Cotton Still Reigns As Texas King

State Still Holding Front Rank in Production Of Staple Product

BY HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD
Record News Staff.

TEXAS is the greatest of all cotton growing states. Texas produces annually one-third of the American crop. Texas has many cotton mills. More people are employed in the production in the production of cotton goods than in any other primary manufacturing industry in the United States.

This is the claim made by the Association of Cotton Textile Merchants of New York. On the havis of the latest manufacturing census 40 per cent of those persons engaged in all textile manufacturinng are employed in making cotton goods in mills now located in 31 states.

Since 1900 the number or spindles in the cotton industry has nearly doubleed and the value of the product has increased almost six times. According to the association while actual production was doubled what it was 35 years ago the number of employes has increased from 302-800 to about 497,000 or 64 per cent.

SINCE 1900 the number of individual cloth mills has increased from 1,005 to about 1,600 or about 60 per cent and the amount of capital invested in the cotton manufacturing industry is estimated at more than 2,000,000,000 as compared with 339,200-000 at the beginning of the present century, which is an increase of about 500 per cent.

Furthermore the association says neither the capital invested in the mills, nor the total annual value of the cotton goods manufactured provide an adequate index to the important positions which the entire cotton industry occupies in this country.

In addition to the cotton manufactured into goods more than half of the American crop is exported for manufacture in foreign mills. This is not all. The 37,700,000 cotton spindles in the United States comprise 23.4 per cent of all the cotton spindles in the world.

FOREIGN spindles are dependent in large measures upon the United States for their supply of raw cotton, since the United States produced approximately two-thirds of all the cotton grown in the world.

Numerous by-products of the cotton industry are of real economic importanace. It is said that the world consumes 26,000,000,000 of the crop of 1925. It is said that there is a carry-over of several million bales. It is said that the American crop of 1926 will go beyond 15,000,000,000 bales.

Cotton has not been dethroned. Cotton continues to be the king of southern products, and in a manufacturing sense the cotton growing states of the south are coming into their own.

Hungary Holds Liquid Assets

BUDAPEST, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Among Hungary's most valuable "liquid" assets, former Commissioner-General Jeremiah Smith found, were 10,000,000 bottles of the finest vintage wines, which the government was willing to sell at one-fourth their former prices. Among these were a million bottles of the famous Tokay wines, produced only in Hungary, which could have been bought for a dollar a bottle.

Before the war Hungary was a great wine-producing and consuming country. Its citizens drank freely of the delicate, amber-colored wine from the slopes of the famed Tokay mountains. But the great war brought an end to all this convivality, and the average Hungarian is now content to drink beer or even plain water.

BRITONS PRAISE MERMAIDS

Isle Warms Up Enthusiastically To Corson and Ederle of Channel Fame

DOVER, Eng., Aug. 29.—(AP)—"This star spangled channel of ours," is the way London illustrated Sunday Herald heads its articles chronicling Mrs. Corson's channel swim.

All the newspapers in the country feature the American womens' achievement and also give prominence to Miss Ederle's congratulatory telegram, as an example of the splendid sporting spirit of the first woman conqueror of the channel.

Mrs. Corson was up early after a sound sleep. Later she took a dip and when she returned to shore she repeated the remark of yesterday after recovering from her 15 hours strain:

"I would not attempt the channel swim again for a million pounds."

RE-CHECK OF LOSS STANDS AT $50,000

No Cause Assigned For Origin of Saturday Night Blaze

Special to The Record News.

IOWA PARK, Aug. 29. — Iowa Park had set itself today to the idea that its main business block, more than a third destroyed by Sunday morning's disastrous fire, must be rebuilt. No definite plans had been formed as to what shape rebuilding would assume, and the sole comment from one of the property owners who lost heavily was, "It will take a lot of money to put 'em back." That from E. P. Body, property owner.

Damage was estimated at approximately $50,000, although no complete check on the loss could be obtained.

The origin of the fire was still undetermined. It was discovered shortly before midnight, the flames then rising high above the top of the Beasley store, where it began. The theory was advanced Sunday that probably the flames originated from a lighted cigarette thrown among some papers in the rear of the store. There was nothing to support this, however.

The fire, one of the most disastrous ever to strike the city, threatened for a time to wipe out the entire block, and not until additional fire fighting equipment, hastily summoned from Wichita Falls, arrived on the scene were firemen able to make definite headway against the blaze.

Operations of the firemen were considerably hampered by torrential rains that fell while the fire was at its height.

STALEY PURCHASES 46,000 ACRE RANCH NEAR LAS VEGAS

Wichitan Pays $200,000 For Choice Tract In New Mexico

J. I. Staley, Wichita Falls business man, closed a deal last Thursday whereby he becomes the owner of the famous Antonic Ortez ranch which lies about 25 miles southeast of Las Vegas, N. Mex.

The sale price of the property was $200-000 and involves the transfer of title of about 46,000 acres, which is the entire tract composing the undivided portion of the historic Antonio Ortis land grant from Mexico dating back to 1819. The property was sold by the Fidelity Security company of Las Vegas.

Mr. Staley stated Sunday he had been considering a proposition of purchasing the ranch for some time, and that Julian Ward, of the engineering firm of Montgomery and Ward, had just completed a survey of the property. When this survey proved the proposition satisfactory, he purchased the land.

The huge ranch is a very choice tract, being well watered, and having natural features which make it valuable as sheep or cattle ranch, as well as a promising territory for oil and mineral development.

In commenting on the mineral possibilities of the property, Mr. Staley stated that it looked most favorable to him that he expected to drill a test for oil on the place next spring. There are also some possibilities of valuable minerals which will also be thoroughly investigated. In the meantime the ranch will be added to the already extensive ranching interests of the Leatherwood Sheep and Cattle company which Mr. Staley operates and which is located in the vicinity of Las Vegas.

The land has a colorful history, having been originally granted by Mexico in 1819, the title was confirmed by U. S. government patent in 1877, passing through various hands up to the present time. Among the owners have been Stephen S. Elkins, Wilson Waddington and Day and Catron.

Today-Yesterday

Jim Grows Sardonic.

TEMPLE, Aug. 29.—"Two Years ago on a similar day to this," James E. Ferguosn told newspapermen today in commenting on his decisive defeat at the polls Saturday, "we received a thousand telegrams of communication. Today Moody will receive the thousand and maybe we'll get half a dozen. But there'll be more sincerity in those half dozen than in the thousand that will come to Moody. For those half dozen will be friends to the last while Moody's will be the friends of the day of success.

"In six months time Dan Moody'll find out the governor's job is no cinch, when he has to find places for all that mob that's been following him."

STORM KNOWN DEAD NOW 19

More Than Dozen Others Missing, Seven From Tug Boat

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Rescuers loaded with food, water, clothing and medical supplies today threaded their way through the lonely, wreckage strewn marshes in lower Terre Bonne and La Fourche parishes to the relief of victims of the tropical hurricane which swooped out of the gulf of Mexico last Wednesday night.

The list of known dead stood at 19 with more than a dozen others missing. At least nine of these were feared dead. Seven persons who were aboard the tug boat Potter which sank in the Mississippi river near Convent, were believed to have perished.

Two others, members of a party residing at a fishing camp on Felicity island were thought drowned by the waves which swept over the island from the Gulf of Mexico. Ten other members of the fishing camp crew perished when the camp was inundated and the buildings blown away.

Two More Found Dead.

Two persons were added to the list of dead as reports continued to come out of the sections isolated by the storm. The wind which whipped across the bayou indented mashlands overturned a boat in Bourdeaux, carrying three men with a portable motion picture outfit, who has been conducting shows in the fishing villages along the bayou. Two of the three were drowned.

In at least one case an entire family was drowned by the deluge of rain and waves which swept over Felicity island as the storm roared in the Gulf. A family of Noquins, man, wife and daughter, members of the fishing crew at the Dupont camp, were drowned when the camp was destroyed.

Another family bearing the same name and living in the neighborhood, took refuge in a skiff which they tied to an oak and clung desperately to the storm stossed craft as they watched the lights of the fishing camp flicker and die out, as they were extinguished by the wind and water.

Salt water from the gulf was driven into the fresh water supplies of the fishermen in outlying districts and many families in the outlying sections were believed suffering. At Houma, near where the great death toll was taken by the storm, relief expeditions were formed to carry supplies to nearby settlements of Durac, Grand Caillor and Bayou Terre Bonne.

Ten bodies were brought into Houma last night, including that of Claude Dupont, leader of the fishing crew on Felicity island. The nine others were Mrs. Mose Matthews, her two sons, 4 and 12 years old, Edith Matthews, 16, Serita Mathews, 10, Leo Naquin, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Naquin and a baby.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Jascha Heifitz, famous violinist, who was operated on Thursday for appendicitis and hernia was reported by his physician today as being serious but not critical condition.

Yousa rescued his brother, Freddie and an unidentified man, swam, carried and led them to safety after a struggle which lasted more than two days, carrying them over approximately 15 miles of marshlands that had been devastated by the hurricane.

Posse Captures Escaped Gunman

IONIA, Mich., Aug. 29.—(AP)—Russell Andrews, Detroit gunman, one of the escaped prisoners from the Michigan state reformatory here was captured this afternoon by a sheriff's posse near Marshall, Mich., when the officers halted an automobile containing five of the men. The other four fled in a nearby swamp.

The posse immediately surrounded the place and were re-inforced by a squad of guards from the reformatory. Officials planned to maintain a heavy guard about the outskirts of the swamp, while possemen and guards combed the interior.

Andrews was the seventh man recaptured. The others taken yesterday were William Vaughn, Napoleon and Charles Smith, Sam Glyck and William Dursee, all of Detroit and Richard Anderson of Grand Rapids.

WHAT'S JIM'S NEXT MOVE IN STATE ARENA?

Formation of Another Party Not Without the Range of Possibility

BY S. RAYMOND BROOKS
Record News Staff.

AUSTIN, Tex., Aug. 29.—Will Jim Ferguson organize another political party again this year and carry his fight to the general election.

This question rose out of the second primary race like another beacon along the turbulent channel of Ferguson's political career.

The Ferguson faithful followers, dwindling in numbers are as shown by the second primary race returns, together with dissatisfied republican's alienated by their party dissentions in Texas, and an element of independents—together form a body of potential voters whose leadership may appeal to Ferguson as an opportunity to keep himself a factor in politics, though discarded by the democrats.

Four Courses Open.

Four possible courses are open to Ferguson:

Quit the fight.

Support a republican for governor.

Organize his American party again, or a party by some name, and enter the general election race as an independant.

Wait for the customary idependent candidate to bob up, then throw the Ferguson support to him.

Ferguson has kept in every previous fight, since he first ran for office in 1914, through to the end. He has led an independent fight. He has supported an independent candidate. This year he may "adopt" one of the republican candidates.

That Ferguson intends to start a battle of courthouses against the democratic nominee who defeated his wife for a second term, is generally believed. The belief is based upon the peculiar manner of Mrs. Ferguson's re-entering the run-off after having withdrawn, and of the letharg-

Business Holds Up In August

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The month of August draws to a close with no appreciable slacking in the unusually high rate of midsummer industrial activity. Although bad weather over a wide area has slowed up buying in many lines during the past week, the outlook continues bright with such reliable barometers as freight car loadings, bank clearings and pig iron production, indicating a general prosperous year.

Striking testimony to the current prosperity of the country's railroads was furnished last week by the July earnings statements, the first batch which showed an average gain of nearly 30 per cent above the same month last year.

New offerings during the week reached the unusually high total for this season of the year of $80,000,000, as compared with $46,000,000 the previous week and $9,000,000 in the corresponding week last year.

Jim Philosophic; Dan Mildly Glad In Post Mortems

"People Only Care for You as Long as You Can Give Them Something," Is Ferguson's Reflection.

AUSTIN, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The political career of Jim Ferguson in Texas is ended, Dan Moody, attorney general, who defeated Governor Miriam A. Ferguson for the democratic nomination for governor, said today.

When asked how his wife considered her defeat by the attorney general, Ferguson replied proudly:

"My wife is a good sport."

No statement was available from the governor today. She remained at the governor's mansion, while her husband, a former governor and her chief advisor, went to the office of his paper, the Ferguson Forum. It was in that office newspaper men found him early today.

"I don't wish to take from Moody any of the sweets of victory, but 12 years experience in politics has taught me that when one is young one is inclined to exaggerate the effects of an accomplishment. However, I am not seeking to minimize Moody's triumph," he said.

