Record amounts spent on election

DALLAS (AP) — At $6 to $8 per vote, the November gubernatorial election was the most expensive in Texas history, according to an analysis by The Dallas Morning News.

The state's economic woes didn't stop Texas politicians from raising record amounts of money for their campaigns, including a governor's race that cost more than $25 million.

Gov. Mark White spent nearly $8 for each vote he received in his losing campaign, while Gov.-elect Bill Clements spent $6 per vote, the News reported Sunday.

Meanwhile, state Sen. Oscar Mauzy of Dallas in his successful bid for the state Supreme Court spent about $1.6 million, almost enough to operate the court for an entire year.

White reported raising $12.3 million through November for his campaign. Clements reported $11.1 million raised through November, and his aides say he raised $2.4 million more in December at a fund-raiser in Houston.

In 1982, the Texas governor's race cost a record total of $24.1 million.

Although none of them faced a strong opponent, the state treasurer, comptroller and lieutenant governor collected a total of $2.6 million to get re-elected.

White was the favorite of bankers. Bank executives contributed at least $332,168 to White, compared to $162,875 for Clements.

One of White's big financial backers was Texas Commerce Bancshares, whose executives and political action committees contributed at least $28,600. White cleared the way for interstate banking legislation after the urgings of Texas Commerce Chairman Ben Love and others.

Texas Commerce was the first to benefit from the law this month when it merged with Chemical New York Corp.

Utility companies favored Clements, who said he wanted the White appointees off the Public Utility Commission.

The biggest utility contributor to Clements was Houston Industries PAC, the political action committee of the Houston Lighting & Power Co., which gave $11,000. The utility industry gave at least $40,000 to Clements, while utility executives contributed at least $12,000 to White.

Political action committees gave at least $2.3 million to White's campaign, or nearly 22 percent of total contributions, excluding loans. PACs gave about $461,000 to Clements, or about 7 percent of his total, excluding loans.

At least 139 individuals and groups made contributions to both White and Clements.

Local hairdresser hopes his designs big hit in Big Apple

By RAMONA NYE

Inside the cramped women's restroom Max Lonidier fusses among painfully thin models, pinning here and tucking there.

Everything must be in place and no detail can be overlooked by the 24-year-old Midland designer, who is preparing to launch his clothes in New York City at the Amateur Designer of the Year contest in July.

When he's not cutting hair or doing makeovers for women at Reflections, Lonidier is designing close-fitting clothes that he hopes will catch the eye of top designers at the New York competition.

"I like the total look, creating a woman down from the head to the toes," Lonidier said.

"My career basically is in the beauty industry. In designing clothes, I'm putting together a person completely."

Clothes that hug and accentuate a woman's body are his favorite designs, Lonidier said.

"I think now, big clothes are chic, but there's nothing like classic tailored things that are fitted for you. It brings out your best," he said.

Although the trend in '80s fashion is to borrow from all eras, clothes from the '50s are Lonidier's favorite.

"My favorites are the '50s because everything was close and fitted to the body."

Many of Lonidier's designs borrow from the tight '50s a-la-Marilyn Monroe style.

Reagan to honor crew, designer of Voyager

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Presidential Citizen's Medal, which in its 13-year history has been presented for humanitarian service, government work and giving good parties, is being bestowed on three Americans for the globe-girdling flight of the aircraft Voyager.

President Reagan planned to present the medal today to Voyager co-pilots Jeana Yeager and Dick Rutan and designer Burt Rutan at a ceremony here before flying to Palm Springs, Calif., to spend New Year's at the home of publisher Walter Annenberg.

The Voyager's journey marked the first time a plane has flown around the world without refueling.

Honoring of Ms. Yeager and the Rutan brothers will bring to 16 the total of Citizen's Medals Reagan has awarded.

President Richard Nixon established the award by executive order in 1969 and presented it twice in 1973 — posthumously to baseball player Roberto Clemente, who was killed in an airplane crash while on a Nicaraguan relief mission; and to then-Secretary of State William Rogers and Rogers' wife, Adele.

The citation to Mrs. Rogers called her "the nation's premier hostess in foreign affairs" and said she "provided a warmth and charm that helped to humanize the climate of diplomacy."

Neither President Ford nor President Carter ever awarded the medal.

Among those receiving it from Reagan have been Frank C. Carlucci, a veteran government official whom the president has now chosen as his national security adviser; and Hubert Dickey Ballantine and Martin Mathews, honored for their humanitarian work among youth in St. Louis.

The president has also awarded the medal posthumously to Leamon Hunt, director general of the Multinational Force and Observers in the Sinai, who was assassinated by terrorists in Rome on Feb. 15, 1984; and Dennis W. Keogh, a Foreign Service officer killed in a terrorist bombing in Namibia the same year.

Other recipients have included Elmer B. Staats, former comptroller general; Raymond Weeks, who was responsible for changing the name of Armistice Day to Veterans' Day; Samuel C. Jackson, a civil rights leader; John A. Volpe, former Massachusetts governor and U.S. secretary of transportation; and Joseph Alton Delaney, a professional football player who lost his life trying to save three drowning children.

The medal was established "for the purpose of recognizing citizens of the United States of America who have performed exemplary deeds of service for their country or their fellow citizens," the White House said.

The announcement said the award is bestowed at the sole discretion of the president.

The president and first lady Nancy Reagan flew to Los Angeles from Washington on Saturday. White House officials said Reagan spent part of Sunday working on the State of the Union address he will deliver to Congress next month.

There was also a social note as the Reagans vacationed here. The White House said Mrs. Reagan telephoned her brother, Dr. Richard Davis, to talk about the engagement of Davis' daughter, Anne, to Jon Peterson of Alexandria, Va.

The young couple, recent graduates of Middlebury College in Vermont, became engaged at the White House while they were staying there at Christmas.

Soviet emigres heading home after unhappy years in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Fifty Soviet emigres headed home today after unhappy years in the United States, and some said they are looking forward to reunions with their families despite an uncertain future back in the U.S.S.R.

Many interviewed before they boarded an Aeroflot jetliner late Sunday night said they don't know where they will work or whether they will be accepted by old friends and neighbors after their years in the West.

The Aeroflot desk at Kennedy International Airport was mobbed by tearful Russians who were bundled up in heavy fur coats and hats and hugged friends and family as they bade them goodbye. Some carried VCRs, portable stereos and other electronics gear.

Soviet officials said it was the biggest group of emigres to return to the Soviet Union from the United States, and the regularly scheduled weekly flight to Moscow was delayed more than five hours so a larger jet could be flown in.

Radio Moscow made the flight the top item on its early evening broadcast, saying the returning Soviets were disillusioned about the American way of life.

The radio said the emigres had objected to "ruthless competition, the spirit of moneymaking, crime and drug addiction" in the United States.

"I felt guilty for leaving" the Soviet Union 8½ years ago, said Taras Kordonsky, who is returning to his wife, Ludmilla, and 16-year-old son, Timofei.

He said he was prepared for harsh treatment from some who may resent his initial departure and return, but added: "The Russian people can forgive."

Alexander Cherkasets, who left a good position in a travel agency in the Soviet Union to work as a limousine driver in New York, said he hoped he could get his old job back.

"It's hard to imagine what I will do," he said. "The Soviet authorities here said we should not have any problems with the authorities there."

For many, the journey back behind the Iron Curtain will mean a reunion with a child, spouse or parent they have not seen in years. Others were never happy with life in the United States — particularly New York City, where many of those returning Sunday lived after their emigration — or became steadily disillusioned with it.

"America for Americans, Russia for Russians," said Vladimir Troshinsky, who lived here for eight years and worked as an auto mechanic and taxi driver but really wants to be a chemical engineer. "My mother is waiting for me, my land, my people."

Kordonsky, a 38-year-old musician who was toting his guitar and a fender bass that would be a gift for his son, said he was unhappy almost immediately after arriving in the United States.

"There was the alienation, the feeling I don't belong, the anxiety and homesickness," he said.

Irina Galetsky, who was returning to Leningrad with her husband, Yuri, and three children after nine years in the West, said that although she made some good American friends, "Everybody thinks I am a Soviet spy, and I am not a Soviet spy."

It was the third group repatriation in as many months. In October and November, Soviet officials announced the return of 17 other emigres. The latest group, which like the others returned with officials' permission, included many Jews. All paid for their trips themselves, with the exception of one family that got a loan from the Soviet Foreign Ministry.

Some of the returnees had applied several times for permission but were turned down, said Alexei Zhvakin, the vice consul of the Soviet Embassy in Washington who was in New York to handle the paperwork.

Some of those returning Sunday said they got an immediate OK when they applied in recent months.

From 1981 through 1985, 34,780 Soviets were admitted to the United States as permanent residents, said Verne Jervis of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Soviet spokesman Igor B. Bulav said last month that about 1,000 emigres in the United States have applied to return.

The strain of Sunday night's departure was evident as the time grew near for the flight to depart.

Visitors may be barred from busy concourse

By RICK BROWN
Staff Writer

Midlanders seeing off family or friends at Midland Regional Airport may be in for a rude surprise when they try to enter the airport's second-floor concourse, the Southwest Airlines airport operations manager said today.

Airport visitors who don't have a ticket may not be allowed to enter the concourse to avoid confusion at departure gates, said Danny Gholson, Southwest Airlines operations manager at the airport.

"It's sad on the holidays," L.J. Nelson, City of Midland airport operations supervisor, said this morning. However, "When it gets busy, the ticketed passengers can't get up there to get to their planes," she observed.

Said Gholson, whose airline flies the most number of departing planes from the airport, "You have to have some organization up there."

Gholson said that he's seen "a tremendous amount of meeters and greeters" at his airline's departure gates, especially during the holiday season. "Sometimes it's two to three hundred people for one flight."

As coordinator of airport security, Southwest's supervisors make the decision to close the concourse to unticketed visitors after consulting with other airlines' operations managers, Gholson said.

That decision usually comes during the busy holiday flying season, he said, mentioning in particular the Tuesday before Thanksgiving, the Sunday after the November holiday and the several days before Christmas.

He was unsure exactly when the last time the concourse had to be closed, but he was certain the amount of pre-Christmas traffic brought closure on December 23.

He predicted that no concourse closing would be necessary again until the Easter holidays.

"It's not so tightly closed that you can't walk up there and say, 'Hey, my 90-year-old mother is arriving and she needs a wheelchair,'" he added.

New embassy to be as secure as any military base

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS

MOSCOW (AP) — The oak staircase spiraling down to a family room with a huge stone fireplace and bay windows overlooking an old church and a new skyscraper evokes Washington's affluent Georgetown district more than central Moscow.

The stylish brick townhouses at the new U.S. Embassy compound here, the sports courts, apres ski room, "Happy Hour" bar and sauna have some Americans stationed in Moscow wondering if the diplomats will ever venture into the Soviet community.

Ambassador Arthur Hartman agrees the facility is as plush as any he's seen. But he contends the comfort will not bring isolation.

"More than half of the employees at the embassy are staff," he said, referring to secretaries, Marine security guards and administrative workers. "They are here in Moscow not because they are Soviet experts, but because they have a job to do, and they could be doing it as well in Paris or Riyadh."

During a news media tour of the new embassy facility last week, Hartman said those envoys whose assignments require that they meet and mingle with Soviets will do so, even though they will no longer live in foreigners' compounds spread throughout the city.

Some of the residences being vacated by diplomats moving into the townhouses are miles from the embassy, which is on Tchaikovsky Street along the Garden Ring Road. The distance encouraged envoys and their families to foray into the local community to walk their dogs, buy bread and watch their children play on the neighborhood swings and slides.

The walled, fortress-like complex under construction just behind the current embassy will be as self-contained as a military base and equally secure.

A large commissary will replace the small subterranean food store at the present embassy, and off-work hours can be spent at the indoor pool, the full-size gymnasium, squash courts and bowling alley that will open next year.

"Aren't you making it perhaps a little too easy for the diplomats, who may never have to leave and go into Soviet society?" one reporter asked during the tour, echoing the comments of numerous visitors who have seen the enclave.

"What you see here is no more than a collection of the kind of sports and recreational facilities you could find in any American or European city," responded embassy spokesman Jaroslav Verner, who accompanied Hartman on the tour.

As at most foreigners' compounds in Moscow, the entrances are manned 24 hours a day by Soviet militiamen, who check the documents of anybody attempting to enter unaccompanied. Soviets escorted by an American host should have no problem getting by the militia, Hartman said.

Some maintenance tasks at the new compound that were to be done by Soviet employees will have to be carried out by Americans, he said. The Soviet government on Oct. 22 ordered removal of the entire local staff in retaliation for the Reagan administration's expulsion of many Soviet United Nations diplomats from the United States.

The order did not affect construction of the new embassy offices, which are being built — with long delays — under a separate contract.

Hartman told reporters at a briefing in early 1985 he doubted the building would be ready for occupancy before 1988.

Asked during the tour when the offices would be ready, Hartman replied: "I still say three years."

Public areas like the Happy Hour tavern and the sprawling snack bar are decorated with what Hartman calls "a little bit of Americana" — brass railings, oak moldings, skylights and hanging lamps.

The attention to detail has been the main reason for construction delays on the embassy, which was originally scheduled to open two years ago.

Soviet occupancy of the Kremlin's new embassy in Washington has been tied to completion of the U.S. compound here.

Firm hiring Americans to replace staff at U.S. Embassy in Moscow

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thousands of Americans have answered help-wanted ads for the U.S. Embassy in Moscow since the Soviet support staff was withdrawn, and officials say they're nearly finished reviewing the applicants.

The first of between 60 and 90 workers from maids to translators are expected to leave for Moscow in mid-January, said David Mulenex, the State Department's post management officer for the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

"The number of applicants has run into the thousands," said Michael Gulino, a senior vice president at Pacific Architects and Engineers Inc., the Los Angeles firm handling the talent hunt for the embassy. The company has experience running private and public sector American outposts overseas.

The officials described the recruitment project in Sunday's Los Angeles Times.

The embassy's support staff of about 260 Soviet citizens was withdrawn in October during a round of tit-for-tat expulsions of diplomats that began when the United States expelled 55 Soviets from the United Nations mission in New York amid accusations of spying.

U.S. foreign service officers have been cooking, cleaning, gardening and doing clerical chores in Moscow in the interim.

George Power, 45, who will be Pacific's resident manager at the embassy, said the selection of applicants is nearing an end, though no one actually has been offered a job. He declined to say what salaries would be, but characterized them as competitive with those paid for similar overseas jobs.

Gulino said the company prefers to hire people with some knowledge of the Russian language.

"Take the case of a driver, for instance," Gulino said. "He or she could be driving about Moscow, get lost and consult a map. But he or she would still have to ask someone exactly where he is and how to get to where he wants to go."

Hartman said a compromise was worked out last year that allowed the Soviets to move into their housing section ahead of the Americans here. In return, the U.S. mission in Moscow was allowed to open a new recreational "dacha," or country house, complex in the Silver Glade area of the capital.

Hartman declined to discuss reports that electronic surveillance devices have been found in the new embassy.

But he confirmed a story that has circulated in Moscow for two years. When the bricks were laid by Soviet workers to build the wall surrounding the U.S. compound, one Soviet workman arranged lighter bricks in the wall so a passerby could read "CCCP" — the Cyrillic letters for USSR.

"We had it removed, at quite some expense," Hartman said.

Israeli pleads not guilty to charges of espionage, treason

JERUSALEM (AP) — A former nuclear technician who reportedly told a newspaper Israel amassed an atomic weapons stockpile during the past 20 years has denied charges of treason and espionage.

Mordechai Vanunu, 32, who worked 10 years at Israel's nuclear plant near Dimona, was quoted as telling the Sunday Times of London in a story published in October that Israel has been building atomic weapons for two decades.

The technician was discharged last year for economic reasons.

State prosecutor Uzi Hasson told reporters that during a closed hearing Sunday in Jerusalem District Court, Vanunu "pleaded not guilty to the charges. That is all that can be published."

The law allows for capital punishment, but prosecutors were expected to ask for a life sentence.

Extraordinary security surrounded the Moroccan-born Israeli as he was brought to court, to prevent him from communicating with reporters.

Vanunu, who disappeared from London, disclosed in a message scribbled onto the palm of his hand that he was abducted, presumably by Israeli intelligence agents, after a flight to Rome on Sept. 30.

He flashed the message to reporters while being taken to a pretrial hearing last week.

On Sunday, the van's windows were painted white and a curtain inside insured Vanunu could not be seen through the windshield.

Police cordoned off the courthouse's top floor to keep reporters away, and about 25 guards surrounded the building.

Vanunu's lawyer, Amnon Zichrony, indicated his client's hands were manacled during the hearing. He told reporters another hearing date was set but that he could not make it public. Israel radio said the hearing would be within 45 days.

The charges against Vanunu are aiding an enemy in wartime and aggravated espionage, which means spying with intent to harm national security.

Israel has been at war with most of its Arab neighbors since 1948 and bans publication of information about sensitive installations, including its two nuclear facilities.

In November, Britain indicated after an exchange of messages it was satisfied Israel did not violate British law in bringing Vanunu back for trial. Italy is investigating Vanunu's claim he was kidnapped by secret agents at the airport outside Rome, and also sought Israeli explanations.

Teen graduates to become full-fledged rebel

By CRISELDA YABES

SOMEWHERE ON MINDORO ISLAND, Philippines (AP) — On Christmas Day, 18-year-old Jovie Ortega received a diploma that fulfilled her longtime dream. She became a full-fledged Communist guerrilla.

"It has always been my dream to be a warrior," said the young woman. "There was a time when I thought of nothing but to work hard to be able to enter the (rebel) zone."

Miss Ortega, called "Ka (comrade) Jovie" by her fellow guerrillas, was among 53 New People's Army recruits who recently completed a month of training at a camp in Mindoro Occidental province, 90 miles south of Manila.

Rebel officials took a group of reporters to the camp on condition they not reveal its precise location. Rebels said this was for security and to protect friendly villagers from army reprisals if the current cease-fire with the government breaks down.

The 60-day cease-fire took effect Dec. 10 between the Communist guerrillas and the government. Rebel and government negotiators are to begin "substantive talks" Jan. 6 aimed at ending the nearly 18-year-old rebellion.

Miss Ortega's father, mother and 6-month-old baby sister trekked across four mountains from their village to attend the graduation ceremonies.

New People's Army regulations in this province, located on Mindoro island, allow one family visit per year.

Miss Ortega's mother, who has nine other children, told The Associated Press she approved of Jovie joining the rebel army, which Philippine military officials estimate has about 23,500 fighters.

"But at first, I could not sleep at night when I thought about the danger," Mrs. Ortega said.

Ka Jovie, who has a fifth grade education, said she grew up in a small farming village where doctors and local officials are rarely seen.

AP Laserphoto

Jovie Ortega, 18, was among 53 rebel recruits who completed a month of training on Mindoro island and became a member of the Philippines' New People's Army.

U.S. officials blame the spread of the Communist insurgency in large part on the ineffectiveness of local government and its inability to provide adequate education, health care and security to rural Filipinos.

Miss Ortega said her contact with the insurgency began three years ago when five rebels came to her home for a "teach-in," part of their propaganda campaign to win converts.

She later participated in "teach-ins" in nearby villages as a member of what the party calls its "mass base," or cadre of sympathizers. Some U.S. and Filipino estimates place the size of the mass base at about 1 million of the country's 55 million people.

Last March, she was invited to go along on a rebel ambush.

"I knew then that I wanted to become a guerrilla," she said. "But I was only carrying a homemade shotgun."

Miss Ortega appeared at her graduation carrying a cane instead of her M-16 rifle. She sprained her right foot during a rope-climbing accident.

Her instructors said that were it not for the accident, Miss Ortega would have finished in the top 10 of her class. She spent her last week of training cleaning her rifle, playing the guitar and doing her nails.

"What I miss about the old days were the dances," Miss Ortega said. She said government soldiers who came to village dances used to ask her for dates but she refused. Her heart belonged to "the cause."

"One soldier wanted to take me home," she said. "But I had to say no because I was not going home. I was going to go (with the rebels) to the mountains."

DESIGNER

But evening wear is his favorite type of clothing to design, he said.

"I really enjoy evening. I'm an evening person."

For the past three months, Lonidier has painstakingly sewed by hand hundreds of tiny pearls into one red evening gown he's taking to the New York contest.

Lonidier began sewing and designing clothes when he was 13.

He said his passion for sewing and designing all started one day when his mother did not have time to repair a pair of pants.

Angry, Lonidier sat down to do the job himself, but unable to figure out how to thread the sewing machine, he said he ending up taking all day trying repair his pants.

Now, Lonidier refuses to part with the same 1951 Singer, he once struggled with.

"I have a love for that machine. That machine and I have been to hell and back. I don't care for the new modern machines. I like the basic stitch," he said.

Lonidier said he's constantly thinking about different designs and usually uses newspapers to make his patterns.

A couple of days is all it takes Lonidier to complete a design, from conception to the finished product, he said.

So far, Lonidier said he thinks he's on the right track to becoming a professional designer.

"I believe I'm in the right direction because what I design doesn't really go out of style."

If Lonidier succeeds in New York, he says he still doesn't want to give up makeovers and hairdressing.

Eventually he said he would like to set up a shop that would make over a woman's hair, body, face and clothes.

"I didn't feel like I wanted to limit myself in one particular field. I want to be able to perform in all fields," he said.

One Russian-speaking visitor without a ticket had to be removed from the boarding area when he got into an argument with a man who was returning.

As the boarding continued, Vladimir Glushkov, who was scheduled to return to a small town near Odessa with his parents, wife and two children, suffered a seizure.

A paramedic said the stress of the evening may have been too much for the 40-year-old Glushkov, and there was an unexpected tearful farewell as Glushkov's parents got on the plane and left the rest of the family behind to care for him. Hours earlier, Glushkov spoke longingly of being reunited with relatives in Russia and said "Everybody should be together."

Cherkasets, 37, drew a crowd of reporters when he arrived for the flight because he had once been singled out in a Newsweek magazine article on immigrants to America. He has spoken of the crime, greed and poverty he saw as a taxi driver in New York City and was invited to visit North Dakota by a newspaper columnist to see what the rest of the country was like.

He told reporters he could not easily explain why he was going home, and said that even some close friends who threw him a farewell party last week couldn't understand his decision or make him change his mind.

Cherkasets then fled the TV lights and reporters, hurried down the corridor and said, "It is difficult to emigrate twice."

AIRPORT

He suggested that parents greeting arriving children also make arrangements with either an airline representative or with security personnel to enter the concourse.

The American Airlines airport general manager, Eric Downward, said this morning that closure also may come when security baggage checking machines break down.

Both airline airport managers said that a prime concern during busy times is passengers who must wait in line at the security station at the second-floor entrance.

Those passengers could be in real danger of missing their planes if they have to wait too long, the managers said, adding that closing the concourse to unticketed people makes the wait for those passengers shorter.

Gholson suggested that people who want to meet family and friends arriving from out of town when the concourse is closed wait at the walkway leading up to the airport's second floor.

They include Houston oilman Meredith Long of Quintana Petroleum, who gave White $21,000 and Clements $10,000, and Dallas investor Basil Georges, who contributed more than $17,000 to White and $10,000 to Clements.

J.A. Elkins, senior chairman of the board of First City Bancorporation in Houston, contributed to all four major gubernatorial candidates — $10,000 each to White, Clements and unsucessful GOP candidate Kent Hance of Lubbock, and $5,000 to U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt, who also lost in the Republican primary.

Paul Tillman, chairman of the board of CitiSavings and Loan in San Antonio, who said his real choice for governor was Loeffler, said he contributed $5,000 to Clements because he is a Republican and bought a $1,000 ticket to a White fund-raiser because a friend was selling them.

Aliens eligible for unemployment could cost state millions

STATE

LUFKIN (AP) — The state of Texas could be forced to pay millions because of a court ruling that certain aliens are eligible for unemployment benefits.

In the case of a laid-off sawmill worker, U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice's ruled that aliens "permanently residing in the United States" cannot be denied benefits if they are otherwise qualified to receive them.

Thousands of aliens may be covered by the ruling, stemming from a 1983 complaint filed by Fidel B. Ibarra Jr., of Mexico.

Ibarra was denied unemployment compensation after being laid off from his sawmill job in 1983. A caseworker told Ibarra that he had no right to compensation because, at the time, he was an undocumented alien.

The father of nine asked a priest for help, and the priest directed him to East Texas Legal Services Inc., in Nacogdoches.

Ibarra sued the Texas Employment Commission, and recently agreed to a settlement giving certain aliens until April 27 to resubmit once-rejected claims.

Cubans, Haitians, refugees, political-asylum applicants from Central America and other aliens who were denied Texas unemployment benefits from 1983 to 1986 may be included, according to court records and officials involved in the Ibarra case.

Nacogdoches attorney Richard Fischer, who is now in private practice, was then on the staff of the federally funded East Texas legal services agency.

"This is the kind of guy who makes our country great," Fischer said of Ibarra. "He worked the way a father of nine might work. He worked hard, and when he got laid off, he needed help."

Then fresh from law school, the upstate New York transplant became an expert on Ibarra's problem and helped win Ibarra and certain other aliens the right to be considered for state unemployment benefits.

Ibarra was paid "less than $3,000" in his claim, Fischer said, adding, "The Ibarra case does not establish that any alien can get unemployment benefits."

As part of the settlement, the Texas Employment Commission has adopted a policy recognizing a variety of legal status for aliens under immigration law, Fischer said.

