Area Escapes Squeeze On Diesel Fuel Supplies

A-J News Services

Although a severe shortage of diesel fuel is generating much concern by farmers in the Texas Panhandle, the situation has not yet reached the serious stage on the South Plains, according to two area distributors.

"There's really no shortage. They (producers) are just trying to get the price up by building up supplies," claimed a diesel distributor in Abilene who declined to be identified. "Once they get the price where they want it, then they'll release it (diesel)."

He said the problem is not getting the diesel fuel, but transporting it to where it's needed.

A Slaton diesel distributor, who also asked not to be identified, said the increase in demand throughout the country, a cutoff of foreign crude from Iran and seasonal fluctuations have been putting a crunch on his allocations for the past two to three weeks while area farmers have been doing much of their plowing.

"We could get over the shortage in April, but the inventories at the refineries are very low. We could be in a critical situation in May when farmers start planting if we don't get more fuel.

He added his allocations are down 25 percent from last year.

Hugh Shurtleff, president of T.I.M.E.-DC freight line in Lubbock, said his company has had only minor difficulties in getting diesel fuel, although "the future is unpredictable."

He added that the company has had some difficulty on coast-to-coast diesel supplies in the last 45 days, but said problems have been minor between Oklahoma City and El Paso.

Although South Plains farmers seem to be experiencing no major difficulties at the present, the shortage — termed the worst in 30 years — is causing strong concern in the Panhandle.

C.W. Tomlinson of Farmland Industries said in Amarillo the situation is "worse than what it was in '73 — you know, during the last fuel crunch."

Manager Bub Sparks of the Consumer Fuel Co-Op in Hereford said he had received several calls Monday from farmers alarmed about declining diesel fuel supplies. He said his cooperative had no diesel at all last week and has received only two shipments this month.

Bob Heard, vice president of sales for the Diamond-Shamrock Corp., termed the shortage widespread and said his firm has begun allocating supplies on an informal basis, with the farmers and the railroad industry being top priority.

"Most suppliers that I'm familiar with are virtually out of No. 2 diesel, or they are on low inventories or tight allocations," Heard said, adding that it may be mid-summer before conditions improve.

Israel, Egypt Clash On East Jerusalem

By The Associated Press

Israel and Egypt clashed today over the future of Jerusalem and the Palestinians in their first public disagreement since President Carter's visit to iron out final obstacles to a peace treaty.

But Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil said he doubted the dispute would impede the treaty signing.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin told Parliament in Jerusalem that Israel would never allow a Palestinian state in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River or the Gaza Strip, or return East Jerusalem to the Arabs.

"It will not happen," Begin told the Knesset, opening debate on the treaty. "We won't agree to it, we won't allow it, we won't make it possible."

Begin said he was replying to a statement by Khalil that Israel would have to withdraw to the borders that existed before the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, surrender Arab Jerusalem and accept Palestinian statehood.

"My dear, honorable Dr. Khalil," said Begin, "write this down: Jerusalem, the one Jerusalem, is Israel's eternal capital. It will never be divided again."

In Cairo, Khalil said Begin's statement "spoils the atmosphere" of the treaty and said it was "an unsuccessful beginning to a period in which we had hoped that all parties would work...for a just and lasting peace and a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East."

Khalil said, "As for the Palestinian question, the Camp David accord clearly stipulates the necessity of solving the question from all its aspects, thus taking into consideration the legal rights of the Palestinians. It is along this principle that they will decide their future."

When asked if the dispute could block a signing, Khalil said, "No, I don't think so."

As the Israeli debate opened, right-wing opponents of the pact set up two makeshift settlements in the northern Sinai Desert, and a shouting Communist member was expelled from the Knesset after accusing Begin of "selling Israel to the Americans." But observers predicted at least 100 of the 120 members would endorse the pact Wednesday at the end of the two-day debate, which was being broadcast live on television and radio.

"Security remains our problem," Begin said, adding "I will never tire of appealing to these three (Jordan, Syria and Lebanon) to join the peace process."

Deluges Trigger Floods In State

A-J News Services

Downpours dumped up to 7 inches of rain on sections of Southeast Texas today, flooding streets in the Beaumont area and triggering flood warnings for the Sabine, Neches, Trinity, Navasota and Little rivers.

Sour Lake received the torrential 7-inch rain, while Nederland had 5.42 inches and Orange reported a 4-inch downpour.

Thunderstorms and rain showers rumbled across wide stretches of Northwest Texas and eastern New Mexico early today, bringing the possibility of some flash flooding, but the heaviest storms apparently skipped around reporting stations.

Despite widespread activity, there were no reports of extremely heavy rains in the Lubbock area. A southwest Lubbock site had recorded .36 of an inch near noon today, but the official total from the National Weather Service at the airport was only .18.

There appeared to be a good chance for more, however, with forecasters predicting a 50 percent probability of additional rainfall today, diminishing to 40 percent on Wednesday.

In New Mexico, thunderstorms rumbled across the eastern counties bordering the South Plains and Panhandle, while the northern and western mountain regions braced for another winter storm. Travelers advisories for today and heavy snow warnings for tonight have been issued, with up to 4 inches expected to accumulate by Wednesday.

According to reports, light snow was scattered from Clovis, N.M., to the southwest Panhandle early today.

Today marked the last day of winter with spring scheduled to arrive tonight at 11:22.

Thunderstorm activity this morning on the South Plains was reported primarily in southern and central counties, with Lamesa and Seminole receiving less than .10 of an inch of rain between 6:30 a.m. and 7 a.m., according to observers there.

Heavier thunderstorms occurred later in the morning, with Brownfield reporting .35 inch of rain along with pea to marble-size hail at 9 a.m. and a weather observer at Tahoka reporting .52 inches between 5 a.m. and 10 a.m.

Sundown, in Hockley County, also reported a brisk shower and hail ranging from pea to marble-size this morning.

Near noon, heaviest activity in the area was southwest of Ralls in Crosby County, where heavy rain and light hail were reported.

Through Monday, Lubbock had received 1.26 inches of rain during March, compared to .23 inches for the month on the same date last year. For the year, the Hub City has received 2.44 inches of rain, compared to 2.21 inches at this date last year.

Although area farmers were glad to see the moisture, it wasn't causing any rejoining in the City of Lubbock's street maintenance department.

Supervisor Robert "Woody" Woods said winter damage to streets was "about under control," but he said the latest rains will create "new and different problems."

Damage results when moisture seeps into cracks in the pavement and traffic continues to roll over the spot, Woods said. Eventually the bond between the asphalt and base course is broken and a pothole is created, he said.

Woods said he will not have an estimate of the dollar amount of rain damage to the streets for several days, but said all his crews are out repairing the holes.

Solons Pass Bingo Bill

AUSTIN (UPI) — The Texas Senate today approved and sent to the House a proposed constitutional amendment permitting non-profit organizations to operate bingo games for charitable purposes.

The state constitution currently prohibits bingo games as gambling, and other attempts in recent years to overturn that provision have failed.

The proposal is sponsored by Sen. A.R. Schwartz, D-Galveston.

Meanwhile, the Senate members still were buzzing about the clash Monday between Schwartz and Sen. Bill Moore, D-Bryan.

Moore threatened to hit Schwartz over the head with his gavel in an argument that had the veteran lawmakers accusing each other of everything from being dictatorial to lying.

"We'd been operating under detente. But that is over. I'm tired of being nice to Bill Moore under the circumstances that he abuses the Senate," Schwartz said. "We're as natural enemies as two different animals in the forest."

With 70 of the 140 days of the session left and nearly all of the controversial decisions still to be faced, some legislators' tempers already are at a fever pitch.

The angry altercation on the Senate floor Monday overshadowed a Houston legislator's wedding on the other side of the Capitol and the House's final approval of a $450 million tax bill that now goes to the Senate.

Schwartz, the Senate's most outspoken liberal, drew Moore's rage by insisting he had the right to question a witness before the Senate State Affairs Committee.

Study May End Traffic Delays

By NANCY ALLEN

Avalanche-Journal Staff

A study designed to take some of the whimsy out of Lubbock's capricious traffic light system is now in the evaluation stage and the results are due for a practical tryout soon.

The study is being conducted by a Dallas traffic engineering firm, whose expertise, combined with computer programs, could reduce driving delays here by up to 40 percent. At least that's what city officials hope.

Approximately 140 of the city's more than 200 light-governed intersections are being scrutinized to determine whether changes in timing sequences would improve the overall traffic flow throughout Lubbock.

The $66,000 study, funded by the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation is similar to ones performed in El Paso, Fort Worth and Little Rock, Ark., which resulted in smoother traffic flow there.

"There is room for improvement in any traffic system," said Jack Hatchell of Pinnell, Anderson, Wilshire and Associates of Dallas.

The traffic consultants say smooth traffic flow not only reduces driver aggravation, but also makes for better gasoline economy and less air pollution.

Members of the firm and Lubbockites employed on a part-time basis began in October logging travel times within the system and pinpointing delays. Until January, they were at work "almost constantly" navigating the city streets in two-man teams, recording travel times between intersections and time spent waiting at intersections. Each intersection was clocked separately for left and right turn and straight-on delays.

Data gathered is being prepared for computer analysis. During April, new signal light timing programs will be prepared for implementation — again for evaluation — in May.

Traffic consultants will then "fine tune" the timing, stabilize the changes and prepare a final evaluation for city officials to approve.

Hatchell had no comment regarding how much improvement he expected to see within Lubbock's traffic system after the study is completed.

The "phase responsive" equipment installed by Lubbock after the 1970 tornado is restricted to only five timing plans, he commented. By contrast, unlimited programs are possible with sophisticated equipment now available.

Hatchell indicated, however, that without changing to an expensive master

Judy Carter Defends ERA

NEW YORK (AP) — A "malicious rumor" is being circulated to defeat the Equal Rights Amendment by preying on the "deep, unspoken fear people have about bathrooms," says one of President Carter's daughters-in-law.

Judy Carter, wife of the president's eldest son, Jack, wrote in Redbook magazine's April issue:

"A few wily political brains decided to make bathrooms a political issue... Attaching an emotional issue to the Equal Rights Amendment would hide the real issues of equal pay, equal education and legal rights for homemakers."

Mrs. Carter said unisex bathrooms have existed for centuries and buses, trains and airplanes have used them effectively for any years without infringing on anyone's privacy.

Healer Fails To Help Miss Rigg

LONDON (AP) — Faith healers failed to provide actress Diana Rigg relief from back problems, so the 40-year-old performer says she will try more conventional pain-killing treatment to postpone possible surgery.

After a month out of action with back trouble, Miss Rigg returned Monday to her starring role in Tom Stoppard's play, "Night and Day" at London's Phoenix Theater.

"Not only did I have to leave the show, but in addition to letting people down I cannot even fulfill my role as a mother," said the former star of television's "The Avengers" series. "I would like to put my 21-month-old baby, Rachel, to bed but leaning across a cot is the worst possible position for my trouble."

Alioto Delays Announcement

BOSTON (AP) — Former San Francisco Mayor Joseph Alioto says he has made a decision about whether to run again for mayor of the city by the bay. Tune in again in June to learn what he decided.

"If I made my announcement in Boston before San Francisco, I'd be in big trouble, big trouble," said Alioto, 62, adding that he would reveal his plans in June.

Alioto called a press conference Monday to announce the candidacy of his sister-in-law, Jean Sullivan McKeigue, 33, for the Boston School Committee. Alioto and his wife, Kathleen Sullivan Alioto, 35, a school committee member who made an unsuccessful bid for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate from Massachusetts last fall, have been living in San Francisco. Mrs. Alioto refused to disclose if she planned to resign from the five-member Boston School Committee.

Pope's Poems Published

NEW YORK (AP) — In a poetic mood 12 years ago, Pope John Paul II wrote of man, history and death. In "Easter Vigil 1966 — a conversation with God begins," the Pope wrote:

"The human body in history dies more often and earlier than the tree."

"Man endures beyond the doors of death and catacombs and crypts."

"Man who departs endures in those who follow."

"Man who follows endures in those departed."

"Man endures beyond all coming and going in himself and in You."

Excerpts from three of the former Karol Wojtyla's works, written under the pen name Andrzej Jawien, appear in the April issue of Ladies' Home Journal with special permission from the Vatican.

Wojtyla wrote poetry regularly in secret from 1950 to 1966. He was named a cardinal in 1967.

The three poems in the magazine are among a collection of his works to be published by various publishing houses around the world under the title "Easter Vigil and Other Poems." The book will be brought out here by Random House on March 31.

Paycheck Sues Record Firms

NEW YORK (AP) — Country music star Johnny Paycheck and his agent, CBS Inc., have filed a copyright infringement suit in an effort to halt marketing of old recordings which the singer claimed he made for demonstration purposes.

The suit, seeking $1 million in damages, was filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan in connection with a single entitled "Down on the Corner at a Bar Called Kelly's," and an album, "Johnny Paycheck-The Outlaw."

The complaint stated unauthorized material was taken from demonstration records Paycheck made early in his career, from 1964 to 1971, and "was never intended to be released."

The recordings are being "palmed off" as new or current Paycheck material by Little Darlin' Sound and Picture Co. of Nashville, Tenn., and Beta Record Distributors Inc. of Manhattan, according to the complaint.

Paycheck and CBS are asking the court to enjoin further distribution and seeks all profits the two defendant companies made from sales.

Kennedy-Trudeau Affair Denied

WASHINGTON (AP) — A spokesman for U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy says a report that Margaret Trudeau, estranged wife of Canada's prime minister, once had a brief affair with the 47-year-old Massachusetts Democrat is "completely untrue."

"It's a statement by the author of the article. It doesn't quote Mrs. Trudeau directly," Kennedy press spokesman Tom Southwick said Monday.

And the Canadian Press quoted a Kennedy spokesman as saying the report is "absolute rubbish," although the senator and Mrs. Trudeau had met each other on occasion.

The article, in the March 26 issue of Maclean magazine, said the purported romantic involvement with Kennedy was one of the factors in the disintegration of the marriage of Margaret and Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

The magazine, which has a circulation of 670,000, did not give a date for the reported affair.

It said the 30-year-old Mrs. Trudeau, who has three children, "confided" in 1977 that she had had an affair with Kennedy. The writer of the article, Judith Timson, refused to say Monday to whom Mrs. Trudeau supposedly told this.

The article said that Mrs. Trudeau said her husband was extremely annoyed when he found out about the supposed relationship with Kennedy. It also said that Mrs. Trudeau speculated about how traumatic it would be if Kennedy were elected president and he and Trudeau had to deal with each other as national leaders.

The magazine said it had not confirmed that Mrs. Trudeau was telling the truth but it said if she were, "it is difficult to determine which was the more monumental indiscretion — doing it or talking about it."

Mrs. Trudeau, who separated from her husband in the spring of 1977, could not be reached for comment on the article.

Mayor Rips Carter, Greets Rosalynn

CLEVELAND (AP) — First lady Rosalynn Carter was greeted in Cleveland by Mayor Dennis J. Kucinich and a newspaper story in which Kucinich blasted her husband.

Mrs. Carter stopped in Cleveland Monday on the way to Lorain, Ohio, the second stop of a four-city tour. The first lady is calling attention to volunteer programs. In Lorain she honored volunteers who redeveloped downtown and restored an old theater.

Before Mrs. Carter arrived, the Cleveland Press carried a front page story in which Kucinich said President Carter was ignoring Cleveland's fiscal woes. A copy of the story was carried aboard Mrs. Carter's jet before she stepped down to meet dignitaries. She shook hands with the maverick Democrat mayor and thanked his wife, Sandra, for some flowers, but she quickly moved down the receiving line without lingering for a conversation with the Kucinichs.

All In Favor, Say 'I Do'

AUSTIN (AP) — Between a tax relief debate and a committee meeting on "blue laws," the Texas House of Representatives took time for a wedding.

Rep. Ralph Wallace, D-Houston, exchanged vows Monday with Jo Ann Jansen of Huntsville in the packed gold and white House chamber.

The romance proceeded faster than some legislative actions. The 29-year-old, second-term legislator said he met his bride-to-be six weeks ago on a blind date. Two days later, he proposed to the Sam Houston State University interior design student.

Mrs. Wallace, 27, wore roses in her hair and a three-piece beige suit for the 15-minute ceremony. Wallace dressed in a black suit with a rose in his lapel.

The newlyweds planned a honeymoon in Peru.

Connally Says President Entitled To High Marks

BOSTON (UPI) — President Carter is "entitled to high marks" for his handling of peace negotiations between Israel and Egypt, but the United States should not be lulled into a "state of euphoria," Republican presidential candidate John B. Connally contends.

The former Texas governor was in Boston Monday as part of a three-day tour of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, his initial thrust at the nation's first two presidential primaries in 1980.

"I would have to say that the president is entitled to high marks in bringing Israel and Egypt together," said Connally. "I don't want to be in anyway critical, but I don't think the country ought to develop a state of euphoria."

"We have to go beyond this. We have to develop a Mideast policy. I hope we bring about a resolution to the Mideast problem and not just an accord between Egypt and Israel," he said.

Connally said he would not be surprised to see the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination go to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"I just think he's got an excellent chance to win the nomination," he said. "If I've ever seen a man run, he's been doing it the past eight months."

The former Nixon administration treasury secretary was sharply critical of the Carter administration's foreign, energy, and domestic policies and said his top priority would be "to re-establish our strengths."

Department Likely

To Sell Leases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department will likely begin selling petroleum leases in the North Atlantic this year.

Lawsuits have stalled plans to auction the underwater tracts in the North Atlantic off the U.S. coast for oil and gas exploration and development. But Interior Secretary Cecil D. Andrus said Monday a federal court of appeals has lifted the injunction that blocked the original North Atlantic sale, allowing it to proceed sometime this year. No date was announced. He added that a separate auction of leases in the Georges Bank area off New England has been rescheduled from November 1980, to August 1982.

Among those strengths he listed the massive American consumer market, high level technology and food production.

Congress is incapable of "fine tuning" the economy because it "always acts after the facts," he said, urging a greater reliance on private industry. He said there should be a greater effort to develop nuclear power and coal reserves as the nation's chief energy sources.

Connally criticized the Carter administration for rejecting a proposed natural gas sales agreement last year between the Mexican government and American firms and then planning to build an $11 billion gas pipeline through Canada.

"The Mexicans were rightly offended because they don't understand that government position and neither do I," he said. "We can't go on ignoring the facts of life and develop any kind of energy policy."

He said he wants a balanced federal budget, but "I don't favor a constitutional convention unless it can be limited to one item regarding federal spending. I don't think we ought to open a Pandora's Box."

Connally was scheduled to tour New Hampshire today and Wednesday.

Ford To Retire At Year's End

MELBOURNE, Australia (UPI) — Henry Ford II, the master of America's No. 2 automaker, made it official today and announced he will step down from his post by year's end.

Ford, 61, the grandson of the man who invented the Model T and the assembly line technique, did not say who would succeed him, but ruled out his son, Edsel B. Ford II, at least for the time being.

Ford said his son, who is the company's assistant managing director in Sydney, needs more experience, including assignment in the United States, before taking charge of the auto empire.

Ford's retirement apparently will leave the Dearborn-based automaker in the hands of company President and Vice Chairman Philip Caldwell, the first non-Ford to run the company since it was founded.

"As you may already know, by the end of the year I will have relinquished my executive duties with the Ford Motor Co.," Ford told reporters, reading from the same statement he had given to company executives last week.

"I do plan to continue my association with the company in other capacities but I will no longer be serving as chief executive officer," he said.

Lorenzo Believes Carriers Using Shortages As Excuse

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The president of Texas International Airlines, which is negotiating to take over National Airlines, believes air carriers nationwide will use energy shortages as an excuse to cut discount fares this summer.

"We believe there are some carriers who may seize upon the fuel situation as an ideal opportunity to attempt, in one way or another, to hike their fares back to higher levels — levels far higher than are economically justified by the real magnitude of fuel price increases," TIA President Frank Lorenzo said Monday.

In areas where carriers do not have "a low-fare commitment, we believe some consumers may find themselves being gouged," he told an aviation writers group.

Lorenzo said even with the problems in obtaining Iranian fuel supplies, fuel cost hikes should result only "in an increase of 1 percent in overall industry costs," which could be met with "small base fare increases or a nominal fuel price surcharge."

Lorenzo is a proponent of "useful" discount fares, primarily those available to a large number of passengers who show up at airline ticket counters. Texas Interna-

Gulf Oil Executive Says Production Time Gone

AUSTIN (AP) — Executive Vice President L.A. Ramsey of Gulf Oil Exploration and Production Co. said today the United States has "run out of whatever spare time we may have had" to increase crude oil production.

"This is not to say that the immediate supply situation is critical," said Ramsey. "It is not."

Ramsey told the Texas Railroad Commission the dropoff in Iranian production "collapsed the old time-frame" that provided a 5 to 10 year margin in developing non-oil energy sources.

Ramsey's testimony was prepared for delivery at the commission's annual meeting for oil and gas executives to tell the agency about the "state of the industry."

"To date," he said, "the temporary loss of Iranian crude has not created an absolute shortage of oil in the world, thanks to the fact that other OPEC nations have increased production somewhat and we have been able to draw on inventories. Strategic reserves and inventories throughout the non-Communist world are probably sufficient to allow importing countries to squeeze through 1979 without Iranian crude, if we have to."

He said the United States "could certainly avoid a crisis simply by conserving." He added, however, "serious conservation does not occur without the persuasive factor of higher prices."

"Demand for gasoline — of all the major petroleum products — should be reduced through the pricing mechanism, because demand for products from the lighter end of the barrel is far outstripping demand for heavier products," Ramsey said, and added:

"In fact, therein lie the seeds of the next real oil crisis: a scarcity of light crude oils resulting in a scarcity of gasoline, kerosene and naphtha for chemicals."

He said since the president's "decision on future crude oil prices will determine the future vitality of the U.S. energy industries and their ability to satisfy domestic demand for years to come, we consider this one — if not the — most important domestic decision he will be called upon to make as president."

Southwest Loses First Battle Of War

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — The folks at Southwest Airlines became popular in Texas for promising to "spread love," but they found a war waiting for them in Louisiana.

Southwest lost the first battle of the war Monday when the Orleans Parish Levee Board voted unanimously to block the airline from using Lakefront Airport on the eastern edge of New Orleans.

Southwest had hoped to use Lakefront for its new flights from New Orleans to Houston in the same way it already uses Hobby Airport in Houston and Love Field in Dallas.

The airline has made a reputation and lured a following among business people by offering meal-less, low-fare flights to smaller airports, away from crowded metropolitan airports.

Southwest started the tradition after an earlier battle in Texas. The airline went to court to win the right to land its Dallas flights at Love Field instead of Dallas-Fort Worth Regional, the world's largest airport.

That victory increased the airline's business by 50 percent and led to Southwest's advertising campaign about "spreading love" in Texas.

Company officials apparently figured they could parlay the idea even farther by expanding flights to New Orleans. They won federal approval to land at Lakefront and launched an advertising campaign, boasting $20 fares to Houston.

But, just as they did in Dallas, Southwest officials ran into trouble with their plan to fly into the smaller airport.

Residents of eastern New Orleans crowded public meetings for the past two months to complain the Southwest flights would bring increased safety hazards and raise noise levels that would lower their property values.

The levee board, which runs the airport, yielded to the strong public pressure and voted unanimously Monday to prohibit Southwest flights into Lakefront. The board did, however, urge aviation officials to find room for the airline at New Orleans International.

"We didn't mean to start World War II," Southwest President Howard Putnam told the vocal crowd that came to watch Monday's vote. "We certainly meant no offense. We intend to be good citizens and keep our fares low and we hope to see you on our flights."

15 Persons Injured In Trolley Crash

BOSTON (AP) — At least 15 persons were injured when a high-speed trolley car slammed into two others waiting for a stalled police car to be removed from the track, the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority said.

