PBPA opposes any closing of driver's license offices

■ DPS states 'mass closures' in region are not expected

From staff reports

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Public Safety is not planning "mass closures" of driver's license offices across the state, according to a press release from the agency.

The DPS, in clarifying misconceptions, said that as part of the Sunset review process "potential offices" were identified for closure. The list was then submitted for consideration by the Texas Sunset Advisory Commission.

DPS won't take any action on closures without direction from the Legislature, according to the release.

The Sunset Commission, which meets next week, will determine which recommendations will be forwarded to be Legislature for lawmakers' consideration in the upcoming session, which begins in January.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association released a statement early Friday afternoon stating its opposition to closing any offices in the Permian Basin and across much of rural West Texas.

"We oppose the potential closing of driver's license offices in the Permian Basin because of the rapid growth of the oil and gas industry and the need for our member companies to be licensed as required by state law," said PBPA President Ben Shepperd in a press release. "The Permian Basin is the most prolific source of energy production in the United States and we cannot remove resources that are vital to the economic growth of the region and the state."

PBPA, according to the release, works to effectively advocate for the growth, prosperity, and best interests of the Permian Basin petroleum industry and that closures would impact "hundreds of member companies and thousands of individuals" who make up its association.

The PBPA, according to the statement, is joined in its efforts by Permian leaders such as state Sens. Charles Perry and Kel Seliger and state Reps. Tom Craddick, Drew Darby and Brooks Landgraf.

"We will work through the process to ensure that our part of the state is not left behind by Austin bureaucrats," Shepperd said.

Electricity use increases in booming Permian

Rye Druzin

San Antonio Express-News

A report from Texas' grid operator shows that power use in the booming Permian Basin is growing exponentially faster than the rest of the state.

As oil and gas activity has expanded in the region, its power use grew by 8 percent a year between 2012 and 2017, compared to 1 percent for the overall system overseen by the Electric Reliability Council of Texas, or ERCOT.

The increased use led ERCOT to endorse nearly $600 million of transmission projects in 2016 and 2017 to serve the area and reduce congestion in the existing power lines, which can cause stress to the grid.

At the beginning of 2012 there were 477 oil and gas rigs operating in the Permian Basin, growing to a peak of 566 by the end of November 2014, right before the industry suffered the worst downturn in 30 years. The rig count fell drastically through May 2016 to 134 drilling rigs but by the end of 2017 it had recovered to 398 rigs. There were 485 drilling rigs active in the Permian Basin this week, according to the Houston oil services company Baker Hughes.

ERCOT said in a report released in July that power use in West Texas increased by nearly 250 megawatts over the previous year because of increased oil and gas activity. The grid operator, which covers 90 percent of Texas' load and 25 million customers, said that on May 10 power use in West Texas broke 3,400 megawatts for the first time. A megawatt can power 200 homes during peak demand.

Permian Basin rig count down 4; Reeves jumps to 82

■ Midland County loses 3 rigs for total of 55

From staff reports

The rig count in Reeves County just keeps on rising. This week's total is 82, an increase of three, according to data from Baker Hughes oil field services company.

But the counts are dropping elsewhere. The Permian Basin lost four rigs this week; this week's total is 485. Midland also lost. The county has 55 rigs, down three.

Elsewhere in the Permian, Eddy County has 47, unchanged; and Lea County has 51, down two; Martin, 36, down one; Loving, 29, unchanged; Upton, 25, up two; Howard, 23, up two; Pecos, 20, unchanged; Reagan, 16, unchanged; Winkler, 20, up one; Ward, 18, unchanged; Culberson, 15, unchanged; Andrews, 11, unchanged; and Glasscock, seven, down three.

Texas lost two rigs, for a total of 523; New Mexico lost one rig, for a total of 103; and the U.S. lost 13 for a total of 1,044 rigs searching for oil and gas.

Robin Leach, the host of the popular syndicated television show "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," in Las Vegas, April 11, 2014.

Robin Leach of 'Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous' dies

By Regina Garcia Cano
and Andrew Dalton
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Robin Leach, whose voice crystallized the opulent 1980s on TV's "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," died Friday. He was 76.

Leach's family said through a public relations firm that he died in Las Vegas, where he made his home.

Leach had a stroke in November while on vacation in Mexico that led to a months-long recovery, much of which he spent at the Cleveland Clinic in Ohio before returning to Las Vegas in June.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal, which ran Leach's columns before he became ill, said he suffered another stroke Monday.

"Champagne wishes and caviar dreams" was Leach's sign-off at the end of every episode of his syndicated show's decade-long run that began in 1984.

Celebrities and others took to social media to express condolences and share stories about their interactions with Leach.

"Saddened to hear the news that Robin Leach has passed away," Celine Dion tweeted. "He was a thoughtful and considerate man, and a great supporter of the entertainment scene in Las Vegas."

Magician Criss Angel tweeted that he met "Uncle Robin," as he affectionately referred to Leach, in 2004 and became fast friends.

"There will never be another," he wrote.

In a statement, casino operator MGM Resorts International said Las Vegas had "lost one of its biggest cheerleaders."

Leach covered the excesses and sometimes gaudy style of the 1980s, a time before oil billionaires, titans of industry and Wall Street traders gave way to sneaker-wearing tech execs as the world's richest people.

Leach appeared occasionally on the show, but he and his unmistakable English-accent narrated throughout, taking wishful viewers on tours of mansions with diamond-crusted chandeliers, yachts with Jacuzzis, and champagne that ran to four figures. It was much like rap videos would do in future decades.

Leach and producer Al Masini coined the catchphrase and conceived the show.

"He asked me if I could get magnates T. Boone Pickens or Sam Walton to do the show," Leach told The Huffington Post in 2016. "In my naivete, I said, 'Of course.' And thus, 'Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous.'"

Leach said in later years that someone still shouted "champagne wishes and caviar dreams" at him almost daily. He was constantly parodied, and like other distinctive voices of the age like Arnold Schwarzenegger and Howard Cosell, everyone had a Leach impression.

"Saturday Night Live" consistently satirized him through the years, with Harry Shearer as a subdued Leach hosting "Lifestyles of the Relatives of the Rich and Famous" in the 1980s, and Dana Carvey as a brash, shouting Leach on "Weekend Update" in the 1990s.

Even decades later, in 2011, Snoop Dogg spotted Leach at a news conference in Las Vegas and was thrilled, rushing to grab the mic and breaking out his impression, touting his career earnings in an over-the-top English accent.

"Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" was the core of Leach's career that spanned six decades and included stints with CNN, People magazine, Entertainment Tonight and the Daily Mail, where he began as a writer in Britain at 18.

In the mid-1970s, he tried out TV as a regular contributor to "AM Los Angeles" with hosts Regis Philbin and Sarah Purcell, and found his calling. He became a regular on television's morning news and entertainment shows, practicing a sort of tabloid journalism that was more celebratory and light-hearted than tawdry. He often became friends with the celebrities he covered.

Then, in 1984, he landed "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" and gained his own fame.

The gaudy show became wildly popular, but never with critics.

"They wrote that television had reached an all-time-low," Leach told The Huffington Post. "But I looked at the ratings every Monday morning, and I was rubbing my hands with glee."

He was also an executive producer and occasional writer on the show, and hosted a brief spinoff,

"Runaway with the Rich and Famous."

For the show's final year, with producers looking to liven up the aging property, he had a younger co-host, actress Shari Belafonte. The show was retitled "Lifestyles with Robin Leach and Shari Belafonte" but the new look didn't save it.

In 1999, Leach went to Las Vegas to work with celebrity chefs at the Venetian casino-resort, and made the move permanent, becoming a fixture in the city as he covered the destination's entertainment and lifestyles for America Online and his own website. He also wrote for the Las Vegas Sun and, most recently, for the Las Vegas Review-Journal.

He made frequent appearances on the celebrity reality TV circuit, hosting VH-1's "The Surreal Life: Fame Games" and appearing on the celebrity editions of "Wife Swap" and "Who Wants to be a Millionaire."

He was among the founders of the Food Network, selling his equity for a big payday when the channel took off.

Married once and divorced, Leach spent much of his later years in the company of his three sons, Steven, Rick and Greg, and several grandchildren.

"There is this image of a guy in a hot tub, drinking champagne with two buxom blondes," Leach told the Las Vegas Sun in 2011.

"But that is not the real me. I am a father, and I am a grandfather, too."

Bill Clinton, Smokey Robinson to speak at Franklin funeral

By Nekesa Mumbi Moody
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Former President Bill Clinton, Smokey Robinson, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Cicely Tyson will be among the speakers at Aretha Franklin's funeral next week.

Franklin's rep, Gwendolyn Quinn, says other speakers will include former U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder, music mogul Clive Davis, the Rev. Al Sharpton, Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder and Bishop T.D. Jakes. Michael Eric Dyson, former TV judge Greg Mathis, Detroit Mayor Mike Duggan, Detroit City Council President Brenda Jones and U.S. Rep Brenda Lawrence are also additional speakers.

Clinton and the Queen of Soul were longtime friends. She sang at both of his inaugurations. Robinson and Franklin grew up together in Detroit.

