Levee breaks in St. Louis; river bulges to record crest

A sandbagged levee crumbled along a mile-long stretch of the River Des Peres and floodwaters surged into south St. Louis on Tuesday, as the Mississippi River bulged to a record crest and heavy rains doused the area.

Workers were trying to repair one breach when the wall gave way on either side of them and they quickly were up to their necks in water, said David Weman, a St. Louis fire battalion chief. They were rescued by boat.

"We don't know how many homes have been inundated. But things are pretty bad. We're trying to get people out. It's severe," said Candy Green, spokeswoman for the city's

Clinton taps 'street-smart' federal judge to head FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton tapped "street-smart" federal judge Louis Freeh on Tuesday to lead the FBI in its fight against persistent violent crime, new challenges in counter-terrorism and the agency's own morale problems.

"Our country must be made safe again," Freeh declared at an upbeat Rose Garden appearance alongside Clinton.

The ceremony provided a sharp contrast to the previous day, when a grim-faced Clinton had appeared in the White House briefing room to announce he was firing William Sessions as FBI head because of questions about his conduct and leadership.

Rostenkowski role

WASHINGTON — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski brushed aside fresh questions about his role in the House Post office scandal on Tuesday, and House Speaker Thomas Foley cautioned against leaping to "totally unjustified" conclusions about the powerful Illinois lawmaker. Even so, Foley, D-Wash., conceded he was "obviously surprised" by claims made by former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, who said in a plea bargain agreement on Monday that he had willingly helped unnamed lawmakers embezzle funds from the post office for 20 years./5A

Death stuns officials

WASHINGTON — Vince Foster, President Clinton's deputy legal counsel, was found dead Tuesday night in a roadside park from an apparently self-inflicted gunshot wound, White House officials said. A native of Hope, Ark., Foster had been a partner with Hillary Rodham Clinton in a Little Rock law firm and had moved to Washington when Clinton became president. Foster, 48, was married and the father of three children. His death stunned White House officials, who said they were unaware of anything that might have caused Foster to take his own life.

Midland County's 1993 cotton crop is off to a strong start. As always, the principal factor in effecting a good yield is the weather.

Farmers eye sky as cotton heads into blooming stage

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

West Texas cotton is heading straightaway into the blooming stage, which holds promise for bountiful bolls of lint. And it is the lint that farmers convert into money and into their livelihoods.

Crucial to cotton production is rainfall and the seasonal hot growing season.

Saboteurs are numerous. They include droughts, hail, floods, early freezes, cool weather when hot weather is needed for cotton's growth, bollworms and the destructively encroaching and hardy boll weevil of both legend and reality.

Southeast of Midland in the heavy cotton-growing St. Lawrence region of Glasscock County, hail once again has damaged the crop.

Rainfall has been light.

"We got a little bit of rain (this week)," said St. Lawrence farmer Jerome Hoelscher. "We need a rain pretty bad. We got a little. We didn't enough."

Greenspan hints of Fed rates boost

■ Some analysts predict central bank could begin pushing up short-term rates after Labor Day.

Greenspan — Inflation performance disappoints central bank chief.

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan let Congress know Tuesday he is not happy with the country's "disappointing" inflation and indicated the central bank stands ready to raise interest rates to dampen price pressures. Delivering his midyear assessment of the economy, Greenspan appeared to dash any lingering hopes that the economy's poor performance this year would prompt the Fed to cut interest rates further.

Instead, financial markets and economists widely interpreted his comments as laying the groundwork for raising interest rates, which the central bank has not done since early 1989. Some analysts predicted the Fed could begin pushing up the short-term rates it controls after Labor Day.

Tall City jobless rate increases sharply in June

Midland's unemployment rate rose sharply in June, according to figures released Tuesday by the Texas Employment Commission.

The Tall City's rate rose to 7.5 percent from 6.6 percent in May, but remains a full percentage point below the 8.5 percent recorded in June 1992.

In Odessa, the unemployment rate rose even higher, to 10.4 percent from 8.9 percent.

The TEC attributes the increase to youthful job seekers entering the labor market, said Jacquen Moseley, office manager of the TEC's Midland office.

In June, TEC figures show, 600 Midlanders entered the civilian labor force, raising it to 49,200 from 48,600 in May. A year ago, the labor force totaled 50,300.

Of those who entered the labor force, 100 found jobs, raising total employment to 45,500 from 45,400 the previous month, but below the year-ago level of 46,000.

The remaining 500 new entrants were added to Midland's total unemployment, putting it at 3,700 — above the 3,200 in May but below

COTTON: Crop 'looks better than it did this day last year'

(From 1A)

What the farmers there need less of is hail, which recently damaged crops just like it did in late May and early June.

The damaging effect of hail is "like somebody took your car, half your cloths and half the groceries out of the house," Hoelscher said. "Of course, it hurts. I got some hail on both farms. You bet I did."

Earlier, what he called "terrific winds" conspired with the heat to burn the leaves of cotton plants.

While Hoelscher and other St. Lawrence farmers are looking for more rain, the Midland area has been widely threatened with dark thunderclouds and generally blessed with scattered rainfall.

"The last several days, we had a pretty nice rain," said Charlie Wright, manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative. "The cotton looks like it's doing real good. It's beginning to bloom — the earlier-(planted) cotton is blooming."

The cotton crop "looks better than it did this day last year" when the 1992 crop had just about dried up in July from lack of moisture.

"But we made a decent crop anyhow," Wright recalled.

The 1992 season started out late due to heavy rainfall, which washed out crops. Many were replanted.

Normal planting time is mid-May, though planting may be as early as late April and as late as early June.

It's difficult to tell from year to year and within a growing season how the crop will turn out.

"If it looks bad, it might turn out good," Wright said. "If it looks good, it might turn out bad. You can never tell."

Wright, who runs the only cotton gin in Midland County, is counting on more rain.

"Usually every time it rains, it ups the number of bales I'll gin," he said. The ginning season usually starts in mid-October to early November and ends in late December or goes well into January.

Roy Graham, who farms in the Greenwood area east of Midland, said he is hoping for more rain.

"We didn't get any of the rain yesterday (Monday)," Graham said. "Some of them (farmers) pretty close to me did. We're still hoping for more. The cotton is growing really good — loading up good" with squares and blooms, which will turn into bolls of lints for the textile mills to convert to clothing material. "Part of the country is still dry."

In this part of the country, none is too wet.

"We are in good shape for right now," Graham said. The cotton is squaring (budding). It's everything from the squaring stage to small bolls.

"If we had another rain, it sure wouldn't make us mad," Graham said. "When we have a (good) rain, we are always looking for another one. That's the way most good things are."

North of Midland and higher into the South Plains in the Lubbock area, "We are still kind of dry," said Marc Traweek, general manager of the Tokio Co-op Gin in Yoakum County. In the 1980s, Yoakum County and neighboring Terry County were the area's top cotton-producing counties.

"Right around here, in the Plains area, we are still kind of dry here," he said. "We haven't had a whole lot of rain yet."

Cotton is in the squaring stage. Some is blooming.

"And we need some more rain."

Last year in the Lubbock area and east of Tokio, there was very little good cotton weather. Heavy rains and northerly winds wiped out much of the 1992 crop.

However, "What we serve (in the Tokio area) made a bumper crop," said Traweek, who is a former Midland County farmer and cotton ginner. "It did real good."

For now, there is a "lot of real good cotton on the South Plains," Traweek said. "Right here, were are real dry. Some of it has already turned into insurance. It's zeroed out."

Some cottonseed was "dry planted" based on hopes for impending rains, which failed to come in time to germinate the seed.

But a rain now "would help," Traweek said. "The little ol' cotton should have had some rain weeks ago."

From the Midland area to the Lubbock country, the 1993 cotton crop is promising and may surpass last year's 1.4 million bales from a 25-county area served by the Lubbock-based Plain Cotton Growers Inc.,

"Despite a record 54 percent of the area's cotton acres having to be abandoned before harvest, the weighted average yield for the (South Plains and) High Plains was a respectable 455 pounds per acre, mainly because of near-perfect weather from July through harvest," according to Shawn Wade, spokesman for Plains Cotton Growers.

By far, Gaines County was the area's top cotton producer with 286,200 bales of cotton from 242,900 harvested acres. All told, 293,300 acres were planted in cotton in Gaines County. The average per-pound yield per acre was 566 or about 1¼ bales.

The standard bale weighs 480 pounds.

The area's top cotton producers and the bale output were Gaines County, 286,200 bales; Lynn County, 162,700 bales; Dawson County, 156,800 bales; Terry County, 135,600 bales; Yoakum County, 103,200 bales, and Martin County, which produced 95,500 bales from 88,200 harvested acres and 112,800 planted acres.

Midland County's output was 28,900 bales from 29,600 harvested acres.

Hale County, which takes in the Plainview area, was severely hit by last year's heavy rains, which ruined the county's cotton crop. Out of 206,400 planted acres, only 21,000 acres were harvested. The yield was 17,600 bales.

Chance of rain to hang in air

Staff report

Another round of late afternoon showers brought just over ½-inch of rain to the area Tuesday and the National Weather Service in Midland predicted a chance of rain again today.

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of rain, a high in the mid-90s and southeast winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and low in the upper 60s, according to the NWS.

Thursday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 68, Tuesday's high reached 91, compared to the record high for that date of 104 set in 1937. The record low was 60 set in 1970.

tence on July 5 when, according to Sheriff Gary Painter, "Gonzales was involved in a fight with another inmate and was removed to a single cell where he became uncooperative and was a danger to himself. Mr. Gonzales was handcuffed and carried to a padded cell. ... While removing the handcuffs, Mr. Gonzales was struggling then became still. Officers and the jail nurse checked for pulse and breathing, found none and began CPR."

Capt. Gene Powell of the Texas Rangers said their investigation indicated Gonzales was becoming "paranoid" that other inmates were trying to kill him and was moved. Powell said Gonzales was posing a threat to himself and was restrained in the "hog-tied" position when he apparently collapsed.

Gonzales was taken to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center where he died on July 9. Preliminary autopsy results indicate he died from a combination of positional asphyxia and alcohol withdrawal.

Sparks Veasey, the Ector County medical examiner, said he reviewed the physicians' reports from Gonzales' admission and hospital stay and those records indicated he had no alcohol in his system when he was admitted. He also indicated that the fashion in which he was restrained was a factor in the death of Gonzales.

The LULAC state director said she has asked Morales to "do the same thing he is doing in Corsicana" on a similar case in which a man in police custody died after being restrained in a "hog-tied" maneuver.

Although the death was ruled accidental, the officers involved in that arrest have since been dismissed from the Police Department.

The jailers involved in the incident when Gonzales collapsed are still on the job, according to the sheriff. He said he is "still looking into" the occurrences that led to his collapse and subsequent death.

Midland County Justice of the Peace Robert H. Pine has made no ruling on the death. He said he is awaiting the formal autopsy results. An Ector County medical examiner's spokesman said he was under the impression that Veasey was still waiting for toxicology reports to make the autopsy complete.

LULAC also is asking that the use of the "hog-tying" maneuver be outlawed.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman said he has been told from various law enforcement officials that "hog-tying" is an accepted restraint procedure, although it has been outlawed in some states.

Powell said the Rangers' investigation is close to completion and will likely be presented to Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre by the end of the week.

"The investigation is on-going ... you never really say an investigation is complete until the grand jury has rendered its final decision," Powell said.

FBI Supervisor Tom Kirspel said the FBI still is investigating the possible violation of the inmate's civil rights.

State LULAC officials said Saturday they plan to have an autopsy performed by an independent pathologist, but efforts to reach local LULAC representatives were unsuccessful on Tuesday.

Ms. Rosales charges that Gonzales' rights were violated and the family will be filing a federal civil rights violation lawsuit against the sheriff's office. No lawsuit had been filed by the end of the business day Tuesday.

the 4,300 seen in June 1992.

Congress' efforts to get the federal budget deficit under control had an impact on the summer jobs programs administered by the Jobs Training Partnership Act.

Director W.C. Wilson said that delayed funding prompted the group to cancel some enrichment programs it had planned, but it proceeded with work experience training programs, placing young people with non-profit groups such as United Way member agencies, state and federal offices, the YMCA, the City of Midland and Midland County for the summer.

Moseley said she hopes the increase in unemployment is merely reflective of seasonal factors and not signs of a developing upward spiral, adding that July unemployment figures released in August will better detail unemployment trends.

However, she said the fact that local first-time unemployment insurance claims were up 11 percent last week over year-ago figures — and claims the previous week were up even higher — is not a good sign.

Among the TEC's 28 metropolitan statistical areas, Midland ranked 15th, Odessa 23rd.

Bryan-College Station had the lowest rate in the state, 4.2 percent, followed by Austin with 4.8 percent, Amarillo with 5.5 percent, Victoria with 6.2 percent, and San Angelo and San Antonio with 6.3 percent. McAllen-Edinburg-Mission had the highest rate, 16 percent.

Statewide, the unemployment rate rose to 7.5 percent from 6.4 percent in May, but is below the June 1992 rate of 8.3 percent.

Total employment was 8.26 million, up from 8.18 million in May; the actual number of working Texans rose by 73,000 during June.

An estimated 668,100 Texans were jobless in mid-June, with state and local governments losing over 33,600 jobs, mainly in education. Service industries added 19,000 jobs.

LEVEE: River hits new record emergency management operation.

Military vehicles were needed to get through the deep water.

"The city is rushing in with heavy equipment trying to dump stones, sandbags and sand to plug it up," said Bill Groth of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

The neighborhood already was flooded because sandbags had washed off the levee Sunday, and much of that water remained when more of the sandbags gave way.

Police Lt. Tim Murphy said there were four or five new breaks in the levee along a stretch of a mile.

About 1,200 people had been ordered to evacuate over the weekend, but some remained. Earlier Tuesday, emergency workers with bullhorns drove through the neighborhood, urging the holdouts to flee. It couldn't be determined immediately how many people remained when the levee burst.

Two bridges were closed in the area, though one later reopened. Water service had been turned off earlier in the day following six water main breaks.

The River Des Peres is a concrete-lined drainage ditch that has been flooded by Mississippi backwash. Workers had lined sandbags along its sides to try to keep floodwaters out.

The collapse came as the Mississippi, which had reached one record crest of 46.9 feet Sunday night before dropping slightly, hit 47.1 feet, Groth said. A line of strong thunderstorms also was moving through the area and may have contributed to the levee break.

"As high as the river is, almost anything's going to have some impact," Groth said.

Parts of the St. Louis area received up to 1½ inches of rain in an hour, said Todd Shea, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

Other parts of the Midwest also faced new complications in trying to recover from more than 1½ months of record flooding:

■ Showers in much of Iowa and parts of Missouri made it harder for people to get on with drying out their homes and businesses.

FBI: Clinton selects federal judge Freeh district judge from Manhattan, was appointed to the bench by President Bush in 1991 after five years as an FBI agent and a decade as a federal prosecutor.

"He is experienced, energetic and independent," Clinton said. "He will be both good and tough — good for the FBI and tough on criminals."

Clinton said that Freeh, working with Attorney General Janet Reno and drug policy director Lee Brown, would give the administration "a street-smart front line against crime."

Freeh, for his part, pledged "total commitment to a Federal Bureau of Investigation whose only beacon is a rule of law, whose sole task is protecting all of our people from crime and violence."

Clinton called him "a law enforcement legend," citing his drug and mail-bomb investigations as a prosecutor and his work as an FBI agent against racketeering.

His last name is pronounced "Free." Clinton called him "Louie."

Freeh made a point of introducing his wife and four sons at the White House ceremony. "Come on, guys, stand up," he prompted the older three boys. He picked up the youngest for the cameras.

If confirmed by the Senate, Freeh would take charge of an agency fighting an unyielding violent crime problem and new terrorist activity on U.S. soil.

While the number of murders in America last year dropped 6 percent, total violent crime remained steady, and rapes and assaults increased. The agency has established a task force to work with state and local officials on combatting violent crime.

HINTS: Inflation disappoints Fed's Greenspan

(From 1A)

gauntlet and said, 'My job is to keep inflation under control. I am going to fight inflation,'" said David Jones, an economist with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co.

Economists said the Fed chairman was using his twice-annual report to Congress to let financial markets know that if inflationary pressures do not recede, the central bank will move with dispatch to push rates higher.

Such a move was foreshadowed in May by a widely publicized leak that said Fed policymakers had switched policy from a neutral stance to one that was leaning toward higher rates.

Acknowledging that policy change, Greenspan testified Tuesday that it was prompted by worries that inflationary pressures and expectations of even-higher inflation were becoming embedded in the economy.

Addressing critics who blame the country's slowest recovery on record to the Fed's tight-fisted monetary policies, Greenspan insisted that the central bank "has had to remain alert to the possibility that an ill-timed easing could be undone by a flare-up of inflation expectations."

Greenspan noted that gold prices, often taken as a signal of inflation concerns, have risen sharply in recent months following worrisome consumer price increases from January through April.

"On balance, the news on inflation this year must be characterized as disappointing," Greenspan said. "The rate of inflation has at best stabilized."

EAT: 20s, 30s group doesn't have to cook to survive necessarily the first way you think of getting something to eat," said Betsy Leichliter, who researches dining patterns.

Many of these young people have sophisticated palates; they've eaten Thai and Vietnamese, Mexican and Moroccan, southern and northern Italian, Indian and Provencal. They can distinguish between a bourride and a bouillabaisse, Yukon gold and yellow Finnish potatoes, fusilli and rigatoni.

"They can do some things fine. They can make pasta, they can operate a grill," said Mona Doyle, president of the Consumer Network, a Philadelphia firm that surveys people about their buying and eating habits. "They don't know how to make a sauce, they don't know how to braise."

It makes for a limited repertoire.

"I do pretty basic things, like cereal or pasta dishes. I can make a sauce, sort of. I can make a piece of chicken if I had to," said John Callahan, 32, a photographer in Hawaii whose mother was a teacher.

"I see cooking as taking up a great deal of time, and that's time people my age just don't have," he said.

A National Restaurant Association Survey in 1991 found that people ages 18 to 24 ate more commercially prepared meals in a week, 5.1, than any other age group.

In part, that's because so much is there to be bought.

A decade ago, the array of takeout food "was called New York food. Now it's St. Louis food and suburbs food," available most places, said Doyle, who recently completed research on "twentysomethings" for a food company.

She found that ignorance, a lack of time, a high failure rate in the kitchen, delayed marriage and a perception that homemade is as expensive as takeout have combined to make cooking less inviting for young people, even those who like to eat at home.

