Board optimistic on bond election

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The $11.8 million bond election officially called Tuesday by school district trustees should pass May 7 barring concerted efforts from isolated factions wanting to retaliate against the board for its past actions, trustee board president Fred Newman says.

The current seven Midland Independent School District trustees in earlier years have made what some have considered controversial decisions such as changing high school boundaries and engaging in a lengthy unsuccessful lawsuit that opposed the current 7-0 single member district plan.

"Voters will have to do some serious soul searching to penalize children to express their displeasure with the present school board," Newman said.

The board president said the bond election won't cost "a penny more" in taxes and that the school board educates children for less money than 19 other districts of similar size throughout the state.

Furthermore, Newman said 95 percent of the state's school districts are in deeper debt than MISD.

After a meeting Monday night, trustees said they had received almost total support from the city's PTA groups and the Midland City Council PTA as well.

In the 6-0 vote, MISD trustees approved the bond election which would approve the spending of nearly $12 million over the next one and a half years to build 87 new classrooms at 11 elementaries, a new 15-room primary school in the northwest quadrant of the city; seven new learning resource centers (LRC); 11 new multi-purpose activity centers or mini-gyms, and possibly within the new structures, additional restrooms and counseling facilities.

Included in the total dollar amount, is the stipulation that $1.8 million may be directed toward the purchase of a 30,000-square foot site to build the primary school, though the district is already in possession of a site at the corner of Mockingbird Lane and Oriole Drive.

The district allows for $1,935,776 for fees such as those of architects, building permits and surveyors, furniture for classrooms and a contingency or miscellaneous account for unexpected expenditures, explained MISD Director of Communication Ted Miller.

New teachers will be hired for the project, but not necessarily one for each new classroom or 102, Miller said.

Trustee Betsy Robinson's last-minute suggestion of adding multi-purpose centers — at $175,000 a piece — to other elementaries not included in the bond election plan was nixed by the other trustees Tuesday.

"I don't think the bond election is a cure-all for every district problem...though I'm not denying there may be a problem," trustee Michael Conaway explained.

Midland Independent School District trustees gave the go-ahead Tuesday to calling for an $11.8 million bond election that would allow for the addition of 102 classrooms and other facilities to local educational institutions. The bond issue will come up for a vote May 7 during the general local elections.

DeAndra Anrig and her kite

Girl survives flight on kite

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Eight-year-old DeAndra Anrig says she felt like Winnie the Pooh when an airplane snagged her kite line and lofted her on a 100-foot ride.

"I read about how Winnie the Pooh flies in the air on kites, but I never wanted to try it," said DeAndra, who let go just as the kite carried her toward a tree. "I wasn't thinking anything but how scared I was."

"She said it was just a big jerk that lifted her (10 feet) into the air," said DeAndra's mother, Debby. "It carried her right over my husband's head. All he saw was a shadow going over his head. I'm just thankful she let go."

DeAndra escaped from her ride with bruises. Sympathetic neighbors delivered cupcakes Tuesday to her home in Dublin, 30 miles southeast of San Francisco, where she rested on an air mattress surrounded by ice packs and two of her stuffed animals.

Stamp prices to post increase on April 3

WASHINGTON (AP) — Higher postage rates, including a 25-cent charge for first-class letters, will take effect April 3, the Postal Service announced Tuesday.

"The Postal Service has been managing the costs of operating a growing universal delivery system and moving a volume of mail that has nearly doubled" to more than 160 billion pieces this year, said John L. Griesemer, chairman of the Postal Service Board of Governors.

The new rates reflect higher costs of delivering mail, Griesemer said. "To all our customers, we can only repeat our pledge of better service," he said.

Asked at a news conference when rates might increase again, Griesemer would say only, "Our job is to fight against that."

The board set the effective date for the sweeping series of new rates, recommended by the independent Postal Rate Commission on March 4 following 10 months of study and hearings. Rates were last changed in February 1985, when the price of a first-class stamp rose from 20 cents to 22 cents.

Postage rates will rise the most for the so-called "junk" advertising mail and less of an increase for the typical consumer.

Users of first-class postage face a 14.7 percent hike, compared with jumps of 18.1 percent for newspapers and magazines and 24.9 percent for mailers of advertising material.

The Postal Service took under consideration a proposal to establish a lower rate for consumers who use special pre-printed envelopes to pay bills. Postmaster General Anthony Frank said the agency will have to study the costs involved to determine what discount should be allowed.

But the new rates do include a cut in the price paid by industry for business reply envelopes that consumers can send in without paying any postage. The lowest rate will drop from 7 cents to 5 cents, a move aimed at encouraging more businesses to offer these envelopes.

Rates for mail going overseas will also rise to 45 cents for the first half-ounce. Mail to Mexico will cost the same as within the United States, while a letter to Canada will cost 30 cents.

Postal officials have said the increases are needed to avoid deficits for the agency that could reach $5 billion in 1989. The Postal Service lost more than $220 million last year.

OPEC cancelation pushes down prices

New York Times News Service

PARIS — The president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries called off a news conference Tuesday, pushing oil prices down. He had been expected to announce measures to bolster prices.

The cancelation of the conference by Rilwanu Lukman, who is also Nigeria's oil minister, depressed prices for the second consecutive day.

Lukman's decision not to appear reflects a consensus of most OPEC members, led by Saudi Arabia, that propping up oil prices is a burden that OPEC can no longer bear alone.

The sentiment of this group is that it is time for oil producers outside of OPEC to live up to many broken commitments by reducing their production.

In 1985 OPEC, hoping to recapture lost sales, began a price war with non-OPEC producers. Prices fell to as low as $8 a barrel. OPEC reversed its strategy in 1986 and reinstituted production quotas.

This time, OPEC is seeking only to preserve its market share at its current production level of 18 million barrels a day.

OPEC's strategy was outlined in an oblique comment on Monday night by King Fahd of Saudi Arabia. He told his Cabinet that all OPEC members should adhere to production and pricing restraints collectively. Otherwise, he pointedly noted, "It would be difficult to ask those committed to remedy the situation."

The comment was misinterpreted by oil traders at the New York Mercantile Exchange that Saudi Arabia had given oil price discounts, and had abandoned any responsibility of cutting its own output.

The OPEC majority view, stated by OPEC deputy secretary general, Fadhil al-Chalabi, called on OPEC nations to abandon fixed prices for a more flexible market price system that would let them compete with non-OPEC producers.

In a speech last week at an Arab energy conference in Baghdad, Iraq, Chalabi said, "It is obvious that OPEC cannot control both production and prices at the same time." Prices must be allowed to fluctuate within a certain range to be decided by OPEC, he said, while production controls support and define that range.

Scholarship plan extended

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland's Abell-Hanger Foundation for the third consecutive year has extended its offer to pay tuition and fees at Midland College to 1988 graduates of three county high schools, MC President Jess Parrish said Tuesday.

In making the announcement at the trustee's monthly board meeting, Parrish said the foundation will pay up to $325 for each student who enrolls in at least six hours of college credit courses — provided he or she meets the 2.0 grade point average eligibility requirement.

The offer also extends to 1987 graduates who benefited from the foundation scholarship this year if they remained in "good standing" with the college. However, the foundation will no longer provide monies for the cost of books as it did during the previous two years, Parrish said.

The foundation made headlines three years ago when it agreed to pick up the tuition tab for all 1986 graduates of Midland, Lee and Greenwood High Schools.

Area natural gas brokers fear further erosion

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

■ Related story — 6B

Natural gas prices, thought to be on the mend earlier this year, are now eroding rapidly and West Texas gas brokers fear they will head even lower.

Gas prices began to climb sharply in late 1987 and some contracts were written for over $2. At the time the industry speculated that natural gas supplies were finally tightening and the gas "bubble" might be "leaking."

Now natural gas prices are $1.50, having tumbled 30 cents since March 1, and brokers fear prices this year could be a repeat of 1987's disappointing price curve.

"The curve is already forming and it looks like last year's," said Dave Widner, vice president GasMark Inc., a Midland gas marketing firm.

Last year prices fell to $1.50 in May. They were $1.40 by July and eventually dropped off to around a $1.35 in August, before beginning their steep climb late in the year.

"It's very disappointing," said Dave Widner, vice president GasMark Inc. "We had hoped the bottom would be around $1.50, but it's already there and we have the tough summer months to go."

When California gas distributing companies will release April bid information later this week most natural gas brokers expect it to be $1.45 and signal a downward trend.

"California local distribution companies (LDCs) begin accepting bids for April this week, and they have become very sophisticated in they're buying. After two years, they have learned to drive the price down in a weak market," said Dave Rutter, vice president for Midwestern Resources Inc., a Midland gas brokering firm which sells to California users.

Violations reported as truce talks continue

SAPOA, Nicaragua (AP) — Sandinista and Contra rebel negotiators headed into today's third session of cease-fire talks closer than ever to reaching agreement on steps to end Nicaragua's six-year war.

But even as the two sides prepared for today's discussions, the state-run Voice of Nicaragua radio reported a violation of the truce agreed on for the talks' duration.

The broadcast said the Contras ambushed an army truck near Mulukuku in the northern province of Matagalpa at 2 p.m. Tuesday, killing two soldiers.

There was no immediate official confirmation of the report.

The main stumbling blocks facing the third round of talks appeared to center on the mechanics of how the Contras would lay down their arms and be granted amnesty. On Tuesday, both sides exchanged proposals that agree on major points.

Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, who heads the government delegation, said today that he was optimistic there would be success in today's talks. Tuesday, he said he expected a "concrete agreement" to emerge from the discussions. But sources close to the talks cautioned that they could still stall on final details. One source said the talks could continue beyond today.

"It is like a boxing match," a Sandinista official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said Tuesday. "They were tense (Monday) and they had some sparring (Tuesday)."

Adolfo Calero, political leader of the U.S.-supported Contras, described the second round of talks as "direct and frank."

"We worked hard during the day," he said. "We clarified (points that coincide) and we are working on differences ... It was a fruitful day and tomorrow could be even better."

The two sides stood far apart at the start of the talks, which opened Monday at this border post 60 miles south of Managua and which represented the government and rebel leaders' first face-to-face meeting in Nicaragua. A battlefield truce that began Monday appeared to be holding.

Texas among states in suit against insurance firms

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Accusing the insurance industry of fabricating the so-called "liability crisis" to increase profits, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox Tuesday filed an antitrust lawsuit against eight national insurance companies.

The lawsuit, filed in a Travis County district court, alleges the companies and their industry association, Insurance Services Office Inc., illegally conspired to artificially constrict the market in order to raise prices, Mattox said.

The lawsuit accuses the companies of illegally agreeing to boycott certain lines of insurance and certain consumers "in order to create the necessary crisis atmosphere," he said.

Joining Texas in a similar lawsuit filed in federal district court in San Francisco were New York, California, Massachusetts, West Virginia, Alabama, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

"Those named in the lawsuit violated the antitrust and consumer protection laws of Texas by boycotting, coercing and intimidating insurance consumers," Mattox said.

"These defendants simply could not pass up the temptation to conspire to force up insurance rates by creating what appeared to be an insurance crisis in this country," he said.

The eight companies named as defendants are Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, CIGNA Corporation, Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, Hartford Fire Insurance Company, Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company, Travelers Insurance Company and USF&G Corporation.

A spokesman for the Insurance Services Office, which advises companies on rates and coverage terms, called the allegations "unfounded and meritless," and said the industry would "vigorously" defend against the charges.

"Neither the insurance industry nor the Insurance Services Office has engaged in any unauthorized or illegal activity," said Rick Gentry. "We have always taken great care to operate in the letter and spirit of the law."

According to the lawsuit, in a two-year period through 1986 more than half of Texas' counties and cities had their liability insurance policies cancelled or not renewed, and companies that would sell them policies sought premium increases of 50 percent to 100 percent, often for less coverage.

At the same time, Mattox said, his office received numerous complaints about the unavailability of liability insurance for day-care centers, ministers, truckers, doctors, teachers, charities and others. The insurance industry also sought to publicize the "liability crisis" through advertisements in newspapers, magazines, television and radio, he said.

Calling it the "most insidious consumer fraud that has taken place by American companies in modern times," Mattox said the insurance companies used their memberships in the Insurance Services Office executive committee to set strategies that dramatically increased rates and profits.

"They got together and they agreed that they were going to... start squeezing the consumer and squeezing the agents," he said.

Responding to the "liability crisis" during a 1987 special session, the Texas Legislature passed several bills that somewhat limit businesses' liability in civil suits. Supporters termed that package "tort reform."

Mattox disputed industry claims that insurance companies have been experiencing huge losses because of a dramatic increase in lawsuits and exorbitant jury awards.

Between 1983 and 1986, he said, premiums paid by Texas consumers increased from $8.5 billion to $12.4 billion. Nationally, property-casualty insurance companies made net profits of $50 billion to $75 billion from 1976 through 1985, he said, and were expected to profit more than $90 billion between 1986 and 1990.

The lawsuit culminates a two-year investigation by Mattox's Antitrust Division that involved 60,000 documents and more than 110 interviews and 30 depositions.

The suit seeks to stop the defendants from continuing their practices, as well as civil penalties against the companies and financial restitution for affected consumers.

Bill's supporters pleased by override

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supporters of a civil rights bill enacted over President Reagan's veto say it will help cure "an epidemic of discrimination" that followed a 1984 Supreme Court decision limiting federal protection for many groups.

"Discrimination in federally funded institutions is occurring at accelerated rates," Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., said Tuesday as the House joined the Senate in overriding Reagan's veto of the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

Edwards, chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on civil rights, said the Education Department closed or suspended hundreds of sex bias cases after the court ruling.

"Heaven knows how many thousands of complaints have not even been filed," he said. "We are facing an epidemic of discrimination."

Both chambers of Congress came up Tuesday with the two-thirds majorities needed to override Reagan's veto — the ninth such rebuff he has suffered since taking office. The votes were 73-24 in the Senate and 292-133 in the House.

Even as the voting occurred, Reagan was calling the bill "a power grab" by the federal government. But the White House later issued a statement acknowledging the override and saying the administration would "work to implement the new law."

Congress was tied in knots for four years over how to handle the high court ruling that only specific programs or activities receiving federal aid had to comply with four major civil rights laws protecting women, minorities, the elderly and the handicapped.

Lawmakers finally settled on a restoration act that bars discrimination by entire institutions, government agencies and some corporations that receive any federal aid. If a college athletic department discriminates, for example, the federal government can cut off aid to the whole school — even if that specific department received no assistance.

Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, called the override "a bipartisan reaffirmation of civil rights." The conference, a 185-member coalition of major religious organizations and groups representing labor, women, minorities and senior citizens, was the moving force behind the bill.

Education Department spokesman Michael Jackson said the department had closed or narrowed more than 200 sex bias cases through 1986 as a result of the court decision. "We simply don't know yet" what their fate will be, he said. "We're going to have to assess what our responsibilities are."

Marcia Greenberger, managing attorney of the National Women's Law Center, urged the individuals who filed those complaints to "bring them back to the attention of the government and ask for the protection that the country thought the law provided to them all along."

Reagan and his congressional allies contended that the act would infringe on religious liberty and expand federal control of the private sector. They supported a less sweeping alternative that would have gotten more religious schools and corporations off the regulatory hook.

But even some Republicans said they were sorry Reagan had vetoed the bill.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said Reagan was the first president to veto a civil rights measure since Andrew Johnson more than 100 years ago.

The present board Tuesday left much of the more detailed decision-making process up to those who will be elected to a new trustee board also May 7.

That new body will have the power to designate many of the details of the bond election should it pass, trustees explained.

The classroom additions are needed, trustees have explained, to comply with a Legislative mandate calling for smaller student-teacher classroom ratios and to be ready for an estimated 5,000-student elementary population surge over the next five years.

A financial consultant told the district it could expect to continue spending about 10 cents of every $100 of taxes levied on paying off old and new bonds, but didn't speculate whether the district could maintain its current overall tax rate of 79.9 cents per $100 of valued property with the bond's passage.

Elementaries slated for addition include eight classrooms and an LRC at Bowie; six classrooms and and LRC at Milam; 10 classrooms and an LRC at Crockett; eight classrooms and an LRC at Travis; six classrooms and an LRC at South; eight classrooms at Henderson; nine classrooms at Jones; eight classrooms Burnet; six classrooms and an LRC at Lamar; 10 classrooms at Bonham; and eight classrooms and an LRC at Long.

The new primary school is necessary, trustees said, to ease overcrowding in kindergarten through third grades at Rusk, Parker and Santa Rita elementaries.

The manner in which a permanent architect for the project was also discussed at Tuesday's board meeting.

Some Midland architects had become upset with what they saw as the district's exclusion of them from the preliminary selection method.

Fort Worth architect Terry Harden, a former Midland architect, was chosen to design conceptual plans for the elementary school additions.

The school board chose Harden in an illegal executive session last month, and rescinded that decision then remade it in a public meeting.

Some Midland architects became disgruntled at the preliminary selection of Harden, saying they didn't have due notice of the project and could not submit design concepts of their own.

Harden has not been paid for any services to the district so far, trustees have said, and will be paid on a retroactive basis for any work he has done should the bond issue pass and he be dismissed of his duties in favor of a local architect.

Lawrence Connolly, a Midland architect and spokesman for the Midland Architects Association, said today members are pleased with the district's efforts to work out a reasonable method of selection process as per the architects' request.

Trustees Tuesday, in outlining an architectural selection policy, said they wanted to give the new board elected this May to also have a look at the new procedure before passing it.

In unrelated action, trustees voted at the meeting to purchase six portable bleachers to be added to Midland Memorial Stadium.

The bleachers, which will cost $19,500, will give the district an added 1,059 seats — 528 on the west side and 531 on the east side, a report said.

The sale of those tickets will generate about $12,158 for the 1988 football season.

Under the proposed bleacher addition, high school bands will be moved to the end zones, drill teams and pep squads will be moved to the existing band areas with the new remaining seats being returned to reserved seating status.

KITE

DeAndra and her parents were picnicking Sunday with friends at a park 2 miles from the Palo Alto airport when the accident occurred.

DeAndra was taking her turn flying the 12-foot, glider-type kite when a twin-engine plane descending toward the airport caught the kite's 200-pound nylon test line.

Mountain View fire marshal Frank Moe said the 70-pound child was carried about 100 feet before she let go.

"There was no way the people in the plane could have known what was happening," said Ken Markowitz, a lawyer for the Reno Flying Service, owner of the Care Flight medical transport plane that tangled with the kite.

Pilot Jack Uranga of Reno, Nev., was flying a patient to Stanford University Hospital when the propeller snagged the line, Markowitz said.

Despite damage to one propeller blade, Uranga managed to land safely, but the plane is grounded until repairs are made, Markowitz said. Uranga said Tuesday that company regulations prevented him from discussing the accident.

In San Jose, Federal Aviation Administration official Edge Ritter said the plane sustained a 2-inch gouge in one of its two propellers. He was unable to estimate the cost of repair or the height of the plane when it caught the line.

Mountain View authorities said they would post signs at Shoreline park advising that kite flying has been banned there. The Public Utilities Commission prohibits kite flying within 5 miles of an airport.

Ritter said there frequently are kites in the park area, but this was the first such accident.

"There had been planes flying over all that afternoon," said DeAndra's father, Brad. "And there were kites everywhere — 15 to 20 of them, some up as high as 200 feet."

He and DeAndra found their kite after the incident — about half a mile away — with about 60 feet of line still attached.

MC

Parrish noted that the initial scholarship offer was made on a one-year trial basis and was extended last year as a "positive gesture" to the community which had suffered from a two-year slump in the petroleum-based economy.

The gesture "planted a seed" and has been emulated by many nonprofit organizations, making it virtually impossible to "calculate the benefits to students all over this nation because of this program," he said.

Registrar Dee Windsor estimated that 650 students from the 1986 and 1987 high school graduating classes are attending courses on the scholarship and forecast a similar number of incoming freshman this fall.

Parrish has said the foundation scholarship has freed up other financial aid resources, making it possible for the college to assist a larger percentage of students.

In unrelated business Tuesday, board members voted to call a trustee election for May 7 — a day before the candidate filing deadline. As of this morning, trustees Gloria Hinojosa, Bill Kleine and Parker Humes were running unopposed for Places 4, 5 and 6 on the board.

The governing body is required by law to order the election at least 45 days prior to balloting. Absentee voting begins April 18 and extends through May 3.

Candidates have until 5 p.m. today to announce their intentions to run for those board seats and constituents have until April 7 to register to vote.

The nine-member board also agreed to extend the contracts for each of the college's instructional and support staff members.

Parrish said salary negotiations for those jobs will be conducted later this spring.

GAS

Rutter said he expected gas prices to fall to $1.40 or lower and hold there until next fall. "At that time producers will be deciding whether to shut-in or flow gas," said Rutter.

El Paso Natural Gas said it intended to maintain the spot price of natural gas going to California at $1.65, but there are marketing implications to that price.

Gas going to the Midwest has also taken a dive in recent weeks. "It's going down as fast as it went up," says Dave Presley, president Colony Energy, a Midland gas brokering firm. "It tumbled 20 to 30 cents per million Btu since the first of the month and we are looking for it to tumble another 20 cents for April."

Presley said he expected the average spot price going into the pipeline in Oklahoma would be around $1.60.

Canadian gas still continues to be a factor in natural gas prices according to local gas brokers.

"There's a lot of Canadian gas moving into Iowa from the Northern Border Pipeline," said Presley. He said the gas was backing out about 750 Mmcfd of Texas and Oklahoma gas and extending the gas bubble. He said FERC 451 gas and offshore gas were also contributing to the extention of the bubble.

In California Pacific Gas Transportation has two proposals to expand its pipeline to bring in additional Canadian gas. One proposal would add an additional 200 million cubic feet per day to the system at a cost of $300 million, and a $2 billion expansion would add 800 million cubic feet daily.

"Any Canadian gas that goes into the California market backs out Texas and New Mexico gas," said Widner.

OIL

The issue of bolstering oil prices has tormented OPEC for years as countries outside OPEC continue to increase their oil output and their market share. Non-OPEC output is expected to rise by 800,000 barrels a day during 1988.

The OPEC view seems to be that non-OPEC oil producers must pitch in to promote higher oil prices. A group of of non-OPEC producers met recently in London and indicated that it had reached the same conclusion.

"We agreed that our production should be limited and that we will hold talks with OPEC when the time is ripe to work something out," said a participating nation's official who asked not to be named. The countries that took part in the London talks were Egypt, Mexico, Colombia, China, Malaysia, Oman and Angola, the official said, while Norway and the Soviet Union sent observers.

