Violence erupts at Soweto funeral protest

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Thousands of black youths today burned barricades, stoned buses and marched in protest in Soweto as security forces fired warning shots and tear gas to block a mass funeral for at least 20 blacks killed by police.

Witnesses said one woman was killed when militant youths trying to enforce a protest strike chased her with whips in a train station and she fell in front of a train. They said a man was injured when he jumped from a train to escape the youths.

Tens of thousands of blacks in Soweto, the huge black township outside Johannesburg, joined the strike.

The Bureau for Information said eight people were arrested in a gasoline bomb incident, but gave no details. No casualties were reported.

"All Soweto has been declared an unrest area," said Brig. Gideon Loubscher, divisional police commander.

Police using tear gas and firing guns in the air blocked a mass funeral for blacks killed by police in the Aug. 26-27 riots in Soweto. Black clergy said they interposed themselves between mourners and security forces to prevent violence as mourners left the stadium with their hands raised.

"The funerals are off indefinitely," said Simeon Nkoane, Anglican bishop in townships east of Johannesburg, after he and other clergy met at St. Paul's Anglican church in Soweto to decide what to do.

The clergy had planned to defy a police ban on the mass funeral but yielded after police and soldiers surrounded St. Paul's. Witnesses said security forces fired tear gas near the church and two helicopters hovered overhead.

Nkoane said Sowetans would not accept police orders to bury the riot victims four at a time, and only on weekdays.

"People are angry. I've never seen them so angry," he said.

However, the Rev. David Nkwe, rector of St. Paul's, said police seized the bodies of 10 riot victims and buried them. It was not immediately clear whether the families of the dead agreed to the burials.

The South African Press Association said four riot victims were buried in separate services attended by 8,000 people.

Witnesses said police broke up a service for some riot victims at Regina Mundi Roman Catholic Church, and lobbed two tear gas canisters into a bus carrying people to a cemetery.

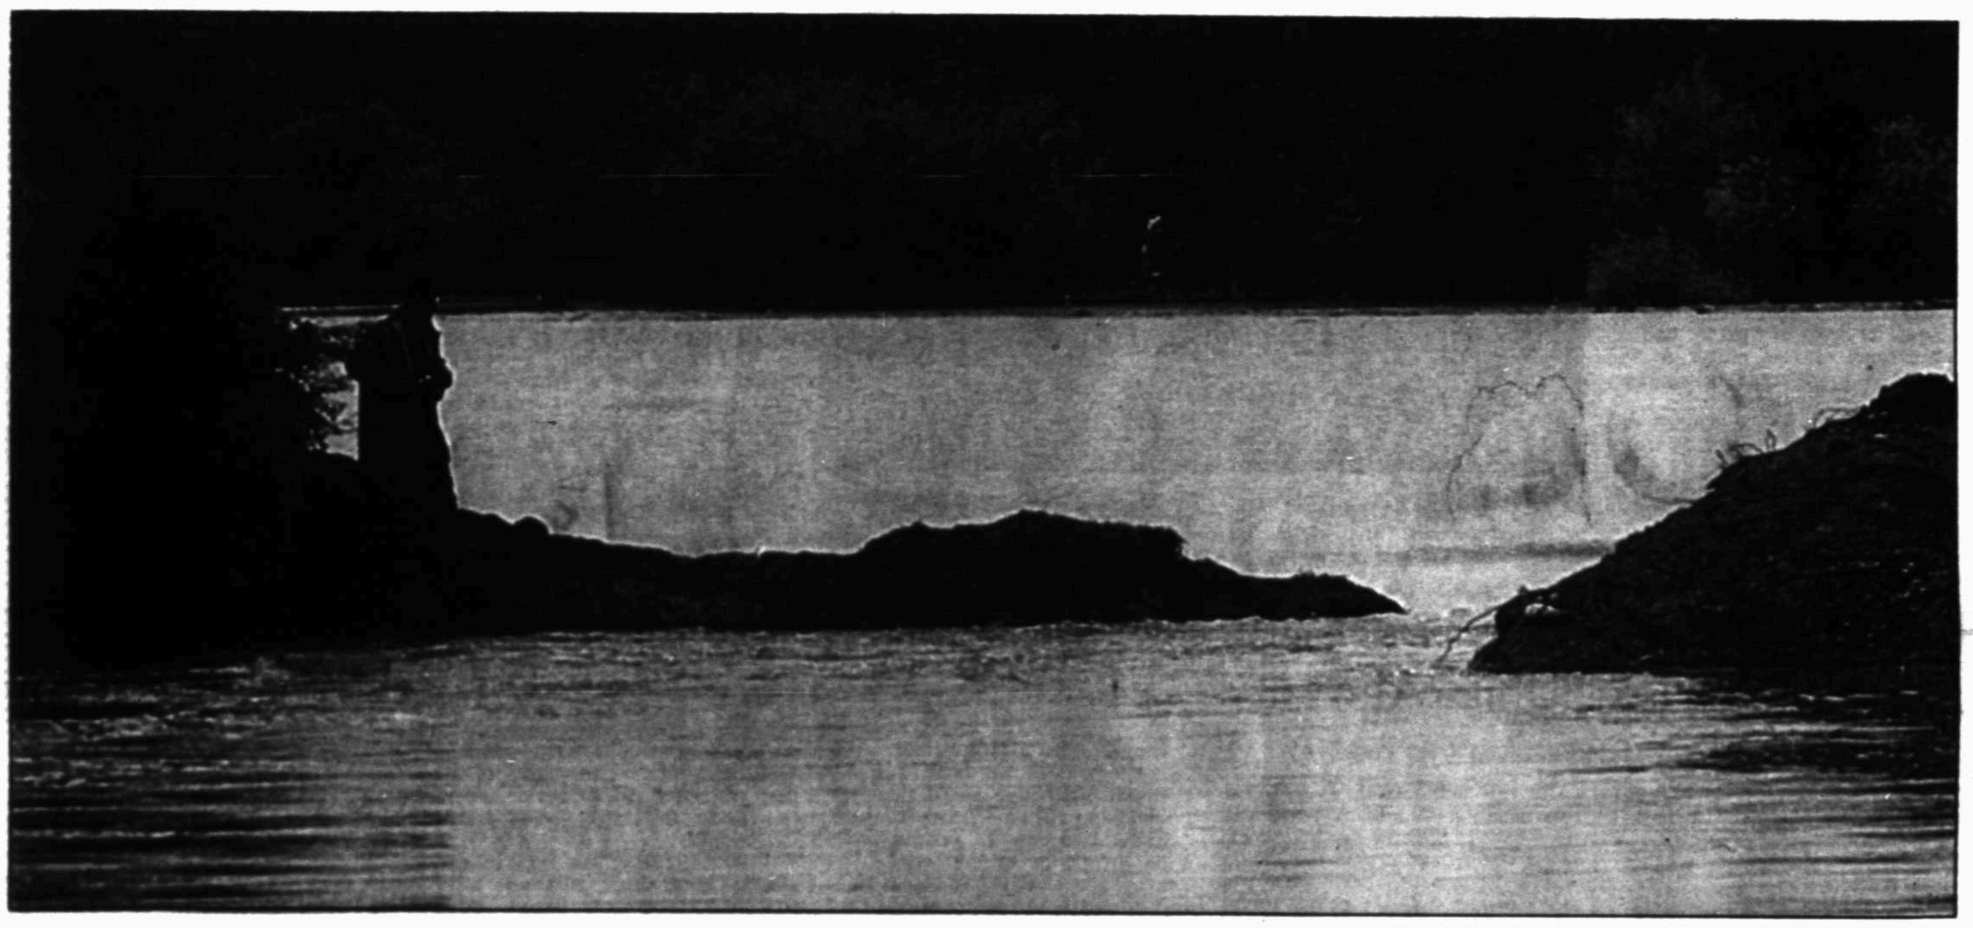

At the cemetery, witnesses said police fired more tear gas and moved in a dozen armored cars to disperse several thousand mourners.

More than 2,000 people had gathered for the planned mass funeral at Jabavu Stadium in Soweto's White City neighborhood. But witnesses said police entered the stadium and fired tear gas to disperse the crowd.

Some in the crowd said police removed two bodies that had been brought to the stadium.

Nkoane said clergy placed themselves between security forces and mourners who were leaving the stadium with their hands "raised high."

Two killed as rainfall continues

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Two Alpine women died Wednesday night as rain continued to pelt West Texas, flooding many areas, including some places in Midland and Odessa.

The barrage of rain — 7.04 inches in Midland since Monday — stranded about 30 local motorists this morning, flooded several westside Midland houses and closed a U.S. highway in Big Spring.

Also, Midland police had to cordon off Wadley and A streets and A Street and Loop 250 due to flooding, said Johnny Walker of the Midland Police Department.

Midland, which police said received 3.43 inches of rain Wednesday night and this morning, remains under a flash flood watch until 6 p.m.

Rainfall around the city ranged between 2.25 inches to 4.30 inches over the last 24 hours, according to the National Weather Service.

Clovis twin gets new heart

HOUSTON (AP) — A 13-year-old New Mexico girl suffering from a congestive heart disease is resting today after becoming the second in her family to receive a heart transplant, hospital officials said.

Dawn White, of Clovis, was in stable condition in Methodist Hospital after she received a donor heart Wednesday from the family of an 11-year-old boy killed by an accidental gunshot wound, spokesman David Blackshear said.

Dawn would have died soon if she had not received a heart transplant, doctors said.

The operation went smoothly with no complications, Blackshear said.

"In fact, it went real fast," he said.

Dawn's twin sister, Nona, underwent a heart transplant operation on her 13th birthday last September at the same hospital. Doctors soon discovered Dawn had contracted the same virus that triggered Nona's heart complications.

A Methodist Hospital donor team flew to Wichita Falls, Texas, early Wednesday morning to pick up the organ, Blackshear said.

Blackshear said the boy's family has requested anonymity and asked to talk with the girl's mother at some point after the operation. The boy, who was shot in the neck, was pronounced dead late Tuesday night, hospital officials said.

Dawn's status on the transplant procurement computer had been listed as urgent since last week, meaning all transplant centers in the country have been trying to obtain a heart for the girl as soon as possible, Blackshear said.

The teen-ager was admitted to the hospital last Wednesday and was in the intensive care unit since Thursday, Blackshear said.

Dr. James Young, a cardiologist, had said the teen-ager was steadily and progressively deteriorating.

Lewis expects new session to begin Monday

By STEVE LEVINE
and JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Giving up hope for the special session that ends today, House Speaker Gib Lewis said Wednesday another session will begin Monday, when he will stick with his plan to avoid higher taxes.

Gov. Mark White's office would not confirm the Monday starting date. Only the governor can call a special session. Members of both houses Wednesday offered little optimism that the next session will bring a resolution to the current stalemate over the state's $3.5 billion deficit.

A House-Senate panel negotiating budget cuts probably will reach no agreement by today and will resume its work next week, Lewis said after meeting with White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and the co-chairmen of the conference committee — Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple, and Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield.

After the meeting, Rudd said, "We talked, discussed, cussed and said we'd keep working. People got upset at times, but basically we left cordial."

The conference committee was set to meet Wednesday after the meeting, but the committee chairmen decided to wait until Thursday morning, admitting a last-minute compromise is unlikely. All said White offered no new plans to solve the state's budget shortfall.

A top Lewis staffer spent the day briefing small groups of House members on how various options of cutting, taxing and accounting maneuvers would affect the state's pressing cash-flow problem. With no action, cuts alone or Gov. Mark White's temporary 1.125-percent sales tax increase, the Treasury would have to write about $1.3 billion in hot checks by late December.

Daryl Dorcy, the speaker's director of research and policy development, told House members that Lewis still favors the cuts plus delaying $62-million-a-month payments to state pension plans until the Aug. 31, 1987 end of the fiscal year. That program, he said, would solve the cash-flow problem through the end of August.

If the Legislature enacts Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's proposed sales and gas tax increase along with a four-month delay of the pension payments, Dorsey said, the Treasury could stay solvent through Jan. 1, 1988. Sticking with Lewis' proposal and then passing a significantly larger tax bill next spring, he said, would achieve the same result.

Lewis again said a tax increase "is still the last thing we'll consider" but that if his plan doesn't bridge the shortfall, "then at that point, I'm going to be the first one to step forward and say, 'I'm ready for a tax bill.' "

"I'm not going to let the state go into the red."

Daniloff's wife says call to customs house form of Soviet harassment

MOSCOW (AP) — The wife of imprisoned American reporter Nicholas Daniloff today refused to go to a customs house where she had been summoned to sign a statement she feared could lead to smuggling charges.

Ruth Daniloff said Wednesday that Soviet authorities were threatening to charge her husband, already accused of spying, with trying to smuggle some heirlooms out of the country.

"They're saying we have smuggled our own things into the country and now we're trying to smuggle them out again," she said. "It's all just so stupid. It may just be part of the harassment against us."

Daniloff, correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, has been held without formal charges in east Moscow's Lefortovo Prison since Saturday.

The newsman, who took the Moscow post 5½ years ago and planned to leave soon for a new assignment in Washington, was arrested by eight KGB agents after a Soviet acquaintance gave him a package later found to contain maps marked secret and photographs.

Mrs. Daniloff said authorities called the magazine's Moscow office on Wednesday to say she should come to the Butovo customs clearing house outside Moscow to sign a statement concerning the jewelry.

Jeff Trimble, another correspondent for the magazine, said the office called customs officials this morning and "told them Ruth is not up to dealing with this matter now because of the difficulty her husband is having, and at this time she does not plan to do anything."

It was not clear what the statement said or what the consequences of not signing would be. Trimble said the customs officials at Butovo had no response.

Dallas Zoo giraffe to 'mother' okapi

DALLAS (AP) — No one is expecting a giraffe with stripes, but zoo officials say the implantation of a zebra-like animal into the womb of a giraffe will be a historic experiment.

Dallas Zoo officials plan to implant the embryo of an okapi, an animal which has disappeared from some of its native jungles in Zaire, Africa, although it is less threatened than some species.

Dr. Bonnie Rafael, zoo veterinarian and coordinator of the project, said the zoo hopes to transfer the embryo within two to six months.

If the implantation is successful, it will produce a newborn okapi delivered from a giraffe within 15 months. Officials say that the Dallas experiment, combined with research that other zoos have done in similar efforts, could lead to a nationwide embryo implantation program for endangered species.

"It can be very significant," said Ron Kagan, the zoo's director of mammals.

"That's if everything works, which is a big if," Kagan said.

Embryo transfers have ignited protest from religious groups in at least one U.S. city with complaints that the procedure is unnatural, said zoo spokeswoman Victoria Furber.

But some conservation groups say the procedure is a promising way to increase the number of births of endangered animals.

In the case of the okapi, possibly only a few hundred or few thousand of the mammals remain in Zaire. The okapi is chestnut-colored with partially striped legs and hind quarters.

Centennial of Apache surrender celebrated

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — One hundred years ago today, 36 Chiricahua Apaches, led by Geronimo and their chief, Naiche, surrendered in southeastern Arizona, marking the end of war with the white man.

Mirrors from U.S. Army mountaintop outposts flashed the news that Geronimo had given up.

By Geronimo's count, it was the fourth and final time he would turn himself in after having given the Army fits for years with his deadly guerrilla warfare in southeastern Arizona, southwestern New Mexico and northern Mexico.

The small band was banished from Arizona, along with more than 400 other Chiricahuas who had been living peacefully on the San Carlos Apache Reservation and even scouting for the Army. Brigadier Gen. Nelson A. Miles ordered them all indiscriminately sent into what became a 27-year imprisonment and exile.

Today marks the start of a four-day 100th anniversary commemoration of the surrender and the end of hostilities.

And for the first time, descendants of Geronimo and the Chiricahua Apaches, including 13 who were born in captivity as prisoners of war, were invited back to what was their homeland. Five are expected to attend.

"I've heard stories about it all my life and this is the first opportunity to see it. I'm anxious to see it, to see what we lost," said Mildred Cleghorn, 75, a former prisoner of war and tribal chairwoman of the Fort Sill, Okla., Apaches. She planned to attend with her daughter and three grandchildren.

"We want to teach our children and we also want to learn more about our background," said Berle Kanseah, 47, of the Mescalero Apaches in New Mexico.

His grandfather, Jasper Kanseah Sr., was a teen-ager with Geronimo at the time of the surrender and claimed Geronimo was his uncle, said Berle Kanseah, who also will attend.

Perot's offer hasn't aided in search for POW tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — A videotape purporting to show American prisoners in Laos continues to elude government officials despite a multimillion-dollar offer from Texas billionaire H. Ross Perot and the intervention of Vice President George Bush.

A spokesman for Bush confirmed Wednesday that the vice president discussed the mysterious tape with Perot, who subsequently pledged $4.2 million in an effort to obtain it.

Perot said in a telephone interview that "I was asked by our government to pursue this thing, to get the tape if it existed, and I said fine, it's a long shot, but I'll be glad to do it."

It was the first time Perot's involvement in efforts to obtain the tape has been publicly disclosed.

When the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee held a hearing last month on the effort to obtain the tape, Brig. Gen. James Shufelt, deputy director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, referred to "an individual in the private sector who has agreed to assist in any way he can in helping acquire information to resolve this issue."

Shufelt never identified the individual who apparently was Perot.

The general said he didn't know if the individual "made a decision monetarily to support the effort."

The tape never was produced and the money never was paid.

However, Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., another official who has played a major role in efforts to obtain the videotape, said Wednesday that "I am convinced of its existence and authenticity."

Hendon said he was shown a segment of the videotape by Robin Gregson, a British national who claims to have the evidence of Americans being held prisoner.

Hendon said the segment he saw "does not show any American prisoners" but, nonetheless, he added he remains convinced the full tape would provide such evidence.

"I won't go into the reasons," he said.

Marlin Fitzwater, spokesman for Bush, said the vice president discussed the tape with Perot and asked him to "take a look at the issues there and see if he thought they were legitimate."

But Fitzwater added that "I'm sure he (Bush) didn't ask him to make payments."

Perot said, "The fact that we have one American, a Special Forces major, who says he has seen the tape, makes it more than just some bogus thing floating out there in Asia."

He added that "the basic steps involved were to produce the tape, see the tape and if in fact the tape was what it was purported to be, at that point, pay for the tape and have it available to our government," he added. "So it was a kind of reasonably fail safe process in that you got (a chance) to look before you leaped."

Perot said of the videotape: "Like everything else around the POW-MIA thing, it's a will-o'-the-wisp."

The Dallas computer magnate first became involved in the POW issue in 1969 when he attempted to fly to Hanoi to deliver medical supplies and Christmas dinners to American POWs. He also financed a successful 1979 rescue mission to Iran to free two of his employees from a Tehran prison.

Retired Maj. Mark Smith told the Senate committee last June that he and Hendon went to Singapore in April with instructions from the Defense Intelligence Agency to offer $4.2 million to Gregson.

According to Smith, the money was on deposit in the Bank of America in Singapore when he attempted to obtain the tape.

Smith told the committee that Gregson, who also uses the name John Obassy, rejected the offer.

Smith testified that Gregson told him, "I didn't ask you for $4.2 million in cash. I asked you for support for these people in Laos. I have never asked for money."

The people in Laos were rebel forces fighting the communist government.

The major also told the committee he had seen the tape and that it showed Caucasians being held prisoner and forced to work in timber and mining operations in northern Laos.

RAIN

The two Alpine women, whose names and ages where not being released, were swept from their cars after attempting to cross flooded intersections of running water in two separate incidents overnight, said Brewster County police dispatcher Jere Madison.

The body of one of the women had not been found by mid-morning today, Ms. Madison said.

Between 3 to 6 inches of rain fell in Alpine overnight, Ms. Madison said.

Several houses on the southside of Alpine also were flooded overnight, Ms. Madison said.

Meanwhile, a Texas Department of Public Safety helicopter from Midland was summoned to aid in the search for another Alpine woman.

Police Chief Ruben Melgoza said there were unconfirmed reports of another body seen in Alpine Creek.

The National Weather Service posted a flash flood watch for a large part of West Texas.

Thunderstorms, thundershowers and heavy rains continued over portions of the South Plains, Permian Basin, Southwest Texas and the southeast corner of New Mexico.

Heaviest rains were reported between Marathon and Alpine, the NWS said. Movement was northeast at 10 mph.

In Alpine, just over three inches of rain has fallen since early yesterday, with more than two inches fell from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Authorities say flooding damaged several buildings, streets, waterworks and railroad tracks.

Several low-water crossings in the area are closed due to high water.

In Big Spring, U.S. Highway 87 was closed between 3:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. Wednesday, said Big Spring Police Lt. Jerry Edwards.

The road was closed after about 1.5 inches of rain fell in an hour, Edwards said.

One lane of Goliad Street, which is the only access road to more than 100 residents in Highland south area Big Spring, has been closed because one lane over a bridge is slowly caving in, Edwards said.

Goliad street runs past an earthen dam on the Commanche Trail lake that broke after heavy rains Friday night, Edwards said.

The dam will not be repaied until the rains stop, Edwards said.

About 2.6 inches of rain was reported to have fallen in Greenwood since midnight.

No accidents due to flooding were reported by the Department of Public Safety and the Midland Sheriff's office.

No power outages were reported overnight during the thunderstorm by the Texas Electric Service Company.

The weather service at Midland Regional Airport reports that the rain should clear up by Saturday.

The 60 percent chance of rain today will decrease to 40 percent by tonight and to a 30 percent chance by Friday, Adair said.

Tonight's low will be in the upper 60s, with easterly winds at 5 to 10 mph.

An upper level disturbance from southwest Texas has brought the rain to the Midland area, Adair said.

Odessa police this morning reported some 21 areas of the city had accumulations of rain water in the streets that made travel difficult or, in some cases, impossible.

According to police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon, the official rainfall measurement from 11 p.m. Wednesday to 7 a.m. this morning for Odessa was 2.25 inches.

Odessa Fire Department rain gauges located at fire stations around the city recorded from 2.0 to 3.8 inches.

McAhon said that in the eastern section of the city, especially along some portions of Maple Avenue, at least a foot of water had accumulated.

Jackson may not attend ceremony

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson says he probably won't go to South Africa for Bishop Desmond Tutu's promotion to archbishop unless officials relax the restrictive terms of his visa.

Jackson said Wednesday his visa requires him to arrive on Saturday, attend Tutu's installation ceremony as Anglican archbishop on Sunday and leave Monday.

Describing his visa as "restricted, restricted," the civil rights leader said he is barred with meeting church officials and South African activists such as Winnie Mandela, the wife of jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela.

Jackson said he planned to meet today with South African Ambassador Herbert Beukes to "see how much flexibility" officials can offer him.

Manus LeRoux, an embassy spokesman, said he had no comment on Jackson's complaints about the visa. The issue will be brought up at the Jackson-Beukes meeting, he said.

Other American blacks also have been granted visas to attend the ceremony for Tutu, an outspoken opponent of apartheid. They include Bishop John T. Walker of Washington and Renee Poussaint, a news anchor at WJLA-TV in Washington.

At a breakfast for reporters Wednesday, Jackson said the black leaders he met on his 17-day trip to Africa recently expressed a desire to expand diplomatic and trade ties with the United States.

Those countries — the so-called frontline states near South Africa — should be helped financially and militarily as part of the U.S. attack on apartheid, Jackson said.

"South Africa is more than a state, it is an empire," he said, adding that aid to the frontline states must be accompanied by a total economic blockade of South Africa.

"Our approach to the apartheid system must be regional," said Jackson, who estimates that the South African military has bombed more than $10 billion worth of railways and shipping ports in Angola, Zimbabwe, Botswana, Zambia, Mozambique and Tanzania.

"We need to divorce the destructive engagement with South Africa and form a constructive engagement with the frontline states, end apartheid and assume our rightful place as leader of the free world," Jackson said.

Constructive engagement, the name the Reagan administration coined for its South African policy in 1981, stresses the use of diplomatic pressure to persuade the white government to end racial segregation.

The frontline states want sanctions against South Africa, in spite of the hardships they could create. "They see it as the least violent and least suffering alternative," Jackson said.

But Jackson said the sanctions bills pending in the House and Senate are not tough enough because South Africa has stockpiled a decade's worth of supplies and has developed synthetic fuels.

The Reagan administration says it opposes harsh economic sanctions against South Africa precisely because of the boomerang effect on the frontline states.

Jackson opposed the administration's policy on Angola and Zimbabwe.

The Daniloffs listed carpets and a diamond ring as their only valuables when entering the country and when filling out forms to leave, Mrs. Daniloff had said.

They did not list a pocket watch Daniloff's father gave him for his 21st birthday, a locket that belonged to Mrs. Daniloff's grandmother and some "rubbishy old jewelry" that she kept at the bottom of her jewelry box.

Mrs. Daniloff said they did not consider the items valuable or believe they were made of silver or gold.

Customs agents confiscated the seven or eight pieces of jewelry and informed her they were being valued at $2,210, she said. The items were among household goods sent to Butovo for clearance in late August, she said.

Mrs. Daniloff, who has vowed to stay in Moscow until her husband is released, visited him Sunday and Monday and said she hoped to be allowed to see him again Friday.

U.S. officials, meanwhile, were awaiting a response today from Moscow on a plan to free Daniloff in exchange for an understanding that a Soviet physicist arrested in New York could be sent home after he stands trial on espionage charges.

The deal would involve temporarily releasing Gennady F. Zakharov, who was assigned to the United Nations Secretariat and was arrested by the FBI on Aug. 23 on charges of spying, to the Soviet ambassador, U.S. officials said Wednesday.

"At the height of this very sensitive situation, two black policemen fired guns in the air," he said. "What saved the situation was that there was a lieutenant there who was much calmer than the people under him."

The Bureau for Information said security forces also fired tear gas to disperse 300 youths at 9 a.m. but said it did not know where the incident occurred.

Witnesses said police dropped tear gas from a helicopter to break up a procession of youths in White City. They said the youths were chanting slogans in support of the African National Congress, the main black guerrilla group trying to overthrow the government, and its jailed leader, Nelson Mandela.

The Soweto shootings last week took the heaviest toll of lives in any outbreak since the government imposed a state of emergency June 12.

Nkwe claimed 24 people were killed by police in last week's violence. Police reported 20 blacks were shot to death and a town councilor was hacked to death by a gang of youths.

The government has rejected assertions by Sowetans that last week's violence was sparked by a campaign to evict people who refused to pay rent for government housing.

Police and soldiers set up roadblocks at entrances to Soweto, home to 1.7 million blacks, and turned away reporters under a renewed ban on firsthand reporting of anti-apartheid violence.

The government on Wednesday reimposed a rule barring reporting on security force actions and said any journalist "within sight" of unrest, restricted gatherings or security force activity must leave immediately.

However, there was legal uncertainty about the regulations after the Natal Supreme Court today struck down a series of emergency restrictions on the media. The court ruled invalid a measure allowing the government to seize and ban publications deemed subversive, and also overturned a ban on reporting unrest without police commission.

Today's work boycott, called to protest police actions, was widely effective. The independent Labor Monitoring Group said a survey of 100 Johannesburg employers showed that 72 percent of manufacturing workers from Soweto and 85 percent of commercial workers from the township stayed away from work.

"We'll stay away until we bury our dead," said one man who welcomed peole into his living room to escape tear gas.

PUTCO, the bus company that carries more than 85,000 Sowetans to work each day in Johannesburg, said ridership was down 80 percent, and that up to 40 percent of its own staff stayed away.

