Plug Holes Or Sink, President Warned

Memo Says Blame It All On OPEC

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House's top domestic adviser has bluntly warned President Carter to start plugging the holes in his leaking ship right away or it may be too late to save the administration, it was disclosed Saturday.

"In many respects, this would appear to be the worst of times," Stuart Eizenstat told Carter last week in a no-holds-barred memorandum on what he called Vietnam-style troubles facing the administration.

But despite all the tough talk, the memo primarily suggested ways to combat "the political damage we are suffering from all this" rather than substantive measures to solve the nation's actual economic and energy problems.

Eizenstat, the president's assistant for domestic affairs, called on Carter to save himself from the political fallout of inflation, gas lines and possible recession by branding the international oil cartel the "clear enemy" behind America's troubles.

He frankly conceded the energy crisis has hurt the president more than double-digit inflation, attacks by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and the forced resignation of budget director Bert Lance.

"It is perhaps sufficient to say that nothing which has occurred in the administration to date ... added so much water to our ship," Eizenstat said.

The June 28 memo, which was sent only to a limited number of senior administration officials, was made public Saturday by the Washington Post and confirmed by the White House to United Press International.

Eizenstat, questioned by reporters on arriving in Louisville, Ky., for a national governors' conference, acknowledged sending the memo and predicted that the president would "come out swinging" against the energy problem.

In the memo, he warned the president to expect increasing, Vietnam-style "problems of credibility and political opposition from the left" over the energy issue.

"While the Vietnam analogy is a strained one in many ways, it is one which this week press accounts are beginning to make," he said.

But he said the recent price hike by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries offered the administration a chance "to shift the cause for inflation and energy problems to OPEC" and "gain credibility with the Amercan people."

"We should seize this opportunity now and with all our skill," he said. "If we fail to do so, the late hour may foreclose a similar opportunity again coming our way."

He then proposed an eight-point plan providing for such public relations steps as anti-OPEC speeches, calling off a Hawaiian vacation and top-level talks to show the public the administration cares about solving the energy problem.

Dealing With Energy

"Every day you need to be dealing with — and publicly be seen as dealing with — the major energy problems now facing us," the memo said.

He said the president must also solve

U.S. Governors Oppose Gas Rationing Now

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — The nation's governors overwhelmingly oppose federally imposed gas rationing, saying conservation, better allocation of supplies and increased production are the answers to the current energy crunch.

None of the 46 governors responding to a UPI survey favored mandatory rationing now.

Several said Congress should approve President Carter's proposed standby rationing plan and others said rationing should be imposed only in extreme emergencies.

UPI surveyed the governors on the eve of the opening of their annual summer conference. The national energy crisis was expected to be the main topic at the meeting.

Governors from the Northeast, where the gasoline lines have been the longest this summer, were less opposed to rationing than those from other areas.

Gov. Ella Grasso, D-Conn., said she would favor rationing "only if it is an equitable national plan with no regional deviations."

Gov. Joseph Brennan, D-Maine, said he would support rationing as the fairest alternative "if present shortages continue over an extended period of time."

Strong opposition came from oil state governors like Republican Bill Clements of Texas, who said, "The only long-range solution is to create and produce more energy."

Gov. Bill Janklow, R-S.D., denounced rationing as "another example of the stupidity and insanity on which America has embarked."

"Rationing should be a last resort," said Gov. William Milliken, R-Mich. "The solution is a more effective allocation system, conservation, increased refinery production and a consistent federal poliry."

Gov. Dixy Lee Ray, D-Wash., said, "No rationing system has ever been devised that can't be circumvented one way or another as people try to beat the system."

In the view of Gov. Otis Bowen, R-Ind., "a combination of conservation, common sense and a reimposition of allocation on middle distillate fuels" will eliminate need for "the horrendous apparatus of coupon rationing."

Manager Killed In Apartments Dispute; Near Riot Put Down

By TRAVIS BROWN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

AN APARTMENT manager was beaten and then stabbed to death Saturday after he tried to break up a disturbance at the Sunnyside Apartments, 1027 E. 29th St.

The manager, Ben P. Guzman Jr., 38, was stabbed six times, including wounds that pierced his heart and both his lungs, police said.

Police arrested a 19-year-old Marine military policeman on leave in Lubbock and a 16-year-old Lubbock youth and are searching for a third youth believed involved in the murder, said Det. Bill Townley.

The incident began about 3 a.m. Saturday, when Guzman walked from his apartment to the swimming pool area of the complex.

Wearing a security guard uniform and carrying a shotgun, Guzman confronted a group of people who were "drinking beer and causing a disturbance," police said.

Guzman then got into an argument with several members of the group. Witnesses told police that the Marine took Guzman's shotgun from him and beat him on the head with it. While Guzman and the Marine were fighting, several other men joined the fight, and Guzman was stabbed, witnesses said.

When police arrived a large crowd had gathered and a near riot followed, police said. Three persons were arrested for assaulting a police officer, who suffered facial cuts and bruises.

Officer J.S. Barker found Guzman lying near the swimming pool with the Marine suspect kneeling over him.

As Barker tried to determine if Guzman were dead, he was pulled away by a witness who said the Marine had killed Guzman with the shotgun and then had thrown the broken gun into the swimming pool.

Barker later found the barrel and stock of the gun in the pool. Both parts of the gun were covered with blood, police said.

By the time an Emergency Medical Services ambulance arrived, a crowd of about 100 persons had gathered. The driver of the ambulance had to brandish a shotgun in order to get the crowd to move away from the body, police said.

When other police units arrived, several fights between police and witnesses broke out. As a result, a 38-year-old man, an 18-year-old youth and a 36-year-old woman were arrested, all for assaulting a police officer.

The Marine was arrested at the apartment complex as a murder suspect. Later Saturday, police took into custody the 18-year-old after a witness said the youth had stabbed Guzman.

Guzman was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Charles Smith, who ruled the death a homicide. An autopsy ordered by Smith revealed that Guzman was stabbed three times in the chest, and once each in the hip, back and arm. He also suffered a laceration of the head.

Services for Guzman will be at 2 p.m.

Strike Heightens Moving Woes

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

MOBILE LUBBOCKITES, depending on moving companies to help them relocate, may find their possessions stalled as van lines report an enormous backlog in undelivered cargo due to striking independent truckers and high-priced, hard-to-find motor fuel.

Moving van companies surveyed by The Avalanche-Journal noted delays in delivering goods, loads stalled in warehouses and problems in gassing up trucks, which often hold up to 200 gallons.

Accumulated effects from several weeks of strike-related holdups in cargo delivery led one moving company owner to predict it will be September before the situation returns to normal.

Another company's manager said the general slowdown plus the fact that this is the industry's busiest time prompted her company headquarters last week to declare a moratorium on shipping orders until after July 14.

"We're not going to book them if we can't move them," she explained.

And for those who already have booked for a move, delivery of their household goods may take anywhere from a couple of days to several weeks longer than usual, a company owner said.

Carroll Spelce, owner of B & H Movers, said the transportation of goods out of state is "about twice the time" is usually takes.

For example, he said, the normal transit time of a 7,000 pound load from Lubbock to California takes at a minimum two days and at a maximum of 10 days.

"Right now, it's running two to 24 days," he said.

The problem, Spelce said, is that "nationwide, we can't get any trucks in here because of the strike." He noted that his van line's first truck in two weeks stopped at his warehouse Tuesday.

Because the trucks cannot get in, they cannot get out with loads. And that is creating a problem in his warehouses, Spelce said.

The warehouses are full, and the cargo that was "picked up cheap" is being held for free until it is moved, he explained. That means his company "cannot take on any new business" until the warehouses are cleared.

"It's costing us a lot of money," he said.

But, Spelce said, "The customers are the ones that are really taking the brunt of it."

While they have been "pretty understanding about the situation," he explained, "There's some of them getting pretty irate" because they have been waiting up to a month for their goods.

Those waiting are living in motels, eating out and buying clothes to replace the ones in transit. They are spending much more money on the move than they had planned, Spelce said.

And, he added, because of the strike, the carriers are not responsible for them monetarily. Had the delays been due to a carrier's negligence or foul-ups, he explained, the customer would have been reimbursed.

"But a carrier couldn't begin to be responsible for that (strike-related delays)," he added.

Spelce, like all of the other company officials contacted, said he warns the public in advance of the shipping situation, telling customers that "we cannot know when it (loads) will be delivered."

For some who cannot afford arrival delays, the answer is to rent trucks and move themselves, Spelce said. "And some I have heard of will put their stuff in storage and move on," he said, explaining these people usually have closed their house sale and must vacate their homes.

Gail Wagnon, manager of Luther North American Inc., said her company's home office has cut off bookings "mainly because we can't promise when they'll get there."

But, she said, most of the problem is

Gasohol Available At Sunray Station

By JOHNNY HOLMES
Avalanche-Journal Staff

THE WAIT is over. Gasohol is flowing in Texas.

The Sunray Cooperative in Sunray, a small, highly agricultural town high in the Panhandle, has become the first operation in Texas to dispense the widely-touted alternative fuel.

"Things have been very satisfactory," said Don Graham, the manager of the Sunray co-op and the man now in charge of the state's first and only gasohol outlet. "We had some trouble getting going, but it was because we were the first to have to deal with all the government agencies."

The co-op is pumping an average of 400 gallons per day of the fuel, a mixture of 90 percent unleaded gasoline and 10 percent anhydrous ethyl alcohol, to anyone willing to pay the 90 cents per gallon price. In contrast, standard unleaded gasoline is selling for 84 cents a gallon in Sunray.

"It's a little expensive right now," Graham said. "But we think it's worth it. Most people are reporting two to five extra miles per gallon. So it may cost a little more but you can go farther."

Despite the higher price, area residents are using the new product. "People are definitely interested," he said. "Our ultimate success probably depends on how the regular fuel supply holds up. We've had adequate supplies up here so far, but we've had to scramble to get them."

That elusive fuel supply was the primary reason the co-op's board of directors made the decision to go for gasohol. "We also thought our action would be a major factor in determining the future of alcohol development and production on the High Plains," Graham said.

Sunray does not have an alcohol production facility. The co-op imports its alcohol from Illinois, and, not surprisingly, the cost of transportation is the main reason Sunray's gasohol is more expensive than gasoline.

Since the production of alcohol in Texas — the key issue the state lawmakers wrestled with during the gasohol controversy — has become legal only within a few weeks, no one was prepared to begin making it immediately. There is talk of a major alcohol facility in the area — in Sunray or neighboring

Seminar To Combat Rapists Proposed

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

MANY WOMEN are unwitting accomplices to their own rapes, Mayor Dirk West believes.

But with education on subjects like self-protection and securing a house or apartment, West thinks Lubbock can be made safer for women and the number of rapes reduced.

To disseminate that information, West has proposed a seminar for all Lubbock women with the cooperation of the Lubbock Police Department, the District Attorney's Office, the Rape Crisis Center and Texas Tech University.

Statistics on rapes in Lubbock "point up the terrifying problem of rapes that we now have occurring in our city," says the mayor.

In 1978 there were 117 reported rapes in Lubbock, 23.1 percent of which occurred adjacent to the Tech campus.

In 1979, there have been 78 reported rapes, 20.4 percent occurring adjacent to the campus.

If that level of activity continues, rapes will be up 33 percent this year over last.

These are only the reported rapes, West notes, "It is the feeling of our (police) detectives that there are many rapes that are not reported.

"We have a situation here that demands immediate and forceful action to make the streets and neighborhoods safe for women in our city," he says. "We cannot allow this to continue."

West's suggestion that a seminar be held came after a visit from Jodie Morris, assistant to the Dean of Students at Texas Tech, about the high incidence of rape and assault in the neighborhoods adjacent to the campus.

Mrs. Morris said she has lived in the so-called Tech ghetto for seven years, but now assault and rape have become so prevalent that "women are afraid to go out in the evening."

There are an "incredible number of unreported incidents" of harrassment and attempted assaults, many of which occur in broad daylight, she says.

"It's gotten to the point were you can't walk down the street at two in the afternoon."

One Tech coed came to Mrs. Morris for advice, saying she can't go to sleep at night until her roommate comes home

Cattlemen To Seek Ban Delay

DENVER (UPI) — The National Cattlemen's Association said Saturday it planned to file petitions asking for a delay in the effective date of a Food and Drug Administration ban on the use of a growth promotant in cattle.

The FDA announced recently it plans to ban use of diethylstilbestrol as a growth promotant by July 20. Manufacture and shipment of DES are to end by July 13.

The federal agency said persons and firms involved in producting and using DES for livestock may file petition for a delay in the effective date of the ban.

The NCA said it would petition the FDA for at least a 120-day extension because many cattle feeders have bought DES in quantity. The NCA has sent to affiliated state cattle assocations all necessary information on procedures for filing petitions for a time extension.

Larren Carlson, president of the Denver-based NCA, said he was disappointed that the FDA Had decided to ban use of DES As a growth promotant. He said there never has been any evidence of possible harm to humans from the minuscule amounts of DES used in beef cattle production.

Carlson said the product has been a very economical and consistently effective tool in improving the efficiency of beef production and has resulted in more reasonably priced beef for consumers.

The FDA issued the ban after research showed some residues of DES were found in cattle.

Tourists View Now-Famous Draft Of Gettysburg Address

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Hundreds of tourists filed through a dimly lit vault Saturday to view the original draft of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, delivered 116 years ago to dedicate the site of the fiercest battle ever fought on American soil.

The two-page manuscript — partly in ink and partly in pencil in Lincoln's own handwriting — is on loan under a special agreement with the Library of Congress.

It will be on display for the next 90 days and during the summer months for the next four years.

A brief ceremony opened the viewing and capped a five-year bureaucratic battle to bring home the address.

A plexiglass envelope inside an environmentally controlled case protects the 269-word speech, written partly on White House stationery and partly on foolscap.

Temperatures are kept at 50 degrees and lighting is limited to prevent deterioration. Armed guards provide security.

Dr. John Broderick, assistant librarian for research at the Library of Congress, called the fragile 10-sentence relic "one of the chief jewels in our country's treasures."

Two Pennsylvania Reublicans,Sen. Richard Schweiker and U.S. Rep. William Goodling, headed the drive to have the document displayed here and both gave brief remarks.

Schweiker listed the address with the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as "a trilogy of American ideals."

He noted the main speaker that day in 1863 was Edward Everett, but added: "Everett spoke for two hours and nobody remembers what he said. Lincoln spoke for two minutes and every schoolchild in America knows what he said."

Goodling, whose district includes Gettysburg, said Lincoln concisely summed up a new birth of an American government founded on the principles of freedom and equality.

"That task is as important today as it was a century ago," he said.

During the first three days of July 1863 some 51,000 soldiers were killed, wounded or missing after Union and Confederate forces battled around Gettysburg.

The decisive Union victory smashed the South's northernmost advance and turned the tide of the war.

John Earnst, superintendent of the battlefield, now a national park, said having Lincoln's address here adds to the historic wealth.

"Probably, it's the most famous speech ever given. To have it here is a great honor. It has so much symbolic meaning," he said.

Movers' Comments Deadline Near

WASHINGTON — July 18 is the deadline for comments on a proposal to require movers who provide written estimates to charge no more than the estimate.

Currently movers are not bound by their estimates, charging instead for the actual weight of the shipment. This means the customer doesn't know the actual cost until the truck is loaded and driven onto the scale and the distance and weight charges are computed.

So the Interstate Commerce Commission is considering making the estimates binding on movers of household goods.

In addition, the estimates would have to be clear and legible and changes could be made only if items are added to or removed from the shipment or additional services are requested or others canceled.

If you want to comment on this proposal write to the Secretary, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D.C., 20423.

Groups Unveil Junk Food Hall

WASHINGTON (UPI) The "Junk Food Hall of Shame," a museum style exhibit cataloging the worst in American food technology, was unveiled today by two public interest groups.

The exhibit, produced by the Center for Science in the Public Interest and housed in Ralph Nader's Public Citizen Visitors Center, includes everything from fabricated potato chips to food additives and television ads aimed at children.

"This display describes how the fruits of food factories are shortchanging consumers' health and weekly budgets," Nader said.

Dr. Michael Jacobson, head of CSPI, said the display "will show children and adults what slick ads and glossy packaging hide: how the food industry is more concerned with healthy profits than healthy consumers."

Sunny Skies Seen For Lubbock Area

Picnickers, boat enthusiasts, swimsuit-watchers and other lovers-of-the-outdoors will enjoy the sunny skies and warm temperatures expected in the Lubbock area today.

A high in the mid-90s is expected both today and Monday. Tonight's low is forecast to be near 70.

Although some South Plains towns may have received showers Saturday night, it is the last rain forecast for a few days.

A moist-unstable air mass hovered over portions of east, central and south Texas Saturday, bringing scattered showers. Moisture also fell in portions of the Panhandle and South Plains Saturday from a weak frontal system in the area.

As that frontal system moves slowly northeastward today and Monday, it will leave the South Plains area with fair and hot afternoons.

Lebanon Travelers Report Village Takeover By Christians, Israelis

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli forces shelled southern Lebanese villages Saturday, causing damages but no casualties, police sources said.

Travelers from the south said 100 Christian militiamen supported by an unspecified number of Israeli soldiers occupied the village of Kfar Shouba Friday night and declared the territory five miles from the Israeli border was part of Maj. Saad Haddad's right-wing breakaway state of "Free Lebanon."

The joint Israeli-Lebanese force, which was supported by 30 armored cars and four jeeps carrying heavy machine guns, fenced off the village with barbed wire and prevented residents from leaving, the travelers said.

Police sources in the Lebanese capital also said Israeli troops crossed the border late Friday night and blew up two houses during a search for Palestinian guerrillas in the village of Baraachit.

(Military sources in Tel Aviv denied any Israelis took part in the action at Baraachit, but there was no immediate comment about the reports from Kfar Shouba.)

Israeli gunners shelled Baraachit and some neighboring villages Saturday morning, hitting buildings but causing no injuries, the Lebanese police said.

Haddad, a Lebanese army renegade who is supported in his southern enclave by Israel, has long sought to incorporate Baraachit into his secessionist state of "Free Lebanon."

Civil Suit Seeks Subsidy Repayment

Another civil suit seeking repayment of what the U.S. government claims are fraudulently paid cotton subsidy payments was filed Friday in U.S. District Court.

Named as defendants in the latest in the series of suits stemming from 1973 investigations into payments made to South Plains farmers under the Upland Cotton Price Support Program are Paul Morgan, P&B Morgan Trust, Morgan Farms Inc. and Wayne Greaves.

The suit alleges that the defendants formed a partnership by an unwritten agreement and during the 1973 crop year combined eight Gaines County farms in order to receive more than the $55,000 per year limit under the Upland Cotton program.

Through the combining of the farms, government attorneys allege, the defendants received an additional $471,735 in cotton subsidies that year.

THE PRICE YOU PAY

The Boston area is the most expensive of the nation's major metropolitan centers. The cost of goods and services there is about 20 percent above the U.S. urban average. Housing is particularly costly, and taxes are higher than in any other city. Yet Bostonians are not exceptionally affluent. The Conference Board notes. Their average family income is topped by Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco, Washington, D.C. and St. Louis.

Talk About Possible Tax Cut Pops Up As Prospect Of Recession Looms Larger

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The prospect of a recession, looming larger because of the latest increases in international oil prices, has started Washington talking about a possible tax cut.

But whose taxes? Should individual income taxes be reduced? Corporate income taxes? Payroll taxes? Sales taxes?

Those questions are likely to be debated in coming months as the economy moves deeper into a slowdown.

Behind the questions is a fundamental problem facing the president and Congress — how to fight inflation and recession at the same time. Crude oil price hikes by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries add simultaneously to inflation and the risk of recession.

Energy has become the leading cause of inflation in the United States. The cost of oil is working its way through the entire industrial economy, making it more expensive to transport goods and adding to the cost of thousands of petroleum-derived products ranging from fertilizer to synthetic textiles.

The administration estimates OPEC price increases since December will add 1 percent to inflation in the United States this year and 1 percent next year.

At the same time, higher oil prices mean Americans must spend an increasing portion of their incomes on energy, leaving them less to spend on consumer goods.

Administration economists say this increased oil burden will cost $41 billion by the end of 1980, as a result of OPEC increases since December. This adds to the chance of recession because when consumers purchase less business responds by slowing production and hiring fewer workers.

The administration estimates the OPEC price hikes will increase U.S. unemployment by 800,000 persons by the end of 1980.

The difficulty facing policymakers is that well-known methods of fighting rising unemployment and recession make inflation worse and vice versa.

Many believe a simple, across-the-board tax cut, while stimulating jobs and production would also increase prices.

Therefore economists are looking for ways to cut taxes in order to increase jobs and production and at the same time hold down prices.

One idea under discussion is to cut Social Security or other payroll taxes. Employers pay part of those taxes that add to the cost of products. So some believe paring down these taxes would boost employment and production and also lessen one cause of inflation.

However, Social Security programs then would have to be financed in another way. Congress is reluctant to tamper with the financing of the retirement portion of Social Security. Therefore, some economists suggest the cuts be made in Social Security taxes which finance disability and health care.

Another, longer-range approach comes from the two leaders of Congress' Joint Economic Committee, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Rep. Clarence Brown, R-Ohio. They propose a $20 billion tax cut next year, half for individuals and half to business to encourage investment in future production.

An allied proposal by a bipartisan group of senators would cut business taxes $30 billion over five years by allowing faster write-off of depreciation to boost investment.

Both proposals are based on the theory that inflation and economic slowdown can be fought together only if the nation's productivity — output per hour of work — is increased through greater investment in more efficient production methods.

Other ideas being discussed:

•A federal government subsidy for state and local governments to enable them to reduce their sales taxes.

•Tax breaks to businesses which hold down wages and prices.

•Tax rebates to grocers who agree to pass it on to consumers in the form of lower prices, which is the idea of Consumers Opposed to Inflation in the Necessities, a coalition of consumer, labor and senior citizens' groups.

'Harsh' Rockefeller Drug Laws Stricken By NY Gov. Carey

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Hugh Carey signed into law Saturday a bill that repeals the harshest features of the "Rockefeller drug laws," once the toughest anti-drug laws in the nation.

The new law, which takes effect Sept. 1, reduces penalties for many types of hard drug sales and sharply cuts the use of life sentences. It also reduces the sentences of hundreds already in prison under the laws signed in 1973 by former Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

Even legislators who supported the 1973 laws now admit they were as ineffective as Rockefeller's critics said then that they would be.

Hard drug trafficking still flourishes, and police catch few bigtime drug pushers. Because of the stiff penalties of the Rockefeller laws, more people have been standing trial rather than workout plea agains, adding to court backlogs.

And hundreds of people convicted of selling or possessing small amounts of drugs are serving mandatory prison terms — often longer than sentences given to rapists and robbers.

Newspapers have carried regular accounts such as that of a middle-class housewife serving a 15-year sentence for possessing a tiny amount of cocaine.

Some lawmakers said such stories helped bring about the changes, but most said they had become convinced that the laws' very harshness and inflexibility made them unenforceable, yet also ensured gross inequities in some cases.

Workers, Growers, Truckers —Lawmen— Everybody Talking Of Lettuce Warfare

07/07 24.0 SALINAS, Calif. (UPI) — In America's salad bowl the lettuce grower talks of war.

Farm workers are on strike. Truckers are on strike. County deputy sheriffs, once the umpires of the strike life on the vegetable plains, went on strike for a few nervous days.

"Every day is a war," said grower Paul Fleming.

He stands ankle deep in lettuce, great green leafy flowers fit for food advertisements and before the grocery clerk rips off the giant petals, the better to make a plasticwrapped ball of each head.

"There are people out there trying to stop us," said Fleming who is 31 and has light brown curly hair and a mustache and a divorce and could be played with no injury to life by Robert Redford or a younger Paul Newman. He just migh be played; Hollywood is not far south.

Above the lettuce fields — More than three-fourths of America's salad greens comes from these parts — rise the coastal Gavilan Mountains. They are fit for science fiction, golden barren mounds speckled by an occasional giant version of Japan's twisted dark brown miniature trees.

Below the Gavilans is science — water irrigation and farm techniques that have made an Eden of the Salinas Valley. The fiction would be the thought that life hereabouts is Booth Tarkington rural, an American myth of gentle farming.

Fleming reaches into a pocket and displays a handful of what are called "Tijuana tacks."

They are twisted heavy wire, with puncture points, choicer bits of chopped barbed wire. They are dribbled on Monterey County roads by the angrier elements of Cesar Chavez' United Farm Workers, he said.

"We put sealing fluid inside our truck tires," Fleming said, "but four or five Tijuana tacks and thar she blows."

An intersection near his company's Salinas headqsarters has a corner lot parked with the burnt out wrecks of pickups, trucks and a bus. Fleming said they are casualties in the war between striking workers and growers.

"We are, on salary, only 40 cents an hour apart. Nothing, really. The trouble is the union's aim; they want to control this valley, this industry, setting not only working conditions but production, shipping, marketing and quality control."

Fleming is talking softly and wearing a Kennington cowboystyle shirt so popular from Beverly Hills swimming pools to San Francisco's Fisherman's Wharf. His pants are Levi's Farm Produce and Fleming holds a lettuce head he has lopped from its roots with a blade and the ease of a French Revolution widowmaker.

Fleming almost failed public speaking at the University of California at Davis — he is, as befits a man of agricultural action and Redford-Newoan mein, no booster of the higher schooling.

"It was all theory. It takes you about a day and a half to figure out they didn't know what they were talking about" — but he grins and says t e six-month-old workers' strike has made him fit for newspaper interviews and television talking.

The independent truckers' strike does not pester muchly, it seems. Almost every day all the lettuce is trucked off to market. And the going of the deputy sheriffs produced no woe.

"We have 17 security people at our well pumps, guarding our equipment, our buildings and, most importantly, our people," Fleming said.

His company — Admiral Packing, owned by his father and his godfather — shifts some 200 workers, mostly Mexican and three-fourths aliens with green cards, among the fields of lettuce, broccoli, artichokes, cauliflower, onions and sugar beets.

Fleming is always at their side, from 4 a.m. He has binoculars, a tape recorder and a motion picture camera, the better to scout and record any new war battle.

"Once 80 of the strikers rushed a bus carrying our people. They tried to roll it off the road. ganother time 100 to 120 strikers raided our main camp, busting windows and equipment. Once we 4had a work crew of 28 rushed by 250 of them.

"Now I'm always here. Not a day off in six months. I want to be here to show our people — And we do not lack for labor; why, look at these pay sheets, a man worked 27 and a half hours last week and earned $316 — my concern for them. And I want to be sure no one does anything crazy."

Fleming's father and t ree partners founded the firm — it grows and harvests and packs and ships — a generation ago. The father, with gray hair and successful enough to drive a telephone-equipped Mercedes 300D and civic minded enough to serve California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. as president of the State Board of Food and Agriculture, came through the lettuce and smiled at his son.

"I was a poor fellow," he said. "My own father went broke down in the Imperial Valley. I started working when I was 10. We had to fight for who got the glassof milk at the dinner table at night.

"I've suffered and that's a benefit. Paul's generation was provided for. Until now, he didn't know how to struggle."

The father leaves the war generaling to his son. But father sets the spirit: "Tday we have a dime and we'd like to keep it."

Keeping it means that the son has not seen a ballgame in two years. His last vacation was his honeymoon.

"We went to Hawaii for two weeks and she wasn't too happy when after four days I spen most of my time on the phone, checking marketing and production.

"Well, the marriage didn't last. She asked me to choose between her and the lettuce. I Chose the lettuce and she gave me my walking papers."

Paul Fleming grinned.

"War's hell."

Runoff Problems Studied By House

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee will hold hearings the next two weeks on the problems caused by water runoff from urban and agricultural areas.

The panel of the Public Works and Transportation Committee wants to determine whether runoff is hindering efforts to meet clean water goals, said Chairman Harold T. Johnson, D-Calif.

Budget Hearings Consider Ceiling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Budget Committee opens hearings Wednesday on a budget resolution that will set a ceiling on spending and a floor on revenues for the 1980 fiscal year.

Witnesses will include Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal; Budget Director James McIntyre; Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers; Dr. Walter W. Heller of the University of Minnesota and Leif H. Olsen of Citibank.

Being Short Hinders Young Disc Jockey

COSHOCTON, Ohio (AP) — Like most young disc jockeys, Charlie Lukens enjoys what he is doing and hopes to make broadcasting a lifetime career, but he's got a problem — he is too short to reach the turntable and spin his own records.

But since he's only 10 years old, Charlie expects to solve that problem in time.

For the last seven months, Charlie has been the host of a one-hour show every Saturday morning on WTNS radio. He says he wanted to be a disc jockey "since I was a little kid" and decided last year to ask station manager Bruce Wallace for a job.

"I was impressed with the very professional way he handled himself when he said he was looking for work," Wallace said Saturday. "He was dressed up in a little leisure suit and was very specific in what he wanted.

"He told me he wanted to be a disc jockey and would like an hour of his own. I asked him if he thought he could handle it; he told me he was sure of himself, so I decided to give him a try and he's been great."

Wallace says Charlie had no trouble getting into the swing of the job.

"Charlie's professionalism has been the most surprising thing about him," Wallace said. "He's more adult than a lot of others who come in here looking for work. And he knows exactly what he wants to play and comes in early every Saturday morning to check our record file and find the songs he's scheduled."

The station generally plays rock 'n' roll music. Charlie takes requests for records during the week on his home telephone. He says the number of requests he gets "depends on how many people ae listenng and how many times I say it (his telephone number). If I keep repeating it, I get a lot."

He also conducts trivia contests, using questions from the Guinness Book of World Records, with the winners each getting two records and a bumper sticker.

Since he can't reach the turntable himself, another member of the station staff assists him. But during his hour on the air, Charlie's is the only voice heard.

He gets paid $2 an hour, Wallace said.

"It's just fun being on the radio. You're in so many different places at the same time," Charlie says.

The youngster, who will enter fifth grade this fall, says that his classmates all listen and that judging from his phone calls, most of his audience is in his age group.

Charlie is the second member of his family working at the radio station. His mother is employed there as an accountant.

His parents are among his biggest supporters, Charlie says. "My mom likes it, but she'd never get in front of a microphone and neither would my dad. I'm the only one in my family who could go on the air and not be scared."

Labor Challenges Anti-Busing Forces

WASHINGTON (AP) — The AFL-CIO says it will lobby against a proposed constitutional amendment to limit busing for school desegregation. The amendment proposed by Rep. Ron Mottl, D-Ohio, is scheduled for a vote July 24.

Leaders of the labor organization asked the AFL-CIO's state and local units to work with civil rights groups in opposition to the proposal.

Shah Disputes Assassination Attempt Report

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An Iranian claim that an assassination squad attacked the villa occupied by Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi was called "totally absurd" by an aide to the deposed monarch Saturday.

Ayatollah Sadeq Khalkhali, a revolutionary court judge in Iran, told reporters in Tehran that a killer team rained mortar shells and poison gas on the shah's rented villa in Cuernevaca Tuesday.

Mike Moore, an aide to the shah, called Khalkhali's statement, "totally ridiculous, totally absurd, not one fact is true."

Police in the resort city, 45 miles south of the capital, also denied the report and Cuernevaca residents said nothing unusual had been noticed outside the heavily guarded compound.

Khalkhali has said he is masterminding a plot to kill the shah, and it was his second claim in two weeks of an attempt on the monarch's life.

A Mexican security official, when questioned by telephone about the latest report said:

"What? Again? Poison gas, mortars, an atom bomb too?" He then hung up.

In interviews published in two Tehran newspapers Saturday, Khalkhali was quoted as saying the shah "should be exterminated in any manner. We do not think naively that international authorities will arrest the shah and will deliver him to us for trial."

A revolutionary court has convicted the shah and his wife in absentia of crimes against the revolution and sentenced them to death. Firing squads in Iran have executed nearly 300 persons since the February revolution.

While Khalkhali claims his assassination teams are actively after the shah, Iranian Foreign Minister Ibrahim Yazdi said official government policy is not to assassinate the shah, but to bring him back to Iran for trial. He said Iran plans to try and extradite him.

The monarch fled Iran in January and came to Mexico last month after stops in Egypt, Morocco and the Bahamas. The Mexican government granted him a 90-day visa.

City Folks Won't Get Farmers' Gas

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements' energy adviser says the governor wants to "equalize" the gasoline shortage but this doesn't mean automatically giving farmers' gas to city folks.

Ed Vetter also said Friday he hopes to have in place by July 14 a system that allocates 17 million gallons of gasoline this month for weekend sales in Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth.

Vetter also:

— Announced a 15th county, Matagorda, would enter the odd-even gasoline rationing program Wednesday morning.

— Said Texas will receive 821 million gallons of gasoline in July, 91.5 percent of what it received in July 1978. June's allocation was 91 percent of June 1978 sales.

He said that "generally speaking, the (odd-even rationing) program is working quite well."

Vetter said Clements would not immediately take advantage of his new authority to take 5 percent of the state's allocation — 40 million gallons — and shift it from areas with plentiful gas to those with shortages.

President Carter announced last Monday that governors could exercise that authority.

"Our attitude is most of the suppliers know where the shortage is, and we are asking them to document for us what they intend to do ... If need be, we'll take that step," Vetter said.

"Some of the publicity surrounding the president's announcement and Gov. Clements' press conference of July 3 suggests that this additional potential set aside of 40 million gallons will automatically move from rural areas of Texas to the metroplex areas of Houston and Dallas-Fort Worth.

"This is not the case," Vetter said.

He said farmers already hold a high priority for gasoline.

Water is the only substance that expands when it freezes.

Supreme Court Actions Help Minorities

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's minority civil rights movement gained momentum in the Supreme Court this year, despite several decisions that could slow access to federal courts.

The asserted rights of criminal suspects, prisoners, children and the news media fared far worse, however.

A court that has grown generally more conservative during Warren E. Burger's decade as chief justice provided two momentous civil rights victories in the 1978-79 term's closing days.

But the conservative trend showed little sign of abating in other areas of individual rights.

In the celebrated case of Brian F. Weber, the justices endorsed on-the-job "affirmative action" programs aimed at making up for past bias against minorities and women.

Even programs based on racial quotas may be legal, the court ruled. Weber, who is white, had argued that such programs foster a kind of "reverse discrimination."

In deciding controversies from two Ohio cities, the justices reinforced the authority of federal judges to order massive busing to racially desegregate public schools in northern cities.

A less noted but significant victory for civil rights forces came when the court ruled that community residents and the communities themselves have a right to sue real estate firms for alleged racial bias in sales practices, so-called racial steering.

But decisions in cases outside the race-relations area often came down against asserted individual rights — so often the American Civil Liberties Union decried this term's "generally dismal" record.

Here are summaries of major decisions reached this term by the nation's highest court:

POLICE PROCEDURES

With some notable exceptions, the justices continued the trend of recent years by allowing law enforcement officials discretion in carrying out their duties.

— Car passengers have no constitutional right to challenge a police search if they have no propietary interest in the vehicle.

— Police and government agents don't need separate warrants to break into premises to place listening devices for which they have a court warrant.

— Police do not need a search warrant to install a pen register, a device that allows them to learn all the numbers dialed from a particular telephone.

— But police may not detain a person for questioning without a good reason to suspect that he or she committed a crime.

— Police also may not arrest persons who refuse to identify themselves unless there is good reason to suspect that a crime has been committed.

— Police may not stop motorists "at random" to check for driver licenses and car registration.

— In some instances, however, evidence from an unconstitutional police stop can be used in a criminal trial.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

In a series of decisions, the justices delivered substantial setbacks to the asserted rights of criminal suspects and those convicted of crime.

— A person's constitutional rights are not necessarily violated when he or she is jailed by mistake.

— A penniless criminal defendant has a right to free legal help only when a conviction leads to a jail term, not in cases where a jail term is only an unrealized possibility.

— Jailers have broad discretion to limit the privacy of persons held behind bars while awaiting trial. The court said officials can go so far as routinely checking body cavities of inmates for drugs or weapons and can keep several inmates in a cell designed for one.

— States offering early release to some prison inmates are under no absolute constitutional duty to explain how they pick who gets paroled.

With one exception, the court continued its trend of knocking down laws which treat men and women differently without advancing some important governmental purpose. For women's rights groups, however, the sole defeat overshadowed several vicotories.

— Laws that give military veterans — almost always men — special preferences in hiring and promotions do not impermissibly discriminate against women.

The rationale used by the court in concluding that a Massachusetts veterans preference law showed no intentional bias against women could make it more difficult for women and others to win civil rights suits.

— Women may sue, however, as individuals under Title 9 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which outlaws sex bias in educational programs receiving federal funding.

— States cannot pass laws that provide alimony for women and not men.

— Welfare laws cannot discriminate against "breadwinner" mothers who are out of work by providing benefits only to families whose fathers are unemployed.

FREE PRESS

The court issued three major rulings which journalists say will hamper their constitutional right to gather news and inform the public.

— The press and public have no constitutional right to attend pretrial hearings when the right of a criminal defendant to receive a fair trial may be jeopardized.

— In libel law, criminal suspects are not necessarily "public figures" who have to offer a more demanding standard of proof in order to win their lawsuits. The ruling, therefore, makes the news media an easier target for such suits.

— Also, persons receiving public funds are not necessarily "public figures" under the libel law definition. The Constitution's free-press guarantees do not bar public figures who sue for libel from delving into a reporter's "state of mind" and the editorial process.

— But a state may not prosecute a newspaper for publishing the names of juvenlles charged with crimes.

GOVERNMENT POWERS

— Members of Congress may be sued for libel for material contained in press releases and constituent newsletters.

— But under the Constitution's speech and debate clause, prosecution of a member of Congress for some crime may not include evidence of some legislative act the member took.

— The federal government's ban on Laetrile, a substance used to treat cancer victims, is legal.

— Persons have a constitutional right, under the Fifth Amendment's due-process clause, to sue a member of Congress for damages when alleging sex discrimination.

CHILDREN AND FAMILIES

The court draws distinctions between the constitutional rights enjoyed by minors and adults, and in this term continued to defer to the parents' traditional role.

— Children have no constitutional right to challenge their parents' decision to commit them to a mental institution.

— A minor accused of a crime does not invoke the constitutional rights protected by the "Miranda" ruling when asking for the counsel of a probation officer, or possibly any other non-lawyer.

— A Massachusetts abortion law that required the consent of parents or a judge before females under 18 could legally undergo the operation was struck down as unconstitutional. But the justices left open the possibility that states might allow parents and judges to play some role in a minor's abortion decision.

— Fathers of illegitimate children may have a constitutional right to contest adoptions.

ALIENS

— States may bar aliens from public school teaching jobs.

HANDICAPPED

— Handicapped persons have no legal right to attend a college when they cannot meet the physical requirements.

'Elvis' Extortion Attempt Fizzles

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — An Elvis Presley imitator whose act flopped at a suburban bar has received a suspended prison term for trying to extort $2,000 from the nightspot's owner.

Richard Levesque, 27, was also placed on three years probation and ordered to undergo psychiatric treatment. According to testimony, Levesque went to Capra's Restaurant in Newington and asked to put on his act. "He was so bad it was laughable," said Ralph Capra, the bar's owner.

About two weeks later, a telephone caller demanded $2,000, threatening to bomb the bar if the cash was not delivered. Capra said he recognized the voice as Levesque's.

GUN SALUTE

John B. McManus Jr. Dies In New Mexico

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI) — The body of veteran New Mexico jurist John B. McManus Jr. will lie in state Monday in the New Mexico Supreme Court Building where he served eight years, including six years as chief justice.

McManus, who had suffered from heart illness, died from apparent heart failure Friday night at the Santa Fe home he shared with his wife, Terry, and son Rick.

Although elected to a new eight-year term last November, McManus became eligible for retirement from the high court June 13, his 60th birthday, and had indicated he would soon retire.

"I don't want to get too old so that I can't enjoy my retirement," said McManus, who served 16 years as a district judge in Albuquerque prior to his election to the high court in 1971.

McManus, a 1947 graduate of law school at Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., Was a Santa Fe native who participated in four sports at the University of New Mexico and had a brief career as a major league baseball player. He was also a Navy bomber pilot during World War II.

Preston McGee, who said he was McManus' "closest friend," said the justice had undergone three days of tests at the Bernalillo County Medical in Albuquerque last week and had returned home late Friday.

"He had planned to go to a Houston hospital this weekend for further tests," said McGee. He said he had last talked to McManus at 6 p.m. Friday when the justice said he was not feeling well but still planned to meet McGee for lunch Saturday.

McManus's late father, John B. McManus, was a longtime Democratic leader in New Mexico and was warden of the State Penitentiary when the future judge was born in 1919.

Though McManus was in ill health, news of his death stunned Gov. Bruce King and McManus' fellow members of the supreme court.

"It came as a shock to me," said the governor, a liftime friend of McManus. "He certainly will be greatly missed by the citizens of New Mexico. I am very saddened."

King, who will appoint a successor to McManus on the bench, said he has received applications from potential candidates in the event McManus retired.

Chief Justice Dan Sosa Jr., who became chief justice in January when McManus stepped down from that post to become senior justice in anticipation of his retirement, said the death "is a tremendous loss to the state of New Mexico and to the judiciary."

"He had been on the bench for about a quarter of a century and he was at his office yesterday to sign some opinions that he had concurred with," Sosa said. "He worked right up to the last day.

"Everybody knew that he was ill," Sosa said, "but nobody had expected him to die — he was such a strong individual."

"Jack McManus had a real good legal mind and a fine grasp of complicated legal questions that was truly unusual," Easley said. "He was an extremely fast worker — really carried his weight on the court."

Justice William R. Federici said McManus' death was "a real loss to the court. He had a wealth of experience and this made him a stabilizing factor on the court."

Justice H. Vern Payne said while McManus was greatly respected by New Mexicans, "very few people (in the state) appreciated the contribution he made to ... the quality of the judiciary nationwide."

Payne said McManus was a founder of the national Center for State Courts and exercised great influence with repect to the creation of the National College for State Trial Judges.

"Among the judges around the United States," Payne said, "he was rated extremely high."

A spokesman for Memorial Chapel Mortuary said the body would remain at the Supreme Court building from noon to 5 p.m. Monday, then returned to the mortuary for recitation of a rosary, scheduled at 7:30 p.m.

A Catholic funeral mass was tentatively scheduled for 10 a.m. at St. Francis Cathedral, followed by burial in the National Cemetery.

Survivors included his wife, Terry, two sons, Rick McManus of Santa Fe and Jackie Dettweiler of Albuquerque, and two daughters, Nancy McManus of Los Angeles and Terry Ann Dettweiler of Albuquerque.

Three Injured Seriously Following Shootings

While standing in front of a Lubbock lounge, three persons were critcally wounded early Saturday, when shots were fired from a passing car.

Listed in critical condition late Saturday with a gunshot wound to the chest was Zeferino Sauceda, 25, of Slaton. In critical condition at West Texas Hospital were Oscar Rios Garcia, 19, address unkown, with a bullet lodged near his spine in his neck, and Ramon Taronga, 21, address unknown, with a bullet wound to the stomach.

All three men were shot about 1:45 a.m. Saturday as they stood in front of the Che Che Lounge, 1819 E. Broadway.

Although all persons interviewed by police at the club said they did not see the shooting, several said that when they heard shots and rushed outside, they saw a car speed away.

Witnesses described the car as a 1969 red Ford Mustang, occupied by several Mexican-American males. Witnesses said the car was jacked up in the rear and had loud tail pipes.

Witnesses told police the car sped away east on Broadway, and then a few moments later drove back by the club traveling west.

The three victims were taken by private car to hospitals. Police were unable to find any blood or spent shells at the scene.

All three victims were shot with a small-caliber pistol, police said. Police found the wallet of Sauceda lying on the east side of the building.

A 22-year-old Lubbock woman told police Friday that a man she had been living with beat her with a chair, rupturing her spleen. The woman, Rose Marie Jackson of 2639 Parkway Drive, was operated on Friday at Methodist Hospital and listed in satisfactory condition Saturday.

Miss Jackson told police that the suspect, described as a black male, 36 years old, Wednesday forced her to go with him to the Lubbock Motor Lodge.

At the lodge, the woman said the man beat her and then took her to an Amarillo motel, where he kept her until Thursday afternoon.

The woman said that when they returned to Lubbock Thursday, a friend took her to the hospital.

Police arrested a 24-year-old Lubbock man early Saturday after he allegedly burgled an auto repair shop and set the shop on fire.

A police officer said he was driving to work at 6:37 a.m. Saturday when he saw the suspect walking from the opened door of the 4th Street Auto shop, at 1910 4th St.

The officer questioned the man, who said the shop belonged to his uncle. Then the officer reported that he noticed that the metal door to the shop had been bent and that smoke was coming from inside the shop. The officer reported he went inside to find several rags on fire.

The fire department was called, and the fire was extinguished. The owner of the shop, Ronnie Roscoe McGee, 40, told police that about $3,000 in tools had been stolen from the shop.

The suspect then told police that an accomplice had driven away with the stolen goods, and left him behind. The suspect was arrested and taken to the county jail. The accomplice was described as a white male, 28 years old.

Interstates Safer Than FMs?

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) —It's safer to drive on interstate highways and farm-to-market roads in Texas than on city streets, the Department of Public Safety reports.

DPS statistics reported Friday showed that traffic deaths are up 13 percent in cities and towns and accidents in which fatal accidents occur are up 8 percent.

On the other hand, DPS said, fatalities on interstate highways are down 17 percent and deaths on farm and ranch roads are down 10 percent.

Overall, traffic deaths in Texas this year show an increase of 5 percent, or a total of 1,894, over last year. There have been 1,624 fatal accidents, compared to 1,555 in 1978, an increase of 4 percent.

Grain Executive Awaits Expansion

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Cargill Inc. says it has begun an expansion of its Houston grain export terminal that will increase loadout capacity from 180 million bushels to 280 million bushels per year.

Vice president of the grain merchandising company, James Howard said Saturday the project also will increase storage capacity, from 4.5 to six million bsherls. The project shouldl be completed by late 1980 or early 1981.

The expansion will permit the loading of two ships at a time, instead of one, and will double vessel-loading capacity to 140,000 bushels per hour

Eighty-five percent of the grain arriving at the terminal is hauled by rail car and 15 percent by truck. Much of the rail-supplied soybeans and corn comes by unit trains from Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Colorado. Wheat and sorghum are supplied by rail from southwestern states.

Vance Eyes SALT Pact

WASHINGTON(UPI) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, returning from an Asian and Australian tour that started with President Carter's official visit to Japan, got right to work Saturday on his next assignment; senate action on the SALT II treaty.

Vance arrived abtut 7 a.m. at Andrews Air Force Base in suburban Maryland, reporting to the State Department shortly thereafter. State Department officials said they were unaware of any plans for Vance to confer Saturday with Carter at Camp David.

Vance will be the lead off witness when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee opens public hearings Monday on the second strategic arms limitation treaty, which Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev signed in Vienna.

The treaty appears to be in trouble in the Senate, which must ratify it before it would be binding upon the United States.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., has said he is undecided about the treaty despite talks last week with Brezhnev in Moscow.

Vance will be accompanied Monday by retired Gen. George Seignous, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Vance's trip took him to Japan and South Korea with Carter, and then on to Bali, Indonesia, to discuss the Vietnam refugee problem.

His last official function on the trip took him to Canberra, Australia, where he attended a meeting of ANZUS, the defensive pact linking Australia, New Zealand and the United States. He rested briefly in Hawaii before returning to Washington.

Prosecutors Using Bite Marks In Case

MIAMI (AP) — With crucial "bitemark" evidence and eyewitness testimony from a young art student still intact, prosecutors began efforts Saturday to prove that Theodore Bundy clubbed and killed two sleeping sorority sisters.

But Bundy also won a point when Circuit Judge Edward Cowart said the jury would not be told he once said he felt "like a vampire" and feared that uncontrollable fantasies were taking over his life.

The prosecution's major weapons against the articulate former law student emerged unscathed from a week of debate. Cowart brushed aside Bundy's Saturday morning objections that his attorneys were not ready. The judge then ordered opening statements to jurors to begin.

"There will be no inconsistencies," said Assistant State Attorney Larry Simpson in his opening statement for the prosecution.

Simpson did not point directly to Bundy as the killer but promised "a consistent presentation that will leave you with only one conclusion."

Bundy's defense lawyer, Robert Haggard, told jurors the state's case was built on "manufactured" evidence, including an eyewitness who had hallucinations under police hypnosis. He predicted Bundy would be found innocent.

The keys to the state's case:

—Nita Neary, an art student who earlier pointed toward Bundy and said he was the man she saw carrying a club out of the Chi Omega sorority house in Tallahassee, Fla., on Jan. 15, 1978.

—Larger-than-life photographs of a bite mark found on the buttocks of Lisa Levy, 20, one of the murdered Chi Omega women. A forensic dentist is prepared to testify that no teeth but Bundy's could have made the mark.

Prosecutors also disclosed Saturday that a pantyhose mask found near one of five Tallahassee beating victims contained a hair similar to Bundy's wavy brown hair.

The seven-man, five-woman jury has not heard any of that evidence. Jurors were kept out of court while attorneys argued over what the panel could hear.

Khaled Briefed On Mideast Peace Talks

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Robert Strauss, the U.S. Mideast troubleshooter, carried a letter from President Carter to King Khaled when he arrived Saturday to brief the Saudi leadership on his talks with Israel and Egypt about Palestinian autonomy.

Strauss was in Jordan earlier in the day for a two-hour exchange with King Hussein, who still refuses to enter the peace process despite U.S. pressure.

A Jordanian government spokesman said the Egyptian-Israeli agreement on how to proceed with the autonomy talks — Strauss termed it a "breakthrough" — did nothing to change Hussein's mind.

Before leaving Amman, Strauss told reporters his talks with Hussein covered a "wide range of issues."

"He asked nothing and I asked nothing. He volunteered nothing and I volunteered nothing. It was an exchange of ideas ... a bit of probing by me," Strauss said.

Shortly before Strauss arrived in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia and Libya issued a joint statement repeating their rejection of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

It was released at the end of a three-day visit by Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy.

"Both sides reaffirmed their complete rejection of these agreements and their consequences, because they ignored the rights of the Palestinian people and contradicted the aspirations of the Arab and Islamic nations and the Arab League charter," the statement said.

On Friday, Stauss concluded his first negotiating session with Israel and Egypt on the issue of autonomy for the 1.1 million Palestinians living in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

The two sides agreed to set aside their attempts to draw up an agenda for the year-long talks — attempts that had snarled three previous rounds of talks before Strauss entered the negotiations — and accept the U.S. envoy's plan to set up working groups.

In Beirut, Lebanon, the second-in-command for the Palestine Liberation Organization called Strauss "politically illiterate" and said he had been chosen for the job only because "he is a Jew and thus can extract some insignificant concessions from Israel to satisfy (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat."

Salah Khalaf, PLO leader Yasser Arafat's first deputy, said in an interview published Saturday in the leftist newspaper As Safir, "One can't possibly debate the (Palestinian) issue with him logically, because he is not familiar with it."

Khalaf also charged the United States had encouraged Israel to step up its attacks on Palestinians in southern Jordan and was out to "slaughter the Palestinian people with a cold knife. Therefore it remains the No. 1 enemy of the Palestinian people."

Arafat was in Vienna, Austria, over the weekend for a meeting of the Socialist International as the guest of Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, chairman of the Austrian Socialist Party and vice chairman of the International.

Shimon Peres, leader of Israel's Labor Party, was also in the Austrian capital for the meetings. He told a radio interviewer he thought Arafat's presence would lead nowhere. Arafat and Peres did not meet.

Kreisky said he expected a "fruitful" exchange with the PLO chairman.

Kreisky nd Arafattalked Friday night and again Saturda, when tey were joined by Willy Brandt, the former West German chancellor and president of the International.