"It's smoke and mirrors when they get in the kitchen," said Katherine Alford, head teacher at Peter Kump's New York Cooking School. "It astonishes me that their culinary traditions are nonexistent."

Alford, 35, said she grew up with lots of convenience food, and understands its importance to women seeking time for careers or pursuits other than housekeeping.

That legacy has to some extent changed the definition of cooking.

"People like to assemble foods now, more than prepare them," said Jo Natale, a spokeswoman for Wegman's, a chain of 46 upstate New York supermarkets that carry a range of takeout foods. "They might buy an entree and make a salad."

Consider:

■ A young woman taking part in a focus group for the National Pork Council said she could not make kabobs at home because her supermarket didn't stock pork cubes. She didn't consider cutting the meat herself, said Robin Kline, director of consumer affairs at the council in Des Moines.

■ In his new book "Desperate Measures: 90 Unintimidating Recipes for the Domestically Inept," Kevin Crafts includes a recipe for real whipped cream, noting that it tastes and looks better than canned, which would not be news to anybody who grew up when milk came with cream on top. The book, he said, is aimed at people who generally eat pizza or a bowl of cereal for supper.

■ Cookbook author Marcia Adams tapes her TV cooking show at Bowling Green State University. Some college students who supposedly cooked were hired to assist her. "I was spending all my time training them," she said. The director then went to her Lutheran Church choir and got some older women; they worked just fine.

■ Jan Ecklund, manager of consumer services at Betty Crocker in Minneapolis, said calls to the company's toll-free number show that many young people don't understand the instructions on mix boxes to "grease and flour" a baking pan.

In postwar America, the kitchen was women's domain, the place where they pleased husbands and husbands' bosses, where they coffee-klatched with neighbors, where they created fabulous Saturday night dinner parties.

Unemployment in world's rich democracies could reach peak

PARIS (AP) — Unemployment in the world's 24 wealthiest democracies may near a postwar peak this year with 35.1 million people, or 8.5 percent of workers, out of jobs.

The annual report on employment released Tuesday by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development projected an even bleaker 1994, when the jobless rate could reach 35.7 million, or 8.6 percent.

That would nearly equal the postwar high of 8.75 percent.

Though the worldwide recession took some blame, the report attributed part of the outlook to discouragement among long-term unemployed whose failure to find work leads to an erosion of skills and eventual withdrawal from the labor market.

The picture is fairly positive for the United States. The organization estimated unemployment will decline from 7.4 percent in 1992 to 7 percent this year and 6.5 percent in 1994.

Unfortunately, international group says jobless rate in 1994 could be even worse.

But in Europe, where long-term unemployment has proven more stubborn and many economies remain mired in recession, the overall jobless rate will rise — from 9.9 percent in 1992 to 11.4 percent this year and 11.9 percent in 1994.

Japan's relatively low unemployment rate will show a steady climb, from 2.2 percent in 1992 to 2.5 percent this year and 2.6 percent in 1994.

It said that although some countries may emerge from recession by the end of next year, economic revival may not greatly thin the ranks of the long-term unemployed.

Long-term unemployment — defined as exceeding six months — accounts for nearly half the jobless rate in Europe. It has risen sharply in many countries since the recession hit in 1991.

The rates are due in part to generous unemployment benefits and wariness by employers in taking on full-time staff with rights to expensive benefits, the report said. It noted that increasing numbers of workers find only part-time jobs, even though 60 percent to 80 percent would prefer full-time work.

The report recommended that governments help the long-term unemployed keep in contact with the job market, reduce employers' hiring and firing costs, and stimulate the creation of temporary jobs.

Mexico spill worse than reported, groups say

PUERTO LAZARO CARDENAS, Mexico (NYT) — Leading Mexican environmentalists have accused the government of covering up a 4,000-ton spill of highly corrosive sulfuric acid into the ocean off Mexico's Pacific Coast.

The charges come as environmental concerns have delayed consideration of the free trade accord negotiated between Mexico, the United States and Canada.

Mexico's Interior Ministry last week issued a communique saying that tests of the water around the tanker Betula showed "that there been no leak of sulfuric acid."

But charges of a cover-up lodged made by Mexico's chapter of Greenpeace and the Group of 100, a national organization, are supported by American and British marine consultants hired to take fuel off the Betula.

Gordon Amos, a consultant for an insurance firm, said that to support Mexican government assertions that there had been no leak would be like "continuing a fantasy."

One crewman was reportedly badly burned by the chemicals, Wood said.

Mexican officials towed the ship out to sea, but the cable broke, the consultants and ecologists said. The hurricane then forced the ship back to shore and tipped it onto its side, the ecologists and consultants said.

Wood said that most of the acid probably leaked out during the gale.

Local residents said in interviews that six to eight fishermen reported suffering what appeared to be chemical burns. They said that an unusual number of fish and turtles showed up dead.

No one, however, is asserting that the acid caused a major environmental crisis.

"This is no Exxon Valdez," said Homero Aridis, director of the Group of 100. "But it is a disaster in terms of government morality. It demonstrates government deception and disinformation.

English House of Commons to vote on European treaty

LONDON (NYT) — A crucial House of Commons vote Thursday on European union could strengthen Prime Minister John Major's leadership or shake his government to its roots.

The stakes — Britain's approval or rejection of the Maastricht Treaty on European Union — have never been higher for Major and his Conservative Party allies, who favor the treaty.

Major backs the treaty, which provides for the political, economic and eventual military union of the 12-member European Community and a common currency by 1999.

But the version Britain is considering has been stripped of the controversial "social chapter" dealing with working conditions and relations between employees and employers.

The opposition parties, Labor and the Liberal Democrats, want the social chapter back in the treaty. Labor proposes an amendment that would do just that, and this amendment is the most crucial item scheduled for a vote on Thursday.

Major's problem is complicated by the fact that his Conservatives hold a slim 18-vote majority in the Commons. A group of 19 party mavericks, who oppose both the treaty and Major's leadership, is threatening to join the opposition and vote for the social chapter. The mavericks want to make it impossible for the government to ratify the treaty.

If Major can bring 10 of the mavericks back into the fold, or make a side deal that would secure the votes of Unionist members from Northern Ireland, he could defeat the social chapter.

Grim shortages, high inflation force Saddam into submission

By Paul Lewis
N.Y. Times News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Nearly three years after the U.N. Security Council imposed an economic blockade on Iraq, the grinding hardship, soaring prices and growing shortages inflicted on ordinary people finally seem to be influencing Iraq's decision makers.

Diplomats and Iraqi officials say it was the hard times, more than anything else, that finally forced President Saddam Hussein to swallow his pride this week and, after resisting for a year and a half, agree to indefinite monitoring of military industries to ensure that he does not manufacture more major weapons.

For most Iraqis, life has become a grim struggle for survival in a world where prices have risen tenfold and twentyfold and more, but salaries and pensions have only doubled or tripled at best.

In a poor Baghdad suburb, the director of the Ibn al-Ballady Children's Hospital spoke of the hardship borne by families of patients.

"The mother ran away last night with her child even though it is still sick," said the director, Nazar Ahmed el-Anbanki. "People don't want to be hospitalized because they can't afford not to be earning money these days."

In meetings with foreigners these days, government spokesmen no longer speak of the embargo as a hurdle they have overcome. On the contrary, they emphasize Iraq's lack of foreign currency to buy food and medicine, and the hardship this inflicts on ordinary people.

Above all they are calling for sanctions to be relaxed.

"It's immoral," said the deputy health minister, Chawky Sabri Morcos. "You are forcing our doctors to practice unethical triage, only treating the worst cases and reducing drug dosages."

■ News Analysis

He complained that Iraq had been able to import only $150 million in medical supplies since the embargo began, compared with previous imports of $500 million a year.

"We have $4.5 billion of food contracts signed but no money to pay for them because our overseas assets are still frozen," said the trade minister, Mohamed Mahdi al-Salih. "That's why the subsidized rations we give everyone are not sufficient for the whole month."

Industry Minister Amir Hammuda al-Sadi said that about 90 percent of the industrial capacity damaged in the gulf war in early 1991 had been repaired. But the shortage of imported raw materials, and the inability to export, means thatmost factories work at only 10 percent to 50 percent of capacity, he added.

Some people still live well, of course. On the president's birthday, Iraq television showed Saddam receiving an enormous cake and then taking a ride in a golden carriage presented by his staff. Marble villas are being built in the smart Mansur district, where a minor boom is under way.

Last summer, when Saddam executed 43 merchants in a vain attempt to halt the rampant inflation, ministers and officials stressed the country's remarkable success in rebuilding roads and bridges and electrical and telephone systems that had been almost totally destroyed by allied bombs during the war.

Visiting journalists were told that Iraq could defy its enemies because it was on the road to self-sufficiency. The official slogan was that the reconstruction proved that Iraq had defeated the embargo.

Such brave talk is heard far less today, though with typical bravura Saddam is building a new palace for himself on the Tigris.

Recent vote plunges Japan into wilderness of political uncertainty

TOKYO (AP) — A Cabinet minister quit in protest Tuesday as Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa lingered another day in office and his sharply divided party searched for a successor.

The inability of party leaders to force Miyazawa out underlined the disarray gripping the long-governing Liberal Democrats, who have lost their majority in the law-making lower house of parliament because of public disgust over the failure to deal with political corruption.

"I have no intention of just hanging onto my position," Miyazawa told party leaders. "I am doing this job at the party's behest. It will determine my fate."

Pressure on Miyazawa to take responsibility for the party's loss of its 38-year majority in Sunday's parliamentary elections came to a head at a Cabinet meeting.

Posts and Telecommunications Minister Junichiro Koizumi, refusing to back away from his demand that Miyazawa step down, quit himself. Similar calls have come from other party leaders but are rare from a Cabinet member.

Miyazawa, considered a lame duck since losing a no-confidence vote in June, surprised party members Monday when he refused to resign, saying he would make his own decision after considering party views.

Party insiders said they expected Miyazawa, 73, to announce his resignation during a meeting of LDP lawmakers Thursday.

While the remains of Miyazawa's power base were rapidly crumbling, the party faced the difficult question of choosing a successor. Potential candidates faced objections either from reformers within the party, or from the old-style power brokers who have been blocking anti-corruption reforms for years.

A group of younger party members denounced the customary method of choosing a new party leader in backroom deals among power brokers, saying a secret ballot among all party members would be "the first step toward democratization of the party."

Gays still will be discouraged, Aspin says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Les Aspin predicted under close Senate questioning Tuesday that President Clinton's new policy on homosexuals in the military would still discourage gays from signing up. "They would be much more comfortable pursuing another profession," he said.

In three hours of questioning by skeptical senators, Aspin was pressed repeatedly to explain what they saw as inconsistencies in the policy, and members of the Senate Armed Services Committee wondered aloud about its impact.

"This has to be pinned down," an exasperated Sen. Sam Nunn said after Aspin offered a lengthy response to the question of whether the military could investigate a soldier who merely told another he was gay.

'They (gays) would be much more comfortable pursuing another profession (other than military).'

— Defense Secretary Les Aspin

"We can't have a commander out there saying, 'What do I do?' and somebody says, 'Call the attorney general,'" said Nunn, the committee's chairman.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said the policy makes an unrealistic request that homosexuals remain celibate for their entire military careers. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., called the rules "fodder for legal challenges."

Tuesday's hearing was designed to launch a congressional review of Clinton's policy, which he outlined Monday after six months of negotiations designed to take into account the objections of critics in Congress and the Pentagon.

Clinton, in an interview with journalists from Wisconsin, said homosexuals in the military "are much better off today because we took an honorable compromise."

The president heatedly denied that the new policy betrayed political weakness. "It may be a sign of madness, sir, but it is not a sign of weakness," he snapped.

Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told the committee that he was "in full support of the president's policy" and that it would allow the military to carry out its mission.

"I believe this is the right answer," said Powell, who described the policy as removing "an element of uncertainty" that has existed for the armed services.

But Aspin acknowledged it would continue to discourage homosexuals from joining.

Prosecutors toss legal lasso at Rostenkowski

WASHINGTON (NYT) — As Capitol Hill buzzed about the news that one of its most powerful members had been accused of embezzlement, federal officials said Tuesday that prosecutors were trying to broaden the case against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

Officials and defense lawyers involved in the long-running investigation of Rostenkowski said prosecutors had been gathering evidence against him about a series of transactions in Chicago in an effort to link separate accusations of wrongdoing into a single, more serious case.

In doing so, the prosecutors would be following a tactic recently employed against other, less influential members of Congress — bringing charges under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. The law, which provides especially severe penalties and gives prosecutors more time to act, was intended to create a new weapon against organized crime. It has been applied in other areas as well, a practice that has drawn criticism from defense lawyers.

Rostenkowski returned to Washington on Tuesday from Chicago to begin delicate negotiations to move President Clinton's economic program through Congress and tried to act as if nothing had happened.

He refused to answer questions posed by reporters in the hallways of Congress and after emerging from a lunch at the White House with President Clinton and Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the head of the Senate Finance Committee.

Clinton, too, seemed bent on making the best of the situation. He allowed himself to be photographed with Rostenkowski during the lunch and insisted in response to a question that the congressman's legal problems would have no effect on the budget deliberations.

"We've got a lot of work to do," he said in the White House family dining room during the photo session with Moynihan and Rostenkowski.

Chinese missile deal upsets Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States threatened on Tuesday to impose economic sanctions on China if it ships missiles to Pakistan in defiance of an international agreement.

A U.S. delegation headed by Under Secretary of State Lynne Davis will tell Chinese officials in Beijing the consequences could be severe "and that includes sanctions," said Michael McCurry, the State Department spokesman.

Other officials said there was strong evidence China was shipping missiles to Pakistan that technically were not covered by the Missile Technology Control Regime.

The agreement, which China did not sign but agreed to honor, bans shipment of missiles with a range above 300 kilometers, or 186 miles, and a payload of more than 500 kilograms, or 1,100 pounds.

The officials said the issue is whether the missiles could be altered once in Pakistan's hands to be within the boundaries of the agreement.

By way of example, the Scud-B missiles Iraq fired at Israel and Saudi Arabia in the Persian Gulf war initially had a range of 290 kilometers, or 180 miles, but Iraq altered the payload to make the missile capable of flying farther.

"It's a gray area," said one of the officials who spoke on condition of anonymity. "If we knew everything we need to know we would have made a determination."

McCurry said Davis would ask Chinese officials about the capability of the missiles sent to Pakistan. Secretary of State Warren Christopher also intends to raise the issue at a meeting with Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen in Singapore next week.

Sessions' standard is not high enough

While we do not greet with pleasure the firing of FBI Director William Sessions, a former San Antonio district judge who has friendly relationships with some Midland residents, it was an action that President Clinton had to take.

Given the opportunity to resign after receiving many warnings that the White House no longer felt he could lead the country's most important law enforcement agency, Sessions displayed a streak of stubbornness and publicly refused, saying Clinton would have to personally fire him.

The gauntlet thus thrown down, the president had no choice but to follow through and terminate the director personally although it was well known he would have preferred Sessions to act on Attorney General Janet Reno's earlier request that he step down.

One can talk all day about "foes within the agency" but, true or not, the point is that a Justice Department probe apparently left no doubt but that Sessions had taken advantage of his position for personal gain.

Some of the accusations were relatively minor but they were actions that would have caused the firing of any other FBI officer or official. So the deed had to be done and William Sessions learned a lesson, no doubt at tremendous cost to his reputation.

It is unfortunate. He was personable in one-on-one contacts and brought improvements to the FBI, while in other areas building on those made by immediate predecessors.

But the FBI must operate on the highest of standards. As for the man who heads it, he might not have to be as pure as Caesar's wife but he should, in matters of ethics at least, run her a close second.

America owes Mexico for Chinese refugee action

There can be little doubt that the U.S. government pressured Mexico to take responsibility for deporting more than 650 Chinese crowded onto three U.S.-bound freighters.

In doing so, Mexico probably saved this country a lot of time and trouble, plus millions of dollars in legal fees, housing costs and other expenses.

The United States, in effect, held Mexico's coat while it did our dirty work — work which was particularly unappealing, given the difficult history of U.S.-Mexico immigration problems.

For that, the United States owes Mexico a debt of gratitude and credit for helping out in a tough situation. . . .

Olympic Committee should reject China's 2000 offer

Communist China bids to host the Olympic Games in the year 2000. A resolution introduced in Congress opposes it — and rightfully so.

Yes, we know that, according to tradition, politics are not supposed to intrude on the games.

But it is mostly for political reasons that Beijing's ruling Marxists want China to get the Olympics: Its selection by the International Olympics Committee might tend to legitimize their regime in the eyes of the Chinese people.

The bloody record of China's old rulers in trampling on human rights cannot be ignored in the selection process. The massacre of young, democratic-minded dissidents in Tiananmen Square in 1989 is too recent for anyone to think that the Beijing regime has changed its ugly stripes.

The IOC is to make its site decision on Sept. 23. Our advice is: Just say no.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 21, the 202nd day of 1993. There are 163 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 21, 1961, Capt. Virgil "Gus" Grissom became the second American to rocket into a suborbital pattern around the Earth, flying aboard the "Liberty Bell Seven."

On this date:

In 1816, Paul Julius Reuter, founder of the British news agency bearing his name, was born in Hesse, Germany.

In 1831, Belgium became independent as Leopold I was proclaimed King of the Belgians.

In 1861, the first Battle of Bull Run was fought at Manassas, Va., resulting in a Confederate victory.

In 1899, author Ernest Hemingway was born in Oak Park, Ill.

In 1925, the so-called "Monkey Trial" ended in Dayton, Tenn., with John T. Scopes found guilty of violating state law for teaching Darwin's Theory of Evolution. (The conviction was later overturned.)

In 1944, American forces landed on Guam during World War II.

In 1944, the Democratic national convention in Chicago nominated Sen. Harry S. Truman to be vice president.

In 1949, the U.S. Senate ratified the North Atlantic Treaty by a vote of 82-to-13.

In 1954, France surrendered North Vietnam to the Communists.

In 1969, Apollo XI astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin blasted off from the moon after 21½ hours on the surface and returned to the command module.

In 1980, draft registration began in the United States for 19-and 20-year-old men.

Clinton's gay adventure turns sad

The Bill Clinton gays-in-the-military policy is a bad joke. Even the people who thought it up — assuming sustained thought came into the process — can't fully elaborate all the nuances of "Don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue."

Murchison

The Pentagon worked in tandem with a civilian team from the Rand Corp., a California think tank, to develop the plan. This alone showed how imprecise the objective was. The appointment of a task force nearly always constitutes an admission that you don't know what the blue blazes you're doing and that you sure would appreciate some guidance.

