Oil show has record opening

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

If Wednesday's crowd at the first day of the Permian Basin Oil Show is any indication, the 1982 edition of the biennial oil country showcase will break all attendance records.

Around mid-day, show officials threw up their hands in amazement and opened the gates wide, doing away with their promise to require visitors to register first, after it became apparent they were waiting in line for up to two hours.

"We've never had that happen before, so we just had to open the gates and let 'em in," said one weary oil show director Wednesday night after the show closed at 8 p.m.

The initial idea for registration came at the request of the exhibitors themselves. The directors decided to limit access to the show Wednesday and Thursday to only oil industry employees and their spouses. Friday and Saturday, the free show will be open to the general public.

Long lines had already formed by 8 a.m. Wednesday when officials began arriving at the grounds. The wait for a hot dog or hamburger was 30 to 45 minutes at all concession stands in the early afternoon. Eager spectators, oil industry executives, rig hands and salesmen elbowed their way through crowded exhibit halls, pausing to load up on all the "freebies," ask questions, or renew old acquaintances.

The show opens again today at 10 a.m., and closes at 8 p.m. It is restricted to oil show industry personnel only. Friday at 10 a.m. there will be a parade featuring oil field equipment and numerous area high school bands, followed by a 1 p.m dedication and speech by Texas Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace, this year's show honoree. The show is open to the public, and free, both Friday and Saturday.

Israelis, Arabs present strategies for Middle East peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high-ranking Arab League delegation and Israel's foreign minister lobbied here today on behalf of their conflicting strategies for achieving peace in the Middle East.

With interest mounting in an expanded multinational peacekeeping force for Lebanon, Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir held a hastily arranged, hour-long meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Israel does not want the multinational force near its border. But Lebanese President Amin Gemayel suggested in Paris on Wednesday that the 3,800-man force in Beirut be increased to "about 30,000 troops" and given responsibilities outside the Lebanese capital.

"It is not a problem that belongs to us," Shamir told reporters after his meeting with Shultz.

He said Israel's concern is over security arrangements on its northern border with Lebanon and that "it is our approach that these arrangements have to be made by an agreement between us and the government of Lebanon."

He was asked whether Israeli forces will be out of Lebanon by the end of the year.

"I believe we are going to solve this problem," Shamir replied. "I cannot say how much time this will take. But without doubt there will be progress. I can say nothing about a date."

He said his meeting with Shultz was "part of the consulting process" and was conducted "in the same spirit of friendship and confidence" as other recent meetings.

Gemayel, who conferred with President Reagan Tuesday, said his visits to the United States, France and Italy had "the specific objective of extending the role of the multinational force" the three nations have deployed in Beirut since the end of September. About 1,200 U.S. Marines are part of that force.

The Lebanese president also repeated his demand that Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces withdraw from his country.

Shamir's presence in Washington is regarded as somewhat awkward by U.S. officials, since an Arab League delegation, headed by King Hassan of Morocco, also is in the city on a visit planned long in advance.

Although Lebanon will be the focus of the Shultz-Shamir meeting, the quest for an overall Mideast peace probably also would be discussed, a U.S. official said.

The Arab delegation will meet with Reagan on Friday to discuss Arab and U.S. proposals for achieving a Middle East peace. Israel has rejected both plans.

The Arab nations want a separate Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip — territories occupied since 1967 by Israel. Reagan's plan, unveiled on Sept. 1, calls for Palestinian self-rule in association with Jordan.

Israel has said it will never give up the West Bank.

Hassan said upon his arrival at Andrews Air Force Base Wednesday that achieving a lasting peace will be difficult and time-consuming.

"We are realists and we know we cannot in a few days or a few months find solutions for a problem which is 40 years old," the king said.

"Our mission is to listen to the explanations of President Reagan and to explain to him our plans," he said.

Shultz, who greeted Hassan at the airport, lauded the objective of the king's trip, which he said is "a joint and lasting peace throughout the Middle East." Other nations represented in the delegation are Jordan, Syria, Algeria, Tunisia and Saudi Arabia, which were sending their foreign ministers.

Shamir met twice with Shultz in Washington last week to discuss a troop withrawal from Lebanon, and U.S. officials said privately they didn't think another high-level meeting was needed at present.

The official speculated that Shamir wanted to discuss the results of Tuesday's meetings involving Gemayel, Reagan and Shultz.

A senior official had told reporters Tuesday that Morris Draper, Reagan's special Mideast envoy, probably would meet with Shamir in New York Thursday to report on the Gemayel visit.

Arabs may abandon explusion move

By The Associated Press

The Arab nations, facing mounting opposition from Europe and the United States, are showing signs of reluctance to press their effort to oust Israel from the U.N. General Assembly and an Islamic diplomat says they will abandon the plan today.

A twice-delayed vote also was expected today in Nairobi, Kenya, on an Arab resolution to expel Israel from a meeting of the U.N. telecommunications agency.

But a U.S. spokesman said Wednesday that the United States was lobbying worldwide against the proposal, and the conference might settle for a British compromise that would condemn, but not expel, Israel for its invasion of Lebanon.

The United States has said it would walk out of any U.N. agency, including the one meeting in Kenya and the General Assembly, if Israel were excluded. Secretary of State George P. Shultz also has threatened that U.S. aid to the agencies would be cut.

Britain and other Western delegations joined the United States in walking out of last month's conference of the 110-member International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, Austria, after Israel's credentials were rejected.

In Nairobi, James Pope, chief spokesman for the U.S. delegation to the International Telecommunications Conference, said Wednesday the United States was "making diplomatic representations in capitals all over the world, stressing the importance of maintaining the U.N. system."

The focus of the lobbying by both sides in Kenya appears to be the black African nations, which may hold the deciding votes.

Some observers believe the Arabs made gains with the black Africans by arguing that Israel's invasion of Lebanon was akin to South African violations of U.N. principles, for which they voted nine years ago to bar that nation from ITU activities.

"There's considerable arm twisting going on," Pope said. "We are approaching this on the basis of self-interest. The Third World has a vested interest in the survival of the U.N. system."

Iran and Libya have offered to make up the $3.2 million the United States contributes to the agency. But Western delegates argue that the Arabs will not be able to replace the technical expertise the United States provides developing countries through ITU programs.

On Tuesday, the 10 members of the European Economic Commuity said they would consider joining a U.S. walkout if Israel were expelled from the General Assembly when it meets next Monday.

At that time, the 157-member assembly is to vote on a report by its credentials committee certifying that all current members have the right to retain their seats for the current, 37th session.

The Arab Group planned to challenge the Israelis' credentials and oust them from the world body.

Fire, thefts won't 'boot' him out

Like the cowboy who lost his mount, Jack Chappell has run across a bit of bad luck. He hasn't a decent pair of boots to wear to the movie.

"I lost three pairs of boots this year — two in a burglary and one in a fire," he lamented over a cup of coffee. "At least I can laugh about it now."

Chappell, a lawyer, lost two pairs of boots when his storage rooms in Lubbock were burglarized last May about 2½ months after he had taken a job in Midland to be a prosecutor for District Attorney Vern Martin.

Then, last month, a fire, ignited after a twin-engine airplane crashed into his apartment complex in northwest Midland, destroyed his third pair of boots and virtually all of his possessions which he and a friend had moved to Midland a week earlier.

"I've got that old, beat-up pair (of Dingo boots), and I tried rubbing them, but it just isn't getting there." They won't shine.

But Chappell had a reason to be cheery: His mother had sent him a $125 gift certificate for new pair of boots. It came in a birthday card on Tuesday, when, for the second time, he turned Jack Benny's perennial age: 39.

"Thought you'd like to get back in some boots," read the note in the card from his mother, Rosalie Chappell.

But Chappell is in Midland, the gift certificate is for Boot City in Lubbock, the West Texas premiere of the made-in-Midland movie "Waltz Across Texas" is Friday night at the Howard Hodge Theatre, and he doesn't have a tuxedo — or a pair of boots — for the $100-a-ticket, tux-and-boots formal affair.

"It's in Lubbock," he said, as he waved the gold-tinted gift certificate. "Doesn't anybody want to trade?

"I'm afraid to laugh too hard," Chappell said. "Something will happen this

De Lorean's drug deal videotaped

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John De Lorean, held today on $5 million bail, offered half his failing car company to an undercover agent posing as a drug dealer in exchange for profits from a heroin and cocaine deal, according to a government videotape.

De Lorean, the flamboyant executive who left General Motors Corp. to "show them how to build cars," was arraigned Wednesday on charges of conspiring to possess 220 pounds of cocaine for distribution.

Videotapes of him meeting with undercover agents show he hoped to generate $60 million by selling heroin and cocaine, Assistant U.S. Attorney James Walsh said at the arraignment.

On the tape, De Lorean held a bundle of South American cocaine he thought would save his car company and murmured, "This is better than gold. This came just in the nick of time," the federal prosecutor said.

De Lorean, unshaven and appearing haggard, listened silently during proceedings Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate Volney Brown. His attorney, Bernard Minsky, said De Lorean would plead innocent to all charges.

De Lorean's wife, international model Cristina Ferrare, embraced her husband after he was led into the federal courtroom in handcuffs and sat silently as Brown scheduled a Nov. 1 preliminary hearing. Bail was set at $5 million over heated objections of Walsh, who asked for $20 million and described De Lorean as "a staggering and astronomical bail risk."

As he was walking to the arraignment, he was asked by a reporter: "How are you holding out." He replied: "Fine, so far."

Apartment fire appears accidental

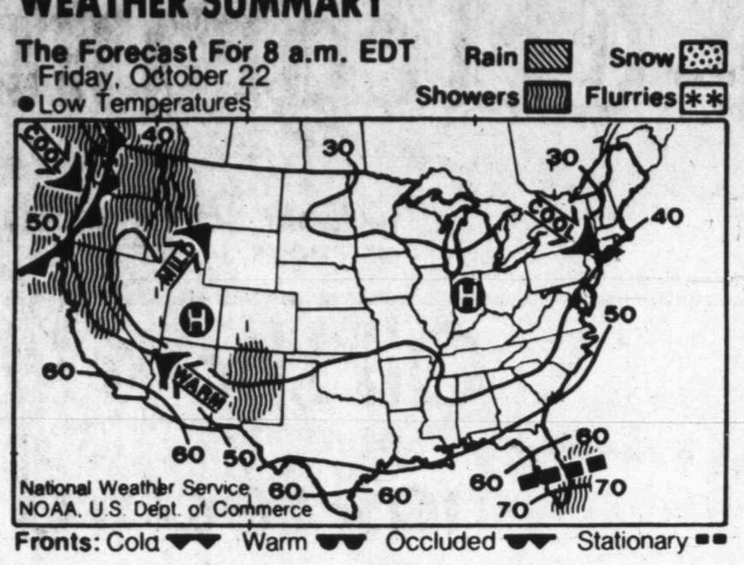
A fire that destroyed two buildings in the Polo Park Apartments complex Tuesday night was definitely accidental, Midland Fire Department investigators say.

While the investigation into the cause of the blaze had not been completed as of this morning, a spokesman in the fire marshal's office said it appeared the fire was caused by a workman's cutting torch. Although some of the apartments had been occupied at the time of the fire, portions of the complex were still under construction.

Five residents of the apartments had to be evacuated because of the fire, but there were no injuries reported.

Firemen returned to the scene of the fire at 4700 Polo Parkway, on the city's far north side, at 5:16 p.m. Wednesday to extinguish a blaze. Fire reports indicated the fire had rekindled at that time. Two firefighters brought that blaze under control in an hour.

WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Fair weather for most of the nation and showers in northern California and the Northwest are forecast for Friday by the National Weather Service.

Cool, cloudy weather should prevail

Midlanders should see partly cloudy skies and cool temperatures in the Permian Basin through the beginning of the weekend, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

It should be mostly cloudy tonight with a slight 20 percent chance of thundershowers tonight. Temperatures are expected to drop into the middle 40s.

Friday should be partly cloudy although no chance of precipitation is mentioned in the forecast. Highs are expected to be in the upper 60s.

Winds will be southeasterly at 5-10 mph tonight, increasing to 5-15 mph Friday.

Wednesday's high of 58 was 33 degrees cooler than the record high of 91, set for that date in 1979. The overnight low of 48 was 10 degrees warmer than the record low of 38, set in 1976.

Record crowd sees oil show opening

Durrett predicted the show would attract about 500,000 visitors during its four-day run. He reported that based on telephone calls received at the oil show office, people were reserving motel rooms as far away as San Angelo and Lubbock; space in Midland, Odessa and most smaller towns in the Permian Basin had long since been snapped up by thousands of oil show visitors.

The show, the largest inland oil show in the nation and the 14th largest trade show overall, has been a fixture at Odessa's Ector County Coliseum every two years since 1954, and before then, at other Odessa locations since 1940, when the first show was held.

A few years ago, when attendance figures broke the 500,000 mark for the first time, oil show directors stopped taking a head count as people streamed through the gates. They expected this year's show to be more successful than ever because there are more exhibitors than in any previous show.

Indeed, there was a pumping unit installed in the parking lot of a taco stand across the street from the oil show grounds, as last-minute exhibitors found themselves out of luck: show space had been reserved months ago.

During the day yesterday, several representatives of service and supply companies came to the oil show office to inquire about space for 1984. There is already a substantial waiting list for that year, and many companies are on the list for 1986.

More than 500 exhibitors from 53 Texas cities and 24 states have literally crammed their wares onto the show grounds, where American and Texas flags fly from many derricks.

"I don't know what the numbers were, but this had to be the largest opening day we've ever had," said Larry Word of Gregory Rig Sales and Service, an exhibitor at the show since 1962. "All the exhibitors I've talked to say attendance and interest in their booth has been real high."

Of course, it's difficult to say what percentage of attendees were lookers and how many might become serious prospects or actual customers, he pointed out. Exhibitors and visitors were swapping their business cards at every booth, and follow-up sales calls will no doubt begin in earnest next Monday morning, he added.

At a press conference yesterday morning, an oil industry executive said that the slowdown in drilling activity now is a good time for companies to evaluate themselves and fill the gaps in their service or product lines.

"We feel the industry is about at bottom, or has bottomed out," said Drilco President Doug Rock, "but we are not expecting any big increase until late in 1982 or the middle of 1983. We estimate the industry will go into 1983 with about 2,400 rigs and may work its way back up to 2,800 by the end of 1983, but will probably average 2,500-26,000 for the year."

In spite of a lower rig count and predictions of a slow recovery in the oil patch, Drilco, and many other companies at the Permian Basin Oil Show, is taking this opportunity to introduce new products, technologies, concepts and services to oil industry personnel.

And that is the reason the show has remained, and always will be, popular, (if not a necessity), with the oil industry.

New violence feared as Irish complete vote

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Authorities are predicting a new surge of Irish Republican Army violence now that voting has ended for a new 78-member provincial assembly, centerpiece of Britain's latest attempt to defuse the civil war in Northern Ireland.

The voting Wednesday was marred by a bomb blast in Belfast and the second attempt in two days on the life of Protestant leader James Molyneaux. There were no casualties in the bombing and Molyneaux escaped unharmed.

Initial results from the balloting were expected later today, with the final tally due Friday evening.

Authorities fielded 25,000 troops and police to oversee the election, Britain's first attempt to restore limited autonomy in Northern Ireland since it took direct rule of the province 10 years ago. Those forces remained on guard today amid predictions of possible new violence.

Police said intelligence reports indicate the militant Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army and its Marxist offshoot, the Irish National Liberation Army (INLA), planned to intensify a campaign of "death and destruction."

The Provos scaled down guerrilla operations during the three-week campaign while their political front, Sinn Fein, made its first election bid under its own banner since the Provisional movement was formed in 1969.

During the campaign, Sinn Fein warned the "armed struggle" would continue despite the movement's foray into politics.

Well-informed Catholic sources said hardliners among the Provos were pressing to rekindle the guerrilla offensive. Police intelligence reports said the extremists have stockpiled explosives in preparation for fresh attacks.

The INLA was not involved in the election and claimed responsibility for at least eight slayings during the three-week campaign.

A caller claiming to represent the INLA said the organization planted the bomb found Wednesday at a house where Molyneaux spent the night.

Police defused the crude firebomb left on the windowsill at Molyneaux's sister-in-law's house in the Belfast suburb of Crumlin.

The INLA said earlier it bombed the headquarters of Molyneaux's Official Unionist Party on Tuesday. Molyneaux and several of his party's candidates escaped shortly before the blast.

The overwhelming Roman Catholic IRA and the INLA movements are fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite the Protestant-dominated province with the mainly Catholic Irish Republic after 60 years of partition.

In organizing Wednesday's vote, Britain sought to build a framework that would give Ulster's 500,000 Catholics a say in the running of a province where Protestants outnumber them 2-1.

Preliminary reports from election officials indicated a turnout of around 60 percent of the 1 million eligible voters.

At the halfway point in the United Way of Midland's fund-raising campaign, pilot campaign chairman George Irish, left, and Cliff Harris, former Dallas Cowboy and campaign kickoff speaker, unveil contributions totalling $927,187 — or 57.5 percent of the $1,612,000 total campaign goal. The rally was held Wednesday on the Midland County Courthouse lawn.

Sri Lanka's president given second term, 'clear mandate'

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — The voters of this Indian Ocean island nation appear to have given President Junius Jayewardene a clear mandate to pursue the free-enterprise capitalism he introduced five years ago.

Unofficial results released today showed Jayewardene with about 55 percent of the popular vote with all but a handful of the 168 parliamentary districts reporting.

Jayewardene, 76, needed a simple majority in Wednesday's vote to gain his second six-year term. Final results were expected later today, with the president to be sworn in Feb. 4.

As expected, Hector Kobbekaduwa of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party was running second. The unofficial tally indicated he polled 35 to 40 percent of the vote.

The remaining votes were divided among the candidate representing the Tamil minority and three Marxist office-seekers.

Jayewardene imposed a state of emergency on this island nation Wednesday, citing reports of scattered violence at the polls. The Defense Ministry said Jayewardene acted to prevent the trouble from escalating. Details of the violence were not available.

No curfew was announced under the emergency decree and no regulations were issued curbing civil rights. The president's action may have been aimed at giving the government the legal basis to strike quickly if trouble developed, but no major incidents were reported.

Army troops carrying rifles and bayonets appeared at key intersections in Colombo soon after the polls closed. A few light armored vehicles rumbled along the streets a few hours later, but the city remained calm.

Sri Lanka, formerly called Ceylon, has undergone sharp changes since Jayewardene returned the economy to private hands, courted foreign assistance and investment, and slashed deeply into welfare programs.

His changes reduced unemployment from about 24 percent in 1977 to about 12 percent last year, but also fueled inflation, which peaked at about 40 percent in 1981 before dropping to an estimated 25 percent this year.

However, the big development projects launched by Jayewardene are still in the construction stage and a major question of the campaign was whether Sri Lankans would give him the second term he said he needed to complete them, or revert to the socialist programs proposed by Kobbekaduwa.

Jayewardene called the election 15 months earlier than required, apparently to take advantage of the disarray in the ranks of the leading opposition party after the departure of its leader, former Socialist Prime Minister Sirimavo Bandaranaike.

Jayewardene's government won passage of legislation in 1980 barring Mrs. Bandaranaike from public life for seven years. The government accused her of exceeding her powers by delaying elections for two years.

Kobbekaduwa had pledged to reinstitute the socialist policies Mrs. Bandaranaike initiated during her 13 years in office.

Marine explosive disposal unit getting quite a workout

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The U.S. Marine explosives disposal unit here so far has collected more than 2,200 pieces of live ordnancade in 15 different nations — a job requiring some "calculated risks," says the squad leader.

"I've never encountered so much live ordnance, not even in Vietnam," said Chief Warrant Officer Ralph Way. "We have encountered items from 15 different countries, some of it stuff we have never seen before."

Way, a 32-year-old Marine from Jacksonville, Fla., heads a 12-man team charged with clearing all unexploded ordnance from Beirut International Airport, where 1,200 U.S. Marines are stationed as part of the three-nation Beirut peace force.

The weaponry includes bombs, artillery shells, grenades and other explosives left from Israel's nearly ceaseless bombardment of Palestinian guerrilla positions this summer, as well as remnants of the PLO's own return fire and mine-laying operations.

The job, Way said, has dangers.

"At some point in time, the technician has to take a calculated risk. He has to pick it up (ordnance) and do something with it," he said with a small gesture that showed a gap where his left forefinger used to be.

That wound was the reminder of one of four times in 12 years that the risk has gone against Way. He once suffered a severe arm injury, as well as two lesser wounds.

Way said that to date, his Marines have picked up more than 2,200 items. About 1,800 of them have been destroyed, while the rest are waiting for disposal.

Midwest snowstorm takes Michigan's corn growers, schools by surprise

By The Associated Press

A snowstorm that left vast cornfields of the Midwest a boggy mess surprised Michigan with up to 14 inches of snow by early today, knocking out the electricity for thousands of people and closing schools in four counties.

"I wasn't expecting this much this fast," said Marvin Taulbee of the National Weather Service in Marquette, Mich. "This was the first big one of the season."

In Ironwood, Mich., where 52 city workers were on strike, only the city's public works superintendent was available to operate a snowplow.

"He's the only one out," said city clerk Anita Zak. "It's heavy, wet snow, but we're keeping the highway and the main thoroughfare open."

The storm marched through the Corn Belt on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, snapping tree limbs, downing power lines and snarling traffic from eastern Nebraska to Michigan.

Two men were killed in separate auto accidents related to the storm.

In South Dakota, "it'll be several days before they (farmers) can get back out into the fields again, by the time the snow melts and the fields dry off," said meteorologist Jerry McDuffie. "They're already late."

"When I step in my fields, I'm ankle deep in mud and there's snow on top of that, said Glen Lee, a farmer in Oldham, S.D., who said he's lost count of the number of times his fields have been flooded this year.

"There's water where I've never seen water before. We've had 40 inches of rain around here. And now, snow has drifted between the rows of my soybeans."

The corn and soybean harvest also was far behind schedule in Nebraska.

"I don't expect anyone to return to their fields for at least a week," said Frank Morse, extension agent for Nebraska's Dakota County. "That has area farmers really concerned."

Cornfields should be back in shape for harvest after a couple of drying days, said J. Harlan Ford, a University of Minnesota agronomist.

"I would expect to see some people in the fields this weekend," said Neil Wubben, extension agent in Iowa's Woodbury County.

In Michigan, where an added 1 to 3 inches of snow was expected today, 14.4 inches of snow fell in Herman early Wednesday. Other parts of the state received up to 10 inches, with 5 inches reported in Marquette, 9 at Houghton County Airport and 10 in Wakefield.

In Houghton County, 12,000 to 15,000 residents lost power for 1½ hours Wednesday afternoon when heavy snow downed a transmission line, said Don Desotell, a spokesman for the Upper Peninsula Power Co.

Scattered outages remained late Wednesday night in the north-central Peninsula area, he said.

And, "well over 1,000" customers remained without power late Wednesday in counties along and across Michigan's border with Wisconsin, said a spokesman for the Lake Superior District Power Co.

Schools in parts of Michigan, South Dakota and Wisconsin were closed Wednesday.

A 67-year-old man died Wednesday morning after his car skidded into a light pole on an icy freeway in Omaha, Neb., and a 41-year-old Austin, Minn., man died after his pickup truck skidded off a slippery road into a flooded drainage ditch.

weekend."

He entertained the idea of driving to Lubbock before Friday to pick up the boots. "As soon as I did, I'd have a wreck or I'd get burglarized here." His laugh was faint.

While he was yet pondering what to do about his footwear, Chappell telephoned Linda Bond, promoter for "Waltz Across Texas."

"I called Linda and asked her if it was necessary that I wear a tuxedo," Chappell said. "I told her I fell on hard times." She told him he could wear a dark suit instead.

"I didn't ask her if it would be all right if the suit smelled like smoke."

The suit was one of few things he had salvaged from the fire.

Despite the loss of the boots, clothes, books, furniture and other household goods to fire and theft, Chappell had something to be grateful for. He wasn't at home when the aircraft struck his apartment, but was en route there in his mother's sedan.

"I know," he said, "it would have been hell to pay if it had burned my mom's Lincoln."

Judge angered by prosecutor's statement

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge who has been nearing a confrontation with the Reagan administration over a bitterly contested draft-registration case assailed the government Wednesday for saying his "appetite for more and more irrelevant disclosures of sensitive information has become insatiable."

"This court does have an insatiable appetite for the truth," U.S. District Judge Terry J. Hatter Jr. told a government prosecutor. "It does not have an appetite for disrespectful counsel."

Hatter also questioned the government's assertion that Selective Service System Director Thomas K. Turnage may not be able to answer all questions when called to testify in the case of David Alan Wayte of Pasadena, Calif. Wayte has refused to register for the draft and is trying to get the case thrown out on grounds of discriminatory prosecution, contending that only vocal opponents of registration have been prosecuted.

The judge said Turnage would answer questions if ordered to do so, or run the risk of being held in contempt.

In addition, Hatter ordered the government for the second time to turn over unedited copies of documents relating to development of prosecution policy in draft-registration cases.

Hatter first ordered the government on Oct. 12 to let him review documents sought by Wayte's attorneys and determine if they should be turned over to the defense or withheld as privileged confidential communications. White House documents and other papers were later submitted by the government, but Hatter said at a hearing last week that the papers were "totally useless" because many portions had been excised. It was then that he first ordered the government to turn over unedited copies.

The government indicated it would assert that portions of the documents were privileged because they related to the "deliberative process" in the executive branch.

Hatter rebuked the government Wednesday for the wording of papers filed Monday that referred to the judge's appetite for "irrelevant disclosures."

"It is also apparent," the government said, "that with each new disclosure made pursuant to near-impossible deadlines, the court feels compelled to impugn the motives of the government."

In the same papers, the government said it "is considering an appropriate response to the court concerning its order that (presidential counselor) Edwin Meese III testify." The government's position is that Meese need not testify.

"Moreover, there are grave problems concerning the testimony of...Turnage about matters on which privilege has been invoked," the government said.

Responding to the "irrelevant disclosures" remark, Hatter said quietly but with obvious anger that he had never known prosecutors to use such language in addressing a court. He said the remarks were "uncalled for" and threatened to hold contempt proceedings if the government used such language again.

The government was represented at Wednesday's hearing by Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard R. Romero. But Hatter said he did not believe Romero was responsible for the papers filed Monday. Defense attorney Mark D. Rosenbaum of the American Civil Liberties Union said after the hearing that the papers appeared to have been written "by Attila the Hun." Rosenbaum said he suspects "Attila resides in the White House."

The defense attorney said Meese, the presidential counselor, "was running the show as to the nature of the prosecutions" of young men who have not registered for the draft. Rosenbaum did not, however, identify Meese as the author of the offending papers.

Hatter said Wednesday that to decide whether executive privilege applies to the Wante case, he must be able to review all the requested documents in unedited form.

The government had made "a blanket claim" of privilege, Hatter said, adding sardonically that the claim apparently even extended to "an article from the Washington Post."

Hatter said he would give the government until noon today to decide whether it would turn over the requested documents without deletions or to go to the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals on the questions of privilege. An evidentiary hearing scheduled for today was postponed indefinitely, but there will be a status hearing.

People can't afford electricity, turn to wood-burning stoves, solar panels

LUDLOW, Mass. (AP) — Smoke from wood-burning stoves hovers over Voltage Avenue and solar panels are going up on Power Street as residents of Electric Park pull the plug to trim their shocking electric bills.

When Gordon Gulbrandsen first moved to this model all-electric subdivision 21 years ago, his monthly electric bills were about $33 in the winter.

Since then, he's added a wood stove, 12 inches of roof insulation, thermopane windows and solar panels, but now his bills average $178.

"We've gotten to the point now where I don't see how much more we can do to cut back," he said.

The subdivision in this Springfield suburb was built in 1961 as a model community of more than 100 all-electric homes that were touted as clean, efficient and economical.

About half of those homes now have wood stoves for at least supplemental heat. About a dozen have added solar-heated hot water systems.

"We call it 'wood alley,'" said Ruth Shasles of Voltage Avenue, who hasn't turned on her electric heat in nine years. "On cold mornings the wood-smoke just hangs over the development."

Those who haven't turned to alternate heating say they pay $250-$300 a month for electricity, and it's still rising.

This fall, Western Massachusetts Electric Co. restructured its rates to eliminate some breaks for owners of all-electric homes, and the utility has asked for a $24.1 million rate hike, its third rate increase request in two years.

"It's devastating," said John Scheurich, who has lived on Edison Drive since the subdivision was built. He said his reaction to the increase request "is something you couldn't print."

The utility generates much of its power by burning costly fuel oil. As the price of oil rises, the utility ups its surcharges.

"You try your best to hold down the kilowatts and it seems like it's a little bit better," Gulbrandsen said. "Then the whole thing explodes with fuel charges and rate increase."

Raymond and Diane Saloios moved to Voltage Drive 11 years ago, "because it was the cheapest heat we could get," she said. Then their monthly bills were $13-$15 in the summer and $70-$80 in the winter.

Nine mental patients forced to live in shed

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Behind an unlicensed nursing home in a middle-class neighborhood, two underfed dogs guarded a 10-foot-square garage shed where nine people dressed in rags were forced to live in their own filth, state officials say.

Their only plumbing was a plastic bucket, there was no electric lighting and the shed's only window was boarded up, Mendal G. Kemp of the state Health Care Commission said Wednesday.

Kemp said the nine, six of them former mental patients, were forced to live "practically stacked on top of each other. The situation was horrible."

Both the Health Care Commission and the Welfare Department were considering bringing charges against the operators of the home.

The seven women and two men ranged in age from their early 30s to their late 60s, with one blind, another bedridden, "and all were feeble and malnourished," Kemp said. He could not say how long they had been kept in the room, but one woman told him she had been there since November.

Jane Patterson, director of the community support division of the state Mental Health Department, said all nine showed signs of neglect, including one man with open bedsores and a black eye. She said all were filthy, wore ragged clothing and were very thin.

"The condition these people were in made them very subservient and they were scared to do anything," Kemp said. "They had no toilet articles, no personal items, no food and no water. Inside the room there was one cot and two mattresses pushed up against the wall."

Neighbors said the residents had bathed in the backyard with a garden hose. One neighbor, who was not identified, said they were fed only hot cereal in the morning and a sandwich at night.

The person responsible for the nine was identified as Mildred Davis, who owns a nearby boarding home.

Mrs. Davis said she was paying a woman, whom she did not identify, to live at the house and attend to the residents and was unaware of the conditions in which they were found. "I never went where she had them sitting," Mrs. Davis said.

Kemp said the Health Care Commission was considering bringing charges in Hinds County Chancery Court for operating a nursing home without a license, which is punishable by a fine of $1,000 a day for each day the home remains open.

Ken Chennault, a lawyer for the state Welfare Department, said criminal charges of neglect, abuse or exploitation also could be filed. He said his department had 72 hours after such a report to submit it to the district attorney, who would decide whether to prosecute.

The shed, apparently designed for storage, is at one end of a garage behind a house that has been operating as a nursing home but is not licensed, Kemp said.

He said he visited the house Tuesday but found it locked with no one at home, and he had to climb an 8-foot fence to reach the shed because a gate in the fence was locked.

Kemp said he was challenged by two medium-sized, underfed dogs, chained outside the shed door, who barked when he approached.

Kemp, chief of the commission's licensure and certification division, said the nine were taken to the Jackson-Hinds Comprehensive Health Center for examination.

Ship fire may burn for several days

EVERETT, Wash. (AP) — A spectacular fire that engulfed a fish-processing ship laden with pressurized liquid ammonia might burn for several days in Everett Harbor, authorities say.

Fears that burning polyurethane insulation could release ammonia gas and cyanide fumes could be released into the atmosphere kept firefighters away from the blaze for hours after it was detected Wednesday afternoon.

But the threat was over early today once most of the ammonia had burned, Coast Guard Lt. Scott Gordon said.

Five crewmen escaped the ship without injury shortly after the fire broke out.

Winds of up to 10 mph carried smoke away from downtown Everett and no evacuations were ordered, Everett police spokesman Ken Murray said.

Before the ammonia had burned off, authorities closed a 1½-mile zone in the water and air surrounding the ship in Port Gardiner Bay to keep boats and aircraft away.

The stricken ship, the 320-foot Al-ind-esk-a Sea, carried 18 tons of liquid ammonia, an undetermined amount of chlorine, 10,000 gallons of diesel fuel and 1,500 gallons of lubricating oil.

Officials decided late Wednesday to let the fire burn itself out rather than have the ship towed to shallow water to be scuttled.

Guard charged in deaths blasts 'racial cowards'

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — In his first interview since being charged with killing 13 people last month, former prison guard George Banks lashed out at "racist cowards" who he said had tormented him and his family.

The 40-year-old prisoner talked at length Wednesday during a telephone interview with the Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader about racial problems he encountered while living in this northeastern Pennsylvania city.

Earlier in the day, a preliminary hearing for Banks was postponed so that a hearing could be held on a defense request for a gag order that would bar reporters from talking to him or his family.

Banks faces 13 counts of criminal homicide. Five of his children, the four women who bore them, two other children, another woman and a bystander were killed Sept. 25.

Banks, incarcerated at the Luzerne County prison, told the newspaper he would not discuss the charges against him at the request of his attorneys.

However, he said, "It's a shameful mess. I've lost five beautiful children."

Banks, who had a black father and a white mother, said "I've dealt with racial cowards all my life. I've felt racial abuse from both sides, black and white."

He recalled his childhood when blacks shunned him. "There was this black kid who punched me in the back of the head and kept harassing me just to see if I had enough nerve to fight," he said.

Banks said while he lived with three white women and the children he fathered at a house on Schoolhouse Lane here, white neighbors intimidated the women and used racial epithets to the children.

Some of the people Banks is charged with killing were shot at the Schoolhouse Lane house.

He expressed anger over an incident that occurred at the house Monday night. Neighbors told reporters that a crowd gathered at the house chanting racist statements, and damaging a fence.

Police, called to the home by Banks' brother, John, said they were unable to substantiate the allegation, but said a crowd had gathered in front of the house when they arrived.

"This is the kind of thing I've had to live with all my life," Banks said. "They behave in a cowardly fashion. They are the same type who would drive past my home in speeding cars yelling racist remarks. The same type who called my children and their mothers racist names."

The gag order, which would prohibit prison officials from allowing reporters access to Banks, was requested by the Luzerne County Public Defender's Office, which represents him. It also would bar his mother, brother and several county officers from talking to reporters.

Trapper convicted in deaths of two fish, game officers

CALDWELL, Idaho (AP) — Trapper Claude Dallas may have been acquitted by reason of self-defense in the slayings of two Idaho fish and game officers had he not shot each man once in the head after he had killed them, the jury foreman says.

Dallas, 32, who had been charged with two counts of first-degree murder, was convicted Wednesday of voluntary manslaughter in the deaths of officers Bill Pogue, 50, and Conley Elms, 34, on Jan. 5, 1981, at Dallas' camp in a remote desert canyon in southwestern Idaho.

Foreman Milo Moore, a Caldwell shopkeeper, said the jurors, who deliberated more than a week, "figured Pogue drew his gun and Dallas was a better marksman. Dallas was faster on the draw. He won out."

But he said Dallas went beyond self-defense when he ran back to his tent after shooting the two men, got a .22-caliber rifle and fired one bullet into the head of each officer.

Another juror, retired Nampa farmer W.H. Lewis, said Pogue and Elms seemed to be overstepping their official duties by insisting on arresting Dallas for poaching violations. "We just thought the wardens were overbearing," Lewis said.

Prosecutor Clayton Andersen said Dallas' own testimony helped save him from a murder conviction. He said the trapper lied on the stand two weeks ago when he said Pogue had threatened to kill him, but his testimony made an indelible impression on the jurors "because I think Claude Dallas in the courtroom and Claude Dallas on the mountain are two different persons."

Defense lawyers Michael Donnelly and Bill Mauk agreed that Dallas was their best witness, but they said they also were unhappy with the verdict. "Claude was disappointed that he was not acquitted on all charges," Donnelly said.

Bahai leader found dead in New York City

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — A California college dean and Bahai leader who vanished Friday in New York City was found dead in a Stamford parking lot, stabbed in the neck, authorities say.

The body of Daniel C. Jordan was found Saturday and was identified Wednesday by his wife, Nancy, said Detective Lt. Joseph Falzetti.

Police believed he had been killed somewhere else and his body taken to the parking lot at the rear of a local store in this New York City suburb. The body was discovered at 11 a.m. Saturday in a trash pile, Falzetti said.

The 50-year-old dean of education at National University in San Diego had been elected co-chairman of the Bahai faith's nine-member governing assembly in August, according to Parks Scott, a spokesman for the Bahai headquarters in Wilmette, Ill.

The New York Daily News today quoted unidentified police sources as saying Jordan may have been the victim of an Iranian anti-Baha'i hit squad.

Leaders of the faith in Iran have been harassed, jailed and in some cases executed since the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini took power.

Scott said Jordan had visited Tehran, Iran, during the past year to try to give support to Bahai followers. But Scott said Jordan did not participate in any political activities in Tehran and had never been threatened because of the trip.

"We have no reason to believe there are any connections between Dr. Jordan's death and the Bahai faith," Scott said.

The Bahai faith has about 100,000 members in the United States and about 3 million in the world, Scott said.

Jordan flew to New York's LaGuardia Airport on Friday and was to have spoken Saturday at a conference at the New York University Club in Manhattan. New York police said he phoned an associate from the airport to say he would be staying with friends.

He did not appear at the conference, and he also failed to keep an engagement in Portland, Ore., on Sunday.

Jury in official misconduct trial of Newark mayor to continue deliberations today

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The jury considering charges of misconduct in office against Mayor Kenneth Gibson reviewed four hours of key testimony without reaching a verdict on the first day of deliberations.

The jury, which was to resume deliberations today, began Wednesday going over the evidence from the 5½-week trial after receiving instructions from Superior Court Judge Paul Huot.

Gibson and former City Council President Earl Harris were charged with conspiracy and official misconduct in the return of a former city councilman, Michael Bontempo, to the city payroll in the summer of 1981.

Bontempo had retired as chief of security at the city watershed six months earlier. But when vandals disrupted the city's water system in July 1981, it was disclosed that Bontempo had moved to Florida early in 1980.

Gibson is serving his fourth term as mayor of New Jersey's largest city. He was re-elected in June, defeating political ally Harris in a runoff.

Harris and Gibson each face a maximum penalty of 10 to 20 years in prison and $200,000 in fines.

The jury spent 8½ hours mulling the evidence Wednesday, asking to review testimony by Gilbert Nicholas, a former city employee who is Bontempo's nephew, and Zinnerford Smith, Gibson's chief of staff.

During his charge to the jury Wednesday morning, Huot told the panel to determine the "credibility and reliability" of the witnesses and to "leave your emotions behind."

Charges that Gibson and Harris had created two no-show jobs between 1974 and 1980 for Bontempo were dismissed on Monday by Huot, who ruled there was insufficient evidence. Huot dismissed 67 of 69 counts against Gibson and 51 of 53 counts against Harris.

Assistant Essex County Prosecutor John Matthews contended Bontempo received three checks for more than $2,000 in June and July of 1981 although he was not showing up for work.

In closing statements Tuesday, defense attorney Albert Besser said there was no evidence that showed Gibson knew Bontempo returned to the payroll in 1981. Defense attorney Joseph Hayden Jr. said Harris also did not know the three checks were issued.

Gibson, the 50-year-old son of an Alabama butcher, became the first black mayor of a major Northeastern city when he became Newark mayor in 1970.

Tylenol deaths suspect remembered by cousin as cold, cruel, sadistic boy

By The Associated Press

James W. Lewis, wanted for questioning in Chicago's Tylenol murders, is remembered by his cousin as a cold, cruel and sadistic boy who fought with his stepfather and once attacked his adoptive mother.

"I recall very well what a monster he is," said Lucille Mallott, who grew up with Lewis in Carl Junction, Mo., and still lives in the area.

About 15 years ago, Lewis went into a rage after his mother accused him of stealing, Mrs. Mallott said. "He attacked her with an ax."

When his stepfather tried to intervene, Lewis broke his ribs, according to Mrs. Mallott. Police said he was arrested several times.

Lewis was sent to a mental hospital in Nevada, Mo., after the attack and released in 1968, she said. Doctors had diagnosed Lewis as schizophrenic, police said Wednesday.

BORN IN Memphis, Tenn., as Theodore Elmer Wilson, he was adopted at age 3. He was raised as James Wilson, then as James W. Lewis. He graduated from Carl Junction High School in 1964, playing in the band, and later attended a junior college and the University of Missouri at Kansas City.

Since his school days, Lewis has used at least 20 different names and his wife has gone by at least five aliases, according to the FBI.

"He's almost like a chameleon with the names and things he takes on," said police Sgt. Jim Treece of Kansas City, where Lewis once lived and is still wanted on a warrant charging unlawful flight to avoid prosecution.

Tom Kline, Lewis' building manager in Chicago, remembers him as a practical joker who once exploded a firecracker in his face.

"I never could pin him down as to what he did for a living," said Dan Manas, who lived in the same building.

LEWIS HAS lived in many states and held many jobs: computer specialist, tax accountant, free-lance writer, importer of Indian tapestries and salesman of jewelry, pharmaceutical machinery and real estate.

Lewis' wife, born Leann Miller, is wanted on a federal warrant charging misuse of a Social Security card while trying to obtain work in Chicago.

Lewis, described as about 6-foot-1 with brown hair and a beard, has a watery left eye because of a permanent sty under it, said Assistant Deputy FBI Director Kenneth Walton in New York. As a result, he said, Lewis "constantly dabs at the eye."

In Carl Junction, when Lewis got angry or argued with his parents, he usually stormed off into the woods and stayed there for days, Mrs. Mallott said.

Police Sgt. Jake Dyer said Lewis "kept diaries on all types of things, including ways you could poison a city's water supply."

IN 1974, the couple's 5-year-old daughter, Toni, died after undergoing open-heart surgery.