OPEC officials are skeptical of such pledges, made often in the past by countries like the Soviet Union, Norway and Oman but never kept.

POSTAGE

The increases are unrelated to recent reductions in window hours, collections and other service, however. Those cuts were forced by congressional action mandating a spending reduction by the agency.

The new 25-cent first-class rate means that sending a letter will take about the same bite from the average wallet as it did in 1932. Adjusted for inflation, the 3-cent postage rate introduced in 1932 would amount to 25.5 cents today.

The new 25-cent rate is just for the first ounce. The price for each additional ounce of mail will rise from 17 cents to 20 cents.

The cost to mail a post card will increase from 14 cents to 15 cents.

While those are the rates most readily noticed by consumers, the charges to businesses for mailing bills and advertising and sending books and magazines to American homes also affect individuals. Prices and subscription rates may well increase, with the postage costs being cited as a factor.

The new rates, for example, would add about $1.15 to the annual cost of mailing a weekly newsmagazine to one home.

U.S. offering to fly Noriega into exile

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is trying to encourage Panamanian leader Manuel Antonio Noriega to leave his homeland by offering to fly him into exile along with family and friends, U.S. officials say.

The proposal was made last week when Noriega met with two State Department envoys who encouraged him to step down as commander of Panama's Defense Forces and to accept a Spanish offer of political exile, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But Noriega told the envoys he was not willing to accept any arrangement that involves his departure from Panama.

The two State Department envoys — William G. Walker and Michael Kozak — told Noriega in their meeting that the U.S. proposal to fly him into exile might be the "last best offer" he would receive for ending the crisis in a way that ensured his personal safety, one official said.

Noriega's apparent determination to remain in Panama was reinforced Monday night when Panama's chief of state, Manuel Solis Palma, indicated that Noriega intends to stay on as defense chief.

He said Noriega would consider resigning before the May 1989 presidential elections only if opposition leaders consented to a dialogue about the nation's political future.

◄ General strike closes shops; Food running short — Page 7A

The plan drew a sharp reaction from the Reagan administration.

At the White House, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said any proposal that calls for Noriega's resignation as defense chief but does not include his actual departure from Panama "is like getting the fox out of the hen house, then giving him quarters next door."

State Department spokesman Charles Redman called the offer a "ploy to buy time."

"For the good of Panama, Noriega should leave," Redman said, referring to the hostile reaction of Panamanian opposition leaders to the proposal and to the virtual shutdown of the country because of a general strike.

The United States has a tradition of helping foreign leaders faced with widespread discontent flee into exile.

Mecham says 'rats coming out of holes' to badger him

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham says "a lot of the rats have come out of their holes" to badger him in his Senate impeachment trial, and he will probably appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if lawmakers convict him.

At the trial, testimony was heard Tuesday on the second of three impeachment articles against Mecham, accusing him of misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by loaning it to his car dealership.

Jim Colter, Mecham's former chief of staff, testified that he warned the governor it would be "politically unwise" to borrow the money, but Mecham instructed him to write the check anyway.

Colter said Mecham also asked him not to record a document securing the loan, although Colter did not know why. He testified, however, that he did not think any law had been broken "or I would have objected."

The protocol fund, created with fund-raising revenues from Mecham's inauguration, is intended to be used for state ceremonial gifts.

The prosecution contends the fund is public money and therefore the loan was illegal, while the defense says the money can be used as Mecham sees fit, except to repay his campaign expenses.

However, the first two witnesses to testify on the charge said they were shocked when they heard that Mecham had loaned the funds to his auto dealership.

"I was very surprised and disappointed and saddened," said Warner Lee, a former state attorney general who advised the Mecham inaugural committee. "I thought that it was a very awkward thing politically."

In an interview Tuesday on KTAR radio, Mecham said he considered the protocol fund to be "private association money...not state money."

He acknowledged he was told "it was politically not a wise thing to do, but I wasn't thinking of that."

OSHA inspectors move out of the office onto the floor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal manufacturing safety inspectors will begin actually checking the factory floor rather than just office records, in a major Reagan administration policy reversal on the eve of congressional hearings.

Beginning next week, Occupational Safety and Health Administration inspectors will start "walking through" high-hazard areas of every factory they enter instead of just looking at plant office records of job illnesses and injuries, the agency said Tuesday.

The change will take effect Monday, a day before the Senate begins hearings on a two-year congressional investigation into what critics maintain has been OSHA's excessive reliance on employer records in ferreting out job hazards.

"Now when we go into a plant, the inspector is going to see what it looks like beyond the office," said Assistant Labor Secretary John A. Pendergrass, who ordered the new policy. "Our compliance officers will see the conditions as they exist in the work areas."

Pendergrass and other OSHA officials denied that the hearings, ordered by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, were the impetus behind the new policy.

"We've been discussing a change like this for two years, and it's just now coming to fruition," said Frank White, the agency's deputy administrator.

In 1982 — a year after Reagan took office — OSHA began exempting plants in high-hazard industries from inspections if their logs showed injury rates that were below the nationwide average for manufacturing.

Ever since, unions and officials in some other federal agencies have complained that the exemptions encouraged employers to under-report injuries and illnesses in OSHA-required "lost work day" reports in order to avoid more comprehensive plant inspections.

Their case was bolstered by the death of a worker from cyanide poisoning at a film processing plant in Chicago in 1983, just six months after OSHA had pronounced the company in compliance with regulations based on an examination of its injury and illness logs.

A later inspection of the plant itself showed widespread health and safety hazards in violation of the law, resulting in a recommendation for criminal prosecution of some of the company's officials.

"That case has been in everybody's mind," Pendergrass said Tuesday. "It's something we don't want to happen again."

Astronomers tune in radio telescopes to Milky Way

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The most detailed survey of the Milky Way will start Thursday at the world's most sensitive radio telescope, an array of 27 dish-shaped antennas spread across New Mexico's desert.

"Without a doubt this will give us the most comprehensive picture of our galaxy yet obtained in any kind of wavelength," including visible light and radio and infrared radiation, said Robert H. Becker, associate professor of astronomy at the University of California, Davis.

The $1 million, two-year survey will be conducted by Becker and astronomer David Helfand of Columbia University. They will use the Very Large Array radio telescope, a set of 27 antenna dishes, each about 80 feet in diameter, that move on 20 miles of tracks west of Socorro, N.M.

The telescope, which started operations in the late 1970s, can detect fainter radio signals than any other radio telescope, Becker said Tuesday during a telephone interview.

More complete surveys of the heavens beyond our galaxy have been conducted using powerful optical and infrared telescopes aimed to look above or below the Milky Way's flattened disk.

But such telescopes can't survey our own galaxy very well because visible light is blocked by tremendous amounts of dust between the Milky Way's stars and because the galaxy is so full of infrared light sources that it's hard to distinguish various objects, Becker said.

The survey will construct maps of the 70 percent of the Milky Way visible from the Northern Hemisphere by detecting objects that emit radio waves, which penetrate the dust.

Such objects include supernovas, or dying, exploding stars; vast dust-and-gas clouds where new stars are born; and very dense supernova remnants called neutron stars, pulsars and black holes.

"What this kind of survey can do is give you the overall picture," Becker said. "Until you catalog the contents of your own galaxy, you're never going to have a clear picture of what the galaxy is."

The disk-shaped Milky Way contains an estimated 100 billion stars clumped in spiraling arms that stretch across 100,000 light years, or about 588,000 trillion miles, of space. Earth is located roughly 22,000 light years, or 130,000 trillion miles, from the galaxy's center.

Becker said the survey undoubtedly will produce unexpected discoveries.

Dukakis, Gephardt vie for votes in Michigan

Associated Press

Democratic presidential contender Michael Dukakis fended off fresh jabs from rival Richard Gephardt on trade as the two vied for votes in Michigan, center of the nation's auto industry. And Vice President George Bush came under fire for supporting President Reagan's veto of a major civil rights bill.

Dukakis, meanwhile, was poised to pick up a plum endorsement, from Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, who has himself been mentioned as presidential material. Sources said Bradley, a former pro basketball player, would tip his support to the Massachusetts governor today.

Gephardt hammered away at Dukakis as a new poll suggested he trailed the Massachusetts governor by a 2-1 margin in Michigan, which holds Democratic caucuses on Saturday.

According to the survey, Dukakis had 35 percent; Jesse Jackson, 29 percent; Gephardt, 17 percent; Sen. Albert Gore Jr., 6 percent; and Sen. Paul Simon, 5 percent, with 9 percent undecided, Detroit television station WJBK said Tuesday night. The telephone poll of 400 Democratic or independent voters, with a margin of error of 5 percentage points, was taken over the weekend.

Gephardt, who has made trade a campaign centerpiece, questioned the sincerity of Dukakis' support for Senate trade legislation, calling it a "political ploy" to win workers' votes in Michigan.

Dead diplomat honored

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thirty-four years after his death, a Portugese diplomat who helped 30,000 refugees flee the Nazi invasion of France has been restored to full rank in his country's consular corps.

Aristides de Sousa Mendes, who died in poverty and disgrace, was reinstated by a unanimous vote last week of Portugal's national assembly, his son Sebastian Mendes, 64, said Tuesday.

De Sousa Mendes was Portuguese consul to Bordeaux, France, in 1940 when during a three-day period, he, his wife and consul staff defied their government's orders and hand-wrote exit visas for 30,000 refugees, including an estimated 10,000 Jews.

"My father was very moral and — not religious — but very Christian. He believed in helping the unfortunate. He wanted to assist the ones who are less fortunate than he," he said Tuesday in a telephone interview from his home in Santa Clarita, 40 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

The diplomat was recalled to Lisbon, stripped of his position and retired without pay. Barred from practicing law, forced to sell his property for taxes and reduced to poverty, he died in 1954. His wife, Angelina, died in 1948.

Should EPA use Nazi data?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Environmental Protection Agency plans to look at the ethics of using scientific data from Nazi concentration camp experiments but is banning use of such information in a report on a toxic gas, an agency official says.

EPA Administrator Lee M. Thomas learned in a letter from about 20 EPA employees Friday that data from experiments on concentration camp prisoners were included in an outside consultant's draft report on phosgene gas, Thomas' chief of staff Craig DeRemer said Tuesday.

Thomas plans a broad review "to look at the ethical issues on using this kind of data," DeRemer said. "It's sort of a new issue that we haven't dealt with before.

"There may be some arguments on the other side," he added. "If there is data available, no matter if it was raised in questionable means, some people might argue that if it's for the good of humanity we should use it."

Preventing fires saves massive effort

In early-day Texas a range fire was a truly frightening experience. Without modern-day heavy machinery and fire-fighting techniques, such a fire often had to be left to rage out of control until it burned itself out.

As West Texans had the opportunity to see in recent days, a range fire is still difficult to battle and a frightening experience. It's costly, too.

The huge fire that burned about 300,000 acres of rangeland in Shackelford, Haskell, Throckmorton, Callahan and Jones counties earlier this month cost the state of Texas $305,000 to fight, according to knowledgeable officials. And that doesn't even take into consideration the loss of grassland to farmers and ranchers, the miles of fencing consumed by flames, the danger to inhabitants and those fighting the blaze or the domesticated animals and wildlife that fell victim to the fire.

Fighting the blaze took a tremendous cooperative effort. Numerous fire departments joined in the effort as did Texas Forest Service firefighters and countless private individuals. Gov. Bill Clements dispatched 100 National Guard troops to assist in battling the fires.

Of course, that assistance was all willingly given. West Texans recognize that tremendous damage can result from such a fire and they pitch in gladly to help bring it under control.

Even more important than the willingness to help battle rangefires is the needed commitment to minimize the danger of those fires erupting in the first place. This most recent fire was newsworthy because of its size, but many range or grass fires occur throughout West Texas particularly during hot and dry periods. Those conditions put a greater responsibility on every West Texan to prevent fires and to be on the lookout to report fires that start. If the fires are being "set," those convicted of the acts should be punished to the maximum the law allows. After all, these fires are highly damaging to property and animals, and dangerous to human life.

This experience has shown that range fires affect thousands of lives and large amounts of property. While it takes a degree of effort, preventing the fires is still the best way of dealing with them.

LETTERS

Reagan's latest affront

At this point in the Reagan presidency, I find my letters condemning whatever has been his most recent affront to peaceful relations in Central America to have become almost as standardized as the form letters I receive from our Republican congressman. The White House pursues its foreign policy and I pursue a much different one.

From the time the Contras were created by the U.S.A. to interdict the arms flow between Nicaragua and El Salvador and the most recent attempt to portray the Contras as the final line saving the Hondurans from being overrun by the Sandinistas, there has been numerous timely incidents to sway public opinion to the administration position. Empty crates full of MIGs, other border incursions, and high-ranking defectors have all occurred conveniently as the Contras were having financial problems. The facts that seven years later, no arms shipments have been proven and that Honduras continues to deny the Contras are based in their country in violation of international law are usually added on the jump page, if at all.

The Contadora Peace Plan was openly scuttled by the administration so we cannot expect the Arias plan to get any better treatment. President Reagan is either unwilling or unable to negotiate with anyone in the region. The majority of North Americans disagree with the president and an even greater majority of Central Americans are having trouble living with his unilateral decisions.

But then, a man who is willing to circumvent the will of the majority, even going so far as to flout national and international law is not a someone who can easily be reasoned with.

Alcohol laws ignored

Do you know we have an establishment here in Midland which serves alcoholic beverages after 2 a.m.? The police know. The state Alcoholic Beverage Commission knows. Yet nothing is being done to stop this.

We already have a law which requires that alcoholic beverages not be sold between the hours of 2 a.m. and 7 a.m. Monday through Saturday, and 2 a.m. and noon on Sunday. This law is being ignored or subverted here in our city.

When asked why nothing is done to close this establishment or to enforce the law, the police department personnel have replied that they cannot be caught in the act. This is not an acceptable answer. We have read about undercover operations which our law enforcement agencies have participated in, yet their hands seem to be tied in this case. We also have public intoxication laws which could be used. They obviously are not being used.

We need to let our city officials know that alcohol abuse is just as important as drug abuse. Our children are finally being taught that alcohol is a drug. We, as adults, need to wake up to this fact. Alcoholism is too common, it destroys too many lives, and is costing us, the taxpayers, too much.

As citizens, we need to ask that these laws be enforced. The officials in our city need to be held accountable for their lack of action to correct this problem. Ask our law enforcement departments why action has not been taken and demand that they do their job.

'911' valuable service

MARC (The Midland Association for Retarded Citizens) operates a number of homes where people with retardation live, and we are in process of opening additional residential resources. In determining the location of a specific home, one of the concerns is how quickly medical or other emergency services can respond to a call for help. We recently had an opportunity to test the response time in an actual emergency which occurred at the Barney Greathouse Memorial Home located on Golf Course.

One of our staff fell and cut her head. Bleeding was profuse and medical attention was necessary. We called "911" and requested an ambulance. From the time of our call until paramedics arrived at the scene, less than four minutes lapsed.

I wish to commend Midland for its excellent responsiveness to emergency situations. The "911" number really works!

Defector says CIA duped by Cuba

WASHINGTON — A top Cuban spy who defected to the United States last year brought with him more bad news than good. And for the second time this year, the Central Intelligence Agency is paying the price for consorting with rogues in Latin America.

Jack Anderson

We reported recently that revelations by defector Florentino Aspillaga Lombard dealt a devastating blow to the CIA. Aspillaga was a major in the Cuban intelligence network known as the General Directorate of Intelligence. He revealed humiliating evidence that most of the U.S. spies in Cuba since the Bay of Pigs fiasco in 1961 have been double agents working for Fidel Castro.

For more than two decades, they have been feeding the CIA false information that was passed on in thousands of CIA intelligence reports to U.S. presidents, senior American officials and some allied countries.

Aspillaga has been kept under wraps by the CIA, but the few who know about him are convinced that the CIA must be curtailed in the future when it wants to bed down with questionable characters at the expense of sound foreign policy.

The American public is already privy to the CIA's relationship with Panamanian Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, now accused of multi-billion-dollar corruption, drug running, money laundering, and even murder. The CIA was a friend of Noriega because CIA officials believed he provided invaluable intelligence on Cuba. All the while, State Department diplomats and congressional officials were arguing that Noriega's corruption could no longer be tolerated.

Aspillaga furnished some inside information that further pointed the finger at this incredibly poor judgment on the part of the CIA. He has been telling his CIA debriefers that Noriega was pivotal in helping Cuba export arms to rebels in El Salvador, Honduras and Colombia. Aspillaga says Noriega reaped $3 million for this arms running. He says Noriega also has received millions from Cuba for helping it acquire restricted U.S. technology.

The CIA was a prime mover behind re-establishing minimal diplomatic relations with Cuba in September 1978 during the Carter administration. A U.S. interest section was opened in the Swiss Embassy in Havana. But it wasn't polite diplomacy that the CIA was interested in. It was the potential for recruiting agents through the one-on-one contact that came when the diplomatic door opened a crack.

In the early days of the Reagan administration, the president and his advisers seriously considered closing the interest section, since there had been no improvement in relations with Castro and no slowdown in Castro's anti-American activities here and in Latin America.

But the CIA argued strongly against closing the section — so strongly that it became the dominant voice on the matter. CIA officials felt that the access to agents in Havana was too valuable to lose.

The CIA got its agents, all right. Every one of them recruited by the CIA out of the interest section, according to Aspillaga, was already a double agent or soon became a double agent for Castro. The CIA and Aspillaga also now believe that the majority of agents recruited from the early 1960s until the interest section opened in 1978 were also double agents.

Aspillaga erupted into laughter at times during the debriefings as he told how the CIA had been duped.

Fresh information from Aspillaga may alter the psychological profile of Castro that the CIA has maintained for years. For instance, the CIA was surprised to know that Fidel Castro has four children beside the one son they knew about — Fidelito, who now heads Cuba's nuclear agency. Aspillaga said also that Castro is so interested in presenting a pure image of his regime that he makes his brother Raul appear in public with Raul's ex-wife Vilma Espin, even though Raul has long since married another woman. Cubans don't even know about the second marriage.

It is always possible that Aspillaga himself is a double agent, but our CIA sources think that this is unlikely because of the volume of damaging information he has turned over about the DGI.

MINI-EDITORIAL — A lot of politicians and pundits have said plenty of negative things about George Bush over the years. It's so easy to do. But they obviously haven't put a dent in his opinion of himself. Following his big victory in the Illinois primary last week, Bush asked of his cheering supporters, "Who says nice guys finish last?" That clears up one thing. Old George is going to vote for himself.

Wrong number dialing's on the increase!

Ever since they broke up the phone company, people seem to be showered with wrong numbers.

I believe these calls are not accidental but are placed by a syndicate of perverts stationed in boiler rooms around the country. The purpose of the wrong-number dialer is to ring up when a person least expects it and cause the victim to break his toe on an end table.

Art Buchwald

What is the payoff for someone making a wrong-number call?

It gives the dialer a sense of power he or she never had before, and a way for many of the callers to get even with their mothers.

This is how the team assigned to my house works. The first dialer only rings at bath time. I can't afford to ignore the phone because it might be Ed McMahon telling me I won $10 million in a sweepstakes, so I slosh across the floor and pick up the receiver. At which point the caller hangs up. Like all idiots who receive wrong numbers I keep screaming "Hello!" into the phone until I realize it is futile. I return the receiver to the cradle and say to my wife, "How could he know I was in the bath?" My wife replies, "That's not the question. The question is, how did he know you'd get out of the bath?"

My second caller has a thick accent and it wouldn't surprise me if he were in the country illegally. Here's how this wrong call goes:

"Hello, Sam," he says.

"This is not Sam. There is no Sam in this house."

"Who you?"

"I'm the person who owns the phone. You have the wrong number."

"You tell Sam he better call me or I smash his face in."

"Okay, I'll tell him," I say. "But you still have the wrong number."

"You tell Sam I'm going to smash him in his face for giving me the wrong number."

One of my other dialers sounds like a kid. Those calls go like this:

"Grandpa?"

"Yes, this is Grandpa. Is this Jason?"

"No, it's Nicholas. You're not my Grandpa."

"You're right. You shouldn't use the phone when your parents aren't there."

"My Daddy's right here."

"What are you bothering my kid for?" a man's voice says.

"If he's for real, which I doubt, he called my number by mistake."

"Then why did you answer the phone? He's only 5 years old."

While I get my share of wrong numbers during the waking hours, I have observed that most of the calls come very early in the morning. They are made by people who sound just like teenagers, and they get extremely angry at me when they find out they're not talking to Bubba.

If you tell the person on the phone you don't know where Bubba is they accuse you of locking him in the furnace room, which you had no right to do.

There is only one thing worse than a Bubba caller and that's a heavy breather, who checks in at 3 o'clock in the morning.

The first time he started breathing I handed the receiver to my wife and said, "It's for you."

"How do you know? It could be a woman."

"Do you think there are female heavy breathers?" I asked.

She rolled over and said, "Why don't you ask her?"

This is just a sample of my wrong-number callers. There are only two conclusions you can come to about why they are so numerous. One is there are a lot more crazy people in the country than the census shows, and the other is the telephone lines are even more fouled up than anyone imagines.

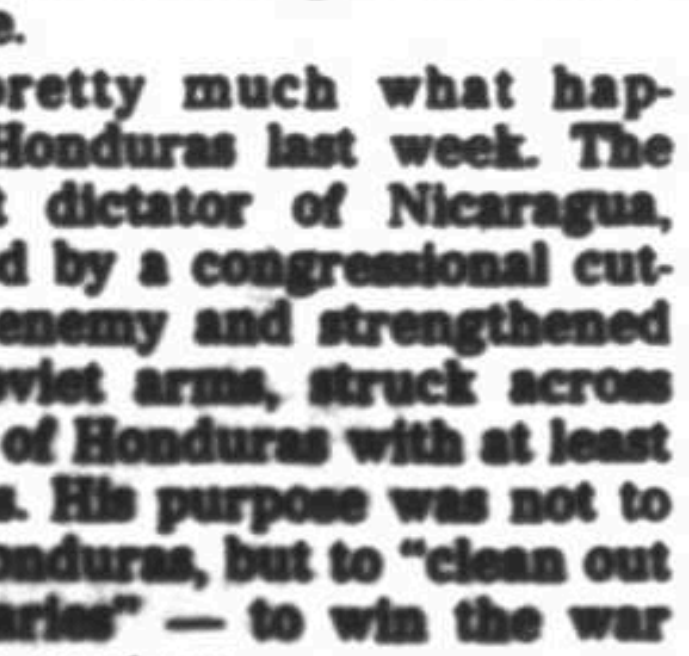
WILLIAM SAFIRE

Cleaning out sanctuaries calls for action

WASHINGTON — If you're out to win a war against guerrillas — to crush an insurgency that is being helped from the outside — then it makes good military sense to "clean out the sanctuaries."