An 89-year-old Milton woman with a cerebral concussion and a 31-year-old South Weymouth man with face cuts and a broken nose were admitted in stable condition to Milton Hospital, where 11 others involved in Monday afternoon's accident were released after treatment.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

Let's Have None Of VAT

TREASURY SEC. W. Michael Blumenthal has put the administration on record as favoring serious consideration of adding a "value added tax" to the tax system. Basically, VAT is a sales tax levied progressively, at each stage of the production and marketing process, rather than all at once on the actual sale of finished products. Each distributor in the chain subtracts payments for materials received from the proceeds realized in passing products on to the next link and pays tax on the difference. By the time the finished item reaches the consumer, the total tax made of many separate taxes already paid is totally camouflaged in the retail price. There is no "plus tax" entry on the sales slip.

"POLITICIANS LIKE IT," says Blumenthal in explaining the beauty of this beast, "because it's a tax you can't see, although you do feel it."

As Sen. Russell Long, D-La., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, already are favorably disposed to the subject, it's virtually assured of an appearance before Congress.

Action on it, however, may be somewhat delayed since there are some objections to VAT that could provoke prolonged debate. Fortunately.

For one thing, as a tax on consumption, it has been criticized as regressive—it would hit harder on the middle and lower class, who spend a larger share of income on consumption of necessities.

Furthermore, it could have an inflationary impact since by being built into consumer goods prices, it would tend to raise them.

GRANTED, IT would be easier to collect. VAT came about in Western Europe about 10 years ago and the ease with which it has poured funds into treasuries there has more than piqued Washington's interest.

Blumenthal, who sees congressional action on VAT by 1981, argues that the regressive effect could be limited by exempting some items and taxing luxuries higher.

VAT obviously appeals to Washington as a possible way out of the unpopular upward trend in Social Security taxes, for example. VAT would not replace other taxes, but would be included in the already general mix of tax money pouring into federal coffers from every pocket.

VAT, for all its fans, would not in reality make taxes any lighter, only spread them around a bit and, as Blumenthal notes, reduce their visibility. But a tax is a tax is a tax. And payment in the end always comes from the same source—us.

Brown: Carter 'strange'

Associated Press
New York—California Gov. Brown, saying he is contemplating a run for the presidency, has openly attacked President Carter's leadership as "small-minded."

"I didn't think Carter was presidential material," Brown told reporters yesterday, recalling the 1976 campaign. He said nothing has changed his mind since.

Describing Carter as "an orderly" and "small-minded" and "sort of strange," Brown said the president is overly preoccupied with "small things."

John D. Lofton:

Bus Bandwagon Loses Booster

WASHINGTON—In the current issue of Human Rights, published by the American Bar Association's Individual Rights and Responsibilities Section, University of Chicago sociologist James S. Coleman—a longtime advocate of busing to achieve integration—spells out in detail how and why busing is not working.

Now, what Coleman has to say on this controversial subject deserves serious scrutiny. Coleman opposing busing is like Darwin having second thoughts about evolution or Newton calling for the repeal of the law of gravity.

The first of several erroneous assumptions about desegregation, says Coleman, was the assumption that the elimination of school segregation would eliminate nearly all racial segregation in education. But this hasn't happened.

INSTEAD, WHITE city dwellers moved to the suburbs and left most central-city school systems with black majorities.

Erroneous assumption No. 2, says Coleman, was that it was once assumed that integration would automatically improve the achievement of lower-class black children. But the way desegregation has been carried out, he has found, "does not generally bring achievement benefits to disadvantaged children."

The third mistaken assumption was that radical school desegregation would create instant racial balance, despite the objections by parents to the school assignments.

To the contrary, Coleman has discovered, "No school desegregation can be carried out...that imposes an extreme burden upon parents or children. Resourceful parents will find a way of improving their situation."

I LIVE IN Laurel, Md., in Prince George's County, about 20 miles from the nation's capital. Since court-ordered busing began in my county a little over six years ago, the number of whites attending our schools has dropped by almost 49,000—a decline of 41 percent. The number of blacks has increased by about 18,000, or 45 percent.

Before the court order—and one of the prime reasons for it—88 percent of Prince George's County black students attended majority-black schools.

WHEN THE first busing assignments were ordered six years ago, only one small school was slightly more than half black.

But now, even though almost no changes in attendance boundaries have occurred, 94 of our county's 226 schools have black majorities, including 10 schools that are more than 80 percent black. These majority-black schools now enroll almost 56 percent of Prince George's County black students.

In addition to these erroneous assumptions, Coleman cites other incorrect beliefs which he says have blocked other avenues to desegregation. First, it has been assumed that lower-class black parents, when provided with opportunity for choice in education, will not use it.

This has proven false, says Coleman, pointing out that many non-Catholic black parents have opted to send their children to urban Catholic schools, although it is a considerable financial burden to do so.

SECOND, THERE is the myth that an all-black school is inherently bad. Not so, says the professor, observing that "if a child is in an all-black school, it should be because he wants to be there and his parents want him to be there, not because it is the only school that he has a reasonable chance to attend."

Commenting on the so-called "white flight" problem in my county, James Garrett, chairman of the Black Coalition Against Unnecessary Busing, says:

"Let's face reality. You can't really mandate that you have whites in the schools. And I'm not willing to have my children chase them all the way to Charles County or Virginia just to sit next to them in the classroom...If you continue to bus and bus and bus, then almost the whole Prince George's school system is going to become black, and then where's the integration?"

An excellent question, Mr. Garrett, and a point well made. But I'm not hopeful that the pro-busing crowd will be answering it anytime soon. Facing reality has not been one of their strong points.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

ERA Is Dead

AS FAR AS I'M concerned, the Equal Rights Amendment is dead as of Thursday.

True, yielding to pressure, Congress last year extended the ratification deadline until June 30, 1982.

This, however, was an illegal action, in the opinion of many legal scholars.

Even if it weren't, the ERA will die with the passage of the original deadline Thursday because 30 of the states which have ratified it tied their approval in one way or another to that deadline.

On top of that, five of the 35 states which ratified the amendment later had second thoughts and rescinded their action. By twisting the Constitution, ERA proponents claim a state can't rescind but they haven't won that point yet, either.

THE ERA SOUNDS innocent enough. It merely says that "equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

After an initial rush of approval, in order to please the feminist voters, in 30 states within 12 months, the ERA bogged down.

Remembering how screwball the Supreme Court gets in interpreting what simple language means, legislators began voting "no" in state after state.

ERA proponents claim a state can vote again and again until it votes "yes" but that it can never again take up the issue once it has voted that way.

Paul Scott:

Will Carter Get 'Lead' Out?

WASHINGTON—How serious the shortage of gasoline will be this year and next could depend a great deal on whether President Carter sides with the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) or his newly created Energy Department.

At the center of the controversy is the EPA's highly questionable plan to go ahead and reduce the amounts of lead in gasoline this year despite the growing energy emergency.

The EPA has rejected appeals from Energy Department officials that the Agency's directive will seriously reduce gasoline supplies in the U.S. when there are compelling reasons to increase them.

The energy-clean air conflict is so serious that Sec. of Energy James R. Schlesinger has called on President Carter to step into the dispute and cancel the EPA directive or face the need for gasoline rationing.

IN A CONFIDENTIAL memorandum to the White House, Schlesinger has stressed that delaying the next major step in the phase-down of lead additives in gasoline could significantly ease the potential gasoline shortage that will confront the country because of the loss of Iranian oil imports.

Foreign oil shipments to the U.S. have been reduced by about 500,000 barrels a day since the Iranian oil fields were shut down by striking workers late last year.

Despite the partial reopening of oil production there, shipments are expected to lag and be cut in half for the rest of 1979.

The deficit could increase to 800,000 barrels a day as the U.S. is required to take a proportionate share of the world-wide shortage under terms of an international energy agreement that the U.S. has signed.

MORE CONCERNED about clean air than gasoline supplies, EPA officials are vigorously opposed to relaxing the lead standards.

They have notified the White House that they would only change their plans if ordered to do so by the President.

The next milestone in the lead phasedown is set for October 1. The current average amount of lead in gasoline is estimated at 1.2 grams a gallon. In Oct., EPA will require a reduction to 0.5 grams for nearly all refiners.

Lead is added to gasoline to boost the octane rating, a key indicator of performance.

But lead emissions in automobile exhaust are also recognized as a health hazard and EPA has required gasoline refiners to steadily reduce the average lead content in their products.

In order to boost octane ratings without the use of lead, oil companies must subject crude oil to additional refining steps, and the result is less and more expensive gasoline from a barrel of oil.

U.S. refiners in recent years have been reluctant to invest in additional refining equipment to raise octane levels because of federal price controls and regulations on oil.

Faced with that illogical argument, the ERA remains three states short of the 38 required for it to become a part of the Constitution.

"At most, there will be only four valid ratifications after the original seven-year deadline expires Thursday," opponents of the ERA claim.

So, the ERA is dead. Happily, true equality regardless of sex lives on.

With the death last week of John E. Vickers, Lubbock is without a Vickers in the practice of law for the first time in 70 years. His dad, J.E. Sr., came here, I'm told, in 1909.

The dean of the active law fraternity here, by the way, is Owen McWhorter who, according to My Unusually Unreliable Source, has had his shingle out for more than 60 years.

In case you missed it, the man who was the first head of the Texas Tech Journalism Department—Cecil Horne—died in England, Ark., a couple of months ago at age 96. He retired in 1950.

An Indiana coed accused her ex-lover/professor of giving her a failing grade out of spite. She argued that profs should give passes to girls outside classes.

It was an oversized envelope. Mailed in New York on a Wednesday. First class. Special Delivery. $2.90 postage. Was stamped "received" in Dallas on Friday, in Lubbock on Saturday. Got delivered to addressee in Lubbock on Monday. After the regular mail had run.

Headline: "Branch Library Approved for Lubbock."

The branch will, of course, have "Roots."

HOSPITAL daily service charges here are far below national averages, according to a 1978 survey of 2,929 hospitals by the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

In Lubbock, private room charges averaged $70.50, a semi-private room $64.50 and intensive care $163 per day. The corresponding national averages were $103, $104.50 and $235.50.

(The higher average nationally for a semi-private room than for a private room was explained by a higher level of rates and a higher ratio of semi-private to private beds in some states.)

IN TEXAS, THE survey found the average daily service charges for a private bed to be $83.50, for a semi-private bed $76 and intensive care $171.50, making Lubbock below the state average.

Averages, of course, can be misleading. The survey showed that the average daily cost in intensive care in Dallas hospitals was $186.50.

I can show you bills for a five-week stay there where the average daily hospital charges exceeded $1,100—which, of course, does not include physicians' bills.

Don't Wait To Erase Withholding Mistakes

LATE IN 1977, Miriam (an acquaintance of mine) began to suspect that her former employer had supplied false information to the U.S. government about her Social Security and income tax deductions after she had changed jobs three years before.

She wrote for her records and found her suspicions confirmed. But even though she had caught the error relatively quickly, she and her husband are still corresponding with Washington and Baltimore in an effort to straighten out the situation.

"Rare" is the way Social Security describes such wage discrepancies. But "rare" seems a slippery word in view of the fact that the SS Administration itself reports some 2.9 million such differences turn up each year!

MANY DON'T come to light for 30-40 years after the mistakes occur—when a worker applies for retirement benefits.

By then, it may be next to impossible to correct the data, since the federal government puts the burden of proof on us to document how much money it has taken from us. And when. And for what.

If your employer tells you he has paid you X dollars and withheld X dollars for the U.S. government, but tells the U.S. government another story—as was the case with Miriam—the federal government accepts your employer's word, not yours.

Often big money is at stake. For some of you, for instance, your SS withholdings this year might have jumped 31 percent.

TRUE, THE FEDERAL Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) rate rose only slightly—from 6.05 percent in '78 to 6.13 percent in '79. But this new rate applies to $22,900 of earnings in '79, against the first $17,700 last year.

So your top '79 contribution is $1,403.77, against $1,070.85 before—a jump of nearly one-third.

Check your Social Security records at least every three years to make sure the records on you are right. Get the form for such checking—OAR-7004, "Request for Statement of Earnings"—by going in person to your local district SSA office, or by writing Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Md. 21235.

If you pick up your form in person, you'll avoid the risk that your form may be "lost" (as Miriam's was). You can ask for as many as 40 years of records and can specify the detail you need—yearly totals only, earnings by quarters, names of employers.

UNDER THE Freedom of Information Act, charges that ranged to as much as $91 for records going back a full 40 years, are waived. But if you want a certification that the records are correct you must pay a $3.00 certification fee.

This first step could take you two-three months. And for most of you, that will be it. The records will be correct and you will simply repeat your request every three years until you retire.

But if you find a discrepancy, you need a few forms: "Request for Correction of Earnings Records" (OAR-7008, this time). When you go to your SS district office to pick up the forms, take with you all records bearing on the issue—originals, not carbons.

From the IRS to the Social Security Administration, the federal government's attitude is that you're a cheat. You are fighting a massive bureaucracy which tends toward this belief—and your only defense is your own documentation that you are not.

In Miriam's case, her former employer (a large ad agency, not a small firm), admitted part of the mistake at once. The report that she had been paid just one-third of what she had really earned was no more than a "clerical error," the employer maintained.

But the "correction" created other problems: money had been diverted from income tax withholding, too; controversy arose over when funds had been paid. IRS ruled one way, then another, then a third.

And only after two Freedom of Information Act requests had been filed—to find out what her employer had said and when the firm had said it—was any corrective action even started.

"SOCIAL SECURITY was bad," Miriam now says with bitterness. "Slow, distrustful, disinterested. But maybe SS should be; it's our money that is being paid out."

"IRS, though, is simply terrible. Slow, distrustful, disinterested, incompetent—taking our money, perhaps way too much."

IRS is still holding Miriam's "contributions."

Lesson For You: Check Social Security every three years; be prepared to document everything; don't risk losing thousands of dollars in benefits years from now when you retire.

Residents Along Border Have Few Disagreements

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — Residents along the Mexico border have lived pleasantly with their Mexican neighbors for decades, and so were disturbed by the tension between President Carter and Mexico President Jose Lopez Portillo during their talks last month.

They suggest that the leaders of both countries study international relations at places like Brownsville and Matamoros and El Paso and Ciudad Juarez.

Led by Rep. Kika De La Garza, D-Texas, and Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, officials are pointing out to those who live miles from the border, in Washington and Mexico City, that there has been a longstanding international way of doing things, called "amistad" — "friendship" — and that it works.

De La Garza, whose absence from Carter's entourage to Mexico City was conspicuous to border officials, cites the numerous international festivals each year in twin cities along the 1,933-mile border, and years of cooperative problem solving.

"It demonstrates broadly that our relations are vastly better on the border than they seem to be in the capitals of the two nations," De La Garza said.

Mayor Arnoldo Ramirez of Mission, Texas, chairman of the Texas Good Neighbor Commission, said Carter should have sought advice about the Mexican people and traditions before the trip, and taken someone along to provide day-to-day counsel.

With such advice, the mayor said, Carter possibly could have avoided his embarrassing remark about "Montezuma's revenge" and subsequent stern words from the Mexican president, who might merely have been sticking up for his people.

"I think Kika (De La Garza) should have been invited to that meeting in Mexico, at least to instruct the president so he would anticipate some of the things that had happened," Ramirez said.

"You've got to know the people, the character, the chemistry. If the president had called on any of us here along the border... We know how they react and where their sensitivity is."

Amistad has worked for years.

For instance, the recent 82nd George Washington's Birthday celebration in Laredo — which outdates the New Orleans Mardi Gras — took place on both sides of the border. It featured a handshake at the center of the international bridge between the sons of the countries' two presidents. But Lopez Portillo forewent the traditional "abrazo" with Carter in Mexico City.

In Laredo, Rep. Abraham Kazen, D-Texas, was honored as Mr. South Texas, while downriver 200 miles Mexican movie-radio-television star David Reynosa was named Mr. Amigo in the joint Charro Days Celebration which features a lively international parade across the Rio Grande between Brownsville and Matamoros, Mexico.

Mexican comedian Mario Moreno, who once drew criticism from some American groups for a film poking fun at the U.S. cowboy in the same fashion that Mexicans are stereotyped taking a siesta by a cactus in American films, is a frequent visitor to international festivals from California to Texas. He participated in the Laredo festival and has been honored several times in San Antonio.

Many Mexican football, soccer and other sports teams schedule games each year against U.S. colleges and high schools. Mexican and American entertainers work fiestas on both sides of the border, movies are exchanged, dance and drama groups move back and forth, and economic, crime abatement and education groups conduct running discussions on border problems.

"We trade multi-millions of dollars worth of goods annually," De La Garza said. "We have similar geo-political outlooks and millions of Mexican citizens live north of the border. We get along. We entertain each other and respect each other's viewpoints."

"Our national leaders should take a hint."

Firm Offers Chinese Restaurants

By PAUL H. ANDERSON
HONG KONG (UPI) — A Hong Kong firm is marketing the ultimate in Chinese takeouts — a complete restaurant.

Chau Kwan Designs, named after the Chinese god of the kitchen, offers complete prefabricated restaurant interiors for shipment anywhere in the world. It will even supply the chef.

"Chau Kwan will provide everything from exterior facades, ceilings and wall panels to chopsticks, uniforms and publicity. If needed, it will even recruit a chef and provide six months' of special Chinese food ingredients," says a company brochure.

The first of the company's major projects is en route to New Orleans for installation in the Hyatt Regency Hotel. The 13,000-square-foot restaurant, to be known as the Imperial Palace Regency, is owned by Mrs. Lorraine Lee.

It is to be decorated in what the firm calls the Ching Imperial style, one of six historical themes available from Chau Kwan.

It will include a piano bar "which is decidedly not very Chinese," company spokeswoman Jacki Passmore said.

For the New Orleans restaurant, Chau Kwan designed and commissioned artisans to hand carve tables, chairs, wall and ceiling panels and an octagonal pagoda-style bar. The firm also supplied some uniforms, menu covers and hand-painted crockery from Hong Kong.

"When we announced the plan to sell prefabricated Chinese restaurants, one of the first letters we got was from Mrs. Lee," Miss Passmore said. "The order was signed and we sent someone to New Orleans to measure the space very carefully" so the prefabricated sections could be constructed. Assembly takes about 30 days.

"Mrs. Lee has sent out invitations for an Easter opening, but I think she's being a little optimistic," Miss Passmore said.

"The kind of speed we can offer in designing and putting together a complete and authentic Chinese restaurant is not possible anywhere in the world but in Hong Kong," she said. "Here, a chair can be designed in the morning and a craftsman can actually start carving it in the afternoon."

"For the Imperial Palace Regency, handcrafted wood paneling and gilded woodwork, hand engraved and molded metal fixtures in copper, stainless steel and brass give the restaurant the traditional opulence of the Ching Dynasty," she said.

Most of the components were handcrafted in small Hong Kong workshops. Wall and ceiling panels were assembled to check for fit and then taken apart and packed for shipping.

The showpiece, a three-tiered stainless steel and brass pagoda that will serve as the centerpiece for the bar, was made in a small shop and cost more than $4,200.

Miss Passmore said the total price for the prefabricated restaurant was nearly $320,000.

"Most of the hand work that has gone into this restaurant probably couldn't be done in the United States," she said. "Even if it could, it would cost far in excess of the Hong Kong price."

"What we are able to offer is great authenticity in Chinese design, tailored to each customer's order, great speed and savings in construction of the components and easy assembly when the sections are delivered."

"It is a great tribute to the craftsmen of Hong Kong."

Regulation Blocks Claim Collection

The claim by the Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate Conception was based on the loss of two orphanages, a hospital, and a school abandoned in 1948 when communist troops swept through Tientsin and Shantung provinces on the mainland.

Thick White Sock Makes Funny Bunny

By SHARI LEWIS

Easter's coming, and at this very moment that dumb Easter Bunny is probably hopping toward your house. Just in case he isn't, would you like to make a bunny puppet? If you do it now, you'll have time to prepare your funny bunny's act before the holiday.

Here's how: Start with a thick white sock. Cut down the middle of the toe (through both thicknesses). Before you get to the heel, stop snippin'. Turn the sock inside out, sew up the "V" to make your bunny's ears. Then turn the sock (and the ears) right side out again. Stick your pointer and middle fingers into the ears and wiggle 'em.

Now mark (lightly, with pencil) where you want to put the eyes, nose, whiskers or whatever. Take off the sock. Either sew or glue features (paper or fabric), or draw 'em with felt-tip pen.

Put the puppet on, roll up the open end of the sock to form a cuff, and you've made a honey of a bunny!

Britain Plans To Turn To Coal

By THOMAS L. FRIEDMAN
LONDON (UPI)—"What are you going to do when the well runs dry?" asked Britain's Undersecretary for Energy Alex Eadie. "We've made up our minds. It's coal."

When the Middle East and North Sea oil wells pump no more—and sooner or later that is going to happen—Britain plans to run its cars, power its factories and produce its petrochemicals with the fuel that first made it an industrial giant: coal.

Not ordinary coal, but coal turned into crude oil.

"Coal is not just a lump of black stuff you throw on the fire," said Keith Beeston, spokesman for the British National Coal Board (NCB). "Once you liquify coal, what you've actually got is oil."

"You can either look at coal as solid oil or oil as liquid coal."

After coal is in liquid form, said Beeston, "you can make virtually everything from it that you can make from oil with the existing oil refining techniques."

The British government recently granted the National Coal Board, which runs the coal industry, nearly $2 million to design two plants for extracting oil from coal.

Although Britain hopes to be energy self-sufficient by 1980—using North Sea oil and gas, coal, and atomic energy—it expects to remain so for only a decade.

By the 1990s, experts expect oil to be very expensive and very scarce. Britain's North Sea reserves will be on the decline and it will have to limit petroleum to premium uses like motor transport.

At that point, the British government wants to be ready with the technology to switch gradually from an oil-based petrochemical industry to one based on liquid coal.

"The oil companies are investing in coal as fast as they can," said Beeston. "They see the writing on the wall. They realize that their existing crude oil is limited in quantity and subject to all sorts of political uncertainties."

Britain is looking at two methods for turning coal to oil, both of which have successfully produced gasoline and other petrochemicals in laboratory tests at the NCB research center in Cheltenham.

Using the "liquid solvent extraction" technique, a hot chemical solvent is poured over coal, dissolving it into a tarry liquid. Hydrogen is added—oil contains twice as much hydrogen as coal—and it is then refined. The end product, researchers say, is ideally suited for refining into transport and aviation fuels.

In the "gas solvent extraction" method, coal is dissolved by exposing it to a very hot compressed gas. Various stages of processing produce a tar-like solution which is hydrogenated and refined. This method is particularly effective for producing petrochemicals used in the manufacture of plastics, resins, rubbers, artificial fibers and paints.

The only major drawback with both methods is the price. A major coal refinery would cost about $3 billion to build. Coal Board officials estimate a barrel of oil from such a refinery would cost about $26, compared with the OPEC price—constantly rising—of about $13 a barrel.

"It sounds like a lot of money," says Irving Oldfield, an official with the NCB. "But energy is a lot of money."

Price does not concern Alex Eadie. If Britain is going to remain a leading industrial power, he said, it is going to require a petrochemicals industry. And the only way to be sure of a continuing supply is by exploiting the coal lying beneath the British Isles.

Britain, with its estimated 300 years worth of coal reserves, will be in a very strong position to sustain itself.

Indianapolis House Being Monitored

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press Writer

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to home owners:

A house in the suburbs of Indianapolis is being monitored to determine the cost of heating and air conditioning as compared with more traditionally designed homes. Dubbed "solaire," its heat pump is augmented by a solar furnace. The construction technique is called the plenwood system and uses the entire under-floor area of a house as a plenum or chamber to distribute warm or cool air to floor registers in the various rooms. The Romans used such construction more than 2,000 years ago and called it hypocaust, meaning underfloor heater.

New residential communities and resorts are being built around facilities having special appeals. One of the most unusual is at Wellington in West Palm Beach, Fla., where polo is the big thing. The community includes five polo fields, a polo grandstand, an equestrian center and a polo house, as well as the usual golf course, tennis courts, swimming pools, etc. The $150,000 World Cup of Polo will be held there April 3-15.

In Davis, Calif., a 70-acre subdevelopment has every house facing the sun so as to take advantage of solar radiation. Sixty houses of a planned 196 already are up. Window overhangs are calculated so that they shade the windows during the warm weather and expose them during the cooler weather. The glass you see on the roofs may be for solar water heaters or just windows for additional passive solar heating.

