Bush will offer 'upbeat' address

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Bush, trying to forge an election-year agenda for a Democratic-run Congress, presents a State of the Union address tonight offering an upbeat picture of the nation's health while prodding lawmakers to approve legislation they ignored last year.

Bush also will issue a challenge to make American students first in the world by the year 2000 in science and math, two areas where they have ranked near the bottom in international testing, officials said Tuesday.

Bush will address a joint session of Congress in a nationally broadcast appearance at 8 p.m. CST. It will be his maiden State of the Union address, although he went before Congress with a budget and deficit-reduction package last February.

At the top of Bush's wish list for lawmakers are leftover bills dealing with clean air, crime, child care and cuts in capital gains tax rates.

White House chief of staff John Sununu said chances for action are better this year because of the November elections.

"I think all of a sudden about April or May, it will dawn on Congress that it's a congressional election, not a presidential election year, and that failures to get things done will be seen as failures of the Democrat leadership in the House, the Democrat leadership in the Senate," he said.

"And I think at that time, maybe we'll get them back to a bipartisan perspective and get some legislation passed," Sununu added.

Bush also has the momentum of strong support from Americans. Surveys taken after the invasion of Panama showed Bush with a job-approval rating of 79 to 81 percent, higher than former President Reagan ever attained.

Much of the suspense of Bush's address was dampened by the unveiling of his $1.2 trillion budget plan, which outlined new initiatives where he wants to spend more money and areas where he wants to cut.

"So all the details of the programs are really on the table right now," Sununu said.

Generally speaking, Bush requested more money for education, space, the environment and drugs while proposing cuts for Medicare, college student loans, mass transit and farm subsidies.

White House officials said there were no major initiatives or surprises remaining for Bush's speech.

"Obviously, we don't want to overstate expectations, don't want anyone to overexpand an agenda," said Sununu.

'Cowboy' Haley will be honored

By BILL MODISSETT
Staff Writer

For decades, J. Evetts Haley's writing has captured the essence of the western frontier in numerous historical books and articles which intimated deep understanding of the land and the people of the southwestern United States. Through his writing, Haley captured the hardship, the humor, the tragedy and the subtle joys of the cowboy because he has ridden the same dusty trails and sun-bleached plains of the cowboy.

Haley, 88, is more than a historian and a writer. He is a cowboy who spent years branding cattle and building corrals and fences.

On March 17th, the longtime Midlander and two others will be inducted into the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, joining the elite of the cowboy world.

The other 1990 inductees are Texas cattleman Watt Matthews, who at age 90 continues to run the historic Lamshead cattle ranch in West Texas, and rancher Earl H. Monahan of Nebraska. A leader in the Nebraska cattle industry, Monahan's ranch in Hyannis, is a model of professionalism in beef cattle production and soil conservation. He also is credited with the establishment of rodeo in his area.

Midlander chairing effort to improve White House rooms

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Pursuing her wish to keep the presidential mansion in "tip-top shape," first lady Barbara Bush has called upon long-time Midland friend Dottie Craig to raise a $25 million endowment fund for the upkeep and improvement of the White House's famed public rooms.

"It's a tremendous honor and a great privilege. And, of course, when you're looking at $25 million a great challenge as well," Mrs. Craig, the wife of Midland oilman Earle Craig Jr., said of her appointment as chairwoman of the White House Endowment Fund Board of Directors.

The Craigs and Bushes have been friends since the 1950s when the couples lived in Midland. Both women were native New Yorkers, attended preparatory schools back East, and shared a common interest in fine art, theater, opera and civic work.

In 1985, Mrs. Bush called upon Mrs. Craig to help raise money for the restoration of the vice president's mansion.

To kick off the new effort aimed at acquiring, preserving and conserving the fine arts and decorative objects in the White House, Mrs. Bush directed the board to raise the $25 million in a two-year period. No federal money is available for the needs that the endowment fund in come will serve.

"I am completely optimistic about raising our goal. And, when we do, we will go out of business," Mrs. Craig said. "If in later times they need more money for the Endowment Fund, all the mechanics are in place."

"Our organization will be dissolved, but they can easily put together another one and raise more funds," she said.

According to Mrs. Craig, the process of establishing an organization to raise $25 million for the acquisition, preservation and conservation of fine arts and decorative objects in the White House began with the creation of the White House Preservation Fund in 1979.

That organization was not able to raise the money and was dissolved in December 1989.

Mrs. Bush resurrected the effort on Jan. 12, directing the board to Drillers challenged to see '90s as 'decade of opportunity'

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

There is a renewed enthusiasm and positive outlook in the drilling industry for the first time in 10 years, James Day, president of International Association of Drilling Contractors, told drilling contractors in Midland Tuesday.

Speaking to the Permian Basin Chapter of IADC, Day, who is also the president of Noble Drilling Co. of Ardmore, Okla., said there were some very positive trends facing the industry as it heads into a new decade.

There were also issues drillers must face now.

Day, who joined the drilling company's parent company, Noble Affiliates, 13 years ago on the business side pointed to three surveys as indicators that the 1990s would be a "decade of opportunity."

Said Day: "An Arthur Anderson survey of 250 oil operators reveal that 70 percent will increase drilling and production expenditures. Salomon Brothers has estimated a 10.5 percent increase in expenditures, and Rauscher Pierce has estimated that free world oil demand will rise from 51.7 million barrels per day in 1989 to 52.1 in 1990."

Day noted that one survey concluded that 71 percent of the oil companies felt it was more cost effective to drill for reserves rather than buy them.

He is also excited about horizontal drilling and feels the new techniques could have wide application in the industry. "This is an exciting new technology that will help our industry," he said.

This year won't be the year of major recovery, says Day, but it will be one of substantial improvement.

Coming off its worse year in history, in which the annual rig count averaged 869 rigs — the lowest since World War II — Day says the U.S. rig count this year will probably average 1,000.

He noted that the major oil companies are still spending 60 percent of their drilling budgets overseas. "For the first time Noble now has more rigs working overseas than in the U.S.," he added.

"For the most part the recovery of the domestic drilling industry will be driven by natural gas prices," said Day. He feels this year will probably bring a balance between demand and supply in the natural gas industry and an immediate response in the rig count.

"Who knows the natural gas surplus bubble may have already burst and we may be seeing the effects of it now," he speculated.

The critical issues facing drillers, according to Day, are a manpower shortage, slim margins and the environment.

More home sales, higher prices boost local market

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

Residential sales activity in Midland is on a dramatic drive upward following a slow year, and those in the business of selling houses are positioned for an active decade, according to local Realtors.

The sale of 90 houses by Midland Realtors in December reflects an increase of 25 percent from the 72 units sold in December 1988, according to the Midland Board of Realtors.

Dollar volume of these residences was $6.62 million, compared to a volume of $5.24 million in December 1988.

Average sale price of a home in December was $73,560, compared to an average price of $72,909 in December 1988.

"The recent increase in the price per barrel of oil helped our market," said Roy Proctor, president of the Midland Board of Realtors. "The oil economy still continues to transfer in homebuyers."

Proctor said that though sales are up, "more important is the fact that average sales price also increased."

"Realtors feel exceptionally good finishing the fourth quarter of 1989 on an upward trend compared to recent years," Proctor continued. "We feel that gives us the momentum to go into the first quarter of 1990 with the expectations of not only a better economy but continued improvement in the number of homes sold."

Kay Sutton, a Realtor with Don Harvey, agreed. "There is a lot of activity in the market now that has been slow in coming," she said. "I'm excited about being a Realtor in this market and look forward to the 1990s."

Ms. Sutton attributed the activity to low interest rates, which have remained low for months and overall optimism in the market.

"We've finally hit a point after slow movement all year of a lot of activity," she said. "The Realtors have worked for this and it's finally paying off."

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of showers are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 40s and winds will be from the southwest at 10-20 mph becoming westerly after midnight.

Decreasing clouds are expected for Thursday with a high near 60 and winds from the northwest at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 66 was 14 degrees cooler than the record high of 80 set for that date in 1971. The overnight low of 39 was 31 degrees warmer than the record low of eight degrees set for this date in 1985.

STATE

Freezing precipitation is possible across the Texas Panhandle late tonight and Thursday while the rest of the state has a chance for scattered showers and thunderstorms.

Clouds will be increasing today and it will be mostly cloudy and breezy across South Texas tonight.

The frozen precipitation in the Panhandle is expected to begin late tonight with freezing rain or snow expected.

The precipitation will be triggered by a trough of low pressure developing over Colorado and New Mexico.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the 20s in the Panhandle to the 60s across South Texas.

market, she said.

Of the residential units sold in December, six were new houses, valued at $930,936 for an average sale price of a new house in December of $155,156. The 84 existing houses sold were valued at more than $5.98 million, for an average sale price of an existing house of $67,732.

In December 1988, five new houses were sold, valued at $981,450 for an average sale price of $196,290. The 67 existing houses sold were valued at more than $4.56 million, for an average sale price of an existing house of $68,179.

The number of active residential listings in December was 942, the lowest inventory since 1982, Proctor said.

Of those active listings, 132 have two or fewer bedrooms, 562 have three bedrooms, 220 have four bedrooms, and 28 have five or more bedrooms. The active residential listings in Midland are valued at more than $81.3 million for an average list price of $86,398.

A house in Midland stays on the market an average 161 days, compared to an average of 154 days in December 1988.

According to the Real Estate Center at Texas A&M University, in November 1988, the median price of a house in Midland $62,300, ranked 10th highest of 25 metropolitan areas in Texas. Some 1,054 listed houses remained unsold in November, giving Midland a nine-month supply of houses to be sold.

This compares to a state median price of $67,900, with 84,754 listed houses in the state remaining unsold, and an 11 month supply of houses to be sold.

During 1989, the greatest number of units, 149, were sold in June by Midland Realtors. The highest sales volume was in August, when Realtors sold houses valued at $11.7 million. The highest average sale price was in July at $91,702. The lowest average sale price was in January, $63,815.

The environmental issue will affect where we drill, how we drill, when we drill and what we drill with. In the past we have been reactive to environmental issues, but now we the industry need to become involved and develop environmentally sound procedures. He is most concerned about environmental problems surrounding drilling fluids.

Day said profits margins for the drilling industry continue to be critically low and to affect the quality of drilling. "A survey of land contractors revealed that margins are about 25 percent below what they should be. Profits are so low that contractors cannot replace their equipment which is rapidly wearing out."

The manpower shortage of qualified roughnecks is critical, says Day, and is already affecting the number of rigs in the field. "Noble has postponed putting rigs back to work, simply because we don't have enough manpower."

To address the shortage, he says his company is running an on-the-job training program. "Where we have four man crews, we are running five, and where we have five-man crews we are running six." He explained that the extra man was to observe and instruct new crews.

Speechwriters seeking catch-phrases

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush may not outshine "a thousand points of light" or top "a kinder and gentler nation," but he's bound to try out a new catch-phrase or two in tonight's State of the Union address.

Presidential speechwriters always strive for those few pithy words or flowing lines that will live on after the applause has died.

But the ghostwriter who put those earlier words in Bush's mouth and taught us to read his lips, Peggy Noonan, is now persona non grata at the White House since becoming a tell-it-all author. And neither Bush, left to his own devices, nor his current speechwriters have been having much luck at matching the old Noonan nuggets.

"The underpinnings of the United States, the State of the Union, is not bad," Bush told a group of newspaper publishers last week when asked to preview tonight's address.

"Not bad," might be an honest assessment. But it doesn't have much ring.

Meanwhile, Bush's speechwriters seem to be straining for soaring passages.

"With all the flash and fluff in the world today, there's something we can't afford to lose sight of — something deceptively simple. It's who we are that makes this nation what it is," was one recent offering.

In his 1989 inaugural address, Bush spoke lyrically of a "new breeze" blowing through the totalitarian world. He promised Democratic leaders an "age of the offered hand."

And he summed up the nation's budget woes in six words: "We have more will than wallet."

Noonan, again.

It was the last speech she wrote for George Bush. White House sources said there was a falling out between Noonan and White House Chief of Staff John Sununu and other top Bush advisers in early 1989, partly due to her own growing fame as a wordsmith.

Peggy Noonan — now persona non grata at the White House since becoming a tell-it-all author — was the speechwriter who put words like "a thousand points of light" and "a kinder, gentler nation" in President Bush's mouth and taught us to read his lips

Noonan recounts her experiences as a speechwriter for Bush and former President Reagan in a book, "What I Saw at the Revolution: A Political Life in the Reagan Era," published last week.

Bush has made no secret of his disdain for insider or "kiss-and-tell" books written by former aides. The publication of Noonan's book did little to heal the rift.

When she began writing speeches for Bush in the 1988 campaign,

Noonan writes, he gave her a list of words with "special meaning" to him: "family, grandkids, love, decency, honor, pride, tolerance, hope, kindness, loyalty, freedom, caring, heart, faith, service to country, fair (fair play), strength, healing, excellence."

From those threads she began weaving Bush's speeches. But she ran up against one major obstacle: "George Bush hated to say 'I'."

"I became adept at pronouns sentences," Noonan says. "Instead of 'I moved to Texas and soon we joined the Republican party,' it was 'Moved to Texas, joined the Republican party, raised a family.'"

Noonan suggests Bush's modesty came from his "doughty old man," Dorothy Walker Bush, "who used to rap his knuckles for bragging, a brag apparently being defined as any sentence with the first person singular as its subject."

She confesses visions of Bush taking the oath on the Capitol steps with these words: "Do solemnly swear, will preserve and protect ..."

Bush's characterization of a "kinder, gentler nation," contained in his acceptance speech to the Republican National Convention, has become one of the president's signature phrases. But, Noonan writes, it was just "kinder nation" in her first draft. She later scribbled in "gentler."

Bush's "no new taxes" line, also in the same widely acclaimed acceptance speech, was suggested by Jack Kemp, now the secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Noonan says.

But she takes all the credit for "read my lips," even though Bush aides took it out because "there is no history of presidential candidates making personal-organ references in acceptance speeches."

Bush left it in. One line he scratched out: a reference Noonan proposed to Michael Dukakis' slight stature.

Noonan claims full credit for Bush's "thousand points of light," but allows it might have been influenced by a line from a favorite author, Thomas Wolfe, who wrote in "The Web and the Rock" of a "thousand points of friendly light."

Bush uses the phrase to this day to praise volunteer efforts.

ADDRESS

The challenge to improve students' math and science skills was hinted at in Bush's budget.

Without mentioning the math and science goal, the budget proposes $230 million — a 70 percent increase — in funds for states to improve the abilities of teachers in those two disciplines.

In addition, National Science Foundation programs for science, math and engineering education would receive a $100 million increase, to $460 million, under Bush's proposal.

Education Secretary Lauro F. Cavazos, citing results of an international comparative study of students in more than a dozen industrialized nations, complained in a speech that U.S. students consistently ranked near the bottom in math and science.

Bush has previewed his address with a series of speeches this year, warning the democratic reforms in Eastern Europe will not produce a "peace dividend" of defense savings for the United States.

While Democrats are hoping to cut Pentagon spending, Bush said at one outing he would not "naively cut the muscle out of our defense posture."

Officials said half of the speech would be devoted to foreign policy, including the changes in Eastern Europe and in Panama after the removal of Manuel Antonio Noriega.

Bush worked on the speech Tuesday with media advisor Roger Alles, refining passages and practicing his delivery.

Bush said last week he had "a renewed feeling that the country is going to be in pretty good shape down the road if we can handle our part of the government right."

"I mean, there's a wonderful feeling in some parts of this country, and that isn't to say there's not a lot of hopelessness and a lot of despair that goes with some of these enormous social problems," the president said.

But the underpinnings of the United States, the state of the union, is not bad."

Researchers attempting to take the bite out of female mosquitoes

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — An appetite suppressant for mosquitoes could be an answer to that summer-time scourge, but one challenge still remaining is getting the substance out of the lab and into female mosquitoes.

"Right now you'd have to inject each mosquito with a little syringe," said University of Idaho entomologist Marc Klownen.

Female mosquitoes — the ones that do the buzzing and biting each summer — need protein in human and animal blood to produce eggs. Klownen, in 13 years of study, has found that females stop feeding once they have a bellyful of blood.

One reason is a hormone produced during the egg-creating process. Klownen has found that injecting the hormone into female mosquitoes tricks them into thinking they're full. They stop feeding and biting.

Research now is shifting to biotechnology, in search of a gene that causes mosquitoes to create the appetite suppressant hormone, he said.

Haley came to Midland with his parents, John A. and Julia Evetts Haley, in 1906 and spent his early life in school in Midland with summers on his father's ranch near the Pecos River dedicated to learning the ways of a cowboy. After attending West Texas State University at Canyon, where he became actively involved in the work of the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society and the University of Texas in Austin, where he received his masters degree in history, Haley began to pursue and document the pioneer history of this region.

Early interviews resulted in publication of "The XIT Ranch of Texas and the Early Days of the Llano Estacado" and a biography, "Charles Goodnight: Cowman and Plainsman."

In a career spanning more than half a century, he documented the lives and events of many early-day

Southwesterners through other books, among them "Jeff Milton: A Good Man with a Gun," "George W. Littlefield, Texan," and "Fort Concho and the Texas Frontier." His noteworthy "A Texan looks at London: A Study in Illegitimate Power," published in 1964 as Lyndon Baines Johnson was seeking election to the presidency, sold more than five and a half million copies.

In all, Haley wrote more than 25 books in addition to numerous newspaper and magazine articles. He is recognized and has been cited as one of the greatest living historians in the United States.

At the same time he was carrying out his writing, Haley also was busy working in the cattle industry. He managed ranches for J.M. West of Houston and others, in addition to owning ranches of his own.

In 1976 Haley returned to Midland and established the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library which contains the more than 700 interviews he conducted during his career as a historian and writer, along with a collection of Texas and Southwestern history and ranch materials.

Minister's daughter hospitalized after mail bomb explodes in lap

HOUSTON (AP) — A 31-year-old woman remained hospitalized today as federal authorities continued investigating the mail bomb that exploded in her lap.

Lisa Osteen, daughter of the Rev. John Osteen, pastor of the Lakewood Church in northeast Houston, suffered bruised and lacerated hands, torso and upper legs in the Tuesday morning explosion. She was listed in good condition at Methodist Hospital late Tuesday.

Meanwhile, federal authorities say they are unsure whether the bombing may be linked to similar incidents in Alabama and Georgia that claimed the lives of a federal judge and a civil rights attorney and city councilman, respectively.

"There doesn't appear to be a tremendous amount of similarities, but we're not ruling anything out yet," said Bob Switzer, special agent with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"We're trying to figure out what happened," said Houston Police Homicide Sgt. H.G. Welch. "The bomb squad is trying to piece it all together, but we haven't yet put all the pieces together."

Ms. Osteen, director of ministries at the 10,000-member church, apparently triggered the nail-packed bomb when she unwrapped the book-sized package about 10:45 a.m. Tuesday. The package was addressed to her father.

"She's going to be alright," said Osteen, who was not at the church at the time. "We just thank God that she was protected. And we know the angels of God watched after her and our prayers protected her."

Dr. Paul Pepe of Houston Emergency Medical Services said Ms. Osteen was lucky to have survived the blast that shredded her chair and damaged her office.

"When you look at the nature of this bomb — the massive destruction that was done in the room, the spikes that were sent all over the place — she's been blessed," Pepe said.

Osteen, who founded the church also known as "The Oasis of Love" that televises services nationally, said he did not know what could have prompted the bomb.

"We'll pray for those who have done this. We know they are sick and they need help," he said.

Osteen preaches a conservative theology, favors school prayer and opposes abortion. His non-denominational ministry, founded in 1959 after Lisa was cured of congenital cerebral palsy, features speaking in tongues and healing by laying on hands, said the Rev. Jim Mitchell, resident scholar in religion at the University of Houston.

But Osteen is not known either for taking strong public political positions or for extensive counseling services that might have caused either extremists or mentally unstable people to make him a target, Mitchell said.

"We have no idea what the motive is. We can't link this to anything else," said Switzer. "There's no indication. This is nothing more than a single incident."

In December, nail-studded mail bombs killed a white federal judge near Birmingham, Ala., and a black civil rights lawyer in Savannah, Ga., in attacks investigators said were motivated by race.

"This stuff normally doesn't happen in Houston. I've been with the department 18½ years and I can't recall anything in the mail like this," said Officer R.L. Bishoff, who was handling the bomb-sniffing dog for police department.

Base closings could be beneficial, expert says

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Some beneficial side effects could accompany proposed closings of military bases in Texas or elsewhere, says a member of a Texas A&M think tank on defensive matters.

The Pentagon's plan, announced on Monday, to close or scale back 72 U.S. military installations — eight in Texas — riled officials in large cities and small towns alike. Targeted communities nationwide began mobilizing to avoid the cuts.

"Closing a base does not automatically create economic disaster in a locality," said Dr. Art Blair of the Mosher Institute for Defense Studies.

"Bases may occupy highly desirable real estate, or be converted to industrial parks, or used as prisons or rehabilitation centers or academic facilities," he said.

"What is essential is that all concerned be involved in planning for the consequences of closing a base," Blair added.

A Texas A&M economist said although it's a bitter pill to swallow for the communities where the installations are located, the blow of base closings will be less painful if implemented gradually in a growing economy.

Dr. Jared Hazleton joined Texas A&M last year to direct economic analysis and forecasting efforts for the College of Business Administration.

"Nothing is going to happen overnight. If it did, that might be enough to stall the economy. But there has been plenty of warning that such cuts are being seriously considered," Hazleton said.

On the Pentagon list for proposed closings are the Army ammunition plant, Karnack; Chase Field Naval Air Station, Beeville; Bergstrom Air Force Base, Austin; and the Defense Contract Administration regional office, Dallas.

Scheduled for reductions or realignments are Fort Hood, Killeen; Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio; Red River Army Depot, Texarkana; and Kelly Air Force Base, San Antonio.

The Pentagon also proposed a cut in the contract for the V-22 Osprey tilt-rotor aircraft.

Drug suspect faces hearing

EL PASO (AP) — A man being held in El Paso in connection with a marijuana seizure in Spokane, Wash., will face a detention hearing in federal court here today.

Sydney Kirkland Dudley Jr. is jailed in connection with the confiscation of 252 pounds of marijuana over the weekend, according to court documents. His father is jailed in Dona Ana County in Las Cruces, N.M.

Two relatives, brothers Kenneth Dudley, 49, and Donald, 39, both from El Paso are jailed in Spokane and also face a detention hearing Wednesday.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in El Paso declined to answer questions about the arrests and referred all calls to the U.S. Attorney's office.

The U.S. Attorney's office did not disclose details of the arrests on Tuesday.

Kenneth and Donald Dudley were arrested Friday night at a Spokane Valley motel on charges of possession with intent to distribute marijuana, said Mark Lloyd of the DEA in Spokane.

Federal authorities also seized 252 pounds of marijuana that was wrapped in 12 compressed bales.

Education task force studying options

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Stripping the elected state Board of Education of policy-making powers is one option an appointed panel is mulling to make public education more accountable in Texas.

The news came during a Tuesday meeting of the Task Force on Public Education, whose 12 members were appointed by state leaders in response to a landmark state Supreme Court decision this past October.

In a move that would come at the expense of the state Board of Education, the task force in its final report may recommend a stronger role for a legislative oversight committee in setting Texas Education Agency policies.

The task force also may recommend taking away the Board of Education's power to appoint the commissioner of education.

In that case, the governor either would appoint the commissioner with consent from the Senate or make the choice from a list of candidates submitted by the legislative oversight committee.

The options are outlined in a white paper released during the panel's second public meeting since its creation.

Board Chairman Monte Hasie of Lubbock reacted negatively to the suggestions on Tuesday, saying they "would basically do away with the state Board of Education."

In a November 1987 referendum, Texas voters decided to resume electing state board members after House Bill 72 school reforms changed the body to an appointive panel in 1984.

The board currently chooses the commissioner of education, who manages day-to-day operations at the TEA and implements board-approved policies.

Hasie, who Gov. Bill Clements chose as chairman from the board's 12 elected members, said he is "disappointed" that the suggestions, which he has heard before, would come from the task force.

Task Force Chairman Charles Miller, a Houston businessman and another Clements appointee, acknowledged the ideas are designed to "stir some interest and controversy" among education professionals.

"The problem is we don't know who is in charge — nobody does," Miller said. "The Legislature sets policies and the state board carries them out — sometimes slowly, or poorly, or even sometimes hardly at all."

As to the range of options contained in the 50-page white paper, "some of these things are fairly unusual — you could almost say radical," Miller said.

Later Tuesday, Gov. Bill Clements told the task force it should provide "a new look at an old issue."

"I would not like for you to be in a position of saying that this issue has been studied to death," the governor said.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and chairman of the Senate Education Committee, voiced that fear when he was appointed to the task force by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Parker did not attend Tuesday's meeting.