Details of the discussions were not available.

In Kuwait, the newspaper Al-Qabas said former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and former Undersecretary Joseph Sisco were in the Mideast attempting to persuade Israel and the PLO to recognize one another.

The newspaper, quoting unnamed Arab diplomats in Amman, said Sisco and Arafat had met several times recently, but did not say where or when the meetings occurred.

In a report from Washington, the newspaper said Kissinger's Mideast tour was part of a special assignment "which is to convince Israel and the PLO of the (need) of recognizing each other simultaneously."

China, U.S. Sign Pact

PEKING (UPI) — China and the United States Saturday signed a trade treaty aimed at further stimulating their growing commerce, despite threats by U.S. congressmen to block it unless Peking agrees to limit textile exports to America.

The pact gives China mostfavored-nation status, allowing the entry of Chinese goods into the United States at minimum tariffs.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman disclosed that even before the agreement was signed, trade between the two countries was running at a $2 billion-a-year rate and growing rapidly.

The pact was gned ,o all f the People in Peking by Ambassador Leonard Woodcock and Foreign Trade Minister Li Qiang.

Woodcock called it "one more major event in this important year in the expansion of the relationship between our two governments and peoples."

The agreement provides that American corporations and banks will be allowed to establish offices in China when facilities and housing for their employes becomes available.

The pact runs for three years, and is automatically renewed for three more unless renounced by one of the governments.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell has said it would be presented to Congress soon. Under terms of the 1974 foreign trade act it must be approved by both houses of Congress before it can be ratified and go into effect.

However, congressmen whose districts include depressed textile factories have threatened to block the treaty unless the Chinese agree to limit their textile exports to the United States.

Negotiations on the textile curbs agreement broke down in late May, despite a visit to Peking by Ambassador Robert Strauss, then President Carter's special envoy for foreign trade.

Chinese Vice Premier Li Qiuli, chairman of the government's economic planning agency, attended the ceremony and told Woodcock that "discussion on textile exports to the United States will be continued."

U.S. Embassy officials said no date has yet been set for resumption of the talks.

The Embassy spokesman said that in the five month MayJanuary period, the two-way flow of goods between China and the U.S. totaled $796 million. He said that at that pace, 1979 trade would total close to $2 billion. The figure for all of 1978 was $1.14 billion, the highest level since China's 1949 communist revolution.

Warning Issued For Hair Dyes

WASHINGTON — The desire to brighten their appearance leads many Americans to color their hair, and the Food and Drug Administration says persons considering this step should be aware of the controversy surrounding some dyes.

"Coal tar" based dyes in some permanent colors can cause cancer when fed to laboratory rats, according to the National Cancer Institute, and some researchers have been concerned that these dye products might penetrate the skin.

Muzorewa To Visit Washington, Make Appeal For Recognition

SALISBURY, Zimbabwe Rhodesia (AP) — Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa travels to Washington this week to make a personal appeal for recognition of his government. The future of Zimbabwe Rhodesia, torn by war and weakened by a trade embargo, depends heavily on his success or failure.

It is Bishop Muzorewa's first major foray into the diplomatic arena since he became prime minister — the country's first black government chief — on June 1. The mission takes him first to Washington, then London.

The Methodist clergyman's prime task will be to plead a case for diplomatic recognition of his fledgling black-led government and the unstrapping of the straitjacket of economic sanctions the country has borne since the previous white-minority government of Ian D. Smith broke away from Britain in 1965.

Muzorewa's tentative plan is to spend Monday through Wednesday in the United States, where he is scheduled to meet with Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and hopes to confer with President Carter.

The Carter administration and Britain are opposed to recognition or any immediate end to the economic embargo, pressing instead for the inclusion of black nationalist guerrilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe in the government.

The guerrillas, determined to bring down the Muzorewa government, continue to wage a war they began against Smith's regime. Nkomo and Mugabe denounce the current government as a front for continued white domination.

On June 28, Carter emerged victorious from a long struggle with conservatives in Congress, when a House vote left him free to decide when and how to end U.S. observance of the 14-year-old, United Nations-endorsed embargo. Earlier the Senate had voted to lift the sanctions immediately, an action Carter opposes.

The House rejected an amendment that would have stripped the president of authority to retain the sanctions after Dec. 1. Then it adopted a bill providing the sanctions be lifted by Oct. 15, unless Carter decides it is not in the national interest — a step he is almost certain to take.

Muzorewa was a long-time opponent of white-minority rule, which ended when Smith, facing an escalating war with communist-backed guerrillas and pressured by South Africa, his economic lifeline, signed the country over to the black majority in a constitutional accord 15 months ago.

Muzorewa will have to try to convince the United States and Britain that last April's elections, boycotted by the guerrilla groups, produced a government that is representative of most of the country's 7 million inhabitants.

"I shall proudly demonstrate by fact and reason that we have earned and deserved the lifting of sanctions and recognition," Muzorewa said Friday to the new black-dominated National Assembly, elected by 65 percent of the estimated electorate.

But Muzorewa's claim to represent the majority has weakened since the new "Government of National Unity," comprising his own dominant United African National Council and three other parties, came to power.

Muzorewa's chief rival, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, has refused to fill the 12 National Assembly seats his Zimbabwe African National Union won in the elections, charging the polls were rigged for Muzorewa's UANC. Then Muzorewa's partyvice president, former guerrilla leader James Chikerema, split to form his own party, protesting that the bishop ruled arbitrarily.

But with 44 of the 100 National Assembly seats — and guaranteed support from 28 white legislators — the bishop still wields power in Parliament. And, according to white aides, in tackling day-to-day affairs he "makes decisions fast, firmly and fairly."

Critics of his government point to apparent anomalies wherein the whites — only 3 percent of the population — not only hold one-quarter of the Cabinet posts but control, for at least five years, the army, civil service, courts, economy and police.

Some black supporters, impatiently awaiting changes that will better their lot, maintain the government is the same horse with a different rider.

"We don't care whether Muzorewa goes to Timbuktu or Washington or wherever," said Timothy Nziboro, an accountant. "We want an end to the war, we want more money in our pockets and we want jobs."

In London, Muzorewa will confer with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, whose Conservative government has taken a softer attitude towards Zimbabwe Rhodesia than have the Americans.

Christian Democrat Andreotti Drops Bid For Italy Premier

ROME (AP) — Christian Democrat Giulio Andreotti gave up his attempt to succeed himself as premier Saturday after failing to line up a parliamentary majority, leaving it to President Sandro Pertini to find a new leader — perhaps from a minor party.

"Whoever will be next, he certainly does not face an easy task," Andreotti told reporters after meeting with Pertini to explain his decision.

The president immediately opened a new round of talks with the leaders of various parties, meeting with 13 different political groups in a 6½-hour marathon. Presidential sources said Pertini would announce the new premier-designate Monday.

Andreotti, who has headed three successive governments since 1976, was unable to form the fourth when the Socialists refused to join a coalition that also included two small parties, the Democratic Socialists and the Republicans.

The Communists, the second-strongest party after the Christian Democrats, reaffirmed their 6-month-old refusal to support any government unless they are granted Cabinet seats.

The Socialists are demanding that Pertini pick a premier from a minor party, breaking the Vatican-backed Christian Democrats' hold on the country. The party has lead all 38 post-World War II Italian governments.

Pertini, a Socialist, might agree and reportedly tap either Democratic Socialist Giuseppe Saragat, an 80-year-old former president, or Republican Bruno Visentini, widely respected budget minister in the outgoing government.

Christian Democrat Secretary-General Benigno Zaccagnini said the premiership belonged to the biggest party. He reminded Pertini that the Christian Democrats held their own at 38 percent in the June 3-4 parliamentary elections while the Socialists drew just 9.8 percent. The Communists fell four percentage points to 30 percent in their first setback in an Italian general election.

Italy has been ruled by a caretaker government since January, when the Communists withdrew support for Andreotti.

Missionary Killed Near Roadblock

SALISBURY, Zimbabwe Rhodesia (AP) — Government troops shot and killed an Italian missionary doctor after she bolted an official roadblock 85 miles northeast of the capital, the military said.

The shooting took place Friday in an area heavily infiltrated by black nationalist guerrillas.

The missionary doctor, Luisa Guidotti, 47, of Modena, Italy, was a member for the Women's Medical Missionary Association, a Roman Catholic organization based in Rome. She was returning from the rural village of Motko when the incident took place.

A military communique said the doctor drove her car to a roadblock where security forces signalled her to slow down. She did so, but then turned away and accelerated down a side road, the statement said.

Soldiers fired six shots at the car and one of them hit the woman, the communique said. Miss Guidotti, who served in the southern African nation for 10 years, died soon after at a local hospital.

In June 1976, Miss Guidotti was charged with assisting a guerrilla after she had provided medical treatment to a wounded man. The government dropped te chargeswhen police learned she did not know her patient was a guerrilla.

Sources said the Catholic Justice and Peace Commission, an informal human rights watchdog organization, planned to investigate the shooting.

The incident occurred as ministers from the Organization for African Unity heard the new Zimbabwe Rhodesian government denounced by Liberian President William R. Tolbert.

After serving two decades as prime minister, Eamon De Valera was elected president of the Irish Republic in 1959.

Center Records Facts On Falling Debris

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Skylab is not the only junk from space to come tumbling down to Earth.

In the past decade, an average of six meteorites a year have been discovered around the world, according to the Center for Short-Lived Phenomena, although scientists believe many more meteorites hit the planet unnoticed.

No one has been injured by the falling debris, but buildings have been damaged, center director Richard Golob says.

Among the notable meteorite falls recorded by the center:

•On Sept. 16, 1969, a woman in Police, Czechoslovakia, heard a roar like an airplane and walked outside to see a flaming meteorite crash into her farmhouse. The impact damaged roof tiles and support beams in the house. The largest section of the shattered meteorite weighed nearly two pounds.

•On Sept. 28, 1969, a meteorite fell in Victoria, Australia, in about 30 pieces, weighing a total of about 10 pounds. One chunk damaged a barn roof and narrowly missed two farm hands.

•On Jan. 4, 1970 — a 22-pound meteor, emitting a fiery light described as brighter than a full moon and creating a sonic boom that could be heard for 60 miles, fell near Lost City, Okla.

•On April 11, 1971, a resident of Wethersfield, Conn., awoke at 6 a.m. to find plaster on the bedroom floor and a meteorite imbedded in the ceiling insulation.

•On March 8, 1976, a large fireball exploded and scattered into about 100 pieces in northeastern China. The largest single stone weighed almost 3,900 pounds, making it the largest meteorite ever recovered. The large meteorite fragment broke through a 6-foot-thick layer of frozen ground and dug more than 20-feet into the ground, sending clumps of dirt a distance of more than 100 feet. There were no reports of injuries or damage, even though the fragments landed in a heavily populated region.

•On Jan. 31, 1977, a white fireball with a yellowish orange tail exploded over Kentucky. The blast, which was heard about 200 miles away, caused minor damage to chimneys in the vicinity of Louisville. One fragment weighing about two pounds crashed into a farmhouse in a Louisville suburb leaving a 3-foot hole in a roof and breaking one support beam.

But, Golob notes, meteors and satellites are not the only items that sometimes fall from the sky.

In February 1974, about 150 small fish fell to earth near Killarney Station, Australia. The incident occurred during a low pressure tropical storm, and scientists speculate a current of air sucked the fish and some water out of the ocean and carried them over land.

Hospitals Seen Defaulting On Federal Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government may be stuck with millions of dollars in bad debts because scores of hospitals are losing money and appear likely to default on government-backed loans, congressional investigators said Saturday.

"The financial problems at these hospitals could lead to defaults, closures of modern facilities, and substantial losses to the federal government," the General Accounting Office reported.

Administrators of the loan programs didn't realize the severity of the situation because they neglected to monitor the loan repayments and spot those hospitals needing management help, the report said.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has provided about $1.5 billion in direct loans and loan guarantees financing 352 hospital construction projects. The Department of Housing and Urban Development insures mortgages totaling $1.7 billion for 140 hospitals. But HEW handles most administrative matters for the HUD program.

"HEW has not routinely monitored these hospitals' financial status and did not know the magnitude of their financial problems," the report said.

GAO investigators queried hospital officials about their financial status. Of the 341 hospitals which replied, only half said they were in good shape. Forty-four conceded they were in "poor" or "very poor" condition, and 124 ranked their status as "fair."

Four hospitals with loans totaling $30.5 million already have defaulted, the report said without identifying them.

HEW officials knew about money problems at only six of the 44 hospitals which acknowledged poor or very poor conditions, the report added.

"I don't think they realized the magnitude of the situation sitting out there," said a GAO source who requested anonymity. "It's a difficult situation," he added, saying HEW officials have made some improvements in their monitoring procedures.

The HEW inspector general, Thomas D. Morris, agreed with the GAO findings and acknowledged that inflation, the high cost of advanced medical technology, a surplus of hospital beds in many areas could lead to more loan defaults.

"To reduce the possibility of future defaults, HEW has initiated a rigorous loan monitoring system," he asserted in a letter to GAO.

Solons Urge Probe Of Cuban Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional investigation into what is described as "State Department failure to act" on intelligence reports of Cuban aid for Latin American revolutionaries is being urged by some congressmen and retired military officers.

A news conference Thursday sponsored by the American Security Council, Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, said the State Department has covered up "blatant Cuban-Panamanian subversion of Caribbean nations." He said a May 2 U.S. intelligence report publicized last week shows Cuban President Fidel Castro "is involved up to his ears" in organizing and arming revolutionaries in Nicaragua, Guatemala and El Salvador. Also participating in the news conference were Rep. John Murphy, D-N.Y., retired Army Gen. John Singlaub and retired Adm. Thomas Moorer.

SWISS PLANES GROUNDED

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Switzerland's national airline, Swissair, has decided to cancel service to Beirut indefinitely beginning July 15 because Israeli jets are buzzing the Lebanese capital, civil aviation sources said Saturday. "Each of these (Israeli) flights drew anti-aircraft fire from Palestinian guerrillas and Syrian peacekeeping forces in Lebanon," one source said, adding that flaming anti-aircraft shells often fell to the ground at the Beirut airport.

Congress Eyes Plight Of 26 Million Paying 'Marriage Penalty'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Experts estimate more than 13 million two-paycheck American couples are paying heavier federal income taxes simply because they're married. That means 26 million potential votes — and Congress is concerned.

The "marriage penalty" — or the bonus for "living in sin" — is not a new phenomenon. It was born 10 years ago when Congress tried to eliminate tax discrimination against single persons.

Efforts are made annually to reduce or eliminate the marriage penalty. Each time, it has failed, demonstrating the difficulty in keeping the tax laws fair while using tax incentives to reach social goals.

The latest attempt to reduce the marriage penalty is a bill by Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md., and Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J. They say the penalty undermines the family concept and gives couples an incentive for divorce.

The marriage penalty hurts families in which both spouses earn an income; it decreases as one spouse's share of the family income drops toward 20 percent.

Two single persons earning $10,000 each and not itemizing deductions would owe $1,177 each, or $2,354 total. If they married, their taxes would jump by $391.

If one of the two single persons earned $15,000 and the other $5,000, they would pay total tax of $3,837. Marriage would cost them another $150.

The penalty rises with income. A $20,000 earner and a $10,000 earner pay $5,014 in tax. A wedding would increase their tax bite by $679 a year.

Two provisions in the tax code are responsible for the marriage penalty:

•The "zero-bracket amount" — which used to be called the "standard deduction" — is $2,300 for a single person and $3,400 for a married couple filing a joint return. Two single persons get a total deduction of $4,600, or $1,200 more than the couple.

•"Marginal" tax rates, meaning those that apply to the last few dollars earned, are higher for married persons than for singles. This reflects the underlying philosophy that the tax laws should be progressive — that tax rates should rise as income increases. When the two spouses combine their income, the marginal rate goes up.

For example, if two singles earn $10,000 apiece, each is taxed at 30-percent rate on the last $1,000. The couple with combined income of $20,000 would pay a 37-percent tax on the last $5,000.

The marriage penalty poses no problem for what used to be the typical family — the husband earning all the money and the wife working only in the home. Such families benefit from the tax code's bias toward one-earner couples.

But two-earner couples now are dominant and, despite some modifications in recent years, advocates of change argue that the tax code has not recognized the trend.

Mathias and Mrs. Fenwick propose that the working wife and husband be allowed to file separate tax returns as if they were single. The husband would list his income, claim a $2,300 standard deduction and pay the same tax rate as a single person; the wife would do the same for her income.

Present law already allows couples to file separately, but few find it beneficial because married separate filers pay a higher tax rate and they get only one-half the couple's $3,400 standard deduction.

Critics contend the Mathias-Fenwick bill would cost the treasury an estimated $4.8 billion a year in lost taxes and would create a new bias in favor of two-earner couples; a single-earner family would pay more tax than if both spouses had jobs.

An alternative proposal, by Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, would keep present law but give married couples an additional deduction. This, too, would be expensive for the treasury and would increase the proportionate tax burden on singles.

Sydney J. Key, a Washington economist, recommends that every person's income be taxed at the same rate regardless of marital status.

Such an approach would wipe out the long-held notion that the government, through its tax laws, should recognize the worth of the family.

Garbage Haulers Negotiate Pact

LOS ALTOS, Calif. (AP) — Garbage haulers who serve a group of five San Francisco Peninsula communities have negotiated a contract that will pay them more than $400 a week within three years.

The agreement, ratified Friday by the Sanitary Truck Drivers and Helpers Local 350, ended a 16-day strike that affected Los Altos, Los Altos Hills, Cupertino, Woodside and Portola Valley. The garbage workers had been making $8.26 an hour. The new agreement adds $1.91 an hour spread over the life of the accord, plus cost-of-living and fringe benefits.

Refugees Flown To New Homes In U.S., France

By United Press International

American and French mercy planes Saturday flew hundreds of Indochinese refugees from overcrowded camps in Thailand and Malaysia to new homes and lives in the United States and France.

Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo of the Philippins, meantime, charged Hanoi was deliberately sending Vietnamese to death on the high seas to ease food shortages in Vietnam.

In Tokyo, the Kyodo News Service reported that a senior Vietnamese official larned Vietnam would not participate in any international conference on refugees "if it is used as a forum to whip up an antiVietnam campaign."

A chartered American plane left Bangkok with 199 refugees en route to San Francisco. Some of the refugees have families in the United States, others have sponsors.

They included 89 Laotians — 36 of them hilltribe people — 54 Cambodians, 53 Vietnamese boat people and three Laotian Vietnamese.

The Cambodians were among 40,000 refugees that the Thai government pushed back into Cambodia last month, but were saved a few days before the expulsion by being selected for resettlement in the United States.

More than 2,700 Indochinese refugees were shipped from Thailand for resettlement in the United States last month and a somewhat higher number are expected to be transported next month, an official said.

The United States announced last week it was doubling its annual admission of Indochinese refugees to 168,000 in hopes of persuading other countries to increase their quotas.

France announced it would admit 5,000 refugees from camps in Malaysia and Thailand in addition to the 40,000 already admitted in recent years.

The first group of 171 arrived in Paris Saturday from Kuala blumpur aboard a French Air Force DC-8 transport. All were from the Poulo Bidong camp where, they claimed health and sanitary conditions were deplorable.

Ranging in age from four months to 77 years, they were housed in temporary quarters before being sent to various townships throughout France for permanent homes and jobs.

In Manila in an interview taped for television, Romulo compared the Vietnamese refugee problem with Germany's extermination of Jews in World War II. He said the difference was that "while in the holocaust in Germany many Jews were killed in gas chambers, it is now a water method."

Romulo's statement was the strongest condemnation by any Philippine official so far of Hanoi's role in the Vietnamese exodus which has burdened neighboring southeast Asian nations with more than 300,000 refugees.

"It is understood that the food shortage hroblem in that country is such that the government is anxious to get rid of these inhabitants," he said. "They are in mid-ocean in boats that are like coffins."

Kyodo quoted Nguyen Co Thac, Vietnam's state minister in charge of foreign affairs, as telling journalists during a visit by Japanese communists that:

"It's true that a large number of Vietnamese people are fleeing the country but we have no intention of exporting refugees."

Thac accused China and the United States of "deliberately playing up the refugee problem with facts distorted."

Vietnamese authorities admitted that about 40,000 Vietnamese of Chinese ancestry had left the Cholon district of Ho Chi Minh City, the dispatch said.

A U.N.-sponsored conference on Indochinese refugees is scheduled in Geneva July 20,21. Most countries agree that little ccan be done without Vietnam's participation.

Tanzanian Forces Schedule Withdrawal From Ugandan Soil

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (UPI) — Most of the 40,000 Tanzanian troops that overthrew dictator Idi Amin will be withdrawn from Uganda in the next few days, Tanzania announced Saturday.

Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere said recently, however, that a residual force would remain in Uganda for at least two years to help the new government mainain order and to train a new Ugandan army.

The executive secretary of the country's ruling Revolutionary Party, Pius Msekwa, announced the troop withdrawal in the government newspaper, the Daily News, but did not say how many soldiers would be withdrawn immediately.

One reason behind the withdrawal, despite the political unrest in Uganda, may be the annual meeting of the Organization of African Unity, which has just begun in Monrovia, Liberia.

Sudanese President Jafaar Numeiry, the outgoing chairman of the OAU, said he plans to attack Tanzania's conduct of the war, which he described as a gross violation of OAU tenets against interference in the affairs of member states.

Another major concern for Nyerere is the staggering cost of maintaining what is essentially an army of occupation.

Tanzania was in virtual bankruptcy when the conflict began and Nyerere has estimated the war cost the Tanzanian treasury an additional $500 million.

Also, there has been a wave of violence and robberies in the Ugandan capital of Kampala over the past few weeks. Both Tanzanian and Ugandan Liberation Army troops have been blamed.

Government sources in Kampala told UPI that the residual force of Tanzanian soldiers will be moved soon from their billets in luxury hotels and homes to barracks.

About half of the Tanzanian force is composed of parttime soldiers in the People's Militia. They were drafted out of civilian jobs to fight in Uganda and are expected to be the first released.

"Preparations for the grand reception have been completed and within the next few days the soldiers will start leaving Uganda," Msekwa was quoted as saying.

The victory celebrations aill be held in the Kagera salient, a small triangle of land in northwestern Tanzania where Amin sent his troops on a two week orgy of looting and mayhem — the spark which touched off the war between the two states.

Mountain Man Shot Near Mother's Home

JAMESTOWN, Tenn. (AP) — A "notorious mountain man" who eluded authorities in his native east Tennessee while on the most-wanted list for four years was shot and killed early Saturday by an FBI agent near his mother's home.

Billy Dean Anderson, 44, was shot after he raised a rifle at an agent while crossing a field in the mountain community of Pall Mall, near the Tennessee-Kentucky border, the FBI said.

Anderson had been on the FBI's list of most wanted fugitives since Jan. 21, 1975, following his escape from the Morgan County jail in 1974 while serving a sentence for wounding a deputy sheriff. He was also sought for a bank robbery that occurred after the escape.

In the 1960s, Anderson was convicted of wounding a state trooper in a shootout that left his legs partially paralyzed. Although he usually walked with crutches, Anderson apparently was using a walking stick when he was killed, authorities said.

For the past five years, federal and local authorities had been unable to track Anderson in the rugged Cumberland Mountains.

The FBI described him as "a notorious mountain man who used his knowledge of the east Tennessee mountains to avoid arrest."

Fentress County Sheriff Tommy Williams said Anderson probably had been in the area for some time, eluding authorities with the aid of close-knit family members and friends.

The shooting Saturday occurred after Anderson was spotted leaving the home of his mother, Ina Hughes, shortly after midnight, said William J. Beavers, special agent in charge of the FBI's Memphis office. About 15 agents had staked out the house for an undisclosed reason.

Slaying Believed Work Of Assassin

HOUSTON (AP) — The slaying of a Houston family of three may have been the work of a professional assassin, Houston Detective Dave Collier said Saturday.

The bodies of John Wanstrath, his wife Diana and their 14-month old son Kevin, were discovered in their home here Friday morning. Each victim died of a single gunshot wound at close range.

Collier said a growing team of police investigators is looking into the possibility that the murders were performed by paid killers. Collier said the positions of the bodies inside the home indicated the possibility that more than two persons killed the family.

Wanstrath was sitting in a wing-back chair in his den as if someone "had been holding a gun to his head," Collier said.

Bureaucracy 'Jarred' Into Action

DETROIT (UPI) — Residents of a southwest Detroit neighborhood proved you can beat the bureaucracy. The secret weapon is a jar of dead cockroaches.

Members of the Sharon Street Block Club decided a year ago they could spruce up their neighborhood if they could get the Department of Housing and Urban Development to tear down a vacant and dilapidated HUD home.

First, they wrote HUD about it. They got promises.

Then they began making telephone calls to HUD. More promises.

Last week, after months of promises and no action, frustrated block club members collected a jar of dead roaches from the house and presented it in person to the local HUD Director.

The house was torn down Friday.

"It's a shame we had to go that far, but I don't really regret doing it," said club spokeswoman Margaret Smith.

"I'd call HUD and they'd say it belonged to a realty company," she said. "I'd call the company and they'd say they would tear it down in two weeks. When I'd call back, they'd say the house belonged to HUD. It was ridiculous."

Mrs. Smith, who lives next door to the abandoned home, said HUD contracted with G & H Demolition Co. last November to demolish the house within 45 days.

Steve Brown, HUD's Detroit area director, said his office notified the firm in June that it had defaulted on the contract but got no reply.

"We got no response from them," Brown said. "Apparently they had changed their address several times."

However, block club organizer Sharon Wollack said he had no trouble reaching the demolition firm.

"If I'm not mistaken, we got the number from HUD," Aollack said. "When we tried to find out the terms of the contract from some HUD People we were told that it was not our affair.

"That's an incredible answer in light of the fact that roaches were crawling from that house into the homes of these people."

Estes Trial Verdict Nears

DALLAS (AP) — A decision on whether Billie Sol Estes remains a free man or returns to a federal prison could be made Monday when a jury resumes its deliberation on the fate of the West Texas financial wizzard and convicted swindler.

Deliberations are to resume at 9 a.m. Monday following a weekend recess.

The 8-woman, 4-man jury discussed evidence in the federal fraud and conspiracy case for 7½ hours Friday but failed to reach a verdict on any of the 10 counts contained in three indictments.

In the 1960s, Estes stockpiled a fortune by selling mortgages on non-existent fertilizer tanks to hundreds of West Texas farmers. He was convicted in 1963 of fraud and was assessed a 15-year sentence. He served less than half the term in federal prisons in Kansas, Minnesota and Texas before being paroled in 1971.

Now, the 54-year-old former financier and his co-defendant, Raymond K. Horton, 51, are accused of masterminding a similar scheme to raise money by selling $600,000 worth of non-existent oilfield steam cleaning equipment to leasing companies.

The government has also charged the two men with concealing assets so Estes would not have to pay $10 million in back taxes.

Estes and former secretary Sue Goolsby also are accused of using documents bearing the forged signatures of Tyler millionaire Billy D. Pyron to secure loans for various business ventures.

Ms. Goolsby, however, will stand trial after Estes and Horton.

In all, Estes faces 10 charges and Horton six.

Orginally, Estes could have been sentenced to 101 years in prison if convicted. But an indictment for tax evasion and two counts of mail fraud have been dropped since February. He now could be sentenced to a maximum of 80 years in prison and fined up to $82,000.

Meanwhile, the 51-year-old Horton could be sentenced to a maximum of 50 years in a federal institution and assessed $60,000 in penalties.

The government's case centers around records stolen from Estes' office by former Mississippi promoter Don Trull, who claimed Estes and Pyron owned him more than $1.3 million.

The records, including a document alleged to be a trust agreement between Estes and Horton, were shown to several newsmen more than two years ago by Trull, who boasted they would bring a second, hidden Estes empire to its knees.

MORE DRILLING

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drilling for oil and natural gas in the United States rose by nearly 7 percent in the first quarter of 1979, but the increase will not significantly cut U.S. dependence on imported oil, the American Petroleum Institute said Friday. The API, the oil industry's chief lobbying arm, said "current political and economic uncertainties have made it difficult for producers to raise the capital they need to expand drilling to any great extent."

Confiscated Handguns Now Going To Dealers Instead Of Hole

By TRAVIS BROWN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

After more than a 10-year interval, the city of Lubbock once again is in the business of selling handguns.

Before 1968, when Lubbock was a smaller, and safer, city to live in, police auctioned to the public the handguns it confiscated.

But then police became concerned that they were putting these confiscated weapons right back into the hands of criminals.

"We used to have these auctions on Fridays, and by Monday, we'd already have some of those guns back with us," one police official said.

So the police began destroying all confiscated handguns, once they had served their purpose in court. The guns were cut up, and then buried in a deep hole on city property.

"It just wasn't worth taking a chance on an officer's life by selling these Saturday Night Specials,' said Police Chief J.T. Alley.

"We finally realized that what we were doing wasn't morally right," said City Purchasing Agent Floyd Nesbitt, who organized the auctions. "I don't know how many lives we saved by cutting those guns up."

The city's handgun destruction policy stood until this year. Police wondered if there might be a more practical way to dispose of the 1,500 to 2,000 handguns stored in the police property room.

After checking with the city's legal department, the police found they could sell the guns to licensed gun dealers.

"We thought it was a waste to destroy these guns, when we could put them back into the hands of legitimate gun dealers," Alley said. "Plus, we realized we vere cutting up money that could go into lhe city's general fund."

The city's first handgun sale was held in May, when about 100 guns were offered to 26 local gun dealers. The guns were sold to Huber's Pawn Shop, 805 Broadway, for $1,418.

Although police and city officials agree that selling handguns to individuals was dangerous, they defend selling the guns to dealers.

"These dealers have to be careful about who they sell to, or they can lose their license," Alley said. "But, I believe the dealers will put the guns back into the hands of good citizens."

"These dealers will get guns from someone else, if not us," said Nesbitt. "Plus, they do a tremendous job in keeping track of who they sell guns to. I feel like this is the right thing to do."

One man who opposes the city's new handgun disposal method is a gun dealer himself. Swat Smith, owner of Swat's Loans, says he disagrees with police reasoning that selling only to licensed dealers will keep the guns from criminals.

"The police don't know where these guns are going," Smith said. "I don't understand their way of thinking about this."

Smith agrees that most gun dealers, including pawn shops, don't sell handguns directly to people who use them to commit a crime.

"But the guns get to criminals indirectly, when they steal them from the people who bought them," he stresses.

Claiming he's getting out of the Saturday Night Special business, Smith says he threw the city's bid list for the May gun sale in the trash.

"This city doesn't need to make money selling guns," he said. "And I want to know what they are going to do when one of their cops gets his head shot off with one of these guns they've sold."

Police officials say they don't believe destroying the handguns serve as a deterrent to crime.

"We found that cutting up handguns won't keep the thugs from having them," said Cpl. Bill Gabriel, who is in charge of the police property room. "The thugs will get guns one way or the other, even if they have to make one out of a piece of pipe."

The last time confiscated handguns were destroyed was in the summer of 1977. Since then, a large backlog of pistols has built up in the police property oom.

Early this year, police checked with assistant city attorney David Reagan, who said the city could legally sell the guns to licensed gun dealers through competitive bidding.

Reagan admitted that the selling of handguns to dealers might have the same result as selling them to individuals did — the guns might wind up right back in the police department, confiscated from a criminal.

"This could be called a kind of test," Reagan said. "And if these guns start coming back to us, then we'll probably start destroying them again."

The city purchasing agent said he was surprised at the $1,418 the city received from the first gun sale. Another sale of 100 guns is underway, with bidding to end July 13.

"We thought that if we could get that kind of money, then we should do so," Nesbitt said. "It's not a whole lot of money. But every little bit helps."

When the City of Lubbock was cutting up handguns, Nesbitt said he received comments from several "gun freaks" in city hall who said they hated to see a good gun destroyed.

Now that the handguns are being sold again, Nesbitt said he's also received a few comments from those "wanting all confiscated guns cut up."

Prosecutors Ready Final Davis Assault

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — In an era of sequels, it might be called "Cullen II" or even "Cullen III." But many feel the murder-for-hire trial beginning Monday will be the final criminal proceeding against millionaire Cullen Davis.

Both sides say it will be a grueling ordeal, a supreme test of the judicial system. If a jury can be found here, observers say, the proceedings could run through Thanksgiving.

Davis, 45, is charged with masterminding a summer 1978 plot to kill the judge presiding over his divorce proceedings and a dozen other people on an alleged enemies' list. None of the people on the alleged list was killed.

The defendant maintains he was set up and framed by a greedy, vindictive ex-wife who insists he killed her daughter in a bloody 1976 shooting spree.

An Amarillo jury acquitted Davis of the murder charge. A Houston jury failed to reach a verdict in the later murder conspiracy case.

Since the mistrial, Priscilla Davis has won a $3.4 million divorce settlement, and Davis has married his longtime girlfriend, Karen Master, and moved back into his $6 million hilltop mansion.

Prosecutors admit privately the new trial will probably be the final attempt to convict Davis on a multitude of pending charges. The state, not the defendant, is running out of money, at least as far as taxpayers are concerned.

The state already has spent more than $500,000 prosecuting Davis in three Texas cities. According to attorneys for his ex-wife, Davis has spent perhaps $7 million for his defense.

The Davis story — which has spawned two books, two records and millions of words in news coverage — dates back to Aug. 2, 1976. A man in black, wearing a woman's wig, invaded the Davis mansion and shot four people. Two died.

Killed were Priscilla Davis' lover, Stan Farr, and her daughter, Andrea Wilborn, 12. Mrs. Davis was wounded, and a mansion visitor, Gus Gavrel Jr., was crippled when a bullet lodged in his spine.

Priscilla Davis, now 37, Gavrel, 24, and Gavrel's date, Beverly Bass, now 21, identified Davis as the gun-wielding intruder.

After the longest, costliest murder trial in Texas history, an Amarillo jury deliberated little more than four hours before acquitting Davis of murdering Andrea.

Eight months after the verdict — on Aug. 20, 1978 — federal, state and local officers arrested Davis and charged him with soliciting the murder of Judge Joe Eidson, then the presiding judge in the long and bitterly contested Davis divorce case. Eidson was not harmed.

The state's case hinged on two taped conversations between Davis and FBI informant David McCrory, the key prosecution witness.

FBI agents videotaped the second meeting and seized Davis minutes later when he stepped from a telephone booth at a restaurant.

Davis took the stand two days after Christmas to deny complicity in the murder plot. He said he thought he was cooperating with the FBI when he met McCrory and discussed killing Eidson, Priscilla Davis, Gavrel, Miss Bass and others.

Furthermore, Davis testified, he went along with McCrory in an attempt to head off a plot on his own life, purportedly conceived by Priscilla Davis.

Prosecutors branded the story "patently ludicrous" but the jury, after deliberating six days, deadlocked 8-4 for conviction.

After the mistrial, Davis was released on $30,000 bond and will remain free pending the outcome of the new trial.

Oil, Gas Leases On Auction Block

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department has scheduled a July 31 sale of Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas leases off the coast of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Texas.

The sealed bids will be opened in New Orleans for 126 tracts covering 592,097 acres. The U.S. Geological Survey estimated the area could hold from 20.9 million to 50.9 million undiscovered recoverable barrels of oil. Recoverable cubic feet of natural gas could range from .697 trillion to 1.36 trillion cubic feet, the survey said.

Skylab: Some Levity Via Gravity

By The Associated Press

Even something like the fall of Skylab can't squelch Americans' humor. Some, with an "it-can't-happen-here" attitude, are daring Skylab to hit them; others are laughing all the way to the bank.

One Bellevue, Neb., neighborhood near Offutt Air Force Base painted a huge target in the middle of its cul-de-sac street. "Maybe Skylab will fall here. We thought we'd give it something to aim for," said resident Patty Stahl.

Ken Peterson of Minneapolis threw a Skylab party where guests wore helmets, carried butterfly nets and ate a cake complete with space capsule crashing into the icing.

A Minneapolis Tribune cartoonist, noting that Skylab carried a supply of mashed potatoes and pudding, recommended a Skylab splatdown picnic: "Supply your guests with spoons and bowls and wait for the fun to begin."

Skylab, scheduled to break up in the atmosphere between July 10 and July 13, also has brought out the entrepreneurs.

Stores in Montgomery, Ala., were selling 8-ounce bottles of "Skylab Repellant" with a money-back guarantee. For those actually struck by a piece of the 77-ton vehicle, the stores had "Skylab Impact Balm."

And in Atlanta a radio station gave away T-shirts labeled "Official Skylab Targets" with imprinted bull's eyes. Its promotion said: "Think of the fame, think of the glory — think of the mess."

A firm in Kansas City is thinking of the money. Seat-of-the-Pants Management has sold 12,000 paper Skylab Helmets at $2 apiece. The company stresses that the headwear doesn't protect you from falling Skylab parts, but you'll be "appropriately dressed for this once-in-a-lifetime event."

Another helmet distributor, Brad Rudolph of Denver, says he plans to stand in the open when the pieces start falling. "Can you imagine how much money you'd make if that thing hit you?" His poster-board helmets contain an "early warning spike" protruding from the top to give ".00193 nanoseconds of warning" before Skylab hits.

And yet another entrepreneur, Steve Danzig of Bloomington, Ind., is selling an "Official Skylab Survival Kit." It includes a helmet that Danzig describes as "Skylab citizen protection helmets as printed in the Federal Register." The federal document covers a wide range of topics, but Skylab helmets isn't one of them.

Songwriter Mike Nobil of Gorham, Maine, has penned a ditty that advises: "Learn to do the Skylab hop, and you'll be safer when she drops ... The reason for this dance is this, a movin' target's harder to hit."

Skylab, despite warnings to the contrary, should be treated as a joke, says University of Minnesota physics professor Cecil Waddington, who scoffs at fears of danger to humans.

"Isn't this the season when man bites dog is a headline?" he asks. "The funniest story will be when the whole thing disappears and nothing happens."

'Not Resigning'— Somoza

National Guard Shoots Up Red Cross Offices

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Anastasio Somoza, declaring anew that he is not resigning, called a meeting of Congress in his bomb-proof bunker, Saturday, as the national guard reported advances against guerrillas in the nearby city of Masaya.

In Costa Rica, the Sandinista guerrilla command rejected Somoza's latest reported conditions for giving up power. The Sandinistas, who control almost all of Nicaragua's urban centers, remained confident of military victory.

U.S. Embassy and Red Cross sources reported that national guardsmen shot up Red Cross offices in Managua, wounding some Nicaraguans inside and taking others away.

At Joint Session

Somoza summoned a joint session of Congress in his bunker headquarters, and before entering the meeting declared, "I'm not resigning."

Congressman Francisco Argenal said 17 of 30 senators and 55 of 70 congressmen, most of them members of Somoza's Liberal party, attended the 10-minute session. He told reporters Somoza said he would not resign while fighting continued and that his government was winning the war.

There was speculation that the large number of congressmen went to the meeting becaue they knew it was not a working session and also because some thought the president was going to step down.

In an interview published Saturday in the Washington Post, Somoza was quoted as saying, "I'm like a tired donkey fighting with a tiger." The newspaper said he was preparing to resign, but that he still demanded that the United States guarantee that his national guard not be disbanded and that his Liberal Party have representation in any new government.

A Sandinista spokesman in Costa Rica rejected these conditions.

No Somozans Allowed

"Our position is clear. We will not let any elements of Somoza integrate the provisional reconstruction government," he said.

The guerrillas have set up a five-member provisional junta that is to take over if the Sandinistas succeed in overthrowing Somoza, thereby ending his family's 42-year rule.

Max Kelly, Somoza's top aide, charged in an interview with The Associated Press that U.S. Embassy officials here were attempting to force Somoza to resign by driving a wedge between him and top officers of his national guard.

Kelly said the embassy officials "are resorting to dirty tricks" by making approaches to guard colonels behind Somoza's back.

"The United States is threatening us with an oil boycott and there are all sorts of other threats. They had the Israelis stop two arms shipments that were under way at sea and headed for Nicaragua," Kelly said in the interview, which was cleared first by Somoza.

U.S. Position Clear

In response, U.S. Embassy public information officer Jim Fitzgerald said: "We have made it clear in public and private that we think President Somoza's leaving office is critical for a peaceful, democratic solution to the Nicaraguan crisis.

"We have not considered any possibility other than the president's resignation and the formation of a broad-based democratic government," Fitzgerald said.

In the fighting, Kelly said government troops had penetrated the rebel-held city of Masaya, 20 miles south of the capital.

Government warplanes have been bombing, strafing and rocketing guerrilla positions in Masaya for several days in the opening shots of what is billed as an all-out assault to retake the city.

The Rev. Ernesto Cardenal, a spokesman for the Sandinsta Natioal Liberation Front, told reporters in Costa Rica that government planes had dropped napalm and flaming gasoline on parts of Masaya, and ground troops fired machine guns at non-combatant residents.

The reports on the Masaya fighting could not be independently verified.

American Embassy sources said national guardsmen burst into the Red Cross offices in Managua, Friday night, wounded three young men and took away seven others.

Ismael Reyes, Nicaraguan Red Cross vice president, said the guardsmen shot up the building. He also said the soldiers stopped a Red Cross ambulance in the capital's streets Saturday morning and took away three male nurses and their driver. He said another Red Cross worker had been arrested by government troops, Saturday, in Jinotega, about 70 miles north of Managua.

Guerrilla Radio Sandino reported that its forces, which control the northern city of Leon, had overrun a national guard fort at the edge of town Saturday, wiping out the last guard stronghold in the area.

A government spokesman said the guard troops were pulled out of the Leon fort to fight elsewhere.

Soldier Admits Killing Newsman

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A 17-year-old national guardsman faces trial by a military court for the June 20 killing of ABC News correspondent Bill Stewart, it was reported Saturday. The guard said the youth claimed the shooting was accidental.

Col. Manuel Sandino Mendez, head of the three-man national guard board investigating the killing, said Santiago Carrasco faces a maximum 30 years in prison if convicted. Nicaraguan law has no provision for capital punishment.

Sandino Mendez said Carrasco was ordered held after he testified before the board of inquiry, June 30, and the specific charges against him would be determined by a military court.

Stewart was shot at a national guard roadblock in an eastern Managua neighborhood, and the killing was filmed by an ABC camera crew. The film showed a guardsman order the newsman to the ground, then fire a shot into his head at close range.

Sandino Mendez said that Carrasco, whom he identified as illiterate and an orphan, at first denied any knowledge of the killing. But he said when the board of inquiry told Carrasco it would show tapes of the killing, the suspect declared, "I'm going to tell the truth."

The colonel said Carrasco testified he joined a national guard auxiliary unit only three months before the incident and had been assigned to help deliver ammunition to troops in east Managua, where fighting with guerrillas was heavy at the time.

Sandino Mendez quoted Carrasco as saying that on June 20 the group delivering ammunition left without him and when he saw a light-complexioned man — Stewart — approach he ordered him to lie down in the street.

He said he kicked the man and intended to hit him in the head with the muzzle of his M-16 rifle, but the safety was off and the weapon discharged, according to the colonel.

He said Carrasco told the board he did not know Stewart was a journalist.

Carrasco testified that seconds later he heard another shot and saw the body of Stewart's Nicaraguan interpreter, Francisco Espinoza. He told the board he was told a Cpl. Lorenzo Brenes shot the interpreter, but did not testify that he saw him do it, Sandino Mendez said.

Mayor Proposes Citywide Seminar In Move To Combat Rape Epidemic

because she is terrified.

Why do women continue to live in the area?

Mrs. Morris cites three reasons: the Tech dorms are full, the area is close and convenient to the campus so students don't need cars, and the housing is inexpensive.

"There's no other place to live if you don't have a car," she says, so "it's going to attract students."

She described West's suggestion that a citywide seminar be held as "fantastic" and says she is "delighted" her visit has produced such rapid results.

As part of the educational process, Mrs. Morris says she would "like to see women have gun lessons, so they feel comfortable enough to defend themselves."

However, she acknowledged there might be "a lot of accidents" if the guns were not used properly.

She also suggested harsher penalties for rapists and a prohibition against allowing rapists out on bond "so they can commit 20 more."

Rape Crisis Center assistant director Pat Riley had other suggestions aimed at helping women prevent rape.

She said women should be told what they can do to a house or apartment to make it safer; approximately half the rapes in Lubbock occur in the victim's home.

Also, she suggested a discussion of what women should do if they find themselves in an assault or rape situation. That would include a presentation of the pros and cons of using weapons or resisting the attacker.

"Everyone has to make up their own minds" about what they would do, she says, emphasizing that women need to "think about it ahead of time."

Since the Rape Crisis Center began operation in March, 1975, there have been only three aquittals in rape cases, Miss Riley notes proudly.

However, many cases still await action on overcrowded court dockets, she says, so an accurate picture of the sentences being handed down in rape cases is unavailable.

"The problem is, there really is no deterrent," she says. "The rapist is going to rape."

District Attorney John Montford agrees.

"I know we've got too many instances (of rape) and something's got to be done," he says.

"It doesn't look like good, solid prosecution is the answer."

Montford says he's "all for the seminar," adding that there are many preventative things women can do to keep from becoming victims.

"We've had good sentences," he said. "It just doesn't seem to get the message across."

Montford believes women should eliminate as many opportunities as possible for rapes to occur.

Often rapists enter houses through unlatched screens, Montford said, or women "are in areas they shouldn't be," accept rides with people they don't know or go out with people they barely know.

Montford said he is "totally dissatisfied" with his office's progress on reducing the number of rapes in Lubbock County.

Recently, he implemented "drastic changes" in the way his office deals with the crime, and members of his staff are investigating successful anti-rape programs in other cities and states.

Most of those changes deal with the prosecution of accused rapists, Montford notes, but he refuses to divulge details of policy changes.

The seminar proposed by West likely will be held in August in conjunction with the return to school of Tech coeds.

Strike, Fuel Shortage Multiply Moving Woes

not because of the truckers' strike but because of the usual busy time of year and the gas situation.

"A lot has to do with gas. Last year we didn't have the fuel problem, and things ran smoother," she said.

"Prices are horrible," she said. And while gas usually is available in smaller Texas towns, "the biggest problem is in Dallas and Houston."

One of her company drivers last week waited almost four hours in line at one of the handful of stations in Houston at which he could fill his truck's enormous gas tank, Miss Wagnon said.

"He can't just go to any gas station for gas," she added.

Armstrong Moving & Storage Inc. manager Mark Piercy, who said he believes the strike-related situation has eased, seconded Miss Wagnon's assessment of the fuel problem in Dallas and Houston, and noted a problem truck drivers interstate are having.

Partly because of the strikers and partly because of closed pumps, the truckers are forced to drive only during the daytime, thereby lengthening their transit time, Piercy said.

The other industry representatives contacted agreed the daylight driving restriction hampers their operations a bit.

When they do gas up, truckers find the costs much higher than they had been, and this ultimately is passed on to the customer in the form of a 7 percent transportation charge.

Gary Pass, co-owner of Delta Moving and Storage Co., noted that the Interstate Commerce Commission implemented the charge June 28 to combat the fuel costs.

The pass-through money is returned to whoever actually pays for the initial gas, Pass noted, explaining that if the trucker owned the rig he received the reimbursement.

The pass-through means that for a $200 move, the customer will pay an additional $14 for fuel costs, Pass added.

Despite the high fuel and transit costs, however, all the industry representatives agreed Lubbock is lucky in that there is plenty of gas here and that the Southwest in general has fewer shipping problems than other parts of the nation.

Miss Wagnon noted, for example, that North American Van Lines' agents in the Northeast have been ordered to cut off shipping orders until September. When asked what people there who want to move will do, she replied, "I don't know."

Spelce said, "It's better here than anywhere else. I don't know why, except maybe it's less populated. I know we're in a lot better shape than anyplace east of the Mississippi."

He also predicted that because of the backlog caused by several weeks of strikes, it will be September before the situation returns to normal.

Piercy summed up the others' words about what customers can do to avoid problems now: "In order to give yourself the best shot for a move, give the moving company plenty of advance notice."

Memo Says Blame It All On OPEC

the Energy Department's "enormous credibility and management problems ... which equal in public perception those which State or Defense had during Vietnam (whether fairly or not)."

The only truly substantive step called for creation of a World War II-style National Energy Mobilization Board to select projects in the country's interest.

In an indication of White House annoyance at the memo's being made public, press secretary Jody Powell described it as the work of Eizenstat's staff rather than the domestic policy adviser himself.

Powell said Eizenstat "would not have let his name" be signed to a memo "filled with such rhetorical excess" if he hadn't been preoccupied with such problems as the gas shortage and the truckers' strike.

But Carter, who received the memo during the Tokyo economic summit, appears to have followed Eizenstat's recommendations almost point by point.

The president has been meeting in his isolated Camp David retreat in Maryland this week with governors, cabinet officials and top aides in what the White House described as a "domestic summit conference."

Sunray Co-Op Station First In Texas To Offer Gasohol

small towns like Etter or Cactus — within two years. If the Panhandle could manage such a plant in the near future, the price of gasohol could conceivably drop several cents while gasoline's price continues escalating.

Denatured alcohol has been selling for as much as $1.35 a gallon on the open market, so it unlikely a large commercial plant could be built.

But State Rep. Dan Kubiak of Rockdale, the man primarily responsible for the gasohol legislation, told The Avalanche-Journal he has visited plants in Colorado and Kansas where alcohol is being manufactured for as little as 45 cents per gallon. Should a High Plains facility make alcohol at or near that price, area gasohol could sell at well under the price projected for gasoline.

It appears the Sunray plant may not be alone for long. Applications for other gasohol and alcohol plants are beginning to appear in the government offices set up to handle them.

A spokesman with the Alcoholic Beverage Commission in Austin said his office has received about 40 requests for applications for the new gasohol permits, but added that only the Sunray plant had been licensed.

Herschel Stewart, an adviser for the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the federal agency involved in gasohol licensing, said the ATF Dallas office is getting about 15 applications a week from a seven-state area from Wyoming to Louisiana.

There are two types of gasohol licenses, Stewart explained. "The small operators — individual ranchers and the like — can apply for an 'experimental spirits" license, but any commercial operation must get the standard distillery license."

Applications to the ATF must be made on letterhead stationery and must describe the materials to be used, the equipment involved, storage and security procedures and the use planned for the fuel.

The tough part for the small operators is the posting of a bond covering an estimated 15-day production of alcohol. "We're trying to get a setup where you can get the small licenses without the bond," Stewart said. "That would sure make it easier and cheaper to get started."

Processing time for the completed application and the bond is about 30 days. The ATF permit is required only for those planning to make their own alcohol. Persons wanting only to acquire alcohol and mix it with unleaded gasoline need only the ABC permit.

As the gasohol flows in the panhandle, Kubiak is fighting a battle downstate to get his alternative fuel spread around.

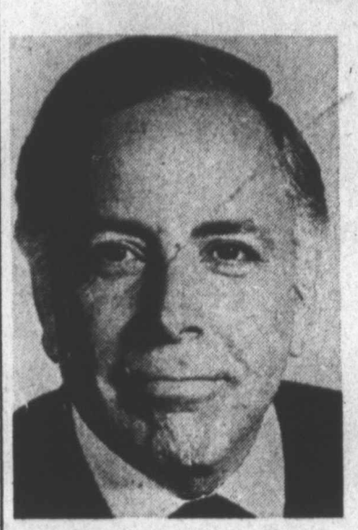
The central Texas lawmaker, who recently saw funds for a proposed gasohol pilot plant in his home district vetoed by Gov. Bill Clements, says he has found some investors so sold on the hybrid fuel that they are going to build the pilot project on their own.

"Farmers in central Texas may never have to wait in gas station lines again," Kubiak said as he announced his plans. "If diesel truckers and other fuel users catch on to alcohol fuels in Texas, we may be able to beat the high gas prices and long waiting lines that some places are already suffering."