Things got even worse. At one point, according to The Wall Street Journal, "as many as 30 lawyers from the Pentagon and the Justice Department hashed over the issues in the same room." There's a thought to chill the blood — 30 lawyers in one work space. Yet the completed policy failed to please its theoretical constituency, the gay rights movement. Some gays gave the president credit for pushing the moral envelope, others felt traduced by a man whose promises they had trusted.

Meanwhile, to cut through some of the verbal fog enshrouding the new policy, Sen. Sam Nunn is introducing a bill that would let military authorities proceed against personnel whose "propensity to engage in homosexual acts" endangers "morale, good order and discipline." Never mind, Sam: The American Civil Liberties Union is challenging the whole policy in court as a violation of free speech.

I mean, did you ever see a bigger mess? How about a more useless, needless mess? Maybe that's the real censure — the uselessness of it all. Nor should we wonder where to lay that censure. Bill Clinton's doorstep will do fine.

Were the American people clamoring last year to open military service to avowed homosexuals? Not so's most of the electorate noticed. Along came President-elect Clinton — the candidate of "change," don't ask what kind — to tell us that, once in office, he was going to undertake precisely that job.

In response to this piece of presumption, a great chorus of popular and political opposition arose. The task force was assembled and put to work. There is no calculating how many man-hours since then have been squandered on this barren undertaking. Well, all right — it kept 30 lawyers off the streets for a while. Still, the question is, why should these disputes arise? Wasn't the U.S. military functioning fine as it was?

The gay rights movement's reply naturally was no. The military wasn't functioning justly. It was suppressing the vocational aspirations of gay people. These aspirations were to take precedence over the military needs of the United States as determined by professional military people whose experience with the effects of barracks homosexuality is slightly deeper than the commander in chief's.

Yet Bill Clinton ingested the gay rights movement's allegations as eagerly as he would a Big Mac. He thoughtlessly made political commitments he knew, or ought to have known, would be painfully, disruptively hard to fulfil.

It's sweet, it's New Age, and it bears only a marginal relationship to governing. The mess you get into when you want to help but really don't know how, or else don't think through all the consequences — no better illustration is in view than the mess Bill Clinton created by telling military leaders, in effect, how much more he knew about their business than they did.

William Murchison's column is distributed by Creators Syndicate.

Mandela loses dignity through politics

I liked Nelson Mandela a lot better the first time he came to Atlanta. He had just gotten out of a South African prison after 30 years. He was a martyr. A freedom fighter. He stood so tall. He personified dignity.

Grizzard

All those years as a political prisoner, but he stood up there, still with the strength and courage to say what he thought was the right and true thing to say.

He spoke to and mingled with the masses, and they turned out in masses to see him, hear him, touch him, and adore him.

Nelson Mandela came back to Atlanta last week. He arrived on a corporate jet that belongs to Coca-Cola. The company he used to criticize.

He stayed at the Ritz.

He wanted money.

Nelson Mandela is running for president of South Africa, in that nation's first free election which, of course, is a misnomer. There is nothing free about an election, which is why Nelson Mandela was looking for money.

It hurts me to say it. Nelson Mandela is now a politician.

He didn't deal with the masses this time. He schmoozed with the big boys, the mayor and the former mayor and the Rev. Joseph Lowery, professional black leader.

He went to fancy luncheons and asked for money. He even went to churches and asked for money.

This time, he didn't seem so tall, and there is nothing that will sap a man of his dignity like asking for money to put him into political office. Nelson Mandela, this time, was just another politician.

Maybe if it hadn't been for the corporate jet. Maybe if it hadn't been for the Ritz. Maybe if he'd flown in on Delta coach and got himself a nice room at a Holiday Inn somewhere, I would have felt differently.

And I supposed some of this is because of the actions of so many politicians in this country. I'm just naturally suspicious of anybody riding around in corporate jets, staying in fancy hotels, and asking for political handouts so he or she can help his or her oppressed constituents.

And why is it that somebody entering politics seems to take such a short time to learn how to summon such perks and work the fundraising trail?

It takes years to learn to become a doctor. You can't learn brick masonry overnight, either. And how many golf balls did Jack Nicklaus have to hit before he could win all those tournaments and all that money?

But somebody enters politics and he or she seems to know immediately how to wheel, deal, and find the best $250 haircut in Beverly Hills.

There was something else I didn't like about Nelson Mandela this time. I didn't like what he said about allowing the minority whites in South Africa, once they're out of power, to have their own territory.

I heard Nelson Mandela say on television they might also be allowed to be in control of their own school and transportation systems.

Whoop-de-doo.

Isn't this a lot like the old comment, "Why don't we just give 'em Utah and Wyoming, and forget about 'em."

I want to be fair here, however, so after what I've said about Nelson Mandela, allow me also to say I liked Ollie North a lot better, too, when he wasn't running for whatever he is running for or may run for in the future, and showing up on my television preaching from somebody's pulpit.

I wish Nelson Mandela the best. I really do. And there may even be an argument that because of what he had to endure and because of apartheid, he deserves a few perks — like a jet and the Ritz.

And he is not a young man.

Still, I had more respect for him before he became a politician, which reminds me of the time I asked a man who had decided to enter politics and risk everybody disliking him, why he would do such a thing.

"Hell," he said, "I was already a lawyer."

CHARLEY REESE

God bless farmers who endure ideology

Don't envy the farmer. He catches heck from all points of the compass even though in fact he is, by far, the most valuable member of the nation's private sector.

Reese

Most Americans today, like me, are trapped in the city where the jobs are. Our contact with the farmer is the supermarket. Everything in the supermarket is clean, air-conditioned, attractively packaged. Our main concern — because we can take freshness and purity pretty much for granted — is price.

Thus as American consumers we put pressure, indirectly, on farm prices. Keep 'em low. Some American consumers go even further and say they don't care where the produce comes from as long as it's fresh, tasty and cheap. Imports put further pressure on farm prices.

Then along come the urban environmentalists. They're likely to say farmers use too much fertilizer, too much water, too much pesticide. Cut it out.

Next down the aisle are the libertarians. Quit subsidizing those farmers, they say, as they fill their baskets with cheap food, let 'em sink or swim in the free market.

The banker and politician, who send their servants to the supermarket, are meanwhile cooking up a new trade deal. Country X owes me a lot of money, says the banker, and they can't pay unless they export something to the U.S. Why don't we let them export agricultural products so they can make some money and at least pay the interest on their loans. Good idea, says the pol, and you won't forget my next fundraiser, will you?

So more imports put more pressure on the farmer.

Meanwhile, back on the farm, there is a guy who has to plant his inventory. When he does, he doesn't know if it's going to rain too much or not rain enough; if the bugs will be bad and, if they are, what can he use to combat them. But if his crop does survive and he harvests it, he's stuck with a perishable inventory.

It's no accident that the dry-goods business has produced more millionaires than farming. If you don't sell a hammer or a dress or watch, it won't spoil. But the farmer has a very short window of opportunity in which to sell his crop before it becomes worthless. And nobody knows that any better than his customers — produce and food buyers.

Let's say our sample farm family has survived the droughts, floods, and bugs; the pressure to keep farm prices down; environmental restrictions; rising costs, and competition from imports.

By this time, their children who are grown and have no desire to be farmers have left the nest for the city. The old couple never could save much, but don't worry, they have their land. That's their retirement investment and that's their legacy to their children. Too old to farm, they can at least sell part of the land and live on what they earn from the sale.

But back at the meat counter in the supermarket are your local urban developer and his local political pal. Say, says the developer, the residential and commercial markets are thin now. Why don't you zone all that farm land out there permanently agricultural, at least until I've sold my stuff. I'd hate to see some rival developer pick it up and compete with me. Sounds like a great way to manage growth, says the local pol, and you won't forget my next fundraiser, will you?

So the bureaucrats tell the old couple, keep farming because we aren't going to let you sell your land. All of a sudden everybody who didn't much give a hoot about farms or farmers are now telling the farmer, worn out and ready to retire, he has to stay on his farm, like it or not.

It's too bad the real world isn't as simple as the ideologues of various persuasion would have us believe, but it's not; and there's too many people in this country dealing with theories instead of dealing with human beings and real situations.

House passes leaner spending legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House approved nearly $22 billion in 1994 spending for the Commerce, Justice and State departments Tuesday after making across-the-board cuts in almost all Clinton administration requests.

House Republicans used a procedural technique to wipe out some $860 million in spending, much of that for contributions to the United Nations and other international organizations.

Although the money is likely to be restored when the Senate takes up 1994 spending, the reductions were indicative of the intense budget-cutting mood in Congress.

By raising points of order that funds may not be appropriated for programs that have yet to be authorized, lawmakers also eliminated spending for the Board for International Broadcasting, the National Endowment for Democracy and radio broadcasts to Cuba. The vote to pass the bill was 327 to 98.

Even before the action on the floor Tuesday, the funding sought was $2 billion, or 8 percent, less than what the administration requested and down more than $600 million from 1993 spending levels.

Most domestic programs were funded at 95 percent of current levels, with only a few high-priority budgets — such as for drug and crime programs, telecommunication programs and Small Business Administration loan guarantees — escaping such cuts.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service was one of the few agencies to get an increase, with its $999 million budget, up $34 million from 1993, boosted by an amendment giving INS another $60 million for border patrol activities.

Specifically, the bill appropriates $3.3 billion for Commerce, $3 billion for State, $9.4 billion for Justice, $2.8 billion for the federal judiciary and $1 billion for the U.S. Information Agency, with the remainder going to the SBA, the Maritime Administration and other agencies.

The House also:

—Defeated an amendment that would have restored all $22 million eliminated earlier from the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration.

—The House rejected an amendment by Rep. Joel Hefley, R-Colo., to eliminate $26 million for salaries and expenses of the Economic Development Administration. In previous debate, House members used the point of order technicality to strip the EDA, created in 1965 to financially assist impoverished areas, of all $223 million requested this year for grants and contracts.

Clinton now shifts priority to economic plan

WASHINGTON — President Clinton abruptly shifted his attention Tuesday from controversies swirling around the FBI and gays in the military to focus "like a laser beam" on the economic issues that helped him win the presidency.

Clinton marked the six-month anniversary of his inauguration by escalating his personal lobbying of Congress on behalf of his embattled budget package — a $500 billion deficit-reduction blueprint that remains the centerpiece of his young term.

"Everybody is grateful that we've been able to clear the decks in order to focus like a laser beam on the economy and on the (congressional) conference process," observed White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers.

Clinton, who took 12 weeks to nominate federal judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court, took barely 17 hours to name U.S. District Court Judge Louis Freeh, 43, to head the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Clinton fired FBI director William Sessions on Monday after the former San Antonio judge refused to resign amid allegations of ethical misconduct.

In a similar bid to focus on the economy, Clinton ducked an impending confrontation with Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., over efforts to codify into law a Pentagon personnel policy to allow homosexuals to serve legally in the armed forces.

"Congress is going to take action on this," Myers explained. "The president accepts that."

Instead, Clinton embarked on round-robin lobbying of key lawmakers in an effort to shape the outcome of a difficult House-Senate conference on the administration's politically fragile budget proposal.

Clinton and Vice President Al Gore traveled to Capitol Hill, where they urged wavering Democrats to stand behind his budget plan. "We have come this far," Clinton told Democrats on the House-Senate conference panel. "This is no time to turn back."

Clinton reiterated White House goals in the tense negotiations, including $500 billion in deficit reduction over five years; higher taxes on the wealthy; limited tax increases of "about $50" for the average working family; and new federal spending to create jobs.

Seeking to shore up political support for his economic package, Clinton planned meetings later this week with congressional caucuses representing women, Hispanic, black and conservative lawmakers, as well as freshman House Democrats.

Clinton will be "out there aggressively" lobbying members of Congress and appealing to the American people to win passage of his deficit-cutting package, Myers said.

Constitution will be my guide, Ginsburg says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The lawmakers who will judge her nomination greeted Supreme Court nominee Ruth Bader Ginsburg warmly Tuesday as the former women's rights campaigner pledged "not to read her convictions into the Constitution."

"My approach ... is rooted in the place of the judiciary, of judges, in our democratic society ... third in line" behind the people and their elected representatives, she told the Senate Judiciary Committee at her confirmation hearing.

Citing the words of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, she said: "One of the most sacred duties of a judge is not to read her convictions into the Constitution. I have tried, and I will continue to try, to follow that model."

'One of the most sacred duties of a judge is not to read her convictions into the Constitution.'

— Judge Ruth Ginsburg, Supreme Court nominee

President Clinton's nominee, the first by a Democratic president since Lyndon Johnson, was welcomed warmly by members of both parties. No significant opposition has emerged, and the relaxed atmosphere of Tuesday's hearing contrasted starkly with recent experience.

Only Sen. Arlen Specter, recently returned from brain surgery, had any tinge of harshness in his words.

"I admire the positions you've taken, what you've achieved as a litigant and what you've done as a jurist," he said. "But ... when you're on the Supreme Court ... you'll have a free hand in doing a great deal more. ... So that I think these hearings are very important."

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said he hoped she took advantage of her new powers.

"I want to know whether Judge Ginsburg will embrace this opportunity to shape the law to make the enduring principles of the Constitution a reality for all Americans," he said.

She said of the Constitution's framers, "Their large view was expansive. Their immediate view was tied to the circumstances."

Grisly murder even shocks police; three teens charged

ATLANTA (AP) — Even the police were shocked: A disabled man was stabbed and beaten, with salt poured into his wounds, apparently to prolong his suffering.

Three teen-agers — one of whom knew the man's daughter — have been charged.

"I'm sure it was a slow, very painful death for this man," Dewey Brown of the DeKalb County medical examiner's office said Tuesday.

Charles Conrad, 55, who used a wheelchair because of advanced multiple sclerosis, was killed in his condominium in an affluent north Atlanta neighborhood sometime last weekend. Police, alerted when his former wife couldn't reach Conrad, found his body Sunday night.

He was stabbed repeatedly in the back and neck with knives and beaten with objects ranging from a vase to the brass knickknacks that adorned his home.

Brown said he couldn't be sure whether Conrad was still alive to feel the salt from his own kitchen being poured into his wounds.

"There's salt all over him," he said. "It wasn't from a salt shaker. It's definitely deliberate."

"It's exceptionally violent," said police Capt. Rodney Maddox.

Charged with murder and armed robbery were Mark Edward Jackson, 17, and two juveniles, 14 and 15, whose names were withheld. All are from suburban Clarkston.

Someone intentionally poured salt into disabled man's fatal wounds, police say.

Conrad, a retired sales manager for WGNX-TV, apparently let the three into his home because he recognized Jackson as a friend of his 14-year-old daughter, Maddox said.

Conrad's daughter and teen-age son were at their mother's home when he was killed.

The motive appeared to be robbery — Conrad's new, wheelchair-equipped van and other items were stolen. Police said they didn't know of any friction between Conrad and Jackson.

"It doesn't look like they went there with the intent of committing a murder," said police spokesman Chuck Johnson. "Our big question is: Why was it so violent? We just don't know."

District Attorney J. Tom Morgan said he would decide by Thursday, when the charges go to a grand jury, whether to prosecute the juveniles as adults.

Conrad's robbers, in turn, apparently were robbed by another group of teen-agers when they tried to fence the van and other goods, Johnson said.

Downriver, some worry about flood that will not come

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — It's hard to convince some people that flood waters surging through the Midwest are not a threat farther down the Mississippi River.

People who lost homes and belongings to Hurricane Betsy see news reports about floods in Iowa and Missouri and call the Orleans Parish Levee Board, worried they face similar devastation when the gathering waters reach Louisiana.

"You bet they want to be reassured that they are not going to have to live through that again," said Bill Allerton, levee board spokesman.

Officials say it over and over, but it doesn't seem to sink in: The lower Mississippi is a whole different river, much wider and deeper, than what lies swollen and bloated to the north.

The levee board and the Army Corps of Engineers have taken hundreds of calls over the last two weeks, so the agencies held a news conference Monday to reassure everyone.

Sinking river folks dry soggy hearts with homespun humor

By Christopher Sullivan
Associated Press writer

STE. GENEVIEVE, Mo. — "Good news!" the tired National Guardsman exulted. "We've been waiting for that WATER to disappear. And look!"

Was this guy kidding? The neighborhood street he gestured across was swamped with brown water.

A closer look revealed a smirk on his face and an up-to-its-chin street sign: "IMPASSABLE IN HIGH," it read — indeed, the "WATER" had disappeared, underwater.

OK, it's not Letterman, but it's something to laugh at. All across the Midwest flood zone — from Missouri (now the "Row-Me State") to Des Moines, Iowa (Zip Code 50H2O) — folks say their endless jokes in the face of disaster help keep back tears.

"What else can you do but laugh?" said Mark Shaughnessy, manning a pump at a flooded church in Ste. Genevieve. "It's going to be a long time cleaning up."

Nearby, a hand-lettered sign left on a closed shop's door smarted off to the Mississippi: "Go South Ole Man," it said. "You Have Made Your Point."

That's the right attitude, experts say.

Examples of folks who lost home and hearth but kept their sense of humor are everywhere along the unsmiling river.

Instead of worrying over a family dog that paddled around in a flood-caused crude-oil spill in Niota, Ill., Mary Rea said, "We nicknamed him Slick."

Missouri has turned into 'Row-me state;' Des Moines' zip code changes to '50H20.'

Washed-out farmer Bob Johnson of Eddyville, Iowa, joked, "We're going to start selling corn by the gallon . . ."

And John Muehring Jr. couldn't help exaggerating when asked about a universal fear as water spreads: Seen any snakes?

"We found a dead rattle-headed copper moccasin," he said with a straight face as weary co-workers, sandbagging their plant in Hannibal, Mo., doubled over with laughter. "Wasn't much left of him. He'd just been attacked by a saber-toothed grizzly pig."

In rain-weary Fairmont, Minn., folks slopped around in a "Mud Olympics," staged by radio station KFMC-FM.

"We gave people a chance to come and get wet and muddy and say, 'We can't do anything about our fields. Let's play,'" said announcer Al Travis, who came up with the idea as a way to relieve pressure.

A different kind of exertion was the order of the day at The Theatrical Shop in West Des Moines, which sells costumes, clown noses and the like, and where only one phone remained working in the multi-level store.

"Everybody runs to get it," manager Kathy Harkrader said. "Everyone here's on a new exercise program. It's called flood aerobics."

The Des Moines Register ran an "I'm a Floody Mess" contest, trying to keep the city's spirits up after the water system failed.