If you own a house built before 1920 and you are having difficulty obtaining anything needed for an authentic restoration, there's a new comprehensive catalog to assist you. It's called the Old-House Journal Catalog and lists 662 companies that sell items for the decorating and restoring of such houses. Included are things from the Early American period between 1700 and 1840 and the Victorian era.

City Officials Warn Bill Will Hike Electric Rates

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Expect higher rates and poorer service from Texas electric companies if a bill approved by a Senate committee Monday becomes law, Lubbock city officials warn.

The bill, sponsored by Houston Sen. Gene Jones, would remove jurisdiction over electric utility rates from cities and give it to the state Public Utility Commission.

"That will in the end be costly to the people in Lubbock," City Councilman Bill McAllister predicted.

He and City Manager Larry Cunningham pointed to the PUC takeover of telephone rate-setting as an example of what the future holds for Lubbockites if Jones' bill is passed.

Although telephone rates were lowered in some parts of the state by the PUC, rates rose in Lubbock, they said.

The rates were set on a statewide and systemwide cost, Cunningham said, "not on the cost of doing business in that locality."

Under the systemwide rate structure Lubbock customers "subsidize" other communities where the cost of providing service is higher, he said.

Cunningham likened that situation to Lubbock asking Austin or Corpus Christi "to help with our water supply problem — they'd probably tell us where we can get off," he said.

In the process of "equalizing" rates throughout the state, "those with good rates get poor rates and those with poor rates get good rates," he said.

As for claims by some of the state's electric companies that giving the rate authority to the PUC would mean lower electric rates, Cunningham disagreed.

If it costs a $20-million utility $50,000 to defend its rate request before a city council, eliminating that cost "won't even lower rates a penny a month," Cunningham said.

"I think, if anything, we will have increased rates," he said.

Local control over rates also means local responsibility for service, Cunningham and McAllister said.

"As far as service, if there's any problems, call the PUC (if the bill passes)," Cunningham said.

"I feel like the city council over the years has done an outstanding job" setting electric rates, he said.

"Our city councils have taken their rate-making responsibility very seriously and we have very good rates as a result," Cunningham said.

The Senate bill would take away that authority and "give it to people who are not that concerned with rates in Lubbock," he said.

McAllister said he believes "people on the local level do a better job protecting local interests" — a principle the bill would violate.

"In Lubbock's situation the council is doing a much better job watching over rates than a state board," he said, adding the bill is "definitely a detriment and very bad."

The public has "easy accessibility to the city council but would have a hard time getting to the PUC," he said.

Because municipally-owned electric companies such as Lubbock Power and Light would not be affected by the bill, there is some uncertainty what effect PUC control would have on the rates of competing Southwestern Public Service.

Traditionally, the rates charged by the two companies have been the same.

Cities have had the option of allowing the PUC to set local electric rates, but only three of 1,100 have used the option in the past four years.

Former Teacher Says Campaign Sparked Harassment By LISD

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Edith O'Brien, a teacher who last year ran for the Lubbock Independent School District board of trustees, claims the district tried to harass her at election time by docking her salary about $600.

And Mrs. O'Brien said Monday her suspicions seem to be supported by the district's sudden decision to settle the back-pay dispute just hours before it was to be aired in court.

School officials deny that the episode had any political overtones. They maintain there were legitimate reasons for cutting Mrs. O'Brien's salary last spring. School officials said they opted to settle out of court because the disputed amount was so small.

"I firmly believe that if I had not run for the school board, I would not have been subjected to this ordeal," said Mrs. O'Brien, who quit her job as an Alderson Junior High School science teacher at the end of the 1977-78 academic year.

"I really don't think this was a matter of $500. I think it was much bigger than that — the school district administration was sounding a warning that teachers aren't supposed to speak out," she told The Avalanche-Journal.

School board President Charles Waters called that charge "pure fabrication." He added: "There is no substance at all" to the allegation.

Mrs. O'Brien, believed to be the first active teacher here to seek a seat on the school board, announced her candidacy in January 1978.

In campaigning for the April 1, 1978, election, she publicly criticized the incumbent board and administration. Among other things, Mrs. O'Brien accused the school system of encouraging "social promotions" and low academic standards, and of designing an "inadequate" desegregation plan.

Mrs. O'Brien said she told the administration that if she won, she would resign her teacher's job immediately as required by law. Otherwise, she said, she planned to quit at the end of the 1977-78 school term.

Of the five candidates in the Place 2 race, attorney Brad Crawford Jr. won with 42 percent of the vote. Mrs. O'Brien finished with 15 percent.

On April 3, 1978, the Monday after the election, Mrs. O'Brien said the school system notified her that an error had been made in computing her 1977-78 salary.

Instead of getting the $13,390 specified in her contract, Mrs. O'Brien said she was told she was supposed to receive only $12,830. School officials recouped the $560 difference by taking it out of her remaining paychecks, she said.

According to school administrators, the reason for the adjustment was that Mrs. O'Brien's experience record had been audited and found faulty by the Texas Education Agency.

The agency, administrators said, discovered that Mrs. O'Brien should not have received experience credit for her first year of teaching, which was a half-day position in a private school in Augusta, Ga.

Thus, administrators said, Mrs. O'Brien's 1977-78 salary should have been based on nine years of experience, rather than 10 years. Consequently, they dropped her one step on the school district's salary schedule — from $13,390 to $12,830.

Superintendent Ed Irons was unavailable for comment Monday. However, he has said in past interviews that the discrepancy in Mrs. O'Brien's experience record was uncovered in a routine audit by state authorities. The audit took place in the fall of 1977, Irons and other local officials have said.

Irons said the school district went to bat for Mrs. O'Brien and tried to get the matter resolved without docking her pay. He said the district has extensive documentation to that effect and was prepared to offer such evidence in court.

Mrs. O'Brien's situation could have been worse, Irons said, because the school district could have tried to recoup previous years' overpayments. Mrs. O'Brien taught in the Lubbock school system three years.

Mrs. O'Brien protested the cut in her last paychecks of the 1977-78 school term. She retained attorney Thomas Griffith to attempt to recover the money. When preliminary negotiations failed, Griffith filed a suit on Oct. 17, 1978 in 99th District Court.

The suit accused the school system of breach of contract regarding Mrs. O'Brien's employment. The suit sought the remaining $560 in salary, plus interest, and $1,500 in attorney fees.

The litigation was scheduled for trial last week, Mrs. O'Brien said. But only hours before the hearing, she said the school district notified Griffith of a proposed out-of-court settlement.

"He said the school administration agreed to pay my salary but that they would not pay my attorney fees. We decided to let it go at that," Mrs. O'Brien said.

The case subsequently was dismissed, and Mrs. O'Brien has received from the school district a check for $606 — her back pay plus interest.

Mrs. O'Brien said she is suspicious of the whole affair. And she suggested that the school district "didn't want me to go to court because it would cause so much bad publicity."

"I think I won a moral victory," she said. "I think they (school officials) were trying to intimidate me. Somebody needed to call their hand on it."

Some teachers saw Mrs. O'Brien's case as a warning for them to stay out of politics. "That's what it said to me," Mrs. O'Brien said.

She said there is an "outside chance that it (the experience-record discrepancy) turned up as a result of an audit." But it's an "awfully big coincidence" that the audit was conducted about the time of her school board campaign, she said.

Also, if the audit was conducted in the fall of 1977, "why wasn't I notified until April of 1978?" Mrs. O'Brien asked.

"Personally, I don't believe it (discovery of the discrepancy) resulted from an audit. I think they (the administration) initiated it," she said.

She also said she doubts that the school district attempted to help her in working out the problem with the Texas Education Agency.

Mrs. O'Brien admits that under TEA rules, her first year of teaching should not have been counted in calculating her Lubbock salary. However, she said she did not knowingly break the rules — and that the Lubbock school system should have detected the discrepancy earlier.

Her first year of teaching was accepted as experience when she taught in North Augusta, S.C. public schools, Mrs. O'Brien said.

Educator Awarded Damages

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A high school student who slugged a teacher in 1978 said Monday he learned his lesson after a state judge awarded the teacher $2,396 in damages.

Educators called the verdict in favor of Eugene Sloan a "landmark," saying it's the first Texas case in which a teacher won damages from a student attacker.

"I wouldn't do it again, I'll never do that again," said Richard Salinas, who said he struck Sloan "to get even" for an incident earlier in 1978.

"This case might well lead to a review of local policies across the state," said Texas Education Commissioner M.L. Brockett. "Policies will probably grow more strict for the protection of teachers and of students."

Lawyers for Salinas downplayed the impact of the decision, as did assistant superintendent Dr. Dwayne Bliss.

"I don't foresee any change in discipline," Bliss said. "We keep discipline as tight as we can and still keep students in school."

Sloan said he felt "justified." "I think it will be a good deterrent to students who think they can beat up a teacher," said Sloan. "It should mean more protection for teachers."

Salinas said said a hallway incident in which he and a friend were suspended from Moody High School eventually triggered the attack. He said he did nothing wrong to warrant the suspension. "I said I was going to get even," Salinas said.

Six months later, as Sloan was seated grading papers, Salinas punched him, causing cuts and a black eye.

Hundreds Gather To Await Return

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, Calif. (AP) — Hundreds of tourists gathered at San Juan Capistrano Mission to await the annual return of the legendary swallows, but few said they saw a flock circle the 182-year-old mission and then land — as tradition decrees.

Mission officials had said they were afraid that Monday morning's chilly, damp weather would delay the swallows' traditional arrival on St. Joseph's Day, March 19, for the first time since 1935. But a mission spokesman said the small, fork-tailed birds arrived at 10:18 a.m. They spend summer here after a 7,000-mile trip from Argentina.

Panel Confirms Brooke's Wrongdoings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Ethics Committee said today that former Massachusetts Sen. Edward Brooke acted improperly and violated Senate rules but that his conduct was not severe enough to warrant punishment.

The committee concluded that Brooke, by testifying falsely about a loan during an acrimonious settlement with his wife, engaged in conduct which reflected unfavorably upon the Senate.

The committee also found that Brooke committed technical violations of Senate rules by failing to properly report some of his assets.

Brooke said in a prepared statement that "With the single exception of the original misstatement (about the loan) which I acknowledged and apologized for nearly 10 months ago, the committee has searched in vain for anything more serious than poor record keeping."

"A Senate seat has been lost, a career jeopardized and family, friends and associates been wrung through an emotional ordeal almost beyond imagining..." he added.

Ethics Committee Chairman Adlai Stevenson said the committee's findings were not serious enough to have brought further proceedings against Brooke even if he were a member of the Senate today.

And committee member Robert Morgan, D-N.C., said the most serious accusation — that Brooke testified falsely under oath — already has been found by a court in Massachusetts "not to be of material and relevant matter" affecting the divorce proceedings.

Because Brooke, a Republican, lost his re-election bid in November, he no longer is subject to Senate sanctions even if the committee had found serious wrongdoing.

Release of the report ended the committee's investigation of Brooke's financial affairs — an inquiry kept alive by the Massachusetts Republican's own insistence that it be completed.

The committee found that Brooke testified under oath on May 12, 1977, during his divorce settlement that he owed A. Raymond Tye $40,000. The panel also found that Brooke stated May 15, 1978, in his public finance disclosure statement filed with the Senate that the loan from Tye totaled $2,000.

The committee concluded that Brooke's second statement about the loan was "substantially correct." The committee added: "However, the giving of false testimony under oath by a United States senator is improper conduct which reflects unfavorably on the United States Senate."

Brooke previously acknowledged making "misstatements" about the loan.

The ethics panel also found that Brooke improperly failed to report, in financial statements filed with the Senate in 1970 and 1971, his holdings in a Dutch West Indies corporation and his guarantee of a loan of $32,500 from the Bank of Nova Scotia.

The committee found his joint tenancy in an apartment in Washington with his mother should have been reported, that a disputed bill of $8,000 for construction work in 1974 should have been listed as a liability, and that he should have reported as either a loan or a business asset a $27,500 amount in an International Investors venture in 1972.

The committee concluded that Brooke did not act improperly in casting his vote in favor of Medicaid assistance at a time when his mother-in-law was a Medicaid recipient, because there was no evidence Brooke personally knew his mother-in-law was a recipient.

The panel also found that Brooke publicly disclosed his interest in 3,600 shares of Rem-Win stock in 1974 and thus "it does not appear that he deliberately falsified confidential disclosure reports."

The panel concluded Brooke properly reported his daughters as income tax deductions from 1971 through 1975 and that there was no evidence he used his position as a senator to obtain reduced medical bills on behalf of his mother-in-law. Brooke, who had been a member of the Senate for 12 years, was defeated by Paul E. Tsongas in the November elections.

Despite the defeat, Brooke insisted that the committee complete the investigation. He came to Washington in February to appear before the committee to answer questions about the financial transactions.

Although the committee never held public hearings on the Brooke investigation, it did hold one open hearing to hear allegations made by its special investigator after he resigned.

That hearing occurred Oct. 24 — just two weeks before the general election in which Brooke was defeated.

At that hearing, Richard J. Wertheimer, the lawyer hired by the committee to investigate Brooke's affairs, claimed that attorneys for Brooke had unnecessarily delayed the probe, that certain documents relating to the inquiry had been altered and that other documents were not produced despite the committee's request for them.

Report Shows Korean Denied Giving Passman Contributions

MONROE, La. (UPI) — Defense attorneys today introduced a 1978 Justice Department report that showed South Korean businessman Tongsun Park told federal investigators he never paid campaign contributions to former Rep. Otto Passman, D-La.

The report, based on a Justice Department interview with Park just before he fled the United States for 16 months, also showed Park denied paying cash campaign contributions to several other congressmen.

Park is the government's key witness in the bribery and tax evasion trial of Passman. The South Korean was spending his fifth day on the witness stand today.

"Park has never paid any contributions to Passman for his rice business," a Justice Department report of the September 1976 interview stated. "He doesn't need congressmen's help in his business dealings, rather the congressmen need his help."

Park himself testified last week he once told investigators he never paid campaign contributions to congressmen. He said he made the statement in 1976 to "protect my friends in the United States."

Defense attorney Camille Gravel read the documents to the nine-man, three-woman jury, apparently to point out the change in Park's official testimony.

Park testified last year he paid a total of $800,000 in cash contributions to several congressmen, including $193,000 to Passman.

The prosecution contends the money was a payoff from Park for Passman's help in arranging rice deals between the United States and South Korea. Passman has denied receiving any money from Park.

Park's latest testimony came less than 24 hours after defense attorneys asked all charges against Passman be dismissed.

Worker Says Leakage Common

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — It wasn't unusual to be contaminated with radioactivity twice a week in Kerr-McGee Corp.'s nuclear fuel plant, a former worker testified Monday.

William Apperson, 31, of Cushing began testifying late Monday afternoon in the $11.5 million Karen Silkwood plutonium contamination case. He said during his four years as a Kerr-McGee maintenance worker, he complained repeatedly about poor welding on overhead liquid plutonium pipes.

Miss Silkwood's survivors are suing Kerr-McGee claiming company negligence led to her contamination with plutonium. Kerr-McGee contends she contaminated herself, either accidentally or possibly to dramatize her accusations about plant conditions. She died in a 1974 auto accident.

Apperson said he was never told plutonium can cause cancer.

He said many times he and co-workers painted over floors and found the paint peeled, transferring radioactivity to shoe soles.

U.S. District Judge Frank G. Theis adjourned court for the day when Kerr-McGee lawyers objected to testimony about an air-compressor accident in which a worker was killed. Apperson said he had complained about untrained workers maintaining the unit minutes before the fatal accident.

One of Miss Silkwood's co-workers testified Monday she was emotionally upset by alleged irregularities at the plant.

James Noel, 36, of Oklahoma City testified after about five hours of closed-door discussions among lawyers and the judge. The conversations reportedly concerned one procedural point and the surrender of plant personnel files and other documents.

In a phone call about one month before her death, Noel said Miss Silkwood "was quite distraught."

He said she was concerned about unaccounted for radioactive material, alleged plutonium plant safety violations, and her belief "the workers and the public at large didn't know the hazards of the facility."

During the conversation, Noel said Miss Silkwood told him "quality control reports were being tampered with."

Noel repeated testimony similar to that given by earlier witnesses about casual worker attitudes toward contamination and a lack of security and specialized training at the Kerr-McGee nuclear facility. He said he was never told plutonium can cause cancer.

When an alarm went off once in the Kerr-McGee uranium plant where he worked before transferring next door to the plutonium plant, one co-worker didn't understand the warning meant a dangerous amount of radioactive material was present in a certain area.

"He was wondering why we were running," Noel said.

He said he was fired in 1973 after Kerr-McGee refused to honor a promise that he could work evenings and attend day classes at a nearby university. Silkwood attorney Gerry Spence attempted to link the firing to Noel's activity in the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union.

Judge In Davis Divorce Threatens To Adjourn

FORT WORTH (AP) — Retired Judge John Barron, up from Bryan to hear the marathon divorce case of Cullen and Priscilla Davis, listened to lawyers argue about their fee prospects Monday, then threatened to return home to hunt rabbits.

Barron said he was upset with the pace of the trial, where huge sums of money have been banded about freely.

"Don't get me iired up, is all I ask, because I've got a hell of a temper when I do," the 65-year-old jurist said. "If we can't make headway, I'm going to adjourn this case for about 10 days or two weeks... and I'm going to back to Bryan and do some rabbit hunting."

Mrs. Davis is seeking the couple's $6 million mansion, plus a huge cash settlement from her multimillionaire husband, whose available funds have been debated during the trial.

Monday, attorneys testified as to their worth. Houston lawyer John Nichols, testifying as an expert in behalf of Cullen Davis, said Mrs. Davis' lawyers should receive $100,000 to $150,000 for their efforts on behalf of their client over the five years the case has been pending.

Her lawyers, Jerry Loftin and Ronald Aultman, contend they should receive $3.5 million. They have also produced other attorneys to back up their claims.

Nichols acknowledged on the stand that he is being paid $150 per hour by Davis for his testimony as an expert witness, plus expenses.

Nichols testified that after reviewing Aultman's and Loftin's time sheets and various legal papers filed in connection with the case, he felt they put in too much unnecessary time on the case and have duplicated each other's efforts.

Loftin had testified he and Aultman should be awarded $3.5 million for their work in the case, which they have labeled the most complicated divorce proceeding in Texas history.

In 1848, Louis Philippe of France, the last Capetian king, abdicated and left for England.

Attorneys To Present Questionnaire On Sex

ATLANTA (AP) — Attorneys for Hustler magazine owner Larry Flynt, charged with violating local obscenity laws, have been told they can present written questionnaires to prospective jurors asking their attitudes on sexual matters.

Jury selection was scheduled today before State Court Judge Nick Lambros, who Monday denied a motion to have the jurors questioned privately in the judge's chambers.

Counselor Recalls Discovering Bodies

PRYOR, Okla. (UPI) — Saying she practically stumbled over a bloody, bludgeoned body, a Girl Scout counselor recalled the horror of discovering three girls had been sexually assaulted and killed during their first night of summer camp.

Susan Harden, among the first to testify at the first-degree murder trial of Gene Leroy Hart, told jurors of finding the body of 10-year-old Doris Denise Milner on the morning of June 13, 1977.

"I walked up and I saw a body," she said. "I didn't get any closer. I turned around and took a couple of steps and screamed."

Hart, 35, who has made no public statement since his April 6, 1978, arrest following one of the most intensive man-hunts in Oklahoma history, was scheduled to break his silence today at a noon news conference. However, interview guidelines prohibit any questions directly related to the sex slayings.

Witnesses said Monday the three girls and their blood-soaked sleeping bags were found lying in a cluster along a trail at Camp Scott near Locust Grove, less than 20 miles from the crowded courtroom where Hart's trial has entered its third week.

Seconds after Mrs. Harden's discovery, other camp personnel came running and soon discovered two of the sleeping bags contained the bodies of Michele Guse, 9, and Lori Lee Farmer, 8.

"One of the counselors tried to lift the sleeping bags and we were surprised to find them weighted," said camp director Barbara Day.

Defense attorney Garvin Isaacs asked Mrs. Harden, one of six prosecution witnesses who testified Monday, what she saw when she and the other counselors looked in the girls' tent, some 50 yards away.

"Blood," she replied.

An ambulance driver who answered a call to the Girl Scout camp after the bodies were found testified today he was unprepared for what he saw.

"My mother got the phone call," said David Parker. "She thought it was an accident or a wreck or something. I really didn't know what was going on until I got there."

Parkey was one of three ambulance attendants who loaded the bodies into an ambulance and took them to the Tulsa County medical examiner for autopsies.

Medical experts have said the Milner girl was strangled, the other two died of blows to the head and all three were sexually molested before they died.

Hart, previously convicted of kidnapping and rape and a fugitive when the girls were killed, is charged with three counts of first-degree murder in the case.

Shuttle Waits For Weather

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The space shuttle Columbia flew a smooth test flight today in what National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials called "marginal weather conditions."

NASA spokesman Ralph Jackson said the Columbia's long-delayed country flight to its eventual launch site at Cape Canaveral, Fla., might begin later today — a decision that depended on weather between here and Biggs Field in El Paso, the first stop on the shuttle's continental journey.

NASA spokesman Jim Kukowski had said earlier that the weather was not right for the longer flight.

The Columbia, affixed atop a 747 jumbo jet, "began moving down the runway at 6:30 a.m. this morning," Kukowski said. During the 50-minute flight "everything looked solid," he said.

The $500 million shuttle and the Boeing 747 flew a variety of patterns at 13,000 feet, he said. At the end of the flight, pilots in trailing chase planes said that there had been no apparent loss of the protective tiles that had given project engineers trouble before.

People Losing Gift For Invective

By Hugh A. Mulligan
Associated Press Writer

RIDGEFIELD, CONN. (AP) — The shortage in our time of truly creative cursing is another sure sign of our culture's decline.

People have lost the gift for invective, the talent for imaginative malediction. The prevalence of by now meaningless four-letter obscenities and crudities in the theater, in the movies and more and more on TV — excused on the grounds of realism — is further proof that we have forgotten how to fulminate. Words fail us when it comes to calling down ill luck on an adversary, which is why the English language is no longer as rich or inventive as it used to be.

The last decent curse I heard uttered was on the streets of Cairo (Egypt not Illinois) after a downtown fender bender between a taxicab and a tourist bus both attempting to negotiate a traffic circle in the same lane at the same time. "May the fleas of a thousand camels infest... your first-born," the cabbie invoked Allah's wrath on the bus driver. This was the English translation. I understand the Arabic was even more descriptive and painful.

The bus driver's response, sworn on the eyes of his mother, traced the party of the first part's lineage through a python and a crocodile on his mother side and a scurried dog and a bloated Nile buzzard on the other with ill-disguised allusions of rampant and couchant illegitimacy in these liaisons.

The policeman who tried to intervene was denounced as a weanling of scorpions.

It reminded me of Kipling's "Kim," where the boy hero, better known as "little friend of all the world," hears a whip-cracking Hindu horseman denounce the driver of a cart that has broken down and is blocking the Grand Trunk Road:

"Son of a swine, is the soft part of the road meant for thee to scratch thy back upon? Father of all the daughters of shame and husband of ten thousand virtuous ones, thy mother was devoted to a devil, being led thereto by her mother; thy aunts have never had a nose for seven generations. What owl's folly told thee to draw thy cart across the road? A broken wheel? Then take a broken head and put the two together at leisure!"

One reason why the Irish have so dominated English literature for the past couple of centuries — Sheridan, Steele, Sterne, Congreve, Goldsmith, Burke, Wilde, Shaw, O'Casey, Yeats, Synge, Joyce, Behan, etc. — is that the ordinary, everyday denizens of that isle of saints and scholars and spalpeens have never lost the faculty for lacerating foes with the sharp sides of their tongues. Even the clergy turn the other cheek, when cheek is offered:

"Don't see you at Mass anymore, Kevin..."

"Ah, the church is full of hypocrites these days, Father."

"Oh well, always room for one more."

Profanity in the dull, uninspired, vulgarly repetitive American fashion never really has caught on in Ireland because old-fashioned cursing, full of fine fury and eloquence, hasn't quite gone out yet, despite modern media pressures on that ancient culture.