William Safire

That's what the United States tried to do in 1970. President Nixon, following a strategy suggested by Adm. John McCain, sent U.S. troops in South Vietnam across the Cambodian border. The purpose was to destroy the bases and supplies being used by the Vietcong and North Vietnamese.

That's pretty much what happened in Honduras last week. The Communist dictator of Nicaragua, emboldened by a congressional cutoff of his enemy and strengthened by new Soviet arms, struck across the border of Honduras with at least 2,000 troops. His purpose was not to conquer Honduras, but to "clean out the sanctuaries" — to win the war against the contras.

The analogy is not exact. In Honduras today, the contras are not unwelcome by the government, as the Vietcong were in Cambodia; and the goal of the contras is not to impose a Communist dictatorship, but to lift one from their people.

But one similarity cannot be denied: The central purpose of "cleaning out the sanctuaries" was then and is now to defeat the insurgents, to conclude the war on the Sandinista government's terms.

Codgers may recall the reaction of America's doves when we went after the Vietcong supplies in Parrot's Beak. The left went bananas: this was an effort to "widen the war"; there was tragedy at Kent State; editorialists derided the use of the euphemism "incursion" for what they were certain was an invasion.

Today, with the Communists in Nicaragua doing the incursioning, the combat boot is on the other foot. Our doves are now saying: What's the big deal? The Communists raided Honduras a couple of years ago and nobody hollered, which makes this unworthy of news coverage.

The pro-Sandinista left in our Congress, newly tolerant of sanctuary-cleaning, says: This isn't taking place, because Mr. Ortega denied it; or if it did, it's only an "incursion." Or: This is all alarmist hype by the Reagan warmongers, who are seeking a reason to send in U.S. troops. Or: Mr. Ortega was provoked into the insignificant cross-border raid by — by whatever.

The plain truth is that the "peace process," in the Ortega strategy, has always been a farce. His soothing words to Speaker Wright, and his flattery of President Arias, has induced the U.S. Congress — with the support of every one of the Democratic presidential candidates — into cutting off all military aid to the contras. As our aid withered and our congressional commitment grew ever more palsied, the momentum of the war turned around in the field.

We are eager to settle; the Communist purpose is to win. If the world has learned anything in the period between Vietnam and Afghanistan, it is this: When one side is determined to win and the other side wants to settle, the side that is determined to win will win. Mr. Ortega's secret slogan is now out in the open: Give war a chance.

Now we will see our isolationist thumb-suckers and snookered senators, impaled on the Ortega hook, trying to wriggle off. Their focus will be on the "overreaction" of sending a brigade of Americans to reassure the Hondurans, or on the anomaly of making a show of potential force by sending troops "in a non-shooting capacity" (Mr. Reagan's obeisance to the War Powers Act).

That's all a sideshow. Nor is it necessary at this point for realists to explore the curious Noriega-Ortega-PLO relationship. Let Doddering doves and told-you-so hawks get to the nub of the matter: The Nicaraguan Communists lulled the U.S. Congress into a false sense of international security, and then launched a surprise military offensive.

The incursion (the word was accurate in Cambodia in 1970, and it is accurate today) was hardly intended to speed reconciliation within Nicaragua or to calm Mr. Ortega's Central American neighbors. It was designed to destroy supplies, kill opponents and break the back of the contras before the negotiations began — all of which was well worth letting good faith and world opinion go hang.

What now? Agree with Mr. Ortega to cut the pretense. No more of this hand-to-mouth "humanitarian aid" hypocrisy that lets doves say they never O.K.'d anything "lethal" — but forces contra leaders to waste money trading blankets for bullets.

Give the anti-Communist forces of Nicaragua the weapons they need to win their fight. It is our fight, too; as Dictator Ortega has just shown again, if the contras cannot stop him, it will be up to the 82d Airborne.

General strike closes shops in Panama as food dwindles

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Hungry families flocked to relief centers nationwide and food grew scarce in the third day of a general strike to oust Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega. The military strongman again rejected a U.S. call for him to go into exile.

Panamanians by the tens of thousands stayed off their jobs today and Noriega's opponents hailed the success of the work stoppage, predicting it would continue until the general leaves the country.

"We're in this to the end," said Pierre Legnadier, one of the leaders of a coalition of business, professional, labor and political groups that called the strike.

But Noriega appeared unwilling to step down.

"I am a Panamanian, not a gringo," Noriega said Tuesday after meeting with a small group of union supporters. "Let the world know we are fighting the ultimate battle for dignity and against colonialism."

An estimated 90 percent of offices and industries were shut by the strike on Tuesday. Most shops and stores were closed, public transportation was halted and many government employees did not go to work.

Panamanians today prepared to bury the first person to die in a wave of protests against the military strongman and opposition leaders warned of more clashes at the funeral.

The United States is using economic pressure against Noriega, withholding payments for use of the Panama Canal and freezing Panamanian accounts in U.S. banks to starve the government of the dollars it uses as its currency.

The government must meet several major payrolls by the end of the month, including that of the 15,000-strong Defense Forces, which Noriega heads.

Between the cash crunch and the strike, the latest in a series of walkouts that began last summer to protest Noriega's alleged corruption, food has grown scarce.

Eric Arturo Delvalle, who was removed as president Feb. 26 after trying to fire Noriega, appealed for international food aid Tuesday.

"I am very concerned and fear for the health and lives of many Panamanians," Delvalle said in a videotaped message from hiding. The United States still recognizes him as Panama's president.

Relief officials said that more and more hungry families, some of whom have not eaten in five or six days, were flocking to emergency centers around the country. And port workers said they had run out of food for their union members, but voted to stay on strike.

Opposition leaders scheduled a funeral today for a man who died after being hit with a shotgun blast in violent anti-Noriega protests last week. It was the first fatality of the month-long crisis that began after U.S. grand juries in Florida indicted Noriega on charges of trafficking in Colombian cocaine.

Opposition leaders say the funeral and the arrival of an exiled opposition leader could provoke confrontations with Noreiga's forces.

U.S. role making Latin Americans fear confrontation

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The role the United States is playing in Honduras and Panama has heightened Latin American fears of a major military confrontation and offended regional pride, officials said.

President Miguel de la Madrid's harsh condemnation of U.S. "interventionism" echoed sentiments voiced throughout the region.

The sharpest remarks have been reserved for the U.S. deployment of troops in Honduras after an alleged incursion of Nicaraguan troops pursuing U.S.-backed Contra rebels.

Latin American leaders also have expressed concern about the situation in Panama, where the military chief, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, is trying to stifle a huge opposition campaign backed by U.S. economic pressure. But other presidents have criticized Noriega.

Some leaders have suggested that the United States, which is often viewed as insensitive to Latin America, is thwarting regional attempts to bring peace to Central America.

"It's not with the movement of armies, nor with the financing of subversion...that the problems of this area, vital to the interests of the Mexican people, will be resolved," de la Madrid said Monday in a speech.

President Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala said Tuesday that an isolated border battle could turn into a regional conflict if U.S. troops intervened in the fighting. He was interviewed on the privately-owned Mexico City television station Televisa.

Argentina and Colombia have expressed what they describe as grave "concern" about the deployment of 3,200 U.S. troops to Honduras last week.

President Alan Garcia of Peru went a step further, vowing to visit Nicaragua to demonstrate "solidarity" with its leftist government.

U.S. officials described the deployment of soldiers as a combined training exercise and show of force against Nicaragua.

Duarte, right-wing vow to work together; Rebels reject elections

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — President Jose Napoleon Duarte and the rightists who defeated his party in legislative and municipal elections have declared a willingness to work together on this country's tremendous problems.

But the leftist guerrillas waging an 8-year-old war against the U.S.-backed government said Tuesday the result of Sunday's vote would make the nation "ungovernable." A rebel commander said the electoral result — an outright majority for the rightist opposition in the national Legislature — favors the guerrillas by giving the people "a clear alternative."

In addition to the war, El Salvador has crippling economic problems.

The Central Elections Council has not yet announced the apportionment of seats in the unicameral, 60-seat National Assembly.

But the council president, Mario Samayoa, said Monday the rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance, known by the Spanish acronym Arena, got a majority of votes cast nationwide, which assured it of a legislative majority. Local media projected Arena would get 33 or 34 seats. The party said it had 35.

The governing Christian Democrats had 33 seats in the outgoing legislature. They were expected to win about 22 seats, with the remainder going to small rightist parties. Arena also won the mayoralties and town councils of about 200 of the country's 262 municipalities, including San Salvador.

"Arena is ready to work with the other parties, and with President Duarte, so that together we might achieve the solution to the national crisis," Alfredo Cristiani, president of Arena and a legislator, said at a news conference. "It is time to work together on behalf of the heroic people who cast their votes despite threats and terrorist acts."

The guerrillas had called for a boycott of the elections and had stepped up urban and rural violence in the two weeks prior to the vote. In what they called repudiation of the "electoral farce," they set off three car bombs, sabotaged power lines in large parts of the country and ordered a nationwide transport ban that they enforced by burning more than a dozen vehicles.

The rebels contended the elections were part of an American-imposed counterinsurgency plan, and that they were illegitimate in wartime.

Besides the war, which has killed 65,000 people and made refugees out of 500,000, El Salvador's economy is crippled.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Indian team won't visit Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — India today canceled the visit of a tennis team to protest Israel's handling of Arab riots, and new figures showed that anti-occupation violence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip cost Israel more than $335 million.

Israel's 10-member inner Cabinet was to meet later in the day to hear a report from Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir on his talks in the United States.

Also Tuesday, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin told a parliamentary committee that Israel had jailed 3,000 Arabs since Dec. 8, including 700 since Sunday, Israeli newspapers said today.

In an underground leaflet circulated in the Gaza Strip, the Palestine Liberation Organization announced payments will be made to people who lose family members, property or jobs because of clashes with Israeli soldiers.

British to patrol IRA funerals

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Police announced today they were abandoning a policy of staying away from IRA funerals because five people, including two British soldiers, were killed during funerals last week.

Protestant activists had demanded that police reinstitute the policy of clamping tight security on IRA funerals.

Describing the IRA threat as "deadly," a police statement indicated security chiefs will order heavy police and troop presence at future IRA funerals.

The statement marked the swift collapse of a policy introduced under pressure from moderate Roman Catholic leaders in the hope of avoiding clashes.

Troops to stay for exercises

PALMEROLA AIR BASE, Honduras (AP) — Although Honduras says its border crisis with Nicaragua is over, American troops sent here for emergency training exercises will stay on to complete the maneuvers.

President Reagan ordered 3,200 American troops to Honduras last week after Nicaraguan soldiers allegedly penetrated Honduran territory in pursuit of U.S.-supported Contra rebels.

Tuesday, President Jose Azcona Hoyo told The Associated Press that Sandinista troops had retreated and the American military contingent "will leave Honduras very soon."

But U.S. military spokesman Maj. Gary Hovatter Tuesday said the soldiers first will finish their training exercises.

"Right now the plans are to make it a 10- to 14-day exercise...," he said, adding the exercises were taking place Tuesday at four sites.

Some U.S. soldiers expressed frustration Tuesday that they had not been allowed to join the fighting along the border.

"They get you all hepped up and then there's nothing to do," said Pfc. Jose Pena, 23, of Scottsdale, Ariz., who was rushed in last week as part of what the White House called a "measured response" to the crisis.

Council to transfer bonds to reserve bank

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Following approval of a similar policy by school district trustees last week, the City Council Tuesday voted unanimously to seek transfer of U.S. Treasury bills that back up city deposits to the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas.

The bonds — which serve as a backup to about $48 million in city money held on deposit in the First RepublicBank of Midland — currently are held in trust by the First RepublicBank of Dallas, City Manager Fred Poe said today.

Poe emphasized that the bond change does not amount to a transfer of city deposits from the beleaguered First RepublicBank system, which last week received a $1 billion cash infusion from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"No money will be moved. It's just a matter of moving the securities that protect that money," Poe said.

Under state law, banks that hold deposit money from governmental entities like cities and school districts must maintain part of their assets as back up in case of a bank failure, City Financial Director Troy Gifford said today.

The $48 million — which is held in three different accounts — represents all city money — including payroll, water, airport, and other operating funds, said Poe.

Re-assigning control of the bonds from First RepublicBank Dallas is a precaution against their being tied up in a failure that would be one of the largest ever administered by the FDIC should it occur.

"I think we're protected right now," said Poe. "It's just a matter of how long the funds would be tied up if the bank should fail.

"We just feel like we could get to our money quicker if the securities were held by an outside bank," he said.

City financial personnel were to start drawing up paperwork necessary for the transfer after the council vote.

In other action Tuesday, the council:

— Called May 7 City Council elections for the mayor's position and Districts 3 and 4.

— Approved a $334,545 purchase of graval and asphalt for the 1988 street sealcoat project, — Approved an agreement with Physicians & Surgeons Hospital to allow city employees a 15 percent discount when using the facility (the council last October approved a 10 percent discount for employees who use Midland Memorial Hospital),

— Denied a request from Deborah Olsen for a special use permit to operate a day care center at 3522 Humble Ave.,

— Re-allocated about $35,000 in Community Development Block Grant funds for demolition of structures located in the right of way of the Lamesa Road project, — Approved specifications and bidding for motor vehicle maintenance work such as oil and other fluid changes as part of the city's ongoing privitization policy, and

— Approved a new policy to allow street lights to be placed in so-called "long blocks" where light currently is not visible at both ends of the street because of turns or other obstacles.

Barry Brooks, civilian coordinator of Midlanders Against Crime On Patrol (MACOP), told a group of citizens Tuesday night at an organizational meeting that volunteers can cut crime by acting as "eyes and ears" of police.

Low turnout mars MACOP's first meeting

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A disappointingly low turnout marred the first organizational meeting of a group of Midlanders who want to use citizens' band radios to aid police crime fighting efforts.

About 20 persons showed up for the first meeting of Midlanders Against Crime On Patrol, less than the 25 persons organizers have said will be necessary to implement the program.

"With all of the notices we mailed out, and the publicity I thought we had, I'd say it (the turnout) was pretty poor," police Officer Chuck Chapman said today, noting that 100 notices were mailed to area clubs and civic organizations. "This is a citizen's program, and if we can't get the participation it just won't work."

Chapman — a crime prevention officer who is advising the MACOP program organizers — told those gathered for the meeting that the program is based on an 11-year-old program in Shelby County, Ohio, that has cut crime there in half.

Attendees were also told to "get the word out."

"By your presence here, you have demonstrated you are genuinely interested in the community," Paul Tryson, coordinator of volunteers for the City of Midland, said. "Take back the message about what you are going to hear to your clubs and organizations...without the Midland citizens, the program just won't work."

According to program guidelines, pairs of volunteers will ride in vehicles equipped with citizens' band radios. Anything suspicious will be radioed to a CB base station operator, who will then telephone police. The volunteers should be especially helpful deterring property crime and reporting traffic accidents, organizers say.

Tom Roach, who said he has been burglarized several times, attended Tuesday's meeting "to observe, and see what it was like."

"It is something I think might help deter burglaries," Roach, who now volunteers for the Texas State Guard, said. "If people are civic-minded enough to want to protect their neighborhood, they are going to have to get together and work together."

Crime victims — like himself — know firsthand that crime cannot be wished away, Roach said.

"It is an ugly thing, but it is there, in front of us, and somebody is going to have to do something about it," he said.

Jackie Hamilton, a neighborhood watch captain who is also president of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission, was impressed with the meeting.

"I think it is exciting, and I do think it will work," she said.

Another Midlander who attended the meeting said he plans to sign up right away.

"I like it so far," Johnny Alvarez said. "I think given the chance, it will work."

The meeting also attracted the attention of the county's chief prosecutor.

"I think this is a good program," Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said. "I'm all for it."

Barry Brooks, MACOP'S volunteer project coordinator, acknowledged that enough volunteers may be hard to find.

"We'd love to have about 200 volunteers — if we could have that many, we could operate this program 24 hours a day, seven days a week," Brooks said.

Volunteers will be able to sign up at the group's next meeting, which is set for April 18 at Midland Center, Tryson said.

Animal shelter contract still negotiated

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The contract to transfer control of the animal shelter bounced from city hall back to the Ector County Courthouse Tuesday.

First Assistant County Attorney Mike Griffin explained certain changes Commissoners Court members attached to their March 14 approval of the seven-section contract earlier passed by the Odessa city council.

Section 2 of the proposed contract stipulates that the city will acquire the use of al items necessary to run the animal shelter except the computer and telephone systems, which the county will be required to remove.

Griffin said commissioners want a clause inserted that would specify return of all property acquired by the city if, for some unanticipated reason, the contract should be cancelled.

City Manager Bill Brown said that might prove difficult, especially creating an inventory of property and equipment, since no one appears to remember who owns what.

Griffin also noted the one-time $50,000 contribution the county is making under Section 3 of the contract must be earmarked for expenses only because the county is barred from providing capital improvement funds to any other governmental entity.

Brown indicated there should be no problem complying with that requirement. Initially, the county's $50,000 contribution was expected to be a part of the $200,000 the city plans to spend for remodeling and expanding the shelter.

Concerning Section 4, which deals with revenue from fees and other shelter-provided services, Griffin said commissioners want records to reflect revenue associated with animals collected by county animal control personnel and turned over to the shelter to assure the county receives its rightful share.

Brown noted that all revenues collected, with the exception of license fees collected for dogs and cats outside the city limits, would go into a special account set up for the shelter.

Jessica will throw out first ball

From Staff Reports

Jessica

Jessica McClure, the Midland child rescued from an abandoned well last October, will throw out the first ball at the Texas Rangers home opener April 4, Rangers' Director of Promotion Dave Fendrick said today.

"I don't have any doubt about her holding it," said Fendrick of the almost 2-year-old child's ability to maneuver a baseball.

"We'll have her stand five feet from the catcher and she'll just flip it to him," he said, adding that plans currently are for the girl's parents, Chip and Cissy McClure, to toss out balls of their own.

Prior to the game, Rangers manager Bobby Valentine and the child both will be honored with Texas Solid Citizens awards for April, Fendrick said.

Area youths win at Houston Livestock Show

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Midland County youths turned up winners in the swine arena and in the calf-scramble contest in the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo earlier in March.

Jennifer Dryden, a 17-year-old 4-H Club member from Greenwood, exhibited the reserve champion barrow, a 229-pound Yorkshire, in the Other Pure Breeds judging.

"It went through the premium sale," Jennifer's father, Merrill Dryden, said of the swine. "It sold good." But the pig, which came off of the Jimmy Strube farm in Glasscock County, was not as lucrative as the show's grand champion hog, which was auctioned off for $30,000.

Dustin Taylor, a Future Farmers of America (FFA) member at Midland High School, rounded up an elusive calf in the calf-scramble contest and won a $600 prize to buy a head of livestock to exhibit in next year's Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo.

In his round of the calf scramble, Dustin was one of 28 youths who each sought out one of 14 calves in the Astrodome to pull down, halter, and drag across the finish line.

"I was about the fourth one to throw a calf," said the husky FFA'er, "and one of the last to cross the finish line."

Jennifer, a Greenwood High School senior, seemed modest about her pig showing and other accomplishments in her 4-H Club and FFA career. But her mother wasn't so reticent.

Jennifer Dryden

Dustin Taylor

"She's not one to brag on herself," Paula Dryden said. "Her mother will."

This year, for example, Jennifer has won three scholarships — the National 4-H Scholarship for record-keeping, and Southwestern International Livestock Show and Rodeo and Cap Rock Electric Cooperative scholarships.

"She sets goals," Mrs. Dryden said. "She's a firm believer in setting goals for herself and reaching them. She's a real go-getter and loves life. She just has fun taking a shower."

Jennifer plans to attend Midland College and then transfer to Texas A&M University to major in agricultural communications.

Jill Pronger, Midland County Extension agent for home economics, noted that Jennifer has "achieved almost everything" achievable in 4-H work. Aside from showing championship pigs in the Midland County Livestock Show, she has been a Midland County 4-H Gold Star winner for leadership and accomplishments. Jennifer will be attending the National 4-H Conference in Washington D.C. in April.

"She's a very strong 4-H member," Ms. Pronger said, and has excelled in areas such as food, clothing, method demonstration, sewing, and livestock judging.

Does she miss the farm today?

"No, not really," Jennifer said. "There's not a (shopping) mall near the farm."

Dustin, a 16-year-old Midland High School sophomore and defensive tackle on the school's football team, indicated that wrestling the calf to the ground was a chore.

"I threw him and put a headlock on him, straddled him, and laid on him, and rested," Dustin said. After his respite, he dragged the calf across the finish line.

"That's the first calf scramble I've ever been in," he said. Those in the scramble who "tried hard enough" but didn't end up with a calf got "hard-luck awards," which entitled them to prize money to purchase a calf for raising and showing.

Before the scramble, Dustin showed championship lambs and broiler chickens in the Midland County Livestock Show. After high school graduation, Dustin plans to major in wildlife and rangeland management at Tarleton State University. Dustin is son of Jackie and Joyce Taylor of Midland. "He's very aggressive," his mother said.

"He's a bright kid, youngster, young man," Shane Lowrie, Midland County Extension agent for agriculture, said of Dustin. "He's been real involved in athletics and in FFA and 4-H programs. "He's a well-rounded and active young man in a lot of areas."

"He won that scramble down there," Lowrie said. "They just turn them (the calves) loose, and it's just a mad house. They throw the calves down, put halters on them, and then drag them back across that line. I was real excited for him," Lowrie said. "In winning that, he will branch out and try something new."

With the $600 in prize money, donated by Enron Corp., Dustin is purchasing a red Brahman calf from the Three Mills Ranch in the Fredericksburg area to show in Houston in 1989.

"That's going to be a good opportunity for him to learn some good record-keeping skills, feeding and health maintenance skills," Lowrie said.

Cotton irrigation systems tested at Pecos A&M research station

By PEGGY McCRACKEN

PECOS (AP) — Jaroy Moore wants to build a cotton gin, but he doesn't expect to gin many modules from Reeves County farms.

In fact, the small gin, to be located in a loft at the Texas A&M University Agricultural Research Station west of Pecos, will only be used to gin samples.

"We may pick a paper bag full of cotton at one time," Moore said. "We'll gin it here instead of carrying it to Lubbock to find out about cotton."