Franklin died Aug. 16 of pancreatic cancer at the age of 76. Her funeral will be held in Detroit at Greater Grace Temple next Friday.

The Rev. Jasper Williams Jr. will deliver the eulogy. He is pastor of Salem Baptist Church in Atlanta.

The performers for the service include Stevie Wonder, Jennifer Hudson, Fantasia, Faith Hill, Chaka Khan and more.

S&P 500, Nasdaq and Russell 2000 close at record highs

By Alex Veiga
Associated Press

Wall Street ended a week of milestones with a few more Friday.

The benchmark S&P 500 index closed at an all-time high, just two days after the current bull market in U.S. stocks became the longest in history. The Nasdaq composite and the Russell 2000 indexes also ended the day at all-time highs.

Technology companies, the best-performing sector in the market this year, accounted for much of the gains. The price of oil snapped a seven-week losing streak, finishing this week about 5 percent higher.

The rally capped another solid week for the stock market, which has been riding a wave of strong corporate earnings even amid uncertainty over simmering global trade tensions.

"It appears that the market is really focusing on fundamentals," said Rob Eachweiler, global investment specialist at J.P. Morgan Private Bank. "We're at the very tail end of earnings season and there's no other way to characterize the earnings season other than 'spectacular.'"

The S&P 500 index gained 17.71 points, or 0.6 percent, to 2,874.69. It has now finished with a weekly gain in seven out of the last eight weeks.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 133.37 points, or 0.5 percent, to 25,790.35. The 30-company average is still below the high it set in January.

The Nasdaq added 67.52 points, or 0.9 percent, to 7,945.98. Its previous all-time high was set on July 25. The Russell 2000 index of smaller-company stocks picked up 8.62 points, or 0.5 percent, to 1,725.67. It also notched back-to-back all-time highs earlier this week.

Since entering a correction in early February, which is defined as a loss of 10 percent or more from a peak, the S&P 500 has mostly crawled higher, with some bumps along the way, thanks to a still-recovering economy and a boom in corporate profits.

More recently, stocks have been buffeted by concerns about mounting trade tensions this spring and summer, particularly with China. But investors have increasingly focused on strong corporate earnings growth.

Earnings at S&P 500 companies have surged 23 percent in the first half of this year versus the same period a year earlier, according to S&P Global Market Intelligence.

The string of all-time highs for the indexes underscore the resilience of the U.S. stock market's bull run, which began in 2009 and became the longest on record Wednesday.

Stocks were trading higher from the get-go Friday, then climbed further after investors weighed new remarks from Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell.

Speaking at an annual conference of central bankers in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, Powell struck a measured tone about the economy and said the Fed plans to stick with a gradual pace of rate hikes.

Powell said the central bank recognizes the need to strike a careful balance between its mandates of maximizing employment and keeping price increases stable. And he noted that a gradual approach to rate hikes is the best way to navigate between the risks of raising rates too fast and "needlessly shortening the expansion" and moving too slowly and risking an overheated economy.

Black bear wandered into hotel that inspired 'The Shining'

ESTES PARK, Colo. — A black bear wandered the lobby of the Colorado hotel that inspired Stephen King to write "The Shining."

Stanley Hotel Vice President Reed Rowley tells KDVR-TV that 300 guests were sound asleep as the bear figured out how to open the door and climbed over furniture. A front desk supervisor captured video of the romp.

There was no damage, but the furniture got rearranged before the bear walked out of the lower level door.

The hotel in Estes Park opened in 1909. It is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

King wrote "The Shining" after he and his wife stayed at The Stanley in 1974. The 1980 horror film was not shot there.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

Note: Bigar's Stars is based on the degree of your sun at birth. The sign name is simply a label assigned to you on a set of degrees for convenience. For best results, readers should refer to the dates following each sign.

A baby born today has a Sun in Virgo and a Moon in Aquarius.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, Aug. 25, 2018:

This year you will experience a powerful year, where you feel as if it is all or nothing. Often you get two different options for one choice. Slow down and evaluate. If you are single, you have the time and volition to meet someone special.

The closer you get to your next birthday, the better your odds are of meeting Mr. or Ms. Right. If you are attached, you often are challenged as a couple to pitch in and help others. You will discover the importance of working together. Listen to SCORPIO more often.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ You are full of energy. You even might consider bringing friends together for a fun competition. You have a way of pulling people in. Organizing a happening could be a piece of cake. Follow your instincts. Tonight: A party could start from out of nowhere.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★ Your creativity helps you organize a situation much more effectively than you'd thought possible. This new perspective comes from a strong willingness to grow. You also see events and people in a different light. Tonight: Be as lively as you can be.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★ You might be thinking of someone at a distance, or perhaps you decide to take a trip. Know that you will not satisfy this need until you are mentally prepared. Consider different possibilities, but remember that time is on your side. Tonight: Enjoy music.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★★ One-on-one relating leads to an interesting conversation. Be careful, though, as your mind is likely to float to other times and faraway places. A close friend could have an attitude, which you might want to bypass for now. Tonight: Time for fun and games.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 23)

★★★★ Others seek you out. In fact, you could be surprised by what comes down the pipe toward you. Be flattered. How you juggle friends and a love interest could amaze many people. You need to check in with an older person. Tonight: Sort through invitations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ You might want to say "no" to a project. Of course, you might decide to throw an impromptu party instead. A child or loved one might want some extra time with you. Do your best to make this possible. Tonight: Recognize when you are too tired to go on.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★ Your imagination might be going overboard when dealing with a loved one. The unexpected occurs with the finances of a partnership. You might want to indulge in a major purchase, but your timing is off. Tonight: Have a chat with a family member.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★★ Move through a last-minute hassle that could interrupt the flow of an event. Do your best to stay in sync with a neighbor or relative who appears to be closed down. You might not realize how little you are sharing as well. Tonight: Invite some friends over.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★★ You could be making a difference where it counts. Others appreciate your generous spirit. Speak your mind when having a discussion with a sibling or a close neighbor. Be sure to schedule time for a lengthy visit. Tonight: Rock the neighborhood with music!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★ You tend to indulge a lot, and you'll feel relieved that the time has come to enjoy your weekend. Deal with the unexpected. If you can use this event to create more of what you want, by all means, do. Tonight: Treat a family member to a favorite dinner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ You attract what you desire. Indulge in a lively afternoon. You easily could have various invitations to sort through. You will want to do what feels right, but you might opt to follow your heart. Tonight: Express your feelings to a partner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★★ You might be more demanding than you realize. If you find yourself in the middle of an argument, ask yourself

Cities hit by Harvey still struggling but finding normalcy

By Juan A. Lozano
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Although many Texas families are still struggling to recover from Hurricane Harvey a year after it caused widespread damage and flooding along the Gulf Coast and in and around Houston, daily life has mostly returned to normal in many of the hardest-hit communities.

In the Houston area, where more than 150,000 homes were flooded, the mountains of debris that lined streets for months after Harvey are gone. Rockport, where the storm made landfall, had rebuilt enough by this summer to welcome back the tourists who fuel the local economy. In Port Arthur, where few buildings escaped Harvey unscathed or were insured against flooding, many are living in trailers as they rebuild their homes one room at a time. They are finding hope in small victories.

While it could take a decade to fully recover from Harvey, which came ashore Aug. 25, 2017, as a Category 4 storm, officials say Texas has already made great strides. However, they acknowledge that federal recovery funding has been slow in coming for some residents and that many are feeling frustrated and forgotten.

Parts of Houston, which is about 50 miles from the coast, remained flooded for weeks after Harvey, which caused an estimated $125 billion in damage in Texas and killed 68 people, including 36 in the Houston area. But Marvin Odum, who is overseeing the recovery efforts in the nation's fourth-largest city, said it's been "fairly amazing" how quickly Houston got back to business.

Houston has received a total of $4.3 billion in Federal Emergency

Yi-Chin Lee/Houston Chronicle

Joshua Bennett and Andrea Verson, Harris County Commissioner Precinct One staff artists, work on building a labyrinth to commemorate Houston-area residents helping each other during and after Hurricane Harvey on Friday at Tom Bass Regional Park III in Pearland. There will be a dedication of the labyrinth from 6 to 8 p.m. on Sunday.

Management Agency individual assistance funding, payouts from the National Flood Insurance Program and Small Business Administration, or SBA, loans.

Across Texas, $14.7 billion has been awarded to residents through FEMA, flood insurance and SBA loans, said Nim Kidd, chief of the Texas Division of Emergency Management. The state is expected to get another $10 billion in federal funding for housing and infrastructure needs.

Odum said he's mindful that the recovery is far from over and that the process can be very slow. He also worries that people will forget about "those pockets of the city that are still heavily devastated from the storm."

humming, said Mayor Pat Rios. With a lack of housing, many workers left, which has meant some restaurants can no longer stay open seven days a week and the local Walmart can't stay open 24 hours a day.

But the city is open for business, and this summer it has welcomed "volunteer tourists" who work a few days on rebuilding efforts and then spend the rest of their time vacationing, Rios said.

