feet. The puck went in between the legs of New York goaltender John Vanbiesbrouck, off his left skate and into the net.

The second period belonged completely to the Canadiens, as they scored four times.

Cowboys toss out draft book

One rule, according to Coach Tom Landry, is never, ever take a wide receiver in the first round.

The Cowboys tried it in 1968 and were burned when Dennis Homan of Alabama turned out to be the bust of the decade.

Eighteen years later, Landry went against his draft handbook by taking UCLA's Mike Sherrard, the fastest receiver the Dallas Cowboys have had since Olympian Bob Hayes.

The Cowboys never, ever draft kickers.

They tried it in 1972 with combination punter and placekicker Marv Bateman, who was a big bust.

The Cowboys went against that rule this year by picking Max Zendejas of Arizona in the fourth round. Zendejas can get the ball into the end zone on kickoffs and is 70 per cent accurate on field goals over 50 yards.

Hello, Rafael Septien.

THE COWBOYS really like Sherrard.

They wouldn't let him wear Pearson's No. 88 this fall if they didn't.

"Drew was extremely excited about Sherrard's potential when he worked him out," said Gil Brandt, Cowboys' player personnel director. "He really thinks he will be able to help us right away."

Pearson confirms his enthusiasm. "Yay, we finally have an 88 who is fast," he quips. "This kid is a player."

The Cowboys outmaneuvered a division rival in a last-minute first round trade to land the coveted wide receiver. They jumped from 20th to 18th over the New York Giants by giving the San Francisco 49ers a fifth round choice.

The Cowboys also got another "impact" offensive player in the second round off their Gary Hogeboom trade pick with Indianapolis, taking fleet tailback Darryl Clack of Arizona State.

"Both Sherard and Clack are fast and can score from anywhere on the field and that's the kind of impact players we want."

Then there's third round pick, defensive tackle Mark Walen of UCLA.

Dallas obviously was pleased it had jumped over the New York Giants to draft Sherrard.

The 6-1 Sherrard, who has been timed in the 40-yard dash in 4.23, confirmed the Giants were after him.

"It seemed the way the draft was going that the Giants were going to pick me," he said. "They had shown a lot of interest."

The Cowboys have been frustrated in the past by getting nosed out on game-breaker type players in the first round.

Sherrard will move to flanker and team with veteran Mike Renfro while Karl Powe will move over to split end with Tony Hill.

"He (Sherrard) has great hands, he's fast, and is a big target," said Landry. "I don't think this pick is a gamble. He has a chance to help us right away. His speed really excites us."

"Last year it was a big disappointment when we didn't get Eddie Brown but this is equal to what we missed last time," Landry said. "He should be able to start for us. He's got everything you want. We didn't want the Giants to get him."

LANDRY WAS equally enthusiastic about the 6-foot, 210-pound Clack.

"Clack is big and fast," and he is excellent at catching the ball coming out of the backfield," said Brandt. "He's just great at running routes."

Clack will back up veteran Tony Dorsett.

The 6-3, 207-pound Gelbaugh also is a punter. He broke Boomer Esiason's passing record for yardage in one year at Maryland.

The Cowboys need a third quarterback to backup Danny White and Steve Pelluer.

The other picks, cornerback John Holloway of Kansas, running back Topper Clemons of Wake Forest, offensive tackle John Ionata of Florida State, and offensive guard Bryan Chester of Texas, are longshots at best.

MIMS

"It was an end sweep. The play was over and Bill was on the ground. This boy from Big Spring evidently couldn't stop his momentum. It's a play you've seen happen a hundred times. There was no malicious intent. Just over exuberance."

Byron went on, "He landed on Bill's back. Bill got up slowly, and started to walk back to the huddle. He toppled over halfway back. He got up again and made the huddle before collapsing again.

"This time, they carried him back to the dressing room. On the training table, he was so chalky white and still, you knew it was serious. And when he did talk, he kept complaining about burning up."

What followed were weeks of rumors and fear for the worst and then finally treatment at Gonzalez Warm Springs Foundation..

"They can't regenerate the spinal cord. Nowadays, they'd open the spinal cord to cool it and keep the swelling down. And they have experimented with nerve endings and bypass spinal cord surgery," Mims reflects.

"IT SEEMS like we were very close forever. He was a year behind me in school, but our birthdays were only four or five months apart," says Roy Kimsey, a Midland oil man.

"We played football, basketball and ran track together.

"I saw that last scrimmage. I was getting ready to go to the University of Texas the next day. He was hit and I saw him fall. He tried to get up twice. They called the ambulance and took him to what used to be the Western Clinic.

"Bill was in traction for 30 days. It's been so long ago that I'm not sure of all the details. After they took him out of traction, he got up and walked across the room and sat down in a chair. It was after that that they decided to take him to Fort Worth to be operated on.

"Bill, was always one who persevered and endured. He had more competitive spirit than any one I knew.

"On the field he was a fierce, tenacious competitor. He had been all-district as a junior at end, the last year we played together. As a senior, they shifted him to fullback. At 6-1 or 6-2 and 190 pounds, I think he was definitely all-state material.

"His senior year, he would have been running in a backfield with Clint Nobles, Rusty Rutledge, Willie Brooks and Tommy Johnson with Wahoo McDaniel coming along as a sophomore. It had the makings of an outstanding team."

Paul Davis, Jr., a one-time teammate of Mims, recalls the two grew up together. "He lived in the 500 block of Story and I lived in the 600 block. I remember Bill walking around some after weeks in traction and then they tried an operation. Maybe today they could have done something and it would have been a different story."

Davis is very involved in the annual Bill Mims game and no one is more aware of how much the game means to Bill.

"It used to be that the Booster Club treasurer tended to handling the tickets for the game and when he was finished as treasurer, he would hand over the mailing list to his successor. Despite the effort involved, the setup lacked continuity. Over the years the list had become outdated.

"About 10 years ago, I took it over and had the list computerized, adding and subtracting names, each year.

"It's a game that helps raise funds to pay for Bill's day to day care. Despite the passing years, it's still very important. The need is still there."

EDWIN NIXON, now assistant athletic director for Midland Schools, was track coach in 1953. "Bill ran the 440, the sprint relay and was on the mile relay team that was ranked among the top three in the state."

"I was refereeing the scrimmage the day Bill got hurt. I remember he was flat on his back after the tackle. He raised himself into a sitting position when the player hit him in the helmet with his helmet from behind. He was hurt, but he got up and walked toward the locker room and then collapsed."

Nixon recalls Mims was in traction for six weeks "In the hospital downtown. Yes, he got up and walked, but he had a numbness in his left arm and was in pain. I think it was diagnosed as a pinched nerve. They felt an operation would relieve the pressure. That's when he went to Fort Worth for surgery."

IN 1953, the life expectancy for a victim of a spinal injury such as Bill suffered was not long. But progress has been made.

"I wanted to recover absolutely. Everyone has some idea of total recovery," explains Bill, "But the doctor would say, 'Well, it's gonna be a long time.'

"I had feelings for a long time that it was open end, that is, there was hope of absolute recovery."

Mims worked out physically as best he could. "There were some depressing times. I improved physically over a period of time, but it was slow. Looking back over a five-year period you could see the progress.

"We (quadriplegics) are now one of the biggest group without a push like the telethon as they have for Easter Seals, polio, MS... The road to a productive life for the quadriplegics is matching the physical disability and occupation to match his strength. SCI (Spinal Cord Injury) takes in those who have suffered spinal cord injuries in car wrecks, diving, sports..."

Kent Waldrop, the TCU footballer, who in a game against Alabama suffered a paralyzing spinal injury similar to the one that felled Mims, "ramrods one foundation with the hope of making it the focal point for research. He visited here about five years ago, but the turnout was modest at best," says Mims.

Bill confirms that he walked after six weeks in traction, "But it was with two people helping me and, really, I could take only a few steps at a time. I had sensation of feeling in my legs, but there was a lot of pain."

The operation to relieve the pain with a bone transplant in the spinal cord didn't work. A blood clot developed and paralysis was complete.

FOR MIMS, following a rehabilitation period, it became time to get on with life. As a starter, Bill read a lot of books and then Joe Mims, Bill's father, suggested Odessa College.

It was the turning point for Bill, the point at which he began to make his contribution to the world around him.

Physically, he admits the right side is not as strong as the left side, "I still do some exercise, but I should do more. With the electric wheel chair, I have become more functional, but I do less with my arms."

Mims has a van with hand controls on it and "I can go a lot more places than I used to be able to go."

The van is something out of Rube Goldberg. It's amazing how many controls are at his finger tips or just an elbow nudge away.

"When I drive the van," says Clyde Gary, the former Midland Lee football player who is Bill's constant companion, "It's hard to get used to. Everything is so different. It takes a while, but for Bill it's like second nature."

"I may have better reaction time on braking than the ordinary vehicle operator since my hand is already on the brake," explains Bill.

Mims acquired the van, an old school bus, in 1977 and had it modified. The steering shaft was extended to make it more comfortably accessible, "but the biggest problem was the visibility. All the windows had to be raised. I'm big," points out Mims, "and the windows, front and side, had to be elevated so I could see. I finally found someone who could make the alterations, but had to go to San Antonio."

It was also necessary to modify the old bus to provide an elevator lift with special doors for his wheel chair on the side and an emergency rollout ramp at the back of the bus.

Bill uses the van three or four times a week to get around. "When that's not possible, I still use Midtran to get around town."

The longest trip he has taken was to Lubbock once. The big problem is getting in and out after he arrives at his destination.

DESPITE the crippling injury, Bill holds no grudge against the game of football. He still keeps up with it and until moving to a duplex located farther away from Memorial Stadium, was a regular at the Midland and Midland Lee games.

"I haven't been in a couple of years, but I plan to make Thursday's scrimmage. The last game I saw was when Lee played that east Texas school in Odessa," Mims says, "Before I moved, it was down the street. Now I keep up through the radio and TV has added a great dimension."

What would it have been like without the injury. "I used to think I might like to be a lawyer. I probably would have gone to the University of Texas, but I don't know whether I would have played football.

"I visited the campus for the Notre Dame-Texas game as a junior. A car met us and drove us to the campus. I met Coach Ed Price and visited the athletic dorm. I remember it was hot and Notre Dame wore pith helmets and they had air-conditioners on the sidelines. That was quite unusual for that time."

It was a Frank Leahy team, and, of course, the Irish won, "Several years later Leahy visited Midland and I met him through Joseph I. O'Neill."

And would Austin or some local community have been more attractive after graduation than West Texas?

"I suspect I'd have come back to Midland. The family roots here go back to the 1880s."

Like old teammate Roy Kimsey said, "I never knew anyone more competitive than Bill Mims"...then...or now.

Sixers gain 2-1 lead over Bucks

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Clemon Johnson, who steals the ball about as often as the Boston Celtics lose, made the theft of his career Saturday.

The steal triggered the Philadelphia 76ers to a 107-103 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks and 2-1 lead in a best-of-7 NBA Eastern Conference semifinal playoff series.

The 6-foot-10, 240-pound Johnson, who had only 23 steals during the season, stripped the usually sure-handed Terry Cummings of the ball and flipped it to teammate Julius Erving.

Erving, in turn, got the ball to Bobby Jones, whose off-balance shot with 22 seconds left went in as he was fouled. The free throw by Jones gave Philadelphia a 101-99 lead.

"Jones was supposed to be guarding Cummings," said Johnson. "But on transition I ended up with him. He (Cummings) had a gleam in his eye when he saw me covering him.

"He had me at a disadvantage because of his quickness," Johnson admitted. "I thought he would try and take me into the hole. I went for the steal. If I missed, I was going to foul him. But I batted it away."

Although he led the Bucks with 27 points and nine rebounds, Cummings also had his share of problems. After losing the ball to Johnson, he fumbled away an inbounds pass that led to a Maurice Cheeks basket that boosted the Sixers to a 105-99 lead with 11 seconds left.

Cummings blamed himself for the key turnover.

"As I started to turn, Clemon just came in and stole the ball away. I thought I really didn't have possession at the time," Cummings said.

The Bucks played without all-star guard Sidney Moncrief, who has been troubled by an injured heel.

The 76ers came back from a 13-point second period deficit to build a four point lead in the third period after a 19-2 rally. Philadelphia led until the final period, when the Bucks went ahead at 87-85.

After the Johnson steal and Jones' three-point play, Sedale Threatt converted two free throws to increase the Philadelphia lead to 103-99. Cheeks then hit two free throws to make the margin six.

Baskets by Paul Pressey and Cummings pulled the Bucks within 105-103, but Threatt collected two free throws with two seconds left to complete the scoring.

The teams meet in Game 4 here Monday night.

Rickey Pierce added 23 points for Milwaukee.

Minnesota's Kirby Puckett smashes his 11th home run of the season Saturday night — the second night in a row he has hit the first pitch of the game into the seats. In two years as a Twin, Puckett totaled four homers.

Expos cool down Astros in 10th

Associated Press

MONTREAL (AP) — Hubie Brooks tripled home Jim Wohlford from first base in the 10th inning to give the Montreal Expos a 7-6 victory over the Houston Astros in a baseball game played in near-freezing temperature Saturday.

Andre Dawson lead off the 10th with an infield single against Frank DiPino, 0-1, and was replaced by pinch-runner Wohlford after apparently hurting himself on the way to first base.

Jeff Reardon pitched one perfect inning for Montreal to raise his record to 3-2.

The Astros tied the game in the eighth inning when Glenn Davis singled off reliever Tim Burke to score Craig Reynolds from second base. The Expos had taken a 6-5 lead in the bottom of the seventh with three runs.

Jason Thompson drew a one-out walk from Julio Solano and Tim Wallach followed wilth a single and Vance Law drew another walk to load the bases.

Charlie Kerfeld replaced Salano and gave up a sacrifice fly to pinch-hitter Wayne Krenchicki. Andre Galarraga followed with a pinch-hit RBI single to tie the game and then Tim Raines put Montreal ahead with another single.

Montreal took the lead in the first inning when Houston starter Nolan Ryan hit Dawson and gave up a run-scoring double to Brooks.

The Astros came back with two in the second on Kevin Bass' RBI double and Ryan's run-scoring single. They added three more runs in the third, two of them on Davis' fifth homer of the year.

The Expos added a run in the third when Herm Winningham singled and scored on Thompson's double and another in the fifth when Wallach singled home Brooks from second.

National League

Braves 10, Phillies 4

PHILADELPHIA — Glenn Hubbard had three of Atlanta's nine doubles and drove in four runs and rookie shortstop Andres Thomas collected four hits, three of them doubles, as Atlanta beat Philadelphia.

Rick Mahler, 2-4, allowed 11 hits in 6 2-3 innings and picked up his first victory since opening day. He struck out six and walked five before giving way to Paul Assenmacher.

The nine doubles were one short of the Braves' team record and four shy of the major-league mark, by the 1931 St. Louis Cardinals. Shane Rawley, 3-2, was battered for six runs, five them earned, in two innings and Dave Stewart, the second of four Philadelphia relievers, gave up three runs in two innings.

The Braves took a 4-0 lead in the second when Bob Horner singled and scored on a double by Thomas. After Ozzie Virgil walked, Hubbard's double down the left field line drove in both runners. Hubbard later scored on Claudell Washington's grounder.

The Phillies scored twice in the bottom of the second on an RBI single by Milt Thompson and Rick Schu's sacrifice fly, but the Braves added two more in the top of the third on doubles by Dale Murphy and Horner and reliever Larry Andersen's wild pickoff attempt.

Mets 4, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Bobby Ojeda won his fourth game without a loss and Keith Hernandez hit a two-run homer as streaking New York beat Cincinnati, handing the Reds their seventh straight loss.

Hernandez singled, doubled and hit his first homer, a two-run shot in the seventh inning off John Denny, 1-3, to pace the Mets to their 13th victory in 14 games.

New York is 15-4, the best start in team history and the top record in the major leagues. Cincinnati has the worst record at 5-14.

Ojeda, obtained in an off-season trade with Boston, went seven innings, allowing six hits, striking out four, walking two and yielding only an unearned run. Jesse Orosco pitched the final two innings for his fifth save.

Cubs 6, Giants 5

SAN FRANCISCO — Terry Francona, playing his second game for the Chicago Cubs, capped a four-run ninth inning with a two-run single for a victory over San Francisco.

A two-run, pinch-hit homer by Jeffrey Leonard in a three-run seventh gave the Giants a 4-2 lead entering the ninth.

But Jody Davis opened the Cubs' ninth with a walk and Greg Minton, 1-2, replaced starter Scott Garrelts. Pinch-hitter Davey Lopes blooped a single to right-center and pinch-hitter Thad Bosley followed with a run scoring single to center that cut the Giants' lead to one run. Pinch-hitter Jerry Mumphrey's single to left tied the game.

Bosley was then thrown out at the plate on a fielder's-choice grounder by Shawon Dunston's fielder's-choice grounder. Dunston stole second before Francona, who was brought up from the minors this past week, came through with his game-winning blow that gave the Cubs a 6-4 lead.

Mattingly sacrifices for 9-4 Yankee win

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Don Mattingly tied a major-league record with three sacrifice flys, Rickey Henderson scored four runs and the New York Yankees took advantage of Texas wildness Saturday for a 9-4 victory over the Rangers.

The Yankees were outhit 14-8, but got 11 walks from six Texas pitchers. Errors by Rangers catcher Darrell Porter and third baseman Geno Petralli both allowed runs to score.

The game featured a matchup of rookie starting pitchers who had both enjoyed success this season, Bob Tewksbury of New York and Bobby Witt of Texas. Neither was sharp, although Tewksbury, 3-1, hung on for the victory, giving up four runs on 11 hits in six innings.

Witt, 2-1, lasted only 1 2-3 innings and yielded five runs on two hits while walking six.

Brewers 4, Angels 3

MILWAUKEE — Paul Molitor's 10th-inning sacrifice fly, in which California outfielders Brian Downing and Gary Pettis collided, gave the Milwaukee Brewers a victory.

Donnie Moore, 1-2, who failed to protect the Angels' two-run lead in the bottom of the ninth, gave up Ben Oglivie's leadoff single to right in the 10th. Rick Manning ran for Oglivie and Rob Deer bunted him to second.

Moore then walked Juan Castillo and Charlie Moore to load the bases and Molitor followed with a fly ball to left-center. Pettis, the center fielder, caught the ball and he and Downing slammed into each other and fell to the ground as Manning scored the winning run. They lay motionless on the field for a few moments, then were able to leave without assistance.

American League

Tigers 7, Twins 4

DETROIT — Home runs by Detroit's Darrell Evans, Pat Sheridan and Darnell Coles more than offset two Minnesota homers by Gary Gaetti and one by red-hot Kirby Puckett as the Tigers beat the Twins.

John Butcher, 0-3, pitched three perfect innings for the Twins before the Tigers started their power game.

Puckett, the hottest hitter in the major leagues, hit the first pitch of the game for a home run for the second straight night. He now leads the majors with 11 homers and has hit one in his last four games and six of his last seven.

Red Sox 4, A's 3

BOSTON — Jim Rice hit a two-run homer after Dwight Evans was deprived of one on an umpiring call in the third inning as Boston rallied over Oakland.

Reliever Sammy Stewart, who replaced starter Mike Brown after Oakland pulled into a 3-3 tie in the fifth, earned his second victory in three decisions with relief help. Bob Stanley came on in the ninth for his third save.

The Red Sox scored the tie-breking run off Oakland starter Chris Codiroli, 2-3, in the sixth when Don Baylor walked, raced to third on Marty Barrett's hit-and-run single through a vacated shortstop hole and scored as Steve Lyons grounded into a double play.

Indians 8, White Sox 7

CHICAGO — Pinch-hitter Joe Carter and Brett Butler delivered run-scoring singles in the eighth inning, lifting Cleveland over Chicago.

The triumph was the sixth in a row for Cleveland and went to reliever Rich Yett, 1-0, while reliever Bill Dawley, 0-1, took the loss.

With one out and Chicago leading 7-6 in the eighth, Mel Hall drew a walk off starter Joel Davis. Bill Dawley, 0-1, relieved and Andy Allanson walked before Carter singled to score Hall. Butler followed with another single to score Allanson with the go-ahead run.

Orioles 3, Royals 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Cal Ripken's opposite-field double scored Lee Lacy in the eighth inning and Ken Dixon pitched a four-hitter for eight innings as Baltimore defeated Kansas City.

Mariners 4, Blue Jays 2

TORONTO — Alvin Davis went 4-for-4, driving in a run, and Gorman Thomas knocked in two runs to lead Seattle over Toronto.

Mike Morgan, 2-2, making his fourth start and seventh appearance of the season, gave up eight hits, walked two and struck out three in seven innings. Pete Ladd, the Mariners' fourth pitcher, went the last 1 1-3 innings for his first save.

Toronto right-hander Jim Acker gave up three runs on six hits in his six-inning outing. He struck out five and walked none, but was tagged with his second loss against no wins as a result of three consecutive Seattle doubles in the fourth.

Jays still looking for Stieb's first win

TORONTO (AP) — One of these days, Dave Stieb will win his first game of the 1986 season.

Up until now, the Toronto Blue Jays pitcher has been perfect — perfectly winless in five starts.

"I've definitely got to put this behind me," Stieb said after suffering through the worst April of his career. "It's been a slow start."

Stieb, who led the American League with a 2.48 earned run average last season, was 0-3 with a 6.75 ERA heading into May.

Stieb's slow start comes after he struggled through the second half of the 1985 season, during which he went 5-8 mark and a 3.89 ERA. His continued problems have prompted questions about his health, particularly his right elbow.

IN THE last seven years, the hard-throwing Stieb has thrown 1,654 innings, including at least 260 in each of the past four seasons. Some wonder whether Stieb, 28, is becoming a victim of a power pitcher's biggest enemy — a tired arm.

"The muscle tends to stiffen up in the latter innings and I'm conscious of it," Stieb said, poking a finger into the area of concern. "But I try to keep stretching it out during the game. Right now, it's just something I've got to live with."

And right now, Toronto has to live with Stieb. The Blue Jays, the defending American League East champions, went 9-11 in April — bad enough for last place and the first time in three years that they have not had a winning record in the first month.

Stieb's troubles are yet another chapter in the life of one of baseball's most enigmatic players. He has a career record of 95-83, an ERA of around 3.20, and a hot temper — a quality that has led to momentary lapses of concentration and some questionable gestures directed at both his teammates and fans.

HE IS very intense on the mound and a five-time All-Star, yet many feel he has not gotten the full recognition he derserves despite going 16-8 with a 2.83 ERA in 1984 and 17-12 with a 3.04 in 1983.

Last year, Stieb wound up only 14-13 despite leading the league in ERA. His biggest chance for glory wound up in failure when the Kansas City Royals shelled him in a disappointing seventh-game loss in the AL playoffs, capping the Royals' comeback from a 3-1 deficit.

Despite his poor start this year, Stieb said he thinks his fortunes will soon change.

"I do feel it's all starting to come together," he said. "I've had much better control of the slider and I've had much better control, but I'm still making that one, key mistake."

IN HIS final outing of April against California, the Blue Jays gave Stieb a two-run lead in the third inning, but he left the game after six-plus innings with the score tied 3-3.

His downfall again was one sudden mistake, an 0-2 pitch that Angels rookie Wally Joyner hit for a home run.

"I've gotta waste a pitch in that situation," Stieb said. "I don't want to be even near the strike zone."

But opposing batters who have seen Stieb for awhile say they'd better take advantage of him while they can.

Mel Patton gave USC last 'Fastest Human'

Back in the days when a movie star could be known as America's Sweetheart, a home-run hitter as the Sultan of Swat, and a champion prizefighter as a Manassa Mauler, it was customary to hail a guy who won two races in a row in this country as the world's fastest human.

Usually, this was a guy who was an undergraduate at USC, probably white, a Californian and hand-timed.

Charley Paddock was the first. A sickly child whose family moved him to California from Texas to save his life, he became one of the most durable sprinters of all time, competing in three Olympics –1920, '24 and '28 – despite a running style that one critic dismissed as "a guy trying to get away from a biting dog."

But, those were hyperbolic times. Football players were Galloping Ghosts or Four Horsemen, after all, and a tennis player might be known as Le Crocodile.

But the last time USC had a "world's fastest human" was just after the war. This would be Melvin Emery Patton, Pell Mel to the poets of the press box of the day, a stylish runner who brought something new to the sprints – a finishing kick and a stomach so queasy that he frequently threw up at the finish of a race, if not the start.

"IT WAS a funny thing," Mel Patton was recalling the other day. "I never threw up after the 100 and I threw up after the 200 if the time had been 20.7 or less. My stomach seemed to know before the timer did. If I had run a 21-second race I was all right. Anything under that and I had to run under the stands right away."

Mel Patton became the logical successor to Charley Paddock one May afternoon in 1948 when he broke the world record for the 100 with a 9.3 clocking that was to stand for 13 years or until Frank Budd broke it with a 9.2 in 1961.

Setting a record has never been a guarantee of success in the Olympic Games. The Olympic Games have never been kind to record setters nor to world's fastest humans, for that matter. Frank Budd never got a medal of any kind and the record-holder who succeeded him, Harry Jerome, of Canada, managed only a bronze before he retired.

Charley Paddock, for all of his exploits under a clock, managed only a gold in the 100 in 1920. He got shuffled all the way back to fifth in that race in 1924 when Harold Abrahams, the runner who inspired the movie "Chariots of Fire," chased him clear out of the metal.

PADDOCK was not much more successful in his other specialty, the 200. He managed a second in it in 1920, and in 1924 he took his eye off the finish line long enough to look back and see where everyone was. Jackson Scholz, it so happened, was right there, and he shot past the world's fastest human at the wire. One gold and two silvers were not bad but were under-achievements for a man who was fifths of a second – there were no tenths in times then – better than his opposition in non-Olympic years.