Clements has called a special legislative session on the school finance issue for Feb. 27, the same day that the task force is scheduled to release its final recommendations.

The Supreme Court this past October ruled that the state's method of providing money for public schools is constitutional because it discriminates against students in poorer districts.

The governor on Tuesday reiterated he is against imposing new taxes to pay for education reforms that would satisfy the court.

This past week, Hobby said a state income tax that would replace the sales tax and business franchise tax is the only "rational" solution to the state's education money woes.

The governor urged that the task force's final report set "broad principles" instead of "spending a lot of time trying to dot 'i's and cross 't's."

Although the panel had titled its white paper "The Path to a Quality Education for All Texas Students," Clements said the group should concentrate on the broad range of school districts of medium wealth.

Another task force member, former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, said he was beginning to see the outlines of consensus within the task force.

"The key ... is at the juncture of equity and measures related to performance," he said.

Rains calls for castration for repeat sex offenders

AUSTIN (AP) — Jack Rains, a Republican hopeful for governor, said repeat sex offenders should be castrated as a condition of parole or face life in prison, and he derided two of his GOP opponents' proposals to use inmates for labor.

Rains said Clayton Williams' plan to build "boot camps" for young drug offenders to break rocks and Tom Luce's proposal to have inmates work at recycling centers "make us feel good," but don't address the problem of crime.

"I want to see us allocate some time for people to learn to read and write and deal with substance abuse," Rains, former secretary of state, said. "I want to cut down on the rate people are going to the criminal justice system and increase the number that are going into higher education. That will really make me feel good."

Rains said convicted rapists should serve prison terms of at least 20 years. He called for increased funding for sex counseling, rape crisis centers and state law enforcement laboratories to upgrade DNA genetic fingerprinting.

He said these proposals would be cost-efficient in the long run by attacking "the root cause of crime" and could be funded without a tax increase by adjusting the budget and through increased revenue from the state's economic growth.

He said the average rape conviction in Texas draws an 18-year sentence, but convicted rapists typically serve three years before parole. "I find that outrageous and hardly a deterrent to a most despicable crime," he said.

Under his proposal, repeat sexual offenders must either consent to chemical castration as a condition of parole or face life in prison.

James Harrington, of the Texas American Civil Liberties Union, said Rains' chemical castration proposal "as a practical matter is not a free choice."

In other developments Tuesday, Williams, the GOP gubernatorial front runner, said he was naming former Texas Ranger and retired U.S. Marshal Clint Peoples as honorary campaign chairman for law enforcement.

WILLIAM B. BROWDER ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

My father was a lawyer and I grew up around the courthouse and judges. For these many years, I have been involved in trying numerous lawsuits before good judges, average judges and some judges who mistakenly held against me and my clients. I have known and worked with Nick Taylor for 16 years and I know that Nick possesses complete integrity, is industrious, and has a very strong sense of fairness. He can and will be a good judge. I endorse his candidacy and ask that you support him in the Republican Primary on Tuesday, March 13, 1990.

Judge will remove Confederate flag from courtroom

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston judge removed a Confederate battle flag from his courtroom Tuesday after he met with representatives of the NAACP.

State District Judge Allen J. Daggett told reporters he will replace the flag with a "Houston Proud" banner issued through the Greater Houston Partnership, which includes the chamber of commerce for the city.

"I think people would be more understanding of a flag that engenders unity rather than division," said Justice of the Peace Alexander Green, president of the Houston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"Traditionally, the (Confederate) flag has left a bad taste in the mouths of persons who have been oppressed," he said.

Green and others met with Daggett about the flag late Tuesday after an attorney representing New York Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield in a divorce hearing commented on the Confederate flag's presence in the courtroom.

The flag, used by the South during the Civil War, has been interpreted as a symbol favoring slavery — something critics said has no business being in a judicial court.

"The connotation of the Confederate flag in 1990 in the United States is one of representing pro-segregation and pro-racism," said Bruce Griffiths, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union in Houston.

"Judge Daggett certainly has the right to show his own belief on his own time," Griffiths said Monday. "But a Confederate flag should not be shown in a courtroom as the official paraphernalia of the court."

State District Judge Allen J. Daggett removed a Confederate battle flag from his courtroom Tuesday after he met with representatives of the NAACP. Daggett displayed the flag with the five others that once flew over Texas. He will replace it with a "Houston Proud" banner from the Greater Houston Partnership.

But Daggett, a Democrat up for re-election this year, said the flag is flown with five others that have flown over Texas in its history, including those of Texas, U.S., France, Mexico and Spain.

"Anyone with clear eyesight can see it's all six flags," Daggett told a Houston Chronicle reporter.

STATE IN BRIEF

Atheist wants phrase dropped

AUSTIN (AP) — Atheist leader Jon Murray has asked a three-judge federal appeals panel to drop part of its court-opening ceremony that mentions God when it hears his case next week.

Murray, president of Society of Separationists, Inc., said on Feb. 8 three judges from the New Orleans-based 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will meet in Fort Worth to hear his case challenging the swearing-in of prospective jurors with "So help me God."

The appeals court, Murray says, routinely opens with the cry, "Hear ye. Hear ye. Hear ye. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is now opening according to law. God save the United States and this honorable court."

By using an opening cry that includes "God," he said, "It appears to me that such a practice can only be prejudicial. It gives every appearance that the court itself practices what atheists eschew."

Murray in a letter to Judges John Wisdom, John Duhe and Sam Johnson, said if the court will not drop the mention of God, he requests permission to remain seated "during the religious remarks since I cannot, in good conscience, participate therein or acquiesce thereto, when I perceive it to be a direct breach of my First Amendment rights."

Teens indicted in vandalism

TYLER (AP) — A Smith County grand jury has indicted two Tyler teenagers in connection with a vandalism spree last November after authorities obtained a videotape they allegedly made.

Assistant District Attorney Frank Henderson said Tuesday a counselor at Robert E. Lee High School obtained the videotape and turned it over to police.

William Dwayne York, 17, and Anthony Michael Gattone, 18, each were indicted on five counts of criminal mischief and one count of arson.

Two younger boys allegedly involved in the incident had their cases handled by juvenile authorities.

If convicted, York and Gattone face up to 20 years on the arson charge and up to 10 years for the criminal mischief charge.

Henderson said on Nov. 6, 1989, someone broke a plate glass window at the high school, used a baseball bat to break windows of cars parked on roadsides and set fire to a disabled vehicle near Tyler.

Panel to study comp law

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislative leaders have appointed a committee to monitor the new workers' compensation law.

Gov. Bill Hobby named Sens. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, and Cyndi Taylor, R-San Antonio, Glasgow will serve as chairman.

House Speaker Gib Lewis named three members, including the House sponsor of the measure, Rep. Richard Smith, R-College Station.

Others appointed to the Workers' Compensation Legislative Oversight Committee were Reps. David Counts, D-Knox City, and Robert Early, D-Portland.

"This oversight committee will continue the Legislature's reform by ensuring the new law is implemented in a timely and responsible manner," Lewis said.

"The panel's efforts are critical to repairing the economic decay the current process has caused our state," Lewis said.

Highway projects OK'd

AUSTIN (AP) — The state highway commission approved expediting $15 million for highway improvement projects in the Rio Grande Valley that will create at least 350 new jobs as part of ongoing efforts to assist victims of the December freeze, officials said.

The 13 road rehabilitation projects, which originally had been scheduled for 1991 and 1992, were given immediate priority by state highway officials.

Most of the projects are on farm-to-market roads in Brooks, Cameron, Hidalgo and Willacy counties. Six miles of Interstate 35 frontage road near Laredo and a section of U.S. Highway 83 in Starr County also are on the list of improvements.

Texas found shot to death

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The body of a Texas man who had been shot in the head was discovered Tuesday morning inside the cab of his tractor-trailer rig parked alongside Interstate 84.

Bart Whalen, spokesman for the Multnomah County Sheriff's Office, said the homicide victim was Tony Alvarez, 35, of El Paso.

Detective Mike Maunder of the Troutdale Police Department said an assailant had fired at least one bullet into the truck driver's head. No weapon was recovered.

The truck was parked just before the off ramp leading to the Burns Brothers Truck Stop. The truck, belonging to Keaton Truck Lines of Texarkana, apparently had been there since Sunday.

Music office established

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Commerce says its new music office is the first state government agency in the United States created for the exclusive promotion of the music industry.

"Whether someone wants information on music resources in Lubbock, San Antonio or Beaumont, we can provide the information that they need," said program coordinator Casey Monahan.

The Texas Music Office is compiling a manual of all music-related Texas businesses, which is tentatively scheduled for publication in December.

Space shuttle astronauts study satellite journey data

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — An 11-ton satellite rescued from space after a six-year journey sustained extensive damage, but will provide significant information for scientists, according to astronauts who trapped the device in the Space Shuttle Columbia earlier this month.

Scientists got their first look at the Long Duration Exposure Facility Tuesday when the space shuttle's 60-foot-long cargo bay doors were opened in Cape Canaveral, Fla.

At the Johnson Space Center in Houston, the crew that made the daring mid-space rescue Jan. 12 said they were happy to help provide more answers for researchers.

"I think LDEF is the best thing that could have happened to us as far as having something to look at so we can learn and understand what we really have to know," said Commander Dan Brandenstein.

The LDEF was being removed from the cargo bay with a large crane, placed in an airtight canister and moved to a sterilized building several miles from the shuttle processing facility during the night Tuesday.

There are 57 experiments attached to LDEF's exterior, and scientists want to see how the various materials in them fared during the long stay in space. They can use that knowledge to design long-duration spaceships and the planned manned space station.

"It looks a little more weathered than we concluded earlier from the pictures," William H. Kinard, LDEF project chief, said Tuesday.

"That really caught my attention, I did not expect anything like that," Brandenstein said of the damage. "That was a total surprise, mystery, and I was pretty much awed by it."

But the crew members said even the damage to the experiments aboard LDEF will help scientists learn what materials better withstand the harsh environment of space.

"I think it does certainly bring home the point that we have to take a good look at anything we do over a long duration in space," Brandenstein said.

Capturing the LDEF and bringing it back to Earth was one of the main goals of the Columbia mission, which ended Jan. 20 after almost 11 days in space — the longest shuttle flight so far.

LDEF had been in space for nearly six years, but it was being slowed by atmospheric drag. It was gradually sinking closer to Earth and would have been destroyed in a fiery plunge through the atmosphere in early March if the astronauts hadn't saved it.

Columbia launched into a lower orbit than LDEF so it could circle the Earth faster and catch up to the floating satellite. But pilot Jim Wetherbee, who made his first trip into space aboard Columbia, said it was hard to believe they were chasing an invisible target in space at about 18,000 mph.

"I just didn't believe it was really going to be there," Wetherbee said.

After catching up with the satellite, Brandenstein guided the shuttle close enough so mission specialist Bonnie Dunbar could snare LDEF with the orbiter's 50-foot robot arm.

"Dan did an exceptional job of flying us down the arm, and made my job very easy," Ms. Dunbar said. "I was able to go in and make a fairly smooth grapple."

The astronauts also deployed a Navy communications satellite, conducted several medical and scientific experiments during the mission and used several cameras to photograph what happens inside and outside the shuttle.

Brandenstein, Wetherbee and mission specialist David Low also exercised on a treadmill to see how motion in the cabin disturbs a materials processing experiment.

Columbia was scheduled to be the second-longest shuttle mission, but a one-day weather delay made it the longest flight in 33 shuttle missions. It also was meant to be a steppingstone toward longer missions and eventually months-long trips aboard the space station starting in the mid-1990s.

Drug trafficking suspect says she was shocked to get cash

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — West Des Moines businesswoman Susan Terry said that Dennis Harker never told her to keep quiet about his cash loans to her and that she deposited them in amounts less than $10,000 to avoid "hassles" in the event she was audited by the Internal Revenue Service.

She also testified Tuesday that she was shocked to receive cash in the mail from Harker and that she believed him when he said the money came from the sale of electronic equipment.

Mrs. Terry is charged with three counts of violating a federal drug trafficking law that requires financial institutions to make IRS reports of cash deposits of more than $10,000. She is also accused of conspiracy to violate the same law.

In the week-old trial's only emotional moment, Mrs. Terry tearfully read a letter from Harker that was sent shortly after her first husband, Wendell Terry, died in a construction accident. Harker wrote that Wendell Terry was the closest friend he ever had and he pledged to help her any way he could.

Prosecutors allege that Harker, a former Drug Enforcement Agency official who has since pleaded guilty to evading more than $200,000 in taxes, and Mrs. Terry conspired to launder money that Harker obtained when he failed to turn over proceeds from drug raids in Texas.

Between 1986 and 1987, Harker loaned Mrs. Terry $100,000, much of it coming in cash through the mail and some going for investments in six partnerships he formed with Mrs. Terry and various others, including former Democratic candidate for governor Roxanne Conlin and her husband, James Conlin.

She testified that in 1988, Harker came to her office with $50,000 in cash to be used as his half of a partnership with Mrs. Terry to purchase investment property. He had earlier sent her $15,000 in money orders to augment his share, then loaned her $75,000 for her share of the venture. The partnership eventually made $100,000 on the property and invested the cash in apartments in Colorado.

"I thought he was crazy" to carry $50,000 in cash, she testified. But she said Harker told her that his electronics business was "very lucrative" and that he dealt nearly exclusively in cash when selling electronics to Mexicans. Harker lived in Laredo, which is near the Mexican border.

She said "absolutely not" when asked if she suspected that Harker was not telling the truth.

Harker sent her numerous money orders for his loan to her but the final installment was in cash through the mail.

"I was upset," she testified, and said she telephoned Harker to find why he took the risk of sending cash in the mail. "He told me he preferred to do business in cash and for me not to worry about it. I said if it gets lost in the mail, I won't be responsible for it."

"And what was his response?" asked Mrs. Terry's counsel, William Kutmus.

"He just laughed," she said.

She said Harker never told her to conceal the transactions or to deposit it in a way to avoid the IRS reports. She explained that she made deposits in amounts less than $10,000 in order to avoid a "hassle" in case of an IRS audit.

She said she formed that policy after a conversation with a banker in 1984. "I understood her (the banker) to say that when I had cash I should deposit it in amounts less than $10,000, that otherwise it could be perceived to be a gift or income in the event of an audit," she said.

The matter first arose when Mrs. Terry did a financial favor for an Iranian national whom she met while both were students at Iowa State University in 1972.

She deposited more than $11,000 in an account to help the Iranian woman move to the United States. She left written instructions that the money should be withdrawn in amounts less than $10,000 in the event the Iranian friend could not claim it. In case Mrs. Terry died.

Prosecutors have said the note indicates Mrs. Terry was trying to avoid the drug trafficking law.

Terry told the jury about her life that she was one of four children of a railroad fireman, that she had a high school education and married a plumber, Wendell Terry, with whom she built her first house in 1975 after reading a book on how to do it. Money for the lot came from a $5,000 loan from Harker, who was her husband's best friend.

When that project was a success, she quit her job as a secretary and formed the SKT Construction Inc.

Budget director defends forecasts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration, denying the 1991 budget is based on overly optimistic economic projections, is defending its forecasts as not only accurate but lucky.

"You are not dealing with people who are totally out of bounds" in trying to forecast how the economy will behave in the coming months, said Richard G. Darman, director of the White House Office of Management and Budget.

Testifying before the House Budget Committee on Tuesday, Darman rejected criticism from Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., chairman of the panel, that the new budget relies on rosy assumptions about unemployment, inflation and economic growth.

Darman, who was called to defend the budget before the Senate Budget Committee today, said the administration compiled "an amazingly accurate record" in making its forecasts last July. "This represents not just wisdom but some luck," he added.

Darman noted, for example, the July forecast for growth in the gross national product last year was 2.9 percent — exactly what occurred. OMB economists also were right on the mark on unemployment (5.2 percent) and interest rates on short-term Treasury notes (8.5 percent) and came close in predicting inflation would average 5 percent. The actual figure was 4.8 percent.

Economic forecasts are a major factor in preparation of a federal budget. For example, if the inflation rate is higher than forecast, the deficit could be worsened considerably because many federal programs, including Social Security, are increased automatically with the inflation rate.

The 1991 budget of $1.23 trillion is based on an OMB forecast that the economy will grow by 3.2 percent during the year, although the consensus of several private economists is 2.2 percent. Similarly, the administration projects interest rates on three-month Treasury bills at 5.4 percent in 1991, compared with a 7.2 percent private forecast.

Darman spent a considerable part of his time before the House panel defending the administration's decision not to support a reduction in Social Security taxes. The hottest topic among members of Congress is a bill by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., that would cut those taxes as a way to keep the government from using surplus Social Security tax collections to pay for other federal programs.

"It is my personal opinion that he never intended the plan to be taken as seriously as the press has taken it," Darman said.

Panetta interjected: "I get the impression that he is quite serious about the proposal."

Bush's budget proposes that once the federal deficit is eliminated — and predicts that will be in 1993 — Social Security taxes that are not needed to pay benefits immediately should be used only to retire government debt.

Darman bristled when Rep. James Slattery, D-Kan., said, "Social Security is the biggest lie we have told the American people in maybe this generation." Slattery described Bush's proposed remedy as "another scam, another scam."

"You're saying ... that (federal) debt is no good, that we are bankrupt ... The day that U.S. treasuries (securities) are no good is a day I think none of us will ever see," Darman said.

"Our proposal is not smoke and mirrors," he added. "It will really get the debt down ... There isn't a trace of dishonesty in this presentation."

EPA doesn't need to be Cabinet post

Legislation has been introduced in the U.S. Congress which would make the Environmental Protection Agency a Cabinet-level department. While there's little doubt that the environmental concerns now confronting planet Earth are significant enough to deserve a voice on the Cabinet, creating yet another slot at that level may not be the best way to bring about the desired result.

There's no question that the problems of pollution, landfills, sewage treatment, pesticide use, acid rain or holes in the ozone layer are potentially critical enough to demand attention at the top rung of the United States government. It has been encouraging to see President Bush giving the environment a more prominent place in his administration. But his support for a new Cabinet-level department is curious since the Republican Party is the one which traditionally has lobbied for less growth of government.

It would seem that Bush could still accomplish his goal of promoting environmental concern by placing the EPA under the auspices of another already-existing department, perhaps the Interior or Health and Human Services departments, or even the State Department.

Typically, officials in a president's administration have to compete to get their problems or proposals on top of the in-basket in the Oval Office. Cabinet secretaries have the inside track and if the EPA was part of an existing department, it would already have the stature that it deserves and, with attention from Bush, environmental concerns would get them hearing they require.

The president already has shown more concern for the environment than most recent chief executives. He deserves praise for bringing concern for the environment into the limelight. But it would be a tragedy to see another expensive Cabinet-level department created when more might be accomplished by simply using the bureaucracy now in place with greater streamlining and efficiency.

Let's give environmental concerns the priority they deserve, but let's not build another level of bureaucracy in which to push legitimate needs while wasting millions of dollars that could go toward helping resolve environmental problems.

Another View:

Foreign aid not dull

Foreign aid is no longer a dull topic. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., has seen to that. Dole suggests that the major recipients of current foreign aid programs be given 5 percent less and the money used to encourage economic growth in Eastern Europe and Panama. The predictable ruckus has resulted, with Israel reacting quickly in defense of the $3 billion it gets in aid every year.

Because Congress insists on keeping a tight grip on the purse strings, Sen. Dole's hot potato lands in the lap of his colleagues. President Bush is taking a more-aid-is-better approach. He plans to ask for an additional $1.8 billion in aid next fiscal year, which would avoid drastic cuts to the major recipients, which are Israel, Egypt, Turkey, the Philippines and Pakistan. Economic and military assistance this year amounts to $14.6 billion, a lot of money but 1.2 percent of the federal budget.

Foreign policy experts say Poland is the keystone of economic change in Eastern Europe. If Poland's economy collapses, the other nations emerging from Soviet dominance have little hope of making the transition from communism to capitalism. In that case, assistance to Poland by the Western bloc, including the United States, would be wise. Congress last year voted $553 million in aid to Poland.

The dramatic changes in Eastern Europe, the invasion of Panama, the insecurity in the Philippines and rapid developments in other parts of the world demand a response from the United States, and foreign aid provides an important lever.

Recently, Bush was host to the president of Turkey, Turgut Ozal, and took the occasion to tell Turkey not to worry about foreign aid funds, that our friends will be taken care of. Bush said he was delighted Dole had made his suggestion to review foreign aid.

"The president ought to see these priorities and that's why I am pleased about it," Bush said. "I'd like to see it done the way I think the Founding Fathers intended for it to be done," he said. Bush is right. Congress should give the president more flexibility in responding to changing world conditions.

Thais arrest American on sex charges

WASHINGTON — By all outward appearances, Mark Morgan was simply a good samaritan who went to Bangkok, the sex capital of the world, to start an orphanage for boys. Now he faces allegations that he sold those boys for sex.

Thai police arrested Morgan last month on charges of running an illegal foundation. A police spokesman told us that Morgan is now being investigated for allegations that the orphanage was a front for child sex. U.S. law enforcement officials have received reports in the past alleging that Morgan was a contact for American pedophiles looking for children in Thailand. Federal authorities say Thailand is a vacation paradise for pedophiles — a prime market for child peddlers and smut merchants. Americans go to Bangkok for a sexual romp with children, and they often photograph or videotape their exploits or buy pornographic materials.

Bangkok police are slow to act, and U.S. police have no jurisdiction in Bangkok, so American pedophiles feel safe there. But the FBI, the Customs Service and the Postal Service keep their eyes on the situation anyway. Eventually, a pedophile will slip up and mail or smuggle pornography into the United States. Then the U.S. authorities can nab him.

One man took pictures of boys engaged in sexual activity and made the mistake of shipping the photos to a buddy in Nevada. They were intercepted by Customs. With the help of Thai police, Customs agents searched the man's home in Bangkok and confiscated more than 500 pictures. Both men were convicted of smuggling child pornography.

It's easy for pedophiles to prey on children in Bangkok. Poor families abandon their children or sell them into labor contracts. The labor often turns out to be prostitution. Runaways and orphans live on the streets of Bangkok, surviving on their wits or the charity of others.

Morgan went to Bangkok from his home in Utah, saw the boys and told his family he was moving there to start an orphanage. He left a wife and two children in Utah. Morgan looked for generous Americans to fund the orphanage and found Howard Ruff, a Utah businessman and financial publisher.

Ruff was impressed with Morgan's plan for the orphanage and raised $65,000 for it. But before Ruff turned the money over to Morgan, someone who knew Morgan called Ruff and warned him that things may not be as they seem.

Ruff put an investigator on Morgan and then began a relentless campaign to get Thai and U.S. authorities to arrest him. Ruff called Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who both asked the Justice Department to investigate.

A spokeswoman at the Thai Embassy in Washington told our associate Scott Slek that it was Ruff's pressure on the Thai government that led to Morgan's arrest.

Last year, Thai authorities arrested two Americans on charges of committing indecent acts with teenagers. Both men claimed to have contacts with Morgan's orphanage. And several men who were arrested in Northern California as part of a child sex ring have ties to Morgan, and one of them told police that Morgan used the orphanage as a front for child prostitution.

But U.S. authorities had to wait for Thai police to come up with the evidence to arrest Morgan. He was finally nabbed last month for having no work permit and running an illegal foundation. A police spokesman in Bangkok claimed that the arrest stems from allegations that Morgan was using children for sex.

When Morgan was arrested on the charge of running an illegal foundation, the Thai judge ordered police to investigate the allegations of child abuse, procurement and prostitution.

Morgan is free on bail. We attempted to call him at the orphanage, but there was no answer. Thai police told us they didn't know if the orphanage was still open.

PERESTROIKA NOT ENOUGH — Reports from the Soviet republic of Lithuania indicate that its independent leaders are planning to secede. It is no longer a matter of if, but when. In secret discussions they have considered declaring Lithuania's independence on July 12, the 70th anniversary of Lenin's original recognition of Lithuanian independence. If Lithuania succeeds in breaking away, Latvia and Estonia will likely follow.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Kentucky Legislature has decided not to ban smoking in elementary and high schools. The lawmakers will offer an impressive array of excuses. But the truth is that not enough people in the Legislature had the guts to stand up to the state's tobacco industry. Children will smoke even if smoking is against the rules, especially in a state where there is no age limit on the purchase of cigarettes. But Kentucky has passed up an opportunity to tell kids "no" in a big way. The adults in the Kentucky Legislature ought to be ashamed.

Thornburgh Rule of investigation abomination

WASHINGTON — In the arrest of Mayor Marion Barry of Washington, the Department of Justice argues that end justifies bad means.