"We know we're going to rebuild, and we'll be better and stronger than we were before," Rios said.

Recovering from a storm like Harvey is a long process, but now that people see it's going to take time, "they realize how far we've actually come," said Pete Phillips, senior director for community development and revitalization at the Texas General Land Office, which is in charge of the state's long-term recovery action plan.

Harvey damaged up to 85 percent of the structures in Port Arthur, a coastal city of about 55,000 people near the Louisiana border. While Port Arthur has replaced flooded garbage and police vehicles and restored city services, many residents are still living in FEMA trailers or tents on their property as they rebuild their homes, said Port Arthur Mayor Derrick Freeman.

"Folks are doing what they can with what they have ... getting one bathroom up and going, one bedroom, getting a mattress for your kids. It's the small victories that people are looking to right now," he said.

Freeman said he's hoping that a $1 million check he recently got for federal aid from Hurricane Ike in 2008 doesn't signify how long it will take to get Harvey recovery aid.

"It's going to be a long process. But our folks are hardworking, blue collar, strong, resilient people. We're going to be OK," he said.

Charities helped with fixing homes, other needs after Harvey

HOUSTON — In the year since Hurricane Harvey caused widespread flooding and damage along the Texas Gulf Coast and in and around Houston, nonprofits and charities have been busy filling the gaps in aid that government agencies may not have covered.

The largest groups raised a total of nearly $1 billion for Harvey relief, according to an Associated Press tally. Two-thirds of that money has been distributed or allotted for specific recovery efforts.

Although the groups have raised a lot of money, it is a fraction of what is needed. After coming ashore Aug. 25, 2017, as a Category 4 storm, Harvey lingered for days, killing 68 people, dumping more than 60 inches of rain in some parts of Texas and causing an estimated $125 billion in damage.

The American Red Cross raised $523 million in cash donations, goods and services, which was the most of any group. It has spent or allocated $397 million of that money. In addition to sheltering people who were displaced by the storm, the Red Cross gave grants of up to $2,000 to affected households.

The Greater Houston Community Foundation, which ran the fund sanctioned by the city of Houston and surrounding Harris County, has distributed nearly all the $114 million it raised.

LaMecia Butler, the foundation's coordinator for Harvey grants, said her organization has coordinated with many others to try to meet the various needs of those affected. The foundation spent nearly $47 million on temporary housing and home repair, which was its biggest expenditure.

"We all wanted to make sure there was as much coverage of the needs as possible," she said.

The Rebuild Texas Fund, started by the family foundation of computer magnate Michael Dell, raised $100 million and has distributed about half of that money to 156 different causes, including providing school supplies to coastal communities and "emotional healing and resiliency training" for a group of adults and youth.

Anna Babin, president and CEO of the United Way of Greater Houston, said her agency raised $51 million after Hurricane Harvey and has spent about $24.5 million of it. The group spent $10 million on minor home repairs; $4 million on unmet needs for such things as home appliances and work uniforms; and $2.4 million on providing basics such as food, shelter and utilities.

In the Port Arthur area, more than $600,000 was raised by the United Way of Mid and South Jefferson County, said Janie Johnson, the group's executive director. The money has gone toward providing building supplies, appliances, furniture, and utility and rent assistance programs.

"There's so many other organizations that have stood up from being here before the storm as well as others that have come in. It's a collective work, but there's just so much work to be done," Johnson said.

Hurricane Lane floods parts of Hawaii after torrential rains

By Jennifer Sileo
Kelleher and Audrey Mcavoy
Associated Press

HONOLULU — Hurricane Lane dumped torrential rains that inundated the main town on Hawaii's Big Island as people elsewhere stocked up on supplies and piled sandbags to shield oceanfront businesses against the increasingly violent surf.

The city of Hilo, population 43,000, was flooded with waist-high water.

The National Guard and firefighters rescued six people and a dog from a flooded home, while five California tourists were rescued from another home.

Ben Mitchell, who moved from Washington state to an isolated and rural area of the Big Island eight months ago, said he had never seen so much rain.

"It was like waterfalls coming off my roof," he said of Thursday's downpours.

Rain blew into his windows, and his "whole driveway is underwater," Mitchell said, adding that the rain has tapered off Friday.

As much as 35 inches fell on the island in 48 hours. Crews responded to landslides that shut down roads.

Closures "seem to be changing by the minute," said Hawaii County Civil Defense spokeswoman Kelly Wooten. "They got cleaned up, and there's another landslide somewhere else."

The Category 2 storm was expected to turn west on Saturday before reaching the islands and skirting Oahu — the state's most populated island.

Even without making a direct hit, the system threatened to bring huge storm surge, high wind and heavy rain, forecasters said.

In an odd twist, some residents in a shelter on Maui had to flee when a brush fire got too close.

A woman got burns on her hands and legs and was flown to Honolulu, Maui County spokesman Rod Antone said.

A man posted a video on Instagram showing flames several stories high starting to envelop parked cars.

Josh Galinato said he was trying to sleep when he smelled smoke in his apartment in the tourist town of Lahaina.

"I opened up my front door, and I just saw the fire spreading and coming downhill," Galinato said.

He and neighbors honked horns to alert others to the danger.

Joseph Azam, who is vacationing in Maui with family and friends, hopes that rain from the hurricane arrives before the flames do.

"Trying to figure which comes first, the fire or the rain," said Azam, who's from Oakland, California and is staying at a hotel. "We're praying the rain arrives soon."

About 100 miles away in Oahu, police warned tourists to leave Honolulu's world-famous Waikiki Beach ahead of the storm's arrival, but dozens of people were still swimming and surfing.

A canal there is likely to flood, said Ray Alexander of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

"The canal has flooded in the past, and I believe it's safe to say based on the forecast of rainfall it's likely to flood again, the impacts of which we aren't prepared to say at this time," Alexander said.

Officials received $345 million last summer to initiate a flood risk management project, with construction of detention basins, a flood wall and pumping station beginning in 2020 and expected to be completed in 2023, he said.

Major flooding could damage 3,000 structures and cost more than $1 billion in repairs, the Honolulu Star-Advertiser newspaper reported, citing corps estimates.

Employees of the Sheraton Waikiki filled sandbags to protect the oceanfront hotel from surging surf.

Stores along Waikiki's glitzy Kalakaua Avenue stacked sandbags along the bottom of their glass windows to prepare for flash flooding.

Almost 16,000 homes and businesses on the islands lost power as the outer edges of the hurricane battered the islands, but service was restored to a portion of them.

Hawaiian Electric spokesman Peter Rosegg said.

At 11 a.m., the center of the hurricane was about 150 miles south of Honolulu.

Emergency crews rescued five California tourists from a home they were renting on the Big Island after a nearby gulch overflowed and flooded the house in Hilo.

Suzanne Demerais said a tiny waterfall and small stream near the home turned into a torrent.

Firefighters evacuated the friends from the Los Angeles area by floating them out on their backs, she said.

"It was quite an experience because we weren't planning to have a hurricane during our vacation time," Demerais said.

Federal Emergency Management Agency officials said three urban search-and-rescue teams were in the state, plus at least 80 generators.

The agency said about 2,000 people are in shelters, mostly in Oahu.

Warehouses were double-stocked with emergency supplies, and federal officials were working with grocers to ensure stores would have enough food.

Schools and Honolulu's biggest shopping malls are closed.

Public bus service on Oahu has been suspended. United Airlines canceled its Friday flights to and from Maui.

Hawaiian Airlines canceled all Friday flights by its commuter carrier.

Some Hawaiian Airlines flights from the West Coast to Maui were delayed, but flights from the mainland to other destinations in Hawaii were operating as normal, said airline spokesman Alex Da Silva.

The central Pacific gets fewer hurricanes than other regions, with about only four or five named storms a year.

Hawaii rarely gets hit. The last major storm to hit was Iniki in 1992.

Others have come close in recent years.

Ex-CDC director Frieden accused of groping woman's buttocks

By Karen Matthews
Associated Press

NEW YORK — One of the nation's most respected medical experts, who led the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, entered a courtroom on Friday in handcuffs, arrested on sexual-harassment charges after a woman accused him of grabbing her behind late one night last year.

Dr. Thomas Frieden, who for years informed the public about dangers to their health, sat stone-faced as a judge warned him not to approach the woman, who accused him of groping her on Oct. 20, 2017, in his Brooklyn home.

He was arrested earlier Friday on three charges: forcible touching, sex abuse and harassment.

Frieden, who also is a former New York City health commissioner, did not enter a plea.

The 55-year-old accuser, who knew Frieden, reported the encounter in July, and he was taken into custody after an investigation.

The judge ordered Frieden to refrain from any contact with the woman and to surrender his U.S. passport. Frieden was freed on his own recognizance, leaving in a car with his attorney. His next court appearance is Oct. 11.

Frieden leads a health initiative called Resolve to Save Lives, which is housed by nonprofit global health organization Vital Strategies.

"The allegation does not reflect Dr. Frieden's public or private behavior or his values over a lifetime of service to improve health around the world," said a statement issued by a spokesman on his behalf.