On Oct. 7, also as part of the settlement, Justice ordered the employment commission to seek out the 10 affected categories of aliens. The agency has paid for English- and Spanish-language advertisements in print and broadcast media in 17 major Texas cities.

"We have no idea how much we're actually going to pay out," said Ferris Duhon, employment commission general counsel.

The commission's published notices said the new policy makes aliens from the 10 categories "eligible to receive benefits, regardless of whether they possess or possessed employment authorization from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service."

Some Lufkin residents wrote the judge and told of their displeasure with his ruling in favor of the aliens. One letter quoted by the judge asked, "What law says we must support them with our tax dollars while they are in this country? If they are unhappy, let them go home — we certainly don't need them."

Ibarra was unfazed by the criticism and said he was pleased that his legal protest was helping others.

Asked whether aliens should pass up applying for unemployment benefits to avoid raising questions and possibly causing problems, Ibarra answered simply: "No way."

During litigation, the state agency was required to dig through its files, and found at least 3,010 cases like Ibarra's that fell into at least one of the categories.

The employment commission recently sent letters to the last known addresses of the 3,010 aliens, said C.P.-Garcia, chief of the employment commission's benefits division in Austin. By Dec. 19, 485 of them had returned applications seeking the retroactive payments.

"Some of the applications have already been processed. We've paid people thousands of dollars. It was a nice Christmas present for them," said Garcia, adding that the maximum payment has been about $3,000.

So far, 23 applicants have been paid a total of $39,000, he said. Individuals are limited to the maximum benefit of $210 for 26 weeks, amounting to $5,460.

State experiencing influx of dairy farmers

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — Industry officials say several farmers have moved to Erath County during the last four years, drawn by the lack of state regulation of the dairy industry and higher milk prices.

Joe Borges, a former Stephenville dairy farmer, said about 20 dairies have moved to the Stephenville and Dublin area since 1982 from states in which milking cows is more expensive.

The dairy immigration has increased in the past year, said Matt Driscoll, an Erath County dairy farmer.

Borges said a dairy farmer from Holland, Diebe DeVries has opened up a Stephenville dairy because producing milk is expensive in Holland and the country has a milk surplus.

"They look for a place with high demand like Texas," Borges said.

Driscoll said Texas dairies meet about 80 percent of the state's demand for milk said. The American Milk Producers group brings in milk from states with a milk surplus, he said.

But if dairies continue to move into Texas, the milk shortage in Texas will become a surplus and the influx of dairies could stop, farmers say.

"If we see the growth we have now continue, things will get tight," said Driscoll. "I think the deficit problem will fill up pretty quick. The state can not stand many more 500-1,000 cow dairies opening up."

A milk surplus could show up as early as the summer of 1987, because milk demand drops in the summer, he said.

John Cowan, regional manager for American Milk Producers Inc., said in Arizona and California either the state or a dairy association sells the right to produce milk. The owners of newly-built dairies are given a production limit when they buy the production right, which is called a base.

Dairy farmers who start an average-sized dairy in Arizona must pay about $900,000 for the right to produce milk, he said. Borges said farmers who want to sell more milk than their base allows must pay extra fees.

However, in Texas, dairy owners do not need to own a base to start selling milk or sell more milk, Cowan said.

Borges said there is not enough milk for the demand about 90 percent of the time. Because of the low domestic supply and the high demand, the price of milk is higher in Texas, he said.

Erath County's mild climate and low land prices will also attract California and Arizona dairy farmers, Cowan said.

An Arizona couple, Daniel and Susan Viss, had the Southwest's largest milk tank installed in Dublin Dec. 10. Construction of their "Grand Canyon Dairy" will be completed in several months, Mrs. Viss said.

The dairy will begin with about 400 cows, but about 600 more cows will be added next year, she said. The tank will be filled by a milking system that can milk 32 cows at a time, she said.

'Father of Texas' remembered in ceremony

AUSTIN (AP) — The 150th anniversary of the death of the "Father of Texas" was commemorated with a 23-gun salute and a re-enactment of historic eulogies at a weekend ceremony.

Nearly 100 Texans were at the Texas State Cemetery at 12:30 p.m. Saturday to pay tribute to Stephen F. Austin, exactly 150 years after his death on Dec. 27, 1836 at the age of 46.

Austin spent the last 15 years of his life colonizing what was to become the Republic of Texas only a short time before his death, said Will Howard of the Travis County Historical Commission.

"His 15 years as a colonist is symbolic as one-tenth of the Sesquicentennial," he said.

The ceremony, held in front of Austin's tomb, featured a recreation of his actual burial.

A red, white and green wreath was placed on the tomb and representatives from a number of historical organizations repeated eulogies given by Austin's contemporaries, such as Sam Houston, Texas' first president, and Mirabeau Lamar, the republic's first vice president.

"The patriarch has left us," said Allyn Berwick, reading from the original announcement of Austin's death.

"Stephen F. Austin was the Father of Texas. This is the designation justly accorded to him, as will be testified to by every man who is acquainted with the primitive history of Texas, or its progress as long as he lived," said Colin Jordan, repeating the words of Houston.

"His 15 years as a colonist is symbolic as one-tenth of the Sesquicentennial."

— Will Howard

Austin died from pneumonia after working long hours at the drafty capital at Columbia — now West Columbia, 35 miles southwest of Houston — which was then little more than a frontier village.

The first cabinet appointed by Sam Houston included Austin as secretary of state. Austin died less than three months later.

Saturday's ceremony included the raising of a replica of the first official flag of the Republic of Texas that Austin designed shortly before his death.

The ceremony ended with the firing of a volley of shots from flintlock rifles and muskets like those fired in a 23-gun military salute after Austin's death. The 23 guns symbolized the number of counties in the Republic.

Shamrock billed as 'MTV town'

SHAMROCK (AP) — Most folks in Shamrock are more amused than alarmed by a promotional ploy that has thrust the isolated ranch town into the national rock 'n' roll spotlight.

"I think it's funny," said Sam Pakan, who lives on his father's 83-year-old farm two miles from a new town planned by the raucous music video channel MTV.

"Just the thought of someone that listens to MTV wanting to have a ranch out here in the boonies — it's a strange gimmick," Pakan said.

Shamrock is in the Texas Panhandle on Interstate 40, about 90 miles east of Amarillo.

Amid the televised revelry of a Roman-theme bash called "Nero's Eve Rock 'n' Roll Ball," an MTV "vee-jay" will announce the name of a new neighbor for this Panhandle town of 3,000. The winner of the 100-acre site near Shamrock billed as "MTV Town."

"The channel is very well-known for its outlandish contests," MTV promotion coordinator Peter Danielsen told the Dallas Times Herald.

Danielsen cited the New York-based cable network's $1 million giveaway in 1985 and a contest this year that sent rock idol Prince to Sheridan, Wyo., to give the winner and her guests a private screening of Prince's new movie.

"Now we're giving away a town," Danielsen said from his home in Manhattan. "What's next? We keep asking ourselves."

Not everyone around Shamrock is amused.

"I'm not very well pleased with the idea," said Kim Cadra, who lives across the road from the site. "We have two small kids, we're Christians, and I just kinda worry about what's gonna be going on over there," Cadra said.

The "MTV Town" contest has attracted hundreds of thousands of entrants, Danielsen said, a "fantastic response" second only to the network's $1 million giveaway.

Danielsen conceded that, currently, "MTV Town" is little more than windblown grassland.

"But it is (a town) because we bought it and we'll make it a town," he said, adding that the site will be incorporated at the winner's request.

MTV chose the site because, at about $300 an acre, the land was cheap, Danielsen said.

Along with the land, the lucky winner of MTV's contest has been promised a house full of stereo equipment and 1,000 compact discs, Danielsen said. The winner also will get a jeep to traverse his roadless town; the satellite dish he will need to keep watching MTV; "a town's supply" of candy and gum from the contest's co-sponsor, Nabisco; and $100,000 cash.

Asthmatics may be key to controling acid rain

By GUY DARST

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, in considering a new air pollution standard to protect asthmatics, may be opening the way for a back-door program to control acid rain, say industry and government experts.

The new hourly standard would be aimed at controlling short bursts — five minutes to 10 minutes — of sulfur dioxide from smokestacks. Current standards are based on averages over longer periods — three hours, a day and a year.

Sulphur dioxide, converted in the atmosphere to sulphuric acid and other compounds, contributes to acid rain, which environmentalists say kills aquatic and plant life.

In high concentrations in the air, sulfur dioxide can make breathing more difficult. Asthmatics are hit first, particularly those that exercise outside.

Agency studies suggest that the rule change would benefit only 6 to 11 percent of asthmatics, who constitute about 4 percent of the population.

Many environmentalists say that the law clearly requires a new standard, to protect even that small number of people, while electric power company officials say the rule change could cost their industry up to $5 billion.

Officials at the environmental agency, speaking privately, say they are reluctant to force what amounts to an acid rain control program on the utilities, in trying to reach another goal, when Congress has explicitly declined to act against acid rain.

Agency officials say that Congress has not come to grips with the fact that the long overdue decision could cost enormous sums. "We're going to have to do something. We're driven by the science," said one high official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

NATION

In addition to electric generating plants, some factories, particularly smelters and paper mills, could be affected.

Robert Beck, a lobbyist for the Edison Electric Institute in charge of environmental questions, estimated that the rule could cost utilities $5 billion a year.

Beck expressed frustration in trying to alert Congress to what is at stake for his industry: "Every time we try to raise the issue with members, they say: 'Leave it to EPA — get out of here.'"

A key congressional aide on air pollution questions said he had not looked into the issue and he did not believe any other aides or members had.

Edison, according to Beck, believes the agency has the flexibility to decide that no new standard is necessary. "We already protect 85 percent" of the target group, he said.

That position is not popular with environmentalists.

David Doniger, a lawyer for the Natural Resources Defense Council, argued that congressional committee reports make it clear that the Clean Air Act is intended to protect asthmatics in the "normal course of daily activity." He said that even includes asthmatics who must take medication to exercise in the first place.

EPA is not supposed to consider costs in deciding on health-based standards, and Doniger argues that the agency "ought to carry out the law. If it happens to coincide with what protects the environment, that's just a coincidence."

EPA's analysts are recommending a one-hour standard for sulphur dioxide emissions in the range of 0.2 parts per million to 0.5 ppm. By comparison, the current 24-hour standard is 0.14 ppm.

Beck said a one-hour standard of 0.8 ppm would require no substantial change from current practice; a 0.25 ppm limit would require utilities to eliminate 9 million tons of the pollutant from smokestack gases every year in order to reduce the short-term bursts.

"It's equivalent to an acid rain bill," he said.

Air pollution standards are supposed to be affirmed or changed every five years, but EPA consistently runs behind schedule. The current review of sulfur dioxide began in 1978. In 1982 the staff recommended a short-term standard and this was reaffirmed this year. The Clean Air Scientific Advisory Committee, a panel of outside scientists, endorsed the recommendation in October.

According to EPA's latest analysis, "up to 10 to 15 percent of the sensitive population in the vicinity of major sources could be exposed once a year to levels (of sulfur dioxide) at or above 0.5 parts per million for five minutes while at elevated ventilation," that is, while engaged in moderate exercise like jogging.

Allan Paul, brewmaster and principal partner in the San Francisco Brewing Co., the first brew pub in San Francisco, hoists a glass of his freshly brewed lager. Paul's brewery is a storefront operation with a 200-gallon copper kettle visible to his customers so they can nearly see the entire process at a glance.

Micro-breweries thing of the future

By JACK SCHREIBMAN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The decor at Allan Paul's pub at the edge of the old Barbary Coast includes a mahogany plank bar trimmed in shiny brass, revolving paddle-wheel fans and a 200-gallon copper kettle.

The kettle isn't merely for show. It's the source of the beer served with pride at the San Francisco Brewing Co., one of America's newest "micro-breweries" going for a share of the gourmet suds market.

"We make beautiful beer," said Paul, brewmaster and principal partner in what he calls the first brew pub in San Francisco: Production, 60 gallons a day. Budweiser — about 6 million gallons a day — is not yet lifting an eyebrow.

The San Francisco Brewing Co. is a storefront operation. With the brewing kettle located in the bar proper, customers can take in almost the entire process at a glance. Out of sight in the cellar, a small cooler ages the beer before it's pumped up to the bar.

The pub serves a pair of old-style lagers, at $2.50 for a pint glass and $1.75 for a half-pint. They're called Albatross, after the saloon that last occupied the premises, and Emperor Norton, after an addled but lovable old fellow adopted by the city in the last century.

"We're definitely going to make money. ...San Francisco has a sophisticated beer market...their per capita consumption of beer is No. 1 in the country."
— Allan Paul

"We're definitely going to make money," said Paul. "San Francisco has a sophisticated beer market...their per capita consumption of beer is No. 1 in the country."

Although the nation's beer consumption has been stalled for years at about 25 gallons per person per year, imported and U.S. specialty brews are increasingly popular with upscale drinkers.

On the domestic side of the "gourmet" suds trade are about 60 micro-breweries, producers of under 10,000 barrels a year, according to William O'Shea, spokesman for Chicago-based Brewers Association of America.

Instead of the rice and corn used in most high-production domestics, these heavier, headier super-premium brews use barley, wheat or more exotic ingredients to make the drink distinctive.

But that doesn't always make them competitive.

"They have a lot of problems," said O'Shea. "Anybody can start a brewery in any area and sell some beer. If he gets a big enough price, he's in business. The trouble with these micro-breweries is when they leave their home territory, they don't sell."

There are exceptions. Market Watch, a publication that keeps tabs on alcoholic beverages, says Massachussets-brewed Samuel Adams Boston Lager is so faithful to the German brewing standard that it is the only American beer available in West Germany.

Another success story is San Francisco's Anchor Brewing Co., rescued in 1965 by washing-machine heir Fritz Maytag, 48. At the time it was producing about 600 barrels of draft a year. Maytag's friends thought he was crazy.

"No one ever heard of us," said Maytag. "We had a zero reputation. I was the only one thinking Anchor Steam was the greatest beer going."

By 1985 Anchor was producing 8,000 barrels of beer, porter, ale and barleywine.

Maytag agrees with Paul that San Francisco, along with Seattle, is one of the best markets in the country for gourmet, specialty beers.

"It's easy for us to go in one place and find eight or 10 completely different beers," he said. "Not only Miller, Oly or Budweiser. I mean, Anchor Porter or Wheat, Guinness Stout or San Francisco Brewing Co. lager."

Outward Bound in its 25th year

DENVER (AP) — Outward Bound, the rigorous program that participants say develops inner strengths as well as outdoor skills, opened its first U.S. school 25 years ago in an aspen grove above the Colorado mountain town of Marble.

It was an offshoot of a program founded in Wales in World War II to help merchant seamen survive German torpedo attacks by teaching them leadership, teamwork and self-confidence.

When Outward Bound took root in the United States, the emphasis remained the same, but in the rugged Rockies the program took on a distinctly American character.

Five U.S. schools now offer the basic outdoor courses. But Outward Bound today also helps high school students in New York City learn to read better, troubled Vietnam veterans and rape victims to cope with their painful memories, and cancer patients and their families to find more strength.

Outward Bound is using its 25th anniversary as a time of re-evaluation.

Enrollment has doubled but fund raising has lagged. Courses cost about $60 a day, and many now regard Outward Bound as a middle-class luxury.

Striving to return to its original goal of being affordable to all, Outward Bound Inc., the not-for-profit body based in Greenwich, Conn., that charters schools and oversees them, has launched a drive to raise money, aiming for $12.3 million over five years.

And while Outward Bound insists its primary goal still is teen-agers, the median age of the students is now 22.

In the summer of 1962, 100 teen-age boys signed up for three 26-day mountaineering courses held near Marble, 20 miles southwest of Aspen. The Colorado school served student No. 50,000 this summer.

The five U.S. schools have more than 160,000 alumni. Besides Colorado, the schools are in Maine, North Carolina, Oregon and Minnesota.

The alumni include Deputy U.S. Secretary of State John Whitehead; Arthur Levitt Jr., the head of the American Stock Exchange; NBC News anchorman Tom Brokaw, and daughters of entertainer Bill Cosby.

IBM, Xerox and Burger King are among the corporations that have sent employees to Outward Bound courses.

More than 15,000 students a year learn rappelling, cross-country skiing and white-water rafting in courses lasting a few days to a few months. But the skill is not the most important thing. The students say the courses force them to reach inside themselves to discover reserves of strength and shades of character they never knew they had.

"It really doesn't matter to an instructor if he runs across the best natural rock climber ever to hit the planet on his course," says Steve Truitt, Colorado Outward Bound's director of development. "That's not Outward Bound.

"What's more Outward Bound is the student that struggles up the cliff and that has to face some real 'Can I make it?' 'I want help,' 'Let me down' kind of conflict."

Outward Bound is the brainchild of Kurt Hahn, an Oxford-educated Jew who was an educational pioneer in Germany before his anti-Nazi views forced him out. He opened the Gordonstoun school for boys in Scotland in 1934. Its students have included Prince Philip, the current Outward Bound patron in England, and Prince Charles.

In World War II, Sir Lawrence Holt, head of a British shipping firm, asked for Hahn's help after discovering that when his ships were hit by torpedoes, many younger seamen were dying while waiting in life rafts for rescue.

Hahn proposed a program to boost the young sailors' confidence. Holt insisted it be called Outward Bound, a nautical expression referring to the moment a ship leaves safe harbor for the open sea.

The Outward Bound school opened at Aberdovey, Wales, in 1941. Its month-long course combined small-boat training, athletics, route-finding, rescue, land and sea expeditions and service to the community.

Word of Outward Bound soon traveled across the Atlantic, and Joshua Miner, an American boarding school teacher, was sent by his father-in-law, textile magnate J.P. Stevens, to report on Hahn's ideas.

Miner became a founding trustee of the American school, which was chartered in 1961.

In Outward Bound's first year on this side of the Atlantic, more than half the students were on scholarship. Today, fewer than 20 percent of its students receive financial aid. Just five years ago one-third received grants or loans.

"Our enrollment has doubled, but our endowment has not doubled," said Outward Bound USA President John Raynolds.

He said teen-agers remain Outward Bound's primary focus. But he said its evolution into an organization that also serves adults was only natural.

"You don't stop changing and you don't stop growing just because you're not a teen-ager."

Whitehead, who has been on 10 Outward Bound trips, agrees.

Speaking at the Colorado Outward Bound 25th anniversary dinner in Denver, he noted that young people often speak of profound personal changes after a course.

"Well, at the advanced age of 54, Outward Bound changed my life, too. From an urban-based, office-bound life, it brought me outdoors again. It showed me the majestic beauty of our great country — the rivers, the mountains, the flowers, the stars. It let me breathe fresh air.

"It let me feel the exhilaration of hard physical work, the joy of discovering how quickly a group of diverse amateurs can become a team of near-experts. It stretched my mind and my body to do things which I thought I could not do. It restored my soul."

Airlines in Southeast delayed by fog

ATLANTA (AP) — Fog covering Atlanta's busy international airport delayed flights by as much as five hours and disrupted airline schedules throughout the Southeast as travelers headed home after the Christmas weekend.

Virtually all the 2,000-plus flights to and from Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport on Sunday were delayed, said operations supervisor David Martin. He said it was possible some travelers would have to spend the night at the airport before they could resume their trips.

"I have seen fog and delays in 1986 but so far this year I have not seen fog so thick as it was early today (Sunday) or as many aircraft backed up and waiting on a gate to unload," Martin said.

Landings and takeoffs were suspended for 2½ hours in the morning, and again late Sunday night.

"We were just about through with our push when the fog closed in again just after 11 p.m.," Delta Air Lines spokesman Bill Berry said.

"It's frustrating, but I can understand what the airlines are going through," said Gene Massey of Greensboro, Ga.

Study shows students in debt from college alarming

WASHINGTON (AP) — Students are incurring alarming levels of debt as they borrow to finance college educations, a congressional study says.

"The rising cumulative level of debt that is documented in this paper is disturbing," Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., and Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., said Sunday in a statement accompanying the Joint Economic Committee report. The study said the four-year cost of attending a public university is about $17,000.

It said much of the evidence concerning the debt problem is sketchy and anecdotal but added it is clear that mounting education debts can affect students' career choices and postpone homebuying, marriage and the decision to have children.

USSR on brink of change

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union is on the verge of major internal changes that may offer opportunities to the United States, according to former national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

"I think it's a time of opportunity for us because the Soviet Union is now entering a phase of what I consider to be protracted systemic crisis," Brzezinski said Sunday on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley." He said "something very significant, perhaps even momentous," appeared likely.

The Carter administration official was commenting on recent developments ranging from the release from internal exile of dissident physicist Andrei D. Sakharov to an outbreak of nationalist rioting in Alma Ata in Soviet Central Asia.

House diner goes private

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tired of labor strife and deepening deficits, the House of Representatives is handing its restaurants over to a private contractor.

Bean soup, a favorite of lawmakers for decades, will remain on the menu but will either cost more or be served in smaller portions. That is because patrons for the first time will be paying District of Columbia sales tax on their meals.

The same 245 employees will continue cooking, serving and cleaning up in the white-linen members' dining room, two large cafeterias for the public and House staff and five carry-outs. But they apparently will miss out on a raise because the contractor, Service America Corp., takes over Jan. 3, one day before a pay hike for federal employees takes effect.

Body of baby found buried

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico State Police and Amarillo, Texas, police are investigating the death of a 3-month-old girl whose body was found buried near the Organ Mountains northeast of here.

State police found the body about 10:45 p.m. Saturday by following directions provided by her parents to Amarillo police. The parents told police they had buried the baby in the New Mexico desert.

The body was discovered in an arroyo near "A" Mountain, state police said. The cause of death has not been determined. The body was sent to Albuquerque for an autopsy.

Amarillo police said the parents are being held while police investigate the infant's death, but the couple has not been charged. Amarillo police would not release the couple's names.

The couple went to police about 5 p.m. Saturday and reported that their daughter had been kidnapped from an Amarillo discount store, police said.

During questioning from police, the couple told police that the baby had been born prematurely and died of pneumonia on Christmas and was buried Friday.

Deputy Medical Investigator Howard Cothern said the infant was found without clothing wrapped in a blanket.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — At least 20 bystanders were unable to provide a clear description of a man who carried a dead woman into a hospital lobby, then fled after saying there was no need for him to stay, authorities said.

"We are handling it as a homicide, but I guess it could be accidental or a suicide. We just don't know," said Pulaski County sheriff's Lt. Dennis Evans.

The man carried the woman into the Baptist Medical Center lobby Sunday afternoon while at least 20 people looked on, said hospital spokeswoman Dana Dussing Berry. "The operators here heard people screaming from the lobby."

The man said, "There's no need for me to stay now," before he left in a blue-and-silver Chevrolet van with Florida license plates, Mrs Berry said.

Reagan refuses homeless

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Organizers of a tent city for the homeless said they were refused a meeting with President Reagan but hoped to gain the attention of local officials with a rally outside City Hall.

A dozen homeless people went to the Century Plaza Hotel, where Reagan spent the weekend, but were turned away by police, said Chilton M. Alphonse, president the of Community Youth Sports and Arts Foundation.

"We tried to gain an audience with the President, which we did not get. But the President was aware that the homeless were there," said Alphonse.

EMS having worst chopper accident rate in history

NEW YORK (AP) — When a helicopter ambulance plowed into an Oregon wheat field the same day one crashed in Tennessee, it brought instant national attention to a problem that has concerned Don Wright and Tom Einhorn for more than two years.

"It is an industry in distress. We are experiencing the worst accident rate in modern aviation history right now," said Einhorn, who with Wright founded the National EMS Pilots Association in 1984.

Helicopters as ambulances are among the newest, fastest growing medical care services. Four such services existed in 1978; today almost 150 companies provide emergency medical service helicopters to hospitals around the nation.

In emergencies, helicopters are faster than ambulances, especially in rural areas or traffic-jammed cities. They routinely transfer patients to hospitals where specialized treatment is available. About 75,000 patients will be flown this year, up from 62,400 last year, said Howard Collett, editor and publisher of Hospital Aviation magazine. Industry estimates say about 20 percent of patients served by helicopters would have died without quick attention.

But at the same time, accidents have been mounting.

A pilot, a nurse and a paramedic were killed in the Oregon crash Dec. 3; a patient, a pilot and two nurses died in Tennessee hours later. The two accidents were the 30th and 31st medical helicopter accidents reported in 1986 to the National EMS Pilots Association, which offers the most complete such statistics. Twenty-one people have been killed in accidents this year.

Last year, 13 people died in 14 medical helicopter accidents.

Based on hours of flying time, medical helicopters are twice as likely to crash as other types of helicopters, and 2.5 times as likely to crash as small planes and other non-commercial aircraft, according to the pilots' association.

Helicopter rescues are more dangerous than other types of flights because pilots may have to land on highway median strips or in fields, facing ground hazards unknown at conventional landing pads. And such pilots accept risky missions more readily, knowing patients' lives are literally in the balance.

Most of the mino accidents in 1986 were caused by mechanical problems — power losses, doors falling off in flight, fuel linkage problems. The more serious accidents occurred when the helicopters struck power lines or were flown into the ground, accidents where pilot error and weather conditions were often contributing factors.

"I guess you can understand that flying to an accident in the middle of the night where you have two or three people pinned in a car can be a stressful situation," said Einhorn.

"We don't have the luxury other pilots have. We don't know where we're going days in advance. We have about five minutes' alert. You have to get into the air, know where you're going, in an area you've never been to before at 3 o'clock in the morning in marginal weather."

The pilots' association contends fatigue is the most serious problem and wants helicopter services to add more pilots. It also says better training and navigation equipment for hazardous weather flying are necessary.