A good Wrong. Blacks who grumble that the mayor was "picked on" by the white establishment are mistaken, too. High officials offering grounds for suspicion of lawbreaking, as Barry surely did, deserve vigorous and sustained police investigation.

But you don't have to be racist to be wrong. Prosecutors impatient with a grand jury that judged their efforts inadequate for an indictment insist that a "sting" — euphemism for a trap — was needed. By tempting the target to commit a videotaped, misdemeanor, they seek to portray one wrongdoing into major perjury and felony charges.

Such desperation to crack a case by inducing a fresh crime undermines justice. The prosecutor's subsequent arrogance in publicly hinting at his readiness to be lenient in exchange for resignation from municipal office slaps democracy in the face.

Set aside anger at how brazen and possibly corrupt Barry has been; that's for voters, not lawmen, to judge. Set aside, too, disgust at the terrible example he sets to youths hooked on drugs in his city; hypocrisy and immorality are sins, not crimes.

Focus instead on the central issue raised in his arrest. The federal government, for the first time, has used the expectation of sexual intercourse to lure a target into committing an illegal act in front of concealed cameras.

This enforcement weapon was not the sudden thought of a runaway local prosecutor. The scheme was personally reviewed by Attorney General Richard Thornburgh, who told the zealous, "it's your call" — but whose refusal to disapprove put the FBI into this dirty work.

The reports suggest this: A female member of the Screen Actor's Guild with whom the mayor had a long-time affair was tracked down and persuaded (probably by threat of prosecution, since she is said to have a prison record) to be the bait in a trap to catch Barry.

She was flown cross country and ensconced in a wired D.C. hotel room, where she telephoned the mayor and urgently invited him over to "party."

What do you suppose went through the target's mind? Did the mayor see in this call a chance to traffic in illegal drugs? Far more likely, given their long personal relationship, her continuing good looks and the key fact that she was never known to be a drug dealer, he hurried over predisposed to engage in what we privacy types like to call consensual non-criminal activity. If recent prosecutorial leaks are to be believed, the "lady in red" loosened him up with a few brandies, put him off when he made the pass that demonstrated the primary purpose of his visit, but obliged with alacrity when he asked for drugs. The bust followed his smoking the crack, a misdemeanor.

Thus was American justice introduced to the Thornburgh Rule: Intimidation of informants to engage in federally funded sexual enticement is an acceptable investigative procedure. In fairness, note that our government stopped short of prostitution: The reasonable expectation of sex may well have been in the target's mind, but on-screen delivery by the lure was not contemplated.

The logical next step down this slope would be to set up a federal call girl ring to tempt predisposed "johns" or otherwise aid the war on drugs; this has not yet been authorized, so far as we know. Nor have police willing to intimidate lovers to entrap each other yet extended this practice to pressuring children to entrap parents.

Is entrapment legal? Supposedly not; but to avoid the charge, police need merely follow Supreme Court instructions to show that the target was a person "predisposed" to commit the crime.

The court wrongly gave to police the power to dangle temptation in front of everyone with a record. In the Barry case, the prosecutor evidently hoped to prove predisposition, or was sure the embarrassed mayor would cop a plea to avoid trial.

If the court offers little protection against entrapment, and if the Thornburgh Rule now encourages ambitious prosecutors to employ sex as a lure — where does the accused person who has been "set up" go for justice?

To the last line of defense against the abuse of prosecutorial power: the jury. In the DeLoe case, the jury found the prosecution's methods so repugnant that it found a defendant manipulated into a videotaped crime to be not guilty.

Thornburgh's Rule is an abomination. The end of ridding ourselves of a rotten mayor does not justify means that can put a sex lure and a hidden camera into any American bedroom.

'Advertorials' newest thing in magazine copy

What I like about today's magazines is that it is no longer possible to tell the difference between the editorial copy and the advertising.

With the sophisticated computer techniques at their disposal, publishers are constantly challenging the readers. They are doing this with "advertorials," which seem to be the wave of the future.

The other day I was reading a story in a news magazine about the king of Morocco.

"This is some king," I remarked to Hyman Bixby, an editor of the magazine. "Your reporters think he's hot stuff."

"Not our reporters. That's an advertorial," he told me. "It was paid for by Morocco. It says so at the top of the page."

"I can't see anything at the top." Bixby handed me a magnifying glass and, after five minutes, I found the words "Special Advertising Section." "By gum, it does say 'advertorial.' It looks exactly like editorial copy."

"Well, it isn't. Do you think that we'd sell our independent news reporting for money?"

"I hope not," I said. "On the other hand, if you hadn't drawn my attention to it, I was all set to buy Moroccan savings bonds immediately after reading the story."

"The purpose of advertorials is to give the person in the news an opportunity to tell his side of the story. In that way we present two opinions for the price of one, and we make a lot more money besides."

I asked, "Doesn't it bother you that the editorial people have lost control of the copy in the magazine?"

"Now you're being picky. Look at the Exxon Valdez oil spill. In the past, the oil companies could not defend themselves. Thanks to advertorials they have as good a chance of vindicating themselves as the environmentalists do."

"How does the reader know if the advertorial is telling the truth?"

"There isn't enough money in the world to make us go into the tank for the king of Morocco or any other member of a royal family. An advertorial enables us to cover areas of the globe that we cannot afford to staff. In the case of Morocco, our readers will always prefer a seven-page paid spread on it than no news at all about North Africa."

I said, "I guess the trick of an advertorial is to make the warning so small that no one can read it."

Hyman confided, "Our dream is to reduce the word 'advertorial' to such tiny print that people will need a microscope to read it. At present, 90 percent of our subscribers can't tell the difference. It's interesting to see the reaction of readers who are unaware that it is a paid spread. Most of them want to nominate the king of Morocco for the Nobel Peace Prize."

"Do readers like advertorials?"

"We're not sure because they don't know that they're reading them. Some are confused when they learn that Kadafi is really Abraham Lincoln in drag. The reason we get away with it is because Americans would rather read good news than bad news, and all our paid supplements are upbeat. Publishers who accept advertorials in their magazines are only interested in one thing."

"What's that?"

"The bottom line."

Potential Hazelwood jurors fear losing jobs

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Some potential jurors in the criminal trial of former Exxon Valdez skipper Joseph Hazelwood say they already have made up their minds or could lose their jobs if picked for the jury.

The Exxon Valdez rammed a charted reef March 24 and dumped more than 10 million gallons of crude into Prince William Sound in the nation's worst oil spill.

Ten of the 91-member jury pool were questioned Tuesday. Four were excused.

Two people said they might lose their jobs if forced to serve on a trial expected to run six to eight weeks. The other two said they had made up their minds about who was responsible for the spill.

"This would be a tough one for me," one of the prospective jurors, a heavy equipment operator, told the court. "A lot of damage has been done."

Another, who said he had caused a 10,000-gallon spill himself while working for the oil industry in Alaska, told lawyers Hazelwood should not have been charged.

Hazelwood, 43, is being tried on one felony charge of criminal mischief and misdemeanor charges of reckless endangerment, negligent discharge of oil and operating on a vessel while intoxicated.

The maximum possible penalty for conviction on all counts is seven years, three months in prison and a $61,000 fine.

The tanker hit Bligh Reef a few hours after taking on a load of North Slope crude oil at the trans-Alaska pipeline terminal at Valdez.

Oil released by the huge gashes in its hull coated hundreds of miles of shoreline, killed thousands of marine mammals and prompted what Exxon said was a $2 billion cleanup involving thousands of workers.

The trial began Monday, with Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone rejecting another round of defense efforts to get charges against the veteran seaman dismissed.

Defense attorney Dick Madson had argued that charges should be dismissed because the state lacks jurisdiction.

Alcohol abuse, command responsibilities and pretrial publicity are figuring heavily in jury selection.

"Have you formed any opinions of roles or responsibilities of the various parties?" Madson repeatedly asked.

Despite excusing four potential jurors, Johnstone kept the process moving. He pushed lawyers from both sides to speed their examinations.

"It's going much faster than I expected," said Madson, who complained the judge was limiting questioning.

Asked if 12 jurors could be seated by Friday, he replied: "If he keeps cutting off questions like he is, yes."

Governor says Exxon won't ignore cleanup

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Gov. Jim Florio accused Exxon Corp. of lax handling of a 570,000-gallon oil spill in a bird and fish sanctuary, and said the state had learned from the Exxon Valdez spill not to trust the company.

Exxon, responding to Florio's comments Tuesday, defended its response to the Jan. 2 spill — and to the Valdez disaster — and said it would fulfill its responsibilities for the cleanup.

Florio said the state Department of Environmental Protection has determined that a pipeline operator and supervisor on duty at the time of the spill in the Arthur Kill lacked the certification required by New York authorities, which shares jurisdiction for the waterway.

A portion of pipe will be pulled out of the waterway, which lies between New Jersey and the New York City borough of Staten Island, and transported to Ohio for lab tests that could help determine the cause of the spill, Florio said. Exxon confirmed it was removing the pipe today for tests at its expense.

Florio, the Democrat elected governor last year after a strong pro-environment campaign, said New York and New Jersey authorities had mapped out a strategy to restore the important East Coast spawning ground for birds and fish, which scientists say absorbed serious damage from the spilled heating oil.

No dollar figure has been assigned to the damage, nor have cleanup costs been established.

"I want to make it clear to everyone in New Jersey that this will not be another Valdez," Florio said, referring to the March 28 wreck that spilled more than 10 million gallons of oil into Alaska's Prince William Sound. "Exxon will not be allowed to hit and run."

"My impression of what's happening in Valdez is that Exxon seems to be inclined to wipe its hands sooner rather than later," Florio said. "We're not going to allow that approach to be duplicated here."

Exxon spokesman Leo McLean defended Exxon's cleanup in Alaska and said the company was cooperating with authorities to "assess potential impacts ... and work toward agreement" on the Arthur Kill cleanup. Florio reiterated claims that pipeline operators ignored warnings of a possible leak. Exxon has attributed the slow detection of the pipeline's problems to equipment failure, rather than human error.

Florio said James Fitzgerald, a console operator at Exxon's Bayway refinery, had not obtained the certification required of pipeline operators by the New York Fire Department.

President's plan aims to boost U.S. savings to level of other countries

By MATTHEW C. QUINN
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Bush's plan to create new family savings accounts is intended to help boost U.S. savings to the level of other leading industrialized nations, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said Tuesday.

In opening the administration's sales campaign for the savings plan outlined in Bush's $1.2 trillion 1991 budget, Brady said the U.S. savings rate "is below everybody" in the industrialized world and is hurting the competitive position of U.S. corporations by driving up interest rates.

"Americans are spending more on consuming and less on savings than our major competitors," he said, adding that the success of the Japanese and West German economies "gives us a very clear path as to the way we ought to go."

Under the administration's proposal, families with two wage-earners would be able to make contributions up to $5,000 a year to Family Savings Accounts. Single taxpayers would be able to set aside $2,500 annually.

Money deposited into the accounts could not be deducted from a taxpayer's taxable income, unlike the popular Individual Retirement Accounts that were set up during the 1970s. But all interest earned by the family savings accounts could be withdrawn tax-free after seven years.

Participation in the accounts would be limited to taxpayers with annual incomes up to $120,000 filing joint income tax returns. Single taxpayers earning up to $60,000 annually would qualify.

Brady said the administration has been criticized by offering programs "directed at the rich, and we wanted to make sure that everybody understands this is a program for middle and average income families."

He said the administration will embark on a campaign to encourage Americans to "consume less and save more" as a way to bolster America's competitive edge.

By all measures, the United States lags far behind most of its trading partners on savings.

According to Treasury Department, the United States saved 16.3 percent of its total economic output between 1981 and 1987 compared with 31.1 percent for Japan, 21.8 percent for West Germany and 17 percent for Britain.

According to the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, American households saved 4.4 percent of their income in 1988 compared with 15.2 percent for households in Japan, 12.6 percent in West Germany, 12.3 percent in France, 22.8 percent in Italy and 8.7 percent in Canada. Of the top seven industrialized nations, only British families save less, 4.1 percent of their incomes.

The Commerce Department has found that U.S. savings have plummeted in recent years.

That department calculates that the U.S. individual savings rate was 5.5 percent in 1989, a sharp decline from 10 years ago, when the rate was 7.1 percent.

Brady said Bush's proposal will include a scaled-back plan to slash the capital gains tax for investors and a proposal that would allow first-time homebuyers to withdraw up to $10,000 from existing tax-exempt Individual Retirement Accounts.

But some economists expressed doubts that the package would actually spur savings.

Charles Schultze, who was President Jimmy Carter's top economic adviser and is now director of economic studies at the Brookings Institution, said Bush's proposals "either won't do much or will actually reduce national savings a little bit."

"People at the income levels they're talking about will take savings out of one account and put it in another," said Schultze.

David Wyss, an economist with DRI-McGraw Hill, a private economic consulting firm based in Lexington, Mass., agreed that the plan "won't do very much" to increase savings.

Helpers in crash get help

NEW YORK (AP) — At fire houses, police stations, schools and hospitals, Long Island residents still reeling from the Avianca jetliner crash that killed 73 people and injured 86 are beginning to help the helpers.

Even as the dead are buried, the injured treated and the survivors consoled, some mental health and social workers are turning their attention to the people who rushed to the crash scene Thursday night and found a nightmare of death, injury and mutilation.

In most cases, experts say, they need nothing more and nothing less than talk.

"After the crash, there's an emotional aftershock," said Joan Imhof, director of the Nassau County Office of Volunteer Services. "You need to talk about the experience, what you remember, how you felt about it, any symptoms you might be experiencing."

"You have to come to grips with the fact that you and your body have suffered a traumatic experience."

The clinical term is post-traumatic stress disorder; symptoms can include fatigue, nausea, muscle tremors, appetite loss, appetite gain, poor concentration, flashbacks, anxiety and depression.

Ms. Imhof lives near the crash site at Cove Neck on the northern shore of Long Island, and worked there throughout the night.

As rescue workers carried children away from the wreckage, "we felt awful that we couldn't find their parents and reunite them then," she recalled. "But there were so many serious injuries, we just had to ship them out" to hospitals.

Asked about efforts to comfort the rescuers, she spoke about her own memories of the night in great detail.

Asked if she, too, needed to talk about her experiences in order to deal with them, she replied, "You got it."

The Boeing 707 en route from Colombia ran out of fuel and crashed on a wooded hillside Thursday night 15 miles northeast of its destination, Kennedy International Airport.

Helpers at the crash site were not the only ones in need. Spanish-speaking staffers at the state's Pilgrim Psychiatric Center in Brentwood worked for days with crash survivors and the families of passengers at several hospitals.

"Emotionally, I'm still in shock," said Sonia Palacio-Grotola, a social worker.

'No weddings' sign confuses New Yorkers

NEW YORK (AP) — New Yorkers are used to being told what they can't do in public spaces: No parking. No dogs. No smoking. No spitting. No left turn.

But no weddings? That's what a sign on an East River pier seems to indicate, but a spokesman for the Department of Parks and Trades wants lovers to know the city is not getting into the wedding-busting business.

The sign, using the international symbol for prohibition, has a bride and groom inside a circle with a slash through it. "It's a funky sign and we made it in a fun way," department spokesman Frances Resheske said today. "We didn't mean to imply that weddings are prohibited, just that people are not allowed to close off the pier to the public."

Resheske said many couples holding receptions at an adjacent restaurant in the borough of Queens were led to believe they could hold private ceremonies on the pier.

The pier has an unobstructed view of the Manhattan skyline and has become a popular pedestrian walkway for local residents — and a wedding hot spot.

"We're not anti-weddings. If someone wanted to go out tomorrow with a judge and get married on the pier, fine. ... You just can't close it off."

A sign on a pier along the East River in the Queens section of New York seems to indicate, the city is against weddings. It really means the city is opposed to private parties closing off the pier.

Wisconsin approves parental consent bill

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Legislators approved a bill early today requiring minors to get parental consent before having abortions, and defeated an effort to repeal a dormant law that penalizes doctors who perform abortions.

"This is going to be a shot heard around the world," said Republican Rep. Robert Welch. "Wisconsin is a liberal state taking a moderate stand on abortion."

The Assembly had sifted through 30 proposed amendments before its 72-24 vote early today for a bill that would require girls younger than age 18 to have the consent of at least one parent or a court. Consent would not be required of incest and rape victims.

"We're elated," said Barbara Lyons, executive director of Wisconsin Right to Life Inc. "I think it deflates all the rhetoric that the pro-choice movement was sweeping the country. Pro-life isn't dead; it's alive."

The measure is expected to go to a Senate committee, where its prospects were uncertain, Welch said.

Democrats control the Assembly 55-42, but partisan affiliation had little effect because there were more anti-abortion Democrats in the Assembly than pro-choice Republicans.

Assembly Speaker Thomas A. Loftus, a Democrat, said the bill "falls in the areas of reality, compassion and common sense."

On Tuesday, the Assembly rejected by 54-42 an amendment to the bill that would have excluded pregnant girls deemed suicidal by a professional therapist or doctor.

Obtaining Reagan's diary entries may delay start of Iran-Contra trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diary entries by former President Reagan contain "information of significance" for John Poindexter's Iran-Contra trial, a federal judge says in ordering the excerpts turned over to the defense.

U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene on Tuesday ordered the former president to provide diary excerpts from more than 29 different dates by next Monday, but said he will conduct a lengthy review process if Reagan invokes executive privilege.

Such a step could delay the scheduled Feb. 20 start of the trial, which already has been moved back a month due partly to Poindexter's efforts to subpoena documents and testimony from Reagan.

Reagan, in Las Vegas for a speech Tuesday night, told reporters he would not comment on the judge's order. Greene has not decided whether to approve a request by Poindexter, the former national security adviser, to subpoena Reagan as a witness. The former president is resisting such a subpoena.

Poindexter is charged with conspiracy, two counts of obstructing Congress and two counts of making false statements in connection with aide Oliver North's assistance to the Contras and a November 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran.

If Reagan invokes executive privilege, Greene said he would "revisit the issue" of whether the diaries are material to Poindexter's defense. Greene noted a similar procedure was followed during the Watergate scandal, when the special prosecutor sought access to White House tapes in the case against several of President Nixon's aides.

Greene then would provide the former president and the Justice Department with a secret document Poindexter submitted to the court outlining why he needs the diaries.

After court filings by all sides, the court will "make a final decision with respect to enforcement of the subpoena" for the diaries, Greene said.

Greene said the "vast majority" of more than 100 diary entries turned over to the court for review last week "contain no information that is material" to the Poindexter case, but entries covering more than 29 dates in 1985 and 1986 "do contain information of significance."

Reagan was ordered to give Poindexter a diary entry relating to a "successful" trip Poindexter took in December 1985 to Central America.

The entry includes a somewhat ambiguous comment arguably indicating that the former president knew of Poindexter's "activities on behalf of the Contras," Greene said.

The judge said Poindexter is entitled to diary entries in which Reagan describes an effort to persuade the government of Honduras to release a seized arms shipment that had been destined for the Contras.

Greene also said Poindexter must receive diary entries focusing on U.S. military-type assistance to an unidentified Central American country that may have been used in support of the Contras.

The entries "may show what types of aid President Reagan thought could legally be provided for the military or paramilitary operations of the Contras," Greene said.

Poindexter also is entitled to Reagan's diary entries concerning meetings with Poindexter and others in December 1985 "to discuss the sales of arms to Iran," Green said, adding that one entry "addresses briefly the issue of the proceeds from these sales."

Greene said none of the diary entries shed "any light on the question of what President Reagan may have known about the diversion" of proceeds to the Contras from the administration's secret sale of arms to Iran.

Reagan has denied knowing about the diversion and Poindexter testified before Congress that he didn't tell the president.

Poindexter contends Reagan knew of and approved activities undertaken in the Iran and Contra initiatives and that therefore Poindexter had no reason to conceal these activities from Congress, as charged in the indictment.

Man convicted in shooting to be sentenced

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A jury was set to decide today if a 39-year-old Garland man convicted Tuesday of ambushing and gunning down a Midland man deserves prison or a probated sentence.

Richard Ruth was convicted late Tuesday of attempted murder by the panel in Judge Vann Culp's 238th State District Court.

Jurors deliberated eight hours before they reached the verdict.

Ruth — who was convicted of shooting John Pace in the neck and back on Aug. 8, 1989 — took the stand and asked the jury for mercy. He could receive up to 20 years in state prison.

... (Prosecutor Ralph) Petty asked the jurors to assess the maximum 20-year sentence, repeatedly referring to the crime as an attempted "execution" and "assassination."

"Are you asking the jury for probation in this case?" attorney Ted Kerr asked.

"Yes, sir," the defendant replied.

Prosecutor Ralph Petty, who handled the case during the week-long trial, then asked the defendant if he thought he deserved probation.

The defendant paused and then said "yes, sir."

Kerr urged the jury to resist Petty's invitations to send a message to society, or "measure the value of a human life" with its punishment.

He recalled for jurors that the defendant has no history as a lawbreaker, a requirement for probation, and also reminded them his job as an electronics technician in Garland is necessary to support his children.

But Petty asked the jurors to assess the maximum 20-year sentence, repeatedly referring to the crime as an attempted "execution" and "assassination."

"Life should never be that cheap," Petty said of probation as punishment for Ruth. "You should not give this defendant any credit for failing to kill John Pace. He certainly tried."

According to prosecutors, Pace was shot because of a child custody battle between he and his ex-wife, Beverly Hicks, who was also Ruth's girlfriend. The shooting occurred at about 5:30 a.m. in the parking lot of the Treemont Apartments, 3216 Treemont Ave.

Ruth claimed he was near Amarillo, driving from New Mexico to the Dallas area, when the shooting occurred.

Jurors apparently disagreed.

Plainview man running for top agriculture post

By JAMES R. OWEN
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A Plainview farmer seeking to unseat Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says the state farm czar is a "bureaucrat out of touch with mainstream Texas agriculture," whose only concern is winning reelection to a third term.

Neal Burnett, a longtime Plainview farmer, is one of six Democratic candidates who will oppose Hightower in the March 17 statewide primary. Three Republicans are also challenging the incumbent.

Burnett, 57, said in an interview here Tuesday that Hightower "has been using scare tactics to win publicity and votes," referring to the commissioner's campaign to persuade Texas farmers to use natural farming methods in favor of pesticides.

Burnett suggested that Hightower's approach had "convinced many Texas consumers that all pesticides are horrible and unsafe, which they're not."

The Plainview man, who farms 2,700 acres, is vice president of the Lone Star Corn Growers Association of Texas. He is in Washington this week to attend a convention of the American Corn Growers Association.

Burnett claimed that U.S. agriculture produces "the best, the safest and the cheapest food of anybody in the world ... and we farmers are amongst it. We eat that food, and I don't think any of us are going to go out there and intentionally harm our own families.

"It's irritating when you raise a good commodity and then the agriculture commissioner plants the notion that it's dangerous in the back of the consumer's mind."

Burnett also charged that Hightower's emphasis on organic agriculture was impractical.

"Texas farmers can't make a living by spreading manure on their crops," he said.

As agriculture commissioner, Burnett said he would work "to push the state's products into the agricultural mainstream."

He referred specifically to corn, beef and cotton. He said he also would try to "restore the respectability of the agency" among the state's citizens.

Burnett acknowledged that his candidacy is a long-shot. He said he has raised little money so far and has no paid campaign staff. His campaign filing fee was paid for by the political action committee of the Texas Farm Bureau, as were the filing fees of the other five Democratic challengers.

Burnett said he and the other challengers are pinning their hopes on forcing a runoff election in May, by depriving Hightower of a majority in the March primary. Most observers agree that few policy differences have emerged among Hightower's challengers.

"If we got into the runoff, then we

Hance plans to expedite death row case appeals

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A plan to ensure "swift and sure punishment" of convicted murderers was announced by Republican gubernatorial hopeful Kent Hance, who pledged if elected he'd expedite appeals of death row cases.

"Under our present system, the concept of swift and sure punishment has become a joke," Hance, a Texas Railroad commissioner, told reporters at a Tuesday news conference.

The candidate noted that there are more than 300 convicted murderers now on Texas' death row. Of those, three have been incarcerated 15 years, and have cost Texas taxpayers about $1 million in custodial expenses, Hance said.

Under Hance's plan, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals would establish internal rules requiring all death row appeals to be decided within two years of conviction.

Further, the plan would limit to two the number of post-conviction writs of habeas corpus that death row inmates can file. Currently there are no limits.

The plan also would change the state and federal law to prevent "frivolous last-minute appeals" in death row cases.

Hance said, "These murderers have been convicted and their sentences should be executed." He said, "It is time to change the rules. It is time the criminal is punished."

Hance credited his Anti-Crime and Drug Task Force, which he established last year, with coming up with the plan.

