Cold front could affect brush fire

ALBANY (AP) — Firefighters today were making progress against a raging brush fire 35 miles long and six miles wide, but officials said crews were preparing for a cold front to redirect the flames back toward Albany.

The fire by midmorning had scorched an estimated 135,000 acres, but there have been no serious injuries and most homes in the path of the roaring fire have been saved by the hundreds of firemen battling the blaze, Shackelford County officials said.

"It's been a miracle, so far," said Lawrence Winkler, information officer of the Shackelford County Emergency Management team.

Firefighters suffered only some minor burns although they kept in close contact with the fire during the night, Winkler said.

Texas National Guardsmen, ordered by Gov. Bill Clements to help local authorities battle the blaze, joined an estimated 15 West Texas fire deparments using 50 piees of equipment.

Nearly two dozen firefighters and four pieces of firefighting equipment from the Texas Forest Service were also dispatched to Albany today, officials said.

TFS Director Bruce Miles said today that a request also may be made later for National Forest Service air tankers based in Arkansas to spray the area with fire retardant chemicals.

By 9 a.m., winds that had gusted to 30 mph had died down, but National Weather Service forecasters said the calm precedes a shift in winds along the line of a cold front that was entering the area.

"That's probably why the winds have slacked off a little is because it's already there," said meteorologist David Martin. "But even though the winds are going to turn around, they shouldn't be as strong behind the front as what they saw through the night."

Martin predicted breezes at 15 to 20 mph this afternoon through the oil and ranching counties of Shackelford and Callahan Counties.

Army National Guard spokesman Maj. Ed Komandosky said two bulldozers and a helicopter were sent along with officers and men who went to help battle the blaze.

'What they're concerned about now is that norther that's poised to come through there,' Komandosky said from the Guard's state headquarters in Austin. "It will change the direction of the wind and push it back toward the town of Albany."

He said guardsmen were using bulldozers this morning to build firebreaks in anticipation of the wind shift to protect the town of about 2,500 people in North Central Texas, about 150 miles west of Dallas.

Some of the fire equipment was lost to the roaring blaze, mainly because firefighters were working in darkness, Winkler said.

At times during the night, Winkler said, the blaze could be seen as far as 35 miles away.

Firefighters gathered around homes in the path of the inferno to keep the fire away.

Some children were evacuated from homes in the path of the blaze, but Winkler said, "Most people stayed there to fight the fire."

At least one home, some mobile homes and outbuildings were destroyed during the early hours of the blaze Thursday night, authorities said.

Nervous Albany residents had watched during the night as the glow of the approaching fire got closer, but there were no evacuations before winds shifted.

Red Cross officials sent units from Abilene and Fort Worth to provide food and refreshments for the firefighters.

No shelters were set up because families that moved away from their isolate rural homes chose to stay with friends, said Red Cross spokeswoman Cheryl Parks said.

Clements called out about 90 guardsmen Thursday night.

Two rescuer groups 'study lines' for movie deals

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

In the movie rights derby for the Jessica McClure story, a competing group of rescuers has formed an association and is asking other volunteers to join them in their legal commitment to Hollywood producer Larry Spivey.

The news, announced Thursday at a Midland Hilton press conference, follows the earlier banding together of 11 Midland police, fire and paramedic personnel who led or had integral roles in removing the girl from a southwest Midland water well.

The child, now almost 2 years old, fell into the well last October and spent 58 hours trapped 22 feet underground. Her plight diverted the nation's attention from stock market falls and Persian Gulf confrontations.

Chip and Cissy McClure, the girl's parents, are not interested in exploiting the story for their own profit, they have said. While the couple has not committed to a producer themselves, they have stated an intention not to stand in the way of the story being told.

Spivey, president of Highland Communications Group Inc., has spent much of the last 2½ months in Midland "getting to know the community," working mainly from a Hilton base, he said Thursday.

He was the producer of "Victims for Victims: The Theresa Saldana Story," a television movie that appeared on the NBC network in November 1984 and garnered a favorable review from the Los Angeles Times.

The association legally tied to Spivey includes 32 men, with invitations out to 41 others, he said. They have set a 7:30 p.m. Tuesday association meeting at the Hilton for other volunteers who would like to sign up.

Serving as president of the association is Kragg Robinson, chief of Robinson Rathole Inc. of Albuquerque, N.M.

Robinson diverted the firm's rathole rig from a nearby Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation project to dig much of the parallel shaft from which rescuers reached the child.

Attorney for the group is Rusty Ormesher of Dallas, a former Spivey associate who worked with the producer in an attempt to bring the Lenell Geter story to television.

Campaign shifts to Illinois; Dole denies rumors

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

CHICAGO — Presidential candidates foraged through delegate-rich Illinois today, with Republican Bob Dole denying rumors he was about to drop out and three out-of-state Democrats trying to win support away from a pair of favorite sons.

In Colorado, Gary Hart was indeed about to drop out of the Democratic race — for a second time. He left the race last May after disclosure of his relationship with model Donna Rice but then rejoined the campaign in December.

Hart, who failed to win any delegates in the primaries and caucuses to date, polled no more than 5 percent of the vote in any of the Super Tuesday primaries and lost his eligibility for further federal matching funds.

Dole said today in remarks to Illinois Farm Bureau leaders, "I want to make certain you understand I am in this race." Press reports had noted he had taken his television ads off the air in Illinois and had drastically cut his campaign staff.

Noting those reports, he said today, "It's hard to focus on the issues sometimes because the press won't let us do that. They would rather write about how many staff you reduced your numbers by. I never thought that a campaign was a jobs program."

Five days before the Illinois primary, Democratic candidates participated in a televised forum Thursday night, but in contrast to many of their joint appearances, not a cross word was exchanged.

It was "all sweetness and light," said Illinois Sen. Paul Simon after the forum sponsored by WLS-TV and the Roosevelt Center for American Policy Studies.

A Washington Post-ABC News poll published today but conducted Wednesday, the day after the Super Tuesday primaries and six days before Illinois votes, said Vice President George Bush had the support of 58 percent of Republicans.

On the Democratic side, Simon was backed by 38 percent of the likely voters surveyed and Chicago-based Jesse Jackson had support of 33 percent. The figures for Simon and Jackson were well within the 8 percentage point margin of error.

Rep. Jack Kemp of New York ended his presidential bid on Thursday and said the idea of being the Republican candidate for vice president was "a very flattering and awesome thought."

Kemp declined to endorse any of the surviving candidates — Bush, Dole and Pat Robertson — describing them all as "Reagan conservatives."

Dole scotched rumors that he was about to join Kemp on the campaign sidelines.

"Bob Dole's no dropout," he said in a statement issued in Washington and Illinois. "I'm in this one to win."

Bush beat Dole in all 16 Super Tuesday primaries and now has 705 national convention delegates compared to 165 for the Kansas senator.

Dole did not say whether he would remain in the race if he loses to Bush in Illinois but an aide said, "I think it's clear to Dole that it's do or die."

Walker Railey

Calls cast doubts on Railey tale

DALLAS (AP) — Telephone transcripts casting doubt on former minister Walker Railey's actions the night his wife was almost choked to death were released by a prosecutor who said he wanted to "fill in the blanks."

The transcripts of two calls Railey made to his home answering machine the night of the attack and a note he wrote before attempting suicide 11 days later were made public Thursday by Dallas County Assistant District Attorney Norman Kinne.

In the transcripts, Railey describes his whereabouts in detail, gives times and warns his wife, Margaret "Peggy" Railey, to lock the garage door.

Railey, 40, told police he found his wife unconscious in the garage with a cord wrapped around her neck when he came home early April 21. Mrs. Railey remains in a coma.

Railey, senior pastor at First United Methodist Church and a rising star in the United Methodist Church, took an overdose of pills in an unsuccessful suicide attempt May 2, the day police said they planned to interview him.

After reportedly refusing 43 times to testify before a grand jury, he resigned and moved to San Francisco, leaving his wife and children, ages 2 and 6, in Texas.

Kinne said he didn't have the evidence to bring Railey to trial.

Technology best weapon, recovery conferees told

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

The domestic oil industry should look to efficiency and technology to counter the effects of long-term low oil prices and pave the road to recovery, says C.J. Silas, chairman and CEO of Phillips Petroleum Co.

Silas

In an address to the Permian Basin Oil and Gas Recovery Conference today Silas said the industry had rightly judged low oil prices as long term rather than a "bump in the road," and must learn to operate on that basis. "We can't hold our breath and count on a federal bailout," he warned.

He said the industry keeps saying the same things: repeal the Windfall Profits Tax, eliminate price controls on natural gas, open up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and other public lands for exploration. "Even if all of those were miraculously adopted tomorrow, the price of oil would still be $15," said Silas, "and we would still be looking for recovery."

Silas said oil men should quit talking so much about the coming oil crisis and how the government should help us in recovery and look instead at recovery driven by efficiency. "Let's spend the next 12 months focusing on what we can do to bring ourselves back to economic health," he appealed.

He described efficiency as simply making the best of what you have — eliminating waste of time, effort, motion and money.

"When I first started in this business the price of oil was $3 a barrel, and we made money because our costs were appropriate to prices at that level. We have got to get our costs back in line with prices," he said.

Trustees warn of political motives

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Four school district trustees not running for re-election May 7 sent a warning to Midlanders today to be wary of candidates whose concerns, they claimed, may hinge more on politics than on children.

Michael Conaway, who said last week he was running for the District 7 spot, also dropped out of the race today at the morning press conference citing overriding business and family responsibilities.

"The beauty of the current board is that we come up with a decision not because of special interests but in the interests of the child," said Midland Independent School District trustee Ron Britton.

The four men's concern stems from what they said they see as a potential for the body to become politicized in the wake of the single member district reorganization plan laid out by Federal District Judge Lucius Bunton.

The men said they wanted citizens to realize that electing as many as seven new board members this May will have a huge impact on the body — threatening the spirit of its continuity and tying it to specialized groups.

"MISD is seeing several special interest groups trying to pack the board with their candidates," Britton warned.

The first board elected under the single member district plan will have to deal with a myriad of problems not faced in the past, Conaway said. "I am confident that the seven members who are elected will be up to the task of dealing with the changes that are occurring."

Conaway explained that single member districts lend themselves to controlling boards who may exert power by being politically active.

What influence will the four men's assertion have on the school district's $11.5 million bond election?

Seven arrests made in Sam's theft ring

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A theft ring which operated in several states and targeted Sam's Wholesale Clubs — including the Midland location — was broken after a Midland investigator alerted authorities, a Harris County investigator said today.

Seven Houston area residents were arrested Sunday in North Richland Hills, a Fort Worth suburb, and have been charged with engaging in organized criminal activity, said Det. Sue Brietzke of the Harris County Sheriff's Department.

The arrests culminated a three-month investigation. The ring, which may have been in operation since July of last year, hit Sam's Wholesale Club locations in Midland; Houston; Fort Worth; Tallahassee, Fla.; Oklahoma City; Baton Rouge, La.; New Orleans; Memphis, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark.; Jacksonville, Fla.; and Orlando, Fla., Ms. Brietzke said.

The biggest haul was merchandise valued at more than $60,000, which was stolen from the Baton Rouge store, Ms. Brietzke said.

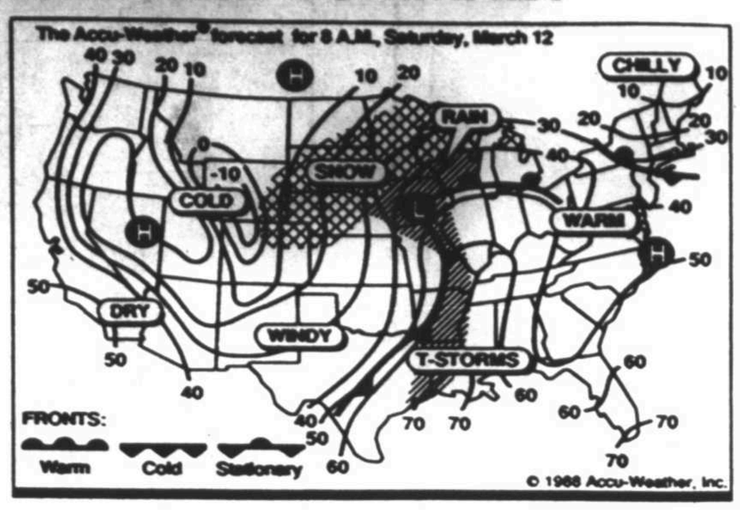
WEATHER SUMMARY



Cooler temperatures expected

From Staff Reports

Springlike weather across Midland-Odessa will vanish this weekend, but not the gusty winds that accompanied Thursday's near record high of 85 degrees, say forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight calls for fair skies and cooler temperatures with a low in the upper 30s. Winds will be from the northwest at 10 to 15 mph.

Saturday will be partly cloudy and much cooler with a high in the upper 50s. Winds will be from the north at 10 to 20 mph and gusty.

Thursday's high of 85 was 3 degrees cooler than the record of 88, set on that date in 1954. The overnight low of 42 was 32 degrees warmer than the record of 10, set on this date in 1948.

STATE

Widely scattered thunderstorms are forecast across East Texas and South Central Texas tonight, but most of the state is to have clear skies and windy conditions.

A slow moving cold and a low pressure system combined to generate strong, gusty southerly winds across most of the state. The cold front was located early today along a line from near Wichita Falls to near Midland. The low pressure system was located over Nebraskaa.

Forecasts called for generally clear to partly cloudy skies through tonight.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the mid 20s in the Panhandle to the mid 60s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 60s and 70s.

Early morning temperatures were in the 50s and 60s over North Texas and South Texas and in the 40s and 50s over West Texas except in the Panhandle where readings were in the 30s. Extremes ranged from 32 at Amarillo to 64 at Brownsville.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 62 at Wichita Falls, 58 at Fort Worth, 57 at Waco, 56 at Austin, 59 at San Antonio, 61 at Houston, 40 at Lubbock, 54 at Midland and 45 at El Paso.

NATION

A powerful storm system centered near the Nebraska-Wyoming line churned up snow and wind from the western Dakotas across western Nebraska and much of Wyoming and Colorado today.

Blizzard warnings continued today in eastern Wyoming and were issued today for northeast Colorado, northwest Nebraska and western South Dakota.

Many roads were closed in central and eastern Wyoming, where up to a foot of snow was on the ground, winds of 20 to 40 mph gusted to around 50 mph, visibility was near zero at times, and subzero wind chills were reported.

In Nebraska, the blizzard buffeted Kimball, Alliance, Chadron and Sidney, with snow totals ranging to 8 inches southwest of Scottsbluff and up to a foot near the Wyoming state line.

In western South Dakota, there were 10 inches of snow on the ground in Deadwood. More than 18 inches of snow was expected in the Black Hills by tonight, and 4 to 8 inches elsewhere in western South Dakota.

The high country of Colorado and Utah also received heavy snow, including up to 3 feet Thursday at elevations above 6,500 feet in Utah.

The storm system was expected to move east, spreading snow across much of the northern half of the Plains. Its effects, however, were felt as far west as Southern California, where northerly winds of 25 to 35 mph and gusts to 45 mph occurred in higher elevations.

Elsewhere, a few snow showers lingered in the mountains of Montana and Idaho. Rain extended from eastern North Dakota into northwest Minnesota, with snow over northeast Minnesota.

Dry weather prevailed east of the Mississippi River, across the southern third of the country, and west of the Rockies.

Late night temperatures were mostly in the teens and 20s over the northern and central Rockies and northern Nevada. Readings in the 20s were also common in the northern and central High Plains, and from the lower Great Lakes across the northern and central Appalachians.

Blizzard buries plains in 14-inch snow

Associated Press

A powerful late-winter storm lashed the High Plains with a blizzard and up to 14 inches of snow today, closing hundreds of miles of highway in Nebraska and Wyoming, and stranding hundreds of travelers.

In southwestern Nebraska, the snow pileup cut off the town of Kimball, whose residents opened their doors to about 600 stranded motorists.

The storm occurred 100 years to the day that the four-day Great Blizzard of 1888 began March 11 in the eastern United States. That storm claimed 400 lives.

The storm, stalled near the Nebraska-Wyoming line before moving east, pumped heavy snow and winds gusting up to 40 mph from the western Dakotas across western Nebraska and much of Wyoming and Colorado.

"It's going to continue to pack quite a punch as its spreads across Nebraska and South Dakota particularly," said meteorologist Pete Reynolds of the National Weather Service's Severe Storm Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Blizzard warnings were posted over eastern Wyoming, northeast Colorado, northwest Nebraska and western South Dakota, and winter storm warnings were posted through tonight for east-central South Dakota and southwest Minnesota.

Authorities closed 112 miles of Interstate 80 in western Nebraska and eastern Wyoming early today due to snowpacked roads and blowing snow, forcing hundreds of stranded motorists to find shelter. Almost 100 miles of other Nebraska roads also were closed.

"I think I could have stayed home because I'm not going to have any business, " said Kelly Cheshire, 22, a cashier at a major truck stop west of Cheyenne, Wyo. "It's bad."

Up to 14 inches of snow and buffeting winds kept almost 140 miles of Interstate 25 closed in Wyoming. An average of 6-12 inches of snow accumulated in the eastern third of the state.

Wyoming Highway Patrol officers spent most of Thursday searching for motorists on snow-closed roads, a patrol dispatcher said.

No major traffic accidents were reported in Wyoming or Nebraska, though the storm triggered scores of minor ones, authorities said.

"We've mostly had people sliding off the road. We're not even pulling them out. We're just getting people out of the vehicles," said Nebraska State Patrol dispatcher Alex Haberkorn in Scottsbluff.

"When people call and ask what it's like out here, I'm suggesting they stay home," he said.

All roads into Kimball were closed Thursday night, stranding at least 600 motorists in the town of 3,800, said Region 21 Civil Defense Director Dan Jenson.

He said residents were opening their homes to the stranded and overnight accommodations were found for hundreds by midevening, but the Kimball County Courthouse remained packed with people at 8:30 p.m.

"I've never seen so many goshdang people," Jenson said. "I really appreciate the citizens of the city of Kimball for opening their homes to strangers."

In Colorado, several hundred students in the Weld County School District RE3J made themselves comfortable for the night in school buildings when district buses couldn't get them home Thursday.

"We just have some awfully bad weather, just a whiteout (and) some of our roads now are plugging with drifts," said superintendent Bob Gudka, who had 250 to 300 of the district's 1,200 students kept overnight in several schools.

"The kids are having a ball," he said. As for the teachers, he joked, "we may have to get psychological help for them later on."

Roads across northern and eastern Colorado remained closed early today. The storm struck suddenly Thursday, dropping 6 inches of snow in Fort Collins in just two hours. About 16 inches of snow fell in Estes Park, Colo.

Up to a foot of snow fell in the Black Hills of southwestern South Dakota.

MOVIE

If allowed to produce the movie, Spivey has proposed that 5 percent of its profits go to the rescuer's association, 10 percent be devoted to Midland charities and the remainder go to his company.

"You can do good while doing well," he said of the arrangement.

In addition, a $200,000 pool of funds have been proposed to be apportioned among association members up front for their portrayal rights, he said.

His aim is to gather the rights of enough rescuers "so that nobody is left out," he said. Gathering a large number of rescuers into one group also would lead to greater truth and accuracy in the final product, he said.

While Spivey has said that about 30 other producers have pursued the story, six — not including Spivey — made presentations to the 11-man association comprised primarily of city employees.

That group's attorney, Martin Allday of Midland, said this morning the members formed together at the suggestion of Spivey himself, but chose not to cut a deal with the producer.

The association is comprised of Police Chief Richard Czech and Fire Chief James Roberts, several personnel from their departments, and two paramedics, including Robert O'Donnell, who pulled the child from the well.

According to Allday, "We found that he (Spivey) was going around to individual members of our association offering each member side deals that the others didn't know about.

"That didn't sit well with our people," he said.

Spivey late this morning could not be reached for comment on the charge.

While the producer has charged that the municipal group is exclusionary in not accepting other members, Allday said the final determination is up to the movie's writer.

"If the writer — whoever he may be — writes someone into the script who is deemed to be a central character, they will be asked to join the association on a fair basis," Allday said.

The attorney said association members have spent 50 to 60 hours over the past few weeks "interviewing and checking credentials."

"We are of the opinion that there are other producers who will treat Midland better. We just prefer to deal with people who have a long succession of Emmys and even Oscars," he said.

"We ought to have the right to sell our life's story, just as the other group has the right to sell theirs."

While the municipal association has yet to commit to any one producer, members have chosen two finalists — who Allday would not reveal — and passed their recommendation to the McClures for their consideration.

One of the original six producers considered, Tom Patricia of Robert Cooper Entertainment in Los Angeles, said Thursday he still hopes to be in the running.

"A network would be reluctant to make a guaranteed deal unless you had the rights of the people who were closest to it (the rescue)," said Patricia. "I think the McClures have to be part of the package in the network's eyes."

Patricia said that both the ABC and CBS networks indicated they would air the movie if the company he represents could put together the rights deal.

A second producer, former Midlander Terry Jastrow — who filmed "Waltz Across Texas" partially in the city — said Thursday he no longer is pursuing rights for the Jessica McClure story after not receiving the municipal employees' nod.

"We stepped up to bat and took our three swings," he said.

For the McClure's part, "It's a dilemma for them," their spokesman, Pete Snelson, said this morning.

"They do not want to be put in a position of capitalizing on the accident, but at the same time, they are appreciative of everyone who had a role in the rescue and appreciative of the community," he said.

"If and when a movie is done they would want the best producer to do the best movie," he said.

RACE

Dole canceled all television commercials in Illinois and ordered deep layoffs in his staff. An aide said the campaign was considering airing a 30-minute paid broadcast in the closing hours of the campaign.

One bright spot for the Kansas senator was the endorsement of the Chicago Tribune which said that Bush's identification with President Reagan, while a big help in Republican primary contests, might be a handicap in the general election.

"Nowhere have the Republican candidates asked or answered the kind of harsh questions the Democrats surely will raise in November about the Reagan administration, whose colors Mr. Bush has been able to wave more furiously than anyone else," the newspaper said in an editorial headlined, "Why Illinois Should Pick Dole."

Robertson, who also had a disappointing day on Super Tuesday, also ordered deep staff cuts.

"We want to stay lean and mean," he said, declining to give the number of employees laid off.

The vice president also was campaigning in the state in advance of Tuesday's primary. Illinois voters will elect delegates and also express their preferences in a beauty contest on the ballot.

Bush told a Governors Club luncheon in Chicago that he was "tired of being embarrassed" by scandals involving government officials and he called for establishment of a White House ethics panel.

Bush has refused, however, to criticize any administration officials, including Attorney General Edwin Meese III, who have come under investigation by grand juries.

Bush also appealed to Republicans for unity.

"We shouldn't get so negative we can't close ranks in the fall," he said.

The Democratic candidates stood in front of a banner that proclaimed "Unity '88" at the party dinner in a downtown hotel.

The hometown crowd saved its loudest applause for Simon and Jackson.

Simon, whose campaign is in debt, skipped Super Tuesday and is hoping a strong home-state showing will revive his campaign.

"I offer you not a 30-second commercial, but 30 years service to the people of this state and this nation," he told the dinner.

Jackson praised Simon's service in the Senate and then said, "I intend to keep him there."

RAILEY

"I feel like this may very well be the last anyone is hearing of this, and I want to fill in the blanks as much as I can," the prosecutor said.

The answering machine transcripts point out a number of discrepancies.

In one call, Railey said he was phoning around 10:30 p.m. and had a couple more hours of research to do at a Southern Methodist University library.

However, telephone company records indicate Railey made the call from his mobile phone at 12:04 a.m., and library employees couldn't recall seeing Railey when he claimed he was there, Kinne said.

Railey explained he had to leave the library when it closed and was on his way to another, and later called to say he was on his way home.

"I'm not calling on the private line because I know you're already asleep,' he said in that message, "but in case you get up with he kids, I just wanted you to know that I'm on my way home. It's 12:30. I'll be home by about 12:45. Love you, dear. Bye Bye."

Railey called police about 15 minutes later to report he had found his wife unconscious.

In the four-page suicide note, he described himself as "the weakest of the weak...the baddest of the bad...and the lowest of the low."

He said he was taking his life because "a demon inside my soul...has finally gotten the upper hand...(and) lured me into doing things I do not want to do."

Other parts of the note were published earlier. Railey has said the letter reflected his despondency.

Kinne also said he discovered that Railey spent more than an hour that night at the home of psychologist Lucy Papillon, who reportedly told grand jurors she and Railey were having an affair.

"There's a big gap between saying the man is not telling the truth about some things and saying therefore he strangled his wife," the prosecutor said. "I'm not saying that."