The plant, to be built in Rockdale, could be in operation as early as November, making it perhaps the first alcohol production plant in Texas.

There are no lines at the co-op in Sunray and, if all goes as planned, that town's fuel soon may be the least expensive in the state.. Graham took a deep breath and smilingly said, "Don't you just know those people in Dallas and Houston would trade places with us right now."

Hispanic Chamber Conference Sets Fernandez Address



BENJAMIN FERNANDEZ

Presidential candidate Benjamin Fernandez is scheduled to address delegates to the first national conference of the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce July 20 during a statewide convention of businessmen in Lubbock, July 19-21.

Fernandez, a Republican, is the first Hispanic to seek the office of the presidency as a candidate of a major political party.

Hosted by the Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce (TAMACC), the three-day convention and conference also will include the first Hispanic trade fair sponsored in this country.

All major activities of the TAMACC, the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and the trade fair will take place at Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

Fernandez, 53, a consulting economist, owns a firm specializing in organizing commercial banks and savings and loan associations. He is a World War II air force veteran.

The three-day series events will have a "significant impact" for Lubbock, says Raul Sanchez of Lubbock's Comerciantes Oranizados Mexico-Americanos (COMA). The city will be the site for the formation of the first national Hispanic chamber and the trade fair will bring numerous businessmen and purchasing agents to the city.

Sanchez noted that Hispanics in this country soon will become the largest minority group.

Honored at the Hispanic chamber conference will be Nelson Rodriguez, new Hispanic chamber president; Julian Padilla, treasurer; Julian Zozaya, president-elect; and Juan Zamora, vice president.

The new chamber of commerce will represent approximately 15,000 businesses and professionals.

A convention packet of information was mailed to approximately 20,000 additional businessmen located throughout the country, Sanchez said.

Texas Livestock Economist Foresees Families Buying More Chicken, Pork

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Families will find more chicken and pork on their tables in the next five years as the price of beef continues to skyrocket, a Texas livestock economist predicted.

But while the highest prices are yet to come, he said, the cattle industry is "bullish again," and should be able to offer lower prices by 1984.

"There's no way on God's green earth consumers will be paying less for hamburger until then," Edward Uvacek Jr. told the marketing committee of the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association here this week.

Uvacek, a livestock marketing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, also warned the group that attractive prices for pork and poultry products are persuading consumers not to buy beef.

Uvacek said the higher prices are to be expected as part of a growth movement in the cattle market.

"The real prices you received for calves increased 118 percent from 1975 to 1979," Uvacek said. "The best prices usually come in the second to sixth year. If this prospect holds, we're looking at better prices during the 1980-84 period," the economist said.

"If that isn't stimulating, I don't know what is. We are bullish again," he said.

Uvacek presented graphs showing that cattlemen now are in the same building phase as they were in 1949, 1958 and 1967. However, he said price losses between 1967 and 1979 were drastic — 42 percent — because of double-digit inflation.

"We're trying to build herds at the same rate as the increase in demand for beef," Uvacek explained. "The cattle cycle is the cattlemen's reaction to profitablity."

Although prices for beef are high, not many cattlemen are able to take advantage of the bonanza because they are not selling animals to build their herds, Uvacek said.

"We're not selling cattle while the demand is high, so the prices go up. It doesn't take an economist to understand that," Uvacek said.

Looking at 1979 beef supplies available to consumers, Uvacek predicted there would be three to four percent less beef from fed cattle, 63 percent less from non-fed cattle — "That means no 'baby beef'" — and 23 percent less beef from cows and bulls, Uvacek predicted.

Overall, Uvacek expects a total of 10 percent less beef to reach consumers this year. At the same time, he expects 14 percent more pork, 10 percent more chicken and turke and two ercent less lamb and mutton.

"Beef prices are very high, while pork prices are very low, so pork is a viable competitor for beef," Uvacek said.

However, he said availability of poultry products should surpass pork for the first time this year.

"If somebody ever comes up with a chickenburger, the beef business is in big trouble," Uvacek said.

Granlund Convicted In Oil Fraud Case

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Texas oilman Ray Granlund was convicted of conspiring to defraud Florida Power Corp. of millions of dollars by illegally transferring oil during the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

Prosecutors described to a federal jury the "daisy chain" scheme of buying and selling oil through a succession of companies before selling it to Florida Power. The 72-year-old Granlund was indicted with four other oilmen, who were convicted earlier and given three-year prison term. Granlund, who is to be sentenced later, won a separate trial for health reasons.

His attorneys argued Florida Power had to pay higher prices for oil because it was buying on the spot market and refused to make a long-term contract with Charter International Oil Co.

Rangers Reveal Winning Image

By MIKE RABUN

ARLINGTON (UPI) — It's been eight years since the Washington Senators packed up and moved to Texas to the delight of a scattered few and the disinterest of millions.

And for the first time in their checkered history — highlighted by wholesale trading and six managerial changes — the Rangers actually look dangerous enough to win a division championship.

It comes as quite a surprise, of course, since the club that gathered in Florida this year didn't seem to be as good as the one that collapsed in July of last year.

"At first I really didn't think we were as strong as we had been before," admitted Jim Sundberg, the golden-glove-winning catcher who has seen the Rangers' hopes rise and fall for the past six seasons.

"But when we left spring training, I knew we had a good chance. It wasn't something that hit you all at once. It was something that grew on you."

It also was something that took awhile to grow on the paying customers.

For one thing, they had grown used to preseason promises turning into midseason regrets. And they were having a hard time telling who was who — of the 25 now on the Ranger roster only 11 played fulltime for Texas last year.

But most of the fans developed a wait-and-see attitude about the Rangers because bad things kept happening to them.

John Matlack, expected to be the ace of the pitching staff, missed the first month of the season with elbow problems and right-handed slugger Richie Zisk fell into a batting slump from opening day.

Sundberg failed to hit early in the year, second baseman Bump Wills and shortstop Nelson Norman made a horrendous number of errors in the first few weeks, starters Doyle Alexander and Dock Ellis (since traded) were having a hard time throwing strikes and center fielder Al Oliver — batting .304 — sprained a wrist that still has him seeing only occasional duty.

So why on earth are the Rangers in a battle for first in the American League West?

Among some of the reasons are the fact that Buddy Bell is playing an excellent third base, Oscar Gamble (despite missing a month of the season with a fractured foot) is hitting around .400, first baseman Pat Putnam is making an honest run at rookie-of-the-year honors and Ferguson Jenkins still has an occasional one-hitter in him.

"But most of all this club has two major things that we've never had before," said Sundberg. "One is the bullpen (mainly Jim Kern). We've got 14 wins and 22 saves from the bullpen. We've never had anything like that.

"The other thing is the bench. We've had a lot of injuries, but people have come in and done the job.

"I think right now we are the best team in our division. The thing that makes us better than Kansas City or California or Minnesota is that nobody has a bullpen like ours, nobody has a better defense and we have an excellent bench.

"That's how Kansas City has won this division these last few years, with its bench."

Finally there is the matter of Pat Corrales, 38, the Rangers' rookie manager, who has been quick to go to his bullpen, quick to use his bench and slow to get too excited too early.

"We've just played half the season," Corrales said. "We've got a long way to go."

But would Corrales have been happy with the club's record had he known some of his top players would have a bland start?

"Damn right," he said.

Corrales also has been given much of the credit for producing a happy clubhouse, something the Rangers have not always had.

"Pat just hasn't gotten all the credit he deserves," said third base coach Frank Lucchesi, a former Texas manager who was dismissed by owner Brad Corbett two years ago and rehired as a coach last winter.

Borg Struggles To Fourth Crown

King Makes History

BLURRED VISION — Sweden's Bjorn Borg closes his eyes and slams down on a service Saturday during his championship match at Wimbledon. The speed of his racquet left only a blurred image. Borg won, for his fourth straight men's singles championship. (AP Laserphoto)

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Bjorn Borg clung to his Wimbledon title to make modern tennis hitory Saturday, while Billie Jean King set another record, one tinged with sadness.

Borg edged Roscoe Tanner 6-7, 6-1, 3-6, 6-2, 6-4 in one of Wimbledon's closest and most exciting finals. He won the crown for the fourth straight year — a feat achieved by no other man since 1913.

Tanner played one of the matches of his life, served 16 aces and was a hero in defeat.

Mrs. King teamed with Martina Navratilova to win the women's doubles and reached an all-time record total of 20 Wimbledon titles.

But missing from the 17,000 who watched the veteran bespectacled star was Elizabeth Ryan, who held the old record of 19 titles. Miss Ryan, 88, had been on the grounds of the All-England

(Finalists' Comments, Pages 2, 8, Sec. B)

Club Friday, but collapsed and died shortly after Miss Navratilova beat Chris Evert Lloyd 6-4, 6-4 to retain the women's singles crown.

Miss Ryan, who walked on crutches, was at the tournament every day until the end. She won her titles, all in doubles, between 1914 and 1934.

Saturday Mrs. King and Miss Navratilova defeated Wendy Turnbull of Australia and Betty Stove of the Netherlands 5-7, 6-3, 6-2.

Tanner, the big-serving left-hander from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., had a mountain to climb on the center court, and got to within sight of the peak.

He led by two sets to one. In the final set, down one service break, he led 15-40 on Borg's service in the eighth game and came desperately close to unseating the champion.

Tanner attacked all the way. He went to the net on Borg's service and took risks that often paid off. But in the end, his big serve and newly rounded game were not enough.

In the fourth and fifth sets Borg won the big points, and they made the difference.

"That is how it has been the whole tournament," said the 23-year-old Swedish star, who had not had an easy path to the final. He dropped two sets to Vijay Amritraj and one each to Tom Gorman and Brian Teacher.

Tanner's chances rose and fell with his service. When his first service was on target, Borg had little recourse. But in the latter stages, Tanner's first serve wavered. In the whole 2 hours and 50 minutes, Tanner's first service scored 96 hits and 79 misses.

"I know I missed a lot of first serves, but Borg had something to do with that," Tanner said. "I was trying to serve as close to the lines as possible. I wanted to prevent him getting into any sort of rhythm against my service."

While Tanner pressed forward to the net, Borg spent much of the match on his baseline and fired passing shots down the lines.

Tanner missed a big chance in the opening game of the final set, and it proved costly. Serving at 30-40, he moved forward and failed to put away a smash. He sent it straight at Borg who got behind the ball and, from behind the baseline, sent a backhand flashing past his opponent.

That gave Borg a service break, and he held on to his lead despite several critical situations. Tanner had three break points in the second game but Borg held him off.

Leading 40-15 against service in the eighth game, Tanner hit a forehand into the alley. Next Borg dropped a short one and Tanner failed with a half-volley.

The danger was over for Borg and he was never in the same danger again. But he needed four match points before clinching the first prize of $40,000. Tanner saved the first two with fine backhands, and the third with a cleverly angled volley.

In the last few games the crowd was roaring after every point, and the umpire repeatedly called for silence.

The last man to win four straight wimbledon titles was Anthony Wilding of New Zealand, who did it 1910-1913. Two of the old-timers did even better in the early days. Willie Renshaw and Lawrie Docherty each won it five times in a row. But in those days, the defending champion only had to play the final, or challenge round, taking a bye through all the preliminaries.

Borg said he will be after another Wimbledon record next year. In winning his fourth title he has won 28 Wimbledon matches in a row. Rod Laver won 31 in a row, over a span of 10 years.

Mrs. King had been stuck at 19 Wimbledon titles since 1975, when she won her sixth singles crown. Each year since then she has come near to a doubles triumph but failed each time.

The record appeared to be eluding her again when she and Miss Navratilova lost the first set against Misses Turnbull and Stove. But in the end they were good winners.

"The sad news of Elizabeth Ryan takes some of the joy away from this occasion," King said. "I had looked forward to talking to her today."

Protests Rock Games; Injured Skater Sparkles

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — A determined roller skater, who won a gold medal on a fractured leg, and a 72-pound junior high school student provided some surprising heroics for the the United States Saturday at the VIII Pan American Games.

At the same time, the U.S. won a track and field protest that put high school long jump star Carl Lewis back in the games.

The American swimmers continued their spectacular successes — now an almost-expected thing — and the track and field athletes got off on the right foot. But it was the amazing performance by a largely ignored crew of teenage gymnasts that stole the show.

Among them was 13-year-old Jackie Cassello, who attends Farquhar Junior High in Silver Springs, Md.

She's 4-foot-9 and weighs 72 pounds, including the braces on her teeth, which were bared in a broad smile when she ascended the victory stand to receive a gold medal for the vault.

Miss Cassello also took a silver in the beam, while Jeanine Creek of Great Falls, Mont., won the gold in floor exercise and Heidi Anderson of Allentown, Pa., tied for the silver in the same event.

The girls' performance — largely at the expense of the Cubans, who were expected to dominate the gymnastics — was the shocker of these Games.

The gymnasts had come in as the poor relations of the American team. All the United States' best gymnasts had skipped the Games. Spokesmen for the American delegation openly predicted a U.S. medals shutout.

The American men gained only one of the 18 gymnastic medals presented Friday night.

Then the girls, high school and junior high school students — the tiny Miss Cassello; the red-haired, freckle-faced Miss Anderson, and Miss Creek took over.

Including the silver medal Miss Creek won in free exercise Thursday, they collected an astounding five — two gold and three silver — in a sport in which they were supposed to be blanked.

So complete was the surprise that the press booklet containing background information on the American delegation to this 22-sport festival didn't even have a section on gymnasts.

Perhaps the most courageous medal, however, was the gold performance — the last act in an international career — by Natalie Dunn of Bakersfield, Calif., in the individual roller skate dance.

Miss Dunn, a three-time world champion, competed and won while skating in pain from a stress-fractured bone in her left leg. She announced her retirement immediately after her triumph.

She has had trouble with the leg since undergoing surgery late last year. Her father and team officials said the stress fracture of the tibia occurred while she was practicing her routines after arriving in Puerto Rico.

Lewis, the national prep school record-holder from Willingsboro, N.J., missed his morning trials and, at that time, was eliminated from the competition.

Bob Kane, U.S. Olympic Committee president, protested. An American team spokesman said the United States had been advised that all 15 long jumpers entered would be in the finals. Only by accident did they discover there were to be trials early in the day.

The protest was upheld and Lewis was put in the final field.

The United States also got a world record performance from Mary Meagher of Louisville, Ky., 2:09.77, in the women's 200-meter butterfly as they again swept the night's swimming and diving gold medals.

Jan Merrill of New London, Conn., won the first track and field final. The 1975 Pan Am 1,500 meters champion scored by some 25-30 yards in a new Games event, the women's 3,000 meters. She was timed in 8:53.59.

Bramlett Loses Cap, Captures '80' Crown

By CHUCK McDONALD
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Jeff Bramlett, a Texas Tech tennis signee and the No. 1 seed in the championship boys' 18 singles at the Lubbock Highway 80 Tennis Tournament, won the title match, 7-6, 6-3, Saturday morning at the Municipal Tennis Center.

But there is much more to Bramlett's victory than meets the eye — or the hat.

You see, just before Bramlett stepped onto the court to face Houston's Fred Viancos, he ran into a slight problem. His favorite hat — his "lucky cap" — was literally snatched off his head and not only did he have to contend with Viancos' smashing serves but he had to wonder about his head.

For the last couple of years Bramlett has trusted his head to a cap of the burnt-orange variety — one that carries the name of the University of Texas. It was hardly the kind of thing to flaunt in a Lubbock tournament only months before he begins a career with the Red Raiders.

Or at least that was the way the Cliff Hopping family, with whom Bramlett was staying during the tourney, felt about it.

"They tore my cap right off my head," said Bramlett. "And before I had time to do anything about it, they gave me this one," he added touching the bill of his new cap.

And what color is this new cap? Well, red and black, naturally — with Texas Tech stamped on it, just as big as life.

"It's just that I'd always worn that Texas hat," explained Bramlett. "But I guess this is my lucky cap now — it doesn't seem like I have much choice."

"That's right," said Cliff Hopping. "Because I threw that other one in the trash. I'm not going to have you wearing that thing around here."

Hopping's resentment toward the burnt orange is understandable; his son Coke Hopping will be the masked rider for the Raiders this fall. The conflict of interest was inevitable.

Bramlett had his hands full with Viancos in the early going Saturday and the first set went to a tie-breaker. But the Midland native won the tie-breaker 5-0 to win 7-6 and take command of the match.

"He (Viancos) had a heck of a serve," said Bramlett. "I was in trouble a couple of times, but then I'd just reach up and give my new cap a little tug and everything was under control," he added with a smile.

The Bramlett-Viancos match was probably the feature of the tournament and among the large crowd watching the show was Tech coach Mark Hamilton.

"Jeff was supposed to win this tournament and I'm glad he did," said Hamilton. "He's been playing really well this summer — you know he won the Midland Open last week."

And in winning the Midland tourney, Bramlett had to defeat Lubbock's Doug Davis in the finals. Davis was the Raiders No. 1 player last year before leaving the squad this summer.

"That was a tough match," recalled Bramlett of his victory over Davis. "I lost the first set 1-6 and then had to go to a tie-breaker in the third set to win it."

Of course last week Bramlett was still playing with his UT cap — that could've made the difference.

In the girls championship 18 finals, Kirsten McKeen of Richardson defeated

Cubs Blow Houston Out Of Windy City

CHICAGO (AP) — Mike Vail drove in four runs with a homer and a pair of singles Saturday to lead the Chicago Cubs to an 8-3 victory over the first-place Houston Astros and a doubleheader sweep.

Scot Thompson, who sat out the second game in favor of Vail, drilled five successive singles and drove in two runs to back the three-hit pitching of Ken Holtzman for a 6-0 triumph in the opener.

Vail had a single in a four-run second inning featuring Tim Blackwell's two-run double, hit a two-run homer in the third and singled across two more runs in the fourth.

Holtzman, 6-6, posted his second shutout of the season, both over Houston, while Dennis Lamp, 6-4, had a two-hit shutout working until the seventh inning when the Astros finally scored on a single by Terry Puhl, an infield out and a single by Denny Walling. He finished with a seven-hitter.

Holtzman gave up a single to Art Howe in the second inning and another to Julio Gonzalez in the third. Both Howe and Gonzalez were erased in double plays.

Houston's only other baserunner in the opener was Reggie Baldwin, who singled with two outs in the sixth as Holtzman retired 10 in a row on each side of Baldwin's single.

The Cubs scored a run in the first on singles by Ivan DeJesus, Thompson and Bill Buckner and a sacrifice fly by Kingman. Thompson singled in a run in the second and Ted Sizemore singled in another in the fifth before the Cubs put it away with three runs in the seventh on a run-scoring double by Holtzman and run-scoring singles by DeJesus and Thompson.

The Cubs struck for four runs in the second inning of the nightcap, two scoring on Blackwell's double, one on an error and another on a bunt single by Buckner.

Jerry Martin doubled to open the third and scored ahead of Vail's fourth homer. Two walks and a single by Kingman loaded the bases in the fourth before Vail delivered a two-run single.

Schmidt Homers Way Into Annals

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies' Mike Schmidt hit three consecutive home runs in the first six innings against the San Francisco Giants Saturday night and, counting a home run in his last at-bat Friday night, became the 14th player in baseball history to hit four in a row over two games.

Schmidt led off the second inning with his 25th home run of the season, and slammed his 26th in the third with two runners on base. The homers came off Giants right-hander John Montefusco. Then Schmidt opened the sixth with his 27th home run, this one off reliever Pedro Borbon.

The last major league player to hit four consecutive home runs in two straight games was Deron Johnson for the Phillies on July 10-11, 1971. Seven players in each league have accomplished the feat.

Billie Jean Fails To Rejoice

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Billie Jean King finally won her coveted 20th Saturday, a record for tennis titles at Wimbledon, but she was in no mood for rejoicing.

"All I could do was think of Elizabeth — it took all the joy out of winning," the 35-year-old matron queen of the game said after teaming with Martina Navratilova for the women's doubles championship.

Only Friday, the 88-year-old co-holder of the honor, Elizabeth Ryan, California-born but in recent years a London resident, was sitting in her regular center court seat for the women's singles final.

Shortly after Miss Navratilova beat Chris Evert Lloyd to retain the title, Miss Ryan apparently suffered a stroke. She was treated on the grounds, then rushed to the hospital. She died en route.

"It was really bizarre," Billie Jean recalled after catching her breath following the historic triumph over Wendy Turnbull of Australia and Betty Stove of the Netherlands 5-7, 6-3, 6-2.

"We were both from the same area of California. When I was a teen-ager, just beginning, I would see her around the Los Angeles tennis club. Everybody knew her and knew her record.

"I thought of her during the match. I found myself waking up thinking of her."

Miss Ryan was one of the leading women players in the era preceding and following World War I. Her mother was from one of the country's richest and most influential families, tracing her roots back to the Mayflower. Her father was an Irishman who crossed the country as a pioneer and made good.

Miss Ryan, who never married, made her reputation in doubles because she was the first woman to perfect the serve-and-volley game. Of her 19 Wimbledon titles, 12 were in women's doubles and seven in mixed doubles between 1914 and 1934. She played with the great Helen Wills.

"I talked some with her last year," Mrs. King said. "She told me that she would like to keep the record but, if it had to be bro

Brothers Nab Auto Race

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. (AP) — Racing brothers Don and Bill Whittington of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., sharing the driving with Klaus Ludwig of Germany, handily won the Six Hours of Endurance Race at the Watkins Glen Grand Priz Course Saturday.

The victory earned still another trophy for the Whittingtons, whose cars earlier this year won the 24 Hours of LeMans and a six-hour endurance race at Riverside, Calif.

A car driven by movie actor Paul Newman, car owner Dick Barbour of San Diego and Rolf Stommelen of Germany placed second, completing 171 laps, four fewer than the Whittingtons.

The one-two finish duplicated the finish at LeMans when the Newman-Barbour vehicle was second to the Whittingtons.

The Whittingtons' twin-turbo Porsche 935 averaged 98.45 miles an hour over the 3.377-mile course, well off the track record of 107.32 mph set by Jochen Mass in 1977 for that type of car.

But the winning team, which took over the lead about two hours into Saturday's race, was never pressed in the later stages and finished well ahead.

A car driven by Charles Mendez of Tampa, Fla., and Paul Miller was running second near the end of the race but lost a wheel and finished out of the running.

Miller, 33, is associate publisher of the Honolulu Star Bulletin.

Placing third overall was a car driven by Roy Woods of Oklahoma City; Bob Akin of Ossining, N.Y., and Rob McFarlin of Dallas. But they won the race for Trans-Am Class 2 cars.

Winning the Trans-Am Class 1 competition was a car driven by Bob Tullius and Brian Fuerstenau, both of Herndon, Va.

The Whittington machine rolled into the lead on the 49th lap when front-runner Danny Ongais of Santa Ana, Calif., crashed on a turn. He was not injured.

The Whittington car immediately went to the pit for fuel and lost the lead for five laps but regained it on the 55th lap and stayed in front from then on.

Early in the race, the Barbour-Newman-Stommelen car traded the lead several times wit a car driven by Bruce Leven of Seattle and Hurley Haywood and Peter Gregg, both of Fort Lauderdale.

But the car ran out of gas on a back turn with Gregg driving and Haywood had to walk nearly a mile, lugging several gallons of fuel in a gas can to get it going again.

Four men were burned, one seriously enough to be taken to a hospital when a car caught fire in the pits while being refueled.

Race spokesmen said fuel overflowed and apparently ignited the car's hot brakes, sending flames shooting 20 feet into the air before they were extinguished by safety crews and firemen.

The flames heavily damaged the car driven by Gary Belcher of Miami and Hal Shaw Jr. of San Luis Obispo, Calif.

Crew members William Thane, 28, of Palo Alto, Calif., suffered first-and second-degree burns of the right arm and first-degree burns of the face and right leg. He was treated at the track and taken to a burn center at St. Joseph Hospital in nearby Elmira.

The other three suffered only minor injuries.

Al Johnson Wants To Arrive On Time

SAN ANGELO (AP) — One of the more predictable aspects of the Houston Oilers' preseason training camp is that special teams star Al Johnson is the first veteran in camp. The problem last season was that Johnson also was the first to leave camp, telling Coach Bum Phillips he had lost his desire for football and intended to retire.

Johnson's interest returned, however, after about one month of retirement and he returned in time to help the Oilers' stretch drive that took them within one game of the Super Bowl.

"I'd conditioned myself too hard," Johnson said, recalling his brief retirement last year. "By the time I got here, I was too tired. I didn't want to push myself anymore. And, because I felt like I'd be cheating myself and Bum, I made up my mind to leave."

Johnson returned with the Oilers sputtering with a 5-4 record and when he became the first veteran in camp again this year, he had benefited from last year's experience.

"I was careful not to overdo it this off-season," Johnson said. "Instead of working seven days a week, I'd go four. Instead of putting in six hours, I'd do three. But by the end of March, I weighed out at 176 pounds. I've tried to stay steady since then."

Britz Grabs Lead At LPGA Tourney

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Jerilyn Britz, seeking her first pro victory since joining the tour in 1974, carded a 4-under 68 Saturday to take a 2-stroke lead into the final round of a $100,000 Ladies Professional Gold Association tournament here with a 138.

Miss Britz, 26, from Luverne, Minn., had four birdies on the back nine of the 6,044-yard par-72 Harbour Trees Golf Club.

Judy Rankin, who won here in 1977, shot herself into contention with a tournament record 66, placing her in second place two strokes behind the leader.

Mrs. Rankin had six birdies on the back nine, including four in a row from the 10th to the 13th holes.

Shelley Hamlin, Sandra Post, Hollis Stacy and defending champion Jane Blalock were tied for third at 141.

Miss Stacy, tuning up to defend her U.S. Women's Open championship next week, had a 33-34 to move from 2-over into contention.

"I'm concentrating more and zooming in on the Open. Everything seems to be falling into place," she said.

It took a score of 154 to avoid the cut for today's final round of the Mayflower Classic.

"I've changed my putting completely," said Miss Britz, a former schoolteacher who didn't start playing golf until she was 17. "Everything is different — my stance, grip and stroke."

Miss Britz said she made her change just prior to finishing second in the LPGA Championship earlier this year.

Accountants Headline Golf Slate

By CHUCK McDONALD
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

This golf tournament is, to say the least, a little different. It's been called a Duffer's Delight, a Hacker's Haven or just a Las Vegas crap game.

The real name of the tournament is the annual National Association of Accountants Golf Classic. The one-day, 18-hole tournament is scheduled next Saturday at the Pinehills golf course and is the main attraction of this week's golf schedule.

Just get a load of these rules:

Flights are not determined by the caliber of play but by the blind luck of tee-off times, and the final scores are tabulated by another innovation that only an accountant could dream up — a system called the Banker's Handicap System.

Once the golfers turn in their scores, the tournament officials will draw from a hat three holes from the front nine and another three from the back nine. Depending on those six holes a handicap is determined. In other words, how a golfer does on those six holes determines his flight and that insures that anything can happen.

Entry fee is only $12.50 and tournament officials are expecting around 300 golfers to come out for the fun. Later in the day all NAA members will play against each other in a separate event.

For you serious golfers, there is still a trophy for the lowest score turned in for the day, and several other goodies planned for flight winners.

Golf clubs and shoes will be offered through a raffle give-away — but your entry fee is also your raffle ticket. There will also be a hole-in-one contest in which the winner recieves the free use of a new card for a year.

Interested golfers can contact either Ken Field or Bill Bruffey and sign up early. Field can be reached at 762-0241 and Bruffey at 747-2721.

The NAA uses this event as its primary fund-raiser for the year and annually hands out $2000 in scholarship money for accounting students at Texas Tech University, Lubbock Christian College and Wayland Baptist College.

Several other more conventional tournaments are also on tap in the area next weekend.

Olton Country Club is having a partnership on Saturday and Sunday, the 36-hole tournament has several openings still available and the entry fee is $60.

Saturday's scores will be used to flight the contestants. Interested golfers should contact Harold Payne at (806) 285-2595.

The Lorenzo Country Club was still looking for 34 teams to fill out its partnership slated for the upcoming weekend. The rules are similar to those at Olton and the entry fee is also $60. Golfers will tee off at 9:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. on both days.

Interested golfers can call Larry Klafka at (806) 634-5787. Klafka has been the pro at Morton but on Monday is moving to Lorenzo and will be in charge of the upcoming tournament.

On Saturday, the Levelland Country Club will host the annual String-A-Long tournament. Also on tap is the South Plains Women's tournament at the Plainview Country Club on Wednesday and the Plainview CC pro-member on Thursday.

Midland's Vickie Vasicek 1-6, 6-1, 7-5 for the title.

Miss McKeen's victory over Miss Vasicek was somewhat of a surprise since Miss Vasicek had knocked of the No. 1 seed, Lila Hirsch, in the semifinals. But after dropping the first set 1-6, Miss McKeen took command.

Only two Lubbockites reached the finals — both in the non-championship flights — and both had to settle for runnerup medals.

Jimmy Burkholder, the No. 1 seed in the open boys 14 flight, lost to Shannon Livingston in the final and Leigh Mires fell in the open 16 girls title match to Renata Hasek of Midland.

The tournament also featured doubles competition in each age bracket of the non-championship flights for boys, girls and mixed couples. All the but one-doubles title will be decided today at the Tennis Center with matches beginning at 8:30 a.m. The one exception is the girls 18 doubles match that was to be played late Saturday night.

The only singles title left to be determined is the boys open 16 championship, also slated for this morning.

Nelson Leads At Western

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Larry Nelson birdied the last hole with a 35 foot putt to shoot a 70 Saturday for a 6-under-par 210 and a one-stroke lead over charging Tom Watson after three rounds in the Western Open. Nelson has a 54-hole total of 210.

Watson, the leading money winner who would boost his season earnings by $54,000 to $431,674 with victory today, had another adventurous round over the demanding Butler National course in perfect golf weather.

He opened with three straight birdies but settled for 35 on the front side before blazing back with a 33 for a 68, the lowest round of the tourney and the only score below 70 Saturday.

Watson's 54-hole tally of 211 includes only 23 pars. The rest is made up of 18 birdies and 13 bogeys.

"I used to play like that four our five years ago — a lot of bogeyes and a lot of birdies," said Watson, who is pursuing his fifth tourney triumph of the year and his third Western Open.

"If I don't make any major mistakes tomorrow I might pull it out. But there's always a chance of making a big number on this course," said Watson.

Watson's back nine included a 25-foot birdie putt on the 11th after he had three-putted the previous two holes for bogeys. He dropped an 8-footer for birdie on 12, a 30-footer for another on 15 and holed a 60-foot chip for one on the 18th after a trap cost him a bogey on 17.

Nelson, No.5 on the money list, and Bruce Devlin were co-leaders after 36 holes. The 41-year-old Devlin sagged to 76 for even par 216 while the little Georgian hung in there like a tiger. Nelson, whose first victory was the Inverrary last March, made one major mistake in an otherwise steady 34-36 round. He opened with two birdies, strung out nine pars before getting another birdie and then after a regulation 3 on the 13th he made his first double bogey of the tournament.

Nelson drove a fairway bunker and hit his his second shot into the lake. He was off the green in four, chipped six feet from the cup and made the putt to salvage a 6.

After three pars, the unshakeable Nelson stroked in his 35 foot birdie putt on the 18th to put the frosting on his round.

"For the most part I played pretty well the last two days," said Nelson. "I never really came close to making a bogey today except on 14. I think a 5-under will probably win tomorrow. But I hope it's 6-under."

Four strokes out of the lead at 214 was young Dan Pohl who has missed the cut in six tournaments and failed to qualify in seven others this year. He fashioned a 71 that included birdies on the third and fourth holes and a 200-yard ace with a four-iron on the fifth.

Ben Crenshaw with a 71 was at 215 and Bobby Wadkins with a 70, Jim Simons, John Fought and Mick Soli were grouped at 217.

Doc's Prescription Makes Jays Feel Blue, 2-0

By The Associated Press

Doc Medich and Jim Kern combined on a one-hitter as the Texas Rangers defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 2-0.

Medich, 2-3, was forced into action when John Matlack, originally scheduled to start for Texas, complained of tenderness in his left elbow after warming up prior to the game. The only hit for Toronto was John Mayberry's two-out single in the second inning.

Medich got relief help from Kern in the seventh after walking Rico Carty with two out. Medich had retired 15 straight batters before issuing the walk. Kern went on to pick up his 15th save.

Texas scored both runs in the sixth as Buddy Bell drove in one with a ground ball and Oscar Gamble raced home on a wild pitch.

Medich outdueled Toronto starter Dave Lemanczyk, 7-6, through five scoreless innings before John Grubb singled to open the sixth for Texas. Gamble followed with a single, and a sacrifice by Pat Putnam set up Bell's run-scoring ground ball. Gamble scored on Lemancyyk's wild pitch.

TIGERS 6, BREWERS 3

Ron LeFlore tripled and scored the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning and Steve Kemp knocked in three runs with a homer and two singles, leading the Detroit Tigers to a nationally televised 6-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Pat Underwood, 3-0, survived a three-run Milwaukee second inning and retired 13 successive batters over one stretch until he needed help in the seventh. Aurelio Lopez pitched out of the jam and earned his fourth save.

YANKEES 8, A'S 3

Reggie Jackson, who used to play for Oakland, knocked in five runs, one on his 14th homer of the season, and led the New York Yankees to an 8-3 victory beat the A's.

Jackson has four homers and 11 runs batted in since coming off the disabled list June 9.

PADRES 11, METS 3

Jerry Turner's bases-loaded triple sparked a four-run first inning that moved the San Diego Padres to a 11-3 victory over the New York Mets.

Turner's hit drove in Ozzie Smith and Paul Dade, who had both singled, and Dave Winfield, who had been walked by New York starter and loser Dock Ellis, 0-2.

GIANTS 8, PHILLIES 6

Consecutive seventh-inning homers by Jack Clark and Mike Ivie helped the San Francisco Giants survive three consecutive home runs by Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt and record an 8-6 triumph over the Phillies.

There were seven home runs hit in the contest.

Clark's two-run shot was his 16th homer of the season, and Ivie's 11th provided the three-run seventh that rallied the Giants from a 6-4 deficit.

On April 17, 1976, Schmidt joined an elite club of only 10 to hit four homers in one game when he accomplished the feat against the Cubs in Chicago. Actually, Schmidt had four straight — counting one he hit in his last at-bat Friday night.

BRAVES 10, CARDINALS 2

Charlie Spikes drove in four runs and Glenn Hubbard had two doubles and a single to power the Atlanta Braves to a 10-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Three of Spikes' RBIs came on a three-run home run in the bottom of the third after Rowland Office and Joe Nolan each singled. Spikes' blast, his third of the year, came off Silvio Martinez, 6-3.

Atlanta scored three runs in the bottom of the second. Nolan singled, Hubbard doubled and Pepe Frias singled in Nolan.

INDIANS 9, TWINS 3

The Cleveland Indians pounded out 14 hits including a two-run single by Cliff Johnson and a pair of RBI-singles by Bobby Bonds in a 9-3 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Mike Paxton, 5-4, yielded the Twins three runs in the first inning, but settled down to scatter 10 hits.

Cleveland picked on Minnesota starter Darrell Jackson, 1-1, for five runs over the first four innings, including a solo homer by Gary Alexander in the second and Johnson's game-tying two-run hit in the third.

Oh Shiney Aims For Revenge

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Oh Shiney will get another shot at Black Sable when he tries to avenge his only defeat of the season in today's 15th running of the Rainbow Derby, second leg of the Triple Crown for 3-year-old quarter horses.

Revenge, however, won't be all that's on the line for Old Shiney as the handsome colt will be battling Black Sable and eight others for one of the richest paydays in quarter horse racing. The Rainbow boasts a gross purse of $542,000 that provides $187,950 to the winner.

Black Sable is expected to go off as the betting favorite by virtue of being the top qualifier fmr the 440-yard scramble at Ruidoso Downs. The speedy filly owned by Spencer L. Childers of Fresno, Calif., edged Oh Shiney by half a length in last month's Rainbow trials with a soli-1 22.01-second effort.

But Oh Shiney, who had won his previous three outings this year for owners B.H. and Ruby Lee of Dimmitt, figures to once again give Black Sable a strong challenge. Oh Shiney's 22.07-second clocking in the time trials was the second best time turned in among the ten horses earning berths in the big money sprint.

Black Sable has come on strong this year after winning but one race and earning only $10,342 as a 2-year-old. The speedy filly has improved her career mark to 4-5-1 in 14 starts with a 3-1-1 record in six outings this year. And the $54,550 she has picked up along the way has pushed her total earnings to $64,892.

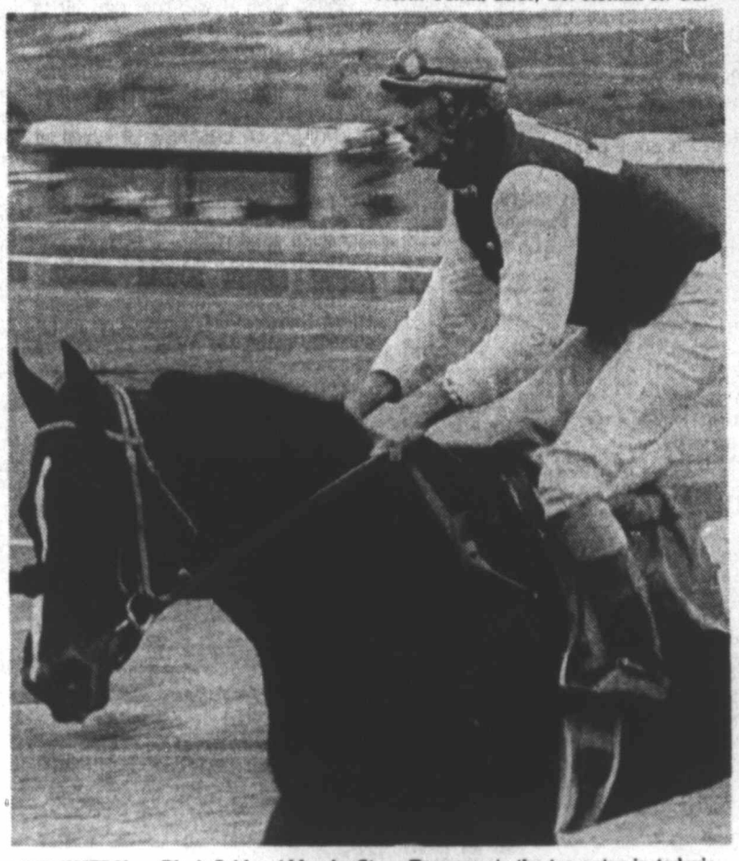
Oh Shiney sports a 7-2-3 mark in 15 career outings with most of the $70,040 in earnings coming as a 2-year-old. In his four outings this year he has won $5,660 for his 3 first-and 1 second-place finishes.

The top threat to Black Sable and Old Shiney appears to be Holme Maid, a filly owned by Frank G. Merrill of Purcell, Okla., and Charles R. Weik of San Antonio.

Holme Maid will take the best money line into the race, having earned $96,263 with a 6-1-3 record in 11 career starts. She was impressive in the trials as she breezed to a two-length victory with a time 22.08 seconds that tied for third best.

Here is the rest of the field with qualifying times and owners: Rocket Lights, 22.09, Jacqueline E. Spencer, Carrizozo, N.M.; Dickys Fireman, 22.13, Lyle Simmeli, Roy Farnam and Sonny Field, Macdoel, Calif.; Larkin Royal, 22.15, Darrell Kissee, Miami, Okla.; Lil Misty Mixer, 22.16, Circle M Ranch, Edmond, Okla.; Shebester Bug, 22.16, Ralph W. Shebester, Wynnewood, Okla.; and North Tenth, 22.16, Dr. Roman R. Garza, McAllen.

In action Saturday, That's Class, a 6-1 longshot directed by Danny Summerow, turned in a late attack and upset heavily favored Fols Native in the 13th running of the Peter Hurd Handicap.



TOP ENTRY — Black Sable, ridden by Steve Treasure, is the top entry in today's Rainbow Derby at Ruidoso Downs. The California filly has won $54,550 in six outings this year.

Shipley Lands First Big Tuna

By TED J. SIMON
Avalanche-Journal Outdoor Editor

Alton L. Shipley of Lubbock has been fishing for 45 years. Until recently his fishing has been limited to bass nd catfish in freshwater lakes.

Consequently, saltwater deep-sea fishing was definitely on the agenda when Mr. and Mrs. Shipley visited Hawaii for the first time.

When the Lubbock plumbing contractor arrived in Hawaii, plans were immediately made for a deep-sea fishing trip.

But, Shipley was momentarily disappointed when he learned that his first deep-sea fishing experience would be for tuna.

"I thought of tuna as relatively small fish that were simply flipped into a boat," noted the Lubbockite. "The boat captain assured me that tuna could be quite large and were very good fighters."

An hour out from the island of Kona, where the water is a mile and a half deep, Shipley's lure suddenly went down, dragging the 100-pound-test line after it.

Bracing himself in the fighting chair of the 30-foot boat, the Lubbock angler recalled, "That reel started zinging like a siren!" The tuna's weight and strength were quite evident and proof that a yellowfin tuna had been hooked. "I'd get him reeled halfway in and he'd take off again."

In the book Salt Water Game Fishing, author Joe Brooks writes: "Any way you go for the yellowfin you are in for a long, bruising fight. They are active fish, not just monsters that dive and dog it. They keep moving, keep you working, and when you land one, regardless of size, you feel you've done a job. They are a bragging fish."

Twenty minutes went by, then 30 minutes as Shipley reeled in line only to see it go back out again and again. The action was so continuous that there was no time to relax for a few seconds or take a sip of water.

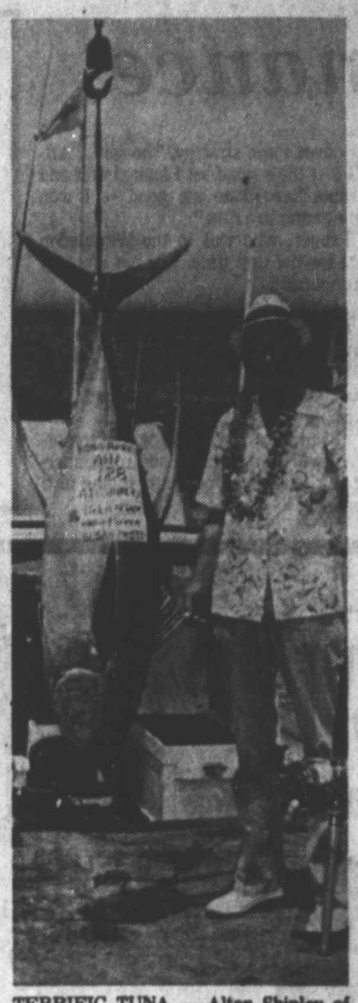
"You've got to keep working at it to keep the slack out of the line," explained Shipley. As the angler worked, the boat's captain and mate kept the craft positioned in relation to the fish. Several times the expert crew quickly reversed the engines.

After 45 minutes of pumping the rod and reeling in line, Shipley brought the big tuna to the stern of the boat. The dark blue fish was accented by a white belly and bright yellow fins.

"I was completely exhausted," recalled Shipley, "and couldn't even stand up as the fish was hauled on board." The fighter weighed 128 pounds and measured 69 inches in length.

"After being a freshwater fisherman for so many years," said Shipley, "catching such a fish was a real experience for me. The fish is being mounted, but I don't know where I'm going to put it. I may have to hang it in my garage."

Plenty of wall space is definitely needed. It isn't the kind of tuna you simply flip into a boat.



TERRIFIC TUNA — Alton Shipley of Lubbock poses with a yellowfin tuna he landed in the waters of Kona, Hawaii. It was Shipley's first deep-sea fishing experience.

Texans Find Yellow Cats On Trotlines

Avalanche-Journal News Services

The flathead catfish is the largest freshwater fish in Texas and, according to Joe E. Toole, P&WD biologist from Marshall, it remains an unfamiliar species to many anglers.

The flathead has many names from Opelousas in the eastern part of Texas to yellow cat in the west.

The color pattern of flatheads varies greatly according to the turbidity of the water. In clear water, the adult is dark olive brown with a mottled appearance. In muddy water, flatheads exhibit yellow tones and are commonly called yellow cats.

Successful flathead fishermen know their feeding habits and locations in the lakes and rivers, but primarily, flathead fishing requires the correct type of tackle and bait. A few anglers land big flatheads such as the 76-pounder caught in Lake Murvaul on a lure and a 20-pound test line. Flathead anglers using rods and reels prefer the heavier freshwater or light saltwater rigs.

Perhaps the most popular method of flathead fishing is using a trotline. A properly designed flathead trotline should consist of 6/0 or 8/0 O'Shaughnessy-style hooks, doubled No. 15 nylon seine twine for drop lines and a strong braided or twisted nylon main line.

NM Backpacking Trip Scheduled

An outing to North Fork Lake in the Pecos Wilderness of New Mexico will be conducted by The Packpacker in Lubbock.

Designed for on-the-trail experience, the outing will include basic backpacking techniques for beginning and intermediate hikers.

Participants will need to provide sleeping bags and toilet items only. All other equipment, food and round-trip transportation from Lubbock will be provided by The Backpacker.

The outing, priced at $124, will depart Lubbock on July 20, and return July 22. Participation will be limited to 10 persons for a proper leader-to-novice ratio. Detailed information is available from Robin Roberts or Bobby Nunn at The Backpacker in Redbud Square.

Swim Fatalities Mar WT Record

By J.D. PEER
Parks & Wildlife Dept.

Swimming in lakes in the Lubbock region leads the list of recorded water fatalities, according to Parks & Wildlife Department reports.

More than 52 water fatalities were reported during the past two years, 24 of the persons were swimming, seven were fishing, five fell into the water, and four were in vehicles that went into the water.

The availability of water or high-use areas leads the way as Lubbock's Canyon Lakes claimed nine of the victims and swimming is not even allowed in the chain of lakes. Lake Meredith, near Borger, accounted for five of the victims and Lake Colorado City claimed three.

Water activities are very popular in this area, and the P&WD suggests all participants do several things to protect themselves and others from becoming victims:

- Learn to swim. If you can't master the complete technique, at least learn to tread water so you can yell or wave your arms for attention should you find yourself in difficulty.
- Never swim alone. Even the best swimmer can become a distress victim due to fatigue, a muscle cramp or other such unforseen problem.
- If you are a nonswimmer, always wear a life preserver when you are around water.
- Never let a young child out of your sight around water. Glancing up occasionally while reading a book or talking to friends is not adequate supervision. Little ones can easily find themselves in water over their heads.
- Don't depend on an inflatable device or allow a nonswimming child to do so. Such devices easily tip over and occasionally rupture, leaving the nonswimmer with no means of support.
- Fence backyard pools and put locks on the entrances to keep young children out.
- Swim, when possible, where trained lifeguards are on duty.
- Always wear a life jacket when riding in a boat whether you can swim or not. The unconscious swimmer drowns as quickly as the nonswimmer.

The choices concerning water safety are yours, but as you make your decisions, remember they are truly life or death decisions.

To help you understand the basics of swimming and drownproofing, write for the pamplets "Drownproofing" and "Learning to Swim" from the P&WD, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin, 78744.

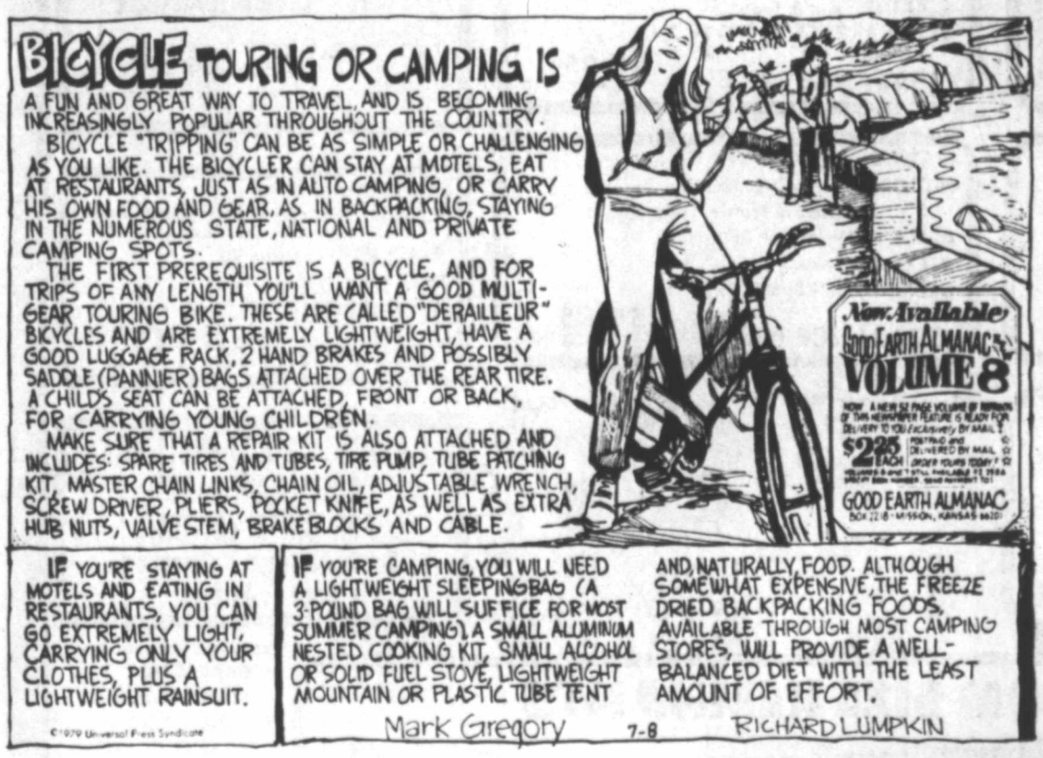
Good Earth ALMANAC



Where They're Biting

Buffalo Springs Lake — Bass are biting again with the lake back in good shape following July Fourth holiday. Malcolm Eldredge and Keith Morgan tested the waters and went home with several good size bass. Anglers interested in channel catfish should favor the dam area, along the rocks, with live minnows, cut or stink bait. The crappie action is sporadic, but perch fishing is excellent with worms.

Oak Creek Lake — "At the present time the channel cat are offering some of the best fishing going," reported Ike Pate at Sportsman's Lodge. Successful bass anglers are fishing early or late in the day. The perch are spawning and a cane pole with a cork will provide plenty of action for anglers young or old.

White River Lake — Doyce Gerrard and Paul Wilson of Lubbock proved the lunkers are there. The anglers ended a day of fishing with nine bass totaling 23 pounds. The top three lunkers hit the scales at 7, 6¾ and 6½ pounds. Pete Templeton had a string of five bass weighing 18½ pounds after sinking a plastic worm in deep water. Drop-line fishing has been excellent for channel cats. The water temperature is 79 degrees and the lake is in good shape.

Dolphins have the ability to see equally well both in and out of the water.

Tanner Proud Of Performance

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — "I still don't believe he is invincible," Roscoe Tanner said of Bjorn Borg after bowing to the Swede in the final at Wimbledon Saturday.

"He just played better than I did today," said Tanner.

Borg beat the American 6-7, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 for his fourth straight championship.

The 27-year-old left-hander from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., was obviously proud of his fighting performance against the 23-year-old Swede, who won his fourth consecutive Wimbledon singles title.

"I played a very good match against a heck of a good player," Tanner said afterwards. "You have to take chances against Borg. If you play carefully he is better than anyone at that. I tried to keep him out of rhythm.

"I feel I made a few errors I shouldn't have and missed a few first serves. But against Borg you have to go for shots and take chances.

"I know that I bothered him, and that my strategy presented him a few problems. You have to adapt something against Bjorn that is a little out of the ordinary."

Tanner's decision not to play safe gave Borg plenty of problems. Tanner led two sets to one and had a chance well into the final set.