Subscribers completing joke sentences ("I smell so bad . . ." "My clothes are so dirty . . .") would win prizes — or as a headline put it: "Attention unwashed Iowans: Convert your body odor into cash!" Hundreds of replies came in.

"I smell so bad," wrote reader Pat Jarvinen, "that my Sure deodorant is undecided."

Jim Frye replied in doggerel:

"My clothes are so dirty, I look like mud,

"But don't blame me, try the flood.

"They say my smell is truly notable,

"But so's my diction when I say potable."

Jury deliberates

SAN ANTONIO — Impassioned arguments about patriotism and corruption stirred a federal courtroom Tuesday as the influence-peddling case against former congressman Albert Bustamante headed to a jury. "This case is about something that is wrong, something that is sick," prosecutor Jackie Bennett said in closing statements to the jury. "It's about political corruption." Defense lawyers countered with their claim that Bustamante and his attorney wife, Rebecca, are the victims of Washington prosecutors who have tried to twist Texas-style business deals into something illegal.
A six-man, six-woman jury in the two-week-old trial deliberated for two hours Tuesday afternoon before U.S. District Judge Ed Prado dismissed the jurors for the day and instructed them to return Wednesday morning./3B

Testimony begins in 1990 plane crash case

■ Pilot's executor, daughters sue government, Aero Mod Services, Inc. and Klamath Aircraft, Inc. for personal injuries due to negligence.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Testimony began Tuesday in the trial in which the survivors of a pilot who died in a plane crash in 1990 are suing the U.S. government for $5 million, claiming it had not properly maintained the airplane.

James C. Steding, 51, of Odessa died in a March 29, 1990, plane crash near Notrees after colliding with a 400-foot tall radio transmission antenna. He was en route to Midland from Klamath, Ore. He had been contracted by Aero Mod Services to transport the Cessna aircraft to Midland.

The plane had been seized by the U.S. government from Klamath Aircraft, Inc. on Oct. 1, 1987, and a contract was entered with needed Aero Mod Services to store and maintain the plane.

The lawsuit was filed by Ronald Goodwin, the executor of Steding's estate, and by the two daughters of Steding, Kimberly Sue Steding and Kayleen Annette Steding. The defendants in the lawsuit are the U.S. government, Aero Mod Services, Inc. and Klamath Aircraft, Inc.

The suit was filed under the federal tort claims act and is for personal injuries resulting in the death of Steding due to the negligence of the defendants.

The previous operator of the airplane, Benjamin Smith, notified the government that the plane was dangerous to fly and indicated it had previously malfunctioned in flight just a week before the government seized it, according to the suit.

The survivors indicate the U.S. government was negligent because it disregarded Smith's warning, no annual inspection had been conducted since 1987 and it was not made airworthy before the flight.

The lawsuit alleges that Aero Mod and Klamath were negligent because they had not performed an annual inspection, had not warned the pilot of the problems and because the plane was not airworthy.

The lawsuit said the death was a "direct" result of the negligence.

The trial is expected to last through Friday.

Local agencies need to get involved in societal issues, according to Karen Campbell, Midland metropolitan child-care coordinator for the YMCA.

"More and more outreach programs need to focus on these issues, including the risk of children being out on the streets exposed to threats and temptations," Ms. Campbell said.

To offer a solution to protect young children and adolescents after school until 6 p.m., the YMCA will be expanding its on-campus afterschool program.

In partnership with Midland Independent School District, the YMCA will offer "Prime Time" for children in kindergarten through third grade. For the first time, a program will also be offered for older children, the "4,5,6 Prime Time Connection," for students in grades 4, 5 and 6.

"We started a program for the older children at Bowie toward the end of last year," Ms. Campbell said. "They were unhappy doing some of the things the younger children enjoyed."

Once segregated from the younger children, she said the older pupils "responded immediately."

"It was like a club. Their activities weren't as structured," Ms. Campbell said. "They began their own newspaper, interviewing teachers, parents and younger children."

She said the older pupils preferred to listen to their own type of music and work on more spontaneous and long-term projects.

Students in the afterschool programs also get a daily snack, do homework and tutorials are provided.

The programs were implemented as a result of a Midland Introspective Task Force needs survey that indicated parents were concerned about children home alone after school.

'It ("4,5,6" program) was like a club. Their (older children's) activities weren't as structured. They began their own newspaper, interviewing teachers, parents and younger children.'

Ms. Campbell, the mother of a teenager and two young adults, said her offspring are "very forthcoming with what goes on in Midland."

She noted that reports at the recent governor's juvenile justice advisory board hearing indicated "early education and intervention" is a significant response to thwarting juvenile crime.

Activities that may be offered to the "4,5,6" group might include sculpting a paper mache dinosaur park, staging plays or talent shows, community service or recycling projects.

The YMCA prime time programs will be offered at costs considerably lower than day care. The 4,5,6 program will cost $17.50 per week, while the K-3 program will be offered at $25 per week. Financial aid is also available for the United Way-supported program.

The programs will start the first day of school, Aug. 30. They are being offered at eight, instead of just three sites this year. The following campuses will have the afterschool program: Bonham, Bowie, Burnet, DeZavala, Houston, Lamar, Milam and Washington elementary schools.

"We eventually hope to offer the pro-

4 men introduce themselves to 1000s of women everyday

HOUSTON (AP) — Four Houston men have tried bars and churches in their hunt for wives. Now they're serious.

The four have plopped down $2,500 to plaster their plea on a 48-foot billboard along one of the city's busiest freeways: "4 Middle Class White Males, 32-39, Seek Wives, Kids OK."

A Houston post office box number is provided for commuting women to communicate their interest.

"This is really not a joke," said 39-year-old Bill, one of the four single men. They asked that their last names not be used. "We really are serious. It would be an expensive joke if it was."

Bill and the others — John, 32; Mike, 35; and Ed, 36 — have rented the billboard along the Southwest Freeway just outside downtown Houston for a month.

Bill, a divorcee who was married 10 years, said he came up with the idea a year ago, and the four recently gave up on conventional ways of meeting women.

Cult children's screams still haunt welfare worker at night

By Harriette Graves
N.Y. Times News Service

BROWNWOOD — The small car seats continue to haunt Jeanne Byrd, 46, a Child Protective Services specialist with the Texas Department of Human Services in Waco.

She had spent the morning of April 19 gathering the car seats to receive the children among the 86 people that Branch Davidian cult leader David Koresh was expected to surrender to the FBI that day.

Those seats were never used, as the federal government's siege of the religious cult's Mount Carmel compound east of Waco took a tragic turn.

As an Army vehicle punched holes in a building and pumped in tear gas, flames suddenly spewed from a window. Within minutes the wooden compound was a roaring tower of fire, whipped by 25 mph winds.

Koresh and his followers — including as many as 17 children — died, either from gunshots or from the flames. A few miles away, Byrd and her fellow workers watched the end on the 3-inch screen of a portable TV set.

"That was big enough for me," she said. "I had spent the morning gathering up car seats and preparing to receive the remaining children. But of course they never came. That's the part that haunts us."

The flames ended a 51-day standoff that began Feb. 28 when the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms attempted to serve warrants on Koresh, who was suspected of having illegal weapons.

Byrd recalled her yearlong involvement with Koresh and the cult's children during a recent visit to her native Brownwood, southwest of Fort Worth in north central Texas.

She said the views of the flaming compound and the imagined screams of the victims haunt her nightly in flashbacks. She has written a poem, "Screams in the Night," in an attempt to come to terms with the incident.

One section reads:

"My goal, my aim: children to save,

Instead, I watched them go to an early grave."

Byrd says she is angry because federal agents would not heed warnings from her and her supervisor, Joyce Sparks, that Koresh and his group were prepared to shoot it out with law officers — warnings that came before the Feb. 28 raid that left four agents and six Davidians dead.

"An ATF agent asked us what would happen if they served a warrant at the compound," she said.

"We told the agents that David Koresh and cult members would get their guns and shoot them.

"I guess they thought we were just little ol' lady social workers and didn't take us seriously," she said.

Jack Killorn, an ATF spokesman in Washington, said that they got Byrd and Sparks' message.

"We were warned by all kinds of folks that we would face gunfire," Killorn said. "We did what we had to do."

On the day of the raid, Byrd and Sparks accompanied the agents to take charge of the religious sect's children, ranging in age from infants to 17- and 18-year-olds.

"We were about 300 yards from the gunfire," she recalled.

Over the next five days, the cult released 21 children ages 7 months to 12 years old to Byrd and Sparks. They were taken to a Methodist children's home and ultimately turned over to family members.

"On the surface, they appeared to be just like any other children," Byrd said. "But then you realized there was something missing — the spontaneous laughter and play of children."

She said the children calmly talked of bullets coming through the walls of the compound during the assault.

"They spoke of being taken to Koresh to say goodbye and seeing his bloody bullet wounds," Byrd said.

gram on all (elementary school) campuses," Ms. Campbell said.

"A lot of parents felt once that children in fourth, fifth and sixth grades could take care of themselves at home," she said. "In the light of increased risk of being home from 3-6 p.m. unsupervised an afterschool program is important. And providing the child care at the school even reduces the risk of being out on the streets walking home from school in the afternoon."

Officials to step up lobbying for bullet train

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas High-Speed Rail Authority wants to expand lobbying efforts in Washington to seek federal money to help build a $6.8 billion bullet train across Texas.

Officials of the agency, which oversees the train, say they will focus not on the project itself but on the state.

"The authority raised the question not whether the federal government should be spending money on high-speed rail, but instead whether Texas should get its fair share if the federal government is spending money on high-speed rail," says Marc Burns, authority executive director.

President Clinton has proposed that as much as $1.3 billion in federal matching grants should be distributed during the next five years to states and local governments that are spending money on the development of high-speed rail projects.

But Texas is left out of the plan because of a 1989 law that prohibits spending state tax revenues on high-speed rail construction and operations.

The proposed Texas TGV project, which grew out of a franchise agreement, is funded privately. It calls for linking Houston, San Antonio, Austin and the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex with commuter trains traveling over 600 miles of track at 200 mph.

Clinton's plan, which still must overcome several obstacles in Congress, would not provide federal matching funds for projects financed by the private sector.

Texas TGV, the franchise hoping to build the 200 mph rail line, already has several people lobbying in Washington. The company is seeking to alter federal legislation that would all but preclude Texas from obtaining federal money for the project.

"The reality is we are trying to get this project to the stage where we can attract investors," said Larry Salci, Texas TGV vice chairman. "The federal government can help us defray the costs to get to that stage."

SINGLE: Four men advertise for wives on freeway billboard

(From 1B)

"The bar scene got very old," Bill said. "And at the church there's nothing but old ladies."

The four drew straws to see who would get to answer the first 15 responses, the next 15 and so forth.

There should be plenty to go around. The Texas Highway Department estimates 192,000 vehicles per day pass the area.

"There is no guarantee that it will work, but if you play the game like everyone else does, and it's not working, you've got to do something different," Bill said.

"It is not an act of desperation, it is just an act of realizing that what isn't working is going to continue not to work. "This allows us to step into 200,000 people's living rooms."

The men hope word of mouth will increase their chances even more, Bill added.

David May of Sign Ad, the company that leased the billboard, said the approach is a first.

"People call, and when they find out the price, their interest isn't as great," May said.

Jury deliberates Bustamantes' fate

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Impassioned arguments about patriotism and corruption stirred a federal courtroom Tuesday as the influence-peddling case against former congressman Albert Bustamante headed to a jury.

"This case is about something that is wrong, something that is sick," prosecutor Jackie Bennett said in closing statements to the jury. "It's about political corruption."

Defense lawyers countered with their claim that Bustamante and his attorney wife, Rebecca, are the victims of Washington prosecutors who have tried to twist Texas-style business deals into something illegal.

"What these boys wanted was a scalp. Oh how they love to go back to Washington and brag," said defense lawyer Tony Canales, a former federal prosecutor. "They came down here to convict one of our own."

A six-man, six-woman jury in the two-week-old trial deliberated for two hours Tuesday afternoon before U.S. District Judge Ed Prado dismissed the jurors for the day and instructed them to return Wednesday morning.

Before leaving, the jury had requested that a large chart showing the individual charges against Bustamante be sent to the jury room. Prado refused the request, saying the chart was not a piece of evidence.

Bustamante, a Democrat who lost his re-election bid last year after eight years in Congress, is charged with racketeering and bribery in a 10-count indictment alleging he received $344,000 in illegal schemes. Mrs. Bustamante is charged in seven counts with aiding and abetting.

Prosecutor Mike Attanasio recounted evidence he claimed showed Bustamante was "a congressman on retainer."

Bustamante is accused of:

—Accepting $35,000 in exchange for helping Falcon Food and Management Services Inc. try to renew an Air Force food services contract.

—Accepting $30,000 paid to his wife by a company run by the prominent Jaffe family of San Antonio.

—Accepting $279,509 paid to his wife from her law firm as a percentage of delinquent tax collection contracts from the South San Antonio School District and the city of San Antonio.

—Accepting a no-risk loan guarantee in an unsuccessful deal to buy a television station.

Responding to defense complaints about unindicted co-conspirators not being brought to testify with immunity, prosecutor Bennett said, "Their day in court is in the future."

Garcia; businessmen Morris Jaffe and M. Doug Jaffe Jr.; and attorney Oliver Heard, whose law firm landed the tax collection contracts, have been identified by prosecutors as unindicted co-conspirators.

Bennett picked up on Canales' defense theme that "not to be afraid of your own government is a blessed thing."

"It's a blessed thing when you can elect someone to Congress to represent your interests," Bennett said. "When we vote we only pick a name on the ballot. We don't have to vote and enclose a $35,000 check."

And Bennett criticized the defense team for casting the prosecutors as bullies from Washington, noting the government attorneys were from other parts of the country and currently work in Washington.

"I don't blame Mr. Canales for putting me on trial. He's putting anybody but his client and his (client's) wife on trial," Bennett said.

While he said Attanasio had been professional, Canales took aim at Bennett for the government's tactics.

"He was a much better lawyer than me because he had courage. He had courage to twist things around," Canales said.

"I'm at ease," was the refrain of Canales' argument. "I'm at ease because the truth has come out . . . I'm at ease because I'm proud to represent Albert Bustamante."

If convicted, Bustamante faces up to 56 years in prison, plus fines of up to $250,000 on each of the 10 counts. Mrs. Bustamante could get two years in prison and up to $250,000 in fines on each of the seven counts.

Insurance board adopts anti-discrimination policy

AUSTIN (AP) — State insurance officials Tuesday gave preliminary approval to an anti-discrimination rule after hearing a report that showed low-income and minority consumers pay higher rates for insurance even if they are a lower risk.

The State Board of Insurance voted 2-0 for the anti-discrimination measure, and scheduled an Aug. 30 final vote on the matter.

Under the rule, insurers would be prohibited from discrimination based on race, color, religion, national origin, geographic location, sex or disability. The rule would apply to an insurer's decision of whether to insure or continue to insure an applicant and at what rate.

"I believe Texans are entitled to fair treatment in insurance matters," Insurance Board member Allene Evans said.

Jerry Johns, an insurance industry spokesman, said the rule is unnecessary because it, in part, duplicates federal law. He also disputed the report's findings of inequities in insurance premiums between wealthy and minority and low-income customers.

According to preliminary findings of the report, low-income and minority policyholders pay higher rates for property and automobile insurance.

The study shows that policyholders with homes worth $50,000 or less pay on the average up to 10 percent more than the benchmark rate for property insurance. The Insurance Board sets the benchmark and the range that companies can charge above or below it.

Policyholders with homes worth between $50,000 to $150,000 usually pay below the benchmark, while those with homes worth $150,000 or more pay 15 percent below the benchmark, the study said.

"There is some evidence there of inequities," said Mark Crawshaw, a consultant hired by the Texas Department of Insurance.

Woman claims lottery jackpot

AUSTIN (AP) — A 40-year-old woman was presented Tuesday with the first installment of a $4.5 million lottery jackpot, becoming the fourth winner from Corpus Christi this month, the state comptroller said.

Gloria Flores, who matched all six numbers in Saturday's drawing, said she plans to open a second bakery with the money and continue working.

State Comptroller John Sharp presented Ms. Flores with a check for about $200,000, one of 20 annual payments.

"Something must be in the water in Corpus Christi," Sharp said. "In the last two weeks about $27 million have been won (there)."

Other winners from Corpus Christi in July were: Janie Elizalde, who shared a $50 million jackpot with two others; Gloria Soto, who won $1 million in the lottery's monthly grand prize drawing; and an unidentified winner who will share $10 million from the July 14 lotto drawing.

Ms. Flores said she allowed the lottery's "quick pick" computer to select her numbers. They were: 5, 9, 13, 32, 42, 45.

She said she used to spend $20 per drawing, or $40 each week, on lotto tickets.

"I've been doing it all along and I thought that I would win it one day because I had already won four numbers twice," Ms. Flores said.

Guest speaker will be David W. Wilson, who will speak on "Natural Gas Pricing Trends." He is currently the director of energy strategic and advisory services for Coopers & Lybrand in Houston. He directs a staff of petroleum engineers, natural gas specialists and financial analysts.

Prior to joining Coopers & Lybrand, he was president of Gas Acquisition Services Inc., a natural gas consulting firm. He has published numerous articles on natural gas, testified as an expert witness and appeared before the U.S. Congress and Senate on natural gas matters.

Reservations should be made by noon today by calling 683-5203. Guests are welcome, and there is a $15 charge per guest.

S.W. Air earnings

DALLAS — Southwest Airlines said Tuesday its second quarter earnings climbed 78 percent over the same period last year on heavy traffic and a slight rise in yield.

For the three months ended June 30, Southwest earned $41.9 million, or 29 cents per share, on revenues of $520.5 million. During the same period of 1992, Southwest earned $23.5 million, or 17 cents per share, on operating revenues of $416.8 million.

Before a July 15 three-for-two stock split, per-share earnings for the quarter were 44 cents, the carrier said.

Dallas-based Southwest said the revenue boost came from a 21 percent increase in passengers and a nearly 24 percent increase in revenue passenger miles, leading to a load factor of 69.7 percent — the highest second-quarter load factor for the carrier in 14 years.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — The stock market bounced back from some morning inflation jitters inspired by the Federal Reserve chairman and closed mixed Tuesday.

The Dow Jones industrial average of 30 stocks lost 24 points after Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan said the central bank stands ready to boost interest rates at any sign of higher inflation. The blue chip index rallied in the afternoon, however, thanks in part to strong drug, auto and airline stocks. It finished up 9.50 points at 3,544.78.

Broader indexes also rose, but declining issues still outnumbered advances by about 6 to 5 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 1,063 down, 879 up and 648 unchanged.