A company spokeswoman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said many buses were stoned and one was burned. One bus was hijacked but later returned.

More than 2,100 people have been killed, nearly all of them blacks, since the current wave of anti-apartheid violence began in September 1984.

GERONIMO

Events will include re-enactment of a four-day, 65-mile cavalry ride from the surrender site in Skeleton Canyon in the Chiricahua Mountains near the New Mexico border to the ruins of Fort Bowie.

On Friday, descendants of the Indians who surrendered will be brought to Skeleton Canyon for the opportunity to spend private time there. Later, in the town of Bowie, there will be traditional Indian dances, followed there Saturday and at the fort site Sunday by speeches from historians, Indian and Army leaders, and Indian dances and music.

The surrender was a watershed in Apache history.

"It was a complete turnaround in their life," Mrs. Cleghorn said. "Geronimo said if he didn't surrender we would all be annihilated. In other words, we wouldn't be here. I wouldn't be here."

On the day of the surrender on Sept. 4, 1886, Geronimo; chief Naiche, a son of Cochise, chief of the Chokonene band of the Chiricahua Apaches, and four others returned with Miles to Fort Bowie.

The rest of the band, mostly on horseback, was escorted by the cavalry, arriving at the fort Sept. 7.

The observance, planned for more than a year by the Arizona Historical Society, National Park Service and the Chiricahua and Mescalero tribes, is not a celebration, organizers say.

Rick Collins, who has helped organize the ride, said that while whites viewed Geronimo's capitulation as an end to savage killings, the Indians saw it as the start of 27 years of unjust punishment.

"They didn't deserve to have a quarter of their people die in the first year," he said. But die they did, from diseases like pneumonia, tuberculosis, and dysentery resulting at least in part from difficulty in adjusting to the humidity and heat of Florida and then Alabama after having lived in a dry, mountainous environment. Later they were moved to Oklahoma.

Their descendants haven't forgotten.

"We weren't treated right, I know that," said Mrs. Cleghorn. "Books tell you that. History tells you that. As far as the Indian people, it's something that we lost.

"We know what we lost now. At the time, the people didn't realize what they really had."

Memphis man sees lawyers as 'joke'

By WOODY BAIRD

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — But seriously, folks, Wayne Emmons thinks lawyers are a joke. Or ought to be. He's giving up his legal practice to become a comic.

"They're using lawyers in laboratory experiments now," he says when he doffs his suit and dons overalls to become Cousin Bubba, the bumbling good ole boy from Ash Flat, Ark. "They're more plentiful than little white mice and you don't get near as attached to 'em."

Emmons, a lawyer for 16 years and a preacher before that, is going into show business full-time, with plans to videotape and market the skits he has been performing part-time before conventions and meetings.

Emmons, 48, as alter ego Cousin Bubba, looks at the world with wide-eyed country innocence. His targets are two areas he knows well, lawyers and preachers — and just about everybody else.

For a while last year, Emmons ran a comedy nightclub in downtown Memphis. But it closed when a companion restaurant was sold.

Emmons grew up in Sheffield, Ala., where his father was a Church of Christ preacher, and he became an evangelist himself at the age of 16. But he gave up preaching in 1968 after divorcing his wife of 10 years.

"There's not much market for a divorced Church of Christ preacher," said Emmons, who's been divorced a second time since then.

Emmons attended night law school while he was pastor of a Memphis church, and became a lawyer in 1970.

He said he's still interested in evangelical subjects and Cousin Bubba hopes one day to set up an organization for TV preachers called the IDM Club.

The initials, he said, stand for "It Don't Matter."

"Bubba loves television evangelists," he said. "He says the only difference between them and Wink Martindale is Wink is giving money away while they're taking it in. Keep sending them cards and letters, folks, but especially the letters 'cause the cards don't hold nothin'."

Emmons, who has been a prosecuting attorney and defense lawyer, successfully challenged the city of Memphis three years ago over an ordinance outlawing the public display of bare breasts. He said the ordinance was an unconstitutional attempt to shut down the city's topless nightclubs, and a federal judge agreed.

In one of Bubba's skits, he comes to Memphis looking for a topless nightclub but ends up at the opera. "He decides if he's going to see naked women he has to hang around with a better class of people," Emmons said.

Emmons said he may have to go back to practicing law if his attempt at comedy fails, but that he's tired of dealing with the day-to-day frustrations of guiding his clients' cases through the courts.

"It seems like it's all geared toward just pushing people through the system," he said. "It's sort of like a rocking chair. There's some activity, but it's not getting anywhere."

And he said lawyers need to look at themselves with a little humor.

"Lawyers make a big mistake by not laughing at themselves," he said.

Cup-A-Soup cyanide death 'almost certainly' case of tampering

RUNNEMEDE, N.J. (AP) — The cyanide death of a man who ate Cup-A-Soup was almost certainly a case of product tampering, a spokesman for the manufacturer said today.

Larry Hicks, a spokesman for Thomas J. Lipton Inc., said authorities found the mix's envelope was slit and the box was punctured.

"It all points to a product tampering," Hicks said. "The evidence would appear to point exactly to that and only to that."

Lipton said it planned to remove all its Cup-A-Soup packages from stores in the Camden area of southern New Jersey today as a precaution.

Louis Denber, 27, of Runnemede, became ill shortly after eating chicken noodle Cup-A-Soup on Monday and died at Kennedy Memorial Hospital in Stratford, said Hicks and Camden County Prosecutor Samuel Asbell.

He said his office was "investigating this matter as a homicide only."

Investigators found cyanide in Denber's body fluids and in powdered residue in the soup packet, said Health Department spokeswoman Leigh Cook.

Asbell said he received confirmation Wednesday from Dr. Robert B. Goode, a state medical examiner, that Denber died from cyanide poisoning. Asbell said "there was enough (cyanide) in his system to kill a horse."

He said there was no evidence of tampering with other packages from the Shop 'n' Bag store in Runnemede where the soup was purchased. Police confiscated soup from the store Wednesday.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration scheduled overnight tests of other Cup-A-Soup boxes pulled from shelves at the Shop 'n' Bag in Runnemede, about 10 miles southeast of Philadelphia, Hicks said.

"They believe that the envelope has an odor (of cyanide) but it is really subjective at this point," Hicks said. "There has never been any evidence of actual contamination. ...(It is) really in the area of a suspected source."

The cyanide was found Wednesday afternoon during tests of Denber's body fluids and the soup packet, said Kenneth Kolano, chief of the Health Department's food regulating division.

The Englewood Cliffs-based Lipton packages Cup-A-Soup in foil packets contained in a box, Hicks said.

Jeff Brown of Cherry Hill, who said his family owns the store and seven other Shop 'n' Bags in New Jersey, said the company voluntarily recalled all dry soup products from the Runnemede store Wednesday afternoon.

Two gunmen found dead in fast-food restaurant

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A police tactical team that stormed a fast-food restaurant in southwest Oklahoma City Wednesday night found two gunmen dead inside.

Capt. M.T. Berry of the Oklahoma City Police Department said officers did not fire any shots when they entered the building about 6:15 p.m., almost three hours after the men entered the restaurant and reportedly approached the counter with weapons.

Tactical team members threw percussion grenades in the restaurant before storming the building.

Berry said the two gunmen were found dead inside, weapons by their sides. The cash drawer appeared untouched, he said.

He said the two men died of gunshots.

"We don't know yet whether it was a murder-suicide, a double-suicide or what," Berry said.

Reagan to face congressional power struggle

By TERENCE HUNT

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — In a few days, President Reagan will end his long summer vacation and plunge into a battle whose outcome will be critical in shaping the final two years of his presidency.

His challenge is to hold on to his congressional power base — the Republican majority in the Senate.

The GOP now has a 53-47 edge, and a net gain of only four seats by Democrats would put them back in power for the first time since the Reagan landslide in 1980. Democrats already have a solid majority in the House, with a 253-180 advantage. There are two vacancies.

This year, Senate Republicans are particularly vulnerable. Eighteen Republican incumbents are up for re-election, while only nine Democratic incumbents have to face the voters. Seven seats are open.

Interestingly, 15 freshmen Republicans who swept into office with Reagan six years ago stand their first re-election test in November, and the results should provide a referendum on whether Reagan's conservative agenda still is popular with Americans.

The president is trying to dramatize the political importance of the Republican advantage.

"It's vital that we keep Republican control of the Senate," Reagan said at a recent political fund-raiser. "We couldn't have accomplished what we have if we had not had control of that one house.

"Imagine having to deal with two Tip O'Neills (the Democratic speaker of the House) and you'll know what I'm talking about."

In Reagan's view, Democratic control of both houses of Congress would mean "we'd be playing a purely defensive game, fighting a rearguard action to keep the opportunity society and our strong foreign policy from being dismantled piece by piece."

Stressing his partisan argument, Reagan said, "There's only one president, and if he has to fight an obstructionist leadership in both houses of Congress, it could dangerously stalemate our country. We can't let America be paralyzed by a hostile Congress, we have too much yet to accomplish."

Of course, everything Reagan has won from Capitol Hill has come through the Democratic-controlled House. But clearly, a Democratic majority in both houses would give the opposition a formidable base from which to challenge Reagan in the final leg of his presidency.

To keep the GOP in control, Reagan is campaigning from coast to coast, from Florida to California, for favorites and underdogs alike.

White House aides say Reagan will devote one day a week during September to campaigning.

In October, the schedule will be increased to two days a week, followed by a final blitz right before the Nov. 4 election.

His travels will be guided "mainly by looking at races where he can have an effect — races that are close where the president can make a difference," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said.

He said the president was ready "to help those who need money to get their message across."

Reagan already is credited with raising $9 million for Republican Senate races, with some appearances producing more than $1 million.

Underscoring the high priority given to the Senate races, Reagan's first task at the end of his 23-day vacation is a Sept. 7 fund-raiser in Los Angeles for Rep. Ed Zschau, who is trying to unseat three-term Democrat Alan Cranston.

Then, flying back to Washington the next day, Air Force One will stop briefly in Denver so Reagan can plug the candidacy of Rep. Ken Kramer, who is trying to prevent Democratic Rep. Tim Wirth from taking over the seat being vacated by Democrat Gary Hart.

They are not the first political outings for Reagan this year.

He already has stumped for Senate candidates in Florida, Illinois, Nevada, North Carolina, Louisiana and Missouri.

A MATTER OF TECHNIQUE

North-South vulnerable. North deals.

	NORTH ♠ A 10 4 ♡ Q 6 ◇ A Q 3 ♣ A Q J 10 2
WEST ♠ 5 ♡ A 10 8 7 4 3 ◇ 8 5 2 ♣ 8 7 4		EAST ♠ J 7 6 3 ♡ K J 9 5 2 ◇ K 6 ♣ K 6
	SOUTH ♠ K Q 9 8 2 ♡ Void ◇ J 10 9 7 4 ♣ 9 5 3

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Dble	1 ♠	3 ♡
3 ♠	4 ♡	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ♡

The fate of many a hand rests on trump control. Watch East and South battle it out to see who ends up in charge.

North had a difficult bid to make at his second turn. He was too strong to pass and had no convenient rebid, so he settled for a raise of his partner's suit despite the fact he had only three-card support. When East competed with four hearts, South bid the spade game—with such a distributional hand, there was little promise in defending but great offensive potential.

Declarer ruffed the opening lead, cashed the ace of trumps and continued with the ten to the king. She was not astounded by the fact that West discarded a heart. Since the double virtually marked East with both minor-suit kings, the contract seemed in jeopardy. However, declarer found an elegant solution to her problem.

She continued with a diamond to the queen. East won and returned the king of hearts. Declarer sluffed a club. East defended stubbornly by continuing with a third heart. Declarer could not afford to ruff in hand, so she discarded another club while ruffing on the table.

Now declarer came to hand with the jack of diamonds and cashed the queen of spades, jettisoning the table's ace of diamonds! It was a simple matter to run diamonds until East ruffed with the winning trump for the defense's third and last trick.

High society meets high tech: Prince Charles visits workers at Wang Labs

LOWELL, Mass. (AP) — Britain's Prince Charles on Wednesday visited workers in a revitalized city whose first boom began 176 years with an industrial secret stolen from England.

His schedule also called for a meeting with the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Massachusetts, the regiment that British troops fired on at Lexington Green in 1775 at the start of the War of Independence.

Charles visited the high tech Wang Laboratories and then was driven to the center of this city 30 miles north of Boston that was begun by a merchant who memorized the design for English power looms during a visit to England in 1810.

As SWAT teams patrolled the area from the rooftops of century-old factories and scores of state and local police kept watch on the hundreds of people lining the streets, the prince chatted with retired mill workers and elderly residents of the mills, now apartments for senior citizens.

Wang spokesman Paul Henning said the prince asked to visit Lowell because of its transformation from a depressed industrial city to a thriving high-tech center through the efforts of state and city officials and local businessmen.

"One of the things I feel strongly about is this question of trying to encourage better coordination between the public and the private sectors in Britain," Charles said. "I've seen an example of it today in Lowell and I was very impressed indeed.

"They told me that for every $1 from the public sector, $16 or $17 are put in by the private sector."

Charles will give an address Thursday during Harvard University's 350th anniversary celebration.

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bears quarterback Jim McMahon, who usually hits his target with a football, is doing the same with his new autobiography.

In "McMahon!" he takes aim at Bears President Michael McCaskey and connects with some scathing criticism.

"Michael McCaskey doesn't have any qualifications to operate the Bears, except his name," McMahon writes in the book written with Chicago Tribune columnist Bob Verdi.

McMahon's dislike for his boss stems from what he called McCaskey's "fiscally responsible" decisions, such as providing only one plane ticket for relatives of Bears players on the team plane to the Super Bowl.

McCaskey's secretary said he could not be reached for comment Wednesday, but a Bears spokesman said McCaskey would have nothing to say about the book, which has been in stores for more than a week.

LOS ANGELES — A judge has found evidence of malice by the Globe tabloid in a 1982 article on Scott Thorson, the reputed lover of Liberace.

Thorson has sued the publication, reporter Mike Snow and Thorson's half-brother, Wayne Johnson, over the story that alleged Thorson had been a boy prostitute and had sex with his foster father.

Superior Court Judge Edward M. Ross on Tuesday tentatively rejected the Globe's request for dismissal of Thorson's libel suit, saying the tabloid showed "clear indications of actual malice." However, he said he was prepared to give the decision additional consideration and rule at an unspecified date.

DETROIT (AP) — Mayor Coleman Young invested $2 in a fishing license in an attempt to sink a small controversy over an 18-pound salmon he caught without a permit.

During a goodwill visit to western Michigan last week sponsored by the Muskegon Chronicle, Young and his host, Chronicle Managing Editor Roger Kullenberg, caught salmon.

But neither had a license.

When asked if he had a license, the mayor replied, "Nope. Never had. Don't believe in them."

The captain of Young's charter boat, Larry Allison, said he thought the mayor was joking.

Young's remark sparked a storm of protest to the Department of Natural Resources — a brouhaha the Chronicle dubbed "salmongate."

The mayor, Kullenberg and Chronicle reporter Dave Alexander all came clean Wednesday and bought licenses. The newsmen bought one-year licenses with trout and salmon stamps for $14.50 apiece. The 68-year-old mayor bought a one-year senior citizen's license for $2.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jazz singer Ella Fitzgerald, recently treated for congestive heart failure, has been hospitalized again with an undisclosed ailment and has canceled her engagements for the rest of the year, a spokeswoman said Wednesday.

"She's been undergoing tests," said Mary Outwater, spokeswoman for Miss Fitzgerald. "She's in good condition. At the moment, there is really nothing to say."

Ms. Outwater said the singer was in a private room at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. She said she couldn't recall when the entertainer entered the medical center. However, Ms. Outwater did note that her concert engagements have been canceled for the remainder of 1986.

Ron Wise, spokesman for Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, confirmed that Miss Fitzgerald was hospitalized but said all information was being handled by Ms. Outwater.

The entertainer became ill in her hotel room following a July 26 performance in Lewiston, N.Y. She was discharged from a Niagara Falls, N.Y., hospital three days later.

Miss Fitzgerald, 68, was diagnosed as having congestive heart failure, a weakening of the heart. Doctors said she had not suffered a heart attack.

Known for her improvisational "scat" singing, Miss Fitzgerald has recorded more than 250 albums.

Wait for change

According to a whimsical saying that's been making the rounds for more years than we like to recall, anyone who doesn't like the weather in Texas only has to wait a short time and it will change.

While there's plenty of humor — and truth — in that saying, the weather in Texas on the Labor Day just passed was anything but funny.

It was refreshing, of course, in that it ushered in somewhat cooler weather and provided additional underground moisture for the fall. For farming the rains may actually prove beneficial, as long as they don't continue too long and some hot weather follows to dry out the area cotton crop. But the rains also were tragic in another regard for this part of Texas. August left and September arrived on storm clouds that kept drenching the state.

Rain was the culprit in the tragedy of which we speak: The drowning of a 44-year-old Big Spring woman. It also was to blame for a number of other life-threatening incidents around the state including a bus wreck in Dallas that injured a dozen people, any number of other accidents that caused death and injury to motorists and locally-violent storms that left large sections of the state under thunderstorm watches and warnings.

There's no doubt that the rains at Big Spring that ate away a portion of a small lake's earthen dam and released a wall of water that took the life of Mary Gutierrez Saturday night and caused a number of that city's residents to flee their homes were unusual for this part of the state. But the rains encountered in this part of Texas over the past several months have been extraordinary in their frequency and, in some cases, their volume.

Midlanders typically experience a love-hate relationship with rain. It's good because the region experiences so much hot, dry weather but the traffic problems it can create are irritating. Midland experienced extreme street flooding at noon Tuesday and the rains continued Tuesday night and Wednesday morning. The flooded streets made travel risky at best and impossible in some instances. It made inconvenience a way of life.

But it's the tragedy more than anything else that gives the state's residents cause to think about the old saying and to actually hope that in a moment or two the weather will change for the better.

Another View:

Caution for future

Stuck with a 79-day supply of unsold cars and with introduction of its 1987 models only weeks away, General Motors has slashed interest rates on its new-car loans to as low as 2.9 percent. That is seven points or more below market rates, and well below GM's own costs for borrowing money. Ford and Chrysler are in much better shape on their inventories than is the nation's No. 1 automaker, but they also face the need to remain competitive. In response to GM's move, Chrysler has cut its loan rate to 2.4 percent and Ford to 2.9 percent.

All this is good news for consumers, who now have a window of opportunity to save as much as $1,500 either through reduced financing costs or direct cash rebates on 1986 cars. Those incentives ought to run down inventories fairly speedily, but in the process they could put a major dent in next year's auto sales. Adding to the cloud over [illegible] sales are a couple of provisions in the new tax bill that Congress will soon vote on. After this year, sales taxes would no longer be deductible, while the deduction of non-mortgage interest charges would be phased out. In consequence, sales might surge this year but slump in the year ahead.

With more than 1 million unsold cars and trucks to dispose of, General Motors would clearly seem to have been overproducing, but auto-industry analysts say that this is no accident. GM, which once could count on a 60 percent share of the American market, can now claim only about a 42 percent share, and it is fighting to prevent further erosion. The battle for market share did not, to be sure, restrain GM from raising prices earlier this year. Now it has had to turn to subsidizing sales. The result could be a third-quarter operating loss of $100 million or more.

Holding on to market share is important for the future, since a buyer who is lost this year might stay lost for years. The competition from foreign autos that has cost GM market share seems certain to intensify as Japanese automakers expand their production capacity in the United States and as import quotas disappear next spring. With the rise in the value of the yen, the Japanese have already shown that they are ready to accept lower profits to retain market share. Meanwhile, imports of lower-cost cars from South Korea and other countries almost certainly will grow. Distress sales are fine for moving excess cars. Over time, though, the competition for sales and market share is most of all determined by quality and price. The automaker who loses sight of that is in trouble.

Monaco's 'crisis' averted by solon

WASHINGTON — As chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on European Affairs, Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., has many momentous matters to occupy him. These run the gamut from Soviet-American relations to anti-American terrorist attacks and assorted other problems across the continent.

Jack Anderson

But the weight of these awesome responsibilities hasn't led the peripatetic 44-year-old solon to ignore the vexatious issues that are not likely to make headlines and might therefore be overlooked by a less dedicated lawmaker. In fact, Pressler made a special trip to the continent last Eastertime to compile an official report on the travails of what he calls "the mini-states of Europe."

The "bilateral issue" that seemed to command the greatest amount of the senator's attention was — are you ready? — Monaco's unhappiness over the State Department's planned closing of the American consulate in nearby Nice. Pressler learned all about this crisis in U.S.-Monegasque relations in a private interview with Prince Rainier III and his prime minister, Jean Ausseil.

Rainier, the widower of Philadelphia-born Princess Grace, is apparently not yet ready to break off diplomatic relations with or declare war on the United States. But Pressler's official report makes clear that the prince was terribly, terribly hurt over the decision to close down the State Department's Riviera outpost.

"Prince Rainier ... has strong views regarding the issue of small states and their relations with the United States," Pressler disclosed. "Prince Rainier emphasized that Monaco and the United States have longstanding ties of family, friendship and commerce, dating back to 1874."

He then quoted the prince as saying: "I am presently most concerned and disappointed to learn that the United States will no longer be represented in the principality from Nice."

The royal dudgeon continued with a reminder that 150,000 Americans visit the Riviera each year, and a hope that the United States was not "sending a signal of lessening of interests in this area of the world."

Pressler heard even tougher talk from the prime minister, who told him, in the peculiarly stilted language that seems to be the court dialect of Monaco: "Monegasques, including and perhaps especially the princely family, felt both bewildered and hurt by this proposed closing of the consulate, which they take as a personal affront."

Despite the unmistakably menacing tone of this rebuke, Prince Rainier managed to smooth things over with the kind of deft diplomatic touch that has kept the Grimaldis on the throne of Monaco since 1297 A.D. State Department cables seen by our associate Lucette Lagnado disclose that the prince arranged for the visiting senator to play tennis with the royal heir, Prince Albert.

Thus, in a series of one-on-one meetings from throne room to tennis court, an international crisis was averted that might have titillated gossip columnists for a week or more. By cutting through to the heart of the matter, a single powerful U.S. senator in just two days of personal diplomacy was able to defuse a situation that could easily have led to a serious misunderstanding with one of our oldest allies, and consequent embarrassment to countless sunbathers and baccarat players.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Foggy Bottom Libya-watchers are bemused by the desert nation's efforts to keep secret the precise whereabouts of dictator Moammar Gadhafi. When JANA, the official news service and propaganda organ, reports dutifully on the great one's meetings with foreign dignitaries, it carefully omits mention of the meetings' locations — even the cities where they took place. And recently, when the government news agency described Gadhafi's meeting with a radical Palestinian group, it mentioned that the meeting was held in the dictator's bunker — but didn't say where this command center is.

HAWAIIAN HEART-STOPPER: Opponents of Hawaii's proposal to build a new highway connecting Honolulu with the north side of Oahu have a fascinating new argument. The highway would go past a Coast Guard facility that uses powerful electromagnetic signals to communicate with submarines out at sea. According to one pacemaker manufacturer, the magnetic field might be strong enough to cause passing motorists' heart machines to conk out, with potentially tragic results. Though the state's congressional delegation is pushing for an environmental exemption for the highway, Senate insiders give it little chance of passage.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The conservative French government is all for private enterprise — up to a point. In its sale of a government-owned television channel, it stipulates that the successful bidder will have to guarantee screening of cultural programs and French productions instead of relying on canned American imports. What happened to the idea of a free marketplace? If the French TV public prefers re-runs of "I Love Lucy" over Marcel Marceau or a panel discussion of Jean-Paul Sartre, should the government say non? After all, 50 million Frenchmen can't be wrong.

Yes, America, here come 'expressive' cars

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — In the tonier showrooms along Pacific Coast Highway, where folks sell Ferraris to people who can not afford Lagondas, and Lagondas to people who think they can not afford to be seen driving anything as declasse as a Rolls Royce, a sedate calm obtains. However, elsewhere in this land of driven drivers, the price war that has erupted in automobile financing is the cause of cheerful chaos.

George F. Will

A Los Angeles Times reporter found that a Costa Mesa Oldsmobile salesman had not time for journalists: "Its very busy, like a zoo. Gotta go." War is heck, this war begun in weakness by the big boy on the block, General Motors. GM is learning, late in life, not to make the loony mistake of thinking that Americans regard cars as mere transportation.

Yes, even mighty GM can come a cropper by forgetting elemental matters. However, as a baseball manager with a weak grasp of history but a strong sense of life's vicissitudes once said, "Even Napoleon had his Watergate."

Car-loan rates under 3 percent (and the desire to buy expensive items before tax reform reforms away the deductibility of sales taxes) have caused a stampede, beneath which may be translated prospects for sales of 1987 models. If that causes the sluggish economy to go south, with political consequences extending to the end of civilization as we have known it, much blame will fall on the GM designers who a few years ago decided to make all their cars look alike.

With 1987 models yearning to breathe free, GM in August had more than a million unsold 1986 cars and trucks. One reason for GM's overproduction, and for its declining market share, is mocked in the Lincoln commercial that merrily depicts confusion among owners of look-alike Cadillacs, Buicks and Oldsmobiles.

GM's Pontiac division has turned, as much as possible within the styling constraints, toward producing what one executive calls "expressive cars." Atta boy. Now you are remembering the future: For Americans, cars are instruments of self-expression, right up there with sexual fantasies.

Business Week reports that Pontiac the only GM division to increase its market share from 1982 to 1985, commissioned a psychologist to study customers' "deepest fantasies about driving." He found that flashy cars made middle-aged women feel younger. Hence the commercial in which a teen-ager urges mom to cut loose and buy a red Sunbird.

For Pontiac, this is something of a return to its modern roots. In the 1960s, under the guidance of a fellow named De Lorean, Pontiac built "muscle cars" like the GTO. However, Forbes magazine argues that GM's structure made model differentiation difficult. It may have been efficient in the short run to combine assembly plants, and designing and engineering functions, but the results — look-alike products — were not efficient in the long run.

To a rookie pitcher who complained when three pitches to Rogers Hornsby were called balls, the umpire replied: "Young man, when you pitch a strike, Mr. Hornsby will let you know." The public has let GM know that it is not going to buy expensive cars that are, well, inexpressive.

This is the truth of merchandizing in America: You can sell a cheap Scotch to persons for whom price is crucial, or expensive Scotch to persons for whom quality (or snobbery) is crucial, but a medium-priced Scotch is harder to sell. And in automobiles, the high profits are at the high end of the scale.

The head of the Cadillac division says that soon "You'll be pleased to see that you can recognize our products at distances." Meanwhile, the pleasure is in the condign punishment of GM's design decision. That pleasure is alloyed with anger. This country can not stand such incompetence in its great corporations.

It is altogether fitting that record low car-loan rates arrived just as the country was being hit on the head with another attention-grabbing number: the record-shattering one-month $18 billion trade deficit. There is much more to that deficit than imported cars, but the automobile industry is the emblematic American industry. It is just beginning to compete with some competitors.

To match Mercedes, BMW and Jaguar, Cadillac is bringing out the Italian-designed Allante. At $50,000, Allante will cost $25,000 a seat. It is disgusting that people will pay so much for a hunk of metal to move them about, but people will, and it will be good for this country if more of such foolishly spent dollars stay at home, invested in American-made "expressive" cars.