"If I'd won at 15-40 to come back to 4-4 it could have been different," said Roscoe. "That point comes down to the match."

Tanner also felt himself getting stronger towards the end of the match.

"I felt his serve getting a little softer," he said. "At the end I felt good, I didn't feel tired. When I got back from 0-40 to deuce in the final game I thought I had a chance. If I'd got the deuce point I would certainly have been a lot better off.

"I kept working at it, because I felt being a break down was not an impossible situation."

Between sets, Tanner looked at a little notebook at his court-side chair.

"My coach Dennis Ralston had written down some strategy," he said. "After I lost the second set I looked at it and it must have done me good — I won three games in a row."

Tanner, who was in the Wimbledon final for the first time, was not awed by his opponent.

"I didn't feel nervous, tight or tense at all," he said. "I had no reason to feel nervous. There was no pressure on me.

"I was keyed up for the final, but being in a final isn't all that bad," he joked.

"I am sure I will feel worse tomorrow. I will start thinking and remembering my chances. You learn things in a five-setter."

ROSCOE TANNER

Champion Nervous In Match

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Bjorn Borg said he was so nervous as he neared his fourth straight Wimbledon title Saturday that he almost dropped his racket.

"Near the end of the match I had never been so nervous in my life. I almost couldn't hold my racket, I was so nervous," Borg said after beating American Roscoe Tanner 6-7, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 to make history. He is the first man to win four Wimbledons in a row since 1913, when the defending champions were only required to play the final round.

Borg said this was his most difficult Wimbledon final — more difficult than the one in 1977 when he defeated Jimmy Connors in five sets (and certainly far more difficult than his three-set cakewalk against Connors here last year).

Borg said his ambition is to go down in the record books as the greatest player of all time.

Now, he says, he will shoot for Rod Laver's record of 31 match victories at Wimbledon. Saturday's final was Borg's 28th consecutive success.

"I shall be going after Laver's record next year," Borg said.

Laver's winning run of 31 matches was spread over 10 years, with a five-year gap in the middle because he turned professional and was banned from the old amateur Wimbledon.

Borg's 28 wins have been in consecutive years, starting with his first title success in 1976.

Castro Assails Leniency

FIDEL CASTRO

MIAMI (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro says officials of the island nation's criminal justice system are showing too much weakness in efforts to fight crime.

Castro's criticism came after the office of the nation's chief prosecutor issued a report on crime to the opening session of the 1979 Cuban national assembly. No specifics were mentioned.

Castro said that steps had already been taken to strengthen police departments and other legal institutions, but he insisted on more action.

Castro made the charge in a speech broadcast by Havana Radio and monitored in Miami.

Pastor Seeks Gas Donation

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The Rev. J. Wesley Prince commutes 60 miles roundtrip to the United Congregational Church each Sunday. And in this day of gasoline lines and empty pumps, he's finding it harder to get to church on time.

Recently, he asked his parishioners to pledge five gallons of gasoline to his cause. No takers, so far.

New Job For Old Bootlegger

RYAN, Okla. (AP) — This south-central Oklahoma town has applied for a $48,000 grant from the U.S. Energy Department to build a gasohol plant. And the city manager is turning to former bootlegger E.E. "Ham" Graves for technical advice.

"He's an expert on this type of thing," City Manager George Hicks said of the 78-year-old self-proclaimed former whiskey maker.

The plant would manufacture ethyl alcohol and mix 20 percent alcohol and 80 percent gasoline to get gasohol. Supporters of the fuel argue it will help the nation cut its dependence on petroleum.

"We need him (Graves) to provide the technical know-how," Hicks said. "All the specifications for the gasohol plant submitted to the Department of Energy with our application were based on what he told us about the workings of an alcohol still."

Graves is eager to go.

Author Honored

ROME (AP) — Primo Levi, a Jewish author who started writing books to report on his survival from a Nazi extermination camp, has been awarded the Strega prize, one of Italy's top literary awards.

Levi received the prize for his latest work, the novel "Star-Shaped Key," about the life of a highly specialized worker.

Levi, 60, a native of Turin, works as a chemical technician. His first book, "If This Is a Man," published in 1947, has become Italy's most popular book on the Nazi camps.

Money Poured Down Drain

TANFIELD LEA, England (AP) — Police in this northern England mining area are looking for someone who is literally pouring money down the drain.

Workmen at a sewage works could hardly believe their eyes when torn-up money, including 5 and 10-pound banknotes (worth more than $10 and $20 apiece) appeared in the town's sewer system.

So far more than 300 pounds ($675) has been recovered.

A police spokesman said Thursday: "We are anxious to trace where the money is coming from. It could be a child who has got hold of his father's pay packet or savings."

Film Company Planned

ALAN LADD JR.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Three of the highest-paid executives in the movie industry — Alan Ladd Jr., Jay Kanter and Gareth Wigan — have made plans for a new major film company in cooperation with Warner Communications Inc.

The three recently left 20th Century-Fox after a dispute with management. The Ladd-Kanter-Wigan-Warner Brothers venture will go into operation when the executives' are released from Fox, or when their contracts expire at the end of 1980.

Ladd gave the go-ahead for production of "Star Wars," the highest-grossing movie in the history of the film business.

Parents Of Cancer Patients Form Special Organization

By NANCY DORN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Until a few years ago, most children diagnosed as having cancer were dead within the year.

Today, childhood cancer is one of the most hopeful areas of cancer research with more than 50 percent of the diagnosed children living normal lives five years later.

But while more and more children with cancer are growing up to lead normal lives, one area of devastation remains. Childhood cancer often hits parents as hard as it does children, and sometimes leaves more lasting scars.

To help each other deal with the emotional, financial and medical problems of having children with cancer, parents are forming cooperative groups in many of the cancer treatment centers in the United States.

Parents of children who are being treated at the Texas Tech University School of Medicine oncology-hematology clinic held an organizational meeting June 14. The next meeting will be at 7 p.m. Tuesday. Persons wishing additional information may telephone 797 -1008 and obtain the address of the meeting.

Parents whose children are undergoing cancer treatments, parents whose children have been cured and parents who have lost children to the disease are invited to the meeting, said Dr. John J. Iacuone, who was instrumental in forming the group. He is head of the pediatric oncology-hematology clinic at the Tech School of Medicine.

Although Dr. Iacuone is responsible for organizing the first meeting, he says he is not running the group. "I'm not even planning to attend meetings unless they want me there," he says. "It's their group — they can make it whatever they want."

Iacuone said the parent's group can call on people in the community for resources that they need, such as ministers, medical specialists, psychologists and social workers and lawyers.

"They need not only me, but good social service and psychological help as well," he said. "A parents group is an ideal way to draw on the community for such services."

He said a parents' group allows participants to realize that they are not the only victims of the disease and is a forum to discuss problems that they might be hesitant to discuss with a physician.

"People may think I'm too busy to listen to problems they are having disciplining their child, for example," Iacuone said. "There is someone in the group who understands their problem."

He also said that parents groups allow the parents to take an active participation in their child's illness. "It has been shown that people who have a direct participation in the control of the disease tend to improve faster," he said.

"It helps produce fewer guilt problems, makes the parent more vigorous and active in the child's cancer treatment," he said.

"It's going to be a very loosely-structured group where you can just talk about what is bothering you," said one mother who attended the first meeting.

Her son was diagnosed two years ago at the Texas Children's Hospital and it was there that she came into contact with parent groups.

"It's very important to meet with parents of children who have had the disease for more than two years who have survived the initial stages of the illness and are two years along," she said. "You need someone to show you their child running up and down the halls and say 'Yes, it happens, but it will pass,' when your child is going through chemotherapy."

Another mother whose daughter was diagnosed as having leukemia in March 1978, said she had never known anyone with cancer before the diagnosis. "All I could think of was that a lot of people die from it," she said.

Doctors and patients agree that one of the worst times for parents is the period immediately following diagnosis. The children are subjected to radiation to keep the cancer from spreading and large doses of cancer drugs which may make them nauseous and cause their hair to fall out.

"It's very difficult for parents to go through so many chemicals and so much hospitalization at the very first, but the anxiety seems to lessen as they go along," said Dr. Suat Cheng Fang, who also works at the medical school clinic and helped organize the group.

Accepting the child's disease is also a problem for parents "especially if the child has to have a lot of spinal taps and bone marrows (injections) right away," Dr. Fang said.

At the first meeting of the parents' group, Dr. Tom Williams, the head of the children's cancer clinic at the University of Texas Medical School in San Antonio, discussed some of the unique problems that parents of children with cancer face.

"There are a different kind of emotional problems here than with some adult who has cancer," said one man whose four-year old child has cancer of the lymphatic system.

He said that getting other adults to accept the fact that a child has cancer, but is treated normally, can be a problem.

"You can be in a department store and the fact that your kid doesn't have any hair (from cancer drugs) doesn't bother your kid or any other kids. But your kid is running down the aisle and you look down and there is a group of adults gathered around saying 'what's wrong with this kid?" he said. "It's not really the kids, it's the reactions of other parents and adults that gets to you."

He said he and his wife's main goal was to bring up their daughter, who is on chemotherapy for five weeks at a time, as normally as possible in spite of her disease.

"She has had stiches in her knee, she's out playing all of the time, she had a friend over for dinner tonight," he said. "As far as I'm concerned she's as normal as any other child. She has not changed our lifestyle as far as bringing her up."

Disciplining a child who has cancer is often a problem for parents, Iacuone said. "You can't forget the rest of the child just because he has cancer," he said. "So he survives the cancer and you look up and have a juvenile delinquent on your hands."

Iacuone said a parent-child relationship differs with a child that has cancer in only that the "problems are the same, only magnified 10 times."

One mother admitted that disciplining her child was difficult, but necessary. "It's hard for me not to be overprotective because she is my only child and I am divorced," she said. "But she has a very good attitude. She knows she has leukemia. She knows how to give a bone marrow, a spinal tap, a liver biopsy...and she knows that if she stays still it's a lot easier for them and less painful for her."

Thomas McGovern, a psychologist at Tech and the public realtions director for the American Cancer Society, is another one of the resources available to the parents group. McGovern has worked with several individuals who have had children with cancer and understands the problems the parents must cope with.

He said the biggest problem parents initially face is accepting the disease and accepting the fact that they are doing all they can do to combat the disease and give the children as normal a life as possible.

"The parents have to deal with the 'why me' question," he said. "They keep asking themselves, 'Is there something else I can do?' "

Parents must face the fact that they are doing all they can do for their child, McGovern said. "Cancer can take the value of life between diagnosis and death away."

And though many of the children treated for cancer live, the disease still kills some of the children eventually and parents must face the possibility that their child may die.

The father of one child with cancer said that he hoped parents who had lost children to the disease would join in on group sessions. "It is something we've all got to realize can happen at any time," he said.

Sibling rivalry and resentment is often caused by the extra attention the child with cancer gets from the parents, McGovern said. He said that psychologists recommended that brothers and sisters be taken to treatments occasionally "so they can see for themselves that the treatment is anything but special."

Lubbock is fast becoming a center for cancer treatent although until three years ago, West Texans were sent to Houston, San Antonio or Dallas for even the simplest treatments.

Doctors Fang and Iacuone started the oncology clinic at the Health Sciences Center Hospital two years ago and have rapidly accumulated patients ever since. About 20 cancer victims are treated regularly at the clinic.

The Tech Medical School is applying to become a satellite member of the San Antonio branch of the Children's Cancer Study Group, Iacuone said. "Membership will allow us to be privy to medications that we would not have any other way," he said. The drugs available to members of the research group are drugs the Federal Drug Administration has approved for experimental use rather than public distribution, Iacuone said.

Drug Sentence Not Cruel, Court Says

BOSTON (AP) — A bill setting mandatory 25-year prison terms for major drug dealers would not violate constitutional prohibitions against cruel and unusual punishment, the state Supreme Court says.

The advisory opinion was issued Friday. It was requested by the Legislature, which is considering a bill that would require a minimum 25-year sentence without chance of probation or parole for anyone convicted of possessing with intent to sell drugs with a street value in excess of $25,000.

The justices emphasized they were only answering two narrow questions put to them by the Legislature: whether the bill would constitute cruel and unusual punishment and whether it was too vague because of the term "street value."

MANY PEOPLE SETTLE FOR LESS IN A BRICK WITHOUT KNOWING IT.

Few people ever question the quality of brick. People accept brick for its face value—if it looks good on the surface—it must be solid throughout. After all, isn't all brick alike?

Not true! Some cheaply made brick may have good looks but seldom have inner strength. It can be classified substandard—soft, porous, and is often unable to meet current building codes. Constant weathering (freeze-thaw cycles) can eventually cause it to crumble, fail or even melt away from the side of your home.

Acme Brick on the other hand, is known for quality—both in good looks and inner strength. Every Acme Brick surpasses current building codes because it's hard-fired in kilns at temperatures that often exceed 2000° F. Hard-firing and precise quality control give Acme Brick the strength to last the lifetime of your home.

Nearly 90 years experience in brick making go into the reputation of each Acme Brick. Acme offers hard fired clay brick in hundreds of colors and textures that are available for prompt delivery.

Now that you know, why settle for less? Ask for Acme.

Real Estate Sales Keep Pace With '78 Market

The residential real estate market in Lubbock currently is paralleling the activity recorded during the first half of 1978, say city realtors and loan association officials.

Housing demand in the Lubbock area is reported being matched by a steady supply of financial support through FHA and VA-insured loans, with conventional-type loans apparently in suspension because of the state usury ceiling. That ceiling is scheduled to be raised — in keeping with federal treasury bill rates — in September.

Bobby McQueen, chairman of the Multiple Listing Service Committee, Lubbock Board of Realtors, said activity this year, in terms of sales and listings, is running in line with the first six months of last year.

The primary difference, McQueen said, is in the manner of financing. Some 85 percent of the number of sales for the month of June were accounted for by FHA-VA programs and loan assumptions.

McQueen said an incentive for prospective buyers in the current market can be found in the 10 percent rate at which FHA and VA loans still are being offered.

John Neal of Sentry Savings Association said the firm is encountering more loan demand now than in any period of the recent past.

"Those of us who are making loans are as busy as we have ever been because we have a secondary market for all these FHA-VA loans. We're closing over $1 million a month now, and I hope to move that up to about $2 million."

Neal said, "I've heard it said around town that some of the S&Ls are hoarding their money so they can make a whole bunch of high-yielding loans when this usury rate gets off of us in September."

In dismissing that tenet, Neal said, "Money is kind of like inventory. We are paying interest on all the money that is deposited, and you have got to put it back out — there's no way you can hoard it."

Joyce McQueen of Jack McQueen Realtors said many young couples are discouraged by reports that it is impossible to buy homes. "This is not true," she said, adding that low origination fees currently being charged by loan companies and 10 percent interest rates through FHA-VA make the present a good time to buy a home.

The equity value which appreciates makes home ownership a wise decision, she indicated. By way of contrast, "Couples living in apartments are not accumulating anything," she observed.

M. B. Smith of the West Texas Home Builders Association said construction costs are currently going up at the rate of 13 per cent a year.

He also thinks the present is a good time to buy a house. "If they waited three months, the price of the house went up 3 percent," he said, in recalling recent trends.

Neal pointed out that there is currently a good selection of houses on the Lubbock market, and that an interest rate of 10 percent is still available.

Also, he said, the seller is required to pay the (loan origination) discount.

Trucker's Groups Hinting Strike May Now Be At An End

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Representatives of one of the nation's largest independent truckers' organizations met Saturday amid indications the group would recommend an end to the fast-fading truckers strike.

Members of the Independent Truckers Unity Coalition, among the most militant of the strike groups, gathered at a suburban motel to hear progress reports and decide whether the strike was worth continuing.

Spokesman Bill Hayes admitted, "We had a break in the ranks."

Hayes said many truckers returned to work under pressure from growers and shippers and because of reports of "big money loads" —$5,000 to haul produce from the West to the East Coast.

Hyes is president of the National Council of Independent Truckers, one of the groups in the coalition, which he said represents truckers in 23 states. He said drivers were confused about the status of the strike.

"They're split up pretty bad right now," he said, "but if everybody would have continued the strike to this weekend, it would have been felt at the grocery and we would have had more than promises."

He said there appeared to be little support for continuing the protest.

"It would be almost impossible to get geared up the way it was," Hayes said. "It would take time and money, which none of us has."

The truckers' major gain from more than four weeks of keeping their rigs parked has been permission from the Inter tate Commerce Commission to levy a 7 percent surcharge on freight bills to compensate for rising fuel prices.

The protesters failed to win demands for priority in diesel fuel allocation, lower fuel prices and higher speed and load limits.

Truck traffic on the nation's highways has been at virtually normal volume since Thursday.

Tubb Songs 'Strip Away Plasticity Of Life'

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The scene tells the whole meaning of a kind of music and its importance to a way of life: Ernest Tubb, strumming a guitar and wearing a big white cowboy hat, looks through the lights and smoke at the crowd and sings, "My heartaches and troubles are just up and gone the moment that you come in view, and with your hand in mine, dear, I could dance on and on. I could waltz across Texas with you."

Some of the people are in their 60s, like Tubb, and courted to his music in the 1930s and 40s. Others, in their 20s and 30s, heard "Filipino Baby" and "I'm Walking the Floor Over You" on the living room record player before they could walk.

For many of them, it is almost too intense. The deep, slightly off-key voice reverberates through their souls, and all they can do is dance hard and then lift their arms and roar when each song ends.

"Blue-Eyed Elaine," "He's in the Jailhouse Now," "Let's Say Goodbye Like We Said Hello" — each song strips away more of the plasticity of life in 1979 and gives a connectedness with the origins of life and culture in Texas and the Southwest.

In simpler terms, they tell what kind of mamas and daddies we had.

Ernest Tubb has become a folk hero. Willie Nelson presented him as one to 25,000 Fourth of July celebrants last week at Austin, and the superstars of country music have just finished a double album with and for him called "The Legend and the Legacy."

He came here Thursday night after performing at the Fourth of July picnic Wednesday and played to almost a full house at the West Wind Country nightclub, which used to be called the Ole Opry House at the Carriage House Motel on the Slaton Highway.

He is rumored to be 72 or even 80 years old. Musicians marvel at his endurance. In fact, he turned 65 last Feb. 9, and he has considered getting off the road for an easier life. He has reduced his schedule to 200 dates per year, which he considers a tapering-off after doing 300 and more through most of his career.

"I've thought about it a lot," he said in interviews between sets at the club. "I'm often asked, 'When are you going to retire?' But there's not too many people that get to do what they love to do and make a living out of it.

"You see, the biggest job on earth is doing nothing. I've got two record stores. I've got a publishing company. But I can't sit behind a desk. I'd go crazy. I'm too lazy to work," he said, laughing. "That's why I started singin'."

He was born in Crisp, near Dallas, and was at Ennis for a couple of years before his family moved to Central Texas. He attended school as a youngster at Benjamin near Abilene.

He started singing in the 1930s in Central Texas oilfield honky tonks. His voice was not so deep and gravelly then, and he sang as much like his hero, Jimmie Rodgers, could.

Mrs. Jimmie Rodgers got him a contract with RCA Victor, and his first record was of "The Passing of Jimmie Rodgers" and "Jimmie Rodgers' Last Thoughts" in 1936.

ERNEST TUBB

He developed his own style in the next few years, and Mrs. Rodgers got him an audition with Decca Records in 1940.

"I recorded 'Blue-Eyed Elaine' and 'I'll Get Along Somehow' April 4, 1940. I was living in San Angelo and was working for the Western Mattress Co.

"Back then, if you made $15 a week, you had a pretty good salary, and I quit a job where I made $167 in commissions one week (as a salesman) and went to work for $20 a week on a radio station in Fort Worth, KGKL.

"I said, 'I'm gonna try just singin' for one year, and if I can't make a living, then I'll go back to work, but I wanted to give it a try."

He wrote and recorded "Walkin' the Floor Over You" the next year, sold more than a million records, joined the Grand Ole Opry and made a cowboy movie in Hollywood.

Tubb said he would have given up the idea of a career in music if Mrs. Rodgers had not helped him, and something she told him had much to do with his helping scores of young musicians and becoming a father figure to most of the superstars of today.

Perhaps his best-known such effort was for Hank Williams, whom he promoted from the time a young Williams opened a show for him in 1944 in Montgomery, Alabama.

"Hank opened the show, and he took three encores," he said. "Now this is something in your home town. And I said, 'Who is this kid?'

"My manager said, 'Hank Williams,' and I said, 'We ought to try to help him.

Tubb finally got Williams onto the Grand Ole Opry after "Lovesick Blues" was a huge hit, he said, by getting Williams to stop drinking for several months and persuading Opry officials that Williams had his well-known drinking problem under control.

The stars who sing and play on the "Legend and the Legacy" album with him include Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Johnny Cash, Loretta Lynn, Conway Twitty, Charlie McCoy, Charlie Daniels, Merle Haggard and Vern Gosdin.

In various ways, he helped all of them at crucial points in their careers.

He put Nelson on his television show in the early 1960s, "when some people thought he shouldn't have been" because they thought he was undeserving; recorded an early song written by Haggard and told everyone he knew that Haggard was "a young Hank Williams"; and put Cash and others on his nationally broadcast midnight show from the Ernest Tubb Record Shop over WSM Radio in Nashville after the Saturday night Grand Ole Opry when they were getting started.

"Willie is one of my dearest friends and one of the biggest artists in the nation right now," he said. "I kid him about his beard and his long hair. I said, 'I wish you'd clean up.' I said, 'I know you're clean, but you look dirty.' " He just laughs.

"Anyhow, we had about 27,000 people down there. But see, he didn't have all the rock and roll. Some of the people he cut down. I think he did it, more or less, for me because he wanted me on the show, and he didn't want to have it where it would get out of hand.

"So instead of having a three-day thing, like sometimes they have, he had a 12-hour show. It started at noon the Fourth of July till midnight, but the people kept raising cane, so he didn't get off the stage till nearly 2 o'clock this morning.

"We did 'Waltz Across Texas' (a single release from the album that is on the charts now). He's the one that had this idea of the album, he and Waylon Jennings, an album as paying a tribute to me for helping people over the years and my contribution to country music."

Tubb said Texas music has always been a separate branch of country music with Texas musicians "a little more progressive, a little more liberal" than musicians from other parts of the country.

He was the first major country musician to use electric guitar. He asked Jimmy Short, the guitarist who he credits with helping form his style, to begin using an amplifier when a juke box operator told him his records were not loud enough, he said.

The origins of much of country-western music and the Texas brand of it in particular trace back to Ernest Tubb, and his origins as a musician and a man trace back to Jimmie Rodgers, the father of country music, and to Mrs. Rodgers.

"I've always tried to have compassion for people," he said. "I've always tried when I see somebody that's deserving and workin' hard.

"But the main thing that never let me forget it was Mrs. Jimmie Rodgers. She's the one that helped me get started.

"She was in my home when every one of my last five children were born. She was like a second mother to me.

"One day, I remember, we went over to see Hank Snow, I think, and came back. And we got to talking about the music and Jimmie Rodgers and how many people he inspired — Hank Snow and Tommy Duncan. That's how come Tommy and I were such good friends. We always talked about Jimmie Rodgers. Even Lefty Frizzell — he was 3 years old when Jimmie died — but that was his inspiration.

"I said, 'I don't know, Mrs. Rodgers.' I said, 'You've done so much for me and others, I don't know how I can ever repay you.' I said, 'I'd have given up, and I'd still be workin' for a living.'

"Well, she said, 'Some things you can't repay with money, but what I did for you, you can pass it along to other people, so why don't you try to help other people when you think they're deserving?' She said, "Then you're repaying me for what I did for you."

As an example, he told how a country classic, "Pick Me Up On Your Way Down," came to be written and recorded.

"Ray Price called me. Hank Williams brought Ray to Nashville, and Hank and I both tried to help Ray get started. And Ray said, 'Would you help me rewrite some songs for Charlie Walker?' He said, 'You've done so much for other people that I'm not going to ask you to do anything, but now I'm in a position where maybe I can help a few people.'

"I said, 'I'll be happy to do what I can.' We sat up all night rewritin' 'Pick Me Up On Your Way Down' up in my den. And that was Charlie's big record, the first record he made.

"So, over the years, I've never forgot what Mrs. Rodgers said."

Pageant Officials Fire Old Queen, Investigate New One

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — After firing the outgoing Miss North Carolina, officials of the state beauty pageant now are looking into complaints that the new beauty queen violated her contract by appearing in a television commercial.

The Wilmington Jaycees have filed a protest with the state organization, complaining that the new queen, Monta Maki of Hickory, appeared in an automobile commercial on statewide television June 30, the night she won the beauty contest.

Maurice H. Wilson, president of the state Jaycees, said the organization's legal counsel, Charlie Brown, would make a decision on the protest on Monday.

Last week, the Raleigh Jaycees fired Debbie Shook of Spruce Pine one day before her reign as the 1978 Miss North Carolina was to end. The action received national attention, and Miss Shook has been besieged by requests for interviews.

Officials said they took away the crown because she publicly complained that she did not receive all the cash and prizes she was promised — a charge contest sponsors denied.

Jimmy Mallard, business manager for his Miss Wilmington, Lynn Marie Williford, the pageant's first runnerup, filed his chapter's protest concerning the new Miss North Carolina.

He said contracts signed by each of the 47 contestants in this year's pageant forbid any endorsement or promotion of commercial products.

Lynn Shaw of Elizabethtown, business manager for Miss Bladen County, has also filed a personal protest.

Brown said Friday that the contract "does not prohibit a contestant from being a professional person."

He said a contestant would be guilty of breaking the contract only if she used her name or her title in an endorsement or advertisement of a product. Brown added that the contract would be changed before the next pageant.

Miss Maki, who has worked for the Jan Thompson Casting Agency in Charlotte since 1975, has not used her name or her title of Miss Hickory in a television or radio commercial, according to Jan Thompson, manager of the agency.

Meanwhile, Miss Shook's firing has catapulted her into the national spotlight.

On Monday, she and her mother are to fly to New York to tape an interview for NBC-TV's "Tomorrow" show.

Retailers Blame Gas Problems For Sagging Sales

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflation and mounting gasoline worries are beginning to have an increasingly large effect on retail sales as consumers turn more cautious.

Major retail chains, already worried about a slowing economy, this past week blamed gas problems for much of their June sales sag.

"When the gas lines occurred, people became extremely cautious and our sales decreased about 8 percent," said Edward McDonnell, chairman and chief executive of Montgomery Ward & Co. The retail chain, a subsidiary of Mobil Corp., said overall sales in June rose 2.3 percent, less than half its average gain for the year so far.

Sears, Roebuck — the nation's largest retailer — reported a 9.2 percent decline in sales, and No. 3 J.C. Penney's sales showed o change from last year's level.

Those figures are prompting some analysts to predict consumers will be tightening spending after a splurge which helped sustain the economy after the 1973-74 recession.

K Mart, ranked as the second largest reail chain reported an 11.8 percent sales gain in June, which was down from its average so far this year but in line with figures showing discount houses doing better than others.

Auto sales, reported separately, also showed continued declines for the fourth consecutive month. Sales by the four U.S. automakers and U.S. built Volkswagens fell 26 percent in June to about 701,000 units from sales a year.

Even if gasoline lines dwindle or disappear, economists point to several factors which they think mean consumers may be turning more cautious in their buying habits.

One is that people are losing the income-inflation race. Government reports on personal income, which includes all income after taxes, show that in May income rose .7 percent, or at an annual rate of 8.2 percent. In the same month, inflation rose 1.1 percent, or at an annual rate of 14.2 percent.

Since last December, notes a recent economic report by Citibank, inflation has outstripped gains in personal income.

"The dip in real income ... explains why falls in the real level of spending on autos and parts, gasoline and foodstuffs have not been offset by increases in other areas.

"Instead declines have occurred as well in real outlays on new and existing homes, furniture and appliances, and clothing."

While the report says inflation is likely to slow in the coming months from its recent pace of 14 percent, both the income squeeze and consumer worries about the economy in general may have lingering effects.

"The combination of less mobility (because of gasoline problems) and less real income could result in a sizeable erosion in retail sales in the coming months," said Fabian Linden, director of consumer economics at the Conference Board.

The Conference Board, a business-funded research organization, found considerable skeptism about the health of the economy in its most recent survey of 5,000 families conducted in June.

Those surveyed didn't assess current economic conditions, including employment and income prospects, much differently than they did in May. But the number of people who expected conditions to worsen in the six months ahead jumped from about 19 percent to almost 25 percent in June.

By comparison, in May about 11 percent thought economic conditions would improve and in June 12 percent looked for improvement.

The Conference Board's buying plans index — designed to measure purchase plans for homes, autos and major appliances — rose to 95.5 from 93.8 the previous month. But after sinking each month since December, it still stood well below the 121.7 index level in June a year ago. The index is measured against 1969-70 base of 100.

The Commerce Department's latest report on all retail sales showed an 0.2 percent decline to $71.1 billion in May following a steep 1.1 percent drop the month before. The two-month decline was the first since December 1977-January 1978 and more than wiped out March's gain of 1.2 percent. When adjusted for inflation the decline is even steeper.

"Retail sales leveled off in May, but in volume terms continued their descent which started at the beginning of the year," notes a report by Chemical Bank. "The outlook for retail sales continues to call for only tiny increases for the rest of the year, partly in response to the tight supply of gasoline."

By comparison, retail sales rose more than 4 percent in the final quarter of last year.

In other business developments this past week:

•The nation's unemployment rate fell to 5.6 percent in June, down from 5.8 percent in May. The Labor Department said the improvement was almost entirely due to a drop in the jobless rate for teen-agers. The latest month's unemployment was the lowest level since August 1974. Unemployment among teenagers fell by 130,000 in June to 15.3 percent from from 16.8 percent in May.

•Worries over inflation and the oil squeeze helped push gold prices to record highs. In Zurich, gold was trading at $290.375 an ounce at week's end, a gain of more than $97 an ounce since the end of November. In London, gold closed at $289.25.

•Wholesale prices continue to rise, but not as steeply as several months ago. The government said producer prices rose 0.5 percent last month. Food prices actually declined 1.2 percent, thanks to sharp drops in the prices of beef, pork and poultry. But increases in petroleum prices helped push overall costs of non-food items up 1.1 percent.

Rumors About Dollar Aid Perk Up Mart

By J. L. HUTCHESON
Schneider, Bernet & Hickman, Inc.

Rumors of a planned increase in the discount rate to help shore up the dollar caused some excitement Friday, but other than this, little happened on the New York Stock Exchange this week as trading slowed due to the Independence Holiday Wednesday.

J.L. HUTCHESON

President Carter's cancelation of his energy speech planned for Thursday evening produced some anxiety among investors, but most stock prices helf firm or gained small amounts. Analysts said that people were disappointed when the President's talk was cancelled, but many believe that the delay could result in more carefully considered energy proposals which could be more viable than the intended message.

Most investors and traders adopted a wait-and-see attitude this week due mainly to the lack of any definitive outlook for the economy, energy, interest rates and inflation. Another factor causing hesitance among investors was the expected announcement Friday of the producer price index for June. Many analysts expect it to mirror the consumer price index and move up at a double digit rate.

Although many investment advisors see the gasoline shortage and higher crude oil prices hastening an economic slowdown, they voice optimism concerning the stock market and stock prices. They explained that while the economy certainly seems to be on a stagnating course it doesn't mean that the U.S. is headed into a severe recession.

With a sideways movement in the economy, they don't see any real vulnerability in the stock market. Currently, most trust funds hold about 50 percent cash instruments and 50 percent stocks in their portfolios.

Analysts continue to be most impressed with the way in which the stock market has held it's own in the face of overwhelmingly negative news. Never has the stock market received more negative news in a shorter period of time and refused to move lower. Approximately 45 percent of all advisory services are now bearish. Short interest is at record highs. It is very doubtfull that all these "gloom and doomers" are going to be right and the market will accomodate them and move lower. Usually, when there is such a high degree of pessimism about the market, it will rally quite a bit. We will all have to wait and see if such is the case now.

Ford Drops Front-Wheel Drive Plans

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. confirms it has dropped plans for a new front-wheel drive car that was to have replaced its Fairmont and Zephyr models in 1982.

The cancelation, which Ford confirmed Friday, leaves Ford as the only one of the Big Three auto makers without a commitment to front-wheel drive compacts.

General Motors Corp. introduced its front-wheel drive X-cars in April, and Chrysler Corp. plans to replace its Aspen and Volare cars with a new front-wheel drive compact series in the fall of 1980.

Bennett Bidwell, a Ford vice president, said the scrapped program was developed last year under the code name of Derby.

"Derby was only one alternative and has been succeeded by other plans involving front-wheel drive vehicles which I don't propose to discuss," said Bidwell.

"However, our 1981 entry (the front wheel subcompact Erica) will be defined as a compact, depending on interior room. We are looking forward to selling it against the X-cars and I think it will be a competitor for Chrysler's new compacts," Bidwell added.

Bidwell intimated that limited availability of different engine combinations prompted Ford to cancel the Derby.

Ford sources said that with Derby scrapped, Ford may not introduce a front-wheel drive full compact until the 1985 model year.

MOUNT EVEREST

Mount Everest was considered to be 29,002 feet tall when Edmund Hillary and Tenzing Norgay scaled it in 1953. In 1954 the Surveyor General of the Republic of India set the height at 29,028 feet, plus or minus 10 feet because of snow. The National Geographic Society accepts the newer figure, but many mountaineering groups still use 29,002 feet.

Maryland Ends Pursuit Of Gasoline Suit

BALTIMORE (AP) — The state will not pursue its attempt to win a preliminary injunction as a means to get more gasoline for Maryland residents, state Attorney General Stephen H. Sachs said Saturday.

A federal judge rejected the state's motion on Friday.

Sachs said, however, that officials probably would not decide until later this week whether to purse the state's attempt to have the federal gasoline allocation system ruled illegal and to have the Department of Energy ordered to write new allocations.

"We have to assess what the alternatives are," Sachs said. "It's important to understand that this (the denial of the injunction) is not the end of the matter."

U.S. District Judge Herbert C. Murray refused on Friday to order the federal government to immediately give Maryland up to 6 million gallons of gasoline on the basis of the state's arguments that it had not gotten a fair share of the national supply of gasoline.

Although Murray found that the state had suffered irreparable harm because of the gasoline shortage, he said he was "not convinced that this harm is the result of the action or failure to act of the Department of Energy."

Murray said he could not give extra gasoline to Maryland without depriving other areas of needed fuel and "upsetting a national regulatory policy painstakingly developed over the last five years."

"We were disappointed, of course," Sachs said. "But we recognized that it was a tough burden to convince the court to intervene in a complicated federal matter."

Maryland officials had argued that figures on projected gasoline deliveries to Maryland compiled by the Department of Energy were inflated. The federal government's attorneys, however, argued that Maryland exaggerated the shortfall.

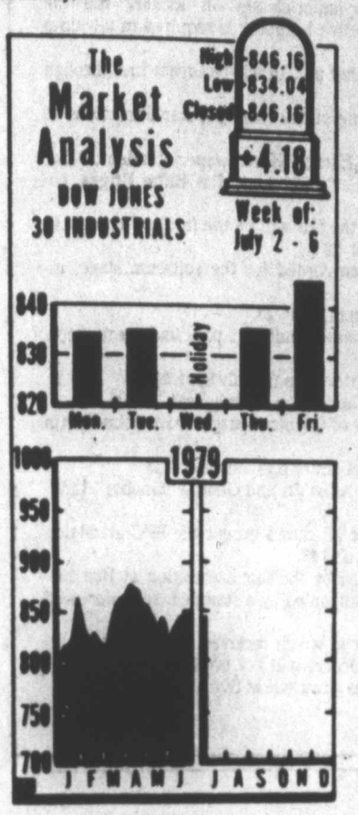
Analysts See Little Chance Of Letup In Inflation Soon

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite the prospect of a slowdown in economic activity, most Wall Street analysts see little chance of a significant letup in inflation any time soon.

For one thing, they point out, the steep increases posted recently in world oil prices will contribute heavily to inflationary pressures in the months ahead, no matter what else is going on in the economy.



"The gasoline lines may become a thing of the past, but the full impact of the oil price increases is yet to be felt," said Bernard Schoenfeld in a commentary for New York's Irving Trust Co.

"Oil imports are likely to rise from $40 billion last year to an annual rate of $60 billion (or more) by yearend," he said.

Henry Kaufman of Salomon Brothers said in a bulletin to portfolio managers this past week: "We may well be heading into a sort of economic and financial 'no man's land' in which stagflation dominates for a while.

"An economic contraction dominated by energy constraint will unfortunately contribute to rather than ease our inflationary problem unless it brings about a very large contraction in real growth of both energy and non-energy related activities (a development that is not yet discernible)."

Faced with such concerns, the stock market turned in an erratic performance in the four-day trading week that surrounded the July 4 holiday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.27 to 846.16 after taking a 7.12-point loss the week before.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained .44 to 58.82, while the American Stock Exchange market value index lost .29 to 200.47.

Big Board volume averaged 33.15 million shares a day, down from 35.18 million the week before.

Jacques de Larosiere, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, said in a speech Friday that the increase in oil prices will probably mean inflation rates generally above 10 percent in the industrial nations this year.

The Value Line Investment Survey, which forecasts a "mild" 1979-80 recession, observed, "Inflation will remain a serious burden throughout the recession.

"Some seasonal deceleration in the pace of inflation is quite likely in the last half of 1979. This, we think, will be attributable primarily to weakness in the food sector.

"Regrettably, with high-priced foreign crude oil just hitting our shores and spot prices at lofty levels...the domestic energy price spiral should persist."

The investment advisory service projects a rise of 9 to 9.5 percent this year for the Gross National Product "deflator," the measure of inflation used in adjusting statistics on the output of goods and services in the United States. The consumer price index, it says, will show an increase of at least 10 percent, and maybe 11.

"Inflation will not disappear in 1980 despite the lingering effects of recession. That's because inflationary psychology pervades the entire economic structure," Value Line said.

"The pace of price hikes may decelerate to 7.5 percent (as measured by the GNP deflator) in 1981. But thereafter we expect price increases to accelerate again.

"The battle against inflation ill be a ong one, enduring perhaps for a decade. The current round of inflation — which accelerated after 1965 — has its roots in the post-World War II period.

"Any social phenomenon that has taken 30 years to weave itself into the very fabric of the economy is going to be around a while — barring, of course, the unacceptable quick-fix solution: Depression."

New York was the nation's most populous state from 1820 until overtaken by California in 1964.

VOLCANOES

More than 75 percent of the world's active volcanoes lie within the "Ring of Fire," a zone running along the west coast of the Americas from Chile to Alaska and down the east coast of Asia from Siberia to New Zealand. Almost all active volcanic regions are found at the boundaries of the large moving plates which comprise the earth's surface. The "Ring of Fire" marks the boundary between the plates underlying the Pacific Ocean and those underlying the surrounding continents.

11 Women Slain By 'Yorkshire Ripper'

"Grand work that last job was. I gave the lady no time to squeal." — Jack the Ripper, 1885

"I'm not sure when I'll strike again but it will be definitely sometime this year. ... I'll keep on going for quite a while yet."—Yorkshire Ripper, 1979

LONDON (UPI) — The recorded voice is flat, almost a monotone, as it taunts police, outlining plans to kill for a 12th time and even pinpointing the probable city and victim — a prostitute like most of the other women the Yorkshire Ripper has slashed, stabbed and bludgeoned to death.

But the voice on the tape also has a very distinctive regional accent, known as Geordie, and police are desperately hoping this is the clue they need to identify the cunning psychopath before he can strike again.

"Someone, somewhere must know this man," pleaded Assistant Chief Constable George Oldfield after the tape was played June 26 on national radio and television.

But despite thousands of calls from listeners claiming to recognize the voice, none has yet led to the man who has killed 10 more times since his first victim was found "like a bundle of rags in a pool of blood" in Leeds in 1975.

The Yorkshire Ripper is England's most diabolical mass murderer since Jack the Ripper — whose name and practices he adopted — preyed on women in the east end of London nearly 100 years ago, killing and mutilating at least six prostitutes. He was never caught.

The modern day Ripper also has a pathological hatred of prostitutes. Nine of his victims, who ranged in age from 16 to 42, were prostitutes, and police theorize he mistook the other two for streetwalkers. Most were picked up in red-light districts of Manchester, Leeds and Bradford.

The victims were slashed, stabbed and bashed to death with a blunt object. There are persistent reports, which police decline to confirm for fear of imitators, that he carved his "trademark" into each woman's body.

There also are reports he ritualistically cut open some of his victims and pulled out their entrails.

Amazingly, four women have managed to survive his attacks — all badly injured and at least one with permanent brain damage. They can offer only the description of a white man of fairly slight build between 30 and 50.

Beyond that, police know little. They theorize he may work as an engineer or in some similar capacity. Although they refuse to say why, it is believed the murder weapon — which they decline to identify — may have been a tool from a workbench.

A footprint found near one of the victims suggests the killer was wearing heavy industrial boots and a tire track indicates he was driving an old car.

But the best clues appear to come from the tape and three letters he has sent police.

All were posted in Sunderland, a northeast port where the Geordie accent is common. Police theorize he may be from there originally but now works in the Yorkshire area and returns home frequently to visit relatives or friends.

Oldfield, who has led the Ripper hunt from the outset, says he has no doubt the letters and tape are genuine. Parts not released by the police reportedly describe details of the killings known only to detectives — and the murderer.

On the three-minute tape, in which he addresses Oldfield familiarly as George, the Ripper mocks police for their inability to catch him and then says:

"I'm not quite sure when I Will strike again, but it will be definitely sometime this year, maybe September or October. Even sooner if I get the chance. I am not sure where, maybe Manchester. I like it there, there's plenty of them knocking about.

"They never learn, do they, Gorge? I bet you've warned them but they never listen. At the rate I'm going, I should be in the Book of Records. I think it's 11 up to now isn't it? Well, I'll keep on going for quite a while yet."

His last words to Oldfield: "See you soon. Bye. Hope you like the catchy tune at the end. Ha ha."

Eerily, the tape begins playing the first bars of a popular song that begins "Thank you for being a friend ..."

Writer's Diary Rates Fuel Shortage No Fun

EDITOR'S NOTE: AP Writer Richard T. Pienciak, a New Jerseyan who works in Manshattan, kept a diary of his days on the gasoline lines from Memorial Day to the Fourth of July.

NUTLEY, N.J. (AP) — The Great Gasoline Crisis of June was a real now-you-see-me, now-you-don't affair. And it was no fun playing peekaboo with the gas pump.

June began with extremely short supplies, a spillover from the Memorial Day weekend. Then for some reason it eased up for two weeks. Then, again inexplicably, a crunch came the weekend of June 15.

Generally the weekends were the worst. And on Mondays and Fridays, there were the toppers, those insecure bandits who fill up with two gallons. A friend tells of being in line behind a Lincoln Continental that filled up — for $1.20.

Mysteriously the crisis disappeared again as the Fourth of July approached. Stations were open, there were no lines, and the Grand Pooh-bah of Gasoline, whoever that vicious soul might be, kept the Mystery of Gasoline a secret for yet another month.

Some notes from a gas line diary:

June 1: I'm on empty, usual for a Friday. Local stations are all shut, so I head to the 24-hour Garden State Parkway, which has a $3 limit. The long line moves even slower because 10 cars ahead this fat lady is pushing her car. Don't know if she's out of gas or just conserving. No one helps.

Then some people who really don't need gas give up and leave. We get 3.9 gallons at 77.3 cents.

The attendant sees my newspaper with a headline about a fatal gas line shooting in Brooklyn. He asks for the paper to post it on the pump. I say yes. I ask for more gas. He says no. He doesn't say thanks for the paper.

June 2-3: The few stations open have extra-inning lines. I wait it out at home with the Yankees.

June 4: Monday. Presto. No line and I get 12.7 gallons. Happiness is a full tank. Things hold up pretty well until the 14th when the toppers are back.

June 16: The weekend. Lose my head and do a lot of traveling, with my wife, Cheryl — but in her car. On the way home, the line at a Garden State Parkway station, the only one open on the 75-mile trip, is literally a mile long. Too tired to wait, we go home nearly empty.

June 18: Monday. No gas out there. My dependable station, the one "always" open, is closed. Lines are stupendous. Before the day is over the governors of New York and New Jersey announce odd-even rationing and half-tank minimums. Good. It'll get rid of the toppers.

A co-worker calls in to say her vacation must last an extra day. She's stuck with no gas. The city subway riders think it's a novel excuse but they don't know the Mystery of Gasoline.

June 19: My dependable station is still shut. But overnight the price goes from 87.4 cents per gallon to 91.4 cents. I cover the governor's gasoline news conference. It doesn't solve the Mystery.

June 20: A friend says she's acquired an even-numbered plate to complement her odd one.

My wife takes her car out with a quarter tank, returns an hour later with an eighth.

A friend calls to say he can't come to play tennis; he's short on gas. He lives three miles away.

I get a tip about a station "nobody knows about." The trouble is it closes early. I plan a dawn attack.

June 21: Rush out at 7:30; the "sure thing" is already closed. Along the way I pass five other shut stations, including one where they're putting in a new underground storage tank. As a last-ditch effort I take a ride past the "always open" station and sure enough, he's pumping. I get at the rear of a long line

A gy cuts in front of me. He's a little runt so I tell him to move on. He tells me he didn't realize there was a line. Six blocks long down a narrow street, and he didn't realize there was a line.

I get the $5 limit and start a 140-mile business trip to upstate New York with less than a half tank. I'm up to the challenge though. After all, it's the longest day of the year.

Three more lines that day. In the last, I manage to fill up for the trip home. This big dude cuts into line but this time I'm too tired to argue.

June 22: Friday. As predicted, worst weekend since the 1974 crisis. On one highway, each line goes all the way back to the next station for seven miles. I save my half tank plus for emergency.

Bruce, my sister-in-law's fiance, drives in from Massachusetts to help her move. He arrives on fumes.

June 23: Bruce gets up at 3 a.m. and waits in two separate Parkway lines for $6 worth. Total time 2 hours, 15 minutes.

On the way to my sister-in-law's, I notice the station with the new 30,000 gallon underground tank has reopened. No limit. It's a breeze, and we're off in just 30 minutes. "I'm bursting with gas," Bruce says. I'm not; my car is home.

June 24: Barbecue three blocks away. Host wears T-shirt saying: "Eat Beans. America Needs the Gas."

June 25: Monday. The Mystery of Gasoline almost makes me feel religious. There is absolutely no line. I get a full tank.

June 27: I'm fed up. I get up at 7 a.m. Sign at the place with the new tank says "Open at 9:30." The line is already around the block.

The other local dependable is open, but an attendant puts a "last car in line" sign on the Cadillac in front of me.

I head for the highway where after an hour I fill up. Nobody checks the gauge — or the oil or water or says hello, goodbye or thank you. My whole life is run by the gas pump. Oh cruel Mystery of Gasoline.

I ask the guy if he'll be open Sunday and he says they're pumping out their entire supply so they can start the holiday early.

June 28-July 1: The guy was serious. The station is shut for the holiday seven days early. Panic and lines are back. New Jersey goes to $7 minimum purchases, but it gets worse through the weekend.

July 2: Monday. Out of nowhere, no lines, no limits. But not for me. With my license plate, I'm odd man out.

July 3: My day. The second station I pass is open, but it's so empty I can't tell at first. I fill up for about 20 cents more per gallon than on June 1 and I start thinking about tomorrow's family barbecue.

Horse Show Judges Announced For Fair

Delbert Latham of Albuquerque, N.M., has been named to judge the open horse show, which will help launch the 62nd annual Panhandle South Plains Fair here Sept. 22.

The eight-day fair run, featuring 13 stars and 11 stage shows, will wind up on Sept. 29.

Steve L. Lewis, general manager, said the open horse show would offer competition in 31 classes. No entry fee is charged in championship classes.

Stallions will be permitted, except for junior classes. All "kickers" must be tagged with a red tail ribbon and protective headgear is required in all jump classes.

Silver will be awarded each class winner and all winners from first through sixth places will be awarded rosettes.

The open horse show has become one of the most popular attractions at the fair in recent years.

Other officials of the show include: Earnest Kiker, superintendent; Mike McWilliams, assistant; Dr. James W. Carpenter and Miss Billie Briggs, co-chairmen; and Bobbie Green, secretary.

Also scheduled to assist in launching the fair will be the fiddlers' contest in Fair Park Coliseum during the day of Sept. 22.

Afterward, an all-star lineup has been carded for the coliseum stage, including:

The Charley Pride show, 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. Sept. 23.

The Statler Brothers show, with Barbara Mandrell, 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. Sept. 24.

The Eddie Rabbitt show, with Janie Fricke, 8 p.m. only Sept. 25.

The Dave and Sugar show, with John Conlee, 8 p.m. only Sept. 26.

South Plains College's "Golden Years of Country Music," with John Hartin and Eddie Trice, 7 p.m. only Sept. 27.

The Tom T. Hall show, with Charly McClain, 8 p.m. only Sept. 28.

The Tammy Wynette show, with Rex Allen Jr. and George "Goober" Lindsey, 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. Sept. 29.

All seats are reserved and tickets for all shows except the SPC attraction are $4, $5 and $6. The SPC admission is $2 and $3.

Ticket reservations are being accepted by the fair association at Box 208. Lubbock, Tex. 79408. They must be accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Tickets will be processed in the order in which received, thus insuring early purchasers of getting the best seats. Orders will not be filled until mid-August, when the box office opens and tickets go on sale at five other locations.

Some ideas work and some won't! In 1978 over 2000 growers from California to Delaware and from Canada to Florida agreed that the Spray Sickle is one weed control idea that really works.
The 1979 Spray Sickle is better than ever — (Over 35 New Improvements.) If you have Johnson Grass (or any other problem weed) the Spray Sickle is really the only sure way to eradicate it.

SALT II Supporters, Critics Jockey For Votes In Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate's consideration of the SALT II treaty, possibly the most significant foreign policy issue before the chamber since it debated the Treaty of Versailles, begins this week.

The strategic arms limitation treaty, which will be taken up initially by the Foreign Relations Committee, involves the most vital security interests of the United States and Russia. It's the freshest U.S.-Soviet issue in an age dominated by nuclear weapons of devastating destructive power.

As the debate begins in earnest, supporters and critics of the accord, many of whom have already made their views known, are jockeying for votes.

And many are unabashedly predicting that ratification will occur only if changes are made in the treaty, the product of nearly seven years of difficult and omplex neotiations under both Republican and Democratic presidents.

The unfolding drama of SALT II may be reminiscent of the divisive Senate debate after World War I, which finally ended with rejection of President Woodrow Wilson's much-promoted Versailles treaty. The rejection also foiled Wilson's bid to have the United States join the League of Nations.

In the Versailles matter, the Foreign Relations Committee recommended a host of reservations to the accord, including some which Wilson maintained would destroy the league. He then urged his allies in the Senate to vote against the panel's version — so the treaty failed to gain the two-thirds needed for passage.

The aim of the SALT II treaty is to place a ceiling on the arms race and set the stage for comprehensive reductions in future Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT).

But the pact has come under ferocious attack by opponents who claim it gives the Soviet Union a chance to gain a war-winning, first-strike nuclear superiority in the 1980s.

Both sides are seeking public support for their positions. The White House is sending Vice President Walter F. Mondale on a nationwide tour in support of SALT II. And a coalition of conservative political action groups is mounting an advertising bliz in opposition.

But some of those lobbying for or against SALT II have voiced despair at trying to get the public's attention during times of fuel shortages and such closer-to-home annoyances as inflation.

"How do we tell people out there that SALT may be as important as gas lines?" asked a Senate foreign policy expert who asked not to be named.