Kinne initially refused to release the transcripts, prompting ABC News to file suit. The suit failed but Kinne decided to release the material after an appeals court ruled it was up to local officials to decide the issue.

The telephone at Railey's San Francisco apartment is unlisted, and Railey could not be reached for comment Thursday. Railey leased the apartment with Ms. Papillon.

OIL

He said most any oil operator could have made money in the 1970s when oil prices were going up faster than costs, but those faced with falling prices have a tough job. He said technology could play a major role in reducing costs.

A former basketball star, who played with the Phillips 66ers that won the 1955 Pan Am Games, Silas offered the period of the late 1920s and 30s as an example of what a difference technology can make.

He explained: "From 1929 to 1931 the price of oil dropped from $2 to 10 cents, because of oversupply. Oklahoma declared a state of emergency and called out the National Guard to shut down oil fields. Texas had the same situation. Access to capital was very limited because of low oil prices. But during this time from 1925-1940 the U.S. discovered more oil reserves than at any time in its history. The reason was new technology."

Silas said it was a period that saw the development of much of the technology used today and allowed the industry to find oil better, faster and at less cost. Among the technological innovations developed in that period, Silas listed: seismic exploration, electric well logging, triconebits, slant drilling, gun perforations and innovations in offshore drilling.

Silas, who developed much of the innovative Ekofisk operations in the Norwegian North Sea and was honored by the Norwegian government for his innovative offshore practices, says computers can be the technology that allows the industry to cut costs and find oil better and cheaper today.

"We have just scratched the surface in computer science, and are just now beginning to bring all this scattered oil data together for more complete analysis," said Silas.

He also predicted that finding special geographical or technical niches would be the pattern for many oil companies in the future, along with designating specialized teams to develop prospects from conception to completion.

SCHOOL

The men agreed they will decide Tuesday, March 22, but said they were all in favor of it.

A new board, however, will have the option of not selling any bonds that are passed for sale in the May 7 election, Conaway said.

Britton said the number of registered voters in the new districts is not equal and had numbers to prove it, he said.

District 1 has 5,548 voters, District 2 has 3,333, District 3 has 6,276, District 4 has 4,287, District 5 has 7,223, District 6 has 9,716 and District 7 has 10,664, he said.

The seven seats up May 7 will have terms as follows, Britton said.

District 1 will have a one-year term; District 2 will have a two-year term; District 3 will have a three-year term; District 4 will have a two-year term; District 5 will have a three-year term; District 6 will have a three-year term; and District 7 will have a one-year term, Britton said.

Though the men are concerned, they nonetheless will not seek more terms. However, the message they said they wanted to leave was clear: know the candidates running and ask them if they are tied to any political or special interest groups.

THEFT

The alleged thieves used a simple — but effective — method to rob the giant warehouses, which sell brand-name merchandise at discount prices, according to Midland police Lt. Lannie Lee.

On Dec. 10, 1987, Sam's employees discovered that two persons inside the store had opened a carton, removed two high-backed office chairs, then re-packed the carton with 23 videocassette recorders and 38 telephones. The two then paid several hundred dollars for the "chairs," and left the store with merchandise valued at more than $10,000, Lee said.

Midland police were notified. Sgt. Dale Seago was assigned to the case and discovered a Houston man had flown into Midland International Airport, and rented a U-Haul truck similar to one which had been seen near the Sam's location at about the time of the theft, Lee said.

"We were notified by the Midland police — that's how we got started," Ms. Brietzke said.

Seago and Harris County authorities set up surveillance on the man, which eventually resulted in Sunday's arrests, Ms. Brietzke said.

Seago was on vacation and could not be reached for comment, Lee said.

The Midland case will "probably" be solved with the arrests of the persons who range in age from 19 to 34, Ms. Brietzke added.

Train derails

LOT, Belgium (AP) — A regional train derailed near the Brussels suburb of Lot today, killing one person and injuring 25, the railroad said.

The electrical wiring over the train was cut as a result of the accident, and all service between Brussels and Paris was temporarily suspended.

Police were investigating the cause of the derailment on the southern Schaarbeek-to-Binche run, said spokesman Louis Gilliaux of the SNCB railroad company.

Gilliaux said five people were seriously injured and about 20 suffered minor injuries. He did not have the identity of the dead person.

The injured were taken to several hospitals in the area.

Teen-aged 'thrill killer' state's youngest inmate

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — A 15-year-old boy convicted of killing a classmate with a baseball bat "to know what it was like" has been sentenced to life in prison, becoming the state's youngest prison inmate.

Rod Matthews could be paroled in 15 years under the mandatory sentence he received Thursday after being found guilty of second-degree murder in the Nov. 20, 1986, slaying of 14-year-old Shaun Ouillette.

Two former friends of Matthews testified he told them of planning the killing and took them to see Ouillette's body, which police did not find until nearly four weeks later in woods in Canton, a suburb 15 miles south of Boston.

Rod Matthews

Matthews showed no emotion when the verdict, reached after almost 10 hours of deliberations over two days by the Norfolk County Superior Court jury, was announced. Throughout the trial he had been expressionless, eyes downcast.

The decision satisfied neither the victim's mother, Jeanne Quinn, nor the defendants' parents.

Mrs. Quinn, carrying a portrait of her son and choking back tears, told reporters she had hoped Matthews would be convicted of first-degree murder, which carries a mandatory life sentence without parole.

"He planned this," she said. "Fifteen years. No, I'm sorry, that's wrong. Shaun is not coming home in 15 years, is he? He's not ever coming home."

"It's terrible," Matthews' mother, Janice, said on the courthouse steps hours after the verdict. "A child shouldn't be persecuted and forced to go through something like this.

"God only knows how much worse it's (prison) going to make his condition," she said.

Matthews takes Ritalin for hyperactivity, and defense attorney John Philip White argued for acquittal by reason of insanity.

White portrayed Matthews as a mentally unstable child whose pleas for help were ignored by teachers and friends and whose irrational behavior was possibly exacerbated by Ritalin.

"He was overlooked," said Mrs. Matthews. "He was overlooked in the third grade, junior high school. We overlooked him because we didn't think there was a problem."

White, expressing concern for Matthews' safety and the possiblity the youth might attempt suicide, said he will try to have the boy moved from prison to a mental health center while considering whether to appeal.

An appeal must be made within 30 days, said Superior Court Judge Roger Donahue.

Matthews is the youngest of more than 6,500 Massachusetts prison inmates, said Correction Department spokeswoman Mary McGeown.

Deaf collegians cheer resignation, repeat demands

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leader of the student protests at Gallaudet University says the resignation early today of Elisabeth Ann Zinser as president of the deaf liberal arts college leaves other key demands yet to be addressed.

Zinser's appointment Sunday had sparked heated protests over the board of trustees' failure to appoint a deaf president, something the school never has had in its 124-year history.

Zinser, who has normal hearing and does not know sign language, resigned just after midnight, saying her decision "was reached with great difficulty as I came to understand how deeply some see the social stature of deaf persons reflected in the presidency of this university."

Student protest leader Jerry Covell said that while the students are "very excited" about Zinser's resignation, they plan to insist on other changes to make the school more sensitive to its hearing-impaired students.

Their first priority, Covell said, is for Zinser to be replaced with a deaf president. In addition, the students are seeking:

— The resignation of Jane Bassett Spilman as chairman of the board of trustees.

— A minimum of 51 percent deaf people on the board of trustees.

— A guarantee of no reprisals against students, faculty and staff who were involved in the protests.

"The school institution from the outside looks beautiful," said Covell, whose sign language was voiced by an interpreter on CBS-TV's "This Morning" program. "There are people there who don't understand and are not sensitive to our needs. And now it is time. We feel that we are ready and we have ample support and numerous people who agree with us. So why should we stop now?"

Zinser, vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, had stayed away from Gallaudet's campus this week in the hope that the furor would die down, but had insisted she was in charge.

Spilman called the resignation a tragic loss to the university.

"We selected Dr. Zinser as president in recognition of her superior academic, administrative and research skills," she said. "Her strengths and accomplishments were precisely in those areas most critical for the growth of the university."

Rep. Steve Gunderson, R-Wis. and one of the university's trustees, said a hearing-impaired person should be at the helm at Gallaudet. Zinser was the only one of the three finalists for the job who was not deaf.

"I've said all along, even before Dr. Zinser resigned, that ideally a hearing-impaired person would be the track that we ought to follow," Gunderson said.

A large majority of the institution's 2,300 students joined in the protests, which began Sunday with a march on Capitol Hill. Students on Thursday threatened to seize the president's campus house and office if Zinser made her way past students blocking entrances to the school, and school officials chained shut the doors to the administration building.

Students from the National Technical Institute for the Deaf in Rochester, N.Y., had planned to travel to Washington by bus today to show their solidarity with the protesters.

Let's solve our energy problems

There's an old business admonition that if you want a job done correctly, don't send someone else to do it. Do it yourself!

That thought came to mind this week when Amoco Corp. chairman and chief executive officer Richard M. Morrow told local oil and gas conferees that America has 300 billion barrels of untapped oil, but can recover only 10 percent of it with current technology.

Morrow's point was well made as he added, "If a higher percentage is to be recovered new and innovative technology will be needed in the industry." He then went on to note for those attending the Permian Basin Oil & Gas Recovery Conference a number of technological advancements that have kept the industry viable through the years. He also stressed the importance of technical education to ensure that tomorrow the industry will still be able to find the highly skilled and innovative professionals it will need.

Morrow's thoughtful words should not be lost on anyone living in the Permian Basin. Those in the oil and gas industry in this region have long been leaders in developing the techniques and procedures that have kept this nation secure in terms of energy.

The Permian Basin is a leader in bringing on-line new procedures to keep it at the forefront of oil and gas development. But that's today. What happens 10, 20, 50 or even more years down the road when it's even more difficult to find ways of squeezing the precious commodity out of the land? And when the country is facing a shortfall in the necessary technically-skilled engineers needed to design the new recovery methods? Morrow noted the nation could face a shortage of 250,000 engineers in only 25 years.

What's the answer? Increased scholarship funds, training and money to upgrade technical instruction. Encouraging greater cooperation between schools and industry. The raw material is available, but a helping, formative hand is needed to keep the skilled graduates coming out of schools and into the field.

Be aware of actions

I have been following the various proposals for flood control on Wadley. I don't think the public is aware of past engineering studies authorized by the City Council regarding flooding along the northwest drainage channel. This study was completed in 1978 or 1979, and showed a large flood area along the 3200 block of Marmon, Durant, and the connecting portion of Maxwell as well as other nearby areas. A large number of homes were shown to be badly flooded in the study.

Since the engineering report was issued some changes have been made to increase the water handling capacity of the drainage channel. However, since the report was completed the runoff into the draw has been greatly increased by the building of Midland Park Mall, numerous housing developments and apartment complexes all the way to Loop 250 — all of them draining into the channel upstream of the major flood zone shown by the engineering study. This has been called to the attention of the city on several occasions. The low-water crossing recently completed at the Maxwell Street crossing will hinder the flow of water down the draw and cause flood-water to back up the adjoining streets. Several of the proposals now being considered to alleviate Wadley will dump more water into the drainage channel upstream of the Maxwell crossing and worsen the flood problem.

Discussions with an attorney experienced in litigation of this nature indicates the key question is whether the problem was caused by man-made devices or natural systems formed by nature. The northwest drainage channel is now obviously man-made.

Another item of interest in litigation is whether the perpetrator had prior knowledge of the possible consequences of their action, thus removing the limitations on damages. As a result of the engineering study Midland city management was obviously aware of the flooding problems along the northwest drainage channel prior to their approval of construction of the mall and the numerous housing and apartment complexes upstream of the primary flood area.

It behooves the taxpayers of Midland to be aware of what their elected officials are doing as the consequences could get very expensive.

Consider the positive

In your March 2 edition, a letter from Carl Remele spoke poorly of (1) Midland's weather, (2) Midland's school board, and (3) Midland's attraction as a retirement community. Remele had just read an article written by the Reporter-Telegram's A.E. Howland.

Where there might be two sides to arguments 1 and 2 above, I must take issue with the third.

Howland's three-part series on "Retiring in Midland" was well-written, well-researched and served as yet another example of the Reporter-Telegram's support of our city. Cultural events, recreational opportunities, quality health care and law-enforcement are but a few of the amenities that enhance our great quality of life. Even our climate, despite an occasional spring sandstorm, is highly regarded by most area residents.

I urge Remele to look for the positive aspects of living in Midland, and not question why retirees would move here, but welcome them with open arms. And after careful review, if Remele continues to put Midland at the bottom of his list of five states to live in, perhaps our next sandstorm will carefully blow him to Florida.

On disliking Midland

In response to Carl Remele's letter in a recent Midland Reporter-Telegram on how much he dislikes Midland: There is nothing that says he has to live here, and when he is ready to leave, I have an apple and a roadmap that I will be glad to give him!

Dancing for life

On behalf of Heather Preas and her family, I wish to thank Mark Smith and Mrs. Janet Swallow of the Midland High Youth Center for their help and support in arranging the "Celebration of Life" dance held March 5th. Smith is truly a caring person and we at Midland High are lucky to have him working with our youth.

I also would like to thank Frank Savage, MISD Security; Mike McLain, Midland Police Department; and B. John McDaniel of the sheriff's department for donating their time.

A special thanks goes to all the teenagers in Midland who attended the dance and showed such support for Heather. This dance was truly a labor of love.

Bush didn't warn Castro of invasion

WASHINGTON — Vice-president George Bush never warned Cuban President Fidel Castro of the U.S. invasion of Grenada in 1983, according to former and current staffers at the National Security Council.

Jack Anderson

Our sources say Cuba was indeed on a list of three countries to get advance notice of the invasion, but that Castro, who already knew about the invasion, cut communication lines so he could pretend ignorance.

The information casts more doubt on the credibility of Jose I. Blandon, a former top aide to Panama's Gen. Manuel Noriega who was a prime witness before a federal grand jury that indicted Noriega on drug charges last month. Various authorities have challenged Blandon's reliability in recent days. His colorful stories about Noriega included the charge that Bush had asked Noriega to call Castro to warn the Cuban president before U.S. troops landed in Grenada.

Our sources, who include people who are neither aides nor supporters of Bush, say the vice president didn't set up the phone call. The job of warning Castro, possibly through diplomatic channels, was supposed to go to Lt. Col. Oliver North, who was overseeing the NSC part of the invasion plans.

By 3 p.m. on Oct. 24, 1983, the day before the invasion, President Reagan had approved an "action list" that authorized North to cable advance warning to the Soviet Union, Great Britain and Cuba. The first two were notified, but our sources say Castro, through his own intelligence, already knew about the pending invasion. NSC staffers believe Castro cut communications lines between the State Department in Washington and the small U.S. diplomatic staff working out of a foreign embassy in Havana.

In retrospect, our sources believe Castro didn't want any official warnings from the United States so his troops on the island could respond as if they were innocent and unknowing victims of a surprise attack. No matter what action Castro took, he could claim his people were justified in defending themselves against foreign invaders.

Castro has consistently claimed since the invasion that Cuban troops on Grenada did not fire until they were fired upon by U.S. Army Rangers. Sources at the NSC now confirm that that was the truth.

They also say Castro was furious with the Soviets for bringing down the wrath of the United States on the little Caribbean island of Grenada. In public, Castro generally blamed hard-line leftists for the overthrow and assassination of Grenadian Prime Minister Maurice Bishop. In private, the NSC sources say, Castro thought the Soviets had meddled too much in island affairs, adding the straw that broke the camel's back — the coup. "Castro knew how far he could push the U.S. and he knew it was the Russians who had pushed us into a probable invasion," said a former NSC staffer.

It is unclear whether the death toll in the invasion would have been any different had Castro been officially warned in advance. The U.S. claims it lost 19 people in the raid and that 45 Grenadians and 24 Cubans were killed. Had the Cubans fired first on the Rangers as they parachuted into Grenada, Castro has publicly said, the U.S. death toll would have been much higher.

Bush took some heat over Blandon's claim that he had warned Castro through Noriega, and the vice president called the report "hogwash."

The plan to warn Castro fit in with U.S. strategy in Grenada. The warnings to him and other leaders were part of an attack carefully orchestrated to eliminate surprises and score a quick and clean victory.

The Soviets were warned on the day before the invasion as Reagan directed. The British were on the list because Grenada was part of the Commonwealth until 1974 and the queen has a governor general stationed there.

The warning to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was a belated one. For some reason, Oliver North forgot her until late on the day before the invasion. When she finally got the cable, Thatcher wired back asking Reagan to use political and economic pressures instead. According to a detailed account of the Grenada strategy by Ralph Kinney Bennett, which appeared in 1984 in Reader's Digest, Reagan sent a cable back to Thatcher thanking her for her "thoughtful message" but telling her that he had "an obligation" to the Caribbean countries that sought his help and to the 1,100 U.S. citizens living on Grenada.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Did you hear about the message that the Wells Fargo Bank in California recently sent to its home-equity customers? At the bottom of a monthly statement appeared these words: "You owe your soul to the company store. Why not owe your home to Wells Fargo? An equity advantage loan can help you spend what would have been your childrens' inheritance." Chagrined bank officials explained that it was just a "test message that got sent out by mistake." Maybe. But doesn't it tend to confirm all the awful suspicions you've ever had about bankers?

'Stone revolution' end marks need for talk

WASHINGTON — The sudden introduction of PLO-style terror into the Palestinians' "stone revolution" against Israel, from car bombs to bus hijacking, takes the pressure off Prime Minister Itzhak Shamir when he arrives here next week to defend himself from the harshest U.S. criticism of Israel since the birth of the Jewish state.

The political climate changed with the discovery near the King David Hotel of a car bomb, a staple of PLO terrorism, that appeared to be aimed at visiting Secretary of State George Shultz. Reagan administration officials say privately that the discovery of the car bomb began to blacken the image of youthful Palestinian freedom-fighters. For three months the Palestinians used stones, not explosives, against the Israeli guns that produced unprecedented public rebuke of Shamir by Israel's closest friends here.

But inserting lethal explosives into the murderous West Bank equation hands Shamir much-needed U.S. political support. His defenders, including Henry Kissinger, make this case: No sovereign state can avoid deadly force when attacked by deadly force.

In terms of damaging the Palestinian cause, escalating the battle with explosives is similar to the PLO's orders not to meet Shultz at all. Those orders to leaders inside the West

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Bank came from outside, presumably from Arafat.

These political blunders reflect a longtime senseless quality in Arafat's political style, typified by flaunting firearms in the United Nations, that has proved so destructive for Palestinians. Just as Israeli brutality was turning American and world sentiments, he risked losing that gain and plunging the PLO back into obloquy with the United States. That makes him Shamir's unwitting, perhaps priceless, ally.

Never had the time seemed brighter for the Palestinians, nor harsher for Israel. Several congressional aides, in Baghdad in mid-January, ignored U.S. Embassy advice and arranged closed-door talks with Arafat to persuade him to recognize the existence of Israel. Such an approach by American public officials would have been unlikely at any previous time.

In the same vein, the letter last week from 30 senators to Shultz was unprecedented. It sharply criticized Shamir's refusal to go along with the "territory for peace" formula that has been U.S. policy since 1967 and that now is the basis of Shultz's West Bank peace formula.

But what really stunned politicians here and in Israel was that the signers included three of Israel's most loyal, rock-hard allies in the senate: Democrat Alan Cranston and Republicans Rudy Boschwitz and Bob Kasten.

Until now, they could be counted on to oppose their own secretaries of state and their own presidents to support Israel whenever a split developed. They had defended every wayward step by Israel even when the Reagan administration, Israel's most stalwart benefactor ever, advised otherwise.

The senatorial letter did not challenge then-Secretary of State Kissinger's pledge to Israel following the 1973 Yom Kippur War that the United States would not negotiate or even talk to Arafat or his agents until the PLO recognized Israel as a sovereign state. But behind the scenes there is growing speculation cutting across ideological and party lines that no solution will ever be possible without talking to the PLO.

Rep. Henry Hyde is one of those who suspects the Kissinger pledge has become self-defeating. A key conservative Republican on the House Intelligence Committee, Hyde fears that the loss of U.S. influence throughout the Arab world poses dangers in the larger East-West struggle.

"Unofficial, informal talks with the PLO must be held," Hyde told us, "because no matter how long we wait for other leadership to rise up in the West Bank and Gaza, it never rises, and it always comes back to the PLO." Hyde never has had a friendly word for the PLO, but increasing West Bank and Gaza brutality "has the makings of a conflagration that would swallow up a lot more than Israel."

With such unorthodox but sensible sentiments growing out of the West Bank tragedy, Arafat's machinations to cast a no-talk boycott around the first serious effort George Shultz ever has made on behalf of the Palestinians is self-defeating. So is the escalation from stones to explosives. Shamir will not need to strangle Shultz's peace plan; Arafat handles that chore all by himself.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Point of men chasing women is the chase!

Olympia Dukakis plays the part of Cher's 60-ish mother in the movie "Moonstruck."

She discovers her husband (Vincent Gardenia) is cheating on her.

She is astonished he would do such a thing, and she asks the eternal question: Why isn't one woman enough for any man?

Grizzard

The answer she settles on: Because men fear death.

It's a good answer because death means the end of the chase, and the urge to chase is stronger in men than most women ever realize.

To chase is to be alive. To catch is not really the object. The object is the hunt itself.

The chase means the blood runs faster and the senses are most alive. Some men simply can never give that up as long as they are breathing.

Sang Jerry Lee Lewis:

"He's 39 and holding.

"Holding everything he can,

"From 17 to 25,

"Just to prove he still can."

I bring this up because there are likely a lot of women out there wondering why on earth men like Gary Hart, Jim Bakker, and Jimmy Swaggart could have done what they have done.

Gary Hart might very well have been the next president of the United States had he been able to handle the urge to chase.

Now, he's a national laughingstock because one woman wasn't enough for him.

Jim Bakker was pulling in millions from his PTL pulpit, but along came Jessica Hahn.

And now Jimmy Swaggart.

His followers loved him. Some probably even worshiped him. When they looked at him they saw God.

They built him a mansion. They built him a kingdom. They gave him more money than he could ever spend in one lifetime.

Yet, judging from what evidence we have now, it was the lure of the chase that brought him down, too.

I'm not trying to be holier-than-thou here. I've been married and divorced three times. My marital problems didn't all stem from my snoring or the fact my ex-wives hung panty hose to dry in my shower.

I've run with the wolves on occasion myself, and I will never forget the words of a member of my pack the night before his wedding:

As we toasted the moon, he said, "I'm afraid this won't work out."

"You're not even married yet," I said. "What would make you say a thing like that?"

"Because," he said, "I've found what I'm looking for, but I'm not sure I'm through looking yet." He was divorced a year later.

Or maybe Warren Beatty said it best in "Shampoo."

His woman accused him of cheating and he finally admitted it.

"I did it," he said. "I make love with them all."

"But why?" she asked.

"I'm not really sure," he answered. "It just seems to make my day."

NATION in brief

Pact with Japan sharply criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two former Pentagon officials and the General Accounting Office are sharply criticizing a pact with Japan for the retrieval of plutonium from U.S. nuclear wastes.

Critics of the nuclear cooperation agreement said Thursday they may move to kill the accord next week in Congress.

The former officials, Richard N. Perle and Frank J. Gaffney Jr., said the Defense Department was not given a significant role in negotiations and considers the agreement "seriously flawed."

Evangelicals open meeting

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell says scandals involving TV preachers Jim Bakker and Jimmy Swaggart have strengthened broadcast evangelism and made Christianity stronger, more mature and more committed.

Falwell

Christian television ministries that put their financial and doctrinal houses in order will survive and prosper, Falwell told the National Association of Evangelicals on Thursday.

In five years, "most of the evangelical ministers that are playing on top of the table will be stronger than they are today," the fundamentalist preacher said in his first appearance before the group, which represents 50,000 churches in 72 denominations. Falwell is not a member of the NAE.

"You need not be embarrassed by what has happened...just more sensitive," he told hundreds of applauding delegates. "This is a time to regroup, judge ourselves and march on with a greater intensity than before.

"The cause of Christ is now better off" because of Bakker and Swaggart's problems, Falwell said, comparing the scandals with Watergate and politics.

"In the days ahead, it is going to be tougher for national leaders (of TV ministries) to misbehave," just as the Watergate crisis resulted in governmental and political reforms, he said.

Mecham 'bias' charged

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham's defense lawyer angered senators by accusing the Senate majority leader of showing "overwhelming" bias against the governor during his impeachment trial.