Revolving door a fail-proof test for lobbyist

Meistersinger came rushing into the room. "I've got it. I've just perfected a urinalysis test which can tell whether a lobbyist is lying or not."

"That's good," I said. "But who needs it?"

"We do. There are some lobbyists who are playing with the truth, and this is the first scientific way of proving that they're making things up. The test will tell us everything."

Art Buchwald

"Such as?"

"Let's say a lobbyist has an acid rain account. He denies he used his White House contacts to help him in his work. All the President has to do is hand him a specimen bottle."

"Why should the President do that?"

"No President wants a former staffer to use the Administration for private gain."

"Suppose the person refuses to take the test?"

"Then it's obvious he is trying to hide something. Forget acid rain, let's take South Korea. A former top White House official is making a bundle representing Seoul. Through an oversight, he forgets to tell the people in the Administration that he is being paid by the Koreans. We don't know if this is an accident or an act of greed. That's where the test comes in."

"It's difficult to believe that one urinalysis test will tell so much about a lobbyist."

"Do you want a demonstration?"

"I gave already at the office."

"Suppose you were Japan and needed a tax break in Puerto Rico. Who would you hire?"

"Someone close to the President."

"What if that lobbyist used his contacts to get special tax privileges for the Japanese?"

"How can you prove that?"

"By my test. If it is positive he gets thrown out of the Oval Office."

"And if he says he won't take the test?"

"Then the President himself throws him out of the Oval Office."

"Is there any way a person can fake it?"

"It's impossible. I worked with a former White House aide who was a good friend of the President and Nancy. He was lobbying for the Rockwell B-1 bomber, and had been accused of speaking to the head of the Office of Management and Budget about the matter. They asked me to get to the truth. Fortunately the test showed that the man was innocent. It was another good friend of the President and Nancy who talked to the OMB about the bomber."

"Did they ask you to test the second guy?"

"No, because no one in the White House could believe that anybody who worked for the Reagan Administration would lobby for a bomber."

"By the way how do you test a lobbyist?"

"You give him a specimen bottle and then you spin him around in a revolving door."

"That's it?"

"What were you expecting — multiple choice questions?"

'Twilight Zone' crew blames deaths on special effects operator

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Director John Landis and four crew members on "Twilight Zone: The Movie" are blaming the deaths of actor Vic Morrow and two children on a special-effects operator who has immunity from prosecution.

Explosives expert James Camomile detonated special-effects bombs at the wrong time and one misfired, defense attorney James Neal said Wednesday in his opening statement in the long-awaited involuntary manslaughter trial.

"Mr. Camomile violated the first principle of a special effects man — to make sure the area is clear before you set off a special effect," Neal said.

Camomile, a prosecution witness, was granted immunity when he testified before a grand jury.

"After this tragedy, James Camomile felt a terrible moral responsibility," Deputy District Attorney Lea Purwin D'Agostino said of Camomile's decision to testify for the prosecution.

"...Because he has a conscience, the defense tried unsuccessfully to point the finger at him as the one and only person responsible for the crash."

In truth, Mrs. D'Agostino argued, Landis and his codefendants were the architects of a movie scene which tempted tragedy with excessive explosives and inadequate protection for the lives of Morrow and the two children.

Landis, director of hits like "Animal House" and "Trading Places" is charged with involuntary manslaughter with associate producer George Folsey, unit production manager Dan Allingham, special effects coordinator Paul Stewart and pilot Dorcey Wingo. It is the first time a movie director has faced criminal charges for an on-set accident.

Morrow, 53, and the youngsters, Myca Le, 7, and Renee Chen, 6, died when a helicopter, buffeted by special effects explosions and engulfed in a fireball, crashed on top of them. Morrow and Myca Le were decapitated and Renee Chen was crushed by the aircraft as the children's parents watched the calamity.

"You are going to see that nothing in that scene was an illusion," Mrs. D'Agostino told jurors who will view film of the crash. "These were not deaths where someone could get up and wipe the bloody-looking ketchup off. These were real deaths."

Landis' attorney said the accident was "unforeseen and unforseeable" and insisted the scene, as planned, was safe.

He warned jurors that on film it might appear dangerous to them, "but you must remember that action films are designed to appear dangerous."

Turning toward the defendants, he said, "Not one of the gentlemen thought the scene as planned and rehearsed was dangerous. Not one of these gentlemen is guilty of criminal negligence."

He noted that Landis was standing five or six feet from the crash and, had the helicopter tilted differently, it would have killed him.

The courtroom and hallways were jammed as the trial got under way with Mrs. D'Agostino describing the explosions that rocked the movie location during a July 23, 1982, rehearsal shortly before the disaster.

"This is just a warmup for what's coming," she quoted Landis as telling a worried coworker. You haven't seen anything yet. Don't be so squeamish."

When a casting agency balked at using real children rather than midgets or dolls, the prosecutor said Landis retored: "The hell with you. We'll get the children ourselves. We'll get them off the street if we have to."

She also quoted Folsey as joking about the hiring of the children in violation of labor codes. "Ho, ho, we'll probably wind up in jail for this," were the words she said Folsey spoke.

NATION in brief

Treaty to bar nuclear tests in Pacific could be signed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says he favors U.S. acceptance of protocols to a treaty establishing a nuclear-free zone in the South Pacific.

"We're not going to be disadvantaged by any of the protocols," Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind. said Wednesday in remarks to the Asia Society.

Lugar, who recently completed a fact-finding trip to several Asian nations, including countries favoring the treaty and the protocols, said, "I think we should sign it."

The treaty establishing a nuclear-free zone in the Pacific, barring nuclear testing and the disposal of radioactive waste, was signed last year by Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, the Cook Islands and several other countries in the region.

Although the United States may not sign the treaty because it is not within the proposed zone, it has the option of endorsing protocols to the pact.

Ford first with safety belts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford Motor Co. will include a motorized automatic safety belt as standard equipment in at least some of its 1987 models, making Ford the first U.S. auto manufacturer to provide the motorized belts.

Ford Chairman Donald Petersen said Wednesday that the motorized belts, which wrap around a front seat occupant when the ignition is turned on, will be in the 1987 Ford Escort and Mercury Lynx beginning in December.

The federal government is requiring automakers to phase in either passive belts or air bags over the next three years, but Ford is the first U.S. manufacturer to provide the motorized design. For several years, it has been standard equipment in the top-of-the-line Toyota Cressida.

Brian O'Neill, president of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, said the motorized design is more convenient and likely will prompt increased use.

Ten protestors plead guilty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ten people have pleaded guilty in District of Columbia Superior Court to unlawful entry in connection with their protest against Contra aid last month in Sen. Majority Leader Bob Dole's office.

Three others declined to plea bargain and were ordered to stand trial Oct. 17.

Nine of those who pleaded guilty before Judge Frank Schwelb Wednesday were given six months unsupervised probation and a three-day suspended jail sentence.

Schwelb fined one man $100 and sentenced him to 10 hours of community service because the man would not agree to abide by the law in any future demonstrations.

The demonstrators were among more than 100 arrested Aug. 4 at the Capitol during protests against the $100 million aid package to rebels fighting the Sandanista government in Nicaragua.

EPA targets light trucks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency is considering a plan to tighten the pollution standard for light trucks that would force the vehicles to meet a stiffer car standard.

Currently, trucks weighing less than 8,500 pounds may emit no more than 0.8 gram of unburned fuel per mile while cars are limited to 0.41 gram.

The EPA said it was considering a 0.41-gram standard for trucks of less than 6,000 pounds, which would cover new passenger vans, and a 0.5-gram standard for trucks between 6,000 and 8,500 pounds. The figures would be slightly higher for trucks sold in certain high-altitude counties.

The EPA said a notice will be published in the Federal Register asking for comment on a possible proposal.

Bear impostor hit by car

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — A man dressed in a bear suit in an apparent practical joke was run over and critically injured as he lay in the middle of a road, and the car's driver was charged with drunken driving, authorities said.

Gary Strickland, 23, of New London, was in critical condition Wednesday at Lawrence and Memorial Hospitals after a car ran over his head Tuesday evening as he lay in the middle of heavily traveled Ocean Avenue, police said.

Heavy rain hits Midwest, parts of South

Associated Press

Heavy thunderstorms drenched sections of the Midwest and South today, and Texas authorities said a woman and her car were swept away by flood waters.

A cold front pushing into the central Plains and Great Lakes region produced heavy thunderstorms across eastern and southern Iowa and sections of Wisconsin and Michigan.

Tropical moisture and a weak low pressure system caused heavy rain and thunderstorms in western and southwestern Texas, prompting widespread flash flood watches.

A 62-year-old woman and her car were swept down normally dry Alpine Creek inside the city limits of Alpine in West Texas Wednesday evening, police said, blaming the death on flooding from more than three inches of rain that also damaged several buildings, streets, waterworks and railroad tracks.

Showers and thunderstorms also were scattered across the Southeast, Florida and the lower Mississippi and Ohio valleys.

A flash flood warning was posted in sections of central Tennessee as slow-moving thunderstorms soaked sections of the Tennessee Valley.

A high pressure over the western third of the nation provided fair weather for the intermountain region, Pacific Northwest and California.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms scattered from the Great Lakes across the Ohio Valley to the southern Appalachians; from west Texas across Oklahoma into southwest Missouri; across the rest of Texas, the lower Mississippi Valley and the Tennessee Valley into Georgia and Florida; and across the southern Rockies, and a few rainshowers in the northern Rockies.

Highs will be in the 60s along the central Pacific Coast, from northern Montana to northern Michigan and across much of New England; 90s from Florida across the lower Mississippi Valley to eastern and southern Texas; 90s to 110 in southwest Oregon, interior California and the desert Southwest; and 70s to 80s across most of the rest of the nation.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 42 degrees at Limestone, Maine, to 88 at Phoenix, Ariz.

Area teams face tough first game foes

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Several key match-ups highlight the opening of the area football season Friday night, including the inter-district showdown between Greenwood and McCamey.

The Rangers are facing their first game as a Class 3A school, but will make their debut against an old 2A district rival in McCamey. Maurice Hodges also makes his first appearance as Greenwood's head coach against the Badgers.

In other area games, Stanton opens at home with a severe test against Seagraves in an 8 p.m. start; Rankin travels to Iraan, 8 p.m., in a rematch of playoff teams from District 6-A; Andrews makes its first visit to Hereford, 8 p.m.; Lamesa hosts District 1-4A contender Levelland, 8 p.m.; District 3-4A favorite Crane travels to Fort Stockton; and Garden City hosts Paducah, 8 p.m.-Reagan County opens its season Sept. 12.

The Rangers are an experienced team and boast more size than they did last year in the offensive and defensive lines. And when they go up against District 4-3A foes Kermit and Crane, they will need it.

BUT IN going against Buster Leaf's McCamey Badgers, Greenwood may find itself out-quicked for a change.

"McCamey looks awful quick, but I think we match up with them well," Hodges said. "They've got talent on the wings and a lot of speed at tailback and quarterback. All the ingredients of a good team."

But the Rangers are no slouches on speed themselves, not with a burner like Steve Popham in their backfield and a bruising runner like Mitch Russell at fullback.

Up front, Greenwood's size could pose a problem for the smaller Badgers. John Slaton, all district as a junior, is as big as they come for McCamey this year at 5-8, 202. Greenwood's 265-pound Jason Tarlton and 230-pound Hoyt Handley anchor the offensive line.

"Right now our offense is looking better than our defense. But we've showed a 200 percent improvement in our second scrimmage against Coahoma than against Seminole," Hodges said.

Leaf has been not been overly impressed with his young squad so far this season after fielding the District 8-2A champion in 1985. The Rangers should provide a stiff test for the Badgers in preparing for their playoff run in District 5-2A.

"WE'VE PLAYED good defense in our scrimmages, but I'm a little concerned about our offensive game," Leaf said. "We didn't throw well, run well or block well."

Some preseason injuries, most notably to Jeff Lashaway and Sal Holguin, have also hindered the Badgers early progress.

"We just don't have the experience that we had last year, but that comes with time," Leaf explained.

Greenwood is hoping this is its year, stepping up in class or not.

"Our ultimate objective is to win, but we'd like to get our ground game established before we head into district play," Hodges said.

STANTON IS hoping to provide Seagraves with a stiffer test this year after falling down 37-0 last year. The Buffaloes return more experienced this season and coach Dale Ruth has everyone healthy to start the year.

"We've had a long rivalry with Seagraves, there's always been a lot of hitting," Ruth said. "I feel like this year we'll give them some competition. We feel like we can give them a game."

Dwayne Turner is taking an inexperienced squad down to Iraan Friday, and hoping he can come back a winner. Both teams have moved up to Class 2A after playoff seasons in 1A last year.

The Braves welcome back All West Texas running back Chewy Ulate — and former Rankin quarterback Mick McCravey, a likely starter. The Red Devils will rely on Thomas Braden to run the offense and George Abalos to be the backbone of the running game.

Andrews and Lamesa open their seasons with two of the contenders for a playoff spot in District 1-4A. The Mustangs are on the road with Hereford, long a playoff contender in Class 5A.

Andrews' coach David Visentine expects two of the toughest games of the season in the first two weeks — Midland High is next on the slate for the 'Stangs.

"We could be 0-2 after the first two games and still be a very good football team," Visentine says.

While in Lamesa, Clyde Noonkester hopes to get things started against Levelland, also a contender in 1-4A. The Tors will rely on a strong defense to keep them close enough so their inexperienced offense can develop.

Crane takes its high-powered offense against one of the toughest defenses in the area last season when it travels to Fort Stockton and its new coach Ken Herring. Herring was an Odessa Permian assitant for 13 years before taking his show south.

Huskers may forfeit

LINCOLN, Neb. — The NCAA suspended 53 University of Nebraska football players for one game and seven others for two games and the Cornhuskers could possibly forfeit their season opener, Coach Tom Osborne said Wednesday.

Osborne said the suspensions were ordered for what the NCAA said were improprieties in Nebraska's use of complimentary football tickets. "We're naturally amazed and very angry about the whole thing. We told the players we will do everything possible to appeal this."

Osborne said the Cornhuskers could forfeit their season opener against Florida State as one of the options to the suspensions...

Palmer Aces

POTOMAC, Md. — Arnold Palmer became the first professional golfer to register holes-in-one on the same hole on consecutive days in a pro-am round at the Tournament Players Course at Avenel. "It's amazing," Palmer said. "This one was unbelievable." Palmer made his aces on a par-3, 182-yard hole.

Palmer, captain of a U.S. team that will meet an international squad beginning Thursday in the first Chrysler Cup on the Senior PGA Tour, said he used the same 5-iron on both days. "The first one hit about eight to 10 feet short and rolled in. This one carried right down into the center of the cup. This one was really unbelievable." The ace was Palmer's 13th of his career...

Cousineau signs

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. — Veteran NFL linebacker Tom Cousineau, No.1 draft choice in 1979, will join the San Francisco 49ers, Coach Bill Walsh said. "We're excited to have him. We inherited his contract, but there may be some further negotiations."

The Browns waived Cousineau Tuesday after trying unsuccessfully to trade him and his $500,000-a-year contract. Cousineau lost his starting linebacker job with the Browns to Anthony Griggs, obtained in a trade with Philadelphia...

Lidback leads

CAPE CORAL, Fla. — Jenny Lidback of Baton Rouge, La., the college player of the year in 1986, fired a 2-under-par 70 to assume a five-stroke lead in the Futures Golf Tour's Cape Coral Classic. Barb Mucha, of Parma Heights, Ohio, and Kelly Leadbetter, of Winter Haven, Fla., are tied for second at 146 heading into today's final round.

Rebels open season at Lubbock Coronado

Questions surround Lee debut

Part of the experience in Midland Lee's offensive backfield is supplied by During "California" Jenkins, who rushed for 249 yards (7.5 yards per carry) and scored three touchdowns in 1985.

LUBBOCK — There are still a few questions about the 1986 version of the Midland Lee Rebels but there is no longer any time to find any answers. What needs to be learned will come under fire.

The Rebels of District 4-5A open the season 7:30 p.m. Friday against District 3-5A's Lubbock Coronado Mustangs at Lowery Field.

Midland Lee and Lubbock Coronado have a lot of similarities this year as far as experienced players are concerned. Both have returning starters or experienced lettermen back at most of the offensive skill positions and both teams lost most of their front line.

The Rebels' main experience comes from quarterback Rodney Johnson (160-pound, Sr.), and a trio of young halfbacks who who saw action last year: Joe Woodard (175, Jr.), Durian Jenkins (145, Jr.) and Dennis Sterling (150, Jr.). Of the three, Woodard and Jenkins saw playing time.

For the Mustangs, quarterback Billy Ontivaros (160, Sr.), tailback James Goolsby (195, Sr.), wing back Chris Dotson (145, Sr.) and split end Eric Pipes (140, Jr.) either started or saw a lot of playing time in 1985.

Also, two players moved over from the defensive side of the ball to gain offensive starts: Tight end/defensive end Bill Malone (190, Sr.) and offensive tackle Jack Melton, who anchors down the line with a scale-crushing weight of 290 pounds.

"Do to the rain and everything, we didn't get to film their scrimmage so the only reports we have are from the scouts so we really don't have adequate reports on them," said Lee's Earl Miller, who is entering his first game as Lee head coach.

"We're ready to play. The kids are tired of working out and they want to plan an opponent," continued Miller. "The kids want to get out with the fans and band under the lights.

"As for me, I haven't been a head coach for eight years (when he guided Tulia for five years) but the responsibility isn't much different than when I was an assistant because I'm still coaching the same thing (defense). Now, I also have to make all the arrangements for things like food and buses."

Without films, the Rebel coaching staff has to base their plan of attack on the limited scrimmage information and the knowledge of Mustang players who are back from last year when Lee won 42-0.

"We feel like we know what they'll do from the personnel they have — their quarterback and all the receivers are back. We feel they will try to throw the ball about 50 percent of the time."

Which is attacking a Rebel defensive strength where three-of-four starters are back: Jimmy Fennell (170, Jr.), Anthony Pertile (180, Sr.) and Billy Wagner (170, Sr.). All three started at least one game in '85.

According to Miller, the Mustangs aren't one dimentional. They can also play a ground-pounding game.

"They have a tailback, James Goolsby, who led the district in rushing last year with 960 yards so if they mix it up they can cause us some problems," said Miller. "Any time a team runs and throws, it causes a lot of problems."

For the Mustangs, Coach Ken Wallace sees the passing attack as a way to relieve some of the pressure on Goolsby.

"We like to run the football but we know it's a lot of pressure on the one running back we have so, in order for us to be successful this season, we've got to be able to throw and we like to think that if we need to throw we can," said Wallace. "Last year, they (the Rebels) put so much pressure on us early we had to throw and were out of the game early.

"The kids have a lot of respect for Lee," continued Wallace. "We in West Texas know what kind of football they play in that district and it doesn't matter what team from that district you play, we have all the respect in the world for them.

"We just hope our kids will go out and do a better job than they did last year, not to mention Lee just played a super game last year and had probably one of the best offensive lines I've ever seen."

Both coaches put forth a slightly different philosophy about what needs to be done to claim a victory.

"The number one thing, we've got to play with a little emotion," said Wallace. "The kids have to be fired up and come to play football. Secondly, we've got to do a better job offensively. We've got to keep the football ourselves and not let them have it the entire game. That wishbone they run is very explosive and you can't let a team like that keep the ball."

"I think the key will be for us to make the fewest offensive mistakes, don't fumble and have few penalties," said Miller. "Also, the kicking game. "Three-out-of-five early season games are lost because of the kicking game."

Not to mention missed assignments on defense.

Tribble criticizes Bias prosecutor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Brian Lee Tribble, indicted on drug charges in connection with the cocaine-induced death of University of Maryland All-American Len Bias, blames the prosecutor in the case for dragging his friend's name through the mud.

"If he was trying to help Lenny in this investigation," Tribble said, "when that dirt started coming out about Lenny, he would have started turning away from the media."

Tribble, a former Maryland student and close friend of Bias, spoke to the Washington Post in his first public comments since his indictment by a grand jury investigating Bias' June 19 death. The interview was published in today's editions.

He questioned why he has been singled out for attention by Prince George's County State's Attorney Arthur A. Marshall Jr. Both he and his mother, Loretta, say that the prosecutor, who is facing a strong challenge in Tuesday's Democratic primary, has been motivated by an interest "that only God knows and he knows."

"If (Marshall's) interest was in this All-America, great, perfect man, why did he drag his name through the dirt? Basically, he's not interested in nobody. He's proving he's not interested in me, and he's proving he's not interested in Lenny."

In the interview from his parents' Washington home, Tribble also told the newspaper he didn't believe Bias' collapse was going to lead to death.

"I was waiting for him to get up," Tribble said. "I knew he was going to get up.

"The only reason why he didn't get up is we didn't know what we were doing. We knew CPR, but we didn't have the equipment," he told The Post.

Tribble said he followed the ambulance that took Bias to Leland Memorial Hospital in Riverdale, Md., but left when he was told Bias still had a faint heartbeat. Bias was declared dead at the hospital.

"I was sure that I wasn't in trouble," Tribble said. "I didn't think I was going to be in any trouble. I just was trying to make sure he (Bias) didn't get in any trouble. I didn't want nobody to know."

Tribble did not elaborate, the Post story said.

He said he had trouble accepting his friend's death and believed doctors and emergency medical personnel hadn't done enough.

Edberg snuffs out last American hope

NEW YORK (AP) — Tim Wilkison's dream of reaching the semifinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships was shattered Wednesday night as Sweden's Stefan Edberg eliminated the last American in the men's singles, 6-3, 6-3, 6-3.

It's the first time since 1966 that no American has made it into the semifinals of America's premier tennis event.

Earlier Wednesday, defending men's champion Ivan Lendl made the semifinals for the fifth straight year and Chris Evert Lloyd extended her record streak by gaining a berth in the women's semifinals for the 16th consecutive year.

Lendl defeated eighth-seeded Henri Leconte of France 7-6, 6-1, 1-6, 6-1, while Lloyd brushed aside ninth-seeded Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria 6-2, 6-2.

In another women's quarterfinal match, No. 7 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia ousted Australia's Wendy Turnbull 6-4, 6-0.

In the women's semifinals, which will be played Friday, Lloyd will play Sukova and top-seeded Martina Navratilova, seeking her third title in four years, will face West Germany's Steffi Graf, the No. 3 seed.

The men's semifinal pairings will be completed today when Wimbledon champion Boris Becker of West Germany plays Czechoslovakia's Milan Srejber and seventh-seeded Joakim Nystrom of Sweden takes on No. 16 Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia, the winners meeting on Saturday. The other semifinal will send Lendl against Edberg.

When Wednesday's rain-delayed match finally got underway, Edberg quickly silenced the large crowd by breaking Wilkison in the second game as the reigning Australian Open champion jumped out to a 3-0 lead. He also got an early break in the second set and pulled off the only service break in the third set.

Only occasionally did the crowd get a chance to cheer, and those times came when the Asheville, N.C. left-hander made bone-jarring dives for volleys on the hard courts of the National Tennis Center. But those times were few and far between as Edberg played one of his best games of this two-week tournament.

The Swede kept his service returns at Wilkison's feet, forcing the crowd favorite to hit most of his volleys from off his shoetops. And when the two both went to the net, Edberg's experience as one of the world's top doubles players stood him in good stead as he usually came away from the rapid volley exchanges with the winning point.

It took Edberg four set points before he could clinch the first set. And he didn't close out the second set until the fourth set point — that coming on a double-fault by Wilkison. But on each occasion, he did close it out, ending Wilkison's dream.

The final set was anticlimatic as Edberg seemed to do whatever he wanted, whenever he wanted. There was only one service break in the set, but Edberg lost just two points on his serve in the entire set.

The lendl-Leconte match turned on one shot.

Leconte hit a perfectly executed drop shot in the 10th game of the match, a shot that would break Lendl's serve and close out the first set.

Leconte began to raise his hands in triumph when Lendl raced across the court and somehow got his racket on the ball, lifted it down the line, then watched as the ball touched down just inside the line.

"I think that point won me two sets," Lendl said. "I believe that won me the first set because hadn't I gotten to it, I would have lost the first set. And I think mentally it just broke him down, losing that set because he thought he had it.

"I didn't believe I'm going to get to the ball when I was running. But all of a sudden I was there ... and I hit the ball high enough to push it down the line. And once I hit it, I thought I hit it wide, but then it sailed in.

Leconte agreed with Lendl on the significance of the drop shot that didn't work.

"I was feeling that I had the point when I made the drop shot," the Frenchman said, "and Ivan was very quick and he made a big point. After that, I was a little bit disappointed because I was thinking I had the set."

Leconte still had double-break point, but Lendl held, then won the first-set tiebreaker to begin his quarterfinal victory.

Lloyd, a six-time winner of this Grand Slam event and seeded No. 2 this year, will play No. 7 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia in Friday's semifinal. Sukova advanced with a 6-4, 6-0 victory over Australia's Wendy Turnbull.

Mets expel Caps, 5-1

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The Jackson Mets defeated the Shreveport Captains 5-1 Wednesday night to capture their third straight Texas League East Division title.

The Mets will now open the championship series with El Paso, a best of seven affair, at Jackson's Smith-Wills Stadium at 7:30 p.m. Friday.

Wednesday night's winning pitcher, Dave Lenderman, went six innings — striking out three, walking one and giving up five hits. The losing pitcher was Jeff Brantley, a former Mississippi State University pitcher.

The Mets were leading 1-0 in top of the sixth inning, when the Captains tied it up. Allan Cockrell singled, then Mackey Sasser doubled to score Cockrell for Shreveport's only run.

Jackson broke the game wide open in the botton of the sixth inning when Randy Milligan led off and was hit by a pitch. Rick Lockwood flied out, then Jason Felice singled, sending Milligan to third base. Shawn Abner singled to score Milligan.

Al Carmichael followed with another single to score Felice. Joaquin Contreras struck out and Keith Miller doubled, scoring Abner and Carmichael.

Todd Elliott fits AC mold

Former prep standout quartebacks Kangaroos

By LOUIE AVERY

SHERMAN (AP) — Todd Elliott fits the mold at Austin College. The former schoolboy standout from Atlanta, Texas, gambled and gave up a scholarship at Henderson State University in a bid to find more playing time with the NAIA Division II Kangaroos.

Elliott earned that playing time and has made the most of it the past two seasons barking signals for Austin College as the Kangaroos won back-to-back league titles in the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

He was further rewarded by being named the conference's MVP both years.

"I'm like everybody else here. The big schools didn't look at me too much because of my size (5-11, 175) and speed," said Elliott, who directed Atlanta to the state playoffs during his senior campaign in high school.

"One thing that has really helped me here is that we ran the veer and were a dropback passing team at Atlanta. We do the same thing here."

ELLIOTT passed for more than 1,800 yards during his sophomore season as the Kangaroos won the TIAA crown in undisputed fashion. Last season his stats dropped to about 1,700 yards. However, he did slash his interception ratio.

"Elliott has to be one of our key leaders this year if we're to be successful," said Austin College coach Mel Tjeerdsma.

"His pass percentage was up last year and his interceptions down. He matured a lot and did a much better job of running the team. He also got married last winter and that was a very positive thing for Todd."

"I'm really expecting a good season," said Elliott. "While my stats weren't that good last year, I felt more comfortable and had more confidence in myself. I feel even better going into this season, and getting married had a lot to do with that."