The president of Vital Strategies, Jose L. Castro, came out in support of

David Goldman/AP

Dr. Thomas Frieden, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Director, speaks during a news conference on April 1, 2016, in Atlanta. The New York Police Department says Frieden, who also is a former New York City health commissioner, was arrested on Friday morning in Brooklyn on a sex abuse charge.

Frieden. He said Frieden informed him in April that "a non-work-related friend of his and his family of more than 30 years accused him of inappropriate physical contact."

"I have known and worked closely with Dr. Frieden for nearly 30 years and have seen first-hand that he has the highest ethical standards both personally and professionally," Castro said in a statement. "In all of my experiences with him, there have never been any concerns or reports of inappropriate conduct."

Nonetheless, earlier this month Vital Strategies hired an investigator to interview the woman didn't work there. Castro said the investigation found no inappropriate workplace behavior.

"Vital Strategies greatly values the work Dr. Frieden does to advance public health and he has my full confidence," Castro said.

Frieden was a disease investigator at the Atlanta-based CDC, the nation's top public health agency, in 1990 when he was assigned to New York City and worked on a large outbreak of drug-resistant tuberculosis. He stayed, taking a job heading the city's tuberculosis control.

In 1996, he began working in India with the World Health Organization on tuberculosis control.

Frieden became New York City's health commissioner in 2002 and was known for his aggressive measures to attack chronic diseases. In 2003, New York banned smoking in almost all workplaces, a precedent-setting move that inspired other cities to do the same. In 2006, it became the first U.S. city to ban restaurants from using artificial trans fats and required hundreds of eateries to post calorie counts on their menus.

In 2009, President Barack Obama's administration picked Frieden to head the CDC. Frieden led U.S. public health efforts during a range of high-profile national and international health crises, including pandemic flu, Ebola and Zika.

Frieden was CDC director until January 2017, when he resigned as part of the turnover to President Donald Trump's administration.

McCain stops cancer treatment as remarkable life nears end

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Arizona Sen. John McCain has discontinued medical treatment for an aggressive form of brain cancer, his family said Friday, likely indicating the war hero, presidential nominee and longtime leading lawmaker is nearing the end of his life.

McCain has surpassed expectations for survival, but "the progress of disease and the inexorable advance of age render their verdict," the family said. "With his usual strength of will, he has now chosen to discontinue medical treatment."

The six-term GOP senator, who would turn 82 next week, has been away from the Capitol since last December. If he should resign his seat or die soon, Republican Arizona Gov. Doug Ducey would name a replacement to serve until the 2020 election. The winner of that election would serve the remainder of McCain's term through 2022.

In more than three decades in Congress, McCain became known as a political maverick willing to stick to his convictions rather than go along with party leaders — an independent streak that has drawn a mix of respect and ire.

Most recently, he has been a thorn in the side of President Donald Trump, keeping up his criticism of the White House even while undergoing severe medical treatment in Arizona.

In July, he issued a searing rebuke of Trump's summit with Russian President Vladimir Putin, calling it a "tragic mistake" and "one of the most disgraceful performances by an American president in memory."

The strained relationship between Trump and McCain dates back to 2015, when Trump suggested the Vietnam veteran, who spent more than five years in a North Vietnamese prison after his Navy plane was shot down, was not a war hero.

Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) speaks with reporters on Nov. 15, 2017, on Capitol Hill in Washington. McCain, who has been battling brain cancer for more than a year, will no longer be treated for his condition, his family announced on Friday, a sign that the Republican war hero is most likely entering his final days.

The ill will grew after McCain voted in 2017 against a Republican replacement for "Obamacare." He doomed the bill with a dramatic thumbs-down on the Senate floor. Complaints about McCain's vote have become a staple of Trump's campaign speeches. He doesn't mention McCain by name but makes clear his intent by mockingly imitating the thumbs-down gesture.

The feud between the two men has persisted even amid the decline in McCain's health. While political leaders of both parties paid tribute to McCain and offered prayers Friday, Trump and the White House remained silent.

Earlier this month, Trump signed a military policy bill named for McCain, but he made no mention of McCain at a signing ceremony.

The son and grandson of Navy admirals, McCain is a former Navy pilot. He was elected to Congress in 1982 and to the Senate four years later, replacing the retired Barry Goldwater.

Despite his famous stubborn streak and occasional orneriness, McCain is widely admired on both sides of the aisle, and tributes poured in Friday after the family announced the treatment decision.

"We are so fortunate to call him our friend and colleague," Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said on Twitter. McCain, his wife Cindy "and the entire McCain family are in our prayers at this incredibly difficult hour," McConnell said.

Arizona Gov. Ducey called McCain "an American hero" who always put his country before himself.

A "spirit of service and civility" guided McCain's life, standing as a model for Americans regardless of political affiliation, Ducey said.

Cindy McCain tweeted that she loves her husband "with all of my heart" and thanked those who have cared for him.

McCain underwent surgery in July 2017 to remove a blood clot in his brain after being diagnosed with an aggressive tumor called a glioblastoma. It's the same type of tumor that killed Sen. Edward M. Kennedy at age 77 in 2009.

McCain rebounded quickly, however, returning to Washington and entering the Senate in late July to a standing ovation from his colleagues. In a dramatic turn, he later cast the deciding vote against the Republican health care bill, earning Trump's enduring wrath.

McCain's condition worsened last fall, and he has been in Arizona since December. A source close to McCain who asked not to be identified said Friday the senator was at his Arizona ranch with his family.

He is a long-term survivor of melanoma, a deadly skin cancer. But doctors classified his brain cancer as a "primary tumor," meaning it's not related to his former malignancies.

McCain ran unsuccessfully for the Republican presidential nomination in 2000, then won it in 2008 before losing the general election to Obama.

When Republicans took control of the Senate in 2015, McCain embraced his new influence as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, pushing for aggressive U.S. military intervention overseas and eager to contribute to "defeating the forces of radical Islam that want to destroy America."

Asked how he wanted to be remembered, McCain said: "That I made a major contribution to the defense of the nation."

Former Connecticut Sen. Joseph Lieberman, a close friend, said Friday that "becoming John McCain's friend has been one of the great blessings of my life. Today I am praying for him and his family."

Mitt Romney, the GOP's 2012 presidential nominee, said on Twitter, "No man this century better exemplifies honor, patriotism, service, sacrifice and country first than Senator John McCain. His heroism inspires, his life shapes our character. I am blessed and humbled by our friendship."

Army honors McCain in opening new modernization HQ in Texas

By Paul J. Weber
Associated Press

AUSTIN — As Sen. John McCain's family announced that the ailing veteran is stopping treatment for brain cancer, the Army paid tribute Friday at the opening of a new warfare modernization headquarters in Texas that he played a driving role in creating.

"None of this would be happening without someone who's not here today, and that's Sen. John McCain, an American hero," said Gen. Mark Milley, the Army's chief of staff.

The activation of the Futures Command in the downtown heart of tech-savvy Austin came just hours after McCain's family said in a statement that the Senate Armed Services chairman had surpassed expectations for survival but that the progress of the disease and McCain's age "render their verdict." McCain turns 82 next week.

McCain's condition worsened last fall and the Arizona Republican has been in his home state since December.

Two members of McCain's staff attended the ushers in of what the Army says amounts to its most significant restructuring in more than 40 years. The command is tasked with modernizing everything from combat vehicles to weapons and helping soldiers adapt to emerging threats from powers such as China and Russia.

Among the first signature initiatives that should come out of the command in the next few years, Army leaders say, is new optical headwear for soldiers that can display maps or simulate missions.

Milley and other Army leaders described McCain, a former Navy pilot who was held as a prisoner of war in Vietnam for more than five years, as a guiding force in making the command a reality. Discussions on establishing a Futures Command began about two years ago.

McCain, a long-term survivor of the deadly skin cancer melanoma, underwent surgery in July 2017 to remove a blood clot in his brain after being diagnosed with an aggressive tumor called a glioblastoma.

"I wish he could be here. I know from talking to Gen. Milley that he was key," said Republican Sen. John Cornyn. "I know that he would love to be here and be pleased."

About 500 people are expected to work at the command, most of whom will be civilians. The command for now will operate out of the University of Texas System's new downtown headquarters that is surrounded by nearby startups and tech incubators. The Army says it wanted to tap into that workforce.

Boston, Minneapolis, Philadelphia and Raleigh, North Carolina, were also on the Army's shortlist of finalists.

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell signaled Friday that he expects the Fed to continue gradually raising interest rates if the U.S. economic expansion remains strong.

Powell added that while annual inflation has risen to near the Fed's 2 percent target rate, it doesn't seem likely to accelerate above that point. That suggests that he doesn't foresee a need for the Fed to step up its rate hikes. Next month, the Fed is widely expected to resume raising rates.

Speaking at an annual conference of central bankers in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, Powell said the Fed recognizes the need to strike a careful balance between its mandates of maximizing employment and keeping price increases stable. He said a gradual approach to rate hikes is the best way to navigate between the risks of raising rates too fast and "needlessly shortening the expansion" and moving too slowly and risking an overheated economy.