It was not really an anomaly, it was a pattern. In the 1960s, Jim Ryun was the greatest miler the world had ever seen and had the times to prove it. But he was able to stagger only to a silver medal in the rarefied air of Mexico City and did a belly flop on the track at Munich in 1972 in a heat. In 1960, in Rome, Ray Norton was considered as sure a thing as a death scene in an opera when he showed up for the sprints with the best times anyone had run that year. Ray not only finished dead last in both the 100 and 200, he was guilty of a bad baton pass in the relay. That caused his otherwise victorious team, which, by the way, included Frank Budd, to be disqualified.

It seemed for a time in London in 1948 as if Mel Patton was going to step into the same hole and disappear. He had finished second in the trials to the venerable Barney Ewell – he was 31 –in the 100, but nobody took too much notice. The idea in the trials, of course, is to make the boat, not the tape. But when he finished a trailing fifth in the finals at Wembley, a pall seemed to settle over his supporters.

In point of fact, Mel's poor performance not only cost him the gold, it also cost Barney Ewell. Ewell was so worried about the competition from Patton that he concentrated all his energies in being sure he defeated Mel. He did. But when he threw his hands up in exultation, he discovered that the hurdler, Harrison Dillard, in this race on a pass, had nosed him out in the outside lane. The jinx seemed to be holding fast. But, then, Patton, changing his strategy at the last minute to "kick" 20 yards sooner than he normally did, ran past Ewell to win the 200 and get his gold medal.

IT SEEMED for a while as if it was a good thing he did. In his last chance for a gold, the relay, the British officials at first ruled that the Americans had passed the baton outside the passing zone. A check of the films proved otherwise but it was months before the reinstated Americans got their gold medals. So, it may be just as well that the world's fastest human sobriquet has been retired, along with the Manassa Maulers and Galloping Ghosts.

No one calls Carl Lewis the world's fastest human, even though he undoubtedly is. But what's gone largely is the inspiration for it. Collegiate track, which was the spawning ground for world's fastest humans, has fallen into somewhat disrepair at USC and the dual meet, once the bread and butter of the track program, has all but disappeared. They hope to begin to mend that Saturday (May 3) when the first collegiate track meet of any kind since 1974 is held at the Coliseum, a dual meet between USC and UCLA.

"The dual meet was where you honed your skills and the team atmosphere was important to get the adrenaline pumping," recalls Patton. "It was really what track and field was all about. I got some of my best performances in dual meets. We would draw 47,000 people in the Coliseum."

There will be far fewer than that in the revival of the USC-UCLA dual meet competition in the Coliseum Saturday but Patton, for one, is glad to see the concept restored. Why not? Maybe, there's a world's fastest human out there. If so, if he has the speed for it, we have the adjectives. Like dual meets, they can be dusted off and reused.

Andretti sets early pace for Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Practice for the Indianapolis 500 got underway at a fast but still unhurried pace Saturday, and Mario Andretti was the quickest of only 13 drivers who took laps on the 2½-mile track.

It was the fewest drivers on the track for an opening day of practice at Indianapolis since 1980, when just eight made their initial appearances.

Bobby Rahal, Andretti's son Michael and three-time winner Johnny Rutherford also were among the quickest drivers during Saturday's first session of testing for the May 25 race.

A year ago, Dick Simon led 16 drivers on the track, and his speed of 209.3 mph was the fastest first-day practice speed in Indy history. But that record was broken during the final minutes of practice Saturday when the elder Andretti steadily improved his speed from just over 208 mph to a top lap of 210.329. Minutes earlier, Michael had increased his best lap from just over 205 mph to 210.133.

Rahal, the fastest on the first day of practice two years ago, had a lap Saturday at 209.399, and Rutherford improved his best speed to 207.996.

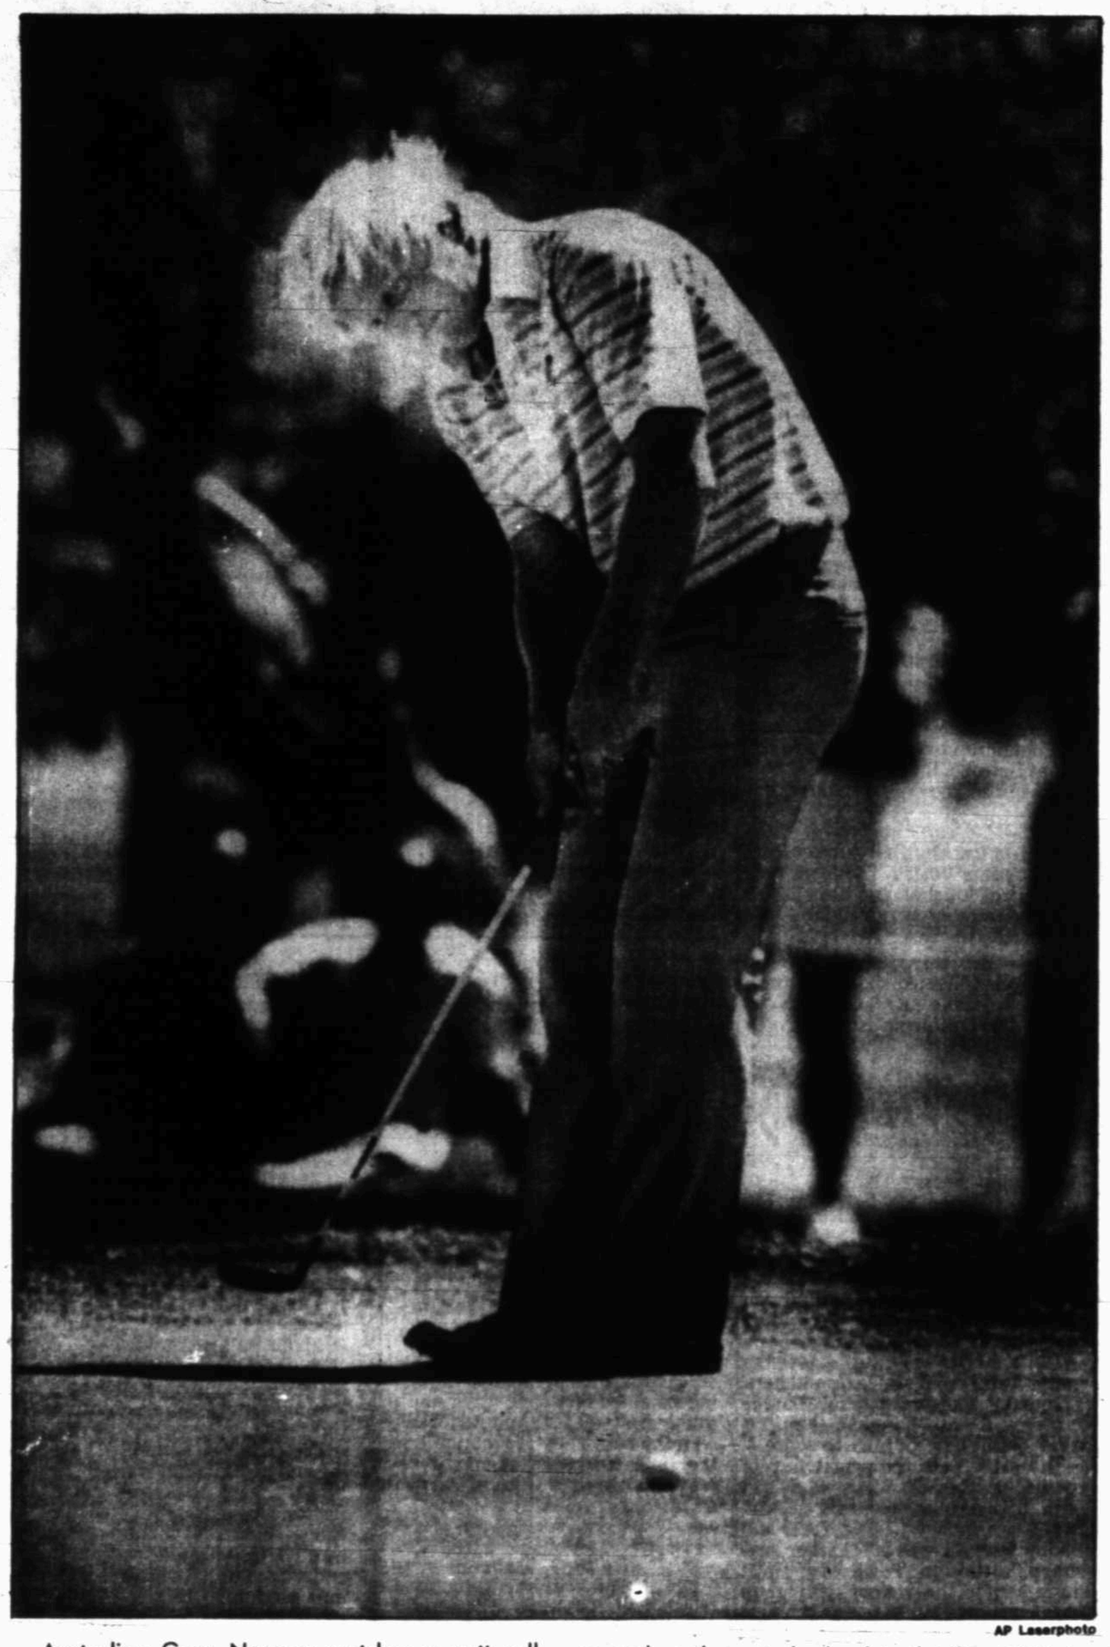

Daily practice will continue through Friday as some 40 drivers, including seven former winners and eight rookies, try to build speed for next Saturday's first of four days of qualifications. Pole-position winner Pancho Carter set a four-lap record at 212.583 mph last year.

Practice began Saturday at mid-afternoon following opening ceremonies that included remarks by retired Air Force Gen. Chuck Yeager, who will drive the pace car starting the race.

The first driver on the track was veteran Chip Ganassi, whose car was positioned in the pits two hours before Chief Steward Tom Binford signalled the green light to start practice.

"We had a good head start," Ganassi said of his early jump. "You never know. It might rain the rest of the week, and then what's everybody going to do?

"We haven't had much time with the car at all, so we thought we'd bring it out. We didn't necessarily want to be the first car on the track, but we wanted to be out there and be one of the first to get some work done," Ganassi said.

Norman eagles way into lead

Las Vegas Golf

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Australian Greg Norman, staked to a three-shot lead by his dramatic eagle on the 18th hole Saturday, had a $207,000 prize in his sights going into the final round of the richest golf tournament on the PGA Tour.

"I'm playing well, my confidence is up and I'm looking forward to a successful finish," Norman said after the closing eagle finished off a no-bogey, 8-under-par 64 Saturday.

His position atop the standings came despite what Norman said has been diagnosed as a case of walking pneumonia.

"I've had it for about a year, they said. I'm taking medication for it, but the medicine makes me lightheaded. So I've cut back to some half-strength medication this week.

"I'm taking two weeks off after this tournament and I'm going to see a doctor in Houston and see if we can't get it cleared up," Norman said.

NORMAN COMPLETED 72 holes of the five-day, 90-hole Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational in 268, 20 strokes under par.

"It was just one of those days when I played well, putted well and drove the ball extremely well," Norman, the white-haired man known as "the Great White Shark," said.

His driving was little less than spectacular. He hit all the par-5s in two, all with irons for his second shots.

On the 18th, his drive covered 340 yards. A 3-iron second shot stopped 15-18 feet from the cup and he rapped it in for the eagle that gave him a big lead going into the final round of the chase for the winner's share of $207,000 from the total purse of $1,150,000.

"I'm playing well and my confidence is up," said Norman, who has scored two eagles, 26 birdies and 10 bogeys for the week. His two rounds at Las Vegas Country Club, the site of the final round, have been a 63 and a 64.

His dramatic finish opened up some daylight in a field that was closely bunched most of the hot, windy day. At one time or another, nine men — Norman, Bob Lohr, Donnie Hammond, Larry Nelson, Bob Tway, Andy Bean, Fred Couples, Dan Pohl and Jim Colbert — all led or shared the lead.

None could keep up with Norman.

Pohl came the closest, running off one string of three consecutive birdies and avoiding a bogey in his round of 66 that put him second alone at 271.

BOB TWAY, a winner at San Diego earlier this year, rookie Dave Rummells and Nelson were next at 272, 16 under par. Tway had a 68, Rummells and Nelson 69.

Colbert followed at 69-273.

The big group at 274, six shots back with 18 holes to go, included Couples, Bean, Wayne Levi, Mike Hulbert and Steve Pate, who closed up with a 65. Couples shot 67, Hulbert and Levi 68 and Bean 69.

Donnie Hammond, who could collect a $250,000 bonus if he coupled a victory here with the Bob Hope Classic title he won earlier in the season, slipped out of the lead with a 73 and was seven off the pace at 275. Tom Watson birdied the first three holes he played, but matched par the rest of the way and finished with a 69 that left him at 276, eight off the pace.

Norman, a runner-up in the Masters and Heritage in his last two starts, two-putted for birdie on the two front-side par-5s, and made 15-18 foot birdie putts on the second and fourth.

He moved among the leaders with a 15-footer on the 12th, took the lead with a 9-iron to four feet on the 13th, then pulled away with the closing eagle.

Boyd-Campbell lead MCC invite

From Staff Reports

Craig Campbell and C.E. Boyd led the pack with a 131 total after two rounds of the three-round Midland Country Club Invitational.

On Saturday, Boyd-Campbell fired a 64 to take the lead by themselves after settling for a three-way tie after the first round. Conway Jordan and Frank Johnson are three strokes off the pace after carding consecutive 67s.

On Friday, Ken Sewell aced hole No. 16, a 170-yard par three. Sewell was using a seven-iron in recording his third ace. It was witnessed by Rudy Kuzmich, Milton Nickel and Craig Adams.

Today's round will conclude the 54-hole tournament.

Littler uses 66 to own five-shot lead on pack

Seniors Golf

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A confident Gene Littler tamed the "tricky" Four Hills Country Club course with a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to take a five-shot lead after two rounds of the $250,000 Sunwest Bank-Charley Pride Senior Golf Classic.

Littler, who had to complete his first round early Saturday after a rain and lightning storm forced suspension of Friday's first round, was a picture of constant momentum on the 6,722-yard course.

Littler birdied two of the last three holes remaining in his first round, then returned to post seven birdies against just one bogey in the second round.

Littler's 36-hole total of 131 — 13-under-par — gave him a five-shot cushion over Don January heading into Sunday's final 18 holes.

January, who at one point was seven under for the day, finished bogey-bogey for a round of 67 and a 136 total.

Littler wrested the first-round lead from early pacesetter Al Balding with back-to-back birdies on two of the three holes he had left to play in the first round early Saturday.

Littler, who teamed with January last week to win the $500,000 Legends of Golf event at Austin, Texas, then birdied three of the first five holes in the second round. January got within one shot of the lead when he birdied the par-5 15th, but dropped back with the two closing bogeys.

Lefty George Lanning and Gary Player were eight shots back. Lanning had a 69 Saturday and Player a 70. Balding, who opened with a 67 in search of his first PGA win in 29 years, had a second-round 73.

"I'm putting well and I feel confident," said Littler, whose only bogey came when he hit a 9-iron into the trap on the par-3 sixth hole.

Despite his imposing lead, Littler felt he would need another sub-par round on Sunday.

"This is a tricky little course and five shots is not a walk in the park," he said. "I won't be able to play safe tomorrow."

No one in the field has hit the ball better than Rodriguez, but the putting slump that has plagued him all year remained intact.

"Whoever wins can thank me," said Rodriguez, who missed a five-footer for birdie on No. 3 and a four-footer for birdie on the par-4 18th.

"I'm playing the best golf of my life right now, but I can't beat anybody with the putter," Rodriguez said.

Charles, in his first year on the Senior Tour, birdied the first two holes Saturday to remain in contention for his first PGA victory since 1974, when he captured the Greater Greensboro Open.

Question Box

By RAY CORIO
N.Y. Times News Service

QUESTION: An article on Bob Feller last month projected what his career pitching statistics might have been had he not missed three years because of World War II. Didn't Ted Williams miss more time, and if so, what would his projected career statistics look like?

Williams missed all of the 1943, 1944 and 1945 seasons because of World War II and a hefty chunk of the 1952 and 1953 seasons because of the Korean War. So his major league career from 1939 through 1960 really consisted of only 17 seasons that were not interrupted by military commitments. On the basis of what he did in those 17 years, an average Williams season would have been the following: 136 games played, 447 official times at bat, 154 hits, 117 walks, 30 home runs, 106 runs batted in and 105 scored, plus a batting average of .344, which matches his career average and is the sixth-best in major league history.

Projecting that 17-season average over the 22 years he was with the Boston Red Sox, his only team, would have advanced Williams significantly in several career categories. For example, an average of 154 hits over 22 seasons would have given Williams 3,388 hits instead of the 2,292 he collected and would have moved him from 47th place to eighth place on the career list. Similarly, his home run standing would have risen from ninth place, where he is tied with Willie McCovey at 521, to third place at 660, where he would have been tied with McCovey's former Giant teammate, Willie Mays (who missed almost two years during the Korean War). As for extra-base hits, Williams's projected total of 1,430 (660 homers, 682 doubles and 88 triples) would have moved him from 10th place to second place, only 47 short of Henry Aaron's record.

In three categories, however, Williams would have become the major league leader. They are runs scored, where his projected total of 2,310 would have eclipsed Ty Cobb's by 65 runs; runs batted in, where Williams's 2,332 would have been 35 more than Aaron; and walks, where Williams's 22-year total of 2,574 would have been an astounding 518 more than Babe Ruth accumulated in a 22-year career never interrupted by war.

QUESTION: When Darrell Evans of the Detroit Tigers hit 40 home runs last season, and at 38 became the oldest player to lead the American League in home runs, whose achievement did he surpass?

Evans did something that had not been accomplished in 54 years, going back to when Babe Ruth, at age 36, hit 46 home runs for the 1931 Yankees and tied his teammate Lou Gehrig for the American League home run title. If Evans, who turns 39 on May 26, tops the league again this season, he will still fall short of being the oldest player ever to lead a league in homers: Cy Williams of the Philadelphia Phillies was 39 years and 286 days old when he and Hack Wilson of the Chicago Cubs shared the National League leadership in 1927 with 30 homers apiece.

QUESTION: Can a starting pitcher in an American League game be used as a pinch-hitter or pinch-runner during the game?

He can, but only for the designated hitter, and once he does so, his team can no longer use a designated hitter for the rest of the game. The pitcher or his relievers or subsequent pinch-hitters must bat instead of a designated hitter, just as happens in every game in the National League.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC has campus 'Dead Week'

By H.A. TUCK

This is the week known on college campuses as "Dead Week," the week prior to final exams. It's also the week when lab finals are given.

Despite that, there's quite a lot scheduled around the campus this week.

Art, photography, and architecture students present their annual Spring Student Art Show this week. The show opens in McCormick Gallery on Monday, with a reception for the students scheduled Tuesday from 7-9 p.m. This exhibition remains up only for seven days, so don't delay in coming out to see it.

Gallery hours for this show are 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday, and 1-5 p.m. next Sunday. This is the final show until next fall, so now is the time to applaud art instructor Warren Taylor, who served as chairman of the exhibits committee.

Members of the art department faculty also deserve credit for their assistance in getting the exhibits up and down.

Chaparral Center is the site for a String Festival at 7 p.m. Monday.

It's an annual event put on by the Midland Independent School District to showcase the talents of its various stringed-instrument students.

There's no charge for this and the public is welcome to attend.

EDUCATION

Congratulations go to Dr. Weldon Horton, director of the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center, who was honored with a special commendation last week by the Midland City Council.

Horton served on a special committee as part of the city's Centennial observance, charged with preservation of the city's records.

Horton, who is a specialist in preservation of printed works, helped put all the city's records into uniform bindings so they can be available for future generations. After a century, some of the paper was in bad shape...but it was interesting to read some of the old council minutes relative to the early days of the community.

Shooting for its third straight state title, the Midland College Respiratory Therapy Team won first place in the regional contest April 22 in Lubbock. The second-year RT students comprising the Midland College team were Gary Elliott, Peggy Gray and Bea Ayers.

Speaking of honors, several Midland College athletes have been sacking up some recently.

Sophomore basketball star Ricky Grace, who broke some of Spud Webb's records this season, was named as a first team NJCAA All-American. He's the fifth in the past six years for coach Jerry Stone: Charles Johnson, 1981; Puntus Wilson, 1982; Spud Webb, 1983; and Tevin Binns, 1985, were the others.

Ricky not only broke some records...but his nose! Seems Ricky put his nose up against Lavell Eackels' elbow during the recent Region V-Region XIV All-Star game in Waco. Eackels is the super player from San Jacinto College who helped break Midland's collective heart in the first round NJCAA tournament game in Fort Worth, which San Jacinto won on its way to an undefeated season and the NJCAA title. But Ricky got some revenge as he led the Jerry Stone-coached Region V Stars to an overtime victory in Waco and garnered his second straight All-Star MVP award!

And MC tennis players sacked up all kinds of honors at the Region V tennis tournament at Odessa. The women's team, ranked #1 in the nation, won their regional title by taking four singles and three doubles titles.

And the #3 ranked Chaparral men upset McLennan, the nation's #1 ranked men's team, to win the regional title. The Chaps won four singles titles and a double title to qualify for the men's national tourney at Tyler later this month. That was a nice surprise for coach Joe Williams, who was concerned whether they could even take second place to qualify for the nationals.

The women will be staying home for their shot at the NJCAA title, as Midland College hosts the national women's tournament May 18-24.

Larry Griffin wrote a dramatic monologue for his Poetry Writing class and now has had it accepted for publication in Impetus, which is published in Stow, Ohio.

The poem is entitled "The Veteran Brings His Warbride Home."

Go for it...

People all have their dreams of glory.

Digital has a suggestion to make.

If you have one—go for it now.

Join a company that knows how to make dreams come true.

Yours and the customer's.

Your dream? We have to assume it's success. And you know that it can be achieved by helping the customer realize a long-held fantasy that someday someone will introduce a new spirit of electronic cooperation into the computer room.

Customers are tired — and just a little angry. They don't want to hear about what won't work with what.

They've had it with promises of a brave new world of electronic unity that break down somewhere around the desktop.

Digital has it now. The industry's dream of complete compatibility.

Other companies might claim to have it, but Digital has the broadest range of products in the industry with the same architecture. Our VAX computers represent the industry's only fully compatible, integrated and networked family of computers spanning from individual workstations up to the powerful VAX 8800 — all with the same VMS operating system.

Wouldn't you rather be with us — than agains: us?

To service both existing and new customer bases due to growth in this area, we're looking for talented, knowledgeable senior-level professionals with a proven track record and:

- 4 + years direct sales experience in computers and/or computer related products
- large account management expertise and strong communication skills
- specific experience in 1 or more of the following applications: Government, Manufacturing, MIS, Laboratories, Installed base, Engineering & Commercial. Ideal experience would be systems hardware sales/marketing.

now.

U.S. Citizenship is required for some positions.

The salaries, commensurate with experience, and benefits are what it takes to attract the best people in this highly competitive market.

If you want to go for it now... rush your resume, indicating reference #CW-MID, to Claudette Ward, Professional Employment, Dept. 0504-3449, Digital Equipment Corporation, 12100 Ford Road, Suite #200, Dallas, TX 75234-7288.

We are an affirmative action employer.

Digital and you... now.

Today, the Audi 5000S becomes even easier to handle. $298 a month*.

The Audi 5000S sedan's ability to negotiate roadways crisply and efficiently is certainly one reason to admire it. That you can negotiate a lease of just $298 a month on this fine European luxury sedan is all the more reason to acquire it.

Performance aside, this 1986 Audi 5000S sedan comes with many standard features that increase comfort without altering the lease price. Electronic climate control, cruise control, power windows and door locks, AM/FM stereo cassette, and automatic transmission make this limited time offer a tempting invitation to unlimited driving pleasure.

A closer look will prove what words cannot. Come in for a test drive and complete lease details. Program ends May 31, 1986. And drive away in an Audi 5000S sedan at a lease price that is, well, easy to handle.

*This offer is available only from a participating Audi Leasing dealer through May 31, 1986 as a 60-month, closed-end lease. No purchase option. No down payment is required. First month $298 payment and $300 security deposit are required in advance. Monthly payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price and special lease terms exteded by VCI Leasing. Total lease payments $17,880.00 plus 10¢ per-mile over 75,000. Registration, local fees, tax, options additional.

Woodhill, located at 3000 N. Garfield, was one of the first suburban office buildings completed in Midland. With the recent suburban office boom, Woodhill has maintained its distinctiveness by virtue of its on-site health club for office tenants.

Woodhill was originally a project of the Clark brothers, developers from Dallas, said property manager Joan Ramey. The structure, which was modeled after a building of the same name located near a major medical complex in Dallas, was intended for use as medical condominiums. The concept had

Realtors' services often misunderstood by public

By MAY ADELAIDE BARBER

The service that a Realtor performs in the process of buying or selling property is often misunderstood by the People involved in the buying and selling. Far from being a casual occupation which anyone can enter, it requires a minimum of 12 college hours of training just to sit for the license exmanination. Further training is required each year for several years to renew the Realtor's license. The standards set by the National Association of Realtors are quite stringent and are vigorously enforced.

Technically speaking, a Realtor is usually employed by someone wishing to sell a specific property. The potential seller and the Realtor enter into an agreement stating the terms under which the property owner will sell, the time limit of the agreement and the compensation to be paid to the Realtor when the property is sold. It is then the job of the Realtor to do everything possible to market that property.