Has Informal Talk.

No intimation of any sort that the contest would be continued was given by Ferguson in his informal talk with newspaper men.

"Within the next six months, Moody, besieged by the hungry boys with tongues hanging out for favors, will realize that being governor of this state has not one continual round of pleasure," Ferguson said.

Guy Holcomb, the governor's state campaign manager was the only companion with Ferguson when the newspaper reporters arrived.

"We are just trying to decide which calf the train ran over," was the greeting extended by Ferguson. He sat in a low rocking chair, his

Allred remained at his home on McGregor street most of Sunday. "Catching up on a bit of rest," he explained, adding that the last month's campaign has left him in very poor shape physically.

LATE RETURNS FAIL TO GIVE JIMMY A LEAD

Governor's Race Settled With Vote Counted From 245 Counties

DALLAS, Texas, Aug. 29—Returns to the Texas Election bureau at 8:00 p. m. from 245 out of 252 counties in the state, including 100 complete, show the following totals for candidates in Saturday's democratic primary election:

Governor — Ferguson 247,100; Moody 469,182.

Attorney General—Allred 329,757; Pollard 339,551.

Treasurer—Ball 254,078; Hatcher, 385,611.

James V. Allred, Wichita Falls attorney and candidate for attorney general, was 9,794 votes behind Claude Pollard of Houston when returns from Saturday's state-wide primary were tabulated at 8 o'clock by the Texas Election bureau. It was announced at that hour no further tabulations would be made Sunday night.

Allred had 329,757 votes at that time against 339,551 for Pollard. These were based on returns from 245 out of 252 counties, 100 of which were complete.

The Wichita Falls man lost ground and then regained it at intervals throughout Sunday. In the main, however, his margin behind Pollard hovered consistently around the 10,000 mark. Returns from the rural districts of the state continued to give Allred good majorities, while these of the larger cities swung steadily to Pollard.

In the governor's race, Dan Moody maintained his steady pace ahead of Governor Ferguson and on the final tabulation held a margin of 222,082 votes. The figures were Ferguson 247,100; Moody 469,182.

Still Contest Dallas County Sheriff Race

DALLAS, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Indications were Sunday there would be no agreement to call off the contest of the Dallas county sheriff's race, as had been intimated on Saturday.

That the case would resume its status quo on Monday when district court opens again was indicated when attorneys for Sheriff Schuyler Marshall, Jr., said "no thought had been given to the proposal" for an agreement and the proposed submission of the contest to a run-off in November.

The sheriff's friends pointed out that Marshall already had apparently won the contest.

Twenty-two of the injured were taken to the Gary hospital. The others were able to continue to their homes.

Austin Hughes of Gary, driver of the coach, declared he was unable to see the electric train, but his statement was disputed by several of the passengers who said the train was plainly visible several moments before the crash. An investigation was begun by officials of both lines.

British Channel Champion on Verge of Breakdown, Ordered to Rest.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Threatened with a nervous breakdown, Miss Gertrude Ederle, first of her sex to swim the English channel today was confined to her home on orders of her physician.

Loss of sleep and excitement that attended her arrival home Friday, when the city gave her a record home-coming ovation, were responsible for her physicians' directing that no one be allowed to see her or disturb her today.

Dudley Field Malone, her legal adviser, said the young swimmer needed about 24 hours of sleep and after that, he was convinced she would "be herself again."

Morley's sister, MURIEL, sees it, and after that she snubs Merry unmercifully. Merry is glad when the party is over and she can go back to the shop.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER XXXIV.

A week went by without so much as a postcard from Bill Erskine.

Then on the second Saturday in September, he dropped into the beauty shop just as the factory whistles were shrieking out the noon hour.

Merry looked up from her appointment book to see a fat man with a wilted collar, opening the screen door. He dropped two brown suit-cases on the floor with a thud, and came toward her.

"Why, Bill Erskine!" she cried, startled. "I didn't know you for a minute!"

For that one instant she had not recognized him. She saw him, for that instant, as he really was—a fat, middle-aged traveling man in a loud checked suit and a pink shirt.

Then, as he took her in his arms and kissed her, he became once more Bill Erskine, the man she was going to marry—if she could.

The thought shot through her mind that perhaps that was what he had come for. To marry her. To keep his promise.

But his first words killed that hope.

"I'm on my way to Florida," he said, dropping into a chair and fanning himself with his Panama hat. "Nice hot place to go this time of year, eh?"

Merry smiled entrancingly and said nothing.

"My mother wired me to come, yesterday. She says my father's worse and cant live more than a week or so," Bill explained.

Merry's eyes grew soft with sympathy. She knew that Bill's father was slowly dying of a cancer, down in Jacksonville.

"How dreadful for you, Billy," she murmured softly. "I'm so awfully, awfully sorry." She stood beside him, patting his shoulder.

He turned suddenly and gave her a quick glance from his eyes that looked so sharp and cruel sometimes, set in his pink, good-natured face.

"You know what it means, don't you?" he asked. "It means that our plans for September will have to be put off for a while, Merry. It's a doggoned shame. But it can't be helped."

"You mean—getting married?" she asked, and Bill nodded.

She gave a shrug.

"Oh I thought we had decided not to get married for a while," she laughed. None of the bitterness that was in her heart crept into her voice.

"You didn't mention it when you were here last week," she went on, lightly, "so I just put it out of my mind."

She took her hand from his shoulder and went back to her appointment book.

"Whew! But it's hot!" Bill changed the subject, like a skater turning away from thin ice. "And here's Little Sister, looking as cool as a waterlily in her white dress! Gosh, but you are a sight for sore eyes, Merry!"

He got up and came toward her. He put his hands under her elbows and drew her to her feet. The glitter in his eyes deeped, and his mouth was hard and stubborn as he bent to kiss her again.

"What are you doing here?" he asked, "In this town."

But Merry pulled herself away, a little from between her sea-green eyes.

"Don't!" she said irritably, giving herself a little shake. "I don't want to be mauled!"

There was a long silence, while they looked at each other. Then Bill pulled out his thin platinum watch that was fastened to a chain of a platinum and gold links.

"Quarter after twelve," he remarked, looking at it. "My train doesn't go for four hours. I'll tell you what we'll do—We'll get a car and drive out into the country for something to eat. Out to the Blue Admiral Inn—How'll that do.

Merry shook her graceful little head and looked down at her hands.

"That won't do at all." she answered, quickly. "I haven't time Bill. I'm sorry, but I promised Jinny I'd go shopping with her this afternoon. She's getting some new dresses for school."

If he didn'tt have time to marry her, she had no time to go driving around the country with him, she told herself furiously! If he wasn't going to keep his promises, he'd get no more chances at love-making in hired automobiles and Blue Admiral Inns!

"Not with me, at any rate!" thought Merry. "I've come to my sober senses at last!"

Her thoughts were hard and clear. But her face was as soft and pink as a sweet-pea, as she looked at him.

"I'm sorry," she said, with a firm little nod.

She sat, still as a little Tanagra figurine, with her yellow head bent low over Lillie's appointment book while Bill telephoned for a taxicab.

"Good-bye, Bill," she said without looking when it drove up in front of the shop. He did not answer her.

When she looked up again he was gone, and Cassie's smart little car was at the curb.

Cassie knew that the beauty shop was not paying very well, and she played Lady Bountiful to it. Twice a week she came there to be massaged and shampooed and curled and manicured.

There never was a speck of dirt on Cassie's skin or a hang-nail on her fingers. She made the most of the looks that Providence had given her.

When Merry saw her today, getting out of the car, she would have sworn that Cassie was a beautiful woman—except for the fact tthat she had seen Cassie without her make-up too many times.

Without it, Cassie was sallow and her lips were colorless. Her hair was straight and sparse and straw-colored. But under Lillie's magic fingers and curling irons, it became a golden turban.

"Where's Madame Dale?" asked Cassie, coming in and giving Merry a dry peck on the cheek.

"Having her lunch," Merry replied, jerking her head toward the back of the shop where Lillie was making tea and toast. "Sit down. She'll be here in a minute."

Cassie never called Lillie anything but "Madame Dale." She might live at Moms' house and be "Lillie" to the whole family—but not to Cassie! Cassie believed in keeping people in their places.

"Did you see Bill Erskine driving away just now?' Merry asked her as she sat down and crossed one slended, silk-sheathed leg over the other.

Cassie widened her eyes. "I saw a taxi leaving the place. Was he in it?"

Merry nodded. "He was in town between trains, and wanted me to have lunch with him," she said. "But I told him to go swing on the gate. I'm awfully tired of him—I hope I never see him again."

Cassie raised the eye-brows that had been pencilled on where her own were shaved off. But she seemed to be only half-listening.

"I'm going out of town tomorrow for a couple of weeks," she announced after a minute. Her voice was as brittle as glass.

Merry saw then that her eyelids were pink and puffy as if she had been crying for hours.

"What's wrong?" she asked. "Had a row with Morley?" Morley was usually at the bottom of Cassie's troubles.

"No. No row," her sister answered. "He never does row—the brute! He just hurls some insult or other at me, and clears out of the house!—I suppose he goes to see that woman—"

She could go no further.

Merry saw her gulp back the tears in her throat.

"Cass! What woman?" she gasped, her voice so low that it could not possibly reach Lillie's ears.

"Why—Fifi Pell, of course," Cassie was suddenly terribly calm. Her voice was almost soothing in its deadly calm, as she told her sordid little story.

Merry remembered a pretty little dark woman, with a gay laugh and a lovely figure, when she had met at Cassie's house on New Year's day. She seemed to remember, too, that Morley had hung about the little dark woman a great deal and called her "Fifi."

"Morley's been crazy about her for years," Cassie said. "Her husband knows it, but he won't divorce her. He doesn't live here, you know—I've just found all this out!—Hush!"

She raised a warning finger.

Out in the little back room, Lillie was piling up her dishes with a clatter. A chair scraped against the floor.

"Here she comes!" whispered Cassie, jumping up. She took out a gold vanity case and powdered the inflamed skin under her eyes.

She faced Lillie with her hard, bright smile, and delivered herself into her hands.

Merry was glad to get out of the shop, and out into the soft September sunshine. She tried to forget Bill Erskine and Cassie and Lillie, and even herself, as she walked along.

She was glad that she was going to meet Jinny, and be with her for a couple of hours.

Jinny, with her slang, her frankness, her young honesty, her soaring spirits was like a tonic.

Life had not yet had a chance to touch her with its soil and its sorrow. Merry wondered if it ever would—. Jinny's cheerful decency was almost like a suit of steel armor.

After her one "wild party" with Derrick Jones, she had publicly vowed never to touch another drop of liquor. It made her mouth taste like pennies, she said—and that was reason enough for giving it up forever!

She did not use paint and powder because they made her feel "gooey," she said. Jinny was all for comfort.

Merry met her at the corner of Fir street and Eighth avenue. She was leaning against the mail-box that stands there, with her hands stuck into her pockets, and her lips pursed up as she whistled softly to herself.

"Hello, Little Sister!" she greeted Merry, imitating the tones of Bill Erskine. Then she added in her own voice. "Wipe some of that lipstick off your mouth, or I refuse to walk down the street with you! You look like a wax model out for an afternoon stroll."

"Nonsense!" Merry answered snappishly, "I look all right." She took Jinny firmly by the arm and marched her along the crowded sidewalk.

Jinny giggled. "I'm glad you think so," she trilled, "But anyway, there's a man trying to flirt with you—My stars! He's coming back! He's going to speak to you!"

As Merry half turned, she saw a familiar face in the crowd that was pressed around her. Cabby Marsh was coming toward her, his hand outstretched and a broad grin on his dark handsome face.

He seized her hand and worked it up and down, like a pump handle.

"Well, this is luck!" he said, heartily. "What are you doing here in this town?"

"In this town?" Merry repeated, looking amazed. "Why, where else would I be? This is my town. I live here, silly! She laughed.

"You do?" He seemed to be nonplussed. "That's funny. I'm sure Muriel told me you were from some little tank-town down state . . . I asked her, particularly."

Merry introduced him to Jinny. She knew why Muriel had told Cabby that. Muriel knew that he liked her, and she was jealous. She didn't want him to ever see her again.

—Well! She would just pay Muriel in some of her own coin for that little trick!

There was a throb in her voice as she spoke to him that made him suddenly remember the afternoon when he had kissed her as they danced together.

"Aren't you going to take me somewhere for a soda or a glass of iced tea?" it was saying, huskily, caressingly, "I'm just dying with the heat—just perfectly dying."