"Bad cess to you," a common Irish curse, is a lot more withering invitation to bad luck than the common ribald Anglo-Saxonism urging the accursed to perform an impossible sexual contortion. "Bad cess" is wishing the object of your derision a hard time with the tax man, since "cess" in 16th century Ireland was the term used for money levied for the upkeep of the queen's troops.

I am indebted for that information to Patrick C. Power, the author of "The Book of Irish Curses," a marvelous compendium of Celtic imprecations. Powers lists a number of picturesque maledictions, some of them still in use, that have 2,000 years or so of Gaelic clout behind them:

"The Devil swallow him sideways."

"May the devil cut the head off you and make a day's work of your neck."

"The death of kittens to you." (especially recommended for obnoxious boatsmen and obstreperous fishermen since it suggests a watery grave)

"May he die roaring and fester in his grave."

"A death without a priest to him in a town without a clergyman."

"A high windy gallows to him."

Powers' invocations to the powers of darkness brought to mind the old toast of the Protestant Orange Order which can still provoke a decent sized riot in a Third Avenue bar if recited after the parade breaks up on St. Patrick's Day:

"Here's to the pious and immortal memory of King Billy (William of Orange) who saved us from knaves and knavery, slaves and slavery, Popes and Popery, brass money and wooden shoes. And if any man among us refuse to rise to this toast, may he be slammed, crammed and jammed into the Great Gun of Athlone. And may the gun be fired into the Pope's belly, and the Pope into the Devil's belly, and the Devil into the roasting pit of Hell, and may the doors of Hell be banged shut and the key kept in pocket of a brave Orange boy."

DR. LAMB

Loose Skin

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I read your column about the man who lost weight, but still had a lot of loose skin around the waist. I lost 60 pounds and went from a size 38 pants to size 32. I feel great and look O.K., but I have this extra skin I'd like to get rid of. You sent this fellow a letter on girth control and how to exercise to help the problem. I'd be grateful if you would send this to me, too.

DEAR READER — I am sending you The Health Letter number 3-7, Girth Control: Avoiding The Big Middle. The two main points are to get the fat off your abdomen and out of the inside of your belly cavity. Many people don't realize that there is about as much fat inside the belly cavity as there is outside. You simply can't squeeze that fat down with any form of exercise. You have to eliminate it and it sounds like you've eliminated a great deal of it.

The second aspect of girth control is really tightening up your abdominal muscles. You can do this with sit ups and leg lift exercises that are discussed in The Health Letter I am sending you. Others who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

Now, I must tell you that outside of getting the fat off and out, and tightening up your abdominal muscles, you can't really expect a lot more. The skin itself does not contain any muscles that will be benefited by exercise in this way. If you haven't completely overstretched your skin, you may get some gradual improvement in skin tone over the next several months.

If you truly have a lot of excess skin and want to get rid of it, it's probably going to have to be removed surgically. So, why don't you wait a year and do a lot of good abdominal exercises of the type described in The Health Letter I am sending you and see where you are then.

At that time, if you still have a lot of excess fat, talk to a good plastic surgeon to see if he can help you. If you're lean and in good physical condition, a competent plastic surgeon can do a good cosmetic removal of skin and significantly improve your appearance.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I read your column about the surrogate mother, the one who had to baby for her friend who was sterile and couldn't have children of her own. You said the woman who had the baby was really the genetic mother, meaning the genes of the baby all came from her. Now, I'd like to ask if the same thing isn't true about men. What about women who have artificial insemination? Isn't the real father the man who provides the sperm for the artificial insemination?

DEAR READER — The basic law of nature is the same. The inherited characteristics of a child is the result of the genetic combination of the man who provides the sperm cell and the woman who provides the ovum. In a child resulting from artificial insemination, the legal father is the father who is married to the mother and raises the child. But the genetic father is still the man who provided the sperm cells for artificial insemination. This is one of the reasons why an effort is made to find a sperm donor who has characteristics similar to the legal father. If the sterile husband is tall, blond and blue-eyed, there is usually some effort made to find a sperm cell donor who is also tall, blond and blue-eyed.

Engineering Graduates Pursued By Employers

NEW YORK (UPI) — The big money — how about $1,788 a month to start — for this year's college graduates is being offered to those with bachelor's in engineering.

Chemical and petroleum engineers are the most hotly pursued by employers. The College Placement Council, reporting today, said there just aren't enough engineers graduating to fill all the open jobs.

Engineering graduates never had it so good, in fact, said the Council, many engineering job candidates, finishing up their last semester, are being deluged with job offers.

The other side of the coin: not-so-happy days continue for bachelor's with degrees in social sciences or humanities. Offers are down 9 percent and the average money offer is $911 a month.

The Council, based in Bethlehem, Pa., for 19 years has been looking at offers made by company representatives interviewing on 161 colleges.

Reports on offers in selected major fields are issued in January, March and July.

Other highlights of the new report: —Employers have made 40 percent more offers to prospective engineers at the bachelor's degree level than at this time last year. Last season was a peak year in college recruiting — the biggest, in fact, since the late '60s.

—Engineering offers accounted for 61 percent of all bachelor's offers reported.

—Another hot degree, bachelor's in business, is showing an 18 percent increase in offers. Scientific fields are registering a 17 percent gain.

Cardboard Coffins Cut Costs

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Maverick mortician Ken Timlick, who says he's been searching 20 years for ways to cut funeral costs, is offering burials for as low as $150. Part of his formula is a $6 cardboard coffin.

The coffin is made by MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., a locally-based wood products company which produces cardboard boxes for $3 each. Timlick's wife, Jean, sews pillows and linings for the boxes, using a satin-like fabric, for another $3.

"Those are all my costs for labor and materials," said Timlick, 54. "It's clearly a triumph. It is a $6 coffin."

Since some people might object to being encased in a cardboard box, Timlick came up with a solution. Last year, he acquired the Canadian franchise of a Florida company that markets catafalques.

A catafalque is a fancy "bottomless coffin," sort of a reusable shell which is placed over the coffin. The bereaved family buys only the cardboard coffin and rents the catafalque.

Timlick said the catafalque, which resembles some of the more expensive coffins priced at $1,500 or more, stays in place through viewings, processions and services but is removed after the ceremony.

The B.C. Funeral Service Association is unhappy about Timlick's new system. Brian Winther, association vice-president and head of the ethics committee, said the catafalque is deception.

"It doesn't make sense for a person to fool all his friends into thinking he has spent a wad on mother," he said. "It's like renting a limo for the night and trying to pretend that you own it."

Executive director Brian Fondrick said the association maintains that anything that goes to the cemetery should stay there.

"I don't know if a cardboard box reflects an appropriate degree of success for a life that has been lived."

Timlick disagrees: "Those filthy-white puritans are afraid of losing sales of their high priced units."

In the last four months, he said, the catafalques have been used about 100 times in five funeral parlors, four in British Columbia and one in Winnipeg. One Vancouver funeral director said they constitute nearly one-third of his business.

Catafalque renters in British Columbia have been able to cut the average $1,000 cost of a funeral by almost half, Timlick says, and he maintains he can further undercut funeral costs. He has just opened his own funeral parlor to prove it. Using the cardboard coffin and the catafalque, he said, he can offer a full funeral for as little as $150.

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Hard work, unselfishly motivated, is the only thing that will pay off for you tomorrow. Subdue personal ambitions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If you're in a negative mood tomorrow it would be far better to let go and let someone you trust and feel to be competent manage your affairs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) The results you hope to obtain may be difficult to achieve, but you'll never realize them with underhanded methods. Keep plugging on the straight and narrow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may have to put up with someone who bores you to tears in order to get another's cooperation. The end result will be worth it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your methods tomorrow could be quite annoying to co-workers. You probably would be better off tackling large tasks by yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Ask yourself if it's worth alienating friends to get what you want tomorrow, before you employ procedures that knock them out of the picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) No matter how trivial something appears, don't discuss family issue with outsiders. A loved one's feeling could be deeply hurt.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) There is no easy way of doing things tomorrow. In fact, you may even have to go back to antiquated ways in order to accomplish your aims.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You may have to be firm with yourself in order not to succumb to extravagant impulses tomorrow. Though you might not like it, it's the smart thing to do.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Once you make up your mind there isn't anything you can't accomplish tomorrow. However, take care not to step on any toes in your determination to do so.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Discuss things tomorrow only with persons involved in your business. Outsiders could confuse the facts and do a good job of messing things up for you.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Allow past experience to control your actions tomorrow, especially if you're with free spending acquaintances. Do what's best for you.

Director Emphasizes Household Dangers

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

An overwhelming majority of the patients the Lubbock Poison Control Center sees are children under five years of age, reports James Cave, the center's director.

This alarming fact is the main reason that Cave emphasizes the prevention of poisoning in the home, although the center does deal with its treatment as well. The local center is part of the emergency room program at Methodist Hospital and is tied in with the regional control center in Galveston.

This week has been designated as National Poison Prevention Week. Cave, head pharmacist at Methodist, named some specific ways in which par-to shift the places these materials are kept yet another time.

Another suggestion the pharmacist made is the use of "Mr. Yuk" stickers like the disc accompanying this story, on dangerous household materials. A 5-inch by 7-inch sheet of these decals can be obtained by writing the Southeast Texas Poison Center, 8th and Mechanic, Galveston, Tx. 77550. Send one dollar and a self-addressed envelope large enough to accommodate the sheet of stickers. These emblems can then be applied to containers of potentially dangerous materials and your child alerted to avoid anything bearing one.

The stickers are in vibrant green and are easily identifiable by young children.

One mistake which parents often make, Cave said, is to tell their children that medicine is "good and tastes like candy." This may help get the child to take needed medication while he is ill, but also induces him to take medicines left in accessible places at other times. Children are curious.

Another common practice to be avoided is storing medicines and cleaning products in the same place. Not heeding this warning may be dangerous for adults as well as children, as grown-ups may reach for a medicine while still sleepy sometimes.

Kitchen, bathroom and garage areas are all prime targets for an inspection for dangerous substances.

Cave also has some warnings which may save adults some danger to themselves. A major caveat is to read ALL labels. "Really respect the substance," he said talking about such things as pesticides and agricultural chemicals. He pointed out that with some materials, contact was dangerous in itself and ingestion was not necessary for harm to occur.

Inhalation is yet another potential danger for adults. A case in point is the housewife who mixes a bowl cleaner and a bleach and gets overcome with chlorine fumes from the combination.

A major warning which covers many categories of materials is to know and heed the cautions which are printed on every container.

The Poison Control Center here does see a number of cases each month where poisoning has occurred. Cave said that parents discovering for sure that their child has taken something poisonous, or even suspecting it, should call the center or the family physician as quickly as possible. The physician may instruct the family to go to the center at Methodist. The parents ought to bring the substance to the center with them so that identification can be facilitated. Parents are asked to look around the area where the child has been playing for possible substances, check the child's breath, or in other ways help with the speedy identification of what has been taken.

The local center not only has persons on its emergency room staff specially trained in handling such cases, but also has a vast resource in the POISONDEX system which gives handy reference to steps for treatment for a variety of possible substances taken.

In some cases, treatment may involve inducing vomiting, while in others, this is to be avoided. Cases in which vomiting would not be appropriate might include when someone has swallowed a petroleum distillate or some caustic substance.

Absorption is the more usual method of treating these cases.

Cave emphasized that treating a poison victim is not a first-aid treatment to be undertaken by amateurs and that a professional — either the family physician or the center — should be consulted as quickly as possible.

Food Program Gives Children No-Cost Meals

WASHINGTON (Special) — Rural sponsors of the summer food program and sponsors who prepare their own meals will earn a higher rate of reimbursement this year, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carol Tucker Foreman said today.

Foreman said that rules published in the Jan. 2 Federal Register recognize that programs in needy, rural areas are more costly to operate than those in urban areas and that organizations that prepare their own food have higher costs and should be reimbursed at a higher rate than those that contract for the meals served.

Other sponsors will earn reimbursement at last year's rates, adjusted to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index. All sponsors will continue to earn either actual costs or a basic rate per meal served, whichever is less.

The summer food program provides meals at no cost to children in needy neighborhoods in cities, towns and rural areas during summer months. Non-profit agencies, which act as local sponsors, buy or prepare meals that are served to the children. The sponsors receive financial and administrative help from the states and the department.

The new rules emphasize accountability and tightened management. A new provision allows states to require any program sponsor to set up a special account from which disbursement can be made only when co-signed by both the sponsor and the company that provides the food. This fiscal management arrangement encourages prompt payment to food service companies.

To improve program effectiveness, states will be required to establish priorities on inspecting meal preparation sites, plans for training food service management company representatives and health inspectors, and procedures for soliciting comments from the public on program management and administration plans.

Under other changes in the program, — States are to encourage sponsors to use small and minority businesses as suppliers and to provide these businesses with information on financial and technical assistance.

— States will be assured of receiving this year 80 percent of administrative funds which were either earned during the prior fiscal year or estimated for the current fiscal year, whichever is less.

An adjusted formula, established in recent child nutrition legislation, will provide more administrative funds to states. These funds are needed for states to carry out a range of responsibilities including monitoring and training sponsors.

the downfall of many a champion — whenever success seems assured. At the bridge table, the time for boldness is when the outlook is darkest. When everything seems rosy, that's the time to be at your most pessimistic.

Since his hand might be worthless at a no trump contract, South corrected to four spades. North had no option except to pass. He had already shown his 25 points, and unless his partner could bid spades at the five-level, there seemed to be little chance for slam. North might have been wrong if his partner had as little as six spades to the king — but his pessimism was justified by South's performance in the play.

West led the top of his diamond sequence, and declarer felt on top of the world. He won the king of diamonds in dummy and laid down the ace of spades. East discarded a diamond and declarer found that he had no way to avoid losing three trump tricks and the ace of hearts for down one.

Since the contract appeared to be ironclad, declarer should have taken time out to consider what evils could be lurking in the distribution. The answer could only be: "All four trumps in one hand!"

If all four trumps are with East, it makes no difference what declarer does. Declarer cannot lose more than two trump tricks no matter how he plays the suit. But if West holds all the missing trumps, caution is required.

After winning the king of diamonds, declarer should lead a low trump from dummy. When East fails to follow to the first trump, declarer plays the queen (or any of his intermediates) and West wins the king.

After winning West's return, declarer can get back to his hand with a diamond ruff to lead the nine of trumps. No matter what West does, he can score only one more trump trick and the contract is safe. Try it for yourself.

Senior Citizens Learn In Elderhostels

By BEVERLY O'BRIAN
Family News Staff

According to Martin P. Knowlton, founder of the elderhostel system, "The pathway to more productive and meaningful later years is not found by sitters, but by seekers. The originators of Elderhostel are convinced that education can most effectively guide older citizens in their search for fulfillment and a feeling of personal worth."

In a recent conference held at Texas Tech University, Bob Whitaker discussed the concept and its availability for West Texans. Whitaker is director of such a program on the Abilene Christian University campus.

Elderhostel is an outreach program designed to meet the needs of the elderly. Whitaker describes it as "an academic enrichment program for people 60 and over."

The program, which is a series of week-long classes during the month of June, offers intellectual stimulation and local culture to senior citizens throughout the country. Not only is it an educational program, but it is also a "hosteling" system. Similar to the European youth hostels, the participants do everything together — attend classes, eat, engage in extracurricular activities, go on field trips and share experiences.

There are no grades and no exams in the one-week classes. The courses to be offered by ACU this summer are First Hand Folklore, Sagebrush Frontier, Activity for Fitness and Fun, Universal Appeal of Shakespeare and Performance of Literature.

The extracurricular activities include trips to Buffalo Gap, Ft. Phantom Hill, Abilene State Park, Albany Fandango and a working West Texas ranch. In addition there will be parties, community tours and musical performances.

The ACU program began in 1977. At that time, it was the only one in Texas. There are presently 250 campuses nationwide participating in the elderhostel program. Most are found in the Northeastern states, where the concept originated. However, elderhostels have been started at Howard Payne University in Brownwood, Western Texas College in Snyder and East Texas Baptist College in Marshall.

Nationally, six weeks of elderhosteling have been planned. Elderhostellers can travel across the country, visiting different campuses and experiencing different American cultures for much of the summer.

According to Whitaker, the people involved in elderhosteling are "deeply involved intellectually and emotionally" in the program. To many of them, the interaction with people, exposure to new thoughts and ideas, stimulating experiences and the chance to meet people from all over the country make the trip to a strange and unfamiliar place well worth the trouble.

The elderhostellers don't expect special treatment. In fact, according to Whitaker, many of them take pride in being able to endure long hours and the physical activity required.

Usually, the elderly are "set aside" at retirement and are forced into isolation and loneliness. Sitting at home alone watching soap operas may produce a loss of mental stimulation. Elderhostel strives to achieve the opposite effect. If nothing else, it provides a key to further exploration and further questioning of the world and its functions for the elderly who wish to continue with their lives.

'Corn Dogs' Provide Convenient Meals

Has your "brown bagger" been singing the blues?

Here's a welcome change from winter meals, convenient enough for busy mothers to prepare: corn dogs.

Whether pre-packaged or "homemade," to prepare corn dogs, a fully cooked frank must be wrapped in batter, then fried until crisp and golden. Since corn dogs are fully cooked products, they keep well in "brown bag" lunches, says the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

With packaged products, meat inspectors with USDA's Food Safety and Quality Service, monitor preparation from the time the batter is mixed. They see that the batter is cooled until the wieners are dipped, that the cooking oil is fresh and that the cooked wieners have been cooled and properly stored.

Any product labeled "corn dog" must be accompanied by a clarifying statement, such as "Batter wrapped frank on a stick," or "A flour and cornmeal blanket wrapped around a frank on a stick."

The standards of such products set a limit of 65 percent batter and a minimum of 35 percent frankfurter. Each processor can vary his recipe, as long as it meets boundaries established by these standards of identity.

Corn dogs contain protein, fat, calcium, phosphorus, iron, sodium, potassium and B vitamins. Serving a batter wrapped frank means you're providing two of the basic four food groups: meat and cereals.

Remember the simple food-care precautions to prevent bacterial contamination of brown bag lunches. Wash your hands before preparing. Don't let the lunch stand at room temperature for a long time.

It's best if you can keep your corn dog in a refrigerator or cool place. If you can't, use a freezer gel device or freeze a plastic margarine tub of water and pack it in your lunchbag.

You can freeze the corn dog and let it thaw in time for lunch. But this practice might result in some loss of quality and taste.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I just saw you on the Phil Donahue Show and I can't believe you were born in 1918.

Have you ever had a face-lift? If not, please tell me how to keep from growing old.

Another 1918 Model

DEAR MODEL: I've never had a face-lift. And to keep from growing old — die young.

DEAR ABBY: I read with great interest the letter from the lady who couldn't warm up to her daughter-in-law. (She said, "I always felt that my son could have done a lot better." I wonder if she ever realized he also could have done a lot worse?)

I, too, felt that my son could have done a lot better, but I wasn't very good at concealing my feelings. I always found something to criticize my daughter-in-law for.

I soon noticed that my son would always take her part, and it was them against me. That's when I began to analyze my own feelings and had to admit that the fault was with me — not her.

That was seven years ago. Thank heaven I woke up in time to improve the relationship before it was too late. When I warmed up to her, she quickly warmed up to me. I have two beautiful grandchildren now, and I am closer to my son than I've ever been.

Abby, edit this any way you wish, but please tell mothers-in-law to make the first move in reaching out to their daughters-in-law. They will be pleasantly surprised.

DEAR JUST: No editing necessary. You said it very well. Thanks for some horse sense straight from the horse's mouth.

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing, but after yesterday's column I felt compelled to do so.

My heart goes out to EASY IN ST. LOUIS. Tell her she is not alone in her flight for sexual sanity.

I, too, was raped by a relative when I was a teenager. I spent the next five years searching desperately for love through numerous brief sexual encounters.

I felt cheap and dirty and was convinced that no one could love or want me.

Then I met a very special young man who convinced me that God loved me just the way I was, and that I was precious in His sight. I then let go of my burdensome past, and by accepting God's forgiveness, I started on the long road to forgiving myself.

Consumers Prefer Quality Of Bottled Water

NEW YORK (Special) — With consumers throughout the United States becoming increasingly concerned about the taste and quality of their water, sales of American bottled water have been climbing at a rate of ten to 12 percent a year for more than five years.

The growing popularity of American bottled water is believed attributable both to its preferred palatability and clean good taste and to consumers' growing concerns over the use of chlorine as a sterilizing agent in municipally treated water. (Some scientific studies have suggested that chlorine may be a cancer-causing agent.) Water bottlers use ozone, rather than chlorine, as the primary sterilizing agent in the preparation of American bottled water.

American bottled water is regulated by the provisions of the National Safe Drinking Water Act, as well as state and local labeling laws.

Types of American bottled water include natural spring and well waters, specially-prepared drinking water, fluoridated water and mineral-free waters (purified or distilled). Natural waters are bottled as they come from a spring or well. Specially-prepared drinking water is filtered and de-mineralized and then certain minerals are returned to improve the taste. Fluoridated water contains controlled amounts of fluoride to help prevent tooth decay.

Purified or distilled water is often utilized in home and industrial situations which preclude the presence of minerals. These range from the cleansing of contact lenses to the preparation of pharmaceuticals and botanical formulas, or for drinking when a salt or mineral-free water is needed.

American bottled water is prepared under such stringent regulations that no coliform organisms are permitted. Yet a coliform level of up to 10 per milliliter is acceptable in the preparation of standard Grade A pasteurized milk.

Consumers therefore can be confident that the American bottled water that tastes so fresh and clean is in actuality totally pure and free of chlorine or contaminants.

Kurds Battle Army As Truce Collapses

By RICHARD TOMKINS
SANANDAJ, Iran (AP) — Sporadic gunbattles continued around a besieged army barracks in this Kurdish city today as residents counted their dead and wounded, victims of bloody fighting between Kurdish rebels and government troops.

Throughout the city groups of armed Kurdish fighters manned road blocks in the virtually empty streets as army helicopters flew overhead. A mood of anger dominated the city, which apparently is in the control of Kurdish guerrillas except for the army barracks under siege.

As I drove into the town today, one guerrilla told me: "Tomorrow is now Ruz (the Iranian new year). But my town is at war. Why are they killing my people?"

Another distraught resident said: "The people here are now fighting the army. The army has not been smashed. The situation here is the same as when the shah was in charge. Nothing has changed."

The government announced today it was sending reinforcements to Sanandaj to relieve the siege of the barracks after an overnight cease-fire was broken by the rebels.

Ten helicopters, apparently ferrying reinforcements, flew into the airport of the town during the morning. But on the drive to Sanandaj from Tehran there were no signs of major troop movements.

Residents reported that Sunday, after the fighting first flared, four helicopter gunships circled the city firing indiscriminately on people in the streets.

"My nephew was washing his hands in the yard when a helicopter flew overhead and shot him," said one resident.

At the Khanh Hospital, which I visited, doctors said they had the corpses of 21 people killed in the fighting and 133 wounded. Another hospital, they said, reported 30 more dead.

In the Khanh Hospital morgue several bodies were placed in cubicles with ice preserving them and others were laid out on the floor. One young girl, no more than 3 years old, had the side of her head blown open by shrapnel.

Her father was crying uncontrollably nearby.

Four surgeons and 10 doctors from outlying areas were manning the hospital.

"We are in need of serums, dextros and plasma," said one doctor. "This was so unexpected we did not have supplies stockpiled."

The hospital staff has been working around the clock since Sunday night treating the wounded in the 200 bed hospital. "There is no question of sleep, there is far too much to do," said Dr. D.K. Singh, from India.