"This industry is growing so rapidly, anyone can come in and put a medical helicopter in a hospital," Einhorn said. "You can put a Bell 47, like you see on M-A-S-H, and put one pilot in there and call yourself an EMS operation."

"With any growth comes problems, and this is a problem we need to deal with," said Nina Merrill, executive director of the American Society of Hospital-Based Emergency Air Medical Services, an industry group of 145 members that started in 1980 with 25.

Most emergency medical service helicopters are rented to hospitals by private companies, and Ms. Merrill's group has been providing safety guidelines.

So has the National EMS Pilots Association, consisting of about 300 doctors, nurses, paramedics and mechanics as well as pilots. The two groups sometimes disagree.

Ms. Merrill said a new list of improved minimum safety standards has been drafted and will be submitted to members for approval.

Separate guidelines drafted by the pilots' group call for a minimum of four pilots to work different shifts for each aircraft. Einhorn said such staffing is needed to avoid fatigue problems. Three pilots is the industry standard, but the new industry document does not set a minimum number.

"I'm not sure you can write one standard across the board, based on the geographical diversity of our members," Ms. Merrill said. "If you have one aircraft doing 90 flights a month, I don't think any two people can keep up with that. But if you're doing 30 flights, that's a different story."

Einhorn said the industry should set new safety standards quickly, or the government is likely to step in with its own regulations — a move neither the pilots' group nor the industry group wants.

"If something isn't done in a hurry, nobody is going to have to worry about regulations because this industry will cease to exist," Einhorn said.

The accidents have already raised governmental concern.

The National Transportation Safety Board intends to study the safety of EMS aircraft next year, said Ted Lopatkiewicz, a spokesman for the agency.

The board does not generally study "public use" helicopters such as emergency response aircraft, but the new study is needed "because we just noticed, reading the papers, that there are more of these accidents," Lopatkiewicz said.

The accidents occur everywhere:

— An emergency medical helicopter struck trees in a Baltimore park last January, killing two state troopers aboard after they delivered an accidental shooting victim to a hospital.

Season's parable

How the magic of Christmas renews and strengthens itself against the onslaughts of cynicism was never better illustrated than by the drama which unfolded in a small New Jersey Roman Catholic parish. The incident and its aftermath could almost serve as a parable for the season.

A curate, evidently carried away by the movement to update religion and tradition, took it upon himself to tell the six-year-old children of his parish flatly there is no Santa Claus. That he should have done so at a service commemorating St. Nicholas, the 4th Century bishop on whose persona the Santa Claus belief is based, is especially saddening. He even resorted to the materialism of modern logic to make his defenseless point: St. Nicholas is long dead; ergo, so is Santa Claus.

Well versed though he may be in theology and the biography of saints' lives, the clergyman must have skipped his seminary classes on faith and innocence. Those lessons were to come from the parents of the children to whom he imparted his convictions. The parents, rightly reasoning the Santa Claus belief was a family matter, demanded a confrontation with the priest. It never came to pass. The priest, his world of cold intellectuality collapsing about him, took a leave of absence to an undisclosed destination.

As Christianity prepared to observe the most joyous day on its calendar, the children of the New Jersey parish, being the wonderfully charitable and forgiving youngsters they are, probably wished the absent curate the merriest of Christmases — wherever he was. They may have even offered prayers for him. That's good, in keeping with the best meanings of the Christmas season.

Ruffled Marxists

Tensions are starting to rise again along the Vietnam-China border, where the two communist neighbors fought a series of skirmishes seven years ago.

The revived hostility between the two countries came to light at a Communist Party congress in Hanoi where Vietnamese spokesmen complained that their overtures toward reconciliation were met with stony silence from the Chinese.

Obviously, the Chinese are still sulking over Vietnam's 1978 invasion of Cambodia and its ouster of the pro-Chinese government in Phnom Penh. The Chinese are continuing to arm the Cambodian guerrillas harassing the Vietnamese occupation forces.

The renewed tensions have the rippling effect of putting the Soviet Union in an uncomfortable spot. The Soviets, too, are trying to rebuild relations with China, but at the same time support the Vietnamese in their Cambodian adventure.

Historically, the Vietnamese and the Chinese never have been able to maintain amicable relations. The latest impasse only affirms that a shared Marxism is no more successful in dispelling ancient animosities than it is in other spheres.

Amtrak comes back

Clickety clack, clickety clack ... look what's comin' down the track ... it's Amtrak comin' back.

Remember all those gloom and doom predictions about America's passenger rail service. For years politicians and other people movers have been saying passenger service is dying and it should be allowed to die.

So under pressure from budget-cutters, funds for Amtrak, the government's passenger rail system, have been steadily reduced. But Amtrak has not gone to that big roundhouse in the sky.

Amtrak was created in 1971 when several passenger lines were broke because of poor management. At the time, few people thought that passenger service would survive for long.

But slowly Amtrak's management created new efficiency, and various segments of its system began to break even. Now it is predicted that next year Amtrak will break even for the first time.

Management also has found new ways to make money, such as letting telephone companies use rights of way and excess communication lines and selling excess electricity.

Amtrak is not out of the tunnel yet, but it has shown that rail passenger service is not obsolete. In a few years it may even be profitable.

Proponents have argued that America needs passenger rail service as an alternative to other forms of transportation and for national emergencies. It appears that their faith has been vindicated and, who knows, someday our passenger service may be as good as that in Japan and several European countries.

Hussein dodged bullets many times

WASHINGTON — Jordan's diminutive monarch, King Hussein, has survived more than a half-century — despite the worst intentions of over a dozen assassins.

Jack Anderson

"I've always been a fatalist," the king explained in a recent interview with Dale Van Atta. "I've believed that, right or wrong, one has to do one's best at any given moment, and that when life is ended by the will of God, that's what happens."

Then, using "one" to replace the royal "we" in a masterpiece of understatement, Hussein added: "One has been through a lot."

Hussein's first narrow escape was bloody and traumatic — and could easily have convinced "one" that he led a charmed life. It occurred on July 20, 1951. Hussein, then 15, was standing beside his beloved grandfather, King Abdullah, at the Al Aksa Mosque in Jerusalem when an assassin opened fire at close range.

Abdullah was killed with a bullet to the head, and as the assassin and the royal bodyguards exchanged fire, Hussein, though unarmed, ran toward his grandfather's killer. The boy was struck by a bullet, but legend has it that the slug bounced off a medal on the uniform that Abdullah had insisted Hussein wear that day.

Was that really the way it happened? Van Atta asked.

"Yes," replied Hussein. "There was a medal, and (the bullet) actually glanced off it." Hussein began carrying a pistol the next day.

In 1957 Hussein drove alone to the Zerka army base to put down an officers' rebellion. He drove into the mutineers' midst and dared them to shoot. Some of them did — he said he could "feel the heat" of bullets whizzing past him — but most were too ashamed.

On another occasion, he succeeded by a similar confrontation — but with a daring twist. He demanded that all 700 rebellious officers approach him, salute and pledge their allegiance to him. The procession took 90 minutes.

There were more bizarre attempts on his life. For example: "I had sinus problems," the king recalled. "I still have them to this day. I used (nasal) drops. One day I came in and felt that I needed to use them."

Hussein had been warned by his intelligence chief that there would be an attempt on his life by someone on his personal staff. A taped conversation was played in which a would-be assassin boasted to a royal spy: "We've recruited somebody in his residence to finish him off and it won't be long now. If (the king) had only stuck to a proper routine, we would have got him days ago."

On the day his sinuses began throbbing, Hussein reached for the nose drops, but luckily examined the bottle. "It looked a little old, so I poured it down the sink and it started to froth and bubble." The acid in the medicine bottle was so strong it ate away the chrome trim on the basin drain.

"I didn't use it, consequentially," Hussein added sardonically.

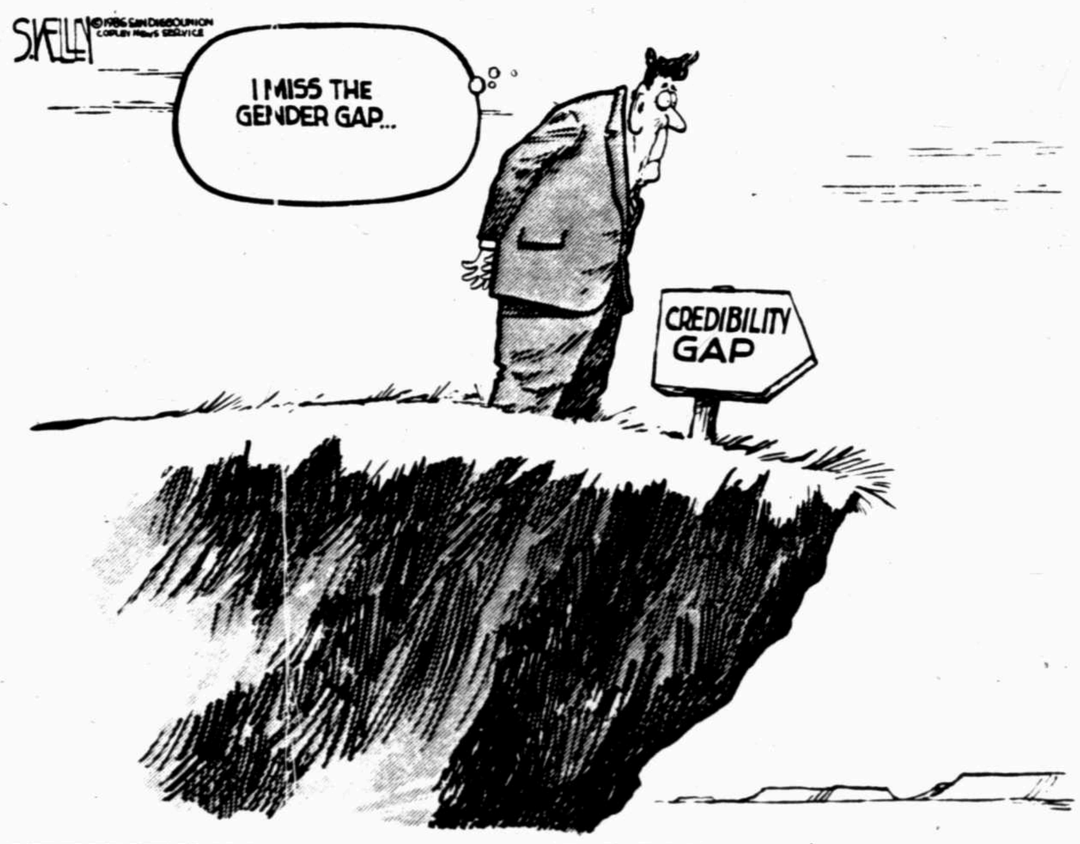

Equally bizarre was the tragic case of the royal cats.

"I have always had cats around," the king said. "My grandfather, Abdullah, loved them. And one day I saw that the cat population (on the palace grounds) was getting a little smaller. I wondered about it. And it turned out that someone had been trying some poisons, unfortunately, on the cats."

An assistant cook soon confessed that he had been recruited by a cousin in Damascus and was to be paid a large sum if he poisoned Hussein. But he didn't know the proper dose, so he experimented on the palace cats. Seven were found dead on a single day, six the next. The king himself came upon three dead cats while strolling on the palace grounds.

Characteristically, the king turned an enemy into a friend by pardoning the would-be assassin and setting him free.

Sen. Byrd moves to seize security 'agenda'

WASHINGTON — The first quiet tactical decision of Sen. Robert Byrd as the new majority leader is to move two unratified nuclear treaties to the floor before President Reagan makes his State of the Union speech, dramatizing the intent of Senate Democrats to seize the national security agenda from the administration.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The 1974 Threshold Test Ban Treaty and 1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty have languished for a decade in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Now Byrd has directed the committee's new chairman, Sen. Claiborne Pell, to move them out ready for floor action by Jan. 20.

The timing, at least a week before Reagan even delivers his State of the Union speech outlining aspirations for his final two years, is a remarkable departure from normal congressional courtesy. In setting his Jan. 20 deadline, Byrd's aim is to instruct the nation and the White House that the first Democratic Senate majority confronting Reagan will settle for nothing less than full equality with him, and perhaps a little more, in handling the Soviet account.

This is one of many dangers to the president on the national security front posed by his first all-Democratic-controlled Congress arriving simultaneously with the most serious internal crisis of his administration. Indeed, one retreat has already been sounded before the 100th Congress convenes.

That retreat came on the new MX missile decision, startling pro-defense members of both parties in Congress. Reagan revealed he would ask the 100th Congress for up to 500 of the proposed new single-warhead Midgetman missiles, despite opposition at highest Pentagon levels to what is viewed as its exorbitant cost and relative ineffectiveness. The decision delays for at least one year the president's expected request for 50 more MX missiles carrying 10 warheads apiece.

With the Republicans having lost their blocking power in the Senate, dominant liberal forces within the House Democratic majority are drooling over imminent control of national security. They are even exerting pressures on Rep. Jim Wright before his formal election as speaker.

A case in point is Wright's intention to name a prominent but nonliberal fellow Texan, Rep. Charles Wilson, to the House Intelligence Committee. The speaker-designate has come under what a colleague calls "absolutely unbearable pressure" to name somebody else.

While the House grows ever more hostile, the president now faces a dangerous second front in the Senate. Behind Byrd's unusual move to button up the two nuclear treaties before Reagan can even say hello to the new Congress are two partisan objectives: controlling the nuclear arms debate at home and seizing the initiative in the arms control negotiations with the Soviets.

Byrd is using Reagan's Oct. 10 letter to Capitol Hill to justify his haste for a Senate ratification vote on two treaties that have been hanging around unwanted and virtually forgotten. In that letter the president promised to support the treaties "as a first order of business for the 100th Congress" if Mikhail Gorbachev agreed on iron-clad verification procedures. If not, Reagan promised to "work with the Senate" on language to delay the effective date of the treaties until Gorbachev did agree on compliance measures.

But this pledge the day before the president went to Reykjavik was made under duress of a congressional threat to tie his hands on testing and other nuclear issues, including compliance with the unratified SALT II, by tacking amendments to the catchall spending bill. Given a choice between stalling the entire federal government or going to the summit with diluted negotiating power, Reagan finessed the dilemma by writing his letter.

In fact, Reykjavik produced nothing at all from Gorbachev on the troubling question of verifying Soviet compliance with previous nuclear agreements, from underground testing to the more important question of Soviet compliance with SALT II. Nevertheless, the House will resume efforts to limit Reagan's nuclear programs to SALT II ceilings and to push the U.S. into testing limits Reagan does not want.

And in the newly Democratic Senate, Byrd is holding Reagan to the small print of his Oct. 10 letter, even though it was written at the point of a gun. The truth is acknowledged in an informal administration memorandum stating that "had the letter never been sent or were the Republicans still the majority" in the Senate, the president — not Bob Byrd — probably would still "control" the nuclear agenda.

Judging from his opening gambit, the majority leader is in no mood to bargain away any part of his new control. With an uncertain future ahead, that makes a frightened administration even more so.

CHARLEY REESE

Journalists should reveal conflicts of interest

I never write a let's-review-the-year column because I think that is a dumb thing to do. You saw the year as well as I did. Nor do I write about which places and people pleased or offended me during the past year. I figure you have your own list.

Charley Reese

Instead, I use the opportunity to make a kind of financial and intellectual disclosure. I think columnists owe it to their readers. We journalists like to complain about other people's conflicts of interest so it's only fair we reveal our own, if we have any.

None of us is objective, though we may be disinterested. We all carry our philosophical, social and political baggage and it affects our writing. The only fair thing to do is dump it out so the reader knows he's getting one human's subjective outlook and not some Olympian voice of pure reason.

Actually, I wish I had some financial conflicts of interest to list, but I don't. All my income is derived from writing a column and an occasional fee for speaking. The only stock I own is some in a little corporation that used to syndicate my column. The only real estate is half interest in a house occupied by my ex. You can see why I don't write a financial advice column.

I wrote two books and ghost-wrote two more but they are all out of print and anyway I never mentioned them in the column because if I were an editor and a columnist tried to hawk his own books, I'd tell him to buy an ad.

In fact, I never write about anything or anybody in which I have a personal interest because I consider that cheating. I am registered as a Republican but I am not a partisan as political parties are just machines for electing candidates and don't stand for anything except patronage. My contempt for most politicians is bipartisan. I don't endorse candidates except in the presidential race and then I do it openly.

Most people think of me as a conservative but I myself am not sure. It depends on how you define that term. I am not a libertarian, don't believe in free trade, don't believe in totally unregulated free enterprise, though I do prefer as little government as possible. My favorite presidents are Tom Jefferson, Andy Jackson, Teddy Roosevelt and Harry Truman. A friend called me the last surviving Jacksonian Democrat and maybe he's right.

I am a nationalist. I think the United States comes first and the only justification for any policy of the government, domestic or foreign, is to advance the interests of America and the American people as a whole. I don't think government has any business doing favors for individuals or special groups of people.

I don't belong to any organizations — trade, social, political, or ideological, except for the Holocaust resource center in the town where I live. I'm not a union man and probably never will be since I think having one boss is bad enough without paying somebody a fee to be a second one. But I am not anti-union either. Unions are like any other human organization — as good or as bad, as useful or as useless, as the people in them make them.

What I write, I believe to be true except when I do an occasional satire, which of course is a drawn-out joke. I don't do those as often as I used to. It wasn't so bad when readers didn't recognize them as satire — that was fun — but when editors didn't, it wasn't too much fun.

It doesn't matter to me whether you agree or disagree. I'm not trying to convert anyone to my way of thinking. I don't plan to solicit you for money or votes or try to sell you anything. The only motive I have for writing, aside from keeping bread on the table, is to stimulate people to think. If getting mad at me causes you to think, that's fine — though remember that getting mad on a full stomach can cause gas. The pleasure I get from writing is communicating with other minds, a kind of conversation in ink.

Finally, I try to always remember that I am first a human, second an American, and third, a journalist. Not everyone in the trade agrees with that ranking of priorities but it works for me.

Shamir, Israeli leaders cleared in hijackers' killings

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Justice Ministry has cleared Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and other government leaders of responsibility in the killings of two Palestinian hijackers and a subsequent cover-up, news reports said today.

The finding means that no Israeli official will be prosecuted in the affair that had rocked Israel's internal security agency, Shin Bet, and cast a shadow over Shamir's political future.

The ministry completed its investigation last week, but refused to comment pending authorization by Attorney General Yosef Harish to publish the findings.

"I cannot comment on the contents of the report, which was delivered to me personally," Shamir told Israel army radio. "I hope it will be published in the coming days and it will become clear that what I said several months ago was correct and truthful."

At issue are the deaths of two Palestinians who hijacked a bus to the Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip in 1984. Separate commissions of inquiry conducted in 1985 by the army, Defense Ministry and Shin Bet said the two men were beaten to death while in custody, but did not say who was responsible.

Last May, however, three senior Shin Bet officers alleged that the agency's chief, Avraham Shalom, ordered the prisoners be killed. Shalom, in turn, alleged the killings and the subsequent cover-up were authorized by the political leadership.

Shamir was prime minister at the time of the killings and had overall responsibility for Shin Bet. He repeatedly has refused to comment on Shalom's allegations, saying only that the truth would eventually clear him of wrongdoing.

"We are deeply satisfied," Shamir aide Dan Meridor told the army radio. "Today we know that Shamir knew in his heart that he was completely clean of any wrongdoing."

But Maj. Gen. Meir Zorea, who headed one of the commissions of inquiry, criticized the Justice Ministry report for failing to recommend any action or allot blame.

He told Israel radio the case was "probably one of the biggest scandals this country has known."

The Justice Ministry's 65-page report said Shalom's version of the events was "weak, inconsistent and not reasonable," Israel radio reported.

Shalom reportedly told investigators that he had general authorization from Shamir to kill hijackers in hostage-taking situations and that he had informed the prime minister of the killings and cover-up at the time they occurred.

The ministry said Shamir's version was consistent and was supported by testimony by Shimon Peres, then head of the parliamentary opposition; Moshe Arens, then the defense minister; former Finance Minister Yitzhak Modai; and several Shin Bet agents, the reports said.

The investigation showed that Shalom initially tried to implicate Arens by saying the Shin Bet chief acted upon Arens' order. Shalom later said this incident was a "misunderstanding," Israel radio said.

Shalom and 10 other Shin Bet agents were granted pardons in June by President Chaim Herzog. Shalom and three of his top aides since have left Shin Bet.

The scandal broke in May after three senior Shin Bet officers accused Shalom of ordering the killings. The officers also accused Shalom of covering up and fabricating evidence before the three commissions of inquiry in order to frame a senior army commander at the scene. The army officer later was cleared.

The three also took their case to Peres, who then was prime minister, but Peres dismissed the accusations and sided with Shalom.

The officers then lodged a criminal complaint with then-Attorney General Yitzhak Zamir, who ordered a police investigation. Zamir resigned over the affair, but his successor, Harish, reactivated the order for a police probe after the government refused to appoint an official commission of inquiry.

The police investigation ended in September without concluding whether action should be taken against Shamir and other officials implicated. The Attorney General's office then evaluated the police findings and issued its report last week.

Bush meets with de la Madrid during fishing vacation trip

Bush

LORETO, Mexico (AP) — Vice President George Bush spent a third vacation day in this Baja California resort Sunday, a trip highlighted by an unscheduled, unofficial visit from Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid.

The private meeting Saturday between the two officials lasted about three hours and took place aboard the 88-foot yacht "Realty" being used by Bush for fishing.

Bush and his wife, Barbara, arrived from Washington on Friday as guests of Mexican Tourism Secretary Antonio Enriquez Savignac and were staying at the Hotel Presidente.

A Bush spokesman said in Washington the vice president planned to leave today for Texas to continue his holiday vacation.

Loreto police confirmed that Bush remained Sunday in the town but both police and hotel personnel refused to disclose his activities, citing security.

De la Madrid interrupted his own family vacation in the Pacific resort of Zihuatanejo-Ixtapa to fly Saturday to Loreto, located about 610 miles southeast of San Diego on the eastern shore of the Baja California peninsula.

The Mexican president then flew by helicopter to Puerto Escondido, about 11 miles south, where he boarded the Dallas-registered yacht. He and Bush talked alone, then were joined by aides and had lunch together.

In a brief press release issued in Mexico City, de la Madrid's office said only that the meeting was "totally informal with no agenda, confined to topics of general interest to both parties."

De la Madrid returned immediately after the meeting to Zihuatanejo-Ixtapa, the release said.

In Washington, vice presidential spokesman Steve Hart said Bush was aware when he accepted the invitation to Mexico that he might meet with de la Madrid, but that the vice president "went down there for recreational purposes."

The trip was not announced in advance "to try and preserve the personal and private nature of the visit," Hart said.

Security around Loreto was extremely tight for Bush's visit. Agents of the Secret Service plus Mexican guards and soldiers were deployed in and around the hotel, while ships from the U.S. and Mexican navies and the U.S. Coast Guard provided security offshore.

Leaders refuse O'Connor's compromise

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli leaders agreed today they only would meet Cardinal John O'Connor at their Jerusalem offices even though the archbishop already has ruled out such visits because of the city's disputed status.

Aides to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said the two men would welcome meetings with the Roman Catholic archbishop of New York in their offices.

O'Connor, scheduled to arrive in Israel from Jordan on Thursday, has said he was forced to cancel scheduled talks in Jerusalem with Israeli leaders because of Vatican protocol.

Israel captured Arab east Jerusalem from Jordan in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war and named the holy city its capital. Jordan still claims the eastern sector. The Vatican does not recognize Jerusalem as the capital and says the city's holy sites should be placed under international supervision.

Catholic officials proposed O'Connor meet Israeli leaders in their homes, a compromise which would avoid any suggestion that the church was extending recognition to Jerusalem as the capital.

"Peres will be more than happy to meet Cardinal O'Connor in his office in the Foreign Ministry," Peres spokesman Ehud Gol said without elaboration.

A Shamir aide, who spoke on condition of anonymity, used identical wording to signal Shamir's refusal to meet outside his Jerusalem office. "On this there can be no compromise...Israel has one capital and that is where official meetings are held," the aide said.

The archbishop toured Baqa'a refugee camp in Jordan today and brushed aside questions about his schedule in Israel. "I can't answer anything about the schedule over there until I get there," he said.

The Jerusalem Post quoted unidentified officials in the Apostolic Delegation, the Vatican's diplomatic mission in Jerusalem, as accusing Israel of trying "to force the hand of the Catholic Church" on the Jerusalem question.

The Catholic officials were quoted as saying Israel proposed a schedule for O'Connor filled with state ceremonies that left little time for religious rites. When this schedule was rejected Israel broke off the talks, the Post quoted the officials as saying.

A senior Israeli official speaking on condition of anonymity said the schedule "was shown to O'Connor a long time ago and approved by him." Changes were demanded only after last-minute intervention from the Vatican, he said.

The top Anglican official in Jordan, assistant Bishop of Jerusalem Eliya Khoury, greets Roman Catholic Cardinal John O'Connor of New York, in Amman. Khoury, expelled by Israel in 1969, is now largely an inactive member of the Palestine Liberation Organization's executive committee.

"We are not trying to force anything. This was supposed to be a visit like any other visit of a foreign dignitary," said the official. "Now it certainly has become unpleasant."

O'Connor said the main purpose of his trip is to visit charitable institutions run by the Catholic Near East Welfare Association, of which he is president.

In Jordan over the weekend, O'Connor said he wanted to help the Palestinian people. "I think that no one can spend any time out here without suffering with the Palestinian people and recognizing the very crucial need," he said.