"We do know that he was very upset over the death of his daughter," Walton said. "Reportedly on occasion he carried a recording of her voice that he would play for people."

In 1978, Lewis was charged with the murder of 72-year-old Raymond West, a Kansas City man who had hired Lewis as an accountant.

West's dismembered body was found hanging from a pulley in his attic the same day Lewis tried to cash a forged check on his account, according to published reports.

The charges were dismissed, in part because some evidence was illegally obtained. Authorities say some of the seized property included journals describing the use of various poisons and their effects on human beings.

Officers comb New York looking for Lewis

NEW YORK (AP) — Police laid out a dragnet for James W. Lewis, described in Illinois as a "prime suspect" in the Tylenol killings, but at the same time they questioned whether Lewis was in Chicago when the deaths occurred.

Meanwhile, authorities said a man resembling Lewis was turned away from a cheap midtown hotel only 90 minutes before police closed in.

More than 100 FBI agents and 30 city detectives combed the city Wednesday after learning that Lewis and his wife had apparently slipped through their fingers. "If they're in the city, we will find them," said Deputy Assistant FBI Director Kenneth Walton.

Lewis, 36, is charged in a federal arrest warrant with trying to extort $1 million from McNeil Consumer Products Co., the manufacturer of Extra-Strength Tylenol. Seven people died after swallowing Tylenol capsules that had been laced with cyanide.

He was last seen a week ago at the Rutledge Hotel, a cheap hostelry where he lived with his 35-year-old wife, Leann, for six weeks.

That included the time of the Tylenol deaths in Chicago, reported between Sept. 29 and Oct. 2.

"We think they stayed here (New York)," said Chief of Detectives James T. Sullivan. "We don't think there was traveling back and forth (to Chicago). The woman was working regularly during that time and her husband was seen with her."

But Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner repeated Wednesday that Lewis was still considered "a prime suspect" although "not the only one." He said authorities received reports of the couple being seen in Chicago during the period New York authorities say they were in their city.

Walton said Mrs. Lewis, who worked as a bookkeeper at a New York real estate office during the couple's stay at the hotel, may have a kidney ailment, and agents checked local hospitals.

New York police said they were investigating reports, based on a airline ticket purchase and a statement Wednesday by a Port Authority police officer, that Mrs. Lewis may have flown to Boston.

Boston police arrested a woman Wednesday night on a bad check charge and were questioning her about the Tylenol case because she bore a resemblance to Mrs. Lewis, said spokesman Tom Santry. He would not identify the woman but said he believed she would prove not to be the woman police are seeking.

Authorities were also looking for a car they said the Lewises may have, a brown 1969 AMC station wagon with Missouri license plates.

Police in Pennsylvania and Indiana said they were told to be on the lookout for a car matching that description after a report that such a car was seen west of Buffalo, N.Y., heading west on the New York State Thruway Wednesday.

In New York, the FBI's Walton said Mrs. Lewis had signed in at the Rutledge Hotel on Sept. 6 under the name Nancy Richardson, an alias she has used before. He added she listed their Illinois address in the hotel register. Lewis was last seen Oct. 14 and his wife turned in the room key Saturday.

Lea J. Turner holds her 5-year-old son, Julius, who, she says is a "fidgety little boy." However, officials at Spring Hill Elementary School have charged him as a juvenile for his "uncontrollable behavior" and have forbidden his return to school unless he is accompanied by an adult. But Judge D.B. Daugherty believes his behavior is in part, a result of his home environment.

Charges dropped against 5-year-old

Judge: Boy not responsible for behavior

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — A 5-year-old accused of "uncontrollable" behavior in his kindergarten class has been spared juvenile charges, but must be accompanied by an adult when he returns to school.

Circuit Judge D.B. Daugherty, who dropped the charges Wednesday against Julius Turner, also ordered a hearing on the child's future, saying he feared the boy might have problems that could surface again.

The 47-pound boy, whose teacher also accused him of biting her, slept through the closed-door hearing.

"That child is not at all responsible for what he did," said the Cabell County judge in dismissing a juvenile petition brought by the principal of Spring Hill Elementary. "That mother said her son was hyperactive, but a hyperactive child doesn't fall asleep."

Daugherty said he was "concerned that his problems — and they are serious problems — were brought on by his home environment; that's why I'm ordering the hearing with welfare department officials."

SCHOOL PRINCIPAL Elmer Hayes, who testified with kindergarten teacher Carol Hensley, said earlier that he considered the child to be a "destructive and uncontrollable" threat to the education of fellow children.

The judge ordered Julius to be accompanied by an adult member of his family when he returns to school.

Hayes filed the petition against the boy after an altercation at school last Friday with the boy's mother, Lea J. Turner. The principal, who brought assault charges against Mrs. Turner — to which an innocent plea was entered on her behalf — said he filed the juvenile charges only because the boy needed attention and the parents refused to respond to repeated complaints.

Mrs. Turner said she thought Hayes' policies were the primary reason for any behavior problems exhibited by Julius.

"At Spring Hill, either the kids act like little soldiers and do exactly what they're told to do or they get yanked around," she said, adding that the trouble started after Hayes pinched her son's face several weeks ago.

"Julius started fighting back at that point," said Mrs. Turner, who said other parents also have been upset by the way their children "have been pulled and pushed around at the school."

BEFORE THE hearing, Mrs. Turner said her son had been evaluated by a learning disabilities specialist, Dr. Donna Dunn, who found the boy to be "perfectly normal" but hyperactive. Mrs. Turner said she was trying to control the condition through diet.

After the ruling Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Turner said she was upset at being forced to sit through two hours of testimony from school officials without being able to speak on behalf of her son or herself.

"I think we got a raw deal from the judge and from my court-appointed attorney," she said. "Our attorney didn't even talk to me or tell me what he planned to do."

"Why should I?" responded attorney Keith Newman, who said he moved for dismissal of the charges after the school officials testified. "I got what I wanted ... I was representing the child, not his mother."

Daugherty said he decided to conduct a follow-up hearing on the boy's home life because he was concerned that abuse or neglect may have contributed to the child's behavior problems.

"Something is seriously wrong," he said. "I'm afraid if we don't do something now, he will be back before me 10 years from now on a much more serious charge."

THE LEARNING specialist, Ms. Dunn, who had come to the hearing expecting to testify, disagreed with the judge.

"He's a fine little boy," she said. "I evaluated him and found that he's perfectly normal but does need to learn a new way of minding. He's restless and he has a bad habit of biting, but that can be controlled through behavior modification and diet.

"I'm working with his parents to implement these techniques," she said. "The boy is mildly hyperactive, but his parents are concerned and want to help him."

Earlier this year, California authorities placed a 7-year-old on trial on charges of arson, mischief and theft after vandalism was reported at a Ventura County storage yard. The child was placed on probation.

Use on rise of cameras as security

NEW YORK (AP) — If you have waited for a Manhattan subway train, walked down a Miami Beach street or bought Extra-Strength Tylenol in a Chicago drug store, yours may be among the million images on file in the monitored society.

The kind of automatic camera that photographed cyanide poisoning victim Paula Prince, and may also have caught the image of James Lewis, a prime suspect in the seven Tylenol killings, is an increasingly popular surveillance tool.

By design and by chance, Americans are being watched in stores and factories, jails and hospitals, barnyards and locker rooms. Long a fixture in banks, where they are required by law, surveillance systems now reach from embassies to department store mannequins.

Sales by the industry, now about $500 million a year, are expected to nearly double by the end of 1984, according to Kathy Sowder of ADT Security Systems. Demand for surveillance systems has "exploded," she says, because "people are having money problems," and stealing to solve them.

"It seems wherever you look you've got a TV camera staring down at your face," says Jack Greenfield, Ms. Sowder's colleague at ADT.

IN THE NEXT few years, cameras attached to recorders or monitored by human eyes will scan homes, stores and public places, "wherever people expect vandalism or theft," says Ms. Sowder.

Properly used, a television camera might have prevented the Tylenol killings, according to Bill Rudd, vice president of DA General in Needham, Mass., one of the nation's top makers of surveillance cameras.

"With a well-equipped surveillance outfit you can watch people pretty closely," he says. "If somebody's been doing something funny, it's probably going to be seen by the trained eye."

Dealers say their devices are moving beyond banks and stores and into some unusual locations:

—A house on the intercoastal waterway in Florida has underwater cameras to guard against aquatic intruders.

—A Midwestern pig farmer uses cameras to make sure his animals, who are packed tightly together as they fatten up, do not trample each other.

—NEW YORK CITY has cameras in several subway stations and is installing more at crime-ridden Times Square stations.

—Cameras scan the First National Bank of Chicago's public plaza in the Loop.

—On Wall Street, cameras monitor areas where negotiable securities are handled and traded. Missing stock certificates worth about $1 million were located in a discarded box after a review of video tape showed the box was out of place.

—Cameras allow officials in several cities to keep an eye out for highway traffic jams and accidents.

—Fears of street crime in Miami Beach led authorities to install cameras that monitor a shopping area.

Part of surveillance systems' popularity is attributable to reusable video tape, which is easier to use and less expensive than film, although the picture is not as clear.

MOST CAMERAS are cheaper than guards, and they don't fall asleep or go out to the bathroom, salesmen say.

Systems now cost as little as several hundred dollars or as much as $50,000. A good bank system goes for $6,000 to $10,000.

Many systems are activated only by a particular event: The camera at Walgreen's that photographed Miss Prince buying the cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol that killed her was linked to a Northern Trust Bank automatic teller which clicked when a customer used a bank card to begin a transaction. The camera focused on the area in front of the bank machine, but took in the checkout line as well.

Other recording systems begin when someone enters the monitored space; still others come with infrared cameras that see in the dark.

The surveillance frontier is the home, says Carmine Pellosie, vice president of CCS Communication Control here. "You're not talking big money any more, and you're getting a feeling of security," he says. "It's going to get so cheap you'll use a camera instead of a front doorbell."

Although the trend toward a monitored society worries civil libertarians, they note that much of the surveillance is in public places.

"SOMEONE ON A subway platform really has no expectation of privacy,"says New York Civil Liberties Union attorney Richard Emery.

The locker room, however, is another story, and Robert DeGennaro of Video Surveillance says he installs devices in such areas only if the customer company absolves him of liability for invasion of privacy.

Emery says that surveillance film or tape should be retained only for a "short period" unless needed for court use and not used to build up a library.

But Rudd, whose company installs and maintains systems and reviews and stores the film, says the record is stored for up to two years.

A spokesman for Northern Trust Bank, which installed the camera in Walgreen's several months ago, declined for security reasons to say how long the bank keeps film of snapshots.

Meanwhile, "photographs from these systems support evidence in court cases every day," Rudd says. "The surveillance camera picture has become such a tool for law enforcement it is readily accepted as substantial evidence. It is now accepted more and more without expert testimony."

Four people asphyxiated in apartment

NEW YORK (AP) — Two young boys, their mother and an elderly woman were asphyxiated in their apartment by gas from a stove used to help heat the home, police say.

A third child, 4-year-old Jeannette Perry, somehow survived and let police into the Brooklyn apartment Wednesday afternoon.

"How this youngster survived is anybody's guess," police Detective Fred Kohler said after firefighters found the bodies, identified as Anne Stevenson, 67, Lydia Perry, 22, and her sons, Willie, 2, and 10-month-old Fred.

Jeannette was reported in good condition today at Kings County Hospital.

Mrs. Perry and her children were found in one bedroom and the elderly woman was found in a second bedroom, police said.

Housing Authority police summoned firefighters after receiving reports of an abandoned child or squatters in the apartment.

The oven door was open and all the windows in the apartment were closed, police said.

'People for the American Way' goes on TV to rebut Moral Majority

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — People For the American Way, an organization nurtured by tv producer Norman Lear, has bought time on more than 20 television stations this Friday for a half-hour attack against the Moral Majority and allied groups.

The program, which uses a weapon of the TV evangelists that it singles out — soliciting funds on the air — will be seen in prime time in many areas.

A pre-screening of the program, "Life & Liberty...For All Who Believe," leaves no doubt that it is a fierce attack by the Lear-supported organization against such groups as Rev. Jerry Falwell's Moral Majority.

Falwell has blistered Lear publicly for the content of his taboo-shattering TV series, which have included "All in the Family," "Maude" and "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman."

Friday's prime-time broadcast brings to a kind of zenith the use of TV as a battleground to influence the nation's outlooks on religion and politics. People For the American Way, which was created to combat the growing power of the religious right, has declared itself a principal foe of that movement, using a newsletter, TV and show business celebrities to further its cause.

Sue Vogelsinger, director of press information for People For the American Way, said that more than 20 TV outlets across the nation have been lined up thus far to broadcast the group's program, for which Burt Lancaster is the host.

Lear and People For the American Way last season put on a huge, prime-time, all-star ABC-TV celebrity special called "I Love Liberty." It was avowedly nonpolitical, but the mere association with the project of Lear and People For the American Way left no doubt why the broadcast was initiated.

The 30-minute program/fund-raiser/commercial is also scheduled to be seen during the next few weeks in such cities as New York, Washington, Boston, Houston and St. Louis. Other outlets include Philadelphia, Atlanta, Cleveland, Bakersfield, Fresno, and towns in Iowa, Kansas and North Carolina. Ted Turner's Atlanta superstation, WTBS, which is beamed to cable outlets all over the country, will carry the broadcast today at 9:05 p.m.

People For the American Way says the broadcast is "the first of a series of half-hour programs" that it will produce.

Voters ask: Does Reagan care about them?

Hearst Feature Service

DES MOINES, Iowa — As new statistics show the economy slowing to a crawl, millions of voters in this highly volatile mid-term election are mulling over two key questions about President Reagan: does he care that they are hurting and will he come to their aid?

Many millions of blue collar Democrats who defected to President Reagan in 1980 already have answered that question — negatively.

But polls and on-the-street interviews show that huge numbers of voters still have not decided whether to "stay the course" with Reagan or whether that might be hazardous to their economic health.

The individuals interviewed were not welfare recipients, but hardworking farmers and agri-business employees who fear for their future as they see major industries failing, wiping out their jobs and livelihood. They are concerned that the government no longer feels an obligation to help save those enterprises that form such basic part of American life.

Both GOP and Democratic strategists know the economy will be a dominant influence in the elections and Wednesday's report showing that the economy had dropped markedly was bound to hurt Republicans.

THE GROSS NATIONAL product, the inflation-adjusted value of goods and services distributed throughout the economy, grew at only an 0.8 percent annual rate in the third quarter, far short of the 2.1 percent growth of the second quarter and well below the government's own project of a 1.5 percent gain.

This is far short of the growth spurt required to yank the economy out of its recession. Normally, a 4 percent to 5 percent growth rate is considered healthy. The Commerce Department statistics showed that exports dropped sharply — bad news especially for the depressed Midwestern states — and that factory sales continued to erode while stockpiles of unsold goods grew.

Reagan and his White House aides consistently say they will not change their economic course and do not favor government stimulus to jolt the economy upward. The latest figures put even more pressure on them to say what they would do — and it increases the questions in the hard-pressed Midwestern states about the cost of "staying the course."

Fred Tomlinson, a grain elevator manager in Polk County, outside of Des Moines, says even his most stalwart Republican customers are now "beginning to wonder how close to the edge we are and to question whether maybe a little bit of inflation was not all right."

FOR MOST VOTERS, their decision on Nov. 2 will be based on far less tangible factors — such as whether Reagan is so intent on cutting government that he is willing to abandon millions of them in the process.

A seasoned, lanky Iowan put it most ascerbically, in explaining why many Democrats who once endorsed Reagan are now fleeing in alarm:

"I look at it like this: if Reagan were a regimental commander and he had three companies back here behind the line but he had one company way up exposed on the front...and if that one company was going to be annhilated unless he went to help them out — I think he'd sell out that one company.

"And I think that's what he's doing to the country," said Harold Asmussen, 62, who is the buildings and grounds supervisor for the high school in rural Preston, Iowa.

"Too many people are suffering. Reagan figures that 10 percent of the people are expendable. I think if I were up front in that endangered company, I'd rather have Jimmy Carter as regimental commander. He wouldn't sell us out. I'd rather have us all go down together than dump 10 percent of us," Asmussen said

Few people hanker for a return to Carter. Asmussen was unusual in contrasting Reagan with Carter.

Non-scientist to have test on shuttle

WASHINGTON (AP) — American University freshman Michelle Issel, who claims she doesn't like science, is the brains behind one of three student-proposed experiments astronauts are scheduled to perform aboard next month's flight of the space shuttle Columbia.

Miss Issel, an honors graduate of Mark T. Sheehan High School in Wallingford, Conn., was one of 1,500 students who submitted ideas for the experiments in a national contest two years ago. Hers and nine others were selected for various shuttle flights.

The contest was sponsored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the National Science Teachers Association.

Miss Issel, who says she was "the least likely person to win a contest like this," proposed trying to grow triglycine sulphate crystals in weightless space.

Westwood Medical Clinic

A New Concept In Medical Care

...serving the needs of a growing community.

Quality Medical Treatment is readily and reasonably available at Westwood Medical Clinic in Midland.

You receive the utmost personal attention in a pleasant, friendly atmosphere. Convenience and quality are of primary concern at Westwood Medical Clinic.

Minimum Waiting Time is assured. Our goal is to have patients see the doctor for treatment within 15-20 minutes after their arrival.

Equipped with the most modern diagnostic, X-ray and laboratory equipment, the clinic also has private treatment rooms and special rooms and equipment for applying casts, suturing and treating illnesses/injuries.

Examinations are also conducted for school, college, pre-employment, D.O.T. and other state and federal licenses, premarital and life insurance. Free Blood Pressure checks and diabetes screening are also available.

Charges are generally comparable to an office visit and usually much less than at a hospital emergency room.

An Alternative to the hospital emergency room and a private physician's office, the clinic offers advantages of both.

No Appointment is ever necessary at the clinic which is open extended hours: from 10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Staffed at all times by a licensed physician, a nurse and other qualified ancillary personnel, these professionals respond immediately to your specific medical need.

Medical Treatment is available for cuts, lacerations, sprains, fractures, dislocations, chest pains, flus, sore throats, childhood diseases, accidents and job related injuries of all types. However, life-threatening emergencies (such as severe trauma automobile accident victims, etc.) are encouraged to go directly to a hospital emergency room where full back-up services (such as blood banks and operating rooms) are available.

Insurance Claims are easy to fill out and file since an itemized statement is supplied to each patient for reimbursement.

FDA warns that no drug minimizes drunkenness

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government says people who drink shouldn't be misled by products which purport to sober up a drunk: There's no scientific proof that anything can minimize inebriation and no drug has been approved for that purpose.

The warning came Tuesday as a Utah company began selling capsules by telephone as "an aid in the relief of alcohol intoxication and hangover symptoms." Alan Einersen, public relations representative for Sober-Up! Inc., said the product went on sale Monday.

Doseage of "Sober-Up!" can be from four to 10 capsules depending upon a person's body weight and the amount of alcohol consumed. A bottle of 32 capsules is $9.99.

"Sober-Up!" is made of trace minerals which have been available under another brand name at health food stores for years, Einersen said in a telephone interview from Las Vegas, Nev.

The Food and Drug Administration already has begun an investigation which might lead to legal action against manufacturers of such products. Representatives from the company and the agency will meet today, Einersen said.

"The FDA is unaware of adequate and well-controlled scientific studies which demonstrate that any product or ingredient can prevent or minimize inebriation," agency spokesman Bruce Brown said in Washington.

"There is an obvious danger if motorists, in particular, rely on a product's claims that it will sober them up unless such claims are substantiated," he added. "Because of this danger, FDA wants consumers to know that no such product has been approved for marketing by FDA."

The FDA regards all products claiming to be sobriety aids as unapproved new drugs, which require clearance from the agency.

Before taking action against an item, the FDA must examine the label and advertising claims and sample the product to determine its contents.

Brown said the problem of drinking and driving is especially crucial since the holiday season is approaching.

"A lot of people may want to believe this stuff is the answer: drink all you want and take a pill." Brown said.

But Einersen said, "We have a caution on our label: 'don't drink and drive.'"

About 25,000 persons died in alcohol-related traffic accidents last year and one third of them were between 16 and 24, government statistics show.

Einersen said no controlled scientific studies have been conducted to determine whether the capsules work.

"I have no assurance it will work on everyone. Overall, the test works on from 85 percent to 90 percent of the people who have taken it under informal medical supervision," he said. About "100 or so people have taken it over the course of the last several years," he said.

Einersen said the product works by carrying extra oxygen to the brain. "Sober-Up!" won't help a person pass a breathalyzer or a blood alcohol test.

But he said seven subjects who drank six drinks each on Monday and took a digital dexterity test 40 minutes to 60 minutes later passed that test.

He said the Salt Lake City company didn't seek FDA approval because its officers didn't believe it was necessary since the trace mineral in the product, montmorillonite, has been available for years.

Brown said FDA is aware of two potential competitors who plan to bring similar products on the market by the end of the year, "Sober-Aid" made by Zoe Products of Los Angeles and "Sober Up Time" made by It's Sober Up Time Co. of Chatsworth, Calif.

Application hearing set

Austin Bureau

AUSTN — The Texas Water Commission has set a hearing in Abilene Nov. 9 on the application of Colorado City for a waste discharge amendment to change its existing permit from a no-discharge permit to a discharge permit.

The hearing is set for 9 a.m. Nov. 9 at the Abilene Civic Center in conference room 205.

The proposed amendment seeks to increase the discharge of wastes from 350,000 gallons per day to 600,000 gallons per day at two sites.

The primary facilities are located at 200 East Central Ave., two blocks east of SH 163, and the secondary facilities are located approximately 1.6 miles south-southeast of the primary facility in Mitchell County.

The amendment also seeks to change the biochemical oxygen demand from 35 milligrams per liter (mg/l) to 30 mg/l, and to add total suspended solids requirements of 90 mg/l.

The amendment makes provisions for irrigation on an adjacent farm land, at an average rate not to exceed 4.2 acre-feet of water.

The applicant proposes complete renovation and expansion of the existing facilities.

The wastes are to be disposed of by use of a pipe, thence to the Colorado River.

Not all stomach pain may be result of ulcer

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been getting pains in my stomach and I don't know if it's an ulcer or my gallbladder. My father had ulcers and I think I've got the same type of pain. Can you describe for me what an ulcer attack feels like? — Joel, Miami Beach, Fla.

Dear Joel: I can tell you in general what an ulcer feels like, but I must warn you very strongly about the risk of self-diagnosis. If you're suffering pain, you should see a doctor to determine its cause.

As for the symptoms of an ulcer, they are often described by patients as a burning sensation. Pain from a peptic ulcer usually occurs an hour or two after eating and may be relieved by an antacid. However, "usually" does not mean "always," and some patients with ulcers may be relatively free of pain.

The diagnosis of an ulcer can only be made by a physician, either through tests such as X-rays or by using a flexible tube (a gastroscope) to look into the gastrointestinal tract. The bottom line is that your pain my or may not be a result of an ulcer, and a visit to your physician to pinpoint the cause is certainly indicated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I went to one doctor because I had an inflamation of the ear, and he prescribed some drops for me to use. When the condition did not clear up within a few weeks, I went to another doctor and he stopped the drops and the ear got better. Can you figure out why the ear got better when I stopped using the medicine? — Kip, Providence, R.I.

Dear Kip: My answer, of course, must be purely speculative and with a couple of "ifs." If you were being treated with an antibiotic, and if you are allergic to the antibiotic, you may have been suffering from an allergic contact dermatitis (an inflammation of the skin due to an allergy).

I have seen this happen in some of my patients and it could very well account for your experience.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The thought of having any type of chronic condition really bugs me. I don't mind dieting or even having an operation if that would be the only way of correcting something that's wrong with me. That's a long way of saying that I've got an ulcer, and what I'd like to know is whether an operation would cure it once and for all. — Charlie, Newark, N.J.

Dear Charlie: There can be no guarantee that an ulcer will not recur, just as there can be no guarantee that one will not occur in the first place. Some of my patients have had only a single episode of ulcer, but others have had more. However, I am able to improve their chances of avoiding a recurrence by prescribing medication and a diet that excludes foods that might cause them discomfort. But no one can guarantee that an ulcer will not recur.

For Elmer, Montgomery, Ala.: Some heart transplant patients have received two implants, and some have even had three. The five-year-survival rate for cardiac transplantation is approaching 50 percent.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Missouri congressman running scared in face of challenger

Hearst Feature Service

ST. LOUIS, MO. — The elaborate color television ads by famous filmaker Charlie Guggenheim showed a polished Sen. John Danforth speaking to an elderly group saying "social security is the most important program we ever developed..."

Suddenly, the film froze.

Then, the television screen flashed the words : "The facts — six times in 1981 Sen. Danforth supported cuts in social security."

Next, the screen flashed on a picture of State Sen. Harriet Woods, with the words "The Choice" underlined. It is an unorthodox campaign ad by any standard, swiping a portion of your opponent's promotion spot and then using it to rebut his claim. But it apparently is working for the come-from-behind Democratic challenger Woods, the only woman nominated for the U.S. Senate by the Democrats this year.

The battle between Danforth, the moderate establishment Republican and heir to the Raltson-Purina fortune, and Woods, the liberal Democrat with little money and only slight name recognition, has classic political overtones.

She has made major inroads on Danforth's once-assured re-election prospects. She bucked her own party leadership after it tried to persuade her she could not raise the money, would ruin her political future and should drop out of the race last Spring. They had recruited as the Democratic senatorial candidate a banker-lobbyist, who had no position on abortion or the equal rights amendment, and therefore might survive in Missouri's tumultuous political climate.

Instead Harriet Woods not only refused to drop out but she got 45 percent of th Democratic primary vote in a crowded field of 11. The banker-lobbyist got less than half that.

Woods is still a long shot, but Danforth has now been put on the list of Republicans who could be swept away if a Democratic tidal wave unexpectedly occurs on November 2.

Danforth is running scared. He has raised more than $2 million and is using much of that for the elaborate television campaign shaped by Guggenheim, who rarely takes GOP candidates but is a long time friend.

One fact jumps out at any viewer watching all of the Danforths ads: there is virtually no mentioned of the economy.

The only ad that focused on it was a boring five-minute excerpt from a Danforth speech which raised all of the wrong questions: Why is the unemployment so high, why is inflation so troublesome and why is the U.S. slipping behind competitvely. That ad was pulled ostensibly because it cost too much to show, but that left Danforth with only beautiful Guggenheim ads promoting his character and his family.

The economy could be Danforth's achilles' heel, however, and Woods is capitalizing on it through unprecedented unified support from organizaed labor, whose leaders say they expect the Woods campaign to create as large a vote by union members as the 1978 referendum on a right to work issue.

Missouri Gov Kit Bond sought to persuade Danforth that the economic issue is causing him trouble and to go on the attack against Woods as being too liberal for Missouri voters.

Bond's advice angered Danforth and he has rejected it, saying "that wouldn't be me...why should I attack her?"

At the same time, Danforth has started to separate himself from the ideologues in the Reagan administration, if not from the president himself.

"I think (Interior) Secretary (James) Watt is an extremist." Danforth told a Kiwanis questioner at a lunch.

Woods is doing her best to tie Danforth to Reaganomics and to such Republican senatorial colleagues as North Carolina's Jesse Helms, saying "he's talking like a Democrat moderate but his voting record has been like Helms."

She is asked frequently about Reagans economic plan, about the high bankruptcy and high unemployment in Missouri and whether she believes the president really is turning the economy around.

"When 'staying the course' means that the Secretary of Treasury says 'don't worry things are going to get better by the late 1980s,' I'm out here having to deal today with people who are unemployed with the elderly and the handicapped who are having their benefits taken away," she said.

Danforth is one of three Republican senate moderates who could be upset this year if the economy propels a Democratic surge akin to the Republican sweep of 1980 which gave the GOP control of the Senate.

Unlike Democrat Mark Dayton who is opposing moderate Minnesota GOP Senator David Durenberger, however, Harriet Woods has no great personal wealth to invest in her uphill campaign. Money is tight. She is not able to mount a major statewide advertising campaign-and the world series mania has locked out any interest in the elections for these crucial days.

Unlike Vermont Attorney General Jim Guest, the Democrat who is giving GOP Senator Robert Stafford a hard race, Woods is not well known across the state despite 16 years in local or state policitics .

What she does have is a uncommonly strong coalition of activists: labor, femmists, the elderly, environmentalists, the handicapped, nuclear freeze proponents and the bulk of regular Democrats.

"Six to eight months ago I would have said nobody could touch John Danforth but I think he is vulnerable now and this Harriet Woods is gaining steam," said Kansas City lumberman Ron Piercy, a Danforth supporter.

One unknown question is the potency of the abortion issue. Woods is personally against abortion and won many Irish and Italian voters in the primary. Anti-abortion activists, however, say they have saved their ammunition against her for the final weeks of the campaign and plan to let every voter realize that Woods has consistently voted for pro-abortion legislation while Danforth is a sponsor of the proposed Constitutional amendment that would would band all abortions.

Empires apple of future

CLAVERACK, N.Y. (AP) — Around Columbia County, they call it the apple of the future.

A cross between two of the world's top-selling apples — the McIntosh and the Red Delicious — the Empire Apple only began appearing at fruit stands in the last three to five years. It's likely to be another five to 10 years before it really takes off, because Empire trees, planted only in the last 10 years or so, are still too young to produce the quantities necessary for commercial success.

But hopes are high in this apple-growing region of eastern New York that the Empire eventually will be as strong a seller as the McIntosh, which grows best in the cool, crisp nights and sunny days of northern New York's early fall.

"Macs" need warm weather to ripen but cold nights to give them the right color and sugar content, explained Peter Hotaling, who grows Macs as well as Delicious and Empires in his orchards here.

The Empire is harvested in early to mid October — later than the McIntosh, but earlier than the Red Delicious.

"People are still learning how to handle the Empire," Hotaling said. "We don't know if we should treat them like an earlier apple, like the McIntosh, or like the Delicious, which is a later apple.

Many farmers who grow it agree that it seems to have inherited the best characteristics of its parent varieties — it's a crisp, tasty, attractive fruit that stores well, and its trees bear a good amount of fruit. And, they say, buyers who travel from the city in search of fresh, crisp, country apples are turning more often to the Empire.

"It seems everybody who tries them comes back for more," said Ron Samascott of Samascott Orchards in nearby Kinderhook. "They're a good apple."

A little like the Red Delicious and a little like the McIntosh, the Empire is hard to describe. It's "firmer and crispier than a Mac," explained Samascott. "It's got a taste of its own."

"They get completely red," unlike the McIntosh, which has a tendency to fall off the tree before getting red enough for consumers' tastes, he added.

Shaped more like a McIntosh than a Red Delicious, Empires "don't drop like a McIntosh. They're redder than a Mac and sweeter than a Mac," said Al Bartolotta of Klein Kill Farms in Germantown.

The Empire was developed in the 1960s at the New York Agricultural Experiment Station in Geneva, N.Y., according to Roger Way, the station's chief pomologist. Farmers began planting Empire trees as they became available commercially in the late 1960s and early 1970s, then waited about 10 years for them to bear fruit.

Hotaling said local growers believe the progenitor of the Empire was discovered in an orchard in Columbia County 20 years ago, then taken to the Geneva station to be perfected.

Robert Redford helps douse fire on way to rock shelter rendevous

KAHLOTUS, Wash. (AP) — Actor Robert Redford helped douse a fire when a bus he was riding to an archaeological site began filling with black, oily smoke.

Robert Redford

"I guess this is what happens when you have too many budget cuts and can't buy new equipment," he quipped later.

Redford was traveling Wednesday with students from Washington State University and the University of Idaho to Marmes Rock Shelter about 50 miles west of Pullman, where they were to meet anthropologist Richard Leakey.

When the fire broke out, apparently from a cracked manifold, Redford and the 50 others aboard got off the bus. Redford and some others got water from a nearby ranch to douse the blaze. There were no injuries.

The group later continued the field trip in vans.

Redford, an environmental advocate, was in the state to open his new Institute for Resource Management at the two schools. The institute is the actor's attempt "to educate resource managers who can assess all the potential costs of energy projects," he said. The field trip was his first meeting with the institute's 20 fellows.

LONDON (AP) — When pop singer Dionne Warwick is on the road, she says she spins quite a yarn.

"I've been doing needlepoint since my grandmother taught me when I was very young," she told The Standard, London's evening newspaper.

She says she fills the dull hours on planes, boats and trains making the needlework pictures.

"My pride and joy are 16 dining room chairs I have in Florida which took a complete 40-date world tour to finish," said Miss Warwick, who is appearing at London's Victoria Apollo Theater.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Ed Asner went to the Polish consulate here to protest the outlawing of the Solidarity trade union, but officials at the consulate told him he was at the wrong place.

Asner, president of the Screen Actors Guild, joined about 10 people Wednesday protesting outside the office.

The other demonstrators were turned away, but Asner was admitted for about two minutes — long enough to "add my voice to the others assembled here in hopes of a resolution and a greater acceptance of the Solidarity movement in Poland," he said.

Asner said consulate officials told him the office was essentially a business office and that he should contact the Polish Embassy in Washington on political matters.

NEW YORK (AP) — Democracy is "very alive and very healthy" in its birthplace, according to actress Melina Mercouri, who is now Greece's minister of culture.

M. Mercouri

Miss Mercouri, best known for her starring role in the film "Never on Sunday," was in New York on Wednesday to open an exhibit of ancient Greek art at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

"Democracy in Greece is very alive and very healthy, thank you," Miss Mercouri said at a news conference.

The former member of Parliament and active opponent of the military regime that governed Greece from 1967-74 was appointed minister of culture and sciences when Socialist Andreas Papandreou became premier in October 1981.

"I feel proud as a Greek woman," she said. "I believe the history of Greece is a continuity and I believe that those exhibits and those cultural exchanges will help you love the Greek people today," she said.

The exhibit, "In Search of Alexander," includes 180 works of art from northern Greece in the time of Alexander the Great (356-323 B.C.).

The exhibit has toured the United States for two years and will go to Canada next.

Nuclear freeze issue may affect races

WASHINGTON (AP) — Campaigning for re-election in a Pennsylvania district with a strong Quaker heritage, Republican Rep. Jim Coyne finds himself pilloried for his last-minute switch to vote against a nuclear freeze resolution in the House.

The proposal failed by only two votes in August. Coyne had promised to vote for it — had even co-sponsored it — but President Reagan pleaded and Coyne decided to oppose the resolution.

In the state of Washington, the old mushroom cloud made a reappearance in a television ad for a Republican running against Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., long a national security hard-liner.

Jackson, in self defense, had to make his own television ads expressing concern over the arms race.

In Maine, Rep. David Emery is the Republican candidate for the Senate seat held by Democrat George Mitchell. Wherever he goes, Emery finds himself on the defensive as the only member of Congress from all of New England — Republican or Democrat — who opposed a nuclear freeze in that House vote.

Emery said no thanks when the Maine chapter of Physicians for Social Responsibility invited him to discuss the nuclear freeze issue — and only that issue — on a half-hour television program.

In the politics of America, the question of disarmament is assuming a prominence it has never attained. People are refusing to leave it to the experts.

ON NOV. 2, NINE STATES with a quarter of the U.S. population will vote in nuclear freeze referendums. It will be the closest thing to a national vote on a foreign policy issue in history.

Election observers cannot point to a single race where the nuclear freeze is likely to be the decisive issue. Richard Pollock, public relations adviser for some pro-freeze groups, says, "There are supposed to be four issues in 1982 — jobs, jobs, jobs and freeze."

But as Coyne, Emery and a handful of other candidates would affirm, the freeze looms as a factor in some campaigns.

Doug Bosco, a pro-freeze state legislator in California who is challenging Rep. Don Clausen, R-Calif., says "the nuclear freeze is the most important defined issue in our race."

Most of the ballots in referendum states ask variations of a single question: Do you favor a mutual, verifiable agreement by the United States and the Soviet Union not to build, test and deploy any more nuclear weapons?

When Wisconsin voted in the Sept. 14 primary, the outcome was 641,514 to 205,018 in favor of a freeze.

Freeze advocates expect to win in all nine referendum states — California, Oregon, Arizona, Montana, North Dakota, Michigan, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Massachusetts — and in the cities that also will vote on a freeze — Olympia, Wash.; Reno, Nev.; Denver, Chicago, Miami, Philadelphia, Washington and New Haven, Conn.

THERE IS SCANT organized opposition, but the results on Election Day may not be as one-sided as first thought.

A Los Angeles Times poll early this month said half of the Californians surveyed who held an opinion supported a freeze, half opposed it and 40 percent had no opinion. Other polls have shown the freeze winning.

The Reagan administration has not mounted an all-out campaign for a big "no" vote, despite the president's successful arm-twisting in Congress for defeat of the freeze resolution and his view that freeze advocates are inspired by "some who want the weakening of America."

The defeated House proposal called for an immediate "mutual and verifiable" freeze. By a 204-202 vote, the House instead adopted an administration proposal calling for arms reductions before a freeze is attempted — a position many GOP candidates are espousing.

"I've not heard of very much opposition anywhere," says Carla Johnston, who runs political education workshops on behalf of the freeze campaign.

"Either the administration decided to ignore it and hope it goes away after the election, or they're not taking it seriously at all."

MS. JOHNSTON VENTURED this guess: "Women particularly tend to support the freeze, and the polls suggest that the Republicans are having difficulties with women. That may be why the administration is lying low."

In Pennsylvania's rural, staunchly Republican Butler County, where the issue will be on the Nov. 2 ballot, organizer Susan Parsons says she finds surprisingly strong encouragement for the cause.

Nuclear freeze advocates borrow campaign tactics from conservatives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taking a lesson from conservatives, a new political action committee made a television commercial aimed at defeating three senators and seven representatives on the grounds that they oppose a nuclear weapons freeze.

Philip M. Stern, founder of Citizens for Common Sense in National Defense, said the commercial will be shown at least 28 times in each of the races where his group has targeted a Republican incumbent.

Stern said the group could find no Democrats who oppose a nuclear weapons freeze and who are challenged in the election by Republican supporters of the freeze concept.

The targets of Stern's campaign are Sens. Harrison Schmitt, N.M.; Orrin Hatch, Utah; and Malcolm Wallop, Wyo.; and Reps. Robert Michel, Ill.; Ed Weber, Ohio; Jim Dunn, Mich.; Mick Staton, W.Va.; Larry Craig, Idaho; Don Clausen, Calif.; and Arlan Stangeland, Minn.

Stern acknowledged that he was using a technique pioneered by the National Conservative Political Action Committee which has runs "negative advertising" against candidates it considers too liberal.

In both cases, the ads are run without consultation with the targets' challengers.

"Citizens for Common Sense in National Defense was formed to teach the hawks in American politics a badly needed lesson — that they can no longer pursue a bellicose military policy with political impunity," Stern said.

A former congressional aide and deputy assistant secretary of state, he is the author of five books and a radio commentator.

Stern said he raised $130,000 in a mail solicitation and spent $30,000 in preparing the 60-second TV spot and $65,000 on television time.

He selected races where television time is relatively cheap — as little as $50 for a daytime minute in Cheyenne, Wyo., as compared to $1,400 in New York City.

Stern said he also selected only races which presented "a clear-cut difference between the incumbent and the challenger on the nuclear freeze issue."

Burger King presses 'Big Mac attack'

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Burger King pressed its Big Mac attack Wednesday, issuing what it called "the first coupon ever offered on television."

The idea behind the new "two-Whoppers-for-the-price-of-one" pitch is to reinforce Burger King's controversial advertising campaign in which it contends that its hamburgers are bigger and better-tasting than McDonald's Big Macs or Wendy's Singles.

Here is how Burger King's "coupon" works: Any customer who shows up at one of the company's outlets this weekend and tells a Burger King employee that the Whopper is better than the Big Mac will get a free Whopper for each one purchased. The ads are scheduled to run in prime time through Saturday.

The customer need not convey "the exact words of the coupon, just so he gets the idea across," says Kyle Craig, senior vice president and director of marketing for Miami-based Burger King Inc.

But even as the company was saying its comparative strategy was paying off and offering "the first coupon no one has to cut out," it was being forced into a retreat in Canada.

School lacks cutthroat academic atmosphere

Hearst Feature Service

TROY, N.Y.— With graduates as diverse as Jane Fonda and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the Emma Willard School is the oldest all-girls school in America. Its leaders plan to keep it that way.

Between 1971 and 1975, the number of prep schools that went coed multiplied fivefold. Emma Willard's trustees considered such a move and rejected it. Today, it seems everyone behind the gates at the ornate 55-acre campus adamantly believes a girls-only school has a place in the 1980s.

"Guys are a distraction," says Caroline Fell, a senior from Lewisburg, Pa. "They're a nice distraction, but I'm here to study."

Just as an all-girls or all-boys school is an oddity today, Emma Willard differs from the stereotype prep school in several other ways. Teachers and administrators emphasize personal growth of the students, rather than formal requirements. There's a sense of community here: Faculty members are the students' friends as well as their teachers.

Emma Willard may not fit the private boarding school mold, but officials say that it is one of the most prestigious private schools in the country. When asked why, they say the girls-only policy is one big reason; they say that girls have an easier time learning and growing when they don't have to deal with the social pressures of a coed school.

The students say the absence of boys leaves them free to concentrate on what they are there for: learning. And with the school's rigorous academic standards, the girls need all the time they can get. Some students say they spend up to seven hours a night studying, while others spend as few as two hours. Academic programs can include such ambitious projects as plant cloning or internships with community organizations.

Students must take basic courses in each academic area. Later, they can specialize in science, arts or humanities, but are free to stick with a more general program. Jack Easterling, the school's academic dean, says the school would rather let students try new things than force them into a strict curriculum.

"We encourage a lot of lateral movement," he says. "We want students to steer down some blind alleys and then back out of them. And no one is going to get too upset if a girl decides she doesn't want to take French."

Teachers say that because of this emphasis on experimentation, Emma Willard lacks the cutthroat academic atmosphere of other prep schools. "It's by design that we don't turn out academic racehorses," says Judy Bridges, head of the health, physical education and recreation division.