The process of marketing a particular property can include many strategies such as newspaper advertising, special showings to local Realtors, weekend open houses and of course placing information about the property in the Realtor's multiple listing service. Information placed in the M.L.S. enables any Realtor in Midland who is a member of the multiple listing service to show and possibly sell the property. In effect, by signing a listing agreement with a Midland Realtor, the property owner is employing over 300 Realtors to sell his or her property.

Although the Realtor who lists the property for sale, as well as all the other Realtors who may show the property, are employees of the property owner, they also have a strong and clearly defined obligation to work fairly and in the best interests of any potential buyer. The obligations to both buyers and sellers as well as to other Realtors are stated in the Realtors' "Code of Ethics;; and strongly enforced.

The M.L.S. as it is set up in Midland, not only provides a valuable selling tool to the seller, it also is a great time-saver for the potential buyer. Instead of picking out interesting properties and calling all the different real estate offices which have them listed, a buyer may find one Realtor whom he or she likes and has confidence in to do the basic searching for properties to see. If a buyer gives the same criteria as to price of property, size and general location, to three competant Realtors, they will probably come up with three similar lists of property.

A large part of any Realtor's job is not only to show available property to potential buyers, but to handle the increasingly volumnous and complicated paperwork. The buyers' offer to purchase must be written to express exactly what the buyer intends. When a contract is agreed upon, then the proper papers must go to all parties involved, to the abstract company or closing agent and to the lending institution, if one is involved. There is also a great deal of follow-up for a Realtor to see that any contract goes smoothly. Frequently there are unexpected delays or minor problems which must be handled in order to bring the contract to a successful closing.

It is the marketing of the property, the careful matching of buyer and property and the successful handling of a multitude of details that constitutes the Realtor's job.

WOODHILL

been tested with great success in Dallas. Ms. Ramey said the developers thought it was time for such a project in Midland.

However, "It just didn't go over in Midland," Ms. Ramey said, noting local resistance to the condominium concept. Thus, before construction was completed Clark brothers sold the building in October 1980 to some local business men, Pomeroy Smith, Joseph I. O'Neill, Darol Ramey and Toby Hilliard. (Since that time Hilliard has moved away from Midland.)

As a Realtor, Ms. Ramey was involved in the transaction and suggested marketing it as regular office space to be leased, not as medical condominiums for sale. She said that within one month the building had been totally pre-leased. Construction was completed in May 1981.

Though a medical condominium project may not have been suitable for Midland, Texas in the early 1980's, the tenants have found that the structure is fit for more than work.

The sandy-colored brick structure with 47,626 square feet of usable space has a health club on the ground floor. Without leaving the office building, tenants enjoy a well-equipped weight room, a racquetball court, whirlpool and complete locker rooms.

These are available 24 hours a day and the tenants' families have access to the facilities after office hours and on weekends.

Ms. Ramey said that periodically special classes are offered in the health club. Aerobics classes, expectant mothers' classes and instruction for use of the weight equipment have all be favorite topics.

Though tenants enjoy the health club, the building's primary use is office space. 38,000 square feet are dedicated to office space. Ms. Ramey said 7,000 square feet is currently available for lease.

Because the building was originally planned for medical use, it is plumbed so that it can accommodate dentists and physicians offices. Though some dentist offices are located in the building, the tenant list does not stop there. Many oil and gas professionals, accountants and other professionals office at Woodhill.

Wood planking is used to highlight both the interior and exterior of the building. At the south entrance the sandy-colored brick structure has a drive-through canopy area made of wood planking. This and a number of other entrances have ramps for wheel chair access. To the architect's credit, the ramps are an intrinsic part of the design not an apparent after thought.

Inside the lobby areas are done in earth tones, featuring brick-like tile and wood-planked walls.

Ms. Ramey explained that the building is very versatile. No interior walls are weight-bearing, she said. That means the build-out could be designed solely around the tenants' needs.

The office space has many special touches. Fabric walls and wallpaper add to the aesthetics of the decor, while magnetic and cork walls are particularly practical.

A large conference room is available to all Woodhill tenants.

Below the two floors of office and health club space is a basement dedicated to garage parking and storage. Though the 117 surface-level parking spaces are free of charge, garage parking is $35/month. The storage space is provided without additional charge, and Ms. Ramey said, it is ideal for old records and samples.

Heating and air conditioning is available seven days a week and can be independently controlled by each tenant.

Retirees face many options

By The Associated Press

Where do retirees retire to?

One out of four will move after retirement, according to the national average. But of those who move, a majority will stay in the same area, says the Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Service.

The choices available after retirement include:

— Stay where you are.

— Sell your home and pocket the tax-free profit (if either spouse is over 55).

— Buy a smaller, more convenient house.

Comfort plus!

Fascinating Facts

By Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

A piece of Texas history is displayed right here in Midland. The Alamo Bell, made for Mission San Antonio, which later became the Alamo, can be seen at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

A limited edition book, "The Alamo Mission Bell," by J. Evetts Haley generated money to pay off the notes of five Midlanders who bought the bell from a Tennessee collector. They couldn't imagine the bell being anywhere but in Texas.

It wasn't there the day the Alamo fell, but still the bell symbolizes the spirit and freedom of Texas' early settlers.

This is Texas' 150th birthday and Sanitary Plumbing's 41st. We are happy to be a part of a great city in a great state that we look forward to serving for many more years to come.

Automation means more than just "computers"

"An office should focus around people, not machines. Computers, the computer industry notwithstanding, are simply tools . . . a business should create an environment that accommodates, but doesn't worship, these new tools."

This comment by George Wilmot, Knoll International Vice President of Office Automation and Resources, hits on an area of major concern for today's CEO: Is the human element of the work force being overlooked in the rush toward office automation?

Office work areas and the furniture and systems of which they are composed play a key role in creating an accommodating setting for the work force, an environment which encourages productivity by supporting its people.

When budgeting for the new technology, wise corporate planners consider the supporting furniture and accessories — and the professionals to recommend them — as important line items.

Studies have identified key trouble spots resulting from the introduction of automated equipment in today's offices. They include: Insufficient desktop space, incorrect keyboard height, chair discomfort, noisy equipment, poor cable management, excessive printer noise, limited access to printer and VDT glare.

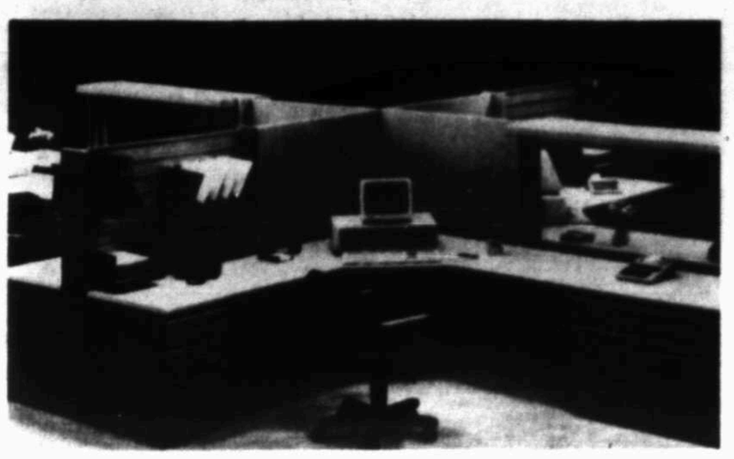

Knoll, one of the leaders in the design and manufacture of products for the general office, solves many of these problems through its Hannah Desk System: A comprehensive, innovative system comprised of "building block" components which are interchangeable, so that the needs of the individual can be accommodated within the framework of the entire organization.

Key ingredients of this system are:

- Three wire management alternatives — track, spine and channel;
- Individually adjustable task/ambient lights;
- Open storage above the desk;
- Tackable screens to accommodate individual privacy.

A variety of problem solvers are also available to help your office run more efficiently. These include the ergonomically designed chair, acoustical closets, articulated (they move in and out and up and down) keyboards, and movable walls that extend to the ceiling, to offer greater privacy and reduce noise.

When planning to automate, be certain to consult a computer expert, but don't forget that an experienced space planner, interior design specialist, or architect can help you find the best answers to your people and equipment needs. He or she should know about the various automated resources available through Knoll and the leading office systems designers. By using both kinds of experts together, you can help ensure that your new office works for, not against, you.

Flexibility is the key when meeting the needs of today's automated offices as this desk system demonstrates.

Your money's worth in seating

By SUSAN FOUNTAIN

Stop looking if you're traditional. But keep reading if you want your money's worth in selecting any style in upholstery.

Randy Culler, ASFD, director of spare, random, original and supremely comfortable contemporary upholstery designs for Carson's of High Point, offers 12 tips for getting your money's worth.

"Upholstery is historically the great hidden purchase," says Culler. "The average consumer (that's you and me) can't see underneath or inside most chairs and sofas. And the average retail floor person isn't going to have many more answers than we do."

Culler at least gives us the right questions to ask, and subtle hints to look for, ourselves, when making an investment in upholstery.

Most people look for style, comfort and value, in that order, according to dealer and manufacturer research.

Interestingly enough, price is not the first priority. How many of us, after all, can actually afford what we buy? If we love it, and it does a job for us, we'll find a way to pay—just as with homes and cars and clothes. Isn't that so?

"Style is the first thing to hit your eye," says Culler. "Comfort is secondary—just as important as eye appeal, however." Culler lists "your perceived value of quality" next. But, how do we judge quality by eye alone? We can, he says, though also offers several questions to ask, and what answers to demand, before making a final decision.

First he advises that we examine our uses of seating—whether dining room, occasional, or lazy, loafy sink-in styles.

1. If seating is going to suffer innocent abuses of children and pets—look for a sturdy fabric such as Herculon®, which wears like a piece of iron.

2. If, on the other hand, you're looking for some pure uptown chic, you can indulge in something such as 100 percent cottons. "But," Culler cautions, "if your kids are going to be all over the furniture the fabric will suffer in time."

Tailoring is important, and the designer assures us the average person can pick up flaws very quickly.

3. Look for consistent tailoring, such as patterns matching and right and left arms identical.

Tailoring is important, and the designer assures us the average person can pick up flaws very quickly.

Solid American red oak dining room offers beveled bronze glass in the china, a dining table with touch lock gear that makes it possible to extend with one simple gesture and noble high-back steam-bent chairs.

If fabric is not folded correctly, we will see what, in the industry, is called "cat tracks."

Construction counts. If the store personnel can't tell you, and you can't see for yourself, ask these questions:

4. Are the joints double-doweled?

5. Is the chair or sofa frame made of at least five-quarter hardwood, such as maple or oak?

6. Is the wood kiln-dried?

The unseen innards—or in the vernacular, "fill"—contribute not only to style, but to comfort and longevity. A "better ride" comes from more springs per square inch, says Culler.

7. Ask not only how many springs per foot of sofa, for example, but also whether or not they are tie-wired. (His sofas use approximately 26 springs per 70-inch sofa.)

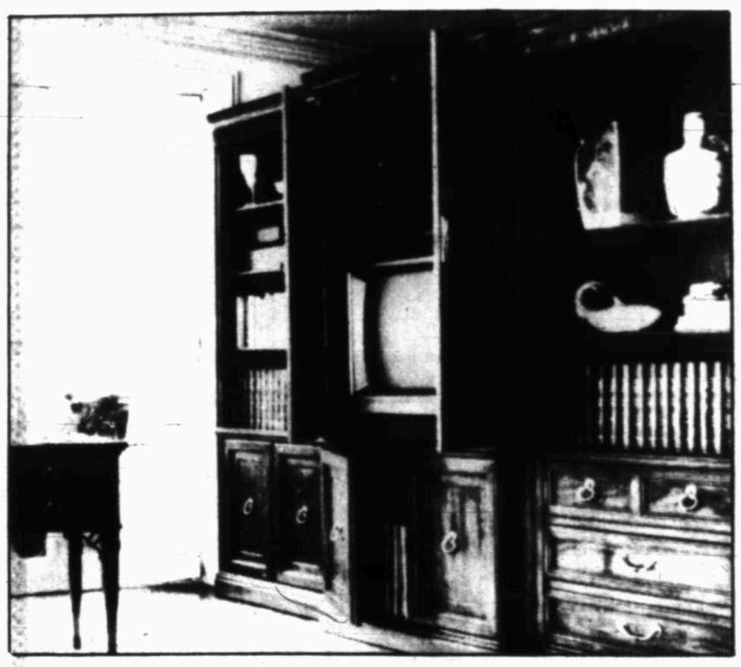

8. Are the backs and arms of the piece padded (with foam), giving them a soft look? It's better for long-term comfort.

9. What's inside counts, he says, recommending a wrapped foam, preferrably Fortrel® vs. Dacron® for less sag and longer wear.

10. Finally, we are advised to trust the furniture dealer, as well as the furniture brand name. Culler cautions against buying "sale" upholstery from unknown sources.

"There is a great industry in this country among 'cottage workers,' often small time operations out of basements and garages. While this is part of the charming folklore of the American upholstery industry, the most dependable return on your investment is through a retailer with a known local reputation, who carries established brand names."

Simply made to order for hoarding

Elegant and efficient include this "Living Wall," equipped for hoarding books, showcasing personal treasures and accommodating sophisticated electronics, such as stereo sound systems and television.

With increasing collecting in decreasing spaces, the common "bookshelf" has evolved into an uncommon center for storage, show, TV-viewing and sound systems.

No longer for the exclusive and luxurious assignment of favorite reading, wall "systems" now serve all functions for storing, hoarding, cheerfully containing clutter, camouflaging extravagant electronics and, in general, bringing order out of chaos—in the most fashionable new ways.

Says interior design advisor Francis Gray, "A home without a wall system is like a garage without a car—open to unspeakable abuse of space, an invitation to disorder and general mess."

Solutions to storage problems exist in abundance, she insists—modular units that divide or multiply to cover all or part of a wall, frame windows, doorways or mantles, or define space, such as with free-standing shelving.

But none, in Gray's view, is so satisfying as "multiple furniture units, styled with all the fashion, plus flexibility, to become an integral part of your home's architecture, rather than appear as a mere 'after-thought.'"

"Furniture systems" are a cut above the amusing, genuinely economical piles of lumber on bricks, or orange crates, or ingenious take-away suspension pole-and-shelf packages. And they are a "much longer-term investment than custom built-ins, and certainly more mobile," says Gray.

Finally, most of the more contemporary modular solutions to problem storage, although efficient, lack the classical detailing of "a beautifully defined piece of furniture."

Although the initial investment can be considerable, "furniture systems," versus bookshelves, are in the long run more adaptable to moving, to changing decor, and to mixing and matching various period stylings, including antiques.

They provide a work-and-hobby "heart" for the home or office, anchoring collections, libraries, files and even electronics in a central theme area "that dignifies, without dominating, a room."

Such is Sligh's comprehensive "Living Wall"—a majestic eight-unit storage and display center, available in either mahogany or cherry solids. Designed by David Warren, ASFD, the "Living Wall" includes end, center, corner, door and drawer units, all fully wired for lighting, sound and television, plus a mirrored bar.

With fidelity to custom details, the design tends to traditional—but with neo-traditional functions. A choice of wood door fronts conceals clutter, glass fronts dissuade dust, but invite looking.

The furniture anticipates every function, even including a graceful corner unit that helps coax it into otherwise wasted spaces.

Enjoy the look of wallpaper with ease

How often have you considered turning a plain room into one with decorative appeal by adding the eye-catching look of wallpaper?

However, even if you're a dedicated do-it-yourselfer, the thought of hanging sticky strips of paper that seem constantly to wrinkle, drip to the floor and never match may stop you in your tracks.

That's why Georgia-Pacific Corporation, the nation's leading building products manufacturer and distributor, has introduced its Paper Works™ Collection of prehung wallpaper panels.

Paper Works is a new concept for many do-it-yourselfers, one which combines the look of wallpaper with the ease and speed of paneling installation.

Messy strips of wallpaper are replaced by wallpaper-covered panels, each measuring 4 x 8 feet and covering 32 square feet. The matching problems that plague people hanging standard wallpaper are eliminated by the pattern design and color-matched panel grooves.

Installing the Paper Works Collection is almost identical to procedures used for other similar wall panel products and requires only basic tools.

The Paper Works panels have a wood backing of plywood or wood fiber. The plywood-backed wallpaper panels can be applied over prepared masonry, and can also go directly over textured paint or other slightly textured surfaces that would not lend themselves to traditional wallpaper.

In addition to its easy installation, Paper Works is virtually maintenance-free. Because the Collection features Georgia-Pacific's durable Acryglas® topcoat, cleaning the panels requires only a damp cloth or sponge. For heavily soiled areas, a mild soap or detergent and water can be used.

The Paper Works Collection has several different patterns designed to complement a wide variety of home decors. These patterns range from modern to traditional looks, including the charm of stencil work, the subtle textured quality of grasscloth and Oriental greenery, the freshness of large and small floral patterns and a simulated seascape design.

If you're interested in learning just how easy it is to "liven up" your living space with Paper Works panels, send for a free booklet by writing to Georgia-Pacific Corporation, "The Paper Works Installation Guide," Dept. MT01, P.O. Box 48408, Atlanta, GA 30362.

A highly successful Chamber of Commerce "Member Ship" campaign sailed into port this past Thursday afternoon with a whole boat load of new members!

Thanks to the 230 volunteers who during a one week period donated their own valuable business hours to solicit the new members. Thanks, too, to the many fine firms that sponsored the campaign and to the media organizations that generously donated free ad time/space as a bonus for new or increased membership investments.

If you were not contacted by one of the volunteers, or if you said "no" when called on, please realize that the Chamber

* is the only organization whose sole purpose is to promote growth and encourage development in our city.
* is the only group exclusively representing Midland business interests on issues of transportation, education, economic development and government at the local, state and national levels.

Shouldn't you be a part of this important organization, especially today! Call the chamber, 683-3381 or me, 682-9495, and we'll be happy to personally deliver your application!

A highly successful Chamber of Commerce "Member Ship" campaign sailed into port this past Thursday afternoon with a whole boat load of new members!

Thanks to the 230 volunteers who during a one week period donated their own valuable business hours to solicit the new members. Thanks, too, to the many fine firms that sponsored the campaign and to the media organizations that generously donated free ad time/space as a bonus for new or increased membership investments.

If you were not contacted by one of the volunteers, or if you said "no" when called on, please realize that the Chamber
* is the only organization whose sole purpose is to promote growth and encourage development in our city.
* is the only group exclusively representing Midland business interests on issues of transportation, education, economic development and government at the local, state and national levels.

Shouldn't you be a part of this important organization, especially today! Call the chamber, 683-3381, or me, 682-9495, and we'll be happy to personally deliver your application!

TEEN SPENDING . . .

. . . YIELDS BIG BUCKS

By LINDA ANDERSON

Walk into any shopping mall in any U.S. city and chances are the first shopper you see will be under the age of 20. In fact, if you look closely you may notice a lot of 13- to 19-year-old shoppers.

Whether it's because their parents are generous with allowances or because they have their own jobs, teen-agers in the '80s seem to have access to impressive amounts of money and spend a lot of it — and a lot of time — shopping.

Alicia Thompson, 16, a student at Midland High School, said she receives an allowance. Her friend Elaine Howard, 17-year-old senior at MHS, said she "worked but I quit. Now I get an allowance from my parents."

Eric Lendrum, 18, a senior at Lee High School, said he is "not employed yet. I've almost got a confirmed job" for the summer. In the meantime, he receives funds from his parents and other relatives.

Jodi Parker, 14-year-old student at Lee Freshman High School, also receives an allowance, but her 17-year-old sister Lori, an LHS student, has a secretarial job.

Because their basic human needs of food, clothing and shelter are mostly paid for by their parents, these students can afford to spend a larger percentage of their income on other things — one teen-ager called it "fun money."

ELAINE SAID much of her fun money is spent in fast-food restaurants. "Probably what I spend the most on is food — tacos and hamburgers and stuff. And a lot of ice cream. Other than that I buy jewelry — jewelry and makeup."

Though she used to have a job and a paycheck of her own, Elaine said she probably spends more now that she doesn't earn her own money. "I spent $27 in three days and I really don't know what I spent it on."

"I spend a lot of money in Musicland," Alicia said. She enjoys the music of several groups, but has been known to buy music by "anybody that gets an album against the wall" in the "best-seller" hit racks, Elaine joked.

As a computer buff, Eric spends most of his extra funds on his computer. "I'm looking at spending $400 for a set of modems," he said. His favorite stores include Data Tech and Micrus Computers Inc.

"But if I don't spend it on that, I spend it on cokes or a video game or two, or books ... I like to go to both bookstores at the Mall."

Spending money on computer equipment, tools and books is slightly out of the ordinary for a teen-aged boy, Eric said. "Everybody else spends on gas, cars, dates, girls."

Lori and Jodi enjoy buying clothes and going out with their friends. "I love books, so I buy books whenever I can," Lori said.

FAVORITE STORES for buying clothes include Miller's Outpost, Brook's and Forbes, they said.

Movies play a part in teen's spending patterns, too. The students said they attend movies about once every week or two, and of course the $5 price of admission is only part of the expense — soft drinks, popcorn and candy are much more expensive at theaters' concession stands than they are at most other locations.

Having a certain amount of fun money doesn't mean that these students are irresponsible. Older teens frequently have or are seeking jobs. Older teens, too, and often younger ones, have definite plans for college. Eric has plans to study computers "and get an electrical engineering degree when I get to school."

The students noticed that spending patterns for younger teens were different from those of their older peers. "We usually just go out riding around and stuff; we usually don't (end up) out at the Mall," Lori said.

"That's because they have cars and we don't," Jodi said.

From the shores of record stores to the halls of shopping malls, retailers fight the big bucks battle with teens as invaluable allies.

Of the Midland store managers contacted, most agreed that teen-agers were among the top percentage of their clientele, averaging 16-18 years old, and concluded that most of these teen-agers' funds were derived from an allowance given by their parents.

Teen-age consumers spent $30 billion of their own money on amenities and another $35 billion in family money on purchases such as gas for the family car and groceries during 1985, according to a survey by Teen-Age Research Unlimited in Illinois.

That survey said that fast food, soft drinks, shampoo, deodorant, toothpaste, clothes, ice cream, bubble gum and movie tickets topped teen's shopping lists.

Non-matinee movie tickets in Midland are normally $5 per person, but the price of going to a movie often doesn't stop there. The concession stand offerings include soft drinks, popcorn, candy bars and hot dogs, which can add greatly to the price of movie-going.

The videotape industry also seems to benefit from teen spending habits. According to the Teen-Age Research Unlimited report, 48 percent of the 1,600 teens surveyed rented an average of two videotapes a month.

Bruce Davis, manager for National Video Movie Rentals on North Midland Drive, said this report is "most certainly" valid in his store.

"On the weekends I have a lot of teen-agers come in with their girlfriends or boyfriends or in a group. On the average, they rent about two movies a visit on the weekends," Davis said. The rental cost of two movies is around $7-$8.

HIS TEEN-AGE customers are usually 17 or 18 years old and their rentals include comedies, concert videos and the latest releases such as "Rambo" and "Back to the Future." Davis also said a good percentage of his teen clientele have an influence on the movies their parents rent.

Davis feels the teen market is very important to the business, adding, "I don't take teen-agers for granted when it comes to spending money."

Video games are a pastime many teens indulge in, spending about $4 weekly in quarters at a time, according to Sandy Branscum, manager for The Gold Mine. Her average customer is 16 years old and spends about 4 hours a week matching wits against the machines. Ms. Branscum added that after school and weekends are her busiest hours.

Another entertainment area teen buyers have a strong influence in is the music industry. Sound equipment, records and cassettes are popular items for the young adult set.

The Teen-Age Research Unlimited survey suggested that 3 million teens bought portable stereos with headphones in 1985 and, according to Nancy Adamson, manager of the Musicden, records and cassettes are favorite purchases too.

"Our average customer is from about 14 to 25 years old, but the average is about 16," said Ms. Adamson, manager of the Musicden. "They spend about $10 a visit," which is the approximate cost of an album or cassette tape, "and I see some of them two or three times a month."

The average teen spends about 10 minutes in the Musicden, Ms. Adamson said. "They usually know what they want. We usually get a rush of people in the store at about 10 till four, right after school is out. The kids have heard some of the new stuff and come in to buy it," Ms. Adamson continued. "We sometimes go from an empty store to having five to 20 people in here."

HEAVY METAL, or "head-banger," music such as Metallica, Judas Priest and Keel, an album produced by a member of the still popular rock band Kiss, are the hot sounds with most teen customers.

"We don't play much heavy metal in the store," Ms. Adamson said. "We try to play something that someone who is 30 can stand to listen to."

When parents come into the store with their children, Ms. Adamson said it is not uncommon for the parent to tell them, "I'll look here, you go find what you want." Then when it's time to make the purchase, the parent will pay for it. "I'll see them hand the kid the money and the kid will bring it to the counter," Ms. Adamson said.

"Sometimes I'll even hear a kid tell their parents to quit buying something like Whitney [illegible] Heart album," Ms. Adamson said.

Susan Bain, manager of [illegible], said the same was true in her clothing store.

[illegible] about 32 years old. The [illegible]. "Sometimes the [illegible] pretty much the same; they will wind up finding something for themselves too. So the teen-agers help bring us business."

Manager Helen Costilla of Spencer Gifts also agrees that the teens bring their parents' business to the store.

"About three-fourths of the parents come in here looking for something for their kids and find out the store is more than they thought it was," Ms. Costilla said. "There are also a lot of kids that are at the mall with their parents and ask them to come in the store while they look at something. Often the parent finds something they like."

BUT THIS isn't always the case. Sometimes the shoe is on the other foot and the parents do the influencing.

"I sell a lot of rhinestone earrings for pageants, and usually the parent influences the child's decision," said Theresa Scott, manager of Rings and Things.