Jerris Leonard lashed out Thursday at Majority Leader Bob Usdane when the Republican lawmaker questioned whether the impeached governor's new lawyers erred when they said weeks ago they were ready to defend Mecham.

Crash victims mourned

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — Residents of this sprawling military base and neighboring towns mourned again Thursday for victims of an Army aviation accident, this time 17 soldiers killed in a helicopter collision.

The members of the elite 101st Airborne division died Tuesday when helicopters on separate night training missions slammed into each other.

The crash was the worst in Fort Campbell history and the worst Army aviation accident since 248 Fort Campbell soldiers died Dec. 12, 1985, when a chartered jet bringing them home for Christmas from a Mideast peacekeeping mission crashed in Canada.

"I think any soldier will tell you that when you fly as many hours as they do and perform the exercises they do, you can expect things to happen," said Charlie C. Gentry, a motel owner in Clarksville, Tenn., the closest town to Fort Campbell.

Even so, he said, "To me it's kind of like hearing about maybe a real close friend I had in high school, and hadn't seen for a while, getting killed in a car wreck. So even though I didn't know them there's more of a feeling of loss than with other news stories."

Remington 'a master'

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Frederic Remington, the painter and sculptor best known for his depiction of the Wild West, deserves recognition as an American master, say the curators of a traveling exhibit of his work that opens here today.

"Remington has been seen superficially," said Michael Edward Shapiro, chief curator at the St. Louis Art Museum. "He's been stereotyped as a cowboy artist when he was a very sophisticated New Yorker who drew from a lot of sources and created his own style, which has astonishingly imprinted itself on the conscience of our country."

Circumcision studied

CHICAGO (AP) — Doctors continue to perform "archaic" circumcisions on newborn males, forsaking anesthetics because of misguided notions that their tiny patients do not feel pain, a new study concludes.

Dr. Howard Stang, a Minneapolis pediatrician, said the findings were not new, "but the most important thing is this — if it's going to be done, it ought to be done humanely."

About 3¼ million children, roughly half of them males, are born in the United States each year.

U.S. considering five sanctions against Panama

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is likely to impose five sanctions against Panama in the next several days designed to cripple the country's tottering economy and force out military leader Manuel Antonio Noriega, administration sources say.

Although no final decisions were reached during a high-level interagency meeting attended by Reagan on Thursday, the officials said they expected approval shortly of a package that included the five sanctions.

The sanction with potentially the greatest impact appears to be a cutoff of Panamanian revenues from a pipeline that carries Alaskan oil to tankers serving East Coast ports.

Gabriel Lewis, a former Panamanian ambassador to the United States who is a leader of the exiled opposition to Noriega, said in an interview Thursday night that the action would cost Panama about $10 million a month in tolls, taxes and other revenues.

The officials, who insisted on anonymity, reaffirmed that it is virtually certain the administration will withhold a $6.5 million payment due to Panama next Tuesday for operations related to the Panama Canal.

Lewis said he was pleased with the signs that the administration apparently plans to step up pressure on Noriega, who is under federal indictment on drug smuggling charges.

"The only money coming into the country is drug money," he said.

According to the officials, other sanctions being contemplated are the withdrawal of Panama's right to participate in a tariff preference system for Third World countries and the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

Under the CBI, Panama and about 20 other countries are eligible to sell most products duty-free to U.S. markets.

But this measure would have mostly symbolic impact because the bulk of Panama's exports to the United States are not subject to duties in the first place. Panama exported between $342 million and $388 million worth of products to the United States last year, according to figures provided by U.S. government agencies.

A final sanction would involve increasing surveillance on all Panamanian individuals and goods moving across U.S. borders and stepping up efforts to discourage other countries from doing anything that assists Noriega's hold on Panama.

"I think we're getting pretty close to doing them all," said one source, "but the president didn't say that today. It will be at least a day or so."

A second official agreed: "We had the meeting and the president heard all sides of the issue. But it wasn't finalized."

Meanwhile, the House voted Thursday 367-2 in support of a nonbinding resolution demanding Noriega's ouster.

The resolution, which took note of allegations of drug trafficking, murder, money laundering and racketeering against Panama's Defense Forces, was approved shortly before the White House meeting was convened.

It called on Reagan to "consider seriously" additional economic and political sanctions.

Administration asks appeal of abortion funding ruling

BOSTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has asked an appeals court to overturn a judge's order barring federal regulations that would cut off funding to family planning clinics that offer abortions or abortion counseling.

The administration said it was seeking a reversal from the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in U.S. District Judge Walter Ray Skinner's March 3 ruling, which declared the regulations unconstitutional.

Skinner's ruling was announced the day the new guidelines were to have taken effect, and forced the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to order regional offices to suspend enforcing them.

That order will remain in effect while the appeal is considered, said HHS spokeswoman Lucy Eddinger.

In a memo accompanying his ruling, Skinner said the regulations violated a woman's right to choose to have an abortion and her First Amendment rights to free speech.

Federal judges in Colorado and New York had issued temporary injunctions against the regulations, but Skinner was the first to rule on their constitutionality, and said his order applied nationwide.

He granted an injunction requested by the state of Massachusetts, the National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association and 13 other local and national family planning groups.

About 5 million low- and moderate-income women receive services at 4,000 clinics nationwide which would have been affected by the regulations announced last month by HHS Secretary Otis R. Bowen.

The new rules would have prevented federally funded family planning programs from providing abortion counseling, abortion referrals, and engaging in lobbying or legal action to increase the availability of abortions.

Claims of human rights violations persist in Chile

By EDUARDO GALLARDO

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Open violence against dissidents is now rare in Chile, but specialists contend that widespread human rights violations continue in more subtle ways and often are cloaked in apparent legality.

The 14-year-old military government of President Augusto Pinochet, who also is the army commander, "has modernized" its repression methods, claims Roberto Garreton, chief lawyer for the Vicariate of Solidarity, the Roman Catholic Cnurch's human rights agency.

Garreton and other lawyers and human rights activists contend that the military regime has succeeded in politically neutralizing many dissidents by fear, making violent repression no longer necessary.

Speaking in interviews, they said that although torture is still common, the government has developed other, more subtle methods, including the continued enforcement of a nationwide state of emergency that empowers it to severely curtail basic civil rights.

The government has also issued a number of specially tailored decrees and laws that give a formal legality to repression and ensure impunity to many human rights violators, the specialists maintain.

As an example, they cited the widening scope of military justice. During the last two years, 95 percent of those tried by military courts were civilians, according to Alejandro Hales, president of Chile's Bar Association.

Hales said 90 percent of those tried were eventually freed without charges, but most of them were kept incommunicado for long periods, sometimes up to 40 days.

The specialists contended that repression now often works through intimidation and threat, including the action of several shadowy, right-wing extremist groups that kidnap, beat up and occasionally even kill people. Authorities deny any connection with such groups and have promised to investigate.

Nearly 200 Chileans claim to have received death threats in recent months from the extremist groups, including some well known dissidents, and many have been briefly kidnapped and physically abused.

One group, the September 11 Commando, took responsibility for the killing of five leftists the day after a bloody but unsuccessful attempt to kill Pinochet in 1986. Five young Communists have been missing since September, and a group called Chilean Anti-Communist Action claimed responsibility Feb. 15 for their abduction and disappearance.

These methods "have an extremely paralyzing and brutally frightening effect on most people," said Garreton.

Lawyers and human rights activists, including Hales and Garreton, said they are convinced that those groups are "centralized" and connected to official security services.

Jaime Troncoso, research director of the independent Chilean Human Rights Commission, said "threatening is the new tactic for repression."

The critics point out that, although most cases remain unsolved, every time a member of one of those groups was discovered, he proved to be a member of the military or the security services. An army lieutenant, Patricio Contreras, was killed three years ago by a bomb he was planting at a church in the southern city of Punta Arenas. A number of leaflets of the Chilean Anti-Communist Action group were found at the site.

Fernando Volio, a Costa Rican who is the United Nations' officially designated human rights inspector for Chile, has denounced the existence of the extremist groups. Unless they are dismantled, he said, "this society will remain torn apart."

In the years after Pinochet and the military seized power in a bloody 1973 coup, hundreds of leftist dissidents were killed, and at least 663 cases of political prisoners who disappeared have been documented by local and foreign human rights groups. The torture of prisoners was considered widespread.

Summary executions have long since ceased and arbitrary arrests have decreased sharply.

According to figures gathered by the Chilean Human Rights Commission, 33,903 people were arbitrarily arrested in 1986, while the figure went down to 6,255 in 1987.

The commission registered 106 cases of torture of dissidents in 1987.

South African politician regains his credibility

By DAVID CRARY

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Allan Hendrickse, a mixed-race politician and member of President P. W. Botha's Cabinet, defied apartheid laws more than a year ago and went swimming at a whites-only beach. Then at Botha's demand, he apologized.

Doubts immediately arose that the highly regarded Hendrickse would ever regain credibility among his non-white constituents.

But he has made a remarkable comeback.

Hendrickse now is recognized as perhaps the only elected official in South Africa with both the will and the power to defy the president.

As leader of Parliament's mixed-race chamber, he is in a position to force Botha's National Party to the polls next year, three years earlier than it would like.

Botha he needs consent from all three chambers of Parliament to delay the election from 1989 to 1992. Hendrickse, whose Labor Party holds 76 of 85 seats in the House of Representatives, says he won't acquiesce unless Botha abandons the government's policy of segregated neighborhoods.

This demand is unlikely to be met and has resulted in Hendrickse's forced resignation from the Cabinet. But the confrontation appears to have boosted his popularity among the country's 3 million "coloreds," as mixed-race South Africans are called.

"Suddenly a lot of people who were disinterested or antagonistic are now realizing that you can find yourself in a position of altering the course of history in this country," Hendrickse, 60, said at a recent news briefing. "It does give you and the people you represent a feeling of importance."

Hendrickse's political fortunes have seesawed since he helped found the Labor Party in 1969.

He was detained for two months in 1976 for his anti-apartheid stance, but came under fire from activists in 1984 when the Labor Party agreed to participate in a new tricameral Parliament setup. Chambers for Asians and coloreds were created to join the dominant white chamber, although the nation's black majority remained excluded.

The Asian and mixed-race chambers are allowed to handle their "own affairs" — deciding to how to allocate public funding for their own communities, for example. But the 1984 constitution gives the majority party in the white chamber almost total power to set national policy and to override even combined opposition from the other chambers.

Hendrickse said he would cooperate with the new system for five years in an effort to dismantle apartheid from within. Activists nonetheless denounced him as a sellout for joining Botha's Cabinet as minister without portfolio.

"Our participation within the system must not be construed as an acceptance of the system," said Hendrickse. "We walk the difficult road of being in and yet being out."

In January 1987, the portly politician made a seemingly bold challenge of the government by wading into the surf at a whites-only beach in Port Elizabeth.

Botha, in a televised speech, furiously ordered Hendrickse to apologize or quit the Cabinet. Hendrickse apologized.

"It was a demolition job with such humiliation for Rev. Hendrickse that he is unlikely to recover from it," Peter Gastrow, chairman of the white opposition Progressive Federal Party, said at the time.

Now, white liberals applaud Hendrickse's tougher tactics and are considering possible alliances with his Labor Party.

Hendrickse still has many detractors, including activists who totally reject the tricameral Parliament. At the University of the Western Cape, a leftist, predominantly mixed-race school, Rector Jakes Gerwel said Hendrickse's resurgence had been "a non-event."

The pro-government media also has been critical, for different reasons. The Citizen, a Johannesburg newspaper, maintained that the Labor Party had become "fractious and militant" after being set on a "dangerous collision course" by Hendrickse.

Hendrickse says he holds no personal animosity toward Botha but is clearly pleased at having found an effective means of challenging him.

"It's not a question of personal power or strength, but rather a recognition of the correctness of the decision to participate (in Parliament)," he said. "In spite of the constitutional inadequacies, we were able to find a gap, a weakness, and thus find ourselves in a powerful position."

Same crime, different punishment

SEVEN DEATHS, SEVEN DEALS

What started as a homicide in Detroit triggered an investigation into the inequities and injustices being committed in the courts throughout the state of Michigan.

Records showed similar crimes did not receive similar punishment. And proved punishment rested more on a judge's philosophy than on the crime committed.

Judges' sentencing: Fits the killer, not the crime

Within days after the publication of a story that documented this information, the Michigan Supreme Court made some changes.

Changes that wouldn't have occurred if a few reporters at a Detroit newspaper hadn't been looking for a story.

Stricter guidelines for sentencing

Combined tax rate below median, TRL report says

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland's combined city-county-school-junior college-hospital 1986-87 property tax rate ranked barely below the median among 383 taxing jurisdictions in the state, according to a recent report from the Texas Research League.

The owner of an $80,000 single-family home in Midland paid $1,082 — with a homestead exemption — in ad valorem taxes to the city, county, school district, Midland Junior College District and Midland Hospital District.

In comparing the tax burden in 383 selected jurisdictions across the state, Midland ranked 179th with a total combined tax rate of $1.541 per $100 in valuation. Odessa, where the tax bill on an $80,000 homestead was $1,008, ranked 124th with a combined rate of $1.723 per $100.

The heaviest burden of $2.75 hit Crystal City, southwest of San Antonio, while taxpayers in Highland Park in Dallas paid the least at 85 cents per $100. The median burden of $1.55 per $100 fell on Abilene taxpayers.

Local property tax rates in Texas have increased by one-third over the past five years, the Research League reported. Combined with a 28-percent increase in the tax base, the higher rates have produced 68 percent more tax revenue for local governments.

"Inequitable appraisals among different types of property are significant in attracting new industry to a community," the League reported.

The property tax on industrial equipment and inventories valued at $80,000 ranged from $532 in Del Rio to $2,071 in Orange County's Little Cypress-Mauriceville ISD. The tax bill on $80,000 in commercial property ranged from $417 in the Lake Worth ISD in Forth Worth to $1,844 in Crystal City.

For property worth $80,000 in Midland, the report shows a tax of $1,233 for an average of all types of property, $1,248 for industrial equipment and inventory and $1,241 for commercial properties. In Odessa, the average was $1,379, with the industrial property tax bill at $1,439 and the commercial property levy at $1,034.

Other area cities listed in the report include: Andrews, ranked 346th, with an $80,000 homestead tax of $1,137; Big Spring, ranked 60th, with an $80,000 homestead tax of $956; and Crane, ranked 300th, with an $80,000 homestead tax of $599 — lowest in the state.

Course designed to help victims avoid crime now available in area

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A one-of-a-kind course adapted from the crisis training of U.S. State Department employees — and designed to help potential victims avoid crimes such as robbery and assault — is available to area residents, it was announced today.

The course, which will be taught by Fred Lewis, 32, a former member of the U.S. Army's elite Delta force, is sanctioned by the sheriffs of Midland and Ector counties. The program developed from discussions with Lewis 18 months ago, when he was in Midland to train the SWAT teams of the police and sheriffs' departments, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said.

"This is a new concept in crime prevention training," Painter said of the Individual Threat Awareness and Avoidance Course. "There were 229 violent crimes committed in the Midland area last year, and we have a desire to get the violent crimes down and protect our citizens."

Lewis said he adapted the course from a program he used to train State Department employees in Central America. He said the emphasis on "mental conditioning" separates this course from other, similar programs.

"This is proactive in nature," Lewis said of the curriculum. "We don't start out teaching physical defense tactics.

"Security starts first in the mind," he continued. "We want to teach people when to talk, when to run...and then, when to fight."

Midland resident Claudia Smith, who with her husband, Bob, was robbed at gunpoint in a parking lot in 1986, praised the course.

Another former teller at BancHome charged with embezzling funds

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Another former teller has been charged in an FBI complaint with embezzling $29,000 in connection with an alleged check-floating scheme at the old Home Savings Association (now, BancHome Savings Association).

The ex-teller, Brenda Ward Hardeman, 39, on Thursday was brought before United States Magistrate Darrell Smith for the reading of her rights and setting of bail. Smith released the woman under a personal recognizance bond and advised her to appear in court at 9 a.m. on March 18 for her preliminary examination, when she is to appear with her retained defense attorney, Carol Kirk. "That puts the burden on your being here," the magistrate told the defendant.

"You have the right to trial by jury" should she plead "not guilty" to the accusation," Smith told the woman. "You are not required to make a statement."

Ms. Hardeman was charged with embezzling the funds between October 1986 and May 1987. The complaint was submitted by FBI Special Agent Edward Stroz of Midland.

Should Ms. Hardeman be convicted in federal court of embezzling the funds, she could be imprisoned up to five years and fined up to $250,000.

Two weeks ago, two of Ms. Hardeman's cohorts, Belinda Cardova Granado, 29, and Ida Martinez McCormick, 27, both ex-tellers at Home Savings, and 35-year-old Juanita Grimes Williams, a Home Savings customer and former vault-bulk processor at RepublicBank First National Midland, were convicted of misapplying funds at Home Savings.

Ms. Williams was charged with misapplying $1,767.50, Ms. Granado was accused of taking $3,536, and Ms. McCormick was charged with misapplying $3,037.

The women had checking accounts at Home Savings when the alleged scheme was carried out between June 1986 and May 1987.

In sentencing Ms. Williams, Ms. McCormick and Ms Granado last Feb. 25, U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton ordered the women to spend two weekends in jail after they had pleaded guilty to the offense, to perform 100 hours of community service as directed by the United States Probation Office, and to serve three years under supervised probation. The judge had sentenced each of the three women to three years in prison but suspended those sentences.

The alleged check-floating scheme involved the cashing of the women's checks and holding them in the till until the checks could be covered by personal payroll checks. As the scheme progressed, the women were unable to cover their "cashed" checks. However, all three eventually had made restitution before they were charged with the offense.

In pleading for mercy before the judge, each of the women apologized for their wrongdoing.

Longtime local volunteer for children honored with Golden Deeds Award

From Staff Reports

Goolsby

Longtime Midland children's volunteer Juanita Goolsby was honored Thursday night with the Golden Deeds Award, given by the Midland Exchange Club.

"I have been overwhelmed and truly felt undeserving," Mrs. Goolsby said Thursday afternoon.

"Midland is just made of volunteerism. There are so many people doing so many good things. It's been a happy privilege working with children," she said.

Jackie L. Carter, executive director of High Sky Children's Ranch, Inc., nominated Mrs. Goolsby for the award last December, for the "outstanding contribution she has made to the High Sky Children's Ranch.

"...she had inexhaustible energy and total commitment to provide quality care for abused, neglected and abandoned children. Her volunteer work has contributed to the Midland community," Ms. Carter wrote.

Jim Crawford, of the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center, wrote the Exchange Club to lend support to Ms. Carter's nomination.

"Juanita has been the backbone and workhorse of the Children's Service League and Midland Cerebral Palsy Center since 1962, the year she joined the league.

GOP wants to resurrect candidate in state race

AUSTIN (AP) — The defeat of veteran state Sen. Grant Jones in the Democratic primary prompted Republican Party officials to explore resurrecting the campaign of a GOP candidate who dropped out of the race two months ago.

Even though Rex Andrew of Abilene withdrew from the race in January, Texas GOP executive director John Weaver said Andrew could be certified next week to appear on November's general election ballot.

If Andrew isn't allowed back into the race, Sweetwater lawyer Temple Dickson, a Democrat, becomes the automatic general election winner in the 14-county district that stretches from Temple to Abilene.

Dickson unseated Jones, a 23-year veteran of the Legislature and chairman of the powerful Senate Finance Committee, by winning more than 56 percent of Tuesday's primary election vote.

"I talked to him. He is interested," Weaver said of Andrew, a television news reporter.

Weaver said the party is seeking a ruling from Secretary of State Jack Rains, a Republican, on whether Andrew could stand for election in light of the fact that he stopped payment on the check he used for his filing fee.

Rains' spokesman Jim Warren said Thursday that the questions were being reviewed. It wasn't certain how quickly a ruling would be made.

Andrew sent a letter to the party in January, saying he was withdrawing from the race. But his name appeared on the primary ballot because he did not pull out before the deadline for withdrawing.

"Technically, he withdrew too late. So he really didn't withdraw," Weaver said. "We'll make a decision next week whether to certify him to be on the general election ballot or not."

Republican State Chairman George Strake has the power to decide if Andrew can run in November, Weaver said.

Texas GOP executive director Jack Weaver said the party is seeking a ruling from Secretary of State Jack Rains, a Republican, on whether Rex Andrew could stand for election in light of the fact that he stopped payment on the check he used for his filing fee.

In an interview with the Austin American-Statesman, Andrew said he didn't realize it was possible to rejoin the race. He said he didn't know whether he would try to do so.

"I'm as much in the dark as you," the 31-year-old political novice said. "My situation is really unchanged from two months ago. It still would be very hard for me to do because of the family obligations that I have."

Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, said the GOP tried to recruit a viable candidate for the Senate seat but could find no one except Andrew.

By attempting to bring Andrew back into the race, Martin charged, the GOP was "operating outside the spirit of fair play, if not outside the spirit of the law."

"Apparently now they're trying to play some games. But once a guy said he's withdrawn, people know they're just playing a game of manipulation," Martin said.

Jones, one of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's chief Senate allies, had held the Senate seat since 1972, following several terms in the Texas House.

Odessa's Medical Center joins 'miracle network'

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Medical Center Hospital's development corporation announced Thursday its affiliation with a national charity telethon which will aid Permian Basin babies and children who are in need of intensive medical care.

This county hospital is now a part of the Children's Miracle Network — a 150-member national organization charged with providing charity dollars to not-for-profit teaching hospitals, said Frank L. Beaman, the hospital's director of marketing and business development.

MCH and Texas Tech University Regional Health Science Center officials will take part in the nationwide Miracle Network's telethon — slated to be broadcast locally on Channel 7 June 4 and 5.

All the monies garnered in the telethon locally will stay at MCH, said the hospital's administrator, Sam Glenney.

One area to be targeted is that of neo-natology or intensive care for babies.

Though seemingly not affecting Midland, the nursery at MCH houses about six babies a month from Midland who are in need of neo-natal services not available at Midland's hospitals, said Raquel Beard, the neo-natal intensive care unit's head nurse.

Trinity names Garrity to head upper school

From Staff Reports

Garrity

Trinity School administrator Margaret Simmons today announced that Bradford D. Garrity will fill the post of head of upper school.

Garrity, who presently serves as business manager and director of development, joined the Trinity staff in 1985.

The appointment follows last month's announcement that the school will add a 10th grade class in September and 11th and 12th grades in 1989 and 1990, respectively.

A Cortland, N.Y., native, Garrity received a bachelor of arts degree in biology from Centre College of Kentucky in 1970. He completed a master's degree in 1971 in zoology and behavior for Michigan State University.

Prior to his arrival at Trinity, Garrity served as dormitory master at several independent schools, dean of student scheduling and dean of students. He also coached basketball and golf at different grade levels and worked as an administer and executive director for a national social service agency.

"I am thrilled by the opportunity that Trinity has presented me," Garrity said. "Our students are currently offered many opportunities for admission to some of the best college preparatory high schools in America.

"Our high school program will afford children of the Permian Basin a concentrated, fine, liberal arts education and also give them the tools for admission to the college of their choice, no matter how selective it might be. Our aim is not only getting students into good colleges, but also ensuring that they are successful there," he added.

Trinity has begun to accept applications for 10th grade students and will soon announce an open testing date for ninth grades students. As with all Trinity applications, financial assistance information will be available.

Natural gas lines burst into flames at city power plant in Lubbock

LUBBOCK (AP) — Natural gas lines feeding a city-owned power plant this morning burst into a 50-foot wall of flames while workers were rushing toward the site of a pressure buildup, officials said.

There were no injuries in the accident at Lubbock Power and Light Co.'s Holly Avenue Power Plant, but two small buildings and equipment were damaged, plant manager Ronnie Martin said.

Martin said a pressure buildup shortly after 3 a.m. caused gas to spew out of the lines and ignite. The plant's lines are designed to automatically release gas under excessive pressure, Martin said, but the flames were unexpected.

"Evidently, there was some trash in the line that caused a spark and it ignited the gas, and that then caught a second (gas) supply on fire," Martin said.

The fire burned itself out by about 5 a.m. after a valve was closed a mile away and the gas supply was cut off, he said.

Ryan died Thursday at a local hospital.

The family requests memorials be directed to a favorite charity.

Mystery candidate's opponents cry foul

WAXAHACHIE (AP) — A man seldom seen or heard from now faces a runoff election for a congressional seat, but his two challengers in the primary are crying foul.

Johnny Welch, a 6th Congressional District candidate who called for a manned space flight to Saturn and a requirement that every American perform civil service, captured 34 percent of the vote.

Welch faces an April 12 runoff against N.P. "Pat" Kendrick of Joshua, and the winner of that race will take on incumbent U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis.