Instead, the atmosphere at Emma Willard is informal and cozy, with teachers and students socializing frequently. Students regularly visit the homes of teachers who live on campus, and Principal Robert Parker holds an open house for seniors every Tuesday night. And the Rev. Dave Kotfila, a United Church of Christ minister who serves as the school's co-chaplain, has been known to double as a rock 'n' roll disc jockey at dorm parties.

The students come from 36 states, 22 foreign countries and every economic background, despite the school's $7,800-a-year price tag for tuition, room and board. Principal Robert Parker says, "Financial aid makes our diversity possible."

One-third of the students are on substantial financial aid, either grants or loans. But their parents aren't the only ones scraping by; Emma Willard's teachers earn less than public school teachers, Parker said. Their job doesn't end when the school bell rings either: Teachers often assist in school activities or supervise in the dorms.

Emma Willard has an endowment fund of $11 million and a generous group of alumni. Since it has traditionally depended on private contributions instead of government handouts, it's weathering Reaganomics and the recession better than many other non-profit organizations.

In addition to raising the endowment in order to increase faculty members' salaries, Parker's goals include gradually increasing the size of the student body. The school toughened its admission standards in 1979 and has been emphasizing increasing the quality of the students instead of their quantity. "Enrollment is down, but it's down on purpose," Parker says.

The school has approximately 50 fewer students today than it did during the 1979-80 school year. Now that admission standards are tougher, officials at the school hope that they can regain the lost enrollment by selling the school's quality to the best and the brightest teen-age girls. Parker says: "If I can't sell quality, what can I sell?"

To guarantee that quality, the curriculum must be constantly reviewed and revised, according to Parker, who says he reserves a few minutes each day just to reflect on what Emma Willard is offering its students. "The curriculum must challenge the students," he says. "I never want our school to breathe a sigh of relief and say, 'We're there.' "

Outlook on campus drinking changed

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

It was a drizzly Friday night in Boulder, Colo., and Ron Jordan was celebrating his 21st birthday. Under the pink neon lights of the Tulagi bar, a block west of the University of Colorado campus, he held up his birthday elixir.

Four shots of vodka, a blast of orange juice.

"I'm going to drink a lot, dance a lot, do a lot," promised the University of Colorado senior, hoisting his symbol of passage into age 21, the big league of Colorado drinking circles.

At a nearby table, five women downed 24-ounce glasses of beer and nickel shots of peppermint schnapps, a house special. They had been drinking since 2 that afternoon — ladies' night out. "You shoulda seen us when we were freshmen," said one senior, her eyes watering. "We started on Wednesday, ended on Sunday, and Friday was just incidental."

Some 40 miles away on the University of Denver campus, this damp Friday night was hardly incidental. In the neighborhoods surrounding the campus, fraternity houses cranked up their stereos in a sort of Greek "Battle of the Bands." At the Zeta Beta Tau house, about 100 students crammed into the fraternity's living room, grabbing glasses of foaming 3.2 keg beer and mingling furiously.

ON BOTH campuses, it was almost as if an imaginary coach had blown a whistle signaling the weekend. At once, books snapped shut, beer cans snapped open and glasses were raised in salute to one of America's oldest and most unsinkable campus traditions:

Drinking.

Students do it here. With gusto, with abandon. And, some say, with great regularity.

"Before I got to DU, I never encountered mass drinking," said 20-year-old Scott Rosenberg of Beverly Hills, Calif., a junior. "I didn't even learn to drink until I came here.

"I know a lot of friends who didn't drink when they got here, but they sure started to. And started to a lot."

Over the years, the enduring love affair between students and alcohol has introduced us to the F.A.C. (Friday Afternoon Club), chug-a-lugging contests, raunchy fraternity songs, Bluto in "Animal House" — and probably had something to do with goldfish swallowing, panty raids and streaking.

Although alcohol and college students traditionally have gone together like rum and Coke, the light-hearted outlook on campus drinking is changing.

A survey published earlier this year in The Chronicle of Higher Education showed that one of six college students drinks excessively and more than one of 50 must leave school because of drinking problems. The survey, which queried deans of student affairs at 181 of the nation's two-year and four-year colleges, also revealed that an estimated 75 percent of the students used alcohol.

"I'VE SORT of lived inside the fishbowl of the student subculture, and if there's anything I'm most aware of, it's substance abuse," said Will Gordon, University of Denver student affairs specialist. "And I'd have to agree that alcohol is the No. 1 substance of abuse."

In light of such facts, college students and administrators across the country are beginning to take a hard look at drinking.

Among the most visible efforts of this new awareness is a nonprofit national student organization called BACCHUS, which stands for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students. The group, whose acronym also is the name of the god of wine and revelry, promotes a common-sense, responsible approach to drinking. BACCHUS originated on the University of Florida campus in 1976 and now has 72 chapters in 30 states and Canada.

At Dartmouth College, which was said to be an inspiration for the film "Animal House," students have organized a peer counseling group to help students with alcohol problems. Even some national fraternities and sororities — popularly viewed as bastions of campus drinkathons — are sponsoring alcohol education and awareness programs and banning liquor from their houses.

In Colorado, where the drinking age is 18 for 3.2 beer and 21 for all other beer, wine and liquor, there also are signs of this new temperance revolution. Moves being initiated at the University of Denver and the University of Colorado include:

—A REVISED and stricter alcohol policy this year at DU. Among the requirements are that all "open-campus" parties (where admission is unrestricted) serve 3.2 beer only, be registered with the dean of students office and have a uniformed police or security officer present. The policy also states that all groups serving an alcoholic beverage on campus also must provide a non-alcoholic beverage.

—The organization last year at DU of a BACCHUS chapter.

— A partially "dry" Rush this fall for CU's fraternities. The annual recruitment of members — traditionally a three-week splurge with wild, back-to-back beer and liquor bashes — was tempered this year after a push from the university's Inter-Fraternity Council, which sets policies for the Greek fraternity houses.

—The organization earlier this year at CU of a Substance Abuse Committee, involving students, administrators and faculty and staff members. Although still conducting research, committee members say they hope that various alcohol and drug programs will spin off by next summer.

This interest in students and alcohol does not, however, represent a unified front. Just how serious the campus drinking problem is — or if indeed it is a problem — depends on whom you talk to.

Jill Janson, a 21-year-old CU senior and president of Panhellenic (which oversees campus sororities), said she considers drinking "just an integral part of college life."

"COLLEGE IS a social, social time," she said, "and in our society, that's linked with drinking."

Partying at the University of Colorado is so commonplace that the Colorado Daily, the campus-oriented newspaper, publishes a classifieds section devoted solely to the "Party Line." One recent Thursday issue contained 17 party announcements, ranging from F.A.C.s to an open invitation to Rich Breuner's 21st birthday.

Despite such emphasis on parties, some DU and CU students still said they believed the campus drinking issue has been overblown. A small handful of students with alcohol problems is no indication of a raging menace on Colorado's or the nation's campuses, they insisted.

"Sure, I've heard of instances here involving abuse of alcohol — and I'm sure there are students who are heavy-duty alcoholics," said 22-year-old DU senior Jeff Eggemeyer, a member of Sigma Chi fraternity and the fraternity council president. "But since I've been here, no new student has been taken to the bar and handed drinks until he passed out.

"We're not trying to create drinkers, nor do any frats encourage people to develop skills in holding their alcohol," he continued. "They're not made to conform to certain drinking standards, and they don't have to chug 15 beers in 10 seconds to be in a fraternity anymore.

"THOSE KINDS of horror stories that come out about frats just aren't true."

Yet other students perceive their local campus drinking scene to be, at the very least, disturbing. Some think it potentially dangerous.

"DU's pretty typical. A lot of drinking, a lot of parties — parties that are centered just around drinking," said 19-year-old sophomore Kate Walker.

Silver dollar adds flavor

BRIDGEPORT, W.Va. (AP) — Don Barnes will keep a silver dollar in his pocket when he travels to Los Angeles for this weekend's World Championship Chili Cookoff — but not for good luck.

The West Virginian says it adds just the right flavor to his world-class chili concoction.

"I use only the finest ingredients — sirloin steak, the finest spices and a little V-8 juice. But I think the real flavor comes from my silver dollar and a couple of cans of Budweiser which is added at just the proper time," said Barnes, 38.

SIMS talks SENSE

An Obligation

I have always believed that every capable individual should pull his or her own load. But there are things we should feel bound to do in helping the elderly and the disabled.

As a society we have a responsibility to help those who can no longer help themselves.

I accept that responsibility.

It will become an even greater responsibility in the years ahead as more and more of the federal programs are turned over to the states under the so-called "New Federalism" plans of the administration.

Texas, over the years, has done a good job of administering its social programs. The state ranks among the lowest in the nation in terms of the cost of administering its social programs and in its rate of errors.

We must make sure that it remains so, through instituting good management programs and through zero-based budgeting. We must also have adequate safeguards against fraud in our programs.

It is my belief that we must fund programs that have the goal of rehabilitating as many people as possible. We must find ways to make them productive, tax-paying members of our society.

In other columns, we have talked much of preparing our young to be productive citizens through an adequate public education. It doesn't make sense to me to make that kind of an investment without adequate provisions for those who, in their later years, can no longer care for themselves after a productive life of hard work.

But let's not talk about it in terms of a cold, hard business investment.

Let's talk about it in terms of a social obligation in which we as citizens must all share.

That is the Texas way. More importantly, it's the West Texas way.

A West Texan for our times.

Entrepreneur Bill Boam displays his Nude Beer and Nude Beer Nuts products in Tustin, Calif., Wednesday. The state of California has outlawed their sale because of the 'indecent' packaging. Boam says the idea of his "fun and refreshing product" came to him three years ago while he was going through his divorce.

Entrepreneur offers sixpack with cheesecake

TUSTIN, Calif. (AP) — A former sheriff's deputy thinks America's beer drinkers need some cheesecake with their brew, but the state of California can't see bare-bosomed beauties on bottle labels and has banned the sale of Nude Beer.

Entrepreneur Bill Boam may also face problems with the federal government, but says truckloads of Nude Beer are already being loaded for delivery to more than a dozen states that don't require beer label approval, and where demand from distributors has been "astronomical."

"We have orders for half a million dollars a month," the mustachioed, curly-haired 33-year-old said Tuesday. "People are saying it's a fun, refreshing product. They just can't wait to buy it. The women I've talked to say they would buy the beer for the men."

The idea for Nude Beer came to Boam three years ago, when he was going through a divorce.

"I went into a store and picked up a six-pack of beer and a Playboy magazine, and I thought, 'Somebody ought to come out with something great-looking on a bottle of beer.' Being a marketing consultant for a long time, I put it in the works."

The full-color label shows a blonde wearing only a smile from the waist up.

Boam's WHB Manufacturers Inc. contracted with Hammonton, N.J.-based Eastern Breweries to brew and bottle the beer. But he met disapproving eyes when he sent the label to the California Department of Alcohol Beverage Control, known as the ABC.

In August, ABC regulatory affairs director Manuel Espinosa ruled the label violated state laws prohibiting indecent or obscene liquor advertising. Boam and Eastern Breweries have appealed, and a Nov. 23 hearing is scheduled before an administrative law judge.

Jeffrey Walsworth, attorney for Boam and Eastern Breweries, said the the label "is not indecent or obscene," and called the state law unconstitutional because it limits freedom of expression and is overly vague or ambiguous.

"What he (Espinosa) is trying to do is regulate morals rather than alcohol," Walsworth contended. Boam said he will take the case to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

Meanwhile, Boam said he is preparing to fill orders in Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, West Virginia and Wyoming — states that he says don't care what's on a beer label as long as there's beer in the bottle.

A 1935 federal law also prohibits indecent or obscene liquor advertising, and a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms spokesman said the agency is not likely to approve Nude Beer's label. Since the label hasn't been submitted for approval, the bottles could be seized from stores.

But Boam, who stands to earn 25 cents on every six-pack of Nude Beer, is not discouraged — he's overflowing with merchandising ideas. He already has Nude Beer nuts, T-shirts, mugs and beach towels in production.

Gabriel Marquez wins Nobel in literature

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Gabriel Garcia Marquez of Colombia, author of "One Hundred Years of Solitude" and a stream of other works chronicling death, betrayal, despair and government repression, won the 1982 Nobel Prize in literature today.

The Swedish Academy cited the 54-year-old author "for his novels and short stories, in which the fantastic and the realistic are combined in a richly composed world of imagination, reflecting a continent's life and conflicts."

Garcia Marquez, whose novels have sold more copies than any other contemporary Spanish-language author, lives in exile because he believes the Colombian army wants to arrest him.

Garcia Marquez, who has supported leftist causes, has traveled frequently to Cuba, and last year fled to Mexico, saying the army suspected him of arranging for Cuba to train Colombian guerrillas.

The writer, said to be influenced by Cuban leader Fidel Castro as well as by American novelists William Faulkner and Ernest Hemingway, has long been living in exile in Paris, Spain and more recently in Mexico.

His foremost and most widely read work was the vivid epic "One Hundred Years of Solitude." It tells graphically of the "imaginary" land Macondo, a chronicle of the Buendia family during a political war that started in 1948 and left as many as many as 200,000 people dead. The book was published in 1967 and has sold more than 5 million copies.

Its opening line: "Many years later, as he faced the firing squad, Colonel Aureliano Buendia was to remember that distant afternoon when his father took him to discover ice."

Other major works by Garcia Marquez are "The Autumn of the Patriarch," 1975, "No One Writes to the Colonel," 1961, "The Evil Hour," 1962 and, most recently, "Chronicle of a Death Foretold," 1981.

"With his stories Gabriel Garcia Marquez has created a world of his own which is his microcosmos. In its tumultuous, bewildering yet graphically convincing authenticity it reflects a continent and its human riches and poverty," the academy said.

"Perhaps more than that, a cosmos in which the human heart and the combined forces of history time and again burst the bounds of chaos — killing and procreation."

The academy said that "death is perhaps the most important director behind the scenes in Garcia Marquez' invented and discovered world."

The writer, who has been threatened with death by extreme rightists in his native country, said in a recent interview that he started writing by coincidence and that he found that writing was "a suffering, a torture."

Garcia Marquez was first published in the Bogota newspaper El Espectador in 1947 when some of his short stories appeared in the daily.

'Pro-family' projects get federal funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Office of Adolescent Pregnancy programs is awarding $10 million for projects aimed at discouraging teen-age pregnancies and encouraging adoption as an option to parenthood or abortion.

The money is from the Adolescent Family Life Program established by Congress in 1981. The 50 demonstration programs and research projects will be conducted in 38 states.

About one American girl in 10 between the ages of 10 and 19 becomes pregnant each year. Some 560,000 adolescents gave birth in 1979, accounting for one-sixth of all births in the U.S. Roughly 93 percent of adolescent girls keep their babies.

The percentage of out-of-wedlock births to teenagers has risen from 32 percent in 1971 to 47 percent in 1979.

Psychiatric tests ordered in trial of priest accused of attacking pope

VILA NOVA DE OUREM, Portugal (AP) — The court trying a Spanish priest charged with attempting to stab Pope John Paul II with a bayonet five months ago has ordered psychiatric testing for the defendant.

After an eight-hour opening session Wednesday, Presiding Judge Polibio Silva Da Flor ordered that Juan Maria Fernandez Krohn remain in custody while psychiatrists interview him and draft reports for the court.

The judge said Fernandez Krohn had a "strange determination" to bring on himself the heaviest possible condemnation, and said that pointed to mental disturbance. No date was announced for resumption of the trial.

"This is worse than the Gulag (Soviet prison camp)! The judge is a socialist!" Fernandez Krohn shouted as he was led from the courtroom by police.

The 33-year-old priest appeared in court barefoot, his head shaven and wearing a green cassock.

He defended his attempted attack on Pope John Paul II by saying he acted "in legitimate defense of the church and our lady."

The May 13 attack came while the pope was visiting the shrine of Fatima near here. Papal bodyguards pushed the attacker back and the pontiff was not harmed.

Saying he had "no regrets," Fernandez Krohn accused the pontiff of trying "to bring down the church."

The priest, a member of a militant ultra-traditionalist Roman Catholic sect, is charged with committing a crime against a head of state, attempting to kill the pope and carrying a bayonet.

If convicted, the Spaniard faces a maximum penalty of 26 years in prison. His court-appointed defense attorney, Jose Lopes Perdigao, 82, said the priest had forbidden him to enter an insanity plea.

Ecuador's president bans protests

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Seeking to head off a nationwide strike called for today, President Osvaldo Hurtado declared a state of emergency that banned public protests and imposed a 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew.

It was not immediately known how the government crackdown would affect the left-leaning United Federation of Workers' plans for a strike across this nation on the west coast of South America.

The labor group called the strike to protest government austerity measures, imposed last week, that hiked the price of gasoline by 120 percent and bread by 53 percent, and raised taxes on cigarettes and beer.

"Today the country is in a state of economic war," Hurtado declared in a nationally broadcast speech Wednesday night.

He condemned the strike call, appealed to Ecuadoreans to go to work as usual today and said, "Those who don't work should respect the rights of the others."

Hurtado said the decree was necessary because of attacks on public and private transport and "against authorities of legislative power," an apparent reference to a melee earlier this week in which Congressional President Rodolfo Baquerizo was a target of stone-throwing workers.

The crackdown followed three days of demonstrations, bus burnings and an attempt to march on the presidential palace — the most serious unrest since Hurtado took office two years ago. Political sources said it also coincided with growing unrest among the military.

City under guard during funeral for Polish worker

NOWA HUTA, Poland (AP) — Elite paratroopers shouldering rifles with fixed bayonets joined riot police in guarding this steel center today after 10,000 Poles attended the funeral of a 20-year-old millworker killed in a pro-Solidarity melee last week.

Increased security in the suburb of Krakow, 160 miles south of Warsaw, became visible during Wednesday's funeral for Bogdan Wlosik. The steel mill electrician was mortally wounded by police gunfire eight days ago in riots protesting the government's banning of the independent Solidarity labor union.

The beefed up patrols of police and red-bereted paratroopers appeared after officials warned that "the situation in Nowa Huta must change and will change." The local press reported authorities' claims that the city, established as a model Communist community in the 1950s, has become a "training" ground for anti-government forces.

The show of force apparently forestalled renewed violence, but failed to dissuade the estimated 10,000 Poles at Wlosik's funeral. Police stopped civilians to check their papers, curbing movement on many streets, but the government forces stayed clear of the Grebalow Cemetery where Wlosik was buried.

Hundreds of mourners, many of them unable to attend the funeral because of work shifts during the day, passed by the grave into the night, placing more flowers on the six-foot pile atop Wlosik's grave.

"My son, sleep calmly in our Polish earth on which you were not permitted to live in peace," said a ribbon on one of scores of wreathes at the grave.

"It wasn't necessary to kill him," said one grizzled steelworker who like many of his coworkers had left the city's giant Lenin Steel Works at mid-shift to join the funeral procession led by Wlosik's grief-stricken parents.

"My son, oh, my son," cried Irena Wlosik, who twice collapsed over the silvery coffin. Mrs. Wlosik, her husband Jozef, their son and 36,000 other Poles in this city all worked at the Lenin mill, the nation's largest factory.

Wlosik, said by friends to have been a member of Solidarity but not an activist, was the 15th person to die in riots and clashes since martial law was declared in Poland last Dec. 13.

"We shall avenge you," was scrawled on several black-bordered posters announcing the funeral.

Sweden 'favorably disposed' toward asylum for 20 Poles

MALMO, Sweden (AP) — The head of the Swedish Immigration Board said he is "favorably disposed" to grant requests for asylum by 20 Poles who made a perilous escape from Poland in a biplane. But he said final action would have to await a police inquiry.

The defectors' requests for asylum were being processed today by the Swedish government, which impounded the single-engine plane in which they flew here from Szczecin in northern Poland.

The seven men, eight women and five children were housed in a hotel in this southern industrial city. None were identified because of families they left behind when they fled Tuesday.

A spokesman for the group said Wednesday that they had planned the escape since martial law was imposed in Poland on Dec. 13, 1981.

"But we had still hoped Solidarity would survive," he said, speaking through an interpreter and with his back to the camera. "The new law banning Solidarity was the last straw."

Thord Palmlund, director general of the Swedish Immigration board, told reporters he was "favorably disposed to letting the group stay."

"But we must await the result of the police investigation before making a final decision," Palmlund said.

A report Wednesday by Poland's official news agency, PAP, identified the pilot as "Jozef S.," an employee of a crop-dusting firm in Szczecin, a Baltic port on the East German border.

It said the plane was a Soviet-designed Antonov-2 and the flight to southern Sweden took one hour.

Swedish Viggan jets intercepted the biplane when it entered Swedish airspace and escorted it to a safe landing at Sturup Airport, about 30 miles from Malmo.

Gusta Fromm, police superintendent for the Malmo district, said the crop-duster was towed into a hangar Wednesday and would be held until the Polish consul in Malmo requested its return through diplomatic channels.

Nakasone's supporters seek to solve Japan's leadership crisis by discussion

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

TOKYO — Supporters of Yasuhiro Nakasone as Japan's next prime minister Wednesday rounded up the signatures of 60 percent of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party's members of Parliament on a petition calling for settlement of the leadership crisis through discussions rather than a party election.

The action was interpretet as a warning to rebels led by former Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda that defeat would be inevitable for three rebel candidates if they forced an election to be held to select a new party president. The new president will be elected in Parliament as prime minister.

The move also was the most solid public display of support to date for Nakasone, 64, director of the cabinet's Administrative Management Agency.

Both Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, who on Oct. 12 announced his intention to resign, and former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, Fukuda's arch-rival, are reported to be supporting Nakasone. Until Wednesday, however, neither Suzuki's 87-man faction nor Tanaka's 107-man group had publicly demonstrated the strength of the support in the lower echelons of the two factions.

In more than 35 years in Parliament, Nakasone has earned a reputation as an outspoken man in a country dominated by politicians who usually avoid speaking out on issues.

Bess Truman's character

Bess Truman lived something of a fairy-tale life. But her feet never left the ground, her senses were never dulled by the glamor of Washington.

As first lady, Bess Truman tolerated the demands placed on her by the position of her husband, Harry S Truman, as president. But after 20 years in Washington and seven years at the White House, she was ready to return to Independence, Mo., when the time came.

There, Harry and Bess lived out their lives in quiet dignity. He died a decade ago; she, only Monday at age 97.

What can be said about the former first lady at this time is that she was an exceptional woman of strength, just as Harry S Truman was a president of exceptional strength. She possessed the quiet dignity befitting her role in society. She was a loyal ally of her husband and, history attests, served him well during their years together in the White House.

Bess Truman was a private person and held no news conferences. Because she treasured her privacy, it was more difficult for the American people to get to know her.

Mr. Truman used to say he had fallen in love with Bess Wallace when he was 6 years old. Their courtship lasted for 20 years, until both were in their 30s. The Wallaces were well-to-do and did not foresee too many prospects for the man Bess had chosen to marry. They were wrong, of course, and "the Boss" as the president called his lady, became a pillar of strength for Harry Truman during his years in Washington.

In writing an epitaph for Mrs. Truman, President Ronald Reagan noted that "Bess Truman embodies the basic decency of America." We could not agree more.

Pressure for the jailers

Polish workers are braving water cannon, tear gas, truncheons, and the threat of prison or worse to protest the outlawing of Solidarity by Poland's martial law government.

The least that Western governments should do in these circumstances is to ensure that this latest repression in Poland provokes appropriate sanctions against Solidarity's jailers.

President Reagan, to his credit, recently reacted promptly by promising to revoke Poland's most-favored-nation trade status — a move that could cripple Polish exports to the United States. Doubling tariffs on Polish goods, which is what the loss of most-favored-nation trade status would entail, will cost Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski's government one of its few remaining sources of hard foreign currency.

That loss, in turn, would drive yet another nail into the coffin of the Polish economy. It would also further damage the Polish government's already devastated credit standing, making it that much harder for those now dancing on Solidarity's grave to qualify for new loans from the West.

Unfortunately, Jaruzelski's latest betrayal of Polish government promises made to Solidarity two years ago hasn't yet provoked a peep from other members of the Western alliance. President Reagan ought to be nearly as upset about that as he was about the formal abolition of Solidarity.

Economic and political sanctions might still be effective in discouraging neo-Stalinist policies in Eastern Europe, if not in the Soviet Union itself. But for those sanctions to have any hope of moderating communist rule within the Soviet empire, they must be actively supported by at least the major Western powers.

It won't do for the United States to punish Jaruzelski's bully boys while Western Europeans line up to advance Poland additional credits, or lend themselves to a conspiracy of silence on Solidarity's fate.

That will only solidify the judgments apparently prevailing in Moscow and Warsaw: That the West will never jeopardize its short-term interests — loans and trade — to promote a better life for the people of Eastern Europe. That is an admittedly cynical presumption, but one the Western Europeans are bringing on themselves.

Ironically, the West's failure to mount a vigorous defense of Solidarity may end up wrecking any chance that Poland may have had to repay its enormous debts. A decent compromise with Poland's workers, and the preservation of Solidarity in some form, was probably essential to Jaruzelski's hopes of reviving what is now a nearly moribund economy. The Polish government is proving that it can impose martial law and make it stick, but bayonets are no substitute for a willing labor force.

Another View:

Thinking about peace

The Middle East peace initiative that President Reagan launched on Sept. 1 is beginning to have one intended result. It is starting to force at least some Arabs to think and talk seriously about the prospects for ending their long and losing war with Israel on something less than the absolutist terms that up to now have been publicly demanded.

Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, has just concluded five days of talks in Amman with his old enemy, Jordan's King Hussein.

The talks did not represent any harmonious meeting of minds, but they were significant nonetheless, for with them Arafat has begun to explore an alternative to the radicalism that has so far characterized the PLO's political position. That exploration is tentative, it is certainly so far inconclusive, it could be abandoned at any time. For all that, it constitutes a first groping toward an appreciation of what is realistically attainable in a settlement with Israel.

What Hussein wants from Arafat is the PLO's proxy to negotiate, under the Reagan formula, a territorial and political compromise on the West Bank. What Hussein envisages is a West Bank-Jordan federation — an idea he first advanced in 1972 — that would give the West Bank Palestinians a large measure of self-rule but leave Jordan the dominant partner. What Hussein implicitly accepts as the only feasible way to end Israeli control of the West Bank is some measure of partition to resolve Israel's minimum security concerns.

None of this is for now acceptable to Arafat, and none of it is ever likely to be acceptable to Arab radicals both in and outside of the PLO. Syria, for one, has already proclaimed that Arafat cannot speak for the PLO if doing so suggests any compromise, and over that issue a schism that would destroy the tenuous unity of the multifaction PLO has emerged as a distinct possibility. A split PLO would erase what remains of the claim that the organization alone speaks for the Palestinian people.

Arafat, at the same time, is surely aware of how weak a hand the PLO has left to play. It has lost its operational base in Lebanon, its army has been shattered, its survivors dispersed. Hussein has told Arafat in effect that the PLO must choose between clinging to its ideology or accepting Jordan as its patron, spokesman and future senior party in a West Bank federation. Hussein wants an answer before he meets with President Reagan next month.

That leaves little time for the PLO to come to a decision.

ART BUCHWALD

NFL strike a sure loss for bookies!

I saw Mathews the other day driving a new Porsche, and the thought occurred to me that he was doing very well. Two days later I heard he was taking his wife to St. Moritz for Christmas, and buying a home in Hilton Head. Then the thought occurred to me Mathews was in on some scam, because just a year ago he was having trouble paying his electric bill.

Art Buchwald

Finally when I ran into him looking at fur coats in Neiman Marcus I decided to confront him on his new-found wealth.

"Okay, Mathews, you can level with me. Where's the money coming from?"

Mathews laughed, "You really want to know? It's coming from the NFL football strike."

"What does that mean?"

"There are no games being played, so I haven't been able to place any bets with my bookie. Last year I lost my shirt, my pants and the farm to him. This year the money is all mine. I'm having a ball. I was able to send my kid to MIT with what I would have lost on the New England Patriots this year."

"You mean to say that all your new-found wealth is money that you had set aside to bet on the NFL football games?"

"That's where it comes from. This is the first year I've been able to wake up on Monday mornings without a cold sweat. I know I don't have to meet my bookie for lunch and turn over the family jewels."

"But isn't your wife suspicious of you suddenly throwing all this money around?"

"You bet she is. She figures I'm stealing from the company. Everytime I give her some cash she won't spend it because she thinks she's going to have to hire a criminal lawyer."

"Why don't you tell her the truth?"

"Because I promised her seven years ago I'd stop betting on NFL games with my bookie. She'll know I lied to her if I told her where the bonanza was coming from this year. The fur coat I'm buying today would have gone for the point spread I would have had to take on the St. Louis Cardinals."

"She doesn't know how lucky she is that the players and owners can't come to terms."

"You see those two guys over there in trench coats? They're from the FBI and they've been tailing me ever since the NFL strike went into effect. They're certain I'm heisting banks, because last year at this time I couldn't even pay my Diner's Club bill. The narc agents have tapped my phone because they're sure I'm dealing in cocaine, and the IRS has audited me three times since Ed Garvey called the players out. I'm in fat city."

"I didn't know you were such a heavy better."

"Look there are millions of guys like me all over America, who can no longer put down a bet on a Dallas Cowboy game. Since they don't have to give their money to the bookies, they don't know what to do with their dough. I at least have enough sense to enjoy it while the strike is on."

"Can't you bet on other sports events?"

"I suppose I could, but I don't get the same thrill as when I can get 14 points on the Jets when they're playing in Buffalo. Do you know in 1979 I had three winners on a Sunday, and would have broken even if Philadelphia hadn't kicked a field goal in the last 10 seconds? I couldn't sleep all night. Now I don't have to worry if they score touchdowns in the last quarter."

"I wish I had bet on NFL games in the past," I said. "I'd be a rich man this fall."

"Those are the breaks," Mathews said modestly. "Some guys just luck into an NFL strike, and become rich overnight."

Mathews told the salesgirl to gift wrap the fur coat in a box and we left the store. On the sidewalk was a down and out man selling lead pencils. Mathews took out a bill and dropped it into the tin cup.

"Are you nuts?" I said. "You gave him a hundred dollar note."

"I know the guy," he told me. "That was my bookie."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Buck not stopping at Reagan's desk now

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has tried to make a virtue out of sharing responsibility with the states. He named his concept "New Federalism," but it's really nothing more than the old Army game called "Passing the Buck."

Jack Anderson

Not only has the federal government become ever more tight-fisted at picking up the bill for social services that are administered by the states, but it has even welshed on prior agreements to reimburse the states for money they have already paid out. The state governments, which are as hard up as the federal treasury, wind up holding the bag for millions of dollars.

Here's a shocking example of the "New Federalism" at work:

Twenty states shelled out money to their residents for welfare and Medicaid payments in 1978 and prior years. By law, the Department of Health and Human Services was to pay the states a total of almost $420 million in matching funds. All the states had to do was submit their claims.

In the past, the states could turn in their claims at any time, and the obligation was still recognized. Often the money was paid out in one year and the application for federal matching funds wasn't submitted until much later.

But in 1980, Congress decreed that the states had to turn in all their old claims by a set date, and henceforth would have to meet a two-year time limit on claims submissions or forfeit the matching funds.

Then, last December, in the pandemonium surrounding the passage of continuing legislation to keep the government operating, Congress passed ambiguously worded legislation setting the time limit for claims at one year. HHS Secretary Richard Schweiker interpreted this to mean that states which had missed the one-year deadline, but had met the earlier two-year deadline, were simply out of luck.

So nine of the 20 sandbagged states went to court. And the judge decided that Schweiker was wrong; HHS had to pay up under the 1980 time limit.

But Schweiker wouldn't give up. He decided to find a way to weasel out of the court-sanctified obligation, even though Pennsylvania, the state he used to represent in the Senate, stood to collect almost $60 million of the federal funds.

Schweiker decided to try another last-minute quarterback sneak. Another continuing resolution was coming up, and Schweiker prevailed on Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., to slip an amendment into the resolution that "permanently extinguished" the 20 states' claims.

With some misgivings, Schmitt — who is up for re-election this year — did as Schweiker asked. Sources say Schmitt was relieved when his gambit was spotted by Sens. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., and Bill Bradley, D-N.J., who raised a stink.

The result was a compromise: If HHS continues to lose in court, at least it won't have to pay the states what it owes them before fiscal 1984. Even so, Schweiker reportedly intends to fight all the way to the Supreme Court.

A congressional aide told my associate Vicki Warren the big problem is trying to find money for the states' old claims in a time of severe HHS budget cuts. "It will only mean that they'll have to take the funds from some other program where they haven't made a contract, such as educating handicapped children," he explained.

So the fight continues, with Schweiker still determined to pass the buck — not the bucks — to the states.

ALL IN THE FAMILY: The American Medical Association is making House calls again in its determined battle to keep the Federal Trade Commission from cracking down on the medical profession's monopolistic practices.

One of AMA's 215 congressional supporters is Rep. Frank Guarini, a blue-collar Democrat from New Jersey who has fought hard against special privileges for Big Oil. Why, then, is Guarini backing Big Medicine?

One member of the New Jersey congressional delegation suggested that Guarini's heart really isn't in the anti-FTC measure, but that his support for the AMA might be explained by the fact that his executive assistant, Nancy Drake, is married to AMA lobbyist James E. Drake.

Mrs. Drake denies this. She said she and her husband don't discuss what the AMA is up to, and her boss' support for the medicine men is "truly pure coincidence."

BEST BUREAUCRATS: In many countries, passport officers are forbidding figures. But in Honolulu, the passport office's assistant regional director, Winifred Cook, willingly works after office hours to help international travelers on their way.

Recently, an elderly gentleman turned up at her office with a problem: He had to fly to the Far East because of a family emergency, but he had no passport. Cook not only walked his application through personally to get him the precious document, but then drove him 10 miles to the airport to make sure he caught his plane.

On several occasions, she has given troubled travelers rides in her car to make connections, and she frequently works late to process rush applications for physically handicapped persons and others who can't get to the office during the day.

Recently, Cook tracked down a lost shipment of government exhibits for a travel agents' convention, delivered them to the meetingplace — and stayed on as the Passport Service's representative to put her time to double use.

GEORGE F. WILL

Stevenson solicits Kennedy 'noisemaker'

CHICAGO — While television cameras loom over him, Edward Kennedy hunkers down with the tots in a day-care center run by a labor union. Reading a nursery tale — it is more gripping stuff than his staff writes for him, and he reads it well — he pauses, by senatorial reflex, to grill his listeners: "Should the bunnies play with the fox?" "Do you play 'Duck, Duck, Goose'?"

George F. Will

Kennedy is here to energize Adali E. Stevenson III's campaign for governor. The Republican incumbent, seeking an unprecedented third term, is Big Jim Thompson.

Thompson's middle name is, evidently, Jim. When his parents carried him in diapers to the baptismal font, and the minister asked what name he would have, the answer seems to have been: "Big."

Thompson (6' 6"), a former prosecutor, has a campaign style that stops — usually — just short of being overbearing. Stevenson's style is called "professorial," a slander the teaching profession can do without. Because Stevenson tends to fade into the wallpaper, Kennedy came to attract cameras and lead the tots in singing "Solidarity Forever."

The "whimp" motif has received more than its fair share of attention since Stevenson complained that Thompson thought that he, Stevenson, is one. But personalities are apt to be the focus of attention when there is little confidence that anyone's policies will make more than a marginal difference.

Besides, Illinois bears little resemblance to Pericles' Athens. Illinois is a sprawling, and frequently brawling, kingdom. Its north is farther north than Cape Cod and its south is farther south than Richmond, and its Legislature sometimes suggests scenes cut, in the name of taste, from the movie "Animal House." It takes a strong personality to prevent this state's centrifugal forces from obliterating all consensus about the collective good.

Stevenson is a good argument for a House of Lords. If appointed Lord Adlai of Libertyville, he could bring his thoughtfulness and public-spiritedness to bear without campaigning. As a campaigner, he resembles the lillies of the field: He lacks pep. When it comes to drinking raspberry schnapps out of a toilet plunger, Stevenson is a dead loss. Stevenson, shuddering, says Thompson did that. Thompson's staff hotly denies it. Pericles, call your office.

Here, as in New York's and California's gubernatorial contests, recession has concentrated minds on competitive possibilities inherent in federalism. There is nothing new about states competing with one another to attract particular kinds of businesses. One of the first competitions was for the divorce business. (States competed by shortening residency requirements. Nevada won.) But now there is interest in more comprehensive involvement by state governments in shaping the economic evolution of their states.

Speaking with a tentativeness easily mistaken for weariness, Stevenson cites a doctrine economists devised to explain trade relations between nations — the doctrine of comparative advantages. That is, particular nations — or states — are apt to have some particular advantages, natural or acquired, and should exploit them.

Stevenson is interested in using such resources as pension funds in a nonpolitical development corporation to impart momentum to promising state industries. With a candor that does him credit, but which qualifies his idea almost out of existence, he admits that it is difficult to prevent such a corporation from being politicized and institutionalizing the bail-out of failing industries.

Although Thompson is not running away from Reaganomics, neither is he running as a Reaganite. Stevenson has had a hard time sharpening the issues because Thompson, who radiates animal energy, thinks government should, too. The anti-government rhetoric that dominated so many races in 1980 is rare this year. Thompson rightly stresses the limits to what can be done in Springfield to resuscitate, say, Peoria. (Peoria is home of the Caterpillar Corporation. Its sales to OPEC and Third World nations have slowed as oil and commodity prices have fallen.) But Thompson is nimble with this year's most fashionable political word: "infrastructure." Infrastructures (roads, bridges, schools, etc.) are Good Things.

In Illinois, as in other places, the closer and longer you look at the races, the fewer national and more local determinants you see. I grew up in central Illinois when an Adlai Stevenson was governor. I banged my rattle on my crib, demanding silence so I could nap, but the big people went on complaining loudly: "Your shock absorbers tell you when you leave Indiana and enter Illinois — the roads are rougher."

Today the same charge is echoing across my native heath. That is as it should be, because roads are something about which a governor can do something.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Oct. 21, the 294th day of 1982. There are 71 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 21, 1969, Willy Brandt became the first socialist chancellor in West Germany's history.

On this date:

In 1805, England's Lord Nelson defeated the Franco-Spanish fleet at Trafalgar but was mortally wounded.

In 1945, French women were allowed to vote for the first time.

Today's birthday: Baseball Hall of Famer Whitey Ford is 54.

Thought for today: "To keep your character intact you cannot stoop to filthy acts. It makes it easier to stoop the next time" — actress Katharine Hepburn (born 1909).

Crab catch down

DUTCH HARBOR, Alaska (AP) — An unusually high catch of barren female crabs has forced an emergency halt for king crab fishing in the Bristol Bay district, which yielded only one-sixth of the expected catch.

Just two years ago, the crab catch was 130 million pounds, but dropped to 2.7 million pounds this year. Normally, 5 percent to 10 percent of trapped adult females are barren, but this year's catches turned up as many as 20 percent.

Fishermen in the hard-hit industry say many operators — some with boats costing up to $3 million — may not have caught enough crabs to pay for fuel, bait and other operating expenses.

Ex-con maintains innocence

BOSTON (AP) — A man freed from prison after a new witness stepped forward says he's "trying to put my life together" after spending 10 years behind bars for a murder he says he didn't commit.

Lawyer Johnson, 30, was released Tuesday after the Suffolk County district attorney's office decided not to go ahead with a new trial because of the age of the case and the unavailability of witnesses.

A retrial was ordered after a witness offered to testify for Johnson's innocence in the 1971 slaying. "I feel better, but I would have felt a lot better if it was 10 years ago," Johnson said.

Tapes result in fine

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A former state representative, caught on video tape while accepting a wad of bills as a bribe from undercover agents, has been fined $10,000 and sentenced to five years in prison.

Ron Taylor, 30, also faces up to 40 years in prison after pleading guilty in another case to unlawfully burning warehouses owned by a state senator and business rival, J.J. "Monk" Harrington.

Iranian students big block

NEW YORK (AP) — Iranians make up the largest number of foreign students in the United States, with the overall foreign enrollment increasing for the eighth straight year, the Institute of International Education says.

For the 1981-82 academic year, the 326,299 foreign students accounted for 2.6 of total U.S. enrollment in higher education, the institute reported Tuesday. Of that, 35,860 were Iranians.

Suicide follows rejection

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A 34-year-old man who was asked to give blood for a sixth time, but was then rejected for physical reasons, returned to the lobby of the blood center and fatally shot himself, officials said.

Police Lt. G.G. Cornatzer said there was no known motive for the suicide Monday by Kenneth W. Hicks. The Stanleyville man had given blood five times before but was rejected Monday because he failed a medical exam, said Red Cross administrator Jo Ann Frazier.

Democrats seem to hold edge in California state races

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Democrats are virtually certain to expand their control of California's congressional contingent, the nation's largest, in next month's elections, even though key races in the San Francisco and Los Angeles areas are too close to call, political forecasters in both parties agree.

The size of the gap hinges heavily on the outcome of a handful of heated contests, dominated by the struggle between incumbent Democratic Rep. Phil Burton and Republican challenger Milton Marks for San Francisco's 5th District seat.

Strategists at both the Democratic National Committee and the Republican National Committee acknowledged the district had been singled out as an important battleground.

"WE THINK MARKS is going to take it," said a national Republican party official, "but you can never sell Burton short on anything. They're both formidable candidates."

"It's a blockbuster of a race," agreed an expert at Democratic headquarters. "It's all very tenuous."

Democrats currently hold a 22-21 edge among the state's members in the House. With California entitled to two more seats because of population shifts detected by the 1980 census, the margin is likely to grow.

No pre-election consensus among the two parties was possible, of course, but even optimistic GOP projections show Democrats likely to pick up clout.

Under a breakdown that does not stray substantially from the private analysis of either camp, at least 23 districts are expected to go to the Democrats and 17 to the GOP.

