Rescue teams continue to dig for victims

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Exhausted rescue teams worked through the night Saturday, digging into the rubble of collapsed buildings for more victims of the massive earthquakes that ravaged the world's most populous capital.

The government put the death toll at 2,000, but unofficial estimates said it could reach five times that.

A second quake hit Mexico City and four states Friday night, spreading panic and toppling some buildings damaged by Thursday's devastating quake.

Mexico City police said Saturday that at least 2,000 people were killed, 15,000 were injured and 20,000 were homeless. They said 196 damaged buildings were a threat to safety and would have to be demolished.

The newspaper Excelsior said 4,000 people were believed dead, but gave no attribution for the figure.

U.S. Ambassador John Gavin, who flew over the city Saturday, told reporters the death toll could reach 10,000, but that was "just a guess."

■ Mexico City in state of panic after second quake; other related stories, Pages 2, 3, 10 & 11A

He said 1,000 people may have been killed or injured in one high-rise apartment complex in the Nuevo Leon neighborhood.

Gavin also said that five Americans had perished. He did not release their identities, but said they were a couple staying at the devestated St. Regis Hotel, and a mother and her two children.

Earlier Saturday, Greg Lagana, spokesman for the State Department Earthquake Task Force in Washington, identified three of the victims as Mary Vallejo and her children from Nebraska.

Mrs. Vallejo's brother, Mike Zgud of Kearney, Neb., said State Department officials contacted the family Friday evening and told them that Mrs. Vallejo, 34, and her children, Ilse, 8, and Alonzo, 5, were among those killed.

Officials said at least 1,300 bodies had been identified by Saturday afternoon. Rescue workers continued looking for survivors, but said they would have to stop soon and clear the rubble to avoid the possibility of an epidemic caused by rotting bodies in the debris.

"My friend, it is impossible to say at this moment how many lived and how many died," said Baladier Beltran Correa, head of the temporary morgue at the city's Cuauthemoc district headquarters.

Midlanders got a chance to view the first plastic-composite airplane ever certified by the Federal Aviation Administration when it made a brief stop at Midland Regional Airport Saturday. It was built by Dr. Ted Windecker, formerly of Midland.

Plastic-composite plane flies into town

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

When Dr. Ted Windecker gave up dentistry to build the first plastic-composite airplane ever certified by the Federal Aviation Administration, he was just a little ahead of his time.

The Windecker Eagle was certified in 1969, a year later, financial problems forced the Midland company to suspend operations. But visionaries who stay around long enough often see their theories become practical reality, and the proof of Windecker's concept is the Avtek 400, which stopped over at Midland Regional Airport Saturday en route to the National Business Aircraft Association Convention in New Orleans.

Windecker wasn't there — he's in Camarillo, Calif., supervising construction of the production version of the Avtek 400. When the sleek turboprop craft pulled up before about 20 aviation enthusiasts at Chaparral Aviation Saturday, out popped Robert Honeycutt, director of marketing for Avtek. According to Honeycutt, Windecker's techniques "have made this possible."

"This" is a business plane which will seat six to nine passengers, have a range of 2,400 miles and a top speed over 400 mph. Because it will be constructed from light-weight composites instead of aluminum, the Avtek 400 will get a very efficient 10 miles to the gallon, according to Honeycutt.

"It is all composite," which gives the $1.75 million plane "greater range, higher speed and much lower operating costs," he said.

"It's handling beautifully," said test pilot Dick Sliff. "We haven't had any real problems with the airplane."

The Avtek will cost much less than a jet without sacrificing much speed — "On an average run, we wouldn't be more than five minutes behind," he said.

The Avtek 400 is literally bonded together like a huge model airplane. Windecker's Eagle used fiberglass, but the Avtek is constructed mostly of Kevlar and Nomex, plastic composites which are both lighter and stronger than aluminum. They were developed by Du Pont, which is supporting the Avtek project to help promote the materials.

"The composite is the material of the future," Honeycutt declared.

Jury: Weddel, Hammond guilty in arson trial

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — A federal court jury of eight women and four men deliberated about seven hours and found Ector County Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr. and former Odessa City Councilman Keith Weddel guilty as charged in connection with the November 1981 fire that damaged the former O'Michael Building.

In February of this year a federal court jury deliberated about 12 hours before informing Bunton they were hopelessly deadlocked and the judge declared a mistrial.

Hammond and Weddel are due to be sentenced Oct. 14 by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton in federal court in Midland. Hammond could be sentenced up to 25 years in prison. Weddel's sentence could be as much as 15 years.

Hammon's attorney, Warren Burnett of Odessa, who said he was "shocked" at the jury's verdict, said he plans to appeal the conviction. Weddel also indicated he plans to appeal.

The two prominent Odessans were jointly accused on two counts of conspiring to burn the O'Michael Building for the purpose of obtaining insurance money. Hammond was additionally indicted on two counts of perjury in connection with depositions he gave concerning insurance claims on the building.

The trial, transferred to El Paso by Bunton because of publicity surrounding the first trial, began Monday and lasted the better part of six days.

The jury, madé up of 10 Hispanics and two Anglos, heard testimony from nearly 50 witnesses, with many merely repeating testimony they gave in the first trial in Midland.

The three prime witnesses called by government attorneys were ex-convicts.

John Petersen of Odessa, awaiting trial in Andrews County on a charge of burglary, probably next month, testified that he had met with Weddel and Hammond to arrange to burn the building.

He stated he contracted with Midlander L.C. Burdit, on probation on a gambling charge, and his brother, Lawrence "Cotton" Peterson, sentenced to 50 years in prison on a burglary charge.

Jurors also heard conflicting testimony from Odessa firefighters and arson investigators.

Three fire department captains, Wayne Wallace, Steve Pollock and Billy Stovall, testified they believed the fire was caused by an electrical short, not gasoline.

Odessa fire marshal Rick Cates and former state arson investigators Rick Womack testified they believed the fire was caused by arson.

Akins seeking support should he run for Congress

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

G. Thane Akins' desk in his office at O'Briant Engineering is piled with papers and maps and books. So is another smaller desk in his office. Peeking out from under one pile of papers on the bigger desk is a sign proclaiming: "A cluttered desk is a sign of genius."

Also partly hidden on another part of the large desk is a nameplate: "Avalanche Akins," referring to his first election for mayor which he won by eight votes.

With his background as a petroleum engineer for a major company and then an independent and his experience as mayor since 1980, Akins is considering entering the 21st Congressional District race in the Republican primary.

He has sent letters out to members of the local Republican Party asking for their support and is sending out feelers to determine the amount of support he would gather from Midland. A decision won't be expected for 45 to 60 days, he said.

But Akins is certain about one thing: he won't run for mayor again.

He was planning on giving up the public life for the first time in almost 10 years, serving first as a city councilman, but some people approached him about entering the congressional race. Incumbent Tom Loeffler is giving up that seat to return to Texas and enter the gubernatorial race.

Mayor Thane Akins

"I thought surely someone would talk me out of it. I haven't gotten anything but encouragement. I'd already decided I wasn't running for mayor again, so that wasn't a conflict.

South African burns to death in house

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police fired tear gas at thousands of mourners Saturday after funerals for nine riot victims, witnesses said, and a black man was burned to death when arsonists set his house on fire.

In Johannesburg, moderate blacks and whites from about 100 organizations announced the formation of a "Convention Alliance," seeking to get all sides in South Africa's racial conflict to sit down together and chart a new future.

Participants included Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi and Frederik van Zyl Slabbert, leader of the white opposition Progressive Federal Party. More militant apartheid foes such as the multiracial United Democratic Front coalition and black consciousness groups did not take part, nor was the ruling white National Party represented.

At a funeral for a 13-year-old black girl in Soweto, near Johannesburg, police shot tear gas and tipped over pots of meat, vegetables and rice at the home of the victim's family during a traditional post-funeral meal, two reporters said.

About 8,000 mourners attended the funeral for Esther Molotsi. They traveled to the cemetery in cars rather than on foot in compliance with state-of-emergency rules. The service went peacefully until mourners returned to the Molotsi home, when police and soldiers arrived.

"They came and spoke aggressively to mourners, told them to disperse and started firing tear gas, while others stood guard with rifles," one reporter said. "Mourners ran for safety as the army spilled all the food."

Several people, including an 8-month-old girl, were overcome by the fumes and collapsed, he said, but no one appeared seriously hurt.

Esther was killed in a clash between police and students at a high school last week. Speakers at the service, defying emergency rules barring political speeches, condemned the presence of soldiers and police in black townships and called for their withdrawal.

In Cape Town, thousands of mourners packed a soccer stadium in Guguletu township for a funeral for eight riot victims, said Pumlani Bukashe, a field worker for the regional Council of Churches.

Banners were unveiled in the stadium, violating a local ban imposed Friday night, but police did not intervene until mourners were leaving the burial site and armored vehicles started firing tear gas, Bukashe said.

He said the mourners dispersed quickly. Police were patrolling the township Saturday night, and roadblocks guarded entrances.

Two other riot victims were buried without incident in separate services in Soweto, and two more in Port Elizabh's New Brighton township.

Funerals have been a flashpoint for clashes throughout the past year, of rioting against apartheid, South Africa's system of segregation under which 5 million whites rule the country. The 24 million blacks are denied the vote and other rights.

Brown secretary-elect of GOP women group

From Staff and Wire Reports

PHOENIX, Ariz. — A Midland woman was among new officers elected at a convention of the National Federation of Republican Women currently being held in Phoenix.

Lou Brown, who has been active in Midland GOP activities for more than 20 years, was elected secretary of the group, a two-year term that begins Jan. 1.

Also elected at the convention was Judy Hughes of Denver who was named the new president-elect of the group.

Ms. Brown indicated in a Sept. 6 Reporter-Telegram article that she did not expect much opposition for her candidacy. She stated that she had decided that she wanted the position and lobbied for it, sending out more than 97 letters to GOP officials asking for their support. They in turn supported her in letters to the nominating committee.

She is currently a member-at-large on the national board — only the second woman from Texas to be elected to that executive committee from Texas. The last was from San Antonio.

Ms. Brown's new job will mean attending two board meetings a year with some travel in-between.

AKINS

"It's an honor to even be considered," he said. "It's a new challenge. I may be ready for something different to try."

Akins won't be alone in the race. On the Republican ticket already announced are two San Antonio residents, Lamar Smith and Jeff Wentworth. Considering it is San Antonio councilman Van Archer. Smith and Wentworth have been campaigning in Midland since the summer and some local Republicans already have selected their candidate. One woman, who asked not to be identified, said, "It's not that they're against him, it's that they're for someone else."

Akins said he doesn't think the two San Antonio residents "have a jump ahead. I can't tell if they have made any inroads into the Midland Republican Party."

In considering the race, Akins is looking at what he calls several points in his favor.

He cited his expertise in oil and gas. "This district needs someone with that kind of background who can accomplish something along those lines. I've done that with the U.S. Conference of Mayors. Even though there's a diverse amount of interests in this 28-county district, there's still a lot of oil and gas production."

He has gained experience in administration through operating the city for five years, he said.

In addition, he was raised at Brady in the Hill Country, which is in the 21st District. And his family was involved in farming and ranching, another major interest in the district, according to Akins.

However, Akins said he hasn't made a decision because of some hurdles.

"The biggest hurdle is having to give up a lot. I have no desire to be a permanent resident of Washington, D.C. I would keep my house here. There are a lot of things about it that aren't particularly attractive to me."

Putting together a campaign is like starting a business, he said, requiring $250,000 to $500,000.

"It won't be easy. I would have to go at it with a great deal of support from the whole area."

Streets one of Council's priorities

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The mayor looked at it from the eye of experience; two others on the City Council viewed it from the standpoint of being newcomers.

The annual retreat to Inn of the Mountain Gods in Ruidoso, N.M., last weekend for the Midland City Council, administrators and department directors produced a feeling of teamwork among all the participants and provided an intensive two-day crash course on how city government operates for the new council members.

The session is designed to allow the city officials to look back over the priorities set at previous retreats, evaluate how much has been accomplished on those issues and set new goals for the following year.

Mayor G. Thane Akins viewed the group as having more teamwork than he had seen in the previous four retreats; council women Oralia Corrales and Katie Heck said they were impressed and indicated they had learned more in two days than in the previous four months they've been on the council.

Divided into teams, they looked at each other's concerns and came up with their own list of priorities. These in turn were voted on in secret ballot by the group to determine which garnered the highest interest. In the end, the council came home with four sets of priorities designated by top, high, moderate and low.

Four issues made it to the top priority list, according to Akins, and these were a street bond issue, reorganization and productivity of City Hall, economic diversification and improving the Police Department.

Several major streets need to be rebuilt, said the mayor, and the city is wanting to have some overpasses built along Loop 250. Midland has to pay 10-20 percent of that cost. Included in the bond issues would be correcting Bankhead Highway at Front Street and getting Front Street designated as U.S. Highway 80. Currently, Wall Street becomes the business section of Highway 80 and the change "would eliminate a lot of that traffic downtown." The bond issue would include money for upgrading traffic signals in the downtown area, he said.

Ranked as the second priority is to study how City Hall does business, see if there are ways to cut back and define methods of improving productivity.

Akins said this was placed on the top list because the city's sources of raising money are not growing. There's the ad valorem tax and the sales tax, and the latter depends on the local economy. "We need to look at how we do business. We've done it essentially the same way for years. We will look at how to get more productivity out of the people and help motivate them to be more innovative...see if we can get the same amount or more work done with fewer people."

The mayor said a study may be needed to find out what the council is seeking.

The third category — economic diversification — is a broad area, he said. "Most of what we do will be in cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce and the Economic Development board. We felt like we need to do more than just lip service," Akins said.

The Police Department is targeted for improving, "specifically in the area of public relations and crime prevention," said the mayor.

Making the list of seven "high" priorites were finding alternative revenue sources, coordinating community groups on uses of Community Development Block Grant funds, continuing automation of various departments, setting up a cash awards program for city employees, deciding procedures for handling hazardous materials, getting more community involvement on boards and commissions and developing the emergency management plan.

Mrs. Corrales said improving the crime prevention division at the Police Department had been one of her priorities, as were economic diversification and cooperation on the CDBG funds.

Mrs. Heck said she had thought the Parks Department was the city's stepchild and was always the department first cut when the budget had to be pared down. "I learned that it's nobody's stepchild. But when you have to get water and sewers and streets to people, the Parks Department is last on the list."

Akins looked back to priorities established in previous years. "We look back at what we had shown as our priorities. It's gratifying to see most them them done or in progress."

Unlike previous years, this marked the first time the council operated under the single-member district plan. But the mayor said having the council members representing different districts didn't change the retreat. "We were all trying to work together," he said.

The retreat is a budgeted item, which means that the bills are paid by the taxpayers. But the three felt the expense was justified.

"I feel it's worth it. We need to get away from the telephones and the interruptions and get more of a teamwork spirit," said the mayor.

Mrs. Corrales agreed with Akins that the retreat helps them to separate from the everyday problems and look at each item and visit with department heads and employees. "There is no way the City Council has time to get all that in-depth information and get all those people together. The retreat is needed. You're on a one-to-one basis for two days.

"I feel very positive about it. I hope to see all these priorities," she added.

Akins said the retreats "seem to get better each year as for as things we try to accomplish. Thinking back to the first one, this had much more of a sense of teamwork. It was the biggest change I've seen. These are informal sessions where you can speak up what's on your mind and that really helps."

For Mrs. Heck, it was a concentrated work session. "It was an ice-breaker for me and Oralia because we don't know all the people. I liked the opportunity to work with so many people and to get a clear picture of the city and how it operates.

"It did give us a chance to plan for the future instead of management by crisis," she said. "Instead of cutting down one tree at a time, this was a look at the whole forest."

QUAKE

A man emerging from the morgue said the bodies were laid out on the floor and survivors were trying to identify them. "It is traumatic...Many of the bodies were in a bad state of decomposition," he said.

Assistant Attorney General Rene Paz Horta said 70 percent of the bodies had been identified, and those that could not be identified would be buried in mass graves.

President Miguel de la Madrid said: "We still have neither precise nor final figures. There are still people trapped in many buildings whom we have not been able to rescue."

He told his grieving and frightened nation in a speech on television that the second quake Friday night, which measured 7.3 on the Richter scale compared to 7.8 for the initial tremor, did not cause as much damage. It was "less severe but provoked panic."

The president appealed for national unity and said, "We will bury our dead with sadness but at the same time we will renew our will to live and to cure our wounds. The truth is that in the face of an earthquake of this magnitude we do not have the resources to confront the tragedy with speed and sufficiency." The second jolt knocked out electricity on some subways and people streamed from the stations.

"We got out, walked up the tracks to a station and came up," said one passenger. He joined thousands of other Mexico City residents who slept on sidewalks or stood in groups all night discussing "El Grande," Thursday's giant earthquake.

Mexico's Minister of Tourism, Antonio Enriquez-Savignac, said in Houston Saturday that the situation in the capital was "under control," and subways, buses and trains were running normally.

Enriquez said power was restored to 65 percent of the city, although 35 percent of the capital remained without water because of broken water pipes.

More than 18 milion people live in the sprawling, 7,800-foot-high capital that is the world's most populous urban area, according to United Nations figures.

Dan Lawler, a State Department spokesman said several Americans were injured. He did not release their names pending notification of relatives.

Gavin estimated 4,500 American tourists and 130,000 resident Americans were in the Mexico City area this week. The State Department said another 120,000 U.S. citizens live in other parts of Mexico.

In the Roma neighborhood of Mexico City, residents slept on the streets after windows shattered and power failed.

Survivors recall earth quake striking

MEXICO CITY (AP) — As far as most people can remember, there hadn't been a perceptible earth movement in Mexico for nine months. Then "El Grande" hit.

"It was Dantesque. Terrible. I never saw anything like it in my whole life," said Aracelia Hernandez, about 70, who broke down crying as another ambulance wailed past.

"El Grande," The Big One, hit Thursday a few seconds after 7:19 a.m. with a magnitude of 7.8 on the Richter scale. It struck at rush hour and within a minute turned Mexico City into a massive morgue as thousands were entombed in crushed buildings.

"We were praying and waiting. Waiting to die," said Solia Ramirez, who spent Thursday night at a shelter with her two small sons and her mother. "I was terrified."

By the time the earth stopped shaking and the dust began rising in huge columns, 149 buildings had crumbled and more than 7,000 people had been buried in rubble. By Saturday, the still-rising death toll exceeded 2,000.

Rescue workers used cranes, bulldozers, picks and shovels and garden trowels to uncover people trapped in the wreckage.

"We know there are people in there," a soldier said as he stood outside a badly damaged apartment building. "But it's just too weak... and smoky and we just can't go in there."

Natividad Urbina, 27, clutched her 10-day-old daughter as she waited at a rescue shelter. Her husband had substituted for her that morning cleaning offices and was at work when the earthquake struck. The building was leveled.

"Nobody has come to remove the rubble," she said sobbing. "I am just sitting and waiting."

As Mexico dug out Friday from "El Grande," a second major tremor struck, swaying crumbling buildings and forcing scores of people to sleep overnight in debris-strewn streets.

Panicked residents dashed out of homes and hotels, some in their underwear, as the new two-minute shock hit at 7:37 p.m. (9:37 p.m. EDT) Friday, dinnertime in Mexico. It measured 7.3 on the Richter scale.

After the massive quake struck, children wandered the streets, crying and calling for their parents. Parents searched for their children.

"I have been looking for my son since 9 o'clock yesterday morning," a sobbing mother told a Mexican television reporter. "His name is Alfonso Rodriquez. Please, please help me find him," she pleaded over television.

Major buildings of three stories or more continued to topple. By noon Friday, the count was 259 and mounting. Almost every building in the city was cracked.

Some damaged buildings were so fragile that authorities barred private helicopters from flying over stricken sections for fear the vibration would collapse the structures.

Water and gas pipes or rooftop tanks burst. The smell of cooking gas covered an entire neighborhood and radio stations in emergency transmissions implored people not to light matches or do anything that might set off explosions.

Streets were covered with shattered glass and smashed masonry. Some were flooded with sewage water.

Dozens of big and small fires raged out of control as late as Friday afternoon.

Several floors collapsed and started a fire that gutted the Hotel Regis, an art deco landmark building on Juarez Avenue, near downtown.

Police said the 56-year-old black man died when his house in the black township of Kwazakele near Port Elizabeth went up in flames. It was one of 14 reported riot incidents of firebombing and rock-throwing across the country from Friday night into Saturday evening.

Police gave no other details of the attack. Blacks previously have killed other blacks suspected of collaborating with the white-minority regime.

Police say nearly 700 people have been killed in 13 months, but a private monitoring group puts the toll at more than 700.

A two-month-old state of emergency in 36 districts includes a blanket ban against mass funerals, political speeches at funerals and processions on foot. In areas outside the emergency districts, police often impose bans on specific services.

Anti-apartheid leaders have condemned the restrictions, saying funerals have provided one of the few legal outlets for black anger. The government says funerals too often have led to more deaths and injuries and must be controlled.

Unrest has continued in Cape Town's black and mixed-race townships since police broke up a planned protest march on Aug. 28 to Pollsmoor Prison, where black leader Nelson Mandela is serving a life prison term on a conviction of plotting sabotage.

The Rev. Allan Boesak, a mixed-race leader of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition, was charged with subversion Friday, in part for organizing that march. He was detained the day before the march.

PLANE

Actually, the plane isn't entirely constructed of composites; the Pratt and Whitney turboprop engines and the propeller are metal, though a Kevlar propeller is in the works. And composites aren't the only innovation incorporated into the Avtek's design; the canard mini-wing mounted over the cabin is supposed to give the craft greater lift.

"You can operate it in and out of relatively short airports," said Honeycutt.

Windecker was recruited for the project by Avtek Chairman Robert Adickes.

"I felt the technology shouldn't die and it should be in an airplane," Windecker told the Reporter-Telegram in 1983, after moving from Midland to Camarillo. "This was the kind of airplane that I had really hoped to build some day."

Former Midlander Dewey Northcutt is Avtek's tooling manager.

"He moved out there to work on this plane," said his daughter, Dedi Korthauer, who was filming the Avtek's visit to Midland.

"I love it," she said of her dad's handiwork.

According to Adickes, Windecker's innovations are among the most important in the history of aviation.

"In my own aviation career, spanning 48 years, there have been only two significant improvements: In 1936 Sir Frank Whittle invented the jet engine, and in 1969 Dr. Leo Windecker brought us the first composite aircraft ever to receive FAA certification," Adickes said in a company press release.

"Avtek believes an opportunity exists to capitalize on Sir Frank's jet engine and Dr. Leo's composite structure."

BROWN

In past interviews, Ms. Brown has indicated elected Republican officials believe the party's women's organizations need to change their image.

"To rid itself of the tea-party, country-club image," Mrs. Brown said at the time, "Federation chapters need to plan better meetings with good speakers. A fund-raiser usually has been a style show. We need to get away from the ladies functions and bring in a speaker. Make it more of a study group. We should be trying to communicate to our members the working aspect of politics."

Ms. Brown first became active 20 years ago in Midland's Republican party, starting with precinct and club work. She served as president of the Midland Republican Women and from 1981-83, as president of the Texas Federation of Republican Women. That post enabled her to step up to the national organization in 1984 as a member-at-large.

Mrs. Hughes, who will succeed Betty Rendel, of Peru, Ind., was among seven candidates nominated by a committee and elected Saturday on a voice vote without opposition during the federation's convention here.

Huda Jones, of Beattyville, Ky., was chosen to succeed Mrs. Hughes as first vice president.

Other officers chosen included Charlotte Mousel, of Tustin, Calif., as second vice president; Mary Jo Arndt, of Lombard, Ill., third vice president, and Pam Bengson, of Boise, Idaho, fourth vice president.

Judy Wiedemeier, of Potomac, Md., was elected treasurer.

WILL ENCUMBRANCE PREVENT SALE?
An encumbrance is any claim or charge attached to and binding upon real property. It may lessen the property's value or impair it's use, but the attorney's tell me it doesn't have to mean that the title cannot be transferred. Liens, easements, licenses or encroachments are among the most common encumbrances.
A lien is a claim upon the property that provides security for repayment of a debt. Liens can be voluntary or involuntary. A mortgage lien would be voluntary. The owner agrees to use the property as collateral for a loan. A tax lien arising when a court attaches a property for non-payment of taxes, is obviously an involuntary lien.
Encumbrances that are monetary, such as liens, are usually paid and released at the closing. On the other hand, physical encumbrances such as easements (like a power company's right to cross a property to service electrical lines) are usually transferred with the title to the new owner. Always check with your Attorney for legal advise.

Cisneros, Krueger fly to Mexico over State Department objections

STATE

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Despite State Department objections, Mayor Henry Cisneros and former Congressman Bob Krueger flew to Mexico City Saturday to check earthquake damage.

Cisneros and Krueger, a former U.S. ambassador-at-large to Mexico in the Carter administration, departed San Antonio at about 7 a.m. CDT by private jet.

Cisneros said the two planned to spend the day in Mexico City and return to Texas for an evening meeting with Gov. Mark White, who had asked them to make the trip.

"This is a personal decision on my part. I'll take the responsiblity for it. But it's my decision that we need to look," Cisneros said on departing.

"And it's my decision when we come back we need to see what kind of relief effort can be coordinated with the governor's office, the Red Cross, and with the State Department," he said.

"We want to see, from their perception, exactly what is going on," Krueger said.

Hours before his departure, Cisneros and the State Department tangled over his planned visit to Mexico City.

Undersecretary of State Elliot Abrams, speaking from Washington on an ABC-TV Nightline broadcast Friday night, told Cisneros that such trips ultimately would do more harm than good.

But Cisneros, responding to Abrams' criticisms from San Antonio, indicated that no order from Washington could keep him home. He did say, however, that he would be receptive to the wishes of Mexican officials or White, who set up the trip and asked Cisneros and Krueger to go.

In a telephone call to the governor shortly before midnight, White told Cisneros to use "my own judgment, and my judgment is to go," Cisneros said.

"The situation there is obviously very serious and if we can help in the Southwest, I think we should," he said. "San Antonians have a real stake in all this, for obvious reasons."

Abrams, who was critical of Cisneros during the nationwide broadcast, softened somewhat when speaking to the mayor by telephone later and acknowledged there may be some need for the trip, Cisneros said.

On the air, Abrams insisted that medical help and supplies, such as those San Antonio is ready to provide, are not priority items now.

The main thing needed, he said, is demolition equipment to help clear the stricken areas of the capital. His main objection to the trip seemed to be that Mexican officials may construe it as an official offer of United States aid.

"My understanding is at this moment there is no request for government aid," Cisneros said.

Mexico City 'under control,' says Mexican tourism minister

HOUSTON (AP) — Mexico City's mass transit has been running normally and residents have had plenty of food and fuel since an earthquake devastated the world's largest capital and left at least 2,000 dead, Mexico's minister of tourism said Saturday.

"We have things under control," said Antonio Enriquez-Savignac, who flew to Houston after meeting with President Miguel de la Madrid and other Mexican officials.

"We don't want to diminish the seriousness of the situation, but we want to get away from any thought that we're cut off from the rest of the world," he said.

An older section of the capital was severely damaged by a quake that shook central Mexico Thursday, collapsing buildings and burying scores under the huge mounds of debris, Enriquez said, adding the death toll could hit 3,000.

A second tremor hit Friday evening, toppling some already weakened buildings.

Antonio Enriquez-Savignac

Despite the destruction, he said, there is plenty of food, gasoline and fuel and adequate transportation in the city.

"The highways throughout the republic are operating normally. The subways, trains and buses are running, and all 53 international airports are operating."

Enriquez said power had been restored to 65 percent of the city, but 35 percent remained without water because of broken pipes. He said it would be three or four days before service was completely repaired.

Local telephone service was operating, although long distance lines probably will be out for several weeks, he said.

Enriquez said the government's primary concern was to remove the rubble, rescue anyone who might still be alive and demolish buildings that were structurally weakened by the quakes.

He also said the government welcomed any U.S. officials who wanted to survey the destruction or private citizens who wanted to travel to Mexico to locate relatives.

Enriquez said his country's needs were limited — mostly cranes, hydraulic jacks and other heavy equipment to move the rubble and tear down damaged buildings.

Second quake caught travelers by surprise

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Passengers arriving Saturday at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport from Mexico City said the second earthquake that hit the capital caused already weakened buildings to collapse and sent people running into the streets for safety.

"We were completely caught by surprise by the second one," said Genie Davis, who helped out a Red Cross relief station in Mexico City after the second quake.

"Everyone ran down to the lobby of the hotel. But it seemed very orderly. Everyone was trying to keep people from panicking. Some elevators malfunctioned. The building was shaking quite a bit," she said.

At least 2,000 peopole were reported dead from the giant earthquake that struck Mexico City Thursday morning. A second quake stunned the city and four states Friday night as exhausted rescue crews tried to find more victims in the rubble.

"Ambulances were bringing in more people. There were all sorts of rescue teams," said Mrs. Davis, who lives in Wichita Falls. "We heard there were more people trapped after the second one. More ambulances were being sent out for those trapped in the second quake."

Many private vehicles were being used Friday to transport injured on streets that were packed with vehicles, Mrs. Davis said. Some buildings already damaged by the mighty first quake were toppled by the force of the second one, she said.

The first quake hit 7.8 on the Richter scale, while the second one registered 7.3 on the Richter scale, which measures ground motion.

Ralph and Kristen Hemphill of Puerta Vallarta went to Mexico City to attend a relative's wedding. They were in the city during both quakes.

"The second one actually was more frightening to us," Mrs. Hemphill said Saturday. "We were leaving the condominium when everything started shaking. We ran for a doorway."

Mrs. Hemphill said the second quake caught people off guard, causing many to flee buildings and run into the streets for safety.

"They were camping out in parks," she said.

Hemphill said rescue workers were working around the clock digging through the rubble left by the quakes.

"One of the most impressive things we saw was the rallying of the Mexican people," Mrs. Hemphill said.

Mexicans will soon flood U.S., some experts claim

HOUSTON (AP) — Mexicans who lost their jobs and homes in an earthquake will soon be rushing north to the United States to escape potentially deepening financial troubles in their homeland, experts predicted.

"Unless Mexico deals with it fast, they don't have any place else to go but to the United States," said Jim Harrington, legal director for the Texas Civil Liberties Union. "I bet you start to see people come across the border in days."

Harrington spent several years working on behalf of farmworkers in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

At least 2,000 people died from a mighty earthquake that rocked Mexico City on Thursday. A second tremor struck Friday night, toppling several buildings.

"It wiped out a lot of jobs, a lot of houses and drives people that are already desperate somewhere else out of necessity," Harrington said.

The disaster also will place added burden on that country's already-staggering economy.

"Mexico has a huge debt obligation and now with the debacle they are going to need to raise additional funds to repair and rebuild," said James Griffin, a Texas A&M University economist.

Parents sue butler firm over worker with criminal record

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A Boca Raton butler service that sent an employee previously convicted of child molestation to work for a family with two young children is being sued for $1 million by the family.

Colin and Joyce Phipps of Tallahassee filed suit claiming International Butler Service was grossly negligent for referring Ronald F. Miller to them for work last December.

The suit says the company assured Phipps that Miller had no criminal record and "he would be great with children."

But last February, after Miller had been with the family less than three months, Phipps said he found blood and what he believed was semen on the night clothes of his 4-year-old son. Their other son is 10.

The father contacted police, and a criminal check revealed that Miller had been convicted in Texas of grand theft, dealing in stolen property, indecent exposure and child molestation, according to the lawsuit.

Records at the Midland County Court show Miller was convicted of indecency with a child by exposure in June 1983, a court clerk said Thursday. Miller was sentenced to eight years probation on that charge, according to court records.

The suit, which was filed Wednesday, asks for compensatory and punitive damages. It says that IBS officials told Phipps that Miller had passed a polygraph test.

"Taking a polygraph doesn't relieve them of the duty of making checks, especially something as serious as a criminal record," said Kelly Overstreet Johnson, a lawyer for the family.

"All it would have taken was a simple police check. If our client could do it, surely one could expect the same of a company whose job it is to place butlers," he said.

San Angelo fire damages units

SAN ANGELO — A major fire that damaged 16 units of the Alexander Plaza Apartments in San Angelo left two firefighters with minor injuries. No occupants were injured, but at least eight families lost all of their possessions, fire officials said.

The fire apparently started in a second-story apartment, though no official cause had been determined shortly after the blaze broke out.

All but four apartments on the first floor of the building suffered extensive smoke and water damage. Four apartments on the south end of the building sustained minor smoke damage, officials said.

Two men sought in policeman's death captured north of Paris

PARIS (AP) — Two men sought in a robbery that led to a hostage situation and a policeman's death were captured about 15 miles north of here Saturday after they were surrounded in a wooded area near the Oklahoma line.

"We must have had between 50 and 100 officers in there looking for them," Assistant Police Chief James Barnett said late Saturday afternoon. He added that charges have not yet been filed against the pair.

Earlier in the day, Paris police officer Dave Roberts, 23, was slain after stopping a car on U.S. 271 on the city's north side, police said. The car resembled one sought in the robbery of a Braum's ice cream store about 9:30 a.m.

Authorities said Roberts was shot twice, once in the neck and once in the back. Police said bullet holes were found in the windshield and a side window of the officer's squad car.

Roberts was pronounced dead on arrival at a Paris hospital at about 11:15 a.m.

Two hostages were taken after Roberts' death, police said — one, an invalid woman, was left handcuffed but apparently unharmed in her home as the men hot-wired her car and fled.

A man whose pickup truck was commandeered a short time later either escaped or was released when the vehicle was wrecked and the suspects fled into the woods near the Red River bottoms.

Glenda Helm, 50, who lives in rural Lamar County off Farm to Market Road 197, said two men knocked on her door at about 10 a.m., saying they had car trouble and asking her to take them for help.

Mrs. Helm, an invalid who was alone, said she told the two men she was unable to drive.

Lamar County Deputy Sheriff Ken Johnson looks into the bullet-riddled squad car in which Paris police officer Dave Roberts was killed Saturday following an ice cream store robbery in the Northeast Texas city.

"That's when they pulled the gun and put handcuffs on me," she said. "'We're not going to hurt you,' one said, and I believed him."

Mrs. Helm said the men hot-wired her new Pontiac Bonneville, overlooking car keys lying in plain sight on a table. Her nephew, Roger Thompson, 22, found her unharmed and sawed off the handcuffs.

Mrs. Helm said the men later commandeered a pickup truck driven by a neighbor, whom she identified as Curly Cooper, who also escaped uninjured.

Merchandise donated to Salvation Army sold for profit, paper says

DALLAS (AP) — Merchandise earmarked for the needy reportedly has been systematically siphoned from the Salvation Army's thrift store operation and sold for profit or transferred to associates of a key Salvation Army executive.

In a copyright story in its Sunday editions, the Dallas Morning News said Major Lairon "Larry" T. White, 61, an ordained Salvation Army minister, also converted into his own name a $7,150 fishing boat, a $4,000 car and a $660 motorcycle.

All had been donated to the Salvation Army, the News said, adding that after being informed by the newspaper of its findings, the Salvation Army suspended White on Friday.

White, a 42-year veteran of the Salvation Army, had headed the charity's vast Dallas resale operation of new and used merchandise for the past decade. The Salvation Army said its resale operations netted more than $3.2 million in Dallas County last year.

"A thorough investigation has already been started by the Salvation Army concerning the allegations, and should any of the allegations be proved, appropriate action will be taken," said Lt. Col. John Mikles, Texas divisional commander.

White's attorney, Robert C. Hinton, told the News that the major denies any intentional wrongdoing.

Among the findings that surfaced during its four-month investigation, the News said, were:

— Boxes of new merchandise donated by Roach Paint Co., Neiman-Marcus, Culwell & Sons and other Dallas corporations were routinely separated from other merchandise that normally was offered for sale in daily public auctions. Large quantities of that merchandise was sold at a Amite City, La., bargain store operated by a former Salvation Army employee who describes himself as a "good friend" of White's.

— Truckloads of food intended for victims of the April 1979 tornado at Wichita Falls were sold en masse at White's direction in apparent violation of policies forbidding sale of food contributions to salvagers.

— Titles to donated carts, a boat and a motorcycle have been signed over to White, his friends, residents of the adult rehabilitation center.

Aggie Band no longer plays all-male tune

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Three women marched with the Aggie Band Saturday, breaking the male-only tradition at a school where tradition is paramount.

It took a lawsuit and intervention by the U.S. Justice Department to get the females in the band.

The three women who broke the sex barrier are Jennifer Peeler of Ennis, who plays flute, Carol Rockwell of Corpus Christi, who plays clarinet, and Andrea Abat of Houston, who plays trombone.

They lined up outside Kyle Field as part of the 285-member band. The women wore the same khaki military uniforms as the men. Ms. Abat's hair was pinned up under her military cap. All male members sport crew cuts.

The band's first chore was to play the Aggie War Hymn as the school's corps filed into the stadium for Saturday's home opening football game against Northeast Louisiana.

The male-only requirement was dropped as a result of an agreement sparked by a lawsuit filed in 1979.

Asked earlier this year if she thought she had broken one of the university's traditions, Ms. Rockwell said, "I believe we started a new one."

Texas A&M, which has no music department, had had its military band for 91 years.

Although the tradition was broken at Kyle Field Saturday, the original lawsuit is not over. Melanie Zentgraf, the student who filed it, is seeking $75,000 in damages.

Man sentenced to 20 years for kidnapping

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 33-year-old man has been sentenced to 20 years in prison for his extortion conviction in the kidnapping of the wife of a grocery store chain executive.

David Wayne Lett, of Bedford, was sentenced Friday by U.S. District Judge David O. Belew for his August conviction in the kidnapping of Belinda Minyard, wife of Bob Minyard.

Lett is to stand trial beginning Monday in state district court on an aggravated kidnapping charge in connection with the same case.

Belinda Minyard was kidnapped last September and tied to a tree in Palo Pinto County. She was able to free herself. Minyard did not receive the first call demanding $1.2 million until after his wife had safely returned home.

Nancy Reagan to visit Mexico in 'good-neighbor' effort

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan will travel to Mexico this week in a good-neighbor effort to lend support for victims of the devastating earthquake that has claimed at least 2,000 lives, President Reagan announced Saturday.

"Nancy will go to Mexico...to express the support of the American people for our courageous friends in Mexico and to explore how we can lend a hand in this ordeal," the president said, tacking the surpise announcement onto the end of his weekly radio address.

The president spoke from his presidential retreat at Camp David, Md..

Mrs. Reagan's press secretary Elaine Crispen said the first lady most likely will travel directly from Washington to Mexico City on Monday and will return that same day to the United States.

"She wants to visit the zone (of devastation)," said Mrs. Crispen.

The president's announcement came the morning after a top State Department official criticized San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros on national television for planning a similar trip.

Undersecretary of State Elliot Abrams, speaking from Washington on an ABC-TV Nightline broadcast Friday night, told Cisneros that such trips ultimately would do more harm than good.

Cisneros said Texas Gov. Mark White, another Democrat, had asked him to meet with Mexican officials to help coordinate Texas' contribution to any relief efforts.

Before departing for Mexico on Saturday, Cisneros said Abrams acknowledged during a telephone conversation made after the broadcast that there may be some need for such a trip.

The president's announcement came the morning after a second tremor struck Mexico City Friday evening, swaying crumbling buildings and forcing scores of people to sleep overnight in debris-strewn streets.

■ More stories on quake, Page 10A

The quake that shook central Mexico on Thursday has claimed at least 2,000 lives.

"A tragedy like this reminds us that the desire to be a good neighbor is basic to the American character and to our foreign policy," Reagan said.

The president said his wife would "express the support of the American people to our courageous friends in Mexico and to explore how we can lend a hand in this ordeal."

"We greatly admire the bravery and resolve of the Mexican people to dedicate all their resources to overcome this calamitous event," said Reagan.

Reagan said the United States has already provided some technical assistance that has been requested by the Mexican government and that it stands ready to "help in every way in the days and months ahead to aid in their effort."

Before the president's announcement, Mrs. Reagan had announced plans for a five-day trip to the West Coast.

FarmAid's biggest problem may be 'too many bodies on stage at once'

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Lights were in place and a bright blue roof covered the revolving stage Saturday as scores of crew members hurried to prepare Memorial Stadium for today's 14-hour FarmAid benefit concert expected to draw nearly 80,000 people.

The country, rock, blues and bluegrass extravaganza will feature 50 performers including organizers Willie Nelson, John Cougar-Mellencamp and Neil Young, who hope the concert will raise millions of dollars to help the nation's family farmers.

"The biggest problem I foresee is too many bodies on stage at once...," said worker George Graves of Schenevus, N.Y. "But at the same time, these people are professionals. You've got the best people in rock 'n' roll producing it."

About 1,000 people were at work in the stadium Saturday.

Michael Mays and Dantes Madina, both of New York City, also worked earlier this year on the Live Aid concert to benefit Africa's famine victims.

"We're here because we care," said Madina. "They asked us, so we came."

"I didn't know anything about the farmers' problems until this week when I got here," Mays said. "Now, I just hope this does some good."

Twelve hours of the outdoor concert at the University of Illinois stadium will be carried live by The Nashville Network, available to about 25 million cable television households, and by more than 300 radio stations. In addition, organizers said 156 television stations will broadcast a three-hour, prime-time segment of the show Sunday night.

Viewers and listeners will be asked to call a special telephone number, 1-800-FARMAID, and pledge donations to help farmers.

More money will be raised through concession sales, the $17.50 concert tickets — which sold out in three days — and from promoters of several small, local concerts who promised to turn over their profits to FarmAid.

The national accounting firm of Price Waterhouse will monitor all money collected for FarmAid, and Nelson will decide how to distribute it, said the singer's manager, Dave Anderson.

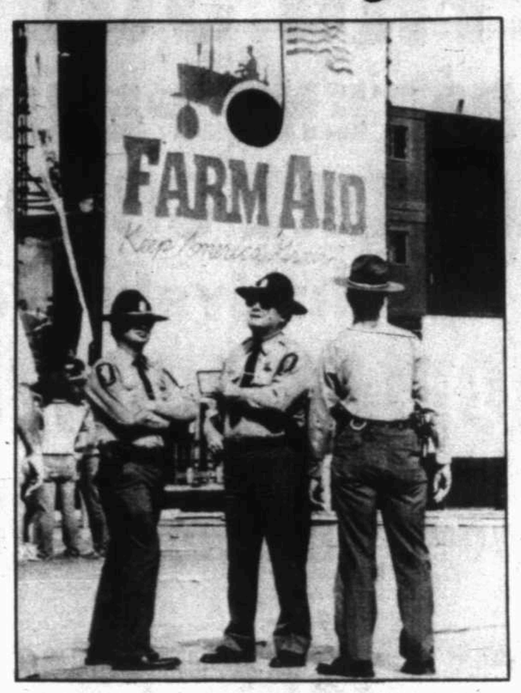

Nelson has said he plans to use the money for direct cash grants to some farmers and legal assistance, counseling and job placement for others.

"It's great because they might be able to help a few farmers who really need it," said Larry Junkin, a farmer from Armstrong. "But there ain't no way they can give everybody a little bit and do any good."

"The way I see it, the best thing this can do is make more people aware of our problems," he said.

Nelson came up with the idea for the concert after hearing of the plight of farm families faced with rising bills, falling income and declining land values.

Experts have said at least 25 percent of America's farmers are in serious financial straits. According to government figures, the total farm debt is about $212 billion, with interest of about $21 billion in 1985.

Concert comes too late for many farmers

By SHARON COHEN

OCONEE, Ill. (AP) — Three days before FarmAid, the auctioneer's gavel came down on 21 years of George DeClerck's sweat and sacrifice.

From the first bark of the auctioneer's rapid-fire chant to the final sale five hours later, DeClerck listened while strangers bid on his prized possessions. He watched memories being loaded into pickup trucks.

When it was over, DeClerck surveyed his 380 acres, bit his lip to control a voice flooded with sadness and summed up his emotions.

"Brokenhearted," he said in a whisper. "It's tough. It's your whole life here."

For 56-year-old George DeClerck, Sunday's FarmAid benefit concert in Champaign, about 75 miles to the northeast, is too little, too late. His soil is for sale. His machinery has been sold.

And the $50 million expected to be raised for struggling farmers from FarmAid, featuring Willie Nelson and dozens of other performers, won't amount to much in easing other farmers' suffering, DeClerck said.

"It's a drop in the bucket," he added.

Increasing production costs, sagging crop prices, interest rates hovering around 13 percent and a two-year drought pushed DeClerck from "the top of the world" to the auctioneer's block Thursday.

"I never thought this would happen to me," DeClerck said, his voice drowned out by the rat-a-tat of the auctioneer's voice and the whack of the wooden gavel hitting the side of the aluminum truck.

DeClerck, born and raised on a farm, was not a free-wheeler who spent millions by gobbling up more land and buying the newest gear. Neighbor Joe Beyers said he was as good a farmer as can be found in this central Illinois area.

But DeClerck had dreams for his two boys and three girls.

He took over a piece of land that had but one shed. It was all bushes and gullies. Today, there's a silo, storage sheds, a gravel road, 11 fish-filled ponds and an 11-year-old house with a wishing well on its lawn. Inside, three pictures chronicle his progress.

"We bought this place in '64 and there was nothing here," recalled DeClerck, who is divorced. "We just worked and worked and worked."

Times were good until a few years ago. Then "everything hit us in the face," he said.

A typical acre in Shelby County yielded more than 130 bushels of corn about five years ago, but the 1983-1984 drought dropped the yield to less than 95.

Prices also fell, compounding the problem. A bushel that brought an average $3.11 to farmers in 1980-81 was selling for $2.18 cents at nearby Decatur last week.

After debts mounted, DeClerck said he had no other choice but to sell. Even that hasn't gone smoothly.

Last weekend, he tried to sell his land, where he raised grain and livestock. However, he couldn't get a decent offer.

One sealed bid, he said, was for $160,400 — about $422 an acre. One neighbor said local land sold for about $2,000 an acre half a dozen years ago.

The equipment auction followed. DeClerck proudly put on display his green Deere combine, his red pickup trucks, his yellow Caterpillar bulldozer. They glistened in the late summer sun as about 100 farmers came to bid, or just commiserate.

Among them was Wayne Miller, 42, a farmer from nearby Pana. "There ain't nothing saying I'm not going to be here next year," he said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reagan warns against 'false hopes' for summit

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, warning against "false hopes" about his upcoming summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, said Saturday the meetings could "bear fruit" if Moscow is serious about superpower cooperation.

"The Soviet Union frequently has been bent upon expansion," Reagan said in his weekly radio address.

"Indeed, since the 1970s, the Soviet Union has been engaged in a military buildup which far exceeds any rational definition of its defensive needs."

Reagan said that "given the Soviet nature of the Soviet system and its ideology, we must not raise false hopes."

Speaking from his retreat at Camp David, Md., the president noted that he will meet Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze for the first time on Friday, a session Reagan said has "special significance."

The meeting is to prepare for the Nov. 19-20 summit meeting in Geneva, the first U.S.-Soviet summit since 1979.

Talks set on Latin America

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. and Soviet diplomats are expected to discuss Cuba, Nicaragua and other Latin American trouble spots before President Reagan meets Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in November, a State Department spokesman said Saturday.

"We are laying the groundwork, before the summit, for issues to be discussed by Reagan and Gorbachev," department spokesman Dan Lawler said.

Reagan and Gorbachev are set to meet Nov. 19-20 in Geneva. The session on Latin America, which probably will take place in Moscow, is among several discussions of regional issues being held by U.S. and Soviet diplomats before the summit.

Sessions on the Mideast and East Asia already have been held in recent months in Moscow, Lawler said. He said he did not know when the Latin American session would take place.

Finance officials meet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top finance officials from the industrialized nations, including Treasury Secretary James Baker, meet in New York today for talks of an undisclosed nature.

Kim Hoggard, deputy assistant secretary of Treasury, said, "I'm not at liberty to comment" when asked the agenda for the hastily announced gathering.

Although plans for the meeting were under way all week, Ms. Hoggard said, they were not unveiled until Saturday.

The meeting, to be held the day before the opening session of the United Nations General Assembly, will include finance ministers and central bank governors.

Sunday was chosen for the one-day meeting because the government officials have tight schedules during the week, she said.

Firms' leaders form council

DETROIT (AP) — Top leaders of General Motors Corp. and Burroughs Corp. have announced formation of the U.S. Corporate Council on South Africa, citing a need for changes in that white-ruled African nation.

The council will consist of chief executive officers of major U.S. corporations with subsidiaries in South Africa, GM Chairman Roger B. Smith and Burroughs Chairman W. Michael Blumenthal said Friday.

"Council members, as corporate citizens of South Africa, are deeply concerned about present conditions" in South Africa, where the white-minority government has maintained a strict system of racial separation, the statement said.

"They share the viewpoint of a growing number of senior South African business leaders who see an urgent need for changes and reform of the apartheid system, which will lead to its ultimate elimination."

California OKs workfare

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A workfare program described as the first of its kind in the nation will require about 175,000 heads of households, virtually all of them poor women, to seek work or lose their welfare payments.

The program, however, would not go into effect statewide until 1990 and would exempt mothers with children under 6. By 1995, its sponsors believe, it would save between $110 million and $150 million a year and would reduce welfare rolls by about 30 percent.

PETRO SOL X-25
(PATENT PENDING)
WELL BORE CONDITIONER
Exclusively From
PETROPLEX ACIDIZING, INC.

PETRO SOL X-25 TREATS YOUR PROBLEM WELL BORE LIKE NO OTHER CHEMICAL CAN.

Next time instead of using 2 or 3 high dollar chemicals and spending 2 or 3 days to achieve one goal, use the new approach Petrol Sol X-25. Since March 1985 over 300 wells treated with over 280,000 gals.

CONDITIONS THE BARRIERS THAT MAKE HYDROCHLORIC ACID INEFFECTIVE!!!!

Advantages:

1. Paraffin and asphaltic deposit solvent.
2. Paraffin dispersant - Aids the solvent in removing paraffin deposits. Paraffin dissolved by Petro Sol X-25 is retained in the oil phase. This prevents dissolved paraffin from separation or reforming down hole or down stream.
3. Calcium sulfate solvent - Dissolves effectively dense, massive and impermeable calcium sulfate scales.
4. Water wetting - Water wets oil coated formations and particles. Effective in dispersing and penetrating oil coated acid insolubles such as drilling muds and silica.
5. Emulsion block remover - By dissolving, dispersing, water wetting and detergent action helps prevent plugging in formation and breaking stable emulsions in water or crude oil.
6. Low surface tension - By dissolving action and water wetting, Petro Sol X-25 penetrates dense and sometimes impermeable scales leaving formation or well bore in good condition for following treatments.
7. Silt and fine suspension - Suspends acid and solvent insolubles. Prevents reaccumulation and plugging flow channels.
8. Sequesterant - Sequesters calcium, magnesium, aluminum, and iron, the binding salts and compounds that hold many scales together.
9. Well bore conditioner - Petro Sol X-25 is designed to dissolve and disperse paraffin and asphaltic deposits; dissolve calcium sulfate scales; penetrate and sequester iron sulfite, ferric and ferrous iron, magnesium, aluminum, and calcium; penetrate the binding salts and compounds that bring these scales together. It removes emulsion blocks and suspends fines, water wets well bore face, and conditions the well bore for that designed treatment or other treatments to follow.
10. Formation cleaner - The same scale that is in the well bore is many times within the pores or flow channels of the formation. The use of Petro Sol X-25 is then recommended not only for well bore, but formation treatment also.

Congress to increase AIDS funding

WASHINGTON — Congress, prodded by public panic over AIDS, is moving to increase money for research into the deadly disease, and a Republican senator says "whatever resources are needed" will be provided.

Several lawmakers on Capitol Hill said they will provide the money that federal scientists believe they must have to find a cause and cure for the fast-spreading disease, acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"Let me forcefully quash that aspect of public panic over AIDS that can be attributed to the belief that the federal government is holding back on funding to find a cure for this disease," said Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., chairman of the Senate Appropriations health subcommittee.

"It is my firm intent that whatever resources are needed to meet the AIDS crisis will be provided," Weicker said.

"I think we need to do more, of course," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. "I am committed to work...to see that we do."

Some medical professionals, homosexual activists and others have criticized the federal government for failing to recognize the urgency of the problem early enough.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., whose House subcommittee on health and the environment first held hearings on AIDS in April 1982, contends the Reagan administration held back on spending because of prejudice against homosexual men, the group most afflicted by AIDS.

But Waxman said Friday he's certain his colleagues will vote for more AIDS research money this year. "We must keep research going," he said.

Skimping a few million dollars for research is foolish, he says, because it could save the nation billions of dollars in future health costs for AIDS victims.

A House appropriations subcommittee recently approved about $196 million for AIDS' research and education programs, including $141 million for the National Institutes of Health.

That amount, expected to be considered by the full committee this week, compared with the Reagan administration request for fiscal year 1986 of $126 million. The new fiscal year begins Oct. 1.

AIDS-like illness threat to survivors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Survivors of a nuclear war would not only face darkness, cold, famine and radioactive fallout but also could develop a condition similar to AIDS, according to a scientific study.

Dr. David S. Greer, dean of medicine at Brown University, said Saturday environmental stresses on nuclear war survivors could attack the body's immune response, much like acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

A study by Greer and colleague Lawrence S. Rifkin says such stresses can impair functioning of white blood cells, called T-cells, key components of the body's defense against bacterial, viral and fungal diseases.

The resulting immune system depression could leave survivors susceptible to potentially deadly infections, as does AIDS, a fatal condition believed caused by a virus that also cripples T-cell functions.

"Epidemics of diseases in which T-cells mediate the immune response are likely in the months and years following nuclear attack," the scientists told a meeting on medical implications of nuclear war.

Such diseases could include tuberculosis, leprosy, pneumonia, Legionnaire's disease and rare forms of cancer, they said.

Scientists believe millions would be exposed to sub-lethal doses of radiation in a nuclear war.

Fires would produce enough smoke and soot to block sunlight and cool the Earth in a "nuclear winter," halting crop production and spreading famine.

Greer told the symposium, sponsored by the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine, that many studies show stresses affect T-cell function.

These stresses, which would be common after a nuclear exchange, include increased radiation exposure, physical trauma, burns and malnutrition as well as depression and grief, he said.

Dingell charges firms plotted to defraud Air Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. John D. Dingell, citing the results of a new congressional audit, accused two large defense contractors Saturday of plotting to overcharge the Air Force for tools to repair a jet radar system.

In a five-page letter to Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, released in advance of congressional hearings Monday, Dingell accused General Dynamics Corp. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. of conspiring to develop and sell new repair tools similar to ones the Air Force had already paid for.

"General Dynamics knew full well that the Air Force had already paid Westinghouse for the development of these tools," the Michigan Democrat wrote. "This is not sloppy business practice on the part of General Dynamics — it is fraud.

"The entire acquisition was clearly double billed. It is fraud on the part of Westinghouse to plot with General Dynamics. It is also not the finest hour for the Air Force for having allowed this to happen."

Dingell based his allegations on the results of a new General Accounting Office study that he commissioned in January.

The GAO report, which was also released Saturday, does not accuse either company of criminal activity.

But it does assert that General Dynamics recommended the design, development and production of new repair tools for the F-16's radar system even though "equivalent tools were already in use at Westinghouse."

"The existing tools had been developed and several sets of the tools had been manufactured by Westinghouse under its radar manufacturing contract with General Dynamics," the GAO said.

The GAO also listed example after example of tools that were recommended for purchase by the Air Force even though they were not needed; of serious "cost-charging errors" by both firms, and of "exorbitant" prices for tools "that do not reflect their intrinsic value."

Among the tools covered by the contract that the GAO studied was a hexagon wrench offered to the Air Force at a cost of $9,609. The existence of that particular proposal was disclosed by a Senate panel in November 1983. The Air Force did not pay for any of the wrenches.

Among other questionable tool purchases cited by the GAO in the new report was a $163,843 "vacuum-heat maintenance stand." One year after delivery, the stand is still in storage "because (the Air Force) had not yet received a technical order showing how to use it."

"Our review raises serious questions about the performance in this case of the General Dynamics Corp....to identify and recommend procurement only of needed support equipment items through the most cost-effective method," the GAO concluded.

The Pentagon, in a prepared statement released on Weinberger's behalf, said it took "very seriously the allegations contained in Chairman Dingell's letter."

The statement also noted, however, the problems with the tool contract were "first reported in 1983...and several procurements were cancelled and other prices were revised downward." New guidelines are also in place to prevent any recurrence, the statement said.

L.B. Moore, a spokesman for Westinghouse, the nation's 13th largest defense contractor, said the firm would not discuss specific details of the GAO report before Monday's hearing. But he added his company's management "asserts that any accusation of defense contract fraud is totally unfounded and false."

Alvin Spivak, a spokesman for General Dynamics, the nation's third biggest defense contractor, said the story of the wrench and other repair tools "has been told and retold many times" and his firm now recommends the Pentagon buy directly from subcontractors.

In its report to Dingell, the GAO said the saga of the repair tools began in January 1982 when General Dynamics, as the prime contractor for the F-16 jet fighter, submitted a list of recommended tools the Air Force would need to begin handling its own repairs of the jet's radar in late 1984. The radar is made by Westinghouse, and it was handling repairs at the time.

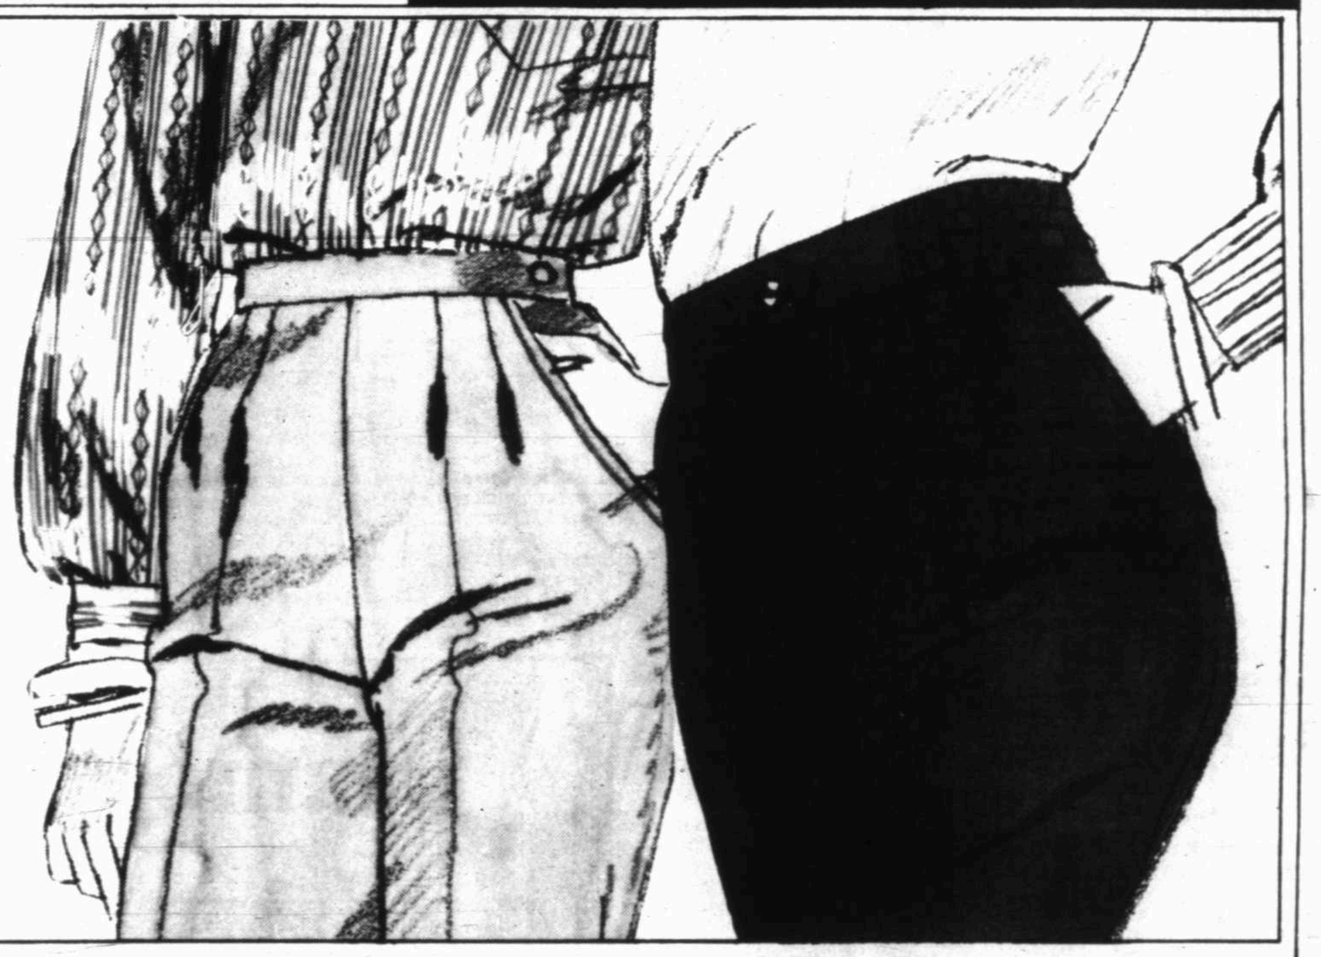

The Air Force certified the equipment as "urgently needed" and approved an "unpriced modification" to an existing contract. According to the GAO, that change authorized General Dynamics and Westinghouse "to incur costs" up to a maximum $1.7 million to provide the tools.