The task force also recommended:

- Construction of 25,000 prison beds.
- Review of Resolution Trust Corp. property to determine if existing inventories could be acquired by the state or local governments as prison sites or facilities.
- Denial of state benefits such as welfare, student loans and drivers licenses to individuals convicted of drug-related crimes.
- Expand the victim services budget from $150,000 to $500,000, and notify the victims of crimes when a felon becomes eligible for parole so they are able to respond to the Texas Board of Pardons and Parole.
- Expand substance abuse counseling in prison.

In other remarks, Hance promised to veto any legislation that would take money away from wealthy school districts and mandate new school spending programs for local school districts.

In other political developments Tuesday:

■ GOP gubernatorial hopeful Jack Rains Tuesday proposed mandatory prison terms for convicted rapists, and for repeat offenders, either consenting to chemical castration as a condition of parole or facing life imprisonment with no parole.

Rains said he would support legislation requiring that a convicted rapist face a mandatory sentence of not less than 20 years, and up to life imprisonment, with no chance of parole during the first 20 years.

He also said he would require convicted sexual offenders to complete a treatment program before being considered for release with continuing therapy as a condition of parole.

■ State Rep. Pat Hill, a Republican candidate for attorney general, introduced a plan to educate divorcing parents of their responsibilities to their children and reduce the need for child support collection.

Hill's seven-point plan calls for collecting interest and attorney fees, prioritizing case loads, improving wage withholding, automatic monitoring of payments, immediate turnover of collected funds and giving child support employees the right to reserve court papers.

Funds not available for war on bees

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — State bee experts have a plan to fend off an invasion of billions of dangerous, destructive Africanized honey bees, an invasion they believe will begin this spring or summer, but don't have any money to finance it.

Texas A&M University, which handles both research and regulation of bees in Texas, asked the Legislature for $690,000 during the last session to start dealing with Africanized bees. The request was denied.

Federal agencies that deal with bees also have been hit with budget cuts.

Representatives of those agencies were in Brownsville Tuesday to determine who will do what when the first swarms of Africanized bees cross the Rio Grande.

Money is so tight that one spokesman said the best thing for Texans to do is to pray.

Africanized bees got their start in the Americas in 1957 when 23 queen bees were imported to Brazil as part of an experiment to strengthen local European honey bees. Some of the Africanized bees escaped, and they have been reproducing and buzzing northward ever since.

Slightly smaller than regular European honey bees, they put more energy into making hives than in making honey. They have taken over every area they've invaded, causing honey production to fall by 60 percent.

They got the "killer" name not because their individual stings are any worse than those of regular bees, but because thousands of the overprotective bees sometimes sting people or animals who get too near hives.

Researchers warn that the bees will be a hazard in urban areas and that they may cost $3 million to $4 million a year in lower honey production.

The northernmost hive was found last November in central Tamaulipas, the Mexican state just south of Texas' lush Rio Grande Valley.

The same December freeze that destroyed much of the Texas citrus crop reached deep into Mexico, destroying much of the Midland, Odessa consider suspension of TU rate hike

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Facing the most complicated rate hike request in TU Electric history, a 50-city steering committee has recommended suspending the increase for 90 days, Midland City Attorney David Reagan said Tuesday.

The committee of representatives from TU Electric municipalities such as Midland, Dallas, Fort Worth, Killean and Tyler met last week to discuss how to react to the company's 10.2 percent rate hike request.

Rather than immediately oppose or support the proposal, filed Jan. 16 with the Public Utility Commission, the committee opted to suggest municipalities suspend the rate.

Cities technically have the right of first refusal in rate hike requests. The electric company can then appeal the decision to the PUC.

However, a city resolution to suspend a rate hike's implementation is automatic once approved and cannot be appealed to the PUC.

Reagan said a Midland resolution, which would change the earliest date the hike could go into effect from Feb. 20 to May 21, is scheduled to go before City Council on Feb. 13.

The extra time would not only give Midland officials but those in other cities statewide a chance to thoroughly review TU Electric's request, Reagan said.

"This rate request is extremely "This (TU Electric) rate request is extremely complicated. It has 24 volumes of material that need to be reviewed."

— David Reagan, city attorney complicated," he said. "It has 24 volumes of material that need to be reviewed."

The steering committee also unanimously approved employing the services of two companies to scrutinize TU Electric's proposal.

The additional $442 million in revenues from the rate hike would recover construction costs for Unit 1 of the Comanche Peak Nuclear Plant, located about 45 miles southwest of Fort Worth.

Technical Analysis Corp. of California will study how prudent the electric company was in constructing Comanche Peak. Meanwhile, Diversified Utilities Consultant Inc. of Austin will study the rate hike proposal's design.

"The companies could recommend supporting it (rate hike)," Reagan said. "But until they review that massive amount of information, it's difficult to say which way they'll go."

Midland's share for the two companies' studies is $10,000, Reagan said. A city's share of the cost is based on its population, he added.

The cities, though, will get the money back because, according to a Texas statute, the rate hike study costs must be paid by the electric company, Reagan said.

Midland and Odessa joined other cities in an intervention when TU Electric sought an 8 percent rate increase in 1984. Instead, the company got a 0.3 percent rate decrease.

In anticipation of the current proposal, Midland City Council approved joining the steering committee more than three months ago.

TU Electric serves about a third of Texas residents, including many cities in the northern half of the state and as far west as Fort Stockton.

Reagan said he expects other cities in TU Electric's service area to join the committee in the next month.

Larry Long, assistant city attorney in Odessa, said officials in his city are still contemplating whether to join the committee.

Odessa City Council delayed action on the proposal at a Jan. 23 meeting. Councilmen considered either denying the rate increase or delaying their decision.

The council voted 3-2 to delay action. The municipalities have until midnight May 21 to make a final decision.

MISD, MC delay concurrent classes

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

A Midland Independent School District plan to allow students to earn college credit in high school classes has been postponed, MISD and Midland College officials said this week.

Concurrent enrollment is proving more complicated than either the school district or Midland College anticipated, Mari-dell Fryar, MISD executive director of instructional services, said Tuesday.

"We just didn't have a long enough time to get all the coordination done that needed to be done," Ms. Fryar said.

MISD trustees approved in September 1989 an agreement with Midland College allowing juniors and seniors to earn college and high school credit in certain high school classes.

MISD officials had planned to start concurrent enrollment classes this semester, but Ms. Fryar said the program has been postponed until summer.

Midland College will offer summer school classes for both high school and college credit, Ms. Fryar said.

Hosni Nabi, Midland College dean of academic and occupational programs, said college courses at high school campuses will be available in the fall.

Concurrent enrollment students would be in high school honors or advanced classes with other students, but might have to perform additional coursework or take tougher tests. They would have to pay Midland College tuition.

Nabi said concurrent enrollment had been delayed because many of the college's spring courses are continuations of fall prerequisites.

"It was very difficult to start it in January," Nabi said. "This way we will be able to coordinate MISD courses with our courses."

Nabi said concurrent enrollment will offer classes in math, chemistry, biology, government, economics and English. MISD concurrent enrollment teachers will have the same qualifications as Midland College instructors, he said.

Qualifications include a master's degree plus 18 graduate hours in the field being taught, Nabi said.

"MISD has a large number of well-qualified teachers," he said. "He said concurrent enrollment will save students time and money."

"Look at the time factor," he said. "You'll have people who will be able to finish one year of college before they finish high school."

Handicapped, disabled students have pressing jobs

By DAVE PEGO

DALLAS (AP) — Oscar Brisco, who teaches Dallas high school students the laundry and dry cleaning business, has done almost too good a job.

Customers like the students' work so much that all of a sudden the pupils can't get the clothes out in time. As a result, the Dallas Independent School District's laundry and dry cleaning program now limits customers to five dry cleaning items and five laundry articles per week.

"They were overflowing us with clothes," Brisco said. "I didn't even have time to teach the class. We were spending all our time trying to get the clothes out."

The program is in its sixth year under Brisco.

"We've done such good work that one friend would tell another friend about us, and it got to booming," he said. "We had more people bringing in clothes than we could possibly do."

Making money isn't the idea. Making productive citizens is, the instructor said.

The DISD program is believed to be only one of three in the nation that teaches public school students the ins and outs of the cleaning business — from the pressing concerns of running a large steam iron to the measured concentration needed to pour in the right amount of soap for troublesome loads.

The other public school programs are in New York and in Houston, according to Brisco, who used to own and operate a dry cleaning business. The DISD program is unique in the fact that it concentrates its efforts on physically handicapped students or those who have learning disabilities.

Based at the Multiple Careers Magnet School in East Dallas, the program operates essentially like a regular dry cleaning establishment. Customers drop off clothes Monday through Wednesday, then pick them up a week later.

"We're way under everyone else price-wise," Brisco said. "But we were still generating too much money. It was becoming an enterprise, although all money we made was turned back to the district. So they made us cut our prices in half. A dress used to be $2 to clean, but now it's $1."

Students attend regular high school classes for a half-day elsewhere and spend either three hours in the morning or afternoon at the magnet school. Each class is limited to 10 students so they can have personal instruction.

Although the program hasn't drawn much attention other than word-of-mouth advertising among its customers, education observers visiting from Japan, Australia and Switzerland, hope to replicate the program's success in those countries.

The older students in the program begin taking outside jobs as their experience increases, and Brisco estimates about 80 percent eventually take positions in the cleaning business. Others use their work experience and newfound skills to obtain other kinds of jobs, positions that Brisco said they might now have been able to find otherwise.

"These kids will make $5 an hour when they're still in high school, then $6 to $8 an hour after they graduate," he said. "You know they wouldn't make that working at a McDonald's or a Jack in the Box."

Principal Norwood King is highly complimentary of the job that the 51-year-old Brisco does in teaching laundry lessons such as the fine art of bagging and tagging. In fact, the principal regularly drops off his best suits to be cleaned by the students.

The laundry class is one of seven work-skills programs at the magnet school, King said. Other students are learning to be receptionists, carpenters, printers and food-service workers.

But thanks to Brisco's expertise — he's a graduate of the former National Institute of Dry Cleaning in Silver Springs, Md. — the dry cleaning program is a shining success. It's so popular with the public that many people will be panicked in June, Brisco said.

"Come summer, they'll be begging us to stay open," he said, with a laugh. "But you wrestle with kids nine months and you need some time to recuperate. They'll have to find someplace else to take their clothes."

would be able to raise a lot more money," Burnett said.

Andy Welch, a spokesman for Hightower, said the commissioner was confident of winning reelection, but added, "Anytime the Farm Bureau sends six Democrats and three Republicans out against you, you get a little worried."

Welch rejected claims that Hightower is "out of the mainstream," saying that if his detractors "would pull their heads out of the sand long enough, they would see that 80 percent of our work is helping mainstream agriculture in Texas."

Burnett and others have attacked Hightower's championing of so-called "boutique" farm crops such as mushrooms, blueberries, wine grapes and cut flowers. But Welch defended that emphasis, claiming it has been necessitated in part by the failure of more conventional farm crops to sustain small farmers in Texas.

Still, the incumbent is not taking his opponents lightly. Hightower's campaign fund is now more than $250,000 and is expected to top $1 million by the general election in November, Welch said.

Hightower was elected to his first four-year term in 1982 and won reelection in 1986 by a wide margin.

Dole says men still hold most positions of power

DALLAS (AP) — Although women now make up the majority of workers in many fields, they still have limited or no hope of reaching the top, Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole told a "Women in Leadership" luncheon.

Dole

The number of women professionals — lawyers and doctors, for instance — has almost doubled since 1972, and the number of women in managerial jobs has almost tripled, she said Tuesday at the luncheon, sponsored by the Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

But the positions of power and decision-making in business are still held primarily by men, she said. Of the nation's 500 largest companies, only two have a woman chief executive officer, she said.

Women who do rise to the corporate vice-president level or above receive only 58 percent of the salary of their male peers, she said.

One of the goals as Secretary of Labor, she said, is to remove some of the "often invisible and impenetrable barriers" that frequently block women managers from reaching the top.

Ms. Dole's talk came exactly one year after President Bush swore her in as the nation's 20th Secretary of Labor. During the Reagan administration, she became the longest-serving Secretary of Transportation, holding the job from February 1983 until October 1987.

The role of women in public life has advanced by large strides in recent years, and nowhere is that more obvious than in Texas, she said.

She noted that Texas' four largest cities — Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and El Paso — now have female mayors.

"All of these women succeeded only after long histories of grassroots service in their communities," she said. "Women have always been active in organizations important to the fabric of community life — churches, the Parent-Teacher Association, charities, and hospital, library and school boards."

Only 5 percent of Congress is female, but the numbers increase at local levels, Ms. Dole said. Females comprise 11 percent of all mayors and 15 percent of state legislators, she added.

"Indeed, the number of women in elected office has tripled since 1975," she said.

Her husband, Sen. Bob Dole, the Republican leader of the Senate, chose a woman for his chief of staff, she said, "and both of us have consistently appointed women to top leadership positions."

BEES

bees' food. A drought also has made things tough in Mexico.

"There's two schools of thought about what effect the freeze and drought will have," said Anita Collins, head of a U.S. Agricultural Research Service bee lab in Weslaco.

"One is that the bees will be slowed down, and the other is that it will make the ones that are there pick up and move on."

Agricultural agents teaching beekeepers the importance of trying to maintain healthy European queen bees in hives, thus preventing the hives from becoming Africanized.

Texas has only two apiary inspectors, said John Thomas, a spokesman for Texas A&M. Those inspectors already are overworked and funding for more inspectors was cut when the Legislature decided not to appropriate money for the bee action plan.

Thomas predicted it will be two or three more years before meaningful numbers of Africanized bees arrive in the Houston area.

HOUSTON (AP) — The family of a 3-year-old girl paralyzed in a tree accident that killed her brother say they would like to take her home, but they cannot afford the medical care.

"This is the saddest case I've ever seen," said HealthSouth administrator Darrell Pile. "Monica's family has lost a son already, and now their daughter, who could have a better future, might not have it simply because of money."

Monica Gracia and her 11-year-old brother, Joey, were swinging in a hammock with another brother and their cousins in July 1988 when one of the two trees supporting the hammock collapsed.

Monica survived the accident but was paralyzed from the neck down and permanently placed on a ventilator. After a year and a half at the HealthSouth Rehabilitation Center in Humble, she is ready to go home.

But her parents, Mary and Jose Gracia, can't afford the $35,000 for a portable ventilator and about $28,000 monthly round-the-clock medical care to take their daughter home to Brownsville.

As it is, the family is split up so that Mary Gracia and her 2-year-old son, Christopher, can be near Monica and Jose Gracia can continue at his adult probation officer's job and raise 10-year-old Adam. Mary Gracia was forced to quit her job as a substitute teacher.

While HealthSouth administrators said they will allow Monica to stay in the hospital indefinitely, employees believe she would be better off at home.

Pediatrician Dr. Mark Smith said Monica will remain paralyzed and ventilator-dependent indefinitely because of injuries to her head, neck and spinal cord. She must be fed through a tube and monitored closely for urinary tract infections, and she needs occupational and physical therapy to catch up with other children her age.

DEATHS

Betty Daniels

Services for Betty Ann Daniels of Midland were to be at 2 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with Dr. David Weyant, pastor of Highland United Methodist Church of Odessa, officiating. Graveside services will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the Cedervale Cemetery in Bay City with the Rev. W.A. Haskell, retired pastor of St. Paul's United Methodist Church of Bay City, officiating.

Local arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home. Arrangements in Bay City are being handled by Taylor Brothers Funeral Home.

Mrs. Daniels died Wednesday at a local hospital. She was born May 1, 1931 in Bay City where she was reared and graduated from high school. She met Ned Daniels in Bay City and they were married there June 25, 1955. The Daniels moved to Houston where he was employed with Marathon Oil Company. They later moved to Iran, where they remained for 18 years.

The also spent several years in Hobbs, N.M., and lived in Midland from 1963 to 1969, before returning to Midland in 1982.

She was a member of the First United Methodist Church of Iran, the Garden Club at Iran, Ladies Church Club, Petroleum Wives Association of Midland, and the Permian AIMEES Club of Midland.

Survivors include her husband, Ned Daniels of Midland; two sons, Reagan Daniels of Jackson, Mich., and Steve Daniels of Lansing, Mich.; three brothers, Frank S. Craft, James A. Craft and Robert W. Craft, all of Bay City; seven nieces and 10 nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas, 79702; Allison-Cancer Center, 2200 W. Illinois, Midland, Texas, 79701; or to the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center, 1515 Holcombe Blvd. 135, Houston, Texas, 77030.

Honorary pallbearers will be Don Narrell, Cliff Miller, Hoyt Smith, Jack Paxton, Earl Morris, Evans Turpin, Burton, Lanehart, Lee Mann, Frank Varner, Vern Hull, Bill Smith and Charlie Laffoon.

Billy Greenfield

DENVER CITY — Funeral services for Billy Max Greenfield, 63, of Denver City, brother of Elvone Morris and Joy McAnear, both of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Thursday at Trinity Baptist Church with the Rev. M.O. Garner officiating. Burial will follow in Denver City Memorial Park under the direction of Singleton Funeral Home.

Greenfield died Tuesday at his residence after a brief illness. He was born April 2, 1926 in Brownfield and was owner of the Top Specialties Oilfield Supply Co., and also raised horses.

Greenfield moved to Denver City about 25 years ago from Snyder. He was a member of the Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife, Socarro Pagan Greenfield of Denver City; a stepson, Richard Miller of Ropesville; a stepdaughter, Linda Miller of San Patricia, N.M.; a brother, Ted Greenfield of Rockport; and three grandchildren.

Hattie Joos

Graveside services for Hattie Satterfield Joos of Midland will be held Friday at the Chickalah Cemetery in Dardanelle, Ark., under the direction of the Cornwell Funeral Home there. Local arrangements were handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Tuesday at a local hospital.

She is survived by two grandchildren, Nancy Satterfield Woodman of Midland and Susan Satterfield Landreaux of Texarkana; six great-grandchildren; three nieces and one nephew.

Reading seminar to be offered

Residents of Midland County:

We are proud to announce the "Crisis Intervention Unit" as the newest addition to our Department. This program officially went into effect Jan. 1, 1990, and is presently serving the Midland PD, DPS, Fire Dept. and the Sheriff's Office on a 24-hour basis. CIU is staffed by a Program Coordinator and 16 highly trained and experienced volunteers. CIU responds to the request of Law Enforcement Agencies to all types of crisis situations, assisting officers as well as any victims at the scene.

This Unit assists with death notifications, suicide intervention, sexual assaults, child abuse and domestic violence. CIU is prepared to offer a complete support system to citizens in need and to direct them to other assisting agencies to assure that their immediate needs are met.

For more information contact CIU Coordinator Olivia Wilson at 689-8554 or Deputy Phillip Buys at 688-1015.

"TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY"

Cowboys express themselves through poetry competitions

EDITOR'S NOTE: It wasn't a cowboy who first wrote that someone "bit the dust." That's from Homer's "Iliad." But America's riders of the range are beginning to let others know that they, too, have a way with words, thanks in large part to an annual gathering of cowboy poets in Nevada.

By BOB KERR

Cowboy poets who once practiced their art mainly in bunkhouses and bars and at family gatherings have extended their stage across America in recent years, appearing on national television and the banquet circuit.

Cowboy poetry has existed as long as there have been cowboys. Several old songs began as cowboy verse and the earliest books of cowboy poems were published as early as the 19th century.

But it didn't really attract a wide audience until January 1985 when Hal Cannon, former state folklorist in Utah, organized with several others the Cowboy Poets Gathering in Elko, Nev., now an annual event held every January.

"Cowboy poetry was a part of American folklore but it had almost no exposure," says Cannon, who has become the director of the Western Folk Life Center in Salt Lake City. "America didn't know about the poetic cowboy."

"So we all started thinking about it. We started looking around our own states and found that almost everyone who interprets the cowboy is an outsider. Movie makers, TV producers, journalists, artists, folklorists."

"The cowboy hadn't really had a chance to tell his own story. He really didn't have a public forum."

Baxter Black of Henderson, Colo., considered to be the only such poet who derives his entire income from rhyme, says audiences find Western poetry enchanting because of the cowboy's independent image.

"HE HAS A physical job," Black says. "He's outdoors. He's placing himself against the elements with the mythical Code of the West to guide him. When the chips are down, this is the person you want to stand beside you."

Black, who has traveled the banquet circuit for years with stopovers in such places as Muleshoe, Texas, says acceptance from the general public began with that first poetry gathering in Elko.

Before the poets went public, Cannon says, "the only place you really heard them was in bars or cow camp. They were pretty private sessions."

Cowboys and ranchers first published their poetic works as early as 1880, he says, but, "It just never got out to the public."

The public exposure has brought out "several hundred" other cowboy poets, some better than others.

"The quality ranges from bad to great," Cannon says.

Buck Ramsey of Amarillo, Texas, one of the newcomers to the cowboy poet circle, is considered by Cannon to be one of the best.

"When I hear Buck Ramsey recite his poetry, I'm much more moved than when I see someone throw his hat all around the stage," Cannon says.

Performance, which includes gestures, facial expressions and tone of voice, sometimes overshadows the content at cowboy poetry readings. Ramsey's verse is straightforward with no histrionics. Asked for a couplet about a cowboy poet, Ramsey replied:

"He'd do to ride the river with, 'I'd have you say of me. 'And if I lived to fit the words, 'I'd be all I should be."

WADDY MITCHELL, a ranch foreman near Elko who also has found national prominence as a cowboy poet, estimates participation since the first gathering has increased 2,000 percent.

Mitchell has appeared on several television specials and toured recently with country singer Michael Martin Murphy, to places like Martha's Vineyard, Mass., and Miami.

Black, who acts as his own business manager and limits his appearances off the banquet circuit to about five a year, has been a guest on the Johnny Carson show twice.

Other poets have begun to fill in as headliners at dinners, banquets and conventions throughout the West.

Cannon is preparing an anthology of cowboy poetry that will include some of Ramsey's work.

Ramsey, injured in a bronc-riding accident on a Texas Panhandle ranch in 1963, has written non-fiction for Southwestern publications for years. He believes many cowboys are far better-educated in literature than most people realize.

Some of the cowboy language comes from such classics as Homer's "The Iliad."

Homer referred to a breaker of horses 56 times in his classic work, Ramsey says. It also produced the term "bit the dust."

The "Bull Durham" classics also supplemented the cowboys' literary understanding.

"Back before the turn of the century, you could send a dime off with a tag off a Bull Durham tobacco sack and get one of the 303 classics," Ramsey says. "The set included all of the great literature from Homer up through the American writers."

Ramsey wrote poems as a young cowboy along the Canadian River breaks.

In later years, "I would see someone like Baxter or Waddy on TV saying their poems and the old poems were running through my mind. After I saw them, I decided to write my poems down."

Ramsey, Mitchell says, is "a jewel of a guy and a good storyteller. And a pretty good guitar picker."

"At first I didn't want to talk about our funerals. But, now I'm glad we did."

We chose Forethought funeral planning

It's one of those things that's so easy to put off, put out of your mind. And I guess that's what I was doing. But, once he started asking me questions about how I wanted my funeral to be, I realized how important it is for the people we leave behind to know these things. He had no idea that I wanted a simple eulogy, and just that discussion alone started us on all sorts of other topics. I found out he doesn't like organ music. We even had a few laughs.

Forethought is funeral planning... before the need arises

I thought planning our funerals together would be a terribly sad thing. But, actually, it brought us both a great sense of relief. Now we know neither one of us has all those decisions facing us in the future and we won't have to second-guess whether we did the right thing... did what the other one would have wanted. It's all planned and even paid for with the Forethought life insurance policy designed and approved specifically for Forethought funeral planning. And, because we're both between 40 and 90 years old, we can't be turned down for any reason. There's a real peace of mind that comes with having it taken care of ahead of time with Forethought.

Local citizens join riot police to remove a roadblock in Urosevac, Yugoslavia, Tuesday. In a nearby town in Kosovo province, ethnic Albanian police had refused orders to intervene in a demonstration.

Yugoslavian students demand weapons

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Thousands of students demonstrated in Belgrade today demanding weapons to defend Slavs in Kosovo province after five people died in clashes between ethnic Albanians and police.

Ethnic Albanians turned out in Kosovo today to bury victims of Tuesday's violence. Official media said the situation in the ethnically divided province was approaching civil war.

Since the latest clashes broke out Jan. 24, official media have reported 13 deaths.

In Belgrade, up to 5,000 students assembled late Tuesday in front of the federal Parliament and demonstrated until early morning, demanding arms to go to Kosovo to protect the Slavs, who are greatly outnumbered by ethnic Albanians.

They proclaimed a general strike, and demanded the resignation of the "highest organs of the federation" unless what they termed "nationalist and vandalist rioting of (ethnic Albanian) terrorists" in Kosovo is not halted within 48 hours.