Samples of cotton grown on sample plots are ginned to determine how much lint per acre a particular variety yields, Moore said.

"We pick the cotton and weigh it with the seed and trash," he said. "Then we gin it, weigh the lint and multiply the percentage by the beginning weight and convert it back to get the per-acre yield."

Data on the results are published and made available for anyone interested in that variety of cotton, Moore said.

Cotton is the primary crop grown on the 500-acre farm that is being developed on the new research station site.

Moore and his staff of five are installing irrigation systems on the 125 acres under cultivation this year.

They will use regular furrow irrigation, and are looking at various types of drip systems and a modified sprinkler.

The modified sprinkler system, called Low Energy Precision Application (LEPA), has drop tubes on 80-inch centers that apply water right at ground level, Moore said.

Although some systems travel across the field, the research center uses one that travels in a small circle.

"This system was developed by the people at the Lubbock center," Moore said.

"We'll experiment with various types of drip systems," he said. "We're looking at 15 different systems."

Drip systems operate at three depths, he said. One lies on the surface, another is buried eight inches deep, and a third is buried 12 inches deep.

"Some are put on every row and some every other row," he said.

Water pressure and the size and spacing of emitters controls the amount of water deposited at each location.

"We used different size emitters because what we wanted to do in this study was to be able to turn on the entire system and put essentially the same amount of water along the entire field," Moore said.

Each plot has 10 rows, Moore said, and the flow rate can be controlled by changing the pressure.

On experiments with irrigation systems, only one variety of cotton is used "so we don't further complicate the procedure," Moore said.

Although they are studying cotton because it is the primary crop in this area, the results would be applicable to other crops, he said.

"Methods of irrigation are continually changing," Moore said. "We learn new ways to do things. The major obstacle with trickle irrigation is that it is too expensive for most field crops."

One acre requires 13,068 feet of line on 40-inch centers, he said.

"There are some inexpensive type systems that probably have a short lifetime," he said, but most cost from $1,000 to $1,200 per acre.

Another complication is the problem of plowing up a line buried only eight inches deep. Those buried deeper won't wet the surface to germinate seed, he said.

"We're trying to develop one that can be buried deep but still wet the surface," he said.

Nine-year-old Ty Bailey sits in front of his parents' house south of Woodville. Ty and his friends can play on the roof of the house, which is built into a hill and has four feet of soil on top.

Couple builds hill over their house in order to save energy

By DAVE SAELENS

WOODVILLE (AP) — Jo Ellen Bailey always wanted a little house in the hills.

So when she and her husband decided to build their dreamhouse in Woodville and couldn't find any hills, they built their own.

Few afternoons go by in the Bailey household without a car or two bouncing up their crooked driveway, filled with folks curious to meet the people who built their house under a hill.

Actually, the house came first, complete with concrete ceilings and walls reinforced with steel rods every 3 feet.

Then came the sod. All 4 feet of it. On the roof.

"Our son is the most popular kid to come home from school with because they all know he gets to play on the roof of his house," Jo Ellen says, strolling across a roof where bluebells sprout every spring. But the house that Bill Bailey built didn't spring from an urge to entertain the people of Woodville. Energy conservation may seem like the last reason anyone would build a house like this, but it's exactly why the Baileys did it.

"The ground stays a constant temperature, and that helps keep an even temperature inside the house," Jo Ellen says, pointing to a wood-burning stove in the sunken living room and a window air-conditioner in the kitchen that she says are rarely needed.

After seeing several houses in Colorado that had been built into the sides of mountains, the Port Neches bricklayer designed and built most of the house himself.

It took the couple nearly three years to dig the hole for the basement and the house, and make sure they had all the underground utility lines in the right place. They wouldn't get a chance to correct any mistakes once the concrete was poured for the floor, walls and ceilings and the dirt was packed on the roof and the sides.

It took another three years to put the rest of the house together, and they're still working to finish the basement and a room on one end of the house that someday will be Bill's office and Jo Ellen's sewing room.

Jo Ellen says many people are surprised to see that the couple actually has a back yard, since it looks as though the house is sitting in the side of a hill instead of under one.

And every time she strolls into town, there's plenty of questions from people whose first response is usually, "You're the one who owns that house in the hill?"

As far as sharing in any other revenues, he said, what the document being proposed actually represents is a "service contract," under which the city agreed to provide certain services to the county for a specific amount of money, in this case, 36 percent of total operating costs.

Following a discussion with council members, Griffin said he would carry the information he had acquired back to Commissioners Court members and return to the city council as soon as possible.

The effort to transfer control of the animal shelter program has been under way since mid-1987. A contract was finally developed last fall that called for the transfer to take effect Dec. 1, 1987.

However, Brown was hired as city manager in October and reported for duty Nov. 16. One of the new city manager's first acts was to ask council members to delay final approval until he had a chance to study the contract.

The initial contract called for animal control personnel, who would be city employees, to be responsible for collecting all animals within the city limits, as well as throughout unincorporated areas of the county.

Brown said that requiring city personnel to operate in an official capacity beyond the city limits could raise serious questions if any lawsuit ever resulted from such actions.

The latest contract, as proposed to council members and commissioners by Brown, calls for city animal control personnel to be responsible for animals within the city limits of Odessa. The county will be required to hire and maintain its own animal control personnel and vehicles.

County personnel will turn over collected animals to the city shelter for proper disposition.

That has been a major stumbling block for Commissioners Court members who had hoped to totally divorce the county from responsibility for animal control, beyond paying a percentage of operating costs.

During the March 14 Commissioners Court meeting, members objected to numerous portions of the contract, with some expressing the belief the contract was "a take it or leave it" proposition.

More negotiations apparently will be required before a final agreement is jointly approved by both governing bodies.

Former local artists' work exhibited at MC

From Staff Reports

Two distinguished artists return to the Permian Basin Sunday for the opening of their joint art show at Midland College's McCormick Gallery.

Dr. Charles Stewart and his wife, Dr. Nancy Lee Stewart, will be honored with a reception in the gallery from 1-5 p.m. as approximately 40 of their works begin a month-long exhibition.

McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. The reception is open to the public.

Now residents of Taos, N.M., the Stewarts are known for their interpretation of Southwestern subjects. Stewart works primarily in watercolors, while Ms. Stewart now is producing her work in mixed media.

He was chairman of the Midland College Fine Arts Department until his retirement a year ago. He received the first doctorate of fine arts degree awarded by Texas Tech University. For many years he was associated with Howard Payne University as chairman of the art department, vice president, and acting president.

Ms. Stewart is a native of Odessa, where she was graduated from Odessa High School. She received all her degrees from Texas Tech University, including a doctorate of fine arts. She taught in the Lubbock public school system and at Texas Tech. She served as an art consultant for the Ector County Independent School District's magnet school program. She also taught several continuing education art classes for Midland College.

The Stewarts are represented by the Open Space Gallery in Taos and Gallery 23 East in Tulsa. Their paintings are included in numerous private and corporate collections in the Southwest. The Stewart exhibition will be displayed at Midland College through April 22.

McCormick Gallery hours are 1-5 p.m. on Sundays, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Fridays, and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturdays. The gallery will be closed on Good Friday, April 1.

COTTON

Irrigation experiments are determined by climatic conditions, including solar radiation, wind movement, relative humidity and air temperature.

"If you feed all those into a formula, you can come up with a reliable estimate of potential evapo transpiration," he said.

PET is the amount of water that would be lost from a well-watered crop, he said.

"We're doing some work now with drip irrigation studies, where we have experiments set up looking at frequency of irrigation, using two, four, eight and 12-day cycles," he said.

"Then we are looking at various amounts of water applied at six different rates of water, based on PET.

"We cover the whole gamut from a well-watered crop to one that's definitely stressed," he said.

Graduate students working at the station last summer even used infrared equipment to take the temperature of the leaves to determine how much to irrigate, he said.

Besides sampling the finished product, the laboratories at the station are used to analyze the soil for total salts and to determine how much nutrients (ions) the plant receives from the soil.

Moore said that 16 varieties of grapes have been set out, and are just getting started.

The 200 vines include a few wine grapes, but most are table varieties, he said. "We haven't made a crop yet."

Grape-growing experiemtns are designed to look at various root stocks and see how they perform in alkaline soils, he said.

"Some should be a little more efficient, as far as ion uptake," he said. "If they are, that's what we need for this part of the country."

Pistachio trees are also in the planning stage, with the El Paso Research and Extension Center advising on the type of young trees to set out.

Moore said that scientists from the A&M campus and research centers across the state help the local station.

The Lubbock station provides expertise on cotton, grapes and irrigation, he said. Scientists from the campus provide agricultural engineering for irrigation projects and forage.

"That's the only way to meet the needs and challenges in this area," Moore said.

Cotton has been the primary crop in this area since 1950, but rubber plants could become important in the future, Moore believes.

"Guayule is one of the alternate crops we're looking at," he said. "We have a very active program on the site we leased from Firestone at Fort Stockton."

The guayule installation employs seven people, who operate a greenhouse to nurture the seedlings, and fields where they are later set out in rows.

The laboratory technician analyzes the plants for rubber content when they are mature.

One problem that the station is trying to overcome is the need to plant the seed in a greenhouse.

"Transplanting from the greenhouse costs three or four cents, just in the plant, plus labor," he said. "We are close to being able to direct seed the plants."

The accident occurred about 9:35 p.m. at the intersection of Loop 250 and Big Spring Street, according to reports.

Hodges was not admitted to the hospital, Ms. Ristom said.

The driver of the other car, Jeffery Garza, 18, 411 W. Parker Ave., was treated and released at MMH, Ms. Ristom said.

Hodges was driving eastbound on Loop 250 when he ignored the red light at Big Spring and struck the car driven by Garza, according to police reports.

Priest arrested after sit-in protesting troops in Honduras

ARLINGTON (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest and four other people were arrested and carried from an office building after staging a sit-in at a congressman's office to protest U.S. involvement in Central America, authorities say.

The arrests Tuesday were at the office of U.S. Rep. Dick Armey, R-Arlington, Deputy Police Chief Mike Johnston said.

The Rev. Jim Stinnott, 58, and another protester, Benjamin Holland, 44, were jailed on charges of criminal trespassing after they refused to leave the office at the time the building was closed, officers said.

Three other people were arraigned in another room of the building on criminal trespassing charges and were released on personal recognizance bonds, Johnston said.

Johnston said the priest was jailed because he didn't have a local address and could not qualify for a personal recognizance bond, and Holland was jailed because he refused to sign the release form allowing him to be freed on his own recognizance.

"All of us were fairly well agreed to just not cooperate," said Earl Hall-Hohnson, 31, of Denton. "We laid down on the floor and told them they'd have to carry us out."

Dianne McDonald, 50, of Fort Worth said police "used great courtesy to explain our rights, and encouraged us to go back ourtside and do something they considered more wise."

Officers said the incident began after Stinnott, McDonald, Holland and about 12 others stood for a time on an Arlington street holding signs demanding that Contra aid cease.

> "We laid down on the floor and told them they'd have to carry us out."
>
> — Earl Hall-Hohnson

Officers said the group said they then went to Armey's office to speak with him about sending U.S. troops to Honduras. Armey was in Washington at the time.

Greg Davis, a Texas Christian University student and spokesman for the protesters, said he told Armey by telephone that the group planned to stay in his office until they persuaded the congressman to work to remove U.S. troops from Honduras.

Davis said the congressman told him he felt sending troops to Honduras was "very uniform with the position of the majority of the people in my district." He said the congressman called the troop movement "regrettable, but necessary."

The TCU student, who said he worked for eight months in Central America, also said he told Armey the group was concerned about rumors that the U.S. troops would leave weapons behind in Honduras for the contra rebels.

"There's always rumors," Armey said. "I quite frankly they are silly, foolish rumors. That's not the way American Army does business."

Clements, Mexican governor sign pacts

AUSTIN (AP) — Increased economic development, more bridges and pollution controls on the Rio Grande near Laredo all are getting the attention of the governors of Texas and the Mexican state of Tamaulipas.

Gov. Bill Clements and Gov. Americo Villarreal signed agreements Tuesday to expand economic development and urge construction of sewage treatment facilities near Laredo.

During their two days of meetings they also discussed building additional bridges, but reached no final decisions on new spans, Clements said.

"Let there be no doubt that full recovery of the Texas border economy depends in large measure on economic advances within Tamaulipas. And certainly, statewide economic recovery in Texas is related to the economic well being and the economic health along the border," Clements said.

Added Villarreal, "We think it's very, very important action that we are taking together."

The governors' agreements called for:

— Creating a Tamaulipas-Texas commission to seek out economic development opportunities in industry, business and tourism.

— Improving private business ties between the two states.

— Improving transportation between major U.S. and Mexican industrial centers, including an improved highway between Laredo and Corpus Christi.

— Expanding the Texas state office in Mexico City and a Tamaulipas office in Texas.

— Beginning joint drug prevention public service announcements and starting a program to share computerized registration data to assist auto theft prosecution.

One of the two agreements called on both states to identify funding options to build sewage treatment facilities that would reduce pollution problems in the Rio Grande around Laredo and Nuevo Laredo.

"Improvement of the water quality of the Rio Grande is an important factor for the future industrial growth and economic development of the two Laredos," the pact said.

Clements said they also discussed the need for additional bridges between Texas and Mexico.

"We discussed bridges starting at the Brownsville-Matamoros area and coming north through the Los Indios area, onto Laredo, onto Columbia. In principal, we are both for additional bridges. Exactly when and where they will be located remains to be seen," he said.

Clements said a new bridge near Los Indios, south of Harlingen, has been agreed to by the Mexican federal government and he plans to soon notify the U.S. State Department of his approval.

"That should proceed without any further delays," he said, adding that funding is available from public and private sources.

Clements said that Tamaulipas has along its 300-mile U.S. border the most ports of entry and largest number of twin cities between any U.S. and Mexican states.

Hightower criticizes farm policies

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Reagan administration's rural policies are designed to benefit "the princes of Wall Street" at the expense of farmers and small business owners on Main Street, the Texas agriculture commissioner charged Tuesday.

Speaking before a national conference of rural electric leaders, Commissioner Jim Hightower said Reagan policies are "devoted to devaluing the land and labor of rural America in order to promote centralized corporate agribusiness and conglomerate food processing and distribution."

Such policies have resulted in the loss of 625,000 family farms in the past seven years "in addition to massive layoffs in the mining, manufacturing and timber industries — all vital to the rural economy," Hightower said.

"We've had all the Reaganomics that we can stand," Hightower said. "Reagan-mortis is setting in."

The outspoken Hightower, who has chaired the national Democratic Party's Agriculture Council, spoke in Orlando to the annual directors' conference of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

Meeting with reporters later, Hightower defended his state's embargo of Florida fresh citrus shipments after the U.S. Department of Agriculture lifted a 3-year-old shipping ban. The ban had been imposed as a result of an outbreak of bacterial canker in Florida citrus nurseries.

But a federal judge lifted the 30-day Texas quarantine earlier this month, ruling the federal decision took precedence.

"We are not totally convinced that we would not get canker in our orange groves if this thing came in to Texas," Hightower said. "We think that the USDA has acted precipitously here."

Psychologist asks for tests for blacks

CHICAGO (AP) — Black people should be given psychological and aptitude tests designed specifically for them because current examinations are culturally biased toward Americans of European lineage, a black psychologist says.

"It is time we begin to show sensitivity to black American culture and stop trying to make black Americans conform to 'Anglo' test material and test biases," said Robert L. Williams, a professor of psychology and black studies at Washington University in St. Louis.

Williams spoke Saturday to about 150 health-care workers at a conference that examined the importance of their clients' ethnic and racial backgrounds.

Participants included Herbert Wong, of the National Asian-American Psycho-therapy Training Center in San Francisco and Stanley Sue, professor at the University of California at Los Angeles, who spoke from the Asian-American perspective; Terese LaFromboise, an assistant professor at Stanford University, who spoke about American Indians; and Dr. Vincente Abad of the Illinois State Psychiatric Institute and professor at the University of Chicago, who spoke about Hispanics.

"Black lifestyles should be examined and understood in terms of their historical, cultural and social realities and not in terms of a comparison with the experiences of other groups, for example Euro-Americans," Williams said.

Tests should be tailored for specific cultures because people of various ethnic backgrounds may perform badly on tests designed for and by Euro-Americans, Williams said.

The inaccurate personality labeling that can result "may have profoundly negative effects on intellectual and personality development," he said.

Williams said when he was in grade school he was told by a white counselor that he had only borderline intelligence and should take manual training programs in high school. Williams went on to college and earned a doctorate from Washington University.

He has developed a standardized test for blacks called Themes Concerning Blacks.

The test — now coming into use by schools, corporations and psychologists throughout the country — consists of 20 charcoal drawings depicting various aspects of black culture and lifestyles in rural and urban areas, he said.

The conference, which ended Saturday, was sponsored by the Chicago School of Professional Psychology, which was founded in 1978. The school offers a graduate program in clinical psychology.

Orphan trains transported over 150,000

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — More than 150,000 orphaned, abandoned and homeless children were taken out of institutions in New York City and transported by trains to rural America between 1854 and 1929.

Sarah Laake of Galveston was one of those children.

"There were 100 of us on the train that brought us to Texas," said Mrs. Laake, who now lives in Galveston with her husband, Ralph, a retired postal employee.

"I still have my T-shirt and what's left of my number," she said, as she carefully unwrapped a baby T-shirt turned yellow with age and the crumbled remains of a large black No. 14 which had been pinned to that shirt.

"I was No. 14, and the boy, Joseph R. Vargas, was No. 13," she explained, pointing to a photo of a beautiful dark-haired girl and a taller blond boy. She and Joseph were both adopted by John and Anna Zanek of Industry, Texas.

"Mother wanted a girl and Daddy wanted a boy," Mrs. Laake said. "Daddy had a garage and a blacksmith shop. Mother was a seamstress. She was always sewing."

This particular adoption, probably handled by the United States Catholic Charities, unlike many orphan train adoptions, was prearranged. When the children arrived at Industry they were met by Mr. and Mrs. Zanek, who had the matching numbers.

"I must have been tired from being all cramped up on the train because my mother told me later how awful she felt for having to spank me for running away from her there at the train station."

Born to a Jewish mother, Sarah Golstein Eckler's birthdate, according to records from the Foundling Hospital in New York, was estimated to be July 10, 1907. She was born at the 17th Street Hospital in New York. She was 2½ years old when she arrived at Industry in 1910. Much later she tried getting a copy of her birth certificate but never succeeded.

The Zaneks were Catholics, but even if they were not Catholic, part of the adoption agreement was to raise the children Catholic.

"I was a Jewish-Catholic and my new brother Joseph, one month younger than I and a head taller, was Hungarian," Mrs. Laake explained.

She said that for at least a year after the adoption a priest from the Catholic Charities, which ran the Foundling Hospital in New York, visited regularly to see how the children were getting on with their new parents.

"Of course we didn't know at the time why he came," Mrs. Laake said. "We just thought he was a nice priest.

"I always tell people who adopt children to tell them from the beginning, even if they don't understand a word of it. I must have been about 7 years old when one of the girls at school told me that my brother and I were adopted. By then my mother had two more children of her own. I got my brother and we ran home," said Mrs. Laake.

The Zaneks lived about a quarter of a mile down the road from the school.

"Mother took us into the parlor and sat us down and told us all about it," she said. "It was a real shock to us, but she explained how they had chosen us and we were special. After that I never really questioned who I was or anything about my past.

"Every time Mother did something or made clothes for the other children she did the same for us and we knew we were loved."

After Sarah grew up she went to nurse's training school in Brenham and Houston, and later worked in the post office during the war. She and her husband were married in Brenham and moved to Galveston in 1931.

Mrs. Laake recalls attending several reunions in Rosenberg of the orphan train riders about 20 years ago.

"There were quite a few of us and of course they were all around my age," she said. "Several of them turned out to be nuns."

An effort is being made to account for and document information on the many homeless children to Texas, prior to the time when federal child welfare reform laws were enacted in 1929 and the Orphan Trains stopped running.

BEE SMART

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1988 Regional Spelling Bee March 26 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 25. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

lat'kə

latke — (noun) Have you ever eaten a "latke"? During Hanukkah, an eight-day Jewish holiday celebrated in December, many people make "latkes." "Latkes" are griddle cakes made from grated raw potato. "Latke" is a Yiddish word derived from the Russian word "latka," meaning a pastry, which is likely based on the earlier Old Russian word (used in the 12th to 13th centuries) "oladiya," meaning flat cake of leavened wheat dough.

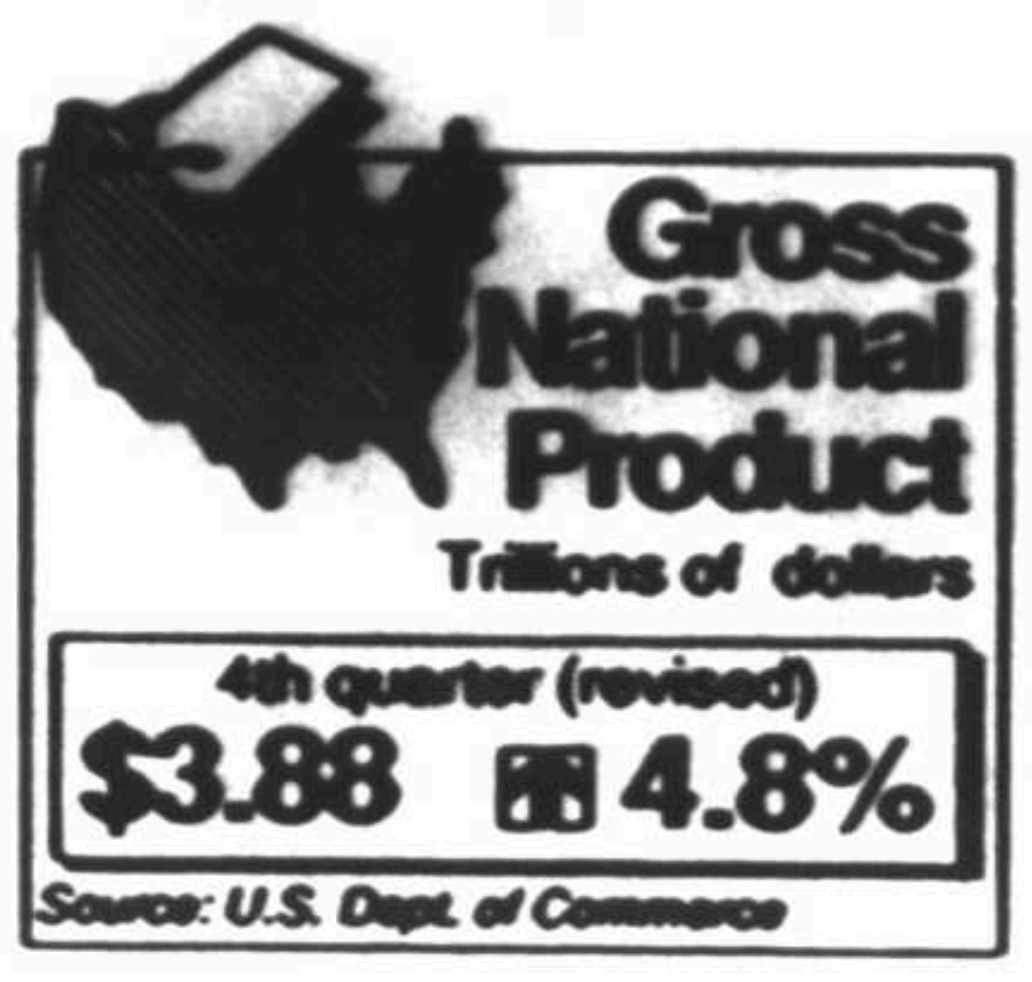
Inflation tame; GNP booming



WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, restrained by lower food and energy costs, rose a modest 0.2 percent in February, the government said today in a report that shows inflation remains tame.