The Air Force eventually negotiated a final payment totaling $835,835 for 16 of the 24 recommended tools, plus the technical drawings for another four.

U.S. groups unite to aid Mexico

Associated Press

U.S. churches and corporations joined disaster relief agencies and individuals Saturday in providing a variety of aid to victims of two quakes that have claimed at least 2,000 lives in Mexico.

President Reagan announced Saturday in his weekly radio address that Nancy Reagan would travel to Mexico to explore ways to deliver aid to earthquake victims.

Later, Mrs. Reagan's press secretary said the first lady would most likely fly directly from Washington to Mexico on Monday, returning the same day to the United States.

Spokesmen for the American Red Cross, CARE and Catholic Relief Services said the three emergency relief organizations have initially committed a total of $400,000 in funds and have sent teams to assess the disaster victims' needs.

Roman Catholic Archbishop Roger Mahony of Los Angeles sent a $100,000 donation to his counterpart in Mexico City and urged local churches to take up a special collection Sunday for quake victims. In El Paso, on the border with Mexico, Roman Catholic Bishop Raymundo Peno also called for a special collection.

Three members of the Los Angeles City Council were in Mexico City Saturday on a fact-finding mission. Councilman Art Snyder appeared on Mexican television to outline what he saw as the most pressing needs: concrete and metal-cutting tools, water purification equipment and insecticides and fogging machines.

Southern Californians calling the Red Cross to offer to donate blood have been turned away because a need has not been established, said Red Cross spokesman Barbara Haller in Los Angeles.

"The response in Southern California is much greater than anything I have ever seen in a disaster," said Mrs. Haller, who has worked with the Red Cross for seven years.

Authorities warned California residents to wire money to friends and relatives in Mexico only through state-licensed exchange houses and to avoid unlicensed firms. Charles Benninghoff of the American Foreign Exchange, a licensed firm with 14 agencies in California and Nevada, said his customers had wired more than $1 million to Mexico by Friday afternoon.

Ford Motor Co. sent two planes with medical supplies. General Motors Corp. contributed $100,000 to an American Red Cross relief fund. Both automakers have operations in Mexico.

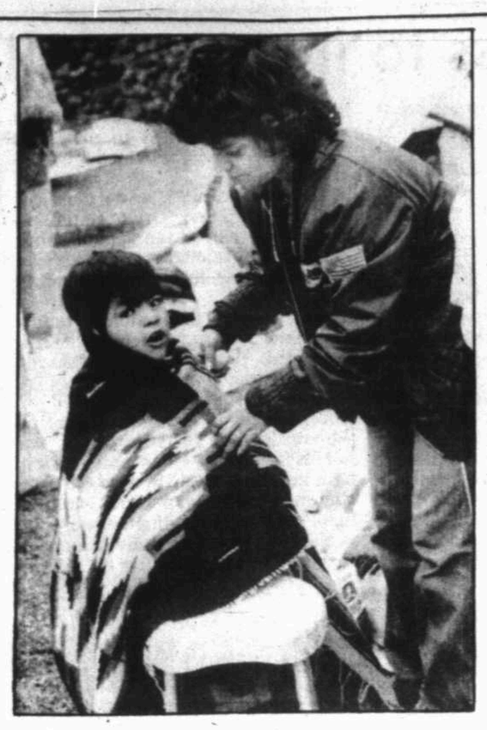

In Washington, Secretary of State George Shultz said Mexico has asked for U.S. demolition teams to destroy unsafe structures and for technical experts to help find bodies in flattened buildings.

U.S. aid ranging from helicopters to mine rescue teams is on its way to Mexico City, State Department officials said Saturday in Washington. A five-member U.S. Bureau of Mines search and rescue team, based in Pittsburgh, was sent to help Mexicans search for buried victims, according to M. Peter McPherson, administrator for the Agency for International Development.

At the request of Gov. Mark White, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and Bob Krueger, a former congressman and a former ambassador-at-large to Mexico in the Carter administration, flew to Mexico City on Saturday to determine what Texas could do to help.

White said he had notified President Reagan that the Texas National Guard was prepared to help. Private companies and local utilities also were ready to send crews of electricians, telephone experts and other technicians to help restore services in Mexico City.

A Spanish-language radio station in Dallas began collecting funds for the Red Cross, and Salvation Army trucks were prepared to transport supplies to Mexico City.

Americans wait, hope for news from Mexico

Associated Press

U.S. residents whose relatives were in Mexico when the earthquake struck awaited word of their safety Saturday, as officials said three Americans died in the quake.

Mexican consulates in Los Angeles and El Paso, were flooded with calls from worried relatives, and ham radio operators said their phones were ringing off the hook with pleas for information.

Many people tried to bypass faulty phone lines or busy radio operators by flying to Mexico to look for themselves.

In Cozad, Neb., Mike Zgud said, "for us the waiting is over." State Department officials had told his family that his sister, Mary Vallejo, and her two children, all U.S. citizens, died in the earthquake.

Mrs. Vallejo, 34, was walking Ilse, 8, and Alonzo, 5, to school Thursday when they were struck by debris, according to reports received by the family.

Zgud said his sister's husband, a Mexican citizen, also was reported killed, although the family had not been able to confirm his death. Mrs. Vallejo had moved to Mexico while participating in special college study program, he said.

"I guess we know the worst," said Zgud. "But it goes on for thousands of other families."

"The sad part is not knowing," said Rosa Irene Burboa of Los Angeles, whose brother and two nephews live in an area of Mexico where television pictures have shown rubble. "I pray and pray that they will call."

"I've tried to call, tried to find out something," said Carmen Castillo, 55, of El Paso, who has four cousins living in downtown Mexico City, a section hard hit by the earthquake. "But all the lines are down. They say there's no way to get through."

Scores of people waited at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport on Saturday morning to buy tickets to Mexico City, and most said they were going to search for relatives and friends.

Manuel Oleman, 32, of Whiting, Ill., was on a waiting list, unsure if he would get a flight out so he could look for his parents and eight siblings.

"They might have been on the subway when it happened," he said. "They take the subway to work every day."

An Aeromexico spokeswoman reported long lines at the El Paso airport, but Edgardo Flores Rivas, the Mexican consul general in El Paso, discouraged anyone from going to Mexico. "It will just make things worse," he said.

Some people tried to contact relatives in Mexico through amateur radio operators.

"I'm getting calls from Rome, Canada, Australia and all over the U.S.," said ham radio operator Vince Cox of San Bernardino, Calif.

Brian Byrd, 15, of Fort Worth, skipped school Friday and spent hours at his ham radio, monitoring news from Mexico and helping two Dallas women learn their relatives were safe.

Quake but latest flare on Ring of Fire

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fragile spot on Mexico's balmy western coastline that shook, spreading death and destruction across that nation, was but the latest outburst of the Pacific Ring of Fire.

That ring, consisting of volcanoes and earthquake sites, surrounds the Pacific Ocean along the margins where the great plates that cover the Earth grind against one another with titanic force.

Those margins are the scene of continual seismic activity, and Mexico has been shaken regularly. The current temblor filled in a so-called seismic gap, a place that hasn't had a quake recently and seemed due, explained Dave Russ of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Thursday's quake measured a significant 7.8 on the Richter scale of ground motion, and Russ said that "quite commonly, you might expect aftershocks in the 6 to low 7 range in an event of this magnitude."

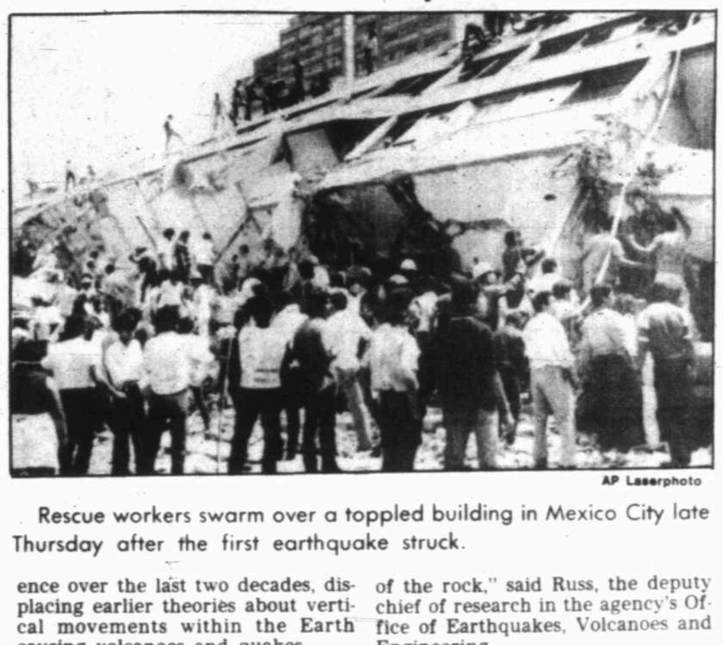

Today's earth science holds that the plates that cover the surface of the planet float on a molten layer beneath, crushing against one another. They are driven by massive but not fully understood forces.

When plates come together, one may be pressed beneath the other, diving into the interior of the planet, forcing the other plate upward with subsequent earthquakes. Those are called subduction zones.

Sometimes the crashing of continents together causes mountains to rise into the skies.

Often these forces will crack and weaken the plate being driven upward, allowing molten rock under great pressure to rise upward bursting forth in volcanoes like Mount St. Helens.

The study of these massive moving plates has revolutionized earth science over the last two decades, displacing earlier theories about vertical movements within the Earth causing volcanoes and quakes.

Rescue workers swarm over a toppled building in Mexico City late Thursday after the first earthquake struck.

Whether in Japan, Alaska, Chile, Mexico or elsewhere around the Pacific, the Ring of Fire has been the scene of some of the most violent natural disasters ever recorded — including the world's most powerful quake, in Japan in 1933.

On Thursday, the movement occurred on the Middle America Trench, where the relatively small Cocos Plate is being ever so slowly ground underneath the giant North American plate that holds Canada, the United States and Mexico.

"As it decends down, there is a lot of friction, some places slide smoothly, in other areas it hangs up. Strain builds up, accumulated energy, and eventually this exceeds the strength of the rock," said Russ, the deputy chief of research in the agency's Office of Earthquakes, Volcanoes and Engineering.

The triangular Cocos plate, lying off the coast of Mexico and Central America is being pushed from the west by the slow turns of the massive Pacific Plate, which underlies most of the ocean, and from the south by the Nazca plate, along the South American coastline.

Russ said that in some parts of Mexico, quakes have occurred about every 33 years. But the spot where Thursday's temblor hit, the region known as the Michoacan Gap, had not had a quake in historic times until Oct. 25, 1981.

Measuring 7.3 on the Richter scale, the 1981 quake hit in almost the same place as the most recent event.

But it was apparently much deeper in the earth, resulting in less damage, said Russ. Thursday's quake, occurring relatively soon afterward, apparently occurred closer to the surface.

"In a surface quake the waves rumble across the countryside and can do a lot more damage. That could be reason for the Mexico City damage," he said.

The extent of the damage also can be attributed to the type of ground on which the city is located.

Built on a former lakebed which has been filled in over the last 500 years, Mexico City sits on relatively loose, water-filled clay which can liquify when shaken by an earthquake.

"Such sediments tend to shake, to resonate, and can amplify the situation" and can make the shaking even worse than that from the quake itself, Russ said.

The Michoacan Gap is about 90 miles long, Russ explained. To its northwest a major quake occurred Jan. 30, 1973, measuring 7.5 on the Richter scale, the Colima quake. And to the southwest, the Petitatlan quake, measuring 7.6, took place March 14, 1979.

"The picture that should be expressed is that this is a pretty active area in terms of quakes," Russ said. "In 1957 there was a quake measured at 7.9 in Acapulco, and in this century there have been several in the 8 neighborhood in this area," he said. The smaller amounts of damage in the past likely occurred because the quakes were deeper and the region was somewhat less populated.

Asked why the region of the quake last week seemed to have been less active than nearby areas, Russ said it is also the site of a fracture in the Cocos plate. The Orozco Fracture may have reduced the amount of shaking in the region until now, he said.

Mexico City's quake stark reminder to Californians

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Mexico City's earthquake was a stunning reminder to Californians of what might well happen to a major city in their state, according to state disaster preparedness planners.

"What happened in Mexico could happen here," Roger Pulley, a senior planner in the California Office of Emergency Services in Sacramento, said Friday.

"Nobody can ever be totally ready," he said, but California officials say the state is better prepared than ever before to deal with its inevitable earthquakes. More than $1 million has been spent in the last two years on statewide earthquake drills, emergency services and public education, Pulley said.

He said California planners had learned a few lessons from the Mexico City earthquake. "First, our planning is on the right track," he said. "There were no surprises for us in this earthquake." He said no major new steps were expected to be taken in California as a result of the Mexican earthquake.

As Californians gazed at television images from across the border Friday, they could see in their neighbor many similarities with their own situation.

The western coasts of North and South America are the boundaries between vast geologic plates, which scrape, crash and dive into one another, ever giving rise to great and small earthquakes.

Seismologists have predicted that Los Angeles, which last experienced a major earthquake in 1857, has a 50 percent chance of experiencing a catastrophic earthquake within the next 30 years.

Residents of Mexico City fight terror after quakes

EDITOR'S NOTE — In the aftermath, the bodies are removed from rubble, stiff and dust-covered and from the hushed crowds come murmurs, "Que triste" — how sad. Then it happens again, the earth rolls violently, buildings rock, dust swirls and the sirens wail — trumpets of terror in Mexico City's two days of agony.

By JULES LOH

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The heavy machinery grinding at the twisted heap that had been an apartment building shut down. The crowd watching from across the street suddenly went silent, as if on signal.

Six firemen in helmets and dark blue uniforms gray with concrete dust climbed up the ungainly pile, stumbling in the loose debris. A yellow stretcher was passed up and a white sheet.

The body was that of an adult. It was stiff and coated with dust, resembling, in its removal, a statue.

The firemen drew the white sheet over it without speaking and brought it on the stretcher to the sidewalk. Men wearing gauze face masks placed it in a truck.

From the hushed crowd of onlookers came a single soft voice. "Que triste" — How sad.

The truck drove away and somewhere in the stricken city a clerk recorded one more confirmed victim of Mexico City's two days of horror.

How sad, indeed.

This was Friday morning, 24 hours after the first earthquake, 12 before the second Friday night.

The second quake struck with a particualar cruelty because the recognition was instant of that eerie sensation of movement. One local newspaper had headlined Friday's edition., "Oh, Dios!" (Oh, God!)

And now once again "Oh, Dios!" Terror showed in one boy's near hysteria when he stumbled to his mother's arms.

"What if it happens again?" he cried in a room lit by candles.

"The electric poles broke, mom, and the trees twisted and came down and the buildings looked like rubber and knocked against each other."

Victor Aguilar, 13, had been playing tag Friday with five friends in a park near his apartment. They were sitting in the grass before going home as night fell.

"I stood up and fell down," Victor said. "I could not get up. People were running out into the streets, just running around."

His mother had run too, down nine flights of darkened stairs — the electricity had gone out, adding to the sense of helplessness as the building rocked and swayed. She met the boy, petrified with fear, at the door.

Across town, Jose Vargas, a 26-year-old security guard was on duty on the fifth floor of an office building.

"It was a pure panic that cannot be described," he said. "Yesterday we were in the same office. The fear was already on the surface."

And the distant screams of sirens heard through the day and night after the first quake returned the second night, the trumpet call of tragedy.

On Friday morning, the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the cherished shrine of the nation's patron was filled for the 11 a.m. Mass with Mexicans seeking solace in their sorrow at the place where they have sought it for centuries.

On Friday night others knelt not on the basilica's marble floor but on the gritty curb of the rubble-strewn Paseo de la Reforma before a humbler church, mercifully spared from both quakes.

WORLD

Building's floors were 'collapsed straight down'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The 13-story Nuevo Leon apartment building once towered over an area as large as a city block in the densely populated working class neighborhood of Colonia Tlatelolco.

But it took less than a minute to collapse like an accordion, killing hundreds of people, when a massive earthquake upheaved central Mexico Thursday. By some accounts, no one who was in the building at the time survived.

"All floors collapsed straight down," said Dr. Jose Sanchez, director of one of the many Red Cross units at the scene.

At least 1,000 people, an estimated 200 families, had lived at the Nuevo Leon.

"Some had gone to work, the rest died," said police Sgt. Eloy Acero.

Maria Elena Buendia, her husband and her 15-year-old daughter were not at home when tragedy struck. But her three sons, ages 19, 20 and 22, were.

As the slow task of locating the victims continued, Mrs. Buendia kept a curbside vigil across the street. But as her watch entered the second day, hope ebbed and anger and frustration grew.

She looked at the scores of soldiers lining the street, their dark green uniforms clean and pressed. Then she looked at the volunteers covered with thick gray dust.

"They don't help," she complained of the soldiers, weeping as she spoke. "They just obstruct."

But Dr. Sanchez was quick to defend the soldiers.

"The functon of the soldiers is to keep the peace and to prevent people from stealing," he said.

At midafternoon, a 22-story building next to the ruins of the Nuevo Leon began making ominous noises.

"I could hear it really cracking," Sanchez said. "They should clear the area. It is not safe."

Red Cross personnel and other volunteer workers grabbed their bottles of water and boxes of supplies and dashed down the street, out of its vicinity.

However, volunteers continued the painstakingly slow task of picking through the rubble.

"In two hours, we have found only eight bodies," said Sanchez.

The dead were taken to a nearby community center where a small group of people waited outside. Hand-letter signs bearing the names of injured and the whereabouts of survivors were hung on a fence.

Those who lost their homes were sheltered in gymnasiums and community centers.

Scientists surprised by strength of Friday aftershock

By WALTER SULLIVAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — While specialists at the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., had expected one or more severe aftershocks after the devastating quake that struck Mexico on Thursday, they said Saturday they were surprised at the intensity of the one that struck on Friday.

With a rated magnitude of 7.3 compared with one of 7.8 for the initial shock, it was less severe by a factor of 15, but it administered the coup de grace to many structures weakened by the initial quake. On the Richter scale each unit represents a ten-fold difference in the extent of ground motion but a 30-fold difference in energy released.

Waverly Person, duty officer at the earthquake center in Colorado, said, based on earlier experience, "we expected aftershocks in the high sixes," but not as high as 7.3. While it was widely regarded as a second earthquake, it was clearly a sequel to the first and classed by seismologists as an aftershock.

There is still the possibility of further aftershocks, but they would probably be less intense than the one Friday.

A great earthquake manifests a release of strain that has accumulated over a long period of time as two rigid plates of the earth's surface seek to slip past one another. The main shock represents the primary rupture but can set the stage for aftershocks that extend the line of rupture and release more strain.

The Mexican earthquakes were caused as part of the Pacific floor, known as the Cocos Plate, sought to descend under the Mexican coastline. Slippage began at a depth of some 20 miles beneath the coastal village of Playa Azul, the rupture then presumably propagating along the coastline, causing a series of aftershocks.

Businessmen want fundamental reforms

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's big businessmen are pressing the white-minority government to make fundamental reforms in the apartheid system under which they once prospered.

Their message is increasingly angry and impatient.

"Time has run out," Anton Rupert, head of Rembrandt, the country's largest cigarette manufacturer, told a recent news conference. Rembrandt also has large mining interests.

"This is the government's final opportunity to correct past wrongs and introduce the sort of reforms the country is so strongly signalling it needs so urgently."

Rupert is an Afrikaner with close links with the government, and now is adding his voice to the clamor from English-speakers who dominate South Africa's big business.

As economic recession deepened and the rand currency crashed last month when foreign bankers worried about the political crisis refused to renew loans, the men who control much of this country's vast mineral and industrial wealth declared that only fundamental reforms would do.

Gavin Relly, head of South Africa's mining giant, the Anglo American Corp., did what once was unthinkable.

Accompanied by a six-member delegation, he met Sept. 13 in neighboring Zambia with black guerrilla chiefs of the African National Congress, which is fighting to overthrow the white government and then nationalize the big corporations. Botha accused Relly of "showing weakness to the enemies."

The businessmen see themselves as ahead of the government in acknowledging that real reform, without conceding quick black rule, is vital.

They are, however, vulnerable to charges that big business has done well under apartheid and didn't complain too much when the going was good.

From an uneasy and often antagonistic relationship when the Afrikaners' National Party ousted a party dominated by English-speakers in 1948, big business and the government settled for a sort of honeymoon in 1979.

Over the preceding 25 years, Afrikaners had gone into business with corporations such as South Africa's insurance giant Sanlam and felt less resentful of the English-speakers' grip on the mining industry.

At a 1979 conference, Botha promised business leaders security and stability in South Africa.

The relative liberalism of Anglo American and closely related corporations, such as the food conglomerate Premier Milling led by Tony Blum, who accompanied Relly to Zambia, became more muted.

Relly succeeded magnate Harry Oppenheimer as the head of Anglo American in January 1983. He supported the government's new constitution that exacerbated black frustration and helped trigger the current rioting.

Relly argued that the constitution, which gave limited political rights to the Indian and mixed-race minorities but continued to exclude blacks, was better than nothing.

Oppenheimer, who has retired but still owns Anglo American, opposed the constitution because it gave blacks no voice.

Now the business community is deeply angry about what they see as Botha's lost opportunity in failing to announce any reforms in an Aug. 15 speech that had been billed by white officials as a major policy statement.

Botha's government since has proposed eroding the grand design of apartheid with two concessions. One would give South African citizenship to people in black homelands, and the other would ease black movement into white areas.

Most business leaders believe Botha could have headed off limited U.S. sanctions and, more important, calmed foreign bankers by announcing the moves Aug. 15.

Instead, "South Africa is facing the worst of all worlds," commented Johannesburg's Business Day, an influential newspaper.

An Analysis

Angolan rebel hopes for U.S. aid

JAMBA, Angola (AP) — Rebel chieftain Jonas Savimbi said Saturday he hopes for U.S. help in fending off the strongest offensive yet against his pro-Western guerrillas by Cuban- and Soviet-backed government forces.

Savimbi, leader of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, or UNITA, told reporters the Angolan army had pushed to within nearly 120 miles of his Jamba command, its closest penetration ever, in a 55-day offensive.

"Their aim is to destroy Jamba," said Savimbi, who claims to control the southeastern third of Angola.

He contended the Soviets are heightening their military involvement in Angola, and said government troops might try to bomb his rebel headquarters, deep in the Angolan bush about 350 miles southeast of the capital, Luanda.

UNITA has been waging a bush war to topple the Marxist government of Angola since 1976, one year after the former colony in southwestern Africa was granted independence from Portugal. UNITA and the Marxists shared power at first, but the Marxists, backed by Soviet arms and Cuban troops, eventually seized control.

Most Western analysts say there are about 25,000 Cubans in Angola.

European 'Spy Wars' strain delicate relations

By KENNETH JAUTZ

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The spy affairs gripping Western Europe have strained East-West relations, embarrassed governments and offered a rare glimpse into the murky world of defectors and double agents.

From Oslo to Athens, spy scandals, expulsions and a trial have brought "spy fever" out of paperback thrillers and into real life.

British officials say the retaliatory espionage-related expulsions by Moscow and London have undermined relations between the two countries.

West Germany's spy scandal has cost the job of the nation's foreign intelligence chief and threatened the career of the Cabinet minister responsible for internal security.

The Greenpeace ship-sinking affair in New Zealand and surrounding espionage allegations brought about the resignation Friday of French Defense Minister Charles Hernu and the dismissal of the head of France's secret service, Adm. Pierre Lacoste.

Also on Friday, the Soviet KGB announced the arrest of a Soviet citizen, A.G. Tolkachev, for allegedly spying for the CIA. The KGB said Tolkachev, a staff member at one of Moscow's research institutes, gave material to Paul M. Stombaugh, who worked in the U.S. Embassy's political section until he was ordered out of the Soviet Union on June 14. The announcement did not say when Tolkachev was arrested.

Many diplomatic analysts and security experts say the spy revelations will not do permanent damage to European public life.

"We have always had and always will have spy affairs," said Karl Kaiser, director of the German Society for Foreign Affairs, a private research and study organization. "That is particularly true here because this is a divided country."

The British-Soviet affair, in which each side expelled 31 diplomats, journalists and businessmen, began with what British officials hailed as one of their biggest espionage coups in recent years: the defection of 46-year-old Oleg A. Gordievski, identified as the Soviet KGB spymaster in Britain.

British officials said the expulsions would affect relations between London and Moscow for some time to come.

Since early August, an equally sensational spy affair involving Communist East German agents has humiliated the government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany.

But Bonn officials strenuously emphasize that the scandal, in which seven suspected East German agents have been arrested or defected, will not permanently harm improving relations with East Germany.

"Our contacts with (East Germany) are continuing and will continue," said chief government spokesman Friedhelm Ost.

The West German spy scandal includes the defection Aug. 19 to East Germany of Hans-Joachim Tiedge, the counter-intelligence agent once in charge of tracking East German spies.

Heribert Hellenbroich, the West German spy chief fired after Tiedge's defection, said in an interview: "Of course, spies cause damage. But in Tiedge's case, West Germany's allies weren't affected, because Tiedge was dealing with other areas."

Lt. Col. Joseph Purka, spokesman at NATO headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, said of the Tiedge case on Aug. 29: "At the present time there is no indication that this incident poses any threat to NATO secrets."

However, NATO sources say West Germany's long history of spy scandals makes other alliance partners cautious in sharing intelligence information with Bonn.

West Germany's opposition Social Democrats have called for the dismissal of Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann for allegedly mishandling the spy affair.

Investigators still are trying to unravel the various threads linking the spies in Europe.

West German security officials say a secretary in President Richard von Weizsaecker's office who was arrested Aug. 24 had links to an East German couple arrested on spy charges five days later in Switzerland.

There is speculation — denied in Bonn — that Tiedge's defection may have triggered the defection of KGB chief Gordievski in London.

Others say Tiedge may have had a tie to last month's disappearance of Vitaly Yurtchenko, a counselor at the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow, while on a "mission" in Italy. There is speculation he, too, defected.

The Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera carried a front-page story Aug. 30 saying that Tiedge defected because he feared Yurtchenko would expose him as a double agent.

In Norway, former senior diplomat Arne Treholt was convicted in June of spying for nine years for the Soviet Union and Iraq. He was sentenced to 20 years in prison.

Pravda says U.S. seeks stalemate at Geneva talks

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party newspaper Pravda said Saturday the United States is seeking a stalemate at the Geneva arms control talks, and the main issue is the militarization of space.

Meanwhile, Western diplomats in Moscow said they have heard reports that the Soviets are working on possible new proposals, but they doubted there would be serious offers if the United States' position on space weapons remains unchanged.

Pravda commented on the arms talks in a report from Geneva, where the U.S.-Soviet negotiations resumed Thursday.

It said, "Not a single, businesslike, practical constructive proposal has come from the American side."

Pravda also said it appeared that the American delegation approached the negotiations seeking "to drive them deeper into an impasse, to gain time for realization of the Strategic Defense Initiative program, and in the final account, to attain military superiority over the Soviet Union."

The Strategic Defense Initiative, also called the "Star Wars" plan, is President Reagan's proposed space-based anti-missile defense system.

Peruvian President Alan Garcia

New Peruvian president 'leader who leads'

By MONTE HAYES

LIMA, Peru (AP) — People in Lima keep a close watch these days on a small, second-floor balcony of the Government Palace overlooking the Plaza de Armas.

That's where Peru's new president, 36-year-old Alan Garcia, is likely to appear without notice to engage passers-by in lively exchanges and proclaim measures that touch their daily lives.

From the balcony he has decreed price cuts for food and medicine and announced plans to auction off government vehicles and and give the money to poor children.

Garcia's style, his youth and his energy-charged first weeks in office have revived a sense of hope in Peru, a nation beset by economic collapse, social decay and a leftist guerrilla campaign.

Since taking office July 28, the 6-foot-3 Garcia has lost little time in attacking inflation, waste and corruption in government, military spending, a $13.7 billion foreign debt, drug trafficking and guerrilla violence.

Many Peruvians had come to see these problems as hopeless over the last four years during the transition from military to civilian rule.

But Garcia, displaying self-assurance, has moved swiftly to fill the vacuum of leadership that critics say was one of the greatest marks against his predecessor, 72-year-old Fernando Belaunde Terry, leader of the center-right Popular Action Party.

"Garcia is a leader who leads," columnist Manuel D'Ornellas wrote in the independent news magazine Caretas. "New winds are blowing through the country."

Perhaps because of the magnitude of Peru's crisis and a sense that daring measures were needed, the United Left coalition, the country's second political force, as well as conservative parties have applauded Garcia.

But the problems facing Garcia are great. Per-capita income stands at 1965 levels, industry is working at 50 percent capacity, and two of every three workers are without steady jobs.

When Garcia appears on the palace balcony enthusiastic crowds quickly gather below. They have heard him denounce corruption and pledge to divide the wealth among the poor.

A favorite target during his "balconazos" — a word coined for his balcony appearances — has been the privileges of government bureaucrats. On Aug. 22, he announced a ceiling of $1,080 in monthly salaries for government officials, noting that 500 managers of the state oil company, Petroperu, had been earning as much as 100,000 teachers.

He also announced he was paring two of every three managers from the payroll of state companies.

Pinochet challenged by widening opposition

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Gen. Augusto Pinochet's presidency is being challenged by a widening political opposition that seems willing to endure four more years of military rule in exchange for steps to ensure civilian government by 1989.

A new 11-party plan for limiting Pinochet's tenure through constitutional reform follows infighting between the army and police that has shaken Pinochet's regime as it starts its 12th year in power.

The setbacks seem to pose no immediate danger for Pinochet, but they have inspired a sudden revival of the mass demonstrations that beleaguered him from mid-1983 until his state-of-siege crackdown last November.

Early in September, as street disorders claimed 10 lives and political party leaders sought nationwide signatures for their proposed phaseout of military rule, the durable army commander reacted by scorning both the violent and peaceful strategies arrayed against him.

Chile's civilian elite, the general said in a speech Sept. 4, is "ill with democratitis." Threatening to reimpose the siege lifted three months before, he warned: "If necessary, we are going to tighten the grip because first we have to save the country from Marxism and then we can look back."

A week later, on the 12th anniversary of the military's overthrow of the Marxist President Salvador Allende, Pinochet rejected the multiparty initiative, saying its authors were "motivated toward the conquest of power."

The general's words now lead Chileans to assume that Pinochet, healthy at 69, intends to stay beyond the end of his term in 1989. Under the provisions of his 1980 constitution, the armed forces chiefs in 1989 would name a president for an eight-year term, subject to voter approval in a yes-or-no referendum.

Voters overwhelmingly endorsed the constitution before a 1982-83 recession made Pinochet unpopular. But the mass protests that grew from economic hardship lacked coherent direction and failed to produce a political alternative acceptable to the rest of the military.

Into Chile's fractious political spectrum stepped Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresno. The 71-year-old Roman Catholic patriarch convinced nine non-Marxist opposition parties in August to drop their insistence that Pinochet resign.

The result on Aug. 26 was a "National Accord for a Transition to Full Democracy," also joined by two conservative groups that once backed Pinochet. The 11 parties represented four-fifths of the vote when Chile had elections.

The nine-page document calls for an immediate end to the government's power to arrest and banish opponents without charge. The latter provision would allow 4,200 Chileans to return from forced exile.

It also proposes the election of a Congress with power to amend the 1980 constitution so a president can be chosen in an open election. Economic policy would be shifted more in favor of the country's poor majority, with guarantees for private property.

The now-banned Marxist parties could take part in politics if they bring their "objectives, acts and conduct" into line with Chilean democratic principles.

"This is a turning point because it shows the country and the armed forces that the politicians aren't only against Pinochet but that we have a better plan for the country," said a former Christian Democratic senator, Patricio Aylwin, one of the accord's 21 original signers.

A member of the same centrist party, Florencio Ceballos, said: "The proposal is not everything we want, but it has allowed us to bring together civilian forces like never before."

Indeed, never have so many of Pinochet's diverse critics agreed on so much. When the U.S. State Department called the proposals "positive, pragmatic and forward looking," Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle accused the department of "open interference in Chile's affairs."

Government criticism of the accord focuses on its position toward South America's largest Communist Party, which has shunned the initiative and advocates violence to bring down the regime. Officials pointed to looting and sabotage bombings during the recent demonstrations as evidence that moderate civilians can't control the Communists.

Political leaders had joined Cardinal Fresno in urging Chileans to sign the accord but to ignore the call by Communist-led unions and slum organizations for aggressive protests.

However, neighborhood activists said many of the thousands of students and slum residents who took to the streets and built barricades did so in support of the moderate political accord.

"Chileans mobilize when there is hope of winning something, and our agreement is very encouraging," said Luis Maira, a former congressman of the non-Marxist Christian Left Party, who spent a decade in forced exile after the coup.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Militias battle in Tripoli

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Moslem militias pounded Tripoli with artillery, rockets and mortars Saturday as Prime Minister Rashid Karami tried to end seven days of savage battles in his hometown.

Police said 21 people were killed and 45 wounded in the fighting between the Sunni Moslem Tawheed Islami, or Islamic Unification, militia and the Alawite Moslem Arab Democratic Party.

That raised the known toll in Lebanon's second largest city, 50 miles north of Beirut, to at least 126 killed and nearly 400 wounded since last Sunday.

Karami, who flew to Tripoli Friday, was joined late Saturday by Maj. Gen. Saeed Bayrakdar, commander of some 25,000 Syrian troops in north and east Lebanon, and his military intelligence chief, Brig. Gen. Ghazi Kenaan, the state radio reported.

95,000 Filipinos march

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos' troops blocked columns of marchers from reaching his palace Saturday as some 95,000 Filipinos joined in nationwide demonstrations against his 20-year-old government.

Opposition organizers said three people were wounded in shooting incidents in Manila and at least 30 demonstrators were detained as police suppressed rowdy crowds. A hospital confirmed one shooting.

The marches in Manila and half a dozen other cities came a day after soldiers fired on thousands of demonstrators on Negros Island, killing 20 people in the bloodiest protest under Marcos.

Opposition leader Lorenzo Tanada said the killings were part of government policy "to eliminate opponents of Marcos' regime."

Greenpeace flap continues

PARIS (LAT) — The resignation of French Defense Minister Charles Hernu and the dismissal of intelligence service chief Pierre Lacoste have failed to quell the controversy over the Greenpeace affair.

New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange called upon the French press and politicians Saturday to establish quickly the full extent of alleged government involvement in the sinking of the Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior in Auckland two months ago.

Tonight will be fair with lows in the mid 60s.

Monday calls for partly cloudy skies and high temperatures in the mid 80s.

The highest temperature ever recorded on this date was 100 degrees in 1977. A low of 52 degrees was set in 1972.

STATE

High easterly winds pushed higher than normal tides onto Texas beaches early today, prompting the National Weather Service to issue a coastal flood warning for the upper Texas coast.

Forecasters said tides have been one to two feet above normal and said Texas 87 along the beach near Sabine Pass had a foot of water over it Friday night and early today.

A weak cold front has moved into North Central Texas. The front was located early today from the Red River near Gainesville southward to near San Angelo and into the mountains of West Texas.

Showers and a few thunderstorms are being reported at dawn over the plains, parts of the Trans Pecos and the Edwards Plateau.

NATION

Rain spread from the central Plains to the Great Lakes on Saturday, with up to 5 inches falling on Kansas.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from Florida across Georgia and the South Carolina coast, with a few thundershowers along the Texas coast. Light drizzle fell along the northern Pacific Coast.

Two to 5 inches fell overnight over northeastern and south-central Kansas, causing some rivers to rise to near flood stage by afternoon.

Heavy rain also fell across northwestern Oklahoma, with amounts accumulated over 24 hours including 4 inches at Crawford, and more than 3 inches at Sweetwater, Woodward, and Vici.

Rain also extended across parts of Oklahoma, eastern Kansas, Nebraska, northern Missouri, Iowa, northern Illinois, Wisconsin and Lower Michigan.

Basin's Petroleum Museum marks 10th anniversary

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The rich history of the Permian Basin's oil industry was fading away. Equipment that had dug into the earth and found oil, bringing thousands to the area to seek their fortunes, sat rusting and rotting in fields. Petroleum pioneers, full of hard-earned knowledge about the land, who knew the stories and legends of the oilpatch, were passing on.

Midland oilman George T. Abell decided that the area needed an institution to preserve the history of the industry that had been so rewarding to the Permian Basin. Leading a group of area businessmen, Abell helped establish the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame, which is celebrating 10 years in its $3.5 million facility on Interstate 20, off Rankin Highway.

In honor of the occasion, both Thane Akins, mayor of Midland, and John Minor, mayor of Odessa, proclaimed Saturday as "Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame Day."

"This is a proud day for the area. We appreciate our friends from Odessa coming over to help celebrate. This museum really is for the entire area," Akins said at Saturday's activities. He then stated that he was thankful to those who had given their time, money and effort to help establish the museum. "It's important that we have such a facility. It helps us have a better insight into where we're going."

Odessa Mayor John Minor then read a proclamation, which cited the Petroleum Museum for bringing the joys of learning to thousands of children and adults with its exciting presentation of the story of oil, for preserving the cultural history of the area's oil industry, and for being a regional resource center for education, and its continued expansion and services to the Permian Basin.

He added the celebration was "an excellent opportunity to indicate that Midland and Odessa are continuing to try to work together, to show that we are better together."

Following the speeches, Museum President Russell J. Ramsland presented Homer T. Fort, the original director of the museum, with an original bronze by sculptor Lincoln Knox. "All the statements in that proclamation could be applied to Homer T. Fort. It is a pleasure to thank Homer, who served the museum for 15 years, for his tireless dedication to the museum." Another bronze by Knox was presented to President Gerald Ford on Sept. 13, 1975, at the dedication ceremonies opening the facility.

Activities celebrating the 10th anniversary of the museum included sky divers from "Our Parachute Club," a birthday cake, square dancers, Indian dancers from the Boy Scout Explorer Indian Guides, the Infantry from Fort Concho in San Angelo, music, mimes and clowns. The museum was incorporated in 1966, and Fort was hired in 1969. The present location was designed, built and landscaped by local professionals. A non-profit organization, the museum is funded by contributions.

Sense of humor gets cancer patient through ordeal

Patti Hodges

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Pattie Hodges discusses her bouts with cancer with a myriad of emotions. Tear-brimmed eyes one moment, recalling a particularly difficult time, clash with a hearty laugh over a truly ridiculous scene.

Today, fully in remission from both breast and bone cancer, she discusses those tightroped days with nary a glance backward.

"I have always been a positive-thinking person," said Ms. Hodges, a mother of three, wife and grandmother and part-time flower shop employee. "I have a great faith in the Lord."

While her religious convictions have "definitely strengthened" from the ordeal, Ms. Hodges relied on two other very important anchors — her sense of humor and a sense of "perspective."

"You have to keep your sense of humor," said Ms. Hodges, who regularly visits cancer patients. With a sense of the tragicomical, she recalled an incident that occurred during her treatment with chemotherapy.

"I knew that it would probably make my hair fall out," she said. "Of course today, they have 'ice caps' and who knows what else, that hair fall-out is not always a problem. They've come such a long ways in such a short time."

"Anyway," continued Ms. Hodges, "I was sitting there brushing my hair when it began coming out in large lumps, just like when you brush a dog's matted hair. My husband found me crying and asked me why I was crying...that I knew my hair would probably fall out."

"I cried and told him, yes I knew my hair was going to fall out, but I just wasn't prepared for how vain I was."

'I Can Cope' program educates about cancer

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Dispelling myths and common misconceptions is just one part of "I Can Cope", a six-week program designed to aid cancer patients and their families in understanding the disease.

"You hear so many negative things," said Mary Kitchens of Allison Cancer Center. "For the patients it's a real educational process. The more educated someone is about cancer, the more likely they can cope. They are just better able to face it."

The fears run wild and unfounded about the disease, indicated Allison staff members.

"I remember one lady who asked if she should buy a new washer so that she wouldn't have to wash her daughters clothes with hers, out of fear of giving cancer to her daughter," said Ms. Kitchens. "You wouldn't believe some of the fears they have."

More common is the fear of chemotherapy.

"I would say the number one and number two questions are about chemotherapy," said Liz Tipps of Allison. "'Am I going to lose my hair?' and 'How sick will I be?' are the most common."

Posters to be distributed across town to promote awareness of handicapped

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Posters are popping up across Midland and, on them, are sketches of children that look much like the Cabbage Patch Kids.

A closer look reveals, however, that the kids in these posters are somehow different. They have handicaps.

The posters, designed by Midland artist Mary Fish, will be distributed throughout Midland next month during a campaign to promote public awareness regarding various handicapping conditions.

Ray Unterbrink, executive director for the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens, conceived the idea of the poster campaign about a year ago.

"I began to feel a need to develop a catchy way to focus on the handicapped as a whole individual," he said. "There is a need to have the public see the handicapped individual as a person who is intact."

Unterbrink likened the treatment of various handicapping conditions to automobile repairs. "When you have an automobile with a bad battery you don't junk the whole automobile. You replace the battery."

He added, the handicapped individual can be treated in the same manner. "They may have a bad leg, but you don't remove them from society. You treat the handicap."

Unterbrink said he hopes "more people will become aware of the similarities between handicapped and non-handicapped students" through the poster campaign.

Dr. Ruby Morris, MISD coordinator for special education, said one poster will be distributed each month at various spots across Midland including the public schools, shopping centers and banks.

Each poster will represent one of several handicapping conditions including speech impaired, mentally retarded, learning disabled, emotionally disturbed, visually handicapped, hearing impaired and physically handicapped, she said.

Subtle captions, such as one which asks, "Guess who has epilepsy?" also are included on each poster. The captions are "supposed to be thought provoking," Unterbrink said. "Each carries a small, complete thought."

Ms. Morris said the poster campaign reinforces MISD's philosophy that, through the provision of special education services, handicapped students within the district are guaranteed an equal opportunity for free appropriate education within the least restrictive environment.

The district also endorses the concept that handicapped students shall be educated with their peers to the extent that they will benefit. Special education services are available to handicapped students ages 3 through 21. Children who are auditorially handicapped or visually impaired are eligible for services from birth through age 21.

The educational needs of handicapped students are determined by the Admission, Review and Dismissal Committee, Ms. Morris said. As members of the committee, parents participate in the development of Individual Educational Plans.

MISD's special education department also maintains an advisory council which meets quarterly to discuss and provide advice on the district's responsibility in special education.

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Midland artist Mary Fish glances at the recently completed posters depicting various handicapping conditions. The drawings, by Mrs. Fish, will be distributed throughout Midland next month as part of a public awareness campaign sponsored by the Midland Independent School District Special Advisory Council.

Parents should know music before trying to rate it

There's currently a controversy going on about whether record companies should incorporate a rating system so that parents will know which rock albums contain nasty lyrics.

Not being a person who listens to rock music, I'm not sure what those nasty lyrics are suppose to be, but I've got a pretty good idea. I wasn't born yesterday, you know. They are probably heavy on the sex because sex is big these days. It sells. There are, no doubt, other songs glorifying drugs that have people worried, too.

I don't question the sincerity of these people who want the rating system established, but they need to be sure they know what they are talking about before jumping head-first into the issue.

I'm reminded of my high school principal. Back in the late 1960s there were similar concerns being expressed about rock songs. Our principal, who was big on this sort of thing, took the lead. He called an assembly and proceeded to list numerous songs that had bad messages, the kind we shouldn't listen to, including several by the Beatles, the Rolling Stones and Bob Dylan.

He got on a roll. His face turned a peculiar shade of pink. Then, as his voice reached a fever pitch, he pounded his fist on the podium and shouted, "And, probably the worst example of a drug song is that new one by John Denver, Rocky Mountain High."

Half the student body giggled and the other half stared in disbelief.

Goodness knows there were plenty of nasty songs being recorded back then, but Rocky Mountain High was not one of them. If anything, it was telling people to get high naturally by sitting on a mountaintop and freezing their you-know-whats off.

Obviously, many songs have hidden drug messages, but, still, I find it difficult to believe Rocky Mountain High was LSD-induced. The words are too clean-cut, too goody-goody.

But the point is, by citing the wrong example of a decadent song our principal lost credibility on the subject. Either way, of course, the students would have continued listening to their favorite songs, but, at least, they wouldn't have laughed at his naivete. Some might even have been impressed with his expertise in the area.

They would have said something like, "You know, for an old coot he sure knows his music." Then they would have laughed and put another nasty record on the stereo. Teen-agers are like that.

So, here's a bit of free advise to those parents wanting to slap a PG-13 rating on their kids' music. Know your facts. Be sure the "high" they are singing about is the same "high" you want your children to avoid.

And another thing. Don't listen to country-western music. Some of us like it just the way it is, even if most of the songs are about broken marriages, getting blitzed and fooling around with their best friend's wife.

Besides, how do you put a rating on a song that contains the line, "You can eat crackers in my bed anytime"?

Is it a solid PG-13 or a soft R? Only Barabra Mandrell knows for sure.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

MUSEUM

The exterior exhibit, the "Oilpatch", is believed to be the world's largest collection of antique drilling and production equipment. The museum's 3,000-foot archives, which contains such items as maps, photographs, and written and taped interviews with petroleum pioneers, was opened in 1978. The North Wing, which includes the pipeline patrol plan exhibit, was dedicated by Vice President George Bush in 1981.

Johnny Beck, left, playing guitar, and Jody Nix, playing the fiddle, above, are among the musicians entertaining at the Petroleum Museum's 10th anniversary celebration. Amanda, left, and Leta Collins, 5009 Rio Grande, above left, share some of the Petroleum Museum's 10th anniversary birthday cake.

Visitors have come from every state in the union, plus 74 foreign countries, including Russia, China and the Middle East. Despite a trend of declining attendance at museums, Ramsland noted that visitation at the Petroleum Museum is up. "We're looking to a bright and glorious future."

HODGES

"He just shot back, that of course I was vain," she chuckled. "He said any lady who has spent the last 25 years using Lady Clairol has to be vain."

Ms. Hodge's hair continued to be a source of humor for both herself and others.

"One night I was going to bed and I put on a nightcap that I had made," she said. "My husband asked why I was wearing that and I told them that without any hair my head was freezing."

To this day, she said, she still makes the nightcaps and gives them to bald men friends of hers.

Still another incident resulted in Ms. Hodges laughing at her own affliction.

"I wanted to help out with Christmas in April and we all met at the house we were going to fix up," she recalled. "It was real hot and I told the others that I was going to go around on the back side to paint where it was cooler."

The entrance to the back had a trellis under which she had to pass, she explained.

"There was a couple of guys up on the roof working and I was talking to them when the wig I always wore got caught on the trellis," she said. "I kept walking but the wig just stayed where it was."

Although the incident was humorous for Ms. Hodges, the sympathies of the workmen touched her and made her realize how much others really cared about her illness.

While humor helped to relieve many of the darker moments, Ms. Hodges attributes her attitude and her sense of perspective for her recovery.

"One doctor told me that 85 percent of my recovery was because of my attitude," she said.

Maintaining her role as a parent was important too, she indicated.

"I noticed that my boys were having some problem with the fact that I had cancer," she said. "One day I called them in and said, 'Look. Nothing has changed. I'm still your mother and I can still take care of you. I'm not going to die.'"

"Thirty minutes later they were in wrestling on the floor," she chuckled. "You have to keep your sense of perspective."

Indeed, even during her chemotherapy treatments, Ms. Hodges continued to work part-time in a flower shop.

"I took each day at a time and lived each to the fullest," she said. "When I was feeling good, I'd bake cinnamon rolls for those people that brought me baked things when I wasn't feeling so good."

Today, with a full head of carefully-coiffed hair and a "realization of what is truly important," she dedicates time each year to "I Can Cope," an American Cancer Society program for cancer patients and their families, held over a six-week period.

"I Can Cope was started in 1977 in Minnesota by two oncology nurses," she said. "It was tested by 100 patients and then later accepted by the ACS as a national program."

Ms. Hodge's first concern about having a forum for patients and their families to ask questions and talk out problems, began in June 1980, when she was finishing up her therapy.

"I told Dr. Greg Bartha, my internist, that we really needed a support group in Midland," she said. "There was absolutely nothing."

Contact with other cancer patients including Virginia Saxe and Jim Roscoe, plus the mother of boy with leukemia — Melinda Leaseburg — led to formation of such a group.

"Another person, Hal Watkins, was a college professor who did not have cancer at the time, but who later was diagnosed three months after the group was formed," she said. Not long after the formation of the group, Ms.Hodges heard of the ACS's "I Can Cope" program and inquired about having the sessions in Midland.

"The first 'I Can Cope' was held in fall of 1981," she said. "It provided a time for cancer patients and their families to get some questions."

Today, Ms. Hodges continues her work with the program, serving this year as co-chairman.

COPE

"Today we have several drugs that don't even affect the hair," she said.

Still, the overriding fear — death — remains a difficult one for staff members and their patients.

"We can't tell them anything that will make that fear go away," said Ms. Tipps. "It just takes time — that first treatment — and dealing with things as they happen."

In many cases the patients are not the worriers.

"The sessions are also for the families of the patients," said Ms. Tipps. "A lot of times, the patient can handle it better than the families."

Ms. Tipps recalled a similar "I Can Cope" program in an Amarillo hospital where she worked.

"It was neat to watch what happened to those people," she said. "They came in not knowing anyone, scared and quiet and by the end of the sessions, they were a close group. They eventually became a support group."

The sessions, to feature speakers from various related fields, will begin Oct. 1 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. and run once a week for six weeks.

Included as speakers are Dr. Richard Reese, Dr. David Snyder, Dr. Eric Svenson, Jim Huggins, Mary Piette and Allen Schroeder.

Texas AFL-CIO backs water plan

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas AFL-CIO has endorsed the Texas water plan and two constitutional amendments which authorize more than $1 billion in state bonds to finance the plan.

The constitutional amendments will appear on a statewide ballot Nov. 5 as Propositions One and Two.

"The water plan offers the beginning of a state policy which will guarantee that Texas has water for future economic development and the creation of jobs," said AFL-CIO president Harry Hubbard.

"The plan does not solve the state's long-range water problems," Hubbard added. "For one thing, it offers only the beginning of a method of protecting ground water reservoirs ...(but) we are convinced that this plan provides the foundation for future, additonal action to guarantee that all interests and regions of the state have adequate supplies of water."

The constitutional amendments were also supported this week by the Texas Water Conservational Association and the Texas League of Women Voters.

A 1:45 p.m. public hearing will look at the request by Oregon Trail Trees for a temporary land use permit to sell Christmas trees at the northeast corner of the intersection of Andrews Highway and Midkiff Road.

The council will consider the preliminary plat of Trinity Meadows Addition, an ordinance establishing stop sign locations, a resolution authorizing Phillips Oil Co. to encase oil and gas lines which cross access roads at the new landfill and reimbursement for the work and a request for a waiver of the requirement for a guard rail along the drainage ditch in Skyline West subdivision.

Also on the agenda is a proposal by William B. Blakemore II to dedicate .358 of an acre of land for right-of-way for Midkiff Road adjacent to the proposed Trinity Meadows Addition south of Haynes Avenue.

County Commissioners

Midland County commissioners will consider taxes, the county's 1986 budget, the jail and rent-subsidy programs in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Midland County Courthouse.

Midge Erskine, an advocate for fair taxation, is to discuss taxes at 9:45 a.m. Last week in Commissioners' Court, she attacked the Midland Central Appraisal District for alleged inequities in property appraisals, which are to be at fair market values.

At 4 p.m., the commissioners are to adopt the county's $14.3 million budget for 1986.

In other business, the court is to discuss the county's federal rent-subsidy program headed up by Jerrie Ann Westmoreland and is to consider preliminary cost estimates, prepared by architect Walter Pate, on the jail renovation.

MISD Board of Trustees

Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will discuss the process for appointment of the Midland Central Appraisal District Board of Directors at its regular meeting beginning at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the MISD Board Room, 702 N. N St.

The meeting will convene immediately following a tour of the newly expanded San Jacinto High School.

Trustees also are expected to:

— Accept San Jacinto Junior High School renovations.

— Consider a student teacher cooperative with Texas Tech University.

— Approve secondary speech, junior high school reading improvement and junior high school basic English curriculum guides.

— Accept a gift from the Midland High School Band Boosters.

— Act on a request by Midland and Lee High schools to attend the State University League Interscholastic League Marching Contest.

— Appoint officials for banking activities.

Grand Race for cyclists Oct. 19

Cyclists from Old Mexico and West Texas will ride in the Second Annual Grand Race of Midland Oct. 19 on Texas Highway 349, the Rankin Highway.

The race will in two phases: 30-mile race for novices and a 60-mile race for experienced cyclists, according to Pable Gameros, race coordinator.

"Last year, we had about 30 riders," said Gameros, a seasoned cyclist. "I hope we'll have more this time."

In the 30-mile novice race, separate categories will be set up for men and women riders, he said.

But in the 60-mile race for expert cyclists, there will be no distinction among the sexes. The race among the experts will be in three age groups: 18 to 30, 31 to 40, and 41 and over.

Prizes instead of trophies will be awarded to winners and runners-up in the Grand Race. Prizes will include bicycle parts and cycling gear, sweaters, T-shirts and gift certificates, Gameros said, and will be donated by Peyton's Bikes, Bike Masters and Ski Skeller Sports.

The race will start at 9 a.m. three miles south of Interstate Highway 20.

Cyclists wishing additional information on the race may telephone Gameros at 683-7606.

Hardly censorship

Opponents of the move to require warning labels on records that contain sexually graphic lyrics are trying to brand the proposal as censorship. But the proposal hardly constitutes a restriction on artistic expression.

Potentially objectionable lyrics have been used with increasing frequency and were a large part of the impetus for the Senate Commerce Committee to conduct a hearing this week on the issue of rating record albums. Parents are particularly concerned about the sexually explicit lyrics and lyrics addressing drug usage because of the fact that youngsters often listen to music the adults may not commonly hear.

We're not talking about the common lyrics that most would brand as risque; we're talking about "purple" lyrics that would make a self-respecting sailor blush.

The issue here is not whether to curtail the freedom of artistic expression, if you choose to call it that, but to give parents a way in which to stay aware of what their minor children are being subjected to and to monitor that music in order to exert parental control if necessary.

The Recording Industry Association of America has even agreed to label selected albums with the notation "parental guidance, explicit lyrics." But some broadcasters, artists and record manufacturers have been opposed to a rating system like the one used by the movie industry because they view it as censorship.

That claim isn't valid since artists would still be able to use the lyrics they desired; parents would simply be warned by a label on the record album cover or in some other way that the record contains sexually explicit or other questionable lyrics. We believe the lyrics of all the songs on questionable albums should be printed on the album's cover. From that moment on, whether to allow young people to listen to the album would become a matter of parental discretion.

If opponents think the labeling of records would prevent youngsters from obtaining them if they so desired, they really ought to stand outside a movie theatre showing "R" or "X" rated movies and count the number of underage youngsters who are sold tickets. Or they could monitor stores selling alcoholic beverages to see how many minors are able to make purchases.

Rating systems of any kind are only effective if the people directly responsible for enforcing the restrictions choose to follow through.

In the end, the real responsibility for enforcing any type of restrictive code falls to the parents and their judgment of what is and is not morally acceptable.

That's the only type of censorship that applies in this case. Labeling of records should be approved.

Another View:

Burdening the 'kids'

When President Reagan took office denouncing the national debt, it hadn't quite reached $1 trillion. In the next 12 months it will pass $2 trillion — $2,000,000,000,000 and still counting. The man who regularly decries "tax-and-spend" Democrats has, in less than five years, earned his Ph.D. in the art of borrow-and-spend. Under current conditions, borrow-and-spend is worse.

Reagan has just certified his dubious debt achievement by again asking Congress to raise the debt ceiling for the first time to more than $2 trillion. At some point the layman can no longer absorb zeros; the sheer monstrosity of these numbers is hard to grasp. As the president himself might say, trying to make the abstract graphic, two trillion $1 dollar bills laid end to end would reach to Halley's Comet and back — and then some.

Openings like that are an invitation for congressional Democrats to scorch the president. Who can blame them? And yet they too warrant blame, along with congressional Republicans. They all approved the Reagan budgets that have driven the debt so high.

In any case, sheer monstrosity isn't the tormenting problem. What's worrisome is (1) how it gets that way — by borrowing to finance continued huge deficits — and (2) the economic impact. Already this borrowing strains available credit, at home and abroad, keeps interest rates high and crimps private investment. Moreover, growing foreign investment in America's debt commits a slice of our future growth to paying them off. Finally, consider the self-inflating burden of interest payments on future budgets.

The president's litany of homely anecdotes used to include "a dream" — of the day when the government would start to reduce the debt "to prove to our kids that we're not going to dump it all on them." Well, he won't see that day, and the kids had better watch out. If he's disgusted by tax-and-spend, at least that's honest. It means society buys now but also pays now, in present taxes. Borrow-and-spend means we buy now and the kids pay later.

Besides, there is a present cost. Each borrowed billion adds roughly $100 million to interest. Think about that. Interest on the national debt alone will rise to almost $150 billion next year. In other words, almost all the money Washington borrows next year will be simply to pay interest on what's been borrowed before.

The president says the remedy is to cut more out of non-defense spending. But neither he nor Congress is willing to touch Social Security, even in reasonable ways, and there's little fat left in other domestic spending. Reagan's response is to denounce the debt, and borrow another $200 billion. One day, "our kids" will recognize who dumped what on whom.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1656, in Patuxent, Md., the first all-woman jury heard the case of a woman accused of murdering her child. The jurors voted to acquit.

In 1789, Congress authorized the office of postmaster-general.

In 1792, the French Republic was proclaimed.

In 1862, President Abraham Lincoln issued the preliminary Emancipation Proclamation, declaring that all slaves held in states in rebellion would be free as of Jan. 1, 1863.

In 1927, Gene Tunney successfully defended his heavyweight boxing title against Jack Dempsey in the famous "long-count" fight in Chicago.

In 1950, Omar N. Bradley was promoted to the rank of five-star general, joining Dwight D. Eisenhower, Douglas MacArthur, George Marshall and Henry H. "Hap" Arnold.

One year ago: In a news conference outside her home in New York City, Democratic vice-presidential candidate Geraldine A. Ferraro declared that "devastating" slurs against her appeared not to be random. And citing an NBC report that demonstrations might have been orchestrated by the White House, the congresswoman said if that were true, "Why don't they come out and fight like men?"

JACK ANDERSON

Report links two aircraft disasters

WASHINGTON — We're living in a frightening new world of mindless terrorism, when political or religious fanatics don't hesitate to wipe out whole plane loads of innocent people who have no connection with whatever "point" the deranged bombers are trying to make.

Jack Anderson

Two such atrocities occurred within an hour of each other last June 23, half a world apart: First, a bomb exploded in the cargo area of Tokyo's international airport, killing two baggage handlers; then, an Air India plane crashed in the Atlantic off Ireland after a midair explosion, killing all 329 aboard.

Although newspapers received calls claiming responsibility for the crash on behalf of Sikh separatist groups, moderate and even hard-line Sikh leaders disclaimed any connection. The Indian government, fearful of inciting new troubles between Sikh extremists and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, has played down the possibility of a terrorist plot — at least in public.

But an intelligence report concludes that if the two tragedies that day were not connected "the coincidences would put any B-grade movie from Hollywood, Bombay or Madras to shame." Our associates Donald Goldberg and Indy Badhwar obtained a copy of the report. Here are the most important points it makes:

— The Tokyo explosion occurred as baggage handlers were unloading the cargo of a Canadian Pacific Airlines jet that had just landed from Vancouver. The baggage was due to be transferred to several other flights, including an Air India flight to Bangkok.

The Air India plane that went down in the Atlantic was 45 minutes short of London on a flight from Toronto and Montreal.

— Just two weeks earlier, a person believed to be of Indian origin bought two tickets at the Canadian Pacific office in Vancouver. The tickets were paid for in cash, which the report notes was "by itself a strange act in credit card infested North America."

The names of the passengers given for the tickets were Singh, which all Sikh men include in their names.

— One of the tickets was for the flight from Vancouver to Toronto, with a requested connection to the Air India flight that never made it to London.

The other ticket was for the Canadian Pacific Vancouver-Tokyo flight in whose off-loaded baggage the bomb is believed to have exploded; it included a transfer to Air India's Tokyo-Bangkok flight, which was what was happening when the bomb went off two weeks later.

— The routine customer-contact telephone number in Vancouver was the same for both tickets. The number had been listed earlier in the name of a known supporter of the Sikh separatist movement.

— An "Indian-looking passenger" checked in for the Vancouver-Toronto flight and the connecting Air India flight to London. He was told that he was still on the waiting list for the Air India flight, but he insisted that his luggage be transferred to that flight anyway.

"After a long argument," the report states, "CP Air decides (presumably as an exercise in good customer relations) to accept the baggage for interline transfer to Air India at Toronto."

But the argumentative passenger never boarded the Canadian Pacific flight to Toronto nor, of course, the ill-fated Air India flight with which it connected.