ANOTHER THREE TO five are considered "too close to call," depending upon which side is predicting.

Should all five of the contests become Republican wins, a remote possibility at best, the GOP makeup in the delegation still would trail 23-22.

The campaign style in each of the 45 districts varies with the candidates, but Democrats generally have been advised to attack Reaganomics and various administration policies, particularly environmental issues.

Republicans, on the other hand, have been told to try and focus on local issues and any weak spots in their opponents.

The high-level experts interviewed for this overview asked that their party affiliation not be identified. "We'd have candidates storming the place if they knew we were saying they were lost causes," one veteran of the political wars explained.

IN ADDITION TO the Burton-Marks showdown, some of the other interesting races include:

—District 6. Republican Dennis McQuaid has been making a strong stretch run against Democratic frontrunner Barbara Boxer for the seat being vacated by Democrat John Burton, who opted not to run for the district which includes eastern San Francisco, Marin County, Daly City and Vallejo.

McQuaid, a lawyer, has been picking up steam against Boxer, the Marin County supervisor who held a commanding lead at the start of the campaign.

—District 1. The timber-dependent north coast is hard-hit by unemployment, which is causing problems for GOP Rep. Don Clausen's bid for a tenth term in the House. He also has been singled out by anti-nuclear forces for favoring a White House alternative to an immediate nuclear freeze.

State Assemblyman Douglas Bosco, chairman of the Democratic caucus in the Assembly, has been very effective in pounding away at Reaganomics and his opponent, California's senior member in Congress.

—District 23. The new district lines are causing troubles for Democratic incumbent Anthony Beilenson, who is being vigorously challenged by Republican David Armor for the district that stretches from Beverly Hills into the San Fernando Valley.

REPUBLICANS HAVE MADE a stronger effort than in the past, in part because this is where Ronald Reagan used to live and is still called home by various members of the president's "Kitchen Cabinet."

—District 30. The San Gabriel Valley district has been much more of a battleground than Democrats expected. Assemblyman Matthew Martinez had been expected to easily put the district in the Democratic column because of its heavy Hispanic population.

Republican Rep. John Rousselot, who lost his power base through redistricting, decided to run in the district and has made a strong showing because of his acknowledged skills as a tough campaigner.

—District 32. Seven-term Democrat Glenn Anderson from Long Beach is in a stiff contest with Brian Lungren, a former Los Angeles policeman. Anderson is one of the few Democrats hurt by redistricting, losing Democratic strongholds and receiving pockets of GOP strength.

His opponent has an unusual level of name recognition, since his brother is Rep. Dan Lungren, who is seeking re-election in a neighboring district, which used to include portions of what is now the 32nd.

—District 43. Normally a "safe" district for any Republican, this San Diego-area race is anything but common. An estimed $3 million will be spent on this contest, the most ever for a House seat.

THE GOP NOMINEE, Johnny Crean, stepped on party toes during his aggressive primary campaign. Because of that, Democrat Roy Archer is making a stronger bid than he normally would be able to.

Labor's losses

Although unions' membership has grown steadily over the last several years until leveling off recently, its share of the work force has declined. The decline actually may be steeper than indicated because unions count as members a growing number of retirees who are not in the active work force.

Possibly unsafe additives to stay

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court says that 23 food color additives that have not been ruled safe in 22 years of industry testing can remain on the market while additional testing takes place.

In a 2-1 ruling Tuesday, the U.S. Court of Appeals upheld the Food and Drug Administration's position that the additives have been considered safe but new testing technology makes further examination necessary.

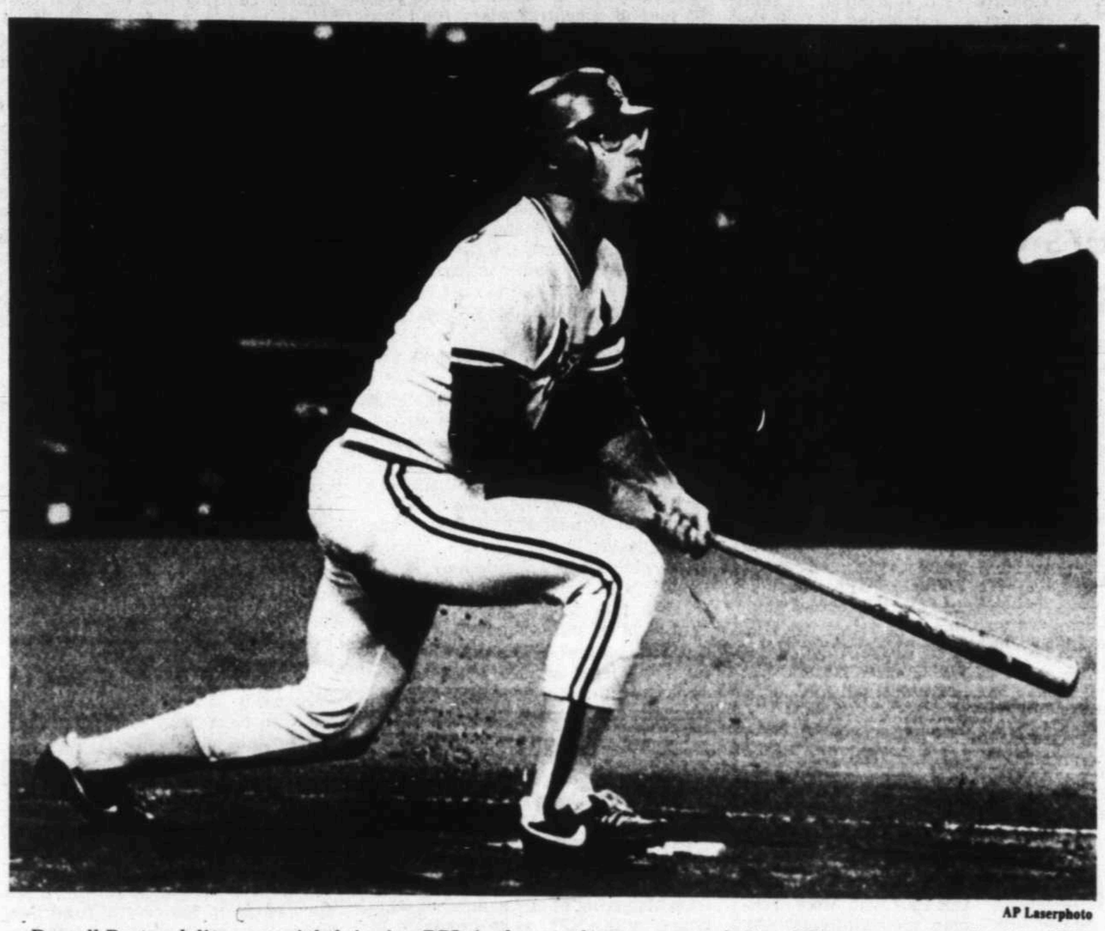
Championship flag flies over St. Louis



AP Laserphoto

Darrell Porter delivers an eighth inning RBI single for the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday night against the Milwaukee Brewers. Porter went 8-for-28 in the Series, good for a .286 average, with two doubles, a home run and five RBI to earn the Series MVP honor. He was also MVP against Atlanta in the National League Championship Series.

Tailor-made Cardinals sink Brewers

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Baseball's world championship flag flies over St. Louis, a tribute to the meticulous planning and execution of Manager Whitey Herzog.

The Cardinals captured the title Wednesday night with a come-from-behind 6-3 victory over Milwaukee in the seventh game of the World Series that was typical of their brand of baseball.

They won with speed and defense and custom designed by Herzog for roomy Busch Stadium with its artificial surface. Home runs held no fascination for the Cards, who had the puniest homer attack in the majors in 1982 with just 67 of them.

They prefered to single and double the opposition to death and if they took a lead into the eighth inning, Herzog handed the ball to former Midland Cub Bruce Sutter, perhaps the best relief pitcher in baseball.

AFTER THAT, it was usually game, set, match.

That's precisely how they finished off Milwaukee's muscular Brewers, who led the majors with 216 homers but came out second best in this championship showdown.

The formula was right out of Herzog's textbook. He got seven strong innings from starter Joaquin Anduar and with a 4-3 lead, it was Sutter time.

"We have the best relief pitcher in baseball and we pay him a lot of money, so I figured I'd better use him," said Herzog.

Sutter delivered six straight outs and the Cards tacked on a couple of insurance runs in their last swing to clinch their ninth world championship — the most for any National League team.

But it wasn't all that easy.

St. Louis kept wasting early chances and left six men on base in the first three innings against Milwaukee starter Pete Vuckovich.

"I was thinking about all the men we left on base," said Herzog. "We had seven hits in a hurry and Vuckovich just kept pitching out of jams."

In the fourth, St. Louis scratched out a run with singles by Willie McGee, Tommy Herr and Lonnie Smith. It was typical Cardinal baseball. It took Milwaukee one home run swing by Ben Oglivie to get it back in the top of the fifth. It was a typical Brewer baseball.

IN THE sixth, Milwaukee took the lead with a rally that came right out of the St. Louis playbook. Jim Gantner opened with a double. Paul Molitor bunted for a hit and when Andujar threw the ball away for an error, Gantner scored.

Then Robin Yount beat out an infield single for his 12th hit of the Series — one shy of the record — but the only one he managed in the last two games. Cecil Cooper's sacrifice fly scored Molitor and made it 3-1.

Even though they had fallen behind, there was no panic on the Cardinal bench.

"We weren't afraid," said Darrell Porter, who was named the Series' Most Valuable Player. "We've got some people who can play and we had four innings left."

St. Louis decided not to wait for the final three. The Cards went right to work. With one out, Ozzie Smith singled to left and scooted to third on a double by Lonnie Smith. That finished Vuckovich and Milwaukee Manager Harvey Kuenn brought in left-hander Bob McClure.

Herzog, playing the strategy game, pinch hit righty-swinging Gene Tenace for Ken Oberkfell and McClure walked him, loading the bases.

That brought up Keith Hernandez, an 0-for-15 bust with two errors in the first four games of the Series, who had snapped out of his slump with three hits in Game Five and two more in Game Six.

Hernandez was celebrating his 29th birthday and gave himself a lovely gift, drilling a two-run single that tied the score.

"Some of the guys kept me loose during the slump," he said. "They got on me. Things like 'Did that gold glove turn to steel?' or 'Did that silver bat turn to Swiss cheese?' "

NOW THE Cardinals were even. But a moment later St. Louis had the lead when George Hendrick ripped another single to right.

Andujar, nursing a sore knee injured when he was struck by a batted ball in Game Three, retired the Brewers in the seventh. Coming off the mound, he exchanged words with Gantner and seemed ready to do hand-to-hand combat with the Brewer second baseman. Home plate umpire Lee Weyer bear-hugged the angry pitcher and steered him toward the Cardinal dugout.

"There were some pretty bad words," said Andujar, and when he repeated them, the only two useable here were hot dog. "I think he did this just because I was playing so hard. He's a smart player and I think he was just trying to make me mad because he knows when I get mad, I get wild. He knew that could get me out of the game."

But Herzog had decided that Andujar was already out of the game, the Gantner incident notwithstanding. The gospel according to Whitey is with a lead in the eighth inning you give the baseball to Sutter. He takes care of the rest.

"We had 92 victories in the season and Sutter had 36 saves and nine wins," the manager said. "That's half our victories. Anytime we got to the eighth and needed help, I sent for Sutter."

The reliever who looks like a mountain man with his scraggily beard, trumped into the game with his split fingered fastball and blew the Brewers away in the eighth. In the bottom half of the inning, the Cards added to their lead with a double by Lonnie Smith, an intentional walk and RBI-singles by Porter and Steve Braun.

The rally gave the Cards some breathing room. It delayed the celebration but that was all right. Cardinal fans had waited for this 14 years, since 1967 when Bob Gibson led St. Louis to its last world title. They could wait one more inning.

Sutter didn't keep them in suspense long. He mowed down the last three hitters, finishing with a flair by striking out the final batter, Gorman Thomas.

As he clutched the last strike, Porter bounded out from behind the plate and leaped into the pitcher's arms, touching off a mad, mad celebration.

IT WAS the second save of the Series for Sutter, who also was credited with one of the Cards' victories.

"It's hard to believe," the pitcher said. "I know it probably won't sink in for a while. I imagine I'll be hunting deer this winter and all of a sudden it will sink in and I will let out a great big yell."

This Series didn't start out in a very promising manner for the Cardinals. They were shut out 10-0 on Mike Caldwell's three-hitter in the opener. But they came back the next night to eke out a 5-4 victory with Sutter getting the victory in relief. Porter drilled a key two-run double in that game and the winning run scored when Braun drew a bases-loaded walk in the bottom of the eighth inning.

The teams moved to Milwaukee and Andujar handcuffed the Brewers in Game Three, winning 6-2. Herzog needed Sutter to nail down that victory after Andujar was hurt and that affected the Cards in Game Four. Leading 5-1, they saw the lead evaporate in a six-run Brewer rally in the seventh inning while Sutter remained in the bullpen.

That tied the Series at 2-2 and Milwaukee won Game Five behind a gritty performance by Caldwell and the second four-hit game of the Series by Yount. Now the Brewers needed one more victory for the World championship. But they never got it.

Porter's pain turns into joy

By D. BYRON YAKE
AP Sports Editor

ST. LOUIS (AP) — He's borne crosses and today he knows joy.

He's fought painful personal battles with alcohol and drugs and emerged successful.

He's faced difficult times from fans, who treated him as a cruel substitute for a hero gone.

But now Darrell Porter hears only applause for he is the Most Valuable Player of the 1982 World Series.

"A lot of guys could have gotten it, but this means a great deal to me," Porter said after the St. Louis Cardinals, a band of baseball smugglers, overtook the Milwaukee Brewers 6-3 and won the 79th World Series in a seventh game filled with drama.

PORTER IS correct. There were several worthy candidates for the MVP, including Keith Hernandez, who had eight runs batted in during the series, and Cardinal relief ace Bruce Sutter, who had two wins and a save.

But, the case can be made quite nicely for Porter, too.

He batted .286, had eight hits, five RBI, one home run and scored four runs during the seven games.

He was flawless behind the plate, blocking wayward pitches, and he threw out two runners. The Brewers, in fact, had only one stolen base during the Series.

Still, Porter's value to the Cardinals goes much deeper, and history tells it best.

It was 1980, a pivotal year for Porter, who at the time caught for the Kansas City Royals.

In April, Porter was released from a rehabilitation center, where he was treated for his alcohol and drug problems.

Manager Whitey Herzog had left before the season began and later became both manager and general manager of the Cardinals.

But Kansas City, under Jim Frey, went to the World Series despite a disappointing year for Porter, whose batting average fell by 42 points.

Porter had a dreadful World Series, batting just .143.

WHEN THE Series ended, Porter took the free agent route, and it was his old friend Herzog and the Cards who took a chance on him, picking him up in the draft.

Porter is remarried, has become religious, and now he's won over St. Louis.

Porter would probably never say his battles are over, either with drugs, alcohol, hitting or with fans.

"The fans will probably boo him if he has a bad week next year," Herzog joked before the seventh game.

The story is familar. Porter had miserable season this year, batting just .231.

Then came the championshhip series, where he was named MVP, batting .556 against Atlanta. And now, another honor.

"It's just a great feeling," Porter said. "He (Herzog) stuck with me. He's a great man."

Herzog also knows his baseball.

In 1980, Herzog shocked the baseball world with a bevy of trades. In one week alone, he got rid of 13 players, including catcher Ted Simmons, a longtime crowd favorite; Pete Vukovich and Rollie Fingers.

He acquired Sutter that week, and later he added players such as Lonnie Smith and Ozzie Smith and Joaquin Andujar, the winning pitcher in Game 7.

BUT HERZOG says that all his trades centered on the acquisition of one player — Darrell Porter.

Herzog believed in Porter.

And Porter, able to face reality, learned to believe in himself.

Does the MVP make up for 1980?" he was asked as the cameras whirled, the champagne flowed around him in the happy locker room.

"No," replied Porter, "I don't look at it as making up for anything. I'm only taking one step after another step."

Garvey may be back with Los Angeles Dodgers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Months of speculation on the future of first baseman Steve Garvey will end in the announcement that he is returning to the Los Angeles Dodgers with a four-year contract worth more than a $1 million a year, according to a published report.

The Los Angeles Herald Examiner, which carried the report in today's editions, also said that the Dodgers are planning to trade outfielder Mike Marshall, 22, or first baseman Greg Brock, 24, to Pittsburgh for catcher Tony Pena. It said the Dodgers would announce the signing today.

With Marshall and Brock considered the heirs apparent, speculation had been that Garvey, who will be 34 in December, might not remain with the team. Garvey's agent had been talking with the Dodgers intermittently throughout the season, but no progress was reported. Garvey would have become a free agent Nov. 4.

Garvey, who made eight consecutive all-star teams, won four Gold Gloves and was the National League's Most Valuable Player in 1974, never asked the Dodgers to renegotiate his six-year, $360,000 contract.

"When you sign a contract, you have to feel you're getting what you justly deserve or you shouldn't sign it," he said in a 1980 interview. "At the time, it was a very big contract, the best with the Dodgers. I don't know if I'm even in the top five now."

Garvey, however, did not complain about the renegotiation treatment. Complaining is not his style.

Derek Tarr makes sure seeded form prevails in USTA play

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Top-seeded South African Derek Tarr, who now resides in Birmingham, Ala., led the way into the second round of the Midland Tennis Club's 22nd Fall Tournament at Midland College Wednesday by defeating Gerrardo Varela of Mexico, 6-3, 6-1.

It was a chilly, overcast day in which form prevailed, except in doubles where the second and third seeded teams lost.

It was an especially bad day for Juan Farrow, a finalist in doubles and singles two years ago and seeded 10th in singles. He lost to Andy Avram, Winston-Salem, N.C., 6-4, 6-3 in singles. And then, teaming with Maurice Hunter as the No. 2 seeded doubles team, Farrow again was victimized by Andy Gordon, Tucson, Ariz., and Tom Csipkay, Wyckoff, N.J., 6-3, 6-2 in one of six first-round doubles matches.

Gordon has been a real trouble-maker in the tournament. Tuesday he pulled off the day's singles shocker by upsetting Marcel Freeman, a four-time All-America from UCLA. Freeman had won the Dallas tournament of the Texas Segment over Tarr and had lost to Tim Mayotte in the Houston tournament finals. But this isn't a good week for Freeman, who also was expelled in doubles.

The only other seeded player to bow out Wednesday was No. 14 Randy Druz, victimized by Phil Lenhoff, University of California, 4-6, 6-4, 7-5, in a sandstorm interrupted match that began Tuesday and was completed Wednesday.

IN THE Texas Segment of the United State Tennis Association, the top eight players in the tournaments at Corpus Christi, Dallas, Houston and Tyler qualified for the First National Bank sponsored Masters Tournament here. At stake is $10,000 ($1,300 to the winner) and, even more important, 35 circuit points to the winner and 25 to the runnerup. Semifinalists get 16 and quarterfinalists eight points.

And points are what the Satellite tour is all about. Some 500 point-famished Satellite players are battling for the necessary 60 points that will put them among the 200 Grand Prix players, where the money, that makes today's starvation worth it, is waiting.

Doubles are important, too, since each member of the winning team can pick up 25 points, runnersup 16 each and semifinalists 10.

TARR HOPES to win enough here to regain a spot on the Grand Prix circiut. "I've played in 10 Grand Prix events since last September and this is my first satellite since then."

Points accummulated on the Satellite and Grand Prix tours stand up for a year. Any points Tarr picks up here are important, "since I also lose 16 points this month."

Tarr and Mike Gandolfo are top seeded in doubles and won over Howard and Lenhoff 6-1, 2-6, 7-5 Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the No. 3 seeded doubles team of Jai DiLouie, Dallas, and Freeman, lost to Chuck Nunn, San Marcos, and Horace Reid, Atlanta, 6-2, 4-6 and 7-6.

NO. 3 seeded Mark Vines, Richmond, Va., who beat Harold Solomon and Yannick Noah on the way to the Paris Indoor title in 1981, advanced Wednesday along with No. 4 seeded John Mattke, Circle Pines, N.C.; and No. 5 Sammy Giammalva, a 19-year-old who defeated Vines in the Corpus Christi finals, took the Huntington Station, N. Y. tournament and gained the Monroe, La., finals.

Play resumes in singles at 11:30 a.m. today with four matches while four more are scheduled to follow. Tarr meets Andy Avram in one of the late matches while Gandolfo faces Lenhoff in another. Gordon, who spoiled Freeman's week, meets Jeff Robbins, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Quarterfinals are scheduled Friday, semifinals Saturday and the finals in singles and doubles will be held at the Racquet Club Sunday at 1 p.m.

Singles—Derek Tarr d Gerardo Varela 6-3, 6-1; Andy Abram d Juan Farrow 6-4, 6-3; Tim Anderson d Bob Blazekovich 6-4, 7-5; Alfonso Gonzalez d Matt McDonald 4-6, 6-2, 6-3; John Mattke d Gregg Amaya 6-1, 4-6, 6-4; Sean Broawley d Jai DiLouie 6-4, 4-1, 40-0; Maurice Hunter d Mitch Perkins 2-6, 3-6, 6-2; Ricardo Acuna d Dale Power 6-3, 6-3; Mike Gandolfo d Val Milder 7-6, ret.; Phil Lenhoff d Randy Druz 4-6, 6-4, 7-5.

Today's matches: Russell Barlow vs. Armand Molino, Sammy Giammalva vs. Hunter, Acuna vs. Mark Vines, Jeff Robbins vs. Andy Gordon, 11:30 a.m. Second matches to follow: Tarr vs. Avram, Anderson vs. Gonzalez, Mattke vs. Brawley, Gandolfo vs. Lenhoff.

Doubles—Tarr-Gandolfo d M.Howard-Lenhoff 6-1, 2-6, 7-5; S.Brawley-G.Donnelly d K.Cahill-B.Dickenson 7-6, 6-3; C.Nunn-H.Reid d DiLouie-M.Freeman 6-2, 4-6, 7-6; A.Gordon-T.Ospikay d M.Hunter-J.Farrow 6-3, 6-2.

Oakland A's axe 'Billy Ball' style

OAKLAND (AP) — The Oakland A's won't be playing "Billy Ball" any longer.

Fiery Billy Martin, who led the A's from fifth place to an American League West title in two years and helped rekindle fan interest with his daring brand of baseball, is back in the job market following his firing Wednesday.

Both the New York Yankees, the team Martin managed to two AL pennants and one World Series title, and the Cleveland Indians, previously expressed interest in hiring the 54-year-old manager whose career has been punctuated by controversy and success.

YANKEE VICE President Bill Bergesch said he had no idea if owner George Steinbrenner planned to enter into serious discussions with Martin.

"I know absolutely nothing. This is the first I've heard about Billy. George does all the hiring. I don't know if George has spoken to him."

"It's big news but I don't think it's going to affect our position. We'll just keep talking with him," said Indians General Manager Phil Seghi.

Both clubs earlier had received permission to talk to Martin. The contract of Indian Manager Dave Garcia has not been renewed while the status of Yankee pilot Clyde King has not been determined.

A's President Roy Eisenhardt and club executives Walter and Wally Haas, made their decision Tuesday after a three-hour discussion with Martin, who then went duck hunting.

"We were talking as friends," Eisenhardt told reporters. "Each of us had compassion for the other's situation. It wasn't the first time we had discussed this."

But Martin and the A's ownership had been hotly feuding the past three months. At one point, according published reports, Martin punched holes in the wall of his office after being denied a request to renogtiate his contract.

Martin, who cried at a press conference when he quit the Yankees in 1978, left the A's dugout in tears during a game in Toronto last season. The emotional former Yankee second baseman was involved in turmoil with each of the five AL teams he has managed since 1969.

In Minnesota, where he led the Twins to the AL West crown in 1969, Martin decked pitcher Dave Boswell outside a bar. He was fired at the end of the season.

He called both Steinbrenner and outfielder Reggie Jackson liars in an intervew in 1978, then denied saying it and resigned under pressure. He was reinstated in the middle of the 1979 season but fired during the offseason for figthting with a marshmallow salesman.

Martin, whose three full seasons with the A's was the longest continuous tenure of his career, also managed Detoit, where he won the AL East in 1972, and Texas.

PRIOR TO Martin's arrival in Oakland, the team drew a shade over 300,000 fans in 1979. That figure grew by nearly a half million in each of the next three seasons and with heavy promotion of the "Billy Ball" theme, reached an Oakland Coliseum record of 1,735,493 in 1982.

But the team, just a year after winning the AL West title, fell to 68-94, by far Martin's worst showing as a manager. And Martin's relationship with the front office faltered.

"The whole club knew" about the conflict, said team captain Dwayne Murphy. "We didn't know the details but we had a pretty good idea what was going on."

Eisenhardt, saying he was "totally drained," refused to elaborate on his differences with Martin." He would not speculate on a successor.

A source close to the team, when asked about the contract hassle was quoted as saying, "It wasn't the same between them after that. Billy started saying some nasty things about the organization."

He had three years left of his $1-million, five-year contract.

Eisenhardt said he didn't blame Martin for the team's plunge to fifth place, but said he he felt the team had to make the change.

NFL schedule may have to be revised

COCKEYSVILLE, Md. (AP) — It'll be NFL football ... or no football. For a while, at least. And in a while, if NFL football does return, it'll have a slightly different look.

For times and dates of your team's games, don't bother checking your tickets. The National Football League may juggle its schedule dramatically.

In a meeting of NFL officials Wednesday in New York, one which included Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys and chairman of the Competition Committee, the league wrestled with the problems of a strike-shortened season, specifically one of 13 or 12 games.

The existing schedule likely would be junked with teams playing as many games as possible against divisional rivals. The league also is trying to balance the number of road and home games and to deal with the problems of playing full slates of games even later than usual in winter and figuring out how to declare one wild-card entry with an unbalanced schedule.

The NFL's striking players, some of whom had visions of forming their own union-sponsored league, were thrown for a loss Wednesday in U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. It ruled the NFL could — if it desired — send union lawyers scampering all over the countryside, fighting lawsuits.

The union, without the resources to mount a defense against that, threw in a small towel and cancelled its all-star league — perhaps forever.

It was the major development in the 30th day of the strike and the eighth day in this round of negotiations to end it.

At the bargaining table Wednesday, negotiators discussed pensions and insurance benefits. A member of the union's negotiating team said there was progress. Economic issues have been the thorniest in these talks, which were recessed Wednesday at 9:45 p.m. EDT.

A report floated early Wednesday by management, which said mediator Sam Kagel had told the union he didn't like its idea of a central salary fund, was shot down ... sort of ... by Kagel himself. The 73-year-old San Francisco lawyer, who issues brief statements and refuses to answer questions, couched his response in such terms that many people were wondering just exactly what he meant.

The union, whose strike has now resulted in the calling off of five regular-season weekends, staged two all-star games last weekend, the first two of a 20-game series designed in part to raise $1 million a week and in part to show the NFL just what united players could do.

Two more were scheduled next Sunday in Toronto and Monday night in Atlanta. The latter city, incidentally, is the home base of the Turner Broadcasting System, the cable television company which was bankrolling the union games. But the appellate court's decision convinced the union to cancel those two games, and probably the entire players' league as well.

A problem had arisen when five of the NFL's 28 teams — Dallas, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Miami and St. Louis — filed suits in state courts, with more litigation promised. The union, unable finance a legal defense whose major costs would involve transportation from city to city to city, hoped to force the league to funnel all lawsuits through U.S. District Court in Washington, where the union is headquartered. District Judge John Garrett Penn had ruled in their favor a few weeks ago.

But the appellate court overturned his ruling, freeing the teams to sue on a state level to prevent their players from appearing in any games not sanctioned by the NFL, as so stipulated in their standard player contracts.

Ed Garvey, the executive director of the union, said he didn't think the teams would file suits "unless it wants to show everybody how many lawyers it's got."

Garvey admitted it was a loss, but downplayed it.

He said, for example, that he felt the appellate decision would have little effect on the negotiations in this Baltimore suburb.

And he noted that NFL lawyers had admitted in court that the standard player contract had not been collectively bargained (the union believes it must be) and that the union was still pursuing its suit in U.S. District Court to have the contracts invalidated.

"If Judge Penn finds the contract to be illegal or should the owners cancel the NFL season, we would proceed with the players' league," Garvey said.

The union has scheduled a meeting in Washington for player representatives to discuss the status of the negotiations and the future of the players league.

Some owners, and NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, have often mentioned that a 12-game regular season would be a minimim required to maintain the integrity of the season. To get that number of games in, the season, two games old when the strike began, would have to resume Nov. 7.

The Management Council, the owners' negotiation unit, has repeatedly rejected the union's demands for a central salary fund and for a fixed percentage of the teams' television revenues. The union also is demanding a wage scale. Management has officially offered one — but the minimum figures are far below what the union wants.

A Management spokesman said Wednesday Kagel "has told the union what he didn't like about its plan ... that he didn't like the fund."

Then Kagel denied to newsmen that he had "recommended that the players drop their bid for a wage scale tied to a fund. I have made no such recommendation."

Management had not termed Kagel's comment a recommendation. It had not mentioned the central fund being tied to the wage scale. Kagel refused to respond to any questions or expand on his denial. Management stuck by its earlier comment.

There are winners and losers in NBC's Series coverage

An AP Sports Analysis
By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

Some winners — and losers — in NBC's coverage of the 79th World Series:

— Biggest winner: Harry Coyle. He's been the director for every Series game NBC has carried, since the first in 1947, and no one is better at conveying the intricacies and dynamics of baseball. In this fall's classic, one play underscored his reputation like no other.

It was Lonnie Smith's attempt to steal home in the third inning of Game 5 Tuesday night. Plate umpire Jim Evans called Smith out on a bang-bang play at the plate, but replays showed the St. Louis speedster clearly beat the tag. While it's not unheard of for a TV replay to reveal an officiating mistake, it was the way Coyle built up to the denouement that deserves raves.

First, he gave us a ground-level, slow-motion shot of Smith jumping off third, with Milwaukee pitcher Don Sutton in the background just starting his motion.

Then came a series of elevated shots of the plate — first a slow-down version of the scene telecast live, then other shots from the third-base line and the outfield, and finally the clincher — the first-base shot that showed Smith safe by a forearm's length.

— Biggest loser: Tom Seaver. The veteran pitcher is a knowledgeble and articulate baseball analyst, but he became increasingly hidden as the Series moved on.

NBC used Seaver primarily for pregame interviews, and in the first two games had him explaining key plays and patterns with the help of his scorebook. By Game 6, however, Seaver had largely fallen silent during the game.

— Best performance by a newcomer: Byron Day and Bob Costas (tie). They handled the stands and dugouts to perfection on Tuesday night, when the rains twice interrupted Game 6.

— Most crowded seating: The NBC announcers' booth. Seaver's fate may have been a case of too many people in one place. ABC long has been criticized for its three-member announcing team on National Football League telecasts. NBC tried to go that one better, sticking Dick Enberg, Joe Garagiola, Tony Kubek and Seaver behind the microphones.

— Best performance in a utility role: Bill Cosby. The comedian was guest host of NBC's "Tonight" show, where the network turned to fill most of the 2 hour, 13 minute rain delay. Cosby must share this spot with Mike Weisman, the coordinator producer of the Series, who again proved capable of juggling.

Three of the Midland YMCA girls who will be shooting for a state berth this weekend in Abilene's Bi-District gymnastics meet are, from left, Dianna Eccleston, April Sturdivant and Melissa Columbus. Sturdivant is shooting for her sixth trip to the state meet.

Midland Y girls shoot for state gym berths

The Midland YMCA Class III girls will travel to Abilene Saturday to compete in the qualifying Bi-District gymnastics meet at McMurry College.

This is the last meet for the girls to qualify for the upcoming state meet. The girls will be competing in floor, vault, uneven bars and balance beam competition.

April Sturdivant has been to the state meet five times and will be shooting for her sixth trip. Other YMCA members shooting for state berths will be Melissa Columbus, Dianna Eccleston, Susie Dunn, Krestin Smith and Missy Kibler.

The girls are coached by Gary Seth and Hubert Collins.

Buffs, Owls to battle for 8-AA lead

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

When District 8-AA began league play, the game between Reagan County and Stanton didn't look like much of a contest.

Stanton had scored only 32 points in establishing a disappointing 2-3 record while Reagan County hadn't scored more than one touchdown in any of its games and found itself with an 0-4-1 record.

But district competition brings out the best, a title the Owls and Buffaloes can lay claim to. After only two weeks of conference play they are the only undefeated teams left.

Neither coach stood still while their teams slipped in the pre-district doldrums and even die-hard fans of the two schools are finding programs a necessity.

STANTON COACH Steve Park lost tailback Maurizo Iaquaniello to a knee injury, initiating a small shuffle in the Buffaloes' backfield.

Fullback Bobby Barnhill was moved into Iaquaniello's spot with Rocky Barnes taking over at fullback. Joining Barnhill and Barnes is wingback Mark Helms, who is averaging 9.2 yards per carry, and Darren Sorley, the siganl caller for the Buffs.

In Big Lake, the Owls lost their All-West Texas tailback Gregg Fisher for two games and coach Richard Davis said it took some time for the offense to jell.

"With all the backfield changes we've had, it took a while for us to get it together." he said.

THE BIGGEST surprise for the Owls has been the performance of freshman Bobby Gunnels. The 145-pounder was put in the hot seat when he started his first varsity game in the Owls initial district game.

Gunnels threw for 104 yards and two touchdowns in a 5-for-6 performance to lead the Owls in a 24-15 upset over the McCamey Badgers. He followed that with another 5-for-6 showing against Eldorado, a game Reagan County won 28-15. Not a bad job for a team that was averaging 5.1 points-per-game.

Defensively the Buffaloes have been strong all year with three shutouts to their credit but Park knows the new Owl backfield will be a severe test for his defensive troops.

"FISHER IS a great back," he said, "And Williams and Gunnels are good."

The Reagan County defense has been suspect, giving up 16.2 points-per-outing before district play started.

"Our main concern is to move the ball on offense," Davis said, "and we have to play better defense then we have all year."

In other district games, Wall and McCamey, both 1-1, will try to keep their opponents out of the win column. Eldorado, which travels to Wall, and Miles, which hosts McCamey, are 0-2 in district games.

District 2-AAAA

For the second week in a row, the Andrews Mustangs will have to face a Top 10 team. Last week coach Bill Shipman saw his Mustangs come from a 14-0 halftime deficit to upset No. 8 Sweetwater, 24-14, in a key District 2-AAAA matchup.

This week the Mustangs, 4-2, travel to San Angelo to take on sixth ranked Lakeview, undefeated in six outings. The Chiefs and Mustangs are the only teams undefeated in district play with 3-0 records.

Monahans and Sweetawater will futher clarify the conference race when they meet in Sweetwater. The Mustangs and Loboes are 2-1 in loop play and the loser would have a long road back if they expect to be in contention for post season play.

In other district games, Lamesa will host Pecos (1-2) in hope of winning its first district tilt as will Fort Stockton which travels to Snyder (1-2).

District 6-AAA

District 6-AAA will see a key matchup when Crane (2-0) invades Ozona (1-1). The Golden Cranes are 7-0 overall but have struggled in their two district games, escaping with one point victories against Sonora and Coahoma. Ozona sports a 6-1 record, having lost its only game to district foe Ballinger.

Colorado City (1-1) will help break the five-way tie for second place when the Wolves travel to Ballinger (1-1). Coahoma will be seeking its first district win in two games when the Bulldogs host Sonora (1-1).

District 7-A

Eden (6-0-1) may have a hard time holding on to its No. 5 ranking as the Bulldogs travel to Garden City (5-2). The two teams sit atop District 7-A with 4-0 records.

Greenwood (3-1) will try to make it four-in-a-row as the Rangers host Bronte (1-3). Sterling City (3-1) shouldn't have much trouble against Water Valley as the Wildcats are winless in four district contests. Irion County, which shares the bottom spot with Water Valley will travel to Robert Lee (1-3).

District 6-A

No. 8 ranked Wink (3-0) better not relax on the way to Grandfalls (2-1) as the Cowboys are playing spoilers in District 6-A. Grandfalls is undefeated at home, including a 12-8 upset over powerhouse Rankin. Irran (3-0) will try to keep pace with Wink as they Braves host Sanderson (1-2).

In other conference games, Balmorhea (0-2-1) will be seeking its first district win against the Red Devils (1-2) in Rankin as will Buena Vista (0-3) when the Longhorns host Fort Davis (1-4).

Medich may turn to medicine

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Doc Medich has been preparing for life after baseball for 12 years. He now realizes that the start of his second career may be at hand.

Medich, the Milwaukee Brewers' 33-year-old right-handed pitcher, said Wednesday he hasn't decided whether to return to baseball next spring or complete his medical training.

He realizes that decision already may have been made for him. He gave up six runs and five hits and threw two wild pitches in 2⅔ innings of relief pitching Tuesday night as the St. Louis Cardinals embarrassed the Brewers 13-1 to even the World Series at three games apiece.

Medich was purchased by the Brewers from the Texas Rangers on Aug.11 as insurance in their pennant drive. He knows his performance in the Series hasn't enhanced his chances of being asked to return next season.

"I haven't decided what I'm going to do, but I would like to think I'm still a better pitcher than I showed," he said. "I think I've done fairly well since I joined the Brewers. I think if I had a full spring training with this team, I could have a successful season next year."

Medich, who had been hit hard while with the Rangers early in the season, won five games for the Brewers down the stretch. Gal McLish and Pat Dobson, the Brewers' pitching coaches, altered his pitching delivery, which he said improved his control and added a couple of miles per hour to his fast ball.

"I have a three-year continous program of orthopedic residencey ahead of me to complete my formal medical training," he said. "Once I start that, I can't interrupt it with baseball. I have to decide whether to start that now or come back and try baseball.

"I have to sit down with (Brewers' General Manager) Harry Dalton in the next few weeks and find out what kind of plans they might have for me," he said. "I'm still not sure how I feel about it.

"But I know that earlier in the season baseball wasn't much fun anymore," he said. "I knew the Rangers weren't going anywhere, and I asked them to trade me. It took them three months to do it, but after they did it's been fun again. Playing for the Brewers has been a refreshing experience. It's given me a whole new perspective about baseball.

"I realize it's the best offensive club in the major leagues," he said. "I also know it has an excellent chance to come back to the World Series for the next three or four years. I've got to consider that.

"I'll be able to practice medicine for the rest of my life," he said. "But I may not be able to play in a World Series again. I've got to think about all those things."

It's a Bannerman day for Black Hawks

By The Associated Press

Probably everyone in Chicago Stadium was impressed with the work of Murray Bannerman. Except Murray Bannerman.

The man who shares goaltending duties on the Black Hawks with Tony Esposito blocked 37 shots in leading Chicago to a 4-0 shutout of the Buffalo Sabres Wednesday night. It was Bannerman's first shutout in more than a year, but he didn't want the credit.

"I'm probably my worst critic," said Bannerman. "That's why I'm so hard on myself. I admit you have to be lucky to get a shutout because of the incredible speed of the puck and the way it changes direction so fast. I really have to credit our team with literally throwing themselves at the Buffalo players to protect me.

"I think there was a point in the third period when I never thought I would keep my shutout but Doug Wilson and Bob Murray made two of the greatest stops with their sticks I've ever seen."

Bannerman did enough to keep the Sabres off balance and off the scoreboard — and earn praise from the rest of the Hawks and many of the Sabres.

"We played a great game tonight," said Wilson, "and Bannerman proved that he is some kind of goalie. I don't think anyone could have beaten him tonight."

"We had so many chances and couldn't capitalize," noted Sabres goalie Bob Sauve, who was beaten by Darryl Sutter and Steve Larmer in the second period and Al Secord and Rich Preston in the third. "I have to give Bannerman a lot of credit. We had so much pressure on him in the third period. They had only two shots in the first 18 minutes to our 14. He proved it was his night."

"I was hardly screened all night," said Bannerman. "The big thing tonight was that I didn't give them any rebounds and I think that's the key for any goalie."

Capitals 3, Canadiens 3

Three of the players involved in the big summer trade between these clubs scored goals. Rod Langway and Craig Laughlin — who came to Washington from Montreal along with Brian Engblom and Doug Jarvis — and Mike Gartner connected for the Caps. Ryan Walter — sent to Montreal along with Rick Green — Mario Tremblay and Steve Shutt replied for the Canadiens, who tied it on Shutt's goal at 8:43 of the final period.

Kings 7, Devils 4

Marcel Dionne scored two goals, and Bernie Nicholls and Charlie Simmer added a goal and two assists each as Los Angeles continued its fine play. Mike Murphy's second-period goal put the Kings ahead to stay as they upped their record to 4-1-2 and stretched their mastery over the former Kansas City and Colorado franchise to 15-0-4.

Rangers 6, Canucks 5

New York rallied from a 4-1 deficit with a four-goal second period, but needed Mark Pavelich's controversial goal with 1:15 remaining in the game to hand Vancouver its fifth loss in as many consecutive road games. Finns Mikko Leinonen (a goal and two assists) and Reijo Ruotsalainen (three assists) led New York, while Lars Molin scored twice for Vancouver.

Pavelich connected after Leinonen's pass sprung him behind the Vancouver defense.

Maple Leafs 5, North Stars 2

Greg Terrion, acquired by Toronto from Los Angeles on Tuesday, made an auspicious debut with two goals and Mike Palmateer sparkled in goal as the Leafs won for the first time after an 0-4-2 start. The defeat was the first for Minnesota, which got two goals from Tom McCarthy.

Nordiques 5, Red Wings 3

With Toronto's victory, the Red Wings are the only winless club in the NHL. Detroit, 0-6-1, dropped its fifth in a row as Peter and Marian Stastny each scored two goals and Marian added two assists. Daniel Bouchard was exceptional in the Nordiques' goal, stopping 38 shots.

Blues 5, Penguins 3

Perry Turnbull's second goal of the night with 3:08 remaining broke a tie and the Blues got insurance from Wayne Babych into an empty net with a minute remaining. Blake Dunlop had three assists for St. Louis.