The NYSE's composite index rose 0.38 to 247.71. The Nasdaq composite index gained 6.07 to 701.90. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose 0.31 to 433.79.

Traders lose faith, oil prices fall

■ West Texas Intermediate for delivery next month settles at $17.09 per barrel.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Oil prices fell Tuesday as traders lost confidence from the day before that OPEC was ready to deal with any new supplies from Iraq.

A rally Monday sparked by news that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would hold an emergency meeting fell apart after the cartel's president said only members that have been ignoring quotas should cut production.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery next month settled at $17.09 per barrel, down 61 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange. It was the last day of trading for the August contract. The September contract, which will represent the near-month delivery price beginning Wednesday, fell 41 cents to settle at $17.84.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 50 cents to $15.50 per barrel.

"They could have kept their mouths shut and kept the market on edge," Roger Volz, technical analyst-trader at Pegasus Econometric Group, said of OPEC doubts about production cuts.

Many in the oil market have become concerned that a limited sale of $1.6 billion worth of Iraqi crude would mark the country's return to oversupplied oil markets. Iraq has been reportedly close to an agreement with the United Nations for the sale.

Oil prices have been at three-year lows recently in anticipation of an Iraqi sale. Prices fell as low as $15.30 per barrel in June of 1990 before the Gulf War.

OPEC president and Gabonese oil minister Jean Ping said Tuesday any reduced production should come from OPEC members that have been violating their quotas. Ping explicitly said Saudi Arabia shouldn't have to cut production.

After Iraq invaded Kuwait three years ago, Saudi Arabia increased production to make up for the lost crude. At 8 million barrels per day, Saudi Arabia now pumps more than twice as much oil as No. 2 OPEC producer Iran.

OPEC oil ministers are to meet July 28 in Vienna. Ping said the meeting would deal only with ways to keep members within third-quarter limits and not address fourth-quarter production ceilings.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in August settled at 51.79 cents a gallon, down 0.87 cent. Home heating oil for delivery next month settled at 49.74 cents a gallon, down 0.76 cent.

Natural gas prices were mixed, with contracts for delivery in August riseing 0.9 cent to settle at $2.033 per 1,000 cubic feet. More distant delivery months dropped.

In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude oil for delivery in September settled at $16.71 per barrel, down 34 cents, at the International Petroleum Exchange.

After the market closed on Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute said crude oil inventories rose twice as much last week as the highest public forecast.

He's hip, he's now

After standing stiff and formal for nearly eight decades, Mr. Peanut is finally becoming a '90s kind of a guy. The Planters' trademark will still have the top hat, monocle and cane. But the packaging for new nut products being introduced this year shows Mr. Peanut sporting cowboy boots, or kicking back on a beach wearing a lei.

Housing construction levels despite low mortgage rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction of new homes and apartments leveled off in June despite the lowest mortgage rates in two decades.

Analysts said construction, which had rebounded in April and May from a winter slump, was being hampered by continued weakness in the labor market and by uncertainties over federal tax and spending policies and the Clinton administration health care package.

But the Commerce Department said Tuesday that housing start activity was mixed, rising in the Northeast and West and falling in the South and the rain-soaked Midwest.

Overall, starts in June were unchanged from May's 1.25 million seasonally adjusted annual rate.

After reaching 1.29 million in December, starts fell to a 1.12 million rate by March, largely because of severe weather including a late-winter blizzard in much of the East and Southeast.

But they rebounded 7.3 percent in April and 4 percent in May — even more than the department's initial 2.4 percent estimate — before leveling off in June.

Although many analysts predict moderate growth during the second half of the year, they are revising downward their forecast for the year after what some described as a disappointing first six months.

"I'd be surprised if we can get to 1.3 million for the year," said economist David Lereah of the Mortgage Bankers Association, who earlier had forecast construction of 1.32 million units in 1993.

David Seiders of the National Association of Home Builders was even more pessimistic. He lowered his forecast to 1.26 million, from 1.29 million.

Still, that would be an improvement over 1992, when 1.20 million units were built. So far this year, however, housing starts are up just 1.1 percent over the first six months of 1992.

"It's disappointing in terms of where we expected this market to be," Seiders said. "With interest rates the lowest in two decades, we would expect something better than this."

According to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., fixed-rate, 30-year mortgages averaged 7.16 percent last week, the lowest since it began keeping records in April 1971.

"The housing markets need a lot more" than low interest rates, Lereah contended, noting low consumer confidence, weak job growth and uncertainty about the effects of economic and health care legislation.

That uncertainty and expectations of continued low rates and stable prices curbed any sense of urgency, Seiders added.

However, Seiders said a survey of home builders in early July indicated sentiment was "perking up," at least in the single-family sector, which had fallen 2.8 percent in June, to a 1.08 million rate.

Building permits, often a barometer of future activity, suggested improvement may not be immediate, however. They fell 1.3 percent, to a 1.11 million rate, after advancing 1.8 percent in May.

FCC gives cable subscribers price break

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission decided on Tuesday to give most cable television subscribers a price break by advancing the date of a scheduled fee reduction from Oct. 1 to Sept. 1.

The reductions will vary among the nation's 11,000 cable TV systems and could be as high as 10 percent, the agency's Scott Roberts said. There are roughly 55,000 subscribers in the United States.

Gene Kimmelman of the Consumer Federation of America, a public interest group, said consumers will save $100 million because of the early reduction.

Sears takes 1 big step toward repairing its Wall Street image

CHICAGO (NYT) — Sears, Roebuck & Co. took another big step toward repairing its tarnished image on Wall Street on Tuesday, reporting a sharp jump in second-quarter profits.

Sears said the earnings reflected a faster payback than projected on its overhaul of retailing operations, which has included the recruitment of outside senior managers, closing some stores, renovating others and shutting the legendary Sears catalogue. Additionally, Sears's Allstate insurance subsidiary performed better than had been expected.

"The economic environment hasn't improved all that much," said Edward A. Brennan, chairman and chief executive of Sears and one of the nation's most visible targets of restive shareholders before the company's drastic restructuring plan was announced last year. "We are generating a lot of the momentum internally."

The gains marked the second successive quarter that Sears had pleasantly surprised investors with the rapid progress it has made under Arthur C. Martinez, who was recruited last year from Saks Fifth Avenue to oversee the revamping of retailing operations.

"They are starting to catch fire," said Edward A. Weller, a retailing analyst for Robertson, Stephens & Co.

LEWELLEN CONTRUCTION has relocated to 3415 W. Wall St.

Owner Bill Lewellen said the move was made to give the business a larger showroom and to put the company's showroom and shop under one roof.

He wanted the larger facility, he said, because he is in the process of expanding the business to include all types of remodeling, both residential and commercial. This expanded service also has required additional employees and office space, he said.

The company has specialized in siding and windows since 1976 and has been in Midland since 1982.

Three chicken restaurant chains, each with locations in Midland, have announced new menu items in an attempt to capture larger shares of the growing market.

KFC has added the Colonel's Rotiesserie Gold roasted chicken in most of its 5,100 restaurants nationwide. This is a whole chicken, deep marinated and slow roasted in a rotisserie oven and available in quarters, halves and by the whole bird.

KFC also has expanded its menu to include Chicken Taquitos and BBQ Chicien Sandwiches and new side dishes that include garden rice, BBQ beans, macaroni and cheese, garden salad, potato wedges, green beans, pasta salad and cornbread muffins.

CHURCHS CHICKEN is bringing back chicken tender strips to all its markets nationwide. The chicken strips will come with a choice of barbecue or honey-mustard sauces. The strips will also come with a money-back guarantee if the customers don't enjoy the strips after a single bite.

CHICK-FIL-A is introducing the chargrilled chicken club sandwich, which comes with bacon, American cheese, lettuce, tomato and Dijon Honey Mustard sauce.

The Atlanta-based chain is also introducing a lower-priced $1.99 kid's meal consisting of four Chick-fil-A nuggets, small waffle potato fries, small soft drink and a toy. The chain has also reduced the price of its six-nugget kids' meals to $2.49.

Sleepy sued

HOUSTON — A man is seeking unspecified damages from Houston Rockets guard Eric "Sleepy" Floyd because of an altercation between the two in August 1990.

Galo Alberto Reyes says Floyd shoved him to the ground after he approached the basketball player and a woman in a restaurant parking lot.

As the case went to trial Monday before state District Judge Carolyn Garcia, Reyes claimed he and a friend saw Floyd argue with his then-fiance, Gracie, and try to force her into a car.

Reyes testified the woman told him she was fine, but he stayed to make sure nothing happened to her. He said Floyd then began yelling at him, shoved him to the ground and threatened him.

"Mr. Reyes had no intention of trying to pick a fight with Mr. Floyd," said Mark Weycer, an attorney for Reyes. "He just wanted to make sure that he knew that Mr. Reyes was observing this and he wasn't going to let him get away with this."

Floyd's attorney, Alfred H. Bennett, described a contrasting sequence of events in which Floyd was leery of the two men who appeared "out of nowhere, out of the darkness."

Bennett added that Floyd was concerned the men were trying to steal his wallet.

"Everyone has the right to protect his or her property," Bennett said. "He simply pushed the plaintiff away from the open car door. For the Floyds, that was the end of the incident. A simple push brings us all here today (Tuesday)."

SMU hires coach

DALLAS — Hank Haney, who lists Curtis Strange and Chip Beck among his former pupils, will be the new men's golf coach at Southern Methodist University, athletics director Forrest Gregg announced Tuesday.

"Many good people were interested in the position and we feel we chose the finest coach possible. Getting a teacher with the reputation and background should elevate our program quickly," Gregg said.

Haney replaces Barry Rodenhaver, whose contract wasn't renewed.

Haney has taught more than 100 touring professionals from the PGA, LPGA and other tours.

The new coach will continue to oversee the Hank Haney Golf Ranch, his golfing and teaching facility near Dallas.

A native of Lake Forest, Ill., and 1977 graduate of Tulsa University, Haney was team captain as a senior and all-conference as a junior for the Golden Hurricane.

Ryan's return sparks Rangers' hopes

■ Ryan's impressive return gives Rangers' sudden shot in the arm.

By Arnie Stapleton
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — Even Nolan Ryan was surprised by the results.

"I have to be encouraged," Ryan said of his successful return to the mound Monday night after a 72-day layoff. "Three weeks ago, I had my doubts about whether I would pitch again this year."

Baseball's all-time strikeout leader returned from rehabilitating his hip to baffling batters in the Texas Rangers' 5-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

He struck out six and walked one while giving up two earned runs and scattering three hits in 5 2-3 innings. A soldout crowd of 40,676 at Arlington Stadium gave him several standing ovations.

Ryan came out smoking, his fastball consistently zooming past home plate at 94 mph and his curveball spinning sharply through the strike zone. His fastest pitch was clocked at 96 mph.

His control was unbelievable for a 46-year-old power pitcher coming off his longest career stint on the disabled list, marveled Texas pitching coach Claude Osteen.

In Ryan's five previous stays on the DL while with the Rangers, he hadn't pitched more than five innings in his first start after being activated and was 1-4 with a 7.97 ERA and 6.2 walks per nine innings.

"He was outstanding tonight," Osteen said. "He gave us exactly what we wanted, and even went farther than we expected. What surprised me was how he turned the fastball on late."

Ryan, who will start again Sunday at home against Toronto, reported no physical problems after his 321st career victory and first start since May 7, when he strained a hip muscle in his first start back from arthroscopic knee surgery.

His comeback was further delayed when he sliced his foot on the blade of a water ski. The last of seven stitches was removed June 13.

It didn't take long for Ryan (2-2) to get back in the groove. Darryl Hamilton, the first batter of the game, went down swinging. Kevin Reimer, a for-

Landry accepts honor

■ Former coach to be eighth member inducted into Cowboys' Ring of Honor.

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press Writer

IRVING — Tom Landry accepted a spot in the Dallas Cowboys' Ring of Honor on Tuesday, an honor he had shunned since being fired as coach in 1989.

Landry

Landry, who guided the Cowboys to two Super Bowl championships in 29 years, left the franchise on bitter terms when Jerry Jones fired him only hours after buying the team.

But seated next to Jones at a Texas Stadium news conference, Landry insisted there was no rift. He said he delayed accepting the honor because of an incredibly busy schedule that had even kept him out of the stadium until Tuesday.

"I would've gone in way back when Jerry first asked us, after the first year, if I had felt that was the right time. But it wasn't the right time," said Landry, who's stayed busy with several business ventures, public speaking and working for various community and charity organizations.

"Now I agree with Jerry that today, for me personally, is the right time because now I feel my time can be spent a little differently in what I'm doing across the country."

He'll be back Nov. 7 when the Cowboys play the New York Giants, where Landry played and coached and now coached by Landry's former player and assistant Dan Reeves.

Jones said the ceremony hasn't yet

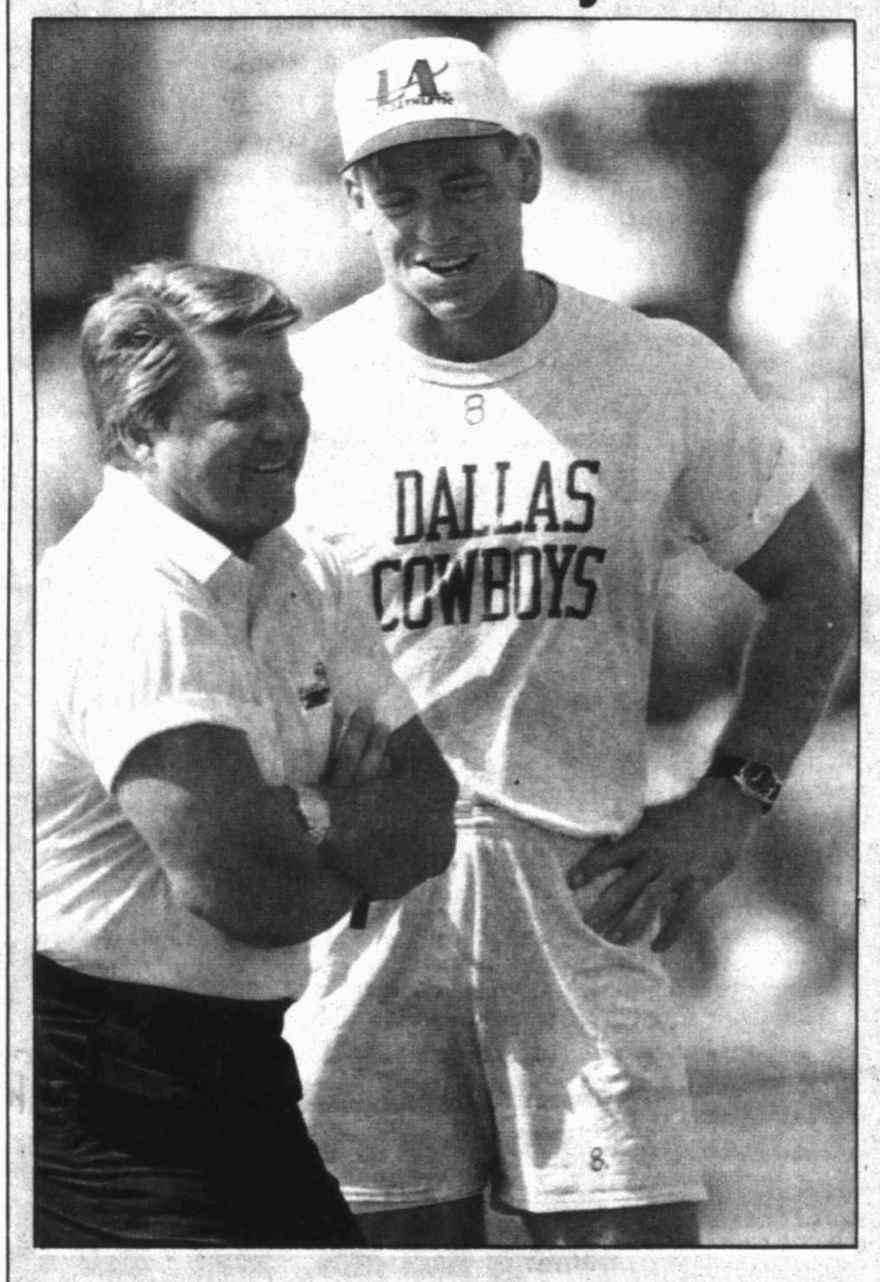
Aikman antsy to make return



AP Laserphoto

Dallas Cowboys' quarterback Troy Aikman (right) and head coach Jimmy Johnson share a laugh during practice at the Cowboys' training camp in Austin. Aikman continues to recover from back surgery that he underwent in June.

■ Quarterback sets Aug. 21 as tentative return date.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN — The ball was wobbly and overthrown so the receiver had to make a lunging one-handed catch.

No this wasn't All-Pro Michael Irvin with the acrobatic, fingertip grab. It was injured Troy Aikman, who doesn't act like he had back surgery on June 19.

Aikman is so far ahead of his expected rehabilitation pace that he has coach Jimmy Johnson shaking his head and doctors worried the Cowboys Super Bowl MVP is going too far too fast.

"He's amazed me," Johnson said. "He's looking really good."

The antsy Aikman already has set a tentative date for his playing comeback. It's Aug. 21 against the Houston Oilers in the Alamodome.

He's working like everyone forgot he threw four touchdown passes in the Super Bowl and got $50,000 instant cash for saying "I'm going to Disneyland."

Early in the morning he's up, practicing his backpedal in a harness and tossing a medicine ball. The harness helps Aikman rebuild his back muscles.

Then he's out on the field making longer passes each day. He's already up to 30 yards with a tight spiral. Worried trainers caution him not to cut loose with 50 yard throws.

"I can throw the ball 30 to 35 yards no problem," Aikman said. "The back feels good. Every day in my rehab I do more."

Aikman said he had feared the herniated disc in his back was a ticking bomb.

"It had been wearing down over a period of years and when I did those squats with the weights it pushed

Angels must start turnaround now

Baseball's schedule makers love to say that all things even out over the course of a season. In other words, you will play as many games at home as you do on the road.

However, the Texas League schedule makers have performed no favors for the Midland Angels, sending them on the road in 21 of 27 games to start the second half of play.

Williamson

The Angels return home tonight to face the Jackson Generals and Midland will play 21 home games in the next 26 days. But, alas, that gift may not have come quick enough to save the faltering Angels.

Midland was a woeful 1-8 on the last road trip and own a meager 11-16 second half record, which translates into last place in the Texas League West and 6½ games behind second half leader El Paso.