Sitting beside O'Connor at a news conference in Amman was the top Anglican official in Jordan, assistant bishop of Jerusalem Eliya Khoury, who was expelled by Israel in 1969.

Khoury is now a largely inactive member of the Palestine Liberation Organization's 10-man executive committee.

Also with O'Connor was the man who oversees administration of Moslem shrines in Jerusalem and the Israeli-occupied West Bank, Sheik Abdul-Aziz al-Khayyat. He is Jordan's Minister of Religious Affairs and a frequent critic of Israeli practices in Jerusalem.

In Israel meanwhile, newspaper editorials said the blunders in arranging the O'Connor visit are hindering efforts to improve Israeli-Vatican ties.

"If someone visits Israel while boycotting Jerusalem, it would be better if he did not come at all," said the Hatzofeh newspaper, which speaks for ultra-Orthodox religious Jews.

The Jerusalem Post said "a good part of the goodwill that could have been generated...has already been marred by these squabbles."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Firefighters on way to hotel when explosion occurred

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, West Germany (AP) — Firefighters were en route to an Alps resort hotel after receiving word of a gas leak but could not arrive in time to prevent the devastating explosion that killed seven people, local officials said.

Bavarian state police spokesman Max Koegl said Sunday that investigators determined the explosion was caused by a defective pipe linked to a six-ton liquid gas tank used to heat part of the hotel.

Koegl said officials of the Technical Inspection Service, the nation's highly respected safety watchdog agency, checked the tank only a week before Saturday's explosion, "but the pipe itself was not examined."

Garmisch-Partenkirchen government officials said some hotel guests reported smelling gas about 15 minutes before the 4:07 p.m. explosion, and hotel management notified town authorities.

Town officials said firefighters were on their way to the scene when the explosion ripped apart the hotel's northern wing housing a fitness center, and triggered a fire.

Rescue workers recovered the bodies of six guests and one employee, all West Germans. Twelve people remained hospitalized with injuries. Four others were treated at hospitals and released and about 10 were treated for minor injuries, officials said.

Marijuana confiscated

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Federal police confiscated 1,575 pounds of marijuana and detained 14 people suspected of narcotics dealing in raids in four northern Mexican cities, the federal Attorney General's Office said in a report published Sunday.

Five vehicles were also seized in the raids, which the report said took place during Christmas. It said all of the marijuana was believed to have been bound for the United States.

In Reynosa, police detained four men who were in a truck found to contain 448 pounds of marijuana, according to the report. Four people were detained in Monterrey along with a truck that police said contained 67 packets containing 213 pounds of marijuana hidden in sorghum. A Ford LTD was also seized.

Police captured two men in the Sonoran border town of Agua Prieta and confiscated 209 pounds of marijuana found in their truck. And in Nogales, also in Sonora state, three men were detained when police found 704 pounds of marijuana in their tractor-trailer truck.

Storm batters Fiji Island

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — Cyclone Raja, a tropical storm packing winds of up to 80 mph and torrential rains, destroyed crops and buildings Monday on the eastern fringe of the Fiji Islands after earlier battering Futuna, officials said.

Police in Futuna, a French Pacific territory northeast of Fiji, said one person had died in the storm and two were injured.

In addition, the storm produced a tidal wave that made Futuna's grass runway unusable for planes that were to deliver relief supplies for the island's 4,500 residents.

No casualties were reported by Fiji authorities.

Demonstrators arrested

WACKERSDORF, West Germany (AP) — Police said 56 people were arrested and 24 were injured, including two police officers, during four days of demonstrations around a nuclear waste recycling plant being built here.

A state police official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the protesters apparently planned to build huts and try to occupy the area.

The Wackersdorf plant, West Germany's first nuclear waste recycling facility, has been a major target of anti-nuclear protesters since construction began in December 1985.

The latest protests began Thursday with a peaceful demonstration. Afterward, scores of militants walked to the construction site in the Bavarian forest and scuffled with riot police, the official said.

Iran, U.S. negotiating return of funds to Iran

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Iranian and U.S. negotiators met today at the heavily guarded Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal to work out terms for return of $506 million in assets, plus interest, to Iran.

Iran has said it might intercede on behalf of American hostages in Lebanon if it gets back all its U.S.-held assets.

The $506 million represents Iran's overpayment into a $3.67 billion fund held by the New York Federal Reserve for repayment of syndicated bank loans to Iran.

The United States has agreed in principle to return the money plus interest, but the two sides still must work out details, such as wording of an Iranian pledge that it will make no further demands once the case is closed.

The Iran-U.S. tribunal offered to arbitrate the issue of the surplus funds, held in escrow and known as Account One, but the two sides opted for a third series of meetings this week to try to settle the issue themselves.

It was not known how many days the meetings would last at the tribunal, a former school building in a seaside suburb of this capital city.

The U.S. negotiating team, led by John Crook, U.S. agent to the tribunal, arrived for the talks in a U.S. Embassy van. The Iranian team reportedly arrived earlier. Other negotiators were from the Iranian Central Bank, the New York Federal Reserve Bank and the two governments

The Iran-U.S. Tribunal is a Netherlands-based claims court that has been disentangling the two countries' financial relations since 1981.

The return of the funds has taken on added significance because Iran's Parliament speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, has said at least five times in recent weeks that Iran might intercede on behalf of American hostages in Lebanon if Washington released Iranian assets, including the $506 million.

Six Americans are missing in Lebanon, and most are believed held by Shiite Moslem extremists loyal to Iran.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Sam Wonder said Sunday that the release of the escrow account may not, in itself, fulfill Rafsanjani's condition.

HOW TO CHOOSE A PLASTIC SURGEON.

Today, you no longer have to live with a nose you hate. Or wrinkles that make you look older than you feel. Or an unflattering figure. Modern plastic surgery can improve these and many other conditions.

If you're considering plastic surgery, you should make sure you select a doctor who is qualified as a specialist in plastic surgery.

Because of the level of expertise needed, a specialist in plastic surgery has completed five to seven years of supervised training. To be a board-certified plastic surgeon, the physician then is required to pass a series of stringent examinations.

However, the average consumer may not know that a doctor can legally claim to be a cosmetic surgeon without specialized training or board certification.

How can you tell?

Check his credentials thoroughly. Is he certified by the American Board of Plastic Surgery? Is he a member of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons? Does he get good references from his patients? Is he listed in the Directory of Medical Specialists? Is he affiliated with an accredited hospital?

Make sure you check before you choose.

Sylvan Bartlett, M.D., is a board-certified plastic and reconstructive surgeon and otolaryngologist. He is a member of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons and the American Academy of Otolaryngology. Dr. Bartlett is a specialist in plastic and reconstructive surgery including hand and microvascular surgery and otolaryngology as it applies directly to problems in plastic surgery.

Cloudy skies in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies will cover the Midland-Odessa area through Tuesday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The NWS is calling for a high in the lower 60s on Tuesday.

Tonight, with winds out of the northeast at five to 10 mph, the low is expected to dip into the upper 20s. Winds will be out of the east on Tuesday morning at five to 10 mph and will shift to the south during the afternoon.

Sunday's high of 56 was 24 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1964. Today's low was 31 degrees above the record low of nine set for this date in 1983.

STATE

A weak frontal system angled across the western part of the state from near Childress southwest into the Big Bend early today.

Cooler air marked the area behind the front as temperatures in the Panhandle and South Plains slipped below freezing.

Dense fog had formed across the South Plains — prompting a travelers' advisory to be posted because of reduced visibility and the possible formation of ice on bridges and overpasses.

While fog blanketed the South Plains and clouds covered the Trans-Pecos and Edwards Plateau areas, the Panhandle was clear.

Rain, drizzle, and scattered showers dotted the lower valley, south and South Central Texas along with isolated thunderstorms in the lower Rio Grande Valley area.

The National Weather Service said skies should be partly cloudy through Tuesday with occasional rain and drizzle in South Texas.

NATION

Fog sharply limited visibility today in the Southeast and the southern Plains, while rain and freezing rain accompanied by strong winds fell in the Pacific Northwest.

Travelers advisories for dense fog were issued for northern Georgia, Alabama, the western Florida Panhandle, extreme northwest Arkansas and much of Oklahoma. Visibility was less than a quarter-mile in much of the region. Zero visibility was reported at Birmingham, Ala., and Atlanta.

The fog delayed flights at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport by as much as five hours on Sunday.

Dense fog also developed over parts of the central Plateau and a travelers advisory was in effect over northeast Nevada

Technology's limits evident in disasters

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

"Uh-oh."

Those were the last words recorded from the crew of space shuttle Challenger. It was 73 seconds into the flight, and pilot Michael J. Smith had noticed something.

An instant later the rocket blew apart, leaving a jagged "Y" of vapor trails against the deep blue Florida sky.

"Uh-oh."

Perhaps that was the thought, if not the phrase, at the Chernobyl nuclear plant just before a hydrogen explosion shattered the No. 4 reactor.

Our peril from our own inventions was hauntingly evident in 1986. The dangers had been too often forgotten — shuttle flights had become so routine that congressmen went along — and the greatest danger proved to be the human factor.

Machines weren't the whole story. Thousands died from an earthquake in El Salvador and a poison gas cloud in Cameroon; hundreds of people around the world were slain by terrorists, and 14 people were gunned down in the post office in Edmond, Okla. Democrats regained control of Congress, and the White House became tangled in a strange plan to ship arms to Iran and money to Nicaraguan rebels.

America still knew how to party, though, and kept it up through a long weekend honoring the newly repaired Statue of Liberty. The restoration was a model for recognizing problems, finding solutions, getting them done.

There was much to set right.

THE DEFECT that killed the seven aboard Challenger was a seal in the booster rocket that had been troublesome for a long time, especially in cold weather. Challenger was launched after a rare icy night.

That was the last mistake, but the chain of error started in 1973 from the simple impulse to save money, an investigative committee concluded.

"The space shuttle's solid rocket booster problem began with the faulty design of its joint and increased as both NASA and contractor management first failed to recognize it as a problem, then failed to fix it and finally treated it as an acceptable flight risk," said the committee headed by former Secretary of State William Rogers.

At Chernobyl, someone had tried an unauthorized experiment: How long would the generator turbine spin after the steam from the reactor was shut off? The answer was 10 seconds. Then all hell broke loose.

"The defect of the system was that the designers did not foresee the awkward and silly actions by the operators," said Valery A. Legasov, Soviet representative to an international conference on the disaster.

But it was more complicated than that, and the Soviets shut down similar reactors for modifications.

"The lesson of Challenger, of Chernobyl and of Three Mile Island is a hard one," NASA adminstrator James C. Fletcher reflected. "We are living in an age where the single biggest factor affecting productivity may be our ability to properly manage technical risks."

Soviet mismanagement of the disaster caused outrage in Europe, where the radiation was detected long before the Kremlin would admit anything had happened. As the days went along, Moscow became uncommonly candid about its problems and sought help from Western experts.

THE MANAGEMENT of technical risks was at the core of superpower relations. A summit in Iceland foundered on President Reagan's enthusiasm, and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's antipathy, for the technological dream of "Star Wars."

Gorbachev had offered to remove missiles from Europe and reduce long-range missiles by 50 percent, if Reagan would give on "Star Wars." Reagan declined. Whether he had muffed an historic opportunity for arms control, or evaded a Soviet trap, was debated intensely afterwards.

Nuclear deterrence held for another year, without accident or incident, but U.S.-Soviet relations were bumpy. Reagan ordered dozens of Soviets out of the country in a crackdown on espionage, but the arrest of one suspected spy provoked the arrest of American reporter Nicholas Daniloff in Moscow.

Reagan's biggest disaster had nothing to do with technology, but apparently involved the machinations of underlings.

The administration that had vowed never to deal with terrorists, the administration that had condemned Iran as a ringleader of an international "Murder Inc.," was caught shipping arms to Tehran as a gesture of good faith to gain freedom for Americans held hostage in Lebanon.

Even more stunning, the profits from the arms sales were going into a Swiss bank account to help finance the Nicaraguan Contras.

"I'm not firing anybody," Reagan said Nov. 24. "I didn't make a mistake."

Within days, he reassigned Vice Adm. John Poindexter, his National Security Adviser, and sacked Poindexter's aide, Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, who was accused of engineering the Iran-Contra connection. Congress geared up to investigate.

WHEN THE White House claimed Iran had moderated its support for terrorism, Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead told a congressional committee: "I don't like to have to differ with my president, but I believe there is some evidence of Iranian involvement with terrorists."

Terrorism's toll in 1986 included four killed by a bomb on a TWA plane; 22 killed in a raid on a synagogue in Istanbul; 32 killed by a car bomb in Beirut; 38 killed by Sikh extremists in two bus hijackings in India; 20 people killed in a shootout aboard at Pan Am plane in Karachi, Pakistan.

The bombing of a West German discotheque frequented by U.S. soldiers provoked a U.S. air strike against Libya. The administration said it had evidence that Col. Moammar Gadhafi's government was involved in the discotheque attack.

"You've had it, pal," Secretary of State George Shultz said in a most undiplomatic warning to the Libyan leader.

But Libya, too, became an embarrassment for Reagan. The administration was caught plotting a campaign of "disinformation" about Gadhafi. State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb resigned in protest.

It was a tough year for the president, who saw the Democrats win control of the Senate in November despite his cross-country campaigning.

Even the Republican-controlled Senate had parted company with Reagan on the issue of sanctions against South Africa, and forced the president to impose them. Kodak and other multinational businesses pulled out of South Africa, but the white-minority government dug its heels in deeper, restricting press coverage of events it could not control.

CONGRESS AND the president cooperated, however, to enact a major revision of the tax code and sharply increasing funding for the battle against drugs.

Drugs captured national attention after the deaths of college basketball star Len Bias and football pro Don Rogers, both from cocaine.

There was a new emphasis on the user, instead of the pusher, and Reagan and his top aides submitted to urinalysis as an example to others.

"Just say no," Nancy Reagan urged in her anti-drug lectures, and that's what some people said to drug testing.

The year's major natural disasters included 1,734 deaths in Cameroon from poisonous gas from a volcanic lake and 1,500 deaths in an earthquake in El Salvador. A prolonged drought in the southeastern United States caused $3 billion in damage.

Two autocrats lost power: Ferdinand Marcos was unseated by the yellow-clad backers of Corazon Aquino in the Philippines after winning a tainted election, and President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier fled from Haiti. Their countries were left to deal with the legacy of misrule.

Former United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim was elected president of Austria despite fresh charges he had been involved in Nazi atrocities, but later found himself unwelcome in many world capitals.

At home, the economy's expansion slowed, unemployment stayed above 7 percent, the stock market went up and the dollar went down. The federal government overspent its income by $221 billion.

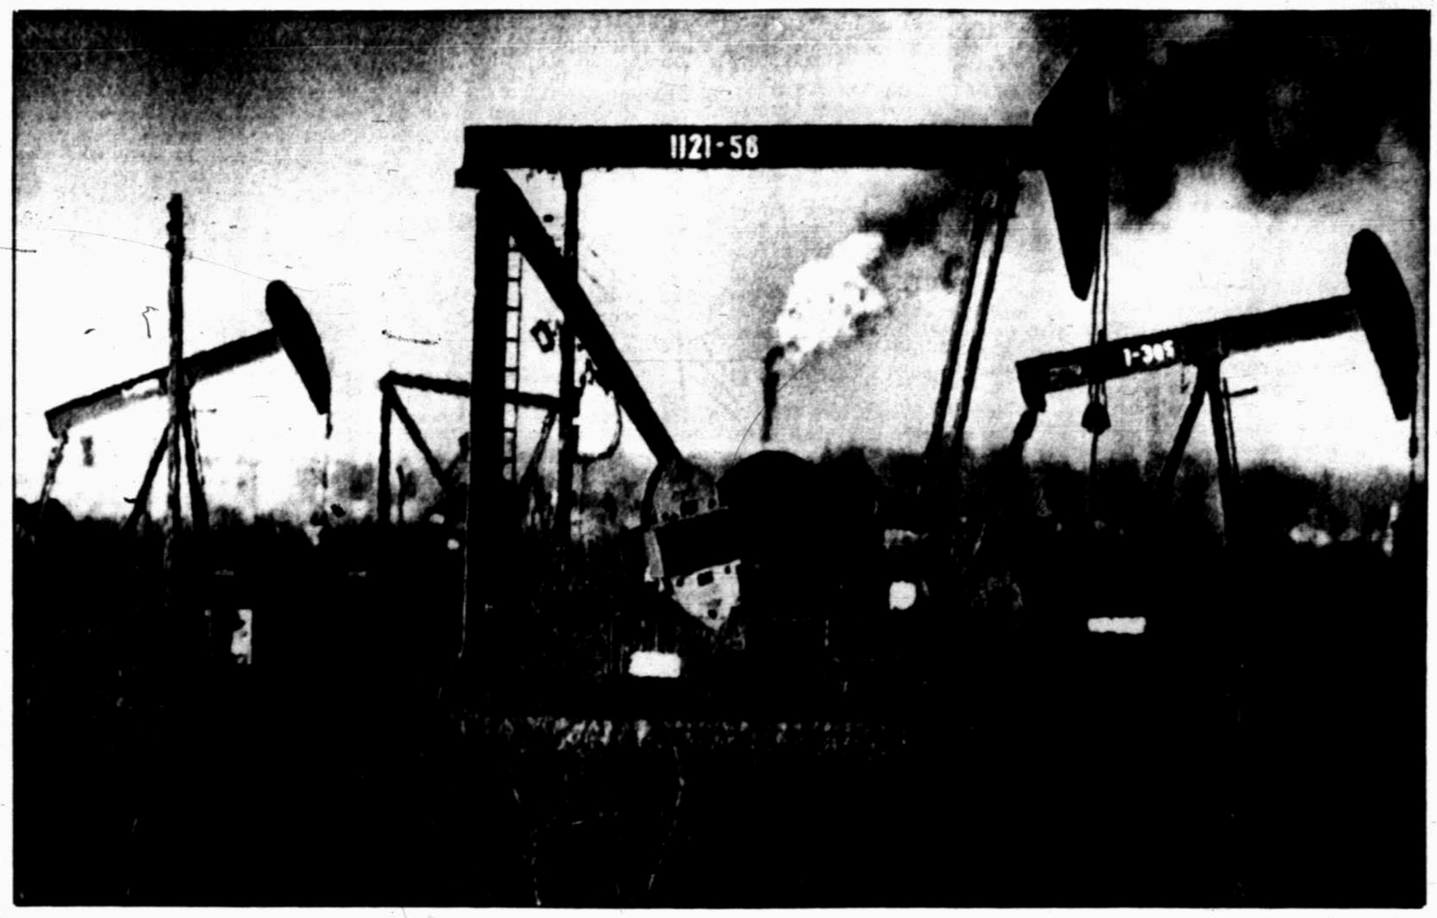

IN BOSTON, the Red Sox chafed through a year of speculation about when they would collapse. It happened in Game 6 of the World Series with the Sox leading 5-3 with two out in the New York Mets' half of the 10th inning. For want of an out, the game, and finally the series, was lost.

The party of the year was in New York Harbor, where Lady Liberty was saluted by sailing ships, oratory and 200 Elvis impersonators. Pure kitsch, reflecting the nation's passion for bigger, better, glitzier.

Bigger and better charity was the impulse behind Hands Across America, which failed in May to produce a coast-to-coast human chain but did raise $15.5 million, with some spontaneous fun in a line including three bulls, one penguin and five weddings.

The country was a still a place for dreaming impossible dreams, for defying conventions and risking all for love. "Stand by your cow" was the baffling song of a moose smitten by a homely Hereford in Vermont.

The heart had its reasons, which science couldn't fathom. As Durward Allen of Purdue University confessed, "Nobody knows what's in the mind of a bull moose that hangs around a cow."

As oil prices tumbled in 1986, so did the Texas economy. Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc. estimated 40,000 jobs were eliminated in Texas, many tied to the industry represented by these pumpjacks near Odessa.

Bottom of oil price barrel drops out

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

HOUSTON (AP) — Just when everyone thought the petroleum-driven Texas economy was showing signs of climbing to its feet, the bottom of the oil price barrel dropped out in 1986.

The energy industry problems helped fuel a multibillion-dollar state budget deficit, prompting two special legislative sessions as lawmakers grappled with the financial problems.

"I would call it a recession year, maybe close to depression," says Steve Pejovich, professor of economics at Texas A&M University and director of the school's Center for Free Enterprise. "Unfortunately, some very good people are moving out."

Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc. estimated 40,000 jobs were eliminated statewide.

"From a perspective of Texas only to past history, it's been a horrible year," said Jim Smith, director of the Bureau of Business Research at the University of Texas.

"But compared to other states, it's not so bad," Smith said. "From 1945 to 1985, people got used to growth two to 10 times the national average. Two percent growth is not all that bad. It's totally a function of perspective."

From the perspective of the average Texan in 1987, however, the result of the state budget crunch will be $872 million in new taxes.

The state sales tax goes up for eight months beginning Jan. 1, rising to 5¼ percent from the current 4⅛ percent. In addition, the state gasoline tax temporarily will be increased to 15 cents per gallon, up a nickel.

For others, the impact of the crippled Texas economy was swift — and more painful.

THE VICTIMS of the economy included Gov. Mark White, ousted by voters in November, and former Gov. John Connally, whose financial problems in oil and real estate threatened his personal fortune.

Other prominent figures falling on hard economic times were the Hunt brothers of Dallas and Clint Murchison, the former owner of the Dallas Cowboys, and Dallas-based LTV, the nation's second-largest steelmaker, which filed for protection from its creditors in bankruptcy court.

Less well-known and just as shaken were the thousands of people — victims of decisions made in oil-producing nations half a world away — who lost their jobs as a retrenched oil industry retrenched again.

As the unemployment rate peaked in June at 11.1 percent, the highest in two decades, real estate values continued tumbling. Houston and Dallas vied for the dubious distinction of having the most vacant office space in the country.

At least 26 Texas banks failed, more than any other state this year.

The state adopted a new law allowing interstate bank acquisitions in an effort to save some institutions hard-hit by bad energy and real estate loans.

The impact was quick with the merger of Chemical Bank New York Corp. and Houston-based Texas Commerce Bancshares, followed by another proposed merger between RepublicBank Corp. and troubled InterFirst Corp., both of Dallas.

Bankruptcies were at record levels. In Houston alone, the nearly 1,200 bankruptcies in the first nine months of the year were just shy of the total number for 1985.

AND, ACCORDING to a survey by Price Waterhouse, bankruptcy courts were so overloaded, paperwork filings required a wait in line of up to three hours. Lawyers were told not to bother calling the court on the telephone.

Oil prices, which began the year at nearly $30 per barrel, flirted with single digits only months later as the international oil market was glutted with Mideast oil.

The oil rig count — the industry yardstick for more than 40 years — hit an all-time low of 663 in July. Just six months earlier, nearly 2,000 rigs were working in the United States. Offshore, the situation was no better.

By year's end, the rig count had crept to near the 1,000 mark as oil prices stabilized in the $15-per-barrel range.

"Even if prices go back up, there will always be that lingering thought about what happens if they go down again," Pennzoil Co. President Richard Howe said. "I think people will be a lot more cautious."

Pennzoil cut 8 percent of its workforce in May and announced another 5 percent reduction in November. Amoco Production Co. cut 15 percent by midyear, trimming 1,500 workers, and reduced its capital and exploration budget by 30 percent. And Tenneco Inc. let go 700 workers, 500 of them in Houston.

"Crude oil prices fell so rapidly that we had no choice but to take more drastic steps," Tenneco Chairman James Ketelsen said.

Global Marine Inc., a major international offshore drilling rig contractor, filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code.

THINGS GOT so bad in the oil-based West Texas towns of Midland and Odessa that simultaneous rallies were held just to make people feel better about themselves.

Just to the south, in Crane County, Chamber of Commerce President Gene Clack said, "Everywhere you go — at coffee shops, on street corners, in offices — all you hear is how bad things are and how much worse they're going to get."

The problems were not limited to small places.

In Houston, Mayor Kathy Whitmire ordered a hiring freeze except for critical positions as the city faced a $72 million deficit.

Mainland Savings Association of Houston was closed by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The closing, a week after Mainland had posted $100 million in real estate for foreclosure, was the largest failure ever of a U.S. savings and loan.

The hard times, however, did create spinoff business.

Home auctions drew hundreds of potential bidders hoping for terrific deals on foreclosed properties. Some were able to afford home purchases on their credit cards.

Pawn shops in Houston were doing brisk business. One installed a drive-in window and even offered limousine service so customers wouldn't be embarrassed to be seen there. One oilman hocked his Rolex watch to make a house payment.

On a brighter note, Continental Airlines emerged from bankruptcy proceedings when a judge approved a $925 million repayment plan. The airline reported record-breaking profits during 1986, as did its parent company, Texas Air Corp.

Texas Air, meanwhile, became the nation's largest air carrier holding company by acquiring Eastern Airlines and hoped to get even larger with the purchase of People Express and Frontier Airlines.

The jobless rate by year's end had dropped to 9.5 percent, 2½ percent above the comparable 1985 level but better than the 11 percent June figure.

"I see we are pulling out of it," A&M's Pejovich says. "Texas was the most uninviting place to live for centuries. Just in the past few decades has that changed. Texas has one thing that other parts of the country don't have: tremendous human resources.

"I call it human capital — people. They don't run to the government when they have a problem. Texans are character builders."

1986 year of ups, downs for hostages, families

By JOAN MOWER

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the Americans held hostage in Lebanon and their families, 1986 was a year of highs and lows that ended with the revelation that the United States had shipped arms to Iran in an effort to free the men.