Her eyes traveled down the crowded street where the Towers hotel reared itself into the sunshine, three blocks away. Cabby's followede them.

"We could go to the Towers for lunch—all of us," he said looking from her to Jinny.

"Jinny can't go. She's got to meet Moms, to do some shopping," Merry fibbed.

Jinny was pinching her arm to attract her attention. But she gave her no notice—She certainly didn't want Jinny along, on this party!

"But I'd adore to go, Cabby," she lilted sweetly, "By-by, Jin. See you later!"

Before the disappointed Jinny had time to utter a word, she had waved her hand gaily, and vanished with Cabby into the crowd—And Jinny was left standing alone in the middle of the street, with the streams of people flowing past her on both sides, like water going two ways.

She had no money for lunch. So she went into a store where Moms had a charge account, and spent the afternoon picking out dresses all by her lonesome.

Cowboy Film On At The Palace

During the filming of his current western photoplay thriller, "Fighting Luck," which comes to the Palace theatre today, Bob Reeves demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that "fighting luck" is not to be scoffed at. In one of the fight sequences of this startlingly realistic Anchor picture, Bob Reeves was called upon to stage a mimic fist battle—one of the many in this production—with an inexperienced youth, also a cowboy. A chance blow to the chin of his adversary and Bob Reeves was facing a fighting demon. The boy forgot for a moment that he was before a camera and bored in. Not wishing to hurt the cowboy, a particular friend from Texas, Bob Reeves had to tread warily. He did, but the "breaks" seemed against him. Suddenly Mr. Reeves saw an opening. A light tap and the fight was over, both for professional and personal reasons. The "demon" was a demon no longer.

"That's what I call fighting luck," stated Bob Reeves, after the fight was over. "Had we continued and I had hurt him seriously, I probably would have lost a good friend, as well as utterly spoiled the scene, because, you know, cowboys are temperamental and are liable to quit in the middle of the picture for the slightest reason imaginable. As it was, my friend thought it was a good joke on him and continued work in an amiable frame of mind."

Electra Man Is Injured in Field

ELECTRA, Aug. 29.—Two accidents were reported from the oil fields Saturday night during the heavy rain storm, the first and most serious being the injury of Ed Hayes.

Mr. Hayes, who is 23 years of age, and a tool dresser for the McMann Drilling company of the Red river, lesse, four miles north of Electra, was aiding a crew of men working on a newly drilled in oil well. He went up on the Star machine to oil the engine, when his foot slipped, causing him to grab for the throttle cord, which caused the engine to "run wild." In some way he was thrown from the machine about 10 feet and an irregular gash was cut above his right eye.

The injured man was rushed to the office of Dr. J. F. Burton, and after remaining at the doctor's office for an hour lapsed into unconsciousness, and was still in a semi-conscious condition late Sunday afternoon. He was compelled to remain at the doctors office until 6 o'clock Sunday morning when he was taken to his home. The extent of his injuries are as yet undetermined.

He has a wife and two small children and has resided in Electra for the last few years.

Historic Society Attracting Wide Attention Now

CANYON, Aug. 29—That the Panhandle-Plains Historical society is attracting widespread attention is evidenced by the wide scope of northwest Texas from which it is receiving gifts and loans of many interesting relics and documents.

Among the recent contributions a geography of the world, printed in 1848 and bought in 1884 by Asher Gough, father of Marcus Gough of Roxton, and L. Gough of Amarillo; another geography presented by C. C. French which was printed in 1870 describes the plains of Texas as an "immense barren waste * * * destitute of water, wood and grass." Miss Grace Webster and Eugene S. Blasdell, both of Amarillo, have added a number of interesting old volumes to the Historical society library. A collection of these is being made so that a graphic record of the development of school text-books may be traced.

A. B. Webster of 1400 Tyler, Amarillo, who is an old-time cowboy, loaned a reloading machine for shotgun shells, two branding irons and other relics of the open range days. His son, Harry Webster, added a Spanish-American war gun.

A recent expedition to Oldham county by C. L. Coleman, Prof. L. S. Baker, Dr. C. A. Pierle and Coach S. D. Burton of Canyon, yielded quite a number of fossils and fragments of pre-historic shark skeletons.

The society is co-operating with old cowboy and old-settler associations of the country in attempting to perpetuate the history of the frontier. Steps are under way to secure a museum building to house the already large collection of the Historical society.

Mexico Locked In Unyielding Fight

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The Calles government and the Catholic episcopate are still deadlocked over the question of the church laws and meanwhile business languishes more and more. The Catholic party is endeavoring to make the economic boycott or buyers strike more severe for there is a distinct increase in the number and variety of the propoganda leaflets being distributed in support of the boycott.

The government continues to arrest all men and women caught distributing these leaflets but nevertheless the distribution continues quite widespread.

Bat Expert In San Antonio Has Unique Problem

SAN ANTONIO, Aug. 29.—(AP) Inquiries about bats and the construction of bat roosts come every few days from various parts of the world to Dr. Charles A. R. Campbell, San Antonio specialist, who for 23 years has made an exhaustive study of the bat, and who erected at Mitchell Lake, near here, the first municipal bat roost in the United States.

Dr. Campbell recently received a letter from J. W. Purdy, chief medical officer of health at Sidney, Australia, praising his work as "a most valuable contribution to economic entomology."

Last week an offcial of the largest steel company in India, located at Bombay, advised Dr. Campbell that he was interested in building a bat roost as a means of alleviating malaria among his workmen. If the roost is erected and results are favorable, the British government probably will be asked to extend the work of eradicating malaria.

Declares Laziness Is a Real Vice

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 29—(AP) "Laziness" was termed the principal vice of modern high school pupils and "frankness" their outstanding virtue in a symposium on secondary education taken among teachers from 14 states, attending summer sessions at the University of Pennsylvania.

Ninety-five per cent of the educators noted an increasing tendeency to shift too much of the burden of child training from the home to the school. Half of the teachers declared there was too much parental devotion to outside interests, such as social activities and politics.

The teachers likewise criticized their own shortcomings. Many deplore what they described as a disposition on the part of some members of their profession to view it merely as a "stepping stone."

Of the teachers experienced in both rural and city schools, 73 per cent said they found rural pupils more obedient and anxious to learn than those in the city, but only 45 per cent expressed a preference for rural teaching.

Spudders Club Santone Bears In Series Opener Behind Rookie's Heaving

Break Comes During Fifth When After Error Wichita Falls Slams Five Runs Across.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Aug. 29.—(AP)— Scoring five runs in the fifth inning following an error for a double play to retire the side the Spudders acquired a lead to win the opening game of the Wichita Falls series Sunday, 7 to 3, although outbatted 14 to 11.

Four pitchers took turns on the slab for the Bears, but none was hit sufficiently to give the Spudders an earned victory, for after the fatal fifth the Spudders were unable to score and got only one hit.

Three pinch hitters, Rabbitt, Klein and Sanguinette, the latter a rookie, delivered in the order called upon, although after they got on the regulars were unable to bring them around.

Shores, Wichita Falls rookie pitcher, went the route and although hit hard was tight in the pinches. Sharp fielding on the inner works saved the youngster several runs. DeFatte and Turgeon performed in sensational manner on the defense. Benton led the Spudder batting attack with a double and two singles, finding runners on the bases every time he hit safely.

Wichita Falls a seventh-place club, has earned the monicker, "Giant Killers" because of its uncanny ability to spill pennant contenders nearly every time they tangle and yet not better itself in the percentage column.

By hook or crook, luck or a fighting attack the Spudders have proved thorns in the sides of first Dallas, then San Antonio and later Beaumont. Now they've started on the Bears again.

Had not Segrist made his error in the fifth San Antonio may have won today. But regardless, the Wichita Falls team was quick to take advantage of the break and surge over for a lopsided victory. Speed in finding the breach and and charging through seems to be the Wichita Falls idea of attack.

Untouched Forest Stretches Found

DULUTH, Minn., Aug. 29.—(AP) Primeval forests, where moose, deer and bear roam, and eagles fly, may still be found untouched by logger's axe, in parts of the Superior National forest.

Situated along the Canadian boundary line, just west of Lake Superior in Lake and Cook counties the National forest covers 1,250,000 acres. Each year some mature timber is harvested, but it is all done under direction of the U. S. forest service by private companies. No more is cut than the annual growth, so the forest may be perpetuated, and much of the vast district has never heard the ring of an axe.

Riviere Shades Barnes In Duel Featured By Suds' Bat

HOUSTON, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Tink Riviere, Dallas pitcher who makes his winter home in Houston and Frank Barnes, who lives in Dallas, tied up in a great pitchers duel here today, the Steer boxman gleaming a 2 to 1 verdict.

A pass to Gross, a stolen base and Schang's throw to center field in an effort to stop him, and Brainard's sacrifice fly gave the Steers a run in the first, but Powell's double and Vigare's single knotted the tally in the Buffs' second.

Singles by Riley, Sutherland and Tate, who led the Steer attack, gave the league leaders the game in the seventh.

About half of the 3600 fans who saw the battle were Dallas folk who came to Houston this morning on three special trains.

SPORTS BUST EXPORTS

BEAUMONT, Texas, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Several hundreed Shreveport fans saw their favorites win the opener of the series here today 10 to 3. Jack Roberson, brother of the veteran maskman stopped the visitors except for Distel's homer after a pass. That and a single by Kirke in the fifth were the only hits off the youngster.

Nason and Taylor saved Barnabe some trouble two, or three times with good catches with runners in scoring positions. Exporter hurlers fanned 11 Sports.

LAUGH THIS ONE OFF!

WACO, Texas, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Several hundred Fort Worth fans journeyed to Waco today to witness the Fort Worth Cats go down in defeat before "Ace" Elliott by a score of 5 to 1. Elliott was never in danger and only walked one man. The best the visitors could do was to gather six hits from the lanky right hander, one of these a home run, coming in the eighth by Lindimore with none on base.

The feature play of the game was a running bare handed catch of a line drive by Boggess, local left hander, of Walkup's liner. In the third inning Elliott reached first on Windle's error an McNamara's single, then Pratt hit one of Burn's offerings for a home run. Walkup relieved Burns in the fourth and pitched steady ball. Errors had him in trouble on several occasions but the Cubs earned but one score off of his delivery.

Canyon Getting Painted Red Now

CANYON, Tex., Aug. 29.—Will they paint Canyon red? Apparently they will paint a portion of it red. The portion is the fence of the Athletic park of the West Texas State Teachers' college. Players and fans alike will be reminded as they enter the park that the team is going into battle to fight for the honor of the maroon and white.

Other extensive improvements are being made in the athletic park and the new gymnasium is in condition for comfortable use this winter. It now contains the offices of the coaching squads, ample dressing rooms for home and visiting teams, and seats to take care of the crowds that throng to see the Buffalo basketeers win games from their rivals.