ELLIOTT married his high school sweetheart, Judith. The two had dated in high school, then were apart most of three years after both graduated from Atlanta.

The Kangaroos enter the 1986 season as strong favorites to repeat in the TIAA and that's naturally got Elliott excited. But he admittedly wants more then that this fall.

"I want to go to the playoffs this year," he said. "You have to be one of the top eight teams in the nation to make the playoffs, which means we'll have to go 10-0, or 9-1 at the worst.

"We're going to throw the football a lot this year and that's exciting to think about," Elliott continued.

"It's just the type of people we have here. Most of the players here were overlooked because of size and speed. The thing that has to excite you here is that the people want to play football."

IF TJEERDSMA goes with the offense that won him a share of the conference title in 1985, Elliott could easily be one of the nation's leading passers this fall. Austin College lost its top two running backs at midseason last year and Tjeerdsma instituted Mississippi Valley's famous spread offense out of necessity.

Feds probe finances of Memphis coach

Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Federal authorities looking into the finances of Memphis State basketball Coach Dana Kirk have subpoenaed records of a contract he held with four Memphis car dealers, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

Kirk, who led Memphis State to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament the past five years, served for awhile as a spokesman for the Metro Ford Dealers Association, said Ford dealer Tommy Keesee Jr.

In that job, Kirk was paid a salary and furnished with a car, Keesee told The Commercial Appeal of Memphis.

He declined to say how much Kirk was paid, and the coach declined to discuss the arrangement.

A federal grand jury has been looking into Kirk's finances for several months, and Keesee said agents with the Internal Revenue Service have asked for copies of the coach's contract with the Ford dealers.

Kirk has acknowledged that his personal finances are under review but he has denied any wrongdoing.

IRS agents also have subpoenaed records of Kirk's dealings with Memphis radio and television stations where he has conducted sports talk shows.

Besides has salary for those shows, Kirk was paid $500 for an interview prior to Memphis State's appearance at the NCAA's 1984-85 Final Four, said Jack Eaton, sports director at WMC-TV.

Eaton said Kirk was paid $400 for the interview and $100 to clear the way for several of his players to be interviewed.

Opening weekend offers 'Bowl' type college menu

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

The calendar says summer is still here but from the looks of Saturday's attractive college football schedule it could be Jan. 1 just as easily as Sept. 6.

Any bowl would be delighted with such matchups as No. 1 Oklahoma vs. No. 4 UCLA, No. 3 Miami vs. No. 13 Florida and No. 8 Nebraska vs. No. 11 Florida State.

Whatever happened to the days when teams would open against what prize fighters call an "opponent" — someone who might give you a workout for a while but turns out to be a guaranteed victory?

UCLA is the highest ranked team the Sooners have faced in an opener since 1968 when they lost to No. 3 Notre Dame 45-21.

"We're a better football team than we were that day," jokes Coach Barry Switzer, who was Oklahoma's offensive coordinator back then.

And for the second year in a row UCLA opens on the road against the defending national champion (the Bruins defeated Brigham Young 27-24 last season).

"The Oklahoma game is a big game nationally," says Coach Terry Donahue, who was the defensive line coach at Kansas from 1967-70 (Oklahoma beat the Jayhawks in each of those four years but three of them were 4-point games). "It's an exciting event. The players want to play Oklahoma. I don't think we're any different than anybody else.

"But it's not going to be a national championship shootout for me. It might be for other people; it's not for me. I'd rather win a (Pac-10) conference game than a non-conference game."

Oklahoma, playing at home, is a 7-point favorite in this first meeting between the two schools. The pick is . . . Oklahoma 24-14.

The first week of the season produced an 8-4 prediction mark, 2-2 against the spread.

Miami, Fla. (favored by 4) at Florida: The 48th edition of a series that has been played in Orlando, Tampa and Jacksonville as well as Miami and Gainesville. It began in 1938 — Florida leads 25-22 — and has been played every year except 1943. Twenty-four games have been decided by less than a touchdown but not the last three. Miami's last visit to Gainesville was a 28-3 loss in 1983, the only blemish in the Hurricanes' national championship season. Will lightning strike twice . . . Miami 28-21.

Florida State at Nebraska (by 6½): Bobby Bowden is a religious man who often preaches to congregations in the Tallahassee area. On the road, what Bowden preaches is winning. He's 1-0 at Notre Dame, 2-0 at Ohio State and Arizona State, 4-1 at LSU, 3-2 at Miami and 2-1 at Nebraska, including last year's 17-13 triumph. Make that 2-2 . . . Nebraska 24-21.

Vanderbilt at No. 5 Alabama (by 22): At the preseason SEC media days, a Birmingham radio man mistook Vandy quarterback Mark Wracher for Bama's Mike Shula. No mistaking which is the better team . . . Alabama 31-13.

Temple at No. 6 Penn State (by 13½): Last year, Temple lost a 27-25 squeaker but the Owls will find that the Nittany Lions are not pussycats this time . . . Penn State 28-14.

New Mexico at No. 10 Tennessee (by 23): Originally scheduled for Albuquerque but New Mexico needed the revenue from the 90,000-plus crowd in Knoxville. What the Lobos don't need is a licking, but that's what they'll get . . . Tennessee 42-14.

No. 12 Baylor (by 20) at Wyoming: There are some easy openers left after all . . . Baylor 34-13.

Tennessee-Chattanooga at No. 14 Auburn (no line): The Tigers make a mockery of the Mocs . . . Auburn 45-7.

Utah State at No. 18 Brigham Young (no line): Another laugher . . . BYU 38-7.

Lamar at Rice (no line): An also-ran from the Southland Conference against an also-ran from the Southwest Conference. Bet the house that former Rice Coach Ray Alborn will have his new team sky-high for this one. Upset Special of the Week . . . Lamar 21-20.

Air Force (by 15) at Texas-El Paso: UTEP's victory over BYU last year was one of the biggest upsets in history. Second Upset Special . . . Texas-El Paso 28-24.

Hatcher's home run helps Houston sweep Chicago Cubs

Associated Press

The Houston Astros may have turned the final corner in their division race, while the New York Mets have moved into the homestretch of a runaway.

With a pair of victories over the Chicago Cubs Wednesday, including the 18-inning conclusion of a suspended game from the day before, the Astros took an eight-game lead over Cincinnati in the National League West.

"It doesn't matter how long the day is if you win two," said former Midland Cub Billy Hatcher, whose homer won the suspended game 8-7. The Astros got homers from Dickie Thon and Denny Walling to win the regularly scheduled game 8-2.

Astros 8, Cubs 7
Astros 8, Cubs 2

Mike Scott won his 15th game of the season, striking out 12 and allowing three hits in seven innings as the Astros won the regularly scheduled game. Scott leads the majors with 253 strikeouts.

The first game was resumed in the top of the 15th inning. The two teams played 14 innings before the game was suspended Tuesday because of darkness with the score tied 4-4.

The Astros went ahead 7-4 in top of the 17th on RBI singles by Dan Dreissen and Kevin Bass and a run-scoring groundout by Jose Cruz. Keith Moreland hit a three-run homer in the bottom half of the inning to retie the score, but Hatcher, an ex-Cub, homered in the 18th for the victory.

Pirates 5, Reds 3

Sid Bream hit a two-out, two-run double in the 10th inning to boost the Pirates over the Reds. With John Franco pitching, Johnny Ray singled and one out later was forced at second on a grounder by R.J. Reynolds. After Tony Pena walked, Bream doubled to right-center field to score both runners.

Mets 4, Giants 2

Ojeda struck out seven and walked just one in his seventh complete game. He had thrown four previous three-hitters, all as a member of the Boston Red Sox. Ray Knight had two singles and drove in a run for the Mets.

Padres 7, Phillies 5

San Diego scored six unearned runs with two out in the top of the ninth inning to beat Philadelphia. Terry Kennedy's double drove in the final three runs of the inning.

Mike Schmidt hit a three-run homer in the first inning, and the Phillies got their other two runs in the eighth on RBI singles by Von Hayes and Glenn Wilson. The homer was Schmidt's 30th, No. 488 of his career.

Dodgers 5, Expos 3

Bill Madlock drove in three runs with a pair of hits, and Ralph Bryant hit his second major league homer, a two-run shot, helping Los Angeles beat the Expos for the first time in six games in Montreal this season.

Cardinals 5, Braves 3

Terry Pendelton had four hits, including an RBI single in St. Louis' three-run first inning, and Todd Worrell earned a league-leading 31st save with 2 1-3 innings of relief work, leading the Cardinals over Atlanta.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

In the East, Dave Stieb and Bob Stanley are at the 100 mark and still counting. In the West, the California Angels' magic number is 22 and dropping.

"It feels very good, but you try not to get caught up in it," Kirk McCaskill said after pitching a five-hitter that led California past Baltimore 5-2.

The victory gave the Angels a 7½-game lead over second-place Texas. California now holds its biggest margin of the season and its magic number for clinching the division is down to 22.

Stieb and Stanley both won their 100th career games Wednesday night. Stieb pitched seven-hit ball for 7 2-3 innings as Toronto beat Cleveland 3-1, while Stanley won in relief as Boston took its fifth straight by defeating Texas 4-3.

The win enabled the Red Sox to maintain their 4½-game lead over second-place Toronto.

McCaskill, 15-7, pitched his ninth complete game of the season. The Angels broke a 2-2 tie in the fifth inning when Gary Pettis hit an RBI triple off reliever Odell Jones, 2-2, and then scored on Rob Wilfong's single.

Ruppert Jones hit a two-run homer, his 16th of the season, in the second against Baltimore starter Storm Davis.

Red Sox 4, Rangers 3

Wade Boggs, the leading hitter in the major leagues, went 3-for-5, including a solo home run and a game-winning, RBI double in the ninth inning at Fenway Park.

Mike Greenwell led off the ninth with a single against Dale Mohorcic, 2-2. Spike Owen struck out trying to sacrifice, but Boggs' double scored pinch-runner LaSchelle Tarver from first base.

Boggs is batting .34937, just ahead of Minnesota's Kirby Puckett at .34920.

Blue Jays 3, Indians 1

Stieb allowed seven singles in 7 2-3 innings, his longest outing in nine starts since July 9, as Toronto beat visiting Cleveland.

A's 5, Yankees 3

Mike Davis' second triple of the game, a two-run shot during a four-run rally in the sixth inning, led Oakland over visiting New York.

Mariners 3, Tigers 2

Pinch-hitter Ken Phelps hit a solo homer with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, lifting Seattle over Detroit.

Royals 2, White Sox 1

Willie Wilson sped home from third base on rookie Kevin Seitzer's infield singles with one out in the bottom of the 10th inning, leading Kansas City over Chicago.

Twins 11, Brewers 5

Puckett and Tom Brunansky hit two-run homers off Ted Higuera and Al Woods later added a three-run shot as Minnesota pounded Milwaukee.

Puckett, who went 4-for-5, and Brunansky both connected during a five-run second inning.

Higuera, 17-9, was ejected from the game after arguing with home plate umpire Tom Leppard following Brunansky's homer. Higuera left trailing 7-1 in his worst outing of the season as the Twins completed a three-game sweep.

Search firm: Local candidates still in running for chief

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The field of candidates vying for the job as chief of the Midland Police has been narrowed to between 15 to 20, including three of the four local candidates who applied for the job, according to a representative of the search firm hired by the city to find a chief.

Bruce Jensen, a partner in the Bellevue, Wash., firm Jensen-Oldani, is slated to arrive in Midland Sept. 18 to meet with City Manager James Brown and interview the candidates.

Brown said Wednesday he was going to meet with Jensen "within two weeks."

"I would think he would talk to the people who have applied for the job in Midland," Brown said.

Maj. Sid Corley, who was appointed interim police chief by Brown, was contacted by the firm and is scheduled for an interview Sept. 18, said Midland police Lt. Earl Luckey.

Patrick Fuller, investigator in Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre's office, said he received a call Wednesday to schedule his interview for the job, also scheduled for Sept. 18.

Jan Cooper, a partner in Jensen-Oldani, said she could not confirm the interviews would take place, but she said "if they are saying that they are going to be interviewed, then I guess they are still being considered."

Capt. Clayton McKinney, head of criminal investigation at the Midland County Sheriff's office, also has been contacted for an interview, Sheriff Gary Painter said.

Robert Peetz, 38, coordinator of the criminal justice program at Midland College, said he had not been contacted by the firm, but had been told he would be included.

Ms. Cooper said Jensen was on the road interviewing candidates, as part of the process to narrow the field.

"After interviewing these candidates, we will have discussions with the city manager, and come up with the finalists," she said.

Ms. Cooper said "five or six" finalists will be brought to Midland to meet with city officials, and will be given an "orientation" of the police department, and of the city, including the recent economic woes of the area.

"We make every effort to make sure the candidates are well-informed about the situation they are getting into," Ms. Cooper said.

"We've got to make sure of that. It is in our best interest to be in your best interest, because if the (new) chief doesn't stay there a year, we have to initiate another search.

"My understanding is that anywhere from five to seven people will be brought to Midland for interviews," Brown said.

He said he would interview finalists along with Deputy City Manager Fred Poe and members of the City Council.

"We want whoever comes here to be happy, and not to take the job for the sake of taking a job," Brown said.

Corley has served as interim chief since July 1. Although a permanent chief will not be named until mid-October, Brown said the city has been careful not to rush the process.

Democrats pick Watson as JP candidate

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Watson

Midland's Democratic Party made official today its appointment of Aquilla Watson as its candidate for the Justice of the Peace, Precinct 1 Place 1 position vacated last month by Ken Arp.

Arp was forced to resign from the race when it was learned a Texas Election Code stipulation restricted a Democratic candidate from voting in another party's primary, as Arp did in April, a party spokesman said.

Democratic officials, though, said they find Ms. Watson, 41, to be just as qualified for the position as Arp was, said Midland County Democratic Party chairman Janet Massey.

"The selection committee found her to be a a very fair, honest and gracious person — we feel she is an outstanding candidate for the job," Ms. Massey said.

Ms. Watson has been actively involved with Democratic maneuvers in Midland for the past 10 years, she said.

While serving as Precinct 308 chairman for the past six years, Ms. Watson said, she also has been involved in voter registration, door-to-door campaigns to increase voter turn-out and campaigning for local and state Democratic candidates.

She said her nomination hasn't changed her election-year lifestyle at all.

"During elections, I'm always so busy — this isn't anything new.

"I have become more conscious (as a candidate) of what I say and what I do," Ms. Watson said.

On molding her campaign for the November election, she said she plans to "put herself into the election" and let voters know what she feels she could do as a Justice of the Peace as well as what she believes the position stands for.

"I feel that I represent all of the people and not just one part of the city. I can relate to everyone and make a fair decision.

"There are always two sides to every story," she said.

Snelson, Smith debate slated

From Staff Reports

They'll be off and running come high noon Friday at the Petroleum Club where the two 21st Congressional District candidates will jockey for important Midland nods.

Hometown candidate, Pete Snelson, a Democrat, and Republican Lamar Smith, will each have about 15 minutes to voice their platforms and major concerns of the upcoming election and then will answer queries from the floor, Randy Turner, MBA spokesman said.

Jimmy Hall, Snelson's campaign manager, said he expected Snelson to "speak on his ability to do a much better job than Mr. Smith."

"All Smith does is read out of a Republican handbook," Hall said.

David Hawkings, press secretary for Smith, said, "The discussion of important federal policies — energy, economy and drugs — are of far more interest to the voters than the help we receive from the National Republican Congressional Committee."

Turner said the MBA will not officially endorse either candidate, but instead, will let individual attorneys decide for themselves who is the better candidate for the office.

Trial over 'white oil' to begin in district court

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The case of "white oil", a $30-million controversy over the alleged improper classification of oil and gas wells in the Texas Panhandle, is being heard by a six-woman jury in U.S. District Court in Midland.

The suit pits Pan Eastern Exploration Co. and Anadarko Petroleum Corp. against 42 defendants, including oil well operators, investors and bankers.

Pan Eastern and Anadarko, which claim they hold rights to natural gas under five sections in Moore County just north of Amarillo, are alleging that Hufo Oil and Hufo Production Corp. of Midland and Ted True Inc. of Dallas stole natural gas from their natural-gas formations, set up liquid extraction units (LTXs) to manufacture gasoline from gas, and counted the production as "crude petroleum oil" for well-classification purposes.

Hufo and True, which succeeded Hufo, had rights to drill for oil from oil-bearing formations but apparently had no rights to natural gas.

In his opening arguments, Pan Eastern-Anadarko attorney Eugene LaBay claimed that for 50 years natural gas had been produced from the Moore County formations and that there was "practically no oil production" there.

He claimed that defendants Hufo and True used the LTXs to freeze the gas and to extract liquids from it.

"They (Pan Eastern and Anadarko) have been victimized by these defendants in a fraudulent manner...not unlike slant oil wells in East Texas," LaBay said.

"They converted that gas to their own benefit."

There also is a dispute over caisson-head gas — gas produced in the production of crude oil.

"There is nothing illegal about having...and running LTX units on your lease," he said.

True attorney George Kolb noted that the plaintiffs in the case are making some "rather serious accusations" in calling the defendants "cheats, liars, thieves, and racketeers."

Rather than just producing natural gas, the Panhandle field is the second largest oil field in Texas, he said. The Hufo and True well produced black crude oil.

"You will hear evidence that will shock you" on the practices of big business corporations, Kolb told the jurors.

Kolb said that the 26 oil wells involved in the litigation are now shut down.

Attorney Andy Taylor, who represents former True drilling superintendent Billie Mack Gideon, said that the plaintiffs "can't sue somebody for something that never belonged to them."

A third-party defendant in the suit is Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line, which is a subsidary of Pan Eastern and Anadarko. The defendants brought the pipe line company into the suit.

About 100 witnesses are lined up for the case, which is being presiding over by U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Planned Parenthood cancels raffle because they find it is illegal

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Permian Basin Planned Parenthood officials thought they had an idea to raise some cash.

The organization planned to capitalize on the donation of a 1936 replica Jaguar by selling 70 tickets at $100 each.

But before the fund-raising event could begin, they discovered in August that their planned raffle was illegal.

"We never had a raffle before and I guess we never will," said the center's director Dana Frazee.

"Once we found out something like this was illegal, we backed out of it. We're not about to do anything illegal," she said.

Planned Parenthood had to cancel its raffle after the Attorney General's office notified officials that all raffles are illegal.

The organization requested an opinion from the Attorney General's office after hearing a radio report about an illegal raffle, said Pam Black of Planned Parenthood.

Raffles are viewed by the state as lotteries, said Ron Dusek, spokesman for the Attorney General's office.

"They've always been illegal. They're similar to a lottery. It's gambling," Dusek said.

However, despite their illegality, many non-profit organizations throughout the state use raffles to raise money, he said.

"Raffles do seem to be a common practice, but that doesn't mean their legal," Dusek said.

Falling rain music to the ears, feels good on the skin

When I was but a child, I early discovered the joy of rain. I had a strong affinity for rain. I still do. I like it. Light rain, moderate rain, heavy rain.

I delighted in sitting or lying on a haystack in the barn and listening to the sound of thousands of rain drops plummeting to Earth and dancing on the tin roof. It was music and still is. I enjoyed getting drenched but only if the weather wasn't chilly or cold. I walked and ran in the rain, felt the friendly mush of diluted mud squeezing through my toes, and really enjoyed the sense of rain falling onto my physical being. I still do. It's fun running in the rain.

The sight of water-logged clouds, streaming raindrops, and flashing lightning always was exciting. Thunder was so dramatic and conjured up suspense, danger and excitement. That hasn't changed.

In the house, I found excitement when the folks were alarmed by a leaky roof. We'd place pots and buckets under direct lines of the drips. I enjoyed the pitter-patter of raindrops landings in the pots and buckets.

And there was some drama in emptying the containers once full and trying not to spill any of that fresh rainwater onto the floor.

I also enjoyed watching water pour from the roof gutters and into the brick-lined cisterns — reserves of freshwater. There's no drink any more refreshing than cistern water. Back then, I preferred it over well water, which came from "way under" where the inner-Earth is dark and mysterious.

After the rain, I was thrilled by the glorious sight of the magnificent rainbow. The baby and juvenile frogs seemed to be born and hopping in the new rainfall. And, as streams of water flowed in ditches, I knew it was good crawfish-fishing time. I'd get pieces of salt pork or bacon from the kitchen at Grandmother's place, tie a string onto it, toss the anchor of fat into the ditch or into a freshly dug crawfish hole, and I'd just wait, with some measure of impatience, for the crawfish to grab the bait with their pinches. I always was delighted to catch the Granddaddy of the crawfish. Crawfish, like the frogs, came with the rain from the heavens. That thing about it "raining cats and dogs" is a myth. And you know that if you believe in frogs and crawfish as I do.

If the rain brought forth frogs and crawfish, and it did, it also gave rise to make-believe boats and sailboats. I don't recall making and playing with toy boats unless it rained. I did once, I believe, but it was a bore. I must have been influenced by the story of the Ark, the Great Flood, and animals pairing off.

I, too, can fondly recall just sitting on the porch and watching it rain. That's part of the joying of living on a farm. If it rains, you always can find nothing to do and excuses for not working — even if there's work to be done in the barn or shed.

Now, it was the aftermath of rain that caused some problems. But even the contention with mud and bogging down in that East Texas blackland never canceled out the joy which rain held for me. I recall cars and pick-up trucks bogging down in the sticky mud and slinging mud all over the place — including me. I recall my impatience with vainly trying to get all the sticky mud off of my shoes and boots and, if I wore them, my galoshes. That just came with the territory. Now, bringing mud in the house, I quickly learned, did not, most definitely, come with the territory. That was quite clear.

After the rain, particularly in the summer, there was the drying-out process and the steamy heat and humidity with which to put up. That was just part of the rain cycle.

The payoff of rain is in the life it supports, the greening of the pastures, the life sprouting in the fields, the happiness of the birds and all of life, and joy of just being alive.

RAFFLES

Ms. Frazee said the illegality of raffles hampers some non-profit organizations' ability to raise money.

"I know there are a lot of non-profits in town that have raffles. It's something that's going to affect non-profits."

Prosecuting illegal raffles is up to local district attorneys, Dusek said.

However, District Attorney Al Schorre said he has never prosecuted any sponsors of local raffles.

"We have not had anyone refer a case like that," Schorre said.

If the police or sheriff's department did file against a non-profit organization, Schorre said his office would investigate it.

"We know it's going to a good cause. But if we're put in a situation where someone complains, we would have to look at it," Schorre said.

Sheriff Gary Painter said he has never investigated local raffles because there have been no complaints.

"None of the people have complained. If it's such a flagrant violation of the law then we're going to look into it," Painter said.

Schorre said, "We're caught in this dilemma. We know it's a good cause, but technically it's a violation.

"We realize a lot of their fundraising programs benefit, but it does put law enforcement agencies in a very difficult position of ignoring it. I think all law enforcement agencies would prefer the charities find some other means of raising money," Schorre said.

"I would like to get the post filled and I'm sure the council would like to get it filled — but I am willing to get it done right," Brown said.

"Maj. Corley is doing a good job down there, I don't have any doubt about that."

Ms. Cooper said based on previous searches for law enforcement officials the firm has undertaken, "I think we've got an excellent group of candidates; this is an outstanding group...I don't think you are going to see any candidates come to Midland that are not willing to make a commitment to the community."

Ms. Watson said the position will require her to hand down final judgements and she said that won't be a problem.

"It's not hard for one to be rational and fair-minded when he or she is not personally involved.

"The position is important because it gives many people the opportunity to have their case heard. If it weren't there (the Justice of the Peace position), many would simply have their problems shuffled under the rug, so to speak," Ms. Watson said.

Inmate: New evidence shows he didn't kill teen

Brandley

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Death row inmate Clarence Brandley says new evidence shows what he has always maintained — he did not rape and kill a 16-year-old girl at Conroe High School in 1980 although he was convicted of the crime.

A state district judge is considering the evidence, which involves a Conroe woman testifying in a special hearing that her former boyfriend told her he killed a girl at Conroe High.

The new evidence from attorneys for Brandley and the district attorney's office in Montgomery County will be submitted later this month to the state Court of Criminal Appeals.

The appeals court could order a retrial or could uphold the conviction against the former janitor at the high school. Brandley's attorney is expecting a decision within six months.

In an interview Wednesday, Brandley said he hopes the new testimony will lead to his freedom.

"I feel a whole lot better now," he said. "I don't know what my chances are. I want to see how the court will rule. I'm just going to sit and wait."

Brandley, 34, was sentenced to death after he was convicted of killing Cheryl Dee Ferguson on Aug. 23, 1980. The girl, manager of the Bellville High School volleyball team, died shortly after arriving with her school team for a scrimmage against Conroe.

However, Brenda Medina, of Conroe, said at a hearing last month that her former boyfriend, James Dexter Robinson, told her he had killed a girl at Conroe High School. Robinson acknowledged making the statement, but insisted he made up the story to frighten Ms. Medina.

"I knew him," Brandley said of Robinson, a former co-worker. "He was real quiet. He stayed to himself. I didn't even know he was at the school that Saturday."

Robinson also testified he had left Texas for South Carolina about three weeks before the slaying. Another janitor, however, testified he saw Robinson three days before the slaying.

Brandley said he was surprised by the Medina testimony.

"It was hard to believe," he said. "All of a sudden, just coming up."

Brandley said he believes the fact he is black had much to do with his arrest and conviction.

"I don't know who did it," he said of the slaying. "But it's kind of hard to believe that out of all the people out there that day — somebody didn't see anything. I was the only black there.

"In my conviction, it (race) played a big part. No doubt about that."

Brandley said "certain officials" knew he was innocent, but refused to identify them.

He also said because the 1980 school year was about to start at the time of the slaying, it was important for investigators to ease the fears of parents and arrest someone for the killing.

"I was at the wrong place at the wrong time," he said. "I was more convenient for them to convict."

Brandley said he did not think he would be retried, although his attorney, Mike DeGuerin, said another trial — which would be Brandley's third — was likely. The first trial ended with a hung jury as one juror held out for Brandley's innocence. The second trial ended with a conviction.

DeGuerin said Brandley was convicted on circumstantial evidence.

"They were convinced he was guilty and they tailored their case to that," DeGuerin said of prosecutors. "If any evidence was contrary, it was dismissed. The point is, there are serious doubts whether Brandley is guilty."

James Keeshan, who prosecuted Brandley, has said he was unaware of the Medina comments at the time of the investigation.

"Had I learned that anyone confessed or attempted to confess, I would certainly have followed it up," he said.

Brandley received a Jan. 15 execution date earlier this year, but later was granted a stay.

Customers eager to drive bargain

Incentives help dealers sell '86 models

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Special low-interest car loan offers are filling Texas auto showrooms with customers eager to drive a bargain, dealers say.

The special financing, ranging from 0 percent to 5.9 percent, souped up sales statewide, with record-breaking volumes.

Customers at Shamaley Ford in El Paso had to take a number because salesmen were swamped last weekend, said general manager Wayne Blunt.

In Irving, Labor Day weekend sales were 50 percent better than any one three-day period, said Robert Moore, general manager of Burton-Curry Buick.

In Houston, which has been plagued by the oil industry downturn, the interest rates brought back a glimpse of the good days, said Bill Joseph, sales manager for Charlie Thomas Chrysler-Plymouth Inc.

"You can't even tell there's a bad economy," Joseph said.

In San Antonio, Al Madera, general sales manager of Benson Ingram Park Chrysler Plymouth Mazda, said he sold about 60 cars in a two-day period.