— An "Indian-looking passenger" also checked in for the Canadian Pacific flight to Tokyo that day, and "casually" asked that his luggage be booked through to Bangkok — that is, automatically transferred to his Air India connecting flight at the Tokyo airport.

Like the earlier east-bound passenger, this one failed to board his plane, which deposited its deadly baggage in Tokyo a few hours later.

— The intelligence report suggests that explosives with timing devices were among the baggage checked through on both sets of tickets from Vancouver. Why did one bomb go off in an airport and the other in midair? The report speculates that both were intended to explode with less carnage in airport cargo areas in Tokyo and London — or, more sinisterly, that both were intended to blow up Air India planes in flight.

In either case, the lack of symmetry could be explained by a slight miscalculation in the setting of the timers.

— As possible evidence of the less barbarous intention — to have both bombs go off on the ground — the report notes that the doomed Air India flight to London was late leaving Montreal, and there were several "anxious calls" to the airport tower shortly after the plane did take off, wanting to know exactly when it had left.

"Could it be that these calls were made from or on behalf of someone who realized that the delayed departure of the flight might result in the aircraft blowing up in the air and not on the ground?" the report asks.

— The intelligence report considers several possible theories that would explain the two tragedies without linking them to the mystery man in Vancouver. But the report dismisses them all as unlikely or farfetched.

One theory, for example, was that the Air India bomb might have been planted on the plane long before it reached Toronto and took on the luggage transferred from Canadian Pacific's flight from Vancouver. The risk of flight schedule delays and repeated anti-sabotage checks would have been too great.

Nor would the bomb have been carried aboard in crew luggage; Air India crews were alerted to just such sabotage attempts, the report notes. "Other theories like structural failure, corrosion, etc., are gradually being played out," it concludes. "None of these scenarios explains the linkage between the (Air India) disaster and the simultaneous explosion" in Tokyo.

H. Rap Brown finds own 'radical' serenity

ATLANTA — From the sun-dappled park comes the background rhythm of urban life, the slap-slap-slap of basketballs on blacktop. Across the street, in a small convenience store, and in profound peace of mind, sits the proprietor, selling eggs and reading the Koran.

George F. Will

He is Jamil Abdullah Al-Amin. He is 41. He used to be H. Rap Brown. But that was long ago and, in a sense, in another country. It has been a winding and ascending path from his boyhood in Baton Rouge to Atlanta's west end. The hyperkinetic human torch of urban unrest, circa 1967, is, in 1985, enveloped in a strange serenity in a city known for its hum of energy. The man who was the hammer of Amerika, or at least of Cambridge, Md., has become a merchant, but with this distinction: He is, at last, really radical.

That radicalism was a short candle. It was rhetorical radicalism, elicited from young people by older flatterers and amplified by the media 18 years ago. Today, and for the long haul, Jamil is in inner emigration, out of his country and into Islam.

He burst upon the nation in the 1960s, when the social air was composed of (in the words of a Rex Stout character) "oxygen, nitrogen and odium." He succeeded Stokely Carmichael as head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, which soon changed the second word to "National." He said the sorts of things that then passed for trenchancy: "If you give me a gun I just might shoot Lady Bird." The only lasting legacy of his brief blast of prominence is an aphorism: "Violence is as American as cherry pie."

The 1960s were God's gift to conservatism, a decade dominated, not numerically but culturally, by overreachers. Those years were noisy with the voices of fundamentally frivolous people feigning seriousness, people convinced that sentiment is the measure of virtue, that rhetoric is the measure of sentiment and that morality is a state of mind: I feel, therefore I am. This radicalism helped to produce two significant effects: the "backlash" candidacy of George Wallace and the presidency of Richard Nixon.

"Many people," Jamil says, "reckon time from the '60s. Time stopped for them then. I don't miss the '60s." Now that Brown is someone else, and quite quiet, he is, at last, impressive. He is 6-feet 5-inches tall and gestures slowly as he speaks, pointing with fingers that should belong to a pianist.

There are many Muslims in his neighborhood. The store next door sells incense and Arab-style garments. Many of his customers, including a 3-year-old seeking six eggs, wear the kind of crocheted cap he wears beneath a gray cloth. His shelves are sparsely stocked, but his customers are buying only Cheerios and milk a few dollars worth at a time and, anyway, commerce is not the point. The Koran is the point — every point.

After inciting riots in Maryland and elsewhere and getting into a shoot-out with police in New York, he served five years in jail. But by 1971 he had converted and had concluded that the change that matters is the one the changer can control: the soul. Democracy is less a creed than a climate of opinion. His interest is in a creed. He prays five times a day and fasts during the month of Ramadan.

The transmission of religion to the rising generation is never easy and inoculating Muslim children in the middle of a metropolis against the temptations of American youth culture will be especially difficult. To that end he and neighbors (he has been chosen Iman of his community) are founding a religious school.

Kierkegaard said that Christianity is not glad tidings to the unserious because it seeks first to make them serious. Religion has done that for Jamil, who shows a flicker of levity only when asked if he goes to see the undistinguished Atlanta Hawks play basketball: "No, I go to see the other teams play."

Driving a Toyota van on one of the freeways that has made this city a symbol of Dixie transformed, Jamil reached behind him for a plastic carrying case, removes from it a cassette, slips it into the dashboard tape deck and the van is filled with the almost musical sound of passages from the Koran recited first in Arabic and then in English. This might seem like another example of America's amazing capacity for absorption. But to give Jamil his hard-won due, he has not been absorbed.

Members of Atlanta's large black middle class are driving all around him on the freeway. But H. Rap Brown, a boy from America's South, has become a man of a distant East.

ART BUCHWALD

What's in name? Maybe a heart attack!

As if there isn't enough trouble in the world, a British doctor by the name of Trevor Weston discovered not long ago that people are suffering from an "alphabet neurosis." He claims people whose last names begin with the final eight letters of the alphabet, S through Z, have three times as many heart attacks as those whose names begin with the letters A to R.

Art Buchwald

Dr. Weston says he believes the reason for it is that the people at the bottom of the alphabet are always at the bottom of the list, always waiting for their names to be called. Since they first face this in school, the S to Z children are filled with anxieties that carry through to their adult years.

I was very skeptical of Dr. Weston's theory, so I decided to see if there was any basis for it.

I went into a bar and asked a man sitting on a stool what his name was. He looked frightened. "Why me?"

"Don't be frightened, sir. I'm just taking a survey for my newspaper."

"Stevens," he said. "George Stevens."

"May I buy you a drink, Mr. Stevens?"

"I'm only drinking milk. I have a bad ulcer. It's killing me."

"That's very interesting. How did you get it?"

"Arkin and Blauvelt gave it to me. They're in my advertising agency, and they're out to get me."

"Why do you think they're out to get you?"

"They got Thomas, Unrum, Young and Vogel. I'm the only one left except for Zimbalest."

"Where's Zimbalest?" I asked.

"He had a heart attack, his third this year. God knows, I'll probably have one myself soon." He started biting his nails.

"I didn't mean to shake you up so," I said.

"It's not you. I'm trying to get the courage to go home. You see, I was up for a promotion today, and I thought I'd make vice president. Carstairs made it, Douglas made it, Eberhardt made it, Franklin made it, Gregory made it, Hofstatter made it, Iselin made it, Jacoby made it, King made it, Logan made it, Mankowitz made it, Nolan made it, O'Brien made it, Potter made it, Robertson made it, and that was it. They said there were no more VP positions open."

"That's a shame." I said.

"I guess I can't complain. Tait, Upjohn, Verick, Washington, Xavier, Yale and Ziegenthaler were let go."

"Were they given any reason?"

"Allenby, the president, said they couldn't stand the pressure. They were always blowing up in front of the clients. Ziegenthaler thought everyone was out to get him, and they were."

"If you're under so much pressure, why don't you quit?"

"I can't. My kids are in so much trouble in school, I need the job. Say, you're not a friend of Abernathy's, are you?"

"No, I'm not."

"That's good. I think it was Abernathy who gave me my second ulcer. Either him or Donovan. They killed Zilch, you know. Say, by the way, what kind of survey are you taking?" he asked.

"I'm trying to find out if the people whose last names begin with the letters S to Z are more insecure than those whose names start with A to R."

"Why, that's ridiculous!" Stevens said, as he swallowed three tranquilizers. "What will they think of next?"

Disasters don't always happen to 'the other guy'

Bill Modisett

Most people don't sit around worrying about being involved in a calamity — like the derailment in San Antonio last weekend that spilled hundreds of gallons of toxic sulfuric acid into the Medina River. Or the devastating earthquake in Mexico that crumbled buildings like matchboxes and killed hundreds of people.

It's probably good people don't, as a rule, spend all their waking hours lost in speculation about what to do should one of those disasters happen where they live.

But it's not wise to never think about potential disasters either.

Let your mind wander for just a few minutes to consider what might happen if an earthquake of major proportions occurred in or near Midland. Don't chuckle too much. I realize this region isn't known for major quakes the way that California is, for example. But are you aware that light quakes have been recorded in this area as recently as the late 1970s, specifically in the vicinity of Snyder?

No, that isn't a reason for concern but it indicates to me that there's reason enough to be prepared in the event of a major quake.

What would happen if a quake of the scope of the one that hit Mexico City struck Midland?

It would be an unbelievable disaster. I say that not because I don't have confidence in emergency preparedness officials but because history shows that there is never enough preparation to deal with emergencies. We all are guilty of living in a dream world when it comes to disaster. After all, it only happens to the other guy, doesn't it?

That's probably what a lot of Lubbock residents thought until May 11, 1970, when a storm classed by the Texas Almanac as the costliest tornado in Texas history virtually destroyed 15 square miles of the city — nearly a quarter of the city. It killed 26 people, injured 500 others and remade the city's image. The cost — in monetary damage — $135 million.

Wichita Falls residents may have been a little more skeptical of the it-always-happens-to-the-other-guy theory prior to April 10, 1979, when the worst single tornado in the state struck, killing 42, injuring 1,740 and leaving an estimated 20,000 people homeless.

Anyone who lived through either of those two storms will tell you that the emergency preparedness was woefully inadequate even though it was helpful.

Taken together, the Mexico City earthquake and the San Antonio derailment — while vastly different types of disasters — underscore the unpreparedness of modern man to deal with disasters.

I confess that I don't like to think about what to do if a tornado or earthquake or any other disaster strikes. Like most people, I have plenty of other things to occupy my attention on a daily basis.

But that doesn't mean it isn't wise to be prepared and I'm willing to admit that a little time spent getting ready for the unexpected is about the best time a person can spend.

I'm so ashamed of professional baseball players who are either admitting to or being convicted of illegal drug usage. What's there to respect and emulate in this country anymore?

Now, I'm not saying that the fact more and more baseball players are using drugs — cocaine or whatever — is not a result of the road this society has been stumbling down for more than two decades. It is related to our social mores or the lack thereof.

But I enjoyed playing baseball as a youngster and I know there are a lot of young guys and girls today who do, too. I even have a son too young to play who gets a real kick out of throwing around a tennis ball in the backyard.

And it makes me cringe to realize that there are so many professional athletes today who are examples for these young people who simply think they're responsible to no one.

Let me tell you what, brother. They're nothing to me any longer. I love baseball, but I'll give it up gladly before I'll bow down to the menace of illegal drugs.

My son and I will go camping instead of to a baseball game. I've yet to hear a pine tree admit to snorting cocaine.

Who would steal flowers from grave?

As the end of September approaches, I have a real burden.

I want to put flowers on my Dad's grave. But the last ones we put out were stolen!

I keep trying to imagine what kind of person steals from graves.

Now, these flowers were beautiful silk in a nice wicker basket.

We (myself, Mother, five sisters and brother) have for the past two and a half years watered, mowed and made sure there were pretty flowers on my Dad's and little brother's graves at all times. But if some ghoul is going to steal them, what's the point?

I don't believe it was the kids in Midland. I think it was someone who knew those were expensive flowers. If they only knew how much money and love went into those arrangements maybe they would leave them alone.

Is there not someone or some way to take care of the cemetery? To make sure people's gifts of love are left alone?

We called the police the last time and they were very nice and tried to be helpful, but what could they do?

Oh, we have flowers of sorts there now, but nothing special.

I would like to come home and help Mother put some special flowers out for a very special person.

So maybe whoever stole all of our flowers will read this and let us do what makes our family happy. Because we feel we are doing something for a Daddy that was and is much loved and still missed.

Tennis club thanks MISD for decision

The members and board of directors of Midland Tennis Club would like to commend the Midland Independent School District and the Midland School Board for their decision to build a new tennis facility near the Midland High School campus.

As taxpayers and concerned citizens, we are all aware of higher taxes and the need to cut unnecessary expenditures. We believe, however, the decision to build a new tennis facility, as opposed to undertaking another costly repair for approximately the same cost, is a prudent decision on the part of the school board.

We realize the school board's decision to build a new tennis facility now, as opposed to waiting possibly several years until the local economy improves, was not an easy decision. For years the present facility located on the Midland High campus, which has undergone several costly repairs in the past, has been woefully inadequate and a disgrace to Midland High School, as well as the City of Midland. Several of the courts are actually dangerous because of the holes and patches on the playing surface and large cracks caused by shifts in the subsurface. We believe that a decision to postpone the project would have needlessly penalized the students of Midland High.

The Midland Tennis Club is of course a "special interest group" comprised of approximately 350 tennis-playing members, many of which live in the Lee High area. As users of public tennis facilities throughout Midland, we believe that Midland High should have a facility which is at least comparable to the Lee High and Midland College facilities.

Although we will all have to pay for the project, we believe this type of undertaking is well worth the money and will return many benefits, not only to the students of Midland High, but to the entire City of Midland. We congratulate the Midland School Board on their foresighted decision.

Studies show seat belts do save lives

I became sick when I read the letters to the editor from Mr. Easterly and Mrs. Graham.

They scared me to death. They both should have to go with the ambulance to an accident or take a defensive driving course.

Mr. Easterly thinks government has gone too far passing the seat belt law and wants to have it repealed.

If people like him get the seat belt law repealed, the insurance companies are going to say if you are in an accident and you were not wearing your seat belt, we won't pay you one dime. They can do this and they will do this, state law or not.

There are some companies that insure their employees already that say if you are driving or riding in a company vehicle or your own car, on or off the job, and you are in an accident and are hurt or killed, we will not pay if you did not have that seat belt on.

Seat belts do save lives; that has been proven.

We are paying higher premiums because of the cost of bodily injuries and deaths in automobile accidents. Someone is making money and it isn't your insurance company or your government. It is your hospitals, doctors and funeral homes, and I know they don't want your money. Not that way.

Now Mrs. Graham and others like her who think only the highways are the place to wear a seat belt are at a greater risk riding around in town. You can get hurt or killed going 20 mph. The person in the other car may be going faster than 20 mph. He or she is the reason you should wear your seat belt. I am sure you think you are a safe driver but there is someone out there who isn't and they may be just down the street waiting for an accident.

I could go on and on with this but I hope I have made my point. If I haven't, I hope those who feel they don't need to wear their seat belts will take the time to go to a defensive driving course or visit a salvage yard the next time they are out riding around and look at the windshields of those cars. How many of them were broken by someone's head?

There is room to live inside a car and believe it or not you are safer inside your car with a seat belt on than you are being thrown from that car. Seat belts do save lives and money, so think about it the next time you are going just down the street. Buckle up. The life you save may be your own.

Gambians struggle bravely to survive

By DEBORAH DENISE DYER

Deborah Denise Dyer, now attending Boston College in Boston, has been a resident of Midland all her life.

I too am disappointed with the overall tone of my interview about my trip to West Africa this summer, not for the sake of myself and any forthcoming social judgments I will inevitably have to absorb, but because the Gambian people are dynamic, courageous, caring humans; and this did not come through in the article.

I learned that Gambia, as well as the other Sub-Saharan countries, is heading for disaster and would greatly benefit from Western money and knowledge that could "teach them to fish, instead of giving them a fish." However, I am afraid that will not happen if Americans continue to sit back on their idealistic, moral pedestals and pour money into useless projects.

We all know of the tons of food that was wasted in the Eastern African countries through poor storage, lack of transportation, and government corruption. But few know of the millions of dollars lost each year building storage bins where there is not food to be stored or buying tractors that become inoperable after two years because no spare parts are donated to allow for breakdowns, or building absurd luxuries like multimillion-dollar national stadiums. I spent my orientation in the hostel of one of these farcical, outrageous stadiums.

I resent the fact that my observations were written off as quick judgments from a naive 19-year-old. I was not shuffled off into a hotel nor did I spend my time on an exotic safari. I lived and worked with the Gambians under their conditions and under the same roof. We cooked together over a fire three times a day, dug latrines together, fished together, swatted flies together, played and laughed together, pumped water together, went to funerals together, danced together and got sick together. I don't need anyone's affirmation to believe that my trip was "real" and not surface. But I owe the people in Pengem a lot, in debt of my gained experience and joy. It is the intention of this letter to open the minds of Americans to their (the people of Pengem's) problems.

There aren't that many nice things to say about the state of living in Africa but it's not because the people aren't nice. How do you think you would react if your day was constituted of working in the fields with rusty, heavy implements, cooking for a family of nine over a fire with a few meager supplies such as rice and fish, or walking five miles so a mid-wife can mash some pellets of penicillin into unboiled water and stick it in a dirty coke bottle for your 2-week-old baby who has pneumonia? I can tell you it's not fun, but I learned to be fairly unmoved after just a few weeks; the Gambians have been at it a lifetime.

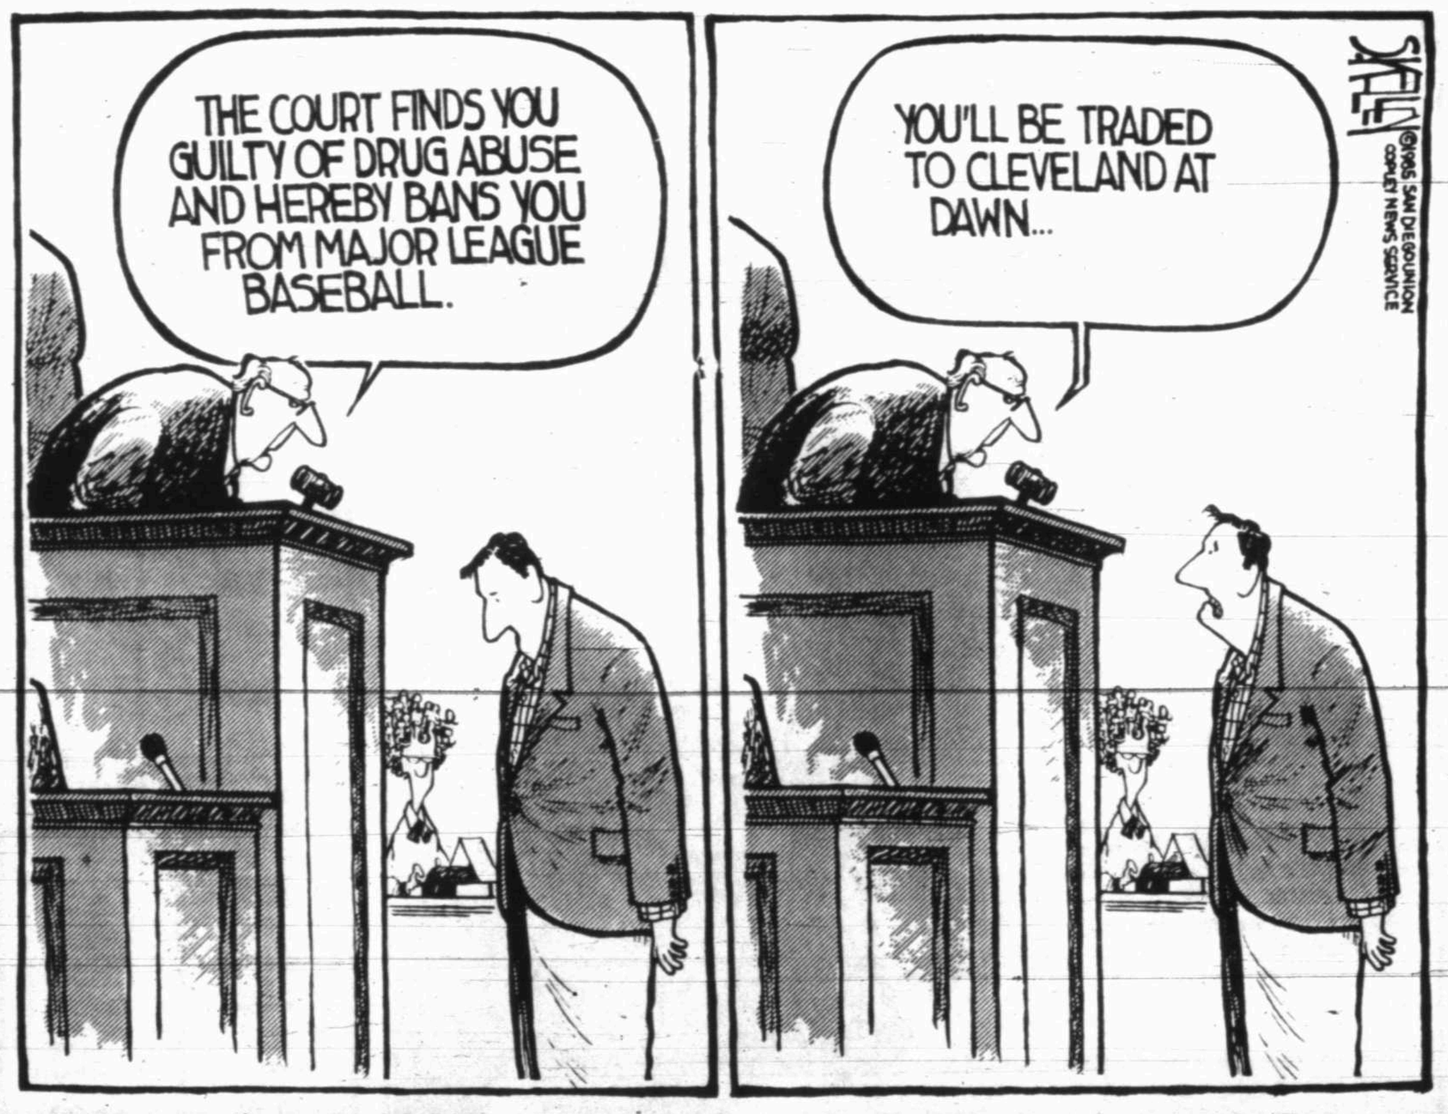

I mentioned in my interview that Africans aren't deeply emotional or idealistic people. Reason? They have neither the time nor the practical need to sit around and have charged feelings and discussions on subjects such as racism or birth control or how federal money is being spent. The one invaluable lesson I learned is, yes, my country may have problems but thank the dear Lord our system and standard of living allows me to try and work out those problems. Note, I said standard of living, not skin color or race.

If you are truly interested in making this world a better, more livable place, stop assuming that anyone who attempts to go against the pretty ideas of American society is an unthinking, uncaring deviant. Africa needs help, but knowledgeable help. Knowledge begins by having an open mind and then by both experiencing and reading about the knowledge you hope to obtain. We live in an amazingly bountiful country because of that one incredible right — the right to vote. However, we will eventually harm other countries as well as our own country if we don't stop making our decisions on the basis of a group of happy ideals.

We must be willing to make ourselves vulnerable by questioning everything and taking the time to open-mindedly research and think about issues that we feel are important.

Anyone genuinely concerned with Africa should take the time to read a book by David Lamb, The Africans. He is a journalist for the Los Angeles Times and traveled and lived in Sub-Saharan Africa from 1976-1980.

President rejects notion of SDI as bargaining chip

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan at his press conference Tuesday firmly rejected any notion of trading away our Strategic Defense Initiative for Soviet concessions in its offensive nuclear arsenal, which caused the U.S.S.R. to sputter angrily a day later.

The president, who will meet Soviet boss Mikhail Gorbachev in Geneva during late November, insisted that the SDI was not a "bargaining chip," but meant a great deal for the defense of the Western world.

When a questioner referred to the SDI as "Star Wars" the president looked pained at the remark. He has heard that shorthand reference before and always corrected the user as he did again Tuesday.

President Reagan asserted that he has ordered ongoing research for the development of the SDI. Should the research prove successful he would be willing to share the results with our allies and indeed with the Soviet Union.

The SDI is a defensive, non-nuclear weapon, as President Reagan has repeatedly pointed out. The Soviet Union already has conducted considerable SDI research and may well have a system of its own in place. The U.S.S.R. offered deep cuts in its nuclear arms stockpile but the real trouble there, which President Reagan emphasized, is verification, which the Soviets stubbornly refuse to allow.

President Reagan was in clear command of the proceedings and fielded all questions, ranging from summitry, arms limitation, South Africa to AIDS and protectionism against foreign imports. I thought it was one of his very best performances of which he has had many during his five years as president.

On the issue of protectionism, President Reagan was adamently opposed to the concept. He warned that it could well be a one-way journey to "economic disaster," and referred to the Smoot-Hawley Act of more than 50 years ago — protectionism at its worst — as a gigantic step headlong into the Great Depression.

Any form of protectionism, declared President Reagan, would be easily counterproductive. Other nations would inflict the same protectionist methods against American products. Therefore, free trade with certain warnings to nations practicing restrictive forms of trade was the only method by which to conduct economic affairs.

Historically, The Hearst Newspapers have been opposed to free trade since our standard of living is still the highest anywhere. But today, because of much altered conditions and wars we must, I believe, have a balanced program in that economic arena.

Another questioner tried to tax the president by asking his view of America as a "debtor nation." The president responded that we were not in any form so depressed but instead we have the world's most buoyant economy going, with inflation holding down at around four percent annually. He emphasized that foreigners were investing heavily in America bcause this is the most stable economy in the world.

The president recently wrote an article that appeared in Parade Magazine quoting Thomas Jefferson wishing for a constitutional clause to make an American government adhere to a balanced budget. Federal spending had gotten way out of hand even in Jefferson's time and has for nearly 200 years so rapidly increased that it has caused enormous deficiencies today for our national budget.

The president's questioners tried to zero in on the problems confronting South Africa. He was asked if he intended to apply even stricter sanctions than those imposed recently by executive order. No, replied the president, he did not intend to squeeze people and have those who could afford the least hurt the most.

Another question dealt with the nagging problem of AIDS and what President Reagan planned to do about it. The president showed noticeable compassion in his reply about children of school age attending or being forced from school because of the dread disease. He asserted that he had already allocated a considerable amount of money for research into the whole scope of the medical problem. As a parent he understood why other parents agonized over having their youngsters exposed in public schools to kids with AIDS, but the afflicted, he said, must be provided with a proper education and this is an issue that still remains unsolved.

But far and away the most significant portion of President Reagan's far-ranging press conference was the area in which he dealt with the SDI, arms control and the Soviet Union. He said unequivocally he hoped following his two-day summit meeting with Gorbachev that a new and conciliatory relationship would ensue.

American and Soviet negotiators have recently returned to Geneva for resumption of their nuclear arms talks. President Reagan did not foresee any significant disruption to the Americans and obviously could not speak for Gorbachev. The president believed that Gorbachev and he could get some solid work completed at their meetings. He did not want to raise anyone's hopes too high because summit accomplishments have frequently been deflated when genuine headway was not too great.

Nevertheless, President Reagan insisted that this meeting will be more than just another get-together session to size the other man up.

But as he observed with a wry grin, "I don't intend to give him a friendship ring."

Chalk one up for us.

Dedication set for new building

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

It's still a month away, but mark your calendar now for Midland College's campus-wide Open House, plus dedication ceremonies at the new Health Sciences Building. It's all scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 20.

The Open House will be from 1-6 p.m. with the dedication starting at 4:30 p.m. All the buildings are going to be open, with exhibits and demonstrations taking place in most of the instructional areas...plus entertainment and refreshments!

There are so many new features incorporated in the Health Science Building, visitors could spend more than an hour just touring that facility. There are nursing simulation labs, complete with hospital beds and patients, an x-ray lab, facilities for respiratory therapy, and the on-campus Child Development Center with its tiny chairs and all sorts of equipment for its small clients.

Everyone on campus is excited about the plans to show off all the many facilities and equipment and they want you to attend.

This will be the first college-wide open house since the campus was dedicated in October, 1975, soon after its opening. For the facilities constructed after that, there were separate ceremonies for Chaparral Center and for the Fine Arts Building.

• • •

Friday is the final day of the Todd Walker Photography Exhibition in the McCormick Gallery, which is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Walker is showing a large number of recent photo-lithographs that are stunning in their delicacy and beauty. He is recently-retired as Professor of Photography at the University of Arizona.

McCormick Gallery is open Sunday from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m. and Friday from 1-5 p.m. There's no admission charge.

• • •

Coming to the gallery next is the eighth annual Midland Arts Association's Juried Show, which is being co-sponsored by Midland College. Saturday is check-in day for all regional artists who wish to submit up to three entries.

Check-in hours are 10 a.m.-6 p.m. at the gallery. The show opens Tuesday and remains on display for a month.

Juror for this year's show is Thomas A. Livesay, assistant director of the Dallas Museum of Fine Art. Livesay is remaining to present a free lecture Monday, Sept. 30, at 10 a.m. in the Allison Building. His topic is "Texas Regionalism: Then and Now." The public is invited to attend his talk.

Reception and awards ceremony begins at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 1.

• • •

Special plaudits are due art instructor Warren Taylor, who serves as chairman of the McCormick Gallery exhibition committee and almost single-handedly arranges for most of the exhibits which are shown in the gallery. He also spends a lot of time physically putting up the shows and handling the receptions which open many of them.

• • •

Students have a chance to talk with representatives of various campus groups during the fall "club fair" Monday in the Student Center from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m. It's a chance for some of the specialized groups to tell others what they're doing, while some of the broader-based organizations seek new members.

And all the students have an opportunity to make a contribution to the Midland United Way and have a good time Thursday. That's when a dunking booth will feature some Midland College personalities who volunteered (?) to be dunked. Funds raised go to the UW.

• • •

Not so much fun for some are the audit groups who have been descending on the business office and looking into student record-keeping. The state auditors arrived last week to look over MC's procedures on student contact-hours, which is the basis on which state aid is allocated to the college, and expenditure of state funds.

And the college's auditing firm arrives this week to make its annual examination of all the bookkeeping procedures, funding, and expenditures.

However, the college gnerally receives extremely high marks for its accounting and record-keeping.

Book drive will benefit public library

From Staff Reports

A book drive to benefit the Midland County Public Library will be held from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday by the Friends of the Library.

The book drive will be at the Friends' Book Storehouse at 619 W. Wall Ave. In addition, the storehouse is open from 9 a.m. to noon each Wednesday for receiving books.

Mary Mann and Mary Hughes will be receiving the donated books and magazines, which will be included in the Friends' 18th Annual Book Sale Oct. 18-20 in the Midland County Exhibit Building.

"We can always use more books," said Mrs. Mann, who noted that between 25,000 and 30,000 hardback and paperback books usually are in the annual book sale.

Books of virtually every subject area in the fiction and non-fiction realms are needed for the sale, she noted.

Proceeds from the sale benefit the Midland County Public Library and are used to buy equipment and materials not provided for in the county budget. Last year, the Friends netted $11,816.98 on sales of $12,910.62. In 1983, the net was $10,439.90 on sales of $11,445.06.

Hardback books sell for 50 cents each, and paperback books and magazines sell for four for $1.

"It's people that really like books and like to read who come out to the sale," observed Mrs. Mann. "I just hope that we do have a good response to it."

The 1985 book sale will be held in the Midland County Exhibit Building off U.S. Highway 80 East from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 18; 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 19; and from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 21. Admission to the Early Bird Sale on opening night is $3 per book buff. After that, admission will be free.

The book sale will feature a trash-to-treasure garage-type sale sponsored by the Midland Genealogical Society.

"It's an opportunity for people to come and have a lot of fun," said John Deats, county librarian.

William Bennett calls for restoring American values in public schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary William J. Bennett urged conservative activists Saturday to join him in a fight to restore a "coherent moral vision" to America's public schools.

"We can get the values Americans share back into our classrooms," Bennett declared. "Those who claim we are now too diverse a nation, that we consist of too many competing convictions and interests to instill common values, are wrong."

He made the remarks in a speech prepared for delivery to leaders of Phyllis Schafly's Eagle Forum at a meeting here.

Bennett said that in contrast to the "true and time-honored" view that children must be taught what is right, "another view seems to dominate some elite segments of our society.

"This view holds that, in regard to moral and political matters, children must be taught that no one opinion should be judged more right or wrong than another."

Bennett, a former philosophy professor, said children should be taught such values as patriotism, self-discipline, thrift, honesty and "that there is a moral difference between the United States and the Soviet Union."

He told an anecdote of a suburban high school teacher who canvassed his classes and found only two students out of 53 who felt the United States had "a morally superior system to the Soviet Union."

Bennett is an ardent advocate of tuition tax credits and vouchers to give parents more choice between public and private schools, and a supporter of restoring voluntary prayer to public classrooms. He also has been a caustic critic of the recent Supreme Court ruling forbidding the use of public school teachers to conduct remedial classes inside parochial schools.

He told the Eagle Forum, "I understand why some may wish to walk away in frustration and anger from some (public) schools. But for our children's sake there is a fight to be fought for our public schools, and it is a worthwhile fight."

"Clearly, our public schools should not attempt to inculcate sectarian beliefs or support any one religion over another," he said, but they whould not be "places devoid of respect for religion, for the Judeo-Christian tradition or for the values that so clearly emerged from it."

"The same kind of thinking that has expelled expressions of religious belief from our classrooms is responsible for a failure to teach some of students any coherent moral vision," Bennett charged.

He attacked the lobbyists for groups "that profess to speak for the public schools" in Washington, saying they are out of step with the views he has heard in schools across the land.

"The education establishment is not the same thing as our public schools, and its members do not always speak either for or in the best interests of our public schools..." he said.

Servicemen complete basic training, receive promotions

Air National Guard Airman Thomas A. McReynolds, son of James V. McReynolds of Midland, and Vala A. Lorscher of Salt Lake City, Utah, has been assigned to Sheppard Air Force Base after completing Air Force basic training.

During the six weeks at Lackland Air Force Base, the airman studied the Air Force mission, organization and customs and received special training in human relations.

In addition, airmen who complete basic training earn credits toward an associate degree through the Community College of the Air Force.

The airman will now receive specialized instruction in the aircraft maintenance field.

Pvt. Ronald D. Whisnant, son of Dale L. Whisnant of Midland, and Pat J. Hawthrone of McCamey, has completed basic training at Fort Dix, N.J.

During his training, Whisnant received instruction in drill and ceremonies, weapons, map reading tactics, military courtesy, military justice, first aid, and Army history and traditions.

He is a 1978 graduate of Midland High School.

Jerry W. Kirby, son of Harold W. Kirby of Midland, has been promoted in the U.S. Air Force to the rank of master sergeant.

Kirby is a targets branch supervisor at Tyndall Air Force Base, Fla., with the 82nd Tactical Airlift Training Squadron.

Marine Lance Cpl. Juan Molina, son of Lupe O. Valdez of Lamesa, has been promoted to his present rank while serving with the 2nd Marine Division, Camp Lejeune, N.C.

A 1982 graduate of Lamesa High School, he joined the Marines in February 1983.

Navy Lt. Stephen L. Morgan, son of Bill R. and Jacqueline K. Morgan of Midland, recently returned from an extended deployment with Fighter Squadron-143.

During the seven-month deployment aboard the aircraft carrier USS Dwight D. Eisenhower, the squadron conducted normal training, flying 1,150 sorties and accumulating 2,300 hours of safe flying time. The ship made port calls at Athens, Greece; Haifa, Israel; Maples, Italy; Toulon, France; and Palma, Spain.

Morgan joined the Navy in May 1980.

Marine Pvt. Isaias Alvarez, son of Alonso and Lydia Alvarez of Andrews, has completed recruit training at Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego.

During the 11-week training cycle, Alvarez was taught the basics of battlefield survival. He was introduced to the typical daily routine that he will experience during his enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

He participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills, including first aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

Alvarez joined the Marine Corps in February 1985.

Navy Lt. Byron Brent Baker, son of Leonard and Norma Baker of Midland, recently received a one-year deferment to complete a year of family practice medicine at a Lubbock hospital. He is a recent graduate of the University of Texas Medical School at Houston.

Following a year of family practice, Baker is considering a speciality of under sea medicine.

Air Force Sgt. Darrel A. Thomasy, son of Frank and Laura Thomasy, of Midland, has arrived for duty in West Germany.

Thomasy, a security police specialist with the 66th Security Police Squadron, was previously assigned at Francis E. Warren Air Force Base, Wyo.

Capt. Roger D. McCleskey, son of Margaret McCleskey of Midland, has been awarded a master's degree by the University of Colorado in Boulder.

He studied under the Air Force Institute of Technology education program which provides selected Air Force members with resident education in scientific, engineering and other fields at civilian universitites.

Navy Seaman Recruit Fernando Rodriguez, son of Jesus and Janie Perez of Big Spring, has completed recruit training at Naval Training Center San Diego.

During Rodriguez's eight-week training cycle, he studied general military subjects designed to prepare him for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic fields.

Rodriguez's studies included seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in Physical Education and Hygiene.

A 1985 graduate of Big Spring High School, he joined the Navy in May 1985.

SKIN CANCER
Skin cancer is common among people over the age of 40. Skin cancer usually does not spread to other systems of the body if diagnosed and treated early. Exposure to the sun is a prime factor that promotes skin cancer. It is very important for one to use sun block agents preferably number 15 to screen out the sun's harmful rays and reduce the risk of skin cancer. Prolonged exposure to the sun also causes rough dry scaly areas that are pre cancerous, if these areas are left untreated they may develop into cancer. Any spot that scabs over, scales, bleeds, grows larger, or does not heal within a few weeks may signal a problem. If an existing mole enlarges suddenly, changes color, bleeds or has irregular border can be a sign of transformation to skin cancer. If you have any of these warning signals see your dermatologist at once.

Unique ranch-nursery-camp helps brain damaged people recover

By SHEILA ALLEE

AP Laserphoto

A massive greenhouse is just one of the facilities used by the Tangram Network in San Marcos to rehabilitate people who have suffered brain damage.

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Susan was a model and a college student with plans to become a corporate attorney when her car collided with an 18-wheel truck on a New Jersey highway.

Four years later, she tends plants in a nursery and dreams of the day she can be on her own again.

Susan lives and works at Tangram Rehabilitative Network, a unique ranch-nursery-camp setting designed to help brain-damaged people ease back into the mainstream of life.

Most of the 45 or so residents at Tangram Ranch have been victims of serious automobile accidents. Born with normal IQs and motor skills, they suffered mental impairment because of serious head trauma. Many have sustained physical disabilities from their accidents.

Susan's hip was crushed in December 1981 when her car was involved in a crash with an 18-wheeler.

Now she walks with a slight limp and says she has lost her sense of smell.

"I used to be a very go get 'em-type person," said Susan, who did not want her last name used because of pending litigation against the truck driver.

"I wanted to be a corporate lawyer, but that's not a reality now," she said.

Susan, 22, who says she hopes to attend commercial art school, is one of the more fortunate residents at Tangram.

Not all the others are as alert and articulate.

Each client pays $6,000 a month for room and board, a highly structured environment and the opportunity to learn a job skill.

Administrator David Seaton says Tangram is the first facility in the nation to provide a non-institutional, non-hospital setting for brain-damaged people.

"There needs to be an intermediate stage between hospitals and regular life," he said.

The network has four facilities — an isolated 155-acre camp and adjoining ranch southwest of San Marcos; a 15-acre commercial nursery just outside town and a halfway house in the city near Tangram headquarters.

The network is built on the foundations of self-reliance and accomplishment.

"The biggest difficulty people with head injuries have is they don't learn how to take care of themselves in hospitals," Seaton said. "They learn how to be taken care of."

Most people with severe brain injuries go through a critical stage in the hospital, then, once stabilized, are moved to a rehabilitative facility where they learn to walk, talk, eat and other basics.

Once they are functioning, they are discharged. And that's when their longterm problems begin, Seaton said.

"The biggest thing affected with head injuries is memory," he said. "These people may not remember what they had for breakfast. That affects your self confidence and creates frustration, then anger. These people experience explosive anger. You don't put up with 8-year-old behavior from a 22-year-old person."

Many end up on medication in psychiatric hospitals or in nursing homes. Some land in jail, Seaton said.

Because of more sophisticated medical technology, the number of brain injury survivors has mushroomed in the past 10 years.

Approximately 70,000 to 100,000 people survive serious brain trauma annually. Two-thirds of them are under 30, according to Joan Ligon of the National Head Injury Foundation.

This rapidly growing class of people has put a strain on families, who don't know how to deal with brain-injured relatives, and on insurance companies, who don't want to pay for longterm psychiatric or nursing home care.

Stanley Seaton, Seaton's father and a Dallas psychiatrist, started the Tangram network after a friend's son went through a serious head injury.

"He came up with the rural setting," Seaton said of his father. "It was a test, but it made sense."

Many new clients are sent to the Tangram camp, a quiet, isolated setting that has proven calming for many.

Clients who live at the ranch are assigned animals to feed, water and care for and have other tasks. They are "paid" with token money, used in turn to pay for room and board.

At the nursery, clients must fill out a job application, get hired, work an 8-to-5 day and learn job skills.

Clients who remain employed at the nursery or other jobs in San Marcos stay at the halfway house in town. Work, recreation and other activities are planned.

Retired military man tows gliders into sky

DENTON (AP) — You might say Norman Gore believes in simple pleasures.

With an airplane, he tows glider planes into the sky, watches them reach the thermal barrier and begin to glide. He lands, ready to take up another glider.

And he isn't paid a dime.

"My pay is seeing someone reach thermal and fly around," he said. "They go to the right, and I go to the left."

Gore is based at Bird-Dog Airport, seven miles west of Krum. Although he has been doing it only two years, Gore recently celebrated his 500th tow. Friends gave him a cake with the inscription, "Norman: 500 tows," and the significant tow was a successful one, he said.

Gore, 58, retired from the U.S. Air Force in 1968 after 22 years duty. He earned his pilot's license in 1947, after flight training at Hartlee Field in Denton. He was born in Denton, and has lived all over the world in military duty.

Upon retirement, he returned to Denton.

He keeps log books of all of his flights, and recalls several personal records. His busiest day included towing 15 gliders. The longest glide from which he towed endured two hours and 25 minutes. (The average glide is one hour.) The average height is 2,000 feet, however, Gore has seen gliders rise 3,000 feet.

Periodically, Gore, a member of the Soaring Society of America, will take a ride in a glider. He has glided four or five times, he said.

"I'm the person doing the towing," he said. "I need to know what it feels like at the end of the 200-foot tow line."

Gore tows on weekends and holidays, and for income in addition to his military benefits, he mows lawns during summer months.

"I mow, and I tow," he quipped.

It is a glider pilot's responsibilty to release the tow line, but the towing pilot can release it in case of an emergency.

"Every landing in a sail plane is a forced landing," he said.

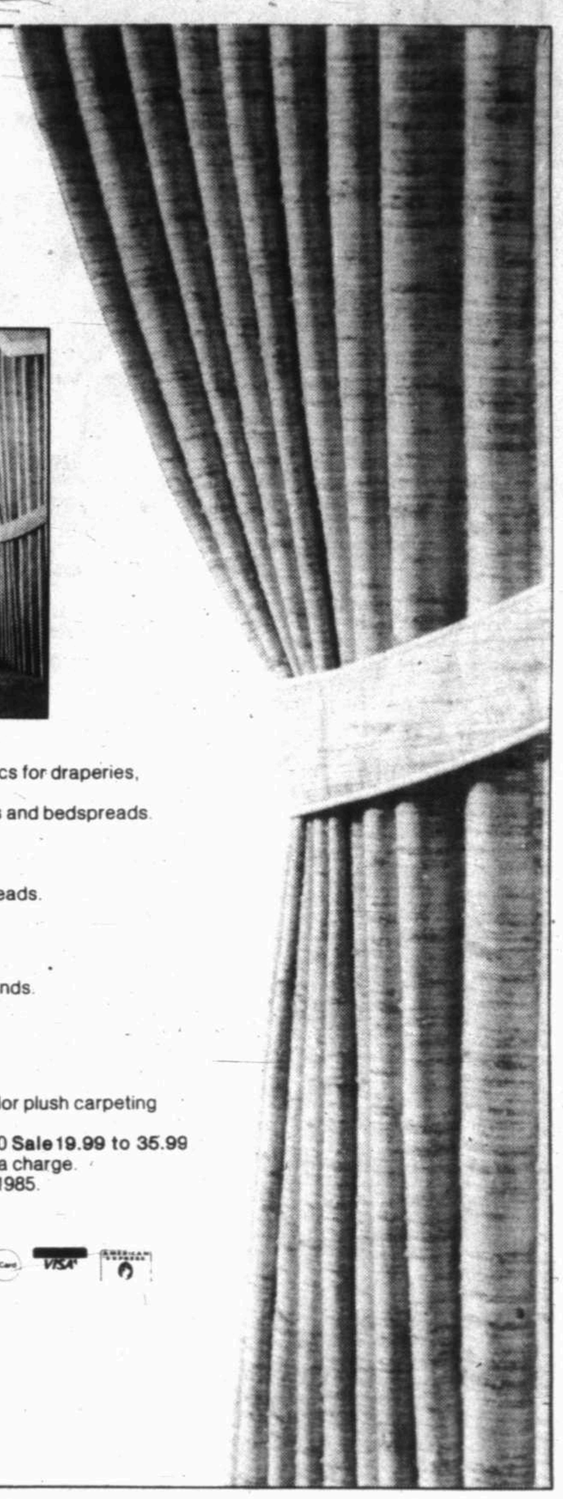

Gore said a head wind and a tail wind make a difference in the success of a glide and the length of time the glider will remain in the air. An average amount of time to lift a plane to gliding height is 15 minutes.

With more than 1,000 takeoffs and landings under his hat, does Norman Gore love to fly?

"That's an understatement," he said. "It's great to fly without pay. I enjoy seeing someone stay up."

Munich mayor taps beer barrel to start 175th Octoberfest

MUNICH, West Germany (DPA) — In a ritual carried out for the 175th time, Munich's Mayor Georg Kronawitter tapped a huge barrel of beer to the cheers of thousands here Saturday, formally opening the annual Octoberfest, the world's biggest beer fest.

A million chickens, 100 oxen and at least 1,560,000 gallons of beer will consumed during the next two weeks during what has become a major tourist event that pulls in the crowds from all over the world.

The first foaming mug was handed by Kronawitter to Bavarian state Prime Minister Franz Josef Strauss, the conservative Christian Social Union leader whose home base is Munich.

He proposed a traditional toast to Bavaria, signaling the start of revelry on the Theresienwiese, the traditional open site in central Munich.

The price for a 2 pint mug of beer at this year's festival is about $2.

HONOLULU (AP) — Mrs. Colombia, Astrid Elena De Navia, has been crowned Mrs. Woman of the World, beating out entrants from 32 other countries in the event's second annual competition.

Mrs. De Navia, a 29-year-old teacher and mother of two from Cali, Colombia, placed first Friday night.

Mrs. Costa Rica, Suzette Mendez, 22, of San Jose, was fist runner-up, followed in order by Mrs. Canada, Diane Vincent Marini, 29, of Toronto, and Mrs. America, Donna Russell, 31, of Brandon, Miss.

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) — Retired Army Gen. William C. Westmoreland said Saturday the negative attitude of the American public toward Vietnam veterans has reversed itself in the last three years.

The former commander of U.S. Westmoreland forces in Vietnam told the third annual Indiana reunion of Vietnam veterans that the change of perception began when veterans "converged on Washington on Veterans Day 1982 and staged a welcome-home for themselves — nobody else would do it.

"They dedicated a memorial to the dead without asking the government for a dime. They raised the funds to do it. The American people, I think, got a message from this display, and that was the turning point."

Westmoreland, citing surveys and studies, said 91 percent of the veterans are glad they served in Vietnam and that there is no difference in drug abuse between Vietnam veterans and people in the same age group who did not serve.

"The Vietnam veteran has been somewhat misjudged by our society," he said.

DETROIT (AP) — Cardinal Jozef Glemp, leader of the Catholic Church in Poland, arrived in Detroit Saturday to begin 3½ days of masses and meetings with the some of the city's 400,000 residents of Polish descent.

Glemp, the spiritual leader of Poland's 34 million Roman Catholics, was on the last leg of an eight-day visit to the United States, which began in Philadelphia. It is his first visit to this country. He had no public appearances scheduled Saturday.

In Washington Friday, Glemp steered clear of most controversy, but called on the Reagan administration to end sanctions against Poland because they hurt the general population.

'Horns hold on, 21-17

Akers still has named No. 1 QB

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

AUSTIN - Shuffling players in and out of the game more like a hockey team than a football team, the Texas Longhorns hung on for a 21-17 season-opening win over Missouri Saturday night at Memorial Stadium.

Texas coach Fred Akers kept the question of "Who's No. 1?" up in the air as he split the quarterbacking duties between junior Bret Stafford and senior Todd Dodge.

"I have no idea what will happen about whose going to start the next game. I'm just glad I got to start tonight," Stafford said. "Coach Akers told us last night of the plan (to start the second team offense). I think the main idea was to get something going outside."

It was Stafford that engineered the final two touchdown drives to preserve the Texas victory in front of 76,437 partisan fans.

Stafford was the surprise starter in an opening series of surprise moves. Akers started much of his second team offense in the first series, but interchanged them casually all night long. Stafford moved the ball well early, picking up 19 yards in the first two plays, both rollouts. Then Akers went to regular Todd Dodge and the Longhorn drive stalled.

But in its next possession, UT, led by Dodge, capitalized on an interception by left corner Stephen Braggs which gave the 'Horns the ball on the Missouri 28. A 26-yard gallop by sophomore Charles Hunter of Odessa High gave Texas its first score. Hunter finished with 112 yards in 15 carries in his collegiate debut after being red-shirted last season.

AKERS CONTINUED to substitute liberally throughout the game, using 55 players in the first period alone. The Longhorns once lined up to field a punt with an extra handful of players on the field. It was one of nine penalties for 81 yards on Texas.

"I am disappointed with the mistakes, especially in the kicking game and with the penalties," Akers said. "This was a good first game effort, though."

The penalty gave new life to a Tiger TD drive late in the opening period. Backup signal-caller Warren Seitz hit freshman walk-on Craig Lammers on a 33-yard crossing pattern to tie it at seven. Seitz was replacing starter Marlon Adler who sprained his back early in the first half.

But the Longhorns mounted drives of 56 and 45 yards in the second and third quarters to take a 21-7 lead. Missouri's Seitz came back with a 16-yard TD run of his own in the third quarter, and Tom Wheilhan added a 53-yard field goal with 5:19 remaining in the game to finish the scoring.

Seitz continued to pick at the Longhorn secondary, finding open receivers in every nook and cranny. Seitz was 12 of 27 for 183 yards.

But UT came up with the big plays, causing fumbles, interceptions and sacks, when the Tigers got close. The Longhorn defense accounted for seven sacks, two interceptions and a fumble recovery. Linebacker Ty Allert led the way with two-and-a-half sacks.

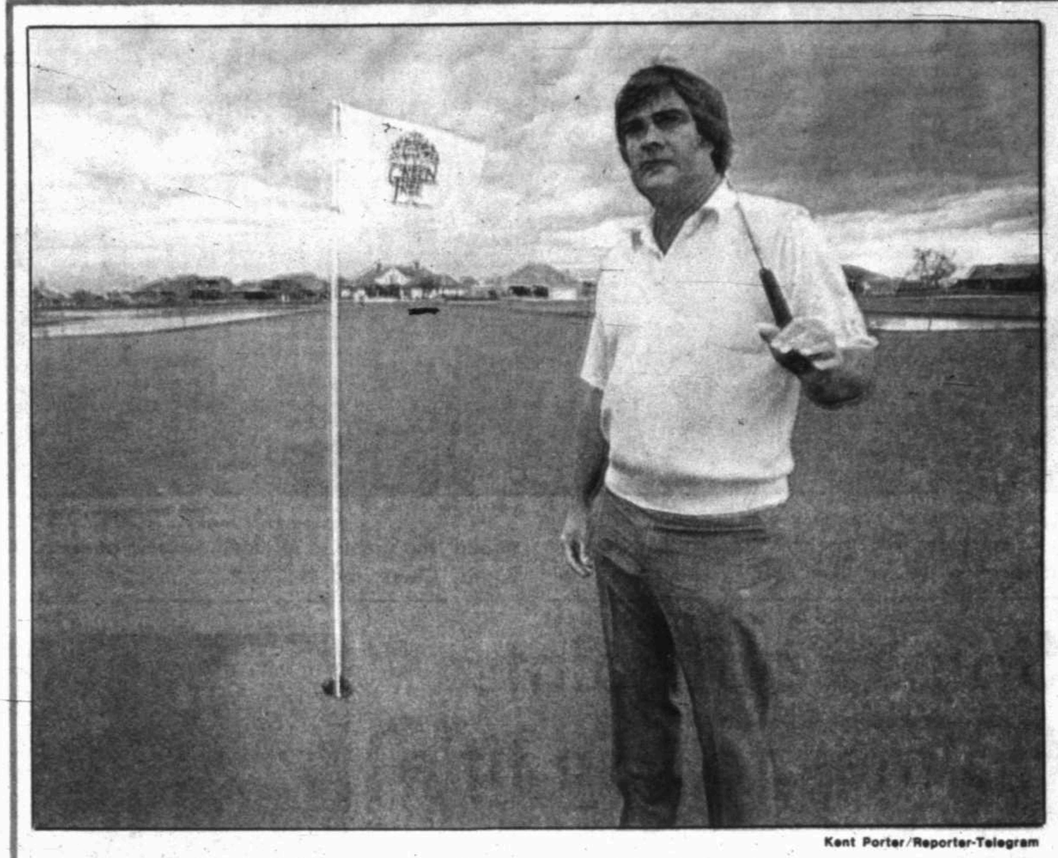

"We knew they had a young secondary and we tried to throw the ball on them. But the difference was their pass rush," said Seitz.

The loss, combined with a 27-23 loss to Northwestern last week, dropped Mizzou and first-year head coach Woody Widenhofer's record to 0-2 in the young season.

Akers got good mileage from both quarterbacks in the opener. Stafford ran for 76 yards in 10 carries while throwing 10 times for two completions and 23 yards. Dodge was three of 10 for 67 yards and nine yards on the ground.

The Longhorns, after their ninth straight win on opening day, travel to Stanford to face the Cardinals next Saturday.

UT also got a strong game from highly-touted freshman Eric Metcalf who ran back three punts for 80 yards and also caught a pass worth 47 yards to compile 162 yards in total offense.

Tech loses shutout in final minute

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK - As usual there was a last minute touchdown, but this time all it did was rob Texas Tech of a shutout.

The Raiders, last minute winners over New Mexico and Tulsa, had a 28-0 lead when North Texas struck on a 13-yard pass to avoid the idignity of a shutout before 33,494 fans here in Jones Stadium.

The 28-7 victory gives Tech a 3-0 record going into the SWC opener against Baylor next Saturday. The last time that happened was in 1976.

SO MANY Midlanders are on the Raiders this season, contributing to the success story, sometimes you have to pinch yourself to make sure its Jones Stadium and not Memorial Stadium.

Calvin Riggs, defensive end from Midland Lee, recovered a fumble on the game's first play at the North Texas 20. Former Lee back Isaac Garnett got it down to the one but had a helmet pop the ball out of his arms to abort the drive.

Moments later linebacker Michael Johnson made a big tackle to stop the Eagles from Denton and then little Tyrone Thurman made the big catch that kept alive Midland Lee's, er Tech's, first touchdown drive.

Of course, it wasn't an all Midland show. Everybody knows all about Aaron Keesee, the sophomore quarterback from Ballinger, but a third period injury gave freshman Travis Price from Wink a chance to strut his stuff and he made the most of it.

But after the harrowing escapes of the last two weeks, this win was almost routine. In fact, with Tech ahead 14-0 and controlling the ball with its relentless ground game two thirds of the time, the crowd appeared to be stifling a yawn or two as halftime approached.

That's when the 5-3, 130-pound Thurman woke 'em up with a scintillating 41-yard punt return that was a step from going all the way.

Thurman took the ball on the 19 and cut up the middle. "I had to read one block, but I couldn't get away from 87 (Tom Middaugh). He got me from the side."

Still, Thurman's whirling dervish spin almost broke it. Despite great field position, there wasn't enough time to take advantage of it before intermission.

IN THIS win 12 backs carried the ball out of Tech's Flexbone with Garnett's 60 yards in 12 carries the top effort by a running back.

"In this offense, we use the fullback up the middle to open up the wide stuff and the option," Garrett said.

And that's what Price made the most of to option his way for a game-high 85 yards in 11 carries during a relatively brief appearance.

Keesee engineered first half touchdown drives of 48 yards in 12 plays, Gerald Bean going in from the one, and then a 63-yarder in 12 plays, the scoring coming on his soft pass to Timmy Smith for 11 yards.

A 15-yard holding penalty threatened to wipe out the first threat, but clutchman Thurman came up with the big third and lone catch from Keesee to make it fourth and one at the NTSU 34.

"It was an out pass pattern. I'm supposed to go down 10 yards and cut for the sidelines, but this time I went deeper so we'd make the first down," he explained.

Baylor stuns USC

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Tom Muecke ran for one touchdown and threw for another Saturday night, then unranked Baylor made a goal-line stand to hold on and upset third-ranked Southern Cal 20-13.

The Bears, who took the lead for keeps in the second quarter, stopped the Trojans after they moved to the Baylor 7-yard line with 3:23 remaining.

Four running plays — one by quarterback Sean Salisbury and three by tailback Ryan Knight — got Southern Cal no closer than the 3-yard line. Baylor then took over and ran out the final minute of the clock.

Muecke, a senior who shares the quarterbacking chores with junior Cody Carlson, scored on a 6-yard keeper early in the second quarter to tie the game 7-7, then threw a 22-yard scoring pass to Derrick McAdoo to give the Bears a 17-7 lead in the third period.

Baylor's other scores came on a pair of Terry Syler field goals, one of 39 yards in the second quarter, and another of 33 in the final period.

Baylor is now 2-1, while the Trojans are 1-1.

SWC Roundup

Seven Midlanders trying for Horned Frog stardom

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

FORT WORTH - Texas Christian University the Midland East Campus? Texas Tech Midland North? Not exactly, but with the number of football players coming out of the Tall City and into the two Southwest Conference schools, it almost seems that way.

At TCU this year, there are seven former Midlanders working for their chance at someday becoming a star Horned Frog. With recent developments in athletic improprieties, that day may come sooner than some expect.

As of the TCU opener with Tulane, only Midland High grad Chuck Dickenson has gained a playing role, but he is the elder statesman of the group, eligibility-wise, and still has three seasons ahead of him.

Dickenson, a walk-on tight end last year, earned a role as a specialty teams player and, as a result, a football letter.

Last year, Dickenson recorded 10 special teams stops and forced two turnovers, including a fake punt interception against Utah State. He is also studying the other side of the ball, moving to linebacker from the tight end postion he played in high school.

"This is my second year doing specialty teams and as a backup linebacker," said Dickenson. "I'm helping out all I can there. With the injuries we've had the last couple of weeks, I've been playing a lot of inside and outside linebacker.

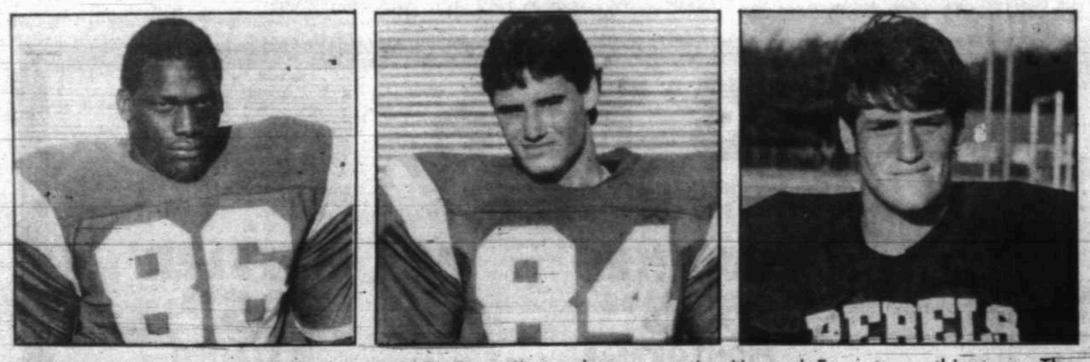

"I was playing flex end (a form of tight end in the TCU offense) when I first came here," continued Dickenson. "In spring training of my first year here we lacked depth at linebacker and they volunteered me, and I agreed, to linebacker and I've been there ever since."

Dickenson, at 6-foot-2, 227 pounds, believes linebacker is better suited to his capabilites than tight end.

"I'm about the right size and speed for linebacker and I was a little slow for offense," he added.

And, as to his role on specialty squads, Dickenson said, "They give me a chance to get in the game and learn the system. I might not get in as a linebacker."

ALONG WITH Dickenson, TCU has five other former MHS players and two from Midland Lee. Some are scholarship players and others, like Dickenson, are walk-ons trying to earn their scholarships. Two of the players, Lee's Coy Stewart and Midland High's Darrell Davis, both with scholarships, were two of the highest rated athletes to come out of Midland in the past two years.