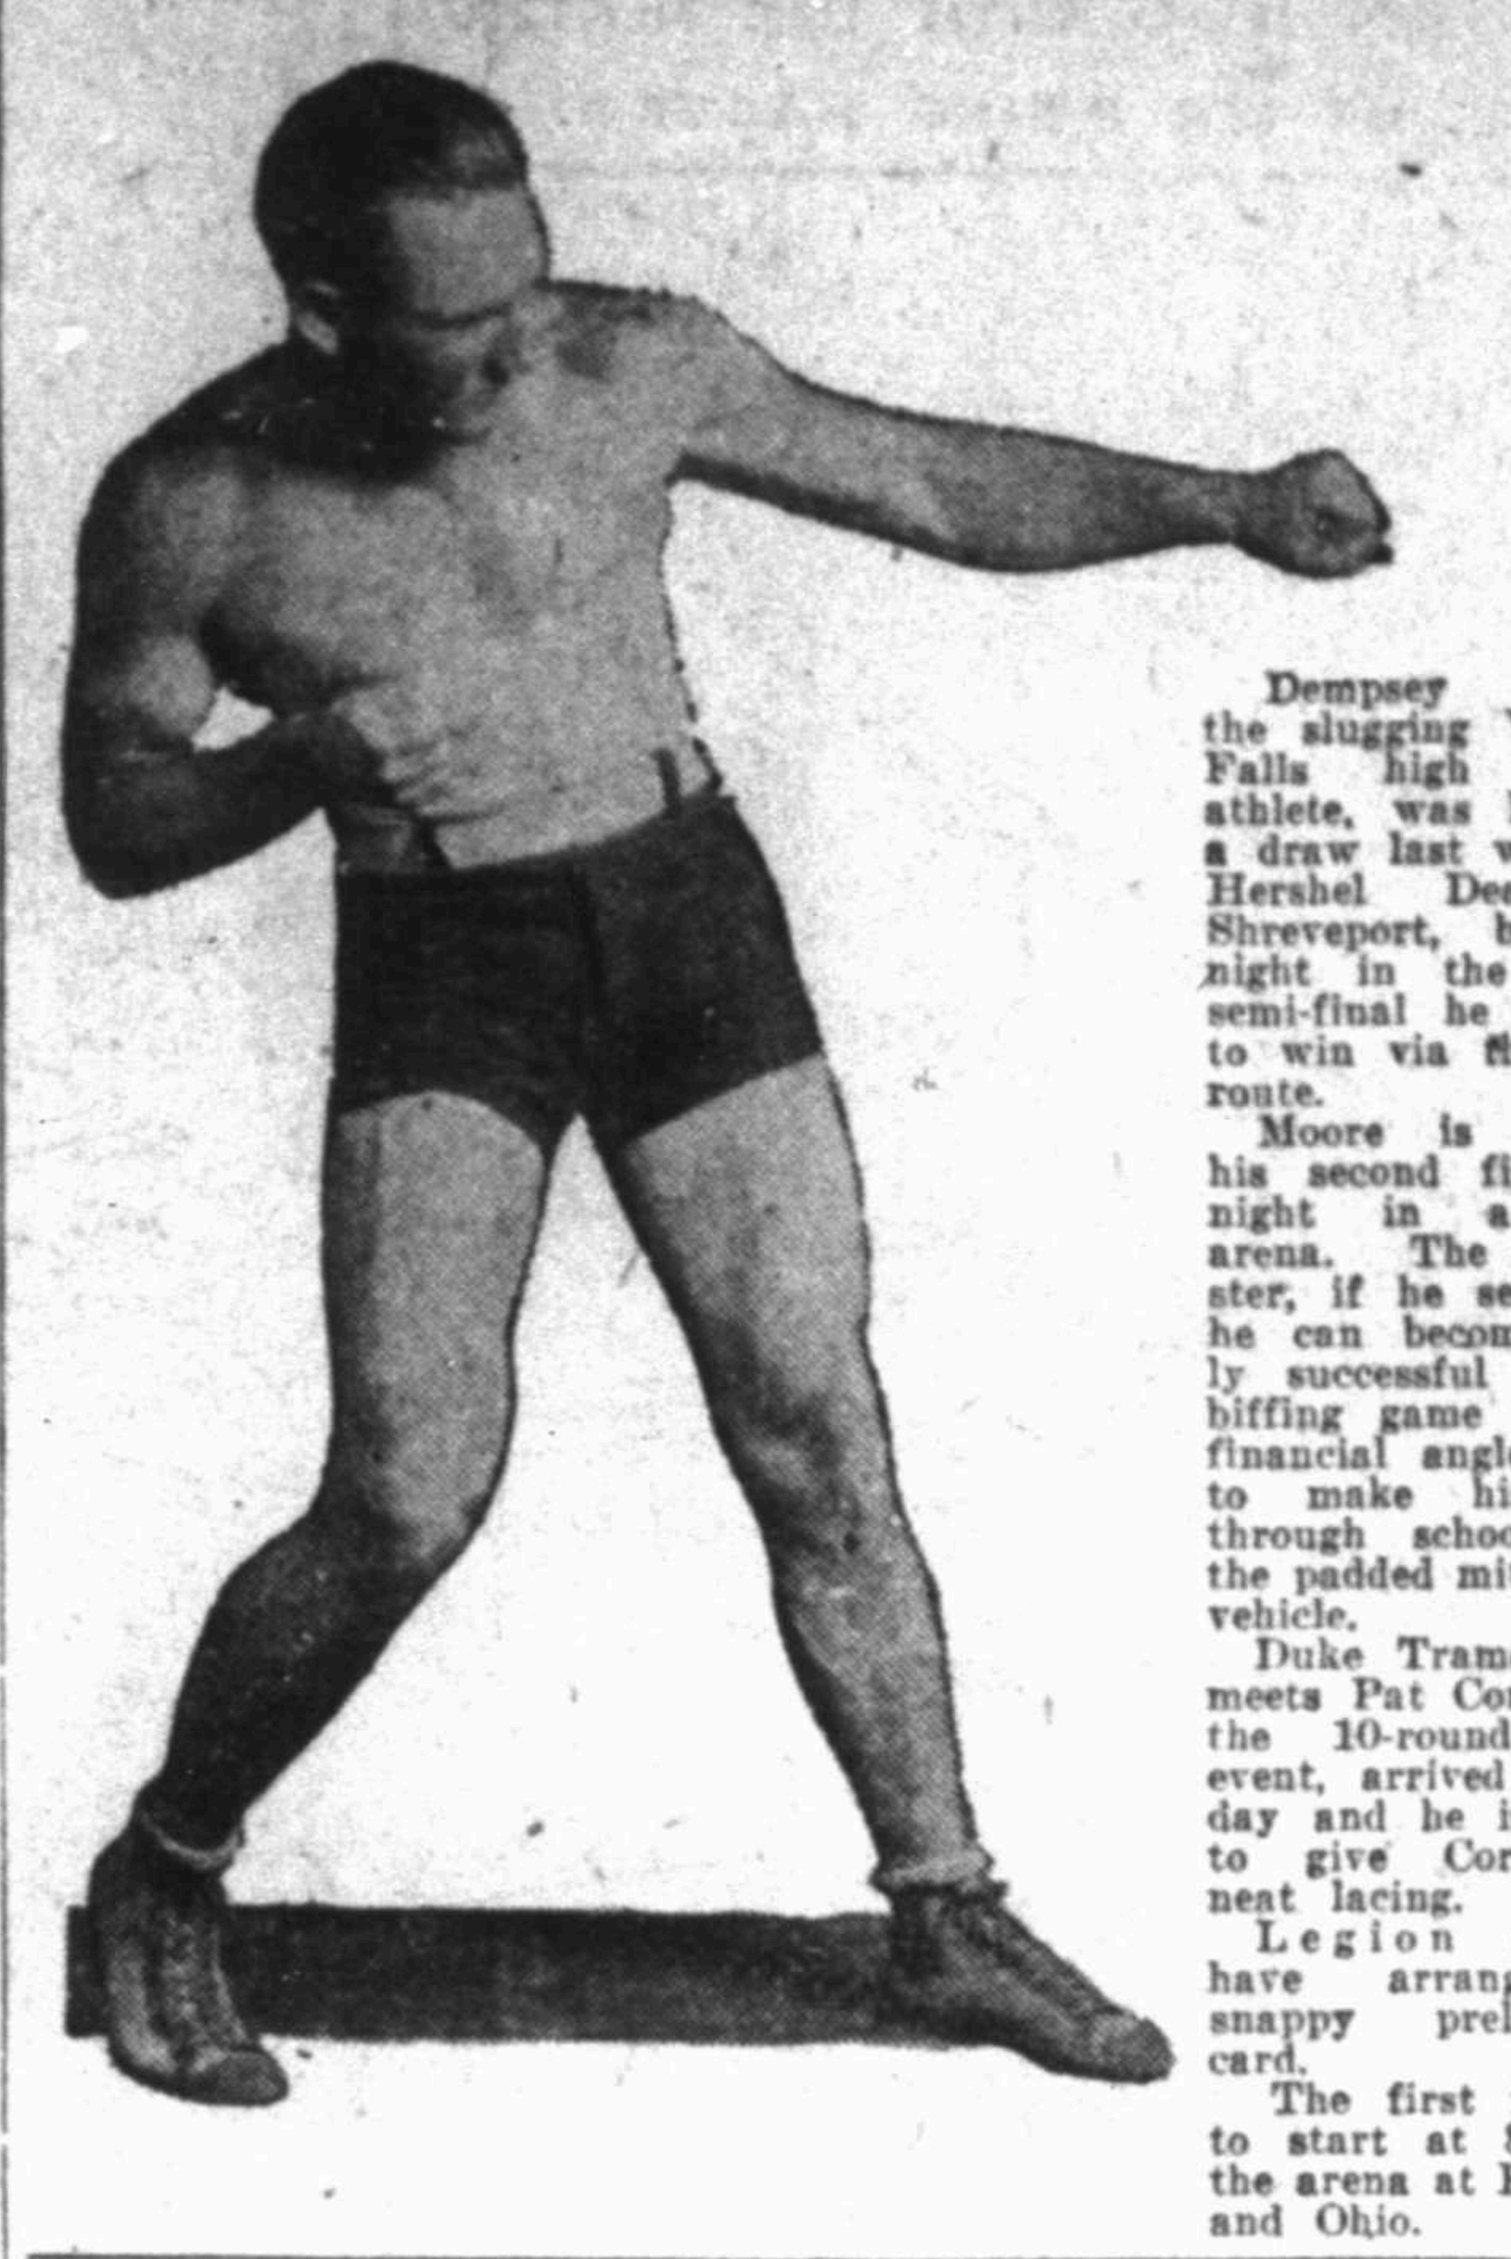

HOUSTON POLOISTS POUR IT ON DALLAS 4 AGAIN

DALLA, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Perfect team work carried Houston's horsemen to another triumph over the Dallas polo team at the Dallas Saddle and Bridle club Sunday afternoon. Playing under a handicap of five points, Houston emerged victorious by a 11 to 7 count.

Dallas made but two legitimate points during the entire game. Capt. Adkins drove the bamboo ball between the goal posts early in the initial chukker and Dr. Henry Smith made the other in the third period—both were easy shots from in front of the goal. The remainder of the game Houston's close-knit defense led by Carroll Coyle kept the Dallas team at bay.

Moore Expests to Win by Knockout

Dempsey Moore, the slugging Wichita Falls high school athlete, was held to a draw last week by Hershel Dean of Shreveport, but tonight in the legion semi-final he expects to win via the kayo route.

Moore is waging his second fight tonight in a local arena. The youngster, if he sees that he can become fairly successful at the biffing game from a financial angle hopes to make his way through school with the padded mitts as a vehicle.

Duke Tramel, who meets Pat Corbett in the 10-round main event, arrived yesterday and he is ready to give Corbett a neat lacing.

Legion officials have arranged a snappy preliminary card.

The first fight is to start at 8:15 in the arena at Eleventh and Ohio.

PYLE HAS NOT MADE ANY OVERTURES TO CUP TEAM

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Charles C. Pyle, sports promoter, who, has Suzanne Lenglen, French star, under contract to play a series of matches in the United States, has no "business arrangement" with any member of the American Davis cup team.

Pyle's admission that he had not approached any member of the team was made here today after William T. Tilden, Vincent Richards, William Johnston and R. Norris Williams, member of the team, had emphatically denied that they had any offer from Pyle under consideration.

Pesek Calls Off Romonoff Match

Joe Pesek, originally billed with Billy Romonoff in the feature match of the Wichita Falls Wrestling association card next Thursday night, wired yesterday that he will have to call off his end of the deal, declaring that unexpected business troubles had made it impossible for him to fill his engagement for at least two weeks.

No substitute for Pesek had been lined up last night. Promoter Alec Ross said that he may be forced to change his program entirely and leave Romonoff off the card, declaring there are few welterweights who can put up a real match with Romonoff and at the moment none of them available so far as he knows.

Efforts are being taken, however, said Ross, toward arranging a suitable program.

GIANT VESSEL SINKS RAPIDLY

National League Leaders Of Yore Menace No More

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Although the raging feud for the National championship dominated the baseball world today, fandom also was deeply occupied with the unfolding drama of the New York Giants who may finish the race in the second division rating for the first time since 1915.

Since the advent of John McGraw as helmsman of the Giants' craft, back in 1904, the New York club always has finished near the front ranks with the exception of the 1915 season when the team was eighth.

Six defeats out of seven starts during the past week built a seven-game gulf between the New Yorkers and the Chicago Cubs, while the Robins are in sixth place, three games distant from the Giants. The Stoneham organization won only two of 13 contests on the western trip just ended.

From the time McGraw became pilot of the Giants, the club won ten National league pennants and three world championships. The team finished in the runner-up position eight times, once in 1908, being tied with Pittsburgh, New York closed a season in third place once fourth place twice and eighth once.

Judging from recent performances the Giants will be obliged to stage a great come-back to figure in the pennant spoils as concerns first division clubs.