But Kendrick and ousted candidate W. Alton Parish think they've been the victims of some sort of Republican conspiracy.

"They did it intentionally," charged Parish, a Fort Worth economics professor.

"There's something very suspicious here," he said. "Mr. Kendrick and I worked very hard on this campaign. We never took him (Welch) seriously. Kendrick thought I was his opponent, and I thought he was mine."

Welch's Waxahachie address and home phone number are listed with the secretary of state's office, and a check with both the Waxahachie telephone book and directory assistance confirms that the number is correct.

But calls to the home address have gone unanswered, there is no campaign office listed, and party activists in Waxahachie and throughout Ellis County say they have never heard of Welch.

Repeated attempts Thursday by The Associated Press to contact Welch were unsuccessful.

Welch's three-point platform called for launching a manned space flight to Saturn, mandating that every American participate in civil service unless they pay a fee to the government, and feeding and sheltering the hungry and homeless.

Gary Koops, Barton's press secretary, denied that Republicans were behind the voting for Welch, and he noted that Barton had worked with local officials throughout the district to produce a record-breaking GOP turnout Tuesday.

Midland attorney ordered disbarred by judge

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland attorney Robert Lee "Bob" Evans Jr. was ordered disbarred by a visiting state district court judge after a Midland jury this week found that Evans had committed 15 violations of the State Bar of Texas' Code of Professional Responsibility in his lawyer-client relationship with Midlander Fred Newman and his family.

Evans, 54, is to surrender his State Bar of Texas card, which permits him to practice law in Texas, after the visiting judge, Marvin F. Marshall of Plainview, enters a written judgment in about a month, according to Odessa lawyer Bill Alexander, who represented Evans in the week-long civil-disbarment trial in the 238th State District Court in Midland.

Marshall, who presides over the 242nd Texas District Court for Hale County, presided over the trial, which began Feb. 29.

Alexander said Evans would be prohibited from practicing law for at least five years from the time of disbarment but that he could apply for reinstatement to the State Bar after the five-year period and would be required to re-take the State Bar Exam.

Evans declined to comment on the disbarment proceedings and on the judge's ruling on the jury's verdict.

In answering 26 questions submitted to the jury, the 12 Midland jurors unanimously found against Evans. In doing so, the jurors agreed that Evans committed the 15 specific violations in his dealings with Newman and his family in a salt-water disposal well in Reeves County in 1985, Alexander said.

No restitution was ordered, Alexander said, as "Bob Evans did not receive any monies."

Evans had represented Newman in legal matters since 1981, but Newman, a physicist who now plugs abandoned oil wells for a living and who is president of the Midland Independent School District board of trustees, fired Evans in September of 1985, according to court records.

Though Alexander said he disagreed with the jury's verdict, he said that the judge was "excellent" in presiding over the case. "We had a good jury. It was a fair jury."

John Gladney, assistant general counsel for the State Bar of Texas, presented the case against Evans.

In 1983, Midland lawyer Harold B. Jones, then 58, was disbarred for "professional misconduct." Jones, who died in late 1986, was accused of misuse of his clients' funds.

Hitchhikers held for questioning in four deaths

HOPE, Ark. (AP) — A pair of hitchhikers were being held today in the Hempstead County Jail for questioning about four slayings in two states, Sheriff Don Worthy said.

They were arrested Wednesday night while hitchhiking in Muskogee, Okla., and were extradited to Hope on Thursday, Worthy said. They matched the descriptions of a pair who hitched a ride Monday night with Kenneth Olden, 34, of Saratoga, whose body was found Tuesday, the sheriff said.

The sheriff said Thursday night that no charges had been filed.

Olden had been shot three times and his body was dumped along a road. His car was found later Tuesday in a lake near Marietta, Okla., Worthy said.

Muskogee Police Lt. Richard Slayder, who arrested the pair, identified them Thursday as a 17-year-old from Long Beach, Calif., and a 20-year-old from Terre Haute, Ind. However, Worthy would not confirm those identifications.

Worthy said Texas lawmen planned to talk to the young men today. The pair also matched descriptions of suspects sought for this week's shooting deaths of two Farmersville, Texas, men and the slaying of a Gainesville, Texas, woman, whose throat was cut.

Collin County Sheriff's Sgt. Anthony Hancock said two officers from his North Texas county planned to interrogate the pair about the Farmersville deaths, while Cooke County Sheriff John Aston arranged similar questioning about the Gainesville slaying.

The descriptions of the pair provided by Arkansas authorities led him to question them, Hancock said. "I haven't been able to find out much other than that, but they believe there is a good possibility it's them," he said.

Legislator got loans from failed Flower Mound Bank

DALLAS (AP) — State Rep. Ben Campbell received $618,000 in business loans from the failed Flower Mound Bank while he was chairman of its board of directors, according to Campbell and financial records.

State Banking Commissioner Kenneth W. Littlefield said insider loans played a role in the state-ordered closing of the bank, but Campbell maintains that his loans did not contribute to the bank's collapse.

"The board acted very prudently before and after I resigned," said Campbell, one of the founders of the bank 20 miles northwest of Dallas.

Campbell said he gave up Denton County property he had used as collateral on loans after filing last year for Chapter 11 reorganization under the federal bankruptcy code. And he denied receiving any preferential treatment on loans.

Littlefield closed Flower Mound Bank on March 3, citing heavy losses on loans. It reopened the next day as a newly chartered subsidiary of Security Bank of Flower Mound.

A Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. spokesman said Security Bank assumed about $17.2 million in 4,900 deposit accounts and will purchase the bank's assets at a discount of $3.8 million.

A recent examination by the Texas Department of Banking found that the loan losses stemmed from "poor underwriting standards and liberal lending practices (on) speculative real estate loans, unsecured lending...(and) loans to insiders which resulted in heavy loan losses," Littlefield said.

Although Littlefield said lending practices may have violated state and federal regulations, he added that the review found no criminal violations. He declined to comment on specific loans to Campbell or others.

Gary L. Acker, president of Security Bank Flower Mound, said there "certainly were weaknesses in the lending process" at the bank.

"She was instrumental in the establishment of the Beefeater's Ball and has had a major role in its success through the years...I can think of no one more worthy of receiving this honor," Crawford wrote.

At the Thursday night awards dinner at the Midland Country Club, Crawford added: "When you wanted something done at the league, you just called on Mrs. Goolsby."

For the past 30 years, Mrs. Goolsby has served in almost every capacity with the Children's Service League, an organization which supports the Cerebral Palsy Center.

In addition to holding the offices on the board of directors, at one time as the chairman, she has worked as a volunteer aide in physical and occupational therapy, and served as a teacher's aide, receptionist, typist and bookkeeper.

She has also volunteered at the Public Health Department's Prenatal, Well Child and Evaluation Clinics.

The CSL is the first volunteer activity Mrs. Goolsby participated in after she and her husband, Durward, moved to Midland in 1954, with their two children, Pamela and Gary.

Mrs. Goolsby has also served on the High Sky Girl's Ranch Board and has held several chairmanships for the Symphony Guild.

She was an active member of her children's PTA groups, the United Way Budget Committee, the YMCA Women's Committee and the Lawyer's Wive Club.

"I don't know why I do it. I just love doing what I do. I'm not one to sit at home. I love people and especially children," the award winner added.

She said she joined the league because her children were happy and healthy.

"When I joined the league, I gave up garden, study and bridge clubs. I just love doing the work at the center.

"Anything that I have ever done has been my happy privilege," she said Thursday night.

"They (workers) heard the safeties (valves) lift — when they lift you can hear a loud popping sound," Martin said. "They headed out there and probably got within 100 yards when it ignited. They were lucky they didn't get any closer."

Martin said he saw the vertical flames from three miles away when he was driving toward the plant, which is outside the city and away from homes.

COURSE

"The trauma of the crime, physically and psychologically, lasts," Ms. Smith said. "This class will help you learn how to handle those emotions — and it will help you understand why, where and how a crime happens."

Maxine Hannifin, a law enforcement advocate who serves on the board of the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officers Standards and Education, took the eight-hour course and was impressed.

"It taught me assurance for one thing," she said. "I learned a great deal; I wish that every woman in the area would take it.

Lewis said he hopes the course, which is also sponsored by the non-profit Texas Law Enforcement Advanced Education Foundation, Inc., will spread in popularity, eventually throughout the state and country.

Capt. Clayton McKinney, a former Texas Ranger who heads the sheriff's investigation division, said the course is a "good program. It's like nothing we've ever seen before."

The course will be taught at the YMCA in Midland and Odessa, and at Howard College in Big Spring. The $40 tuition will be used for expenses, according to Lewis, adding that the cost may be lowered or dropped sometime in the future.

MC offers basketweaving courses

From Staff Reports

Several centuries ago, a prehistoric person got tired of carrying everything by hand. That person, probably a female, experimented and eventually developed a basket.

Woven of reeds or fiber and perhaps tied with animal sinew, strips of hide, or vines, it allowed more berries or roots to be carried. With a handle, it even left one hand free for an essential weapon.

Some of those baskets still exist; modern ones aren't much different in either design or types of materials used.

For those who would like to learn the ancient art and craft of basketweaving, Midland College has three new courses to teach some of the basic skills. Students will learn some of the simpler basket designs and will build their own baskets.

Pat Brooks, who learned the craft in North Carolina, will teach the three courses at Midland College. The first will concentrate on the basic skills and materials, with students weaving their own berry baskets. This class meets Tuesdays, March 22 and 29, from 7-9 p.m. Fee for this class is $8.

Mrs. Brooks will teach a second class, this one on how to construct the heart basket, on Tuesday, April 5 and April 12, from 7-9 p.m. The third class will be on building a market basket. It will meet April 19 and 26 at the same hours. Fee for each class is $8.

Those wishing to enroll should visit the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 for more information.

Price of farmlands increases in some regions of nation

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmland prices nationally are headed up for the first time in six years, but an Agriculture Department analyst says there still are areas where land values are lagging.

"We're thinking there are going to be rather strong increases in the Corn Belt States and in the Northeast," says Roger Hexem of the department's Economic Research Service. "We're less certain what's going to happen in the South and in the West."

The department is scheduled to issue its annual farmland value report on April 14, showing average market prices as of Feb. 1 for the United States as a whole and for each state.

A year ago the Feb. 1 values showed U.S. farmland, including buildings, were worth an average of $548 per acre, an 8 percent drop from 1986 to a 19-year low. Farmland nationally rose to a peak of $823 per acre in 1982 before starting to slide.

When inflation is accounted for, the "real" value of farmland declined even longer, from a 1981 peak of $561 per acre to $290 as of Feb. 1, 1987.

But a lot has changed during the past year, including some brightening of the dreary farm export situation, improved market prices for some commodities and the massive idling of highly erodible land under the government's Conservation Reserve Program, or CRP.

"Nationwide, I'm thinking it's going to be up," Hexem said. "But I don't know how much."

There are still "soft" areas where land market prices are lagging, he said. Some states are gaining faster than others, and it also depends on what kind of agricultural enterprises prevail.

"Within the Corn Belt, for example, I think that there are some indications that Iowa will show a pretty good increase, where another state, like Missouri, might not show as strong an increase," Hexem said.

In Texas and Oklahoma, for example, the economy is "still kind of soft, so I think that has dampened demand on the part of the non-agricultural purchasers" of farmland, Hexem said. On the other hand, improved cotton prices probably strengthened land values in cotton-producing areas.

Another factor has been the long-term payments under CRP, where farmers can get annual rental payments for planting grass and trees on fragile land. Those payments have been averaging around $50 per acre each year for the 10-year life of the contracts.

In his report in Agricultural Outlook magazine, Hexem cited survey results from a number of sources that point to rising farmland values. Last November, for example, more than 500 farmland experts, all members of the American Society of Farm Managers and Rural Appraisers, were surveyed by the University of Wisconsin for the USDA agency.

"Over one-third of the respondents indicated that land values rose during the August-October (1987) quarter, while over one-half considered values unchanged," Hexem said. "Less than a tenth indicated lower values."

Those reponses "point to a strengthening of the market" since last May, June and July, when only 28 percent thought farmland values had gone up and nearly 18 percent thought they had dropped, he said.

For November, December and January, the rural appraisers expected continued increases in farmland values, Hexem said. Surveys last August, September and October by several Federal Reserve Banks tend to support the national survey by the appraisers.

"The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago, representing Iowa and parts of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin and Michigan, reported that values for good farmland increased just over 3 percent during the third quarter, compared with a 2 percent gain in the preceding quarter," he said.

But "some uncertainties remain" in the 1988 land market, Hexem said. On the up side, demand for farm products is rising, and there are more manageable inventory levels. The CRP "seems to be strengthening prices for lower-quality land in some areas."

On the down side, farm income is forecast to be down from last year's record level, in which federal payments accounted for 30 percent of the net cash income of farmers. Crop target prices and price support loan rates will be down about 3 percent in 1988, and current legislation calls for further reductions in 1989.

USDA labels hams found in grocery

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has some advice for those who may be planning Easter dinners around hams.

There are three types of hams most commonly found in supermarkets, according to USDA home economists. Those are labeled "ham" or "ham-with natural juices" or "ham-water added."

"From the nutrition standpoint, the product labeled 'ham' is the highest protein, while 'ham-with natural juices' is the next highest, and 'ham-water added' has the least," they said Tuesday in a report.

Those hams don't include another type, the country ham or dry-cured ham that has been dried and cured with salt, smoked and aged, the report said. Those are easy to identify from their burlap wrappings.

Country hams require special treatment and cooking procedures, which are usually described on labels, the report said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — China has bought an addition 405,000 metric tons of U.S. wheat at subsidized prices for delivery in the 1987-88 marketing year, according to the Agriculture Department.

The sales, equal to almost 14.9 million bushels, were handled by five companies: Cargill Inc., 135,000 tons; Nichimen America Inc., 35,000; Bunge Corp., 35,000; Continental Grain Co., 100,000; and Artfer Inc., 100,000.

William L. Davis, acting general sales manager for the department's Foreign Agricultural Service, said Monday the sales were part of an authorized 1.2 million tons of wheat announced Feb. 5 under the Export Enhancement Program, or EEP.

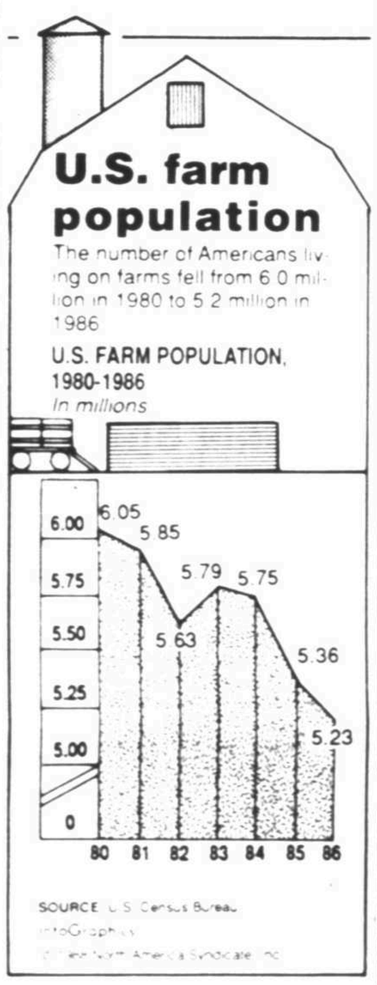
Although no selling prices or other details were announced, recent prices of wheat at farm points have averaged around $2.76 per bushel, indicating a U.S. farm value of about $41 million.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat.

China bought more than 4 million tons of wheat under previous EEP arrangements, which allow exporters to sell commodities at reduced prices in order to meet foreign competition and then collect free government surpluses of grain or other commodities as bonuses, or subsidies.

Davis said the bonuses due the five companies averaged $40.38 per ton, or about $1.10 per bushel of wheat. The bonuses will be paid in the form of surplus commodities owned by the department's Commodity Credit Corp.

China has 495,000 tons remaining for use under the EEP initiative announced on Feb. 5, he said.



Farm population lowest in century, figures indicate

WASHINGTON (AP) — New government figures show that the nation's farm population dropped last year to below 5 million, the lowest total in more than a century.

An Agriculture Department historian says the current U.S. farm population could well be the lowest since James Monroe was president 170 years ago.

The Census Bureau said that an estimated 4,986,000 people lived on farms in 1987, 240,000 fewer than in 1986 and the smallest total since records have been kept.

The Census Bureau started issuing a separate count of farm residents only in 1920, but Agriculture Department estimates go back much further, with an 1880 estimate of 21.9 million Americans on farms.

The current farm population is not the lowest ever, because the 4.9 million total is more than the nation's total population of 3.9 million counted in the 1790 Census, the nation's first.

By 1800, the total U.S. population had climbed to 5.3 million, but no breakdown of the urban-rural porportion is available for that date.

Douglas E. Bowers, USDA historian, estimated that the last time there were fewer than 5 million farmers in the country was about 1820. While exact figures have not been computed, he said some estimates can be derived.

In 1840, for example, the U.S. population was about 17 million. Farm people were estimated at 9 million and were reported to comprise 69 percent of the nation's labor force.

Bowers said the U.S. population in 1820 was 9.6 million and that the farm population was estimated to make up 72 percent of the labor force. Thus, he said in a telephone interview, the farm population was probably around 5 million.

The U.S. farm population grew to a peak of 32.5 million in 1916 and stayed near 30 million until World War II, when a steady decline began. The total fell below 30 million in 1942, dropped under 20 million in 1953 and fell below the 10 million mark in 1970.

The 1987 figure means that about 2 percent of the nation's population live on farms.

Soil temperature during planting effects how well seeds germinate

Kiker

In many cases the early bird does get the worm. But when it comes to spring planting, farmers may want to use a little restraint and take a look at soil temperatures before cranking up their planters. One of the keys to getting spring crops off to a good start is to heed soil temperatures. They have been shown to have an important effect on how well seeds germinate. Planting in cool soils often leads to poor seed germination and poor crop stands. Plants that do come up often lack vigor for early growth. This opens the door to early season disease and inset attacks.

Farmers should begin planting only after the danger of a late frost is past and the soil has warmed to temperatures favorable to the intended crop. Farmers also need to keep atuned to weather forecasts prior to planting. A sudden change in weather conditions following planting can be detrimental to the crop, particularly a cool, wet spell that can drasrically lower soil temperatures.

Average minimum — safe — temperatures (at the four-inch depth) for planting are as follows: corn, 50 degrees; sorghum, 55 degrees; cotton, 65 degrees; soybeans, 70 degrees. Minimum, rather than average temperatures should be used for rice and peanuts; rice, 60 degrees; peanuts, 70 degrees.

Hardy vegetables such as onions, cabbage and potatoes can be planted once soil temperatures range between 45 and 50 degrees, while warm-season vegetables such as tomatoes, melons, beans and peppers need soil that has warmed to the 60s.

With early season planting, particularly when soil temperatures are still marginal, farmers need to pay strict attention to using high quality seed, fungicides and other seed protectorants, and adjusting seeding rates.

Daily readings are taken at various locations throughout Texas in cooperation with the Extension Service, the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, the National Weather Service and individual cooperators. For example, the regional temperature reading for North Texas is based on temperatures at Lavon Dam northeast of Dallas, while readings at Lufkin and Longview make up the East Texas average. Regional readings are also made for the High Plains, Trans-Pecos area, Coastal Plains, South Texas and the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

As temperatures are collected, they are included in daily agricultural weather advisories issued for each of the regions by the National Weather Service's Southwest Agricultural Weather Service Center at Texas A&M University. The advisories are fed into National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration weather teletype system to be received by commercial radio and television stations. The advisories are also carried over the NOAA Weather Radio Network.

Specific temperature readings for about 40 locations also are distributed daily through regular weather service dissemination channels.

Keeping tabs on the weather and soil conditions can help farmers get off to a good start with spring planting. With the high cost of farm inputs, it's information that should be put to good use.

Earnest C. Kiker is Midland County Extension Agent for Agriculture.

RICHARD MINZENMAYER

Minzenmayer

Old house borers are members of a large beetle family called the long horned beetles, named because of their long antennae.

The adult insects are large beetles, the females are about one-inch long and the males ⅛-inch long. Adult old house borers are slightly flattened, gray-black to brown-black with gray or yellow-gray hairs on the upper surface of the body. These hairs may be rubbed off on the older beetles.

Old house borer larvae are worm-like and are found boring in soft woods such as pine. These larvae are creamy-white and up to 1¼ inches long when mature. This stage has prominent chewing mouthparts and very tiny legs on the first three body segments (thorax).

Old house borers were imported from Europe in infested lumber. They can infest old or new houses and are the only longhorned beetles that can infest seasoned lumber. These insects feed only on coniferous lumber such as pine, spruce, fir and hemlock.

These adults emerge in early summer, living about 16 days, during which the females lay 150 to 200 eggs in checks, cracks or crevices of suitable wood. The larvae that hatch bore into the wood and develop during the next two to 10 years, with the majority taking from three to five years to reach the pupal stage. The pupal stage lasts only about two weeks, but the new adults may remain in the tunnels for seven to 10 months before emerging.

The larvae feed on the wood, the suitability of which is determined by its protein content. The rasping and ticking of their feeding activity is often the first sign of an infestation. The galleries are filled with fine frass (manure) mixed with small bun-shaped pellets. The surface of infested wood often has a wavy, through oval holes that are ¼ inch in diameter.

Old house borer infestations may be discovered by 1) hearing the feeding of the larvae within the wood; 2) the presence of larvae in the wood; 3) the presence of the fine frass with bunshaped pellets in the tunnels; 4) the emergency holes of the adult or; 5) the presence of the adults.

Control of old house borers is most surely accomplished by fumigating the structure with sulfuryl fluoride or methyl bromide. These fumigants kill existing populations but do not prevent future infestations. The use of preservative treated lumber in construction or the treatment of lumber used in construction with lindane or appropriately labeled chlorpyrifos, heptachlor or lindane will provide protection against future old house borer infestations.

Richard Minzenmayer is Extension Agent for Entomology in Midland, Martin and Howard counties.

STATE

DHS study says more workers needed, as well as higher wages

ABILENE (AP) — A spokeswoman for an embattled Department of Human Services office is welcoming a department study that says more workers are needed to staff a child-abuse hotline and wages need to be increased.

"We think that's a step in the right direction," DHS spokeswoman Pat Ayala said Thursday from her office in El Paso. "We've been saying we've been understaffed and not highly paid for a while."

The state Board of Human Services received the report Thursday at its meeting in Abilene. The department-conducted study was prompted by problems in the handling of child-abuse cases in El Paso and other cities.

The state attorney general's office is conducting its own investigation into the El Paso DHS office at the request of County Attorney Joe Lucas. The DHS also has commissioned an independent study due in August.

The report recommends adding eight more people to a 24-hour abuse hotline by June 1 and hiring additional staff for the department that receives child-abuse reports and decides whether to follow up on them. Employees of that department, called the intake department, should receive higher pay and more training to cut down on turnover, the report said.

The study calls for intake personnel to receive specialized training in areas such as sexual abuse and other types of physical abuse.

"I think it's wonderful, the idea of giving specific training to people in intake," Ms. Ayala said.

The study also called for the creation of rural intake centers, each serving several local DHS offices. Trained workers at the intake centers would handle child-abuse complaints, instead of relatively little-trained workers at local offices.

The initial funding for the new hotline staff and additional training will be paid for with an already approved federal grant, Ms. Ayala said. The state would have to pay in the next fiscal year, she said.

Lucas and District Judge Enrique Pena have criticized the El Paso DHS office for problems Ms. Ayala blamed on understaffing.

Lucas requested the attorney general's investigation in January after it was revealed that DHS workers knew, but did nothing about, a teenage prostitute whose mother admitted supplying her heroin.

In another case cited by Lucas, an infant boy died of brain damage caused by alleged abuse, even though there had been a report of abuse two months earlier. The report was not followed up because of a staff shortage, Lucas said.

In yet another case, two boys died on Christmas 1986 when their father set fire to their house shortly after the DHS returned the boys to the father's custody.

Investigator Mike Feary of the attorney general's office spoke to Lucas and Pena when he visited El Paso Feb. 17, a spokeswoman said.

Texas agriculture officials go Far East to sell products

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Agriculture Department officials are headed to international food shows across the Far East during the next six weeks to help promote marketing of state agricultural products.

Andy Welch, TDA spokesman, Thursday said the trip would include stops in seven countries between March 16 and April 27.

During the trip, TDA officials will attend food shows and meet with government officials.

"Personal contact with pubic officials, importers and other foreign business leaders is an important step in developing and expanding export marketers for Texas agricultural products," said Paul Lewis, TDA international marketing director.