Ms. Scott said her average customers range from 17 years old to early 30s, although she has customers of every age. Those 17- to 19-year-olds usually spend about $10 purchasing earrings and beads.

"A lot of them have second holes in their ears," Ms. Scott noted.

"I think most of their (teen-agers) money comes from allowances. If it were money they earned I think they would go to a less expensive store. Not that we are expensive, there are just stores that are less expensive," Ms. Scott said.

Ms. Costilla said she hears many of the teen-agers in Spencer Gifts talk about having jobs. "You wouldn't think the little ones would work," Ms. Costilla said.

Spencer Gifts has a wide clientele age range, but Ms. Costilla said that 70 percent of it consists of kids from 13-18 years old. The store is constantly tuned in to one of the top radio stations and Ms. Costilla said the teens come in to browse and see their friends, "and in the process, I get lucky."

"Our business usually starts to pick up after 3 o'clock and Saturdays are very good days," Ms. Costilla said. "And the last Monday when the kids were out of school they gave us a beautiful Monday. Usually our Monday sales are real poor."

Posters are a big seller at Spencer Gifts and Ms. Costilla said an average purchase on weekends is two posters at $2.99 each. She added that the girls usually purchase some kind of cosmetic and the boys usually get at least one other gift type item. She estimated the average teen would spend about $8 per visit to her store.

"We have to pick up after them and some we have to watch real close, but they are worth the extra trouble," Ms. Costilla said.

To celebrate the engagement of their son, Martin Allday III, and Devera Fadrique, both of Austin, Patricia and Martin Allday entertained with a festive party last weekend at Midland Country Club. Guests enjoyed a delicious cocktail buffet and dancing to the music of Jazmine from San Angelo.

Towering above the buffet table was a gorgeous arrangement of multi-colored spring flowers. Individual tables were decorated with potted pink and red geraniums, surrounded by pastel-colored ribbons and tiny tissue paper hearts. The wedding date, June 28, was revealed in gold on a white satin streamer above the guest registry. Dressed in tux and wedding gown, Milton and Mildred Mouse (a pair of large stuffed toys) also adorned the table.

A special guest at the party was Martin's grandmother, longtime Midlander Edna (Mrs. William H.) Pryor. Other family members attending were Devera's parents, Beverly and Lloyd Fadrique of Santa Fe, N.M., and Houston; her brother, Randy, and sister, Lisa, both of Houston; Martin's sisters and their husbands, Betsy and Doug Dashiell of Austin and Kathy and Trent Timberlake; his aunt and uncle, Fifi and Rebel Blackwell of Dallas, and his cousins, Sandra and Rebel Blackwell III and Frances Blackwell from Lubbock, and Dode Devore of San Antonio.

Among former Midlanders seen at the party were Lorie and Marvin Stetler of San Antonio and Dallasite Mamie (Mrs. William S.) Montgomery, whose late husband was Martin's godfather.

Festivities continued throughout the weekend for the couple. Devera was honored with a kitchen shower on Saturday at the home of Carole (Mrs. Johnny) Warren. The co-hostesses were Patti (Mrs. Watson) LaForce and Marianne (Mrs. Wilbur) Yeager. That evening the home of Sarah Lew and David Grimes was the setting for a "Honey-Do" shower and cocktail party. Co-hosting were Kaye and Bill Franklin, Tanya and Charlie Godfrey and Karen and Tim Thompson.

A Mexican brunch was held last Sunday morning at the home of Schatzie and Charlie Tighe. Co-hosts were Edna and Mack Hibbitts, Betty Jo Morgan, Hallie and Dale McCarter, and Martin's godmother, Joan Baskin, and her husband, Pat.

THE SUSTAINING MEMBERS of the Junior League of Midland, Inc., entertained with a May Day coffee to honor the 1986 provisional and transfer members. The annual event was held in the home of the sustaining advisor, Linda (Mrs. Frank) Powell. Spring flowers in wicker baskets decorated the tables. Approximately 300 active and sustaining members attended.

The league has 58 new provisionals this year.

AMONG THE MANY lovely pre-nuptial events honoring Karen Gilmore and Stuart Nelson, who were married Saturday evening in St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, was a cocktail party at The Energy club of Dallas. Guests included many of Midland's young people now residing in Big D. Hostess was the bride's grandmother, Madge (Mrs. L.W.) Davis of Midland.

Wedding week events included the bridesmaids' luncheon given by the bride's sister, Kathy (Mrs. Randy) Shannon, in her home Friday and the rehearsal dinner that evening at the Petroleum Club, which was hosted by the groom's parents, Dollie and Luther Nelson of Amarillo.

A wedding day brunch was given for the out-of-town guests at the home of Schatzie and Charlie Tighe. Co-hosts were Maggie and Conrad Coffield, Megan and Frank Lyon, Edna and Mack Hibbitts and Roberta and Charles Fraser. The bride's parents, Betty and Bill Gilmore Jr., are entertaining today at their home with a brunch for the wedding party, out-of-town guests and family members.

Following a reception at Midland Country Club, the couple departed for a honeymoon in Jamaica. They will make their home in Plano.

FROM DAINTY PINK dresses to that most useful of baby items, the playpen, Jane (Mrs. Robert F.) Ward received many lovely gifts at the grandmother shower held in her honor last Sunday afternoon.

Some of the gifts will remain at the Wards' home for use when the baby visits, and others will be sent to Rebecca Lynne, who was born March 24. She is the daughter of Teresa and David Compton of Plano.

The party for the first time grandmother was held in the home of Carol (Mrs. Gary) Hall. Co-hostesses were Monta Jo (Mrs. Ted) Johnson, Mary (Mrs. Ron) McFadden, Dorothy Perkins, Marian (Mrs. Charles) Reeder and Fay (Mrs. J.R.) Smith.

Decorating the refreshment table was an arrangement of pothos ivy, adorned with lace ribbons and pink baby toys.

ONE OF THE FINEST book reviewers we've been privileged to hear recently appeared before the Midland Country Club Ladies Association. Without benefit of notes, Carolyn Dance of Dallas held the audience spellbound as she dynamically recounted events in the life of one of the nation's best-known lawyers, Leon Jaworski, which led to his book, "Crossroads."

Through his writing, the late Mr. Jaworski made public his strong faith in God and how that faith so deeply influenced his life. His career spanned five decades and involved such history making court cases as the Nazi war crime trials and Watergate, both of which he served as chief prosecutor.

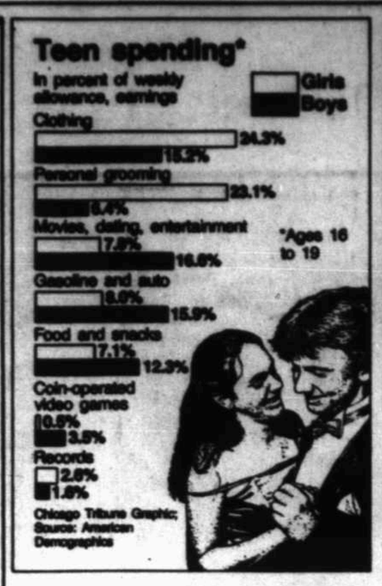

Members and guests lunched on delicious Gazpacho Soup and Chicken Cordon Bleu prior to the program. Tables were colorfully decorated with bouquets of yellow daisies. Hostesses for the social hour were Jan (Mrs. Robert) Fitting, Joyce (Mrs. Jack) Hauke and Mildred (Mrs. Ed) Smead.

Among those enjoying the review and luncheon were Mary Katherine (Mrs. John B.) Mills, Ann (Mrs. Bascom) Mitchell, Babs (Mrs. Dick) Sevier, Nancy Hull, Neta Dill and George Ann (Mrs. Jim) Crowder.

BETTY AND DON EWAN honored the sons of two of Betty's former Pampa High School classmates and their fiancees with a luncheon last Sunday at Midland Country Club.

The honorees, all of Midland, were Kim Biggs and Frank Stowers, who plan to be married in August at St. Luke's United Methodist Church, and Julia Hughbanks and Eric Johnson, who will exchange wedding vows later this month in Nebraska.

Teens have become material girls, boys

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Syndicate

Rock star Madonna sang about material girls and sold a lot of records. Girls, she informed us, just want to have things. Well, so do boys.

The second generation of American Excess players come from smaller families and have working mothers. Thus they have grown up amidst more possessions than any previous generation of teens. They are also the product of the '70s — a decade of political disillusionment and personal absorption. Is it any wonder they are material girls and boys?

Today's kids dress a lot better than kids did in the '60s. Even the '50s produced a solid rebel core, the beats, who dropped out, turned on, grew beards. The '80s have given us youth who are if anything more preppy, more yuppy, more politically conservative than their parents.

These kids don't disdain the materialism of their parents. They might even surpass Mom and Dad in their devotion to the good life.

I spent a few hours sitting around and chatting with six senior girls, students at Mary Institute, St. Louis's most prestigious prep school for girls. Mary I, as it is fondly called, has never been a bastion of liberalism, but it has nurtured girls who eventually went out into the world as women wanting to do something, change something, make life better for others. The girls of the class of '86 just want to make money. No, actually they would rather inherit and marry it.

They discussed their concerns as:

■ Getting the right date to the prom and finding the right prom dress.

■ Being included in the right deb balls next year, especially being in the court at the Veiled Prophet Ball, the social highlight.

They also want good grades. They do not want to be "libbers"; and when the time is right, they want to marry men who will make lots of money and co-produce two young consumers. The ambitious among them would also like to earn MBAs and run their own companies.

DEAR ABBY

Ties that bind link father, son

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to thank you for helping me find my husband's father. Last June, you published an address in Germany where people could write for information on German soldiers who had served in World War II. (A reader wanted to return some personal things that were taken from a dead German soldier.) I had tried several times before to find information on my husband's father, but nothing came of it.

My husband, Dieter, was born in Germany in 1945 of German parents. When he was a small child, his parents were divorced. His mother then fell in love with an American soldier. They were married, and Dieter was brought to America. He is now 41 and never knew what happened to his real father.

I wrote a letter in July of 1985 to the address that appeared in your column in the Lowell (Mass.) Sun. On Oct. 13, 1985, a Sunday morning, my husband received a call from Germany. The man on the other end said, "Dieter, this is your father!" What a day for our family! I have never seen my husband so astounded.

We have corresponded with Walter, my newfound father-in-law, and he will be arriving in America next week for a two-week visit. He is 64 years old, recently retired, and absolutely thrilled to learn that he is a grandfather. He said that one of the greatest joys in his life was to have grandchildren, and to think he has had a granddaughter for almost 20 years! Our daughter is thrilled to know she has a grandfather. This event has surely changed our lives. It added something to my husband's life that he never dreamed would happen. He can hardly wait!

Our family thanks you, Abby. I have read your column all my life, but this is the first time I can say that you have had a direct influence on me. Keep up the good work. I am sure you have a positive influence on the lives of many. Sincerely, BERNICE A. KAISER, GROTON, MASS.

DEAR READERS: I just telephoned the Kaisers. Her father-in-law arrived, and the entire family is still celebrating the happy reunion. It's stories such as this that makes writing my column a joy.

DEAR ABBY: You have written much about tipping in restaurants and have always come to the rescue of waiters and waitresses. Will you please help us out again?

Our restaurant is located near a popular movie theater. This is a fine dining establishment, not a fast-food restaurant, yet some people expect to be served a full-course dinner in 20 minutes or half an hour. We ask at the door if they are trying to make the show. Many are, and want to know what our fastest dinner is, and after we tell them they order something else that requires a long time to prepare.

It's maddening for us to see diners at seven or eight tables frantically waving their checks because they want to leave to make the show. Then they walk out grumbling: "Boy, we'll never go back there again; the service is terrible!"

This may not do one bit of good, but I feel better getting it off my chest. Thanks for being there, Abby. — DIANNE H. IN SOUTHFIELD, MICH.

DEAR DIANNE: You're welcome. Keep the change. That's what I'm here for.

DEAR ABBY: I received an invitation to a baby shower. In the left-hand corner, at the bottom of the invitation, was written: "In addition to your gift, please bring a box of disposable diapers."

Is this proper? — SHOCKED

DEAR SHOCKED: No, it's tacky.

Kits insure survival

By ERMA BOMBECK

Erma Bombeck

When living got to be real complicated, someone figured out that we needed survival kits. They would put in one compact container all the things we needed to meet every contingency or emergency.

Thus was born the sewing kits that contain five pastel shades of thread measuring three inches each, two buttons that match nothing, two small gold pins and a needle. (BYOG. Bring Your Own Glasses.)

The first-aid kit was a breakthrough for people who wanted to be protected against the hazards of fun times and recreation. And you had two packages of bandages, a bottle of disinfectant that stained your finger for two years, a jar of ointment and a roll of adhesive to meet these challenges. (BYOS. Bring Your Own Scissors.)

It was predictable that we could have writing kits that brought together in marriage writing paper, pen and envelopes (BYOS. Bring Your Own Stamps), and beauty kits that moisturized, lubricated, erased, cleansed and excavated dead skin as you slept. (BYOC. Bring Your Own Calendar.)

Survival means different things to different people. My Mother customizes her own survival kit which she takes on vacations. It includes packages of gum, candy bars, breath mints, discs for acid stomach, boxes of raisins, cookies and beef jerky.

I thought my survival had reached the ultimate until an offer arrived in the mail the other day for a 12-inch survival knife, touted as an "extension of your own hand that you'll never want to put down."

The knife did everything but start the car. It cut paper, split wood and shattered bone. But wait? I said "survival" knife. At the end of the handle was a compass so that you would know which direction to follow to hack your way out of the jungle. There's more!

You had only to unscrew the compass to reveal an entire storehouse of life's necessities. There was a packet of waterproof wrapped matches, half a dozen fishing hooks, sinkers, nylon test fishing line, sewing needle kit and an 18-inch CABLE SAW ACTUALLY CAPABLE OF CUTTING DOWN A SMALL TREE! Limit: two per family.

If Rambo had had that knife, the war would have been over in three weeks.

Somehow, I envisioned the cave man with one of these knives. He probably would have examined the book of matches and eaten them, rubbed two fishing hooks together and tried to start a fire, cut himself on the knife, launched the compass from a bow against warring neighbors, and used the cable saw to take down messages in the cave.

Maybe that's why they never survived.

MISTER ROGERS

Jokes not always funny to children

By FRED ROGERS
with BARRY HEAD

Fred Rogers

"When I was five or so," a friend told us, "I remember an uncle asking me, 'Do you know what your bellybutton's for?' 'No,' I said, because I honestly didn't. 'Well,' he said, 'it holds you body together. If you unscrew it, your bottom will fall off.' That idea seems funny to me now, but back then I thought he was serious, and for ages I was terrified to let anyone near my bellybutton!"

Do you know how it feels when someone tells a joke that everyone finds funny... everyone, that is, but you? In fact, the joke may seem worse than not funny; it may hurt.

Well, all of us bring "inner dramas" to whatever we see and hear. A certain song may evoke such poignant memories that it can make us cry at the same time it makes someone else want to dance. A television program about, say, divorce, might be a spellbinding story of intrigue for one family, while, for another, it might be too painful to watch.

Early childhood is a time when inner dramas are developing particularly rapidly and strongly, and it's also a time without the emotional protections that adults develop as they grow.

Young children feel very directly, and they hear and understand very literally. Most children, in their early years, really want to believe the adults they love... and fortunate children can. The healthy capacity to doubt comes to them later.

And yet, many grownups, with the best intentions, unwittingly tease and joke with children in ways that can trigger real alarm because the "joke" happens to hit one of early childhood's unfolding dramas.

One of the most common of children's fears is that their bodies can come apart just like a toy that breaks and can't be mended. No wonder our friend didn't find his uncle's joke about his bellybutton funny at all!

And then there's the old joke of pretending to pinch off a child's nose and making your thumb look like the nose you've just pretended to take off. Or telling children to stop making faces because, if the wind changes, their faces will stick forever in a funny shape.

When we're unsure about our bodies and how they work, this kind of teasing can be truly frightening — all the more so because in our early years we're also likely to be unsure of what is real and what is pretend. Body-threatening jokes can backfire because of both these childhood uncertainties.

Does that caution mean parents shouldn't ever be playful with their children's bodies? Of course not! The miraculous human body is made for enjoying play, and the countless healthy body games that exist in all the world's cultures can help children understand just how miraculous their bodies really are.

All our caution is meant to suggest is that we need to take care that the jokes we adults like to make are appropriate to the growing minds we are trying to amuse.

Copley News Service

Ask enthusiastic shoppers if they consider themselves compulsive, and most laugh off the question and continue to binge. Ask if they like to shop more than anything else in the world and many will honestly answer yes.

"We all have our little compulsions," said Long Island, N.Y., marriage and family counselor Bobbe Frankel. "As long as they're not destructive and causing chaos in our lives, we can live with them."

If, on the other hand, "shopping becomes the No. 1 one priority in your life at the sacrifice to family and other responsibilities," Frankel said, "it might be time to seek help and re-evaluate priorities."

Debtors Anonymous describes compulsive debtors as people who spend impulsively, incur debt, feel guilty, promise never to do it again and then repeat the same cycle the next time they feel bad.

If you suspect a problem with your own spending habits, Sandi Gostin, founder of SpendMenders in San Francisco, suggests that you ask yourself the following questions:

- Do you buy things that you don't need or want because they're on sale?
- Are your closets filled with items that are still unopened?
- Are you preoccupied with money?
- Do you buy things with credit that you wouldn't buy with cash?
- If you have money left, are you obsessed with spending it?

According to a brochure published by Debtors Anonymous, compulsive debt "is an illness, progressive in its nature, which can never be cured, but can be arrested." The organization advises shoppers to be aware of the following signposts on the road to becoming a compulsive debtor:

- Frequent use of the term "borrow" for such things as cigarettes and pencils.
- Borrowing small amounts of money from friends.
- A different feeling when buying things on credit than when paying cash — a feeling of being in the club, a feeling of being accepted.
- Unrealistic expectations that there will be funds available in the future to meet obligations incurred in the present.
- An inordinate feeling of euphoria on opening a charge account.

Those interested in conquering shopping addiction can contact:

Wedding gifts unconventional

NEW YORK (UPI) — Say "the perfect wedding gift," and most people think of china, crystal and silver. These traditional presents are always welcome, says Bride's magazine, but today's newlyweds also like unconventional gifts that suit modern lifestyles.

Brides and grooms of the '80s tend to be older than in years past, and "couples marrying now have more defined ideas of what they need for setting up a home," says Barbara Tober, editor-in-chief of Bride's. "They want the traditional items, of course, but they also appreciate gifts that are individual and creative, a bit out of the ordinary."

In a recent issue of Bride's, an article on "Creative New Gift Requests" offers these suggestions:

If the newlyweds are gourmets, consider a gift of wine glasses, a wine rack, a wine label scrapbook or membership in a wine-of-the-month club.

If they exercise regularly, they might like warm-up suits and leotards, an exercise bike or membership in a health club.

If they are social butterflies, try an appointment book, an engraved pen, theater or opera tickets or restaurant gift certificates.

Sports fans may enjoy a stadium blanket and thermos or season football tickets. Sailors could use floating barware or an all-weather radio.

The couple setting up a home office might like bookends, paperweights, desk sets, a remote telephone, a tape recorder or a dictaphone.

And for the couple buying a first home, consider gardening tools, a leaf blower, a lawn mower, a garden sun dial, a wheelbarrow or a welcome mat.

Attendants' duties remain traditional

Hearst News Service

Bridal party attendants very often their functions are honorary and ornamental. Most would like to do more, but cannot — without direction. It is up to the bride and groom to let their wishes be known at the time attendants are selected.

There are traditional guidelines as to the functions of each attendant. The bride's honor attendant — maid or matron of honor — should be available to help the bride and her mother in any preparations and should delegate some of this authority to the bridesmaids. Some suggested activities would be to help compile the guest list, address invitations or fill birdseed (previously rice) bags. She could run errands to help keep the bride on her schedule.

Many times, she organizes a bridal shower. All of the bridesmaids should attend this function, and very often act as co-hostesses, financially as well as socially.

On the wedding day, she helps the bride dress and change to her going-away outfit. At all times she realizes the nerves of the wedding are in her hands.

During the ceremony, her function is to keep the bride's attire straight. She arranges the bride's train before she walks down the aisle and whenever she moves during the ceremony. Under the direction of the person officiating, she holds the bride's bouquet at the proper time and passes it to the next bridesmaid to lift the veil. She carries the groom's ring for a two-ring ceremony.

The best man has the responsibility of organizing the groom. He sometimes orders the boutonnieres and flowers and checks on their delivery. He coordinates with the bride's mother on the logistics of transportation. He may delegate these functions to groomsmen and ushers as needed.

The bachelor dinner is one of his responsibilities.

Tenth anniversary also tin anniversary

Associated Press

The earliest known example of anniversary gift giving dates to medieval Germany, when silver and gold wreaths were presented to married couples. In Holland, medals and metal art objects were given.

These traditions were lost until their 19th-century revival in America, possibly by German immigrants living in Pennsylvania.

It was the 10th, or tin, anniversary that was specially observed, according to Country Home magazine.

"The 10th marked a real marriage milestone," says Nancy Clokey, an avid collector of anniversary tin. "In those days you were middle-aged by the 10th anniversary and a party meant that you had survived 10 years of married life without tragedy, like childbirth fever. Celebrating the tin anniversary was uniquely American."

The proliferation of etiquette books in the mid-19th century explained in detail the proper disposition of a tin-wedding party. Invitations were to be printed on cards adorned with tin ornaments or paper covered with thin tin foil, then delivered in tin envelopes or tied with a narrow tin ribbons.

Guests from the original wedding party were to be invited, along with family and close friends. The celebrants were received by the erstwhile bridal couple dressed in their wedding best, though their outfits were by then outmoded enough to be the butt of good-natured teasing.

The bride might clutch a bouquet arranged in a tin funnel. An informal supper table was set with tin plates and cups, tin candlesticks, tin place cards, and flowers arranged in tin pails or cake tins. All the gifts were of tin.

Some gifts were utilitarian, because soft tin kitchenware, such as dippers and milk pans, often wore out after 10 years of housekeeping. The majority of gifts were amusing, their whimsy adding to the party's entertainment. While books on etiquette warned against gifts that might offend sensitive natures, the charming tin novelties were really intended as gentle jokes.

Made by local tinsmiths or itinerant tinkers, the gifts ranged from plain slippers to an elaborate cake cover adorned with blossoms and scrolled edging. While most surfaces were left unfinished, some were planished to a silvery sheen and others were covered with asphaltum, a coal tar paint that inhibited rust and imparted a shiny blue, purple, brown or black coat.

New home sales up

BOSTON (AP) — More American families — 686,000 of them — bought new single-family homes in 1985 than at any time since 1979 (when 709,000 new homes were sold), according to John Hancock Financial Services. The company says the 1985 sales figure is a 7.4 percent rise over the number sold in the U.S. in 1984.

There apparently are several reasons for the jump in new homes sold to Americans, but John Hancock identifies one major factor: the lowest mortgage rates in six years.

Expert: Community pools sometimes overloaded

Hearst News Service

Because wellness and fitness programs are attracting more and more children and adults to community swimming pools, today's pools are carrying loads they weren't designed for, according to Donald Van Rossen, Ph.D., a national expert on pool maintenance and safety.

Van Rossen says it should be reasonable to assume that the first line of defense against swimming-pool disease is pool maintenance, but the laws of convenience often interrupt the process. To protect yourself and children, here's what Van Rossen says to look for:

■ Water clarity: "If you cannot see the pool's drain while standing on deck, that pool legally should be closed. If it isn't closed, you definitely should not get into it or let your kids."

■ Supervision: In addition to your child's swimming instructor, there should be at least one lifeguard on duty while the lessons are in progress.

■ Proper management: Many pool operators used to hire the high-school star or some well-known young person to run their pools. Pool operators should be someone with the proper credentials who will also help save money all around in maintenance and things like insurance.

What if abuses are suspected?

"The best place to get free advice is at the community health department," Van Rossen says. "Lodge a complaint if you have to."

Teaching babies to swim frowned on by doctors

Hearst News Service

Humans can teach their infants to swim, just as adult sea lions teach theirs, but the American Academy of Pediatrics warns against it.

Fear of disease is the paramount concern. Second is the suggestion that parents of infants taught to paddle around may believe that the child somehow is safe from accidental drowning.

"It's not clear that the advantages talked about so freely are really worth the risks involved," says Dr. Paul Dyment, a Cleveland pediatrician and chairman of the American Academy of Pediatrics' committee on sports medicine, which wrote the academy's policy statement. It says categorically that all infant-swimming programs are "somewhat hazardous" and recommends that if parents insist, at least they should educate themselves about the risks.

Included are potential encounters with Giardia, a waterborne parasite that causes diarrhea, and hyponatremia, or infant water intoxication, a condition that could lead to seizures and coma and is caused by swallowing too much water.

Most controversial is the academy's recommendation against submersion of any child before age 3, a stance echoed by the national YMCA office in Chicago.

The Y's national aquatics director, Marjorie Murphy, says the Y does not advocate submersion for anyone, infant or adult, until that person initiates it himself. The Giardia issue is something else, she says.

"Giardia is so prevalent — it's in day-care centers and infant care places — that to close off swimming because it might be involved just doesn't make sense. We're more concerned about submersion at that age, at least until a child is 3. The fact is, we don't submerge anyone until they're ready for it."

Submersion does go to the heart of any swim program, for quite clearly without it you might as well stay in the bathtub. And that is precisely what Dyment has in mind.

"We can't think of a single advantage that can't be obtained on dry land — or in the bathtub," Dyment says. "Unfortunately, science can't help us determine how great the risk is. We can deal with the risks of freeway travel, because we can figure out what they are and deal with it. We can't with this. All we know is that some kids are getting sick. We don't know how many."