Cubs Menace.

The Cubs loomed as dangerous contenders for premier honors in the bunting chase with seven victories and no defeats for the week while the Reds came through with seven triumphs in eight starts.

Cincinnati had the high hit total in the National with 80 safeties. The Pirates won five games and lost two while the Cardinals came out in front in four of seven engagements.

While the Western outfits are immersed in their sectional strife, the flag contenders are so closely bunched that the leadership virtually hinges on a single game.

Cleveland's seven victories out of eight games was the outstanding event in the American League scramble and the end of the week found the Yankees' grip on the top rung whitted to seven contests.

The best the Hugmen could do was an even break in four encounters and they watched with uneasiness the gain of the Indians. Pitcher Emil Levsen performed the "iron man" feat twirling the Speaker tribe to victory in a double header at Boston yesterday.

Indian Clubs Explode.

Cleveland batsmen turned out 98 hits which was the best figure for both circuits while the Pirates' 51 runs stood out as the highest of all clubs.

The Boston Red Sox experienced another slump, passing through the week with an add to the win column.

The week's major league record of games won and lost, runs, hits, errors, opponents' run and home runs, including games of Saturday, follows:

Ten-Inning Mud Embroglio Closes in Deadlock 2 to 2

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The Pirates and the Cardinals battled to a 2-2 muddy tie today in a ten inning contest that was called after four hours and 44 minutes elapsed time on acount of darkness. The Cardinals' two runs came in the first inning, when Bell doubled with Southworth and Bottomley on base. The Pirates' tallies came in the fifth after Alexander slipped and missed a grounder and paved the way for Aldridge, his mound opponent, to drive in the tying runs.

The game was first interrupted in the last of the second when rain began to fall steadily after downpours during the morning. Two hours and 32 minutes elapsed before the resumption of play, which again was halted in the fourth. After 30 minutes more delay the game was finished.

HEARST AND HIS POLICIES

ARTHUR BRISBANE is the highest price editorial writer in the world. He is the wealthiest editorial writer in the world. Men who do not like him call Brisbane "Hearst's hired man." This doesn't hurt Brisbane. He writes for more newspapers than any living man and he is said to have a private fortune of $15,000,000 dollars.

Senator James M. Wadsworth of New York is a republican and a wet. Business men of New York are strong for Wadsworth. They are originating to re-elect him to the senate. Arthur Brisbane, nominally a democrat, is for Wadsworth for senator.

There are four Hearst papers in California. They are all for Hiram Johnson. Hiram for years was the boss of California. Then he lost control of the machine and when he lost control of the machine the anti-Johnson republicans elected Friend W. Richardson governor and Shortridge United States senator.

All this was not pleasing to Hiram. This year he decided to elect a Johnson republican governor of California and a Johnson republican to the senate. In order to do this he must defeat Richardson and Shortridge who are seeking re-election.

He has the backing of the Hearst newspapers. They are fighting the battles for Hiram in California as Arthur Brisbane is fighting the battle of James W. Wadsworth in New York.

William Randolph Hearst registers as a democrat. Running as a democrat in the statet of New York has been defeatetd for many offices. Now he is backing a wet republican in New York and a Hiram Johnson ticket in California.

This appears to be the age of the independent newspaper, the age of the independent editor, the age of the voter who scratches the ticket who sees fit. There are millions of Americans who do not care the snap of a finger for what is known as party regularity.

They are found in every state in the Union. There are millions of democrats who are independent. These independent elected Warren G. Harding. They elected Calvin Coolidge. Where will they land in 1928.

NEVADA

NEVADA is a democratic state witht one republican senator. Tasker Oddie is the name of the lucky wight. He was elected six years ago when the democrats named a weak man and he is hoping to win another term of six years if the democrats name a weak man this year.

Nevada has 25,000 qualified voters. And yet Nevada has two United States senators and one congressman. Nevada is a wet state. This is a dry minority.

Senator Oddie is neither wet nor dry. He is running on a platform of law enforcement. This makes it a beautiful straddle and office seekers for the most part are expert straddlers. There is a roaring wet who is seeking to take the republican nomination away from Oddie.

There are three democrats in the field for nomination. One of the three is as wet as the Atlantic ocean. He is the former chief justice of the supreme court of Nevada. All the democrats who are political managers are lined up for Ray Baker for the nomination.

He was superintendent of the mint when Woodrow Wilson was president and after his retirement from office Baker married a widow who had millions in her own name an din addition to all the millions was a raving beauty. He is ambititous to go to the United States senate.

Nevada is one of the largest states with one of the smaller voting populations the newspaper correspondents, who have visited the mountain states of the west say that Oddie and Baker will win the primary nominations and that it will be a neck and neck race for place on November election day.

Nevada democrats and republicans who are wets are howling for a statet referendum on the liquor question. They may get it but what good will it do them. A state referendum cannot set aside the 18th amendment to the constitution of the United States.

It required the labor of 75 years to write the amendment into the constitution. There is no telling how many years it will take to vote it out of the constitution. In 1920 the leaders of the two great parties declared prohibition a dead issue. They did the same in 1924. How will they manage to dodge the issue in 1928. It is a burning issue today in a dozen states and all the really important issues in these states have been side tracked by the politicians.

WOMEN ON THE WARPATH

MRS. FLORENCE KAHN is a republican of congress from one of the San Francisco districts. She is asking for re-election. She is classified as a wet. She has opposition. A woman dry is in the field and a republican male has announced in the same district. He is hoping that the women who are dry will vote against Mrs. Kahn and this will split the woman vote in the district and let him in. A plurality nomination takes down the prize. Mrs. Kahn was elected when her husband died. Now she must fight the drys of the district to hold her own. Is prohibition an issue?

COTTON AND ITS VALUES

COTTON is the chief of southern staples. Cotton is the new money crop of the south. According to a bulletin issued by the Association of Cotton Merchants of New York, in a review of the cotton industry, the numerous by-products of cotton are of vast economic importants.

For instance cotton seed, utilized by industry for widely varying purposes, from feeding cattle to making salad oil and edible fats, was valued last year at the large total of $241,000,000, a figure which includes also the value linters.

Linters are the fine fibres cling to the cotton seed after it is ginned which are removed to provide material for stuffing mattresses and upholstery, for manufacture into rayon and many other purposes.

As for the packing industry, the bulletin reads, modern efficiency methods have been developed for the utilization of every scrap of raw material in the mills, even the fine line that settles upon the floor is collected and sold. Socalled cotton wastes an annual value of $37,000,000. This should prove to be interesting at least to the cotton growers who keep their bales in the fields exposed to the elements and disfigured or soiled every time that the rain comes. It should be of rare interest to the survivors of the Confederate armies who lost, or thought they lost victory because the supply of the facts of the south were exhausted and then surrender had to come.

Away back in Civil war days and for years after the close of that war cotton seed had no value. Now it is different and the by-products of cotton add to the wealth of the nation every years. Texas has hundreds of cotton-seed oil mills. Texas has less than 30 cotton mills. North and South Carolina are the great textile states of the south.

Virginia and Georgia are pressing the leaders and the Carolinas and Virginia and Georgia realized years ago that the manufacturing states are the wealthiest. Texas should be turned loose. Texas manufactured last year had a value of more than a million dollars but petroleum products had something to do with this new high record established by the captains of industry who are making their influence felt the world over.

STEVENSON FOR SPEAKER

WHO will be the speaker of the house of the 40th legislature? There is certain to be many contenders for the prize. Representatives James W. Stevenson of Victoria is said to be in the running and his formal announcement will be given to the press sometime in September.

This will be his third term as a lawmaker. He is a cattle raiser and farmer and has been prominent in political and legislativve circles for a number of years. He is a member of the Texas Cattle Raisers association of Texas and the cowmen of Texas are vastly interested in legislation.

This democratic leader of Victoria county began life a newspaper reporter and those who are familiar with his history say that he was a star reporter for many years before he deserted the newspaper game and came to Texas to win his way in the livestock and farming industry.

He served on many important committees in the 38th and 39th legislatures and was a supporter of Dan Moody in the July primary and August run-off.

When Joseph A. Kemp called the lawmakers together in July to arrange for a bond validation program representative Stephenson was the first to respond to the call. He was active throughout the entire campaign and no doubt will take a prominent part in securing the proper validating legislation at the coming special session.

Two years ago the speakership was handed to a democrat from the Panhandle country. This time it may be handed to a democrat from the coast country or a democrat from the Rio Grande river country or an unknown.

The Little Scorpion's Club

A Romance In Old Brandy

By Michael Arlen.

Valentine's parents had died when he was very young, in one of those marvelously complete accidents arranged by any competent story teller when he simply must deprive a child at one blow of a mother's love and a father'c care. Valentine's parents, however, had in some measure protected against their simultaneous fate, and Valentine's mother had lived long enough after the accident to appoint Mr. Lapwig her boy's sole guardian. Mr. Lapwig was the senior partner of the city firm of Lapwig and Lancelot, merchants, wealthy, a widower, and childless, it can readily be understood that he eagerly accepted the trust. Althought when it is said that he accepted the trust it is not to be implied that Mr. Lapwig tried to take a "father's place" with the boy. Mr. Lapwig, like so many childless men, knew all about his place with any boy. He was without one theory as to education, but acted merely on a vague idea that the relations between parents and children, whether it was the Victorian one of shameing the joy out of children or the Georgian one or encouraging the boy into vulgarity had gotten the world into more trouble than anything in history since the fall of Lucifer from Paradise.

On this evening, twenty-four years after he had first entered the house in Cadogan gardens, Valentine stood quite a while before the door and wondered how he was to put it, you understand, was very difficult to put. A disagreement between a man and his wife, and only a man or his wife may solve it. Indeed, Valentine had already solved it. He detested compromise. A divorce was, undoubtedly, indicated. Undoubtedly. So undoubtedly, indeed, that Valentine would not have dreamed of putting it to Mr. Lapwing at all had he not thought himself bound in honor to ask his guardian's advice "when something happens to you about which you will think it impossible that anyone can advise you."

Mr. Lapwing was cracking a nut. He said gloomily:

"Hullo, Valentine! Did you ring up to say you were coming round? I didn't get the message."

"I came," said Valentine, "on an impulse."

Mr. Lapwing said: "I see. Well, sit down, sit down! I don't want you towering over me while I am trying to digest my food. Or is it one of those impulses you have to stand up to?"

Valentine said: "If you really want to know, I don't care if I never sit down again. But I will, if only to show you how well you've brought me up."

"Now I don't want any cheek," said Mr. Lapwing.

"Cheek!" said Valentine, and he laughed, and the way he laughed caused Mr. Lapwing to look sharply up at him.

"Cheek!" said Valentine. "If you knew as much about cheek as I do, sir, you would think I was talking like a courtier!"

"Oh, sit down, sit down!" said Mr. Lapwing.

Now a gentleman called Mr. Lapwing can neither need nor merit any further description. Mr. Lapwing looked in no way different from the way that a Mr. Lapwing should look. Then, tiresome, bald, boring, gouty, gloomy. We see him for the first time at that end of his dinner when he would sit a while at the table and stare with conscious absent-mindedness into space, after the manner of any English gentleman who is not adverse from a drop of old brandy after his meals. Mr. Lapwing's was an old-world palate, and he enjoyed above all things a drop of brandy.

The dining room of the house in Cadogan gardens was large, austere, dim. From where Valentine sat at the the oval polished table, in the light of the four candles which played in shadows about his guardian's thin lined face, the severe appointments of the room were as though seen through a dark mist. Mr. Lapwing was not only a connoisseur of polite stimulants but was known to many dealers as a formidable collector of Meryon's etchings; and the sombre fancies of the young Frenchman's genius peered at Valentine from the dim walls, as they might be old mocking friends uncertain of recognition.

Mr. Lapwing said gloomily: "Port, Valentine? Or sherry?"

"Brandy," said Valentine.

"Drat the boy!" said Mr. Lapwing. "Fountain! Where are you, man? Oh, there you are! Give the boy some brandy."

Mr. Lapwing was old enough, but Fountain was older. From the dimness he emerged to the dimness returned. Fountain was very old. Mr. Lapwing said: "Go away, Fountain. We don't want you. The brandy, Valenine, is at your elbow."

"Thank you," said Valentine.

"The diffegence between beer and brandy," said Mr. Lapwing gloomily, "is that it is not unusual to pour out a full glass of beer, but it is damned unusual to take more than a drop of brandy at one time."