"My colleagues and I," the Fed chairman said in his speech, "are carefully monitoring incoming data, and we are setting policy to do what monetary policy can do to support continued growth, a strong labor market, and inflation near 2 percent."

Powell sketched a positive picture of the U.S. economy and said the Fed's incremental approach to raising rates has so far succeeded.

"The economy is strong," he said. "Inflation is near our 2 percent objective and most people who want a job are finding one. We are setting policy to do what monetary policy can do to support continued growth, a strong labor market and inflation near 2 percent."

At the same time, Powell said that in case of another financial crisis or intensified concern about high inflation, "We will do whatever it takes." That echoed a phrase that was used to describe the extraordinary steps the Fed and other central banks took after the 2008 financial crisis plunged the U.S. and global economies into deep recessions.

The chairman's measured tone about the economy and his message that the Fed plans to stick with a gradual pace of rate hikes appeared to meet approval with investors. The Dow Jones industrial average closed up 133 points — about half a percentage point — and bond prices rose as well.

Powell made no mention of the recent public criticism from President Donald Trump, who has said he is unhappy with the Fed's rate hikes. The president has complained that the Fed's tightening of credit could threaten the continued strong growth he aims to achieve through the tax cuts enacted late last year, a pullback of regulations and a rewriting of trade deals to better serve the United States.

Many have seen Trump's complaints about the Fed's rate hikes as an intrusion on the central bank's longstanding independence from political influence. On Thursday, two top Fed officials made clear Thursday that Trump's criticism won't affect their decisions on whether to continue raising rates.

In his speech, Powell did not directly address what many analysts see as the most serious threat to the economy: The trade war that Trump has launched with America's main trading partners — a conflict that risks depressing U.S. and global economic growth the longer it goes on.

Economists said Powell's remarks Friday echoed the message he has sent since succeeding Janet Yellen as Fed leader in February. Powell has stressed that while unemployment is historically low and inflation has risen slightly, there's no sign that the economy is overheating. In his view, that's why the Fed can continue with a gradual pace of rate hikes that began under Yellen.

"Powell deliberately avoided commenting on the latest developments on trade policy, politics and risks from abroad," said Michael Pearce, senior U.S. economist at Capital Economics. Pearce said he saw Powell's comments as signaling that the central bank will continue raising rates gradually over the next year.

Though Powell chose not to mention Trump's criticism, other Fed officials asserted that the president's complaints about rate hikes would have no effect on their policymaking.

"We have a mandate by law, and we do the best we can to hit the mandate" of maximizing employment and stabilizing prices, James Bullard, president of the Fed's St. Louis regional bank, said Friday in an interview on CNBC.

Teen's flannel shirts become focus of fight with stepmom

DEAR ABBY: I am 17 and my sister, "Cheryl," is 16. She likes wearing flannel shirts, black leggings or jeans everywhere, especially to school, because they are comfortable. Sometimes she even wears sweatpants and a T-shirt.

Our stepmom tells her she looks like a lesbian and that she gets one day out of the school week to dress like a "slob," and the rest of the days she has to dress nice. By "nice" she means an outfit that looks cute by her standards. It means no "lesbian-looking" flannels and, instead, a lacy blouse or a patterned top.

Cheryl argues that she's just going to school, a lot of other kids dress that way and nobody cares. My stepmom argues that she cares, and she thinks the way Cheryl looks at school is a reflection on her (my stepmom), which makes her look bad. My dad doesn't say anything because he's low-key and agrees with her, but he isn't as vocal or mean about it.

My sister doesn't like being called a lesbian, and it makes me really mad, but my stepmom is mean and will find some way to ground me out of spite if I argue with her about it. What do I do? — DON'T WANT TO ARGUE

DEAR DON'T WANT TO ARGUE: Your stepmother appears to be a homophobe. The only way your sister's attire could reflect on your stepmother would be if she went to school unwashed and wearing soiled, tattered clothing. Not all lesbians dress in the same style; some are very feminine. If Cheryl were a lesbian, it would be nothing to be ashamed of.

Children who are called names and bullied as your stepmother is doing can become depressed to the point of self-harm or risky behavior. Because you are afraid you will be punished if you speak up, find a teacher or counselor at school you can confide in about what's going on. Your parents could benefit from an intervention — and so could Cheryl.

DEAR ABBY: I have been overweight more than half my life. I have tried many diets and exercise plans, and invariably I gain all those pounds back. I'm planning to have gastric sleeve surgery as soon as my surgeon can fit me into his schedule.

Although I have gone through all of the required office visits with my primary care provider, I haven't made a final decision because I'm nervous about it.

No one in my family knows except my husband.

My parents are elderly and probably would hate it and worry about me, so I don't want them to know. As for my children, I know they won't like it, but I don't mind their knowing. I will (hopefully) lose 60 to 70 pounds.

Should I tell them in advance or wait until it becomes obvious? I'm a private person and don't want anyone outside my immediate family knowing about this. I certainly don't want any negative or snarky remarks from neighbors or my church family.

Am I being ridiculous, selfish or silly? If I don't disclose, how will I explain how I lost the weight if someone asks without spilling my secret? — READY FOR A CHANGE DOWN SOUTH

DEAR READY: A way to do that would be to reply, "I have made the decision not to discuss my weight anymore. Please respect that."

Trump's bad week: President's men turn against the president

By Jill Colvin
and Catherine Lucey
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — On one of the worst days of his presidency, Donald Trump was chatting aboard Air Force One when the conversation took a detour into gallows humor.

Trump was returning from a rally in West Virginia just hours after two former members of his inner circle were found or pleaded guilty, when one passenger quipped that a news story would surely soon be breaking about the president fuming onboard. Everyone laughed, including the president.

Despite the momentary levity, though, Trump is increasingly frustrated and isolated as the investigations that have long dogged his White House plunge into the personal territory he once declared off-limits.

One by one, the president's men have turned against him. It was a bruising week for Trump, with a trio of men who are intimately familiar with his secrets and business dealings now cooperating with prosecutors.

First, Trump's former personal attorney, Michael Cohen, implicated him in testimony about hush money payments to two women who allege affairs with him. On the same day, his former campaign chairman was found guilty on a slew of financial charges.

At least Paul Manafort had nothing to say about Trump or his campaign. But then came revelations that his longtime friend, David Pecker, the CEO of National Enquirer publisher American Media Inc., had been granted immunity from prosecution to provide information, followed by news that Trump Organization finance chief Allen Weisselberg, who had once worked for Trump's father, was cooperating as well.

There is no indication their cooperation extends beyond the scope of the Cohen probe. But for Trump — who has long demanded loyalty from those around him — the revelations have only added to long-simmering fury about the investigations that began with questions about Russian election meddling but have broadened from there.

Allies wonder what Trump might do if the pressure continues to increase. "This is a bridge too far. They are trying to undo this president," said former Trump campaign aide Sam Nunberg.

As the president exited Washington for a day trip to Ohio on Friday, a White House official said Trump was unhappy with what he perceived as disloyalty but far from melting down. Another person with knowledge of Trump's thinking said the president continues to direct much of his ire at Attorney General Jeff Sessions, who infuriated him by recusing himself from the Russia probe. Both people, like others, spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss private discussions.

Trump tweeted at Sessions on Friday demanding that he investigate a litany of perceived wrongs, declaring insultingly, "C. on Jeff, you can do it, the country is waiting!" Trump biographer Michael D'Antonio says the president may be surprised that he can't exert more control from the West Wing over his former friends and employees.

"He's less powerful in these relationships now than he was before he became president. That must just amaze him," said D'Antonio, author of "Never Enough, Donald Trump and the Pursuit of Success." "He's sitting behind the Resolute Desk, and he can push a button and get a Coke but he can't control Michael Cohen."

Within the West Wing, aides have grown increasingly numb to the drumbeat of bad news, though the revelation of Cohen's plea and the immunity deals took some by surprise.

Cohen pleaded guilty this week to campaign finance violations alleging he coordinated with Trump on a hush-money scheme to buy the silence of a porn actress and a Playboy model who alleged affairs. It was later reported that, as part of the probe into Cohen, immunity was granted to Weisselberg and Pecker.

The White House official insisted that West Wing staffers continue to keep their heads down and do their jobs. On Thursday evening, the person said, dozens of staffers gathered on Chief of Staff John Kelly's porch to celebrate the recent birthdays of a trio of staffers: Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, senior policy adviser Stephen Miller and chief economic adviser Larry Kudlow.

While they snacked on homemade cakes and chatted, the staffers welcomed a surprise visit from the president, who delivered a speech and made jokes, acting like nothing was wrong and winning cheers from aides as he left.

Still, the week's developments brought the investigations up to the doorstep of Trump Tower — a place that Trump has warned special counsel Robert Mueller is a no-go.

Weisselberg, the 71-year-old Trump Organization CFO, is intimately familiar with Trump's business dealings, having overseen his corporate ledgers through his rise in the New York real estate world and his international dealings in the years before he launched his presidential bid.