Infant swim proponents such as Joan Breda are sensitive to the criticism. Breda has pioneered infant swimming and is nationally known for her work as the founder and national director of Aquatots, a program in which parents teach their kids to swim.

Breda believes swimming brings parent and child together as little else does, but she emphasizes that such programs for tots should not be considered "waterproofing."

"It's really an education for the parents, so that they realize how quickly a child can get in trouble," she says. "There is no such thing as waterproofing. You can't waterproof a child any more than you can streetproof it. Children that age don't know enough to understand the dangers."

It is on this issue that Dyment thinks swim teachers lose their argument. If the idea is not waterproofing, he asks, what's left?

"These people talk of things like parent-child bonding, which seems to be the main advantage being touted," he says. "But you can get the same thing when a mother and child relate to each other on the floor of a gymnasium, and in a gym you're not likely to pick up diarrhea from the baby next to you who can't control his stool."

Breda bristles at this.

"In 15 years," she says, "we've had just two incidents" of floating stool.

No matter, Dyment remains a critic.

"You may be able to teach an infant to swim, but how is it going to climb out of a pool when it falls in? What happens when the baby pops in and paddles around, but then gets tired? And what happens when an overconfident parent, because the child has taken the course, leaves for an instant to answer a telephone?"

National YMCA guidelines also grapple with the controversy, placing forced submersion at the crux.

"Forced submersion, or dropping of the child from a height, is considered dangerous and non-prudent, and should be prohibited from the program context," the guidelines state. "Force of any kind, including submersion (explained as anytime a child is pushed or pulled under water) is particularly serious. It is felt that most of the problems could be avoided if the child is not submerged until he is ready to do so by imitating his parent or exploring on his own."

Underlined is the following:

"Formal swimming instruction should not begin until age 3," but this stance is hedged somewhat if the program is considered "water adjustment." For this, a child must be able voluntarily to lift its head 90 degrees when prone, an ability usually acquired at about 6 months of age.

Mother of the Year

"Mother can I?...Mother will you...?" Answering "yes" when possible and "no" when needed describes my mother. Married young, raising 14 children (one handicapped) through very difficult times and still managing to be the most optimistic and happy person I know makes her truly unique in her field as "Mother".

This description of Midland Reporter-Telegram's Mother of the Year, Lois Brookshire, by her daughter Connie Hollaway perfectly depicts the love and admiration each of Mrs. Brookshire's children share for this fine lady.

After marrying at 15, Mrs. Brookshire began her own family at 16. In 1962, with five children of her own and expecting the sixth, her mother died leaving six young children homeless.

Her sense of responsibility and love for her family allowed her to make a very difficult decision to raise her young brothers and sisters. During that period, Mrs. Brookshire brought another child into the world, showering the baby with affection. "Although it was a lot of fun having constant playmates, it was not an easy task for our parents. We owned a large two-story house, but it lacked running water," said Connie.

And in 1974, the most difficult test a mother can endure was bestowed upon Lois Brookshire. Shortly after the birth of her eighth child, complications set in. Following a lengthy hospital stay, she learned that her baby boy had cerebral palsy.

Now all but the youngest of her children are married. Mrs. Brookshire is a single parent, working as a secretary/bookkeeper.

"And although we are all grown," said Connie, "we sometimes have problems in our lives and have to 'run home to Mama' from time to time. We know th door is always open and that we can come to her with any problem; counting on her constant support and optimism. She is always our 'Mother of the Year'."

Workshare families: Modern phenomenon

The concept of "workshare" in the workplace is gaining more and more acceptance. But that's a matter of sharing one job between two people, so both can earn money, and still have time to devote to their chosen lifestyles.

Workshare in the family is simply the division of work to be done to keep the family unit well fed, clean, well housed and happy.

Time was, not so long ago, when all the family chores fell on mother's shoulder — broad or not. But with mother's return to the workplace (nearly 70 percent of all mothers with children under 18 are now working outside the home, too), help had to be on its way!

That help starts with dad, and then spreads like wildfire, through the whole family — or those members who are big enough, old enough, to contribute a fair share of time and effort.

Dad's not only getting expert at the kitchen range, but he's right in there with laundering, vacuuming the living room rug, changing diapers and helping feed the baby.

In many families where mother goes out to help make ends meet with her daily toil, each member of the family gets a chore assignment and the responsibility to carry it out — every day.

In some families, the children have rotating responsibilities on the theory that a change in pace keeps up the interest.

The jobs they share run the gamut from doing laundry to making school lunches for the other children, from feeding the cats and dogs to cleaning their own rooms and watering the plants.

Sociologists not only find the natural development of workshare in the family an expedient development necessitated by the times, but a healthy evolvement that helps knit the 20th century family into a more cohesive unit.

The Outstanding Mothers for 1986

The National Mother's Day Committee designated lifestyle women as 1986 Outstanding Mothers in a Presentation Ceremony in New York on April 22nd.

The mothers named to the 1986 Honors List received the prestigious OMA Award for their role model influence, exerted by their active participation not just in family management, but also as women who have achieved recognition in our society for their contributions to the complex way of life that characterizes the dynamics of today's culture.

The mothers on whom the OMA Awards were bestowed for distinguishing themselves in and out of the home were Ulrike De[illegible]son, Everyone's Mother; Valerie Brisco-Hooks, Sports Mother; Marjorie Margolies, Communicator Mother; Dr. Ruth Westheimer, TV Mother; Janet Leigh, Performing Arts Mother; Beatrice Coleman, Business and Finance Mother; Judy Licht, Communications Mother; Carmen de Lavallade, Stage Mother.

The 1986 Outstanding Mother Award Honors were the eighth in a series that began in 1979. In a short period of time, the significance of the Presentations has been recognized as a truly national honor to be prized by the few women who have been singled out by a dynamic country, grateful for their involved leadership.

Joan Levan, President of the National Mother's Day Committee, and President of the Associated Dry Goods Marketing observed that "today, more than ever, recognition of the dual role undertaken by so many mothers is an important dimension of the tapestry of our society. And there is reason to believe that more and more mothers will be out in the workplace in the decade ahead, making the recognition of their contributions of still greater consequence to the stability of our changing society.

"Not many mothers, today, have their outlook circumscribed by the triumvirate of children, church and kitchen. Surely, these basics continue as primary responsibilities to their families, but now the added burdens of the work place demand side-by-side consideration in fitting the puzzle pieces of modern life into place."

Co-Chairpersons of the Outstanding Mother Awards Presentations were Jennie Bagnato, mother of two, and Carolyn Wojcik. In an interview with them, they expressed a point of view as American as the apple pie that your mom made.

Because they are both movers and shakers in the work world, they agree that a day to recognize the immeasurable influence of American mothers on the course of events in this country, is not simply merited, but a symbol of the humanism that is unique to our society.

Mother's Day, they agreed, is one more conduit of communications to the nearly 250,000,000 Americans, increasingly mobile, and spread out over three million square miles of "America the Beautiful." Mother's Day, because they are away from home so much (business takes them all over the world), has a special meaning for them.

"Enhancing" Mom on her day

This is the time of year when that age-old question arises...what to get mom for Mother's Day? She has pearls...she has a gold chain...she has stud earrings...what's left (that isn't too expensive)?

Enhancers, says Jewelers of America (JA), the national association of more than 12,000 retail jewelers across the country. Enhancers are those wonderful little add-on pieces of jewelry that give a whole new look to what mom already owns. And they cost as little or as much as you want to spend.

Take a classic strand of pearls...A simple (or elaborate) shortener can turn a long necklace into a choker to achieve a totally different fashion appearance.

She has stud earrings? There is a wide array of earring "jackets" which convert the basic studs into centerpieces of the most dramatic and newest fashions.

Be bold...mix and match...add a mabe pearl enhancer to a strand of cultured pearls. Or, add a clip fashioned with more than one color gemstone — how about all of mom's kids chipping in and getting a clasp with each one's birthstone?

Summing up, JA reminds you that jewelry is the gift of lasting beauty. And, when you give mom a gift that enhances her jewelry wardrobe, you are indeed telling her you care.

If you want to have information about fine jewelry, write to JA for its consumer brochures that give you tips and guidelines. Write to Jewelers of America, Dept. MNS-MD, 1271 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10020.

Delicately detailed jewelry defines a proof-positive to please Mom this Mother's Day.

Flowers of Mom's Day

The relationship between Mother's Day and flowers has been as natural and spontaneous as the sunrise and the sunset!

The West Virginia countryside is ablaze with the colors of wild flowers in the spring, so it was normal and fitting that the Jarvis family enjoyed the beautiful bounty of nature. They were favorites of Miss Anna Reeves Jarvis' mother, so giving mother a bunch of wild flowers to mark Mother's Day "just happened."

True, Miss Jarvis' mother had a favorite and it was hardly wild! She doted on carnations — and so it happened that the carnation became the official floral symbol of Mother's Day — it matured in response to public acceptance.

The carnation is a readily available bloom — almost everywhere, anytime. It just made sense. So the red carnation became symbolic of the living mother, the white carnation was to be in memory of mothers deceased.

Florists did not invent Mother's Day. However they have conceptualized the relationship between Mother's Day and a gift of a flower or plant to mark the occasion with "a gift that lives." So be it an elegant orchid or a humble daisy, ivy or an exotic cactus, the choice is limited only by your mother's preference.

It's a fact — the number one choice of remembrances for mother, after the ubiquitous greeting card, is a floral tribute. Just one of the two and a half gifts each "median" mom gets on Mother's Day.

That says it all.

The scents have it all!

No matter what you call it — perfume, cologne, eau de toilette — a gift of a fragrance to your mother is sure to make her notice, and realize that your love for her is something that's more than skin deep.

Some mothers have a very special preference in fragrances. If yours does, then the cue is easy to follow.

If your mother is like so many mothers, she has a variety of favorite fragrances, so perhaps something new and different will bring a sparkle to her eye.

Sizes are small to large — but designed to fit your budget, not her figure! Hardly any size you buy her could be too large! N'est-ce pas?

And from your point of view, there's hardly a gift that is easier to select. Most come in beautiful gifty looking packages; most are stocked in depth in thousands of convenient stores. And, maybe best of all, if you tend to procrastinate, you can shop late on Saturday and give it to your mom early on Sunday morning.

If you need more reassurance, these research results were passed along by the authoritative Mother's Day Council. Their latest inquiries show that there's no more favored gift classification than fragrances and cosmetics.

So, if you like to be one of the bunch, make one of your gifts to mother a gift of her favorite scent or other cosmetic. Sometimes being right is more important than being original.

A vested interest

Summertime and the styling is easy and perfect for mom in a three-piece coordinate for spring 1986. A charming intrasia vest with loveable barnyard cat is worn with a hand-faggoted white blouse over a slim chambray skirt with neat bow pockets.

ENGLISH TRIFLE

- 1 pound cake (16 ounces)
- ½ cup cream sherry or fruit juice
- 1 jar (12 ounces) raspberry preserves (reserve 1 tablespoon for garnish)
- 2 cans (16 ounces) apricot halves, drained (reserve 5 for garnish)
- 2 cups cold milk
- 1 package (3¾ ounces) instant vanilla pudding and pie filling
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1 cup whipping cream
- Slivered almonds for garnish

Slice pound cake in ½" thicknesses. Line the bottom and half way up the sides of a 3-quart clear glass bowl with cake slices. Sprinkle with half the sherry or juice. Spread cake with about ⅓ cup preserves and add a layer of apricot halves. Repeat until all cake, juice, preserves and apricots (reserve 5) are used.

Assemble "Kitchen Center" Blender. Put milk and pudding mix into blender container. Cover and process at BLEND until well mixed. Let stand 1-2 minutes. Pour over cake mixture.

Assemble "Kitchen Center" Mixer. In small bowl whip cream and sugar at HIGH until stiffly beaten. Spread over pudding mixture.

Yield: 8-10 servings

FRENCH BREAD

- 2¼ cups water
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 3 cups all-purpose flour
- 2 packages (¼ ounce) quick-rise yeast
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 3¼-4 cups all-purpose flour
- Salad oil
- 1 egg white
- 1 tablespoon water
- Cornmeal

Heat water and butter to 120°F. Assemble Oster Doughmaker. In large mixer bowl combine 3 cups flour, yeast, sugar, salt and warm water mixture. Mix with doughmaker at highest speed for 3 minutes. (It may be necessary to scrape sides of bowl with rubber scraper and rotate bowl slightly by hand.)

Add 3¼ cups flour and continue kneading 3 more minutes. If dough is sticky, knead in enough of remaining ¾ cup flour to form a stiff dough. Place dough in a greased bowl, turning once to grease top. Cover and let rise in a warm place 25 minutes. Punch down and divide into 2 equal parts. Roll each into a 15" x 8" rectangle on lightly floured board. Roll each up tightly jelly-roll style, beginning with long side. Seal edges and ends well by rolling with hands.

Place seam-down diagonally on greased 17" x 14" baking sheet sprinkled with cornmeal. Cover; let rise in warm place until double, about 15 minutes.

Brush breads with slightly beaten egg white and water. Bake in a preheated 400° oven 35-40 minutes. Cool on wire rack.

Yield: 2 loaves

SPICY ORANGE MOLD

- ¾ cup orange juice, heated to boiling
- 1 package (3 ounces) orange-flavored gelatin
- ½ cup small curd cottage cheese
- ¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1 cup ice cubes
- 1 can (10 ounces) mandarin oranges, drained

Assemble Oster "Kitchen Center" Blender. Put gelatin and boiling orange juice into blender container. Cover and process at STIR. Immediately remove feeder cap and process until gelatin is completely dissolved. Stop blender.

Add cottage cheese and cinnamon. Cover and process at MIX until cottage cheese is smooth. Increase speed to LIQUIFY and remove feeder cap. With motor running, drop ice cubes through feeder cap opening. Continue to process until ice is completely liquified. Allow to set 5 minutes.

Empty gelatin into 3-cup mold. Gently stir in oranges. Cover and refrigerate at least 1 hour before serving.

Yield: 4-6 servings

QUICK 'N EASY QUICHE

- 1½ cups milk
- 3 eggs
- ½ cup buttermilk baking mix
- 1 cup cubed Cheddar cheese
- 1 small onion, quartered
- ¼ green pepper, cut into 1" pieces
- ¼ cup bacon bits
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- Dash pepper
- Dash hot pepper sauce

Preheat oven to 350°F. Put all ingredients into Oster "Kitchen Center" Blender container. Cover and process 2 cycles at BLEND. Pour into 9" lightly buttered pie plate.

If using glass pan, bake at 325°F. Bake 40-45 minutes or until a knife inserted in center comes out clean. Allow to stand 5 minutes before cutting.

Yield: 6 servings

Loans up, deposits down from '85

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Midland bank deposits slipped less than one-half of one percent during the first quarter of the year in comparison to year-ago figures, totaling $1.609 billion, as of March 31. The deposit total was $1.616 billion on the same date in 1985.

Loan totals climbed by more than $60 million over 1985's first quarter, with total loan portfolios at Midland banks slightly more than $880 million, compared to nearly $820 million a year ago.

When compared to figures from the previous quarter both deposits and loans showed larger losses, averaging 3 to 7 percent at most banks in the city. Usual first quarter declines together with the unstable economy in the area are the primary explanations for the substantial quarterly loss, according to a consensus of bankers interviewed.

First quarter 1986 deposit totals represent a decrease of just more than $58 million from the fourth quarter of 1985. The loan total of $880 million was down $15.3 million from the previous three month period.

Midland savings and loans, however, showed deposit growth of 58 percent over year-earlier figures, while loans were up more than 50 percent for the same period.

S&L's posted total deposits of $647.3 million for the quarter, while total loans tallied $539 million. Those figures showed growth over the previous quarter as well.

Only two area banks showed gains over the previous quarter: Community National Bank and RepublicBank First National Midland. RepublicBank's growth, however, was due to its merger with RepublicBank Midland, N.A.

The only actual growth was seen in Community National Bank, with an increase in deposits of $3.6 million, representing a 13 percent growth. Said Community's new president, Larry Harrell: "We feel the need for a banking center on the south side of town is evidenced by our growth this quarter.

RepublicBank First National showed a gain of nearly $32 million in deposits and an increase of $12.5 million in its loan totals, due to its merger. "When comparing the figures with totals for both banks for last quarter, we are down slightly in both deposits and loans," said Billy Murray, controller at RepublicBank First National. "This is a tough time for Midland and for Texas banks. Our economy is tied primarily to oil and gas, agriculture and real estate — and none of those areas are doing extremely well. This is just a period where we will all have to work together to pull through it."

First City president Bill Franklin predicted that oil prices would see some stability later in the year, but admitted that things would be tight for awhile. "Loan demand in this depressed economy is almost non-existent and we, like other banks, are beginning to see less activity in our loan portfolio." As for the decline in

Refinancers could receive lower insurance premiums

From Staff Reports

The State Board of Insurance (SBI) advises homeowners who are refinancing mortgages as interest rates continue to fall that a current SBI rule may entitle them to a substantial reduction in their title insurance premiums.

This rule is of particular importance in today's real estate market. In some instances it may save the borrower up to 80 per cent of the usual title insurance premium," according to board members. "We want to make sure that all homeowners are aware of it when they refinance their loans," SBI members said.

Property owners who have refinanced which are no more than four years old may take advantage of the rule.

The real estate market in recent months has seen an unprecedented number of refinance transactions, many of which qualify under the board's rule for a credit in the cost of a title insurance policy for the lender.

Mark Gentle, SBI assistant director of title insurance, informed the board that he has been receiving complaints from homeowners of their rights.

The refinance credit rule has been in effect for several years. Homeowners, or other property owners who have refinanced their loans, or who are contemplating refinancing, should review their title insurance premium charge to see that the credit was applied to their transactions.

Making tough personnel decisions easier

BY DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

As low oil prices and decreased activity force Midland firms to contract, those who hire and fire will be faced with critical decisions — namely determining how many and who will be terminated.

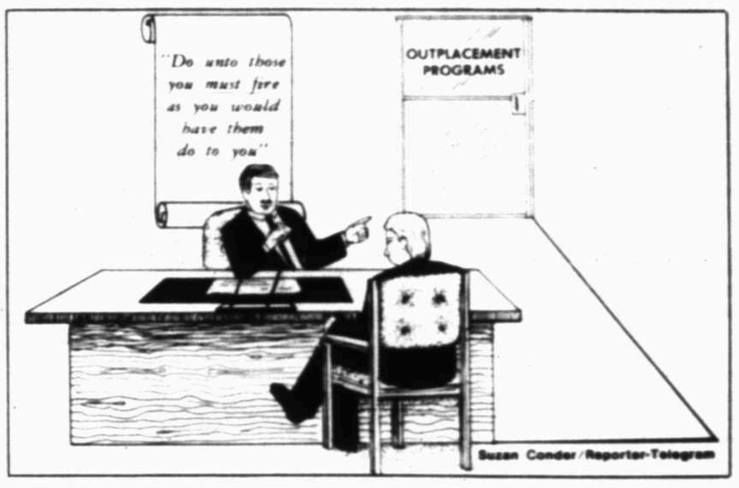

It is never an easy decision for employers, but there are considerations that can make a difficult experience more bearable says the Permian Basin Personnel Managers Association (PBPMA).

Texas Employment Commission unemployment figures now stand 50 percent higher than a year ago, with all likelihood of getting worse. While companies have little power over the economic forces which precipitate terminations, they can control how an individual termination or a larger workforce reduction is managed, thereby having a significant effect on the lives of the people fired, their families, the employees who stay, and the entire community, according to Jeff Lyons, president PBPMA.

Methods of conducting a termination were outlined recently at a meeting of the PBPMA.

According to personnel experts at the meeting, there are several considerations that should be balanced when employees are terminated. They include the full effects of the operating, financial and social considerations on both the individual and the company.

■ How will the termination affect the operations of the firm? From an operating perspective, firing someone often means change in the way the organization gets work done. Too often the operational consequences are not anticipated or they are underestimated. The solution is planning how to redistribute the terminated employee's work so that the people remaining have the skills and resources to absorb it. Planning has saved many companies from mortgaging their future with payroll cuts. Better organizations are developing complete termination policies that govern the firing process.

Petroleum product deliveries up sharply in first quarter

Shell Oil Co.'s Odessa refinery operated near its 30,000 barrel per day capacity during the first two months of the year. The company was stockpiling products in anticipation of a maintenance turnaround during March.

West Texas, while recognized among the worldwide leaders in oil production capacity, is often overlooked in discussions of refinery activity. Nevertheless, area refineries are benefiting right along with their larger counterparts on the Gulf Coast in increasing their throughput during the first quarter of 1986.

Steep monthly increases in national product demand in the first three months of the year pushed total product deliveries up 3.6 percent over last year's figures, according to the most recent American Petroleum Institute (API) Monthly Statistical Report. According to the report, an average of 16,372,000 barrels per day (bopd) of petroleum products were supplied during the January to March period. In the first quarter of 1985, an average of 15.8 million bopd total products were delivered.

Only a portion of the increase in deliveries is being considered a result of increased demand. Secondary and tertiary inventory shifting have influenced the supply figures, although the API report claims that the 20 percent decline in retail gasoline prices is having a positive impact on gasoline usage. The increase in demand, while significant, is not sufficient to absorb global production surpluses or provide any upward pressure on crude oil prices, analysts observe.

A potentially important statistic from the report is that gasoline inventories are lower than last year's levels and now represent a 30-day supply, according to John Ryan Jr., senior energy analyst for the Dallas brokerage firm Rauscher, Pierce, Refsnes. The supply is three days short of the 33-day supply on hand the last time demand jumped as much as it did in the first quarter, which was March 1979, he notes.

Mark Palmer, spokesman for Fina Oil & Chemical Co. in Dallas, attributes a portion of the increase in deliveries to inventory control shifting on the part of jobbers and wholesalers. Inventory demand was accumulating during the free-fall in prices because wholesalers were depleting their old, higher-priced inventories and holding off on replacing them until prices stabilized.

"Once we saw a minor movement back up in product prices, even a fraction of a cent, distributors began to refill their depleted stocks," Palmer noted. Fina has been operating its Big Spring refinery near its 60,000 bopd capacity since repairs were completed following a March 1985 fire.

"Our deliveries are not up significantly because we've always been able to sell enough to keep our supplies about level; however we are seeing an increase in the volume of branded product sales," Palmer explained.

The API report discounts the effects of secondary inventory changes in response to changes in product markets and says that petroleum demand is experiencing actual renewed growth. Increases in gasoline deliveries paced the first quar-

Inventor of artificial coffee may save oil wells

One of the joys of this business is finding and broaching that unknown, offbeat story that just may usher in a new era. So when I read an obscure report about a Sherman, Texas inventor who claims to have the solution to save thousands of stripper wells, it took me only five seconds to get on the phone to him.

It has long been suggested by enhanced recovery experts that the next round of recovery, following tertiary, would probably involve some form of bacterial action. A number of universities including the University of Texas; the University of Oklahoma; and the University of Georgia have been working on the futuristic recovery technique alongside research staffs of major oil companies.

Now, George Sarantakos, a 51-year-old inventor with numerous patents to his credit, claims to have made a quantum leap in the use of bacteria to improve oil recovery. In a telephone conversation that lasted the better part of two hours, Sarantakos explained to me how his process works, how he developed it and what he expects to do with it.

According to the Sherman resident, the process has been tested successfully in the laboratory and in two wells in Oklahoma. The SEOR Co. of Dallas, which is headed by a bank vice president, holds the license for the process and plans to test it in 10 additional wells.

"Others have been working on the process," says Sarantakos, "but what makes our process commercial is a unique, new nutrient that promotes the growth of bacteria. Using existing technology, with a good nutrient and controlled environment, a colony of bacteria might grow from 1,000 to 100,000 in the span of six hours. With our nutrient and process, which involves feeding bacteria to bacteria, 1,000 colonies can grow to 1.5 million in six hours."

THE BACKYARD SCIENTIST, who says he studied biochemistry at the University of Arizona, University of Nagoya in Japan and University of California at Berkeley, says slow growth has been the major drawback thus far to the use of anaerobic bacteria for enhanced recovery.

"My process of selective combinations of anaerobic bacteria with a catalyst to increase growth and stimulate carbon dioxide production is essentially the same thing that happens in a cesspool. The only difference is that the breakdown of chained molecules to straight-line molecules of the crude oil is controlled," Sarantakos told me.

He explained that his process works by pumping an ionized water solution with anaerobic bacteria downhole. The bacteria begins to eat the carbon in the oil and the formation, lowering the viscosity of the oil allowing it to flow out of the formation easier, while producing vast amounts of carbon dioxide and methane, which increase downhole pressures.

"Increased production rates of 300 to 400 percent can be expected," says Sarantakos, who takes care to control his enthusiasm. "A well making five barrels might go to 15 barrels per day."

He says the firm licensing the process will charge $4,000 to $5,000 per application per well, with each injected application of the specially formulated bacteria, expected to remain active in the well from 18 months to five years.

THE MAIN LIMITATIONS, says the inventor who claims to have developed over 1,500 products with 35 now in commercial use, are downhole temperatures which destroy the bacteria (above 180 degrees) and a tendency of operators to produce wells too hard, pumping the ionized bacteria solution out of the well. "When the solution is pumped in, the well needs to be shut-in for about 30 to 60 days to allow the bacteria to grow and spread in the well," he said.

Oddly enough, Sarantakos, who proudly boasts that he is 100 percent Greek and professes a love for Greek scholars, says he discovered his petroleum-eating bacteria strains and nutrient while working on his latest product, the nationally-sold Jimmy Houston Fish Formula. The formula uses bacteria to produce an underwater environment that attracts fish.