Oilers 4, Whalers 2

Edmonton, which had the worst goals-against record in the league — surrendering 39 goals in seven games — played its best defensive game of the season and got third-period goals from Pat Hughes and Paul Coffey. Hartford managed only 16 shots on Grant Fuhr in the first two periods and four in the final session, going shotless for the first 13 minutes of that period.

NBA searches for new player compensation rule

CHICAGO (AP) — A radical change in the way National Basketball Association players are compensated threatens "to take away all the benefits we have earned in the last 15 years," officials of the NBA Players Association say.

"We're troubled at their announcement," Larry Fleisher, general counsel of the NBA Players Association said Wednesday. "But it supports what we thought all along. At the same time they state there are new developments in negotiations, they come up with a threat to the players."

AT A meeting Wednesday, the NBA Board of Governors announced "an entirely new approach" in structuring player compensation. NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien said that if talks with the players reach an impasse, the league would implement part of its contract demands.

Those demands include a 10-man roster, a shifting of the cost of fringe benefits to the players and a requirement that players fly coach class unless they pay for first class.

"We anticipate that negotiations on this subject will continue, but it would not be appropriate to discuss the details of this new approach while the negotiations are pursued," O'Brien said.

The commissioner said that if the present discussions appear likely to fail, the league would implement the cost-saving measures he outlined.

O'Brien issued the statement after the meeting, but would not further discuss the issue with the media.

FLEISHER said that if the NBA succeeded in imposing its demands on the players, the first step by the Players Association probably would be to ask the National Labor Relations Board to intervene.

"They have no right to unilaterally impose their proposals on the players," Fleisher said. "I have to assume that some of these threats are just bravado. If their purpose was to threaten the players, all they will accomplish is to make them more unified."

The owners and players have met eight times since late July in efforts to settle on an agreement to replace the collective bargaining agreement that expired June 1.

David Stern, the league's chief negotiator, who also would not discuss the situation after the meeting, was quoted Tuesday as saying that "a wide gulf" existed on all issues. The season is scheduled to begin Oct. 29.

THE OWNERS reportedly are seeking to reduce rosters from 12 to 10 players; eliminate pension, health, life insurance and severance pay; demand 75 percent of the income from each player's shoe endorsements; use coach instead of first-class air travel, and eliminate guaranteed contracts.

The players reportedly are asking for increased benefits to offset the cost of living since the last contract was negotiated, a stipulation that all contracts be guaranteed and a share of television revenue.

Calhoun won't make a move

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Rice starting quarterback Michael Calhoun, benched after the Owls lost their first four games this season, has refused to move to running back, Coach Ray Alborn says.

The emergence of sophomore Doug Johnson, who played schoolboy football at Pasadena Dobie, as the Owls' starting quarterback and a series of injuries to running backs, caused Alborn to shift Calhoun to rnning back.

Calhoun refused, however, and will be the No. 3 quarterback Saturday when the Owls play the Texas Aggies in College Station.

"Michael needs to learn he's not running the football program," Alborn said. "I'm running the football program. I don't know where this puts us."

Calhoun was Rice's primary offensive weapon last season when he passed for a Southwest Conference record tying 21 touchdown passes and ran for one touchdown to account for all of the Owls' touchdowns for the season.

Johnson will start against the Aggies and will be backed up by Phillip Money of Edinburg and Calhoun.

Alborn also announced that freshman Dwayne Burnett from Brenham and sophomore Larry Collins of Houston Yates, would start at running backs against the Aggies instead of Kevin Trigg and Tim Sanders.

Carlsbad set for Hobbs war

By The Associated Press

Oh, to be in Carlsbad now that war is there.

Sports, particularly the game of football, often has been compared with warfare, or as Atlanta sports magnate Ted Turner once noted, "Sports is like war without the killing."

Friday night in Carlsbad, football will be played by the two teams currently ranked the best in New Mexico and the collision between the hometown Cavemen and invading Hobbs Eagles promises to be more than just another game.

"This is the most important game we've played since I've been here," said Carlsbad's third-year Coach David Church.

"Yes sir, I'd say it will border on warfare," said Hobbs Coach Ken Clearman.

The script for the southern style showdown couldn't be any better.

Going into the game, Carlsbad is ranked No. 1 in the state in Class AAAA and Hobbs is No. 2. Both teams have 6-1 records, won their opening district games and are confident they can end Clovis' domination of District 4AAAA.

And while the District 4AAAA race probably won't be decided until the final week of the regular season, there is no understating the importance of the Hobbs-Carlsbad clash.

Hobbs scored an important victory last week when it edged Roswell 14-10. That gave the Eagles a slight edge in the four-way battle between the Eagles, Carlsbad, Clovis and Roswell for the two available post-season playoff berths.

A triumph over Carlsbad would give Hobbs a stranglehold on one of those playoff spots.

"I would think the rest of the district is pulling for us to beat Hobbs," said Church in an interview this week. "It would certainly equalize things."

The game is expected to turn into a duel between Hobbs' immovable defense and Carlsbad's explosive offense.

Hobbs has shut out five of the six teams it has beaten this year and has given up only 27 points in seven games. A defensive specialist during much of his coaching career, Clearman doesn't deny the Eagles have lived this year on that aspect of the game.

"If you have a strong defense, you've got a chance against anybody," he said.

Carlsbad's offense features versatility, thanks to the running of junior halfback Grant Willis and the passing combination of junior quarterback Jimmy Townley and senior wide receiver Sam Roberson.

Willis, a 5-foot-9, 170-pounder, has rushed for 631 yards and eight touchdowns. Townley has thrown for 1,021 yards and nine touchdowns, seven of them to Roberson, who has rewritten the Cavemen's pass receiving record book.

Clearman said his team will have to make some changes in its pass coverage, but doesn't plan to double team the fleet Roberson.

"They throw to their backs and tight end too," said Clearman. "They have some other good receivers and if we worry about him (Roberson) too much, someone else will burn us."

Church said the winner will be the team that can control the football and field position, but added the Cavemen won't change their offensive plans.

"We'll on anybody," said Church. "We won't try to shut it down just to control the football."

In each football season there is usually a week of decision and this one is it for some of the state's top teams.

While Carlsbad and Hobbs are doing battle, Clovis and Roswell will face off in another District 4AAAA confrontation. Both teams are 5-1 with Clovis ranked No. 3 in the state and Roswell No. 4.

The game loorns especially big for Roswell, which cannot afford another district loss if it hopes to keep its playoff hopes intact. The game will be the district debut for Clovis, the defending state champion.

In the northwest, No. 10 Farmington travels to No. 8 Gallup to battle for the District 1AAAA lead. Both teams are 4-0 in district and the winner is virtually assured of a playoff spot.

Bill Yeoman warns team about Hogs

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Hours after a 20-14 loss to Southern Methodist University, Houston Coach Bill Yeoman told his players:

"Quit worrying about that or you'll get killed on Saturday."

His Cougars play unbeaten and sixth-ranked Arkansas in the Astrodome on Saturday. Houston is 2-3-1 for the season and 1-1-1 in the Southwest Conference.

"We're probably down a little bit ability-wise, and we've playing junior-senior teams, like SMU," Yeoman said Wednesday in a telephone conference call. "We have to absolutly make no mistakes and play our guts out to stay on the field with Arkansas and SMU and those people."

The Cougars lost their first two games — 31-12 to Miami and 24-10 to Arizona State, both members of the top 20. SMU is No. 4 and Texas, No. 19, is the Cougars' opponent on Nov. 6.

"Really fun isn't it?" Yeoman said when asked about the schedule.

Yeoman said early mistakes led to 14 Miami points and 17 Arizona State points.

After being told that Houston had been outscored 52-10 in the first quarter this year, Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz said those figures can be deceptive because of turnovers and other factors.

"I don't think there is any excuse for not scoring in the first quarter if you score in the fourth quarter," Yeoman said. "We do not attack it early like we have to do."

Holtz said Houston is in mid-season form. "They get the momentum on you and keep it on you," he said.

Holtz pointed out that the Cougars suffered only one turnover against SMU, and that was on a deflected pass.

Yeoman said the Cougars' lack of turnovers against the Mustangs was encouraging. "If we had fumbled and done the things we have been doing, it would have been a disaster," he said.

In each of the past four years, Arkansas has led Houston and lost.

"We just get a break or two and get lucky," Yeoman said. "We've been very, very fortunate in all our games."

Holtz said the Cougars enter a game prepared to do a variety of things. "Whatever you're going to give them, they'll take," he said. "And they take some things you aren't giving them because of Lionel Wilson. They come out in the second half and decide what they're going to do and do it. Once they get that rhythm, they're very difficult."

Friends in Arkansas, Yeoman said, had changed their attitude about Houston. "They are deadly serious ... real grim," he said.

"I don't know who he talks to," Holtz said when asked about Yeoman's remarks. "It is not a grim situation. We approach it like any other football game."

The deadline is Nov. 10 for submitting applications for aoudad sheep public hunts to be held on portions of Caprock Canyons State Park in January.

Officials will hold a drawing at Texas Parks and Wildlife headquarters in Austin at 10 a.m., Nov. 16, to select between 35 and 42 hunters.

A $250 fee will be charged successful applicants. To obtain applications, write the Parks Division, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin, Texas 78744, or call toll free 1-800-792-1112.

Officials said the hunts are held to reduce the numbers of the aoudad sheep and feral goats which compete with native mule deer and put pressure on native browse species.

Permits will be issued for a two-day hunt, beginning at noon on the first day and ending at noon on the third day. The seven hunts will be divided from Jan. 1 through Jan. 15.

There will be a bag limit of one aoudad sheep per hunter, with no limit on feral goats. However, all animals taken must be properly dressed and removed from the park.

Hunting will be allowed on approximately 3,350 acres of the 13,000 acre park. The park is located three miles north of Quitaque on Ranch Road 1065. Persons issued permits for the 1982 aoudad hunt will not be eligible to participate in the 1983 hunt.

AMISTAD IS hot. Amistad Lodge reports that fishing on the border lake near Del Rio has been better recently than anytime this year. All species are cooperating, with most emphasis being on black bass, stripers and catfish.

Black bass fishing has been good on most all areas of the lake, with topwater baits being great bait choices early and late. Plastic worms and plastic grubs take up the slack in the midday hours.

Striped bass anglers are tearing up these stocked species along the major river channels, off rocky and sandy points near the mouth of Burro Creek and catching some big stripers schooling in front of the two-mile dam.

Probably the overall best fishing comes from anglers who are probing the depths for channel catfish over baited holes. The catfish are ranging from about two to six pounds and are being caught on everything from live wigglers to pieces of lye soap, but the best seems to be Bob's Blood Bait. The new bait conjured-up by Nixon's Bob Fincher is taking its toll of Amistad cats.

ANGLERS WHO relish the sight of a big fish smashing a topwater lure should sample the offerings at Lake Texoma. Reports say that the lake is packed with striped bass in the three to six pound class.

Chrome or shad-colored stickbaits equiped with small spinners have been deadly on the hungry stripers. Fishing has been so good that many anglers have been able to catch a limit of stripers in a few hours. The daily limit for stripers at Texoma is higher than the statewide limit at 15 per day with a possession limit of 30.

High school defenses are shell shocked

By The Associated Press

The defensive units of Lone Oak, Bruni and Brownfield may still be trying to recover from the three shock waves that ran through them in last week's schoolboy football games.

Celeste's Mike Speir charged through Lone Oak for 314 yards on 22 carries and scored five times in a 54-6 rout. Kevin Frank rushed 304 yards on 24 carries and four touchdowns for Agua Dulce in a 28-0 victory over Bruni and Henry Green led Lubbock Dunbar past Brownfield 56-14 with 302 rushing yards on 33 carries and four touchdowns.

The 300-yard plus efforts earned the trio mention this week in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll for their efforts.

"On one of his 50-yard touchdown runs, he broke a couple of tackles at the line, cut back across field and outran the defensive back to the end zone," Celeste Coach Ron Sanderson said of Speir, a 5-9, 70-pound senior. "Balance is his best asset and he can break a lot of tackles.'

AGUA DULCE Coach Marcy Kemp thinks Frank's college future will be on defense despite his yardage figures.

"Anytime he touches the ball, he's got a chance to go all the way," Kemp said. "But I think he'll make an outstanding defensive player. He made 11 tackles for us last week as a middle linebacker."

Dunbar Coach Ken Wallace has a simple formula for Dunbar's offensive success.

"We run the I-formation and just turn around and hand him (Green) the ball and let him go," Wallace said. "He's deceptive. You don't think he's gaining that many yards until you start counting them up."

Runge's Rene Martinez had only 142 yards rushing on five carries but he made the most of his opportunities, scoring on all five rushing attempts in the first half in a 73-6 victory over Smiley.

Two of Martinez' touchdowns were called back by clipping penalties.

Martinez also kicked a 27-yard field goal, ran over a two-point conversion and returned the second-half kickoff 85 yards for a touchdown before watching from the sidelines the rest of the game.

IN OTHER outstanding individual performances:

— Alice running back Robert Souza gained 194 yards on 27 carries and had touchdown runs of 28, 1, 10 and 13 yards in a 41-11 victory over Corpus Christi Miller.

— Harold Green scored all 18 of West Orange Stark's points in an 18-10 victory over Vidor. Green returned a kickoff 87 yards for a touchdown, caught a 70-yard touchdown pass and ran nine yards for the final score to finish with 120 yards rushing on 23 carries.

— The pass-catch combination of quarterback Larry McHorse and receivers Steve Frieda and Darryl Flowers was enough to help San Antonio East Central shut out Laredo Nixon 27-0. McHorse completed 15 of 27 passes for 213 yards and three touchdowns. Frieda caught eight passes for 143 yards and one touchdown and lowers caught two TD passes and totaled seven receptions for 70 yards.

— Post, the top-ranked Class 3A team in the state, cruised past Slaton 42-0 on the six-touchdown performance of Milton Williams, who rushed 211 yards on 14 carries and had scoring runs of 27, 33, 97, 3 and 23 yards. Williams also caught an 80-yard touchdown pass.

— McKinney halfback Anthony Johnson set a school single-game rushing record with 268 yards rushing on 31 carries and four touchdowns in 41-30 victory over Dallas Lincoln.

— Wide receiver Jerry Deckard caught eight of the nine passes completed by Nacogdoches for 143 yards and a touchdown in a 19-0 shut out of Tyler Lee.

— Brenham linebacker Mark Carley contributed 16 tackles, including three for losses and caused one fumble in a 7-0 victory over Houston King.

— Pharr-San Juan-Alamo's Gilbert Salinas led the way to a 21-7 victory over San Benito with 40 carries for 252 yards and touchdown runs of 32 and 35 yards.

He was the Rio Grande Valley's leading rusher with 1,330 yards last season.

— Lubbock Coronado quarterback Mike Meeks hit six of 12 passes for 16 yards and three touchdowns and rushed 80 yards on 12 carries and intercepted three passes on defense in a 42-14 victory over Amarillo Palo Duro.

— Orangefield wide receiver Jerry Tennison caught eight passes for 187 yards and three touchdowns in a 32-7 victory over Warren. The TD catches were for 26, 50 and four yards.

Cross Country hordes to descend on Midland

The annual Tall City Invitational High School Cross Country meet will be held at 10 a.m. Friday on the Hogan Park golf course.

Runners will start and finish near the old Hogan Park club house. Boys will run a three-mile pre-determined course while the girls will run over a two-mile layout.

Midland High and Midland Lee are the host of the cross country gathering and have assembled high school teams from all over West Texas, including Lubbock, El Paso, Andrews, Midland, Odessa, San Angelo, Abilene and many others.

Three divisions of competition will held. The girls varsity run will kickoff the meet and will be followed by a junior varsity division for boys and a varsity division for boys.

Andrews' Kirk Pearcy will be back to defend his crown in the varsity run. Last year's meet was held over the same course.

Midland High's hopes will probably rest with Claire Hardy in the girls run. She has placed high in all her cross country meets this year. MHS' Chuck St. Germain heads the Bulldog boys while Carl Piccolo has been the major threat for Lee's Rebels.

Midland High's John Ford and Lee's Sam Volpe are the host coaches for the meet. Over 300 runners competed in the meet last year and another huge turnout is expected this year.

Race track must pay $560,000

BENTON, La. (AP) — Louisiana Downs has been ordered to pay $560,000 to the widow of a man who fell 70 feet to his death while attempting to cross from a crowded, stalled elevator to another elevator sent on a rescue mission.

Side panels were removed from both elevators, and people in the stalled lift were asked to step across a gap estimated to be 2 or 3 feet wide to the empty elevator, the widow's suit said.

During the rescue attempt, William Tandy McElwee, an independent oil operator from Haughton, La., fell to his death, her suit said.

A jury decided Tuesday that the Bossier City horse race track bore 90 percent of the blame.

New York Exchange criticized for failing to detect crisis

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The New York Stock Exchange is being criticized for failing to detect the silver crisis that developed in the market in 1980.

The Securities and Exchange Commission, in a staff report released Wednesday, said the exchange didn't get sufficient information from its member brokerage firms and failed "to be alert to the potential of a crisis situation as it developed."

It said the exchange's inability to foresee the crisis was due to its belief that the firms it monitored would "provide candid, accurate and complete information to the exchange staff, promptly and spontaneously."

But, it said, "This assumption proved false."

It called on the exchange to adopt stronger controls in conducting its surveys of member firms.

Several brokerage firms also were criticized for letting the wealthy Hunt family of Texas build up huge silver holdings and for lending family members large sums of money without taking a close look at their overall finances.

The report blamed those decisions on senior officials of the firms and said that as a result, the brokerages faced large losses if the Hunts defaulted on their accounts.

The collapse of the silver market occurred when the price plummeted from $50 an ounce in January 1980 to $10.80 an ounce at the end of March 1980.

At that time, the Hunts held an enormous share of the silver market, including holdings of the metal and futures contracts. A futures contract is an obligation to deliver or receive something on a specified future date at a specified price.

In taking a futures position, the Hunts made a small deposit on each contract compared with the value of the silver they controlled. They also borrowed against their silve.

When the price of silver fell, the Hunts were caught in a financial squeeze, as were some of the brokerages.

In Dallas, Thomas Whitaker, spokesman for Nelson Bunker Hunt and Herbert Hunt, said the brothers "accurately and fully responded to every request for financial information made by the lenders. In no case did anyone loaning money to the Hunts fail to get their money back."

The Hunts held their silver accounts with six broker-dealers registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission: Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc.; Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc.; Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.; A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc.; E.F. Hutton & Co. Inc.; and Paine Webber Jackson & Curtis Inc.

As a result of its review, the SEC staff urged in its report that the commission change some of its rules to require brokerage firms to limit the amount of their exposure to losses from a single customer and to discourage customers from concentrating holdings in a single commodity.

Meanwhile, Bache Group Inc., parent of Bache Halsey, said it agreed to accept a censure and $400,000 fine by the New York Stock Exchange for alleged violations of exchange rules in handling silver futures trading in 1980.

In doing so, Bache president George Ball said the company consented to the penalty "to avoid protracted publicity, distraction or expense." It neither admitted nor denied wrongdoing.

Wallace speaks of need for policy

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Railroad commissioner Mack Wallace says Americans can no longer afford to put up with the government's failure to develop a national energy policy.

"The continued inability of America's governmental leaders to settle this country's energy conflicts and move forward with developing a sound, clear-cut energy plan is turning into a national scandal," Wallace said Wednesday.

"Jobs for the unemployed, heat for homes and fuel for transportation are at stake and our nation's security is dependent on resolving this dilemma," he said, and added:

"Consumers need to understand that their gas bills are going up at the mandate of the U.S. Congress by way of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978. That statute thwarts the law of supply and demand, plain and simple. That law sets prices for more than 20 categories of natural gas that are automatically increased every 90 days."

Wallace spoke at the statewide oil allowable hearing at which the commission routinely set the market production factor for November at 100 percent. Ten fields, including the East Texas field at 86 percent, were restricted to lower allowables.

Purchaser nominations for Texas crude oil next month totaled 2,741,465 barrels a day.

The commission called upon each intrastate pipeline to review its ability to move natural gas to various parts of the state and to advise the commission of any anticpated problems by Nov. 15.

'Final' nuclear waste disposal sites are planned for future

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The federal government, responsible for the ultimate disposal of radioactive waste, hopes to open two "final" storage sites in 1997 and 2002 at an estimated cost of $14.8 billion.

The waste, a byproduct of nuclear-generated electricity and nuclear weapons production, has been stored in on-site interim facilities since the beginning of the commercial reactor program.

Many of the nuclear-powered utilities are now running out of space — as many as 29 in this decade — and those that do may be forced to shut down or ship the waste to other locations for permanent burial.

Currently, waste materials remain encapsuled in the original fuel assemblies, arrays of zircaloy-clad uranium fuel rods roughly four meters long and weighing from 300 to 1,300 pounds, depending upon the reactor type. About 25 metric tons are discharged annually from each power reactor.

Numerous alternatives have been proposed for the ultimate disposal of nuclear waste — either as spent fuel or as a reprocessed solid. The most promising of these is burial in geological formations of great stability. Salt, basalt and tuff are now under investigation. Under the Department of Energy (DOE) plans, one repository would be in operation in the U.S. by 1997 and another in year 2002.

The government has run into serious political problems in locating such sites because most communities view them as potentially dangerous to human health and environment and object violently to them.

The cost of interim storage and eventual disposal of defense nuclear wastes is being paid by the taxpayers.

The question of financial responsibility for the disposal of commercially generated wastes will be debated at length by the House when it returns for the "lame duck" session after its election recess.

The House will have before it a Rules Committee bill — a measure that incorporates the views of six other House committees — which was reported out last month. The Senate has already approved its version of the measure.

Among the most noteworthy of the House provisions is a proposal that if a state objects to DOE's repository construction plan, Congress must override that before such plan can proceed.

According to the DOE program schedule and estimates of the demand for repository services, the program would span 44 years — from the research and development activity now underway to the decommissioning of the second repository in 2050.

According to this schedule, construction for the first repository would begin in 1987, and the facility would be available for waste loading in 1997. Construction of the second site would begin in 1992, and it would begin receiving spent fuel in 1999.

HIGHWAY COMPROMISE

In its haste to adjourn, Congress approved a highway program funding compromise that left many of the major issues for resolution in its lame duck session.

The House chose not to extend the Highway Trust Fund tax, thus preventing the adoption of authorization levels for the fund. The action means full-year funding for interstate construction and resurfacing will continue but provides only about 21 percent of the funding for other major highway systems.

When Congress returns it will have to approve funds for cash reimbursement to states for claims submitted on highway project work underway. For new work to start, Congress will also have to approve an authorization bill for new contract authority for projects, coupled with an extension of the Highway Trust Fund.

FED ENERGY POLICIES BIASED

A congressional coalition claims there is a deliberate bias in energy prices and federal energy policies against energy-consuming areas of the nation and in favor of nonrenewable resources.

In a report entitled "Balance or Bias? Building an Equitable Energy Budget," the coalition outlines a variety of alternatives to remove discrimination in federal policy against energy-reliant cities and states and promote energy efficiency and the use of renewable resources.

The study, conducted by the House and Senate Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, notes that the the bias is "illustrated by the current natural gas situation and the upcoming awards of the Synthetic Fuels Corp."

The Synfuels Corp. is shortly expected to provide $2 billion to $4 billion in loans and loan guarantees to coal liquefaction projects in Kentucky and Wyoming. Of the additional 11 awards slated to be given, the coalition claims, none will be from its region.

Natural gas prices are expected to skyrocket this winter as the result of the so-called "take or pay" contracts signed by pipeline companies several years ago requiring them to purchase expensive decontrolled gas.

SMALL BUSINESS

Got a small business-connected problem? If you're anywhere in the U.S. mainland just pick up the telephone and dial the "Small Business Administration Answer Desk" at 800 - 368-5855.

Experts from SBA's Office of Advocacy will be staffing the desk telephones from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. (EDT) Monday through Friday and will be prepared to handle questions from small business persons needing help or guidance with problems connected with their firm and government.

The agency has also organized a nine-member advisory board to counsel 22 Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs) now functioning at universities and colleges across the nation. The SBDCs were established in 1977 to provide counsel, training and technical assistance to prospective and established small business persons through the facilities and expertise of educational institutions.

OUT OF BUSINESS

Are you aware that the federal government has been running up an annual $173 million printing tab publishing 12,000 books or pamphlets a year? A few of these pamphlets dealt in such esoteric subjects as "How to Buy a Christmas Tree," "Have a Sprinkling Clean Kitchen Sink," "Make Dishwashing Easy" and "Hot Springs Bathing Instructions." More than 2,000 of these publications have caught the eye of the cost-conscious Reagan administration which intends to stop their printing thus saving the taxpayer $20 million a year.

The administration contends that many of the publications are duplicative of pamphlets and brochures that are readily available at little or no cost from product firms or private publishers. The Department of Health and Human Services was the largest single distributor accounting for over 350 million copies or over 40 percent of the federal total.

ADEQUATE GAS SUPPLIES

A survey of the nation's major interstate natural gas pipeline companies and their wholesale customers by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) staff indicates that there will be no significant impact on natural gas customers even if this winter is colder than normal. The companies anticipate natural gas supplies of 6.7 billion cubic feet available for the winter heating season, an increase of 616 billion or 10 percent over actual deliveries last year.

AROUND AND ABOUT

The number of county government employees declined by 45,000 or 2.4 percent in 1981, the first decrease since 1946, according to the Census Bureau. Increases in county government employment have been steady since 1946 when the total was 417,000. It peaked in 1980 at 1.9 million, dropping last year to 1.8 million...DOE is considering new nuclear plant regulatory and licensing reforms that would shorten by as much as five years the licensing and construction process...The General Services Administration plans to offer for sale six million pounds of tungsten under its disposal program in 1983, six million pounds less than was offered in fiscal 1982.

Water business surges

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Great Waters of France, American distributor of the chic French spring-water Perrier, has acquired its Northern California competitor, Calistoga Mineral Water Co.

Great Waters' President Ron Davis, confirming the months-old transaction Tuesday from his Greenwich, Conn. office, said Calistoga outsells Perrier in its limited northern California territory, but he anticipates a Calistoga expansion into southern California and up the Pacific Coast, perhaps as far as Vancouver.

He refused to disclose terms of the sale of the company which has about 25 employees.

Great Waters also owns Poland Spring, produced in Poland, Maine, and Oasis, a Texas mineral water firm.

As for Calistoga, Davis said the first priority was improving efficiency of the operation to achieve more capacity.

Robert Pusey, spokesman for Calistoga, also declined to disclose terms of the purchase of a plant that won a state gold medal for quality 58 years ago.

Oshman's Inc. bringing back snobbish sporting goods store

By HARRY BERKOWITZ
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

STAMFORD, Conn. — Can a failed sporting goods chain for the very wealthy shake off part of its snobbish image and succeed in a new life?

Abercrombie & Fitch, whose 90-year-old name is synonymous with extravagant and exclusive merchandise, is trying to do just that.

Although the original chain went bankrupt in 1976, Houston-based Oshman's Inc. bought the name in a deal worth between $1.8 million and $3 million and has opened eight new stores since 1979, with more branches and expanded catalogue sales planned.

"They focused on too small a segment of the elitist population," Jerry Nanna, president of the new chain, said in referring to the original stores. "They were too exclusive. The audience we're catering to is the upper 25 percent and not the uppper 5 percent."

Not that you would confuse the new Abercrombie store in the Stamford Town Center mall here with a Woolworth's. The plush forest green carpeting, suede wallpaper, oak paneling, brass cornices and marble countertops reflect the $300,000 that went into furnishing the store.

The items for sale include a $4,000 electronic exercise bicycle with a built-in television set, an $1,800 massage table, handmade pith helmets, a $1,200 picnic basket and a $600 stuffed bear. Also, there are ducks everywhere you look — stuffed ducks, target-shooting ducks and ducks on scarves, plates, sculptures and paintings.

Nanna said the chain may start breaking even this year and will post a profit by next year. In addition to the stores in Beverly Hills and Costa Mesa, Calif.; Dallas; Houston; Washington, D.C.; Las Vegas, Nev., and Short Hills, N.J., Abercrombie is about to open stores in Los Angeles, Willow Grove, Pa., and Atlanta, Ga.

The stores are a mix of full-line giants with up to 25,000 square feet that are very expensive to run and "Best of Abercrombie & Fitch" stores with limited inventories such as the one in Stamford, at about 6,000 to 10,000 square feet.

Before long, Nanna expects to open in cities such as Chicago, San Francisco and New York, where the original chain grew famous with a store at Madison Avenue and 45th Street. Within a few years, Nanna said, he expects to license the name overseas.

Even more promising than the stores, he said, is the mail-order business. Abercrombie has just sent out more than 1 million catalogues, which have been drawing orders that average an impressive $85 to $100.

The chain already accounts for nearly 10 percent of the more than $200 million in revenues posted at Oshman's, which operates 150 sporting goods stores in the Sunbelt similar to the Herman's chain in the Northeast and Sunset Sports in the Northwest, including 18 L&G sporting goods stores acquired last month in California.

Nanna expects Abercrombie to outdo the parent company in growth rate. The old chain peaked at a little over $25 million in annual revenue with fewer than a dozen stores, Nanna said.

"They had a lot of appeal," he said of the old stores, "but it was self-limiting. Our attitude is less stilting; it's not a closed men's club, but rather a warm environment. It's a unique place, but it's not that rarefied in its look and demure. The old Abercrombie was prettty starched and intimidating."

The new store's clientele tend to be very upscale, said Chris Harris, the assistant manager.

One Greenwich, Conn., woman, who needed clothing for a weekend pheasant shoot in the south of France, walked away with a $1,200 safari outfit, Harris said. One of the first customers when the store opened grabbed up five leather footstools shaped as a rhinoceros annd other animals, for $225 to $350.

The steel-and-aluminum portable rowing machines can hardly be kept in stock at about $325 apiece, Harris said.

The mix of products, although sometimes expensive, is very carefully planned not to exclude too large an audience.

But when the new chain started out, it was too close in style to the old one, Nanna recalled.

"We've made some mistakes on the kind of product and the pricing structure," he said, citing backgammon sets that ranged from $500 to $700 and did not sell.

"Now we have a much better balanced approach," he said, adding that a backgammon fancier can now carry off the game for under $300.

Abercrombie also failed in an attempt to sell women's swimsuits. "We did not belong in women's swimwear," Nanna said.

As part of the new image, Abercrombie tried "The World's Greatest Sporting Goods Store" as its slogan, but switched to "The Adventure Goes On" so as not to imply that it carries everything. The original chain's slogan was "If We Don't Have It, We'll Get It."

"We don't need every tent stake ever made to be in the camping business," Nanna said.

Many of the items, including golf balls, are made exclusively for Abercrombie. But for such products as footballs and basketballs the stores rely on brand names.

"We tried to make our own skis, but the customer wants a brand name," Nanna said.

He said the stores are doing especially well with exercise products, including equipment costing $100 to $1,250 that lets the user hang upside down. "Exercise is a business of the '80s," Nanna said.

However, the chain does not want to move so far into the 1980s that it forgets the 1890s, when David T. Abercrombie, a prospector and inventor, and Ezra Fitch, a lawyer, founded the original chain.

Abercrombie & Fitch likes to point out that the original chain's clients included Admiral Byrd, Ernest Hemingway and Amelia Earhart. But Nanna declined to disclose the names of the celebrities he says frequent some of the new stores.

"We've only enhanced and taken Abercrombie to a new plateau that's viable," he said. "Hopefully, we still appeal to Katharine Hepburn."

Hydra Jar

The only drilling jar you'll ever need.

The H-E Hydra-Jar double-action hydraulic drilling jar gives you three separate impacts downhole, so you'll never need to use another jar.

Up only, down only, and both up and down. Any of these actions can be achieved with Hydra-Jar for freeing stuck drill pipe during drilling operations. If the bit is stuck on bottom, Hydra-Jar is used to jar up. Or, if the drill string becomes stuck off bottom, you can use up and down, or down only. And all actions are surface controlled.

Hydra-Jar's automatic load adjustment is fully controlled by the drawworks operator. You get automatic temperature and pressure compensation, and an extra-large, streamlined bore to handle high pump volume, and give easier wireline operation. Rugged construction provides sealed hydraulic action for long-term working capacity.

There's no torquing involved in impact because Hydra-Jar's dual jarring action is fully initiated by tension or weight, making Hydra-Jar ideal for both vertical and highly deviated holes.

Hydra-Jar. Send it downhole and it will be all you need.

Many candidates turning down Reagan's help

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, encountering a diminished demand for his political help, is scaling back his campaign travel schedule in the two weeks before Election Day.

But he is completing a busy round of taping television commercials for individual candidates and is likely to have appeared in more than 100 of them by the end of the congressional campaign, one Republican strategist said.

In California, the president's home state, Republican Senate candidate Pete Wilson is trying to focus attention on Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., his Democratic opponent. A Reagan appearance on Wilson's behalf could help Brown make Reagan and the president's economic policies an even greater campaign issue than they already are.

In Virginia, Republicans have sent out strong signals that Rep. Paul S. Trible Jr., the Republican Senate candidate, does not want Reagan's help against Lt. Gov. Richard Davis, the Democratic candidate.

And in Ohio, Republican candidates for statewide posts tried to avoid the president's campaign visit there Oct. 4, appearing with him only after the party leaders — rolling out a plea for party unity — put pressure on them to attend a GOP fund-raising event with Reagan.

Dana G. Rinehart, the Republican candidate for state treasurer, told reporters before Reagan arrived that he thought the president's visit would only highlight Ohio's economic problems. Unemployment there was 12.5 percent in September, and Reagan avoided Cleveland and other areas hit particularly hard by the recession.

Republicans say several states with severely high unemployment have been ruled out for Reagan visits. Instead, the president is focusing on conservative, Western and Midwestern states where his popularity has been greatest.

The plan originally mapped out by White House campaign strategists had Reagan on the road four days this week and four days next week.

As the schedule now stands, he is spending two days out of town this week, in Illinois Wednesday and Nebraska today, and he will visit Raleigh, N.C., next Tuesday.

A western swing, still under consideration, may be put together for the end of next week. But one strategist said Reagan's schedule is assessed on a daily basis as new polling data is assembled from political contests around the nation.

The Democrats' criticism of the president's economic program "is becoming a bit of a drumbeat," conceded one White House official.

Speaking on the condition that his name not be used, the official said the Republican campaign strategists were forced to take this into consideration, and had to decide before making travel plans whether Reagan could actually help individual Republican candidates.

"The president does what he can, but when you're in the White House you're going to lose seats (in the congressional election,)" he said. "It is a referendum on the White House."

This official acknowledged that the president was not wanted to campaign for Wilson, the mayor of San Diego, in the Senate race in California. He said it was his judgment that Reagan also was not wanted in Virginia.

Reagan's popularity in California, which he carried in the 1980 presidential campaign, did not extend to other races. Democrats won a majority in the state legislative races and congressional contests that year.

"It's a real mixed bag," said Jack Mayesh, Brown's campaign manager. "He continues to be a popular figure in certain circles in California. But he's clearly an issue in the campaign."

With Brown trying to drive home his anti-Reagan theme, "It does help make the point and focus attention if he's here," Mayesh said. Indeed, when the president spent three days in his home state 10 days ago, he paused only briefly to greet Wilson in San Diego and played no other role in the hotly contested campaign.

Aides say Reagan is likely to visit Montana, Nevada and New Mexico late next week, but stress that no plans have been made final. In his effort to unseat Democratic senators, Reagan already has stopped in Montana and Nevada, states that rarely draw presidential visits.

Communities take extra precaution for trick-or-treaters this Halloween

By The Associated Press

The Tylenol murders prompted one community to ban trick-or-treating this Halloween out of fear of "copycat" poisonings and police in many cities are taking extra precautions, but most say you can't outlaw a tradition.

"I would not allow my children to take candy this particular Halloween," Chicago Mayor Jane Byrne said.Other authorities concurred, and in many places, police planned stepped-up patrols or increased inspection of Halloween plunder.

Halloween sometimes is dangerous. A Louisiana man last year shot and killed a 13-year-old youth who showed up at his door wearing an Army costume and carrying a toy submachine gun. Police in Muncie, Ind., found some lick-on stickers picturing Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck that had been laced with LSD.

But the deaths of seven people in the Chicago area 2½ weeks ago after they took Extra-Strength Tylenol spiked with cyanide prompted warnings that this year could be worse.

"Bad things come out at Halloween," said Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner, who heads the task force investigating the poisonings. "This year has particular problems."

Since the cyanide deaths, products such as mouthwash and eyedrops have been found laced with acid or poison in isolated cases in several states, including California, Florida, Ohio and Colorado.

Fahner said many "very concerned" people have called the Tylenol hotline, worried about copycat poisoners. He is writing to PTA groups and churches in the state suggesting they organize Halloween parties in churches or neighborhoods to "control what's given to kids."

Mrs. Byrne said more than 1 million fliers will go to schools, libraries and churches, urging parents to accompany children on Halloween night and to examine carefully everything children eat.

A California mother of two boys, ages 7 and 14, said, "All you can do is keep cautioning and cautioning."

"It's a cardinal sin for my kids to eat anything before I inspect it," added Diane Peets, president of the Meadows School PTA in Valencia, a Los Angeles suburb.

"We don't want to cancel trick-or-treating because of the flakes out there," said Pittsburgh Police Sgt. Herman Mitchell, supervisor of community relations, "but we're going to be extra careful this Halloween."

Pittsburgh police are expanding a Halloween candy check program that has been in effect for three years. Youngsters are urged to take suspicious candy to their neighborhood precinct station where police and health department officials can inspect it.

"We're beefing up the program this year," Mitchell said. "All our precincts will be open."

In Cheyenne, Wyo., Memorial Hospital of Laramie County has announced free X-ray service for bags of candy children collect. A spokesman said it would detect solid hazards such as pins or razor blades, but not drugs.

Officials in Lexington, Ky., have asked that trick-or-treating be restricted to two hours early in the evening of Saturday, Oct. 30. Police also have advised children to check the wrappers of commercial treats for signs of tampering.

Likewise, Mayor Mike DiNunzio of Lansdale, Pa., a short distance from the headquarters of the manufacturer of Tylenol, said, "We just instituted a program of local mayors to concentrate all trick-or-treater activities on Saturday evening. This way we can have our police forces aware of everything that's going on.

"We didn't have Tylenol in mind when we did it...But I can see where what we've done would be important."

As for banning trick-or-treating, he said, "You can't do that. It's such a custom around here."

In Dudley, Mass., however, village officials citing the Tylenol poisonings voted night to outlaw trick-or-treating.

"There's kind of a sick situation right now," said Bernard J. Wielock, the village chairman. "It is the atmosphere around the world. It is sad."

Trick-or-treating also has been banned in Shreve, Ohio, but for a different reason. Mayor Bruce A. Briggs ordered the ban in the northeastern Ohio town of 1,600 people because of the recent attempts to abduct two young girls in the area and the unsolved abduction-slaying of a child in nearby Marshallville last July.

But Los Angeles police Lt. Dan Cooke said, "I don't know how you cancel trick-or-treating. People are going to do it anyway."

Endangered brown pelicans being mutilated

AP Laserphoto

Dr. Heather Miller, a psychopathologist, says, "A Dr.-Jekyll-and-Mr.-Hyde personality is chopping beaks off pelicans." At least 10 of the mutilated birds have been seen off the California coast. Two of them have been rescued and have to be hand-fed; the others will probably starve to death. If whoever is doing this is caught, he or she could be fined up to $10,000. The brown pelican is an endangered species.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Three California brown pelicans found with the upper halves of their beaks torn off by a vandal may undergo surgery to have plastic bills attached to keep them from starving to death.

The state Fish and Game Department says as many as 15 of the endangered birds have been sighted with their upper bills missing, and a pelican expert says whoever harmed them "knew what he's doing."

The pelicans, which were mutilated with an instrument like a hacksaw or pliers, would starve in the wild because (they) cannot keep fish in their pouches without their upper bills, said Dr. Joe Jehl, assistant director of the Hubbs-Sea World Research Institute.

Jehl explained that pelicans "catch food by diving, normally. They have a big, expandable pouch to keep the fish in. When they have the fish in the pouch, they put their head straight down to let the water flow out. If they don't have an upper bill, they can't keep the fish in."

Four of the maimed pelicans have been rounded up from along the coasts of Los Angeles, Orange and San Diego Counties, Fish and Game patrol Capt. Curtis Kastner said.

One escaped, and now three of the birds are being hand-fed fresh fish at a dog run at Crown Valley Animal Center in Laguna Niguel, office manager Dayna Brooks said.

She said doctors plan to attempt beak surgery Sunday to attach prosthetic upper halves to the pelicans' bills.

Similar surgery was performed earlier this year at the Grand Avenue Pet Hospital in Santa Ana on a pet goose, whose beak had been torn away. That goose, Beep, later was killed by a coyote.

Jehl said the mutilation of pelicans is "a regular event around the California coast," but he's never seen the beaks hacked off before. "Cutting the pouch...(is) much easier to treat," he said. "You can always sew the pouch up. I guess somebody knows what he's doing."

Miss Brooks said pelicans are "used to being aroung people," and Kastner said that may be one reason for their predicament.

"The pelicans are having a hard time getting a food supply this year due to the northern anchovy being overfished by Mexico," Kastner said. "So the birds are showing up inland and getting in the fishermen's way and their nets and their lines and so forth."

The first reports of the mutilations were received last week, Kastner said, and some fishermen and members of the public had been hand-feeding them.

The birds can survive in captivity if they are fed fresh fish. But Jehl said the injured pelicans were being rounded up becase they may be hurt by toxins in the dead fish that people have been feeding them.

Kastner had said the birds would be transferred to Sea World eventually.

California brown pelicans were placed on the endangered species list in the early 1970s when they began laying thin-shelled eggs because of the effects of the pesticide DDT.

There is a difference of opinion now as to whether they are still endangered.