The Angels, however, have only five of those home games against El Paso and will meet the Diablos for five games on the road in August. Those key head-to-head confrontations are even up. It may already be too late to catch the Diablos.

But the news isn't all bad. If the Angels can turn things around at home, there is still payoff hope under the Texas League's silly new playoff format. The format says that if one team wins both halves, the second place team of the second half will be in the playoffs. El Paso won the first half and owns a four-game lead over Wichita in this half, meaning that the battle for second place is the real race.

Long and weary road trips aside, the Angels can't condone a 1-8 road trip. Yes, they have lost a lot of one and two-run games, but the bottom line is that they haven't gotten the job done as of late. That must be corrected with its bountiful home schedule over the next month.

And the turnaround doesn't have to be that dramatic, even though the start of the first half has been a near disaster. Midland probably won't have to catch El Paso. They need only to catch Wichita, and despite the poor play of late, the Angels are still only 2½ games behind the Wranglers, who are playing at only the .500 level (14-14).

The Angels take the field tonight with an 0-4 record against Jackson, but due to a rainout in Jackson last week, Midland will meet the Generals six times with a doubleheader set for 6 p.m. Friday. If a turnaround is to occur, this is a series against a team where it must start. Midland can't turn in an 0-6 or 1-5 mark against Jackson and hope to stay in the playoff hunt.

If the Angels can just manage to have a winning record at home against every club in, it would appear that a playoff berth could be easily had.

Midland will face Wichita 10 times down the stretch, five at home and five on the road. The Angels will have to do well in those two series, but the key could come in the next 10 days where they have 11 games against teams they own a 1-8 overall record against.

The final word is that the Angels can't suffer that kind of mark in this homestand, or the year might as well be over.

Turnaround time has arrived. Let's hope the Angels answer the call.

mer teammate of Ryan's, ended the first inning with 'K' No. 2.

Of Milwaukee's first nine batters, four struck out.

By the time Ryan pulled himself out of the game in the sixth, he had allowed only three hits — all doubles — and had upped his record strikeout total to 5,684.

Ryan was the antidote for a pitching-thin staff desperately in need of an ace while the Rangers battle for their first division title in a weak AL West.

The pitchers who took his place for 12 starts in Ryan's absence were a combined 2-5 with a 5.90 ERA.

"He's the guy we need to get through the second half," Texas manager Kevin Kennedy said. "He doesn't need to do any more than he did tonight because of our improved bullpen" even though it took four pitchers to record the final 10 outs.

"I can't make any predictions about anything," Ryan said. "I have to take it start by start. I hope to start every time my turn comes up. I don't set number goals. My goal is to help this team and take some pressure off the bullpen.

"I couldn't ask for a better situation to come back into, the way the team has recovered. We're in the middle of the pennant race."

Before the game, with the crowd abuzz about Ryan's return, Rangers designated hitter Julio Franco took a look around and asked "What is this, the first game of the World Series?"

For at least one glorious Texas night, it felt like it. The crowd gave Ryan five standing ovations, and when he left the game, he acknowledged the cheers with an old-fashioned gesture — a tip of the hat.

It was Christmas in July, October in Arlington.

For good measure, the crowd gave Ryan another ovation when his name was called over the public address system as the victor after Tom Henke earned his 20th save.

Ryan dispelled many a doubt, including his own.

things over the edge," he said. "At first I thought the problem was muscular. But it sure wasn't. (Tight end) Jay Novacek had this same operation four years ago and he seems fine. I don't want long-term problems because I want a normal life after I get out of football."

Aikman is a picture of impatience at the Cowboys training camp at St. Edward's University, where the boredom of two-a-day practices drags on.

"Frustrating," he said. "It's frustrating."

Aikman hopes to begin practicing with the team following a London exhibition game against Detroit Aug. 8. He'll be in California working out under the watchful eye of the doctors who operated on him.

"There's been no pain so I'm encouraged," he said. "I plan to play in the last preseason game and possibly the one before that."

What drives Aikman is his experience two years ago when he was injured and Steve Beuerlein took control of the team in the playoffs.

"Watching someone else quarterback this team isn't fun for me," Aikman said. "I've lived through that experience."

Aikman then took off to run on a treadmill.

Run, Troy, run.

He'll keep running until he's out on the field with the team in RFK Stadium on Sept. 6, starting against the Washington Redskins.

"I'll be there," he said.

Steelers sign pick; Rosenbach exits Cards

Associated Press

■ NFL Roundup

If Chad Brown doesn't play football this year, there's always the snake business.

Snakes?

Brown, you see, breeds and sells snakes. Clearly, he is not the conventional draft choice.

In any case, he is threatening to sit out the season unless the Pittsburgh Steelers come up with more money.

On Tuesday, the Steelers signed first-round draft pick Deon Figures, a college teammate of Brown at Colorado. That leaves Brown, a linebacker chosen in the second round, as the only unsigned player among the Steelers' 10 draft picks.

John Parrella doesn't figure to go AWOL again. His father wouldn't hear of it. The Buffalo Bills' second-round draft pick said Tuesday he decided a day earlier to go home to Grand Island, Neb., to see his father, who has a history of heart problems.

Parrella said he called from Toledo, Ohio — about 3½ hours from the Bills' camp at Fredonia, N.Y. — to see how his father was doing. That was the end of the trip.

Levy would not say how Parrella would be disiplined.

Cincinnati signed tight end Tony McGee, a second-round pick from Michigan. No. 1 pick John Copeland, who fired his agent last week, has said he plans to hire another by mid-week.

No. 58 was always popular in Washington. It still is even though Wilber Marshall has moved on to Houston. The new 58 is Carl Banks, who wore that number with the New York Giants before joining the Redskins.

"He's going to bring a quality of leadership to our team that maybe we haven't had in the past," assistant coach Larry Peccatiello said. "Yesterday, he took a young player aside after practice and was working with him on some things. I haven't seen that before during my time with the Redskins."

Phoenix offensive tackle Ernest Dye, a 313-pound first-round draft choice, has to learn quickly to move quickly. He got a valuable lesson from linebacker Freddie Joe Nunn, who blew by him on the pass rush.

Meanwhile, coach Joe Bugel is trying to shape his team without quarterback Timm Rosenbach, whose agent says he is giving up football to raise cattle and take an occasional turn on the rodeo circuit.

Miami, which waived Mark Duper because of a surplus of receivers, is suddenly not so deep at the position.

On Sunday, the day before training camp opened, receiver Mike Williams broke a finger in a bicycle accident. On Tuesday, Irving Fryar went down with a strained knee. He is expected to miss up to two weeks, but will not face surgery.

Cleveland Browns' Mark Clayton, three other wide receivers and a tight end have been slowed by injuries.

Clayton pulled a hamstring. Jack Milling injured his left leg and sustained a concussion. Wideout Louis Clark hurt his hip and Chris Holder, dislocated his thumb.

New York Giants coach Dan Reeves would like to talk with AWOL linebacker Pepper Johnson and clear the air. Reeves seemed a little concerned over reports that Johnson was staying away from training camp because he was unhappy over a proposed move from inside linebacker to outside linebacker.

Reeves said that's not the case.

"I've said all the time that he's the starting inside linebacker and someone has to beat him out to change that," Reeves said.

Running back Rodney Hampton also continued to be AWOL over unhappiness with a contract that ends this year.

Dallas Cowboys' owner Jerry Jones (left) and former coach Tom Landry answer questions during a news conference at Texas Stadium Tuesday after Landry accepted a spot on the team's Ring of Honor been planned. The team hasn't even decided whether to honor Landry before the game or at halftime. But no matter how or when it's done, Jones said it will be special.

LANDRY: Coach accepts induction

"Certainly, having him as a part of our Ring of Honor, to me basically says to the young players that are out there looking up, 'Boy, would I like to be beside that man some day,' " Jones said.

The question of whether Landry should join the ring has dogged him since Jones first extended an invitation in 1990. Landry said when he travels he's constantly asked about it and that he receives stacks of mail supporting each side.

Jones thought it was a standing offer, but Landry chose not to think about it.

Landry said he finally was ready to seriously consider it. After weighing what the honor would mean to his family, former players and fans, he called Jones to accept.

"I should go in because the fans are what made us what we are and the players up there in the Ring of Honor are the ones that put me there," Landry said. "I think it would be foolish for me to say I'm not going to go into that Ring of Honor."

Landry's name will become the eighth along the facing between the decks of Texas Stadium. The other seven, who all played for Landry, are: Bob Lilly, Don Meredith, Don Perkins, Chuck Howley, Mel Renfro, Roger Staubach and Lee Roy Jordan.

Several of those players have endorsed Landry's decision, as has his predecessor, Johnson.

"I think it's good that coach Landry will be in the Ring of Honor. He's a big part of the great tradition of the Dallas Cowboys," Johnson said.

"I think it's tremendous that Tom has decided to go into the Ring of Honor," former general manager Tex Schramm said. "I'll be there that day for sure."

Landry, always a a stoic figure on the sidelines, turned a floundering expansion franchise of the early 1960s into an NFL power by the 1970s.

The team was weakened in the early 1980s as players aged and weren't sufficiently replaced. He still guided Dallas to the playoffs in 1983 and his streak of 20 consecutive winning seasons lasted until 1985.

By 1988, his final year, the team had dropped to 3-13.

Under Landry, the Cowboys had a 270-178-6 record, reaching the Super Bowl in 1971, 1972, 1976, 1978 and 1979, beating Miami 24-3 in 1972 and Denver 27-10 in 1978.

He was named to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1990, joining Lilly and Staubach.

Landry was a player-coach for the New York Giants in 1954 and 1955, then was a defensive coach through 1959. In 1960, he took over the new NFL franchise in Dallas. His first team was 0-11-1.

Gordon will replace Allison at Diehard 500

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Indy-car driver Robby Gordon will drive Ford Thunderbird No. 28 in Sunday's DieHard 500 Winston Cup race at Talladega Speedway, replacing the late Davey Allison for one race.

Scheduling conflicts prevent the 24-year-old California native, who is eighth in the Indy-car driver standings, from running in other NASCAR races this season.

"I'm excited that they're taking a chance with me," said Gordon, who has never seen the Talladega track. "I know it's a big risk."

"Davey was one of my favorite NASCAR drivers," Gordon said. "I'm not replacing him. It just happens that I have an off weekend and I'll do the best I can."

Team owner Robert Yates said he chose Gordon because he has raced in a Winston Cup event, the 1991 Daytona 500, and is highly regarded by NASCAR experts. Gordon ran as high as fifth at Daytona before spinning to avoid an accident and finished 18th.

"We're going to put Robby in the car for one race," Yates said. "As far as the future, we're going to look down the list. All we've been doing is answering the phone. A lot of people want to get in the seat of the No. 28 car."

The process was an agonizing one for Yates and the rest of the team because it involves naming a replacement for the popular Allison at his home track.

Talladega also is the place where the 32-year-old stock car driver crashed his helicopter last week, suffering fatal head injuries.

"It's tough because we're going back to Talladega," team spokesman Brian VanDercook said. "All of Davey's extended family will be there."

Allison won three Winston 500s at Talladega, which is located not far from his hometown of Hueytown, Ala. His father, Bobby Allison, won four times there and his uncle, Donnie Allison, won twice.

Yates decided not to enter last Sunday's race at Pocono, saying the team needed time to come to grips with Allison's death.

At the time, he said the team would attempt to be ready for Talladega.

"Had Talladega been the first weekend, we would have missed it," he said Tuesday. "This is our livelihood. This race team is prepared to go there and win this race."

When Allison was injured in a spectacular wreck last year at Pocono, Yates went to Bobby Hillin as a replacement driver the next week at Talladega and Dorsey Schroeder the following week at Watkins Glen, N.Y.

As difficult as it has been, VanDercook said the team has been bolstered by thoughts of how Davey Allison responded after his younger brother, Clifford, was killed in a wreck during practice several days before a Winston Cup race last year at Michigan.

"We know this is what he would want us to be doing," VanDercook said. "We saw him go through it."

Mavericks' rookie coach to debut against Warriors

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks coach Quinn Buckner will make his home debut Nov. 6 against Golden State in a game that could feature two of the top four picks of the NBA draft.

Overall top choice Chris Webber, whom the Warriors got in a trade, and Dallas' first pick Jamal Mashburn will square off if both sign contracts.

The Mavericks, who released its schedule Tuesday, open the season Nov. 5 on the road against the Utah Jazz. Dallas' last two games will be at home April 22 against Houston and April 24 against Minnesota.

Coming off an 11-71 season, the worst in franchise history and one of the worst in league history, the Mavericks have not raised ticket prices for the 1993-94 season. They'll range from $5, the cheapest in the league, to $42.

The Mavericks' lone national television appearance will be Dec. 14 at home against Portland.

DISTRIBUTORSHIPS

LOOKING FOR PART TIME JOB? HAVE WE GOT A DEAL FOR YOU

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which are available now.

Often Asked ????
Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

● ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.

● MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!

● STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!

● SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly!

Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
$100.00 deposit.

In Good Hands

Child Care You Can Count On.....

We're rounding the corner to summer's end and it's time to start making arrangements for child care for the school year. Child care is a vital concern for today's children by today's parents and for this reason the Midland Reporter-Telegram is publishing our annual Child Care Directory on Sunday, August 8th.

The Child Care Directory is a method used to reach parents with information about the services that are available in the Midland area and who provides them. The parents of children in the Midland area have come to rely on this directory as a guide to quality child care. This section focuses on the basic "who, what, where and when" of quality child care in our area and the section includes a map so that your facility can easily be located.

You will probably want your facility represented with an ad in this special Child Care Directory, a story about your facility, a photo of your facility and a dot on the map to show your location. Special ad packages, ranging from an 8" ad to an 18" ad, are available. There are also rates for regular ads of any size.

Deadline for this special Child Care Directory is Thursday, July 29, 1993. For more information, and to reserve your ad space in the Child Care Directory, please call:

Midland Reporter-Telegram 687-8813

Fructose alarm

Everybody knows that eating animal fat can boost your cholesterol. But what about sugar? Several years ago, British researchers suggested that sugar promoted heart disease. But nobody paid much attention.

Now, new research at the U.S. Department of Agriculture finds that one type of sugar that is widespread in the American diet — fructose — can indeed boost artery-clogging LDL cholesterol.

Previous studies had found that people with a special sensitivity to sugar reacted adversely to fructose in a way that might promote heart disease. But the men in the new study were ordinary healthy individuals, typical of the American population.

What makes the situation alarming is that fructose corn syrup (about 55 percent fructose) is used to sweeten canned fruit and fruit drinks, yogurt, ice cream and almost all regular soft drinks. Ordinary table sugar is also half fructose.

Most people can get a cholesterol-boosting amount of fructose from two to three regular soft drinks a day, say USDA researchers.

Smart drinking

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A new alcohol study indicates moderate drinking helps people maintain their thinking and reasoning skills longer into old age.

But the chief researcher says that's not an endorsement for drinking. Dr. Joe Christian is a geneticist at the Indiana University School of Medicine.

The findings were presented at the annual convention of the Research Society of Alcoholism. Christian studied nearly 4,000 sets of male twins, for more than 20 years.

Those who had one or two drinks per day scored higher on cognitive reasoning skills tests, compared to those drinking more or not at all, according to Christian.

The researcher said there may be a connection between his study and one that indicates moderate drinking helps increase high density cholesterol, which wards off heart disease. But Christian said his research should "not be construed as an endorsement of drinking." The doctor cited the overwhelming negative medical and social dangers of excessive drinking.

Health care winner

TILLERY, N.C. (AP) — With today's attention on health care costs, the 1,000 citizens of this rural community are showing the nation how to create a practical, low-cost health care system.

Tillery, which is located 20 miles from the nearest town with medical assistance, won the 1993 Healthier Communities Award, sponsored by the Healthcare Forum and Marion Merrell Dow Inc., competing with 81 communities here and abroad.

Tillery's people developed a varied program to promote basic health care. They converted an old potato house into a free health clinic, created an emergency health care fund and a community health advocacy plan with fourth-year medical students training local health advocates.

The program also instructs youngsters in good nutrition, and meets the needs of seniors.

Hot, cold pain

CANTON, Mass. (AP) — When your teeth come in contact with hot or cold foods or liquids do they cause you severe pain?

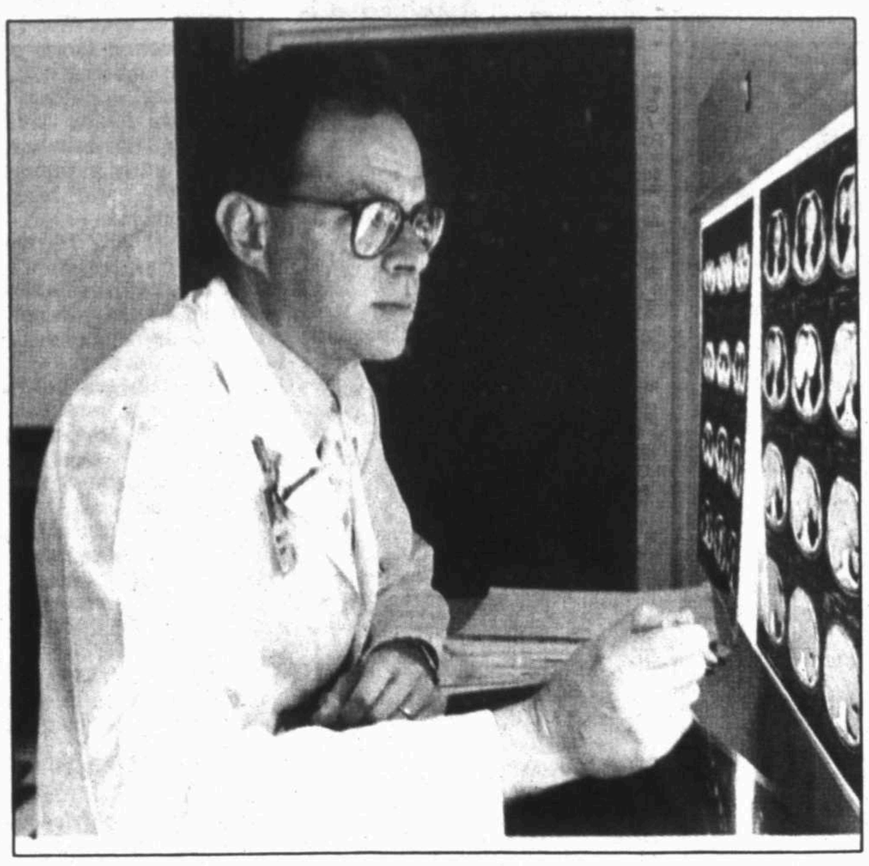
If so, you are likely to be one out of four adults who suffer from hypersensitivity, which dental experts consider a serious problem.