TCU scholarship football players (L-R) Darrell Davis and Allan Foret from Midland High and Coy Stewart from Lee are three of seven Tall City players on the Horned Frog team this year. The others are: Chuck Dickenson, Jeff Daily and James Bostwick from MHS and Scott Ackroyd from Lee.

Allan Foret is a third scholarship player from Midland and also received a lot of high regard among recruiters. Along with TCU, Foret was offered full rides from LSU, California and BYU.

Stewart, who has been plagued by knee problems, has yet to play for TCU. Last year, the 246-pound former All-Stater sat out the season as a redshirt and this year, as a freshman, has yet to crack into the lineup. But, the Horned Frogs and Stewart still have high hopes for his future.

Stewart is a young sophomore — athletically he's still a freshman — and won't turn 19 until Sept. 25. That leaves a lot of time to add to his size and abilities as an offensive guard.

According to the TCU press guide, Stewart will "most likely be in a role to offer backup support this season." The Horned Frogs consider Stewart one of the "bonafide plums" from the 1983 high school football class.

DAVIS FOUND out the difference between high school and college football quickly and in a rough way. During workouts this fall, the 242-pound linebacker fractured his thumb in a practice session and was still in a cast and didn't play during the TCU-Tulane game.

"I fell back on it and broke my thumb," said Davis. "I'll be back Monday and I'll be a happy man."

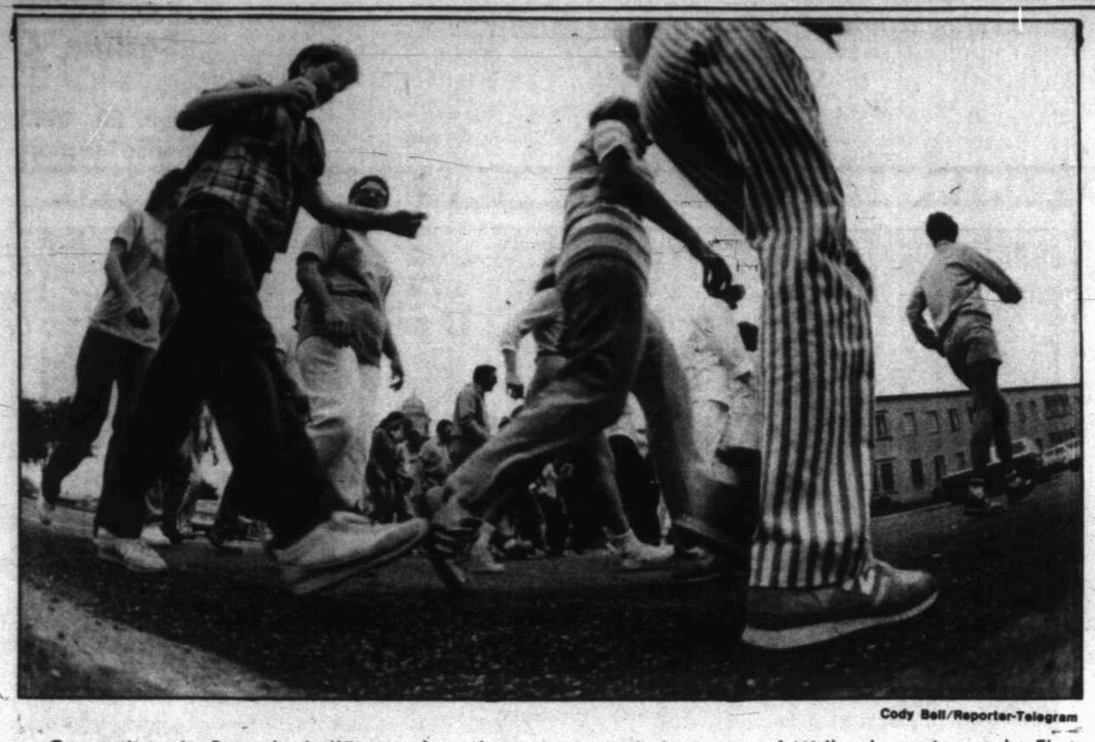

And, what else did the second-team All-Stater in high school discover about college?

"I learned that your not going to win it by yourself in college," said Davis. "You've got to have a love for your teammates and play together, every quarter. High school is all individual efforts."

Foret had some thoughts along a similar line, saying, "In high school you can be one of the better athletes but here everybody is as good, or better. But, I like it a lot. I'm having a good time."

Foret doesn't expect to break into the TCU lineup right away, saying "it will take awhile before I get to play here because they have a lot of good people ahead of me. Mostly, I'm here for the academics. I don't mind not playing and hopefully my day will come."

Course ready for pros

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

It's almost as though Green Tree Country Club and the weatherman conspired.

No sooner was the course fertilized than the rains came. "The course couldn't be in better shape for the Monday's Pro-Am benefit," declares GTCC Pro Larry Bishop. "Our timing was perfect."

Monday is the day some 30 name pros come to Midland to participate in the High Sky Children's Ranch benefit, an 18-hole tournament in which $50,000 in prize money will be offered.

The pros will be stopping in Midland between the Southwestern Classic, which ends today in Abilene, and the Texas Open in San Antonio.

It's the pros travel day, but benefits such as this are popular among the golfers. The TPA's slogan is "the winning money winner on the tour is charity."

Some of the names on the tour who are expected here, although there are always last minute changes, subtractions and additions, are John Adams, Paul Azinger, Ronnie Black, Woody Blackburn, Mark Brooks, Rex Caldwell, Russ Cochran, Frank Conner, Charles Coody, Bruce Crampton, Dale Douglas, Danny Edwards, Brad Faxon, Ed Fiori, Bill Glasson, Mark Hayes, Joe Inman, Barry Jackel, Tom Kite, Jim Nelford, Mark Pheil, Tom Purtzer, Ron Streck, Doug Tewell, Leonard Thompson and Willie Wood.

Also coming back to West Texas is former Midland CC assistant Bobby Nichols, the former PGA champion who struck out on the tour from Midland.

Nichols, a native of Kentucky, went to Texas A&M on a golf scholarship in the 1950s. He won the PGA in 1964 and his top money-making year was 1974 when he earned $124,747.

Nichols now picks his tour spots and resides in Naples, Fla., and plays out of Fiddlesticks CC in Fort Myers, Fla.

Bruce Crampton's appearance here also will stir some memories. The veteran from Syndey, Aus., has amassed over $1 million in career earnings and boasts a long list of tournament firsts. He even has a lake named after him, although he'd rather not. It's one of those things he'd as soon forget.

The lake is in back of the 18th green at Colonial in Fort Worth and his impromptu dip one year cost him the championship, hence Crampton's Lake.

Like Nichols, Crampton, who lists football as one of his favorite sports, picks his tournaments nowadays.

Green Tree's Tom Kite will also be making one of his frequent trips to Midland. One of the goals of the former University of Texas star is to win one of the Big Ones.

That's about the only thing he hasn't done. He's one of the steadiest scorers and biggest money winners on the tour and 1981 is a classic illustration. That was the year he won the Arnold Palmer Award as the leading money winner and also won the Vardon Trophy for his 69.80 stroke average. Consistent? He compiled 21 top 10 finishes in 26 starts.

Last year, he was fifth on the money earnings list with $348,640 and in 1982 he was third with $341,081. With figures like that, 1983 had to be an off year, he won $257,066 and finished ninth on the tour.

Spinks outpoints Holmes to win title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Michael Spinks made boxing history Saturday night by outpointing previously unbeaten Larry Holmes to become the first light-heavyweight champion to win the heavyweight title.

Spinks' unanimous 15-round decision ruined the 35-year-old Holmes' attempt to tie Rocky Marciano's record of 49 victories without a loss.

Spinks, who weighed 200 pounds, 25 over the light-heavyweight class limit, threw punches in flurries and never let Holmes get him in serious trouble throughout the fight. In doing so, he did what nine previous light-heavyweight champions or former champions couldn't do in the heavyweight division.

A full house in an 11,192 seat outdoor arena at the Riveria Hotel and Casino let out a wild roar as the decision was announced making Spinks the International Boxing Federation champion. Diane Holmes sat quietly weeping beneath her husband's corner.

Judges Dave Moretti and Harold Lederman each scored it 143-142 for the 29-year-old Spinks. Judge Lawrence Wallace scored it 145-142 for Spinks.

The AP favored Holmes 144-141.

Immediately after bout, Holmes, saying he "had nothing to prove," said he wouldn't fight again.

Spinks, 6-foot-2½, seemed to waste a lot of time moving back and forth in several rounds, but the judges obviously thought he did enough.

When he did elect to fight, Spinks threw more punches than Holmes and did land several of them. Holmes, looking every bit his 35 years, never really got into his rhythm, but he did score well with jabs and was effective to the body.

Following the major upset Holmes said quietly, "I had my time."

The defeat came in his 22nd world title bout. Now he will not become the second heavyweight champion to retire undefeated.

Holmes pressed throughout but didn't throw his right hand as much as his corner wanted him to. When he did throw it, it was often to the body.

Spinks threw a lot of jabs and never allowed Holmes to trap him except on two or three occasions. One of them was in the 15th round when Holmes, 221½, shook Spinks with a left-right and right-left along the ropes, but Spinks escaped.

"He threw more effective punches," Moretti said of Spinks.

"Michael used very, very good ring generalship," said Lederman. "Michael was the ring general.

"I had it even going into the 15th and Michael won the 15th."

Spinks did land a couple of good flurries after Holmes shook him early in the round.

Of the added weight, Spinks said, "I didn't lose any speed, I was hitting faster at the end than the beginning."

Neither fighter was ever close to going down and neither was marked badly.

Spinks did complain on several occasions that Holmes was thumbing him with the left hand.

The victory for the undisputed light-heavyweight champion gave him a 28-0 record with 19 knockouts and earned him a permanent place in boxing legend.

The younger brother of former heavyweight champion Leon Spinks did what some of the great fighters in the light-heavyweight division could not do. Men like Georges Carpentier, Billy Conn, Archie Moore and Bob Foster.

Spinks, a 6-1 underdog, also avenged his brother's three-round knockout loss to Holmes in 1981.

Spinks' victory came on the 30th anniversary of Marciano's ninth-round knockout of Moore in what was Marciano's last fight.

Holmes had said before the fight that he wanted to run his record to 50-0 before the year was out and then retire.

"I want to close the book by the end of the year," said Holmes.

"I'm the champ, I'm the champ," shouted Spinks in the ring.

Then he also said: "This was dedicated to the love I lost, wherever she may be."

He was referring to his 4-year-old daughter who died in an auto crash four months before Spinks became the undisputed light-heavyweight champion with a 15-round decisison over Dwight Muhammad Qawi on March 18, 1983.

Midland Lee's Michelle Lance sends the ball over the net in District 4-5A action against Abilene Cooper Saturday. Lee won the match to improve their league record to 1-1.

Lee slips by Cooper for first 4-5A victory

From Staff Reports

Midland Lee's girls volleyball team came from behind at the Lee gym Saturday afternoon to take a 13-15, 17-15, 17-15 victory over Abilene Cooper in a District 4-5A matchup.

Lee is now 1-1 after losing its district opener to defending volleyball champion San Angelo last Tuesday. Cooper is also 1-1 after the loss.

"It was a good overall performance for the girls," noted Lee volleyball coach Janice Baulch. "It was a very long game. We started at 2 p.m. with the JV and didn't finish the varsity match until after 5 p.m.

"We haven't been playing very well as a team recently, but the girls fought hard for this one. They were working the relays and sets very well. It was a good win for us since it was a team effort. That's what we have been lacking."

The serving of Shelly Jensen was a high spot for the Rebels while the front line play of Tina Swinney, Michelle Lance, Leslie Holt and Ann Del Llano kept Cooper at bay time after time.

Lee had its back to the wall after losing a tought 13-15 set to start the match, but the Rebels rallied with two straight set victories to take the match, but it wasn't easy, going into overtime each time before pulling out identical 17-15 margins.

The Rebels now take its new found attack to Odessa Permian next Tuesday. Permian fell to 0-2 in a loss to 2-0 Big Spring Saturday.

In other Saturday action, Midland High dropped a decision to Abilene High to fall to 0-2 after losing the opener to Big Spring. Abilene High, San Angelo and Big Spring start league play with perfect 2-0 marks. San Angelo won a match against Odessa High Saturday. OHS, MHS and Permian are all 0-2.

MHS will host Odessa High Tuesday night at the MHS gym in a game where one of the teams will escape the District 4-5A volleyball basement.

TCU

The 182-pound wide receiver is happy to have a lot of Tall City company with him. "It makes it a lot easier on us knowing other people here."

AMONG THE walk-on candidates for future Horned Frog fame are Midland High's Jeff Daily and James Bostwick and Midland Lee's Scott Ackroyd. All three are looking for roles on the TCU offense.

Bostwick and Daily are both linemen, tackle and center respectively, while Ackroyd is trying for running back.

"It's real rough, a big change from high school" said Daily and noted the big difference is "mostly the size. Some of these guys weigh around 300 pounds. It's a lot more physical.

"When I came here, they had me at defensive end," continued Daily. "I played on the offensive line in high school. Here, I'm still about 20 pounds shy of the proper playing weight. I'll just try and stick with it."

Ackroyd ended up at TCU after a brief time in prep school. He wanted to come back home.

"I moved to Midland when I was a junior right before spring training," said Ackroyd. "I had some small college offers back East but I wanted to go home. I went to prep school for a year and kind of got home sick."

And, about TCU, Ackroyd said, "It's up and down, up and down."

MOVING OUTSIDE the Midland city limits, there is one other West Texas player on the TCU roster this year, McCamey's James Kennedy. As a near-blue chipper, Kennedy received a scholarship from TCU and agrees with the Tall City players on the subject of college football.

"I love it. It's a lot different than high school, a lot more fun too," said Kennedy. "It's a whole new experience."

The reason Kennedy is at TCU may be the same as the rest of the team, especially now that he's kicked six of the top players off the squad because of illegally received payments from an alumni booster.

"I just like Coach (Jim) Wacker and the spirit of all the people here. It's a great program to be in."

TECH

Tech scored in both the third and fourth quarters with Ansel Cole cashing in from the one after a 73-yard drive with the second half kick off. Garnett contributed runs of 10 and seven yards.

But it was the final drive on which Price made his impression. "I was supposed to come in for the third series of the game. I was really nervous. In the second half I got in when Aaron got hurt. That appearance wasn't scheduled."

After Ervin Farris got the drive started with a 22 yard run, Price reeled off gains of 20, 16, 11 and seven yards to put the Raiders in the end zone with 12:35 left in the game, wrapping up a 85-yard strike in nine plays.

There's no doubt about Price's running ability, but can he pass?

"We had two passes called. One turned into an option, the other went for a completion and a short gain."

Price, who played in the Wing T at Wink, says, "We really didn't pass that much. Maybe 15 times a game."

North Texas, which held Oklahoma State to a 10-9 win last week, scored seven seconds from the end when quarterback Mike Rhone passed 13 yards to Greg Lee in the end zone. The quickie drive covered 53 yards in three plays, Rhone hitting tight end Stanley Cook for 40.

As Keesee put it, "We knew we had to take charge early. They are a team that will get tougher as the game wears on if you don't establish yourself early."

"We just didn't play," said NTSU Coach Corky Nelson, " But Tech had had a lot to do with that. They are so big and strong that they really make it tough to get anything going offensively."

Midland freshmen drop four

From Staff Reports

Midland's freshmen football teams had a rough weekend in matchups with Odessa teams, losing all four encounters.

On Thursday, Odessa Ector won a 13-7 win over Lee White while Bonham thumped Midland Gold by a 28-6 margin. On Saturday, Hood slipped past Lee Maroon by a 14-12 margin while Crockett stung Midland Purple in an 18-0 shutout. In the only other matchup, Nimitz defeated Bowie 18-8 in an all-Odessa contest.

Things turned out a little better for Midland's eighth grade teams in the Midland-Odessa Conference. Alamo won a 20-6 decision over Hood while Goddard blanked Crockett 13-0. San Jacinto suffered a 6-0 loss to Bonham. The Ector-Bowie game was not available.

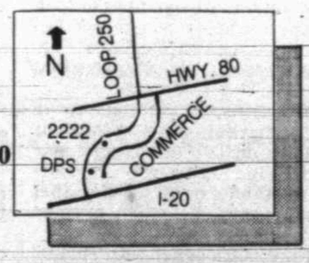

In the National Conference, Alamo Scarlet took a 14-6 victory over Goddard Red while Alamo Grey ran to a 22-0 win over San Jacinto Green. Goddard White took a 21-0 win over San Jacinto White.

TALL CITY BOWLING

Midlanders make 300 history

By JOHN DENTON

This spring in the Midland Women's City Bowling tournament, Sandy Crenshaw posted the first of many Midland bowling records, becoming the first Midland woman to roll a perfect game.

In recent weeks, three other Midlanders have accomplished the same feat, including firsts of their own. In late August, Lonnie Truelove matched Crenshaw's effort with his first 300 game and last Monday, two more Tall City bowlers did the same — one game apart.

Bowling in the Monday Nite Scratch Trio, Bill Theobald rolled 12 straight pocket hit strikes for his 300. One game later, Brent Gallagher was also on his mark, hitting the one-three 12 consecutive times for the perfect score. The Theobald-Gallagher combination was not only the first pair of 300s ever in Midland on the same night, but also the first double in the same league.

But that's not the only first recorded. The Truelove-Theobald 300s is also the first brother act to achieve perfection in Midland.

Perfection isn't new to the Truelove-Theobald family. Approximately 20 years ago Joe Truelove rolled a 300 in a tournament, but unlike the recent efforts, his 300 was not sanctioned by the American Bowling Congress.

Gallagher, bowling in a four-game league, came within five pins of a second personal bowling milestone. His first three games of the night, 259-236-300, totaled 795.

Special Events: The Tall City doubles tournament will be held Oct. 12-13 and is co-sponsored by Village Lincoln-Mercury, who will give away a 1986 Mercury Cougar for the first 300 shot in the tournament.

The best bowlers from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico will compete for $1500 first prize. Spectators are welcome to come and watch the bowling. Entry deadline is midnight, Oct. 7. For entry information, call Tall City Lanes at 694-9521.

Strike Pot winners in Saturday Night Bonanza were Bob Fielding, $171.50; Terry Donathan, $64.50; Bobby Winn, $44.25; Doyle Park, $25; Les Preece, $23; and Gary Donathan, $18.50.

Fire valuable in land control

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Fire is becoming a valuable means of land and animal management, according to Dr. Henry W. Wright of Texas Tech research.

Wright. who began working with fire management 18 years ago, claims, "My students and I found in 1968 that we could burn down standing mesquite. This was a major breakthrough for ranchers because even dead brush is a major obstacle in gathering and handling livestock.

"Because fire raises soil temperature, bacteri are able to increase 10 to 20 fold. Tl e bacteria breaks down soil organic matter and increases supply of nitrogen, which will increase grass production."

Writing in the Texas Techsan alumni magazine, Dr. Wright revealed his findings on the effect burning can have on wildfire populations.

Because bobwhite, deer, quail and turkey depend on mesquite and other brush along river bottom areas as cover,roots and winter feeding should be preserved, Wright said.

"Hunting leases in Texas have become extremely profitable for many ranchers. While burning can make it easier for the hunter to work his dogs and get to crippled birds, the burning can also reduce the amount of wildlife available. So we need to look at all the consequences and try to strike an even balance."

VIC KEYS of Big Spring weighed in the big stringer of the day in the fourth annual Colorado City Bass Club Open tournament. Some 116 anglers signed up, but Key was the only one who could catch three fish large enough to meet the minimum requirement of 14 inches and only 33 had any fish to weigh in at all.

Midland's T.E. Armstrong tied for fifth with four pounds, five ounces...

Striped bass in the intermediate to large range were striking at Lake Spence and white bass and channel catfish were supplying some action. Jean Emerson, Big Spring, hooked five stripers, the largest 13 pounds, while Lloyd Cox, Odessa, was showing off a 15-pounder.

At Lake J.B. Thomas, Geneva McKinley, Snyder, took a six pound yellow catfish off her rod and a 12-pounder off the trotline. Blue and yellow cats were taking all kinds of baits on trotlines, but most were in the half pound range....

TEXAS PARKS and Wildlife Dept. officials remind hunters that the law exempting hunters from hunting license requirements in their county of residence has been changed. Now it is required that hunters possess a valid license to hunt any game bird or animal in the county of their residence or any other county in the state....

Federal statistics show that Texas ranks second to Pennsylvania in numbers of hunting license holders, and second only to California in fishing license sales...

AN ALLIGATOR'S attack on a swimmer near Orange in August may have been caused by the gator's being used to human activity. Steve Johnson was swimming in Cypress Lake when a large alligator bit him across the upper back.

Johnson was able to pull away and swim to shore, but 11 stitches were required to close the gap.

The five foot, nine-inch gator was captured by TPWD biologists with a snare later that evening and transferred to a more isolated area. A second gator eluded the snare for several hours and had to be dispatched. This gator matched the description of the attacking gator.

Lee Ann Johnson of the TPWD said alligator attacks are infrequent, even in areas where large numbers of the reptiles live near humans, but she notes the animals can lose much of their fear of humans, particularly if fed regularly.

Herrington sparks Permian over Eastern Hills

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Reserve quarterback Jason Herrington came off the bench to put a sluggish Odessa Permian offense in high gear at Ratliff Stadium Saturday night as the Panthers rolled to a 41-7 decision over Fort Worth Eastern Hills.

Permian entered the game without injured starting quarterback Rich Fletcher and started the game with Albert Jordan. Permian didn't score in the first period of play, but Herrington came in and completed his first seven passes as Permian exploded to a 21-7 lead at the half.

Herrington ended up completing eight of 12 passes for 96 yards and touchdowns to Greg Anderson and Danny Servance. Jordan came back in the game in the fourth period and tossed a 25-yard TD to Nolan Watson to end Permian's scoring.

Still, it looks like Herrington will get the call against Abilene High next week in Abilene when District 4-5A play begins. Permian is a perfect 3-0 on the year.

Eastern Hills fought Permian tough for almost two periods. A 56-yard TD romp by Frank Braziel tied the score at 7-7 in the second period. From there on in it was Permian's game.

Woody Bryant led the Permian rushing attack with 106 yards on 17 carries and a touchdown. Marcus Lott scored from 29 yards out and Mark Seider had a nine-yard score. Bryant was also true on five of six extra point kicks.

Abilene High also finished non-district play unbeaten and the Eagles-Permian matchup should be a feature attraction next Friday night in Abilene.

Salisbury threw for two touchdowns, the first a 9-yarder to Hank Norman in the opening quarter, and the second a 19-yarder to Randy Turner early in the final period.

That touchdown pulled to Trojans to within 17-13, but they failed on the PAT attempt as Baylor's Derek Turner blocked Do Shafer's kick.

The Bears came right back with a field goal. Syler's 33-yarder gave them their seven-point edge.

TCU 24, Kansas St. 22

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Texas Christian's defense, stripped of four starters when coach Jim Wacker suspended five players for accepting illegal payments, batted down a pass during Kansas State's conversion play in the last minute to preserve a victory.

The losing Wildcats of the Big Eight Conference rallied for a touchdown with 49 seconds left as they trailed 24-16 in their first game under interim Coach Lee Moon.

But reserve quarterback John Welch's pass for two extra points to tie was deflected and fell between two K-State receivers in the end zone.

Kansas State, 0-3, regained possession with an onside kick recovery after missing the conversion, but could not get within field-goal range as the Horned Frog defenders twice sacked Welch in the final seconds.

Air Force 59, Rice 17

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. — Quarterback Bart Weiss ran for 172 yards and three touchdowns and the Air Force special teams contributed to two other scores as the Falcons pummeled Rice.

Air Force, 3-0 on the season and winner of its last six games, broke open a tight game with a 24-point second-quarter explosion to hand Rice (0-2) its 11th straight defeat — the longest losing string in the nation among Division I-A schools.

Weiss' well-timed delayed pitch to halfback Kelly Pittman produced a 7-yard score early in the second quarter that gave the wishbone-oriented Falcons a 14-3 lead.

Texas A&M 31, NE Louisiana 17

COLLEGE STATION — Fullback Anthony Toney scored all three Texas A&M touchdowns as the Aggies beat Northeast Louisiana.

Toney carried for 106 yards and Eric Franklin added three field goals as A&M evened its record at 1-1. Northeast Louisiana, a Southland Conference Division 1-AA team, fell to 1-1.

The Aggies broke a 14-14 tie late in the third quarter when Toney carried five times to pick up the final 25 yards of a 55-yard drive. He scored from the one.

Arkansas 24, Tulsa 0

LITTLE ROCK — Sophomore quarterback Greg Thomas threw the first touchdown of his college career and shifty Bobby Joe Edmonds set up two scores with long punt returns as 14th-ranked Arkansas defeated Tulsa.

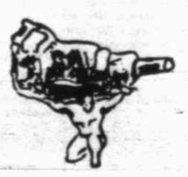

Thomas, who completed only three of 10 passes in his first start last week, hooked up with Donnie Centers on a 16-yard pass that put Arkansas on top 7-0 less than six minutes into the game.

Washington 29, Houston 12

HOUSTON — Washington kicker Jeff Jaeger punted a school record five field goals and fullback Rick Fenney scored on a one-yard run as the Huskies ended a season opening two-game losing streak with a victory over Houston.

Jaeger, Washington's leading scorer the past two seasons, booted 38 and 19 yarders and Fenney, returning from an ankle injury, scored in the second quarter for a 13-10 halftime lead.

Jaeger added a 34-yard kick on the first drive of the third quarter and punted a 41-yard field goal later in the period after Bo Yates tipped a Houston quarterback Gerald Landry's pitch attempt and David Rill recovered it.

LINCOLN, Neb. — Doug DuBose ran for 191 yards and three touchdowns and the Nebraska defense picked off four passes as the 18th-ranked Cornhuskers scored twice in the first five minutes and went on to rout 20th-ranked Illinois 52-25 Saturday.

The first Nebraska score came with just 2:48 gone in the game as DuBose went over from a yard out to make it 7-0. The second came two minutes later, when Chris Carr picked off a Jack Trudeau pass and returned it 56 yards for a touchdown.

Craig Schniztler made it 17-0 with a 35-yard field goal early in the second quarter.

But Chris White's 42-yard field goal and a 5-yard pass from Trudeau to Cap Boso to trim the Cornhusker lead to 17-10 before DuBose scored on another 1-yard run 28 seconds before halftime. The field goal by White, son of Illini Coach Mike White, was the 41st of his career, a school record.

DuBose added his third touchdown on Nebraska's first possession of the second half when he raced 49 yards for a score.

Wingback Von Sheppard added a third-quarter score for Nebraska on a 12-yard reverse and Robb Schnitzler caught a 9-yard touchdown pass from Travis Turner to make the score 45-10.

Iowa 48, Northern Illinois 20

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Chuck Long passed for 270 yards and five touchdowns, three to Bill Happel, as fourth-ranked Iowa shattered two school passing records and tied another in a romp over Northern Illinois.

Long, who was 18 of 28 but had three intercepted, led an Iowa attack that overwhelmed the Huskies on offense, 534 yards to 85.

Happel, a 5-foot, 11-inch, 186-pound senior from Cedar Rapids, finished the afternoon with nine receptions for 207 yards, 15 more than the old single-game receiving mark of 192, set two years ago by Dave Moritz.

And a sixth TD pass by reserve quarterback Mark Vlasic broke a Nile Kinnick Stadium record of five set in 1963 against Indiana, and tied an Iowa record for one game set last year against Texas in the Freedom Bowl.

Northern Illinois got its scoring on a touchdown pass and 1-yard run by quarterback Marshall Taylor and a fourth-quarter scoring pass by reserve quarterback Pete Genatempo.

The victory boosted Iowa to 2-0 heading into next Saturday's contest against interstate rival Iowa State University, while Northern Illinois drops to 1-2.

Indiana 38 Navy 35

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Quarterback Steve Bradley ran 53 yards for one touchdown and passed for 199 yards and two other scores Saturday, including an 8-yarder to Ernie Jones with 56 seconds remaining, lifting Indiana to a victory over Navy.

Midwest

The Midshipmen, trailing most of the game, rallied behind quarterback Bill Byrne's three touchdown passes and took the lead for the first time after a pair of fourth-quarter scoring passes from Byrne to Tony Hollinger.

But Indiana drove 64 yards in 13 plays for the winning score in the closing minutes. A costly Navy facemask penalty, the passing of Bradley and the running of Damon Sweazy carried Indiana to the Navy 10.

Bradley kept the drive going with a fourth-down option run to the 8, and he hit Jones on the next play for the winning score.

Navy's final possession reached the Indiana 31 after a holding penalty against the Hoosiers, but a long pass by Byrne was incomplete in the end zone as time expired.

The Hoosiers built a 31-21 lead late in the third quarter with a 41-yard field goal by Pete Stoyanovich and the long touchdown run by Bradley, who also had a 64-yard scoring run against Louisville a week earlier.

A 27-yard pass to Chuck Smith and three runs by Napoleon McCallum put the Midshipmen at the Hoosier 10-yard line, and two plays later, Byrne hit Hollinger from the 7 for a touchdown.

Navy regained possession two minutes later after an Indiana punt, and a reverse run and pass from John Lobb to Hollinger went 46 yards to the Indiana 16 on the first play from scrimmage. Three plays later, Byrne passed 17 yards to Hollinger for the go-ahead touchdown.

Wisconsin 26, Nev.-Las Vegas 23

MADISON, Wis. — Todd Gregoire kicked two fourth-quarter field goals and Bud Keyes threw three touchdowns to help Wisconsin salvage a victory over underdog Nevada-Las Vegas.

Gregoire's 42-yard fourth-quarter field goal with 9:08 left in the game gave Wisconsin a 23-23 tie, and his 20-yarder with 3:38 left boosted the Bgers to the win.

The Badgers began the winning drive at their own 20-yard line and drove deep into Rebels territory, using a 41-yard run by fullback Joe Armentrout and an 18-yard scamper by tailback Larry Emery, who finished the game with 110 yards in 24 carries.

But the Rebels defense stiffened inside the 10-yard line and Wisconsin, on a fourth-down and short yardage situation, elected to kick the close-in field goal.

The victory gave Wisconsin a 2-0 record. UNLV's record dropped to 1-2.

Keyes, a redshirt freshman, threw touchdown passes of 15, 49 and 78 yards. Rebels quarterback Steve Stallworth threw touchdown passes of 30 and 14 yards.

Kansas 37, Indiana St 10

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Mike Norseth, leading the nation in total offense, shredded Indiana State for 278 yards and two touchdowns to lead unbeaten Kansas to a trouncing of the overmatched Sycamores.

The rifle-armed senior quarterback, who smashed Big Eight records the week before in passing and total offense, clicked on 20 of 31 aerials and erased the conference mark for consecutive attempts without an interception.

Richard Estell caught seven passes for 187 yards, including a 62-yard touchdown bomb on the first play of the second period.

The Jayhawks, 3-0, swept to a 27-0 halftime lead. The Sycamores, 1-2, did not snap the ball in Kansas territory until the fourth period.

Jeff Johnson had three field goals, including a 53-yarder on Kansas' first possession which tied the team record.

Purdue 37, Ball St. 18

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Senior quarterback Jim Everett completed 12 consecutive passes and threw three touchdown passes in the first half as the Purdue Boilermakers steamrolled Ball State.

The 6-foot-5, 212-pound Everett threw another touchdown pass in the fourth quarter, a 23-yarder to Steve Griffin, before taking the rest of the day off. He finished with 24 completions in 32 passes for 340 yards.

Everett hit on 16 of his first 17 passes as the Boilermakers opened a 28-10 halftime advantage. He threw for 228 yards in the first half and moved past Bob Griese into fourth place on the Purdue career passing list in the third quarter with a 17-yard completion to Jon Hayes.

Purdue scored touchdowns on its first four possessions. Tailback Rodney Carter capped a 72-yard, 10-play drive by going off right tackle from the 1 to start the rout.

Iowa State 20, Vanderbilt 17

AMES, Iowa — Junior college transfer Rick Frank kicked his second field goal of the game, a 34-yarder with three seconds left, to give Iowa State a victory over Vanderbilt.

Frank, who transferred to Iowa State after breaking several national junior college records at Fullerton, Calif., College, delivered his game-winning kick after Iowa State drove from its own 17-yard line to the Vanderbilt 17 in the final two minutes.

Notre Dame 27, Michigan St. 10

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Sophomore flanker Tim Brown returned the second half kickoff 93 yards for a touchdown and grabbed a 49-yard pass to set up Allen Pinkett's 2-yard touchdown, leading Notre Dame to a victory over Michigan State.

Brown's kickoff return broke a 7-7 tie and after Chris Caudell had booted a 21-yard field goal for Michigan State, Steve Beuerlein hit Brown with the 49-yard pass to set up the clinching touchdown early in the fourth quarter.

Bulldogs' Little steals victory from Clemson, 20-13

Associated Press

CLEMSON, S.C. — Georgia defensive back John Little intercepted two Randy Anderson passes in the fourth quarter to lead the Bulldogs to a 20-13 win over Clemson Saturday.

Little intercepted the Tiger quarterback with about eight minutes left in the game at the Clemson 47. The turnover came just 30 seconds after Georgia had taken the lead for the first time at 17-13 on a fumble recovery in the end zone by Bulldog center Peter Anderson.

But Little's critical steal came with less than a minute left when Anderson threw a desperation bomb from the Georgia 36-yard-line intended for receiver Shelton Boyer in the end zone.

Clemson had led much of the game on the strength of a 43-yard bomb from Anderson to tight end Jim Riggs streaking down the middle with three minutes left in the first quarter.

Georgia scored first on a 26-yard field goal by Steve Crumley nine minutes into the game.

Michigan 34, South Carolina 3

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Michigan continued to rebound from its embarrassing 1984 season with its second straight victory over a Top Twenty opponent, defeating 15th-ranked South Carolina behind the passing and running of Jim Harbaugh.

The senior quarterback capped a time-consuming 76-yard drive by scoring on a 5-yard run late in the first period and pitched out to tailback Jamie Morris for a 4-yard touchdown run that gave the 19th-ranked Wolverines a 14-0 lead with 2:11 remaining in the first half.

Harbaugh, who completed only seven of 17 passes for 74 yards in last week's triumph over Notre Dame that knocked the Irish out of the Associated Press rankings, did better than that in the first half alone when he was 9-of-13 for 126 yards. He finished with 12-of-22 for 164 yards.

Harbaugh completed three third-down passes on Michigan's first touchdown drive, including a 41-yarder to Paul Jokisch, his 6-foot-8 split end, and fired a 26-yarder to Jokisch to start the second one.

South

Mike Gillette added field goals of 39 and 30 yards in the second half and eight- and six-yard scoring runs by Gerald White and Thomas Wilcher in the fourth quarter capped the scoring.

Meanwhile, the Michigan defense held South Carolina's explosive veer attack to 33 yards in the first 27½ minutes.

Florida St. 19, Memphis St. 10

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Kirk Coker threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to Darrin Holloman and Derek Schmidt kicked four field goals as sixth-ranked Florida State bounced back from a lethargic start to beat Memphis State.

Coker replaced injured Florida State quarterback Danny McManus in the final minute of the first half, and his TD flip to Holloman gave the Seminoles a 13-10 lead with 3:05 left in the third quarter.

The final outcome was not assured, however, until Coker's fourth field goal — a 24-yarder with 50 seconds.

Schmidt, whose field goal on the final play of the game enabled Florida State to tie Memphis State a year ago, also boomed three-pointers of 51, 51 and 46 yards Saturday. He missed on a 47-yard attempt.

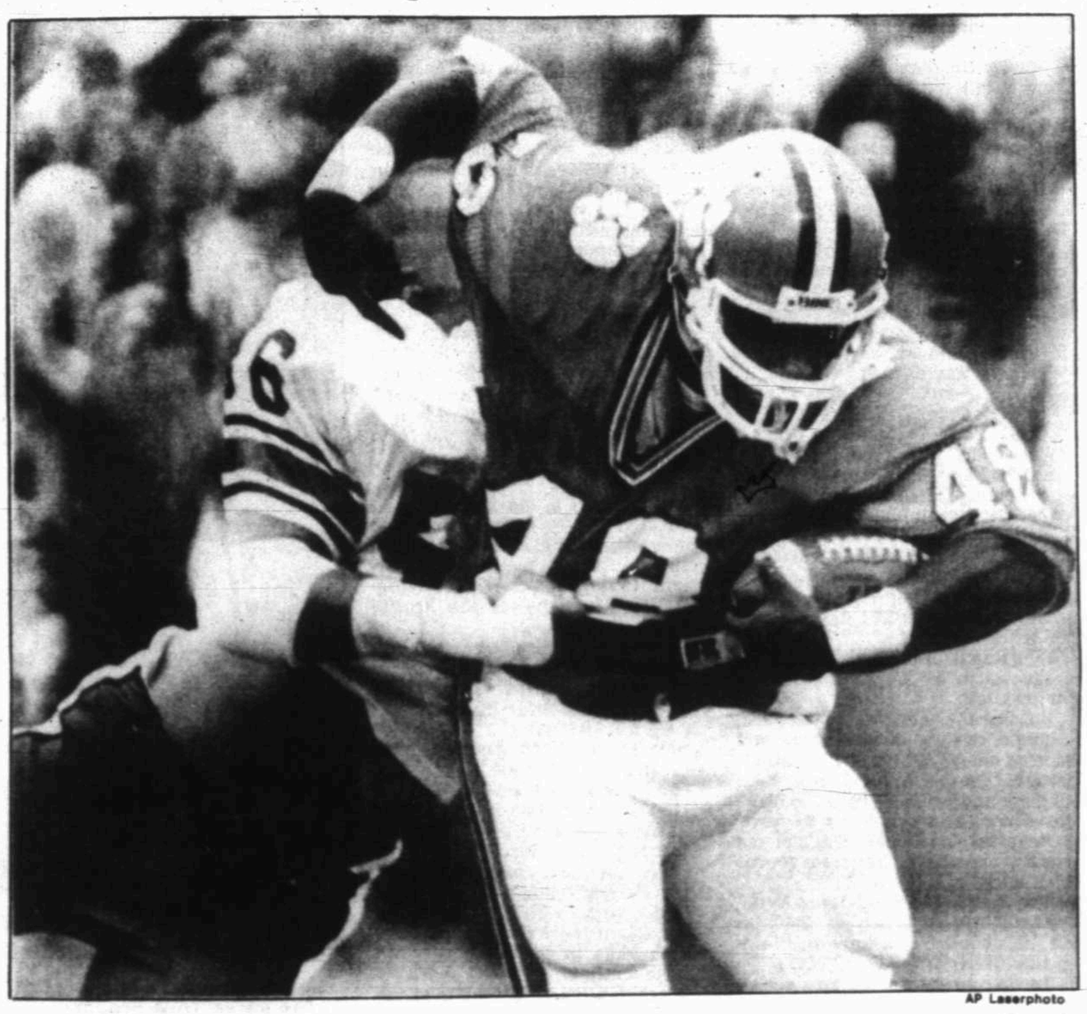

The triumph before a Doak Campbell Stadium crowd of 54,887 boosted Florida State's record to 3-0. Memphis State, which played ties the last two weeks against Mississippi and Murray State, dropped to 1-1-2.

Mississippi 18 Arkansas St.16

OXFORD, Miss. — Quarterback Kent Austin hit flanker Andre Rogers on a 13-yard scoring pass to give Mississippi a come-from-behind victory over stubborn Arkansas State.

The Austin-to-Rogers play climaxed a 66-yard scoring drive late in the game and provided the only touchdown for the Division 1 Rebels, who were kept alive with four field goals by freshman Bryan Owen.

The victory, before a crowd of 29,912, improved the Southeastern Conference Mississippi team to 1-1-1, while the Division IAA Indians, members of the Southland Conference, fell to 2-2.

Clemson tailback Kenny Flowers (18) is caught from behind by Georgia linebacker Bill Mitchell. Clemson lost a 20-13 decision to the Bulldogs in Clemson.

The Indians, behind the running and passing of quarterback Dwane Brown, jumped into the lead on the first play of the second quarter when Brown passed to split end Butch Snider on a play covering 50 yards.

Arkansas State kicker Stuard Reed had three field goals in the game, including a fourth quarter 31-yarder that followed a 78-yard pass play from Brown to split end Cazzy Francis.

Louisville 23, W. Kentucky 14

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Danny Cerione booted three field goals and Ernest Givins returned a kickoff 94 yards for a touchdown as Louisville defeated Western Kentucky in coach Howard Schnellenberger's home opener before a record crowd.

The victory before 36,914 fans boosted Louisville to 1-2. Western Kentucky, a Division I-AA school, fell to 1-2. The previous top crowd at Cardinal Stadium was 36,124 in 1978 when Louisville lost to Maryland 24-17.

Givins' kickoff return, his second for a score this season, gave Louisville a 20-7 lead with 7:29 left in the third quarter.

It was Louisville's only offensive highlight of the third quarter, as the Cardinals failed to get a first down.

Western took advantage of Louisville's lull to pull to within 20-14 with 8:47 left when Jeff Cesarone hit fullback Glendell Miller from five yards out.

Cerione, a junior, then gave Louisville a needed cushion with 5:04 left when he kicked a 31-yard field goal to give the Cardinals a 23-14 advantage.

LSU 17, Colorado St. 3

BATON ROUGE, La. — Dalton Hilliard's 151 yards rushing and a gutty defense that intercepted two passes, blocked a field goal and made a goal-line stand led ninth-ranked Louisiana State to a victory over Colorado State.

Hilliard's yardage in 25 carries included a one-yard touchdown run in the third quarter that put LSU ahead 14-0.

Garey James, who ran 96 yards in 14 carries, scored LSU's first touchdown with a 28-yard run in the second quarter.

The Tigers capped their scoring with a 29-yard field goal by Ron Lewis, who also kicked two extra points but failed on two other field goal efforts.

Duke 34, Ohio U. 13

DURHAM, N.C. — Tailback Julius Grantham scored three touchdowns despite an injured ankle as Duke rallied to defeat winless Ohio.

Grantham, a doubtful starter because of an ankle injury in Duke's season opener against Northwestern Sept. 7, scored on a 3-yard run in the first quarter and on runs of 11 and 2 yards in the third quarter as the Blue Devils erased a 13-7 halftime deficit.

Boston College rallies to defeat Pitt, 29-22

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Shawn Halloran threw for 400 yards and lofted a 51-yard, fourth down scoring pass to Kelvin Martin with 1:21 to play as Boston College recovered from a frantic second-half Pittsburgh rally to surprise the Panthers 29-22 Saturday.

Halloran threw two touchdown passes, both to Martin, and set up a pair of Jim Bell scoring runs by completing 25 of 33 passes as the Eagles surged into a 21-3 lead.

But Pitt, behind the running of freshman Brian Davis, rallied for three touchdowns in a span of just over 13 minutes to take a 22-21 lead with 4:11 remaining when John Congemi lofted a 20-yard touchdown pass to a leaping Chuck Scales.

Boston College was down to what appeared its final offensive play of the game when Halloran, ending a Doug Flutie-like performance, found Martin open near the Panthers' 15 yardline and the junior wide receiver easily outraced Pitt defender Teryl Austin into the end zone.

Halloran then ran for the two-point conversion as the Eagles evened their record at 2-2 and dropped Pitt to 1-2.

Halloran, in his best performance since replacing the graduated Flutie at quarterback, gave the Eagles a 7-3 lead when he threw an 18-yard scoring shot to Martin early in the second period. Martin ended with seven catches for 172 yards.

Bell ran 8 yards for another score just under three minutes later after consecutive Halloran passes of 26 and 24 yards to Martin. Bell made it 21-3 with a 3-yard touchdown run midway through the third period.

Davis, last year's national high school co-player of the year at Washington, Pa., broke loose on a 26-yard touchdown run late in the third period.

Penn State 17, East Carolina 10

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — John Shaffer passed for one touchdown and third-string tailback Kevin Woods ran for another, then 10th-ranked Penn State survived a third-quarter scare.

It was the third victory of the season for the unbeaten Nittany Lions and the first loss after two triumphs for East Carolina.

Penn State took a 7-0 lead 6:54 into the first period on a 4-yard touchdown pass from Shaffer to Eric Hamilton. East Carolina cut it to 7-3 late in the opening period on a 34-yard field goal by Jeff Heath.

In the second period, Woods capped a four-play, 44-yard Penn State drive with a 24-yard scoring run, his first collegiate touchdown, to give the Lions a 14-3 lead.

Princeton 10, Dartmouth 3

HANOVER, N.H. — Steve Foster's first quarter touchdown plunge helped Princeton top Dartmouth.

It was coach Ron Rogerson's first win in his new job. Rogerson, who coached at Maine last year, brought with him an offense that helped the Tigers roll up more than 300 yards on Saturday.

Princeton's Butch Climmons ran 100 yards while Tiger quarterback Doug Butler threw 138 yards.

Princeton extended its lead to 10-0 in the second period on a 23-yard field goal by Rob Goodwin. The kick came after Dartmouth held the Tigers inside the Big Green 10-yard line.

Harvard 49, Columbia 17

NEW YORK — Quarterback Brian White ignited a 21-point third quarter that sparked Harvard to a come-from-behind victory.

White completed a 51-yard pass to wingback George Sorbara to the Columbia 20, then Lamont Greer's 15-yard run gave Harvard its first touchdown after Columbia had taken a 17-0 lead midway in the third quarter.

East

White ran 8 yards to narrow the margin to 17-14 after Chuck Shirey's 37-yard punt return, and Rufus Jones sprinted 25 yards with 13:23 gone in the third quarter to put Harvard in front 21-17. Robert Santiago and Brian O'Neil each scored twice for Harvard in the fourth quarter.

Yale 10, Brown 9

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Mike Curtin tossed an 18-yard touchdown pass to Dave White and John Duryea added a 30-yard field goal as Yale scored 10 points in the third quarter.

Brown drove 66 yards in the final minutes of the game and Jamie Potkul went through the Yale line untouched from two yards to bring Brown back within a point, 10-9.

But after a delay of game penalty, Brown quarterback Steve Kettelberger underthrew Keiron Bigby on a two-point conversion attempt.

Brown got the ball back with 38 seconds remaining and moved the ball to the Yale 34, but Chris Ingerslev's field goal attempt fell short.

It was the first victory against Brown since 1981 for Yale, which won six of its final seven games in 1984 to finish 6-3 overall and 5-2 in the Ivy League. Brown was 4-5 overall and 4-3 in the league in 1984.

Army 20, Rutgers 16

WEST POINT — Halfback William Lampley ran 10 yards for a third-quarter touchdown that provided the margin of victory for Army.

Lampley's touchdown capped a 15-play, 60-yard drive, and halfback Clarence Jones ran in for a two-point conversion that made it 20-13 late in the third period.

Tom Angstadt kicked a 26-yard field goal for Rutgers early in the fourth quarter, and the Scarlet Knights moved to the Army 20 in the final minutes of the game. But on fourth-and-15 from the 26, quarterback Joe Gagliardi was sacked by Tom Malloy and Mike Lover for a 10-yard loss.

The victory lifted Army to 2-0 this season. Rutgers, which tied then-No. 3 Florida last week in its opener, is 0-1-1.

Gagliardi, who threw two fourth-quarter TD passes last week to produce the tie against Florida, replaced starter Eric Hochberg with a minute remaining in the first half. With two seconds left, Gagliardi threw a 36-yard scoring pass to split end Greg Raffaelli for a 13-12 halftime lead.

Penn 10, Cornell 6

PHILADELPHIA — Quarterback Jim Crocicchia passed one yard to tight end Brent Novoselsky for Penn's only touchdown.

Penn roverback Brad Heinz intercepted a pass by Cornell quarterback Chip Knapp at the Quaker goal line on the final play of the game to preserve the victory.

Cornell had taken a 3-0 lead in the opening quarter on a 43-yard field goal by Tom Aug.

After Novolesky's touchdown with 37 seconds left in the opening half gave Penn a 7-3 lead, Cornell narrowed the gap to 7-6 on a 38-yard field goal by Aug early in the third quarter.

With 42 seconds left in the third period, Penn increased its lead to 10-6 on a 19-yard field goal by Saunders.

Cornell had several chances to score in the fourth quarter but was turned back by the Penn defense.

Maryland 28, WVU 0

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Stan Gelbaugh passed for 263 yards and two touchdowns and Tommy Neal scored twice while rushing for 90 yards as 17th-ranked Maryland thrashed West Virginia.

The victory ended Maryland's five-game home losing streak to the Mountaineers, who were dealt their first shutout in 32 games. Both teams have 2-1 records.

Gelbaugh, limited to 214 passing yards in his first two games, had 114 in an explosive first quarter before a Byrd Stadium sellout crowd of 51,250.

One of four first-half sacks and a 19-yard punt gave Maryland field position for Neal's first TD, with a 28-yard pass completion to Abdur-Ra'oof accounting for 28 of the 36 yards.

Gelbaugh completed three passes for 49 of 82 yards gained on Maryland's next possession. Abdur-Ra'oof gathered in the scoring toss for one of his five receptions.

Ramon Paredes missed a 20-yard field goal try for Maryland, but the Terps got the ball again before the first period ended. Keeta Covington intercepted a John Talley pass.

Neal, recovered from a hyperextended knee which had limited his action, scored again to make it 21-0 with 13:39 left in the first half.

Three more Gelbaugh completions, the last a 23-yard TD toss to Sean Sullivan, completed the scoring on Maryland's first possession of the second half.

West Virginia, limited to one first down in the first quarter, missed a 47-yard field goal by Charlie Baumann on the final play of the first half.

Gooden helps own cause, collects two hits for record

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dwight Gooden pitched a four-hitter in eight innings and drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a single, leading the Mets to a 12-1 victory Saturday over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Gooden's homer, his first in the major leagues, capped New York's seven-run first inning as the Mets remained within two games of first-place St. Louis in the National League East. The Cardinals beat Montreal 7-6.

Gooden also drove in a run in the fifth inning with a single, then singled again in the seventh, giving him 20 hits this season, a record for a Mets pitcher. Tom Seaver had 18 in 1971. The Mets collected 18 hits off five Pittsburgh pitchers.

Gooden, 22-4, had a string of 31 scoreless innings snapped in the first inning when the Pirates scored an unearned run, then the Mets sent 10 men to the plate in the bottom half of the inning to chase Rick Rhoden, 9-14.

Gooden walked two and struck out four to bring his major-league strikeout lead to 251. He now has won 16 of his last 17 decisions. The loss snapped Pittsburgh's three-game winning streak, their longest of the season.

Mookie Wilson walked to start the Mets' big first inning. Wally Backman doubled into the left-field corner, scoring Wilson, Keith Hernandez walked and Gary Carter's infield single to shortstop loaded the bases.

Rhoden's wild pitch scored Backman and, one out later, Danny Heep hit an RBI single. With two away, Rafael Santana doubled home the fourth run of the inning, then Gooden hit the next pitch over the 371-foot sign in left field.

Astros 9, Reds 5

HOUSTON — Reserve infielder Tim Tolman slammed a three-run homer in the eighth inning to power the hot Houston Astros to a victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The Astros have won 21 of their last 25 games as they put a dent in the Reds' chances of catching National League West leader Los Angeles.

With the score tied 5-5, Tolman belted his second home run of the season off loser John Franco, 12-3. Tolman's blast followed singles by Kevin Bass and John Mizerock.

Houston added another run in the inning on a triple by Bill Doran and an RBI single by Craig Reynolds.

Dave Smith, 9-5, was the winner in relief.

National League

With Houston leading 5-4, Buddy Bell had doubled home the tying run for the Reds in the top of the eighth. The Astros had taken a 5-4 lead in the sixth on a run-scoring single by Bert Pena.

Cardinals 7, Expos 6

ST. LOUIS — Jack Clark hit his first home run since Aug. 16, a two-run shot in the seventh inning, giving the St. Louis Cardinal a victory over the Montreal Expos that kept them two games ahead of the Mets in the NL East.

Clark's homer, his 22nd of the year, climaxed St. Louis' uphill climb from a 6-1 deficit and gave the Cards their ninth victory in the past 10 games. The Mets stayed within two games of St. Louis by routing Montreal 12-1.

Cesar Cedeno, hitting .466 since being acquired Aug. 29 from Cincinnati, capped a four-run burst in the sixth off Montreal starter Bill Gullickson and two relievers.

Tommy Herr and Clark started St. Louis' rally with singles and Herr scored on Andy Van Slyke's ground-rule double. After Terry Pendleton greeted Gary Lucas with a two-run single and Ozzie Smith walked, Cedeno singled home Pendleton off Bert Roberge, 3-3.

Jeff Lahti, 4-2, was the winner in relief and Todd Worrell got the final out for his third save. John Tudor, attempting to make the St. Louis the first NL team in 16 years to have two 20-game winners, yielded a grand-slam homer to Andre Dawson in the Expos' third.

Cubs 9, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Ryne Sandberg drove in two runs in an eight-run fifth inning and rookie Johnny Abrego won his first major league game as the Chicago Cubs defeated the Philadelphia Phillies.

Abrego, the Phillies' first pick in the 1981 draft who was later picked up by the Cubs, allowed four hits over six innings, struck out five and walked four. Kevin Gross, 14-11, was the loser.

Trailing 2-1, Bob Dernier opened Chicago's biggest inning of the year with a walk and stole second. Dernier took third on Shawon Dunston's infield single and both scored on Sandberg's single.

Keith Moreland's triple knocked out Gross, and Leon Durham greeted reliever Rocky Childress with a run-scoring double.

Thad Bosley's single scored Durham, and after Bill Hatcher's single, another run scored as Abrego grounded out. Dernier was safe on a fielder's choice as Bosley scored, and another fielder's choice grounder by Dunston drove in the final run of the inning.

Dodgers 11, Giants 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Jerry Reuss pitched a five-hitter and knocked in a pair of runs with a single and sacrifice fly, helping the Los Angeles Dodgers crush the San Francisco Giants.

The victory increased the Dodgers' lead to 5½ games in the National League West over the Cincinnati Reds, who lost to the Houston Astros 9-5 earlier.

Reuss, 13-10, retired 18 of 19 batters following a two-out, first-inning single by Jeff Leonard and coasted the rest of the way, striking out three and walking two. Dan Gladden hit his fourth home run and Rob Deer added a sacrifice fly for the Giants' runs in the ninth.

The Dodgers erupted for seven runs in the fifth, equaling their season-high production for an inning set against the Giants on July 29.

Mark Davis, 5-11, making his first start of the season after 71 relief appearances, was touched for a run in the second. Bill Madlock led off with a single, reached third on a pair of grounders and scored on a single by Reuss, who had gone hitless in 2: consecutive at-bats.

Padres 1, Braves 0

SAN DIEGO — Eric Show fired a three-hitter and Tim Flannery singled in the game's only run in the fourth inning as the San Diego Padres handed the Atlanta Braves their sixth consecutive defeat.

Show, 11-10, retired the last 17 batters. He did not issue a walk and struck out four batters as he recorded his second shutout this season.

The Padres run came in the fourth inning off Atlanta starter Joe Johnson, 4-2. Graig Nettles hit a leadoff single and went to second on Kevin McReynolds single. Flannery then followed with his single to center field.

Johnson pitched seven innings and gave up nine hits. Rick Camp gave up a hit in the eighth. The Braves turned three double plays.

The Braves got runners to second base only twice, in the first and fourth innings. In the fourth, Bob Horner hit a leadoff double but was thrown out trying to stretch the hit into a triple.

Blue Jays' victory cuts magic number down to nine

Associated Press

TORONTO — Kelly Gruber's bases-loaded single with one out in the 14th inning drove home George Bell from third base and gave the Toronto Blue Jays a 2-1 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The triumph enabled the American League East-leading Blue Jays to remain 6½ games ahead of New York. Toronto's magic number for winning its first-ever division title was reduced to nine.

With one out in the 14th, Bell singled off Danny Darwin, 7-18. Jesse Barfield followed with a single that sent Bell to second and Rick Leach followed with a walk that loaded the bases. Gruber hit an 0-2 pitch over Milwaukee's drawn-in infield for the game-winning single.

Dennis Lamp, the fifth Toronto pitcher, went 1 1-3 innings and improved his record to 10-0.

The Blue Jays scored in the sixth to tie the game 1-1 without getting a hit. With two outs, Lloyd Moseby drew a walk from Moose Haas. Moseby stole his team-leading 35th base and continued to third when catcher Charlie Moore's throw sailed wide.

Rance Mulliniks hit a routine grounder that first baseman Ted Simmons bobbled for an error, allowing Moseby to score.

The Brewers had taken a 1-0 lead against Doyle Alexander in third. Jim Gantner was hit by a pitch, stole second and scored on a single by Earnest Riles.

Yankees 5, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Joe Cowley and Brian Fisher combined on a five-hitter and Ron Hassey and Ken Griffey hit home runs to help the New York Yankees break an eight-game losing streak with a victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Cowley, 11-5, who had not won since Aug. 10, held the Orioles to three hits in six innings. Brian Fisher relieved Cowley and allowed two hits for his 13th save.

Hassey led off the second with his 13th homer. The Yankees made it 3-0 in the third when Griffey led off with his ninth homer and Mike Pagliarulo drove in a run with a two-out double.

Pagliarulo's double, a line drive off the right wrist of Baltimore starter Storm Davis, drove in Dave Winfield, who had singled and moved to second when Don Baylor was hit with the pitch.

Davis, 10-8, who had a five-game winning streak snapped, left the game after Pagliarulo's hit. It was the second straight game that Davis left early after being hit by a line drive.

American League

Floyd Rayford hit a two-run homer, his 15th, in the Baltimore sixth.

Rickey Henderson's speed sparked New York's two-run eighth. Henderson singled, stole two bases and scored on a single by Don Mattingly, who leads the major leagues with 128 RBI.

Henderson stole three bases and tied the team record of 74 set in 1914 by Fritz Maisel.

Yankees shortstop Bobby Meacham was ejected before the start of the ninth inning, and New York Manager Billy Martin announced he was playing the game under protest. It was not immediately known why Meacham was ejected.

Red Sox 7, Tigers 6

BOSTON — Wade Boggs broke a 73-year-old Boston club record with his 222nd and 223rd hits of the season, helping the Red Sox to a victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Boggs tied Tris Speaker's record of 222 hits set in 1912 with an RBI single to center in the second inning and then broke the Hall of Famer's team mark with another line single to center in the fifth.

By going 2-for-5, Boggs had his average remain at .374, tops in the major leagues.

Bill Buckner had two doubles and a single, driving in three runs and scoring one, in Boston's 13-hit attack. Dwight Evans hit his 24th homer, singled and walked twice, scoring three runs and driving in a pair.

Reliever Tim Lollar, 8-10, got the victory and Steve Crawford got his 11th save.

The Red Sox took a 2-0 lead in the first against Walt Terrell, 13-10, on an RBI double by Buckner and a single by Tony Armas.

Tom Brookens singled home a Detroit run in the second before the Red Sox shelled Terrell in their half of the inning, scoring three times on a run-scoring single by Boggs and a two-run double by Buckner.

The Tigers pulled to within 5-3 on a triple by Lou Whitaker and singles by Alan Trammell, Kirk Gibson and Darrell Evans in the third.

A's 8, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Mike Davis singled home two runs and Tony Phillips contributed three hits, including a suicide squeeze bunt, to lift the Oakland A's to a triumph over the Chicago White Sox.

Chris Codiroli, 13-12, pitched 5⅓ innings and gave up three runs on six hits. Steve Ontiveros finished up for his eighth save.

Loser Britt Burns, 9-18, yielded five runs on six hits in two innings. Burns had won his last five decisions.

Alfredo Griffin started the game with a double and took third on a sacrifice. Steve Henderson followed with a triple and, one out later, Dusty Baker walked and stole second. Davis singled home both runners for a 3-0 lead.

Rudy Law led off the Chicago first with an inside-the-park home run, his fourth homer of the season. Law hit a liner to center field and Davis fell, allowing the ball to roll to the fence.

Mickey Tettleton opened the Oakland second with a double, touching off a two-run inning. Mike Gallego walked and Griffin lined an RBI single. Phillips then laid down a squeeze bunt that he beat out for a single.

Rangers 6, Mariners 2

ARLINGTON — Steve Buechele homered and singled home a run to help Jose Guzman to his first major-league victory and the Texas Rangers to a triumph over the Seattle Mariners.

Guzman, 1-2, gave up four hits over six innings, walked two batters and struck out three. Greg Harris pitched the last three innings, picking up his 11th save.

Matt Young, 12-16, gave up three runs and was the loser.

The Rangers took a 1-0 lead in the first when Alan Bannister singled, took second on a walk to Toby Harrah, took third on Don Slaught's double-play grounder and scored on Larry Parrish's single.