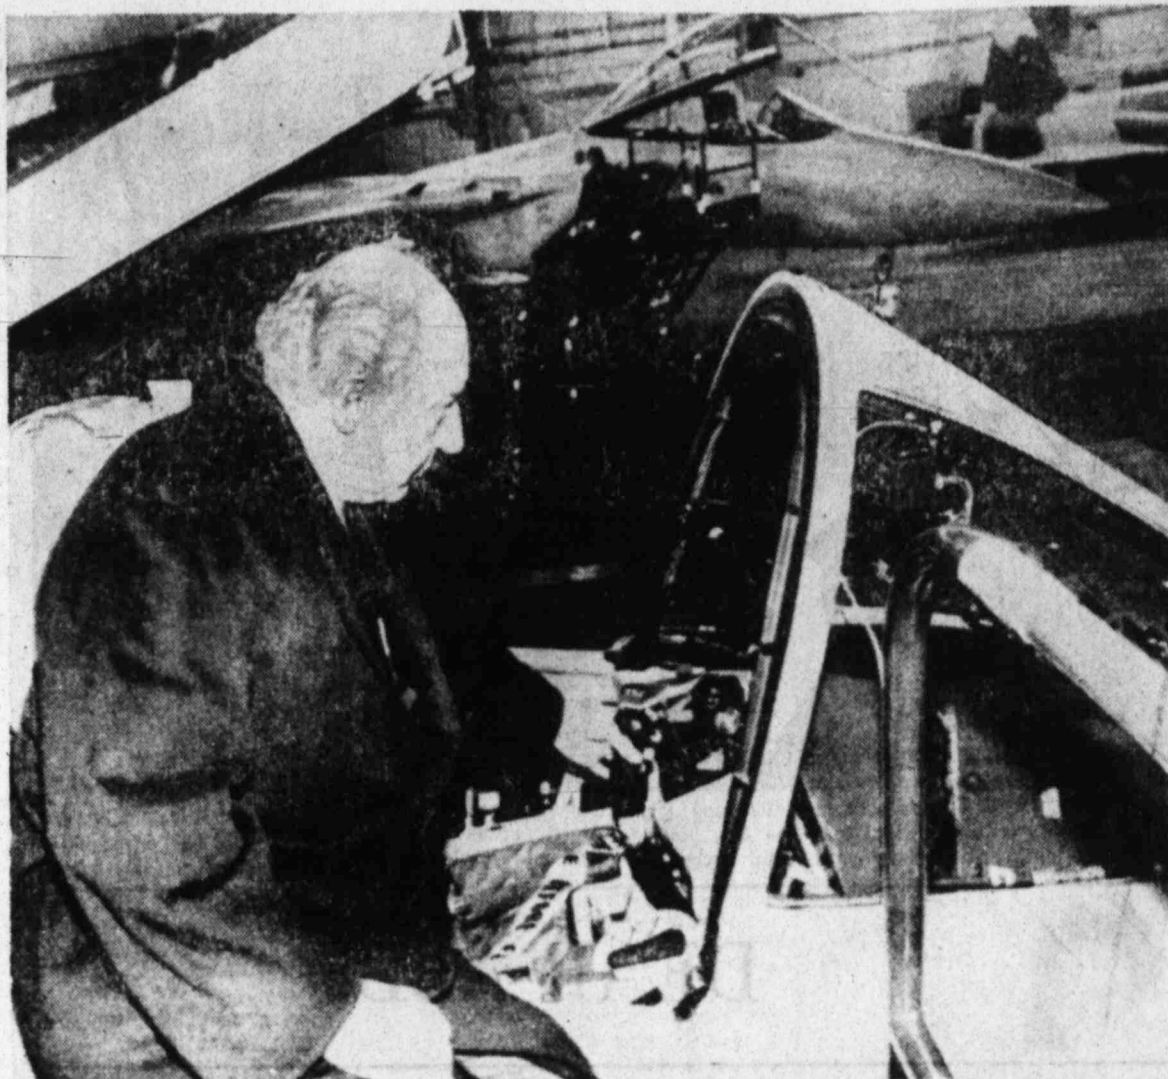

The fighting between the rebels and Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary forces resumed today after a brief truce. There was no immediate word of casualties in the new battle in the capital of the Kurdistan region, 250 miles west of Tehran.

At least 170 were reported killed in fighting Sunday and Monday before the cease-fire, but in Tehran Deputy Prime Minister Abbas Amir Entezam today put the official toll at 86 dead and 200 wounded.

Entezam said the truce was broken when Kurds surrounding a military barracks opened fire on soldiers inside the building. He said the soldiers returned the fire.

Unconfirmed reports said the fighting erupted when the rebels fired on four army helicopters dropping food supplies to the besieged troops.

Press reports said the rebels were holding the city's radio-TV station and the state police barracks.

Jury Sentences Woman To Die

BEAUMONT (AP) — Linda May Burnett, a 31-year-old mother and housewife, was sentenced to death today for last summer's execution-style slaying of one of five members of a Southeast Texas family.

A state court jury in Beaumont, in its second day of deliberating the punishment for the blond-haired Nederland woman, returned its verdict after nearly five hours.

Mrs. Burnett took the news quietly and without tears. She had defiantly said "I am not guilty" when she was convicted Saturday of capital murder.

Homicide Ruled In Shooting

By JACK DOUGLAS
Avantage-Journal Staff

Justice of the Peace L.J. Blackack has revealed that he has made a preliminary ruling of homicide in the death of an Iranian Imperial Air Force sergeant found fatally shot Feb. 22 in Post.

Blackack said he made the ruling based on investigative reports given him by the Texas Rangers concerning the shooting deaths of Mohammad Ali Shokouhi, 23, who was training at Cannon Air Force Base in Clovis, N.M., and Linda J. Casaus, 20, of Clovis.

Following the couple's discovery, authorities originally indicated they believed Miss Casaus had been kidnapped by the Iranian, and that the airman shot the pretty bank clerk in Post and then turned the gun on himself.

Post Justice of the Peace Pat Kitchens at the time ruled homicide-suicide in the case, but Blackack must make a ruling in Shokouhi's death because the Iranian died en route to Lubbock's Methodist Hospital.

New information in Texas Ranger Joe Hunt's report show that the two Garza County sheriff's deputies, who found the woman dead and the sergeant dying in Miss Casaus' parked car, saw another vehicle speeding away from the death site.

Deputy Randal Whitlock, who along with deputy J.W. Jolly made the grim discovery, said today they saw a brown 1972-74 Oldsmobile Cutlass, with its lights on, parked next to the dead woman's car in a park in south Post just minutes before the shooting victims were found.

Authorities, including representatives of the sheriff's department, Texas Rangers and United States Air Force, said after the discovery that a trucker was found sleeping in his cab near the woman's car, but they did not mention anything about the other car, which still has not been located, according to Whitlock.

Whitlock said he and Jolly were in their patrol car on U.S. 84 about 2 a.m. when they saw Miss Casaus' compact car and the Cutlass parked inside Dave Nichols Park. "Both vehicles had lights on; both were heading south; one was to the right rear of the other," Hunt's report states.

Whitlock said they stopped a motorist for speeding and then turned around to go back to the park when they saw the Cutlass pull out of the baseball park. He said the vehicle was traveling back into town and passed them while they were driving to Miss Casaus' car. Whitlock said he did not get a good look at the driver of the Cutlass and could not say how many were in the car.

"We haven't found them yet... we're still looking for them," Whitlock said this morning. "We were going to stop the car (Cutlass) first, but it was coming from out of town and not going all that fast. When we saw what had happened, it was too late to catch the other car."

computer-run traffic light system, Lubbock's signal equipment is among the best available.

He credits recent advancements in computer technology for the traffic time improvements he has seen elsewhere and hopes to see here.

"Technology available now gives us an advantage over individually programmed intersections such as Lubbock has now," He said the computer could synchronize programs for 50 intersections in two hours.

Hatchell expects the timing changes indicated by the study to "favor certain streets where the majority of traffic flows. I'd be dishonest if I said every street could be programmed never to stop."

Also under study are a total of 12 intersections with "capacity problems" around the city.

Mrs. Burnett becomes the fifth woman sentenced to die in Texas since the state installed the electric chair in 1924, although the other four managed to defeat the sentence through appeals or commutation.

The 1977 Legislature ended death by electrocution in favor of a lethal injection.

Mrs. Burnett will be the lone woman on Death Row in Texas.

An appeal of the death penalty is automatic.

The jury was unable to decide Monday whether she should be executed or receive a life prison sentence, and retired for the night after four and a half hours of deliberations.

One of Mrs. Burnett's daughters, Janey, testified for the defense during the punishment phase Monday.

The 12-year-old girl, who has appeared frequently as a spectator during the trial, sometimes sitting on the front row and whispering to her mother "I love you," was on the stand only briefly. She was asked if she understood the purpose of the proceeding.

"To see whether or not my mother gets the death penalty," she answered.

The daughter, an attractive girl with long brown hair who remained composed during her testimony, said she still loves her mother. On cross-examination she said her 14-year-old sister once ran away from home and was returned by police.

The jury began deliberating her punishment at 2:30 p.m. Monday. They later sent out a question asking District Judge Larry Gist how many years Mrs. Burnett would have to spend in prison if she were assessed a life sentence. He replied that under state law, she would be eligible for parole in 20 years.

Mrs. Burnett was convicted for the death of 3-year-old Jason Phillips, who was slain along with his parents and grandparents July 1 after the family had been abducted from a rural farmhouse near Winnie. All five bodies were found in a common grave in the same general area July 10.

Corporation Profits Show Big Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today that profits of the nation's corporations increased 26.4 percent last year, the most in nearly three decades, in what Carter administration officials said was a "catastrophe" for the nation's anti-inflation program.

It also reported that the nation's economy, as measured by the gross national product, expanded at a 6.9 percent rate in the final three months of the year, up from the 6.4 percent estimated previously. The gain in GNP for the year was an even 4 percent.

The gains in profits and economic growth were both disturbingly high and constituted a setback to the nation's anti-inflation drive, officials said.

The Commerce Department said corporate profits before taxes totaled $225.3 billion at an annual rate in the final three months of 1978, up $19.9 billion or 9.7 percent over the third quarter and up $47 billion or 26.4 percent from the fourth quarter of 1977 to the same period in 1978.

Alfred E. Kahn, the administration's chief inflation-fighter, said in advance of the report that the increase in profits last year was a "catastrophe" that underscores "a strong belief that the business community has not been doing its share in the anti-inflation fight."

However, financial analysts say much of the increase in profits results from inventory gains caused by inflation and does not significantly benefit the corporations.

An analysis by Citibank of New York said that after discounting for taxes and inflation, the real increase in corporate earnings in 1978 was about 8 percent.

Special Counsel Named To Probe Carter Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Griffin B. Bell announced today the appointment of Paul J. Curran, a Republican lawyer from New York, as special counsel to conduct an investigation into bank loans made to President Carter's family peanut business by the National Bank of Georgia.

Curran, a former U.S. attorney for the southern district of New York, will have powers and responsibilities that fall just short of those of the special prosecutor who handled the investigation of the Watergate scandal.

Justice Department officials said the final decision on whether indictments will be sought in the case would remain with Assistant Attorney General Philip B. Heymann, head of the Justice Department's criminal division. The department said that if Heymann ultimately overrules Curran, "the matter would be fully reported to the public and the Congress."

The decision to appoint a special counsel came in response to mounting pressure from Congress and the public.

"It is in the best interest of the administration of justice and the public's perception of the fairness and impartiality of justice that an independent special counsel be appointed," Bell said.

The attorney general said the department's investigation into the Carter family business loans "did not resolve all factual and legal issues."

Curran's task will be to investigate the handling of $6.5 million in loans made to the Carter family peanut warehouse by the National Bank of Georgia in 1975 and 1976, when former budget director Bert Lance, a close Carter friend, was serving as bank president.

Lance has been under investigation by a federal grand jury in Atlanta looking into his banking practices. CBS News reported Monday that the Justice Department has decided to seek an indictment against Lance and three unidentified associates. The network report said the indictment being sought does not allege any wrongdoing in connection with the Carter loans.

The Justice Department refused comment on the CBS report. Lance was not available for comment.

A special report issued by two of the National Bank of Georgia's directors in January said the bank did a poor job in handling the Carter warehouse loans and questioned a bank practice of holding warehouse checks without cashing them to avoid an overdrawn account.

There have been no formal public accusations of wrongdoing against the president, his brother Billy or other members of the family. The president's 63 percent of the business is in a blind trust while he is in office.

Curran, 46, was U.S. attorney in Manhattan from 1973 through most of 1975. He was a member of the New York State Commission of Investigation for five years and was appointed chairman in 1969 by then-Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, a Republican.

Curran was head of the office that handled the Watergate prosecution of former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and Maurice Stans, former chief fundraiser for President Richard M. Nixon's re-election committee.

Curran told reporters he believed he would have a free hand in conducting the investigation. "I'm satisfied I have all the powers. My mandate is to look at the loan transactions and follow it where it deserves to be followed," he said.

"I'm going to call the shots as best as I see them and finish it as quickly as I can," Curran said.

Bell said he informed White House press secretary Jody Powell Monday night of the impending appointment, but did not talk directly to the president and spoke to no one else at the White House.

Justice Department officials, who requested anonymity, said Bell was barred by law from going before a special court to seek the appointment of a special prosecutor because the investigation into the Carter family warehouse is an offshoot of another grand jury matter. The appointment by the attorney general of a special counsel does not require court approval.

Weathermen Unable To Warn Of Twister

National Weather Service officials say they are still working to prevent a recurrence of communications failures that killed any chances of getting a tornado warning issued Saturday shortly before a twister touched down in North Lubbock about midnight.

A temporary break in the link between the NWS and local radio and television stations was blamed for the lack of warning.

Although no injuries were reported, the tornado caused extensive damage to a warehouse owned by Chupik Corp on North Loop 289. The twister also tore the patio cover off one home and ripped part of the roof off another in northeast Lubbock.

A meteorologist for the NWS said the weather station at the airport switched to an emergency generator when power went off, but that phone lines hooked up to wire services to area media remained disrupted throughout the storm.

"We're still working on isolating the problem in the teletype circuits that may have been affected by downed phone lines near the airport," said Bill Crouch of the NWS. He added that Southwestern Bell also is working on the problem.

Crouch said the problems with the teletype wires did not affect the weather radio, which he said continued operating from generator power. However, he said the NWS is installing a new generator next month to handle the extra load caused by new computer components.

"We're still not completely satisfied that the problem has been solved, but the chances of something like this happening again are very slim."

Crouch added that the tornado's proximity to the airport and its relatively short life span complicated the problems.

Heavy Rains Pound Many Texas Areas

has been caused by a ridge of high pressure that is expected to persist over the region through tonight and a series of upper level disturbances, weather reports said.

Heavy rainfall Monday night and early today in other parts of the state caused less damage than originally anticipated, according to reports.

In the Beaumont-Port Arthur area, where up to 7 inches of rain was recorded by mid-morning, widespread street flooding was reported.

Farther west, heavy rains Monday reportedly caused the temporary closing of Interstate 35 and Highway 82 in Central Texas and minor flooding over the dams of Lytle Lake near Abilene and Canyon Lake in South Texas. No injuries were reported in the flooded areas and officials estimated little property damage.

Major recipients of precipitation, besides Beaumont-Port Arthur, during the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. were Longview, 1.42; Abilene, 1.27; Galveston, 1.18; and Fort Worth, 1.07.

Tornado watches were also issued for Monday night through 3 a.m. today for portions of East Texas and southern Arkansas and northwestern Louisiana, although no twisters were sighted during the night.

The tornado watch extended in a 70-mile-wide path from 50 miles northwest of Houston to 40 miles southwest of Little Rock, Ark.

Lubbock temperatures were expected to reach only the mid-50s this afternoon, with winds in an east to northeasterly direction at 10 to 15 mph.

Temperatures tonight should near 40 degrees and climb to near 60 degrees Wednesday, the NWS said.

The South Plains extended forecast through Saturday shows a continuing chance of showers in the latter half of the week before skies begin to clear for the weekend. Highs should remain in the 50s and 60s and lows in the 30s and 40s.

A winter storm warning was hoisted today for the central Arizona mountains, where heavy snow was expected. North and South Dakota also braced for possible heavy accumulations.

Light snow powdered northern Minnesota and the Wyoming and Colorado Rockies, while scattered showers dampened southwest Missouri, the upper Ohio Valley and from Virginia into North Carolina.

A low pressure system off the California coast brought showers to the southern part of the state as well as Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada. Snow whitened mountain areas of northern California and northern Nevada.

Sandbagging operations in Illinois intensified today as melting snow and rain swelled ice-filled rivers and streams and hastened widespread spring flooding.

MOTORISTS STILL STRUGGLING — Motorists in the Chicago area had to battle record snowfall and bitter temperatures all winter. Now the melting snow and recent rains have sent streams over their banks into roadways. Push came to shove Monday for motorists who tried to ford a low crossing near the Chicago suburb of Palatine. President To Announce New Energy Proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter will address the nation on March 29 to announce a new energy plan, congressional leaders said today.

Carter also indicated at a White House breakfast that the plan may call for decontrol of oil prices with an accompanying tax on oil company profits, House Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas told reporters.

But both Wright and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said Carter did not dwell on specifics and planned further consultations with key members of Congress before he makes his energy speech.

Meanwhile, Carter's efforts thus far to deal with the energy crisis have done little to persuade Americans there really is a problem, the organization of state governors told Congress today.

"The signals from Washington have been confused and misleading," Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm told a Senate energy subcommittee.

Virginia Gov. John Dalton agreed, citing "the need to convince our people that there actually is a serious energy shortage, which will continue and increase."

Speaking for the National Governors' Association, Lamm and Dalton took exception to a recent claim by Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger that voluntary conservation efforts have proved ineffective.

People stand ready to do their share to conserve energy, but they must be convinced that shortages are real, the two governors testified.

"People are not yet convinced there is a serious problem," Lamm said. "What is needed is a clear declaration by the president that we are facing a shortage and that unless voluntary conservation is successful, stiffer mandatory measures will follow."

The governors testified as Carter began the process of consulting with congressional leaders on steps he may take to spur U.S. energy production and to help the nation recover from the loss of Iranian oil.

Lamm and Dalton told the Senate panel they see big problems with the administration's previously submitted standby energy conservation plan, which envisions gasoline rationing and weekend service-station closings.

The governors said states should be permitted to choose alternatives to ordering gasoline stations closed on Sundays or weekends. Subcommittee Chairman Bennett Johnston, D-La., told them this part of Carter's plan likely would be killed by Congress anyway.

Dalton complained that the proposed rationing plan, which officials say would be used only in a severe shortage, does not include federal aid to help states implement the plan and "takes no account of the vast differences in driving patterns among the states."

Anti-Crime Panelist Gives Cost Estimate

By JACK DOUGLAS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

An estimated $20,000 will be needed this year to operate the fledgling Lubbock County Crime Prevention Council, according to council member Mal Cleland.

Cleland, president of Lubbock's Better Business Bureau, said after this morning's meeting of the group that his estimate is "just a set-up cost." He said the expense may be higher once the council decides exactly what is needed to slow the area's crime rate.

The group's former title of Lubbock County Crime Prevention Task Force was changed during today's gathering in the Emergency Operations Center at City Hall.

Persons attending the meeting, including Maj. C.W. Bell, regional commander of the Department of Public Safety, approved the change, saying the new designation would be better understood by the public.

The council, in its fourth meeting, set up an executive committee to be included in the board of directors.

Lubbock County Sheriff C.H. "Choc" Blanchard was elected chairman of the board; Cleland, president; Shallowater Mayor Joe Cox, first vice president; Lubbock police Capt. Frank Wiley, second vice president; Rape Crisis Center director Becky Mahan, secretary; and city employee Rick Childers, treasurer.

The council approved expanding membership of the board from 20 to 30. However, the official election of directors will not be held until next Tuesday's meeting in the EOC.

Several participants said the board should have representation from the Texas Tech University student body and the Lubbock Independent School District.

The council, still with no money in hand, approved the purchase of 550 engravers, at a cost of $8 each, to be used to mark and register valuable property with local law enforcement agencies.

State College Teachers Strike In New Jersey, Minnesota

By The Associated Press

Thousands of college teachers in New Jersey and Minnesota went on strike today, and teachers at Boston University say they will boycott classes for two days later in the week.

Teacher strikes continued, meanwhile, in public school systems in Washington, D.C., Baton Rouge, La., and Winterville, Ohio.

In New Jersey, more than 3,000 faculty members at eight state colleges serving 65,000 students struck, primarily over pay.

Negotiations continued at the Rutgers University Labor Education Center in New Brunswick, however. Classes were scheduled at the schools but some students vowed not to cross faculty picket lines.

Marcoantonio Lacatena, president of the New Jersey Council of State College Locals, said there was picketing at all colleges except Stockton State, closed for spring break. The others are Montclair, Jersey City, Kean, William Paterson, Ramapo and Glassboro colleges.

The key issue was salaries, with the union seeking a 12 percent annual increase and the state offering about 7.5 percent over two years. The median faculty salary is $15,000.

Also at issue are changes in contract language sought by the state which union officials say would amount to a loss of academic freedom and a loss of teachers' rights to decide which textbooks to use.

In Minnesota, meanwhile, nearly 1,100 teachers at the state's 18 community colleges began picketing at about 7 a.m.

Some 30,000 students were affected by the strike.

Some colleges were closed for a between-quarters break, but others said they would remain open and will attempt to offer classes.

The striking Minnesota Community College Faculty Association contends the state hasn't honored its past two contracts and didn't authorize funds to finance salary increases arbitrated in previous agreements.

The chapter of the American Association of University Professors at Boston University said its members would boycott classes Wednesday and Thursday to protest dissatisfaction with progress toward a new contract.

The faculty union has proposed a 14 percent salary increase this year, while the university has offered 24.3 percent over three years.

Professor Arnold Offner, a member of the association's bargaining team, said the boycott would take place as scheduled, despite BU President John R. Silber's plea that the teachers stay on the jobs.

BU has about 12,000 students.

Negotiations were set to resume today between the striking Washington Teachers Union and the city school board in an effort to end the walkout, now in its 11th school day.

About half the system's 6,600 teachers have honored the strike. Schools, staffed by non-striking teachers, parents and administrators, have remained open for the city's 113,000 students.

In Baton Rouge, a strike by about two-thirds of the school system's 3,600 teachers moved into its fifth day today as bus drivers joined the walkout.

White House Staying Out

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — The White House does not plan to become involved in the expulsion of American feminist Kate Millet from Iran, President Carter's special adviser on women's issues said today.

Sarah Weddington, a former Texas legislator and U.S. Agriculture Department attorney, was in Montpelier to speak at a Democratic women's luncheon.

"I wouldn't second-guess Kate Millet," she said at a news conference with Lt. Gov. Madeleine Kunin.

"But we have to be very cognizant that the women's movement is very different in other parts of the world."

Miss Millet went to Tehran last week to support Iranian women protesting strict religious dress codes imposed by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, who ordered her expelled for interfering in his government's affairs.

Miss Weddington said she and the administration had "no position" about whether Miss Millet's trip was ill-advised.

Irish Industries Tax Exempt

BY JOHN CUNNIFF
NEW YORK (AP) — They're celebrating the green in Ireland this year, as they always do, but it's the green you put in the wallet rather than the kind that's worn on the lapel.

Industry brings money like farming couldn't, and so, in time for St. Patrick's Day, the government disclosed that from 1981 to 1990 all manufacturers would be free of taxes, and then pay a maximum of only 10 percent "for the rest of this century."

In fact, it is unlikely that many companies at all will pay a pound of taxes in the Emerald Isle before the turn of the century because of the unique tax policy — and export sales relief, depreciation and the like.

Farmers, meanwhile, are being asked to pay income taxes from which they once were exempt, and no sympathy is being wasted on them, not when farm income has been rising close to 30 percent a year since 1973.

"But aren't you giving the country away?" an official of the Irish Industrial Authority was asked. "Not when we have the fastest growing economy in Western Europe," he replied.

The top national priority, said Michael Killeen, who heads the IDA, is employment; and industry, most of it from the United States, much of it electronics and pharmaceuticals, provides it.

Between 1950 and 1970, Killeen points out, U.S. concerns invested $500 million in Irish manufacturing plants, a fair amount considering the population of only 3.25 million people. Then the amounts soared.

Since 1970, IDA figures show, American concerns have pumped $2.5 billion of investment capital into the Irish economy. Atop that, Japanese, German and other countries added about 50 percent more.

While dispersion of the new manufacturing facilities throughout the landscape seemed to disguise the fact, the impact was revolutionary. Compressed into a few years were changes unknown for centuries.

In 1973, Killeen relates, per capita income was 858 pounds. Last year the figure was 1,970 pounds, or roughly $4,000. Per capita output was close to Britain's, and soon is expected to surpass it.