"We shall give our lives, but not Kosovo!" they chanted.

They also chanted "Hang Azem Vllasi" referring to the former Communist leader of Kosovo who is on trial for allegedly inciting ethnic Albanians to riot nearly a year ago.

The Albanians, who are mostly Muslims, want to regain the autonomy lost when the Serbian republic took control of Kosovo's police, judiciary and education last year. Kosovo is a province within Serbia and borders Albania.

The Slav minority, which includes mainly Christian Serbs and Montenegrins, contends the Albanians were trying to force them from their homeland and that increased control over the region was necessary.

Tuesday, thousands of ethnic Albanians demanding free elections, freedom for political prisoners and the lifting of a state of emergency protested in the Kosovo cities of Malisevo, Podujevo, Urosevac, Orasovac, Kosovska Vitina and several other towns. Strikes were reported at several factories in support of them.

Official media reported five demonstrators were killed.

"Kosovo is closer to civil war than it was ever before," said the Oslobođenje daily in the city of Sarajevo. "Whether Kosovo will become even bloodier is a question which no one can answer. The situation is dramatic and uncertain, and it is hard to predict what will take place within an hour or two, not to mention tomorrow."

Romanian opposition wary of offer

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Major opposition parties today denounced the revolutionary government's plan to continue governing while competing in elections and warned that a new dictatorship could emerge.

Opposition groups have angrily criticized the ruling National Salvation Front, which assumed power during the bloody December revolt that toppled Nicolae Ceausescu, for reneging on its promise to run Romania only until the May 20 elections.

They had demanded the interim government not field candidates in elections it will oversee and accused it of trying to establish one-party rule.

Tuesday, the interim government said it would share power until the elections and split into two groups — one to govern and the other to conduct elections.

The opposition National Liberal Party said the move failed to answer its objections because it would still be running the government and participating in elections.

"This is illegal. We asked the Front to transform itself into a political party," party spokesman Nicolae Enescu told The Associated Press. "If it takes part in elections and represents the interests of the state, it seems like a dictatorship again."

The other major opposition group, the 260,000-member National Peasant Party, charged that if the National Salvation Front wins, it will establish another Communist dictatorship "with a human face."

Critics noted that the Front controls the military, bureaucracy and industry and has restricted opposition access to the mass media.

Senior Front member Silviu Brucan offered the coalition government and announced the split in comments to selected reporters, a transcript of which was made available to The Associated Press.

The concessions follow growing public dissatisfaction with the Front's ruling tactics and international criticism of it for allowing pro-government demonstrators to besiege the headquarters of two opposition parties Monday.

Opposition leaders claimed they had been the target of government-organized harassment, noting that many of the protesters were workers who arrived in the capital in government-owned trucks and buses.

Tuesday, the U.S. State Department accused the Front of intimidating the opposition and said department human rights director Richard Schifter was in Bucharest "forcefully stating our concerns."

"We are deeply troubled by what appears to be active intimidation of legitimate organizations which are seeking a legitimate, independent role in Romania's new political order," State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said in Washington.

— National Liberation Party spokesman Nicolae Enescu

Schifter met with opposition leaders Tuesday and was to confer with key government figures today.

The demonstrators Monday broke into Liberal Party headquarters and surrounded the offices of the National Peasant Party, forcing its president to flee in an armored personnel carrier provided by authorities.

Sunday, thousands of protesters had converged on government headquarters, demanding the Front share power or resign.

Many opposition groups have accused the Front — which is composed of military officers, intellectuals and disaffected Communists — of seeking to continue Communist rule.

Brucan declared Tuesday: "We believe it is illegal for the Front to hold political power and take part in elections at the same time."

"That is why we have split into a provisional National Council, to hold legislative power on the one hand, and the National Salvation Front, which is to take part in the elections as a political organization, on the other."

He said the government would suggest opposition parties "take part in the provisional National Council in order to guarantee the objectivity of the elections," when talks between the government and opposition resume Thursday.

In other developments, a military tribunal was told that Ceausescu's defense minister, Vasile Milea, was not killed on Ceausescu's orders as had been believed but killed himself rather than give orders to fire on anti-Ceausescu demonstrators.

Milea has become a hero of the Romanian revolution for trying to keep the army from firing on unarmed demonstrators, as ordered by Ceausescu.

Bulgarian opposition rejects party offer

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Bulgaria's opposition today rejected a Communist offer to share power before the first free elections in more than four decades.

Petar Beron, spokesman for the loose opposition umbrella group, the Union of Democratic Forces, spoke on Sofia radio, the state news agency BTA said.

Opposition leaders have rejected previous Communist offers to enter what Communist Party chief Petar Mladenov called a "government of national concord" before the elections. They had called the offers a Communist ploy to get the opposition to share responsibility for four decades of mismanagement.

The opposition has been holding talks with the Communists on power-sharing.

Mladenov reiterated the Communist offer to share power in an opening speech Tuesday to a party congress, where he is trying to avoid a formal split between reformers and hard-liners.

The congress was moved up from 1991 after Bulgaria was caught up in the pro-democracy movement sweeping Eastern Europe. Bulgaria's hard-line Communist leader, Todor Zhivkov, was ousted Nov. 10 after 35 years in power.

Mladenov gave no details of how much power the Communists would have in his proposed power-sharing Cabinet.

Governments dominated by non-Communists are running East Germany and Czechoslovakia prior to their free elections in March and June, respectively.

Mladenov also said Tuesday that Bulgaria's first free elections should be held in May, not in November as the opposition had demanded.

It was one of the few points of the party chief's speech that was applauded by the 2,752 congress delegates.

According to BTA, Beron told Radio Sofia today that his group has decided to consent to May elections because it believes the present Communist-dominated Parliament simply "cannot enact any substantial reforms."

Reformers made a strong showing today as the Communist party congress entered its second day.

Reform-minded journalist Stefan Prodeev, chief editor of the weekly Narodna Cultura who was chosen two days ago to head the official Journalists' Union, said Communists could win public support only by shedding "dogmas of a harmful ideology" that he charged still dominated the views of most party members.

Polish cardinal has surgery to stop internal bleeding

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Cardinal Jozef Glemp, leader of Poland's powerful Roman Catholic Church, was in serious condition today after emergency surgery to stop bleeding in his digestive system, state-run media said.

Glemp, 61, was in intensive care at a large provincial hospital in the Praga section of Warsaw, according to church officials. A spokesman at the cardinal's residence said Glemp's "state of health is improving."

During surgery Tuesday, "doctors discovered he had a massive hemorrhage from the alimentary canal," which comprises the esophagus, stomach and intestines, Glemp's secretary told the official PAP news agency.

"The primate's condition is reported as serious but he is under meticulous medical care," PAP said. It said President Wojciech Jaruzelski visited Glemp in the hospital Tuesday night.

Glemp, primate since 1981 and a cardinal since 1983, is spiritual leader to the more than 90 percent of Poland's 38 million people who regard themselves as Roman Catholic.

Under his leadership the church gave support to the banned Solidarity movement and participated in the negotiations that led to the union's legalization in April after a seven-year ban.

On Aug. 24, Solidarity activist Tadeusz Mazowiecki formed the first non-Communist-led government in the Soviet bloc.

Glemp was criticized by Jewish leaders last summer when he abrogated a church agreement with the leaders to remove a Roman Catholic convent from the edge of the former Auschwitz concentration camp in southern Poland.

A sermon Glemp gave on Catholic-Jewish relations in Poland was also criticized internationally as insensitive and containing anti-Semitic stereotypes.

Glemp denied charges of anti-Semitism and has reinstituted the agreement to move the convent, after the Vatican said the pact should be respected.

East eats West

Moscow comes under Big Mac attack

MOSCOW (AP) — With the familiar sign of the Golden Arches embellished by the Soviet hammer-and-sickle flag, McDonald's opened in Moscow today to offer Russians their first taste of Western consumerism, not to mention hamburgers.

Hundreds of people tried gingerly to get their fingers around their first American hamburger. They tried eating them one-handed. They picked them apart to examine the contents.

One young woman finally squashed her Big Mac in order to fit her lips around it.

"It tasted great!" said a 14-year-old boy, a sesame seed still stuck to his nose.

The restaurant "is a lot different from a stolovaya," he continued, referring to the run-down, dirty cafeterias that slop out dishes like rice and fat or boiled sausage in the Soviet Union's closest approximation to fast food.

The restaurant was 14 years in the making, but finally, thanks to the reforms of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, people got a first-hand look at such alien concepts as efficiency and fast, friendly service.

Unlike nearly all other Western firms opening up in Moscow, McDonald's is selling for rubles, which are worthless outside the Soviet Union and won't even buy much in the shortage-plagued country. It expects to serve 15,000 people a day.

Hundreds of people lined up for the long-awaited grand opening, reaching eagerly for McDonald's flags and pins handed out by the hamburger chain's brigade of workers. An hour before opening, the McDonald's crew handed out advertising leaflets at the Pushkin Square metro stop a few yards away.

Normally dour-faced citizens broke into grins, catching the infectious cheerful mood from youthful Soviet staffers hired for their ability to smile and work hard. Accordions played folk songs and women in traditional costumes danced with cartoon characters.

The line of about 500 people moved steadily, thanks to McDonald's decision to build and staff 27 cash registers.

"I only waited an hour and I think they served thousands before me," said a happy middle-aged woman from the aluminum plant on Dmitrovskoye Highway. "And it was only 10 rubles for all this," she said, pointing to a bag packed with unfamiliar treats like cheeseburgers and "Flay-o-feesh" sandwiches. "I'm taking it back for the girls at the factory to try."

"Beeg Maks" were priced at 3.75 rubles, and double cheeseburgers at 3 rubles — about two hours' pay for a starting McDonald's staffer or the average Soviet worker. That's a bit high compared to state restaurants but much cheaper than the private cooperative outlets that have sprung up in the past year.

Three Armenian students said they flew 1,250 miles from Yerevan to Moscow just for the McDonald's opening.

"It was magnificent," said Ida Zakharyan, gushing over the clean, brightly colored interior and the 10-minute service she experienced.

"Well, my wife makes better food," said Victor Kunyasev of Moscow.

"But it was nice, a good place to take a break and grab a bite to eat."

The restaurant, which is a joint venture of McDonald's of Canada and the city of Moscow, limited purchases to 10 Big Macs per customer to prevent a local entrepreneur from setting up an unauthorized subsidiary around the corner.

McDonald's built its own factory, including a bakery, a dairy, a meat-processing plant and even a potato storage yard, to provide its own guaranteed supplies in a country where as much as 25 percent of the harvest rots on the way to the consumer.

One McDonald's associate in the crowd said the firm wound up importing wooden crates from Finland for storing potatoes because "when they went to build crates, they found there was no wood, and no nails. They found you need a permit to buy nails."

Gorbachev says he won't resign Communist post

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev today denied a U.S. broadcast report that he is considering resigning his post as Communist Party chief.

"No one has said this, and I certainly didn't make any such statement," the Soviet president and party general secretary said. "Any such suggestions are groundless."

The Cable News Network reported Tuesday, quoting an unidentified party source, that Gorbachev had spent eight days holed up at his country house outside Moscow with his top advisers, where he was considering resigning his leadership of the party.

The source was quoted as saying Gorbachev would have retained the presidency, a government position he proposes to convert from a largely ceremonial post to a substantive one.

"I have no intention of doing so," Gorbachev said when asked about the report during a photo session at the start of a Kremlin meeting with President-elect Fernando Collor de Mello of Brazil.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Genady I. Gerasimov, speaking at a regular news briefing, also denied the CNN report.

President Bush today phoned Gorbachev to discuss arms control and other issues. Asked if the two discussed the CNN report, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "The president said there was no direct discussion of that."

The official Tass news agency said the two leaders discussed international affairs, the situation in Europe and arms control. It did not say if Bush asked Gorbachev whether he intended to resign as party chief.

In a related discussion published in the Communist Party daily Pravda, four scholars urged that the presidency be strengthened to protect the head of state from efforts to oust him and allow him to act more decisively.

The discussion in Pravda appeared aimed at telling readers that party power still is paramount and that the presidency is not strong enough to be the country's main leadership post.

Historian Yevgeny Ambartsumov said in Pravda that Gorbachev appeared unable to take decisive action because of the threat to his position.

The CNN report touched off a temporary flurry of selling on Western stock markets and sent the dollar soaring in New York and Japan.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said he did not know how to respond to what he termed "a rumor."

The ruling Communist Party has traditionally been the power base for Soviet leaders. However, the party has been widely blamed for failing to solve the country's dire economic crisis, and reformist lawmakers are demanding that the Communists give up their monopoly on power.

The presidency has become a more visible and substantive position in recent months. Still, there is little question that the party's Politburo and Central Committee retain the political power.

Gorbachev told journalists he had just returned from the south, apparently referring to his retreat on the Black Sea, where he was preparing for next week's meeting of the Communist Party's governing Central Committee, which is planning a potential critical party congress for the fall.

The rumor about Gorbachev's stepping down was fed by an announcement that Baker was again postponing by a day his scheduled two-day trip to Moscow for talks with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and, almost certainly, Gorbachev as well. Initially, Baker was to go to Moscow on Feb. 6. On Tuesday, the State Department said it had suggested the visit begin on Feb. 8.

Baker said American diplomats in Moscow "know just about the same thing that all the rest of us know right now."

Other eateries trying to lure Hard Rock Cafe patrons

LONDON (AP) — The battle of the burgers is heating up in London as restaurateurs lure diners with American fare and the salad days of rock 'n' roll.

The Hard Rock Cafe still appears to top the charts, but four newcomers are hoping to unseat the progenitor of rock restaurants.

For the first time in its 18-year history the Hard Rock, with its well-known T-shirts and legendary lines of customers snaking along Piccadilly, is not listed in the popular "Good Food Guide."

Editor Tom Jaine refused to say why the Hard Rock was omitted from the 1990 edition but said that generally restaurants are dropped after a change in ownership or chef, or if patterns of taste change.

Hard Rock's chef of 13 years, Dermot Leane, was lured away by Sticky Fingers, the restaurant opened by Rolling Stones guitarist Bill Wyman last May.

"I think a lot of American tourists are bored with queuing up at the Hard Rock, and they are crazy about Sticky Fingers," said manager Lorraine Angless, in a recent interview at the restaurant in Kensington, west London.

"Without a doubt our food is superior," Angless said as she picked at a bunless hamburger, explaining that she was dieting.

Sticky Fingers, named after the Rolling Stones album, displays 250 pieces of Wyman's rock 'n' roll memorabilia, including his certificate of honorary citizenship of Mobile, Ala.; his late bandmate Brian Jones' green Gretsch guitar; and photos of very young Rolling Stones surrounded by psychedelic flowers and old covers of Beat Magazine.

"It's Bill's personal collection," Angless said. "He had originally wanted to open a museum but he took it one step further." Wyman himself has joked that eating is boring, and customers need additional entertainment.

The Rock Garden at Covent Garden, which began as a live music club and helped discover stars such as the Police, U2 and Joe Jackson, has also gone into the restaurant-and-memorabilia business. But marketing man Henry Weinreich bristles at comparisons with the Hard Rock.

"We're not borrowing a history. It's our history that's happening every day. We guard it jealously," he said. "If you want to see a museum, go there. If you want to be around young Londoners and out of a tourist trap, then come here."

The upstairs walls are lined with first contracts of those who made it big: a $700 fee for two shows on Aug. 10, 1977 by Talking Heads, and a $100 payment to Dire Straits for a Feb. 11,

The promotional material asks diners "not to be too uncool" if a rock superstar sits next to them. But Paul Lyons, editor of the Time Out restaurant guide, warns customers to have no illusions.

"Rock stars go to small French or Japanese restaurants," he said in an interview. "Why would they want to go to restaurants that are pampering to the whims of a small, adolescent to early-20s market?"

Down the street from the Rock Garden is Lennon's, opened 13 months ago by the first wife of the late Beatle John Lennon. Although Cynthia Lennon is no longer in-involved with the restaurant, its walls feature black and white photographs of the Beatles and other rock 'n' rollers.

The latest entrant into rock 'n' roll dining is the Rock Island Diner in the Piccadilly Arcade, which offers imported Hebrew National hot dogs, flecked formica table tops and a live deejay from New Orleans who plays 1950s rock.

"For the older generations this place is pure nostalgia," said operations manager Catherine Trant. "They remember going to the hop, and for the younger generation the '50s are trendy because it's a great era."

Moyers launches second season of 'World of Ideas'

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — In September 1986, Bill Moyers, publicly worrying that CBS News was yielding to "the encroachment of entertainment values," left CBS and returned to public TV. He has been very, very busy there ever since.

This year will be no different. Last Sunday, PBS' resident philosopher and essayist launches the second season of his "World of Ideas" series, this one a once-a-week, 52-week series of half-hour interviews.

In March, he'll have a 90-minute special, "From D-Day to the Rhine" — his trip to Europe last summer with a group of World War II infantrymen who fought from the invasion of Normandy in 1944 to Germany and the war's end in 1945.

Next fall, he'll have "Amazing Grace," a 90-minute special about John Newton's classic hymn as told by those who've sung it, among them opera's Jessye Norman, pop singer Judy Collins and folk singer Jean Ritchie.

Also afoot: "Kids at Risk," a study of high school graduates who can't function in society, and a 1991 special that, as he puts it, examines why college athletes "can be stars on Saturday and failures in life."

Moyers' first "World of Ideas," which led off with filmmaker David Puttnam, had five interviews a week for 10 weeks with a varied mix of subjects.

The more leisurely second round, for which Moyers says he has a three-year, $2.5 million-a-year funding commitment from General Motors and the MacArthur Foundation, is equally eclectic. It starts with Robert Lucky, chief of communications research at Bell Laboratories.

Others on the roster include filmmaker Steven Spielberg, neuro-philosopher Patricia Churchland and playwright-director Peter Sellars. As in his first batch of "Ideas," Moyers doesn't fear the term "talking heads," shots of interviewer and subject talking. For some TV executives of the keep-it-moving MTV generation, talking heads mean many turn-offs.

"Sometimes they are turn-offs," he concedes in his soft Texas accent. "The question is, are the talking heads thinking minds and thinking people? Are they interesting to watch? I think the most fascinating production value is the human face."

Moyers, press secretary to President Lyndon B. Johnson, then publisher of Newsday newspaper before finding TV a bully pulpit for ideas and essays, is less critical of network TV news now than when, dismayed, he left that arena.

However, like former CBS correspondent Ike Pappas, he does worry that some of network news "is dominated now by producers — which is not itself a bad thing if they started out as reporters and journalists."

"But if all they know is pictures and editing, then the success of the piece is at the expense of the journalist."

Still, he says, some network newscasts he has seen — mostly on weekends — "are very good." He singles out CBS' Saturday and Sunday night newscast and the "CBS News Sunday Morning" that Charles Kuralt anchors.

"I'm a big fan of Kuralt's show," he says. "It's the most visually interesting and literate broadcast on the air."

On most weeknights, he says, he watches Cable News Network, likening its newscasts to the straight-ahead "CBS Evening News" when Walter Cronkite anchored it.

"CNN is doing the basic nuts and bolts of news the way Cronkite used to do it," Moyers says, venturing that in time Ted Turner's 24-hour CNN "will be the staple of most people."

The primary reason, he says, is that "our work habits, travel schedules and living habits are such now that it's very hard to create a critical mass of audience at a given time. So you have to be there when people want you."

Will network evening newscasts eventually go the way of the pterodactyl? Moyers, the former commentator on those of CBS, doesn't know.

"It's hard to fathom the thinking of the people who are in charge" of the networks now, he says. "As long as they are making money out of it, I think they will continue what they're doing."

"But I find it hard to believe that all three of them can be making money out of newscasts that are essentially alike."

Some movies' dialogue anachronistic

By JOHN HORN

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Eddie Murphy may be funny, but when it comes to language, he's a linguistic laughingstock.

Forget the four-letter words. Examine instead Murphy's "Harlem Nights," set in 1918 and 1938, and the movie's inaccurate use of very hip phrases such as "Gimme five," "I'll let you have your space," "Take it easy," "Yo!" and "I just need a couple of seconds to get my head together."

Or put "Fat Man and Little Boy" under the semantic stethoscope. The Paul Newman film, set during 1942's Manhattan Project, bombards atomic-age dialogue with the contemporary phrase "dead meat," the hip verb "obsessing" and the 1980s greeting, "It's good to see you, bro."

Robert L. Chapman, author of "The New Dictionary of American Slang," said of all the expressions mentioned above, only "gimme five" and "bro" were on the fringes of acceptable usage during the years in which their films were set.

Everything else, he said, is out. Like, way out.

While most production designers, set decorators, costumers, property masters and choreographers seem to have mastered period authenticity, a few scriptwriters are excelling as idiom idiots, littering movies with linguistic anachronisms.

Even the most conscientious writers laboring for accuracy occasionally stumble into embarrassing verbal time wars.

Phil Alden Robinson, the author-director of "Field of Dreams" and the mid-1940s period comedy "In the Mood," plowed through newspapers, magazines and court transcripts to collect realistic dialogue for the latter film.

"And then I have the father say to his son in the movie, 'Life's a bitch and then you die,'" Robinson said.

"A few critics referred to it, saying it was a mistake to use an '80s phrase in a '40s film. They may well be right. It just never occurred to me that (the phrase) wasn't something I've always heard."

William Safire, who writes the language column for The New York Times Magazine, noted that Robinson, Murphy and Roland Joffe, director and co-writer of "Fat Man and Little Boy" stand in good company.

"Whatever they did, it wasn't nearly as horrendous as what Shakespeare did by having a clock in 'Julius Caesar,' because back in the days of Julius Caesar (100-44 B.C.) there were no clocks," Safire said.

Syndicated language columnist Jeffrey McQuinn said the musical "Phantom of the Opera," ostensibly set in 1911, features the World War II aviator's expression "point of no return" 30 years prematurely.

Odds for such historical gaffes increase, as young writers and directors raised not on literature but on television and movies work more steadily in the industry.

Lacking the proper dictionaries (or professional interest), the greenhorn (circa 1785) may assume "A-OK" is ages old, but it's from the Eisenhower years. Has "hoosegow" been slang for "jail" since the time of Lewis and Clark? Nope — try 1860.

When budgets and time permit, some scripts are submitted to fact-checking firms such as de Forest research in Los Angeles, which charges $3,500 and up to review a period feature for legal and historical problems.

A fair number of writers don't know much about inaccurate language, said Peter Sloman, a senior researcher at de Forest. "But for those who do know, it can be like listening to an operatic aria where all of a sudden a note comes in a third below where it's supposed to be," he said. "It can be that jarring...as annoying as the big vaccination scars on Indians (in movies set) in 1865."

Yet research firms only serve as advisers on language, and can't really order changes. Furthermore, improvisational performers such as Murphy, Robin Williams and Dustin Hoffman are bound to say whatever comes to mind, whether it's in the script or not.

And sometimes, too much attention to historical accuracy can backfire.

When Paramount Pictures released "Black Rain," an action movie largely set in Japan, the studio's press materials and advertisements featured the movie's title printed in Japanese characters. Too bad they translated as "Black Nane."

Lawmaker wants Alaska in right place

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaska should be put in its place — in the upper left-hand corner of the U.S. map, according to legislators.

Too often Alaska is shown in a small box off the coast of California, or just left off U.S. maps altogether, said state Rep. Fran Ulmer.

Ulmer is the sponsor of a resolution that asks the nation's newspapers, magazines and book publishers to put the state in its rightful geographic position.

The Alaska House passed the resolution unanimously Monday and sent it to the Senate.

The resolution was expanded at the request of Rep. George Jacko to ask publishers not to cut off the Aleutian Islands.

"It's usually broken off and stuck there on the bottom," Jacko said. "I want them to show how big Alaska really is."

Four generations make their home on Floyd County ranch

CEDAR HILL (AP) — When Will Ware rode his horse up to the edge of the Caprock Escarpment in northeast Floyd County in 1920, he knew he'd found the place he wanted to spend the rest of his life.

Before the year was out, he had purchased the rugged land where Quanah Parker, the last great Comanche Indian chief, had camped with his tribe. Ware carved out a ranch in the isolated area east of Plainview where his son, Raz, and his grandson, Clinton, today ride the same trails through the brushland that he rode 60 years ago.

Now Clinton's young sons, Cody, 3, and Clay, 1 1/2, the fourth generation on the Ware Ranch, check the cattle with their grandfather Raz.

"Ranching is easier now," says Raz Ware, driving his four-wheel drive pickup across Brushy Creek on dirt roads bulldozed from the canyon walls back in the 1960s. "The roads make a difference."

Mule deer and Aoudad sheep live in the canyons, along with quail, pheasants and wild turkey.