Sen. Alan Cranston of California, the Senate's assistant Democratic leader and a highly respected vote counter, says that as of now, 58 senators are either committed to vote for SALT II or are leaning in favor. He says 30 are opposed or leaning against, and that the position of 12 is unknown.

A two-thirds vote of the Senate — 67 votes if all 100 members are present — is required for ratification. Only 34 negative votes can kill the treaty.

But Cranston says only 12 to 18 of those inclined against the treaty are definitely commited to voting against it. He says 33 to 35 of those leaning in favor of the treaty are definitely committed to vote for it.

Cranston did not release a list specifying the positions of individual senators.

Both President Carter and top Soviet officials insist no changes are acceptable. But a consensus is forming both at the White House and in the Senate that some new language may be needed to assure ratification.

Majority Leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia traveled to Moscow last week and told Soviet leaders the Senate has a separate constitutional role to play in the treaty-making process and there is no chance it will allow itself to be used as a "rubber stamp."

Treaty supporters are engaging in the delicate exercise of trying to find a carefully worded compromise that can garner widespread support without prompting the Soviets to reject the treaty and refuse to enter new negotiations.

Opponents will try to kill the pact by adding amendments they know the Soviets will not accept. Proponents have dubbed these changes as "killer" amendments.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, chairman of the foreign relations panel, and Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., the committee's ranking Republican, will try to use the Senate hearings to look for compromise and to shape the debate on the Senate floor.

The treaty is under attack from both right and left.

Conservatives such as Sens. Jake Garn, R-Utah; Jesse Helms, R-N.C.; Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, say the treaty places the United States in a dangerously weakened military posture and calls for trust that the Soviets won't cheat.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson g SALT II an exercise in "appeasement."

And liberals such as Sens. George McGovern, D-S.D. and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., complain that SALT II is not genuine arms control, because it permits both side to add new weapons up to the ceiling of 2,250 by 1981, while making few actual reductions.

Thus, the treaty could be threatened by what one Senate SALT expert calls, "the absolutely stunning demonic coalition of Hatfield and Hatch."

Further complicating things, from the administration's point of view, is the stance of Senate Minority Leader Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., who proved helped the White House win ratification of the Panama Canal treaties. Baker says he is strongly opposed to the SALT II treaty in its present form and will work to defeat it unless changes are made.

The treaty is not expected to reach the Senate floor before Oct. 1. The debate could continue into the winter.

Senate Panel To Hear SALT II Testimony

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many of the nation's top diplomatic and military leaders have accepted invitations to testify as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee opens an intensive examination of the SALT II treaty with the Soviet Union.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Secretary of Defense Harold Brown on Monday morning will be the lead-off witnesses to argue the Carter administration's case for ratification of the treaty.

The committee has scheduled 14 days of hearings in July and early August. Witnesses are to include former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

The committee had considered calling former presidents Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford but decided against it, even though the negotiations that led to the present treaty were conducted in their administrations.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, committee chairman, said members felt the main contribution the two former presidents could make would be political in nature and thus unrelated to the substance of the treaty.

However, Senate sources said some Republican senators were reluctant to give Nixon a highly public platform in light of his resignation from office at the height of the Watergate scandal.

Issues to be examined at the hearings include overall U.S.-Soviet relations, the future of arms control, the U.S.-Soviet strategic balance, the concerns of U.S. allies, and the capacity of the United States to monitor Soviet military activities and to verify Soviet compliance with the terms of the treaty.

The Foreign Relations Committee plans further hearings in September and is aiming at issuing a final report by the end of that month and bringing the treaty to the Senate floor for debate by Oct. 1.

The witness list on Tuesday includes arms control officials George Siegnious and Ralph Earle, former SALT negotiator Paul Warnke and experts on Soviet and military affairs.

Southern Support For Carter Said 'Gone With The Wind'

ATLANTA (AP) — The Southern support that helped Jimmy Carter gain the White House in 1976 is gone with the wind, and Sen. Edward Kennedy is now an equal contender for the votes of Dixie Democrats, according to a poll released Saturday.

"It is now apparent that the last stronghold of President Carter's support in the country has been broken," said Claibourne Darden Jr., president of the Atlanta-based Darden Research Corp.

Among all Southern voters, including Republicans and independents, Carter is now even with Kennedy and below former California Gov. Ronald Reagan, the pollster said. Among Democrats only, Kennedy outscored Carter.

Darden said his statistics are based on surveys conducted June 26-29 among 750 registered voters in 10 Southern states. Carter carried all but one of those states in the 1976 election.

The sample was split evenly between the sexes and weighted to approximate the racial composition of the region, he said. The poll is subject to a maximum margin of error of 3.6 percent either way.

The poll follows a Louis Harris survey showing Carter's approval rating among all Americans was at 25 percent, the lowest figure of his administration and the lowest for any presient in the last 30 years.

In a theoretical matchup with Kennedy, a survey of Democrats, Republicans and independents showed 42.9 percent favored Carter and 42.7 percent favored Kennedy, Darden reported.

"There is absolutely no statistically significant difference between these two ratings," Darden said. "Kennedy has split Carter's hard-core support right down the middle."

Among Democrats only, Kennedy was the favorite of 50.9 percent with Carter the choice of 40.1 percent, Darden said.

Of those who said they voted for Carter in 1976, 46 percent said they would now vote for Kennedy and 43.1 percent said they would stay with Carter, Darden said.

He said his last poll of that type, conducted April 13-21, showed Carter the favorite of 45 percent, with Kennedy scoring 38.9 percent.

Carter has not formally announced for re-election and Kennedy has said he will support Carter if the president chooses to seek re-election. Nevertheless, many "draft Kennedy" groups have sprung up around the country.

Asked to explain Kennedy's support in a generally conservative region, Darden commented, "People are grasping for a feasible alternative, even if it's a limousine liberal from Boston."

"There is only one issue — the economy," Darden said.

In a theoretical match between Carter and Reagan, 48.3 percent of the surveyed Southern voters said they favored the former California governor. Carter was the choice of 43.9 percent, Darden said.

He said that is a gain for Reagan since the April polling, when Reagan received 38.4 percent to Carter's 48.7 percent.

Among other potential Republican candidates, former Texas Gov. John Connally has remained static since the April polling with a showing of about 32 percent in a head-to-head match with Carter, Darden said, but Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee has gained on the president.

Baker, who scored 33.6 percent against Carter in the April poll, now scores 40.3 percent against 47.1 percent for Carter, the latest survey shows, Darden said.

For the survey, voters were sampled in 84 localities in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Tennessee. With the exception of Virginia, Carter carried each of those states in 1976.

Pair Claim CIA Hampered Probe

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Two prosecutors formerly assigned to the case of CIA official John A. Paisley urge a reopening to the investigation into Paisley's death, according to a copyright story in Sunday's Wilmington News-Journal.

Paisley disappeared last fall while sailing on the Chesapeake Bay and a body later was identified as his. The death was ruled by Maryland State Police to be a probable suicide.

Former state's attorneys Naji P. Maloof and Lawrence Lampson said that the Paisley probe suffered from CIA stonewalling and an unwillingness by the state police to pursue the case.

"Some people just don't want the truth about this case out," said Maloof, who was the Calvert County state's attorney when Paisley disappeared last Sept. 24.

Lampson, Maloof's successor and now a district court judge, said that state police were "unwilling to go to the wall" to force the Central Intelligence Agency to give them information on the case.

There were "a number of key areas that we had been looking at in the case and we could have cracked this thing if we didn't get so much flack," Maloof said.

Added Lampson, "It's time to do this thing and do it right."

Maloof said the Paisley case was different from all the others he'd handled in his four years as state's attorney.

"I never saw a police report on the case. Our files were just kept bare," he said.

Lampson said he repeatedly requested files on the case from state police. "They kept refusing to bring them up here and I finally got 5,000 pages of transcripts which showed a lot of leads no one followed up," Lampson said.

The case "still cries out for an investigation and I cannot understand why the state it not pursuing it," he said.

Lampson said he believed the CIA had lied to the state police about Paisley's background. Although the agency originally said that Paisley had retired, it later was revealed that he was working on several top-secret projects.

But Lampson said that in his present position as judge, he could not compel the police to pursue the case actively.

Maloof's and Lampson's comments come one week after a June 27 press conference at which two persons who were present when the body was recovered said they saw what appeared to be rope burns around the neck.

Police reports said the body had a gunshot wound to the head and was weighted with diving belts, but did not mention a neck injury.

One of the witnesses, acting County Coroner George Weems, said he believed the Paisley death involved foul play, not suicide. Another, Harry Lee Langley, a southern Maryland marine operator, said it looked to him as if the neck had been cut.

Both men said they were told by officials present when the body was brought in that they were not to discuss what they had seen.

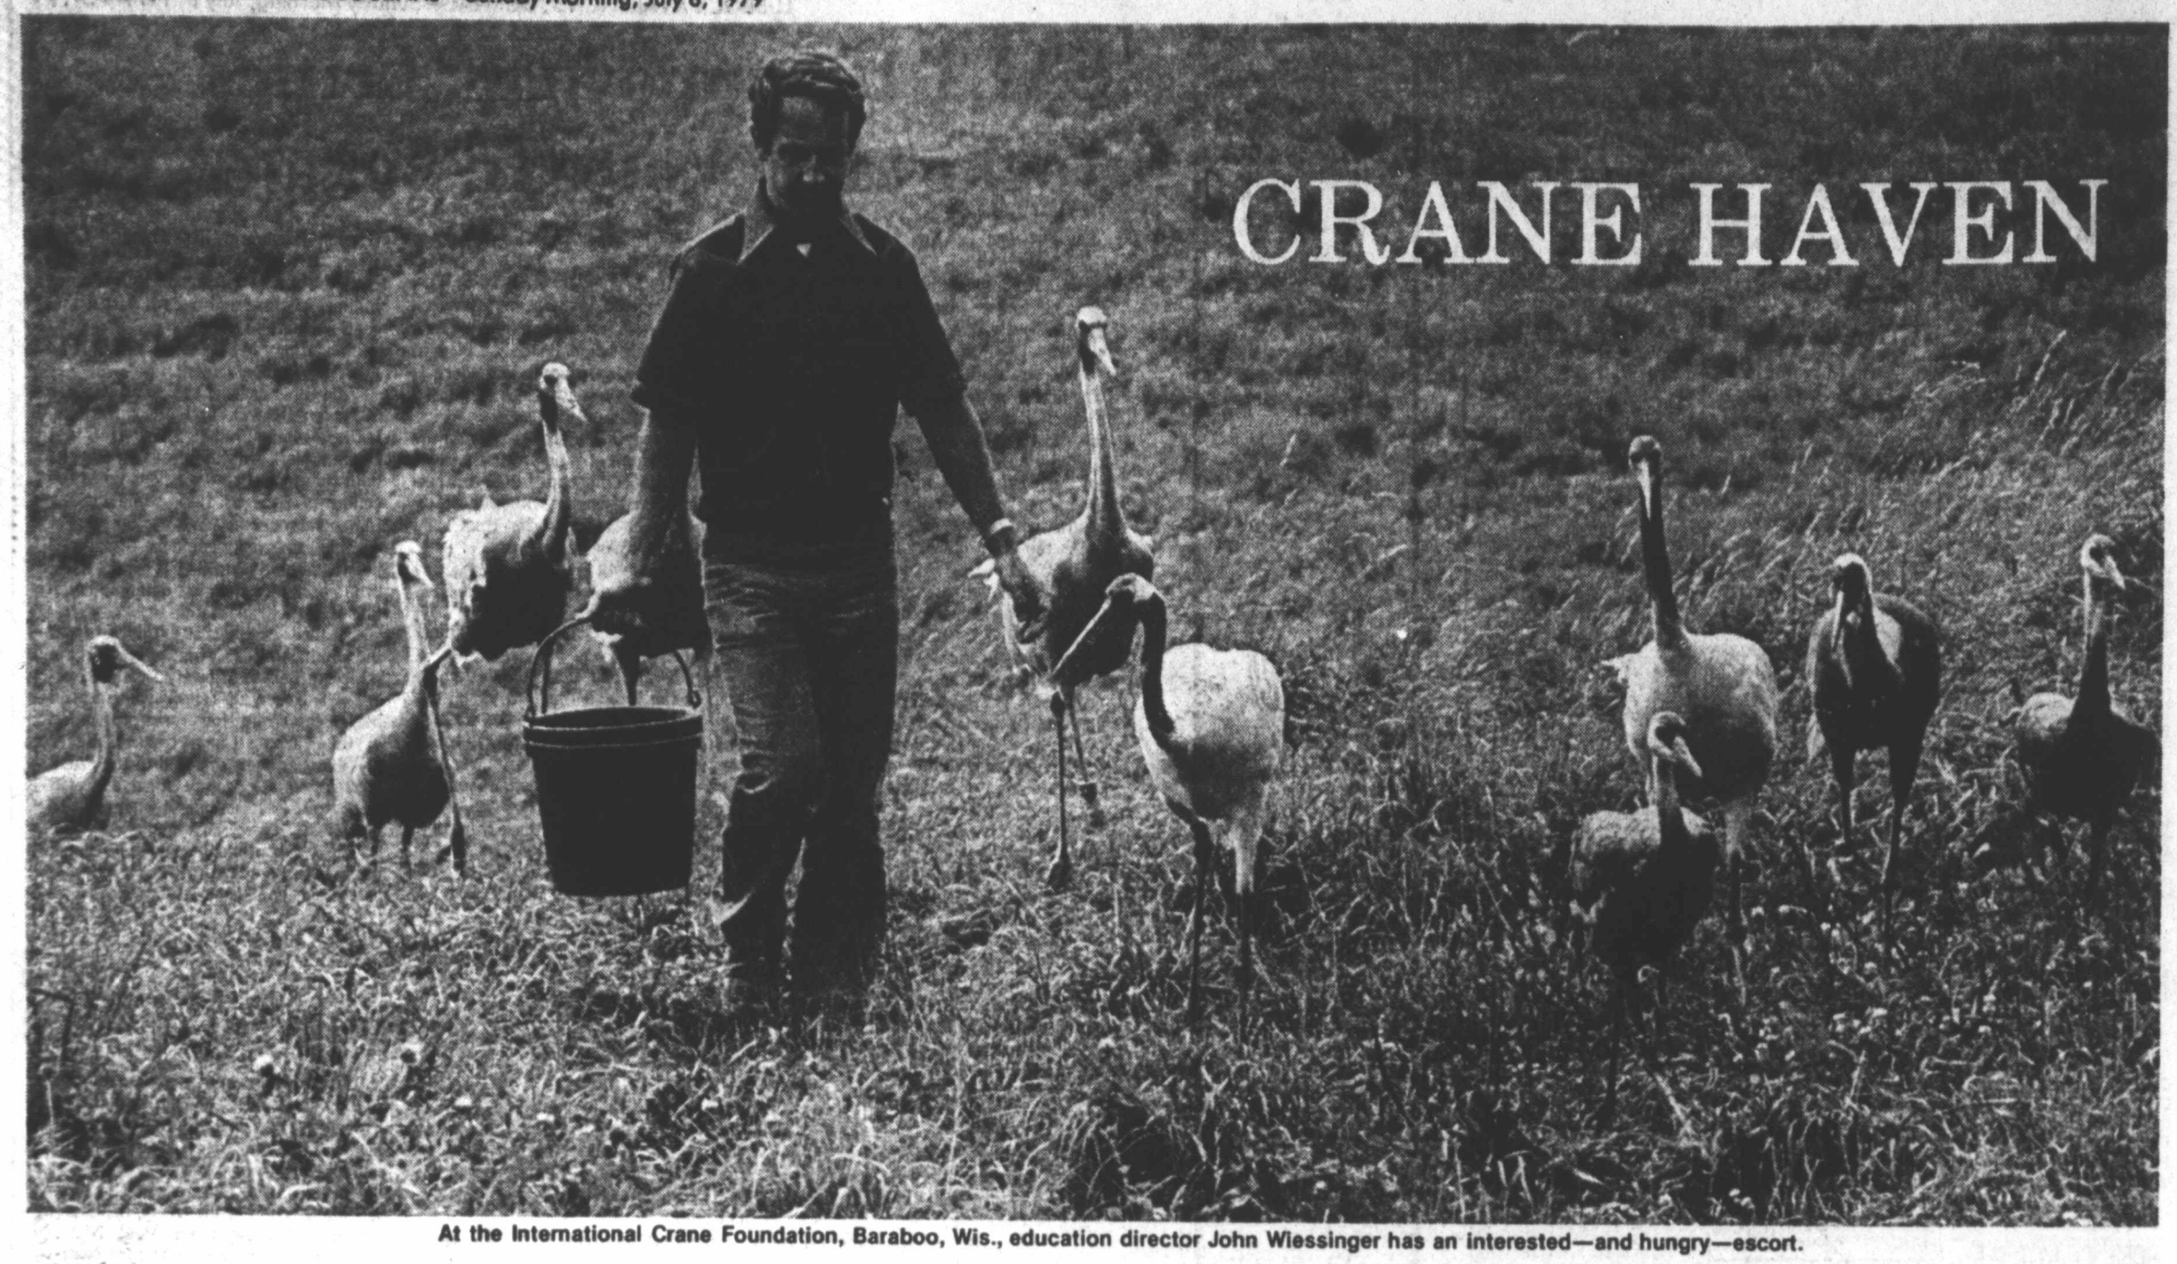
CRANE HAVEN



At the International Crane Foundation, Baraboo, Wis., education director John Wiessinger has an interested—and hungry—escort.

Crane chick explores his world: it's a safer one at ICF's headquarters.

Here, at the headquarters of the International Crane Foundation—ICF—at Baraboo, Wis., lives a colony of the oldest, rarest and to some the most beautiful birds in the world.

Cranes' survival is threatened in many parts of the globe. Of the 15 species still in existence, half are in trouble. And several are more endangered than the famous whooping crane, this country's tallest bird.

But hope is alive and well at the Baraboo refuge and so are more kinds of cranes than most people could see in a lifetime. The ICF came into being five years ago, its goal "the conservation of the world's cranes through research, habitat protection, captive breeding, restocking, and public education."

Now its own resident crane populations are established, and much of its work is concerned with raising birds and developing techniques for restoring wild populations. The ICF is supported entirely by contributions. Its budgeting is helped by the fact that its co-founders, ornithologists George Archibald and Ron Sauey, work without pay.

Pleasant Surroundings Enhance Pleasure For Hot Tub Devotees

BY JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

Pioneer West Texans used to pull galvanized steel tubs in from the yard to take Saturday night baths; but West Texans now are having hot tubs constructed in their backyards, though not for reasons of better hygiene!

The hot tub is exactly what the name implies — a large tub, usually constructed of redwood, holding several hundred gallons of water heated by a coil underneath. The tubs are also equipped so that the water bubbles and whirls and steams the body all at one time.

Hot tubs come in a variety of sizes. Some will seat as many as 20-30 people. An average size is five feet in diameter, four feet high. It holds about 500 gallons of water and comfortably seats six to eight people. The idea is that "tubbers" will sit on built-in benches, preferably slatted for better water circulation, which line the interior wall. Each tub comes equipped with its own filter, pump (usually one-horsepower) and heater (gas or electric). Some are equipped with skimming mechanisms, which will collect surface debris and body oils; and others provide molded domes to keep in the heat and solar panels.

Most dealers also provide indoor-outdoor decorating services to help a tub-buyer to create his or her own personal environment. Incidentally, some people prefer to have their hot tub installed indoors.

Naturally, the idea of hot tubs originated in California, where many "trendy" things get started.

One firm's come-on ads say "You can play in it, nap in it, swim in it or just sit and soak in it." So who can resist the appeal? As a result, sales of the new tubs are booming across the country, and discriminating Lubbockites also either are planning to buy or already have purchased one.

A Lubbockite who recently purchased a hot tub said, "Please don't give my name, otherwise all of my friends will descend on me to try out my new tub. But I have already found out I don't like to use the tub in the middle of a hot afternoon, even though I had it placed among a heavily foliaged area in the backyard. So, usually I wait until nighttime — that's when I, personally, enjoy the tub most. Oh boy, I'm really looking forward to using the tub this winter!"

Another Lubbockite asked for anonymity for a different reason. He said, "Although I have to keep up my playboy reputation, I actually bought a tub for my arthritis!"

Manufacturers say proper care includes plenty of chlorine and drainage about every two months. Manufacturers also emphasize that purchasing a hot tub will qualify as a tax-deductible medical expense if needed for therapeutic reasons and recommended by a physician.

Hot tubs recycle their water, consuming only what is lost through natural evaporation. A five-foot tub requires much less water to maintain, than most showers and bathtubs. Hot tubs retain heat well, especially those having solar panels.

One final advantage — people installing hot tubs can qualify for home-improvement loans.

A current poster shows Cowboy Charlie Waters posed in his own backyard hot tub, and you, too, can have one if you can afford it!

LOCAL BEAUTY — Chris Van Hoorebeke relaxes in pleasant surroundings before enjoying the comforts of a hot tub. Chris is only one of a growing number of people who are discovering the new tubs. Of course, nowhere else but California could have spawned the phenomenon but now Americans from coast to coast are trying them out and buying. The attractions include being bigger than a bathtub, yet smaller than a swimming pool and combines some of the nicest features of both. Along with a warm soak, you have the swirling water to soothe the spirit and relax the nerves. (Staff photo by Gary Davis)

HOT TUB PRIVACY — If privacy is important to you in getting the maximum enjoyment from using one of the new hot tubs, consider having it installed in a corner niche adjoining your home. By doing so, one wall of the home will provide a portion of fencing, thus eliminating extra expense.

In My Corner

By FRANCES LOWE

We had stopped at the local plastic and glitter in a small town for supper at a restaurant shaped like a boat, with a gangplank over which you walked to get to the serving line.

We should have known better. In the waiting line, patrons with plastic faces, Disney rejects, waited for food which arrived in paper boats, reeking of grease, while windup dolls in red striped uniforms with pirate patches on their eyes shouted orders over their shoulders to the robots in the back room.

The Princess surveyed her paper boat of food and asked, "Are you sure there is something here from the grease group?"

The Angel was content to push her food around with the plastic oars provided for utensils.

When we are on the road we gorge ourselves on all the junk food we can find (easier than finding good food), a once-a-year pigout for the whole family. At home, we tend to eat conservatively and to eschew the plastic for reasons of expense, nutrition and aesthetics. Although the Angel would live on pizza and coke and her sister once announced, after a long visit with her grandmother, "I would kill for junk food!" such fare is unusual at our house — which is probably why it is so attractive to them.

I think a bowl of potato and sausage soup and a grilled cheese sandwich at home are easier and cheaper than a trip to Hamburger Heaven, and if we want fancier fare, a sirloin or a pound of shrimp on the grill, even at today's prices, is cheaper than "chopped steak" in a restaurant. The only reasons I can think for eating out are to get out of cleaning up (a good reason) and to get something that you couldn't or wouldn't prepare at home, like Chinese, or to celebrate some fantastic event in your life at a table where the wine is not served in jelly glasses.

On the road, of course, these options are not available, and our trips blur into a vague montage of endless interstates and fast-food chains, so much alike that you cannot tell whether you are in Kansas or Maine.

If we are taking off on a long trip we load the back of the car with whatever is non-nutritious, crumbley, guaranteed to rot your teeth and make your face break out. The trip to the supermarket to get these things is uncomfortable for me because I am easily intimidated and find it necessary to explain to the checkout clerk, who couldn't care less, that I don't usually buy this sort of thing.

Traveling with the girls is like having a car full of mice; there is constant ripping, tearing and crunching, interrupted by requests to open something (I once rode through Missouri trying to open a can of dried beef with my teeth).

Although we try to contain the rubble, opening the car door unleashes a flood of pre-sweetened cereal, crushed potato chips and soft drink cans, along with stray socks and shoes. Once, in Florida, the parked car was invaded by ants, which provided free entertainment for us all that day as we caught them and put them out the car windows — a mobile ant farm.

We also carry canned goods to provide an instant picnic by the side of the road, a bedtime snack or in a pinch, a complete meal. Once we stopped in Virginia to eat "genuine Virginia cured ham." When Himself saw the waitress slide the ham out of a can he left angrily, to eat canned baked beans and wieners in the room.

All of which is not to say that we do not eat good food on the road when we can find it. We are not like some people we know who went to New Orleans for the first time, armed with our list of favorite restaurants, and came back saying that the line at Galitoire's was so long they had decided to eat in the motel dining room.

On the contrary, some of our best memories are of food: the wharf in Maine where we gorged ourselves on fresh lobster; Brunswick, Ga., where we watched the shrimp boats come in and then boiled and ate mountains of tender shrimp; Oregon, where we bought a whole fresh salmon from the man who had caught it, baked it on coals on the beach and ate it with our fingers.

We have eaten Greek food in Boston and Chinese food in San Francisco and fried chicken and grits in South Georgia with equal relish. We once ate in an unbelievably dirty East Indian restaurant in Los Angeles where they served, I think, live fish; and once we searched for hours among the swamps of southern Louisiana for a particular restaurant to eat the best fish I have ever tasted.

We like to try the native dishes of whatever part of the country we find ourselves in, and try to avoid the chains, which will serve the same food fried in the same grease, from Maine to California, regardless of what is growing along the road or swimming in the river.

So, you want your portrait made deep in the Amazon Jungle...Why not?

The best portraits are made in surroundings that are comfortable. So, if the only place you really feel comfortable is deep in the heart of the Amazon Jungle with a boa constrictor slithering down a limb in the background...we'll go there. We know portrait studios aren't always the best place to make portraits, so, we make the entire world our studio... in your backyard, in your den or Anchorage, Alaska...if it's more comfortable for you...we'll go there. Naturally, if we go to the Amazon Jungle, the picture will cost more... but, shouldn't your portrait be something more than just a mug shot?

Couple Helps Child Adjust To New Baby

BY JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

The arrival of a new baby in the family brings change to a home, and each family member is affected. Siblings are often troubled about the new arrival, but the only child may suffer the pain of displacement most.

Although Roxanne and Randy Plank of Lubbock made no special plans to prepare their daughter, Amber, for the addition to the family, they'd always talked naturally about the fact she'd have either a baby sister or brother someday. The Planks said, "We have made it a rule to include Amber in family discussions, whenever it was appropriate. So, if we eased the transition or made the adjustment easier for both ourselves and Amber, the most important thing may have been bringing up the subject of another child beforehand."

Mrs. Plank says both she and her husband were very excited when she knew she was pregnant. "And when we told Amber," she recalled, "I think our happiness was so apparent that it just spilled over, making her feel the same way as we did.

"As my pregnancy progressed, Amber — though young — began noticing the changes in my body, and of course she had a lot of questions. But I tried to answer what she wanted to know in as simple a way as I could, though without elaboration. As an example, I merely said the baby was growing in my abdomen. When Amber appeared anxious about not being able to see the baby then, I told her I could keep the baby warm and healthier that way and eventually we'd be able to see and hold him. If she had any questions concerning the birth process, she did not ask them.

"I suppose this is a very human and normal thing, but until I felt the baby's movements he hadn't become 'real' even to me. When Amber felt movement in my abdomen, the baby was real to her, too.

"As time approached for my delivery, Randy and I told Amber she would get to visit her grandmother for a few days while I had the baby. We stressed the visit, rather than the fact I was going to go to the hospital. Since being with grandmother was 'special,' Amber began looking forward to the visit.

"When we brought Matthew home, Amber was happy, but intrigued. Of course, we had a lot of guests to see the baby at first, but we let Amber show her new baby brother. And, when visitors complimented Matthew, we let Amber know she was to say 'thank you'. In other words, we tried to assure her that the baby belonged not only to us but to her as well.

"Later on, whenever we played with Matthew, we tried to give time and attention to Amber, also.

"Among other positive things that happened is the fact that before the baby came, Amber was a little shy. Since Matthew arrived, however, she's had to talk more and call attention to herself more — that's been very good."

Amber is now four-and-one-half (five in September) and Matthew will be one-year-old Tuesday. But, the Planks laughingly admit, "We must have done the right things purely by accident in the change from a one-child to a two-child family, but today we're just thankful for our healthy and happy family."

GARDEN TOOLS

Make sure that electric and gasoline-powered garden tools are sharp and well-lubricated, says a housing and home furnishings specialist. Properly maintained tools use less energy, explains Pat Seaman, with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

by Jessie Lee Sharpley

With the recent celebration of the 4th of July, it reminded me of the popular hymn, "America, the Beautiful". With every note describing the spacious skies, the amber waves of grain, the caprocks, the beauty of the land, one important beauty is left undescribed in this song—Americans. The beauty of you, the beauty of people of West Texas.

Because we live in West Texas where the wind is dry and the chemicals in the water can be hard on skin and hair, it is important to take special time to protect your body which reflects the inner beauty of you. Here at Jessie Lee's we encourage women to take a special interest in the way they look. It has been our experience that most men are pleased when their women show pride in their appearance. If your hair is unhealthy, if your face lacks the freshness it once had, or if you would like a "new" look, we can help bring life back to your "look" and create a new confidence in yourself.

We would like the opportunity to analyze your particular needs, make recommendations and schedule the services needed to achieve your new look. Jessie Lee and her team of Shirley Andrews and Jana Sharpley will work together to carry out the plans for a new you.

Becoming beautiful is not an overnight happening. It is a disciplined lifestyle developing each day in you to bring out your abilities and strong points. A confidence in your appearance leaves you the freedom to enjoy life each day.

Remember that you as an American are not just a human being, but a human becoming-beautiful. 7-8

Salvation Army Welcomes Commander

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

Joining many other summer arrivals to Lubbock is the family of the new commanding officer of the Lubbock Salvation Army unit. Maj. and Mrs. James Waller and their children, Jimmy, 17, and Jan, 14, recently moved here from Galveston.

"We've heard many good things about the program of the Army in Lubbock," Maj. Waller said. The Wallers replace Capt. and Mrs. Phil Murphy who were transferred to the staff of the Salvation Army Training College in Atlanta.

Waller is a product of the youth emphasis in the Salvation Army program. "My grandmother was the oldest living Salvationist in my home town. I went to Sunday School there starting with the second week of my life."

The new commanding officer has served in the Army for 21 years following his graduation from the Atlanta school. The family was in Galveston for two years and in Lufkin prior to that assignment.

As he becomes acquainted with the program here, Maj. Waller said he hopes to build on the strengths of the existing program. He is especially interested in involving more of the young people in the community in the activities of the center.

Seventeen-year-old Jimmy is working at camp this summer and then plans to attend Asbury College in Kentucky in the fall. Jan will enter the ninth grade at Evans Junior High School.

Billie Jean Waller has always taken an active part in the work of the Salvation Army with her husband and plans to continue to do so in Lubbock. Her special interests are ceramics and crafts, skills which she uses in working with the youth and women's group meetings at the center.

Along with the move to a new post, the family is getting ready for the experience of having the first child leave home for college. "We view this with mixed emotions," said Maj. Waller. "I guess I won't spend so much time on the basketball court with Jimmy going away," he laughed. Sports of all kinds, but particularly basketball and golf, are favorite leisure time activities.

The Advisory Board of the Lubbock Salvation Army unit welcomed the Wallers at a reception this week in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ronnie Fancher.

ROMAN GARDEN SALAD

¾ cup uncooked white rice
¾ cup vegetable oil
1/3 cup wine vinegar
1/3 cup snipped parsley
2½ tsps. oregano leaves
1¾ tsp. salt
1½ tsps. garlic powder
½ lb. fresh mushrooms, thickly sliced
1 med. zucchini, sliced ¼-inch thick
12 cherry tomatoes, halved
Boston or Romaine lettuce leaves
1½ cups bran cereal
1 cup thinly sliced radishes
¾ lb. capicola ham, sliced and rolled
½ lb. provolone cheese, sliced
1 (4 oz.) jar stuffed green olives, drained

At least two hours before serving or the night before, cook rice according to package directions; cover and refrigerate.

Make dressing: In covered jar, combine oil, vinegar, parsley, oregano leaves, salt and garlic powder. Shake until well blended; refrigerate.

Make salad: Two hours before serving, arrange mushrooms, zucchini and tomatoes separately in a 2-quart oblong baking dish; pour over ½ cup dressing. Cover and chill.

Just before serving, arrange lettuce on serving platter. Toss chilled rice, bran and radishes with remaining salad dressing. Mound in center of platter and surround, in sections, with sliced mushrooms, zucchini, tomatoes, capicola ham, provolone cheese and stuffed olives.

Calling All Homemakers

By SYD MOORE, A.S.I.D

A new chair in a vivid contrasting color can give a bright, exciting lift to almost any room.

For a creative look, consider using two unmatched tables on each side of a sofa. It will keep your living room from looking like everyone else's.

Many people are surprised at the small difference in price between repairing old furniture and buying new. Quite often it pays to buy new. In any event, before repairing the old you owe it to yourself to check prices on new furniture.

If you want to make a room seem cooler, use some blues and greens; if you want it to seem warmer, use some reds and oranges; if you want it to seem brighter and cheerier, try some yellows.

SKILLET ENTREE

Summer is a good time to discover new ways to prepare eggs. Try a frittata, for example. It's a simple skillet entree that's cut in wedges to serve. (Actually, it's just an unfolded omelet.) It's perfect for hot weather because it's fast and easy to prepare and you don't heat up the kitchen while cooking it.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 32-year-old woman, living alone, supporting myself, and respectable in every sense of the word. I'm nothing special to look at (a little on the heavy side) but I never was so hungry for a man I'd date just anybody.

Well, a salesman came into our office two weeks ago and came on to me immediately. He's 36, divorced (no children). We were really attracted to each other. I honestly thought I'd found the man I had been waiting for.

Then he asked me how much money I had in the bank. I told him, and he asked me if I could let him have $2,500 for 90 days. I was shocked since he had told me how "fabulously" he had been doing. It didn't add up.

I said I'd give him the money if he'd sign a note. He got very angry and said if he had wanted to sign a note he'd have gone to a bank.

Now I don't know what to do. Half of me tells me not to give him the money without the note, and the other half tells me to give it to him. I need some advice.

Half And Half

Dear Half: Listen to the half with the brains and give him no money without a note.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the widow who wanted to know if she could continue using the name "Mrs. John Doe."

I find it strange that any woman (wife or widow) would want to be called "Mrs. John Doe." It is indeed a peculiar custom and seems as ludicrous as a husband calling himself "Mr. Jane Doe!"

Incidentally, I am not a young radical; I am nearing 50 and have been happily married for 27 years, but I don't call myself "Mrs. Charles LaFollett." Neither does my husband call himself "Mr. Marlene LaFollett."

If you print this you will probably hear from a lot of women who have obtained their identity through their husbands. Their rationale will probably be, "I'm proud to use my husband's name."

To that I would say, "Why doesn't he use your name? Isn't he proud of you?"

Think of it!

Marlene Lafollett In Colorado

Dear Marlene: I've thought about it, and it provides another valid reason for the use of "Ms." Read on:

DEAR ABBY: When Jane Roe marries John Doe, she becomes, as you say, "Mrs. John Doe" for the rest of her days should she choose to remain so.

She is a "Mrs." by the fact of her marriage to John, and therefore can only correctly be called "Mrs. Jane Doe" in the event that her husband's first name was Jane! Highly unlikely!

Alexis Pencovic In S.F.

DEAR ABBY: Last year you printed the name of a travel club that arranged tours and trips all over the world for non-smokers. I happened to be allergic to tobacco smoke and I can't imagine anything more wonderful than traveling with a group of non-smokers.

I clipped that column, although I wasn't able to travel at the time, but I am very much interested in going this year. Will you please print the name and address of the club again? I'm sure other non-smokers will be interested.

Breastfeeding Topic Of Expert's Report

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

More and more new mothers are deciding to breastfeed their babies and local nutritionist, Tyra Carter, is very pleased with this trend.

Mrs. Carter, herself a new mother, has done extensive research on factors influencing women who decide not to breastfeed.

Until about 50 years ago, breastfeeding was the only way to feed a baby and every mother did it. Then bottle feeding became the "in thing" to do, she reported. For upper class women who wanted to be free of the limits imposed on a breastfeeding mother, the idea of bottle feeding their babies offered more freedom. "Actually it became some kind of a status symbol to bottle feed your baby, and so more and more women of all economic levels wanted to do it."

Her research indicated that now more upper and middle income level women are wanting to breastfeed their infants. Not only is the number of women increasing, but also the length of time which a mother will nurse her baby is increasing as well, sometimes to as long as a year and a half.

In addition to the reasons reported already, Mrs. Carter's research has revealed several other reasons which women give for deciding not to breast feed.

One reason is that their husbands are not in favor of it. Some men have the misunderstanding that if their wife breastfeeds the baby, the marital relationship will be less satisfactory. Still others fear breastfeeding will cause sagging breasts.

Mrs. Carter says these attitudes really are mistakes. She said if men would understand about the benefits of breast feeding, fathers could be very supportive of new mothers.

Some women don't want to try breastfeeding for fear of failure. Mrs. Carter said that, for breastfeeding to continue to regain popularity, the medical professsion, especially nurses on maternity floors, must be able to help women learn the correct way to do it. Giving emotional support is as important as helping with the actual technique, Mrs. Carter said.

Urbanization and modernization are two other factors which her research has identified as determiners. "Some still consider breastfeeding as a 'peasant practice,' not suitable to modern times," she said.

The desires of many mothers to return to work shortly after the birth of their babies is also a factor. Mrs. Carter remarked that the case of the woman who was fired for taking time away from her duties to breastfeed at her job may be an issue to be dealt with repeatedly in the future if the trend continues.

Many women also feel the economic pressures to return to work and think that breastfeeding would be impossible with that kind of a schedule. This is not necessarily so, said the nutritionist, because it is possible to collect, package, and store mother's milk in the freezer for feeding the baby.

As a nutritionist, Mrs. Carter is most forceful in her advocacy of breastfeeding as being the best possible way to feed a baby. "Human mother's milk simply cannot be duplicated 100 percent," she said. "It is the perfect food for human babies."

Mrs. Carter is very critical of programs which encourage use of formula or milk other than breast milk. "Not only is it more expensive, but it just isn't as nutritious," she said.

Homemade Chocolate Ice Cream Recipes Provide Summer Treat

NEW YORK (Special) — If you remember eating — and helping to make — homemade chocolate ice cream as a child, you know the store-bought kind simply can't compare. If you don't remember, there's something delicious in store for you! It's fun for the whole family to share this tasty bit of Americana. And don't be frightened by visions of "hard work" because you'll get delectable results with only a small investment of time and effort. The key is unsweetened cocoa.

Since cocoa is ready to measure and mix, directly from the can, you eliminate the melting step. And you avoid the messy clean-up, the chance of scorched pans. Cocoa combines well with other ingredients, so ice cream texture should be satin smooth — there's little risk of lumps. You'll save money, too: six ounces of cocoa go as far as eight ounces of baking chocolate.

In most cases you don't even need an ice cream freezer, just your refrigerator freezer. Best of all, since cocoa is chocolate in very concentrated form, your ice cream will taste double-chocolatey.

Chocolate Butter Pecan Ice Cream is made with sweetened condensed milk so you don't have to cook the custard base. It takes just minutes of your attention and it's delightfully creamy.

HOMEMADE ICE CREAM — Because nothing beats the taste and creamy consistency of homemade chocolate ice cream, here are three variations on this popular theme: Chocolate Butter Pecan Ice Cream, Super-Rich Homemade Chocolate Ice Cream and Chocolate Custard Ice Cream DeLuxe. All are absolutely scrumptious — and surprisingly simple to make.

Super-Rich Homemade Chocolate Ice Cream is the classic. If you have an old-fashioned hand-crank freezer in the basement or attic, why not dust it off and let the kids take turns. Most energetic turner gets to lick the paddles! This version is especially luscious scopped into cones.

For an elegant treat, try extra-chocolatey Chocolate Custard Ice Cream DeLuxe — also surprisingly simple to prepare. Since this queen of chocolate ice cream deserves royal treatment, serve it in parfait glasses layered with chopped nuts and coconut, crowned with whipped cream and chocolate curls.

CHOCOLATE BUTTER PECAN ICE CREAM

½ cup coarsely chopped pecans
1 tbsp. butter
½ cup cocoa
2/3 cup water
1 can (14 oz.) sweetened condensed milk
2 tsps. vanilla
2 cups heavy cream

Saute pecans in butter in small saucepan over medium heat for 2 minutes. Cool. Combine cocoa and water in small saucepan; bring to boil stirring constantly. Remove from heat; stir in condensed milk and vanilla. Pour into 8-inch square pan; freeze until mushy. Whip heavy cream until stiff. Whip chocolate mixture in small chilled bowl; fold into cream. Blend in pecans. Pour into pan and return to freezer; freeze until firm. Stir occasionally during first hour. Mound in serving bowl.

SUPER-RICH HOMEMADE CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

½ cup cocoa
¾ cup sugar
1 cup milk
3 egg yolks, slighten beaten
1 tbsp. vanilla
2 cups heavy cream

¼ cup sugar

Combine cocoa and ¾ cup sugar in small saucepan. Gradually blend in milk and egg yolks. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture just approaches boiling. Do not boil. Remove from heat; cool. Stir in vanilla.

Refrigerator freezer method: Pour into refrigerator tray or 9-inch square pan. Freeze until mushy, about 1 hour. Whip cream in large mixer bowl; add ¼ cup sugar and beat until stiff. Spoon chocolate mixture into small chilled mixer bowl; beat until smooth. Fold into whipped cream. Place bowl in freezer or pour into square pan. Freeze several hours until firm. Stir occasionally during first hour.

Electric or crank-type freezer method: Stir in cream (unwhipped) and ¼ cup sugar. Pour into freezer container; put dasher in place. Cover can, place in freezer tub. Fill freezer 1/3 full of ice; add remaining ice alternately with layers of rock salt. Turn crank until it turns with difficulty. Draw off water. Remove lid; take out dasher. Pack mixture down. Replace lid; repack ice and salt. Let ripen several hours. Scoop into cones or individual serving dishes.

CHOCOLATE CUSTARD ICE CREAM DELUXE

2/3 cup cocoa
1½ cups sugar
2 tbsps. cornstarch
¼ tsp. salt
2 cups milk
3 eggs
⅓ cup sugar
1 tbsp. vanilla
3 cups light cream
2 cups heavy cream

Combine cocoa, 1½ cups sugar, cornstarch and salt in saucepan; gradually stir in milk. Cook and stir over medium heat until mixture boils; boil and stir 1 minute. Remove from heat. Quickly beat eggs with ⅓ cup sugar. Blend a small amount of hot mixture into beaten eggs; add to mixture in saucepan. Blend in vanilla, light cream and heavy cream. Chill. Fill ice cream container 2/3 full. Freeze in ice cream freezer according to manufacturer's directions. (Alternate ice cream layers with chopped nuts, shredded coconut or cookie crumbs, for parfaits.)

Note: For extra-chocolatey ice cream, increase cocoa to ¾ cup.

Spice Consumption Increases In U.S.

NEW YORK (Special) — Americans are leading much spicier lives lately, according to the American Spice Trade Association. The latest figures available show spice consumption in the U.S. continuing to increase far in excess of population growth.

In 1978 the annual spice consumption was 488 million pounds. Compare this with 284 million just a decade earlier (1962-1966 average). And way back in the late '50's it was only 158 million.

The biggest jump in individual spices in the past decade show mustard seed up a whopping 201 percent, oregano up 97 percent and cumin seed, widely used in Mexican and Indian cooking, up 106 percent.

The industry figures include imports and domestic production of spices, herbs, spice seeds and dehydrated vegetable seasonings (the onion and garlic products, mixed vegetable flakes and sweet pepper flakes normally sold on the spice shelves).

Fresh Fruit Supplies Enhance Meals

DALLAS (Special) — What more colorful way to cool down summer meals than with soft summer fruits! The U.S. Department of Agriculture predicts bountiful supplies of fresh peaches, plums, nectarines and limes to sparkle your menu.

In fact, lime supplies are so large, you should find retail prices more favorable, reports USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service.

Expect adequate supplies of these fruits: fresh apricots and sweet cherries, oranges and dried prunes. By the end of July shipments of fresh Bartlett pears promise light — less than adequate — supplies. Also, fresh lemons and grapefruit will be in light supply.

Pork and poultry continue to compete. Pork prices fell in April and poultry prices remained unchanged. However, with an increase in output of both items, you may see lower retail prices in coming months.

Pork production will average 16-18 percent above last year. Broiler-fryer marketings will show an eight to nine percent increase and turkey supplies will be up 25-30 percent.

Beef supplies are adequate — enough to meet normal needs — but down from record levels of recent years.

Supplies of milk and dairy products will be in good balance with demand.

Plenty of staple food items — potatoes, onions, rice, wheat, corn, dry beans and dry split peas — will be found.

Stocks of most processed vegetables are adequate, with frozen lima beans, snap beans, and corn-on-the-cob plentiful. Until harvest of new pack green peas and spinach, these items will remain in light supply.

Tune In Tomorrow

By JON-MICHAEL REED

ALL MY CHILDREN: Mark and Brooke's beach romp was interrupted when she learned her mother was ill. Erica convinced Tom to redecorate the Chateau but he fumed that she plotted to turn his commercial into a sexy come-on featuring her. Myrtle insisted she won't stop helping Kelly fight the pill habit and taunted Kelly saying Linc was tempted by a former amour, Cynthia Ewing. Cliff suggested he'd like to see Nina once she's released. But Sybil turned off Cliff by lying about his being a romeo. Phoebe consented to help Donna become sophisticated after Chuck threatened to leave town. Russ felt he's lost Nancy, now that Frank is persistent that they remarry.

ANOTHER WORLD: Vince regained consciousness but has a speech impairment. He and Mimi were married in his hospital room. Phil was jealous that Morgan dated Sally. Brian walked out on Iris again, after learning about her machinations against Janice. Blaine returned to check on Larry's health progress and agreed to give Jamie an uncontested divorce. Iris rubbed it in to Mac that Rachel is staying in Kirk's New York apartment. Angie told Vince but not Willis that she is pregnant. Roy threatened to sue Willis and Kirk. Mike learned that Karen's problems involve her brother Ben and Ben's money problems. Phil hoodwinked Liz about his "organization." Eileen insisted to Rita that she will continue seeing Joey and that they're not doing anything sinful. Marianne told Alice that she is going away to nursing school.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Lisa swooned when Bennett arrived to court her, then she played hard to get. Kim found Kate and convinced her to donate the blood that saved Valerie's life. Marsha teased Jeff about their previous fling which Doug doesn't know about. Bob finally admitted his love for Dana, but Ian cancelled future concerts and insisted he is staying in Oakdale to work on an opera and to save his marriage to Dana. Jeff was angry that Annie wouldn't date him because she needed to crack the books. Susan allowed Emmy to stay with Dan and Kim for the summer when she learned about Dan's illness.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Carrie's ghost pushed Laura over the edge. Laura swallowed drugs, locked herself in her room and tried to hang herself. Bill and Alice came to the rescue. Bill finally faced the fact that Laura has to be institutionalized. Chris accidentally bumped into Mary with his jeep after a battle resulting from his admission that he's through with her and serious about Amanda. Doug freaked out when Robert announced he's taking Dougie to Paris. Stephanie suspected Linda had snooped around Steph's office and noted that Linda recognized David, which didn't jive with Linda's amnesia story. Steve hinted that Mary ought to sue Chris.

THE DOCTORS: Jason's return delighted Mona but stifled Nola's claims, especially when Jason insisted on blood tests for Jessica. M.J. had nightmares about losing Colin to other women until she discovered the ring he'd bought her. Kim tried to buy a partnership into the Medicine Man, while enticing Luke not to "save" himself for his wedding night. Carolee went to visit her ailing mother.

EDGE OF NIGHT: The Madisons were stunned when mother Nola arrived unexpectedly after checking herself out of a "drying out" spa. Paige agreed to turn state's evidence if Brian would stick around. Brian feared her testimony would put her life in jeopardy with the rest of the gang. Slattery got Elliott everything he wanted from a willing Raven. Sara learned about it and threatened to tell Margo unless Elliott visited Sara's bedroom. Steve quit the police force and became a cab driver.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Tracy spread gossip that Rick was surgically negligent while operating on a patient. All charges were dropped and she is free to marry Scotty. Mitch investigated the disco as being a mob front for drugs and prostitution. Gary went on a book publicity tour and Gina decided to split. Larry Joe suspected he was being conned by Heather in their devious doings. Joe learned that Cal had been at his Canadian sister's house. Joe courted Anne, who was suspicious of Heather's motives for wanting to adopt Jeremy.

GUIDING LIGHT: Holly met her cellmate Clara after being sentenced to 12 years in the clink. Rita suppressed her feelings of being forced by Ed to care for Christina during Holly's imprisonment. Rita had a tough time dealing with the child and with Barbara's nagging. Jackie fussed that Alan asked Diane to hostess a party because of Jackie's health. Ben and Amanda were drawn together because Lucille needs constant attention. Lainie lost confidence after her boyfriend Chuck visited briefly and was turned off by her crippled state. Roger willed everything to Peggy and Billy, leaving peanuts for Holly and Christina. Flirtations flew between Hope and Gordon and Jackie and Ross. Jackie tried to reunite Ben and Eve.

LOVE OF LIFE: Ray was upset that Carrie allowed Gina to date Wesley, although Gina dampened Wes' passions. Liane and Tom argued whether Betsy should report Elliott's rape. Meg funded Tom's cardiac project and disapproved of Steve living with the Sterlings. Betsy beat around the bush to Ben about Elliott.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Paul was nabbed by the San Carlos police. Dorian raged that Adam was supplying the banana republic with guns. She and Peter departed to check on Paul. Brad staged a burglary at his pad to cover the fact that he had hocked Jenny's pearls for gambling debts. Jenny wanted to use the pearls to help Samantha finance the purchase of Marco's health club. Ivan forced Faith to parade privately in sexy nighties for his kinky pleasure. Brad railed at Karen for turning his house into a pad for hookers while she helped Katrina fight her "urges." Adam hired Brad as Gretal's replacement, and Brad caught on quickly that Adam was involved in Paul's detention. Tina and Mario dated on the sly.

RYAN'S HOPE: Poppy left for Ireland after Tom nixed going to bed with her and pledged his love to Faith. Roger promised Rae that Frank won't ever learn of their past affair. Dee tattled to Maeve and Nancy's pa, Dave, about Nancy and Pat living in sin on the houseboat. Rae and Seneca joined forces to keep Jill and Frank from getting too close while working on the hospital wing. Tom received his residency papers.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Mignon kicked Liza out of the mansion. Janet comforted Ted who is depressed over Laine's trial. Martin grew closer to Jo after moving to the inn. Sunny believed in Nick's innocence but agreed to spy on him for David. Nick failed to infiltrate the mansion to finish his job on Travis.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Brock and Liz were appalled that Suzanne and Jill had the gall to attend Kay's "funeral." Kay decided to stay dead until she discovers Derek's true feelings. Laurie accepted Lance's decision to leave town temporarily to resolve his future plans. Luke nixed joining Leslie on a concert tour and returning the company to Lance. Julie tried to get her pal Sharon to leave the runaway boarding house and cruel supervisor, Rose. Greg moved into his own apartment.

Epleptic Society To Meet Tuesday

Ellen Rubenstein will be the guest speaker at the meeting of the Epileptic Society of the South Plains at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Hodges Community Center, 41st Street and University Avenue. Mrs. Rubenstein is an electro encephlogram technician.

This organization is being developed for those who have epilepsy, and/or, their families, school teachers or anyone interested in knowing more about this type of handicap. Those who teach or work with children in any capacity, should attend this meeting so they can be better informed and understand more about convulsive disorders and the treatment that is available.

The Epileptic Society of the South Plains is sponsored by the Pilot Club of Lubbock. Pilot Club is a business and professional women's service club.

There are many epileptics in the South Plains area, many of the well-educated and active leaders in their communities. Epilepsy has been kept in the closet far too long.