The scheme — President Reagan denied it was ransom — was a failure. Even the relatives, who had conducted a media campaign to keep the issue alive and convince the administration to do something, were less than enthusiastic.

"I've made all kinds of suggestions to the administration, but none of those suggestions included selling arms to Iran," said Peggy Say of Batavia, N.Y., the sister of hostage Terry Anderson.

By year's end, there were five captives, excluding William Buckley, the political officer at the U.S. Embassy who is thought to have died in captivity in 1985, perhaps after torture sessions. His body was never found.

In a 12-month period, two Americans were set free and three were snatched in Beirut, the Mediterranean city where civil war has raged for more than a decade.

The high points of 1986 came when Father Lawrence Martin Jenco and David Jacobsen were released.

Jenco, 51, of Joliet, Ill., a gentle, soft-spoken man who spent 17 months in a windowless room, was freed on July 26 in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley. Jenco had been the head of the Catholic Relief Service's office in Beirut.

The ordeal of Jacobsen, 55, the former administrator of the American University Hospital in Beirut, ended about daybreak on Nov. 2 when he was released in West Beirut.

Three Americans formerly held as hostages in Lebanon embrace on being reunited in London in November. The trio, from left, David Jacobsen, Rev. Martin Jenco and Rev. Benjamin Weir, were preparing to meet Church of England envoy Terry Waite.

"I'm proud of the American government and the American governmental employees, and I would hope that all Americans would be proud of our government," said Jacobsen of Huntington Beach, Calif.

Still in captivity were Thomas Sutherland, 55, the American University's acting dean of agriculture from Fort Collins, Colo.; and Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press and a native of Lorain, Ohio.

Anderson was grabbed by gunmen on March 16, 1985, after a tennis game with a friend; Sutherland has been a hostage since June 9, 1985.

Those two were confined with Jacobsen, Jenco, and the Rev. Benjamin Weir, who was released in September 1985.

Captivity was tedious and unpleasant, the former hostages reported. They walked for hours around their small room for exercise, they used tin cans as a toilet, rarely saw sunlight and their food was adequate but monotonous.

Their captors were members of Islamic Jihad, a shadowy Moslem extremist group which leans toward Iran. The ex-hostages said they never saw their captors because they were ordered to wear blindfolds when the guards came into the room.

The Jihad, which periodically releases statements in Beirut and pictures of the captives, claims it is not responsible for seizing three Americans in September and October. State Department officials, however, believe the three are held by pro-Iranian elements.

The Revolutionary Justice Organization, which is likely made up of Shiite zealots, said it holds Joseph Cicippio, 56, of Norristown, Pa., controller for the American University; and Edward Austin Tracy, 56, a writer formerly from Burlington, Vt.

A group calling itself Revolutionary Cells-Omar Moukhtar Forces says it took Frank Reed, 53, of Malden, Mass., director of a private school. Cicippio and Reed were both married to Arab women, and Tracy was a long-time resident of Beirut.

At the time of Jacobsen's release, the American public did not know that Reagan had authorized weapons shipments worth millions of dollars to Iran nor that profits from such sales had been diverted to the Contras.

With the end of the arms shipments and the U.S. government's Iran policy in turmoil, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and his aides took over the job of fashioning an approach that could lead to the hostages' freedom.

No one was optimistic.

Television journalist's first play produced

By JEROME WEEKS

DALLAS (AP) — "It's a whole new game for me," says Jim Lehrer with the right touch of happy pride in his anchorman's voice. "And I've had so much fun."

The "whole new game" for the newscaster, one-half of the MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour team, is the theater game. The 52-year-old television journalist and former Dallas newsman is having his first play produced in New York by Playwrights Preview Productions, which specializes in developing and producing "talented unknown American playwrights."

Lehrer is not exactly "unknown," except perhaps as a playwright, but his "seriocomic" "Chili Queen" had a workshop production this month at the Hartley House on 46th Street. And although The New York Times normally does not review workshops, "Chili Queen" received a "fair" review by Stephen Holden.

"I was in Dallas for the (1984) Republican convention," recalls Lehrer, "when I took a break by driving out to Emory, which is just between Greenville and Mineola." Lehrer is familiar with the Dallas area because, although he was born in Kansas, he was reared in Texas and in 1959 became a reporter for the Dallas Morning News. He later went to work for the Dallas Times Herald as a political columnist and, in 1968, became the newspaper's city editor. Lehrer also was seen on Channel 13's acclaimed "Newsroom" in the early 1970s.

In Emory, Lehrer pulled into a Dairy Queen on U.S. Highway 69 and witnessed the incident that would inspire "Chili Queen." Lehrer saw "a waitress in her late 40s...being yelled at by a man in his early 20s." The argument concerned whether the man had given the waitress a $20 bill or a $10 bill, and both sides were escalating their loud demands for the managers and sheriffs to intervene. Lehrer bought an ice-cream sandwich and fled.

But that incident stuck with him. "That night, it so happened, I had dinner with (his friend and NBC reporter) Roger Mudd, and I told him the story." Lehrer had rediscovered his love for writing fiction in December 1983 when a heart attack and double bypass surgery had given him a three-month-long layoff. He eventually wrote two plays that were produced at the Eudora Welty New Plays Series in Jackson, Miss. "Chili Queen" would be his third and so far most successful effort.

In "Chili Queen," the original quarrel over change for a 20 develops into a farcical but potentially tragic "hostage situation" when a gun is pulled by the customer, played by Robert J. Porter, a Texas native and star of NBC's "Another World." The news media learns of the small-town crisis, and a reporter for the Dallas Morning News is the first to contact the hostage waitress: He just calls her up. The waitress, played by Jayne Chamberlin (another Texas native), is overjoyed to be interviewed by The News — although she confesses she hasn't been subscribing.

"My friends at the Times Herald are not going to be happy with me," Lehrer groaned. The reason for Lehrer's concern is that joking references to the Times Herald were dropped from the play at the last minute, while the ones for the The News were retained.

Perhaps the most significant change made during the play's development, however, involved its title. Originally called "Dairy Queen," the play had to be renamed when the company's lawyers refused to grant Lehrer permission to use the company name. (Emory also became Lamry.) But the need for a new title helped Lehrer create one of the play's central jokes — a get-rich-quick invention called the Chilisicle, simply but nauseatingly explained as "frozen chili on a stick."

"It is pretty ridiculous, isn't it?" asked Lehrer.

Although Lehrer has written two books, won several Emmy Awards and the George Foster Peabody Award, he's found his little bit of theatrical limelight to be "terrific fun. I've just been enjoying myself." He's already written his fourth play, a more somber effort called "Church Key Charlie Blue."

But with Chilisicles and hostage waitresses, is "Chili Queen" another "True Stories?" Another ironic but still condescending look at Texas rubes?

"That's a good question," replied Lehrer after a pause. "No one's asked that before. But I really don't think I'd take cheap shots at my own people. If anyone gets it, it's the media." Lehrer is not above poking his own profession in the ribs. For example, a broken television is kept in the Chile Queen franchise. "The picture doesn't work, so naturally they use it as a radio to listen to the news reports," Lehrer explained. Overheard on the television is a ludicrous, ongoing argument between a local anchorman and his "on the scene" TV reporter.

The surly anchorman and the incompetent reporter, of course, are played by Robert MacNeil and Jim Lehrer.

Home give-aways appreciated

HOUSTON (AP) — Monica Hord says she doesn't mind that her house needs a new roof, the walls need patching and her family has been shivering without heat for the past couple of months.

That's because this is the first time she's spent the holiday season in her own home.

"This is the best thing that ever happened to me. Praise the Lord," Mrs. Hord said.

The Hord family is one of 13 chosen from hundreds of applicants to take part in an experimental federal housing program sponsored by the city of Houston.

The houses were foreclosed on by the federal government and were sitting vacant, so they were given away free of charge to the qualifying families under the urban homesteading program.

The families will own the houses in five years if they continue living there and make the needed repairs, using low-interest loans from the city.

The repairs at the Hord home are expected to be made next week.

Qualifying families had to meet income requirements of no more than $27,500 for a family of four and had to be living in substandard rental housing.

Working on the program is the "single most rewarding experience I've ever had," said Rodney Ellis, a Houston City Council member who worked for the program.

Ellis countered criticism that the program was a waste of money, saying that the foreclosed properties were boarded up and deteriorating. He said if the houses were left vacant, the government would eventually have to pay for demolition.

All the houses given away so far are in Ellis' southeast Houston district.

City officials say only four of the 13 families have moved into their homes since the June 30 giveaway, but the rest should move in by the end of January.

The initial cost was $260,000 to buy the houses from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and another $220,000 for the repair loans and administrative costs. City planning officials have set aside $400,000 to purchase another 20 homes in 1987.

The program will have given away more than 10,800 homes nationwide by next September.

A quirk in Texas law has prevented a more aggressive program in Houston. But by using only HUD-foreclosed properties, the city has skirted the legal prohibition against taking an individual's home for back taxes and then giving it to someone else free of charge or for a nominal fee.

Two die in mobile home shooting

TYLER (AP) — A man was waiting inside a mobile home when Sandra Darlene Williams, her 4-year-old son, and Richard Wood, all of Tyler, returned home Saturday night from a trip out of state, officials said.

"He opened fire. The woman ran from the trailer. The other two people didn't make it," said Sgt. Steve Edwards of the Tyler Police Department.

Wood, 28, and the boy died from multiple gunshot wounds, Edwards said. Ms. Williams, who is pregnant, was injured, police said. She was listed in stable condition Sunday night at Mother Frances Hospital.

James Joseph Wilkins, 25, was charged with one count of murder Sunday, and bond was set at $100,000, Edwards said.

Psychiatrist gets verbal reprimand for his admission of sex

AUSTIN (AP) — A psychiatrist who admitted in court documents to having sex with a patient received only a verbal private reprimand for his conduct, an example of the secrecy surrounding medical disciplinary proceedings, the Austin American-Statesman reported Sunday.

In the case, the psychiatrist agreed to settle a malpractice suit over his conduct for $474,400.

Texas laws do not specifically state that it is illegal for a doctor to engage in sexual misconduct or sexual exploitation.

Sexual misconduct is considered "unprofessional or dishonorable conduct," which is a specific violation of the Medical Practice Act, said Bill Campbell, attorney for the Texas medical board.

Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, plans to offer amendments to the Medical Practice Act in the next legislative session that will include naming sexual misconduct as a specific violation of the act.

"We're going to be more definitive," said Joan Sanger, a lawyer on Edwards' staff.

The Texas State Board of Medical Examiners took testimony from the psychiatrist in March 1985. Board minutes reviewed by the newspaper show he received the private verbal reprimand, the mildest form of board discipline.

The reprimand was kept secret, as was almost 90 percent of the disciplinary proceedings by the board last year, the newspaper reported.

Until early this month when the board voted to relax its policies, only license revocations or suspensions were made public. Under the new policies, all future discipline imposed in closed hearings will be made public, but past discipline will remain secret.

A malpractice suit against the psychiatrist was settled out of court 1984, said Joe Franco, chief investigator for the Board of Medical Examiners.

The doctor and his attorney declined to be interviewed about the malpractice suit or the medical board's reprimand, the newspaper said.

— Bill Campbell

The American-Statesman said the private reprimand was discovered after comparing the doctor's medical license number with a summary list of secret disciplinary actions against doctors found in the minutes of board meetings.

In addition to the confidentiality provided by the medical board, both parties in the malpractice suit settlement agreed to ask a state district judge to seal all court records in the case, including the woman's original allegations. The judge agreed to do so.

The American-Statesman obtained the records earlier this month through a routine request at the Texas Supreme Court. Workers in the court clerk's office, apparently unaware the records were sealed, allowed them to be viewed and copied. The records have since been resealed.

The records show the female patient, who said she was sexually involved with the doctor between 1975 and 1980, filed a $2.5 million lawsuit in 1982, alleging that she was emotionally abused and sexually used, often during treatment sessions for which he collected a fee.

Court papers filed by the doctor's attorneys include a general denial of the woman's allegations, although they concede he did have an affair with the patient. The documents state the psychiatrist "never represented to the plaintiff that having sexual relations with him was in any way part of the medical treatment."

"That's the way this thing is run, and it's not right," she said. "These doctors are very well protected."

Police have man in custody in connection with burglaries

From Staff Reports

A Midland man is in custody after he was arrested near the scene of several business burglaries this morning, according to the Midland Police Department.

According to reports, the man, who has not been charged, was arrested at Garfield and Wadley about 2:30 a.m. after officers were dispatched to the Oak Ridge Square shopping center, 201 Plaza Center, to respond to an alarm.

Several businesses at the shopping center, including Ron's Floral, Pappagallo Ladies' store, and Freeman Galleries, were checked by police and had been burglarized. The list of stolen items included $80 cash and change from Ron's, and an unknown amount from the other stores. The man is expected to be charged today.

In other reports, a residence in the 600 block of North Dallas Street was burglarized Saturday or Sunday. According to reports, two leather jackets valued at $240, a 12-inch television set valued at $145, and an AM-FM clock radio valued at $17 were stolen.

Police Roundup

The Midland County Sheriff's office reported the burglary of a storage unit in the 3000 block of West Industrial Street. Reports said a unit at the A-1 U-Store It was burglarized after a lock was cut off the door. A console stereo valued at $200, a rocking chair valued at $150, four chairs valued at $40, and two lamps valued at $20 were stolen, reports said between Dec. 14 and Sunday.

H2S leak causes wells to shut down

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Twelve West Odessa wells were shut down Sunday night after a patrolling Ector County sheriff's deputy smelled heavy concentrations of hydrogen sulphide gas.

Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss said Deputy Phil Miles detected the H2S fumes in about the 5700 block of West 39th Street around 7 p.m.

According to Kloss the fumes were found to be escaping from a main gathering line. H2S detectors "pegged at 1,600 parts per million" at the site of the leak initially, he said, but readings quickly dropped when El Paso Hydrocarbon employees shut down the 12 wells feeding the main line.

Repair crews were expected to begin digging up the line this morning to repair the leak, Kloss said.

About 40 families in the sparsely populated area about two blocks east of FM 1936 were notified, Kloss said, and some decided to evacuate their homes. No one was forced to leave, he said.

101-year-old woman attacked by boy

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 101-year-old woman suffered a collapsed lung and other injuries when a 10-year-old boy attacked her, authorities said.

Laura Bell Young was listed in fair condition today at John Peter Smith Hospital. The youth was being held pending a juvenile court hearing later today.

The boy went to Mrs. Young's house shortly before noon Sunday, told her he had just returned from church, asked if she needed anything, then went into another room, police said Mrs. Young and neighbors told them. He reportedly told her he was "just looking around."

When she became suspicious and told him not to lie, he said, "Don't tell me what to do, old lady," grabbed a metal bar and attacked her, according to police.

Dr. Ralph DeAyala said that in addition to a collapsed lung, Mrs. Young also received deep cuts on the head, a finger and left wrist.

"This is one of the saddest things I have ever seen in this hospital," DeAyala said. "The woman had taken care of the kid who did this to her since he was born."

Widowed since 1961, Mrs. Young has cared for children whose parents were financially unable to provide for them, neighbors said. Mrs. Young often sent food to the family of the boy accused of attacking her, said Earline Jones, who lives with Mrs. Young.

"It is unbelievable that this could have happened to such a decent, Christian lady," said Clara Mayberry, a next-door neighbor.

Telethon raises most ever collected — $41,474

AUSTIN (AP) — A telethon to benefit Huston-Tillotson College raised $41,474, the most ever collected by the annual fund-raiser, officials say.

"Some collections are still coming in, and we're hoping for $50,000 by the end of the week," said William Akins, assistant superintendent of the Austin Independent School District and a host for the telethon.

The local fund-raiser was held in conjunction with the Lou Rawls "Parade of Stars" telethon for the United Negro College Fund, which raised more than $10 million nationally.

Gloria Pennington, another local host, said the telethon last year raised more than $32,000. This was the fifth year Huston-Tillotson participated.

Galveston inmates escape

GALVESTON (AP) — Two inmates overpowered a guard with a knife and escaped on foot from the Galveston County Jail just before midnight, officials said today.

Galveston city police captured one of the men a short time later, but authorities continued to search for the other inmate.

An area-wide bulletin said the inmate vowed not to be taken alive and would kill any officer who would try to arrest him.

Officers are searching where they believe the wanted man might be hiding. The escaped inmate reportedly is still wearing jail clothes.

The inmate was identified as Robert Ruiz, but the sheriff's department declined to release his age or description.

Austin boy takes honors

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — An Austin, Texas, boy took top individual honors at the Cheerleaders National Competition here, and a high school cheerleading squad from Lexington, Ky., claimed its third national championship in five years.

The annual competition, which started five years ago, drew 275 squads from 35 states this weekend, according to Carol Wagers, executive director of the National Cheerleading Association Programs.

Ladd Mitchell, a senior at Anderson High School in Austin, Texas, beat out some 250 competitors in the individual contest, Ms. Wagers said. He was not the first male whose performance was judged best, she said. Four or five years ago, a boy and girl tied for the championship, she said.

Henry Clay High School will boast the banner of national champ in the large varsity division, which includes squads with 11 performers or more, for the second year in a row.

The Lexington, Ky., high school also claimed top honors in the division for the 1983-84 school year, Ms. Wagers said.

Youth killed in holdup

HOUSTON (AP) — One of three teen-agers who tried to rob a north Houston pawn shop was killed by a store employee after the youths pointed a gun at a worker and demanded money, police said.

The two other youths fled B&B Pawn Shop after the Saturday afternoon shooting, witnesses told police.

Witnesses told police the trio entered the store and acted as if they were interested in merchandise. One of the youths then grabbed a female employee by the hair and pulled her across the counter, police were told.

"He stuck a 9mm pistol to the side of her head and demanded the money," said Sgt. W.O. Allen Jr.

Sgt. D.B. Osterberg said Perry Marshall, a 28-year-old store employee, grabbed a .44-caliber gun from under the counter and fired three times at the teen-ager holding the woman.

Two-city DJ spends as much time 'in air as on air'

By MICHELLE LOCKE

DALLAS (AP) — In the past year, radio personality Tom Joyner has spent almost as much time in the air as on the air, spinning a two-city career that has netted improved ratings and a new national countdown show.

Joyner prompted a flurry of publicity in October 1985 when he took on the afternoon show at Chicago's WGCI-FM in addition to his morning drive time spot at KKDA-FM in Dallas.

He says the commute has meant keeping his life as tightly scheduled as his fast-paced radio shows.

"I am racing against time starting at 3:30 a.m. I have certain checkpoints. If I haven't showered by such and such a time, I know I am late. If I haven't passed a certain stop light by a certain time, I know I am late," he said.

At WGCI, Joyner's Arbitron ratings have gone from 4.9 to 8.3, making the show No. 1 for the time slot, said station general manager Marv Dyson. The station is No. 2 overall, he said.

At KKDA where Joyner has worked since 1983, the station has moved from No. 2 to No. 1, based on the summer Arbitron ratings, said program director Michael Spears. "Tom's a big part of our success," Spears said.

Joyner says his audiences at the urban contemporary stations are similar in both cities, although the shows differ, featuring more talk and special studio guests in the morning and more music in the afternoon.

Adding a third job won't overload his already jammed schedule, Joyner maintains. CBS Radio recently signed him for a three-hour countdown show, "On the Move." Joyner says the show will be taped during the middle of the week and should fit into his schedule.

The 36-year-old disc jockey recently asked KKDA to let him drop a Saturday morning shift so he could spend more time with his family. Joyner said the station wanted to release him from his contract rather than acquiesce, but an agreement later was reached after published reports about the dispute.

His contracts for the weekday shows run until 1990 at WGCI and until 1991 at KKDA, and he says he hasn't made any plans beyond that. Joyner won't comment on reports that his jobs bring him $500,000 a year.

His daily schedule, which has been chronicled on television shows and in various publications, begins at 3:30 a.m. and ends at 11:30 p.m. He says he averages about 6½ hours sleep a day, catching naps on the two-hour flight to and from Chicago.

He jokes about the rigors of the more than 1,900-mile round trip.

"I am not a brain surgeon. I'm a disc jockey. It's not really that tough," he said.

Joyner says he once planned to go into the other side of the recording business.

Born in Tuskegee, Ala., he joined a band with some of his friends when he was in college in 1967. Two years later, after making only $25 a night, Joyner quit the band at the urging of his parents and his wife, Dora.

Now, he frequently jokes about what might have been had he stayed with his friend Lionel Richie and the band, The Commodores.

"Dora convinced me along with my parents that wasn't going to be my ticket to success. Now, 17 million records later...."

Despite the jokes, Joyner says he's happy with his jobs. "The easiest part of my day is the work. Once I get into the studio life becomes easy. I get it all under control then," he said.

"I can honestly say I don't have a dull day."

Wedding party ends in shootout at restaurant

HOUSTON (AP) — An argument among people attending a weekend wedding reception at an Oriental restaurant led to a shooting in which three people died, police said.

Late Sunday, homicide detectives still were attempting to determine exactly what led to the shootout Saturday night outside the Yit Ing Ho restaurant in Houston's Chinatown section.

No arrests had been made Sunday night.

"They were all friends who were at the wedding together," said Sgt. Bill Stephens of the homicide division.

Stephens said an argument broke out over something that had occurred at least a week earlier and the shooting began.

Minh Da Le, 35, escaped from the shooting but collapsed and died a half-block away, Lt. B.J. Beck said.

Le Loi, age unknown, was gunned down in front of the restaurant, near a bullet-riddled car. He was taken to Ben Taub Hospital, where he died of head wounds late Saturday night, Beck said.

A third victim, Than Van Ngyun, 31, was driven by a family member to Jefferson Davis Hospital. He was then transferred to Ben Taub, where he also died late Saturday, police said.

Relatives of man who killed self, two young sons suspected suicide

EL PASO (AP) — Relatives of a former Florida man who killed himself and his two young sons in a Christmas Day house fire suspected that he might commit suicide, the man's sister said.

"My mother spoke to him on Christmas Eve and he told her that this was their last conversation," Doris Elkins said in a weekend telephone interview with The El Paso Times from her Palatka, Fla., home.

Dale Perry, 40, and his sons — Ian, 4, and Aaron, 19 months, died Thursday in a fire that swept through Perry's rented home in northeast El Paso.

After an investigation, authorities concluded Friday that Perry deliberately set the fire and ruled the deaths murder and suicide.

Police Lt. Danny Vessells said Saturday that a call on a "suicidal subject" came in at approximately 5:20 p.m. Wednesday. He and two other police officers went to the house and found it empty. None of the neighbors were home, Vessells said.

The boys' mother, Joyce, died in October 1985 of an epileptic seizure and Perry had tried to take care of his sons by himself since then. After his wife's death in Orlando, Fla., Perry and the children moved to El Paso in November.

Ms. Elkins said when Perry told his mother it was his last conversation with her that relatives weren't sure whether he meant he was going away and taking the boys with him or whether he intended to kill himself.

"But we never imagined he would do this to the kids," she said.

In the Christmas Eve telephone call to his mother in Florida, Perry said he had burned his wedding album, Ms. Elkins said. Neighbors reported seeing Perry burning his and his sons' possessions in his backyard, including some of the boys' toys.

Everett Corl, a friend of the family, said Perry had been despondent over a broken love affair and the loss of his job after his car broke down, keeping him from getting to work.

After Ms. Elkins' Christmas Eve telephone conversation with her brother, she said she told her mother to call El Paso police.

One of last 'horseback rangers' dies

KINGSVILLE (AP) — Walter A. "Ray" Russell, one of the last of the old-time horseback lawmen, will be laid to rest near the Rio Grande, where he used to ride as a Texas Ranger.

Russell died Saturday at his home in Kingsville at the age of 83. Funeral services are scheduled for 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Masonic Cemetery in Del Rio.

As a Ranger for more than 40 years, Russell led the life of legendar Western lawmen, riding his horse along the Rio Grande, mixing with Hollywood stars and butting heads with the powerful Duke of Duval County.

"He was one of the last active horseback rangers," said Russell's wife, Beth Baker, a history professor at Texas A&I. "Walter was the last of the old-time lawmen."

Kleberg County Sheriff Jim Scarborough told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times that Russell worked at a time when "being a tough Ranger was the name of the game."

Russell was born near Presidio on Aug. 23, 1903. His father earned a living by taking cattle across the border from Mexico, Mrs. Baker said.

Russell worked as a cowboy on cattle drives in Arizona, as a cattle detective and later rode with the Arizona Rangers, Mrs. Baker said.

He returned to Texas to work as a Ranger in the late 1920s, and began "riding the river in the Big Bend," Mrs. Baker said.

She said Russell's experience brought in him in contact with several celebrities, including Tom Mix, Walter Brennan and Zane Grey.

Russell came to the Coastal Bend in 1952, sent by Gov. Allan Shivers to pull in the reigns of the late George Parr — the legendary Duke of Duval County of the South Texas political machine eventually disintegrated into scandal.

Russell retired from active duty in 1967, but continued to hold a commission and serve as a consultant to the Rangers, Mrs. Russell said.

A lifelong law officer, Russell is enshrined in the Texas Ranger Hall of Fame in Waco.

Changing personal image requires overhaul of 'look'

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

Shopping for a new image? Changing personal appearance can be a fun and challenging New Year's resolution.

No longer proud and preppy? Itching to shed your plaid skirt for sporty leggings? Rather bored with your ruffly romantic gowns and want something sexy and sophisticated? Read on!