The importance of industry, especially from abroad, is reflected also by the job numbers. About 220,000 Irish work in manufacturing, and one-third of them are employed by American companies. The bulk of those American-made jobs, of course, have been created since 1970.

Nevertheless, unemployment remains a big problem. Last year it stood at 9 percent (compared to a recent U.S. reading of 5.7 percent), but even that doesn't tell the extent of the challenge.

What makes job-creation imperative is the changing sociology of the country. Emigration has nearly ceased. And the birth rate, once barely sufficient to maintain population, is now contributing to growth.

The age of the population also suggests the challenge, as well as its strength. Fifty percent of the people are under 25 years of age; about one-third are under age 15. They want jobs: good jobs, better jobs.

In search of environmentally clean industries, Killeen and a no-nonsense staff come into the boardrooms of America with incredibly detailed studies showing why it pays to manufacture in Ireland.

Goaded by the need for jobs, and spurred by one success after another, they discount the impact of possible recessions as temporary. Growth, from within and without, is the name of the game, and they play hard.

The new tax plan, to begin in 1981, demonstrates the competitiveness. It followed complaints from Ireland's allies in the European Economic Community that its traditional programs violated the spirit of EEC.

The export incentives therefore will be phased out in favor of the new tax program. Whereas export incentives are a legitimate concern of the EEC, a trade official observed, fiscal policy is domestic.

Having to pay for some of this through income taxes hasn't pleased all Irishmen, particularly farmers, but as one official observed, the farmers really don't have that much clout anymore.

The green they talk about in Ireland these days isn't so much the landscape anymore as it is the profits that come from putting something on it, like a factory.

"Losing Hair? Try This At No Risk"

HOUSTON, Texas—If you don't suffer from male pattern baldness, you can now stop your hair loss...and grow more hair.

For years "they said it couldn't be done". But now a firm of laboratory consultants has developed a treatment for both men and women, that is not only stopping hair loss...but is really growing hair! They don't even ask you to take their word for it. They invite you to try the treatment for 32 days, at their risk, and see for yourself! Naturally, they would not offer this opportunity unless the treatment worked. However, it is impossible to help everyone.

The great majority of cases of excessive hair fall and baldness are the beginning and more fully developed stages of male pattern baldness and cannot be helped.

But, if you are not already slick bald, how can you be sure what is actually causing your hair loss? Even if baldness may seem to "run in the family," it is certainly not proof of the cause of YOUR hair loss.

Hair loss caused by sebum can also run in your family, and many other conditions can cause hair loss. If you wait until you are slick bald and your hair roots are dead, you are beyond help. So, if you still have any hair on top of your head, and would like to stop your hair loss and grow more hair...now is the time to do something about it before it's too late.

Loesch Laboratory Consultants, Inc. will supply you with treatment for 32 days—at their risk—if they believe the treatment will help you. Just send them the information listed below. All inquiries are answered confidentially, by mail. Adv.

Sohio, Officials Hope To Revive Pipeline Plan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — California officials, federal officials and Standard Oil Co. of Ohio (SOHIO) plan to meet today in Washington, D.C., to see if they can work out a way to revive the $1 billion Long Beach pipeline project.

State Air Resources Board Chairman Tom Quinn said he and energy Secretary James Schlesinger will meet with Sohio officials, who last week said they were abandoning the project because of too much state regulation.

"We have a proposal that will allow the terminal to be built and allow construction to get underway by the end of this year," Quinn said Monday. "It is a major conceptual change in how the project could be pursued."

Although Sohio officials will be at the meeting, a company spokesman emphasized that the firm is not now reconsidering its decision to scrap plans to ship Alaskan oil from Long Beach to Texas via pipeline.

Frank Mosier, senior vice president, said Sohio still does not believe all obstacles to the project can be cleared by this summer, which Sohio insists upon.

But Mosier said if immediate roadblocks were "by some miracle removed, then we'd have to reconsider what choice we would have."

One of the roadblocks was removed Monday by the California Coastal Commission when it voted 8-1 in favor of the proposed site for two oil tanks. The application was still alive because it came from the Long Beach Harbor Commission.

The two major obstacles remaining are approvals from the South Coast Air Quality Management District and the ARB. But Sohio officials were also worried about possible delays caused by lawsuits from environmental groups.

Inmate Uses Fork To Dig Way Out

FAYETTE, Mo. (UPI) — A 21-year-old man in the Howard County Jail on a forgery charge has proved he's pretty handy with something other than a pen.

David Chitwood escaped from the jail Monday by digging a hole through brick mortar — with a fork.

"He just dug him a hole and climbed out on to a porch," Sheriff Hardin Daugherty said.

Lack Of Leadership Upsets Former TVA Chairman

By JOHN CUNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — He has always tackled the difficult jobs and usually found them possible, especially when people's creative powers were loosed by an infusion of hope and confidence and belief in self.

Perhaps it is axiomatic, universal. He has seen it on development jobs in Tennessee, Colombia, Iran and, in fact, on the most successful development project of all, the United States itself.

But David Lilienthal, former chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, first Atomic Energy Commission chairman, founder of a unique resource development firm, is distressed today.

He believes that human productivity, the answer to social and economic problems, is being thwarted in the United States by the naysayers and pussyfooters. By fumbler. By uninspired officials who fail to lead.

"It's a state of mind," he said; it emanates from poor leadership rather than coming from the people. "Every so often this happens," but now, he said, is one of the worst times. So much needs to be done.

And it can be, he said. "The mood could be turned around in 60 days." Greater productivity, better ways of doing things, is hatched in brains, he said. "I've sat in enough board meetings to know that."

Sad, he said. "Within industry and our scientific organizations we have (potentially) the greatest strength ever to bear on the problems of society." The potential to overwhelm problems, he said.

As he expounded, a string of highly descriptive nouns, product of frustration, tumbled out: delays, timidity, negativism, pessimism....

We talk our potential away, he said. "We're told not to raise our expectations, or that there's nothing we can do." His anger rose. "To hell with the chatter going on," he said. "You'd think we were a banana republic instead of the greatest aggregation of individual, scientific, technical and organizational brainpower."

On the day before, Lilienthal, 79, joined physicists, industrialists and others in tribute to Albert Einstein at Princeton, N.J., Lilienthal's hometown. Conversations reaffirmed private feelings.

"We have the capacity, the resources, the potential beyond the dreams of anyone," he said. But, he lamented, "we neglect our resources, the brainpower and energy of industry and our laboratories."

Those he met at Princeton, he said, were eager to tackle the country's problems and they were, he indicated, frustrated and weary of hearing that those problems cannot be solved.

"Release the inhibited energy of imaginative people in industry and the laboratories," he said. "They're more than ready." The obstacle, he said again, was that useless, debilitating psychological mood.

"It isn't the individuals of the country who are at fault," he repeated. "The mood originates in the minds of a few people." Those few, he said, claimed to be leaders. He scoffed.

As he spoke, Lilienthal's concept of leadership became clear: Whether it is in the Couca Valley of Colombia or Tennessee or in the Khuzestan Valley of Iran, you marshal the beliefs and hopes of people.

Development projects, which he has pursued since founding Development and Resources Inc., a private company, might involve dams, electricity, and irrigation, he said, but all those are products of human power.

"Products of the mind and stimulants of minds, he said. Given hope, he has said earlier after witnessing the phenomenon in less developed nations, humans respond with powers they were thought not to possess.

In the United States, he feels, the spirit and productivity is now bridled by a mood, a mood, he said, that "isn't a law of nature, but created." We must realize, he said, that energy creates energy. "It's all in the mind," he repeated.

"We misuse statistics, and we get depressed by them. We become economic hypochondriacs."

Using those numbers, "experts with long faces overwhelm us. You're not an expert today unless you predict something bad will happen — unless you carry a doleful view into your estimates of the future."

That's unpleasant enough to put up with but it's intolerable "when you're dealing with the lifeblood of the country," Lilienthal said. "It spreads like wildfire."

A positive mood that would restore the "can do" spirit, that would stimulate brainpower, the human energy that raises productivity, would spread even faster, he declared.

That, rather than pessimism, is nature's law, he suggested.

Investment

Acronym Coined

NEW YORK (AP) — The investment world, or the country for that matter, may not need still another new acronym. But one has been coined anyway.

It's DIP, and it stands for a type of program whose popularity among American corporations and their shareholders has grown at a rapid rate in recent years — the automatic dividend-investment plan.

These voluntary plans, under which dividend payouts are converted into additional shares of stock instead of being distributed in cash, first began to appear in the late 1960s as an idea borrowed from the mutual-fund industry.

In 1973, Standard & Poor's Corp. counted some 150 companies offering the plans. By early this year, the number had grown to almost 600 — more than one-fifth of all the companies listed on the New York and American stock exchanges.

The idea's success stems from the fact that it has appeal for all concerned parties — the shareholder looking for ways to build up his investment, and the company as well.

"Reinvestment plans have caught investors' fancy because they offer a convenient way to invest relatively small dividends that might otherwise be spent," S & P said in a report issued last week.

"A shareholder who joins a plan simply has his or her account credited with the number of shares (full or fractional) that the dollar amount of the dividend will buy."

Many plans carry service charges. But as S & P notes, they are typically less than a similar purchase would cost in a normal brokerage transaction. And some companies now pick up part or all of the charges to make their plans more attractive.

In addition, a number of companies — 41, by S & P's latest tally — offer a 5 percent discount from the current market price on stock bought with dividend money.

From the company's standpoint, S & P pointed out, a DIP tends to build goodwill and loyalty among stockholders. If, as in most cases, the purchases of stock are made in the open market, it also gives some support to the price of the shares.

More than 100 companies have taken the idea a step further and issued new stock to cover the purchases, thus adding a convenient means of raising capital.

American Telephone Telegraph is a notable case in point, with 706,000 investors, or nearly 25 percent of all its stockholders, enrolled. The company raised $785 million in new capital last year through its dividend-investment plan, according to SP.

Many plans offer a variety of additional features, such as the option of buying more shares with cash payments along with the dividend funds.

DIPs have flourished, most analysts agree, in an era when capital gains have been relatively hard to come by, and more and more attention is being focused on dividends.

Corporations, in turn, have responded to this new emphasis with record numbers of dividend increases. In the first quarter of 1979, according to William LeFevre, an analyst at Granger Co., 13 of the 30 companies included in the Dow Jones industrial average raised their payouts.

"This is the largest number of dividend increases for one quarter in our memory," LeFevre said.

Deadline Extended For Finding Men

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The deadline for locating 23 men or their heirs who are due part of a $9 million settlement for serving as federal guinea pigs has been extended six months by a federal court.

About 600 uneducated black men, all syphilis victims, took part in the 40-year experiment that was started in 1932 by the U.S. Public Health Service. Doctors left 400 of them untreated in order to study the disease. At least 28 died and estimates range up to 100. In 1974, a $1.8 billion suit was settled when the government agreed to pay $9 million to the 116 known survivors and relatives of the dead. Thursday's ruling extends the deadline to Sept. 18.

Anti-Cancer Plan Easy To Follow

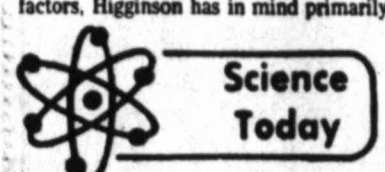

By PATRICIA MCCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Many experts believe most cancers are triggered by environmental factors.

You think of air pollution, noxious chemicals, asbestos fibers and the like.

Such things have been implicated but there is something much higher on the cancer culprit scale, according to Dr. John Higginson, director of the International Agency for Research on Cancer in Lyons, France.

He is talking about environmental factors that you can control — things you eat and drink and even, perhaps, the pills you take to make life more bearable. These are capable of polluting your internal environment.

When he talks about environmental factors, Higginson has in mind primarily things that wreck the body's orderly way of operating.

Science

The problems of cancer-causing pollution in the air and industrial environment must be attacked, Higginson said at a recent symposium on cancer prevention, but so must these things that pollute the internal environment.

And that takes a personal anti-cancer plan that must be followed over a lifetime. Higginson described his and suggested it as a safe one to adopt. The keys to his plan:

- Don't smoke.
- Drink in moderation.
- If sunbathing, cover with adequate creams.

—Don't make yourself obese. Drinking, smoking, sunbathing and eating in excess have been linked to all kinds of cancers.

Higginson recalled that heavy drinkers of hard liquor have more cancer of the esophagus and larynx than moderate drinkers or abstainers. Chain smokers tend to get more lung cancer.

Sun-worshippers, especially fair-skinned ones, tend to get more skin cancer. The obese are heir to more of all kinds of ills than those who moderate their weight.

Put all the ingredients in the personal cancer plan together and you have key components of your lifestyle.

In addition to a personal cancer plan, there should be community cancer plans, Higginson believes.

"I believe the community should be run in a way to make life sufficiently rich for everyone — helping them to adjust to society, to help them avoid a frustrating, boring life."

To escape from a life that is otherwise, many persons get on the tranquilizer track, or lean on other mood altering drugs.

"I am greatly concerned over such things as tranquilizers," Higginson said.

He claims if people had an interesting and enjoyable life they wouldn't need the mood pills. And he said if people had an interesting and enjoyable life perhaps they wouldn't be drinking, smoking and eating to excess.

Higginson said the personal anti-cancer plan in no way should take away from the attack on chemical pollution of the general environment.

"There is every reason to work on the removal of carcinogenic pollutants in industry. I think, however, the chance of a greater impact on cancer will come from lifestyle changes."

But what if you figure it is too late for you — say someone who has been smoking two packs a day, overeating and sipping at least a pint of whisky daily for 25 years?

"It is never too late to say it is too late," Higginson said.

Investigators Unsure Of Collapse's Cause

WHEAT RIDGE, Colo. (AP) — Investigators are unsure whether vandalism or a defect caused a rubberized inflatable dam to collapse, pouring an estimated 32 million gallons of water into a residential area.

The dam was partially refilled with water Sunday and sand bags were piled in front of it to prevent more leakage from the Maple Grove Reservoir. About 1,500 residents were temporarily evacuated from their homes early Sunday after the dam deflated. No one was injured. At one point, police said, up to three feet of water covered low-lying areas of the Denver suburb. Crews stemmed the leak within two hours. Officials said damage was mostly basement flooding.

DIRECTOR EMERITUS
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kenneth Donahue, director of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art for the past 13 years, has been named director emeritus. Donahue will continue to act as de facto curator of European art and to be responsible for a number of the professional aspects of the museum program for the year. Dr. Pratapaditya Pal, senior curator of Indian and Islamic art and acting chief curator since late 1978, has been designated acting director.

models purporting to show the impact of the tax writeoff on waiters, bartenders and other people who work in the restaurant industry.

The last Congress blocked President Carter's proposal to cut in half the deduction allowed for business meals, the ones he calls three-martini lunches.

Carter has not renewed the proposal this year, and it is unlikely he could get it passed if he did.

That is probably just as well for the campaign speechwriters of 1980. Democratic presidents and candidates have been attacking the tax deductible business meal for years. John F. Kennedy did, although he called them two-martini lunches.

Sen. George McGovern upped the estimate to three martinis, and made the complaint about business lunches a fixture in his presidential campaign speeches. He used to complain that "the wealthy businessman can deduct the price of his $50 lunch, but the workingman can't take off the cost of his baloney sandwich."

Carter took up the campaign refrain and, as president, sent up a bill to halve the deduction. Predictably, the restaurant industry fought the measure. So did organized labor, notably the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union, AFL-CIO, which said that the tax change could put 135,000 of its members out of work.

So the tax deduction stood, still a handy target for politicians who consider the business lunch a symbol of tax privilege and inequity.

They brought it up a while back when the administration sought to trim federal spending for school lunch programs, arguing that it was disgraceful to make those cuts while permitting tax deductions for business meals.

But Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, said there is nothing in logic or fact to connect the two. "This is the kind of inflammatory logic which would have us believe that every business meal consists of three martinis," he said.

With that, Inouye produced a computer study he said demonstrated that a change in the tax rules would lead to wholesale layoffs in the restaurant industry.

"Should tax deductions for business meals be curtailed, the law will not be depriving many businessmen and women of three martinis," Inouye said. "In view of the statistics and studies we now have, there is a very strong probability a quarter of a million people will be deprived of a livelihood, however."

Inouye said he got his numbers from experts at the Bureau of Labor Statistics. He said advocates of the tax law change were relying on a faulty study by the Congressional Research Service, which said it would not lead to layoffs in the food and drink industry.

He said that study was flawed because it included projected employment in fast food restaurants like McDonald's and Burger King.

ANDERSON NAMED

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter Anderson, director of the National Endowment for the Arts' Music Program, has been named special assistant to the endowment chairman. In his new post, Anderson will serve as adviser to the chairman in a broad range of activities.

After all, not that many big deals are wrapped up over a Big Mac. A businessman cannot even get one martini there.

Not to be outdone, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., ardent critic of the deductible meal, commissioned a new study by the Library of Congress. He said the method and conclusions of the study Inouye cited were highly questionable.

Kennedy said the library study of the bureau study found errors which, when taken into account, eliminate the projected job losses. In fact, he said, if they are read correctly, both studies show that a change in the tax rule would not result in any significant layoffs.

There the matter stands, perhaps awaiting a new phrasemaker to take up the case for one side or the other. The debate had a lot more zip before the computers took it over.

Modern Technology Among Microprocessor Parts

And JOHN MARKOFF

The tiny, silicon-based microprocessor, which has enabled man to girdle the globe with vast, instantaneous information networks, is itself the product of what may be the world's first "global factories."

The manufacture of these computers-on-a-chip is accomplished by highly paid, highly educated scientists in America — and by assembly line workers throughout Asia who earn as little as ten cents an hour. The Asian assembly lines are linked to America by jet-age air freight and satellite communications networks.

As an American manager in an Indonesian factory put it, "Santa Clara (California) is just a telex away."

So highly integrated, automated and sophisticated is the production of microprocessors that the process itself has been likened to a finely-tuned computer. But it is a computer with an odd assortment of parts, comprised of space-age technology and 19th century working conditions.

Today's microprocessor is the grandchild of the transistor, which was invented by American scientists in 1947. It in turn led to the development of the semiconductor industry a few years later and then, in the early 1960s, the integrated circuit industry. Integrated circuits

This part of the production process, unlike the earlier steps, is labor-intensive, routine and low-skilled. In fact, were it not for the subsistence or below-subsistence wages paid to the Asian workers, the bonding process would be a ripe step for automation. As it is, little automation is happening in the Asian factories.

While Asian tend to be low in all industries compared to U.S. wages, the Asian microprocessor assembly line worker earns about a third less than workers in other industries, according to Bob Snow, a research associate at the East-West Center in Honolulu who has investigated the industry.

"One major California firm's Hong Kong workforce is almost all women, young Chinese girls 14-18 years old," he said. "They work the same day as women in Mountain View, Ca. — seven hours and 20 minutes — but they get about $2 a day. It's true that $2 buys a hell of a lot more in Hong Kong than in California, but it's nowhere near enough to live on."

Actually, the Hong Kong worker getting $2 a day is fairly well off compared to microprocessor industry workers in other countries. According to an American manager in a Fairchild Semiconductor plant in Hong Kong, the company's Singapore workers in 1975 were earning 80 cents an hour while their Korean workers were getting 47 cents an hour. The generally less productive Indonesian employees cost the company is reported 22 cents an hour. Recent devaluation have reduced that to a mere ten cents an hour, according to a reliable source who recently investigated the Indonesian plants.

A Fairchild spokesman at the company's Santa Clara headquarters refused to confirm or deny these figures.

A source at the American embassy in Indonesia explained that such low wages are possible because virtually any job at any pay is considered a luxury. Fairchild employs some 3000 Indonesians and receives about 500 applicants on any given day, according to the embassy source.

Low wages, unregulated working conditions and lack of aggressive labor unions in large part explain the industry's preference for Asia. But there are also important tax incentives.

Many Asian governments, eager to attract the American firms, are creating new "free trade zones" where companies can locate and escape local taxes. Also, special U.S. tariff provisions allow semiconductor manufacturers to pay duties on re-imported goods only on the value added overseas. Since labor costs are so low, the companies pay small import duties when the assembled parts return to the States.

According to an authoritative trade journal, Fairchild, for instance, claims that only five percent of the value of its production is created abroad, although some 60 percent of its total workforce is outside the U.S. American labor unions attack these provisions on the grounds that they encourage the export of American jobs abroad.

The companies argue that the special tax privileges are necessary to maintain free trade. But at the same time, they have been pressuring the U.S. government to take steps to discourage competitive Japanese semiconductor exports to this country.

In keeping with the highly integrated nature of the industry, all key decision making, such as plant expansion, automation, or plant closures, are made in the U.S. This situation results in even less local autonomy for Asian workers and managers than is common in foreign-owned companies. It has also meant that wherever labor problems do arise, the companies can simply pack up and move to more congenial countries.

The analogy to the computer fits: The "brains" of the industry (the microprocessor) is in California, controlling with ruthless logic all the moving parts (the assembly workers) far away in Asia. With its superhuman logic, the microprocessor has combined the best of 20th century science with the worst of 19th century labor.

meant that various electronic elements, including transistors, could be combined on a tiny chip of semi-conductive silicon, which in the form of sand is the world's most common element next to oxygen. It is now possible to put as many as 100,000 transistors, resistors and other circuitry elements on a single chip about half the size of a little fingernail.

These transistors act as tiny valves, shutting bursts of electric current, in the form of binary digits (zeros and ones); back and forth to make literally hundreds of thousands of computations per second. By means of the modern alchemy of computer logic, the circuitry can store data for later processing, perform arithmetic and logic operations, or deliver its results to a computer user through a variety of different "read-outs."

This complex design process is accomplished by scientists and engineers working in high security research laboratories. The companies tend to be clustered in California's Santa Clara valley near San Francisco. The companies tend to be clustered in California's Santa Clara valley near San Francisco; hence the nickname "Silicon Gulch."

The design and initial manufacturing steps of the microprocessor are unique for the degree of automation and high technology involved. Indeed, as the microprocessor grows both smaller and more powerful, it is necessary to rely increasingly on computers to design them. The human mind alone cannot cope with the complexity of the circuitry.

As many as 300 chips are made at one time from a thin-sliced wafer of polished silicon about three inches in diameter. Because even the smallest speck of dust will render the chips useless, the wafers are handled in rooms specially constructed to be dust-free. A typical fabrication plant contains less than 100 dust particles per cubic foot, compared to about 10,000 particles per foot in a modern hospital.

The silicon wafers are "doped" with various impurities in order to create electrically conductive and non-conductive areas. These positive and negative specks act as transistors, or tiny electronic switches that shuttle the electrical current about.

The design of these transistors is created in a large drawing, which is photographically reduced to the point that the circuits are virtually invisible to the naked eye.

After the silicon wafers have been treated with a photo-sensitive emulsion, the reduce "photomask" of the circuit design is placed over it and exposed to ultraviolet light. This burns the pattern into the wafer. The complex process is repeated for each layer of the design, often as many as ten times.

Finally, the entire wafer is coated with an aluminum conductor and the subjected to an inspection to check for defects. Even with this precise microscopic manufacturing process, many chips on each wafer are found to be useless.

The wafer is the cut with a diamond cutter and the bad chips are discarded. The good ones may be sorted by quality; the best may go to the military for space systems and the worst to the consumer market for things like pocket calculators and digital watches.

But before they are ready for any application they undergo a kind of time warp. They still must be "bonded," or wired, to small circuit boards. This painstaking process, which involves connecting as many as 60 tiny wires on each chip, is accomplished by thousands of young Asian women working over microscopes in dozens of assembly plants in Hong Kong, Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia, South Korea, the Philippines and Taiwan.

Board Wants MGM To Pay Paint Bill

WALLACE, Idaho (AP) — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer wants to repaint part of this northern Idaho mining town's little blue school house for a movie. The school board has agreed, but thinks the whole building should be painted, with MGM footing part of the $19,000 bill.

The school was painted blue about eight years ago, and for some residents, the blue has made them see red. Board member Dennis Wheeler said he considers a blue school house a "disgrace." MGM says it needs to repaint part of the building to blend in with others in the area, and is willing to paint that portion blue again. But the whole school appears to be another matter. Negotiations are underway.