"I can sit here (parked on an escarpment overlooking the canyon valley) for hours and watch the deer," Raz says with a smile. "It's harder to spot the Aoudads, but they're out there, usually on top of the rim."

The trail that led Will Ware to the Texas High Plains began in Brown County, where he and a twin sister were born July 9, 1883. His sister didn't survive the birth, but Will was tough, an attribute that would strengthen him throughout his life.

Before Will was two, he had lost both parents and was living with an uncle in Scurry County. He attended schools in Snyder, but struck out on his own when he was 13, working as a cowboy on several West Texas ranches before settling down on land he purchased near the Little Red River, north of Quitaque.

Looking to make a new life for himself, Will found the isolated ranchland on the edge of the Caprock perfect for his dreamed-of Hereford herd. The ranch now includes land in northeast Floyd County and northwest Motley County that once belonged to the historic Mataro Land and Cattle Co. and the Goodnight Ranch.

Not only did the rough land appeal to him, a pretty young woman from nearby Floydada had caught his eye. In later years, he would tell his daughter, June, that after his attraction to her mother he "figured if he moved closer to her family, he might be able to court and win her."

It took a few years, but his early tenaciousness succeeded in love as well as in ranching. Will and Grace Beard were married Sept. 3, 1924, in Floydada. They had four children: Billy Glenn, Wayne Raz, Little Joe and June Elizabeth. Little Joe died in 1929 and Bill died in 1964.

Grace was the perfect complement to Will, working by his side to build the ranch. And, as she humorously explained: "I have to have great faith in the Lord living so far out here in the country. How else could you survive?"

Maybe because Will was orphaned at an early age and had to make his own way in life, he was a tough taskmaster, says Raz, but he asked no more of others than he was prepared to give himself. Will Ware's children remember that he loved his family above all and was well respected for his integrity.

"Growing up on the ranch was a wonderful experience for me," says June Ware Brown, who now lives about 80 miles away in Hart, where her husband, DeWayne, owns an insurance agency. "I often rode with my Dad, taking a picnic lunch to eat by the creek."

"We'd saddle my horse, Texas, and mother would pack a lunch for us, always including sugar biscuits. I loved Texas and took a lot of teasing from my brothers who called him Old Blue."

She also remembers family picnics on the Kell place, a piece of land the Ware leased and later purchased.

"It has a cave and waterfall, a beautiful place for picnics," she adds. "There was an old fence post corral where we had brandings. Our preacher at Cedar Hill, G.C. Applewhite, and his wife, Felicia, and daughters Felicia and Myra, loved to help brand. We have wonderful memories of those days."

The family often picnicked on Flat Top, an area landmark on their ranch where Indians camped. Several years ago, Raz accompanied several archaeologists and anthropologists over the ranch where they studied the historic sites, locating 16 places in the weathered rock where the Indian woman ground maize, acorns and other native foods they gathered in the canyon.

Outlook brightens for Indians

N.Y. Times News Service

Native Americans show signs of emerging from their decades-long status as wards of the state, but they still have a long way to go, says the Rev. Tom Westhoven, director of St. Joseph's Indian School in Chamberlain, S.D.

"Everyone should appreciate the fact that within our own country we have people who have not had the opportunities we take for granted."

"The reservation system has made Native Americans dependent on government and unable to do for themselves," said Westhoven.

"The government has in effect never trusted the Indian people to run their own lives. It's treated them like infants for more than 100 years, and any system that takes away people's dignity like that is the worst system possible."

But Westhoven said that's beginning to change as Native Americans become better educated.

"Many Indian people feel the BIA (the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs) should be done away with, not only because it has made Indian people dependent, but because if you're lucky, 15 cents of every dollar reaches and helps Indian people," Westhoven said.

"The rest is lost in the paper bureaucracy."

But while government has done little to help Indians "build up their sense of dignity," Indians can at times be "their own worst enemy," Westhoven added.

"They make choices — alcohol, for instance — that destroy their own lives," Westhoven said. "One significant adult in every home has an alcohol problem."

He also said that because of the Indians' strong sense of family loyalty, those in tribal positions of authority often tend to favor family members instead of paying attention to the needs of the wider Indian community.

A greater incidence of common-law marriages and illegitimate births than in the general population also creates problems for the Indian community, Westhoven said.

Many of the children at St. Joseph's Indian School, founded in 1927, come from broken homes. Westhoven said 70 percent have emotional problems and need special attention.

Operated by the Sacred Heart order of priests in Chamberlain, the school takes in children from the Lakota and five other Sioux tribes in South Dakota.

The school has about 200 students in 17 homes for children in kindergarten through eighth grade, plus two homes for students who attend high school in Chamberlain.

Most of the Sioux are either Catholics or Episcopalians, but St. Joseph's accepts children of any religion, Westhoven said. Catholic children are taught about the sacraments and other aspects of their faith, while non-Catholic children are taught the Bible and how to be good Christians.

The school gets no federal money and depends on contributions from supporters throughout the nation.

All the children advance to high school, but the high school dropout rate of about 50 percent is exceeded only by the 80 percent unemployment rate, Westhoven said.

He described economic conditions on the reservations, which have little industry, as "atrocious." Apart from the few who have government jobs or who are successful ranchers, most have few skills and sorely need vocational and educational training.

Many who leave the reservations in search of jobs lack marketable skills or find it difficult adapting to a radically different environment.

"Home is the reservation for them," Westhoven said.

Westhoven said it's no more difficult to convert Indians than any other group, and that the notion of Christianity as "the white man's religion" has no significant hold on South Dakota Sioux.

"Some Indian people who want very much to retain their own identity shy away from anything that looks like it comes from the white man, but that's not very strong in our area," Westhoven said.

"There are also those who for some reason did not find the message of Christ did anything for them and who are looking for something else, just like Catholics who have fallen away from their faith and go looking at Eastern religions and God knows what."

When St. Paul said that in Christ "there is neither Greek nor Jew, bondsman nor free, male nor female," he had in mind people like the American Indian, and the principle "that we're all baptized in Christ, we're all equal before God," Westhoven said.

Tough second-half opens for Chaps

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Although Midland College head basketball coach Reggie Franklin has said all year that losing on the road is not as devastating as some consider it to be, fact is it's down-and-dirty time for the Chaps.

No more foolin' around. Beginning Thursday there's not much slack-off time left in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference race if the Chaps hope to return to Snyder next month for the Region V tournament.

The road to the Region tournament goes from smooth, easy highway to bumpy gravel Thursday at 8 p.m. when Midland College and Western Texas College square off in Snyder.

The Chaps, 14-8 overall, are 4-3 in conference and in fifth place at the halfway mark of the league race; Western Texas is a half-step ahead of the Chaps in the WJCAC, at 16-6 and 5-3.

The first time these two teams met, November 30 at Chaparral Center, MC left the floor with a hard-fought, crowd-inspired, minor brawl-marked, 110-99 win.

The thought is that Thursday's tiff will be much the same.

"Midland's playing real well since the break," WTC head coach Tony Mauldin noted. "They seem to be like a lot of teams where they lost a little intensity toward the end (of Monday's 97-85 win over Frank Phillips), but they did what they had to win."

The Chaps are currently on a 14-game winning streak against WTC, but the Westerners are an improved team over years past. Howard College head coach Steve Green has gone so far as to say the Westerners should be nationally ranked and are playing some of the best ball in the conference.

Western Texas is led by tough play on the boards and an explosive offense. The Westerners average 96 points per game thru eight conference tilts; in losses to Midland and Howard, WTC scored 99 and 96.

Both schools are holding true to their win-at-all-costs-at-home theory; Western is 3-0 in Snyder and 2-3 away; MC, 4-0 at Chaparral Center during conference, is 0-3 away.

Against the Chaps in the first meeting, the Westerners were led by Dominic Byrd's 23 points; in addition, four other players — Cedric Mason (12), Tony Joyce (12), Jeff Shelly (11) and Ken Critton (11) — were in double numbers.

Three Chaps did most of the damage for MC in that meeting with Kethus Hanks' 32 points leading the way; Kerwin Harris had his high-point game of the season with 22 against Western and Tim Owens was his usually-reliable self with 24.

The one aspect of play by Midland College that was lacking in that first meeting was play off the glass. Western overwhelmed MC, 52-36 on the boards and the Chaps totaled a mere eight offensive rebounds.

Mauldin said he has instilled in his players the sense of having to go into every game as "the most important ... of the season," while Franklin said he has stressed to the Chaps the need to begin a tougher method of play during the upcoming crucial stretch of the season.

MHS alone on top

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

No one seems to know just where this feisty Midland High basketball team will end up in the District 4-5A cage race, but if you look at the hoop standings, you will find this band of Bulldogs all alone at the top as of today.

These "Kneecappers" ran over Odessa Permian, 79-59, at Chaparral Center Tuesday night to run their district record to a gaudy 7-1, ½-game ahead of 6-1 Abilene High, who was idle, and San Angelo, a 78-65 winner over Abilene Cooper Tuesday.

After a 12-0 run to start the game, Midland was never seriously challenged by the Panthers. And this is somewhat surprising since MHS lost to Permian 66-63 in the Tall City Invitational and had to go into overtime for a first half win in Odessa.

Rebels use slow pace to tire Broncs

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — With its 57-52 win over Odessa High Tuesday night at the OHS gymnasium, Midland Lee's boys basketball team dished out some of the same kind of medicine it had been receiving all season.

The Rebels, now 12-13 overall and 3-5 in District 4-5A, have come out on the short end of a number of close scores this season, most recently a 53-51 decision to cross-town rival Midland High last Friday. Also, Lee's frustration with OHS date back to last season, when the Bronchos used the three-point shot to defeat the Rebels twice.

But after hitting 26-of-35 from the free throw line, Lee was able to garner a measure of sweet revenge and vent its anger in the form of a win.

"I felt like all our players were a little slow reacting tonight, but we've played a lot of close games and lost a lot of close games," said Paul Stueckler, Lee head coach.

"We played Midland High to two points and lost to Abilene High by three. When you play so well and still come up on the short end of the stick, it's mentally exhausting."

However, as the game advanced into the final quarter, OHS (9-16, 2-6) was the team that appeared to be the one that was worn out, growing tired of playing Lee's slow-paced game. After the first quarter, the two teams were tied at 8-8 and Lee led by only two points at half time, 22-20.

Then the third quarter came, with David Meade hitting all six of his free throw attempts, and Greg Crowe nailing one of his trio of treys. Lee outscored the Broncs 15-12 in the period and took a five-point edge into the fourth quarter.

Possibly in recollection of last season, the Bronchos went to the three-pointer early, but found nothing but a lid over their basket for much of the final eight minutes. OHS did sink two treys in the fourth, but took the first of their 10 three-point attempts with more than six minutes left in the game.

Odessa High girls defeat Lady Rebs in double OT

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

It's probably safe to say Tuesday's girls basketball game between Midland Lee and Odessa High at the Lee gym had no bearing on the District 4-5A race.

But what a game!

Thirteen lead changes and 16 ties after the opening tip, OHS pulled out a 58-56 double-overtime win. The Lady Bronchos never led by more than three points, but they led when it counted — at the end.

Coach Shirley Stephenson's Lady Rebels have been blown out of many of their district games this season, but keeping it close was no consolation.

"We played as hard as we could," Stephenson said disconsolately.

In other 4-5A girls action, Abilene Cooper pulled to within a game of previously undefeated San Angelo with a 55-43 win over the Lady Bobcats. San Angelo is now 8-1 in district play, while Cooper improved to 8-2.

Both OHS and Lee are playing for nothing but pride, since the Lady Bronchos are five games behind San Angelo with three to play and Lee is six and-a-half games back.

Six of Lee's nine 4-5A losses have been by more than 10 points, but it looked for awhile like the Lady Rebels would do the stomping against an OHS five that has lost its share of close games.

The Lady Rebels jumped out to a 16-8 lead by the end of the first quarter, but OHS got back into the game by making eight-of-10 from the free throw line in the second quarter.

ODESSA — While Midland High's girls basketball team fell deeper into the District 4-5A girls basketball cellar, Odessa Permian team put its record back over .500 for the season with a 62-45 win over MHS Tuesday at the Permian gymnasium.

The Lady Panthers are now 12-11 for the season and 7-3 in District 4-5A, 1½ games out of first place. League-leading San Angelo, previously unbeaten in loop play, was defeated by second-place Abilene Cooper 55-43 Tuesday. The loss gives San Angelo an 8-1 district record, while Cooper is 7-2.

With the loss, MHS fell to 8-17 for the season and 1-9 in 4-5A. The Lady Bulldogs were outdistanced from the outset, with Permian leading 22-12 going into the second quarter and 44-19 at half time. Robin Landreth led MHS with 13 points and Sally Gibson scored 10. Stephanie James led the Lady Panthers with 13 points.

Lee kickers down MHS, remain undefeated

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Maybe Eddie Bull didn't have Tuesday marked on his calendar.

Bull, who has been pining for revenge ever since his Midland Lee soccer team posted a last-place finish in District 3 last year, got his wish Tuesday when the Rebels defeated defending district co-champion Midland High 2-1 in the District 3 opener for both teams at the Midland Freshman field.

The undefeated Rebels won their fourth straight match of the young season — and have already equaled their district win total of last season.

"Our kids showed their maturity," Bull said. "They were mentally ready to play."

In other District 3 openers, Odessa Permian nipped Odessa High 3-2 in the first-ever district soccer match for both schools; and Abilene High and Abilene Cooper tied at 2-2. In non-district action, San Angelo tied the Jubentend Olympica club of San Angelo at 4-4.

Mark Ferguson's unassisted goal in the eighth minute set the tone for the Rebel win. While MHS outshot Lee, 6-3, the Rebels made their shots count against a vaunted Bulldog defense led by returning all-district goalkeeper Bryant Mueller and sweeper Sikes Johnson.

"I think their defense though they could stop us," Bull said. "And they have before."

"Their goalie is a great athlete ... but we are a lot quicker than we look."

Ferguson showed his quickness by beating his mark downfield before taking aim from about 20 yards out. Mueller leaped, but the ball sailed over his head, hitting the bottom of the crossbar and dropping into the goal.

That goal helped the Rebels maintain the momentum they carried into the match, Ferguson said.

"Beating Brownwood (two weeks ago) pumped us all up," he said.

Bull said getting out quick in both halves helped the Rebels.

"I think the first 10 minutes of each half is a big key," the coach said.

Lee's Jordan Reed scored the eventual go-ahead goal from about 20 yards to Mueller's right in the 30th minute. Reed's ball just eluded the beleaguered Bulldog keeper.

Midland High scored its only goal on an unassisted play by backup striker Craig Brownson in the 71st minute. But minutes earlier, the Bulldogs lost out on a chance for another goal as a result of an apparent fluke.

On a throw-in at the 65-minute mark, the ball seemed to hit MHS striker Jamie Johnson in the foot before going into the goal. But it was ruled that the ball touched no one en route to the goal — thus, no score, since a goal cannot be scored on a throw-in that does not touch either friend or foe en route.

Not only were some Midland High players vehement in their opinion that the ball hit Johnson before going into the goal, MHS coach Tom Esikhathi was equally certain.

"I thought for sure that someone touched it, but I didn't want to argue about it and make a fool of myself," Esikhathi said.

The phantom goal was far from the Bulldogs' main problem, Esikhathi said.

A last word on the Super Bowl

Notes from Super Bowl Sunday, otherwise known as "Be Kind To Brent Musberger Day, He Means Well ..."

■ CBS analyst Irv Cross (he doesn't look much like an Irving, does he?) actually laid on a bed an interviewed the also-prone Joe Montana. Montana, on a nearby table, was being tended to by a chiropractor, and Cross was actually filmed cradling his chin in his hand asking Montana questions. The most ridiculous event of another long, tedious, overblown EVENT by CBS.

But I did have to continually repeat to myself, "This is only a football game, this is only a football game."

It made it easier for me to understand Cross' laid-back interview when I remembered ... this is the same network that places value in what comes out of Terry Bradshaw's mouth.

I have to agree with former 49er coach Bill Walsh who spoke of Bradshaw during halftime of Sunday's Georgia Tech-Duke game. Walsh said he felt sorry for Bradshaw. And really, you have to wonder about a guy who feels it necessary to start a controversy by criticizing a fellow quarterback.

Bradshaw's Bud bottle in Bud Bowl II shouldn't have been wearing a cowboy hat. Maybe a dunce cap ...

■ Not all of CBS' features were asinine during the 120 minute pregame show. Pat O'Brien's feature on Montana's hometown was decent with a clever ending, and Musberger's short interview with Japan's own Pat Summerville was two features that stood above the rest.

■ To fully comprehend the vast difference between San Francisco and Denver, consider that the 49ers scored more points Sunday (55) than the Broncos have scored in all four of their Super Bowl losses. The Broncos lost 27-10 to Dallas in '79, 39-20 to the Giants in '87, and 42-10 to Washington in '88.

■ Maybe they need to change the rules ... if Denver makes it back to the AFC Championship next season, let whoever loses to the Broncos in that game go on to the Super Bowl. Maybe then the AFC would have a chance.

■ Can't resist this one: How many Broncos does it take to change a flat tire ... One, unless it's a blowout, and then the whole team shows up ...

■ However painful it is, I am finally able to admit that Joe Montana is a better quarterback than Roger Staubach. Ouch. Niners quite likely even a better team than the Steelers of the 70s.

■ And finally, our list of Ten More Enjoyable Ways To Spend Super Bowl Sunday for Denver fans ...

10. Listening to John Denver's "Sunshine On My Shoulders" 55 times.

9. Reading President Bush's budget.

8. Waiting for that Boxcar Willie collection to come in the mail.

7. Reading Terry Bradshaw's latest book, "Why I Didn't Go After A Ph.D."

6. Organizing Marion Barry's re-election campaign.

5. Attending a Texas Tech basketball game.

4. Fully comprehending the true excitement of a 99¢ Big Mac.

3. Studying up on Roseanne Barr's theory of how to properly moon others.

2. Watching Linda Evans and Joan Collins try to act in old Dynasty reruns.

1. Attending a quiet dinner party with Darryl and Lisa Strawberry.

Don't sulk too long Denver fans ... there's always next year. 'Course last year there was always this year and that didn't work too well either.

Portland ties LA in NBA Pacific

Associated Press

The Portland Trail Blazers are riding the high road without the marquee players of the Los Angeles Lakers, with whom they share first place in the NBA's Pacific Division.

"We've only got one player in the All-Star Game," Terry Porter said Tuesday night. "But we're going to keep winning and maybe then we'll get the recognition we deserve."

Porter had 24 points, 10 assists and a career-high eight steals as the Blazers beat the Utah Jazz 122-98 for their seventh consecutive victory.

"Maybe Terry was trying to prove a point," Portland coach Rick Adelman said after the Blazers snapped Utah's nine-game winning streak. "Maybe some of our guys were trying to prove a point that maybe we have more than one all-star on this team."

Portland's 31-11 record, its best at this point in the season in 12 years, also ties the Lakers for the best record in the league. Yet guard Clyde Drexler, who scored 25 points as Portland won for the 19th time in 21 home games, is the only Trail Blazer going to the All-Star Game on Feb. 11.

Magic 129, Pacers 111

Terry Catledge scored 31 points and Sam Vincent had 21 points, 11 rebounds and 17 assists as Orlando came back from a 16-point first-half deficit for only its fourth victory in 19 games.

Otis Smith and Nick Anderson scored 22 points apiece for Orlando. Reggie Miller scored 35 points for Indiana, a loser of eight straight on the road and five of its last six games overall.

Bucks 109, Kings 102

Jack Sikma and Brad Lohaus spurred a 15-4 fourth-quarter burst with 3-pointers and Jay Humphries scored 13 points in the final period.

Suns 120, Nets 95

Kevin Johnson scored 12 of his 30 points during a lopsided third period as Phoenix won its ninth straight at home.

Clippers 121, Lakers 104

The Clippers, getting 22 points, 17 assists and 10 rebounds from Gary Grant, beat the Lakers for just the third time in 20 meetings between the Los Angeles teams.

The Clippers, playing at home, had a season-high 71 points in the first half in breaking a four-game losing streak.

Magic Johnson, who missed one game because of the flu, started for the Lakers and scored 16 points.

Cavaliers 106, Heat 94

John Williams scored five of his 24 points during a 9-1 fourth-quarter surge by Cleveland.

Williams capped the spurt with two baskets, giving the Cavaliers a 96-86 lead with 3:09 to play. Brad Daugherty, back from off-season foot surgery, scored seven points in 15 minutes.

Cleveland, winning its third straight after five consecutive losses, also got 21 points from Mark Price. Glen Rice scored 19 points for Miami, which has lost six straight.

Pistons 112, Hawks 95

Joe Dumars and Isiah Thomas sparked a first-quarter surge that gave Detroit, a winner of four straight games, an 18-point lead.

Hoyas shipwreck Pirates, gain first place in Big East

Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Georgetown is once again atop the Big East standings after rebounding, literally, from a humbling 19-point loss to Syracuse.

Mark Tillmon scored 25 points and the sixth-ranked Hoyas limited Seton Hall to 26 percent shooting and a mere 15 field goals Tuesday in a 70-48 victory. Georgetown took a 36-18 halftime lead and never let the margin dip below 16 points the rest of the way.

In the only other game involving a ranked team, No. 13 Connecticut beat Massachusetts 94-75.

The Hoyas (16-2, 6-2) entered the game having lost two of their last three, including a 95-76 setback against Syracuse on Saturday that ended a 27-game home winning streak.

"We used that game as a stepping stone for this one," Georgetown center Alonzo Mourning said. "Syracuse dominated us on the boards, offensively and defensively, and we were determined to come back from that."

Georgetown had 11 more rebounds than Seton Hall, in part because the Pirates had so many of their shots bounce off the rim. Seton Hall's starters were a combined 12-for-48 from the field, and Frantz Volcy, who scored 16 points on 3-of-13 shooting, was the only Pirate to reach double figures.

Seton Hall (10-8, 3-5) missed its first 12 shots and had only one basket in the final 10 minutes of the first half.

"We wanted to come out and play as hard as we could on defense because we knew we played terrible defense against Syracuse," Tillmon said. "Coach (John) Thompson didn't have to tell us we played poorly against Syracuse, we knew."

In the days after the Syracuse game, Thompson ran his team through a series of rigorous practices.

Top 25 Roundup

ties. "It was hell," Mourning said.

The Hoyas were eager to atone for their defensive lapse, and Seton Hall paid the price of being next on the Georgetown schedule.

"The very clear-cut difference was that they really played with tremendous intensity and tremendous aggressiveness and we did not," Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo said.

Georgetown scored the game's first seven points and, after the Pirates had fought back to within 15-12, a dunk by Mourning and two stuffs by Dikembe Mutombo ignited a 21-4 run that was capped by consecutive 3-pointers by Tillmon.

Seton Hall cut the gap to 43-27 early in the second half, but Tillmon scored five points during a 10-0 run that gave Georgetown a secure 26-point advantage with 9:25 left.

"We were them down with our defense," said Mourning, who scored 12 points and set the stage for what was to follow by blocking the Pirates' first shot of the game.

Seton Hall was held to its season-low offensive output, 12 points less than its total against Fordham on Dec. 16. The Pirates are now 1-8 at the Capital Centre.

No. 13 Connecticut 94, Massachusetts 75

Chris Smith scored 22 points and Tate George had 16 points, 12 assists and eight rebounds as Connecticut won at Massachusetts.

The Huskies (18-3) were ahead 37-33 at halftime and then pulled away. The lead climbed to 17 points before the Minutemen got back within eight with 3:51 left. Connecticut scored the game's final 11 points.

George hit seven of 10 shots and Smith eight of 13. Jim McCoy led Massachusetts (10-8) with 22 points.

Cougars defeat 'Horns, 102-93

Associated Press

With Carl Herrera on the bench in early second-half foul trouble, Houston Coach Pat Foster called on Darrell Mickens for help against the Texas Longhorns.

Mickens responded with a performance that included a Southwest Conference season-high 21 rebounds as the Cougars came from behind Tuesday night to defeat the Texas Longhorns, 102-93.

Mickens also had a steal, a blocked shot and 12 points. All that in 25 minutes of playing time off the bench.

"He was getting rebounds all over the place," Foster said. "If he doesn't get those, we don't win."

"This was a win we needed desperately," said Foster. "We got down by 14 in the first half and were really on the ropes. But we had some people come in who had not even played that much for us in the past and did a great job."

Texas Coach Tom Penders thought the story of the game was his team's poor shooting in the second half.

"The ball just wouldn't drop for us," said Penders, who watched his team shoot 32 percent in the half.

"These kids even amaze me," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We don't have a starter at six-foot and we have only one (Scott Meizer) with varsity experience."