The chief financial officer has worked for Trump companies since he joined the president's father, Fred Trump, in the 1970s as an accountant, and is a rich repository of knowledge of the family company. The possibility of him answering questions from investigators poses a new danger for the president as federal prosecutors in Washington and Manhattan dig deeper into Trump's business affairs.

A year ago, Trump told The New York Times that Mueller would be crossing a "red line" if he began to look at Trump's and his family's finances unrelated to Russia.

Asked if he would fire Mueller if that were to happen, Trump responded: "I can't, I can't answer that question because I don't think it's going to happen."

As the negative news mounted throughout the past week, allies also expressed frustration with the lack of a coordinated pushback effort. The White House said it's up to Trump's outside lawyers to deal with much of the news. They argued that the president was not directly implicated, even though Cohen said in court that he and Trump had coordinated.

Some also questioned just how Trump would react if the bad news continued to roll in. Nunberg specifically cautioned against his making any speedy moves.

"The only thing I would say to the president is do not do anything rash because Mueller would love for you to fire him, so that you will be impeached," he said.

Prosecutors grant immunity to longtime Trump finance chief

By Bernard Condon
Associated Press

NEW YORK — He's one of the longest-serving employees in Donald Trump's family real estate business. Through triumphs, scandals and bankruptcies, he was there.

Allen Weisselberg was handling the books when Fred Trump ran the company in the early 1970s. He was handling them when his son Donald made his mark with Trump Tower in the early '80s, then teetered on personal bankruptcy in the '90s. And he was there when Trump transformed the business around his TV celebrity in the new millennium and went on a global licensing spree.

Now the private and loyal Weisselberg is in the spotlight as the latest Trump confidant, and perhaps the most significant, to strike a deal with federal investigators for protection and to tell what he knows. Federal prosecutors have granted the Trump Organization's chief financial officer immunity in the federal probe of former Trump lawyer Michael Cohen as the president lashes out at people "flipping" to the feds.

"Weisselberg knows everything about Trump entities that have taken in money and spent it," said Trump biographer Michael D'Antonio, who writes frequently about the president's businesses. "All of this would come into play if Trump was being audited or investigated for financial crimes."

Two people with knowledge of the situation told The Associated Press about the deal Friday, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly. One of them said the immunity agreement was restricted to Weisselberg's grand jury testimony last month in the Cohen case, specifically the allegations that Cohen paid hush money to two women who claimed affairs with Trump.

Whether the 71-year-old is continuing to help prosecutors was unclear. Asked if Weisselberg was cooperating further, one of the sources declined to comment.

Cohen pleaded guilty to tax and campaign finance violations Tuesday. And while not named in the Cohen case, Weisselberg is believed to be one of two Trump executives mentioned in court documents who reimbursed Cohen and falsely recorded the payments as legal expenses.

Weisselberg's deal comes on the heels of several media reports Thursday that Trump's longtime friend David Pecker, the CEO of National Enquirer publisher American Media Inc., has also been granted immunity in the Cohen probe, as well as the company's chief content officer, Dylan Howard.

The AP reported Thursday that the tabloid kept a safe containing documents about hush-money payments and damaging stories it killed as part of its cozy relationship with Trump leading up to the 2016 presidential election.

Calls and emails to the Trump Organization to reach Weisselberg and general counsel Alan Garten were not immediately answered. An assistant said both were out of the office Friday.

Weisselberg, an intensely private, loyal numbers-man for Trump, was mentioned on an audiotape that Cohen's lawyer released in July of Cohen talking with Trump about paying for Playboy model Karen McDougal's silence in the months leading up to the election. Cohen says on the tape that he'd already spoken about the payment with Weisselberg on "how to set the whole thing up."

In Cohen's court appearance in Manhattan to enter his guilty plea Tuesday, Cohen admitted to making payments of $150,000 to McDougal and $130,000 to porn star Stormy Daniels "at the direction" of Trump for the "principal purpose of influencing the election."

The Trump Organization eventually reimbursed Cohen for the $130,000 payment to Daniels, accepting sham invoices and recording the money it sent to Cohen as legal expenses. In court filings, prosecutors say two unnamed Trump Organization employees — "executive 1" and "executive 2" — helped set up the reimbursement.

Hartman likes Rebels' efforts in final scrimmage

By George Watson
MRT Correspondent

LUBBOCK — Soon, the Lee football team will begin game-week preparations in anticipation of its 2018 season opener at No. 14 Smithson Valley.

And like most every other team in the state regardless of class size, the next few days will be spent correcting, tightening-up and fine-tuning all aspects of the game. Many of those areas were on display for the Rebels in their final scrimmage of the preseason Friday night against Amarillo High at Lubbock Estacado High School.

Given what came out of the scrimmage — even though it was low-scoring as scrimmages go — Rebels head coach Clint Hartman liked what he saw from his team on both sides of the ball.

"I thought it was good. The biggest room in the world is the room for improvement and we have that," Hartman said.

"It felt like it was a good test because when you come into things you don't really know what everybody's going to do, you just line up and play. So it was good, it was real good."

The Rebels' defense dominated the Sandies, who are working in a new coaching staff and a new scheme after relying on the traditional wing-T for numerous years.

Amarillo's only touchdown came on a 43-yard pass at the end of the second set of controlled 10-play sets between first-teamers. Lee also kept the Sandies from following up that score by putting together a nice goal-line stand inside its own 10-yard line.

Linebacker Trent Low recovered a fumble on Amarillo's first offensive play during the live-quarter period, and the Rebels converted that into a 29-yard John Thompson field goal.

Low, along with linebacker Isaiah Harvey and defensive lineman Tracy Mackey held the Sandies in check for most of the night.

"We just go out there and do what the coaches tell us to do, just work hard every day," Low said. "We're coming together really strong. We've got some coverages to work out but after that we should be good and solid. We're ready."

Offensively, the Rebels struggled at times with several key players out, including leading receiver Sheldon Bass Jr. with an injury Running back Josh Traylor, coming off a 1,400-yard, 18-touchdown junior year, found it tough to run against the Sandies.

But he did account for the Rebels' only touchdowns, scoring on a 25-yard sweep around the right end and a 6-yard burst up the middle on consecutive plays during the scripted period, then breaking loose for a 69-yard touchdown run during the second timed quarter for a 10-0 Lee lead.

Bass should be ready to go for the opener against Smithson Valley, and this week will determine how ready the rest of the Rebels will be as well.

"(Saturday) starts a real high school week against Smithson Valley, and so everything points toward them, and we'll start watching film and get prepared," Hartman said.

Midland High competes against Plainview during a preseason scrimmage Friday at Grande Communications Stadium.

MHS defense shines against Plainview

By Christopher Hadorn
chadorn@mrt.com

The Midland High defense looks like it's ready to start the football season.

The MHS first team defense did not allow a first down to Plainview in Friday's scrimmage at Grande Communications Stadium.

Midland High outscored Plainview, 2-0, in total touchdowns in the controlled portion of the scrimmage, and MHS beat Plainview, 7-2, with one TD in the timed quarter portion.

However, only one of the three TDs — a 41-yard pass from quarterback Suddin Sapien to Josh Lehrer — was scored by MHS first team offense and it occurred in the controlled portion. The scrimmage was called at the 8:18 mark of the first team timed quarter due to thunderstorms.

The scrimmage was Midland High's final tune up before Friday's regular season opener against Canyon Randall at 7:30 p.m. at Grande Communications Stadium. From the looks of it, the MHS defense is ready to go after keeping Plainview out of the end zone Friday.

"They ran to the football really well tonight and that's something we've been stressing," MHS head coach Tim Anuszkiewicz said of the defense. "You want to get as many gold hats, purple shirts to the ball and I think our guys did a really good job of that. We knew coming in that Plainview was going to be a tight end oriented offense. That's what we wanted to see. We wanted to see somebody that was going to be physical in the trenches and we challenged our guys to get more physical in there and I think we did that tonight."

A key highlight of Midland High's defensive performance happened in the controlled portion when senior cornerback Josh Acree intercepted a Plainview pass down the sidelines on second-and-3.

MHS senior cornerback Isaiah Valenzuela added an interception for the second-team defense.

"I think we played great," Bulldogs senior linebacker Smith Easman said. "We really flew to the ball and we were super physical."

"I think the energy is super high and we're all just flying to the football. We all just want to make plays."

In the timed portion, the MHS first team offense went three-and-out on its first series, and then self-destructed on three straight plays on its second series with two personal foul penalties and a safety.

The ending to the timed portion marred a promising showing by the Midland High offense in the controlled portion.

MHS senior running back DQ Harris began the controlled scrimmage with a 20-yard run and two plays later, Sapien connected with Des Washington on a 19-yard pass. But the drive ended up with no points.

The first team's only score was when Lehrer beat two Plainview defenders on a bomb from Sapien. The TD was set up by a 29-yard pass from Sapien to Washington.

"We moved the ball up and down the field," Anuszkiewicz said. "We didn't get in the end zone very much. Part of that was penalties, part of it is we had

Tech's Cowan earns scholarship

By Carlos Silva Jr.
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK — Kyndal Cowan had a dream.