New York Teen-Agers Face Life Imprisonment

NEW YORK (UPI) — Robert Davis, 13, tops 5 feet by only 3 inches. He weighs 95 pounds and under his neatly trimmed Afro, his face is innocent — even angelic.

But Robert went on trial for murder Monday, a trial that could end with his being sentenced to life in prison under New York state's new juvenile crime laws — the toughest in the nation.

In Syracuse, N.Y., 291 miles north of the Rikers Island jail cell where Davis is being held, a 15-year-old named Charlie Larson spends his days in the Hillbrook Detention Center, facing a similar plight.

Until their arrests for murder last year, Robert Davis and Charlie Larson were two teen-agers with very little in common.

Davis is the third of five children born to a mother on welfare and a father who long ago fled the dilapidated South Bronx neighborhood where Robert was raised. Weeds and beer cans line the empty lots next to his mother's apartment on East 157th Street.

Larson — 5-foot-3, 114 pounds — is the youngest of five children born to a dairy farmer and a seamstress in Oneonta, an upstate community of 16,000. Before his parents were divorced, Charlie grew up on a farm nestled on the side of a hill. His mother, Ruth, now lives in a trailer with her second husband.

"I ain't used to being locked up, having people buzz open doors for me," Charlie says in a voice too husky for a child, yet not deep enough for a man. "I just think about getting out of here."

He sits in a green cinderblock room with a heavy wooden door marked "Interview." His small hands twist nervously between the knees of his tie-dyed jeans. As his gaze darts about the room, Charlie squirms.

Oneonta police arrested him, along with a 22-year-old man and two other teen-agers, on Dec. 14, 1978.

In the early hours of that day, as darkness enveloped Oneonta's Wilber Park, 17-year-old Billy Adkins was beaten, kicked and stabbed three times in the heart. The body of the high school student — a schoolmate of Charlie's — was found 15 feet from the banks of Oneonta Creek.

A grand jury indictment returned Jan. 5 accused Charlie and the others of "depraved indifference to human life." The

Navy Takes Lobsters From Pots

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It wasn't until two weeks ago that Karl Ek learned the probable fate of some lobster traps he placed in the Atlantic Ocean last summer: apparently a Navy crew had a lobster feast at Ek's expense.

Last August, Ek, 36, of North Kingston, R.I., a commercial lobster fisherman for the past 13 years, returned to his strings of pots about 100 miles off the coast to find many had vanished.

"In the lobster business, gear disappears at strange times," Ek said Sunday in a telephone interview from his home. "We wondered, of course, where they went, but it's just one of those things."

Ek was contacted by Navy investigators two weeks ago, and learned the real story.

It seems a submarine rescue ship, the USS Petrel, on a secret mission, pulled alongside Ek's floating pots last Aug. 19.

At the direction of the Petrel's officers, the crew pulled up the pots, removed an estimated 50 lobsters, then dumped the traps back over the side. The lobsters were sent to the galley for preparation.

"I was pretty shocked and very upset when I heard about it," Ek said. "If you can't trust the Navy, even knowing it was just a few individuals, who can you trust? It's their position to be protecting us, not ripping us off."

A Navy spokesman contacted Sunday said he could not comment on the matter.

But an article in Sunday's Washington Post reported that some crew members lodged an official complaint when the 252-foot-long Petrel returned to its home port at Charleston, S.C., and an investigation was begun.

A Navy source quoted by the Post said, "Many of the crew were outraged by this blatant and remorseless conduct that took a man's livelihood and made them involuntary parties to a criminal act."

Ek said there probably were not "a great number" of lobsters in the missing pots, "but enough, I suppose, for a good dinner on the boat."

He said he is more concerned with the loss of the pots, which represent "future income that is lost," but said Navy officials have indicated he may be reimbursed. He estimated the loss at "under $20,000."

Ek also said the incident may not be isolated.

In 1976, he explained, one of his employees saw a home movie showing a Navy boat with what appeared to be some of his gear aboard. Ek said he thought nothing of it until two weeks ago, "but now I'm seriously thinking about inquiring about that incident."

Founder Says Carter Tricked Generals

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The founder of the John Birch Society says President Carter is to blame for the executions of Iranian generals who had served the shah.

Robert Welch said Carter "tricked" the shah's military leaders into being conciliatory to the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. "Carter killed those men as surely as if he commanded the firing squad," the 79-year-old Welch said at the society's annual dinner Saturday. Welch also accused Carter of making a "slimy concession to the butchers of Peking" in recognizing that government.

case is expected to be heard in May.

Murder is a rare event in the silo-dotted Oneonta countryside, certainly rarer than in New York City, where on a given day, an average of 4.15 people are slain.

Under state law — enacted last September during a gubernatorial campaign and a growing fervor against crimes committed by juveniles — a 13-year-old arrested for second-degree murder or a 14- or 15-year-old arrested for any one of 14 violent crimes may be prosecuted as an adult.

But the epidemic of juvenile crime knows no state boundaries.

Recent FBI statistics indicate that nearly half of all serious crimes in the U.S. are committed by those 10 to 17 years old. In 1977, police arrested 2.17 million youngsters under the age of 18.

Police are tight-lipped about a motive in the Adkins slaying. Nor will they say if a weapon has been recovered or whether the teen-ager was dead when his attacker or attackers fled.

In an interview at Hillbrook, Charlie was barred by his lawyer from discussing any aspect of the case. He has few visitors because Syracuse is more than a two-hour drive from Oneonta through a series of winding back roads.

Charlie said he "can't wait" to take those roads "to get home." Home for him since December has been Hillbrook, a clean, efficient-looking place that seems more like a medical-professional building than a jail.

His medium-length brown hair is parted in the middle. Blue eyes look downward at the brown formica table. A large eagle — wings spread in triumphant flight — adorns the front of a "Steve Miller Band" T-shirt. The eagle soars; Charlie feels trapped.

While Charlie Larson spends his days in an 8-by-10 room at Hillbrook, Robert Davis awaits judge and jury in a 9-by-9 cell in the Rikers Island juvenile offenders detention facility.

Once the lights flicker on in Cell B-15 at 6 o'clock sharp every morning, Davis spends most of the day playing basketball or attending sixth grade in Mrs. Hingleton's class at the jail.

He is charged with taking part in the slaying of 19-year-old John Hernandez on a northbound platform of a Bronx subway station last Sept. 19. Hernandez was heading home, carrying a TV antenna for the set he had bought for his bride of four months.

Three youths demanded money. Hernandez refused. He was shot in the stomach with a .22-caliber pistol. He bled to death on the concrete floor.

Frightened by bystanders, the trio took the antenna but fled without the $38 Hernandez had in his wallet. Davis was later arrested. His two alleged accomplices have not been arrested and no gun was recovered.

Robert had turned 13 — becoming eligible for treatment as an adult suspect — only 43 days before his arrest. And the juvenile law had taken effect 19 days before Hernandez was slain.

"The allegation is that he was with two older kids and one of the kids shot Hernandez," says Davis' lawyer, Stanley Green, who refused to allow his client to be interviewed.

Green called Davis "rather quiet," adding, "He's overwhelmed by the whole thing."

When a reporter visited Davis' cell block, the baby-faced youth was sitting quietly in the corner of the prison classroom. He bit his fingernails and stared at the white racing stripes on his green sneakers. He won't talk, at least not to reporters.

"He was a very aggressive little kid when he first came in here," said warden John Incledon as he eyed Davis through a glass window. "He thought he was very tough — getting into fights at the drop of a hat."

"He's got a lot more self-control now," Incledon said. "He even watches out for the smaller kids. He modified his behavior quite a bit. He's come a long way, Robert has."

Incledon locked the door to the classroom and led his visitor down the brick-lined corridor to daylight. "A long way."

Nothing Has Gone Right For Tison Brothers

YUMA, Ariz. (AP) — "It wouldn't surprise us if we did get the death penalty," Raymond Tison said. "Nothing else has gone right."

Raymond, 19, and his brother, Ricky, 20, will be sentenced March 29 by Superior Court Judge Douglas Keddie. The Casa Grande brothers were convicted of first-degree murder, kidnapping, armed robbery and auto theft in the Aug. 1 shotgun deaths of a family of four.

Deposit Law Stirs Fuss In Michigan

LANSING, Mich. (UPI) — Michigan appears to be fighting a border war over beer.

The state's new law requiring deposits on all beverage containers is boosting beer prices, sending border residents into neighboring states where they can save nearly $6 a case in some instances.

The loss of business is compounded by the loss to the state of 46 cents a case in excise taxes. Adding to the whole problem is lax enforcement of laws banning importation of beer into Michigan without state approval.

Beer brewers say they've been forced to raise prices to cover the cost of new containers required under the law, plus the machinery and workers required to clean the empty deposit bottles.

Distributors say they also must hike prices to cover the added cost of picking up and storing the empty containers. The increases are passed on to retailers, and then to consumers.

"There's just no way I can compete," said one party store owner in Niles, near the Indiana border. "I'm paying my distributor $7 a case for Strohs. With my markup and the deposit, I've got to sell it for $11.80."

"But my customers can drive three miles down U.S. 31 into South Bend and buy it for $5.99," he said.

Down the road, South Bend liquor store manager Mark Keller said Michigan residents now make up a substantial portion of his customers. The same appears to be true for liquor stores across the Ohio and Wisconsin borders.

"People come in and ask me if they can get arrested for taking beer across the state line," he said. "I haven't heard of anyone getting busted — and we've got Michigan people coming in here and buying 10 or more cases."

"They say they're taking orders from people in their neighborhood," Keller said. "Michigan's killing itself."

Enforcement of anti-import laws generally is left to local authorities, and their activities have been less than stringent, admits Lorne Henderson of the state Liquor Control Commission's enforcement division.

Henderson said his agency is preparing an "informational brochure" to distribute to retailers on both sides of the state line, but is planning no beefed-up border surveillance.

"There's bound to be some bootlegging taking place," said state police spokesman Paul Hill. "It's really too early to tell if this is going to be a major problem."

But Hill said troopers aren't considering creating a special unit to deal with beer bootleggers. Such a squad now exists to handle cigarette bootleggers.

Importing alcoholic beverages is a misdemeanor carrying up to a $500 fine and six months in jail.

Amount of Misspent Payments Declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The amount the government misspent in its biggest welfare program declined by more than half a percentage point in the first six months of 1978.

Joseph A. Califano Jr., the secretary of health, education and welfare, said Saturday that the rate of excessive payments in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program dropped from 8.7 percent to 8.1 percent during that period. Some $414 million of the $5.1 billion paid out in the program went to those who were ineligible or got too much, Califano said.

Authorities Seize Hashish Shipment

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A shipment of 40,000 pounds of hashish worth an estimated $40 million has been seized by federal authorities who said it could be the largest such seizure in U.S. history.

The captain and seven American and West German crewmen of the 189-foot ship Olau were arrested Saturday night and jailed in New York City after the small ship was boarded as it neared New York Harbor, according to U.S. Attorney Robert J. Del Tufo. Drug Enforcement Administration agents said they found the hashish in the ship's hold hidden in tire tubes and covered with burlap bags.

Five Burglary Ring Members Arrested

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Five members of what the FBI calls a "sophisticated interstate burglary ring" are charged with interstate transportation of stolen property in the theft of more than $1 million in diamonds and gold.

They apparently broke into a safe at Leroy's Jewelry Store in a shopping mall near Niles and used an acetylene torch to burn into two smaller security safes inside, the FBI said. The five were arrested Saturday outside Youngstown. The FBI refused to specify the basis for its charge of interstate transportation.

John F. Lyons, 24, an Omaha, Neb., Marine assigned to Yuma, was killed with his wife, Donelda, 24, son, Christopher, 22 months, and niece, Teresa Tyson, 15, of Las Vegas, Nev. The family was ambushed near Quartzsite as the Tison brothers fled with their father, Gary Tison, 42, and Randy Greenawalt, 30, of Thornton, Colo.

Raymond and Ricky, and another brother, Donald, 20, used sawed-off shotguns to break their father and Greenawalt, both serving life for murder, out of the Arizona State Prison on July 30.

The gang was captured Aug. 11 in a roadblock shootout near Casa Grande. Donald was shot to death and his father was found dead of exposure 11 days later. The brothers plotted to break their father out of the Florence prison because "it was the only alternative," Ricky said.

The elder Tison had been in prison since 1967, and had filed repeated petitions for release but "the administration knocked down everything he tried."

"We knew it was wrong, breaking Dad out," Raymond said. "Guess our love for our dad won over."

Original plans called for the brothers to split from their father and Greenawalt but the group did not separate, as the trail led to southwest Colorado, where the bodies of James and Margene Judge were found in November. The Tisons were captured in a van stolen from Amarillo honeymooners, and they face trial along with Greenawalt for the slayings.

"All the heat was coming down," Raymond said when asked why the gang did not separate. "Arizona was not the place to split up."

Recalling the two-week flight, Raymond added, "You get so tired and edgy. You're always looking over your shoulder and you never know what's around the next corner. I've had my fill with running."

The brothers already have begun serving 34 years to life in the Arizona State Prison for their role in the escape.

"The catcalls started there when the prison guards decided we needed extra security," Raymond said. "But that just makes everything worse."

Ricky said, "You've got to mingle with the crowd and hope they don't get too mean. You don't show 'em you're scared because if you back down once, that's it."

The slaying of the Lyons baby appears to have upset fellow inmates, the brothers noted.

"We've been called everything from SOB to a baby killer," Raymond said, with Ricky adding, "Baby killer is the worst."

"I'm no baby killer," Raymond insisted. "I dig the hell out of little kids."

The brothers said their father would not have involved them in the escape if he could have foreseen the outcome.

"He wanted to be with us but didn't want us to get in trouble," said Raymond. "We only saw him once a week and he thought he was cheating us — growing up with a father who wasn't there most of the time. Actually, we had more of a father than most people in the street."

But, Ray said, "He's better off now than having to go back to that prison."

And their brother?

"I don't like the idea of Donnie being dead," said Ricky. "But I'm glad he's not having to go through all of this."

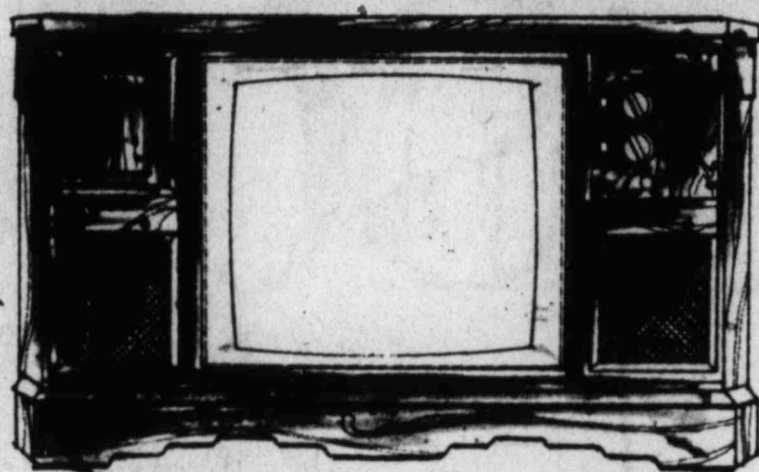

Considering what they've been through and what they face, the brothers said the possibility of the death penalty is painful only because of its effect on their mother. "She's lost Dad and Donnie, and we're all she's got left," said Raymond.

He added, "After 30 years in jail, what kind of life have we got left?"

GRIFFIN BELL

Contempt Order Against Bell Vacated

NEW YORK (AP) — A contempt of court order against Attorney General Griffin Bell for refusing to identify FBI informants was vacated Monday by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The appellate court directed U.S. District Judge Thomas P. Griesa, who cited Bell for contempt in July 1978, to impose some sort of "issue-related sanctions" as an alternative measure.

In its unanimous ruling, the three-judge panel did not specify what sanctions could be imposed if the government continued to refuse to identify its informants. But the government had suggested in its arguments that a partial cash settlement might be one option to settle the lawsuit.

The appellate case was considered a significant first test of the government's contention that it had a right to default in certain court actions and pay monetary or other penalties rather than disclose the identity of its informants and endanger their lives and national security.

The current dispute arose in a case before Griesa in which the Socialist Workers Party seeks $40 million damages for alleged illegal acts by the government during FBI surveillance of its members since 1938.

Earlier attempts to appeal Griesa's action failed in the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals and also in the U.S. Supreme Court.

However, a review later was granted when Appeals Judge Murray I. Gurfein ruled that the issue was so exceptional that it necessitated a review because of "legitimate public interest."

There was no immediate comment from the Socialist Workers Party or the Justice Department.

The court said that holding the attorney general in contempt to ensure compliance with a court order should be a last resort to be undertaken only after all other means have been exhausted.

It said Bell "is not simply an attorney, but the chief law enforcement officer of the nation... Courts accordingly owe him respect as an official and, absent an abuse of power or misuse of office, the most careful and reasoned treatment as party or as litigant."

Arguing on behalf of Bell during the appeals hearing last November, U.S. Attorney Robert B. Fiske Jr. contended the government had a right to concede certain allegations and agree to a partial default in the $40 million suit.

Fiske said this was an alternate, issue-related sanction which would enable the government to keep its tradition of confidentiality regarding informants.

"We would rather lose the case than turn over the files of these informants," Fiske said at the November 1978 appeals hearing. Bell never personally appeared before the court.

In ordering Griesa to withdraw the contempt citation and an order for Bell to disclose the files of 18 FBI informants, the appeals judges noted that Griesa's orders normally could not be appealed. But they said they took their action "in view of the extraordinary circumstances and the nature of the case."

The court suggested that one method of resolving the issue would be for Griesa to provide information from the FBI files to lawyers for the Socialist Workers Party without disclosing the names of informants.

The case by the Socialist Workers Party and its youth arm, Young Socialist Alliance, was filed July 18, 1973 and attorney Leonard Boudin argued it was necessary for the FBI to produce its files on informant activities to properly assess damages in the case.

The government conceded that 1,304 informants were used to survey party activities over the years and that 300 had served as members and 60 as office holders in the party.

After long litigation and negotiation,

Griesa directed the attorney general to disclose 18 files of informants. The government refused in order to bring about a court test of the judge's action.

Legislation Would Reverse Action

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Michigan congressman has introduced legislation to reverse a Senate action raising the amount of outside income senators are allowed to earn.

The measure introduced Monday by Rep. Bob Carr, D-Mich., would undo the effect of a Senate vote earlier this month that delayed for four years the effectiveness of a Senate rule limiting outside income to $8,625 a year — 15 percent of the congressional salary. The House left intact its rule on outside income. Carr's legislation must pass the Senate as well as the House to become law.

Strike Vote Requested By Union

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Teamsters union, reportedly pressing for a 35 percent wage-benefit increase from the trucking industry, today requested a strike authorization vote from locals around the country.

The two sides resumed negotiations today in attempts to reach a settlement for 300,000 truckers and warehousemen before their current three-year contract expires March 31. The talks, which the administration is watching closely, were moved here from Florida.

Top Teamsters officials held a meeting with 600 union officers from around the country Monday and it was decided to seek a strike authorization vote from rank-and-file members.

Such routine authorization, required by federal law before a strike can be called, would not necessarily mean a strike. But the move will put pressure on negotiators, since a fat settlement would violate President Carter's voluntary 7 percent wage increase guidelines.

"The delegates were asked to go back to their locals for the purpose of conducting a secret ballot for strike authorization," said Teamsters' spokesman Bernard Henderson today.

Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons answered indirectly when asked about the possibility of a strike.

"Everyone who has ever negotiated a contract wants to settle without a strike," he said.

A new contract is considered crucial to the success of Carter's anti-inflation program and the administration is already threatening to deregulate the trucking industry if the bargain is excessive.

The deregulation threat came last week from Alfred Kahn, the administration's chief inflation adviser, as he disclosed that the union was seeking a 35 percent wage-benefit increase during three years — well above the administration's 7 percent per year standard.

"I don't think he's (Kahn) the best qualified expert," Fitzsimmons said.

J. Curtis Counts, head of the industry bargaining arm, Trucking Management, Inc., indicated the deregulation issue had no place in the collective bargaining process.

"We would like to believe that the issue of regulation or deregulation would be considered by Congress on its merits," Counts said.

He indicated there was poor coordination between the administration and the industry about deregulation.

Newton Witness Changes Story

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — The star prosecution witness in the Huey Newton murder trial has reversed herself, denying that she saw the Black Panther leader kill a prostitute in 1974 on an Oakland street corner.

Michelle Jenkins, herself a former prostitute, had earlier testified that she saw Newton stop his car, get into an argument with Kathleen Smith, 17, and then shoot her.

Miss Jenkins, called back to the stand Monday by Newton's attorney, Michael Kennedy, said she had lied earlier.

Kennedy asked Newton to stand up in the courtroom. He then asked Miss Jenkins:

"Is this the man you saw on an Oakland street corner on Aug. 6, 1974, with a gun in his hand?"

Miss Jenkins said, "No."

The attorney asked: "Are you sure?"

"I'm sure," the witness said.

Kennedy then asked her: "Has anybody from my staff threatened you in any way?"

She said, "No."

Prosecutor Tom Orloff asked Miss Jenkins whom she had seen with the gun.

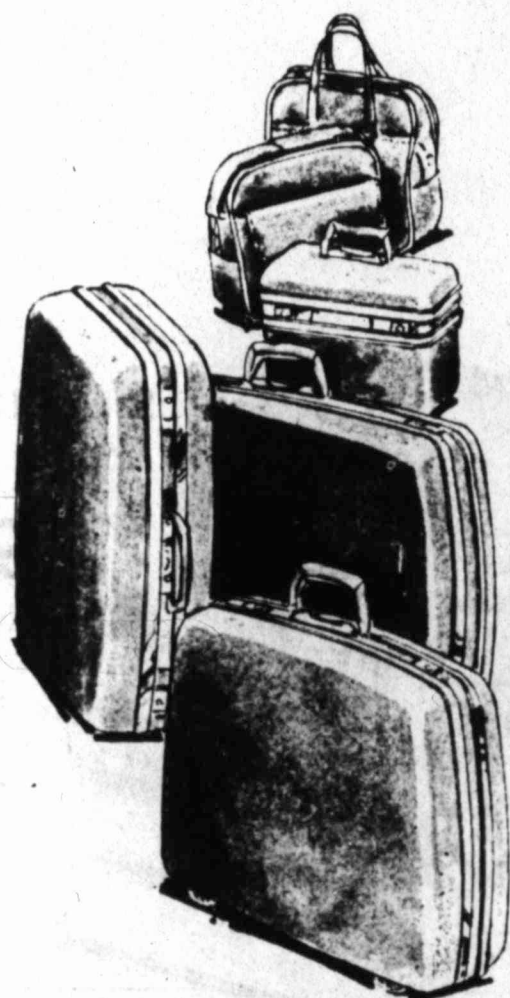

"I can't say that it was Mr. Newton or anybody else. I assumed it was Mr. Newton because ever since his name came up I assumed it was him. But I don't know who it was. I saw a person that night, but I can't say it was him."

Asked if she feared Newton, Miss Jenkins replied:

"As everybody knows, there are tall tales about this man, a lot of little lies, little stories I've heard about this man. That's enough to scare anybody to tell you the truth about it."

Player Of Year 'Just Plain Folks' Off Basketball Court

By WICK TEMPLE
AP Sports Editor

The blue and white Cessna cut smartly through the crisp, clear Midwest morning and purred to a stop on the tarmac at Meigs Field, Chicago's downtown airport. The door flopped open and three rather ordinary men stepped out and shook themselves like chickens, as if to shed the wrinkles of the flight.

Then in one sighing motion that allowed the little plane to rise perceptibly on its wheels, the Cessna disgorged Larry Bird.

The young man who is one of the finest basketball players the game has seen wore neatly pressed slacks and a loose-fitting sweater. The sun sparkled in his sandy hair. He carried a styrofoam cup into which he casually spat tobacco juice.

The first impression of him is one of awe. Larry Bird is built exactly like a tree trunk.

It isn't the height. Six feet, nine inches is not out of the ordinary for today's basketball players. But Bird is not one of those people who look like they were put on a rack and stretched. He is perfectly proportioned — shoulders broad enough to handle the height. Shaking hands with him is like being grabbed by a steamshovel. He is truly a giant. Human beings aren't supposed to come in that size.