"Depends," said Valentine, "on the brandy."

Mr. Lapwing said sharply: "That is very fine brandy."

"Good!" said Valentine.

Valentine at last made an end of the muttering noises with which he had tried to put before his guardian the state of acute disagreement that existed between himself and Valerest. Mr. Lapwing finished his brandy, rose from the table, and thoughtfully took a turn or two about the room.

"Well," said Valentine.

"I," said Mr. Lapwing absently, "can tell you a much better story than that. Any day."

Valentine flushed. "I didn't tell you about this, sir, so that you should make a guy of me."

Mr. Lapwing said gloomily: "Keep your hair on. When I said that I could tell you a much better story than yours, I meant, naturally, that my story is complete, whereas yours, you will agree, is as yet far from complete."

Valentine muttered something about his being quite complete enough for him but all Mr. Lapwing said sharply was: "Here, no more of that brandy. That brandy is too good to swim in. But if you want to get drunk I will ring for some whisky."

"I don't want to get drunk," snapped Valentine.

"Good boy!" said Mr. Lapwing vaguely, and continued pacing up and down the dim, long room, while Valentine sat still and thought of his past life and found it rotten.

Suddenly Mr. Lapwing said, in that irritatingly exact way of his which was never quite exact: "You Valentine, are 29 years old. Valerest is 22."

"Four," said Valentine.

"Very well. And you have been married just over three years—"

"Nearly five," sighed Valentine.

"Very well. You, Valentine, want a child. Valerest, however, does not want a child just yet. Your argument is a sound one: that if parents wait too long before their children are born, by the time the children grow up the parents will be too old to share any of their interests and pleasures—"

"That's right," said Valentine sourly. "Valerest will be a pair of old dodders by the time they're of age."

"Exactly. A very sound argument. Whereas Valerest—"

Valentine snapped: "She doesn't even trouble to argue. She just sits and grins!"

Questions from the World of Love Answered by a Noted Authority

ALMOST EVERY DESERTED WIFE PUSHES HER HUSBAND INTO ANOTHER WOMAN'S ARMS BY HER NAGGING.

When a middle-aged woman finds out that she "has lost her husband's affection" as the phrase goes, and that some younger and fairer lady love has taken her place in his heart, she invariably lays the blame entirely upon the man

She calls upon heaven to witness that she has been a faithful wife. She points to the children she has borne him. She recounts the sacrifices she has made, and the work she has done as wife and mother, and asks us to mingle our tears with hers over the base ingratitude of a man who has taken all of the best of a woman's life, and then thrown her aside as a spoiled child does a toy of which he has tired.

Now I hold no brief for the unfaithful husband. Duty is duty, no matter how hard it is. Loyalty is loyalty, whatever the temptation to betray a trust. Because a man has lost his fancy for his wife gives him no liberty to philander after other women.

But I often wonder, as I listen to the wails and lamentations of these neglected and forsaken wives, why they do not realize that they help make the tragedy which has ruined their lives, for there is no denying that in nearly every case of an unfaithful husband the wife is accessory before the crime.

And the fact that she sins ignorantly, with no intention of alienating her husband's affections from her, with no perception that she is killing his love for her, does not alter the situation, nor absolve her from guilt.

Nearly every man is deeply truly, romantically in love when he marries. Otherwise, he would not marry, and burden himself with the support of a wife and family, nor curb his liberty by putting upon it the restrictions of matrimony. More than that, the woman he marries represents his taste and ideals. She is the one woman that he prefers above all other women, the one woman he has picked out to spend the remainder of his life with.

* * *

Thus the wife starts out with everything in her favor. She holds all the trump cards in her hand, and when she loses out it is because she bungles the game. She is too dull and stupid, or too lazy and indifferent to play the hand that fate has dealt her, and so she gets beaten.

Admittedly, there are a few men who are Don Juans by nature, who are attracted to every woman, and faithful to none, and whom no one woman could possibly satisfy, but there are not many such men.

The great majority of men do not desire to roam. They went to find happiness and contentment at hame. They are not out deliberately seeking soul mates. They want to find their effinities in their wives. And so when they wander away from their own fireside, and fall in love with strange women, it is almost invariably because their wives have failed them in one way or another.

Many men, for instance, never spend their evenings at home because their homes are places of torment in which no sane person would stay a minutes longer than he could possibly help. There is nothing to make a man want to linger in a dirty, messy house, where the floors are unswept, and the beds unmade; where every meal is an insult to the palate, and a menace to the stomach, and where a slovenly woman bickers with untidy, ill-raised children.

Lyrics of Life

By Douglas Malloch

MILK

Woman is a pessimist about a lot of things.
Matrimony heads the list, the husband that it brings.
Knowing men the way I do, myself among the rest,
Women have a reason to, have reasons of the best.
Men are optimistic, they enjoy a lot of fun,
But I know another way that woman is the one—
Never knew a woman yet, no matter what the hour,
Who was willing to admit the milk was ever sour.

Hubby picks the pitcher up, and Hubby takes a snuff,
With the coffee in his cup, he says he wonders if—
Wifey says of course it is, as sweet as milk can be—
Hubby says there's sour in his, as anyone can see—
Wifey says it's just a waste to throw good milk away—
Hubby says, "Well, take a taste, and then see what you say"—
Wives to weeping are inclined, when men are fine as silk,
But they have a hopeful mind concerning cream or milk.

Woman is an optimist, I'm satisfied of that;
A man may be humorist, and giggle and grow fat,
Men may laugh, and men may sing, while women sit and bawl,
But it doesn't prove a thing, a single thing at all.
Woman is the one who tries to make the bad the good,
Hubby is the one who cries the way no woman would—
Never knew a woman yet, in living's saddest hour,
But was trying to forget the milk was really sour.

DAILY SCIENCE SIX.

1. What is entomology?

3. What is meteorology?
4. What is ethnology?
5. What is anthropology?

Answers to these questions in tomorrow's Record News

THE "OLOGIES."

So many sciences have names terminating in ology that jokes are frequently cracked about them, and they sometimes get confused with jerry-built systems of philosophy ending in "ism" which are born every year and shortly died. Yet it is astonishing to contemplate the speed of scientific advance and to speculate on where science will bring us at the present rate. Four hundred years ago it was still supposed that stars were pin pricks in the sky and that the sky was solid. The earth was the center of the universe and the sun, a little ball a few miles away, went round it. Three hundred years ago the circulation of the blood was unknown; two hundred years ago nobody had hitched up steam: one hundred and fifty years ago electricity was just being investigated and electricians were denounced by orators for tempting Providence. Fifty years ago disease germs were just being discovered. Thirty years ago the airplane was considered a crazy idea.

Now what do you know about that?

Answers to yesterday's questions:

1. A magnetic field is an area within which the influence of a magnet is felt.
2. A transformer is an apparatus for converting an electric current from high to low potential energy or vice versa without change of current.
3. The two common kinds of electric current are alternating and direct.
4. In case of an electric storm it is better, despite popular belief, not to disconnect the current in the meter box because, should lightning strike the wire and travel in to the meter box it would, instead of grounding through the walls, jump the gap to the lever, forming a huge spark likely to blow the meter box up.
5. Static electricity is a great nuisance in taking motion pictures, causing a blurred flickering.
6. A dynamo is a machine used for converting mechanical energy into electric energy by magneto- induction.

WHAT TODAY MEANS TO YOU

VIRGO

Today's planetary aspects are distinctly favorable until sunset, at which time they become overcast and gloomy. During the day especially in the early hours, there will be sensed courage and determination combined with alertness and clearness and clearness of vision. These are all factors of success and, if they be properly used, any undertaking—be it old or be it new—is bound to derive benefit therefrom. It is a good occasion for travel and commitments may be safely made Speculations and risky adventure is to be deprecated. In the evening it would be wise to rest on your laurels and seek recreative relaxation amongst congenial surroundings.

Children born today will experience, during early infancy, a variety of ailments—most of which will be of the lighter order. Skilful treatment will be needed on one or two occasions but danger can be averted by well-regulated nutrition and plenty of fresh air. The signs denote that, long before they reach their 'teens, they will have achieved normal physical conditions. In disposition, they will display a certain degree of peevishness and too little consideration for the comfort or convenience of others. If these early symptoms are not energetically handled at their first inception, they will grow into distressing evils of grouchiness and selfishness. These children promise to be intelligent, resourceful and versatile. If today is your birthday, you possess a forceful personality—magnetic and attractive—which in your case, makes up in a larger degree for lack of of exceptional ability. our mannerisms, although abrupt, are charming and you have an individual grace that appeals to one and all. our judgment is intuitive, rather than founded on experience and knowledge, and, as joined to this you are original, there is every reason to expect that you may accomplish something both unusual and unexpected. You are rather disposed to look for stage effects and anything you do is always given the dramatic touch.

You are generous, altruistic, and discreet. As a result of the last-named characteristics, you are the recipient of many confidences.

As a lover, you are intense, and your demonstrativeness, is, at times apt to destroy the affection you are striving to arouse.

ROMANCE
By Hester Graham.

Freddie had been romping about in the breakers with the pretty young thing in the scanty bathing suit for some time. Freddie was a little bewildered—the pretty young thing had evidently taken a fancy to him, but—

Never had he seen a fairer, healthier complexion. Never had he seen more lovely, wistful eyes. And the bathing suit showed that—well, he hardly knew what to think. He caught his breath a bit when they left the water for a short rest on te sands, tired but happy. They looked at each other in mutual admiration.

"Do you like me?" asked the pretty young thing, shaking the water roguishly from a tousceled boyish haircut.

"Do I? Well!"

"A whole lot? Do you—love me, Freddie?"

"I—I don't know yet?" He stammered. "There's something I've got to find out first—something you must tell me!"

"Say!" Freddie blurted. "Are you a boy—or a girl?"

I'M THE GINK

I'm the gink who smokes "just now and then." I never buy any cigarettes, but I always take them when they are passed around. Occasionally I say, "By George, I feel like smoking. Who has a cigarette?" It never occurs to me that I should buy a package. I'd feel shocked if anyone intimated that I really smoke. I just take one now and then, but my associates will tell you that now and then comes often every day.

AN EARNEST CRY FOR HELP

Our town—I mean the one where I was born—formerly abounded in characters—"types" they'd call them in a larger place. One of our local institutions 20 years ago was a black driver named Abe but called Old Abe for short. Abe was popular with both races, goodnatured, loud mouthed and friendly. He had one social shortcoming, though. About once in so often he would slip out on a dark night and acquire something of value without the formality of speaking to the owner about it. For awhile he escaped a penitentiary sentence.

But eventually he was caught with what the grand jury and the prosecuting attorney regarded as the goods, the said goods consisting of a stray calf. He was lodged in the Blue Eagle jail to await trial. His cell was in the upper tier. On the Sunday afternoon following his incarceration his wife, accompanied by five or six of Abe's picknickies, came to pay him a visit. It was the first time she had seen him since his arrest.

On her way out she was halted by the deputy jailer, whose name was Grady.

"Dora," he said, "have you hired a lawyer for Abe, yet?"

"Naw, suh," she said, "effen Abe was guilty, right away I'd git him a lawyer. But he p'intedly tells me he ain't the least bit guilty. So, of co'se, dat bein' the case he ain't needin' no lawyer to git him clear."

From the floor above, down the iron stairway, came floating the voice of Abe:

"Mr. Grady, oh, Mr. Grady!—you tell 'at fool nigger 'oman down thar to git a lawyer—an' git a damn good one, too."

WHAT'S JIM

ic campaign made by her and her husband since July 24. But opinion and speculation here do not limit his activities to this contest of Moody's nomination. The predicate of that contest has been laid by the Fergusons in charges of miscount of votes, and his attack on the contributions made to Moody's campaign fund through the hands of candidates for other offices, though the contributions were refunded.

Campaign Thunder.

Such a contest, it is believed, and the belief is frankly expressed by those who have watched Ferguson work out his political career over several years, could not be made in the hope of its final victory, but merely as thunder for a political campaign in a new quarter.

Then the contest would only be an indication to Ferguson's following one of the several courses outlined.

And beyond the outcome of this year's race, Ferguson is credited with being already at work kindling the fires in another race against Earle B. Mayfield for the United States senate in 1928.

The Ferguson name and the Ferguson issue have been kept alive by being before the voters constantly. Another "bitter-end" fight this year, regardless of its outcome, could only be regarded as building up the shattered forces for another uphill right another year.