Usually one has a natural instinct for a particular type of clothes, such as classic, sporty, romantic, sophisticated or avant-garde, but sometimes we purposely detour and change our image.

Maybe you've always been a frilly type, but a new job calls for the polished, classic look. Or you've outgrown your sporty look and want something wild and wicked for a special gala. Whatever the reason, you've decided it's time to shop for a new image.

To help you search for your new image, we've categorized several designers by their fashion stance:

■ CLASSIC — This is the traditional Brooks Brothers' look, also called preppy and Ivy League, that bespeaks good breeding. If you don't want anybody to know your mother was a stripper, this is the look to acquire. It's also the perfect uniform for almost any job interview.

The trademarks of the classic look are quality fabrics and timeless designs, such as a navy blazer and a pleated skirt. Button-down shirts, Shetland sweaters, penny loafers and short strings of pearls also belong here.

What does a preppy need to complete her wardrobe? Items such as lace jabots and basic cotton turtlenecks, as well as a complete selection of proper shirts, skirts and sweaters by traditional designers, such as Lady Thompson, J.G. Hook and Herman Geist.

Look for wonderful flannel nightgowns with heart patterns. Villager clothing is also hot and you'll find blazers, jabot-necked blouses, plaid skirts and the fresher border-printed skirts. Sweaters are whimsical with hearts, ducks and flowers.

Businesswomen will want to look for classic suits, white shirts and silk bow ties, as well as lace-edged hankies and stick pins.

■ SPORTY — This is the look that's easy, breezy and often very colorful — and can take you most anywhere but the most conservative of offices.

The queen of the sporty look is Esprit.

Trademarks of the Esprit silhouette, which is almost a fashion category of its own, are bright colors mixed and matched in lots of layers. Typically Esprit are leggings under a short skirt, topped with a long-tailed shirt, print sweatshirt and warm-up jacket. Caps, mittens, socks, shoes and belts bearing the Esprit logo complete the look.

The younger set also goes for Sportswear by Emanuelle and a jewelry counter loaded with trendy silver jewelry, such as silver cuffs, pins and earrings.

Contemporary women opt for designs by Adrienne, Vittadini, Eileen West and Karen Kane, featuring rhinestone shirts, Western print blouses, red corduroy skirts and a few faster paced items such as a black dress with a back that dips to the waist and a jeweled brooch to brighten a satin shirt or velvet jacket.

A popular sporty look is that of comfy, carefree separates in gauzy cotton. The colors are abundant — black, white and all the primaries — and you can mix and match shorts, clam diggers, shell tops, jackets and sashes to your heart's content.

Also hot is anything from the Benetton line, which is loaded with brightly colored sweaters perfect for mixing and matching. This look is sleeker, more European.

■ SOPHISTICATED — This is the look most of us yearn for, especially when we want to impress someone. Sophisticated clothing usually means elegant, sometimes sexy (but always in good taste) designs and often calls for gloves, furs and hats.

It can be a suit with a fur collar, or it can be a ball gown, but it always has a regal appearance. In order to carry this look off, one should have a great deal of self-confidence. Knowledge of which fork to use when eating a seven-course meal wouldn't hurt, either.

You're ready to shop for the sophisticated image? If you're going to a ball and can't afford a new designer original, try resale shops. Such shops offer new and resale designer fashions at very reasonable prices. Pair them with boas and rhinestone jewelry for a stunning look.

If your tastes are sophisticated but not that formal, try suits by Howard Kasper and others, as well as dresses by Nancy Johnson.

See yourself in elegant, unique knits? Try unusual shapes — such as a poncho — worn over a skinny tube skirt.

■ ROMANTIC — You're a die-hard romantic, you say? You love lace, ruffles, flowers and French perfumes?

This look is a little hard to wear to the office or the tennis court, but a bow in the hair or a ruffle on the hemline can let the world know that you adore dainty dresses and lacy lingerie.

Today, the lacy racy buys are made by executive women who want romantic clothes but still sophisticated one-of-a-kind lace garments. They look for imports and handmade pieces from designers such as Milo, Sara Mique and Pauli T.

Also Popular are romantic new designs from vintage fabrics and laces and vintage clothes from the Victorian era. Look for dainty white cotton frocks and lace camisoles and ruffled eyelet petticoats in perfect condition.

For the contemporary romantic, there are pretty day dresses and soft sweaters as well as some sexy and sporty fare.

■ AVANT-GARDE — So you have to be different, do you? Your clothing will be on the cutting edge of fashion trends, and feathers, leather, frankly fake jewels will be the staples of your wardrobe.

Clothes and accessories for the avant-garde are eclectically combined, so they can be found anywhere, from street fairs to designer boutiques.

Look for a peasant dress made of blue leather, or a circle skirt right out of the '40s with a jillion rhinestones.

Other items that cater to the avant-garde crowd are red fringed leather jackets, painted leathers, nifty watches, fun jewelry — such as painted wood cat face earrings or red pocket watch and wide Lucite cuffs.

DEAR ABBY

Teen-ager's foresight gives others better lives

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Terry, my 15-year-old son, was killed by his best friend who was playing with a gun they did not know was loaded. We realize it was an accident, and both our families are heartbroken, but that is not what this letter is about.

Terry had just received his learner's permit. A while ago, while looking at my driver's license, he noticed "Organ Donor" marked on it, and asked what it meant. I explained it, and added if he wanted to donate his organs when he got his permanent license, he could mark it on his own driver's license. I said, "You can think about it, and decide when the time comes." He replied, "I don't need to think about it; I've already decided that that is what I want to do! It will make me feel good to know that should I die in an accident, my organs will go to someone who can use them."

Well, after his tragic, sudden death, his mother and I honored his request.

His heart went to a minister in our town, one of his kidneys went to a 25-year-old man who lives nearby, and the other kidney went to a Catholic priest. (We are Baptists, but that didn't matter.) All of these men are doing well and are looking forward to normal, healthy lives.

Even though we did not have our beloved son with us for Christmas, we felt that a part of him still lives on, giving joy to three other families. I cannot describe the comfort and consolation this has given us. We are proud of Terry for having been so mature and unselfish to have expressed this wish.

Our family has enjoyed "Dear Abby" in the Birmingham News for years, and we wish you and your family God's blessings for all the good you do. — ALBERT T. GANDY, FAIRFIELD, ALA.

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago you printed a letter from a mother writing about her child who had learning disabilities and where to go for help. You referred her to the Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities (ACLD). That one letter printed in your column generated tens of thousands of letters to the association.

The ACLD responded by informing the parents where to go for help. As a volunteer, I helped to sort and answer those letters.

At the time, services for the older adolescent and young adult were virtually non-existent. This situation exists today with a few exceptions. Yet, learning disabilities are a lifelong handicapping condition and, without services, they prevent those with the condition from exercising an inherent right — that of independent living. These children, as adults, become consumers of society rather than providers — a needless waste of human resources.

There is hope. A program started just three years ago for young adults with learning disabilities is proving to be highly successful. Over 90 percent who finish move on into independent living.

Abby, I hope you will think this is important enough to pass on to your readers, so that those with learning disabilities will know that even as adults, they, too, can succeed and live independently. — A FRIEND IN PHOENIX

DEAR FRIEND: I share your enthusiasm for this wonderful program.

Readers, information on this program and others like it can be obtained by writing to ACLD Inc., 4156 Library Road, Pittsburgh, Pa. 15234. As this is a non-profit organization, please enclose $1 to cover printing, postage and handling.

DEAR ABBY: Does a handshake reveal the makeup of a person? For instance, does a firm shake reveal control and assertiveness and a limp shake reveal an insecurity or weakness? Or is a handshake merely a handshake? — S.E. PADILLA

DEAR S.E. PADILLA: A child is taught to shake hands. If it is stressed that a firm handshake indicates "control and assertiveness," and a limp handshake indicates "insecurity or weakness," the child will act accordingly. Actually, it is learned behavior, and, therefore, not a fair indication of anything.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Museum devoted to photography

Associated Press

New York's International Center of Photography is the world's first museum devoted solely to photography, showing and preserving the work of photographers and photojournalists.

ICP was created by one man, according to an article in a recent issue of Connoisseur. He is Cornell Capa, a photographer himself and the brother of internationally renowned war photographer Robert Capa.

The museum mounts 25 shows a year, sends half of them on tours around the United States and Europe, exhibits its archives and runs 190 general and graduate programs. Today it is sending its exhibition of 155 Henri Cartier-Bresson prints to museums around the world. By 1990, they will have been seen by 3 million people in 38 countries on four continents.

"The ICP enlarged the landscape of photography," said Harry Lunn, internationally known art dealer.

The photography museum shows news, fashion, dance and animal photography, and historic photographs from places such as Poland and South Africa — photographs never before considered fit subjects for museums.

The ICP is the mirror of Cornell Capa, its founder and guiding genius, who has taken his own camera to Ecuador, Peru and New Guinea. He photographed Boris Pasternak. He documented the birth of the first American compact car. He recorded John F. Kennedy's first 100 days in the White House. Eventually he published five books of his own photographs.

Much of the income from these projects went to the International Fund for Concerned Photography, which Capa created in 1966 to organize exhibitions and help photographers.

Next came the ICP. It has brought master photographers in to teach. It offers historians, editors and writers a forum in which to widen points of view. Its archives have grown to 8,500 prints of more than 500 photographers, placing the ICP in the same league with the Getty, the Met and MOMA.

As for attendance — the most vital statistic for a museum — 100,000 people came through its doors last year, about as many as visited the nearby Guggenheim Museum.

Its critics say ICP is too involved with photojournalism.

"Mothers crying over dead babies is not high art," said one collector.

One thing the ICP has done is pep up the museum world, increasing its showing of photographs. It also has contributed to the rise in the price of photography by showing thousands of photographs that otherwise might never have been seen.

Grammar Hot Line leads to 'painless' grammar guide

By JON HAHN
Hearst News Service

Grammar doth make cowards of us all. The very word evokes images of verbs that won't conjugate at the blackboard, nouns that defy declension, and terrified pupils unable to explain why their participles dangle.

But fear not. If we can believe there is painless dentistry, then we can believe in "Painless Perfect Grammar." Such is the title of a handy little book by Michael Strumpf, the voice on the other end of the Grammar Hot Line, (805) 529-2321.

For the price of the book, $7.95, or the cost of a toll call, you can undangle your participles, reunite your infinitives, learn whether or not to use the word "irregardless" and, in general, feel better about using the English language.

Strumpf runs the Grammar Hot Line every weekday morning from his office at Moorpark (Calif.) Community College. The book, written with Auriel Douglas, is dedicated "to all those with a sincere desire to learn, who have not called the Grammar Hot Line because they didn't know it existed, or because they were afraid they would be embarassed — just as they were afraid to raise their hands in school."

The Grammar Hot Line began 10 years ago "as one of those weird ideas you have at 4 a.m." Strumph says. "The 100 or so daily calls at the start have grown to 300 to 400. The book was written to help stop the flow of telephone questions. But putting the hot line telephone number in the book proved to be the mistake of the century. The calls are still coming in."

Strumph has some interesting things to say about grammar, and about the educational system and professionals charged with teaching same:

■ "The people who speak our glorious language like 'irregardless.' Therefore, suffice it to say, that 'irregardless' is now a permanent part of the English language. But you will never, never hear it from my lips! I may not like it personally, but don't feel guilty if you're used to using it."

■ "The banks have (ugh!) taken liberties and are using 'loaned' as a verb. Those bankers will say 'the banks loaned money.' Go to your local bank and correct them! If they give you a hard time, give them my phone number, and I'll correct them."

■ "We have sunk to a general level of mediocrity in education, the likes of which hasn't been seen since the beginning of time. The treatment of classroom teachers over the years has finally paid off."

■ "The vast majority of contemporary literature is garbage, absolute tripe, with the best sellers written by ex-corrupt politicians, ex-call girls, ex-pimps. There are too few exceptions."

Mesquite versatile

Associated Press

Desert survival requires extreme measures. The shrub-like mesquite tree, for instance, thrives in desert country from Argentina north to the southwestern United States. The key to survival for this plant, according to Wood magazine, is an extensive lateral root system and tap roots which wind far down into the earth. These long roots have been discovered as far down as 174 feet in a copper mine.

Mesquite's meandering roots slow erosion of the desert's fragile soil, and they also enrich it with nitrogen. When the desert blooms, this small tree's flowers yield nectar for a delectable honey. Later when the sun has scorched other plants, mesquite seed pods feed wild animals, livestock and humans. For example, the Pima, a Native American group, use the mesquite pods to brew beer and grind them into flour for tortillas.

Woodworkers seek out mesquite because it shrinks less than 3 percent from green to bone-dry, works as easily as walnut, bends without steaming, resists wear, and has a color that grows more beautiful with age.

'Skins, Jets dominate Wild Card games

Rams' six TOs help Redskins

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Washington Redskins have moved closer to a possible Super Bowl berth by using an old tactic, the takeaway, and their newest weapon, placekicker Jess Atkinson.

Washington took advantage of six Los Angeles turnovers Sunday to register a 19-7 victory over the Rams in the first round of the NFC playoffs. Using four field goals by Atkinson, who was signed two weeks ago, the Redskins earned a shot at the defending champion Chicago Bears in Saturday's NFC semifinal game.

When Washington takes more than it gives away, the Redskins are virtually unbeatable. Since 1982, the Redskins are 47-1 in games in which they finish with a positive turnover ratio, and only 7-14 when the ratio is negative.

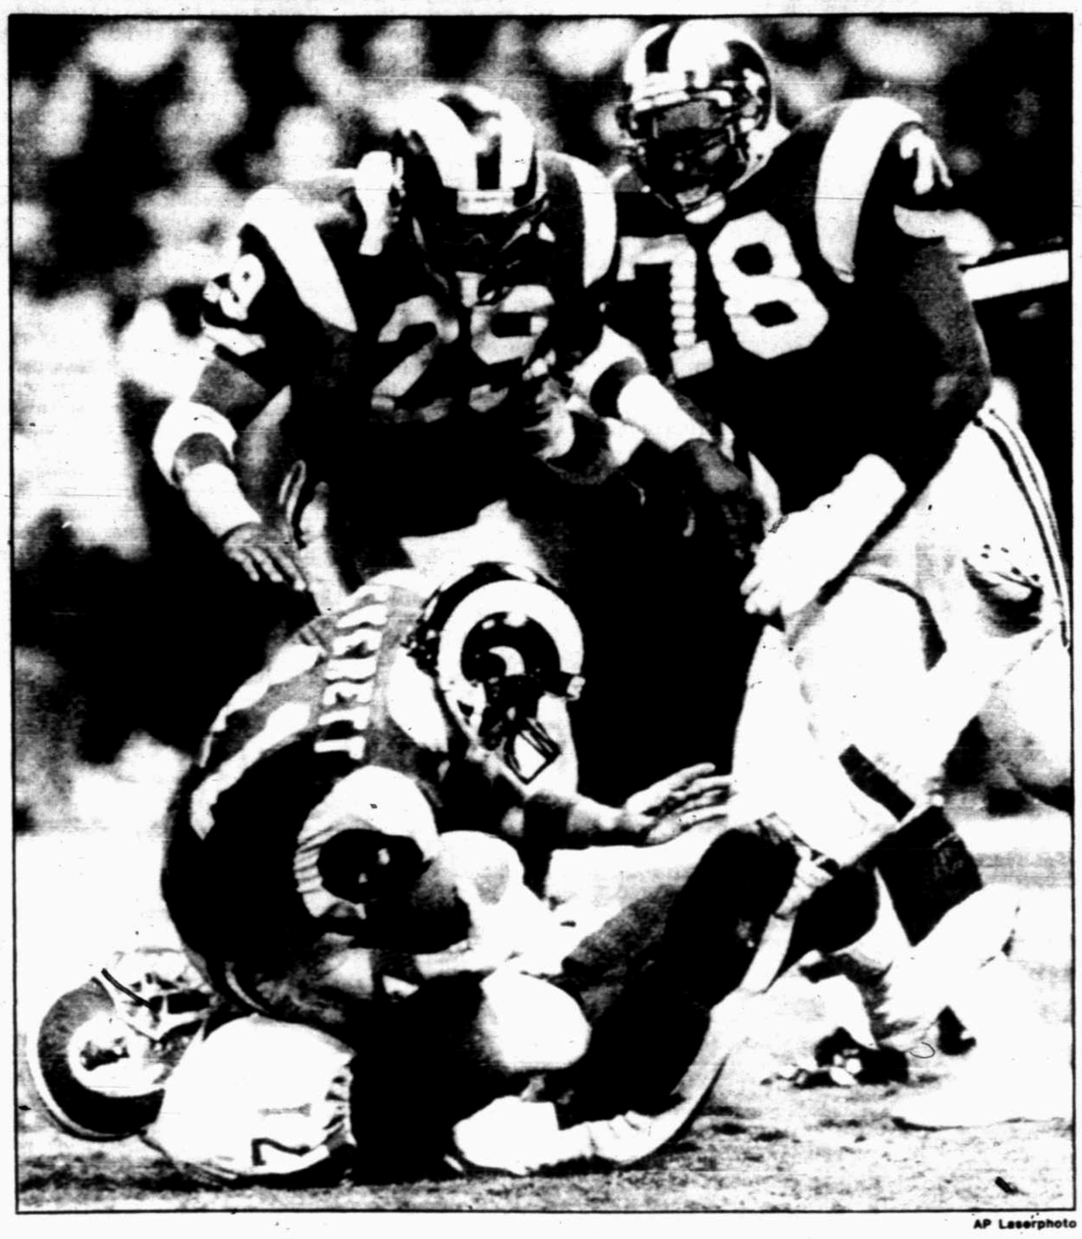

The Rams' Eric Dickerson rushed for 158 yards, but Washington made good use of the All-Pro running back's three fumbles. The Redskins converted the first into Atkinson's first field goal, and stopped a possible Los Angeles scoring drive in the second quarter by recovering another Dickerson fumble at the Redskin 9-yard line.

"The turnovers were decisive," Rams Coach John Robinson said. "The fact that the Redskins played error-free football was the key."

Following the Rams' third fumble of the first half, by tight end David Hill, Washington consumed 8½ minutes in a 14-play, 53-yard drive and took a 13-0 lead.

"The mistakes killed us," Los Angeles guard Dennis Harrah said.

N.Y. Jets pick right time to snap five-game skid

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New York Jets had had enough.

The humiliation of a five-game losing streak which plummeted them from the top of the NFL to a laughing stock provided the right kind of incentive. The quarterbacking switch from Ken O'Brien to Pat Ryan gave them an added boost.

And a simplified, "blood-and-guts defense" was the final element as the Jets stormed to a 35-15 victory over the Kansas City Chiefs in the AFC wild-card game Sunday.

"We heard a lot of bad things about ourselves the last few weeks," Ryan said after throwing three touchdown passes against the AFC's No. 2 defense. "It's been a hard road and it hasn't been any fun coming in to practice.

"It's bad enough to lose five in a row before you go into the playoffs. No one wanted to lose six in a row."

Ryan, Freeman McNeil, who rushed for 135 yards and scored twice, and the born-again defense was more than the Chiefs could handle.

"We knew our backs were against the wall, that we had hit rock bottom," McNeil said. "We've been cursed at, kicked, you name it. It was time to go out and hit people and show what we are, that we are champions."

Next Saturday, the Jets meet the AFC Central champion Cleveland Browns, who posted the conference's best record at 12-4. McNeil already was thinking about that game moments after Sunday's victory.

"We are in a position to do anything we want," he said. "Those five games were last season. This is a new season. Either we lay it on the line or go home — and nobody wants to go home."

IF THE Jets had continued playing as they did in their late-season slide, during which they allowed 183 points and scored only 61, they would now be headed home. But Ryan did what O'Brien couldn't in the slump, getting the ball to his wide receivers and responding when New York fell into an early deficit. Ryan completed seven passes to his wideouts.

The defense, meanwhile, was steady, thanks to assistant coach Bud Carson's simplified game plan. Carson, who was fired as the Chiefs' defensive coordinator in the 1984 training camp, got a game ball, as did Ryan.

"Bud wanted us to go out and hit all day," cornerback Russell Carter said. "We could see that Bud was real excited about this game. He turned us loose, said, 'If anything, be aggressive.' He gave us a chance to tee off on people."

The Chiefs, with the least productive offense in the league, could not get back into the game after falling behind 21-6 at halftime.

"Give the credit to the Jets," Chiefs Coach John Mackovic said, "and the way they played every portion of the game. We didn't give our best effort but maybe the Jets didn't let us."

Ryan, a nine-year veteran who guided the Jets to a victory over New England and a 13-0 lead over Denver in another win while O'Brien was hurt this season, completed 16 of 23 passes for 153 yards.

Coaches aren't looking for defense to rule day

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Neither Minnesota nor Tennessee is expecting a defensive battle when the two teams collide Monday night in the 28th annual Liberty Bowl contest.

"People in the Big Ten say that Minnesota has the best offensive talent in their conference," Tennesse Coach Johnny Majors said. "If we don't do better on defense, we'll probably have to put four or five touchdowns or more up on the board to win."

Minnesota Coach John Gutekunst agreed that both he and Majors may spend the evening pacing the sidelines and adding up points.

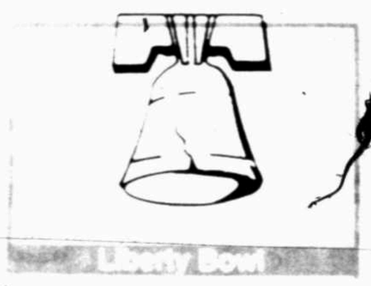

"Tennessee's strengths match our weaknesses, and our strengths match their weaknesses," Gutekunst said. "Their passing game will give our defense trouble and Tennessee's defense has had problems with the running game, and we run the ball well."

The Volunteers and Golden Gophers carry matching 6-5 records into the 7 p.m. CST kickoff at Liberty Bowl Stadium. A capacity crowd of 50,100 is expected.

Tennessee got off to a woeful 2-5 start but won its final four games to secure its Liberty Bowl berth, while Minnesota's invitation came on the heels of a stunning 20-17 upset of Michigan.

"We don't really talk about bowl games at Minnesota as a goal, unless it's winning the conference championship which is tied in with the Rose Bowl. We were completly out of the bowl picture until we beat Michigan," Gutekunst said.

For Tennessee linebacker Dale Jones, the Liberty Bowl is a chance to salvage respectability.

Liberty Bowl

"We were on the way to having a disastrous season," Jones said. "Going to a bowl game gives us a chance of being half-respectable."

For Tennesseee to win, Jones and his defensive teammates will have to solve the Gophers' multitalented wishbone, an offense that has given the Vols trouble all season.

"This is one of the toughest challenges we have faced in a long time," Majors said. "We must slow down quarterback Rickey Foggie and tailback Darrell Thompson to have a chance."

Foggie, a 6-foot-1, 185-pound junior, already is Minnesota's career total offense leader with 5,118 yards.

Thompson led the Big Ten in rushing as a freshman with a school record 1,240 yards and rushed for more than 100 yards in six games.

Stopping the Gophers may be a more difficult task than defensing Miami in last year's 35-7 Sugar Bowl victory, said Tennessee defensive coordinaor Ken Donahue.

"With Miami, you knew they were going to throw the football a certain number of times. That was their game," Donahue said. "Minnesota is much more diversified and they come at you from so many other directions."

The Vols hope to counter with a balanced attack led by sophomore quarterback Jeff Francis.

Francis led the Southeastern Conference in completion percentage, hitting 150 of 233 attempts for 64.4 percent and nine touchdowns.

"Jeff had a very productive and pleasing sophomore year," Majors said. "He made tremendous improvement from the start of the season to the end."

Francis has several talented targets, including wide receivers Joey Clinkscales and Anthony Miller.

Clinkscales was fourth in the SEC with 37 receptions for 511 yards and three touchdowns, while Miller grabbed 36 passes for 667 yards, an 18.5-yard average, and five touchdowns.

Junior running back William Howard led the Vols in rushing with 787 yards on 177 attempts for a per-game average of 98.4 yards.

Howard led the SEC in scoring with 86 points on 14 touchdowns and a two-point conversion run.

The Liberty Bowl will be the second straight postseason appearace for Minnesota, which defeated Clemson 20-13 in the Independance Bowl last season, and the fifth in school history.

Tennessee is keeping its fouth straight bowl date. The Vols have been to 28 bowl games, including two successful Libery Bowl appearances.

Tennessee defeated Arkansas 14-13 in the 1971 game and downed Maryland 7-3 in 1974.

Associated Press

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Kevin Gamble scored 16 points and third-ranked Iowa overcame a slow start to defeat the University of Portland 84-65 in a first-round game at the Anteater Classic college basketball tournament.

With the victory, the Hawkeyes advanced into Monday night's championship game where they will meet host Cal-Irvine, which defeated Eastern Washington 97-68 in an earlier first-round game.

The Hawkeyes, 11-0, fell behind 18-10 and were still trailing 28-23 before rallying to tie the score at 31.

After leading 48-44 at halftime, Iowa ran off a 13-4 spurt to take a 63-52 lead with 11:44 to play.

Auburn 89, Iowa State 87

EL PASO — Gerald White's two free throws with 29 seconds to play enabled fifth-ranked Auburn to hold off Iowa State in a first-round game of the Sun Bowl Classic basketball tournament.

Texas-El Paso defeated the University of Texas 76-51 in the other first-round game.

Auburn, 7-0, and UTEP, 8-2, will meet for the championship Monday night.

Auburn trailed by as many as nine points in the first half and trailed 54-50 at intermission. But the Tigers scored eight of the first 10 points in the second half to go ahead 58-56.