"During the past 15 months, buyers from Thailand bought more than $600,000 in Texas breeding cattle and livestock semen. TDA worked closely with Thai businesses to cultivate this market, and we anticipate even more sales as a result," Lewis said.

Teen arrested after trying to impersonate vice officer

AUSTIN (AP) — A 17-year-old is free on $3,000 bond after police said he donned a sheriff-style uniform and pistol, then tried to convince employees at four motels that he was a lawman making a prostitution bust.

The Williamson County youth was arrested on charges of impersonating a public officer, authorities said.

"It's hard enough for us to convince people that we are cops to have guys running out there pretending they are," said vice investigator Earl Hall.

Hall said the youth allegedly handcuffed an escort service employee when she met him at one motel, then took her to three more where he sought a room to make a prostitution arrest.

Hall gave this account:

A young man wearing a brown sheriff-style uniform, a heavy police-type jacket and a gun belt with .38-caliber snub-nose pistol entered a motel Feb. 24.

The youth identified himself as a member of the Williamson County Sheriff's Department assigned to a "warrant and arrest team" on a prostitution case.

The man used the motel office phone to call for an escort from an Austin escort service. He asked for a room in which to make an arrest. The man went to a room, and a woman from the escort service arrived.

The woman was told she was under arrest for prostitution, but the man implied that he would let her go if she had sex with him.

The motel's manager arrived and wanted the man to pay for the room. The young man handcuffed the escort to a bar in the room's bathroom while he argued with the manager.

The youth took the woman and went to two other motels, where he asked for rooms to make an arrest.

Texas has good chance at SSC, Phil Gramm says

DENTON (AP) — Texas stands a good chance of landing the proposed federal "super collider" project, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm says.

"We still have a dog in the hunt," Gramm, R-Texas, said Thursday of the seven-state competition among finalists hoping to attract the $4.4 billion research project.

Texas is making progress in garnering its fair share of research and economic development money, Gramm said. As examples he cited the relocation of J.C. Penney Co. from New York to Plano, the choice of Austin for the Sematech semiconductor research consortium, and the attraction of two new naval bases to the state.

"We're making great strides. But this (the super collider) is an opportunity for us to make a quantum leap," Gramm said.

Other sites still in the running for the project include Illinois, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arizona, Michigan and Colorado.

Texas has proposed an Ellis County site south of Dallas, near Waxahachie.

Gramm made the remarks at North Texas State University Thursday where he toured the school's new $1.5 million particle accelerator lab. The former Texas A&M professor also used the visit to tout increased cooperative efforts between business and higher education as a means to bolster the economy.

Texas Instruments contributed about $600,000 to the NTSU particle accelerator and is sharing the facility in tests measuring the purity of semiconductors. TI had tested materials at the University of Arizona before NTSU's accelerator became operational in January.

Such cooperation "creates more industry, better jobs, higher living standards and a more competitive American economy," Gramm said, adding that there are 800 electronics semiconductor firms within 50 miles of Denton that could benefit from NTSU's accelerator.

NTSU physicists say the accelerator is used in materials characterization, a process for discerning the purity of a substance at the atomic level. It is especially useful in the production of semiconductors, testing atomic structure at a rate of parts per trillion.

STATE IN BRIEF

Working mother comments hurt judge, opponent says

EL PASO (AP) — Ill-received comments about working mothers and a negative endorsement by his ex-wife and six children contributed to District Judge John McKellips' trouncing in the Democratic primary, his opponent says.

"Judge McKellips has some name recognition that is negative, and it's very hard for a candidate to overcome negative name recognition," said the winner, Mary Anne Brambiett. "I kept my campaign clean and on the issues. That's why I did so well."

Ms. Brambiett, an assistant county attorney, beat the incumbent McKellips 32,412 to 10,752 on Tuesday. She faces no Republican opposition in November for the 41st district judge's bench.

Ms. Brambiett said McKellips' troubles might have started with his well-publicized divorce in 1985. Lillian McKellips accused him of having an affair with his 1984 campaign manager, Margaret Randle. He married Ms. Randle two months after the divorce.

In a speech at a sheriff's deputies' meeting, McKellips cited motherhood as a reason Ms. Brambiett was not qualified to be judge.

"She had to take some time out for maternity leave to have two small children, so I don't know how much time she's actually spent working as an attorney," he told the deputies.

But McKellips also criticized working mothers by linking them to overcrowded prisons.

"What do we do (about crowded prisons)? Well, we can start in our homes," he said. "Mothers can stay home and raise their children during the formative years."

It's peach blossom time

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Waylon, Willie and the boys probably will not want to go to Luckenbach this weekend if they are looking for a peachy time.

They most likely would prefer wandering roads a few miles north of there between here and Stonewall.

Gillespie County agricultural extension agents have predicted that Saturday and Sunday will be the best time this season to view peach blossoms in full bloom between the two Hill Country communities.

Officials are expecting to produce a bumper crop this year on the 2,000 acres of orchards that make Gillespie County the state's largest peach-producing area.

That certainly is good news for fruit producers, who had small crops the past two years.

Horticulturists said trees are loaded with buds and should be in full bloom between Thursday and March 20. Officials said blooms still might be beautiful beyond that date if the weather remains warm.

Experts said about 600 acres of peach trees can be seen by driving two to three miles north of U.S. Highway 290 on Gellermann, which is located one mile west of Stonewall.

The most picturesque orchards on U.S. Highway 87 are located about five or six miles south of Fredericksburg.

Woman killed at desk

ROBSTOWN (AP) — A records clerk who had begun divorce proceedings against her husband was shot to death at her desk just outside the police chief's office, officials said.

Rachel Guzman, 33, was shot three times and patrol officer Lynn Martin also was wounded in the shoot-out Wednesday just outside Police Chief Roy De Alejandro's office.

Her estranged husband, Edward Guzman, 31, was wounded in each arm during a shoot-out with three police officers in the office after his wife was slain, the chief said.

Both Guzman and Martin, 30, remained in Riverside Hospital Thursday.

Avalanche hits royal Swiss ski trip, kills one

Lindsay

KLOSTERS, Switzerland (AP) — Prince Charles was reported found trembling and weeping after an avalanche swept two close friends in his skiing party down a steep, unmarked Alpine slope, killing one and breaking the other's legs.

Charles, the Prince of Wales and heir to the British throne, escaped unhurt.

The loose snow cascaded down as Charles, 39, and five companions were skiing Thursday at about 5,800 feet in an area of the Swiss Alps that authorities earlier in the day warned was prone to avalanches. The area was off the main skiing trails.

Charles' wife, Diana, and sister-in-law, the Duchess of York, were safe in a chalet when the avalanche struck. The duchess, the former Sarah Ferguson, is married to Charles' younger brother, Prince Andrew, and is expecting the couple's first child in August.

Maj. Hugh Lindsay, 34, was killed on the spot. Patricia Palmer-Tomkinson was knocked unconscious and suffered fractures on both legs.

According a statement from Buckingham Palace, "All members of the party were in a position to take avoiding action with the exception of Maj. Lindsay and Mrs. Palmer-Tomkinson who were both caught in the avalanche."

Charles helped dig the injured and unconscious Mrs. Palmer-Tomkinson from under the snow. He also aided in freeing the body of Lindsay, said Press Association, the British domestic news agency.

The two victims had been swept about 400 yards down the slope.

Mrs. Palmer-Tomkinson regained consciousness after mouth-to-mouth resuscitation on the scene. A helicopter took her to Davos, where she underwent surgery for multiple fractures of both legs and was reported in satisfactory condition this morning in a hospital intensive care unit.

Lindsay was the 12th snowslide victim of the winter in Switzerland.

Will Panama civilians be paid?

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — The military regime of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega made its army payroll, but Panama's deposed president and economists predicted it will not be able to pay civil servants next week.

That could further erode support for the general, chief of the 15,000-strong Panama Defense Forces and considered the real power behind Panama's civilian government.

The government had to withdraw substantial funds from the central National Bank of Panama and divert receipts from state-owned utilities in order to back the army payroll Thursday, diplomatic sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

In other developments Thursday, Panama's banks defied a government order to reopen on a limited scale, saying there simply wasn't enough cash available to do business.

In Washington, the House voted overwhelmingly to demand Noriega's ouster, and the Reagan administration considered imposing sanctions on Panama, including withholding payments for Panama Canal operations due by March 15.

Also, the Panamanian government ordered five private television stations to close indefinitely.

Eric Arturo Delvalle, whose Noriega-orchestrated removal from the presidency Feb. 26 led to U.S. economic pressure, predicted the government would not be able to meet its mid-March payrolls for public employees.

"The government will not be able to pay all civil servants and that will create another problem," Delvalle said.

Delvalle, who has been in hiding since his ouster, made the statement in a tape-recorded response to written questions from The Chicago Tribune.

He was dismissed hours after he tried to fire Noriega, who is under federal indictment in the United States on charges of trafficking in Colombian cocaine and money laundering.

Attorneys representing Delvalle, who still is recognized by the United States as Panama's legitimate president, have blocked the transfer of an estimated $50 million in Panamanian government funds held in U.S. banks.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Japanese banks wait for Panama interest

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese banks will "wait for the time being" for overdue interest and principal payments by Panama of $40.6 million in bonds, a Japanese banking official said today.

Panama missed Thursday's deadline for the payments owed to an unspecified number of Japanese commercial banks — $39.06 million in principal and $1.56 million in interest, said a Bank of Tokyo official who insisted on anonymity.

The Bank of Tokyo, along with Yamaichi Securities Co., are the lead agents for the 10-year bonds, which Panama issued in March 1978.

"We will wait for the time being as the Panamanian side has recently confirmed it is delaying the payments" because of a freeze on Panamanian assets held by U.S. banks, the official said.

According to Japanese banking sources, Panama earlier told its Japanese creditors a freeze in U.S. aid money to the country in the wake of a confrontation between Washington and the military regime of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega would make it difficult to honor the transaction.

The United States is attempting to oust Noriega, who has been indicted in Florida on drug trafficking charges.

Briton recalls kidnapping

LONDON (AP) — Relief worker Peter Coleridge, released after six days of questioning by Palestinian gunmen in Lebanon, returned and said the long-term hostages there must be going through something "very close to hell."

"It was thoughts of my family which kept me going," Coleridge told a news conference after he was reunited with his wife and three children at Heathrow Airport on Thursday, two days after his captors freed him.

Coleridge, 44, Middle East coordinator of the British charity and relief organization Oxfam, was seized in Sidon March 3 after taking photographs at the Ein el-Hilweh refugee camp there.

Also captured was his Syrian aide, Omar Traboulsi, 31. After daily interrogations, they were both released Tuesday.

"I was very much aware that I was arguing for my life," said Coleridge. "If they were in any way not convinced, it would not have turned out as well as it has."

Nine killed in hijacking

MOSCOW (NYT) — A woman led several of her seven sons — jazz musicians who hid weapons in their instrument cases — in the hijacking of a Soviet airliner Wednesday in which nine people were killed, official accounts said Thursday.

The mother and sons were among 11 members of the same family who boarded the flight in the Siberian city of Irkutsk, apparently hoping they could force the crew to take them to London instead of Leningrad, the plane's final destination, according to the accounts.

The reports indicated that the government's handling of the hijacking, including an armed assault to free the passengers at an airfield near Leningrad, was inadequately planned and contributed to the death toll.

Three passengers, one flight attendant and five hijackers died in the incident, which was first disclosed in a brief news bulletin Wednesday.

The extensive, although still incomplete, coverage of the hijacking went well beyond the reporting of previous domestic hijackings and provided an unusual glimpse of how the authorities here deal with such a situation. Like hijackings in the West, the case raised questions about airport security.

Quake shakes Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — An earthquake that shook most of Costa Rica swayed tall buildings in the capital and sent people fleeing from their homes as windows shattered in southern cities, authorities said.

There were no immediate reports of injuries in Thursday night's quake, which was centered near the Panamanian border.

The quake occurred at 9:46 p.m. and registered 5.6 on the Richter scale, said a San Jose's fire official, adding that it was centered near Buenos Aires — 70 miles southeast of the capital and 26 miles from Panama.

"The glass windows of many homes broke in the towns of Buenos Aires, Ciudad Neily and San Isidro," said the official, who refused to be further identified. San Isidro is 48 miles southeast of San Jose. Ciudad Neily is seven miles from the Panamanian border.

Mexican inflation declines

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Consumer prices rose 8.3 percent in February but only 2.8 percent in the last half of the month, an indication that the government's inflation-fighting program is working, the central bank said.

The Bank of Mexico report Wednesday noted the rate was well below the 15.5 percent in January.

It said there was the prospect, "based on the two-week variation of 2.8 percent and the favorable behavior of the principal fiscal and financial variables, of strong further reductions in the inflationary rates."

As part of its program, called the Economic Solidarity Pact, the government has said prices on officially regulated items will be frozen for the month of March and the peso, which has been steadily devaluing against the dollar, will be held steady.

A minimum wage increase was held to 3 percent for the month, below what was expected.

The biggest price increases, both for the month of February and the last two weeks of the month, were in furniture and domestic goods, including appliances, soaps and paper articles, the bank said. For the month, prices on those articles jumped 16.2 percent.

Health and personal items, clothes and shoes and educational services were among others with substantial increases.

Also rising were rent; some foods, including basics such as cooking oil, processed milk, corn and wheat flour, rice and beans; automobiles; insurance; books, newspapers and school materials; alcoholic beverages, and cigarettes.

The cities with the highest increases were Matamoros, across the border from Brownsville, Texas, the northern city of Chihuahua and Cordoba, in the Gulf coast state of Veracruz.

Israelis plan self-defense, kill two Arabs

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops wounded two Palestinians in the Gaza Strip and 500 Jewish settlers met in the West Bank to plan self-protection measures against what they view as increasing threat from Arabs in nearby Hebron.

Israel radio reported that as the settlers gathered in Kiryat Arba, Israeli soldiers clashed with Arab demonstrators who burned tires and set up roadblocks in Hebron.

There were no casualties, but 10 Palestinians were arrested, the radio reported.

Police in northern Israel arrested four Israeli Arabs suspected of throwing firebombs on roads leading to Israeli towns.

In Jerusalem, three Arabs were detained after police discovered three firebombs in a busy industrial area in the southern part of the city.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres warned that the Jewish state would lose an opportunity to make peace by passing up the initiative of U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

But bout 1,000 Jewish women living along Israel's northern border urged Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir not to give in to American pressure.

The army command said an Israeli patrol fired on Palestinian protesters in the Shati refugee camp near Gaza City after rock-throwing demonstrators surrounded the soldiers. An army spokesman said one protester was hit in the chest and taken to an Israeli hospital.

Hospital officials in Gaza said two protesters were in critical condition with gunshot wounds in the chest and abdomen.

In Kiryat Arba, outside Hebron, Jewish settlers worried that Palestinians are organizing to attack Jewish homes in the Hebron area demanded the right to set up a civil guard and called on the army to take tougher measures.

Hebron is a city of 50,000 Arabs with two small Jewish enclaves.

Two Arab Bedouins were arrested for throwing stones at a car near Carmiel in Galilee.

Peres, head of the left-centrist Labor Party, said upon receiving an honorary doctorate from Hebrew Union College in Jerusalem that Israel would be making a fateful decision in the next few weeks.

"In 40 days time there is a chance that direct negotiations may start between a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation and an Israeli delegation," he said.

"In 40 days we may lose the opportunity as well, and the grayness of hesitation, of suspicion, of postponement may cover our skies again for time to come."

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin urged the Labor Party to demand new elections if Shamir rejected the U.S. peace initiative.

"We must not go on as if nothing has happened if the initiative is rejected against our will," Rabin told party officials Thursday.

"We must bring it to a decision in elections. We may not succeed in this but it is our moral duty to do so."

Shamir received a letter from 1,000 Jewish mothers living in settlements along Israel's northern border, in which they urged him not to accept Shultz's plan.

The letter said: "We who have raised our children under Katyusha rockets and spent many nights of fear in bomb shelters, ask you not to make more mothers live in the shadow of fear."

Shamir flies to Washington next week to discuss the initiative one more time before announcing whether he accepts it or not.

Prep swimmers shoot for Austin

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK— The Region I 5A swimming meet will begin tonight with diving at the Texas Tech pool while racing preliminaries will be held Saturday morning and finals Saturday night and both Midland and Midland Lee figure to be prime contenders in the team title.

In the district meet at Abilene two weeks ago, San Angelo won the boys title followed by Midland Lee with Midland High and Odessa Permian tied for third.

Midland's girls, led by Michaela Hasek who won the 100-back and 200-IM, took first place in the girls team competition, beating out Midland Lee, 86-55.

The top six swimmers at district qualify for Region I.

The first place finishers at region qualify for state and then the eight best times in all state regional meets combined make up the remainder of the field.

State will be at Austin in two weeks.

Top Tall City threats here this weekend besides Hasek include Meredith Secker, 100-free winner; Kristen Henry, second in the 100-butterfly, both from Midland High; and Stephanie Reed, two seconds, and divers Ann Sullivan and Amy Palmer from Lee.

Chicago bulls past Lakers

NBA

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 17 of his 38 points in the third quarter Thursday night to lead the Chicago Bulls to their first victory over the Los Angeles Lakers at Chicago Stadium in six years, 128-107.

Chicago's victory, the Bulls' first over the defending world champions since Dec. 2, 1984, snapped the Lakers' four-game winning streak. The last time the Lakers had lost at Chicago Stadium was Jan. 8, 1982.

Charles Oakley had 20 points, 11 rebounds and eight assists for Chicago.

Jordan scored eight points and Oakley had four during a 16-6 Chicago third-quarter run in the span of 4:25 as the Bulls opened up an 81-68 advantage.

The Lakers lost Magic Johnson with 2:14 remaining in the first quarter with a groin injury. Johnson, who scored seven points, sat out the remainder of the contest.

James Worthy had 21 points and Byron Scott 20 to lead the Lakers.

Trail Blazers 112, Rockets 109

HOUSTON — Clyde Drexler scored 33 points, a career-high for him against Houston, and Kevin Duckworth had 30 points and 13 rebounds to lead the Portland Trail Blazers to a 112-109 victory over the Rockets.

The victory snapped Portland's five-game losing streak to the Rockets.

Jerome Kersey added 19 points and 11 rebounds for Portland, which has won seven straight games and tied the club record for consecutive road victories at five.

Warriors 128, Nets 112

OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris Mullin scored 26 points and reserve guard Steve Harris had a career-high 24 as the Golden State Warriors snapped an eight-game losing streak.

Birdies, eagles, even a seagull

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Birdies, even eagles, are not all that uncommon on the PGA Tour. But sea gulls?

Ronnie Black scored seven birdies in a wind-blown, rain-dampened 67 that gave him the first round lead in the $700,000 Honda Classic. And Fred Wadsworth scored two eagles in a round of 69.

Brad Faxon managed a 70, despite an encounter with a meddlesome sea gull that prompted an arm-waving run by a marshal and a ruling by a chuckling PGA Tour official.

There were few chuckles from the players, however.

"The conditions were just awful," Faxon said of the wind and rain.

But all were upstaged by the sea gull.

Faxon, Bruce Fleisher and Bruce Lietzke, playing the first hole of the TPC course at Eagle Trace, all hit their drives down the middle of the fairway.

"But when we got down there," Faxon said, "there were only two balls in the fairway. The marshal came running out to tell us about the sea gull."

It seems the gull scooped up Faxon's ball in his beak, flew 50 yards into the rough and deposited the ball into a hazard, about a foot from a lake.

The bird then returned to the fairway and was nudging Fleisher's ball in the same direction when the shouting, arm-waving marshal scared it away.

"We didn't know what to do," Faxon said. "So we called for a ruling. When (PGA Tour official) Mike Shea got there, we told him about it.

UNLV, BYU survive scares

Nevada-Las Vegas and Brigham Young were expecting to be challenged in their conference tournaments. They just didn't think it would happen so soon.

The Runnin' Rebels, ranked seventh and top seed in the PCAA, were pushed by Fullerton State before surviving 61-56 in a first-round game. BYU, ranked 17th, had even more trouble — and on its home court, no less, against a last-place team. The Cougars edged Hawaii 76-74.

Two teams earned NCAA bids with conference tournament championships Thursday night. Fairleigh Dickinson beat Monmouth 90-75 for the ECAC Metro crown, while North Texas State took the Southland with an 87-70 victory over Northeast Louisiana.

In the only regular-season contest involving a ranked team, No. 15 Iowa routed Wisconsin 103-70.

Pacific Coast

UNLV had just enough to avoid the upset. Clint Rossum had all of his 10 points in the second half and played an especially significant role after Jarvis Basnight fouled out with 3:54 to go.

Richard Morton had 28 points for the Titans, who never trailed by more than six points.

The victory was the 500th for Nevada-Las Vegas Coach Jerry Tarkanian. But, as he watched the game he began to worry that he would be stuck on 499.

Wayne Engelstad had 31 points and a season-high 15 rebounds for Cal-Irvine, which had lost three straight before surprising Long Beach State 74-69. Andre Purry scored 26 points for the fourth-seeded 49ers, who ended the season 17-11.

Cal-Irvine plays UNLV tonight.

Dan Conway scored a career-high 28 points as second-seeded Utah State got past San Jose State 80-72. Reid Newey added 22 points for the Aggies, 19-9.

Western Athletic

Brigham Young nearly wound up on the sidelines in an embarrasing manner. The Cougars, who managed just a two-point victory at Hawaii this season, barely survived on their home court against the 4-25 Rainbows.

A tip-in by Jeff Chatman with 1:43 remaining was the difference in the game, which ended after four shots by Hawaii failed to drop in the final seconds.

Four WAC teams have been ranked this season and entered the tournament hopeful of NCAA bids. BYU and second-seeded Wyoming seem certain to receive invitations. Texas-El Paso and New Mexico were on the edge and had to play each other in the quarterfinals.

It was no contest as UTEP avenged a pair of regular-season losses to New Mexico with a 74-61 decision. Chris Sandle, playing on a sore ankle, scored 22 points and Tim Hardaway added 20. New Mexico was hampered by the loss of starting forward Antonio Davis, who was hurt in the first half.

While the Miners, 22-8, are the only team to advance to the semifinals of the tournament in each of its five years — UTEP is the only school with two WAC tournament titles — New Mexico must wait and see if its 20-13 record will get it into the big tourney.

Lincoln, Hirschi advance to 4A finals

AUSTIN (AP) - Marlon Jackson scored 13 points, including a game-winning layup, to lead Port Arthur Lincoln to a 64-62 overtime win over Lancaster Thursday in the boys Class 4A state basketball semifinals.

In the other 4A semifinal Wichita Falls Hirschi used a running offense and 22 points from Reggie Flenoy to beat San Antonio Alamo Heights 70-54.

Lincoln and Hirschi will play Saturday for the 4A title.

Lancaster, 28-3, led 58-54 with 2:17 to play in regulation time. But Lincoln, 28-4, tied it at 59 with 44 seconds to play when Bryan Sallier hit two free throws for the final points before the overtime.

Jerrold Wright gave Lancaster the lead at 62-61 when he hit a free throw with 1:38 to play in the extra period. But Jackson hit a layup 16 seconds later to give the Bumblebees the lead for good.

Rodden Green added a Lincoln free throw for the final margin.

Thomas Hill led Lancaster with 25 points.

In Thursday's Class 3A semifinals Sweeny beat Dimmitt 67-53 and Corpus Christi West Oso beat Wills Point 68-57.

In Class A play, Paducah beat Graford 62-39, and Livingston Big Sandy beat Ladonia Fannindel 72-71 in double overtime.

All finals are Saturday.

Hirschi, 25-8, built a 33-11 halftime lead over Alamo Heights, 31-4, and was never threatened in the second half.

The losing Mules were led by Rob Stevens' 15 points. Flenoy, a six-foot senior, got most of his 22 points for Hirschi on strong drives.

In Class 3A, defending champ Sweeny, 26-6, used a near-perfect performance by Benford Williams, who scored 36, to beat Dimmitt.

The 6-5 Williams, a Texas Longhorn signee hit on 13 of 14 shots, including seven of eight three-pointers. He had 25 points in the first half as Sweeny built a 40-25 lead. Williams' only miss of the game came on his first three-pointer.

Warren McDonald led Dimmitt, 30-6, with 19 points.

West Oso, 34-2, got 19 points each from Lance Harper and Brian Green in its win over Wills Point, 27-8. The losing Tigers were led by Chris Howard's 16 points.

In Class A defending state champion Paducah, 32-0, was paced by Bryan Barnes' 26 points in its win over Graford.