"The problem begins when gums recede, leaving a tooth's roots exposed," explains Dr. Christopher Fox, manager of professional relations for Colgate Hoyt Gel-Kam, the oral care division of Colgate-Palmolive.

"Microscopic amounts of liquid move between the tooth's nerve and surface, causing sensitivity."

The pain associated with it should not be ignored, says Fox, and if left untreated the root will be vulnerable to decay and possible tooth loss. Brushing, flossing and regular dental visits are the best way to avoid gum recession and hypersensitivity. Fluoride therapies by prescription are also available for those needing a more serious treatment, adds Fox.

Breast cancer strikes 1,000 men annually



AP Laserphoto

Dr. Harry Bear, a surgical oncologist, examines a CT scan at Massey Cancer Center at the Medical College of Virginia July 1. Bear, who specializes in breast cancer, has treated about half a dozen male breast cancer patients in his 15-year medical career. About 1,000 men a year are diagnosed with breast cancer.

By Heidi Nolte Brown

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Walter, a 64-year-old, considered himself to be in great physical condition. He regularly worked out at the gym. He ate all the right foods.

When he felt a lump in his chest last November, he asked his doctor about it.

"He stuck a needle in me, took some cells out and put them under the microscope," Walter said in a telephone interview from his home in the Milwaukee area. "My life came crashing down right about that moment."

Not only did Walter have cancer, he had breast cancer — a so-called woman's disease.

"I was in total disbelief," he said. "No one ever brings up the subject of it happening to men."

Walter, not his real name, isn't alone.

Every year, about 1,000 men are stricken with the disease, about 0.5 percent to 1 percent of the total number of breast cancer cases, according to Dr. Harry D. Bear of the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond.

Bear, a surgical oncologist at MCV's Massey Cancer Center, specializes in breast cancer.

The problem is much more common among women because they have more breast tissue and because of the hormonal influence of estrogen, which Bear said affects breast cancer although doctors aren't sure how.

It once was believed that men who have gynecomastia — excessive development of breast tissue — were more at risk, but that condition no longer is considered a factor. Age, however, is a major factor. The disease usually strikes middle-aged or elderly men.

The symptoms are the same for both sexes: a hard lump, changes in the nipple, or changes in the skin. In men, the lump usually develops immediately behind the nipple. The most common location in women is the upper outer quadrant toward the underarm.

Bear said treatment varies according to how advanced the cancer is. Treatment includes chemotherapy, radiation, anti-hormonal therapy, lumpectomy and mastectomy.

"It's a serious disease, just as serious in men as it is in women," said Dr. William L. Donegan, a professor of surgery at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee. "But the incidence is too low to justify screening mammograms for men on a routine basis."

Donegan estimates that he has seen 20 to 30 cases of male breast cancer.

About 200,000 new cases of breast cancer will be diagnosed this year, said Stacy Charney of the American Cancer Society in New York. The disease will

Not enough B causes lapses in memory

By Jane Carper
Associated Press

Older people who lack certain B vitamins may suffer mental impairment, research shows. But how could it happen? New clues come from a study by Dr. Iris Bell, an assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Arizona.

She discovered that a group of 27 depressed elderly patients had high blood levels of an amino acid called homocysteine. Elevated levels of this substance are also linked to heart disease. Taking certain B vitamins can often lower homocysteine to normal levels.

In the new study, Dr. Bell found that depressed elderly patients with high homocysteine levels scored lower on mental tests than did young depressed patients. The elderly group showed a greater loss of memory and ability to learn, indicating a decline in brain function.

The researchers speculate that excessive homocysteine might damage blood vessels in the brain, just as it presumably does in the rest of the body. Also homocysteine converts to another substance that in excess can cause brain cells to self-destruct.

High levels of homocysteine can be normalized by correcting subtle deficiencies of vitamin B-6, B-12 and folic acid, experts say.

Physical difficulties are often warnings of deeper problems

By Dr. Hap LeCrone
N.Y. Times News Service

Mary had suffered from headaches for many years. She had tried many kinds of medications and numerous doctors has suggested that her problem might be related to her tendency to worry about everything.

Sam, 15 years old, suffers from stomach problems that cause him to miss school. The pain and diarrhea might be caused by dislike of school, his doctor said.

Alfred has suffered from low back pain for years, and all the medical examinations have pointed to a psychological reason rather than any specific physical or medical problem. He has been through three unhappy marriages, changed jobs at least once a year and frequently resorts to alcohol to "calm his nerves."

Physicians have known for some time that many individuals tend to convert psychological problems into physical difficulties. The problem may originate from stress on a job, an unhappy marriage, difficulty in school or poor self-esteem.

There are many reasons for unhappiness, but I have found that individuals who are unhappy find it difficult to accept the fact that their physical problems may be related to their unhappiness.

Many people make the mistake of relating psychological distress to weakness, laziness or unwillingness to face life when, in fact, the real reason behind the problem is much deeper and more complex.

Foodmeister is taking life, and cooking, a little easier

By Beverly Bundy
N.Y. Times News Service

Julee Rosso is one of those people who always seem to be in the right place at the right time.

In the 1980s, Rosso teamed up with Sheila Lukins to guide the yuppie generation into entertaining with their Silver Palate take-out and catering shop in New York City. The shop gave birth to a boutique line of jams, berried vinegars and sauces, but more far-reaching was the pair's trio of books, "The Silver Palate Cookbook," "The Silver Palate Good Times Cookbook" and "The New Basics," books that showed baby boomers that home cooking could be as entertaining as restaurant meals.

Now 48, Rosso has just published "Great Good Food: Luscious Lower-Fat Cooking" (Crown, $19.95), a collection of recipes that are geared toward those same well-fed boomers as they move into middle age.

The new book and the new philosophy were the result of some major changes in her own life. In 1988, the partners sold their New York City shop and Rosso left the Big Apple and returned to her native Michigan.

Rosso married "an old dancing partner," a home builder. Then the New York food star and her husband bought the Wickwood Inn in Saugatuck, Mich. This more tranquil life brought her closer to food in its natural form.

"Living where I do now, I really understand what people were saying to me when we wrote the "Silver Palate" books, that I can't find this ingredient or I can't find that ingredient," Rosso said.

"But now I'm really addicted to the farmers market nearby and the good black dirt that these wonderful vegetables come from. I'm buying my vegetables from farmers I trust, people I know are telling me the truth when they tell me what they've sprayed on their crops. They're not selling bananas

Many plants can be transformed into medicine

Hearst News Service

For thousands of years, a stroll through the woods was equivalent to a walk in a modern-day pharmacy. At every turn was a leaf, root or flower that could be transformed into medicine.

Plants were used to fight infections, clot bleeding, alleviate pain, soothe upset stomachs and restore health and vigor, Ted Kerasote writes in the current issue of Sports Afield. Even today, many of these plants have been listed as official drugs in the United States Pharmacopoeia.

The following plants can help when the nearest drugstore is miles away:

■ Cattail (Typha). The brown, cylindrical female flower can be used to stanch bleeding. Break open the cylinder and apply to the wound. The sticky juice found between the leaves can be used for toothaches.

■ Cinquefoil (Potentilla). Cut up the entire plant and make a tea from it. Use as a gargle for sore throat. Place the leaves and flowers inside your sock, directly on a blister, to relieve inflammation.

■ Fireweed (Epilobium). Also known as willow herb, fireweed leaves can make a strong tea to relieve diarrhea accompanied by chills. Take one to two cups every few hours.

■ Mint (Mentha). Use the leaves to make mint tea to treat upset stomach, nausea or indigestion caused by overeating.

■ Stinging nettle (Urtica). If your skin burns and tingles after walking through a patch of nettles, pick some of the leaves and crush them on the area for fast relief.

■ Raspberry (Rubus). This is useful for diarrhea, especially after eating too much of the raspberry's fruit. Make a strong tea from the leaves and roots. Drink a cup at body temperature every hour until symptoms decrease.

■ Rose (Rosa). A wash made from two or three flowers steeped in 4 ounces of warm water can assuage eye irritations of all kinds.

■ Sagebrush (Artemisia). For a stuffed nose, place two handfuls of the leaves in boiling water and breathe in the vapors. Rub the leaves on your skin as an insect repellent.

■ Usnea (Usnea). This dull green lichen with a slightly elastic inner sheath grows on spruce, fir and pine trees. An antibiotic, it can be used to fight infec-

Yogurt, like whole milk, is a 'no-no' for infants

By Jean Carper
N.Y. Times News Service

Giving whole milk to infants in the first year of life is not a good idea. The proteins in milk can promote colic, sleeplessness, ear infections, as well as allergies and possibly diabetes later in life, say experts. But what about yogurt, a reader asks.

Yogurt also contains proteins which can adversely affect an infant, causing many of the same symptoms as whole milk. "Don't give yogurt to babies," advises Talal Nsouli, a Washington, D.C., allergist who teaches at Georgetown University Medical School.

True, yogurt is far safer than ordinary milk for youngsters who have lactose intolerance and cannot digest milk sugar (lactase). And lactose intolerance can contribute to infant colic and abdominal distress. But it is not the whole story. Often, the culprit is milk proteins, also found in yogurt.

In many cases, taking infants and youngsters off all dairy products, including yogurt, dramatically relieves symptoms of colic, ear infections and other allergic reactions.

However, the best way to prevent allergies in infants is to breast feed exclusively for the first four to six months and keep babies away from dairy products for at least the first year.

Sparkling water wins approval

By Linda Anderson

My kids just love those fruit-flavored, sparkling water drinks, and I guess I should be glad for that because they've got to be better for kids than ordinary sugar-laced, artificially colored soft drinks. So when we at the office got a 23-ounce bottle of Clearly Canadian "Sparkling Water Beverage, With Natural Strawberry Flavor" in the mail, of course my kids volunteered to do the taste test on it.

Anderson

I tell you, when I read through the press release that came with the drink, I thought it sounded too good to be true. Listen to this: "An alternative to traditional beverages, containing no caffeine or artificial colours (Don't you just love the "Queen's English" spelling?) With the full-bodied flavours (there it is again) of Canada's fruits and berries. In pure and refreshing natural spring water drawn from deep within our own Canadian aquifers. Packaged in a transparent, glacier-blue bottle. A sophisticated product for the swelling ranks of consumers — well beyond the initial 18-34 target audience — demanding a more healthful treat. People of all ages, all walks of life, who want to think young and to stake out their own sense of individuality." Sounds very ta-ta, doesn't it.

The company must be doing well too — the press release goes on to state that Clearly Canadian is now available in Mexico, the Caribbean, England and Ireland; and Japan, Australia, Central America and the Middle East are soon to be on the list. Oh, and so are the rest of Europe and the rest of Asia. I'm not sure how many countries are involved here, or how many are going to be involved eventually, but it sounds like Clearly Canadian wants to be as global as Coca Cola.

Clearly Canadian comes in flavors like Country Raspberry, Western Loganberry, Mountain Blackberry, Orchard Peach, Wild Cherry, Coastal Cranberry and Summer Strawberry. The labeling claims the product is "Made with Natural Canadian Water" (which of course makes me wonder what artificial Canadian water would be).

Price for a 23-ounce bottle is $1.22.

The children were clearly (pun intended) delighted to taste-test the drink. They like sparkling water beverages, though I tend to think these drinks taste like fruit-flavored Alka-Seltzer.

Anyway, they drank it, declared it wonderful, and asked why we can't have it more often. I may have to make a point of keeping some on hand — at least if they have Clearly Canadian to drink, it may keep them out of my diet Dr Pepper...

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

DEAR ABBY

Abstinence is safest sex

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just read the confidential you wrote to "Needs to Know the Truth in Cleveland." You said, "The only safe sex is NO sex. Trust me."

Van Buren

Well, that is the best, and most accurate advice I have ever heard on that subject. Thank you for telling it like it is.

I am relieved to know that there are still people out there who speak the truth without rationalizing, or trying to justify sinful behavior all in the name of "safe sex."

I hope your statement will send a message to people who engage in sinful behavior, and worse yet, take chances. When are people going to wake up and realize that there is no "safe sex"?

The only answer is NO sex. Say it again, Abby, and say it often. — ANOTHER ABIGAIL, ST. PAUL, MINN.

DEAR ABIGAIL: The statement was made in a literal context, not in a religious or philosophical sense. The woman's question: "If condoms aren't 100 percent safe — what is 100 percent safe?" My answer: Abstinence.

DEAR ABBY: You said, "When an engagement has been broken, the lady should return the ring, or she's no lady."

Sorry, Abby, you are way off base on that one. My engagement was broken two months before my wedding date when I learned that my philandering fiance got himself into the embarrassing position of becoming a father. I was shocked and totally devastated. Can you imagine how hurt I was when he actually married this bimbo a week after terminating our engagement!

The ring he had given me on the eve of our engagement was a beautiful three-carat solitaire. The louse had the nerve to ask me to return it, which of course I refused to do ... on the advice of my lawyer. I promptly sold the ring and used the money to reimburse my bridesmaids for their dresses. I also repaid my parents the money they had deposited for the wedding that never came off.

Then I took a vacation and began a new life of my own. Abby, if by your definition I am no "lady" — so be it. But he was certainly no gentleman! — BETTER OFF

DEAR BETTER OFF: Considering the circumstances, you'll get no argument from me. Pass the crow, please.

DEAR ABBY: I am 25 and I am just about to get married to a man I love very much. I am still a virgin. I am afraid that after he sees my body, he is going to want to get a divorce! I have these ugly stretch marks on my hips and backside.

Do you know of any creams that would work? Is there a plastic surgeon who could fix this? Will it hurt? And how much will it cost?

Please answer quickly, Abby. My wedding is on Aug. 5. — DESPERATE BRIDE-TO-BE IN PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS

DEAR DESPERATE: Calm your fears. If the man proposed without encountering your stretch marks, then you can be certain they will not be of utmost importance to him after he discovers them. I know of no solution to the stretch mark problem. But the magician who finds one is certain to make a fortune.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

ILL: Mental problems still carry social stigma

(From 1D)

This unwillingness to admit the correlation between physical problems and psychological causes often centers around the stigma associated with going to a mental health professional.

Most individuals do not realize that they are in some kind of counseling relationship every day. An individual at work often will ask a supervisor or fellow employee about possible solutions to problems at work, such as how to perform a task more efficiently, what material to use, etc.

A shopper may ask the grocer about the best products for the most nutritious meals or may ask the pharmacist about an over-the-counter remedy for a child at home who needs nose drops. Many of us counsel with attorneys and accountants about business problems.

Few mental health practitioners use the couch in their practices. None employ a crystal ball to help make decisions. In fact, most in the mental health field are individuals with families who encounter many of the problems that their patients and clients deal with.

Through training and experience based on scientific research done in medical schools and universities, new techniques have been developed to provide painless dentistry and to help overcome the fear of going to the dentist. Likewise, mental health professionals are searching for ways of helping the lay public overcome the fear of going to a mental health expert.

We are trying to escape the stigma and label of being "head shrinkers."

Counseling being performed in churches and school settings is helping the public overcome their fear of seeking help from trained counselors. Public figures, entertainers and individuals in other helping professions have helped remove much of the stigma once attached to seeking help from a professional counselor and many are benefiting from this change.

In Good Hands
Child Care You Can Count On.....
We're rounding the corner to summer's end and it's time to start making arrangements for child care for the school year. Child care is a vital concern for today's children by today's parents and for this reason the Midland Reporter-Telegram is publishing our annual Child Care Directory on Sunday, August 8th.
The Child Care Directory is a method used to reach parents with information about the services that are available in the Midland area and who provides them. The parents of children in the Midland area have come to rely on this directory as a guide to quality child care. This section focuses on the basic "who, what, where and when" of quality child care in our area and the section includes a map so that your facility can easily be located.
You will probably want your facility represented with an ad in this special Child Care Directory, a story about your facility, a photo of your facility and a dot on the map to show your location. Special ad packages, ranging from an 8" ad to an 18" ad, are available. There are also rates for regular ads of any size.
Deadline for this special Child Care Directory is Thursday, July 29, 1993. For more information, and to reserve your ad space in the Child Care Directory, please call:

ROSSO: Dishes simple, light

(From 1D)

but they're selling good, honest food. If I can't get fancy lettuces, it's all right because I have this bounty of local things available.

"The lists of ingredients for recipes in this new book are shorter, because I'm finding that now that I have a husband who often comes home for lunch that I'm cooking more often and I need things to be a little easier.

"I think that people are entertaining more often, and differently, these days, like I am. I think that means two or four guests over on Tuesday and Thursday evening, instead of 20 on Saturday, and for that kind of entertaining you tend to serve what you cook most often. This book is that kind of food, everyday things that can be special enough for guests."

Rosso's cooking is not only simpler, but also lighter.

"My husband, who's a manly man, doesn't sit down and eat a whole strip steak anymore, nor do we eat three lamb chops apiece for dinner," Rosso said. "I'm always surprised that I end up putting so much meat back into the refrigerator after a meal.

"We're both meat and potatoes people but now vegetables and grains and pasta are taking more importance in our meals," Rosso said. "I eat more than I ever have before and I feel pounds dropping behind me. I wake up hungry now, and it's wonderful to eat when you're hungry.

"I ordered from room service recently and there on the menu was asparagus with hollandaise on the side. I thought, 'Well, I don't splurge often, so I'll get that.' And you know what, here was this lovely asparagus and I dipped one spear in the hollandaise and said to myself, 'This just doesn't taste good to me anymore,'" Rosso said. "It's the same with whole milk. I simply don't like it anymore."

But Rosso doesn't advocate a jump to a 10-percent fat diet, nor is she a fan of fat substitutes.

"There haven't been enough studies on people who've eaten that way, or eaten those products for 30 or 40 years to determined that it's healthy," she said.

"I love chocolate and I'm not satisfied with carob or cocoa in cooking, so I choose to use chocolate. I just eat chocolate less often than I did before," Rosso said.

Nor does Rosso think that people should be consumed by food.

"This is food, it's not nuclear physics. The reason for food is nourishment and enjoyment," she said. "People shouldn't be dissecting every course and every ingredient, nor should they be adding up the fat grams with every bite. Conversation at the table should be about other things."

Following recipe is from "Great Good Food: Luscious Lower-Fat Cooking."

GRILLED LIME CHICKEN
(Serves 4)

1 whole chicken (two and one-half pounds)
3 tablespoons honey
¼ cup chicken broth
½ cup fresh lime juice
½ cup minced fresh cilantro
1½ teaspoons ground coriander
Zest of 4 limes, grated

MEN: Breast cancer deadly

(From 1D)

kill 46,000 women and 300 men.