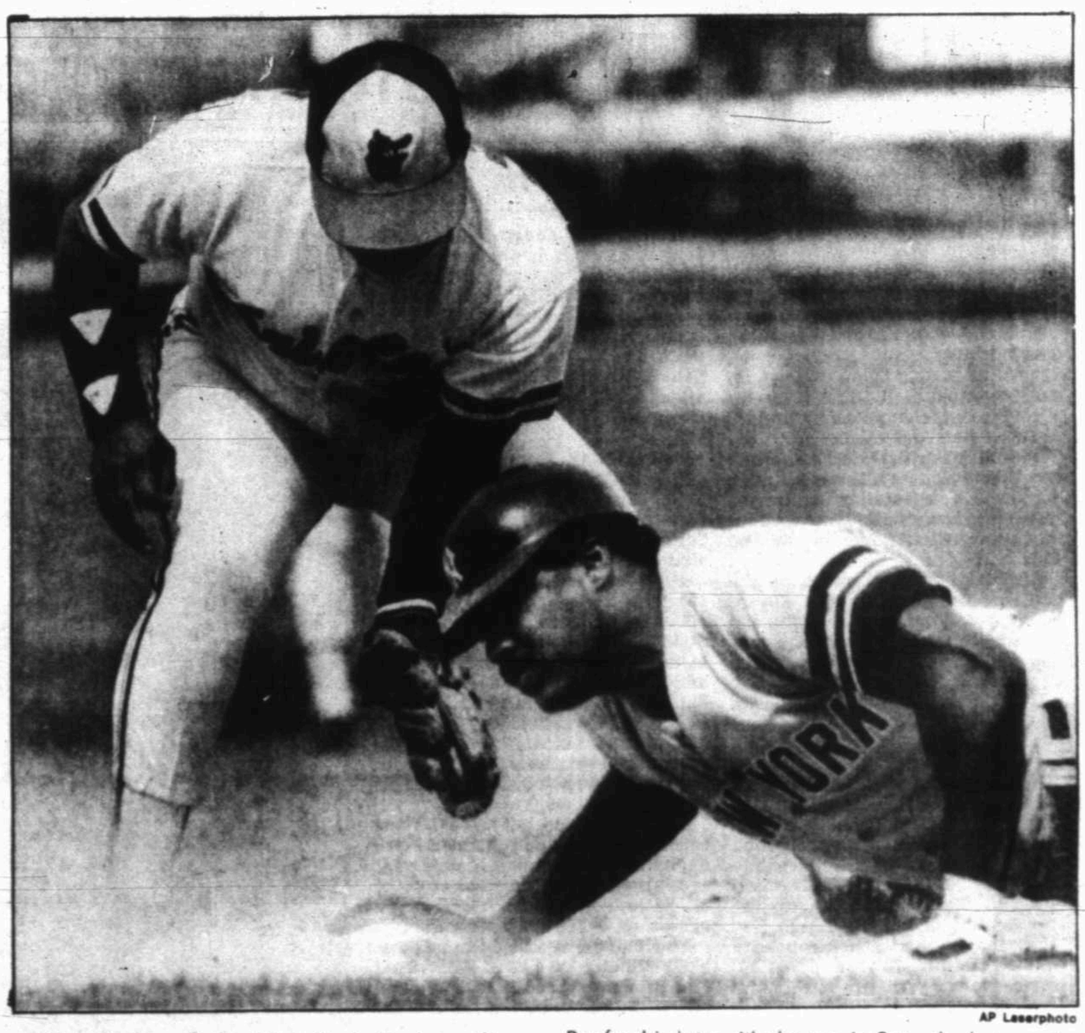

Texas scored a run in the second when Bannister walked, took third on Slaught's single and scored on Parrish's infield out.

Buechele's fourth home run of the season made it 3-0 in the fourth inning.

The Mariners scored a run in the fifth when Perconte singled, took third on third baseman Buechele's throwing error and scored on Phil Bradley's single. Seattle added a run in the seventh inning when Perconte tripled and scored on Bradley's single.

Royals 6, Twins 5

KANSAS CITY — Frank White singled off the third-base bag with one out in the 10th inning, driving home George Brett from second base.

Don Baylor of the New York Yankees dives back to third base safely as Baltimore's Floyd Rayford is late with the tag in Saturday's game in Baltimore.

Brett opened the 10th by walking on five pitches from Ron Davis, 2-6, and went to second on George Orta's sacrifice bunt. Steve Balboni, who had tied the game at 5-5 with his 34th homer in the eighth, drew a walk and White followed with a grounder that skipped off the third base-bag and went into left field, scoring Brett.

The Royals entered the game tied for first place in the American League West with California, which played Cleveland later Saturday night.

Reliever Mark Huismann, 1-0, pitched two perfect innings for the victory.

Kansas City went into the eighth trailing 5-2, but rallied against starter Mike Smithson and Davis. Lonnie Smith drew a leadoff walk and Brett followed with an RBI double, which knocked out Smithson.

Angels 12, Indians 3

ANAHEIM — Doug DeCinces homered and drove in four runs and Kirk McCaskill allowed three hits over eight shutout innings Saturday night to lead the California Angels over the Cleveland Indians 12-3.

The Angels' fourth straight victory kept them tied with Kansas City for first place in the American League West. Kansas City beat Minnesota 6-5 in 10 innings earlier in the night.

McCaskill, 11-11, walked five and struck out three. Jim Slaton relieved to start the ninth and gave up three runs. Carmen Castillo hit a two-out, two-run homer and Tony Bernazard followed with a home run.

The Angels, who had 11 hits, scored in the first inning on doubles by Juan Beniquez and DeCinces off starter Neal Heaton, 8-17.

DeCinces hit a three-run homer, his 15th, in the third inning and Brian Downing added a two-run single in the fourth off reliever Rich Thompson.

California scored three times in the fifth.

Buckeyes roll over outmanned Buffs

Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Quarterback Jim Karsatos tossed three touchdown passes, including an 11-yard strike to tailback John Wooldridge, who ran for 119 yards and another TD, as No. 7 Ohio State pounded outmanned Colorado 36-13 Saturday.

With the victory, the Buckeyes upped their record to 2-0 while Colorado dropped to 2-1.

Ohio State dominated Colorado thoroughout the game with an aggressive Buckeye defense forcing the Buffalos into four costly turnovers and the offense cashed in each one for a total of 22 points.

Karsatos, a junior starting his fifth game for the Buckeyes, shelled the Colorado secondary on short passes, hitting 18 of 26 attempts for 181 yards and the three touchdowns.

Meanwhile, Wooldridge — filling in for the injured Heisman Trophy contender Keith Byars — carried 25 times for 119 yards and caught eight passes for 82 yards.

Colorado looked strong during its first possession, taking a 7-0 lead on a 35-yard scoring gallop from fullback Anthony Weatherspoon.

However, the Buffalo offense didn't mount another scoring threat until the game's closing moments when Ohio State's backup defensive unit allowed Colorado's No. 2 quarterback Rick Wheeler to score on a 2-yard plunge.

After Weatherspoon's tally, Karsatos responded by firing a 20-yard TD strike to flanker Mike Lanese late in the first period.

Wooldridge put the Buckeyes ahead for good midway through the second quarter with a 15-yard TD run, the first of three Ohio State scores in that period.

Arizona 23, California 17

BERKELEY, Calif. — Arizona safety Allan Durden intercepted a pass at his six-yard line with 1½ minutes remaining, killing a California drive and preserving victory for the unbeaten Wildcats.

Linebacker Boomer Gibson and cornerback Gordon Bunch made key defensive plays which helped Arizona, down 10-0 after one period, go ahead in the second quarter. Max Zendejas kicked three field goals for the Wildcats, raising his career total to 65, fifth highest in major college football history.

Zendejas' final field goal, a 25-yarder, came with 2:43 left in the game and gave Arizona a six-point lead soon after Cal scored on a 98-yard touchdown drive. The Bears' late TD was scored by Vincent Delgado on a 37-yard run off a reverse.

Cal drove to the Arizona 19 in the closing minutes before Durden cut in front of Cal receiver Gayland Houston for the game-clinching interception, his second of the game. The pass was thrown by Kevin Brown, who hit Delgado for a TD early in the game.

Wyoming 31, Fullerton St 8

LARAMIE, Wyo. — Tailback Stan Waddell scored twice as Wyoming won its first college football win of the season.

Fullerton State, which dropped to 0-3, had trouble both moving the ball and trying to stop Wyoming's wishbone attack.

Waddell ran 20 yards down the left sideline early in the second quarter for his first score, which capped a 60-yard drive by the 1-2 Cowboys.

Fullerton State quarterback Kevin Jan fumbled on the Titans' next play, giving Wyoming possession on the 3-yard line. Fullback Toriano Taylor bulled into the end zone on the next play but the Cowboys' two-point conversion run failed.

Waddell's second touchdown, from seven yards out, came with 3:23 left in the half and a Scott Runyan-to-Mitch Daum conversion pass gave the Cowboys a 21-0 lead.

Fresno State 33, Oregon State 24

CORVALLIS, Ore. — Quarterback Kevin Sweeney threw touchdown bombs of 75 and 95 yards, treating Fresno State to a victory over Oregon State.

Sweeney set a Parker Stadium record for the longest touchdown pass with his 95-yarder to split end Stephen Baker.

A wide-open Baker caught Sweeney's pass on the Oregon State 45 and raced untouched into the end zone.

That touchdown and extra point gave Fresno State a 16-6 lead with 12:59 remaining in the third quarter. The Bulldogs scored two more touchdowns in the next 4:44, including one on a 75-yard pass from Sweeney to split end Gene Taylor.

Fresno State kicker Barry Belli set another Parker Stadium record with four field goals. Bulldog free safety Rod Webster intercepted three passes thrown the Beavers' Erik Wilhelm.

N. Mexico St. 22, UTEP 20

EL PASO — Andy Weiler's 32-yard field goal with three seconds to play gave New Mexico State a 22-20 victory over Texas-El Paso in a non-conference football game Saturday night.

UTEP, 0-4, trailed 19-10 early in the third quarter and took the lead for the first time on Hugo Castellanos' 43-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter. y New Mexico State quarterback Jim Miller and running back Mark Dunn combined on touchdown passes of 21 and 4 yards, and linebackers Elias Ruiz and Darryl Ford tackled UTEP running back Nicky Combs in the end zone for a safety that enabled the Aggies to lead 16-10 at the half.

Weiler's 34-yard field goal padded the lead to 19-10 early in the third quarter.

But Texas-El Paso fought back in the third quarter behind the passing of quarterback Sammy Garza and Combs' running. Combs' 18-yard run with 6:30 left in the third quarter set up a 16-yard Garza pass to split end Larry Linne to cut the lead to 19-17. Castellanos' field goal then put the Miners on top.

Castellanos had booted a 29-yard field goal in the waning seconds of the first half.

Minnesota 62, Montana 17

MINNEAPOLIS — Quarterback Rickey Foggie ran for three touchdowns and fired a 75-yard scoring pass to Mel Anderson.

Minnesota, 2-0, didn't have a third-down situation until late in the third quarter, so Foggie passed only six times, completing three for 101 yards before leaving the game after three periods. His bomb to Anderson broke open a 21-14 game with 6:40 left in the first half.

Valdez Baylor ran for 89 yards and scored Minnesota's first two touchdowns. His four- and one-yard bursts sandwiched Montana's 15-yard scoring pass to Kraig Paulson.

Angelo St. 42, Cameron 13

SAN ANGELO — Angelo State's Ned Cox rushed for two scores and passed for another to lead the Rams to a 42-13 non-conference victory over the Cameron Aggies Saturday night.

The Rams, 2-1, went ahead at halftime 14-0 on a 26-yard run by Wesley Williams and a one-yarder by Cox. Cox scored again from one yard out in the third quarter and passed 11 yards to Williams for a 28-0 lead.

The Aggies fell to 0-2.

Central State 24, Abilene 24

ABILENE (AP) — Tony Felton of Central State, Okla., caught a 52-yard touchdown pass from Glenn Walker with 47 seconds left in the game to give CSU a 24-24 tie with Abilene Christian Saturday night.

Both teams had come in with 2-0 records.

Texas Lutheran 31, McMurry 6

SEGUIN — Texas Lutheran pulled its overall record to 2-1 with a Saturday night win over McMurry, dropping the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association team to 0-3 after its Saturday night loss.

Texas Lutheran, a Division I NIAA team, led at the half 17-0, allowing McMurry its sole touchdown during the third quarter.

In this era of new lifestyles, including fashionable townhomes, patio homes and condominiums, many people may become confused as to exactly what each of these types of dwellings offer.

"The major distinction between townhomes and patio homes lies in construction," said Betty Taylor of Betty Taylor Realtors.

Taylor explained that each townhome owner shares at least one interior wall (a firewall) with one or more other residents. These owners must sign a common wall agreement. Floor plans may vary from unit to unit.

Pictured, are three townhomes available in various areas of Midland. One of the townhomes, located at 44 Lafayette Place, is a luxurious colonial-style dwelling, with approximately 1,956 square feet of living space. It is listed by Betty Taylor Realtors.

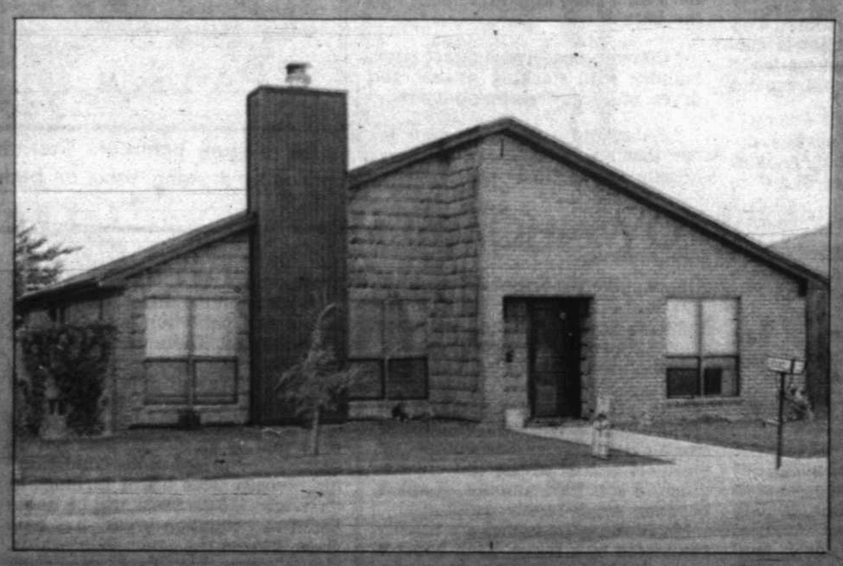

At 4507 Lanham, lies a contemporary three bedroom townhome, ready for the busy family, and listed by Don Harvey Realtors at $89,500.

At 3214 Preston, Langston-Monarch Realtors lists a beautiful domain with three bedrooms and a cozy wood-burning fireplace at $65,000.

Decline in interest rates spur record January to July increase in housing affordability index

WASHINGTON–Significant declines in mortgage interest rates have boosted the National Association of Realtors' Housing Affordability Index a record 5.1 percentage points since the beginning of the year, association President David D. Roberts said today.

The July Housing Affordability Index, released by the association today, was 91.8, compared to January's 86.7. July's index was the highest since November 1979, when it was 92.1, and was up 0.4 percentage points from June.

"This year's improvement of more than 5 points is particularly significant because home sales activity historically is much stronger in the warmer months such as July than in the winter, and the greater demand during this time of the year results in highr prices–a key factor in the affordability index," said Roberts.

"The normal seasonal home price increase, however has been more than offset by the major impact of lower mortgage interest rates, also a key element in housing affordability," the association official noted.

Roberts, a Mobile, Ala., Realtor, noted that only once before, in 1983, has the affordability index been higher in July than in January. The index two years ago rose 2.8 percentage points from January's 78.3 to July's 81.1.

This year's index improvement has been in conjunction with a 1.13 percentage point decline in the average effective interest rate on loans closed for previously occupied (existing) homes. As reported by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, that interest rate fell from 12.61 percent in January to 11.48 percent in July.

From January to July, the median existing-single family home price rose 5.6 percent to $77,900 from $73,800, the association's monthly survey of local boards of Realtors across the nation found. From May to June the median price rose $1,200, and from June to July it rose $1,700.

"Despite this price increase, the monthly principal and interest payment on a median-priced home fell from January to July to $616 from $635," Roberts said. "Even with the relatively large July increase in prices, the monthly principal and interest payment held steady from June to July," he added.

Except for May, when it took a slight dip, the Housing Affordability Index has increased steadily each month this year, Roberts said. The 0.4 percentage point June-to-July increase followed a 2.1 paercentage point increase in February, a 0.9 percentage point increase in March, a 0.6 percentage point increase in April, a 0.2 percentage point decline in May and a 1.3 percentage point increase in June.

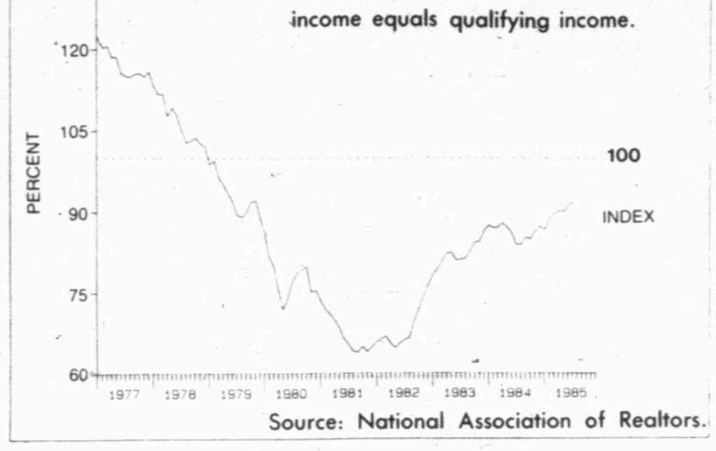

The July index meant that a family earning the median income had 91.8 percent of the income needed to qualify for a mortgage on a median-price resale home. The qualifying income used for the index is based on a borrower paying 25 percent of his income for principal and interst payments on a loan covering 80 percent of the home price. The Federal National Mortgage Association generally allows principal and interest payments on each mortgage it buys to be as high as 25-28 percent of the borrower's income.

An index of 100 would mean that a family earning the median income has exactly enough income to qualify for a mortgage covering 80 percent of the median existing-home price. Not since December 1978, when mortgage interest rates were 10-11 percent, has the index been 100.

The July index was 61.3 percentage points below the index high of 153.1 in February 1972, when interest rates were less than 8 percent, and 27.9 percentage points above the index low of 63.9 in September 1981, when long-term interest rates were 15 percent or higher.

Dr. Jack Carlson, the association's chief economist and executive officer, pointed out that, while the median income of $27,146 in July was not enough to qulaify for a loan on a median-priced resale home, it was sufficient to qualify for a $71,500 home. More than 43 percent of the existing homes sold in July were priced at or below that price, he said.

"The improving affordability picture has had a very positive effect on existing-home sales," Carlson continued.

Source: National Association of Realtors.

The national association survey found that the seasonally adjusted rate (The annual rate of a particular month represents what the total number of actual sales for a year would be if the relative sales pace in the month were maintained for 12 consecutive months. Seasonally adjusted annual rates are used in reporting monthly data to factor out season variations in the resale activity.) of existing single-family home sales climbed 1.6 percent from June to July to 3.11 million units–reaching the highest levels since October 1980. The July annual rate was 3.7 percent higher than January's.

Despite the improved affordability and home resale figures, the economist pointed out, real interest rates--nominal (market) interest rates adjusted for inflation–remain relatively high by historic standards and are preventing housing markets from even healthier growth.

While mortgage interest rates in nominal terms are where they were in late 1979, the annual pace of home resales is only three-fourths as high as it was then, Carlson said. "The primary reason for this is that real interest rates now are about 9 percent-more than double the 3-4 percent that prevailed from 1950-1980," he said.

"Because the administration and Congress have not yet acted to significantly reduce the $200 billion-plus annual federal budget deficits projected for the next several years, there is a squeeze on credit available for private investment in businesses, housing and other items, keeping upward pressure on interest rates," he explained.

The federal deficit now represents about 70 percent of the nation's net domestic savings, Carlson noted.

"Only when the lawmakers bring government deficit spending down will credit conditions be eased and interest rates fall closer to the underlying inflation rate, which is now about 3.5-4 percent. With inflation at its current level, long-term interest rates today would be at about 7-7½ percent if interest rates still had their historic relationship to inflation," he said.

"Clearly, further reductions in interest rates would help bring about continued improvements in the Housing Affordability Index and housing markets nationwide," he said.

Today's laminate offers kitchens great fashions and efficiency

Once more, the kitchen is the heart of the home, notes the Laminate Council of America, an organization that makes it its business to know all about kitchen trends.

Large kitchens gather families and friends for hobbies, parties and everyday meals, says the Council. And small kitchens, too, try to be as multi-purpose as at all possible.

There is no one style currently preferred by America. Rather, styles run the gamut from country-cozy to city-slick. And the choice has nothing whatever to do with locale.

Today, a city dweller may well crave the homey, lived-in feeling of a country kitchen, while a country person may opt for a no-nonsense, sleek kitchen with nary an accessory in sight.

However, all kitchens do share a couple of common goals: They must be ultra-efficient to cut down on boring clean-up work, and they must look great. That is where decorative high-pressure laminate comes in, says the Council.

For, today, this design material is not only admired for its wipe-clean, hard-wearing practicality. Of late, it has become a dazzling fashion product as well.

The incredible palette now available goes all the way from pale and dark neutrals to pretty pastels and sassy brights. Then there are the looks of leather, wood grains, marble, slate, metallics, cloth, cane and much more.

And there are patterns, too, such as abstract geometrics, tailored pinstripes and checks. Is it any wonder that the design community has fallen in love with laminate?

Ironically, all that color and design may be a problem to the consumer. For how does one settle on just the right design, color and texture? Well take heart because here, from the Council, are some helpful hints and ideas.

Laminate and glass blocks, two of the Eighties' most exciting style elements, join forces to create this sleek kitchen.

A new countertop can give a tired kitchen a terrific lift. A design that borrows the sheen and texture of marble or slate would be perfect for a country kitchen.

A pale wood grain or one of the light solid colors would be top choices if you love the sleek Eurostyle and want to bring relief to dark wood cabinets. Ruby, topaz and other jewel tones are perfect if the traditional look is your cup of tea.

Many things other than color and design have happened to laminate counter-tops, and they are worth getting acquainted with. First, there is now one-piece construction, so countertop and backsplash form a clean sweep of surface, eliminating the back seam.

Secondly, there are all sorts of new edge treatments. Rounded, beveled, square and no-drip edges are just a few of the possibilities. An edge can also be a different color and design than the rest of the countertop. This is a treatment that creates lots of design interest.

For countertops it is a good idea to choose only matte finishes. High-gloss finishes scratch and mar too easily to be practical for sufaces that must withstand lots of wear and tear.

But, of course, laminate isn't just for countertops and backsplashes. It certainly makes beautiful sense for cabinets, islands, dinettes and tables as well as for walls and all sort of built-in storage.

For large surfaces, it is wise to choose color and design fairly conservatively. For, a vast expanse of some bright color will tire the eye quickly and, even though laminate is a very affordable product, you don't want to have to resurface a bank of cabinets or other large areas in short order. Instead choose your favorite neutral, be it light or dark.

For smaller areas, such as backsplashes or soffits, you need not feel restricted. By all means, pick laminate colors that you truly love to look at.

Here are some specific color ideas for small areas. To warm the institutional white of metal cabinets, the Council suggests backsplashes in delicious pastels or bright chromatics.

Metallic finishes are terrific in contemporary kitchens, and think of today's leather looks and desert colors if you like the ambiance of the Santa Fe and California styles.

To spruce up old cabinets, treat them to laminate insets. Windowpane checks, dimensional basketweave, cane and tweeds are just a few of the designs that are sure to do the trick.

Putting trim kits to work and covering the refrigerator, freezer and dishwasher to complement the rest of the kitchen is another good idea from the professional designer's drawing board.

If you are designing your kitchen from scratch, think of creating a total laminate room. Whatever style you like, laminate can give it to you, and you will love all the extra time you can spend on more pleasureable pursuits than cleaning up.

Rustic wood looks and natural earth tones are good choices for a Colonial kitchen. Oak and burl grains, linen looks, and rich solid colors such as burgundy, hunter green and harvest gold are terrific for formal traditional settings.

The whole range of whites, beiges and greys is ideal for contemporary kitchens, and grey, snow-white, black and such metallic finishes as aluminum and chrome are definitely high-tech. Greys, pinks and mauves are the right colors for deco spaces.

If you like a bit of drama, think of using two or three laminate colors together. Run just a single band of color on a white countertop, for example, or create stripes, vertically, diagonally or horizontally, on a backsplash or accent wall.

Know your energy jargon

R-value: R-values measure the resistance to heat flow. With insulation, the higher the R-value, the greater the insulating power. Generally, R-19 is the suggested R-value for sidewalls in the average home, and R-30 is advised for the attic floor.

U-value: This is the opposite of R-value. It measures the ability of a material to conduct rather than resist heat flow. Hence, the lower the U-value, the higher the resistance. U-values are used to measure the energy efficiency of windows, for example.

BTU: BTU means British Thermal Unit and is a measure of heat. A BTU is the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree. One BTU is the equivalent of the heat generated by burning a single wooden kitchen match.

KWH: This stands for kilowatt hour and is a measure of electric energy equal to 1000 watts of electricity used steadily for one hour.

Trees may increase home resale value

Trees may increase the resale value of your home. So says a research director of the U.S. Forest Service. He cites studies that show a home with several attractive shade trees can be sold for about 15 percent more than one without trees.

Experts suggest ways to increase bath space

A bathroom remodeling generally falls into one of three categories:

* It requires cosmetic changes that are relatively easy and inexpensive.

* It requires function improvement such as the replacement and perhaps relocation of fixtures.

* It requires both of the above, and may even entail moving or removing a wall.

How much must you be preapared to spend? Not a great deal if all the space needs is new flooring or wallcovering, a vanity cabinet, and perhaps a colorful new shower curtain with coordinating accessories to improve its appearance and expand its storage.

To replace fixtures, advises the National Kitchen and Bath Association, will run you from $1,500 to $2,000.

For a remodeling that updates an old bathroom, figure an expenditure of $5,000 to $7,000, says NKBA.

To install a super-bath — and more bathrooms are entering this category with each passing day — you can easily spend $15,000 to $20,000.

That's quite an investment. But think what luxuries will be yours in return: A jetted tub, sauna, cycling or rowing machine, broad expanses of well lighted mirror, sleek (and compartmentalized) fixtures, spacious cabinets or closets for linens, personal needs and bathroom supplies.

To enlarge the bath, you might merge it with bedroom or dressing room into a master suite in which fixtures are compartmentalized but the space is otherwise open. This trend has been developing for a number of years.

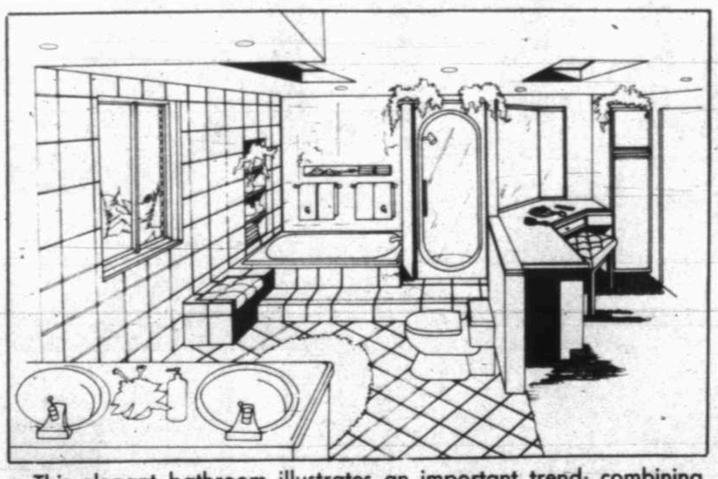

Here are other space-making ideas from NKBA:

* Convert a conventional stall shower into a linen closet and install instead a free-standing cylindrical shower with glass walls.

* Sneak a few feet from a hallway for a mini-size sauna that opens into the bath.

* Convert a bathroom closet into a laundry with stacking washer and dryer requiring minimum space.

* Substitute a pocketed door for one that opens inward or outward, to gain usable floor space.

This elegant bathroom illustrates an important trend: combining bath with dressing area or bedroom for a single large space.

TOWNHOMES

Patio homes differ from townhomes in that no common walls are shared between residents. Frequently, these dwellings are built on what is referred to as the zero-lot line, meaning that city ordinances do not require that a specified amount of space exist between each home. (In most residential areas, the city requires a specified amount of space between single-family dwellings.)

Moreover, patio homes are usually connected by a fence. Each home is generally U-shaped with many windows onlooking the patio area. Any of these windows which face the neighboring properties have a glazed finish insuring privacy for each resident. With both townhomes and patio homes, ownership can be transferred by a general warranty deed. A new common wall agreement is also needed in the resale of a townhome.

Condominiums differ from townhomes and patio homes in the area of ownership. These units may vary to include any size or type of construction: townhome, high-rise apartment or even patio home.

Every condominium association is governed by an elected board of directors, comprised of the condominium owners. This board includes in its bylaws which areas will be designated as "common areas" (i.e. hallways, swimming pools, boulevards, tennis courts, etc.) Each association member pays a set fee for use and maintenance of these areas.

When a person chooses to purchase one of these condominium units, all of the information previously explained must be included within the text of the contract and filed with the County Clerk's Office.

For many reasons, once people learn the differences in these three types of domains, the popular features of buying any one are obvious.

Townhomes require less maintenance than single family dwellings. Though many townhomes have yards, these areas are small enough to easily maintain.

Patio homes are closer to what the average homeowner calls a "regular home"; no common walls are shared, allowing more privacy for the owner and the exterior upkeep is usually fairly easy.

With condo units, one's lifestyle can be closest to that of apartment living; with one addition - ownership of the property.

Townhomes, patio homes and condominiums all feature many other amenities. Tastes and needs determine which dwelling is best suited for an individual.

How much attic insulation is enough?

According to most energy experts, even higher energy costs are a predictable fact. It's also an undeniable fact that homeowners who add additional amounts of insulation to their attic can reduce their energy bills appreciably.

Under-insulated attics result in major heat loss during the winter and heat gain during summer months. Installing thermally efficient insulation is easy to do and is one of the most cost-effective methods by which a homeowner can combat rising utility bills. How does a homeowner learn how much attic insulation is enough? The answer is easily determined by the climate of each region of the United States, as well as by fuel costs in each area. In some parts of the country, heating costs determine how much inlsulation is needed; in others, air-conditioning costs are the major influence. In many situations, both heating and air conditioning costs contribute to the optimum amount of required insulation.

Optimum levels vary from zone to zone in the United States. To determine the recommended optimum level for a particular area, locate the zone (on the map). Then use the R-value and corresponding insulation thickness indicated here:

Zone 1 R-30 (10" insulation thickness)
Zone 2 R-30 (10" insulation thickness)
Zone 3 R-30 (10" insulation thickness)
Zone 4 R-38 (12" insulation thickness)
Zone 5 R-49 (16" insulation thickness)

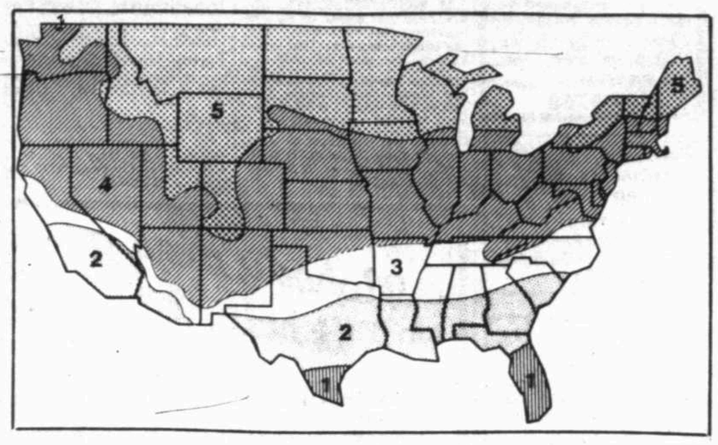

Higher R-values mean greater insulation power. Remember that savings vary.

The recommended R-values reflect data from the U.S. Department of Energy, HUD/FHA, and state and utility recommendations.

Though millions of homeowners across the United States have taken the initiative and added insulation to their homes, many more should upgrade their insulation levels.

Many homeowners are apparently not aware of the ease by which they can insulate attics themselves and save significantly on energy bills. Experts say the average size attic can easily be insulated in a single afternoon. To insulate an entire home for maximum energy conservation, he advises the homeowners to contact a local insulation contractor.

Homewowners, if their home was substantially completed before April 20, 1977, may also qualify for an energy tax credit by the Federal Government, of 15 peracent on the first $2,000 spent for energy conservation materials, such as insulation and labor costs of the insulation contractor.

The U.S. Department of Energy has determined the optimum R-value and thickness of insulation for each of these five regions in the United States.

The maximum credit is $300. This is not a tax deduction, but an actual credit off the bottom line of your federal income tax.

This credit is scheduled to expire at the end of 1985.

Wood mouldings highlight decor and plain ceilings

Wood moulding is user friendly. It's easy to work with, simple to apply, inexpensive and versatile. With up to 350 standard wood moulding profiles available in styles ranging from astragal to wainscot cap, the decorative possibilites are nearly limitless.

One popular and inexpensive home improvement calls for the use of wood moulding sizes and shapes available, it's easy to add character and interest to any ceiling. Whether used alone or around lighting fixtures, the imaginative use of wood mouldings on ceilings can give any room new depth and dimension.

Working with wood mouldings is simple enough, so that most do-it-yourselfers can accomplish professional looking results, says the Wood Moulding and Millwork Producers Association. All it requires is proper planning, the right tools and sufficient knowledge in wood-working.

Make a list of the specific lengths of moulding that will be required to decorate the ceiling. Be sure to round off measurements to the next largest foot to allow for cutting and trimming. Mouldings are available in lengths of three to 16 feet at most local home centers, building suppply stores or lumber dealers.

For most moulding work, the tools required include a simple miter box for cutting accurate 45 and 90 degree angles, a hammer, nail set, finishing nails, a small fine-tooth saw, a tape measure, glue, sandpaper and wood filler.

Once the ceiling moulding is applied, it can be stained or painted to blend or contrast with the color of the ceiling.

Wood mouldings around the lighting fixture, the windows and the ends of the coffee table add interest and depth to what might have been an ordinary room.

Experts answer energy questions

Despite growing interest in energy and energy savings, homeowners continue to be plagued by such questions as the amount of insulation they need and the proper material to install.

In response to these kinds of questions, the CertainTeed Home Institute has developed its own version of the "Ten Most Wanted List." From questions asked most frequently by concerned homeowners, here are the Home Institute's Ten Most Wanted Answers:

How does insulation work?

Heat naturally flows from warmer to cooler spaces. During the winter heating season, warmth is flowing from your heated living areas to adjacent unheated areas - attics, garages, basements and then directly outdoors. In the summer, warmth from outdoors flows into the rooms you are trying to keep cool. Insulation guards against this heat transfer by providing a barrier to block the flow of heat. The end result: warmer in winter, cooler in summer.

Does my house need insulation?

Because most houses were built when energy was cheap and abundant, the amount of insulation in your home is probably not adequate by today's standards. In fact, if you have already added some insulation, you may find that even this is inadequate in view of the rapid rate at which energy costs are rising. Anything less than 10 inches (R-30) of figer glass building insulation in the attic is inadequate regardless of where you live. For many parts of the country, 12 inches or more is recommended.

Why should I insulate?

As a homeowner, there are three basic reasons to add insulation: to save money, to save energy and to increase your personal comfort. Adequate amounts of insulation will enable you to use less energy to heat and cool your home so you'll be saving money year after year. (Savings vary.) You'll also be conserving energy, a valuable and limited resource. In addition, proper amounts of insulation help to maintain uniform temperatures throughout a house, thereby increasing personal comfort.

What is an R-Value?

An R-value is the measure of an insulating material's resistance to heat flow. The higher the R-value, the greater the insulating power. Specific thicknesses of insulation are recommended to achieve certain R-values.

How much insulation do I need?

If your attic has six inches or less of insulaiton, at least the equivalent of six-inch thick R-19 fiber glass building insulation should be added, according to government recommendations. If your attic has no insulation, 10-inch thick R-30 fiber glass building insulation is recommended.

Where can insulation be added?

Insulation can be added to almost any house. And wherever structural framing is exposed (such as unfinished attic floors), you can install it yourself.

What kind of insulation should I use?

The most popular kind of insulation among homeowners today is fiber glass, which is available in rolls and batts for easy installation. Fiber glass is an extremely effective insulating material, because it contains millions of tiny pockets that resist the flow of heat. In addition, fiber glass insulation won't deteriorate with age and, unlike some other kinds of insulating materials, it is noncombustible.

Can I add insulation myself?

Wherever wood framing is exposed, as in the joists of an attic floor or along an unfinished garage wall, adding insulation is a job you can do yourself. Wherever the frame is concealed, however, as in finished walls, or if your home is not a frame construction, special equipment is necessary and the services of a professional insulation contractor are recommended.

How much will I save by adding insulation?

Although the amount of energy you will save depends on where you live, the size of your home and its construction, the Department of Energy estimates that insulation can be expected to pay for itself through fuel savings in three to five years, sometimes even more quickly.

What is the energy-saving tax credit?

If your home was substantially built before April 20, 1977 and you install insulation yourself or have it installed in your attic, wall or floor, you are eligible for a tax credit of 15 percent of the first $2,000 you spend for both material and labor, up to a maximum of $300. A tax credit differs from a tax deduction because it is subtracted from your final tax bill and not from your gross income. The tax credit is scheduled to expire at the end of 1985.

You can put colors to work for you

When repainting a room, be aware that colors can create optical illusions. For instance, if a ceiling is too high, a darker color than that used on the walls will make the ceiling appear lower.

On the other hand, a too-low ceiling can be made to appear higher if it is painted a lighter color than the walls.

A too small room can seem more spacious with the use of light colors.

Storm windows solve winter weather woes

It won't be long before winter winds howl out of the north right through the gaps or cracks around your windows. With openings for cold air to get inside your home, the extra energy needed to keep you house comfortably warm could be substantial and expensive. Storm windows can solve the problem and save you money.

Even if there are no openings around your windows, they can be conducting heat from inside your home to the outside. If your current windows have only one pane of glass (single glazed), that glass will absorb heat from the inside of your house and transfer it to the outside, where it does you no good. But if you eliminate the direct exposure of your window glass to the cold air on the outside, the glass will conduct far less heat and you will not have to use as much energy to keep your house warm. One way of doing this is to install storm windows.

Properly installed storm windows can fill the cracks and openings around old windows and provide a second window glazing to repel the coldest winter weather.

Modern aluminum storm windows installed over original windows that have been correctly caulked as well as weather stripped can reduce window heat loss by as much as 40 percent. They can also save on summer cooling loss.

Because of the energy they conserve, storm windows often pay for themselves in approximately five years. Also, you may be entitled to a federal income tax credit of up to $300 in 1985 if your home qualifies.

It's a good idea to compare the construction of various windows. A tightly-fitted window with strong corners is much more energy efficient than prime windows. Quality storm windows have thick weather stripping and heavy glass, and joints in the frames are neat and strong. A storm window made of thinner materials may not be as durable or reliable as well constructed windows.

With the variety of colors available in aluminum storm windows are particularly effective. For a beige or cream-colored house, you might consider brown aluminum storm windows; for a yellow house, bronze windows.

Most aluminum storm windows today are multiple track units with screens that slide into place or can be stored out of the way during the winter. This eliminates the time and effort of taking down and putting up screens every fall and spring.

Attractive, sturdy, properly installed storm windows, in addition to improving the appearance of your house, conserving energy and making you more comfortable, will reduce the level of exterior noise entering the house and protect the original windows from the elements. By decreasing the original window's exposure to inclement weather, a storm window will reduce the maintenance and repainting costs of original windows.

A LETTER TO:

Ms. Krances Limberlips, Manager
Dead Beat Apartments
666 Crab Grass Alleyway
Bug Gulch, Texas 7777

THE JUNCTION APARTMENTS

Dear Ms. Limberlips.

This is to advise you that I have moved from apartment #13 at the Dead Beat Apartments.

Ms. Limberlips, do you remember last Monday, when I called to inform you that my air conditioner was out and it was 118 degrees inside my refrigerator and that my cat, Rufus, had died of a heat stroke? (God rest his nine lives). And when I asked when my air could be repaired you suggested a long vacation to Siberia...and you even offered to loan me your skunk parka and your St. Bernard. Now, Ms. Limberlips, I thought that suggestion was in very poor taste. I can't forget the fact that your St. Bernard ate my poor parakeet, "Tweety Pie." (God rest his soft feathers).

So my dear lady, on FRIDAY, I moved to the JUNCTION APARTMENTS and they are PAYING MY ELECTRIC BILL!! (and all my utilities) I'm relaxing in front of this sparkling pool right next door to my apartment. I have a fireplace washer/dryer connections, an all electric kitchen, a gigantic storage closet, a lofted bedroom and a bathroom that is really unique. My rent is only $390.00, and I only have one check to write each month!

The JUNCTION management team have a warm and friendly (PROFESSIONAL) attitude, sort of likened to Mary Poppins, but I've heard that they are worse than Adolph Hitler's Third Reich when it comes to dealing with inconsiderates and undersirables. (So, I will keep my nose clean and my stereo turned down.)

The maintenance guys are courteous and prompt. They are on call 24 hours.

The JUNCTION security officers are BIG fellows, and to be respected. The Manager tells me that the JUNCTION staff is the best in the west! And I agree...

So, Ms. Limberlips, you can send all my mail to THE JUNCTION APARTMENTS, 1902 Midland Drive, Midland, Texas... Instead of a Siberian vacation, please send all your unhappy residents to the JUNCTION, or have them call 699-5168.

Yours truly,

John Henry

AIDS: Virus of Fear

EDITOR'S NOTE: AIDS — Acquired Immmune Deficiency Syndrome — continues to cause deaths and fear worldwide. This is the first of a six-part series, running through Friday, about how various cities are coping with the mysterious killer.

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Despite its squeaky-clean appearance, Midland has not escaped the flood of AIDS awareness sweeping the country.

With only one reported case in Odessa and two suspected cases in Midland, however, the Permian Basin has remained largely immune to the dreaded disease, which leaves its hosts emaciated and vulnerable to uncommon and deadly diseases.

"We've had only the case in Odessa and two suspected cases so far," said Jim Davis of the Midland Health Department. "We've got a couple of referrals for blood tests as well."

The number of cases reported in the entire state seem disproportionately small compared to its population, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga.

"There has been 13,228 reported cases in the entire country as of Sept. 16," said a CDC spokesman. "Only 656 of those were in Texas."

In comparison, New York and California are suffering an epidemic with 4,433 and 2,833 cases respectively, according to the latest figures. Florida follows with 866 cases.

Still, the fear has hit Midland. Area health clinics and blood banks have been preparing for a possible outbreak of AIDS here. The only locally reported case surfaced in Dec. 1984, when the Ector County Health Department announced the first official AIDS diagnosis in the Permian Basin.

Area blood banks were quick to respond.

IN EARLY March, Midland Memorial Hospital ordered kits to test blood for antibodies indicating AIDS. The test, manufactured by Abbott Laboratories of North Chicago, has been praised by U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services as "the answer to the prayers of thousands of Americans facing surgery or otherwise requiring blood."

AIDS
FIRST OF A SIX-PART SERIES

The test was the first of several released by national laboratories to be approved by HHS for screening donated blood.

The tests proved valuable to the MMH blood bank, which by August reported there were no AIDS viruses present in the tested donated blood samples.

"We feel that this is an indicator of our donor population," said Dr. Elisa Hall, an MMH staff pathologist, in August. She said the test has less than a one percent error margin and still produced no positive responses.

Two weakly "positive" test results proved negative after re-testing.

Less than a month after MMH began testing, Midland's health department announced that a federally-financed "testing site" would be opened here.

The free clinic was designed to screen individuals who might otherwise donate blood just to have it tested so they could determine if they may have been exposed to the AIDS virus. Money for the program — $7,000 — was received in May when the testing began.

"Offering the screening test to those in the high-risk AIDS group may prevent these individuals from flocking to blood banks under the pretext of giving blood," Davis said in early May.

ALTHOUGH THIS testing program in Midland and Odessa was planned to last 60 days, Davis indicated at the time that if the response was not sufficient within a 30-day period the clinics would be shut down.

By the end of May, the health department reported that testing was slow with "only a couple of people showing up." On June 19, plans to scrap the AIDS screening program were announced by the department.

"Due to a lack of interest, the program will terminate at the end of June instead of July 26 as originally scheduled," said Davis at the time. "At $100 per test, I felt it was an unnecessary use of public money."

Davis attributed the small response to "public apathy" about what the test results mean and "fear."

"Let's face it," he said. "We're dealing with a disease that has a mortality rate of 50 percent. People don't want to know."

Ector County Health Dept. announced at the same time that they would also end their AIDS program earlier than scheduled.

By Aug. 1, however, with extended financial support through October guaranteed by the federal government to the state health department, Midland's health department announced it would continue offering the tests "to anyone who wanted to be tested" even though the clincs were closed.

Currently, the department is still offering free testing for the AIDS antibody, although Davis admits, he doesn't know for how much longer.

"We're waiting to see what they do in Austin," he said Tuesday. "We will probably know something in another month."

Solving the Mystery and Stopping the Epidemic

WASHINGTON (AP) — It has been less than five years since the first signs of the AIDS epidemic were recognized in the United States. Less than five years since doctors first puzzled over a rare cancer unaccountably afflicting young men.

In the first weeks and months, the mystery deepened. The young men were almost exclusively homosexuals. They suffered from a variety of strange ailments. An unusual form of pneumonia. Rampant fungal infections.

Illnesses struck in waves, until doctors realized the young men had been stripped naked of their defenses.

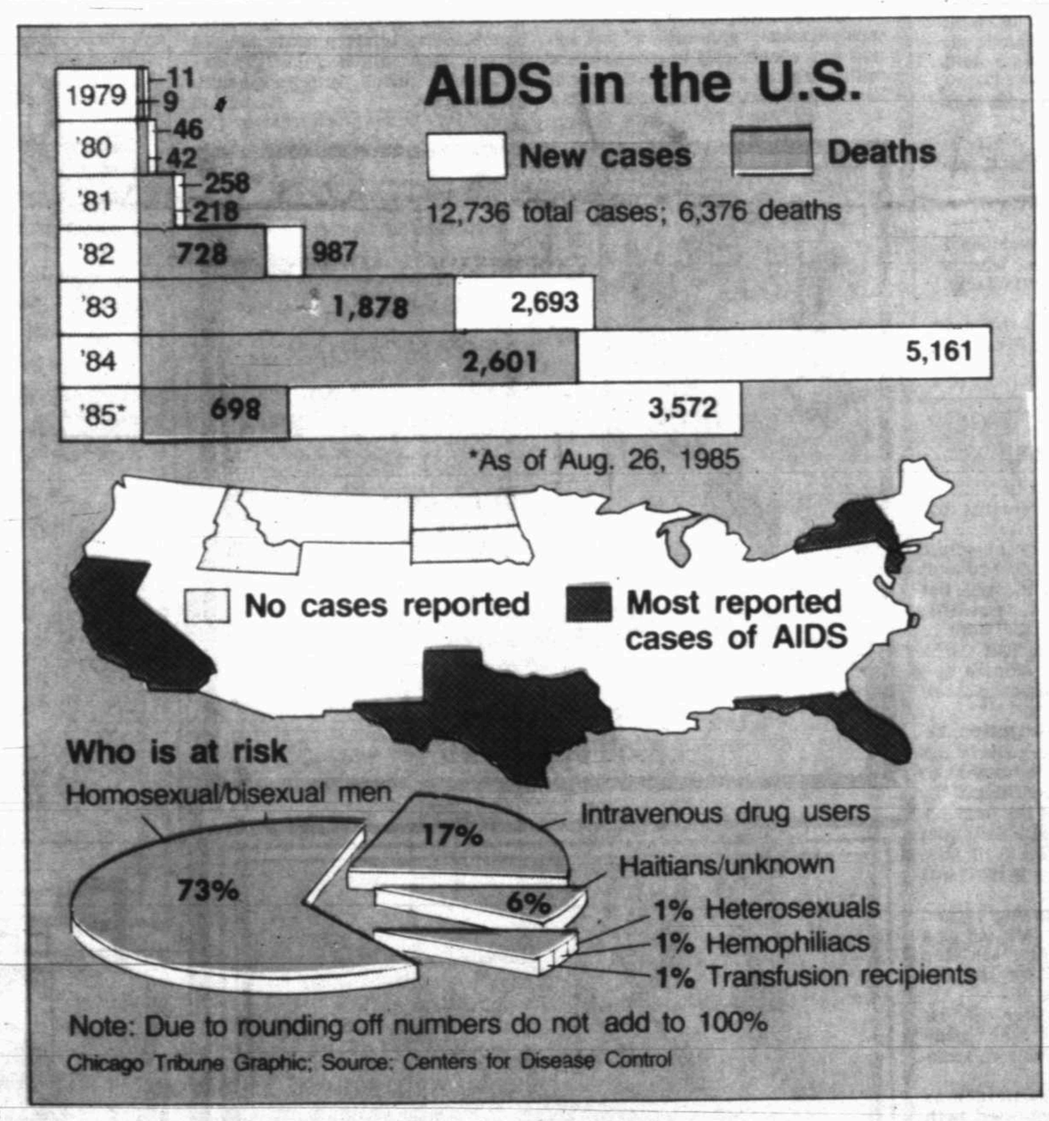

The dawning awareness that the strange diseases were but symptoms of a more profound disorder triggered a painstaking, methodical scientific investigation. In a few years scientists have accumulated an enormous amount of information about what is now called the acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

They know its targets, its cause, its means of spreading, its effects.

"There's no disease in the history of medicine where the basic science has moved faster," said Dr. Robert Gallo of the National Cancer Institute, one of the discoverers of the virus now known to cause AIDS.

However, the remarkable discoveries have not led to a treatment. The illness remains incurable. And the much discussed vaccine to prevent spread of the illness to healthy people remains a hope, a dream.

Research is progressing rapidly on both fronts. Doctors have identified several promising drugs that might at least stop growth of the virus in its victims, if not destroy it altogether. Human experimentation has begun.

IN THE second area of investigation, scientists are working very hard to prevent the spread of the disease with a vaccine.

Numerous findings hint that the development of an AIDS vaccine might be possible. No one can say when.

At the center of efforts to develop an anti-AIDS drug is Dr. Samuel Broder, director of the National Cancer Institute's clinical oncology program, which conducts human trials of experimental cancer therapies.

"I feel that the virus that causes AIDS can be stopped," said Broder. "The question I don't know is how long that will take."

Advances to date encourage "me to think that it will not be in the very distant future," he said.

Among the encouraging signs are the rapid progress in deciphering the genetic code of the virus, the discovery of a viral gene that boosts the virus's replication, the production of workable quantities of viral fragments that can be tested as possible candidates for a vaccine, and the development, in his lab, of a quick screening test to evaluate possible anti-AIDS drugs.

The test allows Broder and colleagues to determine in four or five days whether a new drug has any activity against the AIDS virus.

"What you can do is carry on a dialogue between a virus and a new agent," he explained. "You can make minor modifications of the molecule and do your own little interrogatories with the system.

"So you can very quickly find the inherent structure of the molecule you want to deal with. And we believe, at least in one family of drugs, that we have a blueprint for how to chemically engineer drugs that have quite a startling activity against the virus."

ONE OF those drugs is now in the first stage of human testing.

In a nearby building on the campus of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., where the cancer institute is located, Dr. Anthony Fauci of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases is investigating a natural substance called interleukin-2 that seems to boost the immune system.

Other such drugs are being investigated elsewhere, and many researchers, including Broder, are coming to believe that AIDS treatment might, like cancer treatment, ultimately consist of doses of multiple drugs either together or in sequence.

"Therapy is likely to be required for a long period of time," said Broder. "Whatever therapies are found, they will have to at least be given on an intermittent basis, and possibly intermittently for the rest of the patient's life."

The Toll Mounts

Associated Press

An hour after doctors told Terry Dangelo there was a chance he had AIDS, the 34-year-old patient crawled through a bathroom window at St. Luke's Hospital in New York and plunged seven stories to his death.

His suicide dramatizes more than one man's private sickness and despair. It also reflects the struggle of an entire nation to cope — physically, emotionally, financially or morally — with a mysterious killer.

The panic has become far more contagious than AIDS itself.

Since the first case of acquired immune deficiency syndrome came to light four years ago, the fear, often unfounded, has infected hospitals, funeral homes, schools, prisons, military barracks and even churches across the country.

"In lives lost, in tears shed, the toll is uncountable," said Paul G. Popham, president of the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York.

They are the tears of a Massachusetts mother who brought her dead son's clothes to the hospital so she could dress his corpse herself after funeral homes refused to handle the body of an AIDS victim.

They are the tears of a stricken 5-year-old in San Diego whose playmates are forbidden by their parents to come near him.

And they are the lives of hundreds of AIDS victims suddenly evicted from homes, fired from jobs and shunned by society in their neediest hour for the same sad reason: They are dying of something we are powerless to control.

Symptoms and Myths

NEW YORK (AP) — AIDS is a hidden disease that reveals itself indirectly through the myriad infections and cancers that develop in its wake.

AIDS can be seen directly only by examination of the blood for presence of the AIDS virus and for the disarray that it causes in the immune system.

The principal players in the immune system are the white blood cells. AIDS attacks a particular type of white blood cell called the T-4 lymphocyte, sometimes known as a helper cell.

This cell is one of the most important in the immune system, because it governs the activity of many other types of white cells. That is why AIDS is so devastating. It disrupts many of the complex activities of the body's immune system, which protects it against disease.

The secondary illnesses that occur in AIDS patients are often referred to as "opportunistic" disorders because they are rare except in patients whose immune systems are compromised by AIDS, by cancer chemotherapy or by other unusual conditions.

The opportunistic diseases include an unusual pneumonia caused by the Pneumocystis carinii parasite; Kaposi's sarcoma, a previously rare cancer that appears as purplish blotches on the skin; yeast and other fungal infections, and meningitis.

Prolonged fever, weight loss and swollen lymph glands can represent early forms of the disease. Conditions that can precede AIDS include lymphadenopathy (swollen glands) and an emerging disease called ARC, for AIDS-related complex.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Neither rainy weather nor Friday the 13th could put a hex on the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's September luncheon. The meeting got the fall season off to a resounding start with internationally known entertainer and singer John Gary in an encore performance before the group.

Backed by piano, bass and drums, John mesmerized his audience with his rendering of ballads and show tunes, including music from "Oklahoma" and "Camelot." He accompanied himself on the guitar during part of his performance.

John not only delighted the audience with his musical virtuosity, His impressions of popular male vocalists of the past and his clever commentary kept the ladies thoroughly entertained.

In many ways, the program was a trip down memory lane for me. When John sang several cowboy songs, I was reminded of the western movies I attended faithfully every Saturday afternoon as a child. His Johnnie Ray imitation brought to mind the 45 rpm records I collected of Johnnie and other singers as a teen-ager. I'm sure others in the audience had their own memories as his hour-long show of romantic and sentimental tunes unfolded.

John is described as a total entertainer, having appeared in night clubs, motion pictures, theater, concerts and television, also making his mark as a recording artist. A native of Watertown, N.Y., John has resided in Dallas with his family for the past 15 years.

A delicious crepes luncheon was served at tables decorated with colorful floral centerpieces. Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Susan (Mrs. Verne) Griffith, Betsy (Mrs. Edwin) Dwyer and Dee (Mrs. Ken) Dean.

Among those spotted in the audience were Leona Bryant Smith, Mary (Mrs. Dick) Anderson, Kathy (Mrs. Randy) Martin, Polly (Mrs. Ferrell) Davis, Mary (Mrs. Jim) Rasmussen, Ada (Mrs. W.D.) Anderson, Charlotte (Mrs. Newnie) Ellis, Marilyn (Mrs. Ed) Hooper and Robbie (Mrs. Roy) Davidson.

THREE MIDLAND COUPLES, Dilly and Shorty Nance, Dorothy and Homer Nance and Vera and Paul Wecker, enjoyed an extended bus tour during the summer that logged over 6,000 miles and included a variety of scenic and interesting sights in the Western United States and Canada.

En route to Canada, their itinerary included Colorado, Utah, Nevada, California, Oregon and Washington. Crossing over the border, they visited Victoria and Vancouver in British Columbia, Glacier National Park, Yoho National Park and Banff National Park. Departing Canada at Lethbridge, they returned home by way of Montana, Yellowstone National Park and the Grand Teton National Forest in Wyoming and Colorado Springs.

The tour was accompanied by an entertaining guide and a competent driver. In addition, many local guides were enlisted at cities and parks visited along the way to make the trip more meaningful.

THE SANTA RITA CLUB, the Permian Basin Petroleum museum's support group, held its annual "Santa Margarita" party Saturday evening at the home of Vera and Dick Powers. The event is held each fall in honor of the Santa Rita Discovery in 1923.

Members and guests enjoyed a Mexican buffet and Margaritas. Pinatas and other South of the Border decorations were used throughout the party area.

Phyllis (Mrs. Robert) Stine, social chairman, and Donna Nash, assistant chairman, were in charge of arrangements.

MARJORIE (MRS. DAN) KOZAK recently enjoyed a visit in Santa Fe with her daughter, Danette (Mrs. Ron) Wright, who was vacationing there. Danette, who has been a frequent visitor to New Mexico's capital since her childhood and was married there two years ago, rented a house on the city's historic east side for a six-week stay. Her husband commuted from the couple's home in LaJolla, Calif., on weekends.

Dan joined Marjorie and the Wrights over Labor Day weekend, and the foursome enjoyed many fun events, including dinner at the well-known Mexican resturant, Rancho de Chimayo, where Marjorie's sister, Jacki (Mrs. John) McCarty, sings and plays the guitar.

During her Santa Fe visit, Marjorie was entertained by Jacki with a Mexican buffet luncheon at the McCarty home. Among the Santa Feans present was ex-Midlander, Betty (Mrs. Dick) Daley, who previously taught with Marjorie at Trinity School.

Marjorie, who formerly taught Spanish as well as French, enjoyed practicing her Spanish with special guest Gloria Avila of Torreon, Mexico, who speaks no English. She is the wife of renowned guitarist Antonio Avila, who is currently performing with Jacki.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Sleep suggestions for seniors offered

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is 71 years of age and in pretty good shape, but he complains that he has trouble sleeping at night. I don't want him to go through a whole series of tests and things like that because the problem is not really a very serious one. But would you have any general suggestions about what a person like my father could do to get more sleep? — Ms. E.S., Dayton, Ohio

Dear Ms. S.: Dr. James C. Ballenger, of the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston, has a number of suggestions that would appear to be applicable in your father's case. He recommends that elderly patients should avoid stimulants such as caffeine after midafternoon, should exercise during the day or early evening, and should try to avoid becoming involved in any stressful activity for at least two hours before going to bed.

Some of my own patients tell me that a light snack before they go to bed at night helps them sleep better; however, I would not recommend this for everyone.

Finally, I suggest that your father go to be only when he is tired. If he has trouble falling asleep he should get out of bed and do something else until he does begin to feel tired and in need of sleep.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine was in an automobile accident and suffered a ruptured spleen. What I would like to know is whether it is ever possible for the spleen to rupture without the person being involved in an accident. — Anthony, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Anthony: A spontaneous rupture of the spleen is not very common, but it does happen. Some of the conditions associated with spontaneous rupture of the spleen include infectious mononucleosis and hemophilia.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a nephew who is allergic to mercury. Does that mean that he cannot get silver fillings for his teeth? — Anne, Philadelphia

Dear Anne: As you imply in your letter, silver fillings contain mercury, and some people are allergic to mercury. These people, according to Dr. Sebastian G. Ciancio, of the State University of New York at Buffalo, should not get silver fillings. However, your nephew belongs to a select group. Only about one percent of the population is allergic to mercury.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Has the insulin pump been used long enough for doctors to be able to say that it is or is not safe? — Mr. T.Q., Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Mr. Q.: The results of an analysis of 3,500 patients with diabetes who were using insulin pumps indicate that this type of treatment is at least as safe as treatment provided through more conventional means.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If milk is said to be pasteurized, does that mean that it contains vitamin D? — Liz, NYC

Dear Liz: Pasteurization and fortification are not the same. Both pasteurized and raw milk may have been fortified with added vitamin D.

Dear Dr. Solomon: There have been lots of jokes about people from the United States who go to Mexico and get diarrhea. But when Mexicans come to the United States, they eat food and drink water that they are not accustomed to. Do they get diarrhea when they are here? — Mr. G.Y., Omaha, Neb.

Dear Mr. Y.: Mexican tourists often develop diarrhea while in the United States.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to increase the amount of calcium I have in my diet, and I know that cheese and other dairy products and things like yogurt contain a lot of calcium. But are there any other foods that also have a good amount? — Mrs. J.T., New Orleans, La.