Paducah sealed its win by outscoring Graford 20-6 in the second quarter to build a 30-18 halftime lead.

Graford, 34-3, pulled to within seven points in the third quarter. The Jackrabbits' top scorer was Brian Lemley with 21 points.

Barnes, a 6-6 junior, had eight rebounds to go with his 26 points for Paducah.

Big Sandy was led by senior Joel Williams' 30 points, including six in overtime.

Fannindel led 10-0 in the first quarter but was slowed when Fred Woods, their 6-4 forward and leading scorer, got into early foul trouble.

The Falcons played ost of the game with no player taller than six feet. Woods fouled out with 5:01 to play in regulation time. He had 10 points.

Williams, a 6-2 post player, scored all four of Big Sandy's points in the second overtime. His layup with 2:10 to play gave the Wildcats the winning points.

Bruce Jones led Fannindel, 33-2, with 25 points.

Raines raises average to .588

Associated Press

Tim Raines went 2-for-3 with a homer to raise his spring batting average to .588, leading the Montreal Expos to a 6-0 victory Thursday over the Baltimore Orioles. Tim Wallach and Alonzo Powell also homered for the Expos.

Dennis Martinez and three other pitchers combined to shut out the Orioles on nine hits. Martinez worked three innings, allowing five hits — all singles — for the victory.

Yankees 8, Rangers 6

Rickey Henderson homered twice, singled and scored another run to lead the Yankees over Texas. Henderson's first homer led off the game, and his second broke a 4-4 tie with two out in the fifth.

Pete O'Brien hit his second home run of the season leading off the second inning for Texas.

Phillies 10, Reds 3

Mike Schmidt drove in three runs, two with his first spring homer, as Philadelphia beat Cincinnati. The loss was the fourth in a row for the Reds.

Schmidt's third-inning homer came off Jack Armstrong after Chris James had doubled.

Pirates 2, Tigers 1

Darnell Coles homered in his first spring at-bat, and Doug Drabek pitched three scoreless innings to lead Pittsburgh over Detroit. The Pirates' second run scored when center fielder Gary Pettis dropped a popup by John Cangelosi.

Mets 7, Braves 3

Keith Miller had three hits and John Gibbons homered to lead New York over Atlanta. The victory was the second straight for the Mets after four consecutive losses to start their spring season.

Astros 7, Dodgers 6

William Brennan balked in the winning run with two out in the ninth inning to give Houston its victory and hand Los Angeles its first first spring loss.

Brennan's balk, the fourth called in the game, followed a run-scoring single by Jim Pankovits. The Astros had taken a 5-4 lead with four runs in the eighth on a run-scoring single by Pankovits, a balk by Jay Howell and RBI grounders by Louie Meadows and Kevin Bass.

Cardinals 12, White Sox 4

Jim Lindeman hit a bases-loaded triple in a six-run first inning against Jack McDowell, and St. Louis beat the winless White Sox. Chicago committed seven errors, including three by new third baseman Ken Williams.

Indians 6, Angels 2

Julio Franco and Brook Jacoby had two hits apiece as Cleveland beat California.

Angels first baseman Wally Joyner commited two errors leading to four unearned runs.

Mariners 4, Brewers 1

Dave Valle homered to lead off the seventh inning, breaking a 1-1 tie and leading Seattle its third straight win. The Mariners scored twice more in the eighth on an RBI double by Mickey Brantley and Ken Phelps' run-scoring single.

Giants 8, Cubs 1

Lead-off hitter Brett Butler reached base five straight times with three singles, a triple and a walk and scored twice for San Francisco.

Twins 7, Red Sox 5

Greg Gagne and Gary Gaetti homered, and Kirby Puckett hit a three-run double, leading Minnesota over Boston. It was the Twins' fourth staight exhibition victory.

A's 12, Padres 10

Ex-Midland Angel Doug Jennings hit a grand slam and Felix Jose added a two-run homer in a seven-run third inning and Oakland hung on to defeat San Diego.

Tony Phillips opened the inning with a single, stole second and scored on a double to left-center by Ed Jurak. Jose followed with a line-drive homer over the right field fence.

Hawkins was relieved after Mike Gallego singled. Grant walked the first two hitters he faced to load the bases, and Jennings then homered over the fence in right.

Oakland starter Bob Welch gave up just three hits and no runs over the first five innings to earn his first victory.

Blue Jays 6, Royals 5

Eric Yelding drove in the go-ahead run in the ninth inning on a groundout to give Toronto the victory.

Tony Gwynn of the Padres, 1987 National League batting champion with a .370 average, probably will undergo surgery Friday for an injured finger, the team said. Gwynn left the club to return to San Diego Thursday to be examined.

MUGS sign up at Dellwood

Registration for the Midland United Girls Softball Association (MUGS) will be at Dellwood Mall March 12 and 19.

A $30 fee must be paid when the girls sign up and new girls must have a copy of their birth certificate.

The MUGS fastpitch program for girls 7-to-19 has grown from 48 to 400 girls in the 15 years it has been in Midland.

MUGS stresses recreational softball for girls of all abilities and every girl plays in every game, provided she shows good sportsmanship.

All star teams, picked by the coaches, compete in UGSA tournaments at the end of each season.

Midland will host the Class AA and A championship tournaments July through July 23. More than 25 out-of-town teams will be entered in each tournament.

NCAA to knock out, suspend fighters

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Players who get in fights during the NCAA Basketball Tournament will be subject to immediate suspension under a new policy prompted by this season's rash of college brawls, said NCAA executive director Dick Schultz.

"It will be a special edict dealing with the possibility of fighting," Schultz said Thursday in an interview with the Associated Press. "We're going to warn players that if they throw a punch, their chances of missing the rest of the tournament are very, very good. We're also going to tell them that if somebody throws a punch at them, they'd better walk away from it, or they could wind up out of the tournament along with the player who threw the first punch."

Schultz, former chairman of the Division I basketball committee, said he will meet with the committee Friday before the nine-man group begins its marathon weekend meeting to set the bracket for the 64-team tournament.

"I'm going to suggest to the committee that they come out with a very firm statement to the coaches, players and athletic directors who will be participating in the tournament," Schultz said. "We want to let them all know that we're just not going to tolerate any fighting."

"The game officials can always eject a player from the game. But we're talking about suspending a player from the tournament all together," Schultz said. "The basketball committee would be the appeal board if a player is suspended. We don't think there will be any fighting. But the committee needs to go on record right up front that it will not be tolerated. We think this is especially important in light of what's been happening."

The committee will announce the tournament field Sunday.

"I expect the committee will come out with a formal statement on this sometime next week," Schultz said.

Utah widens NCAA ski lead

HANCOCK, Vt. (AP) — A strong performance by the men's cross country team helped Utah widen its lead Thursday at the NCAA ski championship.

Vermont moved up to a solid second place as Brenda White and Selma Lie placed 1-2 in the women's 10-kilometer race. White, an Alpine skier until last year, finished in 27 minutes, 12.9 seconds — 13.6 seconds faster than Lie.

"That's a great performance. We needed it," Vermont ski team director Chip LaCasse said. The Catamounts, who haven't won a championship since 1980, had been in third place before Thursday's races.

The competition continues today with what's seen as the deciding race: the slalom. It's the most difficult race to complete, yet three of a team's four skiers must cross the finish line for the team to win.

San Angelo sets golf pace

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO - San Angelo took the first day lead in the San Angelo Invitational golf tournament Thursday, firing a 309 and leading the field by five strokes.

The Bobcats are followed by Abilene High 314, Abilene Cooper 317, Midland Lee 318, Odessa Permian 321, Andrews 323 and Midland High 324.

Permian's Ben Bangert took the first day lead in the medalist chase with a 73 while San Angelo's J.C. Hernandez has a 74 and is followed by tow 75s from Abilene High's Jeff Martin and Cooper's Richard Joyner.

Midland High's Mike Johnson was tied for fifth, going into today's round with a 76 and two Lee golfers, Randy Milby and J.J. King, were tied for 10th with 78s.

Other Lee players all had identical 81s with Beau Brown, Jamie Wallace and Kelly Daviss.

Other MHS scores were Mark Smith 80, Donnie Doan 82, David Wilson 86 and Ted Newman 97.

First day action in the 23-team field was held at San Angelo Country Club Thursday and moves to the Bentwood course today.

Some other team scores were Uvalde 333, Amarillo 336, Pampa 338, Palo Duro 339, Plainview 347, San Angelo Lake View 349, Lubbock Coronado 349 and Snyder 351.

SMU champ, but beware of Baylor

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — "Beware of the Baylor Bears" was the warning from most of the coaches going into Friday's 13th annual Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic at Reunion Arena.

SWC

Southern Methodist earned its first regular-season championship since 1967, but the Mustangs haven't drawn as much notice as Baylor, which won its last eight games and posted its best season in 40 years.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss said he wasn't upset that Baylor was getting all the pre-tournament attention.

"It doesn't bother me," Bliss said Thursday. "That's why you play the tournament. Baylor has been playing awfully well and that's why everyone is picking them."

Baylor, 21-9 and seeded second, meets seventh-seeded Texas Tech, 9-18, at 2 p.m. CST Friday after third-seeded Arkansas, 20-7, and sixth-seeded Texas A&M, 16-14, open the tournament at noon.

Top-seeded SMU, 24-6, and eighth-seeded Texas Christian, 9-18, play at 7 p.m, while fourth-seeded Texas, 16-12, and fifth-seeded Houston, 16-11, meet at 9 p.m.

The semifinal games will be played at 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. Saturday, while the finals are set for 3 p.m. Sunday.

"Baylor is the team to beat," said Texas Tech Coach Gerald Myers. "They're playing better than anybody in the league. In their last three games, they've just blown everybody out."

Baylor defeated Tech by 18 and 42 points in their two games during the regular season.

"We're probably playing the toughest team we could draw in Baylor as far as matching up," Myers said.

The Red Raiders do have tradition going for them. They are 9-0 in tournament openers and 3-0 against Baylor in the post-season event. Tech's record of 22-9 is the best mark in tournament history.

Baylor Coach Gene Iba is wary of all the pre-tournament hype about his Bears, who lost in the finals to Texas A&M last year and have never won the championship.

"One of the hardest things to do in college basketball is play a team three times in a year and beat them every time," Iba said. "It's a difficult situation for us."

Baylor's motivation is the automatic NCAA playoff berth that goes with the tournament title.

"I think we will have to win the tournament for sure to go to the NCAA playoffs," Baylor player Darryl Middleton said. "We have to remember that no matter who our opponent is."

Middleton, a senior from Queens, N.Y., who led the SWC in scoring and rebounding, on Thursday was named the SWC Player of the Year.

Iba said he knew Myers would have the Bears cranked up: "I never saw one of his teams quit."

SMU will be heavily favored to meet Baylor in the tournament finals, but Bliss recalled what happened last year.

"Remember last year, when TCU won the conference championship then the eighth seed, Texas A&M, beat them 81-70 in the first round game?" Bliss asked. "Our game against TCU is the kind of game that coaches are deathly afraid of. That's how dangerous it can be when No. 8 plays No. 1."

Arkansas and Texas A&M split their season series, with the Aggies winning in College Station when Razorbacks' center Andrew Lang got into early foul trouble.

"I pray at night that Andrew can last more than 14 minutes in this game before fouling out," Arkansas Coach Nolan Richardson said. "I have a lot of respect for (Texas A&M Coach) Shelby Metcalf and 'the playground king' (A&M guard Darryl McDonald). We know it won't be easy."

Metcalf said, "We feel like we will be playing against the host team. Arkansas has more people in the stands here than the other seven teams. We have to slow the ball down against Arkansas. If we run with them the end result will be a mercy killing."

The Houston-Texas matchup could be the most competive of the four quarterfinal games. The teams split during the regular season.

"Texas is one of the hottest teams going into the tournament," said Houston Coach Pat Foster. "They are just hitting their stride."

Texas Coach Bob Weltlich said he's hoping guard Courtney Jeans will be available. Jeans suffered a back injury in the 'Horns' final regular season game.

"We are not sure of his status and we're not the same team without him," Weltlich said.

Cash may miss Davis Cup series in France

PARIS (AP) — Wimbledon champion Pat Cash of Australia may miss the Davis Cup series against France next month, L'Equipe, the French sports daily, reported Thursday.

Cash's girlfriend, Ann Britt, is awaiting the birth of their second child, due the first week of April.

MOUNT ALLAN SCRATCHED— Problem-plagued Mount Allan, site of the downhill skiing events in the 1988 Olympic Winter Games, is unlikely to be used for future World Cup men's downhill races. The wind-swept ski-jumps at Canada Olympic Park will also be bypassed for World Cup competition unless major alterations are made to prevent events from being blown away, Jim Berwick, whose organization is responsible for staging all World Cup skiing events in Canada, said Wednesday.

USFL FAILS AGAIN — Declaring that the USFL sought "through court decree the success it failed to gain among football fans," a federal appeals court Thursday rejected the defunct league's appeal of the $3 award it won in its antitrust suit against the NFL. The decision appeared to end whatever small hope the USFL had of resuming its existence.

FALCONS MUST PAY— The Atlanta Falcons, unable to force players to work out during the off-season under terms of the NFL's collective bargaining agreement, have agreed to pay them extra to participate in a 10-week conditioning program from April 4 through June 10. Other NFL teams already compensating players for off-season workouts pay $30 to $50 per workout or $200 to $250 per week.

BIG EAST HONORS— P.J. Carlesimo, who led Seton Hall to its first 20-victory (20-11) basketball season in 32 years, was named coach of the year in the Big East. Carlesimo, who had his contract extended for five years, was picked by the coaches.

Villanova senior forward 6-7 Mark Plansky was named the Big East Scholar-Athlete award winner. Plansky is a dean's list student in electrical engineering.

MILE GREAT DIES — Glenn Cunningham, 78, who overcame childhood burns to win a silver medal in the 1500 meters in the 1936 Olympics, died Thursday of an apparent heart attack in Conway, Ark. Cunningham was found in his pickup truck near his farm for exotic animals at Menifee. Cunningham was fourth in the 1,500 meters at the 1932 Olympics and, in 1933, received the Sullivan Award as the outstanding amateur athlete in the United States.

Flyers snap Caps' streak

PHILADELPHIA — Brian Propp scored two goals Thursday night as the Philadelphia Flyers broke the Washington Capitals' five-game winning streak with a 5-2 victory and moved back into first place in the NHL's Patrick Division.

The Flyers, who began play tied with the New York Islanders one point behind Washington, broke a three-game losing streak and also celebrated the return of center Tim Kerr, who made his first appearance since last April 24.

Nordiques 4, Islanders 3

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Lane Lambert's second goal of the game and 11th of the season with 2:23 left to play pulled Quebec within three points of fourth-place Hartford in the battle for the final playoff berth in the Adams Division.

Red Wings 5, Canucks 2

DETROIT — Dave Barr scored twice as Detroit handed Vancouver its ninth consecutive loss, tying the club record set in 1975 and matched in 1984. Vancouver played without Coach Bob McCammon, who was given a five-game suspension by league officials following an incident in a game earlier this week against the New York Islanders.

Kings 3, Bruins 3

BOSTON — Bernie Nicholls scored his second goal of the game on a power play with five seconds remaining in the third period. The Bruins had taken a 3-2 lead just 54 seconds earlier when Canadien Olympian Bob Joyce tipped in Glen Wesley's shot from the point for his third NHL goal.

Flames 5, Jets 3

CALGARY, Alberta — Rookie Joe Nieuwendyk scored his 47th and 48th goals of the season and Calgary tied idle Montreal with 88 points, most in the NHL.

Nieuwendyk's second goal on a power play at 8:33 of the third period tied the score 3-3 and Dana Murzyn netted the winner just 39 seconds later as the Flames opened a four-point lead over idle Edmonton in the Smythe Division.

Blues 6, Penguins 4

ST. LOUIS — Doug Gilmour scored two power-play goals as St. Louis Blues overcame an early 2-0 deficit. Tony McKegney added a goal and two assists as the Blues won their second game in a row by outshooting the Penguins 45-28.

JIM MURRAY

Teasing Gibson like pulling pit bull's ears

Murray

VERO BEACH, Fla. — In a way, watching Kirk Gibson in baseball is like watching a rare Siberian tiger in a cage. It's like John Wayne playing a butler. An eagle in a bird bath. A mustang locked in a corral. A shark in a bathtub.

You get the feeling it's too confining for him. He wants to bust loose. You want to untie him, uncage him, set him free. It's too cramped for him. Like Caruso forced to sing Irving Berlin, Heifetz doing "Turkey in the Straw."

He's full of this restless energy. He looks as if he's just itching to bust something. Or someone. He seems to get irritable just standing there.

Look at him as he knocks a home run in the World Series with men on. Some guys tip their hats. Some guys give their teammates high fives. Gibson almost breaks their wrists. A Gibson high five is just easier to take than Dempsey's left was.

Gibson's problem is intensity. Calling Kirk Gibson intense is like calling the Johnstown Flood wet. He is to intensity what Katharine (cq) Hepburn is to independence. He didn't invent it, he just took it 10 steps further.

Kirk Gibson never does anything by halves. He gulps his food. He walks fast. He runs fast. He talks fast. Gibson's motor is always running. He always seems to be on the move like the great white shark. No one ever caught him lying down. He admits he can't sit through a movie, unless there's nonstop action. Gibson wants to run someplace. His motto should be, "Let's go!"

He's a superb specimen as athlete. Michelangelo would have drooled. At 6 feet 3 inches and 215 pounds, he's as lean as a 1-iron, as supple as a fly rod. Fat can't keep up with him.

He's as untamed as a timber wolf. Or a big cat. You look at a Kirk Gibson and you don't know whether to play with it or hunt it from the back of an elephant. The last time something this sleek and reckless came along, it had stripes. And claws. Gibson almost looks as if he just escaped a circus.

The eyes are the tawny yellow of the hunting — or hunted —animal. If you saw them staring out of the high brush, you'd swear they had a tail.

He probably should have played football. Or ridden horseback with a sword and a fur hat. You figure this kind of raw energy should be running into people, knocking things around, making fur fly.

He was an outstanding football player. His biggest decision was whether to play for the Detroit Lions or Detroit Tigers. Actually, the football Cardinals wanted to sign him. He ran the 40 under 4.3, he loved the contact and the Michigan State Spartans won the Big Ten championship when he was there but probation kept them out of the Rose Bowl. A wide receiver with good moves, he caught 112 passes for 24 touchdowns and 2,347 yards.

He chose baseball for the most unusual of reasons: He considered it more of a challenge. It wasn't the injury factor.

"With football, you can play with pain and hurt," he says. "You break a finger, you tape it to the next one, get a shot and you play. With baseball, you can't. You can't swing a bat with a broken anything."

Still, Gibson admits: "I had a football mentality. I still do. I'm an emotional person. I get the adrenaline going and I want to charge."

Baseball was a challenge because it inhibited this instinct.

"Baseball, you have to learn to channel your emotion," he says. "You have to learn to settle yourself down. You have to accept failure. In football, I can catch 10 out of 10 passes. In baseball, you succeed one out of three times, you're a Hall of Famer."

Accepting failure was never in Kirk Gibson's game plan. As if hitting the curveball were not hard enough — "Hitting the fast ball is no day at the beach either," he warns — his original manager, Sparky Anderson, suggested he go directly to the Hall of Fame when he showed up. Other people thought he should go to the Chicago Bears.

But Gibson persevered and became one of the most dangerous hitters in the game of baseball. His bat obliterated the San Diego Padres in the 1984 World Series. He played the game lustily, usually with a two-day growth of beard and the hard-running style of a fullback on a 2-yard line or a bull in a rodeo.

You would think he would be the last man in the world to pull a practical joke on. It would be better to give a hotfoot to a hungry leopard.

But sports camps are the citadels of schoolboy pranks. Cayenne pepper in the coffee is a sure-fire boredom easer. Dempsey loved to put lighted matches in the soles of sleeping camp mates. Sending rookies out for left-handed bats is a way to while away even the dullest of afternoons.

But teasing Gibson is like pulling the ears of a pit bull, or scaling a volcano.

When he found that someone had loaded his outfield cap with lampblack, the air turned purple and, the next thing anybody knew, the Dodgers' million-dollar clean-up hitter was out of uniform and almost out of town.

Relief pitcher, Jesse Orosco, the prankster, apologized to Gibson. Gibson never apologized to anybody. Muttering darkly, something about how if he wanted to dress with a bunch of clowns, he would have joined the circus, Gibson returned to the club.

No one dared ask, "Can't you take a joke?" Gibson might eat him.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: It will be who you know more than what you know that matters when the chips are down. Once in the door, you will zoom upward on your own talents. A relationship that never changes is unlikely to be a good one. Give and take makes the world go 'round for you and your loved ones. Follow your dreams. The aura of success should surround you when it counts. Polish your appearance.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: playwright Edward Albee, actress Barbara Feldon, singer Gordon MacRae, superstar Liza Minnelli, auto racing's Johnny Rutherford, film producer Roger Stevens, singer James Taylor, Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, Mets star Darryl Strawberry and the Atlanta Braves' Dale Murphy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your career has begun to accelerate. More recognition is promised and will be delivered. Concentrate on your health and work. Your business acumen is winning you an excellent reputation. Relax with family members.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) The weekend moves at a snail's pace. You should welcome this private time to do as you please. Stay away from the refrigerator when feeling restless. Getting some exercise is a much better idea.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may want to do some special cooking today. Give in to your gourmet instincts! Clean up any mess at home before going out with friends or family.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Love is a many-splendored thing when you receive an unexpected letter or visit. A good book could absorb you. Self-improvement activities hold a special attraction this weekend. Do your best.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You should be at your romantic best all weekend. A hot fudge sundae could be too much to resist. You dazzle those around you with your witty repartee and wonderfully funny stories.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A polished image is not everything, but it certainly will not hurt this weekend. You may feel that your cup runneth over. Forget petty squabbles and do what you can to strengthen a relationship.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You will not find true happiness until you discover how to balance your career with your personal relationships. Give it some thought this weekend. Ask for parental help if necessary. Loved ones rally around.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Getting outdoors could make a world of difference this weekend. A trip to the mountains or the water sounds especially enticing. Romance gets back on track.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Add your personal touch to whatever you do today, and an event will sparkle. You learn a secret that brings peace of mind. Vacation travel should prove very rewarding. Pursue pleasure.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You could paint yourself into a corner unless you heed a friend's advice. You need rest and relaxation in order to stay healthy and strong. You tend to push yourself too hard. Slow down.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) It is time to hit the road again. You need plenty of variety in order to function at full capacity. Take a friend along. You could find your self attracted to an older person.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Someone who often gives you a hard time may be just the ally you need now. Reach out to a young person who feels estranged. You need to make the first move.

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

If there is one characteristic in the defense of a hand that separates the expert from the rank-and-file player, it is the speed with which the non-expert grabs his tricks. This was highlighted by the above hand from the Bermuda Regional, held annually at the end of January at the Southampton Princess.

This hand cropped up in the Open Pairs event. Because of matchpoint considerations in duplicate events, several pairs chose the higher-scoring no trump slam in preference to the minor-suit one. At the table we watched, East took advantage of the vulnerability for a three heart preempt, and South overcalled with three no trump. Since North expected his hand to produce a lot of tricks, he bounced right into the no trump slam.

A diamond lead was more likely to give a trick away than to help his side's cause, so West opted to lead the jack of hearts. The fate of the contract hinged on East's play to the very first trick. Those who feared they would lose the ace of hearts unless they flew up with it at the first trick, lived to regret it. Declarer then had no trouble scoring two spade tricks, two hearts, two diamonds and six clubs.

Observe the difference if East allows the jack of hearts to run to South's queen. Declarer has only 11 tricks, and his only chance for a 12th is the diamond finesse. When it fails, he goes down a trick.

Those players who were not so greedy and settled in the club slam had no problem. Declarer simply led a heart toward dummy. If East ducked, his side got no heart trick and declarer lost only one spade trick; if he rose with the ace, declarer could take two spade discards on the K-Q of hearts, to avoid losing a spade trick.

Boxing great pushes Americans to 'stand up and be counted'

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Boxing great Archie Moore wants Americans down for the count — the 1990 U.S. census.

"People, in the black community especially, have not been counted," Moore, 74, said at a U.S. Census Bureau open house Thursday. "Count your people. Stand up and be counted."

He said young people ought to help the census so people "can benefit from the programs in Washington they are eligible for."

St. Louis, one of three areas across the nation selected for a 1990 census dress rehearsal this month, was Moore's boyhood home and the place where he won the light-heavyweight boxing championship in 1952.