Food prices fell 0.3 percent after rising 0.3 percent in January. Energy costs, which had fallen 0.7 percent in the preceding month, fell 0.6 percent last month.

In a separate report, the government reported today that the economy expanded at a 4.8 percent annual rate in the final three months of last year, even faster than previously thought, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, grew from October to December at the fastest pace in almost two years.

So far this year, consumer prices have been increasing at a rate of 3.2 percent. That compares to the moderate 4.4 percent rate for all of 1987 and the scant 1.1 percent 1986 increase.

Some economists suggested that last month's moderate food and energy cost hikes may be masking hefty increases for other goods and services.

Subtracting these two volatile categories, however, the index for all other goods and services also advanced 0.2 percent in February after a 0.5 percent increase in January, when prices overall rose 0.3 percent.

A restrained Consumer Price Index had been expected since the Labor Department reported that the companion Producer Price Index, also restrained by moderating energy and food prices, had dipped 0.2 percent in February.

The Commerce Department's report was the second upward revision in GNP growth. A month ago the government put GNP growth at 4.5 percent, up from a 4.2 percent original estimate made in January immediately after the quarter ended.

Today's revisions showed more strength than previously believed in such key sectors as consumer spending, business investment and U.S. exports.

Local living costs higher

From Staff Reports

Reversing a January trend, the cost of living in Midland rose 0.2 percent in February, according to statistics compiled by ClayDesta National Bank.

Decreases in costs for food at home and transportion were offset by increases in food away from home, clothing, housing, utilties and health care. During the past year, Midland's cost of living has fallen 2.6 percent.

After remaining stable in January, food at home costs fell 1.2 percent as increases in the price of alcoholic beverages were offset by decreases in produce and meat.

Also falling 1.2 percent in February were transportation costs, the seventh consecutive decline. Lower gasoline prices compensated for higher insurance rates and auto maintenance costs.

The cost of eating out showed the highest increase in February, rising 2.2 percent. Higher prices for dishes prepared with ham or chicken fed the increase.

Clothing costs reversed a January decline, rising 1.9 percent. Lower prices tags for men's wear were offset by a second month of higher price tags on women's apparel, and higher prices for children's wear.

Generally higher rents, which had fallen in January, helped push housing costs up 1.4 percent in February.

Utility costs rose for the third consecutive month, showing a 0.6 percent rise in February. A second month of higher gas bills — up 2.5 percent in February — offset a second month of lower electric bills, which fell 0.3 percent last month. Water rates remained stable for the fourth month.

NATURAL GAS

Oxen still to be gored in NGPA's second decade

Warner

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

After a "bloody decade" under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, more messy battles may lay ahead for the gas industry, according to one regulatory expert.

Deputy general counsel for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Christopher Warner shared five trends he expects to continue in the natural gas business with members of the Permian Basin section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers Tuesday evening.

Warner's predictions came with two caveats: as the trends develop, transition costs will always be extracted from some parties within the industry; and FERC's jurisdiction over the entire industry has been limited with cost decontrol measures in the past decade.

In discussing transition costs, Warner noted that as each issue is gradually resolved there will be winners and losers, and that whether or not each resolution is "good" or "bad" will depend "on where you stand — on whose

Comptroller closes eateries over sales tax

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A dispute between the State Comptroller of Public Accounts and the owner of two Midland restaurants has resulted in the company's bankruptcy.

Diversified Restaurant Management Group (DRMG) of Austin, which owns the Mr. Gatti's and J.C Garcia's in Midland filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S Bankruptcy Code late last week after the state Comptroller closed the company's restaurants for non-payment of sales taxes.

"We closed the restaurants because they had not paid their sales tax," stated Merrell Foote, spokesperson for the state Comptroller. "They had collected the sales tax but hadn't reported it to us."

Said Cliff Moffett, president and a partner in DRMG "We had an agreement with the Comptroller's office, but they went ahead and shut us down because they were afraid we would go into bankruptcy. By closing our restaurants, they forced us into bankruptcy."

According to Moffett, his company's tax problems were old problems stemming for a prior partnership. The manager of the Mr. Gatti's in Midland, B.J Elliott, said his store had been closed for three days, but that all is back to normal.

Moffett said that DRMG has reopened the Mr Gatti's locations, and will be concentrating on them, planning to establish a universal delivery number for home delivery in the Midland-Odessa area. He added that the J.C. Garcia's restaurant in the Courtyard at Midland Park will remained closed for the time being. "We'll do some remodeling on the restaurant, and then see about reopening it," he said.

Foote said the company had owed $256,411.09 in sales tax collections since the second quarter of 1987. Of that, $105,906.78 was owed by seven Mr. Gatti's restaurants; $44,495.02 by two J.C. Garcia's; and $106,009.29 by two Pass The Biscuit restaurants, all owned by DRMG.

"The company and the Comptrollers agreement has made arrangements for payment," she said. "However, since DRMG is in bankruptcy, a judge will have to give final approval on arrangement. We are a secured creditor, and we will receive some compensation."

Pipeline open-access status may not impact Basin gas

From Staff and Wire Reports

HOUSTON — Transwestern Pipeline Company, a subsidiary of Enron Corp., announced Tuesday that it will accept the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's (FERC) order authorizing Transwestern's request to open its system for transportation of natural gas to all shippers pursuant to FERC Orders 436 and 500. The FERC issued the Transwestern order on March 1, 1988.

Transwestern is a 4,439-mile natural gas transmission system extending from West Texas and Southern Oklahoma to the California border. The company primarily supplies gas to the California market.

The design capacity of Transwestern's line is 750 MMcfgd, and although the line has historically been full, Transwestern says that doesn't mean there are not competitive advantages to be able to offer competitive services at both ends of the pipe.

Diane Bazelides, a spokesman for Transwestern, said there are changes in throughput from time to time and being an open-access carrier will allow the pipeline to bring more gas on-line in a market-sensitive manner.

Because of historically high throughput "I don't think there will be any additional downward pressure on prices because there will not be any significant increase in total sales volume on the west-bound line," said Bazelides.

Volume figures for gas movement out of the Permian Basin were not readily available, she said, but Transwestern has both direct and indirect access to the basin and all other major gas producing provinces.

"Acceptance of open-access status for Transwestern culminates a lengthy regulatory process that began in conjunction with Transwestern's 1985 rate case," said Peter J. Wilt, vice president of rates and regulatory affairs for Enron's interstate pipelines.

"Although Transwestern's system has been open to shippers under Section 311 of the NGPA on an available-capacity basis since February 1986 — when Transwestern became the first interstate pipeline to operate under an interim open-access transportation program — the March 1988 order expands the authority granted by the FERC to allow greater transport flexibility."

Specific terms and conditions of the open-access transportation program were agreed to by Transwestern, Transwestern's customers, the FERC and other interested parties in a January 1986 settlement agreement of Transwestern's 1985 rate case.

Mauro, AGA Sierra Club join forces

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro has persuaded the Sierra Club to join the American Gas Association in promoting natural gas "as a clean, abundant and cost-efficient fuel for America's future."

Acknowledging that environmentalists and energy producers are "strange bedfellows," Mauro said at a press conference here Tuesday that he was the matchmaker who brought the groups together.

Several clean air bills are pending in Congress, and Mauro said the new alliance wants to be sure that natural gas is emphasized as part of the energy mix needed to control air pollution.

The new allies will conduct a symposium here titled "Natural Gas and Clean Air: An Alliance for America's Future," on April 19. Mauro's Texas General Land Office will host the gathering.

Symposium speakers are expected to underscore the environmental benefits of natural gas and its potential for helping energy states out of their economic doldrums.

Realtors may boost retirement effort

In an effort to spur sales, MANOR PARK retirement community, 2208 N. Loop 250 West, is offering Midland Realtors an incentive to sell the community.

Susan Thompson, public relations and resident services coordinator at Manor Park, explained that if a Realtor's client signs a lease agreement and pays the entrance fee, that Realtor gets a 2 percent referral fee.

Thompson noted that this will not only boost sales in Manor Park, but help the community. "This goes hand-in-hand with the MOHRE program," she stated, referring the Midland-Odessa Health and Retirement Endeavor. "I think if little programs like this are successful, we should reach our goal of getting more retirees to move here and expand the economy."

The program — which will be operated on a trial basis for a year — involves all members of the Midland Board of Realtors, of which Manor Park is an associate member. "There are 420 members in the board, so that involves a lot of Realtors," Thompson pointed out.

The program recently paid its first referral fee to Anita Noles of Don Harvey Realtors for bringing in a couple from South Carolina.

OPEC remarks send oil tumbling

From Staff Reports

Contracts for April delivery of West Texas Intermediate continued to decline on their last day, falling 40 cents to close at $16.09 a barrel. The contracts, which had passed $17 briefly Monday, fell as low as $15.98 before its final posting.

At midmorning today, contracts for May delivery of the crude stood at $16.38, up 1 cent from Tuesday's close.

Prices on spot and future markets fell early Tuesday in reaction to Monday's official statement by Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, confirming the kingdom had been selling oil at discount prices, according to the Wall Street Journal.

Prices fell even more when Rilwanu Lukman of Nigeria, president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, postponed indefinitely a much-anticipated news conference.

The scheduled Lukman news conference, which had become almost an obsession for many traders, was expected to deal with OPEC output and discounting issues in a price-supporting way.

After the market closed, API reported a drop of 4 percent, or four million barrels, in heating-oil stocks, to almost 98.4 million barrels. That level is 10 million barrels less than the amount on hand last year at this time.

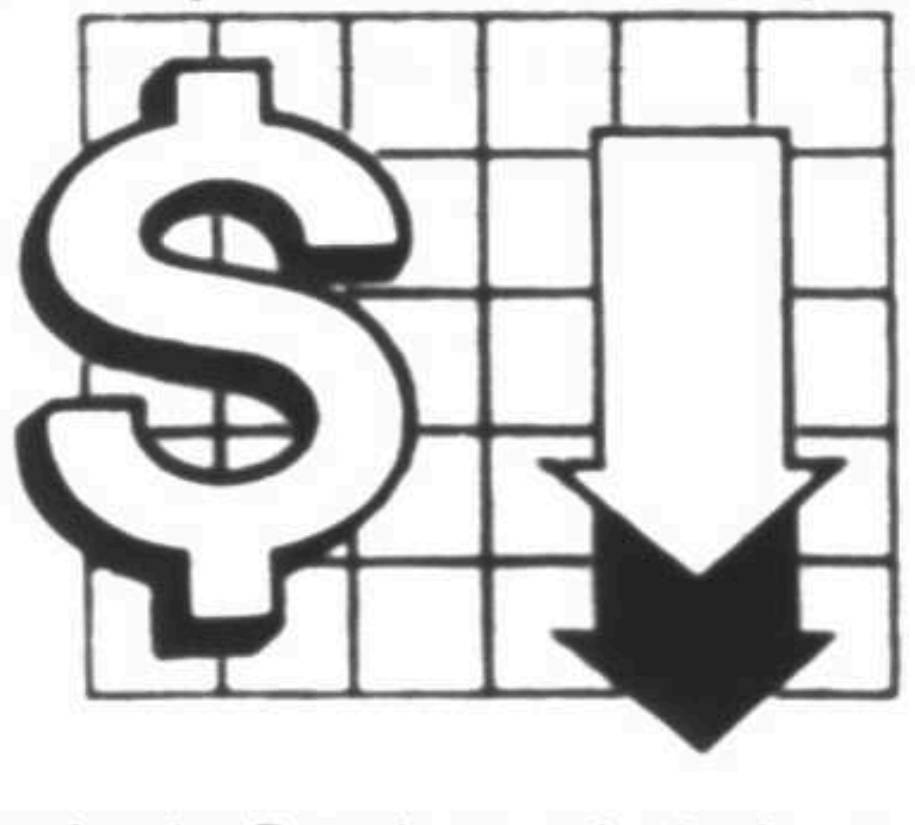
Dollar falls in early trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against most major currencies in quiet early trading in Europe today. Gold prices rose.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 127.15 yen, up 0.08 yen from Tuesday's close. But later, in London, the dollar was quoted lower at 126.92 yen.



Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Tuesday:

— 1.6928 West German marks, down from 1.6935

— 1.3940 Swiss francs, down from 1.4015

— 5.7540 French francs, unchanged

— 1.9003 Dutch guilders, down from 1.9015

— 1,252.90 Italian lire, down from 1,253.25

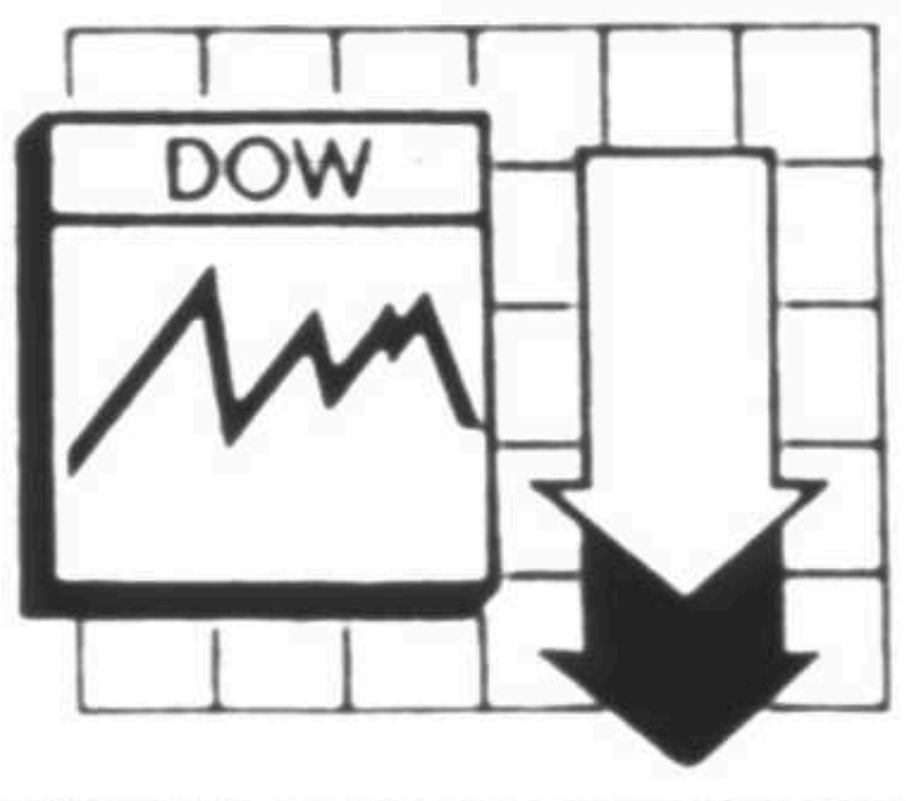
— 1.2455 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2468.

In London, the dollar also fell against the the British pound which was quoted at $1.8357, more expensive than $1.8300 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $449.60 a troy ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $448.75. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $450.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.48 a troy ounce, up from late Tuesday's $6.46.

Stocks end day down marginally



NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market languished Tuesday and finished narrowly mixed, reflecting what brokers called widespread investor apathy despite another rash of takeover-related buying that boosted some issues.

Economic uncertainty and resilient anxiety about the market's condition five months after the October crash generally were blamed for another slow trading day.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which fell 20.23 points Monday in the slowest trading of the year, vacillated in a tight range and ended down 0.99 point to 2,066.15. Most broader market indicators rose marginally.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange totaled 142.0 million shares, slightly more than the 1987 low of 128.83 million shares traded Monday.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

First RepublicBank breakup considered

DALLAS (AP) — Ailing First RepublicBank Corp. may have to divest itself of some of its banks to become more attractive to investors, experts say.

First RepublicBank, weakened by a run on deposits and multimillion-dollar losses, received a $1 billion injection of capital last week from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

But because it could take as much as $5 billion to rescue the nation's 13th-largest bank holding company, banking regulators are considering breaking up the holding company as a marketing alternative.

"The first thing you think of is splitting the company into bite-size morsels," said James Sexton, a former director of supervision at the FDIC who is a consultant at Bracewell & Patterson, an Austin, Texas law firm.

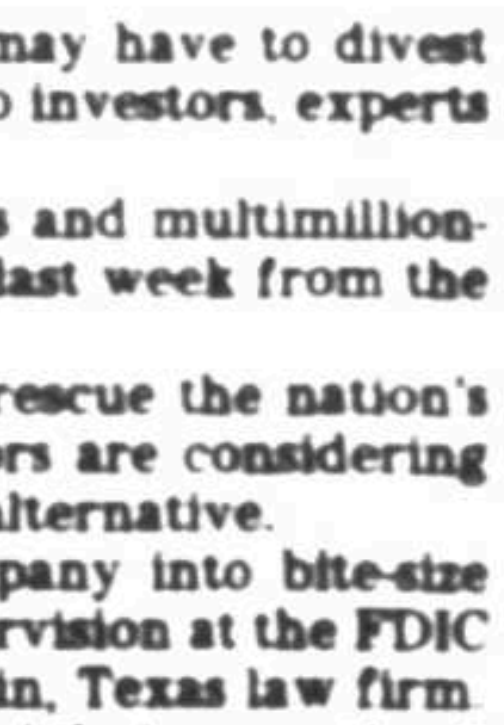
FDIC Chairman L. William Seidman said, "that certainly is an option."

The bank holding company, however, is in the process of consolidating some of its banks, which could make a breakup more difficult. Those moves already have cut the number of banks from 103 to 73, and plans are to continue mergings until only 40 remain.

Although the breakup of the holding company could make it more accessible to investors, some argue it would be better if the company remained intact.

"These banks are intertwined, having common management, borrowers and computer systems," Sexton said. "Breaking off chunks presents some tough administrative problems."

Texaco bankruptcy begins final phase



DeCrane

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Final arguments have begun over a plan to end the biggest U.S. corporate bankruptcy case ever, following the decision by dissident Texaco Inc. shareholders to drop their opposition to the company's proposal for emerging from Chapter 11 protection from creditors.

U.S. Bankruptcy Court Judge Howard Schwartzberg opened hearings Tuesday on whether to implement the proposal and began hearing final arguments before adjourning proceedings until today.

Texaco informed the court Tuesday that 96 percent of the shares voting — 174 million out of 181 million — approved the plan, far in excess of the two-thirds majority required by law.

There are lingering objections to certain provisions of the plan by some shareholders — notably takeover strategist Carl C. Icahn, Texaco's biggest shareholder — but Schwartzberg widely is expected to confirm the plan.

Some of the dissident shareholders had objected to provisions in the agreement that would free officers and advisers of Texaco, Pennzoil Co., the former Getty Oil Co., the Sarah Getty Trust and the J. Paul Getty Museum from all liability arising out of the court fight resulting from the Texaco-Pennzoil battle.

Shortly before the hearing began, Harvey Miller, the bankruptcy lawyer representing Texaco, announced that attorneys for those shareholders had dropped their opposition to the reorganization plan.

If Schwartzberg confirms the plan, Texaco could emerge from bankruptcy protection by mid-April, a year after it sought protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code.

MEET

Among the speakers scheduled are: Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine; Michael McCloskey, chairman of the Sierra Club; Dr. William Fisher, director of the Bureau of Economic Geology at the University of Texas, and several federal and congressional officials.

Said Mauro: "Are these unlikely allies? Of course. For years they have been at each others' throats. But pragmatic common interests now give us a chance to build a new political coalition."

Mauro, who has publicly declared his ambitions for higher office, has not yet announced his plans for 1990.

In 1987, Mauro spent time in Washington working for ratification of an international treaty to help end the dumping of garbage from ships in the Gulf of Mexico. The successful effort brought Mauro into contact with environmental leaders.

Since then, environmentalists have asked for Mauro's help in reaching the energy industry on issues of mutual interest, according to the Land Commissioner.

Noting recent nationwide polls showing that 60 percent to 75 percent of Americans consider themselves "environmentalists," Mauro said that cleaner air increasingly is being viewed as a nationwide concern.

He said natural gas will not solve all of the nation's energy or air pollution problems, but he insisted it can play an important role: "Natural gas is plentiful, cheap, and it is one of the cleanest fuels around."

President Reagan recently promised the Canadian government that the United States will spend $11 billion to clean up acid rain. "It just makes good sense to invest in a fuel like natural gas" that does not need "exotic pollution controls," Mauro said.

In recent years, many industries have shutdown clean gas-fired boilers in favor of less expensive coal-fired and oil-fired boilers. Often, however, the fuel switch has required investments in expensive emission-control technologies.

Natural gas use has been slipping in recent years. In 1973, the U.S. consumed 22 trillion cubic feet of gas. By 1987, consumption had dropped to 17.4 Tcf.

"If we continue to treat natural gas as a specialty fuel, as has been our national policy since the mid-'70s, then the natural gas market will drop to 12-13 Tcf," Mauro said. "But if we only used the same amount of natural gas that we used in 1981, imported oil could be reduced by two million barrels a day."

Mauro manages more than 22.5 million acres of public lands in Texas. He oversees the 16,000 producing gas and oil wells on state lands.

Each new gas well creates 192 jobs, Mauro said. Each one trillion cubic feet increase in natural gas demand creates 64,000 jobs in energy production and related services, he said.

ox is being gored."