Arkansas 97, Ohio State 94
Pittsburgh 79, Kansas 76

HONOLULU — Freshman guard Ron Huery scored 20 points, six of them in the last 1:15, as the University of Arkansas came from behind to defeat Ohio State in the 23rd annual Rainbow Classic basketball tournment.

On Monday, the Razorbacks, 7-3, meet Pittsburgh, a winner over Kansas in Sunday's other game, in one semifinal. California will play Wisconsin in the other semifinal game.

With Arkansas trailing 92-89 with 2:42 to play, Huery hit a 10-foot jump shot to pull the Razorbacks to within one point. Huery then scored on a driving layup, was fouled and hit the free throw for a three-point play that gave Arkansas a 94-92 lead.

Another free throw by Huery made it 95-92 and two free throws by Mike Ratliff put Arkansas ahead 97-92 with 27 seconds left.

Villanova 63, Houston 60

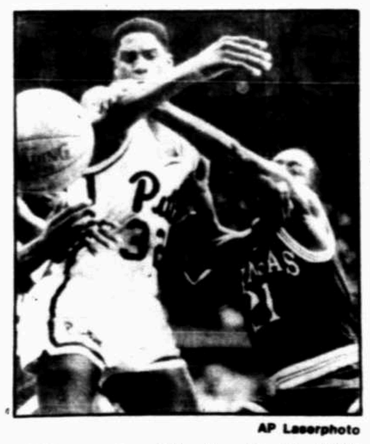

NEW ORLEANS — Villanova's defense forced three turnovers in the final three minutes of play, and Doug West and Harold Jensen sparked an 11-5 game-ending surge as the Wildcats beat Houston in the opening game of the Sugar Bowl basketball tournament.

Vanderbilt and South Carolina met later in the second game of the opening round.

Houston led 55-52 with 3:10 left in the game. Ken Wilson and Gary Massey came up with steals and Villanova's full-court press produced a five-second violation over the next 3:01, and Villanova led 60-57 with :29 left int he game.

Houston's Tim Hobby hit a three-point shot to tie it at 60 with :14 seconds left, but Villanova's Mark Plansky put the Wildcats back on top to stay with a 15-foot jumper that made it 63-60 with three seconds left.

Iowa's Fry could be new USC coach

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Iowa Coach Hayden Fry, reported to be a top candidate for the football coaching job at Southern California, refused to guarantee Sunday night that he would be at Iowa next year.

The Los Angeles Herald Examiner reported in its Sunday editions that it was told by a source "well connected" to Southern Cal's four-member search committee that Athletic Director Mike McGee had contacted Fry about the job and that Fry was interested.

USC is looking for a coach to replace Ted Tollner, who was fired last month after the Trojans lost to Notre Dame in their regular-season finale. Southern Cal, which is 7-4, will play Auburn in the Florida Citrus Bowl on Jan. 1.

Cornered by several reporters after Iowa's final practice in preparation for Tuesday night's Holiday Bowl game with San Diego State, Fry said he had talked to a Herald Examiner reporter but insisted, "I don't even know about that story."

Asked if that meant he would be back at Iowa next year, Fry said, "I didn't say that." When asked why he wouldn't say that, Fry said, "Why should I?"

Fry wouldn't confirm or deny that he had talked to Southern Cal officials about the football job. His only comment was, "I don't even know anybody at USC."

The Herald Examiner quoted Fry as saying he had not talked to McGee.

"I can't remember the last time I talked to Mike McGee or a representative of USC," the newspaper quoted Fry as saying. "In all honesty, I have not approached USC or been contacted by anyone from the school.

"I am honored to be mentioned in association with a school like USC."

The newspaper said Fry added jokingly, "Put a bug in Mike McGee's ear for me."

When reporters asked him about that remark following Sunday night's practice, Fry didn't deny saying it.

"Whoever that guy was who called me up, we were laughing so hard, I might have said that," he said. "He's a real nice guy. He covered the Rose Bowl when we were there and we were joking and laughing. I might have said something like that. But I didn't specify what kind of bug."

'Magic' act adds to Sixer woes, 111-86

Associated Press

NBA

Earvin "Magic" Johnson is having more fun playing basketball these days — and that's not good news for the rest of the NBA.

Johnson had 28 points and nine assists Sunday night, leading the Los Angeles Lakers to their fourth consecutive victory, a 111-85 decision over the slumping Philadelphia 76ers.

"Earvin was relentless and he kept creating," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "His intensity and commitment to playing and leading is the best I've seen.

"He was just taking charge in every area, playing defense on 'Doc' (Julius Erving), making steals and getting rebounds. He looks like he's having tremendous fun."

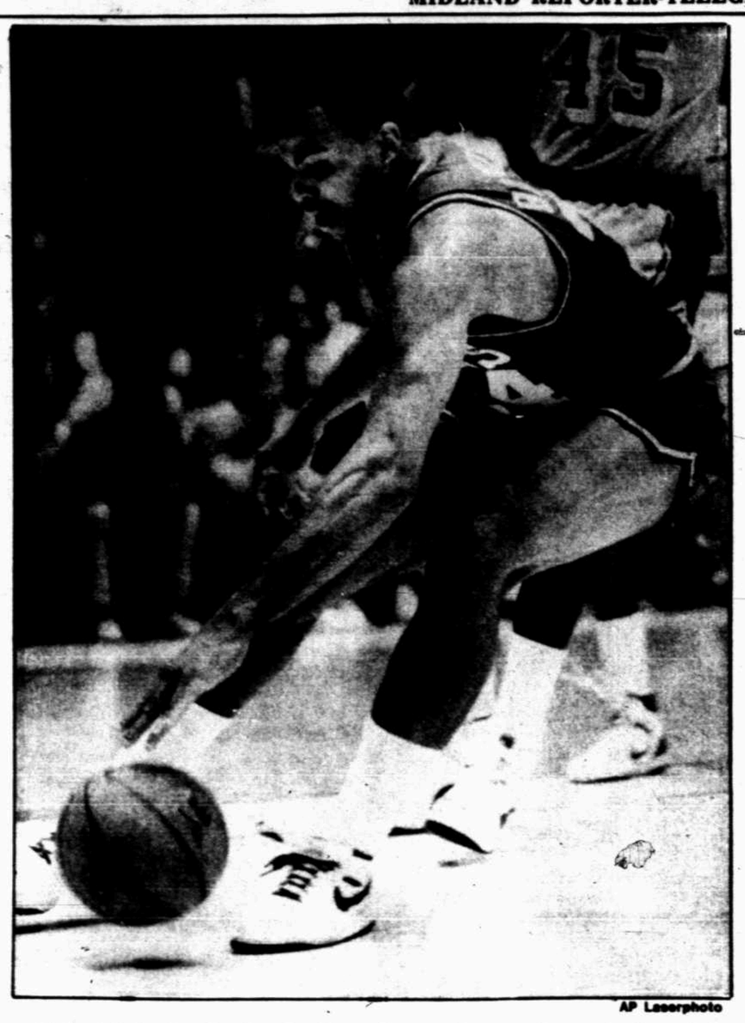

The Lakers scored 13 straight points to take a 71-52 lead with 2:35 left in the third period. The 76ers were held scoreless for 3 minutes, 37 seconds.

"The third quarter is the big quarter for either team because that's when the game swings either way," Johnson said. "We want to get into the routine of winning."

The 76ers are struggling in almost every department.

"It's so many things that are hurting us — the inconsistency, lack of concentration, and our ability to knock down shots with any regularity," Philadelphia Coach Matt Goukas said. "We have defensive lapses, we don't pass the ball well, and these things surface just about every night."

The 76ers, who were held to their lowest point total this season, have lost eight of their last 11 games. Their previous low was 88 points against the Detroit Pistons on Dec. 20.

Philadelphia's Charles Barkley chases down a loose ball to little ayail Sunday as the Los Angeles Lakers romped to victory, 111-85.

Trail Blazers 127, SuperSonics 118

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 32 points, 11 of them in the fourth quarter, as Portland defeated Seattle.

With the score tied 106-106, Vandeweghe hit a three-point field goal with 5:14 remaining to give the Trail Blazers the lead for good. Vandeweghe then scored another eight points in the last five minutes as Portland opened its nine-point final margin.

Xavier McDaniel led the Sonics with 30 points, 25 in the first half, and Dale Ellis added 29.

Seattle played most of the game without its top scorer, Tom Chambers, who was ejected with 5:15 left in the first period. Chambers, averaging 25.1 points per game, departed with just four points after arguing with a referee over a foul call.

Portland scored the first nine points of the third period to trail by oly one after Sonics led 69-59 at halftime. Steve Johnson scored seven points to lead the Portland rally.

Reddick saves Winnipeg, 5-4

Associated Press

NHL Roundup

When the time came for rookie goaltender Pokey Reddick to save the day for the Winnipeg Jets, he simply laid down on the job.

In doing so, however, Reddick stopped a penalty shot by Minnesota's Kent Nilsson with five seconds remaining Sunday night as the Jets edged the North Stars 5-4.

"I wasn't worried about any of his moves, but I wanted him to make the first one," said Reddick, who turned aside 24 of 28 shots by the North Stars.

Nilsson was awarded the penalty shot when referee Dave Newell ruled that Winnipeg defenseman Mario Marois knocked the goal off its moorings during a scramble in front of the net.

"I was trying to shoot low on the stick side, but he covered it right away," Nilsson said. "He just laid down. I don't think he made a hell of a save. It wasn't a very good penalty shot on my side."

On the penalty shot, Nilsson broke in and made a move toward Reddick's glove side. Then he tried the stick side, but Reddick sprawled in front of the net and Nilsson shot into his pads.

"You can tell when the puck is in front of a player if he's going to shoot it or if he's going to deke," Reddick said. "It was in front of him, so I though he was going to shoot. It was just reaction. I looked to see where the puck was and it was stuck between my pads. I said 'whew.' "

Doug Smail's eighth goal of the season, with 2:16 remaining, snapped a 4-4 tie and led the Jets to only their second victory this month. Smail beat Kari Takko, who had come on in relief of starter Don Beaupre in the second period.

"I feel about 100 pounds lighter right now," said Smail, whose goal was his first in 18 games.

Keith Acton had tied the game for Minnesota on his eighth goal with 7:51 left.

Nilsson set up linemate Neil Broten for three goals. Broten has scored five goals in his last three games after missing 20 games with a shoulder separation. He now has eight goals.

Dale Hawerchuk scored two goals and assisted on another for the Jets, who improved to 2-7-3 this month. The other Winnipeg goals came from Marois and Paul McLean.

Oilers 6, Flyers 4

Wayne Gretzky, who leads the league with 36 goals, got his second of the game to break a 4-4 tie with 3:31 remaining, and Craig McTavish scored just 64 seconds later as Edmonton beat Philadelphia.

Jari Kurri started the Edmonton comeback from a 3-0 first-period deficit with a goal early in the second period, and Mark Messier got a power-play goal near the 14-minute mark. That was only Edmonton's second goal in 20 manpower opportunities during its five-game homestand.

Kurri, who also had two assists, then deflected a goalmouth pass at 3:48 of the third to break a 3-3 tie.

Defenseman Doug Crossman scored two goals for Philadelphia. His second, at 12:18 of the third period on a close-in screened shot, tied the game at 4-4. Derrick Smith and Ron Sutter scored the other Philadelphia goals, in the first period.

Blackhawks 7, Capitals 5

Denis Savard's goal with 2:37 remaining broke a 5-5 tie and sparked Chicago to a victory over Washington.

Savard, who also had three assists, took the puck from goalie Bob Sauve, skated the length of the ice and backhanded it past Washington goalie Bob Mason for his 19th goal.

After the Capitals took their third two-goal advantage, when Bob Gould scored to make it 5-3 with 14 minutes remaining, Chicago battled back on goals by Ed Olczyk and Wayne Presley.

Flames 4, Sabres 1

John Tonelli had a goal and an assist, and Calgary goaltender Mike Vernon kicked out 32 shots Sunday night as the Flames skated to a victory over the Buffalo Sabres.

Tonelli scored Calgary's first goal and assisted on what proved to be the winner in the second period. Joe Mullen, Gary Suter and Jim Peplinski also scored for the Flames, who are 5-1 in their last six games.

Buffalo rookie Shawn Anderson's first NHL goal created a 1-1 tie at 4:30 of the second period. But Mullen shoveled in the rebound of a Brian Bradley shot at 9:05 for his 19th goal to put the Flames ahead to stay.

West Texas State, 6-2, will face Midwestern State, 6-6, Monday. Clark, 4-2, plays Edinboro, 5-4, in the second round of the double-elimination tournament.

Moore discovers rumors of NFL playoffs are true

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — For 14 years, Derland Moore looked upon the NFL playoffs as nothing more than a rumor, a bit of postseason business that never included him or his team, the New Orleans Saints.

That's never, as in not ever, not once, not even by accident. They came close in 1983, eliminated by a field goal in the final seconds of the final game in a .500 season. That was better than the 1-15, 2-12, 3-11 and 4-12 years Moore lived through before that, but not much.

And now, quite unexpectedly, he has landed in a pot of jam with the New York Jets. At age 35, Moore is happy to report there is indeed a Santa Claus. The NFL playoffs exist. He has seen them for himself.

"I guess fairy tales do happen," he said softly after the Jets beat Kansas City 35-15 Sunday to advance to the second round of the AFC playoffs.

Moore, imported by the Jets to shore up a defensive line decimated by injuries, arrived two weeks ago. New York lost his first game 52-21, hardly a recommendation for playoff success. Moore, however, was not discouraged.

"Last week was bad, but not as bad as my first game at New Orleans," he said. "We got beat 62-7 by Atlanta in that one."

Why would he still remember that score, after all these years?

"It stays with you."

Losing always does. Some teams lose three or four games in a row and figure they are going through hard times. Moore had 14 years worth of hard times.

THROUGH IT all he was a survivor, keeping his head up while Saints' fans were covering theirs with paper bags to hide their embarrassment over the team's sorry record. He has seen more rebuilding plans than an inner city tenement.

This year, though, he could not aid in New Orleans' annual reconstruction. He had a banged-up knee and surgery — he called it "my 100,000 mile checkup" — revealed torn cartilage.

So Moore spent the season on injured reserve and, at his age, that is not the best recommendation for future football employment. It occurred to him that he might not have many tomorrows left in the game. And he found himself wondering again about that rumor called the playoffs.

With three games left in the season, New Orleans lost to New England, another anguishing loss, another game like so many before it that the Saints might have won but did not. That day, Moore reached the end of his endurance and asked for his release.

"I could have stayed on injured reserve and stayed on the payroll," he said. "But I'm not in this game for the money. I'm in it because I love it. I figured I had to go for it now or my career was over."

There had been an opportunity to escape last summer but Moore said he was not psychologically ready to leave New Orleans then. Now, though, he was.

"I was hoping for an opportunity to go to a playoff game at least once," he said. "It was my time to take a shot. I had done everything for the team in my career. This time, I was going to be selfish and do something for myself.

"There are things I had not experienced. This was my last chance to experience them. I would never have been satisfied with myself if I hadn't tried."

SO DERLAND MOORE went shopping, looking for a team that needed an experienced defensive lineman. The Jets, beat up and bending under the burden of a losing streak, were the perfect match for him.

It meant Christmas away from home, an unusual condition for a guy whose season always ended well before the holidays. It also meant a chance in the playoffs. And that meant everything.

"You've got to live it to know how good this feels inside," Moore said. "There are no words to describe it.

"There is a lot of talent out there, ex-USFL players and all. For the Jets to give me this opportunity, I would kill for them."

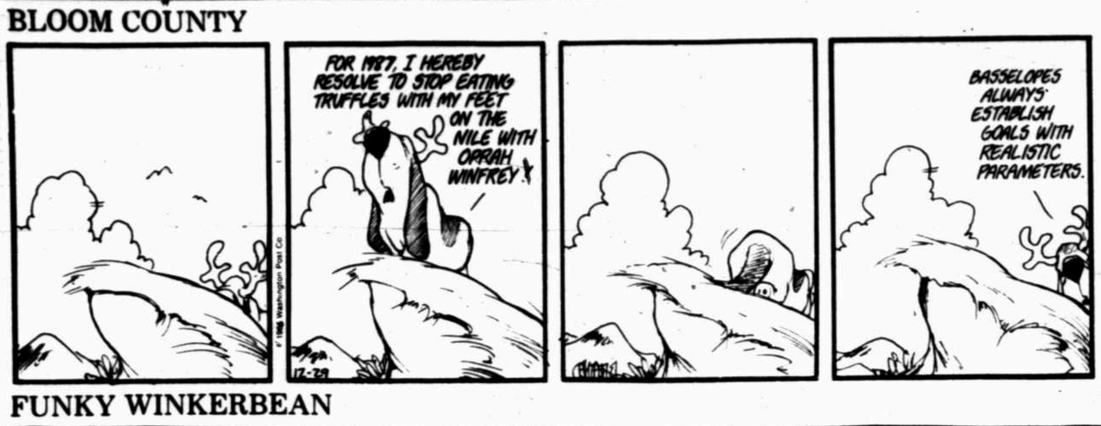

That won't be necessary. Just staying healthy would be quite enough.

AP picks Saints' Mayes offensive rookie of year

NEW YORK (AP) — Rueben Mayes of the New Orleans Saints, whose 1,353 rushing yards were the fourth-best in the NFL, was named today as the NFL's offensive rookie of the year by The Associated Press.

Mayes was a near-unanimous choice for the honor, getting 74 of the 79 votes cast by writers and broadcasters representing all 28 NFL cities. Mike Sherrard of Dallas, John L. Williams of Seattle, Mark Jackson of Denver, Napoleon McCallum of the Los Angeles Raiders and

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ ♡K952 ◇983 ♣AK52
Your partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
A.—You have an in-between hand—too strong for a forcing raise in hearts but not quite good enough for a jump shift. The solution is to make a temporizing bid of two clubs. Subsequent action will depend on partner's rebid.

Q.2—As South with 60 on score and neither side vulnerable, you hold:
♠A ♡AK9872 ◇AKQ10 ♣83
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
2 ♡	Pass	2 NT	4 ♣

What action do you take?
A.—You can't quite guarantee 10 tricks in your own hand, and though we won't fault you greatly if you elected to bid a red suit, we think you have a better action: pass. Since you opened with a demand bid that action would be forcing, and your best result might come from a penalty double of the opponents should partner choose that course.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ93 ♡A1093 ◇K102 ♣9
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—There is a school that believes you should overcall with all hands that contain a five-card spade suit. We are not among them. Our choice is to double to make sure we don't lose the heart suit. Should partner respond two clubs, we feel we are strong enough to introduce the spade suit at the two-level.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK6 ♡AQ5 ◇J872 ♣AQ6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♠	?

What action do you take?
A.—You are too strong for an overcall of one no trump. The correct way to tell partner how good you are is to start with a takeout double and then bid no trump next at the cheapest level possible.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ873 ♡6 ◇KQ752 ♣103
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—That depends on your methods. If you use an old-fashioned, natural style, you have a classic misfit and you should get out while the going is good—pass. If you play fourth-suit forcing, partner might have diamond support so you should tell him your suit was genuine by rebidding three diamonds.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡KJ93 ◇QJ106 ♣AQ83
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Dbl	Pass	Pass
Pass

What is your opening lead?
A.—When partner converts your low-level takeout double to penalties by passing, he is telling you that his holding in the opening bidder's suit is sound. Therefore, you should try to prevent letting your opponents score their low trumps by ruffing. The way to accomplish that is to lead a trump immediately.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Aretha Franklin and Bill Cosby were among dozens of stars who took part in the Lou Rawls Parade of Stars telethon to help raise more than $10 million in cash and pledges for 43 predominantly black colleges.

The amount was expected to increase by about $1 million once late donations were tallied Sunday, said director Melvin Shaw. The seventh annual variety show raised nearly $10.2 million during its broadcast late Saturday, he said.

Others among the 50 celebrities who appeared during the six-hour phone-in drive were George Burns, Bob Hope and Charlton Heston.

"Our future in many way depends on what happens with the youth of today," Rawls said Saturday. "If we can't get them on the right road today, we're going to look for trouble up the road.

"Thirty-five to 40 percent of our black politicians of today come from these black schools."

The telethon was carried in 56 cities, Shaw said, with some cities adding their own presentations.

BRADFORD, England (AP) — The parsonage where the Bronte sisters were born is up for sale and likely will be converted into apartments, a realtor said.

The house was built in 1802 in Thornton, a suburb of the Yorkshire industrial city of Bradford. Charlotte, Emily and Anne Bronte, as well as their brother, Branwell, were born there during 1816-20.

Their father, the Rev. Patrick Bronte, later moved his family to the village of Haworth seven miles away.

The Haworth parsonage has been turned into a museum and is a place of pilgrimage for lovers of the Bronte novels, the most famous of which are Charlotte's "Jane Eyre" and Emily's "Wuthering Heights."

Realtor Simon Thornton said Sunday that the Bronte birthplace has been put on the market by Simon Neild and his wife, who lived in it for 46 years.

Thornton said the Bronte Society, which owns the museum, and Bradford municipality decided against buying the birthplace for preservation. He said the building likely would be converted to apartments.

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The dollar put in a mixed performance today in early European trading when markets reopened after a four-day Christmas holiday. Gold prices also were mixed.

In Frankfurt, where the market closed on Christmas Eve for a five-day West German holiday, the dollar attracted an initial flurry of buying, but then fell back.

"There are a lot of people who feel the dollar is going to keep falling next year and some who forgot to sell earlier, so there has been good two-way trading," said one Frankfurt dealer.

The West German mark traded at 1.9515 for the dollar, compared with a London closing quote Wednesday of 1.9645.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell to a two-month low, closing at 159.50 Japanese yen, compared with 160.50 yen on Friday. Markets in the Far East, unlike European markets, were open Friday.

Later in London, the dollar was quoted at 159.45 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Wednesday:

1.6287 Swiss francs, down from 1.6415.

6.4525 French francs, down from 6.4700.

—2.2202 Dutch guilders, up from 2.2190.

—1,365.50 Italian lire, up from 1,363.00.

—1.3795 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3775.

Controls on equipment trade with Soviets may end

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is expected to remove most controls before the end of January on exports of oil and gas equipment and technology to the Soviet Union, administration trade officials said this weekend.

The move would be a response both to the depressed conditions of the American industry and the reluctance of United States allies to impose similar export restraints.

The industry and its supporters contend that European and Japanese suppliers have picked up business that might have otherwise gone to American exporters.

The American share of total Western exports of such equipment has fallen from 25 percent before the ban eight years ago to less than 2 percent today, according to figures from the Petroleum Equipment Suppliers Association.

"The U.S. petroleum equipment and services industry has lost literally hundreds of millions (and quite possibly billions) of dollars and thousands of jobs as a result of the oil and gas control," said a statement from the industry trade association to the Commerce Department.

Based chiefly in the Southwest, the industry is in a region already hard hit by the decline in oilfield activity accompanying the collapse of world oil prices.

The American move may also signal recognition by Washington of recent steps by the Moscow leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev to defuse the human rights issue, including the release of Andrei D. Sakharov, the physicist who returned to Moscow last week after seven years of exile in the city of Gorky.

The oil and gas controls were initially imposed by the Carter administration in August 1978 in response to the trials of two Jewish dissidents, Anatoly B. Shcharansky and Aleksandr Ginzburg. Both have now been released from prison and are out of the Soviet Union.

Shcharansky, who is writing a book in Israel, is expected to address a Capitol Hill forum on human rights in the Soviet Union around Jan. 20.

A Reagan administration official said the controls issue was now before an interagency trade committee and that, if a decision was taken, it would be announced by the Commerce Department in about three weeks.

The chief opponent is the Pentagon, arguing that oil and gas exports are the principal source of Moscow's hard-currency revenues, which are used to bolster military capability.

The Pentagon also says that some of the technology could have direct military applications, such as drill-bit machinery that could be used to make anti-tank projectiles.

There are two broad categories of export controls: those imposed for reasons of foreign policy and those for national security.

The foreign policy controls cover oil and gas production equipment, machinery, and technology to manufacture such equipment and drilling fluids and other materials for enhanced oil and gas recovery. National security controls cover equipment of undisputed military potential.

The proposal now being weighed is to end only the foreign policy controls, which cover more than 90 percent of potential exports.

The State, Commerce, and other departments contend that, because of foreign availability, these controls have outlived their usefulness, administration trade officials said. The Pentagon wants both the foreign policy and national security controls maintained.

One outside expert, Jan Vanous, research director of PlanEcon Inc., which studies the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, said the controls "have died as a strategic issue." He noted that, with Soviet oil production this year up 3 percent, at 12.3 million barrels a day, close to the historical high, "the Soviets have shown they can do it alone."

Daniel Bond, Soviet specialist at Wharton Econometrics, added that "in terms of U.S.-Soviet relations this would certainly be a constructive step." He noted that the Russians might call for American equipment to help them lower their unusually high production costs.

Despite the decline in world oil prices, the Soviet Union maintains ambitious plans for oil and gas development, analysts here note. The five-year plan calls for an additional 10 percent increase in the 1986-90 capital investment budget for oil and gas, on top of a 31 percent rise for 1986. Drilling in western Siberia is expected to increase by 25 percent this year.

Against the increased activity projected for the Soviet Union, drilling expenditures in the United States have fallen by 70 percent this year.

Roger W. Robinson, former senior director for international economic affairs at the National Security Council, noted in remarks before a U.S.-Soviet trade forum last September that the Russians will probably seek American support for an offshore oil development project in the Barents Sea and possibly for other Soviet energy projects as well.