Kastner said there are only about 2,000 pairs of pelicans in California and they are not reproducing fast enough to maintain their population.

Jehl said there are 90,000 birds from the Gulf of Mexico breeding grounds, to the islands and coastlands of Southern California.

As long as the pelicans remain on the endangered list, harming one is punishable by up to a year in jail and a fine of up to $10,000 under federal law, and up to $1,000 under state law, Kastner said.

For $30,000 you can sponsor parade float

DETROIT (AP) — Sponsors of a 56-year-old Thanksgiving Day Parade in recession-ravaged Detroit are looking for creative ways to foot the bill for an annual event that could cost as much as $600,000.

For $100, parade officials are offering a pair of bleacher seats in the "Friends of Santa" reviewing area, while for $500, a donor gets six bleacher seats, costumes for four friends to march in the parade, and an invitation to a "Meet the Stars" reception.

For $30,000, a donor can sponsor an "Alice in Wonderland" float, while "Pinocchio" can be brought out of storage for $20,000.

It is the first time in the parade's history that bleacher seats have been sold. Last year they were reserved for guests of corporate sponsors.

In past years, the J.L. Hudson Co. department store picked up the tab for the parade. But the store asked for help in 1981.

Ed Fleischmann, treasurer of the Renaissance Foundation, estimated it will cost about $585,000 to hold the event this year. All but $130,000 has been raised so far, he said.

Some businesses complain the Chamber of Commerce and the Detroit Renaissance Foundation, which produces the parade, are using strong-arm tactics to raise money.

A solicitation letter sent to prospective donors explains: "We want to give more individuals and companies an opportunity to participate in the 1982 Thanksgiving Parade."

Frances Shuffield, the Midland County tax assessor-collector, packs up in readying to move her office from the basement of the Midland County Courthouse to the Tax-Elections Building off the 800 block of West Front Avenue southwest of the courthouse. Ms. Shuffield is looking forward to the move because the new location will afford her office more space in which to work. Also, she says, there will be "plenty of parking for the taxpayers."

Plenty of bidders available for vacated tax office space

Relocation of the Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector's Office has left a temporary void in the courthouse.

But there are those who look upon the eastside courthouse basement with longing and who will be petitioning the Midland County Commissioners' Court for slipping into the space formerly occupied by the tax office.

First, Commissioner Durward Wright said on Wednesday, the court will "see who's got the most pressing and urgent need and act accordingly.

"We're just going to look the situation over and see who's got the greatest hurt."

Just who or which other county courthouse offices or courts, which are cramped for space, will win in their bids to take over the eastside basement will be dealt with later by the commissioners.

But architect Walter Pate has proposed to use the space as a "transition office" in the planning renovation of the courthouse, said County Judge Bill Ahders.

However, certain elected officials want use of the area, which adjoins the sheriff's, peace justices' and constable's offices.

"The sheriff asked me (for use of the space)," County Judge Bill Ahders said. "The constable asked me. The district attorney asked me. I don't think there's anybody who hasn't asked me."

County Attorney J. Scott Henderson, who offices on the second floor of the five-story courthouse, suggested a reshuffling scheme: Move the auditor's and the treasurer's offices from the second floor to the basement, move offices of Judge Ahders and County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose down the hallway to the treasurer's and auditor's offices and near the County Courtroom, and then Henderson will take over the judges' chambers. Henderson said he could use the space for his hot-check office, which is housed in the two-story brick annex a block north of the courthouse.

DuBose offered a suggestion:

"I think," he said, "they ought to expand the law library," which has been lodged in a cubbyhole in the courthouse basement. "We've got lots of books that aren't down there and I don't know where they are."

In late September, Elections Administrator Janeice Builta moved her office from the courthouse basement to the county's latest annex, which borders the 800 block of West Front Avenue at its junction with Pecos, B and Washington streets. Ms. Builta's office occupies about one-fourth of the annex's space.

The Midland County Tax Office today and Friday is relocating from the downtown courthouse to a 10,000-square-foot metal annex in the 800 block of West Front Avenue at its junction with Pecos, B and Washington streets in south central Midland.

Today and Friday, Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield is taking her records, files, knickknacks and 24 deputy clerks to the remaining three-fourths of the metal building. Her office, which is closed today and Friday, will reopen Monday.

"We cannot move and function at the same time," Ms. Shuffield said. "We'll do the best we can at 8 o'clock Monday. It's not the best time of the year to move the tax office, but we'll make it some way."

The office has just mailed out an estimated 65,000 tax statements and already is getting the payments mailed in by those who wish to capitalize on the 3 percent discount allowed those who pay in October, 2 percent in November and 1 percent in December. Thereafter, taxes due the Greenwood Independent School District become delinquent Feb. 1 and start accruing penalty and interest. Unpaid Midland County taxes start taking on penalty and interest then but don't become subject to tax suits until July 1.

The county tax office annually collects between $15 and $17 million in taxes for the state, county and Greenwood.

In the 1930-vintage courthouse, the tax office had been assigned about 6,000 square feet in the eastside basement. But it wasn't all usable space.

"There's so many pillars and posts" which restrict movement and space usage, she noted. By contrast, the low-slung metal annex has "all open, usable space."

The tax office was moved twice in the early 1970s. In 1972, the office was relocated from the first floor of the courthouse to the old Kress Building on Main Street during the 2½-year courthouse renovation under a $1.95 million bond issue. In 1974, the office was housed in the courthouse basement.

Ms. Shuffield, who was elected tax assessor-collector in 1980 and had been chief deputy since 1967, said she is looking forward to the new location.

"I think the new building is going to be nice. We'll have plenty of parking for the taxpayers."

Even so, she said that she is apprehensive about not being near the sheriff's and constable's offices.

"I still have uneasy qualms about moving from the protective wing of law enforcement."

Midland preparedness plan subject of new LWV's study

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

When League of Women Voters of Midland members met in June to choose their 1982-83 study item, they learned that despite being a generally well-informed group, they knew little or nothing about the city's plans for coping with a disaster — natural or nuclear.

Betty Sheeler, past LWV president, said the group's collective quandary soon led them to ask: "If we're not aware what the civil defense emergency plan is for Midland, how many people are?"

Members quickly decided that a study of Midland's disaster preparedness was in order, and selected a resource committee to scrutinize the topic. By January, according to committee chairwoman Nancy Cassin, the group hopes to inform the public of its findings and either stamp its seal of approval on Midland's disaster preparation or suggest improvements.

She said committee members are conducting research and interviewing disaster planning officials on the state, county and local level. They are also examining components of the Federal Emergency Management Assistance plan.

Ms. Sheeler said the group is concerned with Midland's ability to handle all types of disasters, including tornadoes, floods, chemical spills and nuclear explosions.

The committee is studying Midland's disaster preparedness plans as well as plans for several other cities in Texas. League members also will hear speeches from disaster preparedness officials in the months ahead.

Mrs. Cassin said the committee meets weekly to discuss its findings and will publish pertinent information in the LWV member newsletter, the Voter.

In January, any goals for improving Midland's disaster preparedness plans will become part of the LWV's official program of positions. If any changes are suggested, Mrs. Cassin said LWV members will offer volunteer assistance, lobby government bodies and pursue whatever action is deemed necessary to achieve the desired objectives.

Ms. Sheeler, a committee member, said the LWV did not initiate the study because it perceived Midland's disaster planning to be inadequate. Instead, she said the study is an educational exercise, "for Midland to be exactly aware of what the plan is."

She said the study has already revealed some indications that Midlanders may be lacking essential knowledge about emergency preparedness. As one example, Ms. Sheeler said the switchboard operator at a local oil company was unaware that the company also employed Midland's civil defense coordinator.

According to Mrs. Cassin, the group has yet to encounter animosity from disaster preparedness officials, who conceivably could view the study as either an invasion of their turf or a subject beyond the scope of a LWV group.

"I think every now and then we have tackled an issue that seems to be out of the purview of a women's organization," said Ms. Sheeler. "But I don't see anyone having that reaction about the league study on civil defense preparedness.

"Without striking nerves, I think we're in an area that we can provide real big citizen education," she said.

Ms. Sheeler said that in recent years the 20-year-old LWV has gone beyond traditional service projects to tackle some vital, public-education projects. The LWV has studied housing, secondary school curricula and other topics in recent years.

"You're not really going to generate any attention if all you do is innocuous, little Girl Scout items," she said.

Other disaster preparedness committee members include Bruni Torres, Nancy Stafford, Midge Erskine and Mrs. Fred Wetendorf, who is also LWV public relations chairwoman.

The Environmental Protection Agency announced this week that restrictions will soon be placed on the use of toxaphene, which became the leading agricultural insecticide used in this country after DDT was banned in 1972. The substance does not break down easily and is accumulating dangerously in fish. It's also known to cause cancer in laboratory animals. Although widely employed in the south to control cotton, soybean and peanut crop pests, the Texas Department of Agriculture does not keep records on the amount of toxaphene — or other chemicals — used in the state.

Lessened toxaphene use part of improved safety

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"It's a step in the right direction," said Rhea Copening, regional representative for the National Audubon Society's Austin office, in commenting on this week's announcement by the Environmental Protection Agency that use of the pesticide toxaphene will soon come under a restricted-use ban.

But noting the toxicity of chemicals in general and the ability of insects to quickly develop immunity to them — factors which turn contemporary pest control methods into a revolving door of futility and escalating health risks — she and others concerned about environmental deterioration would like to see the U.S. develop a safer and more effective means of protecting crops and, ultimately, life itself.

"Ideally," said Ms. Copening, "the integrated pest-management system offers a host of remedies."

Such a program employs "problem-specific" biological controls like disrupting the reproductive cycle of pests — which is already being done with the screwworm — the introduction of natural insect predators into a given agricultural area, coordinating the planting of crops with the "off-season" of pest problems and the use of inorganic pesticides only in times of major infestations.

"A lot of people think we're against pesticides," said Dee Simpson, a spokesman for the Texas Research and Education Project, which is headquartered in Austin. "But we're not. We just want them used responsibly.

"Our goals are educating people on the responsible use of pesticides, making accurate health and safety information available to the public and (achieving) an integrated pest-management program for food and fiber crops."

Texas spreads an estimated 200,000 tons of pesticides on its fields annually, ranking it second nationwide behind California, according to Simpson. But unlike California, Texas has no computerized data bank with which to readily determine the chemicals being applied in a given locale and what health and environmental risks may lie hidden in the soil and carried by the wind.

Toxaphene, for example, came into wide use after DDT was banned in 1972. At one time it accounted for 20 percent of all agricultural insecticides sold in this country. It is largely used to control cotton, soybean and pea-

Mattox maintains he's leading Meier

By The Associated Press

U.S. Rep. Jim Mattox, the Democratic nominee for Texas attorney general, says he has a comfortable lead over Republican Bill Meier — despite a prediction by Gov. Bill Clements that Meier will win.

Speaking Wednesday at the Abilene Municipal Airport, Mattox said his polls show him leading Meier, a state senator from Euless, by 22 percentage points.

Mattox said Clements is "just posturing politically to get his name on the wire, so to speak."

Meanwhile, Meier and the Texas Consumer Association were at odds Wednesday.

Rebecca Lightsey, director of the privately-financed lobbying organization, said for the first time it would oppose a statewide candidate — Meier.

"Bill Meier says he will 'protect the Texas way.' We believe he is actually out to destroy the Texas way," she told a Capitol news conference. "Bill Meier will protect the loan sharks, the phony land developers, the utility company gougers and the demon car dealers."

Meier also held an Austin news conference to propose a "Victims' Bill of Rights." He said he would support a number of measures that have been suggested by the People Against Violent Crimes, a new organization formed to assist victims and families of victims of violent crimes.

Campaign workers for Republican Fred Thornberry claimed Wednesday there is "massive illegality" in the way Democrat Jim Hightower has reported contributions and expenses in the agriculture commissioner's race.

"We did it just the way the secretary of state told us to," replied Kristin Ozmum, campaign manager for Hightower.

Both sides agreed that Hightower had no campaign treasurer from the May 1 primary until Aug. 3 when Millie Bruner of Dallas took over the job.

Thornberry, in a formal complaint filed with Secretary of State David Dean, said there also was a three-month gap in Hightower's reporting of campaign spending and expenses.

"It is true we did not have a treasurer during that period," said Ms. Ozmum. "Larry Letscher quit unexpectedly after the first primary and it took us three months to line up a new treasurer...we handled the reporting during that period just as the secretary of state's office advised."

She said the contributions and expenses of the Washington fund-raising tamale party were not reported in the Austin headquarters until last week. "They will appear in the next report we make on Oct. 24," she said.

Royal Massett, legal counsel for Thornberry, said if Hightower cannot adequately account for the three-month gap, then Thornberry will file civil and criminal complaints with the Travis County district attorney on Friday.

In Sherman, Attorney General Mark White, Democratic nominee for governor, told an airport crowd that Republican Gov. Bill Clements' "good buddy" relations with President Ronald Reagan was not helping Texas.

Jurors to resume deliberations today in trial of accused student stabber

FORT WORTH (AP) — Jurors planned to resume deliberations today in the murder trial of Wesley Wayne Miller, accused of stabbing a former high school cheerleader 38 times after she spurned his advances.

The panel deliberated two hours Wednesday before retiring and was to resume deliberations this morning.

If convicted, Miller, 20, faces a maximum life sentence.

Miller is accused in the Jan. 21 stabbing death of Retha Stratton, 18, a former Castleberry High School cheerleader and classmate.

Prosecutor Steve Chaney said in closing arguments Wednesday that Miller murdered Miss Stratton during a rape attempt.

"Her only sin in life is that she knew him and she let him in," he told jurors.

Police look into thefts, burglaries

Midland police were investigating a number of thefts and burglaries early Thursday morning.

Included among the reports was one for the theft of a wallet containing $220 cash and one for the theft of a chain saw and lawn mower valued in excess of $600.

Juanita Johnson of 1207 E. Belmont told police the wallet was taken from the front seat of her vehicle, which was parked at 911 S. Big Spring at 3:40 p.m. Wednesday.

In the other report, Betty Ireland of 2002 Country Club told police the lawn mower, valued at $500, and the chain saw, valued at $150, were taken from her garage between 5 p.m. Tuesday and 8 a.m. Wednesday.

nut pests.

Its use fell, however, from a high of 100 million pounds annually nationwide to recent lows of 16 million pounds as insects became immune to it, according to the EPA.

The agency has been studying toxaphene's effects for several years, concluding that it is carried hundreds of miles by air currents and dropped into bodies of water, where it accumulates in toxic amounts in fish. The levels in Great Lakes fish are twice the federal standard allowed for foodstuffs.

The curtailed use of toxaphene will be enforced by the Texas Department of Agriculture, with financial help from the federal government, and will go into effect within the next 40 days. Spot checks and record-keeping requirements at the wholesale and retail level will be the primary means of enforcement, according to a TDA spokesman.

Various health, labor, farm and environmental organizations would like to see Texas adopt a computerized data control system similar to California's, said Simpson, adding that existing federal guidelines could be employed to protect trade secrets — the major reason manufacturers cite for being reluctant to divulge information about their products.

Among other benefits, such a program would allow the cancer rate in a particular area, for instance, to be correlated to the amount and type of pesticides and herbicides used in that area.

The Lower Rio Grande Valley accounts for about one-third of the annual pesticide consumption in Texas, according to Simpson. The state does not, however, protect the 300,000 or so farm workers there by adopting federal guidelines that fields be posted as to the nature of the chemicals used and how long it will take for their toxic effects to wear off, making the fields safe for reentry.

"Federal law allows, but doesn't require, posting," said Simpson. "Without a posting requirement on labor-intensive crops, there's no way to ensure worker safety. There just aren't enough TDA inspectors to go around."

Citing Love Canal and the growing number of doctors who now specialize in medical problems associated with the widespread use of chemicals in this country, Simpson said:

"There's justifiable cause for people to be concerned about (environmental issues), especially in Texas, where the groundwork for a reasonable assurance of health and safety is not available."

What's needed in Texas, according to Simpson, is a chemical "right-to-know law" that would allow people access to detailed information on the health and environmental factors of toxic substances such as toxaphene.

A particular problem, he said, is pesticide contamination coming from Mexico — which has no environmental protection laws to speak of — and the practice of American manufacturers of selling their banned products in Third World nations.

Farm loans in some foreign countries, Simpson noted, are tied to stipulations requiring that certain pesticides be used in specific amounts on given crops, thus protecting the bank's investment and benefitting the pesticide industry to the detriment of public health worldwide.

Fallout said to stay in atmosphere a month

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Fallout from Nevada atomic tests often stayed in the atmosphere a month after a blast, drifting east with the prevailing winds, a witness testified as the defense opened its case in a lawsuit on whether that fallout caused cancer.

John A. Auxier took the stand Wednesday after U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins declined a government request to dismiss the suit. Jenkins, who is hearing the case without a jury, said the magnitude and implications of the lawsuit demanded he hear all the evidence.

"I think there are enough terribly serious questions raised in this lawsuit — not just legal issues, but social issues," he said.

"In order to do any sort of adequate job, I have to know not just a portion of the story, but the whole story," said Jenkins.

Auxier, director of the health safety and physics division at Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee, began the government's case with what he called "the basic high school presentation of the atom" and an explanation of nuclear physics.

DEATHS

Leland L. Taylor

Services for Leland L. Taylor, 57, of 6502 Wewoka, will be at 11 a.m. Friday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, minister of West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

He died Tuesday night in a Midland hospital.

Taylor was born Oct. 9, 1925, in Amarillo, and spent his early life there. In his teens, he moved to Indiana and Illinois and began his career in the oil fields. Taylor entered the U.S. Army and served in the South Pacific. After his discharge, he returned to Evansville, Ind., and continued to work in the oil fields.

He married Jackie Grayson in 1948. They moved in 1956 to Midland where he worked for several oil companies. For the past five years, he had been a pumper with Adobe Oil Co. on the Mabee and Glass ranches.

Survivors include his wife; a brother, Carl Taylor of McCamey; and a number of nieces, nephews and great-nieces and great-nephews.

Beulah D. Doan

LAMESA — Services for Beulah Derington Doan, 90, of Lamesa will be at 2 p.m. Friday in Downtown Church of Christ in Lamesa with O.H. Tabor, a retired minister, and Bill Morrison, minister, officiating. Burial will be in Lamesa Memorial Park directed by Branon Funeral Home.

Mrs. Doan died Tuesday afternoon in a Lamesa hospital after a lengthy illness.

She came to Dawson County in 1949 from Hart and was a Church of Christ member for 68 years.

Survivors include five daughters, Effie Berry of Lubbock, Willie Wright of Garland, Helen Cole of Seagraves, Mary Lou Powell of Redding, Calif., and Velma Kee of Carlsbad, N.M.; five sons, Delbert and Jim Doan, both of Lamesa, Oscar Doan of Ventura, Calif., Jack Doan of Charleston, S.C., and J.P. Doan of Chico, Calif.; 31 grandchildren, 59 great-grandchildren and 20 great-great-grandchildren.

Ethel Crawford

CRANE — Services for Ethel Crawford, 59, of Crane will be at 2 p.m. Friday in Crane Christian Church. Burial will be in Crane County Cemetery directed by Richard W. Box Funeral Home.

Mrs. Crawford died Tuesday night in a Crane hospital.

She was a member of the Church of Christ and a housewife. She had been a Crane resident since 1938.

Jessie Brown Sr.

McCAMEY — Services for Jessie Brown Sr., 79, of McCamey, were to be at 10 a.m. today in the Hobbs Chapel Methodist Church in McCamey. Burial was to follow in Garden of Memory Cemetery under the direction of James Dennis Funeral Home.

He died Tuesday in a McCamey hospital.

He was a life-long resident of McCamey.

Survivors include three daughters, six sons, 18 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

John L. Dibrell

BIG SPRING — Services for John Lee Dibrell, 77, of Big Spring were to be at 2 p.m. today in First United Methodist Church. Burial was to be in Trinity Memorial Park directed by Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home.

Dibrell died Wednesday evening at his home.

He was a member of the First United Methodist Church and a retired sporting goods store owner. He had been a Big Spring resident for 40 years.

Marjorie Woods

Services for Marjorie Woods, 76, of 614 Waverly Drive were to be at 9 a.m. today at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel, with burial to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Woods died Monday night at a local hospital.

She was born May 18, 1906, in Kendrick, Okla., and attended Cotty College, later teaching school in Chandler. She married Charles B. Woods June 19, 1930, and the couple moved to Midland in 1938. She was employed here as a bookkeeper for the McClatchy Bros. Trucking Co. until her retirement. A son, Denton Woods, was killed during the Korean War. She was a member of Trinity Presbyterian Church.

Survivors include her husband; and a granddaughter, Annette Woods of California.

Pallbearers were to be Jimmy McClatchy, V.C. Melville, Dick Adams, Charles Medley, Wesley Van and Dave Cook.

Honorary pallbearers were to be W.L. Winkler, Earl Chapman, C.V. McClatchy, Johnnie Glann, Frank Key and Glen Hurd.

Subdivision, Head Start grant favored in PBRPC meeting

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A proposed 84.9-acre subdivsion on Cotton Flat Road was given favorable comment Wednesday by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission. Also, the PBRPC gave favorable comment for a continuation grant to a Head Start program.

Texas Group of New Mexico submitted applications to the Veterans Administration and the Department of Housing and Urban Development for approval of the Quail Glenn subdivision, 2½ miles south of Interstate 20.

The proposed subdivision will provide $40,000 to $58,000 manufactured homes, including a water well, septic system, paved streets, natural gas and underground telephone and electricity. Currently, prospective buyers may choose from five model homes.

The subdivision has been approved by the City of Midland. The development will involve 172 lots.

The PBRPC also gave favorable comment for continuation funding to West Texas Opportunities Inc., which has submitted an application to the Department of Health and Human Services for a $214,168 grant that will be matched with $53,472 in local funds for a total of $267,640.

Currently, the agency operates Head Start Centers in Stanton, McCamey and Lamesa. The goal of the program is to serve 120 4-year-old children in the coming year with 20 children enrolled in each of the Stanton and McCamey centers and 80 children in Lamesa. Of the 120 children, 90 percent will be from below poverty income level families, 75 percent of the children will be Mexican-American, 19 percent black and 7 percent white.

West Texas Opportunties Inc. wants its head start programs to accomplish such objectives as improving language skills, adjusting the children to society, increasing parental understanding of the values of education and treating minor medical and dental problems.

Amarillo policeman indicted for traffic shooting death

AMARILLO (AP) — A 20-year police veteran has been indicted on murder charges in connection with the death of a retired petroleum executive who was shot at point-blank range as he sat in his truck at a busy downtown intersection.

Lafayette Russell Wynne, 53, was indicted Wednesday by a Potter County grand jury.

Erle Winston Mathis was killed inside his pickup truck Friday afternoon when another motorist pumped five shots through his passenger-side window.

Mathis, 63, was vice president of Pioneer Production Corp., an oil and gas exploration subsidiary of Pioneer Corp.

His shooting death may have stemmed from a soured business deal, police say.

Wynne, a former detective captain, resigned from the force under pressure in 1971. He was arrested early Saturday at a Houston hotel, and was transported here Monday to be taken before Peace Justice L.B. Bartlett. He was released after posting a $50,000 cash bail.

The grand jury was convened a day earlier than originally scheduled because Wynne's attorneys requested an examining trial in an effort to obtain police information on the shooting death. Wynne's indictment alleviated the need for an examining trial under Texas law.

'Super Skate' for fun, worthy cause

Area roller skaters will soon have an opportunity to compete for prizes and money for a good cause.

Super Skate, sponsored by the Association for Retarded Citizens/Texas and the Midland ARC, will be held Saturday at Playland Skating Rink in Midland.

The Association for Retarded Citizens has been an active advocate for the rights of mentally retarded Texans for over 30 years. Presently the ARC is involved in residential services, day care, recreational programs, self advocacy and many other programs and services in Midland and across the state which benefit people of all ages who are mentally retarded.

Donations to young skaters will allow the young people a chance to win great prizes while supporting the ARC movement. More information can be obtained at the Playland Rink or the Midland ARC office.

B&PW celebrates National Business Women's Week

Uptown Chapter of Business and Professional Women's Club held several functions in recognition of National Business Women's Week, Oct. 17 — 23, to honor working women who comprise 50 percent of Midland's female population.

Uptown Club, in cooperation with the Midland Public Library, has sponsored a special rack of paper-back books labeled "Working Women's Books." This rack is located on the main floor of the library and was opened on Monday. An initial outlay of $100 was donated to the library for the purchase of approximately 25 — 30 paper-back books to be added to those already in the library collection. Uptown B&PW will provide a monthly amount to purchase additional books.

On Tuesday a coffee honoring Permian Basin Business & Professional Woman and Uptown's "Woman of the Year," Kathy Atkin, was held at the First National Bank from 4:30 p.m. — 6:30 p.m. Kathy is Assistant Vice-President of Women's Services of Texas American Bank. She is president-elect of the Uptown Club, and represented the Texas Federation in the Individual Development Program speak-off at the National Convention of Business & Professional Women's Club held in San Antonio this past summer.

The luncheon, co-sponsored by several Midland firms to honor two of their outstanding women employees, was held at the Petroleum Club on Wednesday.

Membership in the Uptown Club is open to all women in business and the professions. The objectives of the club are to elevate the standards for women in business and in the professions, to promote the interest of business and professional women, to bring about a spirit of cooperation among business and professional women, and to extend opportunities to business and professional women through education along lines of industrial, scientific and vocational activities. Anyone interested in joining should call Toni Strader at 683-6211.

Surgeon: Random testing of artificial blood costing lives

By RICHARD SALTUS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A nationwide test of artificial blood in critically ill Jehovah's Witnesses is creating ethical agony for some doctors, a Los Angeles surgeon declared at the International Symposium on Blood Substitutes conference in San Francisco last week.

At the conference, Dr. Ron Lapin said that some patients who could be saved are dying because they are randomly put into a comparison group that does not receive the artificial blood.

It is not so much the randomization — a standard research practice for which patients volunteer — to which Lapin objects. Rather, he said, transporting patients to far-flung research centers wastes precious time for those who are losing blood and are destined not to receive the blood substitute.

"It is a difficult position," he said, "to watch people being executed just to prove the efficacy" of the blood substitute.

A brand of artificial blood called Fluosol-DA has been tested since 1979 in the United States, and nearly all the patients — about 50 — have been Jehovah's Witnesses, whose religious beliefs forbid blood transfusions.

The patients are those who are losing blood because of problems such as bleeding ulcers that require surgery to stop the hemorrhage. Fluosol is given before and after the operation to make up for lost blood. The Jehovah's Witnesses have no religious objection to receiving Fluosol-DA, a milky substance related to Teflon which carries oxygen just as natural blood does.

Before Fluosol-DA can be licensed for general use, however, the federal Food and Drug Administration requires proof in a "controlled trial" that patients who receive the substance fare better than similar patients treated conventionally.

Standard treatment for Jehovah's Witnesses is surgery done quickly with special techniques to minimize blood loss. The patients also get infusions of salt water or starch solutions in an attempt to bolster their blood volume.

At last week's symposium, Lapin said that the dilemma is created by the small number — about 16 — of centers where the artificial blood is available.

At present, bleeding patients who volunteer for the study often have to travel several hundred miles to one of the research centers. Once a patient arrives at a treatment center, a card is drawn from a sealed envelope, determining whether he will be given Fluosol or standard therapy.

There is nothing unusual about such controlled trials, but Lapin's complaint is that valuable time is lost for those patients who aren't given Fluosol. They could have been treated with standard means by surgeons in their hometowns, with a better chance of success, he said.

"I had an 88-year-old woman with gastrointestinal bleeding who came a long way just last week," said Lapin, who operates at Bellflower Hospital in Los Angeles. "Her hemoglobin level (amount of oxygen-carrying substance in her blood) was dangerously low before she left, but it dropped by half by the time she got to me," he said. At the hospital, the lottery placed her in the control group and she did not receive Fluosol.

"If I had known ahead of time she was coming, I would have said, 'Take your chances with a surgeon in your hometown,'" said Lapin, who operates only on Jehovah's Witnesses. "Instead, we lost six or eight hours, and she died."

If patients could be assigned to one group or the other before making the journey, the dilemma would be less intense. But to be strictly comparable, patients must be treated by the same medical specialists, whether they get the Fluosol or standard therapy.

In many controlled trials, the scientists themselves do not know whether they are giving the patient the experimental treatment or the conventional one. But "blind" comparisons are not possible in this case because of the nature of the treatments.

"I wrestle with my conscience," said Lapin. "I know that Fluosol is saving lives. So when someone comes to me and goes into the control group, I know I'm having to withhold a drug that could be lifesaving."

Gene Smalley, a researcher at the New York headquarters of the Jehovah's Witnesses, said the church took no position on the trial. He added that the religious faith, which includes more than 600,000 Americans, is not hanging great hopes on Fluosol in view of the strides that have been made in performing surgery on Witnesses without blood transfusions — even open-heart operations.

The biblical injunction against consuming blood — i.e., as in Leviticus, "You shall eat none of the blood, whether of bird or of beast" — is interpreted by Jehovah's Witnesses as extending to transfusions. "Blood was viewed by God as representing life, and the only acceptable use was as part of a sacrifice. It was not to be consumed, as flesh was," said Smalley.

Bird-brained chicken book raises hackles, cackles

By LORETTA NOFFSINGER
AP Writer

DAVENPORT, Calif. (AP) — It seemed like a bird-brained idea to teach university students a course on chickens.

But historian Page Smith and biologist Charles Daniel, both veteran chicken raisers, were enthralled with the bird that the late President Herbert Hoover had promised would fill every pot.

When the pair put together a 10-week course that was taught at the University of California campus at Santa Cruz in 1972, feathers flew in the academic community. But the lasting result of their collaboration — "The Chicken Book" — has had chicken-lovers clucking since 1975.

That was the year that Little, Brown issued the tome in hardback. It was reissued this year in soft cover by North Point Press of Berkeley, Calif.

The 380-page volume will set you back $10 — but the load of chicken lore is priceless for those interested in the chicken's origin, its role in history, society, culture, biology and stew pots.

The book discusses pecking orders, cockfighting, medicinal properties of chickens, their feeding and care, mass production and relationship with American consumers.

One thing the authors do settle is the age-old controversy of which came first — the chicken or the egg. "Neither came first," they insist. "The chicken and the egg evolved together."

Some other tidbits:

— Some 4,000 years ago, Egyptians invented incubators capable of hatching as many as 10,000 chicks at a time. And both Egypt and ancient China mastered the technique of large-scale incubation.

— Chickens at night have poor eyesight and fall into a state close to hibernation. If it's necessary to catch one, "when she is drowsy and almost comatose, you may, with a little care, pluck her from her roost."

— Hens have a laying life of about three years, though a few may lay for six or seven. By that time, the hen is too old and tough to be a good roasting hen. But she will make an excellent soup, while her legs can be made into a tasty jelly base and her liver will be good.

When Smith hatched the idea for the university course, Daniel cautiously viewed it.

"Charles, why don't we teach a course about chickens?" Smith asked.

"I don't really know anything about chickens," Daniel answered.

"I wonder if that really makes any difference," mused Smith.

The course, said Smith, "aroused a lot of resistance and hostility (on campus). Somebody...reported to me that everywhere he went around campus, people were saying, 'Well, have you heard what Page Smith is doing?' Chickens were considered kind of ridiculous."

There may have been something impish or irreverent about the idea, Smith conceded. "I suppose we had a bit of a notion of scandalizing our colleagues...as well as doing something serious."

If the faculty members were brooding about the course, Daniel's science colleagues were aghast.

DEAR ABBY

Figuring correct tip is elementary, waitress says

By ABIGAIL VAN BURRN

DEAR ABBY: After six years of waitressing, I've come to the conclusion that many people don't tip 15 percent because they can't figure 15 percent of the bill, so I've prepared a "tip table" for people to clip and carry in their wallets for quick and easy reference:

Amount of Check 15 Percent
$15 $2.25
$16 $2.40
$17 $2.55
$18 $2.70
$19 $2.85
$20 $3.00
$25 $3.75
$30 $4.50

I'm sick of breaking my back to give excellent service and getting a measly 10 percent tip. And because most people get so flustered when the bill comes they can't figure 15 percent, I'd rather have people whip out their calculators than just take a wild guess, because they usually come up short. — ONE FOOT IN THE POORHOUSE

DEAR ONE FOOT: Don't assume that people who tip less than the customary 15 percent do so because they can't figure 15 percent of the bill. Some leave whatever they can afford. But for those who would like to leave 15 percent but can't figure it, your quick, easy chart will be appreciated.

DEAR ABBY: I've been married to the same man for nearly 30 years. We have a good relationship and see eye to eye on almost everything. He's kind and considerate and I love him dearly. Now for the problem:

He has smoked for 35 years, but only in the last few years has it been getting to me.

His lungs are now so congested that he has a chronic cough, and every time he laughs, I can hear all that phlegm rattling in his throat. It's sickening! When we make love, I actually have to turn my head the other way. I just can't kiss him, but he doesn't seem to mind not being kissed.

I've tried to tell him that his smoking is hurting our marriage, but he always has the same answer: "I can't help it. I'm hooked."

He has cut down some (doctor's orders), but he still smokes a pack and a half a day. He says he enjoys it and doesn't want to give it up. I don't want to make him miserable by nagging, but I'm beginning to resent his lack of consideration for me.

Mouthwashes don't work. I can smell the tobacco in his hair and through his pores. Is there an answer? — SMOKE HATER

DEAR SMOKE HATER: I'm often asked if I've ever had a letter I couldn't answer. My seemingly smug and simplistic reply is: "No. When something cannot be changed, the solution is learning to live with it." Your husband's habit is something YOU can't change.

You could nag him (for his own good), but it would only make him angry and defensive. Face it, he is addicted to nicotine. He could, if sufficiently motivated, become "clean" with professional help. But unless he wants to change, you will have to live with his addiction as long as you live with HIM.

DEAR ABBY: I am a high school student. My mom is divorced and she doesn't have a boyfriend at present.

One of my teachers at school is also divorced, and he and my mom have many of the same values. I would like to get them together. But how?

I would feel embarrassed going to him and saying, "Hey, I'd like you to meet my mom; you two might like each other."

I'd sure appreciate your advice. — NO NAME, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: Every school has parents' night, consultations and functions when parents come to school to get acquainted with the teachers. Be sure your mom doesn't miss such an occasion, and leave the rest to her. And him.

Three cycles of school lunches

By ERMA BOMBECK

Mothers everywhere are about to enter the second stage of their home-packed school lunch experience.

There are three cycles during a school year . . . each reflecting a mother's care and concern for her young child's nutrition and well-being.

Cycle I is a short one running from the first day of school to late October. It is Super Mom's finest hour. During this period every lunch she packs contains the seven basic foods for strong bones and bodies. The bread is fresh and cut into shapes of little ducks with raisin eyes and carrot mouths. The filling is chilled in a separate container to ward off botulism. Steam pours from the wide-mouth of thermoses revealing the promise of fresh vegetables in homemade broth. There is a little plastic spoon, knife and fork.

Fruit is sectioned and cut for easy access and desserts are personally monogrammed. A napkin with a toothpick in it and a mint to leave a cool lasting taste complete the lunch. Daily, there is a note saying, "Mommy loves you. Hurry home." It is all gift-wrapped in a floral bag with the name printed in calligraphy.

From late October to January, the second cycle begins to emerge. Bologna still has the rind on it, peanut butter becomes a staple and if you had three sandwiches for lunch, you'd get sick heels. Fruit is iffy and no one has seen the thermos since September. Every day for five weeks you get the same Christmas cookies with anise in them that no one will eat, including you. The cute bags are gone and you're reduced to plain brown ones.

By January and continuing through to the end of the school year, lunch is a challenge. You're down to cold chicken necks, a wedge of cheese that is late for its own funeral, a cold pork chop with a bite out of it and compressed squares of assorted oats and grain that's supposed to fill you up until dinner, but doesn't.

If you have an 11 a.m. lunch period, the bread is still frozen. The seven basics have dwindled down to a bunch of carrots with the tops still on and a jar of maraschino cherries. The fried egg sandwich that smelled so great at breakfast now has all the appeal of an eye transplant.

The brown lunch bag has given way to a shopping bag that also hides dirty gym clothes.

No one knows why school lunches follow this cycle, but they're as predictable as the kid who doesn't eat any of them, but trades them for a baseball card and a Scratch 'n Sniff!

Burmese antiques are fakes

NEW YORK — Burmese antique art is highly prized and it was not extraordinary that a California dealer in antiques, not long ago, asked $9,000 for a reclining Burmese Buddha labeled 17th Century. There was reason for the prospective buyer to beware. The "antique" Buddha was mislabeled, and a fake.

Nor was it a rarity. Right now, Connoisseur magazine warns in its October issue, "expensive Oriental art shops in Bangkok, Hong Kong, Singapore, Europe and the United States are filled with instant Burmese 'antiques.' Anywhere that unsuspecting buyers go in search of the exotic and the rare, a dealer is sure to be waiting to sell them such 'holiness' from the East."

A major source of fake wooden sculpture is Chiang Mai in northern Thailand. In addition, there are bronze foundries all over Thailand making copies of Burmese treasures. Says Connoisseur, "A good Thai sculptor can make 200 to 300 'ancient' Buddha bronze images a month and, depending on their size, sell the batch for perhaps $5,000.

"A splash of ammonia or careful treatment with salt or fire are final touches that give the patina of great age."

At Chiang Mai, imitations of Burmese art are lined up outdoors to weather in the sun and rain. Images are strained a dulled red with thin paint. Gold leaf is pressed on at random to give the appearance of wear, and lacquer is spilled on to mottle the finish.

How can the serious student and potential collector protect himself from the flood of fakes?

One way is to obtain extensive knowledge in the field. For Americans who can't go to Thailand, there is an extensive collection at Denison University in Granville, Ohio.

"Beyond tapping Denison's resources," the Connoisseur article points out, "collectors will probably have to do their research in libraries, in the Victoria and Albert and the British museums in London, and in the Pitt Rivers and Ashmolean, in Oxford.

"Furthermore, if one intends to buy, it might be wise to go through reputable London dealers such as Spink & Son or Henry Brownrigg."

Sexy beats sporty in Paris fashion show

By SUZY PATTERSON
AP Fashion Writer

PARIS (AP) — Sexy, slinky looks are winning hands down over sporty lines in the rowdy week of ready-to-wear fashion for next spring. Angelo Tarlazzi and Jean-Charles de Castelbajac offered plenty for both worlds in their Sunday shows under tents in the Louvre courtyard.

Italian-born Tarlazzi went for sex (of course), and Castelbajac concentrated on sport. At Tarlazzi's show there were some very swingy suit ideas — nicely-cut blousons or longer jackets with slightly puffy shoulders over sun-pleated skirts to the knee in low-keyed pearl greys, slate or prune shades of challis wool.

He also offered many trouser looks, usually above the ankle and cut like jogging suits or bloomers in luxury fabrics. If you want a new idea for a suit, try teaming deeply-flounced skirts with man-tailored jackets a la Tarlazzi. It just escapes being vulgar.

Flounces are hardly new to Paris fashion, but they bounce around this collection as if they had been rediscovered, and give late-day wear a south-of-the-border touch.

However, the forte of Tarlazzi is in his clinging knits, such as a body-molding cherry-red sheath with its off-the-shoulder banded top, or even more daring, a starkly simple catsuit with cropped pants and a knitted roll effect around the neck as the sole adornment. To wear many Tarlazzi clothes, you'd better work out at aerobic dancing for a while.

Aerobics practically stole the show at Castelbajac, as a whole group of models danced around in their white shorts, tee-shirts and minis with diagonal bright bands of ribbon.

This designer always loves practical, natural clothes, and opts for a lot of neutral linen casual wear.

He also thinks the nautical life is great and showed some blown-up black and clear nylon-plastic lifejackets that looked amusing as well as being useful if you should fall overboard, especially if you carry his big inflated plastic beachball handbag.

If you stay on board, you'll wear the knit shifts with navy or red stripes at the chest, big yellow cuffs sporting anchor motifs.

Castelbajac's beach wear is simple but impeccable, with striped clinging maillot lycra swimsuits, topped by terrycloth robes crisscrossed with chintz ribbon appliques in primary colors.

Paris is obsessed with "Sahara" looks, and Castelbajac's are fun: generous linen or polished cotton skirts with big pockets, large pea jacket or hooded djellaba tops, all in muted and mixed tones of caramel, beige or khaki, sometimes pepped up with panels of burnt orange chintz.

His desert shorts are covered with big chintz pouch pockets — front and back — and would suit any archaeologist for storing up shards. They are leather-belted at the waist, and their tricolored jersey capes are amusing if not particularly summery.

Castelbajac excels working in natural fabrics like linen and jute, and turns out easy beach cover-ups and shifts, with wide pastel stripes on beige. He even commissioned a French artist named Jean Charles Blais to paint t-shaped dresses with soft abstract and tough "brute" motifs.

Castelbajac didn't omit sexy looks entirely, and brought out a bare midriff in a black linen dress with a transparent net back on the top and gold zips all over skirt and top.

No problem about sex or sports at Sonia Rykiel. Her show late Sunday had plenty of both. The slinky jerseys, cashmeres and knits are always sophisticated.

Miss Rykiel's fast-paced show was in a Twenties-to-Forties nostalgic Hollywood mood, especially backed by old favorite hit songs, with girls wearing turbans a la Lana Turner.

The top solid colors were sand, many outfits in a new pink-panther pink or cornflower blue, along with the familiar ivories, beige and black. There were lots of casual outfits in bold stripes, dressy suits and coats in checks or Prince of Wales plaid.

Rykiel also gave lots of attention to flowery and jungle prints in full-skirted or short flounced dresses.

The latest Rykiel look is not only in body-hugging models flared or ruffled at the short hemline and bowed jackets, but a lot of models were based on a draped handkerchief jabot. This appeared abundantly at the bottom of slashed necklines (a specialty at Rykiel) and in large versions on skirts.