With those warnings in mind, Warner told the group of the five trends he foresees in the post-NGPA second decade:

1. With FERC Order 451, which raised the ceiling price for "old" pre-1978 gas above spot market, natural gas as a commodity is — and will continue be — deregulated at the wellhead.
2. Despite reluctance on the part of many interstate pipelines to open their systems on a permanent basis by accepting blanket certificates, open access to third-party transportation will grow as the market becomes more evenly divided between pipeline sales and other aggregators of gas supplies.
3. Charges by pipelines to producers and local distribution companies will be unbundled — rather than paying for the "full menu" of gathering, compression, transportation and other services, pipelines will offer "a la carte" services across a broad range of functions. Also encouraged by FERC will be examination of a "gas inventory charge," an openly negotiated pass-through cost of having firm supply under contract — whether or not the gas is ever used by an LDC's consumers — not unlike take-or-pay.
4. Take-or-pay obligations will continue to overshadow gas contracts and clog up the market presenting one of the most important transitions toward competition for the industry to work through, he said. "No magic wand can make it (take-or-pay) go away, it is a leftover from the half-slave, half-free wellhead conditions created by the NGPA."
5. The marketplace will move toward pricing pipeline capacity as a means of preventing bottlenecks in the system under a concept FERC Chairman Martha Hesse calls capacity brokering. LDCs could be allowed to broker away its contractual right to unused transportation capacity in order to open different new gas markets on a basis between the currently available monthly interruptible service and 10-year contract firm sales.

All of these trends point toward solving the the central key to revitalization of gas drilling — allocating the risk of drilling and developing gas reserves between producers, pipelines and their customers, Warner said.

On the subject Canadian natural gas imports, Warner responded to a SPE member's question by saying that the commission's attitude does not discriminate between imported and domestic gas, so long as the two are treated equally in building a rate design.

Wilt noted that pursuant to that agreement, Transwestern filed a request for a blanket certificate to allow Transwestern to perform transportation services on a non-discriminatory basis. The March 1988 order granted Transwestern's request and, accordingly, Transwestern is accepting and processing transportation requests from all eligible transporters on a non-discriminatory, first-come, first-served basis, subject only to available capacity and specific operating conditions.

"Transwestern's acceptance to become an open-access transporter benefits gas consumers by providing an increased competitive environment for supplies," said Wilt. "It also emphasizes Transwestern's and Enron's continued commitment to providing consumers with the most efficient and reliable gas service in the industry."

Producers, regulators, buyers agree gas industry changing

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — The natural gas industry is changing fast as state and federal regulators try move toward a competitive industry and away from a regulated one, speakers at a natural gas conference said.

The state-sponsored Natural Gas Marketing Conference brought natural gas producers and buyers together Tuesday to discuss the industry. The 1988 Legislature appropriated $300,000 to find ways in which New Mexico producers can sell more gas.

Charles Trabandt, a Federal Energy Regulatory commissioner, said the commission has made continual but modest progress in bringing competitive forces to bear on the market.

ECONOMY

Economists said the GNP report was one more indication that the country will enjoy continued economic growth this presidential election year without a recession.

This is a far more positive outlook than many analysts had immediately following the record Oct. 19 collapse of the stock market. At that time, there were fears that worried consumers would topple the country into a new recession.

The Labor Department gave these other specifics on February retail price activity:

—Grocery store prices fell 0.6 percent after a 0.2 percent rise in the previous month; restaurant meals were up 0.3 percent, the same as in January.

Pacing the drop in food prices was a 4.0 percent fall in the costs of fruits and vegetables, more than offsetting 0.4 percent rise for meats, poultry and fish.

—Gasoline prices fell 1.7 percent, down for the third month in a row. Gasoline prices had fallen 1.7 percent in December and 1.6 percent in January.

—Heating oil prices were up 0.6 percent while the cost of natural gas and electricity rose 0.5 percent.

—New automobile prices rose 0.3 percent.

—Clothing prices fell 0.3 percent.

—Alcoholic beverage prices rose 0.9 percent.

Last month's 0.2 percent gain was equivalent to an annual inflation rate of 2.1 percent.

The February increase left the overall index at 116.0, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 during a 1982-84 base period would have cost $116.00 last month.

Unlike other figures in the report, the overall index is not adjusted for seasonal fluctuations.

The Labor Department recently changed its base period. Had the former computation been used, the February consumer price index would have been 347.4 compared to a 1967 base of 100.

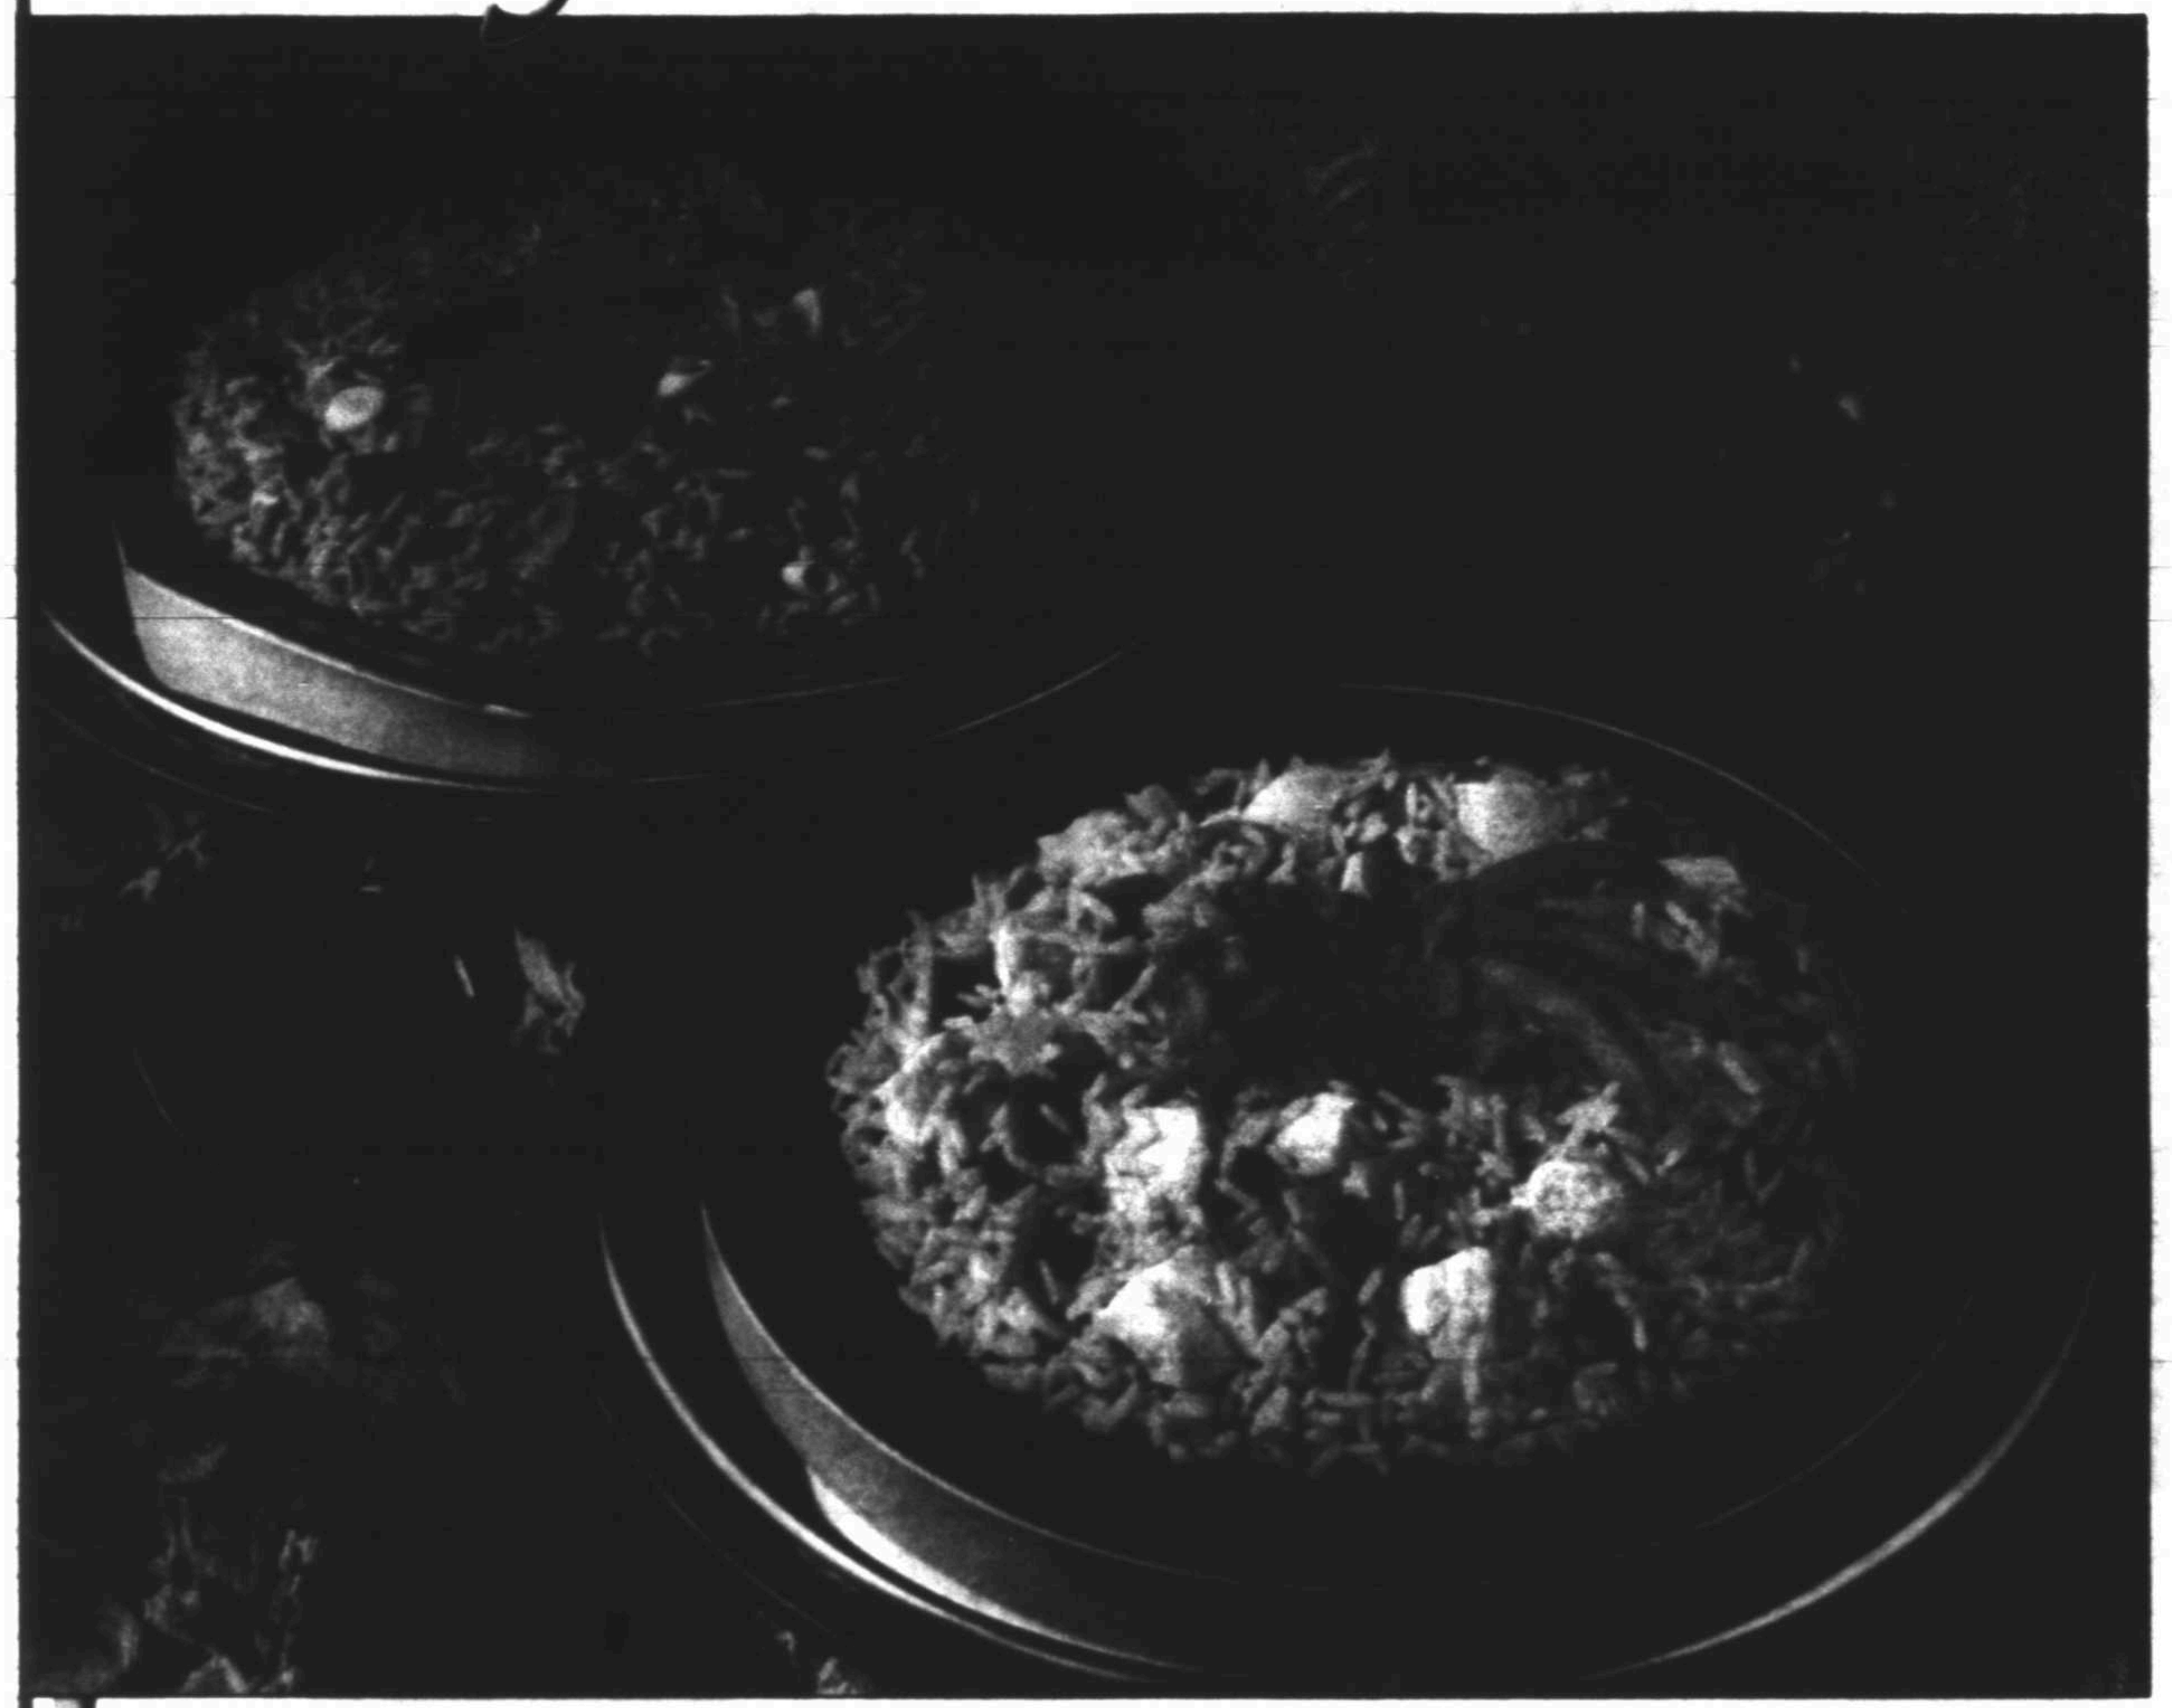
Pilafs Create Menu Excitement



Experience the versatility of pilafs from around the world with a classic Chicken Pilau and flavorful Oriental Pilaf. Rice and clear ready to serve chicken and beef broths make these and other easy pilaf recipes the menu choice for exciting meals.

Pilaf, created centuries ago in the Middle East, is a classic rice dish prized as a versatile and exciting accompaniment for today's menus.

Called pilaf, pilau and pulao in various parts of the world, they all share the same easy preparation. Rice is sautéed until golden and simmered in broth and seasonings for rich, savory flavor. Before the end of the cooking time, diced vegetables, fruit or nuts are added. Meat, fish or poultry can enhance flavor in a side dish or transform the pilaf into an enticing main dish when substantial portions of meat are used. Endless variety is achieved through use of creative combinations of seasonings and other ingredients.

There are two secrets to making a really good pilaf. The first is to use the best long grain rice available. The rice grains should be separate and plump after cooking, firm and not mushy, even after the sautéeing called for in the recipe. That's why chefs use Rice with its unique fluffy, separate-grained texture because it really makes a difference in the final dish.

The second secret is in the broth, which lends its rich, full flavor to the rice. Swanson clear ready to serve chicken and beef broths combine convenience with high quality and full flavor. In Jenifer Harvey Lang's book, Tastings: The Best from Ketchup to Caviar, Swanson was rated the number one chicken broth available.

It's fun to experiment with pilafs. For a great, quick and easy main dish, try Chicken Pilau, a classic Southern favorite. Indian Spiced Pilaf, Oriental Pilaf and Italian Style Pilaf showcase the versatility of this great dish as a menu accompaniment.

Oriental Pilaf

1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 cup CONVERTED® Brand Rice
1 can (14-1/2 ounces) Swanson clear ready to serve beef broth
3/4 cup water
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1-1/2 teaspoons grated fresh ginger or 1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
1 cup fresh or thawed frozen pea pods, cut in half diagonally (about 4 ounces)
1/2 cup diced red bell pepper
2 tablespoons diagonally sliced green onions
1 teaspoon Oriental sesame oil, optional

Cook garlic in butter in medium saucepan over medium-low heat about 2 minutes. Add rice and cook, stirring constantly, 2 to 3 minutes. Add broth, water, soy sauce and ginger. Bring to a boil; reduce heat. Cover tightly and simmer 20 minutes. Stir in pea pods and red pepper. Remove from heat. Let stand covered until all liquid is absorbed, about 5 minutes. Stir in green onions and sesame oil. Makes 5 cups or 6 servings.

Makes 4-1/2 cups or 6 servings.

Chicken Pilau

3/4 pound boneless, skinless chicken breasts, cut into 1-inch pieces
1/2 teaspoon salt, optional
1/8 teaspoon mace, optional
3 slices thick sliced bacon, diced
1/2 cup chopped onion
1 large clove garlic, minced
1 cup CONVERTED® Brand Rice
1 can (14-1/2 ounces) clear ready to serve chicken broth
1 can (about 8-1/4 ounces) tomatoes, undrained, coarsely chopped
1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper
1/2 cup chopped green pepper

Toss chicken with salt and mace, if desired; set side. Sauté bacon in 10-inch skillet until crisp. Remove and reserve bacon. Pour off all but 2 tablespoons drippings. Reduce heat to medium-low. Cook onion and garlic in drippings until tender. Add rice and cook, stirring constantly, 2 to 3 minutes. Add broth, tomatoes, tomato liquid, cayenne pepper and chicken. Bring to a boil; reduce heat. Cover tightly and simmer 18 minutes. Stir in green pepper and continue to simmer 2 minutes. Remove from heat. Let stand covered until all liquid is absorbed, about 5 minutes. Producers call pork 'white meat'

Copley News Service

Since when has pork been a "white meat," like poultry?

Since the National Pork Producers Council decided so, that's when.

Because high cholesterol pork is being kicked around the health-conscious school yard, pork producers have started "The Other White Meat" campaign. The $7 million effort was dreamed up by the New York public relations agency Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt.

Vice President Mark Williams says consumer research shows that 40 percent of Americans believe that pork is a white meat.

Council spokesman Russell Sanders says hog fat had been halved over 20 years, which gives pork the same cholesterol content as chicken.

The council has devised Pork Cacciatore and Pork Tetrazzini recipes. And it's sponsoring national pork bake-offs called "The Taste of Elegance."

Cindi's Seafood Tips

A few weeks ago, I briefly mentioned the wok as an excellent way to prepare shellfish. If you haven't used a wok before, there are two types – those you use on your range and free-standing electric woks. I prefer the one that is used on the gas range because I have more control over the temperature. Always "cure" the wok according to the directions, even the type with the non-stick surface. A range wok without a non-stick surface will rust before you know what's happening if it's not cured.

Always get all your ingredients ready to go ahead of time. The cooking time is pretty short, keeping the food moving almost constantly, and there just isn't time to chop ingredients once the cooking starts. Remember that it takes more time to stir fry some vegetables than others, so it is important to think about the order in which you plan to add ingredients. Once you have used your wok a while, you'll want to make up your own recipes. Be creative!

Cindi's Stir-Fry Shrimp

This is a basic oriental recipe with a cajun touch added for extra flavor. Prepare about a pound of fresh, medium size shrimp by peeling and deveining. Sprinkle with Tony Chachares Creole Seasoning to taste and set aside. Cut 5 green onions into 2-inch long strips. Mince one clove garlic and a small piece of fresh ginger, about the size of a quarter. Have about ¼ pound of fresh snow peas ready, or any of your favorite vegetables. Mix 1 tablespoon cornstarch in ¼ cup water.

Now the fun starts! Heat the wok to a medium-high temperature and add 2 tablespoons peanut oil. Put in all vegetables and keep them moving for about 1 minute. Add the onion, garlic and ginger. Stir-fry for about thirty seconds, and then add the shrimp. The shrimp are cooked when they wind up into a tight curl. Add the water and cornstarch mixture and stir until thickened. The whole process takes about 3-4 minutes. Serve over rice.

If you have any questions about fish or seafood, or a recipe you'd like to share, please write to Cindi's Seafood Tips, 2800 N. Big Spring, Midland, TX 79701.

WHAT'S COOKING

Cook knows cookbook by heart

Shirley Williams

Shirley Williams has only lived in Midland about two years — this time. Due to her husband Jim's job with Grant-Norpack, the Williams have been transfered several times, but they always seem to come back to Midland.

"Midland is really home," Mrs. Williams said. "The people are more friendly here."

The Williams originally moved from Oklahoma City to Midland in 1966, and their lastest return to the Tall City was from Denver.

About 10 years ago, Mrs. Williams earned her real estate license, but upon moving to Denver, she had to go back to school in order to qualify for her license in that state.