A bit of this, a bit of that...

I received a couple calls last week from readers requesting confirmation that rock musician Lowell George had died. Sadly, it is true. George, 34 and the founder of the popular band Little Feat, died June 29 of what was termed an "apparent heart attack" at a hotel in Arlington, Va.

George had recently released an acclaimed solo LP called "Thanks, I'll Eat It Here."

The new Mann Fourplex, 6205 Slide Road, will open its doors for the first time Friday afternoon, with television personality Pat Buttram on hand for the ribbon-cutting ceremony. Though Buttram, perhaps best remembered for his performance as Mr. Haney on TV's long-running "Green Acres," will be flown in Thursday to meet with the media and will be at the theater opening, management remained uncertain as to how much time Buttram would spend with the public.

The ribbon-cutting ceremony is being held shortly after noon rather than during evening hours, no doubt to capitalize on the matinee trade for "The Muppet Movie."

This is not the first time Mann Theaters has flown in a guest celebrity to cut the traditional ribbon. Rhonda Fleming was on hand about five years ago when the Fox Fourplex opened its doors.

Saturday night marked the final performance of "The Sound Of Music" at the Country Squire Dinner Theater, a show which set box office records. The musical, which starred former Miss Lubbock Leslie Thurman as Maria, was held over for an eight week engagement — beating by one week the seven-week run by the Squire's opening production of "Fiddler On The Roof."

Whereas "Fiddler On The Roof" was performed before a sum total of 6,030 people, the July 4 crowd brought the total attendance for "The Sound Of Music" up to 8,304. Country Squire Dinner Theater manager Debi Chandler said Thursday afternoon, "We've still got three more nights to go, and we're naturally hoping to top the 9,000 mark. This has definitely been our most successful show since coming to Lubbock."

The Squire will open the non-musical "Any Wednesday" this week, with prices dropping back to regular rates and the Wednesday special changed from seafood to chicken fried steak.

While in Dallas recently to talk with the filmmakers responsible for "Alien," it was interesting to note the discrepancies in some of their answers. When I asked actor Tom Skerritt why the scene which showed what happened to the creature's victims (they were to be found in cocoon fashion, reverting back to the original egg shape of the beast and thus completing a life cycle) was never used in the film, he said, "Because the scene would have interrupted the pacing, the flow of the movie. We just didn't think it was necessary."

However, I put the same question to co-producers David Giler and Gordon Carroll and was told, "The scene wasn't used because we didn't like the way it was filmed. The effects were bad. It looked phony. The scene was blown, and it was too expensive to film over again."

Still, it has not ruined the film or attendance, as record crowds are being scared out of their wits daily by "Alien" at the South Plains Cinema in Lubbock. Theater manager Robert Hurley said the film is drawing the biggest crowds he's had since "Close Encounters Of The Third Kind" and "Star Wars." He added, too, that the sound system was re-balanced recently, and audiences now seeing "Alien" are enjoying it with full Dolby sound separation.

• • • • • • •

For the record, "Star Wars" is booked to return August 17 at Showplace Six. And Steven Spielberg is still planning on filming new footage showing the inside of the alien mother ship, then deleting some of the old footage and re-releasing a rather different and hopefully enhanced version of "Close Encounters Of The Third Kind."

The current Texas Tech University Theater summer repertory season, winding down this week, is one of the very best in years. All four plays are impressive, though all except "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown" deal with adult material. Tickets are still available for the final six 8:15 p.m. performances this week: "The Shadow Box" tonight and Thursday, "Company" Monday and Friday, "Vanities" on Tuesday and "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown" on Wednesday.

And wouldn't it be nice if every theater (both movie and stage) in town followed the University Theater's very professional policy of not seating latecomers until intermission?

• • • • • • •

Just a little reminder of the recording stars who will be taking the club route in Lubbock the next few weeks: Morningstar, with three LPs to its credit on the Columbia label, will headline at Rox this Wednesday. Point Blank will be on the same stage July 20. Alvin Crow will return to Coldwater Country on August 3 and Moe Bandy, country music's favorite rodeo clown, will be at the same hall on August 10.

Still, don't forget that local talent will be featured once again at this month's amazingly popular West Texas Opry, slated for 8 p.m. July 21 at the Municipal Auditorium. Honest public demand rather than hype has seen the show move from the more intimate Civic Center theater into the 3,500-seat Auditorium. Tickets for the show are now being sold on a reserved-seat basis at Luskey's Western Wear and the Auditorium box office.

And keep in mind that the South Plains Fair will offer one of its most impressive musical lineups in September. Entertainers slated to make appearances include Charley Pride, The Statler Brothers, Barbara Mandrell, Eddie Rabbitt, Janie Fricke, Dave & Sugar, John Conlee, Tom T. Hall, Charly McClain, George "Goober" Lindsey, Rex Allen Jr and Tammy Wynette.

• • • • • • •

If there are any Bruce Springsteen fanatics out there, take note that he and his E Street Band will most likely be back in the Oklahoma City and Dallas areas by late September, propelled by a brand new album. A Springsteen show is worth driving across the state to see, too. I caught his show in Dallas last year, and the man stayed on stage for four full hours playing rock and roll. No exaggeration.

• • • • • • •

Blind bidding and heavy competition have seen several theaters in town already announcing Christimas film bookings. For example, the Winchester will open Robert Altman's "Health" Dec. 21. Also booked to appear in Lubbock in December are two science fiction efforts at Showplace Six: Disney's "The Black Hole" and the anxiously awaited (by local Trekkies anyway) "Star Trek: The Motion Picture." And the Fox Fourplex will premiere comedian Steve Martin's full length motion picture called "The Jerk," Steven Spielberg's new comedy called "1941" and Bette Midler's musical story of a Janis Joplin-like entertainer called "The Rose."

• • • • • • •

And if you really want to mark your calendars ahead of time, jot this little tidbit down. The Fox Fourplex has already booked "The Empire Strikes Back," the eagerly anticipated sequel to "Star Wars." Only thing is, it won't open until June of 1980...

New Comedy To Debut At 'Squire'

The comedy "Any Wednesday" will be staged Tuesday through August 11 at the Country Squire Dinner Theater. Direction is by Pam McCormick, and the cast includes Freda Williams as Ellen Gordon, Brad Williams as Cass Henderson, Richard Privitt as John Cleves and Miss McCormick as Dorothy Cleves.

Call the Squire's box office for information concerning meal schedules, nightly prices and reservations.

The story concerns John and Dorothy Cleves: a middle-aged, wealthy married couple who suddenly find themselves part of a romantic triangle "plus one." But this triangle has really been going on for two years, as John has kept his on Wednesdays.

The "plus one" is Cass Henderson, who appears to talk business with the Cleves and winds up defending Ellen's honor.

AREN'T I FUN? — Freda Williams, right, tries to convince Brad Williams of how much fun they could have if they got married in this scene from the comedy "Any Wednesday," set to open a one-month run at the Country Squire Dinner Theater on Tuesday. The play also stars Richard Privitt and Pam McCormick, with Miss McCormick also directing. Call the Squire's box office for details concerning meal schedules, prices and reservations. MORNINGSTAR TO APPEAR — Rock band Morningstar, with three LPs to their credit on Columbia Records, will make its first Lubbock appearance Wednesday at Rox. Call the club for times and prices.

'Rocky II' Sets Mark

NEW YORK (Special) — "Rocky II," sequel to the Academy Award-winning "Rocky," has registered the highest opening day grosses in United Artists' history. In its first four days, "Rocky II" has amassed $8,122,560 at 798 theatres across the United States and Canada. In the first week of its New York run, "Rocky II" will gross over one million dollars.

"Rocky II" is currently playing at Showplace Six in Lubbock.

A Robert Chartoff-Irwin Winkler production, the new motion picture was written and directed by Sylvester Stallone, who again plays the title role of Rocky Balboa. Winkler and Chartoff produced the film. Also repeating their memorable characterizations are Talia Shire as Adrian, Burt Young as Paulie, Carl Weathers as Apollo Creed and Burgess Meredith as Mickey, plus a number of supporting players. This marks one of the very few times an entire principal cast has returned for a film sequel.

"Rocky II" opens on the same heartbeat at which the original, winner of the 1976 Academy Award as Best Picture, ended.

Class Slates Concert At Recital Hall

Leading Edge II, a Texas Tech University music department composition class under the direction of Dr. Mary Jeanne van Appledorn, will present a concert at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday at the campus Recital Hall.

There is no admission charge.

All but one selection was composed by graduate and undergraduate Tech students. The evening's repertoire includes "Fanfare For Three Trumpets" and "Essay I For Woodwind Quintet," both by Alan Lawrence; "A String Round" by Scott Smith; "Improvisations For Piano" by Roger Ward; "Eight Pieces For Four Kettledrums" by Elliott Carter (not a Tech student); "Sets For Flute Quartet" by Gail Littleton; "Two Meditations For Piano" by Gary James; and "Any Number Can Play," performed by the Read-Time Ensemble.

The chance element is present is present in the latter selection, as well as the pieces by Ward and Miss Littleton, where much of the music will be improvised by the performers.

All of the composers are music majors, with the exception of architecture student Roger Ward.

Adversity Seems To Spur On Peter Frampton

By DOUG PULLEN
A-J Rock Correspondent

Adversity seems to extract superlative efforts from performers. Consider Peter Frampton. Frampton has set records since his "Frampton Comes Alive" album sold more than 15 million copies three years ago. Adverse you say? Yes.

The successes and excesses resulting from Frampton's incredibly popular live album wreaked havoc with the star guitarist. His baby-faced cuteness and charismatic visual presence was exploited last year in "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band," a terrible piece of film that almost spearheaded a nose-dive in Frampton's credibility.

The negative reaction garnered by the film was further complicated by a car accident in which Frampton was involved while in the Bahamas. His right arm was damaged, as was his left hand. Both injuries contributed to the fear that Frampton's career was deteriorating in half the time it took to build.

Frampton was beginning to record his newest album "Where I Should Be" in Los Angeles when his girlfriend filed a "palimony" suit against him, one similar in nature to the case in which actor Lee Marvin was involved recently.

The film, the accident and the suit acted like a series of punches, smashing into the face of Frampton's achievements. His career was early in starting, beginning with being a member of Humble Pie during the late '60s and early '70s. His solo career waited through four studio albums before the live album, a two-record set, broke things open for Frampton.

"Where I Should Be" (A&M) is one of Frampton's most convincing records. Like his "Frampton" album, "Where I Should Be" contains an abundance of enthusiastic energy, a quality for which Frampton is most commonly credited. A new quality is ushered in. Frampton rages with optimism, the kind which comes after one has safely hurdled several major obstacles.

Frampton was faced with a situation in which he could continue to sacrifice his artistic integrity by growing more accessible musically, or he could continue to work within the popular frame by expanding and enlivening his music. He chose to do the latter.

"Where I Should Be" is one of the better releases of the summer. Its energy is unflagging, its devotion without fault. Frampton is optimistic because he knows, judging from the songs contained on the album, that his life is back on the upswing. He reflects upon his recent adversities in songs like "I Can't Stand It No More," his current single, "Got My Feet Back On The Ground," the melancholic "It's A Sad Affair" and the title track.

The album is as personal as Fleetwood Mac's milestone album "Rumours," an album fraught with the band members' personal revelations. Frampton seems to be following along the same line, even employing the same kind of reinforcing optimism so prevalent on "Rumours."

Frampton vents these feelings through precise instrumentation, namely the smooth phrasing of his superlative guitar work and the punchy accompaniment provided by his backup. Even a change of drummers hasn't hurt Frampton's revitalized sound. New drummer Gary Mallaber shares duties with Eric Clapton's drummer Jamie Oldaker, serving as a noticeable replacement for Frampton's veteran kitman, John Siomos.

The elegance of Frampton's guitar styling is evident throughout the album, but is no more obvious than on the album's first few tracks. He picks and scrapes delicately through a lead on opener "I Can't Stand it No More," an assertively defiant song about his recent breakup. The song serves not only as a statement about Frampton's marital affairs, but about his intolerance of his recent situation.

The song is followed by the upbeat but bluesy "Got My Feet Back On The Ground." The song features lightly textured strings which complement a punching Greg Adams brass arrangement, played crisply by Adams and the Tower of Power horn section.

It appears in "Everything I Need" a lilting mid-tempo rocker which sports one of many superb lead guitar solos by Frampton, who has been respected as a lead guitarist for many years.

The album is more than a statement of Frampton's current state of mind, it is a photograph of his musical image as well. Frampton's integrity was at stake several months ago. Now, a new album, one devoted to the spirit of touring, should serve to reinforce any hopes people may harbor about the extension of Frampton's musical value.

Frampton knew what was at stake with his new album, so he put all the marbles on the table. He could have followed "I'm In You" with an equally syrupy product designed to reach the 12-year-old in us all. But Frampton has shown class by avoiding such an abominable move.

The result? A finely tailored piece of pop rock sculpture, one that extends the boundaries of rock's lighter side by beefing it up with straightforward instrumentation, especially Frampton's guitar work, and a message worthy of appreciation if only for its sheer sense of desperation.

Musically speaking, Peter Frampton is alive indeed.

Country Notes

By Bob Campbell

Lead guitarists have some of the same characteristics as lead singers in country music bands. Singers who are talented enough often play their own lead.

Guitar pickers are usually both meticulous and aggressive because of the precision required to play well and because, much of the time, they carry the melody and in effect lead the whole group.

I put steel players, all of whom have an obsession with tuning, incidentally, in a category by themselves, but singers and guitar pickers group together in my mind in carrying the melody as bass players and drummers do in controlling the rhythm in a song.

More than most instruments, the guitar is easy to play badly and hard to play well.

I knew an exceptional guitarist in Abilene who decided to learn "Crazy" exactly as it should be played and worked on it until he figured that the whole song, played properly, required 126 chord changes.

One of the best guitarists to work in Lubbock in many years was Larry Welborn, who has left the Red Raider to play at a club in Las Vegas; but there is another one still here who I think is in the same class: Mike Carraway of the West Wind Country band.

Carraway, a small, springy-haired fellow with a studious expression and still in his 20s, was not even very far, in my opinion, behind the 40-year-old Welborn, who played in the first band Buddy Holly organized here in the 1950s and who is an acknowledged master of the instrument.

A never-ending succession of subtleties, Carraway improvises constantly in his lead rides and comes up with inventive and harmonic fills while Bobby Albright sings. He often plays harmony while steelman Brett James takes the second part of an instrumental break.

There are a number of other guitarists in and around Lubbock, though, who are close to Carraway in talent and polish if not equal to him.

Although he plays it only in the studio, noted steelman Lloyd Maines is an accomplished lead guitarist.

Two of the excellent guitar players in Lubbock are also good singers and songwriters: Bobby Havens of the Waterhole Number Seven band and Doyle Hoggard at the Honky Tonk. Both play what I would call country-rock that's more country than rock, and both are well-rounded musicians whose expertise on guitar makes them more versatile as writers.

I have not mentioned some of the musicians in the Joe Ely band in this series of columns on Lubbock singers and instrumentalists because of the wide recognition they already have gotten; but I want to recognize guitarist Jesse Taylor of that group because, like Lou Gehrig on the same team with Babe Ruth, he usually takes a back seat to the amazing Maines in music reviews but is a formidable musician himself.

Taylor is essentially a rock musician. A pleasant, passive individual offstage, he gives everything he has and knows on stage, and his high-intensity, precise guitar work balances well with the more country steel of Maines.

Taylor's talent and drive are no doubt integral in the awesome power of the group.

A guitarist who I think is talented like Carraway is John Kinnie of the musical Kinnie clan at Sudan. He stopped playing in groups for a few years but has been rounding back into form in recent months in a group called The Midnight Ramblers out of Lubbock.

Steve Williams and Brett James are primarily steel players who are equally or perhaps more accomplished on guitar, and they still pick guitar occasionally for double lead guitars on some songs in their groups.

Jim Pope, a house musician at the Longhorn, is primarily a fiddle player who also plays guitar well. He played fiddle on the Joey Allen recording of "Cold, Cold Heart."

As I said when this series started five weeks ago, these are mostly professional musicians whom I know, and I'm certain there are other good ones whom others I either don't know about or forgot to mention. (My dumbest omission, incidentally, was leaving Tiny Lynn out of the first column on singers and songwriters. He has written a song called "Sunshine" that will be a hit if he ever records it and puts it out.)

Some of the ones I know were left out either because I had already mentioned them in previous columns on other aspects of country music bands or because I felt a column was getting too long to be readable.

We decided to inaugurate "Country Notes" back in January after deciding there should be a regular feature in the paper about Lubbock musicians and the role of country-western music in Southwestern culture.

I might have left some people out of the series who should have been included, but I don't think I included anyone who should have been left out.

All of the singers, bassists, drummers, steel players and guitarists mentioned in the past five weeks are impressive musicians, I think, and worth close attention from me and you.

NUSSBAUM REVIEWS CURRENT BOOKS

LAZARUS MAN. By John Lutz. 225 pages. Morrow. $8.95

Imagine, if you will: G. Gordon Liddy comes out of jail after serving four years and at once sets about assassinating one by one his fellow Watergate conspirators whom he feels have betrayed not only him but their country by talking.

There's more: President Nixon, by virtue of his illegal wiretaps and illegal file-searching while in office, has in his hip pocket the leading candidate for the 1980 presidency. If the candidate wins, Nixon will once again be in charge of the country's future.

John Lutz deftly weaves the fictional brew of these two assumptions until both organizations are set upon a collision course with each only belatedly aware of the other. What each does to short circuit the other is the stuff from which great suspense novels are made.

Wilson Capp, Lutz's Liddy-counterpart, is properly ruthless in his crusade of annihilation. Ex-President Andrew Berwin is sensationally nasty in his all-out effort to regain the levers of power.

Lutz's ending has a real sting, one that few if any readers will foresee, however knowledgeable they may be. Whatever your politics, you'll like this one.

BIRDCAGE. By Victor Canning. 233 pages. Morrow. $8.95

U.S. editors complain occasionally that U.S. authors seldom have great adventure in their mystery, suspense, and espionage novels. U.S. authors reply that when the element is included U.S. editors seldom purchase the manuscripts.

No matter. The genre is — and has been for some time — in the very capable hands of the British. Four superb practicioners head of the list: Eric Ambler, Alistair MacLean, Geoffrey Household, and Victor Canning. There are others — Elleston Trevor comes to mind — but the first four named are arguably at the top of their particular tree.

In "Birdcage," Victor Canning demonstrates again the special manipulation of fictional events which sweeps a tale from the publishing broom closet to best seller lists. His novel takes a long, hard, negative look at British intelligence, much in the manner that has recently exposed our CIA.

Canning edges into his story in a bit more leisurley style than is customary for him, but the entire final half of the book illustrates his expertise in the building of tension. He deftly withholds the denouement of the story until the final page.

Victor Canning is not among those authors who continually rewrite the same tired story. Avid suspense readers are in no danger of discovering they read a book like "Birdcage" last week.

A GAME OF SECRETS. By Thomas Wisemen. 370 pages. Delacorte. $9.95

There must be millions of Americans who wonder how we ended up in Watergate and Koreagate. Who wonder where it all began. How did the FBI arrive at its philosophy of the end justifying the means? How did the CIA maneuver itself into the position of being secure from civil or governmental oversight?

Thomas Wiseman furnishes a blueprint. He places his espionage novel in the summer of 1948, with Harry Truman having taken over the presidency from the deceased Franklin Roosevelt and preparing to run against Thomas Dewey. Wiseman shows how a few men achieve what they considered to be best for all.

Wisemen reminds us just how perilous were the times that Truman inherited. It was the time of the Berlin airlift and the first revelations of spies in high places. It was the beginning of the sales of military and atomic secrets to the country's enemies, something that has never ceased; but this was when it was first understood that such things could really happen outside of books.

"A Game of Secrets" is a bit too slow-moving to be the crackling spy novel claimed for it in its jacket blurbs. But it is an excellent forced-feeding course in intelligence and intrigue as it was then. And we have little reason to believe things have changed very much.

CASINO. By Marilyn Lynch. 413 pages. Ace Books. $2.50 (paper)

The most entertaining books of the past 15 or 20 years have been novels that purported to give readers the inside workings of a particular business or industry while the story unfolded. Books like "Airport," "Hotel" and "Wheels" comes quickly to mind.

No outsider can ever gauge how accurate these representations were, but they certainly seemed real. That was their charm and fascination.

Now, with "Casino," Marilyn Lynch focuses a very discerning eye on Las Vegas and the gambling industry there. She captures the sights, sounds, smells, tastes and somehow manages to pin them to the printed page. In the process she tells a story that will keep readers intrigued and caring about her characters. "Casino" is a dynamic, fast-paced story of wealth, power, and people struggling to get and keep as much of both as they can.

The title "Casino" has been a popular one in the past, and at least one other current volume (another novel) carries the same title. This, however, is the book readers are likely to appreciate most; and, in this day of $10 and $15 books, the price is certainly right.

VERDICT OF 13. Edited by Julian Symons. 239 pages. Harper & Row. $9.95

The subtitle for this baker's dozen of short stories is "A Detection Club Anthology," which with project editor Joan Kahn's imprimatur is a full guarantee of quality.

The Detection Club was founded in 1932 by the finest names in British crime writing. Because additions have been by invitation only, there has been no slippage. If one word had to be selected to cover the stories in this collection, the word might well be "urbane."

The theme of the collection was trial by jury, although it's doubtful that even editor and contributor Symons could have had any idea at the outset of the diversity of the stories he was going to receive for consideration.

Michael Innes demonstrates that a jury's verdict may only be the beginning of the ultimate solution of a case. Dick Francis presents perhaps the most clever scam ever in that area of clever scams, horse racing. P.D. James gives us a biter-bit story superb enough to challange any attempt at competition.

The most remarkable story in the collection is "Who Killed the Cat?" by Peter Dickinson. Imaginative fantasy of the very highest order is demonstrated by Dickinson, who in a deceptively simple manner narrates the trials of a scavenger's crew traveling through the planetary system.

The collection is very, very good reading.

GRAND SCAM. By Richard Lipez and Peter Stein. 234 pages. Dial Press. $8.95

The book is perfectly titled. The scam is grand. The amount to be scammed is $20,000,000. That's twenty million dollars! And because only international oil companies have that kind of money to fling around these days, it's an international oil company scam.

Lipez and Stein have provided a story that, despite its wild flights of credibility-straining imagination, also drips authenticity from every page. We know it can't be done, but then we see it happen. The relation of the story is a bit strained at times, with the reader needlessly jolted from a gallop to a canter occasionally, but that occurs in most collaborations.

But there is nothing wrong with the story. Quite the contrary. It rips and surges along in seemingly effortless bursts of controlled action. Despite occasional grim scenes, there is a leavening humor of the type the Scots call pawky. The amount of believability built into the odd-ball characterizations is praiseworthy in itself.

Ten pages from the end the reader may stop and say to himself with conviction: "There's no way this book can have an upbeat ending!"

But it does.

Of a sort.

After all, we live in an imperfect world.

— ALBERT F. NUSSBAUM

SHIBUMI. By Trevanian. 374 pages. Crown. $10.95

This suspense novel might be easier to like if it were a bit easier to understand.

Fully 150 pages of a 374-page book are devoted to background and character development in areas as esoteric as the Japanese board game of GO (which is to chess as chess is to checkers), the anthropological development, manners, and mores of the Basque nationalists, and the arts and artifices of caving (spelunking). Depending upon his own background, some readers are apt to feel they have been force fed 20 to 80 per cent more than they really wanted to know about any of these subjects.

Not that any of it is done unprofessionally. Trevanian is incapable of producing an unprofessional page. His basis thesis is a time in the affairs of men when the CIA, not totally unwilling, has been taken over by the managers of a consortium of the big oil companies. This multinational organization, known as the Mother Company, buys and sells governments as easily as it does individuals.

Opposing this unholy octopus is a man born in Shanghai to a Russian mother and a German father, raised in Japan prior to and during the U.S. occupation. Multilingual and multitalented, the man became a professional killer. Retired at story's opening, he is sucked back into the vortex.

It's an odd book but an ambitious one.

FOLK ARTS

HANOVER, N.H. (UPI) — The Third Annual Celebration Northeast Folk Arts Festival, featuring traditional and folk music, dance, singing and story-telling, will be held at Dartmouth College's Hopkins Center July 20-21. The Festival already has become a favorite fixture in the Center's eight-week summer festival.

City Poet Informal, But Biting

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The main precept of modern poetry may be that poetry can be found in almost any aspect of human lives or that a poem can deal with almost anything.

It's highly feasible, for example, to write poems on wandering through a deserted hotel, going to a "porno drive-in" or considering the life of a retardate, so feasible, as a matter of fact, that Lubbock poet Charles Behlen has done it.

Behlen is a housepainter by trade and poet by spirit spirit who is one of the 15 or 20 so-called "Texas poets" known around the state and, to some extent, beyond it.

Prickly Pear Press in Fort Worth has published a first collection of his poetry, "Perdition's Keepsake," which has a number of sharply drawn pictures reflecting his Lubbock and Slaton upbringing.

This excerpt from one called "To The Retarded Janitor Of A Photography Studio In Lubbock, Texas" is a good example:

On straddled legs of wooden easels, the glistening daughters of bankers, professors, grin through glass at the long, bright cars of their future husbands.
You tossed your hoe into a cotton field in 'fifty-seven, and ever since you have rehearsed silent broom dance in a city where dusty sidewalks
make mailmen slip.

The book was edited by Fort Worth poet Dave Oliphant, designed by Jan Lewis and illustrated with rurally oriented drawings by Joseph Slate.

After two dozen poems, the book ends with letters from Behlen to Illinois poet Karl Elder on poetry, literary magazines, life as a poet in modern America and other topics.

Behlen, 30, who studied at Texas Tech University but opted for a Whitmanesque life as a working man, edits a magazine of his own called "Chawed Rawzin."

A devotee of Walt Whitman and William Carlos Williams, he is part of the modern rebellion against the more academic poetry of T. S. Eliot and Ezra Pound. Of the moderns, his poetry reminds me most of William Stafford, who lives and writes in Oregon.

Behlen's poetry is unrhymed and informal yet sharp and biting. There is a precision of thought and expression despite the absence of strict poetic forms.

It is part of an effort by many poets to give poetry back to the people, who came up with it in the first place.

His own work is the best illustration. The following is from "Saying Grace At The Clyde Hotel (1890-1939)

"It was sure some place"

Square of blue mist,
its ghost still stands,
bus stop in the west wing, shoe store in the east,
a windy alley
through the lobby.
I imagine on my midnight walk domino players
stiff in cane chairs, afraid to swear in the presence of the owner's mother.
A Santa Fe brakeman
at an old upright, shirt pockets drooping with cinders, remembers a woman, her feel,
No one breaks the respectful silence for the old woman's foibles, for the trash as it races down the lobby, for all the lost nights.

THEY RIDE THE RODEO: THE MEN & WOMEN OF THE AMERICAN AMATEUR RODEO CIRCUIT. By Joe Englander. Collier Books. $6.95

Like a lot of other northerners, it appears that Chicagoan Joe Englander has fallen in love with Texas — and Texans.

But unlike most northerners, Englander has talent. He is a photographer, and a good one. The end result is "They Ride The Rodeo" a picture book about the men and women of the American Amateur rodeo circuit.

Englander, a Phi Beta Kappa with a Ph.D from the University of Chicago, somehow ended up in Austin and began taking pictures of rodeos.

But these cowboys aren't the kind that ride in Madison Square Garden or even Fort Worth. They're just working hands, a lot of them are still in high school. It's strictly small town, the kind of people you'd expect to see at the Brownfield rodeo.

I've developed a little bit of an interest in small rodeos the last couple of years and last summer I even managed to take in the Brownfield rodeo as well as the annual Post Stampede.

Working in the oil patch in New Mexico I wound up drinking a lot of beer with an ex-bullrider, Earl Bales. I hadn't seen him since but surprisingly he turned up in Lubbock the same day I took Englander's book over to the house.

So this I figured was the acid test, if the rodeo hands think the book is a legitimate portrayal of rodeo, then who am I to argue?

Earl and a couple other riders devoured the book. The pictures captured all moments of a rodeo. There were plenty of action pictures of men riding, roping and falling, but there were plenty of other kinds of pictures.

Kids perched on the fence, women playing cards and cowboys sizing each other up, the pictures told the story of a small-time rodeo. And the copy wasn't bad either.

There are four chapters to the book: "The Proving Ground," "The Picture Man," "A Woman's Place" and finally "Ride 'Em Cowboy."

Probably the chapter that really hit home was the brief one about a women's place at the rodeo. Englander opens the chapter with a reprint of Tammy Wynette's country anthem "Stand By Your Man."

This song, he says, was played at every rodeo he'd been to and described the very essence of a woman's role at the events. Sure, there is limited competition open to the ladies but their biggest job is to watch the men.

Writes Englander: "The true atmosphere under all the dust is one of sex. The bulls and the horses, the studs and the mares, the tight pants and the macho struts. And girls looking to see who's looking, watching to see who's man enough."

And that, he explains, are what rodeos are all about. For the men it's all a matter of proving your manhood. Little kids will ride and take their falls but never, never do any of them cry.

There's no shame in getting bucked off a bull, he says, the only shame comes in admitting pain. And there's plenty of pain involved in rodeos. The last few pictures in the book prove that in a drastic way. There are shots of cowboys getting stomped, hooked and carried off the field.

My friend Earl explained it this way: "It just gets to the point where every time you get on that bull you realize you could die. But you keep doing it."

And the cowboys keep doing it, says Englander, because that's all there is to do. And because you prove yourself, you become a hand.

CHAMBER MUSIC. By Doris Grumbach. Dutton. 213 Pages. $8.95.

"I am of an age not to care, almost 90. My hearing is defective, my bones seem to lie upon each other like dry kindling, my skin falls away in slack little pinches of flesh. I am dry and brittle, I strain and break easily."

The woman describing herself is Caroline Maclaren, the widow of a once famous composer-pianist, Robert Maclaren. She has been asked by the Maclaren Foundation to write "a permanent record of Robert's life and mine." "Chamber Music" is that record.

The book is beautifully written. Doris Grumbach is a fine stylist. So it's a pity that all that talent has been devoted to a novel that is not terribly interesting, largely because the characters in it are not terribly interesting.

Perhaps this is because many of these characters are grotesques. There is Robert. He lives only for his music, ignores almost completely his bewildered wife and dies horribly of a revolting disease that slowly and most painfully wastes his body. There is Robert's equally obsessed mother. Her goal in life is to make Robert a famous musician and when Robert turns from her to Caroline the mother colapses into a shell and slowly withers away.

And then, of course, there is Caroline. Married young, woefully ignorant of life, and completely unable to understand her strange husband, she lives in a sort of limbo for years before she finds happiness in the love of another woman.

Caroline's remark about the book describes it well: "Asked to write the history of a man and an institution, I have managed to produce merely a sketch of the chamber of one heart. Like Robert, I see, I am a miniaturist."

WINTER DREAMS, AN AMERICAN IN MOSCOW. By Jay Martin. Houghton Mifflin Company. $10.95

Jay Martin is a Brooklynborn academic who spent five months as visiting professor of American literature at Moscow State University. Unlike the majority of foreigners, Martin was not required to live in an official "ghetto" carefully guarded by Soviet police, but stayed among Russians in a small apartment in a wing of the university. His access to Muscovites was therefore easier and wider than that available to most foreigners and his book reflects this in a flow of tidily crafted, anecdotal experiences.

Martin makes rather a large claim in his preface that the spirit of Turgenev and Gogol "fused with my lines" and made him understand the Russian reality. The book is more a series of almost-short stories on the "fact is stranger than fiction" theme which recall O. Henry rather than Gogol.

But it does indeed report the improbabilities of Soviet reality — an incredible bartering scene in a store at Abramtsevo; a religious service in a cramped Moscow apartment led by an opera star who was an undercover priest; a Georgian shearing the neck clean off a wine bottle with one knife blow; the forgotten concert pianist who spurned the chance of wealth, fame and a rapturous comeback; rebarbative public servants, melancholic and euphoric boozers, shabby cafes, gray streets.

Finally, there is the inevitable and heavy-handed KGB attempt to use the author to root out opponents of the regime.

PENTHOUSE. By Paul Flora. (Abrams) $6.95

Mark Twain, H.L. Mencken and lesser critics have hailed German culture for generations for its music, literature and vitality. But humor is an unsung Teuton facet. Germans can be jolly. Witness Paul Flora.

Flora rose to post-World War II note in West Germany af one of the western world's finest cartoonists. With lines and no words he dealt with Konrad Adenauer, Willy Brandt, West Germans, bad Germans, Nikita Khrushchev, Winston Churchill, John F. Kennedy and you and I very wittily and in perhaps better artistic style than any other cartoonist.

Now, in this book, he has published more lines and still almost no words. Here are 53 pages of drawings in black ink lines and white space doing with buildings what Edward Gorey does with humans in his gory way. See the city skyline with a Noah's ark perched atop one flattop skyscraper, ready for you know what. See the prepoured concrete office building with a volcano bubbling atop. See the gruesome burial on the snowy roof atop the springtime penthouse. See the hilltop schloss atop the glass and steel mountain.

Flora may be saying a lot about modern architecture and 20th century life. Fine. But he is also making us smile. And maybe laugh.

ART TALK: By La Wanda Murfee

An exhuberant young man went into a gallery to buy a birthday gift for his wife. After a quick glance around the walls, he commented that he liked everything he saw. When the dealer tried to inform him about different paintings, the fellow quickly interrupted. "I know what I like. Something that makes me feel good, and to heck with how it will look in a room."

That statement endeared the prospect to the dealer. Too often a buyer will look for paintings of a certain color scheme, much like purchasing covering for a new sofa or draperies. If that be the criteria for buying art, then that person might as well seek less expensive commercial designs, marketed expressly to accent a room.

In another gallery, a young lady told the agent she did not like Indian paintings or anything connected with them, but she would like to see a painting of a teacher. The dealer's hand happened to be resting on a painting of an Indian mother with little children. He turned it around without a word. Issuing a squeal, the young buyer cried, "Oh, I love it! I'll take it. It will look good in my room!"

When choosing a work of art, the best buy is that piece that haunts your memory after leaving the gallery. The vision lingers in your consciousness and will not leave. Never mind its color, subject, size, technique or medium. If you have some rapport with the artist's style of work, choose the one you want. The price is of little importance.

Look for quality. A sculpture or painting can be bought for a nominal fee if the artist is relatively unknown. A new artist trying to expose his work will charge much less than an established artist. However, intuition plays a big part in knowing what will escalate in value.

Some gallery owners as well as artists permit a trial period before purchase. Even so, most buyers decide without hesitation which work will grace their life.

During the last century in France, Ambroise Vollard was one of the earliest promoters of the Impressionists. Few buyers supported the new style of painting, yet Vollard eagerly collected and promoted artists whose paintings reflected patterns and effect of light. His insight brought a highly successful investment and a most gratifying realization of greatness.

Historically some wise collectors have bought a certain individual's work, gambling on their instinct and the future of the works. Although the Impressionists were regarded with little respect in their day and some of the now famous artists' work was labeled as "junk," the value today runs into five, six and seven figures.

Who is to say about purchases but you? Be your own guide and buy what you like.

Star Of 'Runaways' Adjusts Lifestyle

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Alan Feinstein, who stars as Steve Arizzio in "The Runaways," is readjusting to life as a single man following his recent divorce.

He gave up a home in the San Fernando Valley to move into a bachelor pad in Hollywood which doesn't allow children or pets, a bone of contention with the athletic, muscular Feinstein.

When he lived in New York, the actor raised and bred Persian cats, winning prizes at cat shows on the east coast.

"Now I'm kind of lonely," he says, "and I plan to find another apartment that doesn't have rules against pets."

Although Feinstein had no formal training as an artist, he has decorated his quarters with his own oil paintings and pencil portraits, copied from photographs, of his favorite stars. His gallery includes James Cagney, Marlon Brando, Burt Lancaster, Clark Gable, Paul Newman and Peter Falk.

His apartment is as homey as wicker and wood furniture can make it. A set of old oak bookcases, which belonged to his family before he was born, are filled with novels and biographies.

Friends visit Alan often to listen to his enormous collection of early 1950s rock music. He has one of the most extensive collections of Buddy Holly and Elvis Presley albums in town.

Feinstein videotapes all of Presley's old TV appearances when and where he can find them, including the singer's guest shots with Ed Sullivan, Tommy Dorsey and Milton Berle.

"The Runaways" is filmed on locations in Texas and Arizona and sometimes around Southern California areas that resemble the great southwest. Interiors are filmed at neary Goldwyn Studios.

Idea Of Agean School Of Fine Arts Born On Out-Of-Way Isle

By JAY DYER
United Press International

PAROS, Greece — Paros is everybody's dream of an unspoiled Greek isle — white houses clustered around a glistening bay, a monastery and tiny round churches crowning the green herb hills.

It's a long way from anywhere — eight hours by boat from Athens, the only way here. Few tourists come. Paros hardly figures in Greek myths, and its only real claim to fame is the pure white marble named for it, Parian.

That and Brett Taylor's art school.

The Aegean School of Fine Arts, he calls it, and after 12 years on this out-of-the-way island the idea of making it the nucleus of an island university seems a not wildly impossible dream.

Already its credits are accepted by many American universities. It teaches subjects as varied as cultural anthropology and — this year — sailing. By choice its student body is rarely more than half a dozen strong, and its founder, administrator, principal, senior and often only teacher is Brett Taylor, 34, late of Philadelphia.

"I came out of art school with a master of fine arts degree, and that usually means you go back into art school teaching," he said in the kitchen of his farmhouse, which has neither electricity nor running water. "And then you produce shows dictated by the head of the art department.

"I didn't like the idea of returning directly to the university, and I hate art schools. And if you feel like that, the only alternative is to make one of your own."

So he did. He wandered Europe before picking this dreamy island in the Kykladic group.

"Everyone thought I was nuts," he said. "This was before Greece was popular. But I liked the idea of coming here, and at the same time I wanted to make my school outside the environment the students are used to."

In 1970 his school became a non-profit, tax-free institution offering courses in studio arts, photography and creative writing. It has taught students aged 16 to 82 from almost every country except Greece itself.

"If we were to get papers allowing us to take Greeks in, we would have to comply with all the standards of the Greek ministry of education and that would set us back 100 years," Taylor said.

The tiny student body is intentional, a key to the school's effectiveness. The fees provide Taylor's only income.

"It's not a comfortable life," he said. "We don't have any salaries. We just take in enough to pay our rent and food. And by the time you get to your mid-30s you begin to wonder what would happen if you got sick or suddenly had to fly to the States and you had no insurance and only $100 in your pocket.

"But I chose it."

After 12 years it's hard to imagine Brett Taylor ever chosing anything else.

"I'm regarded as an islander, almost," he grinned. "At least that's what they tell me."

Now his educational horizons are widening — at least as far as nearby islands. Taylor dreams of scientists adding their teaching to his school — oceanographers and geologists have expressed interest — and a school of cultural anthropology has started on the neighboring island of Naxos.

Houston Set As Host Of Legion Meet

By LIZ NEWLIN

HOUSTON (AP) — About 25,000 American Legionnaires will be here this August — a year earlier than expected.

The city will be prepared, but officials were a bit surprised when they went to Indianapolis, Ind., in 1977 to make their pitch to host the 1980 national meeting.

They thought the convention was booked for Kansas City. So did KC.

During final negotiations, however, the Legion and the headquarters hotel disagreed. And the Legion started looking for a new host city.

"They came to us," says Dick Rutledge, projects manager for the Greater Houston Convention and Vistors Council. "We immediately began a search of our hotel facilities and our convention facilities."

The Houston convention bureau was able to reschedule enough smaller events to make room for the convention, one of the larger the city hosts. Conservatively, since the spending estimate is in 1970 dollars, that means $9.6 million will flow into Houston during the Aug. 17-23 meet.

The Legion met in Houston once before in 1971. Bill Miller, the Legion's national convention director for the past 21 years, says the Legion has not moved its conventions very often.

"It's not a good thing for the club and it's not a good thing for the city," he said.

The convention was moved from New Orleans in 1963.

"We had to move because of the integration problem," he explained. "New Orleans had not integrated yet, and we had black members who couldn't attend all the events.

"It was a sad thing," he said in an interview. "Right after that New Orleans integrated." The national convention was held in the city in 1968.

Rutledge said a move like the Legion's out of Kansas City was unusual. Houston, however, has picked up several conventions because they have grown and other cities can't accommodate them. Rutledge said Houston is in the big convention category with Las Vegas, Chicago, Atlanta and Dallas.

One other help has been Texas' ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

"The ERA has been very good for Houston," Rutledge said He estimated about two dozen meetings have moved here since 1977, when feelings have been "much hotter on the subject."

He said the 1978 International Women's Year Convention here focused attention on the city as pro-ERA.

TEMPTING FATE

LONDON (UPI) — Writers Penny Casdagli and Ilona Sekacz have written a new stage play about the shortest run in the history of the London theater — a production called "The Intimate Revue," which opened at the Duchess Theater in 1930 and closed at the first intermission.

Your Personal Biorhythms

by Bernard Gittelson

For your own permanent biorhythm number for the Physical (P), Emotional (E), and Intellectual (I) cycles, just follow these steps:

	P	E	I
STEP 1. YEAR OF BIRTH
STEP 2. A-B MONTH OF BIRTH
STEP 3. DAY OF BIRTH
TOTALS

YOUR PERMANENT NUMBERS

BIORHYTHMS FOR JULY 8, 1979

PHYSICAL
Criticals: 7, 19, 30, 42, 53, 65 ..... Susceptible to infections
Highs: 1-6, 20-29, 43-52, 66-75 ..... Tackle that extra job
Lows: 8-18, 31-41, 54-64 ..... Weary and lethargic day

EMOTIONAL
Criticals: 8, 22, 36, 50, 64, 78 ..... Avoid stress
Highs: 9-21, 37-49, 65-77 ..... Easy to get along with Lows: 1-7, 23-35, 51-63, 79-85 ..... All seems lost

INTELLECTUAL
Criticals: 16, 33, 49, 66, 82 ..... Avoid casual decisions
Highs: 1-15, 34-48, 67-81 ..... Thinking clearly today
Lows: 17-32, 50-65, 83-95 ..... Do easy tasks

Step 1 — Year of birth. Read down the left hand column to find the last number in the year of your birth then go across to the appropriate decade. For instance, if you were born in 1947, your number for Physical would be 21, Emotional 17, Intellectual 19. Note whether your numbers are preceded by an A or B; this will be used for Step 2.

Step 2 — Month of birth. Find the corresponding numbers for the month you were born. If your month is February, and your year numbers were preceded by a B, your month numbers would be 8 for Physical, 3 for Emotional and 31 for Intellectual. Enter your own numbers in the figure chart for Step 2.

Step 3 — Day of birth. Enter your day of birth three times in the figure chart, once each for Physical (P), Emotional (E) and Intellectual (I).

Add the three columns to derive your permanent biorhythm numbers for your Physical, Emotional and Intellectual cycles. Now you can refer to today's biorhythm readings.

Company Staging Lost Plays Of Greek

ATHENS (UPI) — The Amphitheater Company directed by Spyros Evangelatos has staged for the first time in more than 2,000 years fragments of the lost plays of ancient Greek tragedian Aesctylus.

The fragments, from more than 20 plays by Europe's first tragic playwright, were combined according to the themes they suggested to Evangelatos — myth, ritual, war — into a spectatcular performance.

Tassos Roussos provided a translation into modern Greek, the first-ever modern Greek version of Aeschylus fragments, which range from almost complete scenes from a few plays to hundreds of scattered lines.

Engelatos' production packed the Roman amphitheater of Herod Atticus in the shadow of the Acropolis, only 100 yards from the ancient theater of Dionysos where Aeschylus' plays were first performed at the ancient Athenian dramatic festivals.

Aeschylus, who was born in 525 B.C., wrote more than 70 plays, but only seven have survived in their complete form.

Gallery Features Soviet Art

By ROLAND TYRRELL
United Press International

MOSCOW — Whatever else socialism has done for art, it has not made it cheap.

Mrs. Elena Kornetchuk, a blonde 30-year-old former art student from Pittsburgh, Pa., now makes a business of importing contemporary Soviet art to the United Statesm

She runs Russian Images, a private Pittsburgh gallery devoted exclusively to modern Soviet art.

"I first got the idea a couple of years ago when I was visiting the Soviet Union to do research for my Ph.D.," she said during a recent business trip to Moscow.

"I took a few things back home with me and friends kept asking if they could have copies of them.

"It was ridiculous. I couldn't take out hundreds of canvases for my friends, so I went into business."

Mrs. Kornetchuk admits she still has not completed her Ph.D., which she began in 1975 at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., with the ambitious title of "The Politics of Soviet Art."

Instead, she and her husband, Jonathan Showe, a former White House adviser on international economics, bought, renovated and converted the Trust Department of the Pittsburgh National Bank and set up their gallery there.

They opened last July and since then have sold about 200 works of Soviet art with a total value of about $100,000.

"About 50 percent of our customers are private collctors, 40 percent are corporations and the rest are private galleries," she said.

Prices range from $200 to $400 for small graphic works printed in limited issues of 25 copies by a little known artist such as Yevgeni Sidorkin, right up to $1,000 or $2,000 for a fullsize oil painting by Yevgeni Kumankov, a Moscow stage and movie designer.

"In fact, we take most of our pictures on consignment — about 80 percent of them," Mrs. Kornetchuk said.

"On consignment" means the gallery takes a picture and only pays the artist if it is sold. If it is not sold, the pictue can be returned to the artist.

Church Plans Musical 'Little Mary Sunshine'

The First United Methodist Church music department will stage the musical comedy "Little Mary Sunshine" at 8 p.m. July 20 and 21 in the Texas Tech University Theater. Direction is by Gordon McMillan and choreography is by Suzanne Aker.

Tickets are on sale at the First United Methodist Church office.

Kim Murchison and Allan Meriwether have been cast as Little Mary Sunshine and Captain Big Jim, respectively. Sylvia Taylor and James Slagle will play Ernestine Von Liebedich and Gen. Fairfax. Also cast are Elaine Gamble and Julie Williams, double cast as Nancy Twinkle; Kevin Brown as Billy Jester; and Billy Norton as Chief Brown Bear.

Satirizing the musicals and operettas of Friml, Lehar and Victor Herbert, the play combines such subjects as mortgage foreclosures, Indians, diplomats, debutants, comedy and love in a mixture which critic Brooks Atkinson once labeled "a gem of derisive fooling."

Tycoon Cherished Boosts From Fans Before Achieving Success

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Tycoon is so new as a group and so new to success that the swings between optimism and despair and thoughts of "what's going to happen?" are very fresh in memory.

For instance, there was hearing from the first fan.

"He was in Toronto. He tracked us down to the studio and started phoning," Norman Mershon, Tycoon lead singer, rhythm guitarist and song writer, says. "He wrote, too. He put a light of reality on the situation we had all dreamt about."

Mark Kreider, bassist, background vocalist and writer, says, "That letter got passed from hand to hand."

Mershon says, "He felt we were going to go all the way and become stars. It was the greatest boost in the world. We never could honestly get away with saying that ourselves. Star is kind of a pretentious word.

"We like getting the word from people that like us. We'll give them more music until they like us to death. That makes the whole machine work. We're ready to tour and go out there and get that live reaction so we can make it work and make more people love us."

"Tycoon," the debut album, on Arista, was No. 39 on the best-selling chart of June 2. The first single from it, "Such a Woman," was No. 39 on that date. It had climbed to No. 21 the two weeks previous.

The time right after the album was released Feb. 21 was tense for the group. "People would tell us complimentary things but we'd wonder if they were just saying that because they were looking us in the eye," Mershon says.

"We needed to hear from people who didn't know us personally," Kreider says. "The record-business trade magazines gave us the first feedback we could really start to believe. Even then we weren't into counting any eggs."

Mershon says, "It's anticlimactic. You've made the record so you aren't working. You sit there. You know you've got the product. The only feedback is from people close to you. You don't know what is going to happen. You go through a period when you're very positive, at first.

"Then you worry, what does it take to make this happen? At the end of it, you think, it happened, but how?"

Kreider says, "Cal Rudman picked it initially. He has a great degree of feasibility and believability with radio stations, with his record picks. I dont think many people stick their necks out and say something good about a debut album from a new group. We thought, finally we're on the right track."

Mershon says, "We read a meaning into everything, no matter who said what. I've talked to other people who released debut albums. They can't approach listening to it. They're overly objective or oo subjective. Something is too heavy to deal with.

"When you stat having a hit and you tart living with that reality, that's the fun part."

Before Tycoon, Kreider, a native of Goshenn Ind., was doing various jobs as a musician. "I wanted that rock band. I think everybody does. I was spending the majority of my time in bands doing original material, having a hard time getting off the ground, as they all do. I was singing background vocals and playing some bass for a few TV commercials and a couple of kid shows on TV.I Preferred that to being a studio musician on records.

"I was always trying to make it in an original group. That's hard to do unless you get connected at the top first. Then your originality is valuable. If you're in a bar band, your originality is just playing things kids don't want to hear."

Mershon, who is from Sherman Oaks, Calif., says, "I came from working with other groups as an engineer and assistant engineer at the Record Plant studios. Basically, it was remote live recording, a studio on wheels, in a truck.

"I'd had bands on the side doing original material for two or three years. I hadn't reached what I thought was a level where I could approach the business in any serious manner. I decided the Jackson Browne tour in August and September 1977 was the last tour I was going to do as engineer.

"Tycoon was brought together by engineer Rod O'Brien, who engineered our demo of three songs. Record-company executives said it was the best demo they'd ever heard. It gave us a big help.

"I made a firm commitment to doing whatever it took — changing my whole lifestyle — to becoming what I'd always been in my heart, a singer and song writer. A lot of that winter I real... changed my lifestyle; I lived on $1 a day. They gave me a room at the studio which I shared with five mice, who multiplied into 17."

"From the first, we discussed what kind of music we wanted," Kreider says. "Our heads are in the same place. We wanted a real positive approach, lyrically as well as musically. We all agree we like a song that grooves. We like to move when we play; we don't consider it intellectual. One song on the album is reggae. There are soul influences in 'Count on Me.' There are touches of blues here and there."

Their attorney took the demo to three companies and they signed with Arista, where, they say, Clive Davis took their music and their aspirations seriously. Kreider says, "Nothing strikes a band better than being taken seriously."

"Such a Woman" was one of the songs on the demo. Kreider and Mershon wrote it. The latter says, "It's about the first woman who really broke my heart." Kreider adds, "We're not all as lucky as Norman is. This happens to him once a week."

An Arista publicist suggested the name Tycoon. Kreider says, "It has a little class to it. We want everyone to be a tycoon for at least a day. And tai kun in Japanese means powerful lord. We looked it up."

GAS LINE — Dom DeLuise gasps as precious gasoline pours from a storage tank in this scene from "Hot Stuff." But it isn't the lost fuel that worries Dom; it's the wacky sniper who narrowly missed him and put a hole in the tank. "Hot Stuff" concerns a phony fencing operation, opened by the police, where criminals peddle their stolen property. Suzanne Pleshette and Jerry Reed co-star with DeLuise, who directed the film. The film will be released by Columbia Pictures in the fall of 1979.

Ex-TV Host Says Quit While Ahead

WISCONSIN DELLS, Wis. (AP) — A onetime radio and television star who quit broadcasting at the height of his career says too many performers think their success will go on forever.

"A performer has a rather fragile product to sell," said Tommy Bartlett, who hosted such network shows as "Welcome Travelers" and "Meet the Missus" before starting a water-skiing show in 1951.

Bartlett, now 64, began in show business in 1929 as an announcer on a Milwaukee radio station. He was 14 years old.