As a child, the Midland native imagined each night what it would be like to play for a Division I school. Whether it was making a key pass that led to a kill, or a dig to deny a point, Cowan knew she wanted to play at the collegiate level.

So, she made that a goal and was able to achieve it following her time at Midland High School by joining the Oklahoma volleyball team.

But something was missing. "It's been my dream, since I was a little girl, to get on scholarship one day," Cowan said. "I honestly, never thought it would happen."

Nothing is happen

After one season as a walk-on with the Sooners, Cowan embarked on a small journey to finally see her dream become reality by joining an athletics program her father Boyd (football captain) and mother Teri (twirler in the band) were familiar with in Texas Tech.

As a sophomore with the Red Raiders, Cowan became a staple in the weight room, classroom and a familiar voice at practice — whether it be encouragement or providing a learning lesson.

Two years on the grind, Texas Tech head coach Tony Graystone gathered his squad "to do something cool here" with cameras recording the moment following a Jan. 19 spring practice. Graystone, who entered his third year at the helm of the program, laid out all of the reasons he felt Cowan had been as close to a perfect teammate as the coaching staff could have imagined.

"I think when we think about what it means to be a Red Raider, you are the first example we come up with," Graystone said on the Jan. 19 video.

After a brief pause, Graystone awarded Cowan — a communications major and — her long-sought after scholarship as she entered her senior campaign.

"I did not ever think that I would be put on scholarship," Cowan said. "If anyone ever asked me, I would say no. There's no way. They've already got me, why do they need to put me on. It was just such an honor because they didn't have to give it

Koepka partly powers into lead at Northern

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

PARAMUS, N.J. — Brooks Koepka showed some muscle and unleashed a monstrous finish Friday to share the lead in The Northern Trust.

Tiger Woods missed yet another putt and was relieved to still be playing.

Koepka spent most of the second round trading birdies and bogeys, going nowhere. One swing changed everything on the 631-yard 13th hole at Ridgewood Country Club.

From just under 310 yards, he swung 3-wood as hard as he could and saw the tight draw that had been missing all day.

It stopped 20 feet from the hole, Koepka made it for eagle and then closed with three straight birdies for a 6-under 65.

He tied Jamie Lovemark, who shot a 66. "I wasn't happy the first 11 holes the way I hit it," Koepka said. "When I hit that 3-wood, it all clicked. I felt like I was finally able to release the golf club. Just tried to hit as hard as I could, big draw. Aimed at the tree on the right and tried to draw it back to the flag. When I did that, everything started to click."

The U.S. Open and PGA champion took it from there.

Lovemark, winless in 135 starts as a pro, made five birdies in a six-hole stretch around the turn and was the first to reach 10-under 132.

Before long, a list of contenders lined up behind them in an entertaining start to the FedEx Cup playoffs.

Adam Scott, building on his confidence from playing in the final group at the PGA Championship, had a 64 for the low round of the tournament and was one shot behind.

Another shot back was Dustin Johnson, the world No. 1, who had another 67 that for the second straight day

Boydston Pest Control

If you live in West Texas, odds are you've experienced your fair share of problems with the numerous bugs native to the area. Celebrating its 71st year in operation, it's no wonder that Boydston Pest Control is a winner in this year's Reader's Choice Awards as a top solution provider for the Permian Basin's pest control problems.

"Mr. Boydston began this business in Midland in 1947," said Owner Nancy Jenkins Witten. "Then, in 1976, I purchased Boydston Pest Control, and now I work with my son and daughter to manage the business."

Witten said her two children, Zeno Witten and Aimee Miller, grew up in the family business and now they both work with her to diligently maintain Boydston Pest Control as the trusted, professional service it has been for the last seventy years.

The services they offer include commercial and residential pest control services for ridding your building or living space of rodents like mice, rats and small wild animals. Besides pest control, Boydston's also provides professional and safe extermination services. If you've experienced recurring issues with spiders, insects, cockroaches, fleas and ticks, mosquitos, or ants then Boydston Pest Control is the most trusted and the best.

"I'm always making sure that our employees and technicians understand that the customer is the most important person," Witten said. "If the customer isn't happy, it's not good. We do everything in our power to have satisfied customers."

Besides centering their profession around customer satisfaction and quality services, Witten also said that they have customers who continue to use Boydston Pest Control for four or five generations, and that they have served grand-parents, their children and their children's children.

"The loyalty of people in Midland, especially our customers, is astounding," Witten said. "If you do right by the customer here, I believe there are no more loyal customers in the country."

Bill Elliott returns for Xfinity race

By Genaro C. Armas
Associated Press

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. — Out of retirement and preparing to get behind a steering wheel again, Bill Elliott was in a rush.

The NASCAR Hall of Famer couldn't avoid this next appointment before his first race at Road America. "Hey, I've got to go to a rookie meeting," the 62-year-old Elliott said with a smile after meeting with reporters. "Oh, well."

Nearly four decades in racing and Elliott is still experiencing a first for his distinguished career.

Elliott has come out of retirement to drive the No. 23 Chevrolet for GMS Racing in the Xfinity series stop at the rural Wisconsin road course Saturday. It will be his first race in any of NASCAR's national series since the Cup event at Daytona in July 2012. He hasn't started a race in the second-tier series since 2005.

"I haven't been in an Xfinity car in ..." Elliott said before meeting with a few seconds, "1,000 years, I think."

Don't be fooled by the modesty. Elliott most definitely knows what he's doing.

He has 44 Cup wins in 828 starts, along with 175 top-five finishes. His first Cup start came in 1976 at Rockingham; the first victory came at the Riverside road course in his 124th career start in 1983.

Elliott has no real expectations for Road America weekend, other than just to "try to keep (the car) looking like it is right now," he said. "That's my first goal and then see how things go from there."

Elliott took 15 practice laps Friday. He was 26th out of 40 drivers with a top lap speed of 105.791 mph.

GMS announced Elliott's return on Aug. 4. Apparently, his son, Cup driver Chase Elliott, along with JD Motorsports. Mike Beam, gave him a little push. The younger Elliott also drives in the Xfinity series for GMS.

The idea came up around the time that the elder Elliott said he had been "playing around with some other stuff in vintage racing, and they said they'd like to put me in a car."

As it turned out, this was more than just a friendly inquiry.

"They kind of said, 'You need to do this. ... Well, your name is out there, so here it is,'" he recounted. "That's kind of how I ended up here."

The return of one of racing's elder statesmen overshadowed two other fresh faces at Road America in the Xfinity series.

Former IndyCar driver Katherine Legge will be running in the second of two planned races this year for JD Motorsports. She made her debut in NASCAR two weeks ago at Mid-Ohio, running in the top 15 before blowing an engine on Lap 65.

IndyCar driver Conor Daly is making his NASCAR debut this weekend, driving a Ford Mustang for Roush Fenway Racing.

Daly said he got advice from Elliott when they spoke after he drove Elliott's Cup car during a recent vintage weekend at Indianapolis.

"So, little did I know he would be racing, and he was coaching me initially. Pretty funny to see that," Daly said. "You've got to be a sponge of information, right? You've got to soak it up and see what happens."

Funny thing is, Elliott is taking a similar approach.

Yes, he's still around the sport, especially with his son racing on the top circuit. Bill Elliott was spotting for Chase earlier this month when the younger Elliott won his first career Cup race at Watkins Glen. It's different feel behind the wheel.

"I'd like to see how things stack up, how things have changed. I've been fortunate enough to drive through a lot of different eras in racing," Elliott said.

Not that Elliott feels he needs a lot of time on the track, even if his red Chevy will have yellow stripes on the bumper to signify a driver who is new to the course.

Elliott is more old-school when it comes to acclimating to a new track. This time, Chase will be spotting for Dad.

"This main thing is I'm looking more forward to the race," Elliott said. "That's always been my strong suit, once you get in the race, you kind of judge with everybody where you're at, where you're good, where you're not, what you need to do."

Justin Marks posted the top practice lap speed of 109.603 mph. Qualifying is at midday on Saturday, with the race later that afternoon.

COWAN

to me, they wanted to give it to me. There's a big difference in that."

Graystone, who could not laud Cowan's work ethic enough, smiles each time he talks about the special moment.

"She's just a great kid and a great student and athlete," he said. "Parents are alumni, she has a great connection to Tech. She's just one of those glue-type players that you can't imagine the team being what it is without her. So, being able to reward her with a scholarship was kind of a no-brainer but it also was such a great moral boost for the rest of the team to see that players like her can get rewarded."

Keeping a secret

While Cowan and a large majority of the Texas Tech players were caught by surprise, senior Katy Keenan and Missy Owens were aware of what would take place at the start of spring practice.

"It's a crazy backstory, honestly," Keenan recalled. "Me and Missy Owens lived together and we had one of our teammates, Kylie Rittmann over. So, we were sitting in our living room talking and Kyle goes, 'If y'all had to give a walk-on scholarship, who would you give it to? I didn't breathe or think twice about it before blurt-ing out Kyndal Cowan.'"