And in the Rio Grande Valley, car dealers were dipping deep into their inventories because of the buying boom. Bill Mowbray, owner of Bill Mowbray Motors in Brownsville, said that many car dealers already were low on some models and are quickly selling out of others.

General Motors Corp. led off the low financing last week with the announcement of 2.9 annual-percentage-rate on 36-month loans for 1986 cars. Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. followed with similar plans. American Motors Corp. got in on the financing war Wednesday, offering interest-free financing on most of its 1986 cars and Jeeps.

Car shoppers Becky and Daryl Embry said they had not bought a new car for six years. Tuesday, as they waited in the showroom of Vandergriff Buick in Arlington, they were adding up the potential savings.

"We figured it up and we'd save $5,000," Mrs. Embry said. "That's one of the things that brought us out."

Simon and Concepcion Garcia of Brownsville said they were going to trade in their 1983 Lincoln Mark VI for a Cadillac Fleetwood from Mowbray's dealership.

"I wanted to trade it in for a smaller car," Mrs. Garcia said. "They gave me a special deal and the interest rate also is very good. We are getting older and the prices have gone up, but we believe this car will last us a long time."

Last week, GM and Ford began offering 2.9 percent financing on three-year loans, and Chrysler offered car buyers 2.4 percent financing on two-year notes. The GM, Ford and AMC plans run through Oct. 8. Chrysler will offer the low interest through Oct. 12.

AMC is offering 0 percent interest on 24-month loans, 2.9 percent financing on 36-month loans and 5.9 percent on 48-month loans.

Auto dealers across the state said the special buying incentives brought in droves of customers after the announcement.

"We did in three days one month's worth of business," said Blunt of El Paso. He said 155 cars were sold over the weekend, with the dealership staying open all night Sunday. "We had at one time 30 people waiting on a salesman," he said.

He said salesmen are not demanding the sticker price for vehicles because the low interest is being offered by Ford Motor Credit Company, not the dealership itself.

"We did in three days one month's worth of business. We had at one time 30 people waiting on a salesman. (Salesmen are not demanding the sticker price for vehicles because the low interest is being offered by Ford Motor Credit Company, not the dealership itself and) "with as many customers that we had the profit will take care of itself."

— Wayne Blunt, general manager El Paso dealership

"With as many customers that we had the profit will take care of itself," he said.

However, Mowbray of Brownsville warned that GM should be looking for other deals in 1987. "There's no doubt in my mind that we're stealing from 1987 sales," he said. "We need something (in 1987) or it's going to die right on the line."

At Jim Allee AMC Jeep Renault Inc. in Dallas, sales manager Gene Klinkerman said traffic increased Wednesday with news of the special interest deals.

Moore of Irving said the low interest rates are the biggest incentive program ever offered by GM. "As far as our sales over the weekend, there's only one word to describe it — it's awesome. We have the product, but we do not have the people to wait on them."

He said his dealership had sold about 75 cars in the three days that kicked off the new financing, the Thursday through Saturday before Labor Day.

At Bob Robertson Chevrolet in Houston, sales have jumped from an average of 10 a day to about 25 a day, said sales manager Jim Neff.

"If sales get any better, it would be just like the old days," he said.

The savings are causing sales to triple at Houston's Galleria Area Ford, said Charles Kitchen, sales manager. He predicts his 1986 fleet of 250 cars and trucks will be gone in less than a month.

Senate OKs paperwork reduction bill

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Responding to complaints of excessive paperwork, the Senate Wednesday followed the House's lead and approved a bill giving public school teachers more time to teach.

Gov. Mark White, who opened the special session to the paperwork-reduction bill, is expected to sign the measure, passed unanimously on a voice vote Wednesday in the Senate.

The bill eliminates paperwork that doesn't deal with reports on attendance, lesson plans, grades or textbooks, although it does not provide for sanctions against school districts that don't obey the bill.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and the Senate sponsor, said school districts should have taken it upon themselves to cut back on unnecessary paperwork. But he acknowledged that some districts continue to require useless reports that take up teachers' time.

"This will, once and for all, put into law what paperwork is necessary and what isn't," Parker said.

All the major education organizations in the state endorse the bill, which limits each discussion topic in district reports to one page.

The 1984 education reforms called for the State Board of Education to look at paperwork reduction efforts when awarding state accredidation, but teachers have complained that the mounds of paper have kept piling up.

When the House passed the bill last week, some members opposed it because the measure requires local district to file reports detailing their paperwork-reduction plans. Opponents said mandating more reports would defeat the intent of the bill.

But the Senate passed the bill Wednesday without debate.

Injured driver wearing only cowboy boots

COTULLA, Texas (AP) — Authorities in this South Texas city say a motorist injured in a one-car rollover was wearing only his cowboy boots.

The 62-year-old man suffered a broken leg on Wednesday after his late-model car overturned about two miles south of Cotulla on Interstate 35, state troopers said.

"His explanation was that he was on his way to take a shower. So, I asked him where he planned to find water, and he told me that he figured he would just come up on some," said Earl Heath, Texas Department of Public Safety trooper.

DPS officers and LaSalle County Sheriff's deputies, who arrived at the accident site found the man "in a good state of coherence" sitting in his car which had rolled onto the median.

The man was driving northbound on the interstate when he lost control of his car and it flipped completely over, landing upright in the median, officers said.

Heath said the motorist gave no permanent address, basing that claim on a statement that he was a "world traveler."

"I would like to get the post filled and I'm sure the council would like to get it filled — but I am willing to get it done right," Brown said.

"Maj. Corley is doing a good job down there, I don't have any doubt about that."

Ms. Cooper said based on previous searches for law enforcement officials the firm has undertaken, "I think we've got an excellent group of candidates; this is an outstanding group...I don't think you are going to see any candidates come to Midland that are not willing to make a commitment to the community."

Ms. Watson said the position will require her to hand down final judgements and she said that won't be a problem.

"It's not hard for one to be rational and fair-minded when he or she is not personally involved.

"The position is important because it gives many people the opportunity to have their case heard. If it weren't there (the Justice of the Peace position), many would simply have their problems shuffled under the rug, so to speak," Ms. Watson said.

Soldiers sentenced

FORT HOOD (AP) — Two soldiers have been sentenced on charges of stealing government property during separate court-martial proceedings.

Sgt. John W. Clemmons, 27, a supply sergeant with the 6th Cavalry Brigade, was found guilty Wednesday on four charges of larceny and four charges of wrongful disposition of government property.

He was sentenced to 12 months' confinement at a military barracks, either at Fort Leavonworth, Kan., or Fort Riley, Kan.

RAFFLES

Ms. Frazee said the illegality of raffles hampers some non-profit organizations' ability to raise money.

"I know there are a lot of non-profits in town that have raffles. It's something that's going to affect non-profits."

Prosecuting illegal raffles is up to local district attorneys, Dusek said.

However, District Attorney Al Schorre said he has never prosecuted any sponsors of local raffles.

"We have not had anyone refer a case like that," Schorre said.

If the police or sheriff's department did file against a non-profit organization, Schorre said his office would investigate it.

"We know it's going to a good cause. But if we're put in a situation where someone complains, we would have to look at it," Schorre said.

Sheriff Gary Painter said he has never investigated local raffles because there have been no complaints.

"None of the people have complained. If it's such a flagrant violation of the law then we're going to look into it," Painter said.

Schorre said, "We're caught in this dilemma. We know it's a good cause, but technically it's a violation.

"We realize a lot of their fundraising programs benefit, but it does put law enforcement agencies in a very difficult position of ignoring it. I think all law enforcement agencies would prefer the charities find some other means of raising money," Schorre said.

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Five people were arrested late Wednesday and are expected to be charged with possession of heroin following a raid on a local residence by Midland County Sheriff's officers.

Sheriff Gary Painter said about eight officers participated in the raid about 7:45 p.m. on a house in 500 block of N. Lee.

A warrant for the raid was issued about 6:45 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Judy Massingil.

Three women and two men, ranging in age from 18 to 39, were arrested.

A large amount of stolen property believed to have been stolen in recent burglaries was recovered, according to the Sheriff's office.

The estimated street value of the heroin recovered was $1,000, reports said. A small amount of cocaine was also recovered.

The Midland Police Department has a suspect in armed robbery of a convenience store Wednesday afternoon.

Police say a black woman escaped with $210 cash after she entered the Speedy Pack grocery, 1201 Garden City Highway, about 2 p.m., and displayed a small caliber pistol.

A woman matching the description of the suspect was seen by several witnesses near the store, and shortly after the robbery a 17-year-old girl was arrested a few blocks away.

She is expected to be charged today with aggravated robbery.

In other reports, the Sheriff's office is investigating the theft of doors and hoods from two vehicles.

Roy Greer, owner of Roy Greer Trucking, told deputies the items, valued at $3,500, were taken from the business near the intersection of County Road 1140 and State Highway 158.

The theft occurred Tuesday or Wednesday, reports said.

Police are also investigating the burglary of a local residence.

Margeta Lewis, told police a 19-inch color portable television set valued at $600, an AM-FM stereo valued at $16, and two stereo speakers valued at $5 were reported stolen from a residence in the 1200 block of W. Florida Ave.

Two amplifiers valued at $1,000 each were reported stolen from a building in the 3100 block of W. Industrial. The items belonged to Graham and Associates, 6201 Andrews Hwy., reports said.

Items valued at more than $1,000 were reported stolen from a building in the 700 block of N. Calhoun St., police said.

Manuel Holquin, told police a tool box valued at $300, tools valued at $250, cutting tools valued at $200, welding supplies valued at $150, taps and dies valued at $600, drill bits valued at $300 and an air compressor valued at $200 were taken sometime in the past two weeks.

Inmate: New evidence shows he didn't kill teen

Brandley

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Death row inmate Clarence Brandley says new evidence shows what he has always maintained — he did not rape and kill a 16-year-old girl at Conroe High School in 1980 although he was convicted of the crime.

A state district judge is considering the evidence, which involves a Conroe woman testifying in a special hearing that her former boyfriend told her he killed a girl at Conroe High.

The new evidence from attorneys for Brandley and the district attorney's office in Montgomery County will be submitted later this month to the state Court of Criminal Appeals.

The appeals court could order a retrial or could uphold the conviction against the former janitor at the high school. Brandley's attorney is expecting a decision within six months.

In an interview Wednesday, Brandley said he hopes the new testimony will lead to his freedom.

"I feel a whole lot better now," he said. "I don't know what my chances are. I want to see how the court will rule. I'm just going to sit and wait."

Brandley, 34, was sentenced to death after he was convicted of killing Cheryl Dee Fergeson on Aug. 23, 1980. The girl, manager of the Bellville High School volleyball team, died shortly after arriving with her school team for a scrimmage against Conroe.

However, Brenda Medina, of Conroe, said at a hearing last month that her former boyfriend, James Dexter Robinson, told her he had killed a girl at Conroe High School. Robinson acknowledged making the statement, but insisted he made up the story to frighten Ms. Medina.

"I knew him," Brandley said of Robinson, a former co-worker. "He was real quiet. He stayed to himself. I didn't even know he was at the school that Saturday."

Robinson also testified he had left Texas for South Carolina about three weeks before the slaying. Another janitor, however, testified he saw Robinson three days before the slaying.

Brandley said he was surprised by the Medina testimony.

"It was hard to believe," he said. "All of a sudden, just coming up."

Brandley said he believes the fact he is black had much to do with his arrest and conviction.

"I don't know who did it," he said of the slaying. "But it's kind of hard to believe that out of all the people out there that day — somebody didn't see anything. I was the only black there.

"In my conviction, it (race) played a big part. No doubt about that."

Brandley said "certain officials" knew he was innocent, but refused to identify them.

He also said because the 1980 school year was about to start at the time of the slaying, it was important for investigators to ease the fears of parents and arrest someone for the killing.

"I was at the wrong place at the wrong time," he said. "I was more convenient for them to convict."

Brandley said he did not think he would be retried, although his attorney, Mike DeGuerin, said another trial — which would be Brandley's third — was likely. The first trial ended with a hung jury as one juror held out for Brandley's innocence. The second trial ended with a conviction.

DeGuerin said Brandley was convicted on circumstantial evidence.

"They were convinced he was guilty and they tailored their case to that," DeGuerin said of prosecutors. "If any evidence was contrary, it was dismissed. The point is, there are serious doubts whether Brandley is guilty."

James Keeshan, who prosecuted Brandley, has said he was unaware of the Medina comments at the time of the investigation.

"Had I learned that anyone confessed or attempted to confess, I would certainly have followed it up," he said.

Brandley received a Jan. 15 execution date earlier this year, but later was granted a stay.

Customers eager to drive bargain

Incentives help dealers sell '86 models

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Special low-interest car loan offers are filling Texas auto showrooms with customers eager to drive a bargain, dealers say.

The special financing, ranging from 0 percent to 5.9 percent, souped up sales statewide, with record-breaking volumes.

Customers at Shamaley Ford in El Paso had to take a number because salesmen were swamped last weekend, said general manager Wayne Blunt.

In Irving, Labor Day weekend sales were 50 percent better than any one three-day period, said Robert Moore, general manager of Burton-Curry Buick.

In Houston, which has been plagued by the oil industry downturn, the interest rates brought back a glimpse of the good days, said Bill Joseph, sales manager for Charlie Thomas Chrysler-Plymouth Inc.

"You can't even tell there's a bad economy," Joseph said.

In San Antonio, Al Madera, general sales manager of Benson Ingram Park Chrysler Plymouth Mazda, said he sold about 60 cars in a two-day period.

And in the Rio Grande Valley, car dealers were dipping deep into their inventories because of the buying boom. Bill Mowbray, owner of Bill Mowbray Motors in Brownsville, said that many car dealers already were low on some models and are quickly selling out of others.

General Motors Corp. led off the low financing last week with the announcement of 2.9 annual-percentage-rate on 36-month loans for 1986 cars. Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. followed with similar plans. American Motors Corp. got in on the financing war Wednesday, offering interest-free financing on most of its 1986 cars and Jeeps.

Car shoppers Becky and Daryl Embry said they had not bought a new car for six years. Tuesday, as they waited in the showroom of Vandergriff Buick in Arlington, they were adding up the potential savings.

"We figured it up and we'd save $5,000," Mrs. Embry said. "That's one of the things that brought us out."

Simon and Concepcion Garcia of Brownsville said they were going to trade in their 1983 Lincoln Mark VI for a Cadillac Fleetwood from Mowbray's dealership.

"I wanted to trade it in for a smaller car," Mrs. Garcia said. "They gave me a special deal and the interest rate also is very good. We are getting older and the prices have gone up, but we believe this car will last us a long time."

Last week, GM and Ford began offering 2.9 percent financing on three-year loans, and Chrysler offered car buyers 2.4 percent financing on two-year notes. The GM, Ford and AMC plans run through Oct. 8. Chrysler will offer the low interest through Oct. 12.

AMC is offering 0 percent interest on 24-month loans, 2.9 percent financing on 36-month loans and 5.9 percent on 48-month loans.

Auto dealers across the state said the special buying incentives brought in droves of customers after the announcement.

"We did in three days one month's worth of business," said Blunt of El Paso. He said 155 cars were sold over the weekend, with the dealership staying open all night Sunday. "We had at one time 30 people waiting on a salesman," he said.

He said salesmen are not demanding the sticker price for vehicles because the low interest is being offered by Ford Motor Credit Company, not the dealership itself.

"We did in three days one month's worth of business. We had at one time 30 people waiting on a salesman. (Salesmen are not demanding the sticker price for vehicles because the low interest is being offered by Ford Motor Credit Company, not the dealership itself and) "with as many customers that we had the profit will take care of itself."

— Wayne Blunt, general manager El Paso dealership

"With as many customers that we had the profit will take care of itself," he said.

However, Mowbray of Brownsville warned that GM should be looking for other deals in 1987. "There's no doubt in my mind that we're stealing from 1987 sales," he said. "We need something (in 1987) or it's going to die right on the line."

At Jim Allee AMC Jeep Renault Inc. in Dallas, sales manager Gene Klinkerman said traffic increased Wednesday with news of the special interest deals.

Moore of Irving said the low interest rates are the biggest incentive program ever offered by GM. "As far as our sales over the weekend, there's only one word to describe it — it's awesome. We have the product, but we do not have the people to wait on them."

He said his dealership had sold about 75 cars in the three days that kicked off the new financing, the Thursday through Saturday before Labor Day.

At Bob Robertson Chevrolet in Houston, sales have jumped from an average of 10 a day to about 25 a day, said sales manager Jim Neff.

"If sales get any better, it would be just like the old days," he said.

The savings are causing sales to triple at Houston's Galleria Area Ford, said Charles Kitchen, sales manager. He predicts his 1986 fleet of 250 cars and trucks will be gone in less than a month.

Senate OKs paperwork reduction bill

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Responding to complaints of excessive paperwork, the Senate Wednesday followed the House's lead and approved a bill giving public school teachers more time to teach.

Gov. Mark White, who opened the special session to the paperwork-reduction bill, is expected to sign the measure, passed unanimously on a voice vote Wednesday in the Senate.

The bill eliminates paperwork that doesn't deal with reports on attendance, lesson plans, grades or textbooks, although it does not provide for sanctions against school districts that don't obey the bill.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and the Senate sponsor, said school districts should have taken it upon themselves to cut back on unnecessary paperwork. But he acknowledged that some districts continue to require useless reports that take up teachers' time.

"This will, once and for all, put into law what paperwork is necessary and what isn't," Parker said.

All the major education organizations in the state endorse the bill, which limits each discussion topic in district reports to one page.

The 1984 education reforms called for the State Board of Education to look at paperwork reduction efforts when awarding state accreditation, but teachers have complained that the mounds of paper have kept piling up.

When the House passed the bill last week, some members opposed it because the measure requires local district to file reports detailing their paperwork-reduction plans. Opponents said mandating more reports would defeat the intent of the bill.

But the Senate passed the bill Wednesday without debate.

Injured driver wearing only cowboy boots

COTULLA, Texas (AP) — Authorities in this South Texas city say a motorist injured in a one-car rollover was wearing only his cowboy boots.

The 62-year-old man suffered a broken leg on Wednesday after his late-model car overturned about two miles south of Cotulla on Interstate 35, state troopers said.

"His explanation was that he was on his way to take a shower. So, I asked him where he planned to find water, and he told me that he figured he would just come up on some," said Earl Heath, Texas Department of Public Safety trooper.

DPS officers and LaSalle County Sheriff's deputies, who arrived at the accident site found the man "in a good state of coherence" sitting in his car which had rolled onto the median.

The man was driving northbound on the interstate when he lost control of his car and it flipped completely over, landing upright in the median, officers said.

Heath said the motorist gave no permanent address, basing that claim on a statement that he was a "world traveler."

Processed cheese virtually indestructible, tasteless

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Would you explain the difference between processed cheese and natural cheese, and why processed cheese is not good in the diet? Emily Winnewisser, Stamford, Conn.

A. Basically, there's nothing wrong with eating processed cheese as part of one's diet. It's a dairy food and therefore nutritious. Many small children won't eat any other kind of cheese. It doesn't have much taste and is often pre-sliced or in a jar or even a tube.

Processed cheese is simply that — cheese which has been put through a process. Several natural cheeses are blended together with other ingredients including vegetable oils, butter, emulsifiers, artificial preservatives and flavorings, and then blended into a plastic mass.

On the other hand, natural, unprocessed cheeses are made directly from milk and treated by a variety of age-old methods, temperature and humidity controls. Nothing is added except perhaps some coloring.

Processed cheese is usually the first thing to go when one begins to develop a sense of taste. In an early edition of "Joy of Cooking" by Rombauer and Becker, the authors declare processed cheeses to be the triumph of technology over conscience.

"Processed cheeses," they state, "are a convenience to a desensitized housewife — to say nothing of a profit-minded manufacturer. If you are willing to condone the gummy texture and the insipid taste of processed cheeses, you are still advised to read the list of ingredients on the package."

In the "Pocket Guide to Cheese," author Sandy Carr states, "Processed cheese is virtually indestructible, a measure perhaps of its awfulness."

Q. I understand that beer contains tannic acid. Isn't this the stuff that you use to tan leather?

A. There is a protein material in beer which, if not removed during the brewing process, will result in a cloudy beer that has a tendency to gush or overfoam when the bottle or can is opened. Therefore a highly purified form of tannic acid, which is extracted from the leaves of the sumac plant, is added to beer. It reacts to the protein, causing it to settle out. Nearly all of the tannic acid is removed from the beer when it settles down.

If any remains, it is only a trace, about one part per million. Another way to comprehend one part per million would be to think of one minute to two years, or one cent in $10,000.

Occurring naturally in beer, without any help from man, are formaldehyde and nitrosamines, about 700 parts per billion in each beer. To visualize this, imagine 700 drops of vermouth in 500 barrels of gin.

Q. I have an in-ground swimming pool in which I use Olin HTH dry chlorinator granules. I would like to know if the chlorine, when it evaporates, could possibly be eating up the webbing on my lawn chairs. I find that I have to replace them every year, or two years at the most. Steve Froncek, Throop, Pa.

A. S.J. Furs, a technical representative from the Olin Research Center advises that the dry chlorinator does not evaporate. Under certain conditions, such as low pool pH, or when the water temperature is very warm, some chlorine can dissipate. This means that it's sort of scattered around. "We do not believe," writes Furs, "that this is the cause of lawn chair webbing degradation."

If the chairs are exposed to intense and long hours of daily sunlight, Olin thinks that ultraviolet radiation may be a key cause of the webbing deteroriation. It may be causing embrittlement and fading of the material. The company suggests that you provide some shade for the lawn chairs or store them when not in use.

Q. I puchased a can of refrigerated Pillsbury Crescent Rolls which has a date stamped on the bottom of the can that the rolls should be used by. It only had the month and day, but no year. What am I to assume here?

A. Pillsbury puts a date on their refrigerated unbaked products three months in advance of their manufacture. The store is then supposed to remove cans that are more than three months old, so you can assume the date you're looking at is within that range of time.

Readers Comment: Mrs. Kathryn Weidenbach, Liberty, Ind.: "I am 70 years old and raised chickens since I was 10. I thought I would tell you what I know about black bones in chicken and the blood seepage around them, which so many people find disagreeable. We didn't have this problem years ago when chickens ran free and it took them four to six months to grow. The problem is, now we can have a fryer in six weeks or less, so they aren't old enough to let the calcium set in their bones. So always buy the largest fryer, four pounds or over."

A. I believe you're right. Although I received a number of letters from readers who are convinced that this problem exists because chickens are not bled properly, this does not appear to be the cause.

Another reader, Roy Atherton of Gresham, Ore., theorized that because chickens are given sulfa drugs to control disease, and since sulfa is a detrimental to vitamin K, which is the blood-clotting vitamin, that this was perhaps the root of the problem.

Professor Robert Baker, chairman of the Department of Poultry and Avian Sciences at Cornell University, states, "Broilers are slaughtered today at 6 weeks of age. At that age the bones are not yet calcified and the heme pigment (red) inside the bone migrates to the surface and even into the meat. Once birds get older, about 10 weeks of age, the bones are calcified and thus, no dark bones. Turkeys, for example, do not show dark bones because they are usually at least 20 weeks old when slaughtered."

Professor Baker assures us that this situation is not caused by poor bleeding nor the health of the birds, nor is it harmful. All it means is that the birds were young when slaughtered and thus are more tender.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

'Homestyle' soups taste canned

By LINDA ANDERSON

Someone once told me that Midland is used by several manufacturers as a market-testing area for new products. I don't know how true that is, but it does seem the local supermarkets are nearly always displaying some "New! Improved! Better than ever!" product.

Take Campbell Soup Company, for instance. A couple of years ago they introduced their canned cooking sauces in Midland supermarkets. This product was supposed to make cooking easier because they eliminated the need to make homemade sauces. I don't know how they were received by consumers, but within a few months they disappeared.

Now Campbell's has introduced a new line of soup — which is, after all, what they do best — called Home Cookin' soup. Judging from the product's name, I suppose it is claimed to taste just like homemade.

Now, I like soup and I like Campbell's. They make a lot of soup in a lot of flavors, and I suppose we've tried nearly all the flavors at least once (with the possible exception of cream of celery — that sounds gross!), and we've always had good luck with the product. Campbell's soups have proven over the years to be good soups — not great, mind you, but good and certainly useful.

The usual taste testers sampled a couple of these new soups — country vegetable and split pea with ham — for taste, price and advertising accuracy. They made a quick and easy meal one lazy Saturday.

Because they are new products (well, sort of), their labels carry the usual outrageous advertising claims: "Abundant chunks of nourishing country vegetables are simmered in a rich, full-flavored stock to offer all the wholesome goodness of a homemade soup," for the country vegetable; and "Luscious chunks of ham with green peas complement the heartiness of this rich, savory stock to capture all the wholesome goodness of homemade soup," for the split pea.

Unlike Campbell's ordinary soups, the Home Cookin' variety is not prepared with added water, so what's in the can is what you get — basically, a single serving instead of two per can. Price for a can — or one serving — of Home Cookin' split pea is 64 cents, and a can of Home Cookin' country vegetable costs 52 cents. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Canned soups are notorious for their high sodium content, and this new variety is no exception — the label on country vegetable lists 1150 mg of sodium per serving; but split pea's label didn't have any nutrition listing at all.

In the taste-test, these new soups proved to be — like Campbell's standard red-and-white label soups — good, not great but certainly useful. They were slightly chunkier than ordinary soup, and less chunky than the "chunky" variety. The tasters agreed that in flavor, and for canned soups, the product was — again — good but not great. Nothing more, nothing less. However, they do look more homemade than ordinary canned soups.

Iron toxicity danger of vitamins

By MARIAN FARR

Children's chewable vitamins are designed with bright colors, animal and cartoon character shapes and a candy-like taste to appeal to youngsters. They're so appealing, in fact, that last year more than 8,500 children younger than 6 years old swallowed large numbers of the pills at one time.

The greatest danger of vitamin pill overdosing is iron toxicity. The symptoms include bloody diarrhea and vomiting, which can occur in a 30-pound child after eating 15 to 20 tablets of a children's multivitamin-plus iron.

Parents need to treat children's vitamins as though they are a prescription medicine. The child-proof cap should be tightly fastened and the vitamin bottle placed in a locked cabinet or out of reach shelf.

Since children may still get access to vitamin pills in spite of these precautions, parents should also teach their youngsters that vitamins may look like candy, but they are not. Parents may also want to consider if they even need to be giving children vitamins. After infancy, most children do not need routine vitamin supplementation.

Children who eat a balanced diet containing protein foods such as meat, poultry, fish and peanut butter; cereals and grains; dairy products; and fruits and vegetables should not need vitamins.

Preschoolers often do have spells of not eating well, or wanting to eat only certain things. But over the course of several days their nutrient needs are likely to be met. Parents who are particularly concerned about children getting enough iron should be sure to include red meats in meals. Iron-fortified breads and cereals are another good source of this mineral.

When a child has an extremely poor appetite or does not seem to be growing, parents should consult a physician who can then prescribe vitamins or other nutritional supplements if needed.

Consumers suggest ways to market diapers

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — It may be a product only a mother could love, but the Kimberly-Clark Co. has received a rash of suggestions for marketing discarded diapers.

Ideas began to pour in following publication of an article in the Wall Street Journal about how mounds of discarded Huggies diapers were left in ashes after fire broke out in the Weber County landfill in June.