Dear Mrs. T.: A good source of calcium is sardines when eaten with the bones. Incidentally, not all cheeses are high in calcium. Cream cheese, cottage cheese, and soft cheese such as mozzarella contain smaller amounts of calcium than do Swiss and Gruyere cheese.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My pediatrician has informed me that there are as many children who died from choking on food as from poisoning. I find this hard to believe. Can it be true? — Mrs. J.U., Milwaukee

Dear Mrs. U.: Although the subject receives much less publicity, it is true that as many children die from food-related choking as do from poisoning. The lesson to be learned from this is that parents should be careful about the kinds of foods they permit their children to have. For example, such foods as peanuts or hard, round candies should be kept away from children under 4 or 5 years of age. In addition, children should not be given food that has to be chewed until they have a complete set of teeth. This would usually mean about two years of age.

The most dangerous types of food for young children are round, hard, or the kind that slips easily down the throat. In one study, it was found that the single food that was most responsible for choking deaths was hot dogs. Other foods that were implicated included nuts, grapes, cookies and carrots. Hot dogs and grapes in particular can cause a tight plug in a child's airway, which is small and easily blocked.

The results of the study previously mentioned, which only covered children under 10 years of age, showed that the risk of choking on food was highest in those 1 and 2 years of age, and fell significantly at 3 years of age. More than 90 percent of the children who died were under age 5.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If the sex of an athlete makes no difference as to whether he or she will suffer an injury, would you please explain why a recent article I read shows that women athletes are more likely to have an injury than are male athletes? — Mr. J.S., Albuquerque, N.M.

Dear Mr. S.: I do not know the article to which you are referring. My guess is that what it shows is that women may be more susceptible to athletic injuries than male athletes because they are not as well conditioned as the men.

I am aware of reports that showed that women enrolled in the military academies had more injuries than their male counterparts, but these women had not be conditioned as well as the men. Women athletes who have been through a good conditioning program have an injury rate about the same as men.

For Charlie, Columbia, Md: Prostate cancer may be a cause of back pain. That is probably the reason your physician recommended a rectal examination.

Hypertension hits millions

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 37 million Americans have high blood pressure, according to "Medical Access," a new health care book.

This condition, known as hypertension, usually gives no warning signals and contributes to more than a million deaths a year, says the book. Blood pressure, which fluctuates with every heart beat, is highest when the heart contracts and lowest when it relaxes.

The book, co-sponsored by American Medical International, aims at helping the public gain "greater knowledge about America's health care system."

Disease worries military

Associated Press

A battlefield. Wounded soldiers look to comrades for blood transfusions. Should the medics check donors for AID virus? If the blood is tainted, should they use it to save lives now and risk deadly infection later?

A nuclear weapons depot. A valued officer shows symptoms of AIDS. Does the diagnosis mean the man is homosexual, an anathema in the military? Does the doctor report his findings to the man's superiors?

These are some questions facing military leaders as fears grow about the threat of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The Defense Department announced late last month that the 320,000 recruits who enter the military each year will have their blood tested for the disease. Those who show signs of AIDS would be rejected.

The announcement came before the Armed Forces Epidemiological Board, a panel of civilian medical experts, completed a study on ways to prevent AIDS in the military.

"It was thought that because of the growing threat and spread of this disease that any initiative we can take is prudent and sound medical judgment,' said Julian Barber, an assistant to the assistant secretary for Health Affairs at the Pentagon.

Eighty-nine members of the military and 28 dependents have been diagnosed with AIDS since 1981, the year the medical community first took notice of the frightening sickness that cripples the body's immune system.

At least 36 of those military victims have died.

These cases represent only a fraction of the 2.2 million men and women in uniform and the 12,932 cases of AIDS reported nationally, but Dr. Edmund Tramont, an Army colonel and and expert in infectious diseases at the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research, predicts that more than 1,000 military personnel and their dependents will show signs of AIDS next year.

A major concern is contamination of the military blood supply. While blood can be tested for AIDS antibodies, the tests are not conclusive. In war, there's no time to test.

"If the balloon goes up and we are in battle somewhere, everybody in uniform is a potential blood bank," said Tramont.

Indications that AIDS, which has been primarily identified with homosexuals and drug abusers, is crossing over to the general population have increased concern in the military, where venereal disease is already six times more prevalent than in the public at large.

One study of military personnel with AIDS found that most probably contracted the disease through heterosexual activities, possibly through prostitutes. There were indications that more than half the infected servicemen and women may have passed the disease to their spouses.

The continuing connection between AIDS and homosexuals brings the military's ban on homosexuals into conflict with the confidentiality of the physician-patient relationship.

Gay rights groups complain that testing recruits for AIDS antibodies could be used to weed out homosexuals.

"We've always been concerned that the test would be misused as a marker for homosexuality," said Ron Najman, a spokesman for the National Gay Task Force.

Military officials counter that recruits are also tested for other medical problems such as sickle cell anemia and measles.

"We don't make assumptions about the lifestyles connected with the disease," said Patti Turner, a spokeswoman for the Air Force Surgeon General's office.

However, the military has acted against AIDS victims.

Petty Officer 3rd Class Byron Kinney had served for seven years when doctors on Okinawa found he was suffering from AIDS. He admitted to doctors that he was a homosexual.

"Byron, realizing he was sick and needed treatment, told the truth," said his attorney, Tom Homann. "He thought it would be between him and his doctor."

The information made its way to Navy officials, however, who want to sever Kinney from the service and its medical benefits. Kinney, now in a San Diego Naval hospital, is fighting for a medical discharge.

The case is in federal court, where it may set a precedent. Military officials, however, say they cannot always honor doctor-patient relationships.

"If a person has an active infectious disease and is living in close proximity with others, the services feel it is certainly appropriate that the man's superiors know this," said Barber.

He denied the military was punishing AIDS victims.

"If a person admits he has engaged in homosexual conduct, that is a violation of the miltary code and the person will be discharged," he said. "We do not discharge people because they have contract AIDS. We do because they are homosexual."

TOLL — AIDS

A recent Gallup Poll showed 66 percent of the 1,545 adults surveyed believe there is a great danger that AIDS will soon spread to all kinds of people in our country.

Five years ago, the word was not even in our vocabulary. Today, AIDS appears in supermarket tabloids as well as medical journals, on talk shows and in everyday conversation. It evokes feelings of fear, despair, hopelessness, anger, loneliness, helplessness, hysteria.

In Stamford, Conn., 15 prospective jurors were excused from a murder trial because the defendant, brought to court by deputies wearing rubber gloves, has AIDS and the jurors felt they could not judge him fairly.

"There is a real fine line between educating people and panicking them," said Lori Behrman, a GMHC spokeswoman. "Already, we're crossing that line."

With some 814 unexplained cases of AIDS among the 12,932 cases nationwide, there is growing public concern that the virus has jumped the boundaries of the U.S. high-risk groups — homosexual and bisexual males, intravenous drug users and hemophiliacs and other recipients of blood and blood products. The CDC believes the percentage of cases with unknown origins is high because Haitians were recently dropped from the high-risk category and put into this group.

"Many people have misperceptions about how it's spread," said CDC spokesman Charles Fallis. "There's a lot of fear out there."

AIDS is considered an epidemic in the gay community but not the general population, Fallis stressed.

"Our researchers do not ever expect AIDS to become epidemic among the heterosexual population," Fallis told The Associated Press.

A total of 14,811 cases of AIDS have been reported in 43 countries around the world. In this country, the disease has spread to almost every state over the past three years, with the majority concentrated in New York City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Miami and Newark, N.J.

In those five cities combined, an average of about 14 new AIDS cases and five deaths are reported daily.

Although the number of cases is increasing rapidly, AIDS is not the plague that alarmist headlines in supermarket tabloids would suggest. By comparison, pneumonia and influenza claim the lives of nearly 50,000 Americans each year.

"The people who are at the lowest risk are the ones most obsessed," observed Barry Davidson, director of community information at the Gay Men's Health Crisis.

News that Rock Hudson was fighting AIDS unleashed a new flood of calls to AIDS hotlines. Again and again, the volunteers answering the calls tell people the same things: No, you cannot get AIDS from a public toilet. No, you cannot get it through casual contact, such as touching an AIDS patient. No, it is not transmitted by mosquitoes.

"You're going to create more problems for yourself by worrying," Davidson counsels an anxious caller on the GMHC hotline one recent evening. "You're obsessed. You have none of the symptoms. You'd better get yourself to a psychiatrist."

By far, the most isolated victims of AIDS are the children and drug abusers. A social worker at Jacobi Hospital in the Bronx put out an appeal to AIDS patients to visit five hospitalized AIDS babies ranging from 6 months to 3 years old.

"They have little or no parental care or visiting, and consistent visitors are being sought to pick up, hug, love and help toilet train," read the small ad in a newsletter for AIDS patients.

SYMPTOMS

Doctors can not say with any certainty whether lymphadenopathy and ARC will go on to develop into AIDS.

AIDS in America is almost exclusively limited to people in what the government's Centers for Disease Control have labeled "high risk groups" — homosexuals, hemophiliacs and intravenous drug abusers.

Despite myths to the contary, alvidence amassed to date indicates that the AIDS virus is not easily spread, and that it cannot be spread through casual contact.

Numerous medical workers have reported accidentally pricking their fingers with needles used on AIDS patients, and yet the disease so far has not spread to doctors, nurses or technicians.

It can be passed to children at birth from mothers who may have acquired it because they are drug abusers and have shared needles with others who have AIDS.

Hemophiliacs were exposed to AIDS through the frequent blood transfusions they require, although screening tests now used to check donor blood for the presence of AIDS virus have nearly eliminated the virus from the U.S. blood supply, officials say.

Research has shown that the AIDS virus may be present in the saliva and even the tears of its victims.

Yet family members of AIDS victims do not contract the disease, except through sexual contact.

The ease with which AIDS can be spread to heterosexuals is now a matter of debate. The U.S. Army has become concerned enough to issue warnings to its personnel that AIDS can spread like other venereal diseases.

The disease has not spread among heterosexuals as fast as it has through homosexuals, however, suggesting that different forms of sexual activity might pose different risks of spreading the disease.

The reason, he said, is that the AIDS virus apparently can lay dormant in cells, where it can be periodically re-activated "by signals we don't know," Broder said. The virus can even insert a genetic copy of itself into the genetic material of a living human cell.

"As long as it's laying there quietly, you can't get at it. It may be difficult to know it's there," he said.

Most of the existing strategies for fighting AIDS are designed to attack the virus's reproduction. An essential element of the reproduction is an enzyme called reverse transcriptase, which the virus uses to translate its genetic material — RNA, or ribonucleic acid — into human-type genetic material — DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid.

If reverse transcriptase is blocked, the virus cannot reproduce.

The cancer institute and other researchers have had some success in very early tests with suramin, a drug that has long been known to interfere with reverse transcriptase, although no one knows how it does so.

HPA 23, the French drug that lured Rock Hudson and other American AIDS patients to Paris, also blocks reverse transcriptase.

Broder believes new compounds now being devised will be better than either of these, and his quick-screening test to determine drug activity against AIDS is allowing him to proceed as rapidly as possible in developing additional candidates for future human testing.

He tempers his optimism, however, with experiences from cancer research.

"There are obstacles that cannot necessarily be foreseen in doing a translation of a basic science observation into a clinical practice," he said. "That can be a real unknown."

The search for a vaccine is equally full of unknowns. Heartening discoveries one week are offset by discouraging findings the next.

Gallo has reported that samples of AIDS virus can vary in the make-up of the so-called viral envelope, the outer surface or "skin" of the virus.

That is one of the most disturbing features of the virus, he said. A second is that it attacks the very cell that protects the body from viral infections, a white blood cell called the T-cell.

"If this virus happened to evolve the third weapon, of being virulent — that is, passing quickly from one person to another — you would have to regard it as the most dangerous organism in the history of man," Gallo said.

The virus does not seem to be evolving in that direction, Gallo said, and researchers still maintain the virus cannot spread through casual contact. And Gallo remains optimistic.

"I would never answer that it cannot be stopped, even if I firmly believed it. It would raise and enormous alarm ... and who can predict unexpected new technology?" he said.

A precedent for an AIDS vaccine exists in a recently marketed vaccine to protect cats from leukemia. The leukemia is caused by feline leukemia virus, an organism similar to the AIDS virus that can also cause AIDS in cats.

While that is a hopeful development, it is tempered by the vaccine's effectiveness: it works in only about half of the cases. For human AIDS, said Gallo, "that's not good enough."

Vaccine development is tricky. A vaccine must mimic a disease organism, thus causing the body to mount an attack against it, but must not cause disease.

Once the body has developed an immunity to the vaccine agent, it should be able to quickly find and kill the corresponding disease agent.

Researchers are now looking for a substance on the outside of the AIDS virus, in a position where the body's immune system can see it, that is common to all variations of the virus and thus would provide complete protection.

Then they must determine whether the substance is capable of stimulating the body's defenses. Some substances are, others aren't.

An initial assessment of a possible vaccine agent is being made at the cancer institute by Dr. Peter Fischinger, the institute's associate director, and others.

Rhesus monkeys have been injected with the substance, which was extracted from the envelope of AIDS virus samples. The substance did stimulate their immune systems.

Soon researchers will inject AIDS virus into the monkeys to see whether they are protected. It is unlikely they will be, Fischinger said, noting that few experiments work the first time. But if the monkeys have even partial resistance to the virus, the experiment will be judged a success.

Fischinger and colleagues can then refine and alter the vaccine agent to try to enhance its effectiveness.

Mysteries remain. Not all people exposed to the AIDS virus develop AIDS. Are some immune? Or will all of them get AIDS in time? Does it take a large dose of virus or repeated exposure to it to produce the disease?

Will AIDS only take hold in a person whose immune system is already weakened, as one recent study suggested? Do other agents, such as hepatitis B virus, play a contributing role, as another study hints?

A cautious optimism seems to be the attitude of many AIDS researchers. As the illness spreads, they are sustained by a conviction that the virus can, indeed, be stopped.

"I believe," Broder said, "that individuals who do not hold that belief will fail."

Do-it-yourself moving popular

MIAMI (AP) — Four out of five households relocating this fall are handling the move themselves, according to a national survey by Ryder Truck Rental. One-third of them will use rental trucks, the report said, while the majority of other self-movers will use their own or borrowed vehicles.

The typical truck renter, the study indicates, is 24 to 44 years old, with a college degree, a managerial or professional job and a family income of approximately $35,000.

The average long-distance move covers 930 miles and transports 6,500 pounds of household goods at an average cost of $804.

Rose plants can be mobile

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Roses can be grown in containers small enough and mobile enough to suit even the most itinerant apartment dweller, according to a major rose grower.

Jackson & Perkins, a rose nursery, says all that is needed is a planter at least 10 inches in diameter and 13 to 14 inches deep.

A good potting soil, some fertilizer, a little water, and you should get the same good results that people with far more room enjoy.

Married couples work together

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Service

On Wall Street, they're called "power pairs." They are married couples who work for the same company. Larry and Cindy Wanerman are typical of the new breed. Both stockbrokers at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., they sometimes cover each other's clients. And they see working together as an advantage.

"We're not competitive with each other," Cindy insists. "We help each other."

"Power pairs" aren't limited to Wall Street either. Carol and Ray (names changed) are both technologists at General Electric. They were hired together as part of a "package deal" touted by the GE recruiter who visited their college campus last year. About to be wed at the time, Carol and Ray were shown a slide presentation, "Why Dual-Career Couples Work At GE," and were given an impressive sales pitch. They bought it.

Carol says, "We had never even thought about working for the same firm before we met the GE recruiter. He made it sound so good. But we did have some doubts while we were packing the wedding presents and preparing to move."

Ray explains, "We were afraid that working for the same place might make our marriage a little stale. We wouldn't be two people going out into different worlds, then bringing different experiences back into the relationship.

"What if we bored each other to death?"

A decade ago employers either would not permit, or very seriously discouraged, spouses from working together at the same company. They weren't worried about couples boring each other at home. They feared nepotism would cut into job efficiency. Married couples, the reasoning went, wouldn't give full attention to their jobs with their spouses around.

IF A COUPLE met at work and decided to marry, one of them had to leave. The one to go was usually the woman.

"The practice of dismissing women on such grounds came under attack in the courts during the late '70s," says Midwestern lawyer Kathryn Mathias. "It was seen as a form of gender discrimination since women were the ones to go."

Fear of legal action, however, wasn't enough to make employers change their minds about nepotism.

"Our policy has been changed to fit the real world," says George P. Hollenbeck, director of corporate human resources at Merrill Lynch, the largest brokerage firm on Wall Street. Now company policy permits spouses to work together "as long as one is not in a supervisory position over another."

In the "real world," a growing number of women join the workforce each year. Many more now hold managerial positions than a decade ago. The number of women in once male-only professions and technical fields also has increased.

Businesses have found that encouraging couples to work together is often an effective means of attracting and holding talented people. This new way of doing business cuts recruitment costs and the expenses of relocation, encourages executives to accept transfers by also transferring spouses and makes employees less susceptible to offers from other companies.

The wedding of a two-career couple and a company would seem to be a marriage made in heaven — but, as in any marriage, there can be problems.

INDUSTRIAL PSYCHOLOGIST James L. Reed, who is writing a book on the subject, says, "How well it works depends on two factors: the size of the company and the talents of the people involved. Large companies are more likely to have positions for both spouses. But if one spouse has to be fired, no matter what the company size — it creates real problems."

Companies which hire couples are usually large companies with thousands, not tens or hundreds, of jobs to fill. In a small or mid-sized firm, the chances are slimmer of finding two jobs exactly right for a couple. And the odds that someone's career development may be stunted by this restriction increases. Competition between spouses is also more likely to happen within the confines of a smaller space.

Catalyst, a New York non-profit organization which promotes the participation of women in the workforce, last year surveyed 374 of the nation's largest firms on their attitudes toward married employees. Of these firms, 82 percent reported no policy preventing spouses from working for the same company. Many do have restrictions against spouses working within the same job classification or in the same department.

The negative responses (18 percent) came from the smaller firms in the group.

Faye S. certainly understands their reservations.

"I worked at a small city magazine where the editor and assistant editor were married," she says. "He (the editor) overpaid her and everyone resented it. She took his side in every staff dispute.

"Editorial meetings were a joke. He proposed an idea; she seconded it. We stopped voicing opinions. If we disagreed too vocally with him, she punished us in subtle ways, like losing our expense accounts or holding our mail for days."

WHETHER CONDITIONS were really as bad at this magazine as Faye remembers them to be or not is beside the point.

"When other people actively resent the married couple, the company is hurt whether this resentment is justified or not," Reed says.

He believes married couples can only work together successfully at a very small firm if they are absolutely equal in stature — and show each other no extra courtesies on the job.

Co-owners of a business, for instance, have equal power. Even two employees with the same status who scrupulously avoid backing each other up in the office crises or functioning as a team in other ways can work together successfully.

"But then the marriage may suffer," he says, "because the couple may go home angry at each other for not being supportive."

Patricia Krapf, who worked for two years at the same company with her husband, John, says this is exactly what happened to them.

"The couple arrangement may be better for business than it is for marriage. At the mid-sized firm which employed us both, we weren't in the same department, but the company wasn't big enough for us to be totally separate from each other either.

"When my department and his interacted in any way, people watched us. They wanted to see if we were more loyal to each other than we were to our co-workers. So we leaned over backwards trying not to show each other special concessions, which strained our marriage."

A YEAR AGO when Patricia got another job offer, she accepted it. "Our marriage has improved," she says. "Maybe someday, maybe in a larger place, I'd like to work with John again, but not now."

Her new job pays a bigger salary and provides greater advancement opportunities. Soon after she left, John was promoted to a position which puts him over two departments, including the one in which she worked.

"It may be just coincidence, but I wonder if they didn't promote him while I was there because they were afraid to put him over me and didn't have anywhere else to move me."

That can and does happen, says Reed.

"Employers often maintain the status quo where couples are concerned when they don't know what else to do about promoting one and not the other. Hiring married couples is good for the company unless one has to be fired or promoted way beyond the other.

"Employees recognize that either situation will cause problems for them and the couple. Couples who feel stuck in their jobs might examine whether or not they're being treated as a unit — rather than two individuals with two separate careers."

Aside from this problem area, many couples and many employers do find the marriage of two careers and one firm has more advantages than disadvantages.

Larry Wyatt, manager of human resources systems and planning for Alcoa, says, "If we had our way in the personnel department, we'd prefer that both spouses work for us. We'd like to have more couples on the payroll."

CERTAINLY IT makes keeping track of insurance benefits easier. Couples may also find working for the same boss makes their benefit packages go further too — especially if they can choose from "cafeteria style" programs.

The realities of the marketplace have given couples, especially women, much greater leverage with employers. But no matter how much the new job pays or how much the company benefits from hiring a couple, most working couples will continue to measure the success of the work arrangement by how it affects their marriage.

People wait longer to wed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Young Americans are waiting longer to get married than any generation since the start of this century, according to a new government study that also found marked growth in the number of unmarried couples living together.

Median age at first marriage climbed to 25.4 years for men and 23 years for women as of March 1984, the Census Bureau reported Sunday in a new study, Marital Status and Living Arrangements.

That's the highest median age ever recorded for American women, and the top for men since the median of 25.9 years in 1900. Marriage age records were begun in 1890, when the median was 22 for women and 26.1 for men.

Americans had been marrying earlier and earlier throughout this century, reaching a low of 22.5 years for men and 20.1 for women in 1956, the bureau reported.

Then the post-World War II baby boom generation began to mature and those youngsters tended to emphasize education and careers, postponing marriage and children and causing the marriage age to begin rising.

"The trend toward the postponement of marriage is also apparent in the sizable increases that have occurred in the proportion of men and women under 35 years old who have never married," the report added.

For example, for women in the 25 to 29 age group, some 26 percent had never married as of 1984, compared to 11 percent of the same age group in 1970. For men the comparable figures are 38 percent in 1984 and 19 percent in 1970.

"Many of these young adults may have postponed their entry into marriage in order to further their formal education, establish careers or pursue other goals that might conflict with assuming family responsibilities," the Census Bureau has said in analyzing this trend.

Most of the young people postponing marriage are expected to wed eventually, demographers report. But they note that the longer an event is delayed the greater the likelihood it will never occur, with the result that the current generation may turn out to have larger number of people who never marry than has been the case in the past.

Although they postponed marriage, the number of people choosing to live together without a wedding was up sharply, more than tripling since 1970.

According to the report, there were 1,988,000 unmarried couple households as of March 1984, up from 523,000 such couples in 1970 and 1.6 million in 1980.

The 1984 figures show that in 77.6 percent of unmarried couples the householder was under age 45, compared to 27.2 percent in 1970.

FLOOR STAIN

The most popular colors used for wood floors are natural oak and a medium walnut stain. Both are decoratively safe, being neither strikingly light nor strikingly dark. As a rule, they will not interfere with whatever else will be done with the area. The effect is informal and easygoing. The darker the wood, the more formal and sophisticated the effect. A deep, rich stain is more work to maintain, but the result is very impressive in a heavy, lush way. At the other extreme, a floor can be bleached or "pickled." At the other extreme, a floor can be bleached or "pickled." Stain should be chosen as carefully as color for a wall. If in doubt, stay with the medium shades.

If you're in doubt about what type of window covering would be best for your needs come by and talk to our trained staff at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. We'll give you ideas and assist you in selecting colors for custom draperies. Vertical, mini blinds and woven woods are available and top treatments can be designed. AIDS students controversial

Associated Press

Children with AIDS could endanger others if they are permitted to attend school, a doctor testified in a New York City hearing on a petition by parents seeking to have a second-grader with the disease removed from class.

Meanwhile, officials in California and the District of Columbia began drafting guidelines to help schools deal with children with AIDS, an affliction in which the body's immune system becomes unable to resist disease.

And in Fort Myers, Fla., a 5-year-old AIDS victim was barred from classes by school officials who said they did it for his own good and were not setting policy for other victims of the usually fatal disease.

A committee of school officials and medical experts decided the boy should be tutored at home because of "the very fragile physical condition of this particular child," said James Melvin, Lee County school superintendent.

In New York, Dr. Ronald Rosenblatt said "it is medically unsound" for children with AIDS to attend school. "Carrying a virus which is that fatal, and that virus is fatal, should not be in a classroom," he said.

He was the only witness in a state Supreme Court hearing on the petition by parents and a local school board. The Supreme Court in New York is a trial-level panel.

The parents, from the borough of Queens, have kept their children home to protest the admission of the child, although they don't know the identity or which of the city's 620 elementary schools the child attends.

"If the child should have lesions on the body, cut himself in class, experience a nosebleed or in any way pass his body secretions, such as blood, to any person, it could be transmitted just like any other virus," Rosenblatt testified.

Twice during the hearing, Justice Harold Hyman referred to the child as "her."

In California, officials say they hope to have guidelines in the state's 7,416 public schools by next month, affecting more than 4 million public school students, as well as faculty and staff.

The guidelines call for the use of rubber gloves when cleaning up blood spills and disposing of clothes soiled by bodily fluids, said Persida Drakulich, director of school health programs for the state.

"To some people it almost seems like hitting a fly with a sledgehammer," Drakulich said. "But I feel in the long term we're taking a practical approach."

Holly Smith, spokeswoman for the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, said, "It makes sense that instead of isolating a child with AIDS to incorporate it so the policy is for everyone."

School officials in Carmel, Calif., disclosed recently that a third grader with AIDS is being kept out of class until a community education program is developed to ease residents' fears.

A District of Columbia School Board panel voted Sept. 12 to appoint a task force to determine guidelines by Dec. 1 for handling students who have AIDS or have been exposed to the virus.

D.C. school officials revealed that a child exposed to AIDS had been temporarily barred from attending class. The youngster has since been allowed to attend school, but is instructed away from other students.

A Daily News-Eyewitness News poll conducted in New York City found that 59 percent disapproved of the way the issue of AIDS-stricken children has been handled by the Board of Education.

The survey was conducted Sept. 13, 14 and 17 by Chilton Research Services of Radnor, Pa.

CDC: Laws do not ensure immunization

ATLANTA (AP) — School immunization laws do not guarantee that all children are properly protected against disease, according to the national Centers for Disease Control.

For example, the CDC said, a 12-year-old Florida boy who developed tetanus last year after stepping on a splinter, had gotten only one immunization in his life — a single dose of polio vaccine at 18 months.

The child went to an emergency room two weeks after his injury and was given a dose of tetanus vaccine and sent home. But he had to be admitted to the intensive care ward after he came back with symptoms of tetanus.

"Even with a school immunization law in place, proper immunization of a school-age child cannot be assumed," the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

Studies have shown that just 27 percent of patients at highest risk for tetanus — those with serious wounds and insufficient past tetanus immunization — received the appropriate treatment in emergency rooms, the CDC said.

Single mom copes with AIDS child

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Sophia saw the numbers in the newspaper, she knew she was alone. There had been five children with AIDS in the city, and now there was one — the one asleep in the next room.

"It's been a month since I've cried about him," Sophia said of her 3-year-old son, Alonzo. She fingers the brim of her red straw hat, leans across the kitchen table and talks about being a single mother with a child suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"Some nights, he used to get up and be in a lot of pain. You just rock him, and he'd cry," she said. "But he hasn't been that way for a while. He's happy, smiling more. So I just believe he's going to get well."

She knows her faith sets her apart. So few people understand, and so many are afraid.

That's why she doesn't want her real name used in the interview and why she refused to tell her story on national television when other mothers of AIDS children were speaking out. She doesn't want to take the chance that people will overreact and throw her 6-year-old daughter out of school.

"Just a few very close friends know, people who will understand and not get scared," she said. "You have some people who are really scared."

Fear is not Sophia's style. She came to this corner of West Hollywood from the Bahamas via Atlanta and Miami. She is 30, the oldest of six, a twice-weekly churchgoer. Responsibility and spirituality have made her strong.

Her dark-eyed son, born Aug. 17, 1982, in the 26th week of her pregnancy, seems to have inherited his mother's strong character. He weighed 1 pound, 3 ounces at birth and spent four months in the neo-natal care unit but emerged a normal child troubled only by the chronic lung problems common to premature babies.

Doctors believe that sometime in that period, he received a transfusion of AIDS-contaminated blood.

The ailment didn't show up until October 1984, when Alonzo was in a car accident. Strapped into his car seat, Alonzo seemed uninjured. But in November, he stopped walking. In December, he began having high fevers and severe ear infections that defied antibiotics. In January, he stopped talking and was hospitalized.

"They had doctors coming in from all over, and none of them could tell us what was wrong with him," Sophia said. "All they knew was what he didn't have."

In the hospital, an intravenous needle had been inserted into Alonzo's foot, as is customary with young children. Fluid from the IV leaked into tissue surrounding a vein, causing problems that required surgery and a skin graft.

The emergency seemed to steal the child's remaining strength, Sophia said. He could barely move, and he had to be fed through a tube.

In May, the doctors said Alonzo had AIDS.

"It was shocking. I just couldn't believe this was happening to my child. This was a little boy who used to walk, talk, play, run around," she said. "He was such a happy little baby. You know, if you had a child who was sick from the beginning, then I guess it wouldn't hurt as much. It really hurts to know this child who used to walk, used to talk. And now he can't do anything anymore."

Alonzo was in the hospital from January until April. When he came home, Sophia quit her job as a doctor's receptionist and tried to care for him herself, getting up every hour or so to feed him through a stomach tube or give him medicine.

In the second week, the hospital arranged for nurses to come in, first for 16 hours a day, now around the clock. Health insurance from the boy's father covers the bills. But it is Sophia who pays the emotional price.

"I'm very spiritual, and I truly believe that one day, he's going to be healed," she said. "You can't stay angry. It's better to forgive and forget than to resent and remember, because it will make you go crazy."

Bishops: AIDS fear deters communion

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — An Episcopal bishop has drafted a pastoral letter that urges "understanding for the cautious person" who fears catching AIDS by drinking communion wine from a common cup.

"The church is aware, on the one hand, that AIDS is not transmitted through the common cup, and, on the other, that many people are uneasy about saliva and the common cup," the Rt. Rev. William E. Swing of San Francisco says in his letter.

Although acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus has been found in saliva, "in no situation has a case of AIDS been traced to saliva," he said.

Neverthelessk, Swing urged "understanding for the cautious person who now only receives bread" at Holy Communion rather than also taking a sip from the common cup of wine.

The church considers such single-element communion fully valid, and that communion also may be taken by "intinction," or dipping the wafer in the wine, he said.

As for himself, Swing said that when he celebrates communion in the Lord's Supper, he intends to drink from the cup after everyone has drunk from it, in order to underscore his confidence that the disease is not transmitted through the cup.

"The trouble is that you cannot deal rationally and factually with people on this matter because they are just depserately afraid," said Bishop Oliver Garver of Los Angeles.

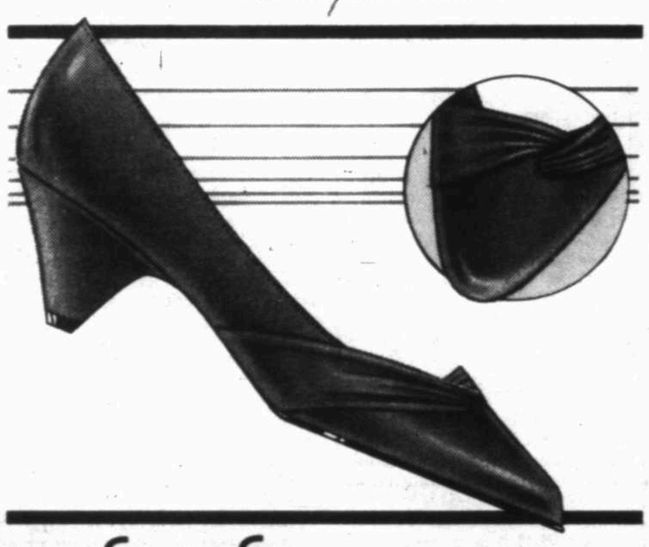

"There is something out there that is killing people, and people are scared — for themselves, for their children," he said.

Clergy mixed in response to crisis

Associated Press

Some offer prayer and support to the "new lepers." Others call down fire and brimstone, claiming AIDS is God's punishment for defying his law.

America's clergy faces questions of faith and hard pastoral duty with the sick and dying as acquired immune deficency syndrome cuts a deadly path from identifiable high-risk groups to the general population.

Special Masses have been celebrated in San Francisco and New York for the AIDS victims. The Archdiocese of New York plans to provide shelter for indigent patients. Chaplains often are the last contacts for patients deserted by friends and family.

There is little sympathy, however, from the religious right. Fundamentalists have called AIDS "gay flu," called for quarantines and invoked chapter and verse to explain the disease as the Lord's vengeance.

"Homosexuals are violating the laws of nature," the Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of Moral Majority, has said. "God establishes all of nature's laws. When a person ignores those laws there is a price to pay."

While 90 percent of AIDS victims are homosexuals or intravenous drug users, there is evidence the disease is spreading to the general population. The rapid growth of AIDS and the fear it has created often leaves religious organizations as the final sanctuary for AIDS victims, just as the church helped the ill and the maimed who were shunned by society in earlier times.

"In a way these people are new lepers," said the Rev. Paul Moore, the Episcopal Bishop of New York and chairman of Gov. Mario Cuomo's advisory council on AIDS.

"It's hard enough to be dying as a young man, but to have this massive desertion, to be so alone is tragic," he said.

THE REV. Andrew Brown, a Protestant chaplain at New York's Harlem Hospital, has seen the problem close up, ministering to some 20 AIDS patients.

"I have been asked, 'Am I being punished by God?'" Brown said. "I tell them God is not punishing them, that he is a God of love."

In New York, where more than a third of the nation's AIDS cases have been reported, Cardinal John O'Connor has announced plans for a shelter for AIDS victims and a center for the study and care of AIDS. Mother Teresa has said members of her order, the Sisters of Charity, would be willing to staff the residence.

The church's first proposal for a site, however, was shot down by fearful parishioners, who were in turn scolded by their priest.

"The church has an obligation to serve the neediest. Wherever there is a victim of AIDS, Jesus Christ is there," the Rev. Kenneth J. Smith told his congregation at the Holy Name of Jesus Church after the shelter plans were withdrawn. "Each of us has the choice of being a true Christian or a Christian in lip service only."

In San Francisco, Catholic Archbishop John R. Quinn recently led 600 people in a Liturgy of the 40 Hours, a service that goes back to the Black Death of the Middle Ages.

"There were prayers to find a cure to the disease," said Will Lightbourne, the director of San Francisco's Catholic Charities.

LIGHTBOURNE SAID his organization was studying ways to help AIDS victims.

"A big part of it is trying to understand what the best thing is to do," he said. "There are needs for supportive counseling with the families of AIDS victims. These are young people who didn't expect to die."

Joseph Zwilling, a church spokesman, said there was no conflict between the Catholic church's condemnation of homosexuality and its sympathy for AIDS victims.

"Homosexual activity is still viewed as a moral wrong, but we also see a real need of Christian charity and kindness to those who are suffering," he said.

There are others who view the homosexuality and intravenous drug use associated with AIDS as beyond the reach of Christian charity.

Some fundamentalist preachers have called for the closing of gay bars and baths. Some have suggested quarantines for homosexual AIDS patients.

Falwell said ministers should show compassion to AIDS sufferers and treat them "as all people of God who are loved by him."

He also thinks the clergy can have a hand in prevention.

"We should preach from our pulpits against moral perversion," said Falwell, "whether it be against all homosexual activity or promiscuous heterosexuality which causes these various social diseases."

Flu vaccine less effective in nursing home residents

ATLANTA (AP) — The effectiveness of flu vaccine is lower for nursing home patients than it is for younger or healthier people, the national Centers for Disease Control says.

Reasons for the reduced effectiveness include a decline with age in the body's immunity levels and the close contact of residents in a nursing home, which makes flu spread easier, the CDC said.

Flu vaccine effectiveness last winter in nine nursing homes studied by the CDC varied from zero to 46 percent, the agency reported. Flu vaccine is usually 50 percent to 80 percent effective.

The CDC, which recommends flu shots for elderly people and others at high risk for complications from influenza, noted that nursing home residents who had been vaccinated did have shorter illnesses, less hospitalization and less pneumonia than those without the shots.

DR. KURIANSKY

Woman obsessed with teen

By Dr. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. I'm 29 years old, married 11 years and not too happy. I have two children, 8 and 5. This may sound shocking, but I'm in love with a 13-year-old boy. Romantically there is nothing going on. We do hug and he does kiss me on the lips occasionally before he leaves here on the weekend to return to his father's house. His parents are separated, and his mother lives next door to me.

Physically he is maturing more than the average child and emotionally sometimes he reacts as an adult. Sometimes he rubs my back in front of my husband. I don't say anything, but I asked him once if he knew what he was doing. He denied anything but had a smile on his face. He also once asked me if I would divorce my husband.

My problem is I have feelings of love for this kid that I have never felt for another person, not even my husband. I feel I have found my match and will wait for him to reach adulthood. I know all this isn't normal, but I will do anything to make him happy. I'm afraid next year he'll want sex, but I know I can't permit myself to be with him until he is at least 18.

Yet I am torn because the child inside him needs my guidance which he doesn't get from his family. Let's say I remain miserable so I don't bruise him emotionally, but then I'm the one who suffers.

If I wait for him and if he wants me, that would be great, but what about the age difference? How does society see these relationships and how do men feel about older women? Hopefully my feelings won't last, but if they do, I'm in trouble because it's a long time until he's older.

I do have a husband to think about, but for the moment I have no desire for him and it gets worse. We have never had a good sexual experience together, but I try to talk to him about our love life and I just noticed he is getting impotent.

I should mention that though I am 29, I can pass for 17 or 18 years old. Perhaps this has some bearing on the way this boy acts toward me. Please advise me.

A. The fact that you are 29 but can pass for 17 or 18 years old has more bearing not on the way this young boy acts to you, but on the way you act to him. You are 29, but feel and act 17. You probably want to be that young. You got married young (at 18), and I dare say you have not matured emotionally beyond the age of this boy. You flirt with him because you are acting like two adolescents — except he really is one, and you shouldn't be.

I am sympathetic to some of your emotional struggles and your needs, but I am going to be hard on you for a moment. You may not see your behavior as child sexual abuse, but it is. You are being seductive. You are using his attention and budding sexuality to fulfill your own needs for attention.

You are even acting out your own anger and disappointment toward your husband by letting the boy touch you in front of him. It is like a message to your husband about his inadequacy to you. I am sure that he gets the idea because he is becoming impotent, as you say. He is probably becoming more angry and rejected, feeling insecure and unable to openly deal with it.

SO HE loses his erection, his pride and his ability to communicate with you. He, like you, though, should not be letting this continue.

I am sure that there are also some early family dynamics from your own childhood that are being played out in this scenario. Let's say you are casting your husband in the role of your father. Let's also say your parents were always strict with you and wary of your "making out" with boys when you were an adolescent.

So here you are, feeling like an adolescent, and playing with a boy in front of your "father," defying him to respond. Or perhaps seeking his approval, which you never got, but desperately wanted.

You have many unresolved feelings about your own sexual and emotional growth which ultimately must be worked through with an expert professional therapist. Then, you have many problems in your marriage which you must address in therapy.

I am sure on some level the feelings you are having about this young boy are affecting the feelings you have toward your own children. You didn't mention their sex, but it is important whether they are boys or girls. This is a scary situation for people to read, but sometimes people act out on other children feelings they have toward their own — feelings which make them exceptionally uncomfortable and acts which are inappropriate.

We hear more about men's seductiveness and sexual abuse of children than we do about women's. Part of the reason for that is that we expect and allow women to be more affectionate. But nonetheless, women do it too. You don't have to have sexual intercourse or direct touching of genital parts to label it sexual abuse. And you are already backmassaging and lip-kissing with this young teen-ager.

YOU ARE also using the very same excuse men do when they seduce young girls or boys: They are "teaching" them. You claim he has a so-called broken home, so you have to make up for that. These are rationalizations. Yes, he does need support and guidance — from a mature mother-figure, not a mother-seductress.

You are doing this boy more harm than good. When parents separate as his have, sometimes the mother, in her loneliness and upset, turns to her son for comfort. The boy grows up too fast, becoming almost a surrogate husband. If the boy is going through any of this in his own family, all you are doing is escalating that by doing the same thing in your family.

On another level, you are contributing to the boy feeling like he is symbolically breaking up your marriage too. Often youngsters have guilt when their parents separate, they feel that they are the cause. Now you are letting this boy appear to break up your marriage too.

A boy cannot possibly be aware of all these dynamics. It is up to you as the supposed "adult" to know all your needs, to see these psychological dynamics at play, and to restrain yourself.

In the long run you will have to develop more of a sense of your own inner strength and maturity, your ability to be an equal with adult men and a sense of security about your own identity.

Save yourself, your husband, your children and this boy from any further damage — both subtle and overt — by desisting from acting out your needs with him. Treat him as a son and not like a lover.

Act like a mother and a mature woman instead of like a child. Then seek professional help so you can work through your feelings of being a child and needing this young man's adoration and attention.

Fear boosts special transfusion procedures

NEW YORK (AP) — Worry about AIDS from blood transfusions has made two little-used blood sources more popular for some surgical patients: friends and relatives, and the patient himself.

The increased popularity of using the patient's own blood reflects not only public concern about acquired immune deficiency syndrome, but also heightened awareness among doctors and patients about other hazards of transfused blood, an awareness crystallized by AIDS, blood banking officials say.

Only about 200 cases of AIDS, less than 2 percent of the nation's total, have been traced to blood transfusions. Blood donors are not at risk.

AIDS among hemophiliacs, which accounts for less than 1 percent of the nation's cases, is traced not to transfusions but injections of a blood-derived substance to promote clotting.

In addition, since the link to transfusions was discovered, blood banks have started screening blood for the suspected AIDS virus and people in high-risk groups have been asked not to donate, said Dr. Joseph Bove, chairman of the transfusion-transmitted diseases committee of the American Association of Blood Banks.

"The risk (of AIDS) was extremely low before. It's still lower now," he said.

But that risk has made physicians and lay people look more closely at the alternative sources of blood supply, interviews with officials and spokesmen at national blood organizations and half a dozen local blood banks show.

APART FROM worry over AIDS itself, the disease has focused attention on other hazards of transfusion, chiefly hepatitis, said Dr. Robert Thurer, chairman of the blood bank association's committee on autologous transfusion. Autologous transfusions are those the patient makes to himself.

Hepatitis is a far greater risk than AIDS in transfusion, but it generally appears only in mild cases, said Bove of the association.

The patient's own blood is "the absolute safest product you can have," Thurer said. "There's certainly been a lot of increase in interest around the country" in autologous donations, especially in the past year and a half because of AIDS, Thurer said.

One approach is essentially recycling a patient's blood during surgery, he said. Another is banking the patient's blood ahead of time. If he is healthy and can schedule elective surgery far enough in the future, he makes periodic blood donations to cover his expected blood needs: about a pint or two for some kinds of plastic surgery, for example, or perhaps four pints or more for open-heart surgery, Thurer said. Normally the patient can donate about a pint a week, he said.

Autologous donations at South Florida Blood Service in Miami have risen steadily since AIDS was linked to transfusions, said spokesman Tom Donia. The blood bank used to handle about 10 autologous donors a month, and that number has risen to about 80, he said.

Similarly, the Belle Bonfils Memorial Blood Center in Denver handles about 30 autologous patients a month, up from maybe one or two a week last year, said Dr. Robert Chapman, director. "I think that AIDS has been a stimulus to people," he said.

The other strategy, rounding up people to donate blood for one's own surgery, is generally discouraged by blood officials. Such "directed donations" have "greater potential to create harm not only to the particular patient, but to the blood banking system in general, than any benefit that might accrue," said Gilbert Clark, executive director of the blood banks association.

ONE PROBLEM is that the rounded-up donors may secretly be in high risk groups for AIDS, which include homosexuals and intravenous drug abusers. As such they wouldn't donate blood normally. But when a friend or neighbor asks directly for a donation, "that's extreme social pressure," said Dr. Joseph O'Malley, medical associate at the American Red Cross. "Now this individual finds himself in a position where he has to donate."

Other problems include the possibility that people might stop giving routine blood donations in anticipation of such a request, and that logistical complications might increase the potential for a patient getting blood of the wrong type, Clark said.

Still, some institutions do directed donations under limited circumstances, sometimes after trying to discourage it.

Memorial Blood Center of Minneapolis does three or four a month. "I don't think it's a great idea, personally," said Dr. Herbert Polesky, director, "but I appreciate the psychological impact that this (AIDS) issue has made. ... We decided at the beginning it just wasn't worth hassling with people."

The Irwin Memorial Blood Bank in San Francisco, a city with many more AIDS cases than Minneapolis, made directed donations an official program in June 1984. It had been done unofficially before once or twice a month, but "pretty soon we got more and more requests" and an official program became "the logical thing to do," said spokeswoman Sylvia Ramirez.

Signs of the Season

Text by Linda Anderson
Graphic by Suzan Conder

'Tis the season for high school football games, warmer clothing and crunchy leaves. It's the time when air conditioners are disconnected, furnace pilot lights are relit and widely-fluctuating daily temperatures give everyone colds.

Though students think autumn comes with the first class of the new school year, fall officially arrives at 8:07 p.m. tonight, according to a spokesman for the National Weather Service.

In West Texas, fall usually comes in like a lamb. Temperatures remain warm, and leaves green, long after other parts of the nation are snow-covered. The true first day of the season — the autumnal equinox, when day and night are almost exactly the same length — is often unnoticed by area residents, and daily routines continue as usual.

Lt. Colburn of the Midland Police Department said there is no noticable change in crimes or other disturbances to mark the beginning of fall. "We just go into winter suits," he said.

MIDLAND MEMORIAL Hospital reported a few changes due to the season. Cynthia Brust, public relations director for MMH, said more babies are born this time of year, possibly because it is "nine months from New Year's Eve."

Surprisingly, more allergy problems occur during fall than in spring, Mrs. Brust said. MMH emergency room personnel said autumn usually means fewer accidents involving children, "because the kids are back in school," and more accidents involving motor vehicles, she added.

Autumn often brings more consumer spending, as parents outfit children for school and as Christmas, with all its gift-giving, approaches. Lynn Carroll, fashion area sales manager for Sears, said shopping trends haven't dramatically changed yet. The cotton sweater, one of the best sellers this fall, is a hold-over from summer. "We just can't keep them in stock, especially the Shaker knit cotton sweater vest."

BUT ONE ITEM designed for fall is selling well, she said. "Colorful chunky jewelry" is "seasonal because it is in the fall colors ... of deep jewel tones."

John Marshall, operating manager at Sears, added that on the "hardline end of business," such as the hardware and home improvement lines, "I haven't noticed any big switchovers" to more seasonal items.

Jerry Unruh, manager of Midland's Toys Plus, said toy sales are at normal levels. Sales of plastic wading pools have dropped, he said, but swing sets are still selling well, even through the recent rainy weekends.

Some shoppers have begun purchasing Christmas toys, said Unruh. "That started about six to eight weeks ago. They are buying things that will be hard to find around Christmas. Some items" including Go-bots and Cabbage Patch dolls, "are hard to get in December."

"The main trends are still Cabbage Patch dolls, Tonka Pound Puppies, Masters of the Universe, Go-bots and Transformers." GI Joe toys and Barbie dolls remain favorites, he added. "Those things are popular all year."

EVEN THE WEATHER forecasts contain no surprises. A National Weather Service representative said the weather is expected to be "probably just about like it is any fall." Rain in September, usually 2.08 inches, was measured at 2.19 inches as of Friday, which is slightly above normal levels. But, the spokesman said, because precipitation in the area was about two inches less than normal as of Aug. 31, the Permian Basin will probably "catch up by the end of the month."

The six-to-10-day extended outlook distributed Friday called for "near normal temperatures and normal precipitation," he said. Normal for this time of year is reported to be between 84° and 60°.

"Looks like a normal September, and we'll just slide right into October," he said.

IN GENERAL, autumn appears to be a quiet season; conveniently placed between summer with its fast-paced outdoor activities, and Christmas — with its fast-paced indoor socializing and spending.

It's not a bad time for a little restful falling-leaves-and-football-game watching.

Autumn SAD time for some

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Four years ago, the first winter-depressed patient at the National Institute of Mental Health wistfully suggested that she "should have been born a bear" so she could sleep the winter through. Since then, the study of people whose spirits bloom with the crocuses and fade with the autumn leaves has captured the attention of the international psychiatric community.

This is in part because the phenomenon is vastly more common than researchers initially believed. Also, in most cases of the syndrome, now called SAD — for seasonal affective disorder — the gloomy winter moods can be quickly and completely dispelled with light.

Dr. Norman Rosenthal, chief of outpatient studies of the NIMH Clinical Psychobiology Branch and a pioneer in the identification and initial studies of the syndrome, has now seen some 170 patients and treated more than 60 with lights, with a better than 80 percent response.

His findings that the bright lights, which simulate the full spectrum of normal daylight, can reverse the winter depression (presumably by artificially lengthening the short winter day) have been replicated in studies in Switzerland, Alaska and Oregon. Many of the investigators will be comparing notes this week at a symposium in Philadelphia. Although not all the researchers have used the lights in the same way, and may explain their success with different hypotheses, they all agree that the syndrome exists.

IT APPEARS MOST commonly in women, although men are also affected. All the researchers agree that bright lights can reverse the depression, the sleepiness and other symptoms that otherwise would not lift, typically, until the days begin to lengthen in the spring.

Now Rosenthal has discovered the apparent existence of the syndrome in children, and one major study to validate this finding is getting under way at the University of Minnesota. Rosenthal and the NIMH team will continue their studies of adults.

Typically the adult "seasonal," as the researchers call these people, begins to "slow down" in the autumn. She is consumed by lethargy and food cravings (especially for carbohydrates). She never gets enough sleep and will complain, even after 12 hours a night. One patient after another talks about decreased sex drive, trouble with interpersonal relations, trouble with their jobs. They are depressed, often deeply, and view life with pessimism, often despair.

But year after year, since 1981, Rosenthal and his colleagues at NIMH and elsewhere are seeing happy, optimistic, often highly creative, energetic and articulate people emerge after only a few hours of bright light treatment, usually two to four days after therapy begins. (Rosenthal emphasizes that treatment of depression is not a do-it-yourself project, and light therapy should be used only after careful diagnosis and under a doctor's care. It can sometimes have side effects, and its withdrawal can cause a patient to "crash" back into depression.)

SOME OF THE PATIENTS treated successfully last year mentioned to Rosenthal that they were seeing some of their own winter symptoms reflected in their children. As a result, he says, "we treated six kids, five of whom had clear improvements with light."

"It is especially cruel for children," says Rosenthal. "Because it happens so early in their lives, they frequently do not identify it as coming from within themselves and instead they see the world as having turned unfair and cruel. The teacher is demanding too much. Parental expectations are unfair. These are the frequent complaints, and if you don't think of the seasonal angle on it, you might not pick up on it."

Of the five youngsters who responded to light, says Rosenthal, one was a champion swimmer whose times had always, inexplicably, dropped in the winter. Last winter, after the light treatment, his swimming times actually improved. Another child, a 13-year-old boy, "made the honor roll for the first winter of his life."

Dr. William A. Sonis, pediatrician and child psychiatrist at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis, is readying a larger study on SAD children. Sonis was a fellow at the National Institutes of Health, and his interest in circadian rhythms — the body's natural clock — drew him to Rosenthal's work, even though he was in a different institute. The kinds of seasonal variations involved in SAD are among the biological rhythms that seem to govern the way our bodies work — why we sleep when we do, eat what and when we do, feel how we do at any given moment.

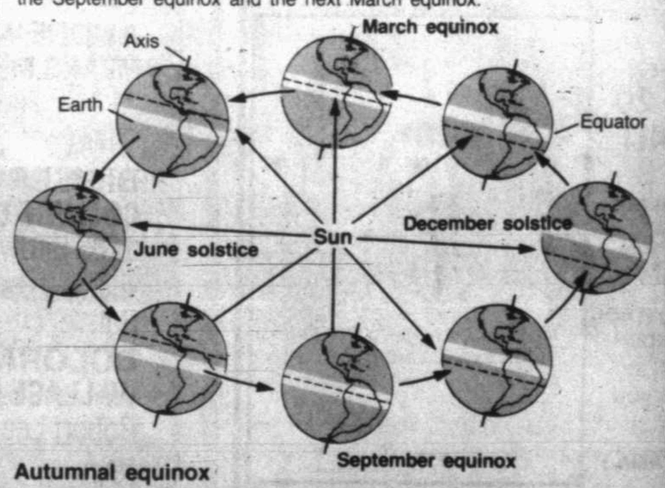

NOW SONIS AND HIS colleagues at the University of Minnesota are planning to recruit depressed children (between the ages of 6 and 18), treat them all with the lights and see who responds to the treatment and who does not. Then, through rating scales and interviews, they will try to put together a profile of a SAD child.

"The word is beginning to get around," says Sonis. "Part of the whole problem is that it is not recognized in kids. It is mistaken for problems of school adjustment or growing pains. People will say, 'Oh, it'll go away. He gets like this every year.' And of course it does go away, but they don't recognize that it doesn't have to be that way."

Indeed, says Sonis, there is the possibility that the seasonal mood variations "may be some kind of general pattern that runs in all humans and is just expressed severely in some."

The astronomical seasons

The tilt of Earth's axis does not change as it revolves around the Sun. This causes the Sun to appear north of the Equator between the March equinox and the September equinox and south of the Equator between the September equinox and the next March equinox.

Autumnal equinox

In the Northern Hemisphere, the September equinox [which is on Sept. 22 this year] marks the start of astronomical autumn. It occurs when the Sun is directly over the Earth's Equator and when days and nights are of nearly equal length everywhere on Earth.

Husbands never understand ritual of supermarket shopping

By ERMA BOMBECK

Did you ever see husbands in a supermarket? They stand around on one leg like a napping whooping crane.

You can always tell the men who have been dragged to the supermarket. They look like hostages as they shuffle along without expression, giving mechanical answers and gazing longingly toward the parking lot. Occasionally, they shake their watch and put it to their ear to make sure it's still running.

The only thing worse than going shopping with a man who hates it is the one who wants to help. There's something intimidating about having them tag along. For one thing, they don't really understand the ritual of the shopping experience.

What is meant to be a spontaneous, impulsive, unstructured madcap celebration is turned into an academic exercise in marketing. When I used to go shopping with my husband, I'd be halfway down the second aisle before I'd notice he was fixing the wheel of the shopping cart.

No one fixes a wheel on the shopping cart. It's the way they come out of the factory. That's the challenge of it.

Next, if he saw a pyramid of cans ready to topple, he'd rebuild it, facing all the labels in one direction. But the worst part was that he read labels. Sometimes you can know more about a product than you can handle. If someone is using pig lips, I don't have to know about it.

Usually, he had a pocket calculator where he would figure out I could save .01 per ounce by buying the family size box of Zits Crispies rather than the variety pak where one box would be used for irregularities anyway. He once spent the greater part of the morning in search of a cake of yeast that had five more days on the expiration date than the one I had chosen.

In between his comparison shopping, he would arrange the cart, putting all the taxables in one corner, the dairy products in another, and surrounding the eggs by a wall of toilet tissue.

Some men are great at grocery shopping. Most are not. They're too practical. Too conservative. Give a man a list and tell him, "If you see anything interesting, buy it," and if he saw Julia Child in the center aisle hustling no-cal croissants, he'd say, "I wasn't sure if you wanted them or not."

They've done a lot of studies on men in supermarkets. Men rarely shop in tennis clothes, or stand around and gossip, or spend more money than they have. They never squeeze anything in produce, buy trees, underwear or record cassettes.

Until men understand the concept of supermarkets, I don't think they'll ever enjoy shopping. If spending $16 a minute isn't fun ... then I don't know what entertainment is!

SIDS, apnea link questioned

Hearst News Service

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, the number one killer of infants, is not related to a condition that causes sleepers to cease breathing, according to a study conducted by Seattle researchers. But a Stanford University researcher disputes that claim.

"We regard SIDS as an illness of sleeping," said Dr. William Dement, president of the Association of Sleep Disorders Centers and a Stanford professor. "We're pretty convinced that apnea (a cessation of breathing) is one of the causes of SIDS."

Dr. Nora Davis, of Children's Orthopedic Hospital in Seattle, presented her findings at a conference hosted by Dement's group and the Sleep Research Society. Davis contends that sleep apnea, defined in infants as failure to breathe for at least 15 seconds for a full-term baby and at least 20 seconds for a premature infant, "contributes very little" to reported SIDS deaths.

Her study included a group of 800 infants, of whom 250 had sleep apnea that was verified by a medical professional.

Several factors distinguished that group from children believed to have died of SIDS, she said. Their mothers' age was not significant, while SIDS mothers typically are younger. They did not have low birth weights, while SIDS babies typically do. Their deaths did not occur in the fall and winter seasons, as SIDS babies' death usually do.

DEAR ABBY

Well-traveled grandchild has envious half-sisters

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of four lovely daughters. The eldest is 11. I'll call her Agnes. When Agnes was 3, her father died. Two years later I remarried. Every summer, the parents of my first husband take Agnes for a month. Their son was their only child, and Agnes is their only grandchild.

So far Agnes has seen Disneyland, Hawaii, Mexico and Europe. My husband and I cannot afford to take our other three children on trips like that, and they are understandably envious and resentful.

I'm sure with all the divorces, deaths and remarriages, this is a common problem. If you or any of your readers have a solution, I'd appreciate knowing it. — TORN

DEAR TORN: What are your alternatives? To deny Agnes those exotic trips with her grandparents in order to avoid being envied by her half-sisters? Not fair to Agnes.

To ask the grandparents to take one of the half-sisters along every year in the interest of family unity? Rather presumptuous. It would be very generous if they were to offer, but that idea would have to originate with them. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I'm a married woman with three sons. After I had my second child, my husband (I'll call him Micky) started to go out on me, so to get even, I called up my old boyfriend (I'll call him Sam) and started up with him again. Sam was also married, but had no children.

Well, I ended up pregnant. I'm not sure the baby is Sam's because I was also sleeping with Micky, but the baby looks more like Sam than Micky. Micky thinks the baby is his.

Sam was sure the baby was his. He said he loved me and wanted to divorce his wife and marry me. That meant I would have to divorce Micky and probably lose my older sons, and I couldn't do it.

Anyway, Sam became so upset, he killed himself. I feel terrible about this, but I am wondering if I should tell Sam's parents that my youngest child could be their grandchild. Sam was their only son. — MADE A MISTAKE

DEAR MADE: Since the baby could be your husband's, you'd be wise to assume it is. To share your suspicions with Sam's parents could cause more problems than it would solve.

DEAR ABBY: My problem is my boyfriend (possibly fiance). When we're together, he constantly notices other women and comments on how good-looking they are. I cannot begin to tell you how much this bothers me.

I am 24 and have been told many, many times by women as well as men how beautiful I am and what a great body I have. So, if that is true, why does my boyfriend comment on the beauty of other women, and when he's going somewhere without me, make statements such as, "There is this cute blonde who will be there"?

I act like none of this bothers me, but it really hurts and makes me feel somewhat insecure. I don't think he has ever been unfaithful, and he tells me he cares for me. Do all men do this? — ANGUISHED IN MISSISSIPPI

DEAR ANGUISHED: All men do not do this — only those who are either very insensitive or want to make their girlfriends jealous.

If you want to know why he does this, don't ask me, ask him. And don't pretend it doesn't bother you, when actually it does. If he really cares for you, he'll cut it out.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Question doctor about prescribed medications

ATLANTA (AP) — Surveys show that 50 percent of all prescription medications are taken incorrectly, possibly because people fail to ask their doctors the right questions.

According to the Arthritis Foundation, here are five simple questions to ask when a drug is prescribed for you:

- What is the name of the drug, and what is it supposed to do?
- How and when do I take it, and when do I stop using it?
- What food, drinks, other drugs or activities should I avoid while taking the drug?
- What are the side effects, and what should I do if they occur?
- Is there any written information available about the drug?

Study finds more approval toward women executives

NEW YORK (AP) — Male executives are much more likely to accept women in top business positions today than they were 20 years ago, according to a new survey published in the Harvard Business Review.

Appearing in the magazine's September-October issue, the survey reflected the views of 786 executives who responded to a questionnaire sent to 1,900 randomly selected male and female executives.

It was designed to reflect the demographic characteristics of a 1965 poll, in which the Review asked its readers how they viewed women in business.

The latest survey found that the number of men expressing an unfavorable basic attitude toward women executives fell dramatically — from 41 percent in 1965 to 5 percent in 1985.

Twenty years ago, 54 percent of the men and 50 percent of the women thought that women rarely expected or wanted positions of authority, the Review said. Now, only 8 percent of the men and 4 percent of the women hold that view.

The latest survey found that male and female workers are still far apart on one question — pay inequality.

The Review said 73 percent of the women and 34 percent of the men polled agreed with the statement: "A woman executive is invariably paid less than her male counterpart." In 1965, 84 percent of the women and 53 percent of the men agreed.

The survey was conducted by associate professor Kris K. Moore, chairman of the department of information systems at the Hankamer Business School of Baylor University, and Charlotte Decker Sutton, a doctoral candidate in management studies at Texas A&M University.

Identification chip bonded to tooth

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — A microscopic computer chip that can be bonded to a tooth is helping police identify abducted children and providing doctors with emergency medical information, reports Pediatric News.

The micro-information disk — thinner than a cigarette package cellophane wrapper and about as big as the capital "O" on a typewriter — is bonded to the child's first upper permanent molar with a liquid resin that encases it.