Moore held the title until it was vacated in 1961. He failed twice to win the heavyweight crown, losing to Rocky Marciano and Floyd Patterson, but compiled a 183-22-9 career record including 129 knockouts. He now lives in San Diego.

LONDON (AP) — Andy Gibb, who followed his brothers, the Bee Gees, to pop stardom but saw his career falter after he became heavily involved with drugs, died Thursday. He was 30.

Andy Gibb

Gibb had a string of hits in the late 1970s and early 1980s and was twice nominated for Grammy awards. His chart-toppers included "I Just Want To Be Your Everything," "Love Is Thicker Than Water," "Shadow Dancing," "Everlasting Love," and "Our Love (Don't Throw It All)."

In addition to his singing career, Gibb had a stint as a co-host on TV's "Solid Gold," the syndicated musical variety show, but he was fired in 1982 for missing too many tapings. Chronic absenteeism also cost Gibb the title role of the Broadway musical "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Premier Pham Hung of Vietnam, an "old guard" revolutionary who ranked No. 2 in Vietnam's Communist party, died of a sudden heart attack, a Vietnamese official said today. He was 75.

Hung died Thursday afternoon, said a Vietnamese Embassy spokesman in Bangkok. He said he had no further details.

Hung was born in Vinh Long province in the Mekong River Delta of southern Vietnam, where he engaged in radical student activities from an early age. These led to his expulsion from secondary school.

Hung was a key figure in the war against the U.S.-backed government of South Vietnam. He was sent south in 1967 as secretary of the South Vietnam Commission of the party's central committee and as political commissar of the South Vietnam Liberation Armed Forces, commonly known as the Viet Cong.

In 1975, he served as the political commissar of the Ho Chi Minh Campaign, the final North Vietnamese offensive which climaxed with the capture of Saigon and the end of the long, bloody war.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Rev. Milton A. Galamison, a leader in the 1960s battles to integrate New York City's public schools and decentralize their governance, died Wednesday of cancer at age 65.

As chairman of the Citywide Committee for School Integration, Galamison led widespread school boycotts in 1964 and early 1965.

In 1968 he was appointed to the Board of Education, an institution that he had sued, picketed, criticized, camped in and been arrested at in the preceding years. He became board vice president and served until a decentralization plan was approved the following year.

Galamison had been a trustee of Princeton Theological Seminary, where he received his master's degree. His Presbyterian church in Brooklyn had a peak membership of about 2,000.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Comedian George Burns may be 92, but it's not slowing him down — he's doing stand-up routines at casinos, has just finished a movie and is working on a new book.

"There isn't anything I can't do now that I couldn't do when I was 18 — which shows you how pathetic I was at 18," he said during a recent one-hour performance at Caesars Palace on the Strip.

Burns is a regular at the Palace and other Caesars properties in Lake Tahoe, Nev., and Atlantic City, N.J. His new movie, "18 Again," opens April 9.

Burns' newest book is about the one true love of his life, Gracie Allen, his stage partner and wife of 38 years until her death in 1964.

Burns smokes 15 to 20 cigars and drinks several martinis daily.

What do his doctors think of that?

"They're all dead."

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Bob Newhart says he watches every episode of his "Newhart" televison show, but not the way the average viewer would.

Bob Newhart

"I check to see what jokes we left out and what works and what doesn't," he said in an interview published in the April issue of Good Housekeeping.

Newhart, 58, said his 1978 decision to end his role as psychologist Dr. Bob Hartley on "The Bob Newhart Show" was the result of "burnout."

"I thought we were beginning to repeat some of the situations and the jokes," Newhart said. "After 24 shows a year for six years, I wasn't sure where the characters were going. I was proud of the series, and didn't want to see it copying itself."

Despite the tiresome schedule of the earlier show, he said it was inevitable that he would return to TV.

Tipper Gore

Michael said Thursday he had been notified that his "Faith" album, which includes the hit "Sex" single, has sold more than 10 million copies worldwide.

"No doubt a few of those American sales came from Tipper Gore's efforts," Michael said in a statement released by his publicist, Phil Lobel.

"Perhaps now she can help sell a few thousand more records since her husband won big in the primaries," Michael said in Perth, Australia, where he is performing.

The Tennessee senator won in six states during the Super Tuesday primaries.

Analysts: Price turnaround likely

NEW YORK (AP) — World oil-producing nations, aware that they cannot afford another 1986-style market collapse, will probably succeed in bringing an end to the recent erosion of prices — at least temporarily, analysts said Thursday.

After three months of declines, hopes of a turnaround stirred with a report from Paris that officials of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were studying a plan to shave 5 percent off the production of all 13 members except Iraq.

The report, by the New York Times, sent prices broadly higher on the New York Mercantile Exchange, even though it was later denied by OPEC officials, said James Steel, an analyst at Refco Inc. Commodities.

Contracts for April delivery of West Texas Intermediate moved higher in morning trading today, with a mid-morning quote of $16.19, up 19 cents. Thursday's trading closed 51 cents higher at $16.00 per barrel.

Refined products also jumped sharply. Wholesale heating oil rose 0.90 cent, while wholesale unleaded gasoline leaped 1.14 cents per gallon.

Steel said traders were unconcerned by OPEC's denial of the report, taking it more as a sign that at least some action was being taken by the cartel to prevent the recent slide in prices from getting out of control.

Since January, prices in the Persian Gulf have fallen to levels between $13 and $14 per barrel — far below OPEC's $18-per-barrel target — while West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, dropped from nearly $18 to the $15-to-$16 range.

Sluggish worldwide demand and swelling inventories, aggravated by an unusually warm winter in Europe, have been cited as two reasons for the market's slump.

In addition, some OPEC members, desperate to preserve their market shares, helped push prices lower by discounting to lure customers away from other OPEC competitors and "NOPEC" countries, such as Mexico, Britain, Norway and a host of other smaller nations.

"If everyone goes on producing like last month, you're looking at another dollar's decline in crude prices in a couple of weeks," said Dillard Spriggs, president of the Petroleum Analysis Ltd. consulting firm.

"But chances are probably pretty good they'll rein it in," he said, citing prospects for increased summer demand. "I think we're in this cycle of up-and-down that will go on until about 1990."

Since December OPEC's official aggregate quota has stood at 17.5 million barrels a day, but Spriggs said the carel would have to cut that production to about 16.8 million barrels daily in order to meet demand and bring prices back to its $18-per-barrel target.

Ironically, the cartel has been sticking pretty close to its quota — despite its past record for cheating.

The problem this time has been that the quotas set in December were just too high, said Ed Krapels of the Washington-based Energy Security Analysis Inc. consulting firm,

While OPEC has been producing about 17.5 million barrels a day, world demand has only called for something between 16 million and 17 million barrels daily, he said. "So to move extra barrels they had to discount barrels — and they did."

Even so, Krapels said he believed that "fundamentally, the worst is over," because demand should pick up during the summer driving season.

"We expect the situation to be a little easier for OPEC to handle in the next three months than in the last three," he added.

At the Oppenheimer & Co. securities firm, oil analyst Paul Ting said he also believed oil prices will head higher, continuing in a cycle of "strengths and weakness."

OPEC is all too aware of the billions of dollars of income it lost by casting off production constraints in 1986, he said.

"Back in 1985, nobody in his right mind would have thought oil could drop below $18 a barrel. They got quite a surprise when it got down to $8. I think they're not likely to repeat that again," Ting said.

"I think they're going to get their acts together (because) they really can't live at prices significantly below $18 for a long time. It's a question of survival," he said.

Industry criticizes USGS energy reserve revisions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Geological Survey has lowered its estimates of undiscovered onshore oil and gas in the United States by about 40 percent, but industry spokesmen question the data.

The American Gas Association says the government is not counting all the different potential reservoirs, and the American Petroleum Institute says the new numbers for oil are just another in a long line of underestimates.

Terry Uhl, the gas association's spokesman, calls it "misinformation and disinformation" to say onshore undiscovered reserves amount to 254 trillion cubic feet, down from 427 trillion cubic feet.

The association uses the estimate of 400 trillion cubic feet from the Potential Gas Committee, an industry panel operated by the Colorado School of Mines.

Ozzie Girard, the geological survey's deputy assistant director for engineering geology, said Thursday he doubted there was much difference between the survey and the gas committee estimates once adjustments for comparability are made.

The survey has not counted gas in certain shales, tight sands or reservoirs of less than 5 billion cubic feet, all of which are counted by the committee. Hard-to-exploit tight sands formations probably hold 100 trillion cubic feet, Girard said.

No such adjustments can account for the change in estimates of undiscovered onshore oil.

The survey said undiscovered oil is between 19.8 billion barrels and 51.9 billion barrels, with the best estimate at 33.4 billion barrels. The range in 1981 was 41.7 billion barrels to 71 billion barrels, with the best estimate at 54.6 billion barrels.

In 1981, the survey relied heavily on the judgment of expert geologists. In the last two reports, the survey has been able to use detailed drilling data from the entire country, Girard said.

February retail sales up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail sales, boosted by strength in autos, rose 0.6 percent in February, following a January decline, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that retail sales rose a seasonally adjusted $714 million to $127.99 billion last month.

While the February increase was generally in line with expectations, the government revised the January report to show a small decline of 0.2 percent, instead of an originally reported increase of 0.5 percent.

Even with the January decline, analysts said the retail sales report generally reflected that the October stock market crash has had little effect on consumer buying plans.

Since consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of overall economic activity, any significant faltering in this area could topple the country into a recession.

The February report said that retail sales rose to the highest monthly total since August 1987.

Much of the strength came from a 1.6 percent rise in auto sales, which followed an even stronger 2 percent increase in new car sales in January.

Without the gain in autos, which accounted for almost one-fourth of total sales last month, retail sales would have risen a smaller 0.3 percent in February.

Three bank failures push Texas total to 15

HOUSTON (AP) — Liberal lending practices contributed to the failures of three affiliated banks in the Houston area, increasing the state's total to 15 so far this year.

Texas State Banking Commissioner Ken Littlefield closed First American Bank & Trust of Baytown, First American Bank & Trust of Friendswood and First American Bank & Trust of Manvel on Thursday and named the Federal Deposit and Insurance Corp. receiver.

FDIC spokesman Steven Katsanos said the Baytown bank's assets will be assumed by a new institution, insured depositors of the Friendswood bank will be paid off and the Manvel's bank insured deposits will be transferred to another bank.

The three Texas bank closings boost the nation's 1988 total to 36 so far this year, Katsanos said.

Littlefield said a recent examination of the institutions identified losses that exceeded the banks' capital. Losses were attributed to liberal lending practices under the direction of current management and the board of directors.

When the resulting capital deficits could not be remedied, the banks were closed Thursday afternoon, he said.

The three banks are affiliated with First American Bancshares in Baytown, said Richard Nun, spokesman for the banking commission.

All of the Baytown bank's deposits will be assumed by Citizens Bank and Trust Co. of Baytown, Katsanos said. The bank's only office will not reopen, but customers can do business at Citizens Bank's mainoffice beginning today.

The failed bank had total assets of $39.8 million, Katsanos said.

Citizens Bank and Trust Co. will assume about $38.5 million in 6,000 deposit accounts and it also will purchase $24.8 million of the failed banks loans and other assets. The FDIC will advance about $14.6 million to the assuming bank and will retain assets of the failed bank with a book value of about $15 million.

CHAMBER REPORT

Energy is city's first diversification

By JOHN FOWLER

Most of us take for granted the image of Midland as an oil town, the administrative and financial center of the great Permian Basin, created and nurtured by West Texas crude. Petroleum made us what we are.

While it was oil and gas that fueled the rapid growth of the community through its various boom cycles for nearly 60 years, and created tremendous wealth for the entire state, it wasn't always that way.

For the first 40 years of its existence, Midland relied on cattle and sheep production as its economic base. The first "boom" was centered on the development of transportation, as a result of the Texas & Pacific's need for customers along its westward rail line from Fort Worth.

Cycles of "boom and bust" were as common to agriculture centers as to cities dependent upon oil. Periods of drought and low commodity prices in the late 1800s dried up many of the new towns on the prairie, and had near-disastrous effects on Midland. But it was the enterprising spirit of its residents — and new technology — that made the difference.

John Howard Griffin, in his book, Land of the High Sky, relates a story about a cowboy named Bill Oden and rancher Francis Divers whose modification of the windmill ushered in a new era for West Texas cattlemen. Soon, virtually every home in Midland had its own windmill, causing the town to become known as "The Windmill City." Water ensured the future of cattle production, and brought prosperity to the area.

Ironically, the rich oil discoveries of the late 1920s in the Permian Basin were hailed as economic diversification.

Today, as much as any city of its size in America, Midland relies on a single industry for its economic well being. The need to develop other industries which will provide counter-cyclical effects on the economy and reduce our dependence on the energy industry, has never been more apparent.

Community economic development is generated by "basic" industries, those activities which produce goods or services in exchange for dollars from outside the local marketplace. Examples are oil and gas production, agriculture, manufacturing, and certain "export" services. Retailing and personal services depend on these basic generators of personal income.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce is committed to the economic growth and diversification of Midland and the surrounding area. Included in any target list for economic diversification must be manufacturing industries which are less volatile in terms of business cycles, or counter-cyclical to the energy industry. Also targeted are administrative and professional services which serve regional or national markets, visitors — especially convention delegates — health care services, and retirees, who are increasingly less place-bound.

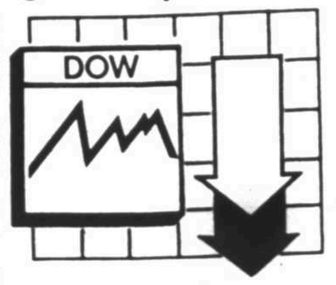
MARKETS

Dow Jones plunges 48 points



NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market took its sharpest drop in nearly two months Thursday, giving back some of the gains from its early-1988 rally.

The selloff hit both the blue chips and the smaller secondary stocks that had been especially strong of late.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 48.24 to 2,026.03, its largest loss since falling 57.20 on Jan. 20.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by nearly 3 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 419 up, 1,202 down and 382 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 197.26 million shares, against 210.90 million in the previous session. The NYSE's composite index fell 2.56 to 148.92.

Analysts said traders were disappointed by the Dow Jones industrial average's inability to make a run at the 2,100 level after reaching new highs for the year on Tuesday.

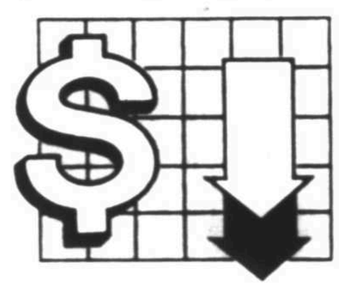
As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $39.96 billion, or 1.50 percent, in value.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 226.80 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell 6.21 to 306.25, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 5.22 at 263.84.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market dropped 3.52 to 376.76. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 296.00, down 3.58.

Dollar off in moderate trading



LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against other major foreign currencies in Europe early today in moderately active trading. Gold bullion rose.

The British pound, whose value leaped by 4 percent against the dollar this week, gained further ground on the U.S. currency, trading at $1.8465, up from $1.8435 late Thursday.

Other midmorning dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Thursday:

—1.6620 West German marks, down from 1.6640

—1.3740 Swiss francs, down from 1.3785

—5.6665 French francs, down from 5.6725

—1.8683 Dutch guilders, down from 1.8720

—1,235.00 Italian lire, down from 1,236.63

—1.2560 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2564

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 127.80 Japanese yen, down from Thursday's close of 128.20 yen. In later London trading Friday, the dollar slipped to 127.45 yen.

London's major bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $444.10 a troy ounce at midmorning, up from $443 late Thursday.

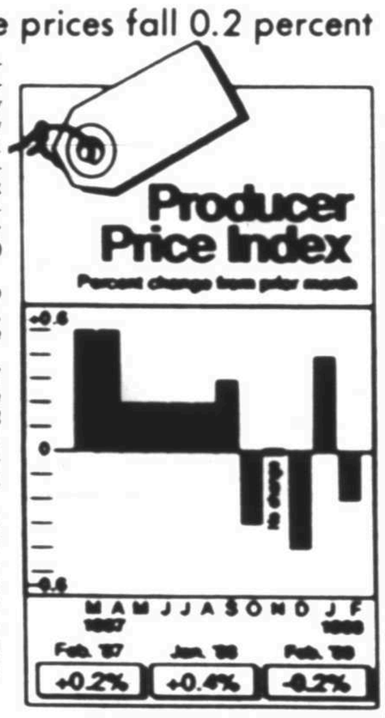
In Zurich, gold was bid at $444.15, up from $442.50.

Earlier, the metal closed in Hong Kong at a bid of $445.48 dollars, up from $438.42.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $6.31 a troy ounce, down from $6.36.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

February wholesale prices fall 0.2 percent



WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices fell 0.2 percent in February, pushed downward by drops in both food and energy costs, the government said today.

Food prices fell 1.1 percent, energy prices, 0.8 percent. The cost of lettuce, which had skyrocketed through the late fall and early winter, fell a remarkable 70.0 percent.

If the overall February drop held for 12 straight months, prices for that year would be down 2.2 percent.

For the first two months of 1988, prices rose at an annual rate of 1.1 percent, half the modest 2.2 percent rate for all of last year. Prices had risen a brisk 0.4 percent in January but had declined 0.4 percent in December.

Today's report again showed there was little justification for worries of a resurgence in inflation. Economist Donald Ratajczak of Georgia State University said that, "on balance, the inflationary fears that were generated with the January report should be dissipated."

On-the-job training workshop Saturday

From Staff Reports

An on-the-job training workshop, sposored by the Midland Economic Development Center at Midland College and the Permian Basin Private Industry Council, will help small businesses better understand the requirements of federal and other training programs.

The half-day seminar begins Saturday at 9 a.m. at Midland Center.

Other topics to be addressed are: streamlined assistance for small businesses; targeted job tax credits; employers' responsibilities for dislocated workers; and immigration issues, among others.

Seagam proposes entering juice business

CHICAGO (AP) — Canadian liquor giant Seagram Co. Ltd. has proposed buying orange juice producer Tropicana Products Inc. for $1.2 billion to expand Seagram's share of the beverage market.

The Canadian liquor-and-beverage giant's acquisition of Tropicana from Beatrice U.S. Food Corp. marks a "diversification and an expansion" of Seagram's product line, Seagram Chairman Edgar M. Bronfman said Thursday.

Securities analysts said the move into the juice business was a logical step for Seagram, which has limited growth potential from its liquor products.

Investor offers $780 million for Lorimar

CULVER CITY, Calif. (AP) — Investor Marvin Davis has made an unsolicited $780.3 million offer for loss-plagued Lorimar Telepictures Corp.

Lorimar, based in this Los Angeles suburb, said Thursday that Davis made the $17-a-share cash offer in a letter asking that takeover negotiations be arranged between him and Lorimar's management.

The announcement came just three days after Lorimar disclosed it was holding preliminary talks on the possibility of being acquired by New York-based entertainment giant Warner Communications Inc.

U.S. may create 2.4 million jobs this year

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 2.4 million jobs are expected to be created in the United States this year, fewer than the 3 million created in 1987 but "still a very healthy number," a business research company says.

Manufacturers and companies with fewer than 20 employees again will be leaders in creating jobs, according to Dun & Bradstreet Corp.

The company on Thursday announced the results of its annual survey of employment expectations at 5,000 companies.

From Staff Reports

SUN EXPLORATION & PRODUCTION CO., Midland, has recorded a prolific, Atoka gas discovery in Upton County, surrounded by production in the McCamey West field.

The No. 1 John Lane was finaled for a calculated absolute open flow of 37 Mmcfd from perforations 7,445 to 7,596 ft. Condensate gravity was 54.3, and gas-liquid ratio is 19,965:1. The producing interval ws acidized with 5,500 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 9,900 ft., the well was plugged back to 7,650 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 7,747 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,728.9 ft., include the Rustler at 763 ft., Grayburg at 2,142, Clearfork at 3,895, Wolfcamp at 6,085, Devonian at 7,827, Montoya at 8,733, Joins at 9,625 and the Ellenburger at 9,670 ft.

Location is 2,450 ft. from north and 1,600 ft. from west lines of Section 32, Block 1, MK&T survey, five miles northeast of McCamey.

Atoka discovery

Sun Exploration & Production has completed a prolific 37 Mmcfd Atoka discovery in Upton County, surrounded by production in the McCamey West field.

TXO completes well for 2.5 Mmcf CAOF

A recompletion in Pecos County has yielded a Wichita Albany gas producer in the Chenot North field.

TXO PRODUCTION CORP., Midland, recompleted the No. 1 Woodward University — originally a Granite Wash producer — for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.5 Mmcfd from perforations 4,578 to 4,924 ft. The interval was acidized with 8,400 gallons of acid.

Originally drilled to 5,500 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 5,485 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,045 ft., formation tops include the Wichita Albany at 4,650 ft., Clearfork at 2,750, Glorieta at 2,580, and the Granite Wash at 4,985 ft. Pay was topped at 4,578 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and west lines of Section 10, Block 20, ULS survey, 10 miles southwest of Girvin.

Bass Enterprises tests 15 barrel producer

BASS ENTERPRISES PRODUCTION CO., Midland, added (7400) production to the Paducah field of Cottle County with completion of the No. 3 Pat N. Jones.

On potential test, the well flowed 15 barrels of 51.6 gravity crude and 40 barrels of water on an 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 750 psi. The well flowed from perforations 7,412 to 7,452 ft., no treatment reported. Gas-oil ratio is 38,667:1.

Permitted as an 8,100 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,610 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Location is 2,305 ft. from north and 1,642 ft. from east lines of John C. Ellison survey, seven miles south of Paducah.

Schleicher field gains Canyon pay opener

ARIES EXPLORATION CO., INC., San Angelo, opened Canyon production in the Velrex field of Schleicher County with completion of the No. 4 R.I. Case "51".

Aries finaled the well to pump five barrels of 40 gravity crude and two barrels of water from perforations 6,333 to 6,347 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,500 gallons of acid and fractured with 230 gallons of gel and 7,119 lbs. sand.

Permitted as a 7,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 6,729 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 6,664 ft.

The well topped the Clearfork at 2,801 ft., Wolfcamp at 5,347, and the Canyon Sand at 6,333 ft. on ground elevation of 2,498 ft.

Location is 1,870 ft. from south and 2,090 ft. from west lines of Section 51, Block TT, TCRR survey, Abst. 569, 15 miles northwest of Eldorado.

Recompletion yields Atoka gas producer

The Apollo field of Winkler County gained a new Atoka producer as ENRON OIL & GAS CO. completed activity in the area.

Enron plugged back the No. 3 University "21-3", a former Fusselman producer in the field, and tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.75 Mmcfd from perforations 13,130 to 13,232 ft. Condensate gravity was 55 and gas-liquid ratio is 40,967:1. The interval was acidized with 3,000 gallons of 7.5 percent NeFe acid.

Originally drilled to 16,605 ft., the well was plugged back to 14,157 ft. A 5 inch liner was hung from 14,522 to 16,602 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,818 ft., include the Delaware at 4,950 ft., Bone Spring at 8,600, Mississippian at 14,610, Woodford at 15,082, Silurian at 15,859, Fusselman at 16,134, and the Montoya at 16,523 ft. Pay was topped at 13,130 ft.

Location is 1,320 ft. from south and east lines of Section 3, Block 21, ULS, five miles northwest of Wink.

TXO executive named regional FTC director

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Oil & Gas Corp. executive Tom Carter has been appointed regional director of the Federal Trade Commission, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said Thursday.

As one of 10 FTC regional directors nationwide, Carter will be in charge of FTC activities in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas and Louisiana, said Gramm, R-Texas.

Carter, of Dallas, has managed Dallas-based Texas Oil & Gas Corp.'s government relations department since 1983 and is a member of the Independent Petroleum Association of America and the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Coastal States ruled exempt from state tax

AUSTIN (AP) — The 3rd Court of Appeals ruled Wednesday that Coastal States Crude Gathering Co. does not have to pay state property taxes on pipelines that carry liquified petroleum gas or refined oil products.

Coastal argued that the Tax Code makes its pipeline that carries only oil subject to taxation.

An Austin trial court had rejected Coastal States' appeal but the appeals court reversed the trial court and rendered judgment favoring the company.

Coastal States said since it is a common-carrier, only its "transportation of oil" business should be subject to tax. That would include the first pipeline, but not the second or third, the appeals court said.

Justice Jimmy Carroll said language in the Tax Code means that the State Property Tax Board "is to look at only those pipelines, belonging to a common-carrier company, that are actually used to transport oil."