Suggestions have ranged from recycling the pads to marketing them as a fuel, to be burned intentionally.

"There's some real entrepreneurs out there, and their ideas were all really creative," Kimberly-Clark spokesman Mark McKeon said Tuesday. "We're received a dozen or more phone calls today from all over the map."

One man said he wanted to buy the diapers to convert into "other products," but McKeon declined to disclose what he had in mind.

McKeon said he would forward the suggestions to Kimberly-Clark's corporate headquarters in Neenah, Wis., but added the company had no immediate plans to change its disposal method.

Kimberly-Clark sends 20 tons of industrial refuse to the landfill daily.

BETTER BUSINESS

Credit 'clinics' can be financial rip-off

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Beware of credit clinics, a new type of business that often charges a substantial fee for a service you can perform yourself without charge.

Such clinics distort the meaning and intent of the Federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, which gives you the right to dispute any information you feel is inaccurate in your report at a credit bureau. A free copy of your credit report may be requested from a credit bureau within 30 days of credit denial. Requests made after 30 days are usually charged a small fee — usually $8 to $12 — for the report.

If you wish to challenge the information in your report, the credit bureau must send a request for reverification to the credit grantor who supplied the report information. If the credit grantor does not respond within a reasonable amount of time, the information is automatically removed from your report. Accurate information will remain and information found to be inaccurate will be amended or removed.

Some credit clinics have tried to jam up the system with reverification requests so they cannot be answered in a reasonable amount of time and all challenged information will automatically be removed from a consumers' reports. Other clinics advertise that they guarantee to provide you with a "clean" report. Of course, there are no guarantees that negative information will be removed.

Some clinics charge for "advice" only. They tell consumers to get a copy of their credit report and challenge everything in it, in the hope that there will not be reasonable time to respond to the request and all challenged information will be removed.

Some provide you with the proper forms, while others file the forms on your behalf. The cost of these "services," which you can perform yourself for free, is anywhere between $25 to $200.

It is believed that such credit clinics are operating in our area. Until more is known about this new type of business, it's recommended that a great deal of caution be exercised when dealing with such a firm. Know your rights and be wary if a company guarantees a "clean" report.

Armchair quarterbacks call plays with board game

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — This fall, armchair quarterbacks can get in on the TV football action with a new board game.

The Big Payoff, the brainchild of a Portland, Ore., waiter and football fanatic, gives fans a chance to either flaunt their sports knowledge or learn more about gridiron strategy.

Preston Hiefield, the inventor of the board game (which looks like a cross between a football field and a crap table) says he and some friends got the idea while watching an exciting game between the Washington Redskins and the Oakland Raiders in 1983.

"We figured, 'People around the country are sitting here watching this game,'" he recalled. "'They should be able to predict the plays themselves.'"

Hiefield says the Big Payoff "is fantastic for women who have felt left out before. Now they can get involved and learn about the game of football."

Tips save dollars

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When the temperature goes up so do cooling bills, but there are ways to hold those bills down and save a few dollars, said to Suzanne Mahler of Honeywell:

- Turn down the hot water thermostat. A drop of 20 degrees in water temperature means hot water pipes won't contribute to heat in the house.
- Keep windows closed during the hottest part of the day.

DEAR ABBY

Bride-to-be faces dilemma

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I recently became engaged and am now in the process of planning my wedding. After my official engagement, I hinted very strongly to my best friend that she would be my maid of honor. My mother heard about it and said that my sister, who is close to me in age, would be very hurt if she were not asked to be my maid of honor. I am very close to both girls; however, I did not consider asking my sister because I thought it was customary for the bride's unrelated best friend to be the maid of honor. I think both of them are expecting to be asked.

I want to avoid hurting any feelings. What should I do? — UNDECIDED BRIDE

DEAR UNDECIDED: Choose your sister. Friends come and go, but sisters are forever.

DEAR ABBY: In reference to "Unexpressive Mother," who offered to pay you well to compose a beautiful two-page letter for her to send to her 17-year-old daughter, telling her how much she loved her and how proud she was of her:

You were correct when you told her, "A single sentence straight from the heart will be far more meaningful than two pages filled with fancy phrases from a stranger."

My father was never one to write letters. In fact, I had never seen a letter that he had written until I was in college and received an award for some special achievement. Much to my surprise, I received the following letter from my father:

Dear Son,

I am proud of you. Keep up the good work. — Dad

Abby, I still have that letter. It wasn't two pages long, and it wasn't written by Shakespeare, but it meant the world to me. I still keep it in my desk drawer, and if I ever become discouraged, I take it out and read it.

So, as the old saying goes, it's not the quantity but the quality that counts. — KEVIN M. PADILLA, ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to the letter from "Unexpressive Mother": One recent holiday season I was feeling very depressed and had that "nobody loves me" feeling. I live 2,800 miles from my family and was not looking forward to another Christmas alone. While opening Christmas greetings, I found a note from my mother. Simply written were these words:

I love you — Mom

I tell you, this brought tears to my eyes. You see, my mother never learned to read or write English, except to sign her name. So, "Unexpressive Mother," write your own letter. It will be something your daughter will always treasure. — REBECCA IN LAS VEGAS

DEAR ABBY: I don't know the title of the booklet my son sent away for when he was 19, but he is 27 now, and I remember that he and his friends wore it out passing it around. It had some very good tips for people of all ages on how to make interesting conversation and be popular. My teen-age daughter wants one as she has heard how useful it was. Please list the titles of your booklets and how to get them. The one I saw was not only great, but it was priced so that almost anyone could afford it. Thank you. — PAT MILLER, FORT WORTH

DEAR PAT: I have four: "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," "What Every Teen-ager Ought to Know," "How to Have a Lovely Wedding" and "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Each one is $2.50 (check or money order) and can be obtained by sending a long, self-addressed, stamped (39 cents) envelope with your check to: Dear Abby (Booklet Title), P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

What you see isn't always what you get

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
Associated Press

NEW YORK — If the can of soup is red and white, it must be Campbell's. If the box of aspirin is yellow and brown, in must be Bayer.

But shoppers who automatically reach for a familiar package might be surprised when they get home. They may have picked up another brand in a package that looks like the established brand.

Companies that mimic the well-known brands hope the familiar packages will convince consumers their products are the same as the famous ones. In some cases, the quality is indeed equal to that of the national brands. But the major brands, who spend major money on package design and advertising, object to other companies riding on their coattails.

"It's a widespread bad habit of private brands," said Richard Gerstman, a partner in the design consulting firm Gerstman + Meyers Inc. "We were approached a couple of weeks ago in the food business about developing some packages, and they said, 'Here's a list of competing products and we want to look as much alike as possible. We turned the job down."

The packages of leading brands have been copied for years. But today, hundreds of new products are released each month, and the keen competition on the shelves makes packaging even more important. Major companies spend thousands on package designs, and many smaller companies mimic those designs in the hope of being noticed.

"Major brands like Tide and tooth pastes like Colgate are constantly on the search for brands that look like them," said Michael F. Purvis, president of Sidjakov, Berman & Gomez, a San Francisco design consulting firm. "There has been a number of major suits by the leading consumer products companies."

Few shoppers may consciously consider packaging, but a recent study indicated more than 80 percent of all buying decisions are made after the consumer is in the store, where packaging provides the final visual come-on.

"Packaging is one last opportunity right at the point of purchase to communicate a message," said William D. Haueisen, president of Nova Research, which specializes in research on package design.

While national brands strive to stand out from the crowd, lookalikes hope to blend in.

"You want to tell the consumer that it's close to the national brand," said Eli Cohen, president of Duane Reade Drugs, a 26-store New York City chain where the house brands sometimes resemble national brands. "How do you tell the consumer? ... You've got to make it look like, within the law, as close to the national brand. They're at least attracted to the package."

The products in lookalike packages are generally less expensive than national brands, and they're often just as good, said Gerstman.

"But there is no way to know that," he said. "The national brands have their labels and reputations behind them. It's a risk the consumer takes. Very often the products are just as good, but most consumers are not willing to take that risk on every product."

The differences between national and house brands of bread or shampoo or cereal may not be a great concern for the consumer. But with over-the-counter drugs, it can be very important. Bayer aspirin, for example, claims it has a longer shelf life and dissolves faster than other aspirins. And lookalike antihistamines might have different compositions than the leading brands.

Consumers can protect themselves somewhat by carefully reading ingredients and other label information.

Consumers can also check whether the manufacturer offers a satisfaction guarantee.

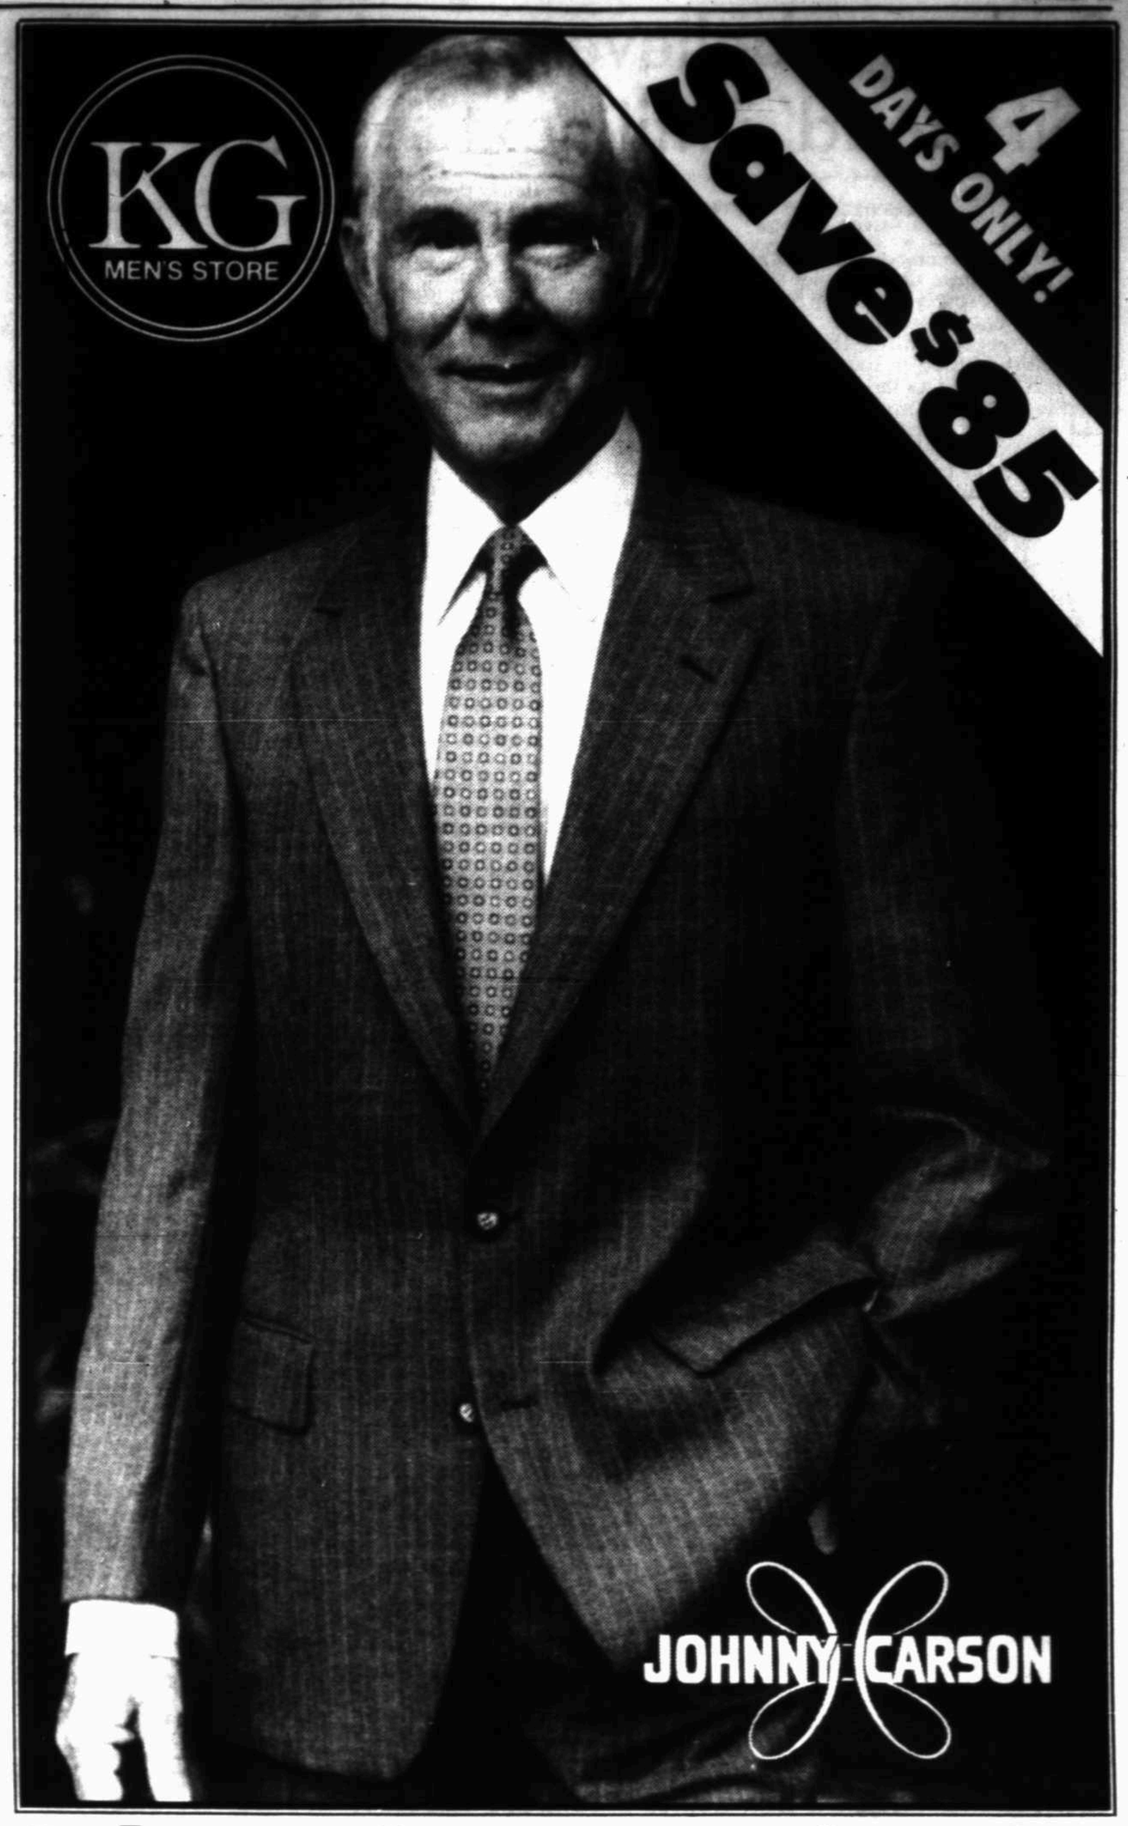

If consumers are unhappy with a lookalike product, they can also complain to the national brand they believe is being mimicked. National brands often challenge lookalikes in court.

The overall package design is called "trade dress," and many companies guard it religiously.

"We cannot allow any outside company to infringe our trademarks," said Charles Ullman, a lawyer for Campbell Soup Co. "If we allow one company to, other companies will follow and our trademarks will eventually pass into the public domain."

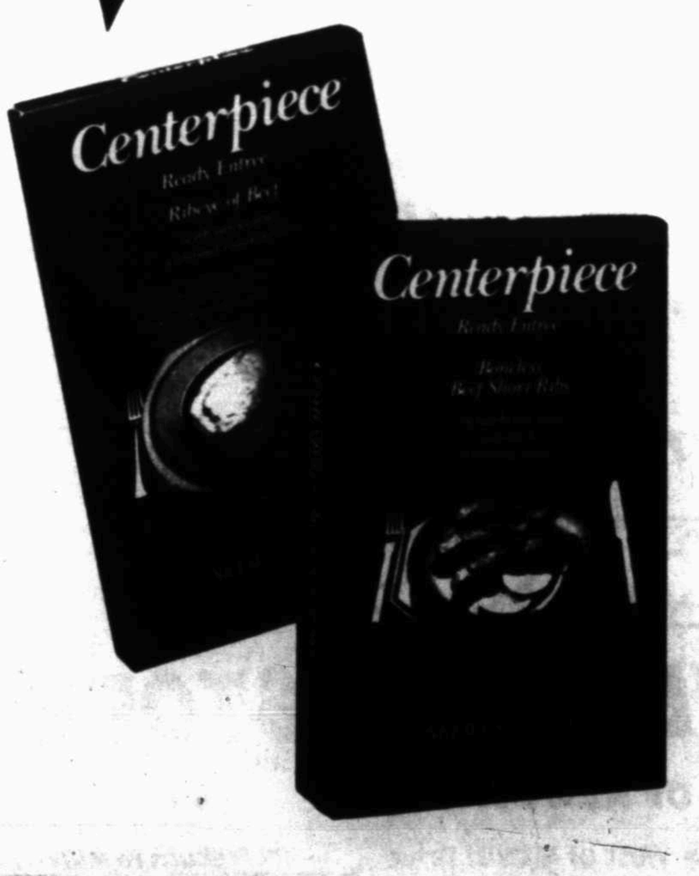

At Sterling Drug, the parent company of Bayer, about a dozen cases of lookalike packaging are being challenged at any time, said John McDonald, chief trademark counsel of the company.

Few cases go to court. "We don't want to sue them, but we want to protect our package," said McDonald.

Berlanga believes gambling bill 'dead' until next session

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gambling supporters held out hope for a photo finish despite news that Gov. Mark White will probably veto a bill legalizing betting on horse and dog racing.

House Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi and chief sponsor of the wagering bill, met with White for about an hour Tuesday morning before he broke the news to reporters and his House colleagues.

"He just said that he was not pleased with the posture that he found himself in, and there was a very good possibility he would veto it based on the fact that the Legislature had not done its work," Berlanga said. "Right now it's a good possibility, I think, it's dead, and we're just going to have to come back in January."

Senate sponsor O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, did not join Berlanga's trip to the Governor's Mansion and held out hope that White's decision is not final.

"I'm just going to wait until I hear a veto message," Harris said. "I'm not going to get involved in a speculation session."

Former Galveston Sen. A.R. "Babe" Schwartz, now a dog-racing lobbyist, spent the morning "pleading his case" with the governor's top advisors.

"I'm a perennial optimist," Schwartz said. "All the weight is on the side of right in this case. The Legislature passed a bill, and it will provide employment and it will provide revenue (to the state.)"

Others speculated that the governor would hold the gambling bill hostage, trying to force lawmakers to move on the state's budget problems. House Speaker Gib Lewis disagreed.

"I don't see all the hidden agendas that a lot of people like to," Lewis said.

White called the session to deal with the state's $3.5 billion deficit. The Senate passed the racing bill Aug. 26, and the House approved it with some minor amendments three days later.

The Senate accepted the House changes on Monday, sending the bill to White's desk.

"He wants us to deal with the issues at hand, and that is the budget cuts and some additional cash flow and revenues for the state to get us out of the depressing bind we find ourselves in," Berlanga said.

If White calls another session, as expected, to address the deficit, Berlanga and Harris said they will not re-introduce the racing bill.

"If he came to me and said, 'Run with it again and I'll sign it,' that's another story," Harris said.

If racing supporters can move the bill through the Legislature during next year's regular session, the veto will not slow the pace for racing in Texas. The bill could not become law without voters' approval at a referendum, and the bill the governor will probably veto sets that referendum on the November 1987 ballot.

But Schwartz said he sees no certainty that bill will fly through next year.

"You wind up imposing on the Legislative process again a very laborious and difficult process," he said. "Everytime you run with this kind of thing, the special interest groups within the special interest groups spring up and you have to deal with it all over again."

Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, dismissed speculation that a veto would hurt White's re-election chances in South Texas, a stronghold of racing enthusiasts and a key base of support for White against former Gov. Bill Clements.

Mattox says agency could pay its own way

Mattox

AUSTIN (AP) — The attorney general's department is a money-making agency and could pay its own way if the Legislature would let it operate like a private law firm, says Attorney General Jim Mattox.

"If the Legislature would let me work on a straight contingency fee as I did when I was in private practice, I'd be glad to do that and make a lot of money for the state," Mattox told a news conference Wednesday.

"But I don't much think they will do that," he added.

Mattox said he called the news conference to announce that his office won and saved $1.7 billion for Texas taxpayers and the state treasury during the 1986 fiscal year.

"Despite our state's current economic difficulties in both the private and public sectors, the attorney general's office had a record year of success," he said.

Mattox said that when he took office four years ago, succeeding now Gov. Mark White, "it was an office that had seen crisis after crisis after crisis.

"That is not the case now in this office," Mattox said . "It is running smoothly, doing a good job for the state of Texas."

If the Legislature would approve the necessary measure, he said, "Next year I would anticipate paying for the entire attorney general's office totally and completely through the collections division without costing the state of Texas any money at all."

He estimated the collections division would bring in about $20 million next year.

Mattox said $59.9 million had gone straight to citizens through successful prosecution of antitrust, consumer protection, housing, crime victims compensation and child support cases.

He said the department had saved $866 million through prosecution of insurance, banking and securities cases and by fighting for lower utility rates.

Mattox said $722.7 million had been paid to the state treasury through cases involving antitrust, bond examination fees, taxation, consumer protection, housing, Medicaid fraud, environmental protection, energy, state and county, highway, workers' compensation and collections.

STATE IN BRIEF

Banking amendment to be last proposition on ballot

AUSTIN (AP) — The proposed constitutional amendment that would legalize branch banking will be the final proposition listed on the Nov. 4 general election ballot, Secretary of State Myra McDaniel announced Wednesday.

The branch banking proposal was approved by lawmakers during the current special session. Three other proposed changes in the Texas Constitution were approved during the regular 1985 session.

Here are the four proposed amendments, in the order they will appear on the ballot:

— Allowing lawmakers to provide for the apportionment of the value of railroad rolling stock among counties for property tax purposes.

— Requiring the House and Senate to pass a rule mandating that each bill carry a title expressing the legislation's subject.

— Allowing political subdivisions to transact business with authorized mutual insurance companies.

Second debate scheduled

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White said Wednesday he has accepted an invitation to debate former Gov. Bill Clements, his Republican opponent, in Amarillo on Sept. 23.

A debate between the two is already scheduled for Oct. 6 in Houston, sponsored by the Texas League of Women Voters.

Clements' headquarters in Austin said the candidate was campaigning and not immediately available for comment about the second debate.

White's office said the Sept. 23 debate would be sponsored by the Amarillo chapter of the Texas Association of Business and conducted by the League of Women Voters.

White also is scheduled to appear on public television Oct. 23 in Dallas. Clements has said he was unable to debate at that time because of schedule conflicts.

"For months now, I have been trying to smoke my opponent out into a public discussion of the issues facing Texas," White said Wednesday in a statement from his campaign office. "And for months now, Bill Clements has been dodging any public confrontations. He had declined to debate on public television, so we are going to discuss the issues with an empty chair."

Prison guards suspended

MIDWAY (AP) — Two guards who allegedly failed to shoot at two escaping inmates were suspended pending an investigation, a prison spokesman said.

Annie Willis, 26, and Denisa Martin, 21, were suspended Tuesday with pay from their work at the Ferguson Unit while authorities investigate, Texas Department of Corrections spokesman David Nunnelee said.

The two guards allegedly saw inmates Craig Steven Douglass, 20, and Walter Veltz Jr., 21, climb over a fence last week, but the women did not fire their guns, the spokesman said.

The inmates were recaptured the next day in Louisiana after authorities spotted them in a car reported stolen, the spokesman said.

Douglass was serving 40 years for robbery and aggravated robbery in Jefferson County. Veltz was sentenced to 35 years for two counts of aggravated robbery and attempted capital murder with a deadly weapon out of Harris County.

School to buy prison land

AUSTIN (AP) — The Fort Bend Independent School District will buy 56 acres of state prison land for a new high school, the General Land Office announced Wednesday.

The school district submitted the high bid of $2.1 million for the land in Fort Bend County.

The tract is part of 5,500 acres of prison land for sale in Harris and Fort Bend counties.

Gold retreats

LONDON (AP) — Precious metals fell back in European trading today but held most of the ground they gained in a hectic surge the day before, with gold staying well above $400 an ounce. The dollar was slightly down.

"Gold went a bit too far too fast," said Alan Baker, dealings director at bullion trader Sharps Pixley. "It looks as though it bumped its head. There's no follow through."

It opened $1.25 to $2 lower in Europe after gaining more than $14 the previous day, following a lead set by rocketing platinum prices. Platinum was selling at $643 an ounce today, down $26 from late Wednesday's peak.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $405.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Wednesday's $407.50. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $404.00.

In Zurich, the noon bid price was $404.00, down from $406.50 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.61 to close at a bid $404.51.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.340 a troy ounce, down from Wednesday's $5.395.

The U.S. dollar firmed slightly against the Japanese yen and West German mark, but was lower against other currencies in quiet trading.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar gained for the third consecutive day, closing up 0.50 yen at 155.05 Thursday. Later, in London, it was quoted lower at 154.80 yen.

The British pound was stronger, boosted by a British government issue of a 10-year floating rate note on international capital markets Wednesday that raised $4 billion.

The issue was designed to boost the pound and Britain's foreign exchange reserves, which will rise from $18.9 billion to almost $23 billion as a result, according to Treasury officials.

Dow average rallies

NEW YORK — A spurt of buying in the last hour Wednesday helped Wall Street rebound somewhat from Tuesday's big loss. But the recovery was confined to blue-chip and transportation issues, and gainers and losers in the broader market were at a virtual standoff.

Buying programs by big institutions were said to be responsible for pushing trading volume on the New York Stock Exchange up Wednesday to a brisk 154.3 million shares, 30 million of which came in the final hour. Tuesday's volume was 135.5 million shares.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which finished the day with a gain of 10.97 points at 1,881.33, also had most of its improvement late in the day.

Venezuelan expert sees stability on oil horizon

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

DALLAS — Venezuela's representative to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) today called the oil industry downturn a situation of instability and turmoil that is in nobody's best interest.

In light of the no-win condition resulting from the downturn, Alirio A. Parra reassured participants of a seminar sponsored by Southern Methodist University, that the strategies necessary for a more stable oil industry environment appear to be falling into place among key OPEC members.

Among the keys to regained stability Parra sees emerging from OPEC's current turmoil are movements toward agreed market share levels, voluntary production concessions from non-OPEC members and encouraging early response to the August accord.

The Venezuelan oil representative said that while OPEC was born in Baghdad, it was conceived in Texas. He compared OPEC to the Texas Railroad Commission which had the power to regulate both oil production and prices in the 1950s and '60s.

Parra said the industry must think seriously about the consequences of the present situation and must consider some options in order to reduce price tensions.

He said the international oil industry has entered a period of massive imbalances between potential supplies and real consumption requirements.

"The recent collapse of oil prices simply demonstrates the extent to which surplus supplies have come into the market ahead of any substantial upturn in demand," said Parra.

He added that opinions vary widely as to the floor that prices could reach, the timing of such price movements, and even the possibility of recovery.

Parra said high cost and low marginal producing costs are the keys to the behavior in the market of many producers because incremental production is usually cheap, he said.

"That dictates a structural bias to overproduce," said Parra. "Because producers are simply not responsive to price changes in the short run, and the industry does not have an incentive to stabilize market conditions by varying output."