"I think a lot of people fail to prepare for the future," he said in an interview. "A lot of people think if they're successful with their present business enterprise, that it's going to go on forever.

"Just look at how television eats up talent today. People who were heroes five years ago are playing nothing but state fairs today."

Bartlett says many entertainers reach the top and then slowly begin to take on inferior assignments.

"I didn't want to do that," he said. "So I quit right at the top.

"Performers, as they get older, ought to be in a part of show business where it's not necessary to perform every day."

Bartlett, a high-school dropout, said his main problem had been a lack of attention and he had been more interested in running the school's public-address system than in classes.

A family friend gave him a crystal set. He could pick up Milwaukee's lone station and, on good nights, KDKA in Pittsburgh.

"I became enamored of people speaking in other cities, or in other parts of town, and being able to hear them without wires," he recalls.

So consuming was his interest that he quit school.

"I just wasn't interested in school," he says. "I thought it was a waste of time.

Bartlett said he wouldn't advise youngsters nowadays to follow his example.

"We tell all the kids (working in the show) to finish high school," he said. "I think it's much more necessary now than it was."

The Tommy Bartlett Water, Ski, Sky and Stage Show features dozens of water skiers. And Bartlett owns thousands of pairs of water skis.

But how well does he do on water skis himself?

"Never been on them in my life," Bartlett said.

Adventuresome Tourists Can Stick To Luxuries

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — The islands off the west coast of Thailand and Malaysia have long been popular with adventuresome tourists eager to enjoy skin diving, swimming and fishing in the eastern Indian Ocean.

One tour operatot has houseboats for those who want some luxury with their adventure. His 120-ft. vessels have 10 guest cabins, each fitted with double beds, carpeting and showers.

The boats carry fishing scuba, and waterskiing outfits. They also have four runabouts and a 24-foot cabin cruiser for exploring the azure waters. A luxurious way to see the primitive.

Mountain Town Offers Challenging Caves

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — The adventurous traveler may find the remote town of Sagada worth the fatiguing ride up a 5,000-foot mountain about 270 miles north of Manila. The mountain town is well known for its caves.

Latipan, said to be the biggest and most challenging cave, has rock formations resembling pig pens, an underground river and spacious passages with ceilings covered with bats. The cave sheltered the townspeople during the Japanese occupation and is said to be so extensive nobody has really explored completely.

Total fare for the airconditioned bus ride to Sagada costs about $15 and pleasant lodgings are available.

Texas Among States Rated Best In Which To Retire

NEW YORK (UPI) — A survey of the best states in the United States to retire to in the 1980s, based on economy as well as climate and recreational facilities, concluded that 10 states in the South and West best fill retirees' needs.

The study by Chase Econometrics Associates Inc., released recently in Money magazine, said the 10 states where the living is easiest and comparatively cheap are: Utah, Louisiana, South Carolina, Nevada, Texas, New Mexico, Alabama, Arizona, Florida, and Georgia.

All ranked high as areas where it is not only pleasant to live but which offer opportunities for part-time work, low living costs, low taxes, low fuel costs, availability of housing and proximity to medical services and shopping.

The survey also listed the worst retirement areas — New England, New York and New Jersey — because of high taxes, expensive utilities and unemployment. It said Massachusetts is the poorest bet in the nation for retired people.

Following is a state-by-state ranking:

—Utah: Moderate living costs and low utility rates. Exclusion of up to $6,000 a year pension income for people over 65 in computing state income tax. Recommended — around Salt Lake City and St. George.

—Louisiana: A cost-of-living 10 percent below the national average. A $400 tax exemption for people over 65. Incredibly low property taxes. Recommended — St. Tammany Parish.

—South Carolina: A special tax exemption of $800 and a $12,000 deduction from property value assessments for 65 and over. Free hunting and fishing licenses. Recommended — Coastal islands and Summerville.

—Nevada: No income or inheritance taxes, but high hospital costs. Recommended — Boulder City.

—Texas: A $15,000 exemption on the assessed value of houses for people over 65. Recommended — Austin and the Brownsville-McAllen area.

—New Mexico: A cost of living 10 percent below the national average, low taxes, low fuel costs. Recommended — Albuquerque and Roswell.

—Alabama: Low food costs. Recommended — Fairhope.

—Arizona: About the best medical care you can get anywhere. A personal income tax exemption of $1,000 for people over 65. Recommended — Tucson, Phoenix, Green Valley, Prescott.

—Florida: Many medical services geared to older people. A $5,000 deduction on property tax assessments for over 65ers who are five-year residents. Recommended — away from the costly coastal areas.

—Georgia: Cost of living about 9 percent lower than the national average. Good medical services. Recommended — the Golden Isles area and Savannah.

Children Caught Up In Work Ethic At Early Age

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (UPI) — Children are caught up in the work ethic by the time they enter kindergarten, say two early childhood professors at New Jersey colleges.

They evidently value work and expect to get jobs, Bernard Goldstein and Jack Oldham say in their new book, Children and Work (Transaction Books, New Brunswick, N.J.).

Goldstein and Oldham found attitudes of children from low income families change when they reach high school and see no attractive jobs open to them. Manipulating unemployment insurance and welfare may become more appealing, the authors speculate.

They also found kindergarten-age children have a decided preference, according to sex, for types of jobs. At that level, they accept sexual job stereotyping as a matter of course, Goldstein said. The influence of the women's movement doesn't show up until junior high school, he added.

Easy Meal Tips Can Aid In Baby Travel

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — If you are traveling across town or across country with a baby, here are tips from Mary Hilton, a consumer advisor, on easy meals:

— If your baby is taking whole milk, measure the correct amount of powdered dry milk into each of his or her bottles. Fill a vacuum bottle with sterilized warm water and mix the powder and the water at feeding times to make milk that's the correct temperature.

— If your baby is eating solids, freeze portions of cooked vegetables, fruits and meats in ice cube trays. Just before leaving, place the needed number of cubes in individual plastic bags and seal with twist-ties. At meal time, you can even warm such foods under hot running water if necessary.

Mrs. Hilton is a consultant to the Diaper Service Consumer Information Council.

Subtropics Peak Covered By Snow

TAIPEI, Taiwan (UPI) — Every winter, Mt. Hohuan (Happy Together) is crowded with people who go there to "appreciate the snow" for the first time in their lives.

Situated in the center of this subtropical island, the mountain rises to 11,204 feet above sea level.

Attractive accommodations can be found at Pine Snow Lodge on the northern slope of Mt. Hohuan's eastern peak. It is next to Taiwan's only decent ski slope, which contains the island's only ski lift.

Mt. Hohuan is also the gateway to Mt. Chilai, the island's most dangerous peak, which attracts groups of young hikers throughout the year.

Home Features Exceptional Design, Abundance Of Space

By HIAWATHA ESTES

If you have been looking for a home with an abundance of space, then this plan should meet most of your requirements. It not only offers spacious rooms, but numerous other features which combine to form an exceptional design.

From a roofed porch, double doors open to an entry which provides supeb access to all rooms. Only a partial wall separates the dining-living room and entry. This, plus the large amount of glass in the rear wall, visually enlarges this already huge room.

The kitchen is partially open to the family room. There are numerous cabinets including a wide pantry. From the eating nook, doors open to the patio, which is also accessible from the family and living rooms and rear bedrooms.

Laundry facilities plus extra wide broom and storage closets are in a room off the kitchen. A furnace and water heater are in an adjoining closet.

The luxurious master bedroom suite is accessible from the entry hall and separated from the other bedrooms. Off the large bedroom is a dressing area and private bath. All of the bedrooms can accommodate twin beds, and for privacy, none have a common wall.

There is ample space for both storage and a workshop in the double garage. A door opens from the garage to the bedroom hall.

Many features have been included in the design of this impressive Spanish exterior. Three arches — two of which have ornamental iron railings — extend across the front of the roofed porch.

Complete working drawings for plan 31215 can be purchased for only $27.95 for the first set and $12.00 for each additional set ordered at the same time. This plan will be available at these special prices until November 8, 1979. Please allow at least three weeks for delivery. A large reproduction rendering of the exterior is available for $4. Also available are six home plan books illustrating nearly 1,000 plans — a $13.00 value — for only $9.95 plus $1 for postage and handling. Send all orders to: Hoawatha Estes, P.O. Box 404-J, Northridge, California 91328.

PAUL BUSH

The Electrical Apparatus Service Association, which is headquartered in St. Louis, Mo., is an international organization of more than 2,500 companies that sell, service and repair industrial motors, generators, transformers, controls and related electro-mechanical equipment.

Bush, who was previously vice president of EASA, has served 12 years on the association's international board of directors. Prior to his election to the international board of directors, he also served as a board member and held every elective office in EASA's Southwestern Chapter.

In addition to his involvement in EASA and in his own business, Bush is also active in many civic organizations, including the local chapters of the American Business Club, the Mental Health-Mental Retardation Association, the Multiple Sclerosis Association, The Guidance Center and the Texas Boys Ranch. He is also a member of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce.

City Group Honored

The Lubbock Chapter of the Independent Automotive Service Association was chosen as ISA's Outstanding Chapter with membership of 50 to 149 during the association's recent convention in New Orleans.

The award is based on membership growth and retention, chapter meeting attendance, community activities, technical training, public relations, customer relations, and association activity participation.

Members in the Independent Automotive Service Association operate their shops under a strict Code of Ethics. They strive to work for excellence in their profession, and to improve community relations with all automotive repair businesses, the association said.

Lubbock chapter officers include C. B. McNeely, president, and Bob Steward, secretary.

The IASA convention was held in New Orleans, with over 1,500 members and guests in attendance. The IASA has 4,500 members in eight states—Texas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Arkansas, Missouri, Arizona, Tennessee, and Oklahoma.

Hams Have 'Field Day' At Meet

By MIKE WENDLAND

CQ Field Day, CQ Field Day, CQ. Here is Kilo Eight Zulu, Radio, Hotel, portable eight. QRZ contest.

Even in my tent camper, 200 feet down the darkened hill beneath a canopy of night stars, I could hear Chuck Mason, WD8KXS, up in the tent that served as our radio shack searching for more contacts. It was 4 o'clock in the morning, 14 hours into the biggest and most exciting amateur radio contest of the year.

Across from me at the other end of the camper was Mark Javit, WD8NXO. He was blissfully asleep, his snores almost covering up Chuck's CQing. Mark and I had been relieved by Chuck a half hour before. Together, the two of us had scored over a hundred contacts with hams in 38 states in less than two hours. Chuck was trying to better our record.

And when Chuck and his group up on the hill tired, it would be time for the code crew. George Bullard, KA8APE, and Dave Ashenfelter, KA8DDT—asleep in a two-man tent next to my camper—would join forces with Dennis Baron, WD8CYR, who can send and receive code as fast as most of us talk. The three wanted to show us all that CW, or Morse Code, was the most efficient way of making points.

There were still others of us. Halfway up the hill, George Mough, N8AZT, sipped coffee and looked over his makeshift two-meter cubical quad antenna, which was pointed skyward. In a van 20 feet away from him, Ron Zander, WD8KXH, fine-tuned the dials of his new Kenwood TS120. The two were planning to tap into the ham radio satellite, Oscar, and make a contest contact by outer space.

Scattered between and around us all were the others: Vince Vielhaber, KA8CSH; Don Phillips, WD8QDL; and Steve Sarason, WB8RRD. Most were recuperating from their own operating schedules or the linguini in clam sauce, cooked by Joe Burke, WD8PQO, that we had all eaten three hours before.

As individuals, we were in friendly rivalries with one another. Together, we were competing against thousands of hams across the country as members of the Booga-Booga Amateur Radio Club. And our annual Field Day effort was the kind of outing that hams plan for year-round.

Excitement runs so high that most of us confessed to not being able to sleep the night before.

Field Day is a fun contest. But it has a serious purpose. Sponsored by the American Radio Relay League, the 150,000-member amateur group, the contest gives hams a chance to practice communications under emergency-like conditions.

The contest's aim is to make as many two-way radio contacts as possible in a 24-hour period, using emergency power and temporary antennas.

In the event of disaster, hams, using portable gasoline-powered electric generators or batteries, volunteer their services to local authorities. Field Day, held annually on the last weekend of June, gives us all a chance to make sure we can meet the demands of an emergency and, at the same time, have a good time.

Mark it down on next year's calendar and then make it a point to find a local amateur group that is participating in the event.

Most groups use Field Day as a means of showing the public what ham radio is all about. And plenty of CBers have found Field Day just the incentive they need to buckle down and study for a ham radio license.

We're still compiling the results of our effort this year. But, in 24 hours, we worked hams from coast-to-coast and as far away as Australia, Russia, Germany and Argentina.

Afterward, most of us went home and collapsed. All of us except Ashenfelter. He went home and went right back on the radio.

The bands were really quiet, he said. All the American hams were sleeping the contest off. It was a great time to work DX (distant stations).

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: Most hams I know are all for CB at 900 MHz. I think there really is a need for an expanded CB service in the UHF range.—J. U., Newark, N.J.

Dear CB STATIC: I'm a ham and my only concern with CBers is that they waste a lot of money on very limited equipment. They buy fancy rigs and antennas, which are only good on one very crowded band. With a little work they could get ham licenses and really get satisfaction out of their hobby.—R. O., Drain, Ore.

Dear Mr. Wendland: Why don't hams realize that CB is all a lot of us want? We don't want to be hams. We're perfectly happy with CB and we resent people constantly trying to ram ham radio down our throats.—E. T., Evanston, Ill.

Dear Mike: The ham bands are just as bad as the CB band. The percentage of rude ham operators is about the same as it is on CB. It's just that since there are so many CBers, you notice them more.—H. K., Troy, Mich.

The Voice of Business

By RICHARD LESHER
President of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce

By RICHARD LESHER
President, U.S. Chamber Of Commerce

WASHINGTON—Does business really have the right of free speech? The question may seem ridiculous, but perhaps it is not, given what has just happened to the Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corporation.

The Kaiser people wanted to air a series of television commercials to stimulate public interest and involvement in three issues: Free enterprise, energy and governmental red tape. But after viewing the proposed spots, all three networks turned them down. Or, as Kaiser more bluntly put it, they "censored" them.

Kaiser maintains it has a perfect right to speak its mind in public. I agree. What's more, I believe the Supreme Court does too. Last year, the National Chamber of Commerce filed a brief in the Supreme Court supporting five corporations which were suing the state of Massachusetts over a question involving free speech. The companies wanted to campaign against a proposed amendment to that state's constitution which would have permitted a graduated tax on personal income. But the state did not want to let them.

The Court decided in favor of the companies and made two very important points: First, it ruled that speech has an inherent worth, and that the freedom to inform the public does not depend on the identity of the source, be it a corporation, an association, a union or individuals; second, the Court said the public itself should be the final judge of the relative merits of conflicting opinions. In other words, the First Amendment does not "belong" to any definable category of persons; it belongs to all who exercise its freedoms.

Getting back to the Kaiser case, can a question be raised as to the content of the proposed Kaiser commericials? Were they, perhaps, maliciously worded, biased or unsuitably controversial? On the contrary, upon reading them one is struck by how balanced and moderate they are. They seem as American as apple pie.

In its spot on free enterprise, Kaiser does not make opinionated statements; it asks questions. For example: "Is free enterprise an endangered species?" and, 'How much government regulation is enough?", to cite just two of the six. But rather than give its own answers, Kaiser says: "The answers are up to you. Whatever your views, let your elected representatives know."

In its spot on energy, the company makes statements, but they are carefully balanced: "Some people are calling the energy crisis a hoax. Others say that at the rate we're using up our oil resources we'll be down to our last drop in our children's lifetime." The company then calls for an energy plan making use of all our energy resources. And here again, it calls on people to make up their own minds and to contact their elected representatives.

Business is sometimes criticized for overselling democracy?

The Kaiser commercial on red tape might be judged slightly more opinionated in that it uses fact to express criticism: "In 1977, America spent $100 billion on federal paperwork alone. And in the end we all pay for it." And yet, who among us would disagree?" With American workers now giving back in taxes almost half of everything they earn, this is one issue where there really is overwhelming agreement. Each year we are transferring a greater share of our wealth, intellect and energy from the pursuit of progress to the satisfaction of bureaucratic requirements.

I do not believe the networks are in cahoots to prevent business from making an editorial case. But what is astonishing was the apparent fear of approving such mild messages. Fear of whom? Of our own government? Shades of King George! Kaiser said it was informed by one network that its commercials were rejected because of the Fairness Doctrine. That's the doctrine administered by the FCC to insure that television presents balanced opinions. But as the company countered: "We believe, too, that television should present a fair balance of opinion. Even ours."

Maybe it's time to take a closer look at the Fairness Doctrine. The way it is being interpreted now hardly seems fair. Indeed, I have to wonder, is it even constitutional?

THE U.S. AND YOU

William Steif

TWO MILLION YOUNG Americans now making plans to go to college in the fall will find their financial situations tougher than they expected unless Congress acts swiftly.

The 2 million are those expected to borrow bank funds to pay for college under the federal government's Guaranteed Student Loan program.

The problem: Bank funds for these loans are about to dry up.

Reason: The banks won't be able to make money on the loans after July 1.

That's the word from Alfred B. Fitt, general counsel of the Congressional Budget Office, who told a House subcommittee that the immediate outlook for GSLs is "extremely clouded."

On July 1, Fitt said, the interest rate ceiling on GSLs is required by law to drop from the current 13.25 percent to 11 percent.

If the ceiling formula isn't changed, Fitt said, "There'll be strong downward pressures on the inclination of the banks to make new student loans.

Since the GSLs were set up in 1965, inflation has been forcing up the loans' costs."

The way you get a GSL is to go to your friendly neighborhood banker and ask for it. In fiscal year 1978, about 1.9 million of the nation's 11 million students did this, borrowing just under $2 billion to cope with soaring college costs.

THE BANKER'S LOAN TO the student generally is insured by a state student-loan agency (38 states have such agencies now). The federal government, in turn, reinsures the state agencies against loss.

Back in the 1960s, a 7 percent interest rate was sufficient for banks to turn a profit. But today 7 percent is laughable. So Congress added a "special allowance" on top of the 7 percent.

This year's special allowance is 5 percent, which has to be allocated quarterly to keep pace with inflation. Distributed over the fiscal year, Oct. 1 to Sept. 30, that would bring the total interest rate to 12 percent.

But inflation has upped interest rates throughout the year, so the special allowance for the April 1-toJune 30 quarter is 6.25 percent. That means the year's last quarter, July 1 thrugh Sept. 30, must be cut to 4 percent to stay within the full year's 5 percent special allowance. Such a cut comes just as millions of students are getting their finances in order for the fall term—and such a cut means the bulk of the 8,500 lenders making GSL loans will say no.

GSLs are a bother to banks. They're for small amounts, up to $2,500 a year, and require lots of paperwork. Banks generally prefer to make larger commercial loans.

But because of federal and state pressures, the banks until now have been cooperasing fairly well in making GSL money available. There are now $8 billion in GSLs outstanding, and they're profitable. When the profit stops, most banks will tell students, "forget it."

THE CARTER ADMINISTRATION has been aware of the coming GSL crunch for months. Now it's talking about "emergency legislaton" to raise the special allowance to 6 percent, permitting the interest rate paid the banks to go to 13 percent on a full-time basis (instead of adjusting the rate from quarter to quarter).

But there's a whale of a difference between introducing legislation—not yet done—in Congress and getting it enacted.

If you want to protect your student loan, or the GSL of your son or daughter, here are the key congressmen to write: Sen. Harrison A. Williams, D-N.J., chairman of the Senate Human Resources Committee, Room 352, Russell Office Building, Washington D.C. 20510; Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., education subcommittee chairman, Room 325, Russell Office Building, Washington D.C20510; Rep. Carl D. Perkins, D-Ky., chairman of the House Education and Labor Commitee, Room 2328, Rayburn Office Building, Washington D.C. 20515; Rep. William D. Ford, D-Mich., post-secondary education subcommittee chairman, Room 2368, Rayburn Office Building, Washington D.C. 20515.

Juanita Kiesling and Ron McClendon, realtors with Land and Associates Inc., 3004 50th St., have been awarded memberships in the National Million Dollar Club.

The organization, which based its selection on the realtors' production for 1978, announced the honor recently. Membership certificates were presented to the recipients at a special sales meeting held in the University City Club.

Guidelines for production are established by a national advisory board of realtors from throughout the nation.

The organization said, "Since membership is based on production rather than educational or other requirements, it reflects the true ability and skill of the individual member."

McClendon has been with the firm for approximately three years, and Mrs. Kiesling has been employed there for two years.

Con Artist Relies On 'Trickery'

By SGT. SIDNEY LYLE
Odessa Police Department

If you have the attitude that crime is something that happens to the other guy and that you could not possibly fall victim yourself, you are primed as a target for the con artist. If you can be sweet-talked into believing that nothing can go wrong, you are likely to feel the effects of crime. Its pain may not hurt in the same way as a bee sting but its effects are longer lasting.

Not only the wealthy or the elderly are singled out for a con scheme. All of us to one degree or another, can be "had" by a golden tongued operator who convinces us that our money will be used to benefit some great social purpose or perhaps, even increase our financial holdings.

While not all requests for cash contributions or the sale of advertising space in some magazine or safety flier are a phony pitch by a con artist, it would be most beneficial if the person contacted would check out the authenticity of the person making the pitch.

Therefore, you should never hand money over until you are sure who you are handing it over to. His credentials may appear official, and his motives pure, but you need to check him out anyway. After all, if he didn't appear official and pure, he would not be a successful con man.

Unlike a bee sting which causes swelling, the con artist can cause a shrinkage — in your wallet. So don't take unnecessary chances. Prevention is the best cure. If you are in doubt about some individual's motives, have the police check him out or call the Better Business Bureau for advice.

Inflation 'Protection' Claimed Hard To Find

By JAMES J. DOYLE

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Runaway inflation is eating into the value of a dollar so deeply savers don't have a chance, and, experts say, there is little protection for investors.

"Protection against inflation is hard to find for anyone, especially the small investor," said Ray Edwards, chairman of the board of Glendale Federal Savings and Loan Association.

"The only common ground is that no one has found a solution to fight inflation. Everything is stop-gap."

There are many avenues of investment: stocks and bonds, gold, real estate, foreign exchange, savings. For some, the tables of Las Vegas.

They all have one thing in common — risk, to a greater or lesser degree.

Inflation, the decrease in the value of your dollar, is at about 12 percent. The Consumer Price Index for the current quarter is expected to end at 12 percent.

The CPI is a measure of the cost of living and includes a wide range of commodities. The basic necessities — food, fuel, transportation and medical costs — are at the high end of the scale.

During the first three months of this year beef prices went up 48.9 percent. Poultry, fish and eggs rose 22.4 percent from last year. Energy costs are expected to rise by 30 percent by the end of this year.

Wearing apparel was only 4.7 percent higher over a year, April to April, but people who can barely afford food can buy few clothes. An inflation rate may be much higher than 12 percent for any individual family.

Traditionally, savings accounts not only saved money but made money in slow growth. Now, they lose money because the percentage rate of inflation is greater than ny interest rates paid.

Money investment is no longer a game amateurs can play. Even the pros don't do well.

"There's not a lot of difference between small and large investors," Al Lavery of Merrill-Lynch, the nation's largest brokerage house, said. "Institutions — large trading groups — have not moved well with market trends either."

Both Lavery and Shannon Clyne, Bank of America vice president in charge of executive financial counseling, interviewed separately, suggested the stock market as still the best way to beat inflation. But they warn of risks.

"The point is," Clyne said, "there is really no risk-free or low risk that matches inflation. Our plan is appropriate risk management.

"And there is no certain return unless you can introduce a fair degree of leverage. That theoreticalty multiplies the return, but also multiplies the risk."

Leverage is simply using someone else's money — borrowed money —to make investments.

"Also," Clyne said, "we don't consider commodities and gold futures a real investment vehicle for nonprofessionals. That's gambling."

One of the nation's major gold dealers, Sherman Unkefer of North American Coin and Currency Ltd., of Phoenix, Ariz., agreed that gold, along wth other precious metals and foreign currency, is not a trading arena for the inexperienced.

But more and more people are finding it a good alternative investment, he said.

Real estate has returned large amounts of money to some people, "but it's appreciated so much," Clyne said, "we're unable to find individual investments that produce a good cash flow.

"Rental real estate doesn't produce enough rental income to cover the costs, so people are put in the position of supporting ther investment in hopes of appreciation."

With inflation at 12 percent, he said, it requires 15 to 20 percent appreciation. "The investor has to be awfully optimistic."

But is it possible to make money with money even with inflation?

"Certainly, it is," Lavery said. "I would strongly recommend buying something like a mutual fund...

"But if you expect a substantial reward, you have to take a substantial risk. On mutuals, you won't see a large increase within a year."

Stocks are still a good buy. "You're paid while you're waiting," Lavery said. The payment is in the form of dividends while waiting for the stock's vatue to increase.

If the dividends are 6 percent and the value of the stock increases 10 percent over a year, the net gain is 16 percent.

There are several ways to invest money outside the traditional vehicles of stocks, bonds, real estate and savings accounts, Unkefer said.

Gold is probably the most popular.

"We have about 15,000 private customers throughout the United States," he said, "but on the whole, private investors have done little in the area of precious metals."

He also suggested that Swiss francs would be a good investment, if you have a sufficient amount of capital and some expertise.

Last year a private survey showed six-tenths of 1 percent of investors in this country had chosen gold over other means of investment.

"Should this change to 5 or 10 percent it could have a significant impact on available supplies. A lot of middle income people are becoming nore aware of gold as an alternative because the traditional vehicles of investment are becoming losers in view of inflation."

Unkefer said, however, the gold market is a world market, with Europeans investing heavily, Americans in small numbers and cautiously.

Clyne, of Bank of America, noted that gold buying is a "bet against the economy." And more traditional investment managers recommend its purchase sparingly.

But when times are tough it remains, worldwide, the touchstone of security.

It has gone from $35 an ounce in 1971, when the price restriction was lifted in the United States, to a value on world markts of well over $250 an ounce.

Clyne suggests that gold as a long-term commitment makes sense. "It tends over time to go in the opposite direction of the stock market. A little bit of gold helps relieve the portfolio (list of stocks held) risk. I Would say $4 in stocks and $1 in gold to smooth it out.

"But gold futures is a gambler's game and not part of good financial planning."

Buying gold futures, along with wheat futures, egg futures and other commodities, is not the same as buying gold to hold. The futures markets involve buying the commodity or metal on paper, and betting against its value at some future time.

Knowledgeable investors backed by adequate amounts of money are able to suffer losses one day to await gains the next, despite inflation.

But, in the best of times, speculation is not for the amateur. In the present period of inflation, which may last awhile, the experts say careful investors will get the best advice they can and plan for the long term.

"Inflation," Ray Edwards said, "is a diabolical way of lowering everyone's standard of living and expectations."

Lubbock contractors have received permits for $942,050 in future construction activity, according to city records.

Commercial projects totaled $252,000, and residential projects were $690,050.

In the commercial classification, M. W. Turner Construction plans the construction of restaurant facilities at 5202 4th St. for an estimated cost of $90,000. The work involves 3,180 square feet of floor space.

Monte Rogers has scheduled a warehouse and office space at 6020 43rd St. for a cost of $75,000.

J. W. Ward will build office facilities at 1627 17th St. The work involves 3,200 square feet of floor space, and is expected to cost $40,000.

In the residential category, Glenn Duncan has scheduled two single-family homes at 8804 Richmond ($96,500), and 9407 Lynnhaven ($115,000).

Jim Turner plans a home at 4415 89th St. for an estimated cost of $130,000.

Other single-family homes, with estimated costs and contractors, include: 8005 Wayne, $99,000, Carl Ballard; 4425 88th St., $97,500, Big State Builders; 4813 63rd St. St., $55,000, George Cannady; No. 5 Brentwood Club, $83,000, Fred McDonald.

Customers Get Warning On Hidden Charges

NEW YORK (UPI) — People who plan to use the new bank transfer arrangement that lets their bank move funds automatically from their savings to checking account should watch for hidden charges.

They could cost a depositor more than present banking services, says Hada de Slosser of Cornell University's Cooperative Extension consumer education office.

Mrs. de Slosser says a survey by the U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs shows service costs vary widely. The automatic transfer system pays interest on funds that otherwise would be idle in a checking account. It also permits overdrawing a checking account without traditional penalties because the money is transferred from savings.

But, says Mrs. de Slosser, overdrawing may cost you more than you would earn in extra interest if you had not transferred the funds.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

A Time For Straight Talk

THERE IS A lot of loose talk going around these days about not only the Energy Crisis, but the prospects of a recession or something worse.

Almost daily, the American people, as well as those abroad, are bombarded with predictions of "things to come." And this time, the "experts" aren't talking about little men from outer space.

As a result, if the motorists, and others, are more than a little confused, it is understandable. The White House got into the act by scheduling, then abruptly cancelling an "important" nationwide address on the energy situation.

WE'VE SAID it before, and re-emphasize it today.

It's far past time that those in responsible positions in government, business and the communications field stop speculating and start making some hard decisions.

In brief, those in charge—from the President and Congress to the Department of Energy—thus far have been "all talk and no action."

It's time to "get the show on the road."

THE AMERICAN people, from the two-car, two-career family, wondering how to get to work, to industry and nations abroad, have a right to know what the months ahead hold for them.

President Carter and members of Congress either must come to grips with a definitive program, including standby rationing plans, definite plans for a crash program to find alternate energy sources and a plan to stabilize the economic impact of continuing OPEC price rises—or risk all the forecasts of gloom and doom coming true.

It isn't, as some in Washington and the media claim, that the American people will not accept the hard facts of life, the reality of a changed life-style.

We believe most citizens—most, but not all—will do whatever is necessary if given the forthright leadership, facts and fair and sensible guidelines to accomplish what has to be done.

THUS FAR, we have been treated to the spectacle of not only the President, but many others, engaging in a hand-wringing exercise.

Indeed, Skylab may be falling. But the sky isn't. At least, not yet.

In that respect, as we noted earlier, much has been written and spoken by some pundits of how the nation must shift gears, literally, to a life-style bordering on the horse and buggy days.

There have been dire forecasts of a worldwide recession "or worse," which, "sources" say, "will make 1929 look like a Sunday School picnic."

This is not to say such a calamity is not possible. But, it is to say it can be averted and is not probable. And changes can be made without turning back history half a century.

IN THE FIRST place, the conditions which brought about the 1929 Stock Market crash and worldwide depression are not the same as those today.

This is not to say there aren't similar situations in the economy. Then as now, the worldwide monetary structure was in turmoil. And then, as now, "third" forces were exerting tremendous pressure on the more established systems of government and trade.

But, today's government, financial and trade experts are much more worldly—in every sense of the word—than their counterparts of 50 years ago.

Today's citizens, in the industrialized nations at least, are much more sophisticated and frankly more educated and informed.

And today's conditions, unlike those of the late twenties and early thirties are correctable, if those deeply involved are willing to cooperate to solve their mutual problems.

THE SOLUTION, and the sacrifices involved, of course must not only have the belief of those suggesting them, but of the people.

To get the full support of the citizens, those in charge must not only appear to level with them—but actually do so.

If the energy crisis is, as President Carter has stated, "the moral equivalent of war," then as President, he and his advisers and Congress have a moral obligation to "lay it on the line" without political rhetoric, misleading accusations and with the backing of the industrial, business and educational community.

It's true that Mr. Carter's future as a politician may rest on what he does. But, the future of the nation and its citizens also are at stake. We can talk ourselves into a depression. But, we can't talk ourselves out of the energy crisis, or some of our other problems.

That was the lesson in 1929 and it is the lesson in 1979. That much hasn't changed. Given the hard facts and the challenge, we feel the American people will rise to them.

VIRGINIA PAYETTE:

Unsocial Security

I DON'T know about you, but I intend to be one of that growing number of senior citizens who stubbornly refuse to die on time just to save Social Security the embarrassment of going broke.

Not only that, I'm starting early (well, before I'm eligible for SS, anyway) to keep a close eye on any fancy figuring they use to swipe my share for somebody else.

It won't be much, for a couple of reasons.

Number one, I'm not a man. And not being a man means getting the short end of the check come pension-paying time at the SS store.

Actually, by the time I'm turned out to fixed-income pastures, that may be a moot point. Come the recession, say SS bigwigs, the ripple effect on benefits may have us oldsters on dogfood by 1983.

ESPECIALLY IF bad times hit this year.

That's because a major recession would send the unemployment rate up, which means fewer workers would be paying into the system, which would upset Social Security something awful.

It's already suffering what SS trustees call "a precarious ability to pay retirement benefits." Every year it pays out more than $118 billion to 35 million retirees, rich and poor alike.

And every year there are more long-living old ex-workers and fewer young workers to support them. Two years ago, 100 employes' SS taxes took care of 20 retirees; by 2025, every 100 workers will have to support 30 retirees on, thanks to inflation, a far more costly tab.

BACK IN my reporter days, I paid in part of my weekly salary for nine years and nine months. Now, I find out, that's 90 days short of the full 10 years I need to get "maximum" payments when I retire.

And 10 years of columning don't count. Social Security laws tag me as a non-person, an "uncovered self-employed."

The dollars I earn aren't income; they're royalties, and royalties are not subject to withholding or employer payments.

In other words, I don't pay in, so SS doesn't pay out, which is only fair. Nobody takes anything out for income-tax withholding, either. I get it all, period.

(The trouble with that arrangement is that royalties qualify as income when April 15 rolls around and, because I've already spent every buck that comes in (natch), Old Dad has to dig into his jeans and come up with my tax money. He comments on that from time to time.)

THE POINT TO all this is that any SS payments I collect after I hit 65 will be based on what I earned years ago chasing train wrecks and movie stars.

Actually, the way this silly thing works, I'll probably collect more just for staying married to the same man for at least 10 years than I will for being a hot-shot Hollywood reporter.

It could be worse, though. And is, for millions of women who, in these days of government-minded equality, still earn less than a man doing the same job...still lose benefit points when they take time off to raise a family...and still get average benefits of $215, compared to $325 for the average male worker.

The government has decided this is unfair and it's even talking about doing something to change it.

THESE DAYS women make up half the work force, mostly because they need the money. They also need a fairer shake on retirement benefits.

HEW has offered up 323 pages of proposals, including an income-sharing plan for married couples that would split their earnings 50-50, whether both worked or not.

Then there's a double-decker deal where (1) everyone eligible would get a flat benefit of about $122 a month, plus (2) an extra payment based on how much he had paid in.

Under either plan, women who quit their jobs to raise children wouldn't be penalized in either old-age or disability protection. And divorced couples would each receive equal credit for wages they shared before they called it alimony.

THE WAY IT is now, a wife doesn't get a cent if she didn't hang on long enough to make it to their 10th anniversary.

(And even that's an improvement; before last January she had to stay married 20 years to qualify for dependent benefits in her sunset years.)

Looks like I'm facing one of those life crises: either I work harder for women's lib or I look for a boss who will hire me for 90 days and deduct enough to qualify me for "maximum" retirements.

That's the optimistic view. A pessimist would figure it's not going to matter anyway, that by then even the "maximum" will be "minimum"—if we're lucky.

ART BUCHWALD:

American Know-How Is Missing In Action

WASHINGTON—The one thing all of us in this country prided ourselves on was "American Know-How." No matter how messed up things got politically, we always could say, "What makes this country different is that we've got Know-How."

Now, for the first time, our faith in A.K.H. is under siege and everyone seems to be asking. "What happened to good old American Know-How?"

I found American Know-How taking a coffee break under a tree.

"How do you feel?" I asked.

"Not so good," Know-How said. "I keep goofing up. I guess it must be age."

"Don't say that. You're as young as you feel."

"Nothing seems to go right lately. Skylab won't stay up, they grounded the DC-10s, the nuclear energy plants are under fire, and they've recalled all the Firestone 500 radial tires. I guess I'm no longer infallible."

"NO ONE IS infallible, but you're still pretty good. Everyone makes mistakes."

"Sure, but you never heard about them before. Now a day doesn't go by when someone somewhere doesn't screw up, and everyone says, 'That's American Know-How for you.' It isn't all my fault."

"Whose fault is it?"

"I can't get good help. I've inherited a whole generation of people who don't give a damn."

"Why?"

"I know you're going to think I'm nuts, but I blame it on the day that parents stopped insisting children clean up their rooms."

"I'm not sure I understand."

"IN THE Sixties and Seventies people gave up asking their kids to do anything around the house. It was too much of a hassle.

"The kids dropped their clothes all over the floor, they left a mess everywhere they went and they got away with murder.

"Now they're grown up and they're a bunch of slobs. How can someone design a safe automobile when he doesn't even know how to make up his own bed?"

"I can't believe that's the answer."

"Have you been in a college dormitory in recent years? It looks as if a typhoon hit it. These kids, who live in their own debris for four and six years, have come out of school to be our doctors, lawyers, engineers and scientists.

"WE'RE PUTTING people in charge of nuclear plants who don't know how to hang their own clothes on a hanger. We have engineers designing dams who have never shined their shoes.

"We have doctors doing open-heart surgery who have never washed out a bathtub. Sooner or later they're bound to mess up."

"What you're saying is that we lost the race for know-how in the bedrooms and bathrooms of the American home."

"It has to start somewhere," he replied. "You can't put a person in charge of quality control if he doesn't know how to shave."

"It's frightening when you put it in those terms," I said. "Is there any hope?"

"We have to raise a whole new generation that cares. There was a time when American know-how could get a man on the moon.

"Now I can't even guarantee that I can find anyone to fix your washing machine."

Services For 'Over 65' Citizens In Lubbock Cited

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

This letter is in response to the woman inquiring about types of benefits for "over-65 people" in our city.

Seniors who need help may call Senior Citizens Services, 744-1433, for information about senior programs and services. In addition to Information and Referral, the City of Lubbock Senior Citizens Program includes serving hot lunches at eight nutrition sites, providing senior centers, Retired Senior Volunteer Program for persons over 60, and the Mayor's Telephone Reassurance service to shut-ins.

Other benefits to seniors include tax benefits of $10,000 for homeowners over 65 in addition to the $5,000 homestead exemption and Citibus discounts for Senior Citizens.

Approximately one person in 10 in our country is now 65 or older. They are vital human beings who have contributed much to our society and still have much to offer. I agree they have a right to be proud in their later years. We, in turn, are proud of our Senior Citizens!

Ace Says He Will Assume Tech Job Despite Faults

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

With all good accord; in case the Board of Regents at Texas Tech University is still in the market for a new president to replace the dude who took a powder of recent date, I would like to have a crack at the job myself. The job would do two things for me:

First, it would extricate me from the disadvantage dole shamefully inaugurated by an unselfish Government, and;

Second, the job would start me breathing again!

I'm getting plumb tired of listening to folks complain day in and day out about having to fork over their paychecks every month to finance this hairy welfare monster, and I don't blame them with gas selling for a buck five a gallon and good pot for one hundred and eighty big ones a lid. That kind of bread would buy lots of Thunderbird!

Only snare to my offer to the Board of Regents as far as I can tell is that my former identity with higher learning ain't plumb up to snuff, so to speak!

Brownfield Reader Answers Senator's Plea For Advice

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

This form letter is prompted by the form letter from Sen. Bentsen dated June 11, 1979.

The senator's letter hit several of the trouble spots head-on but we, the constituents, have learned that what is written us from Washington and what actually happens in legislative halls have a tendency to vary widely.

One point in the letter was to reduce Federal red tape! This would be extremely admirable. The very poorest taxpayer has known about this for several years.

Since the senator has asked for definite steps that Congress might take that could help our economy I would like to sanction the idea of reducing the red tape mentioned above. Another thing that would instill confidence in the mind of the public would be to place the expenses and salaries of senators and congressmen on an incentive basis. This would give the legislators an increase in pay with the reduction of the rate of inflation. Conversely, their salaries would be reduced as the cost of living index increases.

In addition, originally good men were selected and elected to go to Washington to represent their constituents. But that was before we had national television on which some elected officials dare appear and claim to know more about what is best for the "folks back home" than the people themselves! Dare anyone claim that to be representation? Haven't we completed the cycle and are back to the original complaint of "taxation without representation?"

Reader Would Do Something About Restoring Railroads

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Read the editorial "Riding The Rails," with great interest. I've been pushing for revival of rail transportation, especially passenger service.

Before moving to Lubbock, I lived in Florida and some four years ago wrote to the secretary of transportation and several times to Sen. Don Fuqua. Recently I wrote to the editor of The Washington Post, Transportation Sec. Brock Adams and Sens. Baker, Kennedy, Jackson, Bentsen and Fuqua, and U.S. Rep. Hance.

As I stated to all of them, I will continue writing senators, congressmen and editors of large circulation newspapers. I've written before, only to be ignored.

Writer Bemoans Change In Old Favorite Radio Station

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

One of the few times I have been glad to be absent from the Lubbock scene was when I read recently that KFYO was going country music.

I'm glad I've missed that!

I entered the Lubbock scene when Wes Youngblood had his Wylie Drug program, something so good that I'm sure I'm not the only one who remembers it.

My first order of business when I broke in a new car, and this was often because I traveled south to Midland-Odessa for several years, was to set the push button radio to receive KFYO. And from 1937 until we moved here in June 1976, I listened to KFYO 90 percent of the time.

I felt like I lost an old friend when I read about the change and the thought crossed my mind to write Gordon Thompson to tell me it wasn't so. But I realized real quick that it wasn't his idea.

There is nothing in the market here that even comes close to what KFYO was. Stations in Denver, San Antonio, and Dallas come to mind, but none of them could match KFYO.

So, I salute you, Bob Nash, Gordon Thompson, Ole Wes and all the rest. You had it all, and I loved it.

Hale Center Man Agrees 'Brass' Came On Too Strong

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

William D. Kerns' assessment of last weekend's Third Annual Summer Pops Concert by the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra was extremely accurate. Clearly the better performers were seated behind the Nashville Brass's ego-boosting amplifier system.

In his closing acknowledgement, Mr. Kerns alluded to the standing ovation given to the guest performers. As a member of the audience, I was on the horns of a dilemma when the ovation began. I was torn between gratitude for Mr. Davis' group, who came on short notice to replace Doc Severinsen, and disappointment that the Nashville Brass group elected to rather crudely try, for the most part, to overpower us with noise in place of music.

I had considerable emotional investment in that concert. I was the member of the program committee of the South Plains Chapter of the Texas Academy of Physicians who first noticed the change of dates for the Summer Pops Concert. At considerable expense, our chapter gamely changed our continuing education seminar to coincide with the Concert weekend.

We had well over 100 physicians in Lubbock that weekend; who knows how many were swayed by the prospect of a night with the Symphony, and its initial guest, Doc Severinsen?

My thanks to Director Harrod and the Lubbock Symphony for their part in the effort to provide an elegant evening of entertainment. I only wish someone had been able to persuade the Nashville Brass to continue the mood through their segment of the program. How tempting it would have been to flip off the power to the amplifiers just after Mr. Davis's flip query, "Could you hear us?" following the garbled first selection.

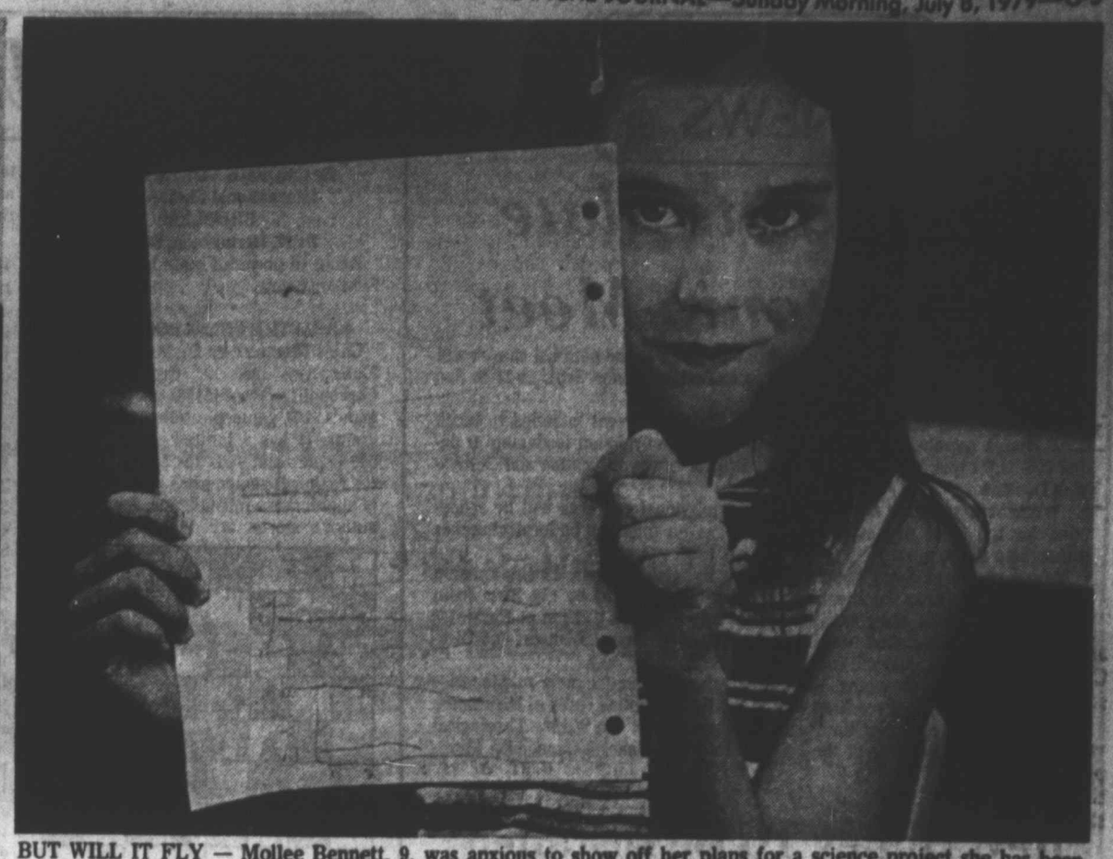
WINNING FINGERS — Seven-year-old Lisa Bartsch is seen here practicing what she does better than anybody else in Murfee Elementary's first grade. She is using her fingers to calculate math problems using the chisanbop method which has become so popular with elementary teachers. Lisa was the first grade winner in a recent school-wide contest.



BUT WILL IT FLY — Mollee Bennett, 9, was anxious to show off her plans for a science project she has been working on. The students build models of their "inventions" as well as diagram how they should work.

Unique Summer School Program Holds Interest

FROM CHISANBOP TO PLAY production to disco dancing, 152 city school students this past month eagerly passed from one learning station to another during a unique summer school program created at Mae Murfee Elementary School.

The youngsters, in grades 1-6, participated in a schedule of creative courses aimed at supplementing their conventional studies with a new presentation of knowledge.

The program was designed so that the students would "have some experiences they wouldn't have in regular school," explained Murfee principal Velma Ruth Shambeck.

During a four-week period all the students participated in casually stuctured blocks of math, rhythms, play production, social studies and English for 45 minutes each.

While some of those courses sound like the standard school curriculum, the activities presented in each class went beyond the usual academic fare.

IN THE SOCIAL STUDIES block, for example, students not only learned about inventors but had the opportunity to pit their imagination against a particular problem with inventions of their own.

The students initiated the creative process with a study of various inventions and then polled their classmates to determine just what type of everyday problem could be solved by modern science.

After deciding what dilemma merited top priority, the youngsters drafted their creations on blueprint and actually built the invention or a scaled model of the project.

If the young scientists ever decide to market their products, the world may someday have a vacuum that pulls up imbedded dirt from shag carpets before it is whisked away, a writing instrument that is a pencil at one end and a pen at the other and a laundry contraption that drops clothes from a washing machine into a dryer that automatically switches on.

IN ENGLISH CLASS, the students learned about the world of odd record-breakers from the Guinness Book of World Records at the same time they studied the language and worked to improve grammar skills.

The language arts students even had a food tasting party and listed adjectives to describe the different taste sensations. Their grammar lesson further progressed when they wrote stories about the flavors they least and most enjoyed.

Armed with calculators and their own 10 fingers, math students tackled the innovative arithmetic method of chisanbop. Though "chisanbop will never substitute for written work," said Mrs. Shambeck, the Oriental method of tapping out math problems with the fingers is utilized as "a motivational technique that improves the thought processes."

In the play production block, budding young thespians participated in every area from scenery design to acting to put on plays that included "Robin Hood," "Cinderella" and "Bambi."

AND FINALLY, YOUNGSTERS plunged feet first into rhythmic activities that rhythms teacher Stephanie Graham hopes they can apply to athletics and to other areas of their lives.

Mrs. Graham incorporated the popular aerobic and disco dancing as well as dances with rhythm sticks into her course that is an attempt to teach the kids activities they never learned during the regular school year.

"The kids are enthusiastic because it's something new," she said. "I hope they'll take what they learned back to their schools and spread it around."

The Murfee program is representative of a change in recent years in the structure of summer school programs.

Ed Stokes, director of elementary education for the school district, said summer school courses are now geared as remedial and enrichment programs rather than as repeat classes for those students who failed during the regular year.

"IT'S NO LONGER just for youngsters who failed last year," said Stokes. "A lot of people look at it as an opportunity to improve in basic skills areas."

Mrs. Shambeck agreed, saying, "Even in our (Murfee's) basic program, the response from parents is that they feel their child could use more strength — not that he's failed."

The popularity of Murfee's creative program was evident in the enrollment that surpassed educators' expectations by some 70 students. "We expected to get 80 students and four teachers," said Mrs. Shambeck, "and we ended up with eight teachers and 152 students."

One of those youngsters, Nat Williams student Julie Hannon, had nothing but praise for the unique learning program. "I'm having lots of fun," she said. "I wish it could go on until 3 (o'clock) just like in school."

Participating in the installation services will be the Rt. Rev. Willis R. Henton, Bishop of the Diocese of Northwest Texas, and church wardens, vestry and clergy from diocesian parishes.

The Pittsburgh native studied at the University of Pittsburgh, the Episcopal Theological School of Massachusetts and was ordained to the priesthood in 1965.

Haney served as vicar of Coleman, as a navy chaplain and as associate rector of St. John's Parish in Odessa before going to Canyon, where he served as a priest of the congregation of the Chapel of St. George while a member of the Bible department at West Texas State.

Haney is replacing the Rev. Edward Abrahamson, who resigned in February to become a nonstipendiary priest in Oklahoma City, Okla.

A reception will follow the installation service.

School Adds More Classes

St. Elizabeth-St. John Neumann Catholic School, 22nd Street and Frankford Avenue, announces that due to an overflow of applications, additional classes will be opened to accommodate parents wishing to enroll their children for the fall term.

The following vacancies now exist: seven third grade, eight fourth grade, five fifth grade, and four sixth grade. Classes are restricted in size to a maximum of twenty-eight children.

An additional teacher has been hired to accommodate the four-year-old pre-kindergarten class in order to increase the size of the class. There are now vacancies for eight more four-year-olds. Children must be four years old on or before September 1, 1979. The pre-kindergarten meets from 8:20-11:30 a.m. five days a week, and offers a complete curriculum of art, music, perceptual training, reading readiness, Spanish, social development, role-playing, and physical education.

St. Elizabeth-St. John Neumann School will offer after-school programs in the fall five days a week, which will include gymnastics, ballet, intensive Spanish, guitar, piano, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, and especially, a fine arts program produced by Texas Tech personnel entitled "Adventure in the Arts". This will be inter-disciplinary in nature, offering a rainbow of activities ranging from beginning ballet, drama, art, music, karate, jazz, to Young Magyars Story Dance. Children will sign up for these after-school programs on August 24 at the school. After-school programs are open to all children in the city, not just to students at St. Elizabeth-St. John Neumann School.