"We list (Rodrick) Hickey and (Michael) Wright at six-foot to make them feel better and scare the opponents," added a grinning Stephenson. But whatever magic is being used, these overachievers have put it all together.

Rodrick Hickey led all scorers with 18 points, hitting 12 in the third period. Michael Wright had 16 points, 10 coming in the second half. And Scott Meizer had 15 points with 10 coming in the first half.

But maybe the spark plug of the night was tiny 5-4 guard Albert Ray, who hit for 12 points, including two three-pointers, four steals and 10 assists. He was all over the court and had a great game defensively in the Bulldogs' murderous press.

"The pressure game really hurt Permian," said Stephenson. "This was a great win because we had to go overtime in the first half to beat them and we came back with a game like this. Well, we just really needed this kind of game."

Permian played the game without guard Devorik Alford, who scored 25 points against MHS in the first half before becoming an academic casualty last week. Ray felt that was a big factor in the game.

"Permian was without their guard and he was their high point man against us in the first half," said Ray. But Ray downplayed his own role in the game, despite a crisp shooting touch of five-for-eight from the field.

"I like to see the other guys on the team score," said Ray. "It's really my job to get them the ball. I like it when I have a lot of assists and they get their name in the paper for scoring a lot of points."

Hickey, who has been scoring points on a regular basis, had a big third quarter, but he, too, felt that the pressure defense was the big key to the victory.

"It was a rather easy win," noted Hickey. "They couldn't handle our pressure without their guard. We are at the top of our game right now."

early with a 22-9 first quarter advantage. A Wright layup with 4:20 left in the game gave MHS a 30-point, 72-42 lead. In between, Stephenson had ample opportunity to empty his bench, which is always hungry for playing time.

Bobby Spirling scored his first District 4-5A basket of his career in the fourth period and sophomore Tyler Beard scored his first varsity point in district play with a free throw in the fourth period. However, Beard missed three before he nailed his first point and then missed two after that.

"Tyler hit 16 of 19 free throws in a recent sophomore game," said coach Joe Golding. "That basket gets a little smaller when you are in a varsity game."

Spirling hit one of the two shots he took in the game and he was glad to get the floor time.

"This was a big experience for me," said Spirling. "I usually never get the feel of a game. I'd like to see more games like this one."

Permian was led by Damion Robertson with 12 points while Tony Daniels and Erskine Talbert each had 10.

Midland High now has an open date Friday before hosting Abilene Cooper at Chaparral Center Tuesday.

The Bulldogs are just one game shy of a 20-game win season at 19-9. Permian is 8-16 and in last place in 4-5A with a 1-7 mark.

In junior varsity action, Midland High ran its record to 24-1 with a 94-45 thumping of Permian. Paul Zarate, who hit four three-pointers, and Eric Johnson led the Bullpups with 24 points each and Canon added 17 more.

LADY REBS

Ann Isom in check. Isom scored only three points in the first half, taking only one shot in the second quarter due to blanket defense by OHS' Sjanna Swinney, who was helped when necessary.

OHS coach June Owen set a high priority on stopping Isom, who is the only Lady Rebel averaging in double figures for the season.

"We knew, coming over here that it would be a tough chore to stop Isom," Owen said. "We worked with Sjanna on playing too close, because Isom can blow past people."

It was Isom who kept the Lady Rebels going in the second half and the first overtime with 19 of her game-high 22 points. The senior worked the crowd with a 55-footer at the end of the third quarter that gave the Lady Rebs a 41-36 lead, but didn't faze Owen.

"It was just a shot," she said. "The game wasn't over."

"I didn't think the momentum would change."

And it didn't. Neither team could get anything going offensively in the fourth quarter, shooting a combined six-of-20 from the floor in the final eight minutes of regulation.

Isom hit a three-pointer to give Lee a 46-45 lead with 2:46 left in regulation, but that was Lee's last field goal until overtime.

Tiffany Grafe made the second half of a two-shot stripe opportunity to give Lee a two-point lead with 2:02 left, and Isom had a chance to put the game away after Swinney fouled her in the act of shooting with 31 seconds left.

Isom missed both tries, however, and OHS had another chance.

Lee again appeared to be in the driver's seat when the visitors missed a couple of tries at the bucket in the final 20 seconds, but OHS got yet another chance when Lady Reb sophomore Lachette Crisp was called for a carry with 13 seconds left.

OHS then worked the ball to outside shooting specialist Sherrie Tyler, who tied it up when her 15-foot shot slid into the net after bouncing high off the rim with nine seconds left.

Isom tried to repeat her last-second magic with "only" a 40-footer, but her try bounced off the rim to send the game into overtime.

OHS had 52-49 and 54-52 leads in the first extra session, but Isom sank a pair of free throws with 45 seconds left to pull the Lady Rebs into yet another overtime.

The Lady Bronchos asserted themselves almost immediately in the second extra period with a layup by Kori Morris only 14 seconds into the second extra period. Isom's layup boosted the Lady Rebs into the last tie of the evening with 1:58 left, before OHS took the lead for good on two free throws by Stephanie Graham with 25 seconds left.

Lee had a chance to tie again with 16 seconds left, but Marcia del Llano put up an air ball on the front end of a one-and-one free throw opportunity and Swinney dribbled most of the remaining seconds away.

OHS made 12-of-19 from the line, while Lee was only five-of-15 from the stripe.

The Lady Rebels dropped to 6-19 overall and 2-8 in district play, while OHS improved to 10-14 and 3-6.

In junior varsity action, Lee took control in the final two minutes to nip OHS 43-42 behind nine points by Tyra Goodley. OHS' Rachel Givens led all scorers with 10 points.

REBELS

While the Rebels were searching for the net, the Rebels built up an 11-point lead (47-36) with 2:48 to play. But in the final 2 1/2 minutes, fouling was the order of the day as Lee went 10-of-13 from the line in the late going, while OHS was 8-of-11.

The Rebels made up some ground in the last minute, with Patrick Brown and Christopher Tave sinking three-pointers and George Collins coming up with a basket off a rebound. But every time OHS stopped the clock with a foul, Lee drove the dagger home by making its free throws.

"The difference in the ball game was the free throws," said OHS coach Keith Thompson, whose teams was 11-of-17 from the line. "But we had some shots in the fourth quarter that we should've made."

Crowe led the Rebels with 20 points while Meade scores 16. In double figures for OHS were Brown with 13 and Collins, who scored 11 points.

The last time these two teams met (Jan. 5), Lee took a 36-33 decision and Thompson said he took measures to try to fend off the slower pace.

sure on them defensively, but it obviously didn't work as well as we had hoped," he said.

However, the pressure did have its effects. Lee turned the ball over 15 times in the game and became increasingly reliant on the outside shot. Stueckler blamed OHS' zone defense.

The varsity Rebels were not the only Lee team winning in Odessa Tuesday, as the Reb JV downed OHS 55-52. Clifford Angelo scored 13 points for Lee and Wayne Wilson had 10. The Broncho JV was led by Levi Christian's 17 points and Robert Rivers' 10.

Bobcats stay hot with win

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO — Corey Grays ripped the nets for 34 points Tuesday to lead the San Angelo Bobcats to a 78-65 win over Abilene Cooper in a District 4-5A matchup.

The victory moves the Bobcats into a second place tie with 6-1 Abilene High, who was idle Tuesday. San Angelo and AHS are both 1-2 game behind the 7-1 Midland High Bulldogs, who beat Odessa Permian 79-59 Tuesday.

San Angelo played the game without Dewayne Lofton, who was injured in a car accident this week, but Grays took up the scoring slack. Ty Brown also contributed 24 points and those were the only Bobcats in double figures.

Cooper got only 18 points from league leading scorer Mitch Royals, 14 from Lanny Owens and 12 from Raymond Hunter.

San Angelo led only 36-34 at the half, but outscored Cooper 42-31 in the second half.

The Bobcats trek to Midland and Chaparral Center Friday to meet fourth place Midland Lee, a 57-52 winner over Odessa High.

Revco sale includes two Midland stores

From Staff and Wire Reports

The sale of all 196 Revco stores in Texas will include the two Midland locations, according to a spokeswoman from the Twinsburg, Ohio company.

Revco Inc., announced Friday it is putting some 712 stores in 17 states on the selling block to concentrate on operations in the East, according to Kathy Obert, director of public relations for the company.

from debts incurred in a leveraged buyout.

Revco employs some 26,800 people, and is trying to reduce its number of stores from 1,873 in 27 states to approximately 1,100 stores in 10 eastern states. These eastern stores account for 64 percent of the company's annual sales.

"These stores are for sale, they are not closed," Obert said. "They are open for business as usual. I expect it will be some time before the announcement of whoever is buying the stores."

Obert also said it is a "reasonable expectation" that whoever purchases the drug stores will keep the same employees, which average 12 at each store.

Boake A. Sells, chairman and chief executive officer, said in a press release by the company that he hopes "most employees in the areas to be divested could be employed with an eventual purchaser of their store since those stores will likely be sold to drugstore operators."

The Midland Revco stores are located at 7 Plaza Center, and 4364 W. Illinois Ave. The sale include four stores in Odessa.

Gregory K. Raven, chief financial officer of Revco, said, "many observers consider this action to be an attractive one. The strategic advantages of restructuring operations have become increasingly clear over time. Internal and external analyses agree — this is what's best for Revco."

The states Revco has targeted divestiture include: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Fed news bad for interest?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan's good news message — a lower risk of recession coupled with stable inflation — is being interpreted by financial markets as bad news for interest rates.

Greenspan, in testimony Tuesday to the congressional Joint Economic Committee, said the risk of a recession in the next six months to a year is lower now than it was last spring. Inflation, while still unacceptably high at 4.5 percent, is stable, he said.

His seemingly mild comments unsettled stock and bond markets, where traders interpreted them as a sign the central bank will not lower interest rates anytime soon. A volatile New York Stock Exchange session ended with the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials down 10.14 points.

"What he's really saying is... if you want to get inflation down it may be you have to live with crummy economic growth, not for a few quarters, but for a few years," said economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch.

That's a blow to President Bush's prospects of trimming the federal budget deficit. Bush's budget released this week relies on relatively strong growth to boost government revenue and lower interest rates to hold down the cost of carrying the national debt. Earlier this month, Bush pressed the Fed to lower interest rates.

The Fed last eased just before Christmas when it nudged a key bank lending rate down by a quarter of a percentage point. It was the latest step in an effort begun in June to stimulate the economy with lower interest rates.

Court rules for wiper inventor

N.Y. Times News Service

A former engineering professor who says he invented the intermittent windshield wiper now used by every car and truck manufacturer in the world has won a bellwether patent-infringement case against Ford Motor Co.

A jury in Detroit ruled that Robert W. Kearns, who has waged a lonely 12-year legal battle against the automobile industry, was entitled to seek royalties on Ford's sales of the device, which allows a driver to adjust the intervals at which the wiper sweeps the windshield.

In the Ford case, Kearns is seeking $50 for every vehicle to which his patent would apply.

On Feb. 26, the same jury will weigh arguments on just how much money Ford should pay Kearns.

If the inventor gets everything he wants, the case could cost the entire automobile industry hundreds of millions of dollars, and possibly more than $1 billion.

But Kearns must overcome many obstacles: the judge could set aside the jury verdict, or Ford would almost certainly appeal.

Kearns has suits pending against most of the world's other major car makers, from General Motors to BMW to Porsche. The outcome of those cases will be heavily determined by the result of the suit.

Recovery update is SPE topic

From Staff Reports

The carbon dioxide "huff and puff" system, more formally known as Cyclic CO₂ Injection will be the topic at the monthly meeting of the Trans Pecos Section of Society of Petroleum Engineers February 8.

Dr. Teresa Monger, who has recently joined the staff of Marathon Oil Co. Exploration and Production Technology Center will be the featured speaker and will be discussing the latest developments in carbon dioxide flooding.

A noted authority on the "huff and puff" technique, her enhanced oil recovery background began in 1978 at West Virginia University. From 1981 to 1989, she was a member of the petroleum engineering faculty at Louisiana State University. Last year she spent a sabbatical at Shell's Belaire Research Center.

She holds a BS degree in Chemistry and a PhD in Biochemistry from the University of San Francisco and the University of Washington respectively.

The SPE luncheon meeting is set for 11:30 a.m. at Mission Dora Country Club.

Shearson chairman resigns

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK

In a move that reflects the continuing turmoil on Wall Street, Peter A. Cohen, the chairman and chief executive of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc., resigned under pressure Tuesday night, the firm announced.

The resignation of Cohen, once hailed as a model of the 1980s breed of bold young leaders of Wall Street investment houses, comes after months of business difficulties and internal tensions at Shearson, the nation's second-largest brokerage house, which has recently been trying to raise money to bolster itself.

For the 43-year-old Cohen, his resignation from Shearson represents a final fall from grace after a spectacular rise to recognition and success during the Wall Street boom that was fueled by takeovers and a surging stock market in the 1980s.

He assembled an industry powerhouse, after engineering the merger of Shearson with E.F. Hutton in 1988. But his fortunes reversed sharply last year, with the securities business declining, his personal allegiances within Shearson turning sour and the firm's corporate parent, the American Express Co., becoming increasingly restive.

Analysts expressed surprise at Cohen's sudden resignation. "We knew things were tough and that he was under a lot of pressure," said Lawrence W. Eckenfelder, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities, "but the sense was he was going to be given some time."

Cohen's resignation is a clear sign that American Express, which hopes to decrease its ownership of Shearson to 45 percent, from 61 percent, is at the same time moving to increase its influence over the faltering brokerage house.

Corp. of Dallas, has asked Prudential Bache for help in the endeavor.

Hansen did not disclose specifics of how the property is being marketed or what led to the company's decision.

Specifically, the company is seeking a partner or a purchaser for the 2,200 acres that have not been developed. Also part of the package are Lakeway's three 18-hole golf courses, marina, tennis center and airport.

The resort is located northwest of Austin.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Energy futures regained some ground this morning, ending down 16 cents from Tuesday's close at $22.30 per barrel.

On Tuesday, energy futures finished lower after crude oil prices temporarily spiked higher on an unconfirmed report that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev may resign as Communist party chief.

Market analysts said petroleum trading was generally uneventful otherwise and volume was average.

The contract for March delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 34 cents to $22.46 per 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, more than wiping out Monday's gain of 24 cents. Later delivery contracts also declined.

Among refined petroleum products traded on the New York Merc. No. 2 heating oil for February delivery dropped 0.60 cent to 60.51 cents a gallon, erasing a substantial portion of Monday's 1.51-cent increase.

It was the last trading day for the February heating oil contract. The March contract, which becomes the near-month contract starting with Wednesday's session, tumbled 1.04 cents to 58.18 cents a gallon. The April and May contracts ended with more moderate declines.

The expiring February contract for unleaded regular gasoline shed 0.9 cent to 62.73 cents a gallon following Monday's rise of 0.7 cent. The March gas contract fell 0.35 cent to 62.69 cents a gal-

Futures trading frequently is more volatile near the expiration date of contracts. There was little news to account for the weakness in the refined products and said trading seemed to be steadying as the nearby contracts expired, said Greg Dreis, an analyst at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

A CNN report that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev was considering resigning as Communist party chief injected uncertainty into many financial markets and spurred buying in the crude oil pits. But the impact of the report from Moscow was short lived.

Dollar stabilizes in nervous trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was little changed against other major foreign currencies today in nervous European trading, dealers said.

Gold prices were slightly lower.

A rumor that Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev was resigning as Communist Party chief sent the dollar soaring Tuesday in New York and in Japanese overnight trading.

Gorbachev denied the rumor this morning, which stemmed the dollar's rise.

Traders said the belief that many dealers had overreacted to the rumors and comments by U.S. Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan that inflation is still a concern in the U.S. would force the dollar lower.

"Even though most people would probably agree the dollar is currently undervalued, the dominant impression is that the dollar is on its way down," a Milan analyst said. "Every time it perks up, people take profits and bring it back down."

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 1.15 yen to a closing 144.40 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a lower rate of 144.25 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.6832 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6830 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $417.10 a troy ounce, down from $418.50 bid late Tuesday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $417.55.

In Zurich, the bid price was $417.75, down from $419.00 bid late Tuesday.

Gold in Hong Kong fell 32 cents to close at a bid $416.03.

Silver fell in London to a bid price of $5.21 a troy ounce, down from Tuesday's $5.22.

Gorbachev rumors affect market

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market closed broadly lower Tuesday after being jolted by an unconfirmed report that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev might resign as Soviet communist party chief.

The report produced a technical bounce in the market. It was jerking all over the lot," said Michael Metz, technical analyst for Oppenheimer & Co.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials finished the session 10.14 points lower at 2,543.24 after flip-flopping throughout the day. Declining issues outpaced advances by nearly 3 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,156 issues down, 399 up and 431 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 186.03 million shares, up from 150.77 million in the previous session.

Analysts said the report about Gorbachev's possible resignation on Cable News Network caused reactions throughout the financial markets. Stock prices became so volatile shortly after the 2 p.m. EST report that traders at one investment brokerage stopped trading temporarily until the market calmed down.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Eastern shareholders suggest liquidation

NEW YORK (AP) — Representatives of Eastern Airlines preferred shareholders suggested the liquidation or outright sale of the carrier, saying they had lost faith in management because it was "cannibalizing" the airline.

"Plainly stated, EAL's management has lost control of the enterprise," the shareholders committee said in papers filed Tuesday in U.S. Bankruptcy Court here. "They are simply unable to make the airline work, nor are they able to accurately forecast its future — even for a few weeks at a time."

IBM, Motorola create computer network

NEW YORK (AP) — IBM and Motorola Inc. announced a nationwide radio network that will allow users of hand-held computers to tap into central computers from almost anywhere without telephone lines.

The joint venture, called Ardis, was announced Tuesday. Motorola had offered a similar service to clients in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles and had designed a nationwide in-house system for IBM service technicians. The companies decided to leverage their investments by combining the networks.

Congress may restrict corporate takeovers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of a House panel reviewing the biggest bankruptcy filing in retail history said that Congress may restrict the kind of corporate takeovers that plunge healthy businesses into enormous debt.

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, criticized the "anything goes regulators of the past decade" in his opening statement at a hearing by the House Judiciary Committee's economic and commercial law subcommittee.

The subcommittee is investigating leveraged buyouts and bankruptcy — particularly the recent Chapter 11 filing by the Campeau Corp.'s two main U.S. retailing operations, Federated Department Stores Inc. and Allied Stores Corp.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE:

Your hard work will pay off handsomely. Resist an urge to throw caution to the wind. A family business will benefit from some changes in personnel. Listen carefully when a child shares an important secret in September. Romance could bloom if you take a trip. The financial future looks brighter than ever! Avoid putting all your eggs into one basket. Several small investments are preferable to one big plunge.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE:

actor Clark Gable, football star Dexter Manley, Princess Stephanie of Monaco, poet Langston Hughes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19):

Perform more services for yourself to reduce expenditures. Tips from experts will help you make better decisions regarding stocks and bonds. An older person is willing to act as a sounding board.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20):

Creative financing and innovative thinking are important today. Self-improvement projects enjoy favorable influences. A parent-child conflict can be ironed out after a candid chat.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20):

A financial windfall is possible. Take advantage of an unusual business opportunity. Pay attention to details often overlooked by your competitors and you will land new contracts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22):

Work at a faster pace to meet a deadline — your reputation could be at stake. Job-related research deserves top priority. A library visit can be productive. Romance is sweet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22):

Talking things over with a trusted friend or relative gives you practical ideas for handling a financial dilemma. Shopping bargains abound. Examine merchandise with special care if all sales are final.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22):

A spur-of-the-moment trip could be great fun. Choose a traveling companion who shares your interests. Your charm has a wonderful effect on an attractive member of the opposite sex.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22):

Get an early start today. An important decision must be made. Devote more time to creative and artistic projects; they could be a source of extra income. A friend is the bearer of good news.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21):

A powerful source of inspiration prevails. A self-improvement project will be more successful than you imagine. A startling discovery will put you in line for a raise or promotion.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):

Complex projects require strong self-discipline. Shelve new ideas until a current project is completed. A friend's advice could be overly optimistic; ignore it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19):

Careless comments could come back to haunt you. Routine tasks will take precedence this afternoon. Write more letters. A loved one shares an important confidence. Be honest with siblings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18):

Study your spending habits to get a better idea of where your money is going. A budget revision will require family members' cooperation. Romance takes a happy turn. Be affectionate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20):

The possibility of deception cannot be ruled out today. Deal only with trusted, reliable sources. Seek new outlets for your talents. Your quick thinking pays off. Involve your mate in an important project.

HOW TO HANDLE A LONG SUIT

North-South vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH		EAST
♠ K Q 7 4		♠ J 10 8
♥ A Q J 9		♥ 8 6 3
♦ A J 5		♦ Q 10 9 4
♣ 7 3		♣ K J 9

WEST		SOUTH
♠ 9 6 5 3		♠ A 2
♥ 7 5 2		♥ K 10 4
♦ 8 7 3		♦ K 6 2
♣ 10 6 4		♣ A Q 8 5 2

The bidding:
South West North East
1 NT Pass 2 ♣ Pass
2 ♦ Pass 6 NT Pass
Pass Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ♠.
There's a cardinal rule of defense: "If you have a choice of cards to play to a trick, play the card you are known to hold." It reaped rich rewards on this deal.

After South's no-trump opening, North checked for a possible 4-4 major fit. When none was uncovered, North simply bid what he thought the combined assets would yield.

West led a top-of-nothing heart, taken in dummy. There were 10 fast tricks and the obvious suit to develop for two extra tricks was clubs. So at trick two declarer led a club to the queen, which held. When South next cashed the ace of clubs, East followed with the card he was known to hold—the king. Afraid West now held two club tricks, declarer elected to abandon the suit in favor of the diamond finesse. That lost and a grateful East cashed the jack of clubs—down one.

East defended beautifully, but declarer could have handled matters better. After the queen of clubs won, South should have conceded a club trick immediately, while he still retained the ace. Any return can then be won in the closed hand and the ace of clubs can be cashed.

If both defenders follow, all is well and the fulfilling trick is there for the taking. If the suit doesn't break, declarer can fall back on the diamond finesse.

What if, at trick two, the club finesse were to lose? There is still some faint hope for the contract. The diamond finesse must succeed and the defender with four clubs also must have length in spades.

THE FAR SIDE

To his horror, Irving suddenly realized he had failed to check his own boots before putting them on just minutes ago.

FAMILY CIRCUS

"You sure have gotten better lookin' from the first time I met you."

PEOPLE

Call him Commander Dylan

PARIS (AP) — Rock legend Bob Dylan was named a commander in France's Order of Arts and Letters on Tuesday, in a ceremony in a gilded neoclassical reception room at the Palais Royal.

Sporting a black Western outfit and a growth of grey stubble, the 48-year-old singer and composer bowed his head to accept the gold and emerald medal from Culture Minister Jack Lang.

"Thank you very much for presenting me with this honor," Dylan said, reading in French from a crumpled envelope. "It moves me enormously."

Lang told Dylan that "for many of us in France and in Europe you bring together an ideal of music, an ideal of poetry."

The room at the Palais Royal was packed with photographers, journalists and fans, many too young to remember Dylan's earliest tunes in the 1960s when he first performed such classics as "Blowin' in the Wind" and "Like a Rolling Stone."

Dylan is giving a series of concerts in Paris as part of a European tour.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Blair Underwood, who plays a suave attorney on "L.A. Law," once had a gun pointed at his head by a Los Angeles police officer who stopped him for no apparent reason, the actor told TV Guide.

"If you're a young black male who drives a nice car, you're automatically a target for the cops because it's assumed you must be doing drugs," Underwood said in the Feb. 3 issue of the Radnor-based magazine.

Underwood said he "copped an attitude" and became furious when the officer asked for his driver's license. The officer pulled his service weapon and pointed it at the actor's head.

Underwood said the encounter might be good material for "L.A. Law," in which he plays attorney Jonathan Rollins. Rollins was conceived as a racially neutral character, but Underwood said it may be time for a change.

"I trusted (co-creator Steven) Bochco not to make him a token," Underwood said. "When I first came on, we discussed we wouldn't dwell on his race."

Now, he said, "I would love to have them show Jonathan driving a car and being stopped, because Jonathan's never dealt with that. He's come from money, from a very privileged background."

NEW YORK (AP) — Acting is more than just a job. It's a "journey of self-discovery," said Jessica Lange.

"I love acting because of all those things you discover about yourself through your characters," she said in an interview in the February issue of Vogue.

"Acting is an opportunity to dip into emotions you might not have the time or inclination to explore."

The actress said that was one reason she was attracted to the current movie "Music Box," in which she plays an attorney who defends her father against charges he was a Nazi-war criminal. The underlying theme is a daughter's unwavering devotion to her father.