Parra warned that, left on its own, the oil market is inherently unstable. He also warned that an overhang of shut-in potential adds a longer term dimension to oversupply.

He said shut-in potential in the international oil industry, almost all within OPEC, has increased over the past eight years from 3 to 10 million barrels per day, adding that approximately 40 percent of potential OPEC production is not being utilized.

"I believe that this unused capacity could continue to exert downward pressure on prices for at least five years, unless some form of workable supply management is implemented," he said.

He charged that the overhang of supplies had changed the profile of the oil market in the past year, bringing about chaos and causing the long-term contract to vanish almost completely.

"Risk is now entirely in the hands of the upstream sector," said Parra. "Uniformity has disappeared to be replaced by a price for every occasion."

Parra described netback pricing — oil sold unpriced — as the ultimate expression of loss of control over pricing.

Said Parra: "To a large extent, the erosion of OPEC's market share was a result of its own policies, because its defense of a rigid price structure ensured oil would continue to become less important and also led to OPEC being progressively edged out of the market by other producers."

This was characterized by the progressively deeper cuts that were required from the swing producer (Saudi Arabia) to maintain a semblance of order in the market, he said.

Parra noted that while OPEC intends to continue to capture a fair share of the market, the organization also aims to establish a more durable and lasting equilibrium between potential supplies and growing demand at a desired price level with non-OPEC producers.

The Venezuelan representative, who played a significant role in the August 5 accord to stabilize OPEC production, said that the international oil market is turning around and entering a period of higher growth. He said that a stable price of $17 to $19 per barrel would cause energy demand to rise and help oil to retain its position in the total energy picture. But he noted that in the absence of some type of restraint on supply, oil prices stand no chance of stabilizing, and predicted they would drop to a level just above the marginal producing cost, in a range of $6 to $10 per barrel.

He termed the recent collapse in oil prices not a situation of design, but one of OPEC's having overplayed its hand. And added that none of the OPEC producers were pleased with the situation and it should not bring any consolation to the consumer.

Parra said he hoped the temporary accord reached in Geneva would bring down output from an oversupplied market. He added that for a short period OPEC would again play the role of swing producer, but

Enron transfers 10 to Midland

From Staff and Wire Reports

Enron Oil & Gas Co., the exploration and production subsidiary of Enron Corp., announced Wednesday it will close its Tulsa office and move operations to Midland.

According to Bill Morrison, division general manager, the move will bring 10 employees to Midland. "The employees include geologists, engineers, landmen, some production clerks. All exploration-oriented people."

The exploration and production division had 34 workers in Tulsa. Seventeen employees were terminated, two were moved to other cities, and the 10 moved to Midland, Morrison said. Five people who previously reported to the Tulsa office now will report to Midland.

"The move of our Anadarko Basin operations to Midland is part of our ongoing effort to improve long-term cost effectiveness," said Enron Oil President Ted Collins. "Midland continues to figure prominently in our exploration and production operations."

The consolidation is effective immediately, Enron spokesman Randal Blauvelt said.

There are presently 78 workers in Enron's Midland office located in the Empire Plaza Building, and the transfer should increase the staff to 88, Collins noted that the company has expanded its lease in Empire Plaza by 6,000 square feet to accomodate the transferred employees. The company recently completed the relocation of its exploration and production headquarters from Midland to Houston.

Enron's Northern Natural Gas Co. and UPG, Falco operations will remain in Tulsa, Blauvelt said.

Conference will discuss work force

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA - A "superconference" sponsored by the Permian Basin Private Industry Council at U.T. Permian Basin Sept. 17 will bring together business, education and public sector representatives from a 17-county area to to study issues, alternatives and perspectives in training/educating the Permian Basin work force.

According to Mrs. Johnnie Lou Avery, project director from Big Spring, goals of the superconference will be to: study the most critical issues facing employers, employees, educators and job trainers; to begin to develop an on-going plan of action; to create lines of communication and a stronger working relationship between business, education, public agencies and government officials and, finally, to create a network of information and local communities' committees to implement the plan of action.

Area purchasing managers elect new officers

The Permian Basin Purchasing Management Association, a non-profit association, has elected officers and a board of directors for 1986-1987. George Elliott, C.P.M., has been elected director of national affairs, and Marty Lucas was voted alternate.

Officers elected include Randy Johnson, C.P.M., president; Darrel Betts, first vice president; Perry Payne, C.P.M., second vice president; Mike Hubley, secretary; and Bob Rymal, treasurer.

Rymal was also elected to a one year term to the association's board of directors. Elected to two year terms were Gene Albery, C.P.M., and Terry Hill. Ed Tucker and Mark Phillips, C.P.M., were elected to three year terms.

Merger could create world's largest accounting firm

NEW YORK (AP) — As one of the "Big Eight" U.S. accounting firms, Peat Marwick audits and advises some of the world's biggest corporations.

The firm now is poised to become the industry leader with its agreement to merge with Klynveld Main Goerdeler of the Netherlands. The deal announced Wednesday would create the world's largest accounting firm.

Yet because KMG also specializes in advising small- and medium-size companies, the merger could give Peat Marwick a jump on its Big Eight rivals in serving smaller clients to fuel its growth, accounting specialists said.

With KMG, "Peat Marwick will have received in essence a small-business practice and, if handled correctly, they could be at the forefront of a real growth area" for the major accounting firms, said James C. Emerson, publisher of the Big Eight Review, an industry newsletter in Bellevue, Wash.

The merged firm would have 58,000 employees and annual revenue of about $2.7 billion.

New York-based Peat Marwick, whose principal affiliate is Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., is No. 2 among the world's biggest accounting firms behind Chicago-based Arthur Andersen & Co., with $1.6 billion in annual revenue.

KMG, whose American affiliate is KMG Main Hurdman, ranks sixth among the world's accounting firms based on fiscal 1985 revenue, according to the Public Accounting Report, an Atlanta-based trade publication.

The proposed merger, besides increasing Peat Marwick's exposure to smaller companies, would significantly raise its international presence, particularly in continental Europe where KMG has 196 offices and Peat Marwick has 34.

Big buck asthma business nothing to sneeze at

Listening to people compare their allergic reactions, the substances that trigger their allergies and their experiences with 'scratch testing' — as I have been lucky enough to do on several recent occasions — ranks up there with watching paint peel in terms of pure entertainment value.

Nevertheless, there are huge numbers of folks, particularly in West Texas, who are afflicted with allergies or asthma. Opinion Research Corp., Princeton, N.J., estimates that more than 58 million Americans suffer from allergies and asthma.

The business implications of such ailments are considerable. Other research groups have published equally dramatic numbers. The Asthma & Allergy Foundation of America says that asthma and allergies alone cause 8 million lost work days and another 8 million lost school days each year. The American Academy of Allergy and Immunology (AAI) says that more than $800 million in wages are lost each year because of asthma and hay fever.

Allergic reactions are a breakdown in the body's immune system that causes it to attack harmless substances like pollen and food. Most reactions are just annoying, but each year several dozen people die from allergic reactions to insect stings and nearly 200,000 hospitalized patients suffer from allergic drug reactions. Asthma kills an estimated 3,500 Americans a year.

Current data is hard to come by, but 10 years ago the National Institutes of Health estimated that more than $500 million a year was spent on treatments for allergic rhinitis — short-term allergies such as hay fever triggered by pollen, dust and mold spores. Most experts agree that spending has risen dramatically in the last decade.

Spending, too, is high for asthma control drugs. Between 1977 and 1984, while the number of asthma cases increased only slightly, asthma drug prescriptions doubled to 48 million. Those prescriptions jumped from 1.7 percent of the total number of prescriptions written in the U.S. to 3.1 percent.

Last year Americans spent more than $380 million on drugs to ease the air flow through the lungs, according to IMS International.

The drugs clearly work to reduce the number of life-threatening cases. According to the AAI, the asthma death rate is only one-third of what it was in 1960. Still, drug companies are seeking a better way to control asthma. The first company to find it will be in the enviable position of boosting its bottom line while reducing human suffering.

At the same time, such a breakthrough will put considerable new business pressures on the company making the discovery.

In 1984, the last full year in which Benadryl was sold by prescription, the antihistamine brought the Warner-Lambert Co. $20 million in revenues. Then, in mid-1985, the company got permission from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to sell Benadryl over the counter. The result: Sales jumped to $32 million in the last six months of 1985 alone. "The aura of a high-tech prescription drug being opened up to the public is a strong selling point," said David Crossen, a drug analyst for Sanford C. Bernstein & Co.

It is also an opportunity for huge profits. Marketing costs may mushroom, but basic research, a primary cost constituent for most pharmaceuticals, has been eliminated. Moreover, while prescription drugs generally have higher profit margins, over-the-counter drugs have the sales volume needed to generate improved cash flow.

Thus, drug companies are increasingly asking the FDA for permission to sell their prescription allergy products over the counter.

Once they are in the open market, drug companies tend to market over-the-counter products more aggressively. For example, Warner Lambert is advertising Benadryl on television, which it could not do when it was a prescription drug. The company now is giving long-time market leader Chlor-Trimeton — an antihistamine converted for over-the-counter sales more than 10 years ago by Schering-Plough — a run for the top spot in the $125 million U.S. antihistamine market.

"Any time you have to reach a potential audience of 200 million-plus people instead of a few hundred thousand doctors, there are differences in advertising expenditures and strategy," said Michael Valentino, product manager for Benadryl.

The conversion process is much tougher for makers of anti-asthma drugs. Although $72 million worth of over-the-counter asthma remedies were sold in the U.S. last year, the FDA frowns on the concept of self-treatment of asthma and rarely allows conversion.

"There's a general feeling in the medical community that over-the-counter asthma medications are too short-acting and potentially dangerous when used heavily and without physician supervision," said Dr. Stanley J. Szefler, director of Pediatric Clinical Pharmacology at the National Jewish Center for Immunology & Respiratory Medicine in Denver.

Indeed, one FDA official says that the only asthma drug converted to non-prescription sales in the 15 years since the FDA has considered such conversions was soon switched back.

That drug, metaproterenol, increases the diameter of air passages in the lungs; but can cause rapid heartbeat and even cardiac arrest. Thus, many physicians protested when, in October 1982, the FDA said aerosol metaproterenol dispensers could be sold without a prescription. Seven months later, the FDA rescinded its decision.

Late last year, Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals Inc. which markets the drug under the name Alupent, petitioned the FDA to again give the drug over-the-counter status. Again doctors protested. And in May an FDA advisory panel said it had "a clear consensus" against switching this group of drugs. "The committee doesn't think over-the-counter is the way to treat a potentially fatal disease," said Thomas E. Nightingale, the panel's executive secretary.

Flag-Redfern reports earnings

During the first half of 1986, Flag-Redfern Oil Co. earnings were $2,185,000, or $109 per share, from oil and gas revenues of $14,274,000. Comparative figures for the same period in 1985 were $4,828,000 of earnings, or $242 per share, and $19,013,000 in revenues.

Oil and gas sales were approximately 2,835 barrels of oil per day and 16,373 thousand cubic feet per day, comparable to that of the previous year. The reduction in sales revenues was due primarily to the 30 percent drop in average wellhead prices from that of a year ago, according to Glenn Brant, president.

He said increased emphasis is being placed on the company's producing property acquisitions program during the industry downturn in drilling activity.

"With an excellent working capital of $8,586,000, virtually no long-term debt and access to adequate additional funding, Flag-Redfern is able to bid competitively for available properties," said Brant.

Panhandle Eastern pipeline cuts gas rate to five-year low

HOUSTON (UPI) — Trunkline Gas Co., one of two interstate pipeline units of Panhandle Eastern Corp., announced a 17 percent reduction in its wholesale natural gas rates Tuesday, making them the lowest in five years.

The reduction, effective Sept. 1, reflects lower gas purchase costs negotiated with producers in the last 30 days, the company said.

The lower rates are "the first fruits" of a new cooperative relationship between Trunkline and its producers, said K.E. Kalen, president and chief operating officer of Trunkline and its affiliate, Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co.

"The pricing arrangements that Trunkline has just negotiated are based upon our firm expectation of a substantial increase in sales volume over the next 12 months that could not otherwise have been achieved at the former higher contract prices," Kalen said.

"These new agreements have created a win, win situation for all of the parties. Trunkline's utility customers will have lower rates for their consumers this fall and winter, our pipeline operations are improved at higher throughput levels and our producers will receive revenues that otherwise would not have been available to them."

Trunkline now can reduce its commodity rate from $3.26 per million Btu, which was filed Aug. 1 to be effective Sept. 1, to $2.69, also effective Sept. 1.

The lower Trunkline rate will enable Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line, which obtains a portion of its supply from Trunkline, to reduce its commodity rate by an additional 4 cents per million British thermal units.

Panhandle previously filed for a 15 percent reduction, which took effect Sept. 1. As a result, Panhandle now will have a commodity rate of $2.86 per MMBtu, its lowest rate in four years.

The Panhandle-Trunkline system supplies 108 utility companies in 12 states with the primary market area in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri.

Refining regains profitability

LONDON (UPI) — For the first time in more than a decade, oil companies are achieving worthwhile returns on their refining and marketing operations due to this year's fall in crude oil prices, the Petroleum Economist says in its current issue.

But in its world refineries survey, thet magazine went on to warn that with the prospect of firmer crude prices the profit boom is likely to be short-lived.

Refiners have taken full advantage of the new "netback" contracts offered by Saudi Arabia toward the end of last year and subsequently by most other OPEC producers, the survey said. Under netback arrangements the price of crude oil is linked to the value of petroleum products refined from each barrel.

These contracts offer refiners virtually risk-free processing and have resulted in profit margins of between $1.50 and $3 a barrel, reflected in oil company earnings for the first half of 1986, the survey said.

A surprising conclusion of the survey was that, in spite of the continuing surplus of refinery capacity, utilization rates have risen to much higher levels this year. The increased refinery runs stem not so much from increased consumption of petroleum products as from a much larger than usual buying of stocks by consumers.

Petroleum Economist's construction survey showed that there is still is additional capacity under construction or firmly planned. The Middle East and Africa account for half of these projects, but OPEC's revenue problems have curbed the ambitions of many countries to develop refining for export purposes.

The magazine also said world oil production in the first half of this year rose 5 percent above year-earlier levels due solely to OPEC's agressive push for a higher market share.

Within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, however, only five of its 13 members gained much from higher production, which resulted from abandoning controls at Saudi Arabia's instigation last December.

In the first half of 1986 OPEC's production increased 16 percent to 9.35 million barrels a day from 8.09 million barrels a day in the same span last year. But five countries alone accounted for almost all of this increase.

Those five OPEC members and their percentage increase in output during the period were: Saudi Arabia, 39 percent; Kuwait, 43 percent; Iraq, 30 percent; Abu Dhabi, 27 percent; and Indonesia, 10 percent.

Coastal plans drilling program offering

HOUSTON (SWN) — The Coastal Corp. said it plans a September offering of $12 million of limited partnership units in its Coastal 1986 Drilling Program, Ltd. The offering is expected to begin following clearance by regulatory agencies.

The company cited recent improvement in oil prices and pending tax reform legislation as factors prompting its decision to offer the program. The drilling program expects to drill approximately 42 wells on company-owned leases by the end of 1986 using the $12 million proceeds of the offer plus $3 million in borrowings.

The offering, consisting of 12,000 limited partnership units priced at $1,000 each, will be made by a prospectus which will be mailed to holders of 100 or more shares of Coastal common and convertible preferred stock and employee stockholders.

OPEC

for the first time there would be limited voluntary contributions from non-OPEC sympathizers who understand that excess oil in the market is a cost to all producers in that market.

The Cambridge graduate who has been involved in the energy field for 26 years said that a controlled market share strategy now appears to be falling into place and could provide a better environment for the oil industry. He said the elements of such a strategy must comprise a proper OPEC market share, an agreed level of voluntary contributions by exporters outside of OPEC, an initial range of prices for crude oil and a uniform and flexible pricing system.

He also said response to the accord has been encouraging.

While noting that an acceptable price level has not yet been defined — although a price range of $17 to $19 has been suggested — Parra said that such a price should be one that promotes a moderate expansion of the oil market, sustains a moderate level of exploration, yet is low enough to discourage further substitution of other energy sources.

"The key to the successful implementation of any pricing system, whether based on a single price or a range of prices; will depend heavily on effective supply management, on the elimination of unpriced, netback arrangements, and on a realistic and longer term view of the market." He also said that any future system of prices should be flexible, not rigid.

Parra gave the oil industry only two options: It can move to a more stable environment, or it can continue along the path of uncertainty and turmoil. He added, however, that if it chooses the latter, a cycle of oversupply would last for some years and would inevitably be succeeded by one of scarcity.

He said a scenario based on prices in the $20 range — perhaps moving gradually along a curve from $16 to $22 per barrel — is not incompatible with the objectives that appear to be evolving among the major OPEC producers. He added that much depends on the degree to which OPEC members can achieve a identity of views, a clear definition of objectives and acceptance of those views outside the organization .

He said that he expects cooperation for a stable long-term, reasonably priced energy program from other producers.

"The industry has only operated in a totally free market for six months out of the past 40 years, and the consequences have been disastrous," said Parra.

Judge denies plan to liquidate Sakowitz, Inc.

HOUSTON (AP) — Sakowitz Inc. got a big boost in its attempt to reorganize under bankruptcy protection when a judge denied a bank's effort to file a liquidation petition and extended unitl Feb. 28, 1987 Sakowitz's exclusive right to file a reorganization plan.

Bankruptcy Judge R.F. Wheless ruled Wednesday that Sakowitz should receive the extension because "it's clear to me that the posture of the business is much improved from a year ago."

Sakowitz filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code in August 1985. At that time, the 83-year-old company had more than 1,500 creditors and $50 million in debt, including a $27 million bank debt.

Company Chairman Robert Sakowitz was pleased with Wednesday's decision that allows the high-fashion clothing company to file its own reorganization plan and avoid the possibility of several competing reorganization plans being filed

Since filing for protection, the company has paid off about $18 million of its $28 million in secured debt, while up to $25 million remains in unsecured debt, company officials officials

The ruling followed last week's announcement of an agreement between Sakowitz and its creditors under which Sakowitz retains its exclusivity rights in exchange for agreeing to submit an outline of its reorganization plan by Jan. 31, 1987, and a draft of the plan by Feb. 28.

The creditors committee dropped its earlier objection to the exlusivity extension when the agreement was reached, but Chase Manhatten Bank refused

June, 1976: Soweto students protesting mandatory teaching of the language Afrikaans.

10 years of turmoil in South Africa

1976

■ June 16—About 13,000 black students in Soweto protest that lessons must be in Afrikaans language; police kill several.

■ Sept. 12—Black leader Steve Biko dies in police detention.
■ Oct. 12—Government bans 19 anti-apartheid groups.

1980

■ April—Mixed-race Indian and black students boycott schools.

1981

■ Jan. 22—Students end 9-month school boycott.

1982

■ July 30—Prime Minister P.W. Botha proposes limited legislative role for South Africans of Asian and mixed-race descent.

1983

■ May 20—Car bomb outside air force headquarters in Pretoria kills 18; outlawed African National Congress claims responsibility.
■ Nov. 2—White voters approve new constitution allowing limited political roles for Asian and mixed-race South Africans.

1984

■ September—Rioting in Sharpeville; police say 31 blacks are killed but church leaders list 70 victims.
■ November-December—Rioting continues; thousands of black workers join general strike.

1985

■ Jan. 31—Botha offers to free Nelson Mandela, jailed leader of African National Congress, if he renounces violence. Mandela says government must first renounce violence and free political prisoners.
■ July 20—Botha declares state of emergency in 36 black areas covering almost half the country.

1986

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The two-year-old crisis in South Africa is rooted in a history of more than 300 years of struggles for power by one group after another.

First the Dutch prevailed from their toehold in Cape Town, then the British held sway, fighting both African warriors and descendants of the Dutch settlers who moved inland and evolved into an indigenous white tribe, the Afrikaners.

In this century, Afrikaner leaders used political prowess and nationalistic fervor to achieve a victory over the British Empire that had eluded the Boer generals on the fields of war.

As memories of British domination faded, a new threat emerged to challenge the Afrikaners — the black majority that grew from the Bantu-speaking peoples who migrated into the area from central Africa about 150 years before the arrival of the whites.

To contain the blacks, Afrikaners evolved the network of laws called apartheid to separate the races, restrict black movement and protect white interests.

Now the native blacks, long the victims of a series of conquerors, are building their own nationalism to try to wrest power, or at least a share of it, from the whites.

President P.W. Botha's ruling National Party agrees publicly that the current system unfairly excludes blacks. The debate is over how to change it.

Botha promises gradual reforms that will ultimately give blacks a say in government. At the same time he wants to ensure that the future system protects what he calls minority groups, including whites.

MANY LEADERS of the 24 million blacks, and some among the 4.5 million whites, respond that there's no way to protect white interests and still give blacks a fair share of power. The answer, they say, is simply a one-man, one-vote system.

Others propose compromises, such as a federal system that would let the largest group in an area retain control over local affairs. The far-right clings to visions of old-style white domination.

The debate now is whether any of these approaches can encourage a relatively peaceful process of negotiation, or whether a bloody conflagration will make such debates fruitless. Already, more than 2,000 people, nearly all black, have died in 22 months of daily violence, raising the specter of Lebanon-style lawlessness with only victims and no victors.

Historians sometimes point to parallels in the birth of the United States.

Both South Africa and America were colonized in the 1600s — Jan van Riebeeck's settlers arrived at Cape Town in 1652 — and both sets of settlers contended with sometimes hostile natives.

But the differences far outnumber the similarities. While the American colonists quickly grew into the millions, the number in the Cape remained small, far outnumbered by blacks. The Cape was mainly a commercial outpost and resupply depot for ships of the Dutch East India Company sailing to the Far East, and the white population of the Cape was just 15,000 in 1795, more than 130 years after van Riebeeck arrived.

Relations between white masters and their servants in South Africa created one of two other minority groups, the "coloreds," or people of mixed race, who still are centered in the Cape and now number about 2.8 million. The other main minority, 850,000 Indians, began arriving in Natal in the 1860s as indentured servants.

THE BRITISH seized the Cape from the Dutch in 1806 during a European war, and steadily built up a British colonial administration. British settlers also began arriving in the eastern Cape. Thus began the uneasy coexistence between Afrikaners, who now make up about 56 percent of the white population, and English-speakers, about 38 percent.

Large numbers of Afrikaners moved inland during the Great Trek of the 1830s to escape British rule and anti-slavery laws. The voortrekkers (those who trek forth) set up independent republics — Natal, Transvaal and Orange Free State — and often battled Xhosa and Zulu warriors as the white settler areas expanded.

In the 1880s, gold was discovered in the Transvaal, and a flood of British prospectors arrived, arousing resentment among the Afrikaners. The British took over Natal as a colony along with the Cape, and the mineral wealth of the Transvaal prompted empire builders like Cecil Rhodes to envision the whole of southern Africa under British rule.

The simmering conflict erupted into the Boer War of 1899-1902. The British under Lord Kitchener achieved victory by sealing off large areas and interning Boer women and children while their menfolk were off fighting.

The official government yearbook says in a chapter on South African history: "The cost of the war was high. Almost every farmstead in the republics was a burned-out ruin. 26,000 Boer women and children had died of epidemic diseases in concentration camps, into which they had been herded after the destruction of the farms."

BUT EIGHT years later the four South African colonies — Transvaal, Cape, Natal and Free State — became a single self-governing British dominion, like Canada and Australia, and this new Union of South Africa was led by an Afrikaner-dominated coalition. The coalition tried to balance English and Afrikaner interests through what became the United Party.

By the 1930s, Afrikaner concerns about the economic dominance of English-speakers fueled a powerful nationalist movement that led to victory at the polls in 1948 for the National Party on a platform of Afrikaner rights. The Nationalists have been in power ever since, finally taking South Africa out of the Commonwealth, under threat of expulsion, in 1961, and creating the Republic of South Africa.

In the 1950s, the party built up the structures of apartheid: blacks were to be citizens of 10 tribal homelands covering 13 percent of the land, without citizenship rights in South Africa, and were made subject to strict pass laws confining them to homelands unless their labor was needed in the cities. The Group Areas Act segregated residential and business zones.

Estimates are that 3.5 million people, mostly blacks, have been resettled in redrafting racial borders.

At the same time, black resistance to white domination became bolder. The African National Congress, formed in 1912 as a non-violent civil rights group, began mounting civil disobedience campaigns against the pass laws and other measures.

In 1960, after police killed 69 black protesters in Sharpeville, the government declared its first state of emergency, detaining more than 11,000 activists. The ANC was outlawed and its leaders, who abandoned non-violence for a sabotage campaign, were jailed or forced into exile.

THE CRACKDOWN silenced most opposition for 15 years, apart from the emergence in the late 1960s of the black consciousness movement founded by Steve Biko. (Biko died of head injuries in security police custody in 1977.)

In June, 1976, rioting erupted in Soweto, Johannesburg's black township, and spread around the country, leaving at least 575 dead over several months. Again, harsh measures contained the revolt.

In 1982, Botha broke with past policy and said the government must share power with all races, prompting a right-wing breakaway and formation of the Conservative Party. Botha proposed a new Parliament with chambers for Indians and people of mixed race, but retaining final control for whites. Whites endorsed it by a 2-1 margin in a referendum in November, 1983.

The exclusion of blacks from the new system was a factor in the rioting that began in September, 1984, and continues daily. Blacks became far more organized, in part through the formation of the United Democratic Front, a network of anti-apartheid groups with branches in nearly every black township.

While Botha moved ahead with some reforms — repeal of the pass laws, scrapping laws against mixed marriages and sex across the color line, allowing blacks to own and not just rent property — black demands grew at an ever faster pace.

Foreign pressure surged, with demands for economic sanctions to isolate the government and force it to speed up change.

BOTHA HAS proposed a National Statutory Council to give blacks a role in debating legislation and helping draft a new constitution. But he is groping to find credible black leaders willing to take part.

The main opposition, the African National Congress, has grown more radical, and a spate of urban bombings in civilian areas during the current state of emergency attests to a new militancy.

The government cites the explosions as proof that the ANC is a terrorist organization controlled by Moscow. Yet there seems little doubt that the ANC commands significant support among blacks.

Botha has made it clear that no amount of foreign pressure is going to force South Africa to hand over power to black revolutionaries, which he says would be committing suicide. His critics worry that he is inviting self-destruction by resisting so fiercely what they see as another inevitable African transition from white to black rule.

South African political groups

■ United Democratic Front—Major anti-apartheid coalition claims more than 2 million followers in black townships. UDF accepts white participation but insists on unconditional negotiations for power-sharing.

■ African National Congress—Banned in 1960, ANC went underground and began a sabotage campaign. An exiled guerrilla group, it is trying to make black townships ungovernable. The government says UDF is a front for ANC, whose leader Nelson Mandela is serving a life prison term on charges of plotting sabotage.

■ Zulu Inkatha—A million-member organization of the Zulu tribe; it is headed by Gatsha Buthelezi, chief minister of the Kwa-Zulu homeland. He is an outspoken foe of apartheid but has been criticized by more militant activists who oppose the homeland system which denies blacks rights.

■ Black Sash—Small group of mostly English-speaking, affluent women. Black Sash has set up aid centers for blacks, worked in townships and helped rural blacks fight relocation to the homelands.