Extra High Class Work Provided in City For Young Students

Along with other factors in which it excells are a civic community, Wichita Falls in the past and now for the coming season proves itself possessed of an unusual number and an unusually high quality of musical instructors.

The enjoyment of high class music has been a notable condition in the city ever since it attained its status as a leader in northwest Texas. This has been due in no small measure to the musical teachers of the city who have stimulate dand cultivated a taste for music of the best kind. They have kept music constantly before the public, and it has been music of a type calculated to inspire a love of harmony and melody that can be satisfied only by hearing and appreciating more of the same kind.

Because of their success in the past and because of the interest stimulated, music teachers of the city are now preparing for one of the largest and most interesting years in history from the standpoint of music. A dozen or more instructors, mainly of piano but also of all other musical types, are now organizing their classes, renovating their studios and making everything in readiness for the winter terms. Little or no music is taught here in the hot summer months when pupil and teacher alike seek rest and refreshment from a long and ardous season. With the opening of school, however, and the beginning of fall activities, class work and individual instruction starts once more.

Included in the list of Wichita Falls instructors who through consistent work have established themselves as teachers of repute and ability are the following who have made announcement of their plans for the coming year:

Mrs. Mary B. Adams, Dunning studio on Eleventh street at Alamo school; pupils report for lesson assignments Monday, September 13.

Mrs. Clara S. Baber, teacher of Dunning system, studio at 1614 Eleventh, classes resume September 14.

Mrs. John T. Burris, piano studio 1411 Eleventh, classes open September 1.

The Barton Dunning studio, 1304 Grant, saxaphone, flute and clarinet instruction, classes open September 1.

Mrs. E. E. Fisher, piano instruction, studio 2306 Tenth, classes open September 1.

The Mathis School of Expression (Curry Method) studio 3005 Seymour road, fifth term opens September 20, Ella Merle Mathis, instructor; Eloise Hawkins, assistant.

Mrs. J. A. Pitman, teacher of expression and dramatic art, studio 1904 Huff, classes open September 6.

Mrs. R. A. Sanders, piano, studies 1814 Monroe, classes open September the 6th.

Mrs. Ida B. Harrison, violin and piano, studio 1209 Bread, classes open September 1.

MANVILLE, R. I., Aug. 29—(AP)—An attempt to ire the Manville cotton mill of the Manville-Jenckes company was made early today by some one among a crowd of about 500 striking operatives and sympathizers who gathered at the mill in protest against the arrival of new men yesterday afternoon.

FERGUSON

panama hat pulled down over his shaggy gray hair and his chin resting on the cup of his hands.

As Ferguson talked music from the First Baptist church just across the street, floated into the small office. During the campaign Ferguson charged that some Baptists were supporting Moody, along with members of the ku klux klan.

When asked whether he thought the vote against his wife meant the termination of Fergusonism in Texas, the former governor laughingly intimated he was not ready to reply.

He talked of his political philosophy, saying:

"One must play the game philosophically. When one is crowned with the laurel wreath of victory, reflection will convince one he has not gained one tenth of what he thought. Similarly when one has lost, he has not lost one-tenth of what he had first thought.

The Ones That Count.

"Today Moody will receive a thousand telegrams of congratulations. Two years ago when Mrs. Ferguson was nominated, she received at least that many. Today it is likely we'll receive not more than half a dozen; but in sincerity those half dozen will outweigh the one thousand of two years ago.

"People only care for you as they can get something out of you, and the more they get, the more they demand. And they seem to forget what you have done for them."

Ferguson said he and his wife were not resentful and were not disappointed at failure to carry their home ward, town and county of Bell.

"When we consider the disappointments of other families more prominent than the Ferguson family, ours are not so keen," he said.

Moody did not appear extraordinarily elated by his sweeping victory. He insisted it was no personal triumph as the people had determined to put an end to Fergusonism, he said.

The attorney general said htat he will proceed with prosecution of the Hoffman case in which the state seeks to recover $421,000 alleged excess profits from the Hoffman Construction company, which held highway contracts.

Try to Catch Up.

"I am going to my office and try to catch up with work," he said.

The attorney general indicated he thought it impossible to guage the strength of the ku klux klan in Texas by the election results.

"The klan was not an issue, and Ferguson found it impossible to make it one," he said.

Moody asserted that if Ferguson or any one contests placing his (Moody's) name on the general election ballot it would be done before the specal session of the legislature which convenes September 13, but he was not expecting any such action, although Ferguson had sought to keep his name off run-off primary ballot and had intimated possible court action, later seeking the same end.

The attorney general said such action would not have court merit, and cited an opinion of the Texas supreme court that contested primary election state offices must be settled in the legislature.

Moody said he did not see what the Fergusons had hoped to accomplish by entering the second primary, but that he believed the governor and her husband thought they had a chance to win. He appeared interested in knowing whether the result of the primary was a great surprise to his opponent.

Charleston Has Hit German Capital

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The Charleston is just beginning to assume proportions of a ballroom craze in Berlin one year after being imported from the United States.

The Dancing Masters' associaition has announced that the reserve of dancers has at last been broken down and that by "Charlestoning" they no longer need feel they are putting on an exhibition performance.

The Charleston is none too popular on the stage. Five hundred members of the Wandervoegel, a New Youth organization, recently precipitated a riot when they demanded that Miss Wicki Werkmeister be "thrown out" for doing the "heathen dance." Shouts "Do you call that art?" filled the theater. Scores of fist fights developed. Police stopped the show and cleared the theater.

Irish Irked At Failure to Win

DUBLIN, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The failure of Irish athletes in international competitions has provoked much disappointment in Ireland and the newspapers are discussing the cause of the decline in Irish athletic fame.

Outside of a few clubs in Dublin athletic sports mostly are dormant all over Ireland. The colleges are blamed for lack of interest in athletics.

A first class stadium is considered necessary and it is suggested that one should be erected as a memorial to General Collins, who was keenly interested in amateur athletics.

MONTGOMERY DEAD.

Funeral services for James Montgomery, who died Friday at the general hosiptal will be held this morning at the Sacred Heart church at 10 o'clock, it was announced Sunday.

Interment will follow at the Sacred Heart cemetery.

MA PINES FOR TEMPLE HOME

Jim Just Same Old Battler When Approached By Reporters

AUSTIN, Aug. 29.—(AP)—The thumbs down verdict of the Texas democrats on what has become in last few weeks political battle as "Fergusonism" apparently was accepted philosophically today by the defeated.

The result of the gladiatorial combat in the arena of the politics yesterday was decisive, Dan Moody, 33-year-old attorney general, having defeated Governor Miriam A. Ferguson, the first woman governor of Texas almost two to one. It was a battle of a young man—one of the youngest ever nominated for governor—who came from a country town and engaged in combat with a shrewd veteran in the field of politics. Although Governor Miriam A. Ferguson was the candidate against Moody, it was her husband, James E. Ferguson, the old and seasoned campaigner who fought her battle. Ferguson declared the ku klux klan was an issue. Moody replied the only issue was Fergusonism and charged that Texas had two governors because of the influence of James E. Ferguson with his wife, the governor. His battle cry was "down with Fergusonism."

Located at "Forum"

In defeat, the Fergusons were still outwardly the Fergusons. Jim, the battling farmer, politician, still twitted his enemies and joshed about his own position, when newspapermen found him shortly after breakfast today. They located him in the Ferguson Forum office here across the street from the First Baptist church, where many of these he had dubbed "monkey-faced Baptists" were singing hymns as he was being interviewed.

"You've caught me with my pants down," said Ferguson when asked how it happened. "ou ought to wait until I get the mup." The allusion was a figure of speech, but a little earlier it might have been true because when newspapermen corralled him, he had had barely time to dress.

The aftermath of the primary seemed to run to trousers, for Moody last night asked newspapermen not to comment on the new pair of striped pants he was wearing.

"My wife's a good sport; she's not worried and you needn't be worried about her, either" continued Ferguson as he viewed the primary debacle in philosophic vein.

As Ferguson ruminated and prognosticated, nothing daunted the woman governor, who two years ago arose to world-wide fame on the self same issue that has bounced her down the political roller-coaster—anti-klan issue—remained quietly at the executive mansion, enjoying the Sunday morning calm with her children and her grandson, apparently accepting the decisions of the ballots with something of an air of relief.

Mrs. Ferguson Silent

The supposition that Governor Ferguson really will be glad to return to the quiet of her own garden in Temple, with ample time for peach preserves was entirely consistent with her appearance and expressions. She was content to let her husband do the political talking while she remained within the seclusion of the big white house on the hill.

With the reigns of what his ponents called power-by-proxy soon to slip from his grasp, Ferguson was by turns sardonic and by turns was a little solicitous for the future of his young rival.

"Two years ago on a similar day to this," continued the governor's husband, rummaging about the little newspaper office, "we received a thousand telegrams of communication. Today Moody will receive the thousand, and we'll maybe get half a dozen. But there'll be more sincerity in that half dozen than in the thousand that will come to Moody. For those half dozen will be friends to the last, while Moody's will be the friend in the day of success.

"In six months time Dan Moody'll find out the governor's job is no cinch, when he has to find places for all that bunch that's been following him."

The bulking figure of James E. Ferguson in Texas politics is comprehended when it is remembered that he has been a leader in a dozen campaigns in a dozen years, that he was elected governor twice and impeached in his second term and attempted to run the third time, that he ran for president of the United States and for United States senator that the removal of the impeachment judgment caused one of the bitterest legislature fights in the state's history, and that since 1914 he has been almost constantly before the public. In addition to this his wife was elected governor in the most peculiar situation which ever confronted any American state, and to elect her, Mr. Ferguson plunged into three strenous campaigns for his wife, that the effort to again elect her has cost him two more campaigns of the most exhausting kind.

Although the name "Ferguson" has become something of a saga and a legend in these parts, and even in defeat it still has something of an eery influence when linked with such dim contingies as a Ferguson as independent candidate for governor in the general election, the possibility of court proceedings by Ferguson to bar Moody's name from the ballot and, the distant campaign for United States senator in 1928. Speculation on possible legal action against Moody on the charge of illegal campaign contributions was an undertone throughout the run-off primary.

Brother Of Local Man Dies Saturday

Word was received here Saturday of the death of Thomas F. Benton, brother to J. F. Benton, who reesides at 1611 Filmore street, at Abilene early Saturday morning.

The deceased was found dead in his room on South Third street and a verdict of death by natural causes was rendered by Justice of the Peace M. C. Lambeth.

He is survived by his father Thomas Benton of Lubbock, three brothers, W. C. Benton of Abilene, Charles Benton of Baird and J. F. Benton of Wichita Falls. Funeral services were conducted Sunday afternoon at the South Side Baptist church at Abilene.

JOE WRIGHT DEAD.

Joseph H. Wright, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Wright of Iowa Park, died at 12 o'clock Sunday at the Wichita general hosiptal. His body will be carried to Iowa Park this morning by the Merkle Undertaking company for funeral and interment there this afternoon.

Judge Kay Discourses On Five Commandments At Sunday Bible Class

Judge John C. Key chose the latter half of the ten commandments as the subject of his talk before the Bible class at the Strand theatre Sunday morning. There were 221 present. His address follows:

The lesson this morning is about a part—last half—of the ten commandments.

There is a curious word in the old English language. It is a verb, "Must." The grammarians have never been able to do anything with it, or throw it into any different form. It is the strongest word in the language. It is that word that the savior used when he talked to the great man at night and said: "Ye must be born again."

The ten commandments are not misunderstood by anybody in their meaning, but they are often misunderstood in their application. The ten commandments do not constitute a little bunch of advice to the human race, or counsel, but they come with the explosive force of lightening, and say that "Ye must."

There are a great element of our people that think, and I believe some of them honestly think so, that they are entitled to live any kind of life that they see proper, that the opportunity and choice is open to them to do that, which it is, but that doesn't mean that they have a right to do it. The ten commandments, like all other criminal laws, do not relate to the human heart. That is not directly. But they deal with, for the most part, the overt act. They deal with man, most of them, after the meanness inside of the man has broken out into an overt act. That is not true of one or two of the commandments, but of most of them.

Meanness Is Sin.