In the sporting line, the models cavorted around in black boxing shorts and striped jersey tank tops. Jane Fonda's aerobic dance record was played to accompany a group of bold black, white and red or blue prints, which didn't look especially suited to the dance class.

It is said that the Chinese used thumbprints as signatures thousands of years ago.

Sex offenders to undergo studies

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — Over the next five years, doctors at Johns Hopkins University will ask 125 child molesters, rapists, and exhibitionists to lie down in a lab and recall their favorite erotic fantasies in the cause of science.

They and an equal number of "sexually conventional" males will have their brains x-rayed and scanned before, during and after they are sexually aroused by their fantasies.

Scientists will also measure their levels of male and female sex hormones, and analyze their chromosomes.

The sexual arousal studies are being done because results of a preliminary study of 41 sex offenders showed a "surprising number" to have brain and other biological abnormalities, according to Dr. Fred Berlin, associate professor of psychiatry and co-director of the Hopkins Biosexual Psychhormonal (ok) Clinic.

The abnormalities do not prove that all deviant sex behavior is biologically caused, but they may help account for a large part of it, Berlin told a seminar for science writers.

The new studies are designed to discover more about the biological and chemical nature of sexual "compulsions" and possibly how to treat them with drugs, he added.

In the preliminary study, 31 of the 41 men were found to have abnormalities. Thirteen had levels of the male sex hormone testosterone higher than 95 percent of all sexually normal men.

Seven had chromosome defects involving an extra female or "X" chromosome and several had brain damage.

The men include child molesters, exhibitionists, rapists, voyeurs, homosexual child molesters, transsexuals, and erotic sadists.

Berlin said 85 percent of the men with elevated testosterone treated with Depo-Provera, a drug that reduces the hormone level, showed suppression of their sexual appetites to the point where they can then control them.

The upcoming sexual arousal studies will use one of the newest machines designed to analyze how the workings of the brain. Called a PET, for Positron Emission Tomography scanner, it takes computerized measurements of the way the brain absorbs glucose and other nutrients.

The subjects are first given injections of a radioactive glucose molecule made by a cyclotron newly installed at the Hopkins' Neuroscience Center.

"After attaching painless monitors to their genitals, the men will then be left in privacy to arouse themselves by imagining erotic scenes and ideas," Berlin said. "The monitors will record their erections. Then we will do the brain scans and see what is going on in their brains before and during arousal."

"Obviously," he added, "this will all be done carefully and tastefully."

'Totally Beautiful' course offered at YMCA

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Have you ever seen a picture of a model and wondered how she could possibly look so good? Wondered what she's got that makes her look so special and how to do that for yourself?

Here's your chance to find out. Through the facilities of Midland Alamo YMCA, 901 N. Midland Drive, two former models, T.J. Ford and Toni Botary, will teach a course called "Totally Beautiful." According to Mrs. Ford, the aim of the course is "to teach the average woman/girl how to cater in detail to every facet of her own personal appearance, style and positive image using the latest methods and techniques available."

"I guess if I could get one idea across to the public it's that this is different from anything else that has ever been offered," Mrs. Ford said. "This is due to a combination of things: 1. You have professional models who have been in the business who are teaching it; and 2. We're dealing with the TOTAL image. Positive attracts positive — it always has and always will. This is SO much more than the 'beauty course'."

Mrs. Ford pointed out that "'pretty girls' are a dime a dozen, but if you find someone who is confident in herself, who has polished every asset she has available — that's what the difference is. That's what divides the pros from the average person."

She said the course will teach women how to make the most of all their plusses. "The whole idea is to put everything together."

MRS. FORD STRESSED the fact that "positive attracts positive — negative repels. By emphasizing the positive aspects of yourself through your appearance, you can inspire confidence in your abilities and your judgement. People will have more belief in your judgement — if you are a professional woman, people will buy your ideas more quickly."

Mrs. Ford is well qualified to teach this course. Not only is she an experienced model, she is familiar with beauty pageants as a contestant, a guest celebrity and performer, producer, coach, choreographer and judge. She has performed in theater in "Les Girls," "Brigadoon," "The Boyfriend," and "Curley McDimple." Mrs. Ford has appeared in various fashion shots for newspapers and local commercials for television. She has done promotional work for both the Chicago Cubs and the California Angels professional baseball teams. She has done layout, paste-up, and been an account executive for Communication-Design Inc. in Tyler. And she is the owner of her own company, "Beauty Works."

When Mrs. Ford discusses the "Totally Beautiful" course, she brings out some definite, positive ideas she wants her students to learn. "Generally, the powerful and wealthy understand the importance of communication with clothing and by appearance, but great numbers of people don't take advantage of this 'special' language, simply because they don't know how — or don't even realize it exists. They just wonder why others respond to them in a less than positive way. This is the case in all age groups.

"When a woman or girl does not develop the full potential of her appearance, it is not necessarily due to lack of taste, but often a misguided sense of who she is and what she wants to tell the world." Mrs. Ford also stressed that this course is designed to bring together all of a woman's assets, so that she knows what to do to make herself look and feel her best. She said the course is more than "just a makeup course."

A woman tends to feel beautiful when she knows she looks her best, and as a consequence has a more positive outlook. "Visual appearance is an important code that projects our talents, needs, personalities, dispositions and destinations," Mrs. Ford said. "Without a doubt, however we appear, our psyches are showing! We have all experienced better treatment when we look especially well, and most of us also know what it is like to be treated badly when we don't look so great. By overlooking the importance of our image and style, we are apt to convey uncertainty, awkwardness or low self-esteem. How you appear has a lot to do with what's going inside your mind."

"A CLEAR PERSONAL style can spark your own inner assurance and can help enhance your natural beauty, strengths and success. Positive does attract positive! Appearance is a self-fulfillng self-portrait," she said.

Women are interested in learning how to make the most of themselves, but "apart from a few special and expensive modeling schools, there are really no facilities for learning style," said Mrs. Ford. "Basicallay this is a finishing course for the average woman — for housewives, for professional women, etc. Woman's work is never done and I realize that — women are always busy and don't have the time to invest six months in a course like this — yet they want to learn. They can come and take this 'crash course'."

The "Totally Beautiful" course is offered in two-hour sessions on four consecutive Tuesdays. The first course will begin Oct. 26. Morning or evening sessions are available — morning classes are from 9:30 a.m. — 11:30 a.m., and evening classes are from 7 p.m. — 9 p.m. Mrs. Ford added that if interest is shown in establishing a class on a certain day or at a certain time, a class will be created according to response.

"We want to try to make this course something really special," she said. "We want it to be an exciting, very exquisite experience. The cost of the course includes an elegant luncheon at Ranchland Hills Country Club, complete with place cards, centerpieces, wine, etc."

"Each student is encouraged to relax, enjoy and progress with an attitude of accomplishment. The objective of this program is to convince each student that a positive image is not a bother or a bore, but a terrific way to enjoy herself and improve the quality of her life," Mrs. Ford said.

As an added attraction, portrait sittings will be available on request by a glamor photographer from "D" Production Studios, at special rates to members of the course.

"ALL THE INFORMATION used in the course is the most up to date and advanced as possible," Mrs. Ford said. "Above all, the class is going to be fun."

Midland's YMCA is very unusual, Mrs. Ford said, "due to the fact that they are very interested in being innovative, setting trends, being very progressive in their thinking. They are in the people business — that's exactly what they are interested in. They are interested in offering anything that will benefit the public, whether physically or mentally."

Mrs. Ford, who is the wife of Danny Ford, district manager for Delta Drilling in Midland and the mother of two sons, Ryan, 11, a sixth grade student at Pease Elementary, and Cody, 3-1/2, who attends Crestview Baptist pre-school program, is a firm believer in the "Totally Beautiful" course. She said she will also produce local pageants, be guest speaker at local women's clubs and be available to speak to elementary school girls. "I think I can make a difference in this society. My theories are positive — we have too much negative! I 'accentuate the positive' — anything I can add that's positive."

"If anybody can get something from my life — if they can say 'something she did benefited me in kind' — if it's a positive thing, then I'm satisified," she said.

"Totally Beautiful" is being offered at this time only at Midland's Alamo YMCA. Cost for the course is $75 for four two-hour sessions, plus the luncheon at Ranchland Hills Country Club. Session 1 will be on confidence, poise, personality-plus, image styling, motivation guides, wardrobe basics and accessories, personal evaluation profile No. 1 (PEP). Session 2 will cover skin basics and makeup application, and Session 3 will be on hair basics and styling. Session 4 will be manicure and pedicure, including mending and nail wrap, PEP No. 2.

Luncheon for the first course will be Nov. 20 at 11:30 a.m. at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Classes will be limited to 10 students in each, to provide each student with more personal attention. Nursery will be available. For further information call Alamo YMCA, 694-2528.

Try butter pastry

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

BUTTER PASTRY

2 cups all-purpose flour
Two ¼-pound sticks butter (1 cup)
4 tablespoons (about) water

In a medium bowl, with a pastry blender, cut the butter into the flour until the butter is the size of small peas. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon of the water at a time, mixing with a fork, until the dough can be pressed into a ball.

Chill for at least 30 minutes. Divide in half; keep one half refrigerated.

On a pastry cloth, with a stockinet-covered rolling pin, roll out half the pastry to an 11-inch round; fit into a 9-inch pie plate. Add your favorite fresh apple pie filling. Roll out remaining half of pastry to an 11-inch round and place over filling. Fold both edges of pastry together and use fork tines to crimp edge. Cut 8 one-inch vents.

Cover edge with a 2- to 3-inch strip of foil. Bake on rack below center of a preheated 425-degree oven for 35 minutes; remove foil; continue baking until apples are tender and pastry browned — about 20 minutes longer. Serve hot or warm.

Who gives the most to candidates?

Political action committees (PACs) gave $20 million to Democrats and $14.5 million to Republicans in the 18 months ended June 30. The total given to congressional candidates is expected to more than double by the end of 1982, so a last-minute spurt in giving to Republicans, such as happened in 1980, is possible.

Republicans get PAC cake's biggest slice in 1982 races

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Political action committees have made a record dole of more than $42 million to candidates this election year, with incumbents — particularly Republicans — grabbing a larger share than in 1980, the Federal Election Commission reports.

Business-oriented PACs in particular have changed their giving patterns substantially from the election season two years ago. They are using their millions more to protect GOP incumbents than to finance candidates challenging Democratic members of Congress.

Through the end of July, the PACs have given $42.4 million to candidates, the FEC reported. That includes $38 million given from January 1981 through June and $4.4 million given out in July.

The number and financial clout of PACs have exploded in the past decade. Their impact can be illustrated by the contribution totals through June 30 of each election year. In 1978, it was $10.9 million. In 1980, $24.9 million, and in 1982, $38.0 million. All the figures cover the 18 months ended in June.

For the entire campaign cycle, the contribution figures are expected to be much higher, probably topping the more than $55 million contributed by PACs in the presidential election year of 1980.

As the FEC previously reported, PACs of all varieties have raised and spent more this year than ever before. Their receipts were $137.2 million and expenditures were $103.9 million as of June 30 this year — both record amounts.

PACs are organizations set up to raise money through voluntary donations for involvement in election campaigns. They are established by businesses, labor unions, associations and individuals who want to push a certain point of view.

Their contributions often total far less than the amount raised, because many PACs must pay for fund raising, salaries and other overhead costs as well.

Overall, incumbents have received 81 percent of the PAC contributions in the 1982 campaign, the FEC figures show. Challengers got 10 percent and candidates in open races the remaining 9 percent. In the entire 1980 cycle, 61 percent went to incumbents, 26 percent to challengers and 13 percent to open races.

The FEC reports show the biggest shift came in the contribution patterns by business PACs.

In 1980, much of their money went to GOP challengers to Democratic incumbents in the House and Senate in a bid to help finance the Republicans' surge in both houses. But thus far this year, the goal has been to defend those Republican incumbents, rather than to aim at knocking off Democrats.

In the first 18 months of the 1982 campaign cycle, corporate PACs gave 45.3 percent of their contributions to GOP incumbents in the House — $4.05 million — and only 3 percent — $283,832 — to Republican challengers of Democratic representatives.

For the entire 1980 campaign cycle, corporate PACs gave 32 percent to GOP incumbents and 19 percent to Republican challengers.

In the Senate races, the pattern is similar. For the first 18 months of the 1982 races, corporate PACs gave 46.3 percent of their contributions to GOP incumbents

For the entire campaign cycle, the contribution figures are expected to be much higher, probably topping the more than $55 million contributed by PACs in the presidential election year of 1980...PACS of all varieties have raised and spent more this year than ever before.

— $2.35 million — and only 9.6 percent to challengers — or $492,318.

The figures for the entire 1980 cycle were almost the reverse: 18 percent for Republican Senate incumbents and 42 percent for GOP challengers.

The contributions for the usually Republican-oriented trade and association PACs are similar to those for corporate PACs.

These figures and percentages are sure to change. Many of the business PACs wait until late in the campaign to contribute, particularly to challengers. But the pattern thus far shows that many GOP challengers are having a tougher time raising money than in 1980.

Overall, the FEC figures continue to show that business and trade PACs are outdistancing their traditional rivals, the labor union groups.

The biggest givers were the corporate PACs, which handed out $14.1 million. Trade, membership and health PACs were next with $10.8 million. Unions gave $8.7 million. The rest came from independent PACs, cooperatives and other groups.

Decreased regulation requested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the plywood industry have told the Consumer Product Safety Commission that regulation of their products is unnecessary because they have made progress in reducing dangerous emissions.

Formaldehyde fumes from plywood and particleboard have been cut by 65 percent to 90 percent over the last three years, John Ball, executive vice president of Champion International Corp., told the panel Tuesday.

However, the commissioners noted that some people are sensitive to the fumes and cannot tolerate even reduced levels. They pressed the industry officials for a way to help these people, many of whom live in mobile homes with plywood construction.

The boots make the candidate

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. — Rep. Thomas A. Daschle says he owns a pair of western boots, but he won't wear them in this campaign.

Rep. Clint Roberts also owns a pair of western boots, and he wears them everywhere in this campaign.

That has become the symbolic difference between these two South Dakota incumbents who are pitted against each other because the state's population loss cost it one of its two congressional seats.

They don't agree on Reaganomics or farm policy, but the contest is turning on whether voters want a Republican congressman, Roberts, who has a 4,000-acre ranch in the Black Hills, wears western boots, represents the rural western side of South Dakota and looks like a rancher — or a Democratic congressman, Daschle, who wears penny loafers, represents the eastern South Dakota towns, has spent most of his career in politics and considers himself a capable and professional legislator.

"As tough as times are, people think that what's being done is the right way to go," hardware retailer Matt Coad of Dell Rapids told a visitor last week after Daschle left his store. "Everyone feels we're paying for some of our past mistakes, but at the same time, things are screwed down pretty tight."

Daschle, 35, a one-time assistant to former senator James Abourezk, squeaked into office four years ago by 105 votes in a race marked by aggressive door-to-door campaigning. Today, the earnest, boyish-looking congressman still goes door-to-door and claims that he enjoys 90 percent name recognition in the state.

A self-described "progressive-moderate" in the mold of other young Democrats, Daschle has consistently voted against Reaganomics, but he supported the GOP-backed constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

Roberts, 47, came to Congress in 1980 determined to help carry out the Reagan revolution and his campaign is largely built around the president's theme that it is the right course.

Several years ago, Roberts modeled for a beer commercial; later he agreed to pose for several days of photos for a Marlboro cigarette advertisement. Although he doesn't think the pictures were ever used, the rugged Marlboro-man image has stuck. And Roberts, while not as polished a performer or as quick on his feet as Daschle, encourages voters to view him as a true South Dakota westerner.

This was the theme of a Roberts television ad that showed a group of distinguished-looked congressmen sitting at a table. Viewers are told this is the House Agriculture Committee, of which both Roberts and Daschle are members.

The camera pans under the table to show Roberts wearing western boots; Daschle has sagging socks that he keeps pulling up and a shoe dangling off the end of his foot. The ad has saturated the state.

Nonetheless, Daschle's campaign polls show him with a comfortable 14-point lead, he says.

Californian tries to beat game of redistricting

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Who was that shaking hands with Los Angeles Dodger superstar Fernando Valenzuela on the front page of a recent campaign mailing?

That former John Birch Society member, a gringo's gringo, Rep. John H. Rousselot, R-Calif.

Who was that who just joined the Hispanic Congressional Caucus, so quietly its leaders never knew until it was too late?

The same Rep. Rousselot, despite his Franco-Irish ancestry.

Who spent $1,435 in campaign funds for his wife's Spanish lessons? You guessed it.

There he was, the man who today represents the upper-crust matrons of San Marino, resplendent in a south-of-the-border shirt, riding in the Mexican Independence Day parade through East Los Angeles.

"Viva Mexico!" he cried.

His 26th Congressional District shot out from under him by redistricting, Rousselot is pursuing an energetic ethnic game plan for winning a seat in the new 30th District, contested by fellow incumbent — and bona fide Hispanic — Rep. Matthew G. (Marty) Martinez, D-Calif.

What does Martinez think of Rousselot's parade appearance?

"Gee, isn't that wonderful?" says Martinez. "He's learned a Mexican word."

The story of John and Marty and the citizens of flat and smoggy East Los Angeles begins with the bizarre California redistricting plan formulated last year by Democratic Rep. Phillip Burton. It was designed in part to usher Burton's old enemy Rousselot out of Congress.

Rousselot could easily have moved into the nearby, affluent, relentlessly Republican district of Rep. Carlos J. Moorhead. The energetic and resourceful Rousselot would have had a good chance of beating the diffident Moorhead, but Moorhead is an old friend.

Rep. George E. Danielson, who represented the old 30th District, resigned to become a judge. Martinez, 53, a former Monterey Park mayor and state assemblyman, won a special election in June to serve out the remainder of Danielson's term.

But in the redistricting, Burton cut the Latino population of the 30th District from about 62 to 53 percent, and Rousselot saw his chance.

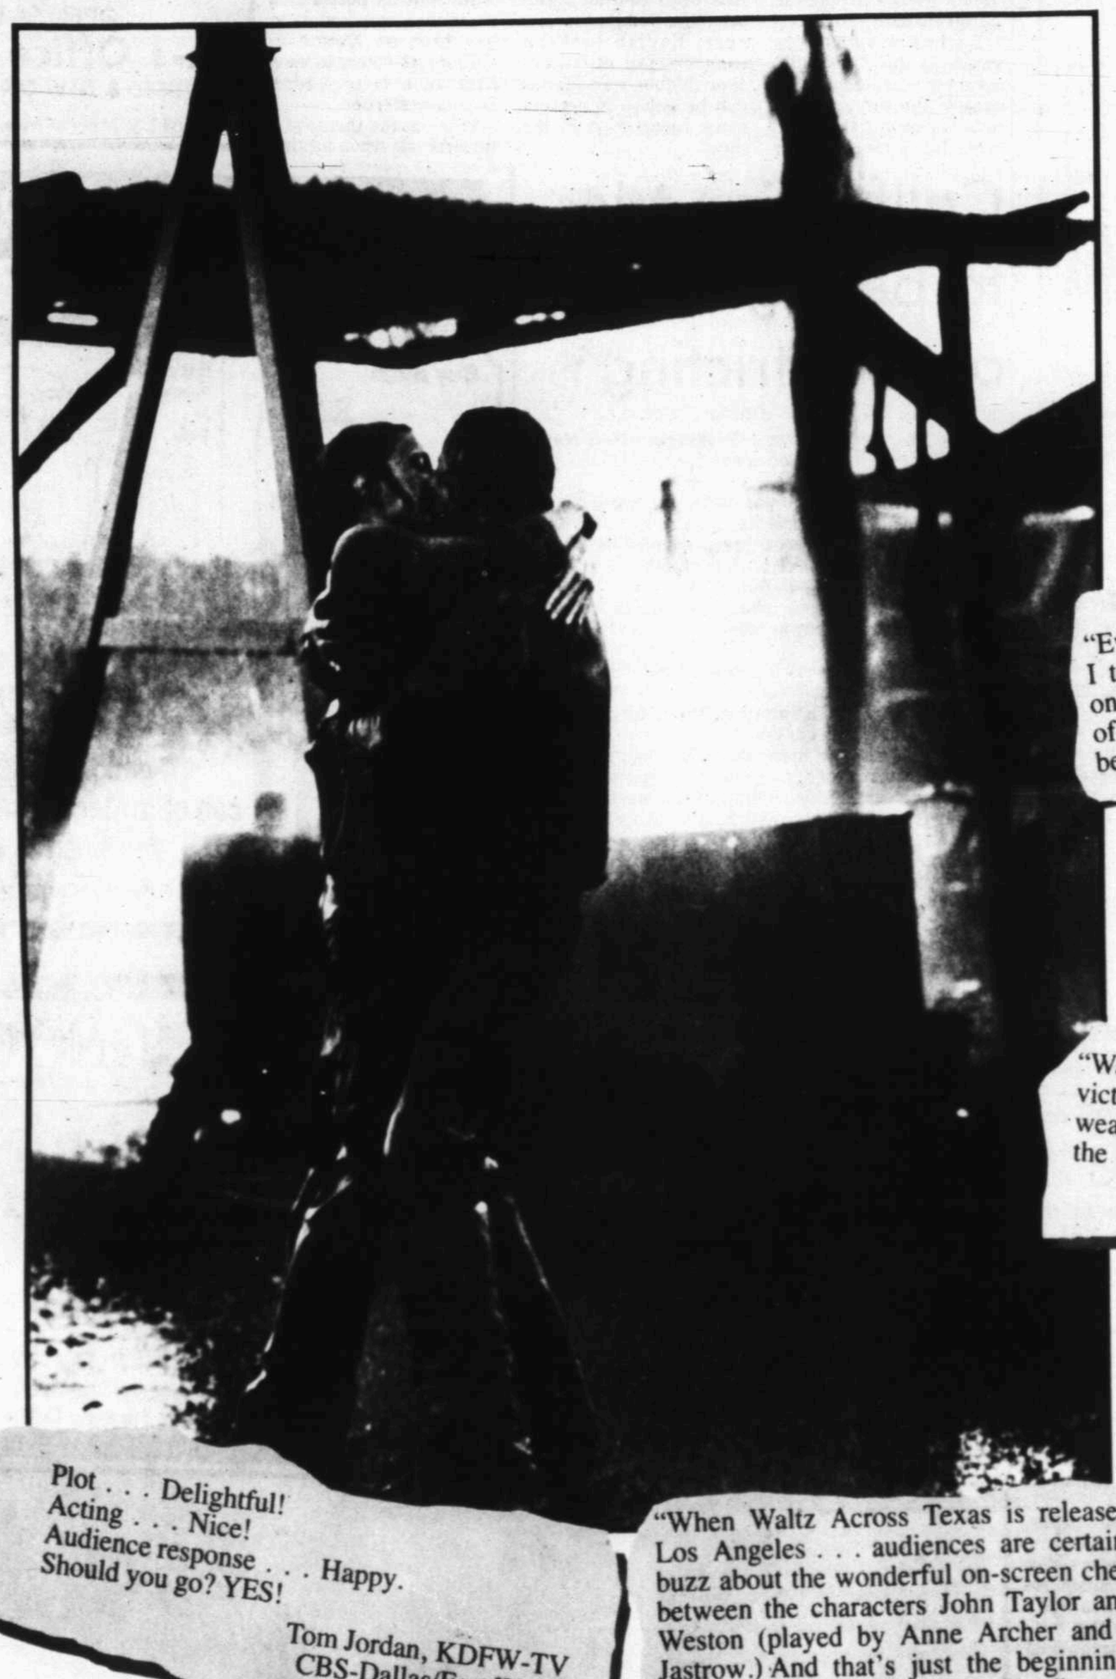
WALTZ ACROSS TEXAS

...a delightfully crude love story.



"You couldn't ask for a more delectable leading man – leading lady team than Terry Jastrow and Anne Archer. He is physically much like Robert Redford; Miss Archer's voice, like Ava Gardner's, has a smoky, sensual quality."
Bob Porter, Dallas Times Herald

"Waltz Across Texas avoids many flaws typical of low-budget films. It's a rare good value for film-making dollars."
Judy McGuinn, American Premiere Film Magazine

"Everybody has been asking about the picture. I tell them you just have to see it. It works on a lot of different levels and is an example of the kind of first class picture that can be made in Texas."
Sam Grogg, Director of USA Film Festival

". . . comes in with a steady stream of entertainment."
Bobbie Wygant, KXAS-TV, Dallas-Ft. Worth

"Waltz Across Texas is a gusher; it's a victory romp across the dance floor after a wealthy strike; it plays like black gold on the silver screen."
Clay McNear, SMU Daily Campus

"Anne's a very good actress and he's a make-it-happen guy. I think it's fantastic . . . better than the best chicken-fried steak you've ever had with extra gravy on the side."
Dan Jenkins, Author of Semi-Tough

Plot . . . Delightful!
Acting . . . Nice!
Audience response . . . Happy.
Should you go? YES!
Tom Jordan, KDFW-TV CBS-Dallas/Fort Worth

"When Waltz Across Texas is released in Los Angeles . . . audiences are certain to buzz about the wonderful on-screen chemistry between the characters John Taylor and Gail Weston (played by Anne Archer and Terry Jastrow.) And that's just the beginning of the buzz promised by this film."
Deborah Caulfield, Los Angeles Times

Jack Daniel's Original Silver Cornet Band specializes in recreating turn-of-the-century America in music and narrative for its audiences. The group's Tuesday performance for a three-fourths-full house at Midland High School Auditorium marked the opening of the Midland Community Concert season.

History recreated through story, songs

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The chances of their making Farmington, N.M., by concert time were slim. The fire on the bus had done only minor damage, but it was enough that the bus had to be repaired before it ran again. And it's a 100-mile walk from Silverton, Colo., to Farmington.

It was then that Mr. Jack Daniel's Silver Cornet Band discovered not some friends, but avid fans.

Fans who had every album the group had cut, but had never been able to hear the group in person and weren't about to pass up a chance, even if it was quite a drive.

Fans who were also musicians.

Silverton's six-member brass ensemble insisted on finding vehicles and personally transporting all 14 band members to Farmington.

Concert time was 8:15 p.m. They were only one minute late.

When the show was over, band members promised to try to schedule Farmington and Silverton for shows later this year.

The same promise was requested of the group after its Community Concert performance Tuesday night at Midland High School Auditorium.

Now on its 11th U.S. tour, Mr. Jack Daniel's Original Silver Cornet Band recreates through narrative and song fin de siecle (end of an era) rural America.

When Jack Daniel's (Yes, we are referring to Jack Daniel's of Jack Daniel's bourbon) bankrolled the first Silver Cornet Band in Lynchburg, Tenn., (population 361) in 1892, he did so to liven up the political rallies which periodically made their way through the area. He was able to purchase the full complement of brand new, nickel-plated instruments, complete with cases, and guaranteed by the Sears & Roebuck catalog for a total investment of $227.70.

At that time, it was estimated that between 10,000 and 15,000 small town bands existed across rural America.

For some 20-odd years Jack Daniel's Silver Cornet Band was famous in the towns around Lynchburg. With the urbanization of America, also came the death of this band as well as others like it.

Until...

A faded photograph of the Silver Cornet Band posed in front of Lynchburg's White Rabbit Saloon in the mid-1890s captured the attention and imagination of musician-actor-historian Dave Fulmer. His first wish was that he could hear a band like that today. Then he set out to make it happen.

To recreate some 80 years later the band's sound meant a 15-month time investment. The tab was also much higher than $227.70. The cost in 1978 was over $30,000.

"The original band's instruments are archaic in design and not made any more in the U.S.," Fulmer said of the project.

"We eventually tracked down a company that made them to the original specifications in France. We managed to obtain all the instruments except for the helicon bass, the 'rain catcher' which is the forerunner of the sousaphone. These were just no longer being made and we managed to find one in an antique store in Reno."

Next came the music and the musicians.

"It was an unusual request, asking them to Xerox music that was long gone and play that music on instruments no longer really in existence," Fulmer said.

The musical arrangements were put together by Grieg McRitchie. McRitchie tracked down old sheet music, in addition to transcribing some arrangements from 78 rpm disks and Edison cylinders.

ENTERTAINMENT

An example of this group's sticking to playing it the way it was then was exemplified by the band's musical rendition of "Dixie." The arrangement is the same one played on the battlefields during the Civil War.

The Original Silver Cornet Band members' expertise in the music field include all having undergraduate degrees in music (a number have master's degrees in music) and years of experience with groups ranging from the Philadelphia Philharmonic to Al Hirt. Still, they all discovered the antique instruments were harder to play than the contemporary ones they were used to.

"That's why we can only play one two-hour concert per evening," Fulmer said. "These instruments are extremely difficult to play, very hard on the lips and embouchure."

Guild will sponsor workshop

The Midland Fiber Guild and Midland College are co-sponsoring a two- day felting workshop Saturday and Sunday at the Allison Fine Arts Building at MC. The workshop will be held in the Weaving Room.

The instructor is Marleah Drexler MacDougal. Ms. MacDougal is a fiber artist in Houston, where she is represented at the Archway Gallery.

She received a bachelor of science in textiles from Cornell University in New York, and a master of science in textiles from California State University.

She has exhibited and received awards for her fiber works and has given workshops at the Textile Department at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. Ms. MacDougal was in Midland last year for a workshop on wool dying.

This year's workshop will introduce those attending to traditional and contemporary felting and the formation of 3-dimensional objects. The workshop will cost $30 and is open to both beginning and advanced students. For more information call Julie Rogers at 683-8814.

Stallone to give commentary

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Sylvester Stallone, the screen's Rocky Balboa, will add his punch to the color commentary of prize fights on the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network (ESPN).

Stallone will also promote ESPN's "Saturday Night at the Fights" card on Oct. 30 from Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas. Former WBA lightweight champion Sean O'Grady will be featured in the main event against contender Pete Ranzany of Sacramento.

Another fighter on the card will be Lee John Canalito, who has been under Stallone's personal guidance since July.

Is Sidney Bruhl (Charles Dixon) serious or is he not? It appears Clifford Anderson (Gary Swisher) isn't too sure as he takes the handcuffs. Neither is Sidney's wife, Myra (Penny Taulman). But then, they aren't alone. The audience isn't either. To find out the answer to this and other baffling questions, it is necessary to see Midland Community Theatre's production of Ira Levin's comedy mystery "Deathtrap." Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office at 682-4111.

Band's sounds of yesteryear ran gamut from Stephen Foster to jazz

Sounds of yesterday played Midland High School Auditorium Tuesday, as Mr. Jack Daniel's Original Silver Cornet Band kicked off Midland Community Concert's season.

Selections played ran the gamut from Stephen Foster to New Orleans jazz. Each number was performed with precision ease.

Conductor Dave Fulmer explained that the turn of the century instruments used were more difficult to play than contemporary ones. It certainly didn't show, with each musician adroitly performing ensemble and solo work.

But music is not all this group provides in its evening of entertainment. The show begins before the band arrives onstage.

In the opening scene, Dave Fulmer, musician-actor-historian and the group's organizer, comes out and chats with the audience. He recreates in narrative rural America around the turn of the century (all the way down to the smells of fresh baked apple — or was it rhubarb — pie).

As Fulmer points out, "If you're really in a small town, your nose is going to paint the whole picture."

His delivery is excellent; he aptly portrays a man of that age. Fulmer seems to know instinctively when to be serious and when to be funny.

One of his many comments which drew laughter dealt with two young men he noticed in the audience. Perched in a tree at the far back of the crowd, the two boys in question, he explained, had been guilty on several occasions of passing through his pasture without closing the gate. Fulmer added he didn't mind them crossing his pasture, but he was a little tired of chasing his cattle, so would they please close the gate.

He then said quite nicely, with his eyebrows raised at just the right moment, "I can remember what it was like to be 10 years old." Pause. "I also remember what it was like to be 11. I want you to have the experience, too."

This entire ensemble (14 players) was having such a good time, it was contagious. The audience loved it.

The last time I have experienced that much properly directed energy onstage was a piece which also dealt with fin de siecle (end of an era) America.

While Mr. Jack Daniel's Original Silver Cornet Band recreates rural America in narrative and music, "Tintypes" recreates urban America during a similiar time frame in narrative and song. It's obvious that both require talent to work. What may not be so apparent is the consistent energy the participants must maintain. They must appear to be having a wonderful time, transmitting that feeling onto the audience.

Such was the case Tuesday night with the Original Silver Cornet Band, as was also the case with Midland Community Theatre's recent production of "Tintypes." (Directed by Michael Spicer, the Midland cast included Paula Butts, Pat Zap, Norma Short, Bob Fennell and Mykel Mengert.)

Those who attended "Tintypes" know what an energy charged production it was. Those who didn't can still catch the production when it goes onstage Jan. 14 for a short run at the Yucca Theatre.

Those who missed Tuesday night's Community Concert, missed out on a most memorable evening. After the show, several audience members asked the band to please come back. Fulmer said they would.

I'm not alone in hoping Midlanders have another opportunity to hear Mr. Jack Daniel's Original Silver Cornet Band. The evening's entertainment provided by this group is certainly worth the price of admission (World Series or no World Series).

Drink named for non-drinker

The Gibson cocktail, a martini with an onion instead of gin, vermouth and an olive, supposedly was thought up by Hugh Gibson, a former U.S. ambassador to Belgium, so he wouldn't have to keep explaining that he was a teetotaler.

He told bartenders to simply put an olive in a glass of water. But this confused them, so he ordered a pearl onion in a glass of water. In time, some drinkers ordered an onion in their martinis.

Jordan speaks on hostage crisis in Iran, Carter's loss in 1980

EDITOR'S NOTE: Hamilton Jordan's book, "Crisis," has received acclaim as a revealing, personable account of the events leading to Jimmy Carter's eventual defeat in the 1980 presidential election. From the viewpoint of his former post as White House chief of staff, Jordan analyzes Carter's handling of the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Iran, Senator Kennedy's role in the ex-president's unsuccessful bid for a second term, and Billy Carter's "sibling rivalry."

By ALEX BEN BLOCK
Hearst Feature Service

Q: One factor in former President Carter's defeat was Edward Kennedy. You say that at the same time the Iranians were trying to blackmail you on one side, the Kennedy forces were trying to blackmail you on the other side.

Jordan: (Ayatollah Ruhollah) Khomeini never succeeded; Kennedy did.

Q: What was the nature of this blackmail?

A: I never begrudged Kennedy running against us, because at the time he decided to run, we were low in the polls and he was high in the polls. But once we defeated him all over the country and had a firm grip on the nomination, he should have gotten out. Of course, he didn't. He stayed in, and that led to a divided party.

After the August convention, I went to see Steve Smith, Kennedy's brother-in-law and campaign manager. And to summarize that conversation, he basically said that if we wanted Senator Kennedy to help us in the fall campaign, we had to raise money to help pay off Kennedy's campaign debts.

That's not unheard of in politics — the winner helping the loser with campaign debts. But it was: "The only way we would campaign for Carter is if you help us pay off these debts." So we did, and Kennedy did campaign for us. But hell, by then, the damage had been done; the party was divided.

Q: And Kennedy seemed pretty half-hearted in his support for Carter.

A: I think he was so mad at being defeated, and had such disdain for Carter, that ultimately it didn't matter to him whether Carter or Reagan were elected.

Q: I'll throw out a few names that were prominent during the election, and get your reaction. John Anderson: How big an effect do you think he had on the outcome of the election?

A: If we lost by two points, we could have blamed it on Anderson, but we lost by a lot more than that.

I disagree with Reagan, but Reagan honestly believes the things that he says. Anderson was a fraud. He was consumed by his own ambition. The only thing he believed in was himself.

Q: Billy Carter: Did you ever try to control him?

A: You think if we could have controlled him we wouldn't have? Any attempt to control him was counter-productive.

Q: You mean, if you asked him not to do something, he'd go out and do it?

A: Hell, yes! Do it worse. I'm not a pop psychologist, but I think it was a classic case of sibling rivalry. God knows we knew he was hurting us, but there wasn't anything to do about it.

Q: Ronald Reagan: Do you think he ran a fair campaign in '80?

A: Reagan did a good job of presenting to the American people a different approach to the country's problems. He sold that new approach to the Congress, but two years later you look at the results of it and you have to conclude it is bogus. Next year, President Reagan will preside over a budget deficit as large as all the budget deficits put together of all the presidents in the history of our country.

Most people in this country would not mind going through a period of pain and suffering if there was some light at the end of the tunnel. President Reagan would tell you that there is some light, but I don't see it. The Federal Reserve has panicked; they are producing money and bringing the interest rates down. But we're still in a deep, long recession. I figure the outlook is bad, though I hope I'm wrong.

Q: The hostage crisis, needless to say, was a low point for Carter. Perhaps the rescue mission is seen as the biggest blunder by the Carter administration. How do you view it now, being one of the people who supported it at the time?

A: I've had a lot of time to think and reflect on it. And there's still no question in my mind that the mission was well-planned, well-led; we just had some really bad luck.

We knew there were only three to four guards with weapons at the compound; and these weren't disciplined troops, these were radical students who had seized the embassy and got their hands on automatic weapons. We had such good intelligence that we knew that guard X, for example, stood at a certain point of the compound and usually didn't even carry his weapon. We knew that guard Y sat down and slept sometimes. If we had gotten in, the handful of people there with weapons would have been no match for the Delta team.

It's easy to say after-the-fact that there were not enough helicopters. If we sent too many helicopters, the Soviets would have spotted us on the way in, and people would say that we hadn't been lean enough.

Q: You reveal in your book that you met personally with then-Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh in an attempt to resolve the crisis. What was your reaction to his recent execution?

A: My wife and I were driving along the eastern shore of Maryland when I heard about it. I felt the grief you would feel learning that anybody in the prime of his life was lined up against a wall and sprayed with bullets. But I wasn't overcome with personal grief, because he was not a friend of mine; we were adversaries with a common purpose. We (the Carter administration) were trying to free our people; he thought (the hostage situation) was hurting the Iranian revolution.

I only saw him twice. So when I heard he had been killed, I just felt sorry for him. Here was a guy who had traveled with Khomeini from Iraq to Paris, gone back with Khomeini to Tehran; he was partially responsible for the revolution. I thought what a strange, sad, twisted event that was, because Khomeini used to say that (Ghotbzadeh) was like his son. And here he was, assassinated for allegedly plotting to kill Khomeini.

Q: In your book, you deny a number of accusations about you made during your term in office: That you had looked down some woman's dress and made a rude comment, that you used cocaine. Why didn't you come out fighting at the time? Instead, your reaction was to withdraw.

A: If you're a baseball player or a rock star or in a political office, you become a prisoner of these perceptions that people have of you. Just in the space of eight or 10 months, I became perceived as a buffoon and an object of controversy. Once it happened, there was no way to turn it around. Once Gerald Ford had bumped his head a couple of times, everybody was looking for him to bump his head again.

My problems started with a gossip columnist saying these frivolous things about me. My tendency was to treat it as gossip and not to pay a lot of attention to it. And then I turn on the evening news and see John Chancellor talking about it! What surprised me was the speed with which those frivolous things, which were not true, were treated as hard news by the media.

Q: I was surprised to read in your book that you intended to leave the White House at the end of 1980, whether or not Carter was re-elected. Were you burnt out on Washington?

A: I wasn't burnt out, I was ready for a change. It wasn't out of bitterness and it wasn't because of the pressure.

Roll-top desk is dream come true

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — One of my dreams of a lifetime came true the other day, via rail and truck freight from the heartland of America.

The reality of decades of desire weighed in at more than 200 pounds, including the wooden packing crate. It had to be unceremoniously kicked off the tailgate, the way they used to unload rations and ammo from cargo planes in Vietnam, because the delivery van didn't come equipped with a hydraulic lift. My dream box thudded onto the lawn with a sickening bounce that dug out a two inch divot but luckily left the contents unscarred: a handsome golden oak rolltop desk.

Every newspaper scribbler worth his weight in bent paperclips dreams of someday pouring out his soul at a rolltop desk, perhaps in fanciful homage to Benjamin Franklin or Mark Twain or the feisty weekly newspaper editor he means to become when the rat race has run its course.

The mythology of the profession religiously requires a rolltop desk as the high altar for our daily sacrifice of distilling blood and sweat and stomach acids into frail sentences and wobbly paragraphs. Artist Norman Rockwell always portrayed sagacious editors in green eyeshades tipping back in their swivel chairs at cluttered rolltop desks.

Ben Hecht's and Charles MacArthur's stage directions for "The Front Page," the best play ever written about this overly romanticized biz, specifically call for "one elegant item" in the disorderly press room of the Chicago Criminal Courts Building: "a huge ornate black walnut rolltop desk."

WHERE ELSE could star reporter Hildy Johnson hide the escaped prisoner Earl Williams?

The desk of my heart's desire isn't black walnut and doesn't have room enough beneath its rolling top to sequester a jockey on the lam from pulling up his nag in the fifth at Belmont, but it's a thing of beauty fulfilling dreams within dreams.

Harry and Helen Obitz, who have been fanatically involved in restoring Red Cloud, Neb., to the way it was when Willa Cather lived there from 1884 to 1890, found the desk at an auction in Kearney, Neb. Now, Willa Cather happens to be my favorite American novelist. It was while visiting her restored home in Red Cloud that I told Harry and Helen about my lifetime ambition to someday peck away at a rolltop desk, just as I'm doing right now.

The desk they happened on not only dates to Willa Cather's time but may even have played a part in her real life and the fiction she wove from it. Made in London, it originally belonged to Silas Garber, the third governor of Nebraska who erected the Farmers and Merchants' Bank Building on Webster Avenue, the main stem in Red Cloud. The bank went broke, but the handsome red brick building now houses the Willa Cather Museum. Willa greatly admired the courtly old man and used to visit him after school. Garber became the model for Capt. Daniel Forrester in "A Lost Lady," the pioneer railroad man who had strung hundreds of miles of Burlington track across the prairie before ending his days as a bankrupt invalid with a charming, unfaithful wife.