Bird and his Indiana State University coach, Bill Hodges, had flown up to Chicago from Terre Haute to receive AP College Player of the Year and Coach of the Year awards. It was the morning after they had beaten Virginia Tech at Lawrence, Kan., in the second round of the NCAA tournament. Bird had to be a little tired, but he didn't show it.

The group encountered some Indiana State fans in the lobby of the little airport that nestles in the shadow of Chicago's storied Soldier Field. Most were businessmen up for the day from the town Larry Bird put on the map. They approached him easily, grinning in appreciation. All had watched the victory on television the day before in Terre Haute.

Larry has an easy way with people he knows. Like most big men, he slouches a couple of inches when consorting with ordinary-sized folk. It is a gesture of consolation. He jokes with the Terre Haute crowd and there is a bit of backslapping and horseplay. The player holds his left hand away from the action because the thumb is in a cast and a bandage grips the rest of the hand and wrist.

You have to keep reminding yourself that he is doing all these things with a broken hand. Writers don't type with broken hands. Builders don't put up bricks with them. But athletes are different. It is called playing hurt and some do it well, some don't. It is safe to imagine that a number of fractures would be required to stop Larry Bird from playing basketball.

On the brief ride to town Bird jokes with Hodges, a wiry little man with a sparkling eye and a quick country wit, and Dr. Richard Landini, president of Indiana State University. Landini treats Bird like a kid brother of whom he is very proud.

Bird treats everyone alike if he likes them, and he seems to like most people. His roommate, Bill Heaton, whose left-handed flip shot with one second left sent Indiana State to the NCAA's final four this weekend in Salt Lake City, says, "Everyone gets along well with Larry."

This turns out to be not quite so. Bird developed a singular dislike for sports writers after he was misquoted a couple of times, and the feeling was cemented in his head by a critical column in a Chicago newspaper.

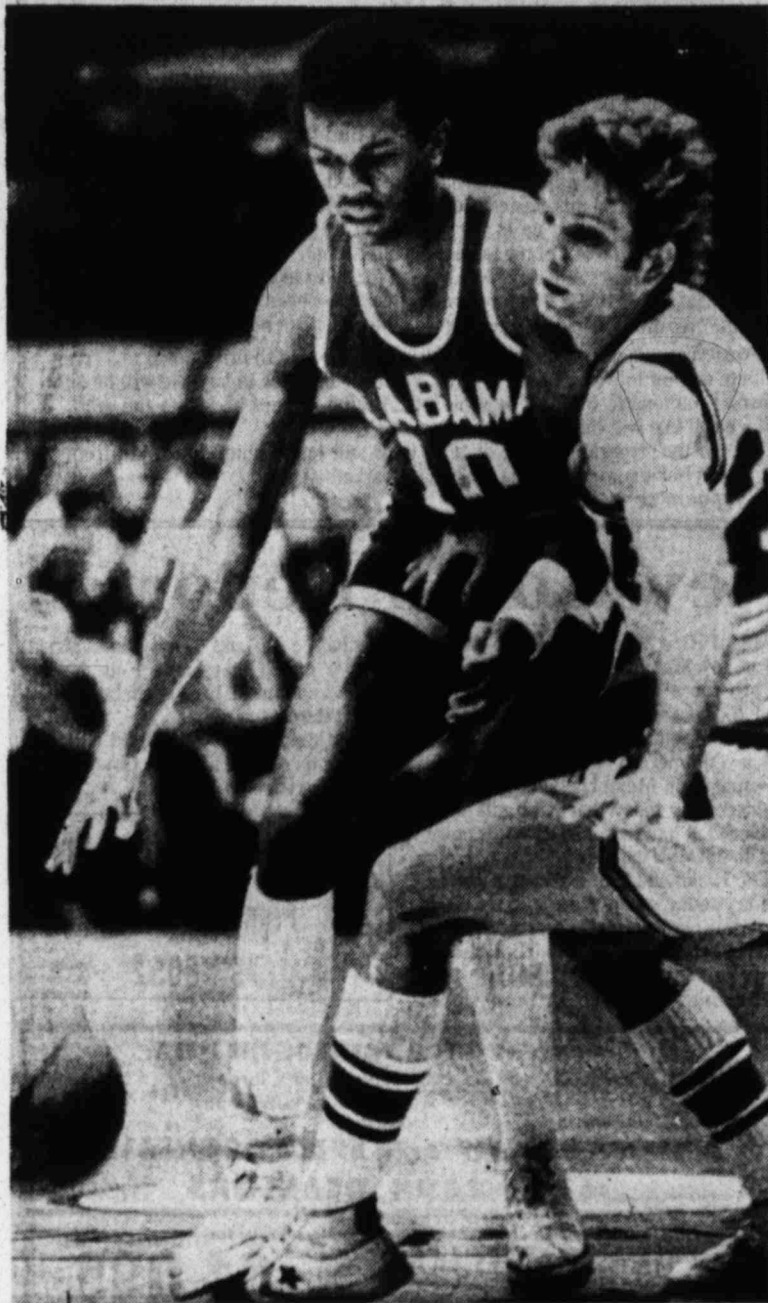

When Bird rose to accept the Adolph Rupp Trophy as player of the year, the first thing he did was ask if that writer was in the room. Informed that he was not, Bird said that was too bad and called the fellow an unprintable name in a very straightforward manner.

One of the misquotes that got Larry and the sports writers on opposite sides of the fence involved a question about what happens at Indiana State when a player's grades go bad. Bird said something to the effect that "Coach Hodges takes care of that," meaning that Hodges arranged for tutoring or a swift kick in the pants or whatever was necessary to get things straightened out. The way it was printed, it looked like Hodges puts in the fix.

Little things like that convinced Bird early on to talk only to radio and television reporters "because they can't change my words."

In the question and answer period that followed the trophy presentation, Bird explained that he had another reason for not talking to reporters. He said they

Purdue, Hoosiers In Finals

NEW YORK (AP) — Purdue University and Indiana University are a mere 120 miles apart and brothers in the Big Ten Conference, but now their basketball teams are even closer than that — right next to each other in the final round of the National Invitation Tournament.

The first NIT championship game between two schools from the same state in 20 years was set up Monday when the 15th-ranked Boilermakers, 27-7, from West Lafayette, Ind., and the unrated

Hoosiers, 21-12, from Bloomington, Ind., won semifinal games at Madison Square Garden. They play Wednesday night in the first intrastate NIT final since 1958 when Xavier, Ohio defeated Dayton 78-74 in overtime.

Purdue, led by Joe Barry Carroll's 42 points, destroyed Alabama 87-66 and Indiana, behind Mike Woodson's 20 points and a suffocating defense, beat Big Ten Conference rival Ohio State 64-55 Monday night in the semifinals of the 42nd NIT.

In their two prior meetings this season, Indiana won at home 63-54 and Purdue took the second game on its court 55-48.

"The Big Ten is king in the Midwest, it doesn't worry about the rest of the country," said Indiana Coach Bobby Knight.

If the Big Ten is as dominating a conference as Knight suggests, then the individual king in the Midwest is the massive, 7-foot-1, 240-pound Carroll.

In scoring nearly half his team's points and reaching a career high against Alabama, the third-team All-American junior center awed a crowd of 14,632, including many pro scouts, general managers and coaches.

"He's very agile," marveled Ken Nor-

wanted to write only about him and not about the other players, and Bird considered that bad for the team and for the morale of his teammates.

To anyone who has been around athletes and heard them talk for public consumption, this sounds like a tired old slab of baloney. The difference is, Bird means it. According to Landini, he means it for the same reason that he is as good at passing the ball as he is at shooting it.

When you begin understanding that, you realize that Larry Bird may be exactly what he appears to be. Bird comes from the plateau country of southern Indiana around the town of French Lick, whose claim to fame is the fact that it is the place where ketchup was invented. If there are purebred country folk anywhere in the world, it is there, far enough south of Chicago and east of St. Louis not to be troubled by city influences, and just north of the Kentucky bluegrass which lures most of its good basketball players.

Folks in southern Indiana don't waste words and what they say, they mean. That is why Landini, a former English professor and a very intelligent college administrator, did not blanch when Bird gave the Chicago writer an unprintable label in front of the television cameras. He knows Larry, and knowing Larry is knowing that you will not change him.

Bird is unassuming and without affectation, but he is not inarticulate. He just doesn't have much to say, especially to strangers. Asked how he thought he'd get along in pro ball with so many reporters looking for stories, Bird said "I think I'll do fine because they'll be talking to a lot of players. They'll be talking to everyone and I'll just be one of them."

He was asked a tough question about what he thought of being pro basketball's "white hope." Bird was drafted a year ago by the Boston Celtics. More than 70 per cent of the players in the National Basketball Association are black, and there is a theory that this keeps some white people from buying tickets to games.

Such a question could give a lot of people trouble. Bird explained bluntly that he was not a racist and did not intend to sound like one. He said there are so many great black players in the NBA, and he just hopes he can keep up with them. In a sense, he ducked the question, the only articulate thing to do aside from telling the questioner that such queries are in bad taste and impossible to answer.

Bird expanded on his aversion to publicity by saying that he was playing basketball to have fun. That, too, sounds like something every athlete since Jim Thorpe has said. Again, Larry Bird appears to mean it.

tion, the long-time coach at Manhattan and now a member of the NIT Selection Committee. "And what a touch he has."

"He has a real good touch for a big man," observed Butch Beard, assistant coach of the New York Knicks of the National Basketball Association.

"He's good, very good," noted Dan Quilty, a former player at New York University and one of Norton's compatriots on the NIT Selection Committee. "He has a delicate touch. Alabama couldn't keep him outside, and when he got inside, Alabama couldn't stop him."

The Crimson Tide, 21-11, used three players — Eddie Phillips, Phil Lockett and Reggie King, the Southeastern Conference Player of the Year — in trying to defend Carroll. But none could stop his sweeping right-handed hook shots, his soft layups or his one-handed slam dunks. Phillips and Lockett both fouled out and King was taken off Carroll after getting two quick fouls.

Carroll, a 22.6 scorer during the regular season with a high of 36 against Iowa, hit all eight of his field goals attempts and collected 20 points in the first half when the Boilermakers, Big Ten tri-champions, took a commanding 43-32 lead.

He added 22 points after intermission as the potent and poised Boilermakers broke open the game.

"Joe Barry played a great game, an exceptional game," said Purdue Coach Lee Rose. "But he's played like this all year. I don't think he's played any better, but he has played this well."

"We tried to double up on Carroll," said Alabama Coach C.M. Newton, "but we had trouble because their guards played so well."

Of the Boilermakers' guards, Jerry Sichting scored 20 points and had seven assists, and Brian Walker contributed nine assists.

King and Robert Scott scored 21 points apiece for Alabama, which faces Ohio State in the third-place game preceding the title contest.

Local Gymnasts Head For Meet

One of the best-kept secrets in Lubbock is that 17 of the best young gymnasts in the state live and work out here.

And two local private gyms, Brier-croft savings and Hamilton Gymnastics are sending those 17 girls to the Class II State Gymnastics meet on Mar. 31 in Texas City.

Head coaches Johnny Hamilton of Hamilton's and Sherry Green of Brier-croft point out that the young girls practice between 12 and 16 hours a week to develop skills in floor exercise, vault, uneven bars and balance beam. At the Class II level both compulsory and optional routines are required.

Qualifiers in both the compulsory and optional events include B.J. Lipe, Tamara Houchin, Dawn Fortner, Markay Howard, Tracy Lacwell of the Brier-croft club and Kim Ward, Dawn Dulaney, Melanie Ready, Jennifer Jones, and Andrea Hamilton of Hamilton's.

Connie Childre and Deana Wilson of Hamilton's and Starla Pace, Julie Goodwin, Michelle Moreland, Lisa Poleni and Tonya Houchin are qualifiers for the compulsory events.

Paper Says Booster Paid Off Blue Devil

WASHINGTON (AP)—North Carolina businessman James R. Gilley, a Wake Forest alumnus and a member of the college's board of trustees, has been accused by his former secretary of making an illegal gift to the mother of a member of the university's basketball team.

The Washington Star, in its Monday edition, reported Gilley gave money to Edith S. Harrison, mother of Wake Forest center Larry Harrison. Gilley's former secretary, June B. Rikard, said in a deposition taken last June she saw Gilley give Mrs. Harrison either $260 or $280 in cash toward the purchase of a car allegedly used by her son, according to the report.

The Star said Rikard also stated she saw Gilley give Harrison's mother a check for $2,842.83. Rikard said Gilley told her: "June, this will pay off the balance owed on the car," the story said.

Such a gift would be in violation of the rules of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The newspaper later reported the Atlantic Coast Conference, of which Wake Forest is a member, is launching an investigation of the charge. The paper quoted ACC Commissioner Robert James as saying the probe would be initiated "as soon as we can get a look at the necessary documents."

Wake Forest Athletic Director Gene Hooks told the newspaper he had investigated a rumor about the car last summer but disproved the report to his satisfaction and that of Wake Forest President James Robert Scates.

New Coach Reported

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—News reports say Memphis State's six-week-old search for a new basketball coach will end today when Dana Kirk of Virginia Commonwealth accepts the job.

The Commercial Appeal, the morning newspaper in Memphis, said in a copy-righted story today that Kirk will be introduced at a news conference this morning on the MSU campus.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch carried a story today saying Kirk is likely to accept the position, and several Memphis television stations named Kirk as the choice to replace Wayne Yates.

The hiring of the former University of Tampa coach and Louisville assistant ends a search that began Feb. 7 when Yates announced his resignation, effective at the season's end.

The Commercial Appeal said Kirk will apparently receive a contract in the same financial range as Yates.

Silas' Peaks Kept Him Going During Bad Times

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

James Silas has been to the top of the mountain. He's had a taste of what it's like to be the best — not just good, but the best — at what he does.

Maybe that's what kept him going through two years of pain and frustration caused by a series of leg injuries that left him a basketball cripple.

"It was the most frustrating time of my life," said Silas, the 6-foot-3 guard of the San Antonio Spurs who only now is approaching his pre-injury form. "I wanted so badly for it to be like it was before. I had been a great penetrator and jump shooter, but suddenly I couldn't play the game at all."

"I wasn't myself — and I didn't know if I ever would be."

But he didn't quit. Once you've climbed that mountain and discovered what it's like to be on top, it's awfully hard to give up after stumbling around in the foothills.

Silas reached his peak in 1975-76, his fourth pro season and the final year of the American Basketball Association. He averaged 23.8 points and 5.4 assists per game, hit 52 percent of his shots and was voted to the all-league team.

"He was the best guard in the ABA, no question about it," said Doug Moe, coach of the Spurs. "He could do it all — run the break, take the ball to the hoop, pull up and stick the jumper."

"When he was healthy, there wasn't a better guard in basketball," said Tom Nissalke, coach of the Houston Rockets and an ex-ABA coach.

It all began to fall apart for Silas in the first game of the 1976 ABA playoff series against the Nets, when he fell on Brian Taylor and broke his right ankle, knocking him out of the playoffs. However, the Spurs were one of four teams absorbed from the ABA by the National Basketball Association that summer, and as Silas recuperated he thought about how nice it would be to finally strut his stuff in the big time.

But in the very first exhibition game he collided with Kansas City's rugged forward, Bill Robinson, who fell across Silas' left knee. Silas kept on playing, and in the regular season opener he scored 18 points. But the knee wasn't right and finally he had to undergo surgery for removal of damaged cartilage.

Six weeks later Silas was on the court again, scoring 28 points in 28 minutes in his first game back. But still the knee wasn't right.

"It was sore, but I had always played in pain," he recalled. "I got a great ovation from the fans and I was really happy to be back. I wanted to play and thought I was ready."

"When I think about it now, it was the worst thing that could have happened."

It was too soon to be back. The knee wasn't ready, and it got worse instead of better. Silas got into just 22 games that year and, following further surgery, 37 games the next year. His best performance: 15 points, six rebounds, three assists — meager statistics indeed.

"The pity of it all is that NBA fans have been deprived of seeing a truly great ballplayer," Moe said. "They have not seen the real James Silas."

He came close to giving it up last summer, but pride — and the recollection of what it was like on top of the mountain — kept him going. "I wanted the people in the NBA to see me like I was in the ABA," he said. "I wanted to be on national television, to play before the big crowds, to show what I could do against the best."

This year, finally, he's showing them. Silas came through preseason training in one piece, his scarred leg strong again. Two months into the regular season, he replaced Mike Gale in the starting lineup and the Spurs began winning, climbing back to the top of the Central Division. By midseason he was running the team with confidence, taking the pressure off San Antonio's high scorers, Gervin and Larry Kenon.

With Silas in the backcourt, opponents can't afford to double-team Gervin, the NBA scoring champion and leader again this year. Thus Gervin is getting better shots and the Spurs are getting more production from both guard positions.

"We complement each other," Gervin said. "If we are not the best guard tandem in basketball, I don't know who is."

Silas' statistics have climbed steadily. He's now averaging 19.9 points per game, third best on the Spurs. In the past month, he has twice tied his career high of 31 points and set a new career mark of 13 assists. More importantly, he is once again the man the Spurs go to when the pressure is on, when the game is on the line. His nickname is "Captain Late" because he thrives in the closing seconds.

But as far as he has come back, Silas knows he hasn't quite reached the top of the mountain — not yet, anyway.

"I figure I'm about 80 percent of what I used to be," he said. "Maybe over the summer I can get back that other 20 percent. Then I'll be there."

And then, finally, NBA fans will get to see the real James Silas.

TENNIS
NEW ORLEANS — Top seeded Jimmy Connors defeated John Sadri 5-7, 6-3, 6-0 to win his opening round match in the 1979 New Orleans Tennis Tournament.

There were two upsets in the opening round action. South African Johan Kriek knocked off fourth-seeded Eddie Dibbs 6-3, 6-4, 6-0, and his countryman, Deon Joubert, beat eighth-seeded Tim Gullikson 6-3, 6-4, 6-1.

In other first-round action, Ray Moore beat Mike Cabell 1-6, 6-2, 6-4; Tomas Smid bested John Lloyd 6-4, 6-3, and Tom Gullikson, Tim's brother, beat Jeff Borawick 6-3, 6-3, while Kim Warwick beat Sandy Mayer by default 6-4, (2-1) after Mayer hurt an ankle, and Geoff Masters beat Jim Ward 6-3, 6-4.

SOCCER

CHICAGO — Representatives of the North American Soccer League Players' Association decided that if owners do not recognize the union by March 30 the players should vote to strike.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the union, said the representatives demand recognition from the North American Soccer League consistent with the decision of the National Labor Relations Board.

The union was formed in the summer of 1977 and was recognized by the NLRB last September. The NASL's 320 players were given playing members last year.

Recognition of the union appears to be the players' first goal.

Fed Worries Cause Mart To Slip

NEW YORK (AP) — Troubled by the prospect of further Federal Reserve credit tightening, stock prices slipped slightly today, continuing the erosion of prices that began late in Monday's session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial issues was off 2.51 to 855.08 at noon.

Declining issues held a 3-2 lead over those advancing on the New York Stock Exchange.

Analysts said the market seemed to be nervous about the Federal Reserve's open market committee meeting today, at which the Fed could decide to further tighten interest rates. Results of the meeting will not be made public for a couple of weeks, but the Fed's decision could be felt on money markets almost immediately.

And while the market has gained much of its power in recent days from rising oil-company stocks, those issues were hindered today, analysts said, by lack of indication of what President Carter and his top aides decided at their Camp David meeting Monday to do about crude oil deregulation.

At the top of the active list, Walt Disney Productions fell 1/4 to 37, with a 330,000-share block trading at 36 1/2.

The noon NYSE composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks was down 13.20 to 56.55. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 34 to 173.52.

Volume on the Big Board was 12.57 million shares at noon, off from Monday's noontime pace of 15.48 million shares.

Among the oil issues, Exxon rose 1/4 to 53 1/2. Texaco dipped 1/4 to 26 1/2. Standard Oil of Indiana dropped 1/4 to 60 1/2. Gulf Oil slipped 1/4 to 26 1/2 and Atlantic Richfield fell 1/4 to 62 1/2.

Burn Victim Refuses To Discuss Incident

Police this morning were wondering what happened to a man who walked into Methodist Hospital's emergency room about 4 a.m. suffering from extensive burns over 25 percent of his body.

Kenneth Dale Ashley, 32, of 2611 E. Cornell St., was listed in critical condition early today with burns on the face, arms and legs.

Police say the man, who reportedly was in great pain while talking to officers, would give few details on what happened, except to say he was set afire after having gasoline doused over his body.

Ashley reportedly would not say when he was injured or who was responsible. Police said the man had a large amount of cash when he arrived at the hospital.

The victim's wife, called to the emergency room, told police her husband had left for Olton and did not return when he was expected. She said a window on her car had been broken recently and said she thought the vandalism may be related to the burning incident.

In another incident, Kelly K. Etherton, manager of a hairstyling shop in the 2800-block of Canton Avenue, said she was getting in her car about 8:15 p.m. Monday after closing the business when she saw a man wearing a white mask but no pants.

She said the man fled down a nearby alley.

Margie Rodriguez of 2512 First Place told police she was driving in Mackenzie

Records Subpoenas Allowed To Stand

EL PASO (AP) - Subpoenas for the personal and business records of a bail bondsman who put up $400,000 bond for Jimmy Chagra were allowed to stand Monday.

U.S. District Judge William Sessions denied motions to quash the subpoenas, issued as part of a grand jury probe into racketeering.

Chagra, brother of slain narcotics defense lawyer Lee Chagra, was arrested in Las Vegas on narcotics charges and is scheduled to stand trial in Midland in April.

Victor Apodaca Jr. posted the bond, believed to be the highest in El Paso history.

Apodaca's lawyer, Sib Abraham, had said the subpoenas were outside the area of the FBI, which issued them. Abraham said the subpoenas were a "license to conduct a fishing expedition."

The subpoenas called for Apodaca's business records from July 1976 and for personal records dating back 12 years.

The subpoenas included the accounting firm headed by El Paso Mayor Ray Salazar, which handled Apodaca's records during some of the period under investigation.

Salazar said Monday he already had turned the requested records over to the U.S. attorney's office.

Sessions ordered another accounting firm to turn over its records in the case Monday afternoon.

Abraham's sister is the widow of Lee Chagra.

Abraham and Apodaca are major shareholders in Cielo Vista Bank in El Paso, along with its chairman, Wesley Martin. Martin owns the largest block of stock and holds thousands of shares in trust for his law partner, State Sen. Tati Santisteban.

The Abraham-Apodaca business ventures include a defunct electronics manufacturing company in which Lee Chagra also was a shareholder.

"While waiting for (the man) to get off work, we saw three cars pull onto the parking lot of Church's," the report said.

"Right after the cars appeared, a fight broke out. Deputy (Dean) Bohannon observed Baker pulling (a man) from one of the cars and hitting him in the head with a hammer."

"The fight continued and involved several males on the parking lot. The fight finally moved inside the building, and in the process two windows of the building were broken out."

A criminal district attorney's office spokesman said the restaurant ownership was not involved in any alleged offenses at the restaurant and is not under investigation.

Drug Paraphernalia Bill Gets Approval

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) - A bill to provide tough penalties for possession of drug paraphernalia was given first-round approval by the Missouri Senate.

The measure, which must be given final approval in the Senate before being sent to the House, would make it a misdemeanor to possess devices used in smoking marijuana or hashish, its sponsor, Sen. Harold Caskey, said Monday. It would make it a felony to possess devices used to take hard drugs, he said.

Opponents of the bill said it could lead to police harassment but Caskey said the bill required the state to prove that the defendant possessed the device for the "express purpose" of using it to take illegal drugs.

House Approves Bill Requiring Licenses

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts House has given initial approval to a bill that would require investigative reporters to get licenses as private detectives.

The measure, which advanced in the House on Monday, is one of two dealing with checks on journalists proposed by Sen. Denis L. McKenna, who has had differences with some reporters in the past. McKenna's second bill, pending before the State Administration Committee, would require that reporters covering the Statehouse file full financial disclosure statements.

The Senate already has given initial approval to the first bill, but before the measure can reach Gov. Edward J. King, the House must vote on it again and both chambers must pass enactment resolutions.