You know, it is my doctrine, if any doctrine I have, that evil thinking, evil planning, meanness inside of us, is the only sin. I think when we go out and lie, and murder, and cheat and steal, that that is just simply the fruit that grows on the bad tree of an evil heart and evil thinking. We want to get that through our heads, because that is going to lead us into something that might frighten us. That leads us to the conclusion that there is a thief that never stole anything, and that is true. Some of us are afraid of the jail, and remain honest. More of us are afraid of public opinion, and remain honest. Pride keeps some of us honest, so that we don't break out into an overt act and run off with somebody's mule. There is many a murderer that never killed anybody, many a forger that never forged a document, many an adulterer that never committed the overt act. We have a little rough, mean saying, sometimes, when we think of a fellow maybe has done something, but we haven't got any proof at all, and we find outselves in that condition sometimes, and we say: "Well, he wasn't any too good to do it." Did you ever think about what that means? That means that even if he didn't do it, his will was good to do it and his heart was bad enough to do it.

"As a Man Thinketh—"

Now, they talk in the Bible a great deal about the human heart. The ancient peoples could feel that faithful little engine beating against the ribs and imagine that it was the seat of life, and the seat of intellect, and the seat of the soul. So that it was said: "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

I think you begin to see now that I am not after the fellow here, this morning, that they are ready to hang, or that is already in jail, or that has already been indicted, or has already been forced to flee the country. I am after that man who, deep down in him, hasn't got his heart right.

So, they begin, in this part of the lesson, by saying, "Honor thy father and thy mother." You know, a great many wise men think that a want of reverence, is the crying need of this age. Why is it in Texas, when you put up a signboard telling that "this road goes to Hickville" and that "this road goes to Mudtown," that these young men shoot it down with a shotgun? Now, it looks like a very small offense, but you know, I think a fellow that does that is the most hopeless specimen that we have got in Texas, because he is utterly wanting in reverence. In China, they have always had plenty. We like to talk about Chinamen. We judge the Chinaman by the ones that come to this country and take in washing. I used to judge the Greeks by the restaurant men, and the Italians that way, until I saw some of their exhibits in some of our national exhibitions.

In China, they honor the parent and grandparent. What a blessing it is if you have not an old, white-headed, saintly mother in your home. You ought to lift up your voice in thanks if you have got an old, bent, wrinkled, care-worn, fighting soldier of a father or grandfather in your home. They ought to be honored more than all the rest of us, and more than any of us. That's what this book says. So, I say, that we laugh at the Chinese, and poke a lot of fun at them, calling them "Chinks," but they have got a civilization over there that is the oldest human institution in the world. They were standing there when the first page of history was written, and how long they will be there, I don't know, but one virtue that they have got, is to honor the father and mother.

I haven't got time to talk about all of these commandments, this morning, but I want to talk to you a little about that one that says, "Don't covet." I talked with a fellow the other day, not here in Wichita Falls, that was showing me his fine house and fine place, and he was proud of it. He was a nice gentleman and I didn't see anything to criticize about him, but I said to him: "Do you know I got a better view of your place and your house going along the road here, than you do from the inside? I like it better than you do."

Preaches Economy.

Now, it is a curious thing in political economy, or, as these modern colleges call it, "economics." (They have to change it a little, or we wouldn't be advancing in wisdom from age to age). It is a curious thing, I say, in economics, that you can't get a dollar, nor a mule, nor an acre of ground, without getting it from somebody else. I don't know how many of our people are covetous that way. That is about the lowest organ in the human brain, is that organ that wants to acquire something that belongs to somebody else. I want you to remember that when you want to get all the wealth of the community, when you want to get this and that and the other property, that is the same passion, and the same motive, and the same driving power behind the forger, and the murderer, and the thief. That is what moved him, too. That is the reason the burglar goes out and crawls around on your floor with a sack in one hand and a gun in the other hand, is to get some property. Now, I want you all to get rich. I believe in it, but I don't want you to make it the great passion of your life.

That great Scotchman, Robert Burns, in writing about that, said: "Gather gear by every will that is justified by honor."

I don't know but what the ladies need just a little touching up right here on this. Pretty often they are the folks that want a better house than the old man can afford. Or maybe, not pretty often, but once or twice I have heard of it. Once or twice I have heard that they wanted a new limousine that wasn't quite paid for. They are not any worse than the men about those things, but they are human, even as we are human.

Thou Shalt Not Covet.

Covetousness! Thou shalt not covet. That is not a piece of advice. That rings like the old Scotchman who said to his enemy, "Ye will not, ye must not and ye cannot." Let's don't do that any more.

Now these commandments, I say, are for the overt act. Something that breaks out in the open, so that everybody knows what has happened. Now, let's get away from the sordid side of this subject. One of the greatest things in the New Testament is that a good man has got nothing to do with the criminal law. It wasn't made for him. It never touches the hem of his garments. He is not studying about breaking the commandments or laws of his country, and, as St. Paul says, "He is not under law, but under grace." Now, that is a great thing to say. How many of us can say it? We want more men and more women in this country who do right because it is right, and not because the law is hanging over their heads, like the sword in that ancient story, suspended by a hair.

You know, I believe a good man, the right kind of a Christian man, and I am not setting myself up here this morning as the high example I have in mind, but a real man, a Christian man, a righteous man,—I believe he does right because it is just as natural for him to do it as it is for a fish to swim. He doesn't even think about anything else. That is the kind of religion that a man ought to have, and then he has got a religion that is worth something to the community where he lives.

I was reading a queer thing the other day, a fellow writing about the best, the best things. He said the best things leaked down from heaven, and even the man that disputed said that their view and their plan was good. No matter how evil, how coarse, how loose the philosophy of the fellow who was arguing against religion, he still claimed that his religion, his philosophy, and his system was good. Now, how would man, in his natural state, ever hear tell of good? Do you think you would? If you had grown up without teaching, without precept, would you ever have heard a lot of good or of evil? It is pretty patent to me that you wouldn't or I wouldn't. So it is that we owe these things to the church, and to the great men and women who have made the church.

So, let us keep these commandments. But, the savior came along and took this roll and strip of commandments, ten of them in number, and rolled them up into one, and took it into his hand and scraped it down into one fine piece of gold, and said: "One new commandment I give unto you, that you worship the Lord." Ah, what a hard one that was. The next one: I am not talking about stealing and lying now. I am talking about murdering now, I am not talking about covetousness now, I am not talking about adultery or profanity, or the Sabbath, but have got all this ore now milled down into one little nugget, and the savior says: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." You can't do that without keeping all the others.

Negress, Out Of Jail, Knows She'll Get Back in Again

A negress,—of the age that the police call within the "years of vagrancy,"—was so sure of reincarceration in the city bastile Sunday night after she had been released once on bond that she left a sack of smoking tobacco with the desk sergeant. "Keep it or me, mister," she told him, "cause I'll sho' be back in before long and I'll want it then."

The sack of tobacco was at midnight reposing in the drawer of a desk at the police station, awaiting return of its owner.

Plane "Hard to Crack" Is Designed

DAYTON, O., Aug. 29.—(AP)—An airplane that will be harder to "crack up" than most of those now flying has been designed by D. E. Dunlap, aeronautical engineer, and soon will be ready for test flights.

Two of the fruitful causes of trouble when an airplane goes into a nose-dive are the propeller and heavy power plant, which are often forced back up on the pilot, injuring or killing him.

Dunlap's ship will have two motors placed between the wings and at the sides and back of the pilot and his companion. They are "pushers" with the propellers in the rear. This eliminates dirt from the engine, and the terrific noise, and gives passengers a clear view directly ahead.

Of more importance, it permits the ship to be built with a blunt metal nose. When it comes down on its nose it will simply "nose over," says Dunlap.

The ship will be amphibian, with both land and water landing gears, which in later models will be arranged so that they may be switched by the pilot from his cockpit while flying. The landing gear will also be equipped with a brake, and will be able to land and take off in twice its own length.

Following the trial flights it will be put into commercial production.

Cartoons Require Production Staff

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—(AP)—An animated cartoon comedy, requiring seven minutes to screen, requires 15 artists working two weeks to produce.

Pat Sullivan creator of "Felix the Cat," said that each reel of 500 or 600 feet needs from 5,000 to 9,000 separate drawings, while the artist's capacity must be from 100 to 200 drawings a day.

"I make the basic drawings and outline the story, but the bulk of the work must be done by the 14 other artists or animators," Sullivan said. "Every drawing first is done in pencil on transporent paper which is held on a drawing board by two pegs. A drawing completed, the artist fits another sheet of paper on the board and draws the next position, changing the figure to suit the action."

The drawings then are copied on celluloid ad the "blacks" denoting clothing filled in.

When the drawings are completed the pictures are photographed in sequence according to a carefully prepared chart which shows the exact timing. Twelve to 15 days are required for the photographing.

The detail of the drawing is illustrated by the requirement of forty figures to make a figure cross the street in the picture, with the object moving one-fourth of an inch at each step.

COTTON MART PRICES CLIMB

Crop Size Surprise When It Falls Below Gov. Estimate

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 29.—(AP) The main factor in the cotton market during the past week was the government crop report issued Monday morning. The condition average showing 63.5 per cent of normal or 6.3 per cent deterioration from the condition of August 1st, was lower than looked for, but the indicated crop of 15,248,000 was the real surprise as it was 373,000 bales smaller than the estimate issued by the government two weeks before and fully half a million bales smaller than the figure popularly expected.

The immediate effect of this shrinkage in the government's estimate was the confirmation in the opinion of traders of the many private accounts of rapid deterioration and insect damage that the crop was believed to have suffered. This led to the eager covering of the short interests built up under the belief that the government's yield forecast would be at least as large as that given two weeks earlier.

The immediate effect on the market was an advance of 131 to 132 points from the prices prevailing before the report was issued before Monday's session closed. Naturally so surprising a reduction in the government's estimate encouraged a good deal of trade buying and quite a bit of speculative buying by outsiders.

Although profit taking soon developed, the offerings were readily absorbed by buying induced by the presence of the tropical storm in the gulf of Mexico which eventually reached the Louisiana coast. Buying on fears of the possible effects of the storm carried prices for all active months above the 18-cent line except in the case of the January option which advanced to 17.98, bringing the advance from the low point of Monday up to 150 to 154 points. Weekend liquidation Saturday caused the loss of some of the advance but the close showed a net gain for the week of 105 to 107 points.

The following shows the high, low and closing sales of cotton futures in the New Orleans market during the past week compared with a year ago:

RINGS WILL TELL SECRET

Trio of Ancient Jewels May Reveal Indian Folk Lore

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz., Aug. 29.—(AP)—The sciences of astronomy and botany are conspiring to release a secret locked in the decayed heart of an ancient Indian civilization in this region for perhaps hundreds of years.

The secret of the date on which the Indian kivas (Hopi for "sacred chamber") were built, a fact to be learned through a study of solar activity and the growth of trees.

Five Centuries of Climate.

Dr. E. A. Douglass, director of the Steward observatory here and professor of astronomy at the University of Arizona, years ago began a study of the rings found in tree trunks with a view, among other things, to determining the age of the kivas. To date he has found recorded in the trees' "annual rings" a history of climatic changes over a period of five centuries. This chronicle tallies with astronomical observations of solar activity for the period.

His studies have taken him during the last 20 years to England, Norway, Sweden, Prussia, Austria, Bavaria and the states of Oregon, California and Arizona. His interest in pre-historic ruins was aroused by observation of the climatic conditions under which the yellow pine, common in the western Rockies, was growing.

Much of Doctor Douglass' work has been done in this vicinity because the limited twenty-two inches of rainfall assured many clear nights and superb skies for astronomical observations. The forest furnished a wealth of material for botanical studies. The critical problem of the tree was to survive periods of drouth rather than to compete with other species of plant life in the struggle for existence, and the wax and wane of tree growth is chronicled in the size of the tree trunk rings.

The greatest drouth in this region, Doctor Douglass finds, was from 1573 to 1586, and the tree rings held the record for more than three centuries before man discovered it. However, the biggest drouth in the entire southwest occurred during the years 1729 to 1739.

By studying the ringed beams in the kivas of the old Indian ruins of this section, Doctor Douglass believes he will ascertain climatic conditions at the time they were built. Comparison of such data with the records of Arizona trees and of the big Sequoias of California will reveal, he hopes, the actual years in which the "sacred chambers" were constructed.

BOND MARKET STEADY

Prices Hold Form Despite Hardening of Money Rates

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Steadiness of prices in the face of a distinct hardening of money rates and the prompt over-subscription of two large offerings were the outstanding characteristics of last week's bond market. Trading in listed securities was dull but this was a seasonal development, the fortnight before Labor day being generally observed as a vacation period with many investment firms manned only by skeleton staffs.