Mulligan's Stew

Is is possible that young Willa Cather wrote in her diary at this desk, while the old banker busied himself with a client, or at least did some of her homework at it? Everything is possible when dreams come true.

AFTER THE bank failure, the desk passed to Dr. Henry Cook, who was the pharmacist in Red Cloud for nearly 50 years and built the first red brick building on the east side of the street, which also still stands. Willa Cather worked for Dr. Cook after school and on weekends, taking her pay in a magic lantern device for showing picture slides and in the pretty wallpaper with the small red and brown roses that still decorates her attic room in the restored Cather house on Cedar Street. No doubt in those days the pigeonholes in this old desk were stuffed with prescriptions and bills and pill samples pushed by the traveling salesmen who got off at the Burlington station. Still, there might have been room enough for Willa to scribble the commencement address she delivered in 1890 for her three-member high school graduating class in the upstairs Opera House across the street.

JACKSONBORO, S.C. (AP) — Booby, a pet bear belonging to Ted Turner, is leading pursuers on a merry chase since her escape from the multimillionaire entrepreneur's Hope Plantation.

After a Charleston County policemen spotted Booby along a rural road Monday, a posse of plantation workers, officers, volunteers and a veterinarian gathered for a recapture attempt.

Unfortunately for the posse, a siren frightened Booby and she scooted her 250 pounds up a tree.

Undaunted, her pursuers tried to lure her down with a gallon of canned peaches. When that didn't work right away, they ate half the can themselves.

Dr. George Moore then aimed a gun loaded with a tranquilizer at Booby as members of the posse stretched out a canvas in which to catch the brazen bruin when she tumbled out of the tree.

But instead of falling down, Booby curled up for a nap among the limbs.

Plantation manager Johnny Godley then used a power saw to cut down the branch holding Booby.

Halloween death still set for man

HOUSTON (AP) — A man sentenced to die on Halloween for poisoning his 8-year-old son with cyanide-laced candy lost a third attempt to stay the execution, but his lawyers vowed to take the case back to a higher court.

U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling on Wednesday refused to stay the scheduled execution of Ronald Clark O'Bryan, dubbed the "Candy Man" by fellow inmates for his crime.

O'Bryan, 37, could become the first convict executed in Texas since 1964 and the first ever to die by lethal injection. Since the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the death penalty in 1974, five condemned men have been executed.

Defense attorneys Will Gray and Stanley Schneider argued that three potential jurors were dismissed improperly because they expressed reservations about the death penalty.

They also claimed the jury was not told to give consideration to favorable evidence presented during the trial's punishment phase nor adequately instructed on the range of punishment.

"We had 18 witnesses who got up and said he was a good, church-going fellow and the state presented nothing," said Gray, who also is handling appeals for 27 of the other 168 Death Row inmates.

Sterling rejected the arguments and refused to stay the execution.

Previous appeals have gone all the way to the Supreme Court and were turned down each step of the way.

Gray said he will go back to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans and then to the Supreme Court to try to stop the execution.

"You execute someone on Halloween so a judge can get some votes," Gray said of State District Judge Michael McSpadden, who last month ordered O'Bryan to die before sunrise on Halloween, exactly eight years after the boy's death.

McSpadden, who is running for reelection, told O'Bryan the Halloween execution date was "no accident. I picked it for you especially."

O'Bryan, a former Deer Park optician, was convicted of capital murder in the Halloween 1974 death of his son, Timothy.

The jury foreman at O'Bryan's trial said evidence that he murdered his son and intended to poison his daughter in hopes of collecting life insurance money was "overwhelming."

But O'Bryan has insisted he is innocent and said he won't change his story, even at his hour of execution.

"My last words would be no different than what I've said all along — I still maintain my innocence," he said.

Testimony showed O'Bryan told police he collected the "Giant Pixie Styx" candy responsible for his son's death while escorting his son, his daughter and the son of a friend on a trick-or-treat outing.

O'Bryan showed officers the suburban residence where he said he got the candy, but police determined the man who lived in the house alone had worked the night shift the evening the candy was handed out.

Another witness identified O'Bryan as a man who attempted to purchase cyanide at a chemical supply house.

An insurance agent also testified O'Bryan took out $15,000 insurance policies on his son and daughter shortly before Halloween. The agent said O'Bryan called the day after Halloween — just hours after his son's death — to inquire about collecting on the insurance policy.

O'Bryan's wife testified he handed out the candy to his son, his daughter, the son of a friend and to two children who came trick-or-treating at the door. All had been tainted with cyanide, but only Timothy opened and sampled the candy.

The boy got sick at once and collapsed in his father's arms.

Heroic boy just wants to forget ordeal

GALVESTON (AP) — Seven-year-old Scott McKenzie, hiding a missing ear and a scarred face under a cowboy hat, refuses to discuss the day he became a hero by saving his little sister and a friend from a marauding wolf-dog.

"He won't talk about that day," says his mother, Deborah McKenzie. "I think he's trying to forget."

Scott, also wearing cowboy boots, toured this southern Texas city Wednesday with his parents and two sisters, Casey, 9, and Carrie, the 3-year-old he rescued.

The family was flown from St. Louis to Galveston on Wednesday after the city chipped in to honor the boy.

Scott still bears scars from the March 21 attack by the black dog that leaped the fence into the McKenzies' backyard.

He was able to help his little sister and a neighbor, Kyle Naes, to the safety of a jungle gym before the dog, weighing more than 100 pounds, caught and severely mauled him.

Scott had to have more than 1,000 stitches to close his wounds.

One scar runs from the left corner of his mouth, angling upward past his left checkbone. His left ear is gone and he lost portions of both lips and one eyelid.

When Scott met with reporters Wednesday, he wouldn't answer most questions about the attack, frequently leaning back and covering his face with his straw cowboy hat.

"He told me the other day, 'I wish I could be me again,'" Mrs. McKenzie said.

She said some of the wounds the boy suffered are not visible.

"He gets depressed," she said. "He's full of a lot of anger. He gets destructive and uncontrollable before surgery."

She said he has suffered nightmares and bedwetting, and has a strong yearning to return to the past.

Scott has undergone 10 operations and faces at least that many more over the next three to five years, Mrs. McKenzie said. Shortly after the family returns to Missouri, Scott will undergo a delicate operation in which cartilage from his rib cage will be used to reconstruct his ear.

The dog, which dragged the boy 70 feet across the yard, was killed by police officers after the attack.

Tonight, Scott will be honored at a dinner-dance to raise funds to help pay his medical bills, which already have reached $30,000 and are expected to go much higher.

The youngster also will go horseback riding and fishing in Galveston Bay in a boat lent by oil well firefighter Red Adair. The family returns to St. Louis on Sunday.

The trip was organized by Galveston County Sheriff's Lt. John Leonard, who read about Scott's heroism in a local newspaper. Leonard sent Scott a card, along with an honorary sheriff's badge.

Later, he sent a second letter inviting the family to be city guests. After that, Leonard said, donations started pouring in from all across the nation.

Blood found on glove of missing man

DALLAS (AP) — A laboratory test has revealed that a glove belonging to missing businessman Edson E. "Ted" Beckwith was stained with human blood, according to a Texas Ranger.

However, the test did not indicate how recently the glove had been stained with type O blood, according to Texas Ranger Lloyd Johnson.

"It could have been a week old or a month old," Johnson said Wednesday. "Now we need to find out what kind of blood Mr. Beckwith has."

Beckwith, a financial consultant and former executive vice president with Braniff International, disappeared Oct. 14 while driving from Omaha, Texas, to his North Dallas home.

Beckwith left Dallas Oct. 12 to consult with one of his clients, an oil equipment company in Omaha. Authorities said Beckwith left Omaha en route to Dallas for his wife's birthday celebration.

His abandoned car was found on a rural road in Brashear, about 75 miles east of Dallas, last Friday by a Hopkins County deputy sheriff. The keys were found in the ignition and Beckwith's blue sports jacket was hanging on a hook in the back seat, authorities said.

Searchers found the gloves nearby on Sunday.

Investigators were not sure until Wednesday whether the stain, about the size of a dime, was blood or red mud.

"Whether or not he had them on that day — I don't know," Johnson said.

A volunteer group of searchers is continuing to look for Beckwith. Authorities have declined to say if the disappearance was the result of foul play.

Keller McCrary, a group officer, said that although there have been no ransom demands, it is "possible that he's even been held hostage.

Clements adds to anti-crime package for '83 Legislature

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has added several new proposals to the anti-crime package he plans to take before the 1983 Legislature.

Clements, who will present legislative recommendations to the incoming Legislature whether he is re-elected or not, announced previously that stricter driving while intoxicated and drug controls would be asked.

The new anti-crime proposals include:

—Closing of loopholes that permit abuse of the insanity defense.

—Allowing the use in trials of evidence discovered by police officers "in course of actions taken in the good faith and reasonable belief that their action was legitimate."

—Requiring defendants to inform trial judges of any defects in indictments prior to the trial.

Interstate 20 in Beaumont was closed for three hours this morning when an accident involving a gas tanker truck and an automobile spilled 5,000 gallons of gas and diesel fuel on the road. The tanker and car were headed in the same direction when the driver of the car lost control trying to avoid a vehicle that cut in front of him.

Son, thought dead, back with father

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who was told his young son had died is back home in Florida with the boy today — 14 months after his wife, who later vanished, left with the child.

Robert Wayne Deane Jr., 5, was scheduled to be adopted by another couple Wednesday — one day after his father, Robert Wayne Deane Sr., obtained a cour order giving him custody of the child.

Deane last saw the boy when his wife took the child and left their home in Orlando, Fla., 14 months ago, Deane's attorney said.

"It was the most incredible reunion you could ever imagine," said E. Stanley Topek, Deane's attorney.

Topek said a court order giving the father custody ended what was "probably one of the most rewarding cases I've ever participated in."

Deane himself refused to discuss the case beyond one statement which he made through his lawyer.

"It's the happiest day of my life and I want to thank everybody for helping get my son back and thank the people for taking care of my son," Topek quoted him as saying.

Gina Deane, the boy's mother, has not been seen since last November, when she failed to show up for a court hearing which placed the boy in a foster home, said Judy Hay, a community relations spokeswoman for the Harris County Child Welfare Department.

Linda Thompson, an attorney for the agency, said the department had been unable to find Deane because Mrs. Deane told workers the boy's father had abandoned them and said she did not know where he was.

Ms. Hay said the boy was scheduled to be adopted by another couple Wednesday, but said they had not actually met him.

Topek said Mrs. Deane called her husband several times in the last year from different cities, usually to ask for money.

Deane testified he always asked about his son and offered to send money for airline tickets so the woman and child could return to Orlando. But in the most recent phone call Oct. 8, Topek said the woman told Deane that Robert Jr. had died of leukemia four days before.

"He was in such a confused state of mind on hearing this that he really didn't know what to believe," Topek said.

Deane's desperation drove him to question his mother-in-law, something he and the private investigator he had hired had been afraid to do before, the lawyer said. Topek refused to identify Mrs. Deane's mother.

SMU pro-white group says it's disbanded

DALLAS (AP) — The president of an all-male white students' club at Southern Methodist University says the group has disbanded in the wake of student criticism and national media attention.

"Students for Equality is completely dissolved," club president James T. Robison said in a letter to SMU officials Wednesday.

But Robison declined to state why the the club, which lasted only two weeks, disbanded.

"Considering the present circumstances, the Students for Equality request the student senate to withdraw recognition of our organization," Robison wrote.

Originally named the Association of White Students, the group was formed to fight "reverse discrimination" at SMU through abolishing special programs for minorities and women.

Joe Dooley, Student Senate president, said he received a letter from Robison Wednesday morning asking the senate to withdraw its recognition of the group.

"At this point, he's given us no reason why," Dooley said.

Robison has "gone into seclusion," said a pledge at the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity house where Robison is a member.

Dooley said he thought the national publicity the group received and pressure on campus were behind the move.

"He felt he was never going to get his cause or educate everyone to what he wanted to say because...no one liked them," Dooley said.

"I think it's very good that they have disbanded," he added. "Now we in the student government and in the administration can go on with one of our top priorities, that of affirmative action at SMU."

Dooley said no formal vote by the senate was necessary.

"If an organization wants to disband, then they are," he said. "As far as we're concerned, they're no longer recognized at Southern Methodist University."

SMU president L. Donald Shields refused to interfere with the decision by the senate Oct. 5 to recognize the group. Students had protested the move.

A meeting Tuesday to question Shields about the 25-member group was attended by more than 100 students.

Second man links Harrelson to scene

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A second prosecution witness has placed Charles V. Harrelson at an exclusive townhome complex hours before U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was murdered there by a single shot in the back.

Wesley Coddington, a former cab driver, Wednesday identified Harrelson as the man he delivered to the DiJon Townhomes the night before Wood was assassinated.

After Harrelson got out of the taxi, Coddington said, he saw a second man emerge from some bushes and appear to argue briefly with the passenger. He described the second man as wearing a fatigue jacket and looking "scrappy" and out of place.

It was the first testimony that anyone besides Harrelson could have been at the murder scene.

Defense attorney Tom Sharpe Jr. today was expected to complete his cross-examination of the former cab driver.

Both Coddington and San Antonio attorney Chrys Lambros — who also placed Harrelson at the complex — have admitted their memories were enhanced by FBI hypnotism sessions.

Prosecutors also introduced Wednesday parking records showing that a car registered to Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann Starr, was parked at the San Antonio International Airport intermittently for 13 days before the May 29, 1979, assassination.

It is during this period that Harrelson, a convicted hitman, was in town "stalking" the judge to fill a $250,000 "contract," the government contends.

Harrelson, 44, is charged with murder. Mrs. Harrelson, 41, is charged with perjury and obstruction of justice. A third defendant, Elizabeth Chagra, 28, is charged with murder conspiracy.

Mrs. Chagra's husband, Jimmy, will be tried for murder later in a separate trial. Chagra, who was scheduled to be tried before Wood at the time of the judge's death, is accused of paying Harrelson to shoot the judge.

Coddington testified he picked up a man at the airport May 28, 1979, and drove him to Wood's apartment complex.

"He was carrying a small brown paper sack. The package had a torn corner and I could see a little black case inside," Coddington said. He said the sack was "something like you could carry a telescope in."

Under cross-examination by Sharpe, Coddington had trouble remembering how long he waited before reporting the incident to the FBI.

He said he told his wife the next day when he heard Wood was murdered, but did not go to the authorities until Nov. 25, 1980, about 18 months later.

"I told my wife about it, but she said these kind of people might kill everybody, so just forget about it," he said.

Students anti-short hems

ABILENE (AP) — Students at Abilene Christian University are giving short shrift to high fashion — skirts above the knees, that is.

A university committee has recommended an amendment to the school's dress code that would ban hemlines above the top of the knees, officials said Wednesday.

The committee of students, faculty and staff made the recommendation after their survey found most people on campus preferred the longer hemlines. But students, not administrators, started the complaints about the shorter hemlines, said associate dean of students Winnie Gibbs.

WTSU regent linked to rigging scheme

AUSTIN (AP) — A West Texas State University regent and highway contractor accused of perjury has been linked to a purported bid-rigging scheme by a taped telephone conversation introduced by federal prosecutors.

A government witness identified Charles Schmidt of Amarillo, president of Cooper and Woodruff Inc., as one of the voices on a tape of a 1981 conversation.

Schmidt, 51, faces two charges of lying to a federal grand jury investigating allegations of bid-rigging on state highway projects.

In the grand jury meeting on Jan. 22, 1981, Schmidt denied ever asking other contractors to help him rig bids or being asked to participate in bid rigging.

Robert H. "Bob" Stafford, a Lubbock highway contractor, on Wednesday identified Schmidt as one voice on the tape played for jurors, in which a conversation by two male voices referring to each other as "Charlie" and "Bob" was recorded.

Stafford said the conversation involved bid-rigging.

Prosecutors contend the bid-rigging activities, involving Panhandle and South Plains highway contractors, spanned a four-year period ending in 1980.

Man admits bid-rigging, faces up to eight years

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Fort Worth businessman faces up to eight years in prison following his guilty plea to participating in a bid-rigging scheme that cost Amtrak at least $500,000, authorities said.

Joseph Demetree entered the plea Wednesday to charges of mail fraud and conspiring to violate the Sherman Antitrust Act. He had pleaded innocent to the charges Monday, but agreed to a plea bargain after a jury was selected to hear the case.

Demetree, a co-owner of JLG Services, admitted he joined two other men in a scheme with Julius J. Brandimarte, a former Amtrak assistant chief engineer for construction and maintenance, and John L. Guinn, owner of John L. Guinn and Co. of Fort Worth.

Indictments contended Demetree and Guinn would agree to which of their companies should get contracts for constructing and servicing Amtrak facilities, then submit fictitious bids designed to win the contracts.

Valley of Peace, other settlements promise better times for Belize

By Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BELMOPAN, Belize — Twenty-nine families who fled from war-torn El Salvador have settled in the lush tropical countryside along the Belize River near here at a place called the Valley of Peace.

Corn and tomatoes the families planted in June have produced the first crops and food is piled in heaps inside the grass-thatched huts the refugees built as temporary homes. Stew pots simmer on crude stoves. There is the promise of more land by the end of the year and, in a grass-roofed school, the children are learning English.

"I saw people being killed," said Daniel Humano, 35, "and I didn't want my children to suffer, so I moved them here last year in September. We had nothing with us. Just our clothes. And now look. We have a new life."

Humano, his wife and two daughters (another child is on the way) were among the approximately 300,000 refugees who the office of the U.N. high commissioner for refugees says have been made homeless by political shifts and civil wars in Central America. In other countries of the region, most refugees remain homeless, many held in overcrowded camps where disease and hunger are widespread.

But Belize, independent from Britain for a year, wants to settle farmers on vast stretches of open land and it has a different attitude toward refugees than its neighbor countries.

Belize is providing farmland for the Salvadoran refugees either free or for a few dollars an acre — with a promise of the first clear title most have ever seen. The Valley of Peace is a pilot project, a 15,000-acre development for 200 families. The United Nations is paying most of the settlement costs.

Another plan is being developed to bring 2,500 farmers here from impoverished Haiti, settling them on rich, vacant land in the southern part of the country. The United States will pay for the Haitians' resettlement.

"It will be a net plus for the country," said Malcolm Richard Barneby, charge d'affaires of the U.S. Embassy in Belize. "It will not be a drain at all." Belize, he pointed out, is anxious to be self-sufficient in food — much of which is imported from Mexico — and it has land to spare. Only one-fifth of Belize's 8,866 square miles is cultivated.

The attorney general and minister of education in Prime Minister George Price's government, Said Musa, describes the settlement program as being "in the best interest of all."

"Remember, Belize was founded by refugees, by wave after wave of them — people who fled the wars in southern Mexico, the Carib Indians running away from persecution and our black Belizeans were brought in chains, as slaves," he said.

"We're sympathetic to the whole concept. It's part of our makeup."

The United Nations estimates there are perhaps 7,000 Salvadoran refugees in Belize, although the government says there are 2,500 — the discrepancy arising from the fact that definitions of "refugee" vary. Some of the Salvadorans came here as legal visitors and simply stayed.

Belize is about half black, with the rest mostly Latin, and some black political leaders worry that the inflow of Salvadorans may give the country a Latin majority. "We are striving for a balance," said Deputy Prime Minister C.L.B. Rogers, who is black, explaining the plan for bringing in Haitians.

The Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, an international agency headquartered in Geneva, is preparing recommendations for the plan under a $5 million grant from the United States, part of which will presumably be used for resettling the Haitians. It was decided they would be chosen from Haiti, not from among Haitians in the United States, to make sure of picking experienced farmers and not city workers.

The Valley of Peace lies six miles east of this little capital — population 4,000 — and between two settlements called Roaring Creek and Spanish Outlook. However, it is 15 miles by the roundabout road and across the swift, 100-foot-wide Belize River on a hand-cranked, winch-powered ferry.

"The Salvadorans are very hard workers and many of them have farming skills," said the Rev. John Waters, whose Belmopan Parish includes the little towns scattered along the river and jungle trails. "Take Daniel," he said, indicating a wiry Salvadoran who had swum the river to winch the ferry back to where the priest's truck was parked. "He studied at an agronomy school, and when he gets his land in November, he'll be a great help to the community."

Your horoscope

Friday, Oct. 22, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Two of history's top contributors to the arts were born on this date: composer Franz Liszt and the great stage actress Sarah Bernhardt. Also sharing your birthday: actress Catherine Deneuve, rising actor Tony Roberts and Hall of Fame first baseman Jimmy Foxx. Your feelings undergo dramatic change in the months ahead and you enter a much happier period of your life. Look to the future with confidence! Romance assumes a new importance. Tread carefully in business. Risk-taking can be hazardous to your bank account. Avoid gambling for even small stakes and scrutinize investments carefully. Businesses that have been established a long time do best.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Little of importance occurs today. Do yourself a good turn by catching up on paperwork and letter-writing. A romantic encounter will put you on "cloud nine" this evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Memories of recent problems are wiped out by the excitement of what you are now doing professionally. You mate shares your delight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A close friend gives you advice that can be turned into a cash bonanza. Act quickly! Threats, ultimatums will only get you into legal hot water.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A complete reversal of trends could be featured at place of employment. The boss pulls the cork on a bottleneck that was caused by a jealous co-worker.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Business is on the upswing as the work week draws to a close. Protect your credit by making payments on time. Friends prove helpful in solving a personal problem.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Certain pressures are lifted and you start the weekend in a happier frame of mind. Money you receive from a relative is a gift, not a loan. Romance changes your social plans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Neither borrow nor lend money today. If you want a little excitement in your life, call a friend and escape to the movies. Reach out for help and you will get it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You receive a special award or an unexpected job offer. A move to another city is a real possibility. Consult mate or partner before making final decision.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 22): Your intuition shows you a fascinating new way to earn money. Make a bid for career progress by asking for a raise or transfer. Curb a tendency to be extravagant.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Open your heart to the object of your affections. Defer making a major financial decision. Someone may try to play on your sympathies for a loan. refuse to be taken in.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are right to be skeptical about someone's extravagant promises or claims. Home entertainment can be fun and rewarding. Be practical about temporary setbacks.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ask loved one an important question. Shouldering new responsibilities will impress someone very influential. Return borrowed books or other articles.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Dble	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ◇.

For some, a 75 percent chance of success is more than adequate. But there are those who prefer a sure thing.

The bidding has several points of interest. Over West's takeout double, North's jump to three hearts was preemptive. It showed a distributional hand, little or no defense and at least four-card trump support. Since North was more than likely to hold a singleton for his preempt, South realized that the two hands could offer a reasonable play for ten tricks.

West led the king of diamonds, then cashed the queen as well, before shifting to a trump. Declarer realized that, if East held one of the two missing spade honors, his game was assured. So he won the trump lead in dummy and ran the jack of spades to West's queen. West exited with a trump, taken on the board. Declarer repeated the spade finesse and found that this was the one time in four that the contract was due to fail.

Even if the informatory double had not alerted declarer to the possibility that both spade honors might be offside, he should have made his contract. An elimination would have guaranteed ten tricks regardless of how the spade honors were located.

After winning the trump in dummy at trick three, declarer should have ruffed a diamond high. Ace of clubs and a ruff would have provided the entry to the table for another diamond ruff. Now declarer can eliminate the club suit with a ruff in dummy, and then draw the last trump with dummy's queen.

When declarer runs the jack of spades to West's queen, West is end played. He must either return a spade into declarer's combined tenace, or yield a ruff-sluff. Either way, declarer is assured of ten tricks.

French President Francois Mitterand, left, shakes hands with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel as Gemayel arrives at Paris' Elysee Palace for a meeting. French Premier Pierre Mauroy is at right. Gemayel arrived in France on Wednesday.

Gemayel wins favor in France

PARIS (AP) — Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, who says he wants another 26,000 peacekeepers sent to his country, headed to Rome today after winning favorable reactions in France and the United States to his request for a beefed-up peace force.

In a news conference here Wednesday, Gemayel said his visits to the U.S., French and Italian governments also had "the specific objective of extending the role of the multinational force" the three nations deployed in Beirut last month to maintain order following the slaughter at two Palestinian refugee camps.

Gemayel, a rightist Christian sworn to unite his divided nation, repeated his oft-made demand for withdrawal of the Syrian, Palestinian and Israeli forces that made Lebanon a battleground this summer.

He told the news conference that he wants the 3,800-man multinational force, which was the second foreign peace force sent to Beirut since the June 6 Israeli invasion of Lebanon, increased to "about 30,000 troops."

A spokesman for Gemayel said the additional troops could come from the three countries already participating in the peace force, "or possibly from other nations."

"Many friendly powers have offered to help Lebanon restore its security," the president told the news conference.

The Lebanese leader met earlier with President Francois Mitterrand, whose spokesman said France was willing to help with all Lebanese requests, including sending more troops. The spokesman said no figures were mentioned.

President Reagan told Gemayel on Tuesday that he would give "serious consideration" to expansion of the size and role of the force, a senior U.S. official told reporters in Washington.

But the official said nothing specific was said about increasing the U.S. contingent of 1,200 Marines. France has 1,600 troops in the force and Italy has 1,000.

Gemayel did not confirm a report that the United States and France would head a World Bank consortium to assist in the rebuilding of his war-devastated country.

But he said his government would ask the Lebanese communities abroad to demonstrate "national solidarity" by investing in their mother country. He said some Lebanese groups overseas are already forming a consortium he hoped would supply "substantial aid."

Gemayel appeared at the news conference with Walid Jumblatt, a leftist Moslem leader whose militiamen have been fighting the private army commanded by Gemayel's family for six years.

The Lebanese president introduced Jumblatt to reporters as "my friend" and shook hands with the Moslem in symbolic reconciliation.

Rome's security for Gemayel tight one day after embassy bombing

ROME (AP) — Helicopters flew overhead and guards were deployed with submachine guns as authorities took extraordinary security precautions today for the arrival of Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, one day after the bombing of the Lebanese Embassy here.

Gemayel came from Paris, where he called for increasing the multinational peacekeeping force in his country to 30,000 troops, nearly 10 times its present size.

The president's special Middle East Airlines jetliner touched down at Rome's Ciampino military airport at 10 a.m. (5 a.m. EDT) and the Maronite Christian president left immediately for the Vatican and an audience with Pope John Paul II.

He also was scheduled to confer with President Sandro Pertini and visit the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, which is headed by fellow Lebanese Edouard Saouma.

As police helicopters hovered overhead, patrol cars cruised the route of Gemayel's motorcade. Riot police wearing bulletproof vests and toting submachine guns guarded key points along the path.

An FAO source described security at the U.N. complex as "overwhelming."

The stiff precautions for Gemayel — whose brother, President-elect Bashir Gemayel, was killed in a Beirut bombing in September — apparently were tied to Wednesday's explosion outside the Lebanese Embassy in Rome.

No one has claimed responsibility for the blast, which injured a bystander. Police said they were searching for two young blonde women seen fleeing the scene.

Before leaving Paris, Gemayel told a news conference Wednesday that his visits to the U.S., French and Italian governments also had "the specific objective of extending the role of the multinational force" the three nations deployed in Beirut last month to maintain order following the slaughter at two Palestinian refugee camps.

Gemayel, a rightist Christian sworn to unite his divided nation, repeated his oft-made demand for withdrawal of the Syrian, Palestinian and Israeli forces that made Lebanon a battleground this summer.

Hashish crop among casualties of war in Lebanon

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BAALBECK, Lebanon (AFP) — Among the lesser known casualties of the Lebanese war are the hashish growers, whose bumper crop this year has few buyers due to the closure of traditional export channels.

On the slopes of Mount Lebanon, not far from Syria, the hemp has already been harvested. After a few days in the sun to dry off, it is brought into the houses to be stored.

The leaves, piled up on the floors, have already turned yellow and their scent fills the room. "This year, there has been a big crop of everything — apples, vegetables and especially hashish," one grower commented.

Since the civil war in the mid-1970s, hemp production has increased spectacularly in Lebanon.

From being limited to remote mountain areas, it spread to the Hermel Plateau, where the farmers have given up growing fruit and vegetables for this more valuable cash crop.

"Before the war, things were simple. To get the stuff to the ports between Tripoli and Beirut, you just had to pay off each army you met on the way," a grower said.

In those days everybody was happy with the arrangement, he said — the banks because deposits were flourishing, the authorities because of the influx of foreign exchange and the militia, whatever side it was on, because the hashish shipments provided ready cash.

But the war following the Israeli invasion this summer put an end to all that. The closing of Lebanese ports and particularly the Israeli and later multi-national naval patrols offshore dealt a serious blow to the drug trade.

The bombardment of the Bekaa region and of roads leading to Syria — another traditional outlet — also worsened the situation, the grower said.

Meanwhile, as the unsold hashish piles up, prices paid to growers have dropped because of the heavy crop this year, from 500 to 400 Lebanese pounds ($115 to $92) a kilogram.

"Growers are desperatej They were unable to sell all their last year's production and they don't know what to do with this year's at all," a Baalbeck inhabitant said.

The war also hit the clandestine laboratories, which processed opium, mainly from Turkey, and South American cocaine for reshipment to Europe.

Sitting around a table, a few hashish producers spoke cautiously of the future: "We want peace restored, foreign troops to leave and the Lebanese army to be deployed in our region," one said.

"At least things will be clear," he added, admitting that for weeks he had been seeking new "rails," as the outlets for the drug are called.

Another producer said he thought the Israelis might invade the Bekaa region to drive out the Syrians and Palestinians. "We don't want that because we already control the Israeli market," he said.

Israel's tourism suffering

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — The latest casualty from the war in Lebanon is Israel's multi-million-dollar tourism industry.

According to government and industry officials, the number of tourists visiting Israel has dropped by more than 20 percent since June, when Israel invaded Lebanon. The loss to the Israeli economy from such a decline, projected over a year, could be $300 million, the government's Ministry of Tourism estimates.

Tourism has declined during every war Israel has fought in its 34-year history, but following the fighting it has generally rebounded strongly. By early last month, with the dramatic siege of Beirut no longer on the front pages of the world's newspapers, officials here said they had hoped the expected post-war recovery was about to begin.

But then came the massacre of Palestinian civilians by Lebanese Christian militias in the West Beirut refugee camps, plunging Israel into new controversy and further clouding the country's image.

"The turning point was the massacre," said Zvi Rimon, the spokesman for the ministry.

Voters to weigh law, order bills on state ballots

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

A proposal to restore the death penalty in Massachusetts and a crackdown on bail in three other states are among law-and-order ballot measures voters will be considering on Nov. 2.

Arizona, Florida and Illinois ballots feature referenda aimed at making it easier for judges to keep accused criminals in jail while awaiting trial. Florida voters also will consider a ballot question to allow judges and juries to consider evidence even if police obtain it illegally.

Massachusetts, which has not had an execution since 1947, will vote on whether to restore the death penalty. Even if the referendum is approved, followup legislation would still be needed. Michael Fields, spokesman for a coalition of groups opposing the death penalty, said up to $200,000 will be spent on media advertising aimed at defeating the referendum.

New Jersey and Rhode Island voters will weigh proposals to build new prisons. Nevada will consider a measure that would make it more difficult for convicts serving lengthy sentences to be paroled.

And while California weighs a gun control proposition, New Hampshire and Nevada vote on state constitutional amendments guaranteeing the right to bear arms.

THE BAIL PROPOSALS in Arizona, Florida and Illinois are part of a growing trend in the United States to deny bail to defendants who are considered a danger to the community if they are released while awaiting trial.

Traditionally, courts have said bail must be set at the minimum amount which would reasonably assure the defendant's appearance at trial. Denying bail or requiring a cash bond higher than necessary violates the presumption of innocence, according to traditional rulings. Out of an estimated 11 million arrests in this country each year, only about 80,000 defendants are kept in jail instead of released on bail, according to studies.

However, the move toward "preventive detention" has grown as studies show that 1 of every 6 people out on bail is arrested for a new crime before coming to trial, and the more serious the first charge, the more likely the defendant is to commit violence while out on bail.

Thirty states now allow judges making bail decisions to also consider whether the defendant is dangerous and might commit crimes of violence if released, according to the Pretrial Services Research Center in Washington.

Arizona Attorney General Bob Corbin said the proposal there "would allow judges to take into account the danger posed by the defendant on bail before trial. Too many people are released before trial simply because they have enough money to post bail."

THE AMERICAN CIVIL Liberties Union opposes the ballot questions.

"The only proper purpose of bail is to ensure that the accused shows up for trial," said Susan Bandes, an ACLU lawyer in Chicago. She said that if the referendum is approved by Illinois voters, it probably will be challenged in the courts.

Another proposal in Florida would strike the state's constitutional "exclusionary rule," the traditional legal doctrine that bars judges and juries from considering evidence the police obtain illegally — such as a confession made without the required police warning that the accused has the right to remain silent and the right to an attorney.

In Nevada, voters will decide whether the state constitution should be amended to allow the Legislature to prevent the granting of parole to offenders whose original sentences did not allow release.

Assemblyman Nicholas Horn said the amendment would correct a "real deception" in the law which allows even defendants sentenced to life in prison without parole to be paroled within 10 to 15 years.

ANOTHER PROPOSED Nevada constitutional amendment would "confer a right upon private citizens to keep and bear arms for their defense and security and other lawful purposes."

"Passage of this amendment would prohibit the state Legislature from enacting restrictive gun control laws," Secretary of State William Swackhamer said.

A similar ballot question in New Hampshire would allow citizens to "keep and bear arms in defense of themselves, their families, their property and the state."

In both states, the proposed amendments are opposed by advocates of gun control. "We need to move away from the Wild West mentality where everybody takes the law into his own hands," New Hampshire state Rep. Barbara Zeckhausen said.

In California, Proposition 15 would ban the importing of guns to the state and impose a six-month jail term for carrying an unlicensed handgun. It is sponsored by a group called Californians Against Street Crime, but is hotly opposed by the National Rifle Association and the 125,000-member Gun Owners of California.

In New Jersey, voters will consider a $170 million bond issue to build two new 500-bed medium security prisons and make improvements in overcrowded county jails. And the Rhode Island proposal would provide $8.5 million for expansion and renovations in state prisons.

Chicago Sun-Times faces strike threat

CHICAGO (AP) — Negotiators for the Chicago Sun-Times and The Newspaper Guild worked against a strike deadline today in an effort to head off the first walkout by editorial employees in nearly 50 years.

"Our deadline of 10 a.m. (CDT today) for a new contract stands, and if there isn't one by then we'll be on the streets," said union spokesman Larry Finley.

Virginia Butts, a Sun-Times spokeswoman, said Wednesday, "We've never had a strike by the guild in 48 years, and we hope that these talks will reach a fruitful conclusion."

She declined to say what action the paper might take in the event of a strike.

Talks began anew at 6 a.m. after Guild Local 71 set the terms it would require for a three-year pact, Finley said.

Raises of 10.5 percent in the first year, 9.5 percent in the second year and 9.5 percent in the third year were among the terms, along with increases in medical and auto benefits and a stipulation that video display tubes be examined at least twice during the course of the contract to detect possibly damaging radiation, Finley said.

The company asked for a three-year contract instead of the traditional two-year pact, he said.

Finley said management's most recent wage offer was a raise of 5.5 percent, which he said "is less than their earlier offer" when negotiations began last spring. The current contract expired May 31.

The top minimum for a Sun-Times reporter with five years' experience is $600 a week, he said, adding that "there are a number of new people who are under that."

ALEX STINNETT JR., DBA, AL'S LOUNGE IS MAKING APPLICATION TO THE TEXAS ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE COMMISSION FOR A MIXED BEVERAGE PERMIT ON THE ADDRESS OF 211 S.LEE, MIDLAND, MIDLAND CO., TX.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF
J. E. MENDEZ, M.D., P.A.
I, the undersigned natural person, a subscriber to these Articles of Association and a doctor of medicine duly licensed to render services as such under the laws of the State of Texas, do hereby form a professional association under the Texas Professional Association Act, and do hereby adopt the following Aritcles of Association for such association.
ARTICLE ONE
NAMES, ADDRESS AND PRINCIPAL OFFICE
1.1 Name and Address. The name and address of the Association shall be J. E. MENDEZ, M.D., P.A., 2407 West Louisiana, Midland, Texas 79701.
1.2 Principal Office. The principal office and permanent address for the transaction of business of this Association shall be the address stated in Section 1.1 of this Article.
1.3 Registered Agent and Address. The address of its initial registered office is 2407 West Louisiana, Midland, Texas 79701, and the name of its initial registered agent at such address is J. E. Mendez, M.D.
ARTICLE TWO PURPOSE
The purpose of the Association is to conduct successfully those professional services that a doctor of medicine, duly licensed under the laws of the State of Texas, is authorized to render, including, but not limited to, the practice of medicine and surgery, to aid the sick and afflicted, to encourage scientific study, to promote investigation in medical research, to promote better business administration in this professional work, to furnish related laboratory and clinical services, to own and hold such real and personal property as will be useful or necessary to the successful operation of the foregoing activities; provided, however, that such professional services shall always be rendered only through officers, employees and agents who are duly licensed under the laws of the State of Texas to practice medicine therein.
Subject to Part IV of the Texas Miscellaneous Corporation Act, the Association may do all and everything necessary and proper for the accomplishment of the stated purposes herein or the attaining of any of the objects or the furtherance of any of the purposes enumerated in these Articles in Association or any amendment thereof, necessary or incidental to the protection and benefit of the Association, and in general, either alone or in association with other firms, individuals, corporations or associations, to carry on any lawful pursuit necessary or incidental to the accomplishment of the purposes or the attainment of objects and the furthereance of such purposes or objects of this Association.
The foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as enumerating both objects and purposes of this Association, and it is hereby expressly provided that the foregoing numeration of specific purposes shall not be held to limit or restrict in any manner the purposes of this Association otherwise permitted by law.
ARTICLE THREE
DURATION AND CONTINUITY
3.1 Duration. The duration of this Association shall be perpetual subject to to Section 8 of Article 1528f of the Revised Civil Statutes of the State of Texas. No member shall have the power to dissolve the Association by his or her independent act of any kind.
3.2 Continuity. The Association shall not be terminated, disolved or in any similar manner affected by the death, insanity, incompetency, conviction for felony, resignation, withdrawal, transfer of membership, retirement or expulsion of any one or more of the members (except the last surviving member), the admission of or transfer of membership to any new member or members, or the happening of any other event, which under the law of the State of Texas and under like circumstances, would work a dissolution of a partnership.
ARTICLE FOUR ORIGINAL MEMBER
The name and address of the sole original member of this Association, who is a doctor of medicine, duly licensed under the laws of the State of Texas to render services as such, is:
Name
J. E. MENDEZ, M.D.
Address
1909 Brunson,
Midland, Texas 79701
MANAGEMENT
5.1 Directors. The Association shall be governed by a Board of Directors elected by the members. The initial Board of Directors shall consist of one (1) director; provided, however the number of directors may be increased or decreased from time to time by amendment to the Bylaws of the Association, subject to the requirement that there shall always be at least one (1) director.
The name and address of the sole initial director is as follows:
Name
J. E. MENDEZ, M.D.
Address
1909 Brunson,
Midland, Texas 79701
5.2 Officers. The Association shall be represented by officers elected by the Board of Directors. Officers and members of the Board of Directors shall be members of the professional association. Officers need not be members of the Board of Directors except that the President shall be a member of the Board of Directors.
ARTICLE SIX
BYLAWS
The members of this Association hereby delegate to the Board of Directors the power and authority to make, alter and amend the Bylaws of this Association.
ARTICLE SEVEN CAPITAL
The authorized shares of ownership of the Association shall consist of One Hundred Thousand (100,000) shares with an original stated par value of $1.00 per share. The Board of Directors shall determine the consideration to be received for each share of ownership in the Association. None of the shares of this Association shall be issued to anyone other than an individual duly licensed to practice medicine in the State of Texas. The Association shall not commence business until it has received for the issuance of shares consideration of the value of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) consisting of money, labor done or property actually received.
ARTICLE EIGHT
TRANSFER OF SHARES
The shares of ownership of this Association shall only be in accordance with the laws of the State of Texas. The transfer of any share of ownership in the Association shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the Bylaws of this Association. The Bylaws of the Association may include any regulatory or restrictive provisions regarding a proposed sale, transfer or other disposition of any of the outstanding shares of this Association by any of its shareholders. The manner and form, as well as relevant terms, conditions and details, of the transfer or issuance of such shares may be prescribed by the Bylaws of the Association.
ARTICLE NINE
VOTERS RIGHTS
9.1 Number of Votes. Each outstanding share of ownership in the Association shall be entitled to one vote.
9.2 Manner of Voting. All questions shall be determined by a majority vote of shares present in person or by proxy, unless otherwise provided herein or in the Bylaws of the Association. All voting matters shall be governed by the Bylaws of the Association.
ARTICLE TEN
AMENDEMNT OR ALTERATIONS
These Articles of Association may be changed, altered, repealed or supplemented at any time upon the affirmative vote of two-thirds (2/3) of the outstanding shares of ownership in the Association.
ARTICLE ELEVEN
SEVERABILITY
If any phase, clause, sentence, paragraph or provision of these Articles of Association is void or illegal, it shall not impair or affect the balance of these Articles, and the undersigned original member of the Association does hereby declare that he would have signed and executed the balance of these Articles without such void or illegal provision.
ARTICLE TWELVE
STATUTORY BACKGROUND
This Association is organized under the provisions of the Texas Professional Association Act which shall govern all relationships between the Association and its employees, patients and creditors.
IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I, the undersigned person, have hereunto set my hand as the sole member of the Association this the 19th day of August, 1982.

When you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Let's face it, buying a used car is a traumatic experience for most people.

Unlike a new car purchase, you don't have a factory warranty to fall back on in case there's a problem. That's why we say, when you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Thousands of families have bought used cars at our place. We keep a great selection of models, and we hand-pick every car we offer for sale. In fact, we're as proud of our used cars as we are of our new ones.

Here are some examples:

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8½% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 13½% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.28%