"You have to be licensed in the state you are selling in," Mrs. Williams said.

Currently, she is an agent with Century 21 and also is chairman of the Mutipal Listings Service and a member of Women's Council of Realtors. Last year, Mrs. Williams was secretary of WCR and was co-chairman, along with Kathleen McKenzie Owen, of the group's fund-raiser — publishing a cookbook.

"I don't even need to buy one. I know it by heart," Mrs. Williams said — she typed all of the book.

The book is a collection of easy recipes, according Mrs. Williams, who still has several copies of the book for sale.

"The cookbooks make great gifts," Mrs. Williams said, adding that anyone interested in purchasing a book can call her at Century 21 or Kay Sutton at Don Harvey.

Mrs. Williams said she tries not to cook much any more. But when her children — Grant, Sharon and Scott — were living at home, she described herself as a "Southern cook."

"Everything was fried. We had steak, potatoes, gravy ... soul foods," Mrs. Williams said.

Now, she and her husband opt for a lighter dinner of usually soup and salad because they both eat out at lunch.

Some of Mrs. Williams' favorite pound cake recipes along with a recipe for the Seven Layer Salad follow.

SEVEN LAYER SALAD

1 head lettuce
1 cup celery, sliced
1 red onion, in rings

DEAR ABBY

Shady schemers captilize on public fear of AIDS

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just received an advertisement in the mail that infuriated me. It read, in part:

"The national health crisis we're in is real and extreme ... Horrible as all the stories are about AIDS, herpes, influenza (and the list goes on and on), the whole story hasn't yet been told! A frightening report issued to the U.S. Surgeon General says that 1,300 doctors and health professionals from around the world call AIDS 'the biological equivalent of the nuclear bomb,' which is all that is needed to 'render the human race extinct within 50 years.' The AIDS virus may have contaminated the surfaces of everything you and your family come in contact with daily! Public toilet seats, telephones, restaurant tables, silverware and doorknobs.

"We now offer you a brand-new way to protect yourself from AIDS. A disposable, specially treated paper towelette which will destroy the AIDS virus! Use it on your hands, and all surfaces that may be contaminated."

Then the ad goes on to tell you how to obtain this "miracle" product: "Just fill in the form and enclose check or money order," etc.

Abby, I thought people got AIDS only from unprotected intimate sexual contact, sharing needles and syringes, or from a contaminated blood transfusion. Suddenly, I'm getting literature from a "Ph.D." telling me I can get AIDS from a telephone! What do you think? — CONFUSED VIRGINIAN

DEAR CONFUSED: It doesn't take a Ph.D. to figure out that some opportunist has come up with a get-rich-quick scheme by capitalizing on the fear of AIDS, and widespread public ignorance about how AIDS is transmitted. Call your local public health department and ask for some information on the new "miracle" product.

DEAR ABBY: You had an article in your column from a sailor on the USS Towers, telling how hard it was for sailors to be away from home for months at a time.

I know exactly how he feels because I recall those days during World War II and Korea. Of my 9 1/2 years in the U.S. Navy, I had 42 months overseas duty aboard ships in war zones. No one knew where we were until our ship passed under the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco!

All outgoing mail was censored before it was sent off the ship. The Navy war sea duty was especially hard on the married men. There were married men on my ship who had children they had never seen — and some of the children were 2 years old — and older.

I joined the U.S. Navy for four years or for the duration of the war — whichever came first. I went for 11 months at one time without setting foot on dry land. — 1ST CLASS PETTY OFFICER CARLTON R. EPPERSON (RET.), LYNCHBURG, VA.

DEAR ABBY: Our local animal shelter puts out a bumper sticker that says it all: ANIMALS ARE KIND TO DUMB PEOPLE. How sad the reverse is not practiced. — BERNITA H. MERRITT, LORENA, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: I'm 19 years old and have dated this one guy for three years. Since that time, we've done nothing but fight over stupid things. I'm naturally very outgoing and I enjoy being around people, but in the last two years, all that's changed. My boyfriend is four years older than me and he hates to be around people. He's jealous and forbids me even to look at other guys in public. He accuses me of seeing other guys behind his back, even though we're together seven nights a week. He gets mad if I wear clothes that show my legs because he doesn't want any other guys to see them except him.

He doesn't have any friends, and doesn't want any. He has bruised my arms, torn my clothes and called me every dirty name in the book. When he gets upset about anything, he takes it out on me, but for some crazy reason, I love him.

We are supposed to get married in March, but my friends tell me I'll make the biggest mistake of my life if I marry this guy. What do you think? — SECOND THOUGHTS IN MOLINE, ILL.

DEAR SECOND THOUGHTS: You are wise to have second thoughts. And you'd be wiser still to have third and fourth thoughts. Please read the letter you wrote to me, then ask yourself how you define "love."

The guy you "love" is abusive, possessive, jealous without cause, controlling and selfish. Is this the man you want to spend the rest of your life with? Think about it.

Memories of hush puppies, fried fish a matter of taste

By NATHALIE DUPREE
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' "Cross Creek Cookery," a cookbook published in 1942, says "hush puppies are a concomitant of the hunt," that "fresh-caught fried fish without hush puppies are as a man without a woman."

Fried fish and hush puppies were a central part of the supper in 1969 on Ocracoke Island, N.C., that I shared with my favorite (now a former) husband, David, on our wedding day, and I still think them a magical combination.

We had driven with David's family from Social Circle, Ga., for a holiday. Somewhere between Chapel Hill and Newbern, where the ferry runs to Ocracoke, we decided to get married. We purchased my wedding gown (less than $1 at the Nearly New) and other necessities en route, sewing my veil from doilies on the ferry and picking wild (poisonous, they said) oleanders for the bridal bouquet and the dinner table at the Ocracoke Inn.

The inn's long wooden tables were gleaming, and the smells and sounds of freshly fried foods from the kitchen were seductive. The requisite hot sauce was on the table next to the oleanders. Platters of hush puppies and hot, freshly fried fish, moist inside, crunchy- fried outside, were accompanied by Southern vegetables and bowls of cool coleslaw. But who named them hush puppies? And why?

An unauthenticated story, often repeated in Southern folklore, is related to those hunting and fishing camps so popular in the South of yesteryear as well as today. Legend has it that at a Georgia camp of yore — amid the bountiful, boisterous eating that comes from catching one's own and cooking it in the open — came the frying of a cornmeal batter to go with the crisp fried fish.

Dogs, sniffing around the campfire, were tantalized by the smells and excited by the festivities. A cook, finally over his driving hunger, fried up the last of the batter, thick from sitting, and tossed it to the "dawgs," crying out "hush, puppy." Next time, the cook remembered the thick batter and perhaps chipped in some onions and shaped the mixture into balls for frying.

The important thing is, of course, the hot, fish-flavored fat — always at 350 degrees.

HUSH PUPPIES

2 cups white stone-ground cornmeal
⅓ cup flour
3 level teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
½ medium onion, grated
2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons butter or shortening, melted
⅓ cup milk
Vegetable oil for deep-frying

Combine the dry ingredients with the onion. Mix in the eggs, shortening and enough milk to make a spongy dough. Mix only briefly. Drop by teaspoonsful into deep hot fat, as for french fries. Serve with fish, or as an hors d'oeuvre at your next cocktail party. Makes 36.

The above recipe is from "An American Folklife Cookbook" by Joan Nathan, published by Schocken Books, New York, 1984.

Calcium intake 'vital' in healthy diet

NEW YORK (AP) — About 24 million Americans have some form of osteoporosis, or weakening of the bone mass, says the National Osteoporosis Foundation.

A calcium-deficient diet is thought to be partly responsible for this debilitating disease.

Adequate calcium intake is vital to the development and maintenance of healthy bones, especially prior to the age of 35, notes nutritionist Barbara Beck of Dannon Yogurt. She says the U.S. recommended daily allowance for calcium is 1,000 milligrams, the equivalent of three glasses of skim milk or two and a half cups of low fat plain yogurt.

"Turandot"
Puccini's final opera, set in ancient Peking, is the story of a beautiful princess and the prince who awakens her capacity for love. Glorious melodies, fantastic settings and powerful human emotions abound in this Franco Zeffirelli production.

Microwave lemon cake's light texture, flavor like fresh baked

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Think you're too rushed to bake a homemade cake? This terrific lemon cake will prove you wrong. It cooks in your microwave in just 4 to 6 minutes but has the light texture and delicate flavor of a real homemade cake.

A microwave cake's test for doneness is different from a conventional cake's. The microwave cake will look moist on top, even though it's done. If you're in doubt, scratch the surface slightly with a wooden toothpick. If done, a cooked texture will have formed underneath.

MICROWAVE LEMON CAKE

1 cup all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons finely shredded lemon peel
½ teaspoon baking powder
¼ cup margarine or butter
¾ cup sugar
2 egg yolks
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup milk
2 egg whites
Cinnamon-sugar
Strawberries (optional)

In a small mixing bowl stir together flour, lemon peel and baking powder. In a small mixer bowl beat margarine with an electric mixer on medium speed for ½ minute. Add sugar; beat until fluffy. Add egg yolks and lemon juice. Beat until well combined. Add flour mixture and milk alternately to beaten mixture, beating on low speed after each addition just until combined.

Wash beaters thoroughly. In another small mixer bowl beat egg whites with an electric mixer on high speed until stiff peaks form (tips stand straight). Fold egg whites into batter. Transfer batter to 8x8x2-inch microwave-safe baking dish. Cook, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) for 4 to 6 minutes or until done, giving dish a quarter-turn every 2 minutes. Sprinkle top lightly with cinnamon-sugar. Cut into squares. Serve warm with berries, if desired. Makes 9 servings.

Company offers fresh baby food

New York Times News Service

For parents who prefer to serve their babies freshly made foods but have neither the time nor the inclination to cook and puree it themselves, Mommy Made food may be worth every penny. But it comes at a price: $1.25 for a four-ounce serving of vegetables. Fruits are $1.35 a four-ounce serving and meats and poultry are $1.50; pastas vary.

Mommy Made offers refrigerated baby foods prepared in a commercial kitchen in Brooklyn. There is no question that the company's pureed squash and its strained peas have brighter, more appealingly fresh flavors than their commercial counterparts.

The company's consultants include two pediatricians, a nutritionist and a food chemist.

Most ingredients are fresh. Other commercial baby foods are now produced mostly without added salt and preservatives. But the Mommy Made line also does without seasonings like onion powder or additives like citric acid, which other products may contain.

The foods, which come in plastic containers, can be frozen. For information, call 212-724-6374.

Stew recipes microwavable

New York Times News Service

When adapting your own favorite stew recipes for microwave cooking, there are a few things to consider.

First, try to find a microwave recipe for a similar dish. This will give you a good indication of dish size, cooking time and proportion of meat to use.

Remember that stews always contain liquid, and that adding a large amount of fluid to a dish will lengthen the cooking time. Reduce the amount of liquid to about half the amount specified in a conventional recipe.

Make these adjustments, too:

- Increase the amount of garlic; it cooks out very quickly.
- Reduce the amount of dried herbs and pepper, because their flavor will be intensified.
- Reduce the amount of salt, since you are using less liquid.

THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will be presented with new educational opportunities. An unusual invention or discovery could mean big bucks for years to come. Include children in family decisions if you want them to become more responsible. Romance takes a giant leap forward when you meet someone while traveling. A partnership you form in the spring will produce wonderful results by year's end. You learn a timely lesson about love. Devote more hours to community service.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: golfer Pat Bradley, fashion designer Bob Mackie, actors Norman Fell and Steve McQueen, industrialist Andrew Mellon, poet-designer William Morris, actress Donna Pescow, writer Malcolm Muggeridge.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may decide that you want a larger family. Open up! Let the rest of the family in on a secret. Do not give up on a budding romance. It will blossom.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Family activities are the most fun this weekend. Postpone travel but plan a reunion with a sibling. A loved one's spending needs to be brought under control. Return business calls promptly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You feel happier about a business partnership today. Shape up by cycling or swimming. Employer will applaud your efforts to improve your physical fitness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intellect could get in the way of an emotional experience. On-the-job training puts you in a position to move up. Seize an opportunity to get a better return on investments.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): This is no time to mix business with pleasure. Put romance on the back burner or you could jeopardize a marvelous career opportunity. A relationship can withstand a shift in priorities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Work could delay a trip. The emphasis is on protecting your money and assets. Seek experts' advice if you are in doubt. Pay more attention to a loved one who feels neglected.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You get your point across at an important business meeting. Follow through while the lines of communication are open. A chance meeting with an attractive member of the opposite sex causes excitement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Push your plans with vigor. Good timing has always been the secret to your success. If possible, attend an important social event tonight. You could meet an influential newcomer. Dress to impress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Try to maintain a low profile when around pushy people. You can get your point across without being dramatic. Keep your long-range goals in mind and a dream will become a reality.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Invest any extra cash wisely. Changes are needed in certain areas of your life. Examine all your options. Take your time when making decisions; consult with mate or partner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A prominent person will respond best to a straightforward approach. Take steps to mend an emotional rift. Use your social contacts wisely. A platonic relationship intensifies. Let your allies know your plans.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful how you phrase the suggestions you give to young people. They could misconstrue your intentions. An affair of the heart occupies your thoughts later in the day. Keep appointments on time.

The bidding:

Opening lead: King of

Here's a chance to test your dummy-play technique. Assume that you are declarer at four spades, and West starts by leading king-ace of diamonds. What's your best chance for your contract?

The interesting bid in the auction is South's jump to four spades. It was predicated on his secondary fit for his partner's suit, his shortness in the opponents' suit and the fact that a bid of just three spades, in this sequence, could have been construed by his partner as merely an attempt to compete.

After a diamond lead and continuation, you are faced with two more sure losers—the ace of trumps and at least a club. You have to assume that the heart finesse will succeed, and your problem is to avoid a second club loser.

One way to go about the hand is to drive out the ace of trumps, then try to guess whether an opponent has a doubleton club honor. If you think it's West, lead a low club toward dummy, forcing West to win his honor; then finesse East for the other honor. If East, finesse the ten of clubs, then cash the ace to drop East's honor.

The correct line is to add another string to your bow. Ruff the second diamond, take the heart finesse, cash the ace of hearts and ruff a heart. Now lead a trump. If either defender has a singleton ace of spades, he is endplayed. If West wins, his forced club return (any red suit gives you a ruff-and-sluff) limits your losers in the suit to one automatically. If East wins, simply play low on his club return. West can win the trick, but he is again trapped in the web you have woven. Well done.

Hope makes excellent recovery from surgery, spokesman says

Hope

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope is making an excellent recovery from prostate surgery, a hospital spokesman said.

"Mr. Hope is doing very, very well and is expected to be discharged in the next couple of days," hospital spokesman Gordon Cohn said Tuesday.

The 84-year-old comedian underwent surgery Monday at the University of Southern California Kenneth Norris Jr. Cancer Hospital.

Hope does not have cancer but had his operation there because his surgeon, Dr. Donald G. Skinner, chief of urology at USC, performs his surgeries at the cancer center.

The surgeon removed fibrous tissue filling the prostate.

Hope's publicist, Frank Liberman, said the comedian was not expected to be able to attend a benefit he was scheduled to appear in on Saturday.

Reagan

NEW YORK (AP) — Nancy Reagan gave composer Andrew Lloyd Webber a gold gift-wrapped box containing a jar of jelly beans for his 40th birthday before seeing his latest Broadway musical, "Phantom of the Opera."

Mrs. Reagan, dressed in a black velvet suit with fur collar, said she chose to see "Phantom" on Tuesday because "it's the biggest thing there is."

"This is the first time I've been to the theater in a very long time," she added.

"I'm delighted that she's coming to see our little effort," said Lloyd Webber. He and Mrs. Reagan met in the empty Royale Theater before going next door to the Majestic Theater to see "Phantom" and meet with the cast after the show.

Mrs. Reagan was in New York to visit her brother, Dr. Richard Davis, a neurosurgeon, and his wife, Patricia.

"Phantom," set in the Paris Opera House in the late 19th century, is a love story about an impressionable, beautiful young soprano who is kidnapped by, and eventually attracted to, a hideously deformed older man who wears a mask and lives in a catacomb beneath the stage.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — An amateur astronomer has discovered his fourth comet in four years after going 19 years without spotting one.

"I'm getting much more persistent about it, and I'm becoming much more single-minded about it," said David Levy, a research assistant at the University of Arizona's Lunar and Planetary Laboratory, whose latest discovery came last weekend.

"I take advantage of almost every opportunity to search for comets."

The find was confirmed Tuesday by Brian Marsden of the International Astronomical Union, who said Levy now has more new comet sightings than any other living U.S. amateur.

The comet was designated Comet 1988e — signifying it is the fifth comet discovered this year.

Levy said he spends between one and four hours each clear night scanning the skies with one of his dozens of telescopes.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gerhard Claas, general secretary of the Baptist World Alliance, died Monday from injuries suffered in a traffic accident near Lodi, Calif.

Claas, 59, was the chief administrative officer of the alliance, an international Baptist organization with a membership of more than 35 million worldwide. The organization conducts teaching, development and disaster relief efforts in Third World nations.

Claas was a citizen of West Germany, where he had served in a number of pastoral and administrative posts.

Cash

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Entertainer Johnny Cash was honored by Gov. Ned McWherter and a galaxy of country music stars at the opening of an exhibit about the career of "the man in black."

"I'm overwhelmed," Cash said at Tuesday night's ceremonies at the Country Music Hall of Fame. "I'd like to report that country music is alive and well everywhere we've been lately, and we've been everywhere."

Among the performers in attendance were Waylon Jennings, Bill Monroe, Johnny Rodriguez, Chet Atkins, Mel McDaniel and Emmylou Harris.

Martin

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dean Martin should be hospitalized for several more days with kidney problems that forced him off the "Rat Pack" tour with Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr., a hospital spokesman said.

"His condition is fair. It appears that it is a flareup of an old kidney problem," Cedars-Sinai Medical Center spokesman Ron Wise said Tuesday.

Wise said no surgery was contemplated for Martin, 70, who was admitted Monday.

Davis and Sinatra will continue the tour without Martin, said publicist Susan Reynolds, who left open the possibility that Martin would rejoin his buddies later.

LONDON (AP) — Reyner Banham, an influential writer on architecture and the arts, died Saturday of cancer at age 66.

Banham began working at the Bristol Aeroplane Co. after World War II. He studied art history at London University's Courtauld Institute while writing about contemporary architecture for The Architectural Review.

NEW YORK (AP) — Humorist Donald Barthelme was named the winner of the $25,000 Rea Award, given annually to an outstanding writer of short stories.

"No richer — or funnier — discourse exists in contemporary American fiction," the jury said in giving the 1988 award Tuesday to Barthelme, a 57-year-old English professor at the University of Houston.

The jurors, including one of the two previous Rea Award winners, Cynthia Ozick, praised Barthelme for blending "mockery and exaltation" in his stories. Robert Coover won the award last year.

YOU CAN'T ZAP A NEWSPAPER

Advertisers, beware! The fastest draw in the West (or anywhere else) isn't the gunslinger. It's the TV viewer armed with remote control.

The instant a commercial hits the screen-ZAP!-it's gone, replaced by programming on another channel.

Equally dangerous to television advertisers is the VCR owner who sees a commercial and-ZAP!-races through it via the fast forward button. Either way, valuable advertising dollars have been squandered.

But newspaper advertising is another story. Newspaper ads can be studied. Read and re-read at leisure.
Clipped and kept, but never zipped nor zapped.

NIT

The Golden Eagles won't soar in the NIT this year.

Southern Mississippi, seeking to be the first repeat NIT champion since St. John's defended its title in 1944, was derailed by Virginia Commonwealth 93-89 Tuesday night.

The Rams hit 14 of 16 free throws in the second half, including 8-for-10 by Vince Wilson in the final 4:09.

Arkansas State edged Stanford 60-59; Ohio State beat Cleveland State 86-80; Middle Tennessee State took Georgia 69-59; Boston College downed Evansville 86-81; Colorado State defeated Houston 71-61, and New Mexico routed Oregon 78-59.

The quarterfinals on Friday night will have Virginia Commonwealth at Connecticut, Ohio State at New Mexico, and Arkansas State at Colorado State.

On Saturday, Boston College is at Middle Tennessee State.

The defending champions entered the game averaging nearly 91 points compared to the Rams' average of just over 79.

"We knew they could really post some numbers," said Virginia Commonwealth's Phil Stinnie, who matched his career high with 34 points. "They scored, but we scored just as well, too, and a little better."

Colorado State 71, Houston 61

Pat Durham scored 25 points and David Turcotte added 21 at Colorado State, where the Rams shot 57 percent. CSU, 20-12, reached 20 victories for only the second time in its history.

Houston, led by center Rolando Ferreira's 21 points, finished the year 18-13.

New Mexico 78, Oregon 59

At Albuquerque, freshman Rob Robbins scored 23 points and New Mexico hit 33 of 47 free throws. New Mexico steadily pulled away from a 29-26 halftime lead and outscored the Ducks 12-3 over the final four minutes.

Oregon, which got a 30-point effort from senior guard Anthony Taylor, was whistled for 33 fouls. Starters Randy Grant, Brett Coffey and Keith Balderson fouled out, while the other two starters, Taylor and guard Frank Johnson, finished with four fouls each.

"I just don't think we got a chance to play. By this time, you should get a chance to play," Oregon Coach Don Monson said.

Arkansas State 60, Stanford 59

At Stanford, Rhon Johnson's free throw after time expired gave Arkansas State its comeback victory, the first postseason loss ever for Stanford.

MC women nudge OC in tennis, 5-4

From Staff Reports

Midland College struggled before taking a 5-4 win over Odessa College in women's conference tennis action Tuesday on the MC courts.

The top-ranked Chaparral women managed to win five singles matches in getting the victory.

It ran the Midland College team record to 11-2 for the season.

The last time the two teams met, two weeks ago in Odessa, the Chaparral women breezed to an 8-1 victory.

"We didn't play well, especially when you compare what we did playing them on their home courts," said Joe Williams, MC tennis coach.

"We seem to have several distractions right now, but have to start preparing mentally and physically for the conference tournament in Odessa and the Region V tournament that we're going to host next month."

The Chaparral women took their top five singles matches against Odessa, but lost the number six singles and all three of the doubles.

In No. 1 singles, Raquel Colvin of the Chaps defeated Melissa Nelson 7-5, 6-1 and in No. 2 Rebecca Nevarez-Ayon won a tough match from OC's Julie Cass.

OC's lone victory in singles came when Sharon Westfall defeated Jill Vallandigham 6-4, 5-7 and 6-1. It was typical competitiveness of all the day's matches.