■ National Party—The white, mostly Afrikaner party that has governed since 1948, has traditionally sought to preserve white rights and to institutionalize apartheid. Recent attempts at "reform" have been criticized as inadequate.

■ Progressive Federal Party—Dominated by English speakers, the Progs oppose South Africa's security laws and discrimination and want a national convention—including blacks—to bring change. But most oppose one-man, one-vote. The PFP is backed by about 18 percent of the whites.

■ Reformed National and Conservative Parties—These are Afrikaner-led ultraconservative groups that split from the Nationalists. The two parties, which advocate white domination and rigid racial segregation, have the support of about 15 percent of the whites.

■ Afrikaner Resistance Movement—An ultraconservative group that favors expelling all nonwhites from Orange Free State, Transvaal and northern Natal to create a new white republic. It would take up arms against blacks as a last resort.

How influential are Communists in ANC?

EDITOR'S NOTE — President Reagan, in an Aug. 12 news conference, suggested that the African National Congress, South Africa's major black nationalist movement, is a communist "front." Here is a background report.

By DAVID CRARY

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — It is an increasingly crucial question as the West looks ahead to South Africa's future: How influential are the communists within the African National Congress?

The South African government, alarmed by the ANC's new prominence in Washington and London, has given its answer. It says communists comprise two-thirds of the outlawed organization's top leadership, direct its sabotage war against apartheid and aspire to establish a Marxist regime.

The ANC, too, has replied. Though shying away from exact numbers, it confirms that several executive committee members are communist. But at the same time, the ANC suggests it will promote multiparty democracy and a significant level of private enterprise if it takes power.

The ANC's president, Oliver Tambo, flatly denies that the organization is communist-controlled and says the communist members acknowledge the ANC as the guiding force of the struggle. Neither Tambo nor imprisoned ANC leader Nelson Mandela is a communist.

One of the leading independent experts on the ANC, Professor Tom Lodge of Johannesburg's University of the Witwatersrand, says about half of the ANC executive committee's 28 members are communist.

But Lodge, in an article in South Africa International, a political affairs journal, said the ANC's commitment to transforming South Africa does not stem from "an externally derived Marxist conspiracy."

"The ANC's radicalism is a reflection of the times and the society that produced it," Lodge wrote. "It is an indigenous force and an inescapable part of the political reality of this country."

The ANC, the leading militant group in the fight against apartheid, South Africa's system of racial segregation, was founded in 1912 as a black civil rights group, was banned in 1960, and began its sabotage war a year later.

Its contacts with international communism date back at least to 1928, when two ANC leaders visited the Soviet Union. At about the same time, the South African Communist Party, founded in 1921 and banned in 1950, began trying to build influence in the ANC.

The African National Congress' program calls for nationalization of banks and mines once the black majority gains power here. But — unlike the programs of Communist parties — it leaves considerable room for private enterprise.

Sam Motsuenyane, president of the National African Chamber of Commerce, the country's largest black business group, says black culture is not inherently socialist, even though many young blacks now equate capitalism with apartheid and wave communist flags alongside ANC banners at funerals.

"The tribal system recognizes the ability of individuals and tolerates wealthy people," Motsuenyane, who met with ANC officials in May, said in a recent interview with South Africa's Financial Mail magazine. "The ANC recognizes that this culture cannot be destroyed."

Lodge, a white political scientist, said in an interview the ANC's communists recently seemed to have decided to assume a higher profile.

"They feel they have a very large constituency in South Africa that would be supportive and there's no reason to stay in the closet," he said.

He discounted predictions by some analysts that the ANC's communist and non-communist factions would engage in a power struggle if the organization won control of the country.

"If the ANC takes power, the communists will adopt a very gradualist approach, as long as they see their goals on the agenda," he said. "They will have a role in government and will be involved with a large workers' movement."

While the U.S. State Department considers expanded contacts with the ANC, President Reagan endorses the view that communists heavily influence the movement.

"We've had enough experience in our country with so-called communist fronts to know you can have an organization with some well-meaning and fine people, but you have an element there that has its own agenda," he said at an Aug. 12 news conference. "That is what's happened with the ANC in exile. The ones we are hearing from, that are making the statements, are members of the Communist Party."

The South African government outlined a similar view in a 42-page booklet called "Talking With the ANC."

"It is our concern to convey the message to all that there are hardened communists who have influence in the ANC and who have a hidden agenda," Deputy Information Minister Louis Nel said when the booklet was issued in June.

"People who are supportive of the ANC and who are not communists must take note of the fact that there is a plan afoot to dispense with them once the first phase of the revolution has been achieved — the so-called national liberation," Nel said.

The government claims that 19 of the 28 ANC executive committee members belong to the South African Communist Party. President P.W. Botha says he will not negotiate with the ANC until it purges itself of this influence and renounces violence.

The executive committee includes two people of mixed race, two Indians, and one white — 60-year-old former lawyer Joe Slovo, chief of staff of the ANC's military wing and chairman of the South African Communist Party.

Interviewed in London earlier this month by The Associated Press, Slovo said the South African communists "don't believe we are regarded by the majority of blacks as the real, guiding force of the revolution. We accept that the ANC is that."

"It is an ancient device to allege that communists use other organizations as a front," he said. "People must get away from the notion that the way communists work is like white ants chiseling. Whatever may have been the experience elsewhere, this is not the South African experience."

South Africans find friendship in exile

By SAMUEL G. FREEDMAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It should not seem so remarkable that Sholto Ainslie and Rudzani Nemasetoni are best friends. They grew up only a few miles apart. They both study painting. They are young men in New York, a couple of handsome and footloose artists far from home.

That their home is South Africa changes everything. Sholto Ainslie is white, the descendant of Britons who arrived in Cape Town in the early 1700s. Rudzani Nemasetoni is black, the son of Venda tribesmen who left the mines of the Transvaal for the sprawling township of Soweto.

Neither man is outwardly political, a speechmaker, a grinder of axes, but they formed their friendship in a country where private conduct inevitably assumes public consequence. Now they carry on the bond in a nation that is freer and more comfortable, yet distant from things familial and familiar. Theirs is the story of exile.

"I keep dreaming of going back," said Nemasetoni, who is 24 years old. "I see myself talking to my parents, going out with my friends. But in the dream, I always end up in America again. My heart is still there, but I know I am meant to be here."

Ainslie pulled out the photo album his girlfriend gave him when he left South Africa in 1983. It is the chronicle of a cozy life: Sholto playing guitar, Sholto surfing in Durban, Sholto with his college pals beside the pool.

"I stopped seeing them," Ainslie, who is 23, said of that last photo. "One of them went into the police, two into the army. They became brainwashed, racist. They don't want to change. At the bottom of their hearts, they believe the black man should work for the white man."

So halfway around the globe, cut off from so much sustenance, Ainslie and Nemasetoni depend more than ever on each other — painting together silently in the studio, running together along the East River, going out together to the same nightclubs to flirt with the same women.

THEY ALSO rely on a quietly growing community of South African expatriates in the United States, which numbers somewhere in the tens of thousands and is concentrated in New York. Ainslie and Nemasetoni rent a Greenwich Village loft from one fellow South African, spend weekends at the country house of another, and frequently act as hosts for the latest arrivals.

The expatriates include such prominent figures as the poet Dennis Brutus, the distance runner Sydney Maree and the author and lawyer Joel Carlson. But most of the newcomers, like Ainslie and Nemasetoni, are simply people with liberal politics and sensitive natures — whites worn out by years of futile dissidence, blacks who support "the struggle" but fear being consumed in its crosscurrents of violence.

Going back to a great-great-grandfather who had campaigned against slavery, Ainslie's family has stood on the progressive side of South African politics for centuries. His parents ran a multi-racial art school in Johannesburg. The family shared its home with a black employee of the art school, Ida Makoka, and her son, Tebogo, violating a variety of apartheid laws.

Even such limited attempts at understanding amounted to a challenge to radicals of both races.

"I had a girlfriend from a conservative Afrikaner family," Ainslie said, "and I'd bring Tebogo with me when I went over there to watch TV. It drove her father crazy. If he even saw some black dude on TV, he'd say, 'Look at that kaffir.' "

Some township blacks, too, snubbed Tebogo, seeing him as tainted and privileged, a South African Uncle Tom. Tebogo's mother came to resent the influence of the Ainslie family on her son. Ainslie said his parents are now trying to help Tebogo get out of the country, preferably to Malawi.

NEMASETONI, meanwhile, was growing up in Soweto, his father a bus conductor, his mother a cook. His formal education halted with the Soweto student uprising in 1976; what began as a protest against mandatory instruction in Afrikaans became the bloody beginning of a decade of escalating turmoil.

So ended the Nemasetoni family's dream that Rudzani study medicine. But the young man followed his own muse — visual art — to the Ainslie family's art school. The trip took two hours on the all-black trains and buses, and the police frequently stopped Nemasetoni for his passbook, but he kept coming to paint.

"I always went through the studios to see what everyone's doing," Ainslie said, picking up the story, "and one day I saw Rudzani's work and started talking to him." They talked more at a barbecue a few days later, and then began to socialize outside the school. In South Africa, that established them as mavericks, if not outright subversives.

"We couldn't get on the same transport," Nemasetoni recalled.

"Couldn't go to the same place to eat," Ainslie said.

"The attitude was that it's outrageous to see a white and a black together," Nemasetoni said.

"They call a white who hangs around with a black a kaffirboetjie," Ainslie concluded. "A nigger-brother."

After seven months of their friendship, Ainslie fled the country. For four years, he had been avoiding the mandatory army service by registering at colleges to get a deferment and then dropping out. One time, though, he did not withdraw in time, and he received a failing grade. It made him immediately eligible for the military.

"I had no choice left but to leave," he said. "These days the army goes out into the townships to kill. And I can't do that."

A SOUTH African expatriate, Diane Boernstein, whom Ainslie had met in Johannesburg, offered him a room in her New York loft. He moved in and enrolled at the Parsons School of Design. And he exchanged many letters with Nemasetoni, who wrote of how badly he wanted to come to America.

About a year ago he got the chance; the African Art Fund, a New York philanthropic group, gave Nemasetoni a scholarship to attend New York University. The first thing that shocked him about his new country was the subway: white and black rode together.

"For the first month, I was very self-conscious," he recalled. "Then I relaxed. I remember thinking how the American cops are very human. They are your friends. They are not there to kill you."

If life is easier in many ways, it has often been colossally lonely. Nemasetoni brought some tapes of mbaqanga, the infectious music of the townships, to remind him of home. Ainslie has some beadwork and woven-grass bracelets. The two cook themselves South Africa specialties like the cornmeal and sausage dish called boerewors en pap. But these talismans alone do not suffice.

"I miss the smells when you're out in the bush," Ainslie said. "The sight of the veldt burning. The coastline. It's a really beautiful country, you know?" He says it wistfully yet defensively, as if a listener would not believe South Africa has any virtues.

"I miss the language of the townships," Nemasetoni put in. "So musical. Here, nobody talks on the buses. In Soweto, somebody is always standing up and telling a story or making a joke about P.W." He remembered he was in America now and added, "I mean, Botha."

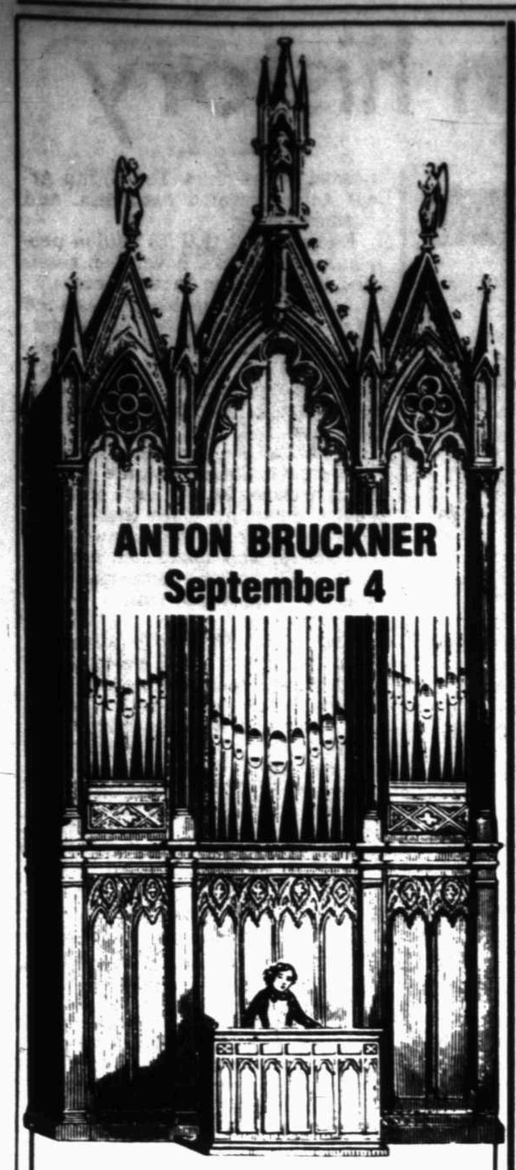

WHEN THE two men talk about South African politics, though, there is no levity. Since Nemasetoni left the country, he said, his sister has been beaten by the police and his brother has been detained. For a week, until the brother's abrupt release, no one in the family knew where he was being held, or whether he was alive.

"Every day I don't want to miss the news," Nemasetoni said, "and every night I go to bed praying my family have not been shot. When I see the news, I just hope things can get better so no one gets hurt anymore. But I feel so helpless."

Ainslie said he knew the feeling well. Several of his family's acquaintances, including the activist Bram Fischer and the poet Breyten Breytenbach, have been jailed in the past. When his parents visit friends' homes, Ainslie added, they often turn up the stereo before speaking, in case the room is being bugged by the police.

He told a story about two of his friends, who worked for Raven Press, a dissident publishing house. "They had a party during the state of emergency," he said, "and no one could understand why they would at a time like that. A week later they were gone. They'd known they were going to flee."

Going back home is difficult, if not impossible. Ainslie would face military service, and possibly a charge of draft evasion. Nemasetoni would have to unlearn a whole, liberated way of life.

Birthdate of Austrian composer and organist Anton Bruckner, in Ansfelden, Austria, in 1824. Bruckner is famous for nine major symphonies. He was an influential critic of music in Vienna at the time of composers Richard Wagner and Ludwig Von Beethoven and was for years known as a teacher and organist.

Ships' captains at fault, paper says

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — Captains of both Soviet ships involved in the Black Sea collision that left at least 79 dead and 319 missing violated navigational safety rules, the Communist Party daily Pravda said today.

At least two other newspapers said "slovenliness and carelessness" contributed to the disaster.

There was no official update on the casualty toll from the Soviet Union's second maritime disaster this year, which Deputy Merchant Marine Minister Leonid Nedyak said left 79 people known dead and 319 missing.

Twenty-seven people were hospitalized, some of them with pneumonia, but none were in danger of dying, press accounts said. A maritime official earlier said 29 were hospitalized.

Helicopters and ships continued to search the Black Sea where the Admiral Nakhimov went down about midnight Sunday, and the youth daily Komsomolskaya Pravda said deep-sea divers were to cut into the liner's hull and begin removing bodies.

Press accounts of the disaster were filled with tales of heroism, self-sacrifice and endurance.

But the official Soviet press emphasized that early accounts of the accident indicate carelessness led to the freighter Pyotr Vasyev slamming its prow into the 61-year-old Vladimir Nakhimov's starboard side.

"How could it happen?" said Pravda. "Why is it that two ships which were in communication and saw each other's lights could not steer clear?

"Investigating organs will give detailed answers on this after studying the circumstances," it said. "But already specialists state: the reason was violation by captains of both ships of rules of safe navigation."

Other newspapers were harsher in their criticism.

"One of the reasons for what happened is simple slovenliness and carelessness," said Komsomolskaya Pravda.

The newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya added: "Final conclusions on the reasons for the tragedy and the degree of guilt of some persons will be established by the state commission, but one thing is already clear: among the reasons that led to the tragedy were carelessness and slovenliness."

The government newspaper Izvestia has quoted a helmsman from the Admiral Nakhimov as saying his ship's bridge staff radioed the freighter to change course before the collision. It said that the Pyotr Vasyev reversed engines just before the crash.

Igor M. Averin, spokesman for the Merchant Marine Ministry, has confirmed the two crews were on the radio talking about how to steer apart when the accident occurred.

A government commission headed by Politburo member Geidar A. Aliev is investigating the crash.

Capt. Vadim Markov of the Admiral Nakhimov was rescued along with about 270 of the 345 other crewmen aboard the liner. None of those aboard the freighter, skippered by Viktor Tkachenko, were injured.

The ships collided in clear weather with relatively calm seas, but officials said a wind later whipped the water into high waves.

"The water (around the accident site) was covered by a layer of heavy oil and paint that came from who knows where," seaman Stanislav Usanov, one of the rescuers, told Sovietskaya Rossiaya.

"People were swimming in this unbelievable stew of liferafts, pieces of rope and all kinds of things that popped up from the steamer," he said.

Newspaper accounts singled out several rescuers for heroism. One young seaman named Vladimir Volodin, who was aboard a pilot boat, was credited with saving a woman and her baby.

"He threw himself into the waves, taking a lifejacket with him, grabbed the woman, took the child in his arms and towed them back to the boat," said Volodin's commander, Vladimir Belovol.

Iran releases Soviet ship after search

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iran today released the Soviet freighter which it had stopped in the Persian Gulf and forced to port in a search for material aiding Iraq's war effort, shipping executives said.

A second Soviet freighter, the Tutov, on Wednesday was allowed to continue its trip to an undisclosed Arab port in the gulf after it was detained briefly by Iranian warships, the executives said.

The Pyotr Yemtsov was intercepted Tuesday and taken at gunpoint to Bandar Abbas, 120 miles east of the United Arab Emirates, where it was unloaded, said the executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The vessel was seized during a voyage from the Black Sea port of Nikolayev to Kuwait, the sources said.

The Iranians examined the cargo and found it did not include material of military value, the executives said. The ship was reloaded, and the Iranians attributed their action to an unspecified "technical failure" in the Soviet ship, they said.

The Soviet Union is the main arms supplier for Iraq, which has been locked in war with Iran for six years.

It was the first time the Iranian navy had stopped Soviet vessels since Iran began intercepting freighters early in 1985.

Despite the Soviet role in supplying Iraq during its 6-year-old war with Iran, shipping sources said that weapons or other military goods were unlikely to be shipped on Soviet freighters through the gulf.

"We believe the Pyotr Yemtsov was loaded with construction material, but the Iranians consider such commodities to be an asset for the Iraqi military effort," said an executive based in Kuwait.

In Moscow, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov on Wednesday confirmed that the 11,750-ton Pyotr Yemtsov was "detained" off the coast of the United Arab Emirates but did not mention the Tutov. Bandar Abbas is about 120 miles east of the United Arab Emirates.

Gerasimov said he believed the freighter was carrying a load of cement. He gave no information on the size of its crew.

Shipping executives said an average of two Soviet or East European freighters a day ply the gulf waters. They expressed surprise that Iran would harass Soviet ships while the Kremlin is trying to improve relations with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's fundamentalist Shiite Moslem government.

"Knowing the Soviets, they are unlikely to create any fuss about the seizure of their vessel, however," a Bahrain shipping agent said.

Capt. Mohammed Hussein Malekzadegan, the Iranian navy commander, was quoted earlier this week as saying his warships intercept 15 to 20 commercial vessels a day to make sure they do not carry cargo that would benefit Iraq's war effort.

Most detained ships are allowed to resume their trips after searches. Others have been taken to Bandar Abbas, where their cargoes were unloaded and confiscated.

Gadhafi slams non-aligned movement as 'useless' in talk

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi today slammed the nonaligned movement as useless and threatened to withdraw because some of its members recognize Israel.

Gadhafi also claimed more than 50 American vessels and tens of thousands of U.S. troops were threatening his north African country, but said he was not intimidated.

"This...will never make Libya stop from the continuation of the battle of freedom and liberation in the world — until final victory," Gadhafi said.

The Harare summit was Gadhafi's first known foreign appearance since the United States bombed Libya April 15 in retaliation against Gadhafi's alleged support of international terrorism.

Gadhafi, taking the rostrum on the fourth day of the weeklong summit of the 101-member group, declared he had come to put the material and moral resources of his revolutionary state at the disposal of guerrillas fighting South Africa.

"I did not come for the non-aligned movement...because I don't believe there is any use in this movement," declared Gadhafi. "It is not befitting for (a) revolutionary like myself to sit beside these puppets who recognize Israel."

"In this hall, there are puppets and there are spies. Those who recognize Israel are enemies of this movement," the Libyan leader told the gathering.

He named Zaire, Cameroon and Ivory Coast, three of four black African countries which have restored or agreed to restore diplomatic links with Israel since June 1982.

The other country to re-establish links with Israel was Liberia, not mentioned by Gadhafi. Most black African countries severed ties with Israel following the 1973 Middle East war.

Gadhafi also repeatedly likened South Africa to his Arab state's arch-enemy, Israel.

"What is the difference between Israel and South Africa?" he asked. "Israel and South Africa are the claws of the imperialist monster...South Africa is the dirty leg of America, and Israel is the other leg. We are ready to withdraw from this movement if we sit beside countries which recognize Israel."

Gadhafi paused at one point in his address for five supporters dressed in battle fatigues to break into chants of "Down, Down U.S.A."

The show was greeted by scattered applause, but most of the leaders and their deputies assembled in the conference hall sat in silence through Gadhafi's speech.

The summit host and conference chairman, Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, stared straight ahead without expression.

Gadhafi, accused by the West of instigating international, state-sponsored terrorism, said his Libyan revolutionaries will fight "until the yoke of colonialism comes to an end."

Gadhafi, whose speech culminated his activity here, had swept in a day late on Monday accompanied by platoons of bodyguards.

They were disarmed by Zimbabwean authorities and have since staged anti-American demonstrations outside the conference center to coincide with Gadhafi's arrivals and departures.

Gadhafi earlier repeatedly declared that the resources of his country and its weapons were at the disposal of the African National Congress, the main black guerrilla movement fighting to end rule by the white-led government in neighboring South Africa.

Sakharov seeks release of political prisoners in Gorbachev letter

MOSCOW (AP) — Human rights activist Andrei Sakharov has written to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev urging that all prisoners of conscience be freed from jail, internal exile and mental hospitals.

The dissident physicist also thanked the Soviet leader for his "personal intervention" in allowing Sakharov's wife, Yelena Bonner, to visit the West for several months to obtain medical treatment. She returned June 2.

The letter, dated Feb. 19, was obtained by a Western journalist and distributed Wednesday to other foreign correspondents. It was accompanied by a message written in March asking that mass media publicize the letter Sept. 3 if Gorbachev had not replied.

There was no way to determine whether Gorbachev had received the letter, or if he had responded.

Sakharov, 65, has been confined to the closed city of Gorky since January 1980, a month after he denounced the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Gorky is 250 miles east of Moscow.

The letter said the decision to allow Mrs. Bonner go abroad gave Sakharov hope that Gorbachev would intervene in "the fate of prisoners of conscience, people repressed because of their convictions and actions."

Sakharov set down a lengthy explanation of legal barriers to detention on political grounds and asked that all prisoners of conscience be freed from jail, internal exile and mental hospitals.

It identified a dozen Soviets said to be imprisoned or exiled for their beliefs, including Mrs. Bonner and Anatoly Shcharansky, who was released to the West in a prisoner exchange eight days before the letter's date.

The subsequent March note acknowledged Shcharansky's release and said Sakharov was "deeply pleased with the knowledge of this humanitarian act."

Alexei Semyonov, Sakharov's stepson, distributed copies of the letter and March note at a news conference in Washington later Wednesday.

Polish church abandons effort to aid private farmers

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Church officials said Wednesday they abandoned a 4-year-old effort to channel millions of dollars in Western aid to private farmers because the Communist government refused to stay out of the project.

Government officials demanded that the minister of agriculture be allowed to veto programs run by the fund, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, the leader of the Roman Catholic Church in Poland, said in a statement.

Such demands "would be discrepant with the principles of the fund, especially its autonomy," Glemp said.

"In such a situation, regret was expressed that the...fund which was supposed to become a plane of cooperation...on an international scale as well as between people of various outlooks within the country...failed to be realized," the statement said.

But a high-ranking government official said giving the minister of agriculture a deciding voice on selecting the fund's programs was "only a proposal for negotiations" intended to ensure that the fund's limited resources were used to meet the most pressing needs of Polish agriculture.

"It is a pity that the church side speaks of the fund in the past tense, when chances of a positive end of the talks seemed close to the government side," Kazimierz Grzesiak, deputy agriculture minister, said in an interview with the official PAP news agency.

Grzesiak has headed the government's team in negotiations with the church on the fund.

The church had first proposed the fund in September 1982 to help modernize Polish agriculture. Unlike other Communist countries with collectivized agriculture, Poland has 3.9 million private farmers who till 75 percent of the arable land and produce more than 80 percent of the country's crops.

The fund had received pledges of $28 million from the West, including $10 million from the U.S. government, Maria Stolzman, secretary of the organizing committee, told a news conference Wednesday.

The church had hoped to reach an annual operating budget of $170 million.

Under the plan, farmers were to receive equipment sent by the West, making partial payment in Polish currency, which the foundation would then invest in rural development projects, such as dairy and fruit processing plants.

Ms. Stolzman said the decision to give up the fund was sparked by comments by Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski in July that the church must agree to cooperate with the government's agricultural policy and consult the ministry of agriculture on the allocation of funds.

Glemp met with the fund's organizing committee Tuesday and asked that the panel study other ways of aiding farmers, the church statement said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Walters, diplomat discuss Libya

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The U.S. ambassador to the United Nations discussed Libya with Chancellor Helmut Kohl on Wednesday but did not hint of "unpleasant things ahead" such as another American air raid, a government official said.

Vernon R. Walters also did not demand that European allies impose new sanctions on Libya or speak of possible U.S. plans for renewed military action against Libya, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

After separate meetings with Kohl and Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher, Walters told reporters they had an "exchange of views (on) means of combating terrorism."

He refused to elaborate. "I can't answer any questions, but I would say that President Reagan sent me to Europe to talk to our allies and friends about means of combating terrorism and other related problems," Walters told reporters gathered outside Kohl's office.

Fishing banned in Swiss lake

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — The government banned fishing in Lake Lugano on Wednesday after catches were found to be contaminated with radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl nuclear accident four months ago.

The ban was the first mandatory health measure imposed by Swiss authorities since the April 26 disaster at the Soviet nuclear power plant sent a cloud of radioactive debris over Europe.

Also announced was a ban on sales or imports of fish caught in the lake beginning last Aug. 1.

Lake Lugano lies mostly in the southern Swiss canton of Ticino but a small part is on Italian territory.

The measures are likely to stay in effect for three to four months, Swiss government spokesman Achille Casanova told reporters.

Bomb kills three French soldiers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A roadside bomb exploded in south Lebanon today, killing three French soldiers serving with the United Nations peacekeeping force and slightly wounding one other, a U.N. spokesman said.

Nine previous attacks on the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon since Aug. 11 killed an Irish lieutenant and injured two Irishmen and 20 Frenchmen.

Court overturns some press rules

PIETERMARITZBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Natal Supreme Court today overturned emergency powers allowing the minister of law and order to seize or ban any publication he felt contained a subversive statement.

Ruling in a challenge of the emergency regulations brought by several newspaper groups, the court declared invalid a prohibition against possession of any statement deemed subversive.