"Two days later, Tony (Graystone) calls me and asks if I was with Missy. So I put the call on speaker and he told us that the next day in practice we're giving Kyndal in scholarship."

Keenan cracked a smile re-telling the backstory.

noting she realized she almost gave away the secret when she rewatched the video that showed Cowan getting her scholarship.

"If you watch the video, I cannot stop smiling because I'm excited and know what's going to happen," Keenan said, cracking a smile. "But, what a reward for Kyndal whose worked so hard since she got here."

Ending on a high note Looking back at her athletic journey, Cowan admits she has no regrets or would ever change any decisions she made.

Cowan knows her full-ride scholarship will provide even more motivation for her to continue being the "best teammate she can be" with the Red Raiders.

If anything, she's also hoping others can take her example of never giving up on a dream and use it as motivation.

"It's been my dream since I was a little girl to be on scholarship one day," Cowan said. "To have that fulfilled. That can't even be explained. It's a dream come true, and I wasn't really expecting it at all. ... They caught me off-guard, and as many could see on the video, I got really emotional."

"It's nice to know that you don't have to be the biggest, you don't have to be the fastest, you just have to have heart and you just have to work hard and you can earn the things that you want."

Federer tries to end decade drought at Open

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Even with all the times Roger Federer held the U.S. Open trophy, he still can't forget the time it slipped through his fingers.

He had won five titles in a row in Flushing Meadows and was a game away from a sixth in 2009 when Juan Martin del Potro pulled out a fourth-set tiebreaker, then won the fifth set.

"I still wish I could have played that match again," Federer said Friday. He's never been that close to winning the U.S. Open since, just once even reaching the final.

That would have been hard to imagine then, when Federer would steamroll into New York at the tail end of some of the greatest seasons in tennis history. He was 247-15 from 2004-06, and knew he'd figure things out across seven matches on the hard courts in a city where he is so comfortable.

"For a long period I think I was not losing much," Federer said, "and when I came to the Open, I had all the answers for all the guys, all my opponents, all conditions, wind, you know, night, day. I really embraced everything about New York."

Still does, which is why — at age

37, and a full decade removed from his last title at the place — Federer believes he can succeed again at the year's final Grand Slam tournament and collect a male-record 21st major when main-draw play begins Monday. A sixth U.S. Open title would break a tie with Jimmy Connors and Pete Sampras for the most in the professional era.

"Well, I mean, it would mean the world to me," he said. Novak Djokovic just beat Federer in the final in Cincinnati, and the Wimbledon champion might be the favorite in New York. Defending champion Rafael Nadal is the top seed after taking back the No. 1 ranking that Federer had regained earlier this season for the first time in five years, and del Potro is up to a career-best No. 3 in the world and proved again he could handle Federer at the U.S. Open when he stopped him last year in the quarterfinals.

Yet few would count out No. 2 seed Federer, even as erratic as his gifted game looked against Djokovic on Sunday in Ohio.

"If you are playing well before, it's easier to play well in the Grand Slam, no? No doubt of that," Nadal said. "At the same time it's true that especially a few players are able to increase the level of concentration, the level of tennis, level of intensity in some places. If you have to do it, this is one of the places."

Federer hasn't done it in the biggest moments in New York over the last decade. The loss to del Potro was followed by semifinal defeats against Djokovic in both 2010 and 2011, blowing two match points in both. He finally got back to the final again in 2015 but was beaten by Djokovic, then had to miss the 2016 event because of a knee injury.

He won the Australian Open and Wimbledon in a resurgent 2017 but tweaked his back while reaching the Montreal final and knew his body and his game weren't in shape by the time he got to New York.

"I knew from the get-go it was not going to be possible for me to win," Federer said. "Everything would have had to fall into place."

So he was even more cautious in monitoring his schedule this year, sitting out the clay-court season again and pulling out of Toronto, making Cincinnati his only hard-court warmup. That's left him only four tournaments in five months, perhaps explaining some of the shots that once were winners but were sprayed around the court against Djokovic.

KOEPKA

featured a triple bogey on his card. At least he got this one out of the way early, taking five shots from a mangled lie in deep rough behind the first green.

"That was not a fun start," Johnson said. "There was nothing to do but laugh at that point."

Bryson DeChambeau had a 66 and joined Johnson at 134. The group at 7-under 135 included Sean O'Hair, who is No. 112 in the FedEx Cup and needs to get to No. 70 by the third playoff event at the BMW Championship being played this year at Aronimink, his home club outside Philadelphia. He already is planning to play the member-guest a few weeks later, but O'Hair would love to play Aronimink for a $9 million purse.

Woods was not part of the action, even though he hit the ball beautifully. Woods had a birdie putt on every hole until the par-3 15th, when his tee shot rolled just off the green against the collar. All he had to show for it was two birdies, giving him four birdies in 36 holes.

He finished with a three-putt bogey from just inside 30 feet, giving him another 71. He made the cut on the number, leaving him 10 shots behind.

"The name of the game is you've got to make putts, and you've got to roll it," Woods said. "No matter how good your drive, you've still got to roll them and still got to make putts, and I didn't putt very well today. I had a hard time seeing my lines, and consequently didn't make anything."

Jordan Spieth made putts to get off to a good start, only to give it all back with a triple bogey on his 10th hole of the round at No. 18. Worse than pulling his tee shots into the trees, worse than the penalty shot, was Spieth sweeping in a 10-inch putt for double bogey only to stub the putter and move the ball only a few inches.

Scott continues to keep two putters in the bag, long and short. The idea is to use the short putter for the medium-length putts that have been a struggle for him. At the PGA Championship and at Ridgewood, however, he has found a good stroke with the long putter and felt no need to change.

The biggest difference is confidence. He is starting to recognize the player who reached

No. 1 in the world a few years ago, and only a month ago was getting closer to falling out of the top 100. The third-place finish at Bellerive at least put him back in the top 50, but did a world of good between the ears.

"It's just been very hard to find that consistency for me this year, and I've been chipping away at it the last couple months and it all came good at the PGA," Scott said. "And feeling off this week, I felt the most confident of any tournament this year. I just couldn't wait to get up here, really."

Koepka knows all about confidence with two major trophies sitting at home in Florida. The knock has been that he hasn't won enough regular PGA Tour events, so he wanted to treat the FedEx Cup playoffs like majors in how he prepared, even down to renting a house and bringing his own chef, trainer and regular crew.

Five shots out of the lead, he tugged a tee shot into the left bunker on the reachable par-4 12th, and hit a clean sand shot to 3 feet for birdie. Then came a big drive on the 13th, and a 3-wood that carried him to his big finish.

Kevin Tway was the only other player to reach the 13th green in two. He shot 69 and was part of the group at 7-under 135.

"Sometimes it doesn't always go as perfectly planned as you'd like, and then you make one good golf swing, and all of a sudden you've got that feeling, you've got that rhythm and then you can build off that," Koepka said. "And that's kind of what happened today."

Staying connected to the internet is a vital necessity whether it's for a family or an oilfield business needing to be connected to the world while out in the middle of nowhere. Net Ops Communications, LLC is there to meet the demand for wireless internet services for those in need.

Started in 2013, Net Ops Communications has offered wireless internet to the Midland/Odessa area as well as in the oil and gas fields around West Texas and New Mexico. The company offers residential and commercial internet services in addition to making sure that oilfield and gas companies are connected to the internet no matter where they are located.

The company offers fast and reliable 4G LTE wireless internet service with no contracts, unlimited use with no data caps and wi-fi at no additional charge. Everything is backed up with a 30-day guarantee.

The technicians and staff at Net Ops Communications possess years of on-the-job experience installing internet service and maintaining high speed networks up to 10gig. Not only that, they're also industry certified and committed to keeping up with the latest advances in internet service and internet service delivery. You can rest easy, because your home or business will be in the best and most skilled hands that it can be.

Net Ops Communications, LLC President Mitchell Block said the company has seen tremendous growth since they first opened the business five years ago.

"We started small back in 2013 and since then we've been constantly growing," said Block. "There hasn't really been a lot of down time with all of the work that goes into this and how we're continuing to add new areas to our coverage network. We work very hard to offer reliable service and the best customer service that our competitors can't match."

The services the company provides are backed up by more 5-star reviews on Facebook than any of its competitors. Block said the positive feedback from customers continues to show how the hard work from everyone at the company is paying off.

"We're always looking at ways to improve our services and provide more and more customers with another option for their internet provider," Block said.

PBAF MOVES INTO NEW BUILDING

The Permian Basin Area Foundation opened its new building, located on Andrews Highway to the west of Midkiff Road, in May.

The building, which is just more than 10,000 square feet, was designed by architect Jason Dean; the interior design was completed by Built for Dreams. The building will allow for future growth.

The new building was paid for with the foundation's internal assets. Fundraising was not required.

THE BUILDING'S EFFICIENCIES:

- All light fixtures throughout the building are LED.
- 159 solar panels (96 on the parking structure, 53 on the roof) generate a little more than 300 watts each or approximately 47kWh per month, which is estimated to provide 100 percent of the building's power requirements.