The information includes the child's name, birthdate, address, telephone, medical alert information and whom to notify in case of emergency.

The disk originally was developed by Micro I-D of Peoria to more easily identify missing, comatose or deceased children, then evolved into a means of providing medical information, according to the medical journal.

Greek islands offer view of past, fun of present

By SUSAN DUERKSEN
Copley News Service

By night, the steep cobblestoned pathways of Santorini's clifftop capital rollick with chic merrymakers, throbbing disco music and boisterous, multilingual conversation.

In the quiet dawn, a mule struggles up the same streets, carrying on its back bulging bags of trash from the night's revelry.

On the other end of the island — famed as the mythical lost continent of Atlantis — archaeologists begin another long, hot day of unearthing the sophisticated, prehistoric city of Akrotiri.

Throughout Greece, the old ways, the new and remnants of the ancient are merged in a beguiling medley that offers more vacation alternatives than Olympus had gods.

As if it were not enough to be the center of ancient history, the Aegean islands are bursting with idyllic sun-soaked beaches, wild nightlife, breathtaking landscapes, glorious architecture and friendly old villages.

THE GREEKS LOVE to show off their islands, from the mountain olive crops to the deep-blue harbors and stunning coastlines to the ornate Byzantine and Greek Orthodox churches that practically outnumber the population.

A two-week visit to nine of Greece's 200 inhabited islands — with stays ranging from a few hours on placid Serifos to four days on Crete — provided only a small sampling of a land that welcomes visitors to fashion a vacation of their own choice.

Suzanne Akullian, a 20-year-old American student exploring the islands' backcountry roads on a rented moped, sees Greece as "more of an adventure and an experience than a vacation."

But others take the approach of two young Scots who fled their rainy homeland to spend an entire week on Crete at the beach and in the discos, without learning a word of Greek or even tasting moussaka. They rented a car for their second week, but only to get to outlying beaches. They were surprised — but not particularly interested — to hear how close they were to Knossos, the legendary palace of King Minos.

NO MATTER HOW VITAL your suntan, any visitor to Greece should take time to see at least some of the ruins. Even if your memory of Greek gods is limited to Zeus and your historical interest to last year's baseball stats, Knossos will amaze you.

The original labyrinth built to house the Minotaur, has three underground stories of stone passageways, throne rooms, queen's bathrooms and staircases that you can explore virtually unhindered.

Knossos is on a breezy, tree-ringed hill. Buy a guidebook and spend at least two hours on a leisurely tour of the restored palace.

BUT ONCE YOU HAVE seen Minos's maze, it's best to get away from Iraklion, Crete's ugly main city. To the east is the coastal resort town of Agios Nikolaos, full of tourists but pleasant and beautiful.

On the square, the villagers step past trendy clothing and jewelry shops to a crowded fish market displaying mountains of fresh squid and swordfish on a table near the door.

From Agios Nikolaos, it is a short drive into the mountains to a region of truly unspoiled country living. In one field, a woman stood on a wooden threshing platform pulled between two mules, riding around in a circle over the piles of grain. Down the road, a group of men and women threshed beans and wheat with hand rakes, clouds of chaff flying around their heads. They greeted visitors by rushing forward to offer handfuls of the hard green beans.

In the farming village of Dorias, home to 45 families, the walls of the town's one taverna are covered with snapshots, postcards, magazine pictures, coins and maps. The proprietor eagerly pointed out a poster of Nina Hagen, bragging through an interpreter that the punk star recently visited Dorias.

CONSTANTINO BOUKALIS, 85, solemnly moved from his perch outside the shop to join the strangers. He assented to photographs only when wearing the traditional Cretan tassled head scarf.

A village woman sitting outside, frustrated in an enthusiastic, jabbering attempt to communicate with an American visitor, broke the language barrier by ducking inside her cloth-covered doorway and emerging with a gift of three bright red tomatoes.

Driving west along Crete's northern coast, there are many alluring swimming spots among the tide-lapped rocks and small beaches. As in much of Greece, the Cretan landscape is arid, the hillsides brown and knobby and dotted with clumps of gnarled olive trees.

If nothing else, it is worth driving across the island to Rethymnon just for lunch at Zizi's Taverna, an airy family restaurant with fresh, delicious food — spicy eggplant, salads, lamb, grilled pork and thick bread — and no other tourists. The trick is finding the place, which has a sign decipherable only if you read Greek. You have to drive about kilometers east of Rethymnon on the old road and just keep asking and doubling back.

IN ADDITION TO A crowded beach and many harbor-front eating and drinking spots, Rethymnon also has a majestic Venetian fortress that is full of pine trees and crickets and overlooks the city and the sea.

Entrance to the fortress costs about 30 cents, but Crete and much of the rest of Greece are full of other impressive historical sites that are open to anyone who wanders in. The low stone walls of Gournia, just off the road east of Agios Nikolaos, present the best-preserved view of the narrow streets and tiny dwellings of a Minoan town destroyed by an earthquake about 3,000 years ago.

One of the most distinctive and well-known Greek isles is Santorini, whose dramatic harbor is a volcanic crater, its ridge capped by the gleaming white walls and blue domes of the village of Thira.

Most cruise ships dock at Santorini just long enough for the passengers to take the fabled donkey ride up the cliff (on a very safe zigzag path), snap a few photos and ride the cable car down.

The view is magical, and Thira is lovely and lively, but those who miss the rest of the island have been cheated. By bus, taxi or motorbike, go to Akrotiri, where you can watch archaeologists digging, measuring and cataloging fragments of a Bronze Age town that included an underground sewage system to each of its multistory houses.

THE PAINSTAKING excavation, which began in 1967, has turned up some of the most famous and intricate wall paintings of ancient Greece. The artwork has been moved to an Athens museum, but much reassembled pottery is still on the site and visitors to Akrotiri can walk its streets and peer into the resurrected houses. Morning is the best time to go — it's cooler, and Akrotiri, like much of Greece, closes at 3 p.m.

On the way back, there are many small villages where you can stop for yogurt and salad, or classic dishes such as stuffed vine leaves or moussaka, a layered casserole of eggplant, meat and custard. As at restaurants throughout Greece, you will be invited into the kitchen to inspect the simmering pots and make your choices.

Santorini also has several black pebble beaches that are unbearably hot but draw hordes of sunbathers, nearly all topless, as well as swimmers, windsurfers and paddleboaters. Many stay at nearby campgrounds.

ONE OF SANTORINI'S most interesting neighbors among the Cyclades Islands is Sifnos. Like the port towns of other small islands, Kamares has one main street curving along the harbor, with cafe tables next to the water and across the street a row of souvenir and craft shops, ice cream stands and tavernas. The town teems with budget-rate travelers, many lugging backpacks and searching for sleeping rooms.

From Kamares, it is a short bus ride or a good hike to the capital, Apolonia, where life revolves around the leafy square and the cafes serving a sugar-drenched array of "Sifnos sweets."

A little farther up the road is Kastro, a fortified medieval city built on a natural acropolis, with steep walkways winding between the connected houses. A woman drawing water at the common spigot complains to our guide about newcomers buying the ancient houses and not restoring them properly.

The views from Kastro of both the terraced countryside and the sparkling ocean are matched only by the intriguing, mazelike architecture of the white pumice buildings.

THEN THERE ARE islands of pure fun. Mykonos is the best known, but Ios is threatening to steal its reputation. In the last couple years Ios has become the all-night party spot of the Aegean, the destination of young fun-seekers ranging from outlandish punkers to bands of drunken Germans entertaining themselves with endless chants and fraternity-style pranks.

If you want a disco, it would be hard to improve on Ios's outdoor dance floors, where you can boogy to Springsteen or Culture Club with a domed church looming in the darkness, a tree-framed view of the ocean to one side and the stars and moon above.

Nearby Serifos and Kithnos, on the other hand, are perfect places to slow your pulse to Greek time. In the harbor towns of these arid islands, you walk the waterfront, watch the fishermen untangle their nets, shop at the general store, take a swim, sit and drink an ouzo, maybe walk a little more or take a snooze on the beach. It may take some adjustment, but it's not a bad life.

CLOSER STILL TO ATHENS are a small string of islands that can be reached by ferry from the city in an hour or two. Although crawling with tourists, Aegina Town on the island of Aegina somehow seems more a real town than many island villages. Its residents go about their business at hardware stores, hairdressers, dentists, even pool halls.

It was on rowdy Aegina, packed with Americans, Scandinavians, British and everything else, that I found the best authentic Greek music of my trip. At a classy garden taverna called Ramba, golden-voiced Aris Souvatzis sang soulful folk ballads and rousing political songs, accompanied by his own guitar and bouzouki-playing and his wife, Eleni, on piano. The few patrons were local families; fathers, their arms encircling their young sons, rocked and sang along softly.

TAVERNAS IN POROS specialize in grilled octopus. You can watch the cooks hang the creature above the sidewalk, brush it with oil and then flip the tentacles on a sizzling grill. Chopped into bite-size pieces and served with toothpicks, it is deliciously tender.

Poros has a magnificent view of the sun setting over the hazy blue mountains of the Peloponnesian mainland, just across a narrow channel.

Many Greek tavernas set up tables along the beach for their patrons. Kithnos, shown above, is one of the quietest, least spoiled of the Greek islands.

Greek airports tighten security

Copley News Service

As the pilots of a recent Athens-to-Crete flight stepped from the cockpit, the entire passenger cabin erupted.

After a boarding delay of almost two hours and another hour sitting on the runway, dozens of furious travelers began yelling, waving their arms and shoving the stewardesses. The Olympic Airways crew returned the shouting with typical Greek gusto.

Finally, the ruckus was explained to bewildered Americans and other foreigners on board: three passengers had checked their baggage and not shown up.

Fearing a bombing, the airline held the flight until the three late arrivals put their bodies on the same plane as their bags. It was a wisely cautious move, except for one small detail: any bomb set to explode during the 50-minute flight would have gone off during the hour of waiting on the ground.

After being blamed by President Reagan for failing to prevent the June 14 hijacking by Shiite Moslem gunmen of a TWA flight out of Athens, airport officials are making a concerted effort to improve security.

The security force has been increased from 400 to 700 people since Mr. Reagan on June 18 advised American travelers to avoid Athens.

Pairs of blue-uniformed, armed guards now conspicuously roam the airport. Each passenger is steered through a metal detector under close observation.

Tennessee city honors mules

New York Times News Service

Though it may have escaped widespread notice, the fact remains that by congressional proclamation, Oct. 26 has been declared Mule Appreciation Day U.S.A.

One place where the proclamation did not go unheeded was Lynchburg, Tenn., in the foothills of the Cumberland Mountains, a little more than an hour's drive from Nashville on Tennessee Routes 50 and 55.

Picking up on congressional recognition of the many important contributions of the American mule to national history, Lynchburg has set aside Oct. 25 and 26 for a Mule Day celebration to mark the anniversary of the arrival of the first jacks — sires of mules — in the United States.

To commemorate this gift from King Charles III of Spain to George Washington, the community of Lynchburg and the Jack Daniel's distillery are collaborating in a Mule Appreciation Day Show and Letting that includes competitions for matched pairs as well as mule-pulling events, mule-team events, a wagon trainand trail riding.

The event concludes around noon on Saturday with a genuine mule letting — an auction in the fast-talking-auctioneer style of the heyday of mule trading in the 1800's and early 1900's. Among those expected to bid on the animals will be collectors as well as farmers; a matched pair can fetch as much as $5,000 to $6,000 at auction, individual mules can go for $1,500.

Tennessee-style food will be available throughout the two-day event. Volunteer firemen and youngsters from local 4H clubs will provide such specialties as barbecue (pork shoulders), corn on the cob and funnel cake.

More information on the event is available from Richard Brashears of the Lynchburg Mule Traders Association (Lynchburg, Tenn. 37352; 615-759-4221).

Advertising attempts to attract tourists to California

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — After decades of coasting on its reputation as a sun-drenched vacation land, California is belatedly joining many other states in advertising its own attractions for tourists.

It is still the nation's No. 1 state for tourism in terms of travelers and revenue, and the number of tourists visiting its celebrated beaches and amusement parks still rises each year.

But the annual increases in the amount of business generated has been slowing in recent years. Travelers generated $28 billion in business within the state last year, according to the State Department of Commerce.

In 1980 tourism brought in $21.8 billion, a 14.4 percent increase over the previous year. But by 1982 the rate of increase fell to 3 percent before rising and then leveling off at 8 percent by 1984, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center, a private organization.

In 1984 the Olympic Games in Los Angeles and the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco did not provide the travel boom the state anticipated. Recession and aggressive advertising campaigns by other states have chipped away at California's share of the national tourist market in the past few years.

So the state has undertaken a new, publicly financed effort to sell its charms to domestic and international travelers. Last year Gov. George Deukmejian authorized a state-financed tourism and marketing plan that provided $5.1 million for local and national advertising.

"No matter how you measure it, tourism is one of our largest industries and largest employers, and we've seen our lead eroding," said Christy Campbell Walters, director of the State Department of Commerce.

Part of the problem for California is that other states have discovered that tourism is a sure way to generate quick revenue and provide entry-level jobs. By budgeting millions for national advertising campaigns, such states as Illinois, New York, Massachusetts and Alaska have siphoned off travel dollars and tax revenue from California and the few other states that did not advertise, California officials said.

"We came to the realization that California needed more than just high-tech and smokestack industries to provide jobs in both urban and rural areas," Walters said.

She added that tourism would be especially helpful in some northern counties where unemployment ranges as high as 35 percent. About 1.7 million employees, or one of every seven in the California work force, hold jobs related to tourism.

The new campaign promotes the state as "12 Californias," emphasizing its diversity, including the mountain, coastal, desert and urban areas. This year the campaign will be aimed at the Western states, which account for 80 percent of California's tourists, and Californians themselves, who account for half of the travelers within the state.

The state is depending on cooperation from the private sector of the economy, and travel-related businesses are eager to participate. "Private industry is really backing the state effort," said Thomas Lease, a spokesman for the California Hotel and Motel Association.

The state also hopes to cash in on the convention facilities popping up in southern California. Palm Springs, San Diego and Anaheim are expanding or building convention centers and hotels, and Los Angeles reports that convention business looks as good as ever.

Recent surveys by the United States Department of Commerce also indicate that California's popularity among foreign tourists is higher than ever, mainly because of its image as a trend-setting region.

BHP Petroleum assumes aggressive posture on heels of recent purchase

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

At a time when exploration staffs are being cut right and left by majors and independents, one firm, BHP Petroleum (Americas) Inc. (formerly Energy Reserves Group or ERG) is moving in the opposite direction.

The firm which operates districts in the Rockies, Kansas, Oklahoma, Gulf Coast and West Texas will more than double its exploration, development and acquisition budgets in 1986 over 1984. Whereas predecessor ERG had no acquisition budget, BHP has planned $10 million for the purchase of production. The exploration budget will jump from $14.1 million to $38.1 million and development from $19.2 million to $41.2 million. The Permian Basin exploration budget will more than double from $2.4 million to $7.1 million.

Included in the budget are 20 development wells and four wildcats in the Permian Basin.

"This is just a projected budget for the Permian Basin," said Will Green, West Texas District Exploration Manager, "it could be altered upward, if enough qualified prospects are generated or evaluated."

CORPORATE PROFILE

"We are in an expansion mode right now and intend to be that way for at least the next 10 years," says Richard Volk, BHP Petroleum, chairman and chief executive officer.

The primary reason for the aggresive posture that goes against the current grain of the industry, according to Volk, was the the purchase of Kansas-based Energy Reserves Group (ERG) by Australian conglomerate, Broken Hill Proprietary (BHP), at the end of 1984. Said Volk: "BHP has provided our oil firm not only with a new name but solid financial resources and a new way of looking at things."

Volk added: "Foreign corporations don't see our problems in the same context as we do. They have a more sophisticated international view of our problems, while we tend to be more parochical here in America. While we look at a problem from quarter to quarter, they take a long term view."

Volk said Broken Hill Proprietary Co. viewed the downturn in the oil industry as an opportunity. "We think we can find oil and gas at a reasonable price because of current low prices for drilling and completion," he said.

In terms of resources the oil company which was had a capital budget of $161 million in 1981, but saw its fortunes fall with the bust, has gained a windfall in the $1 billion cash flow of BHP.

As conglomerates go BHP is Australia's equivalent of Exxon and U.S. Steel rolled into one. With 57,000 employees, it accounts for 2 percent of that nation's gross domestic product and 10 percent of the value of all shares listed on Australia's stock exchange. In 1984, the mining, oil and steel group had record profits of $639 million on $5 billion in sales. The highly profitable corporation has high regard for oil dollars. Its petroleum sales provide approximately two-thirds of company profits. In a joint venture with Exxon, BHP produces most of the oil pumped in Australia.

"It is a company which has clearly outgrown Australia and is on a deliberate path to internationalization," says one source.

It is not unreasonable to suspect that a generous portion of the conglomerate's healthy cash flow will find its way into the Permian Basin economy. "We are actively seeking valid oil prospects with target volumes of one million barrels in about the 6,000-12,000 range," said Willard Green.

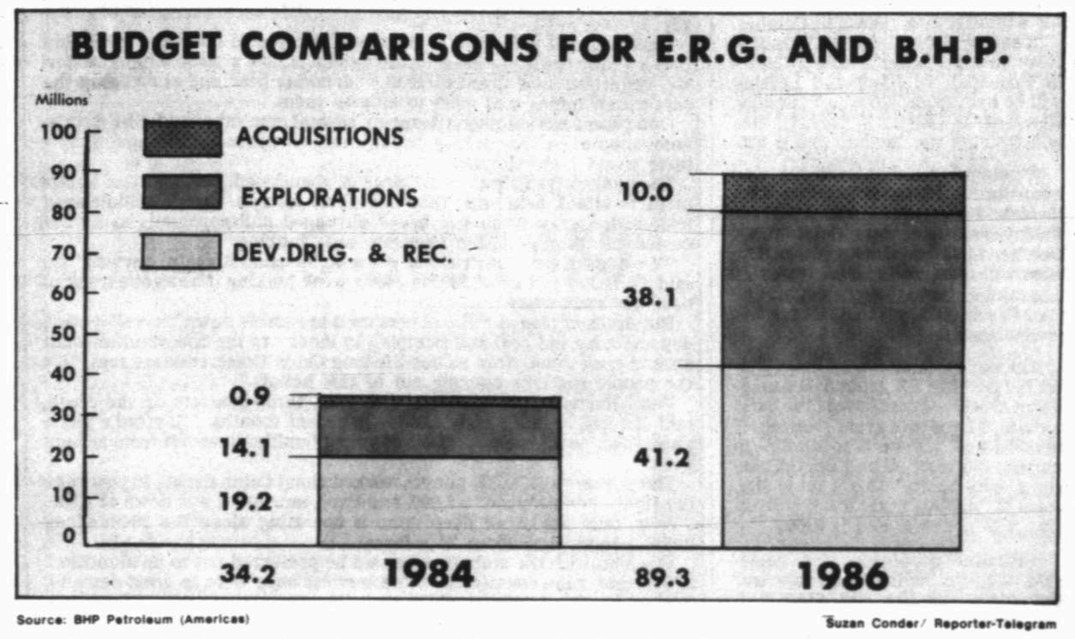

The firm has a long history in the Permian Basin, first as Clinton Oil in the mid-sixties. In 1973, under SEC decree the company was reorganized and in 1976 changed its name from Clinton Oil to Energy Reserve Group. It was purchased by BHP for $500 million ($260 million cash and $237 million debt) in late 1984 and offically became a part of the group as BHP Petroleum (Americas) Inc. Jan. 1, 1985.

For its money BHP became owner of 824 leases with 2,062 oil wells and 517 gas wells, producing 34,830 barrels oil per day and 225,971 Mcfd of gas. The West Texas District is largest of the firm's four districts, producing 2,959 barrels oil per day and 12,275 Mcf of gas daily from 253 oil and 32 gas wells on 104 leases. District wide the firm employs 44 with 29 in the Midland office.

Why are foreign firms bullish on U.S. oil?

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

"We see the U.S. as a prime area for expansion, and feel our Kansas-based oil company will help the holding group meet its long term objectives." says Clark Mandigo, president BHP Petroleum (Americas). Here, Mandigo tells why his firm is bullish on the U.S. domestic oil and gas industry and why it sees the current downturn as a time for opportunity and not retreat, for those firms with capital resources:

■ Untapped exploration potential: "The lower 48 states, onshore is seen by many as an area with little potential. This is certainly not our view. In the period from 1970-1980, 14 large oil fields, with 100 million barrels or more were discovered. Eight of these were in the Rockies. In Nevada the well density is only one for every 250,000 acres, compared to one well per 120 acres in some of the more mature acres. There is much remaining to be explored onshore in the U.S."

"Of course, the potential for very large discoveries in Alaska, California and the outer continental shelf of the Gulf of Mexico are well-known."

■ Improved industry odds: "As a result of the industry downturn and the restructuring occurring within the industry, the number of competitors has been significantly reduced...independent oil and gas companies in the U.S. have declined from approximately 20,000 in 1981 to a current level of 15,000...Over the last three years 20 of the largest U.S. based oil companies were either acquired, had to take on substantial debt to acquire other firms, or are undergoing voluntary or involuntary restructuring. This reduction in the absolute number of competitors increases the probability that we will be able to capture opportunities which we identify."

■ Increased availability of federal acreage: "A company or a group of related entities may own no more than 250,000 acres of federal leases. Many of the majors maintain an inventory of federal acreage close to that limit, and as a result of recent mergers will exceed the limit. They will have one year within which to reduce their holdings to the limit. This represents an opportunity to acquire attractive acreage in states with federal leases — namely the Rockies."

■ Increased available prospects: "There are many financially strapped independents and debt-burdened majors with prospects and attractive acreage in the Rocky Mountains as well as the Outer Continental Shelf of the Gulf of Mexico. These companies are unable to explore these prospects and one should be able to farm in to the prospects with little or no front-end costs and low promotion.

■ Ability to purchase assets: "Opportunities to acquire existing oil and gas reserves at attractive prices currently exist and should continue for the near future as operators are required to sell assets to pay down debt. Petro-Lewis has made property sales aggregating over $800 million in the past 18 months, while companies such as Chevron, Phillips and Occidental are attempting to raise billions through asset sales. In many cases entire companies are also for sale and as the uncertainity over future oil prices continues and, perhaps, increases, some of these companies may be able to be purchased at very attractive prices."

■ An expanded talent pool: "The mergers, consolidations, restructuring, bankruptcies and general uncertainty about the oil business have created a pool of extremely talented and experienced people from which a company, such as ours, with growth objectives and attractive career opportunities, will be able to draw upon."

Midland oilman finalizes foreign venture

O.H. Berry signs Caribbean exploration agreement

ENTREPRENEUR

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

After decades of probing petroleum frontiers in the Permian Basin, Midland oilman O.H. Berry has decided to go international and roll the dice on a rank frontier in the Caribbean.

Recently, Berry, the owner of Lagartos Oil Co., and the Governor of the Cayman Islands, Peter Lloyd, signed a hard-won agreement giving Berry exploratory license on eight blocks or 160,000 acres on shore and offshore on Grand Cayman Island.

The agreement came after seven years of intensive negotiation with the government of the Cayman Island which had insisted on strong controls to insure no ecological damage to Caymanian waters as a result of oil drilling.

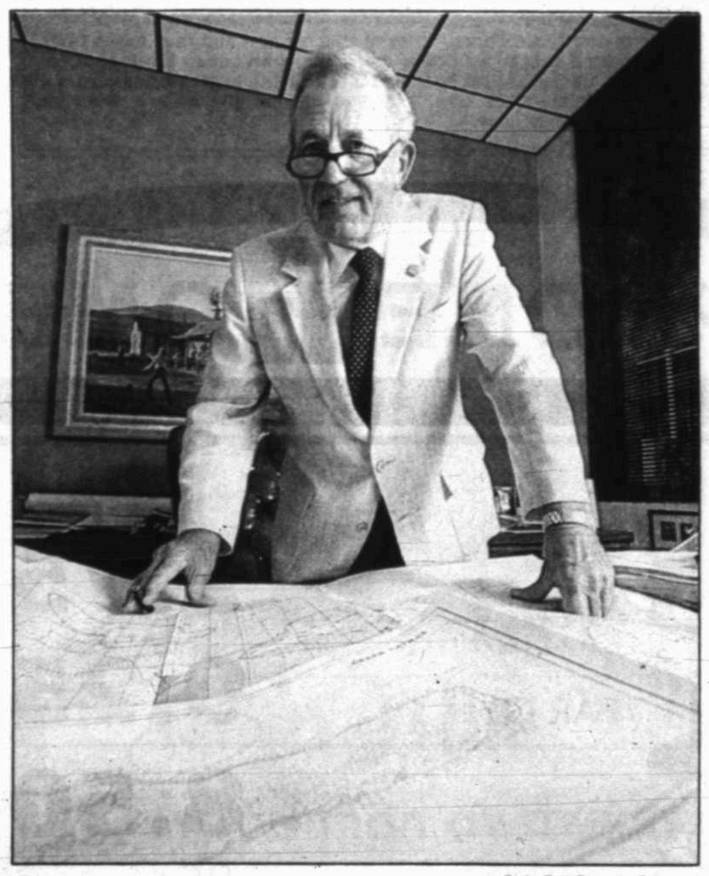

Berry said agreement was finally reached on the 48-page document with the help of a United Nations intermediary and Berry's attorney son, Trey, who operates 3M Energy in San Angelo.

"The U.N. influence was the dominating factor, but I couldn't have done it without Trey. There was some intense legal work, and he was invaluable," Berry said.

While the agreement requires him to drill a well within two years, Berry said he expects to begin drilling within a year. The 25-year concession calls for production within six years. A three-well exploratory package estimated at about $9 million is being planned.

Under the terms of agreement, the Cayman government will receive one-eighth royalty. Berry will pay a petroleum levy of 46 percent on realized net petroleum income and a supplemental levy, calculated on a complex formula based on the market price of petroleum products and production rates. An additional levy of 30 percent will be made on income in excess of a 20 percent return on investment, and if the rate of investment exceeds 35 percent the levy will be at the rate of 50 percent on the income above that number, according to news reports in the Caymans.

All drilling and production operations will be approved by a joint committee comprised of three represenatives of the Cayman government and three from Lagatos Oil.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

O.H. Berry examines a map of Cayman Islands.

Berry says the geology of the area, though sparse, is encouraging. "This is reef on reef. It is not volcanic in origin." He said a research well drilled to 1,350 feet in 1957 encountered the same geological column as found in the prolific oil fields of Campeche, Mexico. Predicated on the paleontology of the well, he has theorized that a drilling venture will encounter the Cretaceous at about 2,200 feet and the basement at about 6,400 feet, leaving 4,200 feet of Cretaceous and Jurassic to explore.

Berry has conducted a series of aeromagnetic surveys which were evaluated by the late Sylvain Pierson and has utilized the services of consultants Art and Howard Myerhoff, renowned experts on Caribbean geology.

"We're working now to structure something to drill on," said Berry, who added that further geological work may be needed.

He termed the Caymanian exploration agreement a precedent that would provide the Cayman goverment with guidelines as other oil firms seek to explore Caymian territory.

Under the Caymanian Petroleum Law of 1978, all petroleum in the Islands is vested in the Crown, and sets out the conditions under which landowners and occupants are required to grant license for oil exploration.

An oilman for 38 years, Berry has lived in Midland since 1955, and prior to becoming an independent worked for Standard of Texas (Chevron), Vickers Petroleum and Wilshire Oil Co. He received his B.A. in Petroleum Engineering from Texas A&M.

"We are looking forward to our venture in the Cayman Islands," said Berry. "It is a very straight up place to do business. They are an international banking country with over 400 banks on the Islands and take great pride in their integrity."

Personal income, spending rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans last month increased their spending 1.2 percent, the biggest gain in almost a year, as personal income rose a modest 0.3 percent, the government reported this week.

The surge in consumer spending was certain to delight the Reagan administration, which is depending on such an increase to propel the economy from the slump it has been in for the last year.

Private analysts, however, questioned the durability of the spending gain given the fact that personal income growth has been rather lackluster for the entire year.

And the gain in spending came at the expense of savings. Last month, the personal savings rate dipped to 2.8 percent, the lowest level since the government began keeping monthly statistics back in 1959.

The 0.3 percent increase in income in August was the lowest since a 0.7 percent decline in May, which was followed by moderate 0.4 percent increases in both June and July.

Yes, you can put a price tag on human life

One of the toughest problems facing corporations in the age of fast expanding technology is determining the value of human life. Simple enough you say, "You can't put a price on human life." Not so simple.

There is a price tag on human life and you and I, by our voice or silence, set the price. As Joseph Kalt, a Harvard professor of economics, once told me at a Dallas media confab, "Everyday we decide how many babies are going to die for our way of life."

One of the most profound debates in risk/benefit evaluation took place in the last century over whether or not this nation should go with the relatively safe, but limited DC electricity or the highly effective but dangerous AC electricity. Even though AC has killed thousands and will kill thousands more, the choice was made to go with the more effective alternating current over direct current. It was deemed okay that some should die that we may have a form of electricity that could be transported great distances and do limitless work.

The study of the concept of risk — assessing it; determining voluntary and involuntary risks; utilizing the techniques of risk/benefit analysis, coupled with all the ethical and moral questions — is one of the most fascinating subjects in the business-social context. Seminars and institutes are conducted about risk. Journals and text books are published about it, but few besides insurance actuaries and a few corporate lawyers and executives really understand it.

Consumers are only vaguely aware of risk, and certainly are not aware that corporate planners and lawyers often huddle to determine liability each time a new product is launched. Many in the consumer sector along with an army of social reformers also labor under the dream that zero risk can be achieved. In reality there is no such thing as zero risk.

• For example a brick home is less susceptible to fire than a frame home; on the other hand natural radiation is increased substantially in a brick home.

• Microwaves present much convenience in the preparation of quick, nutritious meals, but are they worth the possibility of radiation leakage.

• Carrots are touted as a health food, but they contain carotatoxin, a potent nerve poison. Avocados contain pressor amines that elevate blood pressure.

In summation there is risk in any and every activity humans engage in and hard choices and trade offs to be made in relation to risk and benefits.

Columbia S&L taking healty approach to keeping employees

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — It is perhaps the only financial institution in the world to employ a karate expert full-time ... or devote about 7,000 square feet of prime real estate here and in nearby Irvine to two state-of-the-art gymnasiums for just 580 employees ... or to recruit Los Angeles Lakers Coach Pat Riley to train top management on issues of health and fitness.

But then Columbia Savings & Loan Association has never been known to do much of anything the traditional way.

For some time, the company has had a reputation as the country's fastest-growing S&L, although 39-year-old president Tom Spiegel insists the organization is now one of the nation's slowest-growing. In any case, Columbia went from a net worth of about $3 million in 1977 when Spiegel took over as president to an estimated net worth of $215 million — all without benefit of mergers or acquisitions.

The S&L is also known for its largely successful but controversial investments in low-grade, high-yield "junk" bonds and for its high executive salaries (Spiegel's was reported at $1.36 million earlier this year and he acknowledges that some of his key executives have become millionaires through bonuses and stock options).

As Salvatore Serrantino, president of California Research Corp., of Santa Monica, Calif., a national marketing consultant to banks and S&Ls, described Columbia, "They are definitely a new breed of financial services industry institution. They have taken a very strong interest in their employees and in staff development.

"They literally creamed some of the top young executive talent in the business about five years ago, people who are fairly young but have substantial experience. Now almost all their senior people are the same ones who've been with them for a number of years. Their approach to employee-staff development is to put the greatest emphasis on their people resources."

THE PHYSICAL part of that emphasis had its genesis in 1981 when, as Spiegel recalled, both he and the company were in bad shape.

"Interest rates were 20 percent. Columbia was losing $500,000 a month," the former stockbroker said the other day at the company's gym here, where he wore faded navy shorts, a yellow polo shirt and new leather Reebok sneakers. "Some of the largest savings and loans in the country were having serious problems. The country was in a recession bordering on depression. I was working 14-15 hours a day, seven days a week. I had no outlets for my frustrations."

Spiegel had met Hugh Van Putten, a personable Beverly Hills karate master who was giving Spiegel's two children (and a number of celebrities) karate lessons.

Spiegel thought it might be a good idea to "start working out with him to relieve my tensions. Eventually, my consciousness about what I ate started to change. I started sleeping and feeling better. My stamina increased. So did my ability to work harder and think clearly. It had a very positive effect on my business life as well as my personal life. When the people in the company saw what a positive impact it was having on me, some of them said, 'What about us?' "

Not long thereafter, Putten began working full time for the company, providing karate lessons privately and in groups. His duties have expanded to giving classes in stress relief and managing the company's assorted fitness programs, which are steadily increasing.

Aerobics classes are now offered three times a day. And in addition to supporting ice hockey, basketball, baseball and bowling teams, the organization also pays for some staffers' visits to the Pritikin Longevity Center. Arrangements have been made for a Pritikin physician to work at Columbia with interested employees and their spouses.

THE S&L ALSO sponsors health and wellness weekends for managers, such as a recent retreat (at which the Lakers' Riley was one of the speakers). The agenda? Spend the weekend considering such topics as nutrition, exercise and health management.

What is more, Columbia owns some condominiums in Deer Valley (a Utah ski resort) and encourages its middle- and senior-level managers to take their entire departments there for two or three days of skiing — interspersed with business discussions.

"You'd be surprised how much you can learn about your own company taking a 20-minute chairlift ride up the mountain," Spiegel noted. "People tend to tell you how they feel about things in that kind of an environment as opposed to things they think you might want to hear in the office."

Wendell Ruppe, the executive vice president Spiegel credits with much of Columbia's overall success and particularly with strongly supporting the company's fitness programs, has similarly found that simply wearing workout clothes and sweating in the gym quickly puts people on the same level.

"People start relating to other people as human beings instead of as titles," he observed, adding that since the company's various programs began he has lost 50 pounds and attained a blue (middle-level) belt in karate. "It's amazing how sitting around in shorts and sweats breaks down all sorts of barriers. We've always had an open-door policy here but this encourages even more communication."

"It fosters a family feeling among the employees," karate master Putten said. "Tom doesn't want a company with the usual corporate tensions. In the gym, they're able to let loose a lot of their tensions. They'll sweat it out, punch it out, meditate it out, Ping-Pong it out — each individual has his or her own way to relieve stress."

PBGC offers five classes in October

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer five classes in October.

"Leasing: federal, state (Texas and New Mexico) and university lands" in Principals of Land and Leasing will be held from 7-10 p.m. Thursday. Ken Griffin, Griffin & Burnett, Inc., will instruct the session. Fee is $25.

"Financial fund accounting and quantitative methods" in the CPA Review Program is scheduled for Friday and Saturday, October 4-5, October 11-12 and October 18-19. The class will meet on Fridays, from 6-10 p.m. and Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Fee is $252, plus $63.90 for the review manuals.

"Oil and gas taxation — Level I" is set for October 1-2, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. This course covers the basic federal oil and tax areas. New staff persons and anyone who desires to understand basic oil and gas tax concepts may attend this course. Dr. John M. Malloy, Texas Tech University, will instruct. Fee is $260.

"Practical geophysics for geologists — I" will be held Tuesdays and Thursdays, October 1-17, from 7-10 p.m. This is a practical interpretation course on applications and limitations of geophysical tools. Only one mathematical equation will be presented. Edwin C. Woodruff, consulting geophysist, will instruct the course. Fee is $200.

"Part I: Components of Geological Data" will be held October 2-3, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The course is designed for people breaking into the geological phase of the oil industry who require a better understanding of geological data and/or the responsibilities of the geological assistant or secretary. Brenda Machost Carpenter, president, Petroleum Technicians, Inc., will instruct the course. Fee is $195.

Cabin Creakers now mine junk instead of coal

KAYFORD, W.Va. (AP) — At the Bethlehem Steel bathhouse, where just a couple of years ago hundreds of miners washed the underground grime from their bodies each day, rats and lizards scamper across the floor. Flies buzz through the shot-out windows and vines choke the gaping doorway.

Once a proud prototype of the Appalachian coal industry, this Cabin Creek valley town southeast of Charleston is now a place where desperate, dispirited men spend their days drinking beer and scavenging the abandoned mines that used to employ them.

One recent hot summer afternoon, several men sat outside the Bethlehem complex in the parking lot, downing six-packs and discussing how their world had collapsed.

They also talked about what piece of abandoned, rusting mine equipment to attack next with their acetylene torches. One, a middle-aged man with a gray stubble of beard, shrugged philosophically as he discussed the pastime Cabin Creekers call "junking."

"We don't figure they're ever going to be using it again, anyway," he said. "A fellow can make $300 to $400 a week junking if he's got a truck to haul the stuff away."

Hundreds of loaded railroad cars used to rumble down the valley each day, carrying out coal and pumping in money to the communities built around each mine. Now, as one life-long Cabin Creek resident says, "It's the people that are pouring out of this hollow."

Pearl Harrison, postmaster at Leewood, three-quarters up the creek, said she had seen a steady exodus in recent months. "Kayford's just a ghost town now," she said. "Lots of young families have left from around here."

Thirty years ago 10,000 miners worked along Cabin Creek; 10 years ago the figure had dropped to 5,000, and two years ago it was down to 2,500.

Now, only one small deep mine is operating along the 20-mile-long hollow, employing about 25 miners.

The man with the stubble, who said he preferred not to be identified, is a former mine electrician whose services once were in great demand. Now, as he sees it, he's too old to start over, too young to draw a pension, and just right for junking.

"This is all I have to do since they cut me loose" two years ago, he said. "It used to be I couldn't be out of work for two days unless they were calling me. And now there's nobody left to work for here."

The hollow's economy collapsed under the weight of a slumping coal market and the depletion of many seams.

Quin Morton III, whose father and grandfather helped develop mining along the creek, well remembers when 10,000 miners labored deep beneath the steep hills. Morton, retired president of the now-defunct Kanawha Valley Coal Operators Association, said plenty of coal remains along the creek and that the mines will be productive again — someday.

"Buddy, things will never be the same around here, not like they once were," said David Pullen, who has spent all of his 60 years at Giles, just below Ohley, the onetime home of former United Mine Workers president Arnold Miller.

"No matter," said Pullen, "they're all gone now and they haven't left much behind except a filled-in creek and a brokenup piece of road.

"Things are bad around here, and they're going to get worse because a lot of people are stuck here. Why, you couldn't give away a house on Cabin Creek right now."

Advertiser says his profession deserves more respect than it gets

NEW YORK (AP) — Louis T. Hagopian, who heads one of the nation's oldest advertising agencies as well as one of the industry's trade groups, says his profession deserves more respect from the businesses it serves.

Advertisers treat their law and accounting firms as professionals, Hagopian says, even though their jobs are mainly to keep businesses out of trouble.

"When you hire an ad agency, you hope to sell more of something," he said in a recent interview. "It's a positive force on the bottom line."

And as such, he argues that advertising agencies deserve the professional stature that legal and accounting firms are given in America's boardrooms.

Hagopian, chairman and chief executive of NW Ayer Inc., said he plans to use his year as chairman of the American Association of Advertising Agencies to sell that idea to the business community.

Selling is something the 59-year-old Hagopian has been doing nearly all of his adult life.

Born and raised in Michigan, he went into the car business after completing a two-year stint in the Navy and graduating from Michigan State University.

He started in sales for General Motors Corp. in 1947, and six years later moved to Chrysler Corp.'s advertising department. He joined Ayer in 1960, and recently celebrated his 25th year with the company.

The early training at General Motors gave him a feel for the auto business. He went through a six-week training program in which he was taught how to assemble an automobile transmission and then was sent to the Pittsburgh office, where he handled customer and dealer complaints. "It was a lowly clerical job, but you were right at the guts of the business," he said.

He moved to GM's Kansas City office, where he taught others what he had learned and later became a district sales manager, the link between dealers and the auto factory.

"I wouldn't trade that experience for anything," Hagopian said as leaned back and took in the view of Central Park afforded by his mid-Manhattan office. "It has helped me in being CEO of this place."

But Hagopian wanted to work in advertising rather than sales and he moved in 1953 to Chrysler, where got that chance first with the Dodge division and later with Plymouth.

At Dodge, he was involved in selecting the television shows that the division would sponsor. In those days, advertisers bought time from the networks and then bought the programming to fill it.

Musicmaker Lawrence Welk was enjoying some popularity in Southern California on a show sponsored locally by Dodge dealers, and Hagopian recalls someone suggested putting Welk on nationally.

Hagopian, who describes himself as "a young Turk out of the Big Band era," disliked Welk's musical style and opposed the selection. But his colleagues prevailed and Welk was televised nationally.

To Hagopian's chagrin, the show did very well. It was only years later, he said, that audience demographic studies showed the people watching the Welk show "had already bought their last Dodge."

But the experience taught him two things. "I learned my taste was not that of all of America, and I would have to put my own tastes aside," he said. "It also taught me not to make a snap judgment without getting all of the information."

The transition from Chrylser's Plymouth division to Ayer in 1960 was quite smooth, Hagopian said. "I left the Plymouth division on Friday and on Monday was management supervisor on their account at Ayer," he said.

He moved up in Ayer on the financial rather than the creative side of the business. The firm, which was founded in 1869 and calls itself America's oldest advertising agency, made him its sixth chief executive in 1976.

The biggest problem facing the ad industry, Hagopian said, is "the relative lack of stability in its relationship with its clients."

"Accounts change hands far more than they should, and it is the fault of both clients and agencies," he said.

He said agencies that fail to meet performance standards such as for market share or product awareness may deserve to be fired. But he said agencies are too often "indiscriminately fired" because of a client's impatience or desire to appear to have done something.

He said the "better" advertisers generally have "long and stable relationships with their agencies," ticking off several examples from the 10 biggest advertisers — Procter & Gamble, Sears Roebuck, GM and Ford.

His own firm was recently fired after seven years on the Seven-Up account for Philip Morris Inc. Hagopian declined to discuss what he felt were the reasons for the switch.

Ayer had created the no-caffeine marketing campaign for Seven-Up, and the company credited Ayer as it made the change with "substantially improving the volume of the company's brands leading to record increases" in each of the past three years.

"Given what we've done for Seven-Up, that's a difficult decision to understand," Hagopian said in a memo to Ayer employees.

In addition to selling a more stable and professional relationship between advertisers and their agencies, Hagopian said he hopes to persuade business schools to include a course in advertising in their curriculum requirements.

Basin count highest in six months

The Permian Basin rig count is at its highest level since last April this week, posting a 284 count total. This number represents an increase of eleven working rigs over last week's total.

The large increase in the area count can be attributed to an increase of ten in Andrews County, up from 28 to 38. Midland County added one to its total for 12 and Ector County remained steady at 13.

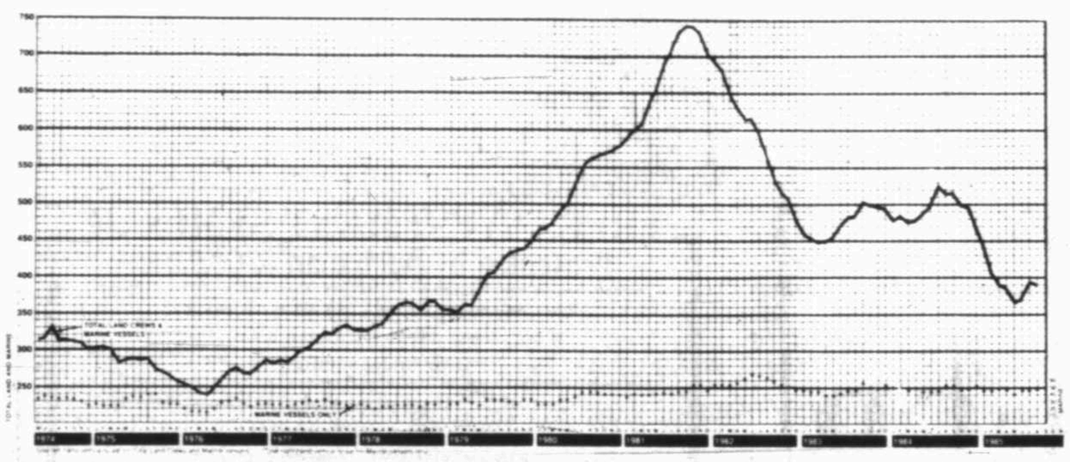

New activity was seen in Edwards and Menard counties, each with one, while most other area counties managed to hold on to last week's rig totals.

The national count dropped sharply, down 33 to record a 1,912 rig tally. This compares with last week's total of 1,945.

Most of the decrease was seen in Louisiana and Oklahoma, slipping 16 and 11 respectively. North Dakota also lost ten rigs.

Texas was the bright spot in this week's count, posting a total of 633 for a ten rig advance from last week.

Year ago totals were 344 in the Permian Basin and 2,438 in the U.S.

Seismic crews down

The number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters during August decreased by seven crews and vessels over July. The August total was 390, compared with 397 in July, according to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists' latest report.

DOE publishes report on polymer research

BARTLESVILLE — The Department of Energy has published a report containing the latest information on the Department's synthetic polymer research and development.

According to Dr. Charles McCormick and Dr. Roger D. Hester, co-principal investigator's for the DOE polymer research program at the Univeristy of Southern Mississippi, a family of copolymers recently synthesized has shown "perhaps the greatest potential for enhanced oil recovery yet reported."

The University of Southern Mississippi is investigating the synthesis and rheology (flow properties) of polymers for the DOE under a contract originally awarded in 1977 by the Bartlesville Project Office. The objective of the program is to develop polymers that will work better than those now available. DOE technical project officer is Fred W. Burtch of Bartlesville.

Enhanced oil recovery by water or chemical flooding consists of pumping fluids into the reservoir to displace and drive the oil to producing wells. But the success of these methods has been hampered by the tendency of injected fluids to break through the oil bank, leaving the oil behind. This is known as "channeling".

To help prevent channeling, polymers are added to the water/chemical mixture to make a thick broth. This reduces the tendency of injected fluids to bypass oil in dense portions of the reservoir. Polymers are chemicals made by joining many small molecules together to produce substances made of large molecules with high molecular weights (macromolecules).

Englewood man awarded $70 million in accident

DENVER (AP) — An Englewood man left partially paralyzed by a 1981 oilfield accident has been awarded $70 million from a Dallas oil company by a U.S. District Court jury in Houston.

"I've waited a long time," said Homer Hinojosa, 26, when the jury returned the verdict Wednesday after six hours of deliberations. "Justice has been done."

Hinojosa has been partially paralyzed since Aug. 26, 1981, when he fell about 10 feet from a tower other workers had begun to dismantle. He landed on his back and fractured a vertebra.

At the time of the incident Hinojosa was employed by Beach Inc. of Bay City, Texas.

Janssen Lease Service Inc. of Ganado, Texas was also named in the suit. While Janssen was found partly responsible for the accident, the company was not ordered to pay any of the judgment ecause it was under the supervision of Moore McCormack, Eisenman said.

The judgment of $64 million, plus interest, included $32 million in punitive damages against Moore McCormack Production Inc.

Drilling up

Exploratory drilling increased both in the U.S. and in the Permian Basin. Development drilling also increased in the Basin, but fell slightly in the U.S., according to the latest statistics released by Smith Tool. Utilization of rigs in the Basin also rose, up from 42.4 percent to 43.8 percent.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The totals on the utilization chart represent the depth at which each rig is rated. However, some rigs that have been depth-rated for deeper depths are drilling at shallower depths. That will account for some disparity that might appear in the tables, shown to the left.

PBPA to discuss Reagan tax plan

President Reagan's tax simplification plan will be the topic of discussion at the Permian Basin Personnel Association meeting at 6 p.m. September 26 at the Holiday Inn Centre in Odessa.

Vito Kuraitis, consulting principal, A.S. Hansen, Inc., will be the guest speaker.

He has analyzed Reagan's tax simplification plan and has presented proposals to it. Kuraitis will present the implications of this pending legislation to the association.

Corporate-takeover spotlight shifts from oil patch to media

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The corporate-takeover spotlight has shifted from the oil patch to the media industry this year, with overall merger activity continuing at about the same rapid pace as last year.

One trend that has accelerated this year is the adoption of anti-takeover provisions by major corporations. More than 200 of the S&P 500 corporations added measures that make takeovers more difficult, according to Jamie Heard, deputy director of the Washington-based Investor Responsibility Research Center. The anti-takeover provisions do not deter a determined bidder, but they probably make these companies less likely to become the target of hostile takeover bids in the future, Heard said.

While the three biggest deals of 1984 were in the oil industry, with Chevron Corp. acquiring Gulf Corp. for $13.3 billion, Texaco Inc. acquiring Getty Oil Co. for $10.1 billion, and Mobil Corp. acquiring Superior Oil Co. for $5.7 billion, 1985's biggest deals have been spread through industries ranging from health care to aerospace. Some of the most exciting takeover activity has been concentrated in the media industry, where two of the three major television networks have been involved in major transactions.

AMERICAN Broadcasting Co. Inc. agreed to be acquired by Capital Cities Communications Inc. last March in a friendly $3.5 billion deal that is scheduled to be completed in January. That deal has led to one of the largest single divestitures of media properties in history, as the companies have agreed to sell various television, radio, newspaper, and cable-television operations to comply with Federal Communications Commission regulations limiting ownership of media properties.

CBS Inc. escaped a hostile takeover attempt by Cable News Network founder Ted Turner in July by repurchasing nearly $1 billion of its own shares and adding hundreds of millions of dollars in debt to its balance sheet. Turner, eager to make a deal, turned his attention from New York to Hollywood and promptly entered into an agreement to purchase MGM-UA Inc. in a friendly $1.5 billion acquisition that would give him a vast library of classic films and a major production studio if the transaction is completed.

Meanwhile, the Tribune Co. of Chicago and media magnate Rupert Murdoch set new standards for the value of independent television stations (stations not affiliated with the major networks). Tribune Co., which already owned independents in New York and Chicago, agreed to pay a record-setting $510 million for Los Angeles independent KTLA-TV, while Murdoch agreed to pay about $2 billion for seven independent stations owned by Metromedia Inc. Neither of those transactions can be completed until they receive FCC approval.

THE STEADIEST stream of takeover activity nationwide continues to be in the banking industry, where many of the regulatory barriers to out-of-state ownership of banks have been eliminated. Additional consolidation among financial institutions is expected.

"We are not seeing the oil deals bigger than $10 billion that we saw last year, but we are still seeing a lot of big deals," said Martin Sikora, editor of Mergers and Acquisitions magazine. "There have been a lot of deals in the $1 billion to $7 billion range. Overall, in the first half of this year, we have counted about 1,500 deals completed, and that is about half of what we had in the full year 1984. Last year in the oil industry we saw mergers; this year we are seeing restructuring and retrenchment."

Sikora's oil-industry restructuring has included multibillion-dollar programs at Phillips Petroleum Co. and Unocal Corp. to "enhance shareholder value" by repurchasing stock, adding debt to the balance sheet, and shrinking the corporate base by selling assets. In both cases, the restructuring was designed to thwart hostile takeover bids from Mesa Petroleum Chairman T. Boone Pickens Jr.

ATLANTIC Richfield Co., which had been rumored as a takeover target, announced a similar restructuring program, while Pickens announced a plan to convert Mesa to a partnership that will cut back on new drilling and distribute cash flow from producing properties directly to shareholders. Pickens will no longer use Mesa as a vehicle to launch hostile takeover bids.

While corporate raider Carl Icahn attempts to complete the acquisition of Trans World Airlines Inc., surprising those observers who thought he was interested only in trading profits and not in acquiring a major U.S. corporation, Pickens is on the sidelines. He says he has no desire to attempt hostile takeovers as long as corporations are allowed to use defensive tactics that entrench management by discriminating against certain shareholders.

Pickens' bid for Unocal was blocked when the company announced an exclusionary tender offer, upheld by the Delaware courts, that allowed the company to buy back shares from everyone except Pickens. Both the Securities and Exchange Commission and Congress are considering measures to outlaw that powerful defensive maneuver.

THE MOST popular anti-takeover provisions adopted by major corporations at their annual meetings this year were fair-price provisions and classified boards of directors. The fair-price provisions require supermajority stockholder approval (approval of more than 75 percent in many cases) of takeovers, unless the board of directors favors the deal or unless stockholders would receive the same price for all of their shares. The provision is designed to deter two-tier bids, in which a bidder offers cash for 51 percent of the stock and securities with less value for the rest.

Trend at nation's business schools moving toward courses in power

WASHINGTON (AP) — Students at some of the nation's most prestigious business schools, clamoring to get a leg up on competition, are flocking to courses that teach about power, influence and staying on top in the tough corporate battlefield.

"They are lining up in droves because they have gotten feedback from their summer jobs or business school alumni, that power and leadership" is an important part of management, says John P. Kotter, a professor at the Harvard Business School. "Power is a reality ... not to stab someone in the back, but in getting a job done."

Says Donald Press, a graduate of Darthmouth's business school who is now a senior product manager at General Foods Corp. in White Plains, N.Y.: "It was probably the most useful course I took in business school. It was an injection of the real world."

In the course, Press said, "real-world game playing" was done, such as situations in which mock bosses had to fire employees, or there were corporate misunderstandings in which supervisors listened to different stories and had to decide how to resolve the conflict.

Professors teaching the corporate power game say their courses don't directly delve into sabotaging the guy up the ladder. Rather, they offer instructidon on how to promote yourself by putting your best foot foward as a way to get the boss to do things your way.

Some courses also stress how to build a power base to avoid getting mugged by fellow corporate climbers.

Executive seminars on power and "interpersonal relationships" are also proliferating across the nation.

"Power is like sex 15 years ago — it was a dirty word," said Leonard Greenhagh, professor of the Dartmouth's business school in New Hampshire.

"It wasn't nice to think of power. You were better off to talk of motivation."

At Dartmouth, which has the nation's oldest business school, a course titled "Executive Power and Negotations," has become the most popular class in the school's history, with nine out of 10 candidates for a master's degree in business administration enrolling.

At Dartmouth, as in most other business schools, "corporate game playing" situations are videotaped so participates can analyze their effectiveness.

Sony chairman says U.S., Japan must stick together

Copley News Service

Calls for protectionism have reached a fever pitch on Capitol Hill. The vice president of the United States announces "no more Mr. Nice Guy" to unfair trade practices of foreign trading partners. Swift retaliation will be the order of the day, says the White House.

To which Akio Morita, co-founder and chairman of the board of $5-billion Sony Corp., quietly replies, "Sometimes Americans are too emotional. I would hope that Americans, including your politicians, look at this matter more realistically, more practically" than has been done in the past.

Twenty-five years ago, three Japanese teamed with three Americans to try to crack the United States' audio market. Today, Sony Corp. of America is the worldwide giant's largest division with $2 billion in sales and about 8,000 employees. The largest of Sony's U.S. plants is in Rancho Bernardo, Calif., which is where we caught up with Morita.

Between meals — there are 1,700 people at the plant and he was attempting to break bread with each of three shifts to mark the silver anniversary — Morita agreed to an interview.

The major cause of the United States' trade deficit problem is the value of the dollar, Morita said, to the point that it's not only consumers, but also "American industries themselves shifting their manufacturing production overseas. Your own companies are decreasing American jobs and increasing American imports," he said, using the Big Three car makers and their imported subcompacts as one example. "That is something you must deal with ... how is that a fault of your trading partners?

"Americans use dollars all the time, to buy and sell your goods," he said, suddenly animated. "You aren't accustomed to using other currencies and therefore, you aren't aware that your rate is all wrong. (French president Francois) Mitterrand has told you this. The exchange system is wrong. (Treasury secretary James) Baker knows this. Even (Federal Reserve chairman Paul) Volcker is aware. But your White House also must be aware."

Morita said international money markets have "20 times more money moving around in them than is necessary for industry," alluding to those — mostly Americans — who play international currency games for fun and profit. To his way of thinking, "little value exists" to that market outside its now displaced primary responsibility of exchanging currencies for industrial users all over the world.

Morita is a globe-trotting international trade ambassador, a maverick among millionaires and an unreconstituted entrepreneur, much to the horror of most of his low-profile, up-the-ladder corporate brethren in Japan. His numerous accomplishments and honors are unabashedly dropped into conversations at a moment's notice, but that is as much a part of the Morita legend as his marketing prowess or his glibness.

As one of those corporate heavyweights who number heads of state among their confidants, he is called upon to serve in official and unofficial capacities. In the Carter/Ohira administrations, Morita was one of the wise men; today he sits on the U.S.-Japan Advisory Committee.

Ten and 15 years down the road, "I have great confidence that the United States and Japan will come much, much closer. Japan is still the second largest market for the United States. ... We depend upon one another for defense, among other things.

"We have to stick together. Southeast Asia is the area of biggest growth in the future, and we need to develop it together," he said.

But what of the current squabbles? Of unfair protectionism? Of the $18 billion U.S. trade deficit with the one with Japan ballooning to $50 billion over three years?

"Ten years from now, it will be long forgotten," smiled the wise man.

Bank business falls as automakers offer deals

DETROIT (AP) — Cheap interest rates on new-car loans, offered by the nation's leading automakers to help clear out 1985 models, are cutting deeply into banks' car-loan business as borrowers flock to a better deal, bankers say.

"It's a marketing tool," said Don Mattocks, senior vice president at Citizens and Southern National Bank in Atlanta.

"Our business in the past month is off somewhere between 15 percent and 20 percent," Mattocks said this week.

Since mid-August, the four major U.S. automakers began offering specials on loans through their financing subsidiaries for some 1985-model cars.

General Motors Corp., the first, offers 7.7 percent interest. Ford Motor Co. also offers 7.7 percent, and Chrysler Corp. and American Motors Corp. offer 7.5 percent.

Bank rates generally range from about 10 percent to more than 12 percent.

Ford gives customers the option of a $1,000 rebate and Chrysler offers a $1,500 rebate instead of the loan rate.

Car sales soared after the low-rate specials began. Sales by the three largest domestic automakers were up more than 70 percent in late August over the year before, and by about 60 percent in early September.

"General Motors and Ford are in the business of selling a product, which we are not," Mattocks said. "We're in the business of selling money. Consequently, as a means to an end the parent subsidizes the financing subsidiary to entice people to buy their product."

William Monahan, assistant vice president at First Pennsylvania Bank in Philadelphia, said automobile loans had dropped substantially in August and September.

"We can't even compete against the captive finance companies," Monahan said. "Whether they're going to give rebates to their customers or turn around and subsidize their captive finance companies, they're going to do it. We have no control over it. The customer is making out."

Auto loans account for 25 percent of First Pennsylvania's consumer-loan business, Monahan said.

Some bankers said the impact of the automakers' low rates was cushioned by the rebates offered as an alternative to low-cost loans.

"What the customers are doing is kind of taking the best of both worlds," said Mary Guregian, spokeswoman for Comerica Inc. in Detroit. "They're getting the rebate and they're shopping around for the best auto loan rate available or coming to Comerica because they're used to coming to us for their loans."

Chrysler spokesman Thomas Houston said about 80 percent of the automakers' customers were choosing the low interest rates rather than the rebates.

Direct car loans to consumers by First Interstate Bank of California, headquartered in Los Angeles, dropped slightly in August, but bank officials said the decline may have been caused by other factors.

"We aren't sure its attributable to the end of the year and people wanting to wait for new cars or to the fact that interest rates are going up and people are waiting to decide whether to buy," said Richard Burr, vice president of First Interstate. "More than 50 percent of buyers in California buy foreign cars, and more people do leasing. I don't think it's going to have as big an impact in the California marketplace as it might in Detroit or the Midwest, where people tend to be more conservative about their purchases."

The boom in auto sales, prompted in part by the low rates, has meant good business for some banks, despite the competition.

"This was our best month ever," said Al Kusy, assistant vice president at United Bank of Denver. "We thought we would have a low month because of the 7.7 percent financing, but we think what has happened is it has created a lot of publicity to go out and buy a car."

Some customers drawn into the showroom by the low rates end up buying a car that's not covered by program "and they'll have to find some different financing," Kusy said.

"We haven't seen any drop in business. August was an outstanding month for us in terms of contracts," said Rick Griebel, spokesman for U.S. National Bank of Oregon in Portland. "I think the health of the auto industry right now is good for bank financing as well."

South Texas oil town outgrows rough image

FREER, Texas (AP) — This South Texas community, which evolved from the nickname "Baby Queen City of Duval" to the "Buckle of the Oil Belt," no longer is wild and woolly as when pioneers settled here in the 1920s.

But longtime residents still recall those days fondly.

"This used to be a rough SOB. It was tough," said Mayor Malloy Hamilton, a lifelong Freer resident. "It didn't start cooling down until 1954-55. A lot of people started moving out. It sort of slowed down."

Freer is a community of about 3,300 in the middle of brush and rattlesnake country in Duval County, almost dead center between Laredo and Corpus Christi.

Cattle and oil, like in the early days, are the mainstay of the area. When D.J. Freer and several other families started settling in 1916, life was rough.

Drinking water had to be hauled from as far away as San Diego, a 25-mile trip, and supplies from as far away as Laredo or Corpus Christi. Families lived in tents and the only other companions were coyotes and snakes.

The boom began after oil was discovered.

"Back then you could just go anywhere without going through any gates," said Chamber of Commerce President Jessye Hammack. "It was a freer country — I guess you might say."