Bear said men who seek treatment usually have a more advanced stage of the disease.

"That's because they don't recognize what's going on because they don't feel like it could be breast cancer," he said. "When it's been carefully looked at, the prognosis for men is almost identical to that for women at the same stage."

While support groups abound for women with breast cancer, there is no such help exclusively for men.

"I think there's less of a psychological, emotional trauma associated with the treatment for men than there is for women," Bear said. "I don't think men attach the same psychological and cosmetic importance to their breasts as women do."

He has treated about a half-dozen male breast cancer patients in his 15-year medical career. He said the patients didn't seem to be embarrassed because they had the disease.

"They end up with a scar and they're minus a nipple, but they don't usually get cosmetic surgery," Bear said.

Walter underwent hormone therapy and a mastectomy, the most common treatment for breast cancer in men. His prognosis "has been very good," he said.

However, only his family knows about his disease.

"I can't share it with friends," Walter said. "In my profession, if anyone knew I had cancer and there is a risk in the future, it would be the end of my career." He declined to disclose his occupation.

He said he always has a towel draped over his right shoulder at the gym now, but he won't consider cosmetic surgery. He said he isn't embarrassed by what happened to him.

"What I did feel was terrible sorrow for some of the women that have to go through it," he said. "Now I know what they go through."

tion. Eat a handful every four hours for seven to 10 days.

■ Willow (Salix). Make a tea from the willow bark to relieve pain of any kind — headache, sore joints, fever. Use a large handful in two cups of water. Drink one cup per hour.

■ Yarrow (Achillea). Often called milfoil, the leaves can be crushed on an open wound to stanch bleeding. Brew the leaves in boiling water and sip the tea for colds and fevers.

Women advised to limit amount of red meat in diet

By Jean Carper
Associated Press

Women worried about colon cancer should eat fish and chicken instead of red meat — especially if they already have polyps, small precancerous growths that can lead to colon cancer years later.

So suggests a new study from the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons. Researchers found that women who ate the most saturated animal fat and red meat were more likely to have polyps. On the other hand, women who ate more fish, chicken and vitamin A had fewer polyps. Women who had low-fiber diets were also more apt to have recurring polyps.

This new research reinforces warnings from a recent Harvard study about the dangers of red meat in promoting colon cancer. In that study, women who ate a daily main dish of red meat — about five ounces of beef, pork or lamb — upped their risk of colon cancer two and a half times compared with women who ate meat less than once a month.

The point is: If you can keep the colon polyps from appearing or growing, it is unlikely you will develop colon cancer. One way to do that, at least for women, is to avoid or restrict red meat and animal fat, say researchers.

Beware of hands that seem too easy to be true. All too often they are not and one early misstep can be fatal. If you take a cursory look at this hand, it might seem declarer can lose only one trick in each plain suit. But watch what happened.

Since a balancing bid of one spade could be made on a far weaker hand, South reopened the auction with a takeout double, then introduced his own suit at the three-level after North showed enough values to compete at the three-level. North had no qualms about raising to game.

West led the king of hearts and continued with the ace. Convinced that all was well, declarer ruffed and drew two rounds of trumps with the ace and king. When West discarded a heart, declarer began to realize the predicament. To draw East's trumps would mean that, as soon as the defenders gained the lead with the ace of clubs, they would be able to run the hearts, so declarer abandoned trumps in favor of trying to force out the ace of clubs by leading a club to the queen.

Unfortunately, for South, West alertly held up on the first round of clubs. Declarer could do no better than continue with clubs. West won the second round, gave East a ruff and the defenders still had a diamond to come—down one.

It was no big deal to make the contract. Instead of ruffing the second heart, declarer should have discarded a diamond—a trick that would have to be lost anyway. Declarer could then win any return (a heart would be ruffed in dummy), draw trumps and force out the ace of clubs while there was still a trump in the closed hand to maintain control.

Fiji snuffs candles atop Charles' birthday cake

SUVA, Fiji — Fiji is blowing out the candles on Prince Charles.

The only country in the world that celebrates the British royal heir's birthday with a national holiday says the tradition has come of age.

The birthday will be marked for the last time Nov. 15, the day after Charles turns 45.

"Prince Charles is no longer the symbol of greatness he was several years ago and the British crown no longer has the shine it had in previous years," the Fiji Times said in an editorial Tuesday.

The prince's birthday has been celebrated here since 1970, when he took part in independence celebrations marking the end of British colonial rule, which began in 1874.

Business leaders recently asked the government to reduce some of Fiji's 13 public holidays as a way on increasing productivity.

However, a June holiday for Queen Elizabeth II's birthday will continue, even though she was dumped as head of state when this string of South Pacific islands was declared a republic after two military coups in 1987.

BRANSON, Mo. — The great flood of 1993 has a bundle of celebrities streaming into Iowa.

Tony Orlando, Jim Stafford, Wayne Newton and Andy Williams, all of whom have theaters in this southwestern Missouri resort town, plan to hand out bottled water to flood victims in Des Moines on Thursday. The city's water works was knocked out of commission last week.

The Ozark Mountain Caring Flood Relief project is hoping to raise $100,000 and deliver 100,000 gallons of bottled water to flood victims, said coordinator Jan Eiserman.

Other celebrities are expected to join the relief effort, which Orlando called a "truly American gesture."

LONDON — For the rest of his life, Yehudi Menuhin is entitled to lengthen his name to Baron Menuhin of Stoke D'Abernon — or Lord Menuhin for short.

The American-born violinist and conductor, who was given a life peerage in June by Queen Elizabeth II, appeared in the House of Lords for the first time Tuesday and said he would take the title.

A life peerage entitles him to sit in the unelected upper chamber of Parliament.

A life peer is allowed to choose his own title, and it generally refers to his birthplace or parliamentary district in the case of a former politician. Menuhin's music school is located in Stoke D'Abernon, a town south of London. The title dies with him and cannot be passed on to an heir.

Menuhin, 77, was given a knighthood in 1965 and adopted British nationality in 1985.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — After a day of fund raising, Texas Gov. Ann Richards was trying her hand at fishing — for fish.

Richards

Richards spoke Monday at a $100-a-plate dinner and a reception where tickets went for $250 each. The visit was sponsored by the Alaska Women's Political Caucus.

She asked a crowd of about 350 people to think a moment and total up the value of the clothes they were wearing. Then she asked whether anyone was willing to write a check for that amount, to support female politicians.

She urged women in politics to "get in there where the budget is, because the bottom line is what it's all about."

Her visit to the only state that outranks Texas in size also was to include fishing jaunts north of Anchorage and to the Kenai Peninsula, about 75 miles south of Anchorage.

KEY WEST, Fla. — John Updike is surprised how Ernest Hemingway is being marketed in Key West.

Updike said the island vacation hamlet portrays the literary giant as a jolly fisherman-adventurer-author to boost its tourism.

"There's this sense of letting Hemingway become good-time Ernie," said the novelist, who was awarded this year's Conch Republic Prize for Literature at the annual Hemingway Days writers conference on Monday.

"Well, living wasn't really what he did best," Updike said. "We should remember him as a writer."

He said Hemingway was determined to be a great writer and once he lost that ability his frustration drove him to suicide.

"He cared about every facet of his craft, however small," Updike said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A man accused of stalking country singer Tanya Tucker was ordered Tuesday to undergo further psychological tests.

Winston P. Wier, 41, of Hamilton, Texas, has been in custody since May 14 on charges of leaving numerous telephone messages and notes for Tucker, including one about one of her two children, and repeatedly visiting a recording studio where she was working.

McDonald one-hits Orioles into first place

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Ben McDonald pitched his first career one-hitter and Harold Baines homered and drove in three runs Tuesday night as Baltimore took over first place by beating Kansas City 7-0.

■ AL Roundup

The victory pushed Baltimore ahead of Toronto and New York in the AL East, the first time the Orioles have been in first place this season. The Orioles' seventh victory in their last nine games moved them a season-high 10 games over .500.

The lone hit off McDonald (7-8) came in the fourth inning, when Gary Gaetti lined a clean single to left field. McDonald matched his career-high with nine strikeouts and walked three in his first shutout since July 18, 1992, when he threw his second career two-hitter.

The 6-foot-7 right-hander retired 13 of the last 14 batters in his first complete game of the season and third straight victory. The Royals have been blanked three times this season, twice by the Orioles.

McDonald has gone 14 straight starts allowing three earned runs or less, dating back to May 11. The last Oriole to accomplish the feat was Jim Palmer in 1972.

Rangers 5, Brewers 1

ARLINGTON — Juan Gonzalez hit his 26th homer to tie Barry Bonds for the major-league lead, a three-run shot to highlight a four-run fifth inning as Texas beat Milwaukee.

Kevin Brown (7-6) pitched a five-hitter and struck out a career-high 10 to send the Brewers to their sixth straight loss. It was his eighth complete game of the season.

Gonzalez's homer, a 434-footer off Cal Eldred (10-10), scored Julio Franco and Rafael Palmeiro, giving the Rangers their eighth victory in their last 10 games. Texas remained two games behind Chicago in the AL West.

Brown had won only one of his last seven starts, including three losses and three no-decisions.

Texas added a run in the eighth when Gonzalez, who went 3-for-4, singled, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Gary Redus' single.

Indians 9, Athletics 5

CLEVELAND — Carlos Baerga foiled Tony La Russa's new pitching strategy by hitting a grand slam and driving in five runs as Cleveland beat Oakland.

The Indians have won four straight overall and 11 of their last 12 at home. Oakland has lost five in a row.

The A's were in the second game of a multiple-pitcher system La Russa installed in hopes of turning their season around. The manager is limiting each of his pitchers to about 50 pitches per game.

The scheme backfired when La Russa lifted starter Mike Mohler (1-2) after the Indians loaded the bases in the second inning on a single and two walks. Baerga hit reliever Joe Boever's second pitch for his 16th home run and his first career grand slam, putting Cleveland ahead 6-1.

The A's used five pitchers, to Cleveland's four.

Twins 4, Tigers 3

DETROIT — Shane Mack's two-run homer in the eighth inning broke a tie and lifted Minnesota to a victory over Detroit.

Three Twins pitchers held the Tigers to four hits. Jim Deshaies (10-7) allowed two runs on three hits through the first seven innings. Carl Willis pitched a perfect eighth and Rick Aguilera finished up for his 26th save, allowing Cecil Fielder's 25th homer.

Mark Leiter (6-6), who started the inning for Detroit, walked Mike Pagliarulo, the first batter he faced. He moved up on David McCarty's bunt and Derek Lee's flyball to center, then scored when Mack hit a 1-2 pitch off the facing of the second deck in right.

It was the sixth homer for Mack.

Mariners 9, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Ken Griffey Jr. hit a two-run single off nemesis Steve Howe during a six-run rally in the seventh inning and also homered, giving Seattle a victory over New York.

Mike Stanley's second grand slam in three days helped the Yankees take a 5-0 lead after five innings. But the Mariners bounced back to end their four-game losing streak and stop New York's four-game winning string.

Dave Fleming (6-1) won his sixth straight decision. Howe (3-4) threw only one pitch and was the loser.

Red Sox 2, Angels 1

BOSTON — Boston's Scott Fletcher soft hopper over the mound in the ninth inning got Scott Cooper home with the winning run in a win over California.

The Red Sox moved into fourth place in the AL East, 1½ games behind Baltimore. They are 20-5 since falling 13 games out of first on June 20. Their last five wins have been by one or two runs.

California suffered its fourth straight loss, including two 2-1 losses and a 3-0 setback.

Tony Fossas (1-0) retired both batters he faced in the top of the ninth with a runner on first.

The Angels had eight hits but no runs against Frank Viola through seven innings but finally scored in the eighth. Chad Curtis singled, went to second on a groundout and third on Chili Davis' single. Ken Ryan relieved and gave up a tying single to Damion Easley, who went 3-for-3.

White Sox 2, Blue Jays 1

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas' two-run homer in the sixth inning backed the four-hit pitching of Alex Fernandez, leading Chicago to a victory over Toronto.

With the White Sox trailing 1-0 on John Olerud's 18th homer in the second inning, Joey Cora looped a one-out double to center and Thomas hit Juan Guzman's next pitch for his 22nd homer into the left-field bleachers.

Fernandez (12-4) picked up his fifth straight win. The White Sox won for the sixth time in the last seven games to end Toronto's two-game winning streak.

Olerud, the major leagues' leading hitter, homered for the first hit off Fernandez who then retired 10 straight before Ed Sprague singled with two outs in the fifth. Paul Molitor singled in the seventh.

McGriff rallies new team after fire

Associated Press

ATLANTA — A spectacular fire at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium 90 minutes before gametime Tuesday night overshadowed the debut of Fred McGriff, whose homer rallied Atlanta to an 8-5 victory over St. Louis Cardinals.

■ NL Roundup

The Braves rallied from a 5-0 deficit in the sixth inning and David Justice scored the go-ahead run in the eighth from second when Rheal Cormier (5-6) bobbled Terry Pendleton's sacrifice bunt and threw wildly to first. Justice had opened the inning with a single and took second when rightfielder Mark Whiten fumbled the ball.

The Braves added two more runs in the inning on Deion Sanders' run-scoring single. Francisco Cabrera, who was walked intentionally, moved to third on Sanders' hit and scored after Pendleton when Sanders was caught in a rundown between first and second.

Mark Wohlers (4-0) earned the victory with one scoreless inning of relief and Mike Stanton pitched a perfect ninth for his 26th save.

Pirates 2, Astros 1

PITTSBURGH — Randy Tomlin outpitched former teammate Doug Drabek with his first complete game in more than a year, throwing a four-hitter as Pittsburgh beat Houston.

Tomlin (3-6) struck out three and walked one in the Pirates' first complete game since Steve Cooke beat San Francisco on June 26.

Tomlin hadn't won since May 17 and was 0-1 with a no-decision in two starts since returning from a six-week stay on the disabled list with elbow tendinitis. He had allowed six runs in eight innings and hadn't pitched a complete game since shutting out New York 3-0 on June 7, 1992.

Drabek (7-11), pitching in Pittsburgh against the Pirates for the first time in his career, gave up two runs on five hits in seven innings but continued to struggle on the road. He is 3-6 with a 4.24 ERA away from the Astrodome.

Padres 4, Mets 1

SAN DIEGO — Greg Harris pitched a four-hitter as San Diego beat New York, snapping the Mets' season-best three-game winning streak.

Harris (10-9) set a career high for victories in one season, striking out five and walking two. It was the fourth complete of the year for Harris.

Giants 8, Expos 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Darren Lewis hit a two-run homer, had three hits and scored four runs as San Francisco beat Montreal, extending the Expos' losing streak to three games.

Lewis' second homer of the season came in the sixth inning after Andy Allanson reached base on first baseman Frank Bolick's error and pitcher Bill Swift's sacrifice to make it 7-0.

Expos starter Dennis Martinez (10-7) pitched 5 1-3 innings, allowing nine hits and seven runs.

Will Clark hit a 374-foot solo homer, his ninth, in the fifth inning off Martinez to make it 5-0.

Swift (13-5) held the Expos hitless until the fifth inning when he allowed singles to Moises Alou and Sean Berry. Swift worked 6 2-3 innings, allowing seven hits and three runs.

Reds 8, Cubs 3

CINCINNATI — Tim Belcher blocked out the trade talk to get his eighth win in nine decisions and lead Cincinnati to a victory over Chicago, ending the Cubs' five-game winning streak.

Belcher (9-5) gave up seven hits and three runs over 6 1-3 innings. The right-hander leads the club in wins and hasn't lost since June 20.

The Reds have talked to the Chicago White Sox about trading Belcher, a free agent after the season. He removed some of his belongings from his locker two weeks ago in anticipation of a trade.

Jerry Spradlin allowed one hit in the final 2 1-3 innings for his second save.

Rockies 6, Marlins 3

MIAMI — Andres Galarraga hit a 455-foot home run and Dante Bichette added a three-run homer to help Colorado beat Florida.

Colorado broke a five-game losing streak and clinched the season series against its expansion rival. The Rockies lead 7-4 with one game remaining today.

Galarraga hit the longest homer yet at Joe Robbie Stadium, a two-run shot over the scoreboard in left field. The homer, Galarraga's 14th, came against Chris Hammond (10-6) to give the Rockies a 2-0 lead in the fourth inning.

A's make new pitch

CLEVELAND (AP) — Tony LaRussa has given a new twist to the phrase "pitching rotation."

Instead of scheduling one pitcher per game, the Oakland manager is now scheduling three.

No longer will an Oakland starter have a chance for a complete game, or even a win. No longer will an Oakland pitcher have the luxury of four days' rest.

Under La Russa's new plan, the A's pitchers will be limited to about three innings or 50 pitches, and they'll have to be ready to pitch again three days later. Only the most efficient starter would be able to squeeze five innings — the amount necessary to get credit for a victory — into 50 pitches.

The scheme was hatched after the A's lost three weekend games in New York by a composite score of 32-14. Oakland hasn't been higher than sixth place in the AL West since the end of April.

Something had to be done to save the season, and nothing conventional was working.

"It's an interesting shot to take. We'll watch it real closely and see what happens," La Russa said.

The multi-pitcher approach will end, he said, "as soon as I think it's not our best shot."

On Monday night, in the opener of a three-game set at Cleveland, La Russa scheduled Todd Van Poppel as his starter, to be followed by Ron Darling and Kelly Downs: Van Poppel threw exactly 50 pitches over four innings, and Darling went the rest of the way in the 4-2 loss to the Indians.

Because Van Poppel and Darling combined for fewer than 100 pitches, Downs was not used. He was pushed back into the mix for Tuesday night's game, to be started by Mike Mohler with a supporting cast of Bobby Witt and John Briscoe.

Bob Welch, who pitched five innings Sunday in New York, was scheduled to work again today, on two day's rest, along with Rich Gossage and Shawn Hillegas.

All of the pitching lineups, of course, are subject to change.

"I don't even mess with saying I understand truly what's going on," Darling said. "We just have to stay ready to go, and then go until he taps us on the shoulder. Tony and (pitching coach) Dave Duncan really think this is good for the ballclub."

La Russa particularly hopes the system will benefit Van Poppel, a 21-year-old rookie.

"If you stop and think about it, if he pitches every three days, he'll get a heck of a lot more experience than going out every five days," La Russa said. "If he goes out every five days, if he struggles, he has five days before he goes again. This way, he'll go out every three days regardless."

Van Poppel wasn't ready to pass judgment on the plan yet.