Man cleared in oil sting can recover expenses

MADILL, Okla. (AP) — An Ardmore oil producer says he may file a malicious prosecution lawsuit now that a judge has ruled he has the right to recover expenses incurred while defending himself from charges filed and later dropped in the wake of a 1984 oil sting operation.

District Judge Tom Colbert ordered Monday that Charles Dickey be made to pay the attorney and transcript fees, which total about $9,000, for Billy Ray Campbell, who had been charged in Marshall County with attempting to receive stolen property, and in Carter County with conspiracy to receive stolen property.

Both charges against Campbell eventually were dropped before the cases reached the trial stage.

Dickey was a prime investigator in the sting operation that resulted in the arrest or indictment of 22 people, including Campbell, in Oklahoma and Texas. The investigation was initiated by Total Petroleum Co., where Dickey worked as head of the security division.

FERC eliminates minimums from gas contract

JACKSON, Mich. (AP) — The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission agreed to eliminate minimums from a Consumers Power Co. natural gas supply contract, a ruling that would save customers a total of at least $18.5 million, the company said Tuesday.

The supplier, Trunkline Gas Co. of Houston, will ask for a rehearing by the FERC, and if unsuccessful will appeal to federal court. A new decision could take several months, said Stan Wallace, Trunkline vice president for corporate communications.

FERC, in a Feb. 26 ruling, upheld arguments by Consumers Power, joined by the Michigan Public Service Commission and state attorney general's office, in favor of eliminating requirements that the company pay for a minimum amount of gas even if it uses less than that amount.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Bond unit trust, mutual fund same but different

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. I own "units" of a municipal bond unit investment trust. In January, I received Copy B of a "Substitute 1099B" form. The form listed gross proceeds of $556.80 — money paid back to me last year from the principal of my investment in the trust.

Where do I report this on my federal income tax return?

A. On Part II, Schedule D, where you report long-term capital gains and losses. That item, however, will be a wash — neither a gain or a loss.

List the $556.80 in both Column (d) for "Sales price" and Column (e) for "Cost or other basis." In Column (b) for "Date acquired" list the date on which you bought units of that trust and in Column (c) for "Date sold" list the date shown on the Substitute 1099B on the same line as the $556.80 figure.

That latter date is the day on which the unit investment trust disposed of a bond from its investment portfolio and passed the proceeds along to unit holders. Your share was $556.80.

Also, include that $556.80 and the amounts on all other Forms 1099B in the number you report on Line 1, Schedule D. The Internal Revenue Service gets copies of all 1099Bs. You'll need a good explanation if the number you put on Schedule D's Line 1 doesn't match the amount in the IRS computers.

A municipal bond unit investment trust is somewhat similar to a municipal bond mutual fund. Both hold municipal bonds as investments, collect the tax-free interest from those bonds and pass it along to unit holders and shareholders, also free from federal income tax.

But a mutual fund is a "managed investment." From time to time, it sells some of the bonds it has held and buys other bonds.

A unit trust, on the other hand, has a fixed investment portfolio that seldom changes. The trust starts out with, say, $2 million worth of each of 50 different municipal bonds, for a $100 million total. The trust sells some of those bonds only in rare cases.

However, all bonds have maturity dates and most can be called for early redemption before their maturity dates. When a bond the unit trust holds is redeemed because it matured or is called, the trust collects that money and passes it on to unit holders. That was the source of the $556.80 return of principal you received last year.

Q. Because a unit investment trust distributes to its unit holders the proceeds from the bonds it formerly held and which are redeemed, it seems to me that the trust eventually will have nothing left and its units will have no value. Am I right or wrong?

A. You are absolutely correct. After all the bonds in its investment portfolio are redeemed because they reached their maturity dates or were called for early redemption, the trust's holdings will have vanished. The value of the trust's units, which reflect the value of the trust's holdings, will be reduced to zero. The trust will be dissolved.

By that time, however, the people who invested in the trust by buying units normally will have received principal payments at least equal to the initial value of the units. If bonds the trust held are called for early redemption at premium prices above their face values, the unit holders will have received more than the units' initial value.

It must be pointed out that it is possible for unit holders to lose money. That can happen when they buy units in the secondary market — after the original issue — at prices above the initial price.

It also can happen if the unit trust had to sell some of the bonds from its investment portfolio at losses or if some of those bonds went into default. That was the unhappy story for a number of unit trusts that held the infamous Washington Public Power Supply System — "Whoops," for short — bonds, $2.25 billion of which went into default in 1973.

identified over 150 industry types — broad classifications of business — which are well-suited for location in the Permian Basin. The list is being narrowed to five or six targeted industries, representing around 6,000 companies, for a direct marketing campaign. Meanwhile, a number of initiatives are underway to encourage the growth and development of existing business and industry. Programs such as the Bid Center, Midland-Odessa Health & Retirement Endeavor, and the venture capital matching program, all less than two years old, are beginning to show positive results. The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Center for Energy and Economic Diversification is destined to play a major role in the future.

Economic development is not something that occurs overnight. It is a long-term, ongoing process. And the competition for jobs and capital is not among Texas cities, or only between states and regions. It is global. The prize of a stable, diversified economy will go to those cities which are best prepared, and which provide a positive business climate and quality infrastructure, to retain existing businesses and attract new ones.

The energy industry has been good to Midland. Without it, the city would be just another small town on the West Texas landscape. And while it's certain to generate new periods of growth and prosperity for Midland into the next century, diversification will provide needed stability and build on the city's tradition of excellence.

John Fowler is president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Museum of the Southwest will host an "Introduction to Understanding Art," a slide presentation noon March 24 in the multipurpose room. The program will illustrate examples of paintings, sculpture, ceramics and tapestry from various periods in history.

"Survey of American Painting," a slide presentation on the development of American painting from the Colonial times to the early 20th century, will also be shown.

The presentation is a part of the brown bag lunch series co-sponsored by the Midland Arts Association. Participants may bring a lunch.

"New World Visions," a two-part video series which explores the American art form in painting, sculpture, decorative arts and architecture, will begin Tuesday. Part I, which discusses art from 1650-1820, will be shown at noon, 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. in the Turner Mansion Library. Part II, which covers art from 1820-1914, will be presented at the same times March 22.

In observance of Easter the March 29 program will be "Treasures of the Holy Land." The video is based on the Metropolitan Museum of Art exhibition depicting over 10,000 years of Holy Land history told while utilizing objects exhibited. For information call 683-2882.

...PETRO-PLAINS COUNCIL of Camp Fire Inc. will sponsor Spring Break activities.

Picnic and miniature golf will be offered noon-3 p.m. Tuesday at Green Acres. Participants must provide their own picnic lunches. Fee will be $3. Children from kindergarten and up are invited to attend.

Class on basics of canoeing will be noon-4 p.m. March 17 at Wadley-Barren Park. Children in fourth grade and older are invited to participate. Fee will be $2.

Deadline for registration for both activities is Thursday. Non-Camp Fire members will be charged an additional one-time fee of $6, which will allow them to participate in any Camp Fire activity through the year.

For more information or to register call 694-7704.

...TEXAS PRESS WOMEN will meet noon Saturday for a no-host luncheon at Cafe-in-the-Park, Days Inn, 300 Tulane Ave. off of Exit 179 from I-20 in Big Spring.

Following the luncheon, the group will visit Bob "Tumbleweed Smith" Lewis' production studio in Bg Spring. Lewis will present a program on the "Sounds of Texas," his syndicated radio show carried by 89 radio stations.

...ST. STEPHEN'S Catholic Church is sponsoring its 6th Annual St. Patrick's Day Dance 8 p.m.-midnight Saturday in the church gymnasium.

Music will be provided by "Frankie McWhorter and the Over the Hill Gang," a western swing band.

Tickets will be available at the door for $7.50.

All interested persons are invited to attend.

Obsession with thinness affects young Americans

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — The latest issue of the journal Pediatrics reveals that by the time little American girls reach age 7, they are obsessed with the idea that "thin is beautiful."

Often this notion occurs at even earlier ages. "I've been seeing 5- and 6-year-olds who are preoccupied with their weight," reports Dr. William Feldman. "One young girl broke into tears when her mother asked her to go for a swim. She said she'd look fat in a swimsuit."

This preoccupation with thinness alarms doctors. They can foresee an outbreak of such eating disorders as anorexia and bulimia (in which girls starve themselves or go through cycles of binging and vomiting) in the youngest generation in history. Thirty years ago, when our current fitness guru Jane Fonda became bulimic in prep school, these potentially fatal syndromes were a fad among coeds and young women. Last year, studies showed an increase in adolescent self-starvation. Now these societally imposed illnesses seem headed back toward the cradle. Is the day coming when pink-clad toddlers will dump their dinners on the carpet — not because they're in the "terrible twos," but because they yearn to be skinny?

That is an outrageous notion, of course. But anything is possible. Two-year-olds watch television, and Feldman says that it is from the tube that children form their unrealistic attitudes toward weight.

ONE NEEDN'T be a pediatrician to be concerned. The preoccupation with thinness, which has been propagandized in both print and TV-film media, has been causing psychological as well as physical damage to women for more than 60 years. It was in the early 1920s that the arbiters of American taste decided that skinny was better than rounded: quite suddenly the "flapper look" was hot stuff, and the Lillian Russell curves of a previous era became passe. Many of these decision-makers were themselves unabashedly plump (as many behind-the-scenes writers and editors are today). Perle Mesta, known as "the hostess with the mostest" in the late '30s and '40s, was an ample size 18 — but any lady over size 12 was deleted from her party list. International soiree queen Elsa Maxwell, who strained her size 20 seams, was famous for inviting to her parties women who lived up to the philosophy of her pal Wallis Windsor, that "no woman can be too rich or too thin." Although in the early 20th-century the notion prevailed that if a woman didn't have curves she must be consumptive, today's mode is that skinniness is vital to social acceptance.

According to that absurd standard, about 50 percent of the U.S. population is now considered overweight. Through advertising, the media grows wealthy on such assumptions. We now spend over $16,000 a MINUTE on diets, pills, foods and paraphernalia to slim down.

CLEARLY IT'S time to reshape our thinking more than our bodies. In recent years, pioneering studies have shown that since people differ anatomically from birth, not all of us can be skinny. Dr. William Bennett of Harvard writes that many Americans "are not biologically fated to be slim. If they do lose weight, they maintain it at great psychic cost," because genetic, hormonal and other biological factors dictate otherwise. "Diets only condemn these people to a nasty struggle, short-lived success and return to the prior weight," he said, "with a twinge of self-loathing for their failure."

Medical literature is crammed with studies condemning the thin-as-beautiful ethic. But the media doesn't headline such truths — it focuses on the preposterous (but product-selling) line that gaunt is glamorous. In so doing, it condemns half the female population to psychological second-class citizenship. And it sends challenging, potentially dangerous messages, even to little girls. "Television, which is ubiquitous, delivers a message of thinness being equated with beauty and the good life," Dr. Feldman says. "The female leads on the most popular shows are thin, like Joan Collins on 'Dynasty.' Even on 'The Cosby Show,' the women are lean — Bill Cosby is the only one who's chunky. You almost never see an overweight heroine."

There is one exception: Oprah Winfrey. The talk-show hostess is one of the hottest properties on TV, a charming, courageous role model for thousands of young girls — despite being pleasantly plump. Her income is said to be several million dollars a year, making her living proof that wealth and success can go to the ample as well as the spare. Yet she, too, has been humbled by the old line that fat is flawed. "I'm just not able to lose weight," she apologized in a recent interview. "I still see it as a deficiency in my character."

OH, COME on, Oprah! With a few well-chosen (and you can bet, well-publicized) words of encouragement, you might save a flock of fans from a lifetime of frustration and fruitless nibbling on lettuce leaves.

Adult children returning home

Associated Press

Times have changed. It used to be that once children graduated from high school they moved out and went on to build their futures. The scene is quite different now according to John Rosemond, family psychologist, in Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Four years after high school, 42 percent of the class of 1980 were single and living with parents, compared with 25 percent of the class of 1972. Although 1980 grads bring home larger paychecks than early generations, they actually earn 23 percent less than the class of 1972, when figures are adjusted for inflation. A large majority say marriage is important, but they postpone marriage longer than any generation in 97 years.

We'd expect young people living at home to accumulate a nest egg, but that's not the case. They save less and spend more than previous generations. Why? Many were raised by parents who spent lots on their children. On their own, these young people find it impossible to maintain that standard of living. The solution? Go home, where the living is easy.

It's perfectly appropriate for grown children to come home when they're hit by divorce, job loss or prolonged illness, says Rosemond.

"Roosting" is also acceptable during major transitions in the child's life, including the period between college graduation or military service and a job.

When children do come home, whatever the cirumstances, the arrangement should not be open-ended. Make sure to set goals, a specific plan of action, and a time line for reaching these goals.

During this period, a child should make some contribution to the household. If money is a problem, doing chores around the home can substitute for payment. Once a job is found, determine a reasonable room-and-board rate together. Grown children should earn their keep.

Rosemond says one difficult question to answer is how much control parents should exercise over grown children at home. Generally, no more than would be exercised over any other temporary boarder. Likewise, a child should come and go with respect for the family's lifestyle and values.

If your grown child violates the agreement or acts in an unacceptable manner, don't lecture or punish, but do express your frank concerns. Discuss violations of the agreement, with the goal of understanding why the violation occurred and preventing a repeat performance. If the conflict continues, counseling is the next step.

FAMILY MATTERS

ADD support group plans workshop

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: My child has recently been diagnosed as having Attention Deficit Disorder. He is not hyperactive, but does have the symptoms of being unable to focus his attention for long periods on school work. He's easily distracted, has problems finishing his work, has good and bad days, and his self-esteem is very low.

What can I do as a parent to help him deal with the pressure and frustrations he meets daily? Does Midland have resources to help us? We are fairly new to this community. Thank you. CONCERNED MOM

DEAR CONCERNED: Attention Deficit Disorder, or ADD, has only recently begun to receive the attention it deserves.

ADD is a developmental disorder of attention characterized by several symptoms related to inattention and impulsiveness. Children between the ages of 7 and 10 are most often affected.

Typical symptoms include a short attention span, distractibility, not seeming to listen, failure to complete tasks, difficulty concentrating on school work or tasks requiring sustained attention and difficulty sticking to a play activity.

Impulsive sypmtoms may include acting before thinking, excessively shifting from one activity to another, needing lots of supervision, frequently calling out in class and difficulty awaiting turns. ADD children are not necessarily hyperactive, although they can be.

Many children will exhibit these characteristics, but the important matter is how frequent these symtoms occur. Trained professionals can use tests, observation and other information to help make a diagnosis.

The good news is that there is a parent support group in Midland called Attention Deficit Disorder Association of Parents and Teachers (ADDAPT). For more information call 697-1184. The group is planning to sponsor a training workshop April 9 for all interested persons.

Undiagnosed ADD can cause parents and their children feel like failures. The earlier the child is diagnosed and given help, the higher everyone's self-esteem becomes.

DEAR FAMILY: My sister has cancer. Someone gave her some books by Dr. Simonton and in those books he talks about people causing their own cancer. I think that is ridiculous. How can people cause their own cancer? I know that you work a lot with cancer patients, can they cause their own cancer? MAD SISTER

DEAR SISTER: What Dr. Simonton is referring to is an on-going controversy about cancer and its causes, but research is very incomplete because so many factors cannot be controlled.

In a theoretical sense, it is beleived that stress and personality factors could have some effect through the immune and hormonal systems, but it has never been proven scientifically. Some researchers beleive that other factors, such as age, age of first sexual intercourse, exposure to industrial toxins and X-rays, smoking, drinking, diet and social class are important.

I feel that regardless of "casual" issues, it is important that cancer patients and their families work toward a sense of healing and future well-being. Reducing stress and reorganizing lifestyle can be very important.

A good plan to deal with stress is diet and exercise — with the approval of the patient's physician. This is an important first step to recovery.

If you wish to have more information about such programs and other resources, write to me.

Pre-packaged children's parties painless

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Sharron Werline Krull arrives with water guns drawn, buckets of purple slime, and a full obstacle course. Other times, she'll pack cinnamon teddy bears, her Teddy Bear Picnic tape and a huge, multicolored parachute.

Krull throws parties for the toddler-to-10 set, whose parents would rather spend a week in Bulgaria. Every party has a theme: Superheroes, My Little Pony, Teddy Bear Picnic, Double Dare, Finders Keepers, Rainbows, Dinosaurs, Cowboys and Cops.

Krull charges $100 for a two-hour party. For that, the hostess gets to sip vin rose; the host can videotape with abandon.

And sometimes she teaches a course on how to survive your child's birthday.

Parents go to great lengths to make kids' parties work, and, in many cases, to outdo other kiddie bashes. They will escort hordes of wiggling people to roller skating rinks. They will hire a magician or a puppeteer or a clown. But entertainment lasts but a half an hour. Then what? Besides, says Krull, what do the kids do when there's entertainment?

"They sit." Krull is allergic to sitting.

For birthday bashes, Krull does the planning, preparation, shopping and organizing. She sees to it that the children drink only Seven Up because it doesn't stain. She fills cups only half full.

"They can always ask for more."

Upon request, she brings party favors in her prize chest (they include trick gum, rulers, necklaces) and she has kids decorate their own "goody bags." "Roll-on glitter is great stuff," she says.

She does everything but the cake and ice cream.

"Any moron could do that," she says. "All you do is stick candles on it."

Even then, Krull has noticed that intelligent people lose it when it comes to parties. They pass out the cake plates, even though the plates will have to be passed back once the cake is cut.

Lately, Krull has been taking over the cake cutting, too. She also controls the opening of presents, which at many parties is akin to a bear ripping through a collection of backpacks.

Generally speaking, when Krull shows up, she starts with "an art experience." Kids get to paint one another's faces. Sometimes, though, Krull is advised that "the house is on the market." That knocks out the art experience.

As far as Krull is concerned, you can pitch Pin-the-Tail-on-the-Donkey and Musical Chairs up to the ozone. Krull won't play any game where anyone wins and anyone loses. Tears don't add to a party, she says.

She prefers to play Hit the Deck, Snickers and Hoots and Musical Bean Bags, large motor games that everyone does at once. They may be less well-known but they're also less traumatic.

She takes kids up to 10. After that, she says, "they get cocky."

DEAR ABBY

Dollars, sense don't mix for billing computers

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the man who was dunned for months by the General Telephone Co. of Holiday, Fla., for a 1-cent bill reminded me of my own experience.

My dear departed wife left me one share of some vague stock that earns 8 cents a quarter — that's 32 cents per year! I have pleaded with the bank that sends me these "8-cent checks" to forget the whole thing, as my CPA, in preparing my tax returns, charges me the same amount to report that one share as all the other earnings — $10 for each listing.

I have subscribed to a soft-water service for 30 years, never missing a payment — and always punctual. Recently, I received a threatening, dunning computer printout in RED to show that I was "seriously in arrears in my payments," and if I didn't send my 6 cents immediately, service would be discontinued and legal action taken.

Dutifully I endorsed one of my quarterly 8-cent checks and sent it to the company requesting that a check for 2 cents be returned to me.

In due course, the check for 2 cents arrived. Any company that uses computers and doesn't have a built-in sense of humor is in trouble. I canceled that purified water service, am now drinking water from my tap, and I never felt better in my life. — JACK DEDERICK, COSTA MESA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Concerning the telephone bill of 1 cent, I'd like to bring you up to date. It would seem ridiculous, as you say, if the bill had been sent by a human being. Today these matters are handled by computers. Computers have many fine qualities, but common sense is not one of them.

A friend of ours, on returning from vacation, received a bill for $0.00. When he ignored it, he received a letter threatening to cut off his utilities if the bill was not paid immediately. He sent a check for $0.00. The computer was satisfied. — BERTHA PIERCEY, COOLIDGE, ARIZ.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to be married next summer. My fiance and I have lived away from our respective homes for several years and have almost everything we need to set up housekeeping. We are now trying to come up with some way to inform our friends that we have already selected a color TV, microwave oven and VCR at a certain store, so if they want to give us a gift, they should go to that store and put their money toward one of those gifts.

I hope I don't sound terrible saying this, but we really don't want anyone to spend their money on some junky little gift that we can't use. We would rather have them put their money toward something important.

How should I word a message of this kind to send along in our wedding invitations? — PLANNING AHEAD

DEAR PLANNING: To enclose with your wedding invitations a suggestion concerning a gift would be very poor taste. The only acceptable way to convey your suggestions would be for a close friend to inform other friends. But don't be disappointed if some people prefer to make their own selections.

CONFIDENTIAL TO: Ellen, age 44, faithfully married to "John" in Fort Wayne: Please write again and include your name and address. I want to answer your question.

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc. because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letters Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling are included).

AT WIT'S END

Adults taught through wisdom of children

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

When I was a child I always wondered when was a good time to talk. You couldn't do it in school, at the table, in the car, in church, in bed, or when someone else was talking. I think I was 15 or so before I realized my name wasn't "Shhhh."

Today in this column is a good time for children to talk. A Mr. Bernagozzi who teaches the third grade in a school in New York puts out a class newspaper every month, and his students have some interesting things to say.

When asked if they were Christopher Columbus's mom or dad, what are some of the things they'd tell him before he left on his voyage, they answered:

"Don't fall overboard ... be nice to the Indians ... take a bath once a month ... put on new clothes before you land ... don't fall off the edge of the world ... don't hog all the food at dinner ... wash your hands before eating ... don't forget to write ... put on suntan lotion ... don't fool around with the steering wheel and bring back gold for us." (The only thing they missed was "Go to the you-know-where before you leave home.")

When asked what they would tell him if he was still alive, one child wrote, "You don't have to go around the world now for spices or jewels or silk. You can go to Macy's and the malls to get what you need."

Given one wish, another child wrote, "I wish that I could go to the nursing home and make everyone feel better. I know that people in the nursing home used to be teachers and nurses and have other important jobs. I would want them all to be well again."

And another, "I wish for the whole world to stop being bad. There would be no more crimes like killing and stealing. People would get along together everywhere."

They talk about their ambitions to "be a famous artist when I grow up. I'll sell my pictures for $99. They will be in stores and museums."

They talk about what they think freedom is. "It means I'm free to walk around my neighborhood in shorts and eat bananas when I feel like it." About how to cook a turkey they wrote: "First you take off the paper."

Mr. Bernagozzi is a wise teacher to listen once in a while instead of talking. Maybe this country should have been as wise when 11 children from the United States, Poland, Finland, West Germany, Japan, Afghanistan and Switzerland asked to meet with President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev during their meeting last year. They bore messages of peace from 230,000 children throughout the world. They were refused. A 13-year-old West German girl, Claudia Thorun, said, "We just wanted to tell them we want to be so old like Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev."

I have never heard of a better reason for peace.

Successful summer job hunts begins in spring

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hordes of young folks will set out looking for summer work when school lets out in June, but the best jobs will already be gone — to people who lined them up early.

Those who haven't yet landed a summer job should be at least making plans by now, listing possible sources of work and looking into them.

Experts at the U.S. Labor Department suggest starting by asking teachers or counselors for ideas about possible jobs.

And consider your talents and hobbies, such as auto mechanics or woodworking, when deciding which jobs to go after.

State employment service offices also can offer suggestions about employers who need workers and some may even have a special program for summer workers.

Other places to check for possible leads include newspapers, friends and relatives, neighborhood businesses, bulletin boards, factory and store windows, camps, resorts, playgrounds, amusement parks, plant nurseries, farms, ice cream companies and soft drink bottlers.

Many firms will accept applications quite early, and then it helps to keep checking back with them, Labor officials suggest.

A major part of landing virtually any job will be the job interview. This is a critical event and making a good impression is essential.

To begin with, the Labor Department says, find out something about the company where you will be doing the interview. Ask the personnel or business office for printed material or talk to some people who work there.

Knowing more about the company can help you decide what to say about yourself.

Take along your work record and references to the interview.

Dress conservatively for the interview; do not wear fad or flamboyant clothing.

Generally, clothes that fit in for the type of work would be suitable, perhaps a suit and tie for men, or at least neat and clean trousers and shirt.

For women, a dress is usually appropriate, while low-cut necklines, excessively frilly blouses and dangling jewelry may be distracting.

Grooming experts at the Cosmetics, Toiletry and Fragrance Association stress the importance of both men's and women's appearance presenting an image of competence and professionalism.

Be prompt for the interview, and come alone. Do not bring a friend along for support, the Labor Department job experts say.

Answer the questions honestly and briefly. Don't talk about your personal life unless specifically asked. Tell what your qualifications are — without exaggerating — and tell why the company should hire you.

Finally, if the first interview doesn't lead to a job, don't be discouraged. Few people get the first job they apply for. Think over each interview, consider what might have gone well and what went wrong, then try again.