For more information concerning enrollment for the additional classes, call Mrs. Jo Moore, principal, at 799-4788, or 799-1720.

Book's Authors To Discuss Today's Moral Dilemma

Viable alternatives to the erosion of human rights in the modern world will be the subject of a new seminar with a companion book entitled "Whatever Happened to the Human Race" to be held Sept. 14-15 at the Moody Coliseum at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

The book's authors, Francis A. Schaeffer and Dr. C. Everett Koop, will be on hand to discuss today's moral dilemma.

Highlighting the seminar will be the five-part film series of the same name, which was filmed in five countries and took two years to make.

Schaeffer, theologian and philosopher, will present a careful analysis of Western man's development and future direction. His concluding solution to the destruction of human rights is the Gospel itself.

Dr. Koop, one of the world's most respective surgeons, will speak on his observations of man's view of man from a medical perspective.

The cost for the two-day event is $28 for adults, $24 for students and $22 for groups of 25 or more. Interested parties should contact the sponsors of the event, Probe Ministries of Dallas, 12011 Coit Rd. Dallas, 75251, or call them at (214) 661-8591.

Pastor To Assume Duties

Dr. Billy Burke of Carlsbad, N.M., will become the new pastor of the First Baptist Church in Ralls when he gives his first sermon today.

Dr. Burke has 27 years experience pastoring Southern Baptist churches, including the Girard Baptist Church and the West Side Baptist Church in Wichita Falls, Arnett Benson Baptist Church of Lubbock, and the Hillcrest Baptist Church in Carlsbad.

A Baylor University graduate, he received his masters degree from Southwestern Baptist Seminary in Ft. Worth and a Doctor of Ministry degree from Luther Rice Seminary International of Jacksonville, Fla.

Burke has had numerous articles published and is the author of a devotional book entitled "Clouds Can Be Beautiful."

Burke and his wife Ann have four children.

FROM THE CHESS BOOKSHELF

Chess Memoirs by Dr. A. Platz (Chess Enterprise, Inc. 107 Crosstree Road, Coraopolis, PA 15108) contains 278 games, 101 game positions and 374 diagrams. It has a limited edition of only 500 copies and sells for $10. Grandmaster Arthur Bisguier provides an especially appreciative introduction. Some of the author's stories are delightful, and the results of his research on Dr. Emmanuel Lasker are historically very important. I was pleased to find one of my games in Dr. Platz's work. It was played in an eight-game simultaneous in the Bronx 35 years ago. I recommend these entertaining 200 large pages to all chess fans, but order it now if you want to add Chess Memoirs to your chess library!

GAMES BY MAIL

The United States Chess Federation has 11,000 postal tournament players. The Correspondence Chess League of America, the U.S. Postal Chess Union, and many smaller organizations have many thousands more.

At one time I played 560 postal games! That was a promotion gimmick, for six to eight games should be the limit.

Are postal games dull and cautious? Quite the contrary. The greater time for a move allows the enterprising innovator to try out dazzling sacrifices he would never try over-the-board because of worrisome and unanticipated complications.

The usual postal time allowance is three days from receipt of opponent's move, not counting Sundays and holidays. What can be done with those three-day moves is shown by Grandmaster Lajos Steiner in this 1922 game by correspondence with Arpad Csabay.

One of the most dangerous opponents in a tournament is Mikhael Tal, ex-world champion. Brilliant and unpredictable, his style livens up the scene wherever he plays.

On his way to the Montreal International Tournament in May he stopped off for a simultaneous exhibition against 25 participants in Amsterdam. But one of his opponents was Jan van Eybergen, who out-foxed the fox with his daring counter play.

Backgammon

by Omar Sharif

It is White's turn to roll, and he doubles. Should Red accept?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

The magic ratio to bear in mind when considering a double is "3-to-1." If you are less than a 3-to-1 underdog when your opponent doubles, it is mathematically correct to accept the double.

Here White's pip count is 65 to 73 for Red. That makes White a full roll ahead in the race, and it is his roll.

However, that is slightly less than being a 3-to-1 underdog, and therefore it would seem that Red should accept. However, there is more to the doubling cube than can be expressed in a pure mathematical formula.

When it is a close decision whether to accept the double or not, perhaps the most important consideration next to pip count is diversification. One look at the position should be enough to convince anyone but a dyed-in-the-wool optimist that Red's position is pretty hopeless.

White's board is as smooth as it could be. With his next roll he is going to bring home both men from his outer board, and thereafter he is unlikely to miss more than once (which he can afford to do) unless he rolls badly. In contrast, Red has two unoccupied points in his home board, has only one man on his 2-point and must still bring home three men. He will not diversify his board much while getting those men home.

White's lead is a good 8 pips. He should be able to bear off smoothly. Red, however, is not only behind in the race but is likely to fall further behind as he wastes rolls in bearing off. To accept the double is to show great disregard, even in these inflationary times, for your wallet.

Gaslight 'Victim' Of Times

NEW YORK (AP) — Branded as energy wasters, the nation's 1.5 million surviving gaslights will be turned off for the last time by 1982, with a few exemptions for historical or other reasons.

With the end of the gaslight era approaching, an illuminating footnote has come to light in the archives of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., a venerable institution still doing business on Wall Street, where it opened its doors in 1842.

Preserved throughout the years is a document dated Aug. 23, 1850, a petition by the clerks of Atlantic requesting their president to replace the flickering sperm-oil candles, in general use at the time, with gas. It reads:

"Dear Sir, We the undersigned clerks employed in this office, do most respectfully request that Gas Fixtures may be affixed to our respective desks, and that we may be permitted to use Gas in place of the Sperm Candles at present used,

"Aside from the injury to our eyes from the constant flickering of the light from Candles, it is believed, that after the first cost of the pipes, a great saving would be effected in the cost of light by the use of Gas in lieu of Candles and tend to our convenience in performing our duties. Very Respectfully, Your obt Servants."

Fourteen signatures follow — each of them in a strong, distinct hand. A further search in the archives revealed that the petition was successful.

'PASSING THROUGH'

The New Minority

By MARILYN HOLMES
A-J Special Correspondent

A Bureau of Land Management cutback in grazing on public lands in southeastern New Mexico has ignited the latest uproar among the once reticent members of the agriculture community.

Farmers and ranchers have at last become outspoken, raising their voices about everything from foreign trade policy to regulations requiring toilets for workers in the field.

Mind you, those formerly soft-spoken and still tough individualistic types never wanted to go public. They were content to mind their own business, tending to their land and livestock, and avoiding the hub-bub of mainstream life.

FOR YEARS, THEIR big city neighbors unfairly categorized them as ignorant bumpkins, unwise in the ways of social rhetoric. Those city smart alecs never saw a country businessperson in action, dealing expertly in the complex finances of the futures market or managing an operation sometimes representing a million dollar investment. Many of the younger "country cousins" were even receiving college educations.

True, these same financial wizards could be as tongue-tied as a kid at his first school play whenever the public spotlight swept in thier direction. Not too many years ago a photographer or reporter was hard-pressed to find a willing candidate to pose for something as simple as a harvest picture for the local newspaper. Country folks were even less willing to sit still for an interview. It wasn't that they were being catankerous. They were just downright shy.

Now that the rest of the world has started the business of minding everyone else's business, those same folks have come out swinging from the corner they were eventually backed into.

THEY MIGHT BE A minority, but they're a loud minority. They can now be found — en masse — at public hearings where sportsmen are demanding more open access and enhanced wildlife concerns on BLM lands. While another group like the environmentalists are instead recommending a wilderness designation for esthetic value, the farmers and ranchers are yelling that food production happens to be a mighty important concern, too.

The government caretakers have already been tearing their hair out while attempting to keep everyone happy. Now, they are confronted with the agriculture community, a new and boisterous group demanding not to be overlooked when the compromises needed in our complex society are handed out.

The world values rhetoric, and now there is a brand new form of it — country style.

Best of all, the rural folks are finding a common meeting ground with the city types who, from close association, have been forced to drop the image of the "ignorant" farmer with both thumbs stuck in his overalls. Those country folks are sharp.

While urban and rural populaces might not always agree, communication between these two worlds has never been better.

Japan Sheds 'Junk' Image With Quality Goods

(EDITOR'S NOTE—It used to be that the label "Made in Japan" stood for cheap and shoddy copies of goods produced in the West. No more. Here is a report on how Japan, in 20 years, switched from the junk man of Asia to a producer of high quality goods at low prices. But problems lie ahead.)

By TERRY ANDERSON

TOKYO(AP)—Pick up a camera or a calculator, look at a television in any American home. The chances are good it will say "Made in Japan."

In the past 20 years, the growth has helped boost Japan from one of the poorer countries in the world, with a per capita gross national product of $300 in 1956, to nearly the richest, with a per capita GNP this year of $10,000— roughly equal to the United States.

A nation's gross national product is the sum of all its goods and services.

In the 1950's and early 1960s, Japan was considered the "junkman of Asia" a place where cheap labor produced vast amounts of cheap goods, In the late 1960's and the 1970's, it became the craftsman of the world. A dedicated, educated and hard-working population, backed by an export-minded government, swamped the world with TVs, radios, autos, steel and other products, piling up billions of dollars of surpluses.

No matter how the U.S. or British or French governments complained about trade deficits, their people just kept buying Japanese products because they were good and inexpensive.

A major factor in Japan's sprint from junk to quality goods was the necessity to rebuild an industrial base that was destroyed by American bombs in World War II. What it rebuilt was new and modern. Then came the Korean War and U.S. help in the rebuilding process.

But Japan's export dominance is being threatened now by rising labor, energy and capital costs; warnings of protectionism around the world; and severe competition from rapidly developing countries like South Korea, Taiwan and Brazil—nations bent on being the Japans of the 1980s.

Japan weathered the 1973-74 oil crisis and the later 50 percent rise in the yen's value against the dollar mostly by belt tightening—cutting costs and profits to the bone to keep from raising prices too much on Japanese products. But there's a limit to how much belts can tighten, and Japanese and foreign economists here agree that there's not much Japan can do to stay competitive in many of the industries it now dominates.

"We know we can't compete in some areas with countries like South Korea (where labor costs are one-third to one-half Japan's)," one government economist, who asked not to be named, said in an interview.

"Our textile industry has been hurt badly. The Koreans are even taking shipbuilding contracts from us. Hong Kong and Singapore are making cheap electronics," he added. "So the government has decided we must move out of those areas and concentrate on the ones where we can stay ahead."

The Ministry of International Trade and Industry has mapped out a blueprint for the 1980s calling for a complete restructuring of Japanese industry. It says Japan must stop exporting the products of labor and start the exporting of products of knowledge.

MITI forecasts that the "core" of Japanese exports in the 1980s will be "knowledge-intensive and high value-added" products like computers, other electronic goods based on integrated circuits, industrial plants and fine chemicals.

This is not to say that the Japanese will give up on automobiles, televisions, steel and shipbuilding, at least for the foreseeable future, U.S. officials, here said.

But the fastest-growing field is likely to be computers, where the government began two years ago giving direct subsidies to Japanese computer makers and funding research in the field.

Already, the six major computer makers produce machines judged equal to those of U.S. companies that were once far ahead. Japanese companies have taken over half the domestic computer market, 20 to 30 percent of the European market, and have even sold computers to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in the United States. Computers exports are growing at 30 percent a year, and are forecast to continue doing so through 1985.

Japan also is making rapid progress in the development of integrated circuits —"chips"—for other electronic products. They have already shown their ability to apply rapidly and efficiently new technology to mass production, and are now concentrating on many new consumer-oriented, high-technology items like video-tape recorders, microwave ovens, electromagnetic stoves, facsimile transmission and fiber-optics.

One of the most lucrative and fast growing new fields for the Japanese has been building entire industrial plants for export, on a "turn-key" basis. That is, the whole steel mill or processing plant is built here and shipped to another country, set up and the key turned over to the new owners, who start it up and begin producing.

Plant exports have leaped from $965 million worth in 1970 to $4.8 billion in 1975 and $9.8 billion in fiscal 1978.

A recent study by the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo on Japan's exports in the 1980s says that MITI's restructuring plan has so far worked well, and American businessmen can expect to face increasing competition in the 1980's in many industrial fields, including those mentioned as well as nuclear power plants, railway rolling stock and advanced railway systems, pollution control and many others.

Japanese dominance of the export market is not going to disappear, a U.S. official commented. "The products will change but Japan will still be on top," he said.

Base Station Standards Set For Antennas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Consumer Product Safety Commission has decided to develop a safety standard for base station antennas used in citizen's band radio.

The commission is concerned about electric shock hazards when these antennas accidentally contact power lines when people are installing or taking down the antenna.

According to commission estimates, 220 persons were electrocuted in such accidents in 1975, 275 in 1976 and another 220 in 1977.

"Typically, these accidents occur when the antenna contacts the power line while the antenna is being transported to the erection site or when it falls into a power line because it gets out of control of the persons who are putting it up or taking it down," the commission said.

The commission has already required warning labels on antennas to try and ease this hazard, but officials feel it would be more effective to impose a standard to insure that the antenna would not transmit a hazardous amount of electricity if it did contact a power line.

Currently the agency is seeking to develop such a safety standard for omnidirectional antennas and wants suggestions and comments from interested persons.

If you have a suggestion or want to participate in the process of developing the safety standard, write, by Aug. 12, to the Secretary, Consumer Product Safety Commission, 3rd Floor, 1111 18th St., Washington D.C., 20207.

ICC May Allow Bus Fare Cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission, responding to a petition from Trailways Inc., has proposed giving intercity bus companies more freedom to raise and lower fares without commission approval.

The ICC said Thursday it might consider allowing fare reductions of 10 percent to 30 percent below the previous year's fare level, limiting fare cuts to perhaps 30 days. The limit could prevent "predatory" reductions aimed at pushing competitors out of business. The reduction could be extended beyond 30 days if there was no evidence of predatory effect. The commission suggested that the amount of fare increases permitted without agency approval could be tied to increases in the federal government's consumer price index.

Potato Varieties Eyed For Better Market Times

During the 1940s, farmers from Idaho and other more northern states moved to West Texas to grow potatoes. Since then, a $20 million a year industry has developed.

Growing potatoes in Texas is not without its problems, despite advantages of fertile soil, ample land and irrigation water. One problem in particular, the marketing period for West Texas potatoes, can mean the difference between a nice profit and a break-even crop.

Research being conducted here by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station indicates promising news in the near future for West Texas potato growers. The work, being done at the Texas A&M University Agricultural Research and Extension Center, has as its goal the development of advanced potato varieties for West Texas growers.

Doug Smallwood, research associate here, and Dr. Creighton Miller of College Station, project leader, are working closely with potato breeders in North Dakota, Minnesota, Maryland, Idaho, Colorado, California, and Nebraska.

"Any varieties developed here," Smallwood said, "have to fit the growers' needs in these states, since seed for our area is produced in the northern part of the country."

The program to develop higher yielding, earlier-maturing Russet potatoes has been progressing steadily since 1973.

"We now have breeding lines that look quite promising," Smallwood said. One selection in particular, MnTX8-1 Russ, has a good yield and high protein content and shows some potential for this area he said.

"Fresh market Russets are the main type of potatoes on the High Plains," Smallwood said. "If we can hit the market just right, they will return more profit than other kinds.

"One of the main obstacles to growing potatoes," Smallwood said, "is the marketing period for our West Texas crop."

The marketing period for Texas potatoes often comes at the same time as the potato harvest in California and Washington, he said.

"If we harvest at the same time either of those states do," Smallwood said, "we can normally expect about $2-$4 per hundredweight less at the market place."

"This is just enough to lower a nice profit to a break-even crop, he added.

"We are trying to develop a higher yielding potato variety that can be harvested a week or so earlier than the varieties we now have," The TAES researcher said. Research indicates that some of the advanced potato lines have the potential to do this, he said.

"It usually takes 10-15 years to produce an end product," Smallwood said, "so we still have several years of testing and retesting to go.

"Another aspect of our breeding program," Smallwood reported, "is the movement of potatoes off the heavier soils onto the sandy soils in our area." The purpose of this research is to cut down on delays when rains make fields too muddy for potato harvesting, he said.

"Potato growers have been delayed from three days to a week when they couldn't get it the fields," Smallwood said. These delays can result in a big losses if the market drops, he added.

"On sandy soils," Smallwood said, "there is almost no delay caused by rains." If a farmer gets rain at night, he can often be back in the fields by midafternoon the following day, he said. Several area potato growers are having good results on sandy soils, he reported.

"Producers are playing for high stakes raising potatoes," Smallwood said. The estimated cost of producing an acre of potatoes is between $800-$900.

"So if we can develop new varieties to increase yields, grow on sandy soils, and reach maturity a few days earlier," Smallwood concluded, "some of the risk can be removed."

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

A FOUR-CENT INCREASE IN THE 1979 grain sorghum target price, putting it at $2.34 per bushel, has been announced by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The USDA said the action, based on "new information," was taken to comply with the legislative intent that the same cost of production formula be used to adjust the sorghum target price as is used to adjust the corn target price.

But Elbert Harp, executive director of the Grain Sorghum Producers Association of Lubbock, says the increase still leaves the sorghum target price below where it should be established under the Agricultural Act of 1977.

Harp pointed out that Howard Hjort, the USDA's chief economist, admitted in a statement to the House Livestock and Grains Subcommittee about three or four months ago that the sorghum target would have to be raised.

HJORT INDICATED AT THE TIME that the sorghum target would be hiked to around $2.35 per bushel. Later, Harp said, the USDA indicated this was too high and pointed to a maximum sorghum target of $2.32 to $2.34.

That was about the time the GSPA began calling for a congressional investigation into the matter. A private hearing was held with lower echelon USDA officials, Harp said, and they indicated they "had made up their minds that they weren't going to change it at all."

This was about two months ago. The USDA at the time, Harp said, revealed cost of production figures and data which were supposed to substantiate the department's arguments.

Harp said the USDA used up-dated figures for January and April. These, however, were both "after the fact," Harp said, since the USDA is required by law to announce the feed grain program in November for the following year.

"EVEN SO, THE HIGHEST FIGURE they (department officials) had was the January figure," Harp said, "and if they had used that the sorghum target would be $2.48 to be in proper relationship with corn.

"And the lowest figure was the April figure and if that had been used the sorghum target still would be $2.40," or six cents above the new level just announced by the USDA.

When the USDA had indicated earlier that it wasn't going to change the sorghum target after all, the GSPA insisted on congressional hearings, which tentatively were scheduled for July 10.

Harp said the USDA is trying to avoid those hearings by raising the target by four cents per bushel and announcing that the increase, based on "new information," is being granted to be consistent with the law.

"OF COURSE, WE HAVE BEEN ARGUING all along that the USDA was not following the law in the setting of the sorghum target," Harp commented, "so the department now at least seems to have acknowledged that much."

Harp said the GSPA had known for about 10 days prior to the latest target price announcement that the four-cent hike was going to be made.

"We're continuing to ask for congressional hearings," Harp said. "We certainly are happy to get the four cents, but the thing is they (USDA officials) still are ignoring the intent of the law and are using whatever they pull out of the air to try to pacify us."

Harp said the GSPA is simply taking the USDA's own figures, plugging them into the target price formula, and coming up with a minimum-maximum range of $2.40 to $2.48.

A hearing tentatively is scheduled before the House Livestock and Grains Subcommittee around July 18, Harp said. He said Reps. Kent Hance of Lubbock and Charles Stenholm of Stamford, both members of the subcommittee, are pursuing the matter.

Grain Man Suggests Railroad Conspiracy

PERRYTON, Tex. (UPI) — An acute shortage of railroad hopper cars is imperiling millions of bushels of a bumper wheat crop that must be dumped on the ground, an elevator owner said this week.

Kenneth Allen, owner of Equity Elevators, said his situation has deteriorated in recent days.

"It's just worse. We're piling wheat on the streets all over town," Allen said, adding that wheat farmers are only about half way toward harvesting this year's bountiful crop. Nearly a million bushels have been dumped on streets in Perryton, he said.

Before harvest is complete, he predicted, "several million" more bushels will be outside grain bins because of rail car shortages.

Allen said there is no way to cover wheat stored outdoors. "About all you can do is get a good spot that drains and do a lot of praying that you don't have abnormal rains and that you get transportation soon," he said.

Allen said his own problem is compounded this harvest because he was unable to procure enough hoppers last season to move all the previously harvested grain.

He is candid in his dissatisfaction with Santa Fe Railway and hints that a conspiracy may be about.

Allen says he has conducted a "letter conservation" with John S. Reed, the line's chairman of the board in Chicago, but without satisfaction. He said Reed acknowledged in a telegram that the Panhandle area was short about 385 railroad cars as of Feb. 1. However, Allen says his company alone was short 855 ordered cars on Feb. 1.

"I think Reed is certainly a high integrity man and I don't mean to imply that he is lying. But I'm sure someone furnished him these figures and someone's trying a real big coverup," the businessman said. "I just think it's a crying shame that the chairman of the board of Santa Fe can't have accurate information furnished to him."

A Santa Fe spokesman, who declined to be identified, responded Tuesday from Chicago.

"True, there is a grain car shortage. No one has been getting as many cars as they might want, including Mr. Allen. However, we have been distributing cars on an equitable basis and he has been getting his fair share right along with everyone else," the spokesman said.

In the meantime, says Allen, the farmers of his region face a financial bath following a bumper harvest.

"Our farmers have had some bad crops the last few years and some bad prices and now they raise a pretty good crop and get some decent prices. But if you can't get it to market, you can't sell it," he said.

He predicted the wheat "could just set here and spoil."

Allen also criticized the Interstate Commerce Commission which he said had been notified of his problem.

"The ICC hasn't done much. I'm not sure they can. I'm not a lawyer, but if they can't I would sure wonder, for Godsakes, what the taxpayers are keeping the ICC for. They don't say they won't do anything, but they don't say they will," he said.

The grain car shortage was anticipated by Santa Fe officials in June and shortages have been reported this summer at Amarillo and near Abilene, where meat also was dumped on the street.

In June, Santa Fe vice president J. R. Fitzgerald of Amarillo said the problem would continue in future harvests. He attributed the shortages to a continued "heavy export movement of grain" and a difficult winter that caused delays in returning cars to lines from off-line points. Delays also occurred because of torrential floods in the South, Fitzgerald said.

Texas Crops, Harvests Given Boost By Hot, Dry Conditions

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Hot, dry weather is maturing crops in South Texas and helping the North Texas harvest picture — but some West Texas pastures are beginning to need a little rain.

The nation's first bale of cotton was harvested in Hidalgo County the past week, according to Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Cotton is maturing rapidly along the Coastal Bend as well as in the Rio Grande Valley. Sorghum harvesting also is in full swing in the Valley and the Coastal Bend and the corn harvest is about to start.

An above-average wheat harvest is almost complete in North Texas, except for the Panhandle and South Plains, where harvest operations still are in full swing, Pfannstiel said.

Freestone peaches continue to move to market in large quantities in Gillespie County. The crop is one of the county's best ever in quantity and quality, he said. Peaches also are being harvestsed in other parts of the state, with an excellent crop coming in in Far West Texas and the Trans-Pecos region.

Cantaloupes, watermelons and honeydew melons are being harvested in South Texas, with some shortage of trucks for hauling due to the truckers' strike. Melons are late in other regions, with a poor crop in prospect in East Texas, Pfannstiel said.

Haying continues at full pace over the state, Pfannstiel, said with good yields and quality. Some second and third cuttings of alfalfa are being cut and baled for hay in West Texas.

Grazing continues good over most of the state although grass is short in parts of West Texas due to lack of moisture. Grasshoppers continue to ravage some rangelands and spray programs are under way.

Reports from district Extension agents showed the following conditions:

PANHANDLE: Most crops are doing well in the hot weather. Wheat harvesting is half-complete in southern counties and well under way in the north. Yields are above average. Second cuttings of alfalfa are being baled. Recent rains have boosted pastures, but grasshoppers are heavy.

SOUTH PLAINS: Crops are doing well but most plantings are late. Some spotted stands of cotton and have been replanted to soybeans and sunflowers. Wheat is half cut, with good to excellent yields. Some second cuttings of alfalfa are being harvested. Grazing is good but grasshoppers are a problem. Control programs are active.

ROLLING PLAINS: Wheat is harvested, with good to excellent yields. Most crops are doing well, though late. Heavy grasshopper infestations are causing widespread damage. Spray programs are active in some counties. Livestock and forage are generally good.

NORTH CENTRAL: Small grains are almost cut with best-ever wheat yields of 32 bushels per acre. Insects are heavy in cotton, late this year. Early sorghum is blooming and needs rain. The peach harvest is excellent and pecans continue to look good. Grasshoppers are heavy in ranges.

NORTHEAST: Most crops are doing well but need rain. Beans and peaches are being harvested, and haying continues. The small grain harvest is about complete. Livestock are in good shape but pastures and ranges need rain.

FAR WEST: Irrigated crops are growing well with hot, fair weather, but dryland crops and forages need moisture. Third cuttings of alfalfa are producing good yields. Excellent peach and apricot crops are being harvested, and onion and cabbage harvesting continues. The small grain harvest is complete.

WEST CENTRAL: Hot, dry conditions are putting young crops under stress. Most small grains have been harvested, with generally good yields.

Scientists Study Crops' Built-In Weed Control

Sunflower plants apparently have a built-in chemical weed control.

Although the exact chemicals are not yet identified, greenhouse tests by U. S. Department of Agriculture plant physiologist Gerald Leather showed that extracts of sunflower plants inhibited the growth of many of "our toughest weeds" by 50 to 75 percent.

Jimsonweed, johnsongrass, curly-dock, ragweed, purslane, wild mustard, and lambsquarters are some of the weeds inhibited in the USDA tests.

Leather is USDA's lead investigator of possible agricultural uses for allelopathy, the natural ability of some plants to harm others by secreting toxic substances.

Little is known of the allelopathic powers of crop plants says Leather. However, understanding how and where it works is potentially important to farming. Man-made herbicides, most of which are petroleum-based, are rising in price.

Leather's work could help scientists give other crops built-in-weed control, through plant breeding or genetic engineering. Safer and more stable herbicides, is another possibility. And the use of several allelopathic plants in crop rotations may one day provide long-term weed suppression, says Leather, who is with the Weed Physiology and Growth Regulator Unit of the Plant Disease Research Laboratory at Frederick, Md.

The USDA experiment also showed that, while the germination of some seed of weeds were inhibited by sunflower extract, others were stimulated to germinate.

"This may lead to sprays that kill weeds by 'waking up' their seeds in the soil just prior to winter," says the scientist.

One-year field tests on the effects of sunflowers on weeds have not shown the dramatic results Leather observed in the greenhouse. It may take several growing seasons for sunflower or other allelopathic plants to build up enough toxin to suppress weeds. The field tests will continue.

Some varieties of sunflower have more effect on weeds than others, says Leather.

Other than sunflower, outstanding allelopathic plants are oats, walnut trees, some varieties of cherry and cucumber, and many wild plants. Crop residues or stubble left after harvest can also sometimes be toxic to plants. Some scientist believe that allelopathic effects from stubble may explain the unproductiveness of some intensely cropped lands.

Leather does not yet know how sunflowers deal with weeds. However, in another experiment he found that a substance given off by the roots inhibited the growth of pigweed by 65 percent. The scientist is also looking for other allelopathic plants that may be candidates for future agricultural uses.

LAKE WASHINGTON—The setting sun highlights this "Christmas tree," or producing oil well, at Aminoil USA's Lake Washington field in southern Louisiana. The equipment designation refers to the valve cluster controling flow from the well. Aminoil recently announced a new discovery at the Lake Washington field, with estimated recoverable reserves placed at 2 million barrels.

Major Solar Energy Electrical Project Scheduled By Dallas-Based Corporation

DALLAS (Special) -Airline passengers at Dallas-Fort Worth Airport will get a bird's-eye view of a major solar energy demonstration during the coming year.

The "sparkle" beneath the air traffic control tower will be an estimated $650,000 solar photovoltaic concentrator system supplying 27 kilowatts of electricity plus hot water to the central utility plant.

E-Systems Inc. of Dallas was one of nine firms selected recently by the U.S. Department of Energy to install, test and demonstrate a solar total energy system. E-Systems Energy Technology Center of Garland will build the airport project.

"We look upon these awards as a significant step forward in our program to demonstrate the practical application of photovoltaic power systems, said John Deutsch, acting undersecretary of energy.

"Because of the exceptionally high quality of the proposals submitted to DOE, we more than doubled the original $10 million allocated to the program, announcing awards totaling some $21.5 million," Deutsch said.

The proposals were selected for negotiation on a competitive basis from among 29 applicants as part of the Phase II (fabrication) effort of the national program for technology development in photovoltaic solar energy conversion.

The winning proposals are based on technical evaluation, cost-versus-benefit analysis, a 1986 system break-even cost goal and program diversity. In addition to demonstrating practical application of the power systems, the projects will provide DOE with technical and non-technical data on the performance of a range of systems.

"Although this projeet has national implications, we are particularly pleased to be able to demonstrate our solar research and development in our own backyard," said John W. Dixon, chairman and president of the electronics firm.

The nine projects varied in funding from a low of $480,000 to a high of $6.5 million. E-Systems proposed a relatively small demonstration to improve the ratio of tax dollars to technical data gained, Dixon emphasized. Positive results can be followed with expansion of the system to accommodate larger demand for power.

E-Systems Energy Technology Center received about $300,000 in 1978 to design a "Fresnel Photovoltaic Concentrator" for the airport, and then competed for the fabrication phase. The 12-month fabrication phase would be followed by a 24-month operation phase to complete the deomonstration program.

The central utility plant provides steam, chilled water and electricity to the individual passenger terminals for space heating-cooling and hot water.

The proposed system will utilize an innovative linear Fresnel lens concentrator to focus incident sunlight at a concentration ratio of 25 to 30 suns upon the most efficient silicon photovoltaic cells currently available for such applications.

"Because the solar outputs are well below the continuous base load requirements of the plant, neither electrical nor thermal storage will be required, and virtually none of the solar-generated electric or thermal energy will be wasted," explained E-Systems officials.

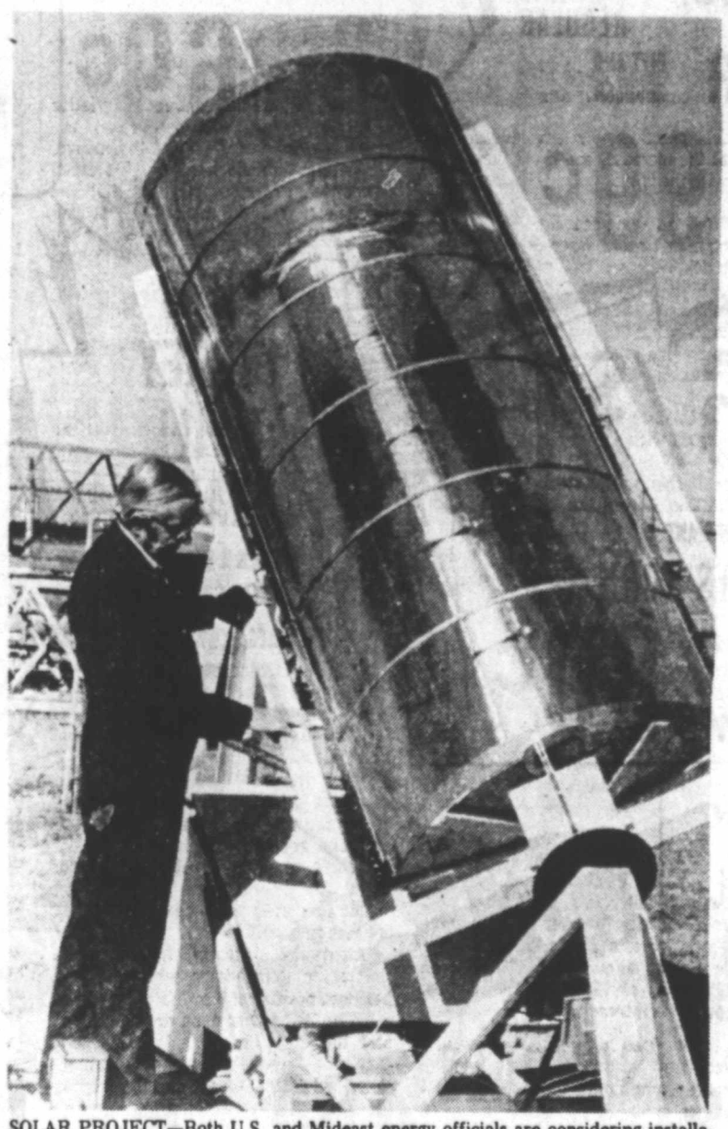
The system's electrical output would be inverted to AC power and used by small motors and lights within the plant. The thermal output would be used to preheat boiler feedwater within the plant.

The multitude of prisms on the plastic lenses covering the solar collectors are expected to create a sparkling effect to passengers viewing the multitude of collectors.

The system is appropriate for applications in the 150 to 500 degrees Fahrenheit temperature range for heating-cooling of buildings, pumping water, water desalination and producing electricity.

A similar system, 16 times larger than the Dallas-Fort Worth project, has been proposed by E-Systems to provide electricity for two Saudi Arabian villages.

The systems have the potential for use in a wide variety of commercial, agricultural, industrial and institutional facilities, including schools, airports, hospitals and utility substations. Peak electrical generating capacities for photovoltaic systems range from 20 to 500 kilowatts, depending on the number of collectors.



SOLAR PROJECT—Both U.S. and Mideast energy officials are considering installation of this type solar energy system for heating and cooling of buidings, pumping water, water desalination and producing electricity. The covering lens of the fully tracking collector is made from plastic and contains a multitude of tiny prisms concentrating sunlight on either silicon photovoltaic cells or on a fluid-bearing pipe.

THE ROUSTABOUT

By RAY WESTBROOK

ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY is not the only prerequisite for enhanced recovery in the Kelly-Snyder field of Scurry County, according to a report by Chevron U.S.A. Inc.

The world-famous field, which computers say produced its billionth barrel of oil at 1 p.m., June 21, was discovered Sept. 7, 1948. It has proved to be one of the nation's largest reservoirs of petroleum, with an estimated 1.1 billion barrels of oil still "in place."

However, a much more effective restraint than technological limitations is also "in place," holding the field's production below its present potential.

Imposed by the "higher wisdom" of the legislative and executive branches of government, the price controls which prevent further expansion of production in the field apparently have been sufficiently restrictive of business freedom to satisfy even the radical judicial wing.

Expanded production in the field is currently dependent upon a sophisticated but costly carbon dioxide injection program. Considered by industry to be the largest undertaking of its kind, the project was begun in the Kelly-Snyder field in 1972, and has greatly increased the field's recovery prospects, according to Chevron engineers.

The field, which consists of a Canyon reef formation 20 miles long and six miles wide, is operated under a unit known as SACROC (Scurry Area Canyon Reef Operators Committee).

STAN WALKER, SACROC UNIT petroleum engineer, describes the field's ultimate amount of recoverable oil as a function of technology and economics.

He reports that only 19 percent, or 400 million barrels, of the initial 2.1 billion barrels contained in the field would have been recovered without fluid injection for maintenance of pressure in the Canyon reef limestone.

Because of a water injection project instituted in 1954, potential recovery was elevated to 44 percent—930 million barrels.

As a result of expanding the project and providing carbon dioxide injection for enhanced oil recovery, the field has to date yielded over 47 percent—1 billion barrels.

Apart from any new programs by SACROC, ultimate recovery is expected to be approximately 1.2 billion barrels—56 percent.

"However, even greater recovery would be possible if government price and taxing policies permitted increasingly costly, diminishing-return investments at SACROC," Walker said.

He notes that further infill drilling (spacing wells at closer intervals) could capture from 2 to 8 percent more of the original oil in place. Also, carbon dioxide could be injected into wells now devoted exclusively to waterflooding, after waterflooding is complete.

Such a "tertiary" recovery program might squeeze another 6 percent of original oil from the Kelly-Snyder field, Walker said.

All totaled, recovery from the field, including tertiary flooding, could approach 70 percent of the oil in place, or nearly 1.5 billion barrels of crude.

"These last 300 million barrels would certainly be costly barrels, but would be comparable in price to equivalent energy from foreign oil and alternative energy sources," Chevron states.

THE OIL COMPANY indicated the economics of further enhanced recovery efforts are currently unfavorable at SACROC because of federal price controls on domestic crude.

"Today, because of the controls, SACROC must sell all of its oil for $6.13 a barrel, as compared to the world price of about $18. And, the cost of oil produced by tertiary methods would start at $20 a barrel."

Price controls forced SACROC to drop consideration of additional enhanced recovery efforts two years ago when production slipped below a level required by government formulas for higher, "upper tier" prices on any of the field's production.

"At lower tier prices, SACROC couldn't economically justify—and therefore stopped—any further infill drilling. For the same reason, some CO2 is not being injected in volumes originally planned. 'Workovers' (small improvements to existing wells to increase production) were held to a minimum. And all thoughts of tertiary applications were necessarily put aside," according to Chevron.

"THE ECONOMICS ARE SIMPLE," Walker said. "At this advanced stage of the CO2 program, it takes an additional 12,000 cubic feet of the gas daily to produce an additional barrel a day of oil. That much CO2 costs us $6. Since we're only allowed $6.13 for a barrel of oil, and since only $5.10 is left after royalties and taxes are paid, we'd lose $1.03 for each barrel produced. We cannot proceed on that basis."

Chevron reports that, while SACROC could have applied to the Department of Energy for special pricing treatment, the field's owners have chosen not to do so "because of the meager benefits available," and because a virtual surrender to DOE of operational control would have followed.

"Nor can SACROC expect, in the near term, any benefit from President Carter's plan to phase out domestic crude oil price controls, because SACROC wouldn't be affected until sometime in 1980," the company said.

Even then, provisions of windfall profits tax legislation now being considered by Congress could prohibit additional development, Walker said.

Tenneco Tests Offshore Area

HOUSTON (Special) -The completion of testing on Block 642 in the Baltimore Canyon area of the Atlantic Ocean has been announced by Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production, with the fourth and final test producing oil from a very thin zone.

Tenneco emphasized that neither the fourth test nor the first, which was productive of natural gas from another thin zone, is sufficient to justify commercial development of the lease. Only additional drilling and testing on Block 642 and adjacent leases can determine whatever commercial significance there might be.

A four-hour test of a zone between 8,318 and 8,321 feet produced 48.4-gravity oil at the rate of 630 barrels per day through a 10/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 900 pounds per square inch.

The second test (between 12,730 and 12,764 feet) produced an insignificant amount of natural gas. The third test (between 12,675 and 12,698 feet) produced gas at a rate of 1 million cubic feet and 500 barrels of salt water per day.

Commissioners Give Approval To Unit

AUSTIN (Special) -The Railroad Commission has authorized operation of a 1,139-acre oil-producing sector of Fisher County as a unit and inititation of a waterflood program there that is expected to yield an additional 1,365,000 barrels of oil which otherwise would not be produced.

Chairman John H. Poerner and Commissioners James E. "Jim" Nugent and Mack Wallace approved the unitization-secondary recovery application of Texas Pacific Oil Co. during a recent conference on Oil and Gas Division matters. The action established the Pardue (Canyon sand) Unit, Pardue (Canyon sand) field.

The field was discovered in 1949 and has produced more than 2.3 million barrels of oil. Testimony at the hearing on the Texas Pacific application indicated the field, although 95 percent depleted, can produce 1.3 million-plus more barrels of oil if operated as a unit with the proposed secondary recovery program.

The West Central Texas field has 10 producing wells, making four barrels daily per well.

The commission also has reduced the most efficient rates of production assigned to two oil fields in Southeast Texas and one in West Texas in its continuing program to bring permitted output in line with actual deliverability of wells and fields as reservoirs are depleted.

Affected by the action of the commissioners were the Mercy field in San Jacinto County, Gillock, South field in Galveston County, and Claytonville (Canyon lime) field in Fisher County.

Operators of the fields—Shell Oil Co. at Mercy, Amoco Production Co. at Gillock, South, and General Crude Oil Co. at Claytonville—requested reductions in the most efficient rates of production (MER).

The 2,200 barrels per day MER of the Mercy field was cancelled and the field was assigned an allowable on the basis of the yardstick rate not to exceed 133 barrels of oil daily per well. Discovered in 1942, the field is now in the late stage of depletion with only four active wells. The field has produced more than 13.1 million barrels of oil.

Mercy field produces from the 8,260-foot interval of the Wilcox sand.

The commission pared the MER of the Gillock, South field to 3,800 barrels daily from 6,600 barrels per day. The field produces from the Big Gas sand at approximately 9,000 feet. It was discovered in 1948. Thirty-eight of the field's 64 oil completions are not producing. The active wells have a total allowable of 3,779 barrels daily.

Technical Hearing Director Billy D. Thomas, who conducted commission-called review hearings on MERs of the two fields in early May, recommended the revisions.

In the Claytonville (Canyon lime) proceeding, the commission agreed with Senior Staff Geologist Bill E. Watson's recommendation and reduced the field-wide MER to 5,000 barrels of oil daily from 11,500 barrels per day. Discovered in early 1952, the field is regarded as being in a mature state of depletion. To date, it has produced more than 48 million barrels of oil.

In mid-May when Watson conducted a public hearing of the Claytoville MER, the field had 20 flowing, 16 pumping, one gas lift, 24 shut-in, and seven injection wells. The field has been produced as a unit since 1960.

Domestic Rig Activity Up From Decline

TULSA, Okla. (Special) -U.S. Onshore drilling activity, nosing up from a five-month slide, ought to match or beat 1978's performance if government doesn't intervene with more disincentives, according to the Oil and Gas Journal.

A scramble for land rigs might even develop during the second half, predict some of the nation's bit manufacturers, operators, and drilling contractors.

The active rotary rig count has posted gains during the past five consecutive weeks.

The land and offshore total stood at 2,000 June 4, compared with a 1979 low of 1,929 April 16, according to Hughes Tool Co.'s weekly count. The Houston-based bit manufacturer's weekly tally had hit a 22-year high of 2,385 during the last week in October.

Although most industry spokesmen believe drilling will pick up during the second half, they don't agree on what caused the rig count to drop earlier this year. What triggered the decline in one onshore province may have had no effect elsewhere, the Journal reports.

Generally, though, these reasons are cited for the earlier slowdown in drilling:

—Increasing uncertainty over crude oil price decontrol and the debate on President Carter's proposed excise tax on crude oil.

—An exceptionally wet first quarter which hampered drillsite preparation and rig movement in some parts of the country.

—The natural gas surplus and confusion over certification and pricing provisions under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

—A corresponding decline in cash flow for some operators.

—A low year-end utilization rate for the land rig fleet, which convinced some operators they needn't keep rigs under contract during the first quarter to assure availability later.

The traditional first quarter drilling slump and higher drilling and completion costs also have been blamed for some of the slack activity.

While onshore drilling dropped, U.S. offshore activity remained relatively steady, according to industry figures. That's attributed mainly to continuing strong rig demand in the Gulf of Mexico.

The Almanac
TODAY IN HISTORY

By United Press International

Today is Sunday, July 8, the 189th day of 1979 with 176 to follow.

The moon is approaching its full phase.

The morning stars are Venus and Mars.

The evening stars are Mercury, Saturn and Jupiter.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Cancer.

American capitalist John D. Rockefeller was born July 8, 1839.

On this day in history:

In 1835, the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia cracked while being rung during the funeral of United States Chief Justice John Marshall.

In 1951, Paris celebrated its 2,000th anniversary.

In 1969, withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam began as 800 infantrymen arrived at McChord Air Force Base in Washington state.

In 1975, President Ford announced he would formally seek the Republican nomination for president in 1976.

A thought for the day: American naturalist John Burroughs said, "Life is a struggle, but not a warfare."

Passengers Lining Up For Train Adventure

SYDNEY, Australia (UPI) — Prospective passengers are already lining up for the final run of a great train adventure through central Australia pioneered by camel drivers from Afghanistan.

The "Ghan" won't make its final 1,000-mile trip from Adelaide to Alice Springs until November 1980, but seats at $105 to $135 are already being reserved.

"The Afghan Express" started in 1877 across what was then believed to be a drought area but turned out to be one of the most flood-prone regions in Australia.

A new line will reduce the historic 60-hour trip to a mere 22 hours.

Tooth Fairy Pillow Solves Sleeping Child Problem

By SHARI LEWIS

Would you like to create a Tooth Fairy Pillow to give to a little friend, or to sell to people you know?

Make or buy a tiny pillow, and sew a little pocket on the front. If you wish, the pillow and the pocket can be edged in lace. This is now a Tooth Fairy Pillow.

Here's how it works:

When a youngster loses a tooth, the loose tooth is put into the little pocket. During the dark of night, the Tooth Fairy comes creeping into the room to take the tooth and leave some money, right? Well, with a Tooth Fairy Pillow, the poor fairy won't have to lift up the child's head to get under the pillow in order to find the tooth and leave the cash. The fiary (he or she, as the case may be) simply reaches into the pocket, removes the tooth, and drops in the money.

If you like to sew, you might be able to turn a profit on these. Mothers will think the Tooth Fairy Pillow is a funny item, especially at Christmas, as a stocking stuffer.

YESTERDAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: Here's a game you can play all by your lonesome. All you need are a fistful of tiny men's shirt buttons or little dried peas. Put a button (or whatever) in the two circles that have an X. These buttons must not move. The object of the game is this: Place 10 other buttons into the circles, but follow these rules: Don't put more than one button into any given circle. You must not end up with more than two buttons in any straight line (whether it's up and down, sideways, or corner to corner). Twelve is the largest number of buttons that you can place in the circles.

Gasoline Supply 'Adequate' In Britain

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press Writer Louise Cook and her husband recently took a two-week trip to Britain which was planned before the gasoline shortage and included over 1,000 miles of driving. The trip brought familiar warnings of fuel shortages. Here is a report on what it is like hunting gasoline on the wrong side of the road.)

By LOUISE COOK

EGHAM, England (AP) — The prices are higher, the gallons are bigger and they call it petrol instead of gasoline over here, but the worries about finding fuel are the same as they are in the United States.

Headlines tell of service station closings, of dealers running out of allocations, of long lines and limited sales.

Two Americans on a recent two-week driving trip through England and Scotland — planned long before there was any talk about an energy crunch — found few problems buying gasoline.

But uncertainty about what would happen in the next city the next day made it easy to slip into the practice of "topping off" — a practice that has been blamed for some of the problems in Great Britain as well as in the United States.

Set out from Heathrow Airport — keep left, now; they drive on the other side of the road over here. It's the start of the spring Bank Holiday weekend, the British equivalent of the Memorial Day holiday and you have a full tank of fuel.

The agent at the rent-a-car office isn't particularly encouraging. "No, you can't pull into one of our bureaus and fill up if you run out," she says.

No matter. The road leading from the airport is lined with service stations. They all appear open. No lines.

Settle back with the afternoon paper. "Petrol shortage may put a damper on holiday travel," says the headline over a story that warns of supply problems and tells of dealers charging over a pound per gallon of gasoline. A pound is worth about $2.10; the gallons are imperial ones, each one equal to about 1.2 U.S. gallons. A Pound per imperial gallon would be just under $1.70 for a U.S. gallon.

Conflicting reports come from fellow hotel guests. "You'll be okay if you stay on the motorways," says one man. "Stick to the smaller roads. They have less traffic and less customers," advises a cab driver.

A rainy weekend keeps drivers — tourists and locals alike — to a minimum. Heading North, keep your eye peeled. Not only for unfamiliar directional signs, stray sheep that wander onto the road and warnings of approaching "roundabouts" — much more frequent than traffic lights at crossroads outside of cities. But also for petrol.

Four open stations. Five. Six. The tank of the small Avenger, a Chrysler car, holds enough gasoline to travel a minimum of 200 miles. You try to drive slowly, about 50 mph.

But the speed limit in Britain is 70 mph and fears about fuel have not made motorists slow down. It's easy to let the needle creep up, just so the car behind you isn't always on your bumper.

Another service station. But this one has a "closed" sign. The next one advises: "Regular customers only." Worry sets in. The tank is still three-fourths full. But what if ... You know panic buying is wrong. Panic buying causes shortages and long lines. But you vow to fill up at the next open station.

Never a day goes by in two weeks when you don't find at least half a dozen open service stations within the space of about 100 miles, even though some of them are limiting sales. But never a day goes by when you aren't reminded of the potential problem.

"I see you all managed to find enough petrol to get here," says the game warden at a park in the northeast of England as he greets a group of tourists, most from near the border with Scotland.

A bartender in a hotel on the west coast of Scotland, overlooking the Firth of Clyde, says it's all the fault of America, for using too much energy and all those big cars.

Just as in the United States, everyone talks about the gasoline shortage. And just as in the United States, no one seems to know how serious it really is. Tourist authorities worry about lost business, public officials urge conservation. And drivers learn to keep an eye peeled — just in case.

NO PETROL PROBLEMS HERE—Two Americans recently spent two weeks driving through England and Scotland. Although newspaper headlines there announced service station closings, dealers running out of allocations, long lines and limited sales, the tourists found few problems in buying the precious petrol, otherwise known as gasoline. TV Viewers Can See 'Double'

PARAMUS N.J. (UPI) — Television viewers who think they're seeing double could be — if they buy a new set the manufacturer calls the first dual-screen TV available in the United States.

The 17-inch diagonal color set has a four-inch diagonal black-and-white screen that can be superimposed on either a lower or upper corner of the big screen to allow viewers to watch two shows at once. The audio portion of the second program can be heard with a special set of earphones.

So you don't want to see double? A button can cut off the smaller picture. Pictures can be switched at will from small to large, and vice versa. The set can also be hooked to a video cassette recorder to simultaneously monitor and edit out unwanted commercials on a program being taped. The price tag: suggested retail of about $1,100.

The Act of Supremacy, separating the Church of England from Papal control, was partially enacted in 1559.

Summer Camps Aid Children With Health Problems

By JO-ANNE BYRNE

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — Camp is a magic word for kids. It can mean fun in the sun, swimming, horseback riding, a dizzy world of delights after a long cooped-up winter.

But most camps don't accept all children because some have health problems such as diabetes or asthma, or physical disabilities ranging from speech and hearing impairment to crippling disorders. Others are mentally retarded.

Those children must rely on specialty camps. They have one thing in common — an interest in providing a camping experience for kids who need it more than most.

At Camp Needlepoint, which accepts diabetic children, "it was the first time I realized I wasn't the only diabetic in the world," said Mo Farrell, a former camper and now assistant camp director.

Needlepoint is one of about 60 camps for diabetic children across the country. It is held at Camp St. Croix in Hudson, Wis., and accepts 125 to 130 children from the ages of 7 to 16.

Dr. Don Etzwiler, medical director, said diabetic children frequently suffer from psychological problems as well as diabetes-related restrictions and their parents suffer guilt feelings. In many cases, the children are overprotected.

Needlepoint gives the child an opportunity to take part in a group experience and to learn while doing it. "Once you've learned how to test your urine in the woods behind the bushes," Miss Farrell said, "you don't have too many apprehensions."

Etzwiler has seen an increased need for the camping experience in older age groupings and has begun a wilderness challenge program for young adults, 16 to 18. Three groups of eight or nine teenagers will backpack an canoe this summer in the Boundary Waters Canoe Area in northern Minnesota, Michigan's Isle Royale National Park and the Big Horn Mountains in Wyoming.

Camp Courge near Maple Lake, Minn., is one of those for physically disabled children and adults and retarded children who can be "mainstreamed." The camp, and a second in northern Minnesota, serve over 900 persons a summer aged 7 through senior citizen. The emphasis is on as much physical involvement as is possible for each individual.

"If they can benefit intellectually and are able to sit in a wheelchair a certain number of hours each day, they are appropriate for camp," said camp director Bob Polland.

The camp also has a program for persons with speech, hearing nd language disorders.