Sarantakos, who became famous for inventions including an artificial coffee, a low-cost fertilizer and a cement waterproofing compound, says everyone has been looking for a single strain of bacteria that would work downhole. "We found it took a symbiotic strain to work on the carbon in the oil and the carbonate or silica in the formations."

While he is aware of the potential millions to be made by the process, the self-styled scientist, who reads and works in his Sherman lab until the wee hours of the morning, seems unaffected by the possible breakthrough.

"I have been a millionaire several times, and ended up plowing it all back into some sort of research," he explained. He says that working with bacteria to produce a fish formula or an oil recovery process are mere games he plays in pursuit of his real goal: the prolonging of human life through "good" bacteria. "I think it can be done. Someday we will use bacteria to produce vitamins and other essential body-building elements."

Has he shown his process to the major oil companies? "Yes, I have. I get lots of enthusiasm down in the technical ranks, but when it gets up in the executive ranks, enthusiasm wanes."

Southwest banks suffer with oilmen

Washington Post News Service

MIDLAND, Tex. — The stranger, because he wore a tie, was immediately suspect.

Charles "Pappy" Chatwell, a truck driver for a West Texas drilling company and a 40-year veteran of the oil patch, fixed a cracked and dusty glare on the visitor and asked, "Are you from the sheriff?"

No.

"You a lawyer?"

No.

"You from the bank?"

No.

Chatwell's scowl softened to a smile. He extended his hand. "Pleased to meet you. What can I do for you?"

The interrogation says a lot about the character of West Texans and the fortunes of the Texas oil industry. It says even more about changed attitudes toward bankers here. When a banker is no more welcome than a process server or a lawyer, times are definitely bad. Not too long ago, when the banks were shoveling out money to anyone tied to the oil business, the friendly loan officer was everyone's pal.

Throughout the nation's energy belt, banks and bankers are suffering along with their customers, proving the old saw that a bank is only as strong as its borrowers. From the thrusting skyscrapers of the giant bank holding companies in Houston and Dallas to the shopping-center banks of West Texas and Oklahoma, plunging oil prices have touched off a regional banking crisis.

The energy industry's decline has spread in a chain reaction through the Southwest, cutting real estate values, boosting unemployment and slashing retail sales. The region's banks reflect the troubles as their loan losses rise and their profits and stock prices tumble.

More than 50 banks have failed in Texas and Oklahoma in the past three years and the pace is quickening. The big Texas banks, which just a few years ago were the darlings of Wall Street, today are viewed as wounded, some perhaps fatally. These proud and aggressive institutions, whose growth in the 1970s paralleled that of the booming oil industry, today are shrinking and worrying about survival.

Federal regulators are eyeing energy lenders with growing anxiety and have asked Congress for broad powers to rescue troubled oil patch banks. New York and California banks have been quietly approached ter increases, jumping 3.2 percent for the period and 6 percent during March, over last year's figures.

A spokesman for Texaco U.S.A., which completed the sale of its 17,000-bopd El Paso refinery and products terminal in Midland to El Paso Refining Co. Ltd., earlier this week, said that during the first quarter of the year performance at the El Paso facility mirrored the national trends toward increased deliveries and higher utilization rates.

Nationwide refinery utilization rates stand 3.8 percentage points higher for the first three months of 1986 at 77.9 percent, compared to 74.1 percent last year.

Shell Oil Co.'s Odessa refinery was atypical of both national trends and usual operating procedures during the first quarter, according to D.R. (Don) Deister, operations superintendent. In anticipation of a March shutdown for maintenance, the company decreased deliveries in January and February to build its inventories prior to the maintenance turnaround.

Despite what Deister called the plant's "special situation", refinery utilization before and after the maintenance period has been running very close to its 30,000 bopd capacity rating.

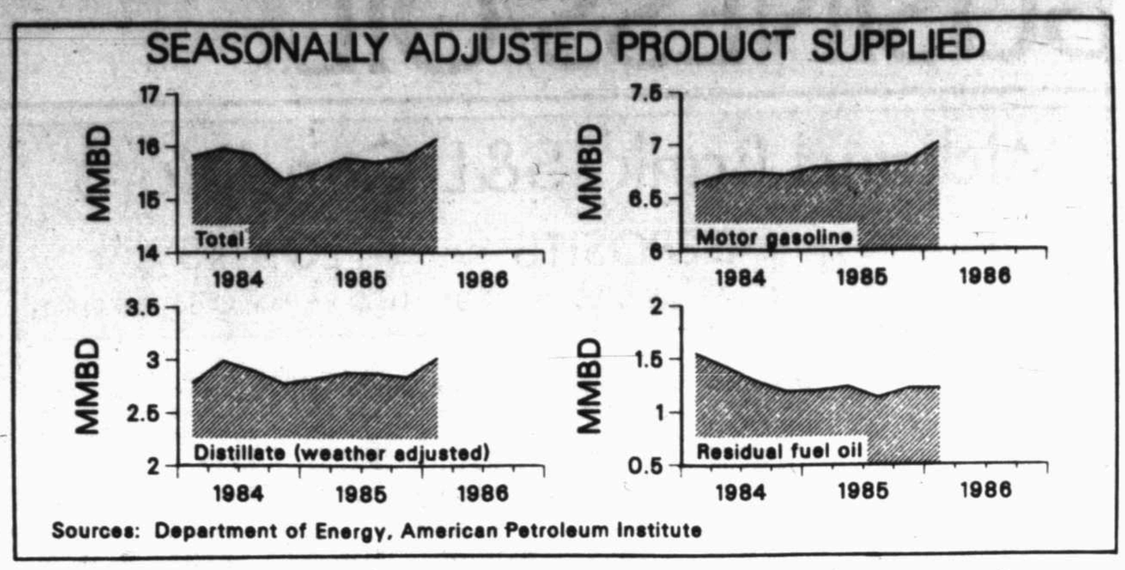

El Paso Refining assumed control of the former Texaco refinery and terminal without interrupting operations, a Texaco spokesman noted. The refinery's utilization rate continues "very high, in keeping with Texaco's national domestic refining facility average, in excess of 90 percent," he added.

David Jones, former chairman of the board of Abilene-based Pride Refining Inc., and Michael Shelton, previously vice president of Pride, are the founders of El Paso Refining, new operator of the plant and the former Texaco product delivery terminal near Midland Regional Airport.

Product supply increases were strong across the board in all product categories (see chart at right), with the largest jumps coming in the last month of the quarter:

- gasoline deliveries, which were up by 3.2 percent for the quarter, flew up by 6 percent in March over last March;
- distillate fuel deliveries climbed 2.9 percent during the January to March period, with a 9.8 percent increase in March alone;
- kerosene jet fuel deliveries were up 4.9 percent in March, but showed a 12 percent gain for the entire quarter;
- residual fuel oil deliveries slipped less than 1 percent in March but totaled 1.2 percent more than last year's first quarter; and,
- deliveries of other oils, including chemical feedstocks, rose 7.9 percent, on the strength of a 12.7 percent gain in March.

Increases in imports during the first quarter over year-ago figures are inflated because of below trend import totals in 1985, which were due to price uncertainties. Quarterly overall import totals show an 18 percent jump, but the API report says that after correcting for 1985 below-trend volumes, that the increase is approximately 7 percent.

termination on the employee. The first priority for the organization is to help the fired employee find another job. This will ease the financial burden on the employee and minimize rate increases in the company's unemployment compensation costs.

Another financial consideration is how much severance to pay. Most often, the amount is based on job level and length of service with the company. Other factors influencing severance pay include cause of the termination, company's ability to pay, length of notice, competitive practices and the market conditions which affect how long the employee may be searching for a comparable job. After determining upper limits on costs, the company's severance package can be scaled to recognize these variables.

■ What are the social needs in terminating an employee, and how will they be handled? Social needs must also be recognized in terminating an employee. Being fired can be an extreme emotional shock. It puts high stress on the employee and family, as well as the firing manager. Firing someone often has a ripple effect on the remaining employees too. They feel the loss of a co-worker and may also fear for their future. Surviving employees often have feelings of guilt, anxiety, distrust, fear and insecurity. According to a report released by the Goodrich & Sherwood Co., New York, "The syndrome affects morale first, and if unchecked, will ultimately damage company productivity and the bottom line. The important fact for managers to realize is that the survivors' syndrome is very predictable. The syndrome appears following mass layoffs, so managers should prepare to lessen the severity of the syndrome. To meet these complex social needs, the firing manager needs to know how to fire someone which requires training and preparation, often sponsored by the company.

Lee Poe of Lendman Associates and Chuck Imhoff, a local consultant, suggest a comprehensive "Outplacement Program" for terminated employees with the following areas of support.

First provide emotional support. Help the employee redirect his anger toward a more constructive job search effort. Fire on Mondays (not the traditional Friday) so the employee can immediately go to work at his new job of finding a job. Also, do the firing in the morning so there's time to think before the employee takes the bad new home. Help the employee with their self-esteem because the loss of a job directly hurts their sense of self-worth and belonging. Make sure their past contributions and ability are recognized and never fire someone in public.

Second, proved operational support to help with their job search. Professional and managerial employees typically are provided help with temporary office space, phones and typing.

Third, provide training and guidance in how to find a job. This includes help in writing a resume or instructions for completing an employment application. It includes contacts with headhunters or local employers by ads or telephone calls. Training in how to respond to ads and how to interview is also very important.

Fourth, the employee needs all the financial support the organization can realistically afford. A rule of thumb in professional job searches suggests that it takes one month of job search time for every ten thousand dollars in salary. And the expense of looking for a job often requires $2,000 to $3,000 in out-of-pocket expenses.

Poe and Imhoff suggest that a formal Outplacement Program is the best means to plan and manage the firing of one or several employees. In an Outplacement Program, the operational, financial and social needs of the organization and fired employees are coordinated and controlled. Using internal resources or professional outplacement counselors, the organization with an Outplacement Program manages firing so it does the least harm possible.

Because each organization and firing situation is unique, these suggestions are only general guidelines.

But there is one universal rule that managers should always apply to firing someone...Do unto those you must fire as you would have them do to you.

"Things are going to get better, and there is plenty of opportunity for turnaround that will change the situations that are facing local businesses today," said Lyons, "but until that time comes, organizations should make use of the best programs outlined above to help employees and employers overcome the tense times they are experiencing."

Rig counts see slower decline this week

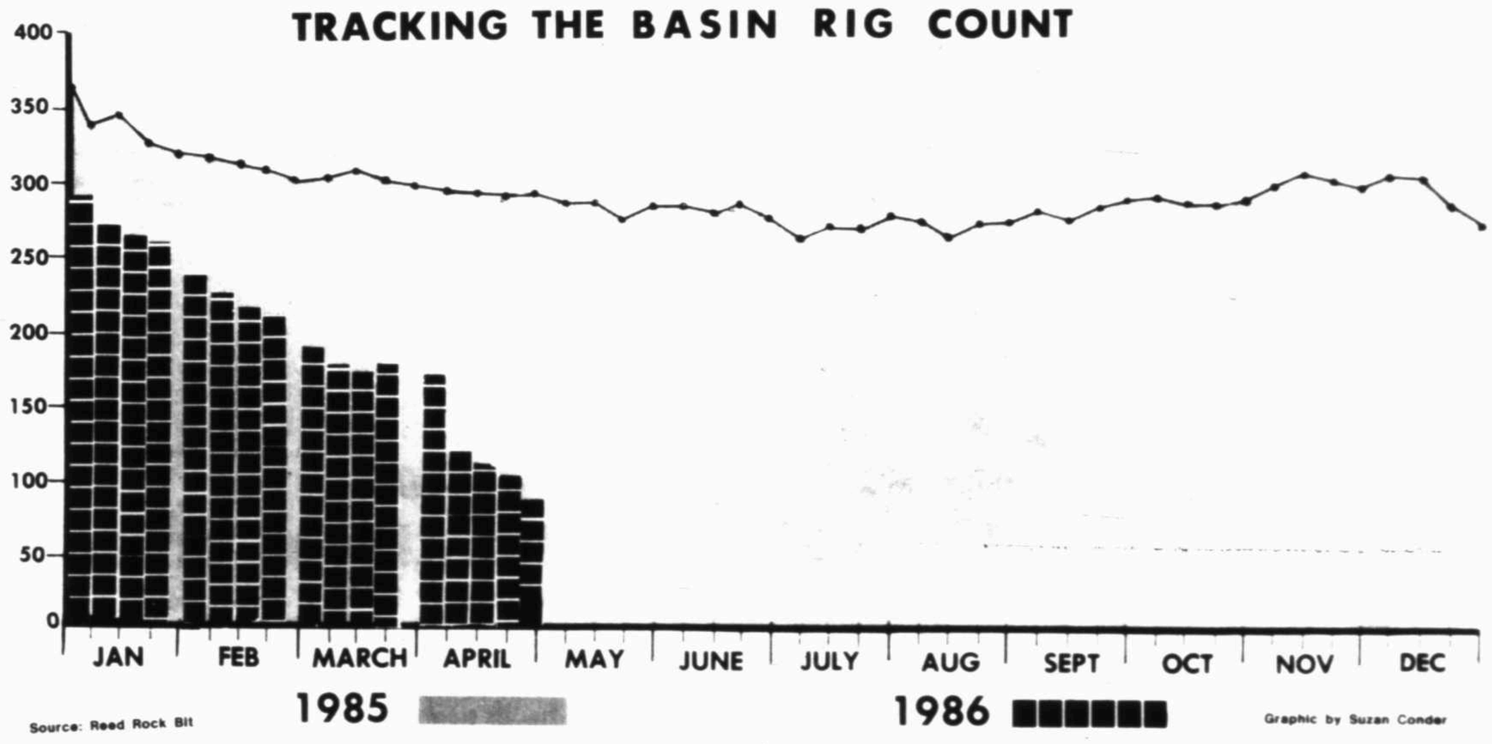

Although the rig counts in the U.S. and Permian Basin continued to decline, the drop was not as steep as the previous eight weeks. The Basin count fell by six according to the lastest figures released by Reed Rock Bit, while Hughes Tool showed a decrease of five in the area. Reports from the IADC show the U.S. count falling by ten this week.

Locally, District 8 continued to be the most active district in the Permian Basin with a total of 40 rigs working there. District 7C showed a total of 13, while District 8A has 24 rigs at work and Southeast New Mexico tallied total activity of 23 rigs.

Nationally, Texas posted the highest decrease, down 12 rigs, while Louisiana lost five and Pennsylvania fell by four. Increases were posted in Michigan, up six; New Mexico and Oklahoma, jumping three rigs each, and Wyoming climbing two.

One year ago the national count was at 1,855 and the Basin had 291 rigs working.

Legislators will introduce interstate banking measure

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — House Speaker Jim Barker vowed Monday to push legislation that would allow limited interstate banking as soon as the measure is signed by Gov. George Nigh.

Rep. Benny Vanatta, chairman of the House Banking and Finance Committee, said the proposal would allow out-of-state banks to buy a failing or failed bank in Oklahoma.

He also is proposing that full interstate banking be allowed by July 1, 1987.

Barker, D-Muskogee, said he was concerned banks within the state would not have the capital to rescue a large bank should one fail.

"Significant quantities" of capital could be poured into Oklahoma by the out-of-state banks, Barker said, and the revenue could help "refuel Oklahoma's economic recovery."

At meetings with banking officials last week, Vanatta said those involved agreed interstate banking would help "solve the critical situation within the banking industry" in Oklahoma.

Declines in the energy industry and agriculture are jeopardizing some Oklahoma banks, Vanatta said.

Vanatta, D-Sapulpa, said it is important the measure be adopted immediately so the state "can reap the dividends that might come from such an endeavor."

"We're in a crisis situation," Vanatta said.

Bob Harris, executive director of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, said the law would require that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. determine a bank to have failed, or to be certified as failing, before an out-of-state bank could move in, and that efforts had been made to secure an Oklahoma buyer.

Vanatta said the out-of-state banks would not be allowed to operate branch banks or multi-bank holding companies when full interstate banking takes effect, unless they had been in business in Oklahoma for four years or were located in a state with a reciprocal agreement with Oklahoma.

Reciprocal agreements would not apply to the purchase of individual banks, Harris said.

According to Harris, 29 states have some kind of interstate banking laws and five do not have any reciprocal requirements.

Harris said of the 537 banks in Oklahoma, 50 are problem banks.

He said there has been "growing concern about the financial ability of Oklahoma's banks to absorb the potential failure of the larger institutions."

The proposal follows a discussion last week between members of the state bankers association and FDIC Chairman William Seidman, Harris said.

Siedman was in Oklahoma three weeks ago and described the state's economy as being in a near-depression.

Parker Drilling well control school offered

The Petroleum Section of the National Safety Council is sponsoring a Minerals Management Service Certified Well Control School May 6 through May 9 at the Parker Drilling Co. Training Facility located at the OIME complex on Highway 80 between Odessa and Midland.

The four day course is open to the first 20 persons who enroll by calling the Parker Training Facility, 563-0602. The normal $550 course fee is being waived and participants are required to pay only a $100 material fee.

MMS certification for the position of driller, toolpusher or company representative can be given only to those persons who have had on-the-job work experience in the job classification, as certified by their supervisors.

All three in those job classifications who work on drilling rigs offshore and on U.S. government land are required to have this certified training. Many operating oil companies also require drilling contractor personnel to be certified. The hands-on part of the training will take place on the Parker Drilling Training Facility's DS-100 rig floor simulator.

Sluggish sales plague AMC

DETROIT (AP) — American Motors Corp., which instituted budget and staff cutbacks a year ago, says it lost $18.9 million in the first quarter, an improvement from 1985's first three months.

AMC cited continued sluggish sales of subcompact cars and the costs of launching the Jeep Wrangler, which replaced the Jeep CJ. The last of the World War II-derivative CJs was assembled Jan. 28.

In the quarter a year ago, AMC lost $29 million. The new figures put AMC's cumulative losses since 1980 at $759 million.

AMC has said that it doesn't expect significant profits until it can launch a new line of larger, more profitable cars. Those midsize cars are to be produced beginning in 1987 at a new plant in Brampton, Ontario.

President Joseph Cappy said in a statement that AMC expects some improvement to begin this fall when it introduces a sporty imported car from Renault and again in spring 1987 when it introduces a Renault compact and a high-priced Renault sports car.

The French automaker Regie Nationale des Usines Renault controls AMC with a 46 percent stock ownership. Imports of Renault vehicles have slowed to a trickle in the past year, cutting AMC's sales and depriving AMC dealers of showroom traffic.

Sales of the subcompact Renault Alliance and Encore cars assembled by AMC in Kenosha, Wis., are off by nearly 40 percent from a year ago. The only other car AMC makes is the low-volume Eagle, a four-wheel drive compact assembled in Canada.

AMC has cut production to less than half capacity in Kenosha and instituted systemwide cutbacks in budgets and staff to deal with the losses. The popular Jeep family wagons and utility vehicles, being assembled at record rates in Toledo, Ohio, are highly profitable and considered a dike holding back a flood of red ink.

Sales were down 1 percent to $918.2 million compared with $919.4 million in the year-ago quarter.

BANKS

deposits, Franklin observed, "People are looking for different forms of investment like government and municipal bonds and tax-free investments."

ClayDesta National Bank dropped about $4 million in deposits and $2.8 million in loans, after showing growth for the several previous quarters. "There are a couple of contributing factors: first, there is a typical drop in the first quarter, after the year's end build up of drilling dollars, which most firms drill up early in the year; second, the area economy has caused business to drop off," stated president David Jones.

Jones added, "Our oil and gas portfolio is progressively amortized, so paydowns follow that curve. In today's environment with no new lending, you begin to see that amortization taking hold."

Western Bank followed the trend of most area banks, with a decrease of about 6.5 percent in both deposits and loans. "The overall shrinkage was by design," stated Bill Parker, president. "We will continue to show some tightening of the ship to weather uncertain economic times."

United Bank's deposits, at just over $89 million, represent a decrease of $3.5 million, while the $58.5 million in loans is a drop of $2.2 million. President Don Jones said that the drop was expected this time of year. "When the price of crude is down, net deposits are down. Also, at tax time, Midland deposits decline in the first quarter on a historical basis." Jones doesn't expect a big increase soon. "In this area, you can usually track deposits with the rig count."

Security National President Jim McCain noted his bank's loss is indicative of the flat economy. "Loan demand is very weak and we expect the economy to remain flat until oil prices stabilize."

Steve Holt, senior vice president, Midland American Bank, said the historical drop in deposits was primarily seen in transaction accounts, with people paying off year-end bills. "We are grateful for our loan increase, which we attribute to normal consumer activity."

Texas Commerce posted quarter-end figures of $51 million in deposits and $29.8 million in loans, a slight decrease from last quarter. "People are getting more liquid and we will continue to see the numbers moving quite a bit until the oil price uncertainty is stabilized," stated president Ed Jones. "Bank totals are just a reflection of the local economy," he added.

"As a corporate citizen of Midland, Texas American Bank is experiencing the same problems as everyone else," noted Steve Landy, TAB president. The runoff in deposits is a typical seasonal fluctuation every year as depositors pay off Christmas bills and the IRS.

On the thrift front, comments were slightly more optimistic, reflecting a healthier growth pattern, particularly in deposits.

First Banker's Trust & Savings posted a 6 and one-half percent increase in deposits over the same period a year ago. "We feel good about those numbers with the economical situation here," stated Fred Cooledge, senior vice president. He added, "We have been aggressive with the interest rates we're paying on deposit accounts and that is all we can attribute our growth to." First Banker's total deposits for the first quarter were $105.7 million, while loans, which were also up from a year ago were $92.7 million.

First Federal Savings & Loan experienced a decrease of just less than one million in deposits. According to Midland Branch manager, Don Rardin, "The people with large dollars to invest are cashing in their certificates and purchasing bonds and other investments with a higher yield." Rardin said even though area savings & loans posted a stronger first quarter than area banks, that did not mean they were not feeling the crunch of the local economy. "Banks are a short-term barometer of the business community. They show the effects right away in their commercial loan portfolios. The S&L's, however, are more long-term indicators of what the economy is doing."

Fred Holmeyer, president at Petroplex Savings, indicated that the drop in that S&L's deposit and loan figures was a normal trend for the economic situation. "When there is curtailed activity in both the energy and construction industries, you are going to see that reflected in the banks and S&L's. We will expect to see more of the same in the next quarter until the current economic trend is reversed and the oil industry stabilizes," he added.

Briercroft was another S&L that managed to post a sizeable increase for the quarter. The deposit total of $93.2 million compares with a $69.3 million total for the same quarter a year ago. "We are picking up some of the deposits that the bank's are losing. In the past, the S&L's lost funds through some bad publicity. Now that the industry has stabilized, we're getting some of those funds back," stated president Kerry McReynolds. Briercroft also posted a gain in its loan portfolio, however, that gain was not as significant as the deposit growth.

Home Savings & Loan Association senior vice president Jay Norris attributed the substantial increases in the company's loan portfolio to Home Savings' aggressive refinancing programs. Growth on the deposit side of the ledger was primarily due to "a good IRA season, and people accumulating dollars for tax deposits later in the year," Norris explained.

about the possibility of buying ailing banks in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, proposals that have led some Southwestern bankers to express fear of shotgun marriages to out-of-state megabanks.

The failure of a major Texas or Oklahoma bank holding company would send shock waves through the nation's banking network that could dwarf the effects of the 1982 collapse of Oklahoma's Penn Square Bank, a reckless energy lender that nearly took down with it important banks in Detroit, Chicago and Seattle. The depth of regulators' concern is evidence of how delicate and interlinked the nation's financial system has grown.

The troubles that Texas banks face today dramatize the dangers of overlending in a cyclical industry, of doing business with friends, of wrong assumptions about energy prices. Lending to "th' awl bidness," for a decade an easy route to status and prosperity, has led many today to the brink of disaster.

The Midland-Odessa "Petroplex" is the heart of the Permian Basin, a geological formation that produces 25 percent of America's oil and gas. It is home to scores of independent oil producers, drillers and oilfield service companies. Nearly everyone who lives and works here has ties to the oil industry, and falling oil prices have sent the region's economy into a tailspin.

Banks, as always, are at the center of the complex web of economic links among companies, their employees and suppliers, and the communities in which they operate. The current crisis has strained the once-easy personal relationships between bankers and borrowers — nurtured over drinks, on the golf course, at Kiwanis meetings. "Good ole boy banking," one West Texas lender said, is dying.

"It's hard to go out in the community, out to the country club, and see our charge-offs," said Larry Hearn, president of Permian Bank in Odessa. "It's a bitter pill."

Richard McInnis, Permian's chairman, added: "Ten years ago, you used to lend money to your friends. Now you don't even wait on them in the lobby. I used to hunt and fish and run with all my customers. Not any more."

Permian Bank, which barely survived massive loan losses under previous managers, has shrunk from $125 million in assets in 1983 to $40 million today. It laid off 63 of its 105 employees over the same period, as it recorded net losses of $20 million.

A bank typically lends between 50 percent and 80 percent of the value of collateral, which in the energy business is usually either "iron" (drilling equipment) or oil or gas in the ground. If the security — in this case a drilling rig — sells for 10 cents on the dollar because no new wells are being drilled, the bank eats the difference. And it wouldn't take many million-dollar losses to put a bank with net worth of $3 million, like Permian, under water.

Permian's problems have many causes, but key among them was that it broke the first rule of oil patch banking: Lend on oil, not iron. Oil in the ground will always have some value, but an idle rig generates no cash. It's a rule that many of Permian's big Houston and Dallas competitors also forgot.