He also said he expected Moscow to ask for a one-year "trial" waiver of the Jackson-Vanik and Stevenson amendments to the Trade Act of 1974, which link American-Soviet trade to freer Soviet emigration.

Democratic gains in the November elections could also affect the oil and gas policy, analysts said. The new chairman of the Senate Finance Committee is Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who is anxious to help equipment companies such as Dresser Industries, the Halliburton Co. and scores of others, most of which are in his state.

Bentsen, whose committee writes trade as well as tax legislation, will be important to the administration in shaping a trade bill. The administration now says it wants trade legislation to strengthen competitiveness and give it authority to negotiate trade liberalization under the Uruguay Round.

Shareholders approve People Express buyout

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — Stockholders of People Express Inc. voted narrowly Monday to sell the cash-starved, near-bankrupt pioneer in no-frills flying to Texas Air Corp. for about $110 million.

The approval by 53 percent of common shareholders completes the deal and makes Texas Air the nation's largest airline holding company. More than 75 percent of preferred shareholders voted for the buyout.

People Express management had warned the company was destined for bankruptcy if the deal did not go through.

Chairman Donald Burr, who left Texas Air to organize People Express in 1981, declined to comment on the collapse of the revolutionary airline he founded to take advantage of federal deregulation of the skies.

A company officer, general manager Charles Giordano, insisted, however, that People Express had not been a failure.

"We did succeed in a lot of the objectives we set out to reach," he said. "We did change the industry and teach people there was a new way to work. We still support Donald Burr 100 percent."

People Express Airlines, the company's Newark-based flagship subsidiary, will merge into Texas Air's Continental Airlines subsidiary effective Tuesday and will lose its independent identity by Feb. 1, People Express officials said.

People Express Inc., staggering under competition from full-service airlines that matched its no-frills fares on crucial routes and unable to handle the cash demands of the three airlines it bought in 1985, agreed to the buyout by Texas Air in September.

The stock swap buyout deal was originally valued at about $122 million, but the price was cut and other terms revised in Texas Air's favor several times because of People Express's continuing deterioriation.

People Express lost $245.4 million in the first nine months of 1986 — $112.9 million in the third quarter alone. The People Express Airlines subsidiary filled only 57.3 percent of its seats in the first 11 months of the year, falling to a load factor of just 45.6 percent in November.

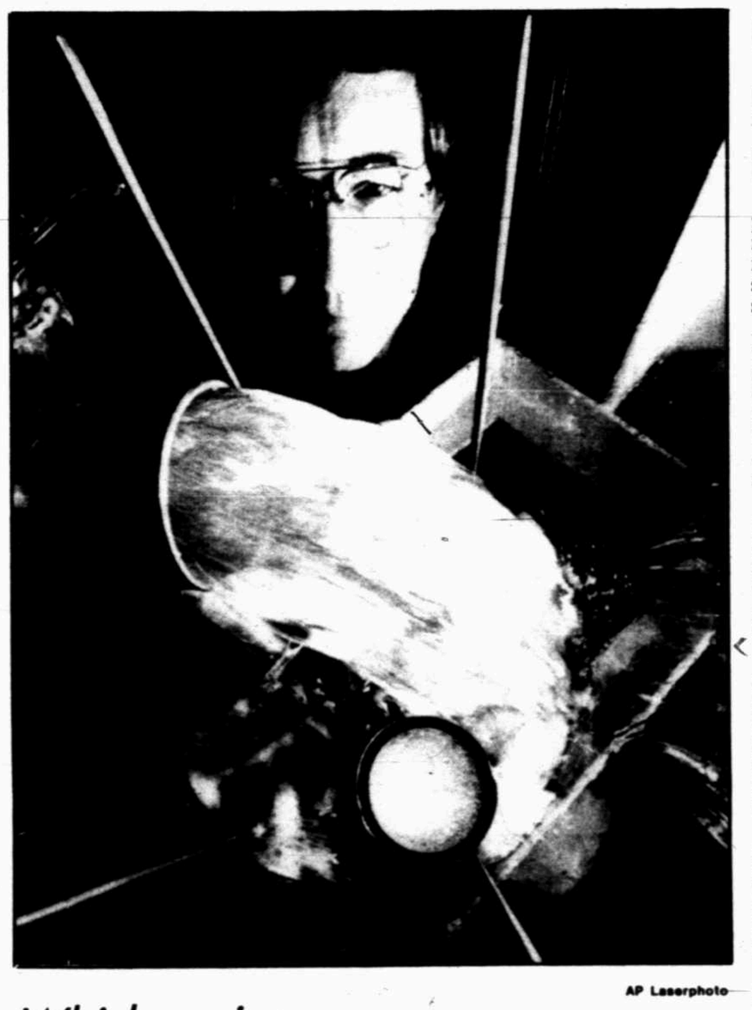

Burr had tried in July to save the floundering company by selling its Denver-based Frontier Airlines subsidiary to United Airlines for $176 million.

The deal fell through because United and its pilots' union could not reach agreement on a contract for Frontier pilots. Frontier was forced into bankruptcy and later sold separately to Texas Air, which also owns Continental, Eastern and New York Air.

As part of the deal, Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo forced People Express to get its domestic bondholders to accept cuts in interest of as much as 6 percentage points, slashing more than a $12 million a year in interest payments for the company. Holders of Swiss franc bonds also made major concessions.

Burr went into business in 1981 with bargain-basement fares and three used jets flying out of a rat-infested terminal at Newark International Airport.

He quickly won acclaim for creating a new market for air travel among those who could not afford full-service fares.

Higher oil prices needed, Kansas producers say

TOPEKA, Kan. (UPI) — Global oil prices must rise to about $22 per barrel before the state's beleaguered oil industry will feel much relief, a spokesman for Kansas producers said.

Donald Schnacke, executive director of the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, said that if OPEC agrees to curtail production further, to fix prices above the $18 a barrel level, some of the 10,000 unemployed oil industry workers in the state could begin returning to work.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed earlier this month to cut their production by about 15.8 million barrels a day. The OPEC ministers also agreed to set prices at levels averaging $18 per barrel.

Schnacke said a boost to $18 a barrel will not cause a measurable difference in employment in Kansas oil fields. However, if the price jumps to $22 there would be a significant increase in production activity and the industry environment in Kansas would improve.

The modest increase in oil prices to $18 should help producers repay some of their loans and keep some banks in oil-producing areas in business. Higher prices also could help prevent further oil industry layoffs, he said.

Richard Ryan, director of the Legislative Research Department, says that low oil prices have contributed to the drastic shortfall in collection of state revenues. The state collected $92 million in revenue from the mineral severance tax on oil and gas last fiscal year.

The concensus estimating group has forecast total collections of only $61.6 million in severance taxes this fiscal year, he said.

November machine tool orders drop 26.3 percent

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — New orders for American-made machine tools dropped 26.3 percent in November, compared with the encouraging levels of October, according to a report to be released on Monday by the National Machine Tool Builders' Association.

Analysts and machine tool manufacturing officials attributed the decline to the same factors that have plagued the industry for the entire year: the sluggish economy and confusion surrounding the impact of recent changes in tax laws.

The decline came just a month after a sharp 30.1 percent increase in October from the previous month's levels. Industry analysts had attributed that surge to a large volume of new orders that followed the International Machine Tool Show in Chicago, in early September.

The trade association said that new orders of machine tools dropped to $132.7 million in November, from $180.1 million in October. Analysts interpreted the figures as signs that the industry's long malaise was continuing, as orders remain slack from a number of industries, especially auto makers.

Machine tool shipments for November dropped 31.8 percent from October levels, to $166.8 million.

On a year-to-year basis, new orders for machine tools in November were down 32 percent, compared with the $195.1 million of November 1985.

"We close out 1986 with a very mixed picture," said James A. Gray, president of the trade association. "Capital spending plans for major industries remain unclear."

Gray expressed "particular optimism" about the effects of agreements by Japan and Taiwan to curb their machine tool exports to the United States. The voluntary restraints would last for five years and would roll back Japan's exports to 1981 levels, and the Taiwan agreement requires similar market-share reductions.

President Reagan said two weeks ago that the United States had put similar limits on machine tool exports from West Germany and Switzerland, steps the administration said were aimed at buying time for the industry in the United States to regain its competitiveness.

"We are relieved that the administration has recognized the threat to the national security caused by the transfer of more and more machine tool manufacturing capacity to other countries and the concurrent loss of manufacturing capacity here at home," Gray said. "With the erosion stayed, U.S. manufacturers will have the opportunity to rebuild."

But industry analysts and machine tool makers have said that American manufacturers probably would not feel the impact of the new agreement for at least a year, because there are large inventories of unsold Japanese equipment in the United States.

Machine tools are power-driven devices used to shape metal parts, from tractor gears to vacuum-cleaner motors. Their sales are an important indicator of capital spending by producers of metal products, particularly the auto and aerospace industries. Imports account for about 43 percent of the $4.3 billion machine tool industry.

While there have been signs of improving business conditions in many heavy industries, analysts and machine tool makers have predicted that order levels will remain sluggish for several months.

The association said that orders for metal-cutting machines, which include lathes and boring mills, fell 35.8 percent in November, to $83.9 million. Metal-cutting machines account for about 75 percent of the industry.

Orders for metal-forming tools, such as large presses to make sheet metal, fell 1.1 percent in November, to $48.75 million. Backlogs of machine tool orders dropped to $1.33 billion, from $1.37 billion in October.

High winds sweep excursion train off tracks

TOKYO (AP) — Railroad officials said today that a warning of high winds was issued just as six cars of an excursion train plunged from a narrow bridge, apparently swept off by the wind. The crash killed six people and injured six others.

The cars, with four crewmen inside, fell 135 feet Sunday onto a crabmeat processing plant and a house near Hamasaka on the Japan Sea coast 300 miles west of Tokyo. The train had just let off its 180 passengers so they could buy local seafood.

Toshiji Shiihara of Japanese National Railways headquarters in Tokyo said signal controllers reported the train already had passed a green signal before the bridge when the controllers monitored a red light and buzzer warning for high winds. He said they saw the light at 1:25 p.m. — about the same time as the crash.

He said railway officials were checking train movement records to confirm that account.

An official of the railways' Fukuchiyama Railway Management Bureau in Kyoto, which oversees operations on the line involved, said the bureau orders a halt to rail traffic across the 1,020-foot-long bridge when winds exceed about 55 mph. The bridge stretches between two hills.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the warning light and alarm for 55 mph winds at the bridge went off at 1:10 p.m. and 1:25 p.m. in Kyoto.

Shiihara said no train was on the track at 1:10 p.m.

The Central Meterological Agency in Toyooka, about 20 miles southeast of the accident site, said it recorded winds in up to 48 mph in Toyooka at 1:40 p.m. but that it did not have readings for winds at the site.

Meanwhile, 130 police from the Hyogo prefectural police department and the local Kasumi police station began an investigation at the site today, said Kiyoshi Takumi of the Kasumi police.

He said they were checking such possibilities as damage to the tracks from high winds before the train reached the bridge. Police also were questioning railway officials.

Takumi said the excursion train's motorman, 39-year-old Yuji Kuniya, told police he proceeded on to the bridge after seeing a green signal light. When his diesel engine car suddenly stopped on the bridge, he looked back and saw no train cars behind him, Takumi said.

However, officials said part of one car remained on the bridge along with Kuniya's car. Kuniya was the only crew member who did not plunge off the bridge.

Philippine government files suit against Marcoses

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The goverment today filed a $750 million lawsuit against ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos and others in its first such action to regain money he allegedly embezzled during his 20 years in power.

The Presidential Commission on Good Government said the suit was filed in a Manila court and seeks to have the Philippine government declared the owner of four buildings in New York City and an estate on Long Island.

A commission statement identified the properties as the Crown Building on 5th Avenue, the Herald Center on the Avenue of the Americas, a 71-story building at 40 Wall Street, an office building at 200 Madison Avenue and the Lindenmere Estate on Long Island.

Papers filed with the Sandiganbayan, or anti-graft court, claim the properties are worth $300 million to $350 million and are owned by Marcos and his wife, Imelda.

"This is the first in a series of suits by the Aquino government against the Marcoses, their cronies and business associates, involving the ill-gotten wealth they acquired here and abroad during Marcos' 20 years in power," commission chairman Jovito Salonga told reporters.

In addition to Marcos and his wife, the government named 10 other people and nine corporations as co-defendants. They include brothers Joseph and Ralph Bernstein, owners of the New York Land Co.; and Bienvenido Tantoco, former Philippine ambassador to the Vatican who lives in Italy.

They were alleged to have acted as Marcos' agents in acquiring the properties.

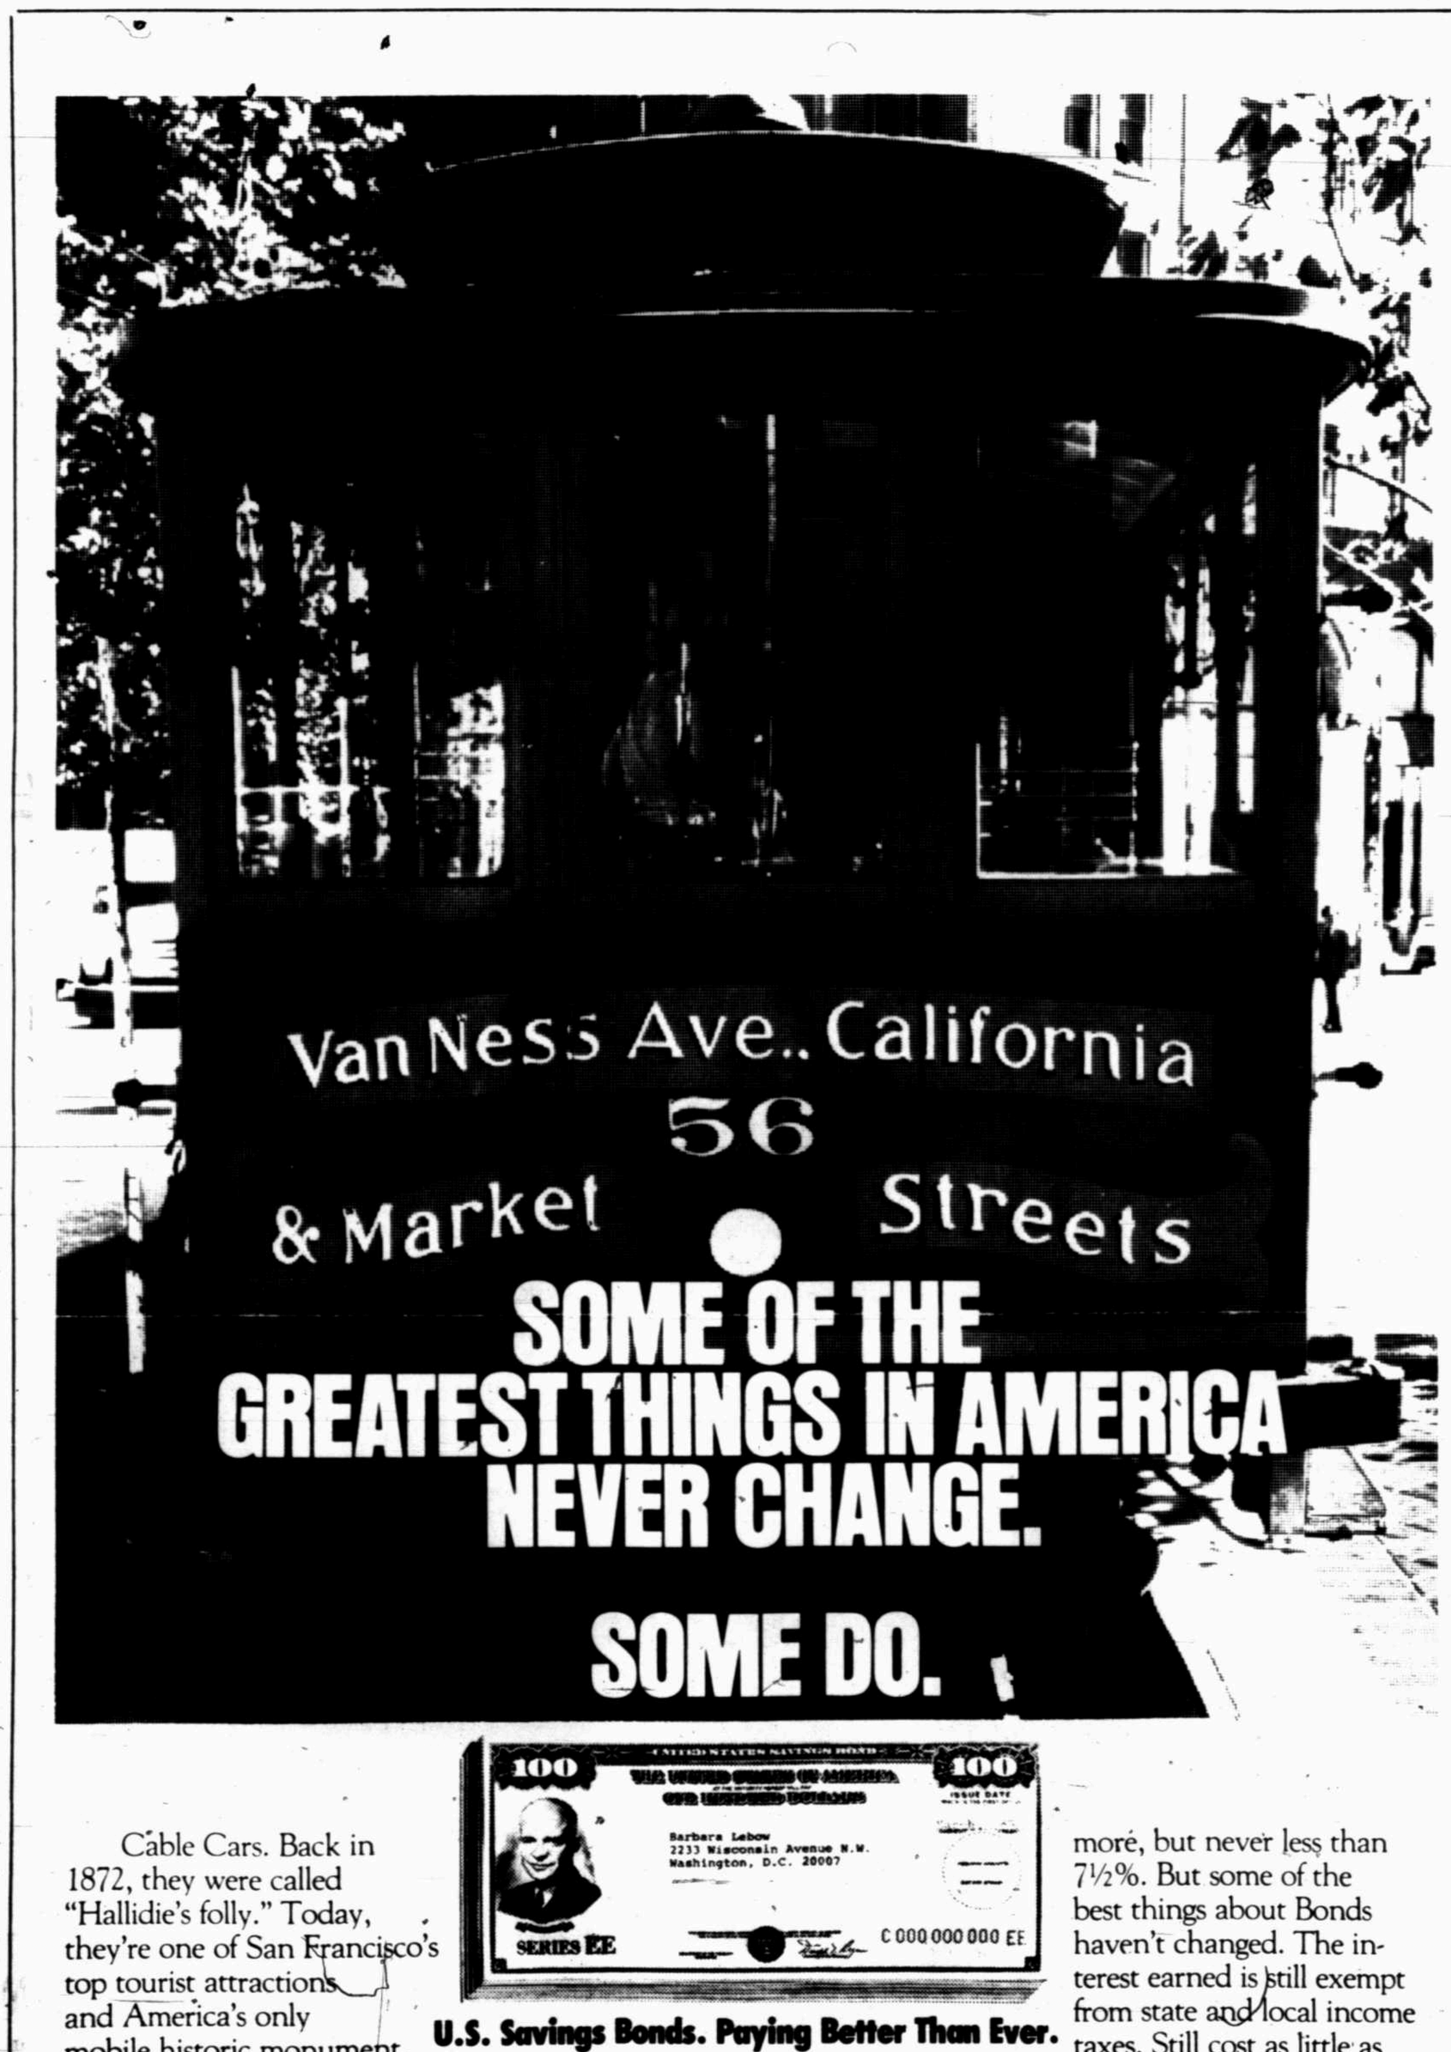

Italian police arrested Tantoco in August after they found an arsenal of automatic weapons in his Rome villa. He was convicted of illegal possession of weapons Sept. 26 and sentenced to three years in prison but remains free pending appeal.

The suit accuses Marcos of "misappropriation of public funds, extortion, blackmail, bribery, embezzlement, corruption, betrayal of public trust, unjust enrichment, brazen abuse of power and plunder of the nation's wealth" in obtaining the properties.

"Other enormous assets and properties in the Philippines, United States, Europe and other places in the world will be the subject of susequent suits," the government statement said.

Government officials have estimated that Marcos or his associates may have diverted as much as $10 billion worth of assets during his 20-year rule.

In March, the New York State Supreme Court barred the sale or transfer of disputed properties in the state pending settlement of claims by the government of President Corazon Aquino, who took power after Marcos fled to Hawaii.

Cable Cars. Back in 1872, they were called "Hallidie's folly." Today, they're one of San Francisco's top tourist attractions and America's only mobile historic monument.

Some things never change. But one great American tradition has changed—U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying higher variable interest rates like money market accounts. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

Just hold Savings Bonds for five years and you get the new variable interest rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That means you can earn a lot more, but never less than 7½%. But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. The interest earned is still exempt from state and local income taxes. Still cost as little as $25. And can be purchased at almost any financial institution. Or easier yet, through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

Buy U.S. Savings Bonds. Like the cable car, they're another part of our proud heritage.

For the current interest rate and more information, call toll-free 1-800-US-Bonds.

U.S. SAVINGS BONDS
Paying Better Than Ever

Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower interest.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

"Sweetheart, have you noticed the car seems to wander a bit?"

Tire care important to safe and economical operation

Tire and related automotive care is extremely important to motorists concerned about the safe and economical operation of their cars.

For more than 65 years, the National Tire Dealers and Retreaders Association (NTDRA) has shared that concern for the wellbeing of the nation's motoring public and now offers these important car care tips.

TIRE INFLATION--Proper inflation extends tire life and saves fuel. You can't tell when tires are underinflated just by looking at them. Since air pumps are not always accurate, NTDRA recommends that you either stop by a tire dealer for an inflation check or carry an air gauge in the glove compartment. Tires should be checked at least once a month and before any long trip. Underinflation creates excessive heat, which seriously reduces tire life and can cause tire failure. Also, underinflation can increase rolling resistance and lower miles per gallon.

TIRES--At least once a month, inspect tires closely for signs of uneven wear. Uneven wear patterns may be caused by improper balance, or suspension neglect. If caught in time, the cause may be corrected. When the tread is worn down to 2/32nds of an inch, or wear bars, which look like thin strips of smooth rubber across the tread, appear on the tire, it's time to replace it. DON'T WAIT.

SUSPENSION--Suspension systems in need of repairs send out warning signals--excessive bounce at front or rear end when you push down on the bumper--rough, uncomfortable ride--leaking seals or deteriorating rubber bushings in shock absorbers. If any of these problems are noticed, motorists could avoid excessive and expensive damage to their cars and tires by having the suspension system checked.

BRAKES--Squeaky not always bad, but be careful. All brakes are susceptible to slight occasional squeal or grinding. This occurs after the vehicle has been sitting overnight or in unusual damp weather conditions. This noise will dissipate quickly, and has no effect on brake operation. However, if the noise continues, or brake linings haven't been changed for 20,000 miles, a professional check could be in order.

ALIGNMENT--Keep it going straight. If the car seems to pull to one side or appears to be traveling at an angle while all four wheels are straight, and the tire tread is wearing unevenly, the car is probably out of alignment. This could happen to a new or older car. To avoid permanent damage and the risk of driving a vehicle in this condition, NTDRA suggests a professional opinion.