"The character was so close to my own," she said. Her eyes filled with tears as she explained that her father recently died, the magazine said.

The actress said her boyfriend, playwright Sam Shepard, has quite a different view. "All his talent and dedication go into writing his plays, so naturally he sees acting as just a job."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Michael Keaton, the husband in "Mr. Mom," the crudely afterlife creature in "Beetlejuice" and the caped crusader in "Batman," has filed for divorce, People magazine reported.

"Michael doesn't comment on his personal life," Keaton publicist Paul Bloch said Tuesday in response to the report in this week's issue.

Keaton, 38, and his wife, actress Caroline McWilliams, 44, were married seven years ago and have a 6-year-old son, Sean. Miss McWilliams starred in the film "Nearly Departed."

NEW YORK (AP) — Several entertainment companies joined forces to enlist Harold Prince, Terrence McNally, Jimmy Webb, Erica Jong, Marsha Norman and Marvin Hamlisch in a group that will create 16 musicals during the next four years.

The organization, New Musicals, will present the shows at the State University of New York at Purchase, 25 miles north of New York City, and later on Broadway and at other theaters around the country.

"This partnership refuses to accept the current depressed state of the American musical theater," said Martin J. Bell, producing director of the group, whose partners include Capital Cities-ABC Inc., which owns ABC television, Columbia Artists Management Inc., the classical concert management agency, and Jujamcyn Theaters, which owns and operates five Broadway theaters.

New Musicals will have a $10 million budget to produce an initial season of four shows, the first of which will open in May, Bell said Tuesday. They include "Kiss of the Spider Woman," "The Secret Garden," "My Favorite Year" and "Fanny Hackabout Jones."

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Billy Joel once regretted becoming a singer and songwriter, he said, but his doubt "lasted about five seconds."

"It's a weird gig, there are no two ways about it," the pop star told about 800 students at the University of the Arts on Tuesday. "If you ask yourself a lot of times if you should be doing something else, maybe you should."

Joel, 40, told the students they should ignore those who ask "When are you going to get a real job?" Most artists have had to overlook a lot of that kind of pressure. "You do what you want to do."

Stardom, Joel said, has its drawbacks.

"I used to not be able to get into some restaurants," he said. "So now you get the table, but you can't eat" because of fans who want to talk.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported Jan. 30 that New York Mets outfielder Darryl Strawberry was charged with assault with a deadly weapon after allegedly threatening his wife with a pistol.

Strawberry was arrested Jan. 26 in connection with the alleged incident and spent a short time in jail before he was released on $12,000 bail.

Los Angeles police erroneously told the AP that felony charges had already been filed against Strawberry.

The district attorney's office, however, did not review the case until Tuesday and decided there was insufficient evidence for felony charges, though lesser charges could still be filed.

How hot are peppers? That is really the question

By DENA KLEIMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

How hot is hot?
That, in short, is the question chemists, food manufacturers, psychologists and others are asking as they debate the relative merits of how to measure the heat of a hot pepper.
At a time when the amount of heat in hot peppers is providing new insights into the biochemistry of taste, these scientists are raising larger questions about whether, when it comes to analyzing human perception, the computer is as reliable as such human sensory organs as the tongue.
"Measuring a pepper's heat is more art than science," said Marianne Gillette, a chemist who is the manager of product evaluation for McCormick & Co., the spice company based in Hunt Valley, Md. "A computer can analyze, but only a human can taste."
Of course the hot pepper has both tantalized and torched palates for thousands of years. But it was not until 1912 that a scientist by the name of W.L. Scoville came up with a systematic method for actually measuring its heat.

Under this method, a dried pepper is dissolved in alcohol, diluted with sugar water and then given to a panel of tasters, who, sipping increasingly diluted concentrations of pepper extract out of shot glasses, are asked to determine the exact point at which it no longer burns the mouth.
The hotter the pepper, the more water required, and the higher its score on what is now called the Scoville scale.

A JALAPENO pepper, for example, has a Scoville rating of 1,500 to 4,500, according to Cal-Compack Foods, a large spice manufacturer in Santa Ana, Calif.
A bottle of Tabasco sauce has a rating of 4,500, while the hottest known pepper, the habanero, has a whopping Scoville rating of 150,000.
In recent years, however, many scientists have questioned the accuracy and subjectivity of the Scoville test and the fact that it is so dependent on the human palate.
Many have turned instead to a computer to measure a pepper's capsaicin, an organic compound that gives peppers their heat.

Capsaicin (pronounced cap-SAY-iss-in) is a powerful chemical present in hot peppers that irritates certain nerves in the human nose and mouth.
It is most highly concentrated in a hot pepper's central membrane, which holds the seeds. It is soluble in both alcohol and fat and can be analyzed through high-pressure liquid chromatography, a computerized method that can determine the capsaicin parts per million.
"Chromatography is impartial," said Tom Burns, executive vice president of the American Spice Trade Association, a trade organization in Englewood Cliffs, N.J., that representing spice manufacturers.
The association has endorsed the new computer method in the hope that there will be a new worldwide standard and vocabulary.
But some psychologists, food manufacturers and others point out that while chromatography tests for the agent that causes heat in peppers, it ignores other chemicals in the pepper that contribute to the burning sensation.

WHILE THEY take issue with certain aspects of the Scoville test, they nevertheless say the tongue is the more reliable judge because it registers the entire "hot" sensation, including which part of the mouth a specific pepper burns, and how long the feeling lasts.
Computer advocates counter that chromatography is more efficient and offers a means for standardizing what is otherwise highly subjective.
The debate has intensified as hot pepper has become more common in the United States.
According to the American Spice Trade Association, Americans consume more than 125 million pounds of hot pepper a year — whole, ground and in sauces — at an annual cost of $100 million, a number that is rising as Americans continue to eat increasing amounts of Mexican and Asian foods.
Generally, the hotter the pepper, the more valuable it is because less of it is necessary to use.
There are literally hundreds of varieties of hot peppers, each with its own Scoville and capsaicin ratings. Even these ratings can vary from plant to plant with fluctuations in climate and rainfall.

In an attempt to offer consumers products that are consistent, food manufacturers are constantly measuring the heat of hot peppers in their laboratories before producing such food preparations as taco sauce, cans of jalapeno peppers, chili powder and ground cayenne.
"We want people to enjoy the product," said Dr. Paul Bosland, a chemist at New Mexico State University at Las Cruces, who specializes in cross breeding hot peppers that give the mouth a specifically quick burn.
HE SAID the average East Coast consumer likes peppers with a Scoville rating of about 600, whereas in the Southwest people want to bite into chilis with a Scoville of about 1,000. He said the ideal pepper burn should last only seconds.
Today, the vast majority of major food manufacturers employ chromatography to measure the hotness of peppers, in large part because it eliminates the need for organizing panels of tasters, which can be a cumbersome process given the number of peppers that need to be analyzed on a daily basis.

"There is a limit to how many samplings a day you can do without having your mouth burn too much," said James E. Woodbury, technical director of Cal-Compack Foods.
Woodbury was one of the scientists who helped develop the computer method for measuring capsaicin.
But most people still associate pepper with pain. The truth is — at this point — neither the tongue nor the computer has emerged as the perfect Richter scale of the mouth.

SO, THE question remains how hot is hot?
Harry T. Lawless, an assistant professor of food science at the Cornell University College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, who is a specialist in the relationship between human sensory response and physical stimuli, put it this way: "In the end, I guess it depends on the person and the pepper."

Soothe burning when bite's taken

N.Y. Times News Service

There are many ways to cool the mouth after biting into an excruciatingly hot pepper, but experts agree on one thing: Water won't help.
Not surprisingly, cold things work the best, especially alcoholic beverages or dairy products containing lactic acid.
Harry Lawless, an assistant professor of food science at Cornell University, who specializes in studying the relationships between human sensory response and physical stimuli, swears by frozen yogurt.
Barry Green, a psychologist and associate member of the Monell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia, who studies the sensory mechanisms of the mouth, recommends a frozen brandy Alexander.

Another sizable contingent finds relief in starchy foods, like corn, tortillas, rice or hunks of bread.
Although water isn't harmful, it seems to have almost no effect in cooling the mouth.
"People have tried all kinds of things," said Jeanne Croft, a chili pepper inspector and founder of International Connoisseurs of Red and Green Chile, an organization based in Las Cruces, N.M.
"Go with whatever soothes you. The thing to remember is that the pain will eventually go away."

Feta cheese adds 'lively, sharp edge' to scallops

By PIERRE FRANEY
N.Y. Times News Service

Feta, the tart, salty white cheese associated with Greek cuisine, can add a lively, sharp edge to all kinds of dishes.

In this country, feta cheese comes from various sources. Ewe's milk feta, the richest and tarest, is generally imported from Greece and Bulgaria (the Bulgarian variety is the milder of the two). Cow's milk feta, the least assertive, suits certain tastes, as does goat's milk feta. The goat feta usually has the lowest salt and fat content of all.

The technique for making feta cheese is thousands of years old. Milk is curdled, and the curds are collected in cloth or molds and pressed periodically to extract extra moisture. The semi-dry solids are then soaked in brine, the length of time depending on the degree of saltiness desired.

Greek cooks use feta in a variety of pastries, vegetable-and-meat casseroles and stews. They also eat it on slabs of bread with olives. I have been experimenting with feta cheese in French-style dishes and have found that it makes a wonderful gratin for seafood. The recipe here calls for fresh sea scallops.

The scallops are distributed in four individual serving dishes along with red and green peppers, then combined with a quick sauce of onions, garlic, fennel, olives and tomatoes. The contents are then garnished with feta cheese and baked for about 15 minutes at 450 degrees. If you use bay scallops or calicos, cooking time may be slightly less.

Curried rice with some garlic and raisins for sweetness is a fine side dish. This too can be baked and served right from the casserole dish, which makes for an easy cleanup.

BAKED SEA SCALLOPS WITH FETA CHEESE

3 tablespoons olive oil
1 1/2 pounds fresh sea scallops
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1 red bell pepper
2 green bell peppers
2 cups sliced onions
2 teaspoons finely chopped garlic
1 1/2 cups ripe plum tomatoes cut into 1/4-inch cubes
16 black Greek olives, pitted
2 teaspoons chopped fresh oregano or 1 teaspoon dried
1/2 teaspoon fennel or anise seed
1/2 cup dry white wine
1/2 teaspoon dried hot red pepper flakes
6 ounces crumbled feta cheese

Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

Grease 4 individual ovenproof serving dishes with 1 tablespoon of the olive oil. Divide the scallops evenly among the dishes and sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Core and seed the red and green peppers and cut them into thin strips about 1 1/2 inches long.

Heat the remaining 2 tablespoons of oil in a heavy skillet. Add the onions, garlic and peppers. Cook and stir over medium-high heat until wilted. Add the tomatoes, olives, oregano, fennel, wine, pepper flakes, salt and pepper. Bring to a boil and simmer for 5 minutes.

Spoon the mixture evenly over the scallops. Dot with the cheese and place in the oven. Bake 15 to 20 minutes or until lightly browned. Serve immediately.

CURRIED RICE

1 tablespoon butter
1/4 cup finely chopped onions
1/4 teaspoon finely chopped garlic
1 cup converted rice
2 tablespoons black or golden raisins
1 tablespoon curry powder
1 1/2 cups water
1 bay leaf
2 sprigs fresh thyme or 1/2 teaspoon dried

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Melt the butter in a saucepan. Add the onions and garlic. Cook and stir until wilted. Add the remaining ingredients and bring to a boil, stirring. Cover tightly and simmer for 17 minutes.

Remove the bay leaf and thyme sprigs. Mix well and serve hot.

DEAR ABBY

Minister's timely words remind us we should do the right thing

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have been reading your column ever since I was old enough to read a newspaper. My younger brother has just joined Amnesty International, the group that helps to free political prisoners around the world. When he told me he had joined, I told him about a wonderful piece I had read in your column several years ago. I don't recall who wrote it, but it came about as a result of Hitler's reign during World War II.

I'm not sure, but I think the last few lines went something like this: "And when they came for me, there was nobody left to speak out." It brings home the principle that each of us has an obligation to speak out to help others.

If you know the piece I'm referring to, please reprint it. It's well worth seeing again, and I'd like to send it to my brother. — ROBIN MAMMEN, LONG BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR ROBIN: The wonderful piece you refer to was titled "I Didn't Speak Up." It was written by Martin Niemöller, a German Lutheran pastor who was arrested by the Gestapo and sent to a concentration camp in Dachau in 1938. He was freed by the Allied forces in 1945. And here it is.

I DIDN'T SPEAK UP
"In Germany, the Nazis first came for the communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time there was no one left to speak for me."

DEAR ABBY: May I add one little note to the subject of paying grandmothers who have been sitters for their grandchildren for many years? I have 15 grandchildren. While they were growing up, I was the official sitter, going from one family to the other — days and evenings, too. I never refused. I was never paid, nor would I have accepted anything had it been offered.

All these grandchildren are grown now. Some are married and others have full-time jobs.

Abby, out of the 15 I sat with, only three have ever called to invite me to dinner or ask if they can do something for me that I can't do for myself.

Why have the others forgotten me now that they don't need me any more? All but two live within 20 minutes of me!

I would love to share a bowl of soup or chili or be taken out to eat sometimes — if only to some inexpensive fast-food place. I would just enjoy being with them.

Oh, well, I love them all anyway. — MICHIGAN GRANDMOTHER

Base closing plan prompts bargaining

By WILLIAM E. CLAYTON JR.
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The House Armed Services Committee chairman said Tuesday that the Bush administration has created a political "bargaining bazaar" with its proposals for closing military bases.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., proposed to go back to a 1988 idea for a bipartisan commission to choose the bases destined for closing.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney released a list Monday of bases suggested by the various armed services as "candidates" for closure.

Shortly after the list was released, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said he had worked out a deal with Cheney: If Fort Hood in Texas is cut by 12,204 jobs as suggested, Cheney will try to get exactly that same number of troops moved to Fort Hood from Europe, if the United States and Soviet Union agree to a reduction of conventional forces in Europe. The administration proposed closing four installations in Texas and several others were suggested for reductions in scope.

Aspin shook his head when asked about the Gramm statement.

"That's the kind of thing we are headed for here," Aspin said, "unless we get this thing on a different track."

Base closings should be free of that sort of maneuvering, he said.

"You've got a lot of deals cooking around here. If you have a commission, you are not going to have any deal between Phil Gramm and Dick Cheney. We don't need more deals. We have already got plenty of deals," Aspin said.

For the defense secretary to come up with a potential closing list puts a "political gun" at the heads of members of Congress, Aspin said. He gave as an example the congressional vote on a President Bush veto. Having a base-closing list "creates hostages for the administration: Vote against a veto override, your base is safe. Vote to override, your base is threatened," Aspin said.

U.S. Navy cruisers, USS Salem, left, and USS yard. The yard is on the list of facilities that could Des Moines lay idle at the Philadelphia Navy be closed.

"There is an enormous amount of scrambling around by Republicans and Democrats," Aspin said. "It opens up an enormous bargaining bazaar."

Aspin said he would substitute an idea from a Texas member of Congress that he said worked in 1988. Sponsored by Republican Rep. Richard Armey, that legislation set up a bipartisan commission that wrote a list of suggested base closings that Congress could accept or reject but not change.

"That is the only way to do it," Aspin said.

But Armey said a new version of his 1988 commission "may not be necessary." Bases could be adjusted or closed, in view of changed circumstances in Europe, by a bipartisan effort by Cheney and Congress, Armey said.

"A lot of members of Congress just do not like commissions," Armey said. The one he helped guide into law was a one-time arrangement to "break the ice on a 17-year moratorium on closing bases," Armey said.

Conservationists target 10 tropical rain forests

By DAVID CROSSON
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Conservation International, an environmental group created to preserve the Earth's rapidly diminishing biological diversity, targeted 10 regions of tropical rain forest Tuesday for a 10-year, $250 million effort aimed at stemming the forests' destruction.

In addition to areas of the Amazon River basin, the Indian Ocean island of Madagascar and the foothills of the Himalayan Mountains, the "hot spots" targeted include a number of Pacific Rim forests — in Ecuador and Colombia, the Philippine Islands, French-owned New Caledonia, and Malaysia.

CI President Russell Mittermeier, who was joined here in announcing CI's plans by members of the U.S. and Brazilian congresses along with actress Susan Sarandon, said that "explosive human population growth" underlies the "extinction spasms" the planet is now experiencing, spasms unlike any since the age of reptiles 65 million years ago.

Targeting CI's "hotspots," Mittermeier noted that tropical rain forests harbor about 60 percent of Earth's plant and animal species on about 6 percent of Earth's land area. At the same time, he said, a dozen, largely developing, debt-ridden countries located primarily in the tropics and containing the bulk of the most threatened forests also are home to nearly half the world's 5.3 billion people, a number now growing by about 85 million a year.

Under these circumstances, Mittermeier said, the 3-year-old CI has projected that at least 90 percent of the rain forests it has targeted will be destroyed by the end of the decade unless action is taken.

With the backing of its 50,000 members, CI spokesman Edward Wolf said the organization intends to create "SWAT teams" of scientists to produce "quick and dirty assessments" of the threatened forests and to formulate strategies for their preservation.

The greatest threat to most of the "hotspot" forests, Wolf said, are fires intentionally set to clear land for crops and pastures. Fires in tropical rain forest now account for about 25 percent of the carbon dioxide now being produced worldwide and considered a prime element in the global warming now widely viewed as in progress.

In Asia, Wolf said, clear cut timbering operations often are the prime culprits in forest destruction.

Adrian Forsyth, the director of CI's Indonesian program, said Japanese timber interests were largely responsible for "gutting" forests in the Philippines under concessions granted by the country's late president Ferdinand Marcos. Forsyth said the Japanese have now largely abandoned the Philippines and are now very active in Malaysia.

NATION IN BRIEF

A volunteer helps comfort two children who were riding on a school bus that had its top sheared off after hitting a tree in Monroe, N.Y.

Roof sheared off school bus

MONROE, N.Y. (AP) — The roof of a school bus was sheared off after it careened off a road and struck two trees, injuring the driver and all but two of the 38 kindergartners and first graders aboard.

Hospital officials said six of the children from the Harriman Heights Road Elementary School were seriously injured in Tuesday's accident. "I was going home and the bus went into the ditch and I hit the seat with my head a couple of times," said Martin Polignone, 6, who had a bump on his head and a bruise under his eye.

"I fell into the mud head first," said 6-year-old Kristin Aspinwall. "He (the driver) moved over and the wheel got off the road and the bus tipped over and the whole roof came off."

Police said today they had not determined why the driver lost control after the bus came out of a narrow curve about 55 miles northwest of New York City.

"He was not speeding," Trooper Robert Gillespie said. "It was a dry road. It was sunny out when the accident occurred."

The bus, which lacked passenger seat belts, was built a year before state law required them in 1986.

Pierce announces for race

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts House Minority Leader Steven Pierce has launched his campaign for the Republican nomination for governor, declaring the state under the Democrats is "full of problems, doubts and cynicism."

"Ronald Reagan put it best when he sought successfully the presidency during a time when our nation was in dire straits," Pierce said Tuesday.

Quoting Reagan, Pierce said: "The major issue of this campaign is the direct political, personal and moral responsibility of the Democratic Party leadership... for the unprecedented calamity that has befallen us."

Democratic Gov. Michael Dukakis, a frequent target of Pierce's criticism, is not seeking re-election.

The Massachusetts Miracle, the economic boom that nearly carried Dukakis to the White House, has vanished in the past year, and the state is struggling with a deficit.

Pierce, who represents Westfield, has been a state representative since 1978 and first elected to the House Republican leadership in 1983.

TMI cleanup complete

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP) — With a final sweep of an underwater vacuum, workers at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant have wrapped up the four-year effort to remove fuel from the damaged reactor.

A color monitor inspection of the Unit 2 reactor, followed by the vacuuming on Tuesday, marked the end of the project, said Mary Wells, spokeswoman for GPU Nuclear Corp., which operates the plant.

Since 1985, more than 99 percent of the 100 tons of uranium fuel were pulled from the reactor and shipped to a federal laboratory in Idaho for study and disposal. GPU Nuclear said fuel removal was the heart of the $1 billion cleanup.

Unit 2 was damaged in March 1979 in the worst accident ever at a U.S. commercial nuclear plant. The nuclear core lost cooling water, overheated and partially melted.

More AZT use urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — A panel of experts is recommending that the anti-AIDS drug AZT be prescribed more widely for people infected with the virus that causes AIDS.

Research has "clearly established" that AZT, or zidovudine, delays the onset of AIDS in people infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, the Food and Drug Administration advisory committee said Tuesday.

But the committee also emphasized "the need to carefully study and document the potential risks associated with prolonged zidovudine therapy, especially those related to the drug's cancer-causing potential, and any possible unique effects on women's fetuses and children."

AZT is approved for use in patients who have full-blown AIDS, but a government-sponsored study has shown the drug can prolong the lives of people in earlier stages of the disease.

Priest refuses to quit

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A homosexual Episcopal priest who caused an uproar with his comments on celibacy and monogamy says he will not honor a request that he step down from the priesthood while the diocese investigates his views.

Bishop John S. Spong asked the Rev. Robert Williams not to function as a priest while the diocese's Commission on Ministry reviews the screening process that led to his ordination. Assisting Bishop Walter Righter of Newark said Tuesday.

"It means he doesn't have a job in the church," said Righter.

But during an interview from Texas Tuesday with The Star-Ledger of Newark, Williams, 34, formerly of Dallas and Fort Worth, said Spong would have to take him to trial to get him to step down.

"If he wants to spend another quarter-million dollars, he can take me to trial," Williams said.

He said complying with the suspension would "keep me from exercising the ministry I've been called to do."

Deaf brothers attacked

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A group of teen-agers shot two deaf brothers, killing one, after shooting at the men during an apparent traffic dispute, police said.

The victims could communicate only with sign language, and "it is unlikely that they understood what was being said or what was happening," police Lt. Harvie Eubank said. "It was just a senseless shooting."

Cesar Vieira, 30, an unemployed carpenter and father of two whose wife is expecting a third child, died at a hospital Monday from chest wounds. Edward Vieira, 25, an unemployed auto mechanic and father of a young son, was treated for hip and shoulder wounds and released after the attack Sunday night.

CITY OF MIDLAND, TEXAS

By B.C. Clanton, City Secretary

January 17, 31, 1990

ADVERTISING FOR BIDS

WATER SUPPLY LINE

2.0 MG ELEVATED STORAGE TANK

WISDOM PARK

Sealed proposals addressed to the Honorable Mayor and City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, will be received at the office of the City Secretary, City Hall, Midland, Texas, until Tuesday, February 20, 1990 at 4:00 P.M. for furnishing all necessary materials, machinery, equipment, superintendence and labor for construction of water supply line to the 2.0 MG elevated storage tank at Wisdom Park.

Immediately following the time for receipt of bids, proposals will be publicly opened and read aloud. Any bid received after closing time will be returned unopened.

The work included in this project includes the following: BASE BID - furnishing and installing approximately 5,400 linear feet of 24-inch water line, 4,800 linear feet of 12-inch water line, welded steel casing in open trench and jack and bored holes, approximately 800 linear feet of 30-inch reinforced concrete storm sewer pipe, 2,000 linear feet of 12-inch PVC sewer pipe, storm sewer and sanitary sewer manholes, concrete valve vaults, manual and motor operated valves, supervisory control system and other miscellaneous items of construction; ADDITIVE ALTERNATE NO. 1 - furnishing and installing approximately 4,500 linear feet of 20-inch water line, manual valves, fittings and miscellaneous items of construction.

A bid proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the Owner, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance bond and payment bond. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, acceptable to the City of Midland and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America. Proposals submitted without bid guaranty in the form of cash, certified check or bid bond for 5% of maximum bid will not be considered.

The successful bidder will be required to furnish a Performance Bond and a Payment Bond each in the amount of the contract, written by a responsible Surety Company authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and satisfactory to the Owner, as required by Article 5160, V.A.T.C.S., as amended by H.B. 344, passed by the 56th Legislature, Regular Session, 1959.

All lump sum and unit prices must be stated in both script and figures. The Owner reserves the right to reject any or all bids, to allow bid alternatives, to waive formalities, to accept line items or portions of bids, and to accept the bid which seems most advantageous to the City's interest. In case of ambiguity or lack of clearness in stating the prices in the bids, the Owner reserves the right to consider the most advantageous construction thereof, or to reject the bid.

Attention is called to the provisions of the Acts of the 43rd Legislature of the State of Texas, page 91, Chapter 45, (Article 5159A, Civil Statutes 1925) concerning the wage scale and payment of prevailing rates of wages as established by the Owner. Said scale or prevailing minimum rates of wages is set forth in the specifications.