The tall, urbane chairman of Texas Commerce Bancshares is, in effect, Houston's ambassador to the world. His board of directors is a sampling of all that matters in Texas: big oil, big construction, society, media, politics. It includes former President Gerald R. Ford. Former Congresswoman Barbara Jordan. Lady Bird Johnson. Developer Harlan R. Crow. Prominent oilmen Bob Mosbacher and R.W. Moncrief. Former Energy Secretary Charles W. Duncan Jr. Houston Chronicle Publisher J.H. Creekmore.

Before he went to Washington, Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III sat on the TCB board, as did his father and grandfather. Mesa Petroleum Chairman T. Boone Pickens quit the board last year when he closed his Houston office.

Texas Commerce, more than any other Texas bank, benefited from and symbolized Texas' explosive growth in the 1970s. Ben Love ran the team as it recorded an astounding 66 consecutive quarters of earnings growth, 16 undefeated seasons. His is the biggest building on Houston's towering skyline.

Then, last year, Houston's biggest bank was blindsided, with profits falling 71 percent from 1984 levels amid embarrassing revelations of large losses on personal and business loans to two rich oilmen who sat on the TCB board. These hits were accompanied by a drastic decline in Houston's overall economy and a rising vacancy rate in scores of buildings whose construction TCB had financed.

The bank's economists forecast falling oil prices but never dreamed they would fall so far and so fast. At the end of last year, Love began to emphasize over and over in meetings with his top executives that the bank must strive to improve the quality of its loans rather than booking new business. Total assets fell to $18.6 billion at the end of this year's first quarter, compared to $19.9 billion a year ago.

"Playing defense," Love calls it, and he doesn't like it.

But he insists that Texas Commerce will survive and prosper again some day.

While Texas Commerce's fall from grace has been dramatic, its problems are not as bad as those of some of its competitors. First City Bancorporation, based in Houston, is considered the weakest of Texas' six major bank holding companies and is rumored to be the most likely candidate for a forced merger. Banking regulators will not comment on the rumors, however.

First City, the nation's 30th-largest banking company, reported losses of $232.4 million in the first quarter of 1986 after setting aside $275 million for possible future loan losses. The bank is the state's biggest lender to the stricken oilfield service and drilling sector, with $745 million in loans to such companies. Its real estate portfolio exceeds $3.5 billion, including more than $1 billion in the depressed Houston market.

MCorp, with headquarters in Dallas, also suffered a painful first quarter, losing $119.9 million. It increased its provision for loan losses by $220 million, 10 times the figure for the first quarter of 1985.

InterFirst, also based in Dallas, recorded a bare $2.1 million first-quarter profit as it continues a slow recovery from its 1983 disaster, when it lost $172 million. The bank, which three years ago was the state's largest, has written off $849 million in bad loans since 1983 and has dropped to third place.

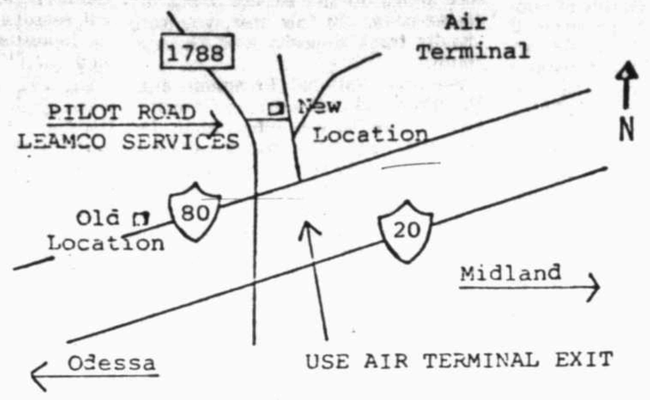

Texas Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton said that banks cannot dodge the larger economic forces battering their communities. And he fears that financial stress, unemployment and foreclosures in energy-producing regions could lead to the kind of violence against oil patch bankers that has erupted in farming communities over the past several years.

"Of course I worry about it," Sexton said. "I hate to see that kind of unrest and the underlying conditions that cause it."

Texas Air Corp. expects to finalize Eastern acquisition

CHICAGO (AP) — Despite a report that a rival bid may be in the works for Eastern Airlines, the company says it expects its acquisition by the Texas Air Corp. to go through.

The Wall Street Journal reported Wednesday that Jay Pritzker, whose family controls Braniff Inc. and the Hyatt Inc. hotel chain, has been negotiating with labor unions representing Eastern's employees. The Journal also said Pritzer has been weighing the chances of bidding for Eastern.

The Journal said the Machinists union might be willing to make wage concessions if Pritzker were to make an offer for the airline.

There was no comment Wednesday from the Machinists union.

Dan Vician, secretary-treasurer of the Eastern Pilots Master Executive Council, said his union — the Air Line Pilots Association — had employed Lazard Freres & Co., a New York investment firm, before the Eastern-Texas Air deal.

Lazard Freres was told to "look around" for a potential buyer because of the possibility of a merger deal involving Eastern, Vician said. Union members own stock in the company and want the best price if they are to be bought out, he said.

The investment firm has talked with Pritzker, Vician said, "but they probably talked with a million others, too."

Vician said he did not know any details of the talks with Pritzker.

Eastern, based in Miami, agreed in February to be acquired by the Houston-based Texas Air for $600 million. The unions, however, have been unhappy with this arrangement because of Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo's tough reputation in dealing with unions.

Glenn Parsons, a spokesman for Eastern, said the airline has not been contacted by any of the principals mentioned in the possible Pritzker bid.

"We don't really anticipate anything, but the deal with Texas Air will go down," Parsons said. "A deal's a deal. We don't expect there will be any delay."

A spokesman for Texas Air, Bruck Hicks, said his airline knows nothing of any Pritzker interest in acquiring Eastern.

But, he said, union negotiations with anyone other than Eastern or its designated bargaining agent are a violation of federal law.

If the contract between Texas Air and Eastern is disrupted by any such negotiations, Hicks said, the parties involved could be sued for damages.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Rather

Q. Could you please give me some background on CBS anchor Dan Rather?
Arthur S. Lassow
Manchester, Conn.

A. He's 54, from Houston, the son of a waitress and a pipeline worker, who also put in time on an oil rig and pumping gas to work his way through school (Sam Houston State Teachers College, the University of Houston and South Texas School of Law). After a stint in the Marines, he worked for UPI and the Houston Chronicle but switched to radio broadcasting (which he'd tried while in college) because his spelling was bad and radio paid $20 a week more.

His switch to radio, specifically the CBS radio affiliate KTRH in Houston, was also beneficial personally and professionally: He met his wife of 29 years, Jean, there; and his work led him to CBS's TV affiliate. His coverage of Hurricane Carla in 1961 for that TV affiliate, KHOU, was so impressive that the network heads noticed and brought him north to New York.

Two years later, he decided to return to Texas on special assignment to cover John F. Kennedy's trip to Dallas and his clear, continuous coverage of the JFK assassination made him, in the network's eyes, a star. The following year, he was made White House correspondent and over the next 10 years conducted tough, public and highly quoted questioning of presidents Johnson and Nixon. He also wrote a novel, "The Palace Guard."

In 1975, he left the White House for a spot on "60 Minutes," where he earned a reputation for being inexhaustible, hard-driving and adventurous, as illustrated by his 1980 infiltration of an Afghan rebel camp.

That, combined with pictures of him in his undercover outfit earned him the nickname Gunga Dan as well. The next year, though, he moved to a more sedentary spot as Walter Cronkite's successor on "The CBS Evening News."

He and his wife have a daughter, Robin, 27, and a son, Dan Jr., 25, who reportedly once remarked to a visiting friend, "Oh, that's Dan Rather" when the hardworking, rarely home newsman made an infrequent trip home during their childhood. When he isn't working now, he likes to go fishing and listen to Willie Nelson records.

Matheson

Q. I am a really big fan of Tim Matheson. Could you tell me everything about him?
M.E.
Donaldson
Baton Rouge, La.

A. He's 38, was born December 31, 1947 in Glendale, Calif., the son of a pilot and a municipal court clerk who divorced when he was 6. When he was 10, he saw Charles Laughton's performance in the film "Witness for the Prosecution" and decided, then and there, to become an actor.

Two years later, he did; his next door neighbor, a child actor, took him to acting classes where he was discovered by an agent. Appearances followed on such series as "Twilight Zone," "Leave it to Beaver" and "My Three Sons," and films such as "Yours, Mine and Ours." After high school, he enrolled at Cal State University as a psychology major but dropped out after a year and returned to acting at the Actors and Directors Lab in Hollywood.

He practiced his stagecraft at the Old Globe Shakespeare Festival in San Diego and as a contract player for Universal, appeared as a guest star in a lot of TV series, among them "Ironside," "Night Gallery," "Medical Center" and "Police Story."

He was also a regular on "Bonanza" for a year and co-starred with Kurt Russell in a series called "The Quest." He then moved back into films: "Magnum Force," "National Lampoon's Animal House" and recently "A Little Sex," "To Be or Not To Be," "Fletch" and the TV movie "Blind Justice."

He also veered into directing with an episode of "St. Elsewhere." Currently, he's in the process of developing TV movies for his production company, in which he would star, but nothing has been confirmed as yet.

Q. Please tell me about Wilford Brimley. He seems familiar, but I can't remember what movies I've seen him in.
John Lee
Claremont, Calif.

A. He's one of the most in-demand character actors in the business, which means he always does first-rate supporting performances, but audiences aren't supposed to remember or notice him — they're supposed to notice the star.

You've seen him in "The China Syndrome," "The Electric Horseman," "Tender Mercies," "The Natural," Brubaker," "Cocoon," "Remo Williams: The Adventure Begins" and as a semi-regular, a number of seasons back, on "The Waltons." You should also see him on TV next season as the star of a series called "14 Napoleon Street."

Q. Please settle an argument. In the first version of the film "Magnificent Obsession," were Robert Taylor and Irene Dunne the stars? My sister is sure it starred Robert Taylor and Loretta Young. Who is correct?
M. Whitenack
Cape May, N.J.

A. You are. The 1935 film starred Robert Taylor and Irene Dunne.

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write JOSIE: SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235th E. 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017. Sorry, we can't answer any letters individually.

©1985 King Features' Syndicate Inc. All rights reserved.

Q. Please answer; there's a $100 bet riding on this. Was Phil Collins ever married to Liza Minnelli?
M and J
Trenton, N.J.

A. No. He was married once before his current marriage to Jill Tavelman and she, twice before her current marriage to Mark Gero; but never to each other.

Arness

Q. I would like to know what happened to James Arness who played the marshal on "Gunsmoke."
B. Holley
Midland, Texas

A. He continued acting after the show ended, although he hasn't been active in recent years. He is coming back as Marshall Dillon, however, in a reunion "Gunsmoke" TV movie due to air on CBS next season.

Q. Recently, I heard the end of a story about the death of Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme's son. Can you tell me what happened?
Mrs. D.F.N.
Midland, Texas

A. Their 21-year-old son, Michael, died unexpectedly on February 5 at his home in Los Angeles. After a month-long postmortem, the Los Angeles County Coroner concluded that he died from natural causes, a heart condition.

Patrick Swayze plays Orry Main in the mini-series "North and South — Book II," which begins tonight on ABC.

Swayze says it 'Without a Word'

By FRED ROBBINS
King Features

New heartthrob Patrick Swayze — big, brawny, talented, smolderingly handsome — is a realist. "Just as fast as you're hot, you can be not hot," he observes. He says this despite having a handful of hit movies in his flourishing career, including the much-praised "Uncommon Valor" and, at the moment, "Youngblood."

Not to mention that he now returns to co-star in the second 12 hours of ABC-TV's $50 million miniseries "North and South," which begins tonight.

Swayze, who is 33, and hopes to stay hot, frets about the fact that after repeatedly "playing young" in movies like "The Outsiders" and "Red Dawn," he has acquired a considerable teen-age fan following and a reputation as a hunk. Which is not at all the direction he cares to go. "North and South," to which he has devoted 15 months of his life, has been part of his campaign to change all that.

Swayze, bronzed and decidedly mod in gray jeans and a checkered scarlet-and-white sports shirt, said of his role: "Orry, as a young man, was difficult to play. He was written as a self-pitying, bitter victim. Nobody identifies with someone who's a victim in his own life.

"I had to find a way to make people care about this guy. I figured the way to do it was to have him continuing to fight, never giving up. He did not just bury his life in a bottle of alcohol after he became a cripple or after the love of his life married someone else."

The way he handled the role apparently worked, because, Swayze reports, "The amount of fan mail I get now is staggering. The thing any actor wants and needs to know is that he has affected people. And the audience fell in love with that character, men and women alike. They saw him, as I did, as a man of honor."

"North and South," he inserts, also carried a most gratifying personal bonus. "God, what a blessing it is," he says, "to stand in front of a camera with people who are legends — people like Jimmy Stewart and Elizabeth Taylor — and have them take you seriously as an actor. Why, I would have given my left finger to even get the opportunity to meet these people."

As to what happens in the next dozen episodes of North and South, Swayze claims he doesn't "want to give away too much" and spoil the pleasure of viewers. "But," he says, "basically it's wartime. Orry gets a little older, he becomes a brigadier general and he finds answers in his life.

"So this role has been very exciting for me. It's broken the pattern of the young macho dudes I've done and lets me play a man who matures over many years. That's a chance I've been hoping to get for quite a while."

The surprising thing is that it didn't happen sooner. Texas-born Swayze (rhymes with "daisy") is not a particularly patient young man. He is not one to wait and dream about things that might happen. "I believe you create your own luck," he forcefully says. And more than once he has given his life a rigorous shaking up.

Not many ballet stars — and he was one with the prestigious Eliot Field Ballet — go on to full-time careers as dramatic actors on the screen. Hanging up his ballet shoes eight years ago, he moved from New York to Hollywood with a single goal in mind — he was going to be an actor. To this end, wisely, he'd already begun studying drama. And he had a role model in mind — Jack Nicholson. "I just hope I can come near his level of talent."

"Actually," Swayze confides, "the decision to change careers was forced on me. I'd had so many knee operations that I had to quit dancing. It was like my life had been robbed. But, as thing worked out, it was a clear case of a negative becoming a positive."

With his wife Lisa, and a friend, Nicholas Gunn — both also dancers — Swayze has recently written a play-with-music, "Without a Word," that's based on this theme. When they staged and appeared in it at the Beverly Hills Playhouse, the show won the Los Angeles drama critics' award for both its writing and performance. The play helped him "exorcise some demons about having had to quit dancing," he says.

The title "Without a Word," Swayze says, "means that when you don't have a choice in certain situations, you accept this and move forward without complaint. The play deals with each of the three of us as dancers, revealing the effects this life had on us — how it did or didn't work for us."

Having to give up dancing, Swayze says, was devastating to him because, in dance, you experience "an incomparable freedom, an ecstasy, a flight." But now in movies, as one starring role follows another, he notes: "I've found a different kind of freedom and ecstasy that occurs when you truly key into a character and that guy lives, breathes and walks."

The glowing reviews he's received in such pictures as "Grandview, U.S.A." and "Three for the Road" give some indication of how successful he has been in making his characters come alive.

He gives major credit for this to his previous career. "Dance has come into play in everything in my life. I've gotten to the top quickly as an actor; I truly believe, because of the dancing.

Some famous people sing praise about their mothers

By GERALDINE R. FOTY
King Features

Anna Jarvis, an unmarried school teacher from West Virginia, started it all. She was 41 when she began a crusade to establish Mother's Day. In 1914 Woodrow Wilson signed the proclamation that the second Sunday in May — the anniversary of the death of Anna's mother — should be observed as a special day for mothers.

Since then, the day has become a time for cheer and despair. Ms. Jarvis led the complaints herself. "They're commercializing my Mother's Day," she wrote in hundreds of newspapers. Later she told a reporter she was sorry she had started the whole thing.

Abigail Van Buren, writer of the "Dear Abby" column, once wrote, "Mother's Day is a day of gladness to most mothers, but not for all. I should know. For weeks following Mother's Day, my desk is covered with tear-stained letters of mothers who have been snubbed, slighted or forgotten."

The relationship between mother and child has always been special. According to a Jewish proverb, "A mother understands what a child does not say."

So first some "sweet" comments from some well-known persons on their mothers.

Thomas Edison: "My mother was the making of me. She was so true and so sure of me, I felt that I had someone to live for — someone I must not disappoint. The memory of my mother will always be a blessing to me."

Ralph Waldo Emerson: "Men are what their mothers make them."

Joe Namath: "She prays to two saints, one when we've got the ball, and one when the other team's got the ball. She's the only person I know who has an offensive and a defensive saint."

Namath

Onassis

Leachman

Taylor

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, about her mother-in-law, Rose Kennedy: "She just bent over backwards not to interfere. I loved her very much. And I do now."

John F. Kennedy: "She was the glue that held us together."

Mario Puzzo (writer): "I had every desire to go wrong, but I never had a chance. The Italian family structure was too formidable. I never came home to an empty house. There was always the smell of supper cooking, and my mother was there to greet me."

Cloris Leachman (Academy Award-winning actress): "She was a magician, a witch. She could make something out of nothing."

Edward W. Brooke (former senator from Massachusetts): "I have never been a hater. I think it is because my mother never hated anyone."

The Duke of Windsor, speaking about the sadness of his long exile after abdicating the British throne: "My mother was the only person I missed."

Edna St. Vincent Millay: "Mother, do you know, almost all people love their mothers, but I have never met anybody in my life, I think, who loved his mother as much as I love you."

Liberace: "There are so many things about my mother that I hold precious. I could probably write a whole book about her. And I just feel terrible sometimes that my appreciation of her as a lovable and very special person has been ridiculed."

Sigmund Freud: "A man who has been the indisputable favorite of his mother keeps for life the feelings of a conqueror, that confidence of success which frequently induces real success."

Woodrow Wilson, when his mother died: "My mother was a mother to me in the fullest, sweetest sense of the word, and her loss has left me with a sad, oppressed sense of having somehow suddenly lost my youth. I feel old and responsibility-ridden."

James Whistler, when the famous portrait of his mother was complimented: "Yes, one does like to make one's mummy just as nice as possible."

Marc Chagall: "My mother's love for me was so great that I have worked hard to justify it."

But not all the comments and myths about mothers are pleasant. Now for some "bitter" ones.

Please see MOTHERS, Page 2H

PATRICK

"It heightened my timing beyond belief and gave me a very flexible body.

"Your total expression as a dancer is through the physical. But it's more than just showing off your physical prowess, it's communicating an emotion or making a point through your body. All these things have served me well as an actor."

With the muscular build of a young Brando, the sensitivity of a Montgomery Clift and eyes as blue as lapis lazuli, Swayze had little difficulty making the leap from dancer to actor. To be sure, there were at first a few slack months. He stayed financially afloat then by falling back on his hobbies of carpentry and woodworking and restored the homes of several Hollywood stars like Jaclyn Smith.

After serving a brief apprenticeship in television — a "M*A*S*H" episode and such TV movies as "The Comeback Kid" and "Return of the Rebels" — Swayze landed his first lead in a big-screen film, "Skatetown U.S.A." This roller-disco flick may not have been the greatest movie ever made, but it provided a perfect showcase for the neophyte actor's virile talents.

But the picture that firmly launched him as a star was his next, director Francis Ford Coppola's "The Outsiders." This teen classic started on the road to fame an entire regiment of other young actos — Rob Lowe, Emilio Estevez and C. Thomas Howell among them — all soon to be known as frontrunners in Hollywood's Brat Pack.

"It's like the age of youth in the film industry now," Swayze allows, adding with a laugh, "but it's going to be funny to see how we all do when we start getting a little longer in the tooth.

"Since I am 10 years older than the oldest of these guys, I've been excluded from the Brat Pack label, and I'm glad of that. But I'm close to all these guys I started with.

"It created a real sense of camaraderie when every one of us from 'The Outsiders' took off. That sort of pulls us together, in terms of support for one another. If one of us is getting out of line, some other one will call up and say, 'Hey, what's going on with you? What's wrong? Want to talk?' "

Responding to the idea that Sean Penn, the so-called "leader" of the Brat Pack (whose start came in other movies) has acquired a controversial reputation and that critics have come down hard on him for, among other things, insulting reporters and hurling rocks at photographers, Swayze says, "I don't know Sean Penn. But I think that's stupid. How about a little old-fashioned humility? Besides, you have a responsibility to fans and the people in this business. It's not just for your own little ego. If it is, you're not going to last long — and I believe that with a passion."

As for himself, Swayze means to play by the rules and go the distance, being oriented by his years in sports and dance, dating from the time he was just a tyke.

"My inclination to entertain comes from being around a show-business mother, and I feel lucky for that," he says. For a long while, his mom, Patsy, headed her own company, the Houston Jazz Ballet. Now, besides choreographing movies like "Urban Cowboy" and "Liar's Moon," she operates a dance studio in Los Angeles.

"I don't remember a time when I wasn't dancing. My mother had me in tap class in a sailor uniform when I was 3. Also, she'd once been a semi-professional rollerskater, so she had me skating from the time I was little, and later I switched to ice skating.

"I studied martial arts for many years as well. My mother believed that, to be an artist, you had to be well-trained in all facets of the performing arts. There were five of us kids — I'm the oldest — and she instilled that in all of us."

Going in for athletics in school, Buddy, as he was known to family and friends, excelled in a variety of sports — track, gymnastics, swimming, diving and football. Upon his graduation from high school in Houston, he was offered college scholarships in each, along with offers of dance scholarships with three New York ballet companies.

Deciding to complete his education first, and settling on gymnastics, he studied for two years at Texas's San Jacinto College. (Explaining why he bypassed football after playing it for 11 years, he says with vehemence, "I hate football, and I hate hockey," which he was obliged to learn to play for the movie "Youngblood.")

"Those sports create a gladiator mentality. Their whole objective is to 'kill' the other guy. But in sports like gymnastics or, say, downhill racing, the competiton is with yourself. That's the most powerful competition and, I think, the only kind that should be encouraged.")

Throughout his early years in school, Swayze took his lumps for being locally well known as a ballet dancer. Reflectively, he says now, "It's always a fight to go against the grain. But if you want your dreams to happen, you must do it."

"On the other hand, it's hard for people to understand something that does not exist, or have any basis of reality, in their own lives. So I was involved in an unhappy situation there for a while. I got beat up a lot. Finally, I got beat up very badly. Then I decided nobody was ever going to do that to me again."

He refers to the time he was jumped by a gang of juvenile rowdies and left with broken ribs and a broken jaw.

The upshot was that, with the cooperation of the school athletic coach, he later fought each them, one on one, in the gymnasium boxing ring — and won.

"A strange thing happened after that," he confessed. "I watched myself become one of them. I sold out a portion of my ideals and went around just waiting for someone to try something so I could play Mr. Macho. Eventually I came to my senses and acknowledged this was a dead end. I realized I had to stay true to what I believed in and not give in to what other people might want me to be."

While in high school, Swayze acted in a number of plays at the Alley Theater in Houston. And, he relates, "Some of those guys that I'd fought would come up and say, 'Hey, Swayze, I saw you in that show the other night and I gotta tell you, you're pretty cool. Way to go, man.' That kind of validation made it all worth it."

For several months after leaving college, he toured the U.S. and Canada with "Disney on Parade," in which he was featured as Prince Charming.

He played the role in real life when he returned to Houston and was introduced to a young dancer, Lisa Niemi, who was a student of his mother's.

"I was 20 and she was 16 when we met," he says. "She was different from anyone I'd known. Like a flower."

Happily married for 10 years now and living together on a ranch in the San Gabriel foothills, where they raise and train quarterhorses for rodeos, he describes his wife as being, in every way, "my creative partner."

He also volunteers, "I do know beyond a shadow of a doubt that I'd be dead if it wasn't for Lisa. When we first got together, I was incredibly self-destructive. I didn't like myself very much. I was hell-bent on breaking my neck or ruining my life, sabotaging it in some way. She helped me learn to like myself, to see what was truly there to like and not what I'd choose to believe was there to like."

Now that he's "worked out a lot of insecurities," Swayze says, they are ready and eager to have a family. "I can't wait. I've been wanting to be a father for five years."

Swayze cannot talk about his ranch without speaking of his father, a drafting engineer, who died of a massive heart attack three years ago. The descendant of an early Texas cowboy, his dad had long harbored the hope of living on a ranch himself. And one of his ambitions, from the time he started in show business, was to make that dream come true.

"I never got to do that," he says, "so I'm building this paradise anyway, for myself. But my dad knows about it, I'm sure of that. When I'm around my horses and animals, I know he's with me every second."

Doubtless because so many of his own hopes have been realized — to reach the heights in ballet, to star in movies and on television, to have a successful marriage — Swayze speaks with the fervor of an evangelist on the importance of having and holding onto one's dreams.

"Our society," he says, "teaches us too often to compromise, to give up our dreams. It doesn't encourage us enough to fight hard to make them happen. Too many people put those dreams on the shelf in a shoebox and forget about them. Which is sad.

"If I could do nothing else with this career except stimulate people to take those dreams out of that shoebox, I'd think I had done something worthwhile in my life. The key to life is: Don't just dream — realize your dreams."

MOTHERS

Martin Luther: "If a woman grows weary and at last dies from childbearing, it matters not. Let her only die from bearing; she is there to do it."

Paul Erlich, a population expert: "The Mother of the Year should be a sterilized woman with two adopted children."

Philip Wylie (author of "Generation of Vipers," 1942): "Mom is a jerk." Later he said he was describing only the "destroying mothers, about one in 10," but the word "Mom" has never been the same since; sometimes her pedestal wobbles.

Eleanor Roosevelt, about her dominating mother-in-law, Sara Delano Roosevelt: "It is dreadful to have lived so close to someone for 36 years and feel no deep affection or sense of loss."

Judy Garland: "My mother was the stage mother of all time. She really was a witch. If I had a stomach ache and didn't want to go on, she'd say, 'Get out on that stage or I'll wrap you around a bedpost.' "

Then there are comments about and by "other mothers," the substitute or surrogate mothers.