Midland Lee 8, Abilene Cooper 5.

That's right.

The Lee Rebels defeated the defending 5A state champions Tuesday afternoon at Lee Field in what could soon prove to be an important District 4-5A baseball game.

But the score only tells part of the story. The players tell the rest.

"It's a feeling I've probably never felt before," said Rebel catcher Greg Garrett, who drove in two Lee runs. "It's great."

"Now we know we can beat almost anyone," Lee designated hitter Paul Bacon said. It was Bacon who tripled and scored three runs in the win.

From winning pitcher Durian Jenkins: "We dreamed about, or, talked about it yesterday. Words can never explain it. They're a great bunch of ballplayers (Cooper), they just weren't hitting the ball."

THAT COOPER failed to hit the ball was only part of the problem for a team that, going into Tuesday's game, was ranked No. 2 in the state. It also helped that Lee could simply not do anything wrong.

Only a week after everything did go wrong for Lee in a 10-5 district opening loss to Midland High, the Rebels turned their practice sessions around, and it paid off on the playing field.

The Rebs scored three runs in their half of the first inning. With men on second and third, a throwing error by Cooper shortstop Jason Marshall allowed Jenkins and Dudley Jordan to score, and when Garrett singled home Bacon, Lee had taken a quick — but not altogether secure — 3-0 lead going into the second.

At 64, NCAA field getting diluted

By BRIAN BROWN
Copley News Service

There may be a good degree of parity in college basketball. But in large part, it's parity among a vast number of rather pedestrian teams.

In enlarging its tournament to 64 teams, the NCAA risked diluting overall excellence. And with the completion of the tourney's first two rounds last weekend, you have to wonder if there really were 64 teams that deserved to be competing for a national championship.

There was the St. John's-Florida game Thursday night, for instance. The Redmen (17-12) finished sixth in the Big East and really didn't expect to be invited. They are a better-than-average team but were not good enough to defeat a struggling Florida team in the first round.

The Gators had seven players available for St. John's, two having been left home for disciplinary reasons. Additionally, Florida's 7-foot-2 center, Dwyane Schintzius, managed just eight points against the Redmen, only two in the second half.

A three-pointer with seven seconds left by guard Vernon Maxwell gave Florida a 62-59 victory.

Two days later, the Gators (23-12) proved to be fodder for Michigan, which never trailed and won in a walk, 108-85.

Did St. John's and Florida really need to be in the tournament? Did Cornell, which Arizona defeated, 90-50? Did Tennessee-Chattanooga, which lost to Oklahoma, 94-66?

Those were first-round scores. There were even more blowouts in the second round.

The tournament has turned into an amazing cash cow for the NCAA, which will gross $65 million on it this year. But early rounds like those this season threaten the integrity of the competition — and with it, perhaps, those fat television contracts.

Maybe it's time to go back to a field of 48, or 32.

Add tourney — Western basketball teams have talked about being unjustly neglected these past years, always thought inferior to teams in the Midwest and East. This time, the West was better represented than it had been in years, with 10 teams invited. So how did they do?

One is left, Arizona. Six bit the dust in the first round, three in the second.

The Western Athletic Conference, thought to be in its golden year, sent three teams to the tourney. Wyoming and Texas-El Paso were out in round one, Brigham Young in round two, losing embarrassingly to Louisville, 97-76.

Add West — Stanford reportedly was rated the 65th team by the NCAA's selection committee. Do you think the Cardinal (21-11) would still be around in the NCAA tourney had it been selected?

Obedient — John Chaney, coach of top-ranked Temple, is rather strict. He doesn't want his players talking on the team bus, for instance. Well, not long ago, the bus caught fire as the team was headed for a game at West Virginia. Smoke was gathering at the back. Chaney could hear guard Howard Evans coughing. But no one spoke. Said Chaney later: "That's concentration."

Add Temple — The Owls, who face Richmond Thursday in an East regional game, have one of the nation's better shot-blockers in forward Tim Perry. Perry had 10 of his team's 11 blocks in the first two rounds of the tournament, eight against Lehigh in a first-round game.

To promote Perry, the school recently sent deflated basketballs to 100 media members. On the ball were the words, "Inspected and rejected by Tim Perry."

(Incidentally, the balls are perfectly good. They just need to be blown up.)

Last add Owls — Chaney coached at Cheyney State before coming to Temple. It's a Division II school near Philadelphia.

Chaney won a national championship at the school, in 1977. The women's coach at Cheyney State at the time, Vivian Stringer, also was quite successful, once getting her team to the national championship game.

The possibility exists now for both to win national titles this season. Stringer has since gone to Iowa, and the women Hawkeyes, like Temple, have reached the round of 16 of their tournament.

Insomnia — Michigan coach Bill Frieder doesn't sleep much. He doesn't read or eat much, either. His life is basketball.

This can be tough on his players. On road trips, Frieder has been known to visit them in their hotel rooms at 2 and 3 in the morning. At home, he'll call at odd hours.

Guard Gary Grant, Michigan's first-team All-American, has been privy to such calls and visits. Grant has tried changing his phone number.

"But," said Grant, "he got the new number."

Bulldogs remain unsullied in 4-5A

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO — The top three of the Midland High batting order combined for six hits, six runs and four RBI, as the Bulldogs continued their league-leading mark, defeating the San Angelo Bobcats 10-2 and increasing their district leading mark to 3-0.

Leadoff hitter Tony Perez went 2-for-5 with a double and single and drove in two runs; shortstop Jamie Surratt scored three runs in going 3-for-3 and third baseman Eric Boyt went 2-for-4, scoring two runs and driving in another two.

Joe Rendon picked up the win for Midland High, going the full seven innings, allowing seven hits and only two runs.

Midland High did most of its damage in the first, knocking starting pitcher Tom Englert out early. The 'Dogs scored six runs in the opening frame, one of which came when Englert made a pick-off move to first with no one on the base. The balk allowed Tony Perez, who was on third to score, to represent the first run of the day for MHS. In all, Midland sent 11 batters to the plate against the 'Cats in the first inning.

MHS will try to continue its perfection in district, hosting Abilene High at Angel Stadium on Saturday. Abilene was idle on Tuesday. San Angelo will next visit Odessa High. The Bronchos, incidentally, were surprise 7-6 winners Tuesday over Odessa Permian.

The only other District 4-5A game Tuesday saw Midland Lee upset Abilene Cooper 8-5.

JIMMY PATTERSON

WT in spring, where the wind blows free

Patterson

Athletes are often called upon to play their games in conditions that are less than perfect.

Football games are played under any type of weather. I suppose the one exception being lightning.

They play hockey on ice. Basketball is carried out on hard wooden floors, oftimes spattered with blood in the world of eastern college hoops.

Golfers, as they are, usually like to ply their trade in conditions regarded as nothing less than perfect. Baseball players fancy faultless weather, too, but sometimes, things just don't work out to the liking of these guys.

AFTER HAVING moved to what I had supposed was the warm climate of Midland from the not-so-balmy environs of the Texas Panhandle, I thought, finally, some decent weather in which to watch sports.

Maybe I reported for work a little early ...

Last Tuesday, the Midland High Bulldogs traveled across town for the District 4-5A baseball opener against the Midland Lee Rebels.

You remember last Tuesday. It was the day when if you lost any weight from not eating breakfast that morning, you would've been blown to Lubbock if you flapped your arms enough.

I was told before moving from the Panhandle that, "If you think the wind blows here, oh, boy are you in for a shock."

Surely, I thought, the wind doesn't blow as hard here as in the Texas Panhandle. And it never rains in Southern California either.

After being here for two weeks, I don't think it has actually stopped blowing yet.

I am told the wind will not stop blowing until sometime around May. Is that May of this year?

LAST THURSDAY, the second annual Midland Invitational Golf Tournament was being played at the Green Tree Country Club.

One-hundred or so golfers from Amarillo to El Paso to across town were asked to take long iron rods and swing at them repeatedly until they hit a small ball the size of a hail stone.

Little did these prep linksters know that they would have to do this amidst 30 mph winds and temperatures that approached the teeth-chattering.

How do you play golf in that kind of weather? Ask Fuzzy Zoeller. With a name like that, he's bound to know. If I was having trouble keeping my scoresheet from blowing away, think of the golfers who had to hold a scoresheet in one hand and a nine-iron in the other.

WHEN last Saturday rolled around, the temperature had creeped up to the 70 degree range, and the winds — believe it or not — had calmed down to what meteorologists like to term "light and variable," whatever that means. It was again time for a baseball game.

Out to Angel Stadium I trudged, sans any form of coat or jacket. Seventy degrees, I thought. No need for that extra layer.

But we're not talking Florida in the spring here. We're talking Angel Stadium in the spring. Texas' own answer to Candlestick Park.

It was the first time ever that I froze in warm weather. The wind at Angel Stadium tends to whistle around a bit, and it picks up strength just as it is entering the open window of the press box. I felt a little like a duck with no feathers in Lake Michigan.

Freezing in 70 degree weather? What am I, crazy?

It is hard to keep score of a baseball game with numb thumbs.

I'm sure my numb thumbs will thaw. But it'll take a hot, hot summer before the color comes back to my ears ...

Ohio State, which trailed by by 10 points midway through the second half, rallied to take its own 10-point lead with less than four minutes remaining. The Vikings, 22-8, couldn't catch up, despite 32 points from Ken McFadden.

Ty Baynham's 24 points paced host MTSU, an Ohio Valley member which beat an SEC foe for the second straight round. Earlier, the Blue Raiders ousted Tennessee from the tournament.

Midland Christian golfers take second

From Staff Reports

COLORADO CITY — The Midland Christian golf team placed second at the Colorado City Invitational Tournament, with a single round 353. Colorado City took first with a 323 and Coahoma third with a 359.

Midland Christian's Kevin Wallum was medalist, firing a 75 and winning a three-hole sudden death playoff. Other Midland Christian golfers, and scores, were: R.P. Johnson, 85; Aaron Betree, 92; Joel Hobbs, 101 and James Ortiz, 138.

LEE

LEE WENT on to steadily increase it's lead, scoring single runs in the next three innings, and with a 6-5 lead in the fifth, the Rebels put the icing on the cake.

With two outs, Lee had Blaine McInally at third and Cregg McGaha at first, and it was time for head coach Ernie Johnson to have some fun. As Cooper pitcher Lance Grider prepared to deliver to Lee batter Robin Pyle, Johnson delivered a double-steal signal to McInally and McGaha. And it worked to perfection. McGaha so confused the Cooper pitcher that he was distracted from thinking about McInally on third, and, as it turned out, both players stole successfully, and McInally had brought home Lee's eighth and final run.

That one play portrayed perfectly the kind of success Lee had, and the afternoon of bad luck experienced by the Cougars.

"For some reason," Coach Johnson said, "the kids just got ready. They really competed with intensity from the first pitch to the last. All high school teams ... if their head is right and they believe they can achieve, then they can do it. It means a lot to me that they beat them just to show them what they're capable of doing."

JENKINS went the distance, striking out four and allowing eight Cooper hits. With a record of 3-3, Jenkins was responsible for only three of the Cougar's five runs.

The only fireworks of the game for Cooper came in the third when Jason Satre belted a two-run homer, but considering the Cougar's status, and their monstrous 20-2 victory over Odessa High last week, Cooper bats were held relatively silent. Another Cooper forte — pitching — also fell by the wayside. The Coogs used five pitchers, none with much success. Jason Marshall, the starting shortstop who came on in relief in the sixth, was the most successful pitcher of the day, and the only one who was able to retire the Lee side in order.

"I hope they think they can beat anybody," Johnson said. "We've got to keep our heads screwed on straight, but we needed this as a positive boost to us. I'll worry about egos later on."

Cooper, 11-5 overall, hopes to improve upon its 1-1 district mark when it hosts Odessa Permian Saturday.

Lee, now 7-6 and 2-1, and one-half game behind Midland High, is idle Saturday.

TUESDAY'S STARS

Roy Tarpley, Mavericks, made 13 of 17 field goal attempts en route to a career-high 29 points and grabbed a franchise-record 24 rebounds as Dallas defeated New York 124-105.

Roy Hinson, Nets, made all 13 of his field goal attempts and his only foul shot for 27 points as New Jersey topped Philadelphia 102-90.

Randy Breuer, Bucks, scored 27 points on 10-for-16 shooting and matched his career high with 17 rebounds as Milwaukee beat division rival Atlanta 111-98.

SUB-PAR SUPERSTAR

Charles Barkley of Philadelphia, the league's fourth-leading scorer (26.5), fourth-leading rebounder (11.8) and third-leading shooter (57.9 percent), had two points and three rebounds in 18 first-half minutes against New Jersey on Tuesday. Barkley spent six minutes spanning the first and second quarters having his injured ankle retaped, then sat out the entire second half in the Nets' 102-90 victory.

LEAVING THEIR MARK

Minus leading scorer Mark Aguirre, Dallas equaled a franchise record Tuesday night when four Mavericks scored at least 20 points in the clubs' 124-105 victory over New York. Roy Tarpley, Aguirre's replacement in the starting lineup, led Dallas with a career-high 29 points, followed by Rolando Blackman with 26, Sam Perkins with 24 and Derek Harper with 23.

TRIPLE TROUBLE

Utah forward Karl Malone, who earlier this season registered a triple-double with at least 10 points, rebounds and turnovers in a game, almost duplicated the feat Tuesday night against Phoenix with 28 points, a career-high 21 rebounds and nine turnovers. Malone also had six assists, six steals and three blocked shots as the Jazz won, 103-96.

GOLDEN NUGGETS

The Denver Nuggets, tied for 19th in the league with a .467 field goal percentage, made 61 of 97 shots Tuesday in their 136-109 victory over San Antonio, a .629 percentage. In the second period, Denver hit on 18 of 20 from the floor, including 16 straight.

Forward Blair Rasmussen led the Nuggets with a 12-for-15 performance, Mike Evans was 9-for-12, Fat Lever was 8-for-11 and Jay Vincent was 8-for-12. The Nuggets, 4-1 against the Spurs this season, have scored an average of 139.3 points in the four victories, including a league season-high 156 on Nov. 20.

PASSING FANCY

NBA assist leader John Stockton of Utah equaled his league season-high for assists in a game with 21 against Phoenix Tuesday night. Stockton, averaging 12.8 assists per game, had 21 in consecutive games against the Los Angeles Clippers on Feb. 19 and 20.

STREAKS

The Lakers, 117-96 winners against Houston on Tuesday night, have now beaten the Rockets in eight straight regular season matchups.

EATON ALIVE

Led by league shot-blocking leader Mark Eaton, the Utah Jazz rejected 15 Phoenix shots Tuesday night. Eaton, averaging 3.67 blocks per game, had seven blocks against the Suns.

TRIVIA

John Stockton of Utah is tops among NBA guards with a 57.7 field goal percentage. What guard has the next best percentage?

SPEAKING

"We're just not playing well. You compare our fastbreak to their's. I mean, we came in with a YMCA fastbreak and they had one from the NBA." — Houston guard Robert Reid after the Rockets lost, 117-96, to the defending NBA champion Los Angeles Lakers.

TRIVIA ANSWER

Michael Jordan of Chicago, the league's leading scorer with a 34-point average, has made 52.9 percent.

Show doesn't hit Dawson and Andre doesn't hit Eric

This time, Eric Show didn't hit Andre Dawson. Andre Dawson didn't hit Eric Show, either.

Dawson, the National League MVP for 1987, batted against Show for the first time Tuesday since the San Diego right-hander hit him in the face with a pitch last July 7.

"That's in the past," Dawson said of the pitch that cut his mouth and triggered a bench-clearing brawl. "The press is the one that keeps it alive. It's over with. It's history. It was buried a long time ago."

Show had a fine outing, allowing one run and two hits in six innings, although he walked six.

Meanwhile, both the Toronto Blue Jays and New York Yankees denied published reports that they had talked about a trade of George Bell for Dave Winfield.

Bell, the 1987 AL MVP, is upset that Manager Jimy Williams wants to shift him from left field to designated hitter.

Bell and agent Randy Hendricks met with Gillick, Williams and Toronto Executive Vice President Paul Beeston for 1½ hours Tuesday. Bell, who was fined $1,000 for refusing to DH in a game last week, agreed — for now — to play wherever the Blue Jays want him. He went 0-for-4 as the DH in Tuesday's 5-3 exhibition victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Mets 4, Astros 2

Lee Mazzilli hit a two-run bloop single off Nolan Ryan and Ron Darling pitched six innings, allowing both Houston runs, including Mark Bailey's solo homer.

Rangers 3, Cardinals 1

Bobby Witt pitched six hitless innings and Curtis Wilkerson hit a two-run triple. Witt walked seven and struck out six before Craig McMurtry gave up a home run to Mike Laga in the eighth.

Red Sox 10, Tigers 4

Ed Romero had a double and three singles, rookie Jody Reed had a double and two singles and Mike Greenwell had his first spring homer in Boston's 19-hit attack.

Grand Canyon wins

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Rodney Johns scored 41 points and drilled a 15-footer with three seconds left in overtime Tuesday night, carrying Grand Canyon to an 88-86 victory over Auburn-Montgomery in the title game of the NAIA Tournament.

After a time out, Auburn-Montgomery tried a cross-court pass but it was intercepted by Johns.

There was 1:08 left when Alphonso Bell committed his fifth foul, sending Grand Canyon's Craig Johnson to the free throw line, where he made one foul shot to tie it at 86-86.

Seconds later, Bobby Harris stole a Grand Canyon pass and drove in for a layup. Johnson blocked the shot, and Grand Canyon called time out with 13 seconds to play to set up Johns' title-winning shot.

Johns, who had 39 points and the winning tip-in at the buzzer in Grand Canyon's 108-106 semifinal victory over Waynesburg, Pa., was unstoppable all night and named the tournament's most valuable player.

He hit short jumpers, long jumpers and a variety of driving layups as the Antelopes won their third NAIA title since 1975 and finished their season 37-6.

Auburn-Montgomery finished 32-3 and was led by Orlando Graham's 17 points and Sandy Anderson's 14.

Johns canned two free throws to give the Antelopes an 82-79 lead, then Bobby Harris drilled a 3-point bucket to forge an 82-82 tie with 41 seconds to play in regulation. Grand Canyon's Mike Ledbetter missed a long jumper at the buzzer as the game went into overtime.

Auburn-Montgomery, making its first appearance in the NAIA title game, leaped to a 12-point lead in the first half behind the strong inside play of Graham, Anderson and Bell.

$100,000 in surplus money raised for papal visit to be given to pope

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Pope John Paul II will be given $100,000 in surplus money raised for his visit to Texas as a gift from the people of Texas, the priest who headed the papal visit committee says.

"The worldwide needs of the church are many, and it's up to the Holy Father to use it as he wants," said Father Larry Steubben, chairman of the Texas Papal Visit Committee.

The 14 Texas bishops will take the surplus money to Rome when they go to the Vatican in April, he said.

"We decided when we met in April of 1986 that if there was an excess, the excess would be given as a gift from the people of Texas to the Holy Father," he said.

About $2.4 million was raised in the 14 dioceses in Texas and about $2.3 million spent for the Sept. 13 visit to San Antonio, Steubben said.

The surplus in Texas compares to a $2.6 million debt faced by visit organizers in Northern California.

Three people die in house fire

WAMBA (AP) — Authorities were investigating the cause of a house fire that killed three people, including an infant, and injured two others.

Nine people were in the house, but six escaped the Tuesday morning blaze, said Bowie County Sheriff's Chief Deputy Gary Owen. The fire was believed to have started in the bedroom where the three male victims slept.

Killed in the fire were Ivery Levingston, 24; Trinity Rochelle, 16; and Demakee Rochelle, 11 months, Owen said.

James Rochelle, 15, was in critical condition Tuesday afternoon at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas with third-degree burns over 89 percent of his body, said hospital spokesman Tom Geddie. He had been in the bedroom where the fire broke out, said Owen.

His mother, Mary Rochelle, 44, was in guarded condition at AMI Hospital in Texarkana, a hospital official said.

Autopsy shows inmate was choked

CLEVELAND (AP) — A black inmate who died in the city jail last week was choked to death, an autopsy report shows.

"Kenneth Earl Simpson came to his death as a result of asphyxia due to trauma to the neck," Justice of the Peace Charlie Morgan said during a Tuesday hearing.

Police arrested Simpson, 30, March 15 for disorderly conduct. He allegedly struggled with police officers outside and inside the Cleveland City Jail.

Officers said Simpson, a police informant, was found smoking a marijuana cigarette in the police holding cell, and became violent when police attempted to search him.

Police bound and strip-searched Simpson, but said no blows were struck and that he was never choked. He was found dead about 4:30 a.m. last Wednesday.

But the autopsy report says Simpson died about four hours earlier, the time he struggled with the officers.

Texas man killed in ski accident

BRECKENRIDGE, Colo. (AP) — A man killed while skiing at Breckenridge on Monday has been identified as Rodrigo Alfarache, 21, of Stafford, Texas.

Summit County Coroner Marty Flohrs said Tuesday an autopsy showed the cause of death as massive head injury.

Judge dismisses suit brought by Geter against police officers

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge dismissed claims against two Greenville police officers in an $8 million lawsuit filed by black engineer Lenell Geter, who served 16 months in prison on robbery charges that were later dropped.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders dismissed all claims against Greenville Police Chief Leon Powers and two of three civil rights claims against Greenville police Lt. James Fortenberry.

Geter told The Associated Press Tuesday he had not seen the judge's ruling.

In his suit, Geter charges he was wrongfully imprisoned following his arrest by Fortenberry after being implicated by an informant in the robbery of a Greenville restaurant. Two months later, after being questioned about robberies in Plano and Garland, he was convicted in the 1982 armed robbery of Kentucky Fried Chicken Restaurant in suburban Balch Springs and was sentenced to life in prison.

Dallas County authorities dropped the charge against Geter after he had served 16 months in prison. The dismissal followed a wave of national publicity on the case and on Geter's claim he was railroaded as a result of racial prejudice.

Sanders ruled Monday that Powers is protected by a doctrine of qualified immunity shielding public officials in the course of their duties. Sanders said Fortenberry also was covered by the doctrine in all claims except those alleging the officer violated Geter's civil rights by eliciting false identifications, testifying falsely and deliberately concealing evidence that might have exonerated the E-Systems engineer.

In 1985, Geter and five co-workers filed an $8.2 million lawsuit against prosecutors and four police agencies involved in the case. In September, Sanders dismissed claims against the city of Plano and two of its police officers.