There were gambling joints and brothels and fights, a few of them fatal, frequently broke out between cowhands or roughnecks.

A poem authored by Joe "Blackie" Wilson described Duval County and Freer like this:

This is cowboy country and driller country —
A land that God made for men —
For men who can live with rattlesnakes
And ride thru catclaw to win
This is no place for the sissies —
They come, but quickly forsake it.
This land was laid out for the roughnecks
For men with guts enough "to take it."

Times have changed in Freer.

In 1976, the city incorporated and now has a police force, city hall, fire station, new schools and elected officials — a mayor and five alderman. Most of the streets are paved and water wells provide the town with drinking water.

The youths leave, but many come back.

But other things, brush and rattlesnakes, are as constant as they were 60 years ago.

The community recently celebrated the 20th annual Rattlesnake Roundup, which attracts some 30,000 tourists to the area one weekend in April.

"Oh brother, I'll guarantee you we've got them," the mayor said about the reptiles. "All you have to do to know they're here is to go out there and step up in some brush. All you do is just kill 'em."

Visitors entering Freer through the east via Texas Highway 44 are greeted by a gigantic green-and-brown Fiberglas snake in front of the Chamber of Commerce.

"This year we went down on our attendance at the roundup," said Ms. Hammack. "It usually brings in about 25,000 people, but this year we only had about half the crowd."

Freer also is the home of the Muy Grande Deer Hunting Contest. Those interested in stalking javelina, dove and quail also set their sights on the city.

The community also hosts the Youth Rodeo and a Fiddler's Contest.

Among the oil companies located in Freer are Exxon, Mobil and Atlantic Richfield. They are backed by numerous oil field service-related companies, like one owned by D.H. "Hap" Holcomb.

Holcomb was transferred to Freer from Oklahoma by his company in 1938.

"I wanted to go back to Ardmore, Okla., but didn't have enough money to go back," Holcomb said.

Holcomb, who owns Haps Well Service, recalled his first impressions of Freer.

"There was no pavement, no water. We had to have water hauled in in a barrel. There were dirt roads. I didn't like it," he said.

Ms. Hammack, a widow, also remembers the days of unpaved streets, outhouses and rattlesnakes.

"There doesn't seem to be as many as there were, not because of the roundup but because ranchers have cleared off a lot of their land," she said of the rattlers.

The economy of the area is like any other that depends on oil, residents said.

"It's up and down just like any other town. Sometimes we've got some drilling, sometimes we don't," Hamilton said.

Another person who remembers the "olden days" in Freer is Pauline Weathersby.

"Everyone was living in tents, even up to two families living in tents," Ms. Weathersby said. "We didn't have any highways. It was cowtrails then. We just thought we were at the end of the world.

Unions waging new kind of war — for hearts, minds of workers

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Unions that once fought their battles at the assembly lines, the mines and the mills of industrial America are now waging new kinds of wars for the hearts and minds of workers. The current skirmishes are occurring in the boardrooms and on the television screens and video terminals of a new generation of employees.

Organized labor is employing novel techniques — including an increasing use of multimillion-dollar advertising campaigns and modern marketing strategies — to try to reverse a generation of decline. In the months ahead, unions will face some major tests of those tactics.

Luring new workers to the labor movement and preserving the past gains of older, unionized workers are the twin agendas of labor. From the aging steel mills to the gleaming new office towers, and from state houses to the halls of Congress, unions are lobbying, organizing, and advertising themselves aggressively.

In addition to Chrysler Corp., which is currently involved in tough bargaining with the United Auto Workers, other major industries facing a new round of negotiations in 1986 include the major steelmakers, meatpackers, and American Telephone and Telegraph Co. And in each case, serious clashes are expected between employers seeking to cut costs in the face of ever-stiffer competition and unions seeking to reverse the trend of concessionary bargaining.

In Congress, the AFL-CIO and other unions are zeroing in on what they see as a golden opportunity to capitalize on the growing concern about the loss of an estimated 3 million jobs because of the nation's trade deficit. The labor federation believes it can play a major role in enacting some version of protectionist legislation, said AFL-CIO spokesman Murray Seeger. "People who used to label us as antediluvian are now on our side, including major corporations, executives, and congressmen."

On the defensive side, labor also hopes to forge a winning partnership with corporations in fending off Reagan administration attempts to tax employee fringe benefits.

Organizing drives in health care, high-tech communications and other service industries including the government, will determine in large part whether labor unions will remain a major force through the 1980s and 1990s. In these efforts, unions are attempting to appeal to younger, non-union workers by addressing concerns beyond wages and benefits.

Unions that once confined their efforts to bread-and-butter issues are now promising to be a stronger voice for workers concerned about career advancement, job security, work-place stress, VDT safety, pay equity for women, training and retraining and intangible yearnings for "job satisfaction."

The AFL-CIO is currently coordinating a nationwide organizing drive by five unions against Blue Cross-Blue Shield, aiming to recruit tens of thousands of clerical and professional employees in what has been an overwhelmingly non-union industry. The effort is the labor federation's first coordinated campaign pitting multiple unions against a single employer.

New ground is also being broken in the similarly non-union enclave of the nursing home. Two major unions, the Service Employees International Union and the United Food and Commerical Workers, have won elections at more than 60 nursing homes — a 70 percent win rate — in an ongoing 20-state campaign against Beverly Enterprises, the nation's largest chain of nursing homes. The Hotel and Restaurant Employees union is spending $2 million in an organizing drive aimed at hotels in four cities, including Washington, in which the union has hired dozens of college-educated organizers to recruit new members.

Typical of the growing role of public-sector unionism, at least six unions are currently pouring an estimated $10 million into a massive organizing competition in Ohio. There, a new collective bargaining law has opened the way for unionization of nearly 50,000 state employees and more than 100,000 county and municipal workers. Television advertising, direct-mail, and sophisticated polling have gone into the campaign by the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, the Communications Workers of America, and other unions hungry to expand membership.

Polling conducted by various unions suggests that many workers, especially the younger ones, want unions to seek more cooperative rather than confrontational approaches to employers. The UAW, which is spending $2 million on advertising to enhance the union's image, is embarking on an innovative and closely watched experiment with General Motors in the Saturn project in Tennessee. The union has won job guarantees and a greater role in decision-making, while trading off concessions in the form of lower wages and more flexible job classifications, which GM sought.

Multi-state banking to undergo more review

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Multi-state banking operations, an issue which divided Texas' banking industry during the 1985 session, will undergo more review before the 1987 Legislature convenes.

Speaker Gib Lewis has charged the House Financial Institutions Committee with studying regional bank operations, along with baseline checking procedures, consumer banks, and small business loans.

Committee Chairman Bruce Gibson, D-Cleburne, says eh hopes to review Texas' system of regulating financial institutions, reporting that hearings during the session and legislation considered by the committee shows a need to look at modifying the regulatory structure.

That doesn't mean, Gibson indicates, that he's critical of current efforts by regulators, but rather that the financial industry is changing, and different approaches appear needed.

Lawmakers also need to consider the borrowing habits of Texans, and the state's capital needs over the next decade, Gibson says, since Texas is hoping to expand and diversify its economy, which will require large amounts of capital.

Legislation to establish a regional banking system for Texas was considered during the 1985 session but the bills failed to come out of committee.

Legislation for base-line checking accounts, to assure banking services for low-income persons, also failed to come out of committee.

Gibson also says he expects continued changes at the Federal level, as part of the deregulation effort, to require continued changes at the State level.

State lawmakers and regulators will have to continue making changes to deal with those alterations, Gibson says.

Texas Housing Agency is pblishing proposed rules for its multi-family housing program and is considering a new bond issue for single family housing, THA Executive Administrator Earlene Jewett reports.

THA directors met last month and discussed the proposed rules, Jewett says, and the agency "really wants" comments on the proposals.

The rules are an attempt "to create a program without a subsidy which nevertheless has some control of rent"for some units constructed with THA assistance, she says.

"We're going to try to have 20 percent of the units in a development with some ceilings on rent...the formula that is chosen for those rents is crucial," Jewett comments.

"The question we're looking at is whether the formula is feasible and realistic."

THA also is considering a second single-family housing bond issue this fall, since the agency has $150 million in bond-issuing authority available.

THA is investigating "different types of financing programs" as part of its new bond plans, she reports, since the "standard pool insurance program" is becoming "Very difficult to continue."

"It's hard to obtain pool insurance, or to obtain it at a rate that these programs can bear," she says.

"We may be looking at bond insurance, or other types of financing mechanisms," Jewett says.

Texas Credit Union League directors have adopted a resolution urging Congress to reject proposals to tax credit unions as part of the "tax reform" package.

The League, which represents 1,158 credit unions in Texas, with some 3.6 million members, syas the nation's credit unions have voluntarily reduced the Federal deficit by capitalizing their share insurance fund by over $900 million,and are the only financial institutions "to completely operate without any governmental subsidy or assistance."

Taxing credit unions would amount to an indirect tax on "working class Americans," the resolution argues, hurting "the very ones tax reform is designed to help."

Taxation also would impair credit unions' ability to retain adequate reserves, and "the volunteerism of hundreds of thousands of volunteer unpaid workers," the resolution concludes.

Texas credit unions are encouraging members to write thier congressmen in opposition to the taxation proposal.

A hearing has been set for Jan. 6, 1986, in a lawsuit seeking to prevent the State Board of Insurance from implanting its so-called "Lloyds rule," aimed at restricting transactions between rate-regulated companies with non-rate-regulat3d affiliate Lloyd's companies.

A temporary restraining order will remain in effect until Jan. 6.

SBI contends that some companies have been shifting business to affilited Lloyd's companies in order to avoid complying with rate regulations, and that the practice is damaging the regulatory system,and threatens some insurers' solvency.

Sportwagons, Fuegos recalled

DETROIT (AP) — American Motors Corp. has recalled about 2,850 French-made 1985 Renault Fuego and Sportwagon cars for repair of a steering wheel nut that could work loose and make the vehicles difficult to turn.

The nut attaches the steering wheel to the steering shaft, AMC said Wednesday.

AMC found out about the problem from its engineering staff and customers, and knew of no accidents or injuries related to it, company spokesman Ben Dunn said. "You would notice more play in the wheel and the shaft would rock" on cars with the problem, Dunn said.

Iowa airplane firm soared out of basement, into skies

MONTEZUMA, Iowa (AP) — It all started, so to speak, on a wing and a prayer.

Sig Manufacturing Co. Inc. began in a basement and then took off, literally and figuratively, and now its model airplanes are found in — or in the skies above — all 50 states and dozens of foreign countries.

Founded by Glen and Hazel Sigafoose in 1951, the company is now the largest model airplane maker and distributor in the nation, selling 51,000 model airplane kits a year.

But these planes aren't kid's stuff. A model plane may have 150 different parts, and it takes up to 18 months to design a kit, said Sig airplane designer Mike Gretz. Racing models can fly 250 mph.

There's nothing toylike about the price, either. The company's biggest seller, the Kadet Mark II, is a radio-control model that sells for $55.95. And the average modeler probably would plunk down another $200 for a radio, $75 for an engine and about $30 for accessories.

Who flies these things? You'd be surprised, said Sigafoose's widow, now Mrs. Sig-Hester.

"The Academy of Model Aeronautics has 100,000 members and for everyone that belongs there might be 100 modelers out there," she said.

Mrs. Sig-Hester recounted how the Sig empire all began:

In the late 1940s, Sigafoose, a linotypist for a weekly newspaper, was casting around for a business of his own. He thought about his model airplane hobby and the difficulty of obtaining balsa, the lightweight wood used in making the planes.

"At the time, no one sold any balsa wood by mail," she said. "You had to drive to a hobby shop to get any, and a lot of hobby shops didn't even have balsa wood."

The original plant has been expanded 15 times and the company employs more than 80 people. The glossy, 144-page catalog features 64 kits designed by five full-time designers, and about 2,000 accessories either made or distributed by Sig.

Smokeless cigarette to be sold

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Favor, the smokeless cigarette manufactured by Advanced Tobacco Products, will be sold in Austin this weekend, company officials say.

The smoking device, which contains a nicotine solution, looks like a cigarette but does not burn.

Company Chairman Gerald Mazur said ATP chose Austin as its initial market and will move next into the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

"We're actually ahead of schedule on this," he said. "We're officially rolling out on the 23rd (of September) in order to coincide with the fall programming on television."

Favor is not restricted from advertising on television as conventional cigarettes have been since 1971.

Coal-burning utilities may face added future cleanup costs

Copley News Service

ANALYSIS

So you lost a bundle of money and a lot of sleep during all the hysteria about utilities building nuclear plants. And you went out and bought stocks in coal-burning utilities.

Be prepared to lose some more sleep, and maybe some money, too, on the coal-burning utilities. They cause acid rain. And it's going to cost some of them some money, although, importantly, analysts do NOT think that the acid rain issue will become anywhere near as large as the nuclear issue has.

Because of a recent court decision, seven states — Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee and West Virginia — are "most vulnerable to more stringent acid rain controls," says John B. Kellenyi of Wall Street's Drexel Burnham Lambert. Utilities in those states — as well as some others such as Florida — will have to spend some money to hold down sulfur dioxide emissions. The companies will probably be given five to 10 years to phase in the changes, however, says Kellenyi, and companies will try to shift costs to ratepayers.

Among the companies that could have added costs in the next few years because of acid rain requirements are Florida Power & Light, Tampa Electric, The Southern Company, Illinois Power, Central Illinois Power, Public Service Indiana, Indianapolis Power & Light, Detroit Edison, Union Electric, Cincinnati Gas & Electric, Indiana & Michigan Electric, Kentucky Power, Ohio Power, Pennsylvania Electric, Pennsylvania Power & Light, VEPCO, Wisconsin Power & Light and Wisconsin Electric Power.

But don't think the nuclear issue has gone away. Clearly, the market is not punishing the companies building new nuclear plants as severely as it once did. But it's still a key variable in analyzing any decision to buy a utility stock — if you must sleep at night, it's wise to avoid the utilities heavily involved in new nuclear projects. (Normally, they're the ones with the really fat yields.) Leonard Hyman of Merrill Lynch, noting the recent well-publicized problems of Middle South Utilities, concludes, "Some utilities are not out of the woods even after the nuclear plant is completed and in service. Furthermore, construction problems that have surfaced in seemingly well-run projects have caused delay and cost escalation, the results of which may not be passed on to consumers even by mainline regulators not prone to theatrics and political posturing."

Although he believes that most nuclear plants now under construction will be finished "without mishap and will go into service without causing inordinate problems," he is just wary enough to downgrade ratings on certain utilities whose investment in nuclear projects exceeded 100 percent of common equity at the beginning of this year. Dumped from a B or "good quality" rating to a C or "speculative" are AZP Group, Carolina Power & Light, Central Hudson, Cleveland Electric, Commonwealth Edison, Detroit Edison, Eastern Utilities, El Paso Electric, Gulf States, Illinois Power, Kansas City Power & Light, Northeast Utilities and Ohio Edison.

If you are thinking that utilities have no utility whatsoever, at least from the investment standpoint, purge yourself of such an idea.

There are other kinds of utilities — in particular, one totally forgotten and neglected kind, the water utilities. For year upon year, the water utilities have faced the barren waste without the taste of investor acceptance.

But now Richard Russell of La Jolla, Calif.'s Dow Theory Letters believes that the water utilities may be offering some liquidity one of these days. "Forget the strategic metals — water is going to be the scarce item of the late 1980s and 1990s," says Russell. California has been stumbling all over itself on the water question. New Yorkers are told to conserve water. "Unlike electricity, you can't manufacture water," says Russell, who recommends American Water Works, San Jose Water, Consumers Water, California Water and Southwest Water. "All pay dividends, most are around 10 times earnings, and they all have an excellent future," says Russell.

Understandably, water stocks are not generally followed by analysts. Therefore, they often show up on lists of so-called "neglected" stocks that analysts disdain. The American Association of Individual Investors is often looking for such neglected "shadow" stocks, and it likes some water utilities for their goods yields: Southern California Water, Connecticut Water, Elizabethtown Water, Middlesex Water and California Water.

Robert Wagner

Actor Robert Wagner is the star of "Lime Street," a new ABC series about a firm which handles astronomical insurance claims.

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

Today R.J. Wagner is a man who has won some of life's battles and lost some, and has learned to shoulder responsibilities with grace. Bereft by the death of his wife, Natalie Wood, he has pulled the family together and created for their three daughters — Katie, 21, Natasha, 15, and Courtney, 12 — a home filled with love and a world that includes cats, dogs, Arabian horses, chickens, doves, pigeons, goats, a pony and a beautiful French thoroughbred, Loucoum, that races at Hollywood Park.

They spent spring vacation on a pack trip in the Sierras and on Fourth of July they rode the rapids on the Colorado River. Courtney and Natasha traveled with him to Virginia, Washington, London (where Katie already is working as a photographic model) and Switzerland where Wagner will be filming episodes of his new television series, "Lime Street," which debuts this fall on ABC.

"It's a story line I couldn't resist," he says. "This lady, Linda Bloodworth, wrote a script that has everything: the family, melodrama, comedy, romance and adventure, deep involvement with people and investigations that can take me all over the world.

"My home base is a farm in Virginia (with horses of course) where my two daughters are growing up under the wise, elegant eye of my dad, Lew Ayres. John Standing plays my partner in the firm, which strongly resembles Lloyds of London, and we handle astronomical claims. One story will involve the great train robbery that occurred in England. Another will deal with the confiscation of an F-22 valued at $250 million.

"John is a British actor, wonderful. People seemed to feel our styles were interesting together so we've packed them together for 'Lime Street.' Relationships are what hold importance for me, they're what is fascinating about life, and I'd like to see more emphasis on the personal stories than on the capers in this show. Which doesn't mean it's going to be a 'Father Knows Best.'"

His eyes twinkle. He has that every day. Courtney, with sun-streaked hair and a replica of her mother's face, has just come into the office with a friend of hers. She asks Wagner for a go-cart; he tells her they'll discuss it later with the carpenter.

Wagner thinks she's got what it takes to be an actress some day. "The other night she was reading a scene with me, she was really terrific."

He continues about the show, "It's great to have a relationship like this. "Making film is so intense — just to walk in front of a camera and have that responsibility — but in addition to have everything else going, keep the kids happy and the house running properly. There's only so much time and it becomes very demanding. My first consideration has to be the girls.

"It's so important that each of them has her own individuality, whatever each one can do to create their own sense of worth, of self-esteem. And to keep our communication always open."

The proud father displays a photograph of Katie, and says, "She took off for Europe a few months ago because it's easier to get work there because they have so many magazines. They don't pay well, but much more exposure is available. She's doing everything possible to build up a portfolio to bring back to New York where she has an agent."

He says he's not in the least worried about Katie traveling on her own. She's been around Europe a great deal with him. In his office is a picture of them together in San Marcos Square when she was 5.

"She's very capable," he says."She worked the Cannes Film Festival a couple of years. We have a place in Switzerland and she's learned how to manage her life anywhere, something I want her sisters also to be prepared to do.

"Natasha's just finished junior-high school, so this is a big year for her. She's 15. She's great. I love her. I won't let her out of my sight just yet."

He has no idea what she career she'll choose. "She's taking dancing lessons. They all go through stages. I don't care what they choose so long as it's something for which they have genuine passion. That's the word." He's aware of the challenges for women today.

"The male got dealt the best hand, I think. It's very difficult for women — to be a mother, lover, actress or whatever, and homemaker. Which is what women are doing. It's the women who make it all happen. It's very very hard to have a career and maintain a relationship with a man and run a business and not be overpowering, because men are actually fragile. I think their egos can be shattered so easily."

He continues, "Hasn't the world long ago accepted the fact that the mother is the one who makes the lasting influence on the man? Men with dominating mothers can so easily be weak. That same mother can have a daughter and the daughter will grow strong. She has a role model; the two can go head on with each other and never have a psychological problem. But you can break a man's spirit in a second. Well, not necessarily break it, but bend it to a different direction."

Wagner's secretary Liz Applegate — who runs helps him run his business — his is at her desk to pick up a phone. "He lives in an all-woman household, can't you tell?" Wagner laughs.

"Over the Fourth of July I had them all on a raft on the Colorado, 25 miles down the Roaring Fork and into the river. The water was really moving. We went fishing. We fished the river and took a boat ride. You should see Jill (St. John) flip that fly out there.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I am curious about Crystal Gayle's hair. Can you tell me how long it is, how often she washes it and how long it took her to grow it?

Amie Jones
Upland, Calif.

A. According to an associate of hers, it's 58 inches long, just a couple of inches shorter than she is, and probably took about 10 years to get to this length. She trims it constantly, washes it every day when she's on the road and every few days when she's at home, and every few months trims off a couple of inches, which, of course, nobody notices.

Don't be surprised, though, if she decides to cut it more dramatically, at least to waist length. "She talks about it all the time," her associate explains. "She likes to change and she's had it that length for an awfully long time. Plus she became a mother two years ago and the baby always seems to get tangled in her hair. Then when she puts it up on top of her head to get it out of the way, it's heavy.

"I've asked her, though, if she does plan to do it to let us all know beforehand because once when she wore it up on a TV show, her fans thought she'd cut it and my phone was ringing off the hook all day. If she does cut, we might also try to work it into a charity event. People have always asked if they could get some of her hair and it would be nice to raise some money for a good cause at the same time."

Q. Please tell me what Eddie Albert is up to these days. I've always enjoyed his work.

Dot Roberts
Crossville, Tenn.

A. Unfortunately, as we go to press, he's mourning the loss of his wife, Margo, a former dancer and actress. He does have two movies scheduled for release that he finished prior to his wife's death, however: "Stitches" and "Head Office." He's also scheduled to appear in an episode of "Hotel" later this fall.

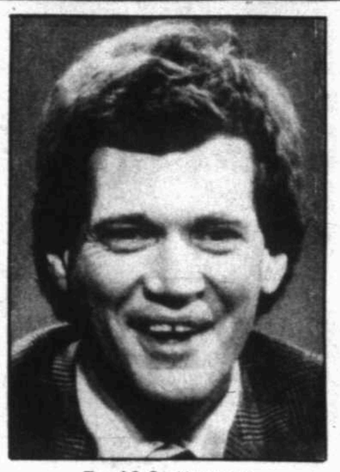

Eddie Albert

Q. I'd like to know if David Letterman is married and if he has any children.

G.M.

Palisades Park, N.J.

A. No to both, at least at this writing. He was married to his college sweetheart, Michelle Cook, but they were divorced not long after they moved from Indiana to Los Angeles in 1975. He then met Merrill Markoe at the Comedy Store, where both were doing stand-up comedy routines. Soon she was writing material for him, and is now a writer and remote segment producer for "Late Night." They also share a house in Connecticut.

David Letterman

Q. I may be the biggest fan of "Miami Vice" ever. Please tell me a bit about Don Johnson, such as where he grew up.

Alexandra Preate
Waverly, Pa.

A. Don Johnson grew up in Missouri and Kansas, and two years ago he almost went back there to become a farmer since it didn't look like his acting career was ever going to take off. He had had a promising beginning with a movie called "The Magic Garden of Stanley Sweetheart" back in 1969, the first film of a contract with MGM. The movie bombed, though, and MGM dropped his contract.

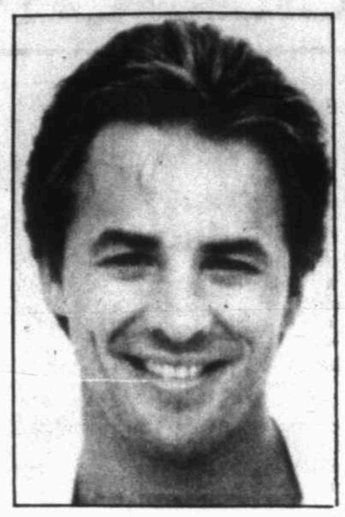

In 1973, he made another movie, "The Harrad Experiment." It was more noteworthy for introducing him to Melanie Griffith, then 15, the daughter of his co-star, Tippi Hedren, than for his acting. In the course of their turbulent four-year relationship, which he tried to stabilize by marrying her, he became quite involved in Hollywood's wild party scene, an involvement, he later admitted, that almost finished his career.

He did manage to get a few roles during that period, however. He starred in a movie called "A Boy and His Dog" that is now a cult classic, and appeared in the feature "Return to Macon County" and the NBC series version of "From Here to Eternity."

Because of his known wilder side though, he was considered unreliable. It was only after meeting actress Patti D'Arbanville and later, with the birth of their son, Jesse, that he started to clean up his act.

Just before he was going to hit the road to Missouri, he was cast in a film called "Cease Fire" (now set for national release in October) to be shot in Florida. After finishing it, he was fishing off the coast of Florida when he got word that the producers of "Miami Vice" wanted to see him. His test for the show was good, but not all of the network executives wanted to cast him. Ultimately, his advocates prevailed.

The show will be set in a few new locales: New York City and upstate New York (which isdoubling for South America).

Don Johnson

Q. Could you please tell me something about Andrew McCarthy? I think he's adorable.

D.B.
Baton Rouge, La.

A. He's 22, from Westfield, N.J., the third of four sons of a stockbroker and his wife. He was a drama student at New York University 10 years ago when he auditioned for the role of the prep-school student on scholarship in the film "Class."

The day he found out that he'd gotten the part was the same day he was supposed to register for his junior-year classes. Needless to say, he gave up N.Y.U., but the movie success he was expecting was a little late in coming. "Class" was a resounding failure and his second film, "Heaven Help Us," got decent reviews but little attention at the box office.

"St. Elmo's Fire" seems to be doing a good job of giving him exposure, though. He went from it directly into another film, "Pretty in Pink," in which he plays a rich boy who falls for a girl from the wrong side of the tracks, played by Molly Ringwald. He's also set to appear in an episode of Steven Spielberg's "Amazing Stories" on NBC.

ROBERT

"This spring Jill and I went to Canada, up of the Campbell River on Dent Island to catch salmon — that's really great. My father had been up there, I guess 1945, after the war. The Tyee club is out there, and if you catch a fish over a certain weight they take you into the club.

"When he came back, he gave me the big wonderful Indian Tyee sweater with the head of a horse knitted onto the front of it. So when I went up there this time, I took it with me and wore it fishing in the same spot. Our guide was so impressed, he had the Indians make me a hat out of the same stuff and sent it to me."

Jill St. John is the beautiful redhead with whom he starred long ago in "Summer Vacation" and "Banning," and whose companionship has been such a saving grace in recent years. It was actually a whim of Jill's that led him to the wonderful house where he and his daughters live.

"We used to ride by this house on horseback when I was a kid," he remembers. "My dad kept our horses in a barn right behind the polo fields on Sunset and I used to think, 'If ever I could live in a house like that!'

"The man who lived in it was the noted architect Cliff May. He built it for his family and he has done all the additions for me — this office, the stables, the added rooms for the girls, and now the guest house.

"Life is really just fate, isn't it? You never know what's going to happen. One Sunday, we were going up to Stockton to look at some horses. I had Jill with me and the two kids. We had no luggage; we were just going for the day. So we got out of the car and the kids and Jill said, 'It's this way to the plane' and I said, 'No, it's this way.' So we walked the wrong way and missed the plane.

"Now I travel a lot and it's been a long while since any plane has left on time. This plane was off at 12 noon on the dot. I felt so badly, so stupid. We had a hamburger at the beach and started driving around and suddenly Jill said, 'Why don't you turn down this road?' I hadn't been there in a long long time, but here was this house with a 'For Sale' sign on it."

He continues, "I didn't want to bother the people because it was Sunday, but you have to slow down around the cul de sac and a kid came out and said, 'You're Robert Wagner, how're you doing?' And then a man came out and said, 'Hi, you're Robert Wagner. I know who you are.' 'Thanks,' I said. 'Not because of what you do,' he said, 'but because your niece has worked for me for six years. You're looking for a house? Come on in.'

"So everything started to fall into place. We hadn't sold the other house and it was a whole thing of making the transfer and whether the kids would fit in to this different sort of lifestyle.

And when he takes you through, you see why the kids did fit in. The rooms are small. Comfortable. Close. Living-room furniture from the other house fits into several rooms. The kitchen is the kind that makes it easy to put things together. Big meals, little snacks. Terry, who handles the horses, is making herself a peanut butter sandwich.

When Ms. St. John cooks, it becomes a feast. "She's a marvelously talented cook as well as an actress," Wagner says. "You've seen her cooking segment on 'Good Morning, America'? And she's writing a cookbook. Plus she's reading scripts and there are a couple of things coming up they want her to do."

Some of his understanding of the complexity of the feminine life derives from her. She has been involved with her career almost from childhood. "It's a tough business," he says. "I went in the other day to do a reading for a group of people at the network. You wouldn't believe the deliberation.

"I finally said, 'It's certainly a lucky thing I started in this business when I did because I wouldn't have been able to take this. When I started, Zanuck just said, 'Put him in a picture' and that was it. Instinct. This business is totally instinct. If you start to second guess it, evaluate, analyze, you're finished.

"It's like horse racing. You can have the best lines, the best breeding, the right post position, the right track conditions, and your horse can fall down coming out the gate.

"You see these VIPs sitting around figuring it out — 'If we could get Debra Winger and Jack Nicholson, Shirley MacLaine and James Brooks together, we'd have a winner.' How do they know? You don't know what went into a picture like 'Terms of Endearment,' what that juice was at that time and what energy.

"I don't want anything to do with white-knuckling, arguing and the analytical approach to this series, says Wagner, who is is also the series' executive producer. "Joy, that's what we're going for. We're trying to make something that people can enjoy watching — charm, wit, love, humor. You can't explain film any more than you can explain life. It happens."

Museum of Southwest showing Bodmer art

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., major exhibition of the fall, "Karl Bodmer's Journey through America," is showing through September.

In 1984, the museum acquired the complete portfolio of hand-colored aquatint engravings by Bodmer which illustrate the book "Travels in the Interior of North America" by Prince Maximilian of Wied, Germany. This acquisition was made possible through money raised locally.

This exhibit features Bodmer's entire portfolio of 81 hand-colored aquatint engravings, three original watercolors on loan from the Joslyn Museum, Omaha, Neb., and artifacts from museums around the country. These artifacts include ceremonial clothing such as leggings and headdresses, children's attire, objects such as richly beaded saddle bags, cooking utensils, jewelry and other items similiar to those Bodmer would have seen on his journey.

In 1832, Prince Maximilian embarked on a journey up the Missouri River to study the flora, fauna and native Americans who inhabited the region. In order to document his journey and maintain accurate records of all that he saw, he commissioned Bodmer, a young Swiss artist, to accompany him. Bodmer made sketches and watercolors to supplement Prince Maximilian's written observations.

Maximilian published this account in the 1840s and circulated it around Europe in three languages. After World War II, Bodmer's original watercolors were rediscovered in Maximilian's ancestral home in Germany and shown throughout West Germany and the United States.

These watercolors were placed on permanent loan at the Joslyn Art Museum. In 1984, to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the expedition, HNG/InterNorth, Inc., sponsored an exhibition of Bodmer's watercolors entitled "Views of a Vanishing Frontier."

Organized by the Joslyn Art Museum, this exhibition traveled to major museums across the United States including the Amon Carter, Fort Worth, the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco, M.H. de Young Memorial Museum, San Francisco, the National Museum of Natural History/Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C., and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

Docented tours of this exhibit may be arranged by contacting Sue-Ann Goodman, curator of education, at 683-2882.

Chinese pianist will guest with symphony

Under the direction of Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, now in his 12th season, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale will begin its 1985-86 concert season Tuesday at Midland's Lee High School Auditorium and Thursday at Odessa's Bonham Junior High. Concert time is 8 p.m.

"Romance and Fireworks" is the name of the opening concert in the seven-concert season. China's foremost pianist Yin Cheng-Zong joins the symphony in a performances of the well-known Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor by Tchaikovsky.

The artist has a special association with Tchaikovsky as he was the Silver Medal Winner at the 1962 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. Since that time, he has performed with, among others, the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, and the Vienna Philharmonic with Claudio Abbado.

Also on the all-Tchaikovsky evening is "Capriccio Italien," the love music of "Romeo and Juliet," and one of the few works in the symphonic repertoire which calls for the sounding of actual cannons throughout the work's finale, "1812 Overture." The symphony chorale will join the symphony in this selection.

The second concert of the season features Anthony Ferro and dancers from Ballet Midland. The company will be led by Ferro and Susan Clark, a native Midlnader who is married to Ferro. Ferro is artistic director for Ballet Midland. Others performing include Judy Coleman, Brian Taylor, Sandra Huxman, Kelly Shaw, Karen Keaton, Amy Wolfe and Jim Cramer.

In November, Liona Boyd, "the First Lady of Guitar," headlines the third concert. Ms. Boyd will perform two of her own compositions in addition to Adagio for Guitar and Strings by Albinoni. Also on the November program will be the world premiere of "Listen Now, My Children,' by Texas composer Samuel Jones.

Entertainer Ray Charles joins the symphony Feb. 8 at Chaparral Center. Charles, who has delighted audiences for over two decades, brings his own form of genius to the stage with the sounds that made him famous.

Yin Cheng-Zong

Also in February, the Symphony will present the winners of the National Young Artists Competition. These artists represent some of the finest young talent in the United States today.

In response to the popularity of the recent movie depicting the life of Mozart, the symphony will present "'Amadeus' and More!" in March. The concert will feature his "Magic Flute Overture," selections from his Requiem Mass as well as J. Strauss' "Blue Danube" and Mussorgsky-Ravel's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Metropolitan Opera star Jerome Hines, bass, will join the symphony, chorale and guest children's choir for works by R. Strauss, Ravel, Verdi, Mozart, Gounod and Boito. Hines, who celebrates his 40th anniversary with the Met this year, made operatic history in 1953 as the first native-born American to sing the role of Boris Godunov.

'Wizards' should have stayed lost

By DAVID FORREST

Forrest

One co-worker who unsuspectingly walked in to see "Wizards of the Lost Kingdom" passed the word along that she thought it was among the worst films she had ever seen.

The person who said this probably has never had the misfortune of sitting through some of this summer's really, really bad movies, such as "Hercules II" or "Lifeforce."

While "Wizards of the Lost Kingdom" is certainly a very lousy film, it doesn't quite manage to descend to the extraordinarily low level reached by those other dogs of the summer.

The movie's storyline is pretty much standard sword-and-sorcery fare. An evil sorcerer overthrows a good king with the help of his treacherous, adulterous queen.

The bad guy kills the king's good magician but the magician's young son, played by Vidal Peterson, escapes and goes on a long, involved journey to overthrow the usurper.

Director Hector Olivera borrows a bit from the George Lucas' "Star Wars" trilogy, but appears to lack even a one-hundredth of the budget needed to pull off such an imitation.

His "Chewbacca the Wookie" substitute, for example, is a tall guy in a cheap shag carpet costume called "Colfax." Colfax looks like the result of an unholy marriage between the Pillsbury Dough Boy and a cat's hairball.

It might be unfair to say that Olivera couldn't direct his way out of a paper bag, but he might be in trouble if it were a thick bag.

Perhaps realizing that people were going to laugh at his movie anyway, Olivera injected some humor into the it, mostly revolving around a picaresque warrior character played by Bo Svenson. The unintentionally funny parts of this film, however, far outweigh the deliberate jokes.

"Wizards of the Lost Kingdom" is far from the very worst motion picture ever made, but it would probably be better for movie audiences everywhere if the film's wizards and kingdom had remained forever lost.

"Wizards of the Lost Kingdom," rated PG for a lot of patently fake violence, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

David Lee Forrest is film critic of the Reporter-Telegram.

Robert Mitchum 'rare, endangered species'

VENTURA, Calif. (AP) — Throughout his life in the spotlight, Robert Mitchum has remained the total individualist. Other stars may perform their mea culpas in public, but Mitchum remains Mitchum — unregenerated, nonapologetic, a rare and endangered species.

Busted for smoking marijuana in 1948 and long considered one of Hollywood's celebrated boozers, Mitchum nevertheless surprised everyone by entering the Betty Ford Center near Palm Springs. It seemed somehow out of character for Mitchum.

"I went there because I fell off a ladder at the Share party (an annual benefit for mentally retarded children)," he said. "I and the people around me were concerned that I was getting out of control and something had to be done."

He didn't elaborate on the treatment at the Center, but he commented: "I did meet some interesting people there. Like the guy who had spent $750,000 a year on his cocaine habit. And the Texan who used to drink 12 cases of beer every day, Schlitz only. He was 6 feet 2 and arrived there at 122 pounds. He didn't stay. He was 130 pounds when he left."

Despite his past excesses, nobody has ever accused Robert Mitchum of being less than professional. His ability to deliver a solid, convincing performance has kept him in demand for such films as "That Championship Season," and such TV miniseries as "The Winds of War."

Despite some superior performances ("The Story of G.I. Joe," "The Night of the Hunter," "Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison," "The Sundowners"), he has never won an Academy Award.

"I think when producers have a part that's hard to cast, they say, 'Send for Mitchum; he'll do anything,'" he shrugged.

Mitchum's latest project is a family affair. He stars with son Christopher and grandson Bentley in "Fathering," a two-hour made-for-TV movie. Chris plays a man who seeks out the father who had deserted him; the discovery creates emotional turmoil.

"I've done OK — 32 films in 16 years," Chris Mitchum said. "Most of it has been overseas, and that can be risky. I've been 'stiffed' (unpaid by producers) a couple of times."

Not Robert Mitchum, though.

"I've had a couple of breathless moments, but I've always been paid. It's easy. I insist that the money be placed in escrow before I get on the plane. I read in the paper that I'm supposed to be in Yugoslavia making 'The Conspiracy.' They didn't send a ticket, so I'm still here," he said.

Robert Mitchum learned survival at an early age. His railroading father died when he was 1½ years old, and as a teen-ager he drifted around the country on freight trains, picking up odd jobs. His misadventures, including a short stretch in a chain gang, are part of the Mitchum legend, and some of the stories may be true.

His family had moved from Bridgeport, Conn., to Long Beach, Calif., by the late 1930s, and Mitchum joined them. After jobs as an astrologer's ghostwriter, radio script writer and aircraft worker, Mitchum worked as a movie extra and then was cast as a heavy in a Hopalong Cassidy Western. As the hard-bitten infantry captain in "The Story of G.I. Joe" (1945), Mitchum won an Oscar nomination for best supporting actor and immediate stardom. He has starred ever since.

Permian Playhouse staging 'Cabaret' through Saturday

ODESSA — "Cabaret," the multiple prize-winning Broadway musical success that launched one of the major song-hits of the 1960s, is the opening presentation of the 1985-86 season at Odessa's Permian Playhouse. The production runs through Saturday.

Opening on Broadway in November 1966 and continuing until September 1969, "Cabaret" won all three of the "best musical of the year" awards in its first season — Tony Award, N.Y. Drama Critics' Circle Award and Outer Circle Critics' Award. when the show was presented in London, it won London's Variety poll and the Evening Standard poll as the best musical of the year.

"Cabaret" is a tale of tarnished innocents abroad in a land with no time for innocence — Berlin in the years just before Hitler came to power.

Linda Waltz (Sally Bowles) and Kent Smith (Clifford Bradshaw) will portray the outsiders cast up in the events taking place in the glitter and frenzy of Berlin in those days. Miss Bowles is a restless, reckless English girl trying to believe in her singing talent and Bradshaw is an American hoping to become a writer and fatalistically drawn to her.

Their young romance is echoed by a middle-aged couple. William Stebbins (Herr Schultz) will be seen as a Jewish shopkeeper who deludes himself that the Nazi movement is no threat to him, and Frances Heltzel (Fraulein Schneider) will act the part of a sadly resigned rommingh-ouse keeper with whom he hopes to end his loneliness.

Rogers Tilley will be seen as the clown-faced master of ceremonies of the cabaret where much of the musical's action occurs, a place symbolizing the sleazy debauchery of the time, when people were trying to ignore the evil rising on the horizon. It is he who acts the smirking host of the decadent revels and sings the leering, acridly tuneful welcome to the night club's life, in three languages.

Gerik Powell (Ernst Ludwig) will be seen as a fantically devoted Nazi.

Others in the cast will be Marc Slattery, Kristin Collinsworth, Troy Moody, Arwayne Bishop, Casey Matlock, Jeffery Hawkins, David Houston, Sidney Armentrout and Nancy Johnson. The Kit Kat Club girls will be played by Patricia Reid, Jennifer Williams, Shawn Cole and Margaret Young. Ashley Cooper, Dominic Lopez, Scott Innes, Mark Gard and Jack Harding will play the waiters and male dancers.

Mushrooms good source of protein and minerals

By BONNIE MANDOE
King Features Syndicate

There are thousands of varieties of mushrooms — 'shrooms, as I fondly call them — and they have been growing on earth as far back as recorded history can tell.

A whole folklore of elves and fairies surrounds mushrooms, and this is natural, for 'shrooms are the offspring of forests, where the little folk traditionally dwell.

My mushroom fantasy concerns the now common, supermarket variety — Agaricus campestris. I want to see a huge hybrid species, from which we could cut thick steaks. Broiled mushroom steaks sizzling with butter — mmm.

It is a common misconception that mushrooms are nutritionally lacking. In truth, it is only their calorie content that is low. Mushrooms are a good source of vegetable protein as well as phosphorus, potassium, riboflavin, niacin and chromium.

As an added bonus, they are a natural source of monosodium glutamate, which activates the taste buds and accentuates the flavors of all the foods they are served with.

Mushroom growing demands a precise and controlled environment, and was not developed in America until the early 1900s. Unlike true vegetables, mushrooms are fungi. They have spores instead of seeds, and the spores — microscopic parts of the mushrooms themselves — must settle in rich soil because fungi cannot manufacture their own food from sunlight, as green plants can.

In selecting mushrooms, consider how they will be used. Those with closed caps are perhaps more attractive, but since their moisture content is higher than those whose gills are open, they are more expensive by the pound. They are delicious raw. In Europe, open mushrooms are preferred for their mature flavor, especially in cooked dishes.

Whatever kind you buy, it is important to store mushrooms properly. Do not keep them in a closed container or plastic bag. They keep well in an open container, loosely covered with a damp paper towel, for several days.

In the kitchen, mushrooms add unique meatiness to appetizers, soups, sauces, salads, casseroles, omelets, side dishes, stuffings — every conceivable recipe category except desserts. The following selections illustrate their versatility. The first, Quickie Mushroom Pizza, is made in 20 minutes.

QUICKIE MUSHROOM PIZZA

Line a 12-inch-by-18-inch baking sheet with slices of whole-wheat toast, well toasted, and buttered on one side. (It will take about 12 slices.) Place the buttered side down. Brush the upper surface of the toast slices with olive oil, then spread the toast with a not-too-thick layer of chunky spaghetti sauce. (It will take less than half of a 30-ounce jar.)

Now sprinkle over the sauce about ½ pound mozzarella cheese, and ½ teaspoon each of basil and oregano leaves. Top with ¼ pound mushrooms, thinly sliced, one slivered green pepper and any other topping you choose (sauteed onion, tiny shrimp, olives, etc.). Bake your pizza 10-15 minutes at 425F. Serve with a spatula — it's pre-sliced.

• • •

CREAM OF MUSHROOM SOUP

¼ cup butter
1 pound mushrooms, chopped
2 sliced onions
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon basil leaves
¼ cup chopped parsley
Vegetable bouillon cubes
7 cups liquid
⅓ cup whole-wheat flour
6 cups milk
½ cup Parmesan cheese
Thinly sliced raw mushrooms

In a large soup pot, melt the butter. Add mushrooms, onions, garlic, parsley, basil and bouillon cubes. Cook, stirring occasionally, until veggies are limp. Stir in flour.

In a blender container, blend half the mushroom mixture at a time, using milk to facilitate blending, until the mixture is pureed. Return mixture to soup pot and add remaining milk. Cook over medium heat, stirring often, until the soup is hot and thickened. Season to taste with salt and white pepper or cayenne, and sprinkle Parmesan and raw mushrooms over individual servings.

Serves 6.

• • •

ASPARAGUS AND MUSHROOMS

1 pound fresh asparagus spears
4 tablespoons butter
¼ pound sliced mushrooms

2 tablespoons minced green onions

Steam the trimmed asparagus very lightly until just tender. Meanwhile, melt the butter in a frying pan over medium heat. Add the mushrooms and green onions and saute about three minutes, until mushrooms are golden. Season to taste with salt and pepper and spoon mushrooms over the drained asparagus on a heated serving platter. Or, if you wish, place the asparagus and mushrooms, divided into individual servings, in individual three-egg omelets.

Serves 6.

• • •

This rich dish has a decidedly festive effect.

CHICKEN AND MUSHROOMS L'FORNO

1⅔ cups dry bread crumbs
¾ cup freshly grated Parmesan
2 teaspoons basil
2 teaspoons minced fresh parsley
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon oregano
½ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
2 cups cooked chicken, skinned
2 cups small mushrooms, sauteed in
1 tablespoon butter
2 tablespoons each olive oil and dry white wine
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice

Preheat oven to 400F. Butter a two-quart baking dish. Combine bread crumbs, Parmesan, basil, parsley, salt, oregano, pepper and garlic powder. Place ⅓ of this mixture in prepared dish. Add chicken and mushrooms in a single layer, then top with remaining seasoned crumbs. Combine oil, wine and lemon juice and pour evenly over all. Bake uncovered until heated through, about 20 minutes.

Serves 4.

• • •

FILLET OF SOLE

½ chopped onion
3 cups sliced fresh mushrooms
2 tablespoons butter
2 pounds fillet of sole
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 teaspoon oregano or basil

Saute the onion and mushrooms in butter. Add fish fillets in a single layer to the pan; sprinkle with lemon juice, parsley and green herb. Cover and simmer gently for 20 minutes.

Serves 6.

• • •

GOURMET EGG SALAD

For dressing, combine:
½ cup mayonnaise
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
¼ teaspoon cumin
Add:
1 cup finely chopped, blanched cauliflower
¼ pound raw mushrooms, sliced
1 cup peas, fresh or frozen (thawed)
1 cup minced celery
2 green onions with tops, minced
Gently fold in:
6 hard-cooked eggs, chopped

Mix well and serve on a bed of lettuce garnished with tomato wedges.

Serves 6.

• • •

For simple appetizers, broil mushroom caps stuffed with a small cube of Cheddar cheese and a sprinkling of basil.

For a tasty addition to a salad bar, marinate small button mushrooms overnight in your favorite oil and vinegar salad dressing.

New record for weight loss set by Briton

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — William Cobb lost 575 pounds in three years during the mid-1960s and set a record for losing weight, but now, after two decades, he's finally going to lose that distinction.

"Records are made to be broken," Cobb, 60, said from his small Augusta apartment.

In his teen years, he was a 600-pound wrestler who breakfasted on three dozen eggs and 2 pounds of bacon. He went on to become an 800-pound professional wrestler, but his two-decade career ended with a heart attack in the ring in 1962.

After the heart attack, he was put on a diet and earned a place in the Guinness Book of World Records.

Although Cobb lost more weight than McIntyre, the Englishman's six-month weight-loss average was 101.5 pounds compared with Cobb's 96 pounds.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Students vote for favorite book

By NELDA WILCOX

About ten years ago at a librarians' meeting near Sam Houston State University, several elementary school librarians expressed their concern about the reading level of most of the books given the annual Newbery Award for the most outstanding book written for children. Very few books receiving the award have been for elementary school readers.

After several years of preparation, a reading program was developed for fourth, fifth, and sixth grade students in Texas. The program was named the Texas Bluebonnet Award. Each year, a committee selects a master list of 20 books written within the last three years and distributes it to member schools around the state. The books provide a wide range of interests and reading levels.

Students who read or hear five of the 20 books on the list are allowed to vote in January for their favorite book. The winning author is given a beautiful plaque at the Texas Library Association conference in the spring.

The following authors have received the Texas Bluebonnet Award: 1981 — Beverly Cleary for RAMONA AND HER FATHER; 1982 — Judy Blume for SUPERFUDGE; 1983 — Bill Wallace for A DOG CALLED KITTY; 1984 — Barthe DeClements for NOTHING'S FAIR IN FIFTH GRADE; and 1985 — Barbara Parks for SKINNYBONES.

The following 20 books have been chosen for the 1985-86 master list: A MEDIEVAL FEAST by Aliki, grades 2-4; THE WISH GIVER by Bill Brittain, grades 5-8; HARVEY'S HORRIBLE SNAKE DISASTER by Eth Clifford, grades 3-5; BONY-LEGS by Joanna Cole, grades 1-4; CHILDREN OF THE WILD WEST by Russell Freedman, grades 4-6; THE TALKING EARTH by Jean Craighead George, grades 5-9; CHIMNEY SWEEPS, YESTERDAY AND TODAY by James Cross Giblin, grades 4-6; MAX AND ME AND THE TIME MACHINE by Gery Greer and Bob Ruddick, grades 4-8; DAPHNE'S BOOK by Mary D. Hahn, grades 5-8; ESTEBAN AND THE GHOST by Sibyl Hancock, grades 1-3; HOWLIDAY INN by James Howe, grades 4-6; IN THE YEAR OF THE BOAR AND JACKIE ROBINSON by Bette Bao Lord, grades 4-6; NEW KID ON THE BLOCK by Jack Prelutsky, grades 2-5; THE GLORIOUS FLIGHT: ACROSS THE CHANNEL WITH LOUIS BLERIOT by Alice and Martin Provensen, grades 3-5; THE PET-SITTING PERIL by Willo Davis Roberts, grades 5-7; NIGHT OF THE TWISTERS by Ivy Ruckman, grades 4-6; A PARADISE CALLED TEXAS by Janice Jordan Shefelman, grades 4-6; TRAPPED IN DEATH CAVE by Bill Wallace, grades 5-8; THE DOLLHOUSE MURDERS by Betty Ren Wright, grades 4-7; and DRAGON OF THE LOST SEA by Laurence Yep, grades 4-8.

These books are available at the Midland County Public Library and at most of the elementary schools in Midland.

More older people now in college

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a four-part series examining aspects of college education.

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Syndicate

Gilda Palano seems to have little in common with other fourth-year students at elite Smith College in Northampton, Mass. Or with Joan Kennedy, former wife of Senator Ted.

At age 49, Palano is much older than the other Smithies pursuing a B.A. in anthropology and sociology. And age isn't her only obstacle to academic success. Ms. Palano, who suffered a spinal injury in an automobile accident, gets around campus on crutches.

Ms. Palano probably does not fit anyone's image of the typical college coed. But one-third of the 12.4 million U.S. students now enrolled in degree programs are over 25. The overwhelming majority of these are women — women from all walks of life. Three years ago Joan Kennedy earned her master's degree at age 44.

As the population of American 18-year-olds continues to decline, colleges and universities are beginning to court this new "clientele," the post-35-year-old female student. Schools have developed programs which help integrate women into the regular student body and offer career counseling services.

Some give credits for life experience. Many even make financial aid funds available to older students — which they didn't in the past.

Between the years of 1974 and '80, the number of women students over the age of 35 increased by 66.8 percent. (U.S. Census Bureau statistics.) Educational observers believe the percentage will continue to escalate over the next few years. The older woman student may be the salvation of higher education in the '80s.

Ms. Palano, who lives on campus three days each week, studies with the help of grants and loans arranged through Smith's Ada Comstock Program for women over 22. Other top schools either have or will soon have similar programs.

By contrast, in the early 1970s, the first big wave of re-entry women had to find their own way and scrape up their tuition somehow in schools bursting with young students. Most were women who had married early and become mothers young.

JANET BAKER entered Southern Illinois University as a freshman mother of three in 1972. She recalls, "There were a lot of married women students then, but no special programs existed for us. We certainly were not being actively recruited. And we got a lot more help from the kids in our classes than we did from teachers or administrators."

Arthur Zahalzky, a professor of biology at S.I.U. who has taught many older women students working toward a bachelor of science in nursing degree, says, "They are more intense than younger students. These women want to learn. So many younger students haven't yet discovered how exciting the learning process is; and they have so much to learn outside the classroom, too, at this point in their lives. It distracts them.

"The older students add a great deal to a class. They make us work harder because they want tough courses. They want to get their money's worth."

This desire to get the most for their time and money makes older women wise education consumers — and high achievers. Ms. Baker, who had a 5-, 6- and 7-year-old at home when she started college, graduated magna cum laude. Smith's Adas also have impressive records: 20 percent graduate Phi Beta Kappa; 34 percent with honors.

The new older student may be someone who deferred her own education goals to meet family needs. But she may have other reasons for returning to school now. Like Mrs. Kennedy, she may have status and money, but still needs to prove something to herself. Many returnees plan to switch careers, like Ms. Palano, who already had a registered nursing degree.

It's not unusual for these students to hold full- or part-time jobs. Women return to school for various reasons and under different circumstances. What they share is a determination to succeed — and to get their money's worth. For the first time, colleges and universities have a real interest in helping them.

Community colleges and state universities offer the bulk of programs catering to older women.

Often women's programs offer courses outside the curriculum studied by regular students. Taking these courses can be a good way for a woman to ease back into academic life.

"THIS KIND of course work can be of great value to a woman as long as she realizes she isn't getting the standard education," says Anne Tuchman, a women's adviser who has taken time off to raise triplet daughters.

"Some of the courses are just more intense versions of the things we've always associated with adult ed or continuing ed, like business assertiveness skills or conversational French. They have more personal value than real application toward a degree or a job."

Is College Worth the Cost?

Many women do study regular courses in community colleges and state schools. Ms. Palano attended a community college before transferring to Smith.

"Women who are returning to school for career advancement should carefully check out anything labeled a woman's program," Ms. Tuchman warns. "Don't assume a course designed for re-entry women is a regular course, even if it offers credit. You may not be able to transfer the credits to a degree program. Or you may only be able to use them as electives."

Some of the women's courses are not accredited, though they are offered by an accredited university, cost the same as regular courses and are taught by the same professors.

A re-entry woman can easily be confused by the choices open to her. Wellesley and Mount Holyoke offer several options for older women: programs to help them prepare for specific jobs, even degrees, or simply programs "to enlarge their horizons." Radcliffe has special non-credit seminars which offer certificates in some areas.

A seminar at a school such as Radcliffe can be an excellent educational buy for an older woman.

"Even expanding your horizons at an elite school looks good on your resume," says Ms. Tuchman. "But the same kind of seminar at any state university probably won't mean much in negotiable terms."

Another popular trend in adult education is life experience credit. Like "women's courses," it has some drawbacks.

Life experience credit is not credit given simply for "living." Rather, credit is given for academically valid, college-equivalent, demonstrable learning obtained from non-college sources — such as job experience or training, in-house education, even adult ed classes taken outside the school's program.

"LIFE EXPERIENCE credit" seemed like a boon to re-entry women a few years back. Now some educators regard it as the equivalent of snap courses. And schools that freely hand out the life experience credits are perceived as being entirely too easy.

Women who want their work to be applicable to a solid degree will need to attend regular classes. Fortunately, major universities are expanding their night-school programs to accommodate adults. Some also offer Weekend University, a plan under which students can take full-credit courses which meet for fewer but longer sessions, on weekends rather than weekdays.

A few schools even specialize in "adult degree plans." Empire State College, which is part of the State University of New York system, was designed to meet the needs of adult students. Everything is geared to making things easier for the working student.

But Ms. Tuchman warns, "A degree from some of these special programs may not mean much if the educational requirements were lessened for adult students. Before you enroll, make sure the concessions given are centered around time schedules. The courses should be just as hard as the one offered by the school to regular students."

Smith's Ada Comstock Program gives no life experience credit, permits no snap courses. The Ada scholars receive time and financial considerations only, so their degrees will have the same currency as any other Smith degree.

Northwestern University's Program on Women, which has been operating since 1979, works in similar fashion.

Director Bari Watkins says, "Our goal is to help women fit into the university by giving them career counseling and other supportive services.

"We realized in the late '70s that we would face a student shortage. We had to choose between actively recruiting rich, dumb 18-year-olds or rich, smart 40-year-old women.

"We wanted the women. And we go after them with this program."

Ms. Tuchman says, "With so many options, any returnee should be able to find the right program for her somewhere."

BUT THAT'S the catch: somewhere. The biggest problem for older women, once they've decided what they want from college courses, is finding it in their own backyards.

'Child of Fortune' 'great' dirty book

"Child of Fortune," by Norman Spinrad. Bantam. 496 Pages. $16.95.

A Review

By LARRY BLASKO
Associated Press

There are bad dirty books, good dirty books and sometimes a great dirty book, which is one way to describe Norman Spinrad's "Child of Fortune."

The plot is reasonably straightforward: Wendi Shasta Leonardo, pretty young rich girl, leaves home on a customary year's sabbatical and has great adventures while finding her true self. The adventures include falling in with a band of futuristic hippies, and becoming trapped on a planet of flowers that use mind-bending drugs to grow gardens of humans.

You'll be sent to your multilingual dictionary more than once (the characters use English, French, Russian, German, Japanese, Hindu, Spanish and Yiddish phrases interchangeably) as you follow Wendi's tale, and the literary allusions fall thick and fast — Wendi's first major lover is Pater Pan.

Wendi makes her way in the world as she can, her ability to do so mechanically enhanced by a going-away gift from her parents, a mother who runs a shop devoted to the "tantric arts" and a father who makes accompanying gadgets. Look it up.

While not for children, there's humor and interest and invention here, and the dirty parts are told not with a leer but with a cheerful wink.

GOREN BRIDGE

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—This sequence caused a bit of a furor in a recent home game:

NORTH	SOUTH
1 ♠	1 ♠
1 NT	2 ♢
Pass

South was furious when North passed. He felt that responder's change of suit was forcing on opener. North argued that, since he had a dead minimum opening, there was no reason for him to bid again. Obviously, we need your help.—A.T.E., Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

A.—In most auctions, a simple change of suit by responder is forcing. The one exception is where opener has limited his hand by rebidding one no trump.

Now, a rebid in a LOWER-RANKING suit is not forcing. It simply says that responder does not think that no trump is the right spot to play the hand, and he is searching for a better contract. Opener is free to pass with a minimum, but he can bid again if he is better than dead minimum and has a fit for responder's second suit, or he can take a preference to partner's first suit. Thus, if responder wants to force in a suit ranking lower than the suit in which he made his original response, he must jump shift.

That does not hold true, however, where responder's rebid is in a higher-ranking suit. Since responder has now made a reverse bid, opener must bid again regardless of whether he has limited his hand or not.

Q.—I thought that a response of one no trump to an opening bid showed a weak hand—about 6-10 points. Now a new player in our game insists that a response of 1 no trump to an opening bid of one club shows 9-11 points. If this so, why?—G.C., Montreal P.Q.

A.—Your newcomer's argument used to be an integral part of the Goren methods, and was based on solid logic. Over an opening bid of one club, responder has the whole one-level available to bid any four-card suit he holds. Therefore, a response of 1 NT could be used as a forward-going maneuver.

However, modern bidding tendencies dictate that response of 1 NT to any opening bid is a preemptive rather than a constructive move, and there is considerable weight to that position. Modernists claim there are other ways to build forward-going auctions and that, when you do not have much of a hand and no major suit, it makes it more difficult for the opponents to enter the auction if they respond to partner's one club opening bid with 1 NT.

In "Goren's New Contract Bridge Complete," which will be appearing in a month or two, we have adopted this approach.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, September 23, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Putting your cards on the table now will pay off handsomely. You have more bargaining chips than you originally thought. Patience and persistence will help you rise above the crowd. Make sure you get credit for your ideas. Travel leads to valuable new contacts. Be discreet if you decide to mix business with pleasure. One slip and you could be right back where you started. Flexible and considerate, you are quick to help others. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actors Walter Pidgeon and Mickey Rooney, singer-songwriter Bruce Springsteen, Russian-born sculptor Louise Nevelson, pianist-singer Ray Charles, Pittsburgh Pirates slugger Jim Morrison.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Retirees could find living abroad attractive financially. Keep your options open. Even if a new romance proves short-lived, it could bring great pleasure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Let others take the lead for a while. An experiment may not produce the expected result. You save time and money by taking a leaf from someone else's book. Be prepared for changes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do some research before entering negotiations. Someone asks you to sit down and answer a complicated question. A lucrative contract could hang in the balance. Give carefully prepared answers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): As time goes on you will gain a better understanding of how a tricky situation developed. Play your cards close to your chest. A personal relationship affects your finances in a positive way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Indicate that you might accept an alternative plan and work conditions will improve. A promotion is possible. If romance has stalled, see what you can do to get it moving again.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A customer is looking for a certain sense of style. Be imaginative. Consider the pros and cons of being totally honest with an employer or co-worker. Family members are supportive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Exploring new frontiers could improve your status at work. Be on the lookout for any unusual opportunities. Romance or business negotiations get off to a good start when you pick the right setting.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A special comment or gift enriches your life. Choose your words with care when attempting to mediate a school or office dispute. Spending a quiet evening with mate holds special appeal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): It's time you gave some thought to the future. If you work at it, a relationship will stand the test of time. Do what you can to reconcile two friends or relatives.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are presented with several choices today. Postpone making a final decision until you have talked with a trusted associate. It is time to take steps towards building a retirement fund.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Successful retirement depends on your attitude as well as your finances. You are going to have a much better time than you may think. Accept and issue invitations. New friends bring good times.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day to discuss mate's special interests and needs. New rapport is possible. Discard any preconceived ideas and listen to what loved one is really saying. Keep an eye on spending.