Patsy Gray, (a 9-year-old essayist): "A grandmother doesn't have to do anything except be there...Everybody should try to have one, especially if you don't have television, because grandmas are the only grownups who have got time."

Ed McMahon: "Katie was not only my grandmother, but my friend."

Winston Churchill, whose mother, Jenny, was very busy in the Court social life: "It is a strange thing, the love of these women (nannies). Perhaps it is the only disinterested affection in the world."

Jane Addams, after her settlement house for motherless children was founded: "They all became mine."

The stepchildren of Mrs. Elizabeth Strong, on her gravestone in Marlboro, Mass.: "The stepchildren of the deceased, remembering with gratitude her kindness to them in their tender years, place this stone."

Elizabeth Taylor, one of the world's most glamorous grandmothers: "The baby is wonderful. She spit up all over me."

Liv Ullmann: "All my life I have read that a mother should and must be home with her child. My guilt is deep seated....I am afraid I am doing Linn an injustice."

There is a special relationship that does not fit into the usual slots — that of Mary Martin and her grandson, Matthew. Early one morning he led his friends into her bedroom, saying: "Meet my grandmother, Peter Pan."

For most of us Robert E. Lee expressed our feelings for our mothers when he spoke about his mother-in-law, Mary Custis: "She was to me all that a mother could be, and I yield to none in admiration for her character, love of her virtues and veneration for her memory."

Then there is a Jewish proverb that says it so well: "God couldn't be everywhere, so he made mothers."

'Starsky and Hutch's' Glaser turns to directing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Paul Michael Glaser, once Detective Dave Starsky of "Starsky and Hutch," has grown accustomed to having friends tease him.

"Gee, Paul, you finally found a way to work harder and earn less," they say.

He accomplished that feat by virtually turning his back on his acting career and becoming a director after the successful cop series ended in 1979. Glaser's first feature is now in the theaters. It is Tri-Star's "Band of the Hand," an action-full yarn in which five young Florida incorrigibles are trained in the Everglades by a rough Vietnam veteran, then return to the streets of Miami to combat an insidious drug czar.

It's not the kind of feature designed to draw raves from the critics, and it hasn't. Many reviewers drew a comparison to "Miami Vice," which is only natural since the executive producer, Michael Mann, also produces the series, and Glaser has directed for it. Tri-Star led with its chin by advertising "Band of the Hand" as "From the Maker of 'Miami Vice.' "

"The marketing approach is unfortunate," said Glaser. "It's not untrue, but it gives the wrong impression. The movie has its own look, its own values, its own problems. It is its own animal."

It all started when producer Mann admired an episode of "Starsky and Hutch," then discovered that it had been among the five directed by the series' co-star. Glaser was hired to direct two "Miami Vice" episodes last season, and then the two-hour show that opened the current season.

"I liked directing 'Miami Vice' because it allows a good deal of freedom," he said. "I like the atonality, the dissonance, the counterpoint of the show. And I enjoy directing to music. I play music all the time while I'm working or scouting locations, and I have the music in mind while I'm shooting. It may not be the same music that ends up on the sound track, but it will be something similar."

Along with co-star David Soul, Glaser experienced white-hot fame during the four years of "Starsky and Hutch." In subsequent years he has been offered numerous series, but declined.

"I don't think television is for me, at least not me as a performer," he said. "I found it too unfulfilling."

However, he did act a few times: a TV movie, "Wait Till Your Mother Comes Home," and a John Huston film made in Canada, "Phobia," which remains unreleased.

His main interest, though, is directing, and he made a few pilot films as well as a two-hour movie, 'Amazons." One of his "Miami Vice" films, "Smuggler's Blues," was nominated for a Directors Guild award.

"In that show the 'Smuggler's Blues' song came first, so I was able to work it into action," said Glaser, who now sports a full directorial-looking beard. "In most shows it's not possible to lay down the music tracks beforehand. When I change from being a director-for-hire to a filmmaker, I will insist on knowing the music going in."

Film obeys Audie Murphy's Law

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Charles Bronson plays a police officer named Jack Murphy with his own personal law in the new movie "Murphy's Law."

Jack "Murphy's Law," rephrased slightly to soften the unprintable verb really used by Bronson, is "Don't fool with Jack Murphy!"

Actually, this movie seems to operate under what I've just decided to call "Audie Murphy's Law," which is "If you kill enough people, you can make money in movies." (Audie Murphy was a 1950s B-grade performer who won film roles mainly because he was credited with singlehandedly killing 50 Germans in one World War II battle. His acting ability was actually much more limited than his combat skills.)

Bronson — like Sylvester Stallone, Clint Eastwood, Chuck Norris and Arnold Schwarzenegger — would seem to be an strict adherent to this exploitation film rule of thumb.

Bronson's Murphy is a cop with some serious problems — he drinks way too much, his ex-wife is driving him crazy by becoming a professional stripper and he has not one, but two old enemies who want him dead.

The best thing about the film is that Bronson's character is shown as an imperfect person haunted by his past and faced with real problems instead of the usual efficient killing machine with some superheroic past.

Murphy is framed for the murder of his wife and ends up breaking out of jail handcuffed to a young female car thief, named Arabella McGee, who Murphy had just coincidentially arrested for trying to steal his own car a few days before.

Arabella, played by Kathleen Wilhoite, is an astonishingly foulmouthed teen, constantly spewing a variety of overly colorful invectives. Among the milder terms of endearment she likes to use is "monkey vomit."

In some sort of twisted homage to "The Defiant Ones" — the 1958 classic with Tony Curtis and Sidney Poiter fleeing a chain gang — the staid middle-aged cop and obnoxious adolescent girl escape, steal a helicopter, battle a small dope-growing motorcycle gang and trek to a friend's house, all while manacled together and hating each other's guts.

At the same time, a lot of people are getting killed. The body count hits five in just the first 20 minutes of the film, before the violence even begins to really roll.

Carrie Snodgrass has a particularly thankless role as a psycho killer whose face is shown splattered with blood almost every time she kills a man.

The storyline and characterizations get shoved aside for brutal — and often silly — fight scenes. The director, J. Lee Thompson, and the screenwriter, Gail Morgan Hickman, seem to be following Audie Murphy's Law closely; pile on enough corpses and we'll turn a profit.

"Murphy's Law" is violent, stupid tasteless enough that I sincerely hopes innocent bystanders won't accidentally wander into the theater thinking it's Sally Field's recent comedy, "Murphy's Romance."

Characters in 'Violets' never see red

"Violets Are Blue" opens in Ocean City, Md., in 1969 with Kevin Kline and Sissy Spacek playing young lovers who are about to go their separate ways.

Ms. Spacek's character goes off to be a stewardess, begins taking a lot of travel snapshots, sells a few to an in-flight magazine and — in a pat bit of plot development — winds up being a news photographer for the Paris bureau of Newsweek.

After 13 years in New York and Paris, she returns to Ocean City on vacation. There she discovers that Kline's character had returned home to the city after college and now manages the small newspaper there.

Naturally, they fall head over heels in love again (this is especially unsurprising since the only real change in their appearance after more than a decade is that Kline grew a mustache).

There is a complication this time around, though; Kline is married and has a son in his early teens.

"Violets" is something of a fill-in-the-blank movie. Viewers are apparently intended to mentally substitute one of their own past loves for either Ms. Spacek or Kline (depending on the individual's gender).

There are enough moments that ring true in "Violets" that most people can probably relate to the awkward situation Kline and Ms. Spacek find themselves in. It's a good thing that's true, because otherwise the movie would become downright boring.

Despite their apparent affection for one another, Kline and Ms. Spacek are awfully low-key, even in most of their private moments together. They only have one really sharp, electrically-charged scene and it comes early in the film.

For such a heated romance, there's just not much passion burning on the screen.

Kline is so smooth he could almost slide off the screen; he's almost more wholesome than he was as the well-rounded husband in "The Big Chill." His character in "Violets" would have been much more interesting with just a few rough edges.

Ms. Spacek's character is handled so delicately she might as well have been made of crystal. This fragile treatment is probably linked to the fact that "Violets" was directed by Ms. Spacek's real-life husband, Jack Fisk.

Even Bonnie Bedelia, playing Kline's wronged wife, undercuts her own otherwise outstanding performance simply by being too quiet and civil. Ms. Bedelia may be even better in this movie than she was as drag-racing champion Shirley Muldowney in "Heart Like A Wheel," but she isn't given a chance to cut loose in "Violets."

She is so good at shooting smoldering glances and using subtle body language that you keep waiting for her big emotional scene, but it never comes.

The film is a sincere, well-intentioned look at how adults have to live with the choices they've made, but it's too polite for its own good. "Violets Are Blue" would have been a much better film if it let the characters occasionally see red.

"Violets Are Blue," rated PG-13 for some sexual innuendo and a couple of glimpses of Kline's bare buttocks, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Reporter's book on Bundy made into mini-series

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Seattle newspaper reporter Richard Larsen remembers Ted Bundy as a charismatic young law student working hard for the Republicans. He seemed to have a bright future in politics and was "very handsome, very well-liked," Larsen said.

Bundy indeed went on to make headlines — but as a notorious murderer.

In the early 1970s, a killer stalking young women in the Seattle area was known only as "Ted." Nobody connected it to Ted Bundy. Eventually police came to suspect Bundy of killing more than 36 women in six states. He is now in prison in Florida waiting execution.

Larsen wrote a book about Bundy called "The Deliberate Stranger." It has been adapted to a two-part mini-series by NBC, starring Mark Harmon as Bundy. The program will be broadcast today and Monday.

In 1972, Larsen was covering politics and the governor's race for the Seattle Times. "I noticed this good looking guy, very bright, working for (Republican Gov.) Dan Evans. He seemed to have a special quality," Larsen recalled.

"Part of my job was to keep an eye on young people on the rise in politics. Certainly, this was one. He seemed to have a passionate concern for the well-being of people."

Larsen became friends with Bundy and wrote a story about him in the aftermath of the 1972 gubernatorial campaign, in which the Democratic Party contended Bundy had acted as a GOP spy while attending numerous political functions. "I didn't think it was a valid charge and wrote a piece defending Ted," Larsen said.

Larsen is now an associate editor of the Seattle Times, where he writes a column and does commentary on public issues.

"In the early part of 1974 there was a sense in the Pacific Northwest that something awful was happening," Larsen said. "Women were disappearing, essentially college girls from the campuses. They just seemed to vanish. That summer there was a stunning event. Two girls vanished the same day from a picnic at a state park.

"Several women at the picnic said a young man approached them. Very handsome, called himself Ted. He asked them to get in his car, but they declined. From that, the police got the name 'Ted,' and they became known locally as the 'Ted Murders.'"

"... Women were disappearing, essentially college girls from the campuses. They just seemed to vanish. That summer there was a stunning event. Two girls vanished the same day from a picnic at a state park. Several women at the picnic said a young man approached them. Very handsome, called himself Ted..."

— Author Richard Larsen

Larsen said he saw Bundy several times after that. Then Bundy was arrested in 1975 in Utah, where he was enrolled in law school at the University of Utah.

"He was arrested on a routine traffic stop," said Larsen, "but they saw things in his car that made the police think he was a burglar. Then, just by chance, a couple of Salt Lake City detectives said he might be involved in a case from 1974. It was an attempted abduction of a girl at a shopping center. She got away from him. The girl eventually identified Ted Bundy.

"When we got word in Seattle we began to wonder. The 'Ted Murders.' Ted Bundy. It seemed so bizarre. It was hard to believe."

Bundy was convicted of kidnapping in Utah and taken to Colorado to stand trial in a case there. He escaped twice, and the second time he got away.

Soon afterward, he was arrested in Florida and charged with two murders in a sorority house. He was convicted and sentenced to death. He was never tried in Washington.

Larsen, who had written a book on politics, believed he would have access to Bundy that crime reporters would not. He was correct, but he said he still couldn't unravel the mystery of Bundy's life. "People who hold the secrets haven't stepped forward," he said.

Asked if he was satisfied with the television adaptation, Larsen said, "I'll give you a tentative and conditional reply on that. I'm a hound for accuracy. Any actor who doesn't look right is an error. They made a lot of changes for dramatic reasons."

Conversion to Islam leads artist to calligraphy

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The calligraphy of Mohammed Zakariya has been displayed in museums throughout the world, and the American-born artist says it was his conversion to Islam that allowed him to discover the ancient art.

The 43-year-old artist was first exposed to Islamic philosophy by his grandmother when he was a teenager growing up in Arlington, Va.

"Then in 1961, I went to Morocco for a holiday, and was introduced directly to both Islam and the Islamic calligraphy," he said.

He converted to Islam, changed his name and began perfecting his craft. He refuses to reveal his former name.

He taught calligraphy at the Middle East Institute and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. He has exhibited in Paris, London, Washington, Los Angeles and Qatar. He was recently in Bahrain as part of a tour of the Gulf countries.

His fascination with the designs of Islamic calligraphy led him to a book store in Tangier, Morocco, where he ran into an Egyptian calligrapher named Abdul-Salam Ali Nour who lived in England.

"We were both interested in the same books and our relationship developed," Zakariya recalled. "He was not...even a professional calligrapher, but he helped me a lot to start."

When Nour returned to England, Zakariya, who had planned to be a carpenter, followed him and spent 18 months in London learning the art.

The colorful Arabic calligraphy, perfected by artists who produced beautifully handwritten copies of the Koran 14 centuries ago, was for a long time neglected by Arabs and Moslems.

In the old days, calligraphers pursued the art as they learned the Koran — at the feet of their masters in village schools. Those who mastered the art were commissioned to paint the Koran with gold leaf, lapis lazuli, saffron and other natural dyes.

The purest script used was "kufic," found on 9th-century objects. It is bold and elongated with long horizontal strokes. By the 12th century other styles evolved, such as the "nastaliq," which is cursive, more flowing and softer.

Another style is the "thuluth," which retained some of the geometric element. And although kufic is considered by professional calligraphers to be the finest, many of them mix their scripts just as typographers vary typefaces.

After London, Zakariya returned to the United States and set up a wood-working shop in California. "I used to study the Arabic language while working," he said.

About two years ago, he went to Turkey where he took formal instruction in calligraphy.

Cathy Silvers thinking about going to college

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Cathy Silvers is planning ahead.

After three years spent playing a bubbly teen-ager on "Happy Days" and one season as a young lawyer on CBS' "Foley Square," Phil Silvers' daughter is thinking about college.

The fragile-looking Silvers, 24, got her role as Jenny Piccolo on "Happy Days" at age 17, right out of Beverly Hills High School. But her four sisters, all now in show business, went on to UCLA.

She doesn't regret having begun a career that includes a TV movie, two pilots, guest spots and voice-overs, but she's ready to try the road not taken — higher education — if "Foley" falls.

Ms. Silvers, who is "nervous, anxious, hopeful" over her series, will learn early this month what CBS plans to do with "Foley Square," which recently moved to Tuesday along with the revised "Mary." If CBS keeps the show, Ms. Silvers will continue as Molly, "an ideal person, so wholesome and so bright — she graduated in the top 10 percent of her law class at Yale." She hopes Molly will be allowed "to do great things."

Ms. Silvers' father, who died in November at 74, was best known as Sgt. Ernie Bilko in a series first called "You'll Never Get Rich." He and his wife, Evelyn, a model and former Miss Florida, produced five daughters in seven years, but separated after 11 years of marriage.

When Cathy and her twin, Candy, were 5, Evelyn Silvers moved her daughters to Orlando, Fla., to care for her parents until their deaths, then returned to Southern California and became a psychologist specializing in marriage and family counseling (with a thriving practice, says her daughter).

Phil showed up on Sundays, depending on his work schedule, Ms. Silvers recalled, and her mother mainly brought up the girls. But he cautioned his daughters to "treat the industry as a business, not an obsession." Ms. Silvers is now touring universities checking tuition rates.

Cheese most universal, oldest known food

Although the exact number is not known, there are more than 1,000 cheeses produced around the world. There are hundreds of varieties, each with many subdivisions.

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features

One of the most universal, and one of the oldest, of foods is cheese. Evidence indicates that it existed thousands of years before the birth of Christ, and there are references to it in the Old Testament.

Some food historians say it was a shepherd, others claim it was an Asian traveling merchant who discovered cheese. Whoever, shepherd or merchant, he found a curd in the pouch he carried his milk in, tasted it, liked it, spread the word, and eventually cheese became a nourishing peasant meal.

"Never tell a peasant how good is cheese and apples," an old European saying tells us. Or was it pears? Well, whatever, cheese is not just peasant fare now. It's family and gourmet fare.

Until recent years, cheese in the Western world was something to put between two slices of bread. Today, its use has increased dramatically. In 10 years, in the United States alone, per capita consumption has grown from 12.5 pounds a year to 20 pounds.

"And," says William Dorman, an American producer and importer, "we anticipate that by the year 2000, every American will consume 30 pounds a year."

No one will give us an exact number, but more than 1,000 cheeses are produced around the world. There are hundreds of varieties, each with subdivisions, too many to describe in limited space.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture classifies cheeses simply as very hard, hard, semi-soft and soft.

There are fresh or unripened cheeses, double and triple cremes, extra hard grating, Cheddars, cheeses made from the milk of cows, goats, camels, even buffaloes.

And the marvelous veined cheeses such Roquefort, Gorgonzola, Stilton and Danish Blue, to name only a few. Though sometimes used in cookery, they are best enjoyed with fruit or spread on crusty bread or unsalted crackers or toast.

The latest fashion in food trends is goat's milk cheese that comes in a variety of shapes. The small rounds are often broiled briefly and served as a first course. Some are mild and delicate; others are quite strong and pungent. Try the milder and go on to the wilder ones if you like. All French goat's milk cheeses are called chevres.

Cheese is also making its way to the breakfast table. Why not? In Scandinavia it's a familiar item for the first meal of the day. In Norway, the special breakfast variety is Gjetost, which is made from the whey rather than the curd of cow's and goat's milk. An unusual cheese, it is dark tan and looks like a block of caramel candy. It's sliced paper-thin, is sweet and mild and, in my opinion, tastes like peanut butter. Not all supermarkets carry it, but it can be found in most cheese stores.

Because cheese is made from milk or cream, or both, it has most of the food value of milk and is a source of complete protein, minerals and vitamins. If made from whole milk, it provides vitamin A.

Some are naturally low in fat and, thanks to food technology, producers are constantly introducing more cheese products that are lower in fat and calories than the original without loss of protein and other nutrients. This is not true of all low-fat varieties, so check labels for nutrient information.

Here are some valuable hints:

- High heat can turn a gentle cheese into a rubbery, tough villain. Use low heat when adding it to sauces or when cooking dishes that incorporate it. For topping, add cheese during the last few minutes of cooking time.
- Keep cheese refrigerated in its original wrapper until ready for use. Once opened, rewrap with plastic wrap.
- Fresh cheese, such as cream, cottage and ricotta, should be stored in glass or plastic containers in the refrigerator and should be served cool.
- Refrigerate soft and semi-soft cheese in covered containers or in plastic wrap or aluminum foil. Bring to room temperature for serving. Except in warm climates or on warm days, an hour before serving is a good time to remove from the refrigerator. But for grating or shredding, use then while still firm and cold.
- Hard and semi-hard cheeses need not be refrigerated, but must be kept in a cool, dry place, in plastic wrap or aluminum foil.
- If you find a bit of mold, simply cut if off. "Most people aren't aware that you should cut deep around the mold to remove it," says Mary Grigsby Stangle, a 26-year-old cheesemaker who began growing the cheese cultures for her father's home laboratory in Illinois when she was 13.
- Don't arrange crackers or bread on the cheese board or platter. Put them on a separate serving dish. This avoids getting your cheeses "crumby," and keeps the cheese more attractive.

Cheese may be used in any meal for any course — appetizer, soup, main dish or dessert — and can be tossed into salads. Naturally, it's a great snack, especially with fruit.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Use of library gives children love of books

By KAY LANDES

Many third graders are eclectic and voracious readers. They have ingested and digested a variety of selections ranging from the classics, Bluebonnets, select-your-own-ending, to Garfield.

These prolific readers have opened themselves to unlimited worlds. They think about what they read, visualize it, and apply these thoughts and visions to their special private world.

Unfortunately, not all students share in this sense of wonder and delight in the printed page. These children have been labeled as "reluctant readers." Many children can read, but choose not to use this skill beyond the demands of the classroom. Why is this? How can we as parents and teachers facilitate the move from reluctance to anticipation of and pleasure in the process of reading?

Contrary to the old saying, I believe that "familiarity breeds contentment." When the library becomes a known entity to both parents and children — and is used regularly as a shared experience and adventure, a special bond is formed with books and reading. In their pre-school years, visiting the library with a parent, selecting the books together, and then being read to leaves an indelible impression. Seeing parents enjoying books is also important.

The Children's Departments of both the downtown library and the branch at Midland Park Mall are eager to assist young readers in their reading selections. A recommended reading list especially for third graders has been prepared by the Children's Department. Suggestions include fiction stories, poetry books, folk tales, and non-fiction. Some of these books should be a part of every child's literary experience. Books such as "Stranger at Green Knowe" by Boston, "Paddle-to-the-Sea" by Holling, "Fables" by Lobel, "The Borrowers" by Norton, "Abel's Island" by Steig, and "How I Hunted the Little Fellows" by Zhitkov. If you would like a copy of the bibliography, send a stamped self-addressed envelope to: Midland County Public Library, 301 West Missouri, Midland, Texas 79701, Attention Children's Department. Or better yet, pick up a copy on your next visit to the library.

Dirk Pitt is Cussler's super-hero

A Review

By CAROL DEEGAN
Associated Press

Dirk Pitt is author Clive Cussler's super-hero. Pitt is an expert in almost everything he does — from swimming to sailing to restoring old cars. And he has a unique ability to escape the clutches of death, over and over and over again.

For readers of previous Pitts novels, Cussler's latest, "Cyclops," is an exciting addition. The same can be said for those unfamiliar with Pitt and his maritime adventures. For fast-paced action and adventure, and a hero who can't be beat, "Cyclops" is a winner.

The year is 1989. Pitt is special projects director for the National Underwater and Marine Agency. He is an expert in deep-ocean maining projects and investigations — and shipwrecks. It was Pitt who raised the "Titanic" for the Defense Department.

By sheer accident, Pitt becomes involved in the search for Raymond LeBaron, a wealthy businessman who disappeared in his antique blimp, while on a treasure hunt over the Florida Straits. The blimp has been recovered, by Pitt himself, but the bodies found on board are not those of LeBaron and his two crewmen, but rather the rotting corpses of three Soviet cosmonauts, probably dead for years.

The search for LeBaron takes Pitt, two of his colleagues, and LeBaron's wife Jessie near the coast of Cuba. Hurricane forces sweep them onto the shore of the island of Cayo Santa Maria, where Soviet military forces promptly throw them in prison. Pitt manages to make a daring escape, vowing to return and save his friends.

The rest of the story involves a secret U.S. colony on the moon, a plot to assassinate Cuban leader Fidel Castro, and a long-lost treasure called "La Dorada." Pitt gets himself out of one scrape after another; his ability to survive despite all odds is truly amazing.

There are moments in "Cyclops" that defy the imagination. But Cussler, like Pitt himself, doesn't seem to want the reader to take things all that seriously. That's what makes reading this book so much fun.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

© 1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

Q.—We had a terrible disaster in our rubber bridge game the other night. Our auction went:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

We play old-fashioned Goren: four-card majors, strong two-bids, etc. We ended up making five-odd, and the fur began to fly. Both North and South blamed the other. North felt that South, who had 16 points, should have jumped to four hearts. South felt that the auction was forcing and that North was not allowed to pass, even though he had a dead minimum opening. Who do you blame?—G.L., Minneapolis, Minn.

A.—North certainly didn't bid as if he held a dead minimum; his raise to three clubs showed a sound opening bid. Therein lies the root of the problem.

Once South made a two-over-one and then bid again over North's raise, it was incumbent on North to keep the bidding open until game was reached. North should make allowance for the fact that the double fit increases the value of his hand. Indeed, on this auction he can probably make game if his opening bid consisted of no more than ace-king five of hearts and the king of clubs.

North either made a poor choice of opening bids or else misbid at his second turn if he was so weak that he feared to continue over three hearts. Without being given the actual hands, it is impossible to tell exactly where the fault lies. It is possible that he had some other bid available after two clubs.

We can understand South's decision not to jump to four hearts even though he had 16 points. He did not want to crowd the auction. He was trying to investigate slam possibilities below the game-level. There is nothing worse than being left wafting in the wind in the wind at the five-level and going down one.

Q.—We are trying to learn five-card majors as set out in "Goren's New Bridge Complete." What is the minimum strength in the suit required to respond in a four-card major suit to partner's opening bid of one in a minor?—E.P., Portland, Maine.

A.—Four to the five spot! Any four-card suit is biddable by the responder. Indeed, unless responder has a five-card suit, if he bypasses a suit and bids another at the one-level, he explicitly denies four cards in that suit.

If, however, responder has the values for a two-over-one response and holds a five-card minor and a four-card major, he should first bid his longer suit.

Fricke, Morris to do cancer benefit

Janie Fricke and Gary Morris will provide the entertainment for the American Cancer Society of Midland's Round Up 1986 set for May 24. Proceeds from the event will help support service, education and research programs of the American Cancer Society.

The Perini Brothers of Buffalo Gap will cater the event which includes dining and dancing under the stars. Events such as a dunking booth and calf roping have also been scheduled for the evening.

More than 3 million Americans live today who are cured of cancer; however, the battle is not won. Monies raised during this event will help provide funds necessary for the American Cancer Society to accomplish its goal: the elimination of cancer in our lifetime.
